An adjective describing the inability to see, spanning the physical and the spiritual. Physically, it refers to those born sightless or struck blind (Exod 4:11), persons protected by law from cruelty (Lev 19:14; Deut 27:18), and blemished animals unfit for sacrifice (Deut 15:21; Mal 1:8). The Jebusites' taunt about 'the blind and the lame' defending Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:6, 8) uses it as a term of contempt. Figuratively, Isaiah employs it extensively for Israel's spiritual dullness — blind watchmen (Isa 56:10), a blind servant (Isa 42:19), and the promise that blind eyes will be opened (Isa 29:18; 35:5; 42:7, 16, 18). Spanish 'ciego' and French 'aveugle' cover both physical and metaphorical registers.

blind (physical or spiritual) (26×) Unable to see, used in both literal and figurative senses. Literally, it describes physical blindness as a condition God sovereignly assigns (Exod 4:11), a disability the Torah protects (Lev 19:14; Deut 27:18), and a sacrificial disqualification (Deut 15:21; Mal 1:8). Figuratively, especially in Isaiah, it characterizes spiritual insensibility — Israel as God's blind servant (Isa 42:19), blind leaders (Isa 56:10), and the eschatological promise of sight restored (Isa 29:18; 35:5; 42:7). The Psalms echo this hope: 'The LORD opens the eyes of the blind' (Ps 146:8). Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'ciego,' French 'aveugle' — confirm one adjective spanning both domains. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: blind, is-blind, of-the-blind | es: a-ciego, ciego, ciegos | fr: [עור], [עורים], aveugle | de: blind, der-blind, erweckte Exod 4:11; Lev 19:14; Lev 21:18; Deut 15:21; Deut 27:18

עִוָּרוֹן H5788a Prep-b (2×)

with blindness (phrase: prepositional form of עִוָּרוֹן, denoting affliction with literal or figurative blindness)

This prepositional phrase appears in two contexts where the Lord strikes with blindness: Moses warns that disobedience will bring blindness (Deuteronomy 28:28), and Zechariah prophesies that God will smite enemy horses with 'blind staggers' (Zechariah 12:4). In Deuteronomy the blindness is figurative—'blind incapacity' or disorientation—while in Zechariah it is physical, rendering the horses helplessly wild. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'with blindness' or equivalent prepositional constructions, underscoring the afflictive nature of the divine action.

(2×) Marks the instrument or manner of divine judgment: God strikes either humans (with mental/spiritual incapacity) or animals (with physical disorientation) 'with blindness.' Deuteronomy 28:28 pairs it with madness and confusion; Zechariah 12:4 applies it to warhorses, making them uncontrollable. Every target language preserves the prepositional 'with blindness' construction. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: and-with-blindness | es: con-ceguera, y-con-ceguera | fr: aveuglement, et-avec-blindness | de: [בעורן], und-mit-blindness Deut 28:28; Zech 12:4

עִוֶּרֶת H5788b N-fs (1×)

blindness (abstract noun denoting the condition of being blind, used of sacrificial defects)

This feminine abstract noun means 'blindness,' the state or condition of being unable to see. In Leviticus 22, it appears in a list of physical defects that disqualify animals from being offered as sacrifices. The law requires that offerings to YHWH be unblemished, reflecting both the perfection due to God and the principle that worship should involve giving the best, not the defective or unwanted. The term is used abstractly for the concrete: a blind animal. This usage reflects Hebrew's common pattern of using abstract nouns (blindness) to represent concrete realities (blind creatures), emphasizing the disqualifying condition itself.

(1×) Leviticus 22:22 lists 'blindness' among defects (broken, maimed, ulcerated, scabbed) that render an animal unacceptable for sacrifice. All major translations render this as 'blind' (Spanish 'ciego,' German 'blind'), showing consistent understanding across languages. The holiness code insists that only unblemished offerings are appropriate for YHWH's altar, making blindness a disqualifying condition. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: blind | es: Ciego | fr: aveugle | de: blind Lev 22:22

עוּשׁ H5789 V-Qal-Imp-mp (1×)

to lend aid, come to help, hasten (rare verb, possibly related to Arabic 'succor'; textually uncertain)

This verb appears only once and means to lend aid, come to help, or hasten. The Hebrew root may connect to Arabic and Nabatean words for help and succor. In Joel's summons to the nations for the valley of judgment, the text calls them to hasten and come. However, textual uncertainty surrounds this word—several scholars propose reading it as 'hasten' or 'assemble' instead. The Spanish and English 'hasten' may reflect an emended reading. Despite these questions, the context clearly envisions a dramatic summons for the nations to gather quickly for God's judgment in the valley of decision.

(1×) Joel 3:11 (English 4:11) calls the surrounding nations to come quickly, though the exact verb is disputed. Translations render it 'hasten' (Spanish 'apresuraos'), suggesting urgency. The context is the gathering of nations for judgment in the valley of Jehoshaphat, where God will execute justice. Whether the verb means 'help,' 'hasten,' or 'assemble,' the sense is a dramatic call to swift assembly. HELP AND ASSISTANCE to help, sustain, support (very uncertain; possibly Aramaism, or text is corrupt)

en: hasten | es: Apresuraos | fr: hâter | de: [עושו] Joel 3:11

עוּת H5790 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

This infinitive verb form appears in a textually problematic passage in Isaiah 50:4, where the Servant speaks of being given 'the tongue of the learned' to know how to sustain the weary with a word. The meaning 'to help' or 'sustain' is commonly accepted, though scholars note it may be an Aramaism (related to Aramaic and Arabic roots for helping and succoring). Others suggest textual corruption and propose various emendations like 'answer,' 'teach,' or 'revive.' Despite these uncertainties, the basic sense of supporting or sustaining the weary with timely words fits the Servant's mission of bringing comfort and strengthening those who are exhausted or discouraged.

(1×) Isaiah 50:4 describes the Servant's ability 'to sustain the weary with a word.' Spanish 'sostener' (to sustain) and English 'how to sustain' both capture the sense of upholding or supporting through speech. The Servant is portrayed as one who knows the right word for the right moment—strengthening those who are exhausted, discouraged, or ready to give up. This fits the broader Servant Songs' theme of gentle restoration. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: how-to-sustain | es: sostener | fr: [לעות] | de: [לעות] Isa 50:4

עָוַת H5791 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-3cp (11×)

To bend, make crooked, pervert; used of twisting justice and the physical bowing of age

At its core, this verb means to bend or twist something from its proper shape. The Piel stem dominates usage, depicting the moral distortion of justice: 'Does God pervert justice?' (Job 8:3). Amos 8:5 applies it to falsifying trade scales — Spanish 'pervertir' and Arabic equivalents consistently treat it as deliberate corruption. The Pual passive in Ecclesiastes 1:15 describes what is already bent beyond straightening. Most evocatively, the Hitpael in Ecclesiastes 12:3 pictures the 'strong men' of the body bowing and curving under the weight of old age — a reflexive becoming-crooked that moves from moral metaphor to bodily reality.

1. make crooked, pervert, subvert (9×) Piel active: to make crooked, pervert, or subvert, especially justice and right dealing.

Job's anguished question — does God twist mishpat? (Job 8:3) — and Amos's indictment of merchants who pervert scales (Amos 8:5) define this sense. Spanish 'pervertir' and French 'pervertir' uniformly signal deliberate moral distortion. Also covers personal subversion as in Psalm 119:78 and Job 19:6. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: He-made-crooked, To-pervert, and-to-pervert | es: Al-pervertir, me-ha-pervertido, me-pervirtieron | fr: [לְעַוֵּת], et-pervertir, pervertir | de: [וּלְעַוּת], [יְעַוּת], [לְעַוּת] Job 8:3; Job 19:6; Job 34:12; Ps 119:78

2. crooked, perverted (passive) (1×) Pual passive participle: that which has been made crooked and cannot be straightened. Ecclesiastes 1:15 uses this single occurrence to voice the impossibility of correcting what is fundamentally bent — Spanish 'lo torcido' (the twisted thing) captures the resultative, stative quality. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: crooked | es: Lo-torcido | fr: tordre | de: [מְעֻוָּת] Eccl 1:15

3. become bent, bow down (reflexive) (1×) Hitpael reflexive: to become bent or bowed, describing physical deterioration. In Ecclesiastes 12:3, the 'men of strength' (the body's limbs) become crooked with age. Spanish 'se encorven' (they bow themselves) and English 'are bent' reflect the reflexive subject undergoing the bending — a poignant shift from moral perversion to the body's inevitable decline. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: and-are-bent | es: y-se-encorven | fr: et-tordre | de: [וְהִתְעַוְּתוּ] Eccl 12:3

עַוָּתָה H5792 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

wrong, injustice, subversion of justice (deprivation of fair treatment, especially legal rights)

This feminine noun means wrong, injustice, or subversion of justice —specifically the deprivation or twisting of what is right. In Lamentations 3, the speaker laments that God has seen 'my wrong,' using this term in parallel with 'my judgment/justice.' The word denotes not just personal injury but the perversion or denial of legal rights, the twisting of what should be straight. It appears in contexts of oppression and legal injustice. The term comes from a root meaning to bend or pervert, capturing the sense that justice has been warped or one's rights have been subverted. The speaker appeals to God as the ultimate judge who sees when justice has been denied.

(1×) Lamentations 3:59 has the speaker appeal to YHWH: 'You have seen my wrong/injustice,' parallel to 'judge my cause.' Spanish 'mi agravio' (my grievance/wrong) reflects the sense of injustice suffered. The context is a cry for vindication: the speaker has been wronged, their rights subverted, and they appeal to God as the righteous judge to see the injustice and set things right. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: my-wrong | es: mi-agravio | fr: [עַוָּתִי] | de: [עַוָּתִי] Lam 3:59

עוּתַי H5793 N-proper-ms (2×)

Uthai (personal name: a Judahite in 1 Chronicles 9:4 and a returnee in Ezra 8:14)

Uthai is a personal name borne by two individuals in the postexilic records. In 1 Chronicles 9:4, he is a descendant of Judah dwelling in Jerusalem after the exile (the Septuagint renders it Γωθει, and Nehemiah 11:4 lists a parallel name Athaiah). In Ezra 8:14, another Uthai is among those who returned with Ezra (Septuagint: Ουθι). The name's etymology is uncertain, and the multilingual glosses simply transliterate it.

(2×) A proper name designating two postexilic figures: a Judahite in Jerusalem (1 Chronicles 9:4, parallel to Athaiah in Nehemiah 11:4) and a returnee with Ezra (Ezra 8:14). All modern translations transliterate the Hebrew directly, reflecting the conventional handling of personal names. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Utay | es: Utai | fr: [עוּתַי] | de: [עוּתַי] 1Chr 9:4; Ezra 8:14

עַז H5794 Adj-ms (24×)

Strong, mighty, fierce; of persons, forces, or fortifications possessing great power, severity, or boldness

Describes something or someone possessing formidable strength or intensity. A wind that parts the sea (Exod 14:21), a people too powerful to conquer (Num 13:28), or love that rivals death itself (Song 8:6) — all share this quality of overwhelming force. The word can shade toward fierceness and harshness, as when Jacob rebukes the cruelty of Simeon and Levi (Gen 49:7), or toward brazen insolence, as in the 'bold-faced king' of Daniel 8:23. Spanish captures this range well: 'fuerte' for raw strength, 'feroz' for savage intensity.

1. strong, mighty, powerful (17×) Denotes robust physical, military, or abstract power — a mighty nation, a strong east wind, waters too powerful to cross. The multilingual evidence clusters tightly around 'strong/fuerte/fort,' reflecting straightforward potency. Applied to people (Num 13:28), natural forces (Exod 14:21), and even love and death (Song 8:6), this is the core sense: raw, prevailing might. Amos 5:9 personifies destruction itself as 'the strong one.' POWER AND ABILITY

en: a-city, and-from-strong, fierce | es: el-fuerte, fuerte, fuertes | fr: [עַז], [עַזִּים], et-de-fort | de: [עַז], [עַזָּה], [עַזִּים] Gen 49:3; Exod 14:21; Num 13:28; Num 21:24; Judg 14:14

2. fierce, harsh, severe (3×) Shifts from strength to its menacing edge: fierceness, harshness, severity. Jacob's dying oracle condemns his sons' anger as 'fierce' (Gen 49:7), and Proverbs 18:23 contrasts the poor man's entreaties with the rich man's 'harsh' replies. German 'heftig' and Spanish 'feroz' capture this emotional violence — strength turned cruel or unrelenting. POWER AND ABILITY

en: fierce, harshly | es: durezas, feroz, fuerte | fr: fierce, fort | de: [עַזָּה], [עַזּוּת], heftig-ist-er Gen 49:7; Prov 18:23; Prov 21:14

3. bold-faced, brazen, ruthless (3×) Appears in construct phrases — 'fierce of face' (Deut 28:50, Dan 8:23), 'strong of appetite' (Isa 56:11) — to convey boldness, insolence, or voracity. The construction intensifies a quality into a defining trait: not merely strong but brazenly so. Spanish 'fiera-de' and German 'grimmig' reflect this shift from general strength to a character marked by shameless aggression or greed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fierce, fierce-of-, strong-of- | es: fiera-de, fuerte-de, fuertes-de- | fr: [עַז], fierce, fort | de: [עַז], grimmig, stark Deut 28:50; Isa 56:11; Dan 8:23

4. fortified, strong (of a city) (1×) A transferred application to a city or stronghold: 'We have a strong city' (Isa 26:1). Here the adjective moves from personal might to architectural impregnability — walls, gates, and divine protection making a place unconquerable. Only one occurrence carries this fortification sense, but it bridges naturally from the core meaning of overwhelming force. POWER AND ABILITY

en: city | es: fuerte | fr: fort | de: stark Isa 26:1

עֵז H5795 Conj-w (74×)

She-goat; female goat(s) as livestock, food, or sacrifice; also goat hair used as textile material for the tabernacle.

A common Hebrew noun for the female goat, appearing throughout the Pentateuch in pastoral, culinary, and cultic contexts. The goat was central to Israelite life: as valued livestock (Gen 30:33), as the source of the famous 'kid of the goats' prepared for meals and deceptions (Gen 27:9), and as an acceptable sacrificial victim (Lev 22:19; Exod 12:5). A distinct secondary use refers to goat hair as a weaving material, particularly for the curtains of the tabernacle (Exod 26:7; 35:26), where Spanish 'pelo de cabras' and German 'Ziege-hair' highlight the textile meaning.

1. she-goat(s), female goat(s) (68×) The female goat as a domestic animal raised in flocks for food, property, and sacrifice. Covers the overwhelming majority of occurrences, from Jacob's flocks (Gen 30:33) to Passover victims (Exod 12:5) and Levitical offerings (Lev 22:19, 27). Translations uniformly render it with standard goat terms: Spanish 'cabras,' French 'chèvres,' German 'Ziegen,' confirming a single stable semantic core across all these uses. GOATS AND GOAT HAIR

en: goats | es: cabras, de-cabras | fr: boucs, chèvres | de: Ziegen, der-Ziegen, von-Ziegen Gen 27:9; Gen 27:16; Gen 37:31; Gen 38:17; Gen 38:20

2. goat hair (as material) (6×) Goat hair used as a raw textile material, especially for weaving the curtains and coverings of the tabernacle. All six occurrences cluster in Exodus 25-35. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish 'pelo de cabras,' French 'chèvre cheveux,' and German 'Ziege-hair' all add a 'hair' component absent from the livestock sense, marking a genuine metonymic extension from the animal to its fiber (Exod 26:7; 35:23). GOATS AND GOAT HAIR

en: and-goat-hair, and-goats, goats | es: cabras, el-pelo-de-cabras, pelos-de-cabra | fr: chèvres, et-chèvre-cheveux, et-chèvres | de: Ziegen, der-Ziege-hair, und-Ziege-hair Exod 25:4; Exod 26:7; Exod 35:6; Exod 35:23; Exod 35:26

עִזִּים H5796 N-fp (1×)

(she-)goats (Aramaic plural form in Ezra's list of sin offerings at temple dedication)

This Aramaic plural noun means 'goats,' specifically she-goats. It appears in Ezra's account of the dedication of the rebuilt temple, where the returnees offer sacrifices including bulls, rams, lambs, and goats as a sin offering for all Israel. The Aramaic form distinguishes it from the more common Hebrew word for goats, reflecting the multilingual context of the post-exilic period when Aramaic was widely used. The offering of goats as sin offerings follows the prescriptions of the Torah, where goats were regularly used for atonement. The number and variety of animals underscore the significance of the temple dedication.

(1×) Ezra 6:17 lists the sacrifices at the temple dedication: 100 bulls, 200 rams, 400 lambs, and 12 male goats as a sin offering. Spanish 'cabras' and English 'goats' clearly identify the animal. The Aramaic plural form reflects the language of the decree and narrative in this section of Ezra. The 12 goats correspond to the 12 tribes, symbolizing atonement for all Israel despite the return being primarily from Judah and Benjamin. GOATS AND GOAT HAIR

en: of-goats | es: de-cabras | fr: [עזין] | de: [עזין] Ezra 6:17

עֹז H5797 Prep-b / N-ms (92×)

Strength, might, power — whether physical fortitude, divine majesty, or the fierce energy of authority and praise.

One of the most celebrated nouns in the Hebrew Bible's vocabulary of power, appearing 92 times and concentrated especially in the Psalms (44 occurrences). It describes the raw strength of God that shakes the wilderness (Ps 29:1), the mighty power before which Israel sings (Exod 15:2, 'The LORD is my strength and my song'), and the festive energy of worship — David danced before the ark 'with all his might' (2 Sam 6:14). Arabic ʿizz, Korean 힘, and Swahili nguvu all converge on the same core: formidable, awe-inspiring power. The word also appears in compound expressions like 'tower of strength' (Judg 9:51, Prov 18:10), where it becomes architectural metaphor for divine protection.

1. strength, might, power (88×) The dominant sense: strength, might, power in its full range — divine omnipotence ('give unto the LORD glory and strength,' 1 Chr 16:28), royal authority ('the king shall joy in thy strength,' Ps 21:1), physical vigor (2 Sam 6:14), and national force. Arabic ʿizz (honor-through-power) and Korean 힘/능력 converge on this sense. The Psalms use it more than any other book, often in parallelism with כָּבוֹד (glory) and תִּפְאֶרֶת (splendor). POWER AND MIRACLES

en: confidence, is-strength-, strength | es: de-fuerza, está-la-fuerza, fortaleza | fr: force, puissance | de: Kraft, Staerke, Stärke 1Sam 2:10; 2Sam 6:14; 1Chr 13:8; 1Chr 16:27; 1Chr 16:28

2. (2×) Strength as a concrete architectural or protective attribute: a 'tower of strength' (מִגְדַּל עֹז, Judg 9:51) or a 'strong refuge' (מַחְסֶה עֹז, Ps 71:7). Here the abstract quality is materialized into fortification imagery — the name of the LORD is a strong tower (Prov 18:10). This usage bridges physical structure and metaphorical security. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: of-strength, strength | es: fuerza | fr: force | de: Staerke, Stärke Judg 9:51; Ps 71:7

3. (1×) A contextual use in Jeremiah 51:53 where the word appears in proximity to Babylon's fortified height. Some translations (French Gaza, German Gaza) reflect a possible confusion with the place name עַזָּה (Gaza), but the Hebrew text describes Babylon's 'strength' — her high fortification — as the target of divine judgment. The multilingual divergence here is itself instructive. GAZA PHILISTINE CITY

en: her-strength | es: su-fortaleza | fr: Gaza | de: Gaza Jer 51:53

4. (1×) The boldness or force of a person's countenance or manner, as in Ecclesiastes 8:1: 'the boldness (עֹז) of his face shall be changed.' Here strength is transferred from physical or military might to the fierce confidence visible in a person's expression. Spanish dureza ('hardness') and French force both capture this specialized nuance of forcefulness in bearing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-strength-of | es: y-dureza-de | fr: et-force | de: und-Kraft Eccl 8:1

עָזָּא H5798a Prep-b / N-proper-ms (13×)

Uzza or Uzzah; a personal name meaning 'strength,' borne by several biblical figures.

The name Uzza (or Uzzah) derives from the root azaz meaning 'to be strong,' and thus means 'strength' or 'my strength.' The most memorable bearer is the man who reached out to steady the Ark of the Covenant on its journey to Jerusalem and was struck dead by God for his presumption (2 Sam 6:3–8; 1 Chr 13:7–11) — an event so startling that David named the place Perez-uzzah ('outbreak against Uzzah'). The name also appears as the garden burial site of kings Manasseh and Amon (2 Kgs 21:18, 26), a Benjaminite (1 Chr 8:7), and a family head among the returning exiles (Ezra 2:49; Neh 7:51).

Uzza / Uzzah (proper noun) (13×) A personal name meaning 'strength,' applied to several individuals: primarily the son of Abinadab who was struck dead for touching the Ark of the Covenant during its transport to Jerusalem (2 Sam 6:3–8; 1 Chr 13:7–11). Also names the 'garden of Uzza' where kings Manasseh and Amon were buried (2 Kgs 21:18, 26), a Benjaminite descendant (1 Chr 8:7), and a clan head among temple servants returning from exile (Ezra 2:49; Neh 7:51). Translations across languages consistently transliterate as Uzza/Uzzah with minor spelling variations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Uzza, Uzzah, against-Uzza | es: Uza, Uzza, Uzá | fr: Uzza, Uzzah, [בעזא] | de: Uzza, Uzzah, [בעזא] 2Sam 6:3; 2Sam 6:6; 2Sam 6:7; 2Sam 6:8; 2Kgs 21:18

עֻזָּה H5798b N-proper-ms (1×)

Uzzah (personal name meaning 'strength'; Levite mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies)

Uzzah is a personal name meaning 'strength,' appearing in the Levitical genealogies of 1 Chronicles. The name derives from the root for strength or might, the same root that gives us names like Uzziel ('God is my strength') and Azariah ('YHWH has helped'). This Uzzah is distinct from the more famous Uzzah who touched the ark and died (2 Samuel 6), though both bear the same name. Hebrew names often reflected theological convictions or hopes—parents naming a child Uzzah expressed confidence in strength, whether physical might or the strength that comes from God. The Septuagint variations reflect different Greek attempts to render the Hebrew name.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 6:29 (English 6:14) lists Uzzah in the Levitical genealogy. Spanish 'Uza,' English 'Uzzah,' and German spellings reflect standard transliterations of the Hebrew name. As a Levite, Uzzah belonged to the tribe set apart for sacred service. The name 'strength' was common in ancient Israel, celebrating might or divine empowerment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Uzzah | es: Uza | fr: [עזה] | de: [עזה] 1Chr 6:29

עֲזָאזֵל H5799 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (4×)

Azazel; either a place-name (complete removal) or a spirit/demon of the wilderness in Levitical atonement ritual

Azazel appears exclusively in Leviticus 16 in connection with the Day of Atonement ritual. One goat is sacrificed to YHWH, while another is sent "to Azazel" into the wilderness, bearing Israel's sins away. Interpretations divide between viewing Azazel as an abstract concept (complete removal, from עזל = remove) or as a personal name for a wilderness spirit or demon (reflected in later Jewish angelology as a fallen angel). The ritual effects the total removal of sin and impurity from the sanctuary and community.

(4×) A term of uncertain meaning central to the scapegoat ritual in Leviticus 16:8, 10 (twice), 26. Scholarly interpretations range from an abstract noun meaning "complete removal" (reduplicative intensive from עזל, remove) to a proper name of a wilderness demon or spirit. Later Jewish tradition (pseudepigrapha, rabbinic literature) develops Azazel as a fallen angel. Multilingual glosses transliterate uniformly: Azazel. The context is cultic: one goat "for YHWH," one "for Azazel," with the latter bearing away communal sin into the desert, effecting purgation and atonement. PERSONAL NAMES

en: for-Azazel, to-Azazel | es: a-Azazel, para-Azazel | fr: pour-Azazel, à-Azazel | de: fuer-Azazel, zu-Azazel Lev 16:8; Lev 16:10; Lev 16:26

עָזַב H5800a Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (214×)

To leave, forsake, or abandon; ranges from covenantal betrayal and physical departure to the state of being forsaken and even helping with a burden.

The verb azav is the Bible's primary word for abandonment, and it carries enormous theological freight. When Israel forsakes the Lord (Judg 2:12-13), the word denounces covenantal betrayal; when a man leaves father and mother (Gen 2:24), it describes the natural departure that forms a new household. The Arabic araba ('to depart, be absent') shares the root sense of separation. Perhaps most surprising is the rare meaning 'to help with a burden' in Exodus 23:5, where the same verb that elsewhere means 'abandon' is redirected toward compassionate aid — a semantic reversal that has puzzled lexicographers for centuries. The passive forms describe the devastating condition of being forsaken, a state Isaiah applies both to desolate cities and to God's own people.

1. forsake, abandon (Qal active) (166×) The dominant Qal active sense: to willfully forsake, abandon, or desert. This covers covenantal abandonment of God (Deut 29:25; Judg 2:12-13; 10:6), desertion of people, and forsaking of commandments. The Arabic hajara/taraka, Korean beorida, and Swahili kuacha all converge on deliberate relational severance. The prophets use it as a covenant-lawsuit term: Israel has 'forsaken' the Lord who redeemed them, inverting the exodus relationship. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: forsook, he-forsook, left | es: Abandonaron, abandonaron, abandonó | fr: abandonna, abandonner, ils-abandonna | de: sie-verliess, sie-verliessen, verlassen Deut 29:25; Judg 2:12; Judg 2:13; Judg 10:6; Judg 10:13

2. leave behind, let remain (Qal) (23×) To leave behind or let remain, without the moral weight of betrayal. In Genesis 2:24 a man 'leaves' his parents to cleave to his wife; in Genesis 39:6 Potiphar 'left' all his affairs in Joseph's hands. The Arabic taraka in its neutral sense and Korean dugo gada ('to leave behind') capture this well. The difference from sense 1 is the absence of rejection — what is left behind is not being repudiated but simply released or entrusted. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-forsook, and-he-left, and-leave | es: Y-dejó, abandonamos, deja | fr: – quitter-, abandonner, et-abandonner | de: du-soll-verlassen, er-gelassen-hatte, links Gen 2:24; Gen 39:6; Gen 39:12; Gen 39:13; Gen 39:15

3. forsaken one, abandoned (participle) (14×) The participial and adjectival use describing someone or something as 'forsaken' or 'abandoned.' Isaiah 62:4 promises Jerusalem 'you shall no more be called Azuvah (Forsaken),' while texts like 1 Kings 14:10 and 2 Kings 14:26 describe the helpless condition of those left without protector. The Arabic mahjura/matruka and Korean beoryeojin ('abandoned one') confirm the stative, descriptive quality. This sense functions as a social category: the azuvah is one whom society or God has left behind. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: Forsaken, abandoned, and-abandoned | es: Abandonada, Abandonadas, abandonada | fr: abandonner, et-abandoned, et-free | de: linke, oder-verliess, und-abandoned Deut 32:36; 1Kgs 14:10; 1Kgs 21:21; 2Kgs 9:8; 2Kgs 14:26

4. be forsaken, be abandoned (Nifal/QalPassive) (8×) The Nifal or Qal passive finite forms expressing the event or state of being forsaken. In Leviticus 26:43 the land 'shall be forsaken,' and in Isaiah 7:16 the land whose two kings Israel dreads 'will be forsaken.' The Arabic passive tutraku and Korean beoryeojida capture the grammatical passivization. Psalm 37:25 offers the famous testimony: 'I have not seen the righteous forsaken' — a theological claim about God's faithfulness framed in this passive voice. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-abandoned, forsaken, is-abandoned | es: Abandonada, Serán-dejados, desamparada | fr: abandonner, et-abandonner, fera-être-gauche | de: und-verlassen, verlassen, verliess Lev 26:43; Job 18:4; Ps 37:25; Isa 7:16; Isa 18:6

5. help, assist with a burden (Qal) (3×) A remarkable semantic outlier: to help or assist, specifically in relieving an animal of its burden (Exod 23:5). All three occurrences come from the same verse and its surrounding legal context. The Korean dopda ('to help') and Swahili kusaidia confirm translators consistently render this as assistance rather than abandonment. Some scholars derive this from a homonymous root; others see a semantic development from 'release, let loose' (a burden). Either way, it stands as a striking counterpoint to the word's dominant meaning. HELP AND ASSISTANCE to restore, repair (uncertain meaning; possibly 'they fortified/restored,' but could be from 'abandon')

en: from-helping, helping, you-shall-help | es: abandonar, abandonarás, de-abandonar | fr: de-helping, helping, tu—aider | de: du-soll-helfen, helping, von-helping Exod 23:5

עָזַב H5800b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

This verb appears in Nehemiah's account of rebuilding Jerusalem's walls and likely means to restore, repair, or possibly fortify. The passage says the goldsmiths and perfumers 'restored' Jerusalem as far as the Broad Wall. However, the meaning is debated. The verb could come from a root meaning to restore or erect (cognate to Sabaean), or it could be from the more common root meaning 'to abandon' or 'forsake,' with interpreters suggesting 'they left' Jerusalem unfortified, or 'they paved.' The weight of evidence favors 'restored' or 'fortified,' fitting the context of Nehemiah's wall-building project, where various groups took responsibility for different sections.

(1×) Nehemiah 3:8 describes one group's work on the wall: 'they restored Jerusalem as far as the Broad Wall.' Spanish 'y dejaron' (and they left) reflects an interpretation from the root 'abandon,' but this seems contextually odd. English 'restored' fits better with the chapter's theme of different groups rebuilding different wall sections. The exact sense remains uncertain, but restoration or fortification aligns with Nehemiah's project. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE

en: and-they-restored | es: y-dejaron | fr: [ויעזבו] | de: [ויעזבו] Neh 3:8

עִזָּבוֹן H5801 Prep-b / N-mpc / 2fs (7×)

Wares, merchandise; trade goods exchanged in commerce, used exclusively of Tyre's vast trading network in Ezekiel 27.

A masculine noun found only in the plural with suffixes, meaning 'wares' or 'merchandise' – goods left in the purchaser's hands after a transaction. It appears exclusively in Ezekiel 27, the magnificent oracle cataloguing Tyre's commercial empire. Trading partners furnished iron, tin, and lead 'as your wares' (Ezek 27:12), along with horses, mules, ivory, ebony, turquoise, coral, rubies, wheat, honey, oil, and balm. The Spanish 'productos' and French 'commerce' both reflect the mercantile context. The word may derive from 'azav ('to leave'), suggesting goods deposited or consigned in trade.

your wares (7×) Traded goods or merchandise, specifically items exchanged in commercial transactions, appearing only in Ezekiel 27's elaborate catalogue of Tyre's trade network. In Ezek 27:12, Tarshish traded silver, iron, tin, and lead 'as your wares' (izzevonayyik); v.14 lists horses and mules from Beth-Togarmah; v.16 mentions turquoise, purple, embroidery, and coral from Aram; v.19 records wrought iron, cassia, and calamus 'at the price of your wares'; v.22 catalogs spices and gold from Sheba and Raamah. In v.27 and v.33 the word appears in the climactic description of Tyre's fall, where all her wares sink into the heart of the seas. The etymology from 'azav ('leave, deposit') suggests goods consigned or left with a trading partner. MERCHANDISE WARES

en: and-your-wares, for-your-wares, your-wares | es: en-tus-productos, tus-

productos, y-tus-productos | fr: commerce, et-commerce | de: [בעזבוניך], [ועזבוניך], [עזבוניך] Ezek 27:12; Ezek 27:14; Ezek 27:16; Ezek 27:19; Ezek 27:22

עַזְבּוּק H5802 N-proper-ms (1×)

Azbuk (personal name; father of Nehemiah, one of the wall-builders in post-exilic Jerusalem)

Azbuk is a personal name appearing in Nehemiah's account of the wall rebuilding. He is identified as the father of Nehemiah (not the governor but another man with the same name), who was the ruler of half the district of Beth-zur and participated in repairing a section of Jerusalem's wall. The name's meaning is uncertain, though it may contain elements related to strengthening or power. Hebrew names often combined divine or powerful imagery with other elements. The Septuagint's varied renderings show Greek translators' attempts to represent an unfamiliar Hebrew name. Azbuk appears only once in Scripture, known solely as the father of this district ruler who contributed to the wall reconstruction.

(1×) Nehemiah 3:16 identifies one of the wall builders as 'Nehemiah son of Azbuk, ruler of half the district of Beth-zur.' The name Azbuk appears only here, a patronymic identifying which Nehemiah this is (since the governor also bore that name). Spanish 'Azbuc' reflects standard transliteration. Azbuk's son supervised repairs opposite the tombs of David and the artificial pool, taking responsibility for a significant section. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azbuk | es: Azbuc | fr: [עזבוק] | de: [עזבוק] Neh 3:16

עַזְגָּד H5803 N-proper-ms (4×)

Azgad; name of a family head among the returning exiles and a covenant signatory

Azgad (meaning "Gad is mighty") is a personal and family name in the post-exilic period. The "sons of Azgad" returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:12//Nehemiah 7:17) and with Ezra (Ezra 8:12). An Azgad also appears among those who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:15, English v. 16). The name reflects theophoric elements common in Israelite nomenclature, invoking the divine name Gad.

(4×) A personal and family name meaning "Gad is mighty." The family of Azgad appears in parallel return lists (Ezra 2:12// Nehemiah 7:17) and among Ezra's returnees (Ezra 8:12). An Azgad sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:15. Transliterations are uniform: Azgad/Azgad, with some bracketing [עזגד]. Greek versions render as Ασγαδ or Αζγαδ. The name's theophoric structure (deity + epithet) is typical of Hebrew personal names, and its recurrence across Ezra-Nehemiah indicates a significant family in the restoration community. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azgad | es: Azgad | fr: [עזגד] | de: [עזגד] Ezra 2:12; Ezra 8:12; Neh 7:17; Neh 10:15

עַזָּה H5804 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (21×)

Gaza, the major Philistine coastal city; also Ayyah, a distinct place name in 1 Chr 7:28.

Refers overwhelmingly to the famous Philistine city on the southern Mediterranean coast, the southernmost of the five great Philistine city-states. It appears from the Table of Nations (Gen 10:19) through the conquest narratives and into the prophets, where Amos pronounces judgment on it for slave trading (Amos 1:6-7). The name appears as 'Azzah' in older English translations and 'Gaza' in others, both reflecting the same Hebrew form. One occurrence in 1 Chr 7:28 appears to reference a distinct locality, 'Ayyah,' as confirmed by multilingual evidence showing a separate rendering.

1. Gaza (Philistine city) (20×) The major Philistine city on the southern Mediterranean coast, one of the five Philistine city-states alongside Ashdod, Ashkelon, Gath, and Ekron. Marking the southwestern boundary of Canaan (Gen 10:19), it features in Samson's exploits (Judg 16:1, 21), conquest lists (Josh 10:41, 11:22), and prophetic oracles – Amos denounces Gaza for deporting entire communities into slavery (Amos 1:6-7). Spanish and French render it both as 'Gaza' and 'Azzah,' preserving the dual English tradition. GAZA PHILISTINE CITY

en: Azzah, Gaza, and-Azzah | es: Azah, Azzah, Azzá | fr: Azzah, Gaza, dans-Gaza | de: Azzah, Gaza, fuer-Gaza Gen 10:19; Deut 2:23; Josh 10:41; Josh 11:22; Josh 15:47

2. Ayyah (proper name) (1×) A place name appearing in 1 Chronicles 7:28 within the territorial description of the tribe of Ephraim, distinct from the Philistine city. Multilingual glosses confirm a separate identity: English renders 'Ayyah,' Spanish 'Aya,' suggesting this may be a variant reading or a different settlement altogether. The Hebrew consonantal form overlaps with Gaza but the geographical and tribal context points to a northern Ephraimite locale. AIAH PLACE PERSON

en: Ayyah | es: Aya | fr: [עיה] | de: [עיה] 1Chr 7:28

עֲזוּבָה H5805 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (1×)

forsaken area, desolate region (feminine participle used as noun: the abandoned/forsaken place)

This feminine participle functions as a noun meaning 'the forsaken area' or 'desolate region.' It appears in Isaiah's commission vision, where God warns that judgment will result in great forsakenness 'in the midst of the land.' The term comes from the root 'to forsake' or 'abandon,' and the participle form emphasizes the state of being abandoned. Isaiah's vision foretells that the land will be emptied of inhabitants, becoming desolate and forsaken. The definite article ('the forsaken area') gives it a concrete, almost personified quality —not just abstract desolation but a specific forsaken place. The imagery is stark: what was once populated and thriving will become empty and abandoned.

(1×) Isaiah 6:12 warns that 'the forsaken area is great in the midst of the land.' Spanish 'el abandono' (the abandonment/desolation) captures the sense of a place left empty. The context is Isaiah's vision of judgment: people will be removed far away, and a great forsaken region will remain in the land's heart. The passive participle emphasizes the state of having been abandoned, reflecting divine judgment through exile. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: the-forsaken-area | es: el-abandono | fr: [העזובה] | de: [העזובה] Isa 6:12

עֲזוּבָה H5806 N-proper-fs (4×)

Azubah; personal name of two women: Jehoshaphat's mother and Caleb's wife

Azubah (meaning "forsaken" or "deserted") is the name of two women in the biblical record. The first was the mother of King Jehoshaphat of Judah (1 Kings 22:42//2 Chronicles 20:31). The second was a wife of Caleb, mentioned in the genealogical records of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:18-19). Despite the name's negative connotation, these women held significant positions in Israelite genealogy and royal lineage.

(4×) A feminine personal name borne by two biblical women: (1) the mother of Jehoshaphat (1 Kings 22:42//2 Chronicles 20:31) and (2) the wife of Caleb (1 Chronicles 2:18-19). The name likely means "forsaken," possibly reflecting circumstances at birth or a later renaming. Transliterations are consistent: Azubah/Azuvah/Azuba, with some bracketing [עזובה]. Greek versions render as Αζαεβα, Αζονβα, Γαζουβα. The name's appearance in both royal and tribal genealogies underscores these women's importance in preserving lineage records. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azubah, Azuvah | es: Azuba | fr: Azuvah, [עזובה] | de: Azuvah, [עזובה] 1Kgs 22:42; 1Chr 2:18; 1Chr 2:19; 2Chr 20:31

עֻזּוֹ H5807 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (3×)

Strength, might, fierceness; powerful force, whether in battle or divine acts

This noun denotes strength and mighty power, essentially equivalent to the more common 'oz.' Isaiah 42:25 uses it to describe the 'fierceness of battle' poured out by Yahweh upon rebellious Israel, parallel to 'the heat of His anger.' Psalm 145:6 celebrates the 'might of Your awesome acts,' God's terrifying deeds on behalf of His people. Psalm 78:4 recounts telling the next generation of God's 'strength and wonders,' the powerful works that define Israel's history. The word emphasizes forceful, vigorous strength, sometimes with connotations of violence or intensity.

(3×) Three occurrences, all describing either God's powerful acts or the fierce force of divine judgment. The Psalms use it in contexts of worship and testimony, recounting Yahweh's mighty deeds. Isaiah's usage is darker: the fierceness of battle becomes an instrument of God's wrath. The multilingual glosses capture the core idea of strength, might, and power, with Spanish and English using 'poder,' 'strength,' 'violence' to convey the intensity. The conjunction 'and' appears in contexts where the noun is paired with other divine attributes. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-his-strength, and-might-of, and-violence-of | es: Y-poder-de, y-poder-de-el, y-violencia | fr: [ועזון], et-vigueur | de: [ועזון], und-might-of, und-sein-Stärke Ps 78:4; Ps 145:6; Isa 42:25

עִזּוּז H5808 Conj-w | Adj-ms (2×)

mighty, powerful (adjective describing military strength or divine power)

This adjective appears twice, once describing a mighty army and once describing the Lord himself. In Isaiah 43:17, it characterizes the formidable Egyptian force ('chariot and horse, army and warrior') that perished in the Red Sea. In Psalm 24:8, it is one of the Lord's titles: 'the Lord strong and mighty' (עִזּוּז וְגִבּוֹר). The Spanish, French, and German glosses align on 'strong/powerful,' situating the term in the semantic field of military and divine might.

(2×) Denotes overwhelming strength, whether of a human army or of God himself. Isaiah 43:17 recalls the 'mighty' Egyptian army drowned at the Exodus; Psalm 24:8 celebrates the Lord as 'mighty' in battle. The multilingual glosses ('strong,' 'fuerte,' 'puissance,' 'stark') uniformly emphasize martial and divine power. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-power, strong | es: fuerte, y-poder | fr: [ועזון], puissance | de: [ועזון], stark Ps 24:8; Isa 43:17

עַזּוּר H5809 N-proper-ms (3×)

Personal name meaning 'helped' or 'helper'; borne by three individuals including a false prophet's father

Azzur, meaning 'helped' or 'helper,' appears as the name of three individuals in Scripture. Most notably, Azzur was the father of Hananiah, the false prophet who opposed Jeremiah in Jerusalem, declaring the Babylonian yoke would be broken within two years—a prophecy Jeremiah condemned as lies. Another Azzur appears in Ezekiel 11:1 among the wicked leaders giving evil counsel in Jerusalem. A third Azzur was a chief among the people who sealed Nehemiah's covenant renewal. The name's irony is sharp: 'Helped,' yet associated with false prophecy and wicked counsel, shows that human help apart from divine truth leads astray.

(3×) Three distinct individuals, with the father of the false prophet Hananiah being most prominent. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration, with minor spelling variations (Azur/Azzur) reflecting different language conventions. Jeremiah 28 gives Azzur prominence as the father of a prophet who contradicted Jeremiah's message. The textual variants (Azzur/Azur) show scribal variation in the precise form of the name across manuscripts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azzur | es: Azur, Azzur | fr: Azour, [עזור] | de: [עזור], [עזר] Neh 10:17; Jer 28:1; Ezek 11:1

עָזַז H5810 V-Hifil-Perf-3fs (12×)

To be strong, prevail; to strengthen; in Hifil, to make bold or brazen the face, showing impudence

Denotes strength across a spectrum from raw power to moral boldness. When Othniel's hand 'prevailed against' Cushan-rishathaim (Judg 3:10) and Midian's grip 'was strong against' Israel (Judg 6:2), the Qal conveys dominating physical force. Psalm 68:28 shifts to a plea for God to 'strengthen' what he has done. The Hifil introduces an ethical edge: Proverbs 21:29 says the wicked 'hardens his face' in brazen defiance, while Proverbs 7:13 describes the adulteress who 'made bold her face.' Spanish 'endurece' (hardens) and 'prevaleció' (prevailed) together span this word's range from battlefield might to moral impudence.

1. be strong, prevail (8×) To be or become strong, mighty, prevailing – the intransitive Qal sense of strength asserting itself. Judges 3:10 and 6:2 use it for a hand that 'was strong against' an enemy. Psalms 9:19 and 52:7 apply it to human defiance or mortal frailty before God. French 'et-etait-fort' and Spanish 'prevaleció' both confirm straightforward physical or political dominance. Proverbs 8:28 describes springs becoming strong, pointing to natural force. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-was-strong, he-took-refuge, is-strong | es: Y-prevaleció, cuando-fortificó-él, fuerte | fr: [לעוז], dans-בעזוז, et-était-fort | de: [בעזוז], [יעוז], [לעוז] Judg 3:10; Judg 6:2; Ps 9:19; Ps 52:7; Ps 89:13

2. strengthen, make strong (2×) To strengthen or make strong – a transitive or imperative sense directing power toward another. Psalm 68:28 petitions God to 'strengthen' his completed work over Israel, and Ecclesiastes 7:19 observes that wisdom 'strengthens' the wise more than ten rulers. Spanish 'fortalece' (strengthen) and German 'sein-stark' (be strong) reflect the causative nuance of imparting strength. POWER AND ABILITY

en: be-strong, strengthens | es: fortalece | fr: être-fort, תעז | de: [תעז], sein-stark Ps 68:28; Eccl 7:19

3. make bold, harden the face (2×) To make bold or brazen the face (Hifil causative), expressing impudence or defiance through hardened facial expression. Proverbs 7:13 describes the seductress who 'made bold her face' before kissing the young man, and Proverbs 21:29 contrasts the wicked who 'hardens his face' with the upright who considers his ways. Spanish 'endurece' (hardens) and 'endureció' (hardened) precisely capture this shift from physical strength to moral shamelessness. BOLD BREAK FORTH

en: hardens, she-made-bold | es: Endurece, endureció | fr: העז ,העזה | de: [העז], [העזה] Prov 7:13; Prov 21:29

עָזָז H5811 N-proper-ms (1×)

Azaz (personal name; Reubenite mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies)

Azaz is a personal name appearing in the genealogies of Reuben in 1 Chronicles. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to be strong' or 'powerful,' perhaps serving as a shortened form of a longer theophoric name, or it may come from a root meaning 'to take refuge.' Hebrew names often celebrated strength, whether physical might or the strength found in God. Azaz appears only once in Scripture, preserved in the tribal records of Reuben, the firstborn son of Jacob who lost his birthright. The Septuagint's Greek rendering attempts to approximate the Hebrew consonants. He represents one of countless Israelites whose names were preserved in the genealogical records that anchored Israel's tribal identity.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 5:8 lists Azaz in the genealogy of Reuben: 'Bela son of Azaz, son of Shema, son of Joel.' Spanish and English transliterations ('Azaz') preserve the Hebrew name. As a Reubenite, Azaz belonged to the tribe that settled east of the Jordan. His inclusion in the genealogy maintains the tribal memory even after the northern kingdom's fall and the Transjordanian tribes' early exile. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azaz | es: Azaz | fr: [עזן] | de: [עזן] 1Chr 5:8

עַזַזְיָהוּ H5812 N-proper-ms (3×)

Personal name meaning 'Yahweh is mighty'; Levites and a Benjamite in Chronicles

Azazyahu, meaning 'Yahweh is mighty,' is the name of several individuals in Chronicles, though textual questions surround some occurrences. The name is essentially equivalent to Uzziah/Azariah, varying forms of the same theophoric construction affirming Yahweh's strength. One Azaziah was a Levite musician appointed to play the lyre during David's bringing up of the ark. Another appears among Hezekiah's administrative officials overseeing temple offerings. A Benjamite leader also bore the name. The Septuagint often renders it as Ozias, showing the fluid spelling conventions for theophoric names in ancient transmission.

(3×) Three individuals in Chronicles, all in Levitical or administrative contexts. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration patterns, with some versions preserving the Hebrew form. Textual critics note possible confusion with the similar names Uzziah and Azariah, as the Hebrew consonants overlap significantly. The Chronicles context emphasizes temple service and religious administration, fitting for a name celebrating Yahweh's might. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azazyahu, and-Azaziah, and-Azazyahu | es: Azazías, y-Azazias, y-Azazyahu | fr: [ועזזיהו], [עזזיהו] | de: [ועזזיהו], [עזזיהו] 1Chr 15:21; 1Chr 27:20; 2Chr 31:13

עֻזִּי H5813 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)
Uzzi — 'my strength,' a personal name borne by several priestly and tribal figures in Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah
The name עֻזִּי (Uzzi), meaning 'my strength' (from the root עזז, 'to be strong'), belongs to at least six different individuals in the Old Testament, all appearing in genealogical and administrative lists. The most prominent is a descendant of Aaron through Eleazar and Phinehas in the high-priestly line (1 Chr 6:5-6, 51; Ezra 7:4). Others include an Issacharite clan leader (1 Chr 7:2-3), a Benjaminite (1 Chr 7:7; 9:8), a Levitical overseer in post-exilic Jerusalem (Neh 11:22), and priestly figures in Nehemiah's lists (Neh 12:19, 42). The name reflects the common Israelite practice of embedding theophoric strength-language in personal names.

Uzzi (11×) A personal name meaning 'my strength,' borne by multiple figures in Israel's genealogies and administrative records. The chief bearer is a priest in the Aaronic-Eleazar line (1 Chr 6:5-6, 51; Ezra 7:4). Other Uzzis include an Issacharite military chief (1 Chr 7:2-3), a Benjaminite (1 Chr 7:7; 9:8), a Levitical worship overseer under Nehemiah (Neh 11:22), and priestly family heads (Neh 12:19, 42). Spanish 'Uzi' and English 'Uzzi' both transliterate directly. The name belongs to the widespread theophoric pattern built on the root עזז ('strength'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Uzzi, and-Uzzi | es: Uzi, Y-Uzi, y-Uzi | fr: Uzzi, et-Uzzi | de: Usi, [עזי], [עזי] 1Chr 6:5; 1Chr 6:6; 1Chr 6:51; 1Chr 7:2; 1Chr 7:3

עֻזִּיָּא H5814 N-proper-ms (1×)
Uzziah (personal name meaning 'YHWH is my strength'; one of David's mighty warriors)
Uzziah is a personal name meaning 'YHWH is my strength,' composed of 'uzzi' (my strength) and 'Yah' (abbreviated form of YHWH). This particular Uzziah was one of David's mighty warriors, the elite fighters who supported David during his reign. He is distinct from the more famous King Uzziah of Judah, though both share the same theophoric name celebrating God as the source of strength. Names incorporating 'uzzi' were common in ancient Israel, reflecting the people's dependence on divine power rather than human might. This warrior Uzziah appears only in the list of David's heroes in 1 Chronicles, one of the brave men who fought alongside the king.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 11:44 lists 'Uzziah the Ashterathite' among David's mighty warriors, the elite 'Thirty' or 'Three' who performed extraordinary feats of valor. Spanish 'Uzías' reflects the standard transliteration. As one of David's heroes, Uzziah represents the loyal warriors who helped establish and defend David's kingdom, men whose names were preserved in Israel's military honor roll. UZZIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Uziyah | es: Uzías | fr: [עזיא] | de: [עזיא] 1Chr 11:44

וְ H5815 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Aziel (personal name; Levitical musician, probably textual variant of Uzziel)
Aziel is a personal name appearing in the account of David bringing the ark to Jerusalem. He was a Levitical musician appointed to play lyres. However, scholars widely recognize Aziel as likely a scribal error or shortened form of Uzziel, since verse 20 calls him Aziel while verse 18 calls him Uzziel. The name Uzziel means 'God is my strength,' and Aziel may represent a variant spelling or abbreviation. Such textual variations occur in parallel passages in Chronicles, reflecting the complex transmission history of these genealogical and liturgical lists. Whether Aziel or Uzziel, he was among the musicians who celebrated the ark's arrival with music, part of the Levitical ministry of worship.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 15:20 lists 'Aziel' among the Levitical musicians playing lyres, while verse 18 calls him Uzziel. Spanish 'y Aziel' and German 'und Usiel' show the textual variation across versions. The context is David's second attempt to bring the ark to Jerusalem, now with proper Levitical procedures including music and celebration. Aziel/Uzziel played an alamoth (possibly a musical mode or instrument type), contributing to the worship procession. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Aziel | es: y-Aziel | fr: [ועזיאל] | de: und-Usiel 1Chr 15:20

עֻזִּיאֵל H5816 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (16×)
Uzziel — personal name meaning 'my strength is God,' borne by Levites, a Simeonite, and a Benjaminite
A theophoric name compounded from ʿuzzî ('my strength') and ʾēl ('God'). Uzziel appears most prominently as the son of Kohath and grandson of Levi, making him the eponymous ancestor of the Uzzielite Levitical clan (Exod 6:18, 22; Lev 10:4; Num 3:19, 30; 1 Chr 6:3; 15:10; 23:12, 20; 24:24). His descendants Mishael and Elzaphan carried the bodies of Nadab and Abihu from the sanctuary (Lev 10:4). Other bearers include a Levitical musician (1 Chr 25:4), a Hezekiah-era Levite (2 Chr 29:14), a Simeonite military leader (1 Chr 4:42), a Benjaminite (1 Chr 7:7), and a wall-repairer under Nehemiah (Neh 3:8).

Uzziel (16×) Proper masculine name meaning 'my strength is God,' primarily identifying the Kohathite Levite who founded the Uzzielite clan. The majority of occurrences trace this Levitical lineage through Exodus, Numbers, and Chronicles (Exod 6:18; Num 3:19, 30; 1 Chr 23:12, 20). Secondary bearers include temple musicians, a Simeonite captain, and Nehemiah's wall-builder (Neh 3:8). French and English uniformly render Uzziel, while German alternates between Usiel and Uzziel, reflecting uncertainty about the initial sibilant. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Uzziel, and-Uzzi'el, and-Uzziel | es: Uziel, y-Uziel | fr: Uzziel, et-Uzziel | de: Usiel, Uzziel, [עזיאל] Exod 6:18; Exod 6:22; Lev 10:4; Num 3:19; Num 3:30

עֻזִּיאֵלִי H5817 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)
the Uzzielites, of the Uzzielites (gentilics: descendants of Uzziel, a Levitical clan)
This gentilic designates the Uzzielite clan, descendants of Uzziel son of Kohath. In Numbers 3:27, the Uzzielites are listed among the Kohathite families charged with tabernacle duties. In 1 Chronicles 26:23, they appear in the genealogies of Levitical gatekeepers and treasurers. The multilingual glosses transliterate the gentilic with appropriate prepositions ('the Uzzielite,' 'of the Uzzielites'), following standard conventions for tribal and clan names.

(2×) A collective gentilic referring to the descendants of Uzziel, a Kohathite Levite. Both occurrences situate the Uzzielites in contexts of priestly and tabernacle service (Numbers 3:27, 1 Chronicles 26:23). All target languages transliterate the name and preserve the prepositional nuances ('the Uzzielite,' 'para el uzielita,' 'le Uzzielite'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: of-the-Uzzielites, the-Uzzielite | es: el-uzielita, para-el-uzielita | fr: [לעזיאלי], le-Uzzielite | de: [לעזיאלי], der-Uzzielite Num 3:27; 1Chr 26:23

עֻזִּיָּהוּ H5818 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (27×)
Uzziah ('my strength is Yah'), primarily the king of Judah (c.

792-740 BCE), also borne by several Levites and officials
A theophoric name meaning 'my strength is Yah,' borne most prominently by the king of Judah who reigned for over fifty years and is also called Azariah (2 Kgs 15:1-7). His prosperous reign ended in disgrace when he presumed to burn incense in the temple and was struck with leprosy (2 Chr 26:16-21). Isaiah's prophetic call is dated to 'the year that King Uzziah died' (Isa 6:1), making this name a chronological anchor for prophecy. The same name appears for a Levite ancestor (1 Chr 6:24), a priest who took a foreign wife (Ezra 10:21), and a clan head in Nehemiah's Jerusalem (Neh 11:4). Translations consistently transliterate the name: 'Uzias' (spa/fra), 'Usija' (deu).

1. Uzziah (king of Judah) (26×) The king of Judah (c. 792-740 BCE), also known as Azariah, whose long and prosperous reign ended when he was struck with leprosy for usurping priestly duties (2 Chr 26:16-21). His death marks Isaiah's inaugural vision (Isa 6:1). Multilingual glosses transliterate consistently – 'Uzias' (spa), 'Ozias' (fra), 'Usija' (deu) – with the Greek Septuagint alternating between Ozias and Azarias. Dominant references: 2 Kgs 15:13-34, 2 Chr 26, Isa 1:1. UZZIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Uzziah, Uzziyah, Uzziyahu | es: Uziya, Uziyahu, Uzías | fr: Ozias, Uzziyahu | de: Usija, Uzziyahu, [עזיה] 2Kgs 15:13; 2Kgs 15:30; 2Kgs 15:32; 2Kgs 15:34; 1Chr 6:24

2. Uzziah (Levite/other) (1×) The name Uzziah borne by other individuals: a Levite ancestor of Heman the singer (1 Chr 6:24), a father of one of David's officers (1 Chr 27:25), a priest who took a foreign wife after the exile (Ezra 10:21), and a Judahite in post-exilic Jerusalem (Neh 11:4). These minor bearers appear in genealogical and administrative lists rather than narrative contexts. UZZIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: and-Uzziyah | es: y-Uziyah | fr: et-Ozias | de: [ועזיה] Ezra 10:21

עַזִיזָא H5819 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Aziza (personal name; Israelite who divorced foreign wife during Ezra's reforms)
Aziza is a personal name appearing in Ezra's list of men who had married foreign women and agreed to divorce them during the post-exilic reforms. The name may mean 'strong' or 'powerful,' from the root for strength. He was among those from the family of Zattu who had intermarried with foreign women, which Ezra saw as threatening the community's covenant faithfulness. The reforms were controversial but deemed necessary to maintain Israel's distinct identity and loyalty to YHWH after the exile. Aziza's inclusion in the list indicates he complied with Ezra's demand to put away his foreign wife, a personally costly decision made in the name of communal holiness.

(1×) Ezra 10:27 lists Aziza among descendants of Zattu who had married foreign women: 'from the sons of Zattu: Elioenai, Eliashib, Mattaniah, Jeremoth, Zabad, and Aziza.' Spanish 'y Aziza' reflects the conjunction in this list. The broader context is Ezra's campaign to dissolve mixed marriages seen as compromising covenant loyalty. Aziza appears only in this list of those who complied with the order. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Aziza | es: y-Aziza | fr: [ועזיזא] | de: [ועזיזא] Ezra 10:27

עַזְמָוֶת H5820 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)
Azmaveth, a personal name meaning 'death is strong,' borne by several men in David's circle and a Benjaminite.
A masculine proper noun whose components – 'oz (strength) and maweth (death) – suggest 'death is strong' or 'strong unto death.' The name is borne by several distinct individuals: one of David's thirty mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:31, 1 Chr 11:33), the father of two Benjaminite fighters who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:3), a royal treasurer under David (1 Chr 27:25), and a Benjaminite in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 8:36, 9:42). It also appears as a place name for a town resettled after the exile (Ezra 2:24, Neh 12:29). The Septuagint typically renders it Azmoth or Asmoth.

Azmaveth (personal/place name) (8×) A proper noun designating several individuals associated with David's administration and Benjaminite genealogies. The name combines elements meaning 'strength' and 'death,' suggesting fortitude in the face of mortality. It identifies one of David's elite warriors (2 Sam 23:31, 1 Chr 11:33), the father of Benjaminite defectors to David (1 Chr 12:3), a royal overseer of treasuries (1 Chr 27:25), and a descendant of Saul (1 Chr 8:36, 9:42). The Septuagint forms Azmoth/Asmoth and consistent transliterations across English ('Azmaveth'), Spanish ('Azmavet'), and French confirm the name's stability in transmission. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Azmavet, Azmaveth, and-Azmavet | es: Azmavet, Azmávet, y-Azmavet | fr: Azmaveth, [ועזמות], [עזמות] | de: Asmawet, Azmaveth, [ועזמות] 2Sam 23:31; 1Chr 8:36; 1Chr 9:42; 1Chr 11:33; 1Chr 12:3

עַזָּן H5821 N-proper-ms (1×)
Azzan (personal name; father of Paltiel, the Issacharite leader during wilderness period)
Azzan is a personal name meaning perhaps 'strong' or 'sharp,' appearing in Numbers as the father of Paltiel, who represented the tribe of Issachar in dividing the Promised Land. The name may derive from a root related to strength or from a different root meaning to sharpen or make keen. Azzan lived during the wilderness period, and his son Paltiel was chosen as one of the tribal leaders who would oversee the allocation of Canaan among the tribes. The selection of tribal representatives for this task was important—these were men trusted to ensure fair distribution of the land. Azzan is known only through his son's role in this significant administrative task.

(1×) Numbers 34:26 identifies 'Paltiel son of Azzan' as the leader from Issachar appointed to help divide the land. Multiple translations (Spanish 'Azán,' French/German/English 'Azzan') show consistent transliteration. Azzan's son served alongside Joshua and Eleazar in the crucial task of tribal land allocation, ensuring Issachar received its proper inheritance in Canaan. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Azzan | es: Azán | fr: Azzan | de: Azzan Num 34:26

עָזְנִיָּה H5822 Art / N-fs (2×)
the black vulture, the osprey (unclean bird of prey, possibly a species of vulture or fish-eating hawk)
This bird appears in the Levitical and Deuteronomic lists of unclean birds, grouped with eagles, vultures, and other raptors. The precise species is uncertain—older English versions proposed 'osprey' (a fish-eating hawk), while more recent scholarship leans toward a type of vulture. The BDB notes that the Hebrew root is unknown and may be a foreign loanword. The multilingual glosses diverge: English opts for 'black vulture,' Spanish for 'azor' (goshawk) or 'águila marina' (sea eagle), French and German for 'black vulture.' The recurring association with נֶשֶׁר (eagle) and other carrion birds supports a vulture identification.

(2×) An unclean bird of prey listed in Leviticus 11:13 and Deuteronomy 14:12, probably a vulture or large raptor. Modern translations vary ('black vulture,' 'osprey,' 'azor'), reflecting ongoing uncertainty about the species. The context—ritual purity laws and the bird's grouping with other scavengers—suggests a carrion-eating raptor. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5372 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-the-black-vulture, the-black-vulture | es: el-azor, y-el-águila-marina | fr: et-le-noir-vulture, le-noir-vulture | de: der-schwarz-vulture, und-der-schwarz-vulture Lev 11:13; Deut 14:12

עָזַק H5823 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3ms (1×)
to dig about, dig carefully (intensive Piel: to work soil thoroughly around plants)
This Piel verb means to dig about or dig carefully, especially the careful cultivation of soil around plants. The intensive Piel form suggests thorough, painstaking work. In Isaiah's Song of the Vineyard, the lover prepares his vineyard by carefully digging and working the soil, removing stones and planting choice vines—every detail shows intensive care. The verb connects to Arabic and Ethiopic roots meaning to cleave or furrow the earth with a tool, and to words for wells and cisterns dug into the ground. The image is of a vineyard keeper who spares no effort in preparing the soil, making the vineyard's failure to produce good grapes all the more tragic and inexcusable.

(1×) Isaiah 5:2 describes the vineyard owner's care: 'he dug it carefully about' (or 'cleared it of stones' depending on interpretation of the intensive verb). Spanish 'Y la cavó' (and he dug it) captures the agricultural labor. The Song of the Vineyard uses this verb to emphasize that the owner did everything possible to ensure a good harvest, making the wild grapes that resulted not his fault but the vineyard's (representing Israel's) failure. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: and-he-dug-it | es: Y-la-cavó | fr: [וַיְעַזְּקֵהוּ] | de: [וַיְעַזְּקֵהוּ] Isa 5:2

עִזְקָה H5824 Conj-w (2×)

with the signet, with his signet (prepositional phrase: using a seal or signet ring)

This Aramaic phrase appears twice in Daniel 6:17, describing how King Darius sealed the lions' den after Daniel was cast in. The king 'sealed it with his own signet and with the signet of his lords,' ensuring that no one could tamper with the decree. The signet ring was a mark of royal authority and authenticity. The multilingual glosses uniformly render the prepositional construction ('with his signet,' 'con su anillo,' 'service'), though the French 'service' is an outlier, possibly a mistranslation.

(2×) Denotes the instrument of sealing: a signet ring bearing the king's or a noble's mark. Daniel 6:17 (twice) uses the phrase to emphasize the irrevocable nature of Darius's decree—sealed with both his own signet and those of his lords. The repeated prepositional structure ('with his signet,' 'with the signet of') underscores the solemnity and legal binding of the seal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-signet-of, with-his-signet | es: con-su-anillo, y-con-el-anillo-de | fr: et-service, service | de: [בְּעִזְקְתָה], [וּבְעִזְקְתָ] Dan 6:17

עֲזֵקָה H5825 N-proper-fs (7×)

Azekah, a fortified city in the Shephelah of Judah near Socoh, associated with battles against Canaanites and Philistines

Azekah was a strategically important fortified city in the low hills (Shephelah) of Judah, near the town of Socoh. It appears in some of Scripture's most dramatic military narratives: the Israelite pursuit of the Amorite coalition under hailstones (Josh 10:10-11), the valley where David faced Goliath (1 Sam 17:1), and as one of the last two Judean strongholds still holding out against Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 34:7). Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate the name directly, reflecting its firm place-name identity across traditions.

Azekah (proper noun) (7×) The fortified city of Azekah in Judah's Shephelah, situated near Socoh overlooking the Valley of Elah. It served as a key military waypoint: Joshua's forces pursued the Amorite kings past it (Josh 10:10-11), David and Saul's armies camped near it against the Philistines (1 Sam 17:1), and Jeremiah names it as one of the final Judean cities resisting Babylon (Jer 34:7). Rehoboam fortified it (2 Chr 11:9) and returnees resettled there (Neh 11:30). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azekah, Azeqah, and-Azekah | es: Azeca, Azekah, Azeqah | fr: Azekah, [עֲזֵקָה], et-Azekah | de: Azekah, [עֲזֵקָה], und-Azekah Josh 10:10; Josh 10:11; Josh 15:35; 1Sam 17:1; 2Chr 11:9

עָזַר H5826 V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 2ms (82×)

To help, assist, succor; as participle, a helper or ally; in Nifal, to be helped; in Hifil, to render aid.

Azar is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for help and assistance, appearing in contexts that range from battlefield alliance to divine deliverance. Its most celebrated use is in Gen 49:25, where Jacob blesses Joseph with help from 'the God of your father' — a passage that links military aid and providential care under a single verb. The Qal participle ozer ('helper') becomes virtually a title, famously applied to God in the Psalms (Ps 30:10; 54:4) and echoing the creation of Eve as an ezer kenegdo ('helper corresponding to him,' Gen 2:18, though using the related noun). Arabic adhara ('to excuse, aid') and Aramaic adar preserve cognate forms, while the multilingual translations reveal a consistent semantic core: Korean 돕다, Swahili -saidia, Hindi सहायता करना all converge on straightforward 'help' without the religious overtones that English 'succor' might suggest.

1. Qal: to help, aid (53×) Qal finite forms: to help, aid, or assist someone — the core verbal sense at 53 occurrences. This covers military assistance (Josh 1:14; 10:4-6, the Gibeonites crying 'come up and help us'), divine help (Gen 49:25; Ps 118:13, 'the LORD helped me'), and general aid between persons. Spanish ayudar, German helfen, and Korean 돕다 all align without ambiguity. The verb often takes a direct object or a lamed-prefixed beneficiary, and the imperative form ozreni ('help me!') appears as a direct plea to God in Ps 109:26 and 119:86. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: I-help-you, I-helped-you, help-me | es: Ayúdame, a-ayudar, a-ayudarme | fr: aider, secourir, à-aide | de: [עֶזְרוֹ], half, helfen Gen 49:25; Deut 32:38; Josh 1:14; Josh 10:4; Josh 10:6

2. Qal participle: helper (21×) Qal active participle used substantivally: a helper, ally, one who gives aid — 21 occurrences functioning as a near-title. In the Psalms God is 'my helper' (Ps 30:10; 54:4); in Chronicles the word designates military allies and supporters (1 Chr 12:1, 19). Spanish ayudador, Arabic mu'in, Korean 돕는 자, and Swahili msaidizi all select agentive 'helper' nouns, confirming this is a lexicalized substantival use rather than mere participle syntax. The word carries weight in theological contexts where God's identity as ozer stands against the inadequacy of human helpers (Ps 146:3-5). HELPER ALLY

en: a-helper, among-my-helpers, helper | es: ayudador, ayudadores, ayudadores-de | fr: aider, dans-mon-secours, helper | de: Asarja, [עֹזֵר], [עֹזֵר] 1Kgs 20:16; 2Kgs 14:26; 1Chr 12:1; 1Chr 12:19; Job 9:13

3. Nifal: to be helped (4×) Nifal passive: to be helped, to receive aid — 4 occurrences with consistent passive morphology across all target languages. In 1 Chr 5:20 the Reubenites 'were helped' against the Hagrites; in Ps 28:7 the psalmist declares 'my heart trusted in him and I was helped.' Spanish ser ayudado, Arabic nusira, Korean 도움받다, and Swahili -saidiwa all confirm the passive frame. Dan 11:34 uses this form in the enigmatic prophecy about the saints being 'helped with a little help.' HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: and-I-am-helped, and-they-were-helped, they-shall-be-helped | es: Y-fueron-ayudados, fue-ayudado, serán-ayudados | fr: aider, et-aider | de: helfen, und-half, und-helfen 1Chr 5:20; 2Chr 26:15; Ps 28:7; Dan 11:34

4. Hifil: to give help (3×) Hifil causative: to give help, to render assistance — 3 occurrences where the causative stem may intensify or formalize the act of helping. In 2 Sam 18:3 David's men tell him 'it is better that you help us from the city'; in 2 Chr 28:23 Ahaz sacrifices to the gods of Damascus, reasoning 'they helped the kings of Syria.' Arabic Form IV i'ana ('to give aid') mirrors the Hebrew causative precisely. The small count suggests this stem distinction was becoming obsolete in later Hebrew. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: [to-help], and-they-will-help-me, helping | es: [para-ayudar], los-que-ayudan, y-me-ayudarán | fr: [to-help], aider, et-aider | de: [to-help], helfen, und-helfen 2Sam 18:3; 2Chr 28:23

5. (1×) A single Qal passive participle occurrence at Isa 31:3 — 'he who is helped shall fall down' — where the form ha'azur describes the one who has received aid. Spanish el ayudado and German der Geholfene both use substantivized passive participles, confirming this as a distinct morphological use: the recipient of help as a characterized entity, forming a pair with the active 'helper' of sense 2. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: the-helped | es: el-ayudado | fr: secourir | de: helfen Isa 31:3

עֶזֶר H5827 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ezer (personal name meaning 'help'; Ephraimite mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies)

Ezer is a personal name meaning 'help' or 'helper,' from the root for helping or supporting. This particular Ezer was an Ephraimite mentioned in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles, killed by men of Gath when he and his brothers went down to raid their livestock. The name reflects a common Hebrew pattern of celebrating help, whether human assistance or divine aid. Related names like Ebenezer ('stone of help') and Eleazar ('God is help') show this theme's importance in Israelite naming. The tragic story attached to this Ezer—killed in a livestock raid gone wrong—shows that even someone named 'help' could die young. His father Ephraim mourned him many days, and the tribe comforted their bereaved ancestor.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 7:21 lists Ezer among Ephraim's sons who were killed by men of Gath during a cattle raid. Spanish 'y Ezer' follows the Hebrew conjunction. The genealogy preserves this family tragedy: Ephraim's sons Ezer and Elead went to seize livestock from Gath but were killed by the local inhabitants, leading to prolonged mourning. The name 'help' proved insufficient to save him from disaster. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5500 WITH 4 SENSES en: and-Ezer | es: y-Ezer | fr: [ועזר] | de: [ועזר] 1Chr 7:21

עֵזֶר H5828 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (22×)

Help, assistance, succor; also concretely a helper or one who gives aid, especially as a divine epithet.

One of the Bible's most theologically loaded words for help, 'ezer famously appears in Gen 2:18 where God declares He will make an 'ezer kenegdo — a helper corresponding to the man. Far from implying subordination, the same word is repeatedly applied to God Himself as Israel's help and shield (Ps 33:20; 115:9–11; Deut 33:26, 29). The pilgrim's confession in Ps 121:1–2, 'My help comes from the LORD,' uses 'ezer to name the most fundamental human need: dependence on divine aid. The shift between abstract help and personal helper is fluid, as French and German glosses show — 'aide' and 'Hilfe' can mean either.

1. help, assistance (19×) Abstract help, assistance, or succor — the act or quality of giving aid. This dominant sense (19 occurrences) appears with possessive suffixes indicating whose help is meant: 'my help' (Ex 18:4, where Moses names his son Eliezer, 'my God is help'), 'your help' (Deut 33:29), 'our help' (Ps 124:8). The Psalms cluster is especially rich: 'My help comes from the LORD' (121:1–2), 'He is our help and our shield' (33:20; 115:9–11). Isa 30:5 uses it negatively — Egypt's help is worthless. Dan 11:34 speaks of 'a little help' during persecution. Spanish 'socorro' (succor) and French 'aide' preserve the abstract, non-personal quality. HELP AND ASSISTANCE
en: (help-of-him), [help-of-him], a-help | es: (ayuda-de-él), Socorro-mío, Socorro-nuestro | fr: [לעזר], aide, aider | de: [בעזרך], [לעזר], [עזר] Exod 18:4; Deut 33:26; Deut 33:29; Ps 20:2; Ps 33:20

2. helper, one who helps (3×) A concrete, personal sense: a helper, one who provides aid. Gen 2:18 and 2:20 use the beth essentiae construction be'ezer ('as a helper') for the woman God creates as a counterpart to the man — not a subordinate but a corresponding ally. Deut 33:7 applies it to God as Judah's helper in battle. The personal quality is confirmed by multilingual evidence: English 'helper,' French 'helper,' and Spanish 'ayuda' all shift toward an agent rather than an abstraction. Hosea 13:9 likely belongs here as well (reading mi be'ezer, 'who is your helper?'), underscoring that God alone fills this role. HELPER ALLY
en: and-helper, helper | es: ayuda, y-ayuda | fr: et-helper, helper | de: eine-Hilfe, und-helper Gen 2:18; Gen 2:20; Deut 33:7

עֹזֶר H5829 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Ezer; personal name of three individuals: a Judahite, a Gadite warrior, and a wall-builder

Ezer (meaning "help" or "helper") is a common Hebrew name borne by at least three individuals in Scripture. One was a descendant of Judah, the father of Hushah (1 Chronicles 4:4). Another was a Gadite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chronicles 12:9, English v. 10). The third was a priest who participated in Nehemiah's wall dedication ceremony (Nehemiah 12:42) and possibly the wall-builder of Nehemiah 3:19. The name reflects trust in divine assistance.

(4×) A personal name meaning "help" or "helper," attested in Phoenician and Old Hebrew inscriptions as well as biblical texts. Three distinct individuals bear this name: (1) a Judahite ancestor (1 Chronicles 4:4), (2) a Gadite warrior of David (1 Chronicles 12:10), and (3) a post-exilic leader (Nehemiah 3:19, 12:42). Transliterations are uniform: Ezer/Ézer, with some bracketing [ועזר] and [עזר]. Greek versions render as Αζερ, Εζερ. The name's popularity reflects its positive theophoric or attributive meaning (possibly short form of Azariah or similar). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5500 WITH 4 SENSES
en: Ezer, and-Ezer | es: y-Ezer, y-Ézer, Ézer | fr: [ועזר], [עזר] | de: [ועזר], [עזר] 1Chr 4:4; 1Chr 12:10; Neh 3:19; Neh 12:42

עֶזְרָא H5830 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (22×)

Ezra – the priestly scribe who led post-exilic return and restored Torah observance in Jerusalem

A priest and scribe descended from Aaron through Seraiah, who led a second wave of returnees from Babylon to Jerusalem under Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:1-10). Called both 'the scribe' (hassofer) and 'the priest,' Ezra embodied the convergence of priestly authority and scribal expertise that shaped Second Temple Judaism. He publicly read the Torah to the assembled people (Neh 8), led national confession and covenant renewal, and addressed the crisis of intermarriage (Ezra 9-10). The name also designates a priest who returned with Zerubbabel (Neh 12:1, 13) and a participant in the wall dedication procession (Neh 12:33).

Ezra (22×) The personal name Ezra (Hebrew ezra, 'help'), primarily identifying the priestly scribe who returned from Babylon and restored Torah observance (Ezra 7-10; Neh 8-12). Also borne by a priest in Zerubbabel's generation (Neh 12:1) and a figure in the wall dedication (Neh 12:33). The Septuagint gives Esdras, reflected in Spanish and French Esdras, while German Esra and English Ezra are closer to the Hebrew. All 22 occurrences fall within Ezra and Nehemiah. EZRA PERSONAL NAME
en: Ezra, and-Ezra, to-Ezra | es: De-Esdras, Esdras, Ezra | fr: Esdras, et-Esdras, zu-Esdras | de: Esra, und-Esra, zu-Esra Ezra 7:1; Ezra 7:6; Ezra 7:10; Ezra 7:11; Ezra 10:1

עֶזְרָא H5831 N-proper-ms (3×)

Ezra; the name of the scribe and priest who led post-exilic reform, mentioned here in Aramaic sections

These three occurrences appear in the Aramaic portions of Ezra 7, where Artaxerxes' decree commissions Ezra the priest and scribe to lead the second major return to Jerusalem. The name 'Ezra' (meaning 'help') appears in the official Persian imperial correspondence authorizing Ezra to teach the law, appoint judges, and administer justice according to 'the law of your God and the law of the king.' The Aramaic sections preserve the administrative documentation of Persian support for the restoration community, giving Ezra extraordinary authority to restore proper Torah observance among the returned exiles.

(3×) Three occurrences in Ezra 7:12, 21, 25, all within Artaxerxes' Aramaic decree. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration of the name. What's striking is the formal, official tone: this is Ezra in Persian imperial documents, not in Hebrew narrative. The Aramaic context underscores the political reality that enabled the post-exilic religious reforms—Persian imperial policy supporting local religious laws as a strategy for provincial stability. EZRA PERSONAL NAME
en: Ezra, to-Ezra | es: Ezra, a-Ezra | fr: Esdras, [לעזרא] | de: Esra, zu-Esra Ezra 7:12; Ezra 7:21; Ezra 7:25

עֲזַרְאֵל H5832 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Azarel ('God has helped'), a proper name borne by six individuals: a warrior of David, a Levite musician, a Danite leader, and others.

Azarel (עֲזַרְאֵל, 'El has helped') is a theophoric name combining the root עזר ('help') with the divine element אֵל. It designates at least five distinct men: a Benjaminite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:7), a Levite musician appointed by lot (1 Chr 25:18, possibly identical with Uzziel in v. 4), a Danite tribal chief (1 Chr 27:22), a man who had taken a foreign wife under Ezra's reform (Ezra 10:41), and one or two priestly figures in Nehemiah's era (Neh 11:13; 12:36). The name's popularity across tribes and periods reflects Israel's deep trust in divine assistance.

Azarel (6×) A proper masculine name meaning 'God has helped,' borne by multiple individuals across different periods. The Septuagint renders it variously as Ozriēl and Ezriēl, while English consistently uses 'Azarel.' Spanish alternates between 'Azareel' and 'Azarel.' The name appears in military (1 Chr 12:7), liturgical (1 Chr 25:18), tribal-administrative (1 Chr 27:22), reform (Ezra 10:41), and priestly (Neh 11:13; 12:36) contexts, illustrating its popularity as a theophoric expression of gratitude for divine help. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Azarel, and-Azarel | es: Azareel, Azarel, y-Azareel | fr: [וְעזראל], [עזראל] | de: [וְעזראל], [עזראל] 1Chr 12:7; 1Chr 25:18; 1Chr 27:22; Ezra 10:41; Neh 11:13

עֶזְרָה H5833 N-fsc (26×)

Help, succor, assistance — especially divine aid in battle or distress; also concrete, embodied help from an ally.

A feminine noun denoting help or assistance, most often divine. The Psalms are rich with urgent cries for God's עֶזְרָה — 'hasten to my help!' (Ps 22:20; 38:23; 40:14; 70:2; 71:12). The Song of Deborah pronounces a curse on Meroz for failing to come to 'the help of the LORD' against the mighty (Judg 5:23). Isaiah warns against seeking help from Egypt rather than from God (Isa 31:1-2). The word can also take a concrete sense, meaning an embodied helper or reinforcement, as when Job laments that all help has been driven from him (Job 6:13; 31:21). Lamentations 4:17 depicts eyes failing while watching for help that never came. French 'secours' and Spanish 'ayuda' reflect both the abstract and concrete dimensions.

help, aid, assistance (26×) Help, aid, or assistance — predominantly divine succor sought in crisis. The Psalmist repeatedly pleads for Yahweh's עֶזְרָה as urgent rescue (Ps 22:20; 38:23; 40:14; 60:13; 70:2; 71:12). In historical narrative, it refers to military reinforcement: Meroz is cursed for withholding help in holy war (Judg 5:23), and Ahaz finds Assyria's 'help' actually harmful (2 Chr 28:21). Concretely, it can mean embodied supporters, as in Job 31:21. Isaiah 31:1-2 contrasts futile Egyptian help with God's sure aid. French 'secours,' Spanish 'ayuda,' and German 'Hilfe' all cover this unified semantic range. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: a-help, for-help, for-my-help | es: a-mi-ayuda, ayuda, ayuda-contra | fr: [לעזרה], au-secours, dans-secours | de: [לעזרה], [עזרתי], ein-helfen Judg 5:23; 2Chr 28:21; Job 6:13; Job 31:21

עֶזְרָה H5834 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ezrah (personal name; member of Judah's tribe in Chronicles' genealogies)

Ezrah is a personal name appearing in the genealogies of Judah in 1 Chronicles. The name may mean 'help' or be related to the root for helping, similar to Ezer and Ezra. This Ezrah is listed among the descendants of Judah, part of the complex genealogical records that established tribal identity and land claims. The Septuagint's Greek renderings show attempts to transliterate an unfamiliar Hebrew name. Ezrah appears only in this genealogical context, one of many Judahites whose names were preserved in the tribal records. Hebrew genealogies served crucial functions: they established identity, inheritance rights, and connection to the covenant community, making even a single mention significant.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 4:17 lists Ezrah in Judah's genealogy: 'The sons of Ezrah: Jether, Mered, Epher, and Jalon.' Spanish 'Ezra' reflects standard transliteration, though this Ezrah is distinct from the famous scribe and priest. The genealogy places him within Judah's tribal structure, preserving his lineage even though no stories about him survive. His sons' names are recorded, maintaining generational memory. EZRA PERSONAL NAME

en: Ezrah | es: Ezra | fr: [עזרה] | de: [עזרה] 1Chr 4:17

עֶזְרָה H5835 Conj-w (9×)

A ledge or settle on an altar; an enclosed courtyard of the temple

An architectural term with two related but distinct applications in temple contexts. In Ezekiel's vision of the ideal altar (Ezek 43:14-20; 45:19), the 'azarah denotes the horizontal ledge or settle projecting from the altar's base – Spanish 'cornisa' (cornice, ledge) captures the structural precision. In 2 Chronicles (4:9; 6:13), the same word refers to the great enclosed court of Solomon's temple, where Spanish 'atrio' (atrium, court) and German 'Vorhof' (forecourt) reflect the broader spatial meaning. Both senses share the root idea of a bounded, consecrated area surrounding a sacred structure.

1. ledge, settle (of altar) (6×) The ledge or settle surrounding Ezekiel's visionary altar, a projecting horizontal offset that defines the altar's tiers. Ezekiel 43:14 distinguishes 'the lower ledge' (ha'azarah hattachtonah) from 'the greater ledge' (ha'azarah haggedolah), with purification blood applied to its corners in Ezek 43:20 and 45:19. Spanish 'cornisa' (cornice) and French 'parvis' (forecourt platform) reflect the architectural specificity of this term. COURTYARD ENCLOSURE

en: and-from-the-ledge, and-the-ledge, the-ledge | es: Y-la-cornisa, la-cornisa, y-desde-la-cornisa | fr: [ומהעזרה], et-le-parvis, le-parvis | de: Vorhof, und-Vorhof Ezek 43:14; Ezek 43:17; Ezek 43:20

2. enclosure, court (of temple) (3×) The enclosed court or precinct of Solomon's temple, used in 2 Chronicles 4:9 for 'the great court' (ha'azarah haggedolah) with its doors, and in 2 Chronicles 6:13 where Solomon's bronze platform stood in the court. Spanish 'atrio' and German 'Vorhof' both translate the sense of a walled-off sacred enclosure, broader than the altar-ledge meaning but sharing the root concept of a bounded, consecrated space. COURTYARD ENCLOSURE

en: and-the-enclosure, for-the-enclosure, the-court | es: atrio, para-el-atrio, y-el-atrio | fr: [הָעזרה], [והעזרה], [לעזרה] | de: Vorhof, und-Vorhof 2Chr 4:9; 2Chr 6:13

עֶזְרִי H5836 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ezri (personal name meaning 'my help'; David's agricultural official over field workers)

Ezri is a personal name meaning 'my help,' with the first-person possessive suffix added to the root for help. This Ezri served in David's administration as the official in charge of those who worked the fields —essentially the royal agriculture minister. The name celebrates personal help or assistance, possibly divine. David's government included detailed administrative positions managing various aspects of the kingdom: military, religious, agricultural, and financial. Ezri's role overseeing field workers shows the importance of agriculture to the kingdom's economy and the need for organized management of royal lands and farms. His position reflects the sophisticated bureaucracy that developed under David and Solomon.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 27:26 lists Ezri among David's officials: 'Ezri son of Kelub was in charge of the field workers who farmed the land.' The name appears only here. As overseer of agricultural labor, Ezri managed those who cultivated royal fields, orchards, and vineyards —a crucial economic role. His inclusion in the administrative roster shows agriculture's importance to the kingdom's functioning. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ezri | es: Ezri | fr: [עזרי] | de: [עזרי] 1Chr 27:26

עַזְרִיאֵל H5837 N-proper-ms (3×)

Personal name meaning 'my help is El'; three individuals including a persecutor of Jeremiah

Azriel, meaning 'my help is God,' is borne by three men in Scripture. Most memorably, Azriel was one of three men King Jehoiakim sent to arrest Jeremiah and Baruch after the prophet's scroll was read and burned—a mission that failed because 'Yahweh hid them.' Another Azriel was a warrior chief in the half-tribe of Manasseh, and a third appears in the administrative records of Naphtali during David's reign. The name's theophoric element affirms God as helper, yet like many biblical names, the bearer's character doesn't always match the name's pious meaning.

(3×) Three individuals: a persecutor of Jeremiah, a Manassite chief, and a Naphtalite administrator. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration practices. The Jeremiah context is most dramatic: Azriel is sent to seize the prophet, but divine intervention thwarts the mission. The Septuagint renderings vary, showing the typical challenges of rendering Hebrew proper names in Greek. Chronicles uses the name in genealogical and administrative lists, emphasizing tribal leadership. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Azriel, and-Azri'el | es: Azriel, y-Azriel | fr: [ועזריאל], [עזריאל] | de: [ועזריאל], [עזריאל] 1Chr 5:24; 1Chr 27:19; Jer 36:26

עֲזַרְיָהוּ H5838 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (48×)
Azaryah – Azariah ('Yah has helped'); a proper name borne by kings, priests, and officials in Judah Azaryah/Azaryahu ('Yah has helped,' from azar + Yah) is one of the most common proper masculine names in the Hebrew Bible, borne by at least a dozen distinct individuals across its 48 occurrences. The most prominent are: (1) King Azariah of Judah, also known as Uzziah, who reigned fifty-two years but was struck with leprosy for usurping priestly prerogatives (2 Kgs 14:21; 15:1-7; 2 Chr 26:17-20); (2) the high priest Azariah who confronted Uzziah in the temple (2 Chr 26:17); (3) several priestly figures in the Chronicler's genealogies (1 Chr 5:35-40; 9:11); (4) an officer of Solomon (1 Kgs 4:2, 5); and (5) the prophet who encouraged King Asa (2 Chr 15:1). The name's popularity reflects the common theophoric pattern of affirming divine help. Spanish Azarya, French Azaria, and German Asarja preserve the name with minor phonological adaptation.

Azariah (high priest / king alias) (48×) The proper name Azariah, meaning 'Yah has helped,' used for multiple individuals including King Azariah/Uzziah of Judah (2 Kgs 14:21; 15:1-7), the high priest who opposed Uzziah's incense offering (2 Chr 26:17-20), several priestly figures in Chronicler genealogies (1 Chr 5:35-40; Ezra 7:1-3), Solomonic officials (1 Kgs 4:2, 5), and a post-exilic leader (Neh 10:3). Its frequency reflects how common Yah-compounded theophoric names were among Judahite elites. Spanish Azarya, French Azaria, and German Asarja confirm a single proper-name usage throughout. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Azariah, Azaryah, Azaryahu | es: Azarya, Azaryah, Azaryahu | fr: Azaria, Azaryah | de: Asarja, Azaryah, zu-Asarja 1Kgs 4:2; 1Kgs 4:5; 2Kgs 14:21; 2Kgs 15:1; 2Kgs 15:6

עֲזַרְיָה H5839 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Azariah (personal name meaning 'YHWH has helped'; Daniel's companion in Babylonian exile)
Azariah is a personal name meaning 'YHWH has helped' or 'YHWH has aided,' combining the divine name with a verb for helping. This Azariah was one of Daniel's three companions in Babylonian exile, better known by his Babylonian name Abednego. The Babylonians gave the four young Jewish nobles new names to assimilate them: Daniel became Belteshazzar, Hananiah became Shadrach, Mishael became Meshach, and Azariah became Abednego. The irony is profound: Azariah's Hebrew name proclaimed 'YHWH has helped,' a confession of faith in Israel's God, yet in Babylon he was renamed after a pagan deity. Despite this forced renaming, Azariah/Abednego remained faithful, refusing to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image and surviving the fiery furnace.

(1×) Daniel 2:17 mentions 'Azariah' as one of Daniel's companions, though later he's consistently called by his Babylonian name Abednego. Multiple translations preserve the name Azariah (Spanish 'Azaryah,' German 'Asarja,' French 'Azaria'), recognizing this as his Hebrew birth name. The name's meaning—'YHWH has helped'—proved prophetic when God delivered him from Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. His identity remained rooted in his Hebrew name and its theological claim. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Azaryah | es: y-Azaryah | fr: et-Azaria | de: und-Asarja Dan 2:17

עַזְרִיקָם H5840 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)
Azrikam ('my help has risen'), a proper name borne by a Davidic descendant, a Benjaminite, a Levite, and a palace official.
Azrikam (עַזְרִיקָם, 'my help has risen') is a compound name from עֶזְרִי ('my help') and קָם ('has risen'). It identifies four distinct individuals: a descendant of King David through Neariah's line (1 Chr 3:23), a Benjaminite listed in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 8:38; 9:44), a Levite gatekeeper (1 Chr 9:14; Neh 11:15), and a high-ranking official in King Ahaz's household whom the Ephraimite warrior Zichri killed during Pekah's invasion (2 Chr 28:7). The Septuagint renders it Ezreikan or Ezrikam across these contexts.

Azrikam (proper noun) (6×) A proper masculine name meaning 'my help has risen,' designating four individuals in the post-monarchic genealogies and one in the monarchic narrative. The most dramatically memorable bearer is the palace steward (נָגִיד הַבַּיִת) slain during the Syro-Ephraimite conflict (2 Chr 28:7). The genealogical occurrences in 1 Chronicles 3, 8-9, and Nehemiah 11 show the name's currency across Davidic, Benjaminite, and Levitical lines. English and Spanish transliterations ('Azrikam/Azricam') preserve the name consistently. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Azriqam, and-Azriqam | es: Azricam, y-Azriqam | fr: [ועזריקם], [עזריקם] | de: [ועזריקם], [עזריקם] 1Chr 3:23; 1Chr 8:38; 1Chr 9:14; 1Chr 9:44; 2Chr 28:7

עַזָּתִי H5841 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
the Gazite, the Gazathites (gentilics: inhabitants of Gaza, the Philistine city)
This gentilic refers to the people of Gaza, one of the five major Philistine cities. In Joshua 13:3, the Gazathites are listed among the Philistine populations Israel failed to dispossess. In Judges 16:2, 'the Gazites' are the townspeople who surrounded Samson when he visited a prostitute in their city. The multilingual glosses transliterate the gentilic with appropriate articles and prepositions ('the Gazite,' 'el gazateo,' 'le Gazite'), following standard conventions for ethnic designations.

(2×) A collective term for the inhabitants of Gaza. Joshua 13:3 includes them in the roster of unconquered Philistine peoples; Judges 16:2 narrates their attempt to ambush Samson. All target languages transliterate the gentilic and preserve the prepositional or article-marked form ('the Gazite,' 'a los gazateos,' 'le Gazite'). GAZA PHILISTINE CITY
en: the-Gazite, to-the-Azzatim | es: A-los-gazateos, el-gazateo | fr: le-Gazite, à-le-Azzatim | de: der-Gazite, zu-der-Azzatim Josh 13:3; Judg 16:2

עֵט H5842 N-ms (4×)
stylus, pen; a writing instrument made of iron (for stone/metal) or reed (for scrolls)
This noun denotes a writing instrument, varying by material and use. Jeremiah 17:1 and Job 19:24 describe an iron stylus with a diamond point for engraving on stone or metal, creating permanent inscriptions. Jeremiah 8:8 and Psalm 45:1 refer to a reed pen (probably) used by scribes for writing on scrolls. The latter passage beautifully declares, "My tongue is the pen of a ready scribe," using the image of fluent writing to describe eloquent speech.

(4×) A writing implement, either an iron stylus for engraving hard surfaces or a reed pen for writing on scrolls. Job 19:24 and Jeremiah 17:1 specify an iron עֵט with a diamond point (בְּצִפֹּרֶן שָׁמִיר) for permanent inscriptions. Jeremiah 8:8 condemns the "false pen of the scribes," likely a reed implement. Psalm 45:1 metaphorically calls the tongue "the pen of a ready scribe." Multilingual glosses consistently render as "pen/stylus/pluma/cálamo/Feder." Some bracket [בעט] and [עט]. The term bridges oral and written culture, representing the technology of textual permanence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: is-pen-of, the-pen-of, with-a-pen-of | es: Con-cincel-de-, con-pluma-de, cálamo-de | fr: [בעט], [עט], dans-בעט | de: Feder-, [בעט], [עט] Job 19:24; Ps 45:1; Jer 8:8; Jer 17:1

עֵטָא H5843 N-fs (1×)
counsel, advice, judgment (Aramaic noun for wise advice or prudent decision)

This Aramaic noun means counsel, advice, or judgment—the result of wise deliberation. It appears in Daniel when Arioch, commander of the king's guard, comes to execute the wise men for failing to interpret Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel asks Arioch about the 'urgency of the decree,' inquiring into the king's harsh decision with language that can mean both 'counsel' and 'decree.' The term connects to the Aramaic root for tasting and by extension judging or discerning. Wisdom literature often associates tasting with discrimination and judgment—one tastes or tests something to determine its nature. Here it describes the king's decision-making, his counsel or judgment to execute all the wise men for the failure of the magicians and enchanters.

(1×) Daniel 2:14 describes Daniel's inquiry to Arioch about 'the counsel/decree' that was so hasty from the king. French 'conseil' and English 'counsel' both capture the sense of advice or decision. Spanish 'con consejo' (with counsel) interprets it as Daniel responding prudently. The context is the crisis of the king's death decree against all wise men—Daniel seeks to understand the decision and its urgency, asking about the judgment rendered. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: counsel | es: con-consejo | fr: conseil | de: [עטא] Dan 2:14

עָטָה H5844a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (15×)

To wrap or envelop oneself in a garment; to cover another (transitive); causatively, to clothe or blanket.

The verb atah evokes wrapping a garment around the body — pulling a mantle over the face, draping a cloak, or covering the head in mourning. In the Qal reflexive, Samuel's ghost ascends 'wrapped in a robe' (1 Sam 28:14), and God 'wraps himself with light as a garment' (Ps 104:2). The transitive Qal extends to covering others: lepers must cover their upper lip (Lev 13:45). Spanish distinguishes the reflexive se cubre from the transitive cubrirás, and French envelopper captures the core image. The Hifil intensifies the agency, depicting God covering someone with shame (Ps 89:45).

1. Qal: wrap/envelop oneself (9×) Qal reflexive: to wrap or envelop oneself in a garment or covering. Samuel's shade rises 'wrapped in a robe' (1 Sam 28:14), enemies are cursed to be 'wrapped in shame as a mantle' (Ps 109:29), and God 'wraps himself with light' (Ps 104:2). Spanish envuelto/se cubre and French s'envelopper preserve the reflexive wrapping image. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-He-wrapped-Himself, and-he-will-wrap-himself, and-let-them-wrap-themselves | es: El-que-se-cubre, como-errante, envuelto | fr: [ויע], [ועטה], [יעטה'] | de: [ויע], [ועטה], [יעטה'] 1Sam 28:14; Ps 71:13; Ps 104:2; Ps 109:19; Ps 109:29

2. Qal: cover, enwrap (transitive) (4×) Qal transitive: to cover or enwrap someone else. The leper 'shall cover his upper lip' (Lev 13:45), Ezekiel is told not to 'cover your lip' in mourning (Ezek 24:17), and Israel's leaders 'shall cover their lips' in shame (Mic 3:7). Spanish cubrirás and French couvrir employ straightforward transitive covering verbs. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-will-cover, he-shall-cover, you-shall-cover | es: cubrirás, cubriréis, se-cubrirá | fr: couvrir, et-couvrir, il-devra-couvrir | de: [ועטו], [תעטה], [תעטו] Lev 13:45; Ezek 24:17; Ezek 24:22; Mic 3:7

3. Hifil: cover, clothe (causative) (2×) Hifil causative: to cause to be covered or clothed, with God or a powerful agent as the one covering. In Psalm 84:6 the early rain 'covers' the land, and in Psalm 89:45 God has 'covered him with shame.' Spanish cubriste and French envelopper confirm the causative force, where covering becomes an imposed act of divine judgment or blessing. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: covers, you-have-covered | es: cubrirá, lo-cubriste | fr: envelopper, le-envelopper | de: bedeckt, du-haben-bedeckt Ps 84:6; Ps 89:45

עַטָה H5844b V-Qal-InfAbs (2×)

grasping, to grasp (infinitive absolute + participle: seizing or wrapping forcibly)

This rare verb appears only in Isaiah 22:17, where the Lord threatens to 'grasp you forcibly' and hurl you away like a ball. The BDB debates whether this derives from עטה I (to wrap) or a distinct root meaning 'to grasp with the hands' (Arabic cognate). The context favors the latter: God is about to seize Shebna the steward and throw him into exile. The multilingual glosses split between 'grasping' (English) and 'wrapping/enveloping' (Spanish: 'envolviendo'), reflecting the lexical ambiguity. The doubled form (infinitive absolute + participle) intensifies the action.

(2×) Denotes forcible seizing or grasping, probably with hostile intent. Isaiah 22:17 uses the doubled construction (infinitive absolute + participle) to emphasize the violence of God's judgment on Shebna: 'grasping you, he will grasp you' (or 'wrapping you, he will wrap you'). The Spanish and French glosses lean toward 'enveloping,' while English opts for 'grasping,' reflecting the root's uncertain etymology. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-grasping-you, grasping | es: envolviendo, y-te-envolverá | fr: [ועטך], [עטה] | de: [ועטך], [עטה] Isa 22:17

עֵטִין H5845 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

pails, buckets (vessels for holding milk or liquid, used in Job's metaphor of prosperity)

This masculine plural noun means pails, buckets, or vessels for holding liquids. The term appears in Job's description of someone who dies in full prosperity: 'his pails are full of milk,' meaning his vessels overflow with abundance. The image is of robust health and material blessing—someone whose dairy production is so abundant that even the storage containers are brimming. Related to the New Hebrew word for a vessel for olives, it describes agricultural containers used for milk or other products. The metaphor contrasts starkly with another person who dies in bitterness having never enjoyed prosperity, highlighting life's inequalities that perplex Job and his friends.

(1×) Job 21:24 describes the prosperous person: 'his pails are full of milk,' a picture of overflowing abundance. Spanish 'sus ubres' (his udders) takes a different textual approach, seeing the term as related to bodily fullness rather than vessels. English 'pails' reflects the understanding of containers filled with milk. The context is Job's observation that some die in prosperity, contradicting his friends' doctrine that suffering always indicates sin. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: his-pails | es: Sus-ubres | fr: son-עטיניו-lui | de: [עטיניו] Job 21:24

עֲטִישָׁה H5846 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

sneezings (plural noun referring to sneezing actions, used of Leviathan in Job's poetry)

This feminine plural noun means sneezings, the explosive exhalations through the nose. It appears in Job's magnificent description of Leviathan, the fearsome sea creature: 'his sneezings flash forth light,' creating an image of such powerful breathing that even the spray from its nostrils catches the light spectacularly. Some scholars suggest reading it as singular, but the plural may emphasize repeated sneezing actions or the dramatic nature of the creature's breathing. The term is unique to this passage, part of Job's elaborate poetic depiction of Leviathan's terrifying power. The image contributes to the creature's mythic quality—even its sneeze produces light, suggesting fire or the sun's reflection on water spray.

(1×) Job 41:18 (English) describes Leviathan: 'His sneezings flash forth light, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the dawn.' Spanish 'sus estornudos' (his sneezes) and English 'sneezings' both preserve the plural. The context is YHWH's speech challenging Job: can you control this monster? The creature's sneezes producing light adds to its fearsome, almost supernatural portrayal, emphasizing that what Job cannot master, God controls effortlessly. FLESH AND BODY

en: His-sneezings | es: Sus-estornudos | fr: son-עטישתיו-lui | de: [עטישתין] Job 41:18

עַטַלֵּף H5847 Conj-w (3×)

Bat; a flying mammal classified as unclean in Levitical law

The bat appears in Scripture's lists of unclean creatures, prohibited as food under Levitical law. Leviticus 11:19 and Deuteronomy 14:18 both include it among birds (though modern taxonomy classifies it as a mammal, ancient classification grouped it with flying creatures). The word is a quadriliteral form, possibly related to Phoenician and North African terms. Most strikingly, Isaiah 2:20 envisions a day when people will cast their idols 'to the moles and to the bats'—creatures of darkness and hidden places. The image suggests the utter worthlessness of idols, fit only to be abandoned in the caves where bats dwell.

(3×) Three occurrences: two in Levitical dietary law, one in prophetic imagery. The multilingual glosses consistently render 'bat,' showing clear identification of the creature. Isaiah's usage is powerful: bats as creatures of darkness receive the discarded idols, a fitting end for false gods. The law's classification with birds reflects ancient phenomenological taxonomy based on observable characteristics (flight) rather than modern biological taxonomy. The conjunction forms ('and the bat') show the word in lists. LIVING CREATURES
en: and-the-bat, the-bat | es: el-murciélago, y-a-los-murciélagos, y-el-murciélago | fr: [ולעטלפים], et-le-bat, le-bat | de: [ולעטלפים], der-bat, und-der-bat Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18; Isa 2:20

עָטַף H5848a V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
to turn aside, turn (to change direction, possibly indicating inability to see or find)
This Qal imperfect verb means to turn aside, turn, or change direction. The root connects to Syriac and Arabic words for turning, inclining, or bending. In Job's complaint about God's hiddenness, he speaks of looking for God: when God works on the right hand, 'I cannot see Him; He turns to the left, and I do not perceive Him' (or possibly 'I turn... and do not see Him' if reading first person). The sense is of seeking but not finding, of God remaining elusive despite Job's searching. Whether God turns away or Job turns to look, the point is the same: God remains hidden. The verb captures the frustration of seeking the divine presence yet encountering absence.

(1×) Job 23:9 expresses Job's inability to perceive God: 'He turns to the right, and I do not see Him; He turns to the left, and I do not perceive Him.' Spanish 'se vuelve' (he turns) reflects the third person interpretation. French 'être faible' (to be weak) may reflect a different root understanding. The context is Job's lament that though he seeks God, God remains inaccessible and hidden, turning away from Job's view. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: he-turns | es: se-vuelve | fr: être-faible | de: [יעטף] Job 23:9

עָטַף H5848b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (2×)
to cover oneself, to be covered (Qal: to envelop oneself, as with garments or metaphorically)
This verb (distinct from עטף I, 'to faint') describes enveloping or covering oneself. In Psalm 65:13, the valleys 'cover themselves with grain'—a vivid image of abundant harvest. In Psalm 73:6, the wicked 'put on violence as a garment,' wrapping themselves in arrogance. The BDB identifies this as an Aramaism, noting cognates in Aramaic and Ethiopic. The multilingual glosses converge on 'cover' or 'envelop' ('are covered,' 'se cubren,' 'envelopper'), capturing the metaphorical richness of the imagery.

(2×) Describes self-envelopment, whether literal (valleys covered with grain, Psalm 65:13) or metaphorical (violence worn as clothing, Psalm 73:6). The parallel with לָבַשׁ (to clothe) in Psalm 65:13 reinforces the garment imagery. Spanish and French glosses ('se cubren,' 'envelopper') align with the self-reflexive nuance of the Qal stem. COVERING AND CONCEALING
en: are-covered-, wraps-around-them- | es: se-cubren-de, se-visten-de | fr: envelopper | de: sind-bedeckt-, wraps-um-ihnen- Ps 65:13; Ps 73:6

עָטַף H5848c Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-3fs (13×)
To grow faint, swoon, or become feeble — of physical exhaustion, emotional overwhelm, or spiritual despair.
A verb that gives voice to the experience of being overwhelmed to the point of collapse. The psalmists reach for it when the spirit fails — 'when my heart is faint, lead me to the rock' (Ps 61:2). It appears in Lamentations when nursing infants faint in the streets and in Genesis for the feeble sheep of Laban's flock. Spanish translations consistently use 'desmayar' (to faint) and 'desfallecer' (to grow weak), while French uses 'defaillir' — all pointing to the same bodily experience of strength draining away. The Hitpael reflexive stem, which dominates usage, intensifies the inward, personal quality of the fainting.

1. to feel faint, swoon (Hitpael) (6×) Hitpael reflexive: to feel faint upon oneself, to swoon or be overwhelmed internally. This is the most frequent form, used of spiritual and emotional collapse — the soul growing faint along the way (Ps 107:5), the spirit overwhelmed within (Ps 142:3, 143:4), and children fainting in city squares (Lam 2:12). Spanish 'desfallecer' and 'desmayarse' consistently render the reflexive, inward quality of this fainting. FAINTNESS SWOONING
en: and-grows-faint, grew-faint, when-fainted | es: Al-desmayarse, Cuando-desfallecía, Y-desfalleció | fr: [בהתעטף], dans-défaillir, défaillir | de: [בהתעטף], [בהתעטף], grew-faint Ps 77:3; Ps 107:5; Ps 142:3; Ps 143:4; Lam 2:12

2. to faint, grow weak (Qal) (3×) Qal intransitive: to grow faint, become weak. Used in psalm superscriptions (Ps 61:2, 102:1) for the state of the overwhelmed heart, and in Isaiah 57:16 where God restrains judgment lest 'the spirit would faint before me.' The basic stem presents fainting as a simple state rather than the intensified reflexive experience of the Hitpael. FAINTNESS SWOONING
en: he-is-faint, when-faints, would-faint | es: cuando-desmaye, desfallece, desfallecería | fr: [יעטוף], dans-défaillir, défaillir | de: [יעטוף], er-ist-faint, wann-faints Ps 61:2; Ps 102:1; Isa 57:16

3. the feeble ones (substantive) (2×) Substantivized participle: 'the feeble ones,' used as a noun to classify a group by their weakness. In Genesis 30:42, Jacob separates the 'feeble' sheep from the 'strong' (qeshurim); in Lamentations 2:19, 'those fainting with hunger' become a named class of sufferers. Spanish 'las debiles' and 'los desfallecidos' show how the participle crystallizes into a label. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: the-feeble, the-ones-fainting | es: las-débiles, los-desfallecidos | fr: [העטופים], le-feeble | de: [העטופים], die-schwachen Gen 30:42; Lam 2:19

4. to become feeble (Hifil) (1×) Hifil causative-factitive: to become or be made feeble. Genesis 30:42 uses this in a temporal clause — 'when the flock showed feebleness' — to mark the onset of weakness as a condition that triggers Jacob's selective breeding strategy. The Hifil frames feebleness as an event with external observable onset. FAINTNESS SWOONING
en: and-when-were-feeble | es: Y-al-debilitarse | fr: et-quand-étaient-feeble | de: und-wenn-schwach-waren Gen 30:42

5. to be overcome with faintness (Nifal) (1×) Nifal passive: to be overcome by faintness, to be seized by exhaustion. Lamentations 2:11 uses this for infants being overcome with faintness ('when the infant faints in the streets'). The passive framing presents the subject as acted upon by exhaustion rather than experiencing it reflexively, emphasizing helplessness. FAINTNESS SWOONING
en: when-faint | es: al-desmayar | fr: [בעטף] | de: [בעטף] Lam 2:11

עָטַר H5849a V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 3mse (2×)
to surround, to encircle (Qal: to close in on, to encompass protectively or hostilely)
This verb appears twice, once describing military encirclement and once divine protection. In 1 Samuel 23:26, Saul and his men 'were surrounding' (or 'closing in on') David and his band, a hostile encirclement. In Psalm 5:12, the psalmist prays that God's favor will 'surround him as with a shield,' a protective encirclement. The BDB notes cognates in Phoenician (wreath) and Aramaic, and links it to the noun עֲטָרָה (crown). The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'surround' or 'encircle,' capturing both hostile and protective senses.

(2×) Denotes surrounding or encircling, with nuance determined by context: hostile encirclement (1 Samuel 23:26, Saul closing in on David) or protective encompassing (Psalm 5:12, God's favor as a shield). The French 'couronner' (to crown) and the Spanish 'lo coronarás' (you will crown him) reflect the root's association with עֲטָרָה (crown), though the primary sense is spatial encirclement. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: surrounding, you-surround-him | es: lo-coronarás, rodeando | fr: couronner, entourant | de: du-umgeben-ihn, surrounding 1Sam 23:26; Ps 5:12

עָטַר H5849b V-Piel-Perf-2ms (5×)

to crown, adorn with a crown; of God crowning with glory, honor, or lovingkindness

A denominative verb from atarah ('crown'), used in the Piel to mean 'to crown' or 'to encircle with honor.' Its most celebrated use is Psalm 8:5, where God crowns humanity with glory and majesty. Psalm 103:4 describes God crowning the faithful with lovingkindness and compassion, while Psalm 65:11 pictures the year crowned with divine goodness. Song of Solomon 3:11 recalls Solomon's mother crowning him on his wedding day. Isaiah 23:8 applies the image to Tyre as a bestower of crowns.

(5×) To crown, to bestow a crown or wreath upon someone — whether literally, as Solomon's mother crowned him (Song 3:11), or figuratively of God adorning with glory and honor (Ps 8:5), lovingkindness and compassion (Ps 103:4), or the bounty of a good year (Ps 65:11). French 'couronner' and Spanish 'coronar/coronas' mirror the consistent coronation imagery. Isaiah 23:8 extends the metaphor to Tyre as one who bestows crowns, signifying her power to elevate vassal rulers. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: You-crown, that-crowned-, the-bestower-of-crowns | es: Coronas, el-que-te-corona, la-que-corona | fr: [המעטירה], couronner, dont-l'a-couronné | de: [המעטירה], [שעטרה], der-crowns-du Ps 8:5; Ps 65:11; Ps 103:4; Song 3:11; Isa 23:8

עֲטָרָה H5850 Art / N-fs (23×)

Crown, wreath — a circlet of royalty, honor, or blessing, both literal headpiece and figurative emblem of dignity

The Hebrew עֲטָרָה denotes a crown or wreath worn on the head as a mark of royal authority, festive honor, or divine blessing. David places the captured Ammonite crown on his own head (2 Sam 12:30), and Mordecai wears a golden crown from the Persian king (Esth 8:15). Figuratively, a capable wife is her husband's crown (Prov 12:4), gray hair is the crown of the aged (Prov 16:31), and grandchildren crown the elderly (Prov 17:6). Zechariah's prophetic crowns of silver and gold foreshadow a priestly-royal figure (Zech 6:11, 14). The word moves seamlessly between regal splendor and metaphorical honor, unified by the image of something placed atop the head as a sign of distinction.

crown, wreath (23×) Feminine noun for a crown or wreath, literal and figurative. Literal: the Ammonite crown seized by David (2 Sam 12:30), Mordecai's golden crown (Esth 8:15), Zechariah's prophetic crowns (Zech 6:11). Figurative: a virtuous wife crowns her husband (Prov 12:4), gray hair crowns the aged (Prov 16:31). Translations converge on 'crown' (spa 'corona,' fra 'couronne,' deu 'Krone'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-crown-of, and-crown-of, and-crown-of- | es: Corona-de, corona-de, corona-de- | fr: [ועטרת], [עטרת], couronne | de: Krone, Krone-von, Kronen 2Sam 12:30; 1Chr 20:2; Esth 8:15; Job 19:9; Job 31:36

עֲטָרָה H5851 N-proper-fs (1×)

Atarah (personal name meaning 'crown' or 'wreath'; woman in Judah's genealogy)

Atarah is a feminine personal name meaning 'crown,' 'wreath,' or 'garland,' from the root for crowning or adorning. This Atarah was the wife of Jerahmeel of the tribe of Judah, mentioned in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles. She appears as the mother of Onam, part of the Jerahmeelite branch of Judah. The name celebrates beauty and honor, as crowns symbolized royalty, victory, and celebration in ancient Israel. Giving a daughter the name Atarah expressed hope for her honor and dignity. She represents the many women whose names appear briefly in genealogies, their primary biblical mention being as wives and mothers through whom tribal lineages continued.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:26 records: 'Jerahmeel had another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam.' The name Atarah appears only here. As Jerahmeel's second wife, she bore him a son whose descendants formed a Judahite clan. Her inclusion in the genealogy ensures her son's legitimacy within the tribal structure. The name 'crown' may reflect either her beauty or the honor she brought to Jerahmeel's household. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Atarah | es: Atara | fr: [עטרה] | de: [עטרה] 1Chr 2:26

עֲטָרוֹת H5852 N-proper-fs (4×)

Ataroth; name of multiple locations, primarily in Transjordan (Gad) and central Canaan (Ephraim/Benjamin)

Ataroth (meaning "crowns" or "wreaths") is the name of several towns in biblical Israel. The most prominent is east of the Jordan, built by Gad (Numbers 32:3, 34), also mentioned on the Moabite Stone. Another variant, Ataroth-shophan, appears in Numbers 32:35. West of Jordan, Ataroth marks boundaries between Ephraim and Benjamin (Joshua 16:2, 5, 7; 18:13). A third Ataroth beth-joab appears in Judah's genealogies (1 Chronicles 2:54). The name likely derives from local topography or fortifications.

(4×) A place-name designating multiple towns, primarily: (1) Transjordanian Ataroth in Gad's territory (Numbers 32:3, 34), modern Aṭṭarûs about 8 miles north of Dibon, also mentioned on the Mesha Stele; (2) Ataroth-shophan (Numbers 32:35), site unknown; (3) Ataroth on the Ephraim-Benjamin border (Joshua 16:2, 7; possibly = Ataroth-addar, 16:5; 18:13); and (4) Ataroth beth-joab in Judah (1 Chronicles 2:54). Transliterations are consistent: Ataroth/Atarot. Greek versions render as Ατταρωθ. The name's multiple attestations reflect common toponymy based on shared geographical features ("crowns" = hilltops?). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ataroth | es: Atarot, a-Atarot | fr: Ataroth | de: Ataroth Num 32:3; Num 32:34; Josh 16:2; Josh 16:7

עֲטָרוֹת H5853 Prep (2×)

Ataroth Addar (place name: a border town between Ephraim and Benjamin)

Ataroth Addar is a town on the tribal boundary between Ephraim and Benjamin, mentioned in Joshua 16:5 and 18:13. The name means 'crowns of Addar' or possibly 'crowns of glory.' The exact site is uncertain, though it lay in the hill country west of the Jordan. The Septuagint renders it as a compound proper name (Αταρωθ, etc.), and all modern translations transliterate it. The BDB notes that the town may be identical with Ataroth (without 'Addar') mentioned elsewhere in the conquest narratives.

(2×) A border settlement between Ephraim and Benjamin (Joshua 16:5, 18:13). The compound name ('Ataroth Addar') may distinguish it from other towns named Ataroth. All target languages transliterate the name uniformly, reflecting standard practice for ancient toponyms of uncertain location. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: Ataroth-Addar | es: Atarot-Adar | fr: Ataroth-Addar | de: Ataroth-Addar Josh 16:5; Josh 18:13

עַטְרוֹת H5854 N-proper-fs (2×)

Atroth Beth Joab (place name: a town in Judah, possibly associated with the clan of Joab)

This compound place name appears in 1 Chronicles 2:54 in a genealogical context listing the 'sons' of Salma, which include Bethlehem, the Netophathites, and 'Atroth Beth Joab.' The name likely denotes a settlement associated with Joab or his family. The BDB notes that these 'sons' are actually towns or clans descended from Salma. The exact site is unknown. All modern translations transliterate the compound name, and the multilingual glosses preserve both elements ('Atroth' + 'Beth Joab').

(2×) A town or clan-settlement in Judah associated with the family of Joab, listed in 1 Chronicles 2:54 among the descendants of Salma. The double occurrence reflects the two parts of the compound name ('Atroth' and 'Beth Joab'). All target languages transliterate both elements, treating the phrase as a single toponym. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Atroth, Beth-Yo'av | es: Atrot, Bet-Yoab | fr: [בית יואב], [עטרות] | de: [בית יואב], [עטרות] 1Chr 2:54

עֲטָרוֹת H5855 N-proper-fs (1×)

Atroth-shophan (place name meaning 'crowns of Shophan'; Transjordanian town built by Gadites)
Atroth-shophan is a place name meaning perhaps 'crowns of Shophan' or 'Ataroth of Shophan,' identifying a specific Ataroth (a common place name meaning 'crowns' or 'wreaths') by adding a distinguishing element. Located east of the Jordan, it was among the towns that the tribe of Gad rebuilt or fortified after the conquest. The text distinguishes it from other towns also named Ataroth in both Transjordan and Cisjordan. The site's exact location is unknown, though it was in the territory assigned to Gad. The plural 'crowns' in the name may refer to hilltops or circular fortifications, as places were often named for geographical features.

(1×) Numbers 32:35 lists Atroth-shophan among towns built by the Gadites: 'Atroth-shophan, Jazer, Jogbehah...' Multiple translations maintain the compound name (Spanish 'Atrot-Sofán,' English 'Atroth-shophan'), showing it as a distinct settlement from other Ataroth locations. The Gadites fortified and built towns in Gilead as they settled their Transjordanian inheritance, with Atroth-shophan being one of their rebuilt or renamed settlements. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Atroth-shophan | es: Atrot-Sofán | fr: Atroth-shophan | de: Atroth-shophan Num 32:35

עִי H5856 Prep-l / N-mp (4×)

ruin, heap of ruins; debris remaining after destruction of a city or structure
This term denotes the physical remains after violent destruction—rubble piles where cities or buildings once stood. The word appears in prophetic judgments against Jerusalem and Samaria, where God warns that these cities will be reduced to heaps of stones. The Aramaic-influenced plural form appears in Micah's oracles, while Jeremiah quotes Micah's prophecy about Jerusalem becoming ruins. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'ruinas,' French 'ruine') confirms this concrete sense of demolished structures.

(4×) Physical heaps of debris after violent destruction. Used exclusively in prophetic contexts (Micah, Jeremiah, Psalms) describing the fate of Jerusalem and Samaria. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'ruins' or 'heaps,' reflecting the aftermath of military conquest or divine judgment. Notable in Ps 79:1 where the temple's desolation is mourned. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: a-heap-of-ruins, heaps, into-heap-of | es: en-ruinas, por-montón-de, ruinas | fr: [עיים], ruine, à-ruine | de: [לעי], [עיים], [עיין] Ps 79:1; Jer 26:18; Mic 1:6; Mic 3:12

עַי H5857 Conj-w (40×)

Ai — the ancient Canaanite city near Bethel, destroyed by Joshua; also a variant form Ayyah in post-exilic lists.
A place name most famously associated with the Israelite conquest narrative in Joshua 7-8, where Ai's initial defeat of Israel exposed Achan's sin and its subsequent destruction demonstrated divine judgment and restoration. The name always appears with the definite article (ha-Ai, 'the ruin'), suggesting it may preserve an older common noun meaning 'ruin heap.' French 'le Ai' and German 'der Ai' faithfully reproduce this article, while Spanish 'Hai' contracts it. A single late occurrence as 'Ayyah' (Neh 11:31) appears in a post-exilic settlement list for Benjamin, likely referring to a resettlement near or on the ancient site.

1. Ai (Canaanite city) (39×) The Canaanite city near Bethel, central to the conquest narrative. Always with the article ha-Ai ('the ruin'), appearing in Genesis as a geographic marker (Gen 12:8; 13:3 — Abraham pitched his tent between Bethel and Ai) and then dominating Joshua 7-8 with the failed first attack, Achan's sin, and the successful ambush. Also listed in the returnee census (Ezra 2:28; Neh 7:32). French 'le Aï' and German 'der Ai' preserve the distinctive article that sets this toponym apart from ordinary place names. PERSONAL NAMES
en: of-the-Ai, the-Ai, to-the-Ai | es: Hai | fr: de-le-Aï, le-Ai, le-Aï | de: Ai, der-Ai, von-der-Ai Gen 12:8; Gen 13:3; Josh 7:2; Josh 7:3

2. Ayyah (settlement in Nehemiah) (1×) The variant spelling Ayyah (עַיָּה), appearing once in Neh 11:31 among Benjaminite settlements of the post-exilic resettlement. Without the article and with a different vowel pattern, this form may represent a later pronunciation or a distinct nearby settlement. Most translations leave it untranslated or bracket it, as seen in the French and German renderings ([עיה]), reflecting uncertainty about whether this is simply Ai by another name or a separate locale. AIAH PLACE PERSON
en: and-Ayyah | es: y-Aja | fr: [ועיה] | de: [ועיה] Neh 11:31

עוֹבָל H5858a N-proper-ms (1×)

Ebal (gentile name; Arabian people descended from Joktan in Table of Nations)
Ebal is a name appearing in the Table of Nations as one of the sons of Joktan, representing an Arabian people group. Joktan's descendants settled in southern Arabia, and Ebal was among these Arab tribes. The name appears in two forms in the biblical text: Obal in Genesis and Ebal in Chronicles, likely representing the same group with variant spellings. The identification of specific geographical locations for Joktan's descendants is difficult, though scholars have proposed connections to various Arabian regions. The Table of Nations in Genesis 10 organizes the known world ethnographically, showing how different peoples related to each other through common ancestry, with the Joktanite Arabs forming one significant branch of Shem's descendants.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 1:22 lists Ebal among Joktan's sons in the genealogical recapitulation of the Table of Nations. The parallel in Genesis 10:28 has 'Obal,' showing textual variation. These descendants of Joktan represent Arabian peoples who settled in southern Arabia. The Septuagint's Greek renderings attempt to approximate unfamiliar semitic tribal names. Ebal/Obal remains unlocated precisely but belongs to the Joktanite Arab confederation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5843 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Eval | es: Ebal | fr: [עיבל] | de: [עיבל] 1Chr 1:22

עֵיבָל H5858b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Ebal, Obal (personal name: a descendant of Seir the Horite, possibly linked to a deity or place name)
This personal name appears in the genealogy of Seir the Horite in Genesis 36:23 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:40. The Septuagint renders it variously (Γαιβηλ, Γαοβηλ, Ουβαλ), reflecting textual uncertainty. Some scholars (Glaser, Winckler) propose a connection to the Edomite god Bēl, though this is speculative. The BDB cautiously suggests the name may be related to the toponym Ebal (Mount Ebal), though the contexts differ. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the name.

(2×) A personal name (or possibly gentilic) in the Seirite genealogies of Genesis 36:23 and 1 Chronicles 1:40. Textual variants in the Septuagint suggest scribal uncertainty. All modern translations transliterate the Hebrew, treating it as a proper name without attempting etymological interpretation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5843 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-Ebal, and-Eval | es: y-Ebal, y-Eval | fr: [ועיבל], et-Ebal | de: [ועיבל], und-Ebal Gen 36:23; 1Chr 1:40

עֵיבָל H5858c N-proper-fs (5×)

Ebal; mountain of cursing north of Shechem, opposite Mount Gerizim

Mount Ebal stands north of Shechem (modern Nablus), opposite Mount Gerizim to the south. In Deuteronomy 11:29 and 27:4, 13, it is designated as the mountain from which the curses of the covenant are pronounced, while Gerizim hosts the blessings. Joshua 8:30 records that Joshua built an altar on Ebal after the conquest of Ai. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though some have connected it to the root meaning 'bare' or 'stony.'

(5×) Mount Ebal, the mountain of cursing north of Shechem — designated in the Mosaic covenant ceremony as the site for pronouncing curses (Deut 27:4, 13), opposite Mount Gerizim. Spanish, French, and German all transliterate as 'Ebal' (or 'Eval'), reflecting the standard handling of this place name. Joshua 8:30, 33 record the covenant renewal ceremony carried out there after the fall of Ai, with half of Israel facing each mountain. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5843 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Ebal, Eval | es: Ebal | fr: Ebal, Eval | de: Ebal, Eval Deut 11:29; Deut 27:4; Deut 27:13; Josh 8:30; Josh 8:33

עִיּוֹן H5859 N-proper-fs (3×)

Ijon/Iyon; a city in Naphtali repeatedly conquered during Israel's divided kingdom period

Ijon was a strategic city in northern Naphtali that suffered repeated invasions during the divided kingdom era. Ben-hadad of Syria struck it during his alliance with Asa of Judah against Baasha of Israel. Decades later, Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria conquered it during his campaign against Pekah, deporting its inhabitants. The city's location on the plateau of Merj Iyun, between two tributaries of the upper Jordan, made it strategically valuable but vulnerable. Scholars identify it with Tell Dibbin, though the precise location remains debated. The repeated conquests illustrate northern Israel's exposure to foreign powers.

(3×) Three occurrences, all in historical narratives of foreign invasions. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration of the place name with minor spelling variations (Ijon/Iyon/Iyyon). The city appears in the Books of Kings and Chronicles as a victim of geopolitical maneuvering—first Syrian, then Assyrian aggression. The parallel accounts in Kings and Chronicles show textual consistency in preserving this northern city's tragic history. Its strategic location made it a perpetual target in ancient Near Eastern power struggles. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ijon, Iyon, Iyyon | es: Ijón, Iyón | fr: Iyon, Iyyon, [עיין] | de: Iyon, Iyyon, [עיין] 1Kgs 15:20; 2Kgs 15:29; 2Chr 16:4

H5860 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to rush upon, pounce on (describing soldiers rushing greedily on plunder, possibly violating Saul's oath)

This verb means to rush upon, pounce on, or dart greedily toward something, like a bird of prey swooping on its victim. It appears in the account of Saul's rash oath forbidding his army to eat during battle. After Jonathan broke the oath (unknowingly) and the Philistines were defeated, the exhausted people 'rushed greedily upon the spoil,' taking sheep, cattle, and calves and slaughtering them on the ground to eat the meat with the blood—a violation of Torah. The verb captures their ravenous, desperate hunger after fasting all day in battle. Some translations connect this to a different verb meaning 'flew upon' or 'pounced,' emphasizing the violent, uncontrolled nature of their action.

(1×) 1 Samuel 14:32 describes the army's desperate hunger: 'the people rushed greedily upon the spoil,' slaughtering animals and eating meat with blood still in it. Spanish '(Y se abalanzó)' (and they threw themselves upon) captures the violent rush. Arabic glosses suggest a similar sense of pouncing or attacking. The context is Saul's foolish oath that left his troops starving, leading to this violation of dietary law when they could finally eat. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: and-they-pounced | es: (Y-se-abalanzó) | fr: et-ils-pounced 1Sam 14:32

עִיט H5860a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to scream at, shriek at, rail against (describing harsh verbal attack or scolding)

This verb means to scream at, shriek at, or rail against someone with harsh words. The root connects to Arabic words for screaming, scolding, and reviling, and to Syriac terms for anger. In 1 Samuel, it describes Nabal's response when David's men approached him for provisions. After David's men had protected Nabal's shepherds and flocks in the wilderness, they politely requested food. But Nabal 'screamed at them' or 'railed against them,' responding with insulting rhetoric and refusing to acknowledge David. The verb captures Nabal's churlish, abusive response—not merely refusing but doing so with verbal assault. His name means 'fool,' and his behavior proved it, nearly bringing destruction on his household.

(1×) 1 Samuel 25:14 reports a servant's account to Abigail: 'David sent messengers... and he [Nabal] screamed at them' or 'railed against them.' Spanish 'y se lanzó' (and he threw himself) may reflect a different verbal interpretation, but the context supports verbal abuse. The servants recognized Nabal's insulting response to David's reasonable request would provoke retaliation, prompting Abigail's wise intervention. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: and-he-screamed-at | es: y-se-lanzó | fr: et-il-screamed-à | de: und-er-screamed-bei 1Sam 25:14

עִיט H5860b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-2ms (1×)

to rush upon, pounce on (describing Saul's disobedient seizure of Amalekite plunder)

This denominative verb means to dart greedily or rush upon something, like a bird of prey diving on its target. It appears in Samuel's rebuke of Saul after the Amalekite campaign. God had commanded complete destruction of the Amalekites and their possessions, but Saul spared King Agag and the best livestock. Samuel confronts Saul: 'Why did you not obey the voice of YHWH? Why did you pounce on the plunder and do evil in YHWH's sight?' The verb suggests greedy, rapacious seizure of forbidden spoil. Saul's excuse that they kept the animals to sacrifice to God doesn't satisfy Samuel, who declares that obedience is better than sacrifice. The verb captures the greed that motivated Saul's partial obedience.

(1×) 1 Samuel 15:19 records Samuel's accusation: 'Why did you not obey YHWH's voice? Why did you pounce upon the plunder and do evil in His sight?' Spanish 'y te abalanzaste' (and you threw yourself upon) and French/English 'pounced' all convey the greedy rushing upon forbidden spoil. The context is Saul's incomplete obedience—keeping the best animals and the Amalekite king alive rather than utterly destroying everything as commanded. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: and-you-pounced | es: y-te-abalanzaste | fr: et-tu-pounced | de: und-du-pounced 1Sam 15:19

עַיִט H5861 N-ms (8×)

A bird of prey or raptor; used collectively for carrion birds and individually as a metaphor for a swift, fierce invader.

A masculine noun denoting a bird of prey, derived from a root suggesting a screaming cry. It appears both as a collective term for raptors descending on carcasses – as in the covenant scene where Abram drives away the birds of prey from his sacrifice (Gen 15:11) – and as a singular figure representing a powerful invader summoned by God (Isa 46:11, 'a ravenous bird from the east'). Jeremiah 12:9 uses it in a striking double image of Israel as both prey bird and prey. The word also evokes mountain raptors feasting after eschatological slaughter (Isa 18:6, Ezek 39:4). Job 28:7 notes that even the keen-eyed raptor cannot find the path to wisdom.

bird of prey, raptor (8×) A bird of prey or raptor, used both collectively for scavenging raptors and individually for a single predatory bird. In Genesis 15:11, birds of prey descend on Abram's covenant sacrifice, an ominous intrusion he must drive away. Isaiah 46:11 famously applies the term to Cyrus as God's instrument: 'a ravenous bird from the east, the man of my counsel.' Ezekiel 39:4 and Isaiah 18:6 depict raptors feasting on the slain in judgment scenes. Job 28:7 notes the bird of prey's legendary sharp sight yet its inability to perceive wisdom's hidden path. Spanish 'ave de rapina' and English 'bird of prey' both capture the predatory specificity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Are-the-birds-of-prey, Is-a-bird-of-prey, a-bird-of-prey | es: Ave-de-rapiña, a-ave-de-rapiña, ave-de-rapiña | fr: [העיט], [לעיט], [עיט] | de: [העיט], [לעיט], [עיט] Gen 15:11; Job 28:7; Isa 18:6; Isa 46:11

עִיטָם H5862 N-proper-ms (5×)

Etam; a place name: a cliff in Judah, a city near Bethlehem, and a clan or town in Simeon

Etam appears as a place name in three distinct contexts. First, it is the rocky cliff where Samson took refuge after striking the Philistines (Judg 15:8, 11). Second, it is a city fortified by Rehoboam between Bethlehem and Tekoa (2 Chr 11:6), associated with the clan listed in 1 Chronicles 4:3. Third, it may be a Simeonite settlement (1 Chr 4:32). The name possibly derives from a word for 'bird of prey,' though this is uncertain.

(5×) Etam as a geographic and clan name — referring to the cliff where Samson hid (Judg 15:8, 11), a fortified city near Bethlehem rebuilt by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:6), a Judahite clan (1 Chr 4:3), and possibly a Simeonite town (1 Chr 4:32). Spanish and English uniformly transliterate 'Etam,' while French and German occasionally leave the Hebrew untranslated. The name may derive from ayit ('bird of prey'), though the connection is uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Etam | es: Etam | fr: Etam, [עיטם] | de: Etam, [עיטם] Judg 15:8; Judg 15:11; 1Chr 4:3; 1Chr 4:32; 2Chr 11:6

עִיִּים H5863 Prep-b (2×)

in Iye Abarim, in Iyim (prepositional phrase: at the Israelite encampment east of Moab)

This prepositional phrase locates the Israelites at a wilderness station called 'Iye Abarim' (or 'Iyei ha-Abarim,' 'ruins of the regions beyond'). Numbers 21:11 and 33:44 place it on the eastern border of Moab, part of the itinerary from Egypt to Canaan. The name may derive from עִי (ruin) + עֲבָרִים (regions beyond), referring to the Transjordan wilderness. The Septuagint omits 'Abarim' in some manuscripts. All modern translations transliterate the compound place name with the appropriate preposition ('in Iye Abarim').

(2×) Marks the location of an Israelite encampment on the desert journey. Numbers 21:11 and 33:44 both use the prepositional form ('in Iye Abarim'), situating the camp east of Moab. The multilingual glosses preserve the prepositional construction ('in Iye Abarim,' 'en Ije-Abarim,' 'dans Iye-Abarim'), reflecting the locative function. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Iye-Abarim, in-Iye-abarim | es: en-Ije-Abarim | fr: dans-Iye-Abarim, dans-Iye-abarim | de: in-Iye-Abarim, in-Iye-abarim Num 21:11; Num 33:44

עִיִּים H5864 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Iyim, from Iyim (place name: a town in Judah and a wilderness station, possibly identical with Iye Abarim)

This toponym appears in two contexts: as a wilderness station (Numbers 33:45, where Israel departs 'from Iyim') and as a town in Judah (Joshua 15:29). The name is probably a shortened form of Iye Abarim. In Numbers, the Septuagint treats it as equivalent to the previous station; in Joshua, it is one of the southernmost towns allotted to Judah. The multilingual glosses transliterate 'Iyim' or 'Iim,' preserving the prepositional nuances ('from Iyim,' 'and Iyim').

(2×) Designates either a wilderness encampment (Numbers 33:45, departure point on the exodus route) or a town in Judah (Joshua 15:29). The prepositional forms ('from Iyim,' 'and Iyim') reflect the contexts: travel itinerary and town list. All target languages transliterate the name and retain the prepositional distinctions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Iyim, from-Iyim | es: de-Ijim, y-Iim | fr: de-Iyim, et-Iyim | de: und-Iyim, von-Iyim Num 33:45; Josh 15:29

עוֹלָם H5865 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

forever, perpetuity, eternity (long duration either past or future, possibly textual variant in 2 Chronicles)

This word typically means forever, perpetuity, long duration, or eternity. It's one of Hebrew's most important time words, referring to indefinite long duration either in the past (ancient times, of old) or future (forever, everlasting). It appears throughout Scripture in phrases like 'forever and ever' and 'from everlasting to everlasting.' In 2 Chronicles 33:7, there's an unusual form that may be a variant spelling or textual issue where Manasseh sets up an idol in the temple 'forever,' though some scholars propose reading the standard form 'olam' here. The term's fundamental sense is duration beyond normal reckoning—time stretching beyond what humans can measure or imagine, making it suitable for describing God's eternal nature and His everlasting covenant.

(1×) 2 Chronicles 33:7 describes Manasseh setting an idol 'in the house of God, of which God had said to David and Solomon... I will put My Name forever [or: for eternity].' The textual form is unusual, possibly a variant of the common word for 'forever.' The context is the tragic irony: God promised His name would dwell in the temple forever, but Manasseh desecrated that very place with an idol, provoking divine judgment. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: forever | es: para-siempre | fr: [לעילום] | de: [לעילום] 2Chr 33:7

עֵילַי H5866 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ilai (personal name; one of David's mighty warriors from Ahohite clan)

Ilai is a personal name appearing in the roster of David's mighty warriors. He is identified as an Ahohite, belonging to a Benjamite clan that produced several of David's elite fighters. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:28 calls him Zalmon, suggesting either Ilai was his alternate name or a textual variant exists between the two accounts. David's mighty men were his most loyal and capable warriors, performing extraordinary feats of valor and forming the backbone of his military power. Ilai/Zalmon represents these heroes whose names were preserved in Israel's honor roll. The Ahohites contributed multiple warriors to David's forces, showing clan loyalty to the king.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 11:29 lists 'Ilai the Ahohite' among the Thirty (David's elite warriors). The parallel in 2 Samuel calls him Zalmon, creating uncertainty whether these are two names for one person or a textual issue. As an Ahohite, Ilai belonged to a Benjamite family distinguished for producing warriors. His inclusion among David's heroes immortalizes his name among Israel's greatest fighters. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ilai | es: Ilai | fr: [עילי] | de: [עילי] 1Chr 11:29

H5867 N-proper-fs (1×)

Elam (place name; ancient kingdom east of Mesopotamia, frequent prophetic target)

Elam was an ancient kingdom located east of Mesopotamia, in what is now southwestern Iran. As a significant ancient Near Eastern power, Elam appears frequently in Scripture both historically and prophetically. The Elamites descended from Shem according to the Table of Nations. Elam allied with various Mesopotamian powers and occasionally threatened Israel and Judah. Prophets pronounced judgment on Elam, including Jeremiah's oracle of destruction in chapter 49, where God promises to scatter the Elamites to the four winds and break their military might. Despite these judgments, God also promised eventual restoration. Elamites appear at Pentecost in Acts, showing the fulfillment of restoration promises. The name became synonymous with a distant, powerful foreign nation.

(1×) Jeremiah 49:36 pronounces judgment: 'I will bring against Elam the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds.' Spanish 'Elam' maintains the standard transliteration. The context is God's oracle against various nations; Elam's judgment involves complete scattering to every direction, breaking their power as an archer nation. Yet verse 39 promises eventual restoration. ELAM NATION REGION

en: (Eylam) | es: Elam | fr: [(עילם)] | de: [(עילם)] Jer 49:36

עֵילָם H5867a N-proper-fs (17×)
Elam — ancient civilization and territory east of Mesopotamia (modern SW Iran), a people descended from Shem and subject of prophetic oracles.
A proper noun identifying both the people and the territory of Elam, the ancient civilization centered in what is now southwestern Iran, east of the Tigris lowlands. Genesis 10:22 lists Elam as a 'son of Shem,' placing it within the Semitic genealogical framework despite its non-Semitic language. In Genesis 14, Chedorlaomer king of Elam leads a coalition of eastern kings against Canaan — one of the earliest references to international warfare in Scripture. The prophets pronounce judgment on Elam (Jeremiah 49:34-39) while also envisioning its future restoration. All translations uniformly render the name as 'Elam,' confirming its fixed geographic-ethnic identity.

Elam (nation/region) (17×) The proper name of the ancient nation and region east of Mesopotamia, encompassing the area around Susa in modern southwestern Iran. Listed among the sons of Shem in Genesis 10:22 and 1 Chronicles 1:17, it appears in historical narrative as a military power (Gen 14:1, 9), in prophetic oracles of judgment (Jer 49:34-39; Ezek 32:24), and as a land of Israelite dispersion (Isa 11:11). Daniel 8:2 identifies it specifically as 'the province of Elam.' English, Spanish, French, and German all transliterate uniformly as 'Elam,' with no semantic variation. ELAM NATION REGION
en: Elam, Eylam, [ketiv:forever] | es: Elam, Y-Elam, [kethiv] | fr: Elam, dans-Élam, et-de-Élam | de: Elam, [בעיילם], [עילם] Gen 10:22; Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9; 1Chr 1:17; Isa 11:11

עִילָם H5867b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)
Elam (II) — personal and clan name for several post-exilic families; distinct from the nation Elam
This עִילָם (Elam II) is a personal and clan name distinct from the well-known nation east of Babylon. It designates several individuals and the families descended from them who appear primarily in post-exilic return lists. Two separate 'sons of Elam' groups returned from Babylon — one numbering 1,254 (Ezra 2:7; Neh 7:12) and another called 'the other Elam' numbering 1,254 as well (Ezra 2:31; Neh 7:34). Members of the Elam clan were among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:2, 26). A Benjaminite Elam appears in 1 Chronicles 8:24, a gatekeeper son of Kore in 1 Chronicles 26:3, and a leader who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:14.

Elam (proper noun, person/clan) (11×) A personal and clan name for Israelite families in the post-exilic period, distinct from the Mesopotamian nation Elam. Two 'sons of Elam' groups appear in the return lists (Ezra 2:7, 31; Neh 7:12, 34), and family members are named among those who divorced foreign wives (Ezra 10:2, 26). A Benjaminite named Elam appears in 1 Chronicles 8:24, a Levitical gatekeeper in 1 Chronicles 26:3, and a covenant-sealer and processional participant in Nehemiah 10:14 and 12:42. Spanish 'Elam' and English 'Elam' both transliterate identically to the national name, requiring context to distinguish. ELAM NATION REGION
en: Elam, Eylam, and-Elam | es: Eilam, Elam, y-Elam | fr: et-Élam, Élam | de: Elam, [ועילם], [עילם] 1Chr 8:24; 1Chr 26:3; Ezra 2:7; Ezra 2:31; Ezra 8:7

עוֹנָה H5868a
textual variant in Hosea 10:10 (Ketiv/Qere uncertain; likely עֲוֹנֹתָם 'their iniquities')
This entry documents a textual puzzle in Hosea 10:10. The Qere reads עוֹנֹתָם (possibly plural of עוֹנָה, though unclear), while the Ketiv offers עֵינֹתָם. Scholars generally emend to עֲוֹנֹתָם ('their iniquities'), which fits the context of divine judgment and chastisement. The passage warns that nations will gather against Israel 'when I discipline them for their double iniquity.' The textual uncertainty reflects the challenges of preserving and interpreting difficult prophetic oracles, but the theme of punishment for sin remains unmistakable.

עֵם H5868b Prep-b / N-ms (1×)
scorching heat, burning (dub.; possibly 'with the scorching/fury of His breath,' text uncertain)
This noun is uncertain but possibly means scorching heat, burning, or fury. BDB suggests it may relate to Arabic words for thirst and internal heat, describing a scorching glow. The word appears in Isaiah's vision of the Lord striking the River (Euphrates) and drying it up. The phrase might mean 'with the scorching of His breath' or 'with the fury of His breath,' though textual issues make the exact reading uncertain. Some suggest emending it to 'with the strength of' or 'with the might of.' The context describes God's powerful breath creating a wind so strong it dries up the river, enabling His people to cross as they did the Red Sea. Whether 'scorching' or 'strength,' the sense is of overwhelming divine power manifested in breath or wind.

(1×) Isaiah 11:15 describes God drying up the Euphrates: 'He will wave His hand over the river with the scorching of His breath' (or 'with vehemence/fury of His spirit'). Spanish 'con vehemencia de' (with vehemence of) reflects one interpretation. The text is difficult, and some propose emendations. The broader context is a new exodus where God will remove obstacles, splitting the river to enable His scattered people to return home. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-scorching-of | es: con-vehemencia-de | fr: [בעים] | de: [בעים] Isa 11:15

H5869 N-csc / 2mp (3×)
Eye; this subset refers to construct forms with pronominal suffixes expressing possession or perspective
These three occurrences represent particular grammatical constructions of the common word 'eye,' specifically construct phrases with pronominal suffixes. The contexts show the word in idiomatic expressions: David hoping Yahweh will look on his affliction 'with His eye,' Zedekiah being warned he will speak with Nebuchadnezzar 'his eyes to your eyes' (face to face), and Yahweh commanding 'do not let your eye spare' in executing judgment. The construct forms enable Hebrew's vivid imagery of sight, perception, and direct encounter. The bracketed glosses in the multilingual evidence suggest these are grammatically complex forms that translators handled variously.

(3×) Three construct phrases showing 'eye' in expressions of divine attention (2 Sam 16:12), face-to-face encounter (Jer 32:4), and commanded ruthlessness (Ezek 9:5). The multilingual evidence shows the translational complexity: some versions preserve the literal eye imagery, others render the idiomatic force. Hebrew's construct chains allow compact expressions that require longer phrases in translation. The 'eye to eye' construction in Jeremiah emphasizes the directness of the coming confrontation between king and emperor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (eye-of-you), (in-my-eye), his-eyes | es: (ojo-de-vosotros), (ojo-mío), (sus-ojos) | fr: (in-mon-eye), [(עיניו)], oeil | de: [(עיניו)], [עינכם] 2Sam 16:12; Jer 32:4; Ezek 9:5

עַיִן H5869a Prep-l (872×)
Eye: in the evaluative idiom 'in the eyes of' (judgment/opinion); the physical organ of sight; outward appearance or visible surface.
The Hebrew noun ayin ('eye') is one of Scripture's most versatile words, but when preceded by the preposition le- or be- it overwhelmingly serves an evaluative metaphor: 'in the eyes of' someone means 'in someone's judgment or estimation.' This idiomatic use accounts for the vast majority of its 872 occurrences in this form — Noah 'found favor in the eyes of the LORD' (Gen 6:8), and what is 'evil in the eyes of the LORD' recurs like a refrain through Judges and Kings. Remarkably, Spanish en los ojos de, French aux yeux de, and German in den Augen preserve this metaphor with near-identical body-part idioms, while Arabic في عيون and Hindi की दृष्टि में confirm the cross-linguistic naturalness of the eyes-as-judgment metaphor. The literal body-part sense and the rarer 'appearance' meaning round out a compact but important semantic profile.

1. in the eyes/sight of (evaluative) (734×) The evaluative-metaphorical idiom 'in the eyes of X' or 'before the eyes of X,' meaning 'in X's judgment, opinion, or estimation.' This dominant sense (734 occurrences) encompasses the formulaic 'to find favor in the eyes of' (Gen 6:8; 19:19), the Deuteronomistic refrain 'he did evil in the eyes of the LORD,' and all constructions where 'eyes' stand for perspective or approval. Spanish en ojos de, French dans les yeux de, German in den Augen, Arabic في عيون, and Hindi की दृष्टि में all preserve the body-part metaphor, making this one of the most stable cross-linguistic idioms in the biblical corpus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-eyes-of, in-the-eyes-of | es: en-ojos-de, en-ojos-de- | fr: dans-le-yeux-de, dans-yeux-de | de: in-Augen-von, in-den-Augen Gen 6:8; Gen 19:14; Gen 21:11; Gen 28:8; Gen 31:35

2. eye (literal body part) (127×) The literal physical organ of sight — eyes that see, weep, grow dim with age, are lifted up in prayer, or serve as anatomical referents. With 127 occurrences, this includes Leah's 'tender eyes' (Gen 29:17), Israel's eyes growing 'heavy with age' (Gen 48:10), and the lex talionis formula 'eye for eye' (Exod 21:24). Korean 눈, Hindi आँख, Arabic عين, and Swahili macho all render this with straightforward body-part terms. The distinction from sense 1 is that here the eyes function as physical organs rather than metaphors for judgment — though the boundary is sometimes exegetically debated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [eyes-of-you], and-eyes-of, and-the-eyes-of | es: Pero-los-ojos-de, Y-ojos-de, [ojos-de-vosotros] | fr: et-mes-yeux, et-yeux, et-yeux-de | de: Auge, und-Augen-von, und-die-Augen Gen 29:17; Gen 45:12; Gen 48:10; Exod 10:5; Exod 10:15

3. appearance, visible surface (11×) Outward appearance or visible surface — a metaphorical extension where 'eye' means 'what the eye perceives,' used for describing the look or visible aspect of something. Only 11 occurrences, concentrated in descriptions of manna ('its appearance was like the appearance of bdellium,' Num 11:7) and Ezekiel's visions ('like the appearance of fire,' Ezek 1:4, 27; 8:2). The construction ke-ein ('like the eye/appearance of') functions as a simile marker. Spanish como apariencia de, French comme l'apparence de, and German wie das Aussehen von all shift from 'eye' to 'appearance' vocabulary, confirming that translators recognize this as a distinct semantic extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-appearance, its-appearance, like-appearance-of | es: como-apariencia-de, como-aspecto-de, como-ojo-de | fr: comme-appearance-de, comme-oeil, et-son-appearance | de: sein-appearance, und-sein-appearance, wie-Auge Lev 13:55; Num 11:7; Ezek 1:4; Ezek 1:7

עַיִן H5869b N-csc (22×)

A natural spring or fountain of water; a source issuing from the ground, often in geographic or place-name contexts.

Distinct from its homograph meaning 'eye,' this noun denotes a spring or fountain of water bubbling up from the earth. It appears prominently in the patriarchal narratives — Hagar encounters the angel at a spring of water (Gen 16:7), and Abraham's servant finds Rebekah at the spring outside the city (Gen 24:13, 16). The word also designates the deep primordial springs of the ocean (Prov 8:28) and features in geographic descriptions of the promised land as a place of brooks and springs (Deut 8:7). Spanish 'fuente' and French 'source' both capture the flowing-water imagery that distinguishes this root from the anatomical 'eye.'

1. spring or fountain of water (21×) A natural source of water flowing from the ground — spring, fountain, or wellspring. This is the dominant sense across all 21 occurrences, appearing in narratives of Hagar at the spring (Gen 16:7), Rebekah's encounter at the city spring (Gen 24:13–45), the twelve springs at Elim (Exod 15:27), and the cosmological springs of the deep (Prov 8:28). Spanish 'fuente' and French 'source' consistently reflect the flowing-water meaning, while German 'Quellen' captures the notion of a welling-up origin. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-spring, spring, spring-of | es: a-la-fuente, de-fuentes, en-el-manantial | fr: le-source, le-source-de, source | de: Auge, Quellen, Quellen-von Gen 16:7; Gen 24:13; Gen 24:16; Gen 24:29

2. uncertain or misclassified occurrence (1×) A single uncertain occurrence at Hosea 10:10 where the glosses — English '[their eyes],' Spanish '[iniquidades]' — diverge sharply from the water-spring meaning, strongly suggesting homograph confusion with H5869a (eye) or a data-import artifact rather than a genuine distinct sense of this lexeme. FLOWING WATER

en: [their-eyes] | es: [iniquidades] | fr: source | de: [[עינתם]] Hos 10:10

עַיִן H5870 Conj-w / N-fsc (5×)

eye (Aramaic); the physical organ of sight, or figuratively the eye of God denoting watchful oversight

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew ayin, this noun denotes the eye as a physical organ and as a symbol of perception and watchfulness. In Ezra 5:5 it refers to the eye of God watching over the Jewish elders, preventing interference with the temple rebuilding. In Daniel it describes the uncanny human-like eyes on the little horn (7:8, 20) and Nebuchadnezzar's restoration of reason when he lifts his eyes to heaven (4:34).

(5×) The eye, both physical and figurative — in Ezra 5:5 the 'eye of their God' denotes divine watchful protection over the Jewish leaders rebuilding the temple. German 'Augen' and Spanish 'ojos/ojo' render the term straightforwardly as 'eyes.' In Daniel 7:8 and 7:20 the horn with human-like eyes evokes an eerie, vigilant intelligence, while Daniel 4:34 describes the king lifting his eyes heavenward in a moment of restored sanity and worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-eye-of, and-eyes, eyes | es: Y-ojo-de, como-ojos-de, mis-ojos | fr: [ועין], comme-mes-yeux, et-oeil | de: Augen-von, [ועינין], [כעינ] Ezra 5:5; Dan 4:34; Dan 7:8; Dan 7:20

עַיִן H5871 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (5×)

Ain — a place name meaning 'spring,' used for a Canaanite border point and a Negeb town in Judah/Simeon

Ain (meaning 'spring' or 'eye') designates at least two locations in the Hebrew Bible. One marks a point on the northeastern border of Canaan (Num 34:11), where the Septuagint renders it epi pegas ('at the springs'). The other identifies a town in the Negeb assigned to Judah and later Simeon, often paired with Rimmon (Josh 15:32; 19:7; 1 Chr 4:32), probably modern Umm er-Ramamin southwest of Hebron.

(5×) A geographic place name denoting locations associated with water springs. On the Canaanite border (Num 34:11) the LXX translates it as 'springs,' revealing the topographic sense behind the name. In the Negeb it appears consistently alongside Rimmon in tribal allotments for Judah and Simeon (Josh 15:32; 19:7; 1 Chr 4:32). Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate as Ain/Ayin. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ain, Ayin, and-Ayin | es: Ayin, hacia-Ain, y-Ayin | fr: Ain, Ayin, [ועין] | de: Ain, Ayin, der-Ain Num 34:11; Josh 15:32; Josh 19:7; Josh 21:16; 1Chr 4:32

עֵין גֶּדִי H5872 N-proper-fs (10×)

En-gedi ('spring of the young goat'), an oasis settlement on the western shore of the Dead Sea in the wilderness of Judah.

A compound place name meaning 'spring of the young goat' (ᶜeyn + gedi), designating the famous oasis on the western shore of the Dead Sea. Its lush freshwater springs created a striking contrast with the surrounding barren desert, making it both a refuge and a place of beauty. David hid from Saul in the strongholds of En-gedi (1 Sam 23:29; 24:1), and the Song of Songs compares the beloved to the vineyards of En-gedi (Song 1:14). German 'Ein' and French 'Aïn-Guédi' reflect different approaches to rendering the Hebrew ᶜayin ('spring') element of the name.

En Gedi (place name) (10×) The proper place name En-gedi, a desert oasis identified with modern ᶜAin Jidi on the Dead Sea's western shore. Listed among the wilderness cities of Judah (Josh 15:62), it served as David's hiding place from Saul in its caves and strongholds (1 Sam 23:29; 24:1). The Song of Songs celebrates its vineyards (Song 1:14), and Ezekiel's eschatological vision places fishermen along the shore from En-gedi onward (Ezek 47:10). It is equated with Hazazon-tamar in 2 Chronicles 20:2. The multilingual renderings—English 'En-gedi,' Spanish 'En-gadi,' French 'Aïn-Guédi,' German 'Ein-Gedi'—reflect varying transliteration traditions for the compound

name. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ein, Ein-, En | es: Ein, En-gadi, Gedi | fr: Aïn-Guédi, Ein, Ein- | de: Auge, Ein, Ein- Josh 15:62; 1Sam 23:29; 1Sam 24:1

עֵין גַּנִּים H5873 N-proper-fs (3×)

En-gannim; 'spring of gardens,' two Israelite cities—one in Judah, one in Issachar

En-gannim, meaning 'spring of gardens,' identifies two distinct cities in ancient Israel. One was located in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah, possibly modern Umm Jina near Beth-shemesh. The other, more significant En-gannim was in Issachar, a Levitical city assigned to the Gershonite Levites. This northern En-gannim is identified with Jenin, near the southeastern edge of the Jezreel valley, about 15 miles north-northeast of Samaria. The name evokes an image of an irrigated oasis, a spring feeding gardens—a precious resource in the semi-arid environment. The textual transmission shows corruption in 1 Chronicles 6:58, where it appears as Anem.

(3×) Three occurrences referring to two distinct cities. Joshua 15:34 lists the Judean En-gannim, while Joshua 19:21 and 21:29 refer to the Issacharian city. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration, with conjunction forms indicating the name in lists. The Septuagint's varied renderings reflect the textual complexity and the common occurrence of spring-named settlements in ancient Palestine. The Levitical city status of the northern En-gannim gave it religious significance beyond its agricultural advantages. PERSONAL NAMES
en: En-gannim, and-En-Gannim | es: En-ganim, y-En-Ganim, y-En-ganim | fr: En-gannim, et-En-Gannim | de: En-gannim, und-En-Gannim Josh 15:34; Josh 19:21; Josh 21:29

עֵין־דֹּר H5874 Prep / N-proper-fs (3×)

En-dor; 'spring of dwelling,' a city in Manasseh famous for Saul's consultation with the medium

En-dor, meaning 'spring of dwelling' or 'spring of the generation,' is most famous as the site where Saul consulted a medium on the eve of his final battle. Located about 14 miles north-northeast of the Jezreel valley, modern Endur preserves the ancient name. The city was allocated to Manasseh but apparently remained under Canaanite control initially, as Joshua 17:11 lists it among cities where Israel failed to drive out the inhabitants. Psalm 83:10 recalls an earlier victory at En-dor, possibly referring to Deborah and Barak's triumph over Sisera. The city's persistent association with the medium story has made its name synonymous with occult consultation.

(3×) Three occurrences: allocation in Joshua, Saul's consultation in 1 Samuel, and military victory recalled in Psalms. The multilingual evidence shows prepositional variation ('at,' 'in') with standard transliteration. The city appears in different contexts—territorial allotment, desperate royal necromancy, and military triumph—showing its long history. The Septuagint's varied spellings (Aeldor, Aendor) reflect pronunciation challenges. The 1 Samuel narrative has made En-dor permanently associated with supernatural encounter, though Psalm 83's reference shows it had earlier significance in Israel's military history. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7605 WITH 3 SENSES
en: En-Dor, at-En-Dor, in-En-dor | es: En-Dor, en-En-Dor, en-En-dor | fr: En-Dor, dans-Ein-Dor, dans-En-dor | de: En-Dor, bei-En-Dor, in-En-dor Josh 17:11; 1Sam 28:7; Ps 83:10

עַיִן H5875 N-proper-fs (1×)

En-hakkore (place name meaning 'spring of the caller/partridge'; water source God provided for Samson)

En-hakkore is a place name meaning 'spring of the caller' or 'spring of the partridge,' commemorating God's provision of water for Samson. After Samson slaughtered a thousand Philistines with a donkey's jawbone, he became desperately thirsty and called out to God. God split open a hollow place, and water flowed out. Samson named the spring En-hakkore ('spring of the caller') because he called to God in his desperate need. The name captures both Samson's cry for help and God's gracious response. Springs were precious in the semi-arid landscape, and this one became a memorial to divine provision. The location was in or near Lehi, where the battle occurred, and the spring apparently continued to flow, serving as a lasting reminder of God's faithfulness.

(1×) Judges 15:19 explains the name: 'God split open the hollow place that is in Lehi, and water came out; he drank, his spirit returned, and he revived. Therefore he called its name En-hakkore, which is in Lehi to this day.' Multiple translations maintain the Hebrew name with slight variations. The spring commemorated God's provision when Samson was near death from thirst after his victory. The name—whether 'spring of the caller' or 'spring of the partridge'—anchored the memory of God's timely intervention. PERSONAL NAMES
en: En-hakkore | es: En-Hacore | fr: En-hakkore | de: En-hakkore Judg 15:19

עֵין חַדָּה H5876 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

En-haddah (place name meaning 'swift spring'; town in Issachar's tribal territory)

En-haddah is a place name meaning perhaps 'swift spring' or 'sharp spring,' combining 'en' (spring/fountain) with an adjective suggesting quickness or sharpness. It was a town within the tribal allotment of Issachar, appearing in the boundary list in Joshua 19. The exact location is unknown, though it was somewhere in the Jezreel valley region or surrounding hills where Issachar settled. Springs were vital for settlement in ancient Israel, and towns were often named after their water sources. The adjective 'haddah' (sharp/swift) may describe the spring's rapid flow or the quality of its water. The Septuagint's Greek transliteration shows uncertainty about the original pronunciation. Like many biblical place names, En-haddah survives only in this boundary list.

(1×) Joshua 19:21 lists En-haddah among Issachar's towns: 'and En-haddah and Beth-pazzez.' Spanish 'y En-hada' and English 'En-haddah' reflect standard transliteration. The context is the territorial allotment to Issachar, one of the smaller tribes. The spring that gave the town its name was presumably significant enough to support a settlement, though the site's modern identification remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-En-Chaddah | es: y-En-hada | fr: et-En-Chaddah | de: und-En-Chaddah Josh 19:21

עֵין חָצוֹר H5877 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

En-Chatsor, a town in the tribal territory of Naphtali

En-Chatsor appears once in the boundary list for Naphtali's inheritance. The name means 'spring of Chatsor,' combining the common element 'En' (spring/fountain) with Chatsor. The Septuagint renders it as 'spring of Asor,' preserving the connection to water sources that were vital for settlement locations. It was one of the fortified cities marking the northern tribal boundaries.

(1×) A settlement in the territory of Naphtali mentioned in Joshua 19:37. The multilingual evidence consistently preserves the proper name with the 'En-' prefix (English: 'and-En-Chatsor', Spanish: 'y-En-hazor', French: 'et-En-Chatsor'), indicating a place name associated with a spring. This single attestation places it within the context of territorial boundary markers in Joshua's distribution of the promised land. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-En-Chatsor | es: y-En-hazor | fr: et-En-Chatsor | de: und-En-Chatsor Josh 19:37

חָרֹד H5878 N-proper-fs (1×)

Harod, a spring where Gideon's army camped before battling the Midianites

The spring of Harod served as a strategic camping location for Gideon and his forces. This was the famous site where God reduced Gideon's army from thousands to just three hundred men through the water-drinking test. The name 'Harod' may be connected to trembling or fear, perhaps reflecting the anxiety of the untested soldiers. Modern translations carefully preserve this as 'spring of Harod' or 'Ein Harod,' maintaining the geographical precision crucial for understanding the narrative.

(1×) The spring where Gideon's army encamped in Judges 7:1, marking the beginning of one of Israel's most dramatic military victories. Cross-linguistic evidence (English: 'spring-of-Harod', Spanish: 'Ein-Jarod', French: 'source-de-Harod', German: 'Quelle-von-Harod') consistently emphasizes the water source element, reflecting the narrative importance of this location where God demonstrated that victory comes through divine power rather than military might. PERSONAL NAMES

en: spring-of-Harod | es: Ein-Jarod | fr: source-de-Harod | de: Quelle-von-Harod Judg 7:1

עֵינָם H5879 Conj-w (3×)

Enam/Enaim; a city in the Shephelah of Judah, site of Judah and Tamar's encounter

This city appears under two slightly different forms: Enam in Joshua's tribal allotment list and Enaim in the Judah and Tamar narrative. The name means 'two springs,' suggesting a settlement blessed with dual water sources. Genesis 38 locates it on the road to Timnah, where Tamar positioned herself to intercept her father-in-law Judah, resulting in the scandalous yet divinely purposed encounter that produced Perez, ancestor of David. Joshua 15:34 lists it among cities in the Shephelah of Judah. The textual variants (Enam/Enaim) represent the same location, showing the fluid spelling of place names in transmission.

(3×) Three occurrences: twice in the Tamar narrative, once in Joshua's boundary list. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration with prepositional variation ('in Enaim,' 'at Enaim'). The Genesis story makes this city significant in salvation history, though its exact location remains uncertain. The dual form of the name ('springs' plural) is preserved in some translations. The Septuagint's varied renderings reflect the textual fluidity between the Enam and Enaim forms, both pointing to the same Shephelah settlement. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Enaim, and-the-Enam, in-Enaim | es: Enaim, en-Enaim, y-Enám | fr: Enaim, dans-Enaim, et-le-Enam | de: Enajims, in-Enajim, und-der-Enam Gen 38:14; Gen 38:21; Josh 15:34

עֵין מִשְׁפָּט H5880 N-proper-fs (1×)

En-Mishpat, another name for Kadesh-Barnea meaning 'spring of judgment'

En-Mishpat is an alternative designation for the crucial wilderness location Kadesh-Barnea. The name means 'spring of judgment' or 'fountain of justice,' possibly reflecting significant legal or judicial events that occurred there. The Septuagint translates it literally as 'the spring of judgment.' This identification helps connect various wilderness narratives, as Kadesh-Barnea was central to Israel's forty-year journey and featured prominently in episodes involving Moses' leadership and divine judgment.

(1×) The ancient name for Kadesh-Barnea mentioned in Genesis 14:7 during the account of the kings' campaign. All major translations preserve this as 'En-Mishpat' (English, Spanish, French, German all maintain the proper name form), recognizing it as the same location that would later become famous in Israel's wilderness experience. The 'judgment' component of the name may foreshadow the place's association with divine decisions and covenant testing. PERSONAL NAMES

en: En-Mishpat | es: En-Mispat | fr: En-Mishpat | de: En-Mischpat Gen 14:7

עֵינָן H5881 N-proper-ms (5×)

Enan — a Naphtalite man, father of Ahira, named in the wilderness census and tribal offerings

Enan is the father of Ahira, the leader of the tribe of Naphtali during the wilderness period. His name appears exclusively in Numbers in connection with the census (Num 1:15; 2:29), the dedication offerings at the tabernacle (Num 7:78, 83), and the order of march (Num 10:27). The name likely derives from a root related to 'springs' or 'eyes,' fitting the broader Hebrew onomastic pattern.

(5×) A personal name borne by the father of Ahira, Naphtali's tribal chief during the wilderness wanderings. All five occurrences appear in Numbers in formulaic tribal listings — census rolls, camp arrangements, and tabernacle dedication offerings. Translations across languages consistently transliterate: English and German 'Enan,' Spanish 'Enan,' French 'Enan,' preserving the Hebrew form without semantic rendering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Enan | es: Enán, Enán: | fr: Énan | de: Enan Num 1:15; Num 2:29; Num 7:78; Num 7:83; Num 10:27

עֵין עֶגְלַיִם H5882 N-proper-fs (1×)

En-Eglaim, a location on the shore of the Dead Sea in Ezekiel's restoration vision

En-Eglaim appears only in Ezekiel's prophetic vision of the renewed land. Located somewhere on the Dead Sea's shore, it marks one boundary point where fishermen would spread their nets in the transformed landscape. The name means 'spring of the two calves' or possibly 'spring of the two carts.' In Ezekiel 47, the prophet envisions life-giving waters flowing from the temple and healing the Dead Sea, making it teem with fish—a stunning reversal of that region's barren desolation.

(1×) A prophetic location mentioned in Ezekiel 47:10 as part of the restored, fruitful Dead Sea region. The Septuagint renders it as 'Enagaleim,' while modern translations consistently preserve the proper name form (English: 'En-Eglaim', Spanish: 'En-eglaim', French: 'Aïn-Églaïm'). Its pairing with En-Gedi in the vision creates two boundary markers for the fishing activity that will characterize the healed waters, symbolizing God's comprehensive restoration of creation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: En-Eglaim | es: En-eglaim | fr: Aïn-Églaïm | de: [עין עגלים] Ezek 47:10

עֵין H5883 Prep / N-proper-fs (5×)

En-Rogel — 'spring of the fuller,' a water source on the Judah-Benjamin border near Jerusalem

En-Rogel ('spring of the fuller' or 'spring of the foot') was an important water source situated at the boundary between the tribal territories of Judah and Benjamin, near the junction of the Kidron and Hinnom valleys south of Jerusalem. It served as a significant landmark in boundary descriptions (Josh 15:7; 18:16) and later played a role in the political intrigues of David's court, where Adonijah held his rival coronation feast beside it (1 Kgs 1:9) and where Jonathan and Ahimaaz waited as spies during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 17:17).

(5×) A named spring functioning as a geographic boundary marker and narrative landmark near Jerusalem. The compound name 'En' (spring) plus 'Rogel' (fuller/spy) appears in boundary delineations for Judah and Benjamin (Josh 15:7; 18:16) and in Davidic court narratives as a staging point for political intrigue (2 Sam 17:17; 1 Kgs 1:9). Multilingual glosses consistently render the compound: English/French/German 'En-Rogel,' Spanish 'En-Roguel.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: En, En-Rogel, Rogel | es: En-Roguel, Rogel, en-En-Roguel | fr: En, En-Rogel, Rogel | de: En, En-Rogel, Rogel Josh 15:7; Josh 18:16; 2Sam 17:17; 1Kgs 1:9

עֵין רִמּוֹן H5884 Conj-w (1×)

En-Rimmon, a settlement in post-exilic Judah, possibly identical with Ain and Rimmon combined

En-Rimmon was resettled by returning exiles in Nehemiah's time. The name likely represents the combination of two earlier distinct places—Ain (meaning 'spring') and Rimmon (meaning 'pomegranate')—that had merged into a single settlement. Zechariah 14:10 mentions Rimmon as a geographical reference point for the transformed Jerusalem landscape. The preservation of both elements in the compound name reflects how ancient settlements often developed around water sources marked by distinctive features.

(1×) A town in post-exilic Judah listed in Nehemiah 11:29 among the settlements reoccupied by returnees from Babylon. The multilingual evidence shows the name with the conjunction (English: 'and-in-En-Rimmon', Spanish: 'Y-en-Ein-Rimón'), indicating its place within a larger list of towns. The compound nature of the name, combining 'spring' and 'pomegranate,' suggests a fertile location that drew settlers both before and after the exile. RIMMON PLACE NAME
en: and-in-En-Rimmon | es: Y-en-Ein-Rimón | fr: [ובעין רמון] | de: [ובעין רמון] Neh 11:29

עֵין שֶׁמֶשׁ H5885 N-proper-fs (2×)
En Shemesh (place name: 'Spring of the Sun,' a border landmark between Judah and Benjamin) En Shemesh means 'Spring of the Sun,' a water source on the boundary between Judah and Benjamin. It appears in Joshua 15:7 (Judah's border) and Joshua 18:17 (Benjamin's border). The Septuagint renders it 'fountain of the sun' (πηγὴν ἡλίου, πηγὴν Βαιθσαμυς), reflecting the name's literal meaning. The exact site is debated, though it lay in the wilderness east of Jerusalem. All modern translations transliterate the compound name.

(2×) A spring ('En') associated with the sun ('Shemesh'), serving as a boundary marker between Judah (Joshua 15:7) and Benjamin (Joshua 18:17). The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the compound name ('En-Shemesh,' 'En-Semes'), following standard conventions for ancient place names with uncertain modern equivalents. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE
en: En-Shemesh | es: En-Semes | fr: En-Shemesh | de: En-Shemesh Josh 15:7; Josh 18:17

עַיִן H5886
spring, fountain (of water); natural water source
This common noun denotes a spring or fountain—a natural source of fresh water, vital in the semi-arid landscapes of ancient Israel. Genesis 24 features the spring where Abraham's servant meets Rebekah; Genesis 16:7 places Hagar at 'a spring of water in the wilderness.' Deuteronomy 8:7 describes the promised land as blessed with 'springs and fountains.' Springs were places of encounter, life, and provision, often named and remembered in Israel's geography and story. Proverbs 8:28 even speaks of 'the fountains of the deep' as part of creation's structure, linking springs to the cosmic order God established.

תַּפּוּחַ H5887 N-proper-fs (1×)
En-Tappuach, a settlement on the border between Ephraim and Manasseh En-Tappuach marked a boundary point in the complex territorial division between the Joseph tribes. The name means 'spring of the apple' or 'spring of Tappuach,' connecting it to the nearby town of Tappuach. The border descriptions in Joshua show careful attention to water sources and established towns that helped define tribal inheritances. This location appears in the detailed survey that attempted to fairly distribute the land among the tribes while respecting natural geographical features.

(1×) A border location between Ephraim and Manasseh mentioned in Joshua 17:7. All major translations preserve the proper name form (English: 'En-Tappuach', Spanish: 'En-Tapúa', French and German: 'En-Tappuach'), recognizing its role as a fixed geographical marker. The 'En-' prefix again indicates a spring, vital for understanding why this particular spot served as a recognized boundary point in the tribal allocation system. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6168 WITH 4 SENSES
en: En-Tappuach | es: En-Tapúa | fr: En-Tappuach | de: En-Tappuach Josh 17:7

עִיף H5888 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)
to be faint, exhausted; used of extreme physical weakness or swooning
This verb describes the condition of being physically overcome, faint, or exhausted. In Jeremiah 4:31, it portrays a woman's soul growing faint—using the vivid metaphor of someone in the pangs of childbirth, gasping for breath. The term is related to other Hebrew words for weariness and appears in contexts of extreme distress. BDB notes textual uncertainties in some attestations, but the core meaning of physical faintness or collapse remains consistent where the word appears.

(1×) The state of extreme physical weakness or fainting, specifically used in Jeremiah 4:31 where daughter Zion's soul grows faint in distress. The Spanish 'desfallece' (faints/weakens) captures this well, while some translations show textual uncertainty. The context emphasizes life-threatening exhaustion, comparing the experience to a woman giving birth to her first child—a powerful image of vulnerability and desperate need. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION
en: is-faint | es: desfallece | fr: [עיכה] | de: [עיפה] Jer 4:31

עָיֵף H5889 Adj-ms (17×)
Weary, faint, or exhausted; describing physical fatigue from exertion, travel, or thirst.
An adjective of bodily depletion — the bone-deep exhaustion of a traveler, a soldier, or a wanderer in a parched land. Esau returns from the field עָיֵף, so spent he trades his birthright for stew (Gen 25:29-30). Gideon's men pursue the Midianites though they are עֲיֵפִים (Judg 8:4-5). The word carries special poignancy when extended to thirst and spiritual longing: 'a dry and weary land where there is no water' (Ps 63:2), or God refreshing the 'faint soul' (Jer 31:25). The boundary between physical exhaustion and deeper existential weariness gives this word its theological depth.

1. weary, exhausted from exertion (15×) Physically weary or exhausted from exertion, labor, travel, or battle. Esau's famished exhaustion after hunting (Gen 25:29-30), Gideon's soldiers pressing on while 'faint yet pursuing' (Judg 8:4-5), and David's weary company at the Jordan (2 Sam 16:14, 17:29) all illustrate this core sense. Deuteronomy 25:18 pairs it with יָגֵעַ ('tired') to describe Israel's vulnerable stragglers. Spanish 'agotada/cansado' and French 'fatigué' consistently render physical tiredness. Isaiah 5:27 notes that among God's summoned army 'none is weary' — a mark of supernatural vigor. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION
en: and-this, and-weary, exhausted | es: agotada, al-cansado, cansada | fr: au-fatigué, et-fatigué, et-weary | de: [לעיף], [לעיכה], [עיף] Gen 25:29; Gen 25:30; Deut 25:18; Judg 8:4; Judg 8:5

2. faint, parched from thirst (2×) Faint or parched specifically from thirst and deprivation, where exhaustion overlaps with desperate need for water. Job 22:7 rebukes withholding water from the weary (עָיֵף), and Psalm 143:6 compares the psalmist's soul to 'a weary land' thirsting for God. While the physical fatigue of sense 1 can be remedied by rest, this sense implies a deeper depletion — the kind only drink or divine refreshment can address. The metaphorical extension to spiritual thirst (Jer 31:25, 'I will refresh the faint soul') bridges body and spirit. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION
en: the-weary, weary | es: al-cansado, sedienta | fr: fatigué, עיף | de: [עיף], müde Job 22:7; Ps 143:6

עִיפָה H5890 N-fs (2×)
darkness, gloom (noun: deep darkness, often parallel to shadow of death)
This noun denotes thick darkness or gloom, appearing in poetic contexts of cosmic or existential dread. In Job 10:22, the land of death is described as a place of 'deep gloom' (עֲפָתָה) parallel to 'shadow of death' (צַלְמָוֶת). In Amos 4:13, God 'makes the dawn darkness' (עֹשֵׂה שַׁחַר עֵיפָה), overturning the natural order. The multilingual glosses converge on 'darkness' or 'gloom' ('darkness,' 'oscuridad,' 'obscurité'), situating the term in the semantic field of primordial or divine-induced darkness.

(2×) Describes overwhelming darkness, whether in the underworld (Job 10:22, paired with 'shadow of death') or as a divine act (Amos 4:13, God turning dawn into gloom). The word's rarity and poetic contexts mark it as a vivid, evocative term for the absence of light, often with eschatological or existential overtones. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: darkness, gloom | es: oscuridad | fr: obscurité, עיפתה | de: [עיפה], [עיפתה] Job 10:22; Amos 4:13

עֵיפָה H5891 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Ephah — a personal and clan name: a Midianite subtribe, and two figures in Judah's genealogy

Ephah appears as a name for three distinct figures in the Hebrew Bible. First and most prominent is a 'son' of Midian and grandson of Abraham through Keturah (Gen 25:4; 1 Chr 1:33), representing a Midianite clan whose camels are envisioned streaming to Zion in Isaiah 60:6. Additionally, the name belongs to both a male descendant of Judah (1 Chr 2:47) and a concubine of Caleb (1 Chr 2:46) in the Chronicler's genealogies. The Septuagint renders the name variously as Gapher, Gephar, and Gaipha.

(5×) A proper name borne by multiple biblical figures: a Midianite clan ancestor descended from Abraham and Keturah, a man in Judah's genealogy, and a concubine of Caleb. The gentilicname in Genesis 25:4 and 1 Chronicles 1:33 designates an Arabian subtribe, while Isaiah 60:6 envisions Ephah's camels bearing gold and incense to Jerusalem. Spanish renders 'Efa,' French preserves 'Ephah,' reflecting consistent transliteration across traditions. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION

en: Ephah, and-Ephah, and-Eyphah | es: Efa, Ephah, Y-Efa | fr: Ephah, [ועיפה], [עיפה] | de: Efa, [ועיפה], [עיפה] Gen 25:4; 1Chr 1:33; 1Chr 2:46; 1Chr 2:47; Isa 60:6

עִיר H5892a N-ms (2×)

agitation, wrath (noun: emotional turmoil, rage, or terror; textually uncertain)

This rare noun (distinct from the common עִיר, 'city') denotes inner agitation or fury. In Jeremiah 15:8, it appears paired with 'terrors': 'I have brought upon them… agitation and terrors.' In Hosea 11:9, God declares 'I will not come in wrath' (or, emending the text, 'I will not enter the city to consume'). The BDB notes that several scholars propose emending the Hosea text to לָבָעַר (?) ('to consume'), removing the word entirely. The multilingual glosses diverge: some treat it as 'city,' others as 'wrath' or 'fury,' reflecting the textual ambiguity.

(2×) Denotes inner turmoil or rage, though the text is uncertain. Jeremiah 15:8 pairs it with 'terrors,' suggesting violent agitation. Hosea 11:9 may describe divine wrath or (via emendation) entry into a city. The Spanish and French glosses split between 'city' and 'fury,' illustrating the lexical and textual challenges. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: city, in-wrath | es: ciudad, con-furor | fr: dans-la-ville, ville | de: Stadt, in-der-Stadt Jer 15:8; Hos 11:9

עִיר H5892b Conj-w (1093×)

ir – a city or town; any inhabited urban settlement in the ancient Near East

The feminine noun ir denotes a city or town – any nucleated, typically walled settlement as distinct from open countryside or nomadic encampment. It first appears at Gen 4:17 where Cain builds a city, and its 1,093 occurrences span every period of biblical history: from the 'great city' Nineveh (Gen 10:12) to fortified Judean towns to the eschatological city of God. Hebrew uses it with the full range of prefixed prepositions and the directive he locale, but these inflections produce no semantic shift. Cross-lingual glosses are remarkably stable: Spanish la ciudad, French la ville, German die Stadt – all pointing to a single core concept of urban habitation.

city, town (1093×) An inhabited urban settlement, whether a major fortified city or a smaller town, encompassing the full spectrum from Cain's first city (Gen 4:17) to the fortified cities of Judah to metaphorical and eschatological usage. The word appears with every combination of article, preposition, and suffix, yet cross-lingual evidence – Spanish ciudad, French ville, German Stadt – converges on a single undifferentiated concept of 'city/town' with no semantic subdivision warranted by the translation signatures. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-city | es: la-ciudad | fr: la-ville, le-ville | de: Stadt, der-Stadt, die-Stadt Gen 11:8; Gen 18:24; Gen 18:28; Gen 19:15; Gen 19:20

עִיר H5893 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ir, a personal name in the genealogy of Benjamin

Ir appears in the genealogical records of Benjamin's descendants. The name is identical to the common Hebrew word for 'city,' which creates some textual ambiguity that scholars have noted. In 1 Chronicles 7:12, it appears in the phrase 'sons of Ir,' which could theoretically be read as 'sons of the city,' though the context clearly indicates a person's name. The brevity of Chronicles' genealogies often leaves us with minimal information about individuals who nonetheless played roles in preserving tribal identities.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 7:12 within Benjamin's genealogy. The multilingual evidence shows interesting translation choices: English and Spanish preserve 'Ir' as a proper name, while French renders it as 'ville' (city) and German as 'Stadt' (city), reflecting the word's semantic overlap with the common noun. This single mention demonstrates how proper names and common words could share forms in biblical Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ir | es: Ir | fr: ville | de: Stadt 1Chr 7:12

עִיר H5894 N-mp (3×)

Watcher, wakeful one; angelic beings described in Daniel's visions

This enigmatic term appears only in Daniel's Aramaic visions, denoting angelic beings characterized by their wakefulness and vigilance. In Daniel 4, these 'watchers' descend from heaven with decrees concerning Nebuchadnezzar's judgment, representing divine messengers who remain perpetually alert. The root connects to Syriac and Jewish Aramaic terms for waking or being awake. Ancient Jewish literature, particularly 1 Enoch, developed elaborate angelology around these watchers, though their biblical appearance is limited to Daniel. The term emphasizes the angels' role as heaven's sentinels, never sleeping, constantly observing and executing God's decrees. Some scholars connect the term to Phoenician concepts of heavenly watchers.

(3×) Three occurrences in Daniel 4, all describing these angelic messengers. The multilingual evidence shows interesting variation: some translations preserve 'watcher/vigilant,' while German sometimes shows 'city' (Stadt), suggesting accidental conflation with the common word 'ir' (city). The Aramaic context and the apocalyptic genre of Daniel support the angelic interpretation. The watchers in Daniel announce and execute divine judgment, functioning as heaven's agents in earthly affairs. Their perpetual wakefulness contrasts with human sleep, emphasizing divine omniscience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: watcher, watchers | es: los-vigilantes, un-vigilante | fr: veilleur, ville | de: Stadt, [עירין] Dan 4:13; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:23

עַיִר H5895 N-mp (10×)

A young male donkey, colt, or foal; also a homograph meaning town or city (in Judges 10:4).

Primarily a noun for a young, vigorous male donkey. It appears in patriarchal narratives (Gen 32:15, ten donkey colts among Jacob's gift), messianic prophecy (Zech 9:9, 'riding on a donkey, on a colt'), and poetic imagery (Gen 49:11, binding his foal to the vine). The plural form describes donkeys used for riding by judges' sons (Judg 10:4; 12:14) and for carrying burdens (Isa 30:24). One occurrence in Judges 10:4 is a well-known homograph: the 'thirty towns' of Jair, a wordplay on the thirty colts his sons rode.

1. young donkey, colt, foal (9×) A young male donkey, colt, or foal – vigorous and useful for riding or carrying loads. Genesis 32:15 lists ten colts among Jacob's lavish gift to Esau. The messianic prophecy of Zechariah 9:9 famously pairs 'donkey' with 'colt, foal of a she-donkey,' fulfilled in Jesus' entry into Jerusalem. In Genesis 49:11, the royal figure 'binds his foal to the vine,' an image of super-abundant blessing. Judges 10:4 and 12:14 use the plural for donkeys ridden by judges' sons, signaling status. Spanish 'pollino/asnos' and English 'colt' consistently render the animal sense. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: -, a-colt, and-colt-of | es: asnos, cuando-un-pollino-de, pollino | fr: -, [והעירים], [עירים] | de: Esel, Stadt, [והעירים] Gen 32:15; Gen 49:11; Judg 10:4; Judg 12:14

2. town, city (homograph) (1×) A homograph meaning 'town' or 'city,' a distinct lexeme sharing only the consonantal form with the donkey word. In Judges 10:4, Jair's thirty sons rode thirty colts and had thirty towns (ayarim) – a deliberate wordplay exploiting the homophony. English 'towns,' Spanish 'ciudades,' and German 'Staedte' all render this as a settlement, confirming its separation from the animal sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: towns | es: ciudades | fr: towns | de: Staedte Judg 10:4

עִירָא H5896 N-proper-ms (6×)

Ira, a proper name borne by David's priest and two of his elite warriors (the 'mighty men').

Ira (עִירָא) is a proper masculine name, possibly related to the noun עִיר ('donkey-colt') or the Sabaean name element עיר. Three men bear this name, all in David's inner circle: Ira the Jairite, who served as David's priest or chief minister (2 Sam 20:26); Ira son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, one of David's thirty mighty men (2 Sam 23:26 = 1 Chr 11:28; cf. 1 Chr 27:9); and Ira the Ithrite, another of the thirty (2 Sam 23:38 = 1 Chr 11:40). The Septuagint renders the name as Eiras, and English, Spanish, and French all transliterate it simply as 'Ira.'

(6×) A proper masculine name designating three men in David's administration and military elite. The most distinctive bearer is Ira the Jairite, called David's כֹּהֵן — a term debated as meaning either 'priest' or 'chief advisor' (2 Sam 20:26). The other two are warriors among David's famous 'thirty': Ira the Tekoite (2 Sam 23:26 = 1 Chr 11:28) and Ira the Ithrite (2 Sam 23:38 = 1 Chr 11:40). All translations — English, Spanish, French, German — render the name identically as 'Ira,' reflecting its simple phonology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ira | es: Ira | fr: Ira, [עירא] | de: Ira, [עירא] 2Sam 20:26; 2Sam 23:26; 2Sam 23:38; 1Chr 11:28; 1Chr 11:40

עִירָד H5897 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Irad (personal name: a descendant of Cain in the antediluvian genealogy)

Irad is a name in the Cainite genealogy of Genesis 4:18, appearing twice in that verse (once as the son of Enoch, once as the father of Mehujael). The Septuagint renders it Γαιδαδ. The name's etymology is uncertain, and it appears only in this brief genealogical context. All modern translations simply transliterate the Hebrew.

(2×) A personal name in the line of Cain (Genesis 4:18, appearing twice in the verse). The double occurrence reflects the genealogical formula ('X begat Y, and Y begat Z'). All target languages transliterate the name uniformly, treating it as a proper noun without etymological comment. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Irad, and-Irad | es: Irad, e-Irad | fr: Irad, et-Irad | de: Irad, und-Irad Gen 4:18

עִיר־הַמֶּלַח H5898 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ir-Hamelach (City of Salt), an unidentified settlement in the Judean wilderness

Ir-Hamelach means literally 'city of salt,' aptly named for its location in the desert region near the Dead Sea. Mentioned alongside En-Gedi in Joshua's list of Judah's wilderness towns, its exact site remains unknown to modern archaeology. The Septuagint translates the name literally as 'cities of salt,' reflecting the saline environment. The pairing with En-Gedi suggests it was in that general vicinity, perhaps one of the small settlements that exploited the salt resources of the Dead Sea region.

(1×) A town in the wilderness of Judah listed in Joshua 15:62. The multilingual evidence consistently preserves the proper name with the conjunction (English: 'and-Ir-Hamelach', Spanish: 'y-Ir-Hamelaj', French and German: 'et/und-Ir-Hamelach'). The descriptive nature of the name—'salt city'—provides environmental context for understanding this Judean wilderness settlement, though its precise location has not been recovered archaeologically. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ir-Hamelach | es: y-Ir-Hamelaj | fr: et-Ir-Hamelach | de: und-Ir-Hamelach Josh 15:62

עִיר הַתְּמָרִים H5899

City of Palms (epithet for Jericho; associated with date palms)

This descriptive phrase serves as an alternate name for Jericho, highlighting the city's lush vegetation and date palm groves in an otherwise arid region. Deuteronomy 34:3 uses the epithet in describing the view from Mount Nebo: 'the plain of the Valley of Jericho, the city of palms.' Judges 1:16 and 3:13 also use the term. Jericho's abundant water supply (from nearby springs) made it an oasis, and the date palms became iconic. The name evokes fertility, blessing, and the contrast between Israel's desert wanderings and the fruitful land they were entering.

עִירוּ H5900 N-proper-ms (1×)

Iru, a descendant of Caleb in the genealogy of Judah

Iru appears in the genealogical records of Judah's tribe as part of Caleb's family line. The Septuagint renders the name as 'Era' or 'Ira,' showing the slight variations common in ancient name transmission. First Chronicles preserves many family records that help trace the development of Judah's clans, and Iru represents one individual in these complex genealogical networks. These brief mentions remind us that Israel's tribal structure consisted of real families with histories extending across generations.

(1×) A personal name in Judah's genealogy found in 1 Chronicles 4:15. The translations consistently preserve this as a proper name (English: 'Iru', Spanish: 'Iru'), though some versions leave it untransliterated. The single attestation provides minimal information, but places Iru within Caleb's lineage, connecting him to one of the most famous faithful spies and to Judah's inheritance of Hebron. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Iru | es: Iru | fr: [עירו] | de: [עירו] 1Chr 4:15

עִירִי H5901 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Iri, a Benjaminite listed among the descendants of Bela

Iri appears in Benjamin's genealogical records, specifically among the sons of Bela, Benjamin's firstborn. The Septuagint renders this as 'Ourei' or 'Ouri,' showing typical variations in the transmission of proper names. Benjamin's genealogies in Chronicles are particularly detailed, perhaps because of the tribe's small size and its strategic position between Judah and the northern tribes. Each name preserved in these lists represented a family head whose descendants helped maintain tribal identity through changing historical circumstances.

(1×) A Benjaminite personal name found in 1 Chronicles 7:7. The multilingual evidence shows it with the conjunction (English: 'and-Iri', Spanish: 'y-Iri'), indicating its position within a list of Bela's sons. This single mention places Iri within Benjamin's genealogical structure, contributing to our understanding of how the smallest tribe organized its clan relationships. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Iri | es: y-Iri | fr: [ועירי] | de: [ועירי] 1Chr 7:7

עִירָם H5902 N-proper-ms (2×)

Iram (personal name: an Edomite chief listed in the genealogies of Esau)

Iram is named as an Edomite chief (or 'duke') in Genesis 36:43 and 1 Chronicles 1:54. The Septuagint renders it variously (Ζαφωειν, Ηραμ), reflecting textual uncertainty. The name appears at the end of the roster of Edomite chiefs, and nothing further is known about him. All modern translations transliterate the name.

(2×) An Edomite chief in the genealogies of Esau (Genesis 36:43, 1 Chronicles 1:54). The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name, following standard practice for personal names in genealogical lists. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Iram | es: Iram | fr: Iram, [עירם] | de: Iram, [עירם] Gen 36:43; 1Chr 1:54

עִירֹם H5903 Conj-w (10×)

Naked, unclothed (adjective); or nakedness as an abstract condition of exposure and vulnerability.

An adjective and substantive noun from the root ayin-vav-resh meaning 'naked' or 'nakedness.' Its most memorable appearances are in Genesis 3:7-11, where Adam and Eve realize they are naked after eating the forbidden fruit – a primal scene of exposure and shame. Ezekiel repurposes the word powerfully for personified Jerusalem, found naked and bare as an infant (16:7), then stripped naked again in judgment (16:22, 39; 23:29). One occurrence shifts to abstract usage: Deuteronomy 28:48 warns of serving enemies 'in nakedness,' a condition of utter deprivation.

1. naked, unclothed (adjective) (9×) The adjective meaning naked or unclothed, describing a state of being without garments. In Genesis 3:7, Adam and Eve's eyes are opened and they know they are 'naked' (eirummim, plural); 3:10-11 repeat the singular form in the dialogue of shame and exposure. Ezekiel uses it of personified Jerusalem as both an infant (16:7, 'naked and bare') and a woman stripped in judgment (16:22, 39; 23:29). Also used substantively for a naked person – the righteous covers 'the naked' with a garment (Ezek 18:7, 16). Spanish 'desnudo/desnuda' and French 'nu' consistently render the physical state. NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE

en: and-naked, naked | es: desnuda, desnudo, desnudos | fr: et-nu, nu | de: [ועירם], [ועֵרום], [עירם] Gen 3:7; Gen 3:10; Gen 3:11; Ezek 16:7; Ezek 16:22

2. nakedness (abstract/substantive use) (1×) Nakedness as an abstract or substantive noun, denoting the condition of being exposed and deprived. In Deuteronomy 28:48, the covenant curse warns Israel will serve its enemies 'in hunger, in thirst, in nakedness, and in want of all things' – here nakedness is a state of deprivation rather than a simple description of a person. The preposition be- ('in') governs an abstract condition. Multilingual glosses reflect this: eng 'and-in-nakedness,' spa 'y-en-desnudez,' German 'und-in-Bloesse,' all treating it as a condition rather than a personal attribute. NAKEDNESS EXPOSURE

en: and-in-nakedness | es: y-en-desnudez | fr: et-dans-nudité | de: und-in-Bloesse Deut 28:48

נָחָשׁ H5904 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ir-Nachash (City of Nachash), possibly named after a person or meaning 'city of bronze/serpent'

Ir-Nachash appears in Judah's genealogical records with an intriguing name that could mean either 'city of the serpent,' 'city of bronze,' or be named after a person called Nachash. Nachash was the name of the Ammonite king who threatened Jabesh-Gilead in Saul's time, and possibly Zeruiah and Abigail's father. The Septuagint renders it as 'city of Naas,' treating Nachash as a personal name. This demonstrates how Hebrew place names often embedded historical memory of founders or significant events.

(1×) A place name in 1 Chronicles 4:12 within Judah's genealogy. The translations preserve it as a proper name (English: 'Ir-Nachash', Spanish: 'Ir-Najas'), maintaining the compound form that associates the settlement with Nachash, whether that refers to a person, to bronze-working, or to another distinguishing feature. The single mention leaves the precise historical context uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ir-Nachash | es: Ir-Najas | fr: [עיר נחש] | de: [עיר נחש] 1Chr 4:12

עִיר שֶׁמֶשׁ H5905 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ir-Shemesh (City of the Sun), a town in Dan's territory, identical with Beth-Shemesh

Ir-Shemesh means 'city of the sun,' revealing the town's association with solar references that appear in several Canaanite place names. The text identifies it with Beth-Shemesh ('house of the sun'), one of the more prominent cities in the region. Such names likely reflect pre-Israelite Canaanite religious connections to sun worship, though the sites were thoroughly integrated into Israel's tribal system. The Septuagint translation 'city of Sames' preserves both the urban element and the solar connection.

(1×) A town assigned to Dan in Joshua 19:41, identical with Beth-Shemesh. The multilingual evidence maintains the proper name with conjunction (English: 'and-Ir-Shemesh', Spanish: 'e-Ir-semes', French and German: 'et/und-Ir-Shemesh'). The solar element in the name reflects the Canaanite religious background of the region before Israel's settlement, while the alternative name Beth-Shemesh became more commonly used in later biblical narratives. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE

en: and-Ir-Shemesh | es: e-Ir-semes | fr: et-Ir-Shemesh | de: und-Ir-Shemesh Josh 19:41

עַיִשׁ H5906 N-fs (2×)

Ayish, the Bear (constellation name: possibly Ursa Major or a related star group)

This noun designates a constellation, probably the Great Bear (Ursa Major). It appears in Job 9:9 and 38:32, both times in poetic lists of celestial wonders. In Job 38:32, it is paired with 'her children' or 'her train' (עַל־בָּנֶיהָ), possibly referring to the stars of the Little Bear or the Big Dipper's handle. The BDB notes that the vocalization may be עִיִּשׁ, and compares Syriac cognates. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name or render it 'Bear' ('Osa,' 'Ourse'), reflecting ancient astronomical tradition.

(2×) A constellation name, likely the Great Bear (Ursa Major), mentioned alongside Pleiades and Orion in Job's cosmic catalogues. Job 9:9 and 38:32 both situate it among the heavenly wonders God commands. The phrase 'Ayish and her children' (Job 38:32) may denote the constellation and its associated stars. Multilingual glosses either transliterate ('Ayish') or translate ('Osa,' 'Ourse'). SUN CELESTIAL BODY

en: Bear, and-Ayish | es: la-Osa,, y-Osa | fr: et-עש ,ועיש | de: [ועיש], [עש] Job 9:9; Job 38:32

עַכְבּוֹר H5907 N-proper-ms (7×)

Achbor, a personal name meaning 'mouse,' borne by an Edomite clan-father and a Judean court official under Josiah

The name Achbor (meaning 'mouse') belongs to at least two distinct biblical figures. The first is the father of the Edomite king Baal-Hanan (Gen 36:38-39). The second is the father of Elnathan, a courtier in King Josiah's reign who helped retrieve the newly found scroll of the Law (2 Kgs 22:12, 14). The name's zoological meaning is well attested in Northwest Semitic onomastics, paralleling similar animal names in Latin tradition.

Achbor (proper noun) (7×) The proper masculine name Achbor/Akhbor, etymologically linked to the Hebrew word for 'mouse' (עַכְבָּר). It identifies two figures: an Edomite patriarch whose son Baal-Hanan became king (Gen 36:38-39; 1 Chr 1:49), and a Judean courtier under Josiah involved in the consultation of Huldah the prophetess (2 Kgs 22:12, 14). Spanish renders it 'Acbor/Ajbor,' while French and German often retain the Hebrew script, reflecting transliteration variation across traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achbor, Akhbor, and-Akhbor | es: Acbor, Ajbor, Akbor | fr: Achbor,

Akhbor, [עכבור] | de: Achbors, Akhbor, [עכבור] Gen 36:38; Gen 36:39; 2Kgs 22:12; 2Kgs 22:14; 1Chr 1:49

עַכָּבִישׁ H5908 N-ms (2×)

spider (noun: arachnid, used metaphorically for fragility or futility)

This noun denotes a spider, appearing in contexts that highlight the fragility and futility of the spider's web. In Job 8:14, the trust of the godless is 'a spider's house'—easily swept away. In Isaiah 59:5, the wicked 'weave spider's webs,' producing nothing of value. The BDB notes that the Hebrew word (borrowed into Arabic as a loanword) is related to the Aramaic and later Hebrew terms for spider or tarantula. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'spider' ('araña,' 'araignée'), preserving the metaphorical force.

(2×) Denotes the spider, whose web serves as a metaphor for false security or worthless labor. Job 8:14 compares misplaced trust to a spider's house (fragile, impermanent); Isaiah 59:5 uses 'spider's webs' to depict the futile schemes of the wicked. All target languages render 'spider,' maintaining the proverbial imagery. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: a-spider, spider | es: araña | fr: [עכביש], עכביש | de: [עכביש] Job 8:14; Isa 59:5

עַכְבָּר H5909 Conj-w / N-mpc (6×)

Mouse or rat; a rodent classified as ritually unclean, and crafted in gold as a plague offering by the Philistines.

The noun עַכְבָּר (akhbar) designates a mouse or rat — the common rodent — with cognates in Aramaic (עַכְבְּרָא) and Arabic (عكبر). It appears in two vivid contexts: the Holiness Code's list of unclean swarming creatures (Lev 11:29), and the Philistine plague narrative where golden mice were fashioned as guilt offerings alongside golden tumors (1 Sam 6:4-18). Isaiah 66:17 mentions eating mice as part of pagan abomination rituals. Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'ratones,' French 'souris,' English 'mice' — uniformly confirms a single zoological referent throughout.

Mouse / rat (rodent) (6×) A mouse or rat, the common rodent. Declared ritually unclean in the Holiness Code (Lev 11:29) alongside lizards and other swarming creatures. The most extended usage occurs in the Philistine plague narrative, where golden mice (עַכְבְּרֵי הַזָּהָב) were crafted as votive offerings to avert a plague that ravaged their land (1 Sam 6:4-5, 11, 18). Isaiah 66:17 condemns those who eat mouse flesh in syncretic rituals. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'ratones,' English 'mice,' French 'souris' — all confirm a single biological referent across every occurrence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-mice-of, and-the-mouse, mice-of | es: Y-ratones-de, ratones-de, vuestros-ratones | fr: [והעכבר], et-le-mouse, et-mice-de | de: [והעכבר], dein-mice, mice-von Lev 11:29; 1Sam 6:4; 1Sam 6:5; 1Sam 6:11; 1Sam 6:18

עַכּוֹ H5910 N-proper-fs (1×)

Akko, a Phoenician seaport city in Asher's territory (later known as Ptolemais, modern Acre)

Akko was an important Mediterranean seaport that Asher failed to conquer, allowing it to remain a Canaanite/Phoenician stronghold. Located north of Mount Carmel, it became one of the most significant coastal cities in the region, later known by its Greek name Ptolemais and its Crusader name Acre. The city appears in Egyptian records as 'A-ka and Assyrian texts as 'Akku,' demonstrating its ancient importance. Asher's inability to take this strategic port illustrates the incomplete nature of the conquest and Israel's accommodation to Canaanite presence.

(1×) The Phoenician seaport mentioned in Judges 1:31 as one of the cities Asher did not drive out. All major translations consistently render this as 'Akko' or 'Ako,' recognizing it as the historical city that continued as a major port through Greek and Roman periods. Its mention in Judges 1 highlights the ongoing Canaanite presence in Israel's coastal regions, with significant implications for cultural and religious interaction throughout Israel's history. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Akko | es: Ako | fr: Akko | de: Akko Judg 1:31

עָכוֹר H5911 N-proper-fs (5×)

Achor — 'trouble,' a valley west of Jericho named for the disturbance caused by Achan's sin

Achor ('trouble' or 'disturbance') names a valley west or southwest of Jericho where Achan was executed for taking devoted things after the fall of Jericho (Josh 7:24, 26). The name is etiological, explaining the place through the verb 'akar ('to trouble'). Beyond its role as a boundary marker for Judah (Josh 15:7), the Valley of Achor becomes a prophetic symbol: Hosea 2:15 promises it will become 'a door of hope,' and Isaiah 65:10 envisions it as a resting place for flocks in the renewed creation.

(5×) A place name meaning 'trouble' or 'disturbance,' identifying a valley near Jericho tied to Achan's transgression and its aftermath (Josh 7:24, 26). The etiological naming connects to the verb 'akar, 'to bring trouble.' Prophetically, both Hosea 2:15 and Isaiah 65:10 transform this site of judgment into a symbol of future restoration and hope. Translations consistently transliterate: English 'Achor,' Spanish 'Acor,' French 'Achor/Akor.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achor, Akhor | es: Acor | fr: Achor, Akor, [עכור] | de: Achor, [עכור] Josh 7:24; Josh 7:26; Josh 15:7; Isa 65:10; Hos 2:15

עָכָן H5912 N-proper-ms (6×)

Achan, the man of Judah who took devoted plunder from Jericho, bringing disaster on Israel at Ai (Josh 7).

Achan (עָכָן) is the man from the tribe of Judah who violated the ban (חֵרֶם) on Jericho's spoils by secretly taking a Babylonian garment, silver, and a gold bar (Josh 7:1, 18-24). His theft caused Israel's devastating defeat at Ai, and after being identified by sacred lot, he and his household were stoned and burned in the Valley of Achor. The variant spelling עָכָר in 1 Chronicles 2:7 connects his name etymologically to עָכוֹר ('trouble'), as Joshua declared: 'Why have you brought trouble (עֲכַרְתָּנוּ) on us?' The Septuagint consistently renders his name as Achar.

(6×) A proper masculine name designating the Judahite who violated the ban on Jericho's devoted things, bringing military catastrophe upon Israel. The narrative in Joshua 7 details his confession and execution in the Valley of Achor (Josh 7:1, 18-20, 24). The name's alternate form עָכָר (1 Chr 2:7) explicitly links him to the root עכר ('to trouble'), reinforcing the etiological wordplay in Josh 7:25-26. English 'Achan,' Spanish 'Acán,' and French 'Acan' all preserve the traditional transliteration. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achan | es: Acán | fr: Acan | de: Achan Josh 7:1; Josh 7:18; Josh 7:19; Josh 7:20; Josh 7:24

עָכַס H5913 V-Piel-Imperf-3fp (1×)

to tinkle, jingle, rattle (bangles or anklets); used of women's ostentatious adornment

This verb describes the deliberate rattling or tinkling sound made by ankle ornaments worn by wealthy women. Isaiah uses it in his scathing critique of Jerusalem's elite women who parade through the streets with affected mannerisms. The sound of jewelry deliberately clashing with each step symbolized vanity, luxury, and moral complacency. The denominative Piel form suggests intentional action—the women were making these sounds happen, drawing attention to themselves through both visual and auditory display of wealth.

(1×) The act of making ankle ornaments jingle or tinkle, found in Isaiah 3:16 as part of the prophet's denunciation of Judah's proud women. The Spanish 'hacen tintinear' (make tinkle) and Arabic خَشَخَشَ (make music/ring) capture the onomatopoetic quality of this deliberate sound-making. Isaiah's critique goes beyond mere fashion to indict the spiritual complacency of a society that has replaced faithfulness to God with ostentatious displays of wealth and status. BRACELET ARMLET

es: hacen-tintinear | fr: [תעכסנה] | de: [תעכסנה] Isa 3:16

עֶכֶס H5914 Art / N-mp (2×)

anklets, bangles (noun: ornamental jewelry worn on ankles or wrists; also used metaphorically)

This noun denotes ornamental anklets or bangles, part of the finery worn by wealthy women. In Isaiah 3:18, 'the anklets' are listed among the luxury items the Lord will strip from the daughters of Zion. In Proverbs 7:22, the word is textually uncertain—many scholars emend it to 'like a stag' or 'like a fool,' abandoning the 'anklet' sense. The multilingual glosses diverge sharply: English opts for 'like a fool,' Spanish for 'like a shackle,' reflecting the textual debate. The Isaiah occurrence is secure, depicting women's jewelry.

(2×) Primarily denotes anklets or bangles as female adornment (Isaiah 3:18, in a list of luxury items). The Proverbs 7:22 occurrence is textually corrupt; most versions emend to 'like a fool' or 'like a stag,' abandoning the 'anklet' reading. The multilingual glosses ('headbands,' 'ajorcas,' 'bangles') preserve the ornamental sense in Isaiah, while the Proverbs glosses reflect emendation. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-like-a-fool, and-the-headbands | es: las-ajorcas, y-como-grillete | fr: [הָעֲכָסִים], et-וכעכס | de: [הָעֲכָסִים], [וכעכס] Prov 7:22; Isa 3:18

עַכְסָה H5915 N-proper-fs (5×)

Achsah — daughter of Caleb who requested and received springs of water as a wedding gift

Achsah was the daughter of Caleb who was given in marriage to Othniel son of Kenaz as a reward for capturing Kiriath-sepher (Josh 15:16-17; Judg 1:12-13). She is memorable for boldly requesting from her father not only the Negeb land he had given her but also upper and lower springs of water — a request he granted. Her story appears in nearly identical form in Joshua and Judges, and the Chronicler preserves her name in Caleb's genealogy (1 Chr 2:49). The Septuagint varies between Ascha, Achsa, and Oxa.

(5×) A feminine personal name designating the daughter of Caleb, given in marriage to Othniel for his military valor. Her narrative significance lies in her initiative in requesting water springs, securing vital resources for her household in the arid Negeb (Josh 15:16-17; Judg 1:12-13; 1 Chr 2:49). Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the name: English 'Achsah/Akhsah,' Spanish 'Acsa/Aksah,' while French and German use brackets for the untranslated Hebrew form. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achsah, Akhsah | es: Acsa, Aksah | fr: Achsah, [עַכְסָה] | de: Achsah, [עַכְסָה] Josh 15:16; Josh 15:17; Judg 1:12; Judg 1:13; 1Chr 2:49

עָכַר H5916 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (14×)

To trouble, stir up, bring calamity upon; in the Niphal, to be troubled or agitated.

A verb of disruption and disturbance, famously associated with Achan whose sin 'troubled' all Israel (Josh 7:25). The Qal active sense describes bringing calamity or causing turmoil — Elijah turns the accusation back on Ahab in 1 Kings 18:17–18, asking who truly 'troubles Israel.' Proverbs uses the word for the self-inflicted trouble of the greedy (11:17, 29; 15:27). The Niphal passive appears in Psalm 39:2, where the psalmist's pain 'was stirred up,' and in Proverbs 15:6, describing a household in turmoil. Arabic cognate 'akira (to be turbid) preserves the physical image of waters being muddied — a vivid metaphor for social and personal disruption.

1. to trouble, bring calamity upon (12×) Qal active: to trouble, disturb, or bring calamity upon someone. Genesis 34:30 has Jacob lamenting that Simeon and Levi have 'troubled' him by provoking the Canaanites. Joshua 7:25 delivers the definitive use — 'Why have you troubled us? The LORD will trouble you today' — a wordplay on Achan's name and the Valley of Achor. Spanish 'turbar' and French 'troubler' capture the social disruption. Proverbs 11:17 contrasts the one who troubles his own household with the person who shows kindness. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: I-troubled, among-my-troublers, and-you-trouble | es: El-que-turba, Ha-turbado, el-que-atormenta | fr: [עוֹכֵר], avoir-tu-troubla-nous, et-troubler | de: [וְעֹכֵר], [עוֹכֵר], [עָכַר] Gen 34:30; Josh 6:18; Josh 7:25; Judg 11:35

2. to be troubled, stirred up (2×) Niphal stative/passive: to be troubled, stirred up, or in a state of agitation. Psalm 39:2 uses the Niphal perfect — 'my pain was stirred up' — to describe inner turmoil when the psalmist tried to remain silent. Proverbs 15:6 speaks of a household that 'is troubled' by ill-gotten gain. German 'aufgerührt' (stirred up) and Spanish 'se agitó' reflect the passive experience of disturbance. The shift from active troubling to being in a state of trouble mirrors the Qal-to-Niphal pattern common in Hebrew. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: brings-trouble, was-stirred | es: se-agitó, turbación | fr: Acan, troubler | de: Krieg-aufgerührt, [נֶעְכֶּרֶת] Ps 39:2; Prov 15:6

עָכָן H5917 N-proper-ms (1×)

Akhar (Achan), the Judahite who took devoted things at Jericho, bringing trouble on Israel

Akhar is the alternate spelling of Achan, whose theft of devoted items after Jericho's fall brought devastating defeat at Ai. First Chronicles uses this form, which means 'troubler,' playing on the Hebrew word 'akar' (to trouble). Joshua 7:26 explicitly makes this connection: 'Therefore that place has been called the Valley of Achor to this day.' The story illustrates corporate responsibility in covenant community—one person's sin affected all Israel. Achan's confession and subsequent execution in the Valley of Achor became a lasting reminder of the seriousness of violating God's commands.

(1×) The name used in 1 Chronicles 2:7 for the man who violated the ban at Jericho, called Achan in Joshua 7. The multilingual evidence shows variations (English: 'Akhar', Spanish: 'Acar'), with both forms etymologically connected to 'trouble' or 'disaster.' Chronicles explicitly identifies him as 'the troubler of Israel who broke faith in the matter of the devoted thing,' ensuring later generations remembered the lesson of covenant faithfulness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Akhar | es: Acar | fr: [עָכָר] | de: [עָכָר] 1Chr 2:7

עָכְרָן H5918 N-proper-ms (5×)

Ochran — an Asherite man, father of Pagiel, named in the wilderness census and tribal offerings

Ochran is the father of Pagiel, who served as the leader of the tribe of Asher during the wilderness period. Like several other tribal fathers in Numbers, Ochran appears exclusively in the formulaic lists of the census (Num 1:13; 2:27), the tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:72, 77), and the order of march (Num 10:26). The Septuagint renders the name as Echran, suggesting a guttural opening in pronunciation.

(5×) A masculine personal name identifying the father of Pagiel, the tribal leader of Asher in the wilderness generation. All five occurrences appear in Numbers within standardized tribal enumeration formulas — census, encampment order, and dedication offerings. Multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration: English 'Ochran/Ocran,' Spanish 'Ocran,' French 'Ochran/Ocran,' German 'Ochran/Ocran,' with no semantic translation attempted. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ochran, Ocran | es: Ocrán, Ocrán: | fr: Ochran, Ocran | de: Ochran, Ocran Num 1:13; Num 2:27; Num 7:72; Num 7:77; Num 10:26

עַכְשׁוּב H5919 N-ms (1×)

a venomous snake, possibly a viper or asp; alternately, a spider (textually uncertain)

This rare word appears only in Psalm 140:3, describing the venom of dangerous creatures used metaphorically for enemies' speech. The ancient versions generally understood it as a type of poisonous snake, specifically a viper or asp. However, some scholars suggest it might be a textual corruption of 'akkabish' (spider), given the similar context in Job where spider's venom is mentioned. The Targum supports the spider interpretation, while Greek and Latin versions preferred the serpent identification. Either way, the psalm employs the image of deadly poison to characterize slanderous, destructive speech.

(1×) A venomous creature in Psalm 140:3, most likely a viper or asp based on ancient translations. The evidence across languages (English: 'a viper', Spanish: 'víbora', French: 'aspic', German: 'ein-viper') consistently treats this as a dangerous snake. The poetic context emphasizes the deadly venom 'under their lips,' making this a powerful metaphor for enemies whose words destroy like poison—a theme common in wisdom and lament literature. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES

en: a-viper | es: víbora | fr: aspic | de: ein-viper Ps 140:3

עַל H5920 Prep-m / N-ms (4×)

height, upward; used poetically for physical elevation and metaphorically for moral/spiritual ascent toward God

A poetic term expressing both literal height and spiritual elevation. In 2 Samuel 23:1, David is described as 'raised up on high,' combining political exaltation with divine favor. The prophets use it metaphorically: Hosea laments that Israel 'returns but not upward'—not God-ward—despite prophetic calls to rise spiritually. The spatial imagery of 'above' and 'upward' naturally extends to theological concepts of seeking the Most High. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'Altísimo,' French 'sur-haut') preserve both the spatial and theological dimensions.

(4×) Height as spatial elevation with theological overtones. The four occurrences span from David's royal exaltation (2 Sam 23:1) to prophetic indictments of Israel's failure to turn God-ward (Hosea 7:16, 11:7). Ps 50:4 uses it for God calling from 'the heavens above.' The consistent pattern across languages shows 'upward/on high' with implicit reference to divine presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: above, on-high, upward | es: Altísimo, al-Altísimo, alto | fr: de-sur, sur, sur-haut | de: auf-hoch, oberhalb, ueber 2Sam 23:1; Ps 50:4; Hos 7:16; Hos 11:7

H5921 Prep / 3fs (9×)

Aramaic preposition 'al: upon, over, to (spatial); about, concerning (topical); against (adversative).

The Aramaic preposition 'al in Daniel and Jeremiah carries the same tripartite range as its Hebrew cognate. Its primary sense is spatial – 'upon' or 'over' someone, as when sovereignty is set 'over' the kingdom of men (Dan 4:17, 32). Spanish 'sobre' (upon/over) and German 'ueber' consistently render this spatial core. In Dan 5:14, 16 it shifts to topical meaning – 'about you' or 'concerning you' – as reports of Daniel's wisdom reach the king. The rarest use is adversative: in Jeremiah 49:30, Nebuchadnezzar devises a plan 'against you,' where Spanish 'contra ustedes' makes the hostile intent unmistakable.

1. upon, over, to (spatial/directional) (6×) Spatial and directional: 'upon, over, to' – indicating position above or movement toward a person or place. This is the default sense across Daniel's Aramaic passages, where dominion is set 'over' kingdoms (Dan 4:17, 32) and fire has no power 'over' the bodies of the faithful (Dan 3:12). Spanish 'sobre' and French 'sur' consistently track this spatial meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:over-it), (qere:over-you), (qere:to-you) | es: (sobre-ti), (sobre-él) | fr: il-est-monté, sur | de: ging-hinauf, ueber Dan 3:12; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:27; Dan 4:32; Dan 5:21

2. about, concerning (2×) Topical: 'about, concerning' – the preposition marks the subject matter of speech or report rather than physical location. When the queen tells Belshazzar what she has heard 'about' Daniel (Dan 5:14, 16), 'al shifts from spatial to discursive. Spanish 'de ti' (about you) and English 'about you' distinguish this from the spatial 'over you.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:about-you) | es: (de-ti) | fr: sur | de: ueber Dan 5:14; Dan 5:16

3. against (adversative) (1×) Adversative: 'against' – expressing opposition or hostile intent. In Jeremiah 49:30, Nebuchadnezzar has devised a plan 'against you' (the inhabitants of Hazor). Spanish 'contra ustedes' makes the hostility explicit, distinguishing this from the neutral spatial or topical senses. This adversative usage appears in contexts of military threat or divine judgment. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: (against-you) | es: contra-ustedes | fr: [(עליכם)] | de: [(עליכם)] Jer 49:30

עַל H5921a Prep (5773×)

upon, on, over; against; beside, by, at; because of, therefore; concerning, about; for, on behalf of; to, unto; according to, in addition to

The most frequent Hebrew preposition with 5,769 occurrences, expressing a remarkable range of spatial, relational, and logical connections. The core is physical surface contact: 'upon the ground,' 'on the altar,' 'over the waters.' From this spatial base extends adversative force ('rise up against'), proximity ('stood by/beside the well'), causality ('because of this,' 'therefore'), topic ('concerning this matter'), benefit ('atone for/on behalf of'), direction ('came to/unto them'), and norm ('according to their families'). Multilingual translations reveal which sense is operative in each context, as different languages select distinct prepositions for each semantic domain while Hebrew uses this single highly polysemous form.

1. upon, on (physical surface contact) (3442×) Core spatial sense of surface contact or vertical superiority: literally 'on top of' or 'upon.' Arabic consistently renders עַל as عَلَى, Korean 위에 (on top/above), Swahili juu ya (on top of), showing pan-linguistic recognition of the prototypical spatial meaning. This sense accounts for 5,443 of 5,769 occurrences and includes all pronominal suffixed forms (upon him, upon her, upon me, upon us, etc.). Examples: 'Abraham fell on his face' (Genesis 17:17), 'laid wood on the altar' (22:9), 'sat on the throne' (1 Kings 1:46).

en: and-covering, escape, from-below | es: desde-abajo, escápate, sobre | fr: de-au-dessous, et-couverture, sur | de: auf, auf-, rette-dich Gen 17:17; Gen 19:17; Gen 22:9; Gen 30:3; Gen 40:16

2. over, above (vertical superiority, dominion) (2001×) Adversative or hostile sense: 'against' as opposition or enmity. Though Hebrew continues using עַל, target languages shift decisively: Arabic عَلَى in hostile contexts, Korean 대항하여/대적하여 (opposing/resisting), Swahili dhidi ya (against), English 'against,' Spanish contra, French contre, German gegen. Genesis 50:20 'you meant evil against me,' Deuteronomy 7:22 'lest wild beasts multiply against you,' showing 120 occurrences where the relational context is conflictual rather than neutral spatial contact.

en: against-, and-Esther, be-upon | es: por, sobre, sobre- | fr: et-Esther, sur | de: auf-, ueber, und-Esther Num 25:18; Deut 31:15; Deut 32:11; Judg 3:12; Judg 4:24

3. against (adversative) (120×) Adversative or hostile sense: 'against' as opposition or enmity. Though Hebrew continues using עַל, target languages shift decisively: Arabic عَلَى in hostile contexts, Korean 대항하여/대적하여 (opposing/resisting), Swahili dhidi ya (against), English 'against,' Spanish contra, French contre, German gegen. Genesis 50:20 'you meant evil against me,' Deuteronomy 7:22 'lest wild beasts multiply against you,' showing 120 occurrences where the relational context is conflictual rather than neutral spatial contact. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-you | es: contra-ti | fr: contre-toi, contre-tu, sur | de: gegen-du, gegen-über, ueber Gen 50:20; Deut 7:22; Deut 15:9; Deut 23:4; Deut 24:15

4. beside, by, at (proximity) (55×) Proximity or locative adjacency: 'beside, by, at' indicating nearness without surface contact. Here Arabic replaces عَلَى with عِنْدَ (at/beside), Korean uses 에서 (at location) and 옆에 (beside), Swahili employs karibu na (near/beside), kando ya (alongside), kwenye (at). English renders 'at/by/beside.' Genesis 24:13 'I am standing by the spring,' Exodus 2:15 'Moses sat by the well' — 55 occurrences where spatial relation is horizontal proximity rather than vertical superiority or contact. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-, at, at- | es: Y-a-, a, en | fr: et-sur, sur, à | de: bei, bei-über, ueber Gen 24:13; Gen 24:30; Gen 24:43; Exod 2:15

5. because of, therefore (causal) (51×) Causal and inferential sense: 'because of, on account of, therefore' marking reason or ground. Target languages use dedicated causal particles: Arabic لِأَنَّ (because of), لِـ (on account of), فَـ (therefore); Korean 그러므로 (therefore), 때문에 (because of); Swahili kwa sababu ya (because of), kwa hiyo/kwa ajili ya (therefore/for the sake of). Genesis 19:22 'I cannot do anything until you arrive there' (therefore), 20:6 'therefore I kept you from sinning' — 51 occurrences with clear causal force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-, for, for- | es: Por-, por, por- | fr: et-sur, sur | de: ueber, und-ueber Gen 19:22; Gen 20:6; Num 18:24; Num 21:14; Num 21:27

6. concerning, about (topical) (39×) Topical or referential: 'concerning, about, regarding' introducing the subject matter of speech, thought, or action. Arabic uses عَنْ (about) alongside عَلَى, Korean 에 대하여 (regarding/concerning), Swahili kuhusu (about/concerning), Hindi विषय में / बारे में (regarding/about). Genesis 21:12 'whatever Sarah says to you concerning the boy,' 21:25 'Abraham reproved Abimelech concerning the well' — 39 occurrences where עַל marks discourse topic rather than physical or causal relation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: concerning, concerning-, concerning-you | es: Sobre, a-ti, por | fr: concernant, concernant-, pour-tu | de: betreffend, concerning-, fuer-du Gen 21:12; Gen 21:25; Gen 41:15; Exod 22:9

7. for, on behalf of (benefactive) (22×) Benefactive or purpose: 'for, on behalf of, for the sake of' marking the one who benefits from an action. Arabic لِـ / لِأَجْلِ (for your sake/on behalf of), Korean 를 위하여 (for/on behalf of), Swahili kwa ajili ya (for the sake of), Hindi के लिए (for). Leviticus 8:34 'as has been done today, the LORD has commanded to be done, to make atonement for you,' 16:30 'the priest shall make atonement for you' — 22 occurrences with clear benefactive force in ritual and interpersonal contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-you, at-you, for-You | es: Sobre-ti, por-ti, por-vosotros | fr: pour-toi, pour-tu, sur | de: auf, fuer-du, ueber Lev 8:34; Lev 16:30; Lev 23:28; Num 28:22; Num 28:30

8. to, unto (directional) (19×) Directional or allative: 'to, unto, toward' indicating motion or orientation toward a goal. Though spatial, this is distinct from 'upon' — Hebrew עַל competes with אֶל here. Target languages use directional particles: Arabic إِلَى (to/toward) replaces عَلَى, Korean 에게 (to someone), Swahili hadi (up to/unto), kwake (to him/her). Exodus 3:18 'let us go... to the LORD our God,' Numbers 18:2 'bring your brothers... to you' — 19 occurrences where motion/orientation rather than contact is primary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to-, and-unto-, to | es: a-nosotros, a-ti, hacia-él | fr: et-sur, ses-feuilles, sur | de: auf-uns, ueber-dich, ueber-ihn Exod 3:18; Exod 5:3; Num 18:2; Num 18:4; 2Sam 17:11

9. according to, in addition to (normative) (13×) Normative and additive: 'according to, in accordance with' (standard/norm sense) and 'in addition to, besides' (additive extension). Arabic وَفْقَ (according to), Korean 에 따라 (in accordance with), Swahili kulingana na (according to) for norm; pamoja na (together with/in addition to) for additive. Exodus 6:26 'according to their hosts,' 12:51 'according to their hosts,' Numbers 1:18 'according to their families,' marking a standard of reckoning. Additive: 'besides these' (in addition to what was already counted) — 13 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-, besides-, by- | es: Según-, según-, sobre | fr: en-plus-de-, par-, selon-à- | de: auf-, besides-, durch- Exod 6:26; Exod 12:51; Exod 17:1; Num 1:18; Num 26:56

10. (7×) Seven uncertain or highly context-dependent occurrences that resist clear categorization into the major senses. Numbers 21:7 'pray to the LORD that he take away the serpents from us' (מֵעָלֵינוּ, from upon us = away from us?), 1 Samuel 6:20 'who is able to stand before the LORD?' (possibly 'in the presence of' overlapping spatial and benefactive), 1 Kings 12:10 / 2 Chronicles 10:10 (idiomatic 'heavier than' in comparative construction), Jeremiah 21:2 'perhaps the LORD will deal with us according to all his wonderful deeds.' These may represent idiomatic or contextually specialized uses not fitting the main semantic categories. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-upon-us | es: de-sobre-nosotros | fr: de-sur-nous, sur | de: ueber, von-auf-uns, von-ueber-uns Num 21:7; 1Sam 6:20; 1Kgs 12:10; 2Chr 10:10; Jer 21:2

כִּי עַל כֵּן H5921b Prep (10×)

Compound preposition 'because, for this reason'; emphatic causal particle reinforcing the ground of an assertion or action.

The phrase כִּי עַל כֵּן combines three particles into a single emphatic expression meaning 'because' or 'forasmuch as.' Found in a handful of memorable narrative moments, it reinforces the reason behind an action with a kind of pleonastic force – literally 'for upon thus.' Abraham uses it when welcoming his three visitors at Mamre (Gen 18:5), and Lot echoes the construction when urging the angels to stay (Gen 19:8). Spanish translations capture the causal weight with 'por eso' and 'sobre,' while French renders it 'c'est pourquoi,' both confirming the grounding function. In one instance (Gen 33:10), Jacob's plea to Esau edges toward a consequential 'therefore,' drawing a conclusion rather than merely stating a cause.

1. Because / on account of (causal) (9×) The dominant causal usage, 'because' or 'on account of,' where the phrase emphatically grounds an action in a stated reason. In Gen 18:5 Abraham offers bread because his guests have come his way; in Num 14:43 Moses warns that the Amalekites stand ready because Israel has turned from the LORD. The pleonastic layering of כִּי + עַל + כֵּן gives the expression more rhetorical weight than a simple כִּי alone. Spanish 'por eso' and English 'because' converge across all nine occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [because], because-, since | es: [sobre], por, por- | fr: [because], c'est-pourquoi-, depuis | de: [because], darum, darum- Gen 18:5; Gen 19:8; Gen 38:26; Num 10:31; Num 14:43

2. Therefore (consequential / inferential) (1×) A rarer consequential or inferential shade, 'therefore,' where the phrase draws a conclusion from prior context rather than merely citing a cause. Jacob tells Esau in Gen 33:10 that seeing his face is like seeing God's face – therefore he urges him to accept the gift. The shift from backward-looking cause to forward-looking consequence is subtle but real, and French 'c'est pourquoi' captures the inferential nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: therefore- | es: sobre | fr: c'est-pourquoi- | de: darum- Gen 33:10

עַל H5922 Prep / 1cp (103×)

Aramaic preposition: upon, over, on; to, unto; concerning, about; against; because of; more than

An Aramaic preposition found exclusively in the bilingual sections of Ezra and Daniel, functioning as the counterpart to Hebrew 'al. Its spatial core means 'upon' or 'over,' but context stretches it across a wide range: direction ('to, unto'), topic ('concerning'), opposition ('against'), cause ('because of'), and even comparison ('more than'). Nebuchadnezzar's fury burned 'against' the three youths (Dan 3:19), while the same form in the same verse expresses degree — his face changed 'more than' was fitting. Tracing its suffixed forms across the Aramaic chapters reveals how a single preposition anchors an entire web of relational meanings.

1. upon, on, over (75×) The primary spatial-superessive sense — 'upon, on, over' — accounting for 75 of 103 occurrences. This covers physical position on a surface, authority exercised over a domain, and general superposition. Spanish sobre, French sur, and German ueber all converge on this core spatial meaning, appearing consistently throughout the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel (Ezra 4:11-20; Dan 2:28-46). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, concerning, on | es: a, en, sobre | fr: sur | de: ueber Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:20

2. to, unto (13×) A directional or dative extension meaning 'to, unto' — indicating movement toward or the indirect recipient of an action. Thirteen occurrences carry this sense, as in letters sent 'to' the king (Ezra 4:11-12; 5:7). French sur and German ueber remain unchanged, but Spanish shifts to the directional a, revealing the semantic extension from position to goal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to, to-, to-him | es: a, a-, a-mí | fr: et-sur, sur, sur-moi | de: ueber, und-ueber Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:18; Ezra 5:7; Ezra 5:17

3. concerning, about (8×) A topical or referential sense meaning 'concerning, about, regarding' — the preposition marks the subject under discussion. Daniel's companions declare they need not answer the king 'concerning' the matter (Dan 3:16); Daniel is praised for wisdom found 'in' him 'concerning' interpretation (Dan 5:14). Eight occurrences carry this discourse-framing function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv:about-you], and-concerning-, concerning- | es: Y-sobre-, [de-ti], sobre | fr: et-sur, sur, sur-toi | de: ueber, und-ueber Dan 2:18; Dan 3:16; Dan 5:14; Dan 5:16; Dan 6:12

4. against (4×) An adversative sense meaning 'against' — expressing opposition or hostility. Rehum and Shimshai write 'against' Jerusalem (Ezra 4:8); Nebuchadnezzar's expression changes 'against' Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3:19). Four occurrences, consistently rendered by Spanish contra, distinguishing this from the neutral spatial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, against- | es: contra, contra- | fr: sur | de: ueber Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:19; Dan 3:19; Dan 3:29

5. because of, on account of (2×) A causal sense meaning 'because of, on account of' — indicating reason or grounds for an action. Daniel asks Arioch 'why' (literally 'on account of what') the decree is so harsh (Dan 2:15), and the vision was given not 'because of' Daniel's own wisdom but for the king's sake (Dan 2:30). Only two clear occurrences, both in Daniel 2. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: concerning-, for- | es: para, ¿por-qué | fr: sur | de: ueber Dan 2:15; Dan 2:30

6. more than, beyond (1×) A comparative-superlative sense meaning 'more than, beyond' — a single occurrence in Daniel 3:19 where Nebuchadnezzar orders the furnace heated seven times 'more than' was customary. Spanish mas de explicitly marks the comparative, while the other languages use their standard rendering, showing how context alone disambiguates this rare extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: times | es: más-de | fr: sur | de: ueber Dan 3:19

עֹל H5923 N-ms (40×)

yoke — a wooden bar for draft animals; figuratively, the burden of servitude, oppression, or subjugation

Ol is a masculine noun for a yoke — the wooden crossbar placed on the necks of oxen — appearing 40 times with a dramatic shift from literal agricultural implement to dominant metaphor for political and spiritual bondage. Only a handful of occurrences are strictly literal: the red heifer upon which no yoke has come (Num 19:2), the unyoked cow for the unsolved murder rite (Deut 21:3), and the untrained cows carrying the ark (1 Sam 6:7). The remainder are figurative. Rehoboam's refusal to lighten his father's 'yoke' fractures the kingdom (1 Kgs 12:4-14). Jeremiah wears an actual yoke as prophetic theater, declaring that nations must submit to Babylon's 'yoke' — and Hananiah breaks it, prompting God to replace wooden bars with iron ones (Jer 27-28). The liberating counter-image runs from the Exodus ('I broke the bars of your yoke,' Lev 26:13) through the eschatological promise ('I will break his yoke from off your neck,' Jer 30:8; Nah 1:13).

yoke (burden/servitude) (40×) A wooden bar placed on the necks of draft animals, used literally in a few agricultural and ritual contexts (Num 19:2; Deut 21:3; 1 Sam 6:7) but predominantly as a figure for subjugation, servitude, and political oppression. The metaphor is politically decisive in Rehoboam's kingdom-splitting exchange (1 Kgs 12:4-14). Jeremiah's 'yoke' sign-act (Jer 27-28) dramatizes submission to Babylon, while Hananiah's breaking of the wooden yoke triggers the threat of an iron one (Jer 28:13-14). The liberating counter-image — 'breaking the yoke' — signals divine deliverance from bondage (Lev 26:13; Isa 9:4; 10:27; Jer 30:8; Ezek 34:27; Nah 1:13). Spanish 'yugo,' French 'joug,' and German 'Joch' all preserve both the concrete and metaphorical range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Yoke-of, a-yoke, in-yoke-of | es: Yugo-de, el-yugo, el-yugo-de | fr: [עלנו], dans-sur, joug | de: [עלנו], in-ueber, ueber Gen 27:40; Lev 26:13; Num 19:2; Deut 21:3; Deut 28:48

עִלָּא H5924 Conj-w / Adv (1×)

above, over (Aramaic); used of spatial position of authority or superiority

This Aramaic adverb indicates spatial position—being above or over something or someone. In Daniel 6:3, it describes the high position of authority that certain officials held over others in the Persian administrative system. The word is formed with the directional ending '-a,' a characteristic Aramaic feature. It parallels the Hebrew 'al' but appears specifically in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. The term naturally extends from physical height to hierarchical superiority, reflecting how ancient Near Eastern cultures conceptualized authority in spatial terms.

(1×) An Aramaic adverb meaning 'above' or 'over' in Daniel 6:2 (English 6:3), describing officials positioned with authority over others. The multilingual glosses show the spatial-hierarchical meaning (English: 'and-over-them', Spanish: 'y-sobre-ellos', French: 'et-dessus'), indicating the administrative structure of Darius's government where commissioners supervised satraps. This single Aramaic attestation reflects the linguistic context of the exile period. ABOVE AND UPWARD

en: and-over-them | es: y-sobre-ellos | fr: et-dessus | de: [ועלא] Dan 6:2

עֻלָּא H5925 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ulla, a descendant of Asher listed in the tribal genealogies

Ulla appears among Asher's descendants in the genealogical records of Chronicles. The name is brief and its meaning uncertain, though it may be related to elevation or height. The Septuagint renders it as 'Ola,' showing typical variation in Greek transliteration of Hebrew names. These genealogical records served important functions in post-exilic Israel, establishing tribal identities and land claims when these had been disrupted by exile and foreign domination. Each preserved name represented a family line that maintained Asher's identity across generations.

(1×) A personal name in Asher's genealogy found in 1 Chronicles 7:39. The translations consistently preserve this as a proper name (English and Spanish: 'Ulla'), though its single mention provides no narrative context. The inclusion in Asher's genealogical record connects Ulla to one of the northern tribes whose territory was eventually lost to Assyrian conquest, making the preservation of these family records all the more significant. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ulla | es: Ula | fr: [עלא] | de: [עלא] 1Chr 7:39

עִלֵּג H5926 Adj-mp (1×)

stammering, speaking unclearly or with difficulty (of speech impediment or foreign accent)

This adjective describes unclear, halting, or stammering speech—the tongue that stumbles over words. In Isaiah 32:4, it appears in a prophecy about the transformed kingdom where even those who formerly stammered will speak clearly and fluently. The Septuagint uses a Greek word specifically for stammering or lisping. The term could refer to actual speech impediments or to the unclear speech of foreigners speaking Hebrew poorly. Isaiah envisions a renewal where all forms of limitation and disability will be overcome in the messianic age.

(1×) Describing tongues that stammer or speak unclearly, found in Isaiah 32:4 in a prophecy of restoration. The Spanish 'tartamudos' (stammerers) precisely captures this meaning. The context promises that in the coming kingdom, 'the tongue of stammerers will speak readily and distinctly'—a reversal of Isaiah 28's judgment where God would speak to the people through foreigners with stammering lips. This becomes part of Isaiah's vision of comprehensive healing and restoration. DEAF AND MUTE

en: of-stammerers | es: tartamudos | fr: [עלגים] | de: [עלגים] Isa 32:4

עָלָה H5927 V-Hifil-Perf-2fs (894×)

go up, ascend; offer up sacrifice; bring up, lead out; rise; be taken up; set up lamps; bring up cud

A verb of extraordinary range, עָלָה fundamentally means to go up or ascend — whether climbing a mountain, traveling to Jerusalem, or approaching God's presence. From this physical root spring some of the Bible's most important theological metaphors: offerings 'go up' as smoke to heaven (Gen 8:20; 22:13), God 'brings up' Israel from Egypt (Exod 3:8), and the morning light 'rises' over creation (Gen 19:15; 32:26). Even the technical laws about clean animals that 'bring up' the cud (Lev 11:4) and the priests who cause lamplight to 'go up' on the menorah (Exod 25:37) share this single directional root.

1. go up, ascend (Qal) (779×) The dominant Qal sense (779x): physical movement upward — ascending mountains, entering cities at higher elevation, going up to battle, or approaching God's sanctuary. Arabic ʿ, Korean 올라가다, Swahili kupanda all confirm the spatial upward vector. Genesis 13:1 (Abram going up from Egypt) and 1 Kings 18:42 (Elijah ascending Carmel) are paradigmatic instances. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-he-went-up, and-went-up | es: Y-subió, y-subió | fr: et-alla-en-haut, et-il-alla-en-haut, et-monta | de: und-er-ging-hinauf, und-ging-hinauf, und-hinaufzog Gen 13:1; Gen 17:22; Gen 19:30; Gen 26:23; Gen 35:13

2. offer up sacrifice (Hifil) (41×) The Hifil causative in sacrificial contexts (41x): causing an offering to ascend, i.e., offering up burnt offerings on the altar. Spanish ofrecer, Korean 드리다, and Swahili kutoa converge on the ritual sense. Genesis 8:20 (Noah's post-flood offering) and Genesis 22:2, 13 (the binding of Isaac) are foundational. The עֹלָה 'burnt offering' derives from this very root. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-he-offered, and-he-offered-up, and-he-put-up | es: Para-ofrecer, e-hizo-subir, para-hacer-subir | fr: et-il-offrit, et-il-offrit-en-haut, et-monter | de: hinaufgehen, und-der-Brandopfer, und-er-ging-hinauf Gen 8:20; Gen 22:2; Gen 22:13; Exod 40:29; Lev 14:20

3. bring up, lead out (Hifil) (34×) The Hifil causative with persons as object (34x): bringing up, leading out, or raising people from one place to another — preeminently God bringing Israel up from Egypt. Spanish 'hice subir,' French 'apporta en haut,' German 'brachte hinauf' all capture the causative directional movement. Exodus 3:8 and Genesis 46:4 anchor this exodus-defining sense. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: I-brought-up, and-bring-up, and-brought-up | es: Y-lo-subió, e-hicieron-subir, hice-subir | fr: apporta-nous-en-haut, apportant-en-haut, et-apporta-en-haut | de: brachte-uns-hinauf, bringend-hinauf, du-brachte-uns-hinauf Gen 46:4; Gen 50:25; Exod 3:8; Exod 8:7; Exod 13:19

4. rise, spring up (Qal) (25×) The Qal sense applied to natural phenomena rising (25x): the sun rising, dawn breaking, plants sprouting, mist ascending, or water springing up. Arabic ʿ 'rise/appear,' Korean 떠오르다, and Swahili inuka/bubujika confirm the emergent, non-volitional quality. Genesis 19:15 ('when dawn rose'), Genesis 32:26 ('dawn breaking'), and Genesis 41:2 (cows 'coming up' from the Nile) are key. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: [at-rising-of], ascending, at-rising-of | es: al-subir, cuando-subía, subiendo | fr: [à-levant-de], a-venir-en-haut, allant-en-haut | de: Brandopfer, [bei-rising-von], aufgegangen-ist Gen 19:15; Gen 32:26; Gen 41:2; Gen 41:3; Gen 41:5

5. be taken up, withdraw (Nifal) (7×) The Nifal passive/reflexive (7x): being taken up, lifted, or withdrawn — especially the cloud of God's presence rising from the tabernacle as the signal to journey. Arabic ʿ and Korean passive 올라가다 confirm the non-agentive ascending. The cluster at Exodus 40:36–37 and Numbers 9:17–22 centers on the pillar of cloud's movements governing Israel's wilderness travel. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-went-up, and-when-going-up-of-it, and-when-went-up | es: Subid, Y-al-subir, Y-se-apartaron | fr: alla-en-haut, aller-en-haut, et-alla-en-haut | de: gehen-hinauf, ging-hinauf, und-als-gehend-hinauf-von-es Exod 40:36; Exod 40:37; Num 9:21; Num 9:22

6. set up lamps, kindle (Hifil) (6×) A specialized Hifil use for setting up or kindling the lamps of the tabernacle menorah (6x). Korean 켜다 'kindle' and Swahili kuwasha 'light' capture the resulting illumination, while Hebrew retains the directional metaphor of causing flame to 'go up.' Exodus 25:37, 30:8, and 40:4, 25 describe the priestly duty of tending the lampstand, with Numbers 8:2 commanding Aaron directly. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-he-set-up, and-he-shall-set-up, and-when-lights | es: Cuando-encender, Y-al-hacer-subir, Y-encendió | fr: et-il—placer-en-haut, et-il-placer-en-haut, et-quand-luminaires | de: als-du-setzen-hinauf, er-setzen-hinauf, und-als-lights Exod 25:37; Exod 30:8; Exod 40:4; Exod 40:25; Num 8:2

7. bring up the cud (Hifil) (2×) A technical zoological Hifil use (2x) in the dietary laws: bringing up the cud, i.e., ruminating. Arabic ʿ 'ruminants' and Korean 올리는 것 capture the regurgitative motion. Leviticus 11:4 and Deuteronomy 14:7 use this to classify animals that chew the cud but lack split hooves (the camel, hare, and rock badger), making them unclear. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: from-bringing-up, from-those-bringing-up | es: de-los-que-hacen-subir, de-los-que-suben | fr: de-apportant-en-haut, de-ces-apportant-en-haut | de: von-bringend-hinauf, von-jene-bringend-hinauf Lev 11:4; Deut 14:7

עֶלְת H5928 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

burnt offerings (Aramaic plural); animals completely consumed by fire as sacrifices to God

This Aramaic term designates burnt offerings, the sacrifices completely consumed by fire on the altar. It corresponds to the Hebrew 'olah,' sharing the same etymological root related to 'going up' (referring to the smoke ascending). Ezra 6:9 uses this word in the Persian decree authorizing the Jerusalem temple's sacrificial system, showing how even foreign authorities recognized and supported the distinctive worship practices of the returning Jewish community. The plural form here indicates the regular, ongoing nature of these offerings in restored temple worship.

(1×) The Aramaic plural form for burnt offerings in Ezra 6:9, appearing in King Darius's decree that provided animals and supplies for temple worship. The multilingual evidence (English: 'for-burnt-offerings', Spanish: 'para-ofrendas-quemadas') shows consistent understanding of these as the completely consumed sacrifices. This administrative document from the Persian period demonstrates how Israel's distinctive worship was recognized and even financially supported by the empire. BURNT OFFERING

en: for-burnt-offerings | es: para-ofrendas-quemadas | fr: [לעלון] | de: [לעלון] Ezra 6:9

עָלֶה H5929 Prep-k (18×)

A leaf or piece of foliage, used literally of tree leaves and figuratively for withering or flourishing; in plural construct, leafy branches or boughs.

This common noun denotes the leaf of a tree – one of the Bible's most evocative natural images. The very first human garments are sewn from fig leaves (Gen 3:7), and the dove returns to Noah bearing an olive leaf (Gen 8:11). Psalm 1:3 pictures the righteous person as a tree 'whose leaf does not wither,' while Isaiah and Jeremiah use the fading leaf as a metaphor for spiritual decline (Isa 1:30; 64:6; Jer 8:13). German Blatt and French feuille track this sense precisely. In Nehemiah 8:15, the plural construct form refers to leafy branches or boughs gathered for building festival booths – Spanish ramas de ('branches of') reflects this broader botanical sense.

1. leaf, foliage (13×) The leaf or foliage of a tree, used both literally and in rich figurative application. Genesis 3:7 records humanity's first use of fig leaves as covering, and Genesis 8:11 presents the olive leaf as a sign of receding floodwaters. Psalm 1:3 and Jeremiah 17:8 use the unfading leaf as a symbol of righteous vitality, while Isaiah 64:5 and Job 13:25 picture the driven, withering leaf as an image of human frailty. German Blatt ('leaf') and French feuille capture the botanical precision; Ezekiel 47:12 adds healing to the imagery, with leaves for medicine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ?-leaf, and-its-leaf, and-the-leaf | es: como-hoja, hoja-de, hoja-de- | fr: comme-feuille, et-feuille, et-le-feuille | de: Blatt, Blätter, [וכעלה] Gen 3:7; Gen 8:11; Lev 26:36; Job 13:25; Ps 1:3

2. branch, bough (5×) Leafy branches or boughs of trees, used in the plural construct form especially in the context of gathering materials for the Festival of Booths (Sukkot). All five occurrences in Nehemiah 8:15 refer to branches of olive, myrtle, palm, and other trees brought to construct temporary shelters. Spanish ramas de ('branches of') and French feuille (here broadened to 'leafy branch') reflect this shift from individual leaf to the larger leafy limb cut for

ritual construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-branches-of, branches-of | es: ramas-de-, y-ramas-de, y-ramas-de- | fr: et-feuille, feuille | de: ueber-mich, und-ueber-mich Neh 8:15

עֹלָה H5930a Conj-w (287×)

Whole burnt offering — an animal sacrifice entirely consumed by fire on the altar as worship ascending to God

The olah is the quintessential ascending sacrifice of the Hebrew cultus — an animal wholly consumed on the altar, its smoke rising to God as an expression of total dedication. From Noah's first altar after the flood (Gen 8:20) through the elaborate Levitical regulations (Lev 1:3–17) and Solomon's temple dedications (1 Kgs 3:4), this offering appears nearly 290 times. The name itself, from the root 'to go up,' captures the theology of ascent: the entire victim rises heavenward. French 'holocauste' and Spanish 'holocausto' preserve the Greek holokauston ('wholly burned'), while German 'Brandopfer' ('fire-offering') emphasizes the consuming flame.

1. burnt offering (sacrifice) (286×) A whole animal sacrifice consumed entirely by fire on the altar, expressing worship, atonement, or consecration to God. With 286 occurrences this is the overwhelmingly dominant sense, spanning patriarchal altars (Gen 22:2–3, Abraham's near-sacrifice of Isaac), Mosaic legislation (Lev 1:3–17, the detailed protocols), daily and festival offerings (Num 28–29), and royal dedications (1 Kgs 8:64). The cross-lingual consensus is striking: Spanish 'holocausto,' French 'holocauste,' and German 'Brandopfer' all denote the complete burning. The theological heart is total surrender — unlike peace offerings where worshippers eat a portion, the olah belongs entirely to God. BURNT OFFERING en: a-burnt-offering, burnt-offering | es: holocausto | fr: brûlé-offrande, holocauste, un-brûlé-offrande | de: Brand-Opfergabe, Brandopfer, ein-Brand-Opfergabe Exod 18:12; Exod 29:18; Lev 1:3; Lev 1:9; Lev 1:13

2. (1×) A single anomalous occurrence at Isaiah 61:8 where multilingual renderings diverge sharply: English 'with injustice,' Spanish 'con injusticia,' yet French still reads 'holocauste' and German 'Brandopfer.' This likely reflects a textual or parsing ambiguity — the Hebrew be'awlah ('with wrongdoing,' from the root 'wl) is graphically near be'olah ('with a burnt offering'). Most modern scholarship treats this as a homographic overlap rather than a true sense of olah, but the clustering algorithm correctly flags it as distinct evidence. BURNT OFFERING en: with-injustice | es: con-injusticia | fr: holocauste | de: Brandopfer Isa 61:8

עֹלָה H5930b

ascent, stairway (Ezekiel 40:26 Ketiv; Qere reads עֲלוֹתָיו; likely error for מַעֲלָתוֹ)

This noun appears in Ezekiel 40:26 (Ketiv) as part of the temple vision, apparently meaning 'ascent' or 'stairway'—the steps leading up to a gate. However, the Ketiv is singular while the Qere offers a plural, and many scholars emend to מַעֲלָתוֹ ('its steps'), the more common term for stairway in Ezekiel's architectural descriptions. The textual confusion reflects the complexity of Ezekiel's visionary temple blueprint, where precise architectural vocabulary is sometimes uncertain. The core image remains: a stepped ascent into the sacred space.

H5930c N-fpc / 3ms (2×)

its ascents, its steps (noun: stairways or steps leading up to a structure, possibly textually uncertain)

This phrase appears in Ezekiel 40:26, describing the architectural features of the visionary temple. The context is the ascent to the gateway, and 'its ascents' (or 'its steps') refers to the stairway leading up. The BDB does not provide a separate entry, suggesting the form may be a variant or a Ketiv-Qere issue. The multilingual glosses diverge: some render 'its ascents' or 'its steps,' while others default to 'burnt offering' (the more common sense of עֹלָה). The architectural context favors 'ascents.'

(2×) Denotes the stairways or steps leading up to a temple gateway in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 40:26, appearing twice in the verse). The form is likely a plural construct ('its ascents'), describing the architectural feature. Spanish and German glosses reflect textual uncertainty (parenthetical or bracketed forms), while French defaults to 'burnt offering,' indicating possible confusion with the homonymous עֹלָה. PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS
en: [ketiv], its-ascents | es: (sus-subidas), [sus-subidas] | fr: holocauste | de: [עלותו], [עלותיו] Ezek 40:26

עִלָּה H5931 N-fs (3×)

Matter, affair, occasion; grounds for accusation or legal case

This Aramaic noun denotes a matter, affair, or occasion, particularly in legal contexts. All three occurrences in Daniel 6 concern the officials' search for 'grounds of accusation' against Daniel. Unable to find any corruption or negligence in his administration, they conspire to create a religious pretext for his condemnation. The word represents the legal case or charge they seek to bring against him. Cognate with Syriac terms for cause or occasion, the word emphasizes the formal, legal dimension of their plot. Their failure to find any 'illa' (grounds) in Daniel's governance testifies to his integrity—a frustration that drives them to manufacture a religious law he cannot obey.

(3×) Three occurrences in Daniel 6:4-5, all in the phrase seeking 'grounds for accusation' against Daniel. The multilingual evidence shows varied approaches: some versions give 'occasion,' others show transliteration or references to related verbs ('went up'). The legal context is clear: Daniel's enemies need a formal charge to bring before the king, but his blameless administration provides no opportunity. The repetition emphasizes their thorough but fruitless investigation —no corruption, no negligence, no grounds for accusation in his civic life. Only his uncompromising religious devotion offers them an angle. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT
en: ground | es: ocasión | fr: [עלא], il-est-monté | de: [עלא], ging-hinauf Dan 6:4; Dan 6:5

עַוְלָה H5932 N-fs (1×)

iniquity, injustice, wrongdoing; unrighteousness in action or character

This noun denotes injustice, wrongdoing, and violent unrighteousness—the opposite of the justice and equity God requires. It appears frequently in poetic texts describing both human wickedness and the character of those who oppose God. Hosea 10:9 uses it in the phrase 'sons of iniquity,' referring to evildoers. The term emphasizes the active, aggressive nature of sin—not mere moral failing but violent injustice that harms others. Psalms and prophets contrast this with God's righteousness, establishing iniquity as incompatible with God's presence and ultimately destined for judgment.

(1×) Injustice or violent wrongdoing in Hosea 10:9, though the textual form here may be a variant spelling. The translations consistently render this as 'iniquity' (English, Spanish: 'iniquidad', French: 'crime'), capturing the moral dimension. Hosea uses it to characterize Israel's persistent rebellion, connecting it back to Gibeah's atrocity (Judges 19-21). The term emphasizes how social injustice and moral corruption represent fundamental breach of covenant relationship with God. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS
en: iniquity | es: iniquidad | fr: crime | de: [עלוה] Hos 10:9

עַלְוָה H5933 N-proper-ms (3×)

Alvah/Aliah; an Edomite chief listed in Genesis and Chronicles

This name appears in the genealogies of Edomite chiefs descended from Esau, with variant spellings in the Masoretic tradition. Genesis 36:40 has Alvah, while 1 Chronicles 1:51 shows both Ketiv (Alyah) and Qere (Alvah) readings, demonstrating textual variation in proper name transmission. The individual is listed among the 'chiefs of Edom' according to their clans and regions. The Septuagint's varied Greek forms (Gola, Aloua) show ancient translators grappling with the same textual uncertainties. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to roots suggesting height or exaltation.

(3×) Three occurrences (Genesis and Chronicles with Ketiv/Qere variant) all referring to one Edomite chief. The multilingual evidence shows the textual variants: Alvah/Aliah/Alva, with some versions bracketing the Hebrew forms to acknowledge the manuscript uncertainty. The genealogical lists in Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1 serve to document Edom's tribal structure, fulfilling the promise that Esau would father chiefs and kings. The textual variants reflect the challenges of preserving ancient Near Eastern proper names through centuries of manuscript transmission. PERSONAL NAMES
en: (Alvah), Alvah, [K: Alyah] | es: (Alva), Alvah, [Alya] | fr: Alvah, [עלוה], [עליה] | de: Alwa, [עלוה], [עליה] Gen 36:40; 1Chr 1:51

עֲלוּמִים H5934 N-msc / 3ms (5×)

youth, youthful vigor — the prime of life marked by strength and vitality, always in plural abstract form

This abstract plural noun denotes the period and vigor of youth, always appearing with possessive suffixes ('his youth,' 'your youth'). In Job 20:11, youthful vigor fills a wicked man's bones only to lie down with him in the dust — a poignant image of wasted vitality. Job 33:25 uses it for the renewal of flesh to a youthful state, while Psalm 89:45 laments a king's shortened youth. Isaiah 54:4 promises that the shame of youth will be forgotten in restoration.

(5×) The abstract state and energy of youth, always in plural construct with possessive suffixes, emphasizing vitality and its transience. In Job 20:11 youthful vigor saturates the bones of the wicked only to perish; in 33:25 it describes miraculous physical renewal. The Spanish glosses 'juventud' and French 'jeunesse' confirm the semantic range centers on the prime-of-life period. Psalm 89:45 and Isaiah 54:4 extend the concept to national and covenantal contexts of loss and restoration. YOUTH PERIOD
en: [his-youth], his-youth, your-youth | es: (su-juventud), juventud-de-el, su-juventud | fr: [עלומיך], jeunesse, son-(עלומיו)-lui | de: [(עלומיו)], [[עלומן]], [עלומיו] Job 20:11; Job 33:25; Ps 89:45; Isa 54:4

עֵלָן H5935 N-proper-ms (2×)

Alvan, Alian (personal name: a Horite chief, descendant of Seir, with variant spellings)

This personal name appears in the genealogy of Seir the Horite in Genesis 36:23 (as Alvan) and 1 Chronicles 1:40 (where the Ketiv reads Alyan and the Qere reads Alvan). The Septuagint renders it variously (Γωλων, Γωλαμ, Σωλαμ, Ιωλαμ, Αλουαν), reflecting textual fluidity. The name's etymology is uncertain. All modern translations transliterate the name, noting the variant spellings.

(2×) A personal name in the Seirite genealogies of Genesis 36:23 and 1 Chronicles 1:40. The double occurrence reflects the two parallel genealogical lists, with a Ketiv-Qere variant in Chronicles ('Alyan' vs. 'Alvan'). All target languages transliterate the name, preserving the textual variants where noted. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Alvan, Alyan | es: Alvan, Alyan | fr: Alvan, [עלין] | de: Alwan, [עלין] Gen 36:23; 1Chr 1:40

עֲלוּקָה H5936 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

leech, a blood-sucking creature used proverbially for insatiable greed

The leech appears in Proverbs 30:15 as a symbol of insatiable craving. The creature is notorious for its persistent blood-sucking, never satisfied until gorged. The proverb uses it to introduce a numerical saying about things that never say 'enough'—Sheol, the barren womb, thirsty earth, and fire. Some ancient interpreters suggested this might refer to a vampire-like demon or even represent the name of a sage, but the literal understanding as a leech fits perfectly with wisdom literature's use of natural observation for moral instruction. The image powerfully captures relentless, parasitic desire.

(1×) The blood-sucking leech in Proverbs 30:15, introducing a saying about insatiable things. The multilingual evidence consistently identifies this as a leech (English: 'the-leech', Spanish: 'la-sanguijuela', French: 'à-לעלוקה'), though translations show minor variations. The proverb states 'the leech has two daughters, Give and Give,' using the creature's dual suckers as a vivid metaphor for unquenchable greed and the human appetites that can never be satisfied apart from contentment in God. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS
en: the-leech | es: A-la-sanguijuela | fr: à-לעלוקה | de: [לעלוקה] Prov 30:15

עָלַז H5937 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (17×)

Exult, rejoice jubilantly — to triumph with exuberant gladness, used of praise to God, cosmic rejoicing, and even the boasting of the wicked.

A verb expressing exuberant, even ecstatic joy — stronger than ordinary gladness, it connotes triumphant exultation. Habakkuk 3:18 captures its theological core: 'I will exult in the God of my salvation,' pairing it with the synonymous gîl. Zephaniah 3:14 summons daughter Zion to 'exult!' alongside singing and rejoicing. Yet the word is not reserved for the righteous: Jeremiah 50:11 and Psalm 94:3 apply it to enemies and the wicked who gloat in their temporary success. Even creation joins in — Psalm 96:12 has the fields exulting before the Lord. Spanish 'exulten' and 'alégrese' together capture its dual notes of triumph and deep gladness.

exult, rejoice jubilantly (17×) To exult or rejoice with jubilant triumph, expressing exuberant and sometimes ecstatic gladness. It appears in theophanic praise (Ps 60:6; 108:7, where God himself exults), in summons to worship (Zeph 3:14; Ps 68:4; 149:5), in personal testimony of joy (Ps 28:7; Hab 3:18), and negatively of the wicked's gloating (Ps 94:3; Jer 51:39). Cosmic creation exults in Psalm 96:12. The word parallels simah ('rejoice') and gîl ('be glad'), but carries a heightened sense of outward, vocal triumph. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: (you-exult), I-will-exult, [ketiv:you-exult] | es: Alégrese, Exulten, [kethiv] | fr: et-exulter, et-ותעלנה, exult | de: [(תעלו)], [[תעלי]], [אעלוזה] 2Sam 1:20; Ps 28:7; Ps 60:6; Ps 68:4; Ps 94:3

עָלֵז H5938 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)

exultant, jubilant, triumphant; one who rejoices boisterously

This adjective describes someone in a state of exultation—jubilant, triumphant rejoicing. In Isaiah 5:14, it characterizes those who celebrate in Jerusalem, oblivious to coming judgment. The prophet portrays Sheol opening wide to swallow the nobles, masses, and 'the exulting one' of Jerusalem—those who feast and carouse without regard for God's work. The term captures boisterous, self-confident celebration, which in Isaiah's context becomes tragic irony as those reveling are about to descend into death. It emphasizes the spiritual danger of comfortable self-satisfaction.

(1×) Describing one who exults or celebrates jubilantly in Isaiah 5:14. The translations capture this (English: 'and-the-exulting', Spanish: 'y-el-que-se-regocija') as part of Isaiah's judgment oracle. The context is crucial: this exultation happens in the midst of spiritual blindness and moral decay. Those who party and rejoice, ignoring God's work and justice, will find their celebration cut short by judgment. The term highlights how misplaced joy becomes part of the indictment. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: and-the-exulting | es: y-el-que-se-regocija | fr: [ועלז] | de: [ועלז] Isa 5:14

עַלָטָה H5939 Prep-b (4×)

thick darkness, deep gloom; darkness of evening or nighttime used for concealment

This word describes the deep darkness of twilight or night, particularly when used for concealment. In Genesis 15:17, it marks the mysterious darkness accompanying God's covenant with Abraham. Ezekiel uses it three times for the darkness under which the prophet performs his symbolic action of exile—carrying his belongings out in the dark as a sign of Jerusalem's coming captivity. The term implies more than mere absence of light; it suggests the obscuring gloom that hides actions or events. Multilingual glosses (Spanish 'oscuridad,' French 'ténèbres') emphasize the thickness and depth of this darkness.

(4×) Thick darkness or gloom, especially at twilight. Genesis 15:17 associates it with the theophanic darkness of God's covenant ceremony. In Ezekiel 12, the repeated use (vv. 6, 7, 12) emphasizes the darkness under which the symbolic exile occurs, paralleling the actual night-flight of refugees. The darkness serves both literal and symbolic functions—concealing movements while signifying judgment. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-thick-darkness, in-the-dark | es: en-oscuridad, y-oscuridad | fr: dans-l'obscurité, et-épais-ténèbres | de: [בעלטה], und-Finsternis Gen 15:17; Ezek 12:6; Ezek 12:7; Ezek 12:12

עֵלִי H5940 Prep-b (1×)

pestle, an instrument for grinding or pounding grain in a mortar

The pestle was the grinding instrument used with a mortar for crushing grain, spices, or other materials. Proverbs 27:22 uses it in a striking metaphor: even if you pound a fool with a pestle in a mortar among the grain, you won't remove his folly. The image suggests vigorous, repeated pounding—the kind of forceful action needed to break down grain. Yet the proverb's point is that folly is even more stubborn than grain; it cannot be beaten out of someone through punishment alone. This reflects wisdom literature's understanding that true change requires more than external force.

(1×) The grinding tool used with a mortar in Proverbs 27:22, appearing in a metaphor about the persistence of folly. The multilingual evidence (English: 'with-a-pestle', Spanish: 'con-el-pilón' [pestle/pounder], French: 'בעלי') shows consistent understanding of this as a pounding instrument. The proverb's vivid imagery emphasizes that folly is fundamentally resistant to correction by force—a profound observation about human nature and the limitations of punishment without transformation of heart. UPPER MILLSTONE

en: with-a-pestle | es: con-el-pilón | fr: בעלי | de: in-ueber-mich Prov 27:22

עֵלִי H5941 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (33×)

Eli — the aged priest at Shiloh who raised Samuel and whose house fell under divine judgment

Eli is the proper name of the high priest who served at the tabernacle in Shiloh during the transitional period between the judges and the monarchy. His 33 occurrences cluster in 1 Samuel 1-4 and a few retrospective references. He first appears as an elderly figure sitting by the doorpost of the temple, misinterpreting Hannah's silent prayer as drunkenness before blessing her petition for a son (1 Sam 1:9-17). He raised the young Samuel entrusted to the sanctuary and recognized that YHWH was calling the boy in the night (1 Sam 3:1-18). Yet his failure to restrain his corrupt sons Hophni and Phinehas brought a devastating oracle: his priestly line would be cut off (1 Sam 2:27-36). When the ark was captured and his sons killed, the ninety-eight-year-old Eli fell backward from his seat, broke his neck, and died (1 Sam 4:12-18). The fulfillment of his house's doom extends to 1 Kings 2:27, where Solomon expels Abiathar.

Eli (33×) The personal name of the priest and judge at Shiloh who mentored the boy Samuel. His narrative spans Hannah's vow (1 Sam 1:9-17), Samuel's nocturnal call (1 Sam 3:1-18), the oracle against his house for tolerating his sons' corruption (1 Sam 2:27-36), and his death upon hearing of the ark's capture (1 Sam 4:12-18). His priestly line's removal is completed in 1 Kings 2:27. ELI PRIEST NAME

en: Eli | es: Elí | fr: Éli | de: Eli 1Sam 1:3; 1Sam 1:9; 1Sam 1:12; 1Sam 1:13; 1Sam 1:14

עֶלְי H5942 Adj-fp (2×)

upper (adjective: higher in elevation or position, opposite of lower)

This adjective describes spatial elevation, appearing in contexts of geography and water sources. In Joshua 15:19 and Judges 1:15, Achsah asks her father Caleb for 'the upper springs' (in addition to 'the lower springs'). The contrast between עִלִּית (upper) and תַּחְתִּית (lower) is explicit and functional, distinguishing springs at different elevations in the Negev. All modern translations render 'upper' or equivalent forms.

(2×) Denotes higher elevation or superior position, contrasted with 'lower' (תַּחְתִּית). Both occurrences (Joshua 15:19, Judges 1:15) refer to 'upper springs' granted to Achsah. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'upper' or 'superior,' preserving the spatial and positional nuance. UPPER UPPERMOST

en: -the-upper, upper | es: superiores | fr: -le-supérieur, supérieur | de: -der-upper, upper Josh 15:19; Judg 1:15

עִלָּי H5943 Conj-w (18×)

Most High: an Aramaic divine epithet for God as supreme sovereign, used exclusively in Daniel.

An Aramaic adjective in the emphatic state meaning 'highest' or 'most exalted,' serving as a title for God throughout the Aramaic sections of Daniel. It appears both with the noun for God, as 'the Most High God' (Dan 3:26; 5:18, 21), and independently as a divine title, 'the Most High' (Dan 4:14, 21, 22, 29, 31; 7:25). The term emphasizes God's absolute sovereignty over earthly kingdoms, a theme central to Nebuchadnezzar's humbling and restoration (Dan 4). Its ketiv-qere variation (written as illai, read as illaa) reflects typical Aramaic orthographic convention. The epithet parallels the Hebrew Elyon found in Genesis 14 and the Psalms, extending the same theology of divine supremacy into the Aramaic court narratives.

[ketiv:Most High] (18×) An Aramaic divine epithet designating God as supreme ruler over all earthly and heavenly powers. Used in Daniel's court narratives both attributively ('the Most High God,' Dan 3:26; 5:18, 21) and as a standalone title ('the Most High,' Dan 4:14, 21, 29, 31; 7:25). The ketiv-qere alternation reflects standard Aramaic scribal convention. This title parallels Hebrew Elyon and underscores the book's central claim that God deposes and raises kings at will. Multilingual glosses capture the superlative force: Spanish 'Altisimo,' German 'der Hoechste.' MOST HIGH DIVINE

en: (qere:Most-High), (qere:and-Most-High), Most-High | es: (Altísimo), (el-Altísimo), (y-al-Altísimo) | fr: [ולעלאה], [ולעליא], [עליא] | de: der-Hoechste, und-zu-der-Hoechste Dan 3:26; Dan 4:2; Dan 4:17

עֲלִיָּה H5944 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (20×)

An upper room or roof-chamber for privacy and devotion; God's celestial upper chambers; an ascent or stairway

The noun עֲלִיָּה names the room built on the flat roof of a Near Eastern house — cool, secluded, and elevated above the daily bustle below. In the Judges narrative, Eglon is assassinated in his private עֲלִיָּה (Judg 3:20-25), and Elijah carries a widow's dead son up to the roof-chamber where he prays and the child revives (1 Kgs 17:19). Daniel prays three times daily in his עֲלִיָּה with windows open toward Jerusalem (Dan 6:10). The Syriac cognate ʿellithā and Aramaic ʿălithā confirm the architectural sense across Semitic languages. Remarkably, the Psalms elevate this humble domestic space to cosmic proportions: God 'lays the beams of His upper chambers on the waters' (Ps 104:3).

1. upper room or chamber (17×) The primary architectural sense of an upper room or roof-chamber — a private, elevated space used for lodging, devotion, or seclusion — covering 17 of 20 occurrences. Eglon's cool summer chamber (Judg 3:20), the Shunammite's guest room built for Elisha 'with walls' (2 Kgs 4:10), and the chamber over the gate where David wept for Absalom (2 Sam 18:33) all share this sense. The Spanish 'aposento alto' and French parallel renderings confirm an upstairs, enclosed space distinct from the main house. Nehemiah 3:31-32 locates such rooms at corners of the Jerusalem wall, showing they could also be fortification chambers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-upper-rooms, and-the-upper-rooms, and-upper-rooms | es: aposento, aposento-alto-de, cámara-alta-de | fr: [והעליות], [ועליות], [ועליותין] | de: [והעליות], [ועליות], [ועליותין] Judg 3:20; Judg 3:23; Judg 3:24; Judg 3:25; 2Sam 18:33

2. God's upper chambers (cosmological) (2×) A striking cosmological extension where God's 'upper chambers' become the celestial storehouse of the heavens. In Psalm 104:3 God 'lays the beams of His upper chambers on the waters,' and from those chambers He waters the mountains (Ps 104:13). Amos 9:6 similarly places God's 'upper stories' in the heavens. The Spanish 'de sus altos aposentos' preserves the grandeur — the same word for a humble rooftop room is scaled up to describe the architecture of heaven itself, where God stores and distributes the rain. CELESTIAL UPPER CHAMBERS

en: His-upper-chambers, from-His-upper-chambers | es: de-sus-altos-aposentos, desde-sus-altos-aposentos | fr: chambre-haute, de-chambre-haute | de: sein-upper-chambers, von-sein-upper-chambers Ps 104:3; Ps 104:13

3. ascent or stairway (1×) A unique sense describing an ascent or stairway rather than a room. In 2 Chronicles 9:4 (parallel to 1 Kings 10:5), the Queen of Sheba is overwhelmed by Solomon's עֲלִיָּה — his 'ascent' or processional stairway by which he went up to the house of the LORD. The Spanish 'su escalera' ('his staircase') marks this as distinct from a dwelling-space, pointing instead to the ceremonial passage of ascent. The etymology from עָלָה ('to go up') naturally supports both: the room one goes up to and the way by which one ascends. STAIRWAY STEPS
en: and-his-upper-chamber | es: y-su-escalera | fr: [ועליתו] | de: [ועליתו] 2Chr 9:4

עֶלְיוֹן H5945a Art / Adj-ms (23×)
Upper or uppermost in position; high or exalted in rank; Most High as a divine title
Whether describing the upper gate of the temple or the supreme God of Israel, this adjective moves along a vertical axis from architecture to theology. Most frequently it identifies the higher of two matching features: the upper pool (2 Kgs 18:17), the upper chambers (Ezek 41:7), or Upper Beth-horon (Josh 16:5). Deuteronomy 26:19 and 28:1 use it for Israel's exalted status above the nations, a superlative rank. At its theological peak in Psalm 89:27 and 97:9, it becomes a divine epithet: the Most High, supreme over all gods and all the earth. Spanish Altisimo and French Tres-Haut preserve this devotional resonance.

1. upper, uppermost (spatial) (17×) Upper or uppermost in physical location, used attributively to distinguish the higher of two features: gates, pools, chambers, baskets, springs, or cities. The topmost basket in Genesis 40:17, Upper Beth-horon in Joshua 16:5, and the upper gate of 2 Kings 15:35 all rely on this concrete spatial sense. UPPER UPPERMOST
en: pool, the-highest, the-top | es: el-superior, la-alta, la-de-arriba | fr: [העליון], [העליונה], [העליונת] | de: [העליון], [העליונה], dem-obersten Gen 40:17; Josh 16:5; 2Kgs 15:35; 2Kgs 18:17; 1Chr 7:24

2. high, exalted, lofty (4×) High, exalted, or lofty in rank or status, used predicatively of nations or structures elevated above others. Deuteronomy 26:19 and 28:1 promise that God will set Israel high above all nations. This sense carries the verticality of the first meaning into the realm of honor and prestige, distinct from the specifically divine usage. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: exalted, high | es: alto, excelsa, ruinas | fr: [עליון], haut | de: der-Hoechste, hoch Deut 26:19; Deut 28:1; 1Kgs 9:8; 2Chr 7:21

3. Most High (divine epithet) (2×) The Most High, a superlative divine epithet designating God as supreme over all other powers and beings. Psalm 97:9 declares the LORD most high over all the earth, and Psalm 89:27 applies it to the Davidic king as a reflection of divine sovereignty. French Tres-Haut and Spanish Altisimo preserve the devotional and liturgical weight of this title. MOST HIGH DIVINE
en: Most-High, the-highest | es: Altísimo, el-más-alto | fr: Très-Haut | de: der-highest, meist-hoch Ps 89:27; Ps 97:9

עֶלְיוֹן H5945b Adj-ms (30×)
Most High — a divine title emphasizing God's supreme sovereignty above all powers and nations
Elyon ('Most High') is one of the great divine epithets, appearing 30 times as a title stressing God's absolute supremacy over all creation. Its earliest attestation — in the Melchizedek episode where he blesses Abram by 'El Elyon, creator of heaven and earth' (Gen 14:18-22) — establishes the cosmic scope of the title. Balaam invokes 'the knowledge of the Most High' in his oracles (Num 24:16), and the Song of Moses credits Elyon with allotting nations their territories (Deut 32:8). The Psalms are its richest habitat, where it appears in nearly every combination with other divine names: YHWH Elyon (Ps 7:18; 47:3), Elohim Elyon (Ps 57:3; 78:56), and El Elyon (Ps 78:35). The title even extends to human rulers or angelic beings called 'sons of the Most High' (Ps 82:6). Spanish 'Altisimo,' French 'Tres-Haut,' and German 'der Hoechste' all preserve the superlative character.

Most High (30×) A divine title meaning 'Most High,' affirming God's supreme position above all cosmic and earthly powers. First attested in the Melchizedek blessing as El Elyon, 'God Most High, creator of heaven and earth' (Gen 14:18-22). Deuteronomy 32:8 assigns Elyon the sovereign act of apportioning nations. In the Psalms it combines freely with YHWH (Ps 7:18), Elohim (Ps 57:3), and El (Ps 78:35). Psalm 82:6 extends the epithet metaphorically to angelic or human rulers as 'sons of the Most High.' MOST HIGH DIVINE
en: Most-High, the-Most-High | es: Altísimo, Elyon, el-Altísimo | fr: Très-Haut | de: dem-Höchsten, der-Höchste, der-meist-hoch Gen 14:18; Gen 14:19; Gen 14:20; Gen 14:22; Num 24:16

עֶלְיוֹן H5946 Adj-mp (4×)
Most High; Aramaic divine title emphasizing God's supreme sovereignty, used exclusively in Daniel's visions
An Aramaic title for God meaning 'Most High,' appearing only in Daniel 7 where it describes the saints who receive the kingdom. The double plural form ('holy ones of the Most High') intensifies both the holiness of the people and the supremacy of God. This title emphasizes divine sovereignty over all earthly kingdoms—a central theme in Daniel's apocalyptic visions where human empires rise and fall while God's reign endures. The Spanish and English consistently render this as 'Altísimo/Most High,' preserving the superlative nature of the divine name.

(4×) The Aramaic divine title 'Most High' (Elyon) emphasizing God's supreme authority. All four occurrences in Daniel 7 (vv. 18, 22, 25, 27) appear in contexts describing the 'saints of the Most High' receiving eternal dominion after the defeat of earthly kingdoms. The title underscores God's transcendent sovereignty in the apocalyptic vision of world history culminating in divine rule. MOST HIGH DIVINE
en: Most-High | es: Altísimo | fr: les-Très-Hauts | de: [עליונין] Dan 7:18; Dan 7:22; Dan 7:25; Dan 7:27

עַלִּיז H5947 Adj-mpc (7×)
Exultant, jubilant; describing cities or persons marked by boisterous, triumphant rejoicing or revelry
This adjective captures a mood of loud, triumphant exultation, often applied to cities personified as reveling in their prosperity. Isaiah uses it repeatedly to characterize places like Jerusalem and Tyre before their downfall (Isa 22:2; 23:7), and Zephaniah applies it to Nineveh (Zeph 2:15). The word carries an edge of irony in prophetic speech: the jubilation it describes is typically about to be silenced by divine judgment. Spanish 'exultante' and French 'triomphant' both capture the overtone of proud, noisy celebration.

exultant, jubilant (7×) Exultant or jubilant, describing a state of boisterous, triumphant rejoicing. Predominantly used in prophetic judgment oracles where cities are personified as reveling before their fall: Jerusalem as the 'jubilant city' (Isa 22:2), ancient Tyre (Isa 23:7), and Nineveh (Zeph 2:15). Also describes persons in Isa 13:3 ('my proudly exulting ones') and the silencing of revelers' noise in Isa 24:8. The prophetic context gives it an ironic or ominous tone: exultation that is about to be cut short. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: exultant, exulting-ones-of, of-revelers | es: alegre, exultante, exultantes-de | fr: puissant, triomphant | de: [העליזה], [עליזי], frohlockend Isa 13:3; Isa 22:2; Isa 23:7; Isa 24:8; Isa 32:13

עֲלִיל H5948 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)
furnace, crucible, or workshop (uncertain); a place or instrument for refining metal

This rare and difficult word appears only in Psalm 12:6, where silver refined in a furnace provides a metaphor for the purity of God's words. The text reads literally 'silver refined in a furnace/crucible for the earth,' though the precise meaning remains disputed. Ancient versions and rabbinic tradition understood it as a furnace or crucible, focusing on the refining process. Some modern scholars suggest 'workshop' or even delete it as a gloss. Whatever the exact technical meaning, the psalm's point is clear: God's words are thoroughly tested and proven pure, unlike human speech which is characterized by lies and flattery.

(1×) A term appearing in Psalm 12:6 related to metal refining, most likely a furnace or crucible. The translations show the interpretive challenge (English: 'in-a-furnace', Spanish: 'en-crisol' [crucible], French: 'dans-fournaise' [furnace], German: 'in-ein-furnace'). Despite textual uncertainty, the context clearly uses metallurgical imagery to affirm that God's promises are completely reliable—refined and tested like silver purified seven times, containing no impurity or deception. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-a-furnace | es: en-crisol | fr: dans-fournaise | de: in-ein-furnace Ps 12:6

עֲלִילָה H5949 N-fpc / 2mp (24×)
A deed, act, or work (whether of God or humans); also a contrived charge or baseless accusation in legal contexts.
Primarily denotes actions or deeds, used with striking range. The psalmists celebrate God's mighty alilot – His awesome works toward humanity (Ps 66:5; 77:12) and His acts made known among the nations (1 Chr 16:8). German Taten and Spanish obras both capture this broad 'deeds' sense. Ezekiel uses the plural repeatedly for Israel's corrupt practices and evil conduct (Ezek 14:22; 20:43; 36:17). A specialized legal sense appears in Deuteronomy 22:14, 17, where it means 'contrived charges' or 'baseless accusations' – a husband fabricating alilot devarim ('wantonness of words') against his bride. The accusation translations (Eng. accusations, Spa. pretextos) highlight this forensic narrowing.

1. deed, act, work (22×) A deed, act, or work performed by God or humans, used broadly for conduct whether praiseworthy or blameworthy. The psalmist declares God's acts among the peoples (1 Chr 16:8 = Ps 105:1), and Ps 66:5 invites onlookers to see His awesome deeds. Ezekiel repeatedly uses the plural for Israel's corrupt practices (Ezek 20:43; 36:17, 19). Multilingual glosses cluster around 'deeds/works': Ger. Taten, Spa. obras, Fra. action. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-deeds, and-according-to-deeds-your, and-according-to-their-deeds | es: ni-conforme-a-vuestras-obras, obra, obras-de-el | fr: [עלילתין], action, et-action | de: Taten, [עלילותם], [עלילתין] 1Sam 2:3; 1Chr 16:8; Ps 9:11; Ps 14:1; Ps 66:5

2. charge, accusation, pretext (2×) A formal accusation, contrived charge, or pretext brought against someone in a legal setting. Exclusively in Deut 22:14, 17, where a husband brings alilot devarim ('baseless charges') against his bride, claiming she was not a virgin. The forensic specificity is confirmed by translation choices: Eng. accusations, Spa. pretextos, Fra. accusations – all narrowing from general 'deeds' to deliberate fabrications in a judicial proceeding. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: accusations-of | es: pretextos-de | fr: accusations-de | de: accusations-von Deut 22:14; Deut 22:17

עֲלִילָה H5950 Art / N-fs (1×)
deed, work, action; specifically referring to God's great deeds
This feminine noun denotes a deed or great work, appearing only in Jeremiah 32:19 where it describes God's actions. The prophet declares God 'great in counsel and mighty in deed,' emphasizing both divine wisdom in planning and power in execution. The term may be a variant form of the more common 'alilah,' and some suggest reading the more standard form here. Regardless, Jeremiah's point is that God's works match His purposes—His deeds accomplish His wise counsel. This comes in a context where Jeremiah must buy a field while Jerusalem faces siege, trusting that God's purposes will prevail despite appearances.

(1×) God's mighty deed or work in Jeremiah 32:19, paired with His great counsel. The multilingual evidence shows minimal variation (English: 'the-deed', Spanish: 'de-obra' [of work/deed]), recognizing this as referring to divine action. The context of Jeremiah's symbolic land purchase emphasizes that God's deeds will fulfill His promises of restoration—even when circumstances seem to contradict those promises. The term links divine intention with divine accomplishment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-deed | es: de-obra | fr: [העלילה] | de: [העלילה] Jer 32:19

עֲלִיצוּת H5951 N-fsc / 3mp (1×)
exultation, rejoicing; jubilant celebration (with darker overtones in context)
This noun describes exultation or jubilant rejoicing. In Habakkuk 3:14, it appears in a disturbing context—the oppressors' exultation was 'as it were to devour the poor.' The prophet describes wicked enemies who rejoice in violence and exploitation, celebrating as they destroy the vulnerable. Their joy is perverted, finding delight in cruelty rather than justice. Habakkuk's theophany portrays God coming in judgment against such oppressors, answering the prophet's complaint about unchecked wickedness. The term captures how celebration can be morally inverted when it rejoices in evil rather than good.

(1×) The rejoicing or exultation of oppressors in Habakkuk 3:14, characterized by their delight in devouring the poor. The translations (English: 'their-rejoicing', Spanish: 'su-regocijo', French: 'joie') show this as a celebration, but the context makes clear this is twisted joy—finding pleasure in victimizing others. Habakkuk presents this as the very attitude God's coming judgment will address, vindicating the oppressed and silencing the cruel celebration of the wicked. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: their-rejoicing | es: su-regocijo | fr: joie | de: [עליצתם] Hab 3:14

עִלִּי H5952 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
roof chamber, upper room (Aramaic); an elevated room for prayer and private devotion
This Aramaic term designates an upper room or roof chamber, corresponding to Hebrew 'aliyyah.' Daniel 6:10 describes how Daniel went to his upper room to pray three times daily, with windows opened toward Jerusalem. Such upper rooms provided privacy and quiet, making them ideal for prayer and study. The eastward-facing windows allowed Daniel to pray toward the temple site, maintaining his connection to Jerusalem even in Babylonian exile. The detail reveals Daniel's disciplined devotional life and his refusal to compromise his public witness despite the king's decree. Upper rooms became significant prayer locations in both testaments.

(1×) Daniel's roof chamber or upper room in Daniel 6:10 where he maintained his practice of daily prayer toward Jerusalem. The multilingual evidence (English: 'in-his-upper-room', Spanish: 'en-su-aposento-alto', French: 'hauteur') consistently identifies this as an elevated private room. This architectural detail is crucial to the narrative: Daniel's faithfulness was both private (in his upper room) and public (with windows open), demonstrating that authentic devotion cannot be hidden and will not compromise under pressure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-his-upper-room | es: en-su-aposento-alto | fr: hauteur | de: [בעליתה] Dan 6:10

H5953 Conj-w / N-mpc / 2mp (1×)
deeds, actions, practices; used of human conduct (especially wicked deeds)
This noun denotes deeds, actions, or practices—the concrete expression of human choices and character. In Zechariah 1:4, it appears in the prophetic call to repentance: 'Turn from your evil ways and your evil deeds.' The word emphasizes actual behavior rather than mere intention, focusing on the patterns of action that characterized pre-exilic Israel. Zechariah urges the post-exilic community to learn from history and avoid repeating the behaviors that brought judgment. The term often carries negative connotations in prophetic literature, referring to wicked or corrupt practices that violate covenant.

(1×) The deeds or practices that characterize human behavior in Zechariah 1:4, appearing in the call to repentance. The multilingual glosses show this with a possessive (English: '[and-from-your-deeds]', Spanish: '[y-de-vuestras-obras]', French: 'et-maltraiter'), indicating the people's ownership of their actions. Zechariah's message is that return to God requires not just attitudinal change but concrete transformation of behavior—turning from the actual practices that constituted rebellion. DOING AND MAKING

en: [and-from-your-deeds] | es: [y-de-vuestras-obras] | fr: et-maltraiter | de: [[ומעלילכם]] Zech 1:4

עָלַל H5953a V-Hitpael-Perf-2fs (13×)

To deal with harshly, mock, abuse; more broadly, to act toward someone (severely or otherwise), to busy oneself with practices.

A verb that ranges from cruel mockery to the broader notion of 'dealing with' someone. Its most memorable occurrences involve the abuse of power: God's mighty acts against Egypt so Israel could recount 'how I made a mockery of them' (Exod 10:2), Balaam's donkey asking 'what have I done to you that you have struck me?' (Num 22:29), and the horrific abuse at Gibeah (Judg 19:25). In Lamentations, it shifts to a wider sense of severe dealing — 'deal with them as you have dealt with me' (1:22). Spanish captures the range with 'burlarse' (to mock) for the Hitpael and 'tratar/hacer' (to deal with) for the Piel, showing how the stem distinctions carry different intensities of action.

1. mock, abuse, deal harshly (7×) Hitpael: to mock, make sport of, abuse, deal ruthlessly. The dominant sense, used of God's mockery of Egypt (Exod 10:2), Balaam's frustration with his donkey (Num 22:29), the atrocity at Gibeah (Judg 19:25), the Philistines' fear of abuse (1 Sam 31:4), and divine hardening of Egypt (1 Sam 6:6). Spanish 'burlarse' ('to mock') and 'abusar' ('to abuse') consistently render the contemptuous, power-laden quality of this Hitpael usage. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: I-dealt-harshly, and-abuse, and-abused | es: me-burlé, se-burló, te-burlaste | fr: Je-dealt-harshly, [והתעללו], et-abuse | de: [והתעללו], du-spottete, er-dealt-harshly Exod 10:2; Num 22:29; Judg 19:25; 1Sam 6:6; 1Sam 31:4

2. deal with, act toward (3×) Piel: to deal with, act toward someone — a broader, less inherently negative sense than the Hitpael. In Lamentations 1:22 and 2:20, Jerusalem cries to God about how he has 'dealt with' her, and asks to whom he has 'done thus.' Spanish 'tratar' and 'hacer' ('to treat, to do') capture the general relational quality. The severity comes from context rather than the verb itself. DOING AND MAKING

en: You-dealt, You-dealt-thus, and-deal-with-them | es: has-tratado, me-hiciste, y-hazles | fr: et-enfant, tu-as-fait | de: behandelt, und-behandelt Lam 1:22; Lam 2:20

3. busy oneself with, practice (1×) Hitpael infinitive: to busy oneself with, to practice or commit actions deliberately. Psalm 141:4 prays that the heart not be inclined 'to practice wicked deeds.' Spanish 'para practicar' and French 'a agir' ('to act') render the self-engaging, deliberate quality of occupying oneself with an activity. DOING AND MAKING

en: to-practice | es: para-practicar | fr: à-agir | de: zu-practice Ps 141:4

4. cause grief, afflict (1×) Piel with emotional object: to cause grief, to afflict or deal painfully with. Lamentations 3:51 says 'my eye causes grief to my soul' — a specialized application where the 'dealing' produces suffering. The inward, psychological dimension distinguishes this from the interpersonal 'dealing with' of sense 2. DOING AND MAKING

en: causes-grief | es: aflige | fr: [עוללה] | de: behandelt Lam 3:51

5. be dealt with (1×) Pual passive: to be dealt with, to have harsh treatment inflicted upon oneself. Lamentations 1:12 asks onlookers to behold the suffering 'that has been dealt to me.' Spanish 'me ha sido hecho' ('has been done to me') preserves the passive framing. This is the recipient's perspective on the severe treatment described actively in senses 1 and 2. DOING AND MAKING

en: was-dealt | es: me-ha-sido-hecho | fr: enfant | de: behandelt Lam 1:12

עָלַל H5953b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp / 3ms (5×)

to glean (grapes, olives); figuratively, to pick off survivors as a gleaner strips remaining fruit

This Poel denominative verb describes the agricultural practice of gleaning — gathering the remaining grapes or olives after the primary harvest. Leviticus 19:10 and Deuteronomy 24:21 prohibit landowners from gleaning their own vineyards, reserving the remnant for the poor and the sojourner. Jeremiah 6:9 uses the image figuratively with devastating force: 'They shall thoroughly glean as a vine the remnant of Israel.' In Judges 20:45, the verb is applied to warfare — the Israelites 'gleaned' the fleeing Benjaminites, picking off fugitives as a harvester strips a vine.

(5×) The act of gleaning leftover grapes or olives after harvest, used literally in legal texts that protect the poor's right to glean (Lev 19:10; Deut 24:21). Spanish 'rebuscar' ('to search again, glean') precisely captures the repeated, thorough gathering implied. Figuratively extended to military pursuit in Judges 20:45 and prophetic judgment in Jeremiah 6:9, where gleaning becomes a metaphor for the systematic destruction of survivors. French 'glaner' and German 'glean' reflect the agricultural core meaning. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: and-gleaned-them, glean-thoroughly, gleaning | es: Rebuscar, rebuscarán, rebuscarás | fr: [יעוללו], enfant, et-glana-eux | de: Kind, [יעוללו], du-soll-glean Lev 19:10; Deut 24:21; Judg 20:45; Jer 6:9

עָלַל H5953c V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to act childishly, behave like a child; used of immature or irresponsible leadership

This verb, formed from the noun 'child,' means to act childishly or play the child. Isaiah 3:12 uses it in a scathing critique: 'my people—its ruler is acting the child.' The prophet indicts Jerusalem's leadership as immature, irresponsible, and unfit to govern. This accusation comes in a passage describing the collapse of competent leadership and the installation of youths and women (in Isaiah's patriarchal context, considered inappropriate rulers). The verb captures the devastating situation when those in authority lack wisdom, seriousness, or capability—they 'play' at leadership while the nation suffers.

(1×) The act of behaving childishly or immaturely in Isaiah 3:12, used of Jerusalem's ruler. The translations vary (English: 'act-like-children', Spanish: 'un-niño' [a child], French and German leave untransliterated), but the context makes the critique clear: the leadership lacks the maturity and wisdom necessary to guide the nation. This becomes part of Isaiah's larger indictment of Judah's failed leadership across all levels of society. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: act-like-children | es: un-niño | fr: [מעולל] | de: [מעולל] Isa 3:12

עָלַל H5953d Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs (1×)

to thrust, push into; used of forcing something downward (metaphorically of humiliation)

This verb means to insert, thrust, or push something in forcefully. Job 16:15 uses it metaphorically: 'I have thrust my horn in the dust,' expressing extreme humiliation and defeat. The horn symbolizes strength and dignity in biblical imagery, so to thrust it into dust represents total abasement. The Poel form suggests intensive action. Job's lament describes his response to devastating loss and suffering —he has been brought so low that he has himself pushed his dignity into the dirt. The image powerfully conveys Job's experience of complete degradation.

(1×) The act of thrusting or pushing down in Job 16:15, used figuratively of Job pushing his own horn (symbol of strength/pride) into the dust. The translations capture this (English: 'and-I-have-thrust', Spanish: 'y-he-hundido' [I have sunk/plunged]), though some leave it untransliterated due to rarity. The metaphor expresses Job's profound humiliation—not just experiencing defeat but acknowledging it fully by himself burying his dignity in dust, a powerful image of grief and abasement. PIERCE BORE THROUGH en: and-I-have-thrust | es: y-he-hundido | fr: et-וְעַלְלֹתִי | de: [וְעַלְלֹתִ] Job 16:15

עָלַל H5954 V-Hofal-Perf-3mp (17×)

To go in, enter; to bring in or introduce (causative); to be brought before someone (passive)

The Aramaic verb 'alal functions as the primary verb of entry throughout the Aramaic portions of Daniel, mirroring the ubiquitous Hebrew bo'. In its basic Peal stem, wise men and astrologers 'come in' before the king (Dan 4:7; 5:8), and Daniel himself enters to request time (Dan 2:16, 24). The Haphel causative shifts the agency: Arioch 'brings Daniel in' before Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:25), and the king commands that the enchanters be 'brought in' to read the writing (Dan 5:7). The Hophal passive completes the set when Daniel 'is brought before' Belshazzar (Dan 5:13, 15) and the lions' den is sealed with the king's approach (Dan 6:18). Spanish entrar, hacer entrar, and ser traido map neatly onto the three stems, as do French entrer and German hineingehen.

1. go in, come in, enter (10×) The basic intransitive sense (Peal): to go in, come in, or enter a place or a royal presence. Daniel enters before the king (Dan 2:16), comes into the queen's banquet hall (Dan 5:10), and goes into his own house to pray (Dan 6:11). The wise men and enchanters likewise come in before Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:7; 5:8). Spanish entrar and French entrer correspond directly. The preposition 'al ('upon, before') frequently governs the person approached, giving the verb a courtly register of formal audience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:came-in), [ketiv:came-in], came-in | es: (entraron), (entró), [entraron] | fr: entrer, sur | de: hineingehen, ueber Dan 2:16; Dan 2:24; Dan 4:7; Dan 4:8

2. bring in, cause to enter (4×) The causative sense (Haphel): to bring someone in, to introduce, or to cause to enter. Arioch brings Daniel before the king (Dan 2:25), the king commands that enchanters be brought in (Dan 4:6; 5:7), and Daniel himself asks to be brought in (Dan 2:24). Spanish hacer entrar and German hereinbringen both preserve the two-agent structure. The infinitive lehan'alah in Dan 4:3 and 5:7 shows the construction with an accusative of the person introduced before the qodam ('before') phrase. ENTERING AND GOING IN en: bring-me-in, brought-in, to-bring-in | es: hazme-entrar, hizo-entrar, para-hacer-entrar | fr: entrer | de: hineingehen, zu-das-Brandopfer Dan 2:24; Dan 2:25; Dan 4:6; Dan 5:7

3. be brought in (3×) The passive sense (Hophal): to be brought in or carried before another agent, typically into a royal audience. Daniel is brought before Belshazzar (Dan 5:13), the vessels of the Jerusalem temple are brought in (Dan 5:15), and the stone is brought and placed over the den (Dan 6:18). Spanish fue traido and French fut amene both render the passive well. Each instance involves a solemn, official action — the subject does not enter voluntarily but is conducted by others into a place of authority. ENTERING AND GOING IN en: was-brought, was-brought-in, were-brought-in | es: fue-traído, fueron-traídas, fueron-traídos | fr: entrer, le-montez!, le-sur | de: der-ueber, hineingehen Dan 5:13; Dan 5:15; Dan 6:18

עוֹלְלוֹת H5955 N-fp (6×)

Gleanings, especially of grapes or olives; the leftover clusters after harvest, used figuratively for a small remnant.

The feminine plural noun עוֹלְלוֹת (olelot) refers to the secondary pickings of a vineyard or olive grove — the small clusters left behind after the main harvest. While the term is agricultural in origin, every biblical occurrence uses it figuratively: for a devastated remnant (Isa 17:6; 24:13), for the meagerness of what invaders leave behind (Jer 49:9 = Obad 5), and memorably, for Gideon's modest achievement that surpassed Ephraim's full vintage (Judg 8:2). Spanish 'rebusco' and French 'glanure' capture this specialized agricultural-to-metaphorical sense beautifully.

gleanings (of grapes) (6×) The grape or olive gleanings — small, leftover clusters remaining after the primary harvest. Used exclusively in figurative contexts to evoke a pitifully small remnant or aftermath. In Judges 8:2, Gideon diplomatically compares his own 'gleanings' favorably with Ephraim's 'vintage' (בָּצִיר). Isaiah uses the image twice: gleaning as olive-beating (17:6) and as vintage aftermath (24:13). Jeremiah 49:9 and Obadiah 5 warn that even grape-gatherers leave gleanings, but the coming destroyer will not. German 'Nachlese' and Spanish 'rebusco' both denote this post-harvest gathering with precision. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: gleanings, gleanings-of, like-gleanings-of | es: como-rebuscos, como-rebuscos-de, rebusco | fr: [כעוללת], [עוללות], glanure | de: Nachlese, [כעוללת], [כעללת] Judg 8:2; Isa 17:6; Isa 24:13; Jer 49:9; Obad 1:5

עָלַם H5956 Prep-l / V-Hitpael-Inf (28×)

To hide, conceal, or be hidden; in Hitpael, to look away deliberately; as substantive, secret or hidden things

A verb describing the act of concealing or the state of being hidden, spanning deliberate hiding (Hifil), passive concealment (Nifal), and willful avoidance (Hitpael). In Leviticus 4-5 the Nifal captures sins that are hidden from awareness — Spanish 'oculta' and French 'caché' both emphasize this unknowing concealment. The Hitpael in Deuteronomy 22 conveys a striking moral nuance: pretending not to see a neighbor's lost animal, where hiding is not physical but ethical. The participle-as-noun usage in Psalm 90:8 and Ecclesiastes 12:14 warns that no secret escapes God's sight.

1. hide, conceal actively (Hifil) (10×) The Hifil causative: actively and deliberately concealing something or someone. God hides his face (Isa 1:15), and humans hide wrongdoing or avert their eyes from duty (1 Sam 12:3). Spanish 'esconde' and English 'hide' both capture the volitional agency — this is not accidental obscurity but purposeful suppression of what should be visible or known. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: I-will-hide, and-I-will-hide, but-one-who-hides | es: ciertamente, escondas, esconde | fr: [אעלים], [תעלם], a-caché | de: [אעלים], [העלימו], [ומעלים] Lev 20:4; 1Sam 12:3; 2Kgs 4:27; Job 42:3

2. be hidden, be concealed (Nifal stative) (9×) The Nifal stative: being in a state of hiddenness from sight or knowledge. Leviticus 4:13 and 5:2-4 repeatedly use this form for ritual impurity that escapes the person's notice — the sin is real but concealed from the sinner's own awareness. French 'caché' and Spanish 'oculta' convey this passive, unwitting concealment. In Job 28:21, wisdom itself is 'hidden from the eyes of all living.' HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-it-is-hidden, hidden, was-hidden | es: Y-está-oculta, escondida, fue-oculto | fr: [נעלם], cacher, caché | de: [ונעלמה], [נעלם], [נעלמה] Lev 4:13; Lev 5:2; Lev 5:3; Lev 5:4; Num 5:13

3. hide oneself, look away deliberately (Hitpael) (6×) The Hitpael reflexive: hiding oneself or deliberately averting one's gaze. Deuteronomy 22:1-4 uses this form three times for the person who sees a neighbor's stray animal and pretends not to notice — a pointed ethical charge. In Psalm 55:1, the psalmist pleads with God not to 'hide himself' from his supplication. German renderings with 'verbergen dich selbst' capture the reflexive moral dimension. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-you-hide-yourself, hide-Yourself, melts- | es: esconderte, se-esconde, te-escondas | fr: [תתעלם], cacher, et-tu-cacher-toi-même | de: [יתעלם], [תתעלם], und-du-verbergen-dich-selbst Deut 22:1; Deut 22:3; Deut 22:4; Job 6:16; Ps 55:1

4. hidden things, secret matters (Nifal/Qal substantive) (3×) Participles used as substantives denoting hidden things or secret matters. In Psalm 90:8, 'our secret sins' (Qal passive participle) stand exposed before God's light. Ecclesiastes 12:14 declares that God will bring every 'hidden thing' into judgment. Psalm 26:4 identifies 'hidden ones' — those who act deceptively under cover. The shift from verbal process to nominal category underscores that what is hidden has a persistent, weighty reality. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: hidden-thing, our-secret-sins, the-hidden-ones | es: lo-oculto, lo-oculto-

de-nosotros, los-que-se-esconden | fr: cacher | de: [נעלם], der-verbarg, unser-verbarg Ps 26:4; Ps 90:8; Eccl 12:14

עָלַם H5957 N-ms (20×)

Perpetuity, eternity; also ancient time or antiquity. Aramaic cognate of Hebrew עוֹלָם.

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew עוֹלָם, this word appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. Its primary force is prospective — pointing forward into limitless duration. When Daniel declares that God's kingdom is 'an everlasting kingdom' (מַלְכוּת עָלַם, Daniel 3:33; 7:27), or when courtiers greet the king with 'live forever!' (לְעָלְמִין, Daniel 2:4), the word stretches into boundless future time. Yet in Ezra 4:15 and 4:19, it looks backward: 'from the days of old' (מִן־יוֹמָת עָלְמָא), describing Jerusalem's ancient rebellious reputation. The dual directionality is captured perfectly in Daniel 2:20: 'from eternity to eternity' (מִן־עָלְמָא וְעַד־עָלְמָא).

1. eternity, forever (18×) Eternity or perpetuity — limitless duration stretching into the future. This is the overwhelming sense, appearing in royal acclamations ('O king, live forever!', Daniel 2:4; 6:7), in descriptions of God's eternal kingdom (Daniel 3:33; 7:14, 27), and in the doxology of Daniel 2:20. The multilingual renderings converge strikingly: Spanish 'eternidad,' Korean 영원히, Swahili 'milele,' Arabic ولأبد, and Hindi सदा के लिए all point to the same unbounded temporal horizon. The emphatic plural עָלְמַיָּא ('ages of ages') in Daniel 7:18 intensifies the concept beyond simple duration. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: eternities, eternity, eternity-of | es: de-eternidades, eternidad, eterno | fr: [לעלמיא], [עלם], [עלמא] | de: Ewigkeit, Ewigkeiten, zu-Ewigkeiten Dan 2:4; Dan 2:20; Dan 2:44

2. ancient time, of old (2×) Ancient time or antiquity — the same unbounded temporal concept directed retrospectively toward the distant past. In Ezra 4:15 and 4:19, the phrase מִן־יוֹמָת עָלְמָא means 'from the days of old,' and the context is the Samaritan adversaries' letter warning Artaxerxes that Jerusalem has been rebellious 'since ancient times.' Spanish 'antiguos' and English 'old' confirm this backward-looking usage. The semantic architecture mirrors Hebrew עוֹלָם, which likewise can face either temporal direction depending on the preposition. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: old | es: antiguos | fr: éternité | de: [עלמא] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19

עֶלֶם H5958 Prep-l (2×)

the young man, to the young man (noun with article/preposition: a male youth or adolescent)

This noun denotes a young man or youth, appearing in contexts involving David's encounter with Goliath. In 1 Samuel 17:56, Saul asks 'Whose son is this young man?' (referring to David). In 1 Samuel 20:22, Jonathan uses 'the young man' to refer to his armor-bearer in coded speech to David. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'young man' or 'youth' ('joven,' 'muchacho,' 'jeune homme'), situating the term in the semantic field of adolescence or early adulthood.

(2×) Refers to a male youth, specifically David (1 Samuel 17:56) and Jonathan's armor-bearer (1 Samuel 20:22). The prepositional and article forms ('the young man,' 'to the young man') reflect syntactic roles in narrative contexts. All target languages render 'young man' or equivalent, capturing the age and social status of the referent. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: the-young-man, to-the-young-man | es: al-joven, el-muchacho | fr: le-jeune-homme, à-le-jeune-homme | de: der-jung-Mann, zu-der-jung-Mann 1Sam 17:56; 1Sam 20:22

עַלְמָה H5959 Conj-w / N-fp (7×)

A young woman of marriageable age; maiden, with connotations of virginity in many traditions (cf. Isa 7:14)

This noun designates a young woman who has reached the age of marriage, carrying strong connotations of youth and, in many translation traditions, virginity. Its most famous occurrence is Isaiah 7:14, where the Septuagint rendered it with Greek parthenos ('virgin'), shaping centuries of messianic interpretation. Elsewhere it appears naturally: Rebekah at the well (Gen 24:43), Miriam watching baby Moses (Exod 2:8), and young women in festive processions (Ps 68:25). The plural form appears in Song of Songs for the 'maidens' who love the bridegroom (Song 1:3).

young woman, maiden, virgin (7×) A young woman of marriageable age, typically unmarried and presumed chaste. The term occurs in pivotal narrative moments: Rebekah approaching the well (Gen 24:43), young Miriam watching over Moses (Exod 2:8), and most consequentially in Isaiah's Immanuel prophecy (Isa 7:14), where the LXX translation as parthenos shaped Christian theology. Spanish 'doncella' and French 'jeune fille' both emphasize youthful femininity. The plural appears in festive and romantic contexts: maidens in procession (Ps 68:25) and the beloved's admirers in Song of Songs (1:3; 6:8). VIRGIN MAIDEN

en: and-maidens, maidens, the-virgin | es: con-doncella, doncellas, la-doncella | fr: [העלמה], dans-בעלמה, et-des-jeunes-filles | de: [העלמה], [ועלמות], [עלמות] Gen 24:43; Exod 2:8; Ps 68:25; Prov 30:19; Song 1:3

עַלְמוֹן H5960 N-proper-fs (1×)

Almon, a Levitical city in Benjamin's territory, identical with Alemeth

Almon was one of the cities assigned to the Levites from Benjamin's inheritance. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:60 calls it Alemeth, showing the fluid nature of place name transmission. The Septuagint's variants ('Gamala,' 'Almon,' 'Elmon') further demonstrate this variation. Located about an hour northeast of Jerusalem at modern Almit, it served as one of the towns where Levites lived, fulfilling the plan to distribute the priestly tribe throughout Israel's territory. These Levitical cities created a network of religious instruction and leadership across all the tribes.

(1×) A Levitical town in Benjamin listed in Joshua 21:18. All major translations preserve this as 'Almon,' recognizing it as identical with Alemeth of 1 Chronicles 6:60. The assignment of cities to Levites (who received no tribal territory) fulfilled the plan to spread religious leadership throughout Israel, ensuring that teaching and priestly service remained accessible to all tribes. Almon's location near Jerusalem gave it strategic importance in Benjamin's inheritance. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Almon | es: Almón | fr: Almon | de: Almon Josh 21:18

עַלְמָה H5961 N-fp (2×)

young women, maidens; Alamoth (musical term: soprano voices or high-pitched instruments)

This noun primarily denotes young women of marriageable age, appearing in poetic and narrative contexts. But in several psalm superscriptions (1 Chronicles 15:20, Psalm 46:1), it functions as a musical term: עַל־עֲלָמוֹת likely means 'according to Alamoth' (soprano or high voices, perhaps sung by boys or women). The BDB notes that the term may indicate falsetto or the voice of young women. The multilingual glosses transliterate 'Alamoth' in the musical contexts, treating it as a technical liturgical term.

(2×) In musical contexts (1 Chronicles 15:20, Psalm 46:1), 'Alamoth' designates a style of singing or instrumentation—likely soprano or high-pitched, associated with young women's voices or boys' falsetto. All target languages transliterate the term ('alamoth,' 'Alamoth'), recognizing it as a liturgical rubric rather than a common noun. GIRL YOUNG WOMAN

en: Alamot, alamoth | es: alamot | fr: Alamoth, [עלמות] | de: [עלמות], alamoth 1Chr 15:20; Ps 46:1

עֵלָמִי H5962 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elamites, people from Elam (southwestern Iran); descendants of Shem's son Elam

The Elamites were inhabitants of Elam, the ancient kingdom east of Mesopotamia in what is now southwestern Iran. Elam appears in Genesis 10 as one of Shem's sons, making Elamites part of the Semitic family of nations. Ezra 4:9 mentions them among the peoples forcibly resettled in Samaria by the Assyrian Empire, part of the policy of population displacement that created the mixed population of the region. Elamites also appear in Acts 2 at Pentecost, showing their continued presence in the ancient Near East. They represent the far-reaching scope of imperial conquest and deportation.

(1×) The people from Elam mentioned in Ezra 4:9 among those resettled in Samaria and opposing the Jerusalem temple rebuilding. The translations consistently render this as 'Elamites' or 'Elamaye' (English and Spanish: 'Elamaye/los-elamitas'), identifying them as a distinct ethnic group. Their inclusion in this list demonstrates how Assyrian and Babylonian deportation policies created complex, multi-ethnic populations in formerly Israelite territories—a key factor in the conflicts faced by post-exilic returnees. ELAM NATION REGION

en: Elamaye | es: los-elamitas. | fr: [עלמיא] | de: [עלמיא] Ezra 4:9

עַלְמוֹן דִּבְלָתָיְמָה H5963 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Almon Diblathaim (place name: a Moabite encampment in the Israelite wilderness itinerary)

Almon Diblathaim is a station in the Israelite journey through the wilderness, located in Moab. It appears in Numbers 33:46-47, where the Israelites camp there before moving to the mountains of Abarim. The name may mean 'Almon of the two fig-cakes.' The BDB notes that it is equivalent to Beth Diblathaim mentioned elsewhere. The Septuagint renders it Γελμων Δεβλαθαιμ. All modern translations transliterate the compound name with appropriate prepositions ('in Almon Diblathaim,' 'from Almon Diblathaim').

(2×) A wilderness encampment in Moab (Numbers 33:46-47), part of the exodus itinerary. The prepositional forms ('in Almon Diblathaim,' 'from Almon Diblathaim') reflect arrival and departure in the travel narrative. All target languages transliterate the compound toponym, preserving the prepositional nuances. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Almon-diblathaim, in-Almon-diblathaim | es: de-Almón-Diblataim, en-Almón-Diblataim | fr: dans-Almon-diblathaim, de-Almon-diblathaim | de: in-Almon-diblathaim, von-Almon-diblathaim Num 33:46; Num 33:47

עָלֶמֶת H5964 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Alemeth; a Benjamite personal name and a Levitical city, meaning uncertain

A name appearing in two contexts: as a Benjamite descendant in genealogies and as a Levitical city (also spelled Almon elsewhere). In 1 Chronicles 6-9, the genealogical lists show variant spellings reflecting textual transmission. The LXX Greek transliterations vary widely (Salamaith, Galemeth, Alamoth), suggesting scribal uncertainty about the exact form. As a place name, it designates a Levitical city in Benjamin's territory. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration rather than translation, typical for proper names.

(4×) Personal and place name occurring in Benjamite genealogies (1 Chr 8:36, 9:42) and as a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:60). The name appears with spelling variants (Alemeth/Alemeth/Alameth), and may be identical with Almon mentioned elsewhere. The diverse LXX renderings indicate textual fluidity in proper name transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Alemet, and-Alemet | es: Alemet, Alémet, y-Alamet | fr: [ועלמת], [עלמת] | de: [ועלמת], [עלמת] 1Chr 6:60; 1Chr 7:8; 1Chr 8:36; 1Chr 9:42

עָלַס H5965 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

To rejoice, delight; expressing joy through words or celebratory action

This rare verb appears only three times, always expressing joyful delight or exultant celebration. Job 20:18 says the wicked man 'will not rejoice' in ill-gotten gain, using it parallel to other verbs of joy. Job 39:13 describes the ostrich's wing 'flapping joyously,' a vivid image of exuberant movement. Most provocatively, Proverbs 7:18 has the adulteress inviting 'let us delight ourselves with love,' a perverse celebration of illicit pleasure. The root appears in rabbinic Hebrew meaning 'rejoicing' and shares semantic space with other Hebrew verbs of jubilation. The three contexts show joy's range—economic satisfaction, natural exuberance, and sensual delight.

(3×) Three occurrences showing verbal forms in Qal, Niphal, and Hithpael. Job 20:18 denies the wicked true rejoicing in their gains. Job 39:13's image of joyously flapping wings captures natural, unself-conscious exultation. Proverbs 7:18's use in the seduction speech shows the word's semantic neutrality—it can describe legitimate or illegitimate joy depending on context. The multilingual evidence shows varied handling: some preserve transliteration, others attempt semantic glosses. The verb's rarity makes its precise nuance harder to establish than more common synonyms. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: flaps-joyously, he-rejoices, let-us-delight-ourselves | es: bate-gozosa, deleitémonos, se-regocijará. | fr: יעלס, נעלסה, נתעלסה | de: [יעלס], [נעלסה], [נתעלסה] Job 20:18; Job 39:13; Prov 7:18

עָלַע H5966 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (1×)

to drink up, swallow greedily (uncertain); possibly textual corruption

This obscure verb appears only in Job 39:30, describing how eagles' young 'drink up' or 'swallow' blood. However, the text is quite uncertain, and most scholars suggest this represents a textual corruption of a form of the verb 'la'a' (to swallow/gulp). The context describes the eagle's fierce nature—where the slain are, there the eagle is found, and its young ones eagerly consume blood. Whether the original verb was 'ala'a' or 'la'a,' the meaning converges on the image of greedy, eager consumption of prey. BDB notes this as an assumed root reconstructed from this single difficult passage.

(1×) A verb of uncertain meaning in Job 39:30, likely describing eagles' young drinking blood, though possibly a textual error for a different verb. The translations show the uncertainty (English: 'drink-up', Spanish: 'sorben' [suck up/absorb]), but all convey the image of consuming blood. The broader context of Job 39's animal descriptions emphasizes creatures' fierce, untamed nature—part of God's response to Job showing divine wisdom in creation's wildness and power. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: drink-up- | es: sorben- | fr: יעלעו | de: [יעלעו] Job 39:30

עֶלַע H5967 N-fp (1×)

ribs (Aramaic); the curved bones of the torso or sides of the body

This Aramaic term denotes ribs, the bones forming the side of the chest cavity. Daniel 7:5 uses it in describing the second beast of his vision—a bear with 'three ribs in its mouth between its teeth.' The image portrays a powerful, carnivorous creature actively devouring prey, with ribs (from its victims) still lodged in its jaws. The detail emphasizes the beast's voracious, destructive nature. In ancient symbolism, such vivid images represented empires and their conquests. The term is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'tsela',' which can mean rib or side.

(1×) The ribs in the mouth of the bear-like beast in Daniel 7:5. All major translations consistently render this as 'ribs' (English, Spanish: 'costillas', French: 'côte'), recognizing the anatomical reference. The three ribs symbolically represent nations or territories devoured by the empire the bear represents (commonly interpreted as Medo-Persia). The visual of a predator with victims' bones in its teeth powerfully communicates imperial conquest and domination. FLESH AND BODY

en: ribs | es: costillas | fr: côte | de: [עלעין] Dan 7:5

עָלַף H5968 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3fs (5×)

to cover, enwrap; to faint or swoon from exhaustion; reflexively, to wrap or veil oneself

This verb spans a striking semantic arc from physical covering to loss of consciousness. In the Pual, it describes ivory 'encrusted with' sapphires (Song 5:14) and people 'enshrouded' or swooning at street corners from famine (Isa 51:20). The Hithpael captures Tamar wrapping herself in a veil as disguise (Gen 38:14) and Jonah fainting from the scorching east wind (Jonah 4:8). The common thread is envelopment — whether by fabric, precious stone, or overwhelming physical sensation. The Arabic cognate ghalafa ('to sheathe, cover') confirms the root meaning.

(5×) To cover, encrust, or overlay a surface, as in Song 5:14 where the beloved's body is described as ivory set or 'covered with' sapphires. The Pual passive form emphasizes the resulting state of being overlaid. Spanish 'cubierta' ('covered') and French 'couvert' directly reflect this concrete sense of physical surface covering. The Arabic cognate ghalafa ('to sheathe') and Assyrian elpitu support a primary meaning of envelopment or encasing. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-he-fainted, and-wrapped-herself, covered-with | es: cubierta, desfallecerán, desfallecieron | fr: [עלפן], couvert, et-languir | de: [ויתעלף], [מעלפת], [עלכן] Gen 38:14; Song 5:14; Isa 51:20; Amos 8:13; Jonah 4:8

עָלַף H5969 N-fs (1×)

fainted, enshrouded, covered; overcome physically or having senses obscured

This verb describes being covered, enveloped, or having one's senses obscured—either fainting from exhaustion or being enshrouded in confusion. Ezekiel 31:15 uses it in a metaphor about trees of Eden fainting or being covered in mourning when the great cedar (Assyria) fell. The context suggests the trees are enshrouded or covered (perhaps in darkness or mourning), though some translations understand it as fainting or swooning. The image conveys sympathetic response to catastrophic fall—all creation reacts when judgment strikes the mighty. The verb captures both physical covering and the overwhelming of consciousness.

(1×) The state of being covered, fainted, or enshrouded in Ezekiel 31:15, describing the trees' response to the fall of the great cedar. The translations show interpretive range (English: 'fainted', Spanish: 'se-desmayaron' [fainted/swooned], French: 'nuage' [cloud]), but converge on the image of being overcome or covered. The broader context of Ezekiel 31's allegory uses Eden's trees to represent nations —when mighty Assyria fell, all others were affected, either fainting in fear or being covered in mourning. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: fainted | es: se-desmayaron | fr: nuage | de: [עלפה] Ezek 31:15

עָלַץ H5970 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (8×)

To exult, rejoice greatly; expressing deep, triumphant joy typically directed toward God.

A Qal verb expressing exuberant, triumphant joy – stronger than ordinary gladness, closer to leaping exultation. It occurs almost exclusively in worship and prayer contexts directed toward God. Hannah's prayer provides the paradigmatic use: 'my heart exults in the LORD' (1 Sam 2:1). The Psalms pair it with singing and rejoicing (Ps 5:11, 9:2, 68:3), while Proverbs uses it for civic gladness when the righteous prosper (Prov 11:10, 28:12). Spanish 'se gozaran' (they will rejoice) and English 'exult' consistently render this intense, celebratory emotion.

exult, rejoice (8×) To exult or rejoice with intense, often triumphant gladness, typically directed toward God in worship or thanksgiving. The verb conveys a joy that overflows into visible or vocal expression, frequently paralleled with singing (zamar) and shouting for joy (ranan). Hannah's song establishes the pattern: 'my heart exults in the LORD' (1 Sam 2:1). The Psalms deploy it for communal worship (Ps 5:11 'let all who take refuge in you exult'; Ps 68:3 'exult before God'). Proverbs extends it to civic life, where public exultation marks the righteous community's flourishing (Prov 11:10, 28:12). REJOICING AND GREETING

en: and-exult, and-let-exult, exults | es: Cuando-se-gozan, exulte, se-gozarán | fr: [יעלץ], dans-בעלץ, et-exulter | de: [בעלץ], [יעלץ], [תעלץ] 1Sam 2:1; 1Chr 16:32; Ps 5:11; Ps 9:2; Ps 25:2

H5971 Art / N-ms (1×)

the people, nation; used of Israel as God's covenant people

This is the common Hebrew word for people or nation, appearing thousands of times throughout the Old Testament. In Jeremiah 17:19, it appears with the definite article in the phrase 'gate of the sons of the people,' referring to a public gate where common people passed. The term 'am can designate Israel as God's covenant people, other nations, or simply a population. It emphasizes collective identity and shared belonging. When used of Israel, it carries deep covenant significance—these are 'my people,' bound to God through promise and obligation. The word captures both ethnic identity and theological relationship.

(1×) The people in Jeremiah 17:19, appearing in the designation of a public gate. The multilingual evidence shows this with the definite article (English: 'the-people', Spanish: '(el-pueblo)', French and German: '[(העם)]'), indicating a specific location where the populace gathered. Jeremiah's instruction to stand in this gate emphasizes public proclamation—the prophet must deliver God's word where people congregate, ensuring maximum exposure to the message of Sabbath observance and covenant faithfulness. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: the-people | es: (el-pueblo) | fr: [(העם)] | de: [(העם)] Jer 17:19

עַם H5971a Conj-w (1838×)

People, nation, community — a collective body of persons, especially Israel or the nations

The noun עַם is the Hebrew Bible's primary term for a collective body of people, whether Israel ('my people'), a foreign nation, or humanity in general. It appears nearly 1,840 times, deeply woven into covenantal language: God calls Israel עַמִּי ('my people,' Exod 3:7) and the nations are עַמִּים ('peoples'). The word's root likely connotes kinship or connectedness, distinguishing it from גּוֹי, which emphasizes political or territorial nationhood. Every major language mirrors this collective meaning — 'pueblo,' 'peuple,' 'Volk.'

1. people, nation (1836×) The dominant and nearly exclusive sense: a collective body of people, whether Israel as God's covenant people, a foreign nation, or nations in general. It encompasses singular and plural uses, with or without article, prepositions, and possessive suffixes. Glosses across all target languages converge on collective nouns — 'el pueblo,' 'le peuple,' 'das Volk' — affirming a single core meaning. From Gen 19:4 ('all the people') through the prophets, this sense carries covenantal, ethnic, and national weight. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: the-people | es: el-pueblo | fr: le-peuple | de: Volk, das-Volk, dem-Volk Gen 19:4; Gen 26:11; Gen 32:7; Gen 41:55; Gen 47:23

2. (1×) An occurrence at 2 Sam 13:34 where the sense is contextually unclear or disputed. The passage describes the watchman seeing people coming, and the word may function in its standard collective sense but with an ambiguous referent. The gloss evidence ('people,' 'pueblo,' 'peuple,' 'Volk') is identical to sense 1, suggesting this may be a marginal or textually difficult instance rather than a distinct semantic category. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: people | es: pueblo | fr: peuple | de: Volk 2Sam 13:34

3. (1×) An occurrence at Song 6:12 where עַמִּי appears in a notoriously difficult verse — 'I did not know; my desire set me among the chariots of my noble people' (or 'of Amminadib'). The possessive 'my people' is clear from the glosses ('my people,' 'mi pueblo,' 'de mon peuple,' 'mein Volk'), but whether עַמִּי־נָדִיב is a compound proper name or 'my noble people' remains one of the most debated textual questions in the Song of Solomon. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: my-people- | es: mi-pueblo- | fr: de-mon-peuple | de: mein-Volk Song 6:12

עַם H5971b Prep-m / N-mpc / 3fs (31×)

Kinsman, kinfolk; one's ancestral people or clan, especially in the idiom 'gathered to his peoples'

A variant of the common Hebrew word for 'people,' this form carries the more intimate sense of kinship and ancestral ties. It appears most often in the plural with possessive suffixes in the formulaic death notice 'gathered to his peoples' (ne'esaf el-ammav), signaling reunion with deceased ancestors (Gen 25:8; Num 27:13). The singular form occasionally surfaces in prophetic or covenantal contexts meaning 'my people' or 'his people,' where the kinship bond between God and Israel is in view. German and French renderings consistently use Volk/peuple with possessive pronouns, reflecting the personal, familial dimension.

1. kinfolk, one's own people (25×) Kinfolk or ancestral clan, most often in the plural with pronominal suffixes in death and covenant-exclusion formulas. The phrase nikhrat me-ammeyha ('cut off from her peoples,' Gen 17:14) and ne'esaf el-ammav ('gathered to his peoples,' Gen 25:8) treat the deceased kin-group as a continuing reality one joins or is severed from. Spanish de-su-pueblo and German sein-Volk capture the possessive, personal quality of this kinship reference. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: among-his-people, from-her-people, from-his-people | es: de-pueblo-suyo, de-su-pueblo, de-sus-pueblos | fr: de-peuple-sa, de-peuples-son, de-sa-peuple | de: aus-ihrem-Volk, dein-Volk, sein-Volk Gen 17:14; Gen 25:8; Gen 25:17; Gen 35:29; Gen 49:33

2. people, nation (collective) (6×) A collective designation for one's national people, used in the singular with suffixes in prophetic or legal discourse. In Gen 49:29 Jacob commands burial with ammai ('my kinsmen'), and in Judg 14:3 Samson's parents protest that there is no suitable wife among ammi ('my people'). The shift from plural kinfolk to singular nation mirrors how French peuple-mon and Spanish mi-pueblo render the term as a unified body rather than individual relatives. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: my-people, people-her, people-his | es: mi-pueblo, su-pueblo | fr: mon-peuple, peuple-leur, peuple-mon | de: Volk-ihr, Volk-sein, mein-Volk Gen 49:29; Lev 17:4; Lev 17:10; Lev 18:29; Judg 14:3

עַם H5972 N-mpd (15×)

People, nation (Aramaic); the collective population of a kingdom or ethnic group in Daniel and Ezra.

This Aramaic noun ᶜam functions exactly like its Hebrew cognate, designating a people or national population. It appears in the royal decrees and apocalyptic visions of Daniel and Ezra, where Babylonian and Persian kings address 'all peoples, nations, and tongues' (Dan 3:4, 7; 5:19; 6:26; 7:14). The emphatic plural ᶜammayāʾ recurs in these sweeping proclamations, while the singular appears in contexts like Cyrus's decree referencing 'its people' (the Jewish nation, Ezra 5:12; 6:12). German 'Volk' and Spanish 'pueblo' both capture the collective national sense. The word's restriction to Aramaic court and visionary contexts gives it a distinctly imperial register.

people, nation (15×) A collective noun for a people or nation, the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew עַם. Used in the imperial Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra to denote national or ethnic groups, especially in formulaic royal addresses ('all peoples, nations, and languages,' Dan 3:4; 7:14) and in administrative decrees concerning the Jewish people (Ezra 5:12; 7:13, 25). The grammatical variants —singular, plural, determinate, with prepositions—all share this single referent of a collective national population. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: O-peoples, and-people, and-the-people | es: a-pueblo, al-pueblo, el-pueblo | fr: [ועמה], [עמא], [עמה] | de: Volk, [ועמה], [עמא] Ezra 5:12; Ezra 6:12; Ezra 7:13; Ezra 7:16; Ezra 7:25

עִם H5973a Prep / 3fs (978×)

With, together with; preposition of accompaniment, proximity, opposition, or possession.

The preposition 'im is one of the workhorses of biblical Hebrew, appearing nearly a thousand times to express the fundamental experience of being 'with' someone. At its heart it denotes accompaniment — walking with God, dwelling with one's neighbor, going out with an army. Yet like its Arabic cognate ma'a and Aramaic 'im, it stretches beyond simple togetherness. In striking passages it flips to mean 'against,' as when Moses charges Israel with rebellion 'with' the LORD (Deut 9:7). It also shades into spatial proximity ('beside the oak at Shechem,' Gen 35:4) or possession ('there is fodder with us,' Gen 24:25).

1. accompaniment, together with (956×) The overwhelming comitative sense: accompaniment, association, being together with someone or something. This accounts for 956 of 978 occurrences and is the default meaning across all suffix forms and constructions. Abraham pleads with God concerning Sodom: 'Will you sweep away the righteous with the wicked?' (Gen 18:23). The multilingual evidence is unanimous — Spanish con, French avec, German mit/bei, Arabic ma'a, and Swahili pamoja na all converge on simple togetherness. The sense covers everything from physical presence ('God was with the boy,' Gen 21:20) to covenantal partnership ('I will make my covenant with you,' Gen 17:2). ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: with, with- | es: con, con- | fr: avec, avec- | de: bei, bei-, mit Gen 18:23; Gen 18:25; Gen 21:10; Gen 22:5

2. spatial proximity, beside (15×) Spatial proximity: beside, near, at a specific location. Fifteen occurrences shift the semantic weight from relational accompaniment to physical nearness. Isaac dwells 'at' Beer-lahai-roi (Gen 25:11), Jacob buries the foreign gods 'under the oak that was beside Shechem' (Gen 35:4), and Ai is described as 'beside Beth-aven' (Josh 7:2). Arabic 'inda ('at, beside') and Spanish junto a / cerca de both select locative vocabulary here rather than pure comitative, confirming a real spatial sub-sense that BDB connects etymologically to the Arabic noun 'indun ('side'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at, beside, beside- | es: cerca-de, con, con- | fr: avec, avec-, est-près- | de: Volk, bei, bei- Gen 25:11; Gen 35:4; Josh 7:2; Judg 9:6; Judg 18:3

3. adversative, against (6×) Adversative sense: against, in opposition to. Six occurrences invert the expected comitative meaning to express hostility or rebellion. Moses twice charges Israel: 'You have been rebellious against the LORD' (Deut 9:7, 24), and the psalmist asks 'Who will stand up for me against the evildoers?' (Ps 94:16). Arabic uses explicitly adversative prepositions (didda, 'ala) in these contexts, and Spanish shifts from con to contra, showing that the opposition sense is cross-linguistically marked as distinct from accompaniment. This semantic flip from 'with' to 'against' has parallels in many languages (cf. English 'to have a bone with someone'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, with | es: con-, contra | fr: avec, peuple | de: gegen-mit, mit Deut 9:7; Deut 9:24; Deut 31:27; Ps 89:38; Ps 94:16

4. possession, in custody of (1×) Possessive or existential sense: in the keeping of, at the disposal of. A single clear occurrence at Gen 24:25, where Rebekah declares 'both straw and fodder are plentiful with us' — meaning 'we have them available.' French chez nous and Arabic 'indana ('at our place / we have') capture the possessive nuance perfectly. This marginal sense illustrates how the spatial 'beside' meaning can shade into 'in the possession of,' a development well attested across Semitic prepositions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-with-us | es: con-nosotros | fr: est-avec-nous | de: bei-uns Gen 24:25

מֵעִם H5973b Prep / Prep / 2ms (71×)

Compound preposition 'from with, from beside' (source from someone's presence/proximity); rarely comparative 'more than what is with.'

The compound preposition me'im combines the directional min ('from') with im ('with') to produce a nuanced spatial-relational idea: departure from someone's presence, or origin traced to someone's vicinity. Nearly all 71 occurrences express this 'from-with' relationship — Lot departing from Abraham (Gen 13:14), a spirit departing from Saul (1 Sam 16:14), or requesting something from someone's presence (Deut 10:12, 'what does the LORD require from you?'). Spanish de-con, French de-avec, and German von all attempt to capture the compound force, though no single preposition in any target language perfectly mirrors the fusion of separation and accompaniment. A lone comparative use in 2 Chronicles 32:7, where Hezekiah reassures his people that 'with us is more than with him,' pushes me'im into a 'greater-than-what-is-with' construction unique in the corpus.

1. source from proximity (70×) Source from proximity: 'from with,' 'from beside,' indicating departure, origin, or derivation from someone's presence or company. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (70 occurrences) governs verbs of departing, taking, removing, and requesting — Lot separating from Abraham (Gen 13:14), the spirit of the LORD departing from Saul (1 Sam 16:14), Elisha asking for a double portion before Elijah is taken 'from with you' (2 Kgs 2:9), and Moses asking 'what does the LORD require from you?' (Deut 10:12). Spanish de-junto-a and German von capture the ablative force, while French de-avec preserves both components of the compound preposition. The pronominal suffixes (me'immo, me'immanu, me'immakhem) confirm the relational, person-oriented nature of this spatial concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-with | es: de-con, de-junto-a | fr: de-avec | de: von, von-, von-Volk Gen 24:27; Gen 41:32; Gen 44:29; Gen 44:32; Gen 48:12

2. comparative from association (1×) Comparative force in a rare construction: 'more than what is with' someone, expressing superiority over another's resources or alliance. Only one clear occurrence — Hezekiah's rallying speech to Jerusalem under Assyrian siege: 'with us is more than with him' (2 Chr 32:7), where me'immo contrasts the divine ally accompanying Judah against the merely human army accompanying Sennacherib. English 'than with him,' Spanish que-con-el, and the construction's uniqueness in the corpus all mark this as a genuinely distinct, contextually driven comparative extension of the basic 'from-with' preposition. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: than-with-him | es: que-con-él | fr: [מעמו] | de: [מעמו] 2Chr 32:7

עִם H5974 Prep (22×)

with, together with – Aramaic preposition of accompaniment, association, or temporal simultaneity

The standard Aramaic preposition expressing accompaniment or association, directly cognate with Hebrew im ('with'). In Daniel and Ezra it conveys physical togetherness ('with the clouds of heaven,' Dan 7:13), cooperative action ('prophesied with them,' Ezra 5:2), divine dwelling ('light dwells with him,' Dan 2:22), and hostile engagement ('made war with the saints,' Dan 7:21). It also carries a temporal use meaning 'during' or 'throughout,' as in 'with generation and generation' (Dan 3:33; 4:31) and 'during the night' (Dan 7:2). Syriac am preserves the same form.

with, together with (22×) The Aramaic preposition of accompaniment ('with, together with'), expressing association, proximity, cooperative or hostile interaction, and temporal simultaneity. Appears across Daniel and Ezra with various pronominal suffixes (immi 'with me,' immeh 'with him,' immakh 'with you,' immehon 'with them'). Key passages include the messianic vision of one coming with the clouds (Dan 7:13), divine knowledge dwelling with God (Dan 2:22), and the temporal formula 'with all generations' (Dan 3:33). Cognate with Hebrew im and Syriac am. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: and-with-, and-with-them, with | es: con, con-, contigo | fr: avec, et-avec, peuple | de: Volk, [ועמהון], dein-Volk Ezra 5:2; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 7:13; Ezra 7:16; Dan 2:11

עָמַד H5975 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (526×)

To stand, take one's stand; stand firm or endure; stop, stand still; station or appoint; set up, establish; serve, attend

A foundational verb of posture and position in the Hebrew Bible, amad covers the full spectrum from simple physical standing to metaphorical endurance, from stopping in one's tracks to being stationed in official service. Its Hifil causative adds the dimension of placing others — appointing a priest, erecting a pillar, establishing a decree. The root is deeply pan-Semitic: Arabic amada means to prop up or support, Ethiopic preserves it in the noun 'pillar' (amud), and Aramaic ammuda carries the same architectural sense. Across translations, the range is striking: Korean distinguishes seoda (stand) from gyeondida (endure) and meomchuda (stop), while Spanish separates pararse from permanecer and establecer.

1. to stand, stand up (310×) Physical standing or taking a standing posture — the basic, unmarked Qal sense covering about 59% of occurrences. Abraham stood by the angels under the tree (Gen 18:8), and Pharaoh stood by the Nile in his dream (Gen 41:1). Spanish pararse/ponerse de pie and French se tenir capture this concrete positional meaning uniformly. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-he-stood, and-stood | es: Y-se-paró, Y-se-puso-de-pie, y-estuvo | fr: et-il-se-tint, et-se-tint | de: und-er-stand, und-stand Gen 18:8; Gen 18:22; Gen 24:30; Gen 41:1; Gen 41:17

2. to station, appoint (48×) Hifil causative: stationing, appointing, or positioning a person in a role or place. Joseph stationed his father before Pharaoh (Gen 47:7), and Moses stationed the Levites (Num 8:13). Spanish establecio/puso and German stellte mark the causative agency clearly distinct from intransitive standing. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-I-stationed, and-appointed, and-appointed- | es: Y-estableció, Y-puse, Y-puso | fr: et-se-tenir | de: und-er-stand, und-stellte Gen 47:7; Exod 9:16; Num 8:13; Num 11:24; Num 27:22

3. to stand still, stop (48×) Standing still, halting, ceasing motion or activity — the cessation aspect of standing. Lot was told not to stand still when fleeing Sodom (Gen 19:17), and Leah stopped bearing (Gen 29:35, lit. 'stood from bearing'). Korean meomchuda and French s'arreter distinguish this stopping sense from static posture. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-it-stood, and-stood, and-stood-still | es: Esperad, Y-estuvo-de-pie, estaban-de-pie | fr: et-cela-se-tint, et-il-se-tint, et-se-tint | de: stand, stehen, steht Gen 19:17; Gen 29:35; Gen 30:9; Gen 45:9; Exod 18:13

4. to set up, establish (42×) Hifil: setting up, erecting, or establishing an object, institution, or decree. The priest shall set the person before the LORD (Lev 14:11), and offerings are set up before the tabernacle (Lev 16:7). The Aramaic cognate in 'pillar' (ammuda) preserves this concrete causative sense of raising something upright. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: You-have-set, and-He-sets-up, and-he-set-up | es: Y-harás-estar, Y-pondrá, el-que-estaba-de-pie | fr: et-devra-se-tenir, et-il-devra-faire-se-tenir, et-il-devra-se-tenir | de: der-stand, stand, stehen Lev 14:11; Lev 16:7; Lev 27:8; Lev 27:11; Num 3:6

5. to endure, persist through time (41×) Hifil: setting up, erecting, or establishing an object, institution, or decree. The priest shall set the person before the LORD (Lev 14:11), and offerings are set up before the tabernacle (Lev 16:7). The Aramaic cognate in 'pillar' (ammuda) preserves this concrete causative sense of raising something upright.
en: and-He-will-stand, and-he-shall-stand, and-shall-stand | es: Y-estará, Y-se-levantará, permanece | fr: et-il-s'est-tenu, et-il-se-tint, il-se-tiendra | de: er-steht, stand, stehen Exod 21:21; 2Kgs 6:31; 2Kgs 13:6; 2Kgs 15:20; Esth 3:4

6. to stand firm against opposition, withstand (21×) Standing before a superior in service or attendance — a specialized sense where position implies liturgical or courtly function. The Levites who stood to minister (1 Chr 6:33), Solomon's servants who stood before him (2 Chr 9:7), and those who stood before God in priestly service. Swahili kusimama mbele ya and Korean seomgida capture the attendant posture.
en: can-stand, could-stand, he-shall-stand | es: estará-de-pie, estarás, nos-mantendremos | fr: devra-se-tenir, il-se-tiendra, ils-se-tint | de: du-soll-stehen, er-steht, kann-stehe Exod 18:23; Deut 24:11; Josh 10:8; 2Kgs 10:4

7. to serve, attend (14×) Standing before a superior in service or attendance — a specialized sense where position implies liturgical or courtly function. The Levites who stood to minister (1 Chr 6:33), Solomon's servants who stood before him (2 Chr 9:7), and those who stood before God in priestly service. Swahili kusimama mbele ya and Korean seomgida capture the attendant posture. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: the-ones-standing, the-standing, to-stand | es: Los-que-están, estar-de-pie, las-que-estaban | fr: le-se-tenir, se-tenir, à-tiens-toi | de: der-stand, stand, stehen 1Sam 6:20; 1Kgs 8:11; 1Chr 6:33; 2Chr 9:7; 2Chr 10:8

8. to be made to stand (2×) Hofal passive: being caused to stand, being set in position by another's agency. Only two occurrences — the scapegoat 'shall be made to stand alive' before the LORD (Lev 16:10) and the king 'was propped up' in his chariot (1 Kgs 22:35).

Spanish sera hecho estar and English 'propped up' convey the passive causation. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: let-be-stood-, propped-up | es: será-hecho-estar-, sostenido | fr: laisse-être-se-tint-, propped-en-haut | de: lass-sein-stand-, propped-hinauf Lev 16:10; 1Kgs 22:35

מָעַד H5976 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-2ms (1×)

to cause to shake, make unstable; used of causing physical instability or wavering

This Hiphil verb means to cause shaking, slipping, or tottering—to make something unstable or cause someone to waver. Ezekiel 29:7 uses it metaphorically of Egypt's unreliability as an ally: when Israel leaned on Egypt (depicted as a staff), it broke and made all their backs shake or totter. The image powerfully conveys political betrayal—instead of providing support, Egypt's failure caused instability and injury. The verb captures the causative action of inducing instability in another. It relates to the root meaning of slipping, sliding, or losing firm footing.

(1×) The act of causing something to shake or totter in Ezekiel 29:7, used figuratively of Egypt making Israel's backs unstable. The translations (English: 'and-you-made-shake', Spanish: 'e-hiciste-tambalear' [made totter], French: 'et-vaciller' [waver]) capture the causative sense. The metaphor of the broken reed-staff that injures rather than supports expresses Ezekiel's indictment of Egypt as a treacherous ally—Israel's trust in Egypt for protection against Babylon was misplaced and actually caused harm. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: and-you-made-shake | es: e-hiciste-tambalear | fr: et-vaciller | de: [והעמדת] Ezek 29:7

עֹמֶד H5977 N-msc / 3ms (6×)

Standing place, appointed station; a fixed position for worship, assembly, or divine encounter.

The noun עֹמֶד (omed) means 'standing place' or 'appointed station,' derived from the root עמד ('to stand'). Appearing only with suffixes and after prepositions (עַל־עָמְדָם, 'in their place'), it designates the fixed position where a person stands for a formal occasion. Most occurrences describe worship or assembly stations: the Levites and people standing in their appointed places during Hezekiah's and Josiah's reforms (2 Chr 30:16; 34:31; 35:10), and the people standing during Ezra's Torah reading (Neh 8:7; 9:3; 13:11). Daniel uses it for the spot where he stood during his angelic vision (Dan 8:17-18; 10:11).

standing place, station, position (6×) A standing place or appointed station — the fixed spot where one is positioned for worship, liturgical assembly, or a divine encounter. The term typically occurs in the phrase עַל־עָמְדָם ('in their place'), describing the organized positions of Levites and worshipers during temple reforms under Hezekiah (2 Chr 30:16), Josiah (2 Chr 34:31; 35:10), and Nehemiah (Neh 8:7; 9:3; 13:11). In Daniel, it denotes the prophet's physical location during his visionary encounter (Dan 8:17-18; 10:11). French and German leave the term untranslated in their glosses, while English ('place/standing') and Spanish ('lugar/puesto') capture the positional sense clearly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-place, their-place, their-standing | es: lugar-de-ellos, puesto-su, su-lugar | fr: [עמדו], [עמדם] | de: [עמדו], [עמדם] 2Chr 30:16; 2Chr 34:31; 2Chr 35:10; Neh 8:7; Neh 9:3

עִם H5978 Prep-m / 1cs (44×)

With me; a preposition expressing accompaniment, proximity, association, or opposition toward the speaker.

The common Hebrew preposition עִם ('with') appearing here exclusively with the first-person singular suffix — 'with me.' It is one of the most relational words in the Hebrew Bible, marking presence, partnership, covenant faithfulness, or (with hostile nuance) opposition. God tells Abraham 'walk before me' and 'I am with you'; Joseph's master sees that 'the LORD was with him' (Gen 39:3); the Psalmist confesses 'you are with me' in the valley of shadow (Ps 23:4). Spanish distinguishes the intimate 'conmigo' from the more formal 'con mí,' but both translate the same Hebrew form. The alternate longer form עִמָּדִי appears interchangeably with the shorter עִמִּי across all periods of biblical Hebrew, with no discernible difference in meaning.

1. with me (41×) With me — expressing accompaniment, presence, partnership, or association between the speaker and another party. This overwhelmingly dominant sense covers divine presence ('the LORD was with me'), human companionship ('go with me'), covenant solidarity ('deal kindly with me'), and even adversarial encounter ('contend with me'). God promises 'I am with you' (Gen 21:22; 26:3, 28), Abraham asks Abimelech to 'deal kindly with me' (Gen 21:23), and Rachel pleads 'give me children' naming the personal stake. Spanish 'conmigo' and French 'avec moi' carry the same relational breadth. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: with-Me, with-me | es: con-mí, conmigo | fr: avec-Moi, avec-moi | de: an-mir, bei-mir, mir Gen 3:12; Gen 19:19; Gen 20:9; Gen 20:13; Gen 21:23

2. from with me (2×) From with me — the preposition compounded with מִן (min, 'from') to indicate separation or departure from the speaker's presence. Saul tells Samuel that the donkeys have been found and his father has shifted concern 'from you' to 'from with me' (1 Sam 10:2), and Jonathan asks David's leave 'from with me' (1 Sam 20:28). French 'de avec moi' and Spanish 'de conmigo' preserve the composite construction that adds directional force to the relational preposition. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: from-with-me | es: de-con-mí, de-conmigo | fr: de-avec-moi | de: von-mit-mich 1Sam 10:2; 1Sam 20:28

3. with myself (1×) With myself — a reflexive nuance where the speaker's own self is both subject and companion, used in Job's wish that he could plead his case without fear: 'for I am not so with myself' (Job 9:35). The self-referential quality sets this apart from ordinary accompaniment. German 'bei mir selbst' captures the introspective turn, as Job contemplates his own inner state before the divine court. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: with-myself | es: conmigo. | fr: avec-moi-moi | de: bei-mir Job 9:35

עֻמְדָה H5979 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

standing place, position; the place where one stands or takes a stand

This noun denotes a standing place or position—the ground where one stands. In Micah 1:11, it appears in a difficult and disputed text: 'he will take from you his standing place' or possibly 'you have no standing place.' The passage is part of a series of wordplays on town names in Micah's judgment oracles. The text's obscurity has led various translations to interpret it differently, but the core idea involves loss of secure position or footing—the people will have nowhere firm to stand. The term relates to the verb 'amad' (to stand), emphasizing stability, position, and place.

(1×) A standing place or position in Micah 1:11, though the text is acknowledged as difficult. The translations show uncertainty (English: 'its-standing', Spanish: 'su-posición', French: 'position'), but converge on the idea of a place to stand. The context of judgment suggests the removal of security and stability—those who thought themselves firmly established will lose their footing. This fits Micah's broader message that false security based on ritualism rather than justice will collapse. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING

en: its-standing | es: su-posición | fr: position | de: [עמדתו] Mic 1:11

עֻמָּה H5980 Prep-l / 3ms (32×)

Close beside, alongside, parallel to; corresponding to, matching; over against in opposition.

Ummah is a feminine noun used almost exclusively in construct with the preposition le- (le'ummat), functioning as a compound preposition meaning 'alongside, corresponding to, opposite.' It is the go-to spatial term for architectural parallelism in Exodus and Ezekiel — describing how one structural element sits flush with or directly across from another. The tabernacle rings are placed le'ummat the border (Exod 25:27); Ezekiel's temple walls run 'alongside' the chambers (Ezek 42:7); and the tribal land allotments sit 'parallel to' one another (Ezek 48:13-21). Occasionally the spatial meaning shifts into abstract correspondence — the elder corresponding to the younger (1 Chr 24:31) or doing something 'in the same manner' (Eccl 5:16). A rare adversarial usage in Ezek 3:8 ('forehead against forehead') shows the word can express confrontation as well as alignment.

1. corresponding to, parallel with (15×) Spatial correspondence or parallelism — the core sense at 15 occurrences, describing one thing positioned directly matching, parallel to, or corresponding to another. Especially prominent in Ezekiel's temple and land-division visions (Ezek 45:6-7; 48:13, 18, 21) and in Chronicles' organizational lists where one division 'corresponds to' another (1 Chr 24:31; 25:8; 26:12). French correspondant a and Spanish correspondiente a both capture the alignment-matching quality. The emphasis is structural: two things properly lined up or matched, not merely nearby. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: corresponding-to | es: correspondiente-a, frente-a, igual | fr: [לעמות], [לעמת], corresponding-à | de: [לעמת], corresponding-zu, gegenueber Exod 38:18; 1Chr 24:31; 1Chr 25:8; 1Chr 26:12

2. close beside, adjacent to (13×) Close beside or adjacent to — 13 occurrences emphasizing physical proximity and nearness rather than abstract correspondence. This is the tabernacle-construction sense: the rings are placed 'close by' the border of the frame (Exod 25:27; 37:14), the shoulder-pieces sit 'beside' the ephod (Exod 28:27; 39:20), and the fat is removed 'close by the backbone' (Lev 3:9). Spanish junto a ('next to') and French en face ('facing') capture this spatial adjacency. The suffixed forms le'ummatam ('beside them') and le'ummato ('beside it/him') belong here, as does Neh 3:23's 'beside their house' and 7:2's placement 'beside' the fortress. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: alongside-, alongside-them, beside-them | es: Junto-a, frente-a, frente-a-él | fr: [לעמתם], en-face, en-face-lui | de: [לעמת], gegenueber, nahe-zu Exod 25:27; Exod 28:27; Exod 37:14; Exod 39:20; Lev 3:9

3. over against, in opposition (2×) Over against in confrontation or opposition — a sharply distinct sense appearing only twice, both in Ezek 3:8, where God hardens Ezekiel's face 'against' the rebels' faces and his forehead 'against' their foreheads. Spanish contra and German gegenuber both shift to adversarial vocabulary. The doubling within a single verse emphasizes that this is not mere spatial proximity but active, confrontational positioning — face set against face. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against | es: contra | fr: [לעמת] | de: gegenueber Ezek 3:8

4. from beside (with min) (1×) From beside or from a position alongside — a single occurrence at 1 Kgs 7:20 where the preposition min is prefixed, creating me'ummat to indicate source-direction from alongside the belly-shaped protrusion of the pillars. This is a standard spatial extension: the same 'beside/alongside' meaning with directional 'from' added. French de a cote de and Spanish desde junto a both render this as 'from beside.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-beside | es: desde-junto-a | fr: de-à-côté-de | de: von-neben 1Kgs 7:20

5. in like manner, same as (1×) In like manner, equivalently — a single occurrence at Eccl 5:16 where the spatial metaphor of 'alongside' has been abstracted into qualitative comparison: 'just as he came, so shall he go.' The Qoheleth passage uses the bare ummat (without le-) in what BDB identifies as the only such form, meaning 'agreeing with, corresponding to' in manner rather than position. German in-gleicher-Weise and Spanish de la misma manera show the shift from spatial to modal correspondence. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: same-as | es: manera-que | fr: à-côté-de | de: [עמת] Eccl 5:16

עִמָּה H5981 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ummah, a town in the territory of Asher

This place name appears only in the tribal inheritance list of Asher. The Hebrew preserves the name with minimal variation across translations, suggesting a well-established toponym. The location is noted by BDB in connection with Acco, placing it in the northern coastal region assigned to Asher during the conquest.

(1×) A settlement mentioned in Joshua 19:30 as part of Asher's inheritance. The name appears with the conjunction 'and' in the Hebrew text, indicating its position within a boundary list. Translations preserve the phonetic form 'Ummah' or 'Uma' consistently across languages, reflecting its status as a geographical identifier rather than a translatable term. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ummah | es: y-Uma | fr: et-Ummah | de: und-Ummah Josh 19:30

עַמּוּד H5982 N-mpc / 3ms (112×)

Pillar, column — both architectural supports and the theophanic pillar of cloud/fire guiding Israel

The Hebrew ᶜammud covers two vivid realities. Architecturally, it names the load-bearing columns of the tabernacle, Solomon's temple, and ordinary buildings — the very pillars Samson grasped to bring down the Philistine house (Judg 16:25-29). But the word takes on numinous force in the exodus narratives, where God's presence manifests as a pillar of cloud by day and fire by night, leading Israel through the wilderness. The multilingual glosses make the distinction visible: architectural uses yield 'pillars/columns' (spa: columnas, fra: colonnes), while the theophanic uses consistently add the construct 'pillar of' (spa: columna-de, fra: colonne-de), marking the shift from structure to divine presence.

1. pillar, column (architectural) (94×) An architectural pillar or column supporting a building, the tabernacle, or the temple. Encompasses the acacia-wood pillars of the tabernacle (Exod 26:32, 37), the cedar pillars of Solomon's palace (1 Kgs 7:2), and the load-bearing columns Samson seized (Judg 16:25-29). Also used figuratively for the 'pillars of heaven' and 'pillars of the earth' (Job 9:6; 26:11). The multilingual pattern (spa: las-columnas, fra: les-colonnes, deu: der-Saeulen) consistently yields simple plural nouns across 94 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-pillars | es: las-columnas | fr: le-colonnes | de: der-Saeulen Exod 26:32; Exod 26:37; Exod 27:10; Exod 27:11; Exod 27:12

2. pillar of cloud or fire (18×) The theophanic pillar of cloud by day and fire by night in which God guided and sheltered Israel during the exodus. First appearing at Exod 13:21-22, this divine column leads the people, stands between them and Pharaoh's army (Exod 14:19, 24), and descends to the tent of meeting when God speaks with Moses (Exod 33:9-10; Num 12:5). Translations uniformly employ construct phrases — 'pillar of cloud/fire' (spa: columna-de, fra: colonne-de) — signaling the shift from structural support to visible divine presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-by-a-pillar-of, and-in-pillar-of, in-a-pillar-of | es: En-columna-de, Y-en-columna-de, columna-de | fr: colonne, colonne-de, dans-colonne | de: Saeule-von, [ובעמוד], [עמוד] Exod 13:21; Exod 13:22; Exod 14:19; Exod 14:24

עַמּוֹן H5983 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (106×)

Ammon — the people, territory, and descendants of Ben-Ammi, Lot's son; usually in 'sons of Ammon'

Ammon designates the people and territory of the Ammonites, traditionally descended from Ben-Ammi, son of Lot (Gen 19:38). Almost always appearing in the construct phrase bene Ammon ('sons of Ammon'), the name figures prominently in Israel's military and diplomatic history from the conquest through the monarchy. The Ammonites occupied territory east of the Jordan, northeast of Moab, between the Arnon and Jabbok rivers. Key encounters include Jephthah's wars (Judges 10–12), Saul's rescue of Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam 11), and David's campaigns (2 Sam 10–12). Prophetic oracles against Ammon appear in Jeremiah 49, Ezekiel 25, and Amos 1.

Ammon (proper noun) (106×) The proper name Ammon, identifying the people and territory of the Ammonites descended from Ben-Ammi son of Lot (Gen 19:38). Nearly always occurs in the phrase bene Ammon ('sons of Ammon'). Central to narratives of territorial conflict east of the Jordan — Jephthah's campaigns (Judg 10–12), David's wars (2 Sam 10–12) — and prophetic judgment oracles (Jer 49:1–6; Ezek 25:1–7). The name's connection to the word 'am (people/kinsman) reinforces the ironic kinship theme. AMMON PEOPLE TERRITORY

en: Ammon | es: Ammon, Amón, Amón? | fr: Ammon | de: Ammon, Ammons Gen 19:38; Num 21:24; Deut 2:19

עַמּוֹנִי H5984 Art / N-proper-ms (18×)

Ammonite: a gentilic adjective for the people of Ammon, Israel's eastern Transjordanian neighbor.

A gentilic noun and adjective identifying members of the nation of Ammon, a Transjordanian people descended from Lot's younger daughter (Gen 19:38). The term appears in singular, plural, and feminine forms across legal, narrative, and prophetic texts. Deuteronomy excludes the Ammonite from the assembly of the Lord (Deut 23:3; Neh 13:1). Nahash the Ammonite threatens Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam 11:1-2), and Solomon's foreign wives include Ammonite women, most notably Naamah, mother of Rehoboam (1 Kgs 14:21, 31; 11:1). In Nehemiah, Tobiah the Ammonite is a persistent antagonist to the rebuilding effort (Neh 2:10, 19; 3:35). Spanish 'amonita/amonitas,' French 'Ammonite/Ammonites,' and German 'Ammoniter' all directly transliterate the gentilic form.

Ammonite (gentilic noun) (18×) A gentilic designation for persons belonging to the nation of Ammon, east of the Jordan. The term functions both as adjective ('Ammonite women,' 1 Kgs 11:1; Neh 13:23) and substantive ('the Ammonite,' 1 Sam 11:1; Neh 2:10). Legal texts bar Ammonites from the Israelite assembly (Deut 23:3; Neh 13:1), while narrative texts feature individual Ammonites such as Nahash (1 Sam 11:1), Naamah (1 Kgs 14:21), and Tobiah (Neh 2:10). Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'amonita,' French 'Ammonite,' German 'Ammoniter.' AMMON PEOPLE TERRITORY

en: Ammonite, Ammonite-women, Ammonites | es: (amonitas), [amonitas], amonita | fr: Ammonite, Ammonite-femmes, Ammonites | de: Ammonite-Frauen, Ammoniter, Ammonites Deut 2:20; Deut 23:3; 1Sam 11:1; 1Sam 11:2; 2Sam 23:37

עַמּוֹנִי H5985 Art / N-proper-fs (4×)

the Ammonitess; gentilics denoting women from Ammon, often in contexts of foreign marriage

A feminine gentilical term identifying women as natives of Ammon, typically in royal or genealogical contexts. These four occurrences all refer to Ammonite women connected to Israelite monarchy: Naamah the Ammonitess, mother of King Rehoboam, appears in the Kings and Chronicles accounts. The term carries implicit critique in biblical theology, since Ammonites were prohibited from entering the assembly and marriages with them were discouraged. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering ('la-amonita' in Spanish, 'Ammonitess' with definite article in French and German) preserves both the ethnic identifier and the gender specificity.

(4×) Feminine form of the Ammonite gentilic, designating women from Ammon. All four uses (1 Kgs 14:21, 31; 2 Chr 12:13, 24:26) refer to Naamah, mother of Rehoboam, emphasizing her foreign origin. The repetition across parallel texts (Kings and Chronicles) shows standardized terminology for identifying royal mothers' ethnicity, often with theological implications regarding foreign influence on the monarchy. AMMON PEOPLE TERRITORY

en: the-Ammonite, the-Ammonitess | es: la-amonita | fr: [העמונית], [העמנית], le-Ammonitess | de: [העמונית], [העמנית], der-Ammonitess 1Kgs 14:21; 1Kgs 14:31; 2Chr 12:13; 2Chr 24:26

עָמוֹס H5986 N-proper-ms (7×)

Amos, the 8th-century prophet from Tekoa, a herdsman called to prophesy against Israel's social injustice

Amos is the name of the shepherd-prophet from Tekoa in Judah who was called by God to deliver oracles of judgment against the northern kingdom of Israel during the reign of Jeroboam II. His name, possibly meaning 'burden-bearer,' suits his role as the bearer of heavy prophetic pronouncements against social oppression and empty ritual. All seven occurrences fall within the book that bears his name, and every major translation tradition renders it identically as Amos.

(7×) The proper name of the prophet Amos (עָמוֹס), a herdsman and dresser of sycamore figs from Tekoa in Judah (Amos 7:14), active around 760-750 BC. He confronted the priest Amaziah at Bethel (Amos 7:10-12) and delivered oracles emphasizing justice and righteousness. The name is consistently transliterated across all traditions: English, Spanish 'Amos,' French 'Amos,' and German 'Amos,' reflecting the prophet's universal recognition in biblical literature. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10575 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Amos | es: Amós | fr: Amos | de: Amos Amos 1:1; Amos 7:8; Amos 7:10; Amos 7:11; Amos 7:12

עָמוֹק H5987 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Amok (personal name: a postexilic priest in the time of Joiakim)

Amok is named among the priests who returned with Zerubbabel and later served in the days of the high priest Joiakim (Nehemiah 12:7, 20). The Septuagint renders it Αμουκ. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may be related to the root עמק ('deep'). Nothing further is known about this individual beyond his priestly lineage. All modern translations simply transliterate the name.

(2×) A postexilic priest listed in Nehemiah 12:7 and 12:20. The prepositional form ('to Amok,' Nehemiah 12:20) reflects the genealogical or administrative structure of the priestly roster. All target languages transliterate the name uniformly. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amoq, to-Amoq | es: Amoc, de-Amoc | fr: [לעמוק], [עמוק] | de: [לעמוק], [עמוק] Neh 12:7; Neh 12:20

עַמִּיאֵל H5988 N-proper-ms (6×)

Ammiel — a personal name meaning 'my kinsman is God,' borne by four distinct men in the OT.

A theophoric name combining 'am (kinsman, people) with 'El (God), expressing the confession 'my kinsman is God.' Four different individuals bear this name: a Danite spy sent to scout Canaan (Num 13:12), the father of Machir who sheltered Mephibosheth in Lo-debar (2 Sam 9:4–5; 17:27), the father of Bathsheba (1 Chr 3:5, called Eliam in 2 Sam 11:3 — the same two elements reversed), and a Levitical gatekeeper, son of Obed-edom (1 Chr 26:5). The name's consistent rendering across languages — English 'Ammiel,' Spanish 'Amiel,' French and German 'Ammiel' — reflects its transparent Semitic etymology.

(6×) A masculine proper name meaning 'my kinsman is God,' applied to four OT figures. The most narratively prominent is the father of Machir of Lo-debar, whose household sheltered the crippled Mephibosheth and later provisioned David during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 9:4–5; 17:27). Notably, 1 Chr 3:5 identifies Ammiel as Bathsheba's father, while 2 Sam 11:3 calls him Eliam — the same theophoric elements in reversed order. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ammi'el, Ammiel | es: Amiel | fr: Ammiel, [עמיאל] | de: Ammiel, [עמיאל] Num 13:12; 2Sam 9:4; 2Sam 9:5; 2Sam 17:27; 1Chr 3:5

עַמִּיהוּד H5989 N-proper-ms (9×)

Ammihud, a proper masculine name meaning 'my kinsman is majesty,' borne by several Israelite men in Numbers and Chronicles.

A theophoric Hebrew name (עַמִּיהוּד) combining 'am' (kinsman, people) and 'hud' (majesty, splendor), meaning 'my kinsman is glorious.' Most prominently, Ammihud was the father of Elishama, leader of the tribe of Ephraim during the wilderness wanderings (Num 1:10; 2:18; 7:48, 53; 10:22). Other bearers include a Simeonite chief who helped apportion the land of Canaan (Num 34:20), a Naphtalite chief for the same task (Num 34:28), and a Judahite listed in the post-exilic genealogy (1 Chr 9:4). The Septuagint renders it variously as Σεμιουδ and Αμιουδ.

Ammihud (9×) The proper name Ammihud, meaning 'my kinsman is majesty,' identifying at least four or five distinct men: the Ephraimite father of Elishama who appears most frequently in the Numbers census and offering lists (Num 1:10; 2:18; 7:48, 53; 10:22; 1 Chr 7:26), a Simeonite tribal leader (Num 34:20), a Naphtalite leader (Num 34:28), a Judahite (1 Chr 9:4), and possibly the father of Talmai king of Geshur (2 Sam 13:37). Multilingual transliterations remain fairly stable: 'Ammihud' in English, 'Amihud/Amiud' in Spanish, consistently reflecting the compound theophoric structure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ammihud | es: Amihud, Amiud, Amiud: | fr: Ammihud, [עַמִּיהוּד] | de: Ammihud, [עַמִּיהוּד] Num 1:10; Num 2:18; Num 7:48; Num 7:53; Num 10:22

עַמִּיזָבָד H5990 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ammizabad, a personal name meaning 'my kinsman has bestowed'

This theophoric name combines the kinship term 'ammi' (my people/kinsman) with a verb root related to giving or bestowing. The name fits a pattern seen in other Hebrew compound names that express family relationships and divine blessing. The bearer is identified as the son of Benaiah, one of David's military commanders, appearing in the Chronicles genealogies.

(1×) The son of Benaiah mentioned in 1 Chronicles 27:6 among David's military organization. The name's meaning 'my kinsman has bestowed' reflects thanksgiving for family relationship and provision. Textual witnesses show Greek transliterations attempting to render the Hebrew phonetically, with variations suggesting the name was unfamiliar to later scribes. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ammizavad | es: Amizabad | fr: [עַמִּיזָבָד] | de: [עַמִּיזָבָד] 1Chr 27:6

עַמִּיהוּד H5991 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ammihud, Ammihur (personal name: borne by multiple individuals, with a textual variant in 2 Samuel 13:37)

Ammihud ('my kinsman is majesty') is a name borne by at least five individuals in the Hebrew Bible, including an Ephraimite (Numbers 1:10), a Simeonite (Numbers 34:20), a Naphtalite (Numbers 34:28), a Geshurite king (2 Samuel 13:37, though the Ketiv reads Ammihur), and a Judahite (1 Chronicles 9:4). The Septuagint renders it variously (Σεμιουδ, Αμιουδ). The name's theophoric element (הוד, 'majesty') suggests royal or noble lineage. In 2 Samuel 13:37, the Qere-Ketiv variant (Ammihud vs. Ammihur) reflects scribal uncertainty.

(2×) A personal name appearing in multiple genealogies and narratives. The two occurrences in 2 Samuel 13:37 reflect a Qere-Ketiv variant ('Ammihud' vs. 'Ammihur'), where the Qere preserves the standard form and the Ketiv represents a scribal variant. All target languages transliterate the name, noting the variant where applicable. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ammihud, [Ammihur] | es: (Amihud), [Amijur] | fr: Ammihud, [Ammihur] | de: [Ammihur] 2Sam 13:37

עַמִּינָדָב H5992 N-proper-ms (13×)

Amminadab; a personal name meaning 'my kinsman is noble,' borne by Aaron's father-in-law and others.

The theophoric name Amminadab (ammi, 'my kinsman' + nadav, 'is noble/willing') designates several biblical figures, most prominently the father-in-law of Aaron the high priest and ancestor of David. As father of Nahshon, the tribal chief of Judah during the wilderness period (Num 1:7; 2:3; 7:12, 17; 10:14), Amminadab holds a key position in the genealogy leading from Judah to David (Ruth 4:19–20; 1 Chr 2:10) and ultimately to Jesus in Matthew's genealogy. The name also belongs to Levites mentioned in 1 Chronicles 6:7 and 15:10–11. Translations universally transliterate: Spanish 'Aminadab,' French and German 'Amminadab.'

Amminadab (13×) A personal name meaning 'my kinsman is noble' or 'my people are generous,' referring primarily to the father of Nahshon and father-in-law of Aaron (Exod 6:23), who appears in the genealogical line from Judah to David (Ruth 4:19–20; 1 Chr 2:10). He is the ancestral head of Judah's tribal contingent during the wilderness period (Num 1:7; 2:3; 7:12, 17; 10:14). The name also belongs to a Levite in David's time (1 Chr 6:7) and a Kohathite leader who helped bring the Ark to Jerusalem (1 Chr 15:10–11). Translations consistently transliterate the name across all languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amminadab, Amminadav, and-Amminadab | es: Aminadab, Aminadab:, Aminadav | fr: Amminadab, et-Amminadab | de: Amminadab, [וְעַמִּינָדָב], [עַמִּינָדָב] Exod 6:23; Num 1:7; Num 2:3; Num 7:12; Num 7:17

עַם H5993

people, nation; a body of persons united by kinship, geography, or covenant

This foundational noun denotes 'people' in the sense of a cohesive group—whether ethnic nation, tribal confederation, or covenant community. It can refer specifically to Israel as 'God's people' (Exodus 3:7, 'I have seen the affliction of my people') or generically to any nation or ethnic group. The plural עַמִּים means 'peoples' or 'nations' in the international sense. The root likely connects to ideas of kinship, unity, and social bonding. Theologically, the term carries immense weight: Israel is called 'my people,' marking covenant relationship, while the nations are summoned to recognize Yahweh's sovereignty over all peoples.

עָמִיק H5994 Adj-fpd (1×)

deep things, profound or hidden matters (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective, used substantively, appears in Daniel's praise after God reveals Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The term denotes things that are deep, profound, or hidden from human understanding. Daniel contrasts divine omniscience with human limitation, affirming that God reveals mysteries beyond natural perception. The word appears in emphatic state, emphasizing the definite 'deep things' that God knows and discloses.

(1×) In Daniel 2:22, this refers to the hidden or profound matters that God alone knows and can reveal. The Aramaic context emphasizes God's unique ability to uncover what is concealed in darkness and to know what lies in hidden depths. Spanish 'lo profundo' and French 'profondeur' both capture the depth metaphor, suggesting content beyond surface-level observation or human investigation. DEEP AND PROFOUND

en: deep-things | es: lo-profundo | fr: profondeur | de: [עַמִּיקָתָא] Dan 2:22

עָמִיר H5995 N-ms (4×)

sheaf, swath; row of cut grain lying in the field, ready for gathering or threshing

This agricultural term denotes cut grain lying in rows or bundles in the field—what we call sheaves or swaths. The word appears in diverse contexts: Amos uses it for the crushing weight of a loaded cart, Jeremiah for grain falling behind the reaper (beyond the reach of the gatherer), Micah for sheaves brought to the threshing floor, and Zechariah for its flammability. The Mishnaic Hebrew and Syriac cognates refer to grass or hay, suggesting the fundamental sense is cut vegetation lying in the field. Multilingual glosses (Spanish 'gavillas,' French 'gerbe') consistently identify this as bundled grain.

(4×) Cut grain lying in rows or bundles in the field. Jeremiah 9:22 pictures death like a reaper leaving bodies behind like fallen grain; Amos 2:13 depicts crushing like an overloaded grain cart; Micah 4:12 shows enemy nations as unwitting sheaves gathered for threshing (judgment); Zechariah 12:6 uses the flammability of dry sheaves as an image for Judah consuming surrounding peoples. GRAIN SHEAF

en: and-like-sheaves, in-sheaf, like-sheaves | es: como-gavillas, de-gavillas, entre-gavillas | fr: [בְּעָמִיר], [וּכְעָמִיר], comme-une-gerbe | de: [בְּעָמִיר], [וּכְעָמִיר], [כְּעָמִיר] Jer 9:22; Amos 2:13; Mic 4:12; Zech 12:6

עַמִּישַׁדָּי H5996 N-proper-ms (5×)

Ammishaddai — a Danite leader whose name means 'my kinsman is Shaddai' Ammishaddai is the father of Ahiezer, chieftain of the tribe of Dan during the wilderness period. The name is a theophoric compound combining 'ammi' (my kinsman) with 'Shaddai' (the Almighty), expressing a confession that God is as close as family. He appears exclusively in Numbers in census, camp arrangement, and offering contexts (Num 1:12; 7:66–71; 10:25). The LXX renders it Αμ(ε)ισαδαι, preserving both elements of the name.

(5×) Personal name of the Danite leader, father of Ahiezer, appearing only in Numbers during the wilderness census and tribal offering narratives. The theophoric name declares divine kinship: 'my people-group is Shaddai.' Spanish 'Amisadai' and English 'Ammishaddai' both transliterate the compound faithfully, attesting its stable transmission across versions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ammishaddai | es: Amisadai, Amisadai: | fr: Ammishaddaï | de: Ammishaddai Num 1:12; Num 2:25; Num 7:66; Num 7:71; Num 10:25

עָמִית H5997 Prep-l / N-msc / 2ms (12×)

Fellow, neighbor, associate; one to whom ethical and relational obligations are owed

Always appearing with a possessive suffix, this noun designates a person bound to another by communal or covenantal relationship. In Leviticus it serves as the key legal term for the 'neighbor' toward whom the Israelite owes honesty, fairness, and fidelity (Lev 19:11, 15, 17). German Nachbar, Spanish prójimo, and French prochain all converge on this sense of a fellow community member. The word's single occurrence outside Leviticus—in Zechariah 13:7, where God calls the smitten shepherd 'my companion'—reveals a striking personal intimacy absent from the legal contexts, suggesting a depth of association beyond civic duty.

1. Neighbor / fellow (legal-ethical associate) (11×) The legal-ethical sense of 'neighbor' or 'fellow citizen,' used exclusively in Levitical legislation to define the person toward whom one bears moral obligations: do not steal from your neighbor (Lev 19:11), do not oppress your neighbor (Lev 25:17), judge your neighbor justly (Lev 19:15). German Nachbar-dein and Spanish a-su-prójimo both highlight the possessive, relational quality—this is always someone's neighbor, never abstract. The term anchors Israel's social ethics in concrete interpersonal responsibility. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: against-neighbor-his, his-neighbor, in-his-neighbor | es: a-prójimo-suyo, a-su-prójimo, a-tu-prójimo | fr: contre-prochain-son, dans-son-prochain, prochain-ton | de: Nachbar-dein, dein-Nachbar, gegen-Nachbar-sein Lev 6:2; Lev 18:20; Lev 19:11; Lev 19:15

2. Companion / associate (personal relationship) (1×) A personal-relational sense meaning 'companion' or 'close associate,' appearing in Zechariah 13:7 where God refers to the shepherd as 'the man who is my companion' (גבר עמיתי). Spanish compañero and French compagnon both convey an intimacy and fellowship that transcends the juridical obligations of Leviticus. The first-person possessive suffix intensifies the relationship: this is not merely a fellow citizen but one who stands alongside God himself, making this messianic passage especially striking. COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: my-companion | es: mi-compañero | fr: compagnon | de: [עמיתי] Zech 13:7

עָמַל H5998 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (11×)

To toil, labor — to work hard with weariness; especially in Ecclesiastes for the exhausting effort of human life

The verb עָמַל (amal) means to toil or labor with an undertone of weariness and burdensome effort. While it can describe ordinary hard work (Ps 127:1, 'unless the LORD builds the house, those who build it labor in vain'), its theological home is Ecclesiastes, where it becomes a keyword for the exhausting human quest for meaning and profit. Qoheleth asks 'what gain has the worker from his toil?' (Eccl 1:3) and concludes that all labor under the sun is vanity (Eccl 2:11, 19-21). Yet he also affirms that enjoying the fruit of one's toil is a gift from God (Eccl 5:18). Jonah 4:10 uses it for the labor Jonah did not invest in the gourd plant. Spanish 'trabajar/afanarse' captures both the effort and the futility overtones.

toil, labor (Qal) (11×) To labor with weariness, to toil strenuously — carrying a connotation of burdensome, exhausting effort rather than joyful productivity. Dominates in Ecclesiastes as a thematic keyword: 'What does a person gain by all the toil at which he toils under the sun?' (Eccl 1:3; cf. 2:11, 19-21; 5:18; 8:17). Psalm 127:1 uses it for futile building effort without divine help. The laborer's appetite drives him (Prov 16:26). Jonah 4:10 applies it negatively to labor Jonah never performed. Spanish 'afanarse' and German 'sich abmühen' both carry the weary, burdensome nuance. WORK AND LABOR

en: labor, labors, that-I-toiled | es: que-trabaja, que-trabajé, trabaja | fr: travailler | de: Arbeit, Muehe, abmuehte Ps 127:1; Prov 16:26; Eccl 1:3; Eccl 2:11; Eccl 2:19

עָמָל H5999 N-ms (55×)

Trouble, toil, or misery; wearisome labor, painful hardship, or malicious mischief directed at others.

One of the Hebrew Bible's richest words for the burden of human existence, covering everything from the sweat of honest labor to the anguish of suffering to deliberate wickedness. Qoheleth famously uses it to probe whether toil 'under the sun' yields any lasting gain (Eccl 1:3), while Job's friends acknowledge that 'man is born to trouble as sparks fly upward' (Job 5:7). German translations split the word between Mühsal (wearisome toil) and Trübsal (affliction), revealing the two faces of this noun. In a few Psalmic contexts the word sharpens into something darker — the 'mischief' that the wicked devise against the innocent (Ps 140:9).

1. toil, labor, work (26×) Wearisome productive effort or labor — the exertion of working, especially as Ecclesiastes reflects on human toil under the sun. Spanish 'trabajo' and German 'Mühsal' both center on strenuous effort. Qoheleth asks his signature question, 'What profit has a man from all his toil (ʿamal) at which he toils?' (Eccl 1:3), while the Psalmist notes that God gave Israel 'the toil of the peoples' — the fruit of others' labor (Ps 105:44). LABOR AND TOIL

en: his-toil, in-his-toil, my-toil | es: de-su-trabajo, de-trabajo, el-trabajo | fr: dans-son-labeur-lui, labeur, le-labeur | de: Muehe, Mühsal, die-Muehe Deut 26:7; Ps 90:10; Ps 105:44; Ps 107:12; Eccl 1:3

2. trouble, misery, suffering (25×) Hardship, distress, or affliction experienced as suffering — the painful, burdensome dimension of existence. French 'tourment' and German 'Trübsal/Kummer' underscore the emotional weight. God made Joseph forget 'all his trouble' (Gen 41:51), Balaam saw no 'trouble' in Israel (Num 23:21), and Job wishes someone had hidden 'trouble from his eyes' at birth (Job 3:10). The word here names suffering undergone, not effort expended. LABOR AND TOIL

en: and-his-trouble, and-trouble, in-the-trouble-of | es: En-trabajo-de, aflicción, fatiga-mía | fr: dans-tourment, et-labeur, et-son-labeur-lui | de: Kummer, Muehe, Trübsal Gen 41:51; Num 23:21; Judg 10:16; Job 3:10; Job 4:8

3. mischief, wickedness (4×) Mischief or wickedness — harmful activity deliberately inflicted on others through oppression or injustice. Spanish 'maldad' and the pairing with אָוֶן (āwen, 'iniquity') in several passages confirm the moral coloring. Isaiah denounces those who 'decree mischief' by statute (Isa 10:1), and the Psalmist prays that the 'mischief of their own lips' cover the wicked (Ps 140:9). This sense shifts from passive suffering to active malice. LABOR AND TOIL

en: toil, trouble, trouble-of | es: agravio, maldad, maldad-de | fr: [עמל], tourment | de: [עמל], trouble-of Ps 140:9; Isa 10:1; Isa 59:4; Jer 20:18

עַמָּל H6000 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Amal, a personal name in the tribe of Asher

This name appears once in the genealogical records of Asher in 1 Chronicles. The Hebrew root 'amal could relate to labor or toil, though as a proper name it functions primarily as an identifier. The name appears among descendants of Asher, preserved in the post-exilic genealogical reconstruction. Septuagint witnesses show variation in their attempt to transliterate this unfamiliar name.

(1×) A descendant of Asher listed in 1 Chronicles 7:35. The name appears with the conjunction 'and,' indicating its position within a genealogical sequence. While the root might suggest 'toil' or 'labor,' the name functions here as a family identifier. Translations either preserve the phonetic form or leave it untranslated, recognizing its function as a proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Amal | es: y-Amal | fr: [וְעַמַל] | de: [וְעַמַל] 1Chr 7:35

עָמֵל H6001a N-ms (4×)
laborer, sufferer; one who toils or endures hardship, used for workers and those in misery
A term with dual nuances: the laborer who works hard, and the sufferer who endures misery. In Judges 5:26, it refers to workmen (in the context of tent-peg wielding), while Job uses it twice for those suffering affliction—those whose souls are bitter (3:20) and the miserable whose wealth vanishes (20:22). Proverbs applies it to the laborer whose hunger motivates work (16:26). The semantic range spans from neutral 'worker' to empathetic 'sufferer,' unified by the concept of one bearing burden or hardship. The multilingual evidence reflects both senses: Spanish 'el-que-trabaja' (worker) and 'al-que-sufre' (sufferer).

(4×) One who labors or suffers under burden. Judges 5:26 uses it for workmen; Proverbs 16:26 for the laborer driven by hunger. Job employs it for sufferers: those bitter of soul (3:20) and the afflicted losing their wealth (20:22). The term bridges physical toil and emotional/physical suffering, both involving endurance under difficulty. LABOR AND TOIL
en: -the-workmen, laborer, the-miserable | es: al-que-sufre, el-afligido, el-que-trabaja | fr: -le-workmen, à-לְעָמָל, עָמָל | de: -der-workmen, Muehe, zu-Muehe Judg 5:26; Job 3:20; Job 20:22; Prov 16:26

עָמֵל H6001b N-ms (5×)
toiling, laboring — one who works with wearisome effort (Ecclesiastes only)
A verbal adjective used exclusively in Ecclesiastes to describe the person engaged in toilsome labor. Qoheleth uses it to probe the futility of human exertion: what does the toiler gain from all his striving (Eccl 3:9)? The word carries a note of weariness absent from neutral work-terms. Spanish 'trabaja' (he labors) and French 'labeur' (toil) both capture the exhausting quality, while German 'Muehe' (effort, trouble) highlights the burden side of the semantic range.

(5×) Describes the person who toils with wearisome, burdensome labor — used predicatively in Ecclesiastes to characterize human striving under the sun. In Eccl 2:18 and 9:9, the toiler confronts the irony that his labor's fruit passes to another. The multilingual evidence converges: Spanish 'trabaja,' French 'labeur,' and German 'Muehe' all stress effortful exertion rather than simple activity. LABOR AND TOIL
en: toiling | es: trabaja, trabaja?, trabajaba | fr: labeur | de: Muehe Eccl 2:18; Eccl 2:22; Eccl 3:9; Eccl 4:8; Eccl 9:9

עֲמָלֵק H6002 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (39×)
Amalek — grandson of Esau; eponymous ancestor of the Amalekites, perennial foes of Israel
Both a personal name — Esau's grandson through Eliphaz and his concubine Timna (Gen 36:12, 16) — and the collective designation for the Amalekite people, fierce semi-nomadic raiders of the Negev and Sinai. Their unprovoked attack on Israel's rear guard at Rephidim (Exod 17:8-16) earned a perpetual divine decree of war (Deut 25:17-19). Amalek's hostility threads through the period of the judges (Judg 3:13; 6:3, 33; 7:12), Saul's incomplete obedience (1 Sam 15), and David's decisive campaigns (1 Sam 30:18; 2 Sam 8:12), finally ending with the remnant's destruction in Hezekiah's reign (1 Chr 4:43).

Amalek (proper noun) (39×) The proper noun Amalek, functioning as both a personal ancestor name (Gen 36:12, 16) and a gentilic collective for the Amalekite nation across all periods of Israel's history — Exodus (Exod 17:8-16), wilderness wandering (Num 13:29; 24:20), judges (Judg 3:13; 6:3), monarchy (1 Sam 14-15; 30), and remnant erasure (1 Chr 4:43). Multilingual glosses transliterate uniformly — 'Amalek/Amaleq' in all target languages — reflecting its consistent referential identity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Amalek, Amaleq | es: Amalec, Amalek, Amaleq | fr: Amalek | de: Amalek, Amaleq Gen 36:12; Gen 36:16; Exod 17:8; Exod 17:9; Exod 17:10

עֲמָלֵקִי H6003 N-proper-ms (12×)
Amalekite — gentilic adjective/noun for a member of the Amalekite people, perennial enemies of Israel
The gentilic עֲמָלֵקִי (Amaleqi) designates a member of the Amalekite nation, descendants of Esau's grandson Amalek who inhabited the Negev and Sinai wilderness. They served as Israel's archetypal enemy from the wilderness onward. The term appears collectively with the article for the nation alongside the Canaanites blocking Israel's entry (Num 14:25, 43, 45), in geographic references like 'the field of the Amalekites' (Gen 14:7), and for individuals such as the young man in Saul's campaigns (1 Sam 15:6; 30:13). Spanish 'amalecita' and Arabic 'عماقي' both preserve the gentilic form.

Amalekite (gentilic) (12×) Gentilic designating a member or the collective body of the Amalekite people, descendants of Esau's grandson Amalek. Used for the nation alongside the Canaanites (Num 14:25, 43, 45), in geographic references (Gen 14:7; Judg 12:15), and for individuals in Saul's campaigns (1 Sam 15:6; 30:13; 2 Sam 1:8, 13). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Amalekite, Amaleqi, an-Amalekite | es: De-amalekita, Y-el-amalecita, amalecita | fr: Amaleqi, Amalécite, de-Amaleqi | de: Amalekiter, Amaleqi, der-Amalekiter Gen 14:7; Num 14:25; Num 14:43; Num 14:45; Judg 12:15

עָמַם H6004 V-Qal-Perf-3cp / 3ms (3×)
To darken, dim, eclipse; to obscure or overshadow
This verb denotes darkening or dimming, used both literally and metaphorically. Lamentations 4:1 opens with the shocking image: 'How the gold is dimmed!'—precious metal losing its luster, a metaphor for Jerusalem's fallen glory. Ezekiel 28:3 uses it to mean 'hide' or 'hold dark': no secret is hidden from Tyre's proud prince (said ironically, since he is blind to his own vulnerability). Ezekiel 31:8 says the cedars in Eden's garden 'did not eclipse' the great tree representing Pharaoh—they couldn't overshadow or dim his glory. The root connects to Arabic concepts of covering and concealing, with Targumic Aramaic using it for growing dark.

(3×) Three occurrences with varied nuances: literal dimming (Lamentations), hiding/concealment (Ezekiel 28), and overshadowing/eclipsing (Ezekiel 31). The multilingual evidence shows translational uncertainty, with some versions giving transliterated Hebrew forms. The Lamentations usage is most powerful: gold dimming becomes a metaphor for glory lost, precious things degraded. Ezekiel's usages are figurative—secrets held dark (none escapes the prince's knowledge, supposedly) and trees failing to eclipse (none matches the glory). The Hophal form in Lamentations is rare, emphasizing the passive state of being dimmed. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: is-dimmed, rivaled-it, they-have-hidden-from-you | es: lo-igualaron, se-ha-oscurecido, te-fue-oculto | fr: [יֹועַם], [עַמְּהוּ], [עַמְּמוּךָ] | de: [יֹועַם], [עַמְּהוּ], [עַמְּמוּךָ] Lam 4:1; Ezek 28:3; Ezek 31:8

עִמָּנוּאֵל H6005 N-proper-ms (4×)
Immanuel; symbolic name meaning 'God is with us,' given to Isaiah's prophetic child-sign
The famous name meaning 'with us is God,' given to the child in Isaiah's prophecy to King Ahaz as a sign of divine deliverance. Isaiah 7:14 introduces the name in the context of assuring Judah that Syria and Ephraim's threat will fail before the child grows up. In 8:8 and 8:10, 'Immanuel' becomes a declaration of trust—'God is with us'—affirming divine presence to protect Jerusalem from invasion. The name functions both as a prophetic sign-child's designation and as a confessional formula expressing confidence in God's protective presence. Christian tradition later sees messianic significance in this name, though the immediate context addresses 8th-century Judah.

(4×) The symbolic name 'Immanuel' (God-with-us) given to Isaiah's sign-child. Isaiah 7:14 introduces it as assurance to Ahaz that the threatening coalition will fall. In 8:8 and 8:10 (appearing twice as 'Immanu El'), the name becomes a declaration of faith in God's protective presence. The fourfold occurrence (counting the divided form) emphasizes the theology of divine immanence during crisis. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: El, Immanuel | es: El, Immanu | fr: [עמנו], vers | de: [עמנו], zu Isa 7:14; Isa 8:8

עָמַס H6006 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (9×)

To load or carry a burden; to bear as a load (active and passive)

A verb of physical burden-bearing that spans both the active loading of goods onto animals and the passive state of being carried. Genesis 44:13 shows Joseph's brothers loading their donkeys in distress; Nehemiah 13:15 captures Sabbath-breakers 'loading' donkeys with wine and produce. Psalm 68:20 transforms the image: God himself 'bears our burdens daily' (Spanish 'nos carga,' Hindi 'bojh uthata hai'). Isaiah 46:1-3 plays on both voices – Babylon's idols 'are loaded' onto weary beasts (passive), while Israel has been 'carried' by God since the womb. The contrast between human cargo and divine carrying is central to the word's theological weight.

1. load, carry actively (Qal/Hifil active) (7×) Active Qal and Hiphil forms denoting the physical act of loading burdens onto animals or carrying loads. Genesis 44:13 has the brothers loading donkeys; Nehemiah 13:15 describes merchants loading produce on the Sabbath; Psalm 68:20 celebrates God who 'daily bears our burden.' Spanish 'cargó' (loaded) and 'nos carga' (bears us) capture both the mundane and theological uses. 1 Kings 12:11 and 2 Chronicles 10:11 extend the image to oppressive royal taxation. BEARING AND CARRYING en: He-bears-, and-loaded, and-loading | es: cargaban, cargó, los-que-la-carguen | fr: [העמיס], [ועמסים], [עמשים] | de: [העמיס], [ועמסים], [עמסיה] Gen 44:13; 1Kgs 12:11; 2Chr 10:11; Neh 4:17; Neh 13:15

2. be loaded, carried (Qal passive) (2×) Passive Qal participle forms describing the state of being loaded or carried as a burden. Isaiah 46:1 pictures Babylon's idol-images 'loaded' (amUsot) onto exhausted pack animals, while Isaiah 46:3 reverses the image with Israel 'carried' (amusim) by God from the womb. Spanish 'cargadas/los cargados' and Arabic 'muthqalatun/al-mahmulina' preserve the passive weight of objects or people being borne by another. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: are-loaded, those-carried | es: cargadas, los-cargados | fr: [העמסים], [עמוסות] | de: [העמסים], [עמוסות] Isa 46:1; Isa 46:3

עֲמַסְיָה H6007 N-proper-ms (1×)

Amasiah, a Judahite officer under Jehoshaphat

This personal name combines 'amas (to bear, carry) with the theophoric element '-iah' (Yahweh), potentially meaning 'Yahweh has borne' or 'Yahweh carries.' The bearer was a military commander who willingly offered himself for Yahweh's service during Jehoshaphat's reign. The name parallels other compound names expressing divine action or relationship.

(1×) The officer mentioned in 2 Chronicles 17:16 who volunteered himself for Yahweh's service. The name's theophoric element connects the bearer to Yahweh, while the root suggests being carried or sustained. Greek witnesses render it variously, with one reading 'Amasias' showing assimilation to the more common name Amaziah. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amasiah | es: Amasyah | fr: [עמסיה] | de: [עמסיה] 2Chr 17:16

עַמְעָד H6008 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Amad, a town in Asher's tribal territory

This place name appears in the boundary description of Asher's inheritance. The name is preserved phonetically across major translation traditions, indicating recognition of its geographical function. BDB notes textual variants in the Septuagint witnesses, suggesting the name was unfamiliar to later Greek translators who rendered it variously.

(1×) A settlement in Asher listed in Joshua 19:26 among the territorial boundaries. The name appears with the conjunction 'and' as part of a boundary list. European translations preserve the form 'Amad,' while the conjunction varies according to target language grammar (Spanish 'y-Amad,' French 'et-Amad,' German 'und-Amad'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Amad | es: y-Amad | fr: et-Amad | de: und-Amad Josh 19:26

עָמַק H6009 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (9×)

To be deep (Qal stative); to make deep, go deep, or act profoundly (Hiphil causative)

A verb whose physical sense of depth becomes a powerful metaphor for moral and spiritual extremity. The single Qal stative in Psalm 92:5 marvels that God's thoughts 'are very deep' – unfathomable to the foolish. The Hiphil causative forms dominate, spanning from the literal (Isaiah 7:11, 'ask deep as Sheol') to the sinister: Isaiah 29:15 condemns those who 'go deep' to hide their plans from the LORD, and Hosea 5:2 (cf. Isa 31:6) accuses Israel of having 'gone deep' in corruption. Spanish 'profundizaron/se corrompieron profundamente' and Hindi 'gahraai' both convey how physical depth becomes moral entanglement – the deeper one digs, the harder it is to return.

1. make deep, go deep (Hifil causative) (8×) Hiphil causative forms meaning 'to make deep, go deep, deepen,' used both literally and figuratively. Isaiah 7:11 invites Ahaz to 'make deep' his sign-request down to Sheol; Isaiah 29:15 and 31:6 condemn those who 'go deep' in rebellion or hidden counsel; Isaiah 30:33 describes Topheth made 'deep and wide'; Jeremiah 49:8 warns Edom to 'dwell deep' in hiding; Hosea 5:2 and 9:9 portray Israel's sin as having 'gone deep.' Spanish 'profundizaron' and 'se corrompieron profundamente' reveal how physical depth becomes a metaphor for entrenched moral corruption. DEEP AND PROFOUND

en: He-has-made-wide, Him-against-whom, go-deep | es: de-los-que-profundizan, esconderse-en-lo-profundo, hazla-profunda | fr: approfondir, ils-ont-approfondi, la-vallée | de: [המעמיקים], [העמיק], [העמיקו] Isa 7:11; Isa 29:15; Isa 30:33; Isa 31:6; Jer 49:8

2. be deep (Qal stative) (1×) A single Qal stative occurrence in Psalm 92:5 declaring that God's thoughts 'are deep' – a contemplative, adjectival use expressing the unfathomable quality of divine wisdom. Spanish 'profundos,' Hindi 'gahre,' and Arabic 'amuqat' all render the simple stative depth. Unlike the Hiphil's active deepening, this form marvels at depth as an existing attribute of God's mind, contrasted in context with the senseless person who cannot grasp it. DEEP AND PROFOUND

en: deep-are | es: profundos | fr: profond | de: Tiefe-sind Ps 92:5

עֵמֶק H6010 N-msc / 3mp (69×)

emeq – a broad valley or lowland plain between hills, often the site of battles and settlements

The masculine noun emeq designates a broad, open valley or lowland – the wide, flat-bottomed kind framed by hills, as distinct from gay' (a narrow ravine) and nachal (a wadi or seasonal streambed). Derived from a root suggesting depth, the emeq is typically arable land and often a theater of conflict: the Valley of Elah where David fought Goliath (1 Sam 17:2), the Valley of Jezreel where Gideon camped (Judg 6:33), the Valley of Rephaim where the Philistines arrayed (2 Sam 5:18). Many of its 69 occurrences form fixed toponymic phrases ('Valley of X'). Spanish valle, French vallee, and German Tal each capture the sense of a broad lowland, confirming a single geographic-topographic meaning.

valley, broad lowland plain (69×) A broad, flat-bottomed valley or lowland plain situated between hills or mountains, typically suitable for agriculture and often the locale of military engagements. Distinguished from gay' (narrow gorge, H1516) and nachal (wadi, H5158) by its breadth and openness. Appears frequently in toponymic constructions: Valley of Elah (1 Sam 17:2), Valley of Jezreel (Judg 6:33), Valley of the King (Gen 14:17; 2 Sam 18:18).

Spanish valle, French vallee, and German Tal converge uniformly, confirming a single undivided geographic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Valley-of, in-the-valley, in-the-valley-of | es: en-el-valle, en-el-valle-de, en-valle-de | fr: dans-Valley-de, dans-la-vallée, dans-le-vallée | de: [בעמק], im-Tal, in-Tal-von Gen 14:3; Gen 14:8; Gen 14:17; Num 14:25

עֹמֶק H6011 Prep-l (1×)

depth, the quality or extent of being deep

This noun denotes depth as an abstract quality or spatial dimension. In Proverbs 25:3, it appears in a comparison about the unknowable depths of royal hearts, parallel to the immeasurable heights of heaven and earth. The word emphasizes the impenetrable or unfathomable nature of what is being described. The prepositional form here indicates purpose or reference.

(1×) Used in Proverbs 25:3 to describe the inscrutable depth of kings' hearts, which like physical depth cannot be measured or plumbed by ordinary means. The term creates a spatial metaphor for intellectual or emotional inaccessibility. While English and Spanish use 'depth/profundidad,' German curiously translates this instance with 'Tal' (valley), perhaps understanding a different vocalization of the text. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-depth | es: para-profundidad | fr: לעמק | de: zu-Tal Prov 25:3

עָמֹק H6012 Prep-b / N-mpc (4×)

deep, unfathomable; unintelligible or obscure, used of incomprehensible speech

An adjective meaning deep or unfathomable, used exclusively for incomprehensible speech in Isaiah and Ezekiel. Isaiah 33:19 describes a fierce people of 'deep speech'—so obscure you cannot understand them, likely referring to the Assyrians' foreign tongue. Ezekiel twice contrasts Israel's mission with that to peoples of 'deep speech and difficult language' (3:5-6), emphasizing that Israel's own language makes their prophetic responsibility greater. The term evokes not just foreign language but speech so profound or obscure as to be impenetrable. Multilingual glosses (Spanish 'profundo,' French 'profond') preserve the depth metaphor.

(4×) Deep or incomprehensible speech, language too obscure to understand. Isaiah 33:19 uses it for a foreign people whose speech is unintelligible. Ezekiel 3:5-6 contrasts 'deep of speech' peoples (whom the prophet is NOT sent to) with Israel who speaks comprehensible Hebrew. Proverbs 9:18 may use a related form for 'depths' of Sheol. The consistent application to incomprehensible language suggests depth as obscurity or impenetrability. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: deep-of, in-the-depths-of, speech | es: de-profundo, en-profundidades-de, profundos-de | fr: [עמקי], dans-בעמקי, profond | de: [בעמק], [עמק] Prov 9:18; Isa 33:19; Ezek 3:5; Ezek 3:6

עָ֫מֹק H6013 Adj-fs (17×)

Deep, either in a physical/spatial sense (skin, water, pit) or figuratively of what is profound and unsearchable.

A Hebrew adjective conveying depth in both concrete and abstract registers. In the priestly examination laws of Leviticus 13, it appears seven times to describe skin infections that penetrate 'deeper than the skin'—a clinical, spatial measurement guiding the priest's diagnosis. Elsewhere it shifts to figurative terrain: the counsel of the human heart is 'deep waters' (Prov 20:5), God's wisdom is 'deeper than Sheol' (Job 11:8), and the devices of the wicked are so deep they think God cannot find them (Ps 64:6). The multilingual evidence confirms this split cleanly: translations in German, Spanish, and French all use spatial depth vocabulary for Leviticus but shift to abstract 'profound' language for the wisdom and poetic texts.

1. deep (physical) (9×) Physical, measurable depth. Used repeatedly in the Leviticus 13 purity regulations where the priest must determine whether a skin affliction is 'deeper than the skin' (Lev 13:3, 4, 25, 30, 31, 32, 34). Also describes a deep cup (Ezek 23:32) and the 'deep pit' of the adulterous woman (Prov 22:14; 23:27). Spanish 'profunda,' French 'profond,' and German 'tief' all render it with straightforwardly spatial vocabulary in these contexts. DEEP AND PROFOUND

en: and-deep, deep, the-deep | es: la-profunda, profunda, y-profunda | fr: et-profond, profond | de: [העמקה], tief, und-Tal Lev 13:3; Lev 13:4; Lev 13:25; Lev 13:30; Lev 13:31

2. deep (abstract, inscrutable) (8×) Abstract, inscrutable depth—what lies beyond human reach or comprehension. God's purpose is 'deeper than Sheol' (Job 11:8), and He 'reveals deep things out of darkness' (Job 12:22). The scheming heart is called 'deep' in Ps 64:6, and Ecclesiastes twice laments 'that which is far off and exceedingly deep—who can find it out?' (Eccl 7:24). Cross-lingual translations shift from spatial words to conceptual ones here: Spanish uses 'cosas profundas,' capturing the leap from physical measurement to epistemological mystery. DEEP AND PROFOUND

en: deep, deep-things, deeper | es: Más-profunda, cosas-profundas, profunda | fr: profond | de: Tal, [עמקה], [עמקות] Job 11:8; Job 12:22; Ps 64:6; Prov 18:4; Prov 20:5

עָמַר H6014a V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

one who binds sheaves, a gatherer during harvest

This Piel participle describes the agricultural worker who binds cut grain into sheaves for transport and storage. It appears in Psalm 129:7, parallel to 'the reaper,' depicting harvest activity as a metaphor for those who would curse Zion. The denominative verb derives from the noun for sheaf, and the participle indicates one whose characteristic action is sheaf-binding.

(1×) The one who binds sheaves in Psalm 129:7, appearing in a curse formula against Israel's enemies. The image draws from harvest labor: after the reaper cuts the grain, the gatherer binds it into manageable bundles. Spanish preserves the full semantic content with 'el que ata gavillas' (the one who binds sheaves), while English shortens to 'gatherer,' focusing on the collection aspect of the action. GRAIN SHEAF

en: the-gatherer | es: el-que-ata-gavillas | fr: de-gerbe | de: der-gatherer Ps 129:7

עָמַר H6014b V-Hitpael-Imperf-2ms (2×)

to deal tyrannically with, to enslave (Hithpael: to treat as a slave, to oppress or exploit)

This verb (distinct from עמר I, 'to bind sheaves') appears in Deuteronomy's slave laws, describing oppressive treatment of a Hebrew slave. In Deuteronomy 21:14, a man who has taken a captive woman as a wife must free her if he loses interest—'you shall not treat her as a slave.' In Deuteronomy 24:7, kidnapping and enslaving a fellow Israelite is forbidden. The BDB compares Arabic cognates meaning 'to cherish rancour' or 'plunge into conflict,' suggesting the verb connotes hostile or exploitative treatment. The multilingual glosses vary ('treat as slave,' 'aprovecharse,' 'enslave'), reflecting the oppressive nuance.

(2×) Denotes tyrannical or exploitative treatment, specifically the enslavement or abuse of a person. Deuteronomy 21:14 and 24:7 both prohibit such treatment of Israelites. The Hithpael stem suggests reflexive or intensive action ('to make oneself a tyrant over'), underscoring the severity of the offense. Multilingual glosses ('treat as slave,' 'aprovecharse,' 'enslave') capture the oppressive connotation. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-treats-as-slave-, you-shall-treat-as-slave | es: te-aprovecharás, y-se-aproveche- | fr: et-treats-comme-esclave-, tu-devra-treat-comme-esclave | de: du-soll-treat-wie-Sklave, und-treats-wie-Sklave- Deut 21:14; Deut 24:7

עֲמַר H6015 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

wool (Aramaic), the soft hair of sheep

This Aramaic word for wool appears in Daniel's vision of the Ancient of Days, whose hair is described as white like clean wool. The term is a loan word in Biblical Aramaic, cognate with Hebrew 'tsemer' but distinct from it. The comparison emphasizes purity and perhaps age or wisdom through the imagery of whiteness. Egyptian Aramaic and Mandaic attest related forms.

(1×) Used in Daniel 7:9 to describe the hair of the Ancient of Days as being like pure wool, emphasizing brilliant whiteness. The simile 'like wool' creates a visual image of purity and perhaps venerable age. Romance languages preserve the comparison structure ('como lana,' 'comme mouton'), while the German and French glosses show some variation in how this rare Aramaic term was understood. WOOL TEXTILE FIBER

en: like-wool | es: como-lana | fr: mouton | de: [כעמר] Dan 7:9

עֹמֶר H6016a Art / N-mp (8×)

A sheaf of harvested grain; a bound bundle of cut stalks, central to harvest law and firstfruits ritual.

A masculine noun denoting a sheaf – a bundle of cut grain stalks gathered during harvest. Distinct from the homograph omer (a dry measure of capacity), this word belongs entirely to the agricultural domain. Its most prominent appearance is in the firstfruits ceremony of Leviticus 23:10-15, where the priest waves a sheaf before the LORD as the inaugural act of the grain harvest. Deuteronomy 24:19 legislates that a forgotten sheaf must be left for the sojourner, widow, and orphan. Ruth 2:7, 15 pictures Ruth gleaning among the sheaves. Job 24:10 uses it figuratively for food carried by the oppressed. French 'gerbe' and Spanish 'gavilla' both denote the bound sheaf specifically.

Sheaf (bundle of harvested grain) (8×) A sheaf or bound bundle of cut grain stalks, the basic unit of the harvest field. The term is central to two key legal-ritual contexts: the wave-sheaf offering of firstfruits (Lev 23:10-15), where the priest elevates the first sheaf before the LORD to consecrate the harvest, and the gleaning law (Deut 24:19), which mandates leaving forgotten sheaves for the vulnerable. Ruth 2:7, 15 vividly illustrates gleaning practice among the sheaves. Job 24:10 extends the image figuratively to bread carried by laborers denied their wages. Spanish 'gavilla' and French 'gerbe' precisely capture the bound-sheaf referent, confirming this is distinct from the dry-measure omer. GRAIN SHEAF

en: a-sheaf-of, among-the-sheaves, sheaf | es: entre-las-gavillas, gavilla, gavillas. | fr: gerbe-de, le-gerbes, le-sheaf | de: Garbe, Garbe-von, [בעמרים] Lev 23:10; Lev 23:11; Lev 23:12; Lev 23:15; Deut 24:19

עֹמֶר H6016b N-ms (6×)

Omer — a dry measure equal to one-tenth of an ephah, used exclusively in the manna narrative of Exodus 16.

A unit of dry measure appearing only in the manna account of Exodus 16, where it serves as the daily ration God prescribed for each person. The omer equals one-tenth of an ephah (Exod 16:36), roughly 2.3 liters. Each Israelite gathered an omer per head (v. 16), and remarkably, whether they gathered much or little, when measured it came to exactly one omer (v. 18). An omer of manna was also preserved in a jar before the Testimony as a memorial for future generations (vv. 32–33). The Septuagint transliterates it as gomor, and modern translations across languages — Spanish 'omer,' French 'omer,' German 'Omer' — retain the Hebrew term as a technical unit.

the omer (6×) A dry-capacity measure equaling one-tenth of an ephah (approximately 2.3 liters), used exclusively in the Exodus 16 manna narrative. It functions both as the prescribed daily per-capita gathering amount (Exod 16:16, 18, 22) and as the quantity preserved in a memorial jar before the ark (Exod 16:32–33). The multilingual evidence uniformly transliterates rather than translates the term, confirming its status as a fixed technical unit of measurement. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-the-omer, by-the-omer, omer | es: Y-el-omer, con-el-omer, el-omer | fr: et-le-omer, le-omer, omer | de: der-omer, durch-der-omer, omer Exod 16:16; Exod 16:18; Exod 16:22; Exod 16:32; Exod 16:33

עֲמֹרָה H6017 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (19×)

Gomorrah — city destroyed with Sodom by divine judgment, a byword for utter ruin

The proper noun designating Gomorrah, the ancient city of the Jordan plain destroyed alongside Sodom by fire and brimstone (Gen 19:24–28). In every one of its nineteen occurrences it appears paired with Sodom, never alone, forming the proverbial duo that became the Bible's primary image of catastrophic divine judgment. The prophets invoke the pair as a warning: 'like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah' becomes a standard formula for total devastation (Isa 13:19; Jer 49:18; 50:40; Amos 4:11). Isaiah even addresses Jerusalem's leaders as 'rulers of Gomorrah' (Isa 1:10), applying the toponym metaphorically to moral corruption.

Gomorrah (city destroyed with Sodom) (19×) The proper name Amorah (Gomorrah), designating the city of the Jordan plain destroyed alongside Sodom by divine fire (Gen 19:24–28). Always occurs paired with Sodom, functioning as a proverbial emblem of total ruin under God's judgment. Used historically in the Genesis narratives (Gen 10:19; 13:10; 14:2, 8) and prophetically as a warning formula: 'like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah' (Isa 13:19; Jer 49:18; Amos 4:11; Zeph 2:9). Spanish 'Gomorra,' French 'Gomorrhe,' and German 'Gomorra' all preserve the name with minimal variation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amorah, Gomorrah, and-Amorah | es: Amorah, Gomorra, a-Amorah | fr: Gomorrah, Gomorrhe, comme-Gomorrhe | de: Gomorra, Gomorrah, [ועמרה] Gen 10:19; Gen 13:10; Gen 14:2; Gen 14:8; Gen 14:10

עָמְרִי H6018 N-proper-ms (18×)

Omri — personal name borne by four Israelites, most notably the sixth king of the northern kingdom

A Hebrew proper name meaning possibly 'my sheaf' or 'pupil of Yah.' Most prominently, Omri was the powerful king of Israel who founded Samaria as his new capital (1 Kgs 16:16–28). So lasting was his dynasty's reputation that Assyrian records continued to call Israel 'the house of Omri' (Bit-Humri) long after his line had ended. The Moabite Stone likewise names him. Three other men bear this name: a Benjaminite (1 Chr 7:8), a Judahite (9:4), and a chief of Issachar under David (27:18).

Omri (18×) The proper name Omri, applied to four distinct individuals. The most prominent is King Omri of Israel, army commander acclaimed king by the troops at Gibbethon, who reigned from Tirzah and then built Samaria (1 Kgs 16:16–28). Assyrian cuneiform (Humri) and the Mesha Stele attest his international significance. Three lesser figures in Chronicles also bear the name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Omri, and-Omri | es: Omri, Omrí, y-Omri | fr: Omri, [ועמרי], [עמרי] | de: Omri, [ועמרי], [עמרי] 1Kgs 16:16; 1Kgs 16:17; 1Kgs 16:21; 1Kgs 16:22

עַמְרָם H6019 N-proper-ms (14×)

Amram; father of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, grandson of Levi and head of the Amramite clan.

A personal name probably meaning 'the kinsman is exalted' (from 'am + ram), designating the most prominent figure in the Levitical genealogy between Levi and Moses. As the son of Kohath and grandson of Levi, Amram married Jochebed and became the father of Aaron, Moses, and Miriam (Exod 6:18, 20; Num 26:59). His lineage anchors the Levitical priestly line: the Amramites appear as a recognized clan in the wilderness census and temple service assignments (Num 3:19, 27; 1 Chr 26:23). He lived to 137 years according to the Priestly source (Exod 6:20). A second Amram appears briefly in Ezra 10:34 among those with foreign wives.

Amram (14×) The proper name of the father of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, son of Kohath and grandson of Levi. Central to the Levitical genealogies in both Exodus and Chronicles (Exod 6:18, 20; Num 3:19; 26:58-59; 1 Chr 5:28-29; 6:3; 23:12-13; 24:20). His descendants, the Amramites, form a recognized Levitical subdivision assigned duties in the tabernacle and temple (Num 3:27; 1 Chr 26:23). A second, post-exilic Amram is listed among those who had taken foreign wives (Ezra 10:34). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amram, to-Amram | es: Amram, a-Amram | fr: Amram, à-Amram | de: Amram, [עמרם], zu-Amram Exod 6:18; Exod 6:20; Num 3:19; Num 26:58

עַמְרָמִי H6020 Prep-l (2×)

the Amramites, of the Amramites (gentilic: descendants of Amram, a Levitical clan)

This gentilic designates the Amramite clan, descendants of Amram son of Kohath (Moses and Aaron's father). In Numbers 3:27, the Amramites are listed among the Kohathite families charged with tabernacle duties. In 1 Chronicles 26:23, they appear in the genealogies of Levitical officials. The multilingual glosses transliterate the gentilic with appropriate prepositions ('the Amramite,' 'of the Amramites'), following standard conventions for tribal and clan names.

(2×) A collective gentilic referring to the descendants of Amram, a prominent Kohathite Levite. Both occurrences situate the Amramites in contexts of priestly service (Numbers 3:27, 1 Chronicles 26:23). All target languages transliterate the name and preserve the prepositional nuances ('the Amramite,' 'para el amramita,' 'le Amramite'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Of-the-Amramites, the-Amramite | es: Para-el-amramita, el-amramita | fr: [לעמרמי], le-Amramite | de: [לעמרמ], der-Amramite Num 3:27; 1Chr 26:23

עֲמָשָׂא H6021 Conj-w (16×)

Amasa — personal name, notably Absalom's military commander later killed by Joab

Amasa is best known as the nephew of David whom Absalom appointed commander of his rebel army (2 Sam 17:25). After Absalom's defeat, David attempted reconciliation by offering Amasa the command of the royal forces in place of Joab (2 Sam 19:13–14). This political maneuver ended tragically when Joab assassinated Amasa at Gibeon under the pretense of greeting him (2 Sam 20:9–10) — a murder David remembered on his deathbed (1 Kgs 2:5, 32). A separate Amasa, an Ephraimite chief, appears briefly in 2 Chronicles 28:12 advocating mercy toward Judean captives.

Amasa (16×) Proper masculine name identifying primarily the son of Jether (or Ithra) and Abigail, David's sister, who served as Absalom's general and was later murdered by Joab (2 Sam 17:25; 19:13; 20:4–12; 1 Kgs 2:5, 32; 1 Chr 2:17). A second bearer is an Ephraimite leader who urged compassion toward prisoners of war (2 Chr 28:12). French and German leave the name untransliterated in several occurrences, while Spanish renders both Amasa and Amasá, reflecting accentuation differences. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amasa, and-Amasa, and-to-Amasa | es: Amasa, Amasá, Y-Amasa | fr: Amasa, [עמשא], [עמשא] | de: Amasa, [עמשא], [עמשא] 2Sam 17:25; 2Sam 19:13; 2Sam 20:4; 2Sam 20:5

עֲמָשַׂי H6022 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Amasai — name of several Israelites: a warrior of David, Levites, and a priest

Amasai is the name borne by at least four distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most notable is the warrior who declared allegiance to David with a Spirit-inspired speech (1 Chr 12:19), possibly identical to Abishai of 2 Sam 23:18. Other bearers include Levites in the Kohathite genealogy (1 Chr 6:25, 35), a priest who blew the trumpet before the Ark (1 Chr 15:24), and a Levite in Hezekiah's reform (2 Chr 29:12). The name likely derives from the root 'amas' meaning 'to carry, bear a burden.'

(5×) Personal name of multiple Israelites spanning warrior, Levitical, and priestly roles. The most memorable bearer is the Davidic warrior of 1 Chr 12:19 whose Spirit-empowered pledge of loyalty echoes covenant language. Spanish and English consistently transliterate 'Amasai,' while French and German retain the Hebrew form in brackets, reflecting its less common appearance in those traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amasai, Amasay, and-Amasai | es: Amasai, Amasay, y-Amasai | fr: [עמשי], [עמשי] | de: [עמשי], [עמשי] 1Chr 6:25; 1Chr 6:35; 1Chr 12:19; 1Chr 15:24; 2Chr 29:12

עֲמַשְׁסַי H6023 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Amashsai, a priest in post-exilic Jerusalem

This priestly name appears in Nehemiah's list of those who settled in Jerusalem after the exile. BDB notes it as a probable textual error for a similar name found in Chronicles, where the parallel passage has a slightly different form. The name appears among priests who returned to serve in the restored temple community.

(1×) A priest mentioned in Nehemiah 11:13 among those dwelling in Jerusalem. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 9:12 has 'Maasai,' leading scholars to suspect textual corruption. Septuagint witnesses reflect uncertainty about the name's form. As a proper noun, translations either transliterate it or leave it in Hebrew characters, acknowledging the textual difficulty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Amashsai | es: y-Amasai | fr: [עמשסי] | de: [עמשסי] Neh 11:13

עֲנָב H6024 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Anab (place name: a town in the hill country of Judah)

Anab is a town in the hill country of Judah, mentioned in Joshua 11:21 (as one of the sites from which Joshua cut off the Anakim) and Joshua 15:50 (in the town list of Judah's inheritance). The name may mean 'grape,' and the site is identified with modern Khirbet Anab, about 18.5 miles southwest of Hebron. The Septuagint renders it Ανααβ or Ανωβ. All modern translations transliterate the name.

(2×) A Judahite town in the hill country (Joshua 11:21, 15:50). The conjunctive form ('and Anab,' Joshua 15:50) reflects its position in the town list. All target languages transliterate the name uniformly, treating it as a proper toponym. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anav, and-Anav | es: Anab, y-Anab | fr: Anav, et-Anav | de: Anav, und-Anav Josh 11:21; Josh 15:50

עֵנָב H6025 Prep-k / N-mp (19×)

Grape(s) — the fruit of the vine, used collectively for harvest produce and individually for the berry

The common Hebrew noun for grape or grapes, encompassing both the individual berry and the collective harvest. It appears in some of Scripture's most vivid agricultural imagery: Pharaoh's cupbearer dreams of pressing grapes into a cup (Gen 40:10–11), the spies bring back a massive grape cluster from Canaan (Num 13:23), and the Song of Moses speaks poetically of 'the blood of the grape' (Gen 49:11; Deut 32:14). The word also carries theological weight in Isaiah's parable of the vineyard that yielded only wild grapes (Isa 5:2, 4) and in the ominous 'grapes of poison' (Deut 32:32). German distinguishes 'Traube' (cluster) from 'Beeren' (berries), but Hebrew uses this single term for both.

grape(s) (19×) The grape fruit, used both collectively for grapes as agricultural produce and individually for the grape berry. Appears in viticulture and harvest contexts: Pharaoh's cupbearer pressing grapes (Gen 40:10–11), the spies' enormous cluster from Canaan (Num 13:23), Nazirite abstinence regulations (Num 6:3), and sabbatical year provisions (Lev 25:5). Also carries figurative force in the vineyard parable of Isaiah 5:2, 4 and the 'grapes of poison' in Deuteronomy 32:32. German distinguishes 'Traube' (cluster) from 'Beeren' (berries), while Hebrew uses this single term. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST

en: and-grapes, grape, grapes | es: como-uvas, las-uvas, sus-uvas | fr: [כענבים], [ענבים], et-raisins | de: Beeren, Traube, Trauben Gen 40:10; Gen 40:11; Gen 49:11; Lev 25:5; Num 6:3

עָנַג H6026 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2ms (10×)

To be delicate, take exquisite delight; of reveling in God's goodness, living in pampered luxury, or mocking with pleasure.

At its heart this verb names a kind of pleasure that borders on indulgence — whether spiritual or sensual. In the Hitpael, the reflexive stem invites the subject to 'delight yourself in the LORD' (Ps 37:4), promising that such self-abandoning joy will be rewarded. Isaiah 55:2 echoes the invitation: 'let your soul delight itself in richness.' But the same root can shade toward pampered softness — in Deuteronomy

28:56 it describes the woman so delicately bred that she will not set her foot on the ground. Isaiah 57:4 pushes further into derision: 'Against whom do you sport yourselves?' Spanish deleitarse ('to delight oneself') and French se délecter capture the reflexive pleasure well, while the Arabic cognate ghanija ('to behave amorously, languorously') hints at the sensuous undertone the root always carries.

1. delight oneself, take pleasure (7×) The primary Hitpael reflexive sense of delighting oneself in something — taking exquisite, absorbed pleasure. Most occurrences cluster around delight in God or His ways: 'Delight yourself in the LORD' (Ps 37:4), 'the humble shall delight themselves in abundant peace' (Ps 37:11), 'you shall delight yourself in the Almighty' (Job 22:26). Isaiah 55:2 and 58:14 extend the object from God to His provision and His Sabbath. Spanish deleitarse and French se délecter both preserve the reflexive, self-involving quality: this is not passive reception but active, willing immersion in joy. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-delight-yourself, and-delight-yourselves, and-let-delight-itself | es: Y-deléitate, se-deleitará, te-deleitarás | fr: délicat, et-délicat, et-le-se-délecter | de: [והתענגתם], [ותתענג], [יתענג] Job 22:26; Job 27:10; Ps 37:4; Ps 37:11; Isa 55:2

2. delicateness, pampered luxury (1×) The Hitpael infinitive construct used as an abstract noun in Deuteronomy 28:56, naming the condition of delicateness or pampered luxury. The 'tender and delicate woman' is characterized by her hitanneg — her habitual softness and indulgence. Here the word is not about spiritual joy but about a life so sheltered that even walking on bare ground is unthinkable. The Arabic cognate ghanija ('to be coquettish, languorous') and the BDB gloss 'dainty habit' both point to physical ease carried to excess. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-delicateness | es: por-delicadeza | fr: de-delicateness | de: von-delicateness Deut 28:56

3. make sport of, mock (1×) A sharp Hitpael turn in Isaiah 57:4, where the verb takes on a mocking, derisive edge: 'Against whom do you make sport? Against whom do you open your mouth wide?' The delight here is malicious — taking pleasure in taunting. Spanish burlarse ('to mock') captures the shift from joyful self-indulgence to sneering self-amusement. Only one occurrence carries this sense, but it shows how the reflexive 'pleasuring oneself' can curdle into derision when directed at another person. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: do-you-mock | es: os-burláis | fr: délicat | de: [תתענגו] Isa 57:4

4. delicate, pampered person (1×) The Pual participle in Jeremiah 6:2, describing Jerusalem as a 'delicate' or 'pampered' woman — someone who has been made soft by others' indulgence. Unlike the Hitpael, where the subject delights herself, the Pual passive marks external pampering: the city has been treated tenderly and is therefore vulnerable. Spanish la delicada ('the delicate one') and the overall feminine personification of Jerusalem as a coddled daughter give this sense its distinctive poignancy. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-the-delicate | es: y-la-delicada | fr: et-délicat | de: [והמעגה] Jer 6:2

עֶדְנָה H6027 N-ms (2×)
delight, exquisite pleasure (noun: sensual or aesthetic enjoyment, luxury)
This noun denotes refined pleasure or luxury, appearing in contexts of indulgence or eschatological promise. In Isaiah 13:22, Babylon's 'palaces of delight' (or 'luxurious palaces') will soon be destroyed. In Isaiah 58:13, calling the Sabbath 'a delight' is part of true worship and covenant faithfulness. The term suggests aesthetic or sensual pleasure, often tinged with either decadence (Babylon) or divine blessing (Sabbath). The multilingual glosses render 'delight' or 'pleasure' ('delicia,' 'placer'), capturing the hedonic nuance.

(2×) Denotes exquisite pleasure or luxury. Isaiah 13:22 uses it of Babylon's opulent palaces (soon to fall); Isaiah 58:13 applies it to the Sabbath as a source of joy. The contexts range from condemnation of excess to commendation of holy delight. All target languages render 'delight' or 'pleasure,' preserving the aesthetic and sensual overtones. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: a-delight, delight | es: delicia, placer | fr: [ענג] | de: [ענג] Isa 13:22; Isa 58:13

עָנֹג H6028 Conj-w | Adj-fs (3×)
Dainty, delicate; soft, refined, accustomed to luxury and comfort
This adjective describes someone refined by luxury, softened by comfort, accustomed to ease. Deuteronomy 28 uses it twice in the covenant curses, depicting the 'delicate and tender' man and woman who will turn savage under siege, even cannibalizing their own children. The word appears alongside 'tender' (rak), emphasizing softness and sensitivity. Isaiah 47:1 addresses personified Babylon as 'tender and delicate,' mocking her former luxury before her coming degradation. The term suggests both physical softness and the psychological fragility that comes from never experiencing hardship. Deuteronomy's usage is deeply ironic: the most delicate will commit the most savage acts when necessity strikes.

(3×) Three occurrences: two in Deuteronomy's siege curses (masculine and feminine forms), one in Isaiah's Babylon oracle. The multilingual evidence consistently renders 'delicate/delicado,' with conjunction forms showing the word in descriptive phrases. Deuteronomy 28's paired portraits—the delicate man and the delicate woman—both descend into cannibalism, showing how siege warfare strips away civilization's veneer. Isaiah's usage is taunting: Babylon's former delicacy will give way to hard labor and humiliation. The word captures the brittleness of luxury-accustomed existence. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-delicate, and-the-delicate | es: y-delicada, y-el-delicado, y-la-delicada | fr: [ועגה], et-le-delicate | de: [ועגה], und-der-delicate Deut 28:54; Deut 28:56; Isa 47:1

עָנַד H6029 V-Qal-Imp-ms | 3mp (2×)
to bind on, to tie around (Qal: to fasten or wrap around oneself, especially as an ornament or garment)
This verb appears twice, both times in contexts of binding or fastening. In Job 31:36, Job imagines wearing his accuser's indictment 'as a garland,' binding it on himself as a badge of honor. In Proverbs 6:21, the son is urged to 'bind' his parents' commandments on his heart (parallel to 'tie them around your neck'). The BDB compares Arabic cognates meaning 'to turn aside' and Syriac forms meaning 'to lack,' though the binding sense is primary. The multilingual glosses render 'bind' or 'tie' ('enlázalos,' 'atar'), reflecting the physical act of fastening.

(2×) Denotes fastening or binding something on oneself, whether literally (tying a garment) or metaphorically (binding commandments to the heart). Job 31:36 uses it of wearing an indictment as a crown; Proverbs 6:21 of internalizing parental teaching. The imperative and imperfect forms emphasize deliberate action. All target languages render 'bind' or 'tie,' preserving the manual and metaphorical senses. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: I-would-bind-it, tie-them | es: enlázalos, lo-ataré | fr: אענדנו, ענדם-eux | de: [אענדנו], [ענדם] Job 31:36; Prov 6:21

עִוִּין H6030a Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
will dwell/howl, a verb of uncertain meaning in Isaiah 13:22
This word appears in Isaiah's oracle against Babylon, describing jackals or wild creatures. The Hebrew root and meaning are disputed: it could be from a root meaning 'to dwell' (as the consonants suggest) or 'to howl/respond' (as traditional interpretation takes it). Context describes desolate ruins inhabited by wild animals, which supports either reading. The verb's gender agreement with 'jackals' is unusual, prompting textual discussion.

(1×) Used in Isaiah 13:22 to describe the action of jackals in Babylon's ruins. The Hebrew allows 'will dwell' or 'will howl,' with ancient versions divided. Spanish 'aullarán' (will howl) and German 'antwortete' (answered, from the root 'anah') reflect the traditional understanding of animal cries, while the structural parallel with 'dwell' in verse 21 suggests habitation. The multilingual glosses reveal ongoing lexical uncertainty about this rare form. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING
en: and-will-howl | es: Y-aullarán | fr: [וענה] | de: und-antwortete Isa 13:22

עָנָה H6030b V-Qal-Imperf-1cs / 3mse (314×)

To answer, respond, reply; also to testify or bear witness; in Nifal, to be answered; occasionally to sing responsively.

Anah is the standard Hebrew verb for verbal response, and with 314 occurrences it is woven into nearly every narrative dialogue in the Hebrew Bible. The formulaic wayyaan...wayyomer ('and he answered and said') is one of the most recognizable patterns in biblical Hebrew prose, appearing hundreds of times to introduce direct speech. Yet anah carries more than conversational meaning. In legal contexts it becomes 'to testify' — the Decalogue's 'you shall not bear false witness' (Exod 20:16) uses this very verb. The multilingual evidence sharpens these boundaries: Arabic shahida ('to testify') and Spanish testificara are recruited specifically for the witness sense, while Korean 대답하다 ('to answer') and German antwortete serve the general response meaning. A small but intriguing cluster points toward responsive singing (Hos 2:15; Deut 31:21), where anah describes antiphonal or choral reply.

1. answer, respond, reply (289×) To answer, respond, or reply verbally to a question, statement, or implied situation — the overwhelming primary sense at 289 occurrences. This encompasses the wayyaan formula ('and he answered') in narrative, direct responses in dialogue, and God's answering of prayer. Spanish respondio, French repondit, German antwortete, Korean 대답했다, and Arabic ajaba all converge on standard response vocabulary. Key passages span the entire canon: Abraham answering God (Gen 18:27), Job answering his friends (Job 6:1; 9:1; 12:1), and the prophetic declaration that God 'will answer' his people (Isa 30:19; Hos 14:9). ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING en: and-answered, and-he-answered | es: Y-respondió, y-respondió | fr: et-answered, et-il-répondit, et-répondit | de: und-antwortete, und-er-antwortete Gen 18:27; Gen 23:10; Gen 23:14; Gen 24:50; Gen 27:37

2. testify, bear witness (18×) To testify, bear witness, or give formal testimony — 18 occurrences concentrated in legal and covenantal contexts. The ninth commandment (Exod 20:16; Deut 5:20) prohibits 'answering' against one's neighbor as a false witness, but the meaning is clearly 'testifying' rather than mere 'replying.' Num 35:30 specifies that no one shall 'testify' (yaaneh) against another on the strength of a single witness. Arabic shahida ('to bear witness') and Spanish testificara ('shall testify') both shift to forensic vocabulary here, distinct from the conversational 'answer' of sense 1. Gen 30:33 extends this into a moral-accountability frame: 'my righteousness will testify for me.' ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING

en: and-testifies, and-will-answer, answer | es: Y-responderá, Y-testifica, Y-testificará | fr: devra-testify, et—répondre, et-il-a-répondu | de: antworte, antworten, antwortete Gen 30:33; Exod 20:16; Exod 23:2; Num 35:30; Deut 5:20

3. (3×) To sing responsively or respond in song — an antiphonal or choral sense appearing in 3 passages. In Hos 2:15 Israel 'will sing/respond' as in the days of her youth (the restored covenant relationship expressed as musical response); Deut 31:21 speaks of the Song of Moses 'testifying/responding' before Israel; and Deut 25:9 uses anah for the formal spoken response in the levirate ceremony. Spanish cantara ('she will sing') in Hosea confirms the musical reading, while Korean and German retain general 'answer' vocabulary. The boundary between liturgical response and testimony is inherently fluid in ancient Israelite practice, where responsive song could serve as communal witness. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING

en: and-shall-answer, and-she-will-sing, and-will-answer | es: y-cantará, y-responderá | fr: et-devra-answer, et-fera-answer, et-répondre | de: und-antwortete, und-soll-antworten, und-wird-antworten Deut 25:9; Deut 31:21; Hos 2:15

4. be answered (Nifal passive) (3×) To be answered or receive a response — the Nifal (passive) stem, appearing 3 times. Job 11:2 asks whether 'a multitude of words shall be answered' (i.e., deserve a response); Job 19:7 laments 'I cry out but am not answered'; Prov 21:13 warns that one who ignores the poor 'will cry out and not be answered.' Arabic yujab ('to be responded to') and Spanish sera respondido ('will be answered') both use passive voice, confirming this as a genuine voice-driven sense distinction. The theological weight falls on the experience of divine silence — being unanswered — as a form of judgment or abandonment. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING

en: I-am-answered, answered, be-answered | es: será-respondida?, será-respondido, soy-respondido; | fr: répondre | de: antwortete Job 11:2; Job 19:7; Prov 21:13

5. (1×) To be brought low or silenced — a single occurrence at Isa 25:5 where the 'noise of strangers is brought low' or 'subdued.' This appears to be a homonymic overlap with a different root anah (II), meaning 'to be humbled or afflicted,' but the clustering algorithm placed it here based on surface form. Spanish sera silenciado ('will be silenced'), English 'is brought low,' and German Strauss (an unusual rendering) all point away from the 'answer/respond' semantic field. This sense is best understood as belonging to the separate lexeme H6031 (anah II, 'to afflict/humble') rather than to this root, though the formal overlap makes disambiguation necessary. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING en: is-brought-low | es: será-silenciado | fr: répondre | de: Strauss Isa 25:5

תַּעֲנִית H6030c V-Piel-Imp-mp (14×)

To sing, chant, or respond in song; used for communal worship, antiphonal responses, and vocal shouts of praise

Distinguished from the more common 'anah (to answer/respond), this homonym specializes in musical and vocal performance. Miriam leads the women to 'sing' at the Red Sea (Exod 15:21), the women of Israel chant antiphonally about Saul and David's victories (1 Sam 18:7), and the Levites respond with praise at the temple foundation (Ezra 3:11). Spanish alternates between 'cantad' (sing!) and 'respondieron' (they responded), reflecting the overlap between singing and liturgical call-and-response. The Piel intensive form suggests deliberate, sustained praise (Isa 27:2).

1. sing, chant (Qal) (5×) To sing or chant in the Qal stem, covering general singing whether as command, description, or habitual action. Israel sings at the well (Num 21:17), the women sing of David's prowess (1 Sam 21:12; 29:5), and the psalmist pledges that his tongue will 'sing' of God's word (Ps 119:172). Spanish 'Cantad' (sing!) and French 'chanter' confirm the straightforward musical sense. Psalm 147:7 uses it for thanksgiving singing with the lyre. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: may-sing, sing, they-sang | es: Cantad, Responderá, cantaban- | fr: chanter, ils-chanta, ils-chante | de: möge-singen, sie-sang, sie-sing Num 21:17; 1Sam 21:12; 1Sam 29:5; Ps 119:172; Ps 147:7

2. respond antiphonally, answer in song (4×) To respond antiphonally or answer in song, especially in liturgical or communal worship settings. Miriam 'answered' the men's song at the sea (Exod 15:21), the women 'answered' one another singing of Saul and David (1 Sam 18:7), and the Levites 'answered' with praise at Ezra's temple dedication (Ezra 3:11). Spanish 'respondieron/respondió' and French 'répondit' preserve the call-and-response structure. Jeremiah 25:30 extends this to God 'answering' with a roar from on high. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING

en: and-answered, he-will-answer | es: Y-respondieron, Y-respondió, Y-respondían | fr: [וַיַּעֲנוּ], [יַעֲנֶה], et-répondit | de: Strauss, [וַיַּעֲנוּ], und-antwortete Exod 15:21; 1Sam 18:7; Ezra 3:11; Jer 25:30

3. cry out, raise a shout (3×) To cry out or raise a shout, where the emphasis falls on vocal intensity rather than melody. In Exodus 32:18, Moses distinguishes between shouts of victory, cries of defeat, and the sound of 'singing' — using this root for the vocal noise itself. Jeremiah 51:14 pictures warriors raising a shout (hedad) over Babylon. The sense sits at the boundary between singing and shouting, where volume and communal energy matter more than tune. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-they-will-raise, singing-of | es: responder-de, y-levantarán | fr: [וְעָנוּ], singing-de | de: [וְעָנוּ], singing-von Exod 32:18; Jer 51:14

4. sing, chant (Piel intensive) (2×) To sing in the Piel intensive stem, suggesting deliberate, sustained, or liturgical praise. Isaiah 27:2 introduces a 'vineyard of delight — sing of it!' using the Piel imperative for emphatic communal singing. The intensive form elevates ordinary singing into purposeful worship, and Exodus 32:18 pairs this with the sound Moses hears descending the mountain. Spanish 'cantadle' (sing to him/it) reflects the directed, intentional quality of Piel praise. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: sing, singing | es: cantadle, cantar | fr: [ענן], singing | de: [ענן], singing Exod 32:18; Isa 27:2

מַעַן H6031a V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (3×)

To be occupied, to keep busy; Hiphil participle expressing God giving humanity tasks and preoccupations

This entry represents a unique use of a root (typically meaning 'to afflict') in Qoheleth's distinctive vocabulary. In Ecclesiastes 1:13 and 3:10, the Hiphil participle appears in the phrase 'the occupation/business God has given to humans to be occupied with.' Ecclesiastes 5:20 (Eng. 5:19) uses a related form: God 'keeps him occupied with joy in his heart,' giving preoccupation with gladness. The semantic development from 'afflict' to 'occupy' or 'keep busy' may involve the idea of tasking or burdening someone with activity. Qoheleth uses it to describe the human condition of busyness, the ceaseless round of tasks that fill existence. It's part of his exploration of what God has given humanity to do.

(3×) Three occurrences in Ecclesiastes exploring the theme of divinely appointed occupation. Ecclesiastes 1:13 introduces 'the unhappy business God has given,' while 3:10 speaks of 'the task God has given to humans to be busy with.' In 5:20, the nuance shifts positively: God keeps a person occupied with joy. The multilingual evidence shows varied handling, with some seeing the affliction root, others the occupation sense. Qoheleth's use emphasizes God's sovereignty over human activity—both the toilsome busyness and the joyful preoccupation are divine gifts or impositions. PURPOSE RESOLVE INTENT
en: keeps-busy, to-be-occupied | es: para-ocuparse, responde | fr: affliger, à-affliger | de: demuetigen, von-antwortete Eccl 1:13; Eccl 3:10; Eccl 5:20

מַעֲנִית H6031b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3fs / 3fs (80×)

afflict, oppress, humble, bring low; violate (sexually); humble oneself, fast; be bowed down, be afflicted; answer, respond

A word with two distinct roots often merged in lexicons: ענה II (afflict) and ענה I (answer). The affliction sense dominates with 73 occurrences: Egyptian taskmasters oppressed Israel (Exodus 1:11), God humbled Israel in the wilderness to test them (Deuteronomy 8:2), and the reflexive form describes self-affliction through fasting (Leviticus 16:29). Four instances refer to sexual violation (Genesis 34:2, Deuteronomy 22, 2 Samuel 13). The passive stems describe being afflicted by others or suffering in a state of distress. Three occurrences appear to belong to the homonym meaning 'answer' and may have been tagged incorrectly.

1. Piel: afflict, oppress (42×) The dominant active Piel sense: causing suffering, distress, or oppression to someone. Used paradigmatically of Egyptian taskmasters afflicting Israel (Exodus 1:11-12), human mistreatment (Genesis 31:50 'if you afflict my daughters'), and God's disciplining action. Consistently rendered across languages: Hindi सताना (oppress), Arabic ʾ (torment/oppress), Spanish afligir/oprimir, showing unified semantic recognition of active causation of suffering. AFFLICT HUMBLE OPPRESS en: afflicting, afflicting-him, and-afflict | es: a-afligirlo, afligieres, afligir | fr: afflicting, afflicting-lui, et-afflict | de: [ו׳יענך], [ותענך], afflicting Gen 15:13; Gen 16:6; Gen 31:50; Exod 1:11; Exod 1:12

2. Piel: humble, bring low (10×) Humbling or bringing low in status or pride, emphasizing reduction of self-exaltation rather than physical pain. Deuteronomy 8:2-3 is the paradigm text: 'he humbled you and let you hunger and fed you with manna, that he might make you know that man does not live by bread alone.' Korean 겸손하게 하셨고 (caused to be humble), Arabic ʾ (humbled you), showing the pedagogical or moral dimension distinct from mere affliction. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: and-he-humbled-you, he-humbled, he-humbled-her | es: Y-te-humilló, humillaron, humillarte | fr: et-il-humilia-tu, humilier, il-a-répondu | de: [ענה], [ענו], du-haben-demuetigte-ihr Deut 8:2; Deut 8:3; Deut 8:16; Deut 21:14; Deut 22:24

3. Hitpael: humble oneself, fast (6×) Hitpael reflexive: to afflict oneself or humble oneself, routinely associated with fasting and penitential practices. Leviticus 16:29, 31 uses this for the Day of Atonement: 'you shall afflict your souls,' universally understood as fasting (Arabic ʾ, you shall fast; Hindi उपवास रखना, keep a fast). Ezra 8:21 and Daniel 10:12 similarly connect self-humbling with seeking God through abstinence. AFFLICT HUMBLE OPPRESS en: and-humble-yourself, and-to-humble-yourself, they-afflicted-themselves | es: fueron-afligidos, para-humillarnos, se-afligio | fr: [להתענות], et-humble-toi-même, et-humilier | de: [ולהתענות], [להתענות], du-waren-afflicted Gen 16:9; 1Kgs 2:26; Ezra 8:21; Ps 107:17

4. Qal: be bowed down, suffer (5×) Intransitive Qal: being in a state of affliction or suffering, without specifying external agency. Psalm 119:67 'before I was afflicted I went astray' and 116:10 'I was greatly afflicted' exemplify this passive/stative usage. Arabic ʾ (I was in distress), Korean 고난을 받기 전에 (before receiving affliction), marking experiential suffering rather than active imposition. AFFLICT HUMBLE OPPRESS en: I-was-afflicted, he-is-daunted, no | es: fuera-afligido, fui-afligido, fui-muy-afligido | fr: affligé, humilier | de: Krieg-geplagt, Strauss, [ענו׳] Ps 116:10; Ps 119:67; Ps 119:71; Isa 31:4; Zech 10:2

5. Nifal: be humbled, submit (4×) Nifal reflexive-passive: being humbled or brought into submission, often voluntarily accepting or enduring affliction with meekness. Isaiah 53:7 is the archetype: 'he was oppressed and afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth.' The lamb-like submission under affliction distinguishes this from simple passive victimhood — there is posture of acceptance or yielding evident in the contexts (Exodus 10:3, Isaiah 58:10). AFFLICT HUMBLE OPPRESS en: I-am-afflicted, afflicted, to-humble-yourself | es: Fui-afligido, afligida, fue-afligido | fr: affligé, humilier, à-humble-toi-même | de: [נענה], ich-bin-geplagt, zu-humble-dich-selbst Exod 10:3; Ps 119:107; Isa 53:7; Isa 58:10

6. Piel: violate, ravish (4×) Sexual violence: the Piel used specifically for rape or forced violation of a woman. Genesis 34:2 (Shechem 'humiliated her'), 2 Samuel 13:14 (Amnon 'violated her'), Deuteronomy 22:24, 29 in legal texts, Ezekiel 22:10-11 in prophetic indictment. Cross-linguistically this sense is clearly recognized: Hindi बलात्कार किया (raped), Arabic ʾ (raped her), Spanish violó, showing lexicalized recognition of this specialized meaning within the affliction semantic domain. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-humbled-her, and-he-humiliated-her, they-humbled | es: violaron, y-la-humilló | fr: affligé, et-il-humbled-sa, et-il-humiliated-sa | de: [ענה], sie-demuetigte, und-demütigte-sie Gen 34:2; Judg 20:5; 2Sam 13:14; Lam 5:11

7. Pual: be afflicted, be oppressed (3×) Pual passive of the Piel: being subjected to affliction or oppression by an external agent as the recipient of active suffering. Isaiah 53:4 'stricken, smitten by God, and afflicted' uses multiple passive forms. Psalm 132:1 'remember all his afflictions.' The patient/recipient role is grammatically encoded, distinguishing this from the intransitive Qal state and the reflexive Nifal posture. AFFLICT HUMBLE OPPRESS en: and-afflicted, his-afflictions, it-is-afflicted | es: aflicción-de-él, se-aflija, y-afligido | fr: cela-est-afflicted, et-affligé, humilier | de: [ומענה], es-ist-betruebte, sein-afflictions Lev 23:29; Ps 132:1; Isa 53:4

8. Qal: answer, respond (3×) Likely the homonymous root ענה I 'answer, respond' rather than ענה II 'afflict,' but included as tagged in the source data. Joel 2:19 'the LORD answered and said,' 2 Samuel 22:36 'your gentleness made me great' (possibly 'your answering'). The semantic distance is vast — communication vs. suffering — suggesting these three occurrences belong to a distinct lexeme that happens to share consonantal spelling. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING
en: and-Your-humility, and-answer-them, and-humble | es: y-humilladlas, y-les-responderá, y-tu-humildad | fr: et-Ton-humility, et-humble, et-humilier | de: und-Your-humility, und-antworten-ihnen, und-demuetigen Judg 19:24; 2Sam 22:36; Ps 55:19

9. Hifil: afflict, oppress (causative) (2×) Hifil causative of affliction: causing someone to enter a state of oppression or suffering. Rare stem variant (only 2x) that overlaps with the more common Piel causative but may carry nuanced agency or directness. 1 Kings 8:35, 2 Chronicles 6:26 in Solomon's temple dedication prayer: 'when you afflict them' in the context of divine judgment withholding rain. The Hifil here may emphasize God's direct causative role. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: you-afflict-them, you-answer-them | es: los-afligieres, los-afligirás | fr: [תְּעַנֵּם], tu-afflict-eux | de: [תְּעַנֵּם], du-afflict-ihnen 1Kgs 8:35; 2Chr 6:26

10. (1×) Psalm 88:1 superscription 'Mahalath Leannoth' — possibly 'for affliction' or 'to be sung antiphonally' (if from עָנָה I). Too isolated and too contextually uncertain (appears in a technical musical notation) to confidently assign meaning. May be a proper name, a musical term, or a liturgical direction rather than the verb itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Le'annoth | es: para-afligir | fr: à-humilier | de: Le'annoth Ps 88:1

עֱנָה H6032 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms / 1cp (32×)

to answer, respond (Aramaic) — to reply verbally, always paired with 'and said' in Daniel

Anah is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew anah I and appears 32 times exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel, always in the formulaic pair aneh ve-amar ('answered and said'). This stereotyped pairing — ubiquitous in Aramaic court narrative — signals a formal, weighty response rather than casual conversation. BDB distinguishes two nuances: direct reply to something said (Dan 2:5, 7, 10; 3:16; 5:17; 6:13-14) and responding to a situation, that is, speaking in view of circumstances without a prior question (Dan 2:15, 20, 26, 47; 3:9, 14, 24, 28; 4:27). The word appears in the mouths of kings, courtiers, and Daniel himself, framing the dialogues that drive the court-conflict and vision-interpretation narratives. Every target language renders it with a standard reply verb: Spanish 'respondio,' French 'repondit,' German 'antwortete.'

Answer / respond (Qal: to reply verbally) (32×) The Aramaic verb 'to answer, respond,' always coupled with amar ('said') in the formulaic phrase 'answered and said.' Covers both direct reply to a question (Dan 2:5; 3:16; 5:17; 6:13) and responsive speech prompted by a situation rather than a direct query (Dan 2:15, 20, 47; 3:9, 14, 28; 4:27). The pairing frames every major dialogue in Daniel's court narratives and vision interpretations. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING

en: answered, he-answered | es: Respondió, respondió | fr: il-a-répondu, répondre | de: antworten Ps 60:5; Dan 2:5; Dan 2:7; Dan 2:8

עֲנִי H6033 N-mp (1×)

the poor, afflicted ones (Aramaic plural)

This Aramaic adjective, used substantively in the plural, designates those who are poor, needy, or afflicted. It appears in Daniel 4 in the prophet's counsel to Nebuchadnezzar to show mercy to the poor. The term emphasizes socioeconomic vulnerability and need for compassion. The form shows Aramaic plural marking distinct from Hebrew.

(1×) In Daniel 4:27, this refers to the poor or needy whom Nebuchadnezzar is counseled to show mercy toward as part of breaking off from sin. The Aramaic term emphasizes those in economic distress or social vulnerability. Spanish 'los pobres' and English 'the poor' capture the socioeconomic aspect, while French 'affliger' (to afflict) suggests the verbal root, showing lexical connection between poverty and affliction. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: the-poor | es: los-pobres | fr: affliger | de: [עניין] Dan 4:27

עָנָה H6034 N-proper-ms (12×)

Anah — Horite/Edomite personal name; discovered the hot springs in the wilderness while pasturing donkeys

Anah (עָנָה) is a proper name in the Edomite-Horite genealogies of Genesis 36. The most notable bearer is the son of Zibeon who discovered the hot springs in the wilderness while pasturing donkeys (Gen 36:24) – a rare biographical detail in an otherwise formulaic list. This Anah is also father of Oholibamah, one of Esau's wives (Gen 36:2, 14, 18, 25). A second Anah appears as a son of Seir the Horite (Gen 36:20, 29; 1 Chr 1:38, 40), possibly the same figure from a different genealogical perspective. Spanish 'Ana' and Arabic 'عنة' transliterate directly.

Anah (12×) An Edomite-Horite personal name. The primary bearer is the son of Zibeon who discovered hot springs while pasturing donkeys (Gen 36:24) and father of Esau's wife Oholibamah (Gen 36:2, 14, 18, 25). A second Anah appears as a son of Seir the Horite (Gen 36:20, 29; 1 Chr 1:38, 40). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anah, and-Anah | es: Ana, Anah, y-Ana | fr: Anah, [וענה], [ענה] | de: Ana, Anas, [וענה] Gen 36:2; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:18; Gen 36:20; Gen 36:24

עָנָה H6035 Adj-mpc (25×)

Humble, meek, or gentle in disposition; also poor, afflicted, or lowly in socioeconomic condition.

An adjective describing lowliness in either spirit or circumstance — and often both at once. Moses is called the most 'anav' of all people on earth (Num 12:3), a passage where Spanish uses 'manso' (meek/gentle) and the context points to humble character rather than material poverty. The psalms celebrate the 'anavim' as those whom God lifts up, hears, and satisfies (Ps 22:26; 37:11 — the source of Jesus' 'the meek shall inherit the earth'). Yet in wisdom literature and prophetic texts, the same word shades toward socioeconomic poverty and affliction (Job 24:4; Isa 32:7), where Spanish shifts to 'afligidos/humildes.' Hebrew thought often refuses to separate inner humility from outward lowliness — the truly humble are frequently also the materially poor who depend entirely on God.

1. humble, meek, gentle (19×) Humble, meek, or gentle in disposition — describing those who are lowly in spirit before God and others, trusting in divine vindication rather than self-assertion. Moses is the paradigmatic 'anav' (Num 12:3), and the psalms repeatedly promise that God lifts up and satisfies the meek (Ps 22:26; 25:9; 37:11; 147:6; 149:4). Spanish 'manso/humilde' and French 'humble' consistently render the dispositional quality. Zephaniah 2:3 commands 'seek humility,' and Psalm 10:17 assures that the LORD hears the desire of the humble. HUMILITY AND MEEKNESS

en: but-the-humble, but-to-the-humble, for-meek-of- | es: Y-los-mansos, [manso], a-los-humildes | fr: [לְעָנִי], [עָנִים], et-humble | de: Demuetiger, [(ולעֲנִים)], [לְעָנִי] Num 12:3; Ps 9:12; Ps 10:12; Ps 10:17; Ps 22:26

2. poor, afflicted, lowly (6×) Poor, afflicted, or socioeconomically lowly — emphasizing material deprivation or external oppression rather than inner character. At Job 24:4 the 'anavim' are pushed off the road by the wicked; at Isaiah 32:7 the scoundrel devises schemes to ruin them; at Proverbs 14:21 blessing comes to the one who is kind to them. Spanish shifts to 'afligidos' (afflicted) in several of these passages. The overlap with sense 1 is intentional in Hebrew — the materially poor who remain faithful to God embody true humility, and the two conditions reinforce each other throughout Scripture. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: (humble), [K], [ketiv] | es: (humildes), [a-los-afligidos-de], [afligidos] | fr: [[עֲנִיִּים]], humble, les-humbles-de | de: [(עֲנִיִּים)], [[עֲנִי]], [[עֲנִיִּים]] Job 24:4; Ps 9:18; Prov 14:21; Prov 16:19; Isa 32:7

עָנוּב H6036 N-proper-ms (1×)

Anub, a personal name in the genealogy of Judah

This name appears once in the genealogical records of Judah in Chronicles. The etymology is uncertain, though the form might relate to roots suggesting 'fruitful' or 'productive.' As with many rare proper names in Chronicles, the Septuagint shows transliteration attempts with variation. The name functions as a family identifier within Judah's tribal records.

(1×) A descendant of Judah mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:8. Septuagint witnesses differ significantly in their transliteration attempts (Ennon, Anob), suggesting the name was unfamiliar to later Greek scribes. Modern translations typically either transliterate the name phonetically or retain the Hebrew characters, recognizing its function as a proper noun without established meaning. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anuv | es: Anub | fr: [עָנוּב] | de: [עָנוּב] 1Chr 4:8

עֲנָו H6037 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)
humility, meekness, gentleness (noun: the quality of being humble or lowly in spirit)
This noun denotes humility or meekness, a prized virtue in the Psalms and wisdom literature. In Psalm 18:35, the psalmist credits God's 'gentleness' (or 'condescension') with making him great. In Psalm 45:4, the king is urged to ride forth 'in behalf of truth, meekness, and righteousness.' The BDB notes that the word is closely related to עָנָו ('humble, meek') and may overlap semantically with עָנִי ('afflicted'). The multilingual glosses render 'meekness,' 'gentleness,' or 'humility' ('mansedumbre,' 'misère'), though the French 'misère' (misery) reflects confusion with עָנִי.

(2×) Describes the quality of humility or meekness, whether as a human virtue (Psalm 45:4, the king's cause) or a divine attribute (Psalm 18:35, God's gentleness or condescension). The prepositional forms ('meekness of,' 'your gentleness') situate it as a moral or relational quality. Spanish and English glosses align on 'meekness/gentleness,' while French 'misère' may reflect textual or semantic confusion with 'affliction.' GENTLENESS MEEKNESS
en: and-meekness-of, and-your-gentleness | es: y-mansedumbre, y-tu-mansedumbre | fr: et-misère | de: und-dein-gentleness, und-meekness-von Ps 18:35; Ps 45:4

עָנָו H6038 N-fs (4×)
humility, meekness; the quality of being humble or lowly, foundational to fearing the Lord
The abstract noun for humility or meekness, closely related to the adjective 'humble/meek.' Proverbs presents humility as the pathway to honor: 'Before honor comes humility' (15:33, 18:12), and pairs it with fear of the Lord as producing riches, honor, and life (22:4). Zephaniah calls the humble to 'seek humility' along with righteousness as preparation for the day of the Lord (2:3). The term represents a core biblical virtue—the opposite of pride—marked by appropriate self-assessment before God and others. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'humildad,' French 'humilité') maintains the virtue terminology consistently.

(4×) The virtue of humility or meekness, especially before God. Three occurrences in Proverbs (15:33, 18:12, 22:4) link humility with honor, fearing God, and blessing. Zephaniah 2:3 exhorts the humble to 'seek humility,' making it an active pursuit. The term embodies the biblical ideal of appropriate lowliness that acknowledges God's supremacy and leads to exaltation. HUMILITY LOWLINESS
en: comes-humility, humility | es: humildad | fr: humilité, ענוה | de: Demut Prov 15:33; Prov 18:12; Prov 22:4; Zeph 2:3

עֲנָוָה H6039 N-fsc (1×)
humility, affliction; meekness or condescension
This noun can denote either humility/meekness as a virtue or affliction/suffering as a condition, depending on context. In some passages it describes the humble posture of the righteous; in others it refers to the experience of being afflicted or brought low. The semantic range reflects the connection in Hebrew thought between voluntary humility and involuntary suffering. The construct form in Psalm 22:24 is textually and interpretively complex.

(1×) In Psalm 22:24, this refers either to the affliction of the sufferer whom God does not despise, or possibly to humility as a characteristic (though the context suggests suffering). The construct relationship 'affliction of' the afflicted one creates an intensive expression. French 'humiliation' and Spanish 'aflicción' both capture the lowliness aspect, whether voluntary or imposed. The term connects the semantic fields of humility and suffering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-affliction-of | es: aflicción-de | fr: humiliation | de: der-affliction-von Ps 22:24

עֳנִי H6040 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (37×)
Affliction, misery, or suffering endured through hardship or oppression; rarely, humility or meekness of spirit.
A noun that names the raw experience of suffering — the kind God sees when he looks upon his people. When Hagar flees into the wilderness, the angel says 'the LORD has heard your affliction' (Gen 16:11). When Israel groans under Egyptian slavery, God declares 'I have surely seen the affliction of my people' (Exod 3:7). The word appears at turning points of divine intervention: God responds to affliction by acting. Spanish 'afliccion,' French 'affliction,' and German 'Elend' all preserve the sense of deep distress. In one remarkable instance (Num 12:3), the same root describes Moses as supremely 'humble' — a shift from external suffering to inward disposition that later tradition would develop extensively.

1. affliction, misery, suffering (36×) Affliction, misery, distress, or suffering endured through poverty, oppression, or hardship. This is the condition that provokes divine compassion and intervention: God sees Hagar's affliction (Gen 16:11), hears Israel's cry from Egypt (Exod 3:7), and remembers Jacob's hardship (Gen 31:42). Joseph names his son Ephraim because 'God has made me fruitful in the land of my affliction' (Gen 41:52). The word consistently appears at the hinge between suffering and deliverance. Spanish 'afliccion,' French 'affliction,' and German 'Elend' all converge on the same semantic profile of deep, often prolonged distress. OPPRESSION AFFLICTION
en: affliction, affliction-of, in-my-affliction | es: afliccion, afliccion-de, aflicción | fr: [עני], affliction, affliction-de | de: Elend, Elend-von, [עני] Gen 16:11; Gen 29:32; Gen 31:42; Gen 41:52; Exod 3:7

2. humble, lowly, meek (1×) Humility or meekness of character, describing a lowly and gentle disposition rather than external hardship. Numbers 12:3 uniquely applies this quality to Moses: 'the man Moses was very humble, more than all people on the face of the earth.' Spanish renders it '(manso)' (meek), French 'humilier,' and German 'demütigen,' all shifting from suffering to temperament. This single attestation bridges the gap between the afflicted person who has been humbled by life and the person who embodies humility as a virtue — a semantic development the later 'anawim' tradition would make central to Jewish and Christian piety. HUMILITY AND LOWERING
en: humble | es: (manso) | fr: humilier | de: demuetigen Num 12:3

עָנוּת H6041 Prep-l / Adj-ms (79×)
Poor, afflicted, humble; one who is materially destitute, oppressed in suffering, or lowly in spirit before God.
A richly layered adjective spanning external poverty, experienced suffering, and interior humility. The Law repeatedly commands protection for the 'ani — the economically vulnerable who deserve gleaning rights and fair wages (Lev 19:10; Deut 24:14). The Psalms voice the cry of the afflicted under oppression, confident that God hears their distress (Ps 9:12; 2 Sam 22:28). Isaiah personifies storm-tossed Jerusalem herself as 'aniyyah (Isa 54:11). In its rarest and most theologically potent sense, the word describes humble dependence on God — the spirit Zechariah envisions in the coming King riding on a donkey (Zech 9:9).

1. poor, needy person (55×) The materially poor or destitute person, forming a recognized social class in Israelite law. Spanish 'pobre' and French 'pauvre' both render this economic sense directly. The Torah mandates leaving harvest corners and fallen grain for the 'ani (Lev 19:10; 23:22), guaranteeing same-day wages (Deut 24:15) — protections reflecting genuine economic vulnerability rather than mere misfortune. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: afflicted, am-afflicted, humble | es: Al-pobre, afligido, al-pobre | fr: pauvre | de: Armer, Elende, arm Lev 19:10; Lev 23:22; Deut 24:12; Deut 24:14; Deut 24:15

2. afflicted, oppressed one (19×) One who suffers affliction, oppression, or deep distress, where the emphasis falls on experiential anguish rather than material lack. German 'Elende' captures the wretchedness well. David praises God for not hiding his face from the afflicted (Ps 22:24), and Elihu declares God delivers the 'ani through their suffering (Job 36:15) — the condition presupposes a cry that rises to heaven. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: Your-afflicted-ones, [ketiv], afflicted | es: Afligido, [afligidos], afligido | fr:

affligé, et-pauvre, mon-affliction | de: Arme, Armer, Elende 2Sam 22:28; Job 34:28; Job 36:6; Job 36:15; Ps 9:12

3. afflicted one (feminine personification) (3×) A feminine vocative addressing a personified city — typically Jerusalem or Zion — as a suffering, storm-tossed figure. Spanish 'Afligida' preserves the direct address. Isaiah 54:11 calls out 'O afflicted one, storm-tossed and not comforted,' using the feminine form as a tender epithet for a community enduring collective judgment yet awaiting restoration. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: afflicted-one, poor | es: Afligida, afligida, pobre | fr: son-affliction | de: Armer Isa 10:30; Isa 51:21; Isa 54:11

4. humble, lowly in spirit (2×) Humble or lowly in spirit before God, denoting an inward disposition rather than an outward condition. This is the sense in Zechariah 9:9, where the messianic King comes 'ani — meek, riding a donkey. Proverbs 3:34 pairs it with divine favor: God gives grace to the humble. French 'pauvre' and German 'elend' blur this spiritual nuance, but the Hebrew deliberately shifts from circumstance to character. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: [ketiv], humble | es: [y-a-los-afligidos], humilde | fr: et-pauvre, pauvre | de: [[ולעניים]], elend Prov 3:34; Zech 9:9

עָנִי H6042 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Unni, Unno; Levitical personal names of uncertain meaning, borne by musicians and temple servants

A Levitical name appearing in temple musician lists and post-exilic records. First Chronicles mentions Unni among the Levites appointed for musical service with harps and lyres (15:18, 20). Nehemiah's list of returning Levites includes Unno (12:9), with a textual variant (Ketiv/Qere) showing slight spelling differences. The LXX variations (Onei, Iōnai, Ananias) suggest uncertainty in transmission. These are typical Levitical genealogical entries documenting temple personnel, particularly those involved in worship music. The name is transliterated rather than translated across languages.

(4×) Personal name of Levitical musicians and temple servants. 1 Chronicles 15:18, 20 lists Unni among those appointed for musical ministry. Nehemiah 12:9 includes Unno (with Ketiv/Qere variant) among post-exilic Levites. The textual variants and LXX diversity indicate some fluidity in the name's transmission, but clearly identify Levitical worship personnel. PERSONAL NAMES

en: [and-Unno], and-Unni | es: (y-Uni), [y-Uni], y-Uni | fr: [ועָנו], [ועָני] | de: [(ועני)], [[ועָנו]], [ועָני] 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:20; Neh 12:9

עֲכָיָה H6043 N-proper-ms (2×)

Anaiah (personal name: a postexilic leader who stood with Ezra and signed the covenant)

Anaiah is named twice in Nehemiah, once as a man who stood beside Ezra during the public reading of the Law (Nehemiah 8:4) and once as a signatory of the covenant (Nehemiah 10:22). The Septuagint renders it Ανανια or Ανανιας. The name may mean 'the Lord has answered.' All modern translations transliterate the name.

(2×) A postexilic leader in Nehemiah 8:4 and 10:22. The conjunctive form ('and Anaiah') reflects his position in the lists of Ezra's assistants and covenant signers. All target languages transliterate the name uniformly. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anaiah, and-Anaiah | es: Anaías, y-Anaías | fr: [ועניה], [עניה] | de: [ועניה], [עניה] Neh 8:4; Neh 10:22

עָנִים H6044 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Anim, a town in the hill country of Judah

This place name appears in Joshua's list of cities in Judah's hill country. BDB identifies it possibly with Ghuwain, located west and south of Hebron in the central highlands. The name is preserved phonetically across translations, indicating its recognized function as a geographical designation. The Septuagint shows variant transliteration attempts.

(1×) A settlement in Judah's hill country listed in Joshua 15:50. The name appears with the conjunction 'and' in the Hebrew boundary list. Modern identification places it in the region west-south of Hebron. Translations maintain the phonetic form 'Anim' with appropriate conjunctions in each language, treating it as a proper geographical name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Anim | es: y-Anim | fr: et-Anim | de: und-Anim Josh 15:50

עָנָה H6045 Art / N-ms (8×)

A task, occupation, or burdensome business; used especially in Ecclesiastes for divinely appointed toil.

A masculine noun meaning task, occupation, or business, appearing almost exclusively in Ecclesiastes where it carries a distinctly weighty nuance. Qoheleth uses it to describe the toilsome occupation God has given humanity (Eccl 1:13, 3:10), the restless busyness that fills human days with grief (Eccl 2:23, 26), and the solitary labor without satisfaction (Eccl 4:8, 5:3, 8:16). Possibly an Aramaic loanword related to Syriac 'be occupied with,' the term captures the paradox of purposeful yet ultimately frustrating human activity. Spanish 'ocupacion' and French 'travail' both reflect the burdensome-labor sense that dominates.

task, occupation, business (8×) A task, occupation, or burdensome business that engages and preoccupies a person, particularly as a divinely appointed toil. The word appears predominantly in Ecclesiastes, where Qoheleth employs it to characterize the frustrating round of human activity: 'the task God has given the sons of man to be busy with' (Eccl 1:13, 3:10). It encompasses restless striving (Eccl 2:23 'all his days are pain, and his occupation is grief'), purposeless accumulation (Eccl 4:8), and sleepless preoccupation (Eccl 8:16). Spanish 'ocupacion' and French 'travail' both capture the laborious, weighty quality that distinguishes this noun from neutral words for work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-task, his-task, in-task | es: el-asunto, en-ocupación, la-ocupación | fr: dans-travail, et-travail, le-travail | de: Geschaeft, und-Geschaeft Eccl 1:13; Eccl 2:23; Eccl 2:26; Eccl 3:10; Eccl 4:8

עֵין גַּנִּים H6046 N-proper-fs (1×)

Anem, a Levitical city (variant spelling of En-gannim)

This name appears in Chronicles as a Levitical city, though BDB notes it as a textual error for En-gannim ('spring of gardens'), which appears in the parallel passage in Joshua. The name likely arose through scribal confusion, with the initial element 'En' being dropped. The intended location is probably Jenin, a significant town in the northern part of Issachar's territory.

(1×) The city listed in 1 Chronicles 6:73 as a Levitical possession, representing a corrupted form of En-gannim from Joshua 19:21 and 21:29. The textual issue involves loss of initial syllables, creating this shortened form. Most translations either retain the Hebrew form or acknowledge the textual difficulty, recognizing that 'Anem' is likely a scribal error rather than an independent place name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anem | es: Anem | fr: [ענם] | de: [ענם] 1Chr 6:73

עֲנָמִים H6047 N-proper-ms (2×)

A gentile name, ethnic group mentioned in Genesis 10 and 1 Chronicles 1 as descendants from Egypt

Anamim appears in the Table of Nations as one of the peoples descended from Mizraim (Egypt). The exact location and ethnic identity remain uncertain, though the term clearly refers to an Egyptian-connected group. Ancient translations like the Septuagint vary in their rendering, suggesting the translators themselves found this name puzzling. This rare mention preserves an ancient memory of ethnic diversity in the region surrounding Egypt.

(2×) A proper noun designating an ethnic group or clan descended from Mizraim in the genealogical lists. The consistent rendering across languages as a transliterated name (Anamim, Anamím) reflects its function as a specific ethnic identifier rather than a common noun. Both occurrences appear in nearly identical genealogical contexts (Genesis 10:13, 1 Chronicles 1:11), confirming this is a fixed proper name for a people group whose precise identity has been lost to history. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anamim | es: Anamim, Anamím | fr: Anamim, [ענמים] | de: [ענמים], die-Anamiter Gen 10:13; 1Chr 1:11

עַנַמֶּלֶךְ H6048 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Anammelech, a deity worshiped by people from Sepharvaim

This divine name appears in the account of foreign peoples settled in Samaria by the Assyrians, who brought their gods with them. The name possibly combines 'Anu' (a major Mesopotamian deity) with 'melek' (king), yielding 'Anu is king' or similar. The settlers of Sepharvaim burned their children as offerings to this deity, indicating a cult involving child sacrifice. The association with Assyrian religion suggests a genuine Mesopotamian background.

(1×) The deity worshiped by Sepharvites in 2 Kings 17:31, to whom children were sacrificed by fire. The name likely reflects Assyrian 'Anu-malik,' combining the chief Mesopotamian sky god with a royal epithet. The biblical text condemns this worship as one of the abominations introduced into Samaria after the northern kingdom's fall. Translations uniformly preserve the name as a proper noun, with minor phonetic variations. GODS AND DEITIES

en: and-Anammelech | es: y-Anamelec | fr: et-Anammelech | de: und-Anammelech 2Kgs 17:31

עָנַן H6049a Prep-b / V-Piel-Inf / 1cs (1×)

to bring clouds, to cover with clouds

This denominative Piel verb derives from the noun for cloud, meaning to cause clouds to appear or to cover with clouds. It appears in God's covenant speech after the flood, where He describes bringing clouds over the earth as the setting for the rainbow sign. The verb emphasizes divine agency in atmospheric phenomena, with God as the subject who actively brings forth clouds.

(1×) Used in Genesis 9:14 where God says 'when I bring clouds over the earth,' introducing the covenant sign of the rainbow. The Piel stem indicates causative action—God causes clouds to appear. The construction with infinitive and first-person suffix emphasizes the verbal idea. Spanish 'al cubrir yo' (when I cover) and French 'quand je apporter nuées' (when I bring clouds) both preserve the divine agency in cloud formation. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: when-I-bring-clouds | es: al-cubrir-yo | fr: quand-Je-apporter-nuées | de: wenn-ich-bewölke Gen 9:14

עָנַן H6049b V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (10×)

To practice soothsaying, divination, or sorcery; a forbidden occult practice associated with pagan nations.

A Poel verbal form denoting the practice of soothsaying or divination, consistently condemned in Israelite law. Leviticus 19:26 prohibits this alongside other occult practices, and Deuteronomy 18:10-14 lists the meʿonen ('soothsayer') among the abominations of the Canaanite nations that Israel must not imitate. The term's etymology remains debated—possibly connected to ʿayin ('eye,' suggesting observation of omens) or to an Arabic root meaning 'nasal hum' (suggesting incantation). Both Manasseh (2 Kgs 21:6; 2 Chr 33:6) and the nations around Israel are condemned for this practice. Spanish 'adivinos'/'agoreros' and English 'diviners'/'soothsayers' capture the mantic character of the activity.

practice divination, soothsaying (10×) To engage in soothsaying, divination, or omen-reading, a practice strictly forbidden in Israelite Torah legislation (Lev 19:26; Deut 18:10, 14). The participle meʿonen designates the practitioner as a professional soothsayer, listed alongside sorcerers, enchanters, and necromancers in Deuteronomy's catalog of Canaanite abominations. Manasseh's adoption of this practice epitomizes royal apostasy (2 Kgs 21:6 = 2 Chr 33:6). The 'Diviners' Oak' near Shechem (Judg 9:37) preserves a toponym linked to this activity. Spanish 'agorero' (omen-reader) nicely captures the observational dimension, while English 'soothsayer' and 'diviner' emphasize the predictive aspect. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS

en: and-diviners, and-he-practiced-divination, and-soothsayers | es: adivinos, agorero, agoreros | fr: [וּעוֹנֵן], [וּעֲנֵנִים], [עֹנֵנָה] | de: [ומעוננים], [וּעוֹנֵן], [וּעֲנֵנִים] Lev 19:26; Deut 18:10; Deut 18:14; Judg 9:37; 2Kgs 21:6

עָנָן H6050 N-mpc (1×)

clouds (Aramaic construct plural)

This Aramaic noun in construct form denotes clouds in Daniel's vision of the Son of Man. The term parallels Hebrew 'anan but with Aramaic morphology. In the vision, the messianic figure comes with the clouds of heaven, a theophanic image echoing other biblical descriptions of God appearing in clouds. The construct relationship 'clouds of' requires a following noun, here 'the heavens.'

(1×) The clouds in Daniel 7:13 through which the 'one like a son of man' comes to the Ancient of Days. This theophanic imagery draws on the biblical tradition of God's presence associated with clouds. The construct form 'clouds of the heavens' emphasizes their heavenly origin and character. Romance languages preserve the construct relationship with 'nubes de' (clouds of), maintaining the genitive connection. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: clouds-of | es: nubes-de | fr: nuée | de: [ענני] Dan 7:13

עָנָן H6051 Conj-w / N-msc (87×)

Cloud — a visible mass in the sky; especially the theophanic cloud of God's guiding, sheltering presence

The Hebrew עָנָן covers both ordinary meteorological clouds and, far more prominently, the cloud of divine presence that guided Israel through the wilderness, settled on Sinai, and filled the tabernacle and temple. Of its 87 occurrences, the majority refer to this theophanic cloud — the pillar of cloud (עַמּוּד הֶעָנָן) of Exodus 13:21–22, the heavy cloud on Sinai (Exod 19:16), and the glory-cloud in Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 8:10–11). Figuratively, clouds can represent transience (Hos 6:4) or God's concealing cover (Job 26:9). Spanish la-nube, French la-nuée, and German die-Wolke all capture the basic meteorological sense, but the theological weight of this word in Hebrew far exceeds its counterparts.

1. theophanic cloud (divine presence) (63×) Split from sense 125418. Criteria: The pillar of cloud, Sinai cloud, glory-cloud filling tabernacle/temple - manifestations of God's presence with theological significance en: the-cloud | es: la-nube | fr: la-nuée, le-nuée | de: der-Wolke, die-Wolke Exod 13:21; Exod 13:22; Exod 14:19; Exod 14:20; Exod 14:24

2. meteorological cloud / ordinary cloud (24×) Split from sense 125418. Criteria: Weather clouds, natural atmospheric phenomena, and figurative uses of transience (Hos 6:4) or covering (Job 26:9)

en: and-cloud, cloud, clouds | es: como-nube, como-nube-de, como-nube-de- | fr: [בעָנָן], dans-le-nuée, et-nuée | de: Wolke, Wolken, in-der-Wolke Gen 9:13; Gen 9:14; Gen 9:16; Job 7:9

עָנָן H6052 N-proper-ms (1×)

Anan, a personal name among those sealing Nehemiah's covenant

This name, identical to the common noun for 'cloud,' appears among those who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah's reforms. The name is attested in Sabaean and Palmyrene inscriptions, suggesting wider Semitic usage. It may function as a shortened form of a longer theophoric name, or it may simply mean 'cloud,' perhaps with symbolic significance relating to divine presence.

(1×) A leader who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:26. The name's identity with the noun 'cloud' creates potential theological resonance, though it may simply be a common name. Septuagint witnesses show transliteration attempts. Interestingly, German translates rather than transliterates, giving 'Wolke' (cloud), perhaps taking it as common noun rather than proper name, though this appears anomalous. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anan | es: Anán | fr: [ענן] | de: Wolke Neh 10:26

עֲנָנָה H6053 N-fs (1×)
cloud, thick cloud or darkness
This feminine noun denotes a cloud, particularly in contexts suggesting thick darkness or obscurity. Job 3:5 uses it in Job's opening lament, calling for thick clouds to settle upon his birth-day. The term intensifies the imagery of darkness and gloom Job wishes over his existence. It may specifically denote the dark, threatening aspect of clouds rather than neutral atmospheric vapor.

(1×) In Job 3:5, this describes the thick clouds or dark overcast that Job wishes would claim his birth-day, adding to the cumulative imagery of darkness and gloom. The term appears to emphasize the obscuring, shadowy quality of clouds. Most translations either transliterate the Hebrew or translate generically as 'cloud,' acknowledging the term's rarity and uncertain precise nuance. CLOUDS AND SKY
en: a-cloud | es: nube | fr: עננה | de: [עננה] Job 3:5

עֲנָנִי H6054 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Anani, a descendant of David in post-exilic genealogy
This name appears in the Davidic genealogy in Chronicles, among descendants who lived after the exile. The name derives from the root for 'cloud,' perhaps with a shortened theophoric element (Yah) understood, yielding 'Yah has answered' or 'Yah has appeared' (as in a cloud). The Septuagint shows variation, with some manuscripts reading as if it were a form of Ananiah.

(1×) A Davidic descendant listed in 1 Chronicles 3:24, appearing in the post-exilic generations. The name connects to the cloud-root, possibly meaning 'Yahweh covered/appeared' or serving as a shortened form. Greek witnesses vary between 'Manei' and 'Anani(as),' showing uncertainty. Modern translations typically preserve the conjunction 'and' plus the name form according to their language conventions. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Anani | es: y-Anani | fr: [וענני] | de: [וענני] 1Chr 3:24

עֲנַנְיָה H6055 N-proper-fs (2×)
Ananiah: a personal name (Nehemiah 3:23) and a place name near Jerusalem (Nehemiah 11:32)
This name appears twice in Nehemiah with two distinct referents. First, it identifies a person who worked on rebuilding Jerusalem's wall. Second, it names a settlement where returning exiles lived, possibly modern Beit Hanina, about four miles north-northwest of Jerusalem. The dual usage illustrates how personal names and place names often overlapped in ancient Israel, sometimes with the place being named after a notable individual or family.

(2×) A proper noun serving both as a personal name and a topographical designation in post-exilic Judah. The Spanish consistently uses 'Ananías,' showing the name's transmission through biblical tradition. The location reference in Nehemiah 11:32 lists it among resettled towns, while the personal reference in 3:23 identifies someone participating in wall reconstruction—a pattern typical of Nehemiah's administrative records. HANANIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Ananiah, Ananyah | es: Ananías | fr: [ענניה] | de: [ענניה] Neh 3:23; Neh 11:32

עֲנַף H6056 Conj-w (4×)
branch, bough; the spreading branches of a tree, especially in Daniel's vision
The Aramaic word for tree branches or boughs, appearing exclusively in Daniel's vision of Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree (chapter 4). The great tree's branches provide shelter for birds and shade for beasts, symbolizing the emperor's worldwide dominion. When the tree is cut down, the branches are stripped away, representing the loss of kingdom and authority. The fourfold repetition in Daniel 4 (verses 12, 14 twice, and 21) emphasizes both the tree's initial glory (spreading branches sheltering all creatures) and its judgment (branches hewn off). Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'ramas,' French 'branche') consistently identify this as tree branches.

(4×) Tree branches in Daniel's vision of the cosmic tree. All four occurrences (Dan 4:12, 14, 14, 21) describe the branches of Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree: initially providing shelter for birds ('in its branches'), then cut away in judgment. The branches symbolize the far-reaching extent of imperial power and, when removed, the loss of dominion. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS
en: and-in-its-branches, its-branches | es: sus-ramas, y-en-sus-ramas | fr: branche, et-branche | de: [וענפוהי], [ענפוהי] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:21

עָנָף H6057 Conj-w / N-msc (7×)
Branch, bough; the limb of a tree or vine, used literally and in prophetic imagery of growth and judgment
This noun refers to a branch or bough of a tree, used both in everyday agricultural instruction and in rich prophetic symbolism. Leviticus 23:40 prescribes taking branches of thick trees for the Feast of Booths. Ezekiel employs the word powerfully in his allegory of the cedar (Ezek 17:23) and the vine (Ezek 17:8), and in the promise that Israel's branches will again bear fruit (Ezek 36:8). Malachi's final chapter warns that the coming day will leave the wicked neither root nor branch (Mal 3:19).

branch, bough (7×) A branch or bough of a tree or vine, used both concretely and figuratively. In literal usage, Leviticus 23:40 prescribes gathering leafy branches for Sukkot. Prophetically, Ezekiel uses it in his vine and cedar allegories: the transplanted vine sending out branches (Ezek 17:8), the majestic cedar sheltering nations (Ezek 17:23; 31:3), and the promise of renewed fruitfulness for Israel's mountains (Ezek 36:8). Malachi's image of neither root nor branch remaining (Mal 3:19) represents total destruction. Spanish 'rama' and French 'branche' directly mirror the concrete botanical sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-branch-of, and-its-branches, branch | es: ni-rama, rama, vuestras-ramas | fr: branche, et-branch-de, et-branche | de: [וענף], [ענף], [ענפכם] Lev 23:40; Ps 80:10; Ezek 17:8; Ezek 17:23; Ezek 31:3

עָנֵף H6058 Conj-w / Adj-fs (1×)
full of branches, branching abundantly
This adjective describes something characterized by abundant branches or foliage. In Ezekiel 19:10 it modifies 'vine' in a metaphorical passage about Israel's royal house. The term creates imagery of flourishing, spreading growth with many boughs. The feminine singular form agrees with the feminine noun for vine, describing its condition when planted by water.

(1×) Used in Ezekiel 19:10 to describe Israel-as-vine being full of branches when planted beside waters. The image conveys prosperity and abundant growth in favorable conditions, contrasting with the subsequent devastation. Spanish 'frondosa' (leafy, lush) captures the sense of abundant foliage. The conjunction 'and' connects this description to the parallel adjective 'fruitful' in the verse. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS
en: and-full-of-branches | es: y-frondosa | fr: et-branche | de: [וענפה] Ezek 19:10

עָנַק H6059 V-Hifil-InfAbs (3×)
To serve as necklace, to adorn with a necklace; metaphorically to load richly with gifts
This denominative verb derives from the noun 'necklace,' meaning to put a necklace on someone or to function as a necklace. Psalm 73:6 says 'pride is their necklace,' a vivid metaphor for how the wicked wear arrogance as visible adornment. Deuteronomy 15:14 uses the Hiphil infinitive absolute construction for emphasis: 'You shall richly necklace him'—meaning load him liberally with gifts from flock, threshing floor, and winepress when releasing a Hebrew servant. The double infinitive intensifies the command: furnish abundantly, make a rich necklace of gifts. The metaphorical extension from physical adornment to generous provision shows Hebrew's concrete imagery.

(3×) Three occurrences, though two are the emphatic infinitive construction in Deuteronomy 15:14 (furnish abundantly). Psalm 73:6 uses the Qal to say pride necklaces the wicked—they wear it visibly like jewelry. Deuteronomy's usage is figurative: treating the freed servant generously becomes 'making a necklace' for him with provisions. The multilingual evidence shows translational uncertainty, with some versions preserving the necklace imagery, others rendering the functional sense of furnishing/providing. The emphatic construction in Deuteronomy stresses the generosity required—not a token gift but abundant provision. NECK (BODY PART)

en: furnishing, their-necklace-is, you-shall-furnish | es: Ciertamente-proveer, le-proveerás, los-adorna | fr: collier, furnishing, tu-devra-furnish | de: du-soll-furnish, furnishing, ihr-necklace-ist Deut 15:14; Ps 73:6

עֲנָק H6060a

neck; used in epithet 'sons of Anak'—long-necked (tall) men, a race of giants

This noun means 'neck' but appears primarily in the phrase 'sons of Anak' (בְּנֵי עֲנָק), describing a legendary race of tall, powerful people inhabiting Canaan before Israel's conquest. Numbers 13:33 reports the spies' fearful reaction: 'we saw the Nephilim (the sons of Anak come from the Nephilim), and we seemed like grasshoppers.' The epithet 'long-necked' suggests height and imposing stature. Joshua 15:14 and Judges 1:20 recount Caleb's defeat of three Anakites at Hebron. The Anakites became symbolic of formidable enemies that God nonetheless enabled Israel to overcome, demonstrating divine power over seemingly invincible foes.

עֲנָק H6060b Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

Necklace, neck-pendant; ornamental jewelry worn around the neck

This noun denotes a necklace or neck pendant, considered an Aramaism in biblical Hebrew. It appears as jewelry in different contexts: camel ornaments in Judges 8:26, part of a young person's adornment in Proverbs 1:9, and as a poetic image in Song of Songs 4:9 where a single gem of the bride's necklace ravishes the lover's heart. The plural forms suggest multiple pendants or chains making up elaborate necklaces. In Judges, the chains taken from Midianite camels represent valuable spoil. Proverbs uses it figuratively: wisdom's teaching will be a graceful necklace adorning the young. Song of Songs' usage is intensely personal, focusing on a single pendant's beauty.

(3×) Three occurrences showing necklaces in varied contexts: military spoil, wisdom's adornment, and erotic imagery. The multilingual evidence consistently renders 'necklace/collar/chains,' showing the core idea of neck jewelry. Judges 8:26 groups it with crescents and purple garments as precious plunder. Proverbs 1:9 pairs it with the garland/wreath imagery, both representing wisdom's beautifying effect. Song of Songs 4:9 uses it most intimately—one pendant's movement captivating the lover's gaze, showing how small details of adornment signify larger beauty. CHAIN ORNAMENT

en: and-chains, pendant, the-chains | es: collar, los-collares, y-collares | fr: collier, et-ענקים, le-chaînes | de: [וענקים], [ענק], der-chains Judg 8:26; Prov 1:9; Song 4:9

עֲנָק H6061 Art / N-proper-ms (9×)

Anak, the eponymous ancestor of the Anakim, a race of tall warriors inhabiting Canaan before the Israelite conquest.

Refers to Anak (עֲנָק), whose name likely derives from the Hebrew word for 'neck' or 'necklace,' perhaps denoting the 'long-necked' or notably tall stature of his descendants. He is presented as the ancestor of the fearsome Anakim, giant inhabitants of the Hebron region whose size terrified the Israelite spies (Num 13:22, 28, 33). Joshua 15:13 identifies Arba as 'the father of Anak,' placing Anak in a genealogy that anchors the giant tradition in the specific geography around Hebron. The name appears with the article ('the Anak') in several passages, suggesting it may have originally functioned as a clan designation rather than a personal name.

the Anak (9×) Anak, the legendary ancestor of the Anakim giants, whose name is related to the Hebrew word for 'neck,' possibly indicating great height. He is referenced in the spy narrative (Num 13:22, 28, 33), in Deuteronomy's retrospective on the conquest (Deut 9:2), and in the land allotment to Caleb (Josh 15:13-14). The frequent use of the definite article ('the Anak') in Hebrew, mirrored by translations like Spanish 'el Anac' and French 'le Anak,' suggests the term may have originated as a gentilicic designation for the clan rather than a strict personal name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anak, the-Anak | es: Anac, Anac?, el-Anac | fr: Anak, le-Anak | de: Anak, der-Anak Num 13:22; Num 13:28; Num 13:33; Deut 9:2; Josh 15:13

עֲנָק H6062 N-proper-mp (9×)

Anakim, a race of giants descended from Anak who inhabited Canaan, especially the Hebron region, before Israel's conquest.

The plural form designating the Anakim (עֲנָקִים), the legendary tall people whom the Israelite spies encountered in Canaan. Their imposing stature caused the spies to feel like grasshoppers by comparison (Num 13:33), and their reputation made the conquest seem impossible to the faithless generation. Deuteronomy carefully records how the Emim, Zamzummim, and Anakim were all considered giants (Deut 2:10-11, 21), yet were displaced by other nations as a precedent for what Israel could accomplish. German 'Anakiter' preserves a distinctive gentilicic rendering, while the Septuagint's Ενακειμ closely mirrors the Hebrew plural.

Anakim (giant people group) (9×) The Anakim, a people group of legendary stature descended from Anak who dwelt principally around Hebron and in Philistine territory. Deuteronomy uses them as a test case of faith: though the Anakim were great and tall (Deut 1:28; 9:2), God had already dispossessed similar giant peoples for other nations (Deut 2:10-11, 21). Joshua records their eventual defeat and near-complete removal from the hill country (Josh 11:21-22; 14:12, 15). The Septuagint renders the name as Ενακειμ or translates it as γίγαντες (ʹgiants'), while German uses the gentilicic form 'Anakiter,' all reflecting the collective ethnic identity of this people group. RAPHAH GIANT CLAN en: Anakim, among-the-Anakim, like-the-Anakim | es: Anac, Anaquim, anaceos | fr: Anakim, comme-le-Anakim, le-Anakim | de: Anakiter, der-Anakiter, unter-der-Anakiter Deut 1:28; Deut 2:10; Deut 2:11; Deut 2:21; Deut 9:2

עָנֵר H6063 N-proper-fs (3×)

Aner; both a personal name (an ally of Abraham) and a city in Manasseh assigned to Levites

Aner appears as both a person and a place. In Genesis 14, Aner is one of three Amorite allies of Abraham who joined his campaign to rescue Lot from the eastern kings. Along with Eshcol and Mamre, Aner represents the covenant relationships Abraham maintained with local Canaanite leaders. As a place name, Aner was a Levitical city in Manasseh, assigned to the Kohathite Levites according to 1 Chronicles 6:70. The dual usage—personal and geographic—is common in biblical onomastics, where individuals and settlements share names. The etymological meaning of Aner is uncertain, though various Semitic connections have been proposed.

(3×) Three occurrences: two in Genesis 14 referring to Abraham's ally, one in Chronicles referring to the Levitical city. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration practices, with some versions providing genitive forms ('of Aner'). The Genesis account portrays Aner as part of Abraham's coalition, sharing in the spoils of victory and witnessing his tithing to Melchizedek. The Chronicles reference to Aner as a Levitical city provides a geographic anchor for the name in Israel's tribal inheritance system. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Aner | es: Aner | fr: Aner, [ענר] | de: Aner, Aners, [ענר] Gen 14:13; Gen 14:24; 1Chr 6:70

עָנַשׁ H6064 V-Qal-InfAbs (9×)

To fine or impose a monetary penalty; more broadly, to punish; in Niphal, to be fined or suffer punishment.

A legal verb rooted in the courtroom and the marketplace, originally denoting the imposition of a monetary fine. Deuteronomy 22:19 prescribes that the slandering husband 'shall be fined a hundred shekels,' and 2 Chronicles 36:3 records Pharaoh Neco fining the land of Judah. Spanish consistently uses 'multar' (to fine) for these concrete penalties, while broadening to 'castigar' (to punish) in Proverbs' wisdom sayings (17:26; 21:11). The Niphal passive – 'to be fined, punished' – appears in Exodus 21:22 with the emphatic infinitive absolute construction 'he shall surely be fined,' and in Proverbs 22:3 and 27:12, where the naive pass on and 'are punished.'

1. to be fined, be punished (3×) Niphal passive: to be fined or punished – to suffer a penalty imposed by others. Exodus 21:22 uses the emphatic infinitive absolute ('anosh ye'anesh, 'he shall surely be fined') for injuring a pregnant woman. In Proverbs 22:3 and 27:12, the simple pass on and 'are punished.' French 'punir' and Spanish 'castigados/multado' reflect the range from monetary fine to general punishment. PUNISH PENALIZE

en: and-are-punished, he-shall-be-punished | es: será-multado, son-castigados, y-son-castigados | fr: et-punir, il—être-punit, punir | de: [ונענשו], [נענשו], er-soll-sein-bestrafte Exod 21:22; Prov 22:3; Prov 27:12

2. to fine, impose a monetary penalty (3×) Qal active: to fine or mulct someone – imposing a specific monetary penalty. Deuteronomy 22:19 prescribes fining the slanderous husband a hundred shekels of silver. Pharaoh Neco fines the land in 2 Chronicles 36:3. Amos 2:8 condemns those who drink wine bought 'with the fines of the condemned.' Spanish 'multar/multo' precisely captures the monetary character of this sense. PUNISH PENALIZE

en: and-he-fined, and-they-shall-fine, those-fined | es: Y-lo-multarán, multados, y-multó | fr: [ויענש], et-ils-devra-fin, punir | de: [ויענש], [ענושים], und-sie-soll-fein Deut 22:19; 2Chr 36:3; Amos 2:8

3. to punish (3×) Qal active in a broader punitive sense: to punish, not limited to fines. Proverbs 17:26 says it is not good to punish the righteous, and 21:11 teaches that when a scoffer is punished, the simple gain wisdom. Spanish shifts from 'multar' to 'castigar' here, signaling the move from financial penalty to general discipline. Exodus 21:22's infinitive absolute intensifies the Niphal rather than standing as an independent Qal occurrence. PUNISH PENALIZE

en: punishing, when-punished | es: Al-castigar-al-, castigar, multar | fr: dans-punir, punir, punishing | de: [בענש], [ענוש], punishing Exod 21:22; Prov 17:26; Prov 21:11

עֲנָשׁ H6065 Prep-l / N-msc (1×)

confiscation, amercing; financial penalty

This Aramaic noun denotes the confiscation of property or imposition of financial penalties. It appears in Artaxerxes' decree to Ezra, specifying possible punishments for those who do not obey God's law and the king's law. The term represents legal-administrative language from the Persian period, indicating one of several graduated penalties available to authorities.

(1×) In Ezra 7:26, this refers to confiscation of property as one potential punishment for lawbreakers. The construct phrase 'confiscation of goods' specifies the object of the legal penalty. The term belongs to Persian-period administrative vocabulary preserved in Aramaic sections of Ezra. Romance languages preserve the prepositional construct relationship 'for confiscation of,' maintaining the purpose or penalty nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-confiscation-of | es: para-confiscación-de | fr: [לענש] | de: [לענש] Ezra 7:26

עֹנֶשׁ H6066 N-ms (2×)

Fine, penalty, or tribute exacted as indemnity for wrongdoing or as political subjugation

This term denotes a payment imposed either as legal compensation or as political tribute. In 2 Kings 23:33, Pharaoh Neco levies it upon the land of Judah after removing King Jehoahaz—clearly a tribute enforcing subjugation. In Proverbs 19:19, it refers to the consequence borne by a hot-tempered person who repeatedly suffers penalties for their rashness. The word captures both judicial and political dimensions of imposed payment, whether for personal offense or national defeat.

(2×) A concrete noun denoting financial penalty or tribute. The multilingual evidence shows semantic range spanning 'penalty/castigo' in individual moral contexts and 'tribute/tributo' in political contexts. The Hebrew root conveys the idea of bearing a burden of payment as recompense or subjugation, whether imposed by human authority (the Egyptian pharaoh) or by the natural consequences of one's character (the angry person repeatedly paying penalties). LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: penalty, tribute | es: castigo, tributo | fr: tribut, ענש | de: Tribut, [ענש] 2Kgs 23:33; Prov 19:19

עֲנָת H6067 N-proper-ms (2×)

Anat: father of the judge Shamgar, mentioned in Judges 3:31 and 5:6

Anat appears exclusively in patronymic form, identifying Shamgar as 'son of Anat.' Intriguingly, Anat was also the name of a Canaanite goddess widely attested in ancient Near Eastern texts and Egyptian sources. Whether this represents genuine theophoric naming (naming after a deity) or has some other explanation remains debated. The consistent transliteration across all languages preserves this enigmatic figure from Israel's early period.

(2×) A proper noun functioning as a personal name in patronymic constructions. The name's connection to the goddess Anat, attested in Tel el-Amarna correspondence, Assyrian records, and Phoenician inscriptions, adds a layer of cultural complexity. Both biblical occurrences identify Shamgar the judge by this paternal lineage, suggesting Anat was a recognized personal name despite (or perhaps because of) its association with the Canaanite pantheon. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anat | es: Anat | fr: Anat | de: Anat Judg 3:31; Judg 5:6

עֲנָתוֹת H6068 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)

Anathoth, a Levitical city in Benjamin; hometown of Jeremiah and place of Abiathar's exile.

ᶜAnātôt names a Levitical town in the tribal territory of Benjamin, situated about three miles north-northeast of Jerusalem at modern ᶜAnātā. It enters the biblical record as a Levitical allotment (Josh 21:18) and gains prominence when Solomon banishes the priest Abiathar there (1 Kgs 2:26). Its greatest fame comes as the birthplace and home of Jeremiah, whose own townsmen conspired against him (Jer 1:1; 11:21–23). Jeremiah's purchase of a field in Anathoth during the siege of Jerusalem becomes a prophetic sign of future restoration (Jer 32:7–9). Postexilic returnees from the town are counted among the repatriates (Ezra 2:23; Neh 7:27; 11:32). The name may echo the Canaanite goddess Anat.

Anathoth (Levitical city in Benjamin) (15×) The Levitical city of Anathoth in the territory of Benjamin, consistently identified across all fifteen occurrences as a single geographic location near Jerusalem. It serves as Abiathar's place of banishment (1 Kgs 2:26), Jeremiah's hometown and the setting of his field-purchase sign-act (Jer 1:1; 32:7–9), and a town listed in postexilic census records (Ezra 2:23; Neh 7:27). Two individuals in Chronicles and Nehemiah also bear the name (1 Chr 7:8; Neh 10:19), likely derived from the toponym. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Anathoth, Anatot, and-Anatot | es: Anatot, a-Anatot, en-Anatot | fr: Anathoth, [וענתות], [ענתות] | de: Anathoth, Anatot, [וענתות] Josh 21:18; 1Kgs 2:26; 1Chr 6:60; 1Chr 7:8; Ezra 2:23

עֲנָתֹתִי H6069 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Anathothite — gentilicof Anathoth, designating a person from that Benjamite town

A gentilic adjective identifying someone as a native of Anathoth, the Benjamite town about three miles northeast of Jerusalem. The designation is applied to warriors in David's elite guard — Abiezer (2 Sam 23:27; 1 Chr 11:28; 27:12) and Jehu (1 Chr 12:3) — and to Jeremiah himself in the mocking address of Jer 29:27. The article regularly precedes it: 'the Anathothite.' Spanish 'el anatotita' and German 'der Anathothite' both reproduce this articulated gentilic pattern.

(5×) Gentilic adjective meaning 'the one from Anathoth,' applied to warriors in David's ranks (Abiezer, Jehu) and used as a geographic label for Jeremiah's hometown identification in Jer 29:27. The consistent article across languages — English 'the Anathothite,' Spanish 'el anatotita,' German 'der Anathothite' — underscores its function as a fixed epithet rather than a casual descriptor. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Anathothite, the-Anatotite, the-Annetotite | es: el-anatotita, el-de-Anatot | fr: [הָעֲנָתוֹתִי], [הָעֲנָתֹתִי], le-Anathothite | de: [הָעֲנָתוֹתִי], [הָעֲנָתֹתִי], der-Anathothite 2Sam 23:27; 1Chr 11:28; 1Chr 12:3; 1Chr 27:12; Jer 29:27

עֲנְתֹתִיָּה H6070 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Anthothijah, a Benjamite in the genealogies

This personal name appears in Benjamin's genealogy in Chronicles. The form suggests a connection to Anathoth, the Levitical city in Benjamin, with a theophoric ending '-yah' (Yahweh). The name might mean 'Yahweh has answered' or incorporate the place name Anathoth. Septuagint witnesses show varied transliteration attempts, with some simply reproducing Anathoth.

(1×) A Benjamite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:24. The name's form suggests derivation from or connection to Anathoth (Jeremiah's hometown), possibly with a theophoric element. Greek transliterations vary significantly, with some reading 'Anathoth(ia)' and others 'Anothaitha,' reflecting uncertainty about the name's exact vocalization and etymology. Modern translations preserve the conjunction 'and' plus transliterated name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Antotiyah | es: y-Antotías | fr: [וְעֲנְתֹתִיָּה] | de: [וְעֲנְתֹתִיָּה] 1Chr 8:24

עָסִיס H6071 Prep-m / N-msc (5×)

sweet wine, fresh-pressed juice — newly extracted grape or fruit juice

Denotes fresh-pressed, sweet juice — wine in its earliest, most potent stage before full fermentation. The prophets use it to paint vivid pictures: mountains dripping with it in the messianic age (Joel 3:18; Amos 9:13), and Israel's enemies forced to drink their own blood 'like sweet wine' (Isa 49:26). In Song 8:2, it appears as 'juice of my pomegranate,' extending the term beyond grapes. Joel 1:5 mourns its loss as a sign of devastating judgment.

(5×) Fresh-pressed, sweet juice of grapes or fruit, representing abundance and unprocessed vitality. Used in eschatological visions of overflowing fertility (Joel 3:18; Amos 9:13) and in Song 8:2 as pomegranate juice in an intimate setting. Spanish 'mosto' (must, new wine) and French 'jus' (juice) highlight the freshly-pressed quality, while German 'Suesswein' (sweet wine) emphasizes the sweetness that distinguishes it from aged wine. WINE BEVERAGE

en: and-like-sweet-wine, from-juice-of, sweet-wine | es: del-jugo-de, mosto, y-como-mosto | fr: [וּכְעָסִיס], du-jus, jus | de: Suesswein, [וּכְעָסִיס] Song 8:2; Isa 49:26; Joel 1:5; Joel 3:18; Amos 9:13

עָסַס H6072 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2mp (1×)

to trample, tread down; crush underfoot

This verb describes forceful treading or trampling that crushes what is underfoot. The root likely relates to pressing down through repetitive stepping, as in treading grapes or grain. In Malachi 4:3 it appears in a prophetic promise that the righteous will tread down the wicked, using agricultural imagery for eschatological victory. The verb conveys domination through physical crushing.

(1×) Used in Malachi 4:3 where God promises that the righteous will tread down the wicked like ashes under their feet. The verb draws on agricultural imagery of crushing or trampling, particularly of crushing wheat or pressing grapes. Spanish 'pisotearéis' (you will trample) and French 'presser' (to press) both capture the forceful downward action. The image reverses typical power dynamics, with the oppressed becoming victorious trampers. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: and-you-will-tread-down | es: Y-pisotearéis | fr: et-presser | de: [וְעַסּוֹתֶם] Mal 4:3

עֲפָאִים H6073 N-mp (1×)

branches, boughs; foliage

This noun denotes branches or foliage, appearing in poetry about creation in Psalm 104. The term is recognized as an Aramaic loan-word, with cognates meaning foliage or flowers in Aramaic dialects. The Ketiv and Qere show textual variation in the form, though both point to vegetation imagery. The word creates habitat imagery for birds dwelling among branches.

(1×) In Psalm 104:12, this refers to the branches where birds dwell and sing, part of the creation psalm's portrayal of God's provision for creatures. The Aramaic loan-word indicates botanical foliage where wildlife finds shelter. Spanish 'ramas' (branches), French 'rameau' (bough), and English 'branches' all capture the arboreal reference, emphasizing the physical structure that provides habitat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-branches | es: ramas | fr: rameau | de: der-branches Ps 104:12

עָפִי H6074 N-msc / 3ms (3×)

Leafage, foliage; the leaves of a tree collectively

This Aramaic noun appears only in Daniel 4, describing the foliage of the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The tree's 'beautiful' or 'fair' foliage is mentioned three times as part of the tree's description —its leaves are lush, providing shade for beasts and shelter for birds, symbolizing the king's vast empire that gives sustenance and protection. The destruction of the tree includes the stripping of its foliage. The word emphasizes the tree's life-giving canopy, the green abundance that makes it beneficial to creatures. In the dream's interpretation, the foliage represents the extent and beneficence of the king's dominion.

(3×) Three occurrences, all describing the dream-tree's foliage in Daniel 4. The multilingual evidence shows the Hebrew forms preserved in brackets, with some versions attempting glosses. The Aramaic context describes the tree's 'beautiful foliage' as part of its paradisiacal magnificence before the decree comes to cut it down. The foliage with third-person suffix ('its leaves') appears in both the dream narration and in Nebuchadnezzar's recounting to Daniel. The leaves symbolize the flourishing abundance of the empire before judgment falls. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-leaves, its-leaves | es: su-follaje, y-su-follaje | fr: [וְעָפְיֵהּ], [עָפְיֵהּ] | de: [וְעָפְיֵהּ], [עָפְיֵהּ] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:21

עָפַל H6075a V-Pual-Perf-3fs (1×)

to be swollen, puffed up; arrogant

This verb, appearing in Pual passive stem, likely means to be swollen or puffed up, with moral connotation of arrogance or pride. In Habakkuk 2:4 it describes the soul of the wicked as puffed up or arrogant, contrasting with the righteous who live by faithfulness. The root may relate to physical swelling or tumors, extended metaphorically to describe moral inflation. The text and interpretation are challenging, with some scholars emending.

(1×) Used in Habakkuk 2:4 to describe the proud soul that is 'puffed up' or swollen, contrasted with the righteous who live by faith. The Pual passive suggests a state of being inflated or enlarged, metaphorically describing pride or arrogance. Spanish 'hinchada' (swollen) preserves the physical metaphor. The verse became foundational for Paul's doctrine of justification by faith, though the Hebrew focuses on the contrast between arrogant self-sufficiency and humble faithfulness. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: puffed-up | es: hinchada | fr: être-arrogant | de: [עָפְלָה] Hab 2:4

עָפַל H6075b Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

to act presumptuously, proceed recklessly; show heedlessness

This verb in Hiphil stem describes acting with presumption, recklessness, or heedlessness. In Numbers 14:44 it characterizes Israel's rash attempt to enter the land despite God's prohibition, after they had refused His initial command. The verb captures the foolhardy reversal—presumptuously advancing after missing the moment of obedience. BDB suggests 'showed heedlessness,' while others propose 'presumed,' both emphasizing the rash, unauthorized nature of the action.

(1×) In Numbers 14:44, this describes Israel's presumptuous attempt to go up into the hill country after God had forbidden it, following their earlier rebellion. The Hiphil stem may indicate causing oneself to be heedless or acting presumptuously. Spanish 'se obstinaron' (they were obstinate) emphasizes the stubborn persistence, while the lexical tradition suggests either presumption or heedlessness. The action led to defeat, confirming its foolishness. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: and-they-presumed | es: Y-se-obstinaron | fr: et-ils-presumed | de: und-sie-presumed Num 14:44

עֹפֶל H6076a N-ms (3×)

Mound, hill, fortified elevation; specifically the acropolis or citadel within a city

This noun denotes a fortified mound or hill, typically referring to the citadel or acropolis within a city. In Jerusalem, it designated a specific fortified area on the southern end of the eastern hill, the Ophel. Nehemiah 3:26-27 mentions it as a district where temple servants lived, with its own wall. 2 Chronicles 27:3 and 33:14 record building projects on Jerusalem's Ophel wall. Isaiah 32:14 uses it in a prophecy of desolation: the hill and watchtower will become dens forever. Micah 4:8 addresses the 'Ophel of the daughter of Zion,' apparently referring to the citadel hill as representative of the city. The term could also apply to Samaria's fortified mound (2 Kings 5:24).

(3×) Three occurrences referring to fortified mounds: Samaria (2 Kings), Jerusalem (Isaiah), and Jerusalem (Micah). The multilingual evidence shows transliteration ('Ofel') and semantic glosses ('hill,' 'colline,' 'tumor'). The Jerusalem Ophel was a distinct topographical and administrative district, the citadel area that Nehemiah fortified. Isaiah's prophecy envisions it abandoned, while Micah addresses it as the seat of coming royal power. The term represents the heart of urban fortification, the defensible high ground within the city walls. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hill, the-hill | es: Ofel, colina-de, la-colina | fr: [עפל], le-colline, tumeur | de: [עפל], der-Huegel 2Kgs 5:24; Isa 32:14; Mic 4:8

עֹפֶל H6076b N-mpc (5×)

tumors, hemorrhoids — swellings afflicting the Philistines as divine plague

Refers to painful swellings or hemorrhoids inflicted as a divine plague. The word appears only in the narrative of the Ark's captivity among the Philistines (1 Sam 5–6) and in the covenant curses of Deut 28:27. The Masoretic Ketiv reads 'ofalim' while the Qere substitutes the euphemistic 'tehorim,' reflecting scribal sensitivity about the affliction. The Philistines' golden replicas of these tumors (1 Sam 6:4–5) as a guilt offering underscore the bodily and theological gravity of the plague.

(5×) Bodily swellings or hemorrhoids sent as divine judgment, appearing in the Philistine plague narrative (1 Sam 5:6–12; 6:4–5) and Deuteronomic curses (Deut 28:27). The Ketiv/Qere variation reveals scribal discomfort with the term. Translations uniformly render 'tumors' — English, Spanish 'tumores,' French and German likewise — reflecting the medical understanding that these were painful, visible growths afflicting the Philistine populace. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: [ketiv-tumors], [ketiv-with-tumors], [tumors] | es: [con-tumores], [tumores], [vuestros-tumores] | fr: [ketiv-avec-tumors], [ketiv-tumors], [tumors] | de: [ketiv-mit-tumors], [ketiv-tumors], [tumors] 1Sam 5:6; 1Sam 5:9; 1Sam 5:12; 1Sam 6:4; 1Sam 6:5

עֹפֶל H6077 Prep-l (5×)

Ophel — the fortified mound or hill-spur within Jerusalem (and Samaria)

Designates a fortified mound or hill-acropolis, used almost exclusively for the southern spur of Jerusalem's eastern hill. Micah 4:8 addresses it as 'tower of the flock, Ophel of daughter Zion,' linking it to royal authority. Nehemiah records repairs to the Ophel wall (Neh 3:26–27), while Chronicles notes fortification projects by Jotham and Manasseh (2 Chr 27:3; 33:14). In 2 Kings 5:24, the term may refer to a similar citadel-mound in Samaria.

(5×) A fortified mound or hill-spur serving as an acropolis, primarily the ridge on the southern end of Jerusalem's Temple Mount extending toward the City of David. Used in Nehemiah's wall-repair accounts (Neh 3:26–27; 11:21) and Chronicler's fortification notices (2 Chr 27:3; 33:14). Spanish 'el Ofel' and English 'the Ophel' treat it as a proper toponym, while French and German retain the Hebrew in brackets, reflecting its specialized architectural-geographic meaning. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: in-the-Ophel, the-Ophel | es: el-Ofel, en-el-Ofel | fr: [בעפל], [העפל], [לעפל] | de: [בעפל], [העפל], [לעפל] 2Chr 27:3; 2Chr 33:14; Neh 3:26; Neh 3:27; Neh 11:21

עָפְנִי H6078 Conj-w (1×)

Ophni, a town in the territory of Benjamin

This place name appears with the definite article in Joshua's list of Benjamite cities. The location is uncertain, though the name is preserved in Greek transliteration. The article suggests 'the Ophni,' perhaps indicating a well-known landmark or settlement. The town belonged to Benjamin's inheritance in the central highlands.

(1×) A Benjamite town listed in Joshua 18:24 with the definite article, 'ha-Ophni.' The article may indicate familiarity or distinguish it from similar names. Septuagint witnesses vary in transliteration, with some reading 'Aphne' and others differently. Most translations preserve the conjunction 'and' plus the article and name, treating it as a proper geographical designation whose precise location remains unknown. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-ha-Ophni | es: y-Ofni | fr: et-ha-Ophni | de: und-ha-Ophni Josh 18:24

עַפְעַף H6079 Conj-w | N-mdc | 2ms (10×)

Eyelid; used poetically for eyes in general, and figuratively for the first rays of dawn.

Refers to the eyelids, almost always appearing in the dual form as a parallel to 'eyes.' The word covers a vivid range of imagery: eyelids closed in sleep (Ps 132:4), weeping (Jer 9:18), seductive glancing (Prov 6:25), and the piercing gaze of God testing humanity (Ps 11:4). Perhaps most memorably, Job speaks of the 'eyelids of the dawn' (Job 3:9; 41:18), a striking metaphor where the first streaks of light at sunrise are pictured as a slowly opening eye. Spanish 'parpados' and French 'paupiere' both confirm the concrete sense of eyelid throughout.

eyelids (10×) The physical eyelids, used in the dual as a poetic near-synonym for eyes. Contexts include weeping (Jer 9:18), sleep (Ps 132:4, Prov 6:4), seduction (Prov 6:25), arrogance (Prov 30:13), and God's searching gaze (Ps 11:4). The famous phrase 'eyelids of the dawn' (Job 3:9, 41:18) extends the image to the first rays of sunrise, as if the sky were opening its eyes. The multilingual glosses uniformly reflect 'eyelid/parpado/paupiere,' confirming a single concrete referent used in diverse figurative contexts. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: and-its-eyelids, and-our-eyelids, and-your-eyelids | es: a-párpados-míos, a-tus-párpados, como-párpados-de- | fr: [ועפעפינו], comme-paupière, dans-paupière | de: [בעפעפי], [בעפעפיה], [ועפעפין] Job 3:9; Job 16:16; Job 41:18; Ps 11:4; Ps 132:4

עָפַר H6080 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
to throw dust, pelt with dust or dirt
This Piel denominative verb means to dust someone with dust, or throw dirt at them. It appears in the account of Shimei cursing David, where Shimei not only cursed verbally but kept pelting David with dust and stones. The verb derives from the noun for dust/dirt and indicates aggressive action, combining with the cognate accusative for emphasis: 'he dusted with dust.'

(1×) In 2 Samuel 16:13, this describes Shimei's action of throwing dust at David as he cursed him during Absalom's rebellion. The Piel stem with cognate accusative intensifies the action—'he kept dusting him with dust.' Spanish 'arrojaba polvo' (was throwing dust) and French 'jetant poussière' (throwing dust) both capture the aggressive throwing action. The dust-throwing accompanied verbal cursing, expressing total contempt. DUST AND POWDER
en: and-throwing-dust | es: y-arrojaba-polvo | fr: et-jetant-poussière | de: und-werfend-dust 2Sam 16:13

עֹפֶר H6081 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (4×)
Epher; personal name meaning 'young deer' or 'calf,' borne by descendants of Midian, Judah, and Manasseh
A personal name appearing in genealogies across three tribal lines. Genesis 25:4 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:33 identify Epher as a son of Midian (Abraham's son through Keturah), making him Abraham's grandson. In Judah's genealogy (1 Chr 4:17), another Epher appears among the descendants. A third instance occurs in Manasseh's genealogy (1 Chr 5:24) among the heads of families. The LXX transliterations vary (Gopher, Gapher, Apher), typical for proper names. The name likely derives from a word meaning 'young deer' or 'calf,' common in ancient Semitic naming.

(4×) Personal name occurring in multiple genealogical contexts. Genesis 25:4 = 1 Chronicles 1:33 identifies Epher as Midian's son. 1 Chronicles 4:17 lists an Epher in Judah's line, while 5:24 mentions one in Manasseh. The repeated name across different tribes suggests its popularity, possibly meaning 'young deer/calf' based on the root. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Epher | es: y-Efer, y-Epher | fr: et-Epher, et-Épher | de: [ועפר], und-Efer Gen 25:4; 1Chr 1:33; 1Chr 4:17; 1Chr 5:24

עֹפֶר H6082 Prep-l | N-msc (5×)
young deer, fawn — a young stag or hart, used in Song of Solomon's imagery
A young male deer or fawn, appearing exclusively in the Song of Solomon as part of its rich pastoral imagery. The beloved is compared to a young stag leaping over hills (Song 2:9, 17; 8:14), while the woman's beauty is likened to twin fawns of a gazelle (Song 4:5; 7:3). The construct phrase 'ofer ha-ayyalim' (fawn of the deer) pairs with 'tsevi' (gazelle) throughout, creating a dual-image of grace and vitality.

(5×) A young hart or fawn, used in Song of Solomon's erotic-pastoral poetry to evoke agility, beauty, and youthful vigor. The beloved leaps like a 'fawn of the deer' (Song 2:9, 17; 8:14), and twin fawns serve as a figure for the woman's form (Song 4:5; 7:3). Spanish 'cervatillo' (little deer), French 'faon,' and German 'junger Hirsch' (young stag) all preserve the sense of youthful grace central to the imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-fawn-of, fawns | es: a-cervatillo-de, a-un-cervatillo-de, cervatillos | fr: faons,, à-un-faon | de: junger-Hirsch, zu-Staub Song 2:9; Song 2:17; Song 4:5; Song 7:3; Song 8:14

עָפָר H6083 N-msc | 3fs (110×)
Dust, dry earth, or loose soil; the material of human creation and mortality, also rubble or fine powder.
Aphar is the dry, loose earth from which humanity was formed (Gen 2:7) and to which all return (Gen 3:19). It is the dust thrown on the head in grief (Josh 7:6; Job 2:12), the soil that drinks blood (Isa 34:7), the ground a serpent must eat in humiliation (Gen 3:14), and the numberless particles to which Abraham compares his promised descendants (Gen 13:16). The word is viscerally physical—French poussiere, Spanish polvo, German Staub all preserve its gritty, particulate texture. Its theological weight is immense: aphar is both the raw material of creation and the emblem of mortality.

1. dust, dry earth, soil (108×) The dominant sense covering nearly all occurrences: dust, dry earth, or loose soil as a physical substance. This includes the dust of human creation (Gen 2:7), the dust of mortality (Gen 3:19; Eccl 3:20), dust thrown in grief (Josh 7:6; Job 2:12), earth used in ritual purification (Lev 14:41–42; Num 5:17), and dust as a figure of innumerability (Gen 13:16) or humiliation (Gen 3:14; Mic 7:17). Multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform: spa 'polvo,' fra 'poussiere,' deu 'Staub'—all pointing to the same fine, dry particulate matter. DUST AND POWDER
en: dust, the-dust | es: el-polvo, polvo, polvo; | fr: poussière | de: Staub, bin-Staub Gen 2:7; Gen 3:19; Gen 18:27; Lev 14:41

2. (1×) Fine powder or wind-blown dust particles, a specialized subset where aphar denotes not earth on the ground but airborne particulate matter. Deut 28:24 warns that God will make rain into 'aphar and dust' (paired with avaq) coming down as a devastating sand-storm. The multilingual glosses—eng 'and-powder,' spa 'y-ceniza' (and-ash), fra 'et-powder'—distinguish this from settled ground-dust, pointing to a fine, wind-driven powder. DUST AND POWDER
en: and-powder | es: y-ceniza | fr: et-powder | de: und-powder Deut 28:24

3. (1×) Rubble or debris from demolished structures, where aphar refers to broken-down building material rather than natural earth. In Neh 4:10 the workers lament the great amount of aphar (rubble, debris) hindering reconstruction of Jerusalem's walls. The translations—eng 'and-the-rubble,' spa 'y-el-polvo,' deu 'und-der-Staub'—show the shift from natural dust to construction debris, though the boundary with sense 1 is porous. DUST AND POWDER
en: and-the-rubble | es: y-el-polvo | fr: [והעפר] | de: und-der-Staub Neh 4:10

H6084 N-proper-ms (8×)
Ophrah, a place name for towns in Manasseh (Gideon's home) and Benjamin.
A masculine proper noun designating at least two Israelite towns. The most prominent Ophrah is Gideon's hometown in the territory of Manasseh, where the angel of the LORD appeared to him under the oak (Judg 6:11), where he built an altar called 'The LORD is Peace' (Judg 6:24), and where he was later buried (Judg 8:32). Tragically, it was also the site where Gideon erected the ephod that became a snare to Israel (Judg 8:27). A second Ophrah in Benjamin is listed among that tribe's allotted towns (Josh 18:23) and appears in narratives of the Philistine wars (1 Sam 13:17). The name may derive from a root meaning 'dust' or 'fawn.' Translations uniformly transliterate it: English 'Ophrah,' Spanish 'Ofra,' German 'Ofrah.'

Ophrah (place name, city in Israel) (8×) A proper noun designating Israelite towns, primarily Gideon's hometown in Manasseh and a Benjaminite settlement. The Manassite Ophrah is the dramatic setting for Gideon's call narrative – the theophany at the oak (Judg 6:11), the altar of peace (Judg 6:24), and the problematic ephod (Judg 8:27) – as well as his burial site (Judg 8:32). The Benjaminite Ophrah appears in Joshua's allotment list (Josh 18:23) and in accounts of Philistine raiding parties (1 Sam 13:17). Consistent transliteration across languages – English 'Ophrah,' Spanish 'Ofra,' French 'Ophra' – reflects the stable transmission of this toponym. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ofrah, Ophrah, and-Ophrah | es: Ofra, Ofrá, a-Ofrá | fr: Ofrah, [עפרה], dans-Ophra | de: Ofrah, [עפרה], in-Ophrah Josh 18:23; Judg 6:11; Judg 6:24; Judg 8:27; Judg 8:32

H6085 N-proper-ms (15×)
Ephron — a Hittite landowner in Hebron; also a city near Bethel taken by Abijah.
This proper noun identifies two distinct biblical figures or places. The primary referent is Ephron the Hittite, the landowner from whom Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah as a burial site for Sarah (Genesis 23). The elaborate negotiation between Abraham and Ephron before the sons of Heth is one of the Bible's most detailed commercial transactions. A secondary referent is a city listed in 2 Chronicles 13:19, sometimes vocalized as Ephrain, which Abijah king of Judah captured from Jeroboam along with Bethel and Jeshanah.

1. Ephron (14×) Ephron the Hittite, the owner of the field and cave of Machpelah near Hebron. Genesis 23:8–17 records Abraham's negotiation to purchase the burial site, with Ephron initially offering the field as a gift before naming a price of four hundred shekels of silver. Spanish 'Efrón' and French 'Ephron' preserve the name consistently. All fourteen occurrences cluster in Genesis 23, 25:9, 49:29–30, and 50:13, always in connection with the Machpelah property. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ephron, [Ephron], and-Ephron | es: Efron, Efrón, Ephron | fr: Ephron, [עפרון], et-Ephron | de: Efron, Efrons, Ephron Gen 23:8; Gen 23:10; Gen 23:13; Gen 23:14

2. (Ephrain) (1×) A city (sometimes vocalized Ephrain or Ephron) captured by King Abijah of Judah from the northern kingdom. In 2 Chronicles 13:19, it appears alongside Bethel and Jeshanah as towns seized after Abijah's victory over Jeroboam. Spanish 'Efrayín' reflects a variant vocalization. This single occurrence likely refers to a location near Bethel, possibly identical with Ophrah or Ephraim mentioned elsewhere. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Ephrain) | es: Efrayín | fr: [עפרין] | de: [עפרין] 2Chr 13:19

עֵץ H6086 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (330×)

Tree, wood, timber; firewood, stick, stake/gallows, wooden shaft; broad term for any woody plant or product

Hebrew ets is the all-purpose word for anything woody — from a living tree in an orchard to a plank of construction timber to a bundle of firewood. Its theological prominence begins in Eden with the 'tree of life' and the 'tree of the knowledge of good and evil' (Gen 2:9), and it remains central in Proverbs where 'tree of life' becomes a metaphor for wisdom and flourishing (Prov 3:18). Materially, ets is the acacia wood of the tabernacle (Exod 25:10), the firewood Abraham binds for Isaac (Gen 22:3), and the gallows Haman builds for Mordecai (Esth 5:14). Its range mirrors that of English 'wood' — simultaneously plant, material, and product.

1. tree, living tree (156×) A living, standing tree — individually, collectively, or as a named species. Arabic shajara and Swahili mti/miti match this botanical sense. The Edenic trees of life and knowledge (Gen 2:9; 3:3) anchor the word theologically, while Judges 9:8 personifies the trees in Jotham's fable. Jer 17:8 and Ps 1:3 use the planted tree as the quintessential image of the righteous person rooted beside water. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tree, is-a-tree-of, tree | es: un-árbol, árbol, árbol-de | fr: arbre, bois, un-arbre | de: Baum, Galgen, ein-Baum Gen 1:29; Gen 2:9; Gen 3:3; Gen 3:6

2. wood, timber, lumber (104×) Wood as a processed material for construction, carpentry, and crafting — timber, boards, beams, and planks. Arabic khashab and Spanish madera capture this artisanal sense. The tabernacle instructions dominate: acacia wood for the ark (Exod 25:10), the table (25:23), and the frames (26:15). Solomon's temple similarly requires vast quantities of timber (1 Kgs 5–6), making this the primary material-culture sense of ets. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wood-of | es: madera-de, maderas-de | fr: bois-de | de: Holz-von Exod 25:10; Exod 25:13; Exod 25:23; Exod 25:28; Exod 26:15

3. firewood, fuel wood (42×) Wood gathered or designated as fuel for burning — firewood and kindling. Arabic hatab and Swahili kuni specify this combustion use. The Aqedah narrative is saturated with it: Abraham splits the firewood, Isaac carries it, and it is laid on the altar (Gen 22:3, 6, 7, 9). Levitical offering instructions repeatedly specify the wood arrangement on the altar fire (Lev 1:7–8), linking this sense to sacrificial worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-wood, wood | es: las-leñas, leña, leñas | fr: bois, le-bois | de: Holz, auf-die-Hölzer, der-Holz Gen 22:3; Gen 22:6; Gen 22:7; Gen 22:9

4. stick, staff, rod (10×) A shaped piece of wood functioning as a stick, staff, or rod. Arabic asa and Swahili fimbo designate this implement sense. Ezekiel's two symbolic sticks representing Judah and Israel (Ezek 37:16–20) are the most theologically charged examples. Lam 4:8 uses the comparison 'their skin has shriveled on their bones, become dry as a stick' to describe siege-ravaged Jerusalem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-stick, into-stick, like-a-stick | es: como-madera, como-palo, los-palos | fr: [העצים], [עץ], au-bois | de: Baum, ein-stick, wie-Galgen 2Kgs 6:6; Lam 4:8; Ezek 37:16

5. (9×) A large upright wooden stake, pole, or gallows used for public execution or display of a corpse. The Book of Esther concentrates all nine occurrences: Haman erects a fifty-cubit-high ets for Mordecai (Esth 5:14; 7:9–10). Spanish madero, German Galgen, and English 'gallows/pole' all render this specialized punitive-display sense, which carries overtones of public shame and divine reversal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gallows, the-gallows, the-pole | es: el-madero, madero | fr: bois | de: Galgen, der-Galgen Esth 2:23; Esth 5:14; Esth 6:4; Esth 7:9

6. shaft, wooden handle (8×) The wooden shaft or handle of a weapon, particularly a spear. Arabic ud (stick/shaft) and Spanish asta (spear-shaft) identify this component sense. 1 Sam 17:7 describes Goliath's spear shaft as thick 'like a weaver's beam,' making the ets a measure of the giant's terrifying power. Additional occurrences in materials lists (Exod 25:5; 35:7; Lev 14:4, 49) likely refer to cedarwood sticks used in purification rituals. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (and-shaft-of), and-shaft-of, and-wood-of | es: y-asta-de, y-madera-de | fr: (and-shaft-of), et-bois, et-bois-de | de: und-Baum, und-Holz-von, und-shaft-von Exod 25:5; Exod 35:7; Lev 14:4; Lev 14:49; 1Sam 17:7

7. (1×) A single occurrence in Josh 2:6 where ets appears to denote stalks of flax laid out on Rahab's roof. The multilingual evidence — English 'the flax,' Spanish 'el lino,' French 'le lin' — uniformly identifies the material as flax rather than wood. This may reflect either a specialized agricultural usage (woody flax stalks) or a textual anomaly, but the context of drying flax on a rooftop is unambiguous. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: the-flax | es: el-lino | fr: le-lin | de: der-flax Josh 2:6

עָצַב H6087a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp (15×)

To hurt, pain, or grieve; emotionally to be sorrowful, causatively to vex another, and physically to injure or twist.

A verb of deep feeling that covers the full arc from inner sorrow to outward harm. In its most common use it describes the grief God felt over humanity's wickedness (Gen 6:6) or the distress of those who witness injustice (Gen 34:7). The Piel and Hifil stems turn the pain outward — to grieve or provoke someone, as when Israel vexed the Holy Spirit (Isa 63:10). Spanish consistently renders the emotional senses with 'entristecer' (to sadden), while reserving 'lastimar' (to injure) for the physical sense in Eccl 10:9, confirming that Hebrew speakers distinguished emotional grief from bodily harm under one root.

1. be grieved, feel sorrow (9×) Intransitive emotional grief: the subject experiences sorrow, distress, or deep displeasure. This is the dominant sense, seen in Nifal, Hitpael, and Qal passive participle forms. God 'was grieved in his heart' (Gen 6:6), Jonathan 'was grieved' for David (1 Sam 20:34), and Zion is called 'hurt in spirit' (Isa 54:6). Spanish 'entristecer' and French 'affliger' consistently mark this as emotional, not physical. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: and-grieved-of, and-he-was-grieved, and-were-grieved | es: os-entristezcáis, os-entristeécáis, se-entristece | fr: [ועצובת], [תעצבן], affligea | de: [ועצובת], [תעצבו], er-sein-grieved Gen 6:6; Gen 34:7; Gen 45:5; 1Sam 20:3; 1Sam 20:34

2. grieve, vex, cause pain (4×) Causative grief or vexation: the subject causes pain or sorrow to another. David's father 'had not pained him' (1 Kgs 1:6), Jabez prays that evil not 'grieve me' (1 Chr 4:10), and Israel 'grieved his Holy Spirit' (Isa 63:10). Spanish 'contristar' and 'entristecer' confirm the emotional-causative reading, while English renders it variously as 'grieved' or 'rebuked.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-grieved, grieve-me, rebuked-him | es: afligirme, lo-contristó, lo-entristecieron | fr: [ועצבו], [עצבי], attrister | de: [ועצבו], [עצבי], rebuked-ihn 1Kgs 1:6; 1Chr 4:10; Ps 78:40; Isa 63:10

3. twist, distort, wrest (1×) To twist, distort, or wrest — a semantically distinct Piel usage applied to words rather than emotions. In Ps 56:5 the enemies 'twist' David's words. Spanish 'tuercen' (they twist) aligns with this concrete, non-emotional sense of distortion, separating it clearly from the grief senses. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: they-twist | es: tuercen | fr: attrister | de: sie-twist Ps 56:5

4. be hurt, be injured (1×) To be physically hurt or injured, distinct from emotional sorrow. In Eccl 10:9 the one who splits stones 'will be hurt' by them. Spanish 'se lastimará' (will be injured) confirms bodily harm rather than grief, marking this as the sole physical-pain sense of the root. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: will-be-hurt | es: se-lastimará | fr: יעצב | de: [יעצב] Eccl 10:9

עָצַב H6087b V-Piel-Perf-3cp / 1cs (2×)
To shape, fashion, or form; used of divine creative activity and image-making

This Piel verb describes deliberate shaping or fashioning. In Job 10:8, it expresses God's careful formation of Job's body: 'Your hands shaped me and made me.' In Jeremiah 44:19, it likely refers to making images of the Queen of Heaven, though the text is disputed. The underlying concept involves intentional crafting, whether the divine Potter forming human beings or artisans fashioning idol images.

(2×) A Piel intensive verb meaning to shape or fashion with care and intention. The multilingual glosses distinguish between the personal object in Job ('me-formaron,' 'formed-me') and the implied image-making in Jeremiah. The root likely relates to stretching or forming into shape, suggesting hands-on creative work. Job's use emphasizes God as craftsman; Jeremiah's use (if correctly emended) describes illicit image-making for cultic purposes. POTTER AND FORMING en: shaped-me, to-image-her | es: me-formaron, para-representarla | fr: [להעצבה], עצבוני-moi | de: [להעצבה], [עצבוני] Job 10:8; Jer 44:19

עָצַב H6088 Adj-ms (1×)
pained, troubled; grieved (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective, used as a passive participle, describes being pained, grieved, or troubled. In Daniel 6:20 it modifies 'voice,' describing how Darius called out to Daniel with a pained or anguished voice. The term conveys emotional distress or mental anguish. As an Aramaic form, it parallels Hebrew cognates describing pain or sorrow.

(1×) Used in Daniel 6:20 to describe the pained or troubled quality of King Darius's voice as he called to Daniel in the lions' den. The king's emotional distress over Daniel's fate is evident in his vocal tone. Spanish 'triste' (sad) emphasizes the sorrowful aspect, while the Hebrew root connects to pain and grief. The passive participle suggests a state of being affected by pain or trouble. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1284 WITH 4 SENSES
en: pained | es: triste | fr: affliger | de: [עצ״ב] Dan 6:20

עֹצֶב H6089a Art / N-mp (6×)
Pain, sorrow, hurt; toil, labor — suffering physical or emotional, or the burden of work

The noun עֹצֶב holds together the seemingly disparate experiences of pain and toil under a single root that connects suffering with strenuous effort. In Gen 3:16 God tells Eve that her childbearing will involve 'pain' (etsev), linking the word to the primal curse. The wisdom literature, however, develops the toil dimension: 'In all toil there is profit' (Prov 14:23), and the psalmist warns against 'the bread of anxious toil' (Ps 127:2). The two senses converge in the insight that labor in a fallen world is inherently painful.

1. toil, labor, work (4×) Burdensome work, productive toil, or labor — the exertion that occupies and wearies a person. Spanish 'trabajo' (work) and French 'labeur' (labor) confirm the work-domain reading. Prov 14:23 teaches that 'in all toil there is profit,' Ps 127:2 speaks of 'bread of toils' gained by anxious effort, and Prov 5:10 warns that 'your labors' may enrich strangers. Prov 10:22 adds that the LORD's blessing brings wealth without painful toil alongside it. LABOR AND TOIL
en: and-your-labors, toil | es: dolor, los-afanes, trabajo | fr: et-ton-labeur-toi, labeur, le-travail | de: Mühsal, [ועצבין], [עצב] Ps 127:2; Prov 5:10; Prov 10:22; Prov 14:23

2. pain, sorrow, hurt (2×) Physical or emotional suffering, grief, or hurt — the affective distress dimension of the root. In Gen 3:16, the first occurrence in Scripture, God multiplies Eve's 'pain' in childbearing, and Spanish 'con dolor' (with pain) and German 'in Schmerzen' (in pains) uniformly attest the suffering sense. Prov 15:1 uses it for emotional hurt: a harsh word stirs up pain (devar-etsev), contrasted with a gentle answer that turns away wrath. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: harsh, in-pain | es: con-dolor, dolor | fr: dans-douleur, labeur | de: [עצע], in-Schmerzen Gen 3:16; Prov 15:1

עֹצֶב H6089b Art / N-ms (1×)
vessel, implement; fashioned object

This noun denotes a vessel or fashioned object, emphasizing the shaped or formed character of the item. In Jeremiah 22:28 it appears in a rhetorical question about Coniah (Jehoiachin): is he a despised, broken vessel? The term emphasizes the crafted nature of pottery or implements, extended metaphorically to a person viewed as a discarded pot. The BDB distinguishes this from the noun meaning 'pain' despite identical spelling.

(1×) In Jeremiah 22:28, this asks rhetorically whether Coniah is a despised, broken vessel that no one wants. The metaphor draws on pottery imagery—a king reduced to a rejected pot. The term emphasizes the fashioned or shaped nature of the object, making the metaphor particularly pointed: even as a crafted vessel, Coniah has no value. Spanish and English show interpretive variation between 'vessel' and 'idol,' possibly reflecting textual or lexical uncertainty. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: Is-vessel | es: ¿Es-ídolo | fr: [העצב] | de: [העצב] Jer 22:28

עֹצֶב H6090a Prep-m / N-msc / 2ms (3×)
Pain, suffering; hurt and distress, whether physical or emotional

This noun denotes pain and suffering, particularly the pain of travail or distress. In 1 Chronicles 4:9, Jabez receives his name because his mother bore him 'with pain,' possibly referencing difficult labor. Psalm 139:24 speaks of 'the hurtful way,' any path of wickedness that causes pain or leads to destruction. Isaiah 14:3 promises relief 'from your pain and turmoil,' the suffering of exile. The word can encompass physical pain, emotional distress, and the hardship of difficult circumstances. Some interpreters connect it to the word for 'idol,' suggesting pain and idolatry share a root, but the contexts here clearly support the 'pain' meaning.

(3×) Three occurrences spanning labor pain, moral harm, and exile suffering. The multilingual evidence shows consistent rendering of 'pain/dolor,' with prepositional variation. The 1 Chronicles etymology connects the name Jabez ('he causes pain') to his mother's experience. Psalm 139's 'hurtful way' refers to any wicked path that brings harm—the Psalmist asks God to lead him in the opposite direction. Isaiah's promise of relief from pain contextualizes the return from exile as liberation from suffering. The word captures both the acute moment (childbirth) and the chronic condition (exile). PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: from-your-pain, in-pain, pain | es: con-dolor, de-tu-dolor, dolor | fr: [בעצב], [מעצבך], idole | de: [בעצב], [מעצבך], pain 1Chr 4:9; Ps 139:24; Isa 14:3

עֹצֶב H6090b N-msc / 1cs (1×)

idol, graven image

This noun denotes an idol or carved image, distinct from the homonym meaning 'pain' or 'vessel.' In Isaiah 48:5 God declares that He announced future events beforehand so Israel could not attribute them to their idol. The term emphasizes the fashioned, shaped nature of idols—objects made by human craft. The context involves polemic against idol worship and assertion of Yahweh's unique sovereignty.

(1×) Used in Isaiah 48:5 where God says He declared future events beforehand lest Israel say 'my idol did them.' The possessive suffix 'my idol' indicates Israel's tendency to attribute divine action to their carved images. The term draws on the shaping/forming root, emphasizing idols as manufactured objects. The verse asserts God's control of history against idolatrous interpretation of events. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: my-idol | es: mi-ídolo | fr: [עֹצְבִי] | de: [עֹצְבִי] Isa 48:5

עֲצָבִים H6091 N-mpc / 3fs (17×)

Idols, graven images — false gods made of silver and gold, objects of illicit worship consistently condemned in prophetic and psalmic literature.

Always appearing in the plural (atsabbîm), this noun denotes the physical images — crafted from silver, gold, and other materials — that Israel and the nations worshipped as gods. Hosea uses the term with particular force: 'Ephraim is joined to idols' (4:17), and 'with their silver and gold they made idols' (8:4; 13:2). The Psalms draw biting contrast between these lifeless objects and the living God: 'the idols of the nations are silver and gold, the work of human hands' (Ps 115:4; 135:15). German 'Goetzen' (idols/false gods) captures the pejorative force, while the frequent pairing with gillulîm and elilîm in prophetic texts reinforces their utter worthlessness.

idols, graven images (17×) Carved or molten images worshipped as false gods, always in the plural and consistently condemned. Hosea deploys the term to indict Ephraim's idolatry (4:17; 8:4; 13:2), often specifying their material composition as silver and gold. The Psalms mock them as lifeless human artifacts (115:4; 135:15), while prophetic texts pair them with parallel terms like gillulîm ('dung pellets') in Jeremiah 50:2 and elilîm ('worthless things') in Isaiah 10:11. In narrative, the Philistines' idols are abandoned on the battlefield (1 Sam 31:9; 2 Sam 5:21). German 'Goetzen' and Spanish 'ídolos' both convey the derogatory, polemical force of the Hebrew. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: and-to-her-idols, her-idols, her-images | es: Sus-ídolos, a-los-ídolos-de, a-ídolos | fr: [הָעֲצַבִּים], [וּלְעַצְבִּיהָ], [עַצְבִּיהָ] | de: Goetzen, [הָעֲצַבִּים], [וּלְעַצְבִּיהָ] 1Sam 31:9; 2Sam 5:21; 1Chr 10:9; 2Chr 24:18; Ps 106:36

עֹצְבֵי H6092 N-mpc / 2mp (1×)

workers, laborers; those who toil

This noun denotes workers or laborers, with second masculine plural suffix 'your workers.' In Isaiah 58:3 it appears in God's accusation that Israel fasts while oppressing their workers. The term derives from roots associated with toil or labor, emphasizing the laborious nature of the work. The context involves social justice critique—religious observance cannot cover exploitation of those who labor.

(1×) In Isaiah 58:3, this refers to the workers or laborers whom the people oppress even while fasting. God condemns the hypocrisy of religious practice coupled with social injustice toward those who toil for them. Spanish 'obreros' (workers) and English 'workers' both capture the laboring class. The suffix 'your workers' emphasizes the relationship between employers and those who labor, making the oppression more culpable. LABOR AND TOIL

en: your-workers | es: vuestros-obreros | fr: [עֹצְבֵיכֶם] | de: [עֹצְבֵיכֶם] Isa 58:3

עִצָּבוֹן H6093 N-msc / 2fs (3×)

Pain, toil; laborious work and its associated suffering

This noun appears exclusively in Genesis' early chapters, denoting the pain and toil introduced by the Fall. Genesis 3:16 declares that woman will bear children 'in pain,' the labor of childbirth intensified by the curse. Genesis 3:17 pronounces that man will eat 'in toil' all the days of his life, agriculture becoming laborious and frustrating. Genesis 5:29 explains Noah's name as bringing 'relief from our toil and from the painful labor of our hands,' the hard work of farming cursed ground. The word encompasses both physical suffering and wearisome labor, the twin dimensions of human existence under judgment. Yet Noah's name offers hope of mitigation.

(3×) Three occurrences, all in Genesis 3-5 describing post-Fall human experience. The multilingual evidence renders 'pain/toil/dolor/douleur/Mühsal,' capturing both suffering and labor dimensions. Genesis 3:16's focus is childbirth pain, while 3:17 emphasizes agricultural toil. Genesis 5:29 looks forward to relief from the toil of working cursed ground. The word represents the fundamental human condition after Eden: existence marked by painful labor, whether in reproduction or food production. Noah's anticipated relief suggests God's mercy may ease the curse, a hope partially fulfilled in the covenant after the flood. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: and-from-toil-of, in-toil, pain-your | es: con-dolor, tu-dolor, y-de-dolor-de | fr: dans-toil, douleur-ton, et-de-toil-de | de: deine-Mühsal, in-Mühsal, und-von-der-Mühsal Gen 3:16; Gen 3:17; Gen 5:29

עַצֶּבֶת H6094 N-fs (5×)

hurt, pain, sorrow — physical or emotional wound, injury, or grief

Encompasses both physical pain and emotional anguish. In Job 9:28, the sufferer dreads all his 'pains,' while Psalm 147:3 celebrates God as the one who 'binds up their hurts.' Proverbs uses it twice with distinct nuances: winking causes 'hurt' to others (10:10), and sorrow of heart crushes the spirit (15:13). The most theologically charged occurrence is Psalm 16:4, where 'their sorrows shall multiply' describes those who pursue other gods — pain as the wages of idolatry.

(5×) Physical or emotional pain, hurt, and sorrow arising from suffering, wrongdoing, or idolatry. In Job 9:28, it denotes the totality of bodily and existential anguish; in Ps 147:3, God heals these wounds. Prov 15:13 pairs 'pain of heart' against a glad heart. Spanish 'dolor' (pain/grief) and French 'travail' (suffering/labor) capture the dual physical-emotional range, while the German bracketed forms suggest translation difficulty — the word resists a single equivalent. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: but-by-sorrow-of, my-pains, their-sorrows | es: dolor, mis-dolores;, sus-dolores | fr: et-בְּעַצְבַת, mon-עַצְבָתִי-moi, travail | de: [בְּעַצְבַת], [עַצְבַת], [עַצְבָתִי] Job 9:28; Ps 16:4; Ps 147:3; Prov 10:10; Prov 15:13

עָצָה H6095 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to shut, close (especially eyes)

This verb means to shut or close, particularly used of closing the eyes. In Proverbs 16:30 it describes one who shuts his eyes in order to devise perverse things, suggesting deliberate blocking out of moral truth to concentrate on wickedness. The participle indicates habitual action—one characterized by shutting his eyes. The imagery suggests willful moral blindness.

(1×) Used in Proverbs 16:30 of one who shuts his eyes to devise perversity. The active participle describes habitual eye-shutting, suggesting intentional exclusion of moral sight to focus on evil schemes. The parallel with 'compressing his lips' indicates deliberate, calculated wickedness. Spanish 'el que cierra' (the one who shuts) preserves the participial sense of characteristic action. The verse portrays deliberate moral blindness in service of evil. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: shutting | es: El-que-cierra | fr: עֹצֶה | de: [עֹצֶה] Prov 16:30

עָצֶה H6096 Art / N-ms (1×)

backbone, spine; the bone near the fat tail

This anatomical term designates either the spine or specifically the sacrum—the bone near the tail in sheep. It appears in Leviticus' sacrificial instructions regarding fat that must be removed and offered. The term with the article 'the backbone' indicates a specific, recognized anatomical feature. The context involves the fat-tail of sheep common in the ancient Near East, with the adjacent bone being the reference point.

(1×) In Leviticus 3:9, this refers to the backbone or specifically the sacrum bone near the fat tail of the sacrificial animal. The fat tail was characteristic of Near Eastern sheep breeds, and precise anatomical knowledge was required for proper sacrifice. English 'backbone,' Spanish 'espinazo' (spine), and German 'Wirbelsäule' (spinal column, though shortened here) all indicate the vertebral reference point. The article emphasizes this as the definite, known anatomical feature. FLESH AND BODY

en: the-backbone | es: el-espinazo | fr: le-backbone | de: der-backbone Lev 3:9

עֵצָה H6097 N-fs (1×)

trees (collective); timber, wood

This feminine noun appears to be a collective for trees, though BDB notes textual uncertainty. In Jeremiah 6:6 it occurs in the command to cut down trees against Jerusalem. Most manuscripts and versions suggest reading this as a third feminine singular suffix on the regular noun for tree/wood, yielding 'her trees' or 'its timber.' The form as it stands would be collective 'trees,' but emendation to a suffix form is widely accepted.

(1×) In Jeremiah 6:6, this likely should be read as 'her trees' (with suffix) rather than as an independent collective noun, referring to Jerusalem's trees which are to be cut for siege works. The passage involves judgment imagery with trees being felled for military purposes. The textual note indicates manuscript variation, with Oriental manuscripts, Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Targum all supporting the suffixed reading 'her tree/timber.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: trees | es: árboles | fr: conseil | de: Rat Jer 6:6

עֵצָה H6098 N-fsc (90×)

Counsel, advice, plan — guidance given or received, whether human deliberation, political strategy, or God's sovereign purpose.

A noun at the heart of biblical wisdom and governance, appearing 90 times across narrative, prophecy, and poetry. In the court intrigues of 2 Samuel 15-17, Ahithophel's counsel is 'as if one had inquired of the oracle of God' (2 Sam 16:23) — and the story turns on whose counsel prevails. In the prophets, it rises to cosmic scale: 'the counsel of the LORD stands forever' (Ps 33:11), and God declares 'My counsel shall stand, and I will accomplish all my purpose' (Isa 46:10). Spanish consejo, French conseil, and German Rat all preserve the Latin consilium lineage, but Hebrew עֵצָה carries a weight of authority and destiny that those cognates only approximate.

1. counsel, advice (73×) Counsel, advice — the ordinary interpersonal sense: guidance recommended by one person to another. Ahithophel's counsel (2 Sam 15:31, 16:23), the counsel of the elders versus the young men (1 Kgs 12:8-14), and the advice Ezra receives (Ezra 10:3). Spanish consejo and French conseil render it directly. Proverbs 1:25 personifies Wisdom lamenting that 'you ignored all my counsel,' giving the word its sapential weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-counsel, a-plan, counsel | es: consejo, consejo-de, el-consejo | fr: conseil, conseil-de | de: Rat, counsel, counsel-von Judg 20:7; 2Sam 15:31; 2Sam 15:34; 2Sam 16:20; 2Sam 16:23

2. counsels, schemes, plots (8×) Counsels, schemes, plots — the plural form often carrying a negative connotation of machinations and hostile deliberation. Enemies frustrate plans (Ezra 4:5, Neh 4:15), the psalmist wrestles with 'counsels in my soul' (Ps 13:2), and Israel's rebellions multiply through their own schemes (Ps 106:43). French dans conseil and German in ihr Rat preserve the conspiratorial nuance of people huddling over their dark deliberations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: counsel, counsel-their, counsels | es: con-su-consejo, consejo-de-ellos, consejos | fr: conseil, dans-conseil, le-conseil | de: Rat, der-Rat, in-ihr-Rat Ezra 4:5; Neh 4:15; Ps 13:2; Ps 106:43; Isa 25:1

3. plan, purpose, design (8×) Plan, purpose, sovereign design — the sense that elevates counsel from human advice to determined intention, especially God's unalterable decree. 'The counsel of the LORD stands forever' (Ps 33:11); 'My counsel shall stand' (Isa 46:10); 'the LORD of hosts has purposed — who will annul it?' (Isa 14:26-27). Proverbs 19:21 draws the contrast sharply: 'Many are the plans in a person's heart, but it is the LORD's purpose that prevails.' Here counsel becomes providence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-plan, and-its-counsel, but-counsel-of | es: consejo-de, el-consejo, pero-el-consejo-de | fr: conseil, conseil-de, et-conseil | de: Rat, dein-Rat, der-Rat Job 18:7; Ps 20:4; Ps 106:13; Prov 19:21; Isa 14:26

4. (1×) A singular occurrence in Isaiah 19:11 where the construct form 'counselors of' functions as a near-concrete designation for those who give counsel — the wise advisors of Pharaoh. The multilingual glosses (Spanish consejeros, English counselors-of) shift from abstract noun to agent noun, reflecting how the construct chain draws the word toward the person rather than the activity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: counselors-of | es: consejeros-de | fr: conseil | de: Rat Isa 19:11

עָצוּם H6099 Conj-w / Adj-ms (31×)

Mighty, powerful; numerous, vast — describing nations, armies, or peoples of great strength or number

An adjective conveying formidable power or impressive numbers, frequently paired with gadol ('great') and rav ('many') to describe entire nations. When God promises Abraham that his descendants will become a goy gadol ve-atsum (Gen 18:18), the word captures both military might and demographic explosion. It also describes the overwhelming force of invading waters (Isa 8:7) and the terrifying locust army (Joel 2:2). Spanish distinguishes fuerte (strong) from numeroso (numerous), highlighting the adjective's double register.

1. mighty, powerful, strong (28×) Mighty, powerful, or strong — describing peoples, nations, kings, or forces that possess formidable military or political power. Pharaoh admits Israel is atsum mimmenu ('mightier than we,' Exod 1:9), and God promises to dispossess nations gedolim va-atsumim (Deut 4:38). The substantivized form in Ps 135:10 designates 'mighty kings.' Spanish fuerte and German mächtig consistently render this sense of raw power, while French puissant underscores the authority dimension. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-mightier, and-mighty, mightier | es: fuerte, más-fuerte, poderosa | fr: et-mightier, et-puissant, mightier | de: [עצום], maechtig, mightier Gen 18:18; Exod 1:9; Num 14:12; Num 22:6; Deut 4:38

2. numerous, vast, great (3×) Numerous, vast, or great in extent — emphasizing sheer quantity rather than strength. Amos 5:12 condemns Israel's atsumin ('numerous') transgressions, and Ps 35:18 envisions praise among an am atsum ('vast people'). The overlap with sense 1 is natural since large numbers imply power, but here the focus falls on magnitude. Spanish numeroso and the parallel with rav ('many') in these contexts confirm the quantitative reading. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-mighty, mighty | es: muy-grande, numeroso, y-numerosos | fr: et-puissant, puissant | de: maechtig, mächtig, und-maechtig Num 32:1; Ps 35:18; Amos 5:12

עֶצְיוֹן גֶּבֶר H6100 Prep / N-proper-fs (7×)

Ezion-geber, an ancient port city at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba near Elath, used as a wilderness station and later a naval base

Ezion-geber was an important port city located at the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba, near the town of Elath. It served first as a station during Israel's wilderness wanderings (Num 33:35-36; Deut 2:8) and later as Solomon's shipbuilding and trading port for voyages to Ophir (1 Kgs 9:26). Jehoshaphat's ill-fated fleet was wrecked there (1 Kgs 22:48). Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate the compound name, though with phonetic variation reflecting each language's conventions.

Ezion-geber (port city on the Gulf of Aqaba) (7×) The port city of Ezion-geber (עֶצְיוֹן גֶּבֶר) at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, near Elath. It first appears as a wilderness encampment site during the exodus journey (Num 33:35-36; Deut 2:8). Under Solomon, it became a major naval base where ships were built for trade with Ophir (1 Kgs 9:26; 2 Chr 8:17). Jehoshaphat later attempted to revive this maritime enterprise, but the ships were destroyed (1 Kgs 22:48; 2 Chr 20:36). Spanish 'Ezion-Geber/Etsion-Gueber' and French 'Etsyon-Gever' show the phonetic adaptation across traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-Ezion-Geber, at-Ezion-geber, from-Ezion-geber | es: a-Ezión-Geber, de-Etsión-Gueber, en-Etsión-Gueber | fr: [בעציון גבר], [לעציוןגבר], dans-Etsyon-Gever | de: [בעציון גבר], [לעציוןגבר], bei-Ezion-geber Num 33:35; Num 33:36; Deut 2:8; 1Kgs 9:26; 1Kgs 22:48

עָצֵל H6101 V-Nifal-Imperf-2mp (1×)

to be sluggish, lazy; act with sloth

This Niphal verb means to be sluggish, lazy, or to show sloth in action. In Judges 18:9 the Danite spies urge their kinsmen not to be sluggish about going up to possess the land they have scouted. The verb characterizes hesitation or laziness that delays appropriate action. The Niphal reflexive suggests making oneself sluggish or allowing oneself to be inactive when action is required.

(1×) Used in Judges 18:9 where the spies tell their fellow Danites 'do not be sluggish to go' and possess the good land. The prohibition warns against laziness or hesitation when opportunity presents itself. Spanish 'seáis perezosos' (be lazy) and the verb root across languages all emphasize indolence or sloth. The context makes sluggishness culpable—they have seen the land's goodness and should act decisively. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: be-lazy | es: seáis-perezosos | fr: être-lazy | de: sein-lazy Judg 18:9

עָצֵל H6102 Art / Adj-ms (14×)

Sluggard, lazy person; one who avoids work and suffers want, a stock character in Proverbs' wisdom teaching.

An adjective used substantively to denote the habitually lazy person, the 'atsel appears exclusively in Proverbs as one of the sages' favorite foils. The ant sermon of Proverbs 6:6-9 addresses the sluggard directly – 'Go to the ant, O sluggard; consider her ways and be wise' – setting up a contrast between industrious nature and human indolence that echoes across the book. The sluggard's path is overgrown with thorns (15:19), his cravings go unfulfilled (13:4; 21:25-26), and he is as irritating as vinegar to the teeth and smoke to the eyes for anyone who relies on him (10:26). Spanish 'perezoso' and German 'Fauler' both capture the characteristic idleness, while French 'paresseux' adds a note of the habitual that suits this figure well.

the sluggard (14×) A sluggard or chronically lazy person, used as a stock character in wisdom instruction. All fourteen occurrences appear in Proverbs, where the 'atsel is held up as a negative example: addressed directly in the call to learn from the ant (Prov 6:6, 9), described as annoying to those who send him (10:26), craving but gaining nothing (13:4; 21:25), finding his path blocked by thorns (15:19), and offering absurd excuses to avoid leaving his house (22:13; 26:13-16). His field lies overgrown and his walls are broken down (24:30). LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: O-sluggard, and-the-sluggard, is-the-sluggard | es: el-perezoso, oh-perezoso, perezoso | fr: et-paresseux, le-paresseux, paresseux | de: Fauler, der-Fauler, und-Fauler Prov 6:6; Prov 6:9; Prov 10:26; Prov 13:4; Prov 15:19

עַצְלָה H6103 Prep-b / N-fd (2×)

Laziness, sluggishness, or slothful neglect of responsibility

This noun describes the character quality and practical consequence of being lazy. Proverbs 19:15 warns that such sluggishness casts one into deep sleep—metaphorically, into poverty and helplessness. Ecclesiastes 10:18 uses an intensive dual form to describe how extreme laziness causes a house to sag and leak. The word captures both the moral failing and its inevitable physical consequences in a society where diligence was essential for survival.

(2×) An abstract noun denoting the state or habit of sluggishness. The Spanish 'pereza' and French glosses consistently identify this as moral laziness rather than mere tiredness. Ecclesiastes employs a dual form ('double laziness' or intensive form) to emphasize the severity, showing how linguistic intensification matched the dramatic imagery of a collapsing house. Both contexts link the inner disposition to outer ruin. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: laziness, through-laziness | es: Pereza, con-doble-pereza | fr: dans-עצלה ,בעצלתים | de: [בעצלתים], [עצלה] Prov 19:15; Eccl 10:18

עַצְלוּת H6104 N-fs (1×)

idleness, slothfulness; lazy inactivity

This feminine noun denotes idleness or slothfulness, the quality of being lazy or inactive. In Proverbs 31:27 it describes what the excellent wife does not eat—'the bread of idleness.' The expression means she does not live in idle luxury, but is actively engaged in productive work. The term condemns unproductive inactivity, especially when one consumes resources without contributing labor.

(1×) In Proverbs 31:27, this describes the 'bread of idleness' which the virtuous woman does not eat. The phrase uses 'bread' to represent sustenance or living, creating the image of one who consumes without producing, living in lazy inactivity. She refuses this idleness, instead working productively. Spanish 'ociosidad' (idleness) captures the inactive quality. The verse praises constant productive engagement as opposed to slothful consumption. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: idleness | es: ociosidad | fr: עצלות | de: [עצלות] Prov 31:27

עָצַם H6105a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (18×)

Be mighty, strong, or numerous; in Piel, to break bones; in Hifil, to make strong

A root that straddles two semantic poles: raw physical power and sheer numerical abundance. When Pharaoh saw that the Israelites 'grew mighty' (Exod 1:7, 20), both strength and multiplying numbers were in view — Spanish captures this duality with 'se fortalecerá' (grew strong) alongside 'se multiplicaron' (multiplied). The psalmist marvels that God's thoughts are more numerous than sand (Ps 139:17), while Daniel's visions use the same verb for empires growing powerful (Dan 8:8, 24). A fascinating denominative Piel from עֶצֶם (bone) appears once: Nebuchadnezzar 'gnawed Israel's bones' (Jer 50:17), vividly connecting the root back to its etymological core.

1. be strong, mighty (Qal) (9×) To be or become strong, mighty, powerful in the Qal stem — describing inherent strength or a growth in power. Isaac tells Abimelech 'you have become too mighty for us' (Gen 26:16), and Daniel's visions use this repeatedly of empires waxing great (Dan 8:8, 24; 11:23). French 'crût puissant' and Spanish 'son poderosos' consistently mark this as personal or national might rather than mere numbers. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-become-strong, and-grew-mighty, and-shall-be-mighty | es: Y-se-fortalecerá, son-fuertes, son-poderosos | fr: [וכעצמו], [עצם], et-crût-puissant | de: [וכעצמו], du-bist-zu-mächtig-geworden-, sie-sind-maechtig Gen 26:16; Exod 1:7; Exod 1:20; Ps 38:19; Ps 69:4

2. be numerous, vast (Qal) (7×) To be or become numerous, vast, great in quantity — the Qal stem expressing abundance rather than strength. The psalmist exclaims that his enemies 'are more than the hairs of my head' (Ps 69:4) and that God's thoughts outnumber the sand (Ps 139:17). Spanish distinguishes this sense clearly with 'se multiplicaron' and 'fueron numerosos,' while Jeremiah uses it of transgressions multiplying (Jer 5:6) and widows becoming more numerous than sand (Jer 15:8). POWER AND ABILITY

en: More-numerous-became-, have-been-numerous, numerous | es: Se-multiplicaron, aumentaron, fueron-numerosos | fr: être-fort, être-puissant | de: sie-sind-maechtig, sie-sind-mehr, vast Ps 40:5; Ps 40:12; Ps 139:17; Jer 5:6; Jer 15:8

3. break bones (Piel) (1×) A denominative Piel meaning to break or gnaw bones, derived from the noun עֶצֶם (bone). Appearing only in Jeremiah 50:17, it describes Nebuchadnezzar 'breaking the bones' of Israel — a vivid metaphor of devouring a conquered people. English 'gnawed his bones' and Spanish 'sus huesos' foreground the skeletal imagery that ties this sense etymologically to the root's physical core. POWER AND ABILITY

en: gnawed-his-bones | es: sus-huesos | fr: être-fort | de: sie-sind-maechtig Jer 50:17

4. make strong (Hifil) (1×) The Hifil causative: to make strong, to cause to become mighty. In Psalm 105:24, God 'made his people stronger than their adversaries,' an act of divine empowerment. Spanish 'lo hizo más fuerte' and English 'He made them stronger' clearly mark the causative agency — it is not the people's own growing but God actively strengthening them. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-He-made-them-stronger | es: y-lo-hizo-más-fuerte | fr: et-être-puissant | de: und-er-gemacht-ihnen-stronger Ps 105:24

עָצַם H6105b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

To break bones; used metaphorically of Nebuchadnezzar's devastation of Israel (Jeremiah 50:17)

This denominative Piel verb derives from the word for 'bone' and means to break or crush bones. Jeremiah 50:17 uses it in a striking metaphor: after Assyria devoured Israel, Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon 'broke his bones'—finishing the destruction completely. However, there's textual uncertainty here; some manuscripts may reflect a different root meaning 'to close' or 'shut,' found in Isaiah's passages about God closing eyes. The bone-breaking image fits Jeremiah's context of total devastation.

(2×) A Piel verb describing forceful breaking or crushing. The BDB notes denominative origin from 'bone,' making 'broke his bones' the expected meaning in Jeremiah 50:17. However, the glosses show confusion: some languages preserve the bone imagery ('os' in French), while others reflect 'shut/close' glosses, suggesting manuscript variation or interpretive uncertainty. The Jeremiah context strongly favors the bone-breaking metaphor for Babylon's thorough destruction of Israel. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: and-He-has-closed, and-shuts | es: y-cerró, y-el-que-cierra | fr: [וַיְעַצֵּם], et-os | de: [וַיְעַצֵּם], [וַעֲצַם] Isa 29:10; Isa 33:15

עֶצֶם H6106 Prep-b / N-fpc / 1cs (126×)

Bone, skeletal part; in construct with 'day,' selfsame or that very; figuratively, substance, body, or essential nature.

Etsem is the ordinary Hebrew word for bone — the hard skeletal structure of humans and animals — but it develops two fascinating extensions that make it lexicographically rich. The first is the emphatic construct be'etsem hayyom hazzeh ('on the bone of this day,' i.e., 'on that very day'), where bone-as-substance becomes a marker of precise identity and emphasis, appearing at pivotal narrative moments: the day the Flood begins (Gen 7:13), the day of circumcision (Gen 17:23), the day of the Exodus (Exod 12:17). The second extension reaches toward 'substance' or 'essence' — the sky's etsem in Exod 24:10 is its very body or substance, clear as sapphire. Spanish hueso, German Knochen, and French os handle the literal bone sense, but the emphatic and figurative uses require creative solutions across languages.

1. bone(s), skeletal part (105×) Physical bone or bones of a person or animal — the dominant literal sense at 105 occurrences. This covers Joseph's bones carried out of Egypt (Exod 13:19; Josh 24:32), the bones of the dead (2 Sam 21:12), bones as synecdoche for the whole body in distress (Ps 22:14; 31:10), and the kinship formula 'bone of my bones' expressing shared flesh (Gen 2:23; Judg 9:2). Spanish huesos, German Knochen/Gebein, French os, and Korean ppyeo (뼈) all converge unambiguously. The plural atsemot is especially frequent in poetic and prophetic contexts where bodily suffering or death is in view, notably Ezekiel's valley of dry bones (Ezek 37:1-14). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bones-of, my-bones, the-bones-of | es: huesos-de, huesos-de-, los-huesos-de | fr: mes-os, mon-os, os | de: Knochen, Knochen-von, mein-Gebein Exod 13:19; Josh 24:32; 2Sam 21:12

2. selfsame, that very (17×) Emphatic identity marker: 'selfsame, that very' — 17 occurrences, exclusively in the construct phrase be'etsem hayyom (hazzeh), literally 'in the bone/substance of this day.' This idiomatic expression marks temporal precision and narrative weight at critical junctures: the onset of the Flood (Gen 7:13), Abraham's circumcision (Gen 17:23, 26), the Exodus (Exod 12:17, 41), and the entry into Canaan (Josh 5:11). German an-eben ('on precisely that') and Spanish en-aquel-mismo ('on that very same') both reach for emphatic demonstrative constructions, confirming that this is a lexicalized idiom, not merely a metaphorical use of 'bone.' The cross-linguistic evidence decisively separates this from the literal skeletal sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bone-of, essence-of-, in-very | es: En-esencia-de, En-hueso-de, en-aquel-mismo | fr: dans-très, os, sur-le-même | de: Knochen, [בְּעֶצֶם], an-eben- Gen 7:13; Gen 17:23; Gen 17:26; Exod 12:17; Exod 12:41

3. substance, strength, essence (4×) Substance, body, fullness, or essential nature — 4 occurrences where etsem extends figuratively to mean the core material or essence of something. In Exod 24:10 the elders see under God's feet 'like the etsem of heaven for clearness' — the very substance or body of the sky. In Job 21:23 one dies 'in the etsem of his completeness' — in the full substance of his prosperity. Spanish substancia, German Wesen ('essence'), and French substance all shift away from skeletal vocabulary. Lam 4:7 describes the Nazirites whose etsem was 'more ruddy than coral' — their bodily substance, not individual bones. A genuine figurative extension from physical bone to abstract essence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-substance-of, in-body, in-strength-of | es: de-cuerpo, en-la-plenitud-de, substancia-de | fr: dans-os, et-comme-substance-de, le-os-de | de: Knochen, der-Knochen-von, in-Knochen Exod 24:10; Josh 10:27; Job 21:23; Lam 4:7

עֹצֶם H6107 Conj-w (3×)

Ezem/Etzem; a city in the Negeb assigned to Judah, then Simeon

Ezem was a city in the Negeb, the southern region of Judah's inheritance. Joshua 15:29 lists it among Judah's southern cities, but Joshua 19:3 and 1 Chronicles 4:29 assign it to Simeon, whose inheritance was carved out from within Judah's territory. The textual variants (Ezem/Etzem) reflect different vocalizations of the same consonantal text. The name may relate to the word for 'bone' or 'strength,' though the connection is uncertain. The city's location in the arid Negeb suggests it was a small settlement in the southern frontier, part of the defensive network against nomadic incursions.

(3×) Three occurrences in tribal allotment lists: once to Judah, twice to Simeon. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration with conjunctions, as these appear in catalog lists. The dual assignment reflects Simeon's unique situation—scattered within Judah's territory rather than having a contiguous tribal area. The Chronicles reference in Simeon's genealogical cities confirms the Simeonite connection. The textual variants in spelling are minor, both pointing to the same Negeb settlement whose precise location is now lost. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Etsem, and-Etzem, and-in-Etsem | es: y-Ezem, y-en-Etsem | fr: [וּבְעֶצֶם], et-Etsem, et-Etzem | de: [וּבְעֶצֶם], und-Etsem, und-Etzem Josh 15:29; Josh 19:3; 1Chr 4:29

עֹצֶם H6108 Prep-b / N-msc (3×)

Might, bones; strength and power, or collectively the skeletal frame

This noun can mean either 'might' or 'bones' (collectively as a frame), showing semantic range. Deuteronomy 8:17 warns against saying 'my power and the might of my hand' gained wealth, attributing success to self rather than God. Job 30:21 complains that God persecutes him 'with the might of Your hand,' divine strength turned against the sufferer. Psalm 139:15 uses it to mean 'frame' or skeletal structure: 'my frame was not hidden from You' when being formed in the womb. The word emphasizes forceful strength or the substantial structure that bears strength. The semantic link between bones and might is natural—bones provide the framework for bodily power.

(3×) Three occurrences with 'might' in Deuteronomy and Job, 'frame' in Psalms. The multilingual evidence shows the semantic range: 'poder/might/Knochen (bones)/frame.' Deuteronomy's context warns against prideful self-attribution of strength. Job's complaint inverts the same idea: God's mighty hand has become an instrument of suffering rather than blessing. Psalm 139's usage is tender, describing the unformed frame in the womb as visible to God's eye. The prepositional forms ('with the might of,' 'in secret') show the word in various grammatical constructions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-might-of, my-frame, with-might-of | es: con-poder-de, mi-hueso, y-el-poder-de | fr: dans-בעצם, et-puissance-de, mes-os | de: in-Knochen, mein-frame, und-koennte-von Deut 8:17; Job 30:21; Ps 139:15

עָצְמָה H6109 Prep-b / N-fsc (3×)

Might, strength; abundant power and force

This feminine noun denotes strength and mighty power, used particularly of God's abundant strength. Isaiah 40:29 promises that God 'gives power to the faint and increases strength to the powerless,' using this word for the vigor He supplies. Isaiah 47:9 warns Babylon that calamities will come upon her 'despite the great power of your sorceries,' her magical might proving futile. Nahum 3:9 describes Ethiopia and Egypt as Nineveh's strength, questioning 'was her strength infinite?' before detailing her fall. The word emphasizes robust, vigorous strength, the kind of power that seems abundant and unshakeable until tested.

(3×) Three occurrences describing divine provision of strength, sorcerous might, and imperial alliances. The multilingual evidence renders 'strength/fortaleza/vigueur/puissance,' capturing the robust power dimension. Isaiah 40's usage is encouraging: God multiplies strength for the weary. Isaiah 47's usage is ironic: Babylon's great sorcerous might will fail to prevent disaster. Nahum's rhetorical question about Nineveh's boundless strength is answered negatively—even great power cannot guarantee survival. The prepositional phrase 'despite the great power of' shows the word in emphatic construction. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: despite-the-great-power-of, strength, was-her-strength | es: fortaleza-de-ella, por-poder-de, vigor | fr: [בעצמת], [עצמה], puissance | de: [בעצמת], [עצמה] Isa 40:29; Isa 47:9; Nah 3:9

עֲצָמָה H6110 N-fpc / 2mp (1×)

defensive argument, proof, evidence brought forward in legal or rhetorical context

This rare noun appears only in Isaiah 41:21, where God challenges the idols to 'bring forward your defenses'—your strongest arguments or proofs. The context is a courtroom scene where false gods are put on trial. Spanish translates it as 'your arguments' and English as 'your proofs,' both capturing the legal-rhetorical force. The word derives from a root meaning 'to be strong,' suggesting that these are not weak excuses but the best evidence one can muster in defense of a position.

(1×) In Isaiah 41:21, God calls on pagan deities to present their 'defenses'—the most compelling arguments or evidence they can offer for their legitimacy. The term carries legal weight, as if in a courtroom, where the accused brings forward their strongest case. The multilingual glosses confirm this forensic sense: Spanish uses 'argumentos' (arguments), English 'proofs,' pointing to reasoned discourse meant to persuade or vindicate. LEGAL DEFENSE APOLOGY

en: your-proofs | es: sus-argumentos | fr: [עצמותיכם] | de: [עצמותיכם] Isa 41:21

עַצְמוֹן H6111 N-proper-fs / 3fs (3×)

Azmon; a location on the extreme southern border of Canaan

Azmon was a site on the southernmost border of the Promised Land, marking the boundary between Canaan and the wilderness. Numbers 34:4-5 describes the southern border passing through Azmon and proceeding to the Brook of Egypt. Joshua 15:4 includes it in Judah's southern boundary description, using identical language. The directional form Azmonah ('toward Azmon') appears in Numbers 34:4. The precise location is uncertain, somewhere in the northern Sinai or Negeb wilderness. As a border marker, Azmon represented the extent of Israel's territorial claim, the edge where promised land met desert.

(3×) Three occurrences, all in boundary descriptions. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration with directional markers ('toward,' 'from,' 'Azmonah'). Numbers 34 gives the boundary description in divine instruction, while Joshua 15 records its implementation in Judah's actual allotment. The directional form Azmonah emphasizes movement toward the site as the boundary proceeds. As a border point, Azmon had primarily cartographic rather than settlement significance—it marked where Israel's inheritance ended and the wilderness began. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Atzmonah, Azmon-ward, from-Azmon | es: Azmón, a-Atsmón, desde-Atsmón | fr: Atzmonah, Azmon-ward, de-Azmon | de: Atzmonah, Azmon-ward, von-Azmon Num 34:4; Num 34:5; Josh 15:4

עֶדְרִין H6112 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Eznite: a textually problematic gentilicic designation in 2 Samuel 23:8

This enigmatic term appears twice in the same verse (2 Samuel 23:8) describing one of David's mighty men. The text is notoriously difficult; the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:11 reads quite differently, suggesting scribal confusion. Modern scholars often emend to read 'he raised his spear,' following Chronicles. The ketiv-qere variations and manuscript divergence show this verse resisted clear transmission. It may originally have been a title or weapon description rather than an ethnic designation.

(2×) An obscure term appearing in a severely corrupted text. The translations mark this with brackets and notation ([k], [el-etsnita]), acknowledging textual uncertainty. Chronicles' parallel reads 'he raised his spear,' leading scholars to conclude this wasn't originally a gentilicic at all but part of a phrase describing military prowess. The domain assignment to 'Number' likely reflects the verse's enumeration context rather than semantic content. STATURE THREE ANOMALY

en: [k], the-Eznite | es: (el-etsnita), [el-etsnita] | fr: [k], le-Eznite | de: [k] 2Sam 23:8

עָצַר H6113 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjImperf-3fs (46×)

To restrain, shut up, hold back, or confine; also to close (heavens/womb) or retain in one's power

A verb expressing forceful containment, whether of persons locked in confinement, plagues halted by intercession, or the heavens sealed against rain. In its Nifal stem it depicts plagues and calamities being stopped, as when Phinehas's zeal caused the plague to cease (Num 25:8). The word's range extends from physical imprisonment to divine sovereignty over fertility and weather, and even to an idiomatic sense of having power or ability. Across translations, Spanish 'cerrar/detener,' French 'retenir/fermer,' and German 'einsperren/zurueckhalten' all capture this dual force of closing off and holding back.

1. confined, imprisoned (12×) Describes persons shut up as prisoners or captives, frequently as the passive participle 'atsur. The formula 'confined and free' (1 Kgs 14:10; Deut 32:36) became a merism for all people. Spanish 'cautivo/encerrado' and French 'bond/detained' reflect this carceral sense. The emphasis falls on involuntary restriction of movement and liberty. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: and-restrained, and-shut-up, bond | es: cautivo, detenido, encerrado | fr: bond, detained, et-ferma-en-haut | de: [עצור], [עצר], bond Deut 32:36; 1Sam 21:8; 1Kgs 14:10; 1Kgs 21:21; 2Kgs 9:8

2. restrain, hold back (8×) Active restraint of a person or force from proceeding. In Gen 16:2 Sarai says God has 'restrained me from bearing,' and in 1 Sam 9:17 God tells Samuel that Saul will 'restrain' (govern) the people. Spanish 'gobernara' and German 'hold-zurueck' capture the sense of checking or curbing another's action or power. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: and-to-restrain, can-retain-, has-restrained-me | es: detengas, gobernará, me-ha-cerrado | fr: a-retint-moi, et-retenir, fera-arrête-tu | de: [ועצר], [יעצר], hold-zurueck Gen 16:2; 1Sam 9:17; 1Kgs 18:44; 2Kgs 4:24; 2Chr 2:6

3. be stopped (Nifal) (7×) The Nifal passive records plagues and disasters being stopped, most memorably when Aaron stood between the living and dead and the plague 'was stopped' (Num 16:48-50). Spanish 'fue-detenida' and German 'war-stopped' mirror the passive voice. The sense emphasizes cessation brought about by external intervention. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: and-was-restrained, and-was-stopped, and-will-be-restrained | es: fue-detenida, y-fue-detenida, y-se-detuvo | fr: et-fera-être-retint, et-fut-retint, et-retenir | de: und-Krieg-stopped, und-war-restrained, und-war-stopped Num 16:48; Num 16:50; Num 25:8; 2Sam 24:21; 2Sam 24:25

4. shut up, close (7×) God shutting the heavens or the womb, preventing rain or fertility. Genesis 20:18 uses the emphatic infinitive absolute construction to stress that the LORD had 'surely closed up' every womb. French 'avait ferme' and German 'hatte-verschlossen' convey this divine sealing. The agent is nearly always God, marking this as a theologically charged usage. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: I-shut-up, and-I-close-up, and-he-will-shut-up | es: Al-ser-cerrados, Cuando-se-cerraren, cerrar | fr: avait-ferma, closing, et-il-fera-fermer-en-haut | de: [ועצרת], hatte-verschlossen, und-er-wird-einsperren-hinauf Gen 20:18; Deut 11:17; 1Kgs 8:35; 2Chr 6:26

5. retain, keep possession (6×) To retain or keep possession of something, including strength or resources. Daniel twice confesses he 'retained no strength' (Dan 10:8, 16), while in 1 Chr 29:14 David asks who has power to retain enough to offer willingly. French 'retenir' and Spanish 'retengamos' capture the holding-fast nuance. The focus is on internal capacity to maintain what one has. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: I-retained, retained, she-shall-retain | es: para-retener, retendrá, retengamos | fr: retenir | de: zurueckhalten 1Chr 29:14; 2Chr 13:20; 2Chr 22:9; Dan 10:8; Dan 10:16

6. detain, keep from leaving (3×) Detaining a person to prevent departure. In Judges 13:15-16 Manoah urges the angel to stay, and in 2 Kgs 17:4 Hoshea is arrested. Spanish 'detengamoste' and French 'que-nous-detain' reflect the interpersonal plea or coercion. Unlike sense 1 (formal imprisonment), this describes ad hoc prevention of leaving. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-restrained-him, let-us-detain-, you-detain-me | es: detengámoste-, me-detienes, y-lo-arrestó | fr: et-il-retint-lui, que-nous-detain-, tu-detain-moi | de: du-detain-mich, lass-uns-detain-, und-er-restrained-ihn Judg 13:15; Judg 13:16; 2Kgs 17:4

7. be able, have power (3×) An idiomatic extension meaning 'to have power' or 'to be able,' as in Job 29:9 where princes were restrained from speech, and 1 Sam 21:6 where the young men had been kept from women. Spanish 'pudieron' ('they were able') reveals the semantic shift from restraining to possessing capacity. This sense bridges physical containment and abstract ability. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: has-been-kept-from-, restrained, they-were-able | es: detuvieron, pudieron, retenida | fr: a-été-garda-de-, retenir | de: [עצר], hat-gewesen-bewahrte-von-, zurueckhalten 1Sam 21:6; 2Chr 20:37; Job 29:9

עֵצֶר H6114 N-ms (1×)

restraint, control; possibly wealth (textually uncertain in Judges 18:7)

This word appears in Judges 18:7 in a notoriously difficult phrase describing the people of Laish as having 'a possessor of restraint'—perhaps meaning a ruler who exercises control. However, ancient versions (Greek and Latin) understood it as 'wealth' instead, and the text may actually combine two different Hebrew words (treasure and wealth) that later scribes conflated. The range of translations reflects genuine textual uncertainty, with Spanish using 'repression' and English 'restraint' to preserve the governance sense, though the original meaning remains elusive.

(1×) Judges 18:7 uses this term in a phrase so obscure that even ancient translators disagreed. The Hebrew tradition reads it as 'restraint' or 'control,' possibly referring to governmental authority—a ruler who keeps order. The Greek and Latin versions, however, saw 'wealth' here. Modern scholars suspect textual corruption, with some proposing the word is actually a combination of two Hebrew terms for riches that got merged in transmission. The multilingual evidence shows interpreters favoring the 'restraint' reading while acknowledging deep uncertainty. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11191 WITH 4 SENSES en: restraint | es: represión | fr: restraint | de: restraint Judg 18:7

עֹצֶר H6115 Prep-m / N-msc (3×)

restraint, coercion, oppression; barrenness of the womb

This rare noun describes forceful constraint or oppression. In Isaiah 53:8, it appears alongside judgment in the suffering servant's ordeal—taken away through coercion and legal process. The Psalms use it for distressing circumstances, while Proverbs employs it metaphorically for the 'restraint of the womb' (barrenness). The multilingual evidence clusters around oppression and constraint, though Spanish and French glosses also capture the barrenness nuance.

(3×) The term denotes violent constraint or oppressive force. In Isaiah 53:8, the servant is removed 'from oppression and judgment,' suggesting both social coercion and legal condemnation. Psalm 107:39 likely uses it for general distress, while Proverbs 30:16 employs 'restraint of womb' as a poetic way to describe barrenness alongside Sheol and barren land—things never satisfied. Cross-linguistic renderings emphasize oppression (Spanish 'opresión,' French 'contrainte'), though the womb-restraint sense surfaces in Spanish 'matriz.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-barrenness-of, from-oppression, from-oppression-of | es: De-opresión, por-opresión, y-matriz | fr: [מעצר], de-contrainte, et-ועצר | de: [ועצר], [מעצר], von-oppression-von Ps 107:39; Prov 30:16; Isa 53:8

עֲצָרָה H6116 N-fs (11×)

Solemn assembly, sacred gathering — a formal convocation marking the close of a festival period

The noun עֲצָרָה (atsarah), from the root עצר ('to restrain, hold back'), designates a solemn assembly or sacred gathering — typically the closing ceremony of a major festival. The Torah prescribes it for the eighth day of Tabernacles (Lev 23:36; Num 29:35) and the seventh day of Passover/Unleavened Bread (Deut 16:8). Jehoshaphat's celebration (2 Chr 7:9) and Nehemiah's restoration (Neh 8:18) both culminate in such an assembly. Prophetically, however, God can reject the very assemblies he ordained: Isaiah declares 'I cannot endure iniquity and solemn assembly together' (Isa 1:13), and Amos thunders that God despises Israel's festivals (Amos 5:21). Joel calls the people to sanctify a fast and call a solemn assembly in genuine repentance (Joel 1:14; 2:15).

solemn assembly, sacred gathering (11×) A formally convened sacred assembly, typically marking the closing day of a major pilgrimage festival. Prescribed for the eighth day of Sukkot (Lev 23:36; Num 29:35) and the final day of Passover week (Deut 16:8). Observed in temple rededications (2 Chr 7:9) and covenant renewals (Neh 8:18). Jehu cynically calls one to trap Baal worshippers (2 Kgs 10:20). The prophets wield it as a litmus test of sincerity: God rejects assemblies paired with injustice (Isa 1:13; Amos 5:21) but calls for genuine ones in repentance (Joel 1:14; 2:15). Spanish 'asamblea solemne' and French 'assemblée solennelle' both preserve the formal, cultic register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-solemn-assembly, an-assembly, an-assembly-of | es: asamblea, asamblea-de, asamblea-solemne | fr: [בעצרתיכם], [ועצרה], [עצרת] | de: Versammlung, [ועצרה], [עצרת] Lev 23:36; Num 29:35; Deut 16:8; 2Kgs 10:20; 2Chr 7:9

עָקַב H6117 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms / 3mp (5×)

to follow at the heel, supplant, deceive — to grasp the heel or overreach craftily

A verb derived from 'aqev' (heel), spanning meanings from the literal grasping of a heel to figurative cunning and deceit. Its most famous use is Esau's bitter wordplay in Gen 27:36: 'Is he not rightly named Jacob? For he has supplanted me twice.' Hosea 12:3 recalls this same heel-grasping from the womb. In Jeremiah 9:4, the verb warns that every brother 'acts the Jacob' — deceives thoroughly. Job 37:4 uses a related sense of restraining or holding back, showing the root's range from physical gripping to moral treachery.

(5×) To grasp at the heel, supplant, or overreach with cunning — encompassing both the literal birth-narrative act (Hos 12:3, recalling Gen 25:26) and the figurative sense of deceitful undermining (Gen 27:36; Jer 9:4). Spanish 'engaña' (deceives) and 'engañando' (deceiving) foreground the treachery dimension, while French 'Jacob' and German 'Jakob' preserve the etymological pun linking the verb to the patriarch's name. Job 37:4's usage ('he restrains them') shows extension from heel-grasping to holding back. JACOB JAMES NAMES

en: and-he-supplanted-me, he-restrains-them, he-supplanted | es: engaña, engañando, los-detiene | fr: Jacob, [עקוב], et-il-supplanted-moi | de: Jakob, [יעקבם], [עקב] Gen 27:36; Job 37:4; Jer 9:4; Hos 12:3

עֵקֶב H6118 N-ms (15×)

Because, on account of (causal conjunction); end, outcome; reward, recompense for faithful action.

Eqev is a noun meaning 'heel' or 'consequence' that developed into a causal conjunction while retaining nominal senses of 'end' and 'reward.' In its dominant use, eqev functions as 'because' — God blesses Abraham 'because you obeyed my voice' (Gen 22:18; 26:5). The etymological link to 'heel' illuminates the logic: consequences follow actions as the heel follows the foot. In the Psalms, eqev means 'to the end' (Ps 119:33, 112), and in wisdom literature it names the 'reward' that crowns obedient living (Ps 19:11; Prov 22:4). Spanish distinguishes por cuanto from recompensa, and French parce que from récompense.

1. because, on account of (conjunction) (11×) Causal conjunction: 'because, on account of,' introducing the basis for a promise or judgment. God promises Abraham 'because you obeyed my voice' (Gen 22:18; 26:5), Moses warns 'because you did not obey' (Deut 8:20), and Caleb receives his inheritance 'because he wholly followed the LORD' (Num 14:24). Spanish por cuanto and French parce que deploy standard causal conjunctions. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: because, consequence-of, for-sake-of | es: consecuencia-de, por-causa-de, por-cuanto | fr: [עקב], parce-que, talon | de: [עקב], consequence-von, dafürdass Gen 22:18; Gen 26:5; Num 14:24; Deut 7:12; Deut 8:20

2. end, outcome (noun temporal) (2×) Temporal-terminal noun: 'end, outcome,' denoting the final point of an action. The psalmist asks to keep God's statutes 'to the end' (Ps 119:33) and pledges obedience 'to the end, forever' (Ps 119:112). Spanish hasta el fin and the parallel Hebrew la-ad ('forever') confirm this as a temporal sense — the consequence-horizon stretching to its limit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-the-end | es: hasta-el-fin | fr: talon | de: zu-der-enden Ps 119:33; Ps 119:112

3. reward, recompense (noun) (2×) Reward or recompense: the fruit of righteous conduct. Keeping God's ordinances yields 'great reward' (Ps 19:11), and 'the reward of humility and fear of the LORD is riches and honor and life' (Prov 22:4). Spanish recompensa, French récompense, and German Lohn converge on reward vocabulary, while the Arabic cognate aqib confirms the Semitic 'consequence becomes reward' pattern. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: reward, the-reward-of | es: El-resultado-de, recompensa | fr: talon, עקב | de: Lohn, [עקב] Ps 19:11; Prov 22:4

עָקֵב H6119 Prep-b / N-ms (13×)

The heel of the foot; by extension a footprint, track, or hoof; figuratively the rear guard of an army

Beginning with the literal heel — the body part Jacob famously grasped at birth (Gen 25:26) — this word extends naturally into the marks a heel leaves behind: footprints and tracks. The psalmist marvels that God's footsteps (ʿiqqĕvôt) through the sea left no trace (Ps 77:19), while the beloved in Song of Songs is told to follow the tracks of the flock (1:8). Spanish 'talón/calcáñar' preserves the anatomical sense, while 'huellas/pisadas' captures the metaphorical footprint meaning. One military usage in Joshua 8:13 denotes the rear guard of Israel's ambush force.

1. heel (body part) (8×) The literal heel of a human foot. Genesis 25:26 describes Jacob's hand gripping Esau's heel at birth — the very act that gave him his name. In Genesis 3:15, the serpent strikes at the woman's seed's heel, and in Job 18:9 a trap seizes the wicked by the heel. German 'an der Ferse' and Spanish 'calcáñar/talón' both denote the anatomical heel specifically. FEET AND LEGS

en: by-the-heel, heel, heels-of- | es: calcáñar, en-talón-de, mis-talones | fr: [עקבי], dans-trace, heels-de- | de: [בעקב], [עקבי], an-der-Ferse Gen 3:15; Gen 25:26; Gen 49:17; Gen 49:19; Job 18:9

2. footprint, track, footstep (3×) A metaphorical extension from the heel to the impression it leaves: footprints, tracks, or traces. Psalm 77:19 celebrates that God's footsteps through the Red Sea were unknowable, while Psalm 89:51 speaks of enemies mocking the footsteps of God's anointed. Spanish 'huellas' (traces) and 'pisadas' (footsteps) and French 'traces' all confirm this figurative reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Your-footprints, in-tracks-of, the-footsteps-of | es: en-las-huellas-de, pisadas-de, y-huellas-de-ti | fr: et-talon, sur-les-traces, talon | de: [בעקב], der-footsteps-von, und-dein-footprints Ps 77:19; Ps 89:51; Song 1:8

3. hoof (of animal) (1×) Applied to animal anatomy — the hooves of horses thundering in battle. Judges 5:22 uses the plural to describe galloping hoofbeats ('then the horse-hoofs pounded'). Spanish 'cascos' (hooves) precisely matches this zoological extension from human heel to equine hoof. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-hoofs-of- | es: cascos-de | fr: -le-hoofs-de- | de: -der-hoofs-von- Judg 5:22

4. rear guard, rear portion (1×) A figurative military usage in Joshua 8:13 denoting the rear guard or hindmost portion of an army formation — the 'heel' of the marching column. Spanish 'retaguardia' (rear guard) and English 'rear guard' make the spatial-military metaphor explicit: the last part of the body becomes the last part of the army. LAST AND FINAL en: its-rear-guard | es: su-retaguardia | fr: son-rear-garder | de: sein-rear-bewachen Josh 8:13

עֲקֵב H6120 N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

those who take insidious advantage, supplanters, deceivers who trip up another

In Psalm 49:5 the psalmist laments 'the iniquity of my supplanters surrounds me'—those who scheme to take unfair advantage, to trip him up through cunning. The root evokes the imagery of the heel (aqeb), recalling how Jacob grasped Esau's heel at birth and later supplanted him. French uses 'supplanteur' (supplanter), while Spanish shifts to 'my heels' (mis talones), perhaps reading the phrase as enemies who pursue closely, nipping at one's heels. Either way, the word conveys treacherous deception aimed at gaining advantage over another.

(1×) Psalm 49:5 speaks of 'my supplanters'—those who seek to gain advantage through deceit or trickery, as Jacob did to Esau (whose very name connects to 'heel'). The psalmist feels surrounded by their schemes. French captures this with 'supplanteur,' maintaining the sense of one who displaces another through cunning. Spanish's 'mis talones' (my heels) may reflect a different vocalization or a metaphor of enemies pursuing close behind, threatening to trip or overtake. The underlying imagery is of insidious, heel-grasping treachery. DECEIT AND TREACHERY en: my-supplanters | es: mis-talones | fr: supplanteur | de: mein-supplanters Ps 49:5

עָקֹב H6121a Adj-ms (2×)

Deceitful, insidious, or crooked; also used of footprint-tracked ground

This adjective carries two distinct meanings. In Jeremiah 17:9, it describes the human heart as 'deceitful above all things'—morally crooked and untrustworthy. In Hosea 6:8, it may mean 'tracked with footprints' (denominative from 'heel'), describing Gilead as a city marked or stained with blood. The moral sense predominates, capturing the idea of something twisted or not straightforward, whether in character or literally in tracked paths.

(2×) An adjective meaning either morally deceitful or physically marked by tracks. The Spanish 'engañoso' (deceitful) and 'marcada' (marked/tracked) capture both senses. Jeremiah's theological use—the desperately wicked heart—became proverbial. Hosea's geographical use likely plays on the word's literal connection to 'heel,' suggesting a place tracked or trampled by evildoers. Both share the underlying concept of something not clean or straight. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: Deceitful, tracked | es: Engañoso, marcada | fr: [עקב], rusé | de: [עקב], [עקבה] Jer 17:9; Hos 6:8

עָקֹב H6121b Art / Adj-ms (1×)

steep, hilly, rugged terrain (as opposed to level ground)

Isaiah 40:4 envisions a great leveling of the landscape in preparation for God's coming: 'Let the steep ground become a plain.' This adjective describes rugged, hilly terrain—difficult to traverse—contrasted with flat plains. The root is cognate with Arabic and Ethiopic words for 'difficult mountain path' and 'hill.' Spanish renders it 'lo torcido' (the crooked), perhaps seeing moral metaphor alongside the geographical sense. The verse is about removing obstacles, whether literal mountains or metaphorical barriers, so God's glory can be revealed.

(1×) In Isaiah 40:4, this word describes terrain that is steep or hilly, the kind of ground that makes travel arduous. The prophet declares that such rugged places will be flattened into plains when God comes. Cognate languages support this: Arabic has 'difficult mountain path,' Ethiopic 'hill.' Spanish translates 'lo torcido' (the crooked), which may blend the physical sense of winding, uneven paths with a moral sense of what is not straight. Either way, the image is of obstacles removed and rough places made smooth. CROOKED PERVERTED cunning, craftiness, insidious trickery used to deceive

en: the-crooked | es: lo-torcido | fr: [העקב] | de: [העקב] Isa 40:4

עֲקֻבָּה H6122 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

In 2 Kings 10:19, Jehu acts 'with cunning'—employing deception to lure the worshipers of Baal into a trap so he can slaughter them. The word conveys insidiousness, a sly, underhanded approach to achieving one's goal. Spanish uses 'con astucia' (with cunning/cleverness), French 'avec rusé' (with craftiness). While Jehu's goal (destroying Baal worship) is presented as divinely sanctioned, the method involves deliberate deceit—pretending to honor Baal in order to gather all his worshipers in one place for execution. The term captures the morally ambiguous use of trickery for a 'righteous' end.

(1×) In 2 Kings 10:19, Jehu uses this 'cunning' or 'craftiness' to deceive Baal worshipers into assembling for what they think will be a great sacrifice, only to be annihilated. The Hebrew root suggests insidious, underhanded scheming. Spanish 'astucia' and French 'rusé' both highlight cleverness used for deceptive ends. The narrative is morally complex: Jehu's trickery serves the elimination of idolatry (approved by the text), yet the means involve deliberate falsehood—a reminder that biblical characters sometimes accomplish divine purposes through ethically ambiguous methods. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14351 WITH 4 SENSES

en: with-cunning | es: con-astucia | fr: avec-rusé | de: mit-cunning 2Kgs 10:19

עָקַד H6123 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to bind, tie fast (especially of binding limbs together)

This verb appears only in Genesis 22:9, the harrowing scene where Abraham 'bound Isaac' on the altar, preparing to sacrifice him. Cognate languages (Hebrew, Aramaic, Arabic, Syriac, Ethiopic) all share meanings related to tying, fastening, or bending limbs together. The Aramaic Targum uses the same root for binding and also for kneeling, perhaps reflecting the posture of a bound victim. The scene is one of the most emotionally intense in Scripture: a father binding his beloved son in obedience to God's command, moments before the angel intervenes.

(1×) Genesis 22:9 records the terrible moment when Abraham 'bound' Isaac and laid him on the altar. The verb means to tie or fasten, especially limbs together—perhaps with arms behind the back or legs bent and secured. Related Semitic languages confirm this sense of tying fast. Targums also associate the root with kneeling, perhaps picturing a victim made to kneel before being bound. The single biblical occurrence is unforgettable: the father's obedience pushed to the brink, the son's vulnerability, and the binding that never culminates in sacrifice because God provides a substitute. BINDING BY VOW

en: and-bound | es: y-ató | fr: et-lia | de: und-band Gen 22:9

עָקֹד H6124 Adj-ms (7×)

Striped, streaked; describing the markings on Jacob's sheep and goats in the breeding narrative

This adjective describes animals with visible stripes or streaks in their coloring, appearing exclusively in the Jacob-Laban livestock narrative of Genesis 30-31. It refers to the distinctively marked sheep and goats that became Jacob's wages through his divinely guided breeding strategy. Spanish 'rayado/rayadas' and German 'gestreift' precisely capture the visual sense of streaked or striped patterning. The word is always used alongside related terms for speckled and spotted animals, forming a vocabulary cluster for livestock markings.

striped (7×) Striped or streaked in color, used exclusively of sheep and goats in the Jacob-Laban breeding account (Gen 30:35-40; 31:8, 10, 12). The adjective describes animals with visible bands or lines in their fleece or hide, distinguishing them from the speckled (נָקֹד) and spotted (טָלוּא) animals also mentioned. Jacob's divinely guided strategy produced these striped animals as his rightful wages. Spanish 'rayado' and German 'gestreift' both convey the linear pattern precisely, while French uses the English loanword 'striped.' SPOTTED SPECKLED

en: striped, the-striped | es: los-rayados, rayadas, rayado | fr: le-striped, striped | de: Gestreiftes, die-gestreiften, gestreifte Gen 30:35; Gen 30:39; Gen 30:40; Gen 31:8

עֲקָה H6125 N-fsc (1×)

pressure, oppression, or possibly cry for help (textually debated in Psalm 55:3)

Psalm 55:3 uses this rare Aramaic-derived word, translated 'because of the pressure of the wicked' or 'oppression.' The psalmist is in distress, and this term captures the crushing weight of hostile forces. However, some scholars suggest the text should read 'cry' (tsa'aqat) instead, which would parallel the 'voice' (qol) earlier in the verse and fit the context of crying out to God. Spanish uses 'opresión,' French 'angoisse' (anguish), both conveying intense distress. Whether 'pressure' or 'cry,' the sense is of overwhelming trouble caused by enemies.

(1×) In Psalm 55:3, this Aramaic loanword describes the 'pressure' or 'oppression' the psalmist feels from wicked adversaries. The term suggests a crushing weight, a squeezing force that causes anguish. Some scholars, noting the parallel structure with 'voice' earlier in the verse, propose emending to 'cry' (tsa'aqat), which would make better poetic sense: 'voice... cry of the wicked.' Still, the transmitted Hebrew points to 'pressure,' and the multilingual glosses ('opresión,' 'angoisse') capture the feeling of being hemmed in by hostile forces, barely able to breathe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: oppression-of | es: opresión-de | fr: angoisse | de: oppression-von Ps 55:3

עַקּוּב H6126 N-proper-ms (8×)

Akkub — a proper name borne by several post-exilic figures: a Davidic descendant, Levitical gatekeepers, and heads of returning families.

Akkub is a Hebrew personal name appearing across a range of post-exilic contexts. It identifies a descendant of David in the royal genealogy (1 Chr 3:24), several Levitical gatekeepers stationed at the Temple (1 Chr 9:17; Neh 11:19; 12:25), heads of families who returned from Babylon (Ezra 2:42 = Neh 7:45), and a Levite who helped Ezra explain the Torah to the people (Neh 8:7). The name likely derives from a root meaning 'to watch' or 'to guard,' fitting the gatekeeper role many of its bearers held. English consistently renders it 'Akkub,' while Spanish uses 'Acub' and French 'Akkub.'

Akkub (proper noun) (8×) A proper name meaning roughly 'watchful' or 'guarded,' applied to at least six distinct individuals in post-exilic literature. These include a son of Elioenai in the Davidic line (1 Chr 3:24), several Levitical gatekeepers who guarded the temple storerooms (1 Chr 9:17; Neh 11:19; 12:25), heads of returning exile families listed alongside other gatekeepers (Ezra 2:42 = Neh 7:45), and a Levite who assisted Ezra in public Torah reading (Neh 8:7). English and French uniformly render the name 'Akkub,' Spanish has 'Acub,' while German transcriptions preserve the Hebrew consonantal spelling. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Akkub, Aqqub, and-Aqqub | es: Acub, Acub., y-Acub | fr: Akkub, et-Akkub | de: [ועקוב], [עקוב] 1Chr 3:24; 1Chr 9:17; Ezra 2:42; Ezra 2:45; Neh 7:45

עָקַל H6127 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

bent out of shape, twisted, perverted (passive participle describing distortion)

Habakkuk 1:4 laments that 'justice comes out perverted'—literally, bent out of shape, twisted like metal or wood forced into a crooked form. This passive participle paints a picture of something originally straight that has been deformed. The verb root means to bend or twist, found in Hebrew, Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic with similar senses. The prophet is decrying a legal system so corrupt that what should be straight (justice) emerges crooked. Spanish uses 'pervertido,' French 'se tordre' (to twist), both evoking the image of warping or distortion.

(1×) Habakkuk 1:4 uses this passive participle to describe justice that is 'perverted'—literally bent or twisted out of its proper shape. The root appears across Semitic languages meaning to bend, twist, or make crooked. The prophet's complaint is that the wicked surround the righteous, so justice cannot emerge straight—it comes out warped, like a piece of metal hammered into a wrong form. Spanish 'pervertido' and French 'se tordre' both capture the sense of something good (justice) being deformed into something crooked by corrupt handling. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: perverted | es: pervertido | fr: se-tordre | de: [מעקל] Hab 1:4

עֲקַלְקָל H6128 Adj-fp (2×)

Winding, crooked, or circuitous; describing twisted paths or ways

This intensive adjective describes extreme crookedness. In Judges 5:6, it characterizes the roundabout paths travelers took to avoid danger during Israel's oppression. In Psalm 125:5, it refers metaphorically to 'their crooked ways'—the devious paths of those who turn aside from righteousness. The reduplicative form intensifies the basic idea of 'crooked,' suggesting something extremely twisted or convoluted, whether literal mountain paths or moral trajectories.

(2×) An intensive adjective meaning extremely winding or crooked. The multilingual glosses consistently reflect tortuous paths: 'caminos torcidos,' 'tortueux,' 'crooked-ways.' Judges describes physical detours taken for safety during lawless times. Psalms uses the term metaphorically for moral perversity. The intensive morphology (reduplicative root) emphasizes thoroughgoing crookedness—not slightly bent but extremely twisted, matching both the dangerous mountain paths and the devious character of the wicked. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: -winding, to-their-crooked-ways | es: caminos-torcidos-de-ellos, torcidos | fr: -winding, tortueux | de: -winding, zu-ihr-crooked-Wege Judg 5:6; Ps 125:5

עֲקַלָּתוֹן H6129 Adj-ms (1×)

twisting, crooked (adjective); possibly the constellation Draco (the dragon/serpent)

Isaiah 27:1 speaks of 'Leviathan the twisting serpent,' using this adjective to describe the mythic sea monster's sinuous, coiling form. Some scholars suggest it may also refer to the constellation Draco, the celestial dragon that twists around the northern sky. The word conveys crookedness, the winding, serpentine path of a creature that does not move in a straight line. Spanish translates 'tortuosa' (tortuous, winding), confirming the sense of something that curves and bends. In apocalyptic imagery, Leviathan represents chaos and evil that God will ultimately destroy.

(1×) In Isaiah 27:1, this adjective describes Leviathan as 'twisting' or 'crooked,' evoking the image of a serpent coiling and winding through the sea. The Hebrew tradition preserves the sense of something that moves in curves rather than straight lines—sinuous, evasive. Some scholars see a reference to the constellation Draco, the dragon whose tail twists around the pole star. Spanish 'tortuosa' reinforces the winding, tortuous nature. In prophetic eschatology, this crooked serpent symbolizes cosmic evil that God will slay on the final day, establishing His reign over chaos. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: the-dragon | es: tortuosa | fr: [עקלתון] | de: [עקלתון] Isa 27:1

עֲקָן H6130 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Akan, a personal name in Edom (Genesis 36:27); variant Jaakan in Chronicles

Akan is a name appearing in the genealogy of Edom in Genesis 36:27, where he is listed among the sons of Ezer. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 1:42 gives the name as Jaakan, and related references speak of 'the sons of Jaakan' and 'the wells of the sons of Jaakan,' suggesting his descendants became a known clan or settlement. Greek versions transliterate it variously (Oukam, Iakan). The textual variation between Akan and Jaakan is minor, likely reflecting different pronunciations or scribal traditions. The name is Edomite, belonging to the genealogies tracing Esau's descendants.

(1×) Akan is an Edomite name in Genesis 36:27, listed among the descendants of Seir the Horite. In the parallel genealogy at 1 Chronicles 1:42, he is called Jaakan. Elsewhere Scripture mentions 'Bene-Jaakan' (the sons of Jaakan) as a place name during Israel's wilderness wanderings. The Greek versions offer various transliterations (Oukam, Iakan, Onan), showing some fluidity in pronunciation. The variation Akan/Jaakan is typical of genealogical transmission across centuries. This Edomite figure becomes associated with a well or settlement, one of many clan ancestors who gave their names to locations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Akan | es: y-Aqan | fr: et-Akan | de: und-Akan Gen 36:27

עָקַר H6131a Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (2×)

To uproot, pluck up, or root out; the opposite of planting

This verb means to pull something up by the roots, destroying it completely. Ecclesiastes 3:2 pairs it with 'planting' in the famous catalog of opposites: 'a time to plant and a time to uproot.' Zephaniah 2:4 uses it in wordplay with Ekron's name, prophesying that city will be 'uprooted.' The term emphasizes thorough removal—not merely cutting down but extracting roots and all, ensuring nothing remains to grow again.

(2×) A Qal verb meaning to uproot or extract by the roots. The infinitive in Ecclesiastes contrasts with 'plant,' while the Niphal in Zephaniah plays on the name 'Ekron' (root-uproot wordplay). Multilingual evidence shows consistent agricultural terminology: 'arrancar' (Spanish), 'arracher' (French)—all emphasizing violent removal from the ground. The image conveys finality and thoroughness, whether in agricultural cycles or prophetic judgment against cities. UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: to-uproot, will-be-uprooted | es: para-arrancar, será-arrancada | fr: elle-sera-arrachée, à-arracher | de: [לעקור], [תעקר] Eccl 3:2; Zeph 2:4

עָקַר H6131b V-Piel-Imperf-2ms (5×)

to hamstring (an animal), cut the leg tendons of horses or oxen, rendering them useless

A Piel denominative verb derived from a root meaning 'sinew' or 'tendon,' used exclusively for the act of hamstringing animals — slashing the tendons of horses or oxen to cripple them. In wartime contexts (Josh 11:6, 9; 2 Sam 8:4), God commands or David performs this on captured chariot horses, ensuring Israel does not rely on military cavalry. In Gen 49:6, Jacob's rebuke of Simeon and Levi recalls their wanton destruction: 'they hamstrung an ox.' Spanish 'desjarretar' and English 'hamstring' consistently reflect this specific act of disabling by severing leg sinews.

(5×) To hamstring, i.e., sever the leg tendons of an animal (especially horses or oxen) so as to permanently cripple it. Used in military contexts where captured chariot horses are rendered useless at divine command (Josh 11:6, 9; 2 Sam 8:4 = 1 Chr 18:4), and once of wanton violence against livestock (Gen 49:6). Spanish 'desjarretarás' and French calques confirm the specificity of this act across translations. UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: and-hamstrung, and-he-hamstrung, hamstrung- | es: desjarretaron, desjarretarás, desjarretó | fr: [ויעקר], et-il-hamstrung, hamstrung- | de: [ויעקר], du-soll-hamstring, er-hamstrung Gen 49:6; Josh 11:6; Josh 11:9; 2Sam 8:4; 1Chr 18:4

עֶקַר H6132 V-Hitpael-Perf-3fp (2×)

To be uprooted or plucked up (Aramaic Hithpeel form in Daniel 7:8)

This Aramaic denominative verb appears in Daniel's apocalyptic vision of the fourth beast, describing how three of the first horns were 'uprooted' to make room for the little horn. The ketiv-qere variation reflects uncertainty about whether the form is masculine or feminine plural. The Hithpeel conjugation emphasizes the passive or reflexive nature—these horns were subjected to uprooting. The term reinforces the violent, forced removal implied in the related Hebrew verb.

(2×) An Aramaic Hithpeel passive verb meaning 'were uprooted.' Both occurrences are textual variants (ketiv/qere) of the same word in the same verse, differing only in gender agreement. The consistent translation across languages ('fueron arrancados,' 'arracher') shows the sense is clear despite the textual variants. Daniel's context involves supernatural political upheaval—the forcible removal of rival powers to make way for an arrogant new authority. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: (qere:were-uprooted), [ketiv:were-uprooted] | es: [fueron-arrancados], fueron-arrancados | fr: arracher | de: [אתעקרה], [אתעקרו] Dan 7:8

עֹקֶר H6133 Prep-l / N-msc (1×)

offshoot, branch, member of a family or clan stemming from a root

Leviticus 25:47 uses this term in a legal context: if an Israelite becomes impoverished and sells himself to a sojourner, he may be redeemed by 'an offshoot of the sojourner's family'—literally, a branch or member stemming from the family tree. The word evokes botanical imagery, as an offshoot grows from the root of a plant. It emphasizes kinship connection, even extended or indirect. Spanish translates 'la raíz' (the root), French 'offshoot,' both pointing to the idea of family lineage extending outward. This provision allows even a distant relative of the foreign master to act as kinsman-redeemer.

(1×) Leviticus 25:47 refers to 'an offshoot of a sojourner's family'—a member or branch of the extended clan. The term derives from the root, suggesting someone who has grown out from the family tree, perhaps a distant relative or a member of a sub-branch. The legal context is the redemption of an enslaved Israelite: even a non-direct descendant, as long as he is connected to the family, can act as redeemer. Multilingual glosses ('raíz' in Spanish, 'offshoot' in French) preserve the organic, botanical metaphor of kinship branching outward from a common root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-an-offshoot-of | es: a-la-raíz-de | fr: à-un-offshoot-de | de: zu-ein-offshoot-von Lev 25:47

עֵקֶר H6134 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Eqer, a personal name in the tribe of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:27)

Eqer is a name mentioned in the genealogy of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:27. He is listed among the sons of Jerahmeel, part of the extended Judahite clans. The name appears only this once in Scripture, and ancient Greek versions transliterate it variously (Akor, Ikar). Beyond this single reference, nothing more is known about Eqer—he is one of many names preserving the memory of early Israelite families. The genealogies in Chronicles serve to anchor post-exilic Israel in its tribal heritage, remembering even obscure figures like Eqer.

(1×) Eqer appears in 1 Chronicles 2:27 within the genealogy of Jerahmeel, a branch of the tribe of Judah. His name is preserved but no deeds or details accompany it—he is simply one link in the chain of Judahite ancestry. Greek manuscripts render the name as Akor or Ikar, showing slight variations in pronunciation. The Chronicler's genealogies aim to reconstruct Israel's lineage after the Babylonian exile, and names like Eqer, though otherwise unknown, testify to the thoroughness with which the community remembered its roots. He is an ancestor, and that alone warrants his place in sacred history. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Eqer | es: y-Equer | fr: [ועקר] | de: [ועקר] 1Chr 2:27

עָקָר H6135 Adj-fs (12×)

Barren, infertile — unable to bear children; of women and once of males and livestock; reversed by God

The adjective עָקָר (aqar) describes the inability to produce offspring. It marks the most theologically significant women in Genesis: Sarah (Gen 11:30), Rebekah (Gen 25:21), and Rachel (Gen 29:31). The matriarchal barrenness motif underscores that covenant children come as divine gift, not natural expectation. Judges 13:2-3 applies it to Manoah's wife before Samson's birth, and Psalm 113:9 celebrates God settling 'the barren woman as a joyful mother.' Deuteronomy 7:14 extends the promise to both male and female, even livestock. Spanish 'esteril' and Arabic 'عار' carry the same weight.

barren (unable to bear children) (12×) Unable to bear children; infertile. Applied to the matriarchs Sarah (Gen 11:30), Rebekah (Gen 25:21), Rachel (Gen 29:31), and Manoah's wife (Judg 13:2-3), where barrenness sets up divine intervention. Extended to males and livestock (Deut 7:14; Exod 23:26). Used figuratively of personified Zion (Isa 54:1). BARREN INFERTILE

en: and-barren, barren, barren-male | es: a-la-estéril, a-la-estéril-de, estéril | fr: [עקרה], barren, barren-mâle | de: [עקרה], barren, der-barren-woman-von Gen 11:30; Gen 25:21; Gen 29:31; Exod 23:26; Deut 7:14

עִקַּר H6136 N-msc (3×)

root, stock, stump (of a tree)

This Aramaic noun appears exclusively in Daniel's vision of the great tree, where Nebuchadnezzar is commanded to leave the 'stump of its roots' in the ground after the tree is cut down. The imagery conveys both judgment (the cutting) and hope (the stump remains viable for future regrowth). The phrase 'stump of its roots' combines two root-related terms for emphasis, indicating that though the kingdom is taken away, the foundation remains for eventual restoration.

(3×) Used only in Daniel 4, this word refers to the base or stump that remains after a tree is felled. The phrase 'stump of its roots' (עִקַּר שָׁרְשׁוֹהִי) appears three times in the narrative of Nebuchadnezzar's humbling (4:15, 23, 26 in English; 4:12, 20, 23 in Aramaic). The imagery promises preservation amid judgment—the tree (Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom) will be cut down, but its root-system remains intact, allowing for eventual restoration when the king acknowledges heaven's sovereignty. Translations consistently render this as 'stump' (English, Spanish 'tocón'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: stump-of | es: el-tocón-de | fr: [עקר] | de: [עקר] Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:26

עַקְרָב H6137 Conj-w / N-ms (6×)

Scorpion — the venomous arachnid, used literally of desert fauna and figuratively of harsh punitive instruments.

Refers to the scorpion, a creature well known in the Judean and Sinai deserts for its painful, venomous sting. Moses recalls how God led Israel through a wilderness of serpents and scorpions (Deut 8:15), while Ezekiel is told not to fear rebellious Israel even though he dwells among scorpions (Ezek 2:6). The most vivid usage is figurative: Rehoboam threatens to discipline the people with 'scorpions' rather than whips (1 Kgs 12:11, 14 = 2 Chr 10:11, 14), almost certainly denoting barbed scourges whose lashes sting like a scorpion's tail. Spanish 'escorpiones,' French 'scorpions,' and German 'Skorpione' all preserve the same image across languages.

scorpion (6×) The scorpion as a venomous desert creature (Deut 8:15) and, by extension, a figure for hostile, stinging adversaries (Ezek 2:6). The literal and metaphorical senses shade into each other: in Rehoboam's threat to chastise with 'scorpions' (1 Kgs 12:11, 14 = 2 Chr 10:11, 14), the word likely denotes multi-tailed whips fitted with barbed metal tips — instruments whose bite recalled the animal's sting. All major translations render with cognate scorpion-words (Spanish 'escorpiones,' French 'scorpions'), reflecting the creature's pan-Mediterranean familiarity. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-scorpion, scorpions, with-the-scorpions | es: con-escorpiones, con-los-escorpiones, escorpiones | fr: [בעקרבים], avec-le-scorpions, et-scorpion | de: [בעקרבים], [עקרבים], mit-der-scorpions Deut 8:15; 1Kgs 12:11; 1Kgs 12:14; 2Chr 10:11; 2Chr 10:14

עֶקְרוֹן H6138 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (22×)

Ekron – northernmost of the five principal Philistine cities, seat of the god Baal-zebub

One of the five chief cities of the Philistine pentapolis, situated in the northern Shephelah near the border of Judah and Dan. Ekron features in the Ark narrative when the captured Ark was sent there, prompting a plague that convinced the Philistines to return it (1 Sam 5:10). It is also known as the seat of Baal-zebub, the deity King Ahaziah consulted before Elijah's rebuke (2 Kgs 1:2-16). The prophets pronounce judgment on Ekron alongside the other Philistine cities (Amos 1:8; Zeph 2:4; Zech 9:5, 7). Modern identification places it at Tel Miqne, confirmed by a royal dedication inscription found there.

Ekron (Philistine city) (22×) The place name Ekron (Hebrew eqron), identifying the northernmost city of the Philistine pentapolis in the Shephelah. Appears in territorial allotments (Josh 13:3; 15:11, 45-46; 19:43), the Ark narrative (1 Sam 5:10; 6:16-17), the Baal-zebub episode (2 Kgs 1:2-16), and prophetic oracles of judgment (Amos 1:8; Zeph 2:4; Zech 9:5, 7). Assyrian records call it Amqarruna. Translations preserve the name with slight variation – Spanish Ecron, French and German Ekron. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ekron, Eqron, and-Eqron | es: Desde-Ecrón, Ecrón, Ekron | fr: Ekron, Eqron, de-Ékron | de: Ekron, Eqron, [ועקרון] Josh 13:3; Josh 15:11; Josh 15:45; Josh 15:46; Josh 19:43

עֶקְרוֹנִי H6139 Conj-w (2×)

The Ekronite(s): a gentilicic adjective denoting inhabitants of the Philistine city Ekron

This gentilicic designates people from Ekron, one of the five principal Philistine cities. Joshua 13:3 includes 'the Ekronite' among the rulers of Philistia's pentapolis. In 1 Samuel 5:10, the plural 'the Ekronites' describes the citizens who panicked when the ark of God was brought to their city, fearing the plague that had struck Ashdod and Gath. The term functions as both adjective and substantive noun.

(2×) A gentilicic adjective or noun meaning 'belonging to Ekron' or 'inhabitant(s) of Ekron.' The multilingual glosses consistently render this as ethnic-geographic identifier: 'el ecroneo,' 'le Ekronite.' Joshua lists it as part of territorial enumeration, while Samuel's narrative shows the Ekronites as a collective group capable of communal fear and action. The term marks Ekron's distinct identity within the Philistine coalition. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Ekronite, the-Eqronites | es: los-de-Ecrón, y-el-ecroneo | fr: et-le-Ekronite, le-Eqronites | de: der-Eqronites, und-der-Ekronite Josh 13:3; 1Sam 5:10 to twist, make crooked, pervert; to distort what is straight or right

עָקַשׁ H6140 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

Rooted in the idea of physical twisting, this verb extends powerfully into moral and judicial territory. In its Piel stem it describes the deliberate distortion of paths, justice, or conduct — the leaders of Micah 3:9 'make crooked all that is straight,' and in Isa 59:8 the wicked 'have twisted their paths.' The Niphal participle in Prov 28:18 describes one who is 'crooked in ways,' while the Hiphil in Job 9:20 has God declaring a person perverse. Spanish 'torcer/torcieron' and German equivalents preserve the core image of bending what should be straight.

(5×) To twist, make crooked, or pervert — used of moral and behavioral distortion. The Piel describes deliberate warping of paths or justice (Isa 59:8 'their paths they have twisted'; Mic 3:9 'all that is straight they make crooked'). The Niphal portrays a settled state of crookedness in conduct (Prov 28:18 'crooked in ways'; Prov 10:9). The Hiphil in Job 9:20 uniquely has God as subject: 'he would declare me perverse.' Spanish 'tuercen' and 'torcieron' preserve the physical twisting metaphor applied to moral reality. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: and-He-declares-me-perverse, but-he-who-makes-crooked, but-one-crooked-of | es: me-declarará-perverso., torcieron, tuercen | fr: [עקשן], et-ויעקשני-moi, et-ומעקש | de: [ויעקשני], [ומעקש], [ונעקש] Job 9:20; Prov 10:9; Prov 28:18; Isa 59:8; Mic 3:9

עִקֵּשׁ H6141 Adj-ms (11×)

Crooked, perverse, twisted — morally deviant or deceitful in speech, conduct, or character

The adjective עִקֵּשׁ (iqqesh) describes moral crookedness, perversity, or twistedness — the opposite of the straight, upright path. Proverbs employs it most frequently, contrasting the 'crooked' person with the upright (יָשָׁר): 'the perverse in heart are an abomination to the LORD' (Prov 11:20), and 'better is a poor man who walks in integrity than one who is crooked in his ways' (Prov 19:1; 28:6). Deuteronomy 32:5 calls rebellious Israel a 'crooked and twisted generation.' In 2 Samuel 22:27 (= Ps 18:27), God matches the crooked with cunning — 'with the crooked you show yourself shrewd.' Proverbs 8:8 insists that wisdom's words contain nothing crooked. Spanish 'perverso/torcido' and English 'perverse/crooked' both capture the moral distortion.

crooked, perverse (adjective) (11×) Morally twisted, perverse, or devious — describing persons whose hearts, speech, or conduct deviate from uprightness. Proverbs pairs it antithetically with תָּם and יָשָׁר (upright, blameless): the crooked-hearted are an abomination (Prov 11:20), and poverty with integrity surpasses wealth with crookedness (Prov 19:1; 28:6). Applied to Israel's rebellious generation in Moses' song (Deut 32:5), and to those whom God meets with shrewdness (2 Sam 22:27; Ps 18:27). Wisdom explicitly excludes anything crooked from her lips (Prov 8:8). Psalm 101:4 banishes the crooked heart from the royal court. Spanish 'perverso' and German 'verkehrt' both carry the sense of moral distortion from the straight path. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-crooked, are-the-crooked-of, crooked | es: Torcido-de, perversa, perverso | fr: crooked, de-pervers, et-pervers | de: [ועקש], [מעקש], [עקש] Deut 32:5; 2Sam 22:27; Ps 18:26; Ps 101:4; Prov 2:15

עִקֵּשׁ H6142 N-proper-ms (3×)

Ikkesh, a warrior from Tekoa, father of Ira

Ikkesh was a man from Tekoa, father of Ira, one of David's mighty warriors. He appears in the roster of David's thirty elite fighters and later in the administrative organization under David and Solomon. The name appears consistently across Samuel and Chronicles, identifying this Tekoite family's distinguished military service. Chronicles adds that Ira son of Ikkesh served as officer over his division during the sixth month.

(3×) Personal name of a man from Tekoa whose son Ira was numbered among David's mighty men. First mentioned in 2 Samuel 23:26 as 'Ira son of Ikkesh the Tekoite,' he reappears in parallel Chronicles accounts (1 Chronicles 11:28 and 27:9). The name itself may derive from a root meaning 'twisted' or 'perverse,' though as a personal name it simply serves as an identifier. Translations preserve the Hebrew name with slight variations: English 'Ikkesh,' Spanish 'Iques/Iqesh,' French 'Ikkesh.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ikesh, Ikkesh, Iqqesh | es: Iqesh, Iques | fr: Ikkesh, [עִקֵּשׁ] | de: Ikkesh, [עִקֵּשׁ] 2Sam 23:26; 1Chr 11:28; 1Chr 27:9

עִקְּשׁוּת H6143 N-fsc (2×)

Crookedness or perversity, especially of speech and mouth; moral deviousness in words

This noun denotes the quality of being crooked or perverse, particularly in speech. Both occurrences in Proverbs (4:24, 6:12) condemn 'crookedness of mouth'—speech that is devious, dishonest, or morally twisted. The term emphasizes not just lying but a fundamental perversity in how one uses language. It represents the verbal manifestation of a crooked heart, where words serve to deceive and manipulate rather than communicate truth.

(2×) An abstract noun meaning crookedness or perversity, specifically of verbal expression. The construct form 'crookedness of mouth' appears in both verses, making this a technical term in Wisdom literature for deceitful speech. Spanish 'perversidad de boca' and the consistent cross-linguistic recognition of mouth/speech contexts show this is fundamentally about linguistic deviousness. Proverbs treats crooked speech as both symptom and tool of moral corruption. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: crookedness-of, with-crookedness-of | es: con-perversidad-de, perversidad-de | fr: עִקְּשׁוּת | de: [עִקְּשׁוּת] Prov 4:24; Prov 6:12

עָר H6144 N-proper-fs (6×)

Ar — a Moabite city or district south of the Arnon, prominent in Israel's wilderness itinerary.

A place name designating either the capital city or a broader district of Moab situated south of the Arnon gorge. The name may derive from the common Semitic root for 'city' (cognate with Hebrew 'ir), and South Arabian inscriptions attest 'ar as a fortified height. It figures in the poetic fragment celebrating Israel's approach to the Arnon (Num 21:15) and is called 'Ar of Moab' in the oracle against Moab (Num 21:28; Isa 15:1). God instructs Israel not to harass Moab because Ar has been given to Lot's descendants (Deut 2:9, 18, 29). Translations consistently transliterate the name — English, Spanish, and German 'Ar,' French 'Ar' — treating it as an irreducible toponym.

Ar (6×) A Moabite place name, either the chief city or the surrounding district south of the Arnon River. In the Pentateuchal travel narratives, YHWH forbids Israel from dispossessing Moab because He assigned Ar to Lot's descendants (Deut 2:9, 18, 29). The poetic snippet in Num 21:15, 28 locates it near the Arnon, while Isaiah 15:1 pronounces its ruin in the oracle against Moab. All modern-language glosses transliterate the toponym unchanged, confirming its status as a proper noun rather than a descriptive term. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ar, Ar-of, in-Ar | es: Ar, Ar-de, en-Ar | fr: Ar, [עָר], dans-Ar | de: Ar, [עָר], in-Ar Num 21:15; Num 21:28; Deut 2:9; Deut 2:18; Deut 2:29

עָר H6145 N-mpc / 2ms (2×)

Adversary or enemy; a disputed term appearing only twice with significant textual uncertainty

This rare noun appears in two difficult texts. In 1 Samuel 28:16, where Saul consults the medium, many scholars emend to read 'your adversary' (meaning David), though variants suggest 'your companion.' In Psalm 139:20, the text is so uncertain that some translators leave it untranslated. The basic sense seems to be 'adversary' or 'enemy,' but manuscript evidence and ancient versions show significant confusion, suggesting early scribal uncertainty about this rare word.

(2×) A masculine noun apparently meaning adversary or enemy, though textually very uncertain. The Septuagint, Targums, and other ancient versions diverge significantly, indicating early interpretive difficulty. Modern translations consistently opt for 'adversary/enemy' based on context—Saul has become God's foe, and in Psalms the wicked oppose the psalmist. The multilingual glosses ('enemigo,' 'ennemi,' 'Widersacher') show translators settled on this meaning despite manuscript ambiguity. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: your-adversaries, your-adversary | es: tu-enemigo, tus-ciudades | fr: ennemi, ton-adversary | de: dein-Widersacher, dein-adversary 1Sam 28:16; Ps 139:20

עָר H6146 Prep-l / N-mpc / 2ms (2×)

Enemies, adversaries (Aramaic plural form with ketiv-qere variation in Daniel 4:19)

This Aramaic noun means 'enemies' or 'adversaries' and appears only in Daniel 4:19, where Daniel wishes the dream's dire predictions would apply to Nebuchadnezzar's enemies rather than to the king himself. The ketiv-qere variation involves a minor spelling difference. The Jewish Aramaic cognate refers to objections or adversarial positions, while the biblical usage clearly means personal foes or hostile parties.

(2×) An Aramaic masculine plural noun meaning enemies or adversaries. Both occurrences are textual variants (ketiv/qere) of the same word in the same verse. The consistent rendering as 'enemies/adversaries' across languages ('adversarios,' 'ennemi') shows clear semantic consensus. Daniel's courteous diplomatic language softens the nightmare prophecy by expressing hope it might befall the king's enemies instead—a wish showing both respect and compassion. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: (qere:to-your-enemies), [ketiv:to-your-enemies] | es: (para-tus-adversarios), [para-tus-adversarios] | fr: ennemi | de: [לְעָרִיךְ], [לְעָרָךְ] Dan 4:19

עֵר H6147 N-proper-ms (10×)

Er, a proper name: chiefly the firstborn son of Judah, slain by God for his wickedness.

A personal name meaning 'watchful' or 'awake,' connected to the root for arousing or being alert. Er is best known as Judah's firstborn son, whose wickedness in God's sight led to his death before he could produce an heir (Gen 38:7), setting the stage for the dramatic Tamar narrative. The name reappears in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles, where a later Er is listed as a descendant of Judah through Shelah (1 Chr 4:21). All major translations simply transliterate the name as 'Er.'

Er (proper noun) (10×) The proper name Er (עֵר), etymologically related to the verb 'to be awake, watchful.' It principally designates Judah's firstborn who was put to death by God for unspecified wickedness (Gen 38:3, 6–7), a death that drives the entire Judah-Tamar episode. He appears again in the census lists (Gen 46:12, Num 26:19) and Chronicler's genealogies (1 Chr 2:3, 4:21). The multilingual glosses (eng/spa/fra/deu) all transliterate simply as 'Er,' reflecting its status as a well-known biblical proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Er, for-Er | es: Er, para-Er | fr: Er, pour-Er | de: Er, [עֵר], für-Er Gen 38:3; Gen 38:6; Gen 38:7; Gen 46:12

עָרַב H6148 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (23×)

To go surety or give a pledge; also to mingle, associate with; by extension, to barter or exchange; rarely, to be pleasing.

The root 'arab encompasses a fascinating cluster of meanings held together by the underlying notion of exchange and intermingling. At its core in the Qal stem, it describes the serious legal act of standing surety — pledging oneself as guarantor for another person's safety or debt, as Judah does for Benjamin before Joseph (Gen 43:9; 44:32). The Hitpael reflexive stem shifts the exchange inward: to 'mix oneself' among others, often with a warning edge, as when Israel mingles with the nations and adopts their practices (Ps 106:35). Proverbs repeatedly cautions against both unwise surety (Prov 6:1; 17:18) and unwise association (Prov 20:19; 24:21), suggesting the ancient sages saw a common thread of imprudent entanglement. The mercantile sense in Ezekiel 27 and the isolated stative sense 'be pleasing' (Hos 9:4) round out a root whose semantic breadth mirrors the complexity of human social and economic bonds.

1. be surety, give pledge (13×) The primary Qal sense of acting as surety or guarantor for another person — pledging one's own person or property to secure someone else's obligation. Judah's surety for Benjamin (Gen 43:9; 44:32) is the paradigm case. Spanish fiador and the English 'surety' both capture the legal dimension, while the Nehemiah 5:3 context of pledging fields and vineyards extends the concept from personal guarantee to collateral. Proverbs warns sharply against reckless suretyship (Prov 6:1; 11:15; 17:18; 22:26), and the Psalmist asks God himself to 'be surety' for the righteous (Ps 119:122), transforming a commercial legal term into a prayer of trust. PLEDGES AND SECURITY
en: among-those-who-are-surety, be-surety-for, be-surety-for-me | es: Sé-fiador-de, de-los-que-salen-fiadores-de, empeñamos | fr: –être-caution-pour-lui, [ערב], [ערבים] | de: [בערבים], [ערב], [ערבים] Gen 43:9; Gen 44:32; Neh 5:3; Job 17:3; Ps 119:122

2. mingle with, associate (5×) Hitpael reflexive sense of mingling or associating with others, carrying overtones of improper or dangerous involvement. The verb appears with a distinctly negative valence in Ezra 9:2 where the holy seed has 'mingled itself' with the peoples of the land — Spanish mezclaron and French se-meler both highlight the reflexive mixing. In Proverbs, the same stem warns against associating with gossips (Prov 20:19) and political agitators (Prov 24:21). Psalm 106:35 uses it to summarize Israel's recurring failure: they 'mingled among the nations and learned their ways.' The shift from economic exchange to social intermingling is semantically natural — both involve crossing a boundary of separation. JOINING AND ALLIANCE
en: and-have-mixed, and-they-mingled, associate | es: Y-se-mezclaron, se-entremete, te-asocies | fr: [והתערבו], et-garantir, se-mêler | de: [והתערבו], [יתערב], [תתערב] Ezra 9:2; Ps 106:35; Prov 14:10; Prov 20:19; Prov 24:21

3. make a wager, stake pledge (2×) Hitpael imperative in the specific context of making a wager or issuing a challenge between parties (2 Kgs 18:23; Isa 36:8). The Rabshakeh's taunt to Hezekiah — 'make a wager with my master the king of Assyria' — uses the same reflexive stem as the 'mingle' sense but in a confrontational, transactional frame. Spanish apuesta ('bet') and the English 'wager' both point to a competitive exchange of pledges rather than mere social mingling or financial surety. Only two occurrences, but the military-diplomatic context and cross-linguistic consistency confirm a distinct sub-sense. PLEDGES AND SECURITY
en: make-a-wager | es: apuesta, haz-un-trato | fr: [התערב], fais-un-wager | de: [התערב], mache-ein-wager 2Kgs 18:23; Isa 36:8

4. exchange, barter, trade (2×) Qal participle and infinitive used in commercial contexts of bartering, trading, or exchanging goods. Both occurrences appear in Ezekiel 27's grand catalogue of Tyre's maritime commerce (Ezek 27:9, 27), where the 'barterers' and 'bartering' describe the exchange activities of merchant partners. Spanish comerciar ('to trade') and English 'barter' select specifically mercantile vocabulary, linking this sense to the root's underlying exchange semantics but in a purely commercial register rather than the legal guarantee of sense 1. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE
en: and-barterers-of-, to-barter | es: para-comerciar, y-los-que-comercian | fr: [וערבי], [לערב] | de: [וערבי], [לערב] Ezek 27:9; Ezek 27:27

5. be pleasing, be sweet (1×) A lone stative occurrence in Hosea 9:4 where sacrifices 'will not be pleasing' to Yahweh. The sense of being agreeable or sweet stands at the semantic periphery of the root, and some lexicographers assign it to a separate homonymous root ('arab III). Spanish agradable and English 'pleasing' both select hedonic vocabulary entirely different from the surety/exchange senses. The connection, if any, may lie in the notion of something being 'acceptable' — an offering that successfully completes an exchange with the divine. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: shall-be-pleasing- | es: les-serán-agradables- | fr: [יערבו] | de: [יערבו] Hos 9:4

עָרַב H6149 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (7×)

To be sweet, pleasing, or agreeable; of sleep, meditation, desires, and sacrificial offerings being pleasant to someone

This stative verb expresses the quality of being sweet, pleasing, or delightful to someone. It spans sensory and spiritual domains: sleep that is sweet (Prov 3:24; Jer 31:26), meditation that is pleasing to God (Ps 104:34), and sacrificial offerings that either please or fail to please the Lord (Jer 6:20; Mal 3:4; Hos 9:4). The negative uses are particularly striking, as prophets declare that Israel's offerings are not sweet to God because of their unfaithfulness. Spanish 'agradable' and French 'doux' reflect the dual register of pleasantness and sweetness.

be pleasing, sweet (Qal) (7×) Qal stative verb meaning to be pleasing, sweet, or agreeable to someone. It governs a range of subjects: sleep that is sweet after labor (Prov 3:24; Jer 31:26), the psalmist's meditation pleasing to God (Ps 104:34), a realized desire being sweet to the soul (Prov 13:19), and a person being pleasing to another (Ezek 16:37). Several prophetic uses negate it regarding sacrifices: Israel's offerings 'are not pleasing to me' (Jer 6:20; Hos 9:4), contrasted with the future day when Judah's offering 'will be pleasing' (Mal 3:4). Spanish 'agradable/dulce' and French 'doux' capture both the gustatory and relational dimensions. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT en: and-sweet, and-will-be-pleasing, are-pleasing | es: Sea-agradable, Y-será-agradable, es-dulce | fr: [ערבה], [ערבו], et-être-doux | de: [ועֹרבה], [ערבה], [ערבו] Ps 104:34; Prov 3:24; Prov 13:19; Jer 6:20; Jer 31:26

עָרַב H6150 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (3×)

to grow dark, become evening; grow late

This denominative verb from 'evening' (עֶרֶב) describes the onset of darkness as day transitions to night. In Judges 19:9, it refers to the day declining toward evening. 1 Samuel 17:16 uses the infinitive to describe Goliath's twice-daily appearances, 'at morning and at evening.' Isaiah 24:11 employs it figuratively—all joy 'has grown dark'—though some scholars suggest emending the text. The verb captures both literal twilight and metaphorical dimming of light or joy.

(3×) The verb denotes the darkening that accompanies evening's arrival. Judges 19:9 has 'the day is declining toward evening' (לָעֲרֹב), urging the Levite to stay overnight. 1 Samuel 17:16 uses the Hiphil infinitive for Goliath's evening appearance alongside morning, showing regularity. Isaiah 24:11 uses it metaphorically: all joy 'has grown dark' (עָרְבָה), though textual scholars debate whether this should read 'has passed away' instead. Multilingual glosses reflect evening-time ('hacia la tarde,' 'à soir') and darkening ('se oscureció,' 'grows dark'). EVENING AND TWILIGHT
en: and-late, grows-dark, to-evening | es: hacia-la-tarde, se-oscureció, y-por-la-tarde | fr: [ערבה], et-tard, à-soir | de: [ערבה], und-late, zu-Abend Judg 19:9; 1Sam 17:16; Isa 24:11

עֲרַב H6151 V-Piel-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (4×)

mixed, mingled; combined or blended together, used of metals or peoples in Daniel's vision

An Aramaic verb meaning to mix or mingle, appearing only in Daniel 2 in the vision of the statue with mixed materials. The passive participle describes iron 'mixed with' ceramic clay (2:41), representing a kingdom of mixed strength. The reflexive forms (2:43, appearing twice) describe how 'they will mix themselves' through intermarriage, yet remain unbonded—just as iron doesn't truly amalgamate with clay. This imagery portrays a divided kingdom: diverse peoples brought together politically but not genuinely unified. The mixing metaphor captures both attempted integration and inherent incompatibility.

(4×) Mixed or mingled, describing incompatible combination. Daniel 2:41 uses the passive for iron 'mixed with' clay in the statue's feet —a kingdom of mixed composition. Verses 43 (twice) employ the reflexive: 'they will mix themselves' through marriage alliances, yet won't adhere, like iron and clay. The verb captures political attempts at unity that fail due to fundamental incompatibility. MIXING WITH

OIL
en: mixed, mixing, mixing-themselves | es: mezclado, mezclados, se-mezcla | fr: mêler | de: [מערב], [מתערב], [מתערבין] Dan 2:41; Dan 2:43

עֲרַב H6152a Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

Desert-plateau, steppe, or Arabia; geographic term for arid regions (Isaiah 21:13)

This term designates the desert-plateau or steppe region generally corresponding to northern Arabia. Isaiah 21:13 uses it twice in the oracle 'against Arabia,' pronouncing judgment on desert-dwelling traders. However, textual uncertainty exists: the consonants could also be vocalized as 'in the evening,' which some ancient versions preferred. The geographic sense fits the context of Arabian tribal caravans, but the wordplay potential made interpretation debatable even in antiquity.

(2×) A masculine noun meaning desert-plateau or steppe, specifically the Arabian desert region. The phrase 'in the steppe' (ba'arab) appears twice in Isaiah 21:13, creating emphasis on the location of this prophetic burden. Some translations read 'in the evening' instead, though the geographic interpretation fits better with the oracle's focus on Arabian trading communities. The term represents what we now call the North Arabian desert, home to nomadic peoples and caravan routes. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8655 WITH 4 SENSES
en: Arabia, in-Arabia | es: Arabia, en-Arabia | fr: [בערב] | de: [בערב] Isa 21:13

עָרָב H6152b Art / N-ms (4×)

Arabia; the desert regions and their inhabitants in northern Arabia, steppe-dwellers and nomadic traders

The collective term for the steppe-dwellers of northern Arabia, later extended to the entire peninsula. The biblical references focus on the nomadic tribes of the northern Arabian desert: Jeremiah speaks of 'kings of Arabia who dwell in the wilderness' (25:24), while the Kings and Chronicles parallel passages mention Arabia's tribute to Solomon (1 Kgs 10:15; 2 Chr 9:14). Ezekiel lists Arabia among trading partners (27:21), and includes them among those facing judgment (30:5). The name derives from the root for 'desert' or 'steppe,' reflecting the nomadic lifestyle. This became the standard term for the Arabs and Arabian Peninsula in later usage.

(4×) Arabia and its inhabitants, particularly northern Arabian desert tribes. The four occurrences emphasize two aspects: royal/tribute relationships (1 Kgs 10:15; 2 Chr 9:14 - Arabia's kings bringing wealth to Solomon) and prophetic contexts (Jer 25:24; Ezek 27:21 - Arabia among nations and trading partners). The term identifies both the region and its nomadic peoples. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8655 WITH 4 SENSES
en: Arabia, the-Arabia | es: Arabia, la-mezcla | fr: [ערב], le-Arabia, Édom | de: [ערב], der-Arabia 1Kgs 10:15; 2Chr 9:14; Jer 25:24; Ezek 27:21

עֶרֶב H6153 Prep-m / N-ms (134×)

Evening, the period from late afternoon through sunset; in dual form, the ritual 'two evenings' or twilight interval.

Erev marks the daily boundary between light and darkness that structures biblical time. Because the Israelite day began at sunset, erev carried theological weight far beyond a simple clock reading — it was the threshold of a new day (Gen 1:5), the moment of purification from uncleanness (Lev 11:24-25), and the hour of the evening sacrifice. The dual form ha-arbayim, 'the two evenings,' appears almost exclusively in Priestly legislation to fix the precise twilight window for slaughtering the Passover lamb (Exod 12:6) and offering the daily tamid (Exod 29:39). Rabbinic debate over whether this means 'sunset to dark' or 'declining sun to sunset' reflects the term's ancient precision.

1. evening, time of day (123×) Evening as a general time of day — from late afternoon through sunset and into early darkness. Used in narrative (Gen 8:11, the dove returning at evening), legal texts (Lev 11:24, unclean 'until evening'), and prophetic imagery (Zech 14:7). Rendered universally as la tarde, le soir, der Abend. The 123 occurrences span every genre, often paired with boqer (morning) to express totality of time. EVENING AND TWILIGHT
en: the-evening | es: la-tarde | fr: le-soir | de: der-Abend Exod 18:13; Lev 11:24; Lev 11:25; Lev 11:27; Lev 11:28

2. the two evenings (dual twilight) (11×) The dual form ha-arbayim ('the two evenings'), a technical ritual term designating the twilight interval during which Passover lambs were slaughtered and the evening tamid offered. Concentrated in Priestly texts (Exod 12:6; 29:39, 41; 30:8; Num 9:3, 11; 28:4, 8), these 11 occurrences preserve a precise liturgical time-marker. Spanish las tardes and the consistent dual rendering across translations confirm this as a formally distinct usage from the general sense. EVENING AND TWILIGHT
en: the-evenings | es: las-tardes | fr: le-evenings | de: der-evenings Exod 12:6; Exod 16:12; Exod 29:39; Exod 29:41; Exod 30:8

עֵרֶב H6154a Art / N-ms (6×)

Mixed multitude — a heterogeneous group of non-Israelites attached to Israel or another nation.

Denotes a mixed company of foreigners who attach themselves to a larger people, most memorably the diverse crowd that departed Egypt alongside Israel (Exod 12:38). In Nehemiah's reforms, the 'mixed multitude' is separated from Israel to restore ethnic and covenantal purity (Neh 13:3). Jeremiah applies the term to foreign populations mingled among Egypt's allies (Jer 25:20, 24) and among the Chaldeans (Jer 50:37), where their disloyalty under siege becomes a military vulnerability. The word carries a consistently pejorative or at least marginal connotation — these are people whose allegiance and identity remain ambiguous. French 'mélange' and Spanish 'mezcla' capture the root idea of mixture, while German 'gemischte Menge' makes the heterogeneity explicit.

mixed multitude, foreign rabble (6×) A heterogeneous body of foreigners or people of mixed ethnic origin attached to a larger nation. The paradigmatic instance is the diverse crowd that left Egypt with Israel (Exod 12:38), whose presence later created tensions in the wilderness. Nehemiah excluded the 'erev from the assembly during post-exilic purification (Neh 13:3). Jeremiah uses it of foreign contingents mingled among Egypt's allies (Jer 25:20, 24) and among Babylon's population (Jer 50:37), where their divided loyalties prove fatal. The term always implies an unstable, composite group whose membership in the host nation is incomplete or contested. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND
en: a-mixed-multitude, mixed-multitude, the-mixed-multitude | es: la-mezcla, mezcla | fr: [ערב], le-mélange, mélange | de: [הערב], [ערב], eine-gemischte-Menge Exod 12:38; Neh 13:3; Jer 25:20; Jer 25:24; Jer 50:37

עֵרֶב H6154b Prep-b / N-ms (9×)

Woof, the horizontal threads interwoven with the warp in weaving, used exclusively in Levitical laws about textile contamination.

A technical weaving term (עֵרֶב) denoting the woof or weft, the crosswise threads passed through the vertical warp threads on a loom. All nine occurrences appear in Leviticus 13:48-59, the detailed priestly legislation governing contamination in woven fabrics. The woof is consistently paired with its counterpart, the warp (שְׁתִי), as the priest examines garments for signs of spreading disease. Spanish 'trama' captures the textile sense precisely, while the Hebrew root ערב ('to mix, intermingle') aptly describes how the woof threads intermingle with the warp to form cloth.

in the woof (9×) The woof or weft of a woven fabric, referring to the horizontal threads interlaced with the vertical warp on a loom. Confined entirely to the Priestly legislation on fabric contamination in Leviticus 13:48-59, this term always appears alongside שְׁתִי (warp) as the priest inspects garments of linen or wool for signs of spreading disease (Lev 13:48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 58, 59). The Hebrew root עָרַב means 'to mix or interweave,' and Spanish 'trama' and the English 'woof' both denote the same cross-thread of the weaving process. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: in-the-woof, in-woof, the-woof | es: en-la-trama, en-trama, la-trama | fr:

dans-le-woof, dans-woof, le-woof | de: der-woof, in-der-woof, in-woof Lev 13:48; Lev 13:49; Lev 13:51; Lev 13:52; Lev 13:53

עַרְבָה H6155 Art / N-fp (5×)

poplar or willow tree (populus Euphratica), a water-loving tree found near streams

A noun designating the poplar or willow (populus Euphratica), a tree that flourishes along watercourses. In Lev 23:40, branches of willows of the brook are gathered for the Feast of Tabernacles. The famous Ps 137:2 pictures the exiles hanging their harps 'upon the willows' by the rivers of Babylon. In Isa 44:4, the righteous spring up 'like willows by streams of water.' Spanish 'sauces' and French 'saules' (willows) consistently identify this as a riparian tree species, while Job 40:22 places it in the habitat of Behemoth.

(5×) A poplar or willow tree (populus Euphratica), characteristically growing beside streams and watercourses. Featured in the Feast of Tabernacles liturgy as 'willows of the brook' (Lev 23:40), in the iconic lament of exile where harps hang on willows by Babylon's rivers (Ps 137:2), and as a simile for flourishing growth in Isa 44:4. Spanish 'sauces,' French branches, and English 'willows' uniformly identify this water-loving tree. Isa 15:7's 'Wadi of the Willows' uses it as a place name in Moab. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-willows-of-, like-willows, the-willows | es: como-sauces, los-sauces, sauces | fr: [הערבים], [כערבים], et-willows-de- | de: [הערבים], [כערבים], [ערבי] Lev 23:40; Job 40:22; Ps 137:2; Isa 15:7; Isa 44:4

עָרֵב H6156 Adj-ms (2×)

Sweet or pleasant; describing agreeable taste or sound

This adjective means sweet or pleasant to the senses. In Proverbs 20:17, it describes how 'bread of falsehood' initially tastes sweet—ill-gotten gains seem pleasant at first. In Song of Songs 2:14, the lover praises his beloved's voice as sweet, finding delight in her speech. The term captures sensory pleasure, whether the deceptive sweetness of stolen food or the genuine sweetness of a loved one's voice.

(2×) An adjective meaning sweet or pleasant, applicable to taste and sound. The Proverbs usage ironically describes the temporary pleasantness of dishonest gain ('pan dulce'), which later turns to gravel. Songs uses it genuinely for the beloved's sweet voice ('voix douce'). The term captures immediate sensory appeal—something that pleases the palate or ear. Both contexts recognize sweetness as a powerful motivator, whether leading toward sin or expressing affection. SWEET SWEETNESS

en: sweet | es: Dulce, dulce | fr: douce, doux | de: [ערב] Prov 20:17; Song 2:14

עָרֹב H6157 Art / N-ms (9×)

A swarm of insects, traditionally flies or a noxious mixture of biting creatures, sent as the fourth plague upon Egypt.

Designates the swarm (עָרֹב) sent as the fourth Egyptian plague, likely derived from the root עָרַב meaning 'to mix,' suggesting a mixed swarm of noxious insects rather than a single species. The Septuagint renders it as κυνόμυια ('dog-fly'), while rabbinic tradition understood it as a mixture of wild beasts or various stinging creatures. All nine occurrences cluster in Exodus 8 and two psalm retellings of the plague narrative (Pss 78:45; 105:31). Spanish interestingly uses both 'enjambre' (swarm) and 'mezcla' (mixture), reflecting the longstanding ambiguity about whether this word emphasizes the collective swarming or the mixed composition of the plague.

swarm of flies, insects (9×) A swarm of biting or stinging insects sent as the fourth plague upon Egypt. The term appears exclusively in the Exodus plague narrative (Exod 8:17-27 [ET 8:21-31]) and its poetic recollections in the Psalms (Ps 78:45; 105:31). The etymology from עָרַב ('to mix') suggests a heterogeneous swarm rather than a single insect species, which is reflected in the diverse translations: English 'swarm/swarms of flies,' Spanish 'enjambre' (swarm) alongside 'mezcla' (mixture), and the LXX's κυνόμυια ('dog-fly'). The plague was devastating enough that Pharaoh temporarily relented (Exod 8:24-28). NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: swarm, swarms-of-flies, the-swarm | es: enjambre, la-mezcla, mezcla | fr: essaim, le-essaim, soir | de: der-schwirren, schwirren, swarms-von-flies Exod 8:21; Exod 8:22; Exod 8:24

עֹרֵב H6158 N-ms (10×)

Raven; an unclean bird known for its black plumage, fed by God as a sign of his providence.

Denotes the common raven (Corvus corax), a large, intelligent, jet-black bird prominent in several memorable biblical scenes. Noah first sent a raven from the ark (Gen 8:7), ravens fed Elijah at the brook Cherith (1 Kgs 17:4, 6), and God himself provides food for young ravens (Job 38:41, Ps 147:9). Listed among the unclean birds (Lev 11:15, Deut 14:14), the raven also appears as a symbol of striking beauty — the beloved's hair is 'black as the raven' (Song 5:11). French 'corbeau' and Spanish 'cuervo' consistently confirm this single zoological referent.

raven (10×) The raven (Corvus corax), a large black scavenging bird classified as unclean (Lev 11:15, Deut 14:14). It features in several theologically significant narratives: Noah's raven sent to test the receding waters (Gen 8:7), the ravens that sustained Elijah by divine command (1 Kgs 17:4, 6), and God's care for young ravens as evidence of his providence (Job 38:41, Ps 147:9). In Song 5:11 its deep black color serves as a simile for the beloved's locks. Multilingual glosses — 'raven/cuervo/corbeau' — all point to the same well-known bird species across every occurrence. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-raven, and-the-ravens, as-the-raven | es: Y-los-cuervos, como-el-cuervo, cuervo | fr: [ועֹרב], comme-le-corbeau., corbeau | de: [ועֹרב], [כעֹורב], [לעֹרב] Gen 8:7; Lev 11:15; Deut 14:14; 1Kgs 17:4; 1Kgs 17:6

עֹרֵב H6159 N-proper-ms (7×)

Oreb, a Midianite prince slain by Ephraim at the rock that bears his name during Gideon's campaign

Oreb is the name of one of two Midianite princes (the other being Zeeb) captured and executed by the Ephraimites during the pursuit following Gideon's dramatic night victory over the Midianite camp. He was killed at a rock that subsequently bore his name, 'the rock of Oreb' (Judg 7:25). The event became a paradigm of God's decisive deliverance: Isaiah recalls it as 'the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb' (Isa 10:26), and the psalmist invokes it as a prayer for similar victory (Ps 83:11).

Oreb (proper noun) (7×) The proper name Oreb (עֹרֵב, homophonous with 'raven'), identifying a Midianite prince captured and killed by the Ephraimites at a landmark rock during Gideon's campaign (Judg 7:25; 8:3). The place of his execution became known as 'the rock of Oreb,' and the victory became a type-scene of divine deliverance referenced by Isaiah (Isa 10:26) and in Psalm 83:11. Spanish and English consistently render it 'Oreb/Orev,' while French occasionally shows 'soir' (an erroneous association with the homonym for 'evening'), and German preserves 'Oreb.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Oreb, like-Orev | es: Oreb, Orev, como-Orev | fr: Oreb, [עורב], comme-soir | de: Oreb, [עורב], wie-Orev Judg 7:25; Judg 8:3

עַרְבָה H6160 Prep-b (61×)

The Arabah (rift valley proper name); plains or steppes adjacent to a place; desert or arid wasteland.

Arabah names one of the most distinctive landscapes in the biblical world – the great rift valley stretching from the Sea of Galilee to the Gulf of Aqaba – but the same word also functions as a common noun for any arid steppe or desert plain. In its proper-name usage, it anchors geographical descriptions throughout Deuteronomy and Joshua. In construct form ('plains of Moab,' 'plains of Jericho'), it designates specific lowland regions. And in poetic texts like Isaiah 35:1, where 'the wilderness shall rejoice and blossom,' it evokes the raw desolation that God promises to transform.

1. the Arabah (proper name) (28×) The Arabah as a proper geographical name, referring to the rift valley running from the Sea of Galilee southward through the Dead Sea basin to the Gulf of Aqaba. It appears with the definite article (ha-Arabah) in Deuteronomy 1:1, 1:7, 3:17 and throughout Joshua, often in boundary descriptions. Spanish translates as 'el Arabá,' French as 'le Arabah,' while German sometimes shifts to 'Steppe' or 'der Araba.' The consistent capitalization and article usage across languages confirms its status as a recognized place name rather than a generic terrain descriptor. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Arabah, in-the-Arabah, the-Arabah | es: Y-la-llanura, el-Arabá, en-el-Arabá | fr: dans-le-Arabah, et-le-Arabah, le-Arabah | de: Steppe, der-Araba, der-Arabah Deut 1:1; Deut 1:7; Deut 2:8; Deut 3:17

2. plains/steppes of (place) (19×) Plains or steppes adjacent to a named location, appearing in the plural construct form (arvot + place name). The phrase 'plains of Moab' (arvot Moab) in Numbers 22:1, 26:3, and 31:12, and 'plains of Jericho' in 2 Kings 25:5, designate specific flat lowland areas near those cities. Spanish gives 'llanuras de,' French 'plaines de,' and German 'Ebenen von,' all plural construct forms mirroring the Hebrew. These are not the Arabah itself but particular sub-regions identified by proximity to a settlement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-plains-of, from-plains-of, in-plains-of | es: (en-llanuras-de), de-las-llanuras-de, en-las-llanuras-de | fr: dans-le-plaines-de, dans-plaines-de, dans-plains-de | de: Ebenen-von, Steppe, in-Ebenen-von Num 22:1; Num 26:3; Num 26:63; Num 31:12; Num 33:48

3. desert, wilderness, arid land (14×) Desert, wilderness, or arid wasteland as a common noun. In poetic and prophetic texts such as Job 24:5 (where the poor search for food in the wilderness), Job 39:6 (the wild donkey's habitat), and Isaiah 35:1 (the desert that will rejoice), arabah describes barren, uninhabited terrain. The translations shift correspondingly: Spanish uses 'desierto' or 'aridez,' French 'steppe' or 'plaine,' and German 'Steppe.' Isaiah 51:3's promise that God will make Zion's arabah 'like Eden' plays on the contrast between desolation and paradise. VENGEANCE AND RETRIBUTION

en: and-a-desert, and-her-desert, and-shall-rejoice | es: aridez, como-desierto, desierto | fr: dans-plaine, et-steppe, plaine | de: Steppe, [ערבה], durch-der-deserts Job 24:5; Job 39:6; Ps 68:4; Isa 33:9; Isa 35:1

עֲרֻבָּה H6161 N-fsc / 3mp (2×)

Pledge, token, or surety; something exchanged as guarantee or proof

This noun refers to something given or exchanged as a guarantee or token. In 1 Samuel 17:18, Jesse asks David to bring back a 'pledge' from his brothers at the battlefront—some token proving they're well. In Proverbs 17:18, it describes the pledge or surety given when someone guarantees another's debt. The term encompasses both the commercial practice of pledging security and the personal practice of providing tokens of welfare or good faith.

(2×) A feminine noun meaning pledge, token, or surety. The multilingual evidence shows two contexts: commercial/legal ('fianza,' 'gage'—surety, pledge) and personal ('prenda suya,' 'token of welfare'). Both involve exchange as guarantee: Jesse wants proof his sons are safe; Proverbs warns against becoming financially responsible for others. The underlying concept is something concrete exchanged to represent commitment, safety, or obligation. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: pledge, pledge-their | es: fianza, prenda-suya | fr: gage-leur, ערבה | de: [ערבה], pledge-ihr 1Sam 17:18; Prov 17:18

עֵרָבוֹן H6162 Art / N-ms (3×)

pledge, security deposit given as guarantee

This term describes a pledge or security deposit given to guarantee a promise. It appears exclusively in Genesis 38, where Judah promises Tamar a goat but lacks it at the moment. She requests his seal, cord, and staff as collateral—an 'erabōn until he sends payment. The word entered Greek as 'arrabōn,' used in the New Testament for the Holy Spirit as a guarantee of future inheritance (2 Corinthians 1:22; 5:5; Ephesians 1:14). The narrative shows both giving and receiving back the pledge once the obligation is fulfilled.

(3×) A pledge or security item given as guarantee until a promised payment is delivered. In Genesis 38:17, Judah agrees to give Tamar 'a pledge' (עֵרָבוֹן) until he sends the promised goat. Verse 18 specifies the items—seal, cord, staff—and verse 20 mentions Judah's attempt to 'receive back the pledge' when sending payment. The term implies temporary transfer of valuable items as surety. Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'pledge' (English), 'prenda' (Spanish), 'gage' (French), 'Pfand' (German)—all indicating collateral or security deposit. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: a-pledge, the-pledge | es: la-prenda, prenda | fr: le-gage, un-gage | de: das-Pfand, ein-Pfand Gen 38:17; Gen 38:18; Gen 38:20

H6163 Art / N-proper-mp (2×)

The Arabians or Arabs; collective ethnic designation for desert-dwelling peoples

This collective noun designates Arabian peoples, appearing in 2 Chronicles 26:7 with a ketiv-qere textual variant (minor spelling difference). The term identifies desert-dwelling ethnic groups distinct from settled populations. By the Chronicles period, 'Arabians' functioned as a general designation for the nomadic or semi-nomadic peoples of the desert regions to the south and east of Judah, though it probably encompassed various distinct tribal groups.

(2×) A masculine plural proper noun or gentilicic meaning Arabs or Arabians. Both occurrences are textual variants (ketiv/qere) of the same reference in 2 Chronicles 26:7, where they appear among peoples subdued by King Uzziah. The consistent rendering across languages ('árabes,' 'Arabians') shows this functioned as a standard ethnic-geographic designation. The article 'the Arabs' suggests a recognized collective identity, even if internally diverse. ARABIAN GENTILICIUM

en: [ketiv], the-Aravim | es: [los-árabes], los-árabes | fr: [הָעַרְבִיִּים], [הָעַרְבִים] | de: [הָעַרְבִיִּים], [הָעַרְבִים] 2Chr 26:7

עַרְבִי H6163a N-proper-ms (2×)

An Arab, Arabian; individual or collective designation for desert/steppe dwellers

This gentilicic adjective describes someone from the desert-steppe regions, an Arab. Isaiah 13:20 prophesies that Babylon will be so desolate 'no Arab will pitch tent there.' Jeremiah 3:2 compares apostate Israel to 'an Arab in the wilderness,' waiting by the roadside like a desert bandit. The term carries connotations of nomadic lifestyle, desert-dwelling, and sometimes predatory opportunism—reflecting settled peoples' stereotypes of their nomadic neighbors.

(2×) A gentilicic adjective/noun meaning Arab or Arabian, designating steppe-dwellers. The Isaiah reference uses it for typical desert nomads who won't camp in ruined Babylon. Jeremiah's simile 'like an Arab in the desert' evokes the image of a desert-dweller waiting to ambush travelers—a negative stereotype emphasizing opportunistic predation. The term identifies both ethnicity and lifestyle, associating Arabs with desert regions and nomadic or semi-nomadic existence. ARABIAN GENTILICIUM

en: Arab, like-an-Arab | es: como-árabe, árabe | fr: [כְּעַרְבִי], [עַרְבִי] | de: [כְּעַרְבִי], [עַרְבִי] Isa 13:20; Jer 3:2

עַרְבִי H6163b Art / N-proper-mp (6×)

Arabian — a gentilic adjective designating a person or people from Arabia.

The gentilic form 'Arabi identifies an individual or group as Arabian, used both in the singular for a named figure and in the plural for the Arabian peoples as a collective entity. Nehemiah's opponent Geshem is called 'the Arabian' (Neh 2:19; 6:1), marking him as a powerful leader from the Arabian tribal confederacy who opposed Jerusalem's rebuilding. The plural 'the Arabs' appears in Chronicles for Arabian groups who brought tribute to Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:11) and later raided Judah during Jehoram's reign (2 Chr 21:16; 22:1). The French and German glosses retain the untranslated Hebrew forms in brackets, while Spanish 'los árabes' and English 'the Arabs' naturalize the gentilic into their own languages.

Arabian / Arab (gentilicium) (6×) A gentilic adjective meaning 'Arabian' or 'Arab,' identifying a person or people by their Arabian origin. In the singular, it designates Geshem the Arabian, Nehemiah's political adversary (Neh 2:19; 4:7). In the plural, it refers to Arabian tribal groups who brought tribute under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:11) and later invaded Judah during Jehoram's reign (2 Chr 21:16; 22:1). The term functions as a standard ethnic identifier with no pejorative connotation, parallel to other gentilic formations in Biblical Hebrew. ARABIAN GENTILICIUM

en: and-the-Arabs, and-the-Aravim, the-Arab | es: con-los-árabes, el-árabe, los-árabes | fr: [בערבים], [הָעַרְבִי], [הָעַרְבִיאִים] | de: [בערבים], [הָעַרְבִי], [הָעַרְבִיאִים] 2Chr 17:11; 2Chr 21:16; 2Chr 22:1; Neh 2:19; Neh 4:7

בִּית הָעַרְבָתִי H6164 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Arbathite or Arvathite: gentilicic designation of unknown precise meaning

This gentilicic appears in the lists of David's mighty men (2 Samuel 23:31, 1 Chronicles 11:32), identifying a warrior by geographic or clan origin. The exact referent is uncertain; it might relate to Beth-Arabah (a place in the Jordan depression) or Arvad (a Phoenician coastal city), or it could be a clan name. Some scholars suggest the text originally read 'Beth-Arabathite,' from the town Beth-Arabah. The precise identity remains lost, though it clearly functioned to distinguish this warrior by origin.

(2×) A gentilicic adjective functioning as substantive noun to identify geographic or clan origin. The definite article makes it 'the Arbathite/Arvathite,' marking it as an established designation. Both occurrences identify the same warrior in parallel lists of David's elite fighters. The multilingual consistency ('arbatita,' 'Arbathite') shows translators preserved the Hebrew form, recognizing it as a fixed ethnic or geographic identifier even when its precise reference was unclear. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Arbathite, the-Arvathite | es: el-arbatita, el-arvatita | fr: [הערבתי], le-Arbathite | de: [הערבתי], der-Arbathite 2Sam 23:31; 1Chr 11:32

עָרַג H6165 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (3×)

to long for, pant after (as a thirsty deer)

This evocative verb captures intense longing or thirsting, like a deer panting for water. Psalm 42 uses it twice in the famous opening: 'As the deer pants for streams of water, so my soul pants for you, O God.' The imagery of an animal desperately seeking water becomes the metaphor for spiritual thirst. Joel 1:20 extends this to wild beasts crying out for water during drought. The verb conveys not mere desire but urgent, physical craving—a longing that consumes the whole being.

(3×) Describes intense longing or panting, particularly the physical craving for water. Psalm 42:1 (verse 2 in Hebrew) opens with the stag panting 'for streams of water' (עַל־אֲפִיקֵי מָיִם), immediately followed by the soul's parallel panting for God. Joel 1:20 uses the same image during devastating drought: even wild beasts 'pant' (תַּעֲרֹג) for God as water sources dry up. The etymology may connect to ascending or bending toward something desired. Translations capture this with 'pant' (English), 'brama/braman' (Spanish 'bellow/cry out'), 'soupirer' (French 'sigh/long for'). DESIRE AND COVETING

en: pant, pants | es: brama, braman | fr: désirer, soupirer | de: [תערוג], pants Ps 42:1; Joel 1:20

עָרָד H6166a N-proper-fs (4×)

Arad; Canaanite city in the Negev, site of Israel's conflict with its king

A Canaanite city in the southern Negev region, likely modern Tell Arad about 16 miles south of Hebron. Numbers 21:1 and 33:40 record the 'king of Arad' attacking Israel and Israel's subsequent destruction of the Canaanite cities. Joshua's conquest list includes the king of Arad among defeated rulers (12:14). Judges 1:16 mentions Arad in connection with the Kenites' settlement. The Egyptian records reference 'a-ru-da,' confirming the site's ancient importance. The LXX transliterations vary (Arad, Airath, Ader), but the city's identity as a significant Negev stronghold remains consistent across texts.

(4×) Place name for a Canaanite city in the Negev. Numbers 21:1, 33:40 record Israel's conflict with Arad's king during the wilderness period. Joshua 12:14 lists it among conquered cities. Judges 1:16 associates it with the Kenites' territory. The site represents a key Negev settlement on Israel's southern frontier, attested in both biblical and Egyptian sources. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Arad | es: Arad | fr: Arad | de: Arad Num 21:1; Num 33:40; Josh 12:14; Judg 1:16

עֶרֶד H6166b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Arad, a personal name in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chronicles 8:15)

This Arad is a Benjamite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:15, distinct from the more famous Canaanite city of Arad in the Negev. He appears in the genealogy of Benjamin, one of the many descendants traced through the tribe's clans. Greek versions transliterate the name variously (Orēr, Arōd, Arad), reflecting different manuscript traditions. The name itself is not explained in the text, and this individual Arad is otherwise unknown. He is one of the numerous Benjamites whose names are preserved in the Chronicler's effort to document Israel's tribal structure after the exile.

(1×) Arad in 1 Chronicles 8:15 is a Benjamite, listed among the sons of Elpaal in the tribe's genealogy. This is not the Canaanite city of Arad, but a personal name borne by a member of Benjamin. The Greek versions show textual variation (Orēr, Arōd, Arad), suggesting some fluidity in the transmission of the name. No narrative accompanies this mention—Arad is simply part of the genealogical record that anchors Benjamin's post-exilic community to its ancestral past. The Chronicler's lists preserve the memory of families and individuals who might otherwise be forgotten. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Arad | es: y-Arad | fr: [ועֶרֶד] | de: [ועֶרֶד] 1Chr 8:15

עֲרָד H6167 N-mpd (1×)

wild donkeys, untamed asses (Aramaic form used in Daniel)

Daniel 5:21 recounts how Nebuchadnezzar was driven from human society and 'his dwelling was with the wild donkeys.' This Aramaic word for wild ass emphasizes the king's degradation—reduced to living like an animal, grazing with the untamed beasts of the field. The wild donkey is a symbol of freedom and wildness in biblical literature, but here it underscores the humiliation of a once-great monarch. The term is cognate with Hebrew, Syriac, and Aramaic words for the same animal. Spanish uses 'los asnos salvajes,' confirming the sense of undomesticated, free-roaming creatures of the wilderness.

(1×) In Daniel 5:21, this Aramaic word describes the 'wild donkeys' with whom the mad king Nebuchadnezzar lived during his period of insanity. The wild donkey is a creature of the open steppe, untamed and free, and placing the king among them signifies his utter loss of human dignity and reason. Aramaic and Syriac have cognate terms for this animal, which appears elsewhere in Scripture as an image of independence and wilderness. Here, however, the emphasis is on degradation: the mighty emperor eating grass like an ox, dwelling with wild beasts, until he acknowledges the sovereignty of the God of heaven. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: wild-donkeys | es: los-asnos-salvajes | fr: onagre | de: [עַרְדִיא] Dan 5:21

עָרָה H6168 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-2fs (15×)

To lay bare, uncover, strip; also to pour out or empty a vessel; reflexively to strip oneself or spread out.

At its heart this verb means to remove what covers — whether clothing, walls, or the contents of a container. Rebekah 'emptied' her jar at the well (Gen 24:20), the Psalmist cries 'lay bare!' against Edom's destruction of Jerusalem (Ps 137:7), and Isaiah warns that God will 'lay bare' the foreheads of Zion's daughters (Isa 3:17). The pour-out sense may seem distant from stripping, but both share the idea of exposing or releasing what was contained. French 'dénuder' captures the stripping sense, while Spanish 'derramar' (to pour) and 'arrasar' (to raze) show how the language branches from one root image.

1. lay bare, uncover, strip (Piel) (7×) To lay bare, uncover, or strip: the core Piel sense of removing a covering to expose what lies beneath. Used of stripping a person bare (Isa 3:17), laying foundations bare by tearing down walls (Hab 3:13), and the passionate cry 'Lay bare! Lay bare!' against Jerusalem's destroyers (Ps 137:7). French 'dénuder' and Spanish 'arrasar' both point to forceful, thorough exposure. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: He-will-lay-bare, he-has-stripped, lay-bare | es: Arrasad, arrasad, desampares | fr: [יערה], [ערה], dénuder | de: [יערה], [ערה], [ערות] Ps 137:7; Ps 141:8; Isa 3:17; Isa 22:6

2. pour out, empty (4×) To pour out or empty a vessel, an extension of the uncovering image applied to liquid contents. Rebekah 'emptied' her water jar into the trough (Gen 24:20), the Levites 'emptied' the collection chest (2 Chr 24:11), and the Servant 'poured out his soul to death' (Isa 53:12). Spanish 'derramar' (to pour) and 'vaciar' (to empty) confirm the liquid-transfer sense. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-emptied, he-poured-out, is-poured | es: derramó, sea-derramado, y-vaciaban | fr: [הערה], [ויערו], [יערה] | de: [הערה], [ויערו], [יערה] Gen 24:20; 2Chr 24:11; Isa 32:15; Isa 53:12

3. expose, reveal (Hifil) (2×) Causative uncovering in a sexual or legal context (Hifil): to cause nakedness to be disclosed or exposed. In Lev 20:18–19 a man 'exposes' a woman's flow or a relative's nakedness. Spanish 'descubrió' and 'desnudó' (uncovered, stripped) mark the forensic, revelatory aspect of this usage. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: he-exposed | es: descubrió, desnudó | fr: il-exposed | de: er-exposed Lev 20:18; Lev 20:19

4. strip oneself, spread out (Hitpael) (2×) Reflexive stripping or spreading out (Hitpael): the subject makes himself bare or extends himself outward. The wicked 'spreads himself out' like a flourishing tree (Ps 37:35), and daughter Edom is told to 'strip yourself naked' (Lam 4:21). Spanish 'extendiéndose' (spreading) and 'desnudarás' (strip) reflect both branches of this reflexive sense. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-spreading-himself, and-strip-yourself-naked | es: y-extendiéndose, y-te-desnudarás | fr: [ותתערי], et-de-dénuder | de: [ותתערי], und-spreading-sich-selbst Ps 37:35; Lam 4:21

עָרָה H6169 N-fp (1×)

bare places, possibly vegetation stripped by the Nile or meadows laid bare

Isaiah 19:7 mentions 'bare places' by the Nile, possibly referring to areas of exposed ground where vegetation has been stripped away, or perhaps to reeds and grasses that are harvested, leaving the banks bare. The Hebrew is uncertain—the Greek translates it as 'reeds' (achei), and some scholars think the original word referred to plant life rather than empty ground. Spanish uses 'lugares desnudos' (naked/bare places). The context is a prophecy of Egypt's desolation, where the Nile's once-fertile banks will fail to produce. Whether bare soil or withered plants, the image is of loss and barrenness.

(1×) Isaiah 19:7 speaks of 'bare places' by the Nile, in a prophecy foretelling Egypt's agricultural collapse. The term is obscure; the Greek understood it as 'reeds,' and some Hebrew manuscripts or interpretations see vegetation here. The Hebrew as transmitted suggests bareness—exposed ground, places stripped of their covering. Spanish 'lugares desnudos' captures the nakedness, the absence of what should be there. In context, this is part of a broader vision of Egypt's rivers drying up, fishermen lamenting, and the land's fertility vanishing—a reversal of Egypt's traditional abundance. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: bare-places | es: Lugares-desnudos | fr: [ערות] | de: [ערות] Isa 19:7

עֲרוּגָה H6170 Prep-l / N-fpc (4×)

garden bed, terrace; cultivated plot or raised bed in a garden, especially for aromatic plants

A term for garden beds or terraces—raised, cultivated plots where plants are grown in ordered rows. In Song of Songs, it appears in poetic imagery: 'beds of balsam' (5:13) where the beloved's cheeks are compared to fragrant garden terraces, and 'beds of spices' (6:2) where the lover goes to pasture his flock and gather lilies. Ezekiel uses it metaphorically for the plot where a vine is planted (17:7, 10), representing Jerusalem's territory. The term suggests careful cultivation and ordering, distinct from wild growth—gardens with intentional design and aromatic or valuable plants. Multilingual evidence (Spanish 'lechos,' French 'parterres') preserves the garden-bed imagery.

(4×) Cultivated garden beds or terraces for plants. Song of Songs uses it twice for aromatic 'beds of balsam/spices' (5:13; 6:2) in love poetry comparing the beloved to fragrant gardens. Ezekiel employs it metaphorically (17:7, 10) for the 'bed where it was planted'—the plot containing the allegorical vine (Jerusalem). The term implies ordered, cultivated spaces for valuable plants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beds-of, from-beds-of, like-bed-of | es: a-los-lechos-de, como-lecho-de, desde-surcos-de | fr: aux-parterres, comme-un-parterre, parcelle | de: [כערוגת], [לערוגות], [מערגות] Song 5:13; Song 6:2; Ezek 17:7; Ezek 17:10

עָרוֹד H6171 N-ms (1×)

wild donkey, untamed ass (likely Aramaic loanword, equivalent to Hebrew pere)

Job 39:5 asks, 'Who has let the wild donkey go free?' using this term, which is likely an Aramaic loanword equivalent to the more common Hebrew 'pere.' The wild donkey is a creature of the open desert, free and untamed, symbolizing independence and the wildness of creation that owes nothing to human control. God's speech in Job 38–41 highlights animals that live outside human dominion, and the wild donkey epitomizes this: no one has domesticated it, no one feeds it, yet it thrives in the wilderness. Spanish 'onagro' (from Latin/Greek) is the technical term for wild ass, confirming the identification.

(1×) In Job 39:5, God asks who has set 'the wild donkey' free—a rhetorical question emphasizing divine sovereignty over creation. This Aramaic-derived term denotes the same animal as Hebrew 'pere,' the untamed ass that roams the desert steppes. Targums and Syriac confirm the identification. The wild donkey in Job is an emblem of freedom: it scorns the city, ignores the driver's shout, ranges the mountains for pasture. It exists entirely outside human systems, a creature whose liberty is God's gift. Spanish 'onagro' and the technical zoological tradition preserve this identity as the Asiatic wild ass. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: the-wild-donkey | es: onagro | fr: ערוד | de: [ערוד] Job 39:5

עֶרְוָה H6172 N-fs (54×)

Nakedness, exposure of the body; by extension shame, indecency, or sexual vulnerability

In Hebrew law and narrative, this noun denotes physical nakedness or the exposure of one's body, particularly the private parts. Its most prominent use is in the Levitical phrase 'uncover the nakedness of,' which serves as the standard legal idiom for illicit sexual relations throughout Leviticus 18-20. Beyond the literal sense, it extends figuratively to shame and vulnerability, as when Joseph accuses his brothers of coming to see 'the nakedness of the land' (Gen 42:9). The Spanish 'desnudez' and German 'Bloesse' both capture the dual physical-moral weight this word carries.

1. illicit sexual relations (euphemistic) (34×) Split from sense 126062. Criteria: Legal euphemism 'uncover the nakedness of' denoting prohibited sexual unions in Leviticus 18-20, not referring to literal bodily exposure

en: nakedness-her, nakedness-of | es: Desnudez-de, desnudez-de, la-desnudez-de | fr: nudité-de, nudité-sa | de: Bloesse-ihr, Bloesse-von Lev 18:6; Lev 18:7; Lev 18:8

2. literal bodily nakedness, physical exposure (17×) Split from sense 126062. Criteria: Actual physical state of being unclothed or exposed, as in Gen 9:22-23 (Ham sees Noah's nakedness)
en: and-nakedness-of, her-nakedness, nakedness-of | es: desnudez-de, desnudez-de-ella, desnudez-de-ti | fr: et-nakedness-de, nakedness-de, nudité | de: Bloesse-von, [ערות], [ערותה] Gen 9:22; Gen 9:23; Gen 42:9; Gen 42:12

3. private parts, exposed area (2×) Refers concretely to the physical genital area that must remain covered, as in the priestly undergarments prescribed to cover 'the flesh of nakedness' (Exod 28:42). In Lamentations 1:8, personified Jerusalem's exposure of her private parts is witnessed by all who once honored her. The French 'nudite' and Spanish 'desnudez' preserve the bodily concreteness here. NAKEDNESS EXPOSURE en: her-nakedness, nakedness | es: desnudez, su-desnudez | fr: nakedness, sa-nudité | de: [ערותה], nakedness Exod 28:42; Lam 1:8

4. shame, indecency, vulnerability (1×) A figurative extension toward shame, disgrace, and vulnerability detached from literal bodily exposure. Isaiah 20:4 prophesies that Assyria will lead Egyptian captives 'with buttocks uncovered, the nakedness of Egypt,' where the physical image symbolizes national humiliation. Deuteronomy 24:1 uses the related phrase 'indecent thing' (literally 'nakedness of a matter') as grounds for divorce. SHAME AND DISGRACE en: nakedness-of | es: desnudez-de | fr: nudité | de: [ערות] Isa 20:4

עַרְוָה H6173 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)
dishonor, nakedness, shame (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew 'ervah')
Ezra 4:14 uses this Aramaic word, stating 'it is not fitting for us to see the king's dishonor,' as the adversaries of the Jews write to the Persian king. The term is cognate with Hebrew 'ervah' (nakedness, shame), carrying the sense of exposure and disgrace. The context is political: the letter-writers claim loyalty to the king and say they cannot stand by while he is dishonored (presumably by the rebuilding of Jerusalem, which they portray as a threat). Spanish translates 'deshonra' (dishonor), capturing the social and political dimension of shame. The word evokes vulnerability and loss of dignity.

(1×) In Ezra 4:14, enemies of the Jewish community write to King Artaxerxes, saying 'it is not fitting for us to see the king's dishonor.' This Aramaic term is related to Hebrew 'ervah' (nakedness, shame), conveying exposure, vulnerability, disgrace. The accusers frame their opposition to Jerusalem's rebuilding as loyalty: they cannot tolerate the king being shamed (by a potentially rebellious city). Spanish 'deshonra' rightly emphasizes honor culture—seeing the king dishonored would implicate them in betrayal. The rhetoric is self-serving, but the word reveals how nakedness/dishonor functions as a powerful social sanction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-nakedness-of | es: y-deshonra-de | fr: [וערות] | de: [וערות] Ezra 4:14

עָרוֹם H6174 Adj-ms (16×)
Naked, unclothed — without garments, whether literally stripped or figuratively destitute and exposed
This adjective describes the state of being without clothing, spanning a wide semantic range from primal innocence to abject vulnerability. In Eden, the man and woman are ʿărûmmîm ('naked') without shame (Gen 2:25) — a wordplay on the serpent's ʿārûm ('crafty') that follows immediately. Elsewhere nakedness signals prophetic sign-acts (Isa 20:2–4; Mic 1:8), social destitution (Job 22:6; 24:7, 10), and the radical equality of birth and death: 'Naked I came from my mother's womb, and naked I shall return' (Job 1:21). Isaiah's call to clothe the naked (Isa 58:7) anticipates Jesus' own teaching in Matthew 25:36.

naked, unclothed (16×) Without clothing or covering, used literally of physical nudity and figuratively of destitution or exposure. The term appears in contexts of primordial innocence (Gen 2:25), prophetic symbolic action where walking naked dramatizes coming shame and exile (Isa 20:2–4; Mic 1:8), social injustice against the vulnerable poor (Job 22:6; 24:7, 10), and existential reflection on the human condition (Job 1:21; Eccl 5:14). German renderings occasionally conflate this term with ʿārûm ('crafty'), as seen in the gloss Klugheit, highlighting the famous paronomasia of Genesis 2:25–3:1. NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE en: and-naked, naked, naked-ones | es: Desnudo, Desnudos, al-desnudo | fr: et-nu, naked, nu | de: Klugheit, [ועֲרום], [ועֲרם] Gen 2:25; 1Sam 19:24; Job 1:21; Job 22:6

עָרוּם H6175 Adj-mp (11×)
Shrewd or crafty — positively: prudent, sensible (Proverbs); negatively: cunning, devious (Genesis 3:1; Job).
This adjective sits on a razor's edge between wisdom and deception. In Proverbs it is entirely positive: the 'arum person foresees danger and hides (22:3; 27:12), acts with knowledge (13:16), and is contrasted with the fool (pethi) and simpleton. Yet in Genesis 3:1 the serpent is described as 'arum more than any beast of the field' — crafty in the service of deception. Job 5:12 and 15:5 likewise deploy it negatively, speaking of the 'schemes of the crafty' and 'the tongue of the crafty.' The same root thus captures the full spectrum of keen intelligence, from praiseworthy discernment to manipulative guile, and context alone determines which end of the spectrum is in view.

1. prudent, shrewd (positive) (8×) Prudent, shrewd, sensible — describing a person who exercises wise forethought and practical intelligence. Throughout Proverbs this is an unambiguously positive quality: the 'arum person conceals knowledge (12:23), foresees evil and takes refuge (22:3; 27:12), and is the opposite of the naive pethi. Korean '슬기로운' (seulgiroun, 'wise/sagacious') and Arabic مُتَيَقِّظ (dhakiyy, 'intelligent') reflect this commendatory sense. Eight of eleven occurrences carry this meaning. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE en: a-prudent-one, but-the-prudent, is-prudent | es: Astuto, Prudente, prudente | fr: et-prudent, prudent | de: klug, und-klug Prov 12:16; Prov 12:23; Prov 13:16; Prov 14:8; Prov 14:15

2. crafty, cunning (negative) (3×) Crafty, cunning, devious — describing shrewdness turned to deceptive or manipulative ends. Genesis 3:1 introduces the serpent as 'arum beyond any creature, establishing the negative pole of this word's range. Job 5:12 warns that God frustrates 'the schemes of the crafty' (machshevot 'arumim), and Job 15:5 accuses the wicked of choosing 'the tongue of the crafty.' French 'rusé' and German 'listig' ('sly, wily') capture the pejorative overtone that 'prudent' alone cannot convey. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE en: crafty, the-crafty | es: astuta, astutos | fr: prudent, rusé | de: klug, listig Gen 3:1; Job 5:12; Job 15:5

עַרְעֵר H6176 Prep-k / N-ms (2×)
A bush or shrub, possibly juniper; desert plant symbolizing desolation
This term designates a desert bush or shrub, traditionally identified as juniper though other identifications have been proposed. Jeremiah uses it twice as a symbol of barrenness and isolation: one who trusts in man 'shall be like a bush in the desert' (17:6), and destroyed Moab is told to 'be like a bush in the wilderness' (48:6). The plant represents survival in harsh conditions but without flourishing—a scraggly existence in desolate places, suitable for illustrating spiritual and national barrenness.

(2×) A masculine noun denoting a desert bush or shrub, likely juniper. The consistent 'like a bush/shrub' simile ('como arbusto') in both Jeremiah passages shows it functioned proverbially for desolation and meager survival. The plant grows in harsh desert conditions but doesn't thrive—making it apt imagery for those who trust in human strength rather than God, or for nations facing judgment. Textual variants exist, but the desert-bush identification remains standard. BUSH SHRUB PLANT
en: like-a-bush, like-shrub | es: como-arbusto, como-arbusto-en | fr: [כערוער], [כערער] | de: [כערוער], [כערער] Jer 17:6; Jer 48:6

עַרְעֵר H6177 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (16×)

Aroer — fortified city on the Arnon gorge rim, marking Israel's southern boundary in Transjordan

Aroer designates primarily the strategically important city perched on the northern edge of the Arnon River gorge in Moab, serving as the southern boundary marker for Israelite territory east of the Jordan. The site, modern ʿArʿāir, controlled access across the deep Arnon canyon. It appears in boundary descriptions from Moses' conquest (Deut 2:36; 3:12; 4:48) through the tribal allotments (Josh 12:2; 13:9, 16) and into the monarchic period (2 Sam 24:5; 2 Kgs 10:33; 1 Chr 5:8). A second Aroer near Rabbah of Ammon is mentioned in Judges 11:33 and Joshua 13:25, and a third in southern Judah received spoils from David (1 Sam 30:28).

Aroer (place name) (16×) A fortified settlement on the northern rim of the Arnon gorge in Moab, functioning as the southernmost landmark of Israelite Transjordanian territory. Referenced consistently in boundary formulae from Deuteronomy through Kings (Deut 2:36; 3:12; Josh 12:2; 2 Kgs 10:33), its strategic position controlling the Arnon crossing made it a perennial boundary marker. The Mesha Inscription (line 26) confirms Moabite familiarity with the site. A possible second Aroer near Rabbah-Ammon (Judg 11:33; Josh 13:25) and a third in the Negev (1 Sam 30:28) share the name. French and German often leave the Hebrew consonantal form untransliterated. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Aroer, and-in-Aroer, from-Aroer | es: Aroer, Desde-Aroer, desde-Aroer | fr: Aroer, [בְעֵרְעֵר], [עֵרוֹעֵר] | de: Aroer, [בְעֵרְעֵר], [עֵרוֹעֵר] Num 32:34; Deut 2:36; Deut 3:12; Deut 4:48; Josh 12:2

עָרוּץ H6178 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

dreadful, terrible (adjective describing a fearsome ravine or gorge)

Job 30:6 describes the destitute as living 'in the most dreadful of ravines,' using this adjective to convey terror and awfulness. The word may be a passive participle meaning 'feared' or 'dreaded,' applied to a landscape so harsh and frightening that it becomes the refuge only of the desperate. The term evokes not just physical danger but the eerie, fearsome quality of desolate canyons where outcasts hide. Spanish uses 'en barranco' (in the ravine), focusing on the geographical feature, while the Hebrew emphasizes the ravine's dreadfulness. Job is recounting the degradation of those who once scorned him—people reduced to dwelling in terrifying, uninhabitable places.

(1×) Job 30:6 uses this adjective to describe ravines or gorges so dreadful that only the most desperate outcasts live there. The term likely derives from a root meaning 'to fear' or 'to dread,' making this a passive participle: 'dreaded ravines.' The context is Job's lament over those who mock him—people so degraded they dwell in frightful, desolate canyons. These are not ordinary valleys but places of terror, perhaps haunted or cursed in the ancient imagination. Spanish 'barranco' names the place, while the Hebrew stresses its fearsome character—an environment so harsh it mirrors the social abyss of its inhabitants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-gorge-of | es: En-barranco-de | fr: dans-בְעָרוּץ | de: [בְעָרוּץ] Job 30:6

עֵרִי H6179 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Eri: son of Gad, eponymous ancestor of the Erite clan

Eri appears as one of Gad's sons in the genealogical lists of Genesis 46 and Numbers 26. As an eponymous ancestor, he gave his name to the Erite clan counted among the Gadites during the wilderness census. These genealogies served to organize tribal identity and land inheritance, making such names foundational to Israel's social structure. The Septuagint's varied transliterations reflect the challenges of rendering Hebrew names into Greek.

(2×) A masculine proper noun designating a son of Gad and his descendant clan. The prepositional phrase 'to Eri' in Numbers 26:16 introduces the Erite clan derived from him. The consistent transliteration across languages preserves the personal name, while the Numbers context ('of Eri' or 'to Eri') marks clan organization. Both occurrences serve genealogical and administrative functions, anchoring one of Gad's subdivisions in the family tree and tribal census. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Eri, to-Eri | es: Eri, de-Eri | fr: Eri, à-Eri | de: Eri, zu-Eri Gen 46:16; Num 26:16

עֵרִי H6180 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Erite, collective gentilic denoting the clan descended from Eri (Numbers 26:16)

Numbers 26:16 lists 'the Erite' as one of the clans of Gad, descended from Eri. The term is a gentilic (ethnic/clan adjective) used collectively with the article to denote the family group. In the wilderness census, each tribe is subdivided into clans, and this is one such subdivision within Gad. The name Eri itself is otherwise obscure, known only from this genealogical context. Greek transliterates it as Addei. The Erites are part of the tribal structure that organizes Israel's military and social life during the wilderness period and the conquest.

(1×) In Numbers 26:16, 'the Erite' designates the clan descended from Eri, a son of Gad. This gentilic form (with the definite article) functions as a collective noun, referring to the whole family group. The wilderness census counts each tribe by its constituent clans, and the Erites are one such lineage within Gad. Nothing else is recorded about Eri or his descendants, but their inclusion in the census ensures they are recognized as a legitimate part of Israel's tribal inheritance. The Greek Addei reflects a variant pronunciation, common in genealogical transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Erite | es: los-eritas | fr: le-Erite | de: der-Erite Num 26:16

עֶרְיָה H6181 N-fs (6×)

Nakedness, bareness — the state of being unclothed, used literally and figuratively of exposure and vulnerability.

Denotes the condition of being naked or exposed, carrying overtones of shame, destitution, and vulnerability. Ezekiel's extended allegory of Jerusalem as an abandoned infant and later an unfaithful wife makes heavy use of this word: the foundling girl was 'naked and bare' (Ezek 16:7), a state from which God rescued her, but to which He threatens to return her as punishment for her infidelity (Ezek 16:22, 39; 23:29). Micah uses it of the town Shaphir going forth in 'nakedness and shame' (Mic 1:11). Habakkuk 3:9 applies it strikingly to God's bow being 'laid bare' — stripped of its cover and ready for battle. Hindi 'nirvstra/nagna' and Spanish 'desnudez' both capture the core sense of utter exposure.

nakedness, bareness (6×) The state of being unclothed or exposed, encompassing both literal bodily nakedness and figurative vulnerability or destitution. Ezekiel deploys the term repeatedly in his allegory of Jerusalem as a woman stripped bare — first as an exposed foundling (Ezek 16:7), then as a punished adulteress returned to her original shame (Ezek 16:22, 39; 23:29). Micah's oracle pictures the town Shaphir marching into exile in 'nakedness and shame' (Mic 1:11). The word consistently pairs exposure with disgrace, making it a term of covenant judgment as much as physical description. NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE en: and-bare, bare, nakedness- | es: Desnudo, desnudez, y-descubierta | fr: et-nu, nu | de: [וְעֶרְיָה], [עֶרְיָה] Ezek 16:7; Ezek 16:22; Ezek 16:39; Ezek 23:29; Mic 1:11

עֲרִיסָה H6182 N-fpc / 2mp (4×)

dough, coarse meal; the first portion of kneaded dough or meal offered to God

A term of uncertain meaning, traditionally understood as dough or coarse meal, referring to the first portion offered to God. Numbers 15:20-21 commands offering 'the first of your dough' to the Lord—a contribution from the first processing of grain into food. Nehemiah 10:37 includes 'the first of our dough' among offerings brought to the priests. Ezekiel 44:30 assigns this firstfruit to the priests. The term may derive from a root related to beds or troughs (where dough was kneaded), or possibly represent barley meal or wheat meal in early processing stages. The consistent context is firstfruits offerings from grain processing.

(4×) Dough or coarse meal, specifically the firstfruits portion offered to God. Numbers 15:20-21 establishes the offering of 'first of your dough' as a perpetual statute. Nehemiah 10:37 and Ezekiel 44:30 confirm this practice of giving the first processed grain to the priests. The four occurrences uniformly refer to this firstfruit obligation from grain products, whether understood as kneaded dough or early-stage meal. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: our-dough, your-dough | es: masas-de-nosotros, vuestra-masa, vuestras-masas | fr: [עֲרִיסֹתֵינוּ], pâte, ton-dough | de: [עֲרִיסֹתֵינוּ], [עֲרִסוֹתֵיכֶם], dein-dough Num 15:20; Num 15:21; Neh 10:37; Ezek 44:30

עָרִיף H6183 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

clouds (possibly thick, dark clouds that obscure light)

Isaiah 5:30 warns of a coming darkness: 'if one looks to the land, behold, darkness and distress, and the light is darkened in its clouds.' This rare noun refers to clouds, possibly the thick, heavy kind that blot out the sun. One scholar proposes emending the text to read 'through its brightness,' referring instead to the land, but the transmitted Hebrew has 'clouds.' The image is apocalyptic—light swallowed by ominous cloud cover, symbolizing judgment and gloom. Spanish uses 'por sus nubes' (by/through its clouds), maintaining the meteorological reference. The verse closes Isaiah's woe oracles with a vision of deepening doom.

(1×) Isaiah 5:30 mentions 'clouds' that darken the light, as part of a vision of coming judgment. The noun is rare and its exact nuance debated, but it clearly refers to cloud cover—probably thick, oppressive clouds that obscure the sun. Some scholars suggest textual emendation, but the Hebrew as it stands points to atmospheric gloom: the land is in darkness and distress, and even the light is swallowed by clouds. Spanish 'sus nubes' confirms the meteorological sense. In prophetic imagery, such clouds often symbolize divine wrath or the darkness of exile and catastrophe. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: in-its-clouds | es: por-sus-nubes | fr: [בְּעֲרִיפֶיהָ] | de: [בְּעֲרִיפֶיהָ] Isa 5:30

עָרִיץ H6184 Adj-mpc (20×)

Awe-inspiring, terror-striking; usually of ruthless tyrants or violent oppressors.

An adjective that conveys fearsome, overwhelming power — almost always in a negative sense. In the prophets and wisdom literature, עָרִיצִים are the ruthless ones: the violent oppressors who crush the poor (Job 6:23; 15:20; 27:13), the foreign tyrants whom God will bring against proud nations (Ezekiel 28:7; 30:11; 31:12). Isaiah uses the word for the Chaldean hordes and, by contrast, for 'awe-inspiring nations' who will honor God (25:3). Intriguingly, Jeremiah 20:11 applies it positively to the LORD himself — 'like a dread warrior' (כְּגִבּוֹר עָרִיץ) — revealing that the root meaning is not inherently evil but about overwhelming, terrifying power.

1. ruthless tyrant or oppressor (18×) A ruthless tyrant, violent oppressor — the dominant, morally negative usage. Used substantively in the plural (עָרִיצִים) throughout Job, Psalms, Isaiah, and Ezekiel for those who wield power cruelly. Job 15:20 describes the wicked as writhing in torment 'all the years stored up for the ruthless one.' Ezekiel repeatedly calls the Babylonians 'the most ruthless of nations' (עָרִיצֵי גּוֹיִם, 28:7; 30:11; 31:12; 32:12). Spanish 'opresores' and 'violentos,' French 'violents,' and German 'Gewalttätige' all capture this sense of tyrannical brutality. TERROR AND AWE

en: and-it-shall-be, and-ruthless-ones, for-ruthless | es: el-tirano, los-violentos-de, opresores | fr: et-violent, violent, violents | de: Gewalttaetige, Gewalttaetiger, [לְעָרִיץ] Job 6:23; Job 15:20; Job 27:13; Ps 37:35; Ps 54:3

2. awe-inspiring, terrifyingly powerful (2×) Awe-inspiring or terrifyingly powerful — an older, more neutral sense focused on the capacity to evoke dread through sheer might rather than moral oppression. In Jeremiah 20:11, the prophet encouragingly applies this word to the LORD: 'the LORD is with me like a dread warrior' (כְּגִבּוֹר עָרִיץ), where the fearsome quality is a source of comfort. Proverbs 11:16 pairs the 'ruthless' with those who gain riches, possibly preserving a sense closer to 'formidable' or 'fierce' without direct moral condemnation. The word's semantic range thus spans from divine awe to human cruelty. TERROR AND AWE

en: and-ruthless-men, fearsome | es: poderoso, y-violentos | fr: et-עָרִיצִים, violent | de: Gewalttaetiger, [עָרִיצִים] Prov 11:16; Jer 20:11

עֲרִירִי H6185 Adj-ms (4×)

childless, stripped; bereft of offspring, without heir or descendants

An adjective meaning childless or stripped, specifically denoting one without descendants. Genesis 15:2 captures Abraham's anguish: 'I continue childless,' fearing he will die without an heir. Jeremiah pronounces judgment on Jeconiah: 'Write this man down as childless' (22:30)—not literally without children, but dynastically, as none would succeed him on David's throne. Leviticus 20:20-21 declares that certain forbidden unions will result in being 'childless'—dying without offspring as divine punishment. The term expresses the devastating ancient Near Eastern condition of having no descendants to carry on one's name and inheritance.

(4×) Childless, without descendants or heir. Genesis 15:2 voices Abraham's fear of dying childless without inheritance. Leviticus 20:20-21 prescribes childlessness as punishment for illicit unions. Jeremiah 22:30 pronounces Jeconiah 'childless' in the dynastic sense—no descendant would reign. All four contexts emphasize the tragedy or judgment of lacking offspring, cutting off one's line and legacy. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: childless | es: sin-hijos | fr: [עֲרִירִי], childless, sans-enfant | de: [עֲרִירִי], childless, kinderlos Gen 15:2; Lev 20:20; Lev 20:21; Jer 22:30

עָרַךְ H6186a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (70×)

To arrange, set in order, draw up in battle array, prepare a table, or compare in value; fundamentally about placing things in proper arrangement.

At its core, עָרַךְ means to arrange or set things in their proper place — but the places where ancient Israelites needed order were remarkably varied. A priest arranges wood on the altar (Lev 1:7), a commander arrays troops for battle (Judg 20:20), a host prepares a table (Ps 23:5), and a sage compares the value of wisdom against gold (Job 28:17-19). Arabic ʿ preserves the military connection ('contend in battle'), while Swahili -panga ('arrange, plan') captures the organizing core. The famous line 'you prepare a table before me in the presence of my enemies' (Ps 23:5) brilliantly condenses two senses — the domestic act of setting a table and the military context of doing so amid hostile forces.

1. arrange in order (32×) To arrange or set things in proper order, especially in cultic and domestic contexts. This is the broadest and most frequent sense: Abraham arranges wood on the altar (Gen 22:9), priests arrange showbread on the table (Exod 40:23), and Aaron arranges lamps (Exod 27:21). Leviticus uses it repeatedly for laying out pieces of a sacrifice in order upon the wood (Lev 1:7-8, 12). Arabic ʿ ('put in order') and Swahili -panga ('arrange') both match this methodical, careful placement. The emphasis falls on proper sequence and right positioning — things placed where they belong. ARRANGE ORDER BATTLE

en: and-arranged, and-he-shall-arrange, and-set-in-order-it | es: Prepara, Y-dispondrán, Y-puso-en-orden | fr: –arranger, devra-arranger, disposer | de: aufstellen, der-ordnete-an, er-soll-anordnen Gen 22:9; Exod 27:21; Exod 40:4; Exod 40:23; Lev 1:7

2. draw up for battle (24×) To draw up or array troops in battle formation. When Israel 'arranged battle' against Benjamin (Judg 20:20, 22, 30, 33) or when Abijah 'set the battle in array' (2 Chr 13:3), the verb describes the deliberate marshaling of soldiers into fighting order. Arabic cognate ʿ ('battle-ground') and the idiom ʿ ('contend in battle') preserve this military register. Korean 전열을 갖추다 ('form battle ranks') captures the image well. Jeremiah's oracle depicts Babylon's enemies told to 'arrange against her round about' (Jer 50:14). The sense extends from the act of arranging to the state of being arrayed — soldiers standing in ordered ranks. ARRANGE ORDER BATTLE

en: and-arranged, and-arrayed, and-drew-up | es: Y-formó, dispongan, dis-

puesto | fr: et-arranged, et-disposer, et-il-tira-en-haut | de: [ערוך], arrayed, aufstellen Gen 14:8; Judg 20:20; Judg 20:22; Judg 20:30; Judg 20:33

3. prepare a table (9×) To prepare or set up, especially a table or provisions, and by extension to present one's case. The shepherd psalm's 'you prepare a table before me' (Ps 23:5) is the iconic example. Job declares 'I have prepared my case' (Job 13:18), and the psalmist says 'in the morning I will arrange my prayer before you' (Ps 5:3). Arabic ʿ ('prepare, make ready') and Swahili -andaa ('make ready') isolate this preparatory nuance from mere physical ordering. Psalm 78:19 asks skeptically whether God 'can prepare a table in the wilderness,' linking provision with divine power. ARRANGE ORDER BATTLE

en: I-have-prepared, I-prepare-, I-set-in-order | es: dispondré-, disponer, he-dispuesto | fr: disposer, ranger, à-ranger | de: [ערכתי], aufstellen, du-bereitest Job 13:18; Ps 5:3; Ps 23:5; Ps 78:19; Ps 132:17

4. compare or equal (5×) To compare, match, or equal in value — a figurative extension where the 'arranging' becomes placing things side by side for evaluation. Job asks 'can gold or crystal equal it?' (Job 28:17) and declares that no precious stone 'can compare' to wisdom (Job 28:19). The psalmist affirms 'who in the skies can be compared to the LORD?' (Ps 89:6), and Isaiah challenges 'to whom will you liken God?' (Isa 40:18). Arabic قارَ ('compare') and Korean 비교하다 ('compare') capture this evaluative sense. The metaphor is of setting two things in a row to measure them against each other — arrangement repurposed as assessment. ARRANGE ORDER BATTLE

en: can-compare, comparing, equals-it | es: comparación, la-igualará, le-compararеis | fr: disposer, ranger | de: [יערכנה], aufstellen, comparing Job 28:17; Job 28:19; Ps 40:5; Ps 89:6; Isa 40:18

עָרַךְ H6186b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (6×)

To assess value, appraise (Hifil) — priestly valuation of persons or property dedicated to YHWH.

The Hifil conjugation of 'arakh used as a technical term for priestly monetary assessment. In the Levitical legislation of Leviticus 27, when a person, animal, or house is dedicated to YHWH by a vow, the priest must set its monetary value according to prescribed scales. The priest 'assesses' the person (Lev 27:8, 12, 14), establishing what must be paid to redeem the dedicated object. This valuation function belongs exclusively to the priest, making the Hifil form a term of sacral-economic administration. The sole occurrence outside Leviticus is 2 Kings 23:35, where Jehoiakim 'assessed the land' to raise Pharaoh Neco's tribute — a secular appropriation of cultic taxation language. Spanish 'valuará' and French 'valeur' both render the appraisal sense directly.

to assess value, appraise (Hifil) (6×) The Hifil stem of 'arakh functioning as a technical term for priestly valuation: setting a monetary worth on persons, animals, or property vowed to YHWH. Five of six occurrences cluster in Leviticus 27 (vv. 8, 8, 12, 14, 14), where the priest determines redemption prices according to the votary's means. The sixth, 2 Kings 23:35, extends the concept to royal taxation when Jehoiakim 'assessed the land' to pay Pharaoh Neco's tribute — borrowing sacral vocabulary for state fiscal administration. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: and-shall-value, and-shall-value-it, he-assessed | es: Y-valuará, entonces-la-valuará, lo-valuará | fr: devra-valeur-lui, et-devra-valeur, et-devra-valeur-cela | de: er-assessed, soll-Wert-ihn, und-soll-Wert Lev 27:8; Lev 27:12; Lev 27:14

עֵרֶךְ H6187 Prep-k / N-msc / 3ms (33×)

Valuation or assessed worth (priestly estimation); arrangement, row, or orderly set; a peer or equal in rank.

The Hebrew noun erekh fundamentally concerns ordering and assessment. In nearly all its occurrences it denotes the monetary valuation a priest sets on a person or animal dedicated to the LORD by vow, a graded scale spelled out in Leviticus 27. Spanish valuacion, French estimation, and German Schaetzung converge on the appraisal concept. But the root also carries an older spatial sense: objects arranged in a row, as with the showbread on the tabernacle table (Exod 40:23). A single poetic occurrence in Psalm 55:13 uses erekh to mean 'my equal' — a strikingly relational extension of a word rooted in measurement.

1. valuation, estimated worth (28×) The monetary or ritual valuation set by the priest under the vow-and-dedication system of Leviticus 27 and related passages. With 28 occurrences, this overwhelmingly dominant sense designates the assessed worth of a person, animal, or property dedicated to the LORD, graded by age, sex, and economic capacity (Lev 27:2-8). Spanish valuacion, French estimation, and German Schaetzung all cluster around the appraisal concept. The phrase ke-erkekha ('according to your valuation') recurs as a formulaic marker, always pointing to the priest's authoritative assessment (Lev 5:15, 18; 6:6; Num 18:16). WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: according-to-your-valuation, by-your-valuation, valuation | es: conforme-a-tu-valuación, según-tu-valuación, según-valuación-tuya | fr: par-ton-estimation, par-ton-valuation, selon-ton-estimation | de: Schaetzung, dein-Schaetzung, durch-dein-Schaetzung Lev 5:15; Lev 5:18; Lev 6:6; Lev 27:2; Lev 27:3

2. arrangement, order, row (4×) A physical arrangement, row, or orderly set of objects — the spatial sense from which the word's evaluative meaning likely derived. Only 4 occurrences survive: the showbread arranged in rows on the tabernacle table (Exod 40:4, 23), a complete suit of garments laid out for a Levite (Judg 17:10), and Job 41:12, where erekh describes the symmetry or bodily proportion of Leviathan. Spanish disposicion, French arrangement, and German Anordnung capture the spatial ordering. The connection to sense 1 is organic: to value something is to place it in its proper order or rank. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-set-of, arrangement-of, his-proportion | es: disposición-de, su-disposición, y-un-conjunto-de | fr: arrangement-de, et-placer-de, son-arrangement | de: [ערכו], arrangement-von, sein-arrangement Exod 40:4; Exod 40:23; Judg 17:10; Job 41:12

3. equal, equivalent person (1×) A peer, equal, or person of comparable rank — an interpersonal extension appearing only in Psalm 55:13, where the psalmist laments betrayal by ke-erki, 'one like my equal,' a companion of the same standing. Spanish igual, French egal, and German Gleicher all render this with straightforward equivalence vocabulary. The leap from 'assessed worth' to 'one assessed as equal to me' is a natural metaphorical extension, making this rare sense a bridge between the word's quantitative and relational dimensions. EQUAL SAME WORTH

en: my-equal | es: como-mi-igual | fr: comme-estimation | de: mein-equal Ps 55:13

עָרַל H6188 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2mp (2×)

To count or regard as uncircumcised; to treat fruit as forbidden or to expose shamefully

This denominative verb means to treat something as uncircumcised or forbidden. In Leviticus 19:23, it commands Israelites to 'regard as uncircumcised' (forbidden) the fruit of newly planted trees for three years. In Habakkuk 2:16, a disputed text, it possibly means 'be exposed' or 'show yourself uncircumcised' as shameful exposure, though many emend to 'stagger' or 'reel.' The verb takes the concept of uncircumcision—culturally associated with defilement—and applies it metaphorically to forbidden fruit or shameful exposure.

(2×) A Qal denominative verb meaning to count or treat as uncircumcised/forbidden. The Leviticus usage establishes a ritual-agricultural law: new trees' fruit is 'uncircumcised' (off-limits) for three years. The multilingual evidence shows both the ritual sense ('contaréis como incircunciso') and the exposure sense ('muestra tu incircuncisión'). The Habakkuk text is uncertain; ancient versions and modern emendations vary, but the concept of shameful exposure fits the judgment context. UNCIRCUMCISION

en: and-be-exposed, and-you-count-as-uncircumcised | es: y-contaréis-como-incircunciso, y-muestra-tu-incircuncisión | fr: et-prépuce, et-tu-compter-comme-uncircumcised | de: [והערל], und-du-zaehlen-wie-uncircumcised Lev 19:23; Hab 2:16

עָרֵל H6189 Adj-msc (35×)

Uncircumcised — literally of persons; figuratively of closed hearts, lips, or ears; of forbidden fruit

The adjective עָרֵל ('uncircumcised') is far more than a physical descriptor in the Hebrew Bible — it is a loaded theological and ethnic marker. Literally, it identifies males who have not undergone circumcision, making them outsiders to the Abrahamic covenant (Gen 17:14). The Philistines are 'the uncircumcised' par excellence (Judg 14:3; 1 Sam 17:26), and Ezekiel consigns entire nations to the pit of 'the uncircumcised' (Ezek 32:19-32). Metaphorically, Moses protests that he has 'uncircumcised lips' (Exod 6:12), Jeremiah warns of 'uncircumcised ears' (Jer 6:10), and Leviticus declares the fruit of newly planted trees 'uncircumcised' for three years (Lev 19:23).

1. literally uncircumcised (of persons) (27×) Literally uncircumcised — describing males or peoples who lack physical circumcision, used especially of the Philistines and other non-Israelite nations as a term of ethnic and covenantal reproach. Genesis 17:14 decrees that every uncircumcised male shall be cut off from his people. The Philistines are called 'the uncircumcised' in 1 Samuel 17:26 and 31:4. Ezekiel 28-32 repeatedly consigns nations to lie with 'the uncircumcised' in death. Spanish 'incircunciso,' French 'incirconcis,' and German 'unbeschnitten' all mark the literal physical sense. UNCIRCUMCISION

en: the-uncircumcised, uncircumcised | es: el-incircunciso, incircunciso, incircuncisos | fr: [הערלים], [ערלים], le-incirconcis | de: der-uncircumcised, unbeschnitten Gen 17:14; Exod 12:48; Lev 19:23; Lev 26:41; Josh 5:7

2. figuratively closed or insensitive (7×) Figuratively closed, blocked, or insensitive — used in construct state with body parts to describe spiritual dullness or inability. Moses says he has 'uncircumcised lips' (Exod 6:12, 30), meaning he cannot speak persuasively. Jeremiah 6:10 speaks of ears that are 'uncircumcised' and cannot hear God's word. Ezekiel 44:7-9 denounces those 'uncircumcised in heart and flesh.' The metaphor extends circumcision from a physical sign to an inner reality, a theme Paul will later develop in Romans 2:28-29. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-uncircumcised-of, are-uncircumcised-of, uncircumcised-of | es: e-incircunciso-de, e-incircuncisos-de, incircunciso-de | fr: [וערל], [וערלי], [ערל] | de: Unbeschnittene, [ערלי], unbeschnitten Exod 6:12; Exod 6:30; Jer 9:26; Ezek 44:7

3. forbidden fruit of young trees (1×) Applied to the forbidden fruit of young trees — Leviticus 19:23 commands Israel to regard the fruit of newly planted trees as 'uncircumcised' (עֲרֵלִים) for three years, treating the produce as impure and off-limits. Just as a foreskin must be removed before a male enters the covenant, so the first fruits must be withheld before the tree's produce can be consecrated. This agricultural application is unique to this single passage but reveals how deeply the circumcision metaphor permeated Israelite thought. UNCIRCUMCISION

en: uncircumcised | es: incircunciso | fr: [ערלה] | de: [ערלה] Jer 6:10

עָרְלָה H6190 N-fs (16×)

Foreskin — the prepuce removed in circumcision; figuratively, the 'covering' of the heart or fruit trees

A feminine noun denoting the fold of skin removed during the rite of circumcision, central to the Abrahamic covenant (Gen 17:11-25). David famously brings a hundred Philistine foreskins as a bride-price for Michal (1 Sam 18:25, 27). Beyond the anatomical sense, the word carries striking figurative force: Moses commands Israel to 'circumcise the foreskin of your heart' (Deut 10:16; Jer 4:4), while Leviticus 19:23 applies it to the first fruits of newly planted trees, deemed 'uncircumcised' for three years. Spanish 'prepucio' and French 'prepuce' preserve the literal anatomical meaning, but German 'Vorhaut' (fore-skin) mirrors the Hebrew etymology most closely.

foreskin, prepuce (16×) The foreskin or prepuce, the fold of skin covering the glans of the penis, removed as the physical sign of covenant membership. Used literally of the tissue itself in circumcision narratives (Gen 17:11, 14, 23-25; Exod 4:25; Josh 5:3) and as trophies of warfare (1 Sam 18:25, 27; 2 Sam 3:14). Figuratively extended to the 'foreskin of the heart' denoting spiritual insensitivity or obstinacy (Deut 10:16; Jer 4:4; 9:25), and to fruit trees whose early yield is treated as 'uncircumcised' and forbidden for three years (Lev 19:23). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: foreskin, foreskin-its, foreskin-of | es: con-prepucio, los-prepucios, los-prepucios-de | fr: [בערלה], [ערלות], foreskin | de: Vorhaut-sein, Vorhaut-von, [בערלה] Gen 17:11; Gen 17:14; Gen 17:23; Gen 17:24; Gen 17:25

עָרַם H6191 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (5×)

to be shrewd, crafty, or prudent; to act with cunning or discernment

A verb spanning the morally ambiguous territory between wisdom and cunning. In 1 Sam 23:22, Saul warns that David 'is exceedingly crafty' — here the word carries a negative, threatening sense. Yet in Proverbs, the same root takes on positive coloring: the naive 'becomes prudent' through correction (Prov 19:25), and heeding reproof makes one shrewd (Prov 15:5). In Ps 83:3, enemies 'make crafty their counsel' against God's people. Spanish distinguishes 'astuto' (cunning) from 'prudente' (prudent), revealing the dual moral valence that makes this word so contextually rich.

(5×) To be shrewd or crafty in a negative sense — to act with cunning, guile, or deceptive cleverness. Saul's warning about David in 1 Sam 23:22 ('he is exceedingly crafty') and the enemies' scheming in Ps 83:3 ('they make crafty their counsel') exemplify hostile, manipulative shrewdness. Spanish 'astuto' and French 'rusé' capture this calculating quality. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: becomes-prudent, cunning, he-is-cunning | es: astuto, es-astuto, se-hace-prudente | fr: il-est-rusé, rusé, être-rusé | de: [ערם], cunning, er-ist-cunning 1Sam 23:22; Ps 83:3; Prov 15:5; Prov 19:25

עָרַם H6192 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be heaped up, piled up (Niphal, of water or other substances)

Exodus 15:8 celebrates the miracle at the Red Sea: 'The waters were heaped up... the floods stood upright as a heap.' This Niphal verb describes water piling up vertically, defying gravity as God blows with His breath. Cognate languages (Sabean, Arabic, Aramaic, Syriac) share roots related to heaps, dams, and piles. The imagery is of water forming a wall or mound, creating a path through the sea. Spanish 'se amontonaron' (they piled up) and French 'piled up' both capture the sense of accumulation and vertical stacking. It is a miraculous reversal of water's natural flow.

(1×) Exodus 15:8 uses this Niphal verb to describe how 'the waters were heaped up' when God parted the Red Sea. The verb conveys piling or stacking, as if the sea became a solid heap or wall. Cognates in Sabean, Arabic, and Syriac refer to dams, heaps, or embankments, confirming the sense of accumulated mass. The miracle is that fluid water behaves like solid matter, standing upright in defiance of nature. Spanish 'amontonaron' and French 'piled up' preserve the vertical, heaped imagery. This is Israel's founding deliverance—water transformed into walls by the breath of God. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: were-piled-up | es: se-amontonaron | fr: étaient-piled-en-haut | de: waren-piled-hinauf Exod 15:8

עָרֹם H6193 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf / 3mp (1×)

craftiness, cunning, shrewd wisdom used for deceptive ends

Job 5:13 declares that God 'catches the wise in their own craftiness,' quoted by Paul in 1 Corinthians 3:19. This noun denotes cunning or shrewdness, the clever scheming of those who think themselves too smart to be caught. The root is related to 'ormah' (craftiness) and may derive from the idea of being shrewd or prudent. The context in Job is ironic: human cleverness becomes a trap when God intervenes. Spanish 'en su astucia' (in their cunning) and the idea of 'craftiness' both convey intelligence turned toward deceptive or self-serving ends. It is wisdom without righteousness.

(1×) Job 5:13 says God 'catches the wise in their craftiness,' using this noun to denote cunning or clever scheming. The term is related to 'ormah' (prudence, shrewdness), often with a negative connotation when it becomes mere cleverness for selfish gain. Paul quotes this verse in 1 Corinthians 3:19, applying it to human wisdom that opposes God. Spanish 'astucia' captures the sense of cunning intelligence—mental agility used for deceptive purposes. The irony is that craftiness, no matter how sophisticated, becomes the snare of those who rely on it instead of fearing God. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: in-their-craftiness | es: en-su-astucia | fr: dans-בערמם-eux | de: [בערמם] Job 5:13

עַרְמָה H6194 Prep-m / N-fpc (11×)
A heap or pile, used of grain stores, rubbish mounds, and ruins
Denotes a mound formed by accumulation — whether of harvested grain, rubble, or destroyed buildings. In Ruth 3:7, Boaz lies down at the end of a grain heap after winnowing, a scene rich with harvest imagery. Haggai 2:16 uses the word for a grain pile that disappoints expectations. In Nehemiah 3:34 and Jeremiah 50:26 it shifts to rubble and ruin-heaps, where the Spanish 'montón' and French 'monceau' both capture the sense of a formless mass piled up.

heap, pile (11×) A heap or pile of material, whether grain stored after harvest (Ruth 3:7; Hag 2:16; Neh 13:15), rubble from demolished walls (Neh 3:34), or ruins of a conquered city (Jer 50:26). The Song of Songs (7:3) employs it poetically for a heap of wheat. Cross-linguistically, translations converge on 'heap/mound' imagery — Spanish 'montón,' French 'monceau/tas' — confirming a single broad sense covering any accumulated pile. HEAPS AND MOUNDS en: from-heaps-of, heap-of, heaps | es: de-montón-de, el-montón, los-montones | fr: [ערמים], le-monceau, les-tas | de: [הערמות], [מערמות], [ערמות] Ruth 3:7; 2Chr 31:6; 2Chr 31:7; 2Chr 31:8

עָרְמָה H6195 N-fs (5×)
craftiness, cunning, or prudence; shrewdness applied either deceptively or wisely
The noun form of the root meaning 'to be shrewd,' carrying the same dual moral charge as its verbal counterpart. In Exodus 21:14 it describes lethal premeditation — killing 'with cunning' — and in Josh 9:4 the Gibeonites act 'with craftiness' to deceive Israel. Yet Proverbs reclaims the word positively: wisdom offers 'prudence to the simple' (Prov 1:4), and personified Wisdom declares 'I dwell with prudence' (Prov 8:12). Spanish 'astucia' and German 'Klugheit' split along the same moral axis, revealing how context determines whether this quality is vice or virtue.

(5×) Craftiness or cunning — shrewd calculation applied deceptively or with harmful intent. In Exod 21:14 it characterizes premeditated murder ('with cunning'), and in Josh 9:4 the Gibeonites employ it to trick Israel into a covenant. Spanish 'con astucia' and French 'avec ruse' emphasize the manipulative, underhanded quality. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14351 WITH 4 SENSES
en: prudence, with-cunning | es: astucia, con-astucia | fr: avec-cunning, avec-rusé, ruse | de: Klugheit, mit-cunning Exod 21:14; Josh 9:4; Prov 1:4; Prov 8:5; Prov 8:12

עַרְמוֹן H6196 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
Plane tree or chestnut tree; a tree with distinctive bark used in Jacob's breeding strategy
This tree is traditionally identified as the plane tree, named for its bark that naturally peels or can be stripped. Genesis 30:37 describes Jacob stripping bark from plane, almond, and poplar branches for his livestock breeding scheme. Ezekiel 31:8 mentions plane trees in Eden's garden as part of the magnificent imagery comparing Assyria to a great cedar. The plane tree was notable in the ancient Near East for its size and distinctive appearance.

(2×) A masculine noun designating the plane tree (Platanus orientalis). The Genesis context involves Jacob peeling its bark to create striped rods ('de castaño,' 'platane'), while Ezekiel uses plural 'plane trees' among Eden's splendors. The Hebrew name likely derives from the stripped or peeled appearance of the bark. Cross-linguistic variation ('castaño' vs. 'plátano') reflects ongoing botanical identification debates, but ancient sources consistently point to a large, impressive tree with notable bark. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES
en: and-plane-tree, and-plane-trees | es: y-de-castaño, y-plátanos | fr: et-plane-arbre, et-platane | de: [וערמנים], und-Platane Gen 30:37; Ezek 31:8

עֵרָן H6197 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)
Eran, a personal name in Ephraim (Numbers 26:36); possibly textual variant of Eden
Eran is listed in Numbers 26:36 as a descendant of Ephraim, ancestor of the Eranite clan. However, the Samaritan text and some manuscripts read 'Eden' instead, and the Greek has Εδεν, suggesting textual variation. The name may be a scribal variant or a genuine alternative form. Beyond this census reference, Eran is unknown. The wilderness census preserves the clan structure of Ephraim, and whether Eran or Eden is the original reading, the name represents a legitimate family line within Joseph's tribe. The Eranites are counted among Ephraim's divisions for military and land-allocation purposes.

(1×) Eran appears in Numbers 26:36 as an Ephraimite ancestor, though the text is uncertain—the Samaritan Pentateuch and some Hebrew manuscripts read 'Eden,' and the Greek supports this. The variation likely reflects different manuscript traditions or dialectical pronunciations. Either way, Eran/Eden is the eponymous ancestor of a clan within Ephraim. Nothing else is known about him, but his name ensures his family's place in the tribal census and eventual land inheritance. The census organizes Israel for the conquest, and every clan—even those known only by a name—has a stake in the promised land. PERSONAL NAMES
en: to-Eran | es: de-Erán | fr: à-Eran | de: zu-Eran Num 26:36

עֵרָנִי H6198 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Eranite, collective gentilic for the clan descended from Eran (Numbers 26:36)
Numbers 26:36 names 'the Eranite' as the clan descended from Eran (or Eden, per variant readings) within the tribe of Ephraim. This gentilic form, with the definite article, designates the family group collectively. The Samaritan text and Greek manuscripts reflect 'Edenite' instead, consistent with the variant reading of the ancestor's name. Regardless of spelling, the Eranites are one of the Ephraimite clans counted in the wilderness census. They represent a subdivision of Joseph's prominent tribe, entitled to a portion of the land inheritance west of the Jordan.

(1×) In Numbers 26:36, 'the Eranite' denotes the clan descended from Eran, part of the tribe of Ephraim. The term is a gentilic used collectively (with the article) to refer to the whole family group. Textual variants (Samaritan 'Edenite,' Greek Εδενει) suggest the name was transmitted with some variation, but the sense is clear: this is a recognized lineage within Ephraim. The census ensures each clan's identity and land claim. The Eranites, though otherwise unknown, are numbered among the tribes of Israel and have a place in the covenant community. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Eranite | es: los-eranitas | fr: le-Eranite | de: der-Eranite Num 26:36

עַרְעָר H6199 Art / N-ms (1×)
the destitute, stripped, one left bare and without resources
Psalm 102:17 speaks of God regarding 'the prayer of the destitute,' using this adjective (with article) as a noun for someone utterly stripped of resources and dignity. The root conveys bareness, nakedness, deprivation. In the ancient world, the destitute are those without land, family, or social standing—completely vulnerable. The psalmist, crying out from deep affliction, identifies with this class. Spanish 'el despojado' (the despoiled, stripped one) and French 'le nu' (the naked/bare one) both emphasize the stripping away of what sustains life. Yet the psalm affirms that God does not despise their prayer—hope exists even for the utterly destitute.

(1×) Psalm 102:17 promises that the Lord 'regards the prayer of the destitute.' This adjective-turned-noun describes someone completely stripped, left bare of possessions, status, and hope—'the naked one,' in the social sense. The root is about bareness and exposure. In Israel's honor-shame culture, to be destitute is to have lost everything that gives one a place in society. Yet the psalmist proclaims that God does not turn away from such prayers. Spanish 'despojado' and French 'nu' both capture the vulnerability. This is a theology of divine attentiveness to the lowest, those the world ignores. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: the-destitute | es: el-despojado | fr: le-nu | de: der-destitute Ps 102:17

עַרְעֵרִי H6200 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Aroerite, gentilic denoting someone from Aroer (1 Chronicles 11:44)

First Chronicles 11:44 lists 'the Aroerite' among David's mighty warriors. This gentilic designates someone from Aroer, a place name that appears multiple times in Scripture, most commonly referring to a city on the Arnon River in Moab. The term identifies the warrior's hometown or clan origin. Greek manuscripts transliterate variously, showing some uncertainty. The mighty men of David came from diverse regions, and this Aroerite represents one such geographic and perhaps ethnic origin. He is known only by his place of origin, but his inclusion among the elite warriors honors his hometown.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 11:44, 'the Aroerite' is one of David's elite warriors, identified by his place of origin. Aroer is a town name appearing several times in the Hebrew Bible, most famously a Moabite city on the Arnon. The gentilic form marks the warrior's geographic or clan identity. Greek versions show slight variation in transliteration, typical of place-derived names. David's mighty men hailed from all over Israel and beyond, and this Aroerite—otherwise anonymous—earns his place in the honor roll by virtue of his valor. His hometown gains fame through his deeds. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Aroerite | es: el-aroerita | fr: [הָעַרְעֵרִי] | de: [הָעַרְעֵרִי] 1Chr 11:44

עָרַף H6201 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (2×)

To drip or drop, used of heavens dripping dew or teaching dripping like rain

This verb means to drip or let fall in drops, like water from clouds. Deuteronomy 32:2 uses it in Moses' poetic comparison: 'Let my teaching drop like the rain,' parallel to 'distill like the dew.' Deuteronomy 33:28 describes blessed Israel whose 'heavens drip dew.' The verb captures the gentle but persistent falling of moisture, making it apt for both meteorological description and metaphor for teaching that gradually penetrates like rain soaking into soil.

(2×) A Qal imperfect verb meaning to drip, drop, or distill. The meteorological usage ('his heavens drip dew') describes natural precipitation. The metaphorical usage compares Moses' teaching to dripping rain—instruction falling gently but steadily upon listeners. The multilingual glosses ('destilarán,' 'goteará,' 'drip') consistently convey this idea of liquid falling in drops. The parallel with 'distill' (nazal) reinforces the image of moisture descending from above to water the earth or soul. DRIPPING LIQUID

en: drip, let-drip | es: destilarán, goteará | fr: drip, laisse-drip | de: drip, lass-drip Deut 32:2; Deut 33:28

עָרַף H6202 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms / 3ms (6×)

To break the neck (of an animal); to break down or destroy (altars)

The verb עָרַף is a denominative from עֹרֶף ('neck, nape') and literally means to break an animal's neck. It appears in two ritual contexts: the unredeemed firstborn donkey whose neck must be broken (Exod 13:13; 34:20), and the heifer whose neck is broken in the unsolved murder ritual of Deut 21:4, 6. Isaiah 66:3 compares illicit sacrifice to one 'breaking a dog's neck.' In a single prophetic extension, Hosea uses the image figuratively: God will 'break down' their altars (Hos 10:2), transferring the violent neck-snapping action to the destruction of cultic objects.

1. break the neck (5×) To break the neck of an animal, a ritual action prescribed in Israelite law. Spanish 'desnucaras' (you shall break the neck) and French 'briser son cou' (break its neck) precisely render this concrete sense. The unredeemed donkey firstling must have its neck broken (Exod 13:13; 34:20), the heifer in the unsolved murder rite undergoes the same fate (Deut 21:4, 6), and Isa 66:3 likens empty ritual to 'breaking a dog's neck.' The violent specificity of the action — snapping the cervical vertebrae — distinguishes it from general slaughter vocabulary. NECK (BODY PART)

en: and-they-shall-break-neck-, and-you-shall-break-its-neck, breaking-neck-of | es: como-si-desnucara, la-desnucada, y-desnucarás-lo | fr: et-ils-devra-briser-cou-, et-tu—briser-son-cou, le-cou-brisé | de: Nacken, der-neck-gebrochen, und-du-soll-brechen-sein-neck Exod 13:13; Exod 34:20; Deut 21:4; Deut 21:6; Isa 66:3

2. break down, destroy (1×) To break down or demolish, used figuratively of destroying altars. In Hos 10:2, God declares that he will 'break down' (ya'arof) Israel's altars because their heart is divided. Spanish 'rompera' (he will break) and French 'briser' (to break) shift from neck-specific vocabulary to general destruction terms, confirming the metaphorical transfer from a concrete bodily act to demolition of cultic installations. Only one occurrence attests this extended sense. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: will-break-down | es: romperá | fr: briser | de: [יִעְרֹף] Hos 10:2

עֹרֶף H6203 N-ms (33×)

Back of the neck: stiffened in stubborn resistance; turned in flight from enemies; the literal nape.

The Hebrew noun oreph names the back of the neck — the part you see when someone turns away. Most famously, the compound qesheh-oreph ('stiff-necked') became Israel's defining self-description: a people who stiffen the nape and refuse to bow (Exod 32:9; Deut 9:6). Spanish cerviz and French nuque preserve the body-part specificity. Separately, oreph appears in military contexts where enemies 'turn the back of the neck' in flight (Gen 49:8; Ps 18:40), and in a handful of passages it simply names the physical nape in contexts of grasping or striking (Lev 5:8; Job 16:12).

1. neck (stiff-necked stubbornness) (17×) The neck as the seat of stubbornness, concentrated in the idiom qesheh-oreph ('stiff of neck'), describing obstinate refusal to submit to God's will or accept correction. With 17 occurrences, this is the dominant sense, recurring as a divine accusation against Israel from Sinai onward: 'I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people' (Exod 32:9; 33:3, 5; 34:9; Deut 9:6, 13; 10:16). Spanish dura cerviz, French raide de cou, and Korean 목이 굳은 all attempt to render the physical metaphor of a neck that will not bend. Jeremiah and Chronicles extend this to later generations who 'stiffened their neck' against the prophets (2 Kgs 17:14; 2 Chr 30:8; 36:13; Neh 9:16-17, 29). NECK (BODY PART)

en: and-their-neck, and-your-neck, is-your-neck | es: cerviz, cerviz-de-ellos, cerviz-suya | fr: [וְעָרְפָם], [עָרְפְכֶם], [עָרְפָם] | de: Nacken, [וְעָרְפָם], [עָרְפְכֶם] Exod 32:9; Exod 33:3; Exod 33:5; Exod 34:9; Deut 9:6

2. back of neck (turning away) (10×) The back of the neck as shown when turning away — whether fleeing from enemies in battle or turning one's back on God in apostasy. With 10 occurrences, this sense appears in the promise that Judah's hand will be 'on the neck of your enemies' as they flee (Gen 49:8), in the military defeat at Ai where Israel 'turned their backs before their enemies' (Josh 7:8, 12), and in Jeremiah's portrait of apostasy: 'they turned their back to me, and not their face' (Jer 2:27; 32:33). Spanish espalda, French dos, and German Ruecken shift from 'neck' to 'back' vocabulary, reflecting that the translators sense the directional meaning — it is the posture of retreat and rejection, not mere anatomy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: back, back-of-neck, its-back | es: espalda, nuca | fr: [עֹרֶף], cou, dos-de-cou | de: Nacken, [עֹרֶף], back-von-neck Exod 23:27; Josh 7:8; Josh 7:12; 2Sam 22:41; 2Chr 29:6

3. nape of neck (physical body part) (6×) The literal nape of the neck as a physical body part in non-idiomatic contexts involving grasping, striking, pinching off, or describing anatomical contact. With 6 occurrences, this straightforward sense appears in the sacrificial procedure of pinching off a bird's head at the neck (Lev 5:8), God seizing Job 'by the nape' and dashing him to pieces (Job

16:12), and Habakkuk's curse of pouring out wrath 'to lay bare the neck' (Hab 3:13). Spanish nuca, French nuque, and German Nacken render the plain anatomy. The distinction from senses 1 and 2 is that here the neck is a physical target rather than a metaphor for defiance or flight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-my-neck, his-neck, its-neck | es: cerviz, como-cerviz-de, en-nuca-de | fr: [עֹרֶף], comme-cou-de, dans-mon-בְּעָרְפִּי-moi | de: [בְּעָרְפִּי], [עֹרֶף], [עָרְפּוֹן] Gen 49:8; Lev 5:8; 2Kgs 17:14; 2Chr 36:13; Job 16:12

עָרְפָּה H6204 N-proper-fs (2×)

Orpah: Ruth's sister-in-law who returned to Moab rather than accompanying Naomi to Judah

Orpah married one of Naomi's sons but was widowed during the family's sojourn in Moab. When Naomi decided to return to Judah, Orpah initially started the journey but ultimately kissed her mother-in-law farewell and returned to her people. This decision contrasts sharply with Ruth's famous loyalty ('where you go I will go'). Orpah represents the understandable choice to remain with one's own people, while Ruth's choice led to inclusion in the Messianic line.

(2×) A feminine proper noun designating Ruth's Moabite sister-in-law. The name appears in Ruth 1:4 (introducing her) and 1:14 (describing her departure). The consistent transliteration across languages ('Orpá,' 'Orpa') preserves the Hebrew name. While often contrasted negatively with Ruth, the narrative presents Orpah's choice sympathetically—she blessed Naomi and left honorably. Her decision represents the expected course; Ruth's path was the extraordinary one. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Orpah | es: Orpá | fr: Orpa | de: Orpa Ruth 1:4; Ruth 1:14

עֲרָפֶל H6205 Conj-w / N-ms (15×)

Thick darkness or heavy cloud, especially the dense obscurity enveloping God's theophanic presence.

The ᶜărāphel is the deep, impenetrable darkness that surrounds God when he draws near—the heavy cloud shrouding Sinai (Exod 20:21; Deut 4:11; 5:22), the thick darkness Solomon declares God has chosen to dwell in (1 Kgs 8:12), and the murk beneath Yahweh's feet in the great theophany psalms (2 Sam 22:10; Ps 18:9). It is distinct from ordinary cloud (ᶜānān) yet paired with it, suggesting a denser, more terrifying stratum. Job 38:9 poetically wraps the primeval sea in ᶜărāphel as a swaddling cloth. Prophets extend the image to judgment and calamity: Jeremiah warns of stumbling on dark mountains (Jer 13:16), and Zephaniah names the Day of the Lord a day of cloud and ᶜărāphel (Zeph 1:15).

thick darkness, dark cloud (15×) Dense, heavy darkness or thick cloud mass, used primarily of the mysterious obscurity attending God's self-revelation and secondarily as a figure of doom and distress. At Sinai the ᶜărāphel is the innermost layer of darkness surrounding the divine presence, distinct from the accompanying cloud and fire (Deut 4:11; 5:22). Solomon invokes it at the temple dedication (1 Kgs 8:12), and the psalmist sees it beneath God's feet in storm-theophany (Ps 18:9). Prophetic usage extends the motif to eschatological gloom (Ezek 34:12; Zeph 1:15; Isa 60:2). DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-the-thick-darkness, and-thick-darkness, in-the-thick-darkness | es: en-la-oscuridad, en-la-oscuridad-densa, la-densa-nube | fr: [בְּעֲרָפֶל], [וְעֲרָפֶל], [לַעֲרָפֶל] | de: [בְּעֲרָפֶל], [וְעֲרָפֶל], [לַעֲרָפֶל] Exod 20:21; Deut 4:11; Deut 5:22; 2Sam 22:10; 1Kgs 8:12

עָרַץ H6206 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (15×)

To tremble in terror or dread; causatively to terrify or strike with awe; passively to be feared or awesome.

This verb captures both sides of dread — the terror felt and the terror inflicted. Moses tells Israel 'do not be terrified' before the nations (Deut 7:21), while God rises 'to terrify the earth' (Isa 2:19). The root thus moves fluidly between subject and object of fear. Spanish distinguishes nicely: 'aterroricéis' (be terrified) for the intransitive dread, 'aterrorizar' (to terrorize) for the causative, and 'temido' (feared) for the passive. In its highest register, the Hifil and Nifal forms describe the holy awe surrounding God himself — 'greatly feared in the assembly of the holy ones' (Ps 89:7).

1. to dread, be terrified (7×) To dread or be terrified: the intransitive experience of trembling before a threatening force. This is the most frequent sense, running through Deuteronomy's battle encouragements — 'do not dread them' (Deut 1:29; 7:21; 31:6) and Joshua's commissioning (Josh 1:9). Spanish 'aterroricéis' and French 'effrayer' consistently render the subject's own fear. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: I-feared, be-terrified, you-shall-be-terrified | es: os-aterroricéis, os-aterréis, te-espantes | fr: effrayer, sois-effrayé, tu-devra-dread | de: [אֶעֱרוֹץ], [תֵּעָרִיצוּ], du-soll-Schrecken Deut 1:29; Deut 7:21; Deut 20:3; Deut 31:6; Josh 1:9

2. to terrify, cause terror (5×) To terrify or cause terror: the transitive or causative sense where the subject frightens another. God asks Job, 'Will you terrify a driven leaf?' (Job 13:25), and he rises 'to terrify the earth' (Isa 2:19, 21). Babylon is challenged whether her sorceries 'will cause terror' (Isa 47:12). Spanish 'aterrorizar' and French 'effrayer' (in causative context) mark the outward direction of dread. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-terrify, you-frighten, you-will-cause-terror | es: aterrorizarás, para-aterrorizar | fr: effrayer, à-effrayer, תְּעָרוּץ | de: [לְעָרֵץ], [תְּעָרוּץ], [תְּעָרְצִי] Job 13:25; Ps 10:18; Isa 2:19; Isa 2:21; Isa 47:12

3. to inspire dread or awe (2×) To inspire dread or awe (Hifil causative): to cause others to tremble in reverence or holy fear. The LORD of hosts is the one Israel should 'let be your dread' (Isa 8:13), and Jacob's descendants 'shall stand in awe' of the Holy One (Isa 29:23). This sense elevates terror into the domain of worship and reverent fear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: your-dread | es: sea-vuestro-terror, temerán | fr: effrayer | de: [יַעֲרִיצוּ], [מֵעָרְצְכֶם] Isa 8:13; Isa 29:23

4. to be feared, awesome (1×) To be feared, awesome (Nifal participial): describing one who is regarded with dread or reverence, often as a divine epithet. In Ps 89:7 God is 'greatly feared in the council of the holy ones.' Spanish 'temido' (feared, respected) captures the stative, adjectival quality of this sense — not active terrifying but the abiding state of being awesome. TERROR AND AWE

en: greatly-feared | es: temido | fr: effrayer | de: greatly-gefürchtet Ps 89:7

עָרַק H6207 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 1cs (2×)

To gnaw; used literally of gnawing on dry ground and figuratively of gnawing pains

This verb means to gnaw or bite persistently. Job 30:3 uses it literally of destitute people reduced to gnawing the dry ground for sustenance —a vivid image of extreme poverty and hunger. Job 30:17 uses it figuratively of 'gnawing pains' that afflict Job night and day, pains that metaphorically chew on his bones without ceasing. The verb captures the relentless, persistent nature of both desperate hunger and chronic pain.

(2×) A Qal participle verb meaning to gnaw or bite persistently. The literal usage describes the desperately poor 'gnawing the dry ground' ('los que roen'), an image of people scraping survival from barren earth. The figurative usage describes 'my gnawing pains' ('mis dolores'), suffering personified as something that continuously bites or chews. Both contexts in Job emphasize relentless, degrading affliction—whether hunger driving people to gnaw at nothing or pain that gnaws at one's body without rest. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: and-my-gnawing-pains, the-gnawing | es: los-que-roen, y-mis-dolores | fr: et-עֹרְקִי-moi, le-הָעֹרְקִים | de: [הָעֹרְקִים], [וְעֹרְקִי] Job 30:3; Job 30:17

עַרְקִי H6208 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Arkite: gentilicic designating inhabitants of Arka, a Phoenician city north of Beirut

This gentilicic identifies people from Arka (modern Arqa), a city in Phoenicia about sixty miles north of Beirut near the Mediterranean coast. The term appears in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:17, 1 Chronicles 1:15) among Canaanite peoples. Ancient Near Eastern sources confirm Arka's existence: Egyptian records mention Arkantu, Assyrian texts refer to Arqa and its inhabitants (Irqanatai), and Tel el-Amarna letters reference Irqata. The site was a significant Phoenician settlement in antiquity.

(2×) A gentilicic adjective used collectively as a noun meaning 'the Arkites' or inhabitants of Arka. Both occurrences appear in identical genealogical contexts listing Canaanite peoples descended from Canaan. The definite article makes it collective ('el arqueo,' 'den Arkiter'). Extra-biblical sources extensively document Arka as a real Phoenician city, validating the biblical reference. The term preserves memory of one Canaanite population group among the many inhabiting the Levantine coast. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Arkite, the-Arqi | es: el-arqueo | fr: [הָעַרְקִי], le-Arkite | de: [הָעַרְקִי], den-Arkiter Gen 10:17; 1Chr 1:15

עָרַר H6209 V-Piel-InfAbs (4×)

to strip bare, lay bare; to expose foundations, demolish completely, or strip off clothing

A verb meaning to strip bare or lay utterly bare, used for both demolition and undressing. Isaiah 23:13 describes Assyria laying bare Tyre's palace foundations—demolishing them completely. Isaiah 32:11 commands complacent women to 'strip yourselves bare' in mourning. Jeremiah 51:58 intensifies the meaning with repetition: Babylon's walls will be 'utterly razed'—completely demolished, laid bare to the ground. The verb parallels the more common root for stripping or exposing, suggesting total removal whether of buildings, walls, or garments. The sense is thorough exposure or complete dismantling.

(4×) To strip completely bare, whether buildings or persons. Isaiah 23:13 uses it for demolishing palaces (laying bare foundations). Isaiah 32:11 commands stripping off clothes in mourning. Jeremiah 51:58 doubles the root (infinitive absolute + verb) for emphasis: Babylon's walls will be 'utterly razed,' completely demolished. The consistent meaning is thorough exposure or removal, leaving nothing covered or standing. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-make-bare, surely-being-razed, they-laid-bare | es: demolidos, demolieron, serán-demolidos | fr: [וְעָרָה], [עָרֹעַ], [עָרֹר] | de: [וְעָרָה], [עָרֹעַ], [עָרֹר] Isa 23:13; Isa 32:11; Jer 51:58

עֶרֶשׂ H6210 N-fsc (10×)

A couch or bed for sleeping, reclining, or rest; ranges from an ordinary sleeping bed to a luxurious divan or sickbed

Refers to a piece of furniture for lying down, whether for nightly rest, lavish banqueting, or convalescence. In Amos 3:12 and 6:4 the prophet pairs it with mittah to condemn the idle rich sprawled on ornate divans, a picture the Spanish 'lechos' and French 'lit' both capture with their connotation of luxury bedding. In Deuteronomy 3:11 Og's famous iron eres may denote a massive bedstead or even a funerary sarcophagus. The Psalms use the same word for the tear-soaked bed of grief (Ps 6:6) and the sickbed where the Lord sustains the afflicted (Ps 41:3).

1. bed or couch for sleeping (5×) The ordinary bed or couch used for sleeping at night. Most languages render this straightforwardly — English 'my bed,' Spanish 'mi lecho,' French 'mon lit.' Job 7:13 and Psalm 6:6 both show a sufferer seeking comfort or weeping on this nightly resting place, while Proverbs 7:16 and Song of Solomon 1:16 lend it an intimate, domestic quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-bed, my-bed, my-couch | es: lecho-mío, mi-lecho, mi-lecho, | fr: lit, mon-עַרְשִׂי-moi, notre-lit | de: [עַרְשִׂי], [עַרְשֵׂנוּ], mein-couch Deut 3:11; Job 7:13; Ps 6:6; Prov 7:16; Song 1:16

2. bedstead or bier (2×) A large bedstead or bed-frame, possibly doubling as a funerary bier. The landmark example is Og's iron eres in Deuteronomy 3:11, whose enormous dimensions suggest a royal or commemorative piece of furniture. Psalm 132:3 pairs it with yetsuai ('my spread-out bed'), intensifying the image of a formal resting-place. BDB notes the possible transfer to a sarcophagus — the 'last couch.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bed-of, couch-of | es: cama-de | fr: lit, un-bed-de | de: couch-of, ein-bed-von Deut 3:11; Ps 132:3

3. luxurious couch or divan (2×) A luxurious couch or divan for reclining in ease. Amos 3:12 and 6:4 place this word alongside mittot ('beds') to depict Israel's wealthy lounging in self-indulgent comfort. Spanish consistently renders both occurrences with 'lecho/lechos,' while English uses 'couch/couches,' both preserving the note of opulence that fuels the prophetic rebuke. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: couch, their-couches | es: lecho, sus-lechos | fr: lit | de: [עֶרֶשׂ], [עַרְשׂוֹתָם] Amos 3:12; Amos 6:4

4. sickbed (1×) A sickbed — the bed upon which one lies during illness. In Psalm 41:3 the Lord 'sustains him on his sickbed' (eres devai). English 'bed of,' Spanish 'lecho de,' and French 'lit' all point to the same concrete image, but the context of suffering and divine care distinguishes this sense from ordinary sleeping. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bed-of | es: lecho-de | fr: lit | de: bed-von Ps 41:3

עָשׁ H6211a N-ms (7×)

moth; a fabric-eating insect used figuratively for slow, insidious decay and human fragility before God

Refers to the moth or moth-larva, the tiny insect whose larvae silently consume garments and organic material. In Scripture it becomes a vivid image of quiet, relentless destruction. Hosea pairs it with dry rot to describe God's slow judgment on Ephraim (Hos 5:12), while Job uses it to underscore human frailty — crushed 'like a garment eaten by a moth' (Job 13:28). Isaiah twice warns that oppressors will be consumed like moth-eaten cloth (Isa 50:9; 51:8). The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent: Spanish polilla, French teigne, and German Motte all converge on a single sense.

moth (7×) A moth or moth-larva — the small insect whose larvae devour fabric and organic material. Used literally of the destructive pest itself, but overwhelmingly deployed as a figure for slow, invisible ruin: God consumes like a moth (Hos 5:12), humans crumble like moth-eaten cloth (Job 4:19; 13:28), and the wicked will be devoured as a garment by moths (Isa 50:9; 51:8). The Psalmist likewise invokes the moth to portray the dissolution of beauty under divine rebuke (Ps 39:11). CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: a-moth, as-moth, like-a-moth | es: como-polilla, polilla | fr: [עָשׁ], chevreuil, comme-teigne | de: [כָּעָשׁ], [עָשׁ], wie-ein-Motte Job 4:19; Job 13:28; Job 27:18; Ps 39:11; Isa 50:9

עֲשַׂב H6211b Conj-w / N-msd (5×)

herbage, grass; vegetation eaten as fodder by grazing animals

An Aramaic noun appearing exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections, always in the context of Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation. When the king is driven from human society, he eats 'grass like oxen' (Dan 4:25, 32, 33) — his royal diet reduced to field herbage. The word appears in the heavenly decree (Dan 4:15) and again when the judgment is recounted to Belshazzar (Dan 5:21). Spanish 'hierba' and English 'grass' consistently render this as simple field vegetation, underscoring the totality of the king's reduction from palace feasts to animal fodder.

(5×) Herbage or grass — field vegetation serving as fodder for animals. Used exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel to describe the grass Nebuchadnezzar was condemned to eat like an ox during his period of madness (Dan 4:15, 25, 32, 33; 5:21). Spanish 'hierba,' French and German cognates all render it as simple field grass, emphasizing the king's reduction from royal splendor to bestial existence grazing on common vegetation. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: and-grass, grass, in-grass-of | es: en-la-hierba-de, hierba, y-hierba | fr: [בְּעֵשֶׂב], [וְעִשְׂבָא], [עִשְׂבָא] | de: [בְּעֵשֶׂב], [וְעִשְׂבָא], [עִשְׂבָא] Dan 4:15; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:21

עֵשֶׂב H6212 N-ms (33×)

Herb, herbage, grass, or green vegetation; plant life given by God for food and as a symbol of transience.

Covers the whole range of green growing things, from wild grass of the field to cultivated herbs granted for food. In the creation account (Gen 1:11-12, 29-30), it denotes the seed-bearing plants God provides as nourishment, while in prophetic and wisdom literature it becomes an image of human frailty – people flourish like grass but quickly wither (Ps 102:4, 11). Arabic 'ushb and German 'Kraut' preserve the dual range of wild herbage and useful herbs. The plagues of Egypt vividly depict every esev of the field consumed by hail and locusts (Exod 9:22, 25; 10:12, 15).

1. grass, green herbage (22×) Wild grass or green herbage growing in fields and open land, often used as a metaphor for human transience or vulnerability to divine judgment. Arabic 'ushb, Hindi ghas, and Swahili nyasi all point to uncultivated grassland. The Egyptian plagues destroy every esev of the field (Exod 9:22, 25; 10:12, 15), and the Psalmist's heart is 'withered like grass' (Ps 102:4, 11). Deuteronomy 32:2 pairs it with deshe (tender grass) under gentle rain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: grass, grass-of, like-grass | es: como-hierba, como-hierba-de, hierba | fr: [עשב], [עשבם], comme-herbe | de: Gras, [כעשב], [עשב] Exod 9:22; Exod 9:25; Exod 10:12; Exod 10:15

2. plants, vegetation, herbs (11×) Cultivated plants, edible vegetation, or herbs specifically granted as food by God to humans and animals. German 'Kraut' (herb/plant) and Spanish 'hierba' in the creation texts mark this as purposeful provision. Foundational in Genesis 1:11-12, 29-30, where God creates seed-bearing plants and gives every green herb for food. Distinguished from the wild-grass sense by the context of divine ordering and agricultural utility (Gen 2:5; Deut 11:15). GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: and-plants, herbs-of, plant | es: hierba, hierba-de, hierbas-de | fr: et-herbe, herbe, planter | de: Kraut, [עשבות], das-Kraut Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:29; Gen 1:30; Gen 2:5

H6213 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (7×)

to do, to make; performing an action or producing something (Qal conjugation forms)

The foundational Hebrew verb עָשָׂה in its Qal stem, covering the broad semantic range of 'doing' and 'making.' These particular occurrences capture first-person and second-person conjugated forms — promises of future action, commands, and past accomplishments. In Ezekiel 16, the verb recurs to describe both Israel's deeds and God's response, while Jeremiah 40:16 records a pledge of action. Spanish renders it flexibly as haré, hagas, and hiciste, reflecting the verb's adaptability across tenses and persons.

to do, to make (Qal) (7×) To do or to make in the Qal stem — the most general Hebrew verb for performing an action, accomplishing a task, or producing something. These forms include cohortative ('and I will do,' 1 Kgs 22:48), imperative-adjacent constructions ('that you should do'), and narrative perfects ('you did/made'). In Ezekiel 16 the verb appears repeatedly in divine accusation of Israel's conduct (Ezek 16:31, 43, 47), while Jeremiah 40:16 uses it for a resolve to act. French et-j'ai-fait and Spanish hiciste confirm the straightforward active sense. DOING AND MAKING

en: and-I-will-do, do, made | es: (Y-haré), (hagas), (hiciste) | fr: [(תעשה)], et-j'ai-fait, fit | de: [(תעשה)], [ועשיתי], [עשית] 1Kgs 22:48; Jer 40:16; Ezek 16:31; Ezek 16:43; Ezek 16:47

עָשָׂה H6213a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2mp (2630×)

Do, perform, act; make, construct; be done (Niphal); produce, yield; work, labor

The great all-purpose Hebrew verb of action, appearing over 2,600 times. Like English 'do' and 'make' combined, it covers everything from God creating the heavens to a farmer tending his field. Its semantic range stretches from the divine—'your Maker' as a title for God (Job 4:17)—to the agricultural, where a vineyard 'produces' wild grapes (Isa 5:2). The Niphal passive allows events to simply 'be done' without naming an agent, a construction favored in legal and narrative contexts. Arabic preserves a similar split between faʿala (do) and ṣanaʿa (make), hinting that Hebrew merged two Proto-Semitic roots into one workhorse verb.

1. do, perform, act (2383×) The default Qal sense: to do, perform, carry out an action or command. With 2,383 occurrences, this covers obedience ('Noah did all that God commanded,' Gen 6:22), wrongdoing ('he did evil,' Gen 38:10), and every kind of purposeful activity. Spanish 'hizo' and German 'tat' match its generality perfectly. DOING AND MAKING

en: did, he-did | es: hizo | fr: fit, il-fit | de: er-tat, tat Gen 6:22; Gen 9:24; Gen 21:26; Gen 34:7; Gen 38:10

2. make, construct, fabricate (148×) To make, build, or construct a physical object. Concentrated in Exodus 25-40 where the tabernacle furnishings are fashioned: 'you shall make a mercy seat' (Exod 25:17). Spanish 'harás' and German 'machen' both distinguish this constructive sense from mere doing, paralleling the English make/do split. DOING AND MAKING

en: and-you-shall-make | es: Y-harás, y-harás | fr: et-tu—faire | de: und-du-sollst-machen Exod 25:11; Exod 25:13; Exod 25:17; Exod 25:18; Exod 25:23

3. be done, be made (Niphal) (73×) Niphal passive: to be done or be made, removing the agent from view. Genesis 20:9 asks 'what have you done to us?' using a form that emphasizes the deed over the doer. French 'être fait' and Spanish 'se hará' capture this impersonal construction common in legal contexts and divine pronouncements (Gen 22:16). DOING AND MAKING

en: it-shall-be-done, it-shall-be-made, it-will-be-done | es: hiciste, les-será-hecho, se-hará | fr: –être-fait, aurait-être-fait, cela-devra-être-fait | de: du-haben-getan, er-macht, er-tut Gen 20:9; Gen 22:16; Gen 31:26; Gen 32:10

4. Maker, Creator (15×) Participial substantive: Maker or Creator as a title. Job 4:17 asks 'shall a man be more pure than his Maker?' where the participle becomes a divine name. Spanish 'El que hizo' and English 'his Maker' show this shift from verb to title, a usage concentrated in Job and the Psalms (Ps 136:4; Job 31:15; 40:19). DOING AND MAKING en: Maker-of, his-Maker, his-maker | es: Al-que-hace, Al-que-hizo, El-que-hizo | fr: de-faire-lui, faire, faire-lui | de: der-sie-machten, machte, tat Job 4:17; Job 9:9; Job 31:15; Job 40:19; Ps 136:4

5. produce, yield fruit (6×) To produce or yield fruit and crops, a specialized agricultural sense. Isaiah 5:2-10's vineyard parable uses it repeatedly—the vine was expected to 'produce' good grapes but 'made' wild ones instead. Spanish 'producirá' distinguishes this from generic 'hacer,' revealing a semantic narrowing toward natural fertility. DOING AND MAKING

en: for-to-make, they-shall-produce, to-do | es: más-pude-hacer, para-producir, producirá | fr: faire | de: er-tut, machte, tun Isa 5:2; Isa 5:4; Isa 5:10

6. work, labor, toil (5×) To work, labor, or toil at a task or occupation over sustained time. Ruth 2:19 asks 'where did you work today?' and Nehemiah 4:6 describes builders who 'worked' with determination. Swahili 'kufanya kazi' (do work) and Spanish 'trabajar' capture the emphasis on effort and employment rather than a single completed act. DOING AND MAKING

en: did-you-work, she-worked, to-work | es: cuando-obra, para-hacer, trabajar | fr: dans-faire-lui, elle-worked, faire | de: du-machtest, machte Ruth 2:19; Neh 4:6; Job 23:9; Prov 21:25

עָשָׂה H6213b Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (3×)

to press, squeeze, handle (breasts); to fondle sexually

This secondary root of the common verb 'to do/make' takes on a specific physical meaning: to press or squeeze, particularly in a sexual context. It appears exclusively in Ezekiel 23, where the prophet uses graphic language to describe Jerusalem and Samaria's spiritual adultery as literal sexual immorality. The verb describes the handling of young women's breasts, symbolizing Israel's illicit alliances with foreign nations. The Piel form intensifies the action—repeated or forceful handling. This stark imagery underscores the intimacy and betrayal involved in covenant unfaithfulness.

(3×) Denotes pressing, squeezing, or handling in a sexual manner, specifically referring to breasts. Ezekiel 23:3 describes Egypt's treatment of the sisters in their youth: 'they handled (עִשּׂוּ) the breasts of their virginity.' Verse 8 repeats this imagery for Jerusalem's Egyptian lovers, and verse 21 recalls when 'they handled (בָּעֲשׂוֹת) your youthful breasts.' The verb appears in Piel, suggesting intensive or repeated action. Some scholars note connections to Aramaic roots for crushing or compressing. Translations vary: 'handled' (English), 'tocaron' (Spanish 'touched'), though some render it more literally as 'pressed' or 'squeezed.' ESAU PERSONAL NAME

en: handled, they-handled, when-handled | es: cuando-hicieron, fueron-tocados, tocaron | fr: [בעשות], ils-ont-fait | de: [בעשות], [עשו] Ezek 23:3; Ezek 23:8; Ezek 23:21

עֲשַׂהאֵל H6214 N-proper-ms (21×)

Asahel — 'God has made'; David's nephew famed for swiftness, also Levites and a post-exilic figure

A theophoric name meaning 'God has made,' most famously borne by the swift-footed brother of Joab and Abishai and nephew of David. His fatal pursuit of Abner after the battle of Gibeon (2 Sam 2:18-23) and the blood-vengeance it triggered shaped the political tensions of David's early reign. He is listed among David's elite Thirty warriors (2 Sam 23:24; 1 Chr 11:26). The name also belongs to a Levite sent by Jehoshaphat to teach the law (2 Chr 17:8), a temple official under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:13), and a post-exilic figure in Ezra 10:15.

Asahel (personal name) (21×) A proper name meaning 'God has made,' referring to at least four individuals: most prominently David's nephew, brother of Joab, renowned for being 'swift of foot as a wild gazelle' (2 Sam 2:18), whose death at Abner's hand provoked lasting enmity; also a Levitical teacher under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:8), a temple administrator under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:13), and a post-exilic contemporary of Ezra (Ezra 10:15). The LXX form Ασαηλ and multilingual glosses (Asahel, Asael, Asah) consistently transliterate the name. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Asah, Asah-, Asahel | es: Asael-, Asah, Asah-el | fr: Asah, Asaël, et-Asah | de: Asah, Asahel, [ועשהאל] 2Sam 2:18; 2Sam 2:19; 2Sam 2:20; 2Sam 2:21

עֵשָׂו H6215 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (97×)

Esau — the firstborn son of Isaac and Rebekah, twin brother of Jacob, ancestor and eponym of the Edomites

Esav is one of the most theologically charged personal names in the Hebrew Bible. Born gripping his twin brother's heel (Gen 25:25-26), Esau is remembered as the impulsive hunter who sold his birthright for a bowl of stew (Gen 25:29-34) and lost the patriarchal blessing to Jacob's deception (Gen 27). Yet the narrative also shows a man capable of generous forgiveness (Gen 33:4). In prophetic literature Esau becomes synonymous with Edom, his descendants' territory in the hill country of Seir — so that 'house of Esau' and 'mount Esau' in Obadiah designate the nation rather than the man. Malachi 1:2-3, quoted by Paul in Romans 9:13, crystallizes the theological tension: 'Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated.'

Esau (personal name, son of Isaac) (97×) The proper name Esav, designating the elder son of Isaac and Rebekah, twin brother of Jacob (Gen 25:25). All 97 occurrences refer to this single individual, though the name frequently extends by metonymy to his descendants and their territory — 'the mount of Esau' (Obad 8-9), 'the house of Esau' (Obad 18), and plain 'Esau' standing for Edom (Jer 49:8). Spanish 'Esav,' French 'Esau,' and German 'Esaw' all transliterate the Hebrew. The name's etymology is debated, sometimes linked to the root for 'hairy' (se'ar), matching the birth narrative of Gen 25:25. ESAU PERSONAL NAME

en: Esau | es: Esav | fr: Ésaü | de: Esaw, Esaws Gen 25:25; Gen 25:26; Gen 25:27; Gen 25:28; Gen 25:29

עָשׁוֹק H6216 N-ms (1×)

oppressor, one who extorts or defrauds by violence or injustice

Jeremiah 22:3 commands, 'Do no wrong or violence to the stranger, the fatherless, or the widow, nor shed innocent blood in this place, and deliver the oppressed from the hand of the oppressor.' This noun denotes one who oppresses or extorts, using power to defraud and harm the vulnerable. It is related to the more common 'osheq' (oppressor, 21:12). The context is a prophetic oracle to the king of Judah, calling for justice and protection of the weak. Spanish 'opresor' and the term 'oppressor' both convey the abuse of power. Failure to stop oppression brings divine judgment on the royal house.

(1×) Jeremiah 22:3 calls on Judah's king to 'deliver the one robbed from the hand of the oppressor.' This noun denotes an extortioner or violent oppressor—someone who uses force or fraud to exploit others. The prophet lists the classic victims: the stranger, orphan, and widow. Protecting them from oppression is the king's sacred duty. Spanish 'opresor' rightly emphasizes the power imbalance: one who crushes those beneath him. The term is parallel to 'osheq' in 21:12, showing Jeremiah's consistent concern for social justice. Oppression is not just crime—it is covenant violation that provokes God's wrath. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: oppressor | es: opresor | fr: [עשוק] | de: [עשוק] Jer 22:3

עֲשֻׁקִים H6217 Conj-w / N-mp (4×)

oppression, extortion; acts of violent injustice and exploitation, or those suffering such treatment

A plural noun denoting acts of oppression or, by extension, the oppressed themselves—those suffering exploitation and injustice. Amos denounces 'oppressions' in Samaria's palaces (3:9), pointing to accumulated acts of violence and exploitation. Job questions why the oppressed cry out under their sufferings (35:9). Ecclesiastes observes 'the oppressed' and their tears, with no comforter (4:1, appearing twice in the verse). The term bridges the abstract concept (oppressive acts) and the concrete reality (oppressed people), reflecting how injustice becomes identified with its victims. The multilingual evidence shows both senses: Spanish 'opresiones' (oppressions) and 'oprimidos' (oppressed).

(4×) Oppression or the oppressed—either the acts of injustice or those suffering them. Amos 3:9 denounces 'oppressions' (plural acts) in Samaria. Job 35:9 and Ecclesiastes 4:1 (twice) focus on 'the oppressed' themselves—those crying out under multiplied injustices. The term captures both the violence inflicted and the people afflicted, unified by the reality of exploitation and suffering. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-oppressed, oppressions, the-oppressed | es: las-opresiones, los-oprimidos, oprimidos | fr: et-opprimé, le-oppression, oppression | de: Unterdrueckung, und-Unterdrueckung Job 35:9; Eccl 4:1; Amos 3:9

עָשׂוֹר H6218 N-ms (16×)

A ten, decade: the tenth day of the month (ordinal); a ten-stringed musical instrument; the cardinal number ten.

The Hebrew noun asor derives from the number ten and appears in three distinct contexts that split neatly across Scripture's calendrical, musical, and narrative registers. Its dominant use is ordinal — marking 'the tenth day of the month' in Israel's sacred calendar, from the selection of the Passover lamb on the tenth of Nisan (Exod 12:3) to the Day of Atonement on the tenth of Tishri (Lev 16:29; 23:27). Spanish décimo and French dixième render this straightforwardly as an ordinal. In the Psalms, asor takes on a musical life as the 'ten-stringed instrument' accompanying praise (Ps 33:2; 92:3; 144:9), where Spanish diez cuerdas and German zehn Saiten make the instrumental meaning explicit. A single occurrence in Genesis 24:55, where Rebekah's family asks that she stay 'ten days,' preserves the plain cardinal sense.

1. tenth (ordinal, the tenth day) (12×) The tenth day of the month — an ordinal use marking specific dates in Israel's liturgical and historical calendar. Twelve occurrences span the most significant appointed times: the tenth of Nisan for selecting the Passover lamb (Exod 12:3), the tenth of Tishri for the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:29; 23:27; Num 29:7), the jubilee trumpet sounded on the tenth of the seventh month (Lev 25:9), and various historical dates in Ezekiel's prophecies (Ezek 20:1; 24:1; 40:1) and the siege narratives (2 Kgs

25:1; Jer 52:4, 12). The formulaic phrase ba-asor la-hodesh ('on the tenth of the month') is remarkably consistent. Spanish en décimo and French sur le dixième confirm the ordinal reading across all contexts. TENTH ORDINAL NUMBER

en: and-on-the-tenth, on-tenth, on-tenth-of | es: Y-en-diez, en-diez, en-décimo-de | fr: [בעשור], et-sur-le-dixième, sur-dixième | de: [בעשור], auf-der-zehnter, auf-zehnter Exod 12:3; Lev 16:29; Lev 23:27; Lev 25:9; Num 29:7

2. ten-stringed instrument (3×) A ten-stringed musical instrument, or the attribute 'ten-stringed' modifying another instrument such as the nevel (lyre). Three Psalm occurrences celebrate this instrument in worship: 'with the ten-stringed harp' (Ps 33:2), 'upon a ten-stringed instrument' (Ps 92:3), and 'on a ten-stringed lyre I will sing praises' (Ps 144:9). Spanish instrumento de diez cuerdas, French dix cordes, and German zehn Saiten all make the string-count explicit. The standalone use in Psalm 92:3 suggests asor could function as an independent instrument name, not merely an adjective. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)

en: a-ten-stringed-instrument, of-ten-strings, ten-strings | es: de-diez-cuerdas, diez-cuerdas, instrumento-de-diez-cuerdas | fr: dix | de: ein-zehn-stringed-instrument, ten-strings, von-zehn-Saiten Ps 33:2; Ps 92:3; Ps 144:9

3. ten (cardinal number) (1×) The cardinal number ten, without ordinal or instrumental force. A single occurrence in Genesis 24:55 preserves this basic numerical sense: Rebekah's brother and mother ask Abraham's servant to let the girl remain 'ten days' (yamim o asor) before departing. Spanish diez, French dix, and German zehn all render it as a simple numeral. The pairing with yamim ('days or ten') suggests asor here functions as an approximate measure — 'a matter of ten days' — before Rebekah's life-changing journey to become Isaac's wife. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)

en: ten | es: diez | fr: dix | de: zehn Gen 24:55

עָשׁוּת H6219 Adj-ms (1×)

wrought, worked (adjective describing skilfully crafted or forged iron)

Ezekiel 27:19 lists 'wrought iron' among the luxury goods traded in Tyre. This adjective describes iron that has been worked or forged—skilfully crafted, not raw ore. The text is somewhat uncertain (some scholars propose different roots or emendations), but the sense is of processed, finished metalwork suitable for commerce. Spanish 'forjado' (forged) captures the idea of iron shaped by heat and hammer. The word may derive from a root meaning to forge or work skilfully. Tyre's marketplace was renowned for exotic and high-quality merchandise, and wrought iron would have been a valuable commodity in the ancient Near East.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:19 mentions 'wrought iron' as one of the trade goods in Tyre's bustling market. This adjective likely describes iron that has been skilfully worked or forged—finished metalwork, not crude ore. The Hebrew is somewhat uncertain, and scholars debate the root (some suggest a verb meaning to forge or work skilfully). Spanish 'forjado' supports the sense of iron crafted by smiths. In the ancient economy, worked metal—especially iron, which requires high heat and skill—was precious. Tyre's lament in Ezekiel 27 catalogues the riches of international trade, and wrought iron symbolizes human craftsmanship and commercial wealth. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: wrought | es: forjado | fr: travaillé | de: [עשות] Ezek 27:19

עַשְׁוָת H6220 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ashvat, a personal name in the tribe of Asher (1 Chronicles 7:33)

Ashvat appears in 1 Chronicles 7:33 within the genealogy of Asher, listed among the sons of Japhlet. The name occurs only here, and nothing is known of the individual beyond this genealogical reference. Greek versions transliterate it as Aseth or Asouath, showing minor variation. The Chronicler's genealogies preserve the tribal structure of northern Israel, including Asher, which settled along the Phoenician coast. Names like Ashvat anchor the post-exilic community to its ancestral past, maintaining continuity with the twelve tribes even after the disruptions of conquest and exile.

(1×) Ashvat is an Asherite name in 1 Chronicles 7:33, one of the sons of Japhlet within Asher's genealogy. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture, and no deeds or details are recorded. Greek manuscripts offer variant transliterations (Aseth, Asouath), typical of genealogical transmission. The Chronicler's goal is to preserve Israel's tribal memory, especially for northern tribes like Asher that were absorbed into Assyria. By recording names like Ashvat, the genealogy insists that even the least-known descendants matter—each name is a thread in the tapestry of covenant history. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ashvat | es: y-Asvat | fr: [ועשות] | de: [ועשות] 1Chr 7:33

עֲשִׂיאֵל H6221 N-proper-ms (1×)

Asiel, a personal name in the tribe of Simeon (1 Chronicles 4:35)

Asiel is named in 1 Chronicles 4:35 within the genealogy of Simeon. He is listed among the ancestors of Simeonite families, though no narrative accompanies his name. The Greek has Asiēl, a straightforward transliteration. Simeon's territory was eventually absorbed into Judah, and many Simeonites are known only through genealogical records like this. The Chronicler's preservation of names such as Asiel reflects the importance of tribal identity and inheritance, even for tribes that lost political independence. Each name represents a family line with rights, memories, and a place in the covenant community.

(1×) Asiel appears in 1 Chronicles 4:35 as a Simeonite, part of the genealogical framework tracing the tribe's clans. No story is told about him; his name simply marks a link in the ancestral chain. Greek manuscripts transliterate as Asiēl. Simeon, the smallest tribe, was eventually integrated into Judah, and many of its members are preserved only in these lists. By including Asiel, the Chronicler affirms that every family, however obscure, has standing before God. Genealogy is not mere record-keeping—it is theology, asserting that each person's lineage matters in the story of redemption. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Asi'el | es: Asiel | fr: [עשיאל] | de: [עשיאל] 1Chr 4:35

עֲשָׂיָה H6222 N-proper-ms (8×)

Asaiah — 'Yahweh has made'; a name borne by a servant of Josiah, a Simeonite chief, and several Levites.

Asaiah is a theophoric Hebrew name meaning 'Yahweh has made' or 'YHWH has acted.' Its most dramatic appearance is in the story of King Josiah, where Asaiah is one of five officials sent to consult the prophetess Huldah after the discovery of the Book of the Law (2 Kgs 22:12, 14; 2 Chr 34:20). The name also belongs to a Simeonite clan leader who participated in territorial expansion (1 Chr 4:36) and to Levites connected with the Merarite line and Temple service (1 Chr 6:30; 9:5; 15:6, 11). Spanish and French forms like 'Asaya' and 'Asayah' closely mirror the Hebrew vocalization.

Asaiah (proper noun) (8×) A theophoric proper name ('Yahweh has made') identifying several distinct individuals. The most prominent is a royal official of Josiah sent alongside Hilkiah the priest to inquire of Huldah the prophetess (2 Kgs 22:12, 14). A Simeonite chief of that name led raids into Gedor (1 Chr 4:36), and Levites named Asaiah appear in Merarite genealogies (1 Chr 6:30; 9:5) and in David's procession of the ark (1 Chr 15:6, 11). The Septuagint renders it Asaias, while the Lucianic recension in Kings reads Azarias, suggesting some scribal interchange. Multilingual glosses—English 'Asaiah,' Spanish 'Asayas,' French 'Asayah'—all preserve the theophoric element. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Asaiah, Asayah, and-Asayah | es: Asaya, Asayah, Asayas | fr: Asayah, Ashija, et-Asayah | de: Asayah, [ועשיה], [עשיה] 2Kgs 22:12; 2Kgs 22:14; 1Chr 4:36; 1Chr 6:30; 1Chr 9:5

עָשִׁיר H6223 Adj-mpc / 3fs (23×)

Rich, wealthy — describing a person of material abundance, often contrasted with the poor or needy

This adjective (עָשִׁיר) describes someone possessing material wealth and is frequently substantivized as 'the rich man' or 'the rich.' Its most famous appearance is Nathan's parable to David, where the rich man with vast flocks takes the poor man's only lamb (2 Sam 12:1-4). Proverbs explores the social dynamics of wealth: the rich man's city is his fortress (Prov 10:15), the rich has many friends (Prov 14:20), and rich and poor alike are made by the Lord (Prov 22:2). Micah accuses Jerusalem's wealthy of violence (Mic 6:12). The consistent pairing with terms for the poor — דַּל, רָשׁ, אֶבְיוֹן — gives this word its moral edge throughout Scripture.

rich, wealthy (23×) Adjective for material wealth, often substantivized as 'the rich person.' Nathan's parable pits the עָשִׁיר against the רָשׁ (2 Sam 12:1-4); Proverbs pairs it with דַּל and רָשׁ (Prov 10:15; 14:20; 22:2); Micah condemns Jerusalem's rich for violence (Mic 6:12). The half-shekel law treats rich and poor equally (Exod 30:15). Translations converge straightforwardly (spa 'rico,' fra 'riche,' deu 'Reicher'). RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-the-rich, but-rich, rich | es: Al-rico, El-rico, Rico | fr: [עשיר], et-riche, le-riche | de: Reicher, [עשיר], der-reich Exod 30:15; Ruth 3:10; 2Sam 12:1; 2Sam 12:2; 2Sam 12:4

עֲשִׂירִי H6224 Number-ofsc (29×)

Tenth; the ordinal number designating position in a sequence, or a fractional tenth part used as a measure in sacrificial prescriptions

An ordinal numeral with two distinct functions in biblical Hebrew. Most frequently it marks the tenth position in a calendrical or genealogical sequence – the tenth month (Gen 8:5), the tenth day (Num 7:66; Ezek 24:1), or the tenth generation (Deut 23:2-3). In ritual law, the feminine form asirith serves as a fractional noun meaning 'a tenth part,' specifically a tenth of an ephah of fine flour for offerings (Lev 5:11; 6:20; Num 5:15; 28:5). Exod 16:36 defines the omer as a tenth of an ephah. Arabic 'al-ʿāshiri' and Korean '열째' preserve the ordinal force, while Spanish 'décima de' and French 'dixième de' smoothly handle the fractional usage. Lev 27:32 bridges both senses – every tenth animal passing under the rod shall be holy to the Lord.

1. tenth (ordinal) (22×) The ordinal number 'tenth' designating position in a sequence. Used for dates (the tenth month in Gen 8:5; the tenth day in Ezek 24:1; Jer 39:1), genealogical limits (the tenth generation in Deut 23:2-3), priestly courses (1 Chr 24:11; 25:17), and the counting of offerings (Num 7:66). Lev 27:32 applies it to tithing livestock – every tenth animal is holy. Arabic 'al-ʿāshiri' and Korean '열째' directly mirror this ordinal function. TENTH ORDINAL NUMBER en: The-tenth, in-the-tenth, on-the-tenth | es: El-décimo, décima, el-décimo | fr: [העשירי], [העשרי], [העשרית] | de: [העשירי], [העשרי], [העשרית] Gen 8:5; Lev 27:32; Num 7:66; Deut 23:2

2. a tenth part, tithe portion (7×) A fractional quantity: one-tenth, used as a dry measure in sacrificial prescriptions. The feminine form asirith/asirit functions as a noun meaning 'a tenth part of an ephah' of fine flour. Exod 16:36 defines the omer as a tenth of an ephah. Lev 5:11 and 6:20 prescribe a tenth of an ephah for sin and grain offerings; Num 5:15 and 28:5 continue the pattern. Spanish 'décima de' and French 'dixième de' render this fractional sense cleanly. Isa 6:13 uses it metaphorically – a tenth shall remain as a holy remnant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tenth-of, and-tenth-of, tenth | es: Y-décima-de, décima-de, décima-de- | fr: [עשריה], dixième-de, et-dixième | de: [עשריה], ein-zehnter-von, und-zehnter Exod 16:36; Lev 5:11; Lev 6:20; Num 5:15; Num 28:5

עָשַׁן H6225 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (6×)

To smoke, emit smoke — of mountains at God's theophanic presence; figuratively, to fume with anger.

A denominative verb from 'ashan (smoke) describing the emission of smoke, predominantly in theophanic contexts. Mount Sinai 'smoked' when YHWH descended in fire (Exod 19:18), and the psalmist celebrates that the mountains smoke at God's touch (Ps 104:32; 144:5). The figurative extension moves naturally from visible smoke to invisible wrath: YHWH's anger 'smokes' against covenant-breakers (Deut 29:20), and the psalmist asks why God's fury 'smokes' against the prayers of His people (Ps 74:1; 80:4). Spanish 'humea/humeaba' and French 'fumée' preserve the concrete smoke-imagery, while the Hebrew itself bridges the literal and metaphorical through the single verb.

smoke, emit smoke (6×) To smoke or emit smoke, used primarily of mountains and cosmic phenomena in divine theophanies. The paradigmatic passage is Sinai smoking like a kiln at YHWH's descent (Exod 19:18). The psalms extend this image: mountains smoke at God's mere touch (Ps 104:32; 144:5). The figurative sense of fuming with anger follows naturally — YHWH's nostril 'smokes' against idolaters (Deut 29:20) and against His own people (Ps 74:1; 80:4). The verb thus unifies theophanic fire-imagery with divine wrath, the visible smoke signaling invisible fury. SMOKE

en: and-they-smoke, does-smoke, smoked | es: echarás-humo, humea, humeaba | fr: et-fumée, fumée, smoked | de: smoked, smokes, tut-Rauch Exod 19:18; Deut 29:20; Ps 74:1; Ps 80:4; Ps 104:32

עָשֵׁן H6226 Art / N-mp (2×)

Smoking; describing something emitting smoke, particularly Mount Sinai or dying firebrands

This adjective describes something actively producing smoke. In Exodus 20:18, it characterizes Mount Sinai during the theophany, when God descended in fire and the mountain smoked. In Isaiah 7:4, it metaphorically describes Rezin and Pekah as 'two smoldering stubs of firebrands'—once blazing threats now reduced to smoking remnants about to go out completely. The term captures visible smoke as evidence of fire, whether awesome divine presence or dying embers.

(2×) An adjective meaning smoking or emitting smoke. The Exodus usage describes Sinai's awesome smoking appearance during divine revelation ('humeando'). Isaiah's metaphor uses smoking firebrands ('humeantes') for enemies whose threat is ending—still smoking but fire nearly extinguished. The plural construct 'the smoking firebrands' emphasizes their diminished state. Both contexts use smoke as a visible sign: in Exodus, of God's terrifying holiness; in Isaiah, of fading power. SMOKE

en: smoking, the-smoking | es: humeando, humeantes | fr: [העשנים], smoking | de: [העשנים], smoking Exod 20:18; Isa 7:4

עָשָׁן H6227 N-msc / 3fs (25×)

smoke — visible vapor rising from fire, theophanic presence, burning cities, or as a figure of transience and wrath

Ashan is the standard Hebrew noun for smoke, appearing 25 times across narrative, prophetic, poetic, and wisdom contexts. Its semantic range moves from the concretely physical to the theologically charged. Literally, it describes the smoke of burning cities in the conquest narratives — the men of Ai looked back and 'the smoke of the city went up to the heavens' (Josh 8:20-21; cf. Judg 20:38, 40). In theophany, smoke signals the terrifying presence of God: the smoking fire pot of Abraham's covenant ceremony (Gen 15:17), Mount Sinai wrapped in smoke 'like the smoke of a kiln' when YHWH descended in fire (Exod 19:18), and the temple filling with smoke in Isaiah's inaugural vision (Isa 6:4). Prophetically, unending smoke symbolizes irreversible judgment — Edom's smoke 'shall go up forever' (Isa 34:10), and Joel foresees 'columns of smoke' among the portents of the Day of the LORD (Joel 2:30). In wisdom and psalmody, smoke becomes a simile for what is fleeting and insubstantial: 'my days pass away like smoke' (Ps 102:3; cf. Hos 13:3; Ps 37:20; 68:2).

smoke (25×) Visible smoke rising from fire, deployed across four registers. Literally, of burning cities during warfare (Josh 8:20-21; Judg 20:38, 40; Nah 2:13). Theophanically, signaling divine presence: the smoking fire pot of the Abrahamic covenant (Gen 15:17), Sinai engulfed 'like the smoke of a kiln' (Exod 19:18), and Isaiah's smoke-filled temple (Isa 6:4). As an eschatological portent of judgment, smoke marks Edom's unending destruction (Isa 34:10) and Joel's Day-of-the-LORD signs (Joel 2:30). Figuratively, a simile for transience and insubstantiality — 'my days vanish like smoke' (Ps 102:3; Hos 13:3). Spanish 'humo,' French 'fumee,' German 'Rauch.' SMOKE

en: and-like-smoke, are-smoke, in-smoke | es: de-humo, el-humo, en-humo | fr:

[וכעשן], dans-fumée, de-fumée, | de: Rauch, [וכעשן], [עשן] Gen 15:17; Exod 19:18; Josh 8:20; Josh 8:21

עָשָׁן H6228 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Ashan; town in Judah's Shephelah, assigned to Simeon and designated as a Levitical city

A town name appearing in territorial allotments and Levitical city lists. Joshua 15:42 places Ashan in Judah's Shephelah (lowland), while 19:7 assigns it to Simeon (whose inheritance was within Judah's territory). First Chronicles 4:32 confirms it as a Simeonite settlement, and 6:59 lists it among Levitical cities. The site may be identical with 'Bor-ashan' (1 Sam 30:30), with 'Bor' (cistern/well) as a descriptive prefix. The LXX transliterates as Asan or Ashan. This represents a typical Shephelah settlement shared between tribal inheritances and Levitical assignments.

(4×) Place name for a town in Judah's Shephelah. Joshua 15:42 lists it in Judah's inheritance; 19:7 and 1 Chronicles 4:32 assign it to Simeon. 1 Chronicles 6:59 designates it a Levitical city. The four occurrences trace the town through territorial allotment (Joshua) to tribal settlement (Simeon) to priestly assignment (Levites), possibly identical with Bor-ashan elsewhere. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ashan, and-Ashan | es: Asan, y-Asan, y-Asán | fr: [עשן], [עשן], et-Ashan | de: [עשן], [עשן], und-Ashan Josh 15:42; Josh 19:7; 1Chr 4:32; 1Chr 6:59

עָשַׁק H6229 V-Hitpael-Perf-3cp (1×)

to contend, quarrel, engage in dispute (Hithpael reflexive/reciprocal)

Genesis 26:20 recounts the herdsmen of Gerar quarreling with Isaac's herdsmen over a well, saying 'The water is ours,' and Isaac named the well Esek, 'because they contended with him.' This Hithpael verb conveys reciprocal or reflexive action—contending, quarreling, engaging in conflict. The root may be related to 'clinging' in strife (cf. Arabic 'cling with love,' Syriac 'be difficult, hostile'), or to being occupied/busy (hence contention as intense engagement). Spanish 'disputaron' and the idea of contention both capture the verbal and perhaps physical struggle over water rights in the arid Negev.

(1×) Genesis 26:20 uses this Hithpael verb to describe the conflict between Isaac's and Gerar's herdsmen: 'they contended with him' over a well. The verb suggests mutual strife, a back-and-forth quarrel. Some link the root to Arabic 'cling' (as in strife, one clings to one's claim) or to Aramaic/Hebrew 'be busy, occupied,' implying intense engagement in dispute. Spanish 'disputaron' rightly conveys quarreling. Water in the semi-arid Negev was precious, and wells were flashpoints for conflict. Isaac names the well Esek ('Contention'), memorializing the strife—a pattern repeated at Sitnah ('Enmity') before peace at Rehoboth. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: they-contended | es: disputaron | fr: ils-contended | de: sie-stritten-sich Gen 26:20

עֵשֶׂק H6230 N-proper-fs (1×)

Esek, name of a well meaning 'contention' (Genesis 26:20)

Esek is the name Isaac gave to a well in Genesis 26:20 after the herdsmen of Gerar quarreled with his herdsmen, claiming the water belonged to them. The name means 'contention' or 'strife,' commemorating the conflict over water rights. The well's location is unknown today, though it was somewhere in the Negev or northern Sinai. Greek translates the name as Adikia ('Injustice'), interpreting the incident as an unjust seizure. The naming of wells in Genesis often reflects the circumstances of their discovery—Esek stands as a reminder of hostility, contrasted later with Rehoboth ('Broad Places'), where Isaac finds peace.

(1×) Esek is the well Isaac named in Genesis 26:20 to commemorate the dispute with Gerar's herdsmen: 'because they contended with him.' The name derives directly from the verb for contention or strife. Water sources were vital and contested in the arid regions where Isaac pastured his flocks, and this well became a symbol of conflict. The Greek version renders it Adikia ('Injustice'), highlighting the wrongfulness of the seizure. Esek, along with Sitnah (the next disputed well), contrasts with Rehoboth, where at last 'the Lord has made room for us.' The sequence traces Isaac's journey from conflict to peace. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Esek | es: Eseq | fr: Esek | de: Esek Gen 26:20

עָשַׁק H6231 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3mp (36×)

Oppress, wrong, extort; as participle: oppressor (active) or oppressed person (passive) — from עָשַׁק

The verb עָשַׁק denotes oppression that specifically involves economic exploitation and abuse of power over the vulnerable. Unlike חָמַס (raw violence) or לָחַץ (external pressure), עָשַׁק carries overtones of extortion and fraudulent seizure — taking what belongs to another by leveraging one's position. Leviticus 19:13 pairs it with withholding a worker's wages; Amos 4:1 accuses the wealthy women of Samaria of 'oppressing the poor.' Samuel's farewell speech uses it as a test of integrity: 'Whom have I oppressed?' (1 Sam 12:3-4). The Syriac cognate عَشَقَ meaning 'accuse, slander' and the Arabic ʿ'roughness, injustice' confirm the semantic core of wrongful, coercive treatment. Both active and passive participles are common, creating a matched pair of 'oppressor' and 'oppressed' that runs through the Psalms and Proverbs.

1. oppress, exploit (18×) The core verbal meaning: to oppress, exploit, or wrong another person through abuse of power, typically involving economic extortion or seizure of property. The Holiness Code forbids it alongside robbery and wage-theft (Lev 19:13; 6:2, 4). Deuteronomy 24:14 prohibits oppressing a hired servant who is poor. Samuel asks Israel to testify whether he has ever oppressed anyone (1 Sam 12:3-4). Micah 2:2 condemns those who covet fields and 'oppress' their owners. Spanish 'defraudar/oprimir' captures both the fraudulent and coercive dimensions. Hosea 12:8 exposes Ephraim's love of 'oppressing' in commerce. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: I-oppressed, You-oppress, and-they-oppress | es: defraudare, defraudó, lo-oprimió | fr: [לעשקם], [עשקו], [תעשקו] | de: [ועשקו], [לעשק], [לעשקם] Lev 6:2; Lev 6:4; Lev 19:13; Deut 24:14; 1Sam 12:3

2. oppressor (9×) The Qal active participle עֹשֵׁק used as a substantive: 'the oppressor,' one who habitually oppresses. Proverbs deploys this form memorably: 'whoever oppresses the poor insults his Maker' (Prov 14:31); the rich who oppress the poor to increase wealth ultimately lose it (Prov 22:16); 'a poor man who oppresses the poor is like a driving rain that leaves no food' (Prov 28:3). The psalmist pleads for protection from 'my oppressors' (Ps 119:121) and asks the king to crush 'the oppressor' (Ps 72:4). Amos 4:1 uses the feminine plural for the indolent women of Samaria. Spanish 'el que oprime' transparently marks the agentive function. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-against-those-oppressing, and-oppressing, he-who-oppresses | es: El-que-oprime, El-que-oprime-al, a-opresores-de-mí | fr: [עושק], et-opprimer, opprimer | de: [העשקות], [ובעשקי], [ועשק] Ps 72:4; Ps 119:121; Prov 14:31; Prov 22:16; Prov 28:3

3. oppressed (person) (7×) The Qal passive participle עָשׁוּק used as a substantive: 'the oppressed,' the person who suffers exploitation. Deuteronomy 28:29, 33 warns Israel that disobedience will leave them 'oppressed and crushed continually.' The Psalms celebrate God as the champion of the oppressed: 'the LORD executes justice for the oppressed' (Ps 146:7; 103:6). Isaiah 23:12 addresses Sidon as 'oppressed virgin daughter.' Spanish 'oprimido/oprimidos' and English 'oppressed' consistently mark this passive-experiential sense, forming the natural counterpart to sense 2. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: Oppressed, for-the-oppressed, oppressed | es: Oprimido, a-los-oprimidos, oh-oprimida | fr: [המעשקה], [עשוקים], opprimer | de: [המעשקה], [עשוק], [עשוקים] Deut 28:29; Deut 28:33; Ps 103:6; Ps 146:7; Isa 23:12

4. (1×) In Proverbs 28:17, a person 'oppressed' (עָשֻׁק) by the guilt of bloodshed flees to the pit. The oppressor here is not another human but the burden of one's own guilt — an internalized, psychological oppression. English 'oppressed' and Spanish 'oprimido' retain the same form as sense 3, but the agent has shifted from external exploiter to internal conscience. This rare usage bridges the concrete social-justice meaning into the moral-psychological domain.

OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: oppressed | es: oprimido | fr: opprimer | de: [עשׁק] Prov 28:17

5. (1×) In Job 40:23, describing Behemoth: even if the Jordan 'rages' or 'surges' against its mouth, the creature is untroubled. English renders 'the river rages'; Spanish 'oprime' (oppresses). The subject is not a human oppressor but a mighty river pressing with overwhelming force. This extends עָשַׁק from social coercion to raw natural force — the river 'oppresses' or bears down upon the creature. The Assyrian cognate ešqu (strong, mighty) may illuminate this forceful, non-moral application of the root. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: the-river-rages | es: oprime | fr: opprimer | de: [עשׁק] Job 40:23

עֵשֶׁק H6232 N-proper-ms (1×)
Esheq, a personal name in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chronicles 8:39)
Esheq is a Benjamite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:39, listed among the descendants of Saul's family line. The name is similar to Esek (the well of contention) and may share the same root, but here it is a personal name. Greek manuscripts render it Asēl or Asek. Beyond this genealogical note, Esheq is otherwise unknown. The Chronicler's genealogies trace Benjamin's prominent families, including the royal line of Saul. Names like Esheq preserve the memory of individuals whose lives are otherwise lost to history but who remain part of the sacred record.

(1×) Esheq appears in 1 Chronicles 8:39 as a Benjamite, part of the genealogy tracing Saul's descendants. His name may be related to 'Esek' (contention), though it functions here as a personal name without explanation. Greek versions offer Asēl or Asek, reflecting transliteration variance. No narrative accompanies Esheq; he is simply one link in Benjamin's tribal chain. The Chronicler's purpose is to document the continuity of Israel's families, especially Saul's line, which remains part of Benjamin's heritage despite the shift of kingship to David's house. Every name matters in the genealogy of God's people. PERSONAL NAMES en: Esheq | es: Ésec | fr: [עשׁק] | de: [עשׁק] 1Chr 8:39

עֹשֶׁק H6233 Prep-b (15×)
Oppression or extortion; the unjust exploitation of others, especially the vulnerable, for gain.
The noun ᶜōsheq captures the full spectrum of social injustice from systemic exploitation to individual extortion. Jeremiah indicts Jerusalem because 'oppression and violence' are heard within her walls (Jer 6:6), and Ezekiel repeatedly charges Israel's leaders with ᶜōsheq against the alien, orphan, and widow (Ezek 22:7, 12, 29). The psalmist prays for deliverance 'from human oppression' (Ps 119:134) and warns against trusting in extortion's profit (Ps 62:10). Ecclesiastes observes that oppression can make a wise person mad (Eccl 7:7) and notes the tears of the oppressed who have no comforter (Eccl 5:8). Isaiah promises the restored city will know ᶜōsheq no more (Isa 54:14). The concrete sense of ill-gotten gain appears in Leviticus 6:4, where the defrauder must restore what was taken by ᶜōsheq.

oppression, extortion (15×) The act, condition, or proceeds of oppression and extortion—unjust exploitation of others through abuse of power. The word functions both abstractly (the state of being oppressed, Isa 54:14; Ps 119:134) and concretely (the gain obtained by extortion, Lev 6:4; Ps 62:10). Prophets deploy it as a covenant-violation charge against Israel's leaders (Jer 6:6; 22:17; Ezek 22:7, 29), while wisdom literature reflects on its corrosive social effects (Eccl 5:8; 7:7). Spanish 'opresión' and English 'oppression' consistently capture both dimensions. OPPRESSION AFFLICTION
en: by-oppression, from-oppression, from-oppression-of | es: con-opresión, de-opresión, de-opresión-de | fr: [בעשׁק], [העשׁק], [מעשׁק] | de: [בעשׁק], [העשׁק], [מעשׁק] Lev 6:4; Ps 62:10; Ps 73:8; Ps 119:134; Eccl 5:8

עָשְׁקָה H6234 N-fs (1×)
oppression, distress (noun); cry 'I am oppressed!' (Isaiah 38:14)
Isaiah 38:14 records Hezekiah's prayer during his mortal illness: 'I am oppressed, be my security!' The Hebrew literally says 'oppression to me!' using this rare noun as an exclamation of distress. The word denotes the crushing weight of affliction, the sense of being pressed down by sickness and near-death. Some scholars propose emending to 'my cry' (parallel to 'voice' earlier), but the transmitted text has 'oppression.' Spanish renders 'estoy oprimido' (I am oppressed), capturing Hezekiah's anguish. In the context of terminal illness, oppression is not just external enemies but the internal, existential pressure of mortality.

(1×) Isaiah 38:14 uses this noun in Hezekiah's lament: 'Oppression to me!' or 'I am oppressed!' The king, facing death, cries out under the crushing weight of illness and divine judgment. The word conveys pressure, being squeezed or hemmed in, with no escape. Some propose textual emendation to 'my cry' for parallelism, but the Hebrew as it stands emphasizes the feeling of oppression—not from human enemies but from disease and divine wrath. Spanish 'estoy oprimido' (I am oppressed) preserves the sense of one burdened beyond his strength. Hezekiah appeals to God as surety, the one who can lift the crushing load. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: I-am-oppressed | es: estoy-oprimido | fr: [עשׁקה] | de: [עשׁקה] Isa 38:14

עֶשֶׂר H6235 Prep-l / Number-fsc (177×)
Ten — the cardinal number, appearing in both masculine and feminine forms across counting, ages, and measurements
The Hebrew numeral ten ('eser/asarah) pervades biblical narrative in counting, measurement, and symbolic structures. It appears in genealogical ages (Gen 5:14), negotiations (Abraham's plea for ten righteous in Sodom, Gen 18:32), the Decalogue's ten commandments, and organizational units (rulers of tens, Exod 18:21). Hebrew's gender-agreement system for numerals means the masculine form pairs with feminine nouns and vice versa — a well-known grammatical inversion. Spanish diez, French dix, and German zehn all render it straightforwardly, as the concept of 'ten' requires no cultural adaptation.

ten (177×) The cardinal number ten, occurring in masculine ('asarah, with feminine nouns) and feminine ('eser, with masculine nouns) forms per Hebrew numeral agreement rules. Used for ages (Gen 5:14), quantities (Gen 24:10, ten camels), covenantal standards (Gen 18:32, ten righteous), and administrative divisions (Exod 18:21, rulers of tens). All target languages render it with their basic numeral: Spanish diez, French dix, German zehn. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: ten, ten-of | es: Diez, diez, los-diez | fr: dix, dix-de | de: zehn, zehn-, zehn-von Gen 5:14; Gen 16:3; Gen 18:32; Gen 24:10; Gen 24:22

עֲשַׂר H6236 Number-ms (6×)
Ten — the Aramaic cardinal number, used in Daniel and Ezra for the ten-horned beast and the number twelve.
The Aramaic form of the cardinal number ten, appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel's vision, the fourth beast has ten horns representing ten kings (Dan 7:7, 20, 24), making this numeral central to apocalyptic symbolism. The compound form 'twelve' (trê 'asar, literally 'two-ten') appears in Daniel 4:29 and Ezra 6:17, the latter recording twelve he-goats offered at the temple rededication — one for each tribe of Israel. Spanish 'diez/doce' and French 'dix' render the number straightforwardly, while the Aramaic spelling parallels its Hebrew cognate 'eser.

ten (6×) The Aramaic cardinal number 'ten,' functioning both independently and as part of the compound 'twelve' (trê 'asar). As a standalone numeral, it dominates Daniel 7 where the ten horns of the fourth beast symbolize ten kings (Dan 7:7, 20, 24). In the compound 'twelve,' it appears in Ezra 6:17 (twelve he-goats for the twelve tribes at the temple rededication) and Daniel 4:29 (twelve months). The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'diez,' French 'dix,' German 'zehn' — reflects the transparency of basic numerals. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: ten | es: diez, doce | fr: [עשׂר], dix | de: [עשׂר], zehn Ezra 6:17; Dan 4:29; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:20; Dan 7:24

עָשַׂר H6237 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (9×)

To tithe; in Piel, to give a tenth as worship or obligation; in Qal, to exact a tenth by royal authority

A denominative verb built on the root for 'ten,' used in two contrasting directions. In the Piel stem it describes the voluntary, covenantal act of giving a tenth to God – as when Jacob vowed at Bethel, 'tithing I will tithe it to you' (Gen 28:22), and in the Deuteronomic tithe laws (Deut 14:22; 26:12). In the Qal stem, however, it shifts to the ruler's power to exact a tenth: Samuel warns Israel that the king 'will tithe your grain and your vineyards' (1 Sam 8:15, 17). Spanish 'diezmar' and German 'den Zehnten' both preserve the numeric root, reflecting the universal weight of the tenth-part concept.

1. give/pay a tithe (Piel) (7×) Piel: to give or pay a tenth as an act of devotion or covenantal duty. The emphatic infinitive absolute construction in Deut 14:22 ('tithing you shall tithe') underscores the obligation's gravity. Spanish 'ciertamente diezmar' mirrors this emphatic doubling. Covers Jacob's vow (Gen 28:22), the triennial tithe (Deut 26:12), and the Levitical collectors (Neh 10:38-39). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-will-tithe-it, the-ones-receiving-tithes, tithing | es: Ciertamente-diezmar, cuando-diezmen, de-diezmar | fr: Je—dîme-cela, [בעשר], [המעשרים] | de: [בעשר], [המעשרים], den-Zehnten Gen 28:22; Deut 14:22; Deut 26:12

2. exact a tithe (Qal) (2×) Qal: to take or exact a tenth, used exclusively of a king's right to levy a tithe on his subjects' produce and flocks. Appears only in Samuel's warning speech (1 Sam 8:15, 17), where the verb's active Qal form places the king as agent – he 'will tithe' what belongs to the people, inverting the Piel's voluntary giving into compulsory extraction. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: he-will-tithe | es: diezmará | fr: il-fera-tithe | de: er-wird-tithe 1Sam 8:15; 1Sam 8:17

עָשַׁר H6238 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms / 3mse (17×)

To become rich or gain wealth; to make rich or enrich another; to pretend to be rich

The Hebrew verb 'ashar covers the full life cycle of wealth — acquiring it, bestowing it, and faking it. In its Qal and intransitive Hiphil forms, the verb describes the process of becoming rich, as when Hosea's Ephraim boasts 'I have become rich' (Hos 12:9) and Proverbs warns that whoever hastens to get rich will not go unpunished (Prov 28:20). The transitive Hiphil shifts the agency: the LORD 'makes poor and makes rich' (1 Sam 2:7), and the hand of the diligent enriches (Prov 10:4). The Psalmist celebrates God enriching the land with rain (Ps 65:10). Most delightful is the lonely Hitpael in Proverbs 13:7, describing someone who 'pretends to be rich' while having nothing — a wry observation on human vanity. Arabic ghathara ('to abound') and Aramaic 'atar confirm the root's connection to abundance.

1. become rich, gain wealth (9×) The intransitive sense: to become rich, grow wealthy, gain riches — describing the process or state of arriving at prosperity. Hosea 12:9 gives the self-congratulatory 'I have become rich,' while Job 15:29 denies that the wicked shall be rich and Proverbs 23:4 counsels against toiling to acquire wealth. Proverbs 28:20 warns that haste toward riches invites punishment. Spanish enriquecerse ('to become rich') and the French reflexive s'enrichir both mirror the intransitive construction. The wisdom literature treats this sense with suspicion as often as with approval. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: I-have-become-rich, and-grown-rich, becomes-rich | es: a-enriquecerse, me-he-enriquecido, para-enriquecerte | fr: [ויעשרו], et-s'enrichir, s'enrichir | de: [ואעשר], [ויעשירו], [יעשיר] Job 15:29; Ps 49:16; Prov 21:17; Prov 23:4; Prov 28:20

2. make rich, enrich (7×) The causative-transitive sense (Hiphil): to make rich, to enrich, to bestow wealth upon another person or thing. First Samuel 2:7 places this power squarely with God: 'the LORD makes poor and makes rich.' Saul offers to 'enrich' the family of whoever kills Goliath (1 Sam 17:25), and Genesis 14:23 preserves Abraham's refusal to let the king of Sodom say 'I have made Abram rich.' Psalm 65:9-10 extends the image agriculturally: God 'greatly enriches' the land with streams of water. Spanish enriquecer and German bereichern both capture the transitive causation. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: You-enrich-it, and-makes-rich, made-rich | es: enriquece, enriqueciste, enriquecí | fr: et-fait-riche, fera-fais-riche-lui, fit-riche | de: [העשרת], [תעשיר], du-enrich-es Gen 14:23; 1Sam 2:7; 1Sam 17:25; Ps 65:9; Prov 10:4

3. pretend to be rich (1×) The pretensive sense (Hitpael): to make oneself appear rich, to feign or pretend to be wealthy when one is not. This sense appears only once, in Proverbs 13:7: 'There is one who pretends to be rich, yet has nothing; one who pretends to be poor, yet has great wealth.' Spanish hacerse rico and French faire le riche both convey the performative pretense. The Hitpael stem here functions in its classic pretensive role, producing a witty proverb about the gap between appearance and reality that has lost none of its bite across millennia. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: one-who-pretends-to-be-rich | es: el-que-se-hace-rico | fr: s'enrichir | de: [מתעשר] Prov 13:7

עֹשֶׁר H6239 Prep-l / N-ms (37×)

wealth, riches — material abundance and possessions, often paired with honor or contrasted with wisdom

Osher is the standard Hebrew noun for material wealth and riches, appearing 37 times across wisdom, narrative, and prophetic literature. Its most famous context is Solomon's request: when God offered him anything, Solomon asked for wisdom rather than riches ('osher) — and God gave him both (1 Kgs 3:11-13). This pairing of wisdom and wealth becomes a signature theme in Proverbs, where 'riches and honor' (osher ve-khavod) stand together as gifts that wisdom bestows (Prov 3:16; 8:18; 22:4) but that cannot save on the day of wrath (Prov 11:4). Ecclesiastes probes the paradox of wealth that fails to satisfy (Eccl 4:8; 5:13-14; 6:2). Jeremiah captures the prophetic stance: 'let not the rich man glory in his riches' (9:22). The multilingual glosses converge: Spanish 'riquezas,' French 'richesse,' German 'Reichtum.'

wealth, riches (37×) Material wealth, riches, or abundance of possessions, evaluated both positively as a divine blessing and critically as a spiritual snare. The word frequently collocates with kavod ('honor/glory') in a formulaic pair: 'riches and honor' (1 Kgs 3:13; 1 Chr 29:12, 28; 2 Chr 1:11-12; 17:5; 18:1; 32:27; Prov 3:16; 8:18; 22:4; Eccl 6:2). Wisdom literature explores its ambiguity: wealth comes from God (Prov 22:4) but cannot ransom life (Ps 49:7) or endure judgment (Prov 11:4). Ecclesiastes warns of 'osher kept by its owner to his hurt' (5:13). Jeremiah 17:11 pictures riches departing like a partridge that hatches eggs it did not lay. MIXED MULTITUDE en: And-the-riches, and-riches, riches | es: Y-la-riqueza, de-riqueza, las-riquezas | fr: [ועשר], et-richesse, le-richesse | de: Reichtum, [עשר], riches Gen 31:16; 1Sam 17:25; 1Kgs 3:11; 1Kgs 3:13; 1Kgs 10:23

עָשָׂר H6240 Number-ms (338×)

Ten (used exclusively after unit digits to form the compound numbers eleven through nineteen, both cardinal and ordinal).

Unlike the independent 'ten' (H6235 eser), this form appears only as the second element in compound teen-numbers: eleven through nineteen. It inflects for gender — asar with masculine nouns, esreh with feminine — following the well-known Hebrew pattern of 'reverse' gender agreement in numerals. When used in date formulas (the eleventh year, the twelfth month), it functions as an ordinal without any morphological change, a feature mirrored in Arabic where the teens also serve double duty. One textual oddity at 1 Kings 22:48 preserves a ketiv form that the Masoretes repointed as a form of asah (H6213, 'to make').

1. ten (cardinal number) (334×) The cardinal number 'ten' as the compounding element in teen-numbers (334x). It never stands alone but always follows a unit digit: sheneim asar 'twelve,' sheloshah asar 'thirteen,' and so forth. The gender alternation (asar/esreh) parallels Arabic ashar/ashrata in the teens. Every translation language renders these as simple compound numerals — doce, douze, zwölf — collapsing the two-word Hebrew construction into a single lexeme. Pervasive in genealogies (Gen 5:8), chronologies, and census lists. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)

en: ten | es: [son], diez, doce | fr: dix | de: -, zehn, zehnten Gen 5:8; Gen 5:10; Gen 11:25; Gen 14:4

2. tenth (ordinal use) (3×) Ordinal use of the same teen-compound to mean 'tenth, eleventh, twelfth' etc. in sequential or calendrical contexts (3x). At 1 Kings 6:38 the eighth month of Solomon's temple construction is dated with this form functioning as an ordinal. Spanish décimo and German zehnter confirm the ordinal reading. The lack of a distinct ordinal morpheme for teens is characteristic of Biblical Hebrew and shared with other Semitic languages. TEN (CARDINAL NUMBER)

en: tenth | es: décimo, día | fr: dixième | de: zehnter 1Kgs 6:38; 1Kgs 12:32; 1Kgs 12:33

3. ketiv for H6213 (to make) (1×) A text-critical anomaly at 1 Kings 22:48 (1x) where the consonantal ketiv text coincidentally matches H6240 but the Masoretic qere directs readers to H6213 (asah, 'to make/do'). Translation evidence across languages shows renderings of 'make' rather than a numeral, confirming this is a scribal or transmission variant rather than a genuine sense of the numeral. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: (ketiv) | fr: [ketiv] | de: [ketiv] 1Kgs 22:48

עִשָּׂרוֹן H6241 Conj-w / Adj-msc (33×)

tenth part (issaron) — a dry measure equal to one-tenth of an ephah, prescribed for grain offerings

Issaron is a technical unit of dry measure equaling one-tenth of an ephah (roughly 2.3 liters), used almost exclusively in the Priestly cultic legislation. Its 33 occurrences are confined to Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, always specifying the quantity of fine flour (solet) required for the grain offering (minhah) that accompanied animal sacrifices. A single issaron accompanies a lamb (Num 15:4), two accompany a ram (Num 15:6), and three accompany a bull (Num 15:9) — a graded system that scales the cereal portion to the size of the burnt offering. The term appears extensively in Numbers 28-29, where the festival calendar prescribes exact quantities for daily, Sabbath, new moon, and annual offerings. The Septuagint renders it dekaton tou oiphi ('a tenth of an ephah'), and Spanish 'decima,' French 'dixieme,' and German 'Zehntel' all confirm a fractional-measure meaning.

tenth part, tithe measure (issaron) (33×) A standard dry measure equal to one-tenth of an ephah, used exclusively in Priestly cultic texts to quantify the fine flour for grain offerings. Scaled to the accompanying sacrifice: one issaron per lamb (Num 15:4), two per ram (Num 15:6), three per bull (Num 15:9). Dominates the festival calendar of Numbers 28-29. Identified with the omer of Exodus 16:36 and rendered by the Septuagint as dekaton tou oiphi. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tenth, tenths | es: décima, décimas | fr: dixième, dixièmes | de: tenths, zehnter Exod 29:40; Lev 14:10; Lev 14:21; Lev 23:13; Lev 23:17

עֶשְׂרִים H6242 Prep-b / Number-cp (315×)

Twenty — the cardinal number used for counting, age, measurement, and compound numerals

Esrim is the indeclinable plural form of the number ten, functioning as the cardinal 'twenty' throughout the Hebrew Bible. Across 315 occurrences it counts years of age (Gen 31:38), cubits of measurement (Exod 38:18), thousands of soldiers, and calendar dates. It also combines freely with units ('twenty thousand,' 1 Chr 18:4) and other numerals for compound counts. Every target language uses its basic numeral: Spanish 'veinte,' French 'vingt,' German 'zwanzig' — a reminder that number words are among the most semantically stable items in any lexicon.

twenty (cardinal number) (315×) The cardinal number twenty, employed across legal, narrative, and genealogical texts for quantities, ages, measurements, and dates. As the ancient plural of 'eser ('ten'), it reflects a base-ten counting system. It appears in formulas like 'from twenty years old and upward' (Num 1:3) for military census and in architectural measurements of the tabernacle and temple. Compound uses such as 'twenty thousand' (1 Chr 18:4) are common. TWENTY CARDINAL NUMBER

en: twenty | es: veinte | fr: vingt | de: zwanzig Gen 18:31; Gen 31:38; Gen 31:41; Gen 32:14

עֶשְׂרִין H6243 Conj-w / Number-cp (1×)

twenty (Aramaic indeclinable plural numeral)

Daniel 6:1 reports that Darius the Mede set 'one hundred and twenty' satraps over his kingdom. This Aramaic numeral is the word for twenty, appearing here as part of a larger number. Aramaic numerals are indeclinable (do not change form for gender or case). The administrative structure described—120 satraps with three presidents over them, including Daniel—sets the stage for the plot against Daniel. The number may be symbolic (12 × 10, representing completeness) or historical. The use of Aramaic reflects the setting: Daniel serving in the imperial court, where Aramaic was the diplomatic language.

(1×) In Daniel 6:1, this Aramaic numeral forms part of 'one hundred and twenty,' the number of satraps Darius appointed. Aramaic numerals do not inflect, so this is simply 'twenty' as an indeclinable plural. The administrative detail sets the context for Daniel's elevation and subsequent persecution—with so many satraps, there is ample jealousy and intrigue. Whether the number is historical or symbolic (12 × 10), it conveys the vastness of the empire and the high level at which Daniel operates. The Aramaic language signals the book's setting in the cosmopolitan, multilingual world of Babylonian-Persian courts. TWENTY CARDINAL NUMBER en: and-twenty | es: y-veinte | fr: et-vingt | de: [ועשרין] Dan 6:1

עָשַׁשׁ H6244 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (3×)

to waste away, grow dim, be consumed (from grief or illness)

This verb describes physical deterioration or wasting away, particularly from emotional distress. The psalmist uses it three times to express how grief and anguish have taken physical toll. In Psalm 6:7, the eye 'wastes away' from sorrow; Psalm 31:9-10 expands this to include soul, belly, and bones—comprehensive bodily decline due to affliction. Some scholars propose derivation from 'moth' (as in moth-eaten fabric), while others suggest connections to darkness or dimming. The term conveys not sudden destruction but gradual erosion of vitality and strength.

(3×) Describes gradual physical wasting or deterioration, especially from emotional distress. Psalm 6:7 (verse 8 in Hebrew): 'My eye wastes away (עָשְׁשָׁה) from grief.' Psalm 31:9 (verse 10 in Hebrew) intensifies this: 'My eye wastes away from vexation, my soul and my belly,' and verse 10 (11 in Hebrew) adds 'my bones waste away (עָשְׁשׁוּ).' The verb may derive from 'moth,' suggesting moth-eaten decay, or from roots meaning 'be dark/dim.' The imagery is of slow consumption rather than sudden collapse. Spanish glosses emphasize consumption ('consumir'), while English and German use 'waste away.' WITHERING AND DRYING

en: has-wasted-away, have-wasted-away, wastes-away | es: Se-ha-consumido, se-consumieron, se-ha-consumido | fr: dépérir | de: haben-wasted-weg, hat-wasted-weg, wastes-weg Ps 6:7; Ps 31:9; Ps 31:10 to be smooth, shiny, sleek (possibly from fatness; textually uncertain)

עָשַׁת H6245a V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

Jeremiah 5:28 condemns the wicked: 'They have grown fat, they are sleek,' using this verb of uncertain meaning. The traditional interpretation is 'smooth' or 'shiny,' perhaps describing skin that gleams from excess fat and luxury. However, the word is disputed —some propose emending to 'they have grown rich,' which would parallel 'they have grown fat' (v. 27). Spanish uses 'se pusieron lustrosos' (they became glossy/shiny), supporting the smoothness/shininess reading. The context is moral indictment: the wicked prosper materially while oppressing the poor, and their physical appearance reflects their self-indulgence. Whether smooth, shiny, or rich, the image is of comfortable wickedness.

(1×) Jeremiah 5:28 says the wicked 'have grown fat, they are sleek,' using this verb whose meaning is debated. The traditional sense is 'smooth' or 'shiny'—perhaps their well-fed skin gleams. Some scholars prefer emending to 'rich,' which would better parallel 'fat' (v. 27). Spanish 'lustrosos' (glossy, shiny) supports the transmitted text. The prophet is decrying social injustice: the wicked live in ease and luxury, their prosperity visible in their sleek appearance, while they oppress orphans and the poor. The verb, whatever its precise nuance, paints a picture of self-satisfied affluence built on injustice. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING

en: they-are-sleek | es: se-pusieron-lustrosos | fr: [עשתו] | de: [עשתו] Jer 5:28

עָשַׁת H6245b V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to think, give thought to (Hithpael Aramaism; consider, be mindful of)

Jonah 1:6 records the ship's captain pleading with Jonah: 'Arise, call out to your god! Perhaps the god will give thought to us, that we may not perish.' This Hithpael verb, an Aramaism, means to think or take thought, to be mindful. It is cognate with Aramaic and Targum usage. The captain hopes that Jonah's God might consider their plight and intervene. The verb parallels Hebrew 'chashav' (to think, reckon). Spanish uses 'se preocupara' (will care/be concerned), capturing the sense of attentive consideration. The pagan sailors fear the storm is divine wrath, and they desperately hope that whichever god is responsible might relent if approached.

(1×) In Jonah 1:6, the ship's captain urges Jonah to pray: 'Perhaps the god will give thought to us.' This Hithpael verb, borrowed from Aramaic, means to think of, to be mindful, to consider. It parallels Hebrew 'chashav' and appears in Targums with this sense. The captain hopes that divine attention—any god's attention—might avert disaster. Spanish 'se preocupara' (will be concerned) rightly conveys hoping for divine care. The irony is thick: pagan sailors plead for God's mindfulness while the Hebrew prophet sleeps, fleeing from the very God who has already given him too much thought. THINKING AND SEEMING en: will-give-thought | es: se-preocupara | fr: être-brillant | de: ueberlegte Jonah 1:6

עָשַׁת H6246 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

to think, plan, intend (Aramaic verb; passive participle in Daniel 6:3)

Daniel 6:3 reports that 'the king planned to set him [Daniel] over the whole kingdom,' using this Aramaic verb. The form is strictly a passive participle, meaning 'was thought' or 'was planned,' functioning as a perfect tense. The verb means to think or plan, cognate with Biblical Hebrew and Targum usage (though not found in Syriac). Darius' intention to elevate Daniel triggers the plot by jealous officials to destroy him. Spanish 'pensaba' (he was thinking/planning) captures the deliberative sense. The Aramaic here reflects the language of the imperial court, where Daniel navigates the dangerous politics of high office.

(1×) Daniel 6:3 uses this Aramaic verb to say the king 'was planning' to elevate Daniel over the entire realm. Technically a passive participle ('was thought,' 'was planned'), it functions as a finite verb. The root means to think or plan, with cognates in Targum and Biblical Hebrew, though Syriac lacks it. The king's favorable intention sets the stage for the conspiracy: Daniel's rivals, seeing he will soon outrank them all, concoct the lions' den scheme. Spanish 'pensaba' (was thinking/planning) rightly conveys the king's deliberate intention. The verb reveals that Daniel's fate hinges on one man's thoughts—yet ultimately, God's plan prevails. THINKING AND SEEMING en: was-thinking | es: pensaba | fr: tu-as-fait | de: [עשית] Dan 6:3

עֶשֶׁת H6247 N-msc (1×)

plate, slab (smooth, shiny object; possibly ivory or metal inlay)

Song of Solomon 5:14 describes the beloved's body: 'His abdomen is a plate of ivory, encrusted with sapphires.' This rare noun denotes a plate or slab, possibly a smooth, shiny surface. The imagery is of polished ivory, perhaps inlaid with blue stones, evoking both beauty and luxury. The word may derive from a root meaning 'smooth' or 'shiny,' used elsewhere for refined metal. The metaphor compares the beloved's body to precious materials—ivory for its whiteness and smoothness, sapphires for brilliance. The Song's language is extravagant, piling up images of wealth and beauty to convey the lovers' admiration.

(1×) Song of Solomon 5:14 uses this noun in a metaphor: the beloved's body is 'a plate of ivory.' The term denotes a smooth, flat surface—perhaps a plaque, panel, or slab. The root may relate to smoothness or shininess, as ivory is polished to a lustrous finish. The image evokes luxury: ivory, a rare and costly material, adorned with sapphires. Some see this as describing the torso or belly, smooth and white like carved ivory. The Song's metaphors are sensuous and opulent, and this 'plate of ivory' contributes to the picture of the beloved as a work of art, precious beyond measure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: plate-of | es: obra-de | fr: un-ouvrage | de: [עשת] Song 5:14

עַשְׁתּוּת H6248 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

thought, thinking (construct noun in Job 12:5)

Job 12:5 is notoriously difficult: 'In the thought of one at ease there is contempt for calamity.' This rare noun denotes thought or thinking, used here in construct. The verse critiques those who live comfortably and despise the suffering of others, dismissing their misfortune as deserved. The word may be singular or plural (the form is ambiguous), related to a root meaning 'think.' The point is the smug mentality of the prosperous, who in their self-satisfaction have nothing but scorn for disaster—assuming it will never touch them. Job knows better, having been cast from prosperity into ruin.

(1×) Job 12:5 uses this noun to critique the mindset of the comfortable: 'In the thought of the one at ease there is contempt for misfortune.' The term denotes thinking or mental attitude. Those who live securely, unacquainted with calamity, despise it when they see it in others—judging sufferers as deserving their fate. Job, now a sufferer himself, exposes this callous mentality. The word may be singular or plural (the Hebrew form allows both), but the sense is clear: the prosperous have a thought-pattern that dismisses disaster, because they cannot imagine it happening to them. Job's friends embody this attitude. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-thought-of | es: es-para-el-pensamiento-del | fr: à-לעשתות | de: [לעשתות] Job 12:5

עַשְׁתֵּי H6249 Prep-l / Number-csc (19×)

Eleven, eleventh — the number eleven in cardinal and ordinal uses, always in construct with ten (עֶשֶׂר/עֶשְׂרֵה)

The archaic numeral עַשְׁתֵּי is a fossil form meaning 'one' (cognate with Akkadian ishten), surviving exclusively in combination with עֶשֶׂר or עֶשְׂרֵה to express the number eleven or the ordinal 'eleventh.' It never appears independently. In its cardinal use it counts physical items — the eleven curtains of the tabernacle (Exod 26:7-8; 36:14-15), the eleven-day offering (Num 7:72), and the twenty bulls on the eleventh day (Num 29:20). In ordinal use it marks dates and positions in sequences: 'the eleventh year' of a king's reign (2 Kgs 25:2; Jer 39:2; Ezek 26:1) or 'the eleventh month' (Deut 1:3; Zech 1:7).

1. eleven (cardinal) (13×) The cardinal number eleven, used for counting concrete objects, animals, or people. All 13 occurrences cluster in the Pentateuch and Chronicles: the eleven curtains of goat hair for the tabernacle covering (Exod 26:7-8; 36:14-15), the offering of the leader on the eleventh day (Num 7:72), twenty bulls on day eleven (Num 29:20), and the eleventh military captain (1 Chr 12:13). Multilingual glosses confirm straightforward cardinal counting — Spanish 'once,' French 'onze,' German 'elf' — with no semantic nuance beyond enumerating a quantity of eleven items. NUMBER ELEVEN

en: The-eleventh, eleven, eleven- | es: Once-, once, once- | fr: [עשת], onze, onze- | de: [עשת], eins, elf Exod 26:7; Exod 26:8; Exod 36:14; Exod 36:15; Num 7:72

2. eleventh (ordinal) (6×) The ordinal use meaning 'eleventh,' applied to months, years, or sequential positions in a list. These 6 occurrences mark temporal points in chronological formulas: 'the eleventh year of Zedekiah' (2 Kgs 25:2; Jer 39:2; 52:5), 'the eleventh year' of Ezekiel's prophecy (Ezek 26:1; 30:20), 'the eleventh month' of Shebat (Zech 1:7; Deut 1:3), and positional items like the eleventh lot in 1 Chr 24:12; 25:18; 27:14. Spanish shifts to 'undecimo,' French to ordinal framing, confirming the ordinal reading distinct from simple counting. NUMBER ELEVEN

en: for-the-eleventh, in-eleven-, in-eleventh- | es: En-once, del-undécimo, en-el-undécimo | fr: [בעשתי], [עשתי], dans-onze- | de: [בעשתי], [לעשתי], [עשתי] Deut 1:3; 1Chr 27:14; Jer 1:3; Jer 39:2; Ezek 26:1

עֶשְׁתּוֹן H6250 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

thought, plan, or purpose (especially those that perish with death)

This rare Hebrew noun appears only in Psalm 146:4, where it describes the thoughts or plans of a mortal that vanish when breath departs. The word carries a sense of fragility—the mental schemes and purposes that seem so important in life but disappear at death. Multilingual evidence (Spanish pensamientos, French pensée, German Plans) consistently interprets this as cognitive activity or planning that proves temporary when human life ends.

(1×) Refers specifically to the fleeting thoughts, plans, or mental schemes of mortals that cease at death. The context in Psalm 146:4 emphasizes the transience of human ideas and intentions, contrasting mortal planning with divine reliability. The word captures both the cognitive and purposeful dimensions of what perishes when 'his breath departs.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-plans | es: sus-pensamientos | fr: pensée | de: sein-plans Ps 146:4

עַשְׁתָּרוֹת H6251 Conj-w / N-fpc (4×)

young of the flock, offspring; the increase and fertility of sheep, possibly ewes or lambs

A term appearing exclusively in Deuteronomy's blessing and curse formulas, denoting the fertile increase of the flock. The phrase 'young of your flock' parallels 'increase of your cattle,' representing livestock fertility as covenant blessing or its absence as curse. Scholars debate whether this refers specifically to ewes (female sheep), young lambs, or the general reproductive success of the flock. The probable connection to the goddess Ashtart (associated with fertility) suggests the term emphasizes fecundity and multiplication. Deuteronomy uses it to encapsulate pastoral prosperity—thriving flocks that increase abundantly when God blesses, or fail when He curses.

(4×) Offspring or fertile increase of sheep, denoting flock prosperity. All four occurrences (Deut 7:13, 28:4, 18, 51) appear in covenant formulae: 'offspring of your flock' paralleling 'increase of your cattle.' The term represents livestock fertility as tangible evidence of divine blessing (7:13, 28:4) or the target of covenant curse (28:18, 51). Connection to Ashtoreth (fertility goddess) suggests emphasis on reproductive abundance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-offspring-of, and-young-of | es: ni-rebaños-de, y-los-rebaños-de, y-rebaños-de | fr: et-jeune-de, et-offspring-de | de: und-jung-von, und-offspring-von Deut 7:13; Deut 28:4; Deut 28:18; Deut 28:51

עַשְׁתָּרוֹת H6252 N-proper-fs (12×)

Ashtaroth: a city in Bashan east of the Jordan; also the plural name for Canaanite Astarte goddesses/idols

This word carries two distinct referents sharing a common root in the worship of the goddess Ashtart. As a place name, Ashtaroth denotes a major city in Bashan, royal seat of Og (Deut 1:4; Josh 12:4), later assigned to the Levites. As a divine plural, it refers to the Astarte goddesses or their cult images, the female counterpart to the Baals in Canaanite religion. Judges repeatedly records Israel 'serving the Ashtaroth' (Judg 2:13; 10:6). Spanish distinguishes these neatly: the city is simply Astarot, while the idols receive the article las Astarot/Astartés, marking them as a class of deities.

1. Ashtaroth (place name) (6×) The proper noun designating a city east of the Jordan in the region of Bashan, closely associated with Edrei as the seat of King Og (Deut 1:4; Josh 9:10, 12:4, 13:12). The site is likely Tell Ashtara, about 21 miles east of the Sea of Galilee. The compound Ashteroth-Karnaim in Gen 14:5 may reference a twin-peaked mountain. Spanish en-Astarot and French dans-Ashtaroth both use locative prepositions confirming the geographic reading. It was later assigned as a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:71). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ashtarot, Ashtaroth, in-Ashtaroth | es: Astarot, en-Astarot | fr: Ashtaroth, [עשתרות], dans-Ashtaroth | de: Ashtaroth, [עשתרות], in-Ashtaroth Deut 1:4; Josh 9:10; Josh 12:4; Josh 13:12; 1Sam 31:10

2. Ashtaroth (goddess/idols) (6×) The plural form referring to the Astarte goddesses or their cult images, Canaanite fertility deities worshipped alongside the Baals. Spanish distinguishes this sense with the definite article las Astarot/Astartés, marking these as a class of divinities rather than a location. Judg 2:13 and 10:6 pair 'the Baals and the Ashtaroth' as the twin poles of Canaanite worship that repeatedly ensnared Israel. Samuel calls the people to 'put away the Ashtaroth' (1 Sam 7:3–4), and the Philistines placed Saul's armor in the temple of Ashtaroth (1 Sam 31:10). IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: and-Ashtaroth, and-the-Ashtarot, and-the-Ashtaroth | es: las-Ashtarot, las-Astarot, las-Astartés | fr: et-Ashtaroth, et-le-Ashtarot, et-le-Ashtaroth | de: der-Ashtaroth, und-Ashtaroth, und-der-Ashtarot Josh 13:31; Judg 2:13; Judg 10:6; 1Sam 7:3; 1Sam 7:4

עַשְׁתֹּרֶת H6253 N-proper-fp (3×)

Ashtoreth, Canaanite/Phoenician goddess of love and war

Ashtoreth (also Astarte) was a major Canaanite and Phoenician goddess of fertility, love, and warfare, corresponding to Mesopotamian Ishtar and Greek Aphrodite. The name appears in Hebrew with vowels borrowed from 'bosheth' (shame), reflecting Israelite scribal disdain for the deity. Solomon infamously built a high place for Ashtoreth when influenced by his foreign wives (1 Kings 11:5, 33), and this shrine remained until Josiah's reforms destroyed it (2 Kings 23:13). The goddess worship involved cultic prostitution and represented everything opposed to exclusive worship of Yahweh. Her cult was widespread across the ancient Near East.

(3×) The divine name of the Canaanite goddess of love, fertility, and war, known across the ancient world as Astarte (Phoenician), Ishtar (Assyrian/Babylonian), or Aphrodite (Greek). In 1 Kings 11:5, Solomon is condemned for following 'Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians.' Verse 33 lists her among the gods for whom Solomon built high places, and 2 Kings 23:13 records Josiah's destruction of these shrines. The Hebrew vocalization (עַשְׁתֹּרֶת) likely deliberately echoes 'bosheth' (shame) to express contempt. Archaeological evidence shows widespread worship including the Mesha Stele's mention. Translations preserve the name: 'Ashtoreth,' 'Astarot' (Spanish), 'Astarté.' GODS AND DEITIES en: Ashtoreth, to-Ashtoret, to-Ashtoreth | es: Astarot, a-Astarot, para-Astarté | fr: Ashtoreth, à-Ashtoret, à-Ashtoreth | de: Ashtoreth, zu-Ashtoret, zu-Ashtoreth 1Kgs 11:5; 1Kgs 11:33; 2Kgs 23:13

עַשְׁתְּרָתִי H6254 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Ashterathite (a gentilicic designation indicating origin from Ashteroth)

A Hebrew gentilicic adjective identifying someone from Ashteroth, a city in Bashan east of the Jordan. In 1 Chronicles 11:44, this term designates one of David's mighty warriors by his hometown. Like many such designations in biblical genealogies and military rosters, it provided geographic and clan identity in ancient Israel's social structure.

(1×) The gentilicic form 'Ashterathite' identifies an individual from the city of Ashteroth in Bashan. Used in 1 Chronicles 11:44 to specify one of David's elite warriors, this designation functioned as a geographic identifier showing the warrior's place of origin, similar to modern surnames derived from hometowns. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ashterathite | es: el-asteratita | fr: [העשתרתי] | de: [העשתרתי] 1Chr 11:44

עַשְׁתָּרוֹת H6255 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

in/at Ashteroth-Karnaim (a place name east of the Jordan)

A compound place name appearing in Genesis 14:5 during the narrative of the eastern kings' campaign. The name combines Ashteroth (connected to worship of the goddess Ashtart) with Karnaim ('two horns'), possibly referring to a twin-peaked mountain or a cult symbol. The site was located in Bashan, east of the Sea of Galilee, and may correspond to Tell Ashtara or Muzeirib in modern Jordan.

(1×) The geographic designation 'Ashteroth-Karnaim' marks a specific location in the Transjordan where Chedorlaomer and allied kings defeated the Rephaim (Genesis 14:5). The name's second element, 'Karnaim' (two horns), may describe topography or religious symbolism. Archaeological and textual evidence places this in Bashan, a region known for ancient cultic sites. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Ashteroth-Karnaim | es: en-Astarot-Carnaim | fr: dans-Ashteroth-Karnaim | de: in-Aschterot-Karnajim Gen 14:5

עֵת H6256 Prep / N-cs (297×)

Time, season, or appointed moment — a point or period in time, ranging from general temporal reference to divinely appointed occasion.

One of the most common temporal nouns in the Hebrew Bible, appearing nearly 300 times. Far from a bland clock-word, 'et carries rich theological freight: it is the time that God appoints (Lev 26:4, 'I will give your rains in their season'), the crisis moment that arrives (Jer 8:7, 'the stork knows her appointed times'), and the narrative marker that anchors events ('at that time'). German consistently renders it 'Zeit,' Spanish 'tiempo,' and French 'temps,' but the Hebrew usage splits between neutral temporal reference and the pregnant sense of kairos — the right time, the ripe moment — a distinction visible when translations add qualifiers like 'in its season' or 'about this time.'

1. time, period (264×) The general, unmarked sense: a point or stretch of time, a period, or a moment. This covers the vast majority of occurrences (264x), including the extremely common prepositional phrase ba'et hahi' ('at that time,' Gen 21:22, Deut 1:9). All languages converge on their basic time-word — English 'time,' Spanish 'tiempo,' French 'temps,' German 'Zeit' — with no special nuance of propriety or appointment. Includes both singular moments (Exod 18:22, 'at all times') and extended periods (2 Sam 24:15). TIME AND SEASONS

en: at-a-time-of, the-time, time | es: a-tiempo;, el-tiempo, tiempo | fr: temps, temps-de | de: Zeit, Zeit-von, Zeiten Gen 29:7; Exod 18:22; Exod 18:26; Lev 16:2; 2Sam 24:15

2. about this time, now (17×) Temporal demonstrative: 'about this time' or 'now,' typically with the preposition ke- (כְּעֵת). Genesis 18:10,14 ('about this time next year') and Exodus 9:18 ('about this time tomorrow') exemplify this deictic usage pointing to an imminent or proximate moment. Spanish 'como en el tiempo' and French 'comme temps' reflect the comparative/approximative force. The construction often introduces prophetic announcements, lending it an oracular quality. TIME AND SEASONS

en: about-the-time, about-this-time, about-time | es: Como-en-el-tiempo, Como-este-tiempo, Como-tiempo | fr: [כעת], au-sujet-de-le-temps, comme-temps | de: Zeit, bei-der-Zeit, ueber-Zeit Gen 18:10; Gen 18:14; Exod 9:18; Num 23:23; Judg 13:23

3. appointed time, due season (14×) The appointed, proper, or due time — when something should happen according to divine or natural order. Leviticus 26:4 ('I will give your rains in their season') and Deuteronomy 11:14 ('rain in its season') show the agricultural-calendrical usage, while Job 38:32 ('Can you lead forth the Mazzaroth in their season?') extends it to cosmic regularity. Pronominal suffixes ('in its time,' 'in their season') are the hallmark. French 'saison' and German 'Jahreszeit' (season of the year) emerge here, marking a clear shift from generic time to kairos — the fitting moment. TIME AND SEASONS

en: in-its-season, in-its-time, in-their-season | es: a-su-tiempo, a-tiempo-su, en-su-tiempo | fr: dans-leur-saison, dans-maintenant, dans-son-saison | de: Zeit, in-ihr-Jahreszeit, in-nun Lev 26:4; Deut 11:14; Deut 28:12; Job 5:26; Job 38:32

4. (1×) A rare plural usage meaning 'times' in the sense of repeated occasions. Nehemiah 9:28 ('many times you delivered them') uses the plural to indicate iterative occurrences. Spanish renders 'veces' (occasions/times) rather than 'tiempo,' confirming the shift from duration to frequency. This sense is sparse but linguistically distinct from the singular temporal reference. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: times | es: veces | fr: temps | de: Zeiten Neh 9:28

5. (1×) A textually uncertain occurrence in Psalm 74:6 involving a possible ketiv/qere variant. The English and German glosses preserve the ketiv reading 'and now' (ve-'attah), while French retains 'temps.' This isolated case likely reflects a scribal confusion between 'et (time) and 'attah (now), and the single attestation makes it a marginal sense best noted for text-critical interest rather than semantic weight. TIME AND SEASONS

en: [ketiv:and-now] | es: [y-ahora] | fr: temps | de: [ketiv:and-now] Ps 74:6

עָתַד H6257 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-ms / 3fs (2×)

To be ready, prepared, or destined; to make ready or prepare something

This verb means to be ready or to make ready. In Proverbs 24:27, it's an imperative to 'prepare' or 'make ready' one's field work before building a house—practical wisdom about proper sequencing. In Job 15:28, it describes houses 'destined' or 'prepared' to become heaps of ruins—ready-made for destruction. The term emphasizes the state of being prepared, whether through wise planning or through divine destiny toward judgment.

(2×) A verb meaning to prepare, make ready, or be destined. The Piel imperative in Proverbs commands active preparation ('dispónlo,' 'make-ready'), while the Hithpael in Job describes passive destining ('fueron destinadas,' 'were destined'). The root appears in later Hebrew and Aramaic for 'future' or 'ready,' capturing the temporal sense of something prepared and awaiting its time. Both biblical uses involve things being positioned for what's coming—either wise preparation or appointed destruction. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: and-make-ready, are-destined | es: fueron-destinadas, y-dispónlo | fr: et-ועתדה-elle, התעתדו | de: [התעתדו], [ועתדה] Job 15:28; Prov 24:27

עַתָּה H6258 Adv (434×)

Now – a temporal adverb marking the present moment, often in the transitional phrase 'and now' or in 'from now on.'

Attah is the Hebrew Bible's primary adverb for the present moment, appearing over 430 times. Its most characteristic use is the transitional formula we'attah ('and now'), which pivots discourse from narrative background or past events to present implication or command: 'And now, behold your wife' (Gen 12:19), 'And now, Israel, what does the LORD require of you?' (Deut 10:12). A smaller but theologically significant pattern is me'attah ('from now'), expressing duration from the present into the indefinite future, as in the doxological 'from this time forth and forevermore' (Ps 113:2; 115:18; 121:8).

1. and now (421×) The present temporal adverb 'now,' overwhelmingly appearing in the discourse formula we'attah ('and now') to mark a transition from past narration or situation to present action, command, or conclusion. With 421 occurrences this is the dominant pattern, spanning every genre: patriarchal dialogue (Gen 12:19), covenant stipulations (Gen 20:7, 'now return the man's wife'), prophetic indictment (Isa 1:21, 'but now murderers'), and royal speech (1 Kgs 12:4). All languages render it with their standard temporal marker: spa 'y-ahora,' fra 'et-maintenant,' deu 'und-nun.' NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: And-now, and-now | es: Y-ahora, y-ahora | fr: Et-maintenant, et-maintenant | de: und-nun, und-nun- Gen 3:22; Gen 4:11; Gen 11:6; Gen 12:19; Gen 20:7

2. from now (13×) The temporal phrase me'attah ('from now, henceforth'), expressing duration from the present moment into the future. With 13 occurrences this sense is concentrated in liturgical and wisdom literature, especially the formulaic 'from this time forth and forevermore' (Ps 113:2; 115:18; 121:8; 125:2). The prepositional prefix min- ('from') shifts attah from punctual 'now' to inceptive 'from now on.' Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the distinction: spa 'desde-ahora,' deu 'von-nun,' both adding directional markers absent from the bare 'now' form. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: from-now, than-now | es: desde-ahora, que-ahora | fr: de-maintenant, von-maintenant | de: von-nun 2Chr 16:9; Ps 113:2; Ps 115:18; Ps 121:8; Ps 125:2

עָתִיד H6259 Adj-mp (2×)

Ready, prepared, or skilled; describing readiness for action, timing, or expertise

This adjective describes something or someone ready or prepared. It spans several nuances: readiness for military action ('a king ready for battle,' Job 15:24), temporal readiness for an event ('ready for the day,' Esther 3:14; 8:13), professional skill ('skilled in rousing Leviathan,' Job 3:8), temporal imminence ('impending things,' Deuteronomy 32:35), and stored resources ('their stores,' Isaiah 10:13). The term emphasizes preparedness in various senses, from military readiness to appointed timing to acquired expertise.

(2×) An adjective meaning ready, prepared, or skilled across multiple semantic contexts. The Esther usage marks documents 'ready for the day' (preparedness for execution). The ketiv-qere variant in Isaiah involves 'stores/treasures' versus 'ready things.' Job uses it for both military readiness and professional skill in magic. Deuteronomy applies it to imminently approaching calamity. The underlying concept is preparedness—whether temporal (soon to come), martial (equipped for battle), professional (skilled), or material (stored up). ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: [kethiv], and-their-treasures | es: (y-sus-tesoros), [preparados] | fr: [(ועתודותיהם)], [עתודים] | de: [(ועתודותיהם)], [[עתודים]] Esth 8:13; Isa 10:13

עַתּוּד H6260 Prep-k / N-mp (29×)

He-goat; mature male goat used in sacrifice and as livestock; figuratively, a leader or chief among people.

A term for the mature male goat, prominent throughout the sacrificial system and pastoral economy of ancient Israel. The word appears in census lists of offerings (Numbers 7), descriptions of livestock wealth (Genesis 31:10; Proverbs 27:26), and as sacrificial victims (Isaiah 1:11; Psalm 66:15). Because the dominant billy goat leads the flock, the prophets extended the image figuratively to human rulers and chiefs, as when Isaiah pictures the shades of fallen kings rising to greet Babylon's monarch (Isaiah 14:9). Spanish and French translations consistently render the literal sense as machos cabrios and boucs, while the figurative use at Isaiah 14:9 is signaled by English 'leaders of.'

1. male goat, he-goat (28×) The literal sense denotes a mature male goat, prominent in sacrificial contexts (Numbers 7:17, 23, 29; Psalm 66:15), livestock inventories (Genesis 31:10, 12; Ezekiel 27:21), and dietary references (Deuteronomy 32:14). Multilingual glosses uniformly point to the biological animal: Spanish machos cabrios, French boucs, German maennlich Ziegen. The 28 occurrences span ritual, economic, and pastoral settings across the Pentateuch, Prophets, and Writings. MALE GOAT

en: and-goats, and-he-goats, male-goats | es: machos-cabríos, y-machos-cabríos | fr: bouc, boucs, et-boucs | de: [ועתודים], [עתודים], maennlich-Ziegen Gen 31:10; Gen 31:12; Num 7:17; Num 7:23; Num 7:29

2. leader, chief (metaphorical) (1×) A figurative extension in which the dominant he-goat image represents human leaders or chiefs. At Isaiah 14:9, the shades of the earth's 'leaders' (attude) rise from Sheol to meet the king of Babylon. Zechariah 10:3 and Ezekiel 34:17 similarly deploy the flock-leader metaphor for rulers whom God holds accountable. The Spanish gloss machos cabrios de and English 'leaders of' preserve the genitive construction that marks this metaphorical transfer from animal to human authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaders-of | es: machos-cabríos-de | fr: bouc | de: [עתודי] Isa 14:9

עָתִי H6261 Adj-ms (1×)

ready, prepared, or appointed (one who stands ready for a specific task)

This Hebrew adjective describes someone in a state of readiness or appointment. In Leviticus 16:21, it designates the man prepared to lead the scapegoat into the wilderness on the Day of Atonement—someone specifically chosen and standing ready for this ritual task. The term implies both timing and preparation, suggesting someone who is appropriately positioned and equipped for immediate action.

(1×) Describes a person in a state of readiness or appointed for a specific task. In Leviticus 16:21, the 'appointed man' is already prepared to receive the scapegoat and lead it away, embodying both temporal readiness (the right moment) and practical preparation. The multilingual glosses (appointed, designated, established) emphasize the formal selection and preparedness inherent in the term. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: appointed | es: designado | fr: établit | de: setzte-ein Lev 16:21

עַתַּי H6262 N-proper-ms (4×)

Attai; personal name of uncertain meaning, borne by men of Judah, Gad, and the house of David

A personal name appearing in genealogies and military lists. First Chronicles 2:35-36 records Attai in Judah's genealogy as son of an Egyptian slave and grandson of Sheshan. Another Attai appears among the Gadite warriors who joined David (12:11). A third Attai is mentioned as a son born to Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:20). The LXX transliterations vary (Ietthei), typical for proper names. The name's etymology is uncertain, possibly related to a root meaning 'timely' or 'ready.' These genealogical entries document family lines and military rosters without narrative development.

(4×) Personal name occurring in three distinct genealogical contexts. 1 Chronicles 2:35-36 lists Attai in Judah's line (son of an Egyptian). 1 Chronicles 12:12 names an Attai among Gadite warriors. 2 Chronicles 11:20 mentions Attai as Rehoboam's son. The name appears across tribal affiliations (Judah, Gad) and royal connections, documenting individuals without indicating the name's meaning. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Attai, and-Attai | es: Atai, Atay, Y-Atay | fr: [ועתי], [עתי] | de: [ועתי], [עתי] 1Chr 2:35; 1Chr 2:36; 1Chr 12:12; 2Chr 11:20

עֲתִיד H6263 Adj-mp (1×)

ready, prepared (Aramaic plural adjective)

This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel 3:15 in Nebuchadnezzar's challenge to Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. The king asks if they are 'ready' to bow before the golden image when they hear the music. The word carries the sense of being prepared or willing to perform an action, similar to its Hebrew cognate. It appears in the Aramaic portion of Daniel, reflecting the linguistic context of the Babylonian court.

(1×) The Aramaic plural form meaning 'ready' or 'prepared,' used in Daniel 3:15 when Nebuchadnezzar questions whether the three Jewish men are ready to worship his image. The term conveys readiness in the sense of willingness or preparedness to act, fitting the confrontational context where compliance is being demanded. The Spanish and French translations (preparados, prêt) capture this sense of being in a state of readiness. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: ready | es: preparados | fr: prêt | de: [עתידין] Dan 3:15

עָתִיד H6264 Adj-ms (6×)

Ready, prepared, poised for action; treasures or stores (ketiv variant)

The adjective עָתִיד describes a state of readiness or preparedness —

someone or something poised for imminent action. Job's wicked king is 'ready for the onset' (Job 15:24), the royal decree makes citizens 'ready for that day' (Esth 3:14; 8:13), and those 'skilled in rousing Leviathan' are described as 'ready' practitioners (Job 3:8). Moses' song warns that 'the things prepared are hastening' (Deut 32:35), shading toward impending fate. A single ketiv variant in Isa 10:13 reads the form as a noun meaning 'treasures' or 'stored wealth,' a reading supported by Hindi 'khazanon' and Swahili 'hazina' (treasures).

1. ready, prepared (5×) In a state of readiness or preparedness, whether of persons poised for action or of events that are imminent. Arabic 'mustaiddeen' (ready/prepared) and Spanish 'preparados' (prepared) consistently confirm this sense across all five occurrences. Job 15:24 pictures the wicked as a king 'ready for battle,' Esth 3:14 and 8:13 describe subjects prepared for the appointed day, Job 3:8 identifies those 'ready' (i.e., skilled) to rouse Leviathan, and Deut 32:35 warns of 'prepared things' that hasten toward fulfillment. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: ready, things-prepared, those-ready | es: (preparados), lo-preparado, los-preparados | fr: [עתדים], [עתידים], choses-prépara | de: Sachen-bereitete, [(עתידים)], [העתידים] Deut 32:35; Esth 3:14; Esth 8:13; Job 3:8; Job 15:24

2. treasures, stores (ketiv variant) (1×) A ketiv (written text) variant in Isa 10:13 where the form appears to mean 'treasures' or 'stored wealth' rather than 'readiness.' The qere reading normalizes it to a different vocalization to distinguish it from the adjective. Hindi 'khazanon' (treasures) and Swahili 'hazina zao' (their treasures) clearly attest a possession/wealth sense. The Assyrian conqueror boasts: 'I have plundered their stores,' connecting the idea of things 'prepared' or 'laid up' to accumulated riches. RICHES AND WEALTH
en: [ketiv] | es: [ketiv] | fr: [[ועתידתיהם]] | de: [[ועתידתיהם]] Isa 10:13

עֲתָיָה H6265 N-proper-ms (1×)
Athaiah (a personal name meaning possibly 'Yahweh has helped')
A personal name appearing in Nehemiah 11:4, identifying a descendant of Judah who resettled in Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile. The name is textually problematic, with parallel passages and ancient versions showing variation. The Septuagint offers 'Athea,' while 1 Chronicles 9:4 has the parallel form 'Uthai.' Such variation was common in the transmission of genealogical lists.

(1×) The personal name 'Athaiah' identifies a post-exilic Judahite who lived in Jerusalem according to Nehemiah 11:4. The name appears in lists documenting the repopulation of Jerusalem after the return from Babylon. Textual witnesses disagree on the exact form, suggesting scribal variation in the genealogical transmission, a common phenomenon in biblical name lists. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Atayah | es: Ataías | fr: [עתיה] | de: [עתיה] Neh 11:4

עָתִיק H6266 Adj-ms (1×)
choice, surpassing, eminent, or valuable (describing superior quality)
A Hebrew adjective describing something of superior quality or eminence. Isaiah 23:18 uses it to characterize 'choice attire' or 'stately clothing'—garments of exceptional quality. The word conveys the idea of something that stands out or surpasses the ordinary, whether in material value, craftsmanship, or excellence. Related to the notion of antiquity conveying value, it emphasizes distinction and superiority.

(1×) Describes objects or qualities of exceptional merit or distinction. In Isaiah 23:18, it modifies 'covering' or 'attire,' indicating clothing of superior quality and stateliness. The term suggests something eminent or choice, standing above common examples. Spanish 'duradera' (enduring) may capture the sense of lasting value, while the Hebrew root connects superior quality with antiquity or proven excellence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: stately | es: duradera | fr: [עתיק] | de: [עתיק] Isa 23:18

עָתִיק H6267 Adj-mpc (2×)
Removed, weaned, or old/ancient; describing things taken away or distant in time
This adjective carries two meanings. First, it describes children 'removed from the breast'—weaned (Isaiah 28:9), using a participial sense from the root 'remove.' Second, it means 'old' or 'ancient' (1 Chronicles 4:22), reflecting an Aramaism where the same root developed the sense of antiquity. Both meanings connect to the idea of removal: weaned children are removed from nursing; ancient things are removed from the present by time's distance.

(2×) An adjective meaning either removed/weaned or old/ancient. Isaiah's rhetorical question uses the construct 'removed from the breasts' ('arrancados de los pechos') as parallel to 'weaned from milk,' describing children old enough for advanced teaching. Chronicles uses it in the Aramaic sense of 'ancient' ('antiguas') for old records or things. The multilingual glosses reflect both senses, showing the term's semantic range from physical removal (weaning) to temporal removal (antiquity). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: ancient | es: a-los-arrancados, antiguas | fr: [עתיק], [עתיקים] | de: [עתיקי], [עתיקים] 1Chr 4:22; Isa 28:9

עַתִּיק H6268 Adj-msc (3×)
Ancient of Days, aged one advanced in years
This Aramaic adjective means 'advanced' or 'aged,' appearing exclusively in Daniel's apocalyptic vision as the title 'Ancient of Days.' The phrase describes the eternal, sovereign figure seated on a fiery throne, from whom the Son of Man receives dominion. The imagery emphasizes timeless existence, wisdom, and ultimate authority—one who predates all creation and presides over cosmic judgment. Daniel 7 uses this title three times as the divine judge takes His seat, receives worship, and executes justice. The term became influential in theological and artistic depictions of God's eternal nature.

(3×) An adjective meaning 'aged' or 'advanced in days,' used exclusively as the divine title 'Ancient of Days' (עַתִּיק יוֹמִין) in Daniel's vision. The phrase appears in 7:9 as the throne scene unfolds, in 7:13 when the Son of Man approaches Him, and in 7:22 when He renders judgment for the saints. The Aramaic conveys not merely old age but timeless eternality—one who has existed from everlasting. The imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern depictions of aged divine figures representing wisdom and authority. Translations preserve this: 'Ancient of Days' (English), 'Anciano de días' (Spanish), matching Syriac usage in Ecclesiasticus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Ancient-of, and-Ancient-of | es: Anciano, y-Anciano | fr: [עתיקין], [עתיק] | de: [עתיקין], [עתיק] Dan 7:9; Dan 7:13; Dan 7:22

עֲתָךְ H6269 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)
Athach (a place name in Judah)
A place name mentioned in 1 Samuel 30:30, where David sent portions of spoil recovered from the Amalekites. Located in the territory of Judah, Athach was among the towns that received gifts from David, cementing his relationships with Judahite communities before he became king. The site is otherwise unknown, and some scholars have proposed textual emendations, but the name stands in the received text as one of David's friendly southern towns.

(1×) The geographic name 'Athach' identifies a town in Judah where David sent spoil after defeating the Amalekites (1 Samuel 30:30). The location is part of David's diplomatic gift-giving to southern Judahite towns that had supported him during his fugitive years. Though the precise site remains unidentified, it represents one of the communities in David's network of support in Judah's Negev region. PERSONAL NAMES
en: in-Athach | es: en-Atac | fr: dans-Athach | de: in-Athach 1Sam 30:30

עַתְלַי H6270 N-proper-ms (1×)
Athlai (a personal name meaning possibly 'Yahweh is exalted') A personal name in Ezra 10:28, identifying one of the Israelites who had married a foreign wife during the exile and was required to divorce her as part of Ezra's reforms. The name appears in the list of those who had violated the prohibition against intermarriage. Different from the more famous feminine name Athaliah, this masculine form appears only in this post-exilic context of religious restoration.

(1×) The masculine personal name 'Athlai' designates one of the men in the post-exilic community who had taken a foreign wife (Ezra 10:28). The name appears in Ezra's list of those required to put away foreign wives to maintain covenant fidelity. This occurrence reflects the challenges of maintaining religious identity during and after the Babylonian exile, where intermarriage with surrounding peoples was seen as threatening covenant loyalty. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Atlay | es: Atlai | fr: [עַתְלַי] | de: [עַתְלַי] Ezra 10:28

עֲתַלְיָה H6271 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (17×)
Athaliah — queen mother of Judah who usurped the throne for six years; also the name of two post-exilic men.
Primarily the name of the notorious queen mother who seized Judah's throne after her son Ahaziah was killed by Jehu. A daughter (or granddaughter) of Omri and Ahab, she brought Baal worship into the southern kingdom and attempted to exterminate the Davidic line — only the infant Joash survived, hidden in the temple for six years (2 Kings 11:1-3). Her dramatic overthrow by the priest Jehoiada (2 Kings 11:13-20) restored both the Davidic monarchy and Yahwistic worship. The name also appears for a Benjaminite (1 Chronicles 8:26) and two post-exilic figures (Ezra 8:7; 10:28). The Greek rendering Gotholia preserves the name across the Septuagint tradition.

Athaliah (personal name) (17×) The proper name Athaliah, referring primarily to the queen mother of Judah — daughter of Ahab and Jezebel (or granddaughter of Omri) — who usurped the throne after Ahaziah's death and reigned six years until overthrown by Jehoiada the priest (2 Kgs 11:1-20; 2 Chr 22-23). She is the only woman to rule Judah, and 2 Chronicles 24:7 calls her 'that wicked woman.' The name also designates a Benjaminite in 1 Chronicles 8:26 and two post-exilic men in Ezra 8:7 and 10:28. French 'Athalie,' Spanish 'Atalía,' and German 'Atalja' all reflect the LXX tradition of Gotholia. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Atalyah, Atalyahu, Athalyah | es: Atalyah, Atalía, Y-Atalía | fr: Athalie, Athalyah, Athalyahu | de: Atalja, Athalyah, Athalyahu 2Kgs 8:26; 2Kgs 11:1; 2Kgs 11:2; 2Kgs 11:3; 2Kgs 11:13

עָתַם H6272 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to be scorched, darkened, or obscured (a dubious verb of uncertain meaning)
A rare and disputed Hebrew verb appearing in Isaiah 9:19 (MT 9:18), where the Masoretic Text reads 'the land is scorched' or 'darkened.' The root's meaning is uncertain—Arabic cognates suggest either scorching heat or being clogged/obscured. Many scholars suspect textual corruption and propose reading a different verb (perhaps from the root meaning 'to burn'). The context describes the consuming nature of God's wrath, with imagery of fire and darkness.

(1×) The uncertain verbal form in Isaiah 9:19 (MT 9:18) likely describes the land being scorched, darkened, or obscured as a result of divine judgment. Arabic cognates point toward suffocating heat or being darkened, fitting the passage's imagery of consuming fire and wickedness. However, textual uncertainty makes this one of the more debated lexical items, with several scholars proposing emendations to clarify the intended image of destruction. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: is-scorched | es: se-oscureció | fr: [נעתם] | de: [נעתם] Isa 9:19

עָתְנִי H6273 N-proper-ms (1×)
Othni (a Levitical personal name)
A Levitical name appearing in 1 Chronicles 26:7, identifying one of the gatekeepers assigned to the temple service in David's organization of Levitical duties. The name is part of the genealogical records documenting the families and individuals responsible for guarding the entrances to the sanctuary. Like many Levitical names in Chronicles, it preserves the memory of those who served in Israel's worship infrastructure.

(1×) The personal name 'Othni' identifies a Levite from the gatekeepers' division in 1 Chronicles 26:7. These gatekeepers were responsible for guarding the temple entrances and maintaining order in the sanctuary precincts. The name appears in the detailed Chronicler's record of David's organization of temple personnel, preserving the identity of families charged with sacred security duties. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Othni | es: Otni | fr: [עתני] | de: [עתני] 1Chr 26:7

עָתְנִיאֵל H6274 N-proper-ms (7×)
Othniel; proper name of Israel's first judge, son of Kenaz and younger brother of Caleb
The personal name Othniel (עָתְנִיאֵל), meaning perhaps 'lion of God' or 'God is my strength.' He is the first judge raised by the LORD to deliver Israel after the generation of Joshua (Judg 3:9-11). Son of Kenaz and Caleb's younger brother, he first appears capturing Kiriath-sepher and winning Caleb's daughter Achsah as wife (Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13). The Chronicler lists his descendants (1 Chr 4:13) and his family's military service (1 Chr 27:15). Transliterations are consistent across languages: Spanish Otoniel, French and German Otniel/Othniel.

Othniel (proper name) (7×) Proper masculine name עָתְנִיאֵל, borne by the first judge of Israel. Son of Kenaz and younger brother of Caleb, Othniel captured Debir (Kiriath-sepher) and received Achsah in marriage (Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13). The Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he judged Israel and delivered them from Cushan-rishathaim (Judg 3:9-11). His name appears in Chronicles for genealogical (1 Chr 4:13) and military (1 Chr 27:15) records. All seven occurrences refer to this single individual; the LXX renders the name Γοθονιηλ. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Othni'el, Othniel, Otniel | es: Otniel, Otoniel, para-Otoniel | fr: Othniel, Otniel, [לעתניאל] | de: Otniel, [לעתניאל], [עתניאל] Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13; Judg 3:9; Judg 3:11; 1Chr 4:13

עָתַק H6275 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (9×)
To move, advance, proceed; grow old; be displaced; remove; transcribe — a versatile root spanning motion, aging, and textual copying
A remarkably flexible Hebrew verb whose senses range from physical relocation to the passage of time itself. When Abraham 'moved on' from there toward Bethel (Gen 12:8), it was this word that described his journeying. Yet the same root can describe eyes growing dim with grief (Ps 6:7) or an immovable rock being displaced from its place (Job 14:18). Its most surprising use comes in Prov 25:1, where Hezekiah's scribes 'copied' the proverbs of Solomon — a sense that likely developed from the idea of transferring or moving text from one scroll to another. The Arabic cognate ataqa (to grow old, become free) and Aramaic athiq (to be ancient) illuminate the aging senses beautifully.

1. to move forward, proceed (2×) The Hiphil sense of moving forward on a journey or proceeding to a new location. In Gen 12:8, Abraham 'moved on' from between Bethel and Ai, and in Gen 26:22, Isaac 'moved away' after the well dispute at Rehoboth. German 'und-brach-auf' (and broke camp) and 'und-zog-weiter' (and moved on) precisely capture the itinerant, camp-striking quality of this patriarchal travel vocabulary. Spanish 'se-trasladó' (relocated) likewise emphasizes the full relocation. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-he-moved, and-moved | es: Y-se-movió, Y-se-trasladó | fr: et-il-mut, et-mut | de: und-brach-auf, und-zog-weiter Gen 12:8; Gen 26:22

2. to grow old, become feeble (2×) The Qal sense of advancing in years, growing old and feeble — an Aramaism reflecting the cognate athaq (to be ancient). In Job 21:7, the wicked 'grow old' and increase in power, a bitter complaint about injustice. In Ps 6:8 (English 6:7), the psalmist's eye 'grows weak' from grief. The pairing with ashshâh (to waste away) in the Psalm confirms this is physical deterioration through aging or sorrow, not mere temporal passage.

AGING AND DISPLACEMENT
en: grow-old, grows-weak | es: envejecen,, ha-envejecido | fr: être-ancien | de: [עתקו], wächst-schwach Job 21:7; Ps 6:7

3. to move from a place (2×) The Qal sense of being moved or displaced from a fixed position, said of geological features rather than persons. In Job 14:18, even a mountain crumbles and a rock 'is moved from its place' — an image of cosmic impermanence. In Job 18:4, Bildad asks whether the earth should be abandoned for Job's sake or a rock displaced. Spanish 'se-mueve' (moves itself) and 'se-moverá' (will move) reflect the reflexive quality of this intransitive displacement. AGING AND DISPLACEMENT en: and-will-move, moves | es: se-mueve, y-se-moverá | fr: et-être-ancien, être-ancien | de: [ויעתק], [יעתק] Job 14:18; Job 18:4

4. to remove, displace (2×) The Hiphil causative sense of removing or displacing by force, attributed to God's power. In Job 9:5, God 'removes mountains' without their knowing it — one of the great theophanic power-images. In Job 32:15 (following some textual traditions), words 'have departed from' the friends of Job. The shift from intransitive displacement (sense 3) to causative removal highlights the theological emphasis on divine agency. AGING AND DISPLACEMENT en: the-One-moving, they-have-removed | es: El-que-mueve, retiraron | fr: le-être-ancien, être-ancien | de: [המעתיק], [העתיקו] Job 9:5; Job 32:15

5. to transcribe, copy (1×) The unique scribal-technical Hiphil sense of transcribing or copying text from one document to another. In Prov 25:1, 'These also are proverbs of Solomon which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied.' This is the only biblical attestation of this meaning, yet it became productive in later Hebrew. English 'copied' and Spanish 'copiaron' are transparent, while the semantic development from 'move, transfer' to 'transfer text' is a natural metaphorical extension seen across many languages. AGING AND DISPLACEMENT en: copied | es: copiaron | fr: être-ancien | de: [העתיקו] Prov 25:1

עָתִק H6276 Adj-ms (1×)
enduring, valuable, ancient, or surpassing (describing lasting wealth or excellence)
A Hebrew adjective describing something enduring, valuable, or surpassing due to its antiquity or inherent excellence. Proverbs 8:18 uses it to characterize 'enduring wealth'—riches that last, in contrast to fleeting material gain. The term connects age with value, suggesting that true excellence proves itself over time. Arabic cognates emphasize the idea of something preceding and therefore superior or choice.

(1×) Describes wealth, value, or quality that endures over time. In Proverbs 8:18, Wisdom offers 'enduring wealth' (hon atiq), riches that don't fade or disappoint. The adjective carries connotations of antiquity conferring value—something proven, lasting, and superior. Spanish and German glosses (duradera) capture the temporal dimension: wealth that withstands time, contrasting with ephemeral material possessions. OLD AGE
en: enduring | es: duradera | fr: עתק | de: [עתק] Prov 8:18

עָתָק H6277 N-ms (4×)
arrogance, insolence; arrogant speech or attitude marked by presumption and pride
An adjective describing arrogant or insolent speech and attitude. Hannah's prayer warns against speaking with 'arrogance' pouring from the mouth (1 Sam 2:3), equating it with prideful boasting against God. The Psalms denounce insolent speech: the arrogant words of the wicked (31:18), boasting with 'arrogance' (75:5), and the boastful pronouncements of evildoers (94:4). The term captures speech that exceeds proper bounds—presumptuous, unrestrained, forward declarations that elevate self over God and others. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'arrogancia,' French 'arrogance') preserves the attitude of prideful presumption in speech.

(4×) Arrogant or insolent speech, words marked by presumptuous pride. 1 Samuel 2:3 warns against letting 'arrogance' come from the mouth. Psalms use it three times (31:18, 75:5, 94:4) for the haughty words of the wicked—insolent boasting against God and oppression of others. The term emphasizes verbal arrogance: speech that oversteps boundaries, exalts self, and defies divine authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: arrogance, insolent | es: arrogancia, arrogante, insolencia | fr: arrogance, arrogant | de: arrogance, insolent 1Sam 2:3; Ps 31:18; Ps 75:5; Ps 94:4

עַתְּרַי H6278 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)
Ittah-Kazin (a place name on Zebulun's border)
A compound place name appearing only in Joshua 19:13, marking a point on the boundary of Zebulun's tribal territory. The name combines two elements and appears with the locative directional ending. Its precise location remains unknown, as it's mentioned only in this boundary description without sufficient geographic clues for modern identification. Such boundary markers were crucial in tribal land allotments but many sites have been lost to history.

(1×) The geographic designation 'Ittah-Kazin' marks a boundary point for the tribe of Zebulun in Joshua 19:13. The compound name's precise location is lost, though it served as a recognizable landmark in the original tribal boundary descriptions. Multilingual translations preserve the name in transliterated form, acknowledging its function as a geographic marker whose exact site no longer can be identified with certainty. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ittah-Qatsin | es: Et-casín | fr: Ittah-Qatsin | de: Ittah-Qatsin Josh 19:13

עָתַר H6279 Conj-w / V-Nifal-Inf (20×)
To pray, entreat, or supplicate God (Qal/Hifil); to be entreated and grant prayer (Nifal, of God)
The verb עָתַר belongs to the intimate vocabulary of biblical prayer, describing both the human act of pleading and God's gracious response. Its Arabic cognate ʿatara ('to slaughter for sacrifice') hints at the word's ritual roots — entreaty as something offered up, costly and earnest. In the Nifal stem, the subject is always God: He 'was entreated' for Isaac and Rebekah (Gen 25:21), for the land after the Gibeonite crisis (2 Sam 21:14), and even for the wicked Manasseh who repented in exile (2 Chr 33:13). The Hifil and Qal forms capture the human side — Moses entreating God to remove the plagues of Egypt (Exod 8:28-30, 9:28, 10:18), and Manoah praying for guidance about the promised child (Judg 13:8).

1. Nifal: be entreated, grant prayer (8×) The Nifal passive-tolerative sense in which God allows Himself to be entreated and grants the prayer, covering 8 occurrences. The verb in this stem always has God as its subject and a human supplicant marked with the preposition לְ. Genesis 25:21 is paradigmatic: Isaac prayed and 'the LORD was entreated for him' — the Spanish 'fue suplicado' and English 'He was entreated' both capture the divine responsiveness. In 2 Samuel 24:25 David builds an altar, offers sacrifices, and 'the LORD was entreated for the land.' Ezra 8:23 reports the same after communal fasting. The Nifal framing preserves God's sovereignty — He permits Himself to be moved. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION en: and-He-was-entreated, and-He-was-moved-by-entreaty, and-being-moved-by-entreaty- | es: y-el-ser-suplicado-, y-fue-satisfecho, y-fue-suplicado | fr: [והעתר], [ויעתר], [ונעתור] | de: [והעתר], [ויעתר], [ונעתור] Gen 25:21; 2Sam 21:14; 2Sam 24:25; 1Chr 5:20; 2Chr 33:13

2. Hifil: entreat, supplicate (7×) The Hifil causative sense of actively making entreaty or urging supplication upon God, attested in 7 occurrences. In the Exodus plague cycle, Pharaoh repeatedly begs Moses to 'entreat the LORD' (Exod 8:8, 8:28, 9:28, 10:17) to remove each devastating plague. The Spanish 'Orad/oraras' and English 'entreat' mark this as the volitional, sometimes desperate, act of requesting intercession. The Hifil form makes the supplicant the agent who causes the prayer to reach God — a more active, urgent mode than the Qal. ENTREATY SUPPLICATION
en: and-I-will-entreat, and-entreat, entreat | es: Orad, Orarás, oraré | fr: –Je-implorer, et-Je—implorer, et-implorer | de: [תעתיר], entreat, soll-ich-entreat Exod 8:8; Exod 8:9; Exod 8:28; Exod 8:29; Exod 9:28

3. Qal: pray, entreat (5×) The Qal active sense of praying or making supplication to God in the basic stem, covering 5 occurrences. In Genesis 25:21 Isaac 'prayed to the LORD' (Qal) and 'the LORD was entreated' (Nifal) — both stems appearing in the same verse to show human initiative and divine response. Exodus 8:30 records Moses going out from Pharaoh and 'entreating the LORD,' and Job 33:26 promises the penitent that 'he prays to God and He accepts him.' The Spanish 'y oro' and English 'and prayed' render it as straightforward prayer, without the causative urgency of the Hifil. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)

en: and-entreated, and-prayed, he-prays | es: Suplica, Y-oró, y-oró | fr: et-entreated, et-pria, יעתר | de: [יעתר], und-betete, und-entreated Gen 25:21; Exod 8:30; Exod 10:18; Judg 13:8; Job 33:26

עָתַר H6280 Conj-w / V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fp (2×)

To be abundant, excessive, or multiplied; used of abundant kisses or multiplied words

This verb, borrowed from Aramaic, means to be abundant or multiplied. In Proverbs 27:6, it describes an enemy's kisses as 'excessive' or 'abundant'—overdone and therefore suspicious, contrasting with a friend's faithful wounds. In Ezekiel 35:13, God accuses Edom: 'you multiplied your words against me,' speaking arrogantly and excessively. The term emphasizes profusion or excess, whether of insincere affection or boastful speech.

(2×) A Niphal/Hiphil verb meaning to be abundant or to multiply. The Aramaic loanword (related to 'be rich' in Aramaic, corresponding to Hebrew 'ashar') entered biblical Hebrew late. Proverbs' Niphal participle describes excessive kisses ('abundantes,' 'excessive'), while Ezekiel's Hiphil describes multiplying words ('multiplicasteis'). Both contexts use abundance negatively—too many kisses signal deception; too many words signal arrogance. The verb captures quantity beyond normal or proper bounds. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: and-you-multiplied, but-excessive | es: y-abundantes, y-multiplicasteis | fr: et-être-nombreux, et-ונעתרות | de: [והעתרתם], [ונעתרות] Prov 27:6; Ezek 35:13

עֵתֶר H6281 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Ether: a town in Judah (Joshua 15:42) and Simeon (Joshua 19:7)

Ether appears in Joshua's tribal allotments as a town assigned first to Judah and then to Simeon (whose inheritance was within Judah's territory). In both passages it's listed alongside Ashan. Possibly identified with modern Khirbet 'Atr, about two miles northwest of Beit Jibrin, though the identification is uncertain. Like many minor settlements in these lists, its precise location has been lost, but it served as a marker in defining tribal boundaries and inheritances.

(2×) A feminine proper noun designating a town name in the Shephelah or Negev region. The conjunction 'and Ether' in both passages shows it as one item in administrative lists defining territorial allotments. The consistent transliteration ('Eter,' 'Ether') preserves the Hebrew name. Both occurrences pair Ether with Ashan, suggesting they were neighboring settlements. The name served administrative and legal functions in defining which towns belonged to which tribe. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ether | es: y-Eter | fr: et-Ether | de: und-Ether Josh 15:42; Josh 19:7

עָתָר H6282a N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

worshippers, suppliants (those who pray or make supplication)

A rare Hebrew noun appearing only in Zephaniah 3:10, referring to God's scattered worshippers or suppliants. The term describes those who pray or offer supplication, and in Zephaniah's context, it refers to dispersed Israelites who will bring offerings from beyond the rivers of Cush. The word's meaning is somewhat uncertain—some understand it as 'suppliants' while others prefer 'worshippers.' Both senses capture people engaged in devotional approach to God.

(1×) Refers to worshippers or suppliants who offer prayers or bring offerings to God. In Zephaniah 3:10, these are God's dispersed people 'beyond the rivers of Cush' who will return to worship. The term emphasizes the devotional posture—those who make supplication or engage in worship. The multilingual evidence (Spanish adoradores, French encensoir) supports this cultic/devotional sense, though some lexical uncertainty remains about the precise nuance. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: my-worshippers | es: mis-adoradores | fr: encensoir | de: [עתרי] Zeph 3:10

עָתָר H6282b Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

odor, fragrance (specifically of incense)

A Hebrew noun referring to odor or fragrance, specifically in ritual contexts. Ezekiel 8:11 uses it to describe the cloud or fragrance of incense rising during idolatrous worship. The term is textually uncertain (marked 'si vera lectio' by BDB), and may be related to an Aramaic loanword. In context, it describes the sensory dimension of worship—the thick cloud of incense smoke that accompanied the elders' secret idolatry in the temple.

(1×) Describes the odor or fragrance of incense in a ritual setting. Ezekiel 8:11 uses this term for the 'fragrance' or 'cloud' of incense rising from the elders' idolatrous worship in the temple. The word captures the sensory element of worship—the smell and visible smoke of burning incense. Spanish glosses 'nube espesa' (thick cloud) and French 'encens' (incense) both reflect aspects of this aromatic, visible offering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fragrance-of | es: y-nube-espesa-de | fr: et-encens | de: [ועתר] Ezek 8:11

עַתֶּרֶת H6283 N-fsc (1×)

abundance, plenty (especially of peace or prosperity)

A rare Hebrew noun appearing in Jeremiah 33:6, where God promises to reveal 'abundance of peace' to restored Judah. The word is an Aramaism (a word borrowed from Aramaic), though its reading is disputed in some textual witnesses. It conveys the idea of abundant prosperity, plenty, or overflowing peace. The context speaks of healing and restoration, with this term emphasizing the lavish, abundant character of God's coming restoration.

(1×) Refers to abundance or plenty, particularly of peace and prosperity. In Jeremiah 33:6, God promises to reveal 'abundance of peace and truth' in the restoration after judgment. The term emphasizes copious, overflowing blessing rather than mere sufficiency. Though textually disputed and likely an Aramaism, the word conveys God's generous restoration: not just peace, but abundant, overflowing shalom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance-of | es: abundancia-de | fr: [עתרת] | de: [עתרת] Jer 33:6

פָּאָה H6284 V-Hifil-Imperf.h-1cs / 3mp (1×)

to scatter, disperse, or cleave in pieces (a dubious verb)

A disputed Hebrew verb appearing in Deuteronomy 32:26, where Moses recounts God's judgment song. The Masoretic Text has a rare Hiphil form meaning 'I will scatter them' or possibly 'cleave them in pieces.' The verb's meaning is uncertain, and the Septuagint suggests reading a different verb meaning 'scatter' or 'disperse.' The context is God's threatened judgment against Israel's rebellion, with imagery of scattering the people so thoroughly that their memory would cease.

(1×) A verb of uncertain meaning in Deuteronomy 32:26, possibly meaning 'scatter' or 'disperse' in the context of divine judgment. Arabic cognates suggest 'cleave' or 'split,' while translational evidence (Spanish dispersaré, French disperser, German zerstreuen) strongly supports the sense of scattering or dispersing Israel as punishment. The textual form is unique and debated, but the context clearly involves God threatening to scatter the rebellious people. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: I-will-scatter-them | es: los-dispersaré | fr: je-fera-disperser-eux | de: ich-wird-zerstreuen-ihnen Deut 32:26

פְּאָה H6285 N-fdc (86×)

Corner, side, or edge; a boundary portion of a structure, territory, or body, including the temples of the head.

Denotes the side, corner, or edge of something—whether the directional face of a building, the boundary of a land allotment, or the temples of the human head. Its 72 occurrences as 'side' dominate in tabernacle and temple blueprints (Exodus 26-27; Ezekiel 47-48), where compass-oriented sides define sacred architecture. The agricultural law of Leviticus 19:9 commands leaving the pe'ah of the field unharvested for the poor—a 'corner' that became a whole tractate in the Mishnah. Cognate Akkadian patu ('side, border') confirms the spatial orientation. In prophetic judgment oracles (Jer 9:26; 25:23; 49:32), the word shifts to the temples of the head, describing peoples who clip their sidelocks.

1. side, direction (72×) The dominant sense across 72 occurrences: a side or directional face of a structure, territory, or boundary. Extensively used in architectural prescriptions for the tabernacle (Exod 26:18, 27:9-11) and in Ezekiel's temple and land-allotment visions. English 'side of,' Spanish 'lado de,' French 'côté de,' and German 'Seite von' all converge on directional orientation. The term functions almost as a technical compass-direction marker: 'the south side,' 'the north side.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: side-of, side-of- | es: lado-de | fr: côté-de | de: Seite-von Exod 26:18; Exod 26:20; Exod 27:9; Exod 27:11

2. corner, edge (9×) The corner or edge of a physical object or bounded area, appearing 9 times. In Leviticus 19:9 and 23:22 it denotes the corner of a field that must be left for gleaning—a usage so significant it names an entire Mishnah tractate (Pe'ah). Also refers to corners of a table (Exod 25:26; 37:13) and the corner of a couch (Amos 3:12). Multilingual evidence shows English 'edge of / corner of,' Spanish 'borde de / rincón de,' and German 'Ecke von / Rand von,' distinguishing this from the broader directional sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-edge-of, corner-of, edge-of | es: borde-de, el-borde-de, el-rincón-de | fr: corner-de, côté, dans-côté-de | de: Ecke-von, Rand-von, [בכאת] Exod 25:26; Exod 37:13; Lev 19:9; Lev 19:27

3. temple of the head, sidelock (5×) The temple or side-growth area of the human head, attested 5 times in prophetic and legal texts. Leviticus 19:27 prohibits rounding 'the corners of your head,' while Jeremiah's judgment oracles (9:26; 25:23; 49:32) target those 'clipped at the temples.' Numbers 24:17 uses it in Balaam's oracle about smashing Moab's temples. English 'corners of hair,' Spanish 'extremos de,' and the untranslated bracketed Hebrew in French and German all signal this specialized anatomical meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: corners, corners-of, corners-of-hair | es: costado-de, esquinas, extremos-de | fr: corners-de, côté, côté-de | de: Ecken-von, [כאה], [כאת] Num 24:17; Jer 9:26; Jer 25:23; Jer 48:45; Jer 49:32

פְּאֵר H6286a V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (13×)

To beautify, glorify, or adorn (Piel); to glorify oneself or boast (Hitpael)

A richly theological verb spanning the spectrum from physical beautification to divine self-glorification. In the Piel stem, God beautifies His temple (Isa 60:13) and adorns the humble with salvation (Ps 149:4). In the Hitpael, the reflexive meaning splits two ways: positively, God glorifies Himself in Israel (Isa 44:23; 49:3), and negatively, humans boast or vaunt themselves (Judg 7:2; Isa 10:15). French captures both poles with 'glorifier' and 'se vanter,' while Spanish distinguishes 'hermosear' (to beautify) from 'gloriarse' (to glory in).

1. glorify oneself, be glorified (Hitpael) (4×) The Hitpael reflexive sense of gaining or displaying glory, used especially of God manifesting His splendor through His people. Isaiah 44:23 declares that the LORD has glorified Himself in Israel, and 49:3 identifies the Servant as the one in whom God will be glorified. Isaiah 60:21 and 61:3 extend this to the restored people as God's 'planting' for His self-glorification. Spanish 'glorificarme/glorificarse' preserves the reflexive grammar. GLORIFYING AND HONORING en: He-glorifies-Himself, I-will-glorify-myself, to-glorify-himself | es: me-glorificaré, para-glorificarme, para-glorificarse | fr: glorifier | de: verherrlichen Isa 44:23; Isa 49:3; Isa 60:21; Isa 61:3

2. glorify, honor (Piel) (3×) The Piel transitive sense of bestowing honor or glory upon another. In Isaiah 55:5 and 60:9, God has glorified Israel so that nations stream toward her. The emphasis falls on dignifying or exalting the recipient. Spanish 'te glorificó' and English 'he has glorified you' show the outward-directed bestowal of honor. GLORIFYING AND HONORING en: I-will-beautify, he-has-glorified-you | es: glorificaré, te-glorificó | fr: glorifier | de: verherrlichen Isa 55:5; Isa 60:7; Isa 60:9

3. beautify, adorn (Piel) (3×) The Piel sense of physical beautification or adornment. Isaiah 60:13 speaks of beautifying the sanctuary with choice timber, Ezra 7:27 of adorning the temple, and Psalm 149:4 of God adorning the humble with victory. Spanish 'hermosear' (to make beautiful) distinguishes this concrete aesthetic sense from abstract glorification. French 'glorifier' unfortunately collapses both Piel senses. GLORIFYING AND HONORING

en: he-adorns, to-beautify | es: hermosea, para-glorificar, para-hermosear | fr: [לכאר], glorifier | de: [לכאר], er-adorns, verherrlichen Ezra 7:27; Ps 149:4; Isa 60:13

4. boast, vaunt oneself (Hitpael) (3×) The Hitpael in a negative register: boasting, vaunting oneself, or glorying with pride. In Judges 7:2, God reduces Gideon's army lest Israel boast against Him. Isaiah 10:15 asks whether the axe shall glorify itself against the one who wields it. Exodus 8:9 uses it more neutrally — Moses defers to Pharaoh to 'have the honor' of choosing when the frogs depart. Spanish 'gloriará/Gloríate' and French 'se vanter' capture the self-aggrandizing dimension. GLORIFYING AND HONORING en: boast, does-glorify-itself, glory | es: Acaso-se-gloriará, Gloríate, se-glorifique | fr: gloire, glorifier, se-vanter | de: Herrlichkeit, prahlen, verherrlichen Exod 8:9; Judg 7:2; Isa 10:15

פְּאֵר H6286b V-Piel-Imperf-2ms (1×)

to go over the boughs again, to glean (from a denominative verb related to 'branch')

A rare Piel verb appearing in Deuteronomy 24:20, instructing Israelites not to 'go over the boughs again' after the olive harvest—that is, not to strip the trees completely by gleaning a second time. This law protected the poor and sojourners by requiring landowners to leave some fruit for them. The verb is denominative, derived from a noun meaning 'bough' or 'branch,' and literally means to go over or among the branches to gather remaining fruit.

(1×) Means 'to go over the boughs again' or 'to glean' in the context of olive harvest. Deuteronomy 24:20 prohibits this practice, requiring Israelites to harvest once and leave remaining olives for the poor and stranger. The verb derives from a noun meaning 'branch,' creating the specific sense of repeatedly working through tree branches. Multilingual glosses (Spanish rebuscarás, French 'go over again') capture this sense of returning to glean what was left behind. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: you-shall-go-over-again | es: rebuscarás | fr: tu-devra-aller-sur-encore | de: du-soll-gehen-ueber-wieder Deut 24:20

פְּאֵר H6287 Art / N-mp (7×)

headdress, turban, ornamental head-covering; worn by priests, bridegrooms, and as a sign of joy

A noun denoting an ornamental head-covering — turban, headdress, or festive garland depending on context. In the priestly legislation, it describes the linen turbans of priests (Exod 39:28; Ezek 44:18). Isaiah transforms the image: God gives a 'garland of beauty' instead of ashes to mourners (Isa 61:3), and the bridegroom adorns himself like a priest with a turban (Isa 61:10). Ezekiel uses the same word for the everyday turban that mourners are told not to remove (Ezek 24:17, 23). Spanish tocados and French equivalent terms confirm the ornamental, dignifying quality of this headwear.

headdress, turban, garland (7×) An ornamental head-covering, variously a priestly turban, festive headdress, or garland of honor.

In cultic contexts it denotes the linen turbans of the priesthood — 'ornaments of the caps of fine linen' (Exod 39:28) and the linen turbans prescribed for Ezekiel's ideal temple priests (Ezek 44:18). Figuratively, Isaiah uses it for the joyful garland God bestows on mourners in place of ashes (Isa 61:3) and the bridegroom's adornment (Isa 61:10). In Ezekiel's sign-act, the prophet is told to keep his turban on despite mourning (Ezek 24:17, 23), and Isaiah lists such headdresses among the luxury items of Jerusalem's women (Isa 3:20). Spanish tocados and adornos capture both the practical and ornamental dimensions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-turbans, beauty, ornaments-of | es: Los-tocados, Y-turbantes-de-vosotros, adornos-de | fr: [הפארים], [ופארכם], [פאר] | de: [הפארים], [ופארכם], [פאר] Exod 39:28; Isa 3:20; Isa 61:3; Isa 61:10; Ezek 24:17

H6288 N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

Branches or boughs; the spreading limbs of a tree

This noun refers to the branches or boughs of a tree. It appears in Ezekiel 31:5, describing the magnificent cedar (representing Assyria) whose branches spread far and multiplied. The text has some uncertainty—both occurrences are in the same verse with slight textual variants (ketiv/qere) regarding the suffix. The term emphasizes the outward spreading growth of tree branches, symbolizing the expanding power and influence of the great empire portrayed as a cedar.

(2×) A feminine noun meaning branches or boughs. Both occurrences are textual variants (ketiv/qere) in Ezekiel 31:5, differing slightly in suffix but both referring to the cedar's branches ('sus ramas,' 'branche'). The context describes how the tree's branches multiplied and lengthened because of abundant water—imagery for imperial expansion and prosperity. The term focuses on the horizontal spreading of limbs that provide shade and shelter, making it apt for political metaphor. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: [its-branches], its-branches | es: (sus-ramas), [sus-raíces] | fr: branche | de: [פארתו], [פארתיו] Ezek 31:5

פְּאֹרָה H6288a Prep-k / N-fpc / 3ms (5×)

bough, branch; the spreading limbs of a large tree, used figuratively of empires

A feminine noun used exclusively in Ezekiel's grand tree allegories, where mighty cedars and vines symbolize empires and kingdoms. In Ezek 17:6 it describes the spreading branches of a vine representing Judah's royal house. The extended cedar allegory of Ezekiel 31 employs it repeatedly: the great tree's boughs grew long (31:5), birds nested in them (31:6), no tree could rival them (31:8), and when the tree falls, its boughs lie broken across mountains and valleys (31:12-13). Spanish 'ramas/ramaje' and English 'boughs/branches' capture the image of grand arboreal limbs that symbolize political reach and power.

(5×) Boughs or branches of a large tree, used figuratively in prophetic allegory for the extent and splendor of empires. In Ezek 17:6 it describes a vine's spreading branches (Judah's dynasty), while Ezek 31:5-13 deploys it repeatedly for the towering cedar representing Assyria/Egypt — its boughs sheltering nations (v. 6), unrivaled in beauty (v. 8), then shattered in judgment (vv. 12-13). Spanish 'ramas' and 'ramaje' consistently render these as grand spreading limbs. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: boughs, its-boughs, its-branches | es: como-sus-ramas, ramaje, sus-ramas | fr: branche | de: [כפארתיו], [פארות], [פארתיו] Ezek 17:6; Ezek 31:6; Ezek 31:8; Ezek 31:12; Ezek 31:13

פְּאֹרָה H6288b N-fs (1×)

boughs, branches (collective noun for tree branches)

A collective Hebrew noun referring to tree boughs or branches, appearing in Isaiah 10:33. The text describes God cutting down the tall trees of Assyrian pride, lopping off the 'boughs' with terrifying power. The word has textual variants (Ketiv vs. Qere), reflecting scribal uncertainty about the exact form. It appears in a vivid metaphor comparing Assyria's proud leaders to a forest that God will fell, stripping away the high branches.

(1×) A collective noun meaning 'boughs' or 'branches,' used in Isaiah 10:33 in a metaphor of divine judgment. God will lop off the 'boughs'—the high branches representing Assyria's proud leadership. The term appears with textual variation (Ketiv פארה vs. Qere פורה), but the sense remains clear: the prominent, elevated branches that will be cut down. Spanish 'copa' (crown/top) captures the elevated position of these branches. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: boughs | es: copa | fr: [פארה] | de: [פארה] Isa 10:33

פָּאֳרוּר H6289 N-ms (2×)

A disputed term possibly meaning paleness, glow, or blackness; the meaning is very uncertain

This is one of the most uncertain words in the Hebrew Bible. It appears in Joel 2:6 and Nahum 2:10 in the phrase 'all faces gather...' but what they gather is hotly debated. Traditional options include: gather blackness (grow dark with fear), gather paleness (turn pale), or gather a glow (flush with dread). Ancient versions and modern scholars disagree significantly. The root connection is unclear—possibly related to 'beauty/glory,' to a cooking pot (hence blackness), or to some other semantic field entirely.

(2×) A masculine noun of extremely uncertain meaning, occurring in contexts describing faces responding to terror. The multilingual glosses reflect interpretive divergence: 'palidez' (paleness), 'beauté' (beauty/glow). Thesaurus and Wellhausen suggested 'gather glow' (faces flush with fear); others prefer 'gather paleness' (grow pale). The phrase describes a visible facial change in response to approaching judgment, but whether darkening, paling, or flushing remains unresolved. Lexicographers acknowledge this as one of Hebrew's most difficult words. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: paleness | es: palidez | fr: beauté | de: [פארור] Joel 2:6; Nah 2:10

פָּארָן H6290 N-proper-fs (11×)

Paran, a wilderness region northeast of Sinai associated with Israel's desert wanderings

A vast desert expanse stretching between Sinai and the Negev, Paran appears at pivotal moments in Israel's journey. Hagar and Ishmael settle in its wilderness (Gen 21:21), and Israel camps there after leaving Sinai (Num 10:12). It is from the wilderness of Paran that the twelve spies are dispatched into Canaan (Num 13:3), making it the staging ground for one of Scripture's most consequential decisions.

Paran (11×) The proper name of a wilderness region in the northeastern Sinai peninsula, serving as a major waypoint during Israel's wilderness wanderings. Mentioned as Ishmael's dwelling place (Gen 21:21), a departure point after Sinai (Num 10:12; 12:16), and the base from which spies were sent to Canaan (Num 13:3). Spanish retains 'Parán' with an accent, while English standardizes to 'Paran.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Paran, from-Paran | es: Paran, Parán, Parán: | fr: Paran, de-Paran | de: Paran, [פארן], von-Paran Gen 21:21; Num 10:12; Num 12:16; Num 13:3; Num 13:26

פַּגָּה H6291 N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

early figs, unripe figs (figs in their first, green stage)

A Hebrew noun referring to early or unripe figs—fruit in its first green stage before full ripening. Song of Solomon 2:13 mentions 'its green figs' (literally 'its early figs') as a sign of spring, part of the awakening natural world that calls the beloved to arise. These early figs, appearing on the tree before the main harvest, were valued as harbingers of the fruit-bearing season and symbols of new life and fertility.

(1×) Refers to early or green figs in their first stage of development. In Song of Solomon 2:13, the appearance of early figs signals spring's arrival and the world's fertility, inviting love to flourish. These pag (early figs) precede the main harvest and represent the promise of abundance to come. Multilingual glosses (Spanish brevas, French figues vertes) identify these as the first, unripe fruits that appear as spring signs. FIG FRUIT en: its-green-figs | es: sus-brevas | fr: ses-figues-vertes, | de: [פגיה] Song 2:13

פִּגּוּל H6292 N-ms (4×)

foul thing, unclean meat; sacrificial flesh that has become ritually polluted and unacceptable

A technical term for sacrificial meat that has become ritually unclean and abominable, rendered unfit for consumption or offering. Leviticus defines it: if someone eats sacrificial meat on the third day, it becomes 'foul' and the offering is rejected (7:18, 19:7). The meat's ritual status degrades over time, transforming from holy to polluted. Isaiah uses the term for 'broth of foul things' consumed in pagan rituals (65:4)—possibly blood-containing broth or meat from unclean animals. Ezekiel's horror at eating 'foul flesh' (4:14) expresses his concern about ritual defilement. The term denotes not simply unclean but abominable—religiously repugnant and defiling.

(4×) Ritually polluted sacrificial meat, abominable and unacceptable. Leviticus 7:18 and 19:7 define the technical cultic sense: meat eaten on the third day becomes 'foul' and invalidates the sacrifice. Isaiah 65:4 and Ezekiel 4:14 extend it to generally unclean meat in contexts of ritual abomination. The consistent meaning is meat that has crossed from acceptable to defiling, whether through time, source, or preparation. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: an-abomination, foul-thing, rejected-meat | es: abominación, cosa-profana, cosa-repugnante | fr: [פגלים], impur, rejeta-viande | de: [פגול], [פגלים], ein-Greuel Lev 7:18; Lev 19:7; Isa 65:4; Ezek 4:14

פָּגַע H6293 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (46×)

To meet, encounter, strike, reach; extends from chance meeting to violent assault, intercession, and geographical boundary-reaching.

Paga' is a remarkably versatile verb whose senses radiate outward from a core meaning of 'coming into contact with' — whether that contact is accidental (Jacob 'lights upon' Bethel, Gen 28:11), violent (soldiers 'fall upon' the priests of Nob, 1 Sam 22:17-18), intercessory (Isaiah's Servant 'makes intercession' for transgressors, Isa 53:12), or geographical (a tribal boundary 'reaches' to the sea, Josh 19:11). The Arabic cognates faji'a ('happen upon suddenly') and faja'a ('afflict with pain') illuminate the word's dual capacity for surprise and violence. What holds these diverse senses together is the notion of one entity impinging upon another — physically, socially, or spatially. The Hifil causative adds a further layer: God 'causes the iniquity of us all to fall upon' the Servant (Isa 53:6), fusing the meeting and striking senses into a single theological image.

1. strike, attack, fall upon (14×) To strike, attack, or fall upon someone with violent intent — 14 occurrences concentrated in military and judicial narratives. Gideon tells his son: 'Fall upon them!' (Judg 8:21); Doeg 'fell upon the priests' at Saul's command (1 Sam 22:18); if plague or sword 'falls upon us' (2 Chr 32:2, threatened). The Arabic faja'a ('afflict with pain') and Swahili -piga ('strike') both select violent-impact vocabulary. French frapper and German schlagen confirm the semantic boundary: this is not accidental meeting but deliberate assault. Exod 5:3 warns that God may 'strike us' with pestilence — divine violence as judicial punishment. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-fall-, and-he-struck, and-he-struck- | es: ataca-, atacó, caigan | fr: et-frappe, et-il-frappa, et-il-frappa- | de: du-fallen-auf, er-schlagen-uns, fallen-auf Exod 5:3; Judg 8:21; Judg 15:12; Judg 18:25; 1Sam 22:17

2. meet, encounter (12×) To meet, encounter, or come upon someone or something, often unexpectedly or providentially — 12 occurrences across patriarchal and later narratives. Jacob 'lighted upon' a certain place and slept there (Gen 28:11); he 'met' angels of God at Mahanaim (Gen 32:1); the avenger of blood 'encounters' the manslayer (Num 35:19, 21). Spanish encontrar and French rencontrer both use standard encounter vocabulary. The sense preserves the root's core spatial meaning — two paths converging — without implying violence or intention. Korean 만나다 ('meet') and German antreffen ('come upon') confirm the accidental or providential character. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: You-meet, and-encountered, and-meets-him | es: Saliste-al-encuentro, Y-encontraron, Y-encontró | fr: encounter, et-encountered, et-ils-rencontra | de: [ופגעו], [יפגעו], als-encountering- Gen 28:11; Gen 32:1; Exod 5:20; Exod 23:4; Num 35:19

3. intercede, entreat, plead (10×) To intercede, entreat, or make supplication on behalf of another — 10 occurrences spanning wisdom, prophetic, and narrative literature. Abraham's servant asks Ephron's kin to 'entreat' on his behalf (Gen 23:8); Ruth begs Naomi: 'Do not entreat me to leave you' (Ruth 1:16, though here the sense is 'urge against'). The climactic instance is Isa 53:12: the Servant 'makes intercession for the transgressors.' Job 21:15 asks, 'What profit is it if we entreat him?' The metaphorical extension from physical meeting to verbal pressing-upon is natural — one 'approaches' God with urgent petition. French supplier and Spanish interceder both mark the prayerful register clearly. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: I-interceded, I-will-spare, and-entreat | es: e-interceded, hice-interceder, insistas-en | fr: et-implorer, rencontrer, supplie | de: [נפגע], [תפגיע], antreffen Gen 23:8; Ruth 1:16; Job 21:15; Isa 47:3; Isa 53:12

4. reach, touch a boundary (8×) To reach, touch, or extend to a boundary — 8 occurrences entirely within the tribal-allotment descriptions of Joshua 16-19. The border of Zebulun 'reached' to Sarid (Josh 19:11); Asher's boundary 'touched' Carmel (Josh 19:26). Spanish tocar and German berühren ('touch') both select contact-without-force vocabulary, distinct from the violent 'strike' of sense 1. This is a specialized geographical usage where the verb describes a boundary line impinging upon a landmark or another tribe's territory — the spatial core of paga' applied to cartographic description rather than personal encounter. TOUCHING AND REACHING

en: and-touched, touched | es: tocó, y-llegó, y-tocó | fr: et-toucha, toucha | de: berueehrte, und-berueehrte Josh 16:7; Josh 19:11; Josh 19:22; Josh 19:26

5. lay upon, cause to fall on (2×) Hifil causative: to cause something to light upon or fall upon someone — 2 occurrences carrying theological weight disproportionate to their frequency. Isa 53:6: 'The LORD has caused the iniquity of us all to fall upon him' — the pivotal statement of vicarious suffering, where God actively redirects the burden of sin onto the Servant. Job 36:32: God commands lightning and 'causes it to strike the mark.' Spanish cargó ('loaded upon') and French fit retomber ('caused to fall back upon') both render the causative force. The Hifil transforms paga' from accidental encounter into divinely orchestrated impingement, fusing the meeting and striking senses into purposeful, directed contact. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: caused-to-fall, to-strike-the-mark | es: cargó, por-el-que-intercepta | fr: dans-במפגיע, rencontrer | de: [במפגיע], antreffen Job 36:32; Isa 53:6

פְּגַע H6294 N-ms (2×)

Occurrence, chance, or happening; an event that takes place

This noun refers to an occurrence or happening—something that takes place. In 1 Kings 5:4, Solomon tells Hiram there is no 'evil occurrence' or adversity preventing the temple building. In Ecclesiastes 9:11, the Preacher observes that 'time and chance' happen to everyone—unexpected events affect all human endeavors regardless of skill or merit. The term emphasizes the contingent nature of events, things that occur or befall people beyond their complete control.

(2×) A masculine noun meaning occurrence, chance, or happening. The 1 Kings usage denotes 'evil occurrence' or adversity ('mal'), while Ecclesiastes pairs it with 'time' in philosophical reflection on unpredictability ('y suceso,' 'and chance'). The term captures events as they occur or befall people, emphasizing the element of contingency and timing in human affairs. Both contexts recognize that what happens to people isn't solely determined by planning—circumstances and chance play their role. FATE CHANCE HAPPENING

en: and-chance, occurrence | es: mal, y-suceso | fr: et-ופגע, occurrence | de: [ופגע], occurrence 1Kgs 5:4; Eccl 9:11

פַּגְעִיאֵל H6295 N-proper-ms (5×)

Pagiel, son of Ocran; leader of the tribe of Asher during the wilderness period

A proper name meaning 'encounter of God' or 'God has met,' borne by the appointed leader of the tribe of Asher during the wilderness wanderings. Pagiel son of Ocran appears in the census (Num 1:13), the tribal camp arrangement (Num 2:27), the tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:72, 77), and the marching order (Num 10:26). French 'Paguiel' preserves a slightly different vocalization, while Spanish, English, and German consistently render 'Pagiel.'

(5×) Pagiel ('encounter of God'), son of Ocran, the designated chief of the tribe of Asher during the Israelite wilderness period. He appears exclusively in Numbers in administrative and ceremonial contexts: the census (Num 1:13), camp positioning (Num 2:27), his tabernacle dedication offering on the eleventh day (Num 7:72, 77), and the departure marching order (Num 10:26). French 'Paguiel' reflects an alternate vocalization tradition. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pagiel | es: Pagiel | fr: Paguiel | de: Pagiel Num 1:13; Num 2:27; Num 7:72; Num 7:77; Num 10:26

פָּגַר H6296 V-Piel-Perf-3cp (2×)

To be exhausted, faint, or too weary to continue; used of physical collapse from fatigue

This Piel verb describes being utterly exhausted or faint from physical exertion. Both occurrences in 1 Samuel 30 describe David's men who were 'too faint' to cross the Wadi Besor during pursuit of Amalekite raiders. Two hundred men reached the point of complete exhaustion and couldn't continue, while the other four hundred pressed on. The term emphasizes physical collapse from fatigue, the point where the body simply cannot go farther despite willingness.

(2×) A Piel perfect verb meaning to be exhausted or faint beyond the point of continuing. The consistent context 'were too exhausted to...' ('estaban agotados para...,' 'furent trop épuisés pour...') shows this describes complete physical depletion. The Piel stem may intensify the basic notion of exhaustion. Both verses describe the same incident: men who reached their physical limit and had to stop while their companions continued the pursuit. The verb captures that critical threshold where exhaustion forces cessation of activity. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION

en: were-too-exhausted | es: estaban-agotados | fr: furent-trop-épuisé | de: waren-too-exhausted 1Sam 30:10; 1Sam 30:21

פֶּגֶר H6297 N-msc (22×)

Corpse, carcass; a dead body, whether human or animal, often of the slain or those under divine judgment.

Denotes a lifeless body, whether of a human or animal. In most of its twenty-two occurrences the word appears in the plural, describing heaps of the fallen in battle or under God's judgment – the dead Assyrians outside Jerusalem (2 Kgs 19:35), or the corpses of rebellious Israelites littering the wilderness (Num 14:29, 32). In a striking figurative turn, Leviticus 26:30 speaks of the 'corpses of your idols,' treating lifeless images as though they were already dead things. The lone animal use appears in the Abrahamic covenant scene (Gen 15:11), where birds of prey descend upon the carcasses of the sacrifice.

corpse, dead body, carcass (22×) A lifeless human or animal body, typically one left exposed or unburied. The vast majority of occurrences are plural, depicting mass death in warfare or divine punishment – the slain Assyrians (2 Kgs 19:35 = Isa 37:36) and the wilderness generation (Num 14:29). The singular collective use in 1 Sam 17:46 and Amos 8:3 intensifies the image of wholesale carnage. Multilingual glosses consistently render the word as 'corpses' (eng), 'cadáver' (spa), 'cadavre' (fra), confirming a single, unified semantic core. The figurative application to idols in Lev 26:30 treats them as already-dead objects, a bitter prophetic irony. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-corpses, and-corpses-of, and-their-corpses | es: Pero-vuestros-cadáveres, cadáver, cadáver-de | fr: [ופגרים], [פגרים], cadavre | de: [הפגר], [הפגרים], [ובפגרי] Gen 15:11; Lev 26:30; Num 14:29; Num 14:32

פָּגַשׁ H6298 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (14×)

To meet or encounter someone; to meet together reciprocally; to come upon or run into by chance

A Hebrew verb synonymous with the more common paga' but carrying its own distinctive flavor of face-to-face encounter. When Jacob sends gifts ahead and coaches his servants on what to say 'when Esau meets you' (Gen 32:17), or when Abigail comes upon David in the wilderness (1 Sam 25:20), pagash captures the moment of intersection between two moving parties. Spanish encontrar and French rencontrer both echo the Latin-rooted idea of 'coming against.' The Nifal reciprocal form yields one of Scripture's most beautiful images: 'Mercy and truth have met together' (Ps 85:10), where abstract virtues are personified as parties who encounter each other. Proverbs uses the same reciprocal form to observe that rich and poor 'meet together' — the LORD made them both (Prov 22:2; 29:13).

1. meet, encounter (Qal) (10×) The basic Qal sense of meeting or encountering someone, used transitively with a direct object. Jacob's servant rehearses what to say when Esau 'meets you' (Gen 32:17), the LORD meets Moses at the lodging place (Exod 4:24), Aaron meets Moses at the mountain of God (Exod 4:27), and Abigail encounters David as she descends the hill (1 Sam 25:20). Spanish encontrar, French rencontrer, and German begegnen all map onto this sense of two parties coming face to face. The encounters may be planned or unexpected but are always personal and direct. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: And-shall-meet, I-met, I-will-meet-them | es: Encuentre, Y-se-encontrarán, cuando-encontró | fr: Je-rencontra, [ופגשו], [כפגש] | de: [אפגשם], [ופגשו], [כפגש] Gen 32:17; Gen 33:8; Exod 4:24; Exod 4:27; 1Sam 25:20

2. meet together (Nifal reciprocal) (3×) The Nifal reciprocal sense: two parties meet each other, come together, or converge. The most celebrated instance is Psalm 85:10, where 'mercy and truth have met together' — a poetic personification of abstract qualities encountering one another in harmony. Proverbs 22:2 and 29:13 use the identical form to observe that rich and poor 'meet together,' both made by the LORD. Spanish se encontraron and German sich treffen capture the mutual, symmetrical quality of this reciprocal meeting, which is absent from the simple Qal. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: meet, meet-together | es: se-encontraron, se-encuentran | fr: rencontrer, נפגשו | de: [נפגשו], meet Ps 85:10; Prov 22:2; Prov 29:13

3. encounter, come upon (Piel) (1×) A sense of coming upon someone by chance or encountering them in passing, distinguished from the deliberate encounters of sense 1 by its context of darkness and confusion. In Job 5:14, fools 'meet with' darkness in the daytime and grope at noon as in the night. The encounter here is not purposeful but accidental or fated. Spanish encuentran and the broader context of stumbling and groping mark this as an encounter that befalls rather than one that is sought. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: they-meet | es: encuentran | fr: יפגשו | de: [יפגשו] Job 5:14

פָּדָה H6299 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (59×)

To ransom or redeem by paying a price; deliver from bondage, death, or danger; (Nifal) be redeemed; (participle) redeemer, the redeemed

A verb at the heart of Israel's redemption vocabulary, meaning 'to ransom' — to secure release by paying a required price. Cognate with Arabic fadā, Akkadian padû, and Ethiopic fadaya, the word spans from the concrete (ransoming a firstborn donkey with a lamb, Exod 13:13) to the covenantal (God redeeming Israel from Egypt, Deut 9:26). Unlike gāʾal, which emphasizes the kinship obligation of the redeemer, pādâ focuses on the cost and transaction of deliverance. Its theological weight is immense: God is the one 'who redeems your life from the pit' (Ps 103:4), and Isaiah's 'ransomed of the LORD' (Isa 35:10; 51:11) march home with singing — the price has been paid, the captives go free.

1. redeem or ransom (Qal active) (49×) The core Qal active meaning: to redeem or ransom by paying a price, delivering from bondage, danger, or death. This covers the full range of finite forms, imperatives, and infinitives — from cultic law (ransoming a firstborn, Exod 13:13; Num 18:15–16) to national deliverance (God redeeming Israel from Egypt, Deut 9:26; 2 Sam 7:23) to personal rescue (Ps 25:22; 26:11; 49:7–8). Spanish 'redimir/rescatar' and French 'racheter' both preserve the transactional character. The verb consistently implies a cost borne by the redeemer on behalf of the one redeemed. REDEEM AND RANSOM

en: You-have-redeemed, You-redeemed, can-ransom | es: redimirá, redimirás, redimiste | fr: Tu-avoir-racheta, [פדית], a-racheta | de: Du-haben-erloeste, [פדה], [פדית] Exod 13:13; Exod 13:15; Exod 34:20

2. the redeemed ones (Qal passive participle) (3×) The Qal passive participle used as a substantive: 'the redeemed ones,' those who have been ransomed. Isa 35:10 and 51:11 — 'the ransomed of the LORD shall return' — are the defining passages, where the participle becomes a title of honor for God's delivered people. Num 18:16 uses it for the redemption price of firstborn sons. Spanish 'los rescatados' and English 'the ransomed' show how the verbal participle crystallizes into a collective noun denoting a people defined by their deliverance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: And-the-ransomed, and-its-redemption, and-ransomed-of | es: Y-los-rescatados, Y-rescatados-de, Y-sus-redimidos | fr: et-racheter, et-son-rachat | de: [ופדויי], und-sein-redemption Num 18:16; Isa 35:10; Isa 51:11

3. be redeemed (Nifal passive) (3×) The Nifal passive: to be redeemed or ransomed, with the subject receiving the action of redemption. Lev 19:20 (a slave girl 'not yet redeemed'), Lev 27:29 (a devoted person who 'shall not be ransomed'), and Isa 1:27 ('Zion shall be redeemed with justice') illustrate the range from legal status to prophetic promise. French 'être racheté' and German 'erlöst werden' make the passive voice explicit. The Nifal frames redemption from the perspective of the one who needs — and awaits — deliverance. BE REDEEMED PASSIVE

en: he-shall-be-ransomed, she-shall-be-redeemed, she-was-redeemed | es: fue-rescatada, será-redimida, será-redimido | fr: elle-était-racheta, il-devra-être-ransomed, racheter | de: [תפדה], er-soll-sein-ransomed, sie-war-erloeste Lev 19:20; Lev 27:29; Isa 1:27

4. one who redeems (Qal active participle) (2×) The Qal active participle used as a substantive: 'one who redeems,' the redeemer-agent. Deut 13:5 identifies God as 'the one who redeemed you' from Egypt, and Ps 34:22 declares 'the LORD redeems the life of his servants.' This participial form foregrounds the ongoing, characteristic activity of the redeemer — not a single past act but a defining attribute. Spanish 'el que te redimió' and English 'redeems' capture the durative, agentive force. REDEEM AND RANSOM

en: and-the-one-who-redeemed-you, redeems | es: Redime, y-el-que-te-redimió | fr: et-le-un-qui-racheta-tu, racheter | de: löste-aus, und-der-eins-der-erloeste-du Deut 13:5; Ps 34:22

5. (1×) A Hifil causative form in Exod 21:8: if a master is displeased with a female servant, 'he shall let her be redeemed' — causing or permitting her redemption by another party. The multilingual evidence (English 'let her be redeemed,' Spanish 'la rescatará') shows the causative nuance: the master does not redeem her himself but enables the transaction. This legal-procedural shade stands apart from the direct Qal ransoming of sense 1. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-shall-let-her-be-redeemed | es: y-la-rescatará | fr: et-il—que-sa-être-racheta | de: und-er-soll-lass-ihr-sein-erloeste Exod 21:8

6. (1×) A Qal passive participial form in Lev 19:20 used adverbially or as a circumstantial clause: 'and being redeemed' (or 'though not yet redeemed'), describing the state of a slave woman. Spanish 'rescatada' and French 'étant rachetée' preserve the stative-participial character. While overlapping with sense 3's Nifal passive, this form functions as a descriptive modifier within the legal case rather than a main-clause predicate. BE REDEEMED PASSIVE

en: and-being-redeemed | es: y-rescatada | fr: et-étant-racheta | de: und-seiend-erloeste Lev 19:20

פְּדַהְאֵל H6300 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pedahel (a personal name meaning 'God has ransomed')

A personal name meaning 'God has ransomed' or 'El has redeemed,' appearing in Numbers 34:28. Pedahel was the prince or leader of the tribe of Naphtali, appointed to help divide the Promised Land among the tribes. The name reflects common Israelite theophoric patterns, combining the divine name El with a verb expressing redemption. Similar Phoenician and Assyrian names show this was a widespread Semitic naming pattern celebrating divine deliverance.

(1×) The personal name 'Pedahel' identifies the prince of Naphtali appointed to oversee the land division in Numbers 34:28. The name means 'God has ransomed,' reflecting the theological theme of divine redemption common in Israelite nomenclature. Pedahel was one of the tribal leaders given the responsibility of fairly apportioning the Promised Land, representing Naphtali's interests in this crucial distribution process. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pedahel | es: Pedahel | fr: Pedahel | de: Pedahel Num 34:28

פְּדָהצוּר H6301 N-proper-ms (6×)

Pedahzur — 'the Rock has ransomed'; father of Gamaliel, leader of Manasseh in the wilderness

A theophoric name combining pedah ('ransom') and tsur ('rock'), expressing the confession that God—the Rock of Israel—has redeemed. Pedahzur appears exclusively in Numbers as the father of Gamaliel, the chieftain appointed over the tribe of Manasseh during the wilderness census and march (Num 1:10, 2:20, 7:54, 59, 10:23). The name fits a pattern of redemption-themed names among the tribal leaders, affirming divine deliverance at the very moment Israel was being organized as a covenant community.

Pedahzur (personal name) (6×) The personal name Pedahzur (פְּדָהצוּר), meaning 'the Rock has ransomed,' identifying the Manassite father of Gamaliel. All six occurrences appear in Numbers in census and offering contexts. The LXX renders it Φαδασσουρ. Spanish and English translations consistently transliterate the name, while French and German similarly preserve it as Pedahtsur/Pedahzur, reflecting its stable identity as a proper noun across traditions. PEDAHZUR PERSONAL NAME

en: Pedah-, Pedahzur, zur | es: :, Pedasur, Pedasur- | fr: Pedah-, Pedahtsur, zur | de: Pedah-, Pedahzur, zur Num 1:10; Num 2:20; Num 7:54; Num 7:59; Num 10:23

פְּדוּיִם H6302 Art / N-mp (4×)

the redeemed ones, ransom; those redeemed through payment, or the redemption price itself

A term denoting either the redeemed ones or the redemption payment, appearing only in Numbers 3 regarding the Levitical substitution. Since the firstborn Israelites (22,273) outnumbered the Levites (22,000), the excess 273 required redemption through payment. The 'redeemed ones' or 'redemption price' (five shekels per person) was collected and given to Aaron and his sons. The textual variants (MT 'pidyom,' Samaritan 'peduyim') and uncertain grammar suggest the term straddles the concepts of 'those redeemed' and 'redemption payment.' The context emphasizes the transaction: surplus firstborn released through monetary substitution, making the Levites complete the representative redemption.

(4×) The redeemed ones or their redemption price in the Levitical substitution. Numbers 3:46, 48, 49, 51 document the redemption of 273 surplus firstborn Israelites beyond the Levite count. The term refers either to the redeemed individuals themselves or the silver collected (1,365 shekels total). The ambiguity between persons and payment reflects how redemption transactions identify people with their ransom price. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: redeemed-ones-of, the-redeemed-ones | es: los-rescatados, rescatados-de | fr: le-racheta-ones, racheta-ones-de | de: der-erloeste-die, erloeste-die-von Num 3:46; Num 3:48; Num 3:49; Num 3:51

פָּדוֹן H6303 N-proper-ms (2×)

Padon, head of a Nethinim family who returned from exile (Ezra 2:44; Nehemiah 7:47)

Padon was a family head among the Nethinim, the temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile. The name means 'ransom' and appears in both lists of returnees. The family's inclusion in the post-exilic community shows the restoration not just of priests and Levites, but also of those who supported temple worship in practical ways.

(2×) The personal name of a Nethinim leader appearing in parallel genealogical lists (Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7). The cross-linguistic evidence confirms this is a proper noun consistently transliterated rather than translated, with Spanish 'Padón' and the Septuagint 'Phadon' reflecting the Hebrew phonology. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Padon | es: Padón, Padón. | fr: [פדון] | de: [פדון] Ezra 2:44; Neh 7:47

פְּדוּת H6304 N-fs (4×)
redemption, ransom; deliverance obtained through payment or divine action of liberation
The abstract noun for redemption or ransom—deliverance achieved through payment or divine intervention. Exodus 8:23 uses it for God setting a 'distinction' (or 'redemption') between Israel and Egypt during the plagues, though the text and meaning are uncertain. Psalm 111:9 celebrates the redemption God 'sent to His people'—the Exodus deliverance. Psalm 130:7 assures that 'with the Lord there is redemption' from iniquities, encouraging hope in divine forgiveness. Isaiah 50:2 questions whether God's hand is too short 'for redemption'—unable to deliver from exile. The term encompasses both transactional redemption (ransom payment) and relational redemption (God's saving acts).

(4×) Redemption or deliverance, whether through ransom or divine action. Exodus 8:23 may use it for the distinction/deliverance separating Israel from Egypt (text uncertain). Psalms celebrate God's redemption: sending deliverance to His people (111:9) and offering redemption from sins (130:7). Isaiah 50:2 defends God's power to redeem from exile. The term unites transactional and covenantal aspects of liberation. REDEMPTION RANSOM
en: from-redemption, redemption | es: Redención, de-redención?, redención | fr: [מפדות], délivrance, redemption | de: [מפדות], redemption Exod 8:23; Ps 111:9; Ps 130:7; Isa 50:2

פְּדָיְהוּ H6305 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)
Pedaiah / Pedayahu — 'YHWH has ransomed'; a name shared by several biblical figures from the monarchic to post-exilic periods.
Pedaiah is a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has ransomed,' combining the root padah (to redeem, ransom) with the divine name. It appears across a surprisingly wide timespan. A Pedaiah is named as the maternal grandfather of King Jehoiakim (2 Kgs 23:36), and a son of Jeconiah by that name appears in the post-exilic royal genealogy as the father of Zerubbabel according to Chronicles (1 Chr 3:18-19). Other bearers include a Manassite officer under David (1 Chr 27:20), a wall-builder under Nehemiah (Neh 3:25), a Benjamite (Neh 11:7), and a Levite treasurer (Neh 13:13). The longer form Pedayahu appears only for the Manassite leader.

Pedaiah / Pedayahu (personal name) (8×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH has ransomed,' from the root פדה (to redeem). Borne by at least six individuals: Josiah's father-in-law (2 Kgs 23:36), a son of Jeconiah and possible father of Zerubbabel (1 Chr 3:18-19), a Manassite officer using the longer form Pedayahu (1 Chr 27:20), a Nehemiah-era wall-builder (Neh 3:25), a public Torah-reading participant (Neh 8:4), a Benjamite settler (Neh 11:7), and a Levitical treasurer (Neh 13:13). The Septuagint typically renders it Phaldaias. English uses 'Pedaiah,' Spanish 'Pedaías,' and French 'Pedaja,' all reflecting the redemption theology embedded in the name. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Pedaiah, Pedayah, Pedayahu | es: Pedaya, Pedayas, Pedaías | fr: Pedaja, Pedayah, et-Pedaja | de: Pedayah, [ופדיה], [פדיה] 2Kgs 23:36; 1Chr 3:18; 1Chr 3:19; 1Chr 27:20; Neh 3:25

פִּדְיֹם H6306a Art / N-ms (1×)
redemption, ransom (the price paid to redeem)
A Hebrew noun referring to redemption money or ransom price, appearing in Numbers 3:49. The term is textually problematic—most scholars suggest reading 'the redeemed ones' (passive participle) rather than 'the redemption' (noun), as reflected in the verse's Qere reading. In context, it refers to the redemption money collected for the excess Israelite firstborns over the number of Levites. This payment substituted for the firstborn's consecration to God, established after the exodus.

(1×) Refers to redemption money or ransom paid for firstborn Israelites in Numbers 3:49. The text describes Moses collecting redemption silver for the 273 firstborn who exceeded the number of Levites (who served as substitutes for firstborns). Though the noun form is textually disputed, the concept is clear: payment that releases an obligation. Multilingual glosses (Spanish rescate, French rachat, German redemption) all capture this sense of ransoming or buying back. REDEMPTION RANSOM
en: the-redemption | es: el-rescate | fr: le-rachat | de: der-redemption Num 3:49

פִּדְיוֹן H6306b N-msc (2×)
Redemption price, ransom payment for a life (פִּדְיוֹן נֶפֶשׁ)
This noun refers to the redemption price paid to save a life. In Exodus 21:30, it's the ransom imposed when an ox gores someone to death—the owner may pay this sum instead of losing his own life. Psalm 49:8 uses it in poetry about the impossibility of buying one's way out of death, since no redemption price could ever be sufficient. The term appears in the construct phrase 'redemption of a soul.'

(2×) A concrete ransom payment or redemption price, particularly for saving human life. The Spanish 'redención-de' and French 'rachat' capture the commercial-legal sense of this term. The two biblical occurrences frame it both legally (Exodus) and theologically (Psalms), showing how literal redemption language became a metaphor for divine salvation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: is-redemption-of, redemption-of | es: redención-de | fr: rachat, redemption-de | de: ist-redemption-von, redemption-von Exod 21:30; Ps 49:8

יִפְדֵּיָה H6307 N-proper-fs / 3fs (11×)
Paddan-aram, the upper Mesopotamian plain around Haran, homeland of the patriarchal family
This compound place name designates the fertile plain surrounding Haran in upper Mesopotamia, the ancestral homeland of Abraham's extended family. It is where Isaac's bride Rebekah originates (Gen 25:20) and where Jacob is sent to find a wife among his mother's kin (Gen 28:2). The name evokes the patriarchal practice of seeking marriages within the covenant family, binding Canaan's promises to Mesopotamian roots.

Paddan-aram (proper name, region) (11×) The proper geographical name for the region around Haran in upper Mesopotamia (modern southeastern Turkey/northern Syria). It appears almost exclusively in patriarchal narratives — identifying Rebekah's origin (Gen 25:20) and Jacob's destination when fleeing Esau (Gen 28:2, 5, 6, 7). English renders it 'Paddan-aram,' preserving both elements of the compound name. ARAM REGION PERSON
en: Paddan-aram, from-Paddan, from-Paddan-Aram | es: Padán-Aram, de-Paddan-Aram, de-Padán | fr: Paddan-aram, dans-Paddan-Aram, de-Paddan | de: aus-Paddan, aus-Paddan-Aram, in-Paddan-Aram Gen 25:20; Gen 28:2; Gen 28:5; Gen 28:6; Gen 28:7

פְּדֵן H6308 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3ms (1×)
redeem him (imperative verb form with pronominal suffix)
A verb form appearing in Job 33:24, where Elihu describes God showing favor to a suffering person. The text reads 'redeem him' (or 'deliver him'), with God commanding deliverance from going down to the pit. The form combines an imperative with a pronominal suffix, expressing divine mercy that rescues from death. However, the verse is textually complex, and some see this as an abbreviated form of the place name Paddan-Aram rather than a verb, though contextually a verbal reading makes better sense.

(1×) A verb form meaning 'redeem him' or 'deliver him' in Job 33:24, where Elihu describes God's gracious intervention to save a suffering person from the pit. The form expresses divine command or decision to ransom someone from death. The context emphasizes God's mercy in turning back from destruction when a mediator intercedes. Though some lexicons treat this as a textual issue, the sense of redemption fits Job's larger theme of deliverance from suffering. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: redeem-him | es: redímelo | fr: כדעהו-lui | de: [כדעהו] Job 33:24

פֶּדֶר H6309 Art / N-ms (3×)

suet, fat (interior animal fat used in sacrifices)

This term refers to the interior fat of sacrificial animals, particularly the hard fat around kidneys and organs that was considered choice and sacred. In Leviticus' sacrificial instructions, the animal is divided into pieces including 'its head, its suet, its pieces,' arranged on the altar. This fat was Yahweh's portion, forbidden for human consumption and always burned in sacrifice. The term appears only in Leviticus 1 and 8, describing proper preparation of burnt offerings. While some uncertainty exists about the root, the context clearly indicates select interior fat portions set apart for God.

(3×) Refers to the choice interior fat of a sacrificial animal, especially the hard fat surrounding vital organs. Leviticus 1:8 instructs priests to arrange 'the head and the suet' (הַפֶּדֶר) on the burning wood; verse 12 repeats this for the burnt offering, and Leviticus 8:20 includes it in Moses' consecration of Aaron. This fat was considered Yahweh's special portion (Leviticus 3:16) and was always burned, never eaten. The term distinguishes this select fat from general body fat. Translations render it as 'fat' or 'suet' (English), 'sebo' (Spanish), 'graisse' (French). FAT AND RICHNESS

en: its-fat, the-fat, the-suet | es: el-sebo, sebo-suyo | fr: le-graisse, le-suet, son-graisse | de: der-fett, der-suet, sein-fett Lev 1:8; Lev 1:12; Lev 8:20

פֶּה H6310 Conj-w (498×)

mouth, edge, opening, command; from the physical organ to its extensions (sword edge, well opening, proportional measure)

The noun peh primarily denotes the physical mouth of humans or animals, the organ of speech and eating (395 occurrences). From this concrete root spring multiple extensions: the sharp edge of a sword in battle idioms ('by the mouth of the sword'), openings of vessels and garments (wells, sacks, collars), proportional measures ('according to the mouth' = as befits), and authoritative utterances that issue from the mouth (commands, decrees). The semantic range spans body part, physical aperture, measurement idiom, and metonymic word-for-utterance. Arabic, Korean, and Swahili translations preserve these distinct senses with separate lexemes for edge (hadd, kalnal, makali) and measure (hasab, ttara, kulingana na).

1. mouth (body part) (395×) The literal physical mouth appears in 395 passages, covering eating, speaking, and all pronominal/prepositional phrases where the referent is the bodily organ. This foundational sense anchors the semantic network from which the other meanings derive through metaphor and metonymy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: mouth-of | es: boca-de, boca-de-, la-boca-de | fr: bouche-de | de: Mund-von, der-Öffnung, die-Öffnung Gen 29:2; Gen 29:3; Gen 29:8; Gen 29:10

2. edge of sword (47×) The 'edge of the sword' (lefi cherev) occurs 47 times, a stock phrase for violent death. Multilingual evidence shows distinct lexemes: Arabic hadd (sharp edge), Korean kalnal (blade), Swahili makali (sharpness), Hindi dhaar (cutting edge), confirming this as a stable metaphorical extension from mouth to weapon's edge. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-edge-of-, by-mouth-of, by-mouth-of- | es: a-filo-de, a-filo-de- | fr: avec-bord-de-, avec-le-bord-de, avec-tranchant-de- | de: durch-Mund-von, durch-Mund-von-, durch-Rand-von- Gen 4:11; Gen 34:26; Exod 17:13; Num 16:30; Num 16:32

3. according to, in proportion to (28×) The prepositional idiom 'al-pi' (according to/in proportion to) appears 28 times in legal and cultic contexts. Cross-linguistic data reveal specialized prepositions: Arabic hasab, Korean ttara (following), Swahili kulingana na (in accordance with), Hindi anusaar (according to), showing this as a grammaticalized meaning distinct from the body part. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to, according-to-, and-according-to | es: Según, Y-según, conforme-a | fr: et-selon, par-bouche-de, selon | de: bei-Mund-von, durch-Mund-von, gemaess-zu Gen 47:12; Exod 12:4; Exod 16:16; Exod 16:18; Exod 16:21

4. opening, entrance, aperture (12×) The opening of a container (well, sack, cave) accounts for 12 occurrences. Translations employ contextual terms: Arabic fathah (opening), Korean ipgu (entrance), Swahili shimo/mlango (hole/doorway), Hindi mukh (contextual mouth/opening), indicating a natural semantic extension from bodily orifice to inanimate aperture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-mouth, and-opening-of, at-mouth-of | es: Y-abertura-de, Y-boca-de-ella, a-boca-de | fr: comme-ouverture-de, et-ouverture-de, et-son-bouche | de: Mund, bei-Mund, fuer-sein-opening Exod 28:32; Exod 39:23

5. command, decree, word (6×) Metonymic use for 'command' or 'decree' (the mouth standing for what issues from it) appears 6 times, especially with divine subjects. Cross-linguistic glosses include Arabic amr (command), Korean myeonglyeong (decree), Swahili amri/neno (command/word), Hindi aajnaa/vachan (order/word), confirming a recognized metonymic pathway. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-command, mouth-of, the-mouth-of- | es: boca-de, boca-de-él, son-del | fr: bouche, bouche-de, son-bouche-lui | de: Mund, Mund-von, dem-Befehl Gen 43:7; Gen 45:21; 1Chr 12:33; Job 39:27; Prov 8:29

6. end, extremity (4×) The sense 'end' or 'extremity' of a spatial extent occurs 4 times (2 Kings 10:21, 21:16, Ezra 9:11 twice). Arabic taraf, Korean kkeut, Swahili upande, Hindi chhor all mean edge/end, supporting a metaphorical extension from mouth as frontal opening to terminus of a boundary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: end, from-end, to-mouth | es: a-boca, a-extremo, de-extremo | fr: bouche, à-bouche | de: Mund, von-Mund, zu-Mund 2Kgs 10:21; 2Kgs 21:16; Ezra 9:11

7. portion, measured part (3×) Proportional 'portion' or measured share appears 3 times (Deut 21:17 double portion, 2 Kgs 2:9, Zech 13:8). Multilingual evidence: Arabic di'faani/thulthaa (double/third), Korean bae (multiple), Swahili sehemu/fungu (part/portion), Hindi bhaag (share), showing a specialized counting idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: portion-of, two | es: dos, porción, porción-de | fr: bouche, part-de, portion-de | de: Anteil-von, Mund-von Deut 21:17; 2Kgs 2:9; Zech 13:8

8. collar, neck opening of garment (2×) The 'collar' or neck opening of a garment occurs twice (Job 30:18, Ps 133:2). Context-specific translations include Arabic fam (in garment sense), Korean otgit (garment opening), Swahili ukingo/shingo (border/neck), Hindi gale (neck/collar), confirming this as a specialized clothing term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-collar-of, collar-of | es: borde-de, como-cuello-de | fr: comme-bouche, ma-bouche | de: Mund, wie-Mund-von Job 30:18; Ps 133:2

9. (1×) A single occurrence at 1 Samuel 13:21 (pim, a unit of weight or measure) remains uncertain. The hapax legomenon shows transliteration across languages (pim), suggesting translators recognized it as a technical term whose exact referent is unclear, possibly a fractional weight for sharpening tools. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: pim | es: un-pim | fr: pim | de: pim 1Sam 13:21

פֹּה H6311 Adv (82×)

Here; from here — a deictic adverb of spatial reference indicating present location or point of departure.

A spatial adverb derived from the noun for 'mouth' (peh), used to indicate immediate location ('here') or a point of origin ('from here'). In Genesis 22:5, Abraham tells his servants to remain 'here' while he and Isaac go to worship — a moment dense with dramatic irony. The Spanish renderings 'aquí' and 'de-allí/de-aquí' neatly mirror the two directional senses, while German occasionally retains the etymological link to 'Mund' (mouth), hinting at the word's origins.

1. here (47×) Deictic adverb indicating present location: 'here, in this place.' Used when a speaker draws attention to the immediate spot, as when Abraham commands his servants to stay 'here' (Gen

22:5) or Joseph identifies himself to his brothers 'here' in Egypt (Gen 45:12). Spanish 'aquí' and French 'ici' consistently render this locative sense across all 47 occurrences. HERE AND HITHER
en: here | es: aquí, aquí? | fr: ici | de: Mund, hier Gen 19:12; Gen 22:5; Gen 40:15; Num 22:8; Num 32:6

2. from here (35×) Adverb of origin or direction: 'from here, from this place,' often paired with spatial complements to describe movement away from a reference point. Prominent in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40:10, 12), where measurements are taken 'from here and from here' (on each side). Spanish splits between 'de-aquí' and 'de-allí,' revealing the directional nuance that English 'from here' captures in a single phrase. HERE AND HITHER
en: from-here | es: de-allí, de-aquí | fr: de-ici, ici | de: hier, von-Mund Ezek 40:10; Ezek 40:12

פּוּה H6312 N-proper-ms (4×)
Puah, Puvah; personal name borne by a judge's father and a tribal ancestor of Issachar
A personal name appearing in genealogical and judicial contexts. Genesis 46:13 and 1 Chronicles 7:1 list Puah (or Puvah, with variant spelling) among the sons of Issachar—one of Jacob's grandsons founding a tribal family. Numbers 26:23 refers to the Punite clan descended from this Puah. Judges 10:1 identifies Tola the judge as 'son of Puah,' though this may be a different individual or refer to clan descent. The LXX transliterations vary (Phoua, Phouah, Puvah), reflecting Hebrew spelling variants. The name possibly relates to a root for plants or brightness, but its etymology remains uncertain.

(4×) Personal name of an Issacharite ancestor and a judge's father. Genesis 46:13 and 1 Chronicles 7:1 name Puah among Issachar's sons, founding the Punite clan (Num 26:23). Judges 10:1 lists Puah as Tola the judge's father (or ancestor). The variant spellings (Puah/Puvah) and LXX diversity indicate textual fluidity, but the name clearly designates Issacharite lineage and judicial heritage. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Puah, and-Puah, and-Puvah | es: Puá, de-Fuvá, y-Fúa | fr: Puah, [ופואה], et-Puvah | de: Puah, [ופואה], und-Puwa Gen 46:13; Num 26:23; Judg 10:1; 1Chr 7:1

פּוּג H6313 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (4×)
to grow numb, faint; to lose vitality, become weak or insensible from shock or exhaustion
A verb meaning to grow numb, faint, or lose strength—describing physical or emotional incapacitation from shock, grief, or exhaustion. Genesis 45:26 captures Jacob's stunned disbelief when hearing Joseph lives: 'his heart grew numb'—he couldn't take it in. The Psalms use it for physical and spiritual exhaustion: the psalmist is 'numb' from groaning (38:8), and his hand grew numb in the night from anguish (77:2). Habakkuk laments that justice 'grows numb'—becomes paralyzed or ineffective (1:4). The verb describes the failure of normal function whether in heart, body, or social systems—a shutting down under overwhelming pressure.

(4×) To become numb, faint, or lose vitality from shock or exhaustion. Genesis 45:26 describes Jacob's heart growing numb with disbelief. Psalm 38:8 expresses being numb from anguish and groaning. Psalm 77:2 tells of the hand growing numb at night. Habakkuk 1:4 uses it for justice becoming paralyzed or ineffective. The consistent sense is loss of normal function—emotional, physical, or systemic—under overwhelming strain. FAINTNESS SWOONING
en: I-am-numb, and-grew-numb, did-it-grow-numb | es: Estoy-entumecido, cesó, se-debilita | fr: et-crût-numb, s'engourdir, être-engourdi | de: [ותכוג], ich-bin-betäubt, tat-es-wachsen-betäubt Gen 45:26; Ps 38:8; Ps 77:2; Hab 1:4

פּוּג H6314 N-fsc (1×)
rest, respite, cessation (particularly of relief from suffering)
A rare Hebrew noun appearing in Lamentations 2:18, in the phrase 'let not the apple of your eye find rest' (or 'cease' from weeping). The word derives from a root meaning 'to grow numb' or 'become inactive,' and here it refers to cessation or respite from tears. The context is Jerusalem's destruction—the poet urges unceasing weeping over the city's devastation. The term captures the idea of stopping, resting, or finding relief from an ongoing action or state.

(1×) Refers to rest, cessation, or respite, particularly in the context of weeping. Lamentations 2:18 urges that tears should find no rest—the weeping over Jerusalem's destruction should continue without pause. The noun derives from a verb meaning 'grow numb' or 'cease,' and here it expresses the idea of taking a break or finding relief. Spanish 'descanso' (rest) captures this sense of pausing or ceasing from ongoing activity. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: rest | es: descanso | fr: [פוגת] | de: [פוגת] Lam 2:18

הָפִיחַ H6315 Pro-r / V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (14×)
To breathe, blow, or puff; of wind blowing, speech breathed out, eager panting, kindling flame, or scornful dismissal.
Built on the primal image of breath leaving the body, this verb radiates into surprisingly diverse uses. In Song of Solomon it is the literal breeze blowing across a garden (4:16) or the cool breath of evening (2:17). Proverbs transforms it into a speech act: a false witness 'breathes out' lies (Prov 6:19; 14:5), while a faithful one 'breathes out' truth (Prov 12:17). Habakkuk 2:3 uses it of a prophetic vision that 'pants' toward fulfillment—it will not delay. French 'souffler' (to blow/breathe) threads through nearly every occurrence, revealing how one root image—breath expelled—generates meanings from gentle breezes to contemptuous puffs.

1. breathe out speech, utter (6×) Breathe out speech or utter testimony: The Hifil figurative sense where breath becomes words. Proverbs repeatedly pairs this verb with 'lies' or 'truth': a faithful witness 'breathes out' what is right (Prov 12:17), while a false witness 'breathes out' deceit (Prov 14:5; 19:5). Spanish 'profiere/declara/habla' (utters/declares/speaks) and French 'souffler' both capture how speech is literally exhaled—truth and falsehood alike ride on breath. BLOWING AND BREATHING
en: and-breather-of, breathes-out, but-breathes-out | es: Que-profiere, el-que-declara, y-el-que-habla | fr: et-souffler, souffler | de: und-weht, weht Prov 6:19; Prov 12:17; Prov 14:5; Prov 14:25; Prov 19:5

2. blow, breathe upon (4×) Blow or breathe upon physically: The literal core meaning—wind or breath moving across something. Song of Solomon 4:16 invites the north wind to 'blow upon' the garden so its fragrances may flow. Song 2:17 and 4:6 describe the evening breeze 'breathing.' Ezekiel 21:31 has God blowing the fire of wrath. French 'souffle/souffler' is remarkably consistent here, and Spanish 'soplar' (to blow) preserves the concrete, physical action. BLOWING AND BREATHING
en: I-will-blow, blow-upon, that-breathes | es: que-sople, sopla, soplaré | fr: Souffle, souffle, souffler | de: [אפיח], weht Song 2:17; Song 4:6; Song 4:16; Ezek 21:31

3. pant, gasp eagerly (2×) Pant or gasp with eager desire: Breath quickened by anticipation or longing. Habakkuk 2:3 declares the vision 'pants toward the end'—it will surely come. Psalm 12:5 (ET 12:5) describes the oppressed who 'pant' for deliverance. Spanish 'jadea' (gasps/pants) makes the physical intensity vivid: this is not calm breathing but the urgent respiration of someone straining toward something just out of reach. BLOWING AND BREATHING
en: and-it-hastens, he-pants | es: soplará, y-jadea | fr: et-souffler, souffle | de: er-pants, und-weht Ps 12:5; Hab 2:3

4. fan into flame, kindle (1×) Fan into flame or kindle strife: Blowing on coals to ignite them—extended to stirring up conflict. Proverbs 29:8 warns that scoffers 'set a city aflame,' using this breath-verb to evoke the image of blowing on embers until they catch. Spanish 'encienden' (they kindle/ignite) maps the metaphor precisely: social agitators are bellows fanning smoldering tension into open conflagration. BLOWING AND BREATHING
en: set-aflame | es: encienden | fr: souffler | de: weht Prov 29:8

5. puff in scorn (1×) Puff in scorn or contempt: A dismissive exhalation directed at enemies. Psalm 10:5 describes the wicked who 'puffs at' all his adversaries—a gesture of arrogant disdain, as though blowing them away like dust. Spanish 'sopla' (he blows) and the context of the Psalm's portrait of the proud oppressor show this as breath weaponized not to kindle or speak, but to belittle. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: he-puffs | es: sopla | fr: souffle | de: er-puffs Ps 10:5

פִּיחַ H6316 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (7×)

Put; a people and territory in Africa, descendants of Ham, often listed among Egypt's military allies

The proper name Put (פּוּט), referring to a people descended from Ham and typically identified with a region in North Africa, possibly Libya or the broader territory west of Egypt. Put appears in the Table of Nations as a son of Ham alongside Cush, Mizraim, and Canaan (Gen 10:6; 1 Chr 1:8). The prophets consistently mention Put as a military ally of Egypt — warriors serving as mercenaries or shield-bearers (Jer 46:9; Ezek 27:10; 30:5; 38:5; Nah 3:9). French interestingly renders this as both Puth and Pul, reflecting ancient confusion with the Assyrian king Pul.

and Put (7×) Proper noun פּוּט designating a people and territory descended from Ham, third son after Cush and Mizraim in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:6; 1 Chr 1:8). Usually identified with a North African region, possibly Libya or Cyrenaica. In prophetic texts, Put appears consistently as a military power allied with Egypt: warriors bearing shields (Jer 46:9), mercenary soldiers in Tyre's army (Ezek 27:10), and nations destined to fall alongside Egypt (Ezek 30:5; 38:5; Nah 3:9). The conjunction waw ('and Put') appears frequently because Put is typically listed among allied peoples. German und-Put and Spanish y-Put reflect this formulaic listing pattern. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Put, and-Put | es: Put, y-Put | fr: Pul, Puth, [ופוט] | de: [ופוט], [פוט], und-Put Gen 10:6; 1Chr 1:8; Jer 46:9; Ezek 27:10; Ezek 30:5

פּוּט H6317 N-proper-fs (1×)

Putiel (a personal name, possibly Egyptian origin)

A personal name appearing in Exodus 6:25, identifying the father-in-law of Aaron's son Eleazar. Putiel's daughter married Eleazar, and their son was Phinehas, the zealous priest. The name is unusual and may reflect Egyptian influence, fitting the exodus context where Israelites had long lived in Egypt. The etymology is uncertain, though some suggest it contains the element 'Puti' (perhaps Egyptian) combined with the divine name 'El.'

(1×) The personal name 'Putiel' identifies the father of the woman who married Eleazar, Aaron's son (Exodus 6:25). Putiel was thus the grandfather of Phinehas, the priest who later demonstrated zeal for God at Shittim. The name's etymology is unclear but may reflect Egyptian influence, appropriate for a generation born in Egypt before the exodus. Multilingual translations simply transliterate this proper name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Putiel | es: Putiel | fr: Putiel | de: Putiel Exod 6:25

פּוּטִיאֵל H6318 N-proper-ms (2×)

Putiel, father-in-law of Aaron's son Eleazar (Exodus 6:25)

Putiel was the father-in-law of Eleazar, Aaron's son. This brief genealogical note in Exodus 6:25 connects priestly lineages during the wilderness period. The name appears only once but establishes an important family connection in the Aaronic priesthood. Note: BDB confuses this entry with Potiphar (a different Egyptian name), but the glosses correctly show Potiphar, suggesting a textual issue in the prompt data.

(2×) A personal name appearing in priestly genealogy, father of Eleazar's wife. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Potifar,' French 'Potiphar') and biblical references (Genesis 37:36, 39:1) indicate this is actually Potiphar, the Egyptian official who bought Joseph, not Putiel. The cross-linguistic consistency confirms the proper noun status but reveals a potential data mismatch between the BDB entry and the gloss evidence. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Potiphar, to-Potiphar | es: Potifar, a-Potifar | fr: Potiphar, à-Potiphar | de: Potifar, an-Potifar Gen 37:36; Gen 39:1

פּוֹטִיפַר H6319 N-proper-ms (3×)

Potiphera, Egyptian priest of On, Joseph's father-in-law

Potiphera was an Egyptian priest of On (Heliopolis) whose daughter Asenath became Joseph's wife. The name, abbreviated from Potiphera ('he whom Ra has given'), reflects authentic Egyptian naming patterns and confirms Joseph's deep integration into Egyptian society. Pharaoh gave Asenath to Joseph as part of his elevation to second-in-command. Their marriage produced Manasseh and Ephraim, making Potiphera the grandfather of two tribal patriarchs. His priestly status at the sun-god temple in On indicates high social standing, underscoring the honor Pharaoh bestowed on Joseph.

(3×) Personal name of an Egyptian priest serving at On (Heliopolis), given as Joseph's father-in-law. Genesis 41:45 records Pharaoh giving Joseph 'Asenath daughter of Potiphera priest of On' as wife. Verse 50 notes that before the famine, Joseph had two sons 'whom Asenath daughter of Potiphera priest of On bore to him,' and 46:20 repeats this detail. The name is genuinely Egyptian, meaning 'he whom Ra has given,' similar to Potiphar (Joseph's earlier master) but not identical. His priestly office at On (center of Ra worship) shows Joseph's high-level integration into Egyptian aristocracy. Translations preserve the name: 'Potiphera,' 'Potifera.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Potiphera | es: Poti-Fera, Potifera | fr: Potiphéra | de: Poti-Feras Gen 41:45; Gen 41:50; Gen 46:20

פּוּטִי פֶּרַע H6320 Prep-b (4×)

antimony, eye paint; black cosmetic powder used for darkening eyelids and lashes

A cosmetic substance, likely antimony sulfide (kohl), used for eye makeup—darkening and defining the eyes. Second Kings 9:30 describes Jezebel 'painting her eyes' before her fateful encounter with Jehu, suggesting beautification or defiance. First Chronicles 29:2 mentions it among precious materials David gathered for the temple—possibly for decorative inlay work. Isaiah 54:11 uses it in God's promise to restore Jerusalem: 'I will lay your foundations with antimony'—perhaps referring to dark, precious stones set in mortar. Jeremiah 4:30 denounces beautifying eyes with paint while facing destruction—cosmetics can't save from judgment. The term represents both cosmetic enhancement and valuable dark mineral.

(4×) Antimony or eye paint (kohl) used for cosmetic purposes and ornamentation. 2 Kings 9:30 shows Jezebel painting her eyes. Jeremiah 4:30 condemns beautifying with eye paint when facing disaster. 1 Chronicles 29:2 lists it among temple materials. Isaiah 54:11 uses it metaphorically for Jerusalem's beautiful restoration ('foundations with antimony'). The substance serves both personal adornment and architectural/artistic decoration with dark, striking color. PERSONAL NAMES

en: antimony, in-antimony, on-the-paint | es: antimonio, con-antimonio, con-el-cosmético | fr: [בפוך], [פוך], sur-le-paint | de: [בכפוך], [פוך], auf-der-paint 2Kgs 9:30; 1Chr 29:2; Isa 54:11; Jer 4:30

פּוֹךְ H6321 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

Beans, a legume used for food (2 Samuel 17:28; Ezekiel 4:9)

This word refers to beans or legumes used as food. In 2 Samuel 17:28, beans are among the provisions brought to David and his followers during Absalom's rebellion—basic sustenance food. Ezekiel 4:9 includes beans in the prophet's symbolic siege bread recipe, mixed with wheat, barley, lentils, and other grains. The term appears with the conjunction 'and' (וּכְפוֹל), linking it to other food items.

(2×) A common legume crop used for food, especially during hardship. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'habas,' English 'beans') show clear agricultural identification. Note: The BDB excerpt discusses antimony (פּוּךְ), a cosmetic mineral, which doesn't match the gloss evidence or references—this appears to be a data alignment issue. The actual occurrences refer to the edible legume. GOLD

(PRECIOUS METAL)
en: and-beans | es: y-habas | fr: et-Pul, et-beans | de: [וּפוּל], und-beans 2Sam 17:28; Ezek 4:9

פּוֹל H6322 N-proper-ms (4×)

Pul; name of an Assyrian king (Tiglath-pileser III) and possibly a distant people or region

A name with dual reference: most prominently, the Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser III, who invaded Israel during Menahem's reign. Second Kings 15:19 (twice) and 1 Chronicles 5:26 record 'Pul king of Assyria' exacting tribute from Israel and later deporting the Transjordanian tribes. 'Pul' was either Tiglath-pileser's throne name or a variant designation used by biblical writers. Isaiah 66:19 may list Pul as a distant nation (alongside Tarshish, Lud, Tubal), though this could refer to a different people. The name demonstrates how biblical texts sometimes use multiple names for the same ruler, and how royal nomenclature varied across cultures.

(4×) Pul, king of Assyria (Tiglath-pileser III) who invaded and exacted tribute from Israel. 2 Kings 15:19 (twice) records Pul's invasion during Menahem's reign and the tribute paid. 1 Chronicles 5:26 mentions Pul (alongside 'Tilgath-pilneser') in the context of deporting Transjordanian tribes. Isaiah 66:19 may refer to a distant nation named Pul. The primary reference is clearly the Assyrian monarch. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: Pul, to-Pul | es: Pul, a-Pul | fr: Pul, [פּוֹל], à-Pul | de: Pul, [פּוֹל], zu-Pul 2Kgs 15:19; 1Chr 5:26; Isa 66:19

פּוּל H6323 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (1×)

I am helpless, I am confused (first person cohortative expressing desperation)

A first-person cohortative verb form appearing in Psalm 88:15, expressing the psalmist's state of confusion, helplessness, or being overwhelmed. The verb derives from a root with uncertain meaning —possibly related to growing numb, being confused, or feeling helpless. Some lexicons connect it to the Assyrian king Pul (Tiglath-Pileser III), but the verbal reading better fits Psalm 88's context of deep distress and abandonment. The psalmist describes a state of utter disorientation and weakness.

(1×) A first-person verb expressing the speaker's state of confusion, helplessness, or overwhelming distress in Psalm 88:15. The psalmist, feeling abandoned by God from youth, declares 'I am helpless' or 'I am in confusion.' The root meaning is uncertain but involves being overwhelmed, disoriented, or unable to function. Multilingual glosses (Spanish aturdido 'dazed,' French 'in darkness') capture this sense of mental and emotional incapacitation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: I-am-helpless | es: estoy-aturdido | fr: être-dans-l'obscurité | de: ich-bin-hilflos Ps 88:15

פּוּאָה H6324 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Punite (gentilicic designation from Puah/Puvah)

A Hebrew gentilicic adjective appearing in Numbers 26:23, designating the clan descended from Puah (or Puvah), a son of Issachar. The term identifies a family group within the tribe of Issachar during the wilderness census. Like other such designations, it served to organize tribal structure and track genealogical relationships. The Punites were one of the clans counted in the second census as Israel prepared to enter Canaan.

(1×) The gentilicic form 'Punite' identifies the clan descended from Puah, son of Issachar, in Numbers 26:23. This designation appears in the wilderness census, organizing Issachar's descendants into family groups. The Punites formed one of Issachar's constituent clans, traced back to their eponymous ancestor. Such clan names were crucial for land distribution, military organization, and maintaining tribal identity in ancient Israel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Punite | es: los-funitas | fr: le-Punite | de: der-Punite Num 26:23

פּוּנֹן H6325 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Punon, a wilderness station between Petra and the Dead Sea (Numbers 33:42-43)

Punon was a stopping place during Israel's wilderness journey, the second station after leaving Mount Hor. Located in Edomite territory between Petra and the southern Dead Sea, it was famous in antiquity for copper mines. The site appears in the Greek as Phinon or Phainon and may be connected to the Edomite name Pinon.

(2×) A geographical location in Edom where Israel camped during the wilderness wanderings. The multilingual glosses preserve the toponym with slight variations (Spanish 'Punón,' French 'Punon'), showing transliteration practices across target languages. Both Numbers 33 references describe arrival at and departure from this location, using the prepositions 'from' and 'in.' PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Punon, in-Punon | es: de-Punón, en-Punón | fr: dans-Punon, de-Punon | de: in-Punon, von-Punon Num 33:42; Num 33:43

פּוּעָה H6326 N-proper-fs (1×)

Puah (a personal name for a Hebrew midwife in Egypt)

A feminine personal name appearing in Exodus 1:15, identifying one of the two Hebrew midwives who defied Pharaoh's command to kill Hebrew male infants. Puah, along with Shiphrah, feared God and preserved the baby boys' lives, providing excuses to Pharaoh. These women's courageous civil disobedience forms a crucial early step in the exodus narrative, as their actions allowed Moses' generation to survive.

(1×) The feminine personal name 'Puah' identifies one of the heroic Hebrew midwives in Exodus 1:15 who defied Pharaoh's genocidal command. Along with Shiphrah, Puah preserved Hebrew male infants by refusing to kill them at birth, claiming the Hebrew women gave birth too quickly for the midwives to intervene. Their faithful disobedience represents early resistance to oppression and enabled the survival of Moses' generation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Puah | es: Puah | fr: Puah | de: Puah Exod 1:15

פּוּץ H6327a V-Hifil-Perf-1cs / 3mp (63×)

To scatter, disperse, or be scattered; of peoples driven apart, armies broken, or nations spread abroad.

Puts captures one of the Bible's most vivid spatial actions — the forceful scattering of what was once gathered. It runs from Babel to the exile: God 'scattered them over the face of all the earth' (Gen 11:8-9) and later dispersed Israel among the nations (Ezek 20:34). The Hifil causative shows God or a conqueror actively dispersing, while the Qal and Nifal show the scattered ones flying apart like sheep without a shepherd (Ezek 34:5). Arabic baddada, Korean 흩뜨리다 (transitive) versus 흩어지다 (intransitive), and Swahili -tawanya versus -tawanyika all mirror this crucial voice distinction.

1. Hifil: scatter, disperse (causative) (35×) Hifil causative: to scatter or disperse actively, the dominant sense at 35 occurrences. God scatters the nations at Babel (Gen 11:8-9), disperses Israel among the peoples (Deut 4:27; Ezek 20:34), and scatters enemies (Ps 68:1). Arabic baddada (Form II causative) and Korean 흩뜨리다 (transitive dispersal) both select agent-focused vocabulary. The theological weight is enormous — scattering is the anti-exodus, the undoing of gathering, and the prophets repeatedly threaten and then promise reversal of this Hifil action. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: And-I-will-scatter-them, I-scattered-them, I-scattered-you | es: Derrama, Y-dispersaré, Y-esparció | fr: disperser, et-Il-dispersa-eux, et-disperser | de: [אַפִּיץ], [הֵפִיץ], [יָפִץ] Gen 11:8; Gen 11:9; Gen 49:7; Exod 5:12; Deut 4:27

2. Nifal: be scattered (passive) (16×) Nifal passive: to be scattered or found in a scattered state, with 16 occurrences. The subject suffers dispersal rather than causing it — Israel 'was scattered' across the battle (2 Sam 18:8), the flock 'was scattered' without a shepherd (Ezek 34:5-6), and Zedekiah's army 'was scattered' by the Babylonians (2 Kgs 25:5). Arabic tashattata (Form V reflexive-passive) and Swahili -tawanyika (stative/passive) both mark the voice shift clearly. The Nifal form carries a sense of vulnerability and loss that the active Hifil lacks. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: (scattered), [scattered], and-be-scattered | es: (esparcida), [esparcida], dispersos | fr: (scattered), [scattered], dispersa | de: [scattered], scattered, und-zerstreuen Gen 10:18; 2Sam 18:8; 1Kgs 22:17; 2Kgs 25:5

3. Qal: scatter, disperse (intransitive) (11×) Qal intransitive: to scatter or disperse of one's own accord, including the Qal passive participle meaning 'scattered ones.' Eleven occurrences capture self-initiated dispersal — the builders at Babel fear being scattered (Gen 11:4), enemies scatter before the ark (Num 10:35), and Saul commands troops to 'disperse' (1 Sam 14:34). Arabic tafarraqa and Korean 흩어지다 (intransitive) both preserve the sense of autonomous movement apart. Zephaniah 3:10's bat-putsay ('my scattered ones') uses the passive participle as a substantive noun of identity. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-let-scatter, and-they-scattered, and-they-were-scattered | es: Dispersaos, Y-se-dispersaron, mis-dispersos | fr: disperse, disperser, et-disperser | de: [ותפוצין], [פוצ], lass-sein-zerstreut Gen 11:4; Num 10:35; 1Sam 11:11; 1Sam 14:34; 2Sam 20:22

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Habakkuk 3:6 where the verb appears in Hitpolel/Hitpael and the meaning shifts from human dispersal to cosmic shattering — the ancient mountains 'were shattered' before God's theophanic march. Spanish se quebraron ('were broken') and English 'were shattered' both select destruction vocabulary rather than dispersal vocabulary, suggesting a metaphorical extension from scattering-apart to breaking-apart under divine power. A rare but vivid semantic frontier for the root. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-were-shattered | es: y-se-quebraron | fr: et-disperser | de: [ויתפצצו] Hab 3:6

מְפִיץ H6327b V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
scatterer, disperser (one who scatters or breaks up)
A Hebrew participle functioning as a noun, meaning 'scatterer' or 'disperser,' appearing in Nahum 2:1 (MT 2:2). The term describes an enemy advancing against Nineveh, one who will scatter or disperse the city's defenders. Some scholars suggest emending the text to read 'hammer' or 'club' instead, which would emphasize destructive violence rather than dispersion. The image fits Nahum's prophecy of Nineveh's violent downfall—an attacker comes who will break apart Assyria's seemingly invincible power.

(1×) Refers to an agent of scattering or dispersion, appearing in Nahum 2:1 to describe the enemy advancing against Nineveh. 'The scatterer' comes up against the Assyrian capital, threatening to break apart its defenses and disperse its forces. The term emphasizes the enemy's role in fragmenting and dispersing Nineveh's power. Some suggest reading 'hammer' instead, but multilingual evidence (Spanish dispersador, French disperser) supports the sense of one who scatters. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: a-scatterer | es: dispersador | fr: disperser | de: [מכין] Nah 2:1

פּוּץ H6327c V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (2×)
Flow, overflow, spread out (of springs and cities; Proverbs 5:16; Zechariah 1:17)
This verb describes flowing or overflowing, particularly of liquids spreading out. Proverbs 5:16 uses it figuratively of springs—asking whether one's fountains should flow outward to strangers, in a warning about marital fidelity. Zechariah 1:17 promises that God's cities will overflow with prosperity. The imagery is of abundance spilling beyond boundaries.

(2×) To flow outward, overflow with abundance, or spread beyond normal bounds. The Spanish glosses ('derramen,' 'esparcirán') and French 'disperser' capture both the liquid flow and the spreading motion. The verb appears in different conjugations (3rd person masculine and feminine plural) but maintains the core sense of outward movement from a source. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: should-be-dispersed, will-overflow | es: Se-derramen, se-esparcirán | fr: disperser | de: [יפוצו], [תפוצינה] Prov 5:16; Zech 1:17

פָּצַץ H6327d V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (2×)
Break, shatter, dash to pieces (Jeremiah 23:29; Job 16:12)
This verb means to break violently or shatter completely. Jeremiah 23:29 compares God's word to a hammer that shatters rock—powerful and unstoppable. Job 16:12 uses it dramatically as Job describes God dashing him to pieces in his suffering. The verb conveys sudden, violent fragmentation.

(2×) To smash, shatter, or break into pieces with force. The Spanish 'despedazó' (tore to pieces) and 'quebranta' (shatters) reflect the intensive Piel conjugation. Both biblical uses are metaphorical: God's word breaking through hardness, and God's discipline breaking the sufferer. The cross-linguistic evidence confirms the violent, fragmenting nature of the action. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-He-dashed-me-to-pieces, shattering | es: que-quebranta, y-me-despedazó | fr: [יפצץ], et-disperser-moi | de: [וירפצצני], [יפצץ] Job 16:12; Jer 23:29

פּוֹק H6328 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (2×)
Reel, totter, stagger (of drunken movement or idol instability; Isaiah 28:7; Jeremiah 10:4)
This verb describes unsteady, reeling motion—the staggering of drunk people or the wobbling of an unstable object. Isaiah 28:7 depicts drunken priests and prophets reeling in judgment, unable to stand steady. Jeremiah 10:4 describes how idols must be fastened down so they don't totter, mocking their powerlessness compared to the living God.

(2×) To totter, reel, or move unsteadily like a drunk person or unstable object. The Spanish 'titubearon' (they staggered) and 'se mueve' (it moves) capture both the human and inanimate applications. Both passages use this unsteady motion as a sign of weakness—moral/spiritual compromise in Isaiah, inherent powerlessness in Jeremiah. SHAKING AND TOTTERING en: it-moves, stumble | es: se-mueve, titubearon | fr: [יפיק], [פקו] | de: [יפיק], [פקו] Isa 28:7; Jer 10:4

הִפִיק H6329 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (7×)
Hiphil: to bring out, obtain, furnish; to provide or pour out for others; to promote or advance plans.
Used exclusively in the Hiphil, this verb centers on bringing something forth — whether favor, provision, or the advancement of plans. In Proverbs it appears repeatedly as a near-synonym of מָצָא ('to find'): the one who finds wisdom 'obtains' favor from the LORD (Prov 8:35; 18:22). Spanish 'obtiene' and French 'produire' both capture this drawing-forth of good. The supplying sense appears in Ps 144:13, where flocks 'provide' thousands, and Isa 58:10, where one 'pours out' sustenance for the hungry. A single striking use in Ps 140:8 turns the verb negative: 'do not promote his schemes' — Spanish 'hagas prosperar' revealing the sense of causing something to succeed.

1. obtain, bring forth (4×) Obtaining or bringing forth, especially divine favor — the most frequent Hiphil sense. Prov 8:35 and 18:22 pair יָפִיק with מָצָא ('find'), describing the one who finds a wife or wisdom as 'obtaining' (bringing forth) favor from YHWH. Prov 3:13 and 12:2 extend this to obtaining understanding and divine goodwill. Spanish 'obtiene/y-obtiene' and French 'produire' consistently render the idea of drawing out something valuable. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: and-obtains, obtains, who-obtains | es: obtiene, que-obtiene, y-obtiene | fr: et-produire, produire | de: [ויפק], [יפיק] Prov 3:13; Prov 8:35; Prov 12:2; Prov 18:22

2. furnish, provide, pour out (2×) Furnishing, providing, or pouring out for others — the causative sense of actively supplying. Ps 144:13 describes flocks 'providing' (מְפִיקִים) thousands upon thousands, and Isa 58:10 calls for pouring out one's soul for the hungry. Spanish 'proveyendo/Y-ofreces' and French 'de-produire' capture this generous outward flow of provision, extending the root's 'bring out' toward active beneficence. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: And-you-offer, providing | es: Y-ofreces, proveyendo | fr: [וחפק], de-produire | de: [וחפק], providing Ps 144:13; Isa 58:10

3. promote, advance (plans) (1×) Promoting, advancing, or causing plans to succeed — a single but distinctive use in Ps 140:8. The psalmist prays that God not 'promote' (תָּפֵק) the wicked man's schemes. Spanish 'hagas prosperar' ('cause to prosper') reveals the causative force clearly: this is not merely obtaining but actively furthering someone's designs. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS
en: promote | es: hagas-prosperar | fr: produire | de: promote Ps 140:8

פּוּקָה H6330 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)
stumbling, staggering, or qualm (of conscience or stability)
A rare Hebrew noun appearing in 1 Samuel 25:31, describing a potential 'stumbling block' or 'qualm of conscience' that David would avoid if he refrained from bloodshed. Abigail warns David that shedding Nabal's blood needlessly would become a 'stumbling' to him—either a moral obstacle or a source of remorse when he becomes king. The term derives from a root meaning 'to totter' or 'stagger,' and figuratively refers to something that causes one to stumble morally or emotionally.

(1×) Refers to a stumbling block or qualm of conscience that causes one to stagger morally. In 1 Samuel 25:31, Abigail warns David against creating 'stumbling' (puqah) by avenging himself with bloodshed—an act that would haunt him and prove an obstacle when he becomes king. The term derives from 'tottering' and captures both moral instability and the weight of regret. Spanish 'tropiezo' (stumbling) fits this figurative sense of a moral obstacle. STUMBLING BLOCKS
en: as-stumbling-block | es: por-tropiezo | fr: comme-trébuchant-block | de: wie-stumbling-block 1Sam 25:31

פָּרַר H6331 V-Hifil-Imperf-1cs (3×)
to break, frustrate, annul, make void (covenant, plan, or counsel)
This Hiphil verb means to shatter plans, nullify covenants, or frustrate purposes. It appears in contexts of broken treaties (God breaking covenant with those who break His), thwarted schemes (God frustrating the counsel of nations), and violated agreements (breaking faith). The verb carries legal and relational weight—not merely disrupting but formally annulling what was established. God is often the subject, breaking covenants with covenant-breakers or frustrating the designs of the wicked. The term implies authoritative dissolution of binding commitments or carefully laid plans.

(3×) Denotes breaking, frustrating, or making void—especially covenants, plans, or counsel. Psalm 33:10 declares God 'frustrates (מֵפֵר) the counsel of the nations.' Psalm 89:33 (verse 34 in Hebrew) promises God will not 'break (אַפְיר) my covenant,' using a metaplastic form. Ezekiel 17:19 condemns the king who 'broke (הֵפִיר) my covenant.' The verb appears frequently with covenant (בְּרִית), counsel (עֵצָה), or oath. The root suggests shattering or dissolution of what was established. Translations use 'break,' 'frustrate,' 'nullify,' 'make void.' Spanish 'frustró/quebrantó,' French 'briser,' capture both the relational breach and the effective nullification. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: I-will-remove, frustrates, he-broke | es: frustró, quebrantó, retiraré | fr: briser, le-briser | de: [הפיר], frustrates, ich-wird-remove Ps 33:10; Ps 89:33; Ezek 17:19

פּוּר H6332 Art / N-mp (8×)
Pur/Purim — a lot cast to determine fate; the festival commemorating Jewish deliverance in Esther, named from this practice of lot-casting.
Pur is a noun meaning 'lot,' likely borrowed from Akkadian puru (a stone used for lot-casting). In Esther 3:7, Haman casts the pur to determine the date for his planned destruction of the Jews, and the text itself glosses pur as haggoral, 'the lot.' The plural form Purim became the name of the joyous festival celebrating the reversal of Haman's plot (Esth 9:26-32). The book of Esther takes care to explain this foreign word to its Hebrew readers, suggesting the term was not native to Hebrew. English and Spanish both preserve the untranslated forms 'Pur' and 'Purim,' while German renders the underlying meaning as 'Los' (lot).

Pur/Purim (lot, festival of lots) (8×) A noun meaning 'lot' (for casting to determine outcomes), probably an Akkadian loanword (puru, a casting stone). Used exclusively in the book of Esther, where Haman casts the pur to select the date for his genocidal decree (Esth 3:7; 9:24). The narrator explicitly glosses it as haggoral ('the lot'), indicating the word needed explanation for Hebrew readers. The plural Purim became the name of the annual festival celebrating the Jews' deliverance (Esth 9:26, 28, 29, 31, 32). German renders the underlying concept as 'Los' while English, Spanish, and French preserve the transliterated forms 'Pur' and 'Purim,' treating the festival name as a proper noun. LOTS AND ALLOTMENT
en: Pur, Purim, the-Pur | es: Pur, Purim, el-Pur | fr: Pur, der-taureaux | de: Los, Purim, [הפרים] Esth 3:7; Esth 9:24; Esth 9:26; Esth 9:28

פּוּרָה H6333 N-fs (2×)
Winepress, the vessel where grapes are trodden to extract juice (Isaiah 63:3; Haggai 2:16)
This noun refers to a winepress, specifically the treading floor where grapes are crushed underfoot to release juice. Isaiah 63:3 uses it in vivid imagery of God treading the winepress alone in judgment. Haggai 2:16 mentions coming to the winepress expecting a certain yield, in the context of agricultural disappointment. The term is distinct from the larger vat (yeqeb) that collects the pressed juice.

(2×) The treading floor or press where grapes are crushed, part of the wine-making apparatus. Spanish 'lagar' and French 'pressoir' identify this agricultural installation precisely. In Isaiah, the winepress becomes a powerful metaphor for divine judgment, while Haggai uses it literally to discuss harvest yields and economic hardship under God's hand. WINEPRESS VAT
en: A-winepress, measures | es: Lagar, medidas | fr: [פורה], pressoir | de: [פורה] Isa 63:3; Hag 2:16

פּוּרָתָא H6334 N-proper-ms (1×)
Poratha (a personal name, one of Haman's sons)
A Persian personal name appearing in Esther 9:8, identifying one of Haman's ten sons killed by the Jews during the events of Purim. Poratha, along with his brothers, was executed after Haman's plot against the Jews was reversed. The Septuagint shows variant spellings, reflecting the difficulty of rendering Persian names into Hebrew and Greek. The name appears in the list of Haman's sons, all of whom perished in the reversal of fortune central to the Esther story.

(1×) The personal name 'Poratha' identifies one of Haman's ten sons killed in Esther 9:8 during the Jewish defense against their enemies. Poratha's death, along with his brothers', represents the complete overthrow of Haman's genocidal plot. The name is Persian in origin, and ancient versions show spelling variations as scribes attempted to render foreign names. His inclusion in the list emphasizes the thorough reversal of Haman's scheme. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Poratha | es: Porata | fr: [פורתא] | de: [פורתא] Esth 9:8

H6335 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (1×)
you frisk, you are skittish (second person plural verb)
A disputed verb form appearing in Jeremiah 50:11, where the prophet taunts Babylon's destroyers of Israel. The context involves celebratory frisking or skipping—possibly of cattle or young animals frolicking in gladness over Israel's plundering. The verb is rare and its exact meaning uncertain, but it conveys exuberant, perhaps irreverent, celebration. Some versions interpret it as 'you have grown fat' rather than 'you frisk,' but the imagery involves victors celebrating their conquest with animal-like abandon.

(1×) A verb describing frisking, skipping, or exuberant movement, used in Jeremiah 50:11 to taunt Babylon. The prophet addresses those who plundered Israel: 'you frisk' or act skittishly in celebration of conquest. The image may be of young cattle or calves gamboling playfully, expressing the victors' carefree joy. Spanish 'engordasteis' (you grew fat) reflects an alternate interpretation, but the context suggests celebratory movement rather than mere fattening. DOING AND MAKING

en: (you-frisk) | es: engordasteis | fr: [(תפרשו)] | de: [(תפרשו)] Jer 50:11

פּוּשׁ H6335a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2mp (3×)

to spring about, frisk, leap, prance (like young calves)

This rare verb describes exuberant leaping or frisking about, like calves gamboling in a pasture. Jeremiah uses it to rebuke Babylon's warriors who 'frisk like a heifer' in arrogant celebration. Habakkuk applies it to cavalry horses that 'prance' or 'spread out' as they charge. Malachi offers hope: the righteous will 'leap like calves released from the stall' when the sun of righteousness rises. The verb captures unrestrained, joyful movement—or, in Babylon's case, presumptuous celebration. Textual variants exist (ketiv/qere differences), but the sense of vigorous leaping remains consistent.

(3×) Describes spirited leaping, frisking, or prancing like young animals. Jeremiah 50:11 rebukes Babylon: 'you frisk (תָּכוּשׁוּ, Qere) like a heifer'—celebrating conquest presumptuously. Habakkuk 1:8 describes war horses: 'they prance (וּפָשׁוּ)'—though some delete this as dittography. Malachi 4:2 (3:20 in Hebrew) promises the righteous will 'leap (וּפְשַׁשְׁתֶּם) like calves from the stall,' expressing joy at liberation. The root may relate to springing or spreading out. Ketiv/qere variants exist but don't fundamentally change meaning. Translations reflect energetic movement: 'leap,' 'prance,' 'frisk,' Spanish 'saltaréis' (you will jump). LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: [ketiv:you-frisk], and-leap, and-prance | es: [kethiv], y-saltaréis, y-se-esparcen | fr: [[תפושי]], et-croître | de: [[תפרשי]], [ופשו], [ופשחם] Jer 50:11; Hab 1:8; Mal 4:2

פּוּשׁ H6335b V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be scattered, dispersed (Niphal passive form)

A Niphal perfect verb appearing in Nahum 3:18, describing the scattering of the Assyrian king's people. The prophet announces to Assyria's ruler that 'your people are scattered on the mountains' with none to gather them—an image of total disintegration and abandonment. The verb form is textually uncertain; many scholars suggest reading a more common root for 'scatter' (naphotsu from pûts). The image is of a leaderless, dispersed population, the ultimate sign of national collapse.

(1×) A passive verb meaning 'to be scattered' or 'dispersed,' used in Nahum 3:18 to describe the fate of Assyria's people. The prophet declares that the shepherds (leaders) slumber and the people are scattered across the mountains without anyone to gather them. Though textually uncertain (possibly emended from naphoshu to naphotsu), the sense is clear: complete dispersion and abandonment. Spanish 'dispersado' and French 'scattered' capture this image of a population broken apart and left leaderless. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: are-scattered | es: Dispersado | fr: son-âme | de: seine-Seele Nah 3:18

פּוּתִי H6336 Conj-w (1×)

the Puthite (gentilicic designation from Judah)

A Hebrew gentilicic designation appearing in 1 Chronicles 2:53, identifying a family group in Judah. 'The Puthites' were one of several clans descended from Kiriath-jearim, listed among Judah's subdivisions. Like other such designations in Chronicles' genealogies, this name preserved the identity of a Judahite family group, though the name's etymology and the family's specific history are unknown. The Septuagint shows textual variation in rendering this obscure clan name.

(1×) The gentilicic designation 'Puthite' (with the definite article) identifies a clan within Judah listed in 1 Chronicles 2:53. This family was descended from Kiriath-jearim's line and formed part of Judah's complex tribal structure. Like many such names in Chronicles, it preserved clan identity even when the family's specific history and location were no longer widely known. Ancient versions show spelling variation for this obscure designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Puthi | es: y-el-putita | fr: [והפותי] | de: [והפותי] 1Chr 2:53

פָּז H6337 N-ms (9×)

Fine gold, pure refined gold; a poetic term expressing supreme value and beauty in wisdom and devotional literature.

A distinctly poetic word (פָּז) for gold of the highest purity, used exclusively in elevated literary contexts. It appears in parallel with or alongside other gold terms like זָהָב and כֶּתֶם, always intensifying the sense of supreme worth. The psalmist declares God's ordinances more desirable than much fine gold (Ps 19:10), and the lover in Song of Songs describes the beloved's head as finest gold (Song 5:11). Wisdom personified announces that her fruit surpasses fine gold (Prov 8:19). Spanish distinguishes between 'oro fino' and 'oro puro,' both attempting to capture the superlative quality that פָּז conveys beyond ordinary gold.

fine gold, pure gold (9×) Refined, pure gold of the highest quality, used as a poetic and literary term to express supreme value and beauty. Distinguished from common זָהָב (gold) by its association with the most elevated comparisons: God's Torah is more precious than fine gold (Ps 19:10; 119:127), a royal crown is of fine gold (Ps 21:3), Wisdom's yield surpasses it (Prov 8:19), and the beloved's appearance is likened to it (Song 5:11, 15). Isaiah uses it alongside כֶּתֶם to describe the rarity of survivors after judgment (Isa 13:12). The Lamentations passage (4:2) poignantly compares Zion's precious children to fine gold now treated as earthen pots. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: against-fine-gold, and-more-than-fine-gold, and-than-fine-gold | es: en-oro-fino, oro-fino, oro-puro | fr: [בפז], [מפז], d'or-pur; | de: Feingold, [ומפז], [מפז] Job 28:17; Ps 19:10; Ps 21:3; Ps 119:127; Prov 8:19

פָּזַז H6338 V-Hofal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

refined, purified (Hophal participle describing pure gold)

A Hophal participle appearing in 1 Kings 10:18, describing 'refined gold' used in Solomon's great throne. The verb form indicates a passive process—the gold has been refined or purified, likely through fire, to achieve superior quality. The term emphasizes the throne's extraordinary value and craftsmanship. The parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 9:17 uses a different term ('pure'), and some lexical uncertainty exists, but the sense is clear: this is gold of the highest quality, thoroughly refined.

(1×) A Hophal participle meaning 'refined' or 'purified,' describing gold in 1 Kings 10:18. Solomon's magnificent throne was overlaid with 'refined gold'—gold that had undergone a purification process to remove impurities and achieve the highest quality. The term emphasizes the precious metal's purity and value. Though the root is lexically uncertain and the parallel text differs, the context clearly involves gold of superior refinement fitting for royal splendor. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: refined | es: refinado | fr: refined | de: refined 1Kgs 10:18

פָּזַז H6339 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

Show agility, leap nimbly (in dance or physical strength; Genesis 49:24; 2 Samuel 6:16)

This verb describes nimble, agile movement—leaping or dancing with quick energy. Genesis 49:24 uses it of Joseph's arms remaining 'agile' or 'nimble' despite attacks—showing resilience and strength. In 2 Samuel 6:16, David is seen leaping and dancing before the ark, an exuberant display of worship that scandalized Michal. The Piel stem suggests intensive, repeated movement.

(2×) To leap energetically, show agility, or dance with nimble movements. The Spanish 'saltando' (leaping) and 'se fortalecieron' (became strong) reflect the two contextual nuances—worship dance in Samuel, and resilient strength in Genesis. Both share the idea of supple, energetic, unrestrained movement that displays vitality. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8396 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-were-agile, leaping | es: saltando, y-se-fortalecieron | fr: et-étaient-agile, leaping | de: leaping, und-es-wurden-flink Gen 49:24; 2Sam 6:16

פָּזַר H6340 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (10×)

To scatter or disperse; used of God scattering enemies, bones, or frost, and of Israel being scattered like a lone sheep.
The verb פָּזַר describes the forceful scattering or dispersal of people, objects, or natural phenomena. In its active Piel form, it appears most strikingly with God as subject: He scatters the bones of the wicked (Ps 53:5), disperses His foes like chaff (Ps 89:10), and flings frost across the earth (Ps 147:16). Proverbs 11:24 applies it to generous giving – one who 'scatters' freely grows richer still. The passive forms paint a more poignant picture: Jeremiah calls Israel a 'scattered sheep' (Jer 50:17), and Ps 141:7 laments bones scattered at the mouth of Sheol. Spanish 'dispersar/esparcir' and German 'zerstreuen' consistently reflect both the violent and distributive aspects of the root.

1. scatter, disperse (active Piel) (7×) Active scattering in the Piel stem, emphasizing thorough or forceful dispersal. God is the primary subject: He scatters enemies (Ps 53:5; 89:10), spreads frost like ashes (Ps 147:16), and disperses nations (Joel 3:2). The intensive Piel underscores completeness – this is not accidental drifting but decisive action. Proverbs 11:24 extends the image to generous distribution of wealth. Spanish 'esparció/dispersó' and French 'disperser' confirm the active, transitive force. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-scattered, he-has-scattered, he-scatters | es: Esparció, dispersaron, dispersó | fr: [ותפזר], disperser, מפזר | de: [ותפזרי], [מפזר], [פזרן] Ps 53:5; Ps 89:10; Ps 112:9; Ps 147:16; Prov 11:24

2. be scattered, dispersed (passive) (3×) Passive scattering expressed through the Qal passive participle, Niphal, and Pual forms, portraying the state of having been dispersed. Jeremiah 50:17 uses the feminine participle שֶׂה פְּזוּרָה, 'a scattered sheep,' as a powerful image of exiled Israel driven from its fold. In Ps 141:7, bones lie scattered at Sheol's mouth. Esther 3:8 describes the Jews as 'scattered and dispersed' among the peoples. The multilingual evidence – Spanish 'dispersa/disperso,' German 'zerstreut' – consistently renders this as a resultant state rather than an ongoing action. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: are-scattered, scattered | es: dispersa, disperso, fueron-esparcidos | fr: [מפזר], [פזורה], disperser | de: [מפזר], [פזורה], sind-zerstreut Esth 3:8; Ps 141:7; Jer 50:17

פַּח H6341a N-msc (25×)

bird-trap, snare — a catching device used literally and figuratively for plots, calamity, and judgment Pach is a concrete noun denoting a bird-trap or snare — the spring-loaded device that clamps shut when triggered — appearing 25 times with the literal meaning largely eclipsed by its figurative force. Only three passages describe an actual hunting device: Amos 3:5 ('does a bird fall into a trap on the ground when there is no snare for it?'), Proverbs 7:23 (the youth going to the adulteress 'as a bird rushes into a snare'), and Ecclesiastes 9:12 ('like birds caught in a snare'). Everywhere else, pach serves as a powerful metaphor for hidden danger: the psalmist's enemies 'have hidden a trap for me' (Ps 140:5; 142:3), Hosea warns that the prophet is a 'fowler's snare' on all his ways (Hos 9:8), and the repeated Isaiah-Jeremiah refrain 'terror and pit and snare' (pachad waphachat waphach, Isa 24:17-18 = Jer 48:43-44) exploits alliterative wordplay. Joshua warns that remaining Canaanite nations will become 'a snare and a trap' to Israel (Josh 23:13). The imagery always evokes sudden, inescapable entrapment. Spanish 'trampa/lazo,' French 'piege,' and German 'Falle' all map to the trapping concept.

snare, trap (25×) A spring-trap or snare for catching birds, used literally in wisdom literature (Amos 3:5; Prov 7:23; Eccl 9:12) and overwhelmingly as a figure for hidden dangers, plots, and inescapable judgment. The psalmist's enemies lay a pach in secret (Ps 140:5; 142:3; 119:110), Joshua warns that the nations will become a snare (Josh 23:13), and the famous alliterative triad pachad-pachat-pach ('dread, pit, and snare') in Isa 24:17 = Jer 48:43 underscores the inescapability of divine judgment. Often paralleled with moqesh ('lure') and reshet ('net'). French 'piege' and Spanish 'trampa' capture both literal and figurative registers. SNARES AND TRAPS
en: a-snare, a-snare-of, a-trap | es: de-trampa-de, en-el-lazo, en-la-trampa | fr: dans-le-piège, de-piège, et-piège | de: Falle, [בפח], [ופח] Josh 23:13; Job 18:9; Job 22:10; Ps 11:6; Ps 69:22

פַּח H6341b N-mp (2×)

Metal plates, thin sheets of hammered gold or bronze (Exodus 39:3; Numbers 16:38)
This noun refers to thin plates of hammered metal, used in sacred craftsmanship. Exodus 39:3 describes beating out gold plates for the priestly garments. Numbers 16:38 mentions the bronze censers of Korah's rebels being hammered into plates to cover the altar—a memorial of their judgment. These plates were created by beating metal into thin, flat sheets.

(2×) Thin sheets or plates of metal (gold or bronze) created by hammering. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'láminas,' 'batidas'; French 'plates') confirms the metallurgical meaning. Both biblical uses involve sacred objects: priestly garments and altar covering. The technology of beating metal into thin plates was essential for tabernacle/temple construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: plates, plates-of | es: batidas, láminas-de | fr: plates, plates-de | de: plates, plates-von Exod 39:3; Num 16:38

פָּחַד H6342 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (25×)

To dread, be in terror, tremble with fear; also reverential awe; Hifil: to cause trembling.
A verb that reaches from gut-level terror to holy reverence. At its core, pachad describes the visceral, body-shaking dread that overwhelms a person facing danger or divine power. Job's haunting confession — 'the thing I dreaded has come upon me' (Job 3:25) — captures its most primal register. Yet in Psalm 119:161, the same root describes the psalmist's heart standing in awe before God's word, showing how biblical Hebrew uses a single root to span the spectrum from paralyzing fear to worshipful trembling. The Piel intensifies this into chronic, sustained dread (Isa 51:13).

1. Qal: to dread, be afraid (16×) The standard Qal sense of fearing, dreading, or being afraid — a broad-spectrum fear directed at threats, enemies, or uncertain futures. Deuteronomy 28:66-67 pairs it with cognate accusative ('you shall dread with dread') to describe the terror of covenant curse. Job 3:25 and 23:15 show deeply personal dread. Spanish 'temerás/temeré' and German 'erschrecken' both reflect the directional, object-oriented nature of this fear. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: Are-terrified, I-dreaded, I-will-fear | es: temerás, temeré, temieron | fr: et-terreur, et-trembler, et-tu-dread | de: [ואפחד], [ופחדו], [פחדתי] Deut 28:66; Deut 28:67; Job 3:25; Job 23:15; Ps 14:5

2. Qal: to tremble, be terrified (5×) An intensified Qal usage emphasizing the somatic dimension — physical trembling, shaking, heart-pounding terror. Isaiah 44:8, 11 uses it rhetorically ('do not tremble!') to contrast Israel's fear with God's sovereignty. In Micah 7:17, nations 'come trembling' from their strongholds. The overlap with sense 1 is real, but the bodily emphasis distinguishes this cluster. French 'trembler' consistently renders this physical register. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: and-will-tremble, dread, shall-I-be-afraid | es: teman, temblaré, temerán | fr: et-terreur, trembler | de: [יפחדו], erschrecken, soll-ich-sein-afraid Ps 27:1; Isa 44:8; Isa 44:11; Isa 60:5; Mic 7:17

3. Piel: to be in great fear (2×) The Piel stem intensifies fear into a sustained, habitual state of dread. Proverbs 28:14 uses it positively — 'blessed is the one who is always in dread' — meaning the person who maintains a constant posture of reverent caution. Isaiah 51:13 uses it negatively of chronic terror before an oppressor. German 'von Schrecken' captures the overwhelming quality of this intensified fear. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-you-fear, who-fears | es: que-siempre-teme, y-temiste | fr: et-trembler, trembler | de: und-erschrecken, von-Schrecken Prov 28:14; Isa 51:13

4. Qal: to stand in awe (1×) A reverential sense where dread shades into holy awe. In Psalm 119:161, princes persecute the psalmist, yet his heart 'stands in awe' (pachad) of God's words — not fear of punishment, but trembling wonder before divine speech. This sense bridges the gap between terror and worship, showing how the same root can serve both. The single attestation suggests this is a contextual coloring rather than a fully distinct lexical sense. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: is-in-awe | es: tembló | fr: trembler | de: ist-in-Ehrfurcht Ps 119:161

5. Hifil: to cause to tremble (1×) The Hifil causative: to make someone tremble, to terrify. Job 4:14 describes Eliphaz's nocturnal vision — 'dread came upon me... which made all my bones tremble.' The causative construction places the agency on the fearful experience itself (or a divine agent behind it), rather than on the person trembling. This is the only Hifil occurrence, but it completes the verbal paradigm logically. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: it-made-to-tremble | es: hizo-temblar | fr: trembler | de: [הפחיד] Job 4:14

פַּחַד H6343 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (49×)

Dread, terror, fear; a sudden calamity; the object of dread or divine epithet ('the Fear of Isaac')

Pachad names fear at its most visceral — the trembling dread that grips body and soul. It describes the terror of the nations before Israel (Deut 2:25; 11:25), the shuddering that seizes Job in the night (Job 4:14), and the awe that falls on peoples when God acts (Exod 15:16). In Proverbs, the word shifts from emotion to event: 'sudden calamity' is what befalls the mocker (Prov 1:26–27; 3:25). Most remarkably, in Genesis 31:42 and 53, Jacob swears by 'the Pachad of Isaac' — the Dread One, God himself as the awesome Being his father revered. Spanish 'temor/terror' and German 'Schrecken' consistently mirror the intensity.

1. dread, terror, fear (43×) The subjective emotion of dread, terror, or fear — the dominant sense across 43 occurrences. Paired with yir'ah and mora' (Deut 2:25; 11:25), it names trembling that overwhelms enemies before God or Israel. Job feels it grip his bones (Job 4:14), and the psalmist's flesh trembles for dread of God (Ps 119:120). Spanish 'temor/terror' and German 'Schrecken' carry this weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Terror, a-dread, dread | es: Temor, Terror, temor | fr: [פחד], terreur | de: Schrecken, ein-Schrecken, fürchten-von Exod 15:16; Deut 2:25; Deut 11:25; Deut 28:67; 1Sam 11:7

2. sudden calamity, disaster (4×) A concrete event of sudden calamity or disaster — the dreaded thing itself, not merely the emotion. Proverbs warns that 'your dread' will come like a storm (Prov 1:27; 3:25), and Job asks whether anyone is free from sudden terrors (Job 15:21; 21:9). Spanish 'de temor' and German 'von Schrecken' mark the shift from feeling to event. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-dread, from-the-dread-of, of-sudden | es: de-temor, sin-temor, sin-temor-de | fr: de-terreur, terreur | de: [פחדים], von-Schrecken Job 15:21; Job 21:9; Prov 1:33; Prov 3:25

3. object of dread, Fear (divine epithet) (2×) That which is feared — a divine epithet used uniquely of God as 'the Fear of Isaac' (Gen 31:42, 53). Jacob invokes not an emotion but a Person: the awesome Being whom his father revered and by whose dread authority covenants are sealed. Spanish 'temor-de' and French 'Crainte-de' preserve the construct-chain that signals this is a title, not an abstraction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Fear-of, by-Fear-of | es: por-temor-de, y-temor-de | fr: et-Crainte-de, par-Crainte-de | de: beim-Schrecken, und-der-Schrecken Gen 31:42; Gen 31:53

פַּחַד H6344 N-mdc / 3ms (2×)

Thigh, the upper leg (Job 40:17, describing Behemoth's powerful thighs)

This noun means thigh, specifically the muscular upper leg. It appears only in Job's description of Behemoth, where 'the sinews of his thighs' illustrates the creature's massive strength. The word is a loan from Arabic and appears with textual variants—the Ketiv (written text) has singular 'his thigh,' while the Qere (read text) has dual 'his thighs.'

(2×) The thigh or upper leg, emphasizing muscular strength. BDB notes this is likely borrowed from Arabic fakhdh through Aramaic. The Spanish glosses distinguish Ketiv (singular 'su muslo') from Qere (dual 'sus muslos'), showing careful attention to textual tradition. The single biblical use focuses on raw physical power—appropriate for describing the mysterious Behemoth. DELIGHT PLEASURE

en: [its-thighs], its-thighs | es: (Q:sus-muslos), [K:su-muslo] | fr: son-(פחדיו)-lui, son-[פחדו]-lui | de: [(פחדיו)], [[פחדו]] Job 40:17

פַּחְדִּי H6345 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

my fear, my dread, or reverence of me (with first person suffix)

A Hebrew noun with first-person suffix appearing in Jeremiah 2:19, meaning 'fear of me' or 'my dread.' God speaks through Jeremiah, declaring that Israel's apostasy and evil will discipline them, adding 'no dread of me is in you.' The term refers to reverent fear or awe—the proper religious attitude toward God that Israel has abandoned. The construct combines a noun for 'dread' or 'awe' with a first-person suffix, emphasizing the personal relationship that has been violated.

(1×) Refers to 'fear of me' or 'dread of me' (God speaking) in Jeremiah 2:19. The prophet declares that Israel's wickedness stems from lacking proper reverence: 'no dread of me is in you.' The term denotes religious awe or reverence—the appropriate response to God's holiness that Israel has lost through apostasy. Spanish 'mi temor' (my fear) and the construct with first-person suffix emphasize this as a relational failure: they no longer fear the covenant God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-fear | es: mi-temor | fr: [פחדתי] | de: [פחדתי] Jer 2:19

פַּחָה H6346 N-mpc / 3fs (28×)

Governor, provincial prefect; an appointed administrator over a district, from Assyrian through Persian periods.

Borrowed from Akkadian bel pahati ('lord of a province'), this loanword designates an appointed provincial governor throughout the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian periods of biblical history. It describes Assyrian military commanders (2 Kgs 18:24), Babylonian provincial officials (Jer 51:23, 28, 57; Ezek 23:6, 12, 23), and Persian-era governors such as Zerubbabel (Hag 1:1; 2:21), Nehemiah (Neh 5:14), and Tattenai (Ezra 5:3). Malachi 1:8 uses it to rebuke Israel for offering God gifts they would not dare present to their own governor – a vivid measure of the office's authority.

governor, provincial prefect (28×) A governor or provincial prefect appointed over a district, used across the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian periods. The Akkadian loanword (from bel pahati, 'lord of a province') enters Hebrew to describe foreign military officials (2 Kgs 18:24; Ezek 23:6, 12), Babylonian administrators (Jer 51:23, 28, 57), and Persian governors including Zerubbabel (Hag 1:1), Nehemiah (Neh 5:14), and Tattenai (Ezra 5:3). Malachi 1:8 memorably invokes the pehah to shame Israel: 'Present it to your governor – will he accept you?' Spanish 'gobernador' and German 'Statthalter' both capture the administrative authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-governors, governor-of, governor-of- | es: Y-los-gobernadores, el-gobernador, gobernador-de | fr: [פחות], [פחותיה], et-gouverneur | de: Statthalter, Statthalter-von, [והפחות] 1Kgs 10:15; 1Kgs 20:24; 2Kgs 18:24; 2Chr 9:14; Ezra 8:36

פַּחָה H6347 N-ms (10×)

Governor; an appointed provincial official under Persian or Babylonian imperial authority.

An Aramaic loanword from Akkadian (and ultimately Old Persian) designating a governor or provincial administrator appointed by an imperial power. In the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel, the word refers to officials who governed provinces on behalf of the Persian or Babylonian king. The term appears alongside other ranks of officialdom in Daniel 3:2–3, where satraps, governors, and counselors are summoned together. German 'Statthalter' (viceroy, governor) captures the administrative sense precisely, while Spanish 'gobernador' and French 'gouverneur' reflect the same political meaning.

governor, provincial official (10×) An imperial governor or provincial official, a title of Babylonian-Persian administrative origin (Aramaic פַּחָה). Used in Ezra for officials governing the Trans-Euphrates province (Ezra 5:3, 6; 6:6–7, 13) and for the custodian of temple treasures (Ezra 5:14), and in Daniel for provincial governors assembled before royal authority (Dan 3:2–3, 27; 6:8). The multilingual evidence — German 'Statthalter,' Spanish 'gobernador,' French 'gouverneur' — uniformly points to a single administrative role under imperial appointment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-governors, and-the-governors, governor | es: el-gobernador-de, gobernador, gobernador-de | fr: [פחה], [פחת], et-gouverneur | de: Statthalter, und-Statthalter Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:6; Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:6; Ezra 6:7

פָּחַז H6348 Conj-w | V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (2×)
Reckless, wanton, extravagant (of dangerous or immoral persons; Judges 9:4; Zephaniah 3:4)
This adjective describes reckless, wanton, or irresponsible behavior and people. Judges 9:4 calls Abimelech's mercenary followers 'reckless and worthless men'—dangerous opportunists. Zephaniah 3:4 condemns Jerusalem's prophets as 'reckless men of treachery,' spiritually irresponsible leaders. The word suggests haughty carelessness and moral instability.

(2×) Reckless, wanton, or dangerously irresponsible in character or action. Spanish 'temerarios' (reckless ones) and French 'léger' (light, frivolous) capture the moral carelessness. Both biblical uses characterize people as morally unreliable—Abimelech's hired thugs and false prophets. The participial form suggests an ongoing characteristic, not a momentary lapse. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY en: and-reckless, are-reckless | es: temerarios, y-temerarios | fr: devenir-léger, et-reckless | de: [פחזים], und-reckless Judg 9:4; Zeph 3:4

פַּחַז H6349 N-ms (1×)
unstable, reckless, or wanton (describing uncontrolled behavior)
A Hebrew noun appearing in Genesis 49:4, describing Reuben's character in Jacob's deathbed oracle. Reuben is called 'unstable as water'—the Hebrew noun conveys wantonness, recklessness, or unbridled license. The term is abstract for concrete, describing someone whose behavior is as uncontrolled as boiling or overflowing water. This characterization explains why Reuben, though Jacob's firstborn, forfeited his birthright privileges due to his reckless act of defiling his father's concubine.

(1×) A noun meaning 'wantonness,' 'recklessness,' or 'unbridled license,' used in Genesis 49:4 to characterize Reuben. Jacob declares 'unstable as water' (pachaz kamayim), using this term to describe Reuben's lack of self-control. The word captures reckless, impulsive behavior without proper restraint. Spanish 'inestable' (unstable) and German 'überschäumend' (overflowing/effervescent) reflect the imagery of uncontrolled, turbulent behavior that cost Reuben his birthright. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8313 WITH 3 SENSES en: unstable | es: Inestable | fr: unstable | de: überschäumend Gen 49:4

פַּחֲזוּת H6350 Conj-w (1×)
recklessness, boastfulness (of false prophets)
A Hebrew noun appearing in Jeremiah 23:32, where God condemns false prophets who lead people astray 'by their recklessness' or 'boastfulness.' The term describes irresponsible, extravagant behavior—prophets who speak presumptuously without divine commission. Related to the root describing wantonness or unbridled behavior, this noun captures the dangerous combination of reckless confidence and false authority that characterizes pseudo-prophets who mislead God's people with unauthorized messages.

(1×) Refers to the recklessness or boastful presumption of false prophets in Jeremiah 23:32. God declares he did not send these prophets, yet they lead the people astray 'by their recklessness'—speaking confidently without divine authority. The term emphasizes irresponsible presumption and extravagant claims. Spanish 'jactancia' (boasting) captures the element of proud, unfounded confidence that makes these prophets dangerous rather than merely mistaken. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: and-by-their-recklessness | es: y-con-jactancia-de-ellos | fr: [ובכחזותם] | de: [ובפחזותם] Jer 23:32

פָּחַח H6351 V-Hifil-InfAbs (1×)
trapped, ensnared (Hiphil infinitive absolute describing entrapment)
A Hiphil infinitive absolute appearing in Isaiah 42:22, describing how Israel has been trapped or ensnared. The form derives from a verb meaning 'to ensnare,' and here it describes the people as 'trapped in holes' and 'imprisoned in dungeons.' The grammatical form (infinitive absolute) emphasizes the totality or intensity of the action—they are thoroughly ensnared. The imagery conveys Israel's helpless captivity, caught like animals in traps with no one to rescue them.

(1×) An infinitive absolute meaning 'trapped' or 'ensnared,' used in Isaiah 42:22 to describe Israel's captivity. The text declares that God's people have been 'trapped' (hapheach) in holes and hidden in prisons, plundered with no deliverer. The denominative verb derives from 'trap' or 'snare,' and the infinitive absolute form intensifies the sense: they are thoroughly, completely ensnared. Spanish and German glosses ('atrapados') capture this image of being caught like animals in traps. SNARES AND TRAPS en: trapped | es: atrapados | fr: [הכח] | de: [הכח] Isa 42:22

פֶּחָם H6352 Prep-b (3×)
charcoal, burning coals (for fire or metalworking)
This term denotes charcoal or burning coals, the fuel that sustains fire. Proverbs uses it in a proverb about quarrelsome people: 'As charcoal to embers and wood to fire, so is a contentious person to kindle strife.' Isaiah mentions it twice in contexts of metalworking and divine judgment—the blacksmith works over charcoal, and God creates the smith who blows the charcoal fire. The word emphasizes glowing, heat-producing coals rather than mere ash. Some suggest Psalm 11:6 should be emended to read 'coals of fire' rather than 'snares.'

(3×) Refers to charcoal or glowing coals used to sustain fire, particularly in metalworking or as fuel. Proverbs 26:21 states 'charcoal (פֶּחָם) to embers and wood to fire'—charcoal provides intense, lasting heat for embers. Isaiah 44:12 describes the metalworker who 'works in the coals' (בַּפֶּחָם), shaping iron in the heat. Isaiah 54:16 declares God created 'the smith who blows the fire of coals (אֲנִי בָּרָאתִי חָרָשׁ נֹפֵחַ פֶּחָם)' to forge weapons. The term indicates burning, heat-producing coals rather than dead ash. Translations: 'charcoal,' 'coals,' Spanish 'carbón/carbones,' French 'charbon.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: charcoal, coals, in-the-coals | es: Carbón, carbones, en-carbón | fr: [בפחם], [פחם], פחם | de: [בפחם], [פחם] Prov 26:21; Isa 44:12; Isa 54:16

פַּחָר H6353 N-ms (1×)
potter (Aramaic loanword for one who works with clay)
An Aramaic noun appearing in Daniel 2:41, referring to a potter—one who works with clay. The word is a loanword, likely from Assyrian, reflecting the linguistic environment of the Aramaic portions of Daniel. In Nebuchadnezzar's dream, the image has feet partly of iron and partly of 'potter's clay,' representing a divided kingdom. The term situates Daniel's text in its Babylonian context, where Aramaic was the lingua franca and vocabulary crossed linguistic boundaries.

(1×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'potter,' one who works with clay, appearing in Daniel 2:41. The term is a loanword (likely from Assyrian paḫâru) used in the Aramaic section of Daniel. In the context of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, 'potter's clay' symbolizes the fragile, divided nature of a future kingdom—clay mixed with iron that won't cohere. Multilingual glosses (Spanish alfarero, French potier) preserve this artisan designation, connecting the symbolic vision to concrete material reality. POTTER AND FORMING

en: potter | es: alfarero | fr: potier | de: [פחר] Dan 2:41

פַּחַת H6354 N-ms (10×)

Pit; a hole in the ground, used literally and figuratively for calamity and entrapment.

A masculine noun meaning a pit or hole dug in the earth. It appears in narrative contexts where bodies are thrown into a pit (2 Sam 18:17) and where fugitives hide in pits (2 Sam 17:9). Its most famous usage comes in the alliterative triad 'terror, pit, and snare' (pachad, pachat, pach) in Isaiah 24:17–18 and Jeremiah 48:43–44, where the pit represents inescapable divine judgment. Lamentations 3:47 echoes the same trio. The Spanish glosses oscillate between 'hoyo' (hole), 'fosa' (pit), and 'cuevas' (caves), showing the range from literal excavation to metaphorical doom.

pit, snare, trap (10×) A pit or hole in the ground, used concretely for a physical excavation (2 Sam 17:9; 18:17) and figuratively for inescapable calamity. The word is best known from the alliterative prophetic formula pachad-pachat-pach ('dread, pit, and trap') in Isa 24:17–18, Jer 48:43–44, and Lam 3:47, where fleeing one danger only plunges the victim into the next. Spanish glosses range from 'hoyo' to 'fosa' to 'cuevas,' and French offers both 'fosse' and 'piege' (snare), reflecting the dual literal-figurative usage across all ten occurrences. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: a-pit, and-pit, of-the-pit | es: el-hoyo, la-fosa, las-cuevas | fr: et-piège, le-fosse, le-pits | de: [הפחת], [ופחת], [פחת] 2Sam 17:9; 2Sam 18:17; Isa 24:17; Isa 24:18

פַּחַת מוֹאָב H6355 N-proper-ms (12×)

Pahath-Moab — compound proper name ('governor of Moab') for a large post-exilic Judean clan in returnee lists

Pahath-Moab (פַּחַת מוֹאָב) is a compound proper name meaning 'governor of Moab,' designating a prominent post-exilic Judean clan or its ancestral head. The name likely preserves the memory of a pre-exilic official who once served as governor over Moab during Judah's period of Transjordanian influence. The Pahath-Moab clan was one of the largest groups to return from Babylon: 2,812 members in Zerubbabel's return (Ezra 2:6; Neh 7:11) and additional members under Ezra (Ezra 8:4). Some of its men were among those who had married foreign wives and agreed to send them away (Ezra 10:30). Hashub son of Pahath-Moab helped repair the Jerusalem wall and the Tower of the Ovens (Neh 3:11), and the clan sealed the covenant renewal (Neh 10:14).

Pahath-Moab (proper name, clan leader) (12×) Compound proper name meaning 'governor of Moab,' designating a large post-exilic Judean clan. Returned from Babylon with 2,812 members (Ezra 2:6; Neh 7:11), sent additional members with Ezra (Ezra 8:4), participated in foreign-wife reform (Ezra 10:30), and helped repair Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:11). Sealed the covenant renewal (Neh 10:14). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Moab, Moav, Pachat | es: Moab, Moav, Pahat- | fr: Pahath-Moab | de: Moab, Statthalter Ezra 2:6; Ezra 8:4; Ezra 10:30

פְּחֶתֶת H6356 N-fs (1×)

Decay or corrosion that eats through fabric; leprous deterioration in textiles

This rare Hebrew term appears only in the priestly regulations concerning leprosy in fabrics (Leviticus 13:55). It describes a destructive process—a boring or eating through of material that renders a garment ritually unclean. The word captures the consuming nature of the decay, as if something is actively devouring the fibers. The multilingual evidence (corrosion, corroding) emphasizes the penetrative, destructive aspect rather than simple surface contamination.

(1×) Refers specifically to the leprous decay that eats through woven or knitted fabric, described in Leviticus 13:55 as part of the priestly examination of contaminated garments. The term emphasizes the penetrating, corrosive quality of the deterioration—not merely surface discoloration but active consumption of the material itself. The consistent translation as 'corroding' across European languages highlights this eating-through quality. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: corroding | es: corrosión | fr: corroding | de: corroding Lev 13:55

פִּטְדָה H6357 N-fsc (4×)

topaz; a yellow or golden precious stone, possibly chrysolite, highly valued in antiquity

A precious gemstone, traditionally identified as topaz (possibly chrysolite or yellow/golden sapphire), highly valued in the biblical world. Exodus 28:17 and 39:10 list it as the second stone in the high priest's breastplate's first row—part of the sacred vestments representing the tribes of Israel. Job compares wisdom's value to precious stones, declaring that even 'the topaz of Cush' cannot equal it (28:19)—Cush (Ethiopia) being famous for gems. Ezekiel includes topaz among the precious stones adorning the king of Tyre in Eden (28:13). The stone's yellow or golden color and rarity made it treasured for sacred and royal ornamentation.

(4×) Topaz or chrysolite, a yellow-golden precious stone of great value. Exodus 28:17 and 39:10 place it in the high priest's breastplate as the second stone. Job 28:19 uses 'topaz of Cush' as an example of extreme preciousness, yet inferior to wisdom. Ezekiel 28:13 lists it among the gems in the Eden imagery. All contexts emphasize rarity, beauty, and value for sacred or royal use. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: topaz, topaz-of- | es: topacio, topacio-de- | fr: ouverture, topaze, פטדה | de: Topas, [פטדה], [פטדה] Exod 28:17; Exod 39:10; Job 28:19; Ezek 28:13

פָּטַר H6358 Conj-w | V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mpc (4×)

open flowers, carved blossoms; decorative floral carvings in Solomon's temple woodwork

A term for carved open flowers or blossoms—decorative elements in Solomon's temple's interior woodwork. First Kings 6 describes the temple's cedar panels carved with gourds and 'open flowers' (verses 18, 29, 32, 35), creating an ornamental pattern resembling a garden paradise. The temple's interior thus evoked Eden through carved vegetation—no stone was visible, only wood decorated with botanical motifs. The 'open flowers' suggest blossoms in full bloom, perhaps representing life, beauty, and the flourishing of God's creation. This decoration transformed the temple into a sacred garden, a meeting place where heaven and earth intersected through symbolic vegetation.

(4×) Carved open flowers or blossoms decorating the temple's woodwork. All four occurrences (1 Kgs 6:18, 29, 32, 35) describe the cedar panels and doors carved with gourds and open flowers. The repetition emphasizes the pervasive floral ornamentation creating an Eden-like atmosphere—the temple as paradise where God dwells among symbolic blooms representing life and divine blessing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-open-flowers-of | es: y-aberturas-de | fr: et-ouvre-flowers-de | de: und-oeffne-flowers-von 1Kgs 6:18; 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 6:35

פָּטַר H6359 N-mp (1×)

Set free, exempt from duties; those released from regular obligations (Ketiv variant)

This form appears in 1 Chronicles 9:33 in a Ketiv reading, describing Levitical singers who were exempt from other temple duties. The root meaning involves separation or removal—setting someone free from obligations. The singers were 'set apart' in a double sense: consecrated for their musical ministry, yet released from the routine work that occupied other Levites. The Spanish 'libres' (free) captures this sense of exemption well.

(1×) Describes Levitical temple musicians who were released from other duties, found in 1 Chronicles 9:33 (Ketiv reading). These individuals were functionally 'free' or exempt because their musical ministry required full-time dedication. The term comes from a root meaning to separate or set free, and here indicates a special class status—freed from normal Levitical obligations to focus on sacred song day and night. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv] | es: [libres] | fr: [פטירים] | de: [פטירים] 1Chr 9:33

פַּטִּישׁ H6360 Conj-w (3×)
hammer, forge-hammer (used by metalworkers)
This term denotes a heavy hammer, particularly the forge-hammer used by metalworkers. Isaiah uses it for the smith's hammer that shapes metal on the anvil. Jeremiah employs it metaphorically in two powerful images: God's word is like a hammer shattering rock, and Babylon itself was 'the hammer of the whole earth'—now broken. The word likely derives from or connects to Aramaic, possibly describing the striking action or the tool itself. It evokes power, force, and the transforming (or destroying) impact of repeated blows.

(3×) A heavy hammer, especially the forge-hammer used by metalworkers to shape hot metal. Isaiah 41:7 describes the craftsman encouraging the smith, mentioning 'the one striking with the hammer' (הַמַּחֲלִיק עִם־פַּטִּישׁ). Jeremiah 23:29 asks rhetorically: 'Is not my word like fire...and like a hammer (וּכְפַטִּישׁ) that breaks the rock in pieces?'—emphasizing God's word's power. Jeremiah 50:23 laments: 'How is the hammer of the whole earth (פַּטִּישׁ כָּל־הָאָרֶץ) cut down and broken!'—Babylon as God's instrument, now destroyed. Translations: 'hammer,' Spanish 'martillo,' French 'marteau.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11984 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-like-a-hammer, the-hammer-of, the-one-striking | es: con-martillo, martillo-de, ¿Y-como-martillo | fr: [וכפטיש], [פטיש] | de: [וכפטיש], [פטיש] Isa 41:7; Jer 23:29; Jer 50:23

פְּטַשׁ H6361 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)
Tunic or leggings, a garment (Daniel 3:21, worn by the three young men in the furnace)
This noun refers to a type of garment, possibly tunics or leggings. It appears only in Daniel 3:21, listing what Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego wore when thrown into Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. The exact meaning is uncertain—some suggest tunics, others leggings or trousers. The text has both Ketiv and Qere readings with slight spelling variations.

(2×) A garment of uncertain type, possibly tunics or leg coverings. The Spanish 'pantalones' (trousers) and French 'vêtement' (garment) show interpretive variation. The Aramaic word appears only in this dramatic narrative context, where the detail emphasizes that the men were thrown fully clothed into the furnace, yet emerged without even the smell of smoke on their garments. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: (qere:their-tunics), [ketiv:their-tunics] | es: (sus-pantalones), [sus-pantalones] | fr: vêtement | de: [פטישהון], [פטשיהון] Dan 3:21

פָּטַר H6362 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (5×)
to separate, set free, release, dismiss; also to escape or slip away
A verb whose core meaning of separation branches into several vivid applications. David 'slipped away' from Saul's spear (1 Sam 19:10), certain Levites were 'set free' from other duties to devote themselves to music (1 Chr 9:33), and Jehoiada did not 'dismiss' the outgoing priestly divisions during the coup against Athaliah (2 Chr 23:8). In Prov 17:14, whoever 'lets loose' a quarrel is like breaching a dam. The enigmatic Ps 22:7 uses the passive participle in a context of scorn and rejection. Spanish ranges from 'libres' (free) to 'suelta' (release), while French 'glissa au loin' captures the escape sense.

(5×) To slip away or escape — intransitive separation from danger or a pursuer. In 1 Sam 19:10, David dodges Saul's spear and 'slipped away,' evading death. French 'il glissa au loin' (he slipped far away) vividly captures the motion of narrow escape. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-he-slipped-away, dismissed, free | es: (libres), El-que-suelta, abren | fr: [פטורים], [פטר], et-il-glissa-au-loin | de: [פוטר], [פטורים], [פטר] 1Sam 19:10; 1Chr 9:33; 2Chr 23:8; Ps 22:7; Prov 17:14

פֶּטֶר H6363a Conj-w / N-msc (11×)
That which opens the womb — the firstborn, whether of humans or animals, consecrated to the LORD.
Always appearing in the construct phrase peter rechem ('opener of the womb'), this noun designates the firstborn child or animal that first breaks open its mother's womb. The concept is central to Israelite consecration law: because God struck the firstborn of Egypt, every peter rechem in Israel — human and animal alike — belongs to the LORD (Ex 13:2, 12-15). The term appears in apposition with bekhor ('firstborn') in Exodus 13:2 and Numbers 3:12, showing that 'opener of the womb' and 'firstborn' are functionally synonymous, though peter emphasizes the physical act of parturition while bekhor emphasizes birth-order status.

1. opener of (7×) Opener of (the womb) — the literal construct expression peter rechem, emphasizing the physical act of first opening the mother's womb. Exodus 13:2 commands: 'Consecrate to me every firstborn, every opener of the womb among the Israelites.' The emphasis falls on the biological event of parturition rather than on lineage or rank. Spanish 'abridor de' and English 'opener of' preserve this concrete, physical nuance. Seven occurrences use this more literal formulation, including the key legislative texts in Exodus 13:12-13. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: opener-of, opener-of- | es: abridor-de, primogénito-de, que-abre | fr: opener-de, opener-de-, ouverture | de: [פטר], opener-von, opener-von- Exod 13:2; Exod 13:12; Exod 13:13; Exod 13:15

2. firstborn of (4×) Firstborn of — the same construct phrase rendered with emphasis on the consecrated status of the child or animal rather than the physical act. In Exodus 34:19-20 and Numbers 18:15, the term functions as a near-synonym for bekhor ('firstborn'), focusing on the offspring's identity and its claim by God. Spanish 'primogénito de,' French 'premier-né de,' and German 'Erstgeborener von' all render it as a kinship/status term. The four occurrences in this sense cluster in later legislative restatements of the firstborn law. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-firstborn-of, firstborn-of | es: Y-primogénito-de, primogénito-de | fr: et-premier-né-de, premier-né-de | de: Erstgeborener-von, und-Erstgeborener-von Exod 34:19; Exod 34:20; Num 18:15

פִּטְרָה H6363b N-fsc (1×)
That which opens; the firstborn as opener of the womb
Used in the construct form in Numbers 8:16, this term designates the firstborn as 'opener of the womb.' It's part of the theological rationale for consecrating the Levites—they serve as substitutes for all Israel's firstborn, who belonged to God as the ones who first opened their mothers' wombs. The concept ties biological primacy (being first) to covenantal obligation. The multilingual translations preserve the opener/opening imagery, emphasizing the act of breaking through, inaugurating life.

(1×) Refers to the firstborn as 'opener of the womb' in Numbers 8:16, where God claims every firstborn Israelite as His own because they were the first to open their mothers' wombs. This construct form emphasizes the act of opening or breaking through, connecting biological firstness with sacred obligation. The Levites are given to God as substitutes for these firstborn 'openers,' a key element in Israel's cultic system. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: opener-of | es: abridor-de | fr: opener-de | de: opener-von Num 8:16

פִּי־בֶסֶת H6364 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Pi-beseth: Egyptian city sacred to the goddess Bastet, near modern Zagazig

This Egyptian place name appears in Ezekiel 30:17 in a judgment oracle against Egypt. The city's name derives from Per-Bastet, 'House of Bastet,' referring to the feline goddess worshiped there. Greek sources knew it as Bubastis. Located about 30 miles northeast of Cairo (modern Tell Basta near Zagazig), it was a significant religious center. Herodotus describes its grand festival. Ezekiel prophesies that its young men will fall by the sword—Egypt's sacred places would offer no protection from divine judgment.

(1×) An Egyptian city mentioned in Ezekiel 30:17, known in Greek as Bubastis and located near modern Zagazig. The name means 'House of Bastet,' the cat-headed goddess who was the city's patron deity. Ezekiel includes it in his prophecy of Egypt's coming destruction under Babylon, where even cities sacred to Egyptian gods would not escape judgment. The site was famous in antiquity for its temple and festivals honoring Bastet. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Pi-beseth | es: y-Pi-beset | fr: et-Pi-Béseth | de: [ופיבסת] Ezek 30:17

פִּיד H6365 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

ruin, disaster, calamity, destruction

This noun captures catastrophic ruin or disaster, particularly sudden calamity that overtakes a person. Job uses it three times to explore responses to others' misfortune and his own suffering. Job 30:24 questions whether one cries out in their own ruin. Job 31:29 protests that he never rejoiced at his enemy's disaster. Proverbs 24:22 warns that calamity from both God and king will arise suddenly against rebels. The term emphasizes the devastating, often unexpected nature of downfall—whether as deserved judgment or undeserved suffering that tests moral character.

(3×) Denotes ruin, disaster, or catastrophic calamity. Job 30:24 asks: 'does not one in a heap of ruins (בְּעִי) stretch out his hand, or in his disaster (בְּפִידוֹ) cry for help?' Job 31:29 protests innocence: 'Have I rejoiced at the ruin of (בְּפִיד) my enemy?' Proverbs 24:22 warns: 'for their calamity (פִּידָם) will rise suddenly'—referring to disaster from God and king against rebels. The noun emphasizes sudden, overwhelming destruction. One proposal in Job 21:20 suggests emending כִּידוֹ to פִּידוֹ. Translations use 'ruin,' 'disaster,' 'calamity,' 'destruction'; Spanish 'ruina,' 'destrucción.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-ruin-of, at-the-ruin-of, in-his-destruction | es: en-ruina-de-, en-su-destrucción, y-la-ruina-de | fr: dans-son-בפידו-lui, dans-בפיד, et-ופיד | de: [בפיד], [בפידו], [ופיד] Job 30:24; Job 31:29; Prov 24:22

פְּדֶר H6366 N-mp (1×)

Edges or pieces of fat from sacrificial animals; suet portions in offerings

This term occurs in Judges 3:16, though BDB connects it with a different root found in Leviticus describing portions of sacrificial fat. The word refers to the pieces or edges of the fat-rich parts of sacrificial animals, particularly the suet that was burned as offerings. In the Levitical system, specific fatty portions belonged to God and were consumed on the altar. The 'edges' or pieces terminology suggests the cutting and arrangement of these choice portions during the sacrificial ritual.

(1×) Designates the fatty portions or pieces of sacrificial animals mentioned in Levitical offerings (Judges 3:16 context, though primarily a Levitical term). These were the choice pieces of suet—the hard fat around organs—that were arranged on the altar as God's portion. The term 'edges' or 'pieces' suggests how these fatty sections were cut and separated from the meat, representing the richest parts given wholly to the Lord in burnt offerings. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: edges | es: filos | fr: edges | de: edges Judg 3:16

פִּי הַחִירֹת H6367 N-proper-fs (4×)

Pi-hahiroth; location on Egypt's eastern border where Israel camped before crossing the Red Sea

A place name marking Israel's final encampment in Egypt before the Red Sea crossing. Exodus 14:2 and 14:9 position Pi-hahiroth between Migdol and the sea, opposite Baal-zephon—where Pharaoh's army overtook Israel. Numbers 33:7-8 records the journey stages: camping at Pi-hahiroth and then departing from there to pass through the sea. The name possibly means 'mouth of the canals' or relates to marshes near Egypt's eastern frontier. The LXX transliterations vary (he epaulis, Epi/Epiroth), suggesting uncertain Greek rendering of the Egyptian-influenced name. The site's exact location remains unknown, though it marked the geographical boundary between bondage and deliverance.

(4×) Place name for Israel's encampment site on Egypt's eastern border before the Red Sea crossing. Exodus 14:2, 9 locate it between Migdol and the sea, opposite Baal-zephon. Numbers 33:7-8 document it in the Exodus itinerary. The four occurrences mark this as the crucial staging point for the sea miracle—Israel's last position in Egyptian territory before divine deliverance through the waters. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pi-hahiroth, the-Hahiroth | es: Hahirot, Pi-Hahirot, Pi-Hajirot | fr: Pi-hahiroth, le-Hahiroth | de: Pi-hahiroth, der-Hahiroth Exod 14:2; Exod 14:9; Num 33:7; Num 33:8

פִּיחַ H6368 N-msc (2×)

Soot, fine ash from a furnace (Exodus 9:8, 10, used in the plague of boils)

This noun means soot or fine ash, specifically from a kiln or furnace. It appears in the sixth plague narrative: Moses and Aaron take handfuls of furnace soot and Moses tosses it skyward, causing boils to break out on Egyptians and their animals. The soot becomes the physical agent through which God's judgment spreads across Egypt.

(2×) Fine ash or soot from a furnace or kiln, used in the construct phrase 'soot of the furnace.' The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'hollín,' English 'soot') identify this substance clearly. Both Exodus references describe the same plague event, showing how this common industrial byproduct became the instrument of divine plague—a reminder that God can use ordinary materials for extraordinary purposes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: soot-of | es: hollín-de | fr: soot-de | de: soot-von Exod 9:8; Exod 9:10

פִּיכֹל H6369 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Phicol, commander of Abimelech's army

Phicol was the military commander serving under Abimelech, king of Gerar, during Abraham's and Isaac's time. He appears at crucial diplomatic moments: accompanying Abimelech when making a covenant with Abraham at Beersheba (Genesis 21:22, 32), and again when Abimelech and Ahuzzath approach Isaac (Genesis 26:26). His consistent presence as Abimelech's military chief suggests a trusted advisor role in international relations. The name appears to be non-Semitic, possibly Philistine or Aegean, fitting the Philistine context of Gerar. His role underscores the seriousness of these treaty negotiations.

(3×) Personal name of the army commander serving Abimelech king of Gerar. Genesis 21:22 introduces 'Abimelech and Phicol (פִּיכֹל) the commander of his army' approaching Abraham for a treaty. Verse 32 notes they 'returned to the land of the Philistines' after the covenant at Beersheba. Genesis 26:26 shows 'Abimelech...and Phicol his army commander' coming to Isaac, suggesting either the same person decades later, a dynastic title, or a successor with the same name. His military role gave weight to diplomatic missions. The name likely reflects Philistine origins. Translations preserve: 'Phicol,' Spanish 'Pikhol/Ficol.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Phicol | es: y-Pikhol | fr: et-Phicol | de: und-Pichol Gen 21:22; Gen 21:32; Gen 26:26

פִּלֶגֶשׁ H6370 N-fpc / 2ms (37×)

concubine — a secondary wife of lower legal status, present in patriarchal, Levitical, and royal households Pilegesh is a feminine noun denoting a concubine, a woman cohabiting with a man in a recognized but legally subordinate marital arrangement. The word itself is likely a loanword — possibly from Greek pallake or Hittite origins — reflecting the international character of this institution. Its 37 occurrences span the patriarchal narratives, where concubines bore legitimate heirs (Keturah as Abraham's pilegesh in Gen 25:6; Bilhah as Jacob's in Gen 35:22), the disturbing Judges cycle (the Levite's concubine in Judg 19-20, whose abuse triggers an intertribal war), and the royal harem (David's ten concubines, 2 Sam 5:13; 15:16; 16:21-22; 20:3; Solomon's 300 concubines, 1 Kgs 11:3). In 2 Samuel, Absalom's public appropriation of David's concubines signals a political claim to the throne (16:21-22), while Rizpah the concubine of Saul guards her sons' exposed bodies with fierce maternal devotion (2 Sam 21:11).

concubine, secondary wife (37×) A secondary wife of inferior legal standing, distinguished from a full wife ('ishah) by reduced inheritance and divorce rights for her children. The institution appears without moral commentary in patriarchal narratives (Gen 22:24; 25:6; 35:22; 36:12), where concubines' sons receive gifts but not the primary inheritance. In the monarchic period, pilagshim become a marker of royal power and a political flashpoint: appropriating a king's concubine constitutes a claim to his throne (2 Sam 3:7; 16:21-22). The Levite's concubine narrative (Judg 19-20) uses her vulnerability to expose societal breakdown. Spanish 'concubina,' French 'concubine,' and the German glosses preserve the Latin-derived term, while the Hebrew word's non-Semitic origin (possibly Hittite or Greek pallake) reflects the international antiquity of the institution. WOMAN AND WIFE
en: a-concubine, and-his-concubine, concubine | es: Concubina-de, Y-su-concubina, a-su-concubina | fr: concubine, concubines, et-son-concubine | de: [פילגש], [פילגשים], [פלגש] Gen 22:24; Gen 25:6; Gen 35:22; Gen 36:12; Judg 8:31

פִּימָה H6371 N-fs (1×)
Superabundance of fat; excessive bodily fatness as a metaphor for complacency Appearing only in Job 15:27, this word describes excessive accumulation of fat—not the sacrificial kind, but the repulsive abundance that speaks of indulgence and moral complacency. Eliphaz uses it to paint a picture of the wicked person who has 'covered his face with his fat and gathered fat upon his loins.' The image suggests self-satisfied prosperity that blinds one to spiritual reality. It's about fatness as a moral condition—the superabundance that comes from self-indulgence rather than God's blessing.

(1×) Describes excessive bodily fat in Job 15:27, used by Eliphaz to characterize the wicked person who has grown complacent through prosperity. The term appears in parallel with 'his fat,' emphasizing not healthy abundance but superabundance—the gross accumulation that comes from self-indulgence. The image of covering one's face with fatness suggests being blinded by material comfort, losing moral and spiritual perception in the process. FAT AND RICHNESS
en: fat | es: gordura | fr: פימה | de: [פימה] Job 15:27

פִּינְחָס H6372 N-proper-ms (25×)
Phinehas — grandson of Aaron zealous for God's honor; also a corrupt son of Eli the priest Pinchas (Phinehas) is a proper name of Egyptian origin (possibly meaning 'the Nubian' or 'dark-skinned one') borne by two contrasting priestly figures. The primary bearer is the grandson of Aaron through Eleazar, who became the paradigm of priestly zeal when he drove a spear through the Israelite man and Midianite woman in the Baal-Peor crisis, turning away God's wrath and earning a covenant of perpetual priesthood (Num 25:7-13). This Phinehas served as a priestly envoy to the Transjordanian tribes (Josh 22:13-32) and presided at Bethel during the Benjamite war (Judg 20:28). The second bearer is a son of Eli at Shiloh, whose corruption with his brother Hophni provoked the fall of the sanctuary and the capture of the ark — his wife's dying cry 'Ichabod' upon hearing the news marks one of the most haunting scenes in Samuel (1 Sam 4:19-22). The Septuagint renders the name Phinees. Spanish 'Finees' and German 'Pinechas' preserve the name with minor variation.

Phinehas (proper name) (25×) A proper name of Egyptian derivation applied to at least two distinct priestly figures. Principally, Aaron's grandson through Eleazar, celebrated for his decisive intervention at Baal-Peor that halted a plague and secured an eternal covenant of priesthood (Num 25:7-13; Ps 106:30). He appears as envoy to the eastern tribes (Josh 22:13), priest at Bethel (Judg 20:28), and ancestor of Ezra (Ezra 7:5; 8:2). The second Phinehas is a son of Eli at Shiloh whose priestly malfeasance contributed to the ark's capture and the end of the Shiloh sanctuary (1 Sam 1:3; 2:34; 4:4-19). LXX Phinees; Spanish 'Finees,' French 'Phineas.' PERSONAL NAMES
en: Phinehas, Pinchas, Pinechas | es: Finees, Pinejas, Pinjas | fr: Phinehas, Phinéas, Phinées | de: Pinechas, Pinhas, [פינחס] Exod 6:25; Num 25:7; Num 25:11; Num 31:6; Josh 22:13

פִּינֹן H6373 N-proper-ms (2×)
Pinon, an Edomite chief (Genesis 36:41; 1 Chronicles 1:52)
Pinon was a clan chief or territorial leader in Edom, listed among the chiefs descended from Esau. The name appears in parallel genealogies in Genesis and Chronicles. BDB suggests it may be connected to the place name Punon, a mining region in Edomite territory.

(2×) A personal name borne by an Edomite tribal chief. The cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration (Spanish 'Pinon,' French 'Pinon') across traditions, with the Septuagint rendering it as Phines, Phinon, or Phina. The parallel listings in Genesis and Chronicles confirm this as an established name in Edomite tribal structure. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Pinon | es: Pinon | fr: Pinon, [פינן] | de: Pinon, [פינן] Gen 36:41; 1Chr 1:52

פִּפְיֹת H6374 N-fp (2×)
Two-edged or threshing sledge (Psalm 149:6; Isaiah 41:15, describing sharp instruments)
This term appears to have different meanings in its two occurrences. Psalm 149:6 likely refers to a two-edged sword in the hands of the godly. Isaiah 41:15 describes a new, sharp threshing sledge with teeth —an agricultural implement God promises to make of Israel. The BDB excerpt discusses 'suet' (animal fat), but the gloss evidence points to sharp instruments.

(2×) A sharp, two-edged instrument—either a double-edged sword or a multi-toothed threshing implement. Spanish 'dos filos' (two edges) and French 'tranchant' (cutting edge) emphasize sharpness. The glosses show semantic range from weapon (Psalms) to agricultural tool (Isaiah), though both contexts emphasize effectiveness through sharp edges. Note: significant mismatch with BDB's 'suet' definition. FAT AND RICHNESS
en: two-edged, you-shall-thresh | es: de-dientes, dos-filos | fr: [פיפיות], tranchant | de: [פיפיות], two-edged Ps 149:6; Isa 41:15

פִּיק H6375 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
Tottering, shaking; the trembling of knees in terror or weakness
This vivid term appears in Nahum 2:10 (or 2:11 in some versifications) in a prophecy of Nineveh's fall. The phrase 'tottering of knees' captures the physical manifestation of terror—legs that can no longer hold steady. It's part of a cascade of images: melting hearts, knocking knees, anguish in every body, faces drained of color. The word conveys that involuntary shaking when fear grips the body so thoroughly that even basic functions like standing become difficult. Nineveh's warriors, once terrifying, would themselves become paralyzed with dread.

(1×) Describes the trembling or tottering of knees in Nahum 2:10, part of the prophet's vivid depiction of terror overtaking Nineveh's inhabitants during the city's fall. The term captures involuntary shaking—knees that fail to support the body when extreme fear seizes a person. Used alongside images of melting hearts and pale faces, it portrays the complete physical breakdown that accompanies overwhelming dread, reducing mighty warriors to trembling invalids. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-tottering-of | es: y-temblor-de | fr: et-trébucher | de: [וּפָק] Nah 2:10

פִּישׁוֹן H6376 N-proper-fs (1×)

Pishon: one of the four rivers flowing from Eden in Genesis 2

The Pishon is named as the first of four rivers branching from the river that watered Eden (Genesis 2:11). It reportedly wound through the land of Havilah, where gold, bdellium, and onyx were found. The river's identification remains uncertain—theories have ranged from Persian Gulf waterways to African rivers to purely symbolic geography. What's clear is that it represented abundance and blessing, flowing from God's garden into lands rich with precious resources. The name itself may relate to a root meaning 'to spring forth' or 'flow,' fitting for a river bearing Eden's life-giving water to the world.

(1×) One of the four rivers flowing from Eden in Genesis 2:11, described as winding through Havilah, a land of gold, aromatic resin, and precious stones. Though its exact location is debated, the Pishon represents the outward flow of Eden's blessing—life-giving water reaching beyond the garden to enrich distant lands. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to spring forth,' capturing the river's role as a channel of divine abundance from Paradise to the wider world. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pishon | es: Pisón | fr: Pishon | de: Pischon Gen 2:11

פִּיתוֹן H6377 N-proper-ms (2×)

Pithon, a descendant of King Saul (1 Chronicles 8:35; 9:41)

Pithon was a member of the Benjamite lineage of King Saul, appearing in genealogical lists in Chronicles. The name appears with slight spelling variation (Pithon in 8:35, Piton in 9:41) in parallel passages tracing Saul's family line. The Septuagint renders it as Phithon or Phaithoń.

(2×) A personal name in Saul's genealogy, appearing in parallel Chronicles lists. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'Pitón') show consistent transliteration despite the Hebrew spelling variants between the two Chronicles passages. This genealogical detail preserves the memory of Saul's extended family line, important for understanding Benjamite tribal heritage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Piton | es: Pitón | fr: [פיתון] | de: [פיתון] 1Chr 8:35; 1Chr 9:41

פַּךְ H6378 N-msc (3×)

flask, small jar or vial (especially for oil)

This term refers to a small flask or vial, particularly for holding anointing oil. It appears in two pivotal anointing scenes: Samuel anointing Saul as Israel's first king, and Elisha's servant anointing Jehu as king over Israel. In both cases, the prophet takes 'a flask of oil' and pours it on the new king's head to consecrate him. The flask's small size suited its sacred purpose—containing just enough precious oil for the ritual. This vessel represents divine selection and authorization, the physical means by which prophetic word becomes enacted reality.

(3×) A small container or flask for oil, used specifically in royal anointing ceremonies. 1 Samuel 10:1 describes Samuel taking 'a flask of oil' (פַּךְ הַשֶּׁמֶן) and pouring it on Saul's head to anoint him king. 2 Kings 9:1 has Elisha instructing his servant to 'take this flask of oil' (פַּךְ הַשֶּׁמֶן הַזֶּה) to anoint Jehu, and verse 3 directs him to 'pour the oil on his head.' The vessel's modest size held sufficient oil for the sacred ritual. The construct 'flask of oil' appears in all three instances. Translations: 'flask,' 'vial,' 'jar'; Spanish 'frasco,' French 'flacon.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flask-of, flask-of- | es: frasco-de | fr: flask-de, flask-de- | de: flask-von, flask-von- 1Sam 10:1; 2Kgs 9:1; 2Kgs 9:3

פָּכָה H6379 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

Trickling, flowing gently; water seeping or flowing out gradually

This Piel participle appears in Ezekiel 47:2, describing water trickling from the south side of the temple threshold in the prophet's vision. The term emphasizes gentle, gradual flow—not a torrent but a steady seeping. This trickling becomes the river of life that grows deeper and wider as it flows east, eventually bringing healing to the Dead Sea. The choice of a word for gentle flowing (rather than gushing or pouring) heightens the miraculous nature of the vision: even a trickle from God's presence becomes a life-transforming flood.

(1×) Describes water trickling or flowing gently from the southern threshold of the temple in Ezekiel 47:2. The Piel participle emphasizes a steady, gentle seepage rather than a powerful gush—water that begins as a mere trickle from under the temple. This modest beginning makes the vision's development more striking, as this trickling water grows into a mighty river bringing life and healing wherever it flows, transforming even the Dead Sea. FLOWING WATER

en: trickling | es: brotando | fr: couler | de: [מְפַכִּים] Ezek 47:2

פְּכֶרֶת הַצְּבָיִם H6380 N-proper-ms (4×)

Pochereth-hazzebaim; ancestral name meaning 'binder of gazelles,' head of a post-exilic family

A compound personal name meaning 'binder (or catcher) of the gazelles,' designating the head of a post-exilic family group. The name appears in the lists of Solomon's servants' descendants who returned from Babylonian exile. Ezra 2:57 and Nehemiah 7:59 both record 'sons of Pochereth-hazzebaim' among the returning temple servants. The name's first element (Pochereth) is Aramaic, suggesting a feminine form denoting an office or occupation, while 'hazzebaim' means 'the gazelles.' This may indicate an ancestral occupation—professional hunters or catchers of gazelles—or a symbolic/metaphorical designation. The LXX struggles with the name, offering varied transliterations that split or combine the elements differently.

(4×) Ancestral name of a post-exilic family, meaning 'binder/catcher of gazelles.' Ezra 2:57 (twice) and Nehemiah 7:59 (twice) list 'sons of Pochereth-hazzebaim' among returning temple servants. The compound name (Aramaic + Hebrew) suggests occupational or symbolic origins, possibly indicating ancestors who hunted or trapped gazelles. The parallel texts (Ezra and Nehemiah) confirm the family's inclusion in the restoration community. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pochereth, Pokheret, ha-Tsevayim | es: Pocaret, Poqueret-, de-Sebaim | fr: [הצביים], [ככרת] | de: [הצביים], [פכרת] Ezra 2:57; Neh 7:59

פָּלָא H6381 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (71×)

To be surpassing or extraordinary; God's wonders; to do wondrously; too difficult; to make a special vow

Rooted in the idea of something surpassing normal experience, this verb covers a wide arc from awe to impossibility. Its most frequent use is the Nifal feminine plural participle nifla'ot, 'wonders,' referring to God's extraordinary acts in creation and redemption (Exod 3:20; Ps 136). Yet the same root describes what is 'too difficult' for human capacity (Gen 18:14; Jer 32:17), revealing that wonder and impossibility are two faces of one Hebrew concept. In cultic contexts it narrows to making or fulfilling an extraordinary vow (Lev 27:2; Num 6:2). Arabic distinguishes ajiba ('wonder') from sauba ('difficulty'), showing that Hebrew uniquely fuses these ideas under one root.

1. wonders, marvelous deeds (44×) The dominant usage: Nifal participle nifla'ot as a substantive noun for God's wonders, marvelous deeds of salvation, creation, and judgment. Arabic aja'ib and Korean gisajeok ('miraculous') both denote wonders but through unrelated roots. These 44 occurrences form the heart of Israel's praise vocabulary, from the Exodus (Exod 3:20) to the Psalter's hymns (Ps 77:11, 1 Chr 16:9). WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: and-His-wonders, and-his-wonders, wonders | es: maravillas, tus-maravillas, y-maravillas-de-el | fr: et-être-merveilleux, merveille, prodiges | de: Wunder, dein-Wunder, und-sein-Wunder Exod 3:20; Exod 34:10; Josh 3:5; Judg 6:13; 1Chr 16:9

2. do wondrously, make wonderful (9×) Hifil causative: to do wondrously or make something wonderful, with God or an agent actively producing extraordinary results. Arabic a'jaba ('to cause wonder') parallels the causative morphology. The angel acts 'wondrously' at Manoah's altar (Judg 13:19), and God 'makes wonderful' his steadfast love for David (Ps 31:21). Nine occurrences capture divine initiative in wonder-working. WONDERS AND MARVELS
en: He-has-made-wonderful, He-makes-wonderful, and-doing-wondrously | es: Y-hará-maravillosas, ha-hecho-maravillosa, hace-maravilloso | fr: [הפליא], [והפלא], et-doing-wondrously | de: [הפלא], [הפליא], [והפלא] Deut 28:59; Judg 13:19; 2Chr 2:9; 2Chr 26:15; Ps 31:21

3. be marvelous, be wonderful (6×) Nifal stative or finite forms expressing that something is marvelous, wonderful, or surpassing in quality. David's lament that Jonathan's love was 'wonderful, surpassing the love of women' (2 Sam 1:26) and the psalmist's 'this is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes' (Ps 118:23) exemplify this sense. Korean nollaun ('amazing') and Arabic ajibah ('wonderful') confirm the adjectival weight. WONDERS AND MARVELS
en: are-too-wonderful, is-wonderful, it-is-marvelous | es: es-maravilloso, maravillosa, maravillosas | fr: merveille, merveilleux, être-merveilleux | de: ist-wunderbar, wonderful, wunderbar 2Sam 1:26; Ps 118:23; Ps 139:14; Prov 30:18; Zech 8:6

4. be too difficult, be beyond capacity (6×) The sense of being beyond human capacity: too difficult, too extraordinary to accomplish or understand. When God asks Abraham 'Is anything too hard for the Lord?' (Gen 18:14), the same root that names wonders now names impossibility. Arabic sa'b ('difficult') requires an entirely different lexeme, whereas Hebrew uses pala' for both poles. Jeremiah 32:17 and Deuteronomy 30:11 reinforce this theological paradox. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-it-was-difficult, is-too-difficult, too-difficult | es: acaso-será-maravilloso, es-demasiado-difícil, es-difícil | fr: aussi-difficult, est-aussi-difficult, et-cela-fut-difficult | de: [יפלא], auch-difficult, ist-auch-difficult Gen 18:14; Deut 17:8; Deut 30:11; 2Sam 13:2; Jer 32:17

5. fulfill a special vow (3×) Piel intensive infinitive construct in cultic contexts: to fulfill or accomplish a special vow already undertaken. Arabic li-ifa'i ('to fulfill') and li-itmami ('to complete') employ separate roots. The three occurrences (Lev 22:21; Num 15:3, 8) all concern bringing offerings to discharge an extraordinary vow, completing what was set apart. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: to-fulfill, to-fulfill- | es: para-cumplir, para-cumplir- | fr: à-accomplir, à-accomplir- | de: zu-erfuellen, zu-erfuellen- Lev 22:21; Num 15:3; Num 15:8

6. make an extraordinary vow (2×) Hifil forms in vow-initiation contexts: to make an extraordinary vow, to set apart a votive commitment as something surpassing the ordinary. Leviticus 27:2 and Numbers 6:2 use this for the moment of consecration, when a person dedicates themselves or property to God. Arabic yandhiru ('to vow') is a distinct root, underscoring that Hebrew connects vowing to the realm of the extraordinary. BINDING BY VOW
en: makes-extraordinary | es: haga-extraordinario, hiciere-especial | fr: fait-un-extraordinaire | de: macht-extraordinary Lev 27:2; Num 6:2

7. (1×) A singular occurrence in Job 10:16 where God 'shows himself marvelous' against Job, a Hithpael-like reflexive usage conveying that God displays his extraordinary power in an adversarial context. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'show yourself wonderful,' capturing Job's anguished sense that divine power is turned against him. WONDERS AND MARVELS en: You-show-Yourself-marvelous- | es: a-mostrarte-maravilloso | fr: être-merveilleux | de: wunderbar Job 10:16

פֶּלֶא H6382 N-msc / 2ms (13×)

Wonder, marvel; something extraordinary and awe-inspiring, especially God's miraculous acts.

The noun pele denotes something extraordinary that surpasses human understanding — a wonder or marvel, nearly always attributed to God. At the Red Sea, Moses sang of YHWH 'doing wonders' (Exod 15:11). The psalmists meditate on God's pele in both creation and redemption (Ps 77:11, 14; 78:12; 88:10; 89:5). In Isaiah 9:5 (English 9:6), the messianic child receives the throne name 'Wonderful Counselor' (pele yo'etz), where the wonder-quality belongs to the royal figure himself. Lamentations 1:9 uses the plural adverbially — Jerusalem 'came down wonderfully' — expressing the shocking, almost incomprehensible nature of her fall. Spanish 'Maravilloso' preserves the sense of awe.

wonder, marvel (13×) Something extraordinary and beyond ordinary comprehension — a wonder, marvel, or miracle — used overwhelmingly of God's acts and attributes. Applied to YHWH's redemptive deeds at the Exodus (Exod 15:11 'doing wonders'), to his mighty works recalled in worship (Ps 77:11, 14; 78:12), and to the incomprehensibility of his faithfulness (Ps 88:10; 89:5). Isaiah 9:5 applies the term to the messianic king as 'Wonderful Counselor.' The testimonies of God's law are themselves 'wonders' (Ps 119:129). In Lamentations 1:9 the plural functions adverbially to describe Jerusalem's astonishing, incomprehensible descent into ruin. WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: Wonderful, Your-wonders, a-wonder | es: Maravilloso, Maravillosos, asombrosamente | fr: et-prodige, merveille, merveilles | de: Wunder, [הפלאות], [ופלא] Exod 15:11; Ps 77:11; Ps 77:14; Ps 78:12; Ps 88:10

פְּלִאִי H6383 Adj-fs (3×)

wonderful, incomprehensible, beyond understanding

This adjective describes what transcends human comprehension—the wonderful, the mysterious, the incomprehensible. It appears in two striking contexts: the angel's self-designation in Judges 13:18 (ketiv) and the psalmist's amazement at God's knowledge in Psalm 139:6. When Manoah asks the angel's name, he responds that it is 'wonderful'—too extraordinary to be uttered. The psalm declares God's knowledge 'too wonderful for me, too lofty to attain'—acknowledging the vast gap between human and divine understanding. Textual variants (ketiv/qere) exist, but both point to transcendent mystery.

(3×) Describes what is wonderful, incomprehensible, or beyond human capacity to grasp. Judges 13:18 has the angel respond to Manoah's question about his name: 'Why do you ask my name? It is wonderful (פִּלְאִי, ketiv)'—too mysterious to reveal. The qere reads פֶּלִי, but both indicate something extraordinary. Psalm 139:6 exclaims about God's omniscience: 'Such knowledge is too wonderful (פְּלִאָיָה, ketiv) for me, too lofty to attain'—beyond human comprehension. The qere reads פְּלִיאָה. Both forms derive from the root for wonders. Translations: 'wonderful,' 'incomprehensible,' 'beyond understanding'; Spanish 'maravilloso,' French 'merveilleux.' WONDERS AND MARVELS en: (wonderful), [ketiv:wonderful], wonderful | es: Maravilloso, [maravilloso], maravilloso | fr: merveilleux, wonderful | de: (wonderful), [ketiv:wonderful], wonderful Judg 13:18; Ps 139:6

פַּלֻּאִי H6384 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Palluites: descendants of Pallu, a clan within the tribe of Reuben

This gentile adjective appears in Numbers 26:5 in the census of Israel's clans. The Palluites were descendants of Pallu, one of Reuben's four sons. As Reuben was Jacob's firstborn, these clans traced their lineage back to Israel's earliest generations. The census context emphasizes tribal identity and inheritance rights—each clan's count mattered for land distribution in Canaan. The use of the article ('the Palluites') treats them as a recognized, defined community within Israel's larger tribal structure.

(1×) A clan designation in Numbers 26:5 for descendants of Pallu, son of Reuben. Used with the definite article ('the Palluites'), it identifies a recognized family group within Reuben's tribe during the wilderness census. This census determined not just military strength but also inheritance portions in the promised land, so clan identity carried legal and territorial significance. The Palluites represent one of the family lineages preserving Reuben's heritage as Israel's firstborn tribe. PERSONAL NAMES en: the-Palluite | es: los-faluitas | fr: le-Palluite | de: der-Palluite Num 26:5

פָּלַג H6385 V-Piel-Imp-ms (4×)
to divide, split; to separate into parts, cleave a channel, or create division
A verb meaning to divide, split, or separate into parts. Genesis 10:25 and 1 Chronicles 1:19 explain Peleg's name: 'in his days the earth was divided'—possibly referring to the division of languages at Babel or geographical dispersion of peoples. Job 38:25 asks who 'has cleft a channel for the rain,' describing God's providential ordering of storm waters. Psalm 55:9 calls on God to 'divide their speech'—confuse the counsels of enemies, perhaps alluding to Babel. The verb captures both physical splitting (channels, land) and conceptual division (languages, peoples, plans). The fundamental sense is separation into distinct parts.

(4×) To divide or split, whether physically or conceptually. Genesis 10:25 and 1 Chronicles 1:19 use the Niphal: 'the earth was divided' in Peleg's time (linguistic/ethnic dispersion). Job 38:25 describes God cleaving channels for rainwater (physical). Psalm 55:9 calls for dividing (confusing) enemies' speech (conceptual). The verb spans from geographic/hydraulic division to linguistic confusion, unified by the concept of separation into parts. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: divide, has-cleft, was-divided | es: cavó, divide, fue-dividida | fr: [נפלגה], diviser, était-divisa | de: [נפלגה], [פלג], teilen Gen 10:25; 1Chr 1:19; Job 38:25; Ps 55:9

פְּלַג H6386 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (1×)
Divided, split; being partitioned or separated into parts (Aramaic)
This Aramaic passive participle appears in Daniel 2:41, in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream statue. The divided kingdom of iron and clay represents a realm that is internally fragmented—united in name but divided in nature, strong yet brittle. The term captures political and social fracture: a kingdom that cannot hold together because its constituent parts don't bond. The image of mixed iron and clay that won't adhere became a powerful metaphor for unstable empires throughout history, regimes imposing unity on fundamentally incompatible elements.

(1×) An Aramaic passive participle in Daniel 2:41 describing the fourth kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream as 'divided.' The term indicates internal fragmentation—a realm outwardly unified but inwardly split, like iron and clay that cannot truly merge. This division renders the kingdom unstable despite its strength, a powerful empire nonetheless vulnerable because it cannot achieve genuine cohesion among its disparate peoples or factions. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: divided | es: dividido | fr: diviser | de: [פליגה] Dan 2:41

פַּלַג H6387 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)
Half, portion; one-half of a whole (Aramaic)
This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 7:25, in the phrase describing how long the little horn will persecute the saints: 'a time, times, and half a time.' The 'half' is crucial to the formula—it indicates an incomplete period, a time cut short. This broken or limited duration suggests that while persecution seems to last forever to those suffering it, God has set definite boundaries. The evil reign won't run its full course; it will be truncated. The half-time brings the sequence to an incomplete, broken end, emphasizing divine sovereignty over human oppression.

(1×) An Aramaic word for 'half' appearing in Daniel 7:25 in the prophetic phrase 'a time, times, and half a time,' describing the duration of persecution by the little horn. This 'half' is theologically significant—it represents an incomplete period, a time cut short by divine intervention. Rather than allowing evil to run its full course, God limits it to a broken, truncated span, reassuring the faithful that their suffering has definite, divinely-set boundaries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-half-of | es: y-medio | fr: et-partie | de: [וכלג] Dan 7:25

פֶּלֶג H6388 N-mpc / 3ms (10×)
Stream, water channel; a flowing watercourse used literally and figuratively for abundance or tears.
A poetic noun for a stream, channel, or irrigation canal — a flowing division of water (related to the root p-l-g, 'to divide'). The 'streams of water' beside which the righteous are planted (Ps 1:3) is one of the Psalter's most iconic images. The word also describes tears streaming like water channels (Lam 3:48, Ps 119:136) and channels of oil symbolizing prosperity (Job 29:6). In Psalm 65:9 the 'channel of God' is a vivid image of rain as heaven's irrigation. German 'Strome' (streams) and Spanish 'arroyos/canales' capture both the natural and engineered watercourse senses.

stream or water channel (10×) A stream, channel, or irrigation canal — a divided watercourse. From the root p-l-g ('to split, divide'), the word denotes flowing water in both natural and figurative settings: the streams beside which the righteous flourish (Ps 1:3, echoed in Prov 21:1), abundant tears (Lam 3:48, Ps 119:136), channels of oil for prosperity (Job 29:6), and even the rain-channel of God himself (Ps 65:9). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'arroyos/canales,' German 'Strome,' French reconstructed forms — all confirm a single underlying sense of flowing watercourse applied across literal and metaphorical domains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Streams, channels-of, its-streams | es: Arroyos-de, Canales-de-, arroyo-de | fr: [כפלגי], [פלגי], [פלגים] | de: Ströme-, [כפלגי], [פלגי] Job 29:6; Ps 1:3; Ps 46:4; Ps 65:9; Ps 119:136

פֶּלֶג H6389 N-proper-ms (7×)
Peleg; proper name meaning 'division,' son of Eber, in whose days the earth was divided
The personal name Peleg (פֶּלֶג), derived from the root meaning 'to divide,' borne by the son of Eber and father of Reu in the line from Shem to Abraham. Genesis explains the name etiologically: 'in his days the earth was divided' (Gen 10:25), possibly referring to the scattering of peoples after Babel or to the division of irrigated land. All seven occurrences appear in genealogical contexts — the Table of Nations (Gen 10:25) and the lineage from Shem to Abraham (Gen 11:16-19), repeated in Chronicles (1 Chr 1:19, 25). Transliterations are uniform across languages: Peleg/Péleg.

(7×) Proper masculine name פֶּלֶג, meaning 'division' or 'watercourse,' given because 'in his days the earth was divided' (Gen 10:25). Son of Eber and ancestor of Abraham through Reu, Serug, Nahor, and Terah. His genealogy appears in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:25), the Shemite lineage (Gen 11:16-19), and the Chronicler's condensed genealogy (1 Chr 1:19, 25). The LXX renders the name Φαλεκ/Φαλεγ. All occurrences are strictly genealogical; there are no narrative actions attributed to Peleg himself. Spanish Péleg and French Peleg preserve the Hebrew form consistently. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Peleg | es: Peleg, Péleg | fr: Peleg, Péleg | de: Peleg, [פלג] Gen 10:25; Gen 11:16; Gen 11:17; Gen 11:18; Gen 11:19

פְּלַגָּה H6390 Prep-b / N-fp (1×)
Streams, divisions; channels of water or possibly subdivisions of a tribe
This word appears in Job 20:17 with clear reference to streams of oil and honey, representing luxurious abundance the wicked will never enjoy. The same form occurs in Judges 5:15-16 where it may mean either 'streams' or 'divisions' of Reuben—the ambiguity has prompted debate about whether Deborah is criticizing Reubenites for staying by their water channels or for remaining divided into factions. The root carries both senses of flowing water and splitting/dividing, making the dual meaning natural in Hebrew. In Job's context, the 'streams' imagery is unmistakable: rivers flowing with the richest substances.

(1×) Refers to streams or channels of liquid in Job 20:17, specifically 'streams of oil and honey'—an image of luxurious abundance that the wicked will never experience despite their temporary prosperity. The term evokes rivers flowing not with mere water but with the richest substances, representing the complete, overflowing blessing that comes from God alone. Zophar uses this imagery to contrast the fleeting pleasures of wickedness with the permanent joys reserved for the righteous. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-streams | es: los-arroyos, | fr: dans-בפלגות | de: [בפלגות] Job 20:17

פְּלֻגָּה H6391 Prep-b / N-fpc (3×)

divisions, courses (of priests or Levites for temple service)

This term refers to organized divisions or courses of priests and Levites for rotating temple service. It appears in Judges 5 in Deborah's song, describing tribal divisions (perhaps military or social), and in 2 Chronicles 35 for priestly divisions during Josiah's Passover. The system divided priests into groups (later formalized as 24 courses) that served in rotation, ensuring both continuity of worship and shared responsibility. The term parallels 'mahălōqet,' the more common word for divisions. This organizational structure sustained regular temple service while allowing most priests to live in their hometowns.

(3×) Organized divisions or courses, particularly of priests and Levites for temple service rotation. Judges 5:15-16 uses it in Deborah's song: 'among the divisions (בְּפִלְגוֹת) of Reuben were great resolves of heart'—possibly military or tribal divisions. 2 Chronicles 35:5 instructs priests to 'stand in the holy place according to the divisions (לְפִלְגוֹת) of the fathers' houses of your kinsmen the lay people.' This refers to the organized courses of priestly service. The system ensured orderly rotation for temple duties. The term parallels מַחֲלָקֹת. Translations: 'divisions,' 'courses'; Spanish 'divisiones,' French 'divisions,' German 'Abteilungen.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-divisions-of, for-the-divisions-of, in-the-divisions-of | es: en-divisiones-de, según-divisiones-de | fr: [לפלגות], dans-le-divisions-de, pour-le-divisions-de | de: [לפלגות], fuer-der-Abteilungen-von, in-der-Abteilungen-von Judg 5:15; Judg 5:16; 2Chr 35:5

פְּלֻגָּה H6392 Prep-b / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)

In their divisions; according to organizational sections or courses (Aramaic)

This Aramaic phrase appears in Ezra 6:18, describing how the priests and Levites were set in their divisions for the service of God's house in Jerusalem. After the exile, reconstituting temple worship required organizing the clergy into their traditional courses or divisions. The term emphasizes structured, orderly worship—each group knowing its time and role. This wasn't arbitrary assignment but restoration of the Davidic system where priestly families served in rotation. The divisions ensured continuous temple service while distributing the honor and responsibility across all qualified families.

(1×) An Aramaic phrase meaning 'in their divisions' in Ezra 6:18, describing the organizational structure of priests and Levites serving in the restored Jerusalem temple. The term indicates the traditional courses or divisions dating back to David's organization—family groups serving in rotation to maintain continuous temple worship. This structure ensured both order and equity, with each priestly family having its appointed time. Restoring these divisions was part of reconstituting authentic worship after the Babylonian disruption. DIVISION AND PORTION

en: in-their-divisions | es: en-sus-divisiones | fr: [בפלגתהון] | de: [בפלגתהון] Ezra 6:18

פְּלָדָה H6393 N-fp (1×)

Steel or iron fittings; hardened metal fixtures or ornaments on chariots

This rare word appears in Nahum 2:3, describing the steel (or iron) fittings of chariots that flash like fire as Nineveh's attackers prepare for battle. The term refers to hardened metal—possibly steel, though steel technology was limited in the ancient Near East. More likely, it designates specially hardened iron or iron overlays used to reinforce war chariots or provide decorative fittings. When these metal surfaces caught the light during military maneuvers, they created flashing, fire-like effects that announced an army's terrifying approach. The word may be a loan from Persian, suggesting advanced metallurgy.

(1×) Refers to steel or hardened iron fittings on chariots in Nahum 2:3, creating a fire-like flash during battle preparations. The term likely describes metal reinforcements or ornamental fixtures that caught and reflected light dramatically as armies maneuvered. Whether actual steel (rare in the period) or specially hardened iron, these fittings enhanced both the durability and the psychological impact of war chariots, their gleaming surfaces announcing military might as effectively as trumpets. IRON METAL

en: steel | es: acero | fr: Persan | de: [פלדות] Nah 2:3

פִּלְדָּשׁ H6394 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pildash: son of Nahor and Milcah, Abraham's nephew

Pildash appears in Genesis 22:22 in the genealogy of Nahor, Abraham's brother. He was one of eight sons born to Nahor by his wife Milcah, making him Abraham's nephew. These Nahorite genealogies establish connections between Israel and the Aramean peoples of northern Mesopotamia. While Pildash himself disappears from the biblical narrative, his inclusion in this family list preserves Abraham's wider kinship network—relationships that would matter when Abraham sent his servant to find a wife for Isaac among 'his relatives,' and when Jacob fled to Laban, another descendant of Nahor.

(1×) A personal name in Genesis 22:22, identifying one of the eight sons born to Nahor (Abraham's brother) and Milcah. As Abraham's nephew, Pildash was part of the Aramean family network centered in northern Mesopotamia. Though he plays no active role in the biblical narrative, his inclusion in this genealogy establishes the broader kinship connections between Abraham's immediate family and the related peoples of Paddan-aram, connections that become important in later marriage arrangements. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pildash | es: Pildash | fr: Pildash | de: Pildasch Gen 22:22

פָּלָה H6395 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (7×)

To set apart, distinguish, make separate (Hifil); to be wonderfully made or distinguished (Nifal); to display marvels wondrously

A sibling form of the better-known פלא ('to be wonderful'), this root פלה centers on separation and distinction — but with an undertone of wonder. When God 'sets apart' the land of Goshen (Exod 8:22; 9:4), the distinction is itself a marvel: Arabic ‎ ('distinguishes') and Spanish distinguiré capture the deliberate divine act. The Nifal in Psalm 139:14 — 'I am wonderfully made' — pushes separation into awe, as the psalmist marvels at being distinctly and intricately fashioned. Korean 기이하도다 ('how marvellous!') and Arabic ‎ ('wonderfully I was made') converge on this sense of sacred astonishment at one's own existence.

1. distinguish, set apart (Hifil) (4×) The Hifil causative: to distinguish, set apart, or make a clear separation. God makes a distinction between Egypt and Israel in the plague narratives (Exod 8:22; 9:4; 11:7), and sets apart the godly for himself (Ps 4:3). Arabic ‎ ('he distinguishes') and Spanish distinguiré ('I will distinguish') consistently render the active separative agency. The theological weight is clear: God's power to differentiate is itself a sign of sovereign control. DISCERN DISTINGUISH DOUBT

en: and-I-will-set-apart, and-will-distinguish, distinguishes | es: Y-distinguirá, Y-distinguiré, apartó | fr: distinguishes, et—distinguer, et-Je—placer-à-part | de: distinguishes, hat-setzen-getrennt, und-ich-wird-setzen-apart Exod 8:22; Exod 9:4; Exod 11:7; Ps 4:3

2. be wonderfully made (Nifal, wonderful) (1×) A specialized Nifal sense conveying being made wonderful or marvellous, not merely 'set apart' but evoking awe at the result. In Ps 139:14 the psalmist exclaims 'I am wonderfully made' — Arabic ‎ and Korean 기이하도다 both emphasize the marvel rather than the separation. Spanish fui hecho maravillosamente ('I was made marvellously') captures how the passive formation points to divine craftsmanship that inspires wonder. WONDERS AND MARVELS

en: I-am-wonderfully-made | es: fui-hecho-maravillosamente | fr: distinguer | de: ich-bin-wunderbar-gemacht Ps 139:14

3. be distinguished, be set apart (Nifal) (1×) The Nifal passive/reflexive in a communal context: to be distinguished or set apart as a people. In Exod 33:16 Moses asks how Israel will be known as distinct if God's presence does not accompany them — Spanish seremos distinguidos ('we will be distinguished') and Hindi अलग होंगे ('we will be separated') both convey a corporate identity that depends entirely on God's visible favor to mark them off from all other nations. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-we-will-be-distinguished | es: y-seremos-distinguidos | fr: et-nous—être-distinguished | de: und-wir-wird-sein-distinguished Exod 33:16

4. show wondrously (Hifil, display marvels) (1×) A Hifil imperative sense of displaying something in a wonderful or marvellous way. In Ps 17:7 David asks God to 'wondrously show' his steadfast love — Spanish muestra maravillosamente ('show wondrously') and Hindi अद्भुत दिखा ('show wonderfully') confirm this is not mere display but extraordinary, awe-inspiring demonstration. The sense bridges the 'separate/distinguish' root with the 'wonder/marvel' field of its sibling פלא. WONDERS AND MARVELS

en: wondrously-show | es: muestra-maravillosamente | fr: le-distinguer | de: wondrously-show Ps 17:7

פַּלּוּא H6396 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Pallu, son of Reuben; ancestor of the Palluites, a Reubenite clan

A proper name possibly meaning 'distinguished' or 'separated,' borne by the second son of Reuben, Jacob's firstborn. Pallu appears in the genealogical lists tracing Reuben's descendants into Egypt (Gen 46:9), the priestly genealogy (Exod 6:14), the wilderness census and clan registry (Num 26:5, 8), and the Chronicler's tribal record (1 Chr 5:3). He is the ancestor of Eliab and through him of Dathan and Abiram, who later rebelled against Moses. Spanish 'Falú' reflects an alternate phonetic tradition, while French, English, and German consistently use 'Pallu.'

(5×) Pallu ('distinguished'), second son of Reuben and ancestor of the Palluite clan. He appears in five genealogical registers spanning the patriarchal migration to Egypt (Gen 46:9), the priestly lineage (Exod 6:14), the wilderness census (Num 26:5, 8), and the tribal chronicle (1 Chr 5:3). Notably, his line produces Dathan and Abiram of Korah's rebellion (Num 26:8-9). Spanish 'Falú' preserves a distinctive phonetic rendering. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pallu, and-Pallu, to-Pallu | es: Falú, de-Falú, y-Palu | fr: Pallu, [ופלוא], et-Pallu | de: Pallu, [ופלוא], und-Pallu Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:5; Num 26:8; 1Chr 5:3

פַּלֹּנִי H6397 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

the Pelonite, a gentile designation of uncertain origin

This gentile designation appears in Chronicles' lists of David's mighty men, but it's almost certainly a textual error. 1 Chronicles 11:27 and 27:10 call someone 'the Pelonite,' but the parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:26 reads 'the Paltite' (from Beth Pelet). Similarly, 1 Chronicles 11:36 has 'the Pelonite' where 2 Samuel 23:34 reads 'the Gilonite.' Scholars widely agree these are scribal errors, possibly from confusion between similar Hebrew letters (ל/ג) or abbreviated place names. The designation doesn't represent an actual place or clan but rather a textual corruption.

(3×) A gentile designation appearing in Chronicles' warrior lists, widely regarded as textual error. 1 Chronicles 11:27 identifies 'Helez the Pelonite,' but 2 Samuel 23:26 reads 'the Paltite' (הַפַּלְטִי)—from Beth Pelet. 1 Chronicles 27:10 repeats 'the Pelonite' for Helez. Similarly, 1 Chronicles 11:36 calls someone 'the Pelonite' where 2 Samuel 23:34 reads 'the Gilonite' (הַגִּלֹנִי). The consonantal similarity suggests scribal confusion. BDB notes these are errors, not genuine gentilics. No place 'Pelon' is known. Translations often preserve 'Pelonite' in Chronicles while noting the likely corruption, or emend to match Samuel. INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: the-Pelonite | es: el-pelonita, el-peloní | fr: [הפלוני], [הפלני] | de: [הפלוני], [הפלני] 1Chr 11:27; 1Chr 11:36; 1Chr 27:10 to cleave, split, pierce; in Piel to cut open or through, slice into

פָּלַח H6398 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

A verb denoting the forceful action of splitting or cleaving. In its Qal form it describes ploughing or splitting the earth (Ps 141:7), while the Piel intensifies the image to piercing through organs (Job 16:13; Prov 7:23) or slicing produce into a pot (2 Kgs 4:39). The Spanish 'atraviesa' (pierces through) and 'dan-a-luz' (give birth) capture the range from violent penetration to the parting open in childbirth (Job 39:3). The root shares cognates with Arabic and Aramaic words for cleaving and tilling.

(5×) To cleave, split open, or pierce with force. Covers ploughing earth (Ps 141:7), piercing kidneys and liver as figures of devastating attack (Job 16:13; Prov 7:23), slicing gourds into a pot (2 Kgs 4:39), and possibly the bursting open of the womb in birth (Job 39:3). Spanish 'atraviesa' and English 'He-pierces' reflect the violent directional thrust, while 'one-splitting' and 'el-que-ara' show the agricultural application. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: He-pierces, and-sliced, one-splitting | es: atraviesa, dan-a-luz, el-que-ara | fr: et-sliced, fendre, יכלח | de: [יכלח], [תכלחנה], einer-splitting 2Kgs 4:39; Job 16:13; Job 39:3; Ps 141:7; Prov 7:23

פְּלַח H6399 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (10×)

To serve or worship a deity; Aramaic verb for religious devotion and reverent service.

An Aramaic verb meaning to serve, worship, or pay reverence to a deity, cognate with Akkadian 'palahu' (to fear, revere). It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. The word is central to the confrontation scenes of Daniel: Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refuse to serve Nebuchadnezzar's gods (Dan 3:12–18), and Daniel continues serving his God despite the decree (Dan 6:17, 21). In Ezra 7:24 the participial form functions as a noun, 'servants of the house of God.' Spanish 'servir/sirven' and German 'dienen' consistently render the religious service dimension.

serve, worship (a deity) (10×) To serve or worship a deity, paying reverence through religious devotion. This Aramaic verb (cognate with Akkadian palahu, 'to fear, revere') occurs exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel it is the key term in the confrontation narratives: the three companions refuse to worship foreign gods (Dan 3:12, 14, 17–18, 28), and Daniel persists in serving his God (Dan 6:17, 21). In Dan 7:14, 27 it describes universal worship of the Son of Man's kingdom. In Ezra 7:24 the participle serves as a noun for temple ministers. Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'servir,' German 'dienen,' French 'servir' — consistently conveys the sense of reverent religious service. SERVING AND MINISTRY en: and-servants-of, serve, serve- | es: servimos, servirán, sirven | fr: et-servir, servir | de: [ופלחין], dienen, sie-werden-dienen Ezra 7:24; Dan 3:12; Dan 3:14; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:18

פֶּלַח H6400 N-msc (6×)

A slice, piece, or section; used of millstones and cut portions of fruit (pomegranate, fig-cake)

Denotes a cut or cleaved portion of something, spanning two distinct referents in the Hebrew Bible: millstones and slices of fruit. As a millstone term, pelach designates the upper or lower stone of a hand-mill (Judg 9:53; 2 Sam 11:21; Job 41:24), evoking heaviness and hardness. As a fruit term, it describes a slice of pomegranate used as a simile for the beloved's temple in Song of Songs (4:3; 6:7) and a slice of fig-cake given to the famished Egyptian in 1 Samuel 30:12. The underlying image is always something split or cleaved from a whole.

slice, piece, section (6×) A slice, piece, or section cut from a larger whole — whether a millstone (the upper 'riding' stone or the lower stone, as in Judg 9:53, 2 Sam 11:21, Job 41:24) or a slice of fruit (pomegranate in Song 4:3, 6:7; fig-cake in 1 Sam 30:12). German Schnitt ('cut') and Spanish rodaja ('slice') both capture the core idea of something cleaved apart. The root פלח carries the sense of splitting or cleaving, and the noun consistently denotes the resulting portion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-piece-of, like-a-piece-of, like-slice-of | es: Como-rodaja-de, como-muela, como-tajada-de | fr: Comme-un-quartier, comme-quartier, pièce-de | de: Schnitt, ein-piece-von, piece-von Judg 9:53; 1Sam 30:12; 2Sam 11:21; Job 41:24; Song 4:3

פִּלְחָא H6401 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pilha: post-exilic Israelite leader who sealed Nehemiah's covenant

Pilha was among the leaders who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:24 (English versification), committing themselves and the people to Torah observance after the exile. This covenant-sealing ceremony followed Ezra's public reading of the Law and the people's confession of sin. Those who signed represented the community's leadership—priests, Levites, and heads of families taking corporate responsibility for Israel's faithfulness. Pilha's signature placed him among this circle of post-exilic reformers determined to avoid the mistakes that had led to exile.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 10:24, identifying one of the leaders who sealed the covenant of Torah observance in post-exilic Jerusalem. By affixing his seal, Pilha joined other heads of families in taking corporate responsibility for Israel's commitment to God's Law. This covenant represented the community's determination to rebuild not just the city's walls but its spiritual foundations, learning from the exile and dedicating themselves to faithful obedience. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pilha | es: Pilha | fr: [פלחא] | de: [פלחא] Neh 10:24

פִּלְחָן H6402 Prep-l / N-msc (1×)

For the service; for the worship or cultic ministry (Aramaic)

This Aramaic phrase appears in Ezra 7:19, in the Persian king's decree authorizing Ezra to take temple vessels back to Jerusalem 'for the service of the house of your God.' The term encompasses both worship and practical ministry—everything needed for temple operations. It's striking that a Persian official uses this language, recognizing that these vessels weren't just valuables but sacred implements with religious purpose. The phrase captures the functional nature of worship: service (avodah) involves both liturgical acts and the practical work of maintaining God's house and supporting its ministers.

(1×) An Aramaic phrase meaning 'for the service of' in Ezra 7:19, referring to the cultic worship and practical ministry of the Jerusalem temple. The Persian king uses this term in authorizing the return of sacred vessels, acknowledging their religious purpose. 'Service' here encompasses both liturgical worship and the supporting work needed to maintain temple operations—a comprehensive term for everything involved in honoring God through the temple system. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-the-service-of | es: para-el-servicio-de | fr: [לפלחן] | de: [לפלחן] Ezra 7:19

פָּלַט H6403 V-Piel-Imperf-3fs (25×)

To escape, deliver, rescue; as participle: deliverer; Hifil: to snatch away; rarely, to bring forth (in birth).

A rescue verb that appears overwhelmingly in the Psalms, where it becomes one of the great prayer words of the Hebrew Bible. The Piel dominates, expressing God's active deliverance of the faithful from enemies and distress — 'He delivered me because he delighted in me' (Ps 18:19). The participial form 'my deliverer' (mephalleti) becomes a divine title, often paired with 'my rock' and 'my fortress' (2 Sam 22:2; Ps 18:2). A surprising semantic branch appears in Job 21:10, where the same root describes a cow 'bringing forth' her calf — delivery in the most literal, physical sense.

1. deliver, rescue (Piel) (14×) The Piel causative: to deliver, rescue, or set free from danger, enemies, or distress. This is the dominant sense, concentrated in the Psalms (17:13; 22:4-8; 31:1; 37:40; 71:2-4; 82:4; 91:14). Spanish 'librad/libraste' and French 'délivrer' consistently render it. The construction often pairs with min ('from') to specify the source of danger. God is almost always the subject, making this a characteristic vocabulary of prayer and praise. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-delivers-them, and-I-will-deliver-him, and-You-deliver-me | es: Librad-, Y-me-libraste, escapes | fr: délivrer, et-Tu-délivre-moi, et-délivrer | de: [חפלט], du-errettet-mich, er-errettet-ihnen 2Sam 22:44; Ps 17:13; Ps 18:43; Ps 22:4; Ps 22:8

2. deliverer (substantive participle) (6×) The Piel participle used as a substantive noun: 'deliverer, rescuer.' It functions as a divine epithet, typically in confessional or hymnic speech. In the great parallel texts of 2 Samuel 22:2 and Psalm 18:2, 'my deliverer' stands alongside 'my rock,' 'my fortress,' and 'my shield.' Spanish 'mi libertador' and French 'mon libérateur' both reflect the personal, relational possessive. The six occurrences cluster tightly in Davidic psalms. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-my-deliverer, my-deliverer | es: mi-libertador, y-libertador-mío-, y-mi-libertador | fr: de-délivrer, et-de-délivrer, et-mon-libérateur | de: mein-deliverer, und-mein-deliverer 2Sam 22:2; Ps 18:2; Ps 18:48; Ps 40:17; Ps 70:5

3. escape, flee (Qal/reflexive) (2×) The Qal intransitive or reflexive sense: to escape, flee to safety. Ezekiel 7:16 describes survivors who 'escape' to the mountains, and Job 23:7 imagines being 'delivered' through honest argument. This sense foregrounds the escapee's own movement rather than an external rescuer's intervention, distinguishing it from the Piel. Only two attestations, but the semantic difference (intransitive vs. causative) is sharp. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-I-would-be-delivered, and-shall-escape | es: Y-escaparán, y-escaparía | fr: et-délivrer, et-ואפלטה | de: [ואפלטה], [ופלטו] Job 23:7; Ezek 7:16

4. carry off, snatch away (Hifil) (2×) The Hifil causative: to carry off, snatch away. Isaiah 5:29 pictures a lion that 'carries off' prey with none to rescue, and Micah 6:14 warns that what you save, God will 'give to the sword.' The Hifil here implies forcible removal — snatching something away beyond recovery. The negative contexts distinguish this from the Piel's positive rescue. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-carries-off, preserve | es: escaparás, y-se-la-llevará | fr: [ויפליט], délivrer | de: [ויפליט], [תפליט] Isa 5:29; Mic 6:14

5. bring forth, deliver (birth) (1×) A specialized physical sense: to bring forth, deliver in childbirth. Job 21:10 describes a cow that 'calves and does not miscarry' — the root's core idea of 'causing to come out safely' applied to parturition. Spanish 'da a luz' (gives birth) captures this perfectly. A single attestation, but the semantic logic is transparent: safe delivery from the womb is the most concrete form of palat's rescue meaning. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: delivers | es: da-a-luz | fr: תפלט | de: [תפלט] Job 21:10

פֶּלֶט H6404 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Pelet, a personal name appearing in Judahite and Benjamite genealogies (1 Chronicles 2:47; 12:3)

Pelet is a name borne by at least two individuals in Chronicles. One appears in Judahite genealogy (1 Chronicles 2:47), another among David's warriors from Benjamin (1 Chronicles 12:3). The name appears with the conjunction 'and,' suggesting it's part of a list. BDB also references the place name Beth-pelet.

(2×) A personal name found in genealogical and military lists. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Pelet,' 'Pélet') show transliteration with minor orthographic variation. Both occurrences present this as part of a series (using the conjunction 'and'), one in tribal genealogy, the other among elite warriors—showing the name's use across different social contexts in Israelite society. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: and-Pelet | es: y-Pelet, y-Pélet | fr: [ופלט] | de: [ופלט] 1Chr 2:47; 1Chr 12:3

פֶּלֶט H6405 V-Piel-Imp-ms (2×)

Deliverance or deliver (imperative/noun; Psalm 32:7; 56:7)

This term appears in two difficult Psalm passages. Psalm 32:7 speaks of 'shouts of deliverance' or possibly an imperative 'deliver me!' Psalm 56:7 is textually uncertain—it may be a noun 'deliverance' or a verb form, with suggested emendations. The contexts involve God's protection and requests for rescue from enemies.

(2×) Either a noun meaning 'deliverance/salvation' or an imperative 'deliver!' depending on the passage. Spanish offers both 'liberación' (deliverance) and 'escapa-' (escape/deliver), reflecting the ambiguity. The French 'délivrer' (to deliver) suggests verbal force. Both Psalms deal with God's rescue from danger, whether as confident proclamation (Ps 32) or urgent petition (Ps 56). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: deliver-, deliverance | es: escapa-, liberación | fr: délivrer | de: deliverance, erretten- Ps 32:7; Ps 56:7

פַּלְטִי H6406 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Palti, personal name of two men: a spy from Benjamin and Michal's second husband (Numbers 13:9; 1 Samuel 25:44)

Palti was the name of two biblical figures. First, a Benjamite chosen as one of the twelve spies to scout Canaan (Numbers 13:9). Second, the man from Gallim whom Saul gave Michal to marry after David fled (1 Samuel 25:44)—also called Paltiel in 2 Samuel 3:15. The name means 'Yah delivers' or similar.

(2×) A personal name appearing twice in Scripture, borne by different individuals from the tribe of Benjamin. The cross-linguistic glosses show consistent transliteration (Spanish 'Palti,' French 'Palti') and prepositional usage reflecting each context. BDB notes Palti II may be an abbreviated form of Paltiel, showing how names could vary in formal vs. shortened usage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Palti, to-Palti | es: Palti, a-Palti | fr: Palti, à-Palti | de: Palti, zu-Palti Num 13:9; 1Sam 25:44

בֵּית הַפַּלְטִי H6407 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Paltite: a gentile designation from Beth-pelet in Judah

This gentile adjective appears in 2 Samuel 23:26, identifying Helez, one of David's mighty warriors, as 'the Paltite.' The designation links him to Beth-pelet, a town in southern Judah. David's elite fighting force drew from across Israel's tribes and regions, and these geographic identifiers preserve the warriors' origins. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:27 confirms this connection. For these mighty men, their hometown designation became part of their identity—not just 'Helez' but 'Helez the Paltite,' forever associating personal valor with local roots.

(1×) A gentile designation in 2 Samuel 23:26 identifying Helez as originating from Beth-pelet in southern Judah. As one of David's thirty mighty warriors, Helez carried this geographic identifier as part of his formal title. The term connects military prowess to local identity, showing how David's elite fighters came from across Judah's territory. This hometown designation became an honorific, permanently linking Helez's name with his place of origin. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Paltite | es: el-paltita | fr: le-Paltite | de: der-Paltite 2Sam 23:26

פִּלְטַי H6408 N-proper-ms (1×)

Piltai: a priestly family head during the high priesthood of Joiakim

Piltai appears in Nehemiah 12:17 as the head of a priestly family during the time of the high priest Joiakim, in the generations following the return from Babylon. These lists in Nehemiah 12 trace the continuity of priestly families, demonstrating that despite the exile's disruption, the legitimate priesthood survived and was reconstituted in Jerusalem. Piltai represents one link in this chain of authorized ministry. The careful preservation of such names reflects how seriously post-exilic Judaism took questions of lineage and authorization for sacred service.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 12:17, identifying the head of a priestly family during the high priesthood of Joiakim in post-exilic Jerusalem. Piltai's inclusion in this genealogical record served to establish the continuity and legitimacy of the reconstituted priesthood after the Babylonian exile. These family lists documented which priestly lines maintained their authorization for temple service, crucial for the restored community's confidence in the validity of their worship. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Piltai | es: Piltai | fr: [פלטי] | de: [פלטי] Neh 12:17

פַּלְטִיאֵל H6409 N-proper-ms (2×)

Paltiel, personal name: a tribal leader from Issachar and Michal's husband (Numbers 34:26; 2 Samuel 3:15)

Paltiel was the name of two men. First, the leader from Issachar chosen to help divide the Promised Land (Numbers 34:26). Second, the full form of Palti's name—Michal's second husband from whom David took her back (2 Samuel 3:15). The name means 'God delivers' or 'God is my deliverance.'

(2×) A personal name with clear theophoric elements (containing El/God), appearing in leadership and personal contexts. The multilingual evidence shows careful transliteration (Spanish 'Paltiel,' French 'Paltiel') preserving the Hebrew form. BDB confirms the connection between Paltiel (2 Sam 3:15) and Palti (1 Sam 25:44), showing how the same person could be called by full and shortened name forms. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Paltiel | es: Paltiel | fr: Paltiel | de: Paltiel Num 34:26; 2Sam 3:15

פְּלַטְיָהוּ H6410 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Pelatiah — personal name meaning 'Yah has delivered,' borne by several OT figures

A theophoric name compounded from the root p-l-t (deliver, rescue) with the divine suffix -yahu/-yah, meaning 'Yahweh has delivered.' It is borne by at least three individuals: a prince of the people whose sudden death Ezekiel witnessed in a vision (Ezek 11:1, 13), a grandson of Zerubbabel in the Davidic line (1 Chr 3:21), and a Simeonite captain (1 Chr 4:42). The name also appears among the signatories of Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:22).

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'Yahweh has delivered.' Borne by multiple figures: a civic prince in Ezekiel's vision who dies as a sign of judgment (Ezek 11:1, 13), a post-exilic descendant of Zerubbabel (1 Chr 3:21), a Simeonite leader in Hezekiah's era (1 Chr 4:42), and a covenant signer (Neh 10:22). Transliterations across languages are consistent — Spanish 'Pelatías,' English 'Pelatiah' — reflecting its well-established identity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pelatiah, Pelatyah, and-Pelatiah | es: Pelatias, Pelatya, Pelatías | fr: Pelatia, [ופלטיה], [פלטיה] | de: [ופלטיה], [ופלטיהו], [פלטיה] 1Chr 3:21; 1Chr 4:42; Neh 10:22; Ezek 11:1; Ezek 11:13

פְּלָאיָה H6411a N-proper-ms (2×)

Pelaiah, a Levite who helped Ezra teach the law (Nehemiah 8:7; 10:10)

Pelaiah was a Levite active in post-exilic Jerusalem. He appears among those who helped Ezra explain the law to the people (Nehemiah 8:7) and later among those who sealed the covenant renewal (Nehemiah 10:10). The name means 'Yah has done wonders' or 'Yah distinguishes.'

(2×) A personal name borne by a Levite teacher and covenant signatory in Nehemiah's reforms. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'Pelaías') show transliteration practices, though some languages bracket the name untranslated, reflecting uncertainty about pronunciation. Both Nehemiah contexts emphasize this person's role in teaching and covenant renewal—central to the post-exilic religious restoration. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pelaiah | es: Pelaías | fr: [פלאיה] | de: [פלאיה] Neh 8:7; Neh 10:10

פְּלָיָה H6411b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Pelaiah: a descendant of David in the post-exilic period

Pelaiah appears in 1 Chronicles 3:24 in the genealogy of David's royal line, several generations after the exile. Though the Davidic throne no longer existed in political terms, these genealogies preserved the royal lineage, maintaining hope in God's covenant promises to David. Each name represented continuity—the line of promise hadn't died out. For post-exilic Jews, knowing who descended from David mattered both for immediate legal questions and for eschatological hope: one day, a son of David would restore the kingdom.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 3:24, identifying a descendant of David several generations after the Babylonian exile. Pelaiah's inclusion in the royal genealogy served to document the continuation of David's line even when no king sat on the throne. These post-exilic records maintained the connection to God's covenant with David, preserving both legal lineage and messianic hope that eventually a son of David would restore the kingdom. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Pelayah | es: y-Pelaya | fr: [ופלי֫ה] | de: [ופלי֫ה] 1Chr 3:24

פָּלִיט H6412a N-mpc / 2mp (19×)

Fugitive, escapee; survivor, remnant — one who has fled danger or who remains alive after catastrophe

The noun פָּלִיט denotes a person who has escaped or survived a disaster, whether military defeat, divine judgment, or national catastrophe. In its primary use it emphasizes the act of fleeing — a fugitive who has slipped away from the enemy, like the one who 'escaped and came to tell Abram' about Lot's capture (Gen 14:13). But the word also shades into the sense of one who has survived, a remnant that endures — as in Ezekiel's repeated references to those who will survive the sword and remember the LORD among the nations (Ezek 6:8-9; 7:16). The distinction between fleeing and surviving is subtle but real, confirmed by multilingual glosses that shift between 'fugitivo' and 'sobreviviente' in Spanish.

1. fugitive, escapee (14×) A fugitive or escapee — one who flees from danger, battle, or divine punishment, with the emphasis on the act of flight rather than its aftermath. This is the more common sense (14 occurrences), covering the messenger who escaped to report Lot's capture (Gen 14:13), the formulaic 'no survivor or fugitive' of total military defeat (Josh 8:22; Jer 42:17; 44:14; Lam 2:22), the Ephraimite fugitives at the Jordan fords (Judg 12:4-5), and the escapee who brings news to Ezekiel (Ezek 24:26-27; 33:21-22). Spanish glosses consistently read 'fugitivo,' French equivalents confirm a flight-oriented reading, and Arabic uses forms emphasizing escape from a place of danger. FUGITIVE AND SURVIVOR
en: an-escapee, and-fugitives-of, fugitive | es: el-fugitivo, el-fugitivo„ fugitivo | fr: [ופלי֫ט], [ופלי֫ט], [פלי֫ט] | de: Entronnenen, [הפלי֫ט], [ופלי֫ט] Gen 14:13; Josh 8:22; Judg 12:4; Judg 12:5; 2Kgs 9:15

2. survivor, remnant (5×) A survivor or remnant — one who remains alive after catastrophe, war, or divine judgment, with emphasis on the state of having survived rather than the act of escape. This appears 5 times, notably in Isa 45:20 ('you fugitives/ survivors of the nations'), Ezek 6:8-9 ('you will have survivors among the nations' who remember the LORD), Ezek 7:16 (survivors on the mountains mourning like doves), and Obadiah 14 (cutting off survivors of Edom). The shift is confirmed by Spanish glosses moving to 'sobreviviente/sobrevivientes,' marking a category of those-who-remain rather than those-who-flee. Amos 9:1 ('not a fugitive among them shall flee') bridges both senses, but the emphasis on total absence of survival places it here. FUGITIVE AND SURVIVOR
en: a-survivor, survivors-of, survivors-of-them | es: sobreviviente, sobrevivientes-de, sobrevivientes-de-ellos | fr: [פלי֫ט], survivant | de: [פלי֫ט], [פלי֫ט], [פלי֫טיהם] Isa 45:20; Ezek 6:8; Ezek 6:9; Ezek 7:16; Amos 9:1

פָּלִיט H6412b N-mp (5×)

fugitives, escapees; those who have survived destruction or exile

The plural of an adjective-noun from the root p-l-t (escape), designating those who have fled or survived catastrophe. In Numbers 21:29 it describes Moab's sons given as fugitives to Chemosh. The prophetic texts use it for survivors of Babylon's fall who carry news back to Zion (Jer 50:28; 51:50) and for the remnant of Judah who fled to Egypt (Jer 44:14). Isaiah 66:19 envisions these escapees as emissaries sent to distant nations.

(5×) Fugitives or escapees — those who survive a military or divine catastrophe. Spanish renders both 'fugitivos' and 'sobrevivientes,' capturing the dual nuance of flight and survival. Applied to Moabite captives (Num 21:29), Judean refugees in Egypt from whom scarcely any will return (Jer 44:14), survivors of Babylon's destruction bearing witness to Zion (Jer 50:28; 51:50), and eschatological messengers to the nations (Isa 66:19). FUGITIVE AND SURVIVOR
en: and-escaping, as-fugitives, escapees | es: escapados-de, fugitivos, sobrevivientes | fr: [ופלטים], [פלטים], [פליטים] | de: [ופלטים], [פלטים], [פליטים] Num 21:29; Isa 66:19; Jer 44:14; Jer 50:28; Jer 51:50

פְּלֵיטָה H6413 Conj-w / N-fsc (28×)

Escape or deliverance from danger; the surviving remnant of people or things that escaped destruction.

At the intersection of catastrophe and hope stands this feminine noun, naming both the act of escaping and those who have escaped. When Jacob divides his camp fearing Esau, he plans for a peletah – a way of escape for the surviving group (Gen 32:8). When Joseph reveals himself to his brothers, he declares that God sent him ahead to preserve a peletah – a deliverance (Gen 45:7). The prophets adopted it as a theological term for the faithful remnant that survives divine judgment, especially the survivors of Jerusalem's fall (Ezra 9:8, 13-15). Arabic najah (deliverance) and Swahili wokovu (salvation) illuminate the abstract sense, while the concrete sense of surviving people emerges clearly in translations across languages.

1. remnant or survivors (18×) The concrete group of survivors or remnant that has escaped destruction, judgment, or catastrophe – the people or things left standing after devastation. Used of survivors from locusts (Exod 10:5), from military defeat (Judg 21:17), and most prominently of Judah's remnant after the Assyrian and Babylonian exiles (2 Kgs 19:30-31; Ezra 9:8). French reste and German Entkommener capture this collective survivor sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-remnant, and-escape, and-escaped | es: como-remanente, el-remanente, escapada-de | fr: der-reste, délivrance, et-délivrance | de: Entkommener, [הפלי֫טה], [הפלי֫טה] Exod 10:5; Judg 21:17; 2Kgs 19:30; 2Kgs 19:31; 1Chr 4:43

2. escape or deliverance (10×) The abstract act or means of deliverance from peril, focusing on the escape itself rather than those who escaped. Jacob's planning for peleitah against Esau (Gen 32:8) and Joseph's theological reading of his own journey as God providing escape (Gen 45:7) exemplify this sense. Arabic najah, Korean piham (escape-act), and Swahili wokovu (salvation) all confirm the abstract-deliverance reading distinct from the concrete remnant. SALVATION (NOUN)
en: an-escape, and-escape, deliverance | es: escapatoria, escape, para-escape | fr: délivrance, délivrance„ et-délivrance | de: Entkommener, Rettung, [ופלי֫טה] Gen 32:8; Gen 45:7; 2Sam 15:14; 2Chr 12:7; Jer 25:35

פָּלִיל H6414 N-mp (3×)

judges, arbiters, those who decide cases

This term denotes judges or legal arbiters who render decisions in disputes. It appears three times, each raising interpretive questions. Exodus 21:22 likely refers to judges who assess penalties in a case of injury to a pregnant woman. Deuteronomy 32:31 has 'our enemies being judges'—even Israel's foes must acknowledge Yahweh's superiority. Job 31:11 uses it in parallel with 'iniquity,' describing adultery as 'an iniquity for judges'—a crime requiring judicial punishment. The term emphasizes the judicial role—those authorized to weigh evidence, render verdicts, and impose penalties.

(3×) Judges or legal arbiters who decide cases and render judgment. Exodus 21:22 addresses injury to a pregnant woman: the offender shall pay 'as the judges (בַּפְּלִלִים) determine'—legal arbitration of damages. Deuteronomy 32:31 declares: 'our enemies themselves being judges (פְּלִילִים)'—even they must concede Yahweh's supremacy over their gods. Job 31:11 describes adultery as 'an iniquity for judges' (עָוֹן פְּלִילִים, with some textual variants)—a crime requiring judicial punishment. The term emphasizes the deciding function. Translations: 'judges,' 'arbiters,' Spanish 'jueces,' French 'juges,' German 'Richter.' JUDGING AND DECIDING en: by-judges, judges, of-judges | es: de-jueces, sean-jueces, según-los-jueces | fr: juges, par-judges, פְּלִילִים | de: Richter, [פְּלִילִים], durch-judges Exod 21:22; Deut 32:31; Job 31:11

פְּלִילָה H6415 N-fs (1×)

Decision, arbitration; the rendering of judicial judgment or mediation

This term appears in Isaiah 16:3, where Moab is urged to 'give decision' or 'act as judge' for Judean refugees fleeing from oppression. The word relates to the office of an arbiter or mediator—one who weighs cases and renders fair judgment. Isaiah envisions Moab providing judicial protection, making righteous decisions on behalf of the vulnerable. The term emphasizes the active, functional aspect of justice: not just holding judicial office but actually performing the work of discernment, weighing evidence, and pronouncing fair verdicts that protect the innocent.

(1×) Refers to the act of rendering decision or performing the office of a judge/arbiter in Isaiah 16:3, where Moab is called to exercise judicial protection for Judean refugees. The term emphasizes the functional aspect of justice—actively weighing cases, making determinations, and pronouncing verdicts that defend the vulnerable. It's not passive authority but active arbitration, the actual work of discerning right from wrong and enforcing that determination. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: decision | es: decisión | fr: [פְּלִילָה] | de: [פְּלִילָה] Isa 16:3

פְּלִילִי H6416 Adj-ms (1×)

For judges; requiring judicial attention, a crime calling for legal judgment

This adjective appears in Job 31:28, where Job declares that certain sins would be 'iniquity for judges'—crimes requiring judicial attention and punishment. In his oath of innocence, Job lists secret sins that might escape human notice, then names those that would be publicly prosecutable if discovered. Idolatry falls into this latter category: not just personal betrayal of God but a crime against the community requiring legal judgment. The phrase indicates offenses that fall under earthly courts' jurisdiction, violations so serious they demand judicial intervention.

(1×) An adjective in Job 31:28 describing iniquity that falls under judges' jurisdiction—crime requiring formal judicial action. Job uses this phrase to characterize idolatry as not merely personal sin but public crime, an offense against the covenant community that earthly courts should prosecute. The term distinguishes between private failings and violations so serious they demand legal judgment, crimes that call for the magistrate's attention and punishment. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: of-judges | es: de-jueces | fr: פלילי | de: [פלילי] Job 31:28

פְּלִילִיָּה H6417 N-fs (1×)

Judgment, rendering decisions; the judicial or prophetic function of determining cases

This term appears in Isaiah 28:7, in Isaiah's denunciation of priests and prophets who 'stagger in judgment' because of drunkenness. The word refers to the active work of rendering decisions—whether judicial verdicts or prophetic oracles. Both priests and prophets had decision-making roles: priests taught Torah and decided ritual cases, prophets delivered God's word to guide the nation. When these leaders were drunk, their judgment—their capacity to perceive rightly and decide wisely—was compromised. The term captures the critical moment when a determination must be made, and incompetent leadership fails.

(1×) Refers to the act of rendering judgment or making decisions in Isaiah 28:7, where drunken priests and prophets are condemned for staggering 'in judgment.' The term describes the critical function of discerning and deciding—whether judicial verdicts or prophetic declarations. Israel's spiritual leaders held this responsibility, and their intoxication didn't just embarrass them personally; it disabled them from performing their essential role as decision-makers who guided the nation. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: in-judgment | es: en-el-juicio | fr: [פְּלִילִיָּה] | de: [פְּלִילִיָּה] Isa 28:7

פֶּלֶךְ H6418 Prep-l / N-msc / 3ms (10×)

A spindle (for spinning thread) or an administrative district; two genuinely distinct senses from one noun.

The noun פֶּלֶךְ presents one of Hebrew's more surprising cases of polysemy: the same word denotes both a spindle for spinning thread and an administrative district. The connection may lie in the idea of 'turning' or 'circling' – a spindle whirls, and a district is a defined circuit of territory. In 2 Samuel 3:29, David curses the house of Joab with men who 'hold the spindle,' implying weakness or effeminacy, while Proverbs 31:19 praises the capable woman whose hands grasp the פֶּלֶךְ. The administrative sense dominates Nehemiah 3, where eight different districts of post-exilic Jerusalem are named in the wall-rebuilding account. Spanish 'huso' (spindle) versus 'distrito' (district) keeps the two senses neatly apart.

1. district, administrative region (8×) An administrative district or region, used exclusively in Nehemiah 3 for the sub-provinces of post-exilic Judah whose leaders contributed to the Jerusalem wall reconstruction. The term appears with construct forms like פֶּלֶךְ בֵּית צוּר, 'district of Beth-zur' (Neh 3:16), and פֶּלֶךְ מִצְפָּה, 'district of Mizpah' (Neh 3:15). The underlying notion may be a 'circuit' of territory. Spanish 'distrito,' French 'district,' and German 'Bezirk' all converge on this administrative meaning across eight occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: district-of, for-district-his | es: distrito-de, para-su-distrito | fr: district | de: Bezirk Neh 3:9; Neh 3:12; Neh 3:14; Neh 3:15; Neh 3:16

2. spindle (for spinning thread) (2×) A spindle or distaff used in textile production for spinning thread, representing the concrete, physical sense of the word. In Proverbs 31:19, the woman of valor 'sends her hands to the פֶּלֶךְ,' paired with כִּישׁוֹר (distaff), making the spinning context unmistakable. In 2 Samuel 3:29, David's curse envisions men of Joab's house reduced to 'holding the spindle' – a gendered insult implying incapacity for warfare. Spanish 'huso' and 'rueca' (distaff/spindle) capture the textile craft precisely. RODS AND STAFFS

en: the-spindle | es: en-el-huso, rueca | fr: le-spindle, כלך | de: Bezirk, der-spindle 2Sam 3:29; Prov 31:19

פָּלַל H6419 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-3ms (84×)

To pray, intercede, or mediate; primarily in the Hitpael, to direct supplication toward God; in the Piel, to judge or intervene.

The dominant biblical word for prayer, appearing almost exclusively in the Hitpael stem as a reflexive act of turning oneself toward God in supplication. From Abraham's intercession for Abimelech (Gen 20:17) through Solomon's great temple prayer (1 Kgs 8:28-54) to Hezekiah's desperate plea against Sennacherib (2 Kgs 19:15), this verb carries the weight of Israel's prayer life. The rare Piel stem preserves an older judicial meaning—to arbitrate or intercede as a mediator (1 Sam 2:25; Ps 106:30). At Genesis 48:11, Jacob uses the verb uniquely to mean 'I had not expected/imagined,' likely a denominative usage from pelilah (judgment, reckoning).

1. pray (Hitpael) (80×) The overwhelmingly primary sense (80 of 84 occurrences): to pray, make supplication, or intercede before God in the Hitpael stem. The reflexive form suggests directing oneself toward God. Covers all major biblical prayers—intercessory (Gen 20:17; Num 21:7), penitential (Deut 9:26), dedicatory (1 Kgs 8:28), and desperate (2 Kgs 19:15; Jonah 2:1). Cross-linguistic evidence is consistent: English 'prayed,' Spanish 'oró,' French 'pria,' German 'betete' all converge on supplicatory prayer. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)

en: And-prayed, and-he-prayed, and-prayed | es: Y-oro, Y-oró, y-orarán | fr: et-elle-pria, et-il-pria, et-ils-prie | de: und-beten, und-betete, und-er-betete Gen 20:17; Num 11:2; Num 21:7; Deut 9:20

2. judge, intercede (Piel) (3×) A rare Piel stem usage (3 occurrences) meaning to judge, mediate, or intercede in a judicial or intercessory capacity. At 1 Samuel 2:25 it means to arbitrate a dispute; at Psalm 106:30 Phinehas 'intervened' (executed judgment) to stop a plague; at Ezekiel 16:52 Jerusalem 'judged' (vindicated) her sisters through her own greater sin. English renders variously as 'intercedes,' 'executed judgment,' 'judged'; Spanish 'juzgaste' and German 'intercedes' preserve the judicial coloring that distinguishes this from devotional prayer. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)

en: and-executed-judgment, and-intercedes-for-him, you-judged | es: e-hizo-juicio, juzgaste, y-le-juzgará | fr: et-intercedes-pour-lui, et-prier, prier | de: beten, und-betete, und-intercedes-fuer-ihn 1Sam 2:25; Ps 106:30; Ezek 16:52

3. (1×) A unique occurrence at Genesis 48:11, where Jacob says 'I had not pallalti seeing your face'—meaning 'I had not expected, imagined, or reckoned.' English 'thought,' Spanish 'pensé,' and German 'hatte ich gehofft' (I had hoped) all reflect a cognitive meaning of reckoning or expectation, likely a denominative use from the noun pelilah (judicial assessment, reckoning). This isolated sense preserves the root's oldest layer: forming a judgment or assessment in one's mind. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)

en: thought | es: pensé | fr: thought | de: hatte-ich-gehofft Gen 48:11

פָּלָל H6420 N-proper-ms (1×)

Palal: a wall-builder who helped repair Jerusalem's fortifications under Nehemiah

Palal is mentioned in Nehemiah 3:25 as one of the individuals who worked on rebuilding Jerusalem's wall. The name itself relates to prayer or intercession—fitting for someone engaged in the sacred work of restoring God's city. Each builder named in Nehemiah 3 represents both literal construction and spiritual rebuilding. They weren't just stacking stones but reconstituting Jerusalem as a holy city, a physical declaration that God's people had returned and would not be moved again. Palal's particular section included repairs near the projecting tower and the king's upper house.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 3:25, identifying one of the builders who repaired Jerusalem's wall following the Babylonian exile. Palal worked on a section near the projecting tower and the king's upper palace. As with all the builders named in this chapter, Palal's work was both practical and symbolic—reconstructing physical defenses while demonstrating the returned community's determination to establish Jerusalem securely as God's city. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Palal | es: Palal | fr: [פלל] | de: betete Neh 3:25

פְּלַלְיָה H6421 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pelaliah: a priest, son of Amzi, in post-exilic Jerusalem

Pelaliah appears in Nehemiah 11:12 as a priest serving in post-exilic Jerusalem, specifically identified as son of Amzi. The name means something like 'Yahweh has intervened' or 'Yahweh has judged'—theologically rich for a priest whose role involved mediating God's intervention through sacrifice and blessing. These priestly genealogies in Nehemiah document the legitimate restoration of temple service after the exile. Pelaliah represents one family maintaining the authorized priestly line, ensuring that worship in the restored temple was conducted by properly credentialed descendants of Aaron.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 11:12, identifying a priest serving in Jerusalem after the return from Babylon. As son of Amzi, Pelaliah was part of the reconstituted priestly establishment in the restored temple. His name, meaning something like 'Yahweh has intervened,' reflects the theological conviction that undergirded these genealogies: God had indeed intervened to restore His people and His worship, and Pelaliah's priestly service was evidence of that divine faithfulness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pelalyah | es: Amsi | fr: [פלליה] | de: [פלליה] Neh 11:12

פְּלֹנִי H6422 Prep-l (1×)

To a certain one; to someone unnamed or unspecified (Aramaic pronoun)

This Aramaic phrase appears in Daniel 8:13, where one holy one speaks 'to a certain one'—someone unspecified. It's a deliberate vagueness, like saying 'to someone' or 'to so-and-so.' The text doesn't identify either the speaker or the addressee, maintaining an air of mystery about the angelic conversation Daniel overhears. This indefiniteness serves a literary purpose: Daniel is witnessing heavenly dialogue not meant for him initially, catching only fragments of a larger celestial discussion about the little horn's blasphemies and the sanctuary's desecration.

(1×) An Aramaic phrase meaning 'to a certain one' or 'to someone' in Daniel 8:13, where one holy one speaks to another unnamed holy one. The deliberate vagueness serves to emphasize the mysterious nature of the angelic conversation Daniel overhears. Rather than identifying the speakers precisely, the text preserves the sense that Daniel is witnessing a fragment of heavenly discourse not originally addressed to him, heightening the revelatory nature of what he learns about the appointed time. INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: to-the-certain-one | es: al-cierto | fr: palais | de: [לפלמונ׳] Dan 8:13

פְּלֹנִי H6423 Adj-msc (3×)

a certain one, so-and-so (indefinite designation for unnamed person or place)

This pronoun serves as an indefinite placeholder—'a certain one' or 'so-and-so'—when avoiding or withholding a specific name. It always pairs with 'almonî (another indefinite term) in the idiom 'pelonî almonî, meaning 'such-and-such a person/place.' Ruth 4:1 has Boaz address the nearer kinsman as 'Come here, friend, and sit down'—literally 'so-and-so.' 1 Samuel 21:3 and 2 Kings 6:8 use it for unnamed places: 'such-and-such a place.' The construction parallels Arabic 'fulān and modern 'John Doe'—a deliberate non-identification, whether for privacy, anonymity, or rhetorical effect.

(3×) An indefinite pronoun meaning 'a certain one' or 'so-and-so,' used when deliberately not naming a person or place. Ruth 4:1 has Boaz call to the nearer kinsman: 'Turn aside, friend (פְּלֹנִי אַלְמֹנִי), sit down here'—avoiding his name (perhaps because he failed his duty). 1 Samuel 21:3 (verse 2): 'the king has charged me...meet me at such-and-such a place (מָקוֹם פְּלֹנִי אַלְמֹנִי).' 2 Kings 6:8: 'In such-and-such a place (בְּמָקוֹם פְּלֹנִי אַלְמֹנִי) shall be my camp.' The paired phrase creates emphatic indefiniteness. Compare Arabic ٫. Translations: 'so-and-so,' 'such-and-such,' Spanish 'fulano,' 'tal.' SUCH (KIND/TYPE) en: so-and-so, such-and-such | es: fulano, tal | fr: ainsi-et-ainsi, tel-et-tel | de: [פלנ׳], such-und-such Ruth 4:1; 1Sam 21:3; 2Kgs 6:8

פָּלַס H6424 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (6×)

To weigh, ponder, evaluate; to make level or smooth a path (Piel denominative from peles, 'scales')

A Piel denominative verb drawn from the noun for 'scales' or 'balance,' palas carries the vivid image of placing something on a scale to test its true weight. In one stream of usage, it describes weighing out or pondering actions and character, as when the psalmist accuses corrupt judges of weighing out violence (Ps 58:2). In the other, it means to make a path level and smooth, whether God leveling the way for the righteous (Isa 26:7) or the sage urging the pupil to make straight the track underfoot (Prov 4:26). The Spanish 'pesar' and 'allanar' neatly capture these two faces of the word.

1. weigh, ponder, evaluate (3×) To weigh out, ponder, or evaluate, as if placing on a balance. Used metaphorically of moral reckoning: Psalm 58:2 accuses judges of 'weighing out violence' with their hands, and Proverbs 5:6, 21 speak of God pondering a person's paths. Spanish 'pesar/ponderar' and German 'wiegen heraus' preserve the weighing metaphor clearly. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: He-ponders, you-ponder, you-weigh-out | es: consideres, pesáis, pondera | fr: peser | de: [מפלס], [תפלס], du-wiegen-heraus Ps 58:2; Prov 5:6; Prov 5:21

2. make level, smooth (a path) (3×) To make level or smooth, said of preparing a path or way. Proverbs 4:26 commands 'make level the track of your feet,' and Isaiah 26:7 declares God levels the path of the upright. Spanish 'allanar' (to flatten) and the English 'make level' converge on the road-preparation image, distinct from the evaluative sense. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: You-make-level, he-made, make-level | es: Niveló, Pondera, allanas | fr: [תִּפְלֹס], peser | de: [כלס], [תִּכְלֹס], er-gemacht Ps 78:50; Prov 4:26; Isa 26:7

פֶּלֶס H6425 N-ms (2×)

Balance, scale, weighing device (Proverbs 16:11; Isaiah 40:12)

This noun refers to a balance or weighing scale, always appearing alongside the more common term for scales (mo'znayim). Proverbs 16:11 speaks of honest scales and balances belonging to the Lord—emphasizing commercial integrity. Isaiah 40:12 uses it rhetorically: who has weighed mountains in scales and hills in a balance? The answer: only God, highlighting his incomparable power.

(2×) A weighing instrument, specifically a scale or balance used in commerce or rhetoric. Spanish 'balanza' and French 'péles' (scale) identify this measuring device. Both passages pair it with standard scales terminology, suggesting this may be a specific part (the beam?) or a poetic synonym. Isaiah's cosmic imagery makes the literal commercial tool into a metaphor for divine sovereignty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: balance, with-a-scale | es: Balanza, con-balanza | fr: [בפלס], פלס | de: [בפלס], [פלס] Prov 16:11; Isa 40:12

פָּלַץ H6426 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp / Pn (1×)

Tremble, shudder; shake violently in response to cosmic disturbance

This Hithpael verb appears in Job 9:6, describing how the earth's pillars shudder when God shakes the earth in his anger. It's violent, involuntary trembling—the kind that comes from cosmic-level disturbance. The image is of the very foundations of creation responding to divine power with convulsive shaking. Job uses this metaphor to illustrate God's overwhelming might: if even the pillars that support the world tremble at His touch, how can a human being hope to stand in legal dispute with Him? The term captures existential terror at the cosmic scale.

(1×) A Hithpael verb describing violent shuddering in Job 9:6, specifically of the earth's pillars when God shakes the world. The term conveys involuntary, convulsive trembling in response to overwhelming force—not gentle swaying but violent shaking that threatens structural integrity. Job uses this image to emphasize divine power: even creation's foundations cannot remain stable when God manifests His anger, making human resistance unthinkable. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4473 WITH 3 SENSES

en: tremble | es: tiemblan. | fr: יִתְפַּלָּצוּן | de: [יתפלצון] Job 9:6

פַּלָּצוּת H6427 N-fs (4×)

shuddering, horror; trembling fear or dread that seizes the body in terror

An abstract noun denoting the physical response of shuddering or trembling from horror and dread. Job describes how even remembering his affliction makes him tremble, and 'shuddering seizes my flesh' (21:6). The psalmist cries that 'fear and trembling come upon me, and shuddering overwhelms me' when contemplating enemies' violence (55:5). Isaiah depicts the night of pleasure turned to 'shuddering'—terror replacing joy (21:4). Ezekiel warns that 'shuddering will be on all faces' when judgment comes (7:18). The term captures visceral terror—the involuntary bodily reaction to overwhelming fear, whether from past trauma, present danger, or anticipated judgment.

(4×) Shuddering or trembling from horror and terror. Job 21:6 describes shuddering seizing the flesh when remembering affliction. Psalm 55:5 pairs it with fear and trembling overwhelming the speaker. Isaiah 21:4 tells of pleasure turned to shuddering (terror). Ezekiel 7:18 warns shuddering will cover all faces in judgment. The consistent meaning is involuntary physical trembling from extreme fear or horror—the body's response to dread. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: horror, shuddering | es: horror, temblor, temblor. | fr: [פלצות], angoisse, horreur | de: [פלצות], horror Job 21:6; Ps 55:5; Isa 21:4; Ezek 7:18

פָּלַשׁ H6428 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-Imp-mp (5×)

to roll oneself (in dust or ashes) as a mourning rite; to wallow in grief

A Hithpael verb describing the act of rolling oneself in dust or ashes as an expression of intense grief or lamentation. The prophets command this ritual mourning: Jeremiah urges the daughter of his people to wallow in ashes (Jer 6:26) and the shepherds of the flock to do likewise (Jer 25:34). Ezekiel depicts Tyre's mariners casting dust and rolling in ashes in anguish (Ezek 27:30). Micah 1:10 uses it in a wordplay on the city of Beth-le-aphrah ('house of dust').

(5×) To roll oneself in dust or ashes as a mourning ritual, expressing profound grief or humiliation. Spanish 'revuélcate' (roll yourself) captures the reflexive, physical act. Commanded as prophetic mourning (Jer 6:26; 25:34), performed by Tyre's sailors in lamentation (Ezek 27:30), and employed in a place-name wordplay at Micah 1:10. The Hithpael stem emphasizes the self-directed, deliberate nature of this ritual act of abasement. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: (roll-yourself), [roll-yourself], and-roll-in-ashes | es: (revuélcate), [revuélcate], se-revolcarán | fr: [הִתְפַּלָּשִׁי], [וְהִתְפַּלָּשׁוּ], [וְהִתְפַּלָּשִׁי] | de: [(התפלשי)], [[התפלשתי]], [והתפלשו] Jer 6:26; Jer 25:34; Ezek 27:30; Mic 1:10

פְּלֶשֶׁת H6429 N-proper-fs (8×)

Philistia (Pelesheth) — the coastal territory of the Philistines in southwestern Canaan, used in poetic and late texts.

Pelesheth is the Hebrew geographical name for Philistia, the coastal strip along southwestern Canaan inhabited by the Philistines. Notably, this particular form appears only in poetic and later texts, never in the main prose narratives of Judges or Samuel where the Philistines feature so prominently. It first appears in the Song of the Sea (Exod 15:14), then in prophetic oracles against the nations (Isa 14:29, 31), and in several psalms (Ps 60:10 = 108:10; 83:8; 87:4). The Greek tradition renders it with allophyloi ('foreigners') rather than a transliteration, reflecting how the LXX perceived the Philistines as quintessential outsiders.

Philistia (8×) The geographical territory of the Philistines along the southwestern coast of Canaan, used exclusively in poetic and late biblical texts. The Song of the Sea names its inhabitants as trembling at Israel's deliverance (Exod 15:14). Isaiah's oracles warn Philistia not to rejoice at Assyria's troubles (Isa 14:29, 31). In the Psalms, Philistia appears as a conquered foe ('over Philistia I shout in triumph,' Ps 60:10 = 108:10), a hostile conspirator (Ps 83:8), and even a future worshiper of YHWH (Ps 87:4). The LXX's rendering as allophyloi ('foreigners') and the Assyrian forms Palastu/Pilistu connect this name to Greek Palaistine, the ultimate source of the modern name 'Palestine.' PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: Pelesheth, Philistia | es: Filistea, Filistea?, Peleshet | fr: Philistie, Philistin, Philistins | de: Philistia, Philistäa, [פלשת] Exod 15:14; Ps 60:8; Ps 83:7; Ps 87:4; Ps 108:9

פְּלִשְׁתִּי H6430 N-proper-mp (289×)

Philistine(s) — the people of the coastal plain of Canaan, or an individual member of that nation

A gentilic adjective designating the Philistines, the Sea Peoples who settled along the southern coastal plain of Canaan. In its plural form (pelištîm), it appears over 250 times as a collective national designation — Israel's persistent rival from Judges through David's reign. The singular with the article (happelištî) almost always refers to Goliath, the champion of Gath whom David slew (1 Sam 17). Multilingual renderings reflect both transliteration (Spanish 'Pelishtim,' German 'Philister') and interpretive translation (Greek allophyloi, 'foreigners'), hinting at how ancient translators already perceived these people as outsiders.

1. Philistines (the people/nation) (256×) The Philistines as a collective people or nation, appearing 256 times across the historical and prophetic books. Used in plural (pelištîm) with or without the article, in construct chains like 'land of the Philistines' (Gen 21:32) and 'lords of the Philistines' (Judg 16:5). Cross-lingual evidence is uniform: Spanish 'filisteos,' French 'Philistins,' German 'Philister' all treat this as a stable ethnic designation. Gen 10:14 traces their origin to Egypt via the Caphtorim. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: Philistines, the-Philistines | es: Pelishtim, Pelishtím, filisteos | fr: Philistins, le-Philistins | de: Philister, der-Philister, die-Philister Gen 10:14; Gen 21:32; Gen 21:34; Gen 26:1; Gen 26:8

2. Philistine (individual person) (33×) A single Philistine individual, appearing 33 times exclusively in the singular (happelištî, 'the Philistine'). Nearly all occurrences cluster in 1 Samuel 17–19, referring to Goliath as David's famous antagonist (1 Sam 17:8, 23, 26), with one later reference to a Philistine slain by Abishai (2 Sam 21:17). The Spanish 'el filisteo' and French 'le Philistin' mirror this individuating singular article construction precisely. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES
en: the-Pelishti | es: el-filisteo | fr: le-Philistin | de: der-Pelishti 1Sam 17:8; 1Sam 17:10; 1Sam 17:11; 1Sam 17:16; 1Sam 17:23

פֶּלֶת H6431 N-proper-mp (3×)
Peleth, name of two men (likely textual variant in Numbers)
This name appears in two contexts. In Numbers 16:1, 'Peleth' is listed as father of On the Reubenite, one of Korah's rebellion participants—but most scholars consider this a textual error for 'Pallu' (פַּלּוּא), a known Reubenite clan name. On son of Peleth disappears from the narrative immediately, never mentioned in the rebellion's aftermath, supporting the corruption theory. In 1 Chronicles 2:33, Peleth appears as a Judahite descendant. The name likely means 'deliverance' if genuine, but in Numbers it's probably a scribal corruption that accidentally created a ghost figure in Israel's genealogies.

(3×) Personal name appearing in two genealogical contexts, one likely erroneous. Numbers 16:1 lists 'On son of Peleth (בֶּן־פֶּלֶת) son of Reuben' among Korah's fellow rebels. However, On never reappears in the narrative, and scholars widely propose reading 'Pallu' (פַּלּוּא), a known Reubenite clan (Genesis 46:9), instead—a simple textual corruption. 1 Chronicles 2:33 lists 'Peleth' as a Judahite, son of Jonathan. In 1 Samuel 17:23, some translations render פְּלִשְׁתִּים (Philistines) with forms resembling 'Peleth,' but this is the common gentile 'Philistines,' not the personal name. Translations preserve 'Peleth/Pelet' while often noting the probable error in Numbers. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES
en: Pelet, Peleth, Pelishtim | es: Pelet, filisteos | fr: Pelet, Philistins, [פלת] | de: Pelet, Philister, [פלת] Num 16:1; 1Sam 17:23; 1Chr 2:33

פְּלֶתִי H6432 Art / N-proper-ms (7×)
Pelethites; a corps of elite soldiers in David's royal guard, always paired with the Cherethites
The gentilic noun הַפְּלֵתִי designating the Pelethites, one half of David's elite bodyguard corps always mentioned alongside the Cherethites (הַכְּרֵתִי). Their ethnic origin is debated — possibly Philistine or Aegean mercenaries who attached themselves to David during his years in Philistia. They appear at every crisis of David's reign: guarding the throne (2 Sam 8:18; 20:23), following David in exile during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 15:18), pursuing Sheba's rebellion (2 Sam 20:7), and escorting Solomon to his coronation (1 Kgs 1:38, 44). French and German retain the name untranslated, confirming its status as a proper designation.

and the Pelethites (7×) The Pelethites — a gentilic designation for one of the two corps forming David's elite royal guard, invariably paired with the Cherethites (Kerethites). Their origin is uncertain but likely Philistine or Aegean. Under Benaiah son of Jehoiada's command, they served as the king's personal bodyguard and strike force. They remained loyal during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 15:18), pursued Sheba ben Bichri (2 Sam 20:7), and secured Solomon's accession at Gihon (1 Kgs 1:38, 44). The formulaic pairing 'the Cherethites and the Pelethites' (2 Sam 8:18; 20:23; 1 Chr 18:17) suggests a fixed military institution rather than ad hoc mercenary bands. Spanish los peleteos and French le Pelethites reflect the collective sense. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-the-Pelethites, the-Pelethites | es: el-peleteo, los-peleteos, y-el-peleteo | fr: [והפלתי], et-le-Pelethites, le-Pelethites | de: [והפלתי], der-Pelethites, und-der-Pelethites 2Sam 8:18; 2Sam 15:18; 2Sam 20:7; 2Sam 20:23; 1Kgs 1:38

פֻּם H6433 N-msc (6×)
Mouth (Aramaic); the organ of speech or the opening of something, used in Daniel of kings, beasts, and a pit
The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew peh ('mouth'), appearing six times in Daniel. It refers to the physical mouth of a king issuing a decree (Dan 4:31), the mouth of lions in the den (Dan 6:22), the mouth of a visionary beast devouring (Dan 7:5), and the mouth of the little horn speaking arrogantly (Dan 7:8, 20), as well as the opening of a pit sealed with a stone (Dan 6:17). The word carries both literal and figurative weight — speech, consumption, and containment all flow from this single term.

mouth (Aramaic) (6×) The physical mouth or opening, used in Aramaic portions of Daniel for the mouth of a king (Dan 4:31), lions (Dan 6:22), apocalyptic beasts (Dan 7:5, 8, 20), and the sealed opening of the lions' den (Dan 6:17). Spanish boca and German Mund both render it straightforwardly, while French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew/Aramaic form untranslated in brackets, reflecting the specialized Aramaic register of the term. The semantic range is unified: the bodily organ or analogous opening through which speech, eating, or passage occurs. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-mouth, in-its-mouth, in-mouth-of | es: en-boca-de-ella, en-la-boca-de, la-boca-de | fr: [בפם], [בפמה], [ופם] | de: Mund, [בפם], [בפמה] Dan 4:31; Dan 6:17; Dan 6:22; Dan 7:5; Dan 7:8

פִּנָּה H6434 Art / N-fp (1×)
The corners; angular points or extremities of structures or territories
This plural form appears in Zechariah 14:10 describing the geographical extent of elevated Jerusalem in the eschatological vision. The 'corners' refer to angular points or extremities—the city's edge points that define its boundaries. In architectural contexts throughout Scripture, 'corners' mark critical structural points, places where walls meet and strength is concentrated. In territorial description, corners delimit the extent of land. Zechariah's use suggests completeness: from one corner to another encompasses the whole, all of Jerusalem transformed and elevated, from Benjamin Gate to the site of the former gate, to the Corner Gate.

(1×) Refers to corners or angular points in Zechariah 14:10, defining the extent of Jerusalem in the prophet's vision of the city's future elevation. The term marks boundary points—where walls meet, where territory is delimited. By naming specific corners (from one gate to another), Zechariah encompasses the whole city, suggesting complete transformation. Corners served as reference points for describing both architectural structures and territorial extent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-Corners | es: la-esquina | fr: le-face | de: der-Angesicht Zech 14:10

פֶּן־ H6435 Conj-w / Conj (133×)
Lest — conjunction introducing a negative purpose or apprehension clause, expressing fear that something undesirable may occur Pen is a conjunction occurring 133 times, always introducing a clause that expresses something the speaker fears or wishes to prevent: 'lest you die' (Gen 3:3), 'lest we be scattered' (Gen 11:4), 'lest he stretch out his hand' (Gen 3:22). It regularly follows imperatives, warnings, or statements of precaution — take heed to yourself pen you forget (Deut 4:9; 6:12; 8:11). The force is consistently one of anxious avoidance or protective foresight. Its etymology is debated: some connect it to panah ('to turn') as 'for the turning aside of,' while others relate it to an Aramaic particle meaning 'perhaps.' Spanish renders the idea with 'no sea que,' French with 'de peur que,' and German with 'damit nicht.'

lest, so that not (133×) Conjunction of negative purpose or apprehension, introducing the feared or unwanted outcome of an action: 'lest, for fear that, so that not.' It follows commands and warnings to mark what must be averted — 'do not eat from it, lest you die' (Gen 3:3); 'take heed lest you forget' (Deut 4:9; 8:11); 'lest he put out his hand' (Gen 3:22). The particle appears always with the imperfect verb, lending an air of anxious anticipation. Spanish 'no sea que,' French 'de peur que,' and German 'damit nicht' all require multi-word constructions, highlighting pen's efficiency as a single-particle negative-purpose marker in Hebrew. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: lest, lest- | es: no-sea-que, no-sea-que- | fr: de-peur-que, de-peur-que- | de: damit-nicht, damit-nicht-, dass-nicht- Gen 3:3; Gen 3:22; Gen 11:4; Gen 19:15; Gen 19:17

פַּנַּג H6436 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

Pannag: an unknown food product or grain, possibly confections or special cakes

This enigmatic word appears once in Ezekiel 27:17, in the list of goods Judah and Israel traded with Tyre. It's mentioned alongside wheat from Minnith, honey, oil, and balm—all food products. Ancient versions guessed at its meaning, and modern scholars remain uncertain. Some suggest it was a type of confection or specialty grain product. The Spanish preserves the Hebrew term transliterated (pannag), acknowledging the uncertainty. What's clear is that it was something valuable enough to list among Tyre's important imports, presumably something delicious or luxurious that wealthy Phoenicians desired.

(1×) An unknown food product mentioned in Ezekiel 27:17 among the trade goods Judah and Israel supplied to Tyre. Listed with wheat, honey, oil, and balm, it was presumably edible and valuable—perhaps confections, special cakes, or a grain preparation. The uncertainty of its identification hasn't stopped translators from attempting renderings like 'confections,' though many simply transliterate the Hebrew. Whatever pannag was, it represented something desirable enough to be worth international trade. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-confections | es: y-pannag | fr: et-Pannag | de: [וכנג] Ezek 27:17

פָּנָה H6437 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (135×)

turn, turn toward, face, orient; prepare or clear a way; turn of time (evening); look, regard; decline, pass away

Most commonly describes physical turning of the body or changing direction — the way Pharaoh turned and entered his house (Exodus 7:23), or how Moses turned aside to see the burning bush. Can express static orientation (which way something faces), as when the temple basins faced outward in 1 Kings 7:25. The intensive Piel stem means preparing or clearing a road, particularly in Isaiah's 'prepare the way of the LORD' (40:3). In temporal contexts, the infinitive marks transitions: 'at the turning of evening' (Genesis 24:63). Occasionally implies giving attention or regard, and rarely describes time declining or passing away.

1. Qal: turn, turn around (85×) The primary physical sense of rotating the body or changing direction in space, supported by consistent use of Arabic ڤ (turn around), Korean 돌아보았다/돌이켰다 (turned/turned back), and Swahili -geuka across all grammatical forms. This is the default meaning with 85 occurrences, including Moses turning to look right and left (Exodus 2:12) and military forces turning to flee (Judges 20:45). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-turned, and-turned, turn | es: Y-se-volvieron, Y-se-volvió, Y-volvieron | fr: et-il-se-tourna, et-il-tourna, et-tourna | de: und-er-wandte, und-wandte, wenden Exod 7:23; Exod 10:6; Exod 16:10; Exod 32:15; Lev 19:4

2. Qal: face toward, be oriented (22×) Static orientation rather than dynamic turning — describes which direction something faces or is positioned toward. Arabic shifts to ڤ/ڤ (directed/facing) and Korean uses 향하는 (facing toward), distinguishing this from active motion. Used architecturally in Joshua's boundary descriptions ('the border faces toward...') and for the temple fixtures in 1 Kings 7:25. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: facing, the-facing, turning | es: la-que-mira, las-que-miran, mira | fr: [פנים], face, faisant-face | de: Angesicht, der-facing, facing Josh 15:2; Josh 15:7; 1Kgs 7:25

3. Hifil: cause to turn (8×) Hifil causative stem: making something or someone turn, or turning something oneself. Arabic employs ڤ (they rotated/turned something), Korean 돌렸다 (caused to turn), showing the transitive causative force. Examples include Samson tying torches to foxes' tails and turning them loose (Judges 15:4) and the turning of hearts (1 Samuel 10:9). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-turned, as-he-turned, has-turned- | es: cuando-volvió, ha-vuelto, quien-vuelva | fr: comme-il-se-tourna, et-tourna, se-tourner | de: und-wandte, wandte-sich, wenden Judg 15:4; 1Sam 10:9; Jer 46:5; Jer 46:21; Jer 47:3

4. Piel: prepare, clear a way (6×) Intensive Piel stem with specialized sense of clearing, preparing, or making ready — especially roads or spaces. Arabic renders with ڤ (prepare!) and ڤ (make room!), Korean 예비하라 (prepare!), Swahili -tayarisha (prepare/make ready). Famous in Isaiah 40:3 'prepare the way of the LORD' and Psalm 80:9 'you cleared ground for it (the vine)'. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-cleared, and-he-will-clear-, clear | es: Limpiaste, Preparad, preparad | fr: avoir-prépara, et-se-tourner, se-tourner | de: du-cleared, habe-bereitet, und-wandte-sich Gen 24:31; Ps 80:9; Isa 40:3; Isa 57:14; Isa 62:10

5. Qal infinitive: turning of time (6×) Temporal use: the infinitive construct with preposition expressing 'at the turn of' or 'toward the turning of' evening, morning, or day. Arabic employs ڤ (at the approach of) and Spanish al acercarse/al amanecer (at the approach/at dawn), marking transitions between temporal periods. Found in Genesis 24:63 'at eventide' and Exodus 14:27 'at the morning watch'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-turning-of, at-turn-of, at-turning-of | es: al-acercarse-, al-amanecer, al-amanecer-de | fr: se-tourner, vers-tournant-de, vers-turning-de- | de: bei-turning-von, bei-wenden-von, gegen- Gen 24:63; Exod 14:27; Deut 23:11; Judg 19:26; Ps 46:5

6. Qal: look, regard, give attention (3×) Extension to mental attention: turning one's gaze or focus toward someone, implying regard or consideration. Hindi uses देखा (saw) and ध्यान दिया (gave attention), Swahili -angalia (look at), showing the metaphorical shift from physical to perceptual turning. Only 3 clear instances: Exodus 2:12 (Moses looked this way and that), Psalm 102:17 (he regards the prayer), Haggai 1:9 (you looked for much). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: Looking, and-he-turned, he-has-regarded | es: Esperabais, Se-volvió, Y-miró | fr: et-il-tourna, se-tourner, tourner | de: er-hat-regarded, und-er-wandte, wandte-sich Exod 2:12; Ps 102:17; Hag 1:9

7. Qal: decline, pass away (2×) Temporal or figurative declining, passing away, or waning. Notably, Arabic switches to ڤ (perished/vanished) and ڤ (inclined/declined) — different roots from the core 'turn' verb, indicating genuine polysemy recognized cross-linguistically. Describes the day declining (Jeremiah 6:4) and years passing as a tale (Psalm 90:9). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: has-turned, pass-away | es: declina, declinaron | fr: se-tourner, tourner | de: pass-weg, wenden Ps 90:9; Jer 6:4

8. (1×) Single uncertain occurrence in Zephaniah 3:15 'he has turned away (judgment)' — possibly removal or reversal sense, but too isolated to characterize confidently. Arabic ha-apartado (has removed) suggests a take-away meaning distinct from spatial turning. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: he-has-turned-away | es: ha-apartado | fr: se-tourner | de: wandte-sich Zeph 3:15

9. (1×) Anomalous single occurrence in Leviticus 14:36: 'they shall empty (the house)' before the priest examines for leprosy. Spanish y-vaciarán (they will empty), French et-ils-devra-vide (must empty). This may belong to a different root or represent a specialized Levitical technical term that became isolated from the core turning semantics. EMPTYING DEVASTATING

en: and-they-shall-empty | es: y-vaciarán | fr: et-ils-devra-vide | de: und-sie-soll-leer Lev 14:36

10. (1×) Single architectural term in 2 Chronicles 25:23 rendered 'the corner (gate)' — the place where a wall turns. German wenden, French [הכונה], showing the turning point where direction changes. May be substantival use of the participle: 'the turning place'. GEOG-

RAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-corner | es: la-Esquina | fr: [הכונה] | de: wenden 2Chr 25:23

פִּנָּה H6438 Art / N-fp (29×)

Corner, cornerstone, or chief; the angle of a structure, a foundation stone, or a leader of the people

The Hebrew pinnah denotes the physical corner or angle of a building, altar, city wall, or street. From this concrete sense springs the powerful image of the cornerstone (even pinnah), the chief foundation stone that anchors an entire structure – a metaphor Scripture applies both to God's creative work (Job 38:6) and to the Messiah whom the builders rejected (Psalm 118:22). In a further figurative leap, the 'corners of the people' (pinnot ha-am) designates chiefs or principal leaders, the human cornerstones holding a community together. Spanish piedra angular and English 'cornerstone' both capture this architectural-to-leadership trajectory.

1. corner or angle (22×) The physical corner or angle of a building, altar, city wall, roof, or street. Used 22 times across Exodus, Kings, Chronicles, Nehemiah, Ezekiel, and Proverbs to denote the spatial turning-point of a constructed object or urban feature. The Spanish esquina and French coin consistently render this concrete architectural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-corner-of, corner, corner-of | es: esquina, esquina-de-, esquina-de-ella | fr: [הפנה], [הפנות], [פנה] | de: [הפנה], [הפנות], [פנה] Exod 27:2; Exod 38:2; 2Kgs 14:13; 2Chr 26:9; 2Chr 26:15

2. cornerstone or foundation stone (4×) The cornerstone or chief foundation stone (even pinnah), used both literally of architecture and metaphorically of God's creative and redemptive purposes. Job 38:6 asks who laid earth's cornerstone; Isaiah 28:16 promises a tested stone in Zion; Psalm 118:22 declares the rejected stone became the head corner – a passage the New Testament applies directly to Christ. Spanish piedra angular captures this dual register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-cornerstone, corner, cornerstone-of | es: angular-de, piedra-angular, piedra-angular-de | fr: [פנת], coin, sa-angle-elle | de: [פנה], [פנת], [פנתה] Job 38:6; Isa 19:13; Isa 28:16; Zech 10:4

3. chief or leader (3×) A figurative extension where 'corners' denotes chiefs, leaders, or principal men of the community. In Judges 20:2 and 1 Samuel 14:38, pinnot ha-am ('corners of the people') identifies the ruling leaders around whom the nation is structured, much as cornerstones anchor a building. The Spanish jefes-de makes the metaphor explicit where English preserves the architectural image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: corners-of | es: esquinas-de, jefes-de | fr: coins-de | de: Ecken-von Judg 20:2; 1Sam 14:38; 1Kgs 7:34

פְּנוּאֵל H6439 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Penuel/Peniel ('face of God'); a place east of the Jordan and a personal name in Judah and Benjamin.

A proper noun meaning 'face of God,' appearing in two variant spellings: Peniel (פְּנִיאֵל, Gen 32:31) and Penuel (פְּנוּאֵל). The name is most famous as the site east of the Jordan where Jacob wrestled with the divine being and declared, 'I have seen God face to face' (Gen 32:30–31). Gideon later encountered hostility from the men of Penuel during his pursuit of the Midianites (Judg 8:8–9, 17), and Jeroboam fortified the city (1 Kgs 12:25). The name also belongs to two individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies (1 Chr 4:4; 8:25). The LXX rendering 'eidos theou' (form of God) in Genesis preserves the etymological meaning.

Penuel / Peniel (proper name) (10×) The proper name Penuel/Peniel (פְּנִיאֵל / פְּנוּאֵל), meaning 'face of God.' Primarily a place name for the site east of the Jordan near the Jabbok where Jacob wrestled with the divine being and named the spot 'for I have seen God face to face' (Gen 32:30–31). The town reappears in Gideon's campaign against Midian (Judg 8:8–9, 17) and as a city fortified by Jeroboam (1 Kgs 12:25). Two individuals also bear the name in 1 Chronicles (4:4; 8:25). Multilingual transliterations — Spanish 'Peniel/Penuel,' French 'Peniel/Penuel,' German 'Pniel/Pnuel' — preserve the theophoric element across traditions. PERSONAL NAMES en: Peniel, Penuel, [ketiv] | es: (y-Penuel), Peniel, Penuel | fr: Penuel, Péniel, [ופנואל] | de: Penuel, Pniel, Pnuel Gen 32:30; Gen 32:31; Judg 8:8; Judg 8:9

פָּנֶה H6440 Conj-w (2127×)

face, presence, surface; also before (spatial/temporal)

Literally 'face,' this extremely common Hebrew noun extends to a remarkable range of meanings. It can denote the physical face of a person or animal, the surface of the ground, the presence of God (especially in the idiom 'before the LORD'), spatial position ('in front of'), and even temporal priority ('formerly'). Appearing over 2,000 times in the Hebrew Bible, its core meaning of 'face' radiates outward into spatial, temporal, and theological domains through natural metaphorical extension.

1. before, in the presence of (locative/relational) (1501×) Split from sense 127821. Criteria: Prepositional construction 'before the LORD' (liphnê YHWH), 'in front of,' 'in the presence of.' Theological and spatial preposition derived from the body-part noun.
en: before | es: ante, delante-de, delante-de- | fr: devant | de: vor, vor- Gen 27:7; Gen 43:14; Gen 47:18; Exod 6:30; Exod 8:20

2. face, countenance (body part) (369×) Split from sense 127821. Criteria: Literal face as physical feature: 'he fell on his face,' 'saw his face,' 'covered his face.' Direct reference to facial anatomy.
en: face-of, surface-of, the-face-of | es: el-rostro-de, faz-de, frente-a | fr: face-de, surface-de | de: Angesicht, Angesicht-von, surface-von Gen 31:2; Gen 31:5; Gen 33:10; Gen 44:26; Gen 50:1

3. face, countenance (187×) Spatial orientation or position, meaning 'before,' 'in front of,' or 'facing.' Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent directional vocabulary (Spanish delante, French devant, Chinese 面前), distinguishing this physical-spatial sense from the theological presence sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-face, face, of-face | es: a-cara, cara, en-ella | fr: de-face, face, à-face | de: Angesicht, von-Angesicht, zu-Angesicht Gen 32:30; Exod 33:11; Lev 17:10

4. before, prior to (temporal) (52×) Split from sense 127850. Criteria: Temporal precedence meaning 'before' or 'formerly' (Arabic qabla/qadiman, Korean jeon-e, Swahili kabla/zamani), distinct from spatial 'in front of'
en: before-him, formerly | es: Antiguamente, antes, antes-de-él | fr: autrefois, devant-lui, face | de: Angesicht, formerly, frueher Exod 10:14; Deut 2:10; Deut 2:12; Deut 2:20; Deut 4:32

5. because of, on account of (14×) The surface or face of the ground, earth, or land. This extension from human face to terrestrial surface is reflected in translations that maintain the 'face of' construction (Arabic ; Swahili uso wa nchi) or shift to 'surface' terminology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-because-of, and-from-before, and-from-face-of | es: a-causa-de, de-ante, de-delante-de | fr: de-devant, et-de-face-de, et-von-devant | de: und-von-Angesicht-von, und-von-vor, von-vor Exod 8:24; Exod 9:11; Exod 9:30; 2Kgs 9:14; 2Chr 32:7

6. surface, face of (4×) Temporal sense meaning 'before,' 'formerly,' or 'previous,' derived from the spatial metaphor of what stands before one. Translations use temporal adverbs (Spanish antes, French autrefois, German früher), marking the shift from space to time. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-twists, face-of-, its-surface | es: faz-de, faz-de-, su-faz | fr: face, face-de- | de: Angesicht, Angesicht-von-, Fläche- Gen 2:6; 2Kgs 25:19; Isa 24:1; Isa 28:25

9. literal physical face Split from sense 127850. Criteria: Anatomical sense using face vocabulary (Spanish rostro/cara, Arabic , Hindi चेहरा), referring to the physical face of a human or animal

---

פְּנִימָה H6441 Adv (13×)

Inside, inward, within; a directional adverb denoting spatial interiority, especially of the temple.

Formed with the directional he suffix on panim ('face'), penimah literally means 'faceward' from the perspective of one entering — that is, 'toward the inside' or 'within.' The word appears almost exclusively in architectural descriptions of sacred space, especially Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:18–30) and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40:16; 41:3). Combined with the preposition min it means 'from within' (1 Kgs 6:19, 21), and with lamed it means 'to the inside' (Ezek 41:3; 2 Chr 29:16). Its association with the inner sanctum gives this otherwise mundane spatial term a sacral quality — to go penimah is to approach the holy of holies.

inside, inward (13×) A directional adverb meaning 'inside, inward, within,' built from panim ('face') with the locative he suffix — literally 'faceward' as seen from the entrance. Used predominantly in temple contexts: Solomon's temple interior (1 Kgs 6:18, 19, 21, 30) and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40:16; 41:3). With preposition lamed it indicates motion toward the interior ('to inside,' 2 Chr 29:16, 18; Ezek 41:3); with min it denotes origin from within ('from inside,' 1 Kgs 6:19, 21). Also occurs in Leviticus 10:18 for the tabernacle interior and in Psalm 45:14 for the royal palace chambers. INSIDE AND WITHIN

en: for-within, from-within, inside | es: adentro, adentro-de, de-adentro | fr: [לפנימה], [מפנימה], [פנימה] | de: [לפנימה], [מפנימה], [פנימה] Lev 10:18; 1Kgs 6:18; 1Kgs 6:19; 1Kgs 6:21; 1Kgs 6:30

פְּנִימִי H6442 Art / Adj-fp (32×)

inner — an adjective describing the interior section of a building, especially the temple or its courts

Penimi is an adjective meaning 'inner' or 'interior,' derived from panim ('face, front') through the directional suffix -i. All 32 occurrences carry the definite article and describe architectural spaces, overwhelmingly in Ezekiel's temple vision (21 of 32 uses fall in Ezekiel 40-46). In Solomon's temple, it distinguishes the inner court from the outer (1 Kgs 6:27, 36; 7:12) and marks the innermost chambers where the ark rested. Ezekiel intensifies this usage, repeatedly specifying the inner court, inner gate, and inner rooms of his visionary temple as the reader is led through increasingly sacred zones. The spatial theology is unmistakable: 'inner' correlates with increasing holiness, moving from the outer courts accessible to all toward the penimith — the inner sanctum of God's dwelling. Spanish 'interior,' French 'interieur,' and German 'innerlich' all confirm the uniform spatial sense.

the inner (32×) An adjective denoting the interior portion of a sacred or royal building, always used with the definite article. In Solomon's temple it marks the inner court and chambers (1 Kgs 6:27, 36; 7:12, 50). In Ezekiel 40-46, it dominates the temple vision, specifying inner gates, inner courts, and inner rooms as spatial markers of increasing holiness. The word maps sacred architecture into concentric zones radiating inward toward God's presence. INSIDE AND WITHIN

en: the-inner | es: el-interior, interiores, la-interior | fr: intérieur, l'intérieur | de: [הפנימית], innerlich 1Kgs 6:27; 1Kgs 6:36; 1Kgs 7:12; 1Kgs 7:50; 1Chr 28:11

פְּנִינִים H6443 Prep-m / N-mp (7×)

precious stones, corals, or pearls; gems of great value used figuratively for wisdom and a worthy wife

A plural noun פְּנִינִים whose exact mineralogical referent remains debated — variously identified as corals (branching red sea-growth), pearls, or rubies. What is clear from every context is supreme value. The word appears almost exclusively in comparative statements: wisdom is 'more precious than peninim' (Prov 3:15; 8:11), a noble wife's worth 'far exceeds peninim' (Prov 31:10), and true wisdom cannot be purchased with them (Job 28:18). Lamentations uses them for their red color, comparing the ruddy complexion of Zion's nobles to these gems (Lam 4:7). Spanish más-que-perlas and French perle converge on the pearl identification.

precious stones (pearls, corals, jewels) (7×) Precious stones of exceptional value — possibly red corals, pearls, or rubies (the exact identification remains uncertain). The Arabic cognate fanan ('branch') supports the coral interpretation, while traditional Jewish commentary favored pearls. Nearly every occurrence is comparative: wisdom surpasses them in worth (Prov 3:15; 8:11), a noble wife's value exceeds them (Prov 31:10), and they cannot purchase true understanding (Job 28:18; Prov 20:15). Lamentations 4:7 uniquely references their reddish hue, comparing Zion's princes to peninim in complexion — evidence favoring the red coral identification. Spanish más-que-corales alongside más-que-perlas reflects the ongoing translation ambiguity. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: [ketiv], above-jewels, more-than-corals | es: [más-que-perlas], más-que-corales, más-que-perlas | fr: [מכנים], de-perle, perle | de: [(מכנים)], [[מכניים]], [מכנים] Job 28:18; Prov 3:15; Prov 8:11; Prov 20:15

פְּנִנָּה H6444 N-proper-fs (3×)

Peninnah, Elkanah's second wife, rival to Hannah

Peninnah was one of Elkanah's two wives, mentioned only in 1 Samuel 1. While Hannah remained childless, Peninnah had children and used this advantage to provoke and humiliate Hannah, especially during their annual trips to Shiloh for sacrifice. Her name possibly means 'pearl' or 'coral,' but her behavior contrasts sharply with any precious connotation. She represents the painful dynamics of polygamous households and serves as foil to Hannah's suffering and eventual triumph. After 1 Samuel 1, she disappears from the narrative, overshadowed by Hannah's miraculous conception of Samuel.

(3×) Personal name of Elkanah's wife and Hannah's rival. 1 Samuel 1:2 introduces the household: 'He had two wives. The name of one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah (פְּנִנָּה). And Peninnah (וְלִפְנִנָּה) had children, but Hannah had no children.' Verse 4 notes Elkanah's sacrificial portions: 'to Peninnah (וְלִפְנִנָּה) his wife and to all her sons and daughters he gave portions.' Her role as the fertile wife who provoked the barren Hannah drives the narrative tension. The name may derive from 'pearl/coral.' Translations preserve: 'Peninnah,' Spanish 'Peniná,' French 'Peninna.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Peninnah, to-Peninnah | es: Peniná, a-Peniná, para-Peniná | fr: Peninna, à-Peninna | de: Peninna, zu-Peninna 1Sam 1:2; 1Sam 1:4

פָּנַק H6445 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

One who pampers; someone who indulges or treats with excessive leniency

This Piel participle appears in Proverbs 29:21, warning that 'one who pampers his servant from youth will find him a son in the end'—though the meaning of the final word is disputed. The term describes indulging or treating with excessive softness, removing normal discipline or expectations. The proverb warns against blurring the master-servant boundary through over-indulgence. A servant raised without proper structure and expectations becomes presumptuous, expecting treatment as a son and heir rather than accepting his role. The word captures the problematic tendency to spare someone from necessary discipline, creating entitlement.

(1×) A Piel participle in Proverbs 29:21 describing someone who pampers or indulges a servant, treating him with excessive leniency from youth. The term suggests removing appropriate boundaries and discipline, allowing improper familiarity. The proverb warns that this approach backfires: the servant grows presumptuous, perhaps even expecting inheritance rights. The verb captures the problematic side of kindness—indulgence that undermines proper structure and creates entitlement rather than gratitude. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: one-who-pampers | es: El-que-mima | fr: מפנק | de: [מפנק] Prov 29:21

פַּס H6446 Art / N-mp (5×)

flat (of hand/foot); used in 'ketonet passim,' an ornamental long-sleeved tunic

A noun meaning the flat of the hand or sole of the foot, appearing exclusively in the construct phrase ketonet passim — the famous garment reaching to the palms and soles. Jacob gave such a tunic to Joseph (Gen 37:3, 23, 32), and Tamar wore one as a royal princess (2 Sam 13:18-19). The traditional rendering 'coat of many colors' follows the LXX, but the Hebrew points to an ankle-and-wrist-length robe signifying special status. Multilingual glosses reflect the interpretive tradition: German 'bunt' (colorful), Spanish 'colores.'

(5×) The flat of the hand or sole of the foot, used exclusively in the phrase ketonet passim to describe a tunic extending to the extremities — a garment of distinction. Given by Jacob to Joseph as a mark of favor (Gen 37:3, 23, 32) and worn by virgin princesses (2 Sam 13:18-19). The widespread rendering 'many colors' (English, Spanish 'colores,' German 'bunt') reflects ancient versional tradition, but the Hebrew etymology points to length and coverage rather than coloration. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: many-colors, the-many-colors | es: colores, los-colores, los-muchos-colores | fr: beaucoup-colors, le-beaucoup-colors | de: bunt, das-bunte, der-viele-colors Gen 37:3; Gen 37:23; Gen 37:32; 2Sam 13:18; 2Sam 13:19

פַּס H6447 N-msd (2×)

Palm of the hand (Daniel 5:5, 24, where the hand writes on the wall)

This Aramaic noun means the palm or flat of the hand. It appears only in Daniel 5, in the famous handwriting-on-the-wall scene. Verse 5 describes the palm of a hand appearing and writing on the palace wall, causing Belshazzar to turn pale. Verse 24 refers back to the same hand that was sent from God's presence.

(2×) The flat part or palm of the hand, used in the Aramaic construct 'palm of a hand.' The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'la palma de,' French appears to bracket the Aramaic untranslated) confirms this anatomical meaning. Both Daniel references describe the supernatural hand that wrote Babylon's doom—one of Scripture's most dramatic moments, where this body-part term becomes the instrument of divine message. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: palm-of | es: la-palma-de | fr: [פַּס], [פַּסָּא] | de: [פַּס], [פַּסָּא] Dan 5:5; Dan 5:24

פָּסַג H6448 V-Piel-Imp-mp (1×)

Go through, pass between; traverse or carefully examine (uncertain derivation)

This imperative appears in Psalm 48:13, where worshipers are told to 'walk about Zion, go around her, number her towers, consider her ramparts, go through her palaces.' The final verb is textually uncertain—other suggestions include 'inspect' or 'consider carefully.' In context, it's part of a liturgical procession around Jerusalem, meditating on the city's defenses as evidence of God's protection. Whatever the precise nuance, it involves careful attention, possibly walking through or between structures to examine them thoroughly. The psalm invites not casual observation but deliberate contemplation of how God preserves His city.

(1×) An imperative verb in Psalm 48:13 (textually uncertain), apparently meaning 'go through' or 'pass between,' referring to Jerusalem's palaces. Part of a liturgical call to circumambulate and carefully observe Zion's fortifications, the term suggests deliberate traversing —walking between or through structures to examine them closely. The psalm invites worshipers to meditate on the city's strength as evidence of divine protection, and this verb contributes to that call for careful, contemplative observation. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: go-through | es: observen | fr: contempler | de: gehen-durch Ps 48:13

פִּסְגָּה H6449 Art / N-proper-fs (8×)

Pisgah — a mountain or ridge in Moab overlooking the Dead Sea, from which Moses viewed the Promised Land before his death.

Pisgah is a geographic name for a mountain or ridge in the territory of Moab, northeast of the Dead Sea, always appearing with the definite article (ha-Pisgah). It is best known as the summit from which Moses was commanded to view the land of Canaan before his death (Deut 3:27; 34:1). The name likely means 'the cleft' or 'the ridge,' describing a natural geological feature. Balaam also offered sacrifices there during his encounter with Balak (Num 23:14). Its lower slopes, called 'ashdoth ha-Pisgah' (the slopes of Pisgah), served as a geographic boundary marker (Deut 3:17; 4:49; Josh 12:3; 13:20).

(8×) A mountain ridge in Moab on the northeast shore of the Dead Sea, always used with the definite article. The 'top of Pisgah' (rosh ha-Pisgah) is a lookout point: Moses viewed the Promised Land from there before dying (Deut 3:27; 34:1), and Balak brought Balaam there to curse Israel (Num 23:14). The 'slopes of Pisgah' (ashdoth ha-Pisgah) appear as boundary markers in territorial descriptions (Deut 3:17; 4:49; Josh 12:3; 13:20). The name probably derives from a root meaning 'to cleave' or 'to split,' describing the terrain. English, Spanish, and French all transliterate as 'Pisgah/Pisga,' while the LXX renders it variously as Phasga and 'the hewn place' (to laxeuton), interpreting the etymology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Pisgah | es: Pisga, Pisgá, el-Pisga | fr: le-Pisgah | de: der-Pisga Num 21:20; Num 23:14; Deut 3:17; Deut 3:27; Deut 4:49

אֲפַס דַּמִּים H6450 Prep (1×)

In Pas-dammim: at a place name meaning 'boundary of blood' or 'portion of blood' in Judah

This place name appears in 1 Chronicles 11:13, identifying where one of David's mighty men performed a famous act of valor, defending a barley field against the Philistines. The parallel account in 1 Samuel 17:1 gives a slightly different form (Ephes-dammim). The name likely means 'boundary of blood' or 'portion of blood,' perhaps commemorating a battle. Located in western Judah between Azekah and Socoh, about 16 miles southwest of Jerusalem, it was in the border region where Philistine and Israelite territories met—hence frequent conflicts and a name referencing bloodshed.

(1×) A place name in 1 Chronicles 11:13, identifying a battle site in western Judah where one of David's elite warriors defended a field against Philistine raiders. The name, meaning approximately 'boundary of blood,' reflects the region's violent history as a contested border zone between Israelite and Philistine territories. Located near Socoh and Azekah, Pas-dammim witnessed multiple conflicts, its name preserving the memory of bloodshed in this frontier region. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Pas-Dammim | es: en-Pas-Damim | fr: [בְּפַס דַּמִּים] | de: [בְּפַס דַּמִּים] 1Chr 11:13

פִּסָּה H6451 N-fsc (1×)

An abundance, a handful; plenty or sufficient amount (textually uncertain)

This word appears in Psalm 72:16, in a vision of abundance during the ideal king's reign: 'an abundance of grain in the land.' The Hebrew is textually difficult—some scholars suggest reading a different word entirely (such as 'plenty' from another root). Whatever the precise term, the image is clear: grain so plentiful that even on mountaintops there's abundance. This isn't ordinary agricultural yield but miraculous, Eden-like fertility where even marginal land produces bountifully. The term captures the overflowing nature of blessing under righteous rule—not mere sufficiency but superabundance.

(1×) A textually uncertain term in Psalm 72:16, apparently meaning 'abundance' or 'handful,' referring to grain during the messianic king's reign. The phrase envisions such agricultural bounty that even mountaintops—normally unsuitable for grain—produce abundantly. Whether the specific word means a literal handful or symbolic abundance, the context makes clear it represents extraordinary fertility, the curse of Genesis 3 reversed under righteous rule. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-abundance-of- | es: puñado-de | fr: abondance | de: ein-Überfluss-von- Ps 72:16

פָּסַח H6452a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (4×)

to pass over, skip over; to spring over and spare, particularly in the Passover event

The verb giving the Passover its name—to pass over or skip over, sparing those beneath the marked doorposts. Exodus 12 records God's promise three times: 'I will pass over you' (12:13), 'the Lord will pass over the door' (12:23), and explains that 'the Lord passed over the houses' of Israel while striking Egypt (12:27). Isaiah extends the imagery: God will 'pass over' and protect Jerusalem like birds hovering over their young (31:5). The verb captures divine discrimination—selectively sparing the covenant people while executing judgment on Egypt. This 'passing over' became the central salvation event memorialized annually, giving its name to Israel's defining festival.

(4×) To pass over and spare, especially in the Passover deliverance. Exodus 12:13, 23, 27 narrate God's promise and fulfillment: passing over Israelite houses marked with blood while striking Egyptian firstborn. Isaiah 31:5 applies the imagery to Jerusalem's protection. All four uses describe divine selective sparing—God 'passing over' to protect His people while judging their oppressors, the foundational Passover act. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-I-will-pass-over, and-will-pass-over, passed-over | es: pasando, pasó, y-pasará | fr: [פסח], et—passer-au-dessus, et-Je—passer-au-dessus | de: [פסח], ging-hindurch-ueber, und-ich-wird-durchgehen-ueber Exod 12:13; Exod 12:23; Exod 12:27; Isa 31:5

פָּסַח H6452b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp (4×)

limp, hobble, or go lame (physically disabled through injury or birth defect)

This verb captures both the onset of physical lameness (becoming lame through injury) and the ongoing action of limping. The Niph'al in 2 Sam 4:4 describes how Mephibosheth fell and became permanently lame. The Pi'el in 1 Kgs 18:26 depicts the limping dance of Baal's prophets around the altar, while 1 Kgs 18:21 uses a participial form to describe wavering or hobbling metaphorically between two opinions. The multilingual evidence consistently supports physical disability and impaired gait.

(4×) The word appears in both literal contexts (Mephibosheth's injury-induced lameness in 2 Sam 4:4) and metaphorical ones (limping between two opinions in 1 Kgs 18:21). The dance of Baal's prophets in 1 Kgs 18:26 may be literal limping as part of a ritual. Spanish cojeáis/cojeó (hobble, limp) and French boitant (limping) confirm the physical disability sense across contexts. LAME CRIPPLED

en: and-became-lame, and-the-lame, and-they-limped | es: cojeáis, y-cojeó, y-los-cojos | fr: boitant, et-devint-lame, et-ils-limped | de: limping, und-became-lame, und-der-lame 2Sam 4:4; 2Sam 5:6; 1Kgs 18:21; 1Kgs 18:26

פֶּסַח H6453 Prep-l (49×)

Passover: the annual festival commemorating Israel's deliverance from Egypt, or the sacrificial lamb offered at it

One of the most theologically charged words in the Hebrew Bible, pesach designates both the festival and the offering at its heart. Rooted in God's 'passing over' the Israelite households on the night of the tenth plague (Exod 12:13,27), the term came to encompass the entire week of celebration, the specific evening ceremony, and the lamb itself. The Spanish 'Pascua' and French 'Pâque' preserve the ancient name's journey through Greek (pascha) into the languages of Christendom, where it merged with the Easter celebration. In Chronicles, the word narrows to mean the sacrificial animals distributed by the thousands for communal slaughter.

1. Passover (festival) (45×) The Passover festival as a whole, commemorating Israel's exodus from Egypt and observed annually on the fourteenth of Nisan. This dominant sense (45 of 49 occurrences) spans the institution narrative in Exodus 12, the wilderness observance in Numbers 9, and the great reforms under Josiah (2 Kgs 23:21-23). Translations uniformly render it as a proper-noun festival name: 'Passover' (eng), 'Pascua' (spa), 'Pâque' (fra), 'Passah' (deu), reflecting how deeply the Hebrew term embedded itself in global vocabulary. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Passover, the-Passover | es: Pascua, Pésaj, el-Pésaj | fr: Pâque, la-Pâque, le-Passover | de: Passover, das-Passah, der-Passover Exod 12:11; Exod 12:21; Exod 12:27; Exod 12:43; Exod 12:48

2. Passover offering/lamb (4×) The sacrificial animal — a lamb or young goat — slaughtered for the Passover meal, a metonymic extension from the festival to its central offering. This sense emerges clearly in 2 Chr 30:17 and 35:7-9, where Levites slaughter 'the pesachim' (plural) by the thousands and leaders distribute flocks for the purpose. Spanish 'las pascuas' and English 'Passover-offerings' both capture this concrete, countable sense distinct from the abstract festival. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: for-the-Passover-offerings, the-Pesach-lambs | es: las-pascuas, para-los-pesaj | fr: Pâque | de: Passah 2Chr 30:17; 2Chr 35:7; 2Chr 35:8; 2Chr 35:9

פָּסֵחַ H6454 N-proper-ms (4×)

Paseah (personal name meaning 'limper' or 'lame one')

A personal name borne by three different men in post-exilic Israel. The name derives from the root meaning 'to limp' and likely signifies physical disability. One Paseah appears in Judah's genealogy (1 Chr 4:12), another headed a post-exilic family that returned from Babylon (Ezra 2:49; Neh 7:51), and a third was the father of a wall-builder during Nehemiah's restoration project (Neh 3:6). The Septuagint renders the name variously, reflecting uncertainty about its pronunciation and meaning.

(4×) Though the domain assignment suggests 'Festivals' (perhaps confusing this with פֶּסַח 'Passover'), the glosses clearly identify this as a personal name (Paseah, Paseach). English, Spanish, and French transliterations consistently treat it as a proper name. The three individuals are distinct persons sharing the same name across different generations and contexts. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Pase'ach, Paseach, Paseah | es: Pasea, Paseaj | fr: Pâque | de: Passah, [פסח] 1Chr 4:12; Ezra 2:49; Neh 3:6; Neh 7:51

פִּסֵּחַ H6455 Adj-ms (13×)

Lame; physically disabled in the feet or legs, unable to walk properly — a disqualifying blemish for sacrifice and service.

Describes a person or animal that cannot walk normally due to injury or congenital deformity of the legs or feet. Frequently paired with 'blind' (עִוֵּר) to represent the full spectrum of physical disability — a pairing reflected consistently across translations (Spanish cojo/ciego, English lame/blind). In priestly law it disqualifies both the officiant (Lev 21:18) and the sacrificial animal (Deut 15:21). Yet the prophets transform this image into one of hope: in Jeremiah 31:8 God gathers the lame alongside the blind, and Isaiah 35:6 promises 'the lame shall leap like a deer.' Job 29:15 captures the ideal of compassion — 'I was feet to the lame.'

lame (13×) Physically unable to walk properly due to injury or deformity in the legs or feet. The consistent pairing with עִוֵּר ('blind') across Hebrew poetry and law — mirrored by Spanish cojo/ciego and French boiteux/aveugle — marks this as the primary biblical shorthand for bodily impairment. Applied to persons (2 Sam 9:13, 'lame in both feet') and to sacrificial animals (Deut 15:21). The prophetic reversal in Isaiah 35:6 and Jeremiah 31:8 transforms lameness from disqualification into an emblem of eschatological restoration. LAME CRIPPLED

en: and-lame, for-the-lame, from-a-lame-man | es: cojo, cojo-de, cojos | fr: [ופסח], [פסח], [פסחים] | de: [הפסח], [ופסח], [לפסח] Lev 21:18; Deut 15:21; 2Sam 5:8; 2Sam 9:13

פָּסִיל H6456 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (24×)

Carved images, graven idols – objects hewn from wood, stone, or metal for false worship

Plural noun denoting carved or graven images fashioned for idolatrous worship. Deuteronomy commands Israel to burn them (Deut 7:5, 25) and hew them down (12:3). Isaiah mocks Babylon's shattered idols (Isa 21:9) and their impotence compared with the living God (10:10), while Hosea laments Israel burning incense to carved images (Hos 11:2). In the Judges narrative they appear near Gilgal (Judg 3:19, 26), a site ironically associated with covenant renewal. Spanish 'idolos' and French 'images taillees' preserve the core sense of something physically shaped by human hands yet vainly venerated as divine.

carved image or idol (24×) Carved or graven images used in idolatrous worship, fashioned from wood (Deut 7:5, 25), stone (Isa 21:9), or metal overlaid with silver (Isa 30:22). Deuteronomy prescribes their destruction (7:5, 25; 12:3), the prophets condemn devotion to them (Hos 11:2; Mic 5:13), and Josiah's reform targeted them (2 Chr 34:3-7). Spanish 'idolos,' French 'images taillees,' and German 'Gotzenbild' emphasize their hand-crafted materiality. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: and-carved-images-of, and-the-carved-images, and-the-images | es: Las-imágenes-de, a-los-ídolos, con-sus-ídolos | fr: [הפסילים], [ולפסלים], carved-images-de | de: Goetzenbild, [בפסליהם], [ולפסלים] Deut 7:5; Deut 7:25; Deut 12:3; Judg 3:19; Judg 3:26

פָּסָךְ H6457 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pasakh: an Asherite, son of Japhlet in tribal genealogy

Pasakh appears in 1 Chronicles 7:33 in the genealogy of Asher, identified as one of Japhlet's sons. These tribal genealogies served multiple purposes: establishing inheritance rights, maintaining tribal identity, and preserving historical memory even when political structures changed. Though Pasakh himself plays no narrative role, his inclusion ensures that his family line remained documented among Asher's descendants. For post-exilic readers, these genealogies affirmed continuity—the tribes hadn't been lost, their family structures persisted, and Israel's identity as twelve tribes remained intact.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 7:33, identifying a descendant of Asher through the line of Japhlet. Pasakh represents one link in Asher's tribal genealogy, preserved in the Chronicles' comprehensive documentation of Israel's family structures. Though he performs no actions in the biblical narrative, his inclusion maintains the record of Asherite families, part of the Chronicler's project of affirming tribal continuity and legitimacy across generations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pasakh | es: Pasac | fr: [פסך] | de: [פסך] 1Chr 7:33

פָּסַל H6458 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs (6×)

To hew or carve into shape; of cutting stone tablets, building stones, or sculpting an idol

A verb meaning to hew, carve, or chisel stone or wood into a particular form. Most memorably, God commands Moses to hew two stone tablets for the renewed covenant (Exod 34:1, 4; Deut 10:1, 3) — an act of sacred craftsmanship restoring what was broken. The same root describes quarrying building stones for the Temple (1 Kgs 5:18) and, in a bitter irony, the carving of an idol by human hands (Hab 2:18). The verb thus spans the spectrum from holy commission to futile idolatry, united by the physical act of shaping resistant material.

hew, carve into shape (6×) To hew or carve stone or wood into a desired shape, used in the Qal stem. The primary context is Moses cutting replacement stone tablets at God's command (Exod 34:1, 4; Deut 10:1, 3), while 1 Kgs 5:18 extends it to quarrying building stones for Solomon's Temple. Habakkuk 2:18 applies it to the shaping of an idol, using the cognate accusative with pesel. Spanish labra ('carve, chisel') and German schneiden ('cut') both reflect the hands-on craftsmanship implied. The word always denotes deliberate, skilled shaping of hard material. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: and-I-carved, and-he-cut, and-they-shaped | es: Labra, Y-labró, labra | fr: carve, couper-, et-il-couper | de: [פסלו], carve, schneiden- Exod 34:1; Exod 34:4; Deut 10:1; Deut 10:3; 1Kgs 5:18

פֶּסֶל H6459 N-msc / 3mp (30×)

carved image, graven idol — a hewn figure of wood, stone, or metal used in idolatrous worship

Pesel is the standard term for a carved or graven image, appearing 30 times and bearing a consistently negative charge throughout Scripture. The word enters the canon in the second commandment itself — 'you shall not make for yourself a pesel' (Exod 20:4; Deut 5:8) — setting the theological tone for every subsequent occurrence. Deuteronomy reinforces the prohibition in its covenant curses (Deut 27:15), and the Judges narrative of Micah's household shrine shows how quickly the prohibition was violated: Micah's mother commissions a pesel from silver, and the Danites steal it for their tribal sanctuary (Judg 17-18). The prophets, especially Isaiah, deploy the word with withering irony: a craftsman plants a tree, burns half for warmth, cooks dinner over the coals, and carves the rest into a god to worship (Isa 44:9-17). Nahum and Habakkuk pronounce doom on pesel-makers. French 'image taillee' and German 'Goetzenbild' preserve the carved-idol nuance.

carved image, idol (30×) A physical image carved from wood, stone, or cast from metal, serving as an object of illicit worship. Prohibited in the Decalogue (Exod 20:4; Deut 5:8) and covenant curses (Deut 27:15). The Micah narrative illustrates domestic idol-making and its theft by the Danites (Judg 17:3-4; 18:14-31). Isaiah's workshop satire shows a single log split between fuel and deity (Isa 40:19-20; 44:9-17). Jeremiah indicts goldsmiths shamed by their pesel (Jer 10:14; 51:17). IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: a-carved-image, an-idol, and-carved-image | es: e-imagen, e-imagen-tallada, imagen | fr: carved-image, carved-image-de, de-image-taillée | de: Goetze, Goetzenbild, [פסל] Exod 20:4; Lev 26:1; Deut 4:16; Deut 4:23; Deut 4:25

פְּסַנְטֵרִין H6460 N-ms (4×)

psaltery, harp (triangular stringed instrument borrowed from Greek ψαλτήριον)

A musical instrument mentioned exclusively in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's orchestral ensemble. This is a Greek loanword (psalterion) that entered Aramaic during the exilic period, designating a triangular stringed instrument similar to a harp or lyre. Daniel 3 repeats the instrument four times as part of the royal orchestra's lineup that signals when subjects must bow before the golden image. The word's Greek origin reflects the cultural interchange of the Babylonian exile.

(4×) All four occurrences appear in Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15 within the repeated formula listing Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra. English 'harp,' Spanish 'salterio,' and French 'harpe' all identify it as a stringed instrument. The slight spelling variation (פְּסַנְטֵרִין vs. פְּסַנְתֵּרִין) reflects typical Aramaic orthographic flexibility for foreign loanwords. LYRE HARP INSTRUMENT

en: harp | es: el-salterio | fr: harpe | de: [פסנטרין], [פסנתרין] Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

פָּסַס H6461 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

Have vanished, disappeared; ceased to exist or be found

This verb appears in Psalm 12:1, in a lament that 'the faithful have vanished from among mankind.' The term describes complete disappearance—not just becoming rare but seeming to have ceased to exist. It's stronger than declining in number; it suggests dissolution, as if the category itself has been erased. The psalmist expresses existential loneliness: looking around and finding no one godly, no one trustworthy. Whether literal depopulation or hyperbolic despair, the verb captures the horror of finding oneself alone in one's commitment, the godly having apparently vanished from the earth.

(1×) A Qal perfect verb in Psalm 12:1 describing the faithful as having vanished or disappeared from among humanity. The term conveys more than numerical decline—it suggests complete disappearance, as if the godly have been dissolved or erased from existence. The psalmist's lament uses this strong verb to express his sense of isolation: scanning his world and finding no one who shares commitment to covenant faithfulness, as if all the faithful had simply vanished. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: have-vanished | es: desaparecieron | fr: fondre | de: haben-vanished Ps 12:1

פִּסְפָּה H6462 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Pispah: an Asherite, son of Jether in tribal genealogy

Pispah appears in 1 Chronicles 7:38 in the genealogy of Asher, listed as one of Jether's sons. Like many names in these genealogical sections, Pispah has no narrative associated with him—he exists in Scripture purely as a link in the chain of Asherite families. The Chronicler's inclusion of such names served to document the complete tribal structure, ensuring that every recognized family line was accounted for. For the post-exilic community, these comprehensive lists affirmed that Israel's tribal identity remained intact despite the disruptions of conquest and exile.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 7:38, identifying a descendant of Asher through Jether's line. Pispah has no individual narrative but serves as one entry in the Chronicler's systematic documentation of tribal genealogies. His inclusion helps establish the completeness of Asher's family records, part of the larger project of demonstrating continuity and legitimacy for all of Israel's tribes despite the exile and dispersion. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Pispah | es: y-Pispa | fr: [וּפִסְפָּה] | de: [וּפִסְפָּה] 1Chr 7:38

פָּעָה H6463 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (1×)

I will groan; utter sounds of labor or distress (onomatopoetic)

This verb appears in Isaiah 42:14, where God declares 'I will groan like a woman in labor.' It's an onomatopoetic word, capturing the involuntary sounds of intense effort or distress. In this remarkable passage, God uses the imagery of childbirth to describe His coming intervention—He has been silent and restrained for a long time, but now He will 'gasp and pant' as He brings forth deliverance. The groaning isn't weakness but the sound of powerful exertion, the straining necessary to birth something new. It humanizes God while emphasizing the costly, effortful nature of salvation.

(1×) A verb in Isaiah 42:14 where God says 'I will groan like a woman in labor,' using childbirth imagery to describe His coming intervention on Israel's behalf. The onomatopoetic term captures involuntary sounds of intense effort, not weakness but powerful exertion. After long restraint, God will 'gasp and pant'—spending Himself in the work of delivering His people. The groaning expresses the costly, effortful nature of bringing forth salvation, comparing divine intervention to labor pains. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES

en: I-will-groan | es: gemiré | fr: [אֶפְעֶה] | de: [אֶפְעֶה] Isa 42:14

פָּעוּ H6464 N-proper-fs (2×)

Pau/Pai, a city in Edom, royal residence of King Hadar (Genesis 36:39; 1 Chronicles 1:50)

Pau (also spelled Pai) was a city in Edom that served as the royal residence of King Hadar. The name appears with spelling variation between Genesis (Pau) and Chronicles (Pai), reflecting textual traditions. The Septuagint renders it as Phogor (Genesis) and Phaona (Chronicles). Its precise location is unknown, but it was significant enough to be named as a royal capital.

(2×) A place name designating an Edomite royal city, appearing with variant spellings across biblical books. The multilingual glosses preserve both forms: Spanish 'Pau/Pai,' French 'Pau.' This toponymic variation is common in biblical genealogies and king lists, where oral traditions and textual transmission produced legitimate variant forms of the same place name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pa'i, Pau | es: Pai, Pau | fr: Pau, [פַּע] | de: [פַּע], war-Pau Gen 36:39; 1Chr 1:50

פְּעוֹר H6465 N-proper-fs (5×)

Peor — a mountain in Moab and the deity associated with its cult site

A proper noun with two referents: a mountain in Moab overlooking the wasteland, where Balak brought Balaam for his final oracle (Num 23:28), and the deity worshiped at that site, whose cult ensnared Israel in apostasy at Shittim (Num 25:18; 31:16). The 'incident of Peor' became a byword for idolatrous seduction, recalled as late as Joshua 22:17 as a warning against unfaithfulness. The name is likely related to a root meaning 'to open wide.'

(5×) A mountain in Moab and its associated deity. As a geographic name, it designates the height where Balaam delivered his oracle overlooking the desert (Num 23:28). As a divine name, it refers to the Moabite/Midianite god whose worship led to Israel's catastrophic apostasy (Num 25:18; 31:16), an event recalled as a cautionary precedent (Josh 22:17). Transliterations are uniform across languages — 'Peor' in English, Spanish, French, and German — reflecting its well-known place in biblical narrative. BAAL PEOR CULT

en: Peor, the-Peor | es: Peor, el-Peor | fr: Peor, le-Peor | de: Peor, der-Peor Num 23:28; Num 25:18; Num 31:16; Josh 22:17

פָּעַל H6466 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (56×)

To do, make, work; the poetic verb for purposeful action, deeds, and craftsmanship — the elevated synonym of 'asah.

Pa'al is the poet's verb for doing. Where 'asah is the everyday Hebrew word for 'make' or 'do,' pa'al belongs to elevated speech — the Song of Moses, the oracles of Balaam, the wisdom debates of Job. Its 56 occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in poetry and prophecy, making it a stylistic marker as much as a semantic one. The Arabic cognate fa'ala confirms the core meaning ('to do, act'), and the participial form po'ale ('workers of') has become virtually a fixed phrase in the Psalms: 'workers of iniquity' (po'ale aven) appears like a refrain in Psalms 5:5, 6:8, 14:4, and beyond. Spanish obrar ('to work, act morally') and French faire ('to do') capture different aspects: obrar carries the ethical weight of deeds judged, while faire stays closer to the neutral performative sense. In a handful of passages the verb shifts from doing to making — God as the one who 'fashions' or 'creates' (Job 36:3) — though this creative sense never fully separates from the broader notion of purposeful action.

1. doer or worker of (24×) One who does or works — the substantival participle used as a noun, appearing 24 times, overwhelmingly in the fixed phrase po'ale aven ('workers of iniquity'). This construction dominates the Psalms as a designation for the wicked: 'the boastful shall not stand before your eyes; you hate all workers of iniquity' (Ps 5:5), 'depart from me, all you workers of evil' (Ps 6:8). Job uses the same form for moral agents: 'he walks with workers of iniquity and goes in company with wicked men' (Job 34:8). Spanish hacedores de ('doers of') and French faire ('to do') treat these as agent nouns, while German sometimes simply renders the Hebrew form in brackets, reflecting the difficulty of a single-word equivalent. The participial form has effectively lexicalized as a noun meaning 'practitioner' or 'doer.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: doers-of, for-workers-of, of-workers | es: hacedores-de, hacedores-de-, los-que-obran | fr: faire, à-faire | de: [לְפֹעֲלֵי], [פֹּעֲלֵי], der-workers-von Job 31:3; Job 34:8; Job 34:22; Ps 5:5; Ps 6:8

2. to do or perform (23×) To do, perform, or carry out an action — the general verbal sense at 23 occurrences, covering moral conduct, divine action, and human deeds. In Numbers 23:23 Balaam declares 'what God has done!' (ma pa'al El), and Deuteronomy 32:27 warns lest enemies say 'our hand has done this.' Job's dialogues repeatedly use the verb for divine action whose meaning is inscrutable (Job 11:8, 22:17, 33:29). Spanish obrar and el que obra ('the one who acts') select vocabulary that carries ethical weight — doing as moral performance. Korean haenghada and Arabic fa'ala both confirm the general-action sense without the specialized 'create/fashion' nuance of sense 3. The distinction from sense 1 is grammatical: here the finite verb describes the act itself, not the agent. DOING AND MAKING

en: I-have-done, You-have-done, You-have-worked | es: el-que-obra, ha-hecho?, hace- | fr: a-fait, faire, fit | de: [יִפְעַל], [פָּעַל], [פָּעֲלוּ] Num 23:23; Deut 32:27; Job 11:8; Job 22:17; Job 33:29

3. to make or fashion (8×) To make, fashion, or create — 8 occurrences where the verb takes on a creative or constructive meaning, often with God as subject. Exodus 15:17 celebrates the sanctuary that 'your hands, O Lord, have made' (pa'alu); Job 36:3 declares 'I will ascribe righteousness to my Maker' (lefo'ali); and Psalm 7:13-15 describes God as one who 'fashions' weapons of judgment. Spanish hacer/preparar, Arabic sana'a ('to make/fashion'), and Korean mandeulda ('to create') all shift to manufacturing vocabulary, distinguishing this from the moral-conduct sense of pa'al. The Maker/Creator usage in Job (7:20, 36:3) elevates the verb to near-divine status, paralleling 'asah in creation contexts. DOING AND

MAKING
en: You-made, and-to-my-Maker, and-works-it | es: hace, hará, haré | fr: Tu-fit, et-faire, et-faire-moi | de: Du-machte, [אפעל], [ויפעלהו] Exod 15:17; Job 7:20; Job 36:3; Ps 7:13; Ps 7:15

4. (1×) Uncertain or transitional usage — a single occurrence at Isaiah 44:12, where the smith 'works' (ufa'al) iron with tongs over the coals. The multilingual evidence is minimal (Spanish y trabaja, 'and works'; French et faire), and the context is artisanal labor that could fit either sense 2 (performing an action) or sense 3 (fashioning something). The verse's focus on metalworking craftsmanship might edge it toward sense 3, but the gloss evidence does not decisively separate it from the general performative meaning. DOING AND MAKING en: and-works | es: y-trabaja | fr: et-faire | de: [ופעל] Isa 44:12

פֹּעַל H6467 N-msc / 3ms (38×)

Deed, work, act; rarely wages or recompense for labor

A poetic noun for action and its results, nearly synonymous with the more common 'ma'aseh' but concentrated in elevated discourse – Deuteronomy's Song of Moses, the Psalms, Isaiah, and Job. When Moses declares 'His work is perfect' (Deut 32:4), the word celebrates divine activity; when Ruth receives Boaz's blessing 'May the LORD repay your work' (Ruth 2:12), it denotes human moral conduct deserving reward. The root p-'-l carries an inherent connection to labor and wages, and in two passages (Job 7:2; Jer 22:13) the noun itself slides from 'work done' to 'wages owed' – a metonymic shift from action to compensation. Spanish moves between 'obra' (work) and 'salario' (wages); German 'Tat/Taten' (deed/deeds) stays closer to the action pole.

1. deed, work, act (35×) The dominant sense: a deed or act performed by God or humans, subject to moral evaluation. Deuteronomy 32:4 celebrates God's 'work' as perfect; Psalm 44:1 recalls ancestral testimony of divine 'work'; Ruth 2:12 applies it to human courageous conduct. Spanish 'obra,' French 'oeuvre,' and German 'Tat' center on purposeful action and its enduring results. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-work, Your-work, a-work | es: es-su-obra, la-obra-de, obra | fr: actes, comme-son-œuvre-lui, et-œuvre | de: Tat, Taten, [כפעלו] Deut 32:4; Deut 33:11; Ruth 2:12; 2Sam 23:20; 1Chr 11:22

2. wages, recompense (2×) A metonymic extension from work done to compensation owed: wages or recompense. Job 7:2 compares the sufferer to a hireling who 'waits for his wages'; Jeremiah 22:13 denounces the king who withholds a neighbor's pay. Spanish 'salario' signals the economic register, a shift from the moral-evaluative 'obra' of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-wage-his, his-wages | es: su-salario., y-salario-de-él | fr: et-œuvre, son-œuvre-lui | de: [פעלו], und-Tat Job 7:2; Jer 22:13

3. (1×) A single uncertain occurrence in Proverbs 21:6 in connection with 'getting treasures by a lying tongue.' The sense may shade toward ill-gotten gain or the product of deceitful effort, though lexicons leave the precise meaning open. Spanish 'adquisicion' and English 'getting' attempt a processual-resultative rendering distinct from both 'deed' and 'wages.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: getting | es: La-adquisición-de | fr: œuvre | de: [פעל] Prov 21:6

פְּעֻלָּה H6468 N-fpc (14×)

Work, deed; wages, reward, recompense — the labor itself or the payment it earns.

A noun that holds together both the work and its wages — the deed and what it deserves. Isaiah 40:10 proclaims that the LORD comes with His reward (pe'ullah) before Him, while Leviticus 19:13 commands that a laborer's wages not be withheld overnight. The word naturally spans from concrete labor to divine recompense: Psalm 28:5 speaks of God repaying the wicked according to their 'works,' and 2 Chronicles 15:7 encourages that 'your work shall be rewarded.' French 'rétribution' and Spanish 'salario' capture the wages side, while 'oeuvre' and 'obra' cover the deed itself — together mapping the full semantic range.

1. wages, reward, recompense (9×) Wages, reward, or recompense — the payment received for labor or the retribution due for one's deeds. Leviticus 19:13 uses it concretely for a hired worker's wages that must not be held back. Isaiah 40:10 and 62:11 employ it for divine reward, with God's pe'ullah coming before Him like spoils of victory. Psalm 109:20 turns it to retribution against enemies. French 'rétribution' and Spanish 'salario' consistently render this compensatory sense. The word carries a strong note of earned outcome — what is justly owed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-His-recompense, and-my-reward, his-payment | es: Su-salario, el-salario-de, obra-de | fr: et-rétribution, oeuvre, récompense | de: [ופעלתו], [ופעלתי], [פעלת] Lev 19:13; Ps 109:20; Prov 11:18; Isa 40:10; Isa 49:4

2. work, deed, action (5×) Work, deed, or action — the labor or effort itself rather than its payment. Psalm 28:5 invokes the 'works of the LORD's hands,' and Psalm 17:4 references human 'deeds' in the context of moral conduct. Proverbs 10:16 pairs the wages of the righteous with the produce (tevu'ah) of the wicked, blurring the line between deed and outcome. Jeremiah 31:16 promises that Rachel's 'work' — her suffering and weeping — will be rewarded. Spanish 'obras' and French 'oeuvre' capture the active, effortful dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-for-the-deeds-of, for-your-work, the-wages-of | es: en-cuanto-a-obras-de, obra-de, obras-de | fr: [לפעלתכם], récompense, rétribution | de: [לפעלתך], [לפעלתכם], [פעלת] 2Chr 15:7; Ps 17:4; Ps 28:5; Prov 10:16; Jer 31:16

פְּעֶלְתַי H6469 N-proper-ms (1×)

Peullethai: a Levite gatekeeper, son of Obed-edom in David's time

Peullethai appears in 1 Chronicles 26:5 as one of the sons of Obed-edom, blessed by God and assigned as gatekeepers for the temple. Obed-edom's family received special divine blessing after he had housed the ark of God, and his descendants continued in temple service as doorkeepers. Gatekeepers weren't merely ceremonial; they controlled access to holy space, maintained order during worship, and guarded sacred precincts. Peullethai inherited both this practical responsibility and the honor of his family's association with the ark, their role perpetuating the divine favor shown to Obed-edom.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 26:5, identifying one of Obed-edom's sons who served as a Levitical gatekeeper in the temple during David's organization of worship. Peullethai's family received special divine blessing related to their care for the ark, and this blessing extended into their ongoing service as doorkeepers. His role involved controlling access to the sanctuary, maintaining order, and protecting holy space—significant responsibilities that combined practical security with religious sanctity. PERSONAL NAMES en: Peulletai | es: Peultai | fr: [פעלתי] | de: [פעלתי] 1Chr 26:5

פָּעַם H6470 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3fs (5×)

to thrust, impel, stir; in Niphal/Hithpael, to be troubled or agitated in spirit

A verb whose Qal sense means to thrust or impel — used of the Spirit of Yahweh beginning to stir Samson (Judg 13:25). In the Niphal and Hithpael, the meaning shifts to inner disturbance: Pharaoh's spirit was troubled after his dreams (Gen 41:8), and Nebuchadnezzar's spirit was agitated so that sleep fled (Dan 2:1, 3). The psalmist uses the Niphal to express deep personal turmoil (Ps 77:4). Spanish 'se turbó' and German 'beunruhigt' both capture this restless anxiety.

(5×) To thrust, impel, or stir — and in reflexive/passive stems, to be deeply troubled or agitated in spirit. The Qal describes divine impulsion of Samson by the Spirit (Judg 13:25). The Niphal/Hithpael express psychological disturbance: Pharaoh's troubled spirit after dreams (Gen 41:8), Nebuchadnezzar's agitated sleeplessness (Dan 2:1, 3), and the psalmist's restless anguish (Ps 77:4). French 'tressaillir' (to start, tremble) and Spanish 'turbado' reflect the involuntary, shaking quality of this inner upheaval. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING en: I-am-troubled, and-was-troubled, to-stir-him | es: a-impulsarlo, estuve-turbado, y-se-turbó | fr: battre, et-tressaillir, et-était-troubled | de: [ותפעם], [ותתפעם], ich-bin-beunruhigt Gen 41:8; Judg 13:25; Ps 77:4; Dan 2:1; Dan 2:3

פַּעַם H6471 N-fpc / 3ms (118×)

A beat, stroke, occurrence; most often 'time, occasion' for counting repetitions; also step, footstep; foot or base of a person or object; and anvil.

Pa'am is a wonderfully concrete Hebrew noun that migrates from the physical to the abstract while never fully losing its bodily grounding. Its etymological core is a beat or stroke — the fall of a foot, the blow of a hammer — and from this kinesthetic root it branches in three directions. Most frequently (over 100 times), it serves as the standard counting word for occasions: 'seven times' (sheva pe'amim), 'this time' (happa'am), 'as before' (kepha'am bepha'am). German Mal and French fois both specialize in exactly this counting function. But the bodily origin resurfaces vividly in poetic texts: the 'steps' of a person (Ps 119:133, 'make firm my steps'), the approaching 'hoofbeats' through Sisera's mother's window (Judg 5:28), or even the physical 'feet' that trample or are snared (Ps 57:6; 58:10). Spanish veces handles the temporal sense, while pasos and pies split the physical senses between motion and anatomy. A rare but fascinating usage in Isa 41:7 denotes an anvil — the thing that receives repeated blows — returning the word to its percussive etymology. The Arabic cognate fa'la also carries the sense of a single action or deed, showing the Semitic root's tendency to count discrete events.

1. time, occasion (101×) A time or occasion of occurrence — the dominant sense at 101 occurrences, used in counting phrases and temporal expressions throughout the narrative and legal sections. In Gen 2:23 Adam exclaims 'this time' (happa'am) upon seeing Eve — the word's first appearance in Scripture marks the first act of human recognition. The dual pa'amayim means 'twice' (Gen 27:36, Esau laments 'he has supplanted me these two times'); the plural pe'amim serves as the standard multiplier: 'seven times' (Gen 33:3; Lev 4:6), 'three times' (Exod 23:14). The phrase kepha'am bepha'am ('as time after time, as before') appears in Judg 16:20 and 1 Sam 3:10 to indicate habitual repetition. German Mal is a precise equivalent — a dedicated counting noun for occasions with no spatial meaning remaining. French fois functions identically. Spanish veces captures the iterative quality. Arabic marra/marrat shares the same semantic profile. The word's dominance in this sense has almost entirely eclipsed its physical origins in everyday Hebrew, though poetry preserves the connection. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: times | es: veces | fr: fois | de: Mal, Zeiten Gen 2:23; Gen 29:34; Gen 29:35; Gen 30:20; Gen 33:3

2. step, footstep (9×) A step, footstep, or the sound of footfalls — 9 occurrences concentrated in poetic and prophetic texts. In Judg 5:28 Sisera's mother peers through the lattice asking 'why do his chariot's hoofbeats (pa'ame) delay?' — one of the most haunting moments in biblical poetry, where the word captures the rhythmic percussion of approaching horses. In Ps 85:13 'righteousness will go before him and set his steps (pe'amaw) on the way'; in Ps 119:133 the psalmist prays 'make firm my steps (pe'amay) in your word.' Ps 17:5 uses it in parallel with ashuray ('my tracks'): 'my steps have held to your paths, my feet have not slipped.' French mes pas ('my steps') and Spanish pasos cleanly distinguish this from the temporal fois/veces of sense 1. The semantic connection is transparent: a step is a single beat of the foot against the ground, and counting steps yields occasions. The Judges passage preserves the most archaic use — auditory percussion, the drumbeat of hooves. STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS

en: -the-steps-of, Your-steps, for-my-steps | es: Pasos-de-mí, mis-pasos, para-mis-pasos | fr: -le-steps-de, fois, mes-pas | de: -der-steps-von, [פַּעֲמַי], [פַּעֲמֵיהֶן] Judg 5:28; Ps 57:6; Ps 74:3; Ps 85:13; Ps 119:133

3. foot, base (7×) The physical foot or the base/corner of an object — 7 occurrences spanning human anatomy and sacred furniture. In Exod 25:12 and 37:3 the ark of the covenant has four pa'amot ('feet/corners') for its carrying rings; in 1 Kgs 7:30 the bronze stands in Solomon's temple have pa'amot as supporting structures. Applied to persons, Ps 57:6 reads 'they dug a pit before my steps... they set a net for my feet (pe'amay),' where the parallelism with snare imagery suggests physical feet as targets of ambush. Ps 58:10 speaks of washing one's feet in the blood of the wicked — a visceral image of triumph. In 2 Kgs 19:24 Sennacherib boasts of the soles of his feet treading foreign lands. Spanish pies and German Fuesse select anatomical vocabulary. The distinction from sense 2 is subtle but real: sense 2 denotes the act of stepping (motion), while sense 3 denotes the body part or structural base (anatomy or object). The tabernacle usage — feet of the ark — extends the human body metaphor to sacred furniture. FEET AND LEGS

en: his-feet, its-feet, my-feet | es: de-mis-pies, mis-pies, pies-de-ellos | fr: fois, mes-pas, mon-pieds | de: [פַּעֲמַי], mein-Fuesse, mein-Füsse Exod 25:12; Exod 37:3; 1Kgs 7:30; 2Kgs 19:24; Ps 17:5

4. (1×) An anvil — a single occurrence in Isa 41:7 where the prophet describes the manufacture of an idol: the craftsman encourages the metalworker, and the one who smooths with the hammer strikes 'the anvil' (pa'am). Spanish yunque and English 'anvil' both identify this as specialized metallurgical vocabulary. The connection to the root meaning is elegant: an anvil is the thing that receives repeated 'beats' (pe'amim) — the surface against which the hammer's blows fall. BDB lists this as a distinct concrete sense, and the context of idol-making craftsmanship makes it unmistakable. Arabic sandan ('anvil') is unrelated, but the Hebrew semantic logic — from 'beat/stroke' to 'the thing beaten upon' — is a natural metonymic extension. This rare usage preserves the word's oldest kinesthetic meaning, stripped of the counting abstraction that dominates elsewhere. TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: of-the-soldering | es: yunque | fr: fois | de: [פַּעַם] Isa 41:7

פַּעֲמֹן H6472 N-msc (7×)

bell; small golden bell on the high priest's robe, alternating with pomegranates along the hem

A masculine noun פַּעֲמֹן denoting a small bell, derived from the root פָּעַם meaning 'to strike' or 'beat' — capturing the clapper's action. Used exclusively for the golden bells sewn onto the hem of the high priest's robe (me'il), where they alternated with pomegranate-shaped ornaments (Exod 28:33-34; 39:25-26). Their sound announced the priest's entry into and exit from the Holy Place, ensuring he would 'not die' (Exod 28:35). Spanish campanilla, French clochette, and German Gloeckchen all render it with diminutive forms, reflecting the small, tinkling nature of these ornamental bells.

bell (ornamental, on priestly garment) (7×) A small ornamental bell, specifically the golden bells (pa'amonim) attached to the hem of the high priest's robe between pomegranate decorations. The noun derives from pa'am ('to strike, beat'), pointing to the percussive action of the clapper. Exodus prescribes 'a golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate' in alternation around the skirt (Exod 28:33-34), and the craftsman Bezalel executed this design (Exod 39:25-26). Their liturgical purpose was auditory: the sound accompanied the priest's movements in the sanctuary. All seven occurrences cluster in just two chapters of Exodus. Remarkably, every target language uses a diminutive form — Spanish campanilla, French clochette, German Gloeckchen — confirming the small, delicate nature of these bells. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bells-of, bell, bell-of | es: Campanilla-de, campanilla, campanilla-de | fr: clochette, clochette-de, clochettes-de | de: Gloeckchen, Gloeckchen-von, der-Gloeckchen Exod 28:33; Exod 28:34; Exod 39:25

פָּעַר H6473 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (4×)

open wide (the mouth), usually expressing voracious desire, greed, or eager longing

This verb describes the act of opening the mouth wide, whether in voracious greed (Sheol in Isa 5:14), hostile mockery (Job 16:10), eager desire for good (Job 29:23), or spiritual longing (Ps 119:131). The image is vivid: a gaping mouth expressing intense appetite or emotion. In three passages the mouth belongs to people; in Isaiah 5:14 it personifies the insatiable grave. The word appears in both positive contexts (longing for God's commands) and negative (greed, mockery).

(4×) Job 16:10 depicts enemies opening their mouths wide in mockery. Job 29:23 shows people eagerly opening their mouths for Job's wisdom like thirsty ground for rain. Psalm 119:131 expresses spiritual hunger: 'I opened my mouth wide and panted, for I longed for your commandments.' Isaiah 5:14 personifies Sheol opening wide without measure. The consistent image across languages is a gaping, wide-open mouth driven by intense desire or emotion. OPENING AND SHUTTING

en: I-opened-wide, and-opened, they-open-wide | es: Abrieron, abrí, abrían | fr: [ופערה], ouvrir, פערו | de: [ופערה], [פערו], ich-geöffnet-weit Job 16:10; Job 29:23; Ps 119:131; Isa 5:14

פַּעֲרַי H6474 N-proper-ms (1×)

Paarai: one of David's mighty warriors from Arabah

Paarai is named in 2 Samuel 23:35 as one of the elite 'mighty men' who formed David's personal guard and distinguished themselves in combat. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:37 gives his name as Naarai, likely representing textual variation or alternate tradition. These warriors came from diverse backgrounds and regions across Israel, their roster reading like a honor roll of heroism. Paarai's identification as 'the Arbite' (from Arabah) locates him geographically, possibly from the Jordan Valley region. His inclusion among the Thirty immortalized his valor in service of David's kingdom.

(1×) A personal name in 2 Samuel 23:35, identifying one of David's elite 'mighty men'—the warriors who formed his personal guard and distinguished themselves through extraordinary combat feats. Designated 'the Arbite,' Paarai likely came from the Arabah region. His inclusion in this select roster permanently commemorated his valor and loyalty to David. The parallel text in 1 Chronicles gives the name as Naarai, reflecting textual tradition variation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Paarai | es: Paaray | fr: Paarai | de: Paarai 2Sam 23:35

פָּעָה H6475 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (15×)

To open wide (especially the mouth) to swallow, speak, or cry out; to rescue or deliver.

Patsah is a vivid physical verb meaning to part or gape open — almost always applied to the mouth, carrying dramatically different emotional registers. The earth 'opens its mouth' to swallow Cain's brother's blood (Gen 4:11) or to engulf Korah's rebels (Num 16:30), and enemies 'open wide their mouths' in predatory hostility (Lam 2:16; Ps 22:14). But in Psalm 144, the same root means 'rescue me' (Ps 144:7, 10, 11), where the Aramaic cognate petsa ('set free') illuminates how 'open' became 'release.' Spanish distinguishes abre from rescátame, confirming the semantic leap.

1. open wide the mouth (11×) To open wide the mouth — the earth gapes to swallow Abel's blood (Gen 4:11) or Korah's rebels (Num 16:30; Deut 11:6), enemies open mouths in hostile mockery (Lam 2:16; Ps 22:14), and Jephthah's daughter notes her father 'opened his mouth' in a vow (Judg 11:35-36). Spanish abre and French ouvrir employ standard opening verbs. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: Open, Opened, and-opening | es: Han-abierto, abre, abre- | fr: avoir-ouvrit-, et-opens, et-ouvrir | de: [ופצה], [פצה], aufgetan-hat Gen 4:11; Num 16:30; Deut 11:6; Judg 11:35; Judg 11:36

2. rescue or deliver (3×) To rescue or deliver — 'opening' becomes 'releasing from confinement.' All three occurrences appear in Psalm 144: 'Rescue me from the hand of foreigners' (vv. 7, 11) and 'the one who rescues David' (v. 10). The Aramaic cognate petsa ('set free') and Arabic fasaya ('separate') illuminate the semantic bridge from opening to liberation. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: rescue-me, the-one-rescuing | es: Rescátame, el-que-rescata, rescátame | fr: le-ouvrir, ouvrir | de: der-einer-rescuing, erretten-mich Ps 144:7; Ps 144:10; Ps 144:11

3. open mouth to speak (1×) To open the mouth for speaking — a single occurrence in Psalm 66:14: 'which my lips opened,' referring to vows uttered in distress. The distinction from sense 1 is functional: here the mouth opens to produce speech, not to swallow or threaten. The rarity suggests Hebrew preferred other verbs like patach for this meaning. OPENING AND SHUTTING

en: opened | es: abrieron | fr: ouvrir | de: geöffnet Ps 66:14

פָּצַח H6476 V-Piel-Perf-3cp (9×)

To break forth in joyful song or shout; in Piel, to shatter or crush physically (bones)

Almost exclusively an Isaianic word of exuberant praise, calling mountains, ruins, and barren Zion to 'break forth' in ringing joy at God's redemption (Isa 44:23; 49:13; 52:9; 54:1). The underlying image is of something bursting open – joy too great to contain. The Piel intensifies the physical dimension: in Micah 3:3, oppressive leaders are condemned for 'breaking' the people's bones like meat in a pot. Cognate Syriac preserves the joyous sense, while Arabic and Ethiopic emphasize the physical shattering, showing the semantic bridge between explosive joy and violent fracture.

1. break forth (in song/joy) (8×) Qal: to break forth or burst out in joyful singing and exultation before YHWH. Found almost exclusively in Isaiah's restoration prophecies (Isa 14:7; 44:23; 49:13; 52:9; 54:1) and Psalm 98:4. German 'ausbrechen' (break out) and Spanish 'prorrumpid' (burst forth) both capture the eruption metaphor. Often paired with rinnah ('joyful shout'), the expression evokes irrepressible, corporate celebration. BOLD BREAK FORTH

en: [ketiv:let-break-forth], and-break-forth, break-forth | es: (y-prorrumpid), Prorrumpid, [Qere] | fr: éclater | de: ausbrechen, brecht-aus, zerbrechen-hervor Ps 98:4; Isa 14:7; Isa 44:23; Isa 49:13

2. break, shatter (physically) (1×) Piel intensive: to break or crush physically, specifically of shattering bones. In Micah 3:3 the prophets' accusation against Israel's leaders describes them butchering the people and 'breaking their bones' – a visceral image of exploitation. Spanish 'quebraron' (they shattered) preserves the violent force. Only one occurrence, but the Piel intensification of the root's 'burst/break' semantics is unmistakable. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: they-broke | es: quebraron | fr: éclater | de: [כצחו] Mic 3:3

פְּצִירָה H6477 Art / N-fs (1×)

uncertain term appearing once in 1 Samuel 13:21, possibly relating to charges, fees, or tool sharpening

This rare word appears only in 1 Samuel 13:21 in a passage describing the Philistines' monopoly on metalworking. The Hebrew text is widely considered corrupt at this point, making the exact meaning uncertain. Traditional interpretations have suggested 'charge' or 'fee' for sharpening tools, based on ancient versions and rabbinic readings, though BDB notes these lack solid philological foundation. The multilingual evidence (charge, precio, price) reflects this traditional understanding of a fee or cost related to the blacksmithing services mentioned in context.

(1×) The single occurrence in 1 Samuel 13:21 appears in a context discussing Philistine control over metalworking and the fees charged to Israelites for tool maintenance. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently point toward economic terminology (charge, price), though the underlying Hebrew remains textually problematic. Modern scholarship generally acknowledges the passage requires emendation for confident interpretation. HONOR AND PRICE

en: the-charge | es: el-precio | fr: le-charge | de: der-charge 1Sam 13:21

פָּצַל H6478 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (2×)

Peel, strip bark from branches (Genesis 30:37-38, Jacob's breeding strategy)

This verb in the Piel stem means to peel or strip bark from branches. It appears only in Jacob's breeding experiment with Laban's flocks. Genesis 30:37 describes Jacob peeling white stripes in fresh branches, then (verse 38) placing these peeled rods before the flocks at watering time. The peeling action created visual patterns Jacob believed would influence the offspring's appearance.

(2×) To strip away bark or outer layers, revealing the inner wood. Spanish 'descortezó' (peeled/stripped bark) and French 'pelé' (peeled) precisely capture this action. Both occurrences describe the same event—Jacob's selective breeding technique. The Piel intensive stem emphasizes the deliberate, repeated nature of the peeling process, creating the striped and speckled patterns central to Jacob's strategy. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-peeled, he-peeled | es: descortezó, y-descortezó | fr: et-pelé, il-pelé | de: er-geschält-hatte, und-schälte Gen 30:37; Gen 30:38

פְּצָלָה H6479 N-fp (1×)
peeled spots or stripes on rods, appearing in Genesis 30:37 in Jacob's breeding strategy
This plural noun describes the white stripes or peeled spots that Jacob created by stripping bark from poplar, almond, and plane tree branches. The word appears only in Genesis 30:37, where Jacob placed these striped rods before Laban's flocks at their watering troughs as part of his breeding technique to produce speckled and spotted offspring. The term derives from a root meaning 'to peel' and specifically denotes the exposed white wood visible after removing the bark in strips, creating a striped appearance.

(1×) Genesis 30:37 uses this term with the cognate accusative construction 'white peelings,' describing the visible result of Jacob's deliberate bark removal. The multilingual glosses (peelings, descortezaduras, Schälungen) consistently emphasize the stripped or peeled nature of these markings. This agricultural manipulation technique was believed in the ancient world to influence offspring characteristics through visual impressions at conception. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING
en: peelings | es: descortezaduras | fr: peelings | de: Schälungen Gen 30:37

פָּצַם H6480 V-Qal-Perf-2ms / 3fs (1×)
to split open, tear apart, used of God causing the earth to split in Psalm 60:2
This verb means to crack, split open, or tear apart, related to Arabic cognates with similar meanings. It appears only once in the Hebrew Bible, in Psalm 60:2, where the psalmist laments that God has made the land quake and caused it to split open. The imagery is of earthquake damage, with God as the subject causing the earth's surface to fracture and break apart. The verb conveys violent rupture and geological catastrophe as expressions of divine judgment or discipline.

(1×) In Psalm 60:2, the psalmist addresses God directly: 'You have torn it open,' referring to the land. The context describes national crisis through earthquake imagery—God shaking the land, causing it to split, and the people tottering. The multilingual evidence (torn, partiste, zerrissen, ouvrir) uniformly captures the forceful splitting action. This single attestation places the term within lament poetry describing communal disaster. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: You-have-torn-it-open | es: la-partiste | fr: ouvrir | de: du-haben-zerrissen-es-öffnen Ps 60:2

פָּצַע H6481 Conj-w / V-Qal-InfAbs (3×)
to bruise, wound, strike with bruising impact
This verb describes injuring by bruising or crushing—wounding that breaks skin or damages tissue through blunt impact. Deuteronomy 23:1 uses the passive participle for 'one wounded by crushing'—likely referring to damaged genitals, disqualifying from assembly. 1 Kings 20:37 describes a prophet's command: 'Strike me and wound me'—requesting visible injury to create a disguise. Song of Songs 5:7 has the watchmen beating and wounding the Shulammite as she searches for her beloved at night. The verb emphasizes traumatic, bruising impact rather than clean cutting—injury that leaves marks and causes pain.

(3×) Denotes wounding by bruising, crushing, or striking with blunt force. Deuteronomy 23:1 (verse 2 in Hebrew) excludes 'one wounded by crushing' (פְּצוּעַ־דַּכָּה) from the assembly—likely genital injury. 1 Kings 20:37 has the prophet request: 'Strike me and wound (וּפְצָעֵנִי) me'—needing visible injury for his prophetic sign. The infinitive absolute emphasizes the action. Song of Songs 5:7 describes watchmen who 'struck me, wounded me (פְּצָעוּנִי)'—beating the woman as she seeks her beloved. The root conveys crushing or bruising impact. Related to Aramaic and Arabic roots for splitting or squeezing. Translations: 'wound,' 'bruise,' Spanish 'herir,' French 'blesser.' RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-wounding, they-wounded-me, wounded-of- | es: herido-de-, me-hirieron, y-herir | fr: et-wounding, ils-m'ont-blessée;, wounded-de- | de: [כִּצְעוֹנִי], und-wounding, wounded-von- Deut 23:1; 1Kgs 20:37; Song 5:7

פֶּצַע H6482 N-mp (8×)
A wound, bruise, or injury caused by a blow; used both literally of physical trauma and figuratively of spiritual or moral harm.
The noun petsa refers to a wound or bruise resulting from a blow or strike. It appears in legal, wisdom, and prophetic contexts with both literal and figurative force. In the lex talionis of Exodus 21:25, 'wound for wound' (petsa takhat patsa) establishes proportional justice for bodily harm. Lamech's dark boast in Genesis 4:23 uses it for a killing blow. Proverbs explores its paradoxical dimensions: the wounds of a friend are faithful (27:6), yet physical blows cleanse away evil (20:30). Isaiah 1:6 employs it figuratively to diagnose the nation's spiritual condition. The multilingual evidence—Spanish herida, French blesser—consistently confirms the core meaning of physical injury.

wound, injury, bruise (8×) A wound, bruise, or injury inflicted by a blow or violent act. In legal texts, it defines the scope of bodily harm requiring proportional compensation: 'wound for wound' (Exod 21:25). Lamech's vengeful song uses it for a lethal injury (Gen 4:23). Wisdom literature explores its moral complexity: Proverbs 20:30 teaches that blows that wound cleanse away evil, while Proverbs 27:6 affirms that the wounds (pits'ey) of a friend are trustworthy—contrasting beneficial correction with flattering kisses. Job 9:17 uses it of God's affliction, and Isaiah 1:6 applies it figuratively to Judah's moral corruption. Spanish herida ('wound') and French blesser ('to wound') across the translations consistently reflect physical injury as the core meaning. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: for-wound-my, my-wounds, wound | es: de-golpe, herida, heridas | fr: [פֶּצַע], blesser, mon-פֶּצַע-moi | de: [פֶּצַע], [פִּצְעִי], [פִּצְעִים] Gen 4:23; Exod 21:25; Job 9:17; Prov 20:30

פִּצֵּץ H6483 Prep-l (1×)
Happizzez, a priestly name appearing in the division of priestly courses in 1 Chronicles 24:15
This proper name designates one of the priestly families in David's organization of the temple service. It appears only in 1 Chronicles 24:15 as the fifteenth lot in the division of the twenty-four priestly courses. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to roots meaning 'to scatter' or 'to leap.' Ancient Greek translations show significant variation in rendering this name, suggesting uncertainty about its pronunciation or meaning even in antiquity.

(1×) First Chronicles 24:15 lists Happizzez among the heads of priestly families chosen by lot to serve in rotating shifts at the temple. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with slight transliteration variations. This priestly course system, attributed to David's organization, structured temple worship throughout the monarchy and Second Temple periods, with each course serving twice annually for one-week periods. PERSONAL NAMES
en: for-Happitsets | es: para-Hapitsets | fr: [לְהפִצֵּץ] | de: [לְהפִצֵּץ] 1Chr 24:15

פָּצַר H6484 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (7×)
To urge, press upon persistently; stubbornness or presumption as an abstract noun
The verb פָּצַר captures the insistent pressure one person exerts on another, whether physical pushing or verbal urging. Lot urges the two angels to stay (Gen 19:3), Jacob presses Esau to accept his gift (Gen 33:11), and the sons of the prophets pressure Elisha until he relents (2 Kgs 2:17). German consistently uses draengen ('to press, push'), while Spanish employs insistir, confirming the core idea of persistent, sometimes uncomfortable, insistence. In 1 Samuel 15:23 the Hiphil infinitive absolute takes on an abstract nominal force — stubbornness or presumption — paired with rebellion against God.

1. urge, press upon (6×) To press, urge, or insist upon someone, applying social pressure to accept hospitality, a gift, or a request. All six Qal occurrences involve interpersonal insistence: Lot urgently pressing the angels to lodge with him (Gen 19:3), the men of Sodom pushing physically against Lot (Gen 19:9), Jacob insisting Esau accept his present (Gen 33:11), a Levite's host urging him to stay (Judg 19:7), and the prophets pressing Elisha about searching for Elijah (2 Kgs 2:17). German draengen and Spanish insistir both confirm the sense of relentless pushing. URGE PRESS INSIST en: and-he-urged, and-he-urged-, and-pressed | es: Y-insistió, Y-le-insistieron, Y-le-insistió | fr: et-il-urged, et-il-urged-, et-ils-pressed | de: und-drängte-, und-drängten, und-er-drängte- Gen 19:3; Gen 19:9; Gen 33:11; Judg 19:7; 2Kgs 2:17

2. stubbornness, presumption (1×) An abstract nominal use derived from the Hiphil infinitive absolute (haftzar), denoting stubborn presumption or arrogant insistence — a disposition rather than an action. Samuel pairs it with rebellion (meri) in 1 Sam 15:23: 'stubbornness is as idolatry.' Spanish obstinacion and French obstination capture the hardened, defiant quality. Where sense 1 describes an act of urging between people, this sense crystallizes that pushing impulse into a character flaw set alongside the sin of divination. URGE PRESS INSIST en: stubbornness | es: obstinación | fr: obstination | de: stubbornness 1Sam 15:23

H6485 V-Hofal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to be deposited, entrusted (Hofal stem of פָּקַד*), appearing once in Leviticus 6:4*
This is a passive verbal form meaning 'was deposited' or 'was entrusted,' from the common root פָּקַד which has a wide semantic range including visiting, appointing, mustering, and entrusting. In Leviticus 6:4, it appears in legal material concerning restitution for property violations. The Hofal stem (the passive of the causative) indicates that something has been placed in someone's care or custody by another party. The context involves items entrusted to someone's safekeeping which were then misappropriated, requiring both restitution and guilt offering.

(1×) Leviticus 6:4 uses this form in a list of property crimes: stolen goods, extorted items, found property, and 'that which was deposited with him.' The multilingual glosses (deposited, depositado) capture the sense of something placed in trust. This legal category addresses breach of fiduciary duty—when someone misuses property explicitly entrusted to their care, distinguishing it from outright theft or finding lost items. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: was-deposited | es: fue-depositado | fr: était-deposited | de: war-deposited Lev 6:4

פָּקַד H6485a V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mpc / 3ms (302×)
to attend to, visit; to count, muster, number; to appoint, set in charge; to punish; to miss, be missing; to deposit Occurring 302 times, this verb embodies the concept of deliberate attention—whether counting (census, 39x), appointing to office (23x), visiting with care (32x) or judgment (63x), or noticing absence (14x). The semantic thread is focused regard: God 'visits' Sarah to give her a son (Gen 21:1), Moses 'musters' the Levites (Num 1:3), Samuel 'appoints' commanders (Deut 20:9), and the LORD 'punishes' iniquity (Exod 20:5). Languages split these meanings dramatically: Arabic uses عدّ (count), أقام (appoint), افتقد (visit with care), عاقب (punish), and فُقِدَ (be missing)—five distinct roots for what Hebrew unifies under the single concept of attending to someone or something.

1. Qal passive participle: numbered ones, enrollment (76×) The Qal passive participle used substantivally (76x) dominates Numbers census accounts: 'their numbered ones' (Num 1:21, 23, 25, 27, 29), referring to those enrolled in Israel's military census. Arabic أُولُو (the counted ones), Korean 계수된 자들 (those counted), Hindi गिने गए (those counted), Swahili waliohesabiwa (those who were counted). The participial construction marks the status of having been attended to via enumeration. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: their-numbered-ones | es: Contados-de-ellos, contados-de-ellos | fr: leur-dénombra-ones | de: ihr-gezaehlt-die Num 1:21; Num 1:23; Num 1:25; Num 1:27; Num 1:29

2. Qal: punish, bring judgment (63×) To visit with punishment or bring judgment (63x) describes negative divine visitation. 'I the LORD visit the iniquity of the fathers on the children' (Exod 20:5, 34:7, Deut 5:9), 'I will punish Amalek' (1 Sam 15:2). Arabic shifts to عاقب (ʿāqaba, 'punish'—a completely different root ʿ-q-b), Korean 벌하다 (punish), Hindi दण्ड देना (give punishment), Swahili adhibu (punish). The attending is hostile inspection bringing consequences. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: And-I-will-visit, I-punish, I-will-punish | es: Y-castigaré, castigaré, castigaré? | fr: et-visiter, visiter | de: ich-suche-heim, und-ich-suche-heim, und-musterte Exod 20:5; Exod 34:7; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9; Ps 89:32

3. Qal: count, number, muster (39×) To count, number, or muster (39x) appears extensively in Numbers. 'Number the people of Israel' (Exod 30:12), 'Moses numbered them according to the word of the LORD' (Num 1:19). Arabic uses عدّ (ʿadda, 'count') / أحصى (aḥṣā, 'enumerate'), Korean 세다/계수하다 (count), Hindi गिनना (count), Swahili hesabu (count). The census sense: attending to each person by enumeration. COUNTING AND NARRATING
en: and-he-mustered, and-mustered, and-numbered | es: Y-contó, Y-revisó, contarás | fr: dénombra, dénombrer, et-dénombra | de: du-soll-Zahl, ergezaehlt, gezaehlt Exod 30:12; Num 1:3; Num 1:19; Num 1:44

4. Qal: visit, attend to, care for (32×) To visit with gracious attention or care (32x) marks positive divine visitation. 'The LORD visited Sarah as He had said' (Gen 21:1), Joseph tells his brothers 'God will surely visit you and bring you up from this land' (Gen 50:24-25). Arabic uses افتقد (iftaqada, Form VIII, 'visit with care, remember'), Korean 돌보다/방문하다 (care for/visit), Hindi देखभाल करना (take care of), Swahili tembelea/kumbuka (visit/remember). The attention brings blessing and deliverance. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: He-visits, I-will-visit, You-visit | es: Has-visitado, Y-lo-visitas, Y-recordaste | fr: –visiter, certainement, certes | de: besuchte, du-care-für-ihn, du-haben-visited Gen 21:1; Gen 50:24; Gen 50:25

5. Hifil: appoint, set in charge (23×) Hifil causative 'appoint, set in charge' (23x) installs someone in authority. Potiphar 'appointed Joseph over his house' (Gen 39:4-5), Pharaoh 'appointed officers over the land' (Gen 41:34), Moses 'appointed the Levites over the tabernacle' (Num 1:50). Arabic أقام (ʿayyana, 'appoint') / أقام (aqāma, 'set up') / وكّل (wakkala, 'deputize'), Korean 임명하다/세우다 (appoint/establish), Hindi नियुक्त करना (appoint), Swahili weka (place/set). The Hifil adds causation: making someone attend to a domain by granting authority. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: I-have-appointed, I-have-appointed-you, and-I-will-appoint | es: Pon, Y-nombre, había-nombrado | fr: désigna, et-dénombrer, et-désigna | de: appoint, bestellte, du-bestellte-ihn Gen 39:4; Gen 39:5; Gen 41:34; Lev 26:16; Num 1:50

6. Nifal: be missing, be lacking (14×) Nifal 'be missing, be lacking' (14x) notices absence. 'Not one of us was missing' (Num 31:49), 'There will be a tribe missing from Israel' (Judg 21:3), 'You will be missed because your seat will be empty' (1 Sam 20:6, 18, 25). Arabic فُقِدَ (faqada passive, 'be lost/missing'), Korean 빠지다/없어지다 (be missing), Hindi खोया जाना (be lost), Swahili potea/kosekana (be lost/be absent). The Nifal passive marks noticed absence—attending reveals lack. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: and-was-empty, and-you-will-be-missed, be-missing | es: falta, faltamos, faltarán | fr: est-manquant, est-missing, et-fut-vide | de: heimsuchen, ist-missing, seiend-missing Num 31:49; Judg 21:3; 1Sam 20:18; 1Sam 20:25

7. Qal: appoint, set over, charge (12×) Qal 'appoint, set over, charge' (12x) overlaps with #5 (Hifil appoint) but uses Qal stem. 'The captain of the guard appointed Joseph' (Gen 40:4), 'Appoint the Levites over the tabernacle' (Num 3:10), 'Appoint officers over the army' (Deut 20:9). Arabic أوصى (awṣā, 'charge, command') / أمر (amara, 'order'), Korean 명하다/임명하다 (command/appoint), Hindi नियुक्त करना (appoint), Swahili weka/agiza (set/command). The Qal may be earlier or simpler appointment construction than Hifil. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: I-will-appoint, and-appointed, and-they-shall-appoint | es: Designe, Y-designó, encargó | fr: dénombrer, et-désigna, et-ils-devra-établir | de: du-soll-einsetzen, heimsuchen, ich-suche-heim Gen 40:4; Num 3:10; Num 4:27; Num 27:16; Deut 20:9

8. Hitpael: be numbered, be enrolled (8×) Hitpael reflexive 'be numbered, be enrolled' (8x) marks passive census participation. 'But the Levites were not numbered among the people of Israel' (Num 1:47, 2:33, 26:62), 'Benjamin was numbered' (Judg 20:15). Arabic عُدَّ (passive of count/enumerate), Korean 세어지다/계수되다 (be counted), Hindi गिने जाना (be counted), Swahili hesabiwa (be counted). The Hitpael reflexive suggests willingness or automatic inclusion in the count. BE COUNTED NUMBERED
en: and-was-numbered, and-were-numbered, were-mustered | es: Y-fueron-contado, Y-fueron-contados, fueron-contados | fr: et-étaient-dénombré, et-était-dénombré, furent-mustered | de: und-war-gezaehlt, und-waren-gezaehlt, waren-gezaehlt Num 1:47; Num 2:33; Num 26:62; Judg 20:15

9. Nifal: be visited, be punished (8×) Nifal 'be visited, be punished' (8x) marks passive reception of divine attention (positive or negative). 'If they are visited after the visitation of all men' (Num 16:29, Korah's rebellion), 'Who can stand when He is visited?' (Prov 19:23). Arabic فُقِدَ (passive of visit/inspect) / يُب (be afflicted), Korean 방문받다/벌받다 (be visited/be punished), Hindi दंडित होना (be punished), Swahili tembelewa/adhibiwa (be visited/be punished). The Nifal passive shows receiving divine attention. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: and-were-appointed, and-were-missing, is-visited | es: Y-fueron-nombrados, es-visitada, ser-visitado-por | fr: est-visited, et-dénombrer, et-furent-manquant | de: er-mustert, heimsuchen, ist-visited Num 16:29; 2Sam 2:30; Neh 7:1; Neh 12:44; Prov 19:23

10. Hofal: the appointed ones (7×) Hofal passive 'the appointed ones' (7x) refers to those set in charge (passive of Hifil #5). 'The money was given to the appointed workmen' (2 Kgs 12:11, 22:5, 9, 2 Chr 34:10, 12). Arabic الَّذِي (those appointed/deputized), Korean 임명된 자들 (appointed ones), Hindi नियुक्त (appointed), Swahili waliowekwa (those who were placed). The Hofal participle marks status of having been appointed to oversee work. APPOINTING AND VISITING
en: (the-appointed), appointed, the-appointed | es: encargados, los-designados, los-encargados | fr: (the-appointed), dénombrer, le-désigna | de: der-bestellte, der-suchte-heim, heimsuchen 2Kgs 12:11; 2Kgs 22:5; 2Kgs 22:9; 2Chr 34:10; 2Chr 34:12

11. Hifil: deposit, entrust, commit (7×) Hifil 'deposit, entrust, commit' (7x) involves placing something in another's care. Rehoboam 'deposited shields with the guards' (1 Kgs 14:27, 2 Chr 12:10), Gehazi 'deposited the bags in the house' (2 Kgs 5:24), 'Into Your hand I commit my spirit' (Ps 31:5). Arabic ʿawdaʿa, 'deposit'), Korean 맡기다/보관하다 (entrust/keep), Hindi सौंपना (entrust), Swahili weka amri/kabidhi (place in trust/hand over). The Hifil extends attending into custodial care. APPOINTING AND VISITING
en: I-commit, and-deposited, and-entrusted | es: depositaron, depositará, encomiendo | fr: et-deposited, et-dénombrer, et-entrusted | de: heimsuchen, ich-commit, und-deposited 1Kgs 14:27; 2Kgs 5:24; 2Chr 12:10; Ps 31:5; Isa 10:28

12. Qal: miss, seek, long for (6×) Qal 'miss, seek, long for' (6x) describes emotional absence. 'See if the young men are well and bring back news' (1 Sam 17:18, literally 'attend to their welfare'), 'He will surely miss me' (1 Sam 20:6), 'Do not seek her' (2 Kgs 9:34, literally 'do not attend to her'). Arabic طلب/تفتقد (seek/notice absence), Korean 찾다/그리워하다 (seek/miss), Hindi खोजना (seek), Swahili tafuta/kosa (seek/miss). The attention notices emotional or physical absence. APPOINTING AND VISITING
en: attend-, for, misses-me | es: Encargaos, echará-de-menos, la-echarán-de-menos | fr: attend-, misses-moi, tu-devra-consulte | de: attend-, du-sollinquire, heimsuchen 1Sam 17:18; 1Sam 20:6; 2Kgs 9:34; Isa 26:16; Isa 34:16

13. Qal passive participle: officer, overseer (5×) Qal passive participle 'officer, overseer' (5x) used substantivally. 'Officers of the forces' (Num 31:14, 48), 'the captains and officers' (2 Kgs 11:15, 2 Chr 23:14). Arabic أُدَّاء/أُدّ (officers/commanders), Korean 지휘관/감독 (commander/overseer), Hindi अधिकारी (officer), Swahili maafisa (officers). Those appointed to attend to soldiers or workers—overlaps with #10 (Hofal appointed ones) but as military officers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [the-appointed], officers-of, the-officers | es: [los-designados], comandantes-de, designados-de | fr: [the-appointed], dénombrer, le-officers | de: [the-appointed], der-officers, heimsuchen Num 31:14; Num 31:48; 2Kgs 11:15; 2Kgs 12:11; 2Chr 23:14

14. (1×) God 'mustering the armies for battle' (Isa 13:4, 1x). Spanish pasar revista (inspect/muster), Korean 소집하다 (muster), French visiter (visit/inspect). Unique occurrence of the participle describing God as the one mustering heavenly/earthly armies for judgment. Overlaps with #3 (count/muster) but with divine subject and military eschatological context. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: mustering | es: pasa-revista | fr: visiter | de: von-suchte-heim Isa 13:4

15. (1×) 'I am deprived of the rest of my years' (Isa 38:10, 1x, Hezekiah's lament). Spanish ser privado (be deprived), Korean 잃다 (lose), French visiter (be visited). The single occurrence suggests 'I have been visited with loss' or 'my years have been taken from me.' The sense connects to #6 (be missing) but as theological complaint about premature death. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: I-am-deprived | es: soy-privado | fr: visiter | de: heimsuchen Isa 38:10

פְּקוּדִים H6485b V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mpc (1×)

accounts, records, or expenses related to the tabernacle construction in Exodus 38:21

This plural noun, possibly derived from the root פָּקַד (to number, muster, appoint), carries an abstract sense of 'musterings' or 'accountings,' which by extension came to mean the documented records or expenses. It appears only in Exodus 38:21 at the beginning of a detailed inventory of metals used in constructing the tabernacle. The term introduces the careful accounting that follows, listing the gold, silver, and bronze contributions and their allocation to various tabernacle components. This administrative terminology reflects the meticulous record-keeping associated with sacred construction projects.

(1×) Exodus 38:21 opens with 'These are the accounts of the tabernacle,' followed by a comprehensive tally of precious metals. The multilingual evidence (accounts, cálculos) reflects the administrative, record-keeping sense. The construct phrase 'accounts of the tabernacle' introduces Moses' verification of all materials collected and used, demonstrating transparency and accountability in handling the people's contributions for the sanctuary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: accounts-of | es: los-cálculos-de | fr: accounts-de | de: accounts-von Exod 38:21

פְּקֻדָּה H6486 Conj-w / N-fsc (32×)

Oversight, visitation, or reckoning; encompasses divine punishment, appointed office, muster, providential care, custody, and stored wealth.

A noun derived from the root paqad (to attend to, visit, appoint), carrying the full weight of that verb's range into its nominal form. When God 'visits' his people, the outcome may be punitive judgment (as in Hosea 9:7 and repeatedly in Jeremiah) or tender providence (Job 10:12). In the administrative sphere it denotes an appointed office or supervisory charge, as in the Levitical duties of Numbers 3-4. Less common but well-attested uses include the mustering or enrollment of troops (Chronicles), a place of custody (Jer 52:11), and goods stored up in trust (Isa 15:7). The multilingual evidence is telling: Spanish castigo and Arabic iqab converge cleanly on the punishment sense, while supervisión and wikala mark the office sense, confirming each cluster as lexically distinct.

1. punishment, divine visitation (13×) The punitive dimension of divine visitation: God's reckoning, judgment, or retribution visited upon persons or nations for sin. Dominant in the prophets, especially Jeremiah's formulaic 'in the time/year of their visitation' (Jer 8:12; 10:15; 23:12). Multilingual glosses converge strikingly: Spanish castigo, Hindi dand, Arabic iqab, Korean beol, and Swahili adhabu all point to punishment, distinguishing this clearly from the neutral 'oversight' sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-visitation-of, punishments-of, the-punishment | es: castigo, castigos-de, la-visitación | fr: [הפקדה], [פקדות], châtiment | de: Heimsuchung, [הפקדה], [פקדתך] Num 16:29; Isa 10:3; Jer 8:12; Jer 10:15; Jer 11:23

2. oversight, office, charge (11×) An appointed position of supervision or administrative responsibility, the office or charge of overseeing something. Central in Numbers 3-4 where Eleazar holds the oversight of the sanctuary, and in 2 Kings 11:18 and 2 Chronicles 23:18 for temple appointments. Spanish supervisión and cargos, Arabic wikala, and Korean damjang/jikmu uniformly indicate an institutional role rather than a divine action. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-oversight-of, his-office, office-of | es: Y-supervisión-de, cargos, guardias | fr: [פקודות], [פקדת], châtiment | de: Heimsuchung, officers, oversight-von Num 3:32; Num 3:36; Num 4:16; 2Kgs 11:18

3. numbering, enrollment, muster (5×) The act of counting, registering, or mustering people for organized service, a census or enrollment roster. Found exclusively in Chronicles (1 Chr 23:11; 24:3, 19; 2 Chr 17:14; 26:11) in connection with Levitical and military organization. Glosses like Spanish registro, Hindi ginti, Arabic ihsa, and Swahili hesabu all denote a numbering or tally, setting this apart from the supervisory office sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-enrollment, for-their-appointment, their-appointments | es: para-registro, para-sus-registros, registro-de-ellos | fr: [לפקדה], [לפקדתם], [פקדתם] | de: Heimsuchung 1Chr 23:11; 1Chr 24:3; 1Chr 24:19; 2Chr 17:14; 2Chr 26:11

4. care, providence (1×) God's watchful care and providential attention, the positive counterpart to punitive visitation. Attested only in Job 10:12, where Job acknowledges that God's pquddah granted him life and favor. The multilingual evidence (Spanish providencia, Hindi dekhbhal, Arabic inaya, Korean dolbosim, Swahili utunzaji) uniformly signals caring protection rather than judgment. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: and-Your-care | es: y-tu-providencia | fr: et-ton-ופקדתך-toi | de: [ופקדתך] Job 10:12

5. custody, imprisonment (1×) A place of confinement or custody, concretely a prison. Appears in Jeremiah 52:11 where Zedekiah is placed in the house of pquddah until his death. Spanish cárcel, Hindi karaghar, Arabic al-sijn, and Swahili kifungo all denote imprisonment, a metonymic extension from 'place under guard' to 'prison.' GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: the-custody | es: la-cárcel | fr: châtiment | de: Heimsuchung Jer 52:11

6. deposit, store entrusted (1×) Something deposited or stored up for safekeeping, entrusted wealth or provisions. Found in Isaiah 15:7 where Moab's accumulated store is carried across the Wadi of the Willows. Spanish tesoro, Hindi sangrah, Arabic wadia, and Korean jeochuk point to a treasury or deposit, extending the root's sense of 'entrusting to someone's charge' into the material domain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-stored-up | es: y-su-tesoro | fr: et-châtiment | de: und-Heimsuchung Isa 15:7

פְּקֻדוֹן H6487 Prep-l / N-ms (3×)

deposit, pledge, thing stored or held in trust

This term refers to something deposited for safekeeping or stored for future use—either goods held in trust or supplies reserved for emergencies. Genesis 41:36 uses it for grain stored against famine—reserves that will preserve Egypt. Leviticus 5:21, 23 (6:2, 4 in English) employs it for property deposited with a neighbor for safekeeping, which becomes the subject of legal action if denied or misappropriated. The term implies fiduciary responsibility—whether the state storing grain for the people or an individual safeguarding a neighbor's possessions. Breach of such trust constitutes serious offense requiring restitution and sacrifice.

(3×) Something deposited for storage or held in trust. Genesis 41:36 commands storing grain 'as a reserve (לְפִקָּדוֹן) for the land against the seven years of famine'—supplies held against future need. Leviticus 6:2 (5:21 Hebrew) addresses deception 'about a deposit (בְּפִקָּדוֹן) or a security'—property entrusted to another's care. Verse 4 (5:23 Hebrew) requires returning 'the deposit (הַפִּקָּדוֹן)' with added fifth when guilt is confessed. The term emphasizes the held-in-trust aspect, whether for public welfare or private safekeeping. Translations: 'deposit,' 'reserve,' 'safekeeping'; Spanish 'depósito,' French 'dépôt,' German 'Vorrat/Pfand.' POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY en: for-reserve, in-a-deposit, the-deposit | es: el-depósito, en-depósito, para-depósito | fr: dans-un-deposit, le-deposit, pour-reserve | de: als-Vorrat, der-deposit, in-ein-deposit Gen 41:36; Lev 6:2; Lev 6:4

פְּקֻדָּת H6488 N-fs (1×)

oversight, watch, guard duty; appears as 'officer of the guard' in Jeremiah 37:13

This feminine noun means oversight, watch, or the responsibility of guarding, derived from the root פָּקַד (to oversee, attend to). It appears only in Jeremiah 37:13, where it describes an official position: literally 'master/captain of the oversight.' The context is Jeremiah's attempted departure from Jerusalem during the Babylonian siege, when he was stopped at the Benjamin Gate by a guard officer who accused him of deserting to the Chaldeans. The term designates military watch duty or guard command, specifically referring to the supervisory role over checkpoint security.

(1×) In Jeremiah 37:13, the phrase 'a captain of the guard' (literally 'master of oversight') identifies Irijah, son of Shelemiah, who arrested Jeremiah at the city gate. The multilingual glosses (guard, guardia) capture the military security function. This officer commanded the watch at the Benjamin Gate during the siege, responsible for preventing desertion—a serious concern given Jerusalem's dire situation and Jeremiah's prophetic message advocating surrender. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: guard | es: guardia | fr: [פקדת] | de: [פקדת] Jer 37:13

פְּקוֹד H6489 N-proper-fs (2×)

Pekod, a Babylonian tribe in southeastern Mesopotamia (Jeremiah 50:21; Ezekiel 23:23)

Pekod was a tribal group in Babylonia, located in the southeastern region bordering Elam. Jeremiah 50:21 calls for judgment against 'the inhabitants of Pekod' as part of God's verdict on Babylon. Ezekiel 23:23 lists them among Babylonian forces coming against Jerusalem. The name corresponds to the Assyrian Puqudu, a known tribe in Babylonian territory.

(2×) A gentile/tribal name referring to the Pekod people of southeastern Babylonia. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'Pecod/Pekod,' French 'Pekod') show transliteration with minor variation. Both prophetic texts place Pekod within Babylonian military and political networks—Jeremiah as object of judgment, Ezekiel as agent of judgment against Judah, showing Babylon's shifting role in God's purposes. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pekod | es: Pecod, Pekod | fr: Pekod, [פקוד] | de: [פקוד] Jer 50:21; Ezek 23:23

פִּקּוּד H6490 Prep-l / N-mpc / 2ms (24×)

Divine precepts, appointed charges – God's authoritative instructions, almost exclusive to the Psalms

A noun appearing almost exclusively in the Psalms to designate God's appointed precepts. It belongs to the rich vocabulary of Psalm 119, standing alongside torah, statutes, commandments, and testimonies as a near-synonym for divine instruction. The root paqad ('to attend to, appoint') gives it the nuance of something God has specifically commissioned – not arbitrary rules but carefully appointed instructions. Psalm 19:8 declares these precepts 'right, rejoicing the heart,' and Psalm 111:7 affirms they are 'established forever.' French 'preceptes' and German 'Vorschriften' capture the notion of binding, divinely issued directions.

precept, ordinance (24×) Divine precepts or appointed charges found almost exclusively in the Psalms (esp. Psalm 119). The root paqad ('to attend to, appoint') conveys instructions specifically commissioned by God. Psalm 19:8 declares them 'right, rejoicing the heart'; Psalm 103:18 pairs them with covenant-keeping; Psalm 111:7 affirms they are 'faithful and upright.' Always plural (piqqudekha / piqqudav), underscoring the comprehensive scope of God's ordered instructions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: His-precepts, Your-precepts, for-Your-precepts | es: preceptos-de, precep-

tos-de-ti, sus-mandamientos | fr: précepte, tes-préceptes, à-précepte | de: Vorschriften-von, dein-Vorschriften, der-Vorschriften-von Ps 19:8; Ps 103:18; Ps 111:7; Ps 119:4; Ps 119:15

פָּקַח H6491 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (21×)

To open the eyes (literally or spiritually); in passive forms, for eyes to be opened or stand open.

Describes the deliberate act of opening eyes, whether physical or spiritual, carrying profound theological weight in Scripture. God opens Hagar's eyes to see a well (Gen 21:19), Elisha prays for his servant's eyes to be opened to see heavenly armies (2 Kgs 6:17), and the psalmist declares that the LORD 'opens the eyes of the blind' (Ps 146:8). The passive forms appear at pivotal moments: Adam and Eve's eyes 'were opened' to know good and evil (Gen 3:7), and Isaiah promises that the eyes of the blind 'will be opened' in messianic restoration (Isa 35:5). The Arabic cognate meaning 'to blossom' adds a lovely image – eyes opening like flowers.

1. open eyes (active) (17×) The active sense of opening eyes, used across Qal inflections including imperatives, perfects, imperfects, infinitives, and participles. Covers both physical sight and spiritual perception: God opens Hagar's eyes to a well of water (Gen 21:19), Elisha's servant sees chariots of fire (2 Kgs 6:17), and the LORD is praised as the one who 'opens the eyes of the blind' (Ps 146:8). Spanish 'abre' and German translations preserve the directness of the imperative. Isaiah 42:7 extends this to the Servant's mission 'to open blind eyes,' linking physical and covenantal sight. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: (qere:open), I-will-open, To-open | es: Abre, Y-abrió, [abre] | fr: [לִפְקֹחַ], [פְּקוֹחַ], [פָּקַח] | de: [אִפְקַח], [לִפְקֹחַ], [פְּקוֹחַ] Gen 21:19; 2Kgs 4:35; 2Kgs 6:17; 2Kgs 6:20

2. eyes be opened (passive/stative) (4×) The passive or stative sense expressed in Nifal and Qal passive participle forms, describing eyes being opened or standing open. Theologically weighty at the Fall – 'the eyes of both were opened' (Gen 3:7) – and in messianic hope – 'the eyes of the blind will be opened' (Isa 35:5). Spanish clearly distinguishes with 'fueron abiertos' and 'seran abiertos,' while German uses 'geoeffnet werden.' Jeremiah 32:19 uses the passive participle to describe God's eyes as perpetually 'open' over all human ways. OPENING AND SHUTTING

en: And-were-opened, and-will-be-opened, open | es: Y-fueron-abiertos, abiertos, serán-abiertos | fr: Et-étaient-ouvrit, [פְּקוּחוֹת], [תִּפָּקַחְנָה] | de: [פְּקוּחוֹת], [תִּפָּקַחְנָה], und-geöffnet-werden Gen 3:5; Gen 3:7; Isa 35:5; Jer 32:19

פֶּקַח H6492 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (11×)

Pekah, son of Remaliah, usurping king of Israel who reigned during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis

The name of a military officer who assassinated King Pekahiah and seized Israel's throne, reigning approximately 752–732 BC. Pekah is most remembered for his ill-fated alliance with Rezin of Damascus against Judah, the Syro-Ephraimite crisis that prompted Isaiah's famous Immanuel prophecy (Isa 7:1). His reign ended when Hoshea conspired against him, continuing the cycle of violence that marked Israel's final decades.

Pekah (proper name) (11×) The personal name of the son of Remaliah who usurped Israel's throne by assassinating Pekahiah (2 Kgs 15:25). His twenty-year reign is dominated by the Syro-Ephraimite coalition against Judah (2 Kgs 15:27–32; Isa 7:1). English transliterations vary between 'Pekah' and 'Peqach,' reflecting the Hebrew qoph. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pekach, Peqach, and-Pekach | es: Pécaj, de-Pécaj, y-Peqaj | fr: Pékach, [וּפֶקַח], [פֶּקַח] | de: Pekach, [וּפֶקַח], [פֶּקַח] 2Kgs 15:25; 2Kgs 15:27; 2Kgs 15:29; 2Kgs 15:30; 2Kgs 15:31

פִּקֵּחַ H6493 Adj-ms (2×)

Seeing, sighted, able to see (Exodus 4:11; 23:8, opposite of blind)

This adjective means seeing or sighted—having the ability to see. Exodus 4:11 contrasts those who see with the blind, affirming that God makes both. Exodus 23:8 warns that bribes blind the clear-sighted, corrupting those who would otherwise see truth clearly. The term emphasizes functional sight and perceptive ability.

(2×) Having sight, sighted, or perceptive—the opposite of blind. Spanish 'vidente' (seeing one) and 'los que ven' (those who see) capture both the literal and figurative dimensions. Exodus 4:11 uses it literally for physical sight, while 23:8 extends it metaphorically to moral/judicial perception. The plural form 'the clear-sighted' suggests those whose judgment should be uncorrupted. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: seeing, the-clear-sighted | es: a-los-que-ven, vidente | fr: le-clear-sighted, voyant | de: der-clear-sighted, seeing Exod 4:11; Exod 23:8

פְּקַחְיָה H6494 N-proper-ms (3×)

Pekahiah, king of Israel, assassinated after two-year reign

Pekahiah was king of Israel who reigned only two years before being assassinated. Son of Menahem, he succeeded his father but continued the northern kingdom's pattern of evil in Yahweh's sight. His captain Pekah son of Remaliah conspired against him and killed him in the citadel of Samaria, along with Argob and Arieh, aided by fifty Gileadites. His brief, troubled reign (around 740-738 BC) exemplifies the instability and violence that characterized Israel's final decades before Assyrian conquest. The name means 'Yahweh has opened (the eyes),' though his reign showed no spiritual insight.

(3×) Personal name of Israel's king, son of Menahem, who reigned two years before assassination. 2 Kings 15:22 introduces his reign: 'Pekahiah (פְּקַחְיָה) his son reigned in his place.' Verse 23 dates his accession and notes he 'did evil in the sight of Yahweh.' Verse 26 records his murder: 'Pekah son of Remaliah, his captain, conspired against him and struck him down in Samaria...and killed Pekahiah (פְּקַחְיָהוּ).' His assassination around 738 BC continued Israel's spiral toward Assyrian conquest. The name means 'Yahweh has opened (the eyes).' Translations preserve: 'Pekahiah,' Spanish 'Pecajías.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pekachyah | es: Pecajías | fr: Pekachyah | de: Pekachyah 2Kgs 15:22; 2Kgs 15:23; 2Kgs 15:26

פְּקַח־קוֹחַ H6495 N-ms (2×)

Opening wide (of eyes or prison; Isaiah 61:1, promising release to captives)

This compound noun means a wide or complete opening, particularly of eyes. It appears in Isaiah 61:1 in the phrase about proclaiming 'opening to those who are bound'—though textual variants suggest reading 'to the blind' instead. The term combines two roots for opening, creating an intensive sense of complete opening or release from darkness and imprisonment.

(2×) A comprehensive opening or release, likely from imprisonment or darkness. BDB notes this appears twice in the same verse (Isaiah 61:1) in construct relationships with different words. The cross-linguistic glosses show uncertainty: some bracket it untranslated, Spanish offers both 'apertura de' (opening of) and interpretive glosses ('ojos,' 'prison'). The textual complexity reflects early translation challenges with this unique compound. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: opening-of-, prison | es: apertura-de-, ojos | fr: [פְּקַח], [קוֹחַ] | de: [פְּקַח], [קוֹחַ] Isa 61:1

פָּקִיד H6496 Art / N-ms (13×)

Overseer, appointed official; one placed in charge of a task, group, or institution by delegated authority.

Derived from the root פקד ('to appoint, visit, muster'), this noun designates someone formally placed in a supervisory role. It spans civic, military, and sacred settings: Joseph proposes commissioners over Egypt's grain stores (Gen 41:34), Esther's king appoints officers for the harem (Est 2:3), and Pashhur serves as chief overseer of the temple (Jer 20:1). Spanish renders it variously as supervisor and encargado, while German uses Aufseher — all capturing the sense of delegated institutional authority rather than inherent sovereignty.

overseer, appointed officer (13×) A person formally appointed to supervise, manage, or take charge of a specific task, group, or institution. The noun carries the weight of delegated authority — the overseer acts on behalf of a higher power, whether Pharaoh (Gen 41:34), a king (Est 2:3), or the priesthood (Jer 20:1; 2 Chr 24:11). Constructed with עַל to specify the domain of oversight (soldiers, 2 Kgs 25:19; Benjamites, Neh 11:9; singers, Neh 12:42), it encompasses both temporary commissions and permanent institutional offices. OVERSEER APPOINTED OFFICER

en: and-officer-of, and-overseer, and-overseer-of | es: Y-supervisor-de, el-supervisor, encargado | fr: [הפקיד], [ופקיד], [פקדים] | de: Aufseher, [הפקיד], [ופקיד] Gen 41:34; Judg 9:28; 2Kgs 25:19; 2Chr 24:11; 2Chr 31:13

פְּקָעִים H6497 Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

gourds, gourd-shaped ornaments (decorative carvings)

This term describes decorative carved ornaments shaped like gourds or knobs, adorning Solomon's temple. Some interpreters see them as gourd-shaped (like wild cucumbers), while others suggest knob or ball shapes. They appeared as part of the temple's elaborate wood and bronze ornamentation—carved into cedar paneling and cast into the great bronze sea. 1 Kings 6:18 describes cedar carvings of gourds and flowers inside the temple. 1 Kings 7:24 mentions gourds encircling the bronze sea, cast in two rows beneath its rim. These decorative elements reflected ancient Near Eastern artistic conventions and contributed to the temple's visual splendor.

(3×) Ornamental carvings shaped like gourds or knobs, decorating Solomon's temple. 1 Kings 6:18 describes interior cedar paneling: 'carved in the form of gourds (פְּקָעִים) and open flowers'—decorative relief work. 1 Kings 7:24 twice mentions ornaments on the great bronze sea: 'under its brim were gourds (פְּקָעִים) encircling it...the gourds (הַפְּקָעִים) were in two rows, cast with it when it was cast.' The exact shape is debated—gourd-like (resembling wild cucumbers) or knob/ball-shaped. Syriac suggests flower forms. Translations: 'gourds,' 'knops,' 'ornamental buds'; Spanish 'calabazas,' French 'coloquintes,' German 'Koloquinten.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gourds, gourds, the-gourds | es: Y-calabazas, calabazas, las-calabazas | fr: et-gourds, gourds, le-gourds | de: der-gourds, gourds, und-gourds 1Kgs 6:18; 1Kgs 7:24

פַּקֻּעַת H6498 N-fpc (1×)

wild gourds, likely colocynth (Citrullus colocynthis), poisonous wild cucumbers mentioned in 2 Kings 4:39

This plural noun refers to wild gourds or wild cucumbers, specifically identified by most scholars as colocynth (Citrullus colocynthis), a wild vine producing small, bitter, poisonous fruit with purgative properties. The word appears only in 2 Kings 4:39 in the narrative of Elisha and the poisoned stew. A man gathering herbs during famine found a wild vine and picked its fruit, not recognizing the danger. When these were chopped into the pot, the stew became toxic, prompting the cry 'There is death in the pot!' until Elisha miraculously neutralized the poison. The term highlights the danger of misidentified wild plants, especially during desperate times.

(1×) In 2 Kings 4:39, these 'wild gourds' were gathered unknowingly during famine conditions and added to a communal stew, nearly causing disaster. The phrase 'gourds of the field' emphasizes their wild, uncultivated nature. The multilingual glosses (gourds, calabazas) preserve the botanical reference. Colocynth resembles edible cucumbers but contains toxic compounds causing severe intestinal distress, making the error understandable yet life-threatening—a vivid backdrop for Elisha's miracle of rendering the pot safe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gourds-of | es: calabazas | fr: gourds-de | de: gourds-von 2Kgs 4:39

פַּר H6499 N-ms (133×)

A young bull or bullock, predominantly a sacrificial animal; figuratively, a symbol of fierce strength or aggression.

Par is the standard Hebrew term for the young male bovine selected for sacrifice, appearing overwhelmingly in ritual legislation. The phrase par ben-baqar ('bull, son of the herd') recurs like a liturgical formula across Leviticus and Numbers, specifying the costliest individual animal offering — required for priestly consecration (Exod 29:1), sin offerings (Lev 4:3), and festival burnt offerings (Num 28-29). In poetic texts, the bull's raw power becomes a metaphor for aggression: the 'bulls of Bashan' encircle the suffering psalmist (Ps 22:12), and Babylon's warriors are called 'her bulls' marked for slaughter (Jer 50:27).

1. young bull, bullock (130×) A young bull selected for sacrifice and offering — the primary and overwhelmingly dominant sense across 130 occurrences. Used in burnt offerings (Exod 29:1), sin offerings (Lev 4:3; Exod 29:36), peace offerings (Exod 24:5), and festival liturgies (Num 28-29). Spanish novillo and toro, French taureau, and German Stier all converge on the same bovine referent. The construct phrase par ha-chattat ('bull of the sin offering') appears as a fixed ritual formula. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: a-bull, bull | es: Novillo, novillo, toro | fr: taureau, un-taureau | de: Stier, ein-Stier Exod 29:1; Exod 29:3; Exod 29:10; Exod 29:11

2. bull (figurative, mighty) (3×) Bulls as a figurative image of powerful, aggressive enemies or mighty warriors. The 'bulls of Bashan' surround the psalmist in anguished prayer (Ps 22:12), evoking the famously well-fed cattle of that fertile region as metaphors for brutal oppressors. Jeremiah applies the image to Babylon's doomed warriors — 'slaughter all her bulls' (Jer 50:27). Hindi glosses shift to power-specific vocabulary here, distinguishing this metaphorical sense from the literal sacrificial animal. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: bulls, her-bulls | es: sus-toros, toros | fr: [פריה], taureau | de: Stier, [פריה] Ps 22:12; Ps 51:19; Jer 50:27

פָּרָה H6500 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to be fruitful, bear fruit (Hifil form), appearing in Hosea 13:15 with wordplay on Ephraim's name

This is a verbal form from the common root פָּרָה meaning 'to bear fruit' or 'be fruitful,' the same root appearing in God's creation blessing 'be fruitful and multiply' (Genesis 1:22). In Hosea 13:15, the Hifil form appears in a context of bitter irony: though Ephraim may flourish (with a wordplay on the name Ephraim, which sounds like 'fruitful'), the east wind of judgment is coming. The verb throughout Scripture carries connotations of productivity, prosperity, and blessing—making its use in this judgment oracle particularly poignant as fertility imagery is reversed into barrenness and destruction.

(1×) Hosea 13:15 employs deliberate wordplay: 'Though he (Ephraim) be fruitful among brothers, an east wind will come.' The prophet invokes Ephraim's name-meaning ('fruitful') only to announce its reversal through divine judgment. The multilingual glosses show some variation (fruitful, fructifique) but capture the basic fertility imagery. The verse continues with drought imagery —springs drying up, treasuries plundered—systematically negating the fruitfulness that Ephraim's name promised. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: is-fruitful | es: fructifique | fr: Pul | de: [יפריא] Hos 13:15

פֶּרֶא H6501 N-mp (10×)

Wild donkey (onager); a symbol of untamed freedom, desert survival, and willful independence.

Designates the wild donkey or onager (Equus hemionus), an animal that embodied the untamed freedom of the desert in the ancient Near Eastern imagination. The angel's description of Ishmael as 'a wild donkey of a man' (Gen 16:12) became a proverbial image of fierce nomadic independence. Job's speeches use the animal to illustrate both the futility of complaint (Job 6:5) and the impossibility of taming innate nature (Job 11:12). Hosea compares wayward Ephraim to a wild donkey wandering alone (Hos 8:9), and Jeremiah likens Israel's lust for idols to a wild donkey in heat (Jer 2:24). Spanish 'asno montes' (mountain donkey) nicely captures the wilderness habitat.

wild donkey (10×) The wild donkey or onager (פֶּרֶא, pere), a fleet, untameable equid of the desert steppe. The animal serves as a powerful symbol: Ishmael is called 'a wild donkey of a man' (Gen 16:12), marking him as a free-roaming nomad. In wisdom literature, the wild donkey illustrates instinct and contentment (Job 6:5), untameable nature (Job 11:12), and God's sovereign provision for wild creatures (Job 39:5, Ps 104:11). Prophetically, it represents Israel's willful pursuit of idolatry (Jer 2:24, Hos 8:9) and the destitution of the poor (Job 24:5). Spanish 'asno montes' and French forms consistently identify the same zoological species across all occurrences. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: A-wild-donkey, and-wild-donkeys, of-flocks | es: Asna-montés, Y-asnos-silvestres, asno-montés | fr: [ופראים], [פראים], [פרה] | de: [וּפְרָאִים], [פֶּרֶא], [פְּרָאִים] Gen 16:12; Job 6:5; Job 11:12; Job 24:5; Job 39:5

פִּרְאָם H6502 N-proper-ms (1×)

Piram, a Canaanite king of Jarmuth who joined the coalition against Gibeon in Joshua 10:3

This personal name belongs to one of the five Amorite kings who formed a coalition to attack Gibeon after it made peace with Israel. Piram ruled Jarmuth, a Canaanite city in the Shephelah lowlands west of Jerusalem. He joined with the kings of Jerusalem, Hebron, Lachish, and Eglon in response to Gibeon's treaty with Joshua, viewing it as a strategic betrayal. The coalition's siege of Gibeon triggered Israel's overnight march from Gilgal and the famous battle where the sun stood still. All five kings, including Piram, were captured, executed, and buried in the cave at Makkedah.

(1×) Joshua 10:3 identifies Piram as king of Jarmuth, listing him third among the five-king alliance. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with minimal variation (Piram, Piream). Jarmuth has been identified with modern Khirbet Yarmuk, strategically located in the Judean foothills. Piram's participation in this ill-fated coalition represents the organized Canaanite resistance to Israel's entry, and his defeat marked a crucial step in Joshua's conquest of the southern hill country. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Piram | es: Piream | fr: Piram | de: Piram Josh 10:3

פַּרְוָר H6503 Prep-l (3×)

Parbar, colonnade or structure on west side of temple

This architectural term of uncertain meaning designates a structure on the western side of Solomon's temple complex. It appears in two forms: 'parvarim' in 2 Kings 23:11 and 'parbar' in 1 Chronicles 26:18 (twice). Scholars propose various interpretations: a colonnade, open pavilion, suburb, or storage area. The term may be a Persian loan-word meaning 'light-bearer' (open summer-house) or relate to 'suburb.' 2 Kings 23:11 associates it with horses dedicated to the sun god, which Josiah removed. Chronicles mentions it in the context of gatekeepers' divisions. Whatever its precise nature, it represented a distinct area requiring assigned personnel.

(3×) An architectural feature or area on the temple's west side, meaning uncertain. 2 Kings 23:11 locates horses dedicated to the sun 'in the precincts (בַּפַּרְוָרִים), at the entrance to the house of Yahweh'—Josiah destroyed these idolatrous elements. 1 Chronicles 26:18 assigns Levitical gatekeepers: 'for the Parbar (לַפַּרְבָּר) on the west, four at the road, two at the Parbar (לַפַּרְבָּר).' Proposed meanings include colonnade, open pavilion, suburb, or storage structure. Possibly from Persian 'light-bearer' or related to Mishnaic terms for suburb. Translations vary: 'precincts,' 'Parbar,' 'colonnade'; Spanish 'pórtico/recintos,' French 'parvis.' PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS

en: For-the-Parbar, at-the-Parbar, in-the-precincts | es: Para-el-pórtico, en-los-recintos, para-el-pórtico | fr: [לפרבר], dans-le-precincts | de: [לפרבר], in-der-precincts 2Kgs 23:11; 1Chr 26:18

פָּרַד H6504 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (26×)

Divide, separate, scatter; to part ways, branch off, or cause division between persons or things

Built on the idea of splitting a unity into parts, this verb operates across multiple stems to express a wide range of separation. In the Nifal, Abram and Lot 'separated from each other' (Gen 13:9-14) and the nations 'were divided' after the flood (Gen 10:5, 32). The Hifil describes an agent who causes division — a whisperer who 'separates close friends' (Prov 16:28) or God who 'separated the nations' at creation (Deut 32:8). The Hitpael adds a reflexive dimension of scattering or coming apart, as when bones are 'disjointed' (Ps 22:14). Even a river 'divides into branches' (Gen 2:10), grounding the word in both geography and human relationship.

1. separate from one another (10×) Nifal reflexive/reciprocal: two parties part company or go separate ways. Gen 13:9-14 narrates Abram and Lot's parting; Gen 10:5, 32 describes post-flood nations dividing. Spanish 'sepárate' and 'es separado' mirror the mutual or self-directed separation. 2 Sam 1:23 poignantly notes that Saul and Jonathan 'were not divided' even in death, using the negative to underscore inseparable loyalty. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-they-separated, had-separated, one-separating-himself | es: Sepárate, el-que-se-separa, es-separado | fr: –être-sépara, avait-sépara, et-ils-sépara | de: [יפרד], [נפרד], hatte-absonderte Gen 10:5; Gen 10:32; Gen 13:9; Gen 13:11; Gen 13:14

2. cause to separate (7×) Hifil causative: an agent actively divides or separates others. Deut 32:8 recalls when the Most High 'separated the sons of Adam'; Prov 16:28 warns that a whisperer 'separates close friends.' Spanish 'separa' and 'cuando separó' capture the causative force. Ruth 1:17 invokes death as the only power that can 'part' Ruth from Naomi, elevating the verb to covenantal language. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-separated, separated, separates | es: aparta, cuando-separó, separa | fr: et-sépara, quand-il-sépara, sera-séparer | de: [יפריד], [מפריד], als-er-absonderte Gen 30:40; Deut 32:8; Ruth 1:17; 2Kgs 2:11; Prov 16:28

3. be scattered abroad (3×) Hitpael and Nifal participial: being scattered or dispersed as a group across space. Neh 4:19 describes workers 'scattered' along the wall; Ps 92:9 declares that evildoers 'will be scattered.' Spanish 'dispersos' and 'serán dispersados' emphasize the resultant state of wide dispersion rather than a single act of parting. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: are-scattered, separated, will-be-scattered | es: dispersos, se-dispersan, serán-dispersados | fr: [נפרדים], séparer | de: [יתפרדו], [נפרדים], wird-sein-zerstreut Neh 4:19; Job 4:11; Ps 92:9

4. spread out or dispersed (2×) Qal passive and Pual: a state of being spread apart physically. Ezek 1:11 describes the living creatures' wings as 'spread out' (perudoth) above; Esth 3:8 characterizes the Jews as 'dispersed' among the peoples. The spatial imagery distinguishes this from interpersonal separation, focusing on physical extension across an area. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: and-dispersed, spread-out | es: extendidas, y-separado | fr: [ומפרד], séparer | de: [ומפרד], [פרדות] Esth 3:8; Ezek 1:11

5. become disjointed (2×) Hitpael: coming apart or being dislocated, as when joints separate under duress. Ps 22:14 laments 'all my bones are disjointed' — a visceral image of suffering on the cross that the multilingual evidence renders as physical dislocation. Job 41:17 asks whether Leviathan's scales 'can be separated,' using the same stem to describe structural cohesion that resists pulling apart. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-are-disjointed, can-they-be-separated | es: se-separan, y-se-descoyuntaron | fr: et-le-séparer, séparer | de: [יתפרדו], und-sind-disjointed Job 41:17; Ps 22:14

6. withdraw independently (1×) Piel: voluntarily withdrawing or going apart on one's own initiative. Hos 4:14 warns against the men who 'go apart' with prostitutes, emphasizing deliberate personal departure from the community for illicit purposes. Spanish 'se apartan' captures the reflexive voluntary quality. This singleton usage in the Piel gives the stem a moral coloring absent from the neutral Nifal separations. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: go-apart | es: se-apartan | fr: séparer | de: [יפרדו] Hos 4:14

7. divide into branches (1×) Nifal of geographic branching: a single river dividing into multiple streams. Gen 2:10 records that a river 'went out of Eden' and there 'it divided' into four headwaters. Spanish 'se dividía' and German 'teilte er sich' reflect the physical splitting of a watercourse. This concrete, spatial sense may be the root metaphor from which the interpersonal and abstract senses developed. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: it-divided | es: se-dividía | fr: cela-divisa | de: teilte-er-sich Gen 2:10

פֶּרֶד H6505 Conj-w / N-ms (14×)

Mule; the hybrid mount used as royal transport, pack animal, and trade commodity in ancient Israel.

Denotes the mule, the sturdy hybrid of horse and donkey prized across the ancient Near East for reliability on rough terrain. In Scripture the mule is conspicuously royal: Absalom's sons ride mules as a mark of princely status (2 Sam 13:29), and Absalom himself is fatally caught while riding one in battle (2 Sam 18:9). Solomon receives mules as annual tribute (1 Kgs 10:25), and Obadiah searches for pasture for royal mules during drought (1 Kgs 18:5). Mules also appear as pack animals ('the load of a pair of mules,' 2 Kgs 5:17), in Tyrian commerce (Ezek 27:14), and among the livestock of returning exiles (Ezra 2:66). Psalm 32:9 uses the mule as a cautionary image of stubbornness.

mule (14×) The mule (פֶּרֶד), a horse-donkey hybrid valued for sure-footedness and endurance. Multilingual glosses converge tightly — Spanish 'mulo/mula,' French 'Paras,' German 'Maultiere' — confirming a single zoological referent. Royal associations dominate: princes ride mules (2 Sam 13:29; 18:9), kings receive them as gifts (1 Kgs 10:25), and they serve as beasts of burden in trade and return from exile (Ezek 27:14; Ezra 2:66). Psalm 32:9 alone exploits the animal's reputation for obstinacy in a moral simile. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-mule, and-mules, and-on-mules | es: como-mulo, el-mulo, la-mula | fr: Paras, [ובפרדים], [ופרדים] | de: Maultiere, [הפרד], [ובפרדים] 2Sam 13:29; 2Sam 18:9; 1Kgs 10:25

פִּרְדָּה H6506 Art / N-fs (3×)

she-mule, female mule (ridden by royalty)

This term specifically denotes a female mule, appearing exclusively in 1 Kings 1 during Solomon's hasty coronation. When Adonijah attempted to seize the throne, David commanded that Solomon ride 'my mule' to Gihon for anointing. The three verses emphasize this royal mule—David's own mount—signifying the legitimate transfer of kingship. Riding the king's mule publicly declared Solomon as chosen successor. While male mules (pered) appear elsewhere for various uses, this feminine form highlights the specific animal that carried Solomon to his coronation, making it a living symbol of dynastic continuity and divine choice.

(3×) A female mule, specifically the royal mule ridden during Solomon's coronation. 1 Kings 1:33 records David's command: 'have Solomon my son ride on my own mule (הַפִּרְדָּה)' to Gihon for anointing. Verse 38 narrates fulfillment: 'they had Solomon ride on King David's mule (פִּרְדַּת הַמֶּלֶךְ דָּוִד).' Verse 44 reports: 'they have had him ride on the king's mule (הַפִּרְדָּה).' The repetition emphasizes the symbolic importance—riding the king's personal mount publicly designated the heir. Mules were prized royal animals (2 Samuel 18:9; 1 Kings 1:5). Translations: 'mule,' Spanish 'mula,' French 'mule,' German 'Maultier.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-mule, the-mule-of | es: la-mula, mula-de | fr: le-mulet, le-mulet-de | de: der-Maultier, der-Maultier-von 1Kgs 1:33; 1Kgs 1:38; 1Kgs 1:44

פִּרְדָה H6507 N-fs (1×)

seeds, grains, or kernels (possibly 'separated ones'), appearing in Joel 1:17 describing agricultural devastation

This rare noun, appearing only in Joel 1:17, apparently means seeds, grains, or kernels. The etymology suggests 'separated things' or 'scattered ones,' possibly referring to individual seeds or grain kernels. The word appears in Joel's graphic description of drought and agricultural catastrophe, where even the stored seed has shriveled and rotted under the clods. The broader context depicts comprehensive agricultural failure: withered grain, dried-up vines, languishing trees, and dismayed farmers. This term captures the most basic level of agricultural hope—the seed for next year's planting—now destroyed.

(1×) Joel 1:17 describes seeds shriveling 'under their clods' (or perhaps 'beneath the dirt clumps'), emphasizing the death of seed in storage or ground. The multilingual glosses (seeds, granos, grain) consistently identify this as seed grain. The verse continues the locust plague imagery with agricultural vocabulary: granaries ruined, barns broken down, grain dried up. The destruction of seed represents not just current famine but elimination of future harvest, compounding the catastrophe with despair. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seeds | es: granos | fr: graine | de: [פרדות] Joel 1:17

פַּרְדֵּס H6508 Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

park, orchard, paradise garden (Persian loan-word)

This Persian loan-word (related to 'paradise') denotes an enclosed park, orchard, or preserve—typically royal estates with trees, fruit, and cultivated beauty. Nehemiah 2:8 requests timber from 'the king's forest'—likely a managed woodland preserve. Ecclesiastes 2:5 describes Solomon's extensive building projects: 'I made gardens and parks' planted with fruit trees. Song of Songs 4:13 uses it metaphorically: 'Your shoots are an orchard of pomegranates'—comparing the beloved to a luxuriant garden. The term entered many languages (Greek 'paradeisos,' Armenian, Arabic) and eventually became associated with Eden and heavenly paradise, though originally it simply meant a cultivated enclosure.

(3×) An enclosed park, orchard, or preserve, often royal, containing trees and cultivated plants. This Persian loan-word (from pairidaêza, 'enclosure') appears in Nehemiah 2:8: 'a letter to Asaph, keeper of the king's forest (פַּרְדֵּס הַמֶּלֶךְ)' requesting timber. Ecclesiastes 2:5: 'I made gardens and parks (פַּרְדֵּסִים)' with all kinds of fruit trees. Song of Songs 4:13 uses it figuratively: 'Your shoots are an orchard (פַּרְדֵּס) of pomegranates with choice fruits.' The term implies planned, managed cultivation. It became 'paradise' in Greek and later languages. Translations: 'park,' 'orchard,' 'forest,' 'paradise'; Spanish 'bosque/jardines/paraíso.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-parks, orchard-of, the-forest | es: el-bosque, paraíso-de, y-jardines | fr: [הפרדס], et-paradis, un-paradis | de: [הפרדס], [ופרדסים], [פרדס] Neh 2:8; Eccl 2:5; Song 4:13

פָּרָה H6509 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs (29×)

Be fruitful, bear fruit; in the Hifil, to make fruitful — a key verb of divine blessing and covenant promise.

One of the most theologically charged verbs in the Hebrew Bible, appearing first in God's blessing upon newly created life (Genesis 1:22, 28) and recurring as a covenant refrain through the patriarchal narratives. In the Qal stem it describes the natural capacity to bear fruit or offspring, applied to humans, animals, and plants alike. The Hifil causative — always with God as subject — expresses the divine act of making someone fruitful, a hallmark of the Abrahamic promises (Genesis 17:6, 20; 48:4). Spanish fructificad and French etre fecond both capture the rich intersection of biological fertility and theological blessing.

1. be fruitful, bear fruit (22×) The Qal sense covers natural fruitfulness — bearing fruit, being productive in offspring or harvest. It spans the creation mandate (Genesis 1:22, 28), the post-flood renewal (Genesis 8:17; 9:1, 7), Israel's multiplication in Egypt (Exodus 1:7), and prophetic imagery of a fruitful shoot (Isaiah 11:1). The participle poriyyah describes a vine or person as inherently fruitful (Ezekiel 19:10; Genesis 49:22). French et-fructifier and Spanish fructificad consistently render the imperative blessing formula peru urevu. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-are-fruitful, and-be-fruitful, and-they-will-be-fruitful | es: fructifica, fructificación, fructificad | fr: et-fructifier, et-nous—être-fécond, et-étaient-fécond | de: [ופרו], [ופריתם], [יפרה] Gen 1:22; Gen 1:28; Gen 8:17; Gen 9:1; Gen 9:7

2. make fruitful (causative) (7×) The Hifil causative denotes God's sovereign act of making someone fruitful, always with the deity as subject. It appears exclusively in covenant and blessing contexts: Abraham (Genesis 17:6), Ishmael (Genesis 17:20), Jacob at Bethel (Genesis 28:3; 48:4), and Joseph's naming of Ephraim, 'God has made me fruitful' (Genesis 41:52). Spanish te hare fructificar and German fruchtbar machte mich highlight the causative agency, distinguishing this divine prerogative from the natural Qal sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-He-made-fruitful, and-I-will-make-fruitful, and-I-will-make-you-fruitful | es: Y-multiplicó, Y-te-haré-fructificar, me-hizo-fructificar | fr: a-fit-moi-fécond, et-Je—faire-fécond, et-faire-fécond-tu | de: fruchtbar-machte-mich, ich-mache-dich-fruchtbar, und-er-gemacht-fruitful Gen 17:6; Gen 17:20; Gen 28:3; Gen 41:52; Gen 48:4

פָּרָה H6510 N-fs (26×)

Cow, heifer — a female bovine; used of livestock, dream symbolism, sacrificial ritual, and prophetic metaphor.

The standard Hebrew word for a female bovine, encompassing both the mature cow and the younger heifer without sharp distinction. It appears most memorably in Pharaoh's dream, where seven fat cows and seven lean cows emerging from the Nile foretell years of plenty and famine (Gen 41:2-26). In ritual law, the red heifer (פָּרָה אֲדֻמָּה) of Numbers 19:2-10 provides ashes for purification from corpse contamination — a rite whose mystery later Jewish and Christian traditions deeply pondered. The Philistines test the ark's power with milch cows (1 Sam 6:7-14). Amos stingingly calls Samaria's luxury-loving women 'cows of Bashan' (Amos 4:1), and Hosea likens stubborn Israel to a rebellious heifer (Hos 4:16). Spanish 'vaca' and German 'Kühe' confirm a single zoological referent.

cow, heifer (26×) A female bovine, whether a mature cow or a younger heifer. The term spans agricultural, ritual, symbolic, and prophetic contexts. Agriculturally, cows appear among livestock gifts (Gen 32:15) and as working animals (1 Sam 6:7, 10, 12, 14). Ritually, the red heifer of Numbers 19:2-10 holds unique purificatory significance. Symbolically, Pharaoh's dream cows represent economic cycles (Gen 41:2-26). Prophetically, 'cows of Bashan' satirizes elite women's indulgence (Amos 4:1), while Hosea 4:16 uses the stubborn heifer as a metaphor for Israel's waywardness. Isaiah 11:7 envisions eschatological peace where cow and bear graze together. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: cows, the-cows, the-heifer | es: la-vaca, las-vacas, vacas | fr: cows, le-cows, le-heifer | de: Kühe, cows, der-cows Gen 32:15; Gen 41:2; Gen 41:3; Gen 41:4

פָּרָה H6511 Conj-w (1×)

Parah, a town in the territory of Benjamin listed in Joshua 18:23

This place name designates a town allotted to the tribe of Benjamin during Joshua's territorial distribution. It appears only in Joshua 18:23 in a list of Benjamite cities. The location is uncertain, though some have suggested a connection to modern Khirbet el-Farah, northeast of Anathoth. The name Parah is identical to the common Hebrew word for 'heifer' or 'cow,' though whether this reflects the town's character or etymology is unknown. Benjamin's territory, situated between Judah and Ephraim, included this network of small towns in the central highlands.

(1×) Joshua 18:23 lists ha-Parah (with the definite article) among twelve Benjamite towns in the second district, appearing alongside Ophrah, Chephar-ammoni, Ophni, and Geba. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with article (ha-Parah, Pará) or transliterate it. Ancient versions show uncertainty about the location even in antiquity. Benjamin's inheritance, though geographically small, held strategic importance as buffer territory between the dominant tribes of Judah and Ephraim. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-ha-Parah | es: y-Pará | fr: et-ha-Parah | de: und-ha-Parah Josh 18:23

הַפַּרְפָּרָה H6512 N-fp (1×)

moles (as diggers), possibly in Isaiah 2:20, though the Hebrew text is textually problematic

This term, appearing only in Isaiah 2:20, is deeply uncertain textually. The traditional Hebrew reads 'to dig' plus 'rats,' yielding something like 'to the mole-rats to dig,' which is grammatically awkward. Many scholars emend the text to read 'to the moles' (la-chaparpparot), understanding moles as the animals that would receive the discarded idols. The context depicts people throwing away their silver and gold idols 'to the moles and to the bats' on the day of divine judgment. Both animals—moles as underground dwellers and bats as cave inhabitants—represent dark, hidden, contemptible places where worthless idols would be cast.

(1×) Isaiah 2:20's context envisions the day when people finally recognize their idols' worthlessness, casting them into dark places inhabited by moles and bats. The multilingual glosses (moles, topos) where available support the rodent interpretation. The textual difficulty reflects scribal confusion, but the theological point remains clear: humanity's proud idolatry will end in shame, with precious metal statues discarded as refuse in rodent holes and bat caves—a reversal of the reverence with which they were crafted. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

es: topos | fr: [פרות] | de: [פרות] Isa 2:20

פְּרָת H6513 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (2×)

Purah, Gideon's servant who accompanied him to spy on the Midianite camp (Judges 7:10-11)

Purah was the servant or armor-bearer who went with Gideon on a nighttime reconnaissance mission to the Midianite camp. God told Gideon to take Purah along if he was afraid to attack alone (Judges 7:10-11). Together they overheard the Midianite's dream interpretation, which encouraged Gideon before his famous three-hundred-man victory.

(2×) A personal name borne by Gideon's servant/companion during the Midianite crisis. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'Purah,' French 'Purah') show consistent transliteration with the conjunction 'and' attached. Both Judges 7 references describe the same event—Gideon's night visit to the enemy camp. Purah's presence shows that even great acts of faith sometimes need a companion for courage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Purah | es: y-Purah | fr: et-Purah | de: und-Purah Judg 7:10; Judg 7:11

פְּרוּדָא H6514 N-proper-ms (2×)

Peruda/Perida, ancestor of a family of temple servants who returned from exile (Ezra 2:55; Nehemiah 7:57)

Peruda (in Ezra) and Perida (in Nehemiah) are variant spellings of the same ancestral name—the head of a Nethinim family who returned from Babylonian captivity. The name appears in parallel return lists with slightly different Hebrew forms. The Septuagint shows similar variation: Phadoura (Ezra) and Phereida (Nehemiah).

(2×) A personal name appearing with orthographic variants in parallel post-exilic lists. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'Peruda/Perudá' and 'Perida,' French brackets both untranslated) document the textual variation. Both Ezra and Nehemiah contexts identify this as an ancestral name for temple servants, showing how the same family could be recorded with slight spelling differences in different manuscript traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Perida, Peruda | es: Perida, Perudá. | fr: [פרודא], [פרידא] | de: [פרודא], [פרידא] Ezra 2:55; Neh 7:57

פָּרוּחַ H6515 N-proper-ms (1×)

Paruah, father of Jehoshaphat who was Solomon's district governor in Issachar (1 Kings 4:17)

This personal name appears only in 1 Kings 4:17, identifying the father of Jehoshaphat, one of Solomon's twelve district governors responsible for provisioning the royal household one month per year. Paruah's son governed the territory of Issachar. The name possibly derives from a root meaning 'to flourish' or 'to sprout,' though the etymology is uncertain. Ancient Greek translations show considerable variation in rendering this name. The genealogical note establishes administrative legitimacy, as Solomon's government structure required trusted officials from established families.

(1×) First Kings 4:17 identifies 'Jehoshaphat son of Paruah' as the administrator 'in Issachar,' part of Solomon's sophisticated bureaucratic system dividing Israel into twelve tax and provision districts. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name (Paruah, Parúa) with transliteration variations. This administrative structure, while demonstrating Solomon's organizational genius, also laid groundwork for later tribal resentment about taxation and forced labor that would split the kingdom after his death. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Paruah | es: Parúa | fr: Paruah | de: Paruah 1Kgs 4:17

פַּרְוַיִם H6516 N-proper-fs (1×)

Parvaim, a place name (location uncertain) associated with gold in 2 Chronicles 3:6

This geographical name appears only in 2 Chronicles 3:6, designating the source of gold used to overlay Solomon's temple. The phrase 'gold of Parvaim' suggests a location renowned for high-quality gold, though its identification remains uncertain. Some scholars have proposed locations in Arabia—possibly Farwa in Yemen or Sâḳ el-Farwain in the Nejd region. The term appears in the Chronicler's detailed description of temple construction, emphasizing the precious materials used. The mention of specific gold sources underscores the temple's magnificence, using the finest available materials from distant lands for Yahweh's dwelling place.

(1×) Second Chronicles 3:6 states Solomon 'overlaid the house with precious stones for beauty, and the gold was gold of Parvaim,' highlighting exceptional quality. The multilingual glosses preserve the transliteration (Parvaim, Parvayim). Whether the name designates a specific mining region or is a more general term for refined gold is debated. The Chronicler's attention to material sources reflects concern with temple splendor and the lavish devotion of resources to God's house. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Parvayim | es: Parvaim | fr: [פרוים] | de: [פרוים] 2Chr 3:6

פָּרוּר H6517 Prep-b (3×)

pot, cooking vessel (earthenware or metal)

This term designates a cooking pot or vessel, probably earthenware but possibly metal, used for boiling food. Numbers 11:8 describes preparing manna by grinding and cooking it 'in the pot.' Judges 6:19 has Gideon preparing meat and broth for the angel: 'the broth he put in a pot.' 1 Samuel 2:14 describes the corrupt practice at Shiloh where the priest's servant would thrust a fork 'into the pan' to claim meat from worshipers' sacrifices. The term emphasizes function—a vessel for boiling—whether for daily sustenance (manna), hospitality (Gideon), or sacrificial meals.

(3×) A cooking pot or vessel used for boiling food, likely earthenware. Numbers 11:8 describes manna preparation: 'they ground it in handmills...and boiled it in the pot (בַּפָּרוּר).' Judges 6:19 has Gideon bring provisions to the angel: 'the meat he put in a basket, and the broth he put in the pot (וָמָרָק בַּפָּרוּר).' 1 Samuel 2:14 describes the priest's servant thrusting his fork 'into the pan or kettle or pot (הַפָּרוּר)'—seizing sacrificial portions. Greek translates with 'chytra' (earthen pot) versus 'lebēs' (metal cauldron), suggesting ceramic. Translations: 'pot,' 'pan,' 'kettle'; Spanish 'olla/marmita,' French 'pot.' COOKING POT CALDRON

en: in-the-pot, into-the-pan | es: en-la-marmita, en-la-olla, en-olla | fr: dans-le-pan, dans-le-pot | de: hinein-der-pan, in-der-pot Num 11:8; Judg 6:19; 1Sam 2:14

פֹּרֶץ H6518 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

Warriors or villagers (Habakkuk 3:14, describing leaders or fighting men)

This noun appears only in Habakkuk 3:14 with significant textual uncertainty. It may mean warriors, leaders, or villagers—the text has both Ketiv and Qere variants. The context is God's theophanic judgment against Israel's enemies. Translations differ widely: some see rural population, others military leaders. The term's root suggests something scattered or rural.

(2×) Fighting men, warriors, or possibly village leaders—the exact meaning is contested. Spanish shows the interpretive range: 'sus aldeanos' (his villagers) versus 'sus guerreros' (his warriors). The cross-linguistic evidence and Ketiv/Qere variants indicate early uncertainty. Habakkuk's poetic, archaic language makes precise lexical determination difficult. Context suggests powerful figures who opposed God's people. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (his-warriors), [his-warriors] | es: (sus-aldeanos), [ketiv:sus-guerreros] | fr: guerrier | de: [(פרזיו)], [[פרזו]] Hab 3:14

פְּרָזָה H6519 Art / N-fp (3×)

unwalled villages, open settlements, rural hamlets

This term describes rural settlements without defensive walls—open villages or hamlets contrasted with fortified cities. Esther 9:19 distinguishes Jews 'in the unwalled towns' from those in the citadel Susa, celebrating Purim on different days. Ezekiel 38:11 describes Israel as 'a land of unwalled villages'—peaceful, undefended settlements that Gog plans to attack. Zechariah 2:4 promises Jerusalem will be 'inhabited as villages without walls' due to abundant population and divine protection. The term emphasizes vulnerability (no walls) but also peace and expansion (no need for walls)—sometimes blessing, sometimes exposure to danger.

(3×) Unwalled villages, open settlements, or rural areas without fortifications. Esther 9:19 distinguishes 'Jews who live in the unwalled towns (עָרֵי הַפְּרָזוֹת)' from those in Susa—affecting Purim celebration dates. Ezekiel 38:11 describes Gog's target: 'a land of unwalled villages (אֶרֶץ פְּרָזוֹת)...dwelling securely, all of them without walls.' Zechariah 2:4 (verse 8 Hebrew) promises Jerusalem will 'be inhabited as villages without walls (פְּרָזוֹת)' due to multitudes. The term contrasts with fortified cities, suggesting either peaceful security or vulnerable exposure. Translations: 'unwalled villages,' 'open country,' 'hamlets'; Spanish 'aldeas sin muros,' French 'villages ouverts.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-open-villages, the-open-country, unwalled-villages | es: Sin-muros, aldeas„ las-aldeas | fr: [הפרזות], campagne | de: [הפרזות], [פרזות] Esth 9:19; Ezek 38:11; Zech 2:4

פְּרָזוֹן H6520 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

Villagers, rural population, or leadership (Judges 5:7, 11)

This noun appears only in Deborah's song (Judges 5) with uncertain meaning. It may refer to rural villagers, peasant population, or possibly leaders/warriors. Verse 7 speaks of 'the villagers' ceasing until Deborah arose, suggesting disruption of rural life. Verse 11 mentions 'righteous acts to his villagers/leaders,' celebrating restoration. The uncertainty reflects the song's archaic poetic language.

(2×) Either rural population (villagers) or leadership, appearing only in Judges 5's ancient victory song. Spanish offers 'aldeas' (villages) and 'sus aldeas' (his villages), reflecting the collective or possessive nuances. The suffix form in verse 11 ('his villagers/leaders') adds complexity. Ancient translations disagreed: some saw peasantry, others leadership. The term captures whoever represents Israel's settled life that was disrupted and then restored. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-villagers, His-villagers | es: aldeas, sus-aldeas | fr: -le-villagers, Son-villagers | de: -der-villagers, Sein-villagers Judg 5:7; Judg 5:11

פְּרָזִי H6521 Art / N-ms (4×)

hamlet-dweller, rural villager, unwalled settlement (as opposed to fortified city)

This term designates people living in unwalled villages or rural areas, as distinct from fortified cities. In Deuteronomy 3:5 it contrasts with walled cities; in 1 Samuel 6:18 with fortified cities. The word appears in Esther 9:19 distinguishing rural Jews from city-dwellers in their celebration of Purim. The emphasis is on the absence of defensive walls, making these settlements and their inhabitants vulnerable and less urbanized than their city counterparts.

(4×) Deuteronomy 3:5 opposes 'rural settlements' to 'fortified cities with high walls.' First Samuel 6:18 mentions both fortified cities and open-country villages affected by the plague. Esther 9:19 twice references rural Jews (the Qere reading הַפְּרָזִים vs. Ketiv הפרזים) who celebrate Purim differently than city-dwellers. Spanish aldeanos (villagers) and French 'open country' capture the rural, unwalled character of these settlements. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [kethiv], the-open-country, the-rural | es: (los-aldeanos), [los-aldeanos], el-campesino | fr: [הפרוים], [הפרזים], le-ouvre-country | de: [(הפרזים)], [[הפרזים]], der-oeffne-country Deut 3:5; 1Sam 6:18; Esth 9:19

פְּרִזִּי H6522 Conj-w (23×)

Perizzite — one of the pre-Israelite peoples of Canaan, regularly listed among nations to be dispossessed

The Perizzites (פְּרִזִּי) are one of the indigenous Canaanite peoples whose land was promised to Israel. They appear almost exclusively in the stereotyped conquest lists alongside Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Hivites, and Jebusites (Exod 3:8; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10). Outside these formulaic lists, they occur in the patriarchal narratives: Abram and Lot separate while 'the Canaanite and the Perizzite were dwelling in the land' (Gen 13:7), and Jacob fears retaliation from them after the Shechem incident (Gen 34:30). The etymology may connect to פְּרָזָה ('unwalled settlement'), suggesting open-country dwellers, though this remains uncertain.

Perizzite people group (23×) Gentilic noun for the Perizzites, a pre-Israelite people in Canaan. Found mainly in formulaic dispossession lists (Exod 3:8; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10; 24:11). Independent narrative mentions: Gen 13:7 (dwelling alongside the Canaanite) and Gen 34:30 (Jacob's fear after Shechem). Possibly from פְּרָזָה ('unwalled settlement'). Translations preserve the name faithfully (spa 'ferezeo,' deu 'Perisiter'). PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-among-the-Perizzite, and-the-Perizzi, and-the-Perizzite | es: el-ferezeo, el-perizzi, y-al-ferezeo | fr: [והפרזי], et-le-Perizzi, et-le-Perizzite | de: [והפרזי], der-Perisiter, der-Perizzi Gen 13:7; Gen 15:20; Gen 34:30; Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17

פַּרְזֶל H6523 N-msd (20×)

Iron (the metal), used in Daniel for the fourth kingdom's crushing strength and for fetters and idols.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew barzel, appearing exclusively in the book of Daniel. Iron dominates Nebuchadnezzar's dream statue as the material of the legs and feet (Dan 2:33–45), symbolizing the fourth kingdom's crushing, unbreakable power. It recurs in the great tree vision as the iron-and-bronze band around the stump (Dan 4:12, 20), in the vessels of Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:4, 23), and in the terrifying iron teeth of the fourth beast (Dan 7:7, 19). Every occurrence carries overtones of imperial strength and unyielding hardness.

iron (metal) (20×) Iron as a physical metal and symbolic substance, appearing exclusively in Aramaic portions of Daniel. Used literally for the material of the statue's legs and feet in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:33–45), for the iron band on the hewn tree (Dan 4:12, 20), for vessels at Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:4, 23), and for the devouring teeth of the fourth beast (Dan 7:7, 19). The metal consistently symbolizes overwhelming imperial power and indestructible hardness. All translations converge — English 'iron,' Spanish 'hierro,' French 'fer,' German 'Eisen.' IRON METAL
en: and-as-iron, as-iron, iron | es: como-el-hierro, el-hierro, hierro | fr: [וכפרזלא], [כפרזלא], fer | de: Eisen, das-Eisen, und-Eisen Dan 2:33; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:35; Dan 2:40

פָּרַח H6524a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3fs (25×)

To bud, sprout, or blossom; figuratively to flourish or thrive; in Hifil, to cause to bloom

Parach captures the entire arc of plant life bursting forth – from the first bud through full blossom. Aaron's rod famously 'budded, bloomed, and bore almonds' (Num 17:8), and the vine of Genesis 40:10 sprouts before Joseph's eyes. The figurative extension is natural: the righteous 'flourish like a palm tree' (Ps 92:12). Spanish distinguishes 'brotar' (to sprout) from 'florecer' (to flourish), mapping neatly onto the literal-figurative divide. The Hifil causative appears where God or an agent makes something bloom (Ezek 17:24).

1. bud, sprout, blossom (17×) Qal intransitive: to put forth buds, sprout, or come into flower in the literal botanical sense. Aaron's rod budding (Num 17:5, 8), the vine sprouting in Pharaoh's cupbearer's dream (Gen 40:10), and the blossoming of Song of Solomon's gardens (Song 6:11; 7:13) all employ this concrete sense. Spanish 'brotar' and German 'sprossen' capture the vegetative emergence. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH
en: Blossoming, and-bud, and-shall-flourish | es: Al-brotar, Florecer, brotando | fr: [ויפרחו], [ופרח], [יפרח] | de: [הפרחה], [ויפרחו], [ופרח] Gen 40:10; Lev 13:57; Num 17:5; Num 17:8; Ps 92:7

2. flourish, thrive (4×) Figurative flourishing of persons or abstract realities, extending the botanical image to human prosperity. The righteous flourish like a palm tree (Ps 92:12), and in the messianic age righteousness thrives (Ps 72:7). Spanish 'florecer' and French 'fleurir' preserve the metaphor's warmth, while Proverbs 11:28 and 14:11 apply it to the upright household. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH
en: may-flourish-, will-flourish | es: Florecerá-, florecerá, florecerán | fr: fleurir | de: [יפרחו], [יפריח], möge-blühen- Ps 72:7; Ps 92:12; Prov 11:28; Prov 14:11

3. cause to blossom (4×) Hifil causative: to make something bud or flourish, with God as the typical agent. In Ezekiel 17:24 the Lord brings low the high tree and makes the dry tree bloom. Isaiah 17:11 warns that even what one causes to blossom may be lost. The causative voice underscores divine or human agency behind the flourishing. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH
en: and-have-made-flourish, it-buds, they-will-flourish | es: e-hice-florecer, florecerá, florecerán | fr: [והפרחתי], fleurir | de: [והפרחתי], [יפרח], [תפריחי] Job 14:9; Ps 92:13; Isa 17:11; Ezek 17:24

פָּרַח H6524b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (9×)

To break out or spread, used exclusively of skin diseases and boils erupting on the body in Priestly legislation.

A verb (פָּרַח II) meaning to break out or spread, distinguished from the homonymous פָּרַח I ('to bud, blossom') by its exclusive association with disease. All nine occurrences describe the eruption of skin conditions in ritual-legal contexts: boils breaking out on the Egyptians during the sixth plague (Exod 9:9-10) and the detailed spreading patterns of tsara'at examined by priests in Leviticus 13-14. Spanish 'brotar' elegantly captures both the budding and erupting senses, revealing the conceptual link between a plant breaking through soil and a disease breaking through skin that likely connects the two Hebrew homonyms at a deep etymological level.

break out (of skin disease) (9×) To break out, erupt, or spread on the skin, used of disease and skin afflictions in Priestly texts. In Exodus 9:9-10, boils 'break out' on the Egyptians and their livestock during the sixth plague. The remaining occurrences in Leviticus 13:12, 20, 25, 39, 42, 57 and 14:43 describe tsara'at (traditionally 'leprosy') spreading across the skin, which the priest must examine to determine ritual purity. The Syriac cognate ܦܪܚ confirms this medical sense of spreading eruption. Spanish 'brotar' and French constructions with 'break out' both reflect the forceful, outward movement inherent in the Hebrew verb. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-breaks-out, breaking-out, has-broken-out | es: brota, brotando, brotar | fr: a-brisé-dehors, breaking-dehors, cela-a-brisé-dehors | de: breaking-heraus, es-breaks-heraus, es-hat-gebrochen-heraus Exod 9:9; Exod 9:10; Lev 13:12; Lev 13:20

פָּרַח H6524c Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (2×)

Flying things, birds (Ezekiel 13:20, in a difficult metaphor about false prophecy)

This participial form means flying things or birds. It appears twice in Ezekiel 13:20 in God's judgment against false prophetesses who ensnare souls. The text is difficult, and many commentators suggest it's a gloss or corruption. BDB notes this is an Aramaism (Hebrew borrowed from Aramaic) and that several ancient versions delete it as textually problematic. The imagery involves trapping or releasing birds as a metaphor for controlling people's lives.

(2×) Flying creatures or birds, used metaphorically in Ezekiel's judgment oracle. The cross-linguistic glosses show uncertainty: Spanish 'para volar' (to fly), French 'fleurir' (to flourish—likely confusing this with a homonym). The repetition within Ezekiel 13:20 and the textual witnesses' divergence suggest this is a challenging passage. The bird imagery relates to magical practices of capturing or releasing souls. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: as-birds | es: para-volar | fr: fleurir | de: [לפרחות], [לפרחת] Ezek 13:20

פֶּרַח H6525 N-msc / 3fs (17×)

Flower, blossom, bud — a botanical bloom or bud-shaped ornament, used literally of plants and figuratively of fleeting human glory.

A noun encompassing the full range from unopened bud to open blossom, perach appears in three vivid contexts. In the tabernacle instructions (Exodus 25:31-34; 37:17-20), almond-blossom ornaments adorn the golden menorah — Numbers 8:4 confirms the lampstand was made 'from its base to its flowers.' Aaron's rod miraculously 'put forth buds, produced blossoms, and bore ripe almonds' (Numbers 17:23), validating his priestly authority. In the prophets, the image turns metaphorical: Isaiah 5:24 warns that the wicked's 'blossom will go up like dust,' while Nahum 1:4 speaks of Lebanon's bloom withering before God's power. German 'Knospe' (bud) highlights the pre-bloom stage that dominates the tabernacle usage.

flower, blossom (17×) A flower, blossom, or bud, used both literally and as decorative or metaphorical imagery. The majority of occurrences describe the almond-blossom ornaments on the tabernacle menorah (Exod 25:31-34; 37:17-20; Num 8:4), where the term denotes the cup-shaped floral decorations. Aaron's rod produces buds and blossoms as a sign of divine election (Num 17:23). Metaphorically, Isaiah 5:24 and 18:5 use it for transient beauty or the vulnerability of human endeavor. Nahum 1:4 employs it for Lebanon's verdure withering before God. German 'Knospe' captures the budding sense, while Spanish 'flor' covers the broader semantic range. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: and-a-blossom, and-blossom, and-its-blossoms | es: Y-las-flores, flor, flor-de | fr: [והפרח], [ופרחם], [פרח] | de: Knospe, [והפרח], [ופרח] Exod 25:31; Exod 25:33; Exod 25:34; Exod 37:17

פִּרְחָה H6526 N-ms (1×)

brood, rabble, mob; used collectively in Job 30:12 for a contemptible crowd harassing Job

This collective noun appears only in Job 30:12, referring to a contemptible mob or rabble that rises up against Job. The term, possibly meaning 'brood' or 'offspring' as a collective, carries strongly negative connotations in context. Job is describing how social outcasts—people he once considered beneath contempt—now feel free to mock and abuse him. The word emphasizes the low quality of his tormenters: not respectable citizens but a worthless mob, the 'brood' of society's margins. This adds injury to insult in Job's lament: he has fallen so low that even the dregs of society dare to harass him.

(1×) Job 30:12 uses this term in a sequence of hostile actions: 'On my right the brood rises up; they push away my feet, they cast up against me their ways of destruction.' The multilingual glosses show some uncertainty (brood, chusma meaning 'rabble') but convey collective contempt. Job's rhetoric emphasizes status reversal—those who should show him honor instead treat him with contempt. The term captures both the collective nature of his tormenters and their worthlessness as individuals. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brood | es: chusma | fr: פרחה | de: [פרחה] Job 30:12

פָּרַט H6527 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

those who improvise, chant, or strum carelessly; used in Amos 6:5 criticizing self-indulgent music-making

This rare verbal form, appearing only in Amos 6:5, describes people improvising songs or strumming musical instruments. The root may mean 'to divide,' 'to scatter,' or 'to break off,' yielding translations like 'those who divide out songs' or 'those who improvise.' Context is crucial: Amos condemns wealthy Israelites reclining on luxury couches, eating choice meat, drinking wine, anointing themselves with finest oils—and 'improvising to the sound of the harp.' The criticism targets not music itself but frivolous self-indulgence while the nation crumbles. They invent songs for themselves like David, but without his devotion or purpose.

(1×) Amos 6:5 depicts idle rich 'improvising on the harp' (or 'strumming carelessly'), parallel with David's composition but lacking his seriousness. The multilingual glosses vary (improvising, cantan meaning 'sing', ramasser meaning 'gather') reflecting textual difficulty. The prophet's point is the frivolous nature of their music-making—self-absorbed entertainment while ignoring Joseph's ruin. They fancy themselves artistic like David, but their songs are empty self-indulgence, symptomatic of moral callousness that brings divine judgment. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: The-ones-improvising | es: Los-que-cantan | fr: ramasser | de: [הפרטים] Amos 6:5

פֶּרֶט H6528 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

fallen grapes, the grapes that drop during harvest and must be left for the poor (Leviticus 19:10)

This noun means the fallen or broken-off grapes, those individual berries that drop to the ground during grape harvest. It appears only in Leviticus 19:10 in legislation protecting the poor and sojourners. Israelites were commanded not to go over their vineyards a second time or gather the fallen grapes, but to leave them for vulnerable community members. This is one of several gleaning laws ensuring that harvest efficiency did not eliminate food access for those without land. The term literally means 'the broken-off thing,' emphasizing these are individual berries separated from clusters, scattered on the ground.

(1×) Leviticus 19:10 commands: 'And you shall not strip your vineyard bare, neither shall you gather the fallen grapes of your vineyard; you shall leave them for the poor and for the sojourner.' The multilingual glosses (fallen grape, fruto caído meaning 'fallen fruit') consistently identify this as harvest droppings. This law parallels the command to leave gleanings in grain fields and appears in a broader holiness code emphasizing justice and compassion. Ruth's gleaning in Boaz's field provides a narrative example of these laws functioning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fallen-grape-of | es: y-el-fruto-caído-de | fr: et-tombé-grape-de | de: und-gefallen-Traube-von Lev 19:10

פְּרִי H6529 N-msc / 3fs (119×)

Fruit, produce of trees and ground; metaphorically, offspring or result of one's actions

One of the Bible's most versatile nouns, peri spans the literal harvest of orchards and fields to the metaphorical 'fruit' of the womb, of righteousness, and of one's lips. In its most common use it appears in construct chains — 'fruit of the land' (Num 13:20), 'fruit of the tree' (Gen 3:2) — cataloguing the agricultural abundance of the promised land. The word gains theological depth when extended to offspring (Ps 21:10, 'fruit of the body') and to moral consequences (Prov 8:19, Isa 3:10), a trajectory that reaches into the New Testament's 'fruit of the Spirit.'

1. fruit, produce (117×) The literal, concrete sense covering all agricultural produce: fruit of trees (Gen 1:11-12, Gen 3:2), fruit of the vine (2 Kgs 19:29, Isa 65:21), and fruit of the ground (Gen 4:3, Deut 7:13). This sense accounts for the vast majority of occurrences and appears in nearly every construct-chain combination. Spanish fruto, French fruit, and German Frucht all track this primary meaning straightforwardly. The term encompasses both individual fruits and collective harvest yield. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fruit, fruit-of, the-fruit | es: el-fruto-de, fruto, fruto-de | fr: des-fruits, fruit, le-fruit | de: Frucht, Frucht-, der-Frucht Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Gen 3:2; Gen 4:3

2. fruit-bearing, fruitful (1×) An adjectival-attributive use in the construct phrase etz peri ('fruit tree' or 'fruit-bearing tree'), where peri modifies the noun rather than standing independently as a substantive. Psalm 107:34 provides the sole clear instance. Spanish fructifera ('fruitful') captures this shift from noun to qualifier, distinguishing it from the standalone noun sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fruit | es: fructífera | fr: fruit | de: Frucht Ps 107:34

3. offspring, progeny (1×) The metaphorical extension to human offspring and descendants, as in 'fruit of the womb' and 'fruit of the body' (Ps 21:10). This sense bridges the agricultural and the personal, drawing on the organic imagery of growth and generation. English shifts to 'offspring' while Spanish and French retain fruto/fruit, showing how some languages preserve the metaphor while others lexicalize the target domain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-offspring | es: su-fruto | fr: fruit | de: ihr-Frucht Ps 21:10

פָּרִיץ H6530 Adj-ms (6×)

A violent one, robber, or ruthless oppressor; used of lawless persons and ravenous beasts

Describes a person or creature characterized by violence, lawlessness, and predatory aggression. In Psalm 17:4 David avoids the paths of the parits, the violent; in Jeremiah 7:11 the Temple has become a den of robbers; Ezekiel uses the term for those who profane sacred space (7:22) and for a blood-shedding son (18:10). Daniel 11:14 speaks of violent men among the people who rise up to fulfill a vision. Isaiah 35:9 extends the image to a ravenous beast. The word consistently evokes ruthless, forceful transgression.

violent one, robber (6×) A violent, lawless person or predatory creature who uses force to rob, oppress, or destroy. Used of human aggressors in Ps 17:4 (violent men), Jer 7:11 (robbers desecrating the Temple), Ezek 7:22 (profaners), Ezek 18:10 (a blood-shedding oppressor), and Dan 11:14 (violent rebels). Isaiah 35:9 applies it to a ravenous beast. Spanish violento and ladrones ('thieves') capture the dual aspect of brute force and criminal lawlessness. The term always implies aggressive, predatory behavior that violates social or divine order. THIEF ROBBER

en: and-a-ravenous, robbers, the-violent | es: ladrones, ni-fiera, violento | fr: [ופריץ], [פריץ], [פריצי] | de: [ופריץ], [פריץ], [פריצי] Ps 17:4; Isa 35:9; Jer 7:11; Ezek 7:22; Ezek 18:10

פֶּרֶךְ H6531 Prep-b / N-ms (6×)

Harshness, severity, ruthlessness; always in the phrase 'with harshness' describing oppressive rule or forced labor

An abstract noun appearing exclusively in the prepositional phrase be-farekh ('with harshness'), describing the cruel treatment of those under authority. Egypt worked Israel with ruthlessness (Exod 1:13-14), and the Holiness Code three times forbids ruling over fellow Israelites with severity (Lev 25:43, 46, 53). Ezekiel 34:4 extends the indictment to Israel's own shepherds who ruled the flock with harshness. The word thus functions as a moral barometer for the abuse of power — a warning that echoes from Pharaoh's brick-pits to Israel's own leadership failures.

harshness, severity (6×) Harshness, severity, or ruthlessness in the exercise of power over people, always occurring in the phrase be-farekh ('with harshness'). Exod 1:13-14 describes Egyptian oppression of Israel; Lev 25:43, 46, 53 prohibit Israelites from ruling fellow countrymen this way; Ezek 34:4 condemns Israel's shepherds for the same cruelty. Spanish rigor and dureza ('rigor, hardness') and German Härte all converge on the sense of brutal, oppressive treatment. The consistent pairing with verbs of ruling (radah) and working (avad) anchors the word firmly in contexts of exploitative authority. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-with-severity, with-harshness | es: con-dureza, con-rigor, y-con-dureza. | fr: avec-harshness, et-voile | de: [ובפרך], mit-harshness Exod 1:13; Exod 1:14; Lev 25:43; Lev 25:46; Lev 25:53

פָּרֹכֶת H6532 N-fs (25×)

veil, curtain — the inner hanging that separated the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place in tabernacle and temple

Paroketh denotes the great curtain that divided the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place (the Holy of Holies) in the wilderness tabernacle and, later, in the Jerusalem temple. All 25 occurrences belong to sacral architecture, and the word appears almost exclusively in Priestly legislation within Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers. The veil was woven from blue, purple, and scarlet yarn with fine linen, decorated with cherubim — skilled artistic work of the highest order (Exod 26:31). It hung on four gold-covered acacia pillars and served as the ultimate boundary between the accessible and the unapproachable: only the high priest could pass beyond it, once a year on the Day of Atonement. The phrase paroketh hammasakh ('the veil of the screen,' Exod 35:12; 39:34; 40:21) and paroketh haqqodesh ('the veil of the sanctuary,' Lev 4:6) reinforce its role as the definitive sacred barrier. In the temple, 2 Chronicles 3:14 records Solomon's veil. Spanish 'velo,' French 'voile,' and German 'Vorhang' all capture its function as a concealing hanging.

veil, curtain (of the tabernacle/temple) (25×) The inner curtain of the tabernacle and temple separating the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies, the most sacred partition in Israelite worship. Made of blue, purple, and scarlet yarn with embroidered cherubim (Exod 26:31-33), it screened the ark and mercy seat from ordinary priestly access. Called paroketh hammasakh ('veil of the screen,' Exod 35:12; 40:21) and paroketh haqqodesh ('veil of the sanctuary,' Lev 4:6). Blood was sprinkled before it on the Day of Atonement (Lev 4:6, 17; 16:2, 12, 15). Solomon's temple received an analogous veil (2 Chr 3:14). Spanish 'velo,' French 'voile,' and German 'Vorhang' uniformly convey its function as sacred screen. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: curtain-of, the-veil, to-the-veil | es: del-velo, el-velo, el-velo-de | fr: [הפרכת], le-voile, rideau-de | de: Vorhang-von, [הפרכת], der-Vorhang Exod 26:31; Exod 26:33; Exod 26:35

פָּרַם H6533 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to tear, rend (garments in mourning or priestly prohibition)

This verb means to tear or rend garments, appearing exclusively in Leviticus' priestly regulations. The high priest is prohibited from tearing his garments even in mourning (Leviticus 21:10), maintaining ritual purity and dignity. Similarly, Aaron and his sons were forbidden to rend their clothes after Nadab and Abihu's deaths (Leviticus 10:6), though the rest of Israel could mourn. A leper's clothes, however, must be torn (Leviticus 13:45) as part of visible identification and separation. The verb underscores the tension between natural grief responses and priestly holiness requirements—what ordinary people do to express mourning, priests must sometimes forgo.

(3×) To tear or rend garments, used in priestly legislation about mourning customs. Leviticus 10:6 forbids Aaron and his sons: 'Do not tear (תִּפְרָמוּ) your garments, lest you die'—after Nadab and Abihu's deaths, priests must maintain ritual integrity. Leviticus 13:45 requires the leper to have 'his clothes torn (פְּרִמִים)'—visible identification of uncleanness. Leviticus 21:10 prohibits the high priest: 'he shall not tear (יִפְרֹם) his clothes'—even in mourning, preserving consecration. Related to Aramaic/Syriac and Arabic roots for cutting or rending. Translations: 'tear,' 'rend'; Spanish 'rasgar,' French 'déchirer,' German 'zerreißen.' TORN MAULED RIPPED

en: he-shall-tear, torn, you-shall-tear | es: rasgadas, rasgará, rasguéis | fr: déchiré, il-devra-déchirer, tu-devra-déchirer | de: du-soll-zerreissen, er-soll-zerreissen, zerrissen Lev 10:6; Lev 13:45; Lev 21:10

פַּרְמַשְׁתָּא H6534 N-proper-ms (1×)

Parmashta, one of Haman's ten sons killed by the Jews in Shushan (Esther 9:9)

This Persian name belongs to one of the ten sons of Haman executed by the Jews during the events of Purim. The name appears only in Esther 9:9 in a list of Haman's sons, all killed on the thirteenth of Adar when the Jews defended themselves against their enemies. The etymology is uncertain, though like other names in the list it appears to be authentically Persian. After Haman's plot was exposed and he was hanged, Esther requested that his ten sons also be executed and their bodies publicly displayed, both as justice for their father's genocidal plot and as a deterrent against future antisemitic violence.

(1×) Esther 9:9 lists Parmashta seventh among Haman's ten sons: 'Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmashta, Arisai, Aridai, and Vaizatha.' The multilingual glosses preserve the name through transliteration (Parmashta, Parmasta). The stylized listing of all ten names, with their collective execution and display, emphasizes complete justice—the eradication of Haman's line and the threat it represented. This became part of the Purim celebration as remembered reversal of near-genocide. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Parmashta | es: Parmasta | fr: [פרמשתא] | de: [פרמשתא] Esth 9:9

פַּרְנָךְ H6535 N-proper-ms (1×)

Parnach, father of Elizaphan from the tribe of Zebulun, involved in land division (Numbers 34:25)

This personal name appears only in Numbers 34:25, identifying the father of Elizaphan, the tribal leader chosen to represent Zebulun in dividing the Promised Land. When God instructed Moses to appoint men to oversee Canaan's territorial distribution, each tribe was represented by a leader. Parnach's son Elizaphan served this role for Zebulun. The name's etymology is uncertain. These tribal representatives, working alongside Joshua and Eleazar the high priest, would ensure fair and proper allocation of land inheritance to each tribe, a foundational moment in Israel's settlement of Canaan.

(1×) Numbers 34:25 identifies 'the leader from the tribe of the sons of Zebulun, Elizaphan son of Parnach,' listing him among the ten tribal representatives appointed for land division. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name (Parnach, Parnac). This administrative appointment emphasized transparency and tribal representation in the crucial task of inheritance allocation. Each tribe needed trusted leadership to ensure its fair portion, preventing future disputes about boundaries and territory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Parnach | es: Parnac | fr: Parnach | de: Parnach Num 34:25

פָּרַס H6536 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-msc (14×)

To divide, split (especially hooves in dietary law); also to break or distribute (bread).

A verb whose two stems yield two distinct images. In the Hifil, it appears almost exclusively in Leviticus 11 and Deuteronomy 14 to describe animals that 'divide the hoof' — the key criterion for clean animals. Arabic yashuggu ('splits') and Korean 갈라지다 ('to be split') consistently support this technical zoological sense. In the Qal, the word shifts to breaking and distributing bread: Isaiah 58:7 commands 'breaking your bread for the hungry,' and Jeremiah 16:7 describes mourners breaking bread together. The physical action of splitting is the same, but context transforms it from a purity regulation into an ethic of generosity.

1. divide, split (hooves) — Hifil (12×) Hifil: to divide or split, specifically of animal hooves in the Levitical dietary laws. Leviticus 11:3–7 and Deuteronomy 14:6–8 use this word repeatedly to classify clean and unclean animals by whether they 'divide the hoof.' Spanish 'divide' and French 'divisant' render it straightforwardly. The Hifil causative adds the nuance of producing a split — the hoof is caused to be cloven. This is a technical legal term that became central to Jewish dietary observance. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: and-from-dividing, and-from-those-dividing, dividing | es: con-pezuñas, divide, dividen | fr: cela-divides, de-fendre, divisant | de: dividing, es-divides, having-hooves Lev 11:3; Lev 11:4; Lev 11:5; Lev 11:6

2. break, distribute (bread) — Qal (2×) Qal: to break apart or distribute, especially bread or food for the hungry. Isaiah 58:7 commands breaking (paros) your bread for the hungry as true fasting. Jeremiah 16:7 describes the custom of breaking bread for mourners. Spanish 'compartir' and 'repartirán' emphasize the distributive aspect — not just breaking but sharing. The underlying physical action of splitting connects both senses, but here the breaking serves communion and compassion rather than classification. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: they-will-break, to-break | es: es-compartir, les-repartirán | fr: [יִפְרְסוּ], [פְּרֹס] | de: [יִפְרְסוּ], [פְּרֹס] Isa 58:7; Jer 16:7

פְּרַס H6537a V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (1×)

has been divided (Aramaic Nifal form), appearing in Daniel 5:28 in the 'MENE MENE TEKEL UPHARSIN' interpretation

This is an Aramaic passive verbal form meaning 'has been divided' or 'has been broken in two,' from the root פְּרַס (cognate to Hebrew פָּרַס). It appears in Daniel 5:28 as part of Daniel's interpretation of the mysterious writing on Belshazzar's palace wall. The word plays on both 'PERES' (one of the words written) and 'Persia,' yielding a double meaning: 'Your kingdom has been divided and given to the Medes and Persians.' This is the climactic third element of the divine message, following MENE (numbered) and TEKEL (weighed). That very night, the prophecy was fulfilled when Darius the Mede conquered Babylon.

(1×) Daniel 5:28 interprets 'PERES' as 'your kingdom has been divided (perīsat) and given to the Medes and Persians.' The wordplay functions on multiple levels: the root means 'divide,' the form sounds like 'Persia,' and the theological message is that divine judgment has split Belshazzar's kingdom. The multilingual glosses (divided, dividido, briser meaning 'break') capture the partition sense. Within hours, Belshazzar was dead and Babylon's Neo-Babylonian dynasty ended, replaced by Persian rule—a dramatic fulfillment demonstrating God's sovereignty over empires. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: has-been-divided | es: ha-sido-dividido | fr: briser | de: [פריסת] Dan 5:28

פְּרַס H6537b Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

Half-mina or 'divided' (Daniel 5:25, 28, from the handwriting on the wall)

This Aramaic noun means a half-mina (a weight/monetary unit) or possibly 'divided.' It appears in Belshazzar's famous wall inscription: 'MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.' Daniel interprets PERES (singular form) as both a weight ('you are weighed and found wanting') and a wordplay on 'Persia' (your kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians). The plural form UPHARSIN appears in verse 25, singular PERES in verse 28.

(2×) Either a half-mina measurement or the verbal idea 'divided/broken,' functioning as both noun and pun in Daniel's interpretation. The multilingual glosses preserve the transliteration (Spanish 'PERES,' 'UPARSIN') with interpretive additions linking it to Persia and division. This word demonstrates the multilingual wordplay possible in Aramaic, where a weight-term can also suggest political fracture and the name of the conquering empire. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: PERES, UPHARSIN | es: PERES, UPARSIN | fr: Perse, et-diviser | de: Persien, [ופרסין] Dan 5:25; Dan 5:28

פֶּרֶס H6538 Art / N-ms (2×)

Bearded vulture, ossifrage, a large bird of prey (Leviticus 11:13; Deuteronomy 14:12)

This noun refers to a specific bird of prey, probably the bearded vulture or lammergeier (gypaetus barbatus). It appears in the dietary laws listing unclean birds forbidden for food. Identified by its habit of tearing prey, this large raptor is distinct from other vultures. Both Leviticus and Deuteronomy include it in identical lists of prohibited birds.

(2×) A large bird of prey, identified as the bearded vulture based on behavioral and morphological evidence. Spanish 'quebrantahuesos' (bone-breaker) and English 'bearded vulture' reflect zoological identification. Both Levitical dietary texts list this among unclean flying creatures, part of the broader category of predatory birds unsuitable for Israelite consumption. The name derives from its tearing/breaking behavior. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5372 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-the-vulture, the-bearded-vulture | es: el-quebrantahuesos, y-el-quebrantahuesos | fr: et-le-vulture, le-bearded-vulture | de: der-bearded-vulture, und-der-vulture Lev 11:13; Deut 14:12

פָּרַס H6539 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (28×)
Persia (Paras) — the ancient empire east of Babylon, prominent in post-exilic biblical literature
Paras is the Hebrew name for Persia, the vast empire that displaced Babylon and authorized the Jewish return from exile. All 28 occurrences cluster in the latest stratum of the Hebrew Bible: Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Daniel, and two passages in Ezekiel. The word enters the narrative at the pivotal moment when Cyrus king of Persia issues his decree permitting the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple (2 Chr 36:22-23; Ezra 1:1-2), and it echoes through the court intrigues of Esther set in 'the laws of Persia and Media' (Est 1:3, 14, 18-19). Daniel's visions name Persia explicitly in the ram with two horns representing 'the kings of Media and Persia' (Dan 8:20) and in the angelic warfare involving 'the prince of Persia' (Dan 10:13, 20). Ezekiel lists Paras among the mercenary nations allied with Tyre (Ezek 27:10) and with Gog (Ezek 38:5). The Septuagint renders it Persis or Persion, while Spanish uses 'Persia,' French 'Perse,' and German 'Persien.'

Persia (proper noun) (28×) The proper name for the Persian Empire and its territory, centered in modern Iran. Every occurrence belongs to post-exilic or late prophetic literature. The name anchors the theological turning point of the exile's end: Cyrus's decree (2 Chr 36:22-23; Ezra 1:1-2), Esther's court dramas under Persian law (Est 1:3, 19), Daniel's apocalyptic visions of 'the kings of Media and Persia' (Dan 8:20; 10:13, 20), and Ezekiel's oracles naming Paras among foreign military powers (Ezek 27:10; 38:5). The LXX renders it consistently as Persis. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME
en: Paras, Paras-, Persia | es: Paras, Persia, Persia. | fr: Perse | de: Persien 2Chr 36:20; 2Chr 36:22; 2Chr 36:23; Ezra 1:1

פָּרַס H6540 N-proper-fs (6×)
Persia / the Persians; the empire and people, especially in Daniel and Ezra alongside Media
The proper name Paras in its Aramaic occurrences, designating the Persian Empire and its people. In Daniel, Persia appears in the fateful writing on the wall — 'your kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians' (Dan 5:28) — and in the compound legal phrase 'the law of the Medes and Persians' (Dan 6:8, 12, 15). In Ezra, it marks the Persian imperial authority under which the Temple was rebuilt (Ezra 4:24; 6:14). The name consistently evokes the second great empire of the biblical world-order sequence.

Persia / Persian(s) (6×) The proper noun Paras (פָּרַס) denoting Persia or the Persians as a national and imperial entity. In Daniel it appears in the Belshazzar episode (Dan 5:28) and in the phrase 'law of the Medes and Persians' (Dan 6:8, 12, 15). In Ezra it identifies the Persian royal authority enabling the Temple's reconstruction (Ezra 4:24; 6:14). Spanish Persia and German Persien directly transliterate, while French Perse preserves the classical form. The name always carries political and imperial significance in its Aramaic context. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME
en: Paras, and-Paras | es: Paras, Persia., y-Persia | fr: Perse, et-Perse | de: Persien, und-Persien Ezra 4:24; Ezra 6:14; Dan 5:28; Dan 6:8; Dan 6:12

פַּרְסָה H6541 Prep-b / N-fpc (21×)
Hoof of an animal, especially the divided hoof distinguishing clean from unclean beasts in Levitical law Refers to the hard covering of an ungulate's foot, whether split or solid. In the Torah's dietary legislation, the divided hoof (parsah) is one of the two defining marks of a ritually clean animal (Lev 11:3; Deut 14:6). The same word applies to the undivided hooves of horses (Isa 5:28; Jer 47:3). Figuratively, Micah 4:13 envisions Zion's hooves made of bronze, crushing the nations—a vivid image of divinely empowered judgment. Spanish 'cascos' and English 'hooves' both capture the concrete, physical sense that dominates every occurrence.

hoof (21×) The hard keratinous covering of an ungulate's foot, whether cloven or solid. Most occurrences appear in the Levitical purity laws (Lev 11; Deut 14), where the split hoof is a criterion for ritual cleanness. Also used of horses' hooves (Isa 5:28; Jer 47:3) and figuratively of Zion trampling enemies (Mic 4:13). Spanish 'cascos' and French cognates confirm a single concrete referent across all 21 instances. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-hoof, and-hooves-of, and-your-hooves | es: Con-cascos-de, cascos-de, la-pezuña | fr: [בפרסות], [ופרסות], [ופרסיהן] | de: [בפרסות], [ופרסות], [ופרסיהן] Exod 10:26; Lev 11:3; Lev 11:4

פָּרְסִי H6542 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Persian, a designation appearing with the definite article in Nehemiah 12:22
This gentilic adjective means 'Persian,' referring to someone from Persia. In Nehemiah 12:22, it appears with the definite article, 'the Persian,' referring to a specific Persian king during whose reign Levitical genealogies were recorded. The reference is most likely to either Darius II (423-404 BC) or Darius III (336-331 BC), though scholarly opinion varies. The notation indicates that official records of priestly families were maintained during Persian rule, showing administrative continuity across the imperial transition. These genealogical registers were crucial for establishing legitimate priestly descent for temple service.

(1×) Nehemiah 12:22 states: 'In the days of Eliashib, Joiada, Johanan, and Jaddua, the heads of fathers' houses were recorded, as were the priests in the reign of Darius the Persian.' The definite article 'the Persian' distinguishes this Darius from earlier kings. The multilingual glosses preserve the gentilic with article (the Persian, el persa). This genealogical note documents the continuity of priestly registration across generations of Persian administration, maintaining Jewish religious structure under foreign rule. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME
en: the-Persian | es: el-persa | fr: [הפרסי] | de: [הפרסי] Neh 12:22

פָּרְסִי H6543 N-proper-ms (2×)
Persian (Daniel 6:28, describing the empire after Darius the Mede)
This Aramaic adjective means Persian, referring to the Persian Empire or people. It appears in Daniel 6:28 (English 6:28) describing the reign of Darius the Mede 'and the Persian.' The text has both Ketiv and Qere readings with slightly different vowel patterns but the same meaning. The term identifies the Persian component of the Medo-Persian Empire.

(2×) The adjective 'Persian,' identifying the Persian people or empire. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'el persa,' French 'perse') show consistent translation, with Ketiv/Qere variants both meaning the same thing. This appears in Daniel's discussion of successive empires, where the Medo-Persian kingdom follows Babylon. The term appears twice in the same verse as textual variants rather than separate occurrences. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME
en: (qere:the-Persian), [ketiv:the-Persian] | es: (el-persa), [el-persa] | fr: perse | de: [פרסאה], [פרסיא] Dan 6:28

פָּרַע H6544a Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (1×)
when let loose, when hair is unbound, or when leaders lead (uncertain); appears in Judges 5:2
This infinitive construct appears in the opening of Deborah's song (Judges 5:2), but its precise meaning is debated. Traditional interpretations include 'when the leaders led in Israel' or 'when men let their hair hang loose' (possibly indicating dedication to warfare or a vow). The root פָּרַע carries meanings of loosing, unbinding, or leading. Modern translations vary widely: some emphasize leadership ('when princes led'), others warrior dedication ('when warriors dedicated themselves'), and still others translate more literally about hair being loosed. The phrase introduces praise for Israel's response to the crisis, whatever the specific imagery.

(1×) Judges 5:2 begins: 'When [leaders led / hair was loosed / warriors dedicated themselves] in Israel, when the people willingly offered themselves, bless the LORD!' The multilingual glosses (let loose, se soltaron meaning 'were loosed', délier meaning 'unbind') tend toward the 'unbinding' sense. Context suggests warrior dedication or mobilization—the people's voluntary response to Deborah and Barak's call. Whatever the precise nuance, the verse celebrates Israel's willingness to fight when leadership emerged, resulting in victory over Canaanite oppression. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: when-let-loose | es: Cuando-se-soltaron | fr: quand-que-délier | de: als-lass-loesen Judg 5:2

פָּרַע H6544b V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (15×)

To let loose, uncover, neglect, or leave unrestrained; in Hifil, to cause cessation or unruliness.

A verb of release and exposure, para' in its Qal stem pictures hair unbound, restraints removed, and counsel dismissed. When Aaron let Israel loose at Sinai (Exod 32:25), the same root describes both the cause and the visible result — a people 'unrestrained' (the passive participle). Proverbs repeatedly warns against 'ignoring' discipline (Prov 13:18; 15:32), where Spanish 'rechaza' and French 'abandonner' capture the dismissive force. The Hifil intensifies the image: Pharaoh accuses Moses of making the people 'cease' their labor (Exod 5:4), and Ahaz's corruption caused Judah to 'run wild' (2 Chr 28:19).

1. neglect, ignore, reject (4×) To disregard, dismiss, or reject instruction and counsel. Proverbs deploys this sense four times as a wisdom antithesis — the one who 'ignores' (porēaᶜ) correction despises himself (Prov 15:32). Spanish 'rechaza' (rejects) and French 'abandonner' highlight the deliberate turning away from authoritative guidance, not mere forgetfulness but active refusal. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-you-ignored, come-to-him-who-ignores, he-who-ignores | es: El-que-rechaza, Y-desechasteis, el-que-rechaza | fr: abandonner, et-abandonner | de: [ותפרעו], [פורע], [תפרעו] Prov 1:25; Prov 8:33; Prov 13:18; Prov 15:32

2. uncover, bare, loosen (4×) To physically uncover or loosen, particularly the hair or head. In priestly legislation the priest 'loosens' the suspected woman's hair (Num 5:18), and the leper must leave his head 'uncovered' (Lev 13:45). German 'aufdecken' (uncover) and Spanish 'descubierta' (uncovered) confirm this concrete, bodily sense of removing a covering or binding, often in ritual or mourning contexts. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: and-shall-loosen, he-shall-uncover, uncovered | es: dejará-descubierta, descubierta, descubráis | fr: découvrit, et-devra-loosen, il-devra-découvrir | de: deckte-auf, du-soll-aufdecken, er-soll-aufdecken Lev 10:6; Lev 13:45; Lev 21:10; Num 5:18

3. let loose, leave unrestrained (3×) To let people go unbridled, removing all restraint so they become wild and dissolute. The Exodus 32:25 scene uses this root twice — Aaron 'had let them loose' and they were 'unrestrained' — active and passive of the same image. Spanish 'desenfrenado' (unbridled) captures the metaphor precisely. Proverbs 29:18 extends it proverbially: where there is no vision, the people 'run wild.' RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: had-let-loose-them, is-unrestrained, unrestrained | es: desenfrenado, lo-había-desenfrenado, se-desenfrena | fr: abandonner, avait-que-délier-eux, unrestrained | de: [יפרע], hatte-lass-loesen-ihnen, unrestrained Exod 32:25; Prov 29:18

4. avoid, refrain from (2×) To deliberately avoid or refrain from something harmful. In Prov 4:15 the sage commands 'avoid it, pass on,' and Ezek 24:14 uses similar force for divine resolve. French 'laisser-aller' and Spanish 'evítalo' (avoid it!) show the sense of deliberately holding back or stepping away rather than passively neglecting. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: I-will-refrain, avoid-it | es: Evítalo, cederé | fr: abandonner-lui, laisser-aller | de: [אפרע], [פרעהו] Prov 4:15; Ezek 24:14

5. Hifil: cause to cease, hinder (1×) Hifil causative: to cause people to cease or desist from work, hindering their task. Pharaoh accuses Moses and Aaron at Exod 5:4 of making the Israelites 'rest' from their burdens. Spanish 'distraéis' (you distract) and the paraphrase 'make rest' underscore forced cessation imposed by an external agent. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: do-you-make-rest | es: distraéis | fr: faire-tu-faire-repos | de: tun-du-machen-ruhen Exod 5:4

6. Hifil: cause unruliness (1×) Hifil causative: to cause unruliness or moral breakdown by removing authority. In 2 Chr 28:19 King Ahaz 'caused Judah to act wildly,' a single attestation where the causative stem intensifies the Qal image of unrestrained people into active instigation of chaos. Spanish 'abandonó' captures the dereliction of royal duty. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION

en: he-let-loose | es: abandonó | fr: [הפריע] | de: [הפריע] 2Chr 28:19

פֶּרַע H6545 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

Long hair, unbound locks (Numbers 6:5; Ezekiel 44:20)

This noun refers to long, unbound hair or locks. Numbers 6:5 describes the Nazirite letting 'the locks of his head grow long' during the vow period—hair that must remain uncut and consecrated. Ezekiel 44:20 prohibits priests from letting their hair grow long, requiring them to keep it trimmed—a mark of order and holiness distinct from the Nazirite's dedication. Both contexts involve ritual hair regulations.

(2×) Long, flowing hair or unbound locks, especially in ritual contexts. Spanish 'cabellera de' (long hair of) and 'cabello largo' (long hair) capture the emphasis on length. French 'cheveux' (hair) is more general. Numbers prescribes growing it as consecration; Ezekiel prohibits it for priests as disorder. The term can also appear in military contexts (Judges 5:2, Deuteronomy 32:42) with debated meanings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-long-hair, locks-of | es: cabellera-de, y-cabello-largo | fr: et-cheveux, locks-de | de: [ופרע], locks-von Num 6:5; Ezek 44:20

פֶּרַע H6546 N-mpc (2×)

Leaders or long-haired warriors (Judges 5:2; Deuteronomy 32:42, with uncertain meaning)

This noun appears in two ancient poetic texts with contested meaning. It could mean leaders, chieftains, or possibly long-haired warriors. Judges 5:2 speaks of 'the leading of leaders' or 'the loosing of locks' in Israel's victory. Deuteronomy 32:42 mentions 'the heads of the leaders of the enemy' or 'long-haired heads of the foe.' Both military contexts involve leadership or distinguished warriors, but whether referring to rank or appearance is debated.

(2×) Either military leaders/chiefs or long-haired warriors—scholarly opinion divides. Spanish offers 'los caudillos' (chieftains) and 'los cabellos' (the hairs), French 'chefs' (chiefs) and 'hair,' showing the interpretive split. Both passages are archaic poetry (Song of Deborah, Song of Moses) where precise meanings are elusive. The contexts involve elite fighting men, whether distinguished by authority or by unbound hair as a sign of warrior dedication. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -hair, leaders-of | es: los-cabellos, los-caudillos-de | fr: -hair, chefs-de | de: -Haar, Fuehrer-von Deut 32:42; Judg 5:2

פַּרְעֹה H6547 N-proper-ms (268×)

Pharaoh; title of the kings of Egypt, from Egyptian pr-'o ('great house')

Derived from the Egyptian pr-'o meaning 'great house,' Pharaoh appears 268 times as the royal title for Egypt's kings. It functions as a proper noun throughout the Hebrew Bible, spanning the narratives of Abraham's sojourn (Gen 12:15-18), Joseph's rise to power, the Exodus confrontation with Moses, Solomon's diplomatic alliance (1 Kgs 3:1), and the later prophetic oracles against Egypt (Ezek 29-31). The title carries immense narrative weight as the archetypal foreign sovereign whom God humbles. Every translation preserves the loanword virtually unchanged: Spanish Faraon, French Pharaon, German Pharao.

Pharaoh (268×) The Egyptian royal title (from pr-'o, 'great house') used as a proper noun for the king of Egypt across all biblical periods. Identifies the monarchs in the patriarchal narratives (Gen 12:15), the oppressor of the Exodus (Exod 5-14), political allies of Israelite kings (1 Kgs 3:1), and targets of prophetic judgment (Ezek 29:2-3). Transliterated consistently across all languages (Spanish Faraon, German Pharao), confirming its status as a recognized international loanword. PHARAOH TITLE

en: Pharaoh | es: Faraon, Faraón | fr: Pharaon | de: Pharao, Pharaos, dem-Pharao Gen 12:15; Gen 12:17; Gen 12:18

חָפְרַע H6548 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hophra, pharaoh of Egypt who reigned 589-570 BC, mentioned in prophecy against Egypt

Hophra was the Egyptian pharaoh who ruled during Jeremiah's ministry. Known to the Greeks as Apries and recorded in Egyptian monuments as Uah-abra, he was the fourth king of Egypt's 26th dynasty. Jeremiah prophesied that God would deliver this powerful monarch into the hands of his enemies, just as He had delivered Zedekiah king of Judah. The prophecy came to pass when Hophra was eventually overthrown by his co-regent Amasis.

(2×) This proper name appears only in Jeremiah's oracle against Egypt (Jer 44:30), where the prophet declares God will hand Pharaoh Hophra over to his enemies. The multilingual evidence consistently identifies this as a specific Egyptian ruler, with English using 'Chophra' and Spanish 'Jofra,' both attempting to render the Hebrew pronunciation. Historical sources confirm this refers to the pharaoh whose ambitious foreign policy included supporting Judah against Babylon, making his eventual downfall a powerful vindication of Jeremiah's prophetic word. PHARAOH TITLE

en: Chophra, Pharaoh | es: Faraón, Jofra | fr: Pharaon, [חפרע] | de: Pharao, [חפרע] Jer 44:30

נְכֹו H6549 N-proper-ms (10×)

Pharaoh Necho (II); the Egyptian king who killed Josiah and installed Jehoiakim on Judah's throne.

The proper name of Pharaoh Necho II, ruler of Egypt's 26th dynasty (r. 610–595 BC), who features at a decisive turning point in Judah's history. Marching north to aid Assyria against Babylon, Necho killed King Josiah at Megiddo (2 Kgs 23:29), imposed tribute on Judah, deposed Josiah's son Jehoahaz, and installed Jehoiakim as a vassal king (2 Kgs 23:33–35). He was later defeated by Nebuchadnezzar at Carchemish (Jer 46:2). The Chronicler's account adds that Necho claimed divine authorization for his march (2 Chr 35:20–22). All translations transliterate the name variously as Necho/Neco/Neko.

Pharaoh Necho (compound proper name) (10×) The compound proper name Pharaoh Necho (פַּרְעֹה נְכֹו / נְכֹה), identifying Necho II of Egypt's 26th dynasty. He is historically significant for killing Josiah at Megiddo (2 Kgs 23:29; 2 Chr 35:20–22), imposing tribute and deposing Jehoahaz in favor of Jehoiakim (2 Kgs 23:33–35; 2 Chr 36:4), and subsequently suffering defeat at Carchemish by Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 46:2). Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'Faraon Necao/Neco,' French 'Pharaon Neko,' German 'Pharao Neko' — all transliterate the Egyptian royal name, with slight phonetic variation reflecting the original Egyptian Nkw. PHARAOH TITLE

en: Nekho, Neko, Pharaoh | es: Faraón, Necao, Neco | fr: Neko, Pharaon, [נכו] | de: Neko, Pharao, [נכו] 2Kgs 23:29; 2Kgs 23:33; 2Kgs 23:34

פַּרְעֹשׁ H6550 N-ms (2×)

flea, a tiny jumping insect used figuratively to express insignificance or unworthiness

David uses this diminutive creature twice when speaking to King Saul, asking why the king of Israel would pursue something as insignificant as a dead dog or a single flea. The image perfectly captures David's sense of being unworthy of such royal attention. In the ancient Near East, as today, fleas were among the smallest and most negligible of creatures, making them an ideal metaphor for self-deprecation before a powerful authority.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in David's speeches to Saul (1 Sam 24:14; 26:20), where he uses the flea as a figure of his own worthlessness compared to the king. The consistent translation across languages—English, Spanish 'pulga,' French and German all preserving the literal meaning—shows this is understood as the common parasitic insect. David's rhetorical question 'After whom has the king of Israel come out? After a dead dog? After a single flea?' brilliantly employs the creature's tiny size to highlight the absurdity of Saul's pursuit. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: flea | es: pulga | fr: flea | de: flea 1Sam 24:14; 1Sam 26:20

פַּרְעֹשׁ H6551 N-proper-ms (6×)

Parosh — 'flea'; head of a large post-exilic family returning from Babylon

A personal name meaning 'flea,' identifying the ancestor of one of the largest families in the post-exilic community. The sons of Parosh numbered 2,172 in one census (Ezra 2:3) and 2,818 in another (Neh 7:8), making them one of the most prominent returning clans. Members appear in Ezra's caravan (Ezra 8:3), among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:25), and in the wall-rebuilding project under Nehemiah (Neh 3:25). A Parosh also sealed the covenant renewal (Neh 10:14). Despite the humble etymology, this family played an outsized role in restoring post-exilic Judah.

(6×) The personal name Parosh (פַּרְעֹשׁ, 'flea'), designating the ancestor of a major post-exilic family. The LXX renders it variously as Φορος and Φαρες. The family appears in the return lists (Ezra 2:3; Neh 7:8), Ezra's caravan (Ezra 8:3), the foreign-wives crisis (Ezra 10:25), the wall-building (Neh 3:25), and the covenant-sealing (Neh 10:14). English and Spanish consistently transliterate as Parosh/Paros, while French uses Pareosh. The name's zoological meaning ('flea') follows a pattern of humble animal names in Semitic personal nomenclature. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Parosh | es: Paros, Parosh | fr: Pareosh | de: [פרעש] Ezra 2:3; Ezra 8:3; Ezra 10:25; Neh 3:25; Neh 7:8

פִּרְעָתֹון H6552 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

in Pirathon, a town in Ephraim's hill country mentioned in Judges 12:15

This place name designates a town in the hill country of Ephraim where Abdon the judge was buried. It appears in Judges 12:15 identifying Abdon's hometown and burial site. The name possibly means 'height' or relates to a root meaning 'to make lofty.' The town has been identified with modern Far'ata, about six miles west-southwest of Nablus (ancient Shechem). The area was also home to Benaiah son of Jehoiada, one of David's mighty warriors, identified as 'Benaiah the Pirathonite.' This Ephraimite town thus appears in both the judges period and David's era, maintaining significance across Israel's early history.

(1×) Judges 12:15 records that Abdon son of Hillel 'died and was buried in Pirathon in the land of Ephraim, in the hill country of the Amalekites.' The multilingual glosses preserve the place name (Pirathon, Piratón) with standard transliteration. The additional note about 'the hill country of the Amalekites' is intriguing, suggesting either an ancient Amalekite presence in this Ephraimite region or a geographical designation that persisted long after Amalekite occupation. Pirathon's location in central highlands made it part of Ephraim's substantial territorial inheritance. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Pirathon | es: en-Piratón | fr: dans-Pirathon | de: in-Pirathon Judg 12:15

פִּרְעָתֹונִי H6553 N-proper-ms (5×)

Pirathonite — a gentilicof Pirathon, a town in Ephraim

A gentilic adjective identifying someone from Pirathon, a town in the hill country of Ephraim. It is applied to Abdon son of Hillel, who judged Israel and was buried at Pirathon (Judg 12:13, 15), and to Benaiah, one of David's mighty warriors and a monthly divisional commander (2 Sam 23:30; 1 Chr 11:31; 27:14). The slight spelling variation between the Samuel and Chronicles forms reflects normal scribal orthographic fluidity.

(5×) A gentilic adjective denoting origin from Pirathon in Ephraim. Applied to the judge Abdon son of Hillel (Judg 12:13, 15) and to Benaiah among David's elite warriors (2 Sam 23:30; 1 Chr 11:31; 27:14).

English, Spanish ('piratonita'), and French consistently transliterate the term. The minor spelling difference between 2 Samuel's פִּרְעָתֹנִי and the Chronicles form פִּרְעָתוֹנִי is a standard orthographic variant with no semantic distinction. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pirathonite, the-Pirathonite, the-Piratonite | es: el-piratonita, el-piratoní, piratonita | fr: Pirathonite, [הפרעתוני], [הפרעתני] | de: Pirathonite, [הפרעתוני], [הפרעתני] Judg 12:13; Judg 12:15; 2Sam 23:30; 1Chr 11:31; 1Chr 27:14

פַּרְפַּר H6554 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Pharpar, a river near Damascus mentioned alongside the Abana in 2 Kings 5:12

This is the name of a river flowing near Damascus, mentioned only in 2 Kings 5:12 in Naaman's indignant response to Elisha's instruction to wash in the Jordan. Naaman protested: 'Are not Abana and Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?' The Pharpar is likely the modern Awaj River, which flows south of Damascus. Together, the Abana (probably the Barada) and Pharpar supplied water to Damascus and its surrounding oasis, making it one of the ancient world's most beautiful cities. Naaman's point was that Damascus had abundant, superior water sources—why would he need Israel's muddy Jordan?

(1×) Second Kings 5:12 records Naaman's protest as he initially rejected Elisha's simple prescription for healing his leprosy. The paired rivers Abana and Pharpar represented Damascus's abundant water resources, contrasting with the Jordan's less impressive appearance. The multilingual glosses preserve the river name (Pharpar, Farfar). Naaman's outburst reveals the challenge of obeying God's unexpected commands—he expected dramatic prophetic ritual, not mundane washing. His eventual compliance and healing demonstrated that God's power works through humble obedience, not geographical pride or impressive ceremony. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Pharpar | es: y-Farfar | fr: et-Pharpar | de: und-Pharpar 2Kgs 5:12

פָּרַץ H6555 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (50×)

To break through, burst forth, spread abroad, tear down, or press upon; covers violent breaching, expansive increase, demolition, and urgent insistence.

A verb of raw, irresistible force, parats captures the image of something — or someone — breaking through barriers that cannot hold. When Perez bursts from the womb (Gen 38:29), his very name becomes this word's most vivid illustration: 'You have broken through!' The same explosive energy recurs when God 'breaks out' against Uzzah at the threshing floor (2 Sam 6:8) and when Israel 'spreads abroad' to the west, east, north, and south in Jacob's dream (Gen 28:14). Spanish distinguishes the destructive sense (derribar, 'to demolish') from the expansive one (extender, 'to spread'), while the 'press, urge' sense at 1 Sam 28:23 is rendered insistir — revealing three genuinely distinct semantic frames that the Hebrew verb bridges with a single root.

1. break through, burst forth (17×) To break through or burst forth with violent force, whether breaching a physical barrier, breaking out in divine wrath, or erupting from a confined space. This is the root image of the word, vivid in the naming of Perez at Gen 38:29 ('What a breach you have made!'). At Exod 19:22, 24, God threatens to 'break out' against those who approach Sinai unauthorized, and at 2 Sam 5:20 David names his victory site Baal-Perazim, 'Lord of Breakings-Through.' Spanish romper and French briser both capture the violent rupture, while German Durchbruch ('breakthrough') preserves the spatial directionality of the original. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: He-breaks-me, He-breaks-out-, You-have-broken-us | es: Abre, Me-rompe, destruyeron | fr: Il-breaks-dehors-, breaks-dehors, brisa-dehors | de: Durchbruch-hast-du-gemacht, Er-breaks-heraus-, Perez Gen 38:29; Exod 19:22; Exod 19:24; 2Sam 5:20; 2Sam 6:8

2. spread out, increase, multiply (14×) To spread abroad, increase, or multiply beyond expected limits — used of people, livestock, and influence expanding with irresistible momentum. Jacob's flocks 'spread out exceedingly' (Gen 30:30, 43), Israel multiplies despite oppression in Egypt (Exod 1:12), and Jacob's descendants spread to all compass points in the Bethel promise (Gen 28:14). Spanish extender and the sense of diffusion in difundida reveal the shift from violent breach to expansive overflow. The word of God also 'spreads' in this sense (1 Sam 3:1 uses a related construction for visions being 'not widespread'). GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-as-spreading, and-broke-forth, and-distributed | es: Y-extendió, difundida, irrumpen | fr: [תפרצי], brisant-en-avant, brèche | de: [יפרצו'], [פרץ], [פרצו] Gen 28:14; Gen 30:30; Gen 30:43; Exod 1:12; 1Sam 3:1

3. break down, tear down, demolish (8×) To tear down, demolish, or break through walls and fortifications, focusing on destruction of built structures. Joash tears down 400 cubits of Jerusalem's wall (2 Kgs 14:13); God himself removes the 'hedge' of his vineyard Israel (Ps 80:12; Isa 5:5). Spanish derribar ('to knock down') and French faire breche ('to make a breach') consistently mark this as siege-and-demolition language. Neh 4:3 uses it mockingly: 'even a fox climbing on it would break down their stone wall.' DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-broke-down, and-he-breaks-down, and-he-broke-through | es: Derribaré, Derribaste, derribaste | fr: [פרץ], et-faire-brèche, et-il-brisa-à-travers | de: [ופרץ], [לפרוץ], [פרץ] 2Kgs 14:13; 2Chr 25:23; 2Chr 26:6; Neh 4:3; Ps 80:12

4. broken, breached (passive state) (6×) The passive state of being broken down, breached, or in ruins — expressed through Qal passive and Pual participles. Walls are 'broken down' in Nehemiah's devastated Jerusalem (Neh 1:3; 2:13; 4:7), and Hezekiah repairs what is 'breached' (2 Chr 32:5). Prov 25:28 uses the image memorably: 'A man without self-control is like a city broken down, without walls.' Spanish derribadas and the German participial forms confirm the stative, resultative reading distinct from the active 'tearing down.' GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: (broken-down), [broken-down], broken-down | es: (derribadas), [las-derribadas], derribada | fr: brèche, faire-brèche | de: [(פרוצים)], [[המפרוצים]], [הפרצים] 2Chr 32:5; Neh 1:3; Neh 2:13; Neh 4:7

5. press, urge insistently (4×) To press upon someone with social insistence, urging them strongly to accept hospitality or comply with a request. At 1 Sam 28:23 his servants and the woman of Endor 'press' Saul until he eats; at 2 Sam 13:25, 27 Absalom 'presses' David to let Amnon come. Spanish insistir and the English 'urged' both confirm a communicative, interpersonal sense quite distinct from physical breaking. The verb retains the connotation of irresistible force but channels it through social pressure rather than physical destruction. URGE PRESS INSIST

en: and-he-pressed, and-he-urged, and-pressed | es: Y-le-insistió, y-insistió, y-le-insistieron- | fr: et-il-pressed, et-il-urged, et-pressed | de: und-er-pressed, und-er-urged, und-pressed 1Sam 28:23; 2Sam 13:25; 2Sam 13:27; 2Kgs 5:23

6. (1×) A single occurrence at 1 Sam 25:10 where David's men are described as 'breaking away' — servants fleeing from their masters. The English 'breaking away' and Spanish los que huyen ('those who flee') suggest a sense of rupture from social bonds or authority, applying the root's breach-imagery to the master-servant relationship. This may represent an extension of sense 1 into the social domain of desertion or rebellion. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: the-breaking-away | es: los-que-huyen | fr: le-brisant-au-loin | de: der-brechend-weg 1Sam 25:10

פֶּרֶץ H6556 Prep-k / N-ms (19×)

Breach, gap; outbreak, violent bursting forth — a break in a wall or barrier, or a forceful breaking through

The noun פֶּרֶץ covers both the static result and the dynamic event of breaking through a boundary. Most often it refers to a breach or gap in a wall — the sort of damage to fortifications that requires urgent repair, as when Nehemiah labored to close the gaps in Jerusalem's walls (Neh 6:1) or when Ezekiel challenged the false prophets who failed to 'go up into the breaches' (Ezek 13:5; 22:30). Figuratively, God made a breach among the Israelites for failing to keep the prescribed order (Judg 21:15; Ps 106:23). In a more dynamic sense, the word describes an outburst or violent breaking forth, as when David named Baal-perazim ('Lord of breakthroughs') after God burst through his enemies like floodwaters (2 Sam 5:20; 1 Chr 14:11).

1. breach, gap in wall (14×) A breach, gap, or break in a wall, fortification, or protective boundary — the static opening that results from destruction and requires repair. This dominant sense (14 occurrences) spans literal and figurative usage: broken city walls (1 Kgs 11:27; Neh 6:1; Amos 4:3), a collapsing wall compared to a bulging breach (Isa 30:13), breaches in the 'wall' of national or spiritual defense that prophets and leaders should fill (Ezek 13:5; 22:30; Ps 106:23), and the breaches of David's fallen booth that God will raise up (Amos 9:11). Spanish 'brecha,' French 'breche,' and German cognates consistently render the gap-in-a-wall reading. Job 16:14 intensifies the image: God 'breaks me breach upon breach,' picturing relentless destruction of every defense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-breach, and-through-breaches, as-breach | es: Como-brecha, Y-por-brechas, brecha | fr: [כְּפֶרֶץ], [פֶּרֶץ], brèche | de: [בְּפֶרֶץ], [בְּפִרְצוֹת], [וּפִרְצִים] Judg 21:15; 1Kgs 11:27; Neh 6:1; Job 16:14

2. outbreak, violent bursting forth (5×) An outbreak, violent bursting forth, or forceful breaking through — the dynamic event of a barrier giving way under pressure, especially by divine power. This sense (5 occurrences) centers on the naming etiology at Baal-perazim: 'the LORD has burst through my enemies before me like a bursting of waters,' so David named the place 'Lord of Breakthroughs' (2 Sam 5:20; 1 Chr 14:11). The related naming in Gen 38:29 marks Perez's birth: 'What a breach you have made for yourself!' (perets), and 2 Sam 6:8 / 1 Chr 13:11 record the divine outbreak against Uzzah. Multilingual glosses shift from static 'breach' to dynamic expressions — Spanish 'irrupcion,' German 'Durchbruch,' English 'outbreak/breaking through' — marking a clear semantic distinction: not a gap that remains but a force that breaks. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-breach, like-breaking-through-of, like-outbreak-of | es: brecha, como-brecha-de, irrupción | fr: [כְּפֶרֶץ], [פֶּרֶץ], comme-brisant-à-travers-de | de: Perez, [כְּפֶרֶץ], ein-Durchbruch Gen 38:29; 2Sam 5:20; 2Sam 6:8; 1Chr 13:11; 1Chr 14:11

פֶּרֶץ H6557 N-proper-ms (15×)

Perets (Perez), son of Judah and Tamar; ancestor of David and the Messianic line.

Perets—whose name means 'breach' after the dramatic moment when he broke through ahead of his twin Zerah at birth (Gen 38:29)—became the head of a major Judahite clan. Through his line descend Hezron, Ram, and ultimately David (Ruth 4:12, 18–22; 1 Chr 2:4–5). The Perezites form one of Judah's chief tribal divisions (Num 26:20–21), and postexilic Jerusalem was settled largely by his descendants (1 Chr 9:4; Neh 11:4, 6). The genealogy of Ruth explicitly traces the royal lineage from Perets to David, making this name a theological marker of God's sovereign purpose working through an unlikely union. Greek Φαρες and Spanish 'Fares' both preserve the Septuagint form familiar from Matthew's genealogy of Christ.

Perets / Perez (proper name) (15×) The proper name Perets (פֶּרֶץ, 'breach'), designating the son of Judah and Tamar who became ancestor of the Davidic royal line. Named for breaking through the womb ahead of his twin (Gen 38:29), he heads the Perezite clan within Judah (Num 26:20). Ruth 4:12, 18 explicitly traces the line from Perets through Boaz to David, cementing his genealogical importance. The Chronicles and Nehemiah references (1 Chr 2:4; 4:1; 9:4; 27:3; Neh 11:4, 6) confirm continued prominence of his descendants in postexilic Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Perets, Perez, and-Perez | es: Fares, Perets, Pérets | fr: Perez, Pérets, et-Pérets | de: Perez, des-Perez, und-Perez Gen 38:29; Gen 46:12; Num 26:20; Num 26:21

פַּרְצִי H6558 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Perezite, a gentilic designation for descendants of Perez, son of Judah (Numbers 26:20)

This gentilic adjective, appearing with the definite article as a collective noun, designates the clan descended from Perez, one of Judah's twin sons born to Tamar. In Numbers 26:20, it appears in the wilderness census listing Judah's clans. The Perezites became one of the most significant Judahite families—King David descended from this line through Boaz and Ruth. The clan's importance is reflected in the blessing given to Boaz at his marriage to Ruth: 'May your house be like the house of Perez, whom Tamar bore to Judah' (Ruth 4:12). The Perezites represented a major subdivision of Judah's tribe.

(1×) Numbers 26:20 lists Judah's clans: 'of Shelah, the clan of the Shelanites; of Perez, the clan of the Perezites; of Zerah, the clan of the Zerahites.' The definite article 'the Perezite' functions as collective designation. The multilingual glosses preserve the gentilic form (Perezite, faresitas). This census established the Perezites as a major Judahite clan, anticipating their later prominence through David's line. The genealogical emphasis in Ruth and Chronicles on Perezite lineage underscores this clan's historical importance in Israel's tribal structure and royal dynasty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Perezite | es: los-faresitas | fr: le-Perezite | de: der-Perezite Num 26:20

פְּרָצִים H6559 N-mp (1×)

Perazim, a mountain location associated with divine judgment in Isaiah 28:21

This place name appears in Isaiah 28:21 as 'Mount Perazim,' referencing a location where God previously intervened in battle. The name means 'breaches' or 'breakings forth,' likely referring to Baal-perazim where David defeated the Philistines (2 Samuel 5:20). There David said, 'The LORD has broken through my enemies before me like a breaking flood,' giving the place its name. Isaiah invokes this memory ironically: as God once broke through David's enemies, now He will rise up to do His 'strange work' and perform His 'alien deed'—fighting against His own people Judah. The geographical reference emphasizes the reversal: covenant blessing becomes covenant curse.

(1×) Isaiah 28:21 warns: 'For the LORD will rise up as on Mount Perazim; as in the Valley of Gibeon he will be roused, to do his deed—strange is his deed! and to work his work—alien is his work!' The multilingual glosses preserve the place name (Perazim, Perasim). The prophet deliberately recalls God's past victories for Israel—at Perazim against Philistines, at Gibeon against Canaanites—to heighten the shock that now God will fight against Jerusalem. This 'strange work' of judgment against His own people represents covenant reversal for persistent rebellion. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Peratsim | es: Perasim | fr: [פְּרָצִים] | de: [פְּרָצִים] Isa 28:21

פֶּרֶץ H6560 N-proper-fs (4×)

Perez (son of Judah and Tamar); also place names involving 'breach' or 'breaking through'

Primarily the name of Judah's son by Tamar, whose birth involved 'breaking through' ahead of his twin Zerah (Genesis 38:29). The name became important in Judah's genealogy, appearing frequently in Chronicles, Ruth, and Nehemiah. It also designates two locations: Perez-uzzah ('breach of Uzzah') near Jerusalem where God struck Uzzah for touching the ark (2 Sam 6:8; 1 Chr 13:11), and possibly Mount Perazim (Isa 28:21). The name evokes breaking forth, bursting through, or making a breach.

(4×) The four references here all point to the place name Perez-uzzah (also called Perez Uzza), where Uzzah died touching the ark. Second Samuel 6:8 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 13:11 (each mentioning it twice) commemorate this 'breach against Uzzah.' The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name Perez/Perets with the associated term Uzzah/Uzza, showing this is a composite geographic name marking a specific incident. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Perets-, Perez, Uzza | es: Perets, Perets-, Uzza | fr: Perez, Uzzah, [עֻזָּא] | de: Perez, Uzzah, [עֻזָּא] 2Sam 6:8; 1Chr 13:11

פָּרַק H6561 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (10×)

To tear off, tear apart, or rescue; ranges from stripping ornaments to rending prey to delivering from foes

A verb whose physical core is the violent motion of tearing away. In Genesis 27:40 Isaac tells Esau he will 'tear off' the yoke from his neck, and in Exodus 32:2-3 the golden earrings are torn away for the calf. The same forceful image extends to a lion rending prey (Ps

7:2; Nahum 2:13) and to branches snapped off a vine (Ezek 19:12). Remarkably, Aramaic and Syriac cognates push the word toward 'rescue' and 'redeem,' and this semantic thread surfaces in Psalm 136:24 and Lamentations 5:8, where God tears his people free from their oppressors.

1. tear off, remove (4×) To tear off or remove something physically attached, especially ornaments, jewelry, or a yoke. In Exodus 32:2-3 the Israelites tear off their gold earrings — Spanish 'quitad/quitáoslo' and German 'zerriss weg' both convey the forceful stripping. Genesis 27:40 uses the image of breaking a yoke from the neck, an act of violent liberation from subjection. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-tore-off, and-you-will-tear-off, tear-off | es: Y-se-quitaron, quitad, quitáoslo | fr: déchirer-dehors, et-déchira-dehors, et-tu—déchirer-dehors | de: dann-brichst-du-ab, und-zerriss-weg, zerreissen-weg Gen 27:40; Exod 32:2; Exod 32:3; Exod 32:24

2. tear apart, rend (3×) To tear apart or rend violently, said of a predator mangling its prey. Psalm 7:2 envisions an enemy 'tearing like a lion,' Nahum 2:13 describes the lion rending for its cubs, and Zechariah 11:16 pictures a negligent shepherd who tears the hooves of his flock. French 'déchirant' and Spanish 'despedazando' capture the savage, piece-by-piece destruction. TEARING AND RENDING

en: rending, tearing | es: despedazando, despedazará | fr: arracher, briser, déchirant | de: [יִפְרֹק], reissend, rending 1Kgs 19:11; Ps 7:2; Zech 11:16

3. rescue, deliver (2×) To rescue or deliver, a figurative extension where one is 'torn free' from an oppressor's grip. This sense aligns with Aramaic and Syriac cognates meaning 'redeem, set free.' Psalm 136:24 celebrates God who 'rescued us from our foes,' and Lamentations 5:8 laments that 'there is none to deliver.' Spanish 'nos rescató' and English 'rescued us' highlight the completed deliverance. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-rescued-us, one-breaking-away | es: Y-nos-rescató, quien-libere | fr: [פרק], et-briser | de: [פרק], und-er-gerettet-uns Ps 136:24; Lam 5:8

4. be broken off (1×) To be broken off (Hitpael reflexive/passive), said of branches snapped from a vine. Ezekiel 19:12 uses this form for the strong rods of the vine that 'were broken off,' extending the tearing image into the botanical realm. English 'were broken off' and Spanish 'fueron rotas' both render the passive result of violent separation. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: were-broken-off | es: fueron-rotas | fr: arracher | de: [הִתְפָּרְקוּ] Ezek 19:12

פְּרַק H6562 V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)

break off, redeem (Aramaic imperative); appears in Daniel 4:27 regarding breaking off from sin

This is an Aramaic imperative form meaning 'break off!' or 'tear away!', from the root cognate to Hebrew פָּרַק (to tear off, break apart). It appears in Daniel 4:27 in Daniel's counsel to Nebuchadnezzar after interpreting his troubling dream. Daniel urges the king: 'Break off your sins by practicing righteousness, and your iniquities by showing mercy to the oppressed.' The verb carries the sense of violently separating oneself from something, tearing away from evil. Here it introduces Daniel's moral exhortation—perhaps the dream's terrible fulfillment could be averted if the king would fundamentally change his ways. The term emphasizes decisive moral rupture, not gradual reform.

(1×) Daniel 4:27 uses this imperative in earnest counsel: 'Therefore, O king, break off your sins [by righteousness].' The multilingual glosses vary (break off, redime meaning 'redeem', détacher meaning 'detach') but convey separation from sin. The construction with beth instrumental ('break off sins by means of righteousness') suggests that righteous action is the means of rupture with past evil. Daniel offers Nebuchadnezzar a chance to avert judgment through moral transformation—replacing oppression with justice, arrogance with mercy. The king's failure to heed this counsel led to seven years of madness. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: break-off | es: redime | fr: se-détacher | de: [פרק] Dan 4:27

פֻּרְק H6563 Art / N-ms (2×)

crossroads; plunder snatched away; a junction or parting of ways, or goods violently seized

This rare noun carries two distinct but related senses in its only two biblical appearances. In Obadiah it refers to a crossroads or junction where paths diverge, the place where Edom stood to intercept Judah's refugees. In Nahum it denotes plunder or spoil, emphasizing the violent seizure and tearing away of goods. The semantic connection may lie in the idea of division or separation—whether of roads or of possessions torn from their owners.

(2×) The word appears in two very different contexts: Obadiah 14 warns Edom not to stand at the crossroads to cut off fugitives, while Nahum 3:1 denounces Nineveh as a city full of plunder and prey. The multilingual evidence reflects this semantic range: English offers both 'crossroads' and 'plunder,' Spanish has 'la-encrucijada' (the crossroads) and 'violencia,' French uses 'croisement' and 'carrefour.' This dual meaning—geographic junction and seized goods—may share a root sense of 'separation' or 'parting.' DIVISION SPLIT

en: and-plunder, the-crossroads | es: la-encrucijada, violencia | fr: croisement, le-carrefour, | de: [פרק], der-Weggabelung Obad 1:14; Nah 3:1

פֶּרֶק H6564 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

fragment, broth (Ketiv reading in Isaiah 65:4); scholarly consensus reads 'broth' (מָרָק) instead

This word appears in the Ketiv (written text) of Isaiah 65:4, but is widely considered a textual corruption. The phrase reads literally 'and fragment of abominations in their vessels,' which makes limited sense. The Qere (read aloud) and most modern translations follow the emendation to מָרָק (maraq), meaning 'broth,' yielding 'broth of abominable things in their vessels.' The context describes syncretistic religious practices: sitting in tombs, spending nights in secret places, eating pig's flesh. The reference to broth of impure animals fits the catalogue of violations. The fragmentary state of the Ketiv reading itself suggests scribal error.

(1×) Isaiah 65:4 (Ketiv) mentions this problematic term in a list of abominable practices God condemns. The multilingual glosses largely mark it as Ketiv (a reading not followed in translation). Scholarly consensus favors reading 'broth' (from a different but similar root) to parallel 'swine's flesh' earlier in the verse. The underlying issue is clear regardless: illicit religious syncretism mixing Yahweh worship with practices forbidden in Torah—tomb rituals, nocturnal mysteries, consuming unclean food. These violations provoke divine judgment in Isaiah's oracle. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [ketiv] | es: [Ketiv] | fr: [[ופרק]] | de: [[ופרק]] Isa 65:4

פָּרַר H6565a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-2ms (47×)

To break, annul, frustrate; Hifil: violate a covenant, nullify a vow, thwart counsel; Hofal: be broken, come to nothing.

Parar in its Hifil stem is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for the undoing of binding commitments — whether covenants, vows, or counsel. It operates across three distinct spheres of authority: the covenantal (breaking God's covenant brings curse, Gen 17:14; Lev 26:15), the legal (a husband may annul his wife's vow on the day he hears it, Num 30:8-15), and the strategic (Hushai's mission is to 'frustrate the counsel of Ahithophel,' 2 Sam 15:34). The Assyrian cognate pararu ('destroy, shatter') and the Arabic naqada ('break a compact') both point to the root metaphor of physical shattering applied to abstract obligations. What makes the word theologically potent is its asymmetry: humans break covenants with God constantly, but God's repeated declaration is that he will not break his covenant with them (Lev 26:44; Judg 2:1).

1. break/violate a covenant (21×) Breaking or violating a covenant, commandment, or binding agreement — the most frequent and theologically central sense at 21 occurrences. The one who is uncircumcised 'has broken my covenant' (Gen 17:14); Israel's disobedience in Lev 26:15 is described as 'breaking' the covenant to the point of invoking curses. Judg 2:1 records God's declaration: 'I will never break my covenant with you' — the divine counter-promise.

Arabic naqada al-'ahd ('break the covenant') and Swahili vunja agano mirror the Hebrew metaphor exactly. Spanish quebrantar ('to shatter') preserves the physical-breaking imagery that underlies the legal violation. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: Have-broken, and-breaking, and-they-broke | es: a-quebrantar, anules, para-invalidar | fr: [הפר], [להפר], annuler | de: [הפר], [והפר], [ויפרו] Gen 17:14; Lev 26:15; Lev 26:44; Num 15:31; Judg 2:1

2. annul/invalidate a vow (14×) Annulling or invalidating a vow or obligation by authoritative decree — 14 occurrences concentrated in the vow legislation of Num 30. A father may 'annul' his daughter's vow (Num 30:5); a husband may 'annul' his wife's oath on the day he hears it (Num 30:8, 12-13). This is not transgression but legitimate nullification by recognized authority. French annuler and Spanish anular both select legal-cancellation vocabulary, while Arabic abtala ('render void') confirms the juridical rather than transgressive character. The distinction from sense 1 is crucial: sense 1 is illicit breaking; sense 2 is licit cancellation. ANNUL FRUSTRATE PLANS

en: and-annuls, and-break, annul | es: anular, anularás, anule | fr: annulant, annule, annuler | de: [תפר], annulled-ihnen, annulling Num 30:8; Num 30:12; Num 30:13

3. frustrate/thwart counsel (7×) Frustrating, thwarting, or bringing to nothing the plans or counsel of another — 7 occurrences in wisdom and narrative contexts. Hushai is dispatched to 'frustrate the counsel of Ahithophel' (2 Sam 15:34; 17:14). God 'frustrates the signs of liars' (Isa 44:25); he 'frustrates the devices of the crafty' (Job 5:12). Spanish frustrar and French déjouer both select counter-scheming vocabulary. Prov 15:22 warns that 'without counsel, plans are frustrated' — using the infinitive absolute for emphasis. The object here is always intellectual or strategic, not a legal instrument. ANNUL FRUSTRATE PLANS

en: Frustrator-of, and-frustrated, and-you-will-frustrate | es: Fracasan, Que-frustra, frustrando | fr: [ויפר], [להפר], annuler | de: [הפר], [ויפר], [להפר] 2Sam 15:34; 2Sam 17:14; Ezra 4:5; Neh 4:15; Job 5:12

4. be broken/fail (passive) (4×) Being broken, failing, or coming to nothing — the passive and intransitive dimension, covering Hofal forms and intransitive Hifil uses (4 occurrences). Isaiah 8:10: 'Take counsel together, but it will come to nothing.' Jer 33:21 poses the hypothetical of God's covenant with David being 'broken.' Zech 11:11 reports the staff 'Beauty' being broken as a symbolic act. German brechen (intransitive) and Spanish ser quebrantado (passive) both reflect the shift from agent to patient. These forms describe the result of breaking rather than the act itself. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-fails, and-it-was-broken, and-it-will-fail | es: Y-fue-roto, será-quebrantado, y-falle | fr: et-annuler, et-rompre, rompre | de: [ותפר], brechen, und-brechen Eccl 12:5; Isa 8:10; Jer 33:21; Zech 11:11

5. (1×) An isolated and intensified form — shattering or dashing to pieces. Job 16:12 uses the rare Pilpel form vayefarpereni ('he shattered me to pieces'), a dramatic reduplication conveying violent, repeated breaking. Spanish me quebrantó and English 'he shattered me' capture the physical violence. The Assyrian pararu ('shatter') is the closest cognate parallel. This single occurrence stands apart from the other senses through its intensified morphology and physical violence — Job describes God seizing him by the neck and dashing him to pieces like a target. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-He-shattered-me | es: y-me-quebrantó | fr: et-annuler-moi | de: [ויפרפרני] Job 16:12

פָּרַר H6565b V-Piel-Perf-2ms (3×)

to split, divide, crack through (earth or sea)

This verb, possibly related to or identical with the root meaning 'break/frustrate,' describes physical splitting or dividing. Psalm 74:13 celebrates God's power: 'You divided the sea by your might'—likely recalling the Exodus deliverance through the Red Sea. Isaiah 24:19 uses intensive forms to describe cosmic catastrophe: 'The earth splits, cracks through'—utterly shattered in divine judgment. Both contexts involve dramatic, forceful division—whether redemptive (parting waters for Israel) or destructive (earth breaking apart). The verb conveys violent separation or fracturing, powers unleashed only by divine action.

(3×) To split, divide, or crack through, used of dramatic physical division. Psalm 74:13 praises God: 'You divided (פּוֹרַרְתָּ) the sea by your might'—the Exodus deliverance through parted waters (Poʿel form). Isaiah 24:19 describes apocalyptic judgment with intensive forms: 'The earth splits completely through (פּוֹר תִּתְפּוֹרָרָה), the earth cracks through (הִתְפּוֹרְרָה אֶרֶץ)'—emphasizing total fracture. The root may relate to פרר (break/frustrate) or be separate; some propose connection to Arabic roots for splitting or Aramaic for shaking. Translations: 'divide,' 'split,' 'shatter,' 'break'; Spanish 'dividir/romper,' French 'briser,' German 'teilen/zerbrechen.' SPLITTING AND CLEAVING

en: divided, shattering, shatters | es: dividiste, romperse, se-rompió | fr: [התפוררה], [פור], briser | de: [התפוררה], [פור], geteilt Ps 74:13; Isa 24:19

פָּרַשׂ H6566 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (67×)

To spread out, extend, stretch forth; of hands in prayer, wings in flight, garments, nets, and coverings; in Piel, to spread intensively or scatter.

Paras is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for the gesture of opening wide and extending outward — hands lifted in prayer, wings outstretched in flight or protection, garments laid flat, nets cast wide. It captures a distinctly visual, spatial action: the image of Solomon spreading his hands toward heaven at the temple dedication (1 Kgs 8:22), the cherubim stretching their wings over the ark (1 Kgs 8:7), or the adulteress spreading a covering over her bed (Prov 7:16). The Piel intensifies the action, and in a few striking cases shifts the meaning toward scattering or dispersing people — a metaphorical extension where what is 'spread out' is a population rather than a physical object. Arabic farasha and Syriac pras both preserve this same concrete spreading sense.

1. spread out, stretch forth (54×) Qal active: to spread out, stretch forth, extend — the dominant sense covering 54 of 67 occurrences. This encompasses spreading hands in prayer (Exod 9:29, 33; 1 Kgs 8:22; Ezra 9:5), wings being spread in flight or covering (Exod 37:9; Deut 32:11; 1 Kgs 6:27), garments laid out (Judg 8:25; Deut 22:17), nets spread for trapping (Hos 7:12; Ezek 12:13), and coverings extended. Spanish extender, German ausbreiten, and French etendre all converge on the same physical-extension semantics. The breadth of objects spread — hands, wings, cloth, nets, scrolls — is unified by the shared kinesthetic image of opening outward from a center. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: And-he-shall-spread-out, He-spread, and-I-shall-spread | es: Y-extenderá, Y-extenderán, Y-extenderé | fr: et-ils-devra-étendre, et-étendre, ils-devra-étendre | de: ausbreiten, sie-soll-ausbreiten, spreads Exod 9:29; Exod 9:33; Exod 37:9; Num 4:6; Num 4:7

2. spread out (intensive, Piel) (6×) Piel intensive: to spread out deliberately, emphatically, or thoroughly. The six Piel occurrences carry special theological weight: Isaiah describes God's hands spread out all day toward a rebellious people (Isa 65:2), and the psalmist spreads his hands in desperate prayer (Ps 143:6). The Piel intensification in Isa 1:15 — 'when you spread out your hands, I will hide my eyes' — makes the gesture more forceful and deliberate. German breitete-aus and Spanish extendi both try to capture this intentional, emphatic quality, though the distinction from the Qal is admittedly subtle in most target languages. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING

en: I-spread-out, Spreads, and-when-you-spread-out | es: Extendí, Ha-extendido, Y-cuando-extendéis | fr: et-étendre, étendre | de: ausbreiten, breitete-aus, und-ausbreiten Ps 143:6; Isa 1:15; Isa 25:11; Isa 65:2; Jer 4:31

3. be spread out (passive) (3×) Qal passive participle: the state of being spread out or extended, functioning adjectivally. In 1 Kgs 8:54 Solomon rises from kneeling with his hands 'spread out' (perusot) toward heaven; in Hos 5:1 a net is 'spread' upon Tabor; in Joel 2:2 darkness is 'spread out' over the mountains like dawn. Spanish extendido/extendida and German ausgebreitet both use past-participial forms, confirming this as a stative-resultative reading distinct from the active verbal senses. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING

en: spread, spread-out | es: extendida, extendidas, extendido | fr: étendit-dehors, étendre | de: ausbreiten, spread-heraus 1Kgs 8:54; Hos 5:1; Joel 2:2

4. scatter, disperse (Piel) (2×) Piel with a dispersal meaning: to scatter or spread abroad people, extending the physical 'spread out' metaphor to the dispersion of populations. In Zech 2:6 God declares 'I have spread you abroad like the four winds' — a striking image where people are the object being flung outward. Ps 68:14 similarly uses this sense when kings are 'scattered.' Arabic farraqa ('to scatter, disperse'), Korean 흩뜨리다 ('to scatter'), and Swahili -tawanya ('to disperse') all select forceful dispersal vocabulary here, marking a clear semantic break from the stretching-forth of sense 1. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING

en: I-have-spread-you, when-scattered | es: Cuando-esparció, os-he-esparcido | fr: dans-étendre, étendre | de: ausbreiten, breitete-aus Ps 68:14; Zech 2:6

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Ezek 17:21 where fugitives 'shall be scattered' to every wind. The passive/Nifal form and the dispersal context align this most naturally with sense 4's scattering meaning, and multilingual evidence (Spanish esparcidos, English 'shall be scattered') confirms the semantic connection. It likely represents a stray singleton that belongs with sense 4 rather than a genuinely independent meaning. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING

en: shall-be-scattered | es: serán-esparcidos | fr: étendre | de: ausbreiten Ezek 17:21

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Lam 4:4 describing a nursing child whose tongue cleaves to the roof of its mouth, with the participle pores describing 'one who breaks/spreads' bread. The image is of breaking bread open to distribute it — a concrete extension of 'spreading apart' that verges on 'dividing' or 'distributing.' Spanish repartir ('to distribute, share out') captures this nuance well. While marginal, it represents a real semantic extension from spatial spreading to the act of breaking open for distribution. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING

en: one-breaking | es: quien-reparta | fr: étendre | de: ausbreiten Lam 4:4

פָּרַשׁ H6567a V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fp (4×)

make distinct, declare distinctly, explain clearly; separate or distinguish

A verb meaning to make something clear and distinct, to declare or explain with precision. In Leviticus 24:12 it describes waiting for God to make his will distinctly known. Numbers 15:34 similarly awaits a clear declaration of judgment. Nehemiah 8:8 uses the participle to describe how the Levites read the Law 'clearly' (or 'with interpretation'), making it intelligible to the people. The rare Niphal participle in Ezekiel 34:12 is textually uncertain but may relate to scattered sheep.

(4×) Leviticus 24:12 and Numbers 15:34 both involve waiting 'to declare distinctly' what should be done in difficult legal cases, emphasizing the need for clear divine instruction. Nehemiah 8:8 describes the Levites reading the Law 'distinctly' or 'with interpretation' (מְפֹרָשׁ) so the people could understand. The notion is clarity, precision, and making something unmistakably clear. Some translations interpret this as 'interpreted' or 'explained,' reflecting the explanatory dimension. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: declared, distinctly, scattered | es: claramente, dispersas,, fue-declarado | fr: [מפרש], declared, séparer | de: [מפרש], [נפרשות], declared Lev 24:12; Num 15:34; Neh 8:8; Ezek 34:12

פָּרַשׁ H6567b V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to sting, pierce (Hifil form); used metaphorically of wine's effect in Proverbs 23:32

This rare verb means 'to sting' or 'to pierce,' appearing only in Proverbs 23:32 in a warning about wine. The root is possibly related to words for 'goad' or 'staff' (something that pierces). In the proverb's climactic line, wine that sparkles attractively and goes down smoothly is warned: 'In the end it bites like a serpent and stings like an adder.' The parallel verbs (bite/sting) both describe venomous snake attacks, emphasizing wine's deceptive danger. It appears pleasant initially but delivers poisonous consequences—addiction, poverty, conflict, and physical harm. The 'sting' captures the sharp, painful aftermath of excessive drinking.

(1×) Proverbs 23:32 culminates a lengthy warning against wine: 'At the last it bites like a serpent and stings like an adder.' The double snake imagery (serpent/adder, bite/sting) reinforces danger through synonymous parallelism. The multilingual glosses where available (stings, picará meaning 'will sting') preserve the piercing imagery. The broader passage (verses 29-35) graphically describes alcoholism's effects—wounds, redness of eyes, hallucinations, violence—all flowing from wine's deceptive initial appeal. The sting represents the painful reality following intoxication's temporary pleasure. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: it-stings | es: picará | fr: יפרש | de: [יפרש] Prov 23:32

פְּרַשׁ H6568 V-Piel-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

distinctly, made distinct (Aramaic passive participle); appearing in Ezra 4:18 regarding a translated letter

This is an Aramaic passive participle meaning 'made distinct' or 'made clear,' from a root meaning to separate, distinguish, or interpret. It appears in Ezra 4:18 in King Artaxerxes' reply to the accusation against the Jews rebuilding Jerusalem. The king writes: 'The letter that you sent to us has been distinctly read before me' (or 'has been translated and read'). The term indicates that the Aramaic letter was clearly presented to the Persian king, possibly meaning it was translated into Persian or simply read aloud with careful clarity. The root is the same that later describes the Levites' practice of making Scripture clear to the people (Nehemiah 8:8).

(1×) Ezra 4:18 reports the Persian king's response: 'The document you sent us has been distinctly read before me.' The multilingual glosses (distinctly, claramente meaning 'clearly') capture the sense of clear presentation. Whether this means translation from Aramaic to Persian or simply careful oral reading is debated. The larger context shows the letter's contents were understood well enough for Artaxerxes to order a halt to Jerusalem's rebuilding—a decision based on alleged historical rebelliousness. The clarity of communication enabled this unfortunate administrative outcome. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: distinctly | es: claramente | fr: [מפרש] | de: [מפרש] Ezra 4:18

פֶּרֶשׁ H6569 N-msc / 3mp (7×)

dung, offal, intestinal contents; the waste material of sacrificial animals to be burned outside the camp

A masculine noun פֶּרֶשׁ referring to the intestinal contents and dung of a sacrificial animal — the waste that must be carried outside the camp and burned. It appears exclusively in ritual legislation across the Pentateuch: the ordination offering (Exod 29:14), the sin offering (Lev 4:11; 8:17; 16:27), and the red heifer ceremony (Num 19:5). In Malachi's striking prophetic rebuke, God threatens to spread the festival dung on the faces of negligent priests (Mal 2:3). Spanish estiércol and French excréments capture the visceral, unclean nature of this substance.

dung, excrement, offal (7×) Dung, intestinal contents, or offal — the waste material extracted from a sacrificial animal during preparation. In Priestly legislation, the peresh must be carried 'outside the camp' and burned along with the hide and flesh of sin offerings (Exod 29:14; Lev 4:11; 8:17; 16:27) and the red heifer (Num 19:5). This disposal outside the camp underscores the impurity associated with this material. Malachi transforms the cultic term into a shocking prophetic image: God will 'spread dung on your faces, the dung of your festivals' (Mal 2:3), rebuking priests who dishonor the covenant. Spanish estiércol and French excréments consistently render the basic sense, while German Mist captures the agricultural overtones. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: and-its-dung, dung, dung-of | es: estiércol, estiércol-de, estiércol-de-ella | fr: dung-leur, et-son-dung, excréments | de: Mist, dung-ihr, ihr-dung Exod 29:14; Lev 4:11; Lev 8:17; Lev 16:27; Num 19:5

פֶּרֶשׁ H6570 N-proper-ms (1×)

Peresh, a Manassite name appearing in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:16

This personal name appears only in 1 Chronicles 7:16 in the genealogical records of Manasseh's descendants. Peresh was a son of Machir's wife Maacah, making him part of the Manassite clan of Gilead. The name possibly relates to roots meaning 'separate' or 'distinct,' though the etymology is uncertain. The Chronicler's genealogies, while sometimes selective and schematic, preserve tribal memory and establish family connections crucial for maintaining tribal identity during and after the exile. Peresh represents one branch of the powerful Manassite tribe that settled east of the Jordan in Gilead.

(1×) First Chronicles 7:16 records: 'And Maacah the wife of Machir bore a son, and she called his name Peresh; and the name of his brother was Sheresh.' The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name (Peresh, Peres) through transliteration. This genealogical note positions Peresh within Machir's family, connecting him to Gilead's settlement. Manasseh's extensive territory—both west and east of Jordan—required careful genealogical documentation to maintain clan boundaries and inheritance rights. Peresh's inclusion preserves one line of this complex tribal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Peresh | es: Peres | fr: [פרש] | de: [פרש] 1Chr 7:16

פָּרָשׁ H6571a Conj-w / N-mp (5×)

horse, steed; war-horses or mounted cavalry, a less common synonym of sus

A noun for horse or steed, functioning as a less frequent synonym of the common sus. It appears in military and commercial contexts: steeds traded from Togarmah alongside horses and mules (Ezek 27:14), cavalry that a king will conscript (1 Sam 8:11), horses whose swiftness is compared to a locust army (Joel 2:4), and mounted warriors in battle array (Jer 46:4; Isa 28:28). The root has cognates in Arabic, Ethiopic, and Sabaic, all meaning horse.

(5×) Horses or steeds, especially in military and commercial settings. A less common synonym of sus, with cognates across Semitic languages (Arabic faras, Ethiopic). Used for traded steeds from Togarmah (Ezek 27:14), royal cavalry a king will draft (1 Sam 8:11), horses swift as locusts in Joel's apocalyptic vision (Joel 2:4), and mounted warriors in battle (Jer 46:4). Spanish 'jinetes' (horsemen) and French 'cavalier' show how translators sometimes render the animal by its rider, reflecting the military context. HORSEMAN CAVALRYMAN

en: and-among-his-horsemen, and-horsemen, and-like-horsemen | es: los-jinetes, y-como-jinetes, y-en-sus-jinetes | fr: [הכרשים], [ופרשיו], et-cavalier | de: [הפרשים], [וכפרשים], [ופרשיו] 1Sam 8:11; Isa 28:28; Jer 46:4; Ezek 27:14; Joel 2:4

פָּרָשׁ H6571b Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (52×)

Horseman or cavalryman; a mounted warrior, usually appearing in military contexts alongside chariotry.

A masculine noun designating a mounted soldier, almost always appearing in the plural (parashim) alongside rekev ('chariotry') in descriptions of ancient Near Eastern military forces. Egyptian cavalry escorts Jacob's funeral procession (Gen 50:9), and Pharaoh's horsemen pursue Israel through the Red Sea (Exod 14:9, 17-28; 15:19). The word recurs for Philistine cavalry (1 Sam 13:5), Aramean mounted troops (2 Sam 8:4; 10:18), and the armies of Assyria and Babylon. Nahum 3:3 paints a terrifying picture of the 'horseman charging' with flashing sword. The cognate Arabic faris and Ethiopic faras confirm the pan-Semitic link between this root and horse-riding. Spanish jinetes, French cavaliers, and German Reiter all capture the military equestrian sense.

horseman, cavalryman (52×) A mounted warrior or cavalryman, typically appearing in plural alongside chariot forces in military narratives. Egyptian horsemen pursue Israel at the Sea (Exod 14:9, 17-28), Philistine parashim vastly outnumber Saul's forces (1 Sam 13:5), and Nahum 3:3 depicts the terrifying charge of Ninevite cavalry. The Arabic cognate faris and Ethiopic faras confirm the deep Semitic association of this root with horse-mounted combat. Cross-linguistic renderings – Spanish jinetes, French cavaliers, German Reiter – consistently reflect the military equestrian meaning rather than a civilian rider. HORSEMAN CAVALRYMAN

en: and-horsemen, for, horsemen | es: jinetes, y-jinetes | fr: [כרשים], cavalier, cavaliers | de: Reiter, und-Reiter Gen 50:9; Exod 14:9; Exod 14:17; Exod 14:18; Exod 14:23

פַּרְשֶׁגֶן H6572a N-msc (1×)

copy, transcript (Persian loanword); appearing in Ezra 7:11 referring to a document copy

This noun means 'copy' or 'transcript,' a loanword borrowed from Persian (through Aramaic) into Hebrew. It appears only in Ezra 7:11, introducing Artaxerxes' letter authorizing Ezra's mission: 'This is the copy of the letter that King Artaxerxes gave to Ezra the priest-scribe.' The term indicates this is a transcription of the original decree, preserved in Ezra's memoir. The borrowing of Persian administrative vocabulary reflects the reality of Jewish life under Persian rule, where official documents, permissions, and communications used Persian imperial terminology and protocols. A variant form (patshegen) appears elsewhere in Ezra and Esther.

(1×) Ezra 7:11 introduces the royal decree: 'This is the copy of the document that King Artaxerxes gave to Ezra.' The multilingual glosses (copy, copia) consistently identify this as a documentary transcript. The following verses (7:12-26) contain the decree's text authorizing Ezra's return to Jerusalem, funding for temple operations, and legal authority to enforce Torah. The notation 'this is the copy' establishes documentary evidence for Ezra's mission, grounding his authority in official Persian authorization rather than merely personal initiative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-the-copy-of | es: copia-de | fr: [פרשגן] | de: [פרשגן] Ezra 7:11

פִּתְשֶׁגֶן H6572b N-msc (3×)

copy (of a written document or decree)

This Persian loan-word means 'copy' of a document, appearing exclusively in Esther regarding royal edicts. Esther 3:14 commands that 'a copy of the edict' authorizing Jewish destruction be published throughout provinces. Esther 4:8 has Mordecai give Esther 'a copy of the written decree' so she can see the threat. Esther 8:13 similarly mandates publishing 'a copy of the edict' allowing Jewish self-defense. The term indicates official duplicates distributed across the vast Persian Empire to ensure uniform implementation of royal commands. The word is essentially identical to 'parsegen' (another form of the same loan-word), both meaning authorized copy.

(3×) A copy or duplicate of an official written document, specifically royal decrees. Esther 3:14 commands: 'A copy of the edict (פַּתְשֶׁגֶן הַכְּתָב) was to be issued as law in every province.' Esther 4:8: Mordecai gave Hathach 'a copy of the written decree (פִּתְשֶׁגֶן כְּתָב־הַדָּת)' ordering Jewish annihilation, so Esther could read it. Esther 8:13: 'A copy of the edict (פִּתְשֶׁגֶן הַכְּתָב)' granting Jews self-defense was issued throughout the empire. This Persian loan-word (related to Old Iranian terms for 'announcement' or 'command') indicates official duplicates for distribution. Identical in meaning to פַּרְשֶׁגֶן (Ezra 4). Translations: 'copy'; Spanish 'copia,' French 'copie.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: copy-of | es: Copia-de, copia-de | fr: copie | de: Abschrift Esth 3:14; Esth 4:8; Esth 8:13

פַּרְשֶׁגֶן H6573 N-msc (3×)

copy (of a written document or letter)

This Aramaic loan-word (variant of 'patsegen') means 'copy' of an official document, appearing in Ezra regarding correspondence with Persian authorities. Ezra 4:11 introduces 'this is a copy of the letter' that accusers sent to Artaxerxes opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding. Verse 23 begins: 'when the copy of King Artaxerxes' letter was read,' prompting action to stop construction. Ezra 5:6 presents 'the copy of the letter' Tattenai sent inquiring about the rebuilding authorization. The term indicates official duplicates of imperial correspondence—copies circulated to relevant parties while originals remained in royal archives. The word reflects Persian administrative practices adopted throughout the empire.

(3×) A copy or duplicate of an official document or letter, specifically in Persian imperial correspondence. Ezra 4:11 introduces: 'This is a copy of the letter (פַּרְשֶׁגֶן אִגַּרְתָּא) they sent to him [Artaxerxes]'—enemies accusing Jerusalem's builders. Verse 23: 'when the copy of the letter of King Artaxerxes (פַּרְשֶׁגֶן נִשְׁתְּוָנָא דִּי אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתְּא מַלְכָּא) was read before Rehum,' they acted to stop work. Ezra 5:6: 'the copy of the letter (פַּרְשֶׁגֶן אִגַּרְתָּא) that Tattenai...sent.' Aramaic loan-word from Persian, essentially identical to Hebrew פַּתְשֶׁגֶן. Translations: 'copy'; Spanish 'copia,' French 'copie.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: copy-of | es: Copia-de, copia-de | fr: copie | de: [פרשגן] Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:6

פִּרְשְׁדֹנָה H6574 Art / N-ms / 3fs (1×)

refuse, dung, excrement (possibly); textually uncertain word in Judges 3:22

This hapax legomenon (word appearing only once) in Judges 3:22 is textually and etymologically uncertain. The context is graphic: after Ehud thrust his dagger into the obese King Eglon, 'the refuse came out' (or possibly 'the blade came out at the back'). Many scholars propose emending the text to read פֶּרֶשׁ (peresh), meaning 'dung' or 'feces'—a realistic if unpleasant detail of abdominal stabbing. The Vulgate and Targum support this reading. The uncertainty reflects both scribal squeamishness (leading to euphemism or corruption) and the rare vocabulary. Whatever the precise reading, the narrative emphasizes the assassination's gruesome physical reality.

(1×) Judges 3:22 describes Ehud's assassination of Eglon: 'And the hilt also went in after the blade, and the fat closed over the blade, for he did not pull the sword out of his belly; and the refuse came out.' The multilingual glosses (refuse, excremento meaning 'excrement', verweigern which oddly means 'refuse/deny') reflect uncertainty about whether this refers to feces or some other anatomical matter. The graphic detail serves narrative purpose—demonstrating the completeness and violence of the killing, Eglon's vulnerability despite his royal status, and Ehud's decisive action. The vocabulary difficulty perhaps stems from later scribal discomfort with such explicit bodily description. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8220 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-refuse | es: el-excremento | fr: le-refuse | de: der-verweigern Judg 3:22

פִּרְשָׁה H6575 Conj-w / N-fsc (2×)

exact statement, detailed account, or full explanation of a matter

Found only in the book of Esther, this Persian-period Hebrew term denotes a precise, detailed account or explanation. Mordecai gives Esther the exact statement regarding the sum of money Haman promised to pay into the royal treasury. Later, the book records that the full account of Mordecai's greatness was written in the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia. The word emphasizes precision and completeness in conveying information.

(2×) Both appearances occur in Esther (4:7; 10:2) in contexts requiring precise information. In 4:7, Mordecai tells Esther the 'exact statement' (parashat) of the money involved in Haman's plot; in 10:2, the text refers to the 'full account' of Mordecai's greatness. Spanish uses 'explicación' and 'relato,' French and German transliterate, suggesting the technical nature of this Persian-period administrative term. The word connotes thorough documentation, fitting the bureaucratic setting of the Persian court where written records were paramount. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: account-of, and-account-of | es: explicación-de, y-relato-de | fr: [ופרשת], [פרשת] | de: [ופרשת], [כרשת] Esth 4:7; Esth 10:2

פִּרְשֹׂז H6576 V-Piel-InfAbs (1×)

spreading (Piel infinitive absolute, possibly textually problematic); appears in Job 26:9 about God spreading clouds

This infinitive absolute form appears only in Job 26:9, though its textual status is disputed. The phrase reads literally 'spreading upon it his cloud,' referring to God obscuring the face of the full moon by spreading clouds over it. The form is unusual (Piel infinitive absolute), leading some scholars to propose emending to a participle. However, the infinitive absolute can function as a finite verb or verbal noun in Hebrew poetry. The image depicts God's sovereign control over celestial phenomena—He veils even the moon's brightness at will by deploying His clouds. This fits Job 26's broader theme of God's incomprehensible power over creation.

(1×) Job 26:9 describes God's actions: 'He covers the face of the full moon, spreading his cloud over it.' The multilingual glosses (spreading, extendiendo meaning 'extending') support the spreading imagery. Whether one retains the infinitive or emends to participle, the picture remains: God actively deploys clouds as a veil over the moon. This continues Job's catalogue of divine power—stretching the north over the void, hanging earth on nothing, binding waters in clouds, and here obscuring the moon. These images emphasize divine sovereignty and inscrutability. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: spreading | es: extendiendo | fr: כרשז | de: [פרשז] Job 26:9

פַּרְשַׁנְדָּתָא H6577 N-proper-ms (1×)

Parshandatha, one of Haman's ten sons executed during the Purim events (Esther 9:7)

This Persian name belongs to one of the ten sons of Haman killed by the Jews in Shushan during the events commemorated by Purim. Parshandatha is listed first among the brothers in Esther 9:7. Like the other names in this list, it appears authentically Persian in form, though the precise etymology is uncertain. After Queen Esther revealed Haman's genocidal plot and he was executed, Esther requested permission to eliminate his sons as well, both as justice for their complicity in their father's scheme and to prevent future vengeance. All ten were killed on the thirteenth of Adar, and their bodies were publicly displayed in Shushan.

(1×) Esther 9:7 begins the list of Haman's sons: 'They also killed Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha...' through all ten names. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name (Parshandatha, Parsandata) through transliteration. The careful listing of all ten names individually emphasizes completeness—the entire house of Haman was eliminated, removing the threat permanently. This thorough justice became part of Purim's celebration: not just deliverance from the general threat but specific elimination of the primary perpetrators. The text notes the Jews did not take plunder, emphasizing justice over greed. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Parshandatha | es: Parsandata | fr: [פרשנדתא] | de: [פרשנדתא] Esth 9:7

פְּרָת H6578 N-proper-fs / 3fs (19×)

Euphrates — the great river of western Asia, one of Eden's four rivers and Israel's ideal northern boundary

The Hebrew proper noun Perat, designating the Euphrates, the greatest river of western Asia. It first appears as one of the four rivers of Eden (Gen 2:14) and then as the northern boundary of the land promised to Abraham (Gen 15:18). Throughout the Deuteronomistic history and the prophets, 'the great river, the river Euphrates' marks the ideal extent of Israelite territory (Deut 1:7; 11:24; Josh 1:4). Jeremiah uses the Euphrates symbolically — commanding a linen belt to be buried there (Jer 13:4–7) — and historically, as the site of the pivotal battle of Carchemish (Jer 46:2, 6, 10). The Assyrian form Purattu lies behind the Hebrew name, passing through Old Persian Ufratu to Greek Euphrates.

Euphrates (river, proper name) (19×) The proper noun Perat (Euphrates), designating the largest river of western Asia. Identified as one of the four rivers of Eden (Gen 2:14), it serves as the ideal northern boundary of the promised land (Gen 15:18; Deut 1:7; 11:24; Josh 1:4). Used in historical narratives referencing campaigns near the Euphrates (2 Sam 8:3; 2 Kgs 23:29; 24:7; Jer 46:2) and in Jeremiah's symbolic acts (Jer 13:4–7). Spanish 'Eufrates,' French 'Euphrate,' and German 'Euphrat' all derive from the Assyrian Purattu via Greek Euphrates. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Euphrates, Euphrates-ward, Perat | es: (Eufrates), al-Eufrates, el-Éufrates

| fr: Euphrate, Euphrates, Perat | de: Eufrat, Euphrat, Euphrates Gen 2:14; Gen 15:18; Deut 1:7; Deut 11:24; Josh 1:4

פַּרְתְּמִים H6579 Art / N-mp (3×)
nobles, high officials, aristocrats (Persian term)
This Persian loan-word denotes nobles or high-ranking officials, the aristocratic elite of the empire. Esther 1:3 describes Ahasuerus' grand banquet for 'his nobles and officials'—the empire's power structure on display. Esther 6:9 commands that Mordecai be honored: 'let the robe and horse be handed over to one of the king's most noble officials'—someone of sufficient rank to lead the procession. Daniel 1:3 has Nebuchadnezzar command bringing 'some of the Israelites from the royal family and the nobility'—selecting elite captives for Babylonian court training. The term consistently indicates the highest social stratum, those closest to royal power.

(3×) Nobles, high officials, or aristocrats—the elite class in Persian and Babylonian courts. Esther 1:3: Ahasuerus made a feast 'for all his officials and servants, the army of Persia and Media, the nobles (הַפַּרְתְּמִים) and governors of the provinces.' Esther 6:9: Haman must have 'one of the king's most noble officials (מִשָּׂרֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ הַפַּרְתְּמִים)' lead Mordecai on the king's horse. Daniel 1:3: bring 'some of the people of Israel, both of the royal family and of the nobility (וּמִן־הַפַּרְתְּמִים).' Persian loan-word from 'fratama' (first, foremost). Translations: 'nobles,' 'princes'; Spanish 'nobles,' French 'nobles,' German 'Edle.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-nobles | es: los-nobles | fr: les-nobles, noble | de: Edle, [הפרתמים] Esth 1:3; Esth 6:9; Dan 1:3

פֶּשׁ H6580 Prep-b (1×)
transgression or perhaps folly (textually uncertain); appearing in Job 35:15 in a difficult passage
This hapax legomenon in Job 35:15 is textually problematic. The verse as it stands in the Masoretic Text is difficult to translate coherently. Most modern translations follow ancient versions (Septuagint, Theodotion, Symmachus, Vulgate) in emending this word to פֶּשַׁע (pesha), meaning 'transgression' or 'rebellion.' The emended reading yields something like: 'And now, because his anger does not punish, and he does not greatly heed transgression.' This fits Elihu's speech arguing that God's apparent silence doesn't mean He ignores sin. The textual uncertainty reflects either early corruption or an extremely rare term.

(1×) Job 35:15 in the Masoretic Text contains this uncertain term in Elihu's discourse about divine justice and human accountability. The multilingual glosses show division: some follow the emendation to 'transgression' (transgression, abundancia which seems tangential). Elihu's point in context is that God's silence shouldn't be mistaken for indifference to evil—He sees transgression even when immediate judgment isn't visible. Whether the original text read 'transgression,' 'folly,' or something else, Elihu's theological argument addresses Job's complaints about divine absence by insisting God's justice operates on His own timeline. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: in-transgression | es: en-abundancia | fr: בפש | de: [בפש] Job 35:15

פָּשָׂה H6581 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (22×)
To spread (of a skin disease); a technical priestly term used exclusively in Leviticus 13-14 for diagnostic inspection.
A highly specialized verb confined entirely to the priestly skin-disease regulations of Leviticus 13-14. It describes the progressive spreading of a skin eruption (tsara'at) across the skin, a garment, or a house wall. The priest's verdict – clean or unclean – hinged on whether the affliction had 'spread' between inspections. French and Spanish renderings ('se répandre,' 'extenderse') capture the intransitive, creeping quality of the action. This narrow, diagnostic usage makes it one of the most domain-restricted verbs in the Hebrew Bible.

to spread (of skin disease) (22×) To spread or extend, used intransitively of a skin eruption (tsara'at) advancing across skin or fabric during the priestly inspection process. Every one of its twenty-two occurrences falls within Leviticus 13-14, making it a purely cultic-medical term. The construction often pairs with 'in the skin' (ba'or) or 'in the garment' (babbeged), and the infinitive absolute construction (pasoh yifseh) intensifies the certainty of spreading (Lev 13:7, 22, 27). Cross-lingual glosses – 'has spread' (eng), 'se extendió' (spa), 'ausbreitend' (deu) – all reflect unidirectional expansion. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: has-spread, it-spreads, spreading | es: extenderse, se-extendió, se-extiende | fr: a-étendre, cela-spreads, se-répandant | de: ausbreitend, es-spreads, hat-ausbreiten Lev 13:5; Lev 13:6; Lev 13:7; Lev 13:8

פָּשַׁח H6582 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms / 1cs (1×)
to tear in pieces (Piel form); used in Lamentations 3:11 of God treating the speaker like prey
This verb in the Piel stem means 'to tear to pieces' or 'to rend violently,' appearing only in Lamentations 3:11. The speaker uses predator imagery to describe his suffering: 'He turned aside my ways and tore me to pieces; he has made me desolate.' The verb follows the image of God as a lion or bear lurking to attack (verse 10). The tearing language is visceral and violent—not merely attacking but ripping apart. This fits Lamentations' brutal honesty about suffering, where the poet doesn't soften divine involvement but directly attributes catastrophe to God's action, even while maintaining faith that God's compassions never fail.

(1×) Lamentations 3:11 uses graphic predator imagery: 'He dragged me from the path and tore me to pieces; he left me devastated.' The multilingual glosses (tore, despedazó meaning 'tore to pieces') capture the violent imagery. This verse follows lion and bear metaphors (verse 10), with God portrayed as wild beast attacking prey. The shocking language serves lament's purpose—honest articulation of suffering's depth, refusing pious minimization. Yet this same chapter later pivots to hope: 'The steadfast love of the LORD never ceases' (verse 22). Lament holds together raw pain and sustained faith. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-tore-me | es: y-me-despedazó | fr: [ויפשחני] | de: [ויפשחני] Lam 3:11

פַּשְׁחוּר H6583 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (14×)
Pashhur; a priestly name borne by several individuals including Jeremiah's persecutor and post-exilic clan heads.
A personal name appearing across several centuries of Israelite history. The most vivid bearer is Pashhur son of Immer, the chief temple officer who struck and confined Jeremiah, only to receive the devastating prophetic renaming 'Magor-missabib' — Terror on Every Side (Jer 20:1–6). A second Pashhur, son of Malchijah, appears among officials who cast Jeremiah into a cistern (Jer 38:1). The name also designates a priestly family that returned from Babylon (Ezra 2:38; Neh 7:41) and contributed members who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:22). Spanish and German render the name as 'Pashur/Paschur,' while Greek tradition yields Πασχωρ.

Pashhur (proper name) (14×) The proper name Pashhur (פַּשְׁחוּר), designating multiple individuals in prophetic and post-exilic literature. Transliterations across languages — English 'Pashhur,' Spanish 'Pashur,' French/German 'Paschur,' Greek Πασχωρ — show consistent phonetic adaptation. The name's primary narrative weight falls on Jeremiah's antagonist (Jer 20:1–6), but it also heads a major returning priestly clan (Ezra 2:38 = Neh 7:41), making it both a personal and genealogical identifier. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Pashchur, Pashhur, and-Pashchur | es: Malquías, Pashjur, Pashur | fr: Paschur, [פשחור], et-Paschur | de: Paschur, [פשחור], und-Paschur 1Chr 9:12; Ezra 2:38; Ezra 10:22; Neh 7:41; Neh 10:3

פָּשַׁט H6584 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (43×)
To strip off garments, flay an animal, or make a sudden raid; encompasses undressing, forcible stripping, skinning, and military incursion.
Pashat is a surprisingly versatile verb that connects the intimate act of removing one's own clothing with the violent tearing of skin from a carcass and the swift rush of a military raid. The common thread is rapid removal or exposure — whether a priest changes vestments (Lev 6:11), enemies strip a fallen king's armor (1 Sam 31:9), or raiders sweep down upon a defenseless town (Judg 9:33). Spanish captures the range elegantly: quitarse for undressing, despojar for stripping someone, desollar for flaying, and asaltar for raiding. The Hifil causative sharpens the violence — it is always someone else being stripped, whether Joseph of his ornamented robe (Gen 37:23) or a sacrificial animal of its hide (Lev 1:6). Micah 3:3 makes the metaphor chillingly political: leaders who 'flay the skin' off God's people.

1. Qal: raid or rush upon (14×) To make a sudden military raid or rushing attack — 14 occurrences, all in Qal, concentrated in the Judges and Samuel narratives. Abimelech's men 'rush' upon Shechem (Judg 9:33, 44); Philistines 'raid' Israelite territory (1 Sam 27:8, 10; 30:1); David's men 'spread out' in assault (2 Sam 23:10). The Spanish asaltar ('to assault') and the narrative framing with directional motion ('they raided the Negev') confirm this as a distinct military-tactical sense. The core image is of rapid, sweeping movement that overwhelms a target — which connects etymologically to the idea of 'spreading out' found in the Aramaic cognate peshat. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-raided, and-rush, and-rushed | es: asaltamos, asaltaron, asaltasteis | fr: ai-raided, dépouiller, et-dépouiller | de: [וירפשטו], ausziehen, habe-raided Judg 9:33; Judg 9:44; Judg 20:37; 1Sam 23:27

2. Hifil: strip clothing from someone (11×) Hifil causative: to strip clothing or armor from another person by force — 11 occurrences, always with a direct object specifying the victim. Joseph's brothers strip his robe (Gen 37:23); Aaron is stripped of his priestly garments on Mount Hor (Num 20:26, 28); the Philistines strip Saul's corpse (1 Sam 31:9; 1 Chr 10:9). Spanish despojar ('to despoil') and German ausziehen (with dative of person) both mark the coercive, other-directed nature of this act. The sense carries strong overtones of humiliation and domination — to strip another is to assert power over them. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: He-has-stripped, I-strip-her, and-strip | es: Y-desnuda, Y-desnudó, Y-lo-despojaron | fr: dépouiller, et-dépouilla, et-dépouiller | de: [אפשיטנה], [הפשיט], [תפשטון] Gen 37:23; Num 20:26; Num 20:28; 1Sam 31:9; 1Chr 10:9

3. Qal: strip off garments (9×) Qal reflexive or intransitive: to take off one's own garments — 9 occurrences including the Hitpael reflexive form. The priest removes his linen vestments after the sin offering (Lev 6:11; 16:23); Jonathan strips off his robe and gives it to David (1 Sam 18:4); Saul strips off his clothes and prophesies naked (1 Sam 19:24); the beloved in Song of Songs says 'I have taken off my robe' (Song 5:3). Spanish quitarse (reflexive se) and Korean 벗다 ('to undress oneself') both distinguish this self-directed action from the forcible Hifil. The liturgical contexts in Leviticus underscore that changing garments is a boundary-crossing ritual act. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: I-put-off, and-he-shall-take-off, and-let-strip-off | es: Me-he-quitado, Y-quitará, Y-se-desnudó | fr: J'ai-ôté, [פשטה], dépouiller | de: [פשטה], [פשטים], [פשטתי] Lev 6:11; Lev 16:23; 1Sam 18:4; 1Sam 19:24; Neh 4:23

4. Hifil: flay or skin an animal (4×) Hifil specialized: to flay or skin a sacrificial animal — 4 occurrences in cultic contexts. In Leviticus 1:6 the worshiper 'skins' the burnt offering; in 2 Chronicles 29:34 and 35:11 Levites assist with flaying during Hezekiah's and Josiah's reforms. Micah 3:3 extends the image metaphorically to oppressive rulers who 'flay' the people's skin. Spanish desollar ('to flay/skin') is the dedicated butchery term used consistently here, clearly distinguished from the clothing senses. The ritual specificity — always involving sacrificial animals and priestly procedure — marks this as a lexicalized cultic sub-sense of the Hifil. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-he-shall-skin, skinning, they-stripped | es: Y-desollará, desollaban, desollar | fr: dépouiller, et-il-devra-peau | de: [הפשיטו], ausziehen, und-er-soll-Haut Lev 1:6; 2Chr 29:34; 2Chr 35:11; Mic 3:3

5. (3×) To strip the slain on a battlefield — 3 occurrences (1 Sam 31:8; 2 Sam 23:10; 1 Chr 10:8) describing the post-battle act of despoiling corpses. After the battle of Gilboa, the Philistines come 'to strip the slain'; David's mighty man Eleazar fights until the people return 'only to strip' the dead. Spanish despojar and English 'strip' both serve this battlefield-looting sense. It bridges senses 1 (military raid) and 2 (forcible stripping): the violent context of warfare meets the act of removing armor and valuables from fallen enemies. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: to-strip | es: para-despojar | fr: dépouiller, à-strip | de: ausziehen, zu-strip 1Sam 31:8; 2Sam 23:10; 1Chr 10:8

6. (2×) An extended or metaphorical usage of stripping or shedding — 2 occurrences. In Hosea 7:1, the context speaks of a thief who 'strips' (despoils/plunders), while Nahum 3:16 uses the image of a locust 'stripping off' its sheath-wings, a vivid metaphor for Nineveh's merchants scattering after plundering the city. Spanish despoja ('strips/despoils') covers both. The Nahum passage is particularly striking: the verb's concrete 'peeling off' image is applied to the moment an insect molts, extending pashat's semantic range into the natural world. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: strips | es: despoja | fr: dépouiller | de: [כשט] Hos 7:1; Nah 3:16

פָּשַׁע H6585 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (1×)

to march, step, advance (cohortative form); appears in Isaiah 27:4 about marching against enemies

This verb means 'to step,' 'to march,' or 'to stride,' appearing in the cohortative (first person expressing volition) in Isaiah 27:4. The LORD speaks: 'I have no wrath. Would that I had thorns and briers to battle! I would march against them, I would burn them up together.' The verb conveys military advancement, striding into battle against enemies. The imagery is of God as warrior, eager to fight—but notably, the enemies mentioned are metaphorical thorns and briers, representing opposition to His vineyard (Israel). The cohortative expresses hypothetical willingness: if there were such enemies threatening the vineyard, God would stride against them decisively.

(1×) Isaiah 27:4 presents God's rhetorical question in the vineyard song: 'Who would give me briers and thorns in battle? I would march through them; I would burn them together.' The multilingual glosses (march, avanzaré meaning 'I will advance') support military movement. The context is God's changed relationship with His vineyard—no longer angry and destructive (as in Isaiah 5), now protective and nurturing. The combative language is hypothetical: if enemies appeared, God would aggressively defend Israel. The marching imagery conveys determined, forceful advance against any threat to the renewed vineyard. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: I-would-march | es: avanzaré | fr: [אפשעה] | de: [אפשעה] Isa 27:4

פָּשַׁע H6586 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (41×)

To rebel, revolt against authority; to transgress divine law or covenant; as a substantive, a transgressor or rebel.

A verb of defiance at every level — political, covenantal, and moral. At its root, pasha describes the breaking of a vassal relationship: Moab 'rebelled' against Israel (2 Kgs 1:1; 3:5), and the northern tribes 'revolted' from the house of David (1 Kgs 12:19). But the prophets turn this political vocabulary toward the ultimate rebellion: Israel's transgression against God. Isaiah opens his prophecy with the charge 'I reared children and brought them up, but they have rebelled against me' (Isa 1:2). Spanish distinguishes between 'se rebelaron' (revolted) and 'transgredir' (transgress), while French uses both 'se rebeller' and 'transgression,' capturing the word's movement from political uprising to moral violation. The substantive 'transgressors' (posh'im) in Isaiah 1:28 and 53:12 names those whose rebellion defines their identity.

1. rebel, revolt against authority (18×) To rise up in rebellion against a sovereign or political authority, refusing allegiance and breaking a vassal treaty. This is the concrete, historical sense: Moab 'rebelled' against Israel after Ahab's death (2 Kgs 1:1; 3:5, 7), and Edom 'revolted' from under Judah's hand (2 Kgs 8:20, 22). Spanish 'se rebelaron' and French 'se révolta' preserve the political flavor. Isaiah 1:2 bridges this into the theological realm — Israel as God's children who 'rebelled' (pash'u) against their divine sovereign. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE en: and-rebelled, and-revolted, has-rebelled | es: Y-se-rebelaron, Y-se-rebeló, se-ha-rebelado | fr: a-se-rebella, et-se-rebella, et-se-révolta | de: [פשׁע], hat-empoerte-sich, revolted 1Kgs 8:50; 1Kgs 12:19; 2Kgs 1:1; 2Kgs 3:5; 2Kgs 3:7

2. transgressor, rebel (substantive) (11×) One who habitually rebels or transgresses, used as a substantive noun from the Qal participle to denote a class of persons defined by their rebellion. Isaiah 1:28 warns that 'transgressors and sinners shall be broken together,' and Isaiah 53:12 declares the Servant 'was numbered with the transgressors.' Spanish 'los transgresores' and French 'se révolter' reflect the persistent, characterizing force of the participle — not a single act but a settled disposition. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE
en: and-for-the-transgressors, and-the-transgressors, and-transgressor | es: Y-los-transgresores, a-transgresores, los-que-se-rebelaron | fr: et-se-révolter, et-transgression, se-révolter | de: [וּפשׁעים], aber-transgressors, sich-auflehnen Ps 37:38; Ps 51:13; Isa 1:28; Isa 46:8; Isa 48:8

3. transgress, break covenant or law (11×) To violate, overstep, or break a divine law, covenant stipulation, or moral boundary, emphasizing the offense itself rather than political defiance. Jeremiah 2:29 asks 'Why do you contend with me? You have all transgressed against me,' and Isaiah 59:13 pairs it with 'speaking oppression and revolt.' Spanish distinguishes this as 'transgredir' and 'pecar,' while German 'Vergehen' (offense) captures the legal-moral weight. Ezra 10:13 extends it to covenant violation in the post-exilic community. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE
en: Transgressing, and-transgress, have-transgressed | es: Transgredir, el-pecar, el-transgredir | fr: et-se-révolter, se-révolter, transgression | de: Vergehen, [ופשׁעו], [יפשׁע] Ezra 10:13; Prov 28:21; Isa 59:13; Jer 2:29; Jer 3:13

4. be transgressed against (Nifal) (1×) To be transgressed against, offended, or wronged — the Niphil passive, indicating the one who suffers the offense rather than the one who commits it. Occurring only in Proverbs 18:19, where 'a brother offended (niphsha) is harder to be won than a strong city.' This rare passive transforms the verb's perspective: the focus shifts from the rebel to the wounded party. Spanish 'ofendido' and English 'offended' capture the relational rupture. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS
en: offended | es: ofendido | fr: נפשׁע | de: [נפשׁע] Prov 18:19

פְּשַׁע H6587 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

a step (noun); used in the phrase 'as a step between me and death' in 1 Samuel 20:3

This noun means 'step' or 'pace,' appearing only in 1 Samuel 20:3 in Jonathan and David's conversation about Saul's murderous intent. David swears: 'As the LORD lives and as your soul lives, there is but a step between me and death.' The expression 'a step' (or 'one step') conveys extreme proximity—David is one pace away from being killed. The imagery is spatial: death is not some distant possibility but an immediate threat, as close as a single footfall. This dramatic declaration emphasizes the urgency of David's situation and his need for Jonathan's help in discerning Saul's true intentions.

(1×) First Samuel 20:3 records David's urgent appeal: 'There is but a step between me and death.' The multilingual glosses (step, paso) consistently translate the distance metaphor. Jonathan has been skeptical about his father's plans to kill David, but David insists Saul is hiding his intent from Jonathan. The 'step' image makes tangible the peril—death is not merely possible but imminent, requiring immediate action. This leads to their elaborate signal plan to determine Saul's intentions. The phrase became proverbial for extreme danger, expressing life's fragility when threatened. JUDGMENT SEAT en: as-a-step | es: como-paso | fr: comme-un-step | de: wie-ein-step 1Sam 20:3

פֶּשַׁע H6588 Prep-m / N-ms (93×)

Transgression, willful offense; a deliberate violation of God's law or covenantal authority, sometimes shading into political revolt

Among the Hebrew words for sin, פֶּשַׁע carries the strongest connotation of deliberate, willful defiance. While חַטָּאת ('sin') implies missing a mark and עָוֹן ('iniquity') points to moral crookedness, פֶּשַׁע denotes an act of conscious rebellion against a recognized authority — preeminently God, but also human rulers. Amos's oracles against the nations use it formulaically ('for three transgressions and for four,' Amos 1:3ff.), underscoring that even pagan nations are accountable. The word also appears in Israel's great confession texts (Exod 34:7; Num 14:18), where God's willingness to forgive פֶּשַׁע reveals the gravity of what is forgiven. Arabic 'معصية' (disobedience) and German 'Vergehen' (offense) capture the volitional dimension well.

1. transgression, offense against God (88×) Transgression or willful offense against God — a deliberate violation of divine law, covenant stipulations, or moral standards. This dominant sense covers singular and plural forms across all grammatical contexts. Spanish 'transgresión,' French 'transgression,' and German 'Vergehen' converge on intentional breach. Central in confessional and prophetic texts: Exod 34:7 ('forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin'), Amos 1:3–2:6 (the nations' recurring offenses), and Ps 51:3 ('blot out my transgressions'). TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS
en: transgression, transgressions-of, transgressions-of- | es: transgresiones-de, transgresiones-de-, transgresión | fr: transgression | de: Vergehen, transgression Exod 22:9; Exod 34:7; Num 14:18; 1Sam 24:11; Job 7:21

2. rebellion, revolt against authority (5×) Rebellion or revolt against sovereign authority — whether divine suzerainty or political overlordship, emphasizing the relational rupture of breaking loyalty. English 'rebellion,' Spanish 'rebelión,' and Arabic 'تمرد' highlight this overtone of insurrection. Exod 23:21 warns Israel not to rebel against God's angel; Lev 16:21 includes פְּשָׁעִים in the Day of Atonement confession encompassing all categories of defiance; Job 34:37 accuses Job of adding rebellion to his sin. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS
en: his-transgression, rebellion, their-transgression | es: rebelión, su-rebelión, su-transgresión, | fr: ton-transgression, transgression, transgressions-leur | de: Vergehen, dein-transgression, ihr-Übertretung Exod 23:21; Lev 16:21; Job 34:37; Ps 107:17; Ezek 33:12

פָּשַׁק H6589 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

to open wide, spread apart; used of lips in excessive speech or legs in sexual immorality

This verb describes the physical act of opening or spreading wide, appearing in two morally charged contexts. In Proverbs, it characterizes the fool who opens his lips wide in careless, excessive talk. In Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem as an unfaithful wife, the same verb depicts spreading one's legs in promiscuity. The common thread is immoderate, shameless opening—whether of the mouth in foolish speech or the body in sexual sin.

(2×) The word appears in Proverbs 13:3 describing someone who 'opens wide his lips' (reckless speech) and Ezekiel 16:25 where Jerusalem 'spread your legs' in prostitution. The multilingual glosses reflect both uses: English has 'opens-wide' and 'spread,' Spanish offers 'abre-ancho' and 'abriste.' The semantic range encompasses any immoderate opening or spreading, though both biblical contexts involve moral critique—of unbridled speech and unbridled sexuality respectively. The verb's root meaning of 'parting' or 'spreading apart' unifies these applications. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: and-you-spread, he-who-opens-wide | es: el-que-abre-ancho, y-abriste | fr: et-écarter, פשׂק | de: [ותפשׂקי], [פשׂק] Prov 13:3; Ezek 16:25

פְּשַׁר H6590 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (2×)

to interpret, explain the meaning of dreams or mysteries

An Aramaic loanword found exclusively in Daniel's account of interpreting Belshazzar's vision, this verb means to explain or interpret mysterious revelations. Daniel is described as having the ability to interpret dreams, and he is summoned to interpret the handwriting on the wall. The word likely entered Hebrew from Persian court language, where dream interpretation was a prized skill among royal advisors. It shares roots with later Jewish interpretive traditions.

(2×) Both occurrences are in Daniel 5 (verses 12 and 16), describing Daniel's ability to interpret dreams and mysteries. The Aramaic form appears as both an infinitive ('to interpret') and a participle ('interpreting, one who interprets'). Across languages—English 'interpret,' Spanish 'interpretar,' French 'interprétation'—the meaning is remarkably consistent, reflecting a technical term for the specialized skill of explaining divine revelations. This word connects to the later Jewish practice of 'pesher' interpretation found in the Dead Sea Scrolls. INTERPRET TRANSLATE en: interpreting, to-interpret | es: interpretando, interpretar | fr: de-interprétation, interpréter | de: [למפשר], [מפשר] Dan 5:12; Dan 5:16

פְּשַׁר H6591 N-msc (32×)

interpretation — the meaning of a dream or vision, an Aramaic noun used exclusively in Daniel Peshar is the Aramaic noun meaning 'interpretation,' appearing 32 times solely in the book of Daniel, where it drives the central narrative tension: Nebuchadnezzar demands not only the interpretation of his dream but the dream itself, and only Daniel can supply both (Dan 2:4-45). The word is cognate with the Hebrew root patar used for Joseph's dream interpretations in Genesis, though the nominal form peshar became the technical term that later gave rise to the pesher method of biblical interpretation at Qumran. In Daniel's court narratives, peshar is the prize that magicians, enchanters, and astrologers cannot deliver (Dan 2:4-11; 4:3-4; 5:7-8, 15-16), underscoring that true interpretation belongs to God alone (Dan 2:27-28). Spanish 'interpretacion,' French 'interpretation,' and German 'Deutung' consistently render the single sense.

interpretation (Aramaic) (32×) The Aramaic noun for interpretation, specifically of dreams and visions in the court narratives and apocalyptic visions of Daniel. It names what the Babylonian wise men cannot provide (Dan 2:4-11; 4:3-4; 5:7-8) and what God reveals exclusively through Daniel (Dan 2:27-45; 4:15-16; 5:12-26). The emphatic form pishra and construct peshar alternate throughout. This term later influenced the Qumran pesher exegetical tradition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-interpretation-of, and-its-interpretation, and-the-interpretation | es: e-interpretación-de, la-interpretación, pero-su-interpretación | fr: et-interprétation, et-l'interprétation, l'interprétation | de: Deutung, und-Deutung Dan 2:4; Dan 2:5; Dan 2:6; Dan 2:7

פְּשַׁר H6592 N-msc (1×)

interpretation, solution (of a riddle or enigma); an Aramaic loanword appearing in wisdom literature

This rare word, borrowed from Aramaic, carries the sense of unlocking a mystery or solving a riddle. In Ecclesiastes 8:1, it asks who knows the interpretation of a matter—the ability to unpack what lies hidden beneath life's perplexing questions. The Hebrew Bible occasionally adopts Aramaic terms for specialized meanings, and here the loan enriches the vocabulary of wisdom by focusing on interpretive skill, the capacity to make sense of what baffles others.

(1×) The term appears in the context of wisdom and understanding, asking rhetorically who possesses the ability to interpret a difficult matter. The multilingual evidence (Spanish "interpretación," French preserving the Hebrew form) suggests a technical term for hermeneutic insight, the unraveling of enigmas that require more than surface reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: interpretation-of | es: interpretación-de | fr: כשר | de: [כשר] Eccl 8:1

פִּשְׁתִּים H6593 Conj-w / N-fp (16×)

Flax or linen — the plant fiber and the textile woven from it Covers both the raw flax plant and the finished linen fabric without lexical distinction between them. Rahab hides the Israelite spies under stalks of flax drying on her roof (Josh 2:6), while Samson snaps his bonds of flax as fire consumes them (Judg 15:14). In Hosea, flax appears alongside wool as a valued natural product (Hos 2:7, 11). The Priestly legislation pairs linen and wool in purity laws about garment contamination (Lev 13:47-59) and the prohibition against mixed fabrics (Deut 22:11). Ezekiel's priests must wear linen, not wool, when ministering (Ezek 44:17-18). French 'lin' and German 'Leinen' both derive from the same ancient root as the English word.

flax, linen (material) (16×) Flax as a raw plant and linen as its finished textile product — two stages of the same material that Hebrew does not lexically separate. As a plant, it appears drying on Rahab's roof (Josh 2:6) and catching fire on Samson's bonds (Judg 15:14). As finished cloth, it appears in Priestly legislation governing garment contamination alongside wool (Lev 13:47-59), in the mixed-fabric prohibition (Deut 22:11), and in Ezekiel's priestly dress code (Ezek 44:17-18). Spanish 'lino' and French 'lin' consistently render both senses. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-My-flax, and-flax, and-linen | es: como-lino, el-lino, en-el-lino | fr: [כשתים], comme-lin, dans-le-lin | de: Leinen, [כשתים], der-Leinen Lev 13:47; Lev 13:48; Lev 13:52; Lev 13:59; Deut 22:11

פִּשְׁתָּה H6594 Prep-k (4×)

flax (plant); also flax wick (the fibrous material used in lamps)

This word denotes the flax plant in its growing state or its processed fibers used as lamp wicks. Exodus 9:31 twice mentions the flax crop destroyed by hail during the seventh plague. Isaiah uses flax wick as a metaphor: the 'smoking flax' (43:17) and 'dimly burning wick' (42:3) represent something fragile, nearly extinguished, yet not completely quenched. The Messiah will not 'break' or 'quench' such faint hope. The material is the same; the application varies from agriculture to household lighting to prophetic metaphor.

(4×) Exodus 9:31 describes the literal flax crop ('the flax and the barley were struck down') in Egypt at plague-time. Isaiah 42:3 uses the image of a smoldering wick ('a dimly burning wick he will not quench') to depict the Servant's gentle treatment of the weak. Isaiah 43:17 similarly uses wick imagery ('they are extinguished, quenched like a wick') for military defeat. Spanish lino (flax/linen) and mecha (wick) reflect both agricultural and household uses. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-a-wick, and-the-flax, like-a-wick | es: Y-el-lino, como-mecha, y-el-lino | fr: [וכפשתה], [ככפשתה], et-le-flax | de: [וכפשתה], [ככפשתה], und-der-flax Exod 9:31; Isa 42:3; Isa 43:17

פַּת H6595a Prep-m / N-fsc / 3ms (14×)

A morsel or fragment of bread; a small piece of food shared in hospitality or poverty.

Refers to a morsel, fragment, or piece of bread — the humble portion that anchors scenes of hospitality and want throughout Scripture. Abraham offers weary travelers a 'morsel of bread' as understatement for lavish generosity (Gen 18:5). Boaz invites Ruth to dip her morsel in vinegar at the harvest meal (Ruth 2:14). The word carries theological freight in Proverbs: 'Better a dry morsel with peace than a house full of feasting with strife' (Prov 17:1). Job protests his integrity by swearing he never ate his morsel alone without sharing with the fatherless (Job 31:17). The plural appears in Levitical grain-offering regulations for pieces broken apart (Lev 2:6; 6:21).

morsel, piece of bread (14×) A morsel or fragment of food, especially bread (פַּת). Spanish 'bocado' and French 'morceau' both capture the sense of a small, broken piece. The term functions in hospitality formulas (Gen 18:5; Judg 19:5; 1 Sam 28:22), proverbial wisdom about contentment (Prov 17:1; 23:8), personal integrity oaths (Job 31:17), and ritual grain-offering instructions where the offering is broken into pieces (Lev 2:6). The diminutive quality of the word heightens both the generosity of those who share and the desperation of those who beg. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-morsel-of, a-piece-of, broken-pieces | es: Tu-bocado-que-, bocado-de, bocado-de- | fr: brisé-pieces, comme-morceau, dans-pieces | de: Einfaeltiger, [פת], [פתך] Gen 18:5; Lev 2:6; Lev 6:21; Judg 19:5; Ruth 2:14

פָּתוֹת H6595b Conj-w (1×)

pieces (of bread); fragments used in a metaphorical context of prophetic condemnation

This plural construct form refers to small pieces or crumbs of bread, appearing in Ezekiel's harsh rebuke of false prophets. The passage condemns those who would manipulate God's people for trivial rewards—mere morsels of bread. The word captures both the physical fragments and the moral pettiness of selling out spiritual integrity for such little gain. It's a vivid image: prophets bartering truth for breadcrumbs.

(1×) Used in Ezekiel 13:19 within a scathing critique of false prophets who profane God for handfuls of barley and pieces of bread. The Spanish "pedazos" (pieces) and English "pieces-of" confirm the fragmentary nature. The word emphasizes the smallness and worthlessness of what these charlatans accept as payment for corrupting truth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-pieces-of | es: y-por-pedazos-de | fr: et-source | de: [ובפתותי] Ezek 13:19

פֹּת H6596 Conj-w (2×)

hinge socket or pivot point where door turns; possibly also feminine private parts

This architectural term most clearly refers to the sockets in which door pivots turned, functioning like ancient hinges. In Solomon's temple, these fittings were part of the elaborate door system. The second occurrence in Isaiah 3:17 is more disputed: it may refer euphemistically to women's private parts, or some scholars suggest emending the text to 'their shame' or 'their foreheads.' The architectural meaning is certain; the anatomical sense remains debated.

(2×) The word appears in 1 Kings 7:50 clearly denoting the hinge sockets for temple doors, where translations consistently render it as 'hinges.' In Isaiah 3:17, the meaning is disputed: traditional interpretation understands it as 'their secret parts' (a euphemism), while others suggest textual corruption. The multilingual evidence shows this uncertainty: Spanish offers both 'goznes' (hinges) and 'partes-secretas,' French and German mostly transliterate or give 'hinges.' The architectural sense involving the pivot point where something turns is certain; any anatomical application would employ the same metaphorical logic. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-the-hinges, their-foreheads | es: sus-partes-secretas, y-los-goznes | fr: [פתהן], et-le-hinges | de: [פתהן], und-der-hinges 1Kgs 7:50; Isa 3:17

פִּתְאֹם H6597 Conj-w / Adv (25×)

suddenly, unexpectedly — describing events that strike without warning, especially calamity and divine action

Pit'om is an adverb meaning 'suddenly' or 'in an instant,' derived from the noun peta' ('suddenness') with the adverbial ending -om. Its 25 occurrences overwhelmingly describe events that erupt without warning, and the word carries an ominous charge: the majority of its contexts involve catastrophe, invasion, or divine intervention. Jeremiah cries 'suddenly my tents are destroyed' (Jer 4:20), the psalmist's enemies 'suddenly shoot at the upright' (Ps 64:4-7), and Isaiah warns that Babylon's ruin will 'come upon you suddenly, in a day' (Isa 47:11). Yet the word also describes divine speech and action that arrive without human anticipation: YHWH 'said suddenly to Moses, Aaron, and Miriam' (Num 12:4), and Malachi promises 'the Lord whom you seek will suddenly come to his temple' (Mal 3:1). The threefold alliterative phrase peta' pit'om ('in an instant, suddenly,' Isa 29:5; Num 6:9; 35:22) intensifies the element of shock. Spanish 'de repente,' French 'soudain/soudainement,' and German 'ploetzlich' all render the adverb consistently.

suddenly, unexpectedly, in an instant (25×) An adverb expressing abrupt, unforeseeable occurrence, often with overtones of alarm or catastrophe. Most commonly modifies the arrival of calamity: destruction comes pit'om upon Babylon (Isa 47:11; 48:3), Jeremiah's tents are 'suddenly devastated' (Jer 4:20; 6:26; 15:8; 51:8), and the fool's ruin falls without remedy (Prov 6:15; 24:22). Also describes divine speech or action that breaks in without warning — YHWH addressing Moses 'suddenly' (Num 12:4), Joshua's surprise attacks (Josh 10:9; 11:7), and the eschatological coming to the temple (Mal 3:1). Sometimes intensified by the cognate peta' (Num 6:9; 35:22; Isa 29:5). Spanish 'de repente,' French 'soudain,' German 'ploetzlich.' SUDDEN UNEXPECTED

en: suddenly | es: De-repente, de-repente, de-repente, | fr: [בפתאם], soudain, soudainement | de: [בפתאם], ploetzlich, suddenly Num 6:9; Num 12:4; Josh 10:9; Josh 11:7; 2Chr 29:36

פַּת־בָּג H6598 N-msc (7×)

Royal delicacy; choice food from the king's table, a Persian loanword used exclusively in Daniel

A Persian loanword (cf. Sanskrit prati-bhaga, 'a portion') denoting the fine food and delicacies served at the royal table. It appears only in Daniel, where the young captives are offered the king's provisions but choose to abstain. The multilingual evidence is remarkably unified: Spanish 'comida del rey,' English 'delicacy,' and French 'nourriture' all point to a single, clear meaning. The word captures not just the food itself but the political and spiritual implications of accepting a foreign king's bounty.

royal delicacy, choice food (7×) Royal delicacy or choice food portioned from the king's own table. Used exclusively in the book of Daniel (1:5, 8, 13, 15, 16; 11:26) for the provisions offered to the captive Judean youths and later for the food of those who eat at a ruler's table. The Persian origin underscores the Babylonian court setting. Multilingual translations converge tightly: Spanish 'comida del rey,' English 'delicacy,' French 'nourriture' — all confirming a single semantic field of royal provisions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: delicacy-of, from-delicacy-of, his-food | es: con-la-comida-de, de-la-comida-del-rey, la-comida-de | fr: nourriture | de: [בגו], [בפתבג], [מפתבג] Dan 1:5; Dan 1:8; Dan 1:13; Dan 1:15; Dan 1:16

פִּתְגָם H6599 N-msc (2×)

decree, edict, or royal command; a Persian administrative term

A Persian loanword appearing in Esther and Ecclesiastes, this noun denotes an official decree or command, particularly of royal authority. The king's edict goes forth with binding legal force in Esther, while in Ecclesiastes it refers to the sentence or decree concerning an evil deed. Like several other words in these late biblical books, it reflects the influence of Persian administrative vocabulary on post-exilic Hebrew. The term emphasizes the authoritative, unchangeable nature of royal pronouncements.

(2×) Found in Esther 1:20 ('the king's decree') and Ecclesiastes 8:11 ('the decree/sentence concerning evil deeds'), this Persian loanword appears in late biblical Hebrew. The multilingual evidence consistently translates it as 'decree' or 'sentence'—Spanish has 'decreto' and 'sentencia,' reflecting both the royal administrative use and the judicial application. The Old Persian root 'patigâma' meant 'word' or 'command,' and the Hebrew adopted this technical term for binding royal edicts, the kind that could not be revoked even by the king himself in Persian law (cf. Daniel 6). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: decree-of, sentence | es: decreto-de, sentencia | fr: [פתגם], פתגם | de: [פתגם] Esth 1:20; Eccl 8:11

פִּתְגָם H6600 N-msd (6×)

A word, decree, command, or official communication (Aramaic loanword from Persian)

An Aramaic noun of Persian origin (pitgam) meaning a word, decree, or official communication. It covers a range from royal command (Ezra 6:11) to diplomatic correspondence (Ezra 4:17; 5:7) to a formal reply (Ezra 5:11), and even a more general sense of 'matter' or 'affair' (Dan 3:16; 4:17). The word entered Aramaic from Old Persian patigama ('message'), and its bureaucratic flavor suits the imperial contexts of Ezra and Daniel perfectly. It later passed into Rabbinic Hebrew as pitgam, a proverbial saying.

word / message / decree (6×) A word, message, decree, or official communication — an Aramaic loanword from Persian patigama. Used for royal edicts (Ezra 6:11), official letters (Ezra 4:17; 5:7), formal replies (Ezra 5:11), and more loosely for a matter or affair (Dan 3:16; 4:17). Spanish mensaje ('message') and asunto ('matter') capture the dual register, while German Befehl ('command') emphasizes the authoritative dimension. The term consistently appears in imperial administrative contexts, reflecting the Persian bureaucratic environment of the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE to enlarge, make wide or spacious; primarily spatial expansion but can apply to opening the lips in speech

en: the-matter, the-word, word | es: Mensaje, asunto, esta-palabra | fr: décret, sentence | de: Befehl, [פתגם], [פתגמא] Ezra 4:17; Ezra 5:7; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 6:11; Dan 3:16

פָּתָה H6601a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-2ms (3×)

The root conveys making something wider or more spacious. In Genesis 9:27, Noah's blessing asks God to 'make wide' for Japheth—giving him extensive territory. The word appears in wisdom contexts where it may describe opening the lips widely (Proverbs 20:19, 24:28), either literally or as a metaphor for indiscreet speech. The multilingual evidence shows both spatial (German 'weit-mache') and speech-related meanings (Spanish 'engañarás', deceive), reflecting the range from physical expansion to the figurative opening of the mouth.

(3×) The three occurrences span from God's territorial blessing for Japheth (Genesis 9:27) to proverbial warnings about speech (Proverbs). The German 'weit-mache' (make wide) and French 'que-enlarge' preserve the spatial sense, while Spanish translations connect to speech acts ('engañarás'—deceive). The Piel stem suggests intensive or causative action: causing something to become spacious or causing the lips to open wide. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: and-deceive, and-with-one-opening, let-enlarge | es: Engrandezca, y-con-el-que-abre, y-engañarás | fr: et-והפתית, et-ולפתה, que-enlarge | de: [והפתית], [ולפתה], weit-mache Gen 9:27; Prov 20:19; Prov 24:28

פָּתָה H6601b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (25×)

To entice, persuade, deceive; Nifal/Qal passive: be deceived; Qal participle: simple, naive.

A psychologically rich verb that maps the terrain between persuasion and deception. In the Piel, it describes the art of influence — from Delilah's seductive coaxing of Samson (Judg 16:5) to God's own question in the heavenly court: 'Who will entice Ahab?' (1 Kgs 22:20). Whether the persuasion is legitimate or deceitful depends entirely on context, not on the word itself. Jeremiah's agonized cry — 'You deceived me, LORD, and I was deceived' (Jer 20:7) — uses both Piel and Nifal of the same root in a single devastating sentence, collapsing the distance between divine sovereignty and human vulnerability.

1. entice, persuade, allure (Piel) (12×) The Piel active of enticement and persuasion, where the moral valence ranges from seduction to legitimate influence. Exodus 22:16 uses it for seducing an unbetrothed virgin; Judges 14:15 and 16:5 for Delilah's persistent coaxing of Samson. In the heavenly court scene (1 Kgs 22:20-22), a spirit volunteers to 'entice' Ahab — persuasion as divinely sanctioned strategy. Spanish 'sedúcelo' and 'persuadirás' nicely bracket the moral range. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: alluring-her, entice, entice-you | es: Persuadirás, Sedúcelo, la-seduciré | fr: [אפתנו], [יפתה], [תפתה] | de: [אפתנו], [יפתה], [יפתוך] Exod 22:16; Judg 14:15; Judg 16:5; 1Kgs 22:20; 1Kgs 22:21

2. deceive, mislead (Piel) (4×) The Piel with an explicitly negative, deceptive force: to deceive, mislead, delude. Jeremiah 20:7 is the watershed text — 'You deceived me (pittitani), LORD' — where the prophet accuses God of entrapment. Psalm 78:36 describes Israel flattering God 'with their mouths' while their hearts were false. Ezekiel 14:9 warns that if a prophet is deceived, 'I the LORD have deceived that prophet.' Spanish 'me sedujiste' and 'engañé' capture the treacherous quality. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: You-deceived-me, and-they-flattered-him, have-deceived | es: Me-sedujiste, Y-lo-lisonjeaban, engañé | fr: [פתיתני], et-séduire, séduire | de: [פתיתי], [פתיתני], und-sie-flattered-ihn 2Sam 3:25; Ps 78:36; Jer 20:7; Ezek 14:9

3. be enticed, be deceived (Nifal/Qal passive) (4×) The Nifal and Qal passive: to be enticed, to let oneself be deceived. Jeremiah 20:7b completes the verse — 'and I was deceived (va-eppat)' — the passive counterpart to God's active deception. Deuteronomy 11:16 warns 'take heed lest your heart be enticed,' and Job 31:9, 27 confess the danger of a heart 'secretly enticed.' The reflexive nuance suggests culpable gullibility — being open to seduction rather than merely victimized by it. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: and-I-was-deceived, and-was-enticed, be-deceived | es: Y-se-sedujo, se-sedujo, sea-seducido | fr: [ואפת], et-séduire, séduire | de: [ואפת], [ויפת], [נפתה] Deut 11:16; Job 31:9; Job 31:27; Jer 20:7

4. be persuaded, be deceived (Pual) (3×) The Pual passive: to be persuaded or deceived by another's action. Proverbs 25:15 says 'by patience a ruler is persuaded' — here the persuasion is constructive. But Jeremiah 20:10 and Ezekiel 14:9 use the Pual for being fatally misled. The Pual foregrounds the completed state of having been persuaded, rather than the process (Nifal). Three attestations span the moral spectrum from wise diplomacy to divine judgment. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: he-is-deceived, he-will-be-deceived, is-persuaded | es: es-engañado, será-persuadido, será-seducido | fr: [יפתה], séduire | de: [יפתה] Prov 25:15; Jer 20:10; Ezek 14:9

5. simple, naive (Qal participle) (2×) The Qal participle as substantive adjective: simple, naive, gullible. Hosea 7:11 calls Ephraim 'a silly dove, without sense' (yonah potah) — easily lured by every passing power. Job 5:2 warns that 'vexation kills the simple.' This sense reveals the root's psychological core: the patah-person is 'open' — open-minded perhaps, but dangerously so. Spanish 'al simple' and the dove metaphor show a figure who lacks the discernment to resist enticement. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: and-the-simple, silly | es: seducida, y-al-simple | fr: et-séduire, séduire | de: [ופתה], [פותה] Job 5:2; Hos 7:11

פְּתוּאֵל H6602 N-proper-ms (1×)

Pethuel, father of the prophet Joel; name possibly meaning 'God's opening' or 'persuaded of God'

Pethuel is known only as the father of the prophet Joel, mentioned in the opening verse of that book. His name may derive from roots suggesting persuasion or opening, hinting at divine revelation or enablement. The Septuagint renders it as Bathuel, showing some textual fluidity. Like many patronymic references in prophetic books, Pethuel grounds the prophet in a family lineage, lending authority and historical placement to Joel's oracles.

(1×) The proper name of Joel's father (Joel 1:1). While the name appears only once, it establishes the prophet's identity and heritage. The multilingual glosses (Spanish Petuel, German Petuel) preserve the transliteration, as is typical for personal names that anchor historical figures in the biblical record. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: Pethuel | es: Petuel | fr: remplir | de: Petuel Joel 1:1

פִּתּוּחַ H6603 N-msc / 3fs (11×)

Engraving or carved inscription, especially gem engravings on the priestly vestments

Refers to the skilled craft of incising designs or letters into hard materials such as stone and metal. Nearly all occurrences cluster in Exodus 28 and 39, describing the engraved gems of the high priest's breastplate and ephod — each stone bearing a tribal name cut like a signet seal. The Spanish 'grabado' and English 'engraving' both highlight the incised, permanent quality of the work, befitting inscriptions meant to endure before God.

engraving, carved work (11×) The act or product of carving letters or designs into stone, metal, or gems. Concentrated in priestly vestment instructions (Exod 28:11, 21, 36; 39:6, 14), where tribal names are engraved on onyx stones and breastplate gems 'like the engravings of a signet.' Spanish 'grabado/grabados' and English 'engraving/engravings' converge on the idea of permanent incised craftsmanship, distinguishing this from relief carving or molding. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: engraving, engravings, engravings-of | es: grabado, grabados, grabados-de | fr: [פתוח], [פתוחים], engravings-de | de: Gravierungen-von, [פתוח], [פתוחים] Exod 28:11; Exod 28:21; Exod 28:36; Exod 39:6; Exod 39:14

פְּתוֹר H6604 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Pethor, hometown of Balaam the prophet, located in Mesopotamia near the Euphrates River

Pethor was the city in Mesopotamia from which Balak summoned Balaam to curse Israel. Located in Aram-naharaim (the region between the rivers), it lay on the western bank of the upper Euphrates. Ancient Assyrian records mention a city named Pitru in this area, and Egyptian sources refer to Pe-d-ru, likely the same location. The fact that Balak sent messengers such a great distance—several hundred miles—to fetch Balaam testifies to the prophet's renowned reputation.

(2×) This place name appears in the Balaam narrative (Numbers 22:5; Deuteronomy 23:4), identifying the distant city from which the prophet came. All translations preserve the proper name: English 'Pethor,' Spanish 'Petor,' French and German similarly. The geographical note that it was in 'Aram-naharaim' (Mesopotamia) locates it in the northern Euphrates region, confirmed by Assyrian records of 'Pitru.' The distance from Moab to Pethor—possibly 400 miles—underscores how desperately Balak sought Balaam's curse and how far-reaching the prophet's fame had spread. PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Pethor, to-Pethor | es: Petor, de-Petor | fr: de-Pethor, à-Pethor | de: von-Pethor, zu-Pethor Num 22:5; Deut 23:4

פָּתַח H6605a V-Nifal-Imperf-3fs (136×)
open, loose, release — verb of opening doors, gates, containers, bonds; Piel = untie/liberate; Nifal = be opened; includes drawing a sword
This verb (136×) primarily means 'to open' in Qal—doors, gates, windows, sacks, eyes, mouths. Nifal is the passive ('be opened'), Piel intensifies to 'loose, untie' bonds or 'set free' captives, and Hitpael is reflexive ('loose oneself'). A specialized sense is 'draw a sword' from its sheath. Multilingual parallels—Arabic ‘ (open) and ’ (loose), Korean 열다 (open) and 풀다 (loose), Swahili -fungua (open) and -fungua (untie), Spanish abrir (open) and soltar/desatar (loose)—clearly distinguish 'open' from 'loose', confirming two semantic centers. The passive participle פְּתוּחָה means 'standing open'.

1. open (Qal transitive) (67×) Qal transitive 'open' (67×) is the basic sense: opening a physical object—door, gate, window, sack, container, book, mouth. Arabic ‘, Korean 열다, Swahili -fungua, Spanish abrir. Genesis examples: Noah 'opened the window' (8:6), 'the LORD opened her womb' (29:31, 30:22), Joseph 'opened all the storehouses' (41:56), brothers 'opened their sacks' (42:27). Also eyes (2 Kgs 6:17), prison (Acts 5:19), book (Neh 8:5). OPENING AND SHUTTING en: I-shall-open, I-will-open, and-he-opened | es: Y-abrió, abriré, abrió | fr: entrée, et-il-ouvrit, et-ouvrir | de: Eingang, er-oeffnete, oeffnen Gen 8:6; Gen 29:31; Gen 30:22; Gen 41:56; Gen 42:27

2. be opened (Nifal passive) (14×) Nifal passive 'be opened' (14×) is the straightforward passive: doors, gates, heavens, eyes, or ears being opened. Arabic ’, Korean 열리다, Swahili -funguliwa, Spanish ser-abierto/abrirse. Gen 7:11 'the windows of heaven were opened', Neh 7:3 'until the sun is hot, let not the gates be opened', Isa 24:18 'the windows on high are opened', Job 12:14 'whom He shuts up cannot be opened'. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: and-was-opened, are-opened, it-is-opened | es: abierta, abiertas, abierto | fr: et-ouvrir, ouvrir, étaient-ouvrit | de: oeffnen, oeffnete, und-oeffnen Gen 7:11; Neh 7:3; Job 12:14; Job 32:19; Isa 24:18

3. loose / untie (Piel) (14×) Piel 'loose, untie' (14×) is intensive/factitive: loosening bonds, fetters, sackcloth, or a belt—distinct from mere 'opening'. Arabic ’, Korean 풀다, Spanish soltar/desatar, Swahili -fungua (in sense of 'untie'). Gen 24:32: Laban 'loosed the camels', Job 12:18 'He looses the bonds of kings', Job 30:11 'He has loosed my cord', Job 38:31 'or loose the cords of Orion?', Ps 116:16 'You have loosed my bonds'. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: I-will-loose, You-have-loosened, and-loosen | es: Soltar, abre, abrió | fr: comme-un-loosing, entrée, et-ouvrir | de: er-oeffnet, oeffnen, oeffnete Gen 24:32; 1Kgs 20:11; Job 12:18; Job 30:11; Job 38:31

4. open (Qal passive participle: standing open) (13×) Qal passive participle 'open, standing open' (13×) describes a state of openness—adjectival. Arabic ‘, Korean 열린, Swahili wazi, Spanish abierto/a. Num 19:15 'every open vessel', Josh 8:17 'they left the city open', 1 Kgs 8:29, 52 'that Your eyes may be open', 2 Chr 6:20, 40, 7:15. Also Neh 1:6, Isa 45:8, Ezek 46:1. Distinct from active verb by stative adjectival force. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: open, opened, wide-open | es: abierta, abiertas, abierto | fr: ouvrir, ouvrit | de: oeffnen, oeffnete, öffnete Num 19:15; Josh 8:17; 1Kgs 8:29; 1Kgs 8:52; 2Chr 6:20

5. open (Qal mouth/lips/eyes) (13×) Qal 'open mouth/lips/eyes' (13×) is the basic sense applied to body parts—often metaphorical for speech or perception. Arabic ‘, Korean 입을 열다/눈을 뜨다, Swahili -fungua mdomo. Deut 15:8, 11 'you shall open your hand wide', Judg 3:25 'he did not open the doors', Job 31:32 'I opened my doors to the traveler', Ps 38:13 'I do not open my mouth'. Multilingual glosses do not distinguish this from sense 1, but the body-part object warrants separate tracking. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: I-open, You-open, he-opens | es: Abres, Ciertamente-abrir, abre | fr: entrée, opening, ouvrant | de: Eingang, oeffnete, opening Deut 15:8; Deut 15:11; Judg 3:25; Job 31:32; Ps 38:13

6. set free / release (Piel) (6×) Piel 'set free, release' (6×) extends the 'loose' sense to persons: liberating captives or prisoners. Arabic ’, Korean 놓아주다/풀어주다, Spanish liberar/soltar. Ps 102:20 'to release those appointed to death', Ps 105:20 'the king sent and released him', Isa 51:14 'the exile hastens to be loosed', Isa 60:11 'your gates shall be open continually'. Context of captivity or bondage distinguishes this from generic 'loose'. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: I-have-released-you, and-set-him-free, and-will-be-opened | es: Y-estarán-abiertas, para-ser-soltado, para-soltar | fr: et-ouvrir, ouvrir, à-l'entrée | de: oeffnen, und-oeffnet, und-öffnete Ps 102:20; Ps 105:20; Isa 48:8; Isa 51:14; Isa 60:11

7. open wide / break forth (Qal/Nifal intransitive) (4×) Qal/Nifal intransitive 'open wide, break forth' (4×) describes something opening or bursting open intransitively—no external agent. Korean 터지다/열리다, Swahili -funguka. Ps 106:17 'the earth opened and swallowed', Isa 35:5 'the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped', Isa 45:8 'let the earth open', Jer 1:14 'Out of the north disaster shall break forth'. Multilingual evidence shows intransitive force. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: let-open, opened, shall-be-unstopped | es: Se-abrió, se-abrirá, serán-destapados | fr: ouvrir | de: oeffnen, öffnete Ps 106:17; Isa 35:5; Isa 45:8; Jer 1:14

8. loose oneself (Hitpael reflexive) (2×) Hitpael reflexive 'loose oneself' (2×) is the reflexive counterpart of Piel: freeing oneself from bonds. Arabic ‘, Korean 풀라/풀어라. Isa 52:2 'Loose yourself from the chains of your neck, O captive daughter of Zion' (both Ketiv and Qere). Very rare; the gloss apparatus shows textual variant but confirms reflexive sense. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: [ketiv:loose-yourselves], loose-yourself | es: (suéltate), [Qere] | fr: ouvrir | de: oeffnen Isa 52:2

9. draw (a sword) (2×) Qal 'draw (a sword)' (2×) is a specialized sense: unsheathing a sword from its scabbard. Arabic ’, Korean 빼다, Spanish desenvainada/desenvainaron, Swahili -chomoa. Ps 37:14 'The wicked have drawn the sword', Ezek 21:28 'A sword, a sword is drawn'. Multilingual glosses clearly distinguish this from generic 'open' by using specific 'draw' vocabulary. OPENING AND SHUTTING
en: drawn, have-drawn | es: desenvainada, desenvainaron | fr: ouvrir | de: oeffnen, öffnete Ps 37:14; Ezek 21:28

10. (1×) One uncertain occurrence in Isa 5:27 translated 'loosed' or 'loosened'—possibly Nifal 'is loosened' referring to a belt or bond. Korean, Spanish, German glosses suggest passive 'be loosed'. Context: 'nor is the belt of their waist loosened'. This may belong to sense 3 (Piel loose) or sense 2 (Nifal be opened), but textual or contextual uncertainty justifies separate tracking. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: is-loosened | es: se-desatará | fr: ouvrir | de: oeffnen Isa 5:27

פָּתַח H6605b V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (9×)
To engrave or incise designs on stone, metal, or wood, especially for priestly garments and temple furnishings.

A Piel verb distinct from patach I ('to open'), this root refers to the skilled craft of engraving inscriptions and decorative motifs onto hard surfaces. It appears in Exodus for the engraving of tribal names on the high priest's onyx stones and the golden plate's inscription 'Holy to the LORD' (Exod 28:9-11, 36), and in Kings and Chronicles for temple ornamentation (1 Kgs 7:36; 2 Chr 3:7). Zechariah 3:9 uses it metaphorically of God engraving a stone. The Spanish 'grabó' and English 'engrave' consistently capture this specialized artisan sense.

engrave (Piel/Pual) (9×) To engrave or incise decorative or inscriptional designs onto stone, metal, or wood, used exclusively in the Piel and Pual stems for skilled craftsmanship. The cognate accusative pittuchei chotam ('engravings of a seal') in Exodus 28:11, 36 and 39:6 highlights the precision required. Across languages – Spanish 'grabó,' English 'engrave,' German 'gravieren' – translations uniformly point to artisanal incision rather than mere scratching. All nine occurrences cluster in sacral contexts: priestly vestments, temple panels, and the prophetic stone of Zechariah 3:9. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: and-he-engraved, and-to-engrave, and-you-shall-engrave | es: Y-grabó, grabadas, grabando | fr: [ולפתח], [ופתח], [לפתח] | de: [ולפתח], [לפתח], du-soll-gravieren Exod 28:9; Exod 28:11; Exod 28:36; Exod 39:6; 1Kgs 7:36

פְּתַח H6606 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (2×)

to open, be opened; an Aramaic verb describing books or windows being opened

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel's visions describing things being opened. Daniel prays at his windows which were opened toward Jerusalem, maintaining his Jewish practice despite the king's decree. Later, in the throne room vision, books are opened before the Ancient of Days for judgment. The word is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'patach,' and conveys the simple act of opening something that was closed, whether literal windows or metaphorical books of divine record.

(2×) Both instances occur in Daniel's Aramaic sections: the opened windows toward Jerusalem where Daniel prayed (6:10) and the opened books before God's throne (7:10). The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'open' or 'opened'—Spanish has 'abiertas' and 'fueron-abiertos,' French 'ouvrir.' The participles describe states of openness: Daniel's windows stood open as an act of faithful defiance, while the heavenly books were opened to reveal the record of human deeds before the divine Judge. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: open, were-opened | es: abiertas, fueron-abiertos | fr: ouvrir | de: [פתיחו], [פתיחן] Dan 6:10; Dan 7:10

פֶּתַח H6607 Conj-w (164×)

Opening, entrance, doorway; the passage into a tent, house, temple, or city, occasionally the door or gate structure itself.

The standard Hebrew word for an entrance or doorway — the space through which one passes to enter a tent, house, temple, cave, or city. It appears most memorably as 'the entrance of the tent' where Abraham receives his visitors (Gen 18:1) and 'the entrance of the Tent of Meeting' in the Priestly legislation. Spanish entrada-de and French entrée-de consistently mark the spatial-passage sense. A secondary cluster uses it for the door or gate as a physical object — something that can be opened, shut, or smeared with blood (Exod 12:22-23). Gen 4:7's haunting 'sin crouches at the door' exploits this ambiguity between passage and barrier.

1. entrance or opening (148×) The opening, entryway, or doorway of a tent, tabernacle, temple, house, cave, or city — the space or threshold one passes through to enter. This is the dominant usage across 148 occurrences, typically in construct form ('entrance of the tent,' 'entrance of the gate'). Spanish entrada-de, French entrée-de, and German Eingang-von all render this spatial-passage meaning faithfully. Gen 18:1 places Abraham at the entrance of his tent in the heat of the day; Exod 29:4 stations the priests at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: entrance-of | es: entrada-de | fr: entrance-de, entrée-de | de: Eingang-von, am-Eingang, am-Eingang- Gen 18:1; Gen 18:10; Gen 19:11; Gen 43:19; Exod 29:4

2. door or gate (16×) The door or gate as a physical structure — something that can be opened, shut, guarded, or marked. By metonymy, the word shifts from the passageway to the closure itself. In Exod 12:22-23, blood is applied to the doorposts and lintel of 'the door' (the structure, not the opening). Gen 4:7 personifies sin crouching 'at the door,' and Gen 6:16 describes the door Noah sets in the ark. Translations here pivot to 'door' or 'gate' (spa puerta, fra porte), distinguishing this from the entrance-passage sense. Job 31:9 extends it figuratively to a neighbor's door as a site of temptation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-door-of, at-the-door, doors-of | es: a-la-puerta, como-puerta-de, de-puerta-de- | fr: de-porte-de-, entrée, et-porte-de | de: [פתחו], [פתחי], [פתחיה] Gen 4:7; Gen 6:16; Exod 12:22; Exod 12:23; Job 31:9

פֻּתַח H6608 N-msc (1×)

opening, unfolding; the disclosure or revealing of words, bringing enlightenment

This noun denotes the act of opening or unfolding, used metaphorically in Psalm 119 for the revelation of God's word. When Scripture is opened or unfolded, light breaks forth—understanding dawns. It's not merely about reading, but about the moment when meaning becomes luminous. Some ancient versions took it literally as a doorway, but most traditions see it as the dynamic act of disclosure that transforms darkness into insight.

(1×) In Psalm 119:130, the psalmist declares that the opening (or unfolding) of God's words brings light. This sense captures both the physical image of unrolling a scroll and the spiritual reality of illumination. The Spanish "entrada" (entrance) and French "entrée" echo this threshold imagery, while the context emphasizes revelation and understanding that comes when divine speech is made accessible. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-opening-of | es: Entrada-de | fr: entrée | de: der-opening-von Ps 119:130

פְּתִיחָה H6609 N-fp (1×)

drawn swords; metaphorically, sharp and cutting words that wound

This plural form refers to swords that have been drawn from their sheaths, ready for violence. In Psalm 55, the image is strikingly applied to speech: the words of deceitful companions are like drawn swords, cutting and deadly. The metaphor is powerful—language as weaponry, soft lips concealing lethal intent. Other psalms use similar imagery, but here the specificity of "drawn" emphasizes readiness and imminent harm.

(1×) Used figuratively in Psalm 55:21 to describe the smooth yet hostile words of a false friend. The Spanish "espadas desenvainadas" (unsheathed swords) and French "glaive" (sword) capture the violent potential. The psalmist contrasts soft, buttery speech with the razor-sharp malice beneath, making this a vivid example of biblical wisdom about the dangers of deceptive rhetoric. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: are-drawn-swords | es: espadas-desenvainadas | fr: glaive | de: sind-drawn-swords Ps 55:21

פִּתָּחוֹן H6610 N-msc (2×)

opening of the mouth, ability or occasion to speak or sing

A poetic term for the opening of one's mouth in speech or song, this word appears twice in Ezekiel's prophecies. In both cases, God speaks of giving or withholding the opening of mouth to the prophet. After Jerusalem's fall, God would open Ezekiel's mouth so he could speak again. The phrase emphasizes the divine control over prophetic utterance—it is God who opens the prophet's mouth to speak His word, and God who can seal it shut.

(2×) Ezekiel uses this term twice (16:63; 29:21) in contexts of prophetic speech. In 16:63, judgment will silence Jerusalem so she has no 'opening of mouth' to defend herself; in 29:21, God promises to give Ezekiel 'opening of mouth' among the exiles. Spanish translates as 'abertura de' and 'apertura de,' French 'ouverture'—all capturing the sense of an opening or occasion for speech. The phrase evokes the physical act of opening one's mouth but means the opportunity, ability, or authorization to speak, especially with prophetic authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: opening-of, opening-of- | es: abertura-de, apertura-de | fr: ouverture | de: [פתחון] Ezek 16:63; Ezek 29:21

פְּתַחְיָה H6611 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (4×)

Pethahiah (personal name meaning 'Yahweh opens/frees')

A personal name borne by three different individuals in the post-exilic period. One Pethahiah was a priest whose division served in David's liturgical organization (1 Chr 24:16). Another was a Levite involved in the confession and covenant renewal under Ezra (Ezra 10:23; Neh 9:5). A third served as royal commissioner for Judah under Persian administration (Neh 11:24). The name means 'Yahweh opens' or 'Yahweh frees,' reflecting post-exilic piety and hope in divine deliverance.

(4×) The four occurrences reference three different men all named Pethahiah. First Chronicles 24:16 lists the priestly division; Ezra 10:23 and Nehemiah 9:5 likely refer to the same Levite involved in covenant renewal; Nehemiah 11:24 mentions a Judahite serving in Persian administration. The Septuagint transcriptions (Φαθαια, Φεθεια) preserve the name with minor spelling variations typical of transliteration from Hebrew to Greek. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Petachyah, Pethahiah, and-Pethachyah | es: Petaías, Petaḥyah, Y-Petahías | fr: [ופתחיה], [לפתחיה], [פתחיה] | de: [ופתחיה], [לפתחיה], [פתחיה] 1Chr 24:16; Ezra 10:23; Neh 9:5; Neh 11:24

פֶּתִי H6612a Conj-w (18×)

Simple, naive, gullible — an inexperienced person open to influence, for good or ill, in Wisdom literature

Derived from the root patah ('to be open, entice'), this adjective describes a person whose mind is open but undiscerning — easily swayed toward wisdom or folly. In Proverbs, the peti is the primary addressee of instruction: lacking shrewdness (1:4), believing every word (14:15), and loving simplicity rather than knowledge (1:22). Yet the term is not purely negative; Psalm 116:6 declares that the LORD preserves the simple. Multilingual translations capture this range well — Spanish 'sencillo/simple,' French 'simple' — highlighting the tension between innocence and gullibility.

simple, naive person (18×) A naive or inexperienced person who is open to persuasion, whether toward wisdom or folly. Proverbs presents the peti as the young hearer who must choose between Lady Wisdom and Lady Folly (Prov 9:4, 16). The term sits between the wise (chakham) and the fool (kesil), suggesting a redeemable naivete. Psalm 19:7 affirms that God's testimony makes the simple wise, while Psalm 116:6 shows divine care for the guileless. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: O-simple-ones, among-the-simple, and-from-simple | es: Simple, a-los-sencillos, a-los-simples | fr: et-simple, simple, à-simple | de: Einfaeltige, Einfaeltiger, [ומפתי] Ps 19:7; Ps 116:6; Ps 119:130; Prov 1:4; Prov 1:22

פֶּתִי H6612b N-ms (1×)

simplicity, naivety; the state of lacking wisdom and discernment

This abstract noun captures the quality of being simple or naive—not in an innocent sense, but in the problematic condition of lacking wisdom. In Proverbs, the simple are those who haven't yet chosen the path of understanding, who remain open to folly because they haven't developed discernment. The word addresses a state that can be remedied through instruction, but it's also a dangerous vulnerability. Wisdom literature repeatedly urges the simple to wake up and choose understanding.

(1×) Appears in Proverbs 1:22 in Lady Wisdom's rhetorical question: "How long will you simple ones love simplicity?" The Spanish "simpleza" and French "simple" both preserve the sense of intellectual and moral naivety. This is not about intelligence but about a refusal or failure to embrace wisdom, leaving one susceptible to every folly that comes along. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: simplicity | es: simpleza | fr: simple | de: Einfaeltiger Prov 1:22

פְּתִי H6613 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

width, breadth; an Aramaic measurement term

An Aramaic noun denoting the measurement of width or breadth, this term appears in descriptions of monumental architecture. Nebuchadnezzar's golden image and the rebuilt Jerusalem temple both have their width specified with this word. As a technical architectural term, it complements measurements of height and length, providing the full dimensions needed to envision these impressive structures. The word is the Aramaic counterpart to Hebrew 'rochav.'

(2×) Found in Ezra 6:3 (the width of the temple) and Daniel 3:1 (the width of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image), this Aramaic measurement term is consistently rendered as 'width' or 'breadth' across languages: Spanish 'anchura,' French 'largeur,' German preserving the Aramaic in transliteration. The term provides essential architectural specifications: the temple was to be 60 cubits wide, the image 6 cubits. Such precision in sacred and royal construction reflected the importance of divine or royal commands being executed exactly. WIDTH BREADTH

en: its-width | es: su-anchura | fr: [פתיה], largeur | de: [פתיה] Ezra 6:3; Dan 3:1

פְּתִיגִיל H6614 N-ms (1×)

rich robe, elaborate garment; likely a foreign luxury item worn by wealthy women

This rare word, probably borrowed from another language, refers to an expensive and elaborate garment. It appears in Isaiah's catalog of feminine finery that will be stripped away in judgment. The ancient versions struggled with it—the Septuagint offered "purple tunic," the Vulgate "breast-band." The uncertainty reflects the word's foreignness and rarity, but the context makes clear it's a luxury item, a symbol of the vanity and excess that Isaiah condemns.

(1×) Found in Isaiah 3:24 within a prophetic oracle listing items of wealthy adornment that will be replaced by marks of mourning. The Spanish "vestido lujoso" (luxurious dress) captures the sense of opulence. The word represents a whole class of imported finery that marked social status but would prove worthless in the day of reckoning. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: girding-of | es: vestido-lujoso | fr: [פתיגיל] | de: [פתיגיל] Isa 3:24

פְּתָיוּת H6615 N-fs (1×)

simplicity, naivety; alternatively, seductive quality (in a personified sense)

This abstract noun, closely related to the word for "simple one," can mean either the quality of naivety or, in context, a kind of seductive simplicity. In Proverbs 9, it appears in the description of Folly as a seductive woman. Some translators have emended the text, but the received reading suggests Folly embodies a dangerous allure that attracts the simple-minded. The word thus bridges intellectual naivety and moral danger.

(1×) Used in Proverbs 9:13 to characterize Woman Folly, who is described with this term. The Spanish "simpleza" reads it as naivety, but some suggest "seductive" or "enticing" better fits the personification of Folly as an adulteress figure. The multilingual evidence shows translators grappling with whether this is moral simplicity or active deception. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: seductive | es: simpleza | fr: פתיות | de: [פתיות] Prov 9:13

פְּתִיל H6616 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (11×)

A twisted cord or thread — used for binding, fastening priestly garments, measuring, and as a figure for fragile constraint.

From the root p-t-l ('to twist'), this noun denotes a length of twisted fiber. Its most prominent use is in the tabernacle regulations, where a petil tekhelet ('cord of blue') fastens the priestly breastpiece to the ephod (Ex 28:28, 37; 39:21, 31) and is attached to the tassels of every Israelite's garment (Num 15:38). Judah gives his petil — apparently a distinctive personal cord, perhaps one from which his seal hung — as a pledge to Tamar (Gen 38:18, 25). Ezekiel 40:3 describes a measuring line of linen thread (petil pishtim), while Judges 16:9 uses it as a simile for effortless breakability: Samson snaps his bonds 'like a thread of tow.'

1. cord, string (9×) A cord or string — a twisted rope or binding used for fastening, tying, or suspending objects. Nine of eleven occurrences fall here, spanning the priestly blue cord (petil tekhelet) that secures the breastpiece (Ex 28:28, 37; 39:21, 31), Judah's personal cord or seal-string given as surety (Gen 38:18, 25), the measuring line of linen cord in Ezekiel 40:3, and the tow-cord of Judges 16:9. Spanish 'cordón/cordel' and French 'cordon' consistently reflect a functional binding or fastening cord of some thickness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-cord-of-, and-cord-your, and-the-cords | es: con-cordón-de, cordel, cordón-de | fr: avec-cordon-de, cord, cordon-de | de: Faeden, Schnur-von, [ופתיל] Gen 38:18; Gen 38:25; Exod 28:28; Exod 28:37; Exod 39:3

2. thread (fine strand) (2×) A thread — a fine, thin strand or filament, distinguished from the thicker cord by context emphasizing delicacy or slenderness. Numbers 15:38 prescribes a petil tekhelet ('thread of blue') to be placed on the tassel fringe of garments, where the image is of a single visible strand woven into the tsitsit. Judges 16:9 compares Samson's bonds snapping 'like a thread of tow' (petil ne'oret), where the simile depends on the thread's fragility. Spanish 'hilo de' ('thread of') and French 'un fil de' capture the fineness that 'cord' cannot. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-thread-of, thread-of | es: cordón-de, hilo-de | fr: thread-de, un-fil-de | de: ein-thread-von, thread-von Num 15:38; Judg 16:9

פָּתַל H6617 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2ms (5×)

to twist, wrestle; in Niphal/Hithpael, to be tortuous, deal crookedly or shrewdly

A verb meaning to twist, with both physical and moral applications. Rachel's declaration 'I have wrestled' (Gen 30:8) uses the Niphal for intense personal struggle. In wisdom literature, the Niphal participle describes the tortuous or crooked — plans of the devious (Job 5:13) and speech that is twisted and perverse (Prov 8:8). The Hithpael in the psalms expresses God's reciprocal response: 'with the crooked you show yourself shrewd' (Ps 18:26; 2 Sam 22:27), matching crookedness with inscrutable wisdom.

(5×) To twist, wrestle, or deal tortuously. In the Niphal, it denotes wrestling or struggle (Gen 30:8, Rachel's naming of Naphtali) and moral crookedness — the 'twisted' counsel of the devious (Job 5:13) and speech that is 'tortuous and twisted' (Prov 8:8). In the Hithpael, it describes God's reciprocal dealings: with the crooked He shows Himself shrewd (Ps 18:26; 2 Sam 22:27). Spanish 'sagaz' (shrewd) and French 'pervers' capture the moral-intellectual duality — cunning that can be either wicked or divinely wise. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-wrestled, You-show-Yourself-shrewd, the-twisted | es: luché, te-muestras-sagaz, torcido | fr: Je-lutta, Tu-montre-Yourself-shrewd, pervers | de: You-zeige-Yourself-shrewd, [נפתל], [נפתלים] Gen 30:8; 2Sam 22:27; Job 5:13; Ps 18:26; Prov 8:8

פְּתַלְתֹּל H6618 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)

twisted, crooked, perverse; morally and physically contorted

This adjective describes what is twisted or tortuous, used both literally and figuratively. In Deuteronomy 32, it characterizes a generation that is morally crooked and perverse, the opposite of God's straightness. The image is visceral—something bent out of true shape, refusing the straightforward path. It's a favorite term in wisdom literature for moral deviance, capturing not just wrongdoing but a fundamental distortion of what should be upright.

(1×) Appears in Deuteronomy 32:5, where Moses describes Israel as a "crooked and twisted generation." The Spanish "torcida" (twisted) and the repetition across languages emphasize the sense of perversion and moral crookedness. This isn't merely error but a warping of the soul, a refusal to be straight when God himself is described as the Rock whose work is perfect. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: and-twisted | es: y-torcida | fr: et-twisted | de: und-twisted Deut 32:5

פִּתֹם H6619 N-proper-fs (1×)

Pithom, one of the Egyptian store-cities built by Israelite slaves under Pharaoh

Pithom was one of the store-cities that the enslaved Israelites were forced to build for Pharaoh, mentioned alongside Rameses in Exodus. Archaeological and historical work identifies it with Egyptian Per-Atum (House of Atum, a solar deity), likely located at Tel el-Maskhuta in the Wadi Tumilat region of Egypt. The name preserves the memory of brutal labor and oppression, a symbol of Israel's bondage that made the Exodus all the more miraculous.

(1×) Named in Exodus 1:11 as one of the supply centers (storage cities) constructed through forced labor. The Spanish "Pitom" and French "Pithom" maintain the transliteration. The city represents the apparatus of oppression under which Israel groaned before God heard their cry and raised up Moses. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Pithom | es: Pitom | fr: Pithom | de: Pitom Exod 1:11

פֶּתֶן H6620 N-ms (6×)

A cobra or venomous serpent (peten); a poetic symbol of deadly venom and mortal danger

A venomous snake, most likely the Egyptian cobra (Naja haje), appearing exclusively in poetic and prophetic texts as a potent symbol of lethal danger. Moses' Song compares the wine of the wicked to the venom of petanim (Deut 32:33). Job likens hidden sin to cobra poison sucked and swallowed (Job 20:14, 16). The Psalms pair it with other fearsome creatures — the deaf adder that stops its ear (Ps 58:4) and the lion and dragon that the faithful will tread upon (Ps 91:13). Isaiah's messianic vision pictures an infant playing safely over the cobra's hole (Isa 11:8), transforming the symbol of death into a sign of paradise restored.

cobra / venomous serpent (6×) The peten (פֶּתֶן), a venomous serpent identified as the cobra or deadly asp, used exclusively in poetry and prophecy as a symbol of lethal danger. Deut 32:33 speaks of the venom of petanim; Job 20:14, 16 likens hidden sin to cobra poison; Ps 58:4 describes the deaf peten that resists the charmer; Ps 91:13 promises the righteous will tread on it; and Isa 11:8 envisions a child playing at its hole in the messianic age. Spanish víbora/cobra and German Kobra all identify it as a specific venomous species. The Aramaic cognate pitnā confirms the zoological identification across Semitic traditions. SERPENTS AND SNAKES

en: a-cobra, and-the-cobra, cobra | es: cobra, víboras, y-víbora | fr: [פתן], cobras, et-vipère | de: [פתן], [פתנים], cobras Deut 32:33; Job 20:14; Job 20:16; Ps 58:4; Ps 91:13

פֶּתַע H6621 Adv (7×)

Suddenly, in an instant; denotes unexpected, abrupt occurrence

An adverb expressing sudden, unexpected action — something that happens without warning or preparation. Often paired with the near-synonym pitʾom for emphatic force ('very suddenly,' Num 6:9). It appears in legal contexts for accidental harm (Num 35:22), in prophetic oracles for swift divine judgment (Isa 29:5; 30:13; Hab 2:7), and in wisdom literature for the abrupt ruin of the fool (Prov 6:15; 29:1). Spanish 'de repente' and 'subitamente' confirm the consistent meaning across all occurrences.

suddenly, in an instant (7×) Suddenly, in an instant — marking an action or event as abrupt and unforeseen. In Numbers 35:22 it qualifies an accidental thrust ('in suddenness,' i.e., without premeditation). Paired with pitʾom in Numbers 6:9 and Isaiah 29:5 for emphatic force ('very suddenly'). In Proverbs 6:15 and 29:1 it describes the swift, irreversible breaking of the fool. Multilingual glosses are unanimous: Spanish 'de repente / subitamente,' English 'in a moment / in an instant,' all pointing to one clear temporal

adverb. SUDDEN UNEXPECTED
en: in-a-moment, in-an-instant, in-suddenness | es: de-repente, en-repentino, en-un-instante | fr: [לִפְתַע], avec-suddenness, dans-suddenness | de: [לִפְתַע], [פִּתַע], in-suddenness Num 6:9; Num 35:22; Prov 6:15; Prov 29:1; Isa 29:5

פָּתַר H6622 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (9×)

To interpret dreams or visions; used exclusively in the Joseph narrative (Genesis 40-41).

This verb appears only in Genesis 40-41, where Joseph interprets the dreams of Pharaoh's cupbearer, baker, and Pharaoh himself. It is functionally equivalent to the Aramaic peshar ('to dissolve, solve'), suggesting the semantic metaphor of 'unraveling' a dream's hidden meaning. The Spanish 'interpretó' and German 'deutete' both capture the declarative act of making known what a dream signifies. Joseph's repeated insistence that interpretations belong to God (Gen 40:8) gives this word a theological weight beyond mere skill.

to interpret (dreams/visions) (9×) To interpret dreams or visions, declaring their hidden meaning. Cognate with Aramaic peshar ('to dissolve, interpret'), suggesting the image of unraveling something obscure. Every occurrence sits within the Joseph cycle: the cupbearer's and baker's dreams (Gen 40:8, 16, 22) and Pharaoh's dreams (Gen 41:8, 12, 13, 15). Multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform – Spanish 'interpretó/intérprete,' French 'interpréta,' German 'deutete/Deuter' – confirming a single, stable semantic range with no metaphorical extension in the Hebrew Bible. INTERPRET TRANSLATE en: and-an-interpreter, and-he-interpreted-, and-interpreter | es: e-interpretó, e-intérprete, interpretó | fr: et-il-interpréta-, et-interprète, et-un-interprète | de: deutete-er, ein-Deuter, er-gedeutet-hatte Gen 40:8; Gen 40:16; Gen 40:22; Gen 41:8; Gen 41:12

פִּתָּרוֹן H6623 N-mp (5×)

interpretation (of a dream); the disclosed meaning of a visionary experience

Used exclusively in the Joseph narratives of Genesis 40-41, this noun denotes the interpretation or disclosed meaning of a dream. Pharaoh's cupbearer and baker each had a dream with its own pitrōn, and Joseph insisted that interpretations belong to God alone (Gen 40:8). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish interpretación, French interprétation, German Deutung all converge on a single semantic core. The word derives from the root ptr ('open, reveal'), suggesting an unlocking of hidden significance.

(5×) The interpretation or disclosed meaning of a dream. Confined entirely to the Joseph cycle (Gen 40:5, 8, 12, 18; 41:11), the noun appears in both singular and plural forms. Every target language renders it with a direct cognitive-disclosure term (eng 'interpretation,' spa 'interpretación,' deu 'Deutung'), confirming a single tight sense: the authoritative explanation that unlocks a dream's prophetic content. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-interpretation-of, interpretation-its, interpretations | es: interpretaciones, interpretación-suya, según-interpretación-de | fr: interprétation-son, interprétations, selon-interprétation-de | de: die-Deutungen, gemäß-der-Deutung, seine-Deutung Gen 40:5; Gen 40:8; Gen 40:12; Gen 40:18; Gen 41:11

פַּתְרוֹס H6624 N-proper-fs (5×)

Pathros; Upper Egypt, the southern region of the Nile valley

Pathros designates Upper (southern) Egypt, derived from Egyptian p-tě-res meaning 'the southland.' It appears in prophetic literature always in connection with Egypt (mitsrayim), distinguishing the southern Nile region from Lower Egypt and the Delta. Isaiah 11:11 lists it among the lands of Israel's future regathering, while Ezekiel 29:14 calls it the ancestral homeland of Egypt. Jeremiah 44:1, 15 locates the Judean refugees there after the fall of Jerusalem.

(5×) The geographical proper noun for Upper Egypt. All five occurrences appear in prophetic contexts (Isa 11:11; Jer 44:1, 15; Ezek 29:14; 30:14), consistently paired with mitsrayim to specify the southern Nile region. Translations uniformly transliterate the name (eng/spa 'Pathros/Patros,' fra 'Pathros,' deu retained in brackets), reflecting its status as a recognized toponym for the Egyptian heartland south of the Delta. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Pathros, Patros, and-from-Pathros | es: Patros, en-Patros, y-de-Patros | fr: Pathros, [בפתרוס], [ומפתרוס] | de: [בפתרוס], [ומפתרוס], [פתרוס] Isa 11:11; Jer 44:1; Jer 44:15; Ezek 29:14; Ezek 30:14

פַּתְרֻסִים H6625 N-proper-mp (2×)

Pathrusim, a people descended from Mizraim (Egypt), inhabitants of Upper Egypt

Listed in the Table of Nations as descendants of Mizraim, the Pathrusim were inhabitants of Pathros, the Hebrew name for Upper (southern) Egypt. The name derives from the Egyptian 'Pa-to-res,' meaning 'the southern land.' These people represented one of the Egyptian ethnic or regional groups known to the ancient Israelites. Their mention in Genesis and Chronicles connects them to the broader family of Hamitic peoples who settled the African continent.

(2×) This gentillic appears in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:14; 1 Chronicles 1:12), identifying a Mizraimite people group. All translations preserve the proper name: English 'Pathrusim,' Spanish 'Patrusim/Patrusím,' French 'Pathrusim,' German 'die Patrusiter' (using a German gentillic ending). The people were associated with Pathros (Upper Egypt), a region mentioned elsewhere in prophecy as representing southern Egyptian territory. Their inclusion in Noah's genealogy situates them within the biblical understanding of how nations and peoples dispersed after the flood. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Pathrusim | es: Patrusim, Patrusím | fr: Pathrusim, [פתרסים] | de: [פתרסים], die-Patrusiter Gen 10:14; 1Chr 1:12

פָּתֹת H6626 V-Qal-InfAbs (1×)

to break up, crumble (infinitive absolute); breaking bread into pieces

This verb means to break into small pieces or crumble, particularly used of bread. In Leviticus 2:6, it appears in the instructions for the grain offering—the worshiper is to crumble the unleavened wafer into bits. The infinitive absolute intensifies the action: "you shall surely break it into pieces." It's a verb of physical fragmentation, turning a whole into many parts, and in the sacrificial context, it becomes an act of worship and consecration.

(1×) The verbal form instructing how to prepare the grain offering in Leviticus 2:6. The Spanish "Partirás" (you shall break) and the repeated use of "crumble" in English reflect the action of breaking bread or wafers into fragments. Related Semitic languages confirm this sense of crushing or breaking into small pieces, a common culinary and ritual action. BREAKING AND SHATTERING en: crumble | es: Partirás | fr: crumble | de: crumble Lev 2:6

צֵאָה H6627 N-fsc (2×)

human excrement, dung; used literally as fuel or in purity laws

This blunt term for human waste appears in contexts involving ritual purity and prophetic sign-acts. The Torah requires Israelite soldiers to bury their excrement outside the camp to maintain holiness. Ezekiel is commanded to bake bread over burning human dung as a shocking symbol of the defilement Israel would experience in exile (though God mercifully allows him to use cow dung instead). The word's stark realism serves the biblical emphasis on physical purity reflecting spiritual holiness.

(2×) Found in Deuteronomy 23:13 (the purity law requiring burial of excrement) and Ezekiel 4:12 (human dung as fuel in a prophetic sign), this term is rendered literally across languages: English 'excrement,' Spanish 'excremento/desecho,' French 'excrément.' The Deuteronomy passage concerns camp cleanliness and ritual purity, while Ezekiel's use is deliberately shocking—cooking with human waste symbolized the extreme defilement of exile. The Torah's concern even for waste disposal reflects the holiness demanded of God's people: 'the Lord walks in the midst of your camp... therefore your camp must be holy.' DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: excrement-of, your-excrement | es: desecho-de, tu-excremento | fr: excrément, ton-excrement | de: [צאת], dein-excrement Deut 23:13; Ezek 4:12

צְאָלִים H6628 N-mp (2×)

lotus trees, a thorny shrub or tree growing in marshy areas

These plants feature in God's description of Behemoth in Job's climactic nature discourse. The lotus trees provide shade for this mighty creature as it lies in the marsh. While the sacred Egyptian lotus (water lily) is well-known, the Hebrew term likely refers to a thorny variety of Zizyphus or Rhamnus that grew in dense thickets along riverbanks. The lotus trees' protective cover for Behemoth contributes to the portrait of an immense creature at home in wild, untamed places.

(2×) Both occurrences are in Job 40:21-22, describing Behemoth lying under the lotus trees for shade. While English consistently uses 'lotus trees,' Spanish has 'lotos,' and French and German transliterate the Hebrew, suggesting some uncertainty about the exact botanical identification. Ancient versions identified these as thorny shrubs (Arabic dal, Syriac 'ala) rather than the famous water lily. The repeated mention emphasizes the dense vegetation of Behemoth's habitat, contributing to the overwhelming portrait of God's untamable creation. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: the-lotus-trees | es: lotos | fr: צאלים | de: [צאלים] Job 40:21; Job 40:22

צֹאן H6629 Prep-b / N-fsc / 2ms (274×)

Flock, small livestock; collective term for sheep and goats as a group

A collective noun appearing 274 times, tson designates sheep and goats viewed together as a flock, the staple livestock of ancient Israelite pastoral life. It covers literal herds in grazing (Gen 30:31-32), sacrificial animals selected for offering, commercial wealth measured in flocks (Gen 24:35; 26:14), and the powerful metaphor of God's people as his flock (Ps 100:3; Ezek 34). The word never singles out sheep or goats individually but always sees them as a collective unit. German distinguishes Schafe from Ziegen, yet renders tson simply as Schafe, reflecting the term's default association with sheep within the collective.

flock, sheep/goats (small livestock) (274×) A collective noun for small livestock, encompassing both sheep and goats as a unified group. Used of literal pastoral herds (Gen 30:31), animals for sacrifice (Gen 4:4), and wealth in flocks (Gen 24:35). Extended metaphorically to describe Israel as God's flock under his shepherding care (Ps 100:3; Ezek 34). French renders it as both brebis and moutons, reflecting the sheep-dominant reading of the collective. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: flock, flocks, sheep | es: ovejas | fr: brebis, mouton, moutons | de: Schaf, Schafe, von-Schafen Gen 20:14; Gen 21:27; Gen 21:28; Gen 24:35; Gen 26:14

צַעֲנָן H6630 N-proper-fs (1×)

Zaanan, a town mentioned in Micah's judgment oracle, possibly identical with Zenan in Judah

Zaanan is a town named in Micah's wordplay-filled lament over Judah's cities. The prophet uses the similarity between the town's name and the verb "to come out" to make a grim pun: the inhabitants of Zaanan will not come out, trapped in their own judgment. Some scholars identify it with Zenan in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah. The Septuagint's rendering shows textual uncertainty, but the rhetorical force of Micah's oracle is clear regardless.

(1×) Appears in Micah 1:11 within a series of prophetic puns on town names. The French "Tsaanân" preserves the Hebrew form. The town serves as both a real location and a literary device, its name evoking themes of coming forth or failing to do so, fitting Micah's larger vision of judgment sweeping through the land. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zaanan | es: Zaanán | fr: Tsaanân | de: [צאנן] Mic 1:11

צֶאֱצָא H6631 N-mpc / 3fs (11×)

Issue, offspring, produce — descendants of persons or growth from the earth, always plural in form.

Always appearing in the plural, this noun (from the root y-ts-') covers both human progeny and the earth's produce. In its dominant sense it parallels zera' ('seed') and banim ('children'): Isaiah 48:19 pairs it directly — 'your offspring (tse'etsa'e me'ekha) would be like sand' — and Job 5:25 promises that 'your descendants shall be many.' The word carries an organic, almost vegetal overtone even when applied to people, as though children 'sprout forth' from the body. In two passages (Isa 34:1; 42:5), the referent shifts to the earth's produce or growth: 'the world and all its issue,' where Arabic 'nabatatuha' ('its plants/vegetation') confirms a botanical rather than genealogical reading.

1. offspring, descendants (of persons) (9×) Offspring, descendants — the progeny or issue of human beings. Nine occurrences carry this sense, regularly paralleling zera' ('seed/offspring') and banim ('sons/children'). Isaiah 48:19 and 44:3 pair tse'etsa'im with zera' in promises of abundant posterity; Job 21:8 and 27:14 use it of the wicked's children; Isaiah 61:9 and 65:23 envision the descendants of the redeemed. Arabic 'dhurriyya' ('progeny') and Korean '자손' ('descendants') converge across translations, confirming the genealogical sense. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: and-his-offspring, and-my-offspring, and-the-offspring-of | es: los-vástagos, tus-vástagos, y-mis-descendientes | fr: et-leur-descendant-eux, et-mon-descendant-moi, et-rejeton | de: [וצאצאיהם], [וצאצא'], [וצאצאיהם] Job 5:25; Job 21:8; Job 27:14; Job 31:8; Isa 22:24

2. produce, growth (of the earth) (2×) Produce, growth — the yield or vegetation of the earth. Isaiah 34:1 summons 'the world and all its tse'etsa'eha' to hear judgment, and Isaiah 42:5 describes God as the one who gives breath to those on the earth 'and spirit to those who walk on it' alongside its produce. Arabic 'nabatatuha' ('its plants/vegetation') in both passages distinguishes this from the human-offspring sense, pointing to botanical growth — everything that springs forth from the ground. SPROUTING AND GROWING

en: and-its-offspring, its-offspring | es: lo-que-brota-de-ella, y-sus-productos | fr: et-rejeton, rejeton | de: [וצאצאיה], [צאצאיה] Isa 34:1; Isa 42:5

עָב H6632a N-ms (2×)

covered wagon, litter; a transport vehicle with overhead covering

This term describes covered wagons or litters, vehicles with overhead protection like a palanquin. The tribal leaders of Israel brought 'covered wagons' as offerings for transporting the tabernacle. Isaiah's vision of the eschatological gathering mentions bringing exiles on litters among other conveyances. The covering distinguished these from ordinary open carts, providing protection from sun and weather. Such vehicles represented practical luxury in the ancient world, suitable for transporting sacred objects or honored persons.

(2×) Numbers 7:3 describes the 'covered wagons' offered for tabernacle transport, while Isaiah 66:20 envisions exiles brought back 'on litters' in the restoration. The translations show some variation: English offers 'covered' and 'litters,' Spanish 'cubiertas' (covered) and 'literas,' French and German vary. The key feature is overhead covering—whether over a wagon bed or a carrying platform. These vehicles were appropriate for sacred or dignified transport, suited to bearing the holy things of the tabernacle or honored returnees in God's future gathering. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-on-litters, covered | es: cubiertas, y-en-literas | fr: [ובצבים], couvrit | de: [ובצבים], bedeckte Num 7:3; Isa 66:20

עָב H6632b Conj-w (1×)

great lizard, a type of large reptile listed among unclean animals

This term refers to a large lizard species, classified in Leviticus as ritually unclean. The exact identification is debated—possibilities include a monitor lizard, gecko, or other sizable reptile common to the region. The word is part of a detailed list distinguishing clean from unclean animals, reflecting ancient Israel's dietary and purity codes. While the precise species remains uncertain, the category is clear: a land-dwelling reptile outside the bounds of permissible food.

(1×) Listed in Leviticus 11:29 among the unclean swarming creatures. The Spanish "lagarto" (lizard) and the compound "great-lizard" in English suggest a larger reptilian creature. The list is taxonomically complex, but the intent is practical: defining boundaries for ritual purity and diet that set Israel apart from surrounding nations. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-the-great-lizard | es: y-el-lagarto | fr: et-le-grand-lizard | de: und-der-gross-lizard Lev 11:29

צָבָא H6633 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (14×)

To wage war, fight in battle; to serve or minister (especially at the tabernacle); to muster or enlist troops

A Hebrew verb whose semantic range unites the battlefield and the sanctuary under a single root. In its martial sense, tsava' describes armies going out to wage war (Num 31:7; Isa 29:7-8), and the multilingual evidence is emphatic — Spanish guerrear, Hindi yuddh karna, Arabic haraba, and Swahili kupigana all converge on armed conflict. Yet the same root in Exodus 38:8 describes the women who 'served' at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, a usage that Spanish servir and Hindi seva karna render with gentle domesticity. The connection is not accidental: both the soldier and the temple attendant belong to an organized 'host' (tsava') performing disciplined service under authority. A third, rarer Hiphil sense — mustering or enlisting troops, as in 2 Kings 25:19 and Jeremiah 52:25 — completes the picture of marshaling human resources for collective action, whether sacred or military.

1. to wage war, fight (7×) To wage war, fight, or engage in military combat. The Qal stem is used of Israel's army going out to battle against Midian (Num 31:7, 42), of nations besieging Jerusalem (Isa 29:7-8), and of the hosts that fought against Zion (Isa 31:4). Spanish guerrear, French combattre, Hindi ladna, Arabic haraba, and Swahili kupigana all confirm the martial register. The participial form tsov'im functions as a substantive meaning 'warriors' or 'those who wage war,' and Zechariah 14:12 extends the root to describe the plague striking those who 'fought against Jerusalem.' FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: and-they-waged-war, the-ones-warring, to-fight | es: Y-guerrearon, las-que-guerrean, los-guerreros | fr: combattre, et-ils-waged-guerre, le-ones-warring | de: [הצבאים], [לצבא], [צבאן] Num 31:7; Num 31:42; Isa 29:7; Isa 29:8

2. to serve, minister (5×) To serve, perform duty, or minister, especially in a religious or cultic context. The women who served at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting (Exod 38:8; 1 Sam 2:22) and the Levites who enter service at age twenty-five (Num 4:23; 8:24) all employ this verb. Spanish servir, Hindi seva karna, and German dienen reflect the peaceful, devotional nature of this sense. The underlying metaphor of organized 'host' service connects this to the military sense: the Levitical server is a member of God's ordered company, performing disciplined duty under divine command. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: served, the-serving, the-serving-women | es: las-que-servían, para-hacer-ejército, para-servir | fr: le-servant, le-serving-femmes, servit | de: der-dienend, der-dienend-Frauen, diente Exod 38:8; Num 4:23; Num 8:24; 1Sam 2:22

3. to muster, enlist troops (2×) To muster, conscript, or enlist troops — the Hiphil causative form describing the officer who assembles people for military service. In 2 Kings 25:19 and Jeremiah 52:25, among those taken captive is 'the officer who mustered the people of the land,' a specific military administrative role. Spanish alistar ('to enlist'), Hindi bharti karna ('to recruit'), and German mustern all capture the organizational function. This sense is distinct from actually fighting (sense 1) and from serving in the sanctuary (sense 2); it denotes the prior act of gathering and organizing the fighting force. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: the-one-mustering, who-mustered | es: el-que-alistaba | fr: combattre, le-un-mustering | de: [המצבא], der-eins-mustering 2Kgs 25:19; Jer 52:25

צָבָא H6634 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (10×)

To will, desire, or be pleased; used of divine and royal volition in Aramaic portions of Daniel.

An Aramaic verb appearing exclusively in the book of Daniel, expressing deliberate willing, desiring, or choosing. When used of God (Dan 4:17, 25, 32), it conveys sovereign authority over all earthly kingdoms—'He does according to His will.' When used of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 5:19), it describes the absolute power of a king who could elevate or destroy at pleasure. The Spanish renderings quiere and quería and the German Willen all converge on this same core idea of purposeful volition, whether divine or human.

to will, to desire (Aramaic) (10×) To will, desire, or be pleased —expressing deliberate volition or sovereign purpose. In Daniel's Aramaic, this verb appears for both God's uncontestable will ('He does according to His will among the host of heaven,' Dan 4:35) and royal prerogative ('whomever he wished he killed, and whomever he wished he kept alive,' Dan 5:19). The cognate Syriac confirms the basic sense of inclination or desire. Daniel himself uses the first-person form when recounting his own desire to understand a vision (Dan 7:19). DESIRE AND WILLING en: He-wills, I-desired, and-as-He-wills | es: deseé, quería, quiere | fr: et-vouloir, vouloir | de: Heer, Willen, und-Willen Dan 4:17; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32; Dan 4:35; Dan 5:19

H6635 N-cp (1×)

hosts, armies; often in the divine title "LORD of Hosts" (YHWH Tsevaot)

The plural form typically means armies or hosts, and is most famous in the divine title "LORD of Hosts," which pictures God as the commander of heavenly and earthly armies. This occurrence retains that theological weight, emphasizing God's sovereign power. The term can refer to angelic hosts, Israel's armies, or even the stars—all under divine command. It's a militaristic image, but one that assures believers of God's overwhelming might in defense of his people.

(1×) In 2 Kings 19:31, the phrase "zeal of the LORD of Hosts" (Tsevaot) anchors the promise of deliverance from Assyria. The Spanish "de ejércitos" (of armies) and the Arabic "الْجُنُودِ" (the armies) confirm the military imagery. This title declares God's unmatched authority and capacity to act decisively in history, a comfort to the beleaguered and a warning to enemies. LORD OF HOSTS

en: (Tsevaot) | es: (de-ejércitos) | fr: (Tsevaot) 2Kgs 19:31

צָבָא H6635a N-cpc / 2mp (200×)

Army, host, or organized force; also hard service, compulsory duty, or warfare as an activity.

At its core, this word denotes an assembled and organized body of people mobilized for a purpose – most often a military one. It appears frequently in the formulaic phrase 'LORD of hosts' (Yhwh tseva'ot), where it encompasses heavenly armies, angelic beings, and even the stars. Beyond the military host, the word extends to the burdensome reality of compulsory service and forced labor, as when Job laments that human life on earth is like a tsava' (Job 7:1). Isaiah uses the same metaphor when he declares that Jerusalem's 'warfare' is ended (Isa 40:2). The semantic stretch from 'army' to 'hard service' reflects an ancient world where conscription was life's defining burden.

1. human army, military force (158×) Split from sense 129370. Criteria: Organized military bodies of nations or kings; numbered troops in census material (Num 1-2); armies mustered for battle

en: the-army | es: el-ejército | fr: armée, le-armée | de: das-Heer, der-Heer Num 1:3; Num 1:20; Num 1:22; Num 1:24; Num 1:26

2. heavenly host (angelic/celestial) (34×) Split from sense 129370. Criteria: Angelic forces or celestial bodies under God's command; occurs in the divine title 'LORD of hosts' (Yhwh tseva'ot)

en: army-of, host-of, of-the-height | es: ejército-de, el-ejército | fr: armée, armée-de, host-de | de: Heer, Heer-von, das-Heer Gen 2:1; Deut 4:19; Deut 17:3; Josh 5:14; Josh 5:15

3. hard service, compulsory duty (5×) Hard or compulsory service, forced labor, an appointed term of duty. Found in passages like Job 14:14 ('all the days of my hard service I will wait') and Isa 40:2 ('her warfare is ended'). The Levitical service periods in Numbers 4:23 and 8:24-25 also carry this nuance of assigned, bounded duty. Spanish 'servicio' and German 'Dienst' (service, duty) capture this non-combat sense, distinguishing it from the purely military reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-service-of, her-warfare, service | es: de-servicio-de, ejército, mi-servicio | fr: armée, de-service-de, mon-armée-moi | de: Dienst, Heer, von-Dienst-von Num 4:23; Num 8:24; Num 8:25; Job 14:14; Isa 40:2

4. warfare, war, military campaign (3×) Warfare as an activity or military campaign. Rather than the assembled force itself, this sense points to the act of making war. Joshua 22:12 and 22:33 use it for the prospect of going to war, and Job 7:1 frames earthly existence as a campaign. Spanish 'guerra' and German 'Krieg' (war) appear in translations, shifting from the personnel to the event of conflict. WAR AND BATTLE

en: to-the-war, warfare | es: a-la-guerra, servicio-militar | fr: armée, à-le-guerre | de: Heer, zu-der-Krieg Josh 22:12; Josh 22:33; Job 7:1

צָבָא H6635b N-cp (286×)

Hosts, armies (of YHWH) — the celestial or military forces invoked in the divine title 'LORD of Hosts'

Tseva'ot is the plural of tsava ('army, host') and overwhelmingly appears in the divine epithet YHWH Tseva'ot — 'the LORD of Hosts.' Of its 286 occurrences, the vast majority belong to this title, which dominates the prophetic books (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi). The 'hosts' have been understood variously as Israel's armies, angelic beings, or the cosmic forces of heaven. German 'Heerscharen' ('host-multitudes') and French 'armées' preserve the military imagery, while the Spanish and English transliterations 'Tsevaot/Tsebaot' acknowledge that no single word captures the title's theological weight.

hosts, armies (of YHWH) (286×) The plural noun meaning 'hosts' or 'armies,' used almost exclusively in the divine epithet YHWH Tseva'ot ('LORD of Hosts'). The title first appears in the context of the Shiloh sanctuary (1 Sam 1:3) and becomes the dominant prophetic name for God — especially in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the post-exilic prophets. Whether the 'hosts' denote Israel's armies, heavenly angels (Ps 103:21; 148:2), or the stars themselves, the epithet asserts YHWH's sovereign command over all forces visible and invisible. LORD OF HOSTS

en: Tsevaot, hosts, of-hosts | es: Tsebaot, Tsevaot, Tseva'ot | fr: armées, de-armées, des-armées | de: Heerscharen, der-Heerscharen, von-Heerscharen 1Sam 17:45; 2Sam 5:10; 2Sam 6:2; 2Sam 6:18; 2Sam 7:8

צְבֹיִים H6636 N-proper-fs (8×)

Zeboiim — one of the five cities of the plain destroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah; also a valley name in Benjamin.

Zeboiim (also spelled Zeboim) is a place name primarily identifying one of the five cities of the Jordan plain that shared the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah. It appears in the Table of Nations as marking the border of Canaanite territory (Gen 10:19), in the war narrative of Genesis 14 where its king Shemeber joined the coalition (Gen 14:2, 8), and in Moses' warning that the land could become like Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboiim (Deut 29:23). Its most poignant appearance is Hosea 11:8, where God's anguished reluctance to destroy Ephraim is expressed through the question, 'How can I make you like Admah? How can I treat you like Zeboiim?' A separate location called the Valley of Zeboim appears in 1 Samuel 13:18 and Nehemiah 11:34.

Zeboiim (place name) (8×) A proper noun identifying one of the five cities of the plain allied with Sodom, Gomorrah, and Admah. In the Table of Nations it marks the extent of Canaanite territory (Gen 10:19). Its king participated in the battle of the Valley of Siddim (Gen 14:2, 8). Deuteronomy 29:23 uses its destruction as a covenant warning. Most memorably, Hosea 11:8 pairs it with Admah in God's agonized self-deliberation about punishing Israel—'How can I treat you like Zeboiim?'—turning the destroyed city into a symbol of divine compassion overcoming judgment. The name may derive from tsevi ('gazelle') or relate to tseva'im ('hyenas'). German renders it 'Zebojim,' while English and French use 'Zeboiim,' and the LXX has Seboeim. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zeboiim, [Zeboiim], and-Zeboiim | es: Zeboim, [ketiv], como-Zeboim | fr: Zeboiim, [Zeboiim], beauté | de: [כצבאים], und-Zeboiim, und-Zebojim Gen 10:19; Gen 14:2; Gen 14:8

צֹבֵבָה H6637 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zobebah (or Tsobebah), a name in the genealogies of Judah

Zobebah appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles. The name is otherwise unknown, and the Septuagint variants show some textual uncertainty. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, it serves to map out clan relationships and preserve tribal memory, even when we have no further narrative about the individual. These lists, though dense, ground Israel's history in real families and real places.

(1×) Mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:8 as part of Judah's lineage. The Hebrew preserves the definite article ("the Zobebah"), possibly indicating a clan or family designation. The Septuagint's variations suggest scribal uncertainty, but the name contributes to the Chronicler's comprehensive account of tribal structure and identity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Tsovevah | es: Hatsobeba | fr: [הצבבה] | de: [הצבבה] 1Chr 4:8

צָבָה H6638 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (2×)

to swell up; specifically of a woman's belly swelling as a curse for adultery

This verb describes the physical swelling of the adulteress's belly in the ordeal of bitter water described in Numbers 5. When a wife suspected of unfaithfulness drinks the cursed water, if she is guilty her belly will swell and her thigh will waste away. The verb appears in both the declaration of the curse and its fulfillment. This graphic sign would publicly demonstrate her guilt and divine judgment, serving as a deterrent to marital infidelity in Israel.

(2×) Both instances occur in the ordeal ritual of Numbers 5 (verses 22 and 27), describing the belly's swelling as evidence of guilt. The translations consistently use 'swell': Spanish 'hinchar/hinchará,' though French and German borrow the English 'swell' suggesting difficulty finding a precise equivalent. The physical symptom functions as divine testimony—when the woman is guilty, 'her belly shall swell and her thigh shall fall away.' This dramatic bodily sign would vindicate either the husband's suspicion or the wife's innocence before the community. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-shall-swell, to-swell | es: para-hinchar, y-se-hinchará | fr: et-devra-swell, à-swell | de: und-soll-swell, zu-swell Num 5:22; Num 5:27

צָבֶה H6639 Adj-fs (1×)

swollen, swelling (adjective); describing bodily distension as a curse

This adjective describes a swollen or distended condition, used in the ritual of jealousy in Numbers. If a woman accused of adultery is guilty, the curse will cause her body to swell—a graphic and specific physical sign of divine judgment. The word captures the visible manifestation of guilt, a bodily symptom that cannot be hidden. It's part of an ancient ordeal ritual, where the body itself testifies to truth or falsehood.

(1×) Appears in Numbers 5:21 describing the physical consequence of the curse: the woman's body will become swollen. The Spanish "hinchado" (swollen) and French "enflure" (swelling) confirm the medical imagery. This is not metaphorical—it's a literal, observable condition that would publicly confirm guilt in a society without modern forensic tools. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: swelling | es: hinchado | fr: enflure | de: Schwellung Num 5:21

צְבִי H6640 N-fs (1×)
thing, matter, purpose; any object or concern (Aramaic loanword)
This Aramaic term, appearing in Daniel, means a thing, matter, or purpose—essentially anything that occupies the mind or requires action. In Daniel 6, it refers to the king's mental state: no entertainment or diversion could be brought to him as he worried about Daniel in the lions' den. The word's breadth is its strength: it can mean food, music, or any concern at all. Related forms in Palmyrene and Syriac confirm its broad semantic range.

(1×) Used in Daniel 6:17 (English 6:18) to say that no diversions or entertainments were brought before the sleepless king. The Spanish "propósito" (purpose) and French "nourriture" (food, nourishment) show translational disagreement, reflecting the word's semantic flexibility. The context suggests anything that might occupy or comfort the king—food, music, company—all refused in his anxiety. PURPOSE RESOLVE INTENT
en: purpose | es: propósito | fr: nourriture | de: [צבו] Dan 6:17

צָבוּעַ H6641 Adj-ms (1×)
speckled, variegated; having diverse colors or patterns
This adjective describes something marked with varied colors or spots—speckled or variegated. In Jeremiah 12:9, it appears in a cryptic verse about a "speckled bird of prey" that becomes a target for other birds. The image may suggest something unusual or conspicuous, standing out in a way that attracts hostility. Commentators debate the exact metaphor, but the word clearly denotes visual distinctiveness, pattern and color that mark something as different.

(1×) Jeremiah 12:9 uses it to describe a bird of prey that, because of its unusual coloration, is attacked by other birds. The Spanish "manchada" (spotted) emphasizes the irregular patterning. The prophetic image seems to picture Israel or Judah as conspicuous and thus vulnerable, their distinctiveness making them a target rather than protecting them. SPOTTED SPECKLED en: speckled | es: manchada | fr: [צבוע] | de: [צבוע] Jer 12:9

צָבַט H6642 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)
to reach out, hand over; to extend something to another person
This verb means to reach out or extend something to someone, particularly with the hand. In Ruth 2:14, Boaz hands (or reaches out) roasted grain to Ruth, a gesture of provision and acceptance. The root may be related to grasping or holding, and cognates in Arabic suggest firm handling. It's a verb of social interaction, the physical act of giving that embodies kindness and inclusion.

(1×) Describes Boaz's action in Ruth 2:14 when he offers Ruth roasted grain. The Spanish "le pasó" (he passed to her) and the English "he handed" capture the transference. This simple act is laden with narrative significance: Boaz is acknowledging Ruth, providing for her, and beginning the process of redemption that will culminate in marriage. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-he-handed | es: y-le-pasó | fr: et-il-handed | de: [ויצבט] Ruth 2:14

צְבִי H6643a Art / N-ms (18×)
Beauty, splendor, glory; also the gazelle as emblem of grace; used as an epithet for the Promised Land.
Tsevi is one of those Hebrew words where a concrete image and an abstract quality illuminate each other. The gazelle — swift, elegant, the very picture of grace in the Near Eastern landscape — lends its name to the concept of beauty itself. When David laments over Saul and Jonathan, calling them 'the beauty of Israel' (2 Sam 1:19), the word resonates with both the animal's grace and the nation's lost splendor. The multilingual evidence shows how languages negotiate this range: German consistently selects Zierde ('ornament, distinction'), French oscillates between beaute and ornement, while Spanish moves from hermosura ('beauty') to gloria ('glory') depending on whether aesthetic or honorific weight dominates. In Daniel's visions, tsevi becomes a proper epithet — 'the Beautiful Land' — a crystallized sense that draws on all the word's accumulated associations of splendor and divine favor.

1. beauty, splendor (9×) Abstract beauty, splendor, or comeliness — the largest cluster at nine occurrences, used in construct chains to describe the aesthetic glory of persons, places, or things. Isaiah's 'fading flower of its glorious beauty' (Isa 28:1, 4) describes Samaria's chaplet; the 'crown of beauty' in Isaiah 28:5 belongs to Yahweh himself. German Zierde ('distinction, adornment') and French beaute both consistently render this abstract-aesthetic sense. The word appears almost exclusively in prophetic and poetic literature, where physical beauty serves as metaphor for divine favor or its withdrawal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-beauty-of, beauty, beauty-of- | es: Y-hermosura-de, de-la-gloria-de, gloria | fr: beauté, et-beauté, ornement | de: Zierde, und-Zierde, zu-Zierde Isa 4:2; Isa 23:9; Isa 28:1; Isa 28:4; Isa 28:5

2. ornament, adornment (4×) Ornament or adornment — four occurrences where tsevi shifts from abstract quality to something closer to a concrete embellishment or prized possession. Babylon is 'the beauty of kingdoms' (Isa 13:19); the land of Israel is a 'heritage of beauty' among the nations (Jer 3:19; Ezek 20:6, 15). French ornement and Spanish ornamento both select decorative-object vocabulary here, marking a subtle but real shift from sheer aesthetic quality to the idea of something precious that adorns or crowns its possessor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beauty-of, glory, of-the-beauty | es: gloria-de, hermosura-de, ornamento | fr: beauté, ornement | de: Zierde Isa 13:19; Jer 3:19; Ezek 20:6; Ezek 20:15

3. glory, honor (3×) Glory, honor, or dignified renown — three occurrences (Isa 24:16; Ezek 25:9, 26:20) where the emphasis falls on exalted status and prestige rather than visual beauty. When Isaiah hears 'Glory to the Righteous One' (Isa 24:16), tsevi carries the weight of public honor, not mere attractiveness. Spanish gloria and the LXX's doxa both confirm the shift toward reputation and majesty. Ezekiel's use for the 'glory' of Moab's frontier cities likewise foregrounds civic pride over aesthetics. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: glory, glory-of- | es: gloria, gloria-de | fr: beauté, ornement | de: Zierde Isa 24:16; Ezek 25:9; Ezek 26:20

4. gazelle (animal) (1×) The gazelle — the concrete zoological sense, appearing once in the problematic crux of 2 Samuel 1:19. David's lament 'the gazelle, O Israel, is slain on your high places' exploits the double meaning: Saul and Jonathan are both the 'beauty' and the 'gazelle' of Israel — graceful, swift, and now fallen. Spanish gacela, French gazelle, and German Gazelle all recognize the animal sense here. This is likely the etymological source from which the abstract meanings developed, the gazelle being the Near East's quintessential emblem of elegance. DEER AND GAZELLE
en: the-gazelle | es: La-gacela | fr: le-gazelle | de: der-gazelle 2Sam 1:19

5. the Beautiful Land (epithet) (1×) The Beautiful Land — a crystallized titular epithet for the Land of Israel in Daniel 8:9, where the 'small horn' grows toward 'the Beautiful [Land].' This is not mere adjectival description but a fixed designation, almost a proper noun, for the Promised Land in apocalyptic discourse. Spanish la hermosa and German Zierde both treat it as a title. The sense draws on all the word's accumulated resonance — beauty, ornament, glory — compressed into a single geographic-theological reference. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-beautiful-land | es: la-hermosa | fr: beauté | de: Zierde Dan 8:9

צְבִי H6643b Conj-w / N-ms (14×)
Gazelle; the swift, graceful antelope used as a figure of beauty, agility, and permitted food.
Designates the gazelle (Gazella), one of the most evocative animals in the Hebrew Bible. Deuteronomy lists it among clean animals permitted for food alongside the deer (Deut 12:15, 22; 14:5; 15:22), and it appears on Solomon's daily provision list (1 Kgs 4:23). Beyond the table, the gazelle becomes a literary image of extraordinary swiftness — Asahel is 'as fleet-footed as a wild gazelle' (2 Sam 2:18), and warriors are 'swift as gazelles on the mountains' (1 Chr 12:8). In the Song of Songs, the gazelle embodies romantic beauty and grace (Song 2:9, 17; 8:14) and solemnly adjures the daughters of Jerusalem (Song 2:7; 3:5). Arabic cognate ظبي (ẓaby) confirms the identification.

gazelle (animal) (14×) The gazelle (צְבִי as animal noun), a swift, graceful antelope native to the Levant. Cross-linguistic glosses align perfectly — Spanish 'gacela,' French 'gazelle,' German 'Gazelle' — confirming the zoological referent. The word operates across three semantic registers: dietary law, where it is clean game (Deut 12:15; 14:5); military simile, where it figures extraordinary speed (2 Sam 2:18; 1 Chr 12:8); and erotic poetry, where it symbolizes beauty and desire (Song 2:9, 17; 8:14). Isaiah 13:14 adds a fourth use: the hunted gazelle as an image of panicked fugitives. DEER AND GAZELLE

en: a-gazelle, and-gazelle, and-gazelles | es: a-gacela, a-una-gacela, como-gacela | fr: [וכצבא׳ים], [כצב׳], comme-gazelle | de: [וכצבא׳ים], [כצב׳], der-gazelle Deut 12:15; Deut 12:22; Deut 14:5; Deut 15:22; 2Sam 2:18

צִבְיָא H6644 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zibya (or Tsibya), a personal name in the tribe of Benjamin

Zibya is listed among the Benjaminites in Chronicles' genealogies. The name might derive from a root related to gazelles or beauty, but its etymology is uncertain. As with many genealogical names, we know nothing of the individual beyond this mention. The Septuagint's varied spellings reflect the challenges of transliterating Hebrew names, but the name is preserved as part of Benjamin's tribal record.

(1×) Mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:9 within Benjamin's genealogy. The lack of multilingual variation (most preserve the Hebrew form) indicates standard treatment of a proper name. Chronicles' genealogies serve to anchor tribal identity and continuity, especially important for communities rebuilding after exile. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsivya | es: Tsibia | fr: [צביא] | de: [צביא] 1Chr 8:9

צִבְיָה H6645 N-proper-fs (2×)

Zibiah, mother of King Jehoash of Judah, from Beersheba

Zibiah was a woman from Beersheba who became the mother of Jehoash (also called Joash), the boy-king rescued from Athaliah's massacre of the royal family. Her name, meaning 'gazelle,' follows a pattern of feminine names drawn from graceful animals. Both Kings and Chronicles record her name when introducing her son's reign, following the common biblical practice of identifying a king's mother. Though we know little else about her, Zibiah's son would restore temple worship and repair God's house.

(2×) This woman's name appears in 2 Kings 12:1 and 2 Chronicles 24:1, identifying her as Jehoash's mother from Beersheba. The name is preserved across languages: English 'Zibiah/Tsivyah,' Spanish 'Sibia,' French and German using similar forms. The name's meaning 'gazelle' connects to the similar word for that animal (compare H6646), reflecting the ancient practice of naming daughters after beautiful or graceful creatures. Her identification shows the biblical interest in royal mothers, who played significant roles in succession and palace politics. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsivyah, Tzivyah | es: Sibia | fr: Tsivyah, [צביה] | de: Tsivyah, [צביה] 2Kgs 12:1; 2Chr 24:1

צִבְיָה H6646 N-fs (2×)

female gazelle, doe; used in love poetry for feminine beauty

The graceful female gazelle appears in the Song of Songs as a simile for the beloved's breasts, which are 'like two fawns, twins of a gazelle.' This metaphor celebrates beauty, symmetry, and graceful delicacy. Gazelles were prized in ancient Near Eastern love poetry for their elegance and alertness, their large eyes and gentle movements. The comparison evokes tenderness and admiration, employing nature imagery to express human beauty and desire in the Song's characteristic style.

(2×) Both occurrences are in the Song of Songs (4:5; 7:3), where the lover declares his beloved's breasts are 'like twins of a gazelle.' All translations preserve the animal: English 'gazelle,' Spanish 'gacela,' French and German similarly. The image draws on the gazelle's associations with grace, beauty, and paired symmetry—twins feeding together. Ancient Near Eastern love poetry commonly employed gazelle imagery for beloveds, appreciating the animal's delicate form and gentle nature. The repetition of this exact phrase in the Song underscores its conventional power as an expression of admiration. DEER AND GAZELLE

en: gazelle | es: gacela | fr: d'une-gazelle,, d'une-gazelle. | de: Gazelle Song 4:5; Song 7:3

צָבַע H6647 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (5×)

to be wet, drenched (with dew); to soak or drench someone

An Aramaic verb occurring exclusively in Daniel 4-5, describing Nebuchadnezzar's body being drenched with the dew of heaven during his period of madness among the beasts. The Pael active form means 'to wet, drench someone,' while the Hithpaal passive means 'to be wetted.' The recurring phrase 'wet with the dew of heaven' powerfully conveys the king's total exposure to the elements as divine judgment. Spanish mojado, French tremper, and German benetzen all reflect this soaking imagery.

(5×) To be drenched or wetted, specifically with dew. All five occurrences cluster in the Nebuchadnezzar madness narrative (Dan 4:15, 23, 25, 33; 5:21), always collocated with 'dew of heaven' (tal shemayya). The multilingual glosses converge on liquid-contact vocabulary (spa 'mojado,' fra 'tremper,' deu 'benetzen'), uniformly depicting involuntary soaking as a sign of the king's degradation to beast-like existence under open sky. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15037 WITH 3 SENSES

en: let-him-be-wet, was-wet, will-be-wet | es: fue-mojado, sea-mojado, te-mojarán | fr: tremper | de: benetzen Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:21

צֶבַע H6648 N-mp (3×)

dyed stuff, dyed garments; colored fabric, especially as valuable plunder or finery

This term refers to fabric that has been dyed—a mark of value and luxury in the ancient world. All three occurrences appear in Judges 5:30, Deborah's victory song imagining Sisera's mother expecting her son to return with plunder. The repetition of 'dyed stuff' emphasizes the anticipated wealth: garments colored with precious dyes. Cross-linguistically, the translations consistently render this as dyed or colored cloth (Spanish 'tela teñida', French 'vêtement teint', German 'gefärbtes Gewand'), underscoring that dyeing transformed ordinary fabric into treasured goods.

(3×) The Song of Deborah vividly portrays anticipated spoils: 'dyed stuff, embroidered work' as prizes of war. All three instances cluster in Judges 5:30, building dramatic irony—the expected treasure that will never arrive. The uniform cross-linguistic rendering ('dyed garments/cloth') confirms this refers to fabric treated with valuable dyes, a sign of wealth and status in ancient Near Eastern culture. RED AND SCARLET

en: -a-dyed-garment, -dyed-garments | es: tela-teñida, telas-teñidas | fr: -dyed-vêtements, -un-vêtement-teint | de: -ein-gefaerbt-Gewand, -gefaerbt-Gewaender Judg 5:30

צִבְעוֹן H6649 N-proper-fs (8×)

Zibeon — a Horite/Hivite clan chief in the genealogies of Esau and Seir, possibly meaning 'hyena.'

Zibeon is a Horite clan chief who appears exclusively in the genealogies of Esau and the indigenous inhabitants of Seir (Gen 36; 1 Chr 1:38, 40). He is identified both as a Horite son of Seir (Gen 36:20, 29) and as the father of Oholibamah, one of Esau's wives (Gen 36:2, 14). His son Anah is remembered for discovering hot springs in the wilderness while pasturing donkeys (Gen 36:24)—a detail that gives texture to these otherwise spare genealogical lists. BDB connects the name to the word for 'hyena,' a fitting animal name for a clan of the rugged Seir highlands. The name appears consistently across translations: 'Zibeon' in English and German, 'Tsivon/Tsibon' in Spanish.

Zibeon (personal name) (8×) A proper noun identifying a Horite clan chief of the Seir highlands, appearing in Esau's genealogies and the roster of Seir's descendants. Listed as a son of Seir the Horite (Gen 36:20, 29; 1 Chr 1:38) and also as the grandfather of Esau's wife Oholibamah through his daughter/granddaughter Anah (Gen 36:2, 14). His son Anah's discovery of hot springs (Gen 36:24) is the one narrative detail associated with his clan. BDB derives the name from the word for 'hyena' (tsavo'a), a common pattern of animal-derived clan names among pre-Israelite populations. The LXX renders it Sebegon. English and German consistently use 'Zibeon,' while Spanish preserves a closer transliteration as 'Tsivon.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsiv'on, Zibeon, and-Tsiv'on | es: Tsibon, Tsivon, de-Tsivon | fr: Zibeon, [וצבעון], [צבעון] | de: Zibeon, Zibeons, [וצבעון] Gen 36:2; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:20; Gen 36:24

צְבֹעִים H6650 N-proper-fs (2×)

Zeboim, a place in Benjamin; possibly 'Valley of Hyenas' based on the name's likely meaning

Zeboim appears as both a location in Benjamin's territory and possibly as a descriptive name meaning 'hyenas.' The Valley of Zeboim is mentioned during Saul's conflict with the Philistines as one of the directions their raiding parties took. Later, Nehemiah lists Zeboim among the towns resettled after the exile. The name likely derives from the Hebrew word for hyenas, suggesting this valley or region was known as a habitat for these scavengers, perhaps the rugged Wadi el-Kelt between Jerusalem and Jericho.

(2×) The name appears in 1 Samuel 13:18 ('the Valley of Zeboim') and Nehemiah 11:34 (the town 'Zeboim'). English translations preserve 'Zeboim/Tsevoim,' while Spanish sometimes translates the meaning: 'las hienas' (the hyenas). French and German generally transliterate. The proposed identification with Wadi el-Kelt fits the geographical context—a wild ravine where hyenas would naturally den. The name reflects the ancient practice of naming places after notable local wildlife, preserving ecological information about the region's fauna. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsevoim, the-Tsevoim | es: Zeboim, las-hienas | fr: [צבעים], le-Tsevoim | de: [צבעים], der-Tsevoim 1Sam 13:18; Neh 11:34

צָבַר H6651 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (7×)

To heap up, accumulate, store in great quantity

A verb meaning to pile up or accumulate something in abundance. Its most memorable use is Joseph heaping up grain 'like the sand of the sea' during Egypt's seven years of plenty (Gen 41:35, 49). It also describes the Israelites heaping dead frogs after the plague (Exod 8:14), Tyre heaping silver like dust (Zech 9:3), and the futility of the wicked who heap up riches they will never enjoy (Job 27:16; Ps 39:6). The cognate Arabic dabara ('collect, bind together') confirms the core gathering-and-piling semantics.

heap up, store up (7×) To heap up, pile, or store in great quantity — emphasizing the sheer volume of what is accumulated. Joseph stored grain beyond measure during the plentiful years (Gen 41:35, 49). The Israelites heaped up dead frogs in stinking piles (Exod 8:14). Habakkuk 1:10 speaks of heaping up dust against a fortified city. In wisdom contexts, the verb carries an ironic edge: the wicked heap silver like dust (Job 27:16; Zech 9:3) or store up wealth that others will spend (Ps 39:6). Spanish 'acumular / amontonar' and English 'heap up / store' confirm the single, consistent sense. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-he-heaps-up, and-heaped-up, and-let-store- | es: Y-acumuló, Y-amontonaron, amontona | fr: et-amasser, et-ils-rassembla, et-que-magasin- | de: [ויצבר], [וחצבר], [יצבר] Gen 41:35; Gen 41:49; Exod 8:14; Job 27:16; Ps 39:6

צְבוּר H6652 N-mp (1×)

heaps, piles; specifically, piles of severed heads in 2 Kings

This plural noun means heaps or piles, used for accumulated objects. In the gruesome narrative of 2 Kings 10, it refers to two piles of severed heads—the sons of Ahab, murdered as part of Jehu's purge. The word is stark and literal, emphasizing the horror of the scene. Heaps can be neutral (grain heaps, for instance), but here the context makes it a monument to violent political upheaval and dynastic annihilation.

(1×) In 2 Kings 10:8, the messengers report that the heads of the king's sons have been brought and placed in two heaps at the city gate. The Spanish "montones" (heaps) and the straightforward "heaps" in English underscore the brutal display. This is public spectacle as political message: the old regime is utterly destroyed. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: heaps | es: montones | fr: heaps | de: heaps 2Kgs 10:8

צִבָּתִים H6653 Art / N-mp (1×)

bundles, sheaves; bound stalks of grain left for gleaning

This plural term refers to bundles or sheaves of grain, particularly those bound together in the field. In Ruth 2, Boaz instructs his workers to deliberately pull out stalks from these bundles and leave them for Ruth to glean. The word thus becomes part of the story's themes of provision and kindness—what seems like accident is actually generous intent. The bundles represent harvest abundance and the social structures that allow the vulnerable to survive.

(1×) Ruth 2:16 describes the instruction to let Ruth glean from the bundles or even pull out grain for her. The Spanish "manojos" (handfuls, small bundles) and French "gerbes" (sheaves) confirm the agricultural setting. These are not loose stalks but gathered, bound sheaves, and Boaz's command to release some for Ruth is a subtle but significant act of generosity beyond the law's minimum. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: the-bundles | es: los-manojos | fr: le-gerbes | de: [הצבתים] Ruth 2:16

צַד H6654 Prep-b / N-msc / 3fs (33×)

Side, flank; used of body parts, structural faces, and prepositionally for 'beside' or 'at the side of'

A noun denoting the lateral part of a person, animal, or object. In Ezekiel's dramatic sign-act, the prophet lies on his side (tsad) for hundreds of days (Ezek 4:4-9), and the word appears in the vivid wrestling scene of 2 Samuel 2:16 where combatants seize each other's sides. It also functions prepositionally to mean 'beside' or 'next to,' as when the book of the law is placed beside the ark (Deut 31:26). The multilingual evidence confirms the concrete-to-relational trajectory: Spanish uses 'al lado de' (at the side of) for the prepositional sense and 'costado' (flank) for the bodily sense, mirroring the Hebrew semantic range.

1. beside, at the side of (11×) Functions as a spatial relator meaning 'beside, next to, at the side of,' governing location relative to another object or person. This prepositional use appears when the Torah scroll is placed beside the ark of the covenant (Deut 31:26) and when Ruth sits beside the reapers (Ruth 2:14). French and German translations consistently use relational phrases like 'de le côté de' and 'auf Seite von,' confirming the shift from concrete noun to spatial preposition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-its-side, at-side-of, beside | es: a-su-lado, al-lado-de, de-lado-de | fr: [צד], de-le-côté-de, sur-côté-de | de: [מצד], [צד], auf-Seite-von Deut 31:26; Josh 3:16; Josh 12:9; Ruth 2:14; 1Sam 6:8

2. side of structure or place (10×) Denotes the lateral face, edge, or flank of a building, altar, vessel, or geographical feature. The ark has a door in its side (Gen 6:16), and the lampstand has branches extending from its sides (Exod 25:32). Often plural when referring to the two opposing faces of a structure. Spanish 'de sus lados' and French 'côtés de' capture this architectural sense well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-its-side, from-its-sides, in-its-side | es: de-su-lado, de-sus-lados, en-su-lado | fr: côtés-de, dans-son-côté, de-son-côté | de: Seiten-von, an-ihre-Seite, sein-Seiten Gen 6:16; Exod 25:32; Exod 26:13

3. side/flank of body (9×) The physical side or flank of a human or animal body, including the rib area. Ezekiel is commanded to lie on his side as a prophetic sign (Ezek 4:4, 6), and Psalm 91:7 promises protection even when a thousand fall at one's side. The cattle in Ezekiel 34:21 push with flank and shoulder. Spanish distinguishes this with 'costado' (bodily flank) versus the more abstract 'lado.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-your-side, from-side-of-you, in-side-of | es: a-tu-lado, al-lado, con-costado | fr: côté, dans-côté-de, de-côté | de: [בצד], [מצדך], [צדך] 1Sam 20:20; 2Sam 2:16; Ps 91:7; Ezek 4:4; Ezek 4:6

4. sides as source of affliction (3×) Used in the vivid idiom where hostile peoples become 'thorns in your sides' (Num 33:55; Josh 23:13; Judg 2:3), expressing persistent, painful affliction. The imagery combines the vulnerable bodily sense with aggressive penetration, creating a figure for ongoing harassment by unconquered enemies. Some scholars connect this usage to Assyrian saddu (snare, trap), suggesting an additional layer of entrapment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-thorns, in-sides-of-you, in-your-sides | es: en-vuestros-costados, por-lados | fr: comme-thorns, dans-côtés-de-tu, dans-ton-sides | de: in-Seiten-von-du, in-dein-Seiten, wie-Dornen Num 33:55; Josh 23:13; Judg 2:3

צַד H6655 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)

side; used with prepositions to mean 'against' or 'concerning' in Aramaic

An Aramaic prepositional noun meaning 'side,' this word appears in Daniel with different prepositions to create compound meanings. With the preposition 'from,' it means 'from the side of' or 'concerning' the kingdom. With 'to,' it means 'against' (literally 'to the side of' someone). The usage parallels Hebrew 'tsad' and shows how basic spatial terms develop abstract meanings through prepositional combinations in Semitic languages.

(2×) Found in Daniel 6:4 ('from the side of the kingdom,' meaning 'concerning the kingdom') and 7:25 ('against,' literally 'to the side of'), this Aramaic term combines with prepositions to create various meanings. Spanish renders these as 'del-lado-de' (from the side of) and 'contra' (against), showing the spatial root. The word illustrates how Aramaic, like Hebrew, uses concrete spatial language metaphorically: being 'at someone's side' can mean opposing them, while something 'from the side of' a matter means concerning or related to that matter. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, from-side-of | es: contra-, del-lado-de | fr: côté | de: [לצד], [מצד] Dan 6:4; Dan 7:25

צְדָא H6656 Art / N-ms (1×)

is it true? (interrogative); questioning the veracity of a report

This interrogative phrase in Aramaic asks whether something is true or real. In Daniel 3:14, Nebuchadnezzar uses it to question the three Hebrew youths: "Is it true that you do not serve my gods?" The phrase expresses doubt or demands confirmation, carrying an edge of threat. Textual variants suggest scribal uncertainty about the exact form, but the interrogative force is clear—the king wants an answer that will determine the men's fate.

(1×) Daniel 3:14 opens with this question, the king seeking to verify the report that Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego have refused to worship the golden image. The Spanish "¿es verdad?" (is it true?) captures the interrogative tone. The phrase sets up the confrontation between royal power and religious fidelity, with life-or-death stakes. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES en: is-it-true | es: ¿es-verdad | fr: volonté | de: [הצדא] Dan 3:14

צְדָד H6657 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Zedad, a northern border town of the Promised Land, location uncertain

Zedad marked a point on the northern boundary of Israel's promised inheritance. Both in the original boundary description given through Moses and in Ezekiel's vision of the restored land, Zedad defines part of the ideal northern extent of Israel's territory. The exact location remains uncertain, though some scholars propose Khirbet Serada, northeast of Abel and east of Merj Ayun, in the general vicinity of Mount Hermon. The name is preserved in boundary descriptions but the site itself remains unidentified with certainty.

(2×) This border town appears in Numbers 34:8 and Ezekiel 47:15, marking the northern boundary of Israel's land. Translations preserve the proper name: English 'Zedad,' Spanish 'Zedad,' French and German similarly with some using the directional '-ward' suffix. The repetition in both Moses's and Ezekiel's boundary descriptions suggests Zedad was a recognized geographical marker, though its exact location has been lost. The biblical concern to define precise borders reflects God's promise of a specific land to Israel, with identifiable boundaries from north to south. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsedadah, Zedad-ward | es: Zedad, a-Tsedad | fr: Tsedad, Zedad-ward | de: Zedad-ward, [צדדה] Num 34:8; Ezek 47:15

צָדָה H6658a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

to lie in wait, hunt; to pursue someone with hostile intent to trap or kill them

This verb describes lying in ambush or hunting someone with predatory intent. In Exodus, it refers to someone who does not 'lie in wait' but accidentally causes death—contrasting premeditated murder with unintentional manslaughter. David uses the same verb when declaring to Saul that he is not 'hunting' David's life, despite the king's relentless pursuit. The word captures the predatory, calculating nature of lying in ambush to harm another person.

(2×) Exodus 21:13 uses the verb in establishing the law of asylum for those who kill without having 'lain in wait,' while 1 Samuel 24:11 has David protesting that Saul is 'hunting' his life. English renders these as 'lay in wait' and 'hunting,' Spanish as 'acechó' (lay in wait) and 'acechando' (hunting). The verb evokes predatory behavior—like a hunter tracking prey or an assassin waiting in ambush. The Exodus context distinguishes intentional from accidental killing based on whether someone 'lay in wait,' making this verb central to determining guilt in capital cases. AMBUSH LURK

en: hunting, lay-in-wait | es: acechando, acechó | fr: hunting, poser-dans-attendre | de: hunting, lag-in-wait Exod 21:13; 1Sam 24:11

צָדָה H6658b V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be laid waste, devastated; rendered desolate (Niphal passive)

This verb in its passive form means to be laid waste or devastated, describing the destruction of cities. In Zephaniah 3:6, God declares that he has cut off nations and their cities are devastated—empty ruins without inhabitants. The root conveys complete destruction, the undoing of urban life and security. It's prophetic language for judgment, where thriving cities become ghost towns, monuments to divine wrath against injustice.

(1×) Zephaniah 3:6 uses it to describe the fate of cities under divine judgment: they are laid waste, their streets empty. The Spanish "fueron destruidas" (were destroyed) and the intensive "devastated" in English emphasize totality. The verb pictures not just damage but desolation—life and habitation removed, leaving only rubble and silence. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: are-devastated | es: fueron-destruidas | fr: commander | de: [נצדו] Zeph 3:6

צָדוֹק H6659 Conj-w (53×)

Zadok ('righteous'), a personal name borne chiefly by David and Solomon's high priest and several later figures.

A Hebrew proper name meaning 'righteous' or 'just,' from the root ts-d-q. The most prominent Zadok is the priest who served faithfully under David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 15:24-29) and anointed Solomon as king (1 Kgs 1:39). His descendants, the 'sons of Zadok,' became the legitimate priestly line in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40:46; 44:15; 48:11). The name also belongs to Uzziah's father-in-law (2 Kgs 15:33), two Nehemiah-era wall-builders (Neh 3:4, 29), and several figures in the Chronicler's genealogies. Its consistent transliteration across languages (Greek Sadok, Spanish Sadoc) reflects its status as a fixed proper noun.

Zadok (personal name) (53×) The personal name Zadok (tsadoq, 'righteous'), designating primarily the high priest who served under David and Solomon and founded the dominant priestly dynasty. Ezekiel's vision reserves the inner sanctuary for the 'sons of Zadok' who remained faithful (Ezek 44:15). The name also appears for a Chronicler-era priest (1 Chr 5:38), Uzziah's father-in-law (2 Kgs 15:33), and Nehemiah's wall-builders (Neh 3:4, 29). Cross-linguistic renderings (Greek Sadok, Spanish Sadoc, German Zadok) are simple transliterations confirming its proper-noun status. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsadok, Tsadoq, Zadok | es: Sadoc, Tsadok, Tsadoq | fr: Tsadok | de: Tsadok, Zadok 2Sam 8:17; 2Sam 15:24; 2Sam 15:25; 2Sam 15:27; 2Sam 15:29

צְדִיָּה H6660 Prep-b / N-fs (2×)

lying in wait, hostile intent; malicious premeditation to harm another person

This noun, derived from the verb for 'lying in wait,' denotes hostile, premeditated intent to harm someone. In the Numbers passage about cities of refuge, it distinguishes murder from manslaughter: did the killer act 'with hostile intent' or not? The presence or absence of this malicious premeditation determined whether someone could flee to safety or deserved death. The term emphasizes the heart attitude behind an action—the difference between passionate accident and cold calculation.

(2×) Numbers 35:20 and 22 contrast killing 'with hostile intent' versus 'without hostile intent,' using this noun to describe the malicious premeditation that makes killing murder rather than manslaughter. English uses 'intent,' Spanish 'acecho' (ambush/hostile intent), French and German similar terms for 'intent' or 'lying in wait.' The legal distinction is crucial: those who killed 'with hostile intent' faced execution, while those without such intent could find refuge. The term probes motive and premeditation, recognizing that the same external action (causing death) carries vastly different moral weight depending on the heart behind it. CONSPIRACY

en: intent, with-intent | es: acecho, con-acecho | fr: avec-intent, intent | de: intent, mit-intent Num 35:20; Num 35:22

צְדִים H6661 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ziddim (or Tsiddim), a fortified city in the territory of Naphtali

Ziddim is listed among the fortified cities in Naphtali's allotment in Joshua. The name might relate to a root meaning "side" or "fortification," but the exact etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint's rendering shows textual variation. As with many city names in the conquest lists, we have little information beyond its inclusion in tribal boundaries, but such lists were crucial for establishing territorial claims and preserving geographic memory.

(1×) Named in Joshua 19:35 as one of Naphtali's fortified towns. The Hebrew includes the definite article ("the Ziddim"), possibly indicating it was well-known at the time. The multilingual glosses preserve the transliteration, standard for place names. The list situates Naphtali's inheritance in the northern reaches of Canaan. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Tsiddim | es: Sidim | fr: le-Tsiddim | de: der-Tsiddim Josh 19:35

צַדִּיק H6662 Prep-l / Adj-ms (206×)

Just, righteous; of persons who act uprightly, of God's moral perfection, of nations, or of being in the right forensically.

One of the Old Testament's foundational moral terms, tsaddiq describes conformity to a standard of right—whether ethical, covenantal, or legal. Noah is the first person called tsaddiq (Gen 6:9), and Abraham's intercession for Sodom turns on the distinction between the tsaddiq and the wicked (Gen 18:23–25). When predicated of God, the word takes on deeper resonance: YHWH is righteous in all his ways (Ps 145:17), faithful in judgment (Ps 119:137), and just even when his people suffer (Lam 1:18). Korean honorific forms like '의로우시다' and German 'der Gerechte' both reserve a special register for this divine usage, hinting at how universally translators sense the elevated force of the term applied to God.

1. righteous person (substantive) (195×) Righteous person (substantive): The overwhelmingly dominant use—tsaddiq as a noun or substantivized adjective describing a morally upright individual or group. From Noah walking blamelessly (Gen 6:9) to the Psalmist's confidence that the righteous will flourish like a palm tree (Ps 92:12), this sense pervades Wisdom literature and narrative alike. Spanish 'justo,' French 'juste,' and German 'Gerechte/Gerechter' all treat this as a near-technical term for the person who lives in conformity with God's standards. The plural tsaddiqim in Exodus 23:8 warns that bribes blind the eyes of the righteous—showing the word's forensic overtones even in its ethical core. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: are-righteous, righteous, the-Righteous | es: al-justo, el-justo, justo | fr: juste | de: Gerechte, Gerechter, den-Gerechten Gen 6:9; Gen 7:1; Gen 18:23; Gen 18:25; Deut 32:4

2. righteous (divine attribute) (8×) Righteous as divine attribute: When tsaddiq is predicated of God or used as a divine title, it shifts from describing human virtue to proclaiming YHWH's essential moral perfection. Pharaoh's confession 'YHWH is the righteous one' (Exod 9:27) and the Psalmist's declaration 'righteous are you, O LORD' (Ps 119:137) use the same lexeme but in a distinctly theological register. Korean translations employ honorific verb endings ('의로우시다/의로우시도다') that are never used for human subjects, and English capitalizes 'the Righteous One'—both languages sensing the need to mark this as qualitatively different from human righteousness. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: Righteous, righteous, the-righteous | es: Justo, el-justo | fr: juste, le-juste | de: Gerechte, Gerechter, der-Gerechte Exod 9:27; Deut 25:1; Ps 92:12; Ps 119:137; Ps 145:17

3. righteous (of nation or community) (2×) Righteous nation or community: Applied attributively to a collective entity—a nation or city characterized by justice. Isaiah 26:2 invites the 'righteous nation' that keeps faith to enter the gates, and Genesis 20:4 has Abimelech appealing to God as one who would not slay a 'righteous nation.' Arabic uses the feminine form ʾ(bārratan) and Swahili 'lenye haki' (having justice), both reflecting collective agreement. The rarity of this use (2 occurrences) underscores how tsaddiq typically characterizes individuals rather than groups. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: nation, righteous | es: justa | fr: juste | de: Gerechter, ein-gerechtes Gen 20:4; Isa 26:2

4. right, correct, in the right (1×) In the right, forensically correct: A judicial sense where tsaddiq means not 'morally virtuous' but 'having a just cause' or 'being correct.' Isaiah 41:26 asks who declared this from the beginning, 'that we might say: he is right.' Hindi 'सही' (sahī, correct/accurate) and Swahili 'Sahihi' (precise, accurate) both choose words from the domain of factual correctness rather than moral character—revealing that translators across language families perceive this forensic nuance as distinct from general righteousness. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: righteous | es: justo | fr: juste | de: Gerechter Isa 41:26

צָדַק H6663 V-Piel-Inf / 2mse (41×)

To be righteous or in the right; to declare righteous, justify, acquit, or vindicate; the central verb of biblical justice and righteousness.

Tsadaq is the verbal engine behind the entire biblical vocabulary of righteousness and justice. In its Qal stem, it describes the state of being in the right — Tamar is 'more righteous than' Judah (Gen 38:26), and Job agonizes over whether any mortal can 'be righteous before God' (Job 9:2). The Hifil and Piel stems shift to declaration: judges 'acquit' the righteous (Deut 25:1), and woe to those who 'declare the wicked righteous' for a bribe (Isa 5:23). Paul's entire argument in Romans and Galatians about justification by faith draws on the Septuagint's rendering of this word as dikaioo. The multilingual evidence is illuminating: Arabic yatazakkaa preserves reflexive purification, Korean 의롭다 captures the stative quality, while Spanish justificar and German rechtfertigen both follow the forensic-declarative path of the Hifil.

1. be righteous, be in the right (22×) The Qal stative sense: to be righteous, be in the right, have a just cause. This is the root meaning — a person's moral or legal standing as correct before God or human judgment. Tamar 'is more righteous than I' (Gen 38:26); 'how can a mortal be righteous before God?' (Job 4:17; 9:2). In Ezekiel 16:52 even Sodom is said to be 'more righteous' by comparison. Arabic sadaqa ('to speak truth, be sincere') preserves the root's connection to truthfulness and uprightness, while Korean 의롭다 and Hindi dharmii both select stative-quality adjectives rather than action verbs. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE
en: I-am-righteous, You-are-justified, am-righteous | es: Y-si-soy-justo„ eres-justo, fuera-justo, | fr: et-justifier, justifier | de: [אצדק], [וצדקתי], [יצדק] Gen 38:26; Job 4:17; Job 9:2; Job 9:15; Job 9:20

2. declare righteous, acquit (Hifil) (11×) The Hifil declarative-forensic sense: to declare righteous, justify, acquit, or vindicate in a legal proceeding. This is the courtroom sense — a judge pronouncing the verdict 'righteous.' Exodus 23:7 warns against acquitting the guilty; Deuteronomy 25:1 prescribes that judges 'shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked.' Solomon prays that God will 'justify the righteous' at the temple (1 Kgs 8:32). Spanish justificar, French justifier, and German rechtfertigen all follow this forensic-declarative framework, reflecting the enormous influence this sense had on Western legal and theological vocabulary. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE
en: I-declare-righteous, I-will-justify, and-I-would-do-him-justice | es: El-que-justifica, Los-que-justifican, declararé-justos | fr: Je—justify, [ולהצדיק], et-ils-declare-juste | de: [אצדיק], [ולהצדיק], [יצדיק] Exod 23:7; Deut 25:1; 2Sam 15:4; 1Kgs 8:32; 2Chr 6:23

3. justify, declare righteous (Piel) (5×) The Piel intensive-declarative sense: to justify, vindicate, or pronounce righteous with emphatic or iterative force. Job 32:2 criticizes Job for 'justifying himself' rather than God; Jeremiah 3:11 declares that faithless Israel has 'justified herself' more than treacherous Judah; Ezekiel 16:51-52 accuses Jerusalem of making her sisters 'appear righteous' by comparison. The Piel intensifies the declaration — it is not merely a verdict but an emphatic vindication or self-justification. German sich rechtfertigen and Spanish justificarse both capture this reflexive-intensive dimension. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE
en: and-you-justified, has-justified, he-justified | es: Se-ha-justificado, al-justificar-tú, justificarse | fr: et-justifier, justice, justifier | de: Gerechtigkeit, [בצדקתך], [ותצדקי] Job 32:2; Job 33:32; Jer 3:11; Ezek 16:51; Ezek 16:52

4. (1×) The Hifil participial sense at Daniel 12:3: 'those who turn many to righteousness' — using the causative stem to mean leading or guiding others into a state of righteousness. This goes beyond forensic declaration into active moral transformation of others. Spanish los que hacen justos ('those who make righteous') and English 'those turning to righteousness' both capture this causative-educational nuance. A distinctive eschatological use linking wisdom teachers with the shining of stars. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL
en: and-those-turning-to-righteousness | es: y-los-que-hacen-justos | fr: et-justifier | de: [ומצדיקי] Dan 12:3

5. (1×) The Hitpael reflexive at Genesis 44:16: 'how shall we justify ourselves?' — Judah's anguished rhetorical question before Joseph when the cup is found in Benjamin's sack. The reflexive stem means to clear oneself, to mount a self-defense. Spanish justificarnos and German uns rechtfertigen both mark the reflexive, while the context makes clear this is not claiming innocence but despairing of any possible self-exoneration. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL
en: shall-we-justify-ourselves | es: nos-justificaremos? | fr: –nous-justify-nous-mêmes | de: uns-rechtfertigen Gen 44:16

6. (1×) The Niphal passive at Daniel 8:14: 'the sanctuary shall be vindicated/restored to its rightful state.' This single occurrence uses the passive to describe the sanctuary being set right or cleansed after desecration. Spanish será justificado and the multilingual pattern of passive forms confirm a passive-vindication reading, though the exact nuance — cleansed, vindicated, or restored — has been debated since antiquity. The sense is corporate and cultic rather than individual and forensic. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL
en: and-shall-be-vindicated | es: y-será-justificado | fr: et-justifier | de: [ונצדק] Dan 8:14

צֶדֶק H6664 Prep-m / N-msc / 3ms (119×)

Righteousness, justice, rightness; the moral standard of what is upright, fair, and correct before God and in society.

One of the Hebrew Bible's foundational ethical terms, tsedheq names the standard by which weights are honest (Lev 19:36), judges rule fairly (Deut 1:16), and God acts faithfully (Ps 4:2; Isa 45:19). German Gerechtigkeit and French justice both capture the broad moral-legal scope. The word governs concrete commercial fairness ('just weights and measures,' Lev 19:36; Deut 25:15) as readily as it describes the character of the messianic king who will reign in righteousness (Isa 32:1). In a few passages it functions predicatively as an adjective – 'a just judgment' (Deut 16:18), 'a just and full weight' (Deut 25:15) – where Spanish justa and German gerecht confirm the adjectival shift.

1. righteousness (ethical/moral quality) (87×) Split from sense 129554. Criteria: Abstract moral attribute: God's righteousness (Ps 4:2), righteous character of persons, uprightness before God en: in-righteousness, is-righteousness, righteous | es: Justicia, justicia, y-justicia | fr: justice | de: Gerechtigkeit, Gerechtigkeit-, in-Gerechtigkeit Deut 33:19; Job 31:6; Job 36:3; Ps 4:5; Ps 15:2

2. justice (judicial fairness, legal standards) (29×) Split from sense 129554. Criteria: Concrete legal/forensic use: fair judgment (Deut 1:16; Prov 31:9), honest commercial standards (Lev 19:36, 'just balances'), administration of justice
en: in-righteousness, justice, righteousness | es: con-justicia, justicia, la-justicia? | fr: dans-justice, justice | de: Gerechtigkeit, in-Gerechtigkeit, mit-Gerechtigkeit Lev 19:15; Lev 19:36

3. just, righteous (predicative) (3×) A predicative-adjectival use where tsedheq qualifies a noun as 'just' or 'righteous' – 'a just judgment' (Deut 16:18), 'a full and just weight' (Deut 25:15). Spanish y justa, German gerecht, and Hindi seedha (straight, upright) all shift to adjectival forms, confirming that in these few passages the word functions as a modifier describing the quality of the thing rather than naming the abstract virtue itself. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE
en: and-just, righteous | es: justicia, y-justa | fr: et-juste, juste | de: gerecht, und-gerade Deut 16:18; Deut 25:15

צְדָקָה H6665 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

righteousness, right-doing (Aramaic); moral uprightness and justice

This Aramaic term corresponds to Hebrew tzedaqah, meaning righteousness or right action. In Daniel 4, it appears in the prophet's counsel to Nebuchadnezzar: break off your sins by practicing righteousness, show mercy to the oppressed. It's both legal and ethical—doing what is right in God's eyes, particularly in how one treats the vulnerable. The word bridges personal morality and social justice, insisting that right relationship with God must show itself in right treatment of others.

(1×) Daniel 4:27 (English 4:27) uses it in Daniel's advice to the king: "atone for your sins by righteousness." The Spanish "con justicia" (with justice) and French "pureté" (purity) reflect the moral dimension. This is not merely ritual purity but active justice and mercy, the tangible evidence of a changed heart and reformed rule. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE en: by-righteousness | es: con-justicia | fr: pureté | de: [בצדקה] Dan 4:27

צְדָקָה H6666 Conj-w / N-fsc (159×)

Righteousness, justice; right conduct before God and society; concrete righteous acts or deeds of vindication

One of the Hebrew Bible's towering moral concepts, tsedaqah denotes conformity to a standard of right — whether God's own character, the covenant relationship, or the demands of justice in society. When Abram believed God's promise, it was 'counted to him as tsedaqah' (Gen 15:6), establishing the word's theological weight for millennia. Kings are measured by whether they execute 'justice and tsedaqah' (2 Sam 8:15; Jer 22:3), and prophets thunder against those who turn it to wormwood (Amos 5:7; 6:12). In the plural, tsidqot shifts from abstract quality to concrete acts — the 'righteous deeds of the LORD' recounted at tribal gatherings (Judg 5:11; 1 Sam 12:7) or the 'filthy rags' of human efforts (Isa 64:6). Arabic birr and German Gerechtigkeit both capture the moral weight, though no single translation conveys the full range from legal verdict to covenant faithfulness.

1. righteousness, moral uprightness (145×) The abstract moral quality of righteousness — conformity to God's standard of right, covenant faithfulness, and ethical uprightness — covering 145 of 159 occurrences. This encompasses both divine and human righteousness: God's saving righteousness (Ps 24:5; Isa 45:8; 46:13), the righteousness credited to Abram's faith (Gen 15:6), royal justice executed alongside mishpat (2 Sam 8:15; Isa 9:7), and personal moral conduct (Deut 6:25; Ezek 18:19-22). Arabic birr, Spanish justicia, and Korean uiro converge on this core ethical-relational meaning. The word functions as both a relational term (right standing before God) and a behavioral one (right action in society). RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: righteousness | es: Justicia, derecho, justicia | fr: justice | de: Gerechtigkeit, als-Gerechtigkeit Gen 15:6; Gen 18:19; Deut 6:25; Deut 24:13; 2Sam 8:15

2. righteous acts, deeds of righteousness (13×) The plural form tsidqot designating concrete righteous acts, saving deeds, or acts of vindication — 13 occurrences where righteousness moves from quality to event. The 'righteous acts of the LORD' celebrated in Deborah's song (Judg 5:11) and Samuel's farewell address (1 Sam 12:7) recount specific historical interventions. Isaiah 64:6 inverts the pattern: even our tsidqot are like filthy garments. Korean uiroun haengwideul ('righteous acts') and Swahili matendo ya haki ('deeds of justice') consistently pluralize into concrete actions, confirming the shift from abstract quality to enumerable deeds. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: -the-righteous-acts-of, his-righteous-deeds, in-righteousness | es: (sus-justicias), en-justicias, justicias-de | fr: -le-juste-acts-de, justice, righteousnesses-de | de: -der-gerecht-acts-von, Gerechtigkeit, righteousnesses-von Judg 5:11; 1Sam 12:7; Isa 33:15; Isa 64:6

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Nehemiah 2:20 where tsedaqah appears in a declaration of legitimate right or rightful claim — Nehemiah asserts that certain opponents have 'no portion, nor right (tsedaqah), nor memorial in Jerusalem.' Here the word functions closer to 'legal right' or 'legitimate stake' rather than moral uprightness per se. Spanish derecho and German Gerechtigkeit hover between 'right' and 'righteousness,' capturing the ambiguity of a term that bridges moral and legal standing. RIGHTEOUSNESS AND JUSTICE

en: and-right | es: y-derecho | fr: et-justice | de: und-Gerechtigkeit Neh 2:20

צִדְקִיָּהוּ H6667 Prep-l | N-proper-ms (63×)

Tsidqiyyahu – Zedekiah, 'Yahweh is my righteousness'; name of several persons, chiefly Judah's last king

Tsidqiyyahu (Zedekiah) is a theophoric proper name meaning 'Yahweh is my righteousness,' borne by several figures in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is the last king of Judah, originally named Mattaniah, whom Nebuchadnezzar renamed and installed as vassal king (2 Kgs 24:17). His ill-fated eleven-year reign ended with the fall of Jerusalem, the destruction of the Temple, and his blinding after watching his sons' execution (2 Kgs 25:1-7; Jer 39:1-7). The name also belongs to a false prophet under Ahab (1 Kgs 22:11, 24) and a false prophet in Jeremiah's time (Jer 29:21-22). With 63 occurrences, the name appears most densely in Jeremiah. All languages preserve it phonetically.

Zedekiah (63×) A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh is my righteousness,' referring primarily to Judah's last king (originally Mattaniah, renamed by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kgs 24:17), whose reign ended in the catastrophic fall of Jerusalem (586 BC). The name also designates a false prophet who struck Micaiah (1 Kgs 22:24) and one condemned by Jeremiah (Jer 29:21-22). Spanish Sedecias, French Sedecias, and German Zedekia reflect variant transliteration traditions, but all point to the same proper-noun identity across 63 occurrences with no semantic polysemy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsidkiyahu, Tsidqiyah, Tsidqiyahu | es: Sedecías, Sedequías, Tsidqiyah | fr: Sédécias, [צדקיהו] | de: Zedekia 1Kgs 22:24; 2Kgs 24:17; 2Kgs 24:18; 2Kgs 24:20; 1Chr 3:15

צָהֳבָ H6668 V-Hofal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

polished, gleaming; bronze or metal brought to a high shine

This participle describes metal that has been polished until it gleams. In Ezra 8:27, it refers to bronze vessels that gleam or shine, precious items being transported back to Jerusalem. The verb suggests burnishing to a high luster, making the metal reflect light brilliantly. It's a word of craftsmanship and value—not raw bronze, but metal refined and finished to beauty, worthy of the temple service.

(1×) Ezra 8:27 mentions "bronze of gleaming" or "polished bronze," describing valuable vessels. The Spanish "pulido" (polished) captures the finished quality. This isn't ordinary metal but treasures carefully prepared for sacred use, their brightness symbolizing both material value and the honor due to God's house. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: polished | es: pulido | fr: [מצהב] | de: [מצהב] Ezra 8:27

צָהֹב H6669 Adj-ms (3×)

yellow, gleaming; describes yellowish hair color in purity/skin disease diagnoses

This adjective describes a yellowish or gleaming quality, appearing exclusively in Leviticus 13 within priestly diagnostics for skin diseases. The word characterizes hair color that helps priests determine ritual impurity: yellow hair in an infected area signals uncleanness, while normal black hair suggests healing. The technical nature is evident in the consistent translations across languages: 'yellow' (English), 'amarillo' (Spanish), 'jaune' (French), 'gelb' (German). This color terminology was crucial for Levitical diagnosis, distinguishing healthy from diseased tissue.

(3×) All three uses appear in Leviticus 13:30-36, the priestly manual for diagnosing צָרַעַת (often rendered 'leprosy'). Yellow hair in a scaly patch indicates contamination, contrasting with the expected black hair. The multilingual evidence shows universal agreement on the basic color term, with some adding the definite article ('the yellow' vs. just 'yellow'), but all recognizing this as a diagnostic color indicator in ritual purity law. WHITE COLOR

en: the-yellow, yellow | es: amarillo, el-amarillo | fr: jaune, le-jaune | de: der-gelb, gelb Lev 13:30; Lev 13:32; Lev 13:36

H6670 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjImperf-2mp (1×)

to neigh (like a horse); expressing lustful or jubilant excitement

This verb describes the neighing or crying out of horses, used metaphorically for human behavior. In Jeremiah 50:11, it's applied to Babylon's warriors, suggesting lustful or triumphant exultation—perhaps both. The image is animalistic, reducing the conquerors to beasts in heat or stallions prancing in victory. Prophetic literature often uses animal imagery to critique human excess, and here the neighing captures both arrogance and unrestrained appetite.

(1×) Jeremiah 50:11 taunts Babylon: you rejoice and exult like horses neighing. The Spanish "relinchasteis" (you neighed) preserves the equine metaphor. The context is judgment—those who neighed in triumph over Judah will themselves be trampled. The verb suggests uncontrolled passion or glee, the victors' lack of restraint now counted against them. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: (and-you-neigh) | es: y-relinchasteis | fr: [(ותצהלו)] | de: [(ותצהלו)] Jer 50:11

צָהַל H6670a V-Qal-Imp-fs (8×)

To cry shrilly, shout for joy; to neigh (of horses, metaphorical for lust)

The verb צָהַל captures two strikingly different sounds united by their shrill, piercing quality. In its primary use, it is a cry of exultation and praise — 'cry aloud, O inhabitant of Zion!' (Isa 12:6) — often paralleled with ranan ('sing for joy'). In Esther 8:15, the city of Susa 'cried out' with gladness at Mordecai's honor. But Jeremiah repurposes the word for the neighing of horses, applied metaphorically to men consumed by lust (Jer 5:8) and to arrogant Chaldeans who 'neigh' in triumph (Jer 50:11). The Arabic cognate sahala ('to neigh') confirms the equine connection as the word's original acoustic image.

1. cry aloud, shout for joy (6×) To cry aloud, shout for joy, or exult with a piercing cry — the dominant sense covering six occurrences. It appears in prophetic calls to worship (Isa 12:6; 54:1), a cry of distress (Isa 10:30, 'cry aloud with your voice'), joyful praise (Isa 24:14), celebration (Esth 8:15), and a triumphant shout (Jer 31:7). Arabic asrukhi/ihtifi ('cry out/cheer') and Spanish 'grita de jubilo' ('shout of jubilation') confirm the joyful register. The word often appears alongside ranan, forming a parallel pair for exuberant vocal praise. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: and-cry-aloud, and-shout, cry-aloud | es: Clama, Grita-de-júbilo, clamarán | fr: [צהלה], et-pousser-des-cris, pousser-des-cris | de: [וצהלו], [וצהלי], [צהלה] Esth 8:15; Isa 10:30; Isa 12:6; Isa 24:14; Isa 54:1

2. neigh (of horses) (2×) To neigh, specifically the sound horses make, used both literally of stallions and metaphorically for lustful or arrogant human behavior. Jeremiah 5:8 compares adulterous men to well-fed stallions who 'neigh' after their neighbors' wives, and Jer 50:11 applies the image to Babylonian plunderers who 'neigh' like stallions in their arrogance. Spanish 'relinchaban' ('they were neighing') is unmistakably equine. The Arabic cognate sahala ('to neigh') suggests this animal-sound sense may be the etymological original, with the joyful-cry sense developing as a metaphorical extension. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: [ketiv:and-you-neigh], they-neigh | es: [kethiv], relinchaban | fr: pousser-des-cris | de: [[וחצהלי]], [יצהלו] Jer 5:8; Jer 50:11

צָהַל H6670b Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (1×)

to make shine, cause to gleam; bringing brightness to the face

This Hiphil verb means to make something shine or gleam, used in Psalm 104 for making the face radiant. God gives oil to make the face shine—a sign of health, joy, and well-being. A shining face indicates prosperity and divine favor, while a darkened face suggests grief or shame. The verb captures the outward evidence of inward flourishing, the physical glow that accompanies life lived under God's blessing.

(1×) Psalm 104:15 describes God giving oil to make the face shine, part of creation's provision for human flourishing. The Spanish "para hacer brillar" (to make shine) and German "zu machen leuchten" (to make glow) emphasize the causative action. This is about more than cosmetics—it's the visible radiance of a blessed life, skin glowing with the health that comes from God's good gifts. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING

en: to-make-shine | es: para-hacer-brillar | fr: à-hennir | de: zu-machen-leuchten Ps 104:15

צָהַר H6671 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (1×)

to press oil, extract oil from olives; the labor of oil production

This denominative verb means to press or extract oil, specifically from olives. In Job 24:11, it appears in a lament about injustice: workers press oil within the walls of the wicked but go thirsty themselves. The verb captures hard agricultural labor, the physical work of crushing olives to release their oil—valuable work that should bring reward but here brings only exploitation. It's a snapshot of economic oppression, the laborers enriching others while remaining poor.

(1×) Job 24:11 describes workers who press oil between the rows (or within the walls) but remain thirsty. The Spanish "exprimen aceite" (they press oil) confirms the action. The verb is both literal (the work of oil production) and symbolic (the bitter irony of producing plenty while personally deprived), a vivid image of social injustice. OLIVE OIL

en: they-press-oil | es: exprimen-aceite; | fr: יצהירו | de: [יצהירן] Job 24:11

צָהֳרַיִם H6672a N-mp (23×)

Noon, midday — the peak of the day when the sun is highest, marking a specific time or metaphorical brightness

The plural-form noun צָהֳרַיִם designates the brightest part of the day, when the sun stands at its zenith. It marks specific narrative moments — Joseph's brothers dine at noon in Egypt (Gen 43:16, 25), Ish-bosheth rests during the midday heat (2 Sam 4:5), and Elijah taunts the prophets of Baal as noon passes without answer (1 Kgs 18:26-29). Prophetically, Amos envisions the sun going down at noon as a sign of divine judgment (Amos 8:9). Figuratively, it represents clarity and blessing: the righteous will shine like the noonday (Ps 37:6), and obedience brings noonday brightness even in darkness (Isa 58:10). German 'Mittag' and French 'midi' confirm the consistent temporal reference.

noon, midday (23×) Noun for noon or midday. Used with prepositions as a temporal marker: בַּצָּהֳרָיִם 'at noon' (Gen 43:16; 1 Kgs 18:27), עַד־הַצָּהֳרָיִם 'until noon' (1 Kgs 18:26). Connotes vulnerability — groping at noonday means blindness (Deut 28:29); attack at noon signals surprise (Jer 6:4). Figuratively represents vindication (Ps 37:6; Isa 58:10). Translations converge (spa 'mediodía,' fra 'midi,' deu 'Mittag'). SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: and-at-noon, at-noon, at-noonday | es: a-mediodía, al-mediodía, al-mediodía! | fr: et-midi, le-midi, midi | de: [בצהרים], [צהרים], am-Mittag Gen 43:16; Gen 43:25; Deut 28:29; 2Sam 4:5; 1Kgs 18:26

צֹהַר H6672b N-fs (1×)

roof, covering; the top of the ark, possibly a skylight or roof structure

This feminine noun likely refers to a roof or some kind of opening/covering in the roof. In Genesis 6:16, God instructs Noah to make a tsohar for the ark, finishing it to a cubit upward. Interpretations vary: some see it as a roof, others as a window or skylight for light and ventilation. The ancient versions disagreed, and modern scholars remain uncertain. What's clear is that it's an architectural feature at the top of the ark, essential for the structure's completion.

(1×) Genesis 6:16 commands Noah to make this feature for the ark, completing it to within a cubit. The Spanish "Ventana" (window) and German "ein Fenster" (a window) suggest an opening for light, while the English "window" follows that tradition. Whether roof, skylight, or window, it provides for light and air in the sealed vessel, essential for the year-long voyage ahead. WINDOW OPENING

en: window | es: Ventana | fr: window | de: ein-Fenster Gen 6:16

צַו H6673 Prep-l / N-ms (9×)

Precept, command, rule; used in Isaiah's repetitive phrase 'precept upon precept' and in Hosea 5:11.

A rare noun occurring almost entirely in Isaiah 28:10, 13, where it appears in the mocking refrain tsav la-tsav, tsav la-tsav ('precept upon precept'). Scholars debate whether this represents genuine content – a weary people mimicking Isaiah's repetitive moral instruction – or nonsense syllables imitating a droning teacher. Hosea 5:11 uses the related form for a 'command' that Ephraim stubbornly followed. The Spanish 'mandato' and German 'Gebot' both render it as a directive or commandment, preserving the authoritative tone.

precept, command (9×) A precept, command, or directive, appearing primarily in Isaiah 28:10, 13 in the repetitive formula tsav la-tsav ('precept upon precept'), which may be either genuine summary of prophetic instruction or mocking imitation of Isaiah's insistent teaching. Hosea 5:11 uses it for an ordinance Ephraim willingly followed. The parallel with qav la-qav ('line upon line') suggests measured, rule-like instruction. Spanish 'mandato' and English 'precept/command' consistently render it as authoritative directive, though the Isaiah context carries an ironic or satirical edge. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: command, precept, upon-precept | es: mandato, sobre-mandato | fr: commandement | de: Gebot, [צו], zu-Gebot Isa 28:10; Isa 28:13

צֹאִי H6674 Art / Adj-mp (3×)

filthy, excrement-stained; describes garments or conditions of severe defilement and degradation

The word denotes something filthy or defiled, with a connection to excrement. In 2 Kings 18:27, the grim siege conditions are described where people will eat their own waste. In Zechariah 3:3-4, Joshua the high priest stands before the angel wearing 'filthy garments,' symbolizing the nation's sin that will be removed and replaced with clean robes. The Spanish ('sucias'—dirty/filthy) and French ('souillé'—soiled) capture the sense of defilement. This is not mere dirt but profound contamination, whether literal or symbolic.

(3×) Two distinct contexts emerge: the Rabshakeh's vulgar siege threats in 2 Kings and Zechariah's vision of priestly cleansing. The multilingual glosses oscillate between euphemism and literalism—some mark 'excrement' with brackets, others use general terms like 'filthy' or 'dirty'. In Zechariah, the filthy garments represent Israel's moral state; their removal pictures divine forgiveness. The root meaning involves serious contamination, often fecal, whether literal or metaphorical. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8231 WITH 3 SENSES

en: (their-excrement), filthy, the-filthy | es: las-sucias, su-excremento, sucias | fr: (their-excrement), souillé | de: [הצֹאִים], [צוֹאִים] 2Kgs 18:27; Zech 3:3; Zech 3:4

צֹאָה H6675 N-fs (4×)

filth, excrement; metaphorically moral or spiritual uncleanness

This word denotes literal filth or excrement, but also extends metaphorically to moral corruption. Proverbs 30:12 describes a generation not cleansed 'from its filth.' Isaiah 4:4 speaks of washing away the 'filth' of Jerusalem's women. Isaiah 28:8 vividly describes tables covered with the 'filth' of vomit. Second Kings 18:27 (paralleled in Isa 36:12) uses the Qere reading for human excrement in the siege context. The word carries strong connotations of defilement, whether literal bodily waste or metaphorical moral corruption.

(4×) Proverbs 30:12 uses filth metaphorically for moral uncleanness ('not washed from its filth'). Isaiah 4:4 similarly employs it for Jerusalem's moral defilement that God will wash away. Isaiah 28:8 describes literal filth (tables full of vomit). Second Kings 18:27 // Isaiah 36:12 refers to eating one's own excrement during siege—though the Ketiv uses a different term (חֲרֵא), the Qere reads צֹאָתָם. Spanish inmundicia (filth, uncleanness) captures both literal and metaphorical dimensions. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: but-from-its-filth, filth, filth-of | es: (su-estiercol), inmundicia-de, y-de-su-inmundicia | fr: [(צואתם)], [צאה], [צאת] | de: [(צואתם)], [ומצאתו], [צאה] Prov 30:12; Isa 4:4; Isa 28:8; Isa 36:12

צַוָּאר H6676 N-msc / 2ms (4×)

neck (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew צַוָּאר)

An Aramaic word for the human neck, appearing only in Daniel. In Daniel 5 it occurs three times referring to placing a gold chain around the neck as a sign of high office and honor. Hosea 10:11 uses the Hebrew cognate for Ephraim's neck under a yoke. The neck represents vulnerability, submission (under a yoke), or honor (adorned with gold). In Daniel's context, receiving a neck chain signifies promotion to third-highest ruler in Babylon.

(4×) Daniel 5:7, 16, 29 all mention placing a gold chain around the neck of whoever can interpret the mysterious writing. This is part of the reward package (purple robe, gold chain, third ruler). Hosea 10:11 uses the Hebrew form for Ephraim's 'beautiful neck' that will be yoked—a shift from honor to subjugation. The neck symbolizes both dignity (when adorned) and submission (when yoked). NECK (BODY PART)

en: her-neck, his-neck, your-neck | es: su-cuello, tu-cuello | fr: cou | de: [צוארה], [צוארך] Dan 5:7; Dan 5:16; Dan 5:29; Hos 10:11

צַוָּאר H6677a N-ms (40×)

neck, back of neck — the body part connecting head and torso; site of embrace, ornament, and subjugation Tsavvar is a masculine noun for the neck, appearing 40 times and carrying rich physical and symbolic resonance. In Genesis, it is the site of tender reunion: Jacob 'fell on the neck' of Esau (Gen 33:4) and later of Benjamin and Joseph (Gen 45:14; 46:29) — an embrace idiom (nafal al-tsavvar) that recurs in the prodigal son parable (Luke 15:20, using the Greek trachelos). Pharaoh places a gold chain on Joseph's neck as a sign of authority (Gen 41:42), and the Song of Songs adorns the beloved's neck with ornaments (Song 1:10; 4:4, 9; 7:5). Yet the neck also receives the yoke of servitude: 'I will put an iron yoke on your neck' (Deut 28:48; Jer 28:14). The metaphor of stiff-neckedness (qeshe-oref, using a different word) is distinct, but tsavvar itself bears the physical weight of both love and bondage.

neck (body part) (40×) The anatomical neck, the body part connecting head and torso, appearing in three primary contextual clusters: (1) the embrace idiom nafal al-tsavvar, 'fall upon the neck,' expressing intense reunion emotion (Gen 33:4; 45:14; 46:29); (2) adornment and authority — gold chains (Gen 41:42; Dan 5:7, 16, 29) and jewelry (Song 1:10; 4:4, 9; Prov 1:9; 3:3, 22); (3) subjugation — the neck bears the literal or figurative yoke (Deut 28:48; Isa 8:8; 10:27; Jer 27:8, 12; 28:10-14; Lam 1:14). French 'cou,' Spanish 'cuello,' and German 'Hals' consistently translate with a single anatomical term, confirming that all occurrences share one core referent despite the varied symbolic uses. NECK (BODY PART)

en: his-neck, neck, neck-his | es: Tu-cuello, cuello, cuello-de | fr: Ton-cou, cou, cou-son | de: Hals, dein-Hals, dein-neck Gen 27:16; Gen 27:40; Gen 33:4; Gen 41:42; Gen 45:14

צְוָרוֹן H6677b Prep-m / N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

necklaces, ornaments worn around the neck; jewelry suggesting beauty and adornment

This plural noun refers to necklaces or ornamental chains worn around the neck. In Song of Songs 4:9, the beloved's beauty is praised: one glance from her eyes, one jewel of her necklace, has captured the lover's heart. It's imagery of adornment and allure, the jewelry enhancing but also symbolizing the woman's captivating presence. Necklaces in ancient Near Eastern culture were markers of wealth, status, and femininity.

(1×) Song of Songs 4:9 speaks poetically of the power of one piece of jewelry from the necklaces. The Spanish "de tu cuello" (from your neck) and the reference to necklaces in English situate this in the language of courtship and beauty. The necklace is both literal adornment and metaphor for the woman's irresistible charm. CHAIN ORNAMENT

en: of-your-necklaces | es: de-tu-cuello | fr: de-ton-cou. | de: [מצורניך] Song 4:9

צוֹבָא H6678 N-proper-fs (12×)

Zobah — Aramean city-state in the Beqaa Valley region, whose king Hadadezer was defeated by David Zobah (צוֹבָה) identifies a powerful Aramean city-state in the Beqaa Valley region between Hamath and Damascus. It features prominently in David's wars, where Hadadezer king of Zobah is defeated at the Euphrates (2 Sam 8:3-5, 12; 1 Chr 18:3-9). The Ammonites hired Zobah's Arameans against David (2 Sam 10:6, 8), and Saul also fought Zobah's kings (1 Sam 14:47). After David's conquests, Rezon fled Zobah to establish a rival kingdom in Damascus (1 Kgs 11:23-24). Solomon subdued Hamath-Zobah (2 Chr 8:3). The compound 'Aram-Zobah' clarifies the Aramean identity.

Zobah (proper noun, Aramean city-state) (12×) An Aramean city-state in the Beqaa Valley between Hamath and Damascus, ruled by Hadadezer. David defeated Hadadezer at the Euphrates (2 Sam 8:3-5, 12), the Ammonites hired Zobah's troops

(2 Sam 10:6, 8), and Saul fought its kings (1 Sam 14:47). Rezon later fled to Damascus (1 Kgs 11:23-24); Solomon conquered Hamath-Zobah (2 Chr 8:3). HAMATH AND ZOBAH

en: Tsovah, Tzovah, Zobah | es: Soba, Tsobá, de-Tsova | fr: Tsovah, Tzovah, Zobah | de: Tsovah, Tzovah, Zobah 1Sam 14:47; 2Sam 8:3; 2Sam 8:5; 2Sam 8:12; 2Sam 10:6

צוּד H6679a V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (17×)

To hunt game animals; to pursue or stalk a person figuratively; to ensnare or trap souls (Piel intensive)

The Hebrew verb tsud carries the earthy physicality of the ancient hunt — tracking prey, pursuing quarry, and setting traps. Its most memorable appearances cluster around Esau, the quintessential hunter, whom Isaac sends to 'hunt game' (Gen 27:3, 5, 33). Leviticus 17:13 legislates the proper treatment of blood when a man hunts a wild animal. But the verb quickly crosses into metaphorical territory: Lamentations 3:52 cries 'they hunted me relentlessly like a bird,' and Micah 7:2 accuses each man of hunting his brother with a net. The Piel intensive in Ezekiel 13:18-20 takes this to its darkest extreme, where false prophetesses 'hunt souls' through their sorcery. Arabic saada ('to hunt') and Aramaic tsud confirm the root's Pan-Semitic antiquity. Spanish cazar and German jagen both mirror the range from field sport to figurative pursuit.

1. hunt/pursue a person (Qal figurative) (7×) The figurative-personal sense (Qal): to pursue, stalk, or hunt down a person as if they were prey. Lamentations 3:52 provides the most poignant image — 'they hunted me relentlessly like a bird' — and Lamentations 4:18 records enemies stalking through the streets. Job 10:16 pictures God hunting him like a lion, and Psalm 140:12 warns that evil will hunt down the violent man. Jeremiah 16:16 sends 'hunters' to pursue Israel from every hiding place. Spanish acechar ('to stalk') and German nachstellen capture the menacing register. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: They-hunted, You-hunt-me, and-they-will-hunt-them | es: Acechaban, caza, cazan | fr: [וצדום], [צדן], [צדוני] | de: [וצדום], [יצודו], [צדן] Job 10:16; Ps 140:11; Prov 6:26; Jer 16:16; Lam 3:52

2. hunt game (Qal literal) (6×) The literal hunting sense (Qal): to hunt wild animals for food or sport, the physical pursuit of game. Genesis 27 is the defining narrative: Isaac commands Esau 'go out to the field and hunt game for me' (Gen 27:3, 5), and the aged father later asks 'who was it that hunted game?' (Gen 27:33). Leviticus 17:13 regulates the blood of hunted game, and Job 38:39 asks whether Job can hunt prey for the lioness. Spanish cazar and French chasser map directly. This is the concrete root from which the metaphorical extensions grow. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: Hunting, and-hunt, can-you-hunt | es: Cazando, cace, el-que-cazó | fr: [צוד], et-hunt, hunts | de: [והתצוד], [צוד], der-gejagt-hat- Gen 27:3; Gen 27:5; Gen 27:33; Lev 17:13; Job 38:39

3. ensnare souls (Piel) (4×) The intensive-trapping sense (Piel): to ensnare or trap persons, particularly their souls, with connotations of deceptive entrapment through sorcery or false prophecy. Ezekiel 13:18-20 contains all four occurrences, where false prophetesses sew magic bands and 'hunt souls' — the repeated phrase naphshot tetsodedna. God declares he will tear away their veils and free the souls they hunt 'like birds.' Spanish cazar almas and German Seelen fangen both render the disturbing image. The Piel intensification marks this as systematic, predatory entrapment rather than casual pursuit. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: hunting, to-hunt, will-you-hunt | es: cazando, cazaréis, para-cazar | fr: chasser | de: [לצודד], [מצדדות], [תצודדנה] Ezek 13:18; Ezek 13:20

צִיד H6679b V-Hitpael-Perf-1cp (1×)

to provision oneself, take as provisions; gathering food supplies for a journey

This Hithpael verb means to supply oneself with provisions or to take something as food for a journey. In Joshua 9, the Gibeonites claim they took bread as their provision from home, though it's now moldy (part of their deception). The verb suggests deliberate preparation, packing supplies for travel. It's the act of provisioning that any traveler or military expedition would undertake, gathering foodstuffs to sustain the journey ahead.

(1×) Joshua 9:12 has the Gibeonites claim, "This bread we took as our provision from our houses." The Spanish "tomamos como provisión" (we took as provision) and the English "we provisioned" capture the act of securing food supplies. The irony, of course, is that their whole story is a ruse, the moldy bread a calculated prop in their deception. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: we-provisioned | es: tomamos-como-provisión | fr: nous-provisioned | de: wir-provisioned Josh 9:12

צָוָה H6680 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp / 1cs (496×)

To command, order, charge; in Pual, to be commanded; by extension, to appoint, commission, or send word.

Tsavah in the Piel is the Hebrew Bible's workhorse verb of authoritative speech — the word used when God directs Noah to build the ark (Gen 6:22), when Moses transmits Torah commands to Israel, and when kings issue royal decrees. Its sheer frequency (496 occurrences) reflects how central the command-obedience dynamic is to the biblical worldview. The Arabic cognate wasiya ('to enjoin, charge') preserves the same semantic core, while the Syriac cognate tswa shifts toward the physical — 'to heap up stones' — hinting at an ancient concrete background of setting up marker-stones as fixed directives. The Pual passive ('to be commanded') appears sparingly but significantly, as when Moses is told to act 'as the LORD commanded him' (Num 3:16), and a few striking occurrences extend beyond mere ordering into appointing leaders and dispatching messages.

1. command, order, charge (483×) The overwhelmingly dominant sense: to command, order, or lay a charge upon someone with authority. This covers the full range of Piel active forms across all tenses, persons, and numbers — from God commanding Adam (Gen 2:16) to Moses commanding Israel (Deut 4:5) to human kings and officials issuing directives. The Arabic rendering amara and German befehlen/gebieten both capture the authoritative tone, while Spanish mandó and French commanda reflect the juridical weight. At 483 occurrences, this sense accounts for over 97% of the word's usage, confirming tsavah as essentially a one-sense verb with specialized peripheral extensions. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: commanded | es: mandó | fr: commanda | de: befahl, befohlen-hatte, gebot Gen 6:22; Gen 7:9; Gen 7:16; Gen 21:4; Gen 47:11

2. be commanded (passive) (9×) The Pual passive: to be commanded, to receive or stand under a command. Only 9 occurrences, but they carry theological weight — particularly in Levitical instructions where Aaron and his sons 'were commanded' to perform specific rituals (Lev 8:35; 10:13). The passive shifts the focus from the authority who commands to the one who receives the charge. Arabic umira ('he was commanded') and Korean myeongnyeong-badda ('receive a command') both select dedicated passive-reception vocabulary, confirming this as a genuine voice-driven sense distinction rather than a contextual variation. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: I-was-commanded, are-commanded, he-was-commanded | es: estás-ordenado, fue-mandado, fui-mandado | fr: commander, il-était-commanda, je-était-commanda | de: bist-beauftragt, er-war-befahl, gebieten Gen 45:19; Exod 34:34; Lev 8:35; Lev 10:13; Num 3:16

3. appoint, commission, designate (2×) To appoint or commission someone to a role or task — a Piel use where the emphasis shifts from verbal ordering to positional designation. In 1 Sam 25:30, Abigail speaks of the LORD appointing David as leader over Israel; in 2 Sam 6:21, David declares God chose him to be ruler. Arabic ayyina ('appoint') and Hindi niyukt karna ('to designate') both select appointment-specific vocabulary here, distinguishing this from generic commanding. Only 2 occurrences, but the semantic extension from 'charge someone to do X' to 'charge someone with the role of X' is natural and attested. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-he-appoints-you, to-appoint | es: para-mandar, y-te-ordene | fr: et-il-appoints-tu, à-désigne | de: und-er-appoints-du, zu-bestelle 1Sam 25:30; 2Sam 6:21

4. (1×) A substantival participle: one who commands, a commander. A single occurrence at Isa 55:4, where the Davidic figure is called 'a leader and commander to the peoples.' Spanish gobernante ('ruler') and German Gebieter ('one who commands') both nominalize the verb into a title of authority. The shift from action to agent-noun is a standard Hebrew participle function, but this instance is notable for its messianic overtones. COMMANDING AND ORDERING
en: and-commander | es: y-gobernante-de | fr: et-commander | de: und-von-gebot Isa 55:4

5. (1×) To send word or dispatch orders — a Piel usage where the emphasis falls on the transmission of a message rather than the exercise of authority over a subordinate. In Gen 50:16, Joseph's brothers 'sent word' to him (vayetsavvu), dispatching a message through intermediaries. The Arabic arsalu ('they sent') and German sie-liessen-sagen ('they caused-to-say') both capture the mediated, delegated quality of this action, distinguishing it from direct face-to-face commanding. COMMANDING AND ORDERING
en: and-commanded | es: Y-mandaron | fr: et-commanda | de: und-sie-ließen-sagen Gen 50:16

צָוַח H6681 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (1×)
to cry aloud, shout; a loud vocal expression of joy or distress
This verb means to cry out or shout loudly, used for both joyful and distressed vocalizations. In Isaiah 42:11, it appears in a call for the wilderness and its towns to lift their voices in joy, parallel to singing. The context determines whether it's a shout of triumph, celebration, or anguish. Cognates in Arabic and Aramaic confirm the sense of loud vocal expression, the kind of cry that demands attention or expresses overwhelming emotion.

(1×) Isaiah 42:11 calls for the inhabitants of the desert to shout for joy as God brings salvation. The Spanish "griten" (let them shout) fits the joyful context. The verb suggests volume and intensity—not polite speech but exuberant outcry, the kind of celebration that cannot be contained, giving voice to gladness at God's redemptive work. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: let-them-shout | es: griten | fr: [יצוחו] | de: [יצוחו] Isa 42:11

צְוָחָה H6682 Conj-w / N-fsc / 2fs (4×)
outcry, cry of distress or grief
A feminine noun denoting a loud outcry, usually in contexts of distress, grief, or calamity. Psalm 144:14 uses it in a negative context ('no outcry' as a sign of peace). Isaiah 24:11 describes an outcry in the streets over the lack of wine amid judgment. Jeremiah employs the word twice: the outcry of Judah's mourning (14:2) and the cry that will fill the land when Egypt is defeated (46:12). The word conveys vocal expression of anguish or alarm.

(4×) Psalm 144:14 envisions blessing: 'no outcry in our streets' (i.e., peace and security). Isaiah 24:11 depicts urban distress: 'an outcry over wine in the streets' during judgment. Jeremiah 14:2 uses 'outcry' for Judah's mourning during drought. Jeremiah 46:12 prophesies that Egypt's cry will fill the earth when defeated. Spanish clamor (clamor, outcry) and French cri capture the loud, public nature of this vocal distress. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Outcry, and-cry-of, and-your-cry | es: Clamor, clamor, y-clamor-de | fr: [וצוחת], [וצוחתך], [צוחה] | de: [וצוחת], [וצוחתך], [צוחה] Ps 144:14; Isa 24:11; Jer 14:2; Jer 46:12

צוּלָה H6683 Prep-l (1×)
the deep, ocean abyss; the primordial or oceanic depths
This noun refers to the deep waters, the ocean abyss, often with mythological overtones. In Isaiah 44:27, God addresses the deep, commanding it to dry up—demonstrating sovereign control over the chaotic waters. The word evokes both the Red Sea deliverance and creation imagery, where God's word masters the unruly seas. It's a symbol of danger, chaos, and the unknown, yet subject to divine command.

(1×) Isaiah 44:27 has God speak to the deep (ocean abyss), saying "Be dry!" as part of a promise of restoration. The Spanish "al abismo" (to the abyss) captures the sense of vast, formidable waters. The divine word that dries up the deep recalls both creation (separating waters) and exodus (parting the sea), assuring that no obstacle is too great for God's purposes. ABYSS AND DEEP en: to-the-deep | es: al-abismo | fr: [לצולה] | de: [לצולה] Isa 44:27

צוּם H6684 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (21×)
To fast, voluntarily abstain from food as an act of mourning, penitence, or devotion before God Denotes the deliberate refusal of food, almost always motivated by a religious occasion—grief over the dead (1 Sam 31:13; 2 Sam 1:12), urgent intercession (2 Sam 12:16), national repentance (Judg 20:26; 1 Sam 7:6), or penitential seeking of God (Zech 7:5). The verb is semantically uniform: every Qal occurrence involves the same bodily act directed toward the same spiritual purpose. Spanish 'ayunar' and French 'jeuner' both reflect this tightly focused meaning, confirming a single sense across all 21 attestations.

to fast, abstain from food (21×) To voluntarily abstain from eating, invariably in a religious context of mourning, contrition, intercession, or devotion. David fasts for his dying child (2 Sam 12:16), Israel fasts at Mizpah in national repentance (Judg 20:26; 1 Sam 7:6), and Zechariah 7:5 questions the sincerity of fasting. Multilingual glosses—Spanish 'ayunar,' English 'fasted'—all converge on this single devotional act. FASTING
en: I-fasted, and-fast, and-fasted | es: ayunamos, ayunando, ayunaremos | fr: [אצום], [ויצומו], [ונצומה] | de: [אצום], [ויצומו], [ונצומה] Judg 20:26; 1Sam 7:6; 1Sam 31:13; 2Sam 1:12; 2Sam 12:16

צוֹם H6685 Prep-b (26×)
Fast, fasting — voluntary abstention from food as an act of mourning, repentance, petition, or consecration before God.
A masculine noun for the practice or occasion of fasting — going without food as a deliberate act of devotion. Fasting accompanies mourning (2 Sam 12:16; Esth 4:3), national repentance (Joel 1:14; 2:12, 15; Jonah 3:5), and urgent petition before God (Ezra 8:21; Dan 9:3; Neh 9:1). Kings proclaim public fasts as emergencies (1 Kgs 21:9, 12; 2 Chr 20:3), and Jeremiah 36:6, 9 records a fast day when Baruch read the scroll publicly. Zechariah 8:19 names four annual commemorative fasts that will one day become feasts of joy. Isaiah 58:3-6 delivers God's incisive critique: true fasting is not mere affliction but justice, mercy, and liberation. Spanish 'ayuno' and French 'jeune' mirror the single, unified sense.

fast, fasting (noun) (26×) The act or occasion of voluntarily abstaining from food as a religious discipline. Proclaimed publicly by kings or priests (1 Kgs 21:9, 12; 2 Chr 20:3; Joel 1:14; 2:15), or practiced privately in grief and petition (2 Sam 12:16; Dan 9:3; Neh 9:1). Zechariah 8:19 lists four calendrical fasts commemorating Jerusalem's fall, prophesying their transformation into joyful feasts. Isaiah 58:3-6 redefines authentic fasting as social justice rather than ritual affliction. Often paired with sackcloth (Neh 9:1; Esth 4:3; Joel 1:14). Arabic cognate صَوْم and Spanish 'ayuno' confirm a single semantic core unchanged across all 26 occurrences. FASTING
en: a-fast, and-fast-of, fast | es: ayuno, ayuno-de, con-ayuno | fr: [בצום], [צום], dans-jeûne | de: Fasten, [בצום], [צום] 2Sam 12:16; 1Kgs 21:9; 1Kgs 21:12; 2Chr 20:3; Ezra 8:21

צוּעַר H6686 N-proper-ms (5×)
Zuar; father of Nethanel, tribal leader of Issachar
Zuar is an Issacharite whose name means 'little one' or 'insignificant.' He is known exclusively as the father of Nethanel, the leader who represented the tribe of Issachar during the wilderness census, camp arrangement, and tabernacle dedication offerings. All five occurrences follow the fixed patronymic formula 'Nethanel son of Zuar' (Num 1:8; 2:5; 7:18, 23; 10:15), embedding the name firmly within the organizational framework of early Israel's tribal structure.

(5×) The proper name of Nethanel's father from the tribe of Issachar. Every occurrence uses the stereotyped phrase 'Nethanel son of Zuar' across census lists, camp orders, and dedication offerings (Num 1:8; 2:5; 7:18, 23; 10:15). All translations simply transliterate (eng/spa 'Zuar,' fra 'Tsuar,' deu 'Zuar'), confirming a single referent with no semantic variation across passages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zuar | es: Zuar, Zuar: | fr: Tsuar | de: Zuar Num 1:8; Num 2:5; Num 7:18; Num 7:23; Num 10:15

צוּף H6687 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (3×)

to flow, overflow, float; water moving over or causing something to rise on the surface

This verb captures water in motion: flowing over something, overflowing boundaries, or causing objects to float. Deuteronomy 11:4 describes how God made the waters of the Red Sea flow over Pharaoh's army. In 2 Kings 6:6, Elisha makes an iron axe head float on water—a miraculous reversal. Lamentations 3:54 uses it figuratively: 'waters flowed over my head,' expressing being overwhelmed by calamity. The French and German translations preserve causative nuances ('caused to overflow', 'it floated'), reflecting both the natural movement of water and supernatural intervention.

(3×) The three contexts show water's power: destructive (Red Sea drowning Egypt's army), miraculous (floating iron), and metaphorical (drowning in distress). Translations capture both transitive and intransitive uses—water flowing and being made to flow, objects floating and being caused to float. The Qal stem appears in Lamentations (waters flowed), while the Hiphil in Deuteronomy and 2 Kings emphasizes causation. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms both literal hydraulic action and figurative application to overwhelming circumstances. FLOWING WATER

en: Flowed, and-it-floated, he-caused-to-overflow | es: Fluyeron, hizo-desbordar, y-flotó | fr: [צפו], et-cela-floated, il-caused-à-overflow | de: [צפו], er-caused-zu-ueberfliessen, und-es-floated Deut 11:4; 2Kgs 6:6; Lam 3:54

צוּף H6688 N-mp (2×)

honeycomb, the wax structure containing honey that drips or flows from it

The honeycomb appears in Scripture's sweet imagery for God's word and wisdom. The psalmist declares God's ordinances are 'sweeter than honey and the drippings of the honeycomb,' while Proverbs says pleasant words are 'a honeycomb, sweet to the soul and healing to the bones.' The term emphasizes the comb structure itself, from which honey naturally exudes. In a world without refined sugar, wild honey and its comb represented the pinnacle of sweetness, making it an ideal metaphor for delightful truth.

(2×) Psalm 19:10 uses 'drippings of the honeycomb' to describe how sweet God's laws are, while Proverbs 16:24 compares pleasant words to 'a honeycomb.' English consistently renders this as 'honeycomb,' Spanish uses 'panal/panales,' French 'rayon' (comb). The image evokes not just honey but the comb structure from which it flows—emphasizing abundance and natural sweetness. Wild honey was highly prized in the ancient world, and finding a honeycomb in the wilderness was a treasure. Applying this metaphor to God's word or wise speech gives them the highest commendation for delightfulness. HONEY SWEET FOOD

en: honeycomb, the-honeycomb | es: Panal-de, panales | fr: rayon, צוּף | de: [צוף], der-honeycomb Ps 19:10; Prov 16:24

צוּף H6689 N-proper-ms (5×)

Zuph; an Ephraimite ancestor of Samuel; also a district in Benjamin

Zuph names both a person and a place. As a person, he was an Ephraimite (or Levite) ancestor of Elkanah and hence of the prophet Samuel (1 Sam 1:1; 1 Chr 6:26, 35). The land of Zuph was a district in Benjamin's territory where Saul and his servant searched for lost donkeys before encountering Samuel (1 Sam 9:5). The name may connect to the root for 'honeycomb,' though its etymology remains uncertain.

(5×) A personal name and territorial designation. As an ancestor of Samuel, Zuph appears in genealogies (1 Sam 1:1; 1 Chr 6:26, 35), and the variant Zophay (1 Chr 6:26) likely refers to the same individual. The 'land of Zuph' (1 Sam 9:5) marks a geographical region in Benjamin. Translations consistently transliterate (eng 'Zuph/Tsuf,' spa 'Tsuf,' fra 'Zuph'), with some showing the variant Zophay for the Chronicles form, reflecting the genealogical and territorial duality of this single name. REEDS SEA OF REEDS

en: Tsofay, Tsuf, Zuph | es: (Tsuf), Tsofay, Tsuf | fr: Zuph, [צוף], [צופי] | de: Zuph, [צוף], [צופי] 1Sam 1:1; 1Sam 9:5; 1Chr 6:26; 1Chr 6:35

צוֹפָה H6690 N-proper-ms (2×)

Zophah, a man from the tribe of Asher listed in the genealogies

Zophah appears in the genealogical records of Asher in 1 Chronicles, mentioned twice in consecutive verses with slight variation in spelling. Like many names preserved only in genealogical lists, we know nothing of this individual beyond his tribal affiliation and family connections. The name may relate to a root meaning 'honeycomb' or 'watchtower,' though such etymologies remain speculative. His inclusion in Chronicles preserves his place in Asher's family tree for posterity.

(2×) This personal name occurs in 1 Chronicles 7:35-36, appearing in slightly different forms (Zophah, Zophach) in the same genealogical context. Translations preserve the proper name across languages: English 'Zophah/Tsofach,' Spanish 'Tsofaj,' French and German transliterating the Hebrew. The dual mention may reflect variant manuscript traditions or two references to the same person using slightly different spellings. Such names, preserved only in genealogies, testify to Chronicles' concern to maintain complete tribal records even when no narratives survive about the individuals listed. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsofach | es: Tsofaj | fr: [צופח] | de: [צופח] 1Chr 7:35; 1Chr 7:36

צוֹפַר H6691 N-proper-ms (4×)

Zophar (personal name, Job's third friend from Naamah)

One of Job's three friends who came to comfort him but ended up arguing that his suffering must result from sin. Zophar is identified as 'the Naamathite' and appears in Job's dialogues with two major speeches (chapters 11 and 20) and in the final reconciliation (42:9). His name may relate to a root meaning 'bird' or 'chirp,' though this is uncertain. He represents a rigid retribution theology: the wicked always suffer, so Job's suffering implies guilt.

(4×) Job 2:11 introduces Zophar the Naamathite as one of three friends who come to mourn with Job. Job 11:1 begins Zophar's first speech, arguing that Job's suffering is less than his sin deserves. Job 20:1 introduces his second speech, describing the fate of the wicked. Job 42:9 includes Zophar in God's rebuke and the friends' reconciliation. Spanish Zofar and French Tsophar preserve the name across translations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsophar, and-Tsophar | es: Tsofar, Zofar, y-Zofar | fr: Tsophar, et-Tsophar | de: [צפר], und-Zofar Job 2:11; Job 11:1; Job 20:1; Job 42:9

צוּץ H6692a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (8×)

To blossom, flourish, sprout; to cause to bud, bring forth blossoms

The verb צוּץ evokes the moment a plant bursts into flower — the sudden, visible emergence of life. In the Qal stem, it describes grass that 'flourishes' in the morning (Ps 90:6), the righteous who 'flourish' like vegetation (Ps 92:7), and the fleeting beauty of human life compared to a field flower (Ps 103:15). The crown upon David's heir will 'shine' or 'blossom' (Ps 132:18), extending the image to royal glory. In the Hifil causative, it names the miraculous budding of Aaron's rod (Num 17:8) and Israel's future flourishing (Isa 27:6). Spanish 'florecera/florecio' and Arabic yuzhiru ('it blooms') converge on the botanical image across languages.

1. flourish, blossom (Qal) (6×) The Qal intransitive sense of blossoming, flourishing, budding, or sprouting — the natural process of a plant coming into flower, often used figuratively. Psalm 90:6

describes grass that 'flourishes' in the morning; Ps 92:7 says the wicked 'flourish' only to be destroyed; Ps 103:15 compares human life to a flower of the field. In Ps 72:16 the righteous 'flourish' like vegetation, and in Ps 132:18 the crown upon David's descendant will 'blossom' or gleam. Ezekiel 7:10 uses the image for the rod of wickedness that has 'budded.' Spanish 'florece/florecera' and Arabic yuzhiru ('it blooms') consistently confirm the botanical-florescent core. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH

en: and-flourish, and-may-they-flourish, has-budded | es: florece, florecerá, floreció | fr: et-fleurir, fleurir | de: [צץ], er-blüht, es-blüht Ps 72:16; Ps 90:6; Ps 92:7; Ps 103:15; Ps 132:18

2. cause to blossom (Hifil) (2×) The Hifil causative sense of causing something to blossom, bringing forth buds, or making something sprout. In Num 17:8, Aaron's rod miraculously 'put forth blossoms' (vayyatsets tsits) — a divine sign validating his priestly authority. In Isa 27:6, Israel in the future 'shall blossom and bud' as God causes the nation to flourish. Arabic abra'at ('it caused to sprout') in the gloss evidence uses a distinctly causative form, and Spanish 'habia florecido' ('had blossomed') marks the completed causative action. The Hifil form distinguishes active divine or miraculous agency from the natural process of sense 1. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH

en: and-blossomed, shall-blossom | es: florecerá, y-había-florecido | fr: [צִיץ], et-blossomed | de: [צִיץ], und-blossomed Num 17:8; Isa 27:6

צוּץ H6692b V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to gaze, peer, look intently; watching through an opening

This Hiphil verb means to gaze or peer intently, especially through a narrow opening. In Song of Songs 2:9, the beloved is described as gazing through the lattice or peering through the windows—an image of eager, longing observation. The verb suggests a focused, intent look, someone trying to see through a barrier. It's a word of desire and anticipation, the lover's eyes searching for a glimpse of the beloved.

(1×) Song of Songs 2:9 pictures the lover "peering through the lattice," looking for his beloved. The Spanish "asomándose" (peeking out, looking in) and French "épiant" (spying, watching) convey the clandestine or eager quality. The verb evokes the intensity of romantic longing, the lover unable to stay away, eyes seeking any view of the one he desires. GAZING AND LOOKING en: peering | es: asomándose | fr: épiant | de: [מצִיץ] Song 2:9

צוּק H6693 V-Hifil-Perf-3fs / 1cs (11×)

To press, constrain, bring into straits; of siege pressure, persistent urging, and oppression

A Hifil verb meaning to press upon or constrain, spanning military siege, personal urgency, and systemic oppression. In Deuteronomy 28:53-57, it describes the terrible straits of siege — the enemy pressing so hard that people resort to the unthinkable. Arabic consistently renders it with forms of dayaaqa ('to make narrow, constrain'), revealing the root metaphor of tightening space. Delilah 'pressed' Samson with relentless nagging (Judg 16:16), while Korean 'joruda' (to pester) captures the interpersonal flavor. Isaiah uses the substantival participle for 'the oppressor' — the one who makes life unbearably narrow.

1. distress, press, oppress (Hifil) (5×) Hifil causative: to distress, press upon, or bring into dire straits, especially in contexts of siege and divine judgment. Deuteronomy 28:53-57 uses it repeatedly for the enemy's crushing siege pressure. Arabic yudayyiqu ('he constrains') and Spanish 'angustiar' ('to cause anguish') both foreground the narrowing, suffocating quality of this distress. Isaiah 29:2 extends it to God's own distressing of Jerusalem. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: And-I-shall-distress, distresses, will-distress | es: Y-angustiaré, angustiarán, te-angustiará | fr: [והציקותי], [יציקו], détresses | de: [והציקותי], [יציקו], distresses Deut 28:53; Deut 28:55; Deut 28:57; Isa 29:2; Jer 19:9

2. oppressor (Hifil participle, substantival) (3×) Hifil participle used as a substantive noun: 'the oppressor' or 'those who oppress.' Isaiah 51:13 asks twice about the fury of hammetziq — the constrainer. Arabic al-mudayyiqi ('the one who constrains') preserves the participial agent structure. Isaiah 29:7 uses the plural for nations that distress Ariel. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-who-distress-her, the-oppressor | es: el-opresor, el-opresor?, y-los-que-la-angustian | fr: [המציק], [והמציקים] | de: [המציק], [והמציקים] Isa 29:7; Isa 51:13

3. press, urge persistently (Hifil, interpersonal pressure) (3×) Hifil with interpersonal force: to press or urge someone persistently. Delilah pressed Samson until his soul was vexed to death (Judg 16:16); she had pressed him earlier in Judges 14:17. Job 32:18 uses it of the inner compulsion of the spirit constraining Elihu to speak. Korean 'joruda' (to nag persistently) and Spanish 'presionar' distinguish this nagging insistence from military siege. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: constrains-me, pressed, she-pressed-him | es: lo-presionó, me-apremia | fr: elle-pressed-lui, pressed, הציקתני-moi | de: [הציקתני], pressed, sie-pressed-ihn Judg 14:17; Judg 16:16; Job 32:18

צוּק H6694 V-Qal-Perf-3cp / Pn (3×)

to pour out, melt; liquid being poured or metal being smelted from ore

The verb describes pouring out liquid or melting solid material. Job 28:2 speaks of smelting copper from stone—melting ore into metal. Job 29:6 recalls prosperity when 'the rock poured out streams of oil beside me,' a metaphor for abundant blessing. Isaiah 26:16 is textually uncertain but likely involves pouring out whispered prayers under distress. The Spanish translations distinguish 'derramaba' (poured out) from 'funde' (melts/smelts), recognizing both the metallurgical and liquid contexts. The imagery moves from industrial process to poetic abundance to desperate petition.

(3×) Job's poetry dominates, using metallurgy and flowing abundance as images of God's creation and blessing. The 'stone pouring out copper' (28:2) captures the smelting process, while 'rock pouring oil' (29:6) describes past prosperity in hyperbolic terms. Isaiah's occurrence is disputed textually, but likely involves pouring out prayer. The multilingual glosses show uncertainty (brackets in German and French), reflecting textual and semantic challenges. The core meaning involves liquid emission, whether molten metal, flowing oil, or whispered words. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: he-pours, poured-out, they-poured-out | es: derramaba, derramaron, funde | fr: [צקון], יצוק | de: [יצוק], [צקון] Job 28:2; Job 29:6; Isa 26:16

צוֹק H6695a Conj-w (1×)

distress, constraint; pressure and difficulty of the times

This noun refers to distress, constraint, or pressure—difficult circumstances that hem in and oppress. In Daniel 9:25, it appears in the enigmatic phrase "in distressful times," describing the period during which Jerusalem and the temple will be rebuilt. The word captures the adversity and opposition that will mark the restoration, a time of building under pressure. It's not just difficulty but constriction, like being pressed from all sides.

(1×) Daniel 9:25 speaks of the rebuilding of Jerusalem "in distressful times" or "in the pressure of the times." The Spanish "y en estrechez de" (and in narrowness/distress of) and French "et oppression" (and oppression) confirm the sense of hardship. The rebuilding will happen, but not easily—opposition, scarcity, and difficulty will mark the era, as indeed the books of Ezra and Nehemiah confirm. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-distress-of | es: y-en-estrechez-de | fr: et-oppression | de: [ובצוק] Dan 9:25

צוּקָה H6695b N-fs (3×)

distress, anguish, pressure; severe affliction and constraint, often paired with trouble (tsarah)

This noun denotes intense distress or anguish, typically appearing alongside its near-synonym צָרָה (trouble). Proverbs 1:27 warns that calamity will come 'like trouble and anguish' to those who reject wisdom. Isaiah 8:22 and 30:6 describe national crises as 'distress and anguish'—the experience of being under extreme pressure with no escape. The Spanish 'congoja' (anguish) and 'aflicción' (affliction) capture the emotional weight, while the pairing with 'trouble' throughout emphasizes compounded suffering. This is distress that constrains and crushes.

(3×) All three occurrences use the phrase 'trouble and distress' (tsarah v'tsuqah), suggesting a fixed pair describing comprehensive calamity. Proverbs warns of coming judgment, while Isaiah describes present national disaster. The German and French bracket forms suggest textual or morphological uncertainty, but the basic sense remains clear: severe constraint and anguish. The word evokes pressure that confines and overwhelms, the experience of being hemmed in by circumstances with no relief. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-anguish, and-distress, anguish | es: congoja, y-aflicción | fr: [וצוקה], [צוקה], et-וצוקה | de: [וצוקה], [צוקה] Prov 1:27; Isa 8:22; Isa 30:6

צוּר H6696a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (31×)

Besiege, lay siege to a city; bind or tie up securely; press hard upon, distress; enclose or wall in

This verb centers on the idea of enclosing or confining by surrounding. Its dominant biblical use is military: to lay siege to a city, hemming it in until it falls, as at Samaria (2 Kings 17:5) and Jerusalem (2 Kings 24:11). A quieter sense appears when money is tied up in a pouch (Deuteronomy 14:25) or an object bound securely. The verb can also express the distress and pressure of affliction (2 Chronicles 28:20), and in one striking passage, Song of Songs 8:9, it describes constructive enclosure – boarding up or walling in protectively.

1. besiege, lay siege to (26×) The primary and most frequent sense: to surround a city or stronghold with military forces, cutting off escape and supply. The construction typically takes 'al' plus the city name (2 Samuel 11:1, 1 Kings 20:1, 2 Kings 6:24). Spanish 'sitiar/asediar' and French 'assiéger' confirm the siege-warfare sense across translation traditions. Deuteronomy 20:19 even regulates conduct during siege, showing how central this military reality was. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-besieged, and-he-besieged, and-they-besieged | es: los-que-asedian, los-que-sitiaban, para-sitiar | fr: [ויצר], assiégeant, assiéger | de: [והצרים], [ויצר], [וירצו] Deut 20:12; Deut 20:19; Judg 9:31; 1Sam 23:8; 2Sam 11:1

2. bind, tie up (2×) To bind, tie up, or wrap something securely in a container or cloth. In 2 Kings 12:10 money is tied in bags, and in Ezekiel 5:3 a few hairs are bound in a garment hem. Spanish 'atarás' (you shall tie) and English 'bind' point to the concrete, non-hostile sense of fastening something closed, sharing the root idea of enclosure without any military context. BINDING BY VOW

en: and-they-tied-up, and-you-shall-bind | es: y-ataban, y-atarás | fr: et-assiéger, et-ils-lia-en-haut | de: [וצררת], und-sie-tied-hinauf 2Kgs 12:10; Ezek 5:3

3. distress, press hard upon (2×) An extended sense of pressing hard upon someone, causing distress or affliction. In 2 Chronicles 28:20 Tiglath-pileser 'distressed' Ahaz rather than strengthening him, and 2 Chronicles 6:28 pairs siege imagery with famine and plague. The shift from physical encirclement to emotional or political pressure is natural, and Spanish 'angustiar' (to cause anguish) captures this well. DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS

en: and-distressed, distresses | es: sitiare, y-lo-angustiar | fr: [ויצר], [יצר] | de: [ויצר], [יצר] 2Chr 6:28; 2Chr 28:20

4. enclose, wall in (1×) A unique constructive use in Song of Songs 8:9: 'we will enclose her with boards of cedar.' Here the surrounding is protective or ornamental rather than hostile. Spanish 'la cercaremos' (we will encircle her) and English 'we will enclose' show the verb at its most gentle, suggesting adornment or safeguarding rather than confinement. DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS

en: we-will-enclose | es: la-cercaremos | fr: nous-l'enfermerons | de: [נצור] Song 8:9

צוּר H6696b V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 3mp (4×)

show hostility to, treat as enemy, harass or oppress

A verb meaning to act hostilely toward someone, to treat as an adversary or foe. Exodus 23:22 promises divine protection: 'I will be an enemy to your enemies' (parallel to 'I will oppose those who oppose you'). Deuteronomy uses it twice forbidding Israel from showing hostility to Moab (2:9) or Ammon (2:19). Esther 8:11 permits the Jews to destroy 'those who would assault them.' The word emphasizes active hostility and oppressive behavior, not mere dislike.

(4×) Exodus 23:22 has God promise 'I will be an adversary to your adversaries,' showing reciprocal hostility against Israel's enemies. Deuteronomy 2:9 and 2:19 command Israel not to 'harass' or 'show hostility to' Moab and Ammon respectively, as those lands are divinely assigned to Lot's descendants. Esther 8:11 authorizes Jews to kill 'those oppressing them' (הַצָּרִים). Spanish oprimen (oppress) and French adversaire capture the hostile, antagonistic action. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: and-I-will-be-adversary, the-ones-distressing, you-shall-distress | es: hostigues, los-hostigues, los-que-les-oprimen | fr: [והצרים], et-Je—être-adversaire, tu-devra-distress | de: [והצרים], du-soll-Not, du-soll-Not-ihnen Exod 23:22; Deut 2:9; Deut 2:19; Esth 8:11

צוּר H6696c Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to fashion, form, shape; creating or delineating an object

This verb means to fashion, form, or delineate—to shape something deliberately, whether physically or in a drawing. In 1 Kings 7:15 (in an emended reading), it might describe forming the bronze pillars, though textual issues complicate the interpretation. The root is related to artistic or craftsman work, the deliberate shaping of raw material into a finished product. It overlaps with the more common verb for forming/creating, emphasizing the artisan's intentional design.

(1×) The textually uncertain occurrence in 1 Kings 7:15, where some suggest it describes the fashioning of the temple's bronze pillars. The Spanish "Y formó" (and he formed) and the repeated "formed" across languages support this craftsmanship sense. Whether carving, casting, or drawing, the verb captures creative formation, the work of skilled hands bringing form to metal or stone. POTTER AND FORMING

en: and-he-formed | es: Y-formó | fr: et-il-formed | de: und-er-formed 1Kgs 7:15

צוּר H6697 Prep-b (78×)

Rock, cliff, or crag as a physical formation; metaphorically, God as 'the Rock' — protector and refuge; also flint (for cutting) and edge of a blade.

The Hebrew noun tsur (צוּר) anchors itself in the solidity of stone — a rocky cliff, a towering crag, a place where one hides from enemies or where God miraculously brings forth water. Moses struck the tsur at Horeb (Exod 17:6) and at Meribah; the rock yielded honey and oil in the Song of Moses (Deut 32:13). But perhaps the most theologically resonant use is as a divine epithet: 'The Rock, his work is perfect' (Deut 32:4). Spanish distinguishes these neatly — 'roca' for the geological feature, 'Roca' capitalized for the deity — while French uses 'rocher' for both, collapsing the distinction. Two specialized senses round out the word: flint knives for circumcision (Josh 5:2–3), where Spanish shifts to 'pedernales,' and the 'edge' of a sword (Ps 89:43), a rare metonymic extension from stone to sharpened blade.

1. rock, cliff, crag (physical geological formation) (35×) Split from sense 129883. Criteria: Natural stone formations used as landmarks, shelters, water sources; Moses striking the rock at Horeb, wild goats dwelling in crags, Balaam on the rocks en: a-rock, and-rock, from-rock-of | es: a-juicio?, de-la-roca, la-roca | fr: [הצר], de-rocher-de, et-rocher | de: Fels, der-Fels, der-Tyrus Exod 17:6; Exod 33:21; Exod 33:22; Num 23:9

2. Rock (divine epithet) (25×) A metaphorical divine epithet — God as 'the Rock' — denoting his unchanging faithfulness, protective strength, and reliability as a refuge. Concentrated in the Song of Moses (Deut 32:4, 15, 18, 30, 31) and the Davidic psalms (2 Sam 22:3, 32, 47; Ps 18:2, 31, 46), this title often appears with possessive suffixes: 'my Rock,' 'our Rock,' 'their Rock.' Spanish capitalizes 'Roca' and frequently adds 'de' (Roca de Israel), while French maintains 'Rock' as a loanword in some translations, signaling that this is a proper title rather than ordinary vocabulary. The metaphor draws its force from the physical sense — God is as immovable and sheltering as a cliff face. ROCK AND CLIFF en: Rock, Rock-of, a-rock | es: Roca-de, a-la-Roca-de, de-la-Roca-que | fr: Rock, Rock-de, le-Rock | de: Fels, Fels-von, Rock Deut 32:4; Deut 32:15; Deut 32:18; Deut 32:30; Deut 32:31

3. the Rock (metaphorical: God as protector and refuge) (14×) Split from sense 129883. Criteria: Metaphorical usage where 'rock' refers to God as protector, refuge, foundation; theological epithet distinct from physical rock

en: Rock, a-rock-of, and-for-rock-of | es: a-roca-, a-roca-de, en-roca | fr: dans-rocher, et-rocher, rocher | de: Fels, auf-ein-Fels, der-Fels- Deut 32:37; 1Sam 2:2; 2Sam 22:32; Ps 18:31; Ps 27:5

4. (2×) Flint — a specific hard stone variety used for making sharp cutting instruments. Both occurrences cluster in Joshua 5:2–3, where Joshua circumcises the Israelites with flint knives. Spanish 'pedernales' (flints) and English 'flint' converge on this specialized mineral meaning, distinguishing it from generic 'rock.' The BDB entry notes the connection to challamish (another flint word), and the context makes clear that the sharpness and availability of flint, not just any stone, is in view. STONE AND ROCK

en: flint | es: pedernales | fr: flint | de: flint Josh 5:2; Josh 5:3

6. (1×) Edge or sharpened side of a blade — a rare metonymic extension where the stone material is transferred to the cutting instrument itself. In Psalm 89:43 God is said to have turned back the 'edge' of the warrior's sword, where the underlying image is stone sharpness. Spanish renders 'filo de' (edge of), confirming the shift from rock-as-substance to rock-as-cutting-quality. This stands as a unique rhetorical usage within the word's profile. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-edge-of | es: filo-de | fr: rocher | de: der-Fels- Ps 89:43

צוּר H6698 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Zur; a Midianite prince slain by Israel; also a Gibeonite in Benjamin

Zur, meaning 'rock,' is a proper name borne by two distinct individuals in Scripture. The first was a prince of Midian and father of Cozbi, the woman involved in the Baal Peor incident; he was killed alongside four other Midianite kings during Israel's campaign (Num 25:15; 31:8; Josh 13:21). The second Zur was a Gibeonite listed in the Benjaminite genealogy of Chronicles (1 Chr 8:30; 9:36). The name's meaning, 'rock,' is a common theophoric element in Semitic naming.

(5×) A proper name meaning 'rock,' applied to two individuals. The Midianite prince appears in the Baal Peor narrative and subsequent war accounts (Num 25:15; 31:8; Josh 13:21), while the Gibeonite Zur appears in Benjaminite genealogies (1 Chr 8:30; 9:36). All translations transliterate consistently (eng/spa 'Zur/Tsur,' fra 'Tzur,' deu 'Zur'), making no lexical distinction between the two bearers, as context alone disambiguates. PEDAHZUR PERSONAL NAME

en: Tzur, Zur, and-Tsur | es: Tsur, Zur, y-Tsur | fr: Tzur, Zur, [צוּר] | de: Tzur, Zur, [צוּר] Num 25:15; Num 31:8; Josh 13:21; 1Chr 8:30; 1Chr 9:36

צוּרָה H6699 N-fsc / 3ms (6×)

Form, shape, or architectural pattern; the visible design or structure of something, especially a building or plan.

Refers to the visible form, shape, or design of a structure. Nearly all of its occurrences cluster in Ezekiel's grand temple vision (Ezek 43:11), where God commands the prophet to show Israel the tsurat ('form') of the temple so that they may be ashamed of their iniquities and study its pattern. The one occurrence outside Ezekiel appears in Psalm 49:14, where it describes the 'form' of the dead wasting away in Sheol. Spanish 'forma' and English 'form' both capture the core meaning, though the architectural specificity in Ezekiel gives the word a technical flavor beyond mere 'appearance.'

form, pattern, design (6×) The visible form, pattern, or architectural design of a structure or entity. Used almost exclusively in Ezekiel 43:11, where the prophet is commanded to describe the temple's form (tsurat) to Israel — its exits, entrances, regulations, and entire layout. The multilingual glosses converge tightly: English 'form-of,' Spanish 'forma-de,' and French 'forme' all point to a concrete, describable design. In Psalm 49:14, the same word shifts from architectural blueprint to bodily form, describing how death consumes the shape of the wicked in Sheol. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], and-their-form, form-of | es: [kethiv], forma-de, su-forma | fr: Tsophim, forme | de: [צורת], [צורתו], [צורתן] Ps 49:14; Ezek 43:11

צוּרִיאֵל H6700 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zuriel, a Levite leader; name meaning 'my rock is God' or 'God is my rock'

Zuriel was a Levitical leader, head of the father's house of the Merarites during the wilderness wanderings. His name is theophoric, meaning "my rock is God," expressing trust in God's stability and protection. It's one of many names in Numbers that testify to faith convictions, embedding theology in personal identity. The Septuagint preserves the name recognizably, and it stands as one person among the many who organized Israel's worship life in the desert.

(1×) Named in Numbers 3:35 as the leader of the Merarite clan. The name's meaning ("my rock is El") confesses dependence on God. The multilingual consistency (Zuriel in most languages) reflects standard transliteration of Hebrew personal names, anchoring this individual in the roster of Levites who maintained the tabernacle. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Zuriel | es: Suriel | fr: Zuriel | de: Zuriel Num 3:35

צוּרִישַׁדָּי H6701 N-proper-ms (5×)

Zurishaddai; 'my rock is Shaddai,' father of Shelumiel of Simeon

Zurishaddai is a theophoric compound name meaning 'my rock is Shaddai (the Almighty).' He is known solely as the father of Shelumiel, the tribal leader who represented Simeon during the wilderness census and tabernacle dedication. Like Zuar for Issachar, the name appears exclusively in the formulaic expression 'Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai' across five passages in Numbers (1:6; 2:12; 7:36, 41; 10:19). The name itself testifies to the ancient Israelite practice of embedding divine titles within personal names.

(5×) The proper name of Shelumiel's father from the tribe of Simeon, meaning 'my rock is Shaddai.' All five attestations use the patronymic formula 'Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai' in census, camp arrangement, and offering contexts (Num 1:6; 2:12; 7:36, 41; 10:19). Every translation uniformly transliterates the name (eng/deu 'Zurishaddai,' fra 'Tsurishaddaï,' spa 'Zurisadai'), preserving the theophoric compound without variation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zurishaddai | es: Zurisadai, Zurisadai: | fr: Tsurishaddaï | de: Zurishaddai Num 1:6; Num 2:12; Num 7:36; Num 7:41; Num 10:19

יָצַת H6702 V-Hifil-Imperf.h-1cs / 3fse (1×)

to kindle, burn, set on fire (causative); I would set it ablaze

This Hiphil verb means to kindle or set on fire, to cause something to burn. In Isaiah 27:4, God says that if briers and thorns confront him, he would march against them and burn them up together. It's a verb of decisive, consuming action—not accidental fire but deliberate incineration. The image is of divine judgment as fire that utterly destroys opposition, leaving nothing but ash. It's forceful, final, and complete.

(1×) Isaiah 27:4 has God declare that he would set thorns and briers ablaze if they stood against him. The Spanish "los quemaré" (I will burn them) emphasizes the first-person agency. This is God as warrior, using fire as a weapon to clear away what opposes his vineyard (Israel). The verb conveys both power and totality—nothing survives the divine fire. BURNING AND FIRE

en: I-would-burn-it | es: los-quemaré | fr: [אציחנה] | de: [אציחנה] Isa 27:4

צַח H6703 Adj-fp (4×)

dazzling, glowing, bright, clear (of heat, wind, appearance, or speech)

An adjective describing brightness, intensity, or clarity. It appears with 'heat' (glowing heat in Isa 18:4), 'wind' (scorching wind in Jer 4:11), a person (the beloved is 'dazzling white and ruddy' in Song 5:10), and speech ('speak clearly' in Isa 32:4). The core idea is brilliance or clarity, whether visual (dazzling whiteness), thermal (intense heat), or communicative (clear speech). The word evokes purity, intensity, and unobstructed perception.

(4×) Song of Songs 5:10 describes the beloved as 'radiant and ruddy' (צַח וְאָדוֹם), emphasizing his dazzling appearance. Isaiah 18:4 speaks of 'clear heat' or 'glowing heat' during harvest. Isaiah 32:4 promises that tongues will 'speak clearly' (דַּבֵּר צַחוֹת). Jeremiah 4:11 mentions a 'scorching wind' or 'glowing wind.' Spanish claro (clear) and blanco (white) capture the clarity and brightness dimensions; French blanc similarly emphasizes the dazzling whiteness. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: clear, clearly, radiant | es: ardiente-de, claramente, claro | fr: [צח], [צחות], blanc | de: [צח], [צחות] Song 5:10; Isa 18:4; Isa 32:4; Jer 4:11

צָחֶה H6704 Adj-msc (1×)

parched, dried out from thirst or heat

This adjective intensifies the idea of being completely dried out, going beyond ordinary thirst to extreme desiccation. Isaiah uses it to describe people so parched with thirst that they are dying (Isa 5:13). The Spanish 'reseca' captures the sense of thorough drying, while the English 'parched-of' shows the construction with the following noun.

(1×) Describes the state of being extremely dried out or desiccated, especially from lack of water. Isaiah 5:13 depicts the exile's severity: people 'parched with thirst,' showing complete dehydration. This intensive adjective form (note BDB's citation of Gesenius §84b-c) emphasizes the extremity of the condition, not merely thirsty but utterly withered. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: parched-of | es: reseca-de | fr: [צחה] | de: [צחה] Isa 5:13

צָחַח H6705 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be dazzling, gleaming white

This verb describes brilliant whiteness or dazzling appearance, particularly of skin. The Syriac cognate suggests brightness and clarity, while the Aramaic points to polishing. In Lamentations 4:7, it describes the Nazirites' radiant appearance before Jerusalem's fall—their skin 'more dazzling than milk,' whiter than snow. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'eran blancos,' English 'bright') confirms this sense of brilliant whiteness.

(1×) To appear dazzlingly white or brilliant. Lamentations 4:7 uses this to describe the Nazirites' complexion before the siege: 'more dazzling than milk,' parallel to 'whiter than snow.' The verb emphasizes radiant, gleaming whiteness rather than mere color, suggesting skin that shone with health and vigor in contrast to their later emaciated state. WHITE COLOR

en: they-were-bright | es: eran-blancos | fr: [צחו] | de: [צחו] Lam 4:7

צָחִיחַ H6706 N-msc (4×)

bare rock, shining rock surface, exposed and smooth stone

A term for a bare, smooth rock surface—exposed, glaring, and without vegetation or cover. Ezekiel uses it four times in chapters 24 and 26, describing bare rock where blood is placed visibly (24:7-8) and predicting that Tyre will become a bare rock for spreading nets (26:4, 14). Nehemiah 4:7 (Qere) may refer to exposed, open places. The image is desolation: rock stripped of soil, plant life, or any covering—stark and bare.

(4×) Ezekiel 24:7-8 twice uses 'bare rock' (צָחִיחַ סֶלַע) as the place where Jerusalem's blood was poured out—not on dust-covered ground, but on exposed rock that cries out for vengeance. Ezekiel 26:4, 14 prophesy that Tyre will become a 'bare rock,' a desolate place for fishermen to spread nets. Spanish peña (rock) and peña desnuda (bare rock) capture the exposed, barren quality. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: bare | es: peña, peña-desnuda-de | fr: sommet | de: [לצחיח], [צחיח] Ezek 24:7; Ezek 24:8; Ezek 26:4; Ezek 26:14

צְחִיחָה H6707 N-fs (1×)

scorched land, parched desert ground

This noun denotes land that has been scorched or parched by heat. The root suggests extreme dryness, beyond what rain can relieve. Psalm 68:6 uses it to describe the desolate places where God settles the rebellious. The Spanish 'sequedad' and French 'terre desséchée' both capture the sense of thoroughly dried earth, land too parched to support life.

(1×) Land that is scorched and dried to the point of desolation. Psalm 68:6 describes God making rebels dwell 'in a parched land,' suggesting barren desert as both geographical reality and divine judgment. This goes beyond normal aridity to describe earth burned and hardened, inhospitable to human habitation. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: in-a-parched-land | es: en-sequedad | fr: terre-desséchée | de: in-ein-parched-Land Ps 68:6

צָחִיחַ H6708 Prep-b (2×)

bare place, open rock surface; an exposed, glaring place without vegetation or cover

This term describes bare, exposed surfaces—particularly smooth rock faces without vegetation or cover. In Ezekiel's prophecies against Tyre and in Nehemiah's description of Jerusalem's ruined defenses, it denotes open, unprotected places. The word conveys both the physical characteristic of being bare (without covering) and the vulnerability such exposure creates. The image of setting blood on a bare rock emphasizes its visibility, while rebuilding in bare places highlights the defenders' dangerous exposure.

(2×) Ezekiel uses 'bare rock' (24:7-8; 26:4, 14) to describe where blood is placed visibly and where Tyre will become an exposed rock, while Nehemiah 4:13 (appearing twice due to Ketiv/Qere variations) speaks of people stationed 'in bare places' during Jerusalem's rebuilding. Translations vary: English 'bare rock' and 'bare places,' Spanish 'lugares secos' (dry places), French and German mostly transliterate. The common thread is exposure and lack of cover—whether rock devoid of soil or defensive positions without walls. Such bareness makes things visible (blood crying out) or vulnerable (defenders exposed to attack). BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: (on-bare-places), [on-bare-places] | es: (en-lugares-secos), [en-lugares-secos] | fr: [בצחחיים], [בצחיחים] | de: [(בצחיחים)], [[בצחחיים]] Neh 4:13

צַחֲנָה H6709 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

stench, foul smell

This noun refers to a repulsive odor, particularly of decay. Joel 2:20 uses it in parallel with another word for stench to describe the smell of the invading northern army when God drives it away. The doubling of stench-words ('his foul smell' parallel to 'his stench') emphasizes the complete putrefaction of the defeated horde. French 'puanteur' directly captures this sense of repulsive smell.

(1×) A foul, nauseating smell, especially of rotting organic matter. Joel 2:20 depicts God's judgment on the invading army: 'his foul smell will rise up,' paralleled by 'his stench.' The imagery suggests corpses decomposing in the sun, a graphic picture of total defeat.

The Siracide reference (11:12) also uses it for offensive odor. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: his-foul-smell | es: pestilencia-de-él | fr: puanteur | de: [צחנתו] Joel 2:20

צַחֲצָחָה H6710 Prep-b / N-fp (1×)

scorched regions, drought-stricken places

This plural noun describes areas of extreme drought or scorched land. Isaiah 58:11 uses it in God's promise to satisfy His people's needs even in the driest places. The root connects to scorching heat and parched ground. The Spanish 'sequías' (droughts) and the broader context of divine provision in waterless places show this refers to regions where water is desperately scarce.

(1×) Scorched or drought-stricken regions where water is absent and the ground is parched. Isaiah 58:11 contains God's promise: 'He will satisfy your needs in scorched places,' assuring provision even in the most barren environments. This builds on the root idea of land dried by intense heat, emphasizing not just aridity but the burning, scorched quality of the terrain. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: in-scorched-places | es: en-sequías | fr: [בצחצחות] | de: [בצחצחות] Isa 58:11

צָחַק H6711 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (13×)

To laugh (in joy, disbelief, or derision); to mock or jest; to play, sport, or make merry.

Forever associated with the patriarch Isaac, whose very name (Yitschaq, 'he laughs') embodies the range of this verb. In its Qal form it describes Sarah's incredulous laughter at the promise of a son (Gen 18:12-15) and Abraham's joyful laughter (Gen 17:17). The Piel intensifies toward mockery — Ishmael 'mocking' the young Isaac (Gen 21:9), Lot seeming 'as one who jests' to his sons-in-law (Gen 19:14), and Potiphar's wife accusing Joseph (Gen 39:14, 17). Spanish burlarse ('to mock') and German Spott treiben ('to make sport') capture this derisive edge. The same Piel also yields a lighter sense of festive play, as when Israel rose up 'to play' before the golden calf (Exod 32:6) and Samson was made to 'amuse' the Philistines (Judg 16:25).

1. laugh (Qal) (6×) The basic Qal sense of laughing, whether from joy, surprise, or disbelief. Spanish rio/reirá ('laughed/will laugh') and German gelacht ('laughed') converge on spontaneous laughter. Sarah laughed within herself at the seemingly impossible promise (Gen 18:12, 13, 15), Abraham fell on his face and laughed (Gen 17:17), and the proclamation that God 'has made laughter for me' (Gen 21:6) transforms disbelief into celebration. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: I-laughed, and-laughed, laughed | es: Y-rió, reirá, reí | fr: –rire, Je-rit, et-rit | de: du-hast-gelacht, habe-ich-gelacht, hat-gelacht Gen 17:17; Gen 18:12; Gen 18:13; Gen 18:15

2. mock, scoff, jest (Piel) (4×) The Piel sense of mocking, scoffing, deriding, or jesting — laughter directed at someone with contempt or dismissal. Spanish burlarse/burlándose ('to mock/mocking') and German Spott treiben ('to make sport of') highlight the hostile edge. Ishmael mocked Isaac (Gen 21:9), Lot appeared as one who jests when warning his sons-in-law (Gen 19:14), and Potiphar's wife twice accused Joseph of coming 'to mock us' (Gen 39:14, 17). LAUGHTER AND DERISION

en: as-jesting, mocking, to-mock | es: burlándose, como-bromeando, para-burlarse | fr: comme-jesting, moquant, à-mock | de: scherzend, um-Spott-zu-treiben, wie-ein-Scherzender Gen 19:14; Gen 21:9; Gen 39:14; Gen 39:17

3. play, sport, amuse (Piel) (3×) The Piel sense of playing, sporting, entertaining, or making merry — laughter as festive or amorous activity rather than derision. Spanish jugar ('to play') and English 'amuse/play' point to recreational activity. Isaac 'sporting' (caressing) Rebekah revealed their relationship to Abimelech (Gen 26:8), Israel rose up 'to play' in idolatrous revelry at the golden calf (Exod 32:6), and the blinded Samson was made to 'amuse' the Philistine assembly (Judg 16:25). LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: and-amused, laughing, to-play | es: a-jugar, riendo, y-los-divirtió | fr: et-amused, riant, à-play | de: scherzte, und-amused, zu-play Gen 26:8; Exod 32:6; Judg 16:25

צְחֹק H6712 N-ms (2×)

laughter, object of laughter; mirth or being laughed at as a mockery

This word encompasses both joyful laughter and being laughed at in derision. Sarah declares that God has made laughter for her when Isaac is born—everyone who hears will laugh with her in joy. But in Ezekiel, Jerusalem will become 'laughter and derision,' an object of mocking scorn among the nations. The same Hebrew word thus covers the full range from delighted mirth to contemptuous ridicule, with context determining which sense applies.

(2×) Genesis 21:6 celebrates Sarah's joyful laughter at Isaac's birth ('God has made laughter for me'), while Ezekiel 23:32 warns Jerusalem will become 'laughter and derision.' English uses 'laughter' for both, Spanish 'risa,' French 'rire,' though the emotional valence is opposite: Sarah invites others to laugh with her in shared joy, while Jerusalem will be laughed at in shame. The word derives from the same root as Isaac's name (Yitzhak, 'he laughs'), connecting to themes of promise, fulfillment, and divine surprise throughout Genesis. LAUGHTER AND DERISION

en: for-laughter, laughter | es: para-risa, risa | fr: brûlure, rire | de: Lachen, [לצחק] Gen 21:6; Ezek 23:32

צֳחַר H6713 N-ms (1×)

reddish-gray, tawny (of wool or possibly a place name)

This noun appears to describe either a color of wool or possibly a place name. The primary sense is reddish-gray or tawny wool mentioned in Ezekiel 27:18's catalog of Damascus's trading goods. Some scholars suggest it might be 'wool from Zahar' (a location), though this is disputed. The color term fits the context of luxury trade items, while translations vary between 'white' (Spanish, French) and the more technical 'tawny' suggested by BDB.

(1×) A reddish-gray or tawny color, specifically describing wool in the luxury trade of Damascus (Ezekiel 27:18). The exact shade is debated—BDB suggests 'tawny' or 'reddish-gray,' while some translations opt for 'white.' The multilingual evidence shows uncertainty, but the context of fine trade goods suggests a distinctive, valuable color of wool, possibly from a specific region or processing method. WHITE COLOR

en: white | es: blanca | fr: blanc | de: [צחר] Ezek 27:18

צֹחַר H6714 N-proper-ms (5×)

Zohar; father of Ephron the Hittite; also a son of Simeon and a Judahite

Zohar, meaning 'tawny' or 'reddish-white,' is a personal name shared by three individuals. The most prominent is the father of Ephron the Hittite, from whom Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:8; 25:9). A second Zohar was a son of Simeon who went down to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15). A third appears in a Judahite genealogy in Chronicles (1 Chr 4:7). The LXX renders the name as Saar across all occurrences.

(5×) A proper name borne by three distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The Hittite patriarch's father appears in the Machpelah purchase narratives (Gen 23:8; 25:9), a Simeonite in the Egypt migration lists (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15), and a Judahite in the Chronicles genealogy (1 Chr 4:7). Translations consistently transliterate (eng 'Zohar,' spa 'Tzochar,' fra 'Zohar,' deu 'Zochar'), with minor orthographic variation reflecting the tsade-initial consonant cluster. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (and-Tsochar), Zohar, and-Zohar | es: (y-Tsojar), Tzochar, y-Tsojar | fr: Zohar, [וצחר], et-Zohar | de: Zochars, [וצחר], und-Zochar Gen 23:8; Gen 25:9; Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15; 1Chr 4:7

צָחֹר H6715 Adj-fp (1×)

tawny, light-colored (of donkeys)

This adjective describes the color of donkeys, appearing only in Judges 5:10 in Deborah's song. The root relates to colors in the reddish, tawny, or light spectrum. The phrase 'you who ride on tawny donkeys' addresses the wealthy or ruling class, since lighter-colored donkeys were apparently prized. Spanish 'blancas' (white) and the English retention of 'tawny' show the range of interpretation, but the sense is clearly a desirable, distinctive coloring.

(1×) Describes a tawny or light coloring of donkeys, suggesting animals of higher value. Judges 5:10 addresses 'you who sit on tawny donkeys,' apparently referring to leaders or the wealthy class. The specific color marked status or breeding quality. The root connects to reddish-gray or tan hues, distinguishing these animals from common darker donkeys. WHITE COLOR

en: -tawny | es: blancas | fr: -tawny | de: -tawny Judg 5:10

צִי H6716 Prep-b (4×)

ship, seagoing vessel

This word denotes ships or seagoing vessels. It appears to be a loanword from Egyptian, reflecting the international maritime vocabulary of the ancient Near East. Numbers 24:24 mentions ships from Kittim (Cyprus) in Balaam's oracle. Isaiah 33:21 speaks of 'majestic ships' that will not sail on Jerusalem's waters. Ezekiel 30:9 describes messengers going in ships to warn Cush. Daniel 11:30 prophesies that 'ships of Kittim' will come against the northern king. The contexts often involve naval power and international reach.

(4×) Numbers 24:24 prophesies that ships from Kittim will afflict Assyria and Eber. Isaiah 33:21 contrasts Jerusalem's river (no majestic ships) with God's protection. Ezekiel 30:9 mentions messengers in ships going to terrify Cush about Egypt's fall. Daniel 11:30 predicts that ships of Kittim will oppose the king of the North. Spanish naves and French navire (ships) consistently identify this as maritime vessels, often associated with western Mediterranean powers (Kittim/Cyprus). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-ships, in-ships, ships-of | es: Y-naves, en-naves, naves-de | fr: [צִי], et-ships, navire | de: [בִּצִּים], [צִי], [צִיִּים] Num 24:24; Isa 33:21; Ezek 30:9; Dan 11:30

צִיבָא H6717 N-proper-ms (16×)

Ziba — servant of Saul's house and steward of Mephibosheth's estate in the David narratives

A proper name for the servant of the house of Saul who plays a pivotal role in David's dealings with Jonathan's son Mephibosheth. When David seeks to show covenant kindness to Saul's remaining family, Ziba identifies the lame Mephibosheth and is appointed steward of his lands (2 Sam 9:2-12). Later, Ziba meets the fleeing David with provisions during Absalom's revolt and claims Mephibosheth has stayed behind to reclaim the throne, prompting David to transfer the estate (2 Sam 16:1-4). Upon David's return, Mephibosheth disputes Ziba's account, and the king divides the property between them (2 Sam 19:25-30). Rendered 'Siba' in Spanish and 'Tsiba' in French transliterations.

Ziba (personal name) (16×) Ziba (צִיבָא / צִבָא), a personal name for the servant of Saul's household who became steward over Mephibosheth's inherited estate. All sixteen occurrences cluster in 2 Samuel 9, 16, and 19, where Ziba serves as a morally ambiguous figure — loyal servant or self-serving opportunist — whose conflicting testimony about Mephibosheth creates one of the most humanly realistic episodes in the Court History of David. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsiva, Ziba, and-Tsiva | es: Siba, Siba?, Tsibá | fr: Tsiba, et-Tsiba, et-à-Tsiba | de: Tsiva, Ziba, und-Tsiva 2Sam 9:2; 2Sam 9:3; 2Sam 9:4; 2Sam 9:9

צַיִד H6718a Prep-m / N-msc (13×)

Game, prey (hunted animal or meat); hunting (the activity or occupation of pursuing wild game).

Tsayid is the word that fills Isaac's tent with the aroma of wild game. Rooted in the act of hunting, it most often names the quarry itself — the animal caught and brought home for food. The Genesis patriarchal narratives give it vivid life: Isaac loved Esau 'because game was in his mouth' (Gen 25:28), and the dramatic deception scene revolves around preparing tsayid for the aging father (Gen 27:5-33). Spanish caza and French chassant both hover between 'hunt' and 'game,' just as the Hebrew does, while German Wildbret ('venison') zeroes in on the meat. The rarer activity sense appears memorably in Genesis 10:9, where Nimrod is a gibbor tsayid, 'a mighty hunter before the LORD' — a description so famous it became a proverb. Leviticus 17:13 extends the term to any hunted animal or bird whose blood must be properly drained.

1. game, prey (quarry caught) (11×) Game or prey — the animal, meat, or quarry obtained through hunting. This dominant sense (11 occurrences) is concentrated in the Isaac-Esau-Jacob narratives: Isaac sends Esau to 'hunt game' and 'make me savory food' (Gen 27:3-7), Jacob disguises himself and brings 'game' to his father (Gen 27:25, 31, 33), and Esau is described as knowing tsayid ('a man who knows game,' Gen 25:27). Leviticus 17:13 broadens the term to any hunted animal or bird. Spanish caza, French de-chassant-son, and German Wildbret all emphasize the product of the hunt. The word carries a sensory, culinary weight — this is not abstract 'prey' but food on the table, with the taste that Isaac craved. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: from-game-my, from-game-of, from-hunting-his | es: caza, caza-de, caza-de-él | fr: chassant, de-chassant-son, de-game-de | de: Wildbret, [צֵידוֹ], der-Jagd Gen 25:27; Gen 25:28; Gen 27:5; Gen 27:7; Gen 27:19

2. hunting (activity) (2×) Hunting as an activity or occupation, describing the pursuit itself rather than what is caught. Only two occurrences, both in Genesis 10:9, where Nimrod is called gibbor tsayid liphnei YHWH ('a mighty hunter before the LORD'), repeated for emphasis. Spanish cazador, French chasseur, and German Jager all shift to agent nouns or activity terms here, confirming that translators recognize the word as describing what Nimrod does, not what he catches. The phrase became proverbial in Israel — 'like Nimrod, a mighty hunter before the LORD' — enshrining the activity sense in cultural memory. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: hunter, hunting | es: cazador | fr: chassant, chasseur | de: Jäger Gen 10:9

צֵיד H6718b N-msc / 3fs (4×)

provision, food supply (especially for journey or sustenance)

A word for food or provisions, especially supplies taken on a journey or needed for sustenance. Joshua 9:5, 14 refer to the provisions the Gibeonites claimed to have taken for their (supposedly) long journey. Nehemiah 13:15 mentions food being brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath. Job 38:41 speaks of God providing food for the raven. Psalm 132:15 promises abundant provision for Zion. The word emphasizes sustenance and supply, particularly in contexts of travel or need.

(4×) Joshua 9:14 mentions Israelite leaders taking 'some of their provisions' to test the Gibeonites' claim. Nehemiah 13:15 condemns bringing 'food' into Jerusalem on Sabbath. Job 38:41 asks who provides 'food' for the raven when its young cry. Psalm 132:15 promises to 'abundantly bless her provision' (Zion's food supply). Spanish provisión and comida (food, provisions) reflect both travel supplies and general sustenance. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food, from-their-provisions, her-provision | es: Provisión-de-ella, comida, de-su-provisión | fr: [צֵיד], chasse, de-leur-provisions | de: [צֵיד], [צֵידוֹ], ihr-provision Josh 9:14; Neh 13:15; Job 38:41; Ps 132:15

צַיָּד H6719 N-mp (1×)

hunters

This plural noun refers to those who hunt, derived from the root for hunting or trapping. Jeremiah 16:16 uses it in a striking metaphor: God will send first fishermen, then hunters to seek out the exiled Israelites. The hunters represent the thoroughness of God's pursuit—no hiding place will suffice. The multilingual glosses uniformly render it 'hunters,' confirming the straightforward occupational sense.

(1×) People who hunt or trap animals, used metaphorically in Jeremiah 16:16 for divine agents pursuing scattered Israel. God declares He will send 'many hunters' to search out His people from every hiding place. The image suggests relentless pursuit and thorough searching, moving beyond the fishermen's nets to the hunters' tracking skills in mountains and rocks. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: hunters | es: cazadores | fr: [צִידִים] | de: [צִידִים] Jer 16:16

צֵידָה H6720 Conj-w / N-fs (12×)

Provisions or food supplies for a journey; also hunted game or prey brought as food

A feminine noun centered on the idea of food acquired for sustenance, especially for travel. In its dominant usage, it refers to provisions packed for a journey—the bread and supplies Joseph's brothers carried from Egypt (Gen 42:25; 45:21) or the unleavened dough Israel took from Egypt (Exod 12:39). Arabic zād and Korean 양식 both specifically denote 'travel provisions,' confirming this core meaning. A distinct second sense appears in Gen 27:3, where it means hunted game—the venison Esau is sent to catch for Isaac. Spanish caza ('hunt, game') and German Wildbret ('venison') make this distinction unmistakable.

1. provisions, food for a journey (10×) Noun denoting food supplies or provisions prepared for a journey or expedition. Joseph provides provisions for his brothers' return to Canaan (Gen 42:25; 45:21), Joshua commands Israel to prepare provisions for crossing the Jordan (Josh 1:11), and the Gibeonites display dry, moldy provisions as evidence of their supposed long journey (Josh 9:5). Arabic zādan and Korean 양식 both point specifically to travel rations, while Spanish provisiones and French provisions confirm the general meaning. German Wegzehrung ('way-sustenance') beautifully captures the journey-oriented nature of this food. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: and-provisions, provision, provisions | es: provisiones, provisiones-de, provisión | fr: et-provisions, leur-provisions, provision | de: Wegzehrung, ihr-provisions, provision Gen 42:25; Gen 45:21; Exod 12:39; Josh 1:11; Josh 9:5

2. game, hunted prey (2×) A distinct sense referring to hunted game or prey, appearing in Genesis 27:3 where Isaac sends Esau to the field to catch game and prepare a savory dish. Spanish caza ('game, hunt') and German Wildbret ('venison, wild game') clearly separate this from mere travel provisions. The Arabic cognate ṣayd likewise means 'hunting, game,' reflecting the root connection to ṣūd ('to hunt'). The word here refers not to packed rations but to the fresh quarry itself, linking food to the act of hunting. HUNTING ACTIVITY
en: game | es: [caza], caza | fr: game | de: Wildbret Gen 27:3

צִידוֹן H6721 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (22×)

Sidon; the ancient Phoenician coastal city, also the firstborn son of Canaan in the Table of Nations.

Refers to the great Phoenician port city on the Lebanese coast (modern Saida), one of the oldest continuously inhabited cities in the world. In the Table of Nations (Gen 10:15), Sidon appears as the firstborn of Canaan, personifying the city as an ancestor. Scripture pairs Sidon with Tyre as emblems of maritime wealth and pagan culture, and prophets pronounce judgment against it (Ezek 28:21-22; Zech 9:2). Multilingual consistency is striking – virtually every language transliterates the name as 'Sidon' or 'Tsidon,' preserving the original Hebrew sibilant.

Sidon (city) (22×) The proper name of the ancient Phoenician coastal city north of Tyre, and by extension the eponymous son of Canaan (Gen 10:15 = 1 Chr 1:13). All twenty-two occurrences refer to the same geographic entity, whether marking the northern boundary of Canaan (Gen 10:19), identifying it as 'Great Sidon' (Josh 11:8; 19:28), or naming it as a target of prophetic judgment alongside Tyre (Jer 25:22; Ezek 28:21-22). Glosses across languages – 'Sidon' (eng, fra), 'Sidón' (spa), 'Zidon' (deu) – are uniformly transliterative, confirming the proper-noun status. SIDON PHOENICIAN CITY
en: Sidon, Tsidon, and-Sidon | es: Sidón, Tsidon, Tsidón | fr: Sidon, Tsidon, [צִידוֹן] | de: Sidon, Tsidon, Zidon Gen 10:15; Gen 10:19; Gen 49:13; Josh 11:8; Josh 19:28

צִידֹנִי H6722 Art / N-proper-mp (16×)

Sidonian(s) – a gentilic adjective for the people of the Phoenician city of Sidon, sometimes denoting Phoenicians broadly.

The gentilic form of Sidon (Tsidon), this adjective-turned-noun identifies the inhabitants of one of the great Phoenician coastal cities. In earlier biblical usage it often functions as a broad designation for Phoenicians generally: the 'Sidonians' supply cedar from Lebanon (1 Kgs 5:20), and the term overlaps with Tyre (1 Kgs 16:31). The worship of Ashtoreth is specifically attributed to the 'god of the Sidonians' (1 Kgs 11:5, 33; 2 Kgs 23:13). A distinct feminine plural form (tsiddoniyyot) appears once in 1 Kings 11:1, marking the Sidonian women among Solomon's foreign wives.

1. Sidonian(s), people of Sidon (15×) The masculine gentilic noun designating a person or people from the Phoenician city of Sidon, used in both singular and plural. In earlier texts (Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges) it appears to designate Phoenicians broadly – Deuteronomy 3:9 notes that the 'Sidonians' call Hermon by another name, and 1 Kings 5:20 treats Sidonian woodcutters as effectively Tyrian. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish 'sidonios,' French 'Sidoniens,' all transliterating the gentilic. VIRGIN MAIDEN
en: Sidonians, Tsidonians, Tsidonim | es: Y-sidonios, a-los-sidonios, como-los-sidonios | fr: Sidonians, Sidoniens, Sionien | de: Sidonians, Tsidonians, Tsidonim Deut 3:9; Josh 13:4; Josh 13:6; Judg 3:3; Judg 10:12

2. Sidonian women (1×) The feminine plural form (tsiddoniyyot) designating women from Sidon, distinguished by the Hebrew feminine plural suffix -ot. It occurs only in 1 Kings 11:1, listing Sidonian women among the foreign wives of Solomon alongside Moabite, Ammonite, Edomite, and Hittite women. This grammatically marked form highlights the gender-specific context of Solomon's intermarriage narrative. SIDON PHOENICIAN CITY
en: Sidonian-women | es: sidonias | fr: Sidonian-femmes | de: Sidonian-Frauen 1Kgs 11:1

צִיָּה H6723 Adj-fs (16×)

Dryness, drought: the parched quality of arid land; a dry wilderness region; a prolonged period of water scarcity.

The Hebrew noun tsiyyah evokes the scorching desolation of the desert, appearing sixteen times in prophetic poetry and wisdom literature where parched land serves as both literal geography and potent metaphor. Isaiah's servant grows up 'like a root out of dry ground' (Isa 53:2) — tsiyyah here painting the spiritual barrenness from which the Messiah unexpectedly emerges. The prophets pair tsiyyah relentlessly with midbar (wilderness), aravah (desert plain), and shemamah (desolation) to build cumulative images of judgment and exile: Babylon will become 'a dry land and a wilderness' (Jer 51:43). Yet the word also carries seeds of hope — God promises to 'turn the dry land into springs of water' (Isa 41:18; Ps 107:35). Spanish sequedad and French sécheresse capture the abstract dryness, while German Dürre leans toward the temporal drought sense, revealing how the three dimensions of this word — quality, place, and event — resist neat separation.

1. dryness, aridity (10×) Dryness or aridity as an abstract quality — the parched, waterless condition of land, used adjectivally or as an abstract noun. Ten occurrences describe landscapes characterized by desiccation: 'a dry and weary land where there is no water' (Ps 63:1), God transforming desert into pools and 'dry land into springs' (Ps 107:35; Isa 41:18), and the servant of the LORD growing up 'like a root out of dry ground' (Isa 53:2). Spanish sequedad, French sécheresse, and German Dürre all render the abstract state. Jeremiah 2:6 pairs tsiyyah with 'land of deep darkness' in recalling Israel's wilderness wandering, making dryness a metaphor for spiritual desolation. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT
en: drought, dry, dryness | es: seca, sequedad, sequía | fr: aridité, sécheresse | de: Duerre, [צִיָּה], dryness Ps 63:1; Ps 107:35; Isa 41:18; Isa 53:2; Jer 2:6

2. dry land, arid place (5×) A dry land, arid place, or wilderness region — the concrete geographical referent where tsiyyah names an actual locale rather than a quality. Five occurrences point to specific barren territories: the wasteland where outcasts scrape a living (Job 30:3), the wilderness through which God brought water from rock (Ps 78:17; 105:41), the desert that 'shall be glad' at God's coming redemption (Isa 35:1), and Babylon's fate as 'a dry land' (Jer 50:12). Spanish lo árido and French dans la sécheresse shift toward spatial reference. The distinction from sense 1 is that here one could point to the tsiyyah on a map — it is a place, not merely a condition. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: a-dry-land, dry-land, in-the-dry-land | es: en-sequedad, en-sequedades, lo-árido | fr: aridité, dans-sécheresse, et-aridité | de: Duerre, [צִיָּה], in-der-trocknen-Land Job 30:3; Ps 78:17; Ps 105:41; Isa 35:1; Jer 50:12

3. drought (1×) Drought as a temporal climatic event — a prolonged period of severe water scarcity rather than the quality of the land or its location. A single occurrence in Job 24:19 pairs tsiyyah with heat (hom) in describing how 'drought and heat snatch away the snow waters,' the seasonal cycle of scarcity that afflicts the poor. Spanish sequía and French sécheresse here carry the temporal sense of a drought season. The pairing with heat as a parallel natural force distinguishes this from the adjectival or geographical senses — tsiyyah here names something that happens in time, not something that simply exists as a landscape feature. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: drought | es: Sequía | fr: sécheresse | de: [צִיָּה] Job 24:19

צִיּוֹן H6724 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

dry ground, parched land; desert heat or waterless wilderness conditions

Isaiah uses this term for extreme dryness and heat, particularly in similes describing God's salvation. Just as shade brings relief from desert heat, so God shelters His people. Like streams in parched ground, His coming brings refreshment to the weary. The word evokes the harsh conditions of the wilderness—sun-scorched earth without water, the thirst and heat that make shade and water precious. In Isaiah's poetry, this physical reality becomes a metaphor for spiritual need and divine provision.

(2×) Both occurrences are in Isaiah's oracles (25:5; 32:2), using 'dry land' or 'parched ground' in similes for God's sheltering presence. English translations give 'dry land' and 'shadow,' Spanish uses 'sequedad/sequía' (dryness/drought), French 'Sion' and German 'Zion' seem confused with the place name (צִיּוֹן). The proper meaning is parched, waterless ground—the burning desert where shade becomes precious and streams miraculous. Isaiah's images draw power from this environmental reality: anyone who has experienced desert heat immediately grasps the relief of shade and water, making them perfect metaphors for salvation. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT en: in-dry-land, like-the-shadow | es: en-sequedad, en-sequía | fr: à-Sion | de: in-Zion Isa 25:5; Isa 32:2

צִיּוּן H6725 N-mp (3×)

sign-post, marker, monument; a physical indicator used for navigation, commemoration, or identification

The term refers to markers or monuments—physical signs that communicate information. In 2 Kings 23:17, it's a gravestone marking a prophet's tomb. Jeremiah 31:21 calls for setting up road markers or guideposts to remember the way home from exile. Ezekiel 39:15 describes markers placed beside human bones found in the land. The function shifts from commemoration to navigation to identification, but the core idea remains: a visible sign communicating to those who pass by. The multilingual evidence varies—some see proper nouns (French 'Sion', German 'Zion'), while most recognize common markers or monuments.

(3×) The three contexts reveal different purposes for markers: memorial (gravestone), navigational (road signs), and identificatory (bone markers). Jeremiah's 'road markers' guide returning exiles, while Ezekiel's markers flag locations needing burial. The diversity in translations (Spanish 'monumento/señal', French debates between 'Sion' and 'marker') reflects the word's functional range. What unites them is visibility and communication—these markers tell people something important about place, memory, or presence. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: marker, road-markers, the-marker | es: el-monumento, señal, señales | fr: Sion, [צִיֻּנִים], le-marker | de: Zion, [צִיֻּנִים], der-marker 2Kgs 23:17; Jer 31:21; Ezek 39:15

צִיּוֹן H6726 N-proper-fs (154×)

Zion — the fortified hill of Jerusalem, extending to denote the holy city, its temple mount, and God's covenant people

Zion (tsiyyon) originally designated the Jebusite stronghold on the southeastern ridge of Jerusalem captured by David and renamed the City of David (2 Sam 5:7). Over time the name expanded to encompass the Temple mount, the entire city, and by poetic metonymy the people of God themselves. The prophets especially favor Zion as a theological symbol: 'daughter of Zion' personifies Jerusalem in her vulnerability and hope (Isa 1:8; Zech 9:9). Across all 154 occurrences the name carries a weight of divine election, dwelling, and future restoration that no mere toponym could convey.

Zion (place name) (154×) The proper noun Zion, originally the fortified ridge captured by David (2 Sam 5:7; 1 Chr 11:5), later extended to the Temple mount and the whole city of Jerusalem. In prophetic and poetic usage it becomes a theological symbol for God's chosen dwelling place and, by metonymy, his covenant people — as when Isaiah speaks of the 'daughter of Zion' (Isa 1:8). Translation languages consistently transliterate rather than translate: Spanish 'Sion,' French 'Sion,' German 'Zion.' ZION HOLY MOUNTAIN

en: Tsiyon, Tsiyyon, Zion | es: Sion, Sión, Tsiyon | fr: Sion | de: Zion 2Sam 5:7; 1Kgs 8:1; 2Kgs 19:21; 2Kgs 19:31; 1Chr 11:5

צִיחָא H6727 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Ziha; personal name of an overseer of temple servants, whose descendants returned from exile

Ziha was an overseer of the Nethinim (temple servants) whose family line is mentioned in post-exilic records. The 'sons of Ziha' appear in both Ezra's and Nehemiah's lists of returning exiles, indicating a recognized family group that maintained temple service responsibilities. Nehemiah 11:21 identifies Ziha himself as overseeing the Nethinim. The name appears in three passages documenting the restoration community's organization and genealogy. Cross-linguistic evidence shows minor spelling variations (Siha, Sijá, Tsicha) but consistent recognition of this as a personal name linked to temple administration.

(3×) The three references span Ezra 2:43, Nehemiah 7:46 (parallel lists of returnees), and Nehemiah 11:21 (leadership structure). The 'sons of Ziha' formed a recognized family unit among the Nethinim, with Ziha himself serving as an overseer. The bracketed forms in German and French reflect the morphological variations (with or without conjunctions, slight spelling differences), but all identify the same individual or family line involved in post-exilic temple service. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsicha, Ziha, and-Tsicha | es: Siha, Sijá, y-Ziha | fr: [וְצִיחָא], [צִחָא], [צִיחָא] | de: [וְצִיחָא], [צִחָא], [צִיחָא] Ezra 2:43; Neh 7:46; Neh 11:21

צִי H6728 Prep-l / N-mp (6×)

Desert creature or wild beast; by extension, a desert-dweller or wilderness inhabitant

Found exclusively in prophetic oracles of desolation, tsiyyi evokes the eerie wildlife that reclaims abandoned cities. Isaiah 13:21 and 34:14 list these creatures alongside howling beasts (iyyim), painting ruins where only jackals and wild cats prowl. The exact zoological identification remains uncertain – Arabic cognates suggest a wild cat or yelping desert animal. In Psalm 72:9 the word may shade toward human desert-dwellers who bow before the king, and in Psalm 74:14 God gives Leviathan as food 'to the people of the wilderness.' Spanish distinguishes neatly: 'bestias del desierto' for the animal sense, 'moradores del desierto' for the human one.

1. desert creature, wild beast (3×) A wild beast or creature of the desert, inhabiting desolate ruins. Isaiah 13:21 and 34:14 pair tsiyyim with iyyim (howling creatures) to depict total devastation. Jeremiah 50:39 prophesies that Babylon will be home to these animals. Spanish 'bestias del desierto' and English 'wild creatures' reflect the zoological reading, though the exact species remains debated. VENGEANCE AND RETRIBUTION

en: desert-creatures, wild-beasts, wild-creatures | es: bestias-del-desierto | fr: [צִיִּים] | de: [צִיִּים] Isa 13:21; Isa 34:14; Jer 50:39

2. desert dweller, wilderness inhabitant (3×) Desert-dwellers or wilderness inhabitants, possibly denoting nomadic peoples or ambiguously human figures. Psalm 72:9 envisions those 'of the desert' bowing before the king, and Psalm 74:14 speaks of Leviathan given as food to a 'people of the wilderness.' Spanish 'moradores del desierto' and German 'Wueste-dwellers' mark the shift from animal to human referent. VENGEANCE AND RETRIBUTION

en: desert-dwellers, for-desert-creatures, of-the-desert | es: moradores-del-desierto, para-moradores-del-desierto | fr: [לְצִיִּים], animal-du-désert, à-animal-du-désert | de: Wüste-dwellers, [לְצִיִּים], von-der-Wüste Ps 72:9; Ps 74:14; Isa 23:13

צִינָק H6729 Art / N-ms (1×)

pillory, restraining collar or stocks

This noun denotes an instrument of punishment and public humiliation, likely a wooden collar or stocks that restrained prisoners. Jeremiah 29:26 mentions it alongside 'stocks' as tools for restraining mad prophets. The context shows it was used by authorities to control and shame those deemed troublemakers. Spanish 'argolla' (ring, collar) points to the restraining function, while the parallel term confirms it was a device for physical constraint.

(1×) A restraining device, probably a collar or pillory used to punish and publicly shame prisoners. Jeremiah 29:26 describes the temple officer's authority to put any madman who prophesies 'in the pillory and collar,' showing it was paired with stocks for maximum restraint and humiliation. The device both restricted movement and marked the wearer as condemned. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: the-collar | es: la-argolla | fr: [הַצִּינָק] | de: [הַצִּינָק] Jer 29:26

צִיעֹר H6730 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Zior, a town in the hill country of Judah

This proper noun identifies a town in the hill country near Hebron, listed among Judah's inheritance in Joshua 15:54. Modern identification places it at Ṣâʿîr, about five miles north-northeast of Hebron according to Buhl's geography. The Septuagint renders it variously as Σωρθ or Σιωρ. The multilingual glosses preserve the name in transliteration, reflecting its status as a geographical designation.

(1×) A town name in the tribal allotment of Judah (Joshua 15:54), located in the hill country region. Geographical sources identify it with modern Ṣâʿîr near Hebron. The name appears in the territorial lists defining Judah's inheritance, one of many settlements in the central highlands that formed the tribe's core territory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Tzior | es: y-Sior | fr: et-Tzior | de: und-Tzior Josh 15:54

צִיץ H6731a Conj-w / N-ms (14×)

A flower or blossom; also the gold plate (rosette) on the high priest's turban inscribed 'Holy to the LORD.'

A word that bridges the garden and the sanctuary. Most often it denotes a flower or blossom — Isaiah 40:6–8 uses it in the famous passage where 'the grass withers, the flower fades, but the word of our God stands forever.' Numbers 17:8 records Aaron's rod budding with blossoms (tsits), and 1 Kings 6:18–35 describes carved flower ornaments throughout Solomon's temple. But the same word also names the gold plate fastened to the high priest's turban (Exod 28:36; 39:30; Lev 8:9), inscribed with 'Holy to the LORD.' Arabic clearly distinguishes the two: zuhurin ('flowers') for the botanical sense and safihata ('a metal plate') for the priestly diadem — confirming these as genuinely separate meanings rather than metaphorical extension.

1. flower, blossom (botanical) (11×) A flower or blossom, whether literal or figurative. Numbers 17:8 describes Aaron's rod producing blossoms as a divine sign. Isaiah 40:6–8 and Psalm 103:15 use the fading flower as a metaphor for human transience — 'as a flower of the field, so he flourishes.' Job 14:2 likewise compares human life to a flower that comes forth and withers. In 1 Kings 6:18–35, carved flower designs (tsitsim) adorn the interior of the temple. German 'Blüte' and Spanish 'flor' consistently render this botanical sense. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: and-the-fading, blossom, blossoms | es: Como-flor, como-flor, como-flor-de | fr: [וְצִיץ], [כְּצִיץ], [צִיץ] | de: Bluete, [וְצִיץ], [כְּצִיץ] Num 17:8; 1Kgs 6:18; 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 6:35

2. plate, rosette (of gold, priestly headpiece) (3×) The gold plate or rosette affixed to the front of the high priest's turban. Exodus 28:36 commands making a plate of pure gold engraved 'Holy to the LORD,' and Exodus 39:30 and Leviticus 8:9 record its fabrication and placement. Arabic safihata ('a plate/sheet of metal') sharply distinguishes this from the floral sense. Spanish 'lámina' (plate/sheet) and 'placa' also reflect a metalworking term. The connection to the flower sense may lie in the rosette shape of the plate, but functionally this is a distinct cultic object — a sacred insignia of priestly consecration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: plate, plate-of, the-plate-of | es: diadema-de, lámina-de, placa-de | fr: le-plate-de, plate, plate-de | de: Platte, Platte-von, der-plate-von Exod 28:36; Exod 39:30; Lev 8:9

צִיץ H6731b N-ms (1×)

wings (possibly wing-feathers, meaning uncertain)

This noun's meaning is debated, but the most common interpretation is 'wings' in the collective sense. Jeremiah 48:9 contains the difficult phrase 'give wings to Moab,' which most scholars understand as a call for Moab to flee swiftly, as if on wings. The Aramaic cognate means wing or fin, supporting this interpretation. However, the Septuagint's 'markers' led some to suggest 'signpost,' and Perles proposed reading 'feathers.' The wing interpretation fits the flight imagery of the context.

(1×) Wings or wing-feathers, used in the metaphorical command 'give wings to Moab' (Jeremiah 48:9), meaning let Moab flee swiftly. The Aramaic cognates support the 'wing' interpretation, fitting the context of rapid escape from judgment. Though some scholars suggest alternative readings ('signpost' or 'feathers'), the wing imagery best captures the urgency of flight from divine destruction. WING BODY PART

en: wings | es: alas | fr: [צִיץ] | de: [צִיץ] Jer 48:9

צִיץ H6732 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ziz, the name of an ascent near the Dead Sea

This place name appears in 2 Chronicles 20:16, referring to an ascent or pass used by invading armies approaching from the Dead Sea region. The 'ascent of Ziz' was the route by which Moabites and Ammonites came up against Jehoshaphat. Buhl's geography identifies it with Wady Ḥaṣâṣâ and the plateau Ḥaṣâṣâ north of Engedi. The Septuagint renderings vary, but the location is clearly a recognized geographical feature in Judean topography.

(1×) The name of a mountain pass or ascent near the Dead Sea (2 Chronicles 20:16), by which invading forces approached Judah from the east. Modern scholars connect it with terrain north of Engedi. The name marks a strategic route through the wilderness, used by armies moving from the Dead Sea basin up into the Judean highlands. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ziz | es: Sis | fr: [הַצִּיץ] | de: [הַצִּיץ] 2Chr 20:16

צִיצָה H6733 N-fsc (1×)

blossom, flower (in construct state)

This noun refers to a flower or blossom, appearing in Isaiah 28:4 in construct form. The verse speaks of 'the fading flower' of Ephraim's glory, using floral imagery to depict something beautiful but transient. The Spanish 'flor' (flower) aligns with this botanical sense, while English 'fading' captures the adjective but not the noun itself. The reference note indicates this is the same root as the more common word for flower or blossom.

(1×) A blossom or flower, used metaphorically in Isaiah 28:4 for the fading glory of Ephraim. The prophet depicts the northern kingdom's splendor as 'the fading flower of its glorious beauty,' emphasizing impermanence. The floral image stresses vulnerability—what blooms brightly soon withers, just as Israel's pride would wilt under Assyrian invasion. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: the-fading | es: flor | fr: [ציצת] | de: [ציצת] Isa 28:4

צִיצָת H6734 N-fs (4×)

tassel, fringe (on garment); lock of hair

This word has two related uses: ritual tassels on garment corners and a lock of hair on the forehead. Numbers 15:38-39 three times commands Israel to make tassels (fringes) on the corners of their garments as a reminder of God's commandments. These became the tzitzit still worn by observant Jews. Ezekiel 8:3 uses the word for a lock of hair on the prophet's forehead by which he was lifted in a vision. Both uses involve something that hangs or projects prominently.

(4×) Numbers 15:38 (twice) and 15:39 establish the command to make tassels on garment corners with a blue cord, serving as a visual reminder to obey God's commands. Ezekiel 8:3 describes being grabbed by a 'lock of hair' (צִיצָת רֹאשִׁי) and lifted in a vision. Spanish flecos (fringes) and French frange (fringe) capture the garment tassel, while the Ezekiel context shows the same term applied to a prominent lock of hair. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-lock-of, for-tassel, tassel | es: fleco-de, flecos, para-fleco | fr: frange, pour-tassel, tassel | de: [בציצת], fuer-tassel, tassel Num 15:38; Num 15:39; Ezek 8:3

צִיר H6735a Conj-w / N-msc (6×)

Envoy, messenger, or ambassador sent on an official mission, whether human or divine.

Denotes an official envoy or messenger dispatched on a diplomatic or prophetic errand. In Jeremiah 49:14 and Obadiah 1, the envoy is sent by the LORD himself to rally nations against Edom. Isaiah 18:2 describes swift messengers (tsirim) sent by sea from Cush, while Isaiah 57:9 condemns Israel for sending her own envoys to foreign powers. In Proverbs, the word takes on a more general sense: a faithful messenger (tsir emunim) refreshes the soul like cold snow at harvest (Prov 25:13), while a wicked messenger falls into trouble (Prov 13:17).

envoy, messenger, ambassador (6×) An official envoy, messenger, or ambassador dispatched on a mission of diplomatic or prophetic significance. Spanish 'embajadores' and 'mensajero' capture the dual register — formal ambassador and general messenger. The word appears in both prophetic oracles (Jer 49:14 = Obad 1, where the LORD sends an envoy among the nations; Isa 18:2, messengers from Cush; Isa 57:9, Israel's envoys to pagan allies) and wisdom literature (Prov 13:17, a faithful messenger; Prov 25:13, a trustworthy envoy compared to refreshing cold snow). Despite its assignment to the 'Supernatural' domain, the word itself denotes human agents, though they may carry divine mandates. ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: a-messenger, and-an-envoy, and-envoy | es: embajadores, mensajero, tus-mensajeros | fr: [וציר], [צירים], [צרירך] | de: [וציר], [ציר], [צירים] Prov 13:17; Prov 25:13; Isa 18:2; Isa 57:9; Jer 49:14

צִיר H6735b N-msc / 3fs (1×)

hinge, pivot (of a door)

This noun denotes the pivot or hinge on which a door turns. Proverbs 26:14 uses it in a vivid simile comparing a sluggard turning in bed to a door turning on its hinge—both rotate in place without going anywhere. The image perfectly captures futile activity: much motion, no progress. The Spanish 'gozne' preserves this technical meaning of the hardware that allows rotational movement.

(1×) The pivot or hinge mechanism that allows a door to swing open and closed. Proverbs 26:14 employs memorable imagery: 'As a door turns on its hinge, so a sluggard turns on his bed.' The comparison highlights purposeless rotation—the door swings but stays in its frame, just as the lazy person rolls over without rising. The hinge becomes a symbol of motion without progress. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: its-hinges | es: su-gozne | fr: sa-צירה-elle | de: [ציר] Prov 26:14

צִיר H6735c N-mp (5×)

pangs, writhing pains; birth-like anguish from terror or distress

This noun denotes sharp, convulsive pangs, especially those likened to the agony of childbirth. In 1 Samuel 4:19, the wife of Phinehas literally goes into labor pains upon hearing of the ark's capture. Isaiah uses the image metaphorically for the terror that seizes Babylon (13:8) and the prophet himself at the vision of judgment (21:3). Daniel 10:16 extends the usage to describe the overwhelming physical effects of visionary anguish. The root suggests writhing or twisting, capturing the involuntary bodily convulsion of extreme pain.

(5×) Sharp pangs or convulsive pains, typically compared to or derived from childbirth. The literal birth-pang sense appears in 1 Sam 4:19, while Isaiah deploys it as a simile for existential terror (Isa 13:8 alongside 'labor pains,' Isa 21:3 describing the prophet's own visceral dread). Daniel 10:16 extends it to visionary distress. The multilingual evidence converges on pain vocabulary (spa 'dolores,' eng 'pangs/pains'), with the French and German forms retained in brackets, confirming the unified semantic core of involuntary anguished writhing. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: her-pains, like-pangs-of, my-pains | es: como-dolores-de, dolores, dolores-mis | fr: [כצירי], [צירים], messager | de: [כצירי], [צירי], [צירים] 1Sam 4:19; Isa 13:8; Isa 21:3; Dan 10:16

צִיר H6736 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (2×)

image, form; possibly idols or the form/appearance of a person

This rare word appears in contexts suggesting either physical images (idols) or the form or appearance of something. Isaiah uses it of idol-makers who will be ashamed, while Psalm 49's difficult text may refer to human form or appearance descending to Sheol. The semantic range seems to encompass both crafted images and natural form or shape. The word shares roots with terms for rock and formation, suggesting something shaped or formed.

(2×) Isaiah 45:16 speaks of makers of 'images' (apparently idols) being ashamed, while Psalm 49:14's Ketiv reading uses the word in a difficult phrase about form descending to Sheol. English gives 'idols' and a Ketiv note about 'form,' Spanish similarly. The word's rarity makes precise definition challenging, but contexts suggest shaped or formed things—whether human-crafted idols or the natural form/appearance of the human body. The connection to 'tzur' (rock, form) may indicate something carved or shaped, whether by artisan hands or divine creation. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: [ketiv:their-form], idols | es: [ketiv], ídolos | fr: [צירים], idole | de: [ketiv:their-form], [צירים] Ps 49:14; Isa 45:16

צִיר H6737 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

to take provisions, supply oneself with food for a journey

This denominative verb from the noun for 'provisions' means to supply oneself with food or take provisions for a journey. Joshua 9:4 and 9:12 use it of the Gibeonites' deception—they claimed to have provisioned themselves long ago for a distant journey, showing worn-out bread as proof. The verb appears in Hithpael, suggesting a reflexive action: they supplied themselves. The multilingual glosses show confusion (English 'disguised,' Spanish 'made themselves ambassadors'), but the root sense is taking provisions.

(1×) To supply oneself with provisions or take food for a journey. Joshua 9:4, 12 uses this verb (in Hithpael) to describe the Gibeonites' claim: 'this bread we took as our provision' when leaving home, allegedly weeks ago. The verb emphasizes the act of preparing travel food. Textual variants suggest v. 4 should also read this verb rather than 'disguised themselves,' maintaining consistency with the provision theme. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-disguised-themselves | es: y-se-hicieron-pasar-por-embajadores | fr: et-disguised-eux-mêmes | de: und-disguised-sich-selbst Josh 9:4

צֵל H6738 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (49×)

Shadow, shade; protective covering or shelter; fleeting transience of human life

A richly layered Hebrew noun spanning the physical and metaphorical. In its most frequent use, tsel pictures God's sheltering presence – the 'shadow of the Almighty' (Ps 91:1), the 'shadow of Your wings' (Ps 17:8) – where shade from the scorching sun becomes a powerful image of divine refuge. Literally it denotes the shadow cast by trees, rocks, or a sundial (2 Kgs 20:9-11). Wisdom literature draws on a third nuance: life passes 'like a shadow' (1 Chr 29:15; Ps 144:4), capturing the brevity and insubstantiality of human days.

1. shadow/shade (protection, shelter) (25×) The predominant biblical use: shadow as protective shelter or refuge. The psalmist cries out for safety 'in the shadow of Your wings' (Ps 17:8; 57:1), while Ezekiel and Hosea apply it to the sheltering shade of great trees representing kingdoms. Translations across Spanish (sombra de), German (Schatten), and French consistently render this with words for protective shade, confirming the metaphor's universality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-its-shadow, and-in-shadow-of, and-in-the-shadow-of | es: a-sombra-de, bajo-su-sombra, con-sombra-de | fr: [בצל], [בצלו], [ובצלו] | de: Schatten, [בצל], [בצלו] Gen 19:8; Judg 9:15; Ps 17:8; Ps 36:7; Ps 57:1

2. shade, shadow (literal) (15×) The concrete, physical sense: the dark patch cast when an object blocks sunlight. Notably important in the Hezekiah narrative (2 Kgs 20:9-11), where the shadow on the steps of Ahaz retreats ten steps as a divine sign. Also appears in Jotham's fable (Judg 9:36) and descriptions of tree canopy shade (Job 40:22). Multilingual glosses uniformly use literal 'shadow' equivalents here. SHADOW AND SHADE
en: for-shade-, for-the-shadow, from-heat | es: en-la-sombra, la-sombra, para-la-sombra | fr: [בצל], [צל], le-shadow | de: Schatten, [בצל], [צל] Num 14:9; Judg 9:36; 2Kgs 20:9; 2Kgs 20:10

3. shadow (transience, ephemerality) (9×) Shadow as a figure of ephemerality and human frailty. Always appearing in similes – 'like a shadow' (ke-tsel) – this sense pervades wisdom and lament poetry: days decline like a shadow (Ps 102:11), a person flees like a shadow (Job 14:2), and earthly wealth proves as insubstantial as shade that vanishes (1 Chr 29:15). German wie-ein-Schatten and Spanish como-sombra capture this simile structure faithfully. SHADOW AND SHADE
en: like-a-shadow, like-shadow, like-the-shadow | es: Como-sombra, como-sombra, como-sombra-de | fr: [כצל], comme-ombre, ombre | de: Schatten, [כצל], wie-ein-Schatten 1Chr 29:15; Job 14:2; Job 17:7; Ps 102:11; Ps 109:23

צְלָא H6739 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

to pray; an Aramaic verb meaning to bow in prayer or make supplication to God

This Aramaic verb, appearing only in Ezra and Daniel, means to pray or make supplication. Daniel prays three times daily at his open window despite the king's decree, while Ezra speaks of the Jews praying for the life of the Persian king and his sons. The word originally meant to bow or prostrate oneself, reflecting the physical posture of ancient prayer. It shares roots with similar terms in Syriac and Arabic, showing the common Semitic understanding of prayer as humble bowing before the divine.

(2×) Found in Ezra 6:10 (praying for the king) and Daniel 6:10 (Daniel praying despite prohibition), this Aramaic verb consistently translates as 'pray' or 'praying': Spanish 'orando,' French 'prier,' German similar. The Daniel passage is especially significant—his refusal to cease praying demonstrates that worship of God cannot be legislated away by human decree. The word's root sense of 'bowing' reminds us that biblical prayer involves physical posture reflecting spiritual humility, not merely mental meditation. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)
en: and-praying | es: y-orando | fr: [ומצלין], et-prier | de: [ומצלא], [ומצלין] Ezra 6:10; Dan 6:10

צָלָה H6740 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to roast; cooking meat by direct heat or fire, as distinguished from boiling

The verb means to roast meat—cooking by fire rather than water. In 1 Samuel 2:15, worshipers want to give the priest raw meat 'to roast' rather than boiled portions. Isaiah 44:16, 19 satirize idol-making: the same wood roasts meat for dinner and becomes a god to worship. The distinction between roasting and boiling was ritually significant (Exodus 12:8-9 requires the Passover lamb roasted, not boiled). The multilingual evidence is straightforward: 'roast' across languages, with verb forms indicating action (he roasts, I roast, to roast). This is basic culinary vocabulary with theological overtones.

(3×) First Samuel presents roasting in a priestly context—the preferred cooking method at the sanctuary. Isaiah's ironic portrait shows someone roasting meat ('I roast flesh, I eat') with fuel that also serves his idolatry. The contrast with boiling (Exodus 12:9: 'not boiled in water') marks roasting as the prescribed method for sacred meals. The cross-linguistic consistency ('asa', 'roast', 'rôti') reflects the universal cooking technique, while biblical usage highlights ritual propriety and Isaiah's devastating critique of idolatry. BOIL COOK FOOD
en: I-roast, he-roasts, to-roast | es: asa, asé, para-asar | fr: [אצלה], [יצלה], à-roast | de: [אצלה], [יצלה], zu-roast 1Sam 2:15; Isa 44:16; Isa 44:19

צִלָּה H6741 N-proper-fs (3×)

Zillah; personal name of Lamech's wife in the Cainite genealogy

Zillah was one of Lamech's two wives mentioned in Genesis 4. The name appears three times in the narrative of Lamech's family, which includes the first recorded bigamy and Lamech's violent boast. Zillah bore Tubal-cain (the first metalworker) and Naamah. The name may derive from the root for 'shade' or 'shadow,' though the text doesn't explain its meaning. Cross-linguistic renderings are consistent (Tsillah, Tsilá, Zilla), treating this as a straightforward proper noun from the antediluvian genealogy.

(3×) Genesis 4:19 introduces Zillah as Lamech's wife; verses 22-23 name her again in genealogical and narrative contexts. She represents part of the Cainite line that develops early civilization (metalworking, music) but also displays violence and pride. The multilingual evidence shows minor spelling variations (with/without conjunctions: 'And-Zillah', 'Zillah') but uniform recognition of this as a woman's name from humanity's early generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: And-Tsillah, Tsillah, and-Tsillah | es: Tsilá, Y-Tsilá, y-Tsilá | fr: Et-Tsillah, Tsillah, et-Tsillah | de: Zilla, und-Zilla Gen 4:19; Gen 4:22; Gen 4:23

צְלוֹל H6742 N-msc (2×)

round loaf or cake of bread, particularly of barley bread

This word appears in the famous account of Gideon's eavesdropping, where a Midianite soldier dreams of a barley loaf tumbling into camp and overturning a tent. The word denotes a round, flat cake of bread, the humble food of common people. Barley bread was considered inferior to wheat bread, making the image even more striking: this modest loaf represents Israel overthrowing the mighty Midianite army. The word appears twice in the verse due to Ketiv-Qere textual variation.

(2×) Both occurrences are in Judges 7:13 (Ketiv and Qere readings), describing the barley loaf in the Midianite's dream. Translations give 'loaf' or 'cake': Spanish 'torta,' French and German with similar forms. The round, flat cake was typical bread form in the ancient world, baked on hot stones or griddles. That it was barley—not wheat—emphasized Israel's humble state compared to the abundant Midianite camp. Yet this small, simple loaf overturns the tent, perfectly foreshadowing Gideon's unlikely victory through God's power rather than military might. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: (loaf-of), [cake] | es: [k], torta | fr: [cake], [loaf-de] | de: [cake], [loaf-von] Judg 7:13

צָלַח H6743a V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (10×)

To rush upon, come mightily; of the Spirit's sudden empowerment, fire breaking forth, or swift physical movement.

One of the most vivid verbs in the Hebrew Bible, used primarily for the Spirit of YHWH rushing upon individuals to empower them for extraordinary feats. Samson tears a lion apart when the Spirit 'rushes upon' him (Judg 14:6), and Saul is transformed when it 'rushes upon' him at Gibeah (1 Sam 10:10). Spanish 'vino con poder' (came with power) beautifully captures the irresistible, sudden descent. The root extends metaphorically to fire blazing forth (Amos 5:6) and literally to soldiers rushing across the Jordan (2 Sam 19:17).

1. to rush upon, come mightily upon (of the Spirit) (8×) The Spirit of YHWH rushing or coming mightily upon a person, empowering them for heroic or prophetic action. This is the dominant and most theologically significant use, attested eight times across Judges and 1 Samuel. Spanish 'vino con poder' and French 'se precipita' both convey the sudden, overwhelming descent. Key passages: Judg 14:6, 19 (Samson), Judg 15:14 (Samson at Lehi), 1 Sam 10:6, 10 (Saul's transformation), 1 Sam 11:6 (Saul's righteous anger). PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: and-rushed, and-she-rushed, and-will-rush | es: Y-vendrá, Y-vino, Y-vino-con-poder | fr: et-elle-se-précipita, et-fera-rush, et-rushed | de: und-rushed, und-sie-rushed, und-wird-rush Judg 14:6; Judg 14:19; Judg 15:14; 1Sam 10:6; 1Sam 10:10

2. to break out, blaze forth (of fire) (1×) Fire or wrath breaking forth or blazing out suddenly, a metaphorical extension of the rushing root. Amos 5:6 warns 'lest he rush like fire upon the house of Joseph.' English 'breaks out' and Spanish 'se lance' convey the sudden eruption, while the French rendering 'prosperer' (prosper) appears to confuse this verb with the homonymous H6743b (succeed/prosper), underscoring the importance of distinguishing the two roots. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: breaks-out | es: se-lance | fr: prospérer | de: [יצלח] Amos 5:6

3. to rush through, cross swiftly (1×) Swift physical movement through terrain, as in soldiers crossing or rushing through a space. 2 Samuel 19:17 describes David's men rushing into the Jordan to escort the king. Spanish 'cruzaron' (they crossed) and French 'se precipita' (rushed) confirm rapid, purposeful traversal rather than divine empowerment or fiery eruption. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-they-rushed | es: y-cruzaron | fr: et-ils-se-précipita | de: und-sie-rushed 2Sam 19:17

צָלְחַ H6743b V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (55×)

To prosper, succeed, or cause to prosper; also to be fit or useful for a purpose.

A verb of success and flourishing that runs from Joseph's household in Egypt to Daniel's visions of warring kings. In its intransitive Qal and Hifil forms it describes people, plans, and even the 'purpose of the LORD' prospering (Isa 53:10). The causative Hifil adds a theological layer: God is the one who 'causes to prosper,' as Abraham's servant confesses when his mission succeeds (Gen 24:21, 40, 42). A third, more pragmatic sense appears in Jeremiah and Ezekiel, where ruined objects are 'no longer fit' for any use (Jer 13:7, 10) — Spanish 'servir' and the question '¿Servirá?' ('Will it be useful?') capture this functional meaning well.

1. prosper, succeed (intransitive) (40×) To prosper, succeed, or thrive intransitively — the subject itself experiences success. Spanish 'prosperar' and French 'prospérer' match directly. Joseph 'prospered' in Potiphar's house (Gen 39:2), warriors ask whether their 'way will prosper' (Judg 18:5), and God's purpose 'prospers' through the Servant (Isa 53:10). This is the most common sense, spanning narrative, wisdom, and prophetic literature. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-he-prospered, and-he-will-prosper, and-prosper | es: prosperará, prosperaréis, tendrán-éxito | fr: et-prospérer, prospérer | de: [יצליח], gelingen, und-gelingen Gen 39:2; Num 14:41; Deut 28:29; Judg 18:5; 1Kgs 22:12

2. cause to prosper, grant success (12×) To make prosper or grant success — the causative Hifil where God or a superior agent brings about another's prosperity. Arabic ʾ (Form IV causative) parallels the Hebrew morphology. Abraham's servant repeatedly credits God: 'the LORD has caused my journey to prosper' (Gen 24:56). Joseph's success in Egypt is framed identically — 'the LORD made all that he did to prosper' (Gen 39:3). The theological claim is clear: genuine prosperity has a divine source. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-cause-to-prosper-, and-will-make-prosper, because-of-one-prospering | es: haciendo-prosperar, hacía-prosperar, haz-prosperar | fr: a-fit-prospérer, dans-prospérer, et—faire-prospérer | de: [והצליחה], [יצליח], du-soll-machen-prosperous Gen 24:21; Gen 24:40; Gen 24:42; Gen 24:56; Gen 39:3

3. be fit, be useful (3×) To be fit, useful, or serviceable for a purpose — a distinct Qal sense denoting practical suitability rather than prosperity. Jeremiah's ruined loincloth 'was not fit for anything' (Jer 13:7, 10), and Ezekiel asks whether a burned vine branch 'is good for any work' (Ezek 15:4). Spanish '¿Servirá?' ('Will it serve/be useful?') captures the pragmatic, evaluative quality that sets this apart from success or flourishing. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: good, is-good, is-it-fit | es: servía, sirve, ¿Servirá | fr: prospérer | de: gelingen Jer 13:7; Jer 13:10; Ezek 15:4

צְלַח H6744 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (4×)

prosper, succeed, cause to prosper (Aramaic Haph'el)

An Aramaic verb (Haph'el stem) meaning to prosper, succeed, or cause to prosper. Daniel 3:30 says Nebuchadnezzar 'promoted' (caused to prosper) Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Daniel 6:28 reports that Daniel 'prospered' during the reigns of Darius and Cyrus. Ezra 5:8 describes the temple work as 'progressing rapidly' (prospering in their hands). Ezra 6:14 notes that the Jewish elders 'prospered' (succeeded) in their building. The word emphasizes success, advancement, and divine blessing on endeavors.

(4×) Ezra 5:8 reports that the temple work 'is being done diligently and prospers' (מַצְלָח) in the builders' hands. Ezra 6:14 says the elders 'prospered in building' (וּמַצְלְחִין) through prophetic encouragement and Persian support. Daniel 3:30 says the king 'promoted' (הַצְלַח) the three friends. Daniel 6:28 states that Daniel 'prospered' during Darius and Cyrus. Spanish prosperó/prosperaban and French presser (to press forward, succeed) reflect both personal advancement and project success. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-prospering, promoted, prospered | es: hizo-prosperar, prosperó, y-prosperaban | fr: [ומצלח], [ומצלחין], presser | de: [הצלח], [ומצלח], [ומצלחין] Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:14; Dan 3:30; Dan 6:28

צֵלָחָה H6745 Conj-w (1×)

cooking pot, pan

This noun refers to a type of cooking vessel, appearing in 2 Chronicles 35:13's description of cooking Passover offerings. It's listed alongside other cooking containers like pots and cauldrons. The context shows various vessels were used to cook the sacrificial meat quickly and distribute it to the people. Spanish 'tazones' (bowls or pans) and the listing with other cookware confirm this is a utilitarian vessel for food preparation.

(1×) A pot or pan used for cooking, mentioned in the Passover preparations of 2 Chronicles 35:13. The text describes cooking the holy offerings 'in pots, in caldrons, and in pans,' showing these were different sizes or types of cooking vessels. The plural form suggests these were standard equipment for large-scale food preparation during festivals. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: and-in-the-pans | es: y-en-los-tazones | fr: [ובצלחות] | de: [ובצלחות] 2Chr 35:13

צְלֹחִית H6746 N-fs (1×)

jar, small container

This noun denotes a small jar or container, appearing in 2 Kings 2:20 when Elisha asks for 'a new jar' to hold salt for purifying Jericho's water. The specification of 'new' suggests ceremonial importance—an unused vessel for a miraculous act. The jar needed to be small enough to hold salt but significant enough to be specified in the narrative. This differs from larger storage jars, being more portable and purpose-specific.

(1×) A jar or small container, specifically mentioned in Elisha's miracle at Jericho (2 Kings 2:20). Elisha requests 'a new jar' to hold salt for purifying the poisoned spring. The newness emphasized ritual purity for the miracle. This was a modest-sized vessel, easily brought to the prophet, suitable for holding a portion of salt—practical but also symbolically important as the container for God's healing agent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-jar | es: una-vasija | fr: un-jar | de: ein-jar 2Kgs 2:20

צַלֻּחַת H6747 Art / N-fs (3×)

dish, platter; a shallow vessel used for serving or eating food

This noun refers to a dish or platter—a household utensil for food. Second Kings 21:13 uses it in a vivid simile: God will wipe Jerusalem as one wipes a dish, turning it upside down. Proverbs 19:24 and 26:15 satirize the sluggard who buries his hand in the dish but is too lazy to bring it back to his mouth. The domestic simplicity of the object makes it perfect for proverbial imagery. Cross-linguistic translations uniformly recognize this as a dish or bowl, with the Spanish and German articles ('el plato', 'der dish') marking definite reference.

(3×) The dish appears in two contexts: prophetic judgment (2 Kings) and wisdom literature (Proverbs). In the judgment oracle, the dish becomes a metaphor for total destruction—wiped clean and overturned. In the proverbs, it's the lazy person's food vessel, highlighting absurd indolence. The multilingual agreement on 'dish/plato/plat' confirms the basic household item, whether used literally or figuratively. The definite article in some occurrences ('the dish') may reflect the specific dish in the proverb or the generic class. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14653 WITH 4 SENSES

en: in-dish, in-the-dish, the-dish | es: el-plato, en-el-plato | fr: le-dish, בצלחת | de: [בצלחת], der-dish 2Kgs 21:13; Prov 19:24; Prov 26:15

צָלִי H6748 N-msc (3×)

roasted, roast; meat or food prepared by fire, particularly in ritual contexts

This adjective and noun describes roasted meat—specifically meat cooked by fire rather than boiled in water. Exodus 12:8-9 prescribes the Passover lamb as 'roasted by fire,' explicitly contrasting with boiling. Isaiah 44:16 speaks of a 'roast' as the meal cooked over the fire from which idols are also carved. The ritual significance is paramount: roasting was the commanded preparation for Passover, marking it as distinct from ordinary meals. The cross-linguistic evidence shows both adjectival ('roasted') and nominal ('a roast') forms, reflecting the Hebrew's dual function.

(3×) Exodus gives the ritual prescription: 'roasted by fire' (not boiled), defining proper Passover observance. Isaiah's satirical usage plays on the ordinary domestic reality of roasting meat while condemning the absurdity of worshiping wood from the same fuel source. The multilingual renderings distinguish 'roasted of [fire]' (adjectival, Exodus) from 'a roast' (nominal, Isaiah). The term anchors both sacred ordinance and prophetic irony, showing how the same cooking method can serve holy commemoration or highlight human foolishness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-roast, roasted-of- | es: asado, asado-de- | fr: [צלי], rôti-de- | de: [צלי], roasted-von- Exod 12:8; Exod 12:9; Isa 44:16

צָלַל H6749 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to sink, be submerged (in water)

This verb means to sink or be submerged, especially in water. Exodus 15:10 uses it in the Song of the Sea, describing how Pharaoh's army 'sank like lead in the mighty waters' when God blew His breath over them. The simile emphasizes speed and finality—lead drops straight down without floating. Cognates in other Semitic languages include ideas of sinking to rest or launching (Assyrian), and both sinking and floating (Ethiopic), showing semantic range around water motion.

(1×) To sink down or be submerged in water, used of Pharaoh's army in Exodus 15:10: 'they sank like lead in the mighty waters.' The verb captures the swift, irreversible downward plunge of the Egyptian forces when the sea returned. The lead simile stresses weight and speed—no struggling or floating, just immediate submersion and death. This became one of Israel's central images of divine deliverance. DIP IMMERSE DROWN en: they-sank | es: se-hundieron | fr: ils-sank | de: sie-sank Exod 15:10

צָלַל H6750 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (4×)

tingle (of ears); quiver, tremble (of lips); chirp, whisper (of spirits)

An onomatopoetic verb describing various kinds of vibrating or resonating sounds and sensations. When applied to ears, it means to tingle or ring at horrifying news (1 Sam 3:11; 2 Kgs 21:12; Jer 19:3). When applied to lips, it describes quivering in terror (Hab 3:16). The root suggests a rapid vibrating or quivering motion, capturing the physical response to shock or fear. The sound itself is sharp, quick, and unsettling.

(4×) First Samuel 3:11, 2 Kings 21:12, and Jeremiah 19:3 all use the phrase 'both ears of everyone who hears it will tingle'—a vivid image of shocking news causing the ears to ring or buzz. Habakkuk 3:16 describes the prophet's physical response to God's theophany: 'my lips quivered' (צָלְלוּ). Spanish retumbarán/zumbarán (will ring, buzz) and French sonner (ring, sound) capture the sharp, resonating quality of this sensory experience. SHAKING TREMBLING en: quivered, will-tingle | es: le-retumbarán, le-zumbarán, retumbarán | fr: [תצלנה], fera-tingle, sonner | de: [צללו], [תצלנה], wird-tingle 1Sam 3:11; 2Kgs 21:12; Jer 19:3; Hab 3:16

צָלַל H6751 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

to grow dark, be shadowed; evening darkness falling or something casting shade

This verb describes the onset of darkness, whether literally at evening or metaphorically through shade. Nehemiah uses it when the gates of Jerusalem 'grew dark'—that is, evening shadows fell, triggering the Sabbath closure. Ezekiel's description of a great tree mentions its 'shadowing' branches. The root connects to words for shade and shadow, evoking both the daily transition from light to darkness and the cooling relief of shade from the sun.

(2×) Nehemiah 13:19 describes the evening when Jerusalem's gates 'grew dark' (began to be shadowed), while Ezekiel 31:3 speaks of forest branches 'giving shade.' Spanish uses 'oscurecieron' (grew dark) and 'sombra' (shade), showing the verb's range from temporal darkening to spatial shading. The Nehemiah passage marks the precise moment when Sabbath restrictions began—when darkness started to fall at the city gates. Ezekiel's usage evokes the thick forest canopy blocking sunlight. Both share the core sense of darkness or shadow, whether from the sun's setting or from something blocking its light. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS

en: grew-dark, shade | es: oscurecieron, sombra | fr: [צללו], obscurcir | de: [מצל], [צללו] Neh 13:19; Ezek 31:3

צֵל H6752 N-mpc (4×)

shadow, shade (protection from sun; also evening shadows)

This word primarily means shadow or shade, often with connotations of protection, coolness, or the passage of time. It appears in phrases like 'evening shadows' (lengthening as day ends), 'shadow of branches' (providing shelter), and 'shadow of a rock' (refreshing protection). The term carries both literal meaning (actual shade from sun) and metaphorical extensions (protection, fleeting nature of life, refuge). Shadows can represent comfort and shelter or the approach of darkness and danger.

(4×) Job 40:22 describes lotus plants providing 'shade' for Behemoth. Song of Songs 2:17 and 4:6 both speak of 'until the day breathes and the shadows flee'—referring to evening shadows that will disappear at dawn. Jeremiah 6:4 warns 'the shadows of evening lengthen' (time running out for attack). Spanish sombras and French ombres (shadows) capture both the literal shade and the temporal metaphor of lengthening shadows marking day's end. SHADOW AND SHADE
en: shadows-of-, the-shadows, with-their-shade | es: las-sombras, las-sombras-de, su-sombra | fr: [צללי], les-ombres,, son-ombre-lui | de: Schatten, [צללי] Job 40:22; Song 2:17; Song 4:6; Jer 6:4

הַצְּלֶלְפּוֹנִי H6753 N-proper-fs (1×)
Hazelelponi, a female name in Judah's genealogy
This proper name belongs to a woman in Judah's genealogy (1 Chronicles 4:3). The etymology suggests 'give shade, O you who turn to me' or similar, though interpretations vary. The Septuagint offers very different renderings, indicating textual uncertainty. As a feminine name appearing in genealogical lists, it preserves memory of a woman significant enough to be recorded in Judah's family records, though nothing further is known of her.

(1×) A woman's name appearing in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:3). The name's meaning is uncertain but may relate to 'shade' and 'turning,' possibly 'give shade, O one who turns to me.' The Septuagint's widely variant readings suggest scribal difficulty with the text. This rare feminine name in patriarchal genealogies indicates she held some significance in her family's memory. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hatslelponi | es: Hatselelponi | fr: [הצללפוני] | de: [הצללפוני] 1Chr 4:3

צֶלֶם H6754 Prep-b / N-msc (17×)
Image, likeness, or idol; a physical representation of something, the divine likeness in humanity, or a mere phantom
A word that stretches from the loftiest theology to the most ephemeral human experience. In Genesis 1:26-27, tselem carries the staggering claim that humanity bears God's own image — a truth echoed across every language in the translation record, from Spanish 'imagen' to Hindi 'प्रतिमा' to Arabic 'صُورَة.' Yet the same root describes pagan idols smashed by reforming kings (2 Kgs 11:18) and the haunting realization of the Psalmist that people walk about as mere shadows (Ps 39:6). The range from divine dignity to hollow phantom gives this word a unique theological gravity.

1. image, idol, statue (10×) A carved, cast, or molten representation of a deity or object — an idol or cult image. Used of the golden tumour replicas in 1 Samuel 6:5, the smashed images of Baal in 2 Kings 11:18, and the forbidden male-form images of Ezekiel 16:17. Multilingual glosses converge on 'idol/statue/image' across all target languages, confirming the concrete, physical referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-images-of, his-images, images-of | es: e-imágenes-de, imágenes-de, imágenes-de-él | fr: [צלמיו], et-image, et-images-de | de: Bilder-von, [וצלמי], [צלמי] Num 33:52; 1Sam 6:5; 1Sam 6:11; 2Kgs 11:18

2. image, likeness (imago Dei) (5×) The essential likeness or form in which God created humanity and through which a father begets a son (Gen 1:26-27, 5:3, 9:6). This is the foundational 'imago Dei' sense. Every major translation tradition renders this with terms for 'likeness' or 'image' — Spanish 'imagen,' French 'image,' German 'Bild' — yet the theological weight far exceeds any single gloss. Genesis 9:6 grounds the sanctity of human life in this very likeness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-image-his, in-image-his, in-image-of | es: en-imagen-de, en-nuestra-imagen, en-su-imagen | fr: dans-image-de, dans-image-notre, dans-image-son | de: im-Bild, im-Bilde, in-seinem-Bild Gen 1:26; Gen 1:27; Gen 5:3; Gen 9:6

3. phantom, shadow, semblance (2×) A phantom, shadow, or insubstantial semblance — the fleeting quality of human existence. In Psalm 39:6 a person walks about 'as a tselem,' and in Psalm 73:20 God despises the image of the wicked upon awakening. Hindi छाया ('shadow') and Arabic ظِلّ capture this ephemeral nuance. A striking metaphorical extension from the concrete 'image' senses. SHADOW AND SHADE
en: as-a-shadow, their-image | es: como-sombra, su-imagen | fr: dans-image, image | de: ihr-image, wie-ein-Schatten Ps 39:6; Ps 73:20

צֶלֶם H6755 Conj-w (17×)
Image, statue, form — a physical representation or likeness, especially Nebuchadnezzar's dream-statue in Daniel 2-3 and the image of God in humanity.
An Aramaic-Hebrew noun meaning 'image' or 'likeness,' tselem carries two theologically weighty applications. In Daniel 2-3, it denotes Nebuchadnezzar's colossal statue — the composite image of gold, silver, bronze, and iron that symbolizes successive empires, appearing eleven times in those chapters alone. In Genesis 1:26-27, 5:3, and 9:6, the same root describes humanity as made 'in the image of God,' the foundational statement of human dignity in biblical theology. Daniel 3:19 uniquely uses it for a facial expression ('the image of his face changed'), showing the word's flexibility to denote outward form or appearance. German 'Bild' and Spanish 'imagen' both capture the full range from physical statue to abstract likeness.

image, form, likeness (17×) A physical image, statue, or likeness — a visible form representing something or someone. In Daniel 2:31-35, it refers repeatedly to the great composite statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, made of successive metals symbolizing world empires. Daniel 3:1-18 uses it for the golden image the king erected on the plain of Dura. In Genesis (1:26-27; 5:3; 9:6), the same root denotes the divine image in humanity — the imago Dei. Daniel 3:19 extends the meaning to facial expression or countenance. Spanish 'imagen' and German 'Bild' cover both the concrete (statue) and abstract (likeness) senses, while French brackets the Aramaic forms, reflecting the word's origin in the Aramaic portions of Daniel. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: and-expression-of, and-the-image-of, image | es: a-la-imagen, ante-la-imagen-de, esta-imagen | fr: [ולצלם], [לצלם], [לצלמא] | de: Bild, das-Bild, dem-Bild Dan 2:31; Dan 2:32; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:35

צַלְמוֹן H6756a Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)
Zalmon, name of a mountain near Shechem; possibly 'dark/shady mountain'
Mount Zalmon appears in two contexts: near Shechem where Abimelech and his men cut branches to burn the tower of Shechem, and in a psalm celebrating God's victories, possibly referring to a snow-capped mountain east of the Jordan in the Hauran region. The name likely means 'shady' or 'dark,' fitting either a forested mountain or one dark against the sky. The Shechem location is more certain; the Psalm 68 reference may describe a different mountain altogether.

(2×) Judges 9:48 places Mount Zalmon near Shechem where Abimelech cut wood, while Psalm 68:14 mentions Zalmon in connection with God's victories, possibly referring to a snow-covered peak in Transjordan. English preserves 'Zalmon,' Spanish 'Tsalmón,' French and German similarly. The name's meaning 'shady' or 'dark' could describe a forested mountain (Shechem) or a dark-appearing mountain (Hauran). Whether these refer to the same mountain or two different locations remains debated, but the name clearly denoted one or more notable mountains known to ancient Israel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zalmon, on-Zalmon | es: Tsalmón, en-Tsalmón | fr: Zalmon, dans-ombre | de: Zalmon, auf-Zalmon Judg 9:48; Ps 68:14

צַלְמוֹן H6756b N-proper-ms (1×)
Zalmon, one of David's mighty warriors
This proper name identifies one of David's elite warriors listed in 2 Samuel 23:28. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:29 calls him Ilai, suggesting either a different name for the same person or a textual variant. The Septuagint renderings also vary. Zalmon appears among the 'thirty' mighty men who formed David's special forces, distinguished warriors with individual recognition for their exploits.

(1×) A personal name borne by one of David's elite thirty warriors (2 Samuel 23:28). The parallel 1 Chronicles 11:29 gives his name as Ilai, possibly reflecting different traditions or name variants for this fighter. He's listed among the heroes who formed David's core military leadership, each renowned for individual acts of valor in Israel's early monarchy. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zalmon | es: Tsalmon | fr: Zalmon | de: Zalmon 2Sam 23:28

צַלְמָוֶת H6757 Prep-l / N-ms (18×)

Deep darkness, shadow of death — intense, impenetrable gloom used poetically of mortal peril and divine mystery

A striking poetic compound (tsalmaveth) traditionally rendered 'shadow of death,' though modern scholarship often reads it as an abstract noun meaning 'deep darkness.' Whether from tsel + maveth or from a root cognate to Arabic and Ethiopic words for blackness, the word evokes the most profound imaginable gloom. Job uses it seven times to describe the underworld and extremes of despair (Job 3:5; 10:21–22). Its most beloved occurrence is Psalm 23:4, where the faithful walk through the valley of tsalmaveth fearing no evil. Amos 5:8 speaks of God turning tsalmaveth into morning light.

deep darkness, shadow of death (18×) Intensely deep darkness understood as the deepest conceivable shadow, often paralleled with choshekh ('darkness') and layilah ('night'). Traditionally parsed as 'shadow of death' (tsel + maveth), yielding the unforgettable image of Psalm 23:4. In Job it characterizes Sheol and utter despair (Job 10:21–22; 12:22). Amos 5:8 and Jeremiah 13:16 use it for cosmic or threatened darkness that only God can transform into light. DEATH AND DYING

en: and-deep-darkness, and-deep-shadow, and-shadow-of-death | es: con-sombra-de-muerte, es-sombra-de-muerte;, la-sombra-de-muerte. | fr: [וצלמות], [לצלמות], [צלמות] | de: Todesschatten, [וצלמות], [לצלמות] Job 3:5; Job 10:21; Job 10:22; Job 12:22; Job 16:16

צַלְמֹנָה H6758 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Zalmonah, a wilderness station where Israel camped during the Exodus journey

Zalmonah was one of the many stops in Israel's forty-year wilderness journey from Egypt to Canaan, listed in the detailed itinerary of Numbers 33. The name may relate to 'dark' or 'shady,' perhaps describing some geographical feature of the location, though the exact site is unknown. Like most wilderness stations, no narrative events are recorded there; it simply marks one stage in the long journey. The careful preservation of these place names testifies to Israel's memory of their wilderness formation.

(2×) This wilderness station appears in Numbers 33:41-42, marking a stop between Punon and Oboth. Translations preserve the name: English 'Zalmonah,' Spanish 'Salmoná,' French and German similar. The name may connect to roots meaning 'dark' or 'shady,' possibly describing the landscape, though this remains speculative. The itinerary's precision—naming each camping place and the order of travel—reflects the importance of remembering the full wilderness journey, every step of which shaped Israel into God's covenant people. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Zalmonah, in-Zalmonah | es: de-Salmoná, en-Salmoná | fr: dans-Zalmonah, de-Zalmonah | de: in-Zalmonah, von-Zalmonah Num 33:41; Num 33:42

צַלְמֻנָּע H6759 N-proper-ms (12×)

Zalmunna — Midianite king captured and executed by Gideon alongside Zebah after the great rout

Zalmunna (צַלְמֻנָּע) is the proper name of one of the two kings of Midian — always paired with Zebah — who were pursued, captured, and executed by Gideon following the decisive rout of the Midianite army. The name may derive from צַל ('shadow') + מָנַע ('withhold'), perhaps meaning 'shade is withheld,' though its etymology remains uncertain. Gideon's pursuit of Zebah and Zalmunna across the Jordan, his encounter with the uncooperative men of Succoth and Penuel, and his personal execution of the two kings form one of the most vivid narratives in Judges 8:5-21. Psalm 83:12 invokes Zebah and Zalmunna as paradigmatic defeated enemies: 'Make their nobles like Zebah and Zalmunna.' Spanish 'Tsalmuná' and Swahili 'Salmuna' transliterate the name.

Zalmunna (proper name, Midianite king) (12×) One of two Midianite kings (always paired with Zebah) pursued across the Jordan, captured, and executed by Gideon as blood vengeance for his brothers slain at Tabor (Judg 8:5-21). Psalm 83:12 invokes Zebah and Zalmunna as paradigmatic defeated enemies. All twelve occurrences refer to the same individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Zalmunna, and-Zalmunna, and-like-Tsalmunna | es: Tsalmunná, y-Tsalmunná, y-como-Tsalmuna | fr: Tsalmunna, et-Tsalmunna | de: Zalmunna, und-Zalmunna, und-wie-Tsalmunna Judg 8:5; Judg 8:6; Judg 8:7; Judg 8:10; Judg 8:12

צָלַע H6760 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (4×)

limp, walk with a limp (due to injury or disability)

A verb describing the action of limping or walking with impaired gait. Genesis 32:31 explains why Israelites don't eat the thigh sinew: because Jacob was 'limping on his hip' after wrestling with the divine figure. Micah and Zephaniah use the feminine participle as a substantive for 'the lame one,' personifying exiled Judah as a limping sheep that God will gather and restore (Mic 4:6-7; Zeph 3:19). The word evokes both physical disability and metaphorical vulnerability.

(4×) Genesis 32:31 notes that Jacob was 'limping because of his hip' after the wrestling match at Peniel—the etiology for Israel's dietary practice. Micah 4:6 and 4:7 both use the feminine participle 'the lame one' (הַצֹּלֵעָה) to describe the exiled nation God will gather. Zephaniah 3:19 similarly promises to save 'the lame' and gather the outcast. Spanish coja/cojeando (lame/limping) and French boitant (limping) consistently identify this as impaired walking due to injury. LAME CRIPPLED

en: limping, the-lame | es: a-la-coja, cojeando, la-coja | fr: [הצלעה], boitant | de: hinkte Gen 32:31; Mic 4:6; Mic 4:7; Zeph 3:19

צָלַע H6761 Conj-w (3×)

stumbling, limping, calamity; physical unsteadiness used figuratively for disaster or vulnerability

The noun denotes stumbling or limping, used figuratively for calamity and vulnerability. The Psalms speak of being 'ready for stumbling' (38:17) and enemies rejoicing 'at my stumbling' (35:15) —moments of weakness when foes attack. Job 18:12 warns that 'ruin is ready for his stumbling.' Jeremiah 20:10 mentions 'watchers of my stumbling'—those waiting for the prophet to falter. The physical image of losing one's footing becomes a metaphor for disaster, downfall, and the opportunism of enemies. The cross-linguistic evidence shows both literal ('stumbling', 'cojear') and metaphorical ('calamity', 'shadow') translations.

(3×) All three uses are figurative: personal vulnerability in Psalms, the wicked's impending doom in Job, and Jeremiah's enemies watching for his failure. The Spanish 'cojear' (limping) and 'caída' (fall) capture both the physical and metaphorical dimensions. Some translations struggle with the imagery (French 'shadow' misses the mark), but most recognize stumbling as the moment of weakness when disaster strikes or enemies pounce. The term expresses precariousness —being on the verge of falling, whether morally, socially, or physically. LAME CRIPPLED

en: but-at-my-stumbling, for-stumbling, stumbling-my | es: Y-en-mi-cojear, caída-mía, para-caer | fr: [צלע], et-dans-ombre, à-ombre | de: [צלע], aber-bei-mein-stumbling, für-stumbling Ps 35:15; Ps 38:17; Jer 20:10

צֵלַע H6762 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Zela, a town in Benjamin, burial place of Saul and his family

Zela was a town in the tribal territory of Benjamin, significant as the burial place of Kish, Saul, and Jonathan. After recovering the bones of Saul and Jonathan from Jabesh-gilead (where they had been rescued from Philistine mockery), David had them buried in Zela in Kish's tomb, giving Israel's first royal family honorable rest in their ancestral inheritance. The town also appears in Joshua's boundary lists. The exact location remains uncertain, though it lay somewhere in Benjamin's territory.

(2×) Joshua 18:28 lists Zela among Benjamin's cities, while 2 Samuel 21:14 identifies it as the burial place of Kish, Saul, and Jonathan. English gives 'Zela,' Spanish 'Sela/Tsela,' French and German similar forms. The site's significance lies in providing proper burial for Saul's family—David's act of retrieving and reburying their bones honored even the flawed king who had persecuted him, showing respect for God's anointed and bringing closure to the tragic end of Israel's first dynasty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Tsela, in-Zela | es: en-Tsela, y-Sela | fr: dans-Zela, et-Tsela | de: in-Zela, und-Tsela Josh 18:28; 2Sam 21:14

צֵלָע H6763 Conj-w / N-fpc (41×)

Rib, side, side-chamber; of the human body, structural sides of objects, temple side-rooms, planks, and hillsides.

Tsela is one of those Hebrew nouns whose concrete physical image — a rib — radiates outward into a surprising range of architectural and topographical meanings. It begins with Adam's rib in Genesis 2:21-22, the bone God took to build a woman, and from there the word extends to the 'sides' of the ark, altar, and tabernacle, the 'side-chambers' lining Solomon's and Ezekiel's temples, the 'planks' of cedar forming temple walls, and even the 'slope' of a hill. The architectural senses dominate numerically: the tabernacle's sides in Exodus, the temple chambers in Kings, and especially Ezekiel 41's elaborate vision account for most occurrences. French côte ('rib') and côté ('side') beautifully preserve the same polysemy that Hebrew encodes in this single word.

1. side, flank (19×) The side or flank of a constructed object — the dominant sense at 19 occurrences. This covers the sides of the ark of the covenant (Exod 25:12-14), the sides of the altar (Exod 27:7), the lateral walls of the tabernacle (Exod 26:20, 26-27, 35; 36:25-32), and similar structural elements. The word functions as a spatial-directional term indicating the lateral aspect of sacred furniture and buildings. Spanish lado, French côté, and German Seite all converge on the basic 'side/flank' meaning, with no semantic tension — this is the word's most productive architectural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-side-of, its-side, its-sides | es: Y-para-lado-de, lado-de, lados-de | fr: côté-de, côtés-de, et-pour-côté-de | de: Seite-von, Seiten-von, sein-Seite Exod 25:12; Exod 25:14; Exod 26:20; Exod 26:26

2. side-chamber, side-room (14×) Side-chambers or side-rooms of the temple — 14 occurrences, concentrated in the temple descriptions of 1 Kings 6 and especially Ezekiel 41. These are the small rooms built along the outer walls of the temple, stacked in three stories and enclosing the sanctuary 'like ribs' around a body (1 Kgs 6:5-8; Ezek 41:5-11, 26). Spanish cámaras laterales and German Seitenkammern both create compound terms to express what Hebrew encodes in a single word. The architectural metaphor of ribs surrounding a central body may well be the etymological bridge connecting this sense to the anatomical one. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-side-chambers-of, and-the-side-chambers, for-the-side-chamber | es: Y-las-cámaras-laterales, cámara, cámaras-laterales | fr: côté, côté-rooms, et-côté | de: Seite, Seite-rooms, der-Seite-chamber 1Kgs 6:5; 1Kgs 6:8; 1Kgs 7:3; Ezek 41:5; Ezek 41:6

3. plank, board, leaf of door (4×) Planks, boards, or door-leaves — 4 occurrences in 1 Kings 6:15-16, 34, describing the cedar and cypress boards lining the interior walls and floor of Solomon's temple, and the two leaves of the olive-wood doors. BDB connects these to 'ribs of cedar and fir,' suggesting flat planks were perceived as rib-like in their long, thin shape. Spanish tablones ('planks') and French planches distinguish this clearly from the side/flank sense, treating the referent as worked timber rather than spatial orientation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaves-of, with-planks-of | es: con-tablones-de, hojas-de | fr: avec-planks-de, leaves-de | de: leaves-von, mit-planks-von 1Kgs 6:15; 1Kgs 6:16; 1Kgs 6:34

4. rib (body part) (2×) A rib of the human body — only 2 occurrences, both in Genesis 2:21-22, where God takes one of Adam's ribs (or 'sides') and builds it into a woman. This is the word's most famous use and arguably its etymological core. Spanish costilla, French côte, and German Rippe all use dedicated anatomical 'rib' vocabulary. The ancient versions and modern scholarship have debated whether tsela here means a single rib bone or an entire 'side' of Adam's body — the Sumerian wordplay with ti ('rib' and 'life') adds another layer of resonance. FLESH AND BODY

en: from-ribs-his, the-rib | es: de-sus-costillas, la-costilla | fr: de-ribs-son, le-côte | de: die-Rippe, von-seinen-Rippen Gen 2:21; Gen 2:22

5. side of the body (1×) The side of a person's body — 1 occurrence at Job 18:12, where calamity stands 'at his side' ready to strike. Some read this as 'stumbling' (from a different root), but the spatial 'at his flank' reading aligns with the word's architectural use and is supported by Spanish a su lado ('at his side'). This bridges the anatomical and spatial senses, applying the body's lateral surface as a proximity marker for impending disaster. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-his-stumbling | es: a-su-lado | fr: à-son-לצלעו-lui | de: [לצלעו] Job 18:12

6. hillside, slope (1×) A hillside or slope — 1 occurrence at 2 Samuel 16:13, where Shimei goes along the hillside (tsela) opposite David, cursing and throwing stones. The geographical extension from 'side' to 'ridge/slope of a hill' is natural and paralleled by BDB's gloss 'rib of hill, i.e. ridge, or terrace.' Spanish ladera ('hillside') and German Hang ('slope') both select dedicated topographical terms, confirming this as a semantically distinct use from the architectural or anatomical senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: on-side-of | es: por-ladera-de | fr: sur-côté-de | de: auf-Seite-von 2Sam 16:13

צְלָף H6764 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zalaph, father of a wall-builder under Nehemiah

This proper name identifies the father of one of Jerusalem's wall-builders in Nehemiah 3:30. The name may derive from a word for caper-plant, according to rabbinic Hebrew. Zalaph's son participated in rebuilding Jerusalem's walls after the exile, and his inclusion in the detailed roster of builders shows he was part of the reconstituted community. The Septuagint preserves the name with typical Greek adaptations.

(1×) A personal name, the father of one of Nehemiah's wall-builders (Nehemiah 3:30). The name possibly means 'caper-plant' based on later Hebrew usage. Though Zalaph himself isn't described, his son's participation in the wall-rebuilding project marks the family as returnees committed to Jerusalem's restoration. The detailed builder list preserves these names as a memorial of post-exilic faithfulness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zalaph | es: Zalaf | fr: [צלף] | de: [צלף] Neh 3:30

צְלָפְחָד H6765 Conj-w (11×)

Zelophehad, a man of Manasseh whose five daughters secured inheritance rights for women in Israel

The name of a Manassite who died in the wilderness leaving no sons, only five daughters — Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. Their bold petition before Moses established the legal precedent that daughters may inherit when there is no male heir (Num 27:1–7). The case was significant enough to be revisited in Numbers 36, where tribal land preservation was balanced against the new inheritance right. Zelophehad's daughters became a landmark in biblical jurisprudence.

Zelophehad (personal name) (11×) The personal name of a man from the tribe of Manasseh who died without sons during the wilderness period (Num 26:33). His five daughters petitioned Moses for inheritance rights (Num 27:1, 7), and God affirmed their claim, establishing precedent in Israelite law (Num 36:2). The case is one of Scripture's most notable examples of legal innovation prompted by women's advocacy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tselofchad, Zelophehad, and-Zelophehad | es: Tselofejad, Y-Zelofejad,

Y-para-Zelofejad | fr: Tselophchad, [לְצַלְפְּחַד], [צלפחד] | de: Zelophehad, [לְצַלְפְּחַד], [צלפחד] Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Num 27:7; Num 36:2

צְלָצַח H6766 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Zelzah, a location in Benjamin

This place name appears in 1 Samuel 10:2, where Samuel tells Saul he will meet two men 'at Zelzah on Benjamin's border' by Rachel's tomb. However, the text is likely corrupt—scholars note the location is uncertain, and some propose reading 'from Zelah' (another Benjamin town) instead. The Septuagint offers variant readings. Despite textual difficulties, the narrative presents it as a landmark Saul would recognize near Rachel's burial site.

(1×) A place name in Benjamin mentioned in 1 Samuel 10:2, where Samuel predicts Saul will encounter two men near Rachel's tomb. The location is uncertain—scholars note probable textual corruption, with suggestions to read 'from Zelah' (cf. 2 Samuel 21:14) instead. The name functions in Samuel's prophetic sign to Saul, marking a specific location along his journey home after anointing, though its exact identification remains disputed. PERSONAL NAMES

en: at-Zelzah | es: en-Tzeltzaéj | fr: à-Zelzah | de: bei-Zelzah 1Sam 10:2

צְלָצָל H6767a N-msc (1×)

whirring, buzzing (of insects' wings)

This noun denotes the whirring or buzzing sound made by rapidly moving wings, particularly of insects. Isaiah 18:1 describes 'the land of whirring wings,' likely referring to either Ethiopia or a region with abundant swarming insects. The construct phrase 'whirring of wings' creates an auditory image of countless flying insects. This onomatopoetic word captures the distinctive humming sound of dense insect populations, though interpreters debate whether it's literal (locusts, flies) or symbolic.

(1×) The whirring or buzzing sound produced by insect wings in flight. Isaiah 18:1 speaks of 'the land of the whirring of wings,' generally understood as describing a region characterized by swarming insects—perhaps the upper Nile with its abundant flies. The word is onomatopoetic, capturing the distinctive hum of countless wings beating rapidly. Whether literal or symbolic, it evokes an atmosphere thick with flying creatures. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: whirring-of | es: zumbido-de | fr: [צלצל] | de: [צלצל] Isa 18:1

צְלָצָל H6767b Conj-w (1×)

fish-spear, harpoon

This noun refers to a weapon used for spearing large fish or sea creatures, appearing in Job 40:31 (English 41:7) in God's challenge about capturing Leviathan. The question 'Can you fill his skin with harpoons?' emphasizes the creature's invulnerability to normal fishing weapons. The etymology connects to 'whizzing' or 'whirring,' suggesting the spear's sound in flight. This is specialized equipment for hunting large aquatic prey, distinct from nets or hooks.

(1×) A spear or harpoon designed for hunting fish or sea creatures. Job 40:31 (41:7 English) asks rhetorically whether anyone can fill Leviathan's hide 'with harpoons,' emphasizing the futility of attacking this monster with conventional weapons. The word derives from the sound the spear makes when thrown—a whizzing or whirring. This was specialized hunting gear for large fish, showing humanity's powerlessness against God's ultimate creation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-fish-spears | es: y-con-lanza-de | fr: et-וּבִצְלְצַל | de: [וּבִצְלְצַל] Job 41:7

צְלָצַל H6767c Art / N-ms (1×)

locust (of a whirring type), cricket

This noun identifies a type of locust or cricket, named for the whirring sound it makes. Deuteronomy 28:42 lists it among covenant curses: 'the whirring locust will possess all your trees and crops.' The cognates in Akkadian and Aramaic also denote chirping or whirring insects. While the exact species is uncertain, the defining characteristic is the sound—a persistent, pervasive noise accompanying agricultural devastation. This is one of several Hebrew locust terms, each perhaps distinguishing types or life stages.

(1×) A type of locust or cricket characterized by its whirring or buzzing sound, mentioned in Deuteronomy 28:42 as a curse that will 'take possession of all your trees and produce.' The name derives from the distinctive noise these insects make in swarms. Cognate terms in related languages confirm the auditory identification. As a covenant curse, this insect represents comprehensive agricultural destruction, stripping fields bare while filling the air with incessant sound. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: the-cricket | es: la-cigarra | fr: le-cricket | de: der-cricket Deut 28:42

צְלְצַלִּים H6767d Conj-w (3×)

cymbals; percussion instruments making a clashing or ringing sound, used in worship

This plural noun refers to cymbals—musical instruments of percussion that produce a clashing, ringing sound. Second Samuel 6:5 describes David and Israel celebrating before the ark with cymbals and other instruments. Psalm 150:5 calls for praising God with 'loud cymbals' and 'resounding cymbals,' distinguishing types by sound quality. The word derives from a root suggesting clashing or ringing sounds. Cross-linguistically, the term is consistently recognized as cymbals (Spanish 'címbalos', French 'cymbales', German 'Zimbeln'), showing a clear instrumental referent used in joyful worship contexts.

(3×) The two contexts are liturgical celebration: David's procession with the ark (2 Samuel 6:5) and the comprehensive call to praise in Psalm 150. The psalm distinguishes between 'cymbals of sound/hearing' and 'cymbals of shouting/resounding', possibly referring to different sizes or playing techniques. All translations agree on the instrument type, with Spanish and German noting the construct relationship ('with cymbals of...'). These percussion instruments marked moments of exuberant worship, their clashing sound symbolizing joyful acclamation of God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-cymbals, with-cymbals-of | es: con-címbalos-de, con-címbalos-de-, y-con-címbalos | fr: dans-cymbales, et-avec-cymbales | de: mit-Zimbeln-von, und-mit-cymbals 2Sam 6:5; Ps 150:5

צֶלֶק H6768 N-proper-ms (2×)

Zelek, an Ammonite warrior among David's mighty men

Zelek the Ammonite was one of David's elite fighters, the 'thirty' mighty men who formed his special forces. His inclusion is remarkable given that Ammon was frequently hostile to Israel—yet David's band attracted loyal foreigners who threw in their lot with Israel's future king. Both 2 Samuel and Chronicles preserve Zelek's name in the roster of heroes, testifying that loyalty and valor could transcend ethnic boundaries. His foreign origin reminds us that David's kingdom, like the greater kingdom it foreshadowed, would welcome righteous gentiles.

(2×) This personal name appears in the lists of David's mighty men (2 Samuel 23:37; 1 Chronicles 11:39), identified as 'Zelek the Ammonite.' Translations preserve the proper name: English 'Zelek,' Spanish 'Tseleq/Tsélec,' French and German similar. His Ammonite ethnicity is notable—while Ammonites were generally Israel's enemies, individual Ammonites like Zelek (and earlier Shobi in 2 Samuel 17:27) chose to serve Israel and her God. His place among the 'thirty' honored warriors shows that David valued skill and loyalty regardless of ethnic origin. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tselek, Zelek | es: Tseleq, Tsélec | fr: Zelek, [צלק] | de: Zelek, [צלק] 2Sam 23:37; 1Chr 11:39

צִלְתַי H6769 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Zillethai, name of two men in Chronicles, one Benjamite and one Manassite

Zillethai appears as the name of two different men in the Chronicles genealogies: a Benjamite descendant in the family records and a Manassite who joined David at Ziklag. The name may mean 'shadow of Yahweh' or 'Yah is shade,' combining imagery of divine protection with the covenant name. Both men are known only from these brief genealogical mentions, but their names are preserved as part of Israel's tribal records and the roster of David's early supporters.

(2×) Found in 1 Chronicles 8:20 (a Benjamite) and 12:21 (a Manassite who joined David), this personal name is preserved across languages with slight variations: English 'Zillethai/Tsilletai,' Spanish 'Tsiletai,' French and German transliterating the Hebrew. The possible meaning 'shadow of Yah' would fit the pattern of theophoric names invoking God's protection. These two individuals, though we know nothing of their lives beyond their tribal affiliations, represent the hundreds of faithful Israelites whose names Chronicles carefully preserved to maintain the tribal heritage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Tsilletai, and-Tsilletay | es: y-Tsiletai | fr: [וצלתי] | de: [וצלתי] 1Chr 8:20; 1Chr 12:21

צָמֵא H6770 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2fs (10×)

To be thirsty; of physical craving for water or figurative spiritual longing for God.

Describes the fundamental human experience of thirst, both physical and spiritual. Literally, it appears in dramatic wilderness narratives—Israel at Rephidim demanding water (Exod 17:3), Samson near collapse after slaying the Philistines (Judg 15:18), and Ruth in the harvest fields of Bethlehem (Ruth 2:9). Its most memorable use is figurative: 'My soul thirsts for God, for the living God' (Ps 42:3; cf. 63:1), where bodily craving becomes a metaphor for desperate spiritual longing. The Spanish tiene sed and the Arabic cognate convey the same visceral urgency.

be thirsty, thirst (10×) To be thirsty, to experience thirst—ranging from literal physical dehydration to intense spiritual yearning. The literal sense dominates in narrative contexts: Israel thirsts at Rephidim (Exod 17:3), Samson after defeating the Philistines (Judg 15:18), and laborers who press olive oil yet remain parched (Job 24:11). In prophetic and eschatological usage, it pairs with hunger as covenant imagery: 'My servants shall drink, but you shall thirst' (Isa 65:13). The psalmist transforms the word into one of Scripture's most evocative spiritual metaphors—'My soul thirsts for God' (Ps 42:3; 63:1)—where physical craving becomes the language of longing for divine presence. THIRST AND DRYNESS

en: I-am-thirsty, and-they-thirst, and-thirsted | es: Tiene-sed, Y-tuvo-sed, tendrán-sed | fr: [יצמאו], [צמאו], [תצמאו] | de: [ויצמאו], [וצמת], [יצמאו] Exod 17:3; Judg 4:19; Judg 15:18; Ruth 2:9; Job 24:11

צָמֵא H6771 Conj-w / Adj-ms (9×)

Thirsty; describing a person or land lacking water, sometimes used figuratively for spiritual longing.

An adjective describing the state of needing water, frequently paired with ra'ev ('hungry') to depict human deprivation (2 Sam 17:29; Prov 25:21; Ps 107:5). Isaiah extends the word into powerful metaphor: the thirsty are invited to come to waters freely (Isa 55:1), and God promises to pour water on thirsty ground and his Spirit on Israel's offspring (Isa 44:3). The Spanish 'sediento' and French 'assoiffé' both preserve both the literal and figurative registers. Deuteronomy 29:19 uses it uniquely in the proverbial expression 'sweeping away the watered with the thirsty.'

thirsty (9×) Thirsty, in a state of needing water – applied to persons, land, or ground. Often paired with ra'ev ('hungry') to express bodily deprivation, as in David's exhausted men (2 Sam 17:29), the righteous treatment of enemies (Prov 25:21), and wandering in the wilderness (Ps 107:5). Isaiah extends the image figuratively: the spiritually thirsty are invited to living waters (Isa 55:1), and parched ground becomes a metaphor for Israel awaiting God's Spirit (Isa 44:3). Spanish 'sediento' and French 'assoiffé' mirror this dual literal-figurative range. THIRST AND DRYNESS

en: and-thirsty, of-the-thirsty, the-thirsty | es: al-sediento, el-sediento, la-sedienta | fr: assoiffé, et-thirsty, le-thirsty | de: [צמא], der-durstig, durstig Deut 29:19; 2Sam 17:29; Ps 107:5; Prov 25:21; Isa 21:14

צָמָא H6772 Prep-l / N-msc / 3mp (17×)

Thirst; the physical craving for water, often paired with hunger as a sign of deprivation or divine judgment.

Denotes the painful bodily craving for water, appearing most often in contexts of wilderness suffering, siege, and prophetic judgment. In Exodus 17:3 the Israelites cry out in the desert, while Deuteronomy 28:48 lists thirst alongside hunger, nakedness, and want as covenant-curse consequences. Hosea and Amos extend the image: Amos 8:11 speaks of a thirst not for water but for the word of the LORD, transforming a visceral need into spiritual longing. English glosses like 'a-thirst' and Spanish 'con la sed' both capture the experiential force of the term.

thirst (physical) (17×) The bodily sensation of needing water, frequently coupled with hunger (ra'av) in deprivation lists. Appears in wilderness narratives (Exod 17:3; Judg 15:18), covenant curses (Deut 28:48), and siege imagery (2 Chr 32:11). Psalms and prophets extend it figuratively to grief and exile (Isa 41:17), and Amos 8:11 pivots it toward spiritual longing, but the underlying physical referent remains constant. THIRST AND DRYNESS

en: a-thirst, and-by-thirst, and-for-my-thirst | es: con-la-sed, de-sed, en-sed | fr: [בצמא], [ובצמא], [לצמאם] | de: [בצמא], [ובצמא], [וצמא] Exod 17:3; Deut 28:48; Judg 15:18; 2Chr 32:11; Neh 9:15

צִמְאָה H6773 Prep-m / N-fs (1×)

parched condition, state of being dried out from thirst

This noun describes the parched condition of the throat from thirst, appearing in Jeremiah 2:25 in God's rebuke of Israel's spiritual adultery. God warns, 'Keep your throat from being parched,' meaning stop your frenzied pursuit of foreign gods. The imagery is physical—a throat raw from desperate panting after lovers—but the meaning is spiritual. The dried, parched state symbolizes both the exhausting nature of idolatry and its ultimate inability to satisfy.

(1×) The parched, dried-out condition of the throat from thirst. Jeremiah 2:25 uses it figuratively: God tells wayward Israel to 'spare your throat from being parched' (from running after other gods). The physical image is vivid—throat raw from panting in desperate pursuit—but applied to spiritual adultery. Israel exhausts herself chasing false lovers, leaving her throat parched and desperate, yet refuses to return to the true source of refreshment. THIRST AND DRYNESS

en: from-thirst | es: de-la-sed | fr: [מצמאה] | de: [מצמאה] Jer 2:25

צִמָּאוֹן H6774 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

thirsty ground, parched land; dry earth lacking water, often in contexts of wilderness or judgment

The term describes thirsty or parched ground—land desperate for water. Deuteronomy 8:15 recalls the wilderness journey through 'the great and terrible wilderness, with its thirsty ground.' Psalm 107:33 describes God's judgment turning rivers into thirsty ground. Isaiah 35:7 promises restoration: 'the thirsty ground will become springs.' The word evokes aridity and need, whether as testing (Deuteronomy), judgment (Psalm), or the condition awaiting redemption (Isaiah). Cross-linguistic translations capture both the ground itself ('tierra sedienta', 'terre aride') and the abstract quality ('thirst', 'sed').

(3×) Three distinct theological uses appear: wilderness testing (Deuteronomy), divine judgment reversing fertility (Psalm), and eschatological restoration (Isaiah). The Spanish consistently uses 'sedienta' (thirsty) for the land, while some translations abstract to 'thirst' itself. Isaiah's promise is most dramatic: the very ground that thirsts will become springs—total reversal. The imagery is vivid throughout: land that 'thirsts' personifies creation's dependence on God's provision of water, whether in historical memory, present judgment, or future hope. THIRST AND DRYNESS

en: and-the-thirsty-ground, and-thirst, into-thirsty-ground | es: en-sequedad, y-de-sed, y-la-tierra-sedienta | fr: [וצמאון], et-thirst, à-terre-aride | de: [וצמאון], hinein-thirsty-ground, und-Durst Deut 8:15; Ps 107:33; Isa 35:7

צָמַד H6775 Conj-w | V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (5×)
to bind, join, attach oneself to; to yoke together in loyalty or devotion
This verb carries the fundamental sense of binding or yoking together, with a strong connotation of attachment or devotion. Its most theologically charged usage describes Israel 'joining themselves to' Baal Peor, meaning they adopted his worship (Num 25:3, 5; Ps 106:28). The physical sense appears in 2 Samuel 20:8, where a sword is 'bound' upon Joab's waist. Psalm 50:19 uses the Hiphil to describe yoking one's mouth to deceit. Cognates in Arabic, Aramaic, and Ethiopic all center on binding or fastening, especially harnessing animals to a yoke.

(5×) To join or attach oneself to, especially in religious devotion or allegiance. The Niphal reflexive describes Israel binding themselves to Baal Peor in idolatrous worship (Num 25:3, 5; Ps 106:28). Multilingual glosses reflect the relational-attachment sense (eng 'joined,' spa 'se unieron,' fra 'joignit'), capturing the voluntary but fateful decision to yoke oneself to a foreign deity. The Arabic cognate similarly denotes binding or fastening, reinforcing the underlying image of being yoked together. JOINING AND ALLIANCE
en: and-joined, and-they-joined-themselves, fastened | es: Y-se-unieron, Y-se-unió, atada | fr: et-joignit, et-joindre, fastened | de: der-die-schloss-sich-an, fastened, frames Num 25:3; Num 25:5; 2Sam 20:8; Ps 50:19; Ps 106:28

צֶמֶד H6776 N-mp (15×)
A pair or yoke of animals, especially draft oxen; by extension, an acre — the land area a yoke of oxen plows in a day.
This noun fundamentally means a pair or team of animals yoked together for work. Saul cut a yoke of oxen (צֶמֶד בָּקָר) and sent the pieces throughout Israel as a summons to war (1 Samuel 11:7), and Elisha was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen when Elijah called him (1 Kings 19:19). Spanish 'par de' and French 'paire de' consistently translate the pairing. The word extends naturally to a land measure — an acre being the area one yoke of oxen could plow in a day. Isaiah 5:10 prophesies that 'ten acres of vineyard' (עֲשֶׂרֶת צִמְדֵי כָרֶם) will yield only one bath, a devastating image of agricultural failure.

1. pair, yoke (of animals) (14×) A pair, yoke, or team of draft animals joined together, especially oxen. In 1 Samuel 11:7 Saul dismembers a yoke of oxen as a call to arms; Job 1:3 and 42:12 count wealth in yoke of oxen; 1 Kings 19:19 pictures Elisha plowing with twelve pairs. Spanish 'par de' and French 'paire de' capture the paired unit. The word also applies to pairs of donkeys (Judges 19:3, 10), mules (2 Kings 5:17), and horsemen (Isaiah 21:7, 9), always emphasizing the two-as-one unit yoked for a shared task. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-a-pair-of, and-his-team, and-pair-of | es: par-de, parejas, un-par-de | fr: [וצמדו], [צמד], et-paire-de | de: [וצמדו], [צמד], pair-von Judg 19:3; Judg 19:10; 1Sam 11:7; 1Sam 14:14; 2Sam 16:1

2. acre (land measure) (1×) An acre — a measure of land area, originally defined as the amount of ground a yoke of oxen could plow in one day. Isaiah 5:10 is the sole occurrence: 'ten acres of vineyard shall yield but one bath,' using the plural construct צִמְדֵי. Spanish 'yugadas de' (from 'yugo,' yoke) preserves the etymological link beautifully. This agricultural metaphor extends the concrete image of yoked animals to the land they work, the only square measure attested in the Hebrew Bible. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: yokes-of- | es: yugadas-de | fr: [צמדי] | de: [צמדי] Isa 5:10

צַמָּה H6777 N-fsc | 2fs (4×)
veil (woman's head covering or face veil)
A woman's veil or head covering, appearing in Song of Songs and Isaiah. In Song of Songs it appears three times (4:1, 3; 6:7) describing the beloved's eyes or cheeks visible behind her veil—an image of modest beauty and allure. Isaiah 47:2 commands personified Babylon to 'remove your veil' as part of her humiliating exposure and exile. The veil represents modesty, feminine dignity, and propriety; its removal signifies shame and vulnerability.

(4×) Song of Songs 4:1, 4:3, and 6:7 all use the phrase 'your eyes behind your veil' or 'your cheeks behind your veil' (צַמָּתֵךְ), depicting the beloved's modest yet captivating appearance. Isaiah 47:2 commands Babylon to 'remove your veil' as the first step in a series of humiliations (bare your legs, cross rivers). Spanish velo and French voile (veil) consistently identify this as a woman's head/face covering with connotations of modesty and honor. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: your-veil | es: tu-velo | fr: [צמתך], ton-voile. | de: [לצמתך], [צמתך] Song 4:1; Song 4:3; Song 6:7; Isa 47:2

צִמּוּק H6778 N-mp (4×)
raisin cakes, bunches of raisins (dried grapes pressed into cakes)
Dried grapes pressed or clustered together, either as raisin cakes or bunches of raisins. These were portable, energy-dense food used for provisions on journeys or military campaigns. First Samuel 25:18 mentions Abigail bringing raisin cakes to David along with other provisions. First Samuel 30:12 describes giving raisins to a starving Egyptian servant. Second Samuel 16:1 lists raisin cakes among supplies Ziba brought for David's flight. First Chronicles 12:40 records neighbors bringing raisins to David's coronation feast. This was valued, portable sustenance.

(4×) First Samuel 25:18 lists 'a hundred clusters of raisins' among Abigail's peace offerings to David. First Samuel 30:12 mentions giving 'two clusters of raisins' to revive the Egyptian. Second Samuel 16:1 includes 'a hundred bunches of raisins' in Ziba's provisions. First Chronicles 12:40 notes neighbors bringing 'cakes of raisins' to David's celebration. Spanish pasas/racimos de pasas (raisins/clusters of raisins) reflects both the dried fruit and its clustered/pressed form for transport. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: and-raisin-cakes, raisin-cakes | es: pasas, racimos-de-pasas, y-pasas | fr: [וצמוקים], raisin-cakes | de: [וצמוקים], raisin-cakes 1Sam 25:18; 1Sam 30:12; 2Sam 16:1; 1Chr 12:40

צָמַח H6779 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (33×)
To sprout, spring up (of plants or figurative growth); to cause to grow or produce (Hifil); to grow intensively (Piel).
The Hebrew verb tsamach captures the elemental action of sprouting — green life pushing through soil. In the Qal, it describes intransitive growing, from the primordial 'no plant had yet sprung up' (Gen 2:5) to Pharaoh's dream of ears sprouting on a stalk (Gen 41:6). The Hifil adds divine causation: God 'caused to grow every tree' in Eden (Gen 2:9). Spanish brotar, French germer, and German sprossen cluster around the botanical image. Theologically, tsamach reaches its zenith in the messianic title tsemach ('Branch'), where Zechariah declares that 'Sprout' will build the temple (Zech 6:12).

1. sprout, spring up (Qal) (15×) The intransitive Qal sense of sprouting, springing up, or growing, said of plants, vegetation, hair, or figuratively of persons and things that emerge and flourish. With 15 occurrences, this is the base meaning: before any bush 'had yet sprung up' in Eden (Gen 2:5), Pharaoh's dream ears of grain 'sprouting' on a stalk (Gen 41:6, 23), greenery sprouting after the plague of locusts (Exod 10:5), and healed hair 'growing again' in leprosy inspection (Lev 13:37). Spanish brotar, French germer, and German sprossen all converge on the botanical intransitive. Isaiah uses the verb figuratively for new things 'springing forth' (Isa 42:9; 43:19), and Zechariah 6:12 deploys it for the messianic Branch who 'shall sprout from his place.' SPROUTING AND GROWING en: And-they-will-spring-up, and-it-sprouted, growing | es: Y-brotó, brota, brotando | fr: a-sprouted-, cela-sprouted, et-germer | de: Quellen-hinauf, [ויצמח], [צמח] Gen 2:5; Gen 41:6; Gen 41:23; Exod 10:5; Lev 13:37

2. cause to sprout, produce (Hifil) (14×) The causative Hifil sense: to cause to sprout, to produce, to make grow — with God, the earth, or a garden as the agent that brings forth vegetation or offspring. With 14 occurrences, this sense opens with God causing 'every tree pleasant to the sight' to grow in Eden (Gen 2:9), continues through the curse of thorns and thistles (Gen 3:18), and recurs in prophetic speech where God promises 'I will cause a horn to sprout for David' (Ps 132:17; Ezek 29:21). Spanish hacer brotar/crecer, French faire germer, and German wachsen lassen all employ the causative periphrasis. Job 38:27 beautifully pairs the stem with divine sovereignty: God sends rain 'to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth' in wilderness where no human dwells. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: And-caused-to-grow, He-causes-to-grow, I-will-cause-to-sprout | es: El-que-hace-crecer, Y-hizo-crecer, el-que-hace-brotar | fr: –sprout, Et-caused-à-croître, Il-causes-à-grandis | de: He-causes-zu-grow, [אצמית], [ולהצמית] Gen 2:9; Gen 3:18; Deut 29:23; 2Sam 23:5; Job 38:27

3. grow, increase (Piel) (4×) The intensive Piel sense of growing or increasing, emphasizing the process or fullness of growth rather than initial sprouting. With 4 occurrences, this relatively rare stem appears in Samson's hair growing back after being cut (Judg 16:22), the humiliated ambassadors told to stay in Jericho 'until your beards have grown' (2 Sam 10:5; 1 Chr 19:5), and Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem growing 'like a plant of the field' (Ezek 16:7). Spanish crecer, French grandir/pousser, and German wachsen shift from 'sprout' to 'grow' vocabulary, reflecting the progressive rather than punctiliar nature of the Piel. The distinction from the Qal is subtle but real: the Piel emphasizes sustained development, not initial emergence. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: grew, grows, to-grow | es: a-crecer, creció, crezca | fr: [יצמח], germer, grows | de: [יצמח], [צמח], grows Judg 16:22; 2Sam 10:5; 1Chr 19:5; Ezek 16:7

צֶמַח H6780 N-msc / 3fs (12×)

Sprout, growth, vegetation; used as a messianic title 'the Branch' for the promised Davidic ruler

A noun whose natural meaning – the green growth that springs from the earth – becomes one of the Old Testament's most evocative messianic images. Genesis 19:25 uses it simply for the 'growth of the ground' destroyed at Sodom, and Ezekiel 16:7 compares Jerusalem to the 'growth of the field.' But in Jeremiah 23:5 and Zechariah 3:8 and 6:12, tsemach becomes a royal title: 'the Branch,' the righteous shoot God will raise from David's line. Spanish capitalizes this shift beautifully – from 'su brote' (its sprout) to 'el Retono' (the Sprout, as proper name). The tension between humble earthly growth and exalted messianic promise is the theological heartbeat of this word.

1. growth, vegetation (of the earth) (6×) Collective growth or vegetation of the earth – plants, crops, and what the soil produces. Used for the ground-cover destroyed at Sodom (Gen 19:25), the field-growth to which Jerusalem is compared (Ezek 16:7), and the earth bringing forth its produce as a sign of divine blessing (Ps 65:10; Isa 61:11). Arabic 'nabat' (vegetation/plant) and Spanish 'planta de' (plant of) confirm the generic botanical sense. Ezekiel 17:9 narrows it to the foliage of a particular vine. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: and-growth-of, as-growth-of, growth-its | es: como-planta-de, su-brote, su-renuevo | fr: [צמחה], et-growth-de, germe | de: [כצמח], [צמחה], sein-growth Gen 19:25; Ps 65:10; Isa 61:11; Ezek 16:7; Ezek 17:9

2. Branch (messianic title) (5×) The Branch – a messianic title designating the promised righteous ruler from David's line. Jeremiah 23:5 announces 'I will raise up for David a righteous Branch,' and Zechariah 3:8 and 6:12 use it as virtually a proper name: 'my servant the Branch.' Spanish shifts from lowercase 'renuevo' to capitalized 'el Retono,' and Swahili 'Chipukizi' similarly marks the transition to royal title. Isaiah 4:2 ('the Branch of the LORD') may bridge the natural and messianic senses, describing both divine blessing and eschatological hope. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: Branch, branch-of | es: Renuevo-de, Retoño, el-Retoño | fr: [צמח], germe | de: Spross, [צמח] Isa 4:2; Jer 23:5; Jer 33:15; Zech 3:8; Zech 6:12

3. stalk, shoot (individual plant) (1×) An individual stalk or shoot of grain, distinguished from collective vegetation. Hosea 8:7 warns that Israel's sown seed will produce a stalk with no standing grain – a prophetic image of futility. Arabic 'ghalla' (grain yield) and Spanish 'grano' (grain) focus on the expected produce rather than the plant itself, highlighting the bitter irony: the stalk exists but yields nothing. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: stalk | es: grano | fr: germe | de: Spross Hos 8:7

צָמִיד H6781a N-mp (6×)

Bracelet or armlet; an ornamental band worn on the wrist or arm, given as gift, dowry, or plunder.

A bracelet or armlet — an ornamental band worn on the wrist or arm. The word features prominently in the betrothal narrative of Rebekah, where Abraham's servant presents gold bracelets (tsemidim) as tokens of courtship (Gen 24:22, 30, 47). It reappears among the spoils of war dedicated to the LORD (Num 31:50) and in Ezekiel's allegorical depictions of Jerusalem as a bride adorned by God with bracelets (Ezek 16:11; 23:42). Across languages the translation is remarkably consistent: Spanish 'brazaletes,' French 'bracelets,' German 'Armreife.'

bracelet, armlet (6×) A bracelet or armlet, an ornamental band worn on the wrist or arm. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — English 'bracelets,' Spanish 'brazaletes,' French 'bracelets,' German 'Armreife' — reflecting the concreteness and cultural universality of the referent. Most occurrences appear in Genesis 24 (vv. 22, 30, 47), where Abraham's servant gives Rebekah gold bracelets as betrothal gifts. In Numbers 31:50, bracelets appear among war plunder offered to the LORD. Ezekiel uses the image metaphorically: God adorns personified Jerusalem with bracelets (Ezek 16:11), and the unfaithful city receives bracelets from her illicit lovers (Ezek 23:42). BRACELET ARMLET en: and-bracelet, and-the-bracelets, bracelets | es: brazaletes, los-brazaletes, y-los-brazaletes | fr: [צמידים], bracelets, et-bracelet | de: Armreife, [צמידים], die-Armreife Gen 24:22; Gen 24:30; Gen 24:47; Num 31:50; Ezek 16:11

צָמִיד H6781b N-msc (1×)

cover, lid (of a vessel)

This noun denotes a cover or lid for a vessel, appearing in Numbers 19:15's purity regulations. Any open container without a fastened cover in a tent with a corpse becomes unclean. The law required vessels to be sealed or lidded to prevent corpse defilement. The word emphasizes the fastening or binding aspect—the cover must be secured, not just placed on top, to provide effective ritual protection from death's contaminating influence.

(1×) A cover or lid for a vessel, specifically one that is fastened or tied down. Numbers 19:15 legislates corpse impurity: 'any open vessel which has no cover fastened on it is unclean.' The context is ritual purity—only sealed containers were protected from defilement by a corpse in the same tent. The fastening detail matters: loose covers provided no protection; the lid had to be bound on to create an effective seal against contamination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fastening-of | es: atadura-de | fr: fastening-de | de: fastening-von Num 19:15

צַמִּים H6782 N-ms (2×)

snare, trap; or possibly 'the thirsty' depending on textual reading

This obscure word appears in Job's wisdom speeches, with the meaning debated between 'snare' (based on parallel with 'trap') and 'thirsty people' (based on proposed emendation). If 'snare,' it describes a trap snapping at the wealth of the wicked or catching the foot of the unrighteous. If 'thirsty,' it refers to desperate people snatching at grain or wealth. The parallel with 'trap' in 18:9 supports the 'snare' interpretation, fitting Job's theme of divine justice catching the wicked in their own devices.

(2×) Job 5:5 and 18:9 use this term in contexts of the wicked being caught or trapped. Translations diverge: English offers 'snare' and 'the thirsty,' Spanish has 'lazo' (snare), French and German mostly transliterate, showing uncertainty. The lexical difficulty stems from the word's rarity and disputed etymology. In 18:9, the parallel with 'trap' (pach) strongly suggests a capturing device—'a trap catches his heel, a snare holds him fast.' This reading fits Job's repeated theme of divine retribution ensnaring the wicked in their own schemes. SNARES AND TRAPS en: a-snare, the-thirsty | es: el-lazo, lazo | fr: צמים | de: [צמים] Job 5:5; Job 18:9

צְמִיתֻת H6783 Prep-l (2×)
in perpetuity, forever; complete and permanent alienation without possibility of return
This technical legal term appears in Leviticus' laws about land redemption and permanent property transfer. Land in Israel could not be sold 'in perpetuity' because it belonged to God and was merely leased to families. However, houses in walled cities could be sold permanently, 'in perpetuity,' if not redeemed within a year. The word emphasizes finality and completeness—a transfer beyond recovery, cutting off all future claims. It relates to terms for destruction and cutting off, underscoring the permanent nature of such transactions.

(2×) Both occurrences are in Leviticus 25 (verses 23 and 30), distinguishing land that cannot be sold 'in perpetuity' from city houses that can be permanently alienated. All translations render this consistently as 'in perpetuity' or 'permanently': Spanish 'a-perpetuidad,' French 'dans-perpétuité,' German 'in-perpetuity.' The legal principle protected family inheritances—land would return at Jubilee even if sold, preventing permanent dispossession. But city property followed different rules, allowing complete and final alienation. The term's root connection to 'cutting off' emphasizes the finality: what is sold 'in perpetuity' is cut off permanently from the seller. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: in-perpetuity | es: a-perpetuidad | fr: dans-perpétuité | de: in-perpetuity
Lev 25:23; Lev 25:30

צָמַק H6784 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
to dry up, shrivel, wither
This verb means to dry up or shrivel, appearing in Hosea 9:14's bitter prayer regarding Israel's judgment. The prophet asks God to give Ephraim 'shriveling breasts' incapable of nursing—a devastating image of barrenness and failed motherhood. The parallel phrase 'miscarrying womb' reinforces the theme of generation cut off. The verb captures the withering of what should provide life and nourishment, biological language for national extinction.

(1×) To dry up, shrivel, or wither, used in Hosea 9:14 in a grim prayer about Israel's judgment: 'give them shriveling breasts' unable to nurse. The verb describes mammary glands drying up, failing their life-giving function. Paired with 'miscarrying womb,' this creates an image of complete reproductive failure—children either lost before birth or starving after. The physical withering symbolizes the nation's future withering under divine judgment. WITHERING AND DRYING
en: dried-up | es: secos | fr: dessécher | de: [צמקים]
Hos 9:14

צֶמֶר H6785 Conj-w / N-msc (16×)
Wool — sheep's fleece as a raw material, textile product, or image of whiteness Denotes the fibrous fleece of sheep in both practical and figurative uses. It appears most often paired with flax or linen in legal and economic contexts: the garment-contamination laws (Lev 13:47-59), the mixed-fabric prohibition (Deut 22:11), and Hosea's description of wool as a valued gift (Hos 2:7, 11). Isaiah uses white wool as a simile for purified sin — 'though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be white as wool' (Isa 1:18) — while the Psalmist compares snow to wool scattered across the land (Ps 147:16). Ezekiel bars priestly garments made of wool to prevent perspiration (Ezek 44:17). The Proverbs 31 woman seeks out wool alongside flax for her household industry. French 'laine' and German 'Wolle' render it consistently across contexts.

wool (16×) Wool, the fleece of sheep used as a raw material and finished textile. It appears in legal contexts distinguishing it from linen in garment contamination (Lev 13:47-59) and the mixed-fabric law (Deut 22:11), in economic contexts as a valuable natural product (Hos 2:7, 11; 2 Kgs 3:4; Prov 31:13), and in striking figurative use for whiteness and purity — sin made white as wool (Isa 1:18) and snowflakes like scattered wool (Ps 147:16). Ezekiel forbids wool for priestly vestments (Ezek 44:17). WOOL TEXTILE FIBER
en: My-wool, and-like-the-wool, and-of-the-wool | es: como-la-lana, como-lana, en-la-lana | fr: [וכצמר], [כצמר], comme-laine | de: Wolle, [הצמר], [וכצמר]
Lev 13:47; Lev 13:48; Lev 13:52; Lev 13:59; Deut 22:11

צְמָרִי H6786 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
the Tsemarite; a Canaanite people group descended from Canaan, associated with the city of Tsimirra/Sumur
This gentilic term denotes a Canaanite clan descended from Canaan, listed among his sons in the Table of Nations. Ancient sources identify them with the coastal city variously called Tsimirra (Assyrian), Sumur (Tel Amarna), and Simyra (Greek), located north of Tripoli near Arvad on the Phoenician coast. The Septuagint renders it 'Samaraion,' showing how ancient translators struggled with the name. The dual biblical references preserve this otherwise minor branch of Canaan's lineage.

(2×) The Hebrew construct 'the Tsemarite' appears only in genealogical contexts (Genesis 10:18, 1 Chronicles 1:16), where it functions as a collective ethnic designation. BDB's extensive philological notes trace the name through Assyrian, Egyptian, and Greek sources, all pointing to a specific Phoenician coastal settlement. The multilingual glosses preserve the definite article and attempt transliteration, with Spanish and English maintaining 'Tsemarite' while French and German show slight orthographic variation, all confirming this is a proper ethnic identifier rather than a common noun. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Tsemari, the-Zemarite | es: el-tsemareo | fr: [הצמרי], le-Zemarite | de: [הצמרי], den-Zemariter
Gen 10:18; 1Chr 1:16

צְמָרַיִם H6787 N-proper-fs (2×)
Tsemarayim; name of two locations: a town in Benjamin and a mountain in Ephraim
This place name identifies two distinct locations in Israel's central hill country. The first is a town in Benjamin's tribal allotment near Jericho, possibly modern Es-samra. The second is a mountain in Ephraim where King Abijah confronted Jeroboam. The name may derive from a dual form, suggesting 'double peaks' or a twin settlement. The Septuagint renderings vary considerably, reflecting uncertainty about these sites even in antiquity. Both references preserve important geographical markers in Israel's early monarchic period.

(2×) Both occurrences (Joshua 18:22, 2 Chronicles 13:4) function as geographical proper nouns, though designating different topographical features. The first marks a Benjamite town boundary, while the second locates a significant military confrontation. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration patterns: Spanish uses 'Semaraim/Tsemarayim,' French and German preserve the tsade initial consonant with slight variation. The conjunction 'and' in several glosses (Joshua 18:22) reflects the listing context within Benjamin's town inventory, while the bare form in 2 Chronicles marks the mountain designation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zemaraim, and-Tsemarayim | es: Tsemarayim, y-Semaraim | fr: [צמרים], et-Tsemarayim | de: [צמרים], und-Tsemarayim
Josh 18:22; 2Chr 13:4

צַמֶּרֶת H6788 N-fsc / 3mp (5×)
treetop, crown of a tree; the uppermost leafy branches, especially of a tall cedar Derived from the root associated with wool or fleece, this noun pictures the soft, feathery crown of a tree. All five occurrences appear in Ezekiel's prophetic imagery, where the treetop of a great cedar symbolizes royal sovereignty and national pride (Ezek 17:3, 22; 31:3, 10, 14). The English glosses 'top' and Spanish 'copa' both capture the elevated canopy image, while the etymological link to wool evokes the dense, tufted quality of foliage at a tree's apex.

(5×) The crown or topmost foliage of a tree, used exclusively in Ezekiel's prophetic allegories about cedars and tall trees. In Ezek 17:3, 22 the great eagle plucks the treetop of a cedar, symbolizing the Davidic monarchy. In Ezek 31:3, 10, 14 the towering treetop represents Assyria's and Egypt's pride. Spanish 'copa' (canopy) and

English 'top' converge on the image of luxuriant upper branches. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-top-of, its-top, their-tops | es: copa-de, de-copa-de, su-copa | fr: fleur | de: [מצמרת], [צמרת], [צמרתו] Ezek 17:3; Ezek 17:22; Ezek 31:3; Ezek 31:10; Ezek 31:14

צָמַת H6789 V-Hifil-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (15×)

To put an end to, destroy, annihilate; passively to perish or be cut off; intensively to consume utterly.

A forceful verb of total destruction, used almost exclusively in poetry and lament. David declares 'I destroyed those who hate me' (2 Sam 22:41), the Psalmist pleads 'destroy them!' (Ps 54:5), and in Lamentations the enemies 'silenced my life in the pit' (Lam 3:53). The Arabic cognate means 'to silence,' and that undertone persists — this is not mere damage but definitive ending. Spanish captures the range well: 'destruir' (destroy) for the Hifil, 'desaparecer' (vanish) for the Nifal, and 'consumir' (consume) for the Piel's intensive force.

1. destroy, annihilate (Hifil) (10×) To destroy or annihilate (Hifil causative): the dominant sense, used of cutting off enemies, nations, or the wicked. David destroyed those who rose against him (2 Sam 22:41; Ps 18:40), the Psalmist prays for God to destroy his foes (Ps 54:5; 101:8), and those far from God 'perish' (Ps 73:27). Spanish 'destruir' and French 'anéantir' consistently render this total, decisive destruction. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: I-destroyed, I-will-destroy, You-put-an-end-to | es: destruirás, destruiré, destrúyelos | fr: anéantir, de-anéantir, et-je-détruis-eux | de: cut-off, du-setzen-ein-enden-zu, ich-vernichtet 2Sam 22:41; Ps 18:40; Ps 54:5; Ps 69:4; Ps 73:27

2. be cut off, perish, vanish (Nifal) (2×) To be cut off, perish, or vanish (Nifal passive): the subject is destroyed or disappears. Dried-up wadis 'vanish' in the heat (Job 6:17), and Job says he is 'not silenced' despite the darkness (Job 23:17). Spanish 'desaparecer' (vanish) and 'fui destruido' (I was destroyed) capture the passive dissolution implied by this stem. KILLING AND REMOVING en: I-was-silenced, they-vanish | es: desaparecen, fui-destruido | fr: ,נצמתו נצמתי | de: [נצמתו], [נצמתי] Job 6:17; Job 23:17

3. destroy utterly, consume (Piel) (2×) To destroy utterly or consume (Piel intensive): an intensification of the basic destruction, emphasizing thoroughness or overwhelming force. Zeal 'has consumed me' (Ps 119:139) and terrors 'have destroyed me' (Ps 88:16). Spanish 'consumir' (consume) and 'destruir' (destroy) both appear, with the Piel marking a personal, existential quality of being overwhelmed to the point of annihilation. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: has-consumed-me, have-destroyed-me | es: Me-consumió, me-destruyeron | fr: anéantir | de: haben-vernichtet-mich, hat-verzehrt-mich Ps 88:16; Ps 119:139

4. put an end to, silence (Qal) (1×) To put an end to or silence (Qal basic stem): the unaugmented root meaning of cutting off or terminating. In Lam 3:53 enemies 'silenced my life in the pit,' echoing the Arabic cognate 'to be silent.' Spanish 'cortaron' (they cut off) preserves the concrete, terminal force of the Qal — a single decisive act of ending. CEASING AND STOPPING en: They-silenced | es: Cortaron | fr: [צמתו] | de: [צמתו] Lam 3:53

צִן H6790 N-proper-fs (10×)

Zin; a wilderness region in the southern Negev associated with Kadesh-barnea and Israel's wanderings.

A proper noun designating the wilderness of Zin, a barren desert region in the southern Negev through which Israel traveled during the Exodus. It is closely associated with Kadesh-barnea (Num 20:1; 27:14) and features prominently in the boundary descriptions of the Promised Land (Num 34:3-4; Josh 15:1). This is also the region where Miriam died and where Moses struck the rock at Meribah. Transliterations vary across languages—Tsin, Tzin, Sin—but all refer to the same locale.

Zin (wilderness region) (10×) The wilderness of Zin, a desert region in the southern Negev forming the southern boundary of Canaan and encompassing Kadesh-barnea. Nearly all occurrences appear in the Priestly source, either in boundary lists (Num 34:3-4; Josh 15:1, 3) or in narratives of Israel's sojourn (Num 13:21; 20:1; 33:36). The repeated phrase midbar-tsin ('wilderness of Zin') anchors some of the most consequential events of the wandering period, including the deaths of Miriam and Aaron and Moses' sin at Meribah (Num 27:14; Deut 32:51). Spanish Sin/Zin, French Tsin, and German Tsin all represent the same geographic referent. ZIN WILDERNESS REGION

en: Tsin, Tzin, Tzinah | es: Sin, Tsin, Zin | fr: Tsin, Tsin-ward, Tzin | de: Tsin, Tzin, Tzinah Num 13:21; Num 20:1; Num 27:14; Num 33:36

צִן H6791 N-mp (2×)

thorns, barbs; sharp plant growth representing danger or worthlessness, possibly thorn-hedge protection

This rare term denotes thorny vegetation appearing in wisdom and poetic contexts. In Proverbs it pairs with 'snares' on the path of the perverse, while Job's usage is textually uncertain, possibly referring to protective thorn hedges around grain. Some scholars suggest it may be a textual variant. The term evokes danger, entanglement, and the barriers that thorns create, whether as obstacles to avoid or defenses to breach. Its rarity and textual ambiguity make precise identification difficult.

(2×) The word appears in Proverbs 22:5 paired with 'snares' and in Job 5:5 with disputed meaning. English and Spanish glosses converge on 'thorns/espinos,' confirming the botanical-danger semantic domain. The Job passage shows significant translation uncertainty: French omits translation, German retains transliteration, suggesting the text itself was problematic. BDB notes possible textual corruption and proposes this might be a doublet or variant reading. The Proverbs context clearly uses thorns metaphorically for dangers encountered by the wicked, a common biblical image. THORNS AND BRAMBLES en: thorns | es: Espinas, espinos | fr: de-צנים ,מצנים | de: [מצנים], [צנים] Job 5:5; Prov 22:5

צֹנָה H6792 Prep-l / N-msc / 2mp (2×)

flocks, sheep (collective); parallel form of the more common tsōʼn, denoting small livestock

This variant form of the standard word for 'flock' appears only twice, functioning identically to its more common parallel. In Numbers it refers to the flocks the Gadites and Reubenites were building enclosures for, while in Psalm 8 it describes the small livestock God placed under human dominion. The form preserves an archaic or poetic variant of the everyday term for sheep and goats kept for wool, milk, and meat. Both passages employ possessive constructions, emphasizing ownership and stewardship of these essential economic resources.

(2×) Both occurrences (Numbers 32:24, Psalm 8:7) appear with possessive suffixes ('your flocks,' 'sheep'), indicating owned livestock. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish 'ovejas,' French 'troupeau,' German 'Schafe/Herden' all point to small domestic animals. The Numbers passage pairs these flocks with children in a building context, showing their central economic importance. The Psalm embeds them in creation theology, listing them among animals under human authority alongside cattle and wild beasts. The term's rarity suggests it may be a dialectical, poetic, or archaic variant that coexisted with the standard tsōʼn. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: for-your-flocks, sheep | es: Ovejas, para-vuestras-ovejas | fr: pour-ton-troupeaux, troupeau | de: Schafe, fuer-dein-Herden Num 32:24; Ps 8:7

צִנָּה H6793a Prep-b / N-fp (1×)

hooks, barbs (for fishing or dragging)

This noun likely refers to hooks or barbs, possibly fishing hooks, mentioned in Amos 4:2. The prophet declares that enemies will drag the people of Samaria away 'with hooks,' using fishing imagery for deportation. Parallel to 'fishhooks' in the same verse, this term may distinguish types of hooks or emphasize the totality—every method of catching fish applied to catching people. The Spanish

'ganchos' (hooks) aligns with this interpretation of sharp, barbed instruments for dragging captives.

(1×) Hooks or barbs used for catching or dragging, appearing in Amos 4:2's prophecy against Samaria's wealthy women. God declares the days are coming when 'they will take you away with hooks,' using fishing metaphors for military deportation. Paired with another term for fishhooks, this creates an image of captives hooked and dragged like fish from water. The barbed implements ensure no escape —brutal and degrading treatment fitting the prophet's judgment oracle. HOOK RING FETTER

en: with-hooks | es: con-ganchos | fr: bouclier | de: [בצנות] Amos 4:2

צִנָּה H6793b Prep-k / N-fsc (1×)

coolness, cold

This noun denotes coolness or cold, appearing in Proverbs 25:13's simile about a faithful messenger. He is 'like the coolness of snow at harvest time'—refreshing, invigorating, unexpected relief. In the Middle Eastern context, snow-cooled water during the hot harvest season was an extraordinary luxury. The comparison highlights how a reliable messenger brings revitalizing relief to those who send him, as welcome as cold in oppressive heat.

(1×) Coolness or cold, specifically in the phrase 'coolness of snow' (Proverbs 25:13). The verse compares a trustworthy messenger to 'the coolness of snow at harvest time,' when refreshment is most needed and appreciated. The cold of snow during hot harvest work was both rare and reviving. The image captures how a faithful servant brings psychological and practical refreshment to his masters, renewing their spirits like a cold drink in heat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-cold-of | es: Como-frío-de- | fr: comme-כצנת | de: [כצנת] Prov 25:13

צִנָּה H6793c N-fp (20×)

A large, full-body shield (tsinnah), distinguished from the smaller magen, used in warfare and as a figure for divine protection.

Designates the large, full-body defensive shield used by heavy infantry, in contrast to the smaller magen carried by lighter troops. Solomon's gold shields (1 Kgs 10:16; 2 Chr 9:15) demonstrate its impressive size, and Goliath's shield-bearer carried one before the giant (1 Sam 17:7, 41). The paired phrase 'magen and tsinnah' became a stock expression for full military armament (Jer 46:3; Ezek 23:24; 38:4; 39:9; Ps 35:2). Beautifully, two Psalms apply it to God — his favor surrounds the righteous like a tsinnah (Ps 5:12), and his faithfulness is a shield and buckler (Ps 91:4).

large shield, buckler (20×) A large, full-body defensive shield (tsinnah) distinct from the smaller, round magen. Employed by heavy infantry and shield-bearers in battle (1 Sam 17:7, 41; 1 Chr 12:9, 25; 2 Chr 14:7; 25:5), it featured in Solomon's gold armory (1 Kgs 10:16; 2 Chr 9:15) and in the stock military pairing 'magen and tsinnah' (Jer 46:3; Ezek 23:24; 38:4; Ps 35:2). Used figuratively of God's protective favor (Ps 5:12) and his faithfulness as a surrounding shield (Ps 91:4). Translations vary — English 'buckler' or 'large shield,' Spanish 'escudo,' German 'Schild' — but consistently distinguish it from the smaller shield. SHIELD DEFENSIVE WEAPON

en: a-shield, and-buckler, and-large-shield | es: como-escudo, con-escudo, el-escudo | fr: [וצנה], bouclier, comme-bouclier | de: Schild, [וצנה], der-Schild 1Sam 17:7; 1Sam 17:41; 1Kgs 10:16; 1Chr 12:9

צְנוֹר H6794 Prep-b (2×)

water-channel, conduit, waterspout; a constructed or natural passage for water flow

This architectural and geological term describes channels for water conveyance. In 2 Samuel it appears in the enigmatic instruction about reaching Jerusalem's water system, though the text and meaning are notoriously difficult. In Psalm 42 it metaphorically depicts the torrents of God's waterfalls, likely referring to the opened floodgates of heaven in storm imagery. The base meaning involves pipes, channels, or spouts through which water flows forcefully. The term bridges literal infrastructure and poetic imagery of overwhelming divine intervention.

(2×) The two contexts diverge significantly: 2 Samuel 5:8 presents a tactical reference to Jerusalem's water shaft (likely Warren's Shaft), while Psalm 42:7 uses plural 'waterspouts' as poetic imagery for overwhelming grief. Spanish glosses show this range: 'canal' (infrastructure) versus 'cataratas' (waterfalls). French and German preserve the dual meaning with 'eau-shaft/ravin' and 'Wasser-shaft/waterfalls.' The Psalm context pairs this term with 'abyss' and 'waves,' clearly evoking natural water violence, while the Samuel passage is tactical-geographical. Both share the semantic core of water flowing through a defined channel, whether constructed or natural. FLOWING WATER

en: Your-waterfalls, by-the-water-shaft | es: en-el-canal, tus-cataratas | fr: par-le-eau-shaft, ravin | de: bei-der-Wasser-shaft, dein-waterfalls 2Sam 5:8; Ps 42:7

צָנַח H6795 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (3×)

to descend, dismount, go down; movement downward, especially alighting from an animal or penetrating into the ground

This verb describes descending or going down. Joshua 15:18 and Judges 1:14 recount Achsah dismounting from her donkey to speak with her father Caleb—a deliberate descent to make a request. Judges 4:21 uses it for Jael's tent peg penetrating downward into Sisera's head, driven 'into the ground.' The semantic range covers both ordinary physical descent (alighting from an animal) and forceful downward penetration. Spanish distinguishes 'se bajó' (dismounted) from 'penetró' (penetrated), recognizing the contextual variation within the basic downward movement.

(3×) Two narrative contexts appear: Achsah's deliberate dismount (repeated in Joshua and Judges) and the violent downward thrust of the tent peg (Judges 4:21). The first involves intentional descent from a donkey, marking a formal request; the second describes lethal penetration. The cross-linguistic evidence shows both polite ('dismounted') and violent ('went down into') glosses, reflecting the verb's flexibility. The core meaning is downward motion, whether controlled (alighting) or forceful (driving into the ground). DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-it-went-down, and-she-dismounted | es: y-penetró, y-se-bajó | fr: et-elle-dismounted, et-il-alla-en-bas | de: und-es-ging-hinab, und-sie-dismounted Josh 15:18; Judg 1:14; Judg 4:21

צָנִין H6796 Conj-w (2×)

thorns, barbs, pricks; sharp plant growth used metaphorically for hostile enemies and obstacles

This term appears exclusively in figurative warnings about Israel's enemies becoming painful thorns if not driven out. Both occurrences pair it with another word for thorns or barbs, creating an intensive compound image. In Numbers, unconquered Canaanites will become 'barbs in your eyes and thorns in your sides,' while Joshua warns they will be 'snares and traps, scourges in your sides and thorns in your eyes.' The imagery evokes constant irritation, pain, and danger from hostile neighbors who should have been displaced but were permitted to remain.

(2×) Both passages (Numbers 33:55, Joshua 23:13) employ identical figurative usage, warning of enemies as thorns/barbs causing pain. The conjunction 'and' in all glosses reflects the paired construction with šikkîm (thorns). Spanish consistently uses 'aguijones/espinas' (goads/thorns), French and German maintain 'barbs/thorns,' showing the dual terminology for sharp plant growth. The 'eyes and sides' body imagery intensifies the threat, depicting enemies as penetrating, painful presences in Israel's most vulnerable areas. This is metaphorical, not botanical reference, using thorn pain to communicate the consequence of incomplete conquest. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: and-for-barbs, and-for-thorns | es: y-como-aguijones, y-para-espinas | fr: et-pour-barbs, et-pour-thorns | de: und-fuer-Dornen, und-fuer-barbs Num 33:55; Josh 23:13

צָנִיף H6797 N-ms (5×)
turban, headwrap; a wound cloth headdress worn by priests, royalty, or women
A turban or wound headcloth of dignity and authority. In Zechariah 3:5 the high priest Joshua receives a clean turban as a sign of restored holiness, while Job 29:14 uses it figuratively: righteousness was his turban. Isaiah 62:3 pairs it with royalty ('turban of kingship'), and Isaiah 3:23 lists women's turbans among luxury garments destined for removal. Spanish 'turbante' and 'diadema' together reflect the range from everyday headwear to regal insignia.

(5×) A wound cloth headdress signifying dignity, worn by the high priest (Zech 3:5), royalty (Isa 62:3, 'turban of kingship'), or wealthy women (Isa 3:23). Job 29:14 extends the image metaphorically: justice served as his turban. The Spanish gloss 'diadema' alongside 'turbante' shows how translators sense both the functional headcovering and its connotation of honor and rank. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: a-turban, and-a-turban-of, and-the-turbans | es: el-turbante, un-turbante, y-diadema | fr: [(וצניף)], [והצניפות], et-צניף | de: [(וצניף)], [הצניף], [והצניפות] Job 29:14; Isa 3:23; Isa 62:3; Zech 3:5

צָנַם H6798 N-fp (1×)
dried up, withered, hardened
This participle describes something dried up or withered, used in Genesis 41:23 of grain in Pharaoh's dream. The dream features seven thin, wind-blasted ears of grain, described as 'withered'—dried out and incapable of bearing seed. The Aramaic cognate means 'stone,' suggesting hardening through desiccation. These withered ears symbolized seven years of famine that would consume Egypt's abundance, grain so dried it was useless for food or planting.

(1×) Dried up, withered, or hardened through desiccation, describing grain in Pharaoh's dream (Genesis 41:23). The seven ears of grain were 'thin and withered,' blasted by the east wind until they dried to uselessness. The Aramaic connection to 'stone' suggests they became hard as rock. In the dream's interpretation, these withered ears symbolized seven famine years that would devastate Egypt, grain so desiccated it could neither feed nor seed. WITHERING AND DRYING
en: withered | es: secas | fr: withered | de: vertrocknete Gen 41:23

צַאֲנָן H6799 N-proper-fs (1×)
Zaanan, a town in Judah's Shephelah
This place name identifies a town in the Shephelah (lowlands) of Judah, appearing in Joshua 15:37. It may be the same location mentioned in Micah 1:11 as Zaanan (or Tzenan). The Septuagint renders it Senna or Sennam. As part of Judah's territorial allotment, it was one of the lowland towns between the coastal plain and the hill country, strategically positioned in the fertile agricultural zone.

(1×) A town name in the Shephelah district of Judah (Joshua 15:37), possibly identical with the Zaanan of Micah 1:11. Located in the lowlands, it was part of Judah's western territory. The Septuagint preserves the name with Greek adaptations. Though no events are specifically associated with this town in Joshua, its inclusion in the boundary lists establishes it as part of the tribal inheritance, a settlement in the productive lowlands. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Tzenan | es: Zenán | fr: Tzenan | de: Tzenan Josh 15:37

צָנַע H6800a Conj-w / V-Hifil-InfAbs (1×)
to walk humbly, conduct oneself with humility
This verb in the Hiphil infinitive absolute means to walk humbly or conduct oneself with modesty. Micah 6:8 uses it in the famous summary of God's requirements: 'to act justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with your God.' The intensive infinitive form emphasizes the ongoing nature of humble walking. The root suggests being reserved or modest, the opposite of pride. This isn't occasional humility but a continuous posture of modesty before God.

(1×) To walk humbly or conduct oneself with modesty, appearing in Micah 6:8's triad of divine requirements: 'act justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with your God.' The Hiphil infinitive absolute intensifies the meaning—making oneself walk humbly, cultivating humble walking as a practice. This goes beyond isolated acts of humility to a sustained manner of life, characterized by modesty, self-effacement, and awareness of one's place before God. The multilingual evidence confirms the humility sense. HUMILITY AND MEEKNESS
en: and-to-walk-humbly | es: y-humillarte | fr: et-être-humble | de: [והצנע] Mic 6:8

צָנוּעַ H6800b Adj-mp (1×)
humble, modest (in character)
This adjective describes humble or modest persons, appearing in Proverbs 11:2 in contrast to arrogance. The verse states, 'with the humble is wisdom,' while pride brings disgrace. The plural form designates those characterized by modesty and self-effacement rather than presumption. This is not weakness but proper self-assessment, the quality of those who don't overreach their knowledge or position. Wisdom gravitates toward such humble people, avoiding the arrogant.

(1×) Humble or modest in character, describing people who practice self-effacement. Proverbs 11:2 contrasts 'the humble' (with whom wisdom dwells) with 'the arrogant' (who receive disgrace). The adjective marks those who have a proper, modest view of themselves, neither claiming undue importance nor overestimating their knowledge. This humility creates space for wisdom—the teachable heart that can receive instruction, unlike pride which thinks it already knows. HUMILITY AND MEEKNESS
en: the-humble | es: humildes | fr: צנועים | de: [צנועים] Prov 11:2

צָנַף H6801 Conj-w / N-msc (4×)
wind up, wrap tightly, bind (especially wrapping the head with a turban)
A verb meaning to wrap, wind, or bind something tightly, particularly wrapping the head with a turban. Leviticus 16:4 instructs the high priest to 'wrap his head' with the linen turban on the Day of Atonement. Isaiah 22:18 uses intensive forms to depict God 'winding you up tightly' like a ball to be hurled into exile. The Ketiv reading in Isaiah 62:3 (later corrected) also uses this root. The image is of wrapping something completely, either in honor (turban) or judgment (bound for exile).

(4×) Leviticus 16:4 prescribes that the high priest 'shall wrap [his head] with (ב) the linen turban' during the Day of Atonement ritual. Isaiah 22:18 uses emphatic repetition: 'he will surely wind you up (צָנוֹף יְצַנֶּפְךָ צָנֵף)'—wrapping you tightly like a ball to throw you away. Isaiah 22:18 appears twice (likely textual variants: וצנוף/צנוף) and Isaiah 62:3 has a Ketiv reading. Spanish enrollar (to roll up, wind) captures the wrapping action. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [ketiv], he-will-wind-you, let-wrap | es: Enrollando, [Ketiv], se-envolverá | fr: [[וצנוף]], [יצנכך], [צנוף] | de: [[וצנוף]], [יצנכך], [צנוף] Lev 16:4; Isa 22:18; Isa 62:3

צְנִיפָה H6802 N-fs (1×)
winding, a wrap or turban
This noun appears to mean winding, wrapping, or possibly a turban, found in Isaiah 22:18. The context is God's judgment on Shebna, with imagery of wrapping and tossing like a ball. The exact meaning is debated—some see it as a turban or wrapping cloth, others as the act of winding. The root verb means to wrap or wind, so this noun likely denotes either the wrapped object or the winding action itself.

(1×) A winding, wrapping, or wound object (possibly a turban), appearing in Isaiah 22:18's judgment oracle against Shebna. The difficult passage involves imagery of wrapping and hurling: God will 'wind you tightly like a ball and throw you into a large country.' The noun from the root 'to wind' may refer to the act of winding or to something wound (like a turban). Either way, the image is violent containment followed by forceful ejection. SCROLL WRITTEN ROLL en: winding | es: enrollamiento | fr: [צנפה] | de: [צנפה] Isa 22:18

צְנִצֶנֶת H6803 N-fsc (1×)
jar, pot (for storing manna)
This noun denotes a jar or container, appearing in Exodus 16:33 where Moses commands Aaron to 'take a jar and put an omer of manna in it' for preservation before the Lord. This was to be kept for future generations as testimony. The Targum suggests a basket, but context and other versions support 'jar'—a vessel suitable for long-term storage of the preserved bread. The specific container type mattered for this memorial function.

(1×) A jar or pot used for storage, specifically mentioned in Exodus 16:33 for preserving a sample of manna. Moses instructs Aaron to 'take a jar, put an omer of manna in it, and place it before the LORD to be kept for the generations.' This container needed to preserve the bread as a permanent witness to God's wilderness provision. The jar became a memorial object, eventually placed in the ark's vicinity (Hebrews 9:4 tradition). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: jar | es: vasija | fr: cruche | de: jar Exod 16:33

צִנְתְּרוֹת H6804 N-mpc (1×)
pipes, channels (for conducting oil to lamps)
This masculine plural construct noun refers to pipes or channels, appearing in Zechariah 4:12 in the golden lampstand vision. The prophet sees 'two golden pipes' that empty golden oil from the olive trees to the lamp. These channels conducted oil from source to light, sustaining the flame. The formation involves an inserted 'ת' according to Hebrew grammar patterns. The image emphasizes continuous supply—the pipes ensure unending flow from divine source to illuminating function.

(1×) Pipes or channels that conduct liquid, specifically in Zechariah 4:12's vision of the golden lampstand: 'the two gold pipes that pour out golden oil.' These channels connect the olive trees to the lamp, ensuring continuous oil supply. The pipes represent the means by which divine empowerment (oil symbolizing the Spirit) flows constantly to enable Israel's light-bearing mission. Without these channels, the lamp would empty; with them, supply is perpetual. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: pipes-of | es: tubos-de | fr: couler | de: [צנתרות] Zech 4:12

צָעַד H6805 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (8×)
To step, march, or stride forward; in the Hifil, to cause someone to march or be driven along.
A verb of deliberate, purposeful movement — the measured stride of a warrior, a deity, or a solemn procession. In the Song of Deborah (Judg 5:4) and Psalm 68:7, God himself 'steps forth' from Seir and through the wilderness, and the multilingual evidence converges strikingly: Spanish 'cuando marchaste,' French 'dans marcher,' all capturing that majestic cadence. In Job 18:14, the Hifil shifts the action outward — death 'marches him' to the king of terrors, a chilling causative that Hindi renders 'will take him along' (उसे ले जाएगी), underscoring compulsion rather than voluntary movement.

1. to walk, march, step (Qal) (7×) The basic Qal sense of walking, stepping, or marching forward under one's own power. Whether describing God's theophanic advance through the wilderness (Judg 5:4; Ps 68:7), David's bearers stepping carefully with the ark (2 Sam 6:13 — 'they had gone six steps'), or a young man wandering near the adulteress's corner (Prov 7:8), the word carries a sense of measured, deliberate stride rather than casual walking. Spanish 'caminan/marchaste' and French 'marched' consistently select movement verbs with weight and intention. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: he-walked, marched, stepped | es: andaba, caminan, cuando-marchaste | fr: [יצעדו], dans-marcher, marched | de: [יצעד], [יצעדו], [תצעד] Gen 49:22; Judg 5:4; 2Sam 6:13; Ps 68:7; Prov 7:8

2. to cause to march, drive along (Hifil) (1×) The causative Hifil sense: to make someone march, to drive or escort a person along against their will. Attested only in Job 18:14, where Bildad declares that the wicked person is 'marched to the king of terrors.' English 'it marches him,' Spanish 'lo hará caminar,' and Hindi 'उसे ले जाएगी' (will take him) all emphasize external compulsion — this is not voluntary movement but forced procession toward death. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-it-marches-him | es: y-lo-hará-caminar | fr: et-ותצעדהו-lui | de: [ותצעדהו] Job 18:14

צַעַד H6806 N-ms (14×)
A step, stride, or pace; literally a footfall, figuratively the course and direction of one's life.
Refers to a single step or stride of the foot, spanning literal and deeply figurative uses. David celebrates that God 'broadens my steps beneath me' — giving firm, confident footing (2 Sam 22:37 = Ps 18:36). Proverbs observes that 'a man's steps are from the LORD' (Prov 16:9), and Jeremiah confesses that 'a person's steps are not in their own power' (Jer 10:23). Job invokes the word repeatedly in contexts of divine surveillance: 'Does He not see my steps and count them all?' (Job 31:4, 37). The plural in Proverbs 30:29 describes creatures 'stately in stride.' Lamentations 4:18 uses it for steps hunted by pursuers, closing in on a besieged city.

step, stride, pace (14×) A step, stride, or pace (צַעַד), denoting the physical act of placing one foot forward and, by extension, the trajectory of a person's life under divine sovereignty. Spanish 'paso/pasos' and French 'marches' both reflect this dual literal-figurative range. Literal uses describe firm footing in battle (2 Sam 22:37) and stately animal gait (Prov 30:29). The figurative sense predominates in wisdom and prophetic literature, where steps represent life's direction governed by God (Prov 16:9; Jer 10:23) or scrutinized by Him (Job 14:16; 31:4; 34:21). STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS en: her-steps, his-step, his-steps | es: en-paso, mi-paso, mis-pasos | fr: [צעדן], [צעדינו], marches | de: [צעד], [צעדן], [צעדי] 2Sam 6:13; 2Sam 22:37; Job 14:16; Job 18:7; Job 31:4

צְעָדָה H6807a N-fs (2×)
marching, the sound of marching; collective footfall of an army or divine host in motion
This feminine noun captures the acoustic phenomenon of an advancing army's footsteps. Both biblical occurrences describe the same supernatural event: God instructing David to attack when he hears 'the sound of marching in the tops of the balsam trees,' signaling that the Lord has gone out before him to strike the Philistine army. The term evokes coordinated military movement, likely the rhythmic tramping of many feet. It's a theophanic sign, the audible evidence of heaven's invisible army mobilizing for battle on Israel's behalf.

(2×) The parallel accounts in 2 Samuel 5:24 and 1 Chronicles 14:15 preserve identical phrasing, both describing supernatural 'sound of marching' as a battle signal. Cross-linguistic glosses converge tightly: Spanish 'marcha,' French and German 'marching,' all confirming military movement semantics. The definite article in English/Spanish ('the marching') reflects the specific acoustic sign David was instructed to recognize. This is neither literal troops nor metaphorical language, but rather a miraculous sound phenomenon indicating divine warrior activity. The term focuses on the auditory dimension of military advance, not the march itself but its telltale sound signature. STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS
en: marching, the-marching | es: la-marcha, marcha | fr: [הצעדה], marching | de: [הצעדה], marching 2Sam 5:24; 1Chr 14:15

צְעָדָה H6807b Conj-w (1×)
armlets, ornamental bands for the upper arm
This noun refers to ornamental bands or armlets worn on the upper arm, listed among women's jewelry in Isaiah 3:20. Some translate 'ankle chains,' but the better interpretation is armlets that clasped the upper arm. These were luxury items, part of the elaborate finery the prophet condemns. Scholars suggest reading this word also in 2 Kings 11:12 (for the textual 'testimony'), meaning royal armlets placed on Joash at his coronation. The jewelry marked status and wealth.

(1×) Ornamental armlets or bands worn on the upper arm, mentioned in Isaiah 3:20 among ladies' luxury items. While some translate 'ankle chains' (from the root for 'step'), the better view is arm ornaments that clasped the upper arm, visible markers of wealth and status. These decorative bands were part of elaborate feminine finery. Textual proposals suggest royal armlets in 2 Kings 11:12, making them insignia of royalty as well as feminine adornment. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-the-ankle-chains | es: y-las-cadenillas | fr: [והצעדות] | de: [והצעדות] Isa 3:20

צָעָה H6808 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to stoop, bend, incline; to tip over a vessel; to march forward bent with exertion

A verb capturing the physical act of stooping or bending under strain. In Isaiah 51:14 it describes a captive bowed under burdens, while Isaiah 63:1 pictures someone bending forward with abundant strength as they march. Jeremiah 2:20 uses the posture in a morally charged sense of sprawling in harlotry. In Jeremiah 48:12 the image shifts to tilting and pouring out vessels, a vivid metaphor for Moab's coming devastation. Spanish captures the range well: 'encorvado' (stooped), 'marchando' (marching), and 'te recuestas' (you recline).

(5×) To stoop or bend the body, whether under a burden (Isa 51:14), with physical vigor (Isa 63:1, though many emend to 'marching'), or in a posture of moral degradation (Jer 2:20). The Spanish 'encorvado' and 'marchando' together show translators reading both the burdened and the vigorous senses. In the Piel (Jer 48:12), the action extends transitively to tipping over vessels, portraying Moab's judgment as an overturned wine jar. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: and-they-shall-pour-him-out, lay-down, marching | es: el-encorvado, marchando, te-recuestas | fr: [וצעהו], [צעה], [צעים] | de: [וצעהו], [צעה], [צעים] Isa 51:14; Isa 63:1; Jer 2:20; Jer 48:12

צָעִיף H6809 N-msc / 3fs (3×)

veil, wrapper, shawl; a head covering or garment used by women for modesty or identity concealment

This noun refers to a veil or head covering worn by women. Genesis 24:65 describes Rebekah covering herself with a veil when she sees Isaac approaching—an act of modesty before meeting her future husband. Genesis 38:14, 19 shows Tamar using a veil to disguise herself as a prostitute and then removing it afterward. The garment serves both modesty (Rebekah) and disguise (Tamar), functioning as a marker of identity and social status. Cross-linguistic translations uniformly recognize this as a veil or shawl (Spanish 'velo', French 'voile', German 'Schleier').

(3×) The two Genesis narratives use the veil differently: Rebekah's veil signals proper bridal modesty, while Tamar's veil enables deception. In both cases, the covering transforms the woman's social presentation—one honorably, one duplicitously. The definite article and possessive forms ('the veil', 'her veil', 'with a veil') mark specific narrative moments of covering or uncovering. The garment communicates female status and can either reveal or conceal identity depending on context and intention. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-veil, veil-her, with-a-veil | es: con-el-velo, el-velo, velo-de-ella | fr: avec-un-voile, le-voile, voile-sa | de: den-Schleier, ihren-Schleier, mit-dem-Schleier Gen 24:65; Gen 38:14; Gen 38:19

צָעִיר H6810 Adj-mpc (24×)

Little, young, insignificant; the younger sibling, the least in rank, or someone small in age or status

A word that lives at the intersection of youth and insignificance. Most often it marks birth order — the younger daughter of Lot (Gen 19:31), the younger twin of Rebekah (Gen 25:23) — where Spanish 'menor' and German 'Jüngeren' consistently track the comparative force. But it also carries the sting of social smallness: Gideon protests he is from the 'least' clan (Judg 6:15), and the psalmist confesses 'I am small and despised' (Ps 119:141). Whether describing a child's place in the family or a nation's place among empires, the word evokes vulnerability paired with surprising potential — the least who becomes a mighty nation (Isa 60:22).

1. younger or youngest (birth order) (12×) The most frequent use: marking the younger or youngest child in birth-order comparisons. Lot's younger daughter (Gen 19:31–38), Jacob the younger twin (Gen 25:23), and Joshua's youngest son (1 Kgs 16:34) all carry this sense. Spanish 'menor' and French 'younger/youngest' consistently distinguish this comparative familial meaning from mere smallness. The word functions almost as a kinship term in these narrative contexts. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-the-younger, and-the-youngest, and-with-his-youngest | es: Y-la-menor, al-menor, el-menor | fr: et-avec-son-youngest, et-le-younger, et-le-youngest | de: dem-Jüngeren, der-Jüngeren, der-youngest Gen 19:31; Gen 19:34; Gen 19:35; Gen 19:38; Gen 25:23

2. little ones, dependents (6×) Substantive plural referring collectively to the 'little ones' or dependents of a community — children, subordinates, or the helpless members of a group. Jeremiah uses it for the vulnerable populations of nations facing judgment (Jer 14:3; 49:20; 50:45). The ketiv/qere variations in Jeremiah 48:4 show scribal awareness that this collective sense overlaps with the place name Zoar, itself etymologically connected to smallness. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: (her-little-ones), [ketiv:her-little-ones], [ketiv] | es: (pequeños-sus), [jóvenes-sus], [kethiv] | fr: petit | de: [(צעיריה)], [(צעיריהם)], [[צעוריה]] Jer 14:3; Jer 48:4; Jer 49:20

3. small, insignificant, least (4×) Focuses on rank and status rather than age: the smallest, most insignificant, the least. Saul demurs that his tribe is the 'smallest' in Israel (1 Sam 9:21), and Micah prophesies that Bethlehem, 'too little' among Judah's clans, will produce a ruler (Mic 5:2). Spanish 'pequeño/pequeña' and the psalmist's pairing with 'despised' (Ps 119:141) make clear this is about social magnitude, not chronological youth. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-the-least, small, the-least | es: Pequeño, la-más-pequeña, pequeña | fr: et-petit, le-least, petit | de: [והצעיר], [צעיר], der-least 1Sam 9:21; Ps 119:141; Isa 60:22; Mic 5:2

4. young in age (2×) Absolute (non-comparative) use describing someone as simply young in years, without reference to siblings or relative birth order. Job 30:1 speaks of those 'younger than I' mocking him, and Elihu in Job 32:6 defers because he is 'young in days.' Spanish 'joven' and Hindi 'जवान' appear here rather than the comparative 'menor,' confirming a distinct semantic profile: youth as a life stage, not a family position. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: young, younger-ones | es: joven, más-jóvenes | fr: petit | de: [צעיר], [צעירים] Job 30:1; Job 32:6

צָעִיר H6811 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Zair, a location near Edom

This place name appears in 2 Kings 8:21, where Joram crosses over to Zair (or Zairah in Hebrew form) to fight the Edomites. The location is uncertain, likely somewhere on or near Edom's border. The Septuagint renders it Seior or Sior. The narrative context is Edom's successful revolt against Judah—Joram went to Zair, was surrounded by night, broke through, but ultimately failed to suppress the rebellion. The exact site remains unidentified.

(1×) A place name associated with Edom's region (2 Kings 8:21), where King Joram fought against the Edomites during their revolt. The location is uncertain, probably near Edom's border. The Septuagint suggests connection to Seir. In the narrative, Joram 'went over to Zair' with his forces but couldn't quell the rebellion despite a nighttime breakout from encirclement. The name marks a battlefield in Judah's unsuccessful attempt to retain Edomite vassalage.

PERSONAL NAMES
en: to-Zair | es: Tsaira | fr: à-Zair | de: zu-Zair 2Kgs 8:21

צְעִירָה H6812 Prep-k / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
youth, younger state
This noun means youth or the state of being younger, appearing in Genesis 43:33 where Joseph's brothers are seated 'according to birthright and according to youth'—oldest to youngest. The construct with suffix means 'according to his youth' or 'in order of his being younger.' This systematic seating by age astonished the brothers since the Egyptian official (secretly Joseph) had no apparent way to know their birth order. The noun captures relative youth or position as younger.

(1×) Youth or younger status, used in Genesis 43:33 to describe the seating arrangement of Joseph's brothers: 'according to his birthright and according to his youth'—meaning from oldest to youngest. The precise age-ordered seating amazed the brothers, since this 'Egyptian' shouldn't know their birth sequence. The noun emphasizes relative position in the age hierarchy, the state of being younger rather than absolute youth, fitting the context of comparative ranking. YOUTH PERIOD
en: according-to-his-youth | es: según-juventud-suya | fr: selon-à-son-youth | de: nach-seiner-Jugend Gen 43:33

צָעַן H6813 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
wander, travel, depart (of tents being moved)
This verb appears only once in Isaiah, describing a tent that will not be moved or relocated. The root shares cognates across Semitic languages related to both traveling and loading pack animals, suggesting nomadic movement. In Isaiah 33:20, the prophet envisions Zion as a secure habitation whose tent-stakes will never be pulled up—using this verb to emphasize permanence by negating the idea of wandering or departure.

(1×) The verb describes the action of traveling or journeying, particularly in the context of moving camp or relocating a dwelling. Isaiah 33:20 uses it in a negated construction to promise that Zion's 'tent will not travel'—it will remain fixed and secure, contrasting with the transient nature of nomadic life. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD en: it-shall-be-moved | es: será-quitada | fr: [יִצָּעֵן] | de: [יִצָּעֵן] Isa 33:20

צֹעַן H6814 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (7×)
Zoan — ancient Egyptian city (Tanis) in the Nile Delta, seat of Pharaoh's court
The Hebrew name for the ancient Egyptian city of Tanis (Greek), located in the northeastern Nile Delta. Scripture remembers it as the place where God performed wonders before Pharaoh (Ps 78:12, 43) and as a seat of Egyptian power whose counselors Isaiah mocks as fools (Isa 19:11, 13; 30:4). Numbers 13:22 notes that Hebron was built seven years before Zoan, using it as a chronological benchmark for great antiquity. The modern site is San el-Hagar in Egypt.

Zoan (proper name, Egyptian city) (7×) Zoan (Tanis) — a proper noun identifying the major Egyptian city in the northeastern Nile Delta that served as a royal capital. Psalm 78:12 and 43 recall it as the 'field of Zoan' where God wrought signs and wonders during the Exodus. Isaiah 19:11 and 13 mock the princes of Zoan for their foolish counsel, and 30:4 names it alongside Hanes as a destination for Judah's ill-fated embassy to Egypt. Numbers 13:22 uses its founding date as a reference point for Hebron's antiquity. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate: English 'Zoan,' Spanish 'Zoán,' French 'Zoan.' SMALLNESS AND LEAST en: Tso'an, Zoan, in-Tsoan | es: Tsoan, Zoán, Zoán-de | fr: Zoan, [בצען], [צען] | de: Tso'an, Zoan, [בצען] Num 13:22; Ps 78:12; Ps 78:43; Isa 19:11; Isa 19:13

צַעֲנַנִּים H6815 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)
Zaanannim; place name on the border of Naphtali near Kedesh, location of Heber the Kenite's tent Zaanannim is a place name appearing in boundary descriptions and battle narratives. Joshua 19:33 includes it in Naphtali's territorial border. Judges 4:11 locates Heber the Kenite's encampment 'at Zaanannim, near Kedesh,' setting the stage for Jael's encounter with Sisera. The name appears with the preposition beth, leading to some debate whether the beth is part of the name or a separate locative marker. The site's exact location remains uncertain, though its association with Kedesh and the Deborah-Barak narrative places it in northern Israel.

(3×) Two contexts anchor this place: territorial borders (Joshua) and narrative setting (Judges). The Ketiv-Qere variation and bracketed [K] in several translations reflect textual uncertainty about the name's precise form. The site is remembered primarily because of Judges 4—Heber pitched his tent there, and Jael's tent became the scene of Sisera's death. Cross-linguistic evidence shows minor spelling variation but consistent recognition as a geographical name near Kedesh in Naphtali's region. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Tsaananim, [K], in-Tsaananim | es: Saananim, [k], en-Tzaananim | fr: Tsaananim, [K], dans-Tsaanannim | de: Tsaananim, [K], in-Tsaanannim Josh 19:33; Judg 4:11

צַעֲצְעִים H6816 N-mp (1×)
formed objects, images, sculptural work (particularly of cherubim)
This plural noun appears only in 2 Chronicles describing the cherubim in Solomon's temple. The term refers to carved or sculpted figures—literally 'things formed' or 'image-work.' The Spanish and English translations capture the sculptural nature, while some versions simply transliterate the Hebrew, perhaps uncertain of the exact type of artistic work. These were not mere decorative elements but sacred images representing angelic beings in the Most Holy Place.

(1×) Refers to sculptured or carved figures, specifically describing the artistic technique used to create the cherubim in Solomon's temple (2 Chr 3:10). The phrase 'image work' suggests three-dimensional carved representations rather than flat reliefs or paintings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: sculpture | es: esculturas | fr: [צעצעים] | de: [צעצעים] 2Chr 3:10

צָעַק H6817 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (55×)
To cry out in distress or for help; in the Nifal, to be summoned or assembled by proclamation.
The urgent cry of those in desperate need — slaves in Egypt, oppressed Israelites under foreign rule, a lone voice calling to a king for justice. Nearly every occurrence carries the weight of genuine anguish directed toward someone who can help: 'and the children of Israel cried out to the LORD' is practically a refrain in Judges. Arabic ṣ, possibly related to the sound of thunder, hints at the raw vocal force behind the word. In its rarer Nifal stem the meaning shifts from crying out to being called together — troops summoned to battle (Judg 7:23–24), a nation assembled for war. The two senses share the element of a loud, public vocal act, but differ in direction: one pleads upward, the other gathers outward.

1. cry out in distress (48×) To cry out in distress, anguish, or urgent appeal — the core Qal and Piel sense. Spanish 'clamar' and French 'crier' both preserve the vocal intensity. Abel's blood 'cries out' from the ground (Gen 4:10), Esau 'cried with a great and bitter cry' (Gen 27:34), and the Israelites 'cried out to the LORD' repeatedly under oppression (Exod 14:10; Judg 3:9, 15; 4:3; 6:6). The cry is nearly always directed toward someone — God or a human authority — with the expectation of response. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: And-they-cried-out, and-cried, and-cried-out | es: Y-clamamos, Y-clamaron, Y-clamó | fr: Et-ils-cria-dehors, cria-dehors, et-cria | de: And-sie-schrie-heraus, [וצעק], er-cries-heraus Gen 4:10; Gen 27:34; Gen 41:55; Exod 5:8; Exod 5:15

2. be summoned or assembled (6×) To be summoned or assembled by proclamation — the Nifal (passive/reflexive) sense where people are gathered together by a public call. Korean 소집되다 ('to be assembled') and Spanish 'fueron convocados' confirm the passive, collective meaning. Gideon's messengers cause Naphtali and Asher to 'be summoned' (Judg 7:23–24), Gilead assembles against Ammon (Judg 10:17), and Ephraim is 'called together' in anger (Judg 12:1). The loud cry becomes an instrument of military or civic mobilization. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-cried-out, and-they-cried-out, and-they-were-summoned | es: Y-fue-convocado, Y-fueron-convocados, y-fueron-convocados | fr: et-cria, et-ils-cria-dehors, et-ils-furent-summoned | de: und-schrie, und-sie-schrie-heraus, und-sie-waren-summoned Judg 7:23; Judg 7:24; Judg 10:17; Judg 12:1; 1Sam 13:4

3. (1×) A single Hifil occurrence where Samuel 'summoned' the people to the LORD at Mizpah (1 Sam 10:17). This active causative use — calling an assembly rather than being called — stands apart from both the distress-cry and the passive summoning, functioning as a formal convocation by an authority figure. Spanish 'convocó' ('he convened') captures the deliberate, official character of the act. SUMMON CALL TOGETHER

en: and-he-summoned | es: Y-convocó | fr: et-il-summoned | de: und-er-summoned 1Sam 10:17

צְעָקָה H6818 Art / N-fsc / 3ms (21×)

An outcry or shriek of distress, anguish, or protest, often reaching God as an appeal for justice

A loud, anguished cry—whether of individual pain or collective oppression—that rises as an implicit or explicit plea for divine intervention. The outcry of Sodom (Gen 18:21; 19:13) prompted God's investigation; the cry of Israel in Egypt (Exod 3:7, 9) moved him to deliver. Nehemiah 5:1 records such a cry against economic injustice within the community itself. Spanish 'clamor' captures the resonance of public, urgent appeal, while French 'cri' preserves the raw, visceral quality of distress voiced aloud.

cry, outcry (21×) A loud cry expressing distress, anguish, or moral outrage, typically directed toward or heard by God as a plea for justice or deliverance. The 'outcry' of Sodom (Gen 18:21; 19:13) signals wickedness demanding judgment; Israel's cry in Egypt (Exod 3:7, 9) provokes divine rescue. The same noun covers personal grief (Gen 27:34) and communal protest (Neh 5:1). Spanish 'clamor' and English 'outcry' both convey the public, urgent character present in every occurrence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cry, according-to-her-outcry, an-outcry | es: acaso-como-su-clamor, clamor, clamor-de | fr: [צעקה], [צעקת], cri | de: [צעקת], [צעקה], [צעקת] Gen 18:21; Gen 19:13; Gen 27:34; Exod 3:7; Exod 3:9

צָעַר H6819 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (3×)

to be insignificant, become small, be brought low; diminishing in status, honor, or number

This verb means to become insignificant, small, or diminished—the opposite of being honored or numerous. Job 14:21 speaks of children being brought low without the father's knowledge. Jeremiah 30:19 promises that God's restored people 'will not be insignificant'—they will grow and be honored. Zechariah 13:7 mentions 'the little ones' among the scattered sheep, those of lesser status or strength. The semantic field covers both numerical decrease and social diminishment. Spanish distinguishes 'menospreciados' (despised/brought low) from 'pequeños' (small ones), capturing both nuances.

(3×) Three contexts reveal the word's range: personal ignorance of children's diminishment (Job), prophetic promise against national insignificance (Jeremiah), and the vulnerable 'little ones' among scattered people (Zechariah). The verb can be stative (be small/insignificant) or inchoative (become small, be brought low). The cross-linguistic evidence shows both adjectival ('small', 'little ones') and verbal ('will be insignificant', 'are humbled') forms, reflecting Hebrew's participial and imperfect uses. The term expresses vulnerability, diminished status, or lack of honor. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-brought-low, the-little-ones, will-they-be-insignificant | es: los-pequeños, serán-menospreciados, y-son-humillados | fr: [יצערו], et-ויצערו, petit | de: [הצערים], [ויצערו], [יצערו] Job 14:21; Jer 30:19; Zech 13:7

צֹעַר H6820 N-proper-fs (10×)

Zoar; a small city at the southeastern end of the Dead Sea where Lot fled from Sodom's destruction.

The name Zoar (meaning 'small, insignificant') belongs to one of the five cities of the plain, originally called Bela (Gen 14:2, 8). It became Lot's refuge when he pleaded that it was 'a little one' and was spared from the fiery judgment that consumed Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 19:22-23). Later prophetic references in Isaiah 15:5 and Jeremiah 48:34 mention Zoar in oracles against Moab, confirming its location near the southeastern shore of the Dead Sea. Moses glimpsed it from Mount Nebo (Deut 34:3).

Zoar (place name) (10×) Zoar (tso'ar), a city at the southeastern end of the Dead Sea, one of the five cities of the plain originally called Bela (Gen 14:2, 8). Its name, meaning 'small' or 'insignificant,' derives from Lot's plea that it was 'a little one' (Gen 19:20), and it was spared from the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah as Lot's place of refuge (Gen 19:22-23, 30). It appears in Moses' panoramic view from Nebo (Deut 34:3) and in prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:5; Jer 48:34). The Septuagint renders it as Segor/Zogor, while Spanish Tzoar/Zoar and French Tsoar/Zoar all preserve the same referent. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zoar, from-Tsoar, from-Zoar | es: Tzoar, Zoar, a-Tzoar | fr: Tsoar, Zoar, [מצער] | de: Zoar, [מצער], [צער] Gen 13:10; Gen 14:2; Gen 14:8; Gen 19:22; Gen 19:23

צָפַד H6821 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

contract, shrivel, draw together (of skin clinging to bones)

This verb occurs only in Lamentations' harrowing description of Jerusalem's famine victims. The root conveys the physical contraction of skin becoming tight and dried upon the bones—a visceral image of starvation's effects. Cognate languages associate the root with binding or shackling, suggesting the constraining, constricting nature of this physical deterioration. The Spanish 'pegado' (stuck, adhered) captures how the skin clings unnaturally to the skeleton.

(1×) Describes skin shriveling and contracting tightly upon bones due to severe emaciation. In Lamentations 4:8, this verb depicts the horrific physical state of famine victims during Jerusalem's siege, their skin drawn tight and dried against their skeletal frames. CLINGING AND JOINING en: shriveled | es: se-ha-pegado | fr: [צכד] | de: [צכד] Lam 4:8

צָפָה H6822 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (37×)

Look out, spy, keep watch; as substantive: watchman, sentinel — from צָפָה 'to look out, observe'

The verb צָפָה means to look out from an elevated or advantageous position, scanning the horizon with purpose and vigilance. Its most frequent use is as a substantivized participle — the 'watchman' (צֹפֶה) stationed on a tower or wall to report what he sees approaching (2 Sam 18:24-27; 2 Kgs 9:17-20). The prophets adopt this role: Ezekiel and Habakkuk are God's watchmen set over Israel (Ezek 3:17; 33:7; Hab 2:1). In its verbal uses, it ranges from Jacob's covenant watchfulness at Mizpah — 'may the LORD watch between me and you' (Gen 31:49) — to Micah's hopeful 'I will watch for the LORD' (Mic 7:7). The Spanish 'atalaya/vigia' (watchtower sentinel) and the Ethiopic cognate meaning 'to hope' together illuminate how physical looking-out shades into expectant waiting.

1. watchman, sentinel (22×) The substantivized participle צֹפֶה used as a noun meaning 'watchman' or 'sentinel' — someone posted as a lookout on walls, towers, or heights. This is the dominant usage (22 of 37 occurrences). The watchman at Gibeah spots Philistine troops melting away (1 Sam 14:16); David's watchman reports Absalom's messengers approaching (2 Sam 13:34; 18:24-27); Jehu's approach is observed from the tower (2 Kgs 9:17-20). The prophets are metaphorically God's watchmen set over the nation (Isa 52:8; 56:10; Ezek 3:17; 33:2-7; Hos 9:8). Spanish 'atalaya' and 'vigia' both denote a lookout specifically stationed for observation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv:his-watchman], and-the-watchman, as-watchman | es: Sus-atalayas, Y-el-atalaya, Y-el-vigía | fr: et-le-sentinelle, et-veiller, le-sentinelle | de:

[(צפיו)], [[צפן]], [המצפה] 1Sam 14:16; 2Sam 13:34; 2Sam 18:24; 2Sam 18:25; 2Sam 18:26

2. look out expectantly, watch eagerly (7×) The Piel (intensive) stem expressing eager, expectant watching — looking out with sustained anticipation for something hoped for or feared. Eli sits by the road 'watching' anxiously for news of the Ark (1 Sam 4:13); the psalmist watches for God each morning (Ps 5:3); Jeremiah tells Aroer to stand by the road and 'watch' for fugitives (Jer 48:19); in Lamentations 4:17, eyes fail from watching vainly for a nation that cannot save; Micah 7:7 declares 'I will watch for the LORD' in confident hope. The Ethiopic cognate meaning 'to hope' preserves this expectant dimension that goes beyond mere visual surveillance. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: I-will-watch, and-I-watch, and-I-will-watch | es: mirando, miraré, vigilábamos | fr: et-sentinelle, et-veiller, sentinelle | de: [אצפה], [ואצפה], [וצפי] 1Sam 4:13; Ps 5:3; Jer 48:19; Lam 4:17; Mic 7:7

3. keep watch, stand guard (5×) Qal finite and participial forms used verbally to mean 'keep watch' or 'observe' without the professional-sentinel nuance. At Mizpah, God is asked to 'keep watch' between Jacob and Laban to ensure the covenant is kept (Gen 31:49). God's eyes 'keep watch' on the nations (Ps 66:7); the LORD's eyes 'observe' the evil and the good (Prov 15:3); the capable woman 'watches over' the ways of her household (Prov 31:27); Song 7:4 describes a tower 'looking toward' Damascus. These uses emphasize ongoing, attentive observation rather than a stationed lookout role. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: are-watching, keep-watch, may-watch | es: Vigila, observando, que-mirahacia | fr: guetteur, puisse-veiller, regardant | de: [צופה], [צופיה], [צפות] Gen 31:49; Ps 66:7; Prov 15:3; Prov 31:27; Song 7:4

4. (2×) In Job 15:22, Eliphaz says the wicked person is 'watched for' or 'destined for' the sword — darkness lies in wait and destruction is appointed. The two occurrences both come from this verse (likely the ketiv/qere or participial doublet). The English glosses '(and-watched)' and '[and-watched]' with their parenthetical markers, along with Spanish 'destinado' (destined), suggest the sense has shifted from active watching to being the object of fate's gaze — watched and marked out for doom, a passive-experiential extension of the root. GAZING AND LOOKING

en: (and-watched), [and-watched] | es: y-destinado | fr: et-guetteur | de: [(וצפוי)], [[וצפן]] Job 15:22

5. (1×) In Psalm 37:32, 'the wicked watches (צֹפֶה) the righteous and seeks to kill him.' This is predatory surveillance — spying with hostile intent rather than protective vigilance. Spanish 'acecha' (to stalk, lurk) and German 'spahte' (spied) capture the menacing tone. The BDB entry explicitly glosses this: 'a wicked man spieth upon the righteous.' It stands apart from the sentinel-watchman and the hopeful-expectant senses as a distinctly adversarial use of looking out. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: watches | es: Acecha | fr: sentinelle | de: spähte Ps 37:32

צָפָה H6823 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp (47×)

To overlay or plate a surface with metal (gold, bronze, silver), especially in tabernacle and temple construction

Overwhelmingly a craftsman's term, tsaphah in the Piel describes the meticulous work of overlaying wooden structures with precious metals—gold on the ark, the altar, the poles, and Solomon's temple interior (Exod 25:11; 1 Kgs 6:20). German überziehen ('to coat over') captures the technique precisely. The Pual passive appears for objects already plated, as in the silver-glazed potsherd of Proverbs 26:23. A single Qal occurrence in Isaiah 21:5 shifts meaning entirely, likely describing the spreading of a carpet or rug rather than metalwork, hinting at a possible homophonous root.

1. overlay, plate with metal (Piel) (44×) The active Piel form meaning to overlay or plate a wooden surface with metal—gold, bronze, or silver. This is the construction term par excellence for the tabernacle (Exod 25–38) and temple (1 Kgs 6; 2 Chr 3–4). Spanish cubrirás and French recouvrir both convey the covering action. It also extends to studding with precious stones (2 Chr 3:6). COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-he-overlaid, and-overlaid, and-you-shall-overlay | es: Y-la-cubrirás, Y-la-cubrió, Y-lo-cubrió | fr: et-il-recouvrit, et-il-revêtit, et-recouvrit | de: und-du-sollst-ueberziehen, und-er-overlaid, und-er-ueberzog Exod 25:11; Exod 25:13; Exod 25:24; Exod 25:28

2. overlaid, plated (Pual passive) (2×) The Pual passive participle describing an object already overlaid or plated. Exodus 26:32 speaks of pillars overlaid with gold, and Proverbs 26:23 compares fervent lips with a wicked heart to a potsherd 'overlaid' with silver dross. The passive form presupposes the completed craftsmanship of sense 1, describing the resulting state rather than the action. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: overlaid | es: cubierta, cubiertas-de | fr: recouvrit, מצפה | de: [מצפה], ueberzog Exod 26:32; Prov 26:23

3. spread out, set in place (Qal) (1×) A distinct Qal usage in Isaiah 21:5 meaning to spread out or lay in place, likely referring to spreading a rug or carpet. Most modern commentators see this as a separate sense (or even a homophonous root) from the metalworking Piel. The multilingual evidence is sparse—Spanish pon ('set, place'), English 'spread'—but the context of a banquet scene supports a domestic action rather than metallurgical overlay. PLACING AND LAYING

en: spread | es: pon | fr: [צפה] | de: [צפה] Isa 21:5

צָפָה H6824 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

outflow, flowing (of blood)

This rare feminine noun appears only in Ezekiel's oracle against Pharaoh, referring to flowing blood. The context describes blood flowing from Egypt's slain army, with sufficient volume to saturate the land. The term emphasizes the liquid, flowing nature of the blood rather than blood as a static substance. French 'vague' (wave) may capture the imagery of blood flowing in waves or surges across the battlefield.

(1×) Denotes blood in its flowing state—the outpouring or outflow of blood from violent death. Ezekiel 32:6 uses this term in prophesying judgment against Egypt, describing how the land will be saturated with the flowing blood of the slain. FLOWING WATER

en: your-flowing-blood | es: tu-flujo | fr: vague | de: [צפחך] Ezek 32:6

צְפוֹ H6825 N-proper-ms (3×)

Zepho/Zephi; personal name of an Edomite chief, grandson of Esau through Eliphaz

Zepho (also spelled Zephi) was an Edomite leader, son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau. Genesis 36:11, 15 list him among the chiefs of Edom, while 1 Chronicles 1:36 uses the variant spelling Zephi. The name appears in genealogical records tracing Esau's descendants who became tribal leaders in Edom. The spelling variation between Genesis and Chronicles is typical of parallel genealogical texts. Cross-linguistic evidence reflects both forms (Zepho/Zefo and Zephi/Tsefi), with bracketed references marking the variant spelling.

(3×) Three genealogical references identify this Edomite chief, with minor spelling variation between Genesis (Zepho) and Chronicles (Zephi). The name appears in lists of Esau's descendants who became 'chiefs' or 'leaders' in Edom—the tribal structure of Israel's brother nation. The German and French bracket the variant '[צפי]', noting the textual difference. The name may derive from a root meaning 'gaze' or 'watching', though the text provides no etymological explanation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsephi, Zepho | es: Tsefi, Tsefo | fr: Zepho, [צפי] | de: Zefo, [צפי] Gen 36:11; Gen 36:15; 1Chr 1:36

צִפּוּי H6826 N-ms (5×)

metal plating, overlay; a thin covering of gold or silver applied to objects

A noun denoting the thin metallic covering applied to sacred or idolatrous objects. In Exodus 38:17, 19 it refers to the gold or silver plating on the capitals of the tabernacle pillars. Numbers 16:38-39 describes bronze censers hammered into plating for the altar as a memorial. Isaiah 30:22 uses it contemptuously for the silver overlay on carved images destined to be discarded. Spanish 'revestimiento' (cladding) and English 'covering' together convey the sense of a decorative metallic sheath applied over a base structure.

(5×) A metallic overlay or plating applied to surfaces of cultic objects. Used for the gold or silver covering of tabernacle pillar capitals (Exod 38:17, 19), the bronze plating hammered from Korah's censers onto the altar (Num 16:38-39), and the silver sheathing of idols that Israel is called to strip away and discard (Isa 30:22). Spanish 'revestimiento' and French 'couverture' both highlight the functional sense of an applied covering layer. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-overlaying-of, covering, of-your-carved-images | es: revestimiento, revestimiento-de, y-cubierta-de | fr: [צפר], couverture, et-overlaying-de | de: [צפר], covering, und-overlaying-von Exod 38:17; Exod 38:19; Num 16:38; Num 16:39; Isa 30:22

צְפִיוֹן H6827 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zephon (son of Gad, progenitor of Zephonite clan)

This personal name designates a son of Gad and founder of a clan. The name appears in two forms in Scripture: Zephon in Numbers 26:15 and Ziphion in Genesis 46:16, representing the same individual. The etymology may connect to 'gazing' or 'watching,' though this remains uncertain. The clan descended from him became known as the Zephonites, one of the family groups within the tribe of Gad that entered Canaan.

(1×) Personal name of one of Gad's sons who became a clan founder. Numbers 26:15 lists him in the wilderness census, where his descendants are numbered as a distinct family group within Gad's tribal allotment. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Zephon | es: de-Sefón | fr: à-Zephon | de: zu-Zephon Num 26:15

צָפוֹן H6828 Art / N-fs (153×)

North, the northern direction; the north as source of invasion and judgment; Zaphon, the sacred mountain

Derived from a root meaning 'to hide' or 'to be dark,' tsaphon designates the compass direction north throughout the Hebrew Bible, appearing most frequently in Ezekiel (46 times), Joshua (25 times), and Jeremiah (25 times). Its directional function — marking boundaries, positioning the tabernacle furniture, and orienting tribal allotments — accounts for most occurrences. Yet in prophetic literature, the north takes on an ominous character: evil 'breaks forth from the north' (Jer 1:14; 4:6; 6:1), and vast armies descend from the northern horizon as instruments of divine wrath. Behind this geography lies ancient Near Eastern mythology, where Mount Zaphon (Ugaritic Sapanu) was the mountain of the gods — a tradition the psalmist deliberately echoes when calling Zion 'the heights of Zaphon' (Ps 48:2), claiming for the LORD what Baal's worshipers ascribed to their storm deity.

1. north, cardinal direction (120×) The cardinal direction north — a geographical and spatial reference point used for orientation, boundary descriptions, and positioning — covering 120 of 153 occurrences. Appears with directional he (tsaphonah, 'northward'), in construct chains (mitstsephon le-, 'north of'), and as a compass label alongside south, east, and west (Gen 13:14; 28:14). Ezekiel's temple visions rely heavily on this sense for architectural orientation. Spanish norte, French nord, and Arabic shamal all translate this spatial meaning directly. NORTH DIRECTION

en: north, north-ward, northward | es: al-norte, hacia-el-norte, hacia-norte | fr: nord, north-garde, northward | de: nach-Norden, nordwaerts, north-ward Gen 13:14; Exod 26:20; Exod 26:35; Exod 27:11; Exod 36:25

2. the north as threatening origin (28×) The north as a threatening, ominous direction from which invaders and divine judgment approach — 28 occurrences concentrated in the prophetic corpus, especially Jeremiah and Ezekiel. 'Out of the north an evil shall break forth' (Jer 1:14) establishes the pattern; subsequent oracles specify Babylon and other powers descending from the north (Jer 4:6; 6:1, 22; 10:22; 25:9; 46:20, 24; 47:2; Ezek 1:4; 26:7; 38:6, 15; 39:2). The north is not merely a direction but a charged theological symbol — the quarter from which chaos approaches. This resonance may connect to ancient Mesopotamian associations of the north with darkness and hostile powers. NORTH DIRECTION

en: from-north, from-the-north | es: De-norte, Desde-el-norte, al-norte | fr: de-nord, de-north, du-nord | de: Norden, von-Norden, von-der-north Josh 11:2; Josh 15:6; Josh 15:10; Josh 16:6; Josh 17:9

3. Zaphon, sacred mountain / place name (5×) Mount Zaphon as a proper or semi-proper noun — the mythological mountain of the gods in Canaanite religion (Ugaritic Sapanu), identified with Jebel al-Aqra on the Syrian coast — appearing in approximately 5 occurrences. Psalm 48:3 (ET 48:2) boldly transfers the title to Mount Zion: 'beautiful in elevation, the joy of the whole earth, Mount Zion, the heights of Zaphon.' Isaiah 14:13 places the divine assembly 'on the mount of assembly, in the far reaches of Zaphon.' Arabic transliterations (Safun) rather than translations confirm the proper-noun status. Job 26:7 ('He stretches out Zaphon over the void') may preserve the cosmic-mountain sense in a creation context. NORTH DIRECTION

en: from-north, from-the-north, in-the-north | es: al-norte, al-norte-de, en-el-norte | fr: de-le-nord, de-nord, nord | de: Norden, im-Norden, von-Norden Josh 24:30; Judg 2:9; Judg 7:1; Eccl 11:3; Song 4:16

צְפוֹן H6829 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Zaphon (town on east bank of Jordan in Gad's territory)

This place name identifies a town in the tribal territory of Gad, east of the Jordan River. Ancient sources locate it near the Jabbok river, possibly at modern Amateh. The name may share the same root as the common word for 'north,' though here it functions as a proper noun for a specific settlement. Joshua 13:27 and Judges 12:1 both reference this Transjordanian location, important in Israel's early territorial organization.

(1×) Geographic name of a town assigned to Gad east of the Jordan. Joshua 13:27 includes it in the boundary description of Gad's inheritance, situating it in the northern part of their territory near the Jabbok. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Tzaphon | es: y-Safón | fr: et-Tzaphon | de: und-Tzaphon Josh 13:27

צְפוֹנִי H6830 Art / Adj-ms (1×)

the northerner, invader from the north (possibly locusts or foreign army)

This adjective, used substantively with the article, designates 'the northern one'—an invader or threat coming from the north. Joel 2:20 applies this term to what most interpreters understand as a locust swarm, though the imagery blends with that of a military invasion. The north was the traditional direction from which Mesopotamian armies approached Israel, making 'northerner' a loaded term suggesting foreign threat and judgment. The locust plague thus functions as both literal agricultural disaster and prophetic symbol.

(1×) Refers to a destructive force coming from the north, identified in Joel 2:20 where God promises to drive away 'the northerner.' Though locusts don't typically approach from the north, the term may emphasize the foreign, threatening nature of the plague or may metaphorically describe invading armies. NORTH DIRECTION

en: the-northerner | es: el-norteño | fr: nord | de: [הצפוני] Joel 2:20

צְפוֹנִי H6831 Art / Adj-ms (1×)

the Zephonite (descendant of Zephon, member of Gadite clan)

This gentelic adjective identifies members of the Zephonite clan within the tribe of Gad. Used collectively with the definite article, it designates all the descendants of Zephon (or Ziphion) listed in the wilderness census. Such clan designations were crucial for land inheritance, military organization, and maintaining genealogical records. Numbers 26:15 uses this term to categorize this particular family group within Gad's broader tribal structure.

(1×) Collective designation for members of the Zephonite clan, descendants of Gad's son Zephon. Numbers 26:15 uses this term in the census context to identify this family group for purposes of inheritance and tribal organization. NORTH DIRECTION
en: the-Zephonite | es: los-sefonitas | fr: le-Zephonite | de: der-Zephonite Num 26:15

צָפִיעַ H6832 N-mpc (2×)
cattle dung; bovine excrement, contrasted with human waste in Ezekiel's symbolic act
This term denotes cow manure, appearing in the context of Ezekiel's prophetic sign-act where God permits him to use cattle dung instead of human excrement as fuel for baking bread. The construct form 'dung of cattle' specifies the animal source. Ancient Near Eastern peoples regularly used dried dung as cooking fuel in wood-scarce regions, making cattle dung ceremonially preferable to human waste. The Qere (oral reading tradition) preserves this spelling against a variant in the Ketiv (written text), showing scribal concern for proper vocalization of this earthy term.

(2×) Both occurrences (Ezekiel 4:15, 4:15) reference the identical moment when God concedes to Ezekiel's objection. The Qere/Ketiv variation shows this appears twice in one verse with slight spelling differences. Spanish 'estiércol' (manure), French 'lézard' (apparently an error—should be related to dung), and German transliterations all point to animal waste. The construct relationship 'dung of the cattle' specifies bovine origin, crucial for the passage's meaning: this is ritually cleaner fuel than human waste. The term belongs to the concrete, physical domain of animal excrement used practically in ancient agriculture and daily life. LIVING CREATURES
en: (dung-of), [dung-of] | es: (qere:estiercol-de), [ketiv:estiercol-de] | fr: lézard | de: [צפוע], [צפיע] Ezek 4:15

צִפּוֹר H6833 N-cs (40×)
bird, sparrow — a small bird or any bird generically; used in ritual purification and as a figure of freedom Tsippor is a feminine noun for a bird, especially a small passerine or sparrow, occurring 40 times. Its onomatopoeic quality — evoking the twittering sound of small birds — sets it apart from the more general 'of ('fowl'). The Levitical purification ritual for skin disease requires 'two living clean birds' (tsipporim, Lev 14:4-7, 49-53): one is slaughtered over running water, the other dipped in the blood and released alive, a vivid image of death-to-life cleansing. As a figure of freedom and vulnerability, the tsippor wanders from its nest (Prov 27:8), escapes from the fowler's snare (Ps 124:7), and watches alone on a rooftop (Ps 102:7). The psalmist envies the sparrow that finds a home near God's altars (Ps 84:3). In Ecclesiastes, the 'voice of the bird' awakens the aged (Eccl 12:4). Spanish distinguishes 'ave' (bird) from 'pajaro' (sparrow), while French 'oiseau' and German 'Vogel' use a single generic term.

1. sparrow / small bird (proverbial) (15×) Split from sense 130507. Criteria: Proverbial and natural-history contexts: freedom, vulnerability, sanctuary (Ps 84:3, 102:7, 124:7; Prov 27:8)
en: Like-birds, a-bird, a-sparrow | es: Como-gorrion, Como-pájaro, ave | fr: [כצפור], [כצפרים], comme-oiseau | de: Vogel, [וכצפור], [וכצפרים] Deut 22:6; Job 41:5; Ps 11:1; Ps 84:3; Ps 102:7

2. bird (Levitical purification rite) (13×) Split from sense 130507. Criteria: Two birds prescribed for skin-disease and house cleansing rituals (Lev 14:4-7, 49-53)
en: and-with-the-bird, birds, the-bird | es: el-pájaro, pájaros, y-con-el-pájaro | fr: et-avec-le-oiseau, le-oiseau, oiseaux | de: Voegel, der-Vogel, und-mit-der-Vogel Lev 14:4; Lev 14:5; Lev 14:6

3. birds / winged creatures (generic collective) (12×) Split from sense 130507. Criteria: Generic zoological category in creation-type lists (Gen 7:14; Deut 4:17; 14:11)
en: and-bird-of, and-birds, bird | es: Ave-de, a-pájaro, ave | fr: [וצפרים], et-oiseau, le-oiseau | de: Vogel, Vogel-, [הצפור] Gen 7:14; Gen 15:10; Deut 4:17; Deut 14:11; Neh 5:18

צִפּוֹר H6834 N-proper-ms (7×)
Zippor — personal name, father of Balak king of Moab; meaning 'bird' or 'sparrow'
A masculine proper name meaning 'bird' (perhaps specifically 'sparrow'), borne by the father of Balak, king of Moab, who hired Balaam to curse Israel. The name appears seven times, always identifying Balak's lineage (Num 22:2, 4, 10, 16; 23:18; Josh 24:9; Judg 11:25). The bird-name follows a common Semitic pattern of animal names for persons, paralleled by the Palmyrene name Tsipra. All translations simply transliterate: English, Spanish, French, and German all render 'Zippor.'

(7×) Zippor — a proper name ('bird, sparrow') identifying the father of Balak, king of Moab. Every occurrence (Num 22:2, 4, 10, 16; 23:18; Josh 24:9; Judg 11:25) appears in the patronymic formula 'Balak son of Zippor,' establishing Balak's royal lineage in the context of Moab's attempt to have Israel cursed by Balaam. The name reflects the common ancient Near Eastern practice of using animal names for persons (cf. Palmyrene Tsipra). All multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name without translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Zippor | es: Sipor, Zipor | fr: Zippor | de: Zippor Num 22:2; Num 22:4; Num 22:10; Num 22:16; Num 23:18

צַפַּחַת H6835 Prep-b (7×)
A small jug or flask for carrying water or oil, used in the Saul-David and Elijah narratives
A feminine noun denoting a small, flat-bodied jug or flask used for holding water or oil. In the David-and-Saul narratives, it is the water jug David snatched from beside the sleeping king's head as proof of his mercy (1 Sam 26:11, 12, 16). In the Elijah cycle, it is the widow of Zarephath's oil jar that miraculously never runs dry (1 Kgs 17:12, 14, 16) and the water cruse left by the angel at Elijah's head (1 Kgs 19:6). Spanish 'vasija' and English 'jug/flask' confirm a single concrete referent.

jug / flask (water vessel) (7×) A small jug, flask, or cruse — a portable vessel of flat or broad shape used to carry water or oil. In 1 Samuel 26:11, 12, and 16, it is the water jug that David took from beside Saul's sleeping head in the wilderness of Ziph, demonstrating his refusal to harm the Lord's anointed. In 1 Kings 17:12, 14, and 16, it is the widow's oil jar that was miraculously sustained during the famine, and in 1 Kings 19:6 it is the water cruse placed at Elijah's head by the angel. Spanish 'vasija/jarra,' English 'jug/jar' — the glosses consistently point to a single small household vessel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-jar-of, and-jug-of, in-the-jug | es: en-la-vasija, jarra-de, y-la-vasija-de | fr: dans-le-jug, et-jar-de, et-jug-de | de: in-der-jug, jug-von, und-jar-von 1Sam 26:11; 1Sam 26:12; 1Sam 26:16; 1Kgs 17:12; 1Kgs 17:14

צְפִיָּה H6836 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cp (1×)
watchtower, outlook-post; act of watching
This noun appears only in Lamentations describing Judah's futile watching for help during Jerusalem's siege. The term likely derives from roots meaning 'to watch' or 'look out,' suggesting either a physical watchtower or the act of watching itself. The phrase 'in our watching we watched' uses this noun alongside its verbal form, creating emphasis through repetition—they kept watching and watching, but no rescuer came. The hoped-for military ally never materialized.

(1×) Denotes a place of watching or the activity of keeping watch, used in Lamentations 4:17 to describe Jerusalem's desperate vigil for military help. The context suggests either a watchtower from which they observed or the extended period of watchful waiting that proved futile when their expected ally failed to arrive. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: in-our-watching | es: en-nuestra-vigilia | fr: [בצפיתנו] | de: [בצפיתנו] Lam 4:17

צְפִיוֹן H6837 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ziphion (son of Gad, alternate form of Zephon)
This personal name represents the same individual called Zephon in Numbers 26:15. Genesis 46:16 uses this spelling in listing Jacob's descendants who went to Egypt. Such variant spellings for the same person are common in Hebrew genealogies, often reflecting dialectical differences or scribal tradition. The individual founded one of the clans within Gad's tribe, later designated the Zephonites in the wilderness census.

(1×) Personal name of a son of Gad, identical to Zephon but spelled differently. Genesis 46:16 uses this form in the list of Jacob's family members who migrated to Egypt, where this son would have been born or traveled with his father. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ziphion | es: Tsifyon | fr: Ziphion | de: Zifjon Gen 46:16

צַפִּיחַת H6838 Prep-k / N-fs (1×)
flat cake, wafer (thin bread)
This noun denotes a type of thin, flat bread or wafer. Exodus 16:31 uses it to describe the appearance of manna, comparing the divine provision to a familiar baked good. The term suggests something thin and delicate—more like a cracker or wafer than a thick loaf. This comparison helped Israel conceptualize the unfamiliar manna by reference to known baked items, emphasizing both its bread-like sustenance and its unique, delicate character.

(1×) Refers to a thin, flat cake or wafer, used in Exodus 16:31 as a comparison point for describing manna's appearance. The simile suggests manna resembled these delicate, thin cakes, helping Israelites understand the texture and form of this miraculous food. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: like-wafer | es: como-torta-de- | fr: comme-wafer | de: wie-wafer Exod 16:31

צָפָה H6839 N-proper-fs (1×)
Zophim (high place where Balaam blessed Israel)
This place name means 'watchers' or 'lookouts' and designates the location where Balak brought Balaam to view Israel's camp. Numbers 23:14 identifies it as a field on top of Pisgah, providing a vantage point overlooking the Israelite encampment. The name appropriately describes a high observation point. From this 'field of the watchers,' Balaam delivered his second oracle blessing Israel instead of cursing them, frustrating Balak's purposes.

(1×) Geographic name of an elevated location on or near Mount Pisgah where Balaam was taken to prophesy over Israel. Numbers 23:14 identifies this 'field of watchers' as the site of Balaam's second oracle, a high point offering visual access to the Israelite camp below. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zophim | es: Zofim | fr: Zophim | de: Zophim Num 23:14

צָפִין H6840 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (1×)
treasure, that which is treasured or stored up
This noun appears only in Psalm 17:14 with a textual variant (Ketiv/Qere difference). It denotes treasure or stored wealth, things of value that have been laid up or hidden away. The psalm context speaks of those whose portion is in this life, whose bellies God fills with his treasure. The term emphasizes the concept of accumulation and storage—goods set aside as precious possessions. The textual variant suggests some scribal uncertainty about the original form.

(1×) Refers to treasure or stored valuables, used in Psalm 17:14 to describe worldly wealth that fills the bellies of those whose portion is limited to this life. The term emphasizes material goods that have been accumulated and stored as valuable possessions. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv] | es: [qere] | fr: caché | de: [ketiv] Ps 17:14

צְפִיר H6841 Conj-w / N-mpc (1×)
male goats, he-goats
This Aramaic plural noun appears in Ezra's account of the temple dedication, listing the sacrificial animals offered. The term specifies male goats, distinguishing them from female goats or other livestock. Ezra 6:17 records that during the dedication ceremonies, along with bulls and rams, they offered male goats as sin offerings for all Israel. The Aramaic vocabulary in Ezra reflects the bilingual nature of the post-exilic community and the imperial context in which the temple rebuilding occurred.

(1×) Aramaic term for male goats or he-goats, used in Ezra 6:17 in the list of animals sacrificed at the second temple's dedication. These male goats served as sin offerings, twelve in number corresponding to the twelve tribes of Israel. MALE GOAT
en: and-male-goats | es: y-machos-cabríos | fr: [וצפירי] | de: [וצפירי] Ezra 6:17

צָפִיר H6842 N-msc (6×)
Male goat, he-goat; used in sacrificial offerings and as a symbol of power in Daniel's visions.
A male goat or he-goat, appearing in both ritual and apocalyptic contexts. In Daniel's vision, the tsaphir is the prominent he-goat that charges from the west without touching the ground, symbolizing Alexander the Great and the Greek empire (Dan 8:5, 8, 21). In cultic usage, the word denotes he-goats brought for sin offerings and temple rededication (2 Chr 29:21; Ezra 8:35). Spanish 'macho cabrío' and French 'bouc' both capture the masculine specificity of this term, distinguishing it from the more generic words for goat.

male goat, he-goat (6×) A male goat or he-goat, used in both prophetic-symbolic and sacrificial-ritual contexts. In Daniel 8, the tsaphir is the conspicuous he-goat from the west — identified explicitly as the king of Greece (Dan 8:21) — whose great horn is broken and replaced by four. Spanish 'macho cabrío' and French 'bouc' both emphasize the masculine gender of the animal. In the cultic sphere, the plural construct tsephirei izzim denotes he-goats brought for sin offerings during Hezekiah's temple rededication (2 Chr 29:21) and Ezra's post-exilic return (Ezra 8:35). The word is distinctly late Biblical Hebrew, appearing only in Chronicles, Ezra, and Daniel. MALE GOAT
en: a-male-goat-, and-male-goat-of, and-male-goats-of | es: Y-el-macho-cabrío, Y-macho-cabrío-de, macho-cabrío- | fr: [וצפירי], [צפירי], bouc | de: [והצפיר], [וצפיר], [וצפירי] 2Chr 29:21; Ezra 8:35; Dan 8:5; Dan 8:8

צְפִירָה H6843 Art / N-fs (3×)
chaplet, diadem, plait; a woven or braided crown, possibly also 'doom' in prophetic contexts
This noun most likely refers to a chaplet or woven crown, though its meaning is contested especially in Ezekiel. Isaiah 28:5 speaks of the Lord becoming 'a beautiful chaplet' to the faithful remnant, using imagery of royal honor. Ezekiel 7:7, 10 present textual difficulties—older translations read 'morning,' while most modern scholars propose 'doom' or 'fate' based on Aramaic cognates, though 'diadem' remains possible. The word may derive from a root meaning 'to plait' or 'to encircle,' suggesting something woven or coming around. The cross-linguistic evidence reflects this uncertainty with brackets and competing interpretations.

(3×) Isaiah's usage is clear: a diadem or chaplet of beauty, part of royal and honorific imagery (parallel to 'crown of glory'). Ezekiel's two instances are enigmatic—they don't fit 'morning' contextually, and 'doom' (as fate coming round) is plausible but uncertain. Some suggest 'diadem' even in Ezekiel 7:10, referring to the royal house. The multilingual glosses show confusion (bracketed forms in German and French, 'doom' in English, 'turno' in Spanish for Ezekiel 7:7), indicating this remains a lexical crux requiring contextual judgment. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: and-for-a-diadem, the-doom | es: el-turno, y-por-diadema-de | fr: [והצפירה], [הצפרה], [ולצפירת] | de: [והצפירה], [הצפרה], [ולצפירת] Isa 28:5; Ezek 7:7; Ezek 7:10

צְפִית H6844 Art / N-fs (1×)

carpet, rug (spread out for reclining); possibly watchtower

This noun presents interpretive challenges, appearing only in Isaiah 21:5's vivid scene of feasting. Most modern scholars understand it as a carpet or rug laid out for dining, part of Isaiah's portrayal of Babylon's leaders feasting heedlessly before sudden destruction. The verb 'spread' accompanying it supports this reading—they spread the carpet for reclining at table. An older interpretation took it as 'watchtower' (connecting to roots of watching), but the dining context favors the carpet/rug understanding.

(1×) Likely refers to a carpet or rug spread for dining, used in Isaiah 21:5 in the description of Babylonian leaders preparing a feast. The phrase 'spread the carpet' suggests laying out textiles for reclining at meals, part of Isaiah's ironic picture of those feasting carelessly before judgment strikes. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: the-carpet | es: el-vigía | fr: [הצפית] | de: [הצפית] Isa 21:5

צָפַן H6845 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (34×)

Hide, conceal, treasure up; to store away secretly or lie in ambush; hidden riches or reserves

A verb rooted in the act of concealing from sight, whose semantic range stretches from physical hiding to the careful treasuring of wisdom and wealth. In the Qal stem it can mean to hide a person (as Moses' mother hid him, Exod 2:2) or to store up God's commands in the heart (Prov 2:1). The passive participle yields a substantive sense of 'treasure' or 'stored riches,' while a darker register appears when it describes lurking in ambush against the innocent (Prov 1:11). The Nifal and Hifil stems add passive and causative dimensions respectively, rounding out a word that moves between protection, preservation, and predatory stealth.

1. hide, conceal (Qal active) (9×) Active concealment of a person or object from discovery. Moses' mother 'hid him' three months (Exod 2:2); Rahab hid the spies (Josh 2:4). Spanish 'esconde' and French 'cacher' consistently reflect straightforward hiding. The sense spans protective concealment and secretive action across Qal perfect, imperfect, and participle forms. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: I-have-hidden, You-have-hidden, and-she-hid-him | es: El-que-la-esconde, esconde-, esconderlo | fr: cacher, cacher-elle, et-elle-cacha-lui | de: Zefanja, [צפן], [צפנת] Exod 2:2; Exod 2:3; Josh 2:4; Job 10:13; Job 17:4

2. treasure up, store away (9×) The extended meaning of storing up something valuable for future use: treasuring God's commandments (Prov 2:1, 7:1) or, negatively, hoarding iniquity for one's children (Job 21:19). Spanish 'atesora' ('to treasure') captures this nuance precisely. Job 23:12 shows the psalmist treasuring divine words more than daily bread, linking hidden storage with devotional commitment. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: He-stores-up, I-have-treasured, I-stored | es: [y-guarda], atesora, atesoran | fr: cacher, et-cacher, je-les-ai-gardés | de: [(יצפן)], [[וצפן]], [יצפן] Job 21:19; Job 23:12; Ps 31:19; Prov 2:1; Prov 2:7

3. treasure, stored riches (substantive) (6×) The Qal passive participle functioning as a substantive: 'that which is stored up,' i.e., treasure or hidden wealth. Prov 13:22 declares the sinner's wealth is 'stored up' for the righteous. Ps 17:14 speaks of God's 'treasured ones,' while Ezek 7:22 references sacred treasures. French and German transliterations suggest translators found this usage lexically distinctive. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-with-your-treasure, but-stored-up, for-his-treasures | es: guardado, para-sus-tesoros;, protegidos-de-ti | fr: au-nord, cacher, et-cacher | de: [לצפוניו], [צפונה], [צפוני] Job 20:26; Ps 17:14; Ps 83:3; Prov 13:22; Ezek 7:22

4. lurk, lie in ambush (4×) A sinister turn: hiding oneself with hostile intent, lurking in ambush. Prov 1:11 invites 'let us lurk for blood,' and Ps 10:8 describes the wicked who 'lurk in secret places.' Spanish 'emboscan' and 'acechan' (to ambush, to stalk) underscore the predatory connotation that distinguishes this sense from benign concealment. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: let-us-lurk, they-lurk, watch | es: acechan, emboscan, embosquemos | fr: cacher | de: [יצפנו], [צפנה], sie-lurk Ps 10:8; Ps 56:6; Prov 1:11; Prov 1:18

5. be hidden, be concealed (Nifal) (3×) Nifal passive: the state of being hidden or concealed. Job 15:20 says the number of years 'is hidden' from the oppressor; Jer 16:17 insists nothing is hidden from God's eyes. Spanish 'están escondidos' and 'se ocultó' confirm the passive orientation. This sense focuses on the resulting state rather than the act. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: are-hidden, is-concealed | es: están-escondidos, se-ocultó, son-escondidos | fr: [נצפן], cacher | de: [נצפן], [נצפנו] Job 15:20; Job 24:1; Jer 16:17

6. hide, cause to hide (Hifil) (2×) Hifil causative: to cause someone to be hidden, often with protective intent. Job 14:13 pleads 'hide me in Sheol' as a refuge, and Ps 56:6 (ketiv) may reflect a similar causative reading. The sense carries overtones of sheltering a person from danger through deliberate concealment by a more powerful agent. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: [ketiv:they-lurk], you-hide-me | es: [ketiv], me-escondas | fr: cacher, cacher-moi | de: [ketiv:they-lurk], [תצפנני] Job 14:13; Ps 56:6

7. (1×) A sheltering nuance at Ps 31:20: 'You shelter them in the secret of your presence.' Spanish 'los ocultarás' and English 'You shelter them' suggest protective divine hiding that goes beyond mere concealment, implying intimate refuge under God's care — a unique coloring within the broader semantic field of this root. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: You-shelter-them | es: los-ocultarás | fr: cacher | de: du-shelter-ihnen Ps 31:20

צְפַנְיָה H6846 N-proper-ms (10×)

Zephaniah; a personal name meaning 'YHWH has hidden/treasured,' borne by several OT figures including the prophet.

The name Tsephanyah (or Tsephanyahu) means 'YHWH has hidden' or 'YHWH has treasured,' combining tsaphan ('to hide, store') with the divine name. Its most famous bearer is the prophet Zephaniah, who prophesied during Josiah's reign (Zeph 1:1). A priest named Zephaniah son of Maaseiah appears repeatedly in Jeremiah's narrative—sent as envoy to Jeremiah (Jer 21:1; 37:3), addressed by letter from Shemaiah (Jer 29:25, 29), and executed at Riblah (Jer 52:24; 2 Kgs 25:18). Two other figures bear this name in 1 Chronicles 6:36 and Zechariah 6:10, 14.

Zephaniah (proper name) (10×) Zephaniah (tsephanyah/tsephanyahu), a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has hidden/treasured,' borne by at least four OT figures. The prophet Zephaniah authored the book bearing his name during Josiah's reign (Zeph 1:1), preaching about the Day of YHWH. The priest Zephaniah son of Maaseiah served as a key intermediary between the Jerusalem temple establishment and Jeremiah (Jer 21:1; 29:25, 29; 37:3), and was among those executed by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah (2 Kgs 25:18; Jer 52:24). Additional bearers appear as a Levitical ancestor (1 Chr 6:36) and a figure in Zechariah's symbolic crowning ceremony (Zech 6:10, 14). The Septuagint consistently renders it Sophonias. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tsefanyah, Tsefanyahu, Tsephanyah | es: Sofonías, Tsefanya, Tsefanyah | fr: Sophonie, Tsefanyahu, Tsephania | de: Tsefanyahu, Zefanja, [צפניה] 2Kgs 25:18; 1Chr 6:36; Jer 21:1; Jer 29:25; Jer 29:29

צָפְנַת פַּעְנֵחַ H6847 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zaphenath-Paneah (Egyptian throne name given to Joseph)

This compound name represents the Egyptian throne name Pharaoh gave Joseph when elevating him to second-in-command. Genesis 41:45 records this renaming as part of Joseph's official installation. Egyptian scholars have identified the name as meaning something like 'the god speaks and he lives' or 'the one who provides life.' Such Egyptian names for royal officials were standard practice, marking Joseph's complete integration into Egyptian court life while maintaining his Hebrew identity in the narrative. The Greek translations struggled with the Egyptian phonology, producing various approximations.

(1×) Egyptian throne name bestowed on Joseph by Pharaoh at his elevation to vizier of Egypt. Genesis 41:45 records this naming as part of Joseph's official investiture, marking his transformation from

Hebrew prisoner to Egyptian official with an Egyptian royal name meaning approximately 'God speaks and he lives.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Zaphenath-Paneah | es: Tsafnat-Paneaj | fr: Zaphenath-Paneah | de: Zaphenat-Paneach Gen 41:45

צֶפַע H6848a N-ms (1×)
viper, poisonous serpent
This noun designates a poisonous snake, possibly derived from a root suggesting hissing. Isaiah 14:29 uses it in an oracle warning Philistia not to rejoice at the breaking of their oppressor's rod, for from the serpent's root will come forth something more deadly—a viper. The imagery builds from lesser to greater threat, using snake terminology to represent political dangers. The term emphasizes the venomous, deadly nature of the creature, not just any snake but specifically a dangerous one.

(1×) Denotes a poisonous serpent or viper, used metaphorically in Isaiah 14:29 to represent escalating political danger. The prophet warns Philistia that an even more deadly threat (symbolized by this viper) will emerge from their broken oppressor, illustrating how dangers can intensify. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES
en: viper | es: víbora | fr: [צפע] | de: [צפע] Isa 14:29

צִפְעוֹנִי H6848b N-ms (4×)
viper, venomous serpent (possibly daboia viper or similar poisonous snake)
A venomous snake, probably a viper species, though the exact identification is debated since vipers typically don't lay eggs (yet Isa 59:5 mentions 'viper eggs'). Isaiah 11:8 pairs it with the cobra, promising that a child will play safely near the viper's hole in the messianic age. Isaiah 59:5 uses 'viper eggs' as a metaphor for the wicked schemes that hatch into evil. Jeremiah 8:17 warns that God will send venomous serpents that cannot be charmed. Proverbs 23:32 compares wine's aftereffects to a viper's bite.

(4×) Proverbs 23:32 warns that wine 'at the last bites like a serpent and stings like a viper' (כְּצִפְעֹנִי). Isaiah 11:8 envisions the nursing child playing safely over the 'viper's hole' in the restored creation. Isaiah 59:5 accuses the wicked of hatching 'viper's eggs'—deadly schemes. Jeremiah 8:17 threatens 'serpents, vipers' (צִפְעֹנִים) that cannot be charmed. Spanish víbora/víboras and French vipère consistently identify this as a dangerous, venomous snake. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES
en: a-viper, and-like-a-viper, viper | es: víbora, víboras, y-como-víbora | fr: [צפעוני], [צפעים], et-כצפעני | de: [וכצפעני], [צפעוני], [צפעים] Prov 23:32; Isa 11:8; Isa 59:5; Jer 8:17

צְפִיעָה H6849 Conj-w (1×)
offshoots, descendants (as shoots from a plant)
This plural noun appears only in Isaiah 22:24, parallel to 'offspring' in describing descendants. The botanical imagery presents family descendants as shoots or offshoots growing from a plant. The context speaks of Eliakim as a peg on which will hang all the weight of his father's house—both the offspring and the offshoots. The paired terms emphasize completeness, covering all generations and branches of the family. This organic metaphor for genealogical relationships was natural in an agricultural society.

(1×) Refers to descendants or family offshoots, using botanical imagery of shoots branching from a plant. Isaiah 22:24 employs this term parallel to 'offspring' to describe all the descendants of Eliakim's family who will depend on him—both direct children and more distant relatives like shoots and branches of a family tree. SEED AND OFFSPRING
en: and-the-offshoots | es: y-los-retoños | fr: [והצפעות] | de: [והצפעות] Isa 22:24

צָפַךְ H6850 Conj-w | V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
chirp, peep, whisper (onomatopoetic for high-pitched sounds of birds or spirits)
An onomatopoetic verb describing chirping, peeping, or whispering sounds—the high-pitched utterances of birds or the eerie whispers of spirits. Isaiah 8:19 warns against mediums and spiritists 'who chirp and mutter.' Isaiah 10:14 uses it of conquered peoples too frightened to make a sound (not even a bird's chirp). Isaiah 38:14 has Hezekiah 'chirping like a swallow' in his distress. Isaiah 29:4 depicts defeated Jerusalem speaking from the dust 'like a ghost' with a chirping voice. The word captures faint, high-pitched, often supernatural utterances.

(4×) Isaiah 8:19 describes mediums and spiritists 'who chirp and mutter' (הַמְצַפְצְפִים וְהַמַּהְגִּים). Isaiah 10:14 says no one 'opened his mouth or chirped' in resistance. Isaiah 38:14 has Hezekiah moaning: 'like a swallow or crane I chirp' (אֲצַפְצֵף). Isaiah 29:4 promises Jerusalem's voice will 'chirp from the dust' (תְּצַפְצָף) like a ghost. Spanish susurrar (whisper) and gorjeo (chirp) capture the faint, high-pitched quality. French similarly emphasizes the bird-like or spirit-like sounds. SINGING AND MUSIC
en: I-chirp, and-chirping, shall-chirp | es: gorjeo, los-que-susurran, o-piara | fr: [אצפצף], [המצפצפים], [ומצפצף] | de: [אצפצף], [המצפצפים], [ומצפצף] Isa 8:19; Isa 10:14; Isa 29:4; Isa 38:14

צַפְצָפָה H6851 N-fs (1×)
willow tree (possibly from rustling sound)
This noun designates a type of willow tree, possibly named from its rustling sound. Ezekiel 17:5 uses it in an allegorical vision, describing how a great eagle took a seed and planted it 'beside abundant waters, setting it like a willow.' The simile suggests a tree that thrives near water, appropriate for willows which grow along waterways. The possible onomatopoetic origin (suggesting rustling or whisking sounds) would fit the willow's characteristic of swaying and rustling in wind along riverbanks.

(1×) Denotes a type of willow tree, used in Ezekiel 17:5 in an allegory about planting and growth. The prophet describes planting 'like a willow'—a tree naturally suited to waterside locations, using this image within the larger allegory of Zedekiah's relationship to Babylon. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: willow | es: sauce | fr: saule | de: [צפצפה] Ezek 17:5

צָפַר H6852 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (1×)
depart early, leave (possibly at dawn)
This verb appears only in Judges 7:3 in God's instructions to Gideon about reducing his army. The interpretation remains somewhat uncertain—the text says 'let him return and depart' from Mount Gilead. Some connect it to Aramaic words for morning, suggesting 'depart early' or 'leave at dawn.' Others propose textual emendations. The basic sense involves departure or leaving, specifically allowing fearful soldiers to leave Gideon's camp before the battle with Midian. Whatever the precise etymology, the functional meaning—permission to depart—is clear from context.

(1×) Means to depart or leave, possibly with nuances of early morning departure. Judges 7:3 uses this verb in God's directive to let fearful men leave Gideon's army, resulting in 22,000 departing from the 32,000 who had gathered, leaving only 10,000 before God reduced the force further. RISING EARLY en: and-depart-early | es: y-madrugue | fr: et-depart-tôt | de: und-weggehen-frueh Judg 7:3

צִפַּר H6853 N-fpc (4×)
birds (Aramaic, collective or plural)
The Aramaic word for birds, appearing exclusively in Daniel 4 in Nebuchadnezzar's dream and its interpretation. The great tree in the dream sheltered 'the birds of the heavens' in its branches, representing the vast reach of Nebuchadnezzar's empire. After the king's humiliation, the birds are told to flee from the tree. Later, when the king is restored, the birds again find shelter. The birds symbolize the far-flung peoples and kingdoms under Babylonian protection and dominion.

(4×) Daniel 4:12 (Aramaic 4:9) describes the birds dwelling in the tree's branches. Daniel 4:14 (4:11) commands 'let the birds flee from its branches.' Daniel 4:21 (4:18) repeats that 'the birds of the heavens' dwelt in its branches. Daniel 4:33 (4:30) may reference birds (or bird-like features) during the king's beast-like state. Spanish aves (birds) and French oiseau (bird) consistently identify this as avian creatures, used symbolically for subject peoples. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-birds, birds-of, like-birds' | es: como-aves, las-aves-de, y-las-aves | fr: et-oiseau, oiseau | de: [וצפריא], [כצפרין], [צפרי] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:21; Dan 4:33

צְפַרְדֵּעַ H6854 Art / N-fs (13×)

Frog; the amphibian of the Egyptian plague, used collectively and in plural for the swarm sent upon Egypt.

Refers exclusively to frogs in the context of the second Egyptian plague and its liturgical remembrance. The Hebrew צְפַרְדֵּעַ appears both as a collective singular ('the frog came up,' Exod 8:2) and in plural form ('frogs,' Exod 7:27–8:9). Translations across languages are remarkably uniform — Spanish ranas, French grenouilles, German Froesche — because the referent is so concrete. Psalms 78:45 and 105:30 recall the plague in worship, making this humble creature a permanent fixture of Israel's salvation memory.

frog (the plague creature) (13×) The amphibian creature sent as a plague upon Egypt, appearing en masse from the Nile to invade houses, beds, and ovens. Used collectively in the singular (Exod 8:2; Ps 78:45) and in the plural (Exod 7:27–8:9; Ps 105:30). The narrow usage — confined entirely to the Exodus plague narrative and its psalmist recollections — means the word carries a theological charge well beyond its zoological referent: it evokes divine judgment and Pharaoh's humiliation through the lowliest of creatures. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-frogs, frogs, the-frog | es: con-ranas, de-ranas, la-rana | fr: avec-grenouilles, et-grenouille, grenouille | de: Froesche, der-Frosch, die-Froesche Exod 8:2; Exod 8:3; Exod 8:4; Exod 8:5; Exod 8:6

צִפֹּרָה H6855 N-proper-fs (3×)

Zipporah; personal name of Moses' Midianite wife, daughter of Jethro/Reuel

Zipporah was Moses' wife, the daughter of the Midianite priest Jethro (also called Reuel). Exodus 2:21 records their marriage when Moses fled to Midian. In Exodus 4:25, she circumcises their son during the mysterious encounter where the Lord sought to kill Moses. Exodus 18:2 mentions that Moses had sent her away, but Jethro brings her back to Moses in the wilderness. The name means 'bird' in Hebrew. Her brief but significant appearances highlight moments of crisis and covenant—circumcision, separation, and reunion.

(3×) Three narrative moments define Zipporah: her marriage to Moses (Exodus 2:21), her dramatic circumcision of their son (4:25), and her return from temporary separation (18:2). She acts decisively in chapter 4, performing the circumcision that apparently appeases God's wrath against Moses. The cross-linguistic renderings are consistent (Zipporah, Séphora, Zippora, Tsiporah), treating this as a straightforward proper name. Her Midianite origin makes her an outsider who nevertheless participates in covenant acts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Zipporah | es: Tsiporah, a-Tsiporah | fr: Séphora | de: Zippora Exod 2:21; Exod 4:25; Exod 18:2

צִפֹּרֶן H6856 N-mpc / 3fs (2×)

fingernail, stylus point; the hardened tip of a finger or a writing implement's sharp end

This term denotes the hardened nail at the end of a finger, with one extended usage for a diamond stylus point. In Deuteronomy it refers to the fingernails a female captive must pare as part of her mourning transformation, while Jeremiah uses it metaphorically for an engraving tool—'with a point of diamond'—that inscribes Judah's sin indelibly. The semantic range extends from the literal body part to the sharp point of a writing instrument, both sharing the quality of hardness and capability to scratch or mark surfaces.

(2×) The two contexts diverge functionally: Deuteronomy 21:12 uses plural 'her nails' (fingernails) in a ritual grooming context, while Jeremiah 17:1 employs 'with point of' in a metaphor for indelible inscription. Spanish shows this range: 'sus uñas' (her nails) versus 'con punta de' (with point of). French and German preserve both senses. The Deuteronomy passage lists nails alongside hair in a transformation ritual for war captives becoming wives. The Jeremiah usage leverages the nail's hardness (diamond-tipped stylus) to depict sin's permanent record. Both share the semantic core of a hard, pointed extension capable of leaving marks. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-nails, with-point-of | es: con-punta-de, sus-uñas | fr: [בצפרן], sa-nails | de: [בצפרן], ihr-nails Deut 21:12; Jer 17:1

צְפַת H6857 N-proper-fs (1×)

Zephath (Canaanite city, later called Hormah)

This place name identifies a Canaanite city that Judah and Simeon defeated, then renamed Hormah ('destruction'). Judges 1:17 records the conquest and renaming. The original name Zephath and the new name Hormah reflect the city's fate—it was devoted to destruction. Various locations have been proposed for its identification, including sites in the Negev south of Judah. The renaming practice reflected Israel's theological understanding that this city had come under the ban of holy war.

(1×) Name of a Canaanite city conquered by Judah and Simeon and subsequently renamed Hormah. Judges 1:17 records how after defeating this city, they devoted it to destruction and gave it a new name reflecting its fate, establishing it as an Israelite possession in the Negev region. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsefat | es: Tzefat | fr: Tsefat | de: Tsefat Judg 1:17

צֹפֶת H6858 Conj-w (1×)

capital (of a pillar), plated top

This noun appears only in 2 Chronicles 3:15 describing architectural features of Solomon's temple. It refers to the capital—the decorated top of a pillar or column. The term may suggest plating or overlay, indicating these capitals were covered with precious metal. The two pillars before the temple (Jachin and Boaz) were impressive architectural features, and their elaborate capitals crowned these monumental columns. The detail reflects both the grandeur of temple construction and the importance of recording its specifications.

(1×) Denotes the capital or top of a pillar, used in 2 Chronicles 3:15 describing the two great pillars that stood before Solomon's temple. These capitals were likely plated with metal and served as the crowning decorative elements atop the massive columns. PILLAR CAPITAL

en: and-the-capital | es: y-el-capitel | fr: [והצפת] | de: [והצפת] 2Chr 3:15

צְפַתָה H6859 N-proper-fs (1×)

Zephathah (valley near Mareshah in Judah)

This place name designates a valley near Mareshah where King Asa of Judah met the invading Ethiopian army. 2 Chronicles 14:10 locates the battle 'in the valley of Zephathah at Mareshah.' Though the precise location is debated (the Septuagint translated it as 'to the north,' leading some to emend the text), it clearly identifies a geographical feature associated with Mareshah in Judah's Shephelah region. Here Asa's much smaller army won a decisive victory by trusting in the Lord.

(1×) Geographic name of a valley near Mareshah where Asa confronted the massive Ethiopian invasion. 2 Chronicles 14:10 identifies this valley as the battle site where Judah's king cried out to the Lord and witnessed divine intervention, routing an army of a million men. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zephathah | es: Tsefatah | fr: [צפתה] | de: [צפתה] 2Chr 14:10

צִקְלַג H6860 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (15×)

Ziklag, a Philistine city in the Negev given by Achish of Gath to David during his exile.

Tsiqlag (Ziklag) was a frontier city in the southern Negev, originally allotted to both Judah (Josh 15:31) and Simeon (Josh 19:5; 1 Chr 4:30), but held by the Philistines by the time of Saul. When David fled from Saul, king Achish of Gath granted him Ziklag as a personal fief, and it remained royal Judahite property 'to this day' (1 Sam 27:6). The Amalekite raid and burning of the city while David was away provoked one of the great crises of his fugitive years (1 Sam 30:1–26), and the news of Saul's death reached David there (2 Sam 1:1; 4:10). Warriors from various tribes rallied to David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:1, 20). Postexilic settlers reoccupied the site (Neh 11:28).

Ziklag (proper noun, city in the Negev) (15×) The toponym Ziklag (צִקְלַג), identifying a single Negev city at the border of Judah and Philistia. All fifteen occurrences—with minor orthographic and prepositional variants—refer to this one location. Its narrative significance centers on David's exile period: received from Achish (1 Sam 27:6), raided by Amalekites (1 Sam 30:1–26), and serving as David's base when he learned of Saul's death (2 Sam 1:1). Tribal allotment lists (Josh 15:31; 19:5) and postexilic resettlement records (Neh 11:28) round out the references. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsiklag, Ziklag, and-Tsiqlag | es: Siclag, Y-en-Siclag, a-Siclag | fr: Tsiklag, [וצקלג], [וצקלג] | de: Ziklag, [וציקלג], [וצקלג] Josh 15:31; Josh 19:5; 1Sam 27:6; 1Sam 30:1

צִקְלֹן H6861 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

sack, wallet, bag (for carrying provisions)

This noun appears only in 2 Kings 4:42, though the word itself remains somewhat uncertain. The context describes a man bringing firstfruits to Elisha in some kind of container. Ancient versions suggest either a garment or a bag/wallet. The most plausible reading, supported by Arabic cognates, understands it as a wallet or sack —a carrying bag for provisions. The man brought twenty loaves of barley bread and fresh grain in this sack to the prophet, provision that would miraculously feed a hundred men.

(1×) Likely refers to a bag, sack, or wallet used to carry provisions, appearing in 2 Kings 4:42 where a man brings firstfruits to Elisha in such a container. Though the term's exact meaning is debated, the context supports understanding it as a carrying bag for food items. SACK GRAIN BAG

en: in-his-sack | es: en-su-saco | fr: dans-son-sack | de: in-sein-sack 2Kgs 4:42

צַר H6862a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (7×)

Narrow, tight, cramped (adjective); adversary or foe (substantivized)

The adjective צַר describes physical constriction — a narrow place, a space too tight, a passage too cramped. Balaam's donkey is squeezed into a narrow path (Num 22:26), the prophets' quarters are too cramped for their company (2 Kgs 6:1), and the crocodile's scales are sealed tight as a signet (Job 41:15). The word's root overlaps with the broader Hebrew field of distress and pressure, and in Isaiah 59:19 it shifts from describing a space to describing a person: the adversary who oppresses, rendered as Bedraenger ('oppressor') in German and shatru in Hindi. This dual spatial-personal range makes it a small but revealing window into how Hebrew maps physical constriction onto relational hostility.

1. narrow, tight, cramped (6×) Adjective describing physical narrowness, tightness, or constriction of space. Used of a narrow place where Balaam's donkey is hemmed in (Num 22:26, makom tsar), a dwelling too cramped for the sons of the prophets (2 Kgs 6:1), a deep narrow well as a figure for the harlot (Prov 23:27), a contracted and therefore swift river (Isa 59:19 in some readings), the tightly sealed scales of the crocodile (Job 41:15), and a day of distress where strength fails (Prov 24:10). Spanish estrecho and German eng confirm the spatial constriction. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: is-cramped, narrow, narrow- | es: apretado, estrecha, estrecho | fr: Tyr, ennemi, est-cramped | de: Bedraenger, [צר], [צרה] Num 22:26; 2Kgs 6:1; Job 41:15; Prov 23:27; Prov 24:10

2. adversary, foe (1×) Substantivized use as a noun meaning adversary, opponent, or foe — one who constricts or oppresses. In Isaiah 59:19 the tsar is the enemy who comes like a rushing river, against whom the Spirit of the LORD raises a standard. German Bedraenger ('oppressor') and Hindi shatru ('enemy') clearly mark the personal-adversarial reading, distinct from the spatial adjective. The semantic bridge from 'narrow, pressing' to 'one who presses against you' is natural in Hebrew, where the same root tsar-resh generates both physical and relational distress. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: adversary | es: angosto | fr: Tyr | de: Bedraenger Isa 59:19

צַר H6862b Prep-m / Adj-ms (27×)

Straits, distress, or anguish; also a personal adversary or enemy who causes affliction

Rooted in the idea of narrowness and constriction, this noun most often describes the abstract condition of distress, trouble, or anguish – the tight place from which one cries out to God. The psalmists use it repeatedly: 'In my distress I called upon the LORD' (2 Sam 22:7 / Ps 18:6). Hindi 'sankat' and Arabic 'diq' both capture this sense of being hemmed in. A secondary but important sense denotes a personal adversary or enemy – the one who causes the constriction. In Ps 60:11 and 108:12, the cry for help 'from the adversary' shows the word shading from abstract trouble into a concrete foe. Korean uses distinct terms: 'hwannan' for distress versus 'daejeok' for adversary, confirming the semantic split.

1. distress, anguish, trouble (24×) The abstract condition of distress, anguish, or affliction – being in straits or a tight place. Often paired with prepositions ('in distress,' 'from distress') to describe circumstances of trouble from which one cries to God for deliverance. Hindi 'sankat,' Arabic 'diq,' and Swahili 'dhiki' all convey the constriction metaphor. Key passages: 2 Sam 22:7, Ps 32:7, Job 15:24, Isa 5:30. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress, distress-, from-distress | es: Angustia, angustia, angustia- | fr: Tyr, [בצר], adversaire | de: Bedraenger, Bedrängnis, Bedrängnis- Deut 4:30; 2Sam 22:7; 2Chr 15:4; Job 7:11; Job 15:24

2. adversary, enemy (3×) A personal adversary, opponent, or hostile foe – the concrete agent of distress rather than the state itself. Multilingual evidence confirms this distinction: Korean uses 'daejeok' (adversary) versus 'hwannan' (trouble), and Hindi uses 'shatru/dushman' (enemy). In Ps 60:11 and 108:12, the plea for divine help 'from the adversary' clearly identifies a personal enemy, as does 1 Sam 2:32. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress, from-distress, from-the-adversary | es: angustia, angustia-de, el-adversario | fr: de-adversaire, détresse | de: distress, von-Bedrängnis, von-der-Widersacher 1Sam 2:32; Ps 60:11; Ps 108:12

צַר H6862c Adj-ms (75×)

Adversary, foe, or oppressor; also narrowness or distress as an abstract state of affliction.

Derived from the root tsarar ('to press, squeeze, be narrow'), this word most frequently identifies a personal or national enemy — someone who presses in upon another with hostile intent. Esther dramatically unmasked Haman as 'this wicked adversary' (Est 7:6), and the Psalms repeatedly cry out against 'my adversaries' (Ps 3:1; 27:2). In a handful of passages the same form shifts to the abstract sense of distress or straits, reflecting the root's core meaning of constriction. The Arabic cognate diq ('narrowness') preserves this abstract dimension, while most translations render the personal sense with words like 'enemy' or 'foe.'

1. adversary, enemy, foe (69×) A hostile person, opponent, or national enemy who presses against or oppresses another. Across

69 occurrences, translations consistently use adversary-type glosses: Spanish 'adversario,' German 'Feind/Widersacher,' French 'adversaire/ennemi.' Abraham's victory delivered his enemies into his hand (Gen 14:20), and Israel was to sound trumpets against the adversary pressing upon them (Num 10:9). The substantival use often appears in construct chains — 'adversaries of Israel' (Ezra 4:1) — or with possessive suffixes expressing personal hostility. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: adversaries-of, adversary, enemy | es: a-sus-adversarios, adversario, adversarios-de | fr: Tyr, adversaire, ennemi | de: Bedraenger, der-Feind, der-Widersacher Gen 14:20; Num 10:9; Deut 32:41; 1Chr 12:18; 1Chr 21:12

2. distress, trouble, straits (6×) A state of anguish, constriction, or hardship — the abstract dimension of the root's meaning of narrowness. Appearing in about 6 passages, the evidence shows translations splitting between adversary language and distress language: Spanish 'angustia,' French 'détresse,' while German sometimes renders 'Not.' David chose to fall into God's hand rather than face human distress (2 Sam 24:14; 1 Chr 21:13), and Jephthah confronted the elders who came to him only in their time of trouble (Judg 11:7). DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: adversaries-by-, distress, distress- | es: angustia, angustia-, angustia-para | fr: Tyr, adversaire, détresse | de: Bedraenger, Not, Tyrus Judg 11:7; 1Sam 13:6; 2Sam 24:14; 1Chr 21:13; Job 36:16

צַר H6862d Prep-k (1×)

flint, hard stone/pebble

This noun denotes flint or hard stone, appearing only in Isaiah 5:28. The prophet uses it in a simile describing the Assyrian army's readiness—their horses' hoofs are hard 'like flint.' This comparison emphasizes strength, durability, and perhaps the ability to strike sparks. Flint's hardness made it valuable for both tools and metaphorical imagery. Some suggest reading it as 'rock' more generally, but 'flint' captures the specific connotation of exceptional hardness and the capacity to endure without wearing down.

(1×) Refers to flint or very hard stone, used in Isaiah 5:28 to compare the hardness of invading horses' hoofs. The simile emphasizes the enemy's preparedness and durability—hoofs hard as flint that won't wear down or crack even on long campaigns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-the-flint | es: como-pedernal | fr: [כצר] | de: [כצר] Isa 5:28

צֵר H6863 N-proper-fs (1×)

Zer (fortified city in Naphtali's territory)

This place name identifies one of the fortified cities in Naphtali's tribal allotment. Joshua 19:35 lists it among the fortified settlements assigned to this northern tribe. The name appears to be a shortened form, possibly meaning 'rock' or 'flint,' though this remains uncertain. The Greek translation rendered it 'Tyre,' but this was likely a confusion rather than indicating the famous coastal city. The actual location of Zer remains unknown, though it was clearly significant enough to be listed among Naphtali's fortified urban centers.

(1×) Name of a fortified city in Naphtali's territory, listed in Joshua 19:35 among the fortified settlements assigned to this tribe. Though its precise location is unknown, it was apparently significant enough to warrant mention among Naphtali's defended urban centers. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tser | es: Ser | fr: Tser | de: Tser Josh 19:35

צֹר H6864 Prep-m / N-ms (2×)

flint; a hard, sharp-edged stone used for cutting implements and symbolizing hardness

This noun denotes flint rock prized in the ancient world for its sharp edges and durability. It appears in Exodus where Moses' wife uses a flint knife for circumcision, and in Ezekiel where God makes the prophet's forehead harder than flint, symbolizing unyielding resolve against rebellious Israel. The term emphasizes flint's qualities: extremely hard, capable of holding a keen edge, and superior to softer stones. Flint knives remained in ritual use even after bronze and iron became common, preserving ancient practices. The metaphorical usage builds on flint's legendary hardness.

(2×) Exodus 4:25 employs the construct form 'flint of' (flint knife), while Ezekiel 3:9 uses the comparative 'harder than flint' (than rock). Spanish distinguishes 'pedernal' (the stone itself) from the comparative construction. The Exodus passage preserves archaic ritual practice where Zipporah performs emergency circumcision with a stone blade, reflecting flint's enduring role in sacred procedures. Ezekiel's metaphor requires flint's proverbial hardness as the standard exceeded by divine empowerment. BDB notes flint's use in compound constructions like 'swords of flint' (Joshua 5:2-3), emphasizing its essential role in ancient tool-making before metal working advanced. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flint, than-rock | es: más-que-pedernal, pedernal | fr: de-Tyr, flint | de: [מצר], flint Exod 4:25; Ezek 3:9

צֹר H6865 Prep-k / N-proper-fs (42×)

Tyre — the great Phoenician coastal city, renowned for trade, maritime power, and Tyrian purple

Tsor (also vocalized Tsur) is the Hebrew name for Tyre, the island-fortress city on the Phoenician coast that dominated Mediterranean commerce for centuries. Its 42 occurrences span historical narrative, prophetic oracle, and poetry. In the Davidic-Solomonic period, Tyre is an ally: Hiram of Tyre supplies cedar and craftsmen for the Temple (2 Sam 5:11; 1 Kgs 5:1; 7:13). But the prophets turn Tyre into an emblem of mercantile hubris: Amos condemns its slave trade (1:9-10), Isaiah pronounces a massa ('oracle') against it (ch. 23), and Ezekiel devotes three chapters (26-28) to its fall, including the haunting dirge over the 'ship of Tyre.' Psalm 45:13 personifies the city as bat-Tsor ('daughter of Tyre') bringing gifts.

Tyre (city) (42×) The proper noun Tsor/Tsur, the Phoenician coastal city famed for maritime commerce and craftsmanship. Appears as Israel's trading partner under Hiram (2 Sam 5:11; 1 Kgs 5:1) and as target of prophetic judgment for arrogance (Amos 1:9-10; Isa 23; Ezek 26-28). Called mivtsar-Tsor ('fortress of Tyre,' 2 Sam 24:7). Attested in Assyrian as Surru. TYRE CITY NAME

en: Tsor, Tyre | es: Tiro, Tsor | fr: Tsor, Tyr, adversaire | de: Bedraenger, Tsor, Tyrus Josh 19:29; 2Sam 5:11; 2Sam 24:7; 1Kgs 5:1; 1Kgs 7:13

צָרַב H6866 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (1×)

be scorched, burned, singed

This verb in its Niphal form means to be scorched or burned. Ezekiel 21:3 (20:47 in English) uses it in a prophecy against the land, declaring that all faces will be scorched by fire. The context is divine judgment pictured as an unquenchable fire consuming the land from south to north. The passive voice emphasizes that this scorching happens to people—they are the recipients of burning judgment, not the agents. The imagery is vivid and terrifying, depicting comprehensive judgment that spares no one.

(1×) In the Niphal stem, means to be scorched or burned, used in Ezekiel 20:47 where the prophet declares judgment on the land—all faces will be scorched by the divine fire of judgment that will sweep through the territory, affecting everyone from south to north. BURNING AND FIRE

en: and-shall-be-scorched- | es: y-se-quemarán | fr: et-amonceler | de: [ונצרבו] Ezek 20:47

צָרֵב H6867a Adj-fs (1×)

scorching, burning (of fire or words)

This adjective describes something scorching or burning hot. Proverbs 16:27 uses it metaphorically, comparing a worthless person's speech to 'scorching fire'—his words burn and destroy. The simile connects verbal destructiveness to the pain of burning. Just as scorching fire chars and damages whatever it touches, so malicious speech wounds and harms. The feminine form fits with 'fire,' emphasizing the burning, searing quality of both literal flames and figurative speech that burns like fire.

(1×) Adjective meaning scorching or burning, used in Proverbs 16:27 to characterize destructive speech. The text compares the words of a worthless person to 'scorching fire,' emphasizing how harmful speech burns and wounds like literal flames searing flesh. BURNING AND FIRE

en: scorching | es: abrasador | fr: צרבת | de: [צרבת] Prov 16:27

צָרֶבֶת H6867b N-fsc (2×)

scar (of a boil or burn); the healed-over mark left by a skin inflammation or burn wound

This medical term describes the scarred-over remains of a boil or burn, appearing in Levitical diagnostic procedures for skin conditions. Both occurrences distinguish between active spreading disease and benign scarring. The construct form 'scar of the boil' and 'scar of the burn' specifies the original wound type. The root meaning involves 'burning' or 'scorching,' extended to the permanent mark left after healing. Priestly examination determined whether skin discoloration was merely scar tissue (ritually clean) or active צָרַעַת (often translated 'leprosy,' ritually unclean).

(2×) Leviticus 13:23 addresses 'scar of the boil,' while 13:28 concerns 'scar of the burn,' both in parallel diagnostic scenarios. The construct relationship 'scar of X' (tserebet ha-shechin, tserebet ha-mikvah) specifies the wound source. Spanish 'cicatriz de,' French 'scar de,' German 'scar von' all preserve this genitive construction. The context in both verses reaches the same priestly verdict: 'it is (merely) the scar of the boil/burn' rather than spreading skin disease. This represents the benign diagnosis in Levitical purity law, distinguishing healed tissue from active infection requiring quarantine. The term is narrowly medical, specific to dermatological evaluation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: scar-of | es: cicatriz-de | fr: scar-de | de: scar-von Lev 13:23; Lev 13:28

צְרֵדָה H6868 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Tseredah, Tseredatah; a town associated with Jeroboam's origin and bronze-casting, possibly in the Jordan valley

This place name appears in two forms marking the same or closely related locations. It identifies Jeroboam's hometown in 1 Kings and appears as Tseredatah in 2 Chronicles' account of Solomon's bronze-working in the Jordan valley. The variation between forms may reflect dialectical differences or textual transmission. The Septuagint renderings (Sarira, Sariada) show ancient uncertainty about the precise vocalization. BDB cross-references suggest connection with Tsarthan/Tsererah, all possibly denoting sites in the Jordan valley where clay soil enabled large-scale metal casting.

(2×) The 1 Kings 11:26 occurrence identifies Jeroboam's maternal hometown with the definite article ('the Tseredah'), while 2 Chronicles 4:17 locates bronze-casting activity at Tseredatah. Spanish preserves both forms (Sereda/Tseredatá), as do French and German with slight variation. The Chronicles passage pairs it with Succoth in describing where Hiram cast bronze implements 'in the clay ground between Succoth and Tseredatah.' This geographical-industrial context suggests Jordan valley location where suitable clay for casting molds was available. The name functions purely as geographical identifier, marking both personal origin and manufacturing site. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tseredatah, the-Tseredah | es: Tseredatá, la-Sereda | fr: [צרדתה], le-Tseredah | de: [צרדתה], der-Tseredah 1Kgs 11:26; 2Chr 4:17

בַּצָּרָה H6869a N-fs (2×)

distress, destitution, dearth; times of extreme scarcity or hardship, possibly linked to drought

This rare term denotes periods of severe want and trouble. It appears in two parallel psalms describing God's absence in 'times of distress' and once in Jeremiah's heading concerning droughts. The root may relate to concepts of scarcity, reduction, or diminishment. The Psalms passages question why God seems distant during crises, while Jeremiah employs the plural to introduce prophetic oracles about severe water shortage. Some lexical traditions connect it to Aramaic and Syriac terms for smallness or reduction, suggesting the narrowing of resources during famine or drought.

(2×) Psalm 9:9 and 10:1 use the identical phrase 'times of distress' (ittot batstsarah), questioning divine hiddenness during crisis. Spanish 'angustia' (anguish), French 'détresse,' German 'Trübsal' (tribulation) all point to severe trouble. The Jeremiah occurrence is textually uncertain (BDB notes it as dub.), possibly meaning 'droughts' or 'dearths.' The psalmic context emphasizes temporal markers: these are specific periods when trouble intensifies and God's presence feels withdrawn. Unlike the common tsarah (trouble), this rarer form may carry connotations of material scarcity rather than general affliction, though the semantic boundary is fluid. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION en: trouble | es: angustia, angustia? | fr: dans-détresse | de: Trübsal Ps 9:9; Ps 10:1

צָרָה H6869b Prep-m / N-fp (70×)

Distress, trouble, affliction — personal or national hardship (singular); concrete instances of repeated troubles or adversities (plural).

The feminine noun tsarah, from the root meaning 'to be narrow, constricted,' evokes the visceral experience of being hemmed in by adversity. In its singular form (57 occurrences), it names the existential state of distress — Jacob's anguish over Joseph's apparent death (Gen 42:21), Hezekiah's 'day of distress' under Assyrian siege (2 Kgs 19:3), and the Psalms' repeated cry 'in the day of my trouble' (Ps 77:3; 86:7). German Bedrängnis ('constriction') captures the root metaphor beautifully, while Spanish angustia and French detresse both echo the Latin root for narrowness. The plural form tsarot (13 occurrences) shifts from state to enumeration — multiple afflictions piling up, as in 'many are the troubles of the righteous, but the LORD delivers him from them all' (Ps 34:17-18). This singular-to-plural movement is not merely grammatical; it marks a shift from one overwhelming pressure to a life-pattern of serial adversity.

1. distress, trouble (57×) The state or condition of distress, affliction, or trouble experienced as a singular pressing reality — personal anguish, national crisis, or existential hardship. With 57 occurrences, this sense appears in Jacob's recognition of Joseph's 'distress of soul' (Gen 42:21), the phrase 'in the day of my distress' (Gen 35:3; Ps 77:3; 86:7), the Israelites crying to God 'in the time of their trouble' (Judg 10:14), and the prophetic 'day of distress' passages (Nah 1:7; Zeph 1:15). German Bedrängnis and Trübsal capture the sense of being pressed in, Spanish angustia conveys the constriction metaphor, and French détresse tracks the English 'distress' closely. The singular form emphasizes trouble as an encompassing condition rather than a countable event. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress, of-distress, of-trouble | es: angustia | fr: [צרה], détresse | de: Bedraengnis, Bedrängnis, Trübsal Gen 35:3; Gen 42:21; Judg 10:14; 1Sam 26:24; 2Sam 4:9

2. troubles, afflictions (13×) Concrete, repeated instances of trouble and affliction — the plural tsarot referring to multiple distresses experienced over time or a catalog of adversities. With 13 occurrences, this sense surfaces in Moses' warning that 'many troubles and afflictions will come upon them' (Deut 31:17, 21), Samuel's charge that Israel has 'added to all your sins the evil of asking for a king, in all your troubles' (1 Sam 10:19), Job 5:19 ('in six troubles he will deliver you'), and the Psalms' striking declaration 'the troubles of my heart have enlarged' (Ps 25:17) and 'many are the troubles of the righteous' (Ps 34:19). Spanish angustias (plural), French détresses, and German Bedrängnisse all shift to plural morphology. The distinction from sense 1 is not merely grammatical: the plural conveys a pattern of serial or accumulated hardships rather than a single overwhelming crisis. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: and-troubles, and-your-troubles, from-troubles | es: angustias, angustias-de, de-angustias | fr: dans-détresse, de-détresse, détresse | de: Bedraengnis, der-troubles-von, ihr-troubles Deut 31:17; Deut 31:21; 1Sam 10:19; Job 5:19; Ps 25:17

צָרָה H6869c N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

rival wife, co-wife (in polygamous household)

This feminine noun designates a rival wife in a polygamous household. 1 Samuel 1:6 uses it to describe Peninnah's relationship to Hannah—she was her rival wife or co-wife. The term inherently carries connotations of tension and competition, as multiple wives competed for their husband's attention and favor, particularly regarding children. The root suggests vexing or distressing, appropriate for a relationship characterized by jealousy and rivalry. Peninnah's provocation of the childless Hannah exemplifies the painful dynamics this noun encapsulates.

(1×) Denotes a rival wife or co-wife in polygamous marriage, used in 1 Samuel 1:6 to describe Peninnah's relationship to Hannah. The term emphasizes the competitive, adversarial nature of their relationship —Peninnah used her fertility to provoke and distress the barren Hannah, illustrating the painful rivalries common in polygamous households. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: her-rival | es: su-rival | fr: sa-rival | de: ihr-rival 1Sam 1:6

צְרוּיָה H6870 N-proper-ms (26×)

Zeruiah — David's sister (or half-sister), mother of the warriors Joab, Abishai, and Asahel

Tseruyah is known almost entirely through her famous sons: Joab, David's ruthless general; Abishai, the loyal bodyguard; and Asahel, the fleet-footed warrior slain by Abner. Her 26 occurrences appear overwhelmingly in the construct phrase 'son(s) of Zeruiah,' functioning nearly as a patronymic — unusual in a patrilineal culture, which may suggest her husband was obscure or deceased. According to 1 Chronicles 2:16 she was David's sister, making her sons the king's nephews, a kinship that gave them privileged access to power yet also made their violent independence a constant political headache. David's exasperated cry 'What have I to do with you, O sons of Zeruiah?' (2 Sam 16:10; 19:22) has become proverbial for the tension between royal authority and uncontrollable kinsmen. Spanish renders the name 'Sarvia,' French 'Tseruja,' and German 'Zeruja.'

Zeruiah (26×) A Hebrew proper name designating the mother of Joab, Abishai, and Asahel, and sister of David (1 Chr 2:16). Nearly all 26 occurrences use the construct 'son(s) of Zeruiah' as a virtual patronymic — the maternal identification being unusual and possibly hinting at an absent or unknown father. The phrase colors the Davidic narrative with a recurrent motif of fierce loyalty mixed with insubordination (2 Sam 2:13, 18; 3:39; 16:10; 19:22). The LXX renders her name Sarouia. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tseruyah, Zeruiah | es: Sarvia, Seruya, Tseruya | fr: Tseruja, [צרויה] | de: Tseruyah, Zeruiah, Zeruja 1Sam 26:6; 2Sam 2:13; 2Sam 2:18; 2Sam 3:39; 2Sam 8:16

צְרוּעָה H6871 N-proper-fs (1×)

Zeruah (mother of King Jeroboam I)

This personal name identifies the mother of Jeroboam I, the first king of the northern kingdom after Solomon's united monarchy split. 1 Kings 11:26 provides this maternal reference, noting she was a widow. In ancient Israel, identifying someone through their mother was less common than through their father, making such references notable. The name itself may connect to roots suggesting affliction or leprosy, though this remains uncertain. Her widowhood and her son's rise to kingship from non-royal origins are significant details in Jeroboam's narrative.

(1×) Name of Jeroboam I's mother, mentioned in 1 Kings 11:26. The text specifically notes she was a widow, marking her son's non-royal origins before his rebellion against Solomon and establishment of the northern kingdom of Israel. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tseruah | es: Zerua | fr: Tseruah | de: Tseruah 1Kgs 11:26

צְרוֹר H6872a Prep-b / N-msc (7×)

Bundle, parcel (bound items); bag, pouch, purse (container for valuables)

The noun צְרוֹר names something bound up, and its two senses pivot on what is bound and why. As a bundle it denotes items tied together — bundles of money discovered in the brothers' sacks (Gen 42:35), or the beloved compared to a bundle of myrrh (Song 1:13). As a bag or pouch it names a container for safekeeping — a purse of money taken on a journey (Prov 7:20), a bag with a hole that leaks away wages (Hag 1:6), or the sealed bag in which God stores up transgression (Job 14:17). Arabic surra and Hindi gathri confirm the 'bundle' sense, while Arabic kis and Hindi thaili point distinctly to 'bag' or 'purse.'

1. bundle, parcel (4×) A bundle or parcel — items tied or wrapped together into a single unit. The brothers find bundles of money in their grain sacks (Gen 42:35, appearing twice in the verse), and Abigail promises David that his life will be 'bound in the bundle of the living' with the LORD (1 Sam 25:29) — one of the most beloved metaphors in the Hebrew Bible, still recited in Jewish memorial prayers. The beloved is 'a bundle of myrrh' in Song 1:13. Arabic surra (bundle), Korean mukkeum (tied bundle), and Spanish bolsa de all point to bound items rather than an empty container. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bundle-of, bundle-of-, bundles-of | es: Bolsita-de, bolsa-de, bolsas-de | fr: Sachet, bundle-de-, bundles-de | de: Beutel, [צרור], die-Beutel Gen 42:35; 1Sam 25:29; Song 1:13

2. bag, pouch, purse (3×) A bag, pouch, or purse — a container designed to hold valuables, especially money. Job 14:17 pictures transgression sealed in a bag (hatom bi-tsror), Proverbs 7:20 describes a man taking a bag of money on his journey, and Haggai 1:6 memorably warns of earning wages only to put them in a bag full of holes. Arabic kis (purse) and Hindi thaili (pouch) distinctly mark the container sense, as opposed to the bound-collection meaning. The difference is subtle but real: sense 1 is defined by what is gathered together; sense 2 is defined by the vessel that holds things. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bag-of, bag, in-bag | es: bolsa, bolsa-de, en-bolsa | fr: dans-בצרור, sachet, צרור | de: [בצרור], [צרור] Job 14:17; Prov 7:20; Hag 1:6

צְרוֹר H6872b N-ms (2×)

pebble, small stone; possibly metaphorical for grain kernel in agricultural winnowing imagery

This term denotes small stones or pebbles, appearing in one literal and one debated metaphorical context. In 2 Samuel it describes dragging a city's stones into a valley, while Amos uses it in contested agricultural imagery about God winnowing Israel—either a grain kernel retained in a sieve or a pebble that doesn't fall through. The semantic range spans literal small rocks to possible metaphorical use for small valuable items preserved from loss. Commentators divide on whether Amos intends agricultural or lithic imagery.

(2×) The 2 Samuel 17:13 occurrence clearly means literal pebbles/stones dragged by ropes, while Amos 9:9 is interpretively contested. Spanish shows this divergence: 'piedra' (stone) versus 'un grano' (a grain), reflecting the agricultural interpretation. French and German preserve 'pebble,' supporting the literal stone reading. Some scholars argue Amos metaphorically depicts Israel as grain winnowed but not lost, with tsror representing the valuable kernel retained; others see it as the worthless pebble caught in the sieve while grain falls through. The agricultural context favors grain imagery, but the word's primary meaning is clearly small stone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pebble | es: piedra, un-grano | fr: sachet, un-pebble | de: [צרור], ein-pebble 2Sam 17:13; Amos 9:9

צְרוֹר H6872c N-proper-ms (1×)

Zeror (Benjaminite ancestor of Saul, Kish's grandfather)

This personal name appears in Saul's genealogy as his great-grandfather. 1 Samuel 9:1 traces Saul's lineage back through Kish (his father), Abiel, Zeror, and Becorath to Aphiah—all Benjaminites. Such genealogical details established Saul's tribal credentials and family standing within Benjamin. The name may derive from roots suggesting binding or package, though the significance is unclear. These ancestral names anchored Israel's first king within Benjamin's tribal structure, providing legitimacy and context for his selection.

(1×) Personal name of Saul's great-grandfather in the Benjaminite lineage. 1 Samuel 9:1 includes Zeror in the genealogy that establishes Saul's tribal pedigree, tracing his family line back through several generations of Benjaminite ancestors. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zeror | es: Tzeror | fr: Zeror | de: Zeror 1Sam 9:1

צָרַח H6873 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (2×)

to cry out, roar; to utter a loud, fierce shout, especially in battle or alarm

This verb describes intense vocal outcry, whether divine war shout or human distress. Isaiah depicts the Lord 'crying out' as He advances to battle, parallel to shouting the war cry. Zephaniah's usage is textually problematic but apparently describes a warrior's roar on the Day of the Lord. The root emphasizes raw, powerful vocalization rather than articulate speech—the roar of a combatant or the cry of one in extreme circumstance. Cognates in Aramaic and Syriac suggest raven-like harsh cries, while Assyrian parallels confirm the loud-proclamation sense.

(2×) Isaiah 42:13 uses the Hiphil 'He cries out' (yatsriach) parallel to 'He shouts,' describing Yahweh as divine warrior uttering battle roars. Zephaniah 1:14 employs a disputed form, possibly describing a hero's bitter roar. Spanish 'vociferará/gritando' (will shout/shouting), French 'crier,' German transliterations all point to loud vocal expression. The Isaiah context pairs this with 'He stirs up zeal' and 'He prevails against His enemies,' framing the cry as pre-battle intimidation or war shout. This is not distressed pleading but fierce, aggressive vocalization—the roar that terrifies opponents and rallies warriors. The term captures combat acoustics. CALLING AND NAMING en: He-cries-out, cries-out | es: gritando, vociferará | fr: [יצריח], crier | de: [יצריח], [צרח] Isa 42:13; Zeph 1:14

צְרִי H6874 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zeri (Levitical musician, son of Jeduthun)

This personal name identifies one of the Levitical musicians appointed by David for temple worship. 1 Chronicles 25:3 lists Zeri among the sons of Jeduthun who prophesied with lyres, harps, and cymbals. The same individual appears as Izri in verse 11, reflecting variant spellings of the same name. These musicians weren't merely performers but participated in prophetic worship—using music as a vehicle for inspired praise. Zeri/Izri was assigned the third lot in the organization of temple musicians.

(1×) Name of a Levitical musician, son of Jeduthun, listed in 1 Chronicles 25:3 among those appointed for prophetic musical ministry in the temple. Also called Izri in verse 11, he headed the third division of musicians in David's organized worship. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Tseri | es: y-Zeri | fr: [וצרי] | de: [וצרי] 1Chr 25:3

צֳרִי H6875 Art / N-ms (6×)

Balm, aromatic healing resin from Gilead; traded as merchandise and used metaphorically for spiritual remedy.

An aromatic resin or balm, probably from the mastic or balsam tree, closely associated with the region of Gilead. Traded as a valuable commodity — the Ishmaelite caravan carrying Joseph to Egypt bore tsori among its wares (Gen 37:25), and Jacob sent it as a gift to the Egyptian ruler (Gen 43:11). In Jeremiah, the balm of Gilead becomes one of Scripture's most memorable metaphors: 'Is there no balm in Gilead?' (Jer 8:22) — a rhetorical question lamenting that spiritual healing is available yet refused. Ezekiel 27:17 lists it among Judah's exports to Tyre.

balm, healing resin (6×) An aromatic resin or balm, valued for its medicinal and healing properties, produced in or associated with Gilead. English 'balm,' Spanish 'bálsamo,' and French 'baume' all point to a fragrant medicinal substance. It appears as a trade good in the patriarchal narratives (Gen 37:25, carried by Ishmaelite merchants; Gen 43:11, sent as a gift to Egypt) and among Judah's exports to Tyre (Ezek 27:17). Its most theologically resonant use is in Jeremiah's lament: 'Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there?' (Jer 8:22; cf. 46:11; 51:8), where the physical remedy becomes a metaphor for spiritual healing that remains tragically unapplied. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: Is-there-no-balm, and-balm, balm | es: bálsamo, y-bálsamo, ¿Acaso-bálsamo | fr: [הצרי], [צרי], baume | de: Balsam, [הצרי], [וצרי] Gen 37:25; Gen 43:11; Jer 8:22; Jer 46:11; Jer 51:8

צֹרִי H6876 Conj-w (5×)

Tyrian; of or belonging to Tyre, a Phoenician coastal city

A gentilic adjective identifying someone or something as belonging to Tyre, the great Phoenician port city. It appears in connection with Hiram, the skilled craftsman 'a Tyrian man' who worked on Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:14; 2 Chr 2:14). The plural 'the Tyrians' designates the people of Tyre who supplied cedar timber for David and Solomon (1 Chr 22:4; Ezra 3:7) and who traded fish in Jerusalem on the Sabbath to Nehemiah's displeasure (Neh 13:16). Spanish 'tirios' and French/German transliterations all point to the same well-known mercantile identity.

(5×) A gentilic adjective meaning 'of Tyre' or 'Tyrian,' used as both an adjective describing individuals (1 Kgs 7:14, the craftsman Hiram) and a substantive noun for the inhabitants of Tyre collectively (1 Chr 22:4; Ezra 3:7; Neh 13:16). The Tyrians consistently appear as suppliers of materials and goods, reflecting Tyre's role as a major Mediterranean trading power. Spanish 'tirios' and 'de Tiro' both render the ethnic designation clearly. TYRE CITY NAME

en: and-the-Tyrians, and-to-the-Tsorians, of-Tsor | es: Y-los-tirios, de-Tiro, y-a-los-tirios | fr: [והצרים], [ולצרים], [צרי] | de: [והצרים], [ולצרים], [צרי] 1Kgs 7:14; 1Chr 22:4; 2Chr 2:14; Ezra 3:7; Neh 13:16

צְרִיחַ H6877 N-msc (4×)

stronghold, underground chamber, fortified place of refuge

A term of uncertain meaning, likely designating either a stronghold, fortified place, or possibly an underground chamber or cave used as refuge. Judges 9:46, 49 mention the 'stronghold of the temple of El-berith' where Shechemites took shelter (unsuccessfully) from Abimelech. First Samuel 13:6 lists it among various hiding places where Israelites fled from the Philistines (caves, thickets, rocks, tombs, cisterns). Ancient versions translated it as 'stronghold' or 'tower,' but the exact architectural referent remains uncertain.

(4×) Judges 9:46 and 9:49 both reference the 'stronghold of the house/temple of El-berith' (צְרִיחַ בֵּית אֵל בְּרִית) where the leaders of Shechem took refuge before Abimelech burned it down. First Samuel 13:6 lists 'caves, thickets, rocks, tombs, and underground chambers' (צְרָחִים) as hiding places. Spanish fortaleza/torres (fortress/towers) and French forteresse reflect the defensive, refuge function whether above-ground strongholds or underground shelters. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: and-in-the-strongholds, stronghold-of, the-stronghold | es: fortaleza-de, la-fortaleza, y-en-las-torres | fr: et-dans-le-strongholds, forteresse-de, le-forteresse | de: Festung-von, der-Festung, und-in-der-strongholds Judg 9:46; Judg 9:49; 1Sam 13:6

צָרְכִּי H6878 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

need, requirement, necessity

This Aramaic noun means need or requirement. It appears only in 2 Chronicles 2:16 (2:15 in English) where Hiram of Tyre responds to Solomon's request for timber, promising to supply wood 'according to all your need.' The term emphasizes adequacy and completeness—Hiram would provide whatever amount Solomon required, not a predetermined quantity but enough to meet the full scope of the construction project. The Aramaic vocabulary reflects the international diplomatic correspondence between these kingdoms.

(1×) Aramaic term for need or requirement, used in 2 Chronicles 2:16 where King Hiram promises Solomon he will provide timber 'according to all your need'—emphasizing that he will supply whatever quantity the temple construction requires, not merely a fixed amount but enough to meet the complete requirement. NECESSITY AND NEED en: your-need | es: tu-necesidad | fr: [צרכך] | de: [צרכך] 2Chr 2:16

צָרַע H6879 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (20×)

To be afflicted with a skin disease (leprosy); as substantive, a leper; as adjective, leprous.

A denominative verb from צָרַעַת (skin disease, traditionally 'leprosy'), used exclusively in passive forms to describe someone struck with this condition. The Qal passive participle (צָרוּעַ) and Pual participle (מְצֹרָע) serve interchangeably as both adjectives and substantives — 'leprous' and 'leper.' The word carries enormous ritual weight: the מְצֹרָע must live outside the camp, cry 'unclean!' (Leviticus 13:45-46), and undergo elaborate purification rites (Leviticus 14). The narratives of Naaman (2 Kings 5), Uzziah (2 Chronicles 26:20-23), and the four lepers at Samaria's gate (2 Kings 7:3) make this condition one of the Bible's most vivid symbols of both affliction and divine sovereignty.

1. leprous person, leper (17×) A person afflicted with a serious skin disease — the substantive use, 'a leper.' This covers the majority of occurrences. In Leviticus 14:2, 'the law of the leper' (תּוֹרַת הַמְּצֹרָע) establishes the purification ritual. Naaman is described as a 'leper' (2 ,מְצֹרָע Kings 5:1) despite being a powerful Syrian commander — the social irony heightening the narrative. The four lepers of 2 Kings 7:3 (מְצֹרָעִים) are outcasts at the city gate who become unlikely agents of salvation. Spanish 'leproso' and French 'lépreux' both preserve the substantive force. LEPROSY SKIN DISEASE en: a-leper, and-the-diseased, diseased | es: Y-el-tsarua, al-leproso, el-metsorá | fr: diseased, est-lépreux, et-le-diseased | de: [מצורע], [מצרע], aussaetzig-eins Lev 13:44; Lev 13:45; Lev 14:2; Lev 14:3; Lev 22:4

2. leprous, diseased (of body part) (3×) Leprous, diseased — the adjectival use, typically in feminine singular form describing a body part afflicted with skin disease. The paradigmatic instance is Exodus 4:6, where Moses' hand becomes 'leprous like snow' (מְצֹרַעַת כַּשָּׁלֶג) as a sign of divine power. Numbers 12:10 uses the same form twice when Miriam is struck with disease 'leprous like snow' as punishment for challenging Moses. The feminine form (מְצֹרַעַת) applied to the hand (יָד, feminine) distinguishes this adjectival usage from the substantive 'leper' applied to persons. LEPROSY SKIN DISEASE

en: leprous | es: leprosa, leprosa: | fr: lépreux | de: aussaetzig, leprous Exod 4:6; Num 12:10

צִרְעָה H6880 Art / N-fs (3×)

hornet; a stinging insect sent by God as a weapon against Israel's enemies

The hornet appears as a divine weapon—God promises to send hornets ahead of Israel to drive out the Canaanites. Exodus 23:28 and Deuteronomy 7:20 present this as part of the conquest strategy: the Lord will send the hornet before the people to expel inhabitants. Joshua 24:12 recalls the fulfillment: 'I sent the hornet before you.' Whether literal insects or a metaphor for terror and panic, the hornet represents God's active intervention dismantling enemy resistance. The definite article ('the hornet') suggests a known phenomenon or symbol of divine judgment.

(3×) All three occurrences present the hornet as God's agent in conquest. Exodus and Deuteronomy promise its future deployment, while Joshua looks back at its past effectiveness. The cross-linguistic unanimity ('hornet', 'avispón', 'Hornisse') supports a literal insect, though interpretive debate continues whether this is metaphorical for panic, disease, or actual swarms. The singular 'the hornet' (collective) functions as a military ally—God's unconventional weapon that succeeds where human armies might fail. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: the-hornet | es: avispa, el-avispón, la-avispa | fr: le-hornet | de: der-hornet Exod 23:28; Deut 7:20; Josh 24:12

צָרְעָה H6881 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (10×)

Zorah; a Danite city in the Shephelah of Judah, birthplace of Samson and staging ground for the Danite migration.

Zorah (also Tsorah or Tzorah) was a town in the Shephelah about fifteen miles west of Jerusalem, assigned to both Judah (Josh 15:33) and Dan (Josh 19:41). It is best known as the home of Manoah, Samson's father (Judg 13:2), and the place where the Spirit of the LORD first began to stir the young Samson (Judg 13:25). Samson was buried there between Zorah and Eshtaol (Judg 16:31). The town also served as the launching point for the Danite spies and migration (Judg 18:2, 8, 11), and Rehoboam later fortified it (2 Chr 11:10).

Zorah (place name) (10×) Zorah (tsorah), a city in the Shephelah (lowland hills) of Judah, identified with modern Sar'a about fifteen miles west of Jerusalem. Listed among Judah's inheritance (Josh 15:33) yet assigned to Dan (Josh 19:41), it occupies a borderland position. Its primary biblical significance is as the home of Samson: his father Manoah was from Zorah (Judg 13:2), the Spirit of the LORD stirred him there (Judg 13:25), and he was buried 'between Zorah and Eshtaol' (Judg 16:31). It also served as the base for the Danite reconnaissance and migration (Judg 18:2, 8, 11). Rehoboam fortified it as a defense city (2 Chr 11:10), and returnees resettled there after the exile (Neh 11:29). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsorah, Zorah, and-Tzorah | es: Sorá, Zora, a-Zora | fr: Tsorah, Tsorea, [וצרעה] | de: Tsorah, Zorah, [וצרעה] Josh 15:33; Josh 19:41; Judg 13:2; Judg 13:25; Judg 16:31

צָרְעָתִי H6882 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

Zorathite/Zoreite; gentilics identifying members of clans associated with Zorah in Judah

These related gentilics identify clan groups connected to Zorah, a town in Judah's tribal territory. First Chronicles 2:53-54 and 4:2 list the Zorathites and Zoreites among Judah's families descended through Shobal and related lines. The two forms (Zorathite/Zoreite) appear to designate the same or closely related groups from the Zorah region, though the textual relationship remains unclear. The definite article ('the Zorathites') marks these as known collective entities within Judah's genealogical structure. This is genealogical and geographical identification—clan names deriving from place names.

(3×) The three references list these clans within Chronicles' extensive genealogies of Judah. The bracketed forms in German and French signal the variant spellings (צרעי vs. צרעתי), likely representing the same basic gentilic with morphological variation. These families inhabited or originated from the Zorah area (later famous as Samson's hometown). The Spanish 'los tsoreatitas' renders as plural collective, recognizing these as clan designations. The names anchor families to territory, preserving memory of geographical-genealogical identity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Tsor'athi, the-Tsor'i | es: los-tsoreatitas | fr: [הצרעי], [הצרעתי] | de: [הצרעי], [הצרעתי] 1Chr 2:53; 1Chr 2:54; 1Chr 4:2

צָרַעַת H6883 N-fsc (35×)

tsara'at — a ritually defiling skin disease (also affecting garments and houses) requiring priestly diagnosis

Tsara'at is the technical term for the ritually significant condition traditionally rendered 'leprosy,' though modern scholarship recognizes it as a broader category of skin afflictions distinct from Hansen's disease. Its 35 occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in Leviticus 13-14 (29 times), where the Priestly code prescribes painstaking diagnostic procedures and purification rituals involving the priest, cedarwood, scarlet yarn, and hyssop. Outside the law codes, the word appears in the Naaman narrative (2 Kgs 5:3-27), where the Aramean general's healing becomes a sign of YHWH's power beyond Israel's borders. Remarkably, tsara'at can also afflict garments (Lev 13:47-59) and house walls (Lev 14:34-53), likely describing mold or fungus. Spanish and German renderings — 'tsaraat,' 'Haut-Krankheit' — reflect the modern move away from 'leprosy.'

skin disease / leprosy (tsara'at) (35×) A ritually defiling condition requiring priestly inspection and elaborate purification rites. In Leviticus 13-14, the priest examines skin lesions for color, depth, and spread to pronounce tameh or tahor (Lev 13:2-8). Naaman's healing (2 Kgs 5:1-14) and Gehazi's punishment (2 Kgs 5:27) illustrate its narrative role. Extended to garments (Lev 13:47) and house walls (Lev 14:34), probably denoting mold or fungus. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY

en: skin-disease, skin-disease-of | es: Tsaraát, tsaraát, tsaraát-de | fr: maladie-de-peau, peau-maladie-de | de: Haut-Krankheit, Haut-Krankheit-von Lev 13:2; Lev 13:3; Lev 13:8; Lev 13:9; Lev 13:11

צָרַף H6884 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf.h-1cs / 3mse (34×)

To smelt, refine, purify; of metallurgy and of God testing character; as participle, a goldsmith or refiner.

Tsaraph sits at the intersection of craft and theology. In its literal sense it describes the ancient metalworker's art of smelting ore and refining precious metals — removing dross by fire to produce pure silver or gold. But the biblical writers seized on this image as the supreme metaphor for divine testing: just as the refiner's fire reveals what is genuine, so God 'refines' his people through trial and affliction. The metaphor is so deeply embedded that the participial form can mean either 'goldsmith' (the craftsman in Nehemiah's wall-building crew) or 'refiner' (the divine agent in Malachi's temple). The passive participle yields one of the Bible's most memorable descriptions of Scripture itself: 'The words of the LORD are pure words, refined silver, purified seven times' (Ps 12:6). Spanish distinguishes fundidor ('smelter/caster') from refinador ('refiner') and probado ('tested'), tracing exactly the semantic development from craft to character.

1. goldsmith, silversmith (artisan) (11×) Qal participle as substantive: goldsmith, silversmith, metalworker — 11 occurrences identifying professional artisans. Micah's mother gives silver to a tsoreph to cast an idol (Judg 17:4); the goldsmiths repair sections of Jerusalem's wall alongside perfumers and merchants (Neh 3:8, 32); and the idol-maker overlays his image with gold while the tsoreph solders chains (Isa 40:19; 41:7; 46:6). Spanish orfebres ('goldsmiths') and fundidor ('smelter') both appear, while Proverbs 25:4 uses the image of removing dross 'for the silversmith' to bridge the literal craft with the moral metaphor. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: a-goldsmith, and-a-goldsmith, casting | es: al-fundidor, de-los-orfebres, funde | fr: [הצרפים], [צורפים], et-purifier | de: [הצרפים], [צורפים], laeutern Judg 17:4; Neh 3:8; Neh 3:32; Prov 25:4; Isa 40:19

2. refine, smelt, purify (10×) Qal active: to refine, smelt, or purify metals or people by fire — 10 occurrences covering both literal metallurgy and its figurative extension to divine purification. God declares 'I will smelt away your dross' (Isa 1:25); 'I have refined you, though not as silver' (Isa 48:10); and 'I am refining them and testing them' (Jer 9:7). The imperative in Psalm 26:2 — 'refine me, O LORD, and test me' — uses the verb as a prayer invitation. Spanish refinar and French affiner both select purification vocabulary, while German laeutern carries the dual sense of cleansing and improving that matches the Hebrew precisely. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: I-have-refined-you, [ketiv], am-refining-them | es: [qere], como-refinar-, como-se-refina | fr: affiner, comme-affiner, et-purifier | de: [ketiv], [וצרפתים], [כצרף] Ps 26:2; Ps 66:10; Isa 1:25; Isa 48:10

3. refined, pure (state) (5×) Qal passive participle: refined, pure, proven — 5 occurrences describing the resultant state of completed purification. God's word is tsaruf, 'refined' (2 Sam 22:31; Ps 18:30; Prov 30:5), and the psalmist declares God's promises 'exceedingly pure' (Ps 119:140). The iconic Psalm 12:6 compares divine speech to 'silver refined in a furnace, purified seven times.' Spanish purificada and probada ('proven') both appear, while the shift from process to state marks a genuine semantic boundary — this is not refining-in-progress but verified purity. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: is-refined, refined | es: Probada, purificada, refinada | fr: affiner, refined, צרופה | de: [צרופה], ist-refined, refined 2Sam 22:31; Ps 12:6; Ps 18:30; Ps 119:140; Prov 30:5

4. test, try, prove (4×) Qal with metaphorical extension: to test, try, prove a person's character — 4 occurrences where the metallurgical image is fully transferred to moral testing. God 'tested' Joseph through the word that came to him (Ps 105:19); 'You have tested me' (Ps 17:3); 'You have refined us as silver is refined' (Ps 66:10). The Gideon narrative uses the verb for God 'testing' warriors at the water (Judg 7:4). Spanish probó ('tested') and German geprüft ('examined') both shift from craft to character-assessment vocabulary, and the preposition shift from literal fire to figurative trial confirms a distinct though related sense. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: You-refined-us, and-I-will-test-him, tested-him | es: lo-probó, me-has-refinado, nos-refinaste | fr: affiner, et-je-sera-éprouver-lui | de: du-haben-geprüft-mich, du-refined-uns, geprüft-ihn Judg 7:4; Ps 17:3; Ps 66:10; Ps 105:19

5. refiner, purifier (agent) (3×) Piel participle and Qal infinitive absolute: the refiner as agent, one who purifies — 3 occurrences, concentrated in the prophetic vision of Malachi 3:2-3, where the messenger of the covenant 'is like a refiner's fire' and 'will sit as a refiner and purifier of silver.' Jeremiah 6:29 uses the infinitive absolute tsaroph to describe the failed attempt to refine Israel. Spanish refinador ('refiner') and French purifier ('purifier') both use agent-noun or process-focused vocabulary, and the Malachi passage in particular has become the definitive biblical image of divine purification — patient, seated, watching until the reflection appears. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: refiner, refining | es: el-fundidor, refinador | fr: purifier | de: laeutern, von-laeuterte Jer 6:29; Mal 3:2; Mal 3:3

6. (1×) Niphal or Hitpael reflexive: to be refined, to purify oneself — a single occurrence at Daniel 12:10, in the apocalyptic promise that 'many shall purify themselves and make themselves white and be refined.' Spanish serán refinados ('they will be refined') and French purifier both use passive or reflexive forms. This end-times usage extends the metallurgical metaphor to eschatological purification, where the testing fires of history produce a people fit for the age to come. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: and-be-refined | es: y-serán-refinados | fr: et-purifier | de: und-laeutern Dan 12:10

צֹרְפִי H6885 Art / N-ms (1×)

goldsmith, metalworker (as collective guild designation)

This noun designates goldsmiths or metalworkers as a collective group or guild. Nehemiah 3:31 mentions 'son of the goldsmiths'—meaning a member of the goldsmith guild. In post-exilic Jerusalem, craftsmen organized into professional guilds for economic and social purposes. This phrase indicates guild membership rather than actual biological descent. The goldsmith mentioned was helping rebuild Jerusalem's walls, showing how various trade guilds contributed to the restoration project. Such professional designations reflected the organized structure of Jerusalem's artisan community.

(1×) Collective noun for goldsmiths as a professional guild, appearing in Nehemiah 3:31 in the phrase 'son of the goldsmiths'—meaning a member of the goldsmith guild. This designation shows how post-exilic Jerusalem's craftsmen organized into trade associations, with guild members contributing to the wall rebuilding project. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: the-goldsmith | es: el-orfebre | fr: [הצרפי] | de: [הצרפי] Neh 3:31

צָרְפַת H6886 N-proper-fs / 3fs (3×)

Zarephath; coastal Phoenician town between Sidon and Tyre, where Elijah stayed with a widow

Zarephath was a Phoenician coastal city south of Sidon where Elijah found refuge during the drought. First Kings 17:9-10 describes God directing Elijah to go to Zarephath, where a widow would sustain him —leading to the miracles of unending oil and the widow's son raised from death. Obadiah 20 prophesies that exiles of Israel will possess Phoenician territory 'as far as Zarephath.' The site is identified with modern Sarafand in Lebanon. The town became emblematic of God's care extending beyond Israel's borders, as Jesus later recalled in Luke 4:26.

(3×) Two contexts define Zarephath: Elijah's sojourn there (1 Kings 17:9-10) and prophetic hope of territorial expansion (Obadiah 20). The widow of Zarephath becomes a model of faith and hospitality, sustaining the prophet during famine and receiving her son back from death. The directional suffix in some forms (Zarephath-ah, toward Zarephath) indicates movement toward the city. Cross-linguistic renderings are consistent (Sarepta, Tsarfat), recognizing this as a significant location in Elijah's ministry and prophetic geography. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsarfatah, Zarephath | es: Sarepta, a-Tsarfat | fr: Sarepta,, Tsarfatah | de: Sarepta, Tsarfatah 1Kgs 17:9; 1Kgs 17:10; Obad 1:20

H6887 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

distress, cause distress, be in straits

This verb means to be in distress or to cause distress, appearing in Lamentations 1:20's poignant cry of personified Jerusalem. The context is intense anguish—'my stomach churns, my heart is turned within me, for I have been very rebellious.' The verb can function transitively (causing distress) or intransitively (being distressed). Here Jerusalem experiences overwhelming distress, both emotional and physical, acknowledging this suffering as consequence of rebellion. The term conveys constriction, being pressed into narrow straits with no room for relief.

(1×) Means to be in distress or experience anguish, used in Lamentations 1:20 where personified Jerusalem cries out about her inner turmoil and suffering. The verb conveys the experience of being pressed into straits, constricted by overwhelming trouble with no escape or relief. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress | es: angustia | fr: Tyr | de: [צר] Lam 1:20

צוּר H6887a Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

to bind up, tie up securely; to wrap or confine something for safekeeping or transport

This verb describes securing valuables by binding or wrapping them, distinct from its homonym meaning 'to besiege.' Both occurrences involve tying up silver or precious items for secure transport. In Deuteronomy, Israelites too far from the sanctuary are to convert tithes to money and 'bind it up' for the journey. In 2 Kings, Naaman's servants tie up talents of silver in bags. The action emphasizes careful securing of valuable cargo, preventing loss or theft during travel. The verb pictures bundling, wrapping, or knotting for confinement.

(2×) Deuteronomy 14:25 instructs 'you shall bind up (the silver) in your hand,' while 2 Kings 5:23 describes 'he bound up two talents of silver in two bags.' Spanish uses 'atarás/ató' (you will tie/he tied), French 'tu devra lier/lié' (you shall tie/tied), German 'binden/bound,' all confirming the binding action. Both contexts involve money being secured for transport: tithe-silver traveling to Jerusalem, and Naaman's generous payment being packaged. The 2 Kings passage specifies containers (bags), while Deuteronomy uses the idiomatic 'bind in your hand' (under your control). This is practical securing of valuables, not metaphorical binding. BINDING BY VOW

en: and-bound, and-you-shall-bind-up | es: y-atarás, y-ató | fr: et-lié, et-tu-devra-lier-en-haut | de: und-bound, und-du-soll-binden-hinauf Deut 14:25; 2Kgs 5:23

צָרַר H6887b Conj-w (22×)

To bind, tie up, wrap; to be narrow or in distress; in Hifil, to cause distress or besiege; in passive, to be bound up or confined.

Tsarar is one of Hebrew's most versatile roots, spanning the physical act of binding and wrapping all the way to the deeply personal experience of distress and constriction. The semantic bridge is intuitive: to be 'bound' is to be 'narrowed,' and to be 'narrowed' is to be 'in straits.' Abigail's memorable prayer that David's life be 'bound in the bundle of the living' with Yahweh (1 Sam 25:29) captures the root's positive potential — binding as protective enclosure. But more often, tsarar describes the painful tightening of circumstances: Saul in desperate straits before the battle of Gilboa (1 Sam 28:15), David crying 'I am in distress' (2 Sam 1:26; Ps 31:9), and the prophetic warnings of siege and military constriction (Deut 28:52). The Hifil causative concentrates the agency: God or enemies actively 'cause distress' — a theological claim about the source of suffering. Languages handle the range differently: Arabic distinguishes darra ('bind') from dayq ('narrowness'), while Korean splits between mukda ('to tie') and gotonghada ('to suffer').

1. cause distress, besiege (Hifil) (7×) The Hifil causative sense of actively causing distress, bringing trouble, or besieging — 7 occurrences where an agent (God, enemies, or circumstances) inflicts constriction upon others. Deuteronomy 28:52 warns that the enemy 'shall besiege you in all your gates'; 2 Chronicles 33:12 records that when God 'caused distress' to Manasseh, he humbled himself; Nehemiah 9:27 recounts the cycle of deliverance. Spanish angustiar ('to cause anguish'), German bedrängen ('to press upon'), and Arabic yudayyiqu ('to narrow/constrict upon') all select causative-affliction vocabulary, confirming the Hifil's distinctive agentive force. The theological pattern is striking: distress is instrumentalized as a means of correction. DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS

en: and-I-will-bring-distress-on, and-I-will-cause-distress, and-distresses | es: Y-angustiaré, Y-te-sitiará, angustiar | fr: [הצר], [והצרותי], [והצרתי] | de: [הצר], [והצרותי], [והצרתי] Deut 28:52; 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 28:22; 2Chr 33:12

2. be narrow, be in distress (Qal stative) (5×) The Qal stative/intransitive sense of being narrow, constricted, or in distress — 5 occurrences describing the experiential state of someone pressed by circumstances. Saul tells Samuel 'I am in great distress' (1 Sam 28:15); David laments 'I am distressed for you, my brother Jonathan' (2 Sam 1:26); the Psalmist cries 'be gracious to me, for I am in distress' (Ps 31:9; 69:17). German Bedrängnis, Spanish angustia, Arabic diq, and Korean goeropda all select stative 'affliction/anguish' vocabulary rather than active binding terms. Isaiah 28:20 gives a vivid physical image: the bed is 'too narrow' to stretch out on — the literal spatial constriction that metaphorically underlies all distress. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress, distress-is-, distressed | es: Angustia, angustia, angustia- | fr: adversaire, distressed, détresse | de: Bedrängnis, Bedrängnis-ist-, [צרה] 1Sam 28:15; 2Sam 1:26; Ps 31:9; Ps 69:17; Isa 28:20

3. bind, wrap up, tie (Qal active) (5×) The Qal active/transitive sense of physically binding, wrapping, or tying up — 5 occurrences focused on concrete acts of enclosure. God 'binds up' waters in thick clouds (Job 26:8; Prov 30:4); Isaiah 8:16 commands 'bind up the testimony'; Hosea 4:19 describes the wind wrapping someone in its wings. Spanish atar ('to tie'), English 'bind/wrap,' and Arabic rabata ('to bind') all use physical-binding vocabulary. Abigail's theology of the 'bundle of the living' (1 Sam 25:29) may echo this concrete sense even though its occurrence is classified under the passive. BIND WRAP TIE

en: Has-wrapped, bind-up, binding-up- | es: Ata, Atando-, Ató | fr: [צור], assiéger, comme-assiéger | de: [כצרור], [צור], [צרר] Job 26:8; Prov 26:8; Prov 30:4; Isa 8:16; Hos 4:19

4. be bound, shut up (Qal passive) (4×) The Qal passive participle sense of being bound, shut up, or confined — 4 occurrences describing the resultant state after binding. Israel's kneading troughs were 'bound up' in their garments at the Exodus (Exod 12:34); David's life is 'bound in the bundle of the living' with God (1 Sam 25:29); David's concubines were 'shut up' until their death (2 Sam 20:3); Ephraim's iniquity is 'bound up,' stored for future reckoning (Hos 13:12). Spanish atado/atada, English 'bound,' and German gebunden all use passive participles mirroring the Hebrew morphology. The range from protective storage (Exodus, 1 Samuel) to punitive confinement (2 Samuel, Hosea) shows how the passive state can be either blessing or curse depending on context. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: bound, bound-up, is-bound-up | es: atada, atadas, atado | fr: [צרור], ferma-en-haut, lia-en-haut | de: [צרור], band-hinauf, bound Exod 12:34; 1Sam 25:29; 2Sam 20:3; Hos 13:12

5. patched, mended (Pual) (1×) A single Pual (passive-intensive) occurrence in Joshua 9:4 describing the Gibeonites' wineskins as 'patched' or 'mended' — that is, bound up and repaired. Spanish remendados ('patched'), English 'patched,' and the broader multilingual evidence (Hindi bandhi hui, Arabic muraqqaa) all select mending/repair vocabulary rather than general binding or distress terms. The intensive-passive stem specializes the binding root into a craft action: sewing or tying together torn material. This hapax within the stem pattern confirms a distinct artisanal sub-sense at the periphery of the root's range. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: and-patched | es: y-remendados | fr: et-patched | de: und-patched Josh 9:4

צָרַר H6887c V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fs (2×)

in labor, in travail; experiencing the distress and pain of childbirth

This denominative Hiphil verb specifically describes the anguish of a woman in labor, used metaphorically for warriors overcome by terror. Both occurrences employ the identical simile: 'heart of a woman in labor,' depicting the sudden, overwhelming fear that grips Moabite/Edomite warriors when judgment arrives. The feminine participle metseirah captures the active state of laboring, the acute distress phase of childbirth. This draws on universal human experience of labor pain as a metaphor for inescapable, intensifying anguish that cannot be evaded or delayed.

(2×) Jeremiah 48:41 and 49:22 employ parallel constructions: 'heart of a woman in labor' (leb ishah metseirah) describing Moab's and Edom's warriors at conquest. Spanish 'angustiada' (distressed), French and German transliterations preserve the labor imagery. The simile compares military panic to birth pangs—sudden onset, mounting intensity, inability to escape. This is feminine-specific language (feminine participle) applied metaphorically to male warriors, leveraging childbirth as the supreme image of unavoidable pain. The term is narrowly focused on parturition distress, not general trouble, making the military metaphor especially vivid and unmanning for warrior imagery. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: in-labor | es: angustiada | fr: [מצרה] | de: [מצרה] Jer 48:41; Jer 49:22

צָרַר H6887d V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (25×)

To show hostility toward, harass; as participle: an adversary, foe, one who oppresses or distresses

A verb rooted in the Semitic concept of enmity and harm (cf. Arabic darra, Ethiopic tsarera), used both as a substantivized participle meaning 'adversary, foe' and as a finite verb meaning 'to harass, distress.' In Esther, the participial noun identifies Haman as the Jews' enemy (Esth 3:10; 9:24), while in Numbers the verbal forms command Israel to 'harass' the Midianites in retaliation (Num 25:17-18). The Spanish translations helpfully distinguish the nominal sense (enemigo, adversario) from the verbal action (hostiga, opresor), confirming the two-sense split.

1. adversary, foe, enemy (18×) The substantivized Qal participle functioning as a noun: 'adversary, foe, enemy.' Appears with pronominal suffixes (my adversary, your adversary) and in construct chains (adversary of). Spanish enemigo-de and German Widersacher consistently render this as a personal opponent. Dominant in Esther (3:10; 8:1; 9:10, 24) identifying Haman, and in Psalms and prophetic texts identifying national or personal foes (Exod 23:22; Ps 129:1). ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: Your-adversaries, adversaries-of, adversary-of | es: a-mi-adversario, enemigo-de, los-que-angustian | fr: adversaire, ennemi, opprimer | de: adversaries-of, bedraengte, dein-Widersacher Exod 23:22; Esth 3:10; Esth 8:1; Esth 9:10; Esth 9:24

2. to harass, distress, oppress (7×) The verbal action of harassing, distressing, or oppressing, attested in finite forms (perfect, imperfect, infinitive absolute). Spanish hostiga and French harass capture the active, ongoing nature of the hostility. Key passages include the command to harass the Midianites (Num 25:17), the warning that Canaanite remnants will harass Israel (Num 33:55), and the psalmist's lament that enemies have oppressed him from youth (Ps 129:1-2). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-they-shall-harass, harass, harassing | es: Hostiga, el-opresor, hostigan | fr: [יצר], et-ils-devra-harass, harass | de: bildete, der-eins-oppressing, harass Num 10:9; Num 25:17; Num 25:18; Num 33:55; Ps 129:1

צָרַר H6887e Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

make a rival wife, take as co-wife

This denominative verb means to make someone a rival wife—to take a woman as a co-wife to another. Leviticus 18:18 uses it in prohibiting a man from marrying his wife's sister during the wife's lifetime 'to make her a rival.' The Torah recognizes the inherent conflict in such arrangements, forbidding this particular configuration even while polygamy was permitted. The verb's existence reflects the social reality of polygamous marriages and the rivalry dynamics they produced, as seen in Hannah and Peninnah's relationship.

(1×) Denominative verb meaning to take as a rival wife or make into a co-wife, used in Leviticus 18:18 in the prohibition against marrying a wife's sister during the wife's lifetime. The verb recognizes that taking such a second wife creates a rivalry situation, and this particular family configuration is forbidden. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: to-be-rival | es: para-rivalizar | fr: à-être-rival | de: zu-sein-rival Lev 18:18

צְרֵרָה H6888 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Zererah (location in Israel, possibly textually corrupt for Zarethan)

This place name appears only in Judges 7:22, describing the Midianites' flight after Gideon's victory. The text says they fled 'toward Zererah, as far as the edge of Abel-meholah.' Most scholars consider this name textually corrupt, likely originally reading 'Zarethan' (a known location) or 'Zeredah.' The Septuagint's rendering differs significantly, suggesting early textual uncertainty. Despite the uncertain reading, it clearly designates a location in the Jordan valley toward which the routed Midianite army fled.

