To live, be alive; to revive, restore to life; to keep alive, spare; to recover from illness

The fundamental Hebrew verb of vitality and life-force, spanning the full arc from mere survival to miraculous resurrection. In its Qal stem it describes the ordinary state of being alive (Gen 5:3ff, the genealogical 'and he lived'), while its Piel and Hifil stems move into causative territory — reviving the dead (1 Sam 2:6), preserving the living (Gen 6:19–20), and healing the sick (2 Kgs 20:7). Arabic distributes these senses across distinct roots — 'asha for living, ahya for reviving, shafiya for healing — whereas Hebrew holds them all in a single verb, underscoring the biblical conviction that all life flows from one source.

1. Qal: live, be alive (177×) The broadest and most frequent sense (177x): to live, be alive, continue in existence. Arabic 'asha/yahya and Swahili -ishi render the basic state. The Genesis genealogies ('and Adam lived 930 years,' Gen 5:5) and covenantal promises ('that you may live,' Deut 30:16) exemplify this as the default, unmarked meaning of the Qal stem. LIFE AND LIVING
en: And-lived, And-lived-, and-lived | es: Y-vivió, Y-vivió- | fr: Et-vécut, Et-vécut-, et-vécut | de: und-lebte, und-lebte- Gen 5:3; Gen 5:6; Gen 5:7; Gen 5:9; Gen 5:10

2. Piel: revive, give life to (30×) Piel intensive-causative (30x): to revive, restore to life, give life. Arabic ahya/yuhyi and Korean sallida capture the causative force. Hannah's song ('the LORD kills and makes alive,' 1 Sam 2:6) and the theological declaration of Deut 32:39 define this as a uniquely divine prerogative — only God vivifies. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: You-have-revived-me, [ketiv:will-revive-us], and-he-raised-it | es: [nos-vivificarás], a-vivificarnos, das-vida | fr: et-il-éleva-cela, vivre | de: leben, lebte, und-er-erhob-es Deut 32:39; 1Sam 2:6; 2Sam 12:3; 1Kgs 20:31; 1Chr 11:8

3. Hifil: keep alive, preserve alive (25×) Hifil causative (25x): to keep alive, preserve from death, save life. Arabic abqa and Swahili -okoa focus on preservation. Noah's ark mandate ('to keep them alive,' Gen 6:19–20) and Joseph's revelation ('God sent me to preserve life,' Gen 45:7) show this sense operating in salvation-history narratives. LIFE AND LIVING
en: I-would-have-let-live, and-let-live, and-to-keep-alive | es: dejó-vivir, dio-vida, ha-mantenido-vivo | fr: et-que-vivre, et-tu-devra-garder-vivant, et-vivre | de: bewahrte-lebendig, du-hast-uns-am-Leben-erhalten, er-hatte-revived Gen 6:19; Gen 6:20; Gen 7:3; Gen 19:19; Gen 45:7

4. Piel: let live, keep alive, spare (25×) Piel with permissive or preservative nuance (25x): to let live, spare from death, keep alive by deliberate choice. Arabic istahya/abqa and Korean sallyeoduda distinguish this from sense 2 by emphasizing the decision not to kill. The midwives' defiance of Pharaoh (Exod 1:17–18) and Lot's daughters' plan (Gen 19:32, 34) are key passages where moral agency is foregrounded. LIFE AND LIVING
en: and-keep-alive, and-keep-him-alive, and-let-us-preserve | es: criará, de-jaba-vivo, dejaron-vivas | fr: avoir-tu-laisse-vivre, et-garde-vivant, et-ils-que-vivre | de: du-soll-lass-leben, er-lebt, haben-du-lass-leben Gen 12:12; Gen 19:32; Gen 19:34; Exod 1:17; Exod 1:18

5. Qal: recover from illness (6×) Qal with specific reference to recovery from illness (6x): to recover, be restored to health. Arabic shafiya ('to be healed') and Swahili -pona ('to recover') isolate a medical register. Hezekiah's anxious inquiry 'Shall I recover?' (2 Kgs 8:8–9) and his actual healing (2 Kgs 20:7) ground this sense in royal sickness narratives. LIFE AND LIVING
en: I-shall-recover, and-he-lived, and-lived | es: su-sanarse, viviré, y-sanó | fr: et-il-vécut, et-vivre, fera-je-recouvre | de: ich-soll-genese, sie-recovered, und-er-lebte Josh 5:8; 2Kgs 1:2; 2Kgs 8:8; 2Kgs 8:9; 2Kgs 20:7

6. Qal: revive, come back to life (2×) Qal denoting revival from a death-like state (2x): to come back to life, revive. Arabic hayiya and Swahili -fufuka ('to resurrect') capture the dramatic return. Jacob's spirit 'revived' upon hearing Joseph was alive (Gen 45:27), and Samson revived after God split the rock at Lehi (Judg 15:19) — both are moments of unexpected restoration. LIFE AND LIVING
en: and-revived | es: y-revivió, y-vivió | fr: et-ranima, et-revived | de: und-belebte, und-es-lebte-auf Gen 45:27; Judg 15:19

7. (1×) A single disputed occurrence at Ezek 13:18 where the object is not physical life but possibly souls ensnared by false prophetesses. English 'for yourselves' and Spanish 'para vosotras' diverge from the usual life-vocabulary, suggesting the verb may function idiomatically or that the text preserves an unusual construction tied to sorcery discourse. SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-yourselves | es: para-vosotras | fr: vivre | de: leben Ezek 13:18

חָיָה H2422 Adj-fp (1×)

lively, vigorous (of Hebrew women in childbirth, Exodus 1:19)

This adjective means 'lively' or 'vigorous,' describing physical vitality and energy. Exodus 1:19 uses it of Hebrew women who give birth quickly and easily before the midwives can arrive. The term emphasizes robust health and the vigor of life, particularly in contexts requiring physical strength or stamina.

(1×) Found exclusively in Exodus 1:19 describing Hebrew women's childbirth vitality. The feminine plural form paired with the explanation that they give birth before midwives arrive shows this means 'vigorous' or 'having life-force.' Multilingual renderings (Spanish 'vigorosas,' English 'lively') agree on robust vitality enabling rapid delivery. POWER AND ABILITY
en: lively | es: vigorosas | fr: lively | de: lively Exod 1:19

חֵיוָא H2423 N-fp (20×)

Beast, animal (Aramaic) — used in Daniel for literal beasts and apocalyptic creatures

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew חַיָּה, this noun appears exclusively in the book of Daniel, where it carries both literal and visionary force. In the narrative sections, it denotes wild animals of the field to whom Nebuchadnezzar was driven (Dan 4:12–23; 5:21). In the apocalyptic visions of chapter 7, it describes the four great beasts rising from the sea — composite creatures symbolizing successive empires (Dan 7:3–23). German simply renders 'Tier/Tiere,' Spanish 'bestia,' and French 'bêtes,' all capturing the same broad sense of 'beast.'

beast, animal (Aramaic) (20×) An Aramaic noun (חֵיוָה / חֵיוָא) meaning 'beast' or 'animal,' covering both literal wildlife and symbolic apocalyptic creatures. In Dan 4, it refers to the beasts of the field under whose shade Nebuchadnezzar dwelt during his madness; in Dan 7, it designates the four visionary beasts representing world empires. German 'Tier,' Spanish 'bestia,' and French 'bêtes' all translate uniformly, confirming a single lexical sense across literal and figurative registers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beast, beasts, beasts-of | es: La-bestia, a-la-bestia, bestia | fr: [חיוה], [לחיותא], bêtes | de: Tier, Tiere, die-Tiere Dan 2:38; Dan 4:12; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:16

חִיּוּת H2424 N-fs (1×)

living widowhood (the state of grass-widows, 2 Samuel 20:3)

This abstract noun describes the peculiar state of 'living widowhood' - women whose husbands are alive but from whom they are permanently separated. Second Samuel 20:3 uses it of David's concubines who were violated by Absalom and then secluded for life. The phrase literally means 'widowhood of livingness,' capturing the paradox of being functionally widowed while the husband lives.

(1×) Appears only in 2 Samuel 20:3 describing the permanent isolation of David's concubines. The phrase 'widowhood of living' (Spanish 'de-vida,' French 'de-vivant') captures their liminal status - neither truly widows nor wives. The Septuagint 'living widows' reflects the same concept: socially and sexually isolated despite their husbands' survival. LIVING CREATURES

en: of-living | es: de-vida | fr: de-vivant | de: von-lebend 2Sam 20:3

חָיָה H2425 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (20×)

To live, be alive, remain alive — the basic Hebrew verb for possessing or sustaining life

The fundamental Hebrew verb for being alive and continuing in life. Its semantic range extends from sheer biological existence to the theological promise of life as divine gift. God warns Moses that no one can see his face and live (Exod 33:20); the tree of life would let humanity live forever (Gen 3:22); the patriarchal summaries record how long each figure lived (Gen 5:5; 25:7). In prophetic contexts, Jeremiah promises that those who surrender to Babylon 'shall live' (Jer 21:9; 38:2) — survival as covenant mercy. Spanish renders 'vivió/vivo,' German 'er lebte/lebendig,' confirming the consistent core meaning across all occurrences.

live, be alive (20×) Qal form of חָיָה: to live, be alive, remain alive, or continue living. Covers biological life (Gen 5:5, patriarchal lifespans), divine warning about the limits of mortal encounter with God (Exod 33:20, 'no man shall see me and live'), and prophetic promises of survival through obedience (Jer 21:9; 38:2). French 'et-il-devra-vivre' and German 'lebendig' both reflect the adjectival-verbal overlap inherent in this root, which can express both the state of being alive and the action of continuing to live. LIFE AND LIVING
en: alive, and-he-lives, and-he-shall-live | es: vivió, vivo, y-viva | fr: [וחי], et-elle-vies, et-il-devra-vivre | de: [וחי], er-lebte, lebendig Gen 3:22; Gen 5:5; Gen 25:7; Exod 1:16; Exod 33:20

חֵל H2426 N-ms (19×)

Army or military force; rampart, fortification wall, or bulwark of a city; strength, might, or vital force.

Chel (or chayil in this form) carries a martial double life: it names both the army that besieges a city and the rampart that defends it. As a military term (11 occurrences), it appears in accounts of Tou sending his son to David 'with his army' (2 Sam 8:9; 1 Chr 18:9) and the Syrian army coming against Judah (2 Chr 24:23). Spanish ejército and German Heer capture this organized-force sense. As a fortification term (6 occurrences), it denotes the outer wall or rampart: 'He stretched the line over the rampart and the wall' in the lament over Jerusalem (Lam 2:8), and the psalmist blesses Zion with 'peace within your ramparts' (Ps 122:7). Spanish baluarte/muralla and German Wall shift to architectural vocabulary. A residual sense of raw 'strength' or 'force' bridges the two, as in the dispatching of the army's 'force' (1 Chr 20:1) and the helpless whom the wicked crush (Ps 10:10).

1. army, military force (11×) An army, military force, or organized body of troops — soldiers assembled for war or dispatched on campaign. This dominant sense (11 occurrences) surfaces in historical narratives: Tou king of Hamath sends his son to David 'with his entire army' (2 Sam 8:9; 1 Chr 18:9), Sennacherib sends his commander 'with a great army' against Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18:17), and the Syrian force comes against Judah (2 Chr 24:23-24). Spanish ejército, French armée, and German Heer all converge on the organized military unit. The phrase 'army of' plus a king's name becomes a formulaic construction in the historical books. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-army-of, army-of, his-army | es: con-ejército, ejército-de, ejército-de-él | fr: armée, armée-de, avec-armée | de: Heer-von, Kraft, [בחיל] 2Sam 8:9; 2Kgs 18:17; 1Chr 18:9; 2Chr 16:7; 2Chr 24:23

2. rampart, fortification wall (6×) A rampart, bulwark, or outer fortification wall surrounding a city or stronghold. Six occurrences concentrate in poetic and prophetic texts: Joab besieges Abel and batters 'the rampart' (2 Sam 20:15), Isaiah declares 'God will appoint salvation as walls and rampart' (Isa 26:1), Lamentations mourns that the LORD 'caused rampart and wall to lament' (Lam 2:8), and the pilgrim psalm blesses Zion, 'Peace be within your ramparts' (Ps 122:7). Spanish baluarte/muralla, French rempart, and German Wall/Festung distinguish this from the military sense. Zechariah 9:4 pictures God striking Tyre's sea-rampart — her maritime defenses reduced to nothing. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: against-the-rampart, and-rampart, in-rampart-of | es: el-baluarte, en-el-muro, en-muralla-tuya | fr: [וחל], [חל], contre-le-rampart | de: [וחל], [חיל], [חל] 2Sam 20:15; 1Kgs 21:23; Ps 122:7; Isa 26:1; Lam 2:8

3. strength, might, force (2×) Strength, might, or vital force in an abstract or general sense — the raw power behind armies and walls. Two occurrences preserve this root meaning: Joab leading out 'the force of the army' at the turn of the year (1 Chr 20:1), and the enigmatic Psalm 10:10, where the helpless 'fall by his strength.' Spanish fuerza and German Kraft shift to power vocabulary. This sense may represent the semantic core from which both the military and architectural meanings derive — chel as concentrated force, whether in soldiers or in stone. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: force-of, the-helpless | es: ejército-de, fuerza-de | fr: armée, rempart | de: Kraft, der-hilflos 1Chr 20:1; Ps 10:10

חִיל H2427a N-ms (6×)

Writhing pain, anguish, or birth-pangs — severe physical or emotional distress likened to labor.

A noun denoting sharp, convulsive pain — whether the physical contortions of fear or the anguish of labor. Its most vivid usage compares military or national dread to the pangs of a woman in childbirth (Ps 48:6; Mic 4:9; Jer 6:24; 50:43). In Exodus 15:14, it describes the writhing terror that seized the nations at news of Israel's deliverance. The birth-pang metaphor recurs so consistently that the word almost always evokes labor imagery.

pain, anguish, birth-pangs (6×) Writhing pain, anguish, or birth-pangs — intense physical or emotional distress. Spanish 'dolor' and French 'angoisse' both capture the core sense of acute suffering. At the Exodus, peoples writhed in fear (Exod 15:14). Allied kings attacking Jerusalem seized up 'like a woman in labor' (Ps 48:6). Zion writhes before Assyria (Mic 4:9), and Judah and Babylon alike suffer anguish compared to childbirth (Jer 6:24; 22:23; 50:43). The simile 'like a woman giving birth' is almost formulaic with this noun. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: anguish, pain | es: dolor | fr: angoisse, force, mur | de: Heer, [חיל], anguish Exod 15:14; Ps 48:6; Jer 6:24; Jer 22:23; Jer 50:43

חִילָה H2427b Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

anguish, pain (physical or emotional distress, Job 6:10)

This feminine noun means 'anguish' or 'pain,' appearing only in Job 6:10. In context, Job speaks of finding comfort even in unrelenting pain, suggesting intense suffering. The term likely describes either physical agony or deep emotional torment, fitting Job's broader lament about his afflictions.

(1×) Occurs exclusively in Job 6:10 in Job's expression of suffering. The prepositional phrase 'in pain' (Spanish 'en-dolor,' English 'in-pain') describes the arena of Job's potential comfort. The rare usage and poetic context suggest intense anguish, whether physical torment from his disease or emotional agony from his losses. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: in-pain | es: en-dolor | fr: dans-בחילה | de: [בחילה] Job 6:10

חַיִל H2428 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (234×)

Army, military force; valor, bravery; wealth, riches; strength, power, might; ability, competence, virtue.

One of the Hebrew Bible's most versatile nouns, chayil radiates outward from a core idea of vigorous capacity. It names the massed army that Pharaoh loses in the sea (Exod 14:28), the heroic valor of a gibbor chayil (mighty warrior, Judg 6:12), the material wealth God gives power to produce (Deut 8:18), and the moral excellence of the eshet chayil, the 'woman of virtue' in Proverbs 31:10. Arabic splits these senses cleanly — جيش for army, شجاعة for valor, ثروة for wealth, قوة for strength — confirming that what Hebrew holds together in one lexeme, other languages distinguish. The theological thread is that all genuine chayil, whether military, economic, or moral, ultimately derives from God.

1. army, military force (99×) An organized military force: army, troops, host. The most frequent sense (99 occurrences), appearing throughout narrative and prophecy. Pharaoh's chayil perishes in the sea (Exod 14:28), Joshua musters Israel's chayil for Ai (Josh 8:3), and prophets foretell the destruction of foreign chayilot (armies). Arabic جيش, Korean 군대, and Swahili jeshi consistently distinguish this military sense from the others. POWER AND MIRACLES en: army-of, army-of-, the-armies | es: ejército-de, ejército-de-, las-fuerzas | fr: armée, armée-de, armée-de- | de: Heer, Heer-von, Heer-von- Exod 14:28; Num 31:14; Josh 6:2; Josh 8:3; Josh 10:7

2. valor, bravery in battle (77×) Martial valor, prowess, or heroic courage — the quality of a warrior rather than the force itself. Found in the construct ish chayil ('man of valor,' Judg 18:2; 1 Sam 9:1) and the phrase asah chayil ('to act valiantly,' Num 24:18; Ps 60:14). Spanish distinguishes 'valor' from 'ejército,' and German uses 'Tapferkeit' rather than 'Heer,' marking this as a qualitative rather than collective noun. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: valor | es: fuerza, valor | fr: armée | de: Kraft Judg 18:2; Judg 20:44; Judg 20:46; 1Sam 9:1; 1Sam 14:52

3. wealth, riches, property (31×) Wealth, riches, material possessions. The economic capacity of a person or community (Gen 34:29; Deut 8:17–18; Job 5:5). Arabic ثروة, Korean 재물/재산, and Swahili utajiri all converge on the financial sense. Theologically charged in Deuteronomy 8:18, where God 'gives you power to produce chayil (wealth),' tying economic abundance to divine provision. MIXED MULTITUDE en: Your-wealth, in-wealth, is-the-wealth-of | es: Riqueza-tuya, Riquezas, esta-riqueza | fr: armée, force, le-wealth | de: Heer, Kraft, Reichtum Gen 34:29; Num 31:9; Deut 8:17; Deut 8:18; Job 5:5

4. strength, power, might (22×) Physical or abstract strength, power, might — the raw force exerted by a person, horse, or God. Found in poetry especially (Ps 18:33, 40; Ps 33:17; Hab 3:19). Arabic قوة, Korean 힘, and Swahili nguvu consistently mark this as raw capacity rather than organized troops or personal bravery. In 2 Sam 22:33, 40 it is God who 'girds me with chayil.' POWER AND MIRACLES
en: Your-power, and-strength, by-Your-power | es: con-ejército, con-fuerza, con-tu-poder | fr: armée, avec-force, dans-vaillance | de: Heer, Kraft, Staerke Deut 33:11; 1Sam 2:4; 2Sam 22:33; 2Sam 22:40; 2Kgs 2:16

5. ability, competence, virtue (5×) Moral or practical competence, ability, excellence, virtue. The rarest but most culturally resonant sense, seen in the eshet chayil ('woman of excellence,' Prov 31:10, 29) and Jethro's advice to choose 'men of ability' (anshei chayil, Exod 18:21, 25). German 'Tüchtigkeit' (capability) and Spanish 'virtud' distinguish this from martial valor. Gen 47:6 uses it for professional competence among shepherds. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: ability, excellence, valiantly | es: capacidad, valor, virtud | fr: capacité, vaillance | de: Kraft, Tüchtigkeit, ability Gen 47:6; Exod 18:21; Exod 18:25; Prov 12:4; Prov 31:29

חַיִל H2429 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)
Aramaic noun meaning 'power, strength, force'; also 'army, military host,' the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew chayil.
This Aramaic noun appears in Ezra and Daniel, covering the same broad semantic range as its Hebrew cognate chayil. It denotes raw physical or political power, as in Ezra 4:23 where opponents halt Jerusalem's rebuilding 'by force and power' (bi-edra^{c} we-chayil). It also extends to a military force or army, as when Nebuchadnezzar's mighty soldiers are called gibbarey chayil (Daniel 3:20). The Spanish fuerza and German Kraft consistently render the 'power' sense, while Spanish ejército and English 'army' distinguish the military application.

1. power, strength (5×) Physical or political power, strength, and force. In Ezra 4:23 the paired phrase 'by force and power' (bi-edra^{c} we-chayil) describes coercive compulsion to stop construction. In Daniel 3:4 and 5:7, the adverbial use be-chayil means 'with power' or 'loudly,' indicating intensity of action. Daniel 3:20 pairs it with gibbarim to describe men of outstanding strength. The French and German translations (force, Kraft) consistently capture this core meaning. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: and-force, strength, with-power | es: con-fuerza, fuerza, y-fuerza. | fr: et-armée, force | de: Kraft, [וחיל], mit-Kraft Ezra 4:23; Dan 3:4; Dan 3:20; Dan 4:14; Dan 5:7

2. army, military host (2×) A military force, army, or host of soldiers. In Daniel 3:20 chayil refers to Nebuchadnezzar's armed contingent, and in Daniel 4:35 the phrase cheil shemayya^{ʾ} ('host of heaven') denotes the celestial army, paralleling the Hebrew tseva ha-shamayim. The Spanish ejército and English 'army' clearly distinguish this collective military sense from the abstract 'power' usage. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: in-his-army, with-host-of | es: con-el-ejército-de, en-su-ejército | fr: force | de: Kraft, mit-Kraft Dan 3:20; Dan 4:35

חֵל H2430 Prep-l / N-msc / 3fs (1×)
rampart, outer fortification (defensive wall or bulwark)
This noun means 'rampart' or 'outer fortification,' referring to defensive walls surrounding a city. It can indicate either the physical rampart itself or the space between outer and inner walls. Biblical usage often pairs it with 'wall' to emphasize comprehensive fortifications. In Zechariah 9:4, it metaphorically describes Tyre's sea-power as her defensive rampart.

(1×) Found in Psalm 48:13 as 'to her rampart' (Spanish 'a-su-muralla,' French 'à-rempart'), referring to Jerusalem's fortifications. The term designates outer defensive works - either the rampart wall itself or the fortified space between walls. The context invites viewers to walk around and observe Jerusalem's complete defensive system. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: to-her-rampart | es: a-su-muralla | fr: à-rempart | de: zu-ihr-rampart Ps 48:13

חֵילָם H2431 N-proper-ms (2×)
Helam, a place east of Jordan where David defeated the Arameans Helam was a location east of the Jordan River where David achieved a significant military victory over the Aramean coalition under Hadadezer. The site is mentioned in 2 Samuel 10:16-17, with slight spelling variation between the verses (חילם and חלאמה). Some ancient versions and scholars suggest the word should be read as 'their army' rather than a place name, but most accept it as a geographical location somewhere between Damascus and Hamath. Ezekiel 47:16 may also reference this place, though the text is uncertain.

(2×) A place name designating a battlefield location east of the Jordan. 2 Samuel 10:16 states that the Arameans gathered at Helam, and verse 17 records that David came to Helam and fought them there. The Septuagint (Αιλαμ) supports reading this as a place name, and the reference in Ezekiel 47:16 (if correctly identified) would place it on the border between Damascus and Hamath. The consistent transliteration across languages (Helam, Jelam) confirms the traditional understanding as a proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Helam | es: a-Jelam | fr: Helam | de: Helam 2Sam 10:16; 2Sam 10:17

חִילֶן H2432 N-proper-fs (1×)
Hilen - Levitical city in Judah, alternate form of Holon
This place-name identifies a Levitical city in Judah, appearing in 1 Chronicles 6:58. It is equivalent to 'Holon' in the parallel list in Joshua 21:15, representing variant spellings of the same location. The city was assigned to the Levites as part of their inheritance among the tribes.

(1×) Place-name occurring solely in 1 Chronicles 6:58 in Levitical city lists. Most languages transliterate (Spanish 'Jilez,' English 'Hilen'), though note that the verse reference (1 Chronicles 6:58) corresponds to Hebrew 6:43 due to verse numbering differences. This city is identical to Holon mentioned in Joshua's parallel account. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chilez | es: Jilez | fr: [חילן] | de: [חילן] 1Chr 6:58

חִין H2433 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

grace, elegant proportions (Job 41:12/41:4)

This rare noun means 'grace' or 'elegance,' appearing only in Job 41:12 (English 41:4). The phrase 'the grace of his proportions' describes the Leviathan's imposing form. The term is the Aramaic cognate of the Hebrew word for 'grace' or 'favor,' used here in Job's poetic description of this fearsome creature's terrible beauty.

(1×) Found exclusively in Job 41:12 (Hebrew; 41:4 English) describing Leviathan. The phrase 'and-the-grace-of' his arrangement (Spanish 'y-gracia-de') seems incongruous when describing a monstrous crocodile, yet fits Job's ironic cataloging of this creature's paradoxically magnificent features. The Aramaic form suggests literary archaism or dialectal variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-grace-of | es: y-gracia-de | fr: et-חִין | de: [חִין] Job 41:12

חַיִץ H2434 N-ms (1×)

party-wall, thin wall (Ezekiel 13:10)

This noun means 'party-wall' - a thin or flimsy dividing wall between structures. Ezekiel 13:10 uses it metaphorically of false prophets who whitewash a weak wall, pretending it is strong. The term emphasizes flimsiness and inadequacy, contrasting with substantial defensive walls. It may derive from a root meaning 'to divide' or 'to separate.'

(1×) Appears only in Ezekiel 13:10 in a prophetic metaphor. The simple 'wall' (Spanish 'pared,' French 'brèche') translation masks the specific sense: this is a flimsy, insubstantial dividing wall that false prophets pretend is strong by coating it with whitewash. The context requires a wall that is structurally inadequate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wall | es: pared | fr: brèche | de: [חִיץ] Ezek 13:10

חִיצוֹן H2435 Art / Adj-fs (25×)

outer, external — describing what lies outside, especially the outer courts and gates of the temple

Chitson is an adjective meaning outer or external, the spatial opposite of penimi ('inner'). Its 25 occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in Ezekiel's great temple vision (chapters 40-46), where it designates the outer court, outer gate, and outer chambers of the ideal sanctuary — the zone of transition between profane space and the sacred interior. The word also appears in the historical books for the outer entry of the king's passage to the Temple (2 Kgs 16:18), the outer wall Manasseh built around the City of David (2 Chr 33:14), and the outer court of Ahasuerus's palace where Haman waited while the king could not sleep (Est 6:4). In 1 Kings 6:29-30, it distinguishes the outer room of Solomon's temple from the inner sanctuary. Spanish 'exterior,' French equivalents, and German 'Aussen-' all capture the spatial contrast cleanly.

outer, external, outside (25×) The spatial adjective marking what lies on the outside of a structure, opposed to penimi ('inner'). Dominant in Ezekiel's temple blueprint, where 'the outer court' (hachatsèr hachitsonah) appears over twenty times to define the publicly accessible zone of the eschatological sanctuary (Ezek 10:5; 40:17, 20, 31; 42:1-14; 44:19; 46:21). Also describes the outer king's entry at the Jerusalem Temple (2 Kgs 16:18), Manasseh's outer fortification wall (2 Chr 33:14), and the palace court in Esther (Est 6:4). Spanish 'exterior' and the cross-linguistic evidence confirm a single architectural-spatial sense. OUTER EXTERNAL

en: and-for-the-outside, and-to-the-outside, the-outer | es: el-exterior, exterior, la-exterior | fr: [הַחִיצוֹנָה], [הַחִיצְנָה], [הַחִצוֹנָה] | de: Aussenmauer, [הַחִיצוֹנָה], und-fuer-der-outside 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:30; 2Kgs 16:18; 1Chr 26:29; 2Chr 33:14

חֵיק H2436 N-msc (38×)

Bosom, lap, or embrace (of body or garment fold); also the base or bottom ledge of an altar structure

A masculine noun primarily denoting the bosom, lap, or chest area — the intimate space where one carries a child, embraces a spouse, or conceals an object within the fold of a garment. It expresses tenderness when God carries Israel 'in his bosom' and intimacy in Proverbs' warnings about the wife of one's bosom (Prov 5:20). Moses hides his leprous hand 'in his bosom' (Exod 4:6–7), and the lot is cast 'into the bosom' of a garment (Prov 16:33). In Ezekiel's temple vision, the same word takes on an architectural meaning: the base, ledge, or gutter-like recess at the bottom of the altar (Ezek 43:13–17).

1. bosom, lap, embrace (34×) The bosom, lap, or chest area as a place of intimacy, protection, and concealment. Used for carrying children (Num 11:12; Isa 40:11), the marital embrace (Prov 5:20; Deut 13:6), hiding objects in the garment fold (Exod 4:6–7; Prov 16:33; 21:14), and as a metaphor for God's intimate care. English 'bosom' and Spanish 'seno' converge on the bodily sense, while the construct 'wife of your bosom' across languages consistently marks spousal intimacy. Covers 34 of 38 occurrences. BOSOM LAP

en: and-in-His-bosom, bosom-of, her-bosom | es: el-seno-de, en-mi-seno, en-seno-de-mí | fr: [וּבְחֵיקוֹ], [חֵיק], [חֵיקָם] | de: [בְּחֵיקָהּ], [וּבְחֵיקוֹ], [חֵיק] Gen 16:5; Exod 4:6; Exod 4:7

2. base, bottom ledge of altar (4×) The base, bottom ledge, or gutter-like recess of the altar in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 43:13, 14, 17; also the chariot floor in 1 Kgs 22:35). An architectural extension of the 'hollow/recess' aspect of the bosom concept. English 'base' and Spanish 'fondo/base' clearly distinguish this from the bodily sense. German 'Boden' (floor/bottom) confirms the spatial rather than anatomical reading in these four passages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-base, and-from-base-of, and-the-base- | es: Y-desde-base-de, fondo-de, y-base | fr: [וְהַחֵיק], [וְחֵיק], [וּמֵחֵיק] | de: Boden-von, [וְהַחֵיק], [וְחֵיק] 1Kgs 22:35; Ezek 43:13; Ezek 43:14; Ezek 43:17

חִירָה H2437 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hirah, an Adullamite and friend of Judah in Genesis 38

Hirah was an Adullamite man who appears as Judah's friend in the narrative of Genesis 38. He accompanied Judah to Timnah for the sheepshearing and later was sent to deliver payment to the woman Judah thought was a prostitute (who was actually his daughter-in-law Tamar in disguise). The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may be connected to the root חור. His designation as 'the Adullamite' identifies him with the town of Adullam in the Shephelah region of Judah.

(2×) The personal name of Judah's Adullamite companion in Genesis 38. Verse 1 introduces 'Hirah the Adullamite,' and verse 12 mentions 'his friend Hirah the Adullamite' accompanying Judah to the sheepshearing. The Septuagint Ειρας shows Greek adaptation of the name, while modern languages maintain forms like Hirah, Jirah, or Chira depending on how they render the Hebrew ḥet. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hirah, and-Hirah | es: Jirah, y-Jirah | fr: Hirah, et-Hirah | de: Chira, und-Chira Gen 38:1; Gen 38:12

חִירָם H2438 N-proper-ms (25×)

Hiram — king of Tyre allied with David and Solomon; also a master craftsman; also a Benjamite

Chiram (also spelled Churam, Hirom) is a proper name appearing 25 times with variant orthography across Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles. The most prominent bearer is Hiram king of Tyre, the Phoenician monarch who supplied cedar, cypress timber, and skilled labor for David's palace (2 Sam 5:11) and then for Solomon's Temple and royal complex (1 Kgs 5:1-12; 9:11-14; 10:11, 22). His alliance with Israel represents one of the great international partnerships of the united monarchy. A second Hiram is the bronze-working artisan of mixed Tyrian-Israelite parentage whom King Hiram dispatched to Solomon — the master craftsman who cast the twin pillars Jachin and Boaz and the molten sea (1 Kgs 7:13-45; 2 Chr 2:12; 4:11-16). Chronicles also lists a third, otherwise unknown Hiram among the sons of Benjamin (1 Chr 8:5). German and French retain 'Hiram'; Spanish varies between 'Hiram' and 'Jiram.'

Hiram (proper name) (25×) A Phoenician proper name borne by three distinct biblical figures. Most prominently, Hiram king of Tyre, the ally who furnished Solomon with Lebanese timber, gold, and maritime expertise for the Temple and palace (2 Sam 5:11; 1 Kgs 5:1-12; 9:11-14; 10:22). Secondarily, a half-Tyrian bronze artisan sent by the king to cast the Temple's great metalwork — pillars, sea, and lavers (1 Kgs 7:13-45; 2 Chr 4:11-16). A third Hiram appears briefly as a Benjamite in 1 Chr 8:5. The LXX renders the name Chiram/Cheiram. HIRAM PERSONAL NAME

en: Hiram, to-Hiram | es: Hiram, Jiram, a-Jiram | fr: Hiram, à-Hiram | de: Hiram, zu-Hiram 2Sam 5:11; 1Kgs 5:1; 1Kgs 5:2; 1Kgs 5:7

חוּשׁ H2439 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3fs (1×)

make haste (ketiv variant, Psalm 71:12)

This is the ketiv (written) form of the imperative 'make haste' in Psalm 71:12, while the qere (read) form is the standard spelling. Both forms mean the same thing: an urgent command to hurry. The psalmist calls on God to make haste to help, expressing desperate need for swift divine intervention.

(1×) The ketiv reading in Psalm 71:12, calling for God to hasten to help. This spelling variant (marked 'ketiv:make-haste' in English) differs only orthographically from the qere reading at H2363. Both forms express identical urgent imperative meaning. Spanish 'apresúrate' (make haste) reflects the semantic content regardless of spelling. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: [ketiv:make-haste] | es: [apresúrate] | fr: se-hâter | de: [ketiv:make-haste] Ps 71:12

חִישׁ H2440 Adv (1×)

quickly, speedily (adverb of swift passage, Psalm 90:10)

This adverb means 'quickly' or 'speedily,' describing rapid passage. Psalm 90:10 uses it to describe how life passes away quickly, like grass that is cut down and flies away. The term emphasizes the swift, fleeting nature of human existence, fitting the psalm's meditation on mortality and time.

(1×) Found exclusively in Psalm 90:10 describing how quickly life passes. The phrase 'it is cut down quickly' (Spanish 'pronto,' French 'vite,' German 'schnell') emphasizes the sudden brevity of human life. All target languages converge on the meaning of swift, rapid passage, fitting the psalm's theme of human transience. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: quickly | es: pronto | fr: vite | de: schnell Ps 90:10

חֵךְ H2441 N-msc / 3fs (18×)

Palate, roof of the mouth; the organ of taste used literally and metaphorically; also mouth as organ of speech.

Denotes the roof of the mouth — the physical palate where flavors are discerned. Job asks 'does not the palate taste food?' (Job 12:11), and Proverbs compares wisdom's sweetness to honey on the palate (Prov 24:13). The word is overwhelmingly poetic, concentrated in Job, Proverbs, Song of Songs, and the Psalms. Spanish renders it 'paladar' throughout, preserving both the anatomical and metaphorical registers. A secondary metonymic use treats the palate as the source of speech: 'his mouth is sweetness itself' (Song 5:16), and the prophet's tongue cleaving to his palate signals enforced silence (Ezek 3:26).

1. palate, organ of taste (15×) The roof of the mouth as the physical organ of taste, used literally for discerning flavors and metaphorically for evaluating truth or wisdom. Job 12:11 and 34:3 establish the palate as the seat of discernment — just as it tests food, so the ear tests words. Lamentations 4:4 describes the infant's tongue clinging to its palate from thirst. Spanish 'paladar' and German evidence both confirm a consistently anatomical reference across these passages. PALATE MOUTH

en: and-palate, and-the-palate, his-palate | es: a-mi-paladar, a-paladar-de-mí, a-su-paladar | fr: [חכו], dans-mon-palais-moi, et-palais | de: [בחכי], [וחך], [חכה] Job 6:30; Job 12:11; Job 20:13; Job 29:10; Job 31:30

2. mouth, organ of speech (3×) The mouth or palate used metonymically for speech and verbal expression, emphasizing what issues from the mouth rather than what is tasted by it. Song of Songs 5:16 praises the beloved's palate as 'sweetness itself,' and 7:9 compares it to fine wine — here the focus is on spoken words, not gustatory sensation. Hosea 8:1 commands 'a trumpet to your palate!' where the palate stands for the mouth that sounds the alarm. The shift from tasting to speaking is reflected in translation choices: Spanish moves from 'paladar' (taste organ) to contextual renderings emphasizing utterance. PALATE MOUTH

en: and-your-palate, his-palate, your-palate | es: Su-paladar, Y-tu-paladar, tu-paladar | fr: Et-ton-palais, Son-palais, palais | de: [וחכך], [חכו], [חכך] Song 5:16; Song 7:9; Hos 8:1

חָכָה H2442 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cp (14×)

To wait expectantly, often with hope; rarely, to lie in wait with hostile intent

A verb of patient expectation, typically directed toward God or his deliverance. The Pi'el intensive stem underscores the deliberate, sustained quality of this waiting – it is not passive idleness but active, hopeful anticipation. Isaiah uses it of those who wait for the Lord (Isa 8:17; 30:18), and the psalmist declares that 'our soul waits for the LORD' (Ps 33:20). One striking outlier in Hosea 6:9 repurposes the same verb for predatory ambush, where priests 'lie in wait' like marauding bands – a dark inversion of its usual hopeful tenor.

1. wait for, await expectantly (13×) To wait patiently or expectantly for someone or something, typically with an attitude of hope, trust, or anticipation. Spanish 'esperar' and English 'wait for' capture this sense of purposeful expectation. The Qal participle in Isaiah 30:18 describes those 'waiting for' the Lord, while in Job 3:21 the desperate 'wait for death' inverts the hope but preserves the expectant posture. Daniel 12:12 pronounces blessing on the one who 'waits' and reaches the appointed number of days. Job 32:4 provides a mundane but revealing usage: Elihu 'waited' for Job to finish speaking before responding. WAITING AND EXPECTING

en: and-I-will-wait, and-we-wait, for-one-waiting | es: Los-que-esperan, Y-esperaré, el-que-espera | fr: [וחכיתי], [חוכי], [יחכה] | de: [המחכה], [המחכים], [וחכיתי] 2Kgs 7:9; 2Kgs 9:3; Job 3:21; Job 32:4; Ps 33:20

2. lie in wait, ambush (1×) To lie in wait with hostile intent, lurking in ambush to attack. This single occurrence in Hosea 6:9 strikingly repurposes the verb of patient hope into predatory violence: priests are compared to marauding bands (גְּדוּדִים) who 'lie in wait' along the road to Shechem. Spanish 'acechadores' (ambushers) and the contextual shift from hopeful to hostile waiting mark this as a distinct sense, though the underlying image of watchful anticipation connects both meanings at the root level. AMBUSH LURK

en: and-as-lying-in-wait-of | es: Y-como-acechadores | fr: et-attendre | de: [וכחכי] Hos 6:9

חַכָּה H2443 Prep-b / N-fs (3×)

fishhook, hook (for catching fish or large creatures)

A hook used for fishing or capturing large aquatic creatures. The term appears in contexts ranging from ordinary fishing to the metaphorical capturing of Leviathan. Isaiah describes fishermen casting hooks into the Nile, while Habakkuk uses the image of humanity being caught like fish on hooks. Most dramatically, Job asks whether Leviathan can be drawn out with a fishhook, emphasizing the creature's untamable power. The hook represents human attempts to control or capture aquatic life.

(3×) A fishhook or similar catching instrument. Job 41:1 (Hebrew numbering 40:25) poses the rhetorical question of drawing out Leviathan with a hook, highlighting impossibility. Isaiah 19:8 mentions fishermen who cast hooks into the river during Egypt's drought. Habakkuk 1:15 depicts the Babylonians bringing up all humanity with hooks. The consistent translation across languages (Spanish anzuelo, French hameçon, English hook) reflects the concrete, material nature of this fishing implement. HOOK RING FETTER

en: hook, with-a-fishhook, with-a-hook | es: anzuelo, con-anzuelo | fr: [חכה], dans-בחכה, hameçon | de: [בחכה], [חכה] Job 41:1; Isa 19:8; Hab 1:15

חֲכִילָה H2444 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

Hakilah: hill in southern Judah near wilderness of Ziph

A hill located in southern Judah on the edge of the wilderness of Ziph. Hakilah served as a landmark during David's fugitive years when Saul pursued him. The Ziphites twice informed Saul that David was hiding near the hill of Hakilah, leading to confrontations between the two men. The name possibly means 'dark' or 'gloomy,' perhaps describing the hill's appearance or character. This location marks a significant chapter in David's pre-royal wanderings in the Judean wilderness.

(3×) The hill of Hakilah, a geographical feature in the wilderness of Ziph. 1 Samuel 23:19 and 26:1 record the Ziphites reporting David's location 'on the hill of Hakilah,' while 26:3 describes Saul camping there during his pursuit. The Hebrew always includes the article (הַחֲכִילָה), treating it as a definite, well-known landmark. Transliterations remain consistent across languages (Spanish Haquilá, French/German Hakilah), preserving the proper name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hakilah, the-Hachilah | es: Haquilá | fr: Hakilah, le-Hachilah | de: Hakilah, der-Hachilah 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 26:1; 1Sam 26:3

חַכִּים H2445 Prep-l / N-mpc (14×)

Wise men, sages — Aramaic term for the learned class at the Babylonian court possessing esoteric knowledge.

An Aramaic noun (חַכִּים) occurring exclusively in Daniel, designating the professional class of wise men or sages at the Babylonian and Persian courts. These חַכִּימַיָּא appear alongside magicians, enchanters, and astrologers as court advisors whom Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar consult for dream interpretation and reading cryptic signs. When God reveals Nebuchadnezzar's dream to Daniel, it is said that God 'gives wisdom to the wise' (Dan 2:21), using the same root. English and Spanish render the term straightforwardly as 'wise men' and 'sabios,' while French and German leave several occurrences untranslated.

wise men of (14×) Aramaic plural noun referring to the professional class of wise men (sages) at the Babylonian and Persian royal courts, who possessed esoteric learning and served as royal counselors alongside magicians and astrologers (Dan 2:12–14, 18, 24, 27; 4:3; 5:7–8, 15). Nebuchadnezzar's decree to destroy all wise men of Babylon (Dan 2:12–13) and Daniel's subsequent vindication among them form the dramatic core. The singular-abstract use in Daniel 2:21, 'He gives wisdom to the wise,' plays on the root to affirm divine sovereignty over all human sagacity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-wise-men, the-wise-men, the-wise-men-of | es: a-los-sabios, a-los-sabios-de, los-sabios | fr: [וחכימיא], [חכימיא], [חכימין] | de: und-weise, weise Dan 2:12; Dan 2:13; Dan 2:14; Dan 2:18; Dan 2:21

חֲכַלְיָה H2446 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hacaliah, the father of Nehemiah the governor

Hacaliah was the father of Nehemiah, the cupbearer to King Artaxerxes who became governor of Judah and led the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls. His name appears twice in the book of Nehemiah, both times as part of Nehemiah's self-identification. The name's etymology is uncertain, though one proposal suggests it means 'wait for Yahweh' (from the root חכה). The Septuagint shows considerable variation in rendering the name, reflecting its unfamiliarity to Greek translators.

(2×) A masculine proper name, specifically the patronymic of Nehemiah. Nehemiah 1:1 opens with 'The words of Nehemiah the son of Hacaliah,' and Nehemiah 10:1 (10:2 in Hebrew) includes the same identification in a list of those who sealed the covenant. The wide variation in Septuagint forms (Χελκια, Χελκιασ, Αχαλια, Αχελια) suggests scribal uncertainty, but the Hebrew text consistently preserves חכליה. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hacaliah | es: Hacalías | fr: [חכליה] | de: [חכליה] Neh 1:1; Neh 10:1

חַכְלִילִי H2447 Adj-msc (1×)

dark, dull (of eyes affected by wine, Genesis 49:12)

This rare adjective means 'dark' or 'dull,' describing eyes that are darkened or dulled, particularly from wine. Genesis 49:12 in Jacob's blessing of Judah speaks of 'eyes dark from wine,' suggesting either the reddish appearance of intoxication or the luster of eyes affected by abundant wine. The term may indicate either discoloration or a dulled appearance.

(1×) Appears only in Genesis 49:12 in poetic blessing. The phrase 'dark eyes from wine' (Spanish 'Oscuros,' English 'dark') has been interpreted as eyes reddened by wine, eyes sparkling with wine's effects, or eyes dulled by excessive drinking. The multilingual evidence favors some kind of wine-induced color or appearance change. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: dark | es: Oscuros | fr: dark | de: dunkelglänzend Gen 49:12

חַכְלִילוּת H2448 N-fsc (1×)

dulness, redness (of eyes from drunkenness, Proverbs 23:29)

This abstract noun describes the dulled or reddened condition of eyes from excessive wine consumption. Proverbs 23:29 asks rhetorically 'who has dulness of eyes?' immediately answering with 'those who linger long over wine.' The term is derived from the adjective meaning 'dark' or 'dull,' emphasizing the physical effects of intoxication.

(1×) Found exclusively in Proverbs 23:29 in a wisdom passage warning against drunkenness. The phrase 'redness-of eyes' (Spanish 'enrojecimiento-de') describes the bloodshot or dulled appearance of eyes from excessive alcohol. Verse 30 explicitly identifies this as the condition of those who 'linger over wine,' making the reference to intoxication unmistakable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: redness-of | es: enrojecimiento-de | fr: חכללות | de: [חכללות] Prov 23:29

חָכַם H2449 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (28×)

To be wise, become wise, act wisely; in causative stems, to make wise or teach wisdom; reflexively, to show oneself wise.

Chakam is the verbal engine behind the entire biblical wisdom tradition. Where the noun chokmah names the quality and the adjective chakam describes the person, this verb captures wisdom as process — the becoming, acquiring, imparting, and sometimes feigning of it. Its range moves from the simple imperative 'Be wise, my son!' (Prov 23:19) through the Piel-Hifil causative 'the testimony of the LORD makes wise the simple' (Ps 19:7), all the way to the unsettling Hitpael of Exodus 1:10 where Pharaoh proposes to 'deal shrewdly' against Israel. The multilingual evidence is revealing: where the Qal attracts vocabulary of personal character (Spanish sabio, German weise), the causative stems draw pedagogical language (Spanish ensenar sabiduria, Hindi sikhana), confirming that Hebrew speakers perceived 'being wise' and 'making wise' as genuinely different semantic acts.

1. be or become wise (20×) The core Qal sense: to be or become wise, to act wisely — covering imperative exhortations, narrative statements, and proverbial observations about gaining wisdom. Solomon 'became wiser than all men' (1 Kgs 4:31); the ant teaches the sluggard to 'be wise' (Prov 6:6); the companion of the wise 'will become wise' (Prov 13:20). Spanish ser sabio, German weise sein, and Korean 지혜롭다 all select stative or inchoative wisdom vocabulary. Twenty occurrences make this the overwhelmingly dominant sense, concentrated in Proverbs and Ecclesiastes. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: I-will-be-wise, [ketiv], and-be-wise | es: (será-sabio), Sé-sabio, [y-será-sabio] | fr: et-il-fut-wiser, et-être-sage, ils-étaient-sage | de: Weisheit, sie-waren-weise, und-er-war-wiser Deut 32:29; 1Kgs 4:31; Job 32:9; Prov 6:6; Prov 8:33

2. make wise or teach wisdom (4×) The causative Piel and Hifil: to make someone wise, to impart or teach wisdom. God's testimonies 'make wise the simple' (Ps 19:7); Job protests that God 'makes us wiser than the beasts' (Job 35:11); Joseph is sent ahead to 'teach wisdom' to Egypt's elders (Ps 105:22). The shift to pedagogical language is cross-linguistically consistent — Spanish ensenar sabiduria ('teach wisdom'), Korean 지혜롭게 하다 ('cause to be wise'), and Hindi sikhana ('to teach') all confirm a causative-instructional sense distinct from personal wisdom-acquisition. Four occurrences. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: He-makes-us-wise, You-make-me-wiser, making-wise | es: enseñara-sabiduría, me-haces-sabio, nos-hace-sabios | fr: de-être-sage, être-sage, être-sage-nous | de: du-machen-mich-wiser, making-wise, wurde-weise Job 35:11; Ps 19:7; Ps 105:22; Ps 119:98

3. made wise or skilled (2×) The Pual passive: to be made wise or skillful — describing someone who has been endowed with wisdom or expertise by an external agent. The 'small creatures' of Proverbs 30:24 are 'made wise' (mechukamim) by instinct; the 'cunning enchanter' of Psalm 58:5 is described as one who has been expertly trained. Spanish experto and the passive morphology confirm this as the genuine passive counterpart of sense 2. Two occurrences, but the distinction between receiving wisdom and possessing it is real. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: made-wise, skillful | es: experto, hechos-sabios | fr: de-être-sage, être-sage | de: skillful, von-Weise Ps 58:5; Prov 30:24

4. make oneself wise (1×) The Hitpael reflexive: to make oneself wise, to show oneself wise — a single cautionary occurrence in Ecclesiastes 7:16, 'Do not make yourself overly wise.' The reflexive stem adds a performative, self-directed quality: this is wisdom pursued for display or self-advancement rather than wisdom received from God or gained through experience. Spanish hacerse sabio captures the reflexive dimension, and the warning tone distinguishes it from the positive valence of senses 1-2. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: be-wise | es: te-hagas-sabio | fr: être-sage | de: wurde-weise Eccl 7:16

5. deal shrewdly or cunningly (1×) The Hitpael cohortative with a cunning or scheming nuance: to deal shrewdly, to act with strategic cunning. In Exodus 1:10, Pharaoh says 'Come, let us deal wisely with them' — where 'wisely' carries the sinister overtone of calculated oppression. The Hitpael here is not reflexive self-improvement but collaborative scheming. Spanish actuemos sabiamente preserves the surface 'wisdom' vocabulary while the narrative context inverts its moral valence entirely. A single occurrence, but one that exposes the morally ambiguous edge of the wisdom concept: the same cognitive skill that builds the temple can also engineer genocide. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: let-us-deal-wisely | es: actuemos-sabiamente | fr: que-nous-deal-wisely | de: lass-uns-verfahren-wisely Exod 1:10

חָכָם H2450 Adj-msc (137×)

Wise, prudent; substantively: sages, royal counselors; also skilled craftsman; feminine: wise women.

Hakham is the Hebrew Bible's primary adjective for wisdom in all its dimensions — moral, intellectual, and practical. In its most common use, it describes a person who possesses discernment and prudence: Moses is told to choose 'wise and discerning' men (Deut 1:13), and the wise person fears the LORD and turns from evil (Prov 14:16). But hakham also functions as a substantive noun denoting a recognized social class — the 'wise men' who serve as royal advisors alongside priests and prophets (Jer 18:18), from Pharaoh's court magicians (Exod 7:11) to the counselors of Babylon and Persia. German weise and Spanish sabio both cover this dual range, but French sage interestingly gravitates toward the moral-philosophical pole. A third, sometimes overlooked sense emerges in the tabernacle narratives: artisans whose hearts God filled with 'wisdom' to work gold, weave fabric, and carve wood (Exod 28:3; 35:25). Here hakham means 'skilled, expert' — closer to Greek sophos in its archaic sense of technical mastery. The feminine plural in Judges 5:29 and Jeremiah 9:17 designates wise women as a distinct social category.

1. wise, prudent (84×) Describes a person possessing wisdom, discernment, or prudence as a moral-intellectual quality — the default adjectival use covering 84 occurrences. In Deut 4:6 Israel's observance of Torah will cause nations to say 'Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.' In 2 Sam 13:3 Jonadab is described as 'very wise' (hakham me'od), though his counsel proves morally bankrupt — a reminder that hakham marks cognitive ability, not necessarily virtue. Spanish sabio and German weise both cover this sense cleanly, while French sage adds a philosophical overtone that captures the Proverbs tradition well. The multilingual evidence shows remarkable consistency: nearly every language uses its primary wisdom-adjective here, confirming this as the root's semantic center of gravity. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: a-wise-one, is-wise, skilled | es: Sabio, es-sabio, sabia | fr: [חכם], est-sage, sage | de: ist-weise, weise, wurde-weise Deut 1:13; Deut 1:15; Deut 4:6; Deut 32:6; 2Sam 13:3

2. wise men, sages (substantive: professional class) (46×) Split from sense 96973. Criteria: Used substantively to denote a recognized social class of counselors, court advisors, or professional sages; Pharaoh's wise men, royal hakhamim

en: the-wise, wise, wise-men | es: a-sabios, sabios | fr: sage, sage-ones | de: Weise, weise, weise-die Gen 41:8; Exod 7:11; Deut 16:19; Esth 1:13; Esth 6:13

3. skilled, expert craftsman (3×) Technical skill or artisanal expertise rather than moral wisdom — 3 occurrences concentrated in the Chronicler's account of temple construction. In 2 Chr 2:7 Solomon requests a man 'skilled' (hakham) in working gold, silver, bronze, and iron; in 2 Chr 2:14 Huram-abi is described as 'skilled' in multiple crafts. The Exodus tabernacle texts (Exod 28:3; 31:6; 35:10, 25; 36:1-8) use the same root for artisan wisdom, though those are mainly classified under the larger 'wise' cluster. Spanish sabios and French sage are used here too, but the contextual objects (metalwork, engraving, weaving) make the 'expert craftsman' reading unmistakable. This sense connects to the broader ancient Near Eastern concept of skill-wisdom, where craft mastery was a form of divine endowment — the artisans are filled with ruah hokhmah, 'the spirit of wisdom.' WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: and-skilled-ones-of, the-skilled-ones, your-skilled-ones | es: los-sabios, tus-sabios, y-los-sabios-de | fr: [הַחֲכָמִים], [וְחַכְמֵי], [חַכְמֵיךָ] | de: und-weise, weise 2Chr 2:7; 2Chr 2:14

4. wise women (2×) Feminine substantive use referring to wise women as a recognized social category — 2 occurrences. In Judg 5:29 'the wisest of her ladies' (hakhmot saroteyha) answer Sisera's mother, while in Jer 9:17 the 'skillful women' (hakhamot) are professional mourners summoned to raise the funeral keen. Spanish las sabias and German weise (feminine) both handle this as a straightforward feminine form, but the cultural context is significant: wise women in ancient Israel were a distinct social institution, as seen also in the 'wise woman of Tekoa' (2 Sam 14:2) and the 'wise woman' of Abel Beth-maacah (2 Sam 20:16), though those passages use the singular attributive form. The professional mourning-women of Jeremiah represent skill-wisdom (sense 3) applied to a ritual-vocal craft. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-wisest-of, the-skillful-women | es: Las-sabias-de, las-sabias | fr: -le-wisest-de, sage | de: -der-wisest-von, weise Judg 5:29; Jer 9:17

5. wise (adjectival: possessing wisdom) (2×) Split from sense 96973. Criteria: Used as an adjective modifying a noun; describing someone as having wisdom, prudence, or skill

en: the-wise-ones, wise-of | es: los-sabios, sabios-de- | fr: le-sage-ceux, sage-de | de: der-weise-die, weise-von Exod 28:3; Exod 36:4

חָכְמָה H2451 N-fsc / 3mp (149×)

Wisdom, discernment, sound judgment; technical skill or craftsmanship; prudent counsel Encompassing everything from artisan expertise to divine omniscience, chokmah is Hebrew's broadest term for applied intelligence. Its first appearances in Exodus describe the God-given skill of tabernacle craftsmen — Bezalel filled with chokmah to work in gold, silver, and bronze (Exod 31:3; 35:31). Solomon's chokmah famously surpassed all the wisdom of Egypt and the East (1 Kgs 4:30), covering botanical knowledge, zoology, judicial acumen, and political administration in a single sweep. In Proverbs, personified Wisdom stands at the crossroads calling out to passersby (Prov 1:20; 8:1; 9:1), and the 'fear of the LORD' is declared its starting point (Prov 9:10). Ecclesiastes subjects the concept to relentless scrutiny, asking whether all this chokmah ultimately profits under the sun (Eccl 1:13-18; 2:13-16). Arabic hikmah, Spanish sabiduria, and Korean jihye all converge on the moral-intellectual core, though none fully captures the artisanal-technical dimension visible in the Exodus workshops.

1. wisdom, discernment (146×) The broad intellectual and moral quality of wisdom, discernment, and sound judgment — covering 146 of 149 occurrences. This ranges from Solomon's legendary insight in governance and natural history (1 Kgs 4:29-34; 5:12), through Proverbs' ethical instruction (Prov 1:2, 7; 2:2, 6, 10; 4:5, 7, 11; 9:10), to Ecclesiastes' philosophical interrogation of wisdom's value (Eccl 1:13, 16-18; 2:3, 9, 12-13, 21, 26; 7:12, 19, 23, 25; 8:1, 16; 9:10, 13, 15-16, 18). It also encompasses prophetic contexts where wisdom is attributed to foreign powers (Jer 49:7; Ezek 28:4-5, 7, 12, 17; Isa 10:13; 29:14). German Weisheit, French sagesse, and Arabic hikmah uniformly map to this sense. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT
en: wisdom | es: es-sabiduría, está-la-sabiduría, está-la-sabiduría, | fr: sagesse | de: Weisheit Exod 28:3; Exod 31:6; Exod 36:1; Exod 36:2; Deut 34:9

2. skill, craftsmanship (2×) Technical skill, craftsmanship, or artisanal expertise — the practical know-how applied to a specific trade or craft. The tabernacle construction narratives in Exodus showcase this sense vividly: skilled workers are filled with chokmah to design artistic works in metal, stone, and fabric (Exod 28:3; 31:3, 6; 35:26, 31, 35; 36:1-2). First Chronicles 28:21 extends the pattern to Temple construction guilds. While formally classified as only 2 occurrences in the clustering, the Exodus craftsmanship passages (often counted under sense 1) share this practical-skill profile. Spanish habilidad and English 'skill' sometimes substitute for 'wisdom' in these contexts, revealing the semantic distinction from moral discernment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: wisdom-of-, with-wisdom | es: en-la-sabiduría, sabiduría-de | fr: in-sagesse, sagesse-de- | de: Weisheit, Weisheit-von- Exod 35:35; 1Chr 28:21

3. (1×) Prudent counsel or strategic wisdom applied in a specific crisis — represented by the wise woman of Abel Beth-Maacah in 2 Samuel 20:22, who 'in her wisdom' went to the people and persuaded them to end Joab's siege by delivering Sheba's head. This occurrence bridges the abstract quality (sense 1) and the practical skill (sense 2): it is neither theoretical knowledge nor manual craft, but shrewd, situation-specific counsel that saves a city. The multilingual evidence — English 'in her wisdom,' Spanish 'con su sabiduria' — does not distinguish this from the broader sense, but the narrative context highlights an interpersonal, political application distinct from both philosophical reflection and manual artistry. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT
en: in-her-wisdom | es: con-su-sabiduría | fr: dans-sa-sagesse | de: in-ihr-Weisheit 2Sam 20:22

חָכְמָה H2452 Conj-w / N-fs (8×)

Wisdom (Aramaic); divinely granted insight, interpretive skill, and comprehensive understanding, especially in Daniel.

This is the Aramaic form of 'wisdom,' appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel, wisdom is first an attribute of God himself —'wisdom and might are his' (Dan 2:20)—and then a gift he bestows on those who seek him (2:21, 23). Daniel credits God for the interpretive insight that none of Babylon's sages could supply (2:30). In Daniel 5:11, 14, the queen mother testifies that 'the wisdom of the gods' resides in Daniel. Ezra 7:25 uses the term practically: Ezra is commissioned to appoint judges 'according to the wisdom of your God.' The multilingual glosses consistently render it as 'wisdom/ sabiduría,' confirming a unified semantic field.

wisdom (8×) Wisdom as divinely imparted insight and understanding, the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew chokmah. Spanish consistently renders 'sabiduría' and English 'wisdom,' while French and German leave the Aramaic forms untranslated in some instances, reflecting the term's technical-theological weight. The word functions in three related registers: as a divine attribute (Dan 2:20), as revelatory gift enabling dream interpretation (Dan 2:21, 23, 30), and as practical judicial-administrative competence (Ezra 7:25). Daniel 5:11, 14 bridges these registers, describing Daniel as possessing 'wisdom like the wisdom of the gods.' WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT en: according-to-the-wisdom-of, and-wisdom, by-wisdom | es: como-la-sabiduría-de, conforme-a-la-sabiduría-de, por-sabiduría | fr: [בחכמה], [וחכמה], [חכמתא] | de: [בחכמה], [וחכמה], [חכמתא] Ezra 7:25; Dan 2:20; Dan 2:21; Dan 2:23; Dan 2:30

חַכְמוֹנִי H2453 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hachmoni, the father of two men associated with David's court

Hachmoni (meaning 'wise') is a family name or patronymic appearing in two contexts in 1 Chronicles. The first Hachmoni was the father of Jashobeam, one of David's chief warriors and head of the Thirty. The second was the father of Jehiel, who served as tutor or companion to David's sons. Whether these represent the same family or two different families sharing the name is uncertain, but the designation suggests a reputation for wisdom.

(2×) A proper name functioning as a patronymic or family designation. 1 Chronicles 11:11 identifies Jashobeam as 'son of a Hachmoni, chief of the thirty,' while 1 Chronicles 27:32 mentions 'Jehiel the son of Hachmoni' as being with the king's sons (possibly as their tutor). The name's meaning ('wise one') may indicate a family known for wisdom or learning. Modern languages maintain close transliterations: Hachmoni, Chakmoni, Jacmoní. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chachmoni, Chakmoni | es: Hacmoni, Jacmoní | fr: [חכמוני] | de: [חכמוני] 1Chr 11:11; 1Chr 27:32

חָכְמָה H2454 N-fp (5×)

wisdom; skill, insight, and sagacity encompassing technical craft, governance, ethical discernment, and cosmic order

One of the most theologically rich terms in the Hebrew Bible, this noun covers an extraordinary range from artisanal skill to cosmic principle. In Proverbs, personified Wisdom cries aloud in the streets (1:20), builds her house with seven pillars (9:1), and is exalted beyond the fool's reach (24:7). The plural form in Prov 14:1 ('the wisdoms of women') emphasizes the manifold, practical character of true wisdom. German 'Weisheit,' French 'sagesse,' and Spanish 'sabiduria' all converge on a single rich concept that unites moral discernment with practical skill.

(5×) Wisdom in its fullest Hebrew sense: personified as a woman calling out publicly (Prov 1:20; 9:1), inaccessible to fools (Prov 24:7), and exercised practically by wise women (Prov 14:1). The plural 'chokmot' in Ps 49:3 and Proverbs emphasizes wisdom's multifaceted character. All major translations – Spanish 'sabiduria,' French 'sagesse,' German 'Weisheit' – converge on a single term, reflecting the unified concept that Hebrew wisdom holds together skill, insight, and moral discernment. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT en: the-wisdom-of, wisdom | es: Sabiduría, Sabiduría-de, sabiduría | fr: sagesse, sagesses | de: Weisheit Ps 49:3; Prov 1:20; Prov 9:1; Prov 14:1; Prov 24:7

חֹל H2455 Art / N-ms (7×)

Profane, common, or ordinary — that which is not consecrated; the opposite of holy (qodesh).

A noun marking the boundary between the sacred and the ordinary. In priestly law, distinguishing between the holy (qodesh) and the common (chol) is a fundamental duty of the priests (Lev 10:10; Ezek 44:23). Ezekiel condemns Jerusalem's priests for failing to teach this distinction (22:26) and uses it architecturally when the temple precinct separates holy space from common ground (42:20; 48:15). David's request for 'common bread' at Nob (1 Sam 21:5–6) — ordinary loaves as opposed to consecrated showbread — provides a memorable narrative illustration of this sacred-secular divide.

profane, common (non-sacred) (7×) That which is profane, common, or unconsecrated — the conceptual opposite of qodesh (holy). This term defines one pole of the fundamental priestly distinction between sacred and ordinary, a distinction priests were charged to teach the people (Lev 10:10; Ezek 44:23). Spanish profano and común, along with French profane, all capture this sense of the non-sacred or secular. Ezekiel's temple vision uses it architecturally: the wall separates the holy from the common (42:20), and the city land outside the sacred precinct is designated common (48:15). David's request for 'common bread' (lechem chol, 1 Sam 21:5) — as opposed to the holy showbread — provides one of the most vivid narrative applications, later cited by Jesus in the Gospels. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: and-common, and-the-common, common | es: común, lo-profano, profano | fr: common, le-common, profane | de: [חל], [לחל], common Lev 10:10; 1Sam 21:5; 1Sam 21:6; Ezek 22:26; Ezek 42:20

חָלָא H2456 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

become sick, diseased (2 Chronicles 16:12)

This verb means 'to become sick' or 'diseased,' serving as a variant of the more common verb for illness. Second Chronicles 16:12 uses it to describe King Asa becoming diseased in his feet, likely referring to gout or gangrene. The parallel passage in 1 Kings 15:23 uses the standard verb for illness, showing these are synonymous forms.

(1×) Occurs only in 2 Chronicles 16:12 describing Asa's foot disease. The waw-consecutive form 'and-became-diseased' (Spanish 'y-enfermó') narrates the onset of severe illness. This variant spelling parallels the more common illness-verb in 1 Kings 15:23, demonstrating dialectal or orthographic variation with identical meaning. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: and-became-diseased | es: y-enfermó | fr: [ויחלא] | de: [ויחלא] 2Chr 16:12

חֳלְאָה H2457 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3fs (5×)

rust, corrosion; scum or filth on a metal vessel, symbolizing Jerusalem's moral impurity

Appearing exclusively in Ezekiel 24:6-12, this noun describes the rust or corrosion encrusted on a cooking pot – Ezekiel's vivid allegory for Jerusalem's bloodguilt and moral filth. The pot cannot be cleaned; its rust must be burned away in divine judgment. The term likely relates to a root meaning 'to be sick' or 'filthy,' connecting physical corrosion with spiritual contamination. Spanish 'escoria' (dross/slag) and French 'rouille' (rust) both capture the image of irreversible corruption that only fire can address.

(5×) Rust, corrosion, or encrusted filth on a metal cooking pot, used exclusively in Ezek 24:6-12 as a prophetic symbol of Jerusalem's irremovable bloodguilt. The word appears five times in a single oracle, intensifying the imagery of a city whose impurity cannot be scoured away. French 'rouille' (rust) and Spanish 'escoria' (dross) reflect the physical-metaphorical duality. The root connection to sickness or filth underscores that this is moral contamination manifesting as material decay. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: and-its-rust, her-rust, its-rust | es: escoria-de-ella, y-escoria-de-ella | fr: et-sa-rouille, sa-rouille | de: [וחלאתה], [חלאתה] Ezek 24:6; Ezek 24:11; Ezek 24:12

חֲלָאָה H2458 N-proper-fs (2×)

Helah, one of the two wives of Ashur, father of Tekoa

Helah was one of the two wives of Ashur in the genealogies of Judah. Ashur is called the 'father of Tekoa,' probably indicating he was the founder or leading figure of that town. The name Helah appears twice in 1 Chronicles 4, with her children listed in verse 7. The name's meaning is uncertain (BDB notes 'meaning dub.'), and the Septuagint shows considerable variation in attempting to render it in Greek.

(2×) A feminine proper name in the Judahite genealogies. 1 Chronicles 4:5 introduces Ashur's two wives, Helah and Naarah, while verse 7 lists 'the sons of Helah: Zereth, Izhar, and Ethnan.' The wide range of Septuagint variants (Αωδα, Αοαδα, Αλαα, Ελαα, Ελεα) suggests the Greek translators found this an unfamiliar name. Modern versions consistently use Helah or its equivalent (Jelea, Chel'ah). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chel'ah | es: Jelea | fr: [חלאה] | de: [חלאה] 1Chr 4:5; 1Chr 4:7

חֵלֶב H2459 Prep-m / N-ms (92×)

Fat, suet — the fatty portions of sacrificial animals; figuratively, the best or richest part of something

In the sacrificial system, חֵלֶב refers specifically to the internal fat and suet surrounding the kidneys, liver, and intestines — the portions belonging exclusively to the LORD and burned on the altar (Lev 3:16: 'all fat is the LORD's'). Because fat was considered the choicest, richest part of an animal, the word naturally extended to mean 'the best of' any category of goods. When God promises Israel 'the fat of the land' (Gen 45:18) or when Numbers 18:12 speaks of 'the best of the oil and the best of the wine,' the same word חֵלֶב carries the metaphor. Spanish distinguishes these neatly: 'grasa' for literal fat versus 'lo mejor de' for the figurative sense.

1. fat, suet (84×) Physical fat or suet — the adipose tissue of animals, especially the sacrificial fat portions (kidneys, entrails, liver lobe) consecrated to God and burned on the altar. French 'graisse,' German 'Fett,' and Spanish 'grasa' all render the concrete substance. Leviticus 3–4 details which fat belongs to God (Lev 3:9–11, 14–16), and Judg 3:22 memorably describes Ehud's sword being swallowed by Eglon's belly fat. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: fat, the-fat | es: grasa, la-grasa | fr: graisse, le-graisse | de: der-fett, fett Exod 23:18; Exod 29:13; Exod 29:22

2. best, finest part (8×) The best, finest, or richest part of something — a figurative extension from the choicest portion of an animal to the choicest portion of any resource. Spanish 'lo mejor de,' German 'das Beste,' and English 'finest of' all shift register from physical to qualitative. Gen 45:18 (Joseph's promise: 'you shall eat the fat of the land'), Num 18:12 ('all the best of the oil and all the best of the wine'), and Num 18:29–30 use this sense for consecrated firstfruits. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: best-of, fat-of, finest-of | es: de-lo-mejor-de, grosura-de, lo-mejor-de | fr: best-de, de-graisse, graisse | de: best-von, das-Fett, finest-of Gen 45:18; Num 18:12; Num 18:29; Num 18:30

חֶלֶב H2460 N-proper-ms (1×)

Heleb - one of David's mighty men (2 Samuel 23:29)

This personal name identifies one of David's elite warriors listed in 2 Samuel 23:29. However, textual evidence suggests this should be read as 'Heled' or 'Heldai' based on parallel passages in 1 Chronicles 11:30 and 27:15. The name may derive from a root related to 'fat' or 'milk,' but more likely represents a variant spelling of a name meaning 'enduring' or 'worldly.'

(1×) Personal name in 2 Samuel 23:29 among David's mighty men. Most scholars recognize this as a textual variant, with the parallel 1 Chronicles 11:30 reading 'Heled' and 1 Chronicles 27:15 reading 'Heldai.' Translations transliterate (Spanish 'Jelev,' English/French/German 'Heleb'), though the original form remains textually uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Heleb | es: Jelev | fr: Heleb | de: Heleb 2Sam 23:29

חָלָב H2461 Conj-w / N-ms (45×)

Milk; by extension cheese or curds; metonymically a suckling infant; also a proper name (Huram).

One of the most evocative staple-food terms in the Hebrew Bible, denoting fresh milk as a basic nourishment and a powerful symbol of abundance. The recurring phrase 'a land flowing with milk and honey' (Exod 3:8 and over a dozen parallels) anchors the promise of plenty in tangible, pastoral imagery. Cognates across Semitic languages confirm its primary sense: Arabic ḥalīb, Aramaic ḥalbā, and Ethiopic ḥalīb all mean fresh milk. Beyond the literal, the word stretches to cover processed dairy (cheese at 1 Sam 17:18, where the Spanish 'la leche' still renders it as milk, while English specifies 'cheese'), a nursing infant by metonymy (1 Sam 7:9), and even a personal name, Huram (2 Chr 4:11).

1. milk (42×) The primary and overwhelmingly dominant sense: fresh milk as a food product and symbol of fertility and divine provision. It appears in the patriarchal narratives (Gen 18:8, where Abraham serves milk alongside curds to his guests) and saturates the covenant vocabulary through the phrase 'land flowing with milk and honey.' The distinction from ḥem'ah (curds/butter) is carefully maintained in poetry (Judg 5:25; Prov 30:33), though the two

can stand in parallel. Spanish 'leche,' French 'lait,' and German 'Milch' uniformly confirm the basic meaning across our multilingual evidence. MILK DAIRY PRODUCTS

en: milk | es: leche | fr: graisse, lait, חלב | de: Milch, [חלב] Gen 18:8; Gen 49:12; Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17; Exod 13:5

2. cheese, curds (1×) A specialized dairy sense denoting cheese or a curdled milk product, attested at 1 Sam 17:18 where David carries 'ten cuts of cheese' to the army commander. The multilingual glosses diverge instructively here: English renders 'the cheese,' while Spanish retains 'la leche,' suggesting translators sometimes assimilate this to the generic milk sense. BDB notes that ḥem'ah is elsewhere 'produced from' ḥālāb (Prov 30:33), making this a natural semantic extension from raw milk to its processed derivative. MILK DAIRY PRODUCTS

en: the-cheese | es: la-leche | fr: le-cheese | de: der-cheese 1Sam 17:18

3. suckling, nursing child (1×) A metonymic use designating a suckling or nursing infant — literally 'one of milk' — attested at 1 Sam 7:9, where Samuel offers a nursing lamb as a burnt offering. French 'allaitant' (nursing) and Spanish 'de leche' (of milk) capture the metonymy directly, treating the substance as a marker of the creature's developmental stage. This sense relies on the close association between milk and dependent young life. MILK DAIRY PRODUCTS

en: suckling | es: de-leche | fr: allaitant | de: suckling 1Sam 7:9

4. Huram (proper name) (1×) An apparently unrelated proper name, Huram (or Churam), occurring at 2 Chr 4:11 in reference to the Tyrian craftsman. The multilingual glosses — English '(Churam),' Spanish 'Juram,' French and German 'Huram' — confirm this is treated as a personal name rather than a common noun. Its homographic overlap with the milk word is likely coincidental, and some scholars treat it as a separate lexical entry entirely. HIRAM PERSONAL NAME

en: (Churam) | es: Juram | fr: Huram | de: Huram 2Chr 4:11

חֶלְבָּה H2462 N-proper-fs (1×)

Helbah - Asherite town not conquered (Judges 1:31)

This place-name identifies a town in the territory assigned to Asher that the tribe failed to conquer. Judges 1:31 lists it among several Canaanite cities where the inhabitants were not driven out. The site's exact location remains unknown. Some scholars connect it to the Assyrian place-name Mahliba, though this identification is uncertain.

(1×) Place-name appearing solely in Judges 1:31 in the list of unconquered Asherite towns. Target languages transliterate (Spanish 'Jelvah,' English/French/German 'Helbah'). The name may relate to the 'milk/fat' root, possibly indicating a fertile region, though the etymology remains speculative. The site has not been definitively identified archaeologically. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chelbah | es: Jelvah | fr: Chelbah | de: Chelbah Judg 1:31

חֶלְבּוֹן H2463 N-proper-fs (1×)

Helbon - source of wine traded to Tyre (Ezekiel 27:18)

This place-name identifies a location famous for wine production, mentioned in Ezekiel's oracle against Tyre. Ezekiel 27:18 describes 'wine of Helbon' as a luxury trade commodity. The site is identified with modern Halbun, northwest of Damascus in Syria, a region still known for vineyards. Assyrian inscriptions also mention Hilbunu/Hibunim, confirming this area's ancient reputation for viticulture.

(1×) Place-name occurring exclusively in Ezekiel 27:18 in the catalog of Tyre's trade goods. All translations transliterate (Spanish 'Helbón,' English 'Helbon'), recognizing this as referring to a specific wine-producing region. The identification with modern Halbun near Damascus, corroborated by Assyrian texts, shows continuity of viticulture in this area over millennia. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Helbon | es: Helbón | fr: Helbah | de: [חלבון] Ezek 27:18

חֶלְבְּנָה H2464 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

galbanum - aromatic gum for holy incense (Exodus 30:34)

This noun identifies galbanum, an aromatic gum resin used in the holy incense formula. Exodus 30:34 lists it as one of four ingredients for the sacred incense burned in the tabernacle. Galbanum comes from certain plants in the carrot family, producing a strong, earthy fragrance. Ancient versions uniformly identify this substance, which was valued throughout the ancient Near East.

(1×) Appears only in Exodus 30:34 as an incense ingredient. The conjunction 'and-galbanum' (Spanish 'y-gálbano,' French 'et-galbanum,' German 'und-Galbanum') links it with other aromatics in the holy formula. All ancient and modern versions agree on the identification of this resinous gum, indicating clear traditional knowledge of this substance. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-galbanum | es: y-gálbano | fr: et-galbanum | de: und-Galbanum Exod 30:34

חֶלֶד H2465 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (5×)

duration of life, lifespan; the transient world viewed as the span of human existence

The Hebrew cheled conveys the fleeting duration of mortal life, closely paralleling the Greek aion in its temporal sense. In Job 11:17 it describes a lifetime that could shine brighter than noon, while Psalm 39:5 pairs it with 'my days' in a poignant meditation on brevity. Psalm 49:1 extends the meaning toward 'world' as the collective sphere of human transience, calling all inhabitants of cheled to listen. French 'vie-ephemere' and Spanish 'mundo/duracion' together capture both the personal lifespan and the wider temporal world.

(5×) Duration of life, lifespan, mortal span. Used in Job 11:17 and Psalm 39:5 (parallel to 'my days') to express the brevity and fleetingness of human existence. The French rendering 'vie-ephemere' aptly conveys the fragility implied. The Arabic cognate khuldun ('perpetual duration') reveals an ironic contrast: the root carries eternity, yet in Hebrew it emphasizes finitude. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD

en: and-my-lifetime, lifespan, lifetime | es: del-mundo, duración, mundo | fr: de-vie-éphémère, et-vie-éphémère, vie-éphémère | de: [חלד], der-Welt, lifespan Job 11:17; Ps 17:14; Ps 39:5; Ps 49:1; Ps 89:47

חֶלֶד H2466 N-proper-ms (1×)

Heled - one of David's warriors (1 Chronicles 11:30)

This personal name means 'enduring' or 'worldly' and identifies one of David's mighty men, son of Baanah. First Chronicles 11:30 and 27:15 use this spelling, while the parallel 2 Samuel 23:29 has 'Heleb,' showing textual variation. The name appears in Sabaean inscriptions, indicating wider Semitic usage.

(1×) Personal name in 1 Chronicles 11:30 among David's elite warriors. This form parallels 'Heldai' in 1 Chronicles 27:15 and 'Heleb' in 2 Samuel 23:29, representing the same individual. Translations transliterate (Spanish 'Jéled'), treating this as the preferred reading of this warrior's name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cheled | es: Jéled | fr: [חלד] | de: [חלד] 1Chr 11:30

חֹלֶד H2467 Art / N-ms (1×)

weasel, mole-rat (unclean animal in Leviticus 11:29)

This noun designates a small mammal, traditionally translated 'weasel' but possibly referring to a mole-rat or similar rodent. Leviticus 11:29 lists it among unclean swarming creatures. The identification is debated: some favor weasel based on ancient versions, others prefer mole-rat based on Arabic cognates and Palestinian fauna. The animal's exact identity matters less than its unclean status.

(1×) Appears exclusively in Leviticus 11:29 in the list of unclean animals. The definite article 'the-mole-rat' (Spanish 'la-comadreja' = the-weasel, French/English 'le/the-mole-rat') shows taxonomic designation. Scholarly debate continues between weasel and mole-rat identification, with cognate evidence from Arabic supporting mole-

rat, though ancient versions favor weasel. LIVING CREATURES
en: the-mole-rat | es: la-comadreja | fr: le-mole-rat | de: der-mole-rat Lev 11:29

חֻלְדָּה H2468 N-proper-fs (2×)
Huldah, the prophetess consulted during Josiah's reign
Huldah was a prophetess living in Jerusalem during the reign of King Josiah. When the book of the Law was discovered in the temple, Josiah sent a delegation to inquire of the Lord through her. Her prophetic oracle confirmed the coming judgment on Judah but promised that Josiah would die in peace before the disaster came. She is one of only a few women explicitly called a prophetess in the Hebrew Bible, and her authority was recognized by the king and high priest alike.

(2×) The proper name of the prophetess consulted by Josiah. 2 Kings 22:14 and the parallel 2 Chronicles 34:22 both record that the delegation 'went to Huldah the prophetess,' describing her as the wife of Shallum, keeper of the wardrobe, and noting that she lived in Jerusalem in the Second Quarter. The Septuagint Ολδα shows straightforward transliteration, and modern languages maintain consistent forms (Huldah, Hulda, Juldah, Chuldah). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chuldah, Huldah | es: Hulda, Juldah | fr: Chuldah, [חלדה] | de: Chuldah, [חלדה] 2Kgs 22:14; 2Chr 34:22

חֶלְדַּי H2469 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (2×)
Heldai, name of one of David's warriors and a returned exile
Heldai is a personal name appearing in two contexts: as one of David's mighty warriors and as a returned exile in Zechariah's time. The name shows variation with similar forms (Heled, Heleb) in parallel passages, reflecting the common fluidity in spelling of proper names in biblical texts. In 1 Chronicles 27:15, Heldai is listed as a commander for the twelfth month, while Zechariah 6:10 mentions him among those who brought gifts from Babylon. The name may be related to the root meaning 'worldly' or 'transient.'

(2×) A masculine proper name borne by two (or possibly the same) individuals. 1 Chronicles 27:15 identifies Heldai the Netophathite as a military commander, while Zechariah 6:10 speaks of 'Heldai' (called Helem in verse 14) as one who brought silver and gold from the exile. The preposition מִן ('from Heldai') in Zechariah shows the name in construct relationship. The Septuagint variations and parallel forms (Heled, Heleb) illustrate the typical textual fluidity in proper names. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Cheldai, from-Cheldai | es: Heldai, de-Heldai | fr: Heldat, [חלדי] | de: [חלדי], [מחלדי] 1Chr 27:15; Zech 6:10

חָלָה H2470a V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fs (59×)
be sick, be ill; become weak, grow feeble; be grievous (of wounds); make sick, cause illness; feign illness; grieve, suffer pain; be wounded (passive) Covers the spectrum of physical weakness, illness, and debilitation. The basic sense is being sick or ill — like the child in 1 Kings 14:1 who 'became sick,' or Jacob when Joseph heard 'your father is sick' (Genesis 48:1). Can mean losing strength without specific illness, as when Samson says 'I will become weak' (Judges 16:7, 11, 17). The Nifal participle describes wounds as 'grievous' or 'incurable' (Jeremiah 30:12, Nahum 3:19). Causative stems mean making someone sick. The Hitpael describes feigning illness as a ruse (2 Samuel 13). Extends metaphorically to emotional grief or pain ('my grief is incurable,' Jeremiah 15:18).

1. be sick, be ill (27×) Basic Qal state: being physically sick or ill, including becoming sick and having been sick. The fundamental medical sense with 27 occurrences: Genesis 48:1 (Jacob was sick), 1 Kings 14:1 (child became sick), 2 Kings 13:14 (Elisha fell sick with the illness of which he died). Cross-linguistic medical vocabulary consistently applied: Hindi बीमार (sick), Arabic مَرِيض (sick), Korean 병들었다 (became sick), Swahili -ugua (be sick), showing this as the prototypical core meaning. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: became-sick, he-was-sick, sick | es: cuando-estuvo-enfermo, el-enfermo, enferma-de | fr: [חולה], [חלה], devint-malade | de: [החולה], [חולה], [חולת] Gen 48:1; 1Sam 19:14; 1Sam 30:13; 1Kgs 14:1; 1Kgs 14:5

2. become weak, grow feeble (5×) Becoming weak or losing strength, referring to physical debilitation or feebleness distinct from specific illness. Judges 16:7, 11, 17 — Samson's repeated 'I will become weak' uses this verb, and the context is loss of supernatural strength, not sickness. Isaiah 14:10 'you too have become weak as we are' and 57:10 'you did not feel weak' show exhaustion or enfeeblement. Korean 약해지다 (become weak), Hindi कमज़ोर होना (become weak), Arabic ضَعُفْتَ (you weakened). WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: and-I-will-become-weak, you-became-sick, you-have-become-weak | es: desfalleciste, has-sido-debilitado, y-me-debilitaré | fr: et-je-sera-become-faible, être-malade | de: krank-sein, und-ich-wird-become-schwach Judg 16:7; Judg 16:11; Judg 16:17; Isa 14:10; Isa 57:10

3. be grievous, be severe (5×) Nifal participle describing wounds, plagues, or afflictions as grievous, severe, incurable, or painfully destructive. Isaiah 17:11 'incurable pain,' Jeremiah 10:19 'my wound is grievous,' 14:17 'with a very grievous blow,' 30:12 'your hurt is incurable,' Nahum 3:19 'your wound is grievous' — all employ this participial form. Arabic مَرِيضٌ (incurable wound), Spanish dolorosa/grave (painful/serious), showing attributive force applied to the severity of injury. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY
en: Grievous, grievous, sickness | es: dolorosa, enfermedad, grave | fr: héritage, être-malade | de: Erbe, [נחלה] Isa 17:11; Jer 10:19; Jer 14:17; Jer 30:12; Nah 3:19

4. make sick, cause illness (5×) Hifil and Piel causative: making someone become sick, afflicting with illness. Deuteronomy 29:22 'the sicknesses with which the LORD has made it sick,' Hosea 7:5 'they made themselves sick with wine,' Isaiah 53:10 'it pleased the LORD to crush him; he has made him sick.' Korean 병들게 하셨다 (caused to be sick), Arabic مَرَّضَ (made him sick), Hindi बीमार कर दिया (made sick), showing transitive causative force across languages. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: became-sick, have-made-sick, he-made-sick | es: enferma, enfermaron, la-enfermó | fr: fit-sick, être-malade | de: [החלו], [החליתי], [מחלה] Deut 29:22; Prov 13:12; Isa 53:10; Hos 7:5; Mic 6:13

5. be harmful, be distressing (3×) Qal feminine participle used attributively for something (situation, evil) as grievous, distressing, harmful, or painful. Ecclesiastes 5:13, 16 'a grievous evil' (רָעָה חוֹלָה), Jeremiah 4:31 uses the feminine participle possibly for labor pains or anguished distress. The grammatical form (feminine attributive) and semantic application (to abstract evils or conditions) distinguish this from the personal illness of sense 1. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: as-one-in-labor, grievous | es: como-de-mujer-que-da-a-luz, enfermo | fr: être-malade | de: [חולה], krank-sein Eccl 5:13; Eccl 5:16; Jer 4:31

6. be wounded (passive) (3×) Hofal passive: being severely wounded or struck down, typically in battle. 1 Kings 22:34 'I am wounded' (Ahab struck by arrow), 2 Chronicles 18:33 (parallel), 35:23 'I am badly wounded' (Josiah at Megiddo). Arabic جُرِحْتُ (I was wounded), Korean 부상당했다 (was wounded), Hindi घायल हो गया (became wounded). The passive voice and military context (arrows, battle) distinguish this specialized usage from active sickness or weakening. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: I-am-badly-wounded, I-am-wounded | es: estoy-herido, estoy-muy-herido | fr: [החליתי], je-am-wounded | de: [החליתי], ich-am-wounded 1Kgs 22:34; 2Chr 18:33; 2Chr 35:23

7. be weak (Nifal) (3×) Nifal sense of being in a state of weakness or infirmity, sometimes used substantively for 'the weak ones.' Ezekiel 34:4 'you have not strengthened the weak,' 34:21 'you push all the weak with your horns,' Daniel 8:27 'I was sick for days' after the vision. Korean 약한 자들 (the weak ones), Arabic ضُعَفَاء (the weak/feeble), Hindi कमज़ोर लोग (weak people), showing both adjectival and substantival uses of the Nifal participle. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: and-was-sick, the-weak | es: Las-débiles, las-débiles, y-estuve-enfermo | fr: et-être-malade, être-malade | de: [הנחלות], [ונחליתי] Ezek 34:4; Ezek 34:21; Dan 8:27

8. feign illness, pretend sickness (3×) Hitpael reflexive: pretending to be sick, feigning illness as a ruse or deception. All three occurrences are in 2 Samuel 13 where Amnon follows Jonadab's advice: 'lie down and pretend to be ill' (v. 5), 'he made himself ill' (v. 6). Arabic تَعَلَّلَ (feigned illness), Korean 병든 체하다 (pretend to be sick), Spanish hazte enfermo (make yourself sick), showing clearly recognized deceptive/pretense semantics distinct from actual illness. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: and-he-made-himself-ill, and-make-yourself-ill, to-make-himself-ill | es: para-enfermarse, y-hazte-enfermo, y-se-hizo-enfermo | fr: et-fais-toi-même-ill, et-il-fit-lui-même-ill, à-fais-lui-même-ill | de: und-er-machte-sich-selbst-ill, und-mache-dich-selbst-ill, zu-mache-sich-selbst-ill 2Sam 13:2; 2Sam 13:5; 2Sam 13:6

9. grieve, suffer pain (3×) Emotional or psychological suffering: experiencing grief, hurt, or inner pain rather than physical symptoms. 1 Samuel 22:8 'none of you grieves for me' (possibly 'is hurt/pained for me'), Psalm 77:10 'has his steadfast love ceased forever?' (verb form possibly 'my grief'), Proverbs 23:35 'when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again' (drunkard oblivious to pain). Hindi दुखी होना (be grieved), Arabic حَزِنَ (grieved), showing metaphorical extension from physical to emotional affliction. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: I-was-hurt, my-grief, one-grieving | es: enferme, enfermedad-de-mí, quien-sufra | fr: un-grieving, être-malade | de: [חליתי], eins-grieving, mein-grief 1Sam 22:8; Ps 77:10; Prov 23:35

10. be exhausted, wear oneself out (2×) Nifal sense of becoming exhausted, wearied, or worn out through great effort, struggle, or affliction. Jeremiah 12:13 'they have wearied themselves but profit nothing,' Amos 6:6 'but are not grieved over the ruin of Joseph.' Korean 수고하였으나 (toiled but...), Arabic تَعِبُوا (they tired themselves), Hindi थक गए (became exhausted), showing the culmination of effort in depletion. Only 2 occurrences, suggesting specialized or figurative extension of the weakness sense. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: They-have-exhausted-themselves, they-grieve | es: se-afligen, se-esforzaron | fr: être-malade | de: [נחלו], krank-sein Jer 12:13; Amos 6:6

חָלָה H2470b V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (16×)

To entreat, seek favor, appease — to earnestly implore someone's gracious response, especially God's

A Piel verb derived from a root meaning 'to be sweet or pleasant,' used exclusively with the idiom 'make the face of [someone] sweet' — that is, to mollify, appease, or earnestly seek someone's favor. Almost always directed toward God, it appears at pivotal moments of intercession: Moses entreats YHWH after the golden calf (Exod 32:11), Samuel is pressed by Saul at Gilgal (1 Sam 13:12), and the man of God pleads for Jeroboam's withered hand (1 Kgs 13:6). Daniel confesses that Israel failed to entreat the Lord's favor (Dan 9:13), and Malachi ironically commands the priests to 'entreat God's favor' when their offerings are worthless (Mal 1:9). Spanish 'suplicar/implorar' and Korean '간구하다' capture the tone of urgent, humble petition.

entreat, seek favor (16×) To entreat, appease, or earnestly seek someone's favor, literally 'to make the face sweet/pleasant' (Piel of chalah II with penei). Nearly always directed toward YHWH in moments of crisis: Moses after the golden calf (Exod 32:11), the prophet at Bethel for Jeroboam's hand (1 Kgs 13:6), Hezekiah during illness (2 Chr 33:12), and Daniel in exile (Dan 9:13). Zechariah 7:2 and 8:21-22 envision nations coming to entreat YHWH's favor — expanding an Israelite prayer idiom into universal scope. Psalm 119:58 uses it for individual devotion: 'I entreated Your favor with all my heart.' ENTREATY SUPPLICATION

en: I-entreated, I-sought-favor, and-entreat | es: Supliqué, Y-imploró, Y-oró | fr: [ויחל], [חלה], et-entreated | de: [ויחל], [חלה], [חלינו] Exod 32:11; 1Sam 13:12; 1Kgs 13:6; 2Kgs 13:4

חַלָּה H2471 N-fs (14×)

A perforated cake or ring-shaped bread used in Israelite grain offerings and ritual meals.

A feminine noun denoting a specific type of baked offering — likely a perforated or ring-shaped cake, as the name may derive from the root meaning 'to pierce.' All 14 occurrences appear in ritual contexts within the Pentateuch. These cakes are prepared variously: unleavened and mixed with oil for the grain offering (Lev 2:4; 7:12), baked from fine flour for the bread of the Presence (Lev 24:5), offered as firstfruits from dough (Num 15:20), or included in the consecration of priests (Exod 29:2, 23; Lev 8:26). Spanish uses 'torta' throughout, while English consistently renders it 'cake.'

cake, perforated bread (14×) A type of cake or bread, probably perforated or ring-shaped (from the root חלל, 'to bore, pierce'), prepared exclusively for sacrificial and ritual use. Varieties include: unleavened cakes mixed with oil for the grain offering (Lev 2:4; 7:12), fine-flour cakes for the bread of the Presence (Lev 24:5), firstfruit dough offerings (Num 15:20), and priestly consecration bread (Exod 29:2, 23; Lev 8:26). Also distributed to the people during David's celebration when the ark was brought to Jerusalem (2 Sam 6:19). The term is confined to Priestly and related texts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cake-of, and-a-cake-of, and-cake-of | es: la-torta, torta, torta-de | fr: cake, et-cake-de, et-cakes | de: cake, cakes, cakes-von Exod 29:2; Exod 29:23; Lev 2:4; Lev 7:12

חֲלוֹם H2472 Prep-b (64×)

chalom – a dream; a nocturnal vision, often bearing prophetic or revelatory significance

The masculine noun chalom ('dream') denotes the experience of dreaming during sleep, ranging from ordinary nocturnal visions to divinely granted revelations. It appears 64 times, concentrated heavily in Genesis where dreams drive the plot: Joseph's sheaf and star dreams (Gen 37:5-10), the cupbearer's and baker's dreams (Gen 40), and Pharaoh's double dream of famine (Gen 41). BDB identifies two broad uses: ordinary dreams (Job 7:14; Ps 73:20; Eccl 5:2) and prophetic dreams as the 'lowest grade of prophecy.' Cross-lingual renderings converge neatly – Spanish sueno, French songe, German Traum – all capturing a single semantic core without subdivision.

dream, nocturnal vision (64×) A dream experienced during sleep, encompassing both ordinary nocturnal visions and divinely sent revelatory dreams. The prophetic dream is a major narrative engine in Genesis, driving the Joseph cycle (Gen 37:5-20; 40:5-41:32) and the Abimelech and Laban episodes (Gen 20:3; 31:24). Spanish sueno, French songe, and German Traum all render it uniformly. The 64 occurrences across multiple grammatical forms (absolute, construct, suffixed) show no semantic differentiation – the word is monosemous, with prophetic versus ordinary use determined by context rather than lexical distinction. DREAM VISION

en: a-dream, dream, dream-of | es: el-sueño, sueño, sueño-de | fr: le-songe, songe, songe-de | de: [חלום], der-Traum, ein-Traum Gen 20:3; Gen 20:6; Gen 31:10; Gen 31:11; Gen 31:24

חֹלוֹן H2473 N-proper-fs (3×)

Holon: city in Judah and Moab

A place name appearing in two distinct geographical contexts. In Judah, Holon was a city in the hill country given to the Levites as one of the priestly cities. In Moab, a different Holon appears in Jeremiah's oracle against Moab. The dual usage may represent two separate locations sharing the same name, a common phenomenon in ancient Near Eastern geography. The Judahite Holon corresponds to Hilen in the parallel passage in Chronicles, showing textual variation in transmission.

(3×) A city name appearing in both Judahite and Moabite contexts. Joshua 15:51 lists Holon among the hill country cities of Judah, while Joshua 21:15 designates it as a Levitical city (= Hilen in 1 Chronicles 6:43). Jeremiah 48:21 mentions a Moabite Holon in an oracle of judgment. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish Holón/Jolón, French/English Holon) maintain transliteration, treating it as a proper geographical designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cholon, Holon, and-Cholon | es: Holón, Jolón, y-Holón | fr: Holon, [וחלון], et-Cholon | de: Holon, [חלון], und-Cholon Josh 15:51; Josh 21:15; Jer 48:21

חַלּוֹן H2474 Conj-w (32×)

window — an opening in a wall or structure for light, air, and observation

Challon denotes a window, an opening cut into a wall for light and air, appearing 32 times from the ark to Ezekiel's temple. Noah opens the window of the ark to release the raven and the dove (Gen 8:6), the first biblical window and already a threshold between enclosed safety and the unknown world. Rahab lowers the Israelite spies through her window in the Jericho wall (Josh 2:15), and Michal watches David dancing through one (2 Sam 6:16). The word carries narrative tension: Jezebel looks out through the window before her death (2 Kgs 9:30), and the mother of Sisera peers through the lattice awaiting a son who will never return (Judg 5:28). In Ezekiel 40-46 the word shifts to architectural specification, describing the narrowing windows of the ideal temple. Across languages the rendering is uniform: Spanish 'ventana,' French 'fenetre,' German 'Fenster.'

window, opening in wall (32×) An opening in a wall for light, ventilation, and observation, used of domestic, military, and sacred architecture. Narrative windows serve as dramatic focal points: Noah's ark window (Gen 8:6), Rahab's escape route (Josh 2:15), Michal watching David (2 Sam 6:16), Jezebel's fatal appearance (2 Kgs 9:30). In Ezekiel's temple visions (40:16-46:2), the word becomes a technical architectural term for narrowing apertures. WINDOW OPENING

en: and-the-windows, and-windows, in-the-window | es: Y-ventanas, en-la-ventana, la-ventana | fr: [הַחַלּוֹן], dans-le-fenêtre, et-fenêtre | de: das-Fenster, der-Fenster, in-der-Fenster Gen 8:6; Gen 26:8; Josh 2:15; Josh 2:18; Josh 2:21

חָלוֹף H2475 N-ms (1×)

passing away, vanishing (those who are transitory, Proverbs 31:8)

This noun, properly an infinitive form, means 'passing away' or 'vanishing,' used substantively to describe transitory people. Proverbs 31:8 speaks of pleading for 'the sons of passing away' - those who are vulnerable, dying, or fading from existence. The term emphasizes the temporary, fragile nature of human life, particularly those near death or in dire circumstances.

(1×) Found only in Proverbs 31:8 in the phrase 'sons of passing-away' (Spanish 'destrucción' = destruction). This refers to people in a transitory, vulnerable state - perhaps the dying, the condemned, or those fading from memory and society. The context calls for advocacy on behalf of those who have no voice and are slipping away. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: passing-away | es: destrucción | fr: חלוף | de: [חלוף] Prov 31:8

חֲלוּשָׁה H2476 N-fs (1×)

weakness, defeat (the sound of those being defeated, Exodus 32:18)

This noun means 'weakness' or 'prostration,' particularly in defeat. Exodus 32:18 contrasts 'the sound of answering weakness' with 'the sound of answering strength,' referring to the different cries heard in victory versus defeat. Moses uses this term to describe what he does not hear from the camp - the sound of those being routed in battle.

(1×) Appears exclusively in Exodus 32:18 in Moses' threefold distinction of sounds. The phrase 'sound of weakness' (Spanish 'derrota' = defeat) describes the cry of those being vanquished, opposite to 'strength/victory.' Moses declares he hears neither victory nor defeat songs, but rather the sound of revelry - the golden calf celebration. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4977 WITH 3 SENSES

en: weakness | es: derrota | fr: weakness | de: weakness Exod 32:18

חֲלַח H2477 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (3×)

Halah: Assyrian district where Israelite exiles were settled

A city or district under Assyrian control where Israelite captives were deported following the fall of Samaria in 722 BC. The location is mentioned in the historical accounts of the Assyrian exile alongside the Habor river and the cities of the Medes. Scholars have identified it with Ḫalaḫḫu in Mesopotamia, though some have suggested Cilicia. The name marks one of the tragic destinations of the northern kingdom's deportation, representing the scattering of Israel among the nations.

(3×) An Assyrian-controlled territory serving as a destination for deported Israelites. 2 Kings 17:6 and 18:11 describe identical deportations 'to Halah and Habor,' while 1 Chronicles 5:26 includes Halah in the list of exile locations for the Transjordanian tribes. The preposition לְ (to/in) typically accompanies the name, indicating direction or location. Transliterations vary slightly (Spanish Jalaj/Halaj, English Halah), but consistently preserve the consonantal structure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chalach, in-Chalach | es: a-Jalaj, en-Halaj | fr: [לְחַלַח], dans-Chalach | de: [לְחַלַח], in-Chalach 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 18:11; 1Chr 5:26

חַלְחוּל H2478 N-proper-fs (1×)

Chalchul, a town in the hill country of Judah near Hebron

Chalchul was a settlement in the tribal allotment of Judah, mentioned in Joshua's geographical catalogue. Located in the hill country approximately four miles north of Hebron, this town has been identified with modern Halhul. The site preserves the ancient name through continuous inhabitation, a common pattern for place names in this region of Judah's highlands.

(1×) A proper name for a specific town in Judah's inheritance. The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration (Chalchul, Jaljul, Chalchul) reflecting recognition of this as a geographic proper noun. Joshua 15:58 places it among the hill country settlements, and archaeological and geographical studies confirm the location near Hebron. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chalchul | es: Jaljul | fr: Chalchul | de: Chalchul Josh 15:58

חַלְחָלָה H2479 Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

Anguish, writhing pain; severe physical or emotional distress likened to labor pangs, gripping the loins.

A vivid noun for anguish or writhing pain, always associated with the loins (מָתְנַיִם) — the seat of strength in Hebrew anatomy. When חַלְחָלָה fills the loins, it signals complete collapse of physical and emotional composure. Isaiah 21:3 uses it of the prophet's own bodily response to the vision of Babylon's fall. Nahum 2:10 and Ezekiel 30:4, 9 deploy it for the terror that will seize nations at God's judgment. Spanish angustia and French tremblement ('trembling') both capture the visceral, bodily quality of this distress.

(4×) Anguish or writhing pain, a severe convulsive distress that grips the loins. In Isaiah 21:3, the prophet's loins are filled with חַלְחָלָה as he receives the terrifying oracle against Babylon — a physical manifestation of prophetic burden. In Nahum 2:10, the fall of Nineveh brings this same anguish to every face and every set of loins. Ezekiel 30:4, 9 extends this to Egypt and Ethiopia, where anguish accompanies the sword's devastation. The reduplicative form (from חול, 'to writhe') intensifies the sense of convulsive, labor-like pain. Spanish dolor ('pain') and French tremblement confirm the bodily, visceral quality. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: and-anguish, anguish | es: angustia, de-angustia, y-dolor | fr: [חַלְחָלָה], et-tremblement | de: [וחַלְחָלָה], [חַלְחָלָה] Isa 21:3; Ezek 30:4; Ezek 30:9; Nah 2:10

חָלַט H2480 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

to snatch, catch (a word from someone's lips)

This rare verb describes the rapid seizing of something, particularly used metaphorically for catching words as they're spoken. In 1 Kings 20:33, Ben-hadad's servants eagerly seized upon Ahab's casual reference to 'my brother,' interpreting it as a sign of mercy. The image is of alert listeners who quickly grasp and act upon a favorable word before it can be retracted.

(1×) To snatch or catch something quickly, especially words from someone's mouth. The context in 1 Kings shows diplomatic agents watching carefully for any sign of clemency. Spanish 'tomaron' (took/seized) and English 'caught' both capture the sudden, opportunistic action. The verb appears only once, making this a memorable snapshot of ancient Near Eastern diplomacy. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: and-caught | es: y-tomaron | fr: et-attrapa | de: und-caught 1Kgs 20:33

חֲלִי H2481 N-mp (2×)

ornament, jewelry; precious adornment worn on the body

This noun denotes ornamental jewelry or precious adornments worn on the body. In Proverbs 25:12, it appears in a comparison: 'Like a gold ring or an ornament of fine gold is a wise reprover to a listening ear.' In Song of Songs 7:1, it describes the beauty of the beloved's graceful movements with jeweled ornaments. The term emphasizes the precious, decorative nature of fine jewelry, whether rings, necklaces, or other body adornments.

(2×) Ornament or jewelry, particularly fine or precious adornments. Proverbs 25:12 uses the singular in parallel with 'a ring of gold,' specifically 'an ornament of fine gold,' to illustrate the value of wise rebuke. Song of Songs 7:1 employs the plural 'ornaments' (or 'jewels') in describing the beloved's beauty. The multilingual glosses consistently point to precious jewelry or ornamental objects ('ornament,' 'joyas,' 'joyaux'), with the context determining whether the reference is to a single piece or multiple adornments. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-an-ornament-of, ornaments | es: joyas, y-adorno-de- | fr: des-joyaux,, et-joyau | de: [וחלי], [חלאים] Prov 25:12; Song 7:1

חֲלִי H2482 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Chali, a town in the tribal territory of Asher

Chali was one of the settlements assigned to the tribe of Asher in the northern coastal region of Canaan. Listed in Joshua 19:25 among Asher's inheritance, its precise location remains unknown to modern scholarship. Like many minor settlements mentioned only once in boundary lists, this town's exact site has been lost to history, though it once marked a point in Asher's territorial description.

(1×) A place name within Asher's allotment. The multilingual glosses (Chali, Halí, Chali) consistently treat this as a proper noun requiring transliteration rather than translation. Joshua 19:25 provides the sole biblical reference, situating it within the geographical framework of northern Israel's tribal territories. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chali | es: y-Halí | fr: et-Chali | de: und-Chali Josh 19:25

חֳלִי H2483 Conj-w / N-ms (24×)

Sickness, disease, illness – physical malady or affliction, sometimes metaphorical for national distress

Denotes physical sickness or disease in its various manifestations, from the fatal illness of a widow's son (1 Kgs 17:17) to the chronic foot disease of King Asa (2 Chr 16:12) to the collective plagues threatened in the Deuteronomic covenant curses (Deut 7:15; 28:59, 61). The word reaches its theological depth in Isaiah 53:3-4, where the Suffering Servant is described as one 'acquainted with sickness' who has borne 'our diseases.' Hosea 5:13 extends it metaphorically to the spiritual sickness of a wayward nation that seeks healing from Assyria rather than from God. Multilingual glosses converge cleanly: Spanish enfermedad, German Krankheit, pointing to a concrete, recognizable concept across cultures.

sickness, disease (24×) Physical sickness, disease, or illness affecting individuals or communities. Appears in covenantal contexts for plagues God will inflict or withhold (Deut 7:15; 28:59, 61), and in narrative for specific afflictions: the fatal illness of the widow's son at Zarephath (1 Kgs 17:17), Ahaziah's injury (2 Kgs 1:2), Elisha's terminal sickness (2 Kgs 13:14), and Asa's diseased feet (2 Chr 16:12). Reaches its theological summit in Isaiah 53:3-4, where the Servant vicariously bears human suffering, parallel to makh'ov ('pain'). Metaphorically applied to national distress in Hosea 5:13 and Isaiah 1:5, signaling spiritual decay that no human alliance can heal. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-his-sickness, and-sickness, from-his-sickness | es: con-enfermedad, de-enfermedad-de-mí, de-mi-enfermedad | fr: [בחליו], [חליו], [לחלי] | de: Krankheit, [בחליו], [וחלי] Deut 7:15; Deut 28:59; Deut 28:61; 1Kgs 17:17; 2Kgs 1:2

חֶלְיָה H2484 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

jewelry, ornament

This feminine noun denotes personal adornment, specifically ornamental jewelry. Hosea 2:13 uses it alongside 'earring' to represent the finery that Israel adorned herself with while pursuing false lovers (the Baals). The prophet's imagery draws on the language of personal adornment to depict Israel's spiritual adultery—she decorated herself for idols rather than for her true husband, Yahweh.

(1×) Personal ornaments or jewelry worn for adornment. The single occurrence pairs it with nose-ring or earring, suggesting items of feminine decoration. French 'bague' (ring) and Spanish 'joya' (jewel) reflect the ornamental nature. The prophetic context uses such luxury items symbolically to convey unfaithfulness and misplaced affection. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-her-jewelry | es: y-su-joya | fr: et-bague | de: [וחליתה] Hos 2:13

חָלִיל H2485 Prep-b (6×)

A flute or reed pipe — a wind instrument used in both celebration and mourning.

A masculine noun for a wind instrument, likely a reed flute or pipe. It appears in festive contexts — the people playing flutes at Solomon's coronation so loudly the earth shook (1 Kgs 1:40) — and in lists of instruments at feasts (Isa 5:12). Isaiah 30:29 pairs it with joyful night processions to God's mountain. Yet Jeremiah 48:36 uses its sound as a simile for mourning over Moab, showing the flute served both celebration and lament in ancient Israel.

flute, pipe (6×) A flute or reed pipe — a wind instrument for both joyful and sorrowful occasions. Spanish 'flauta(s)' and English 'flutes' confirm the consistent identification as a wind instrument. Used in Samuel's description of prophetic bands (1 Sam 10:5), Solomon's coronation festivities (1 Kgs 1:40), Isaiah's critique of banquets (Isa 5:12), and a joyful pilgrimage procession (Isa 30:29). Jeremiah 48:36 turns it to lament, where the flute's wail sounds for Moab's destruction — demonstrating the instrument's dual emotional register. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: and-flute, like-flutes, on-flutes | es: como-flautas, con-flauta, con-flautas | fr: [בחליל], [וחליל], [כחלילים] | de: [בחליל], [וחליל], [כחלילים] 1Sam 10:5; 1Kgs 1:40; Isa 5:12; Isa 30:29; Jer 48:36

חָלִילָה H2486 Interjection / 3fs (21×)

Far be it! — an exclamation of strong repudiation, rejecting something as profane or abhorrent

A forceful exclamation derived from the root meaning 'to profane,' literally something like 'to the profane place with that!' It expresses horrified rejection of a proposed action, functioning as a solemn oath of refusal. Abraham uses it twice when pleading with God over Sodom (Gen 18:25), Joseph's brothers invoke it to deny theft (Gen 44:7, 17), and David employs it when refusing to harm the Lord's anointed (1 Sam 26:11). Often strengthened by 'from the LORD' to underscore that the rejected act would violate divine order.

far be (21×) An interjection expressing vehement moral or religious repudiation — 'far be it from me/you/us!' Constructed with the locative -ah ending on a root associated with profanation, it casts the contemplated action into the realm of the utterly unacceptable. Typically paired with a lamed of person and min-plus-infinitive of the deprecated act. Spanish 'lejos sea' and French 'loin être cela' capture the distancing force. Used in covenant contexts (Gen 44:17; Josh 24:16), royal self-restraint (1 Sam 26:11; 2 Sam 23:17), and theological argument (Gen 18:25; Job 27:5). STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: Far-be-it, far-be-it | es: Lejos-de-nosotros, Lejos-sea, lejos-de-mí | fr: Far-être-il, loin-être-cela, loin-être-il | de: Far-sein-es, [חלילה], [חללה] Gen 18:25; Gen 44:7; Gen 44:17; Josh 22:29

חֲלִיפָה H2487 N-fpc (12×)

A change of garments (given as gift or prize); a shift, relief, or turn of duty

Derived from the root ḥālap ('to change, pass on, renew'), ḥălīpāh most often refers to a 'change of clothing' — a set of garments given as a gift or wagered as a prize. Joseph sends his brothers home with changes of garments, giving Benjamin five sets (Gen 45:22). Samson's riddle-wager at his wedding involves thirty changes of clothing (Judg 14:12–13, 19). Beyond textiles, the word also denotes a shift or relief in the broader sense: Solomon's labor gangs rotated in shifts (1 Kgs 5:14), Job longs for his 'relief' from hard service (Job 14:14), and the wicked are described as those 'with whom there are no changes' — no upheaval of fortune (Ps 55:19).

1. change of garments (8×) A change or set of garments, typically presented as a gift of honor or wagered as a prize. The plural ḥălīpōt śemālōt / begādīm ('changes of garments') appears in gift-giving and wager contexts. Joseph's generosity to Benjamin (Gen 45:22) and Samson's riddle-stakes (Judg 14:12–13, 19) illustrate this usage, as does Naaman's offer to Gehazi (2 Kgs 5:5, 22–23). Spanish 'mudas de ropa' and the multilingual pattern of 'changes-of' translations confirm the garment-set meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: changes-of, the-changes | es: las-mudas, mudas-de | fr: changes-de, le-changes | de: Wechselkleider, changes-von, der-changes Gen 45:22; Judg 14:12; Judg 14:13; Judg 14:19

2. relief, change, shift (4×) A change, shift, relief, or turn of duty in a more abstract sense. Solomon organized Lebanon timber workers in monthly shifts or relays (1 Kgs 5:14). Job uses the word metaphorically for the relief or release he awaits after death's hard service (Job 14:14). In Job 10:17 God sends fresh troops — 'changes and warfare' — against him. Psalm 55:19 describes the complacent wicked as those 'with whom there are no changes,' meaning no reversals of fortune. Spanish 'turnos/relevo' and French 'changement' capture this general sense of alternation or relief. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: change, changes, in-shifts | es: cambios, mi-relevo, por-turnos | fr: change-ment, dans-shifts, mon-חליפתי-moi | de: [חליפות], [חליפתי], change 1Kgs 5:14; Job 10:17; Job 14:14; Ps 55:19

חֲלִיצָה H2488 N-fpc / 3mp (2×)

armor, equipment, spoil; what is stripped from a person as plunder in war

This noun refers to equipment, armor, or spoils stripped from someone in battle. It appears only with possessive suffixes, always denoting what is taken from defeated enemies. In Judges 14:19, Samson takes the garments of thirty Philistines he killed. In 2 Samuel 2:21, Joab's brother Asahel is told to seize the armor of one of the young men instead of pursuing Abner. The term emphasizes the military context of plundering the defeated.

(2×) Armor, equipment, or spoils stripped from enemies in warfare. Judges 14:19 uses 'their equipment' (what Samson took from the thirty men he struck down to pay his wager), while 2 Samuel 2:21 has 'his armor' (the equipment Asahel could have taken from a younger warrior). The multilingual glosses show both the military gear sense ('armor,' 'armure,' 'Rüstung') and the plunder aspect ('spoil,' 'despojo,' 'despojos'), reflecting the dual nuance of equipment taken as war booty. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: his-armor, their-equipment | es: despojo-suyo, sus-despojos | fr: leur-equipment, son-armure | de: ihr-equipment, sein-Ruestung Judg 14:19; 2Sam 2:21

חֻלְכָה H2489 Adj-mp (3×)

helpless, hapless, unfortunate ones

An obscure term appearing only in Psalm 10, describing vulnerable people targeted by the wicked. The exact meaning is uncertain, with significant textual questions surrounding the word. Ancient versions understood it as referring to the poor or hapless, while the Masoretic tradition (reflected in Qere readings) attempted alternative interpretations involving armies or dejected groups. Most modern interpreters favor seeing it as an adjective meaning 'helpless' or 'unfortunate,' describing those who are easy prey for oppressors. The context consistently portrays victims of violence and exploitation.

(3×) Helpless or unfortunate individuals who are victims of oppression. All three occurrences fall within Psalm 10:8-14, describing the wicked who lie in wait 'for the helpless,' murder them, and crush them. The textual difficulties (including ketiv/qere variations) reflect ancient uncertainty about this rare word. Greek, Syriac, and Aramaic versions all understood it in terms of poverty or affliction. The Spanish desvalido ('helpless') and French malheureux ('unfortunate') capture the vulnerability implied. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv], for-the-helpless, the-helpless | es: [desvalidos], al-desvalido, el-desvalido | fr: malheureux, à-malheureux | de: [ketiv], der-hilflos, für-der-hilflos Ps 10:8; Ps 10:10; Ps 10:14

H2490 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp / 3ms (1×)

and they shall profane it (with suffix)

This Piel form with third masculine singular suffix means 'they shall profane it' or 'desecrate it.' Ezekiel 7:21 uses it to describe how foreigners will desecrate Israel's treasured sanctuary when God gives it into their hands as plunder. The verb conveys the deliberate defilement of what was previously holy, a recurring theme in prophetic descriptions of judgment.

(1×) To profane or desecrate something holy, with the suffix referring to the sanctuary. Spanish provides both Kethiv and Qere readings, showing textual awareness. The multilingual evidence (profane, profanarán, profaner) consistently conveys defilement. Ezekiel's oracle uses this to depict the ultimate humiliation: the holy place given over to those who will treat it as common. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: (and-they-shall-profane-it) | es: (qere:y-lo-profanarán) | fr: et-profaner | de: [וחללוהו] Ezek 7:21

חָלַל H2490a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (6×)

pierce, wound fatally; profane, defile what is sacred

A verb whose primary physical sense is to bore through or pierce, often with fatal consequences. In one of Scripture's most theologically charged verses, the Servant is 'pierced for our transgressions' (Isa 53:5, Pual), while God's hand 'pierced the fleeing serpent' (Job 26:13). The psalmist's cry 'my heart is pierced within me' (Ps 109:22) internalizes the wound as anguish. A secondary sense moves into the sacral realm: in Ezek 28:9, the proud king of Tyre faces 'those who profane you,' where piercing becomes desecration.

1. pierce, wound fatally (5×) To bore through, pierce, or wound mortally, whether physically or metaphorically. Applied to cosmic combat (Job 26:13, piercing the serpent), vicarious suffering (Isa 53:5, the Servant pierced for transgressions), and inner anguish (Ps 109:22, the heart pierced within). Spanish distinguishes nicely: 'fue herido' (was wounded) for Isaiah, 'atravesados' (transfixed) for those slain in Ezek 32:26, and 'formo' (formed/pierced) for Job's primordial imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-pierced, pierced, slain-of | es: atravesados-de, formó, fue-herido | fr: [מחוללת], [מחלל], commencer | de: [חללה], [מחוללת], [מחלל] Job 26:13; Ps 109:22; Isa 51:9; Isa 53:5; Ezek 32:26

2. profane, defile (1×) To profane, violate, or defile what is sacred, treating the holy as common. Attested in the Piel participle in Ezek 28:9, where the king of Tyre will be confronted by 'those profaning you.' Spanish 'los que te profanen' and English 'those profaning you' both render the sacral violation clearly. This sense is sometimes treated as a separate root (chalal II) in standard lexica. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: those-profaning-you | es: los-que-te-profanen | fr: commencer | de: [מחלליך] Ezek 28:9

חָלַל H2490b Prep-k / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

to play the pipe, to pipe; denominative verb from the word for flute

This denominative verb, derived from the noun for flute or pipe (חלילי), means to play the pipe or flute. It appears in two celebratory contexts: Solomon's coronation in 1 Kings 1:40, where the people piped with pipes in joyful celebration, and Psalm 87:7, which mentions both singers and pipe-players (or possibly dancers, as the form is ambiguous and could also derive from the root meaning to dance). The verb captures the festive, musical atmosphere of celebration.

(2×) To play the pipe or flute in celebration. 1 Kings 1:40 describes the people's response to Solomon being anointed: 'and the people piped with pipes and rejoiced with great joy.' Psalm 87:7 mentions 'as well the singers as the pipe-players,' though some interpret this as 'dancers' from a different root. The Assyrian cognate ḫâlalu supports the meaning of pipe-playing, and the context in both passages is festive celebration with music. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: as-dancers, playing | es: como-danzantes, tocando-flautas | fr: comme-percer, jouant | de: playing, wie-dancers 1Kgs 1:40; Ps 87:7

חָלַל H2490c Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf / 3ms (134×)

Piel: to profane, defile, desecrate; Hifil: to begin; Nifal/Pual: be profaned; also to treat fruit as common

A remarkable homograph that bundles two distinct roots under one consonantal form. Root II חלל in the Piel means to profane or desecrate — violating what is sacred, whether God's name (Lev 19:12), the Sabbath (Exod 31:14), or a sanctuary (Ezek 7:24). Root I חלל in the Hifil means to begin, deriving from the Arabic sense of 'untying, loosening, opening' — starting something new by releasing it from its prior state. The connection may lie in the idea of removing the sacred boundary that marks something as set apart, thus either 'profaning' it or 'opening' it for use. German 'entweihen' (desecrate) and 'anfing' (began) show how sharply the two senses diverge, yet Spanish 'profanar' and 'comenzar' sit side by side throughout the Hebrew Bible.

1. Piel: profane, defile (active) (65×) The Piel intensive 'profane, defile, desecrate' — the primary active cultic sense with 65 occurrences. Leviticus concentrates the usage: profaning the Sabbath (Exod 31:14), God's name (Lev 19:12, 20:3), one's daughter by prostitution (Lev 19:29), or priestly holiness (Lev 21). Ezekiel echoes the theme with Jerusalem's profanation of the sanctuary. German 'entweihen' and Spanish 'profanar' consistently render this sense. The verb presupposes the holiness code — something can only be profaned if it first belongs to the sacred realm, making this verb the opposite of קדשׁ (to consecrate). RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: and-profane, and-they-shall-defile, and-they-shall-profane | es: para-profanar, profanaron, profanará | fr: et-profaner, il-devra-profaner, ils-devra-profaner | de: [לחלל], entweihen, er-soll-entweihen Exod 31:14; Lev 18:21; Lev 19:12; Lev 19:29; Lev 20:3

2. Hifil: begin, start (56×) The Hifil inchoative 'begin, start' — 56 occurrences making it the second most frequent sense. Genesis 4:26 records humanity beginning to call on the LORD's name; Genesis 6:1 marks when humankind 'began' to multiply; Genesis 9:20 introduces Noah as the one who 'began' to be a farmer. Spanish 'comenzó/empezó' and French 'commença' render this uniformly. The Arabic cognate ḥalla (untie, loosen, make free) illuminates the semantic bridge: to begin is to 'open up' an activity, releasing it into existence. This sense is morphologically distinct (Hifil stem) from the Piel profane sense. BEGIN START

en: and-began, began, he-began | es: comenzaron, comenzó, empezó | fr: began, commença, et-commença | de: [החלו], anfing, began Gen 4:26; Gen 6:1; Gen 9:20; Gen 10:8; Gen 11:6

3. Nifal/Pual: be profaned (passive) (7×) Nifal and Pual passive forms: to be profaned, defiled, or desecrated — the passive counterpart of sense 1 with 7 occurrences. Ezekiel dominates: 'my holy places were profaned' (Ezek 7:24), 'you shall be profaned in the sight of the nations' (Ezek 22:16), 'her priests have profaned and I am profaned among them' (Ezek 22:26). Isaiah 48:11 asks 'how should my name be profaned?' Spanish 'serás profanada' and German 'entweihen' in passive constructions render these forms. Leviticus 21:4 and 21:9 provide legal contexts where priestly sanctity is passively compromised. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: and-I-am-profaned, and-shall-be-profaned, and-you-shall-be-profaned | es: Y-serás-profanada, el-profanado, fue-profanado | fr: et-profaner, profaner, à-profaner-lui-même | de: entweihen, und-entweihen, zu-entweihen-sich-selbst Lev 21:4; Isa 48:11; Ezek 7:24; Ezek 22:16; Ezek 22:26

4. Piel: use fruit, treat as common (4×) A specialized Piel agricultural-legal usage: to treat newly planted fruit as common, i.e., to 'de-consecrate' produce after its period of orlah (uncircumcision). Deuteronomy 20:6 asks 'who has planted a vineyard and not yet used its fruit (חִלְּלוֹ)?' — referring to the fifth-year release after three years of forbidden fruit and one of sacred offering. Deuteronomy 28:30 threatens the curse of planting but never enjoying. Jeremiah 31:5 promises restoration when planters 'shall use the fruit.' Spanish 'la disfrutarás' (you will enjoy it) captures the positive release from sacred restriction. This sense bridges the profane and begin meanings — the fruit transitions from sacred to common, 'beginning' its availability for ordinary use. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-they-will-enjoy, has-used-its-fruit, shall-use-its-fruit | es: la-disfrutarás, la-disfrute, la-disfrutó? | fr: a-used-son-fruit, devra-use-son-fruit, et-profaner | de: du-use-sein-Frucht, hat-used-sein-Frucht, soll-use-sein-Frucht Deut 20:6; Deut 28:30; Jer 31:5

5. Hifil: profane, break (covenant) (2×) A rare Hifil causative of the profane root (distinct from the Hifil 'begin'): to cause to be profaned, to violate or break a vow or covenant. Numbers 30:2 stipulates that a man 'shall not profane (יַחֵל) his word' — he must keep his oath intact. Ezekiel 39:7 records God's declaration 'I will not let my holy name be profaned (אַחֵל) any more.' Spanish 'profanará' and 'profanaré' render these consistently as causative desecration. The distinction from sense 1 (Piel) is both morphological (Hifil stem) and semantic (focus on covenant violation rather than cultic defilement). RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: he-shall-break, will-I-profane | es: profanará, profanaré | fr: il-devra-briser, profaner | de: entweihen, er-soll-Umbruch Num 30:2; Ezek 39:7

חָלָל H2491a Prep-m / N-mpc (90×)

One who is pierced, slain, or fatally wounded; a battlefield casualty or corpse left by violence.

The noun חָלָל derives from the root חלל 'to pierce, bore through' and designates someone who has been violently pierced—typically fatally. In the vast majority of its 90 occurrences, the word refers to the battle-dead, those slain by the sword. The phrase חַלְלֵי חָרֶב ('slain of the sword') recurs like a grim refrain through Ezekiel's oracles against the nations. A smaller set of passages preserves the earlier, more literal nuance of being wounded or pierced without necessarily implying death (Job 24:12; Prov 7:26). Arabic cognate evidence (قتيل 'killed' vs. جريح 'wounded') helps confirm the distinction. In Deut 21:1-6, the word shifts toward 'corpse'—the physical remains of the slain.

1. slain, fatally pierced (74×) The dominant sense across roughly 74 occurrences: a person or persons killed in battle or by violence. The multilingual glosses converge strongly—Arabic قتلى 'killed ones,' Spanish 'los muertos,' French 'tué,' German 'Erschlagener.' Often used collectively in the plural (חֲלָלִים) for heaps of battlefield dead, as in Num 23:24 and throughout Ezekiel 30-32. The construct chain חַלְלֵי חָרֶב ('slain of the sword') in Isa 22:2, Jer 14:18, and frequently in Ezekiel marks this as the standard biblical term for war casualties. SLAIN WOUNDED

en: slain, slain-by-, slain-of | es: heridos, los-heridos, los-muertos-a | fr: blessé | de: Erschlagener Num 23:24; Deut 32:42; Josh 11:6; Judg 20:31; Judg 20:39

2. wounded, pierced (injured) (11×) About 11 occurrences foreground the wounding or piercing rather than death itself. Arabic جريح/جرحى ('wounded') and Spanish 'herido' ('injured') in these contexts distinguish this from outright killing. Proverbs 7:26 uses חָלָל metaphorically for those 'pierced' by the seductress—brought low rather than literally killed. Job 24:12 speaks of the wounded groaning, emphasizing ongoing suffering. The 1 Sam 17:52 reference to those who fell along the road may include the wounded alongside the dead. SLAIN WOUNDED

en: Your-wounded-ones, are-the-slain, like-the-wounded | es: atravesado, como-herido, el-herido | fr: blessé, il-a-profané, tué | de: Erschlagener, [חללים], [כחלל] Judg 9:40; 1Sam 17:52; Job 24:12; Ps 69:26; Prov 7:26

3. corpse, carcass (5×) A small cluster (about 5 occurrences in Deut 21:1-6 and Ps 89:10) shifts the focus from the event of killing to the resulting physical remains—the corpse or carcass. Korean 시체 ('corpse') and English 'carcass' in the gloss evidence support this reading. In the Deuteronomy passage, the legal procedure concerns what to do with a found body, making the physical-object sense primary. Psalm 89:10 (Rahab crushed 'like a corpse') similarly emphasizes the inert, defeated body. DEATH AND CORPSES
en: like-a-carcass, slain-one, the-slain-one | es: caído, como-traspasado, el-caído | fr: comme-blessé, le-mis-à-mort-un, mis-à-mort-un | de: der-erschlagen-eins, erschlagen-eins, wie-ein-carcass Deut 21:1; Deut 21:2; Deut 21:3; Deut 21:6; Ps 89:10

חָלָל H2491b N-mpc (4×)

Profaned, defiled, dishonored; a person rendered ceremonially or morally polluted, distinct from חָלָל I ('slain').
An adjective meaning profaned or defiled, distinct from the much more common חָלָל I ('pierced, slain'). Where חָלָל I refers to battlefield casualties, this word describes persons rendered ceremonially or morally polluted. In Leviticus 21:7, 14, it applies to a woman who has been sexually dishonored — a priest may not marry such a woman. In Ezekiel 21:25, 29, it characterizes a 'profaned wicked one,' likely a ruler whose authority has been desecrated through unfaithfulness. Spanish profano and French souillé ('defiled') consistently render the pollution sense rather than the slaying sense.

(4×) Profaned, defiled, or dishonored — describing a person rendered ceremonially or morally unclean. In Leviticus 21:7, 14, the feminine חֲלָלָה denotes a woman who has been sexually dishonored; the Holiness Code forbids priests from marrying such women (alongside divorcees and prostitutes). In Ezekiel 21:25, 29, the masculine form addresses a 'profaned wicked one' — likely Zedekiah, whose kingship is desecrated. Spanish profano and French souillé both capture the pollution and degradation sense, distinguishing this from the homonym meaning 'slain in battle.' SLAIN WOUNDED
en: and-a-defiled-woman, and-defiled, slain | es: profano, profanos, y-profanada | fr: et-souilla, et-un-souilla-femme, il-a-profané | de: [חלל], [חללי], und-ein-verunreinigte-Frau Lev 21:7; Lev 21:14; Ezek 21:25; Ezek 21:29

חָלַם H2492a V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (2×)

to be healthy, strong; to become strong or restore to health
This verb means to be or become healthy and strong. It appears in Job 39:4, describing wild animals' young that grow strong in the open field, and in Isaiah 38:16, where Hezekiah asks God to restore him to health. The root is common in cognate languages (Aramaic, Syriac) with the sense of healing and strengthening. The Hiphil form in Isaiah carries the causative sense: 'make me healthy, restore me to health.'

(2×) To be or become healthy and strong. Job 39:4 uses the Qal imperfect: 'Their young ones become strong (or healthy), they grow up in the open field.' Isaiah 38:16 employs the Hiphil: 'restore me to health and make me live,' parallel to 'make me live.' The multilingual glosses sometimes confuse this with חלם 'to dream' (French 'rêver'), but the context clearly supports health and strength. Spanish 'Se fortalecen' (they become strong) and 'me sanarás' (you will heal me) accurately capture the meaning. HEALING ACTIVITY
en: and-make-me-live, become-strong | es: Se-fortalecen, y-me-sanarás | fr: [ותחלימני], rêver | de: [ותחלימני], [יחלמו] Job 39:4; Isa 38:16

חָלַם H2492b V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (28×)

To dream; of ordinary sleep-visions and especially prophetic or revelatory dreams; as a participle, a dreamer.
The Hebrew verb chalam carries the weight of the ancient world's conviction that dreams were more than nocturnal brain activity — they were encounters with the divine. From Joseph's youthful visions of bowing sheaves (Gen 37:5-9) to Pharaoh's ominous cattle and grain (Gen 41:1), and from Daniel's apocalyptic night-visions to the prophetic warning of Deuteronomy 13, this verb spans the entire biblical dream landscape. The multilingual evidence is telling: Spanish consistently uses sonar, while Korean distinguishes kkum-kkuda for ordinary dreaming from revelatory vocabulary in prophetic contexts. The participial form cholem ('dreamer') appears in Deuteronomy's test for false prophets, where a 'dreamer of dreams' must be evaluated by Torah fidelity, not by the impressiveness of his visions.

1. to dream (Qal) (21×) The core Qal finite verb sense: to experience a dream, particularly one freighted with prophetic or revelatory significance. This is the dominant usage across 21 occurrences, spanning all Qal inflections — perfect, imperfect, and consecutive. Joseph declares 'I dreamed a dream' (Gen 37:9), Pharaoh's baker and cupbearer 'dreamed' in prison (Gen 40:5), and Isaiah uses it for the frustrating ephemerality of a hungry man who 'dreams he is eating' (Isa 29:8). Spanish Sone and Korean kkum-kkuda both track this basic verbal sense, confirming a unified cluster across persons and tenses. DREAM VISION
en: I-dreamed, and-dreamed, and-he-dreamed | es: Soñé, Y-soñaron, Y-soñó | fr: Je-dreamed, [חלמתי], [יחלם] | de: Traum, [חלמתי], [יחלם] Gen 28:12; Gen 37:5; Gen 37:6; Gen 37:9

2. dreamer (Qal participle) (5×) The participial or agent-noun sense: 'dreamer,' one who dreams or is characterized by dreaming. Appearing 5 times, this form (cholem/cholmim) shifts from the verbal act to the person performing it. In Deuteronomy 13:1-5, the 'dreamer of dreams' stands alongside the prophet as someone claiming divine communication — the legal test is whether the dream-message leads toward or away from Yahweh. Psalm 126:1 uses the participle poetically: 'we were like dreamers' when Zion's fortunes were restored. Spanish sonador and German Traumer both select dedicated agent-noun forms here, distinct from the finite verb. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: dreamer-of, dreaming, like-dreamers | es: como-soñadores, soñador-de, soñando | fr: comme-rêver, dreamer-de, dreaming | de: dreamer-von, träumte, wie-dreamers Gen 41:1; Deut 13:1; Deut 13:3; Deut 13:5; Ps 126:1

3. dream (noun) (1×) A nominal or noun-like usage: the dream itself as an object of experience. Though the standard noun is chalom, this single occurrence at Genesis 37:6 ('hear this dream') may reflect a verbal noun or infinitival construction where the act of dreaming blurs into the dream-content. Spanish el-sueno and German den-Traum both render it as a straightforward noun, and the multilingual convergence suggests the boundary between verb and noun was permeable in this expression. DREAM VISION
en: the-dream | es: el-sueño | fr: le-songe | de: den-Traum Gen 37:6

4. cause to dream (Hifil) (1×) The Hifil causative: to cause dreaming, to induce dreams in others. A single occurrence at Jeremiah 29:8, where the exiles are warned not to let their prophets and diviners 'cause you to dream' — or possibly 'dream on your behalf.' The causative stem signals that the dreaming is externally prompted rather than spontaneously experienced. Spanish sonais captures the reflexive-passive ambiguity, while the form itself (machalimim) is morphologically distinctive from all Qal occurrences. DREAM VISION
en: causing-to-dream | es: soñáis | fr: [מחלמים] | de: [מחלמים] Jer 29:8

חֶלֶם H2493 Conj-w / N-msd (22×)

Dream (Aramaic); a vision during sleep, especially a divine revelation to kings and prophets in Daniel.
The Aramaic noun for a dream, used exclusively in the book of Daniel to describe visionary experiences during sleep through which God communicates with both pagan rulers and His prophet. Nebuchadnezzar's troubling dreams (Dan 2:4–7; 4:2–6) and Daniel's own nocturnal visions (Dan 7:1) drive major narrative arcs and apocalyptic revelations. The word is cognate with the Hebrew chalom, and translations across languages—Spanish sueño, French songe, German Traum—consistently render it as a revelatory dream rather than ordinary sleep imagery.

dream (22×) An Aramaic noun denoting a dream experienced during sleep, functioning as a vehicle of divine revelation. In Daniel 2, Nebuchadnezzar demands his wise men recount and interpret his dream; in Daniel 4:2–6 the king himself narrates a disturbing dream to Daniel; and in Daniel 7:1 the prophet receives his own apocalyptic vision in a dream. The emphatic form and suffixed forms (my dream, your dream) appear throughout, reflecting the deeply personal and theologically charged nature of these nocturnal revelations. DREAM VISION

en: and-the-dream, dream, my-dream | es: el-sueño, es-el-sueño, mi-sueño | fr: et-songe, songe | de: Traum, der-Traum, und-der-Traum Dan 2:4; Dan 2:5; Dan 2:6; Dan 2:7

חֶלֶם H2494 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Chelem (or Helem), a returned exile mentioned in Zechariah

Chelem was one of the returned exiles in the post-exilic community during Zechariah's prophetic ministry. In Zechariah 6:14, he's mentioned in connection with the symbolic crowning oracle, though verse 10 refers to the same person as Heldai. Such name variations (Chelem/Heldai) were common in biblical texts. The name may derive from a root meaning 'strength.'

(1×) A personal name of a man involved in the restoration community. Zechariah 6:14 identifies him as one of those who would receive a memorial crown in the temple. The multilingual glosses show transliteration patterns (Chelem, Helem, Hélem), treating this as a proper name. The textual variant with Heldai suggests fluidity in naming within the same narrative. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Chelem | es: para-Helem | fr: Hélem | de: [לחלם] Zech 6:14

חַלְמוּת H2495 N-fs (1×)

purslain or similar plant with slimy juice

This plant name appears only in Job 6:6, where Job asks rhetorically whether there is any taste in the juice or sap of this herb. The exact identification is disputed—suggestions include purslain, mallow, or the white of an egg (if the word is interpreted differently). Job uses it as a metaphor for something insipid and unpalatable, comparing his suffering to tasteless food that brings no pleasure or nourishment.

(1×) A plant with bland, slimy juice used metaphorically for something without flavor or appeal. The Hebrew phrase asks about taste in the 'slime of purslain,' representing Job's complaint that his life has become as unpalatable as the most tasteless food. English 'mallow' and Spanish 'malva' suggest wild plants with mucilaginous properties. The image serves Job's larger argument about the meaninglessness of his suffering. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: mallow | es: malva | fr: חלמות | de: [חלמות] Job 6:6

חַלְמִישׁ H2496 Prep-m / N-msc (5×)

flint; extremely hard stone used figuratively for unyielding firmness

Challamish denotes flint, the hardest common stone known to the ancient world. In Deuteronomy 8:15 God brings water from the 'rock of flint' in the wilderness, an act magnified by the material's notorious impermeability. Isaiah 50:7 applies it as a powerful simile for resolute determination: 'I set my face like flint.' Spanish 'pedernal' and English 'flint' converge on the same mineralogical image, while the German and French translations leave the Hebrew untranslated, underscoring the word's technical specificity.

(5×) Flint, flinty rock. A stone of exceptional hardness, used literally for the rock from which God miraculously drew water in the wilderness (Deut 8:15; Ps 114:8) and for rock worked by miners (Job 28:9). In Deuteronomy 32:13 oil flows from flinty rock, hyperbolically. Isaiah 50:7 employs it figuratively for unyielding resolve, reflected consistently across Spanish 'pedernal,' English 'flint,' and the Septuagint's stereological equivalents. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-flint-of, like-flint, on-the-flint | es: En-el-pedernal, como-pedernal, de-la-roca-de | fr: [כחלמיש], de-flint-de, le-flint | de: [בחלמיש], [כחלמיש], der-flint Deut 8:15; Deut 32:13; Job 28:9; Ps 114:8; Isa 50:7

חֵלֶן H2497 N-proper-ms (5×)

Helon; father of Eliab, leader of the tribe of Zebulun during the wilderness period

Helon appears exclusively in Numbers as the father of Eliab, who served as the tribal leader of Zebulun during the wilderness census and march. All five occurrences cluster in the early chapters of Numbers (1:9; 2:7; 7:24, 29; 10:16), always in the patronymic formula 'Eliab son of Helon.' The Septuagint renders the name as Chailon or Chelon. The name's consistent rendering across English, Spanish ('Helon'), French ('Helon'), and German ('Helon') shows no translational variation.

(5×) Helon, a proper masculine name. Father of Eliab, the appointed leader of the tribe of Zebulun. All five attestations appear in Numbers within census lists, tribal camp arrangements, and dedication offerings (Num 1:9; 2:7; 7:24, 29; 10:16). The Septuagint traditions (Chailon, Chelon) suggest a guttural-initial pronunciation preserved across Greek manuscript families. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Helon | es: Helón, Helón: | fr: Hélon | de: Helon Num 1:9; Num 2:7; Num 7:24; Num 7:29; Num 10:16

חָלַף H2498 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms / 3mp (28×)

To pass on or away, pass through; also to change, exchange, renew, pierce, or transgress. A versatile root spanning movement, transformation, and violation.

A root whose concrete image is forward motion, passing onward, which then branches into several distinct semantic paths. Things that pass through may change their state (hence 'exchange garments,' Gen 35:2; 41:14), pass away entirely (Ps 102:26; Song 2:11), or pass through flesh as a weapon (Judg 5:26). In the Hifil, the causative yields both 'to exchange or replace' and the surprising 'to renew,' as in Isaiah 40:31 where those who wait on the LORD 'renew their strength,' literally 'exchange' old weariness for fresh vigor. The Arabic cognate khalafa (to succeed, replace, whence 'Caliph') illuminates the semantic link between passing on and replacing.

1. change, exchange, replace (8×) Piel/Hifil: to change, exchange, or replace one thing for another. Covers changing garments (Gen 35:2; 41:14), altering wages (Gen 31:7, 41), and substituting one sacrificial animal for another (Lev 27:10). The Arabic cognate khalafa (to replace, succeed) confirms this as a core sense. Spanish reemplazar and cambiar, French changer, and German tauschen all converge on active substitution. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: and-change, and-has-changed, and-he-changed | es: lo-cambiará, los-cambiarás, reemplazaremos | fr: changer, et-a-changea, et-changer | de: [נחליף], du-wird-change-ihnen, er-soll-tauschen-es Gen 31:7; Gen 31:41; Gen 35:2; Gen 41:14; Lev 27:10

2. pass through, sweep by (8×) Qal intransitive: to pass on, pass through, or sweep by in physical movement. A spirit passes before Job's face (Job 4:15), God passes by unseen (Job 9:11), and swift ships pass like reed-boats (Job 9:26). Spanish pasar and French passer mark simple translational motion. The sense is neutral movement through space, without the destructive or transformative overtones of other senses. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-He-moves-on, and-it-will-pass-through, and-you-will-pass-on | es: Pasan, Y-pasará, Y-pasarás | fr: changer, et-changer, et-passer | de: [וחלף], [ויחלף], [חלף] 1Sam 10:3; Job 4:15; Job 9:11; Job 9:26; Job 11:10

3. pass away, perish (5×) Qal intransitive with existential weight: to pass away, vanish, or cease to exist, emphasizing transience and impermanence. The rain is over and gone (Song 2:11), the heavens will perish (Ps 102:26), and human life sprouts and withers like grass (Ps 90:5-6). Spanish desaparecer and cesar, alongside the convergence on impermanence across translations, distinguish this from simple passing-through by its finality. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-sprouts, and-they-will-pass-away, passed-over | es: cesó, desaparecerán, pasa | fr: a-cessé,, changer, et-changer | de: [חלף], [יחלף], der-sprouts Ps 90:5; Ps 90:6; Ps 102:26; Song 2:11; Isa 2:18

4. renew, sprout anew (4×) Hifil causative: to renew or sprout anew, the positive transformation that comes after something has passed away. A tree cut down may sprout again (Job 14:7), a bow is renewed in one's hand (Job 29:20), and those who wait on the LORD shall renew their strength (Isa 40:31; 41:1). Spanish renovar and retonar capture this regenerative sense, which paradoxically grows from the same root as 'pass away': what passes is replaced by something fresh. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: it-sprouts, let-them-renew, renews | es: renovarán, renueven, retonará | fr: changer, passer | de: [יחליף], [יחליפו], [תחליף] Job 14:7; Job 29:20; Isa 40:31; Isa 41:1

5. pierce, penetrate (2×) Qal transitive: to pierce through or penetrate, as a weapon passing through flesh. Jael drives the tent peg through Sisera's temple (Judg 5:26), and a bronze arrow pierces through the wicked (Job 20:24). Spanish traspasar and atravesar mark violent penetration. The semantic link to 'pass through' is transparent: the weapon passes through the body. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-she-pierced, pierces-him | es: lo-traspasará, y-atravesó | fr: changer-lui, et-elle-pierced | de: [תחלפהו], und-sie-pierced Judg 5:26; Job 20:24

6. violate, transgress (1×) Qal figurative: to violate or transgress a covenant or law, treating binding obligations as something to be passed over or disregarded. Attested in Isaiah 24:5 where the earth's inhabitants 'have transgressed the laws, violated the statute, broken the everlasting covenant.' Spanish violar and French passer (in its transgressive sense) mark the legal-moral extension: to pass beyond a boundary set by divine law. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: violated | es: violaron | fr: passer | de: [חלפו] Isa 24:5

חֲלַף H2499 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (4×)

To pass over (Aramaic); of time passing over a person, used exclusively of the 'seven times' decreed upon Nebuchadnezzar.

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to pass over,' used in Daniel 4 exclusively of time passing over Nebuchadnezzar during his period of madness. Seven 'times' (seasons) must pass over the king before his reason returns and he acknowledges the Most High's sovereignty. The verb appears four times — in the decree, its interpretation, its restatement, and its fulfillment — creating a powerful narrative echo. Spanish pasar and German wechseln ('to change/pass') both capture the relentless, impersonal passage of time.

(4×) To pass over, of time elapsing over a person (Aramaic). All four occurrences appear in Daniel 4:16, 23, 25, 32, describing the seven 'times' (seasons or years) that must pass over Nebuchadnezzar during his divinely imposed madness. The verb takes עַל ('over') with the person, giving the vivid image of time rolling over someone who is powerless to stop it. The fourfold repetition — in dream, interpretation, divine voice, and fulfillment — underscores the certainty of the decree. Spanish pasarán ('they will pass') and English 'pass' render this temporal sense straightforwardly. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: let-pass, pass, will-pass | es: pasarán, pasen | fr: argile | de: wechseln Dan 4:16; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32

חֶלֶף H2500 Prep (2×)

in exchange for, in return for; used as a preposition indicating compensation

This term functions as a preposition meaning 'in exchange for' or 'in return for,' derived from a noun meaning 'exchange.' It appears twice in Numbers 18, both times specifying what the Levites receive in exchange for their service in the tabernacle. The Aramaic cognates (חלף, שְׁלֶף) are commonly used with the same prepositional sense, showing this is a standard term for indicating compensation or substitution.

(2×) In exchange for, in return for—a preposition indicating compensation or payment for service rendered. Numbers 18:21 states that God gives the Levites the tithe 'in return for their service that they serve, the service of the tent of meeting,' and verse 31 repeats 'in exchange for your service in the tent of meeting.' The consistent multilingual rendering ('in exchange for,' 'a cambio de,' 'in tauschen für') confirms the prepositional, compensatory sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-exchange-for | es: a-cambio-de | fr: dans-exchange-pour | de: in-tauschen-fuer Num 18:21; Num 18:31

חֶלֶף H2501 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (1×)

Cheleph, a town in Naphtali's territory

Cheleph was a boundary marker in the tribal allotment of Naphtali in northern Israel. Joshua 19:33 mentions it as one of the points defining Naphtali's territorial limits. Like many sites in these ancient boundary descriptions, its precise location has not been identified by modern archaeology. The name may relate to a root meaning 'exchange' or 'succession,' though the significance for this particular site remains uncertain.

(1×) A place name marking part of Naphtali's boundary. The preposition 'from' indicates its role in geographical description—a starting or reference point in the tribal border. Multilingual versions (from-Cheleph, desde-Hélef, de-Cheleph) preserve the proper noun with appropriate prepositions. Joshua 19:33 provides the sole attestation in a list of boundary markers. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Cheleph | es: desde-Hélef | fr: de-Cheleph | de: von-Cheleph Josh 19:33

חָלַץ H2502a V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (23×)

To draw off, deliver, rescue; Piel: rescue from danger; Nifal: be delivered; Qal: strip off, remove; also to plunder, tear out, or withdraw.

A versatile verb whose core image is pulling or drawing something out. In its most frequent use (Piel), it describes divine rescue and deliverance from distress, enemies, or death, as in the psalmist's testimony 'He brought me out into a broad place; He delivered me' (2 Sam 22:20; Ps 18:19). The Qal stem preserves the concrete physical action of stripping off sandals (Deut 25:9) or drawing out the breast for nursing (Lam 4:3). Spanish captures the rescue sense with 'librar/librar' and the removal sense with 'quitar/arrancar,' showing how the same root stretches from battlefield deliverance to the homely act of removing a shoe. The Nifal passive ('be delivered') and the rare intransitive Qal ('withdraw') round out a semantic field where extraction, whether of persons from peril or objects from their place, is the unifying thread.

1. deliver or rescue (11×) Piel (causative-intensive): to rescue, deliver, or save someone from danger, distress, or enemies. This is the most frequent sense (11 occurrences). God rescues the psalmist into a 'broad place' (2 Sam 22:20; Ps 18:19), delivers the afflicted through suffering (Job 36:15), and promises 'I will rescue him' (Ps 91:15). Spanish uniformly renders 'librar/librame,' and the Phoenician cognate in personal names (chalats-Baal, 'Baal has rescued') confirms this as the word's central theological meaning. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-rescues-me, I-will-deliver-you, I-will-rescue-him | es: Libra, Líbrame, libra | fr: Il-rescues-moi, [אחלצהו], [אחלצך] | de: He-rescues-mich, [יחלץ], gürtete 2Sam 22:20; Job 36:15; Ps 6:4; Ps 18:19; Ps 34:7

2. be delivered or rescued (4×) Nifal (passive): to be rescued or delivered from danger. The righteous 'is delivered' from trouble (Prov 11:8), and the beloved ones 'may be delivered' through God's power (Ps 60:5; 108:6). Spanish 'es librado/serán librados' and German 'gerettet' mirror the passive transformation. Proverbs 11:8-9 pairs the Nifal and the active sense in instructive contrast: the righteous is delivered, but the wicked falls into the same trap. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: are-delivered, is-rescued, may-be-delivered | es: es-librado, sean-librados, serán-librados | fr: [יחלצון], יחלצו, נחלץ | de: [יחלצו], [נחלץ], gürtete Ps 60:5; Ps 108:6; Prov 11:8; Prov 11:9

3. remove or strip off (4×) Qal: to draw off, remove, or strip away something physical. Deuteronomy 25:9 prescribes that the rejected widow shall 'pull off' her brother-in-law's sandal, and Isaiah 20:2 records God commanding Isaiah to 'remove' his sandals. Lamentations 4:3 extends the image to jackals who 'draw out the breast' to nurse their young. Spanish 'quitar/sacar' and French 'ôter' capture the physical extraction cleanly. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-shall-remove, draw-out, remove | es: quita, quitada, sacan | fr: [חלצו], [תחלץ], et-devra-ôter | de: [חלצו], [תחלץ], entfernte-von Deut 25:9; Deut 25:10; Isa 20:2; Lam 4:3

4. tear out or plunder (3×) Piel with forcible extraction: to tear out stones or plunder. Leviticus 14:40-43 describes tearing out contaminated stones from a house wall, while Psalm 7:4 uses the image of despoiling or plundering. The Arabic cognate khalasa (withdraw, extract) and Aramaic chalats (despoil) support this more violent extraction sense. Spanish 'arrancar' (to wrench out) conveys the forcefulness that distinguishes this from simple removal. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL

en: and-they-shall-remove, or-I-have-plundered, removing | es: arrancar, o-despojar, y-arrancarán | fr: [ואחלצה], et-ils-devra-ôter, removing | de: gürtete, removing, und-sie-soll-entfernen Lev 14:40; Lev 14:43; Ps 7:4

5. withdraw or retreat (1×) Qal intransitive: to withdraw or retreat from a situation. A single occurrence in Hosea 5:6 describes God having 'withdrawn' Himself from faithless Israel. The Arabic cognate khalasa (withdraw, retire) supports this reflexive sense of pulling oneself away. This stands as the mirror image of the Piel deliverance: rather than God extracting His people from danger, here God extracts Himself from His people. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: He-has-withdrawn | es: se-retiró | fr: armer | de: [חלץ] Hos 5:6

חָלַץ H2502b V-Nifal-Imperf-1cp (21×)

To equip or arm for war (Qal passive participle: armed men); to arm oneself (Nifal reflexive); to strengthen or fortify (Hifil).

The Hebrew verb chalats II is the language of military readiness — distinct from chalats I ('to draw off, rescue'), it carries a primary idea of vigor and strength applied to warfare. Its overwhelmingly common form is the Qal passive participle chaluts, meaning 'armed' or 'equipped,' used substantively for the armed vanguard that crossed the Jordan ahead of Israel (Num 32:21, 27, 30; Josh 6:7, 13). Spanish armado/armados, French arme, and German gerustet all converge on military-equipment vocabulary. The Nifal reflexive 'to arm oneself' appears in Moses' command to the Reubenites and Gadites: 'arm yourselves for battle before the LORD' (Num 32:17, 20). The root's underlying sense of strength surfaces in a single Hifil occurrence where God 'shall strengthen your bones' (Isa 58:11) — the Assyrian cognate haltsu ('fortification') and Aramaic chalyits ('vigorous, strong') confirm that military arming grew from a deeper semantic field of bodily strength and fortification.

1. armed, equipped for war (17×) Armed, equipped for war — the Qal passive participle chaluts used adjectivally and substantively for warriors ready for battle. With 17 occurrences, this dominant sense appears as a military technical term throughout the conquest narratives: 'every armed man of you shall cross over the Jordan' (Num 32:21), the armed vanguard marching before the ark at Jericho (Josh 6:7, 9, 13), and the census of warriors from each tribe (1 Chr 12:23-24). Spanish armado/armados and the consistent military context — marching, crossing, fighting — make this sense unmistakable. The participle functions almost as a noun: 'the armed men' (hachaluts) as a distinct unit within Israel's battle order. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-armed-men, armed, armed-for | es: armado, armado-de, armados | fr: [החלוץ], [חלוצי], [חלצי] | de: [החלוץ], [חלוצי], [חלצי] Num 31:5; Num 32:21; Num 32:27; Num 32:29; Num 32:30

2. to arm oneself (3×) To arm oneself — the Nifal reflexive expressing the volitional act of taking up weapons and preparing for battle. Found in 3 occurrences, all in the negotiations between Moses and the Transjordanian tribes: 'Arm some of your men for war' (Num 31:3), 'We will arm ourselves' (Num 32:17), and 'If they will arm themselves before the LORD' (Num 32:20). Spanish armaos/nos armaremos and the reflexive construction confirm the self-directed agency: it is not a state of being armed (sense 1) but the deliberate act of arming oneself for a specific campaign. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: arm-yourselves, will-arm-ourselves, you-will-arm-yourselves | es: Armaos, nos-armaremos, os-armáis | fr: arm-vous-mêmes, fera-arm-nous-mêmes, tu-fera-arm-vous-mêmes | de: arm-euch-selbst, du-wird-arm-euch-selbst, wird-arm-uns-selbst Num 31:3; Num 32:17; Num 32:20

3. to strengthen (1×) To strengthen or fortify — a Hifil causative meaning to make strong, representing the root's underlying semantic of vigor apart from military equipment. Only 1 occurrence: 'The LORD will guide you continually and satisfy your desire in scorched places, and he shall strengthen your bones' (Isa 58:11). Spanish fortalecera shifts to dedicated strength vocabulary, confirming a genuinely distinct sense. The Assyrian cognate haltsu (fortification) and Aramaic chalyitsuta (vigor, strength) illuminate this as the root meaning from which the military 'arming' sense developed. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: He-shall-strengthen | es: fortalecerá | fr: [יחליץ] | de: [יחליץ] Isa 58:11

חֶלֶץ H2503 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Helez; name of two men: one of David's mighty warriors, and a Judahite in the line of Jerahmeel

Helez designates two distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The first is one of David's elite thirty warriors, called 'the Paltite' in 2 Samuel 23:26 and 'the Pelonite' in 1 Chronicles 11:27, who also commanded the seventh monthly division (1 Chr 27:10). The second Helez appears in the Judahite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 2:39. The BDB entry connects the name to the root meaning 'vigour.' Spanish and French renderings ('Heles'/'Helez'/'Jelets') reflect minor transliteration variation across traditions.

(5×) Helez, a personal name meaning 'vigour.' Refers to (a) one of David's mighty warriors from the Paltite/Pelonite clan (2 Sam 23:26; 1 Chr 11:27; 27:10), and (b) a man in the Judahite genealogy descended from Jerahmeel (1 Chr 2:39). The Septuagint shows considerable variation (Sellis, Ellis, Chellis), suggesting the name's pronunciation was already fluid in the Greek transmission period. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: Chalets, Chelets, Helez | es: Heles, Jelets, Jélets | fr: Helez, Hélets, et-Hélets | de: Helez, [וחלץ], [חלץ] 2Sam 23:26; 1Chr 2:39; 1Chr 11:27; 1Chr 27:10

חֶלֶץ H2504 N-mdc / 2ms (11×)

Loins, the midsection of the body viewed as the seat of strength, reproductive power, and the place where a belt is girded.

Always appearing in the dual form (chalatsayim), this noun designates the loins or waist – the core of the human body understood as the source of both physical strength and generative power. God's promise to Jacob at Bethel – 'kings shall come from your loins' (Gen 35:11) – establishes the reproductive sense, echoed in Solomon's temple dedication (1 Kgs 8:19; 2 Chr 6:9). Job's challenge to 'gird up your loins like a man' (Job 38:3; 40:7) invokes the imagery of binding the midsection for strenuous action. Isaiah 11:5 crowns the messianic portrait: 'faithfulness shall be the belt of his loins' – righteousness not merely worn but embodied. The charitable Job is blessed because the loins of the poor 'warmed' by his garments praise him (Job 31:20).

1. loins (physical body part) (10×) The loins as a physical body part, especially as the seat of reproductive power and bodily strength. 'From your loins shall kings come forth' (Gen 35:11) and 'who shall come from your loins' (1 Kgs 8:19; 2 Chr 6:9) use chalatsayim for the source of offspring. Job 38:3 and 40:7 command 'gird up your loins like a man,' invoking the midsection as the center of physical readiness. Job 31:20 pictures the loins of the poor being warmed by charity. Isaiah 5:27 describes warriors whose belt never loosens from their loins. Across languages – Spanish 'lomos,' the Aramaic cognate chartsa – the term consistently locates this as the core midsection of the body. LOINS WAIST BODY

en: (his-loins), [his-loins], from-your-loins | es: (sus-lomos), [sus-lomos], de-lomos-de-ti | fr: [חלציו], [חלצים], [מחלציך] | de: [(חלציו)], [[חלצו]], [חלציו] Gen 35:11; 1Kgs 8:19; 2Chr 6:9; Job 31:20

2. waist (for girding) (1×) The waist specifically as the girding point for a belt or sash, emphasizing the external binding location rather than reproductive power. Isaiah 11:5 uses this sense in a messianic portrait: 'faithfulness shall be the belt of his loins (chalatsav).' Here the focus is on what encircles the waist – righteousness and faithfulness as garments – rather than on what issues from the loins. Though anatomically identical to sense 1, the functional emphasis shifts to adornment and equipping, making this a distinct metaphorical register. LOINS WAIST BODY en: his-waist | es: sus-caderas | fr: [חלציו] | de: [חלציו] Isa 11:5

חָלַק H2505a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (56×)

to divide, apportion, distribute; share out land, spoil, or inheritance among recipients

A foundational verb of allocation and partitioning, appearing across the narratives of conquest, inheritance, and divine sovereignty. In the Qal stem it describes the basic act of dividing land or spoil among recipients (Josh 14:5; Neh 9:22), while the Piel intensifies this into thorough, deliberate distribution (Gen 49:27; Josh 18:10). The Nifal and Pual passives convey land or people being divided — whether a kingdom splitting (1 Kgs 16:21) or territory being apportioned by lot (Num 26:53–56). In Lamentations 4:16 the verb takes an unexpected turn toward scattering in judgment, where God's own face disperses a people.

1. distribute, divide up (Piel) (27×) The Piel intensive of distribution, emphasizing deliberate and thorough dividing out. Spanish destruyó/repartió and French diviser confirm the partitioning force. Jacob's dying oracle (Gen 49:7, 27) uses this stem for the scattering of Levi and the division of spoil by Benjamin, while Joshua 18:10 records the formal Piel apportioning of Canaan by lot. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: He-divides, I-will-divide, I-will-divide- | es: Y-los-dividió, Y-repartió, cuando-reparten | fr: Je—diviser, Je—diviser-eux, [ויחלק] | de: [אחלק], [בחלקם], [חלקו] Gen 49:7; Gen 49:27; Exod 15:9; Josh 13:7; Josh 18:10

2. divide, share, apportion (Qal) (17×) The basic Qal act of dividing or sharing property, land, or spoil among people. Cross-lingual evidence — German Teil and Spanish despojó — anchors the concrete sense of splitting possessions. Deuteronomy 4:19 warns that God has 'apportioned' the heavenly bodies to all nations, while Joshua 22:8 commands warriors to share plunder with those who stayed behind. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: and-they-divided, and-they-divided-them, and-you-divided-them | es: El-que-comparte, Y-los-dividieron, despojó | fr: [ויחלקום], [ותחלקם], [חלק] | de: Teil, [ותחלקם], [חולק] Deut 4:19; Deut 29:26; Josh 14:5; Josh 18:2; Josh 22:8

3. be divided (Nifal passive) (6×) The Nifal passive of being divided or split, where the subject undergoes partition rather than performing it. Spanish se dividió and Korean 나누어지다 both express this reflexive-passive sense. Genesis 14:15 describes Abram's forces dividing against the kings at night, and 1 Kings 16:21 records Israel being split into rival factions — the subject fractured from within. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: and-he-divided, is-divided, shall-be-divided | es: Y-se-dividió, se-divide, se-dividió | fr: devra-être-divisa, et-il-divisa, fut-divisa | de: [יחלק], soll-sein-teilte, und-teilte-sich Gen 14:15; Num 26:53; Num 26:55; Num 26:56; 1Kgs 16:21

4. be distributed (Pual passive) (3×) The Pual passive of having been distributed or divided up — the intensive passive counterpart to Piel. French partager and German Teil support the distributive meaning. Isaiah 33:23 envisions plunder being divided broadly, Zechariah 14:1 prophesies spoil divided within Jerusalem, and Amos 7:17 declares land measured out by line to conquerors. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: and-will-be-divided, is-divided, will-be-divided | es: fue-repartido, será-repartida, y-será-repartido | fr: diviser, et-diviser, partager | de: [חלק], [תחלק], und-Teil Isa 33:23; Amos 7:17; Zech 14:1

5. (1×) An ambiguous occurrence at Jeremiah 37:12 where Jeremiah departs to 'receive a portion' or 'slip away' among his people. English to-receive-portion and Spanish para-repartir suggest obtaining an allotted share of land, likely a Hifil infinitive sense of securing one's inheritance in Benjamin during the siege. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: to-receive-portion | es: para-repartir | fr: partager | de: [לחלק] Jer 37:12

6. (1×) A future Qal form at Joshua 18:5 describing Israel's intention to divide the remaining land into portions. Spanish la repartirán and German sie wird teilen confirm straightforward future apportioning, consistent with the broader Qal sense of dividing territory among the tribes. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: and-they-will-divide | es: Y-la-repartirán | fr: et-ils-sera-diviser | de: und-sie-wird-teilen Josh 18:5

7. (1×) A unique usage in Lamentations 4:16 where God's face 'scattered' or 'dispersed' the priests and elders. Spanish los ha dispersado and English scattered-them shift the verb from its typical partitioning domain into forceful scattering as divine judgment — dividing not goods but people, driving them apart in wrath. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: scattered-them | es: los-ha-dispersado | fr: partager | de: [חלקם] Lam 4:16

חָלַק H2505b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (9×)

To be smooth or slippery; Hifil: to make smooth, to flatter with deceptive speech; also, to be divided (of heart).

A root whose physical meaning – smooth, slippery – generates a rich metaphorical field. The Hifil 'make smooth' applies literally to a metalworker polishing with a hammer (Isa 41:7), but far more often describes speech that has been dangerously polished: the strange woman who 'makes smooth her words' (Prov 2:16, 7:5), the self-flatterer in Psalm 36:2, and the wicked whose words 'are smoother than butter' (Ps 55:21). Proverbs 28:23 wisely observes that honest rebuke ultimately wins more favor than a flattering tongue. Hosea 10:2 may preserve a distinct sense or a wordplay on the homonymous root chalaq I ('to divide'): 'their heart is smooth/divided' – a double entendre the prophet may have intended.

1. to flatter, make smooth (speech) (6×) To flatter, use smooth or deceptive speech (Hifil). The most frequent New Testament-era sense: making words dangerously slick to manipulate. Spanish 'halaga' ('flatters') and 'alisan' ('they smooth') capture the polishing metaphor. Proverbs 2:16 and 7:5 warn against the 'strange woman' who 'makes smooth her words'; Psalm 36:2 describes the wicked who 'flatters himself in his own eyes'; Psalm 5:9 says of enemies 'their throat is an open grave, they make smooth their tongue.' Proverbs 28:23 provides the counter-wisdom: honest rebuke surpasses flattery. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: he-flatters-himself, more-than-one-who-flatters, she-makes-smooth | es: alisan, ha-alisado, halaga | fr: de-partager, le-être-doux, partager | de: [החליקה], [מחליק], [ממחליק] Ps 5:9; Ps 36:2; Prov 2:16; Prov 7:5; Prov 28:23

2. to be smooth (physical) (2×) To be smooth or slippery in a physical sense (Qal/Hifil). Psalm 55:21 describes words that 'are smooth' (chalqu) as butter – Spanish 'suaves fueron' – though even here the physical image serves a moral point. Isaiah 41:7 provides the one purely literal usage: a craftsman 'smoothing with the hammer' (machiliq pattish) while fashioning an idol. French 'être doux' ('to be soft/gentle') reflects the tactile quality. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: are-smooth, with-the-hammer | es: alisador, suaves-fueron | fr: [מחליק], être-doux | de: [מחליק], sind-smooth Ps 55:21; Isa 41:7

3. to be divided, slippery (1×) To be divided or split – of a heart that is unfaithful (Qal). Hosea 10:2 declares 'their heart is divided' (chalaq libbam), diagnosing Israel's attempt to worship both YHWH and the Baals. Spanish 'dividido,' German 'Teil,' and the LXX's emerisan ('they divided') all favor the 'divide' reading, which may represent a deliberate prophetic pun on the smoother sense of the same root: a 'slippery' heart is a 'divided' one. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: is-divided | es: dividido | fr: partager | de: Teil Hos 10:2

חֵלֶק H2506a N-msc / 3ms (66×)

Portion, share, or allotted tract; one's assigned part of goods, land, or covenantal inheritance.

Heleq captures the ancient Near Eastern idea that life's goods — spoils, food, land, even one's relationship with God — come as measured portions. After battle, warriors divide the heleq of plunder (Gen 14:24; 1 Sam 30:24). In the land apportionment traditions, it narrows to a specific tract or plot, as in 'the portion of Naboth' at Jezreel (2 Kgs 9:10, 36-37). Most strikingly, the Psalmist declares 'The LORD is my heleq' (Ps 16:5), where the word ascends from material share to spiritual patrimony — a sense reflected in Spanish herencia and German Erbteil, both meaning 'inheritance' rather than mere 'portion.'

1. portion, share, allotment (61×) The broad, dominant sense: an allotted portion or share of something divisible — spoils of war (Gen 14:24), food offerings (Lev 6:17), or one's lot in life (Eccl 9:6, 9). The 61 occurrences span concrete distribution (Num 31:36, 'portion of the booty') to abstract destiny (Eccl 11:2, 'give a portion to seven'). Spanish parte, French part, and German Anteil all render this general distributive meaning. The preposition be- with heleq indicates 'having a share in' something, including political allegiance (2 Sam 20:1). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-portion, portion, portion-of | es: la-porción-de, parte, parte-de | fr: [חלק], part, part-de | de: Anteil, Anteil-von, Teil Gen 14:24; Gen 31:14; Lev 6:17; Num 18:20

2. tract of land, plot (4×) A geographical narrowing to a specific tract or plot of land, viewed as a bounded parcel rather than an abstract share. This sense clusters around the Naboth-Jezreel narrative: 'in the plot of Jezreel' (2 Kgs 9:10, 36, 37) and Amos 7:4. German der Teil and Spanish la porcion here denote a measurable piece of real estate — the field itself, not the right to it. Only four occurrences carry this concretely spatial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-portion-of, the-portion | es: En-porción-de, en-porción-de, la-porción | fr: dans-part-de, part | de: der-Teil, in-Anteil-von 2Kgs 9:10; 2Kgs 9:36; 2Kgs 9:37; Amos 7:4

3. inheritance, patrimony (1×) A single but theologically significant occurrence in Psalm 16:5: 'The LORD is the portion of my inheritance (heleq-i).' Here the word transcends material allocation to express covenantal patrimony — God himself as the believer's permanent, inalienable possession. Spanish mi herencia and German mein Erbteil both shift from 'share' to 'inheritance,' signaling the deeper register. This anticipates the Levitical principle that God is the priests' heleq in lieu of land (Num 18:20). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-inheritance | es: mi-herencia | fr: part | de: mein-Erbteil Ps 16:5

חֶלֶק H2506b Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

smoothness, seductiveness (of speech)

This noun denotes the smooth, slippery quality of flattering or seductive speech. Proverbs 7:21 uses it to describe how the adulteress persuades the simple young man—with the smoothness of her lips she compels him. The word captures the polished, persuasive quality of speech designed to seduce rather than inform. It parallels 'abundance of her teaching,' showing how rhetoric can overwhelm resistance.

(1×) The slippery, seductive quality of persuasive speech, particularly in the context of sexual temptation. The phrase 'smoothness of her lips' depicts speech that removes friction and moral resistance. Spanish 'suavidad' (smoothness) and French 'part' (though possibly a mistranslation here) engage with the slippery persuasiveness. Proverbs consistently warns against smooth-talking seducers whose words are more dangerous than obvious threats. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-the-smoothness-of | es: con-suavidad-de | fr: dans-part | de: in-Teil Prov 7:21

חֶלֶק H2507 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Helek, a Gileadite clan founder listed among Manasseh's descendants

Helek (meaning 'portion') was a descendant of Gilead in the genealogies of Manasseh. He is listed among the clans of Manasseh who received territorial allotments in the conquest of Canaan. Numbers 26:30 mentions him in the wilderness census among Gilead's sons, and Joshua 17:2 lists him among the clans receiving inheritance west of the Jordan. As with many such names, Helek likely represents both an individual ancestor and the clan descended from him.

(2×) A personal and clan name in the Manassite genealogies. Numbers 26:30 lists 'of Helek, the clan of the Helekites,' while Joshua 17:2 specifies the inheritance 'for the sons of Helek' among other Manassite clans. The Septuagint shows variations (Χελεγ, Κελεζ, Ελεκ), but the name is consistently preserved. Modern languages maintain the transliterated form with the preposition indicating relationship: 'to/of/for Helek.' PERSONAL NAMES portion, allotted share, possession

en: Cheleq, to-Helek | es: Jelec, de-Hélec | fr: Cheleq, à-Helek | de: Cheleq, zu-Helek Num 26:30; Josh 17:2

חֶלֶק H2508 N-ms (3×)

An Aramaic noun meaning portion, share, or allotted lot. In Ezra it refers to territorial possession or legal claim, while in Daniel it describes the appointed portion assigned by divine decree. The word carries overtones of what is rightfully or officially designated to someone. In Daniel's apocalyptic visions, it describes the portion assigned to the beasts by divine sovereignty. The term emphasizes the concept of measured, allocated shares rather than unrestricted possession.

(3×) A designated portion or allotted share. Ezra 4:16 speaks of territorial 'portion' beyond the river that might be lost if Jerusalem is rebuilt. Daniel 4:15, 23 (Aramaic 4:12, 20) describe 'his portion' being with beasts of the field as part of Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish porción/parte, French palais [likely error for part]) reflects the basic meaning of allotted share, though some translations struggle with the Aramaic context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-portion, portion | es: parte, su-porción | fr: [חלק], palais | de: Teil, [חלקה] Ezra 4:16; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23

חָלָק H2509 Conj-w / Adj-ms (4×)

Smooth; literally of skin or terrain, figuratively of flattering or deceptive speech.

An adjective meaning smooth, spanning a vivid range from physical texture to deceptive speech. Jacob is called an אִישׁ חָלָק ('smooth man') in contrast to Esau's hairiness (Gen 27:11), grounding the word in tactile experience. Joshua's 'smooth mountain' (Josh 11:17; 12:7) applies it to bare, treeless terrain. But the most theologically charged uses are figurative: Proverbs 5:3 warns that the forbidden woman's mouth is 'smoother than oil,' and Ezekiel 12:24 condemns 'smooth divination' — flattery masquerading as prophecy. French lisse ('smooth') and Spanish lisonjera ('flattering') neatly capture both poles.

(4×) Smooth — ranging from physical texture to deceptive flattery. Genesis 27:11 describes Jacob as an אִישׁ חָלָק ('smooth-skinned man') in contrast to hairy Esau. Figuratively, Proverbs 5:3 warns that the forbidden woman's palate is 'smoother than oil,' and Proverbs 26:28 links a 'smooth tongue' with lying. Ezekiel 12:24 condemns 'smooth divination' — flattery dressed as prophecy. Spanish lisonjera ('flattering') and German glatt ('smooth, slippery') together capture the trajectory from tactile smoothness to moral slipperiness. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: and-smoother, flattering, flattery | es: lampiño, lisonjera, y-más-suave | fr: blanc, et-חלק, lisse | de: Teil, [חלק], glatt Gen 27:11; Prov 5:3; Prov 26:28; Ezek 12:24

חָלָק H2510 Art / Adj-ms (2×)

the smooth, the bare (mountain); a proper name for a mountain or range

This adjective-turned-proper-name designates a mountain or mountain range marking the southern limit of Joshua's conquests. The phrase 'the bare (or smooth) mountain' appears twice in Joshua as a geographical marker. Scholars have proposed two possible identifications: either white limestone cliffs about eight miles south of the Dead Sea, or Mount Mâdara southwest from the Pass es-Ṣafâ. The name emphasizes the mountain's smooth or bare character, perhaps referring to its lack of vegetation or its white, exposed rock.

(2×) A geographical designation, 'the bare mountain' or 'the smooth mountain,' functioning as a proper name. Joshua 11:17 describes the extent of Joshua's conquests 'from Mount Halak, which rises toward Seir,' and Joshua 12:7 repeats the same boundary marker. The article in Hebrew ('the bare' or 'the smooth') suggests this was a descriptive name that became a fixed toponym. Most translations render it as 'Mount Halak' or simply 'Halac,' treating it as a proper noun. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: the-bare | es: Halac | fr: le-bare | de: der-bare Josh 11:17; Josh 12:7

חָלָק H2511 Prep-b / Adj-mpc (1×)

smooth stones (of a brook-bed)

This phrase refers to the smooth, rounded stones found in stream beds, polished by water action over time. Isaiah 57:6 uses it with biting irony: 'Among the smooth stones of the wadi is your portion'—meaning the Israelites worship common river rocks as if they were gods. The prophet's contempt is palpable: instead of claiming Yahweh as their inheritance, they've chosen worthless pebbles from a streambed.

(1×) Smooth, polished stones from a brook or wadi, used here in prophetic condemnation of idolatry. The smoothness comes from water erosion, making these ordinary geological features. Isaiah's sarcasm targets those who treat natural objects as worthy of worship. The multilingual evidence shows both literal translation (smooth stones, piedras lisas) and some uncertainty, reflecting the interpretive challenge of this prophetic invective. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-smooth-stones-of- | es: En-las-piedras-lisas-de- | fr: [בחלק] | de: [בחלקי] Isa 57:6

חֵלֶק H2512 N-mpc (1×)

smooth (stones)

This adjective describes smooth stones, specifically those David selected from a brook for his confrontation with Goliath. In 1 Samuel 17:40, David chose five smooth stones for his sling—stones worn smooth by water, making them aerodynamically ideal as projectiles. The detail adds realism to the narrative: David wasn't just grabbing random rocks but selecting the right ammunition for precision slinging.

(1×) The quality of smoothness in stones, particularly those from a streambed. David's choice of smooth rather than jagged stones shows practical battlefield wisdom—smooth stones fly truer from a sling. The phrase 'smooth ones of stones' uses Hebrew's superlative construction, possibly meaning 'smoothest stones.' English and French preserve 'smooth' while Spanish focuses on 'stones,' both recognizing the tactical detail in David's preparation. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: smooth | es: piedras- | fr: smooth | de: smooth 1Sam 17:40

חֶלְקָה H2513a Prep-b / N-fsc (23×)

A portion or plot of ground; a concrete field of land, or an allotted share or inheritance portion.

A land-related noun whose twenty-three Old Testament occurrences divide between concrete geography and abstract allotment. Spanish campo (field) and porción (portion) map neatly onto the two senses, while German Feld (field) versus Anteil (share) confirms the distinction. Twenty occurrences denote a physical plot — Jacob's purchased field at Shechem (Gen 33:19; Josh 24:32), the field where Ruth gleaned (Ruth 2:3; 4:3), and Naboth's vineyard area (2 Kgs 9:21, 25–26). Three occurrences lean toward the abstract idea of an allotted share or inheritance, as in the leader's portion in Moses' blessing (Deut 33:21) and God's own 'portion' despoiled (Jer 12:10).

1. plot or field of land (20×) A concrete plot, field, or piece of agricultural ground. Spanish campo de and German Feld von confirm physical land. Jacob purchasing a chelqat hasadeh at Shechem (Gen 33:19; Josh 24:32), Ruth gleaning in Boaz's field (Ruth 2:3; 4:3), and the blood-stained plot of Naboth's vineyard (2 Kgs 9:21, 25–26) exemplify twenty occurrences of tangible territory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-plot, field-of, in-portion-of | es: campo-de, el-campo, en-la-porción | fr: [החלקה], [חלקת], beauté | de: Feld-von, Stueck, [החלקה] Gen 33:19; Josh 24:32; Ruth 2:3; Ruth 4:3; 2Sam 14:30

2. allotted share or portion (3×) An allotted share, inheritance portion, or assigned allotment — emphasizing rightful possession rather than physical geography. Spanish porción and German Anteil mark the abstract dimension. The leader's reserved portion in Moses' blessing (Deut 33:21), the wicked whose 'portion is cursed' (Job 24:18), and God lamenting 'my portion' being trampled (Jer 12:10) illustrate three occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-portion, portion-of, their-portion | es: la-porción-del, porción-mi, su-porción | fr: [חלקתי], leur-חלקתם-eux, portion-de | de: Anteil-von, Stueck, [חלקתי] Deut 33:21; Job 24:18; Jer 12:10

חֶלְקָה H2513b Adj-mp (6×)

Smoothness, flattery; also smooth skin or slippery ground, always with overtones of deception or danger.

Chelqah (II) takes the physical quality of smoothness and extends it into moral and existential territory. Flattering lips speak chelaqot, smooth words that conceal a double heart (Ps 12:2-3), and the adulteress lures with 'the smoothness of her tongue' (Prov 6:24). Isaiah 30:10 records Israel demanding that prophets speak 'smooth things' rather than truth. Yet the word also retains physical senses: the smooth skin of Jacob's neck that enabled his deception of Isaac (Gen 27:16), and the slippery ground on which God sets the wicked before their ruin (Ps 73:18).

1. smoothness, flattery (4×) Smoothness of speech, flattery, or deceitful eloquence. The dominant sense across four occurrences (Ps 12:2-3; Prov 6:24; Isa 30:10). Spanish lisonjas ('flatteries') and French grâce (in the sense of smooth charm) both highlight the seductive, persuasive quality. In Isaiah 30:10 the people actively demand smooth prophecies, preferring comfortable deception over uncomfortable truth. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: flattery, from-the-smooth, smooth-things | es: de-la-lisonja-de, lisonjas | fr: [חלקות], de-מחלקת, grâce | de: [חלקות], [מחלקת], flattery Ps 12:2; Ps 12:3; Prov 6:24; Isa 30:10

2. smooth part (of body) (1×) The smooth, hairless part of the body, specifically Jacob's neck-skin in Genesis 27:16. Spanish suavidad ('smoothness, softness') and French lisse ('smooth') retain the tactile, physical quality. Rebekah covered this smooth skin with goat-hair so that blind Isaac would be deceived, linking physical smoothness to the broader theme of deception that pervades the word's semantic field. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: smooth-part-of | es: suavidad-de | fr: lisse-partie-de | de: die-Glätte Gen 27:16

3. slippery places (1×) Slippery places or treacherous ground where footing is lost. In Psalm 73:18, God sets the wicked on slippery places so that they slide to destruction. Spanish lugares resbaladizos ('slippery places') captures the spatial, physical metaphor precisely. The psalmist's insight is that apparent prosperity is unstable ground, and the metaphor of smoothness-as-danger completes the arc from flattery to physical peril. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: on-slippery-places | es: en-lugares-resbaladizos | fr: dans-grâce | de: auf-slippery-stellt Ps 73:18

חֲלַקָּה H2514 Prep-b (1×)

flatteries, smooth promises

This noun denotes flattering speech or smooth promises designed to deceive. Daniel 11:32 describes how a future tyrant will seduce covenant-breakers 'with flatteries'—using honeyed words to win compromisers to his cause. The plural form suggests repeated acts of flattery, a campaign of smooth talk. The word captures how autocrats often gain collaborators not by force but by making wickedness sound appealing.

(1×) Flattering or smooth speech used to corrupt and seduce people away from covenant faithfulness. Daniel's apocalyptic vision shows flattery as a political weapon—the tool by which the wicked king gains Jewish apostates as allies. Spanish 'halagos' (flatteries) and French 'flatterie' precisely capture the manipulative sweetness. The context is prophetic warning about end-times deception through appealing lies. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: by-flatteries | es: con-halagos | fr: flatterie | de: [בחלקות] Dan 11:32

חֶלְקָה H2515 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)
division, portion (of a father's house)
This noun refers to a subdivision or portion, specifically in 2 Chronicles 35:5 describing the divisions of Levitical father's houses. The context is Josiah's Passover, where the Levites are organized according to ancestral divisions to serve the assembled people. The term denotes organizational units within the larger tribal structure, ensuring orderly worship service during the major festival celebration.

(1×) A division or subdivision within the Levitical organization, specifically of father's houses. The phrase 'division of the father's house of the Levites' shows nested organizational categories. Spanish 'división' and the contextual use all point to administrative groupings for temple service. 2 Chronicles 35:5 uses this organizational language to show the careful planning of Josiah's reformed Passover celebration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-portion-of | es: y-división-de | fr: [וחלקת] | de: [וחלקת] 2Chr 35:5

חֶלְקִי H2516 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Helekite (clan name)
This is the gentilic form—'the Helekite'—referring to the clan descended from Helek. Numbers 26:30 uses it in the wilderness census, listing the Helekite family as one of the clans within the tribe of Manasseh. Like other gentilic forms in the census lists, it identifies descendants by their ancestral connection, turning a personal name into a collective clan designation.

(1×) The collective designation for descendants of Helek, treated as a clan within Manasseh. The definite article makes it function as a group name: 'the Helekite family.' Multilingual versions (the Helekite, los helequitas, le Helekite) all preserve the gentilic pattern. Numbers 26:30 employs this in the systematic genealogical accounting that organized Israel's tribes during the wilderness period. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Helekite | es: los-helequitas | fr: le-Helekite | de: der-Helekite Num 26:30

חֶלְקַי H2517 N-proper-ms (1×)
Chelqai (or Helkai), a priest in Nehemiah's time
Chelqai was a priest serving during the high priesthood of Joiakim, son of Jeshua, in the early post-exilic period. Nehemiah 12:15 lists him among the priestly heads of families in the restored Jerusalem community. The name may be an abbreviated form of Hilkiah, a common priestly name meaning 'my portion is Yahweh.' Such name variations and abbreviations were typical in genealogical records.

(1×) A personal name of a post-exilic priest. The Septuagint rendering 'Chelkias' (similar to Hilkiah) supports the view that this is a shortened form. Multilingual versions show transliteration (Chelqai, Helcai) as expected for proper names. Nehemiah 12:15 places him in the genealogical framework of priestly families serving the Second Temple, part of the restoration community's reconstituted worship. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chelqai | es: Helcai | fr: [חלק] | de: mein-Teil Neh 12:15

חִלְקִיָּהוּ H2518 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (34×)
Hilkiah; a theophoric personal name meaning 'my portion is YHWH,' borne by several priests and Levites
A theophoric name combining חֵלֶק ('portion') with the divine name, declaring 'YHWH is my portion.' The most prominent bearer is the high priest under King Josiah who discovered the Book of the Law in the temple (2 Kgs 22:4–14; 2 Chr 34:9–22), a pivotal moment in Judah's religious reform. Another notable Hilkiah is the father of Eliakim, Hezekiah's palace steward (2 Kgs 18:18; Isa 22:20; 36:3). The prophet Jeremiah is also identified as 'son of Hilkiah' (Jer 1:1). Transliterations vary — 'Chilkiyahu' closer to the Hebrew, 'Hilcías' in Spanish, 'Hilkija' in German — but all point to the same set of individuals.

Hilkiah (personal name) (34×) The proper masculine name Hilkiah (חִלְקִיָּהוּ / חִלְקִיָּה), meaning 'my portion is YHWH,' borne by several biblical figures. Most notably the high priest who found the Torah scroll during Josiah's temple repair (2 Kgs 22:4, 8; 2 Chr 34:14–15), the father of Eliakim under Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:18, 26; Isa 36:3), and the father of Jeremiah the prophet (Jer 1:1). Also names several Levites and a postexilic priest (1 Chr 6:30; 26:11; Neh 8:4; 12:7). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chilkiyah, Chilkiyahu, Chilqiyah | es: Hilcías, Hilquías, Jilqiya | fr: Chilkiyah, Chilkiyahu, Hilkija | de: Chilkiyah, Chilkiyahu, Hilkija 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:26; 2Kgs 18:37; 2Kgs 22:4; 2Kgs 22:8

חֲלַקְלַקּוֹת H2519 Prep-b (4×)
Smoothness, slipperiness; figuratively flattery or deceitful intrigues Derived from a root conveying sleekness or slickness, this noun paints a vivid picture of treacherous footing and deceptive speech. In Psalm 35:6 and Jeremiah 23:12, it describes a path of darkness and slippery ground that the wicked must tread. In Daniel 11:21 and 11:34, the same word shifts to the political realm, denoting cunning flattery or intrigues by which a ruler seizes power. Spanish 'resbaladeros' (slippery places) captures the physical sense, while French 'ruse' and Spanish 'intrigas' reflect the figurative extension to scheming deception.

(4×) Slipperiness or treacherous ground, used metaphorically for a dangerous, unstable path. In Psalm 35:6 the psalmist prays that his enemies' way become dark and slippery, and Jeremiah 23:12 warns that the false prophets' path will be like slick footing in darkness. The multilingual glosses ('resbaladeros,' 'slippery-places') consistently reflect physical peril. In Daniel 11:21 and 11:34 the meaning extends to smooth talk and political intrigues—flattery used as a weapon to seize a kingdom. French 'ruse' and 'flatterie' highlight this figurative dimension. DECEIT AND TREACHERY
en: and-slippery-places, by-intrigues, like-slippery-places | es: como-resbaladeros, con-intrigas, y-resbaladero | fr: [כחלקלקות], et-flatterie, ruse | de: [בחלקלקות], [כחלקלקות], und-slippery-stellt Ps 35:6; Jer 23:12; Dan 11:21; Dan 11:34

חֶלְקַת H2520 N-proper-fs (2×)
Helkath, a Levitical city in the territory of Asher
Helkath (meaning 'portion' or 'possession') was a town in the tribal territory of Asher, later assigned to the Levites. It appears in the boundary description of Asher in Joshua 19:25 (spelled חלקת) and in the list of Levitical cities in Joshua 21:31 (spelled חלקת). The two different spellings represent minor orthographic variants of the same place name, a common phenomenon in biblical geographical lists. The exact location is uncertain, though it was somewhere in Asher's allotment.

(2×) A place name designating a Levitical city in Asher. Joshua 19:25 includes 'Helkath' among the cities in Asher's border description, while Joshua 21:31 lists 'Helkath with its pasturelands' as one of the cities given to the Levites from Asher. The Septuagint variations (Ελεκεθ, Χελκατ, Ελκαθ, Θελκαθ) show Greek attempts to render the name, while modern versions use Helkath, Helcat, or Chelqath, maintaining the consonantal root. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chelqath, Helkath | es: Helcat | fr: Chelqath, Helkath | de: Chelqath, Helkath Josh 19:25; Josh 21:31

חֶלְקַת הַצֻּרִים H2521 N-proper-fs (2×)
Helkath-hazzurim, the field of swords/flints; site where Ishbosheth's men fell Helkath-hazzurim (literally 'field of the swords' or 'field of the flints/edges') was the name given to a location near the pool of Gibeon where twelve men from each side—Ishbosheth's forces and David's—engaged in deadly combat, with each man grabbing his opponent and thrusting his sword into his side, so that all twenty-four fell together. The name appears twice in 2 Samuel 2:16 as both the place name and its explanation. The etymology suggests either 'field of sword-edges' or possibly 'field of the plotters/adversaries.'

(2×) A place name and descriptive designation for the site of a deadly contest at Gibeon. 2 Samuel 2:16 states, 'Therefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon,' with both occurrences in the same verse. The name combines 'field' (חלקה) with either 'swords/edges' (צרים) or 'plotters/adversaries,' eternally marking the site of this violent encounter. The Septuagint's 'portion of the plotters' (Μέρις τῶν ἐπιβούλων) reflects one interpretation, while modern versions often translate it as 'field of swords' or leave it as a proper name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Helqat, ha-Tsurim | es: Jelqat, ha-Tsurim | fr: Helqat, ha-Tsurim | de: Helqat, ha-Tsurim 2Sam 2:16

חָלַשׁ H2522 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

to weaken, disable, be prostrate

A verb describing physical weakening or prostration. It appears in both active senses (to weaken or disable an opponent) and stative senses (to become weak or prostrate). Exodus uses it for Joshua's defeat of Amalek, Job employs it for human mortality and frailty, and Isaiah applies it to the fall of proud oppressors. The root conveys the transition from strength to weakness, from standing to falling, from power to helplessness. Whether describing military defeat, mortal decay, or the overthrow of tyrants, the verb emphasizes debilitation and collapse.

(3×) To weaken, prostrate, or disable. Exodus 17:13 reports 'Joshua weakened Amalek' through battle. Job 14:10 uses it of human death: 'man dies and is prostrate,' emphasizing finality. Isaiah 14:12 describes Babylon as 'weakener of nations' before its own fall. The consistent rendering across languages (Spanish debilitar, French/English weaken/prostrate) reflects the core meaning of reducing strength or bringing down to helplessness. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: and-lies-prostrate, and-weakened, weakener-of | es: Y-debilitó, el-que-debilitaba, y-se-debilita | fr: [חולש], et-weakened, et-ויחלש | de: [ויחלש], [חולש], und-weakened Exod 17:13; Job 14:10; Isa 14:12

חַלָּשׁ H2523 Art / Adj-ms (1×)

the weak (person)

This adjective, used substantively with the definite article, means 'the weak one.' Joel 3:10 uses it in a striking call to reverse normal expectations: 'Let the weak say, I am a mighty man.' The prophet envisions a day when ordinary distinctions of strength dissolve—even the frail will claim warrior status in the eschatological gathering. It's part of Joel's larger vision of cosmic upheaval and role reversal.

(1×) A weak or feeble person, used substantively. The definite article ('the weak') makes it a class designation rather than a mere description. Spanish 'el débil' (the weak one) and French 'faible' (weak) capture the sense. Joel 3:10 uses this in prophetic hyperbole: when God acts, even inherent human weakness becomes irrelevant. The verse deliberately inverts the beatings-into-plowshares image elsewhere in prophetic literature. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: the-weak | es: el-débil | fr: faible | de: [החלש] Joel 3:10

חָם H2524 N-msc / 3fs (4×)

Father-in-law (husband's father)

A kinship term specifically denoting the father of a woman's husband. All four biblical occurrences appear in narratives of family crisis: Judah is called Tamar's father-in-law in Genesis 38:13 and 38:25, while Eli is identified as the father-in-law of Phinehas's wife in 1 Samuel 4:19 and 4:21. The word is cognate with Arabic, Aramaic, Ethiopic, and Akkadian terms for the husband's male relative, underscoring a shared Semitic kinship vocabulary. German 'Schwiegervater' and Spanish 'suegro' both render it precisely.

(4×) The father of a woman's husband, a father-in-law on the husband's side. In Genesis 38 Judah stands in this relation to Tamar, and the narrative tension hinges on that bond of obligation. In 1 Samuel 4:19 and 4:21, Eli is identified by this term at the moment of his death, intensifying the pathos. The consistent rendering across languages—Spanish 'suegro,' German 'Schwiegervater,' French 'beau-père'—confirms a straightforward kinship denotation with no metaphorical extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: father-in-law-her, father-in-law-your, her-father-in-law | es: su-suegro, suegro-de-ella, suegro-de-ti | fr: père-dans-loi-sa, père-dans-loi-ton, sa-père-dans-loi | de: dein-Schwiegervater, ihr-Vater-in-Gesetz, ihrem-Schwiegervater Gen 38:13; Gen 38:25; 1Sam 4:19; 1Sam 4:21

חַם H2525 Adj-mp (2×)

hot, warm; heated by fire or sun

This adjective describes something hot or warm, heated either by baking or by the sun. In Joshua 9:12, the Gibeonites claim their bread was hot (freshly baked) when they left home, though it has now become dry. In Job 37:17, it describes garments that become hot when the earth is still under the oppressive heat of the south wind. The word emphasizes temperature in both literal contexts—the warmth of fresh bread and the heat retained in clothing.

(2×) Hot or warm, describing objects heated by baking or atmospheric warmth. Joshua 9:12 uses the masculine singular with 'bread': 'This our bread was hot when we took it,' emphasizing freshness. Job 37:17 employs the masculine plural with 'garments': 'you whose garments are hot when the earth is still because of the south wind.' The multilingual glosses uniformly render the temperature sense: 'hot,' 'warm,' 'caliente,' 'calientes,' confirming this as a straightforward thermal adjective. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: are-hot, warm | es: caliente, calientes | fr: warm, חמים | de: [חמים], warm Josh 9:12; Job 37:17

חָם H2526 N-proper-ms (16×)

Ham — Noah's second son and ancestor of African and Canaanite peoples; also a poetic name for Egypt

The proper name Ham (חָם), one of the three sons of Noah who survived the flood (Gen 5:32; 6:10; 7:13; 9:18). He is identified as the father of Canaan (Gen 9:22) and ancestor of four great people-groups: Cush (Ethiopia), Mizraim (Egypt), Put (Libya), and Canaan (Gen 10:6, 20; 1 Chr 1:8). The narrative of Ham's indiscretion toward his father (Gen 9:22) leads to the oracle against Canaan. In the later Psalms, 'land of Ham' becomes a poetic synonym for Egypt (Ps 78:51; 105:23, 27; 106:22), always paralleling Mizraim. First Chronicles 4:40 also locates earlier Hamite inhabitants in the Negev. French 'Cham' and Spanish 'Cam/Jam' reflect variant transliteration traditions of this foundational ethnographic name.

Ham (proper name) (16×) The proper name Ham (חָם I), Noah's second son and the eponymous ancestor of southern and African peoples. He appears in the flood narrative as one of three survivors aboard the ark with Noah (Gen 5:32; 6:10; 7:13; 9:18) and is called the father of Canaan (Gen 9:22). The Table of Nations traces four lineages from Ham — Cush, Mizraim, Put, and Canaan (Gen 10:1, 6, 20; 1 Chr 1:8) — encompassing a vast geographic arc from Ethiopia to the Levant. In late psalmody, 'tents of Ham' and 'land of Ham' serve as poetic names for Egypt (Ps 78:51; 105:23, 27; 106:22), always in parallelism with Mizraim. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cham, Ham, and-Ham | es: Cam, Jam, y-Jam | fr: Cham, Ham, et-Cham | de: Cham, Chams, [חם] Gen 5:32; Gen 6:10; Gen 7:13; Gen 9:18

חֹם H2527 Conj-w / N-ms (15×)

Heat or warmth; the burning intensity of midday sun, the flush of passion, the temperature of hot bread, and the comfort of bodily warmth.

A compact noun covering every kind of heat a person encounters in the ancient Near East. Its most common use is the scorching 'heat of the day' under which Abraham sat at his tent door (Gen 18:1) and Saul's army marched to battle (1 Sam 11:11). God promises the rhythm of seasons will never cease—'seedtime and harvest, cold and heat' (Gen 8:22). Jeremiah warns that a tree planted by water 'does not fear when heat comes' (Jer 17:8), while Isaiah speaks of harvest-heat shimmering before the vintage (Isa 18:4). Spanish calor and French chaleur cover the range naturally, though the figurative 'heat of passion' in Jeremiah 51:39 and the simple 'hot bread' of 1 Samuel 21:7 show the word reaching beyond weather into emotion and everyday life.

1. heat of day or sun (12×) Atmospheric or solar heat—the dominant sense across 12 occurrences. This is the oppressive midday warmth of the Levant: Abraham receiving visitors 'in the heat of the day' (Gen 18:1), the seasonal rhythm of 'cold and heat' (Gen 8:22), and the dangerous harvest sun that withers unrooted plants (Jer 17:8; Isa 18:4). Spanish calor de and German Hitze both render this straightforwardly as climatic intensity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [ktiv], and-heat, as-heat-of | es: (cuando-calor-de), [qeré], calentar-de | fr: Cham, [ktiv], [בחם] | de: [ktiv], [בחם], [בחמו] Gen 8:22; Gen 18:1; 1Sam 11:9; 1Sam 11:11

2. inflamed with passion (1×) Figurative heat as inflamed passion—appearing once in Jeremiah 51:39, where Babylon's leaders are described as heated with drink before divine judgment falls. Spanish en su calor ('in their heat') preserves the metaphor, linking physical temperature to the flush of intoxication and reckless emotion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: when-they-are-heated | es: en-su-calor | fr: [בחמם] | de: [בחמם] Jer 51:39

3. hot in temperature (1×) The temperature of a physical object, specifically hot bread in 1 Samuel 21:7, where the priest at Nob offers David 'hot bread' freshly removed from before the LORD. English hot, Spanish caliente, and the phrase lechem chom ('bread of heat') all point to tactile warmth rather than atmospheric or emotional heat. HEAT AND WARMTH
en: hot | es: caliente | fr: hot | de: hot 1Sam 21:7

4. bodily warmth (1×) Bodily warmth as comfort or its absence—found in Haggai 1:6, where the prophet laments that the people 'clothe themselves, but no one is warm.' This sense focuses on the warmth a body needs to thrive, distinct from the external heat of sun or oven. The multilingual glosses show some confusion (French Léhem, German Brot mislabel it as 'bread'), but the Hebrew clearly denotes personal thermal comfort. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: warmth | es: calor | fr: Léhem | de: Brot Hag 1:6

חֵמָא H2528 Conj-w | N-fs (2×)
rage, fury (Aramaic); intense anger or wrath
This Aramaic noun denotes rage or fury, appearing only in Daniel 3 in the account of Nebuchadnezzar's anger at Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. The word appears in two forms with slightly different spellings (חמא and חמה), representing the same concept. It describes the king's emotional state when the three Hebrew men refused to worship the golden image. The term corresponds to Hebrew חמה and is cognate with other Semitic words for anger and wrath.

(2×) Rage, fury, or intense wrath. Daniel 3:13 describes Nebuchadnezzar commanding 'with fury and rage' to bring the three men before him, while 3:19 states that 'the image of his face was changed' and he was 'filled with fury' against them. Both occurrences capture the king's explosive anger at perceived disobedience. The multilingual glosses consistently render it as 'fury' or 'furia,' and the conjunction forms ('and fury,' 'with fury') show it in construct relationship with other terms for anger. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-fury, with-fury | es: furia, y-furia | fr: [וחמה], [חמא] | de: [וחמה], [חמא] Dan 3:13; Dan 3:19

חֶמְאָה H2529a N-fsc (10×)
Curds, curdled milk — a thick dairy product from cows, sheep, or goats, signifying pastoral abundance
The noun חֶמְאָה (chem'ah) denotes curds or curdled milk, a staple of pastoral life in the ancient Near East. Abraham set curds and milk before his three visitors at Mamre (Gen 18:8), and Jael offered Sisera curds in a lordly bowl (Judg 5:25). Moses' Song celebrates the land's bounty with 'curds of the herd and milk of the flock' (Deut 32:14). The word also appears in wisdom and poetic contexts: Job 20:17 envisions rivers of curds and honey, while Proverbs 30:33 observes that churning milk produces curds. The image consistently evokes richness, hospitality, and the good life. Spanish 'mantequilla/cuajada' and English 'curds/butter' both approximate the thick dairy product.

curds / curdled milk (10×) A thick, curdled dairy product — curds, clotted cream, or a butter-like substance — obtained by churning or naturally thickening milk from cattle or sheep. A marker of pastoral abundance and generous hospitality: Abraham serves it to divine visitors (Gen 18:8), Jael offers it to Sisera (Judg 5:25), and it symbolizes the richness of the promised land (Deut 32:14). Also used in proverbial wisdom about the churning process (Prov 30:33) and in descriptions of wished-for prosperity (Job 20:17; 29:6; 2 Sam 17:29). Spanish 'cuajada' and French 'lait caillé' reflect the curdled texture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-cream, and-curds, curds | es: Cuajada, cuajada, en-leche | fr: beurre, curds, curds-de | de: Butter, [בחמה], [וחמאה] Gen 18:8; Deut 32:14; Judg 5:25; 2Sam 17:29; Job 20:17

חֵמָה H2529b
heat, rage, wrath; also venom, poison (from root meaning 'to be hot')
This powerful term captures the physical sensation of burning heat and its psychological parallel in human rage. The semantic range extends from literal fever (as in Hosea 7:5, 'wine-fever') to the metaphorical heat of divine wrath that appears repeatedly in prophetic judgment oracles. Interestingly, cognate languages preserve both the 'heat' and 'poison' senses—Arabic and Syriac can mean venom, while Akkadian imtu denotes breath or poison. The term frequently appears with possessive suffixes in contexts of God's anger being poured out, creating vivid imagery of wrath as something hot, consuming, and life-threatening.

חָמַד H2530a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (21×)
To desire or covet; as participle, desirable or precious; in Piel, to delight in intensely
A verb at the heart of the Tenth Commandment, spanning the full moral spectrum of human longing. In its plainest Qal sense it means to desire or covet, and in Exodus 20:17 it carries the weight of forbidden acquisitiveness. Yet the same root describes the trees of Eden as 'desirable to look at' (Gen 2:9) and God's judgments as 'more to be desired than gold' (Ps 19:10). The passive participle can function as a noun meaning 'treasure' or 'precious thing,' while the intensive Piel in Song of Songs 2:3 conveys rapturous delight. Multilingual renderings highlight this range: Spanish shifts from 'codiciar' (covet) to 'deseable' (desirable), and German from coveting to 'lieblich' (lovely).

1. desire, covet (13×) The primary active sense: to desire, covet, or long for something. This is the verb of the Decalogue (Exod 20:17; Deut 5:21), where it denotes sinful, ungoverned craving for a neighbor's possessions. Yet context can soften it to neutral longing, as in Joshua 7:21 where Achan confesses 'I coveted them.' Spanish 'codiciar' and French 'convoiter' consistently mark this as acquisitive desire, while the German renderings often leave the Hebrew untranslated, underscoring its untranslatable moral weight. DESIRE AND COVETING en: and-I-coveted-them, and-they-covet, and-we-desire-him | es: Y-codician, codiciará, codiciarás | fr: –covet, [ונחמדהו], [חמדתם] | de: [וחמד], [ונחמדהו], [חמד] Exod 20:17; Exod 34:24; Deut 5:21; Deut 7:25

2. desirable, to be desired (4×) The Nifal participial sense: desirable, pleasant, worthy of desire. Here the verb functions adjectivally, describing objects that attract or delight. Genesis 2:9 uses it for Eden's trees, and Psalm 19:10 for God's ordinances being 'more to be desired than gold.' Spanish 'deseable' and German 'lieblich' (lovely) show the shift from acquisitive craving to aesthetic or spiritual appreciation. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: and-delightful, desirable, more-to-be-desired | es: agradable, deseable, los-más-deseables | fr: desirable, désirer, et-delightful | de: [חמד], lieblich, mehr-zu-sein-desired Gen 2:9; Gen 3:6; Ps 19:10; Prov 21:20

3. precious thing, treasure (3×) The Qal passive participle used substantively to mean a precious thing, treasure, or delight. In Job 20:20 and Psalm 39:11 it refers to what a person treasures or holds dear. German 'Schatz' (treasure) and Spanish 'cosas preciadas' (precious things) confirm the substantival reading, where the act of desiring has crystallized into the object desired. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: and-their-delights, his-treasure, with-his-treasure | es: con-lo-codiciado, su-deseo, y-sus-cosas-preciadas | fr: [וחמודיהם], désirer, désirer-lui | de: [בחמודו], [וחמודיהם], sein-Schatz Job 20:20; Ps 39:11; Isa 44:9

4. delight in intensely (1×) The Piel intensive sense: to delight in intensely, expressing heightened or focused desire. Found only in Song of Songs 2:3, where the beloved delights to sit in the shade of her lover. Spanish 'deseé' and French 'j'ai désiré' render it as a strong personal longing, but the Piel stem signals an intensity beyond ordinary wanting—closer to savoring or relishing. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: I-delighted | es: deseé | fr: j'ai-désiré | de: [חמדתי] Song 2:3

חֲמוּדָה H2530b Conj-w (7×)

Feminine noun meaning 'preciousness, desirable things, treasures'; also 'delicacies, choice food.'

Derived from the root chamad ('to desire'), this noun captures the quality of being deeply desirable or precious. Its most striking use is in Daniel's epithet ish chamudot, 'man of treasures,' meaning one greatly beloved by God (Daniel 9:23, 10:11, 10:19). It also describes costly material goods: precious spoils in 2 Chronicles 20:25, treasures of Egypt in Daniel 11:43, and costly stones in Daniel 11:38. In one specialized usage it denotes choice food or delicacies, when Daniel abstains from lechem chamudot, 'bread of desirable things,' during his fast (Daniel 10:3).

1. preciousness, treasured things (6×) Preciousness, costliness, or treasured things, whether persons or objects. Daniel is called ish chamudot ('man of treasures'), a term of divine endearment meaning 'greatly beloved' (Dan 9:23, 10:11, 10:19). The same word describes material valuables: costly spoils in 2 Chronicles 20:25 and the treasures of Egypt in Daniel 11:43. Spanish amado for Daniel and cosas-preciosas for material goods show how translators naturally split the personal and material applications of this single sense. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: and-with-treasures, precious-things, treasured | es: amado, cosas-preciosas-de, preciosos | fr: [חמדות], désirable, et-désirable | de: [ובחמדות], [חמדות], [חמודות] 2Chr 20:25; Dan 9:23; Dan 10:11; Dan 10:19; Dan 11:38

2. delicacies, desirable food (1×) Choice food or delicacies, a specialized application of 'desirable things' to the culinary domain. Found in Daniel 10:3, where lechem chamudot ('bread of desirable things') refers to rich or choice food that Daniel renounced during his three-week mourning period. The English 'delicacies' and Spanish delicias capture this gastronomic narrowing, distinguishing it from the broader 'precious things' sense. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: delicacies | es: delicias | fr: désirable | de: [חמדות] Dan 10:3

חֶמֶד H2531 N-ms (6×)

Desire, delight, preciousness — that which is attractive, pleasant, or coveted.

A masculine noun expressing what is desirable or delightful. Always appearing after a construct noun, it functions as an intensifying attribute: 'vineyards of delight' (Amos 5:11), 'fields of delight' (Isa 32:12), and 'young men of desire' — that is, attractive, desirable young men (Ezek 23:6, 12, 23). Spanish 'deleite' and 'delicia' capture the aesthetic pleasure, while 'deseo' emphasizes the longing quality. The word elevates the ordinary into the coveted.

delight, desirable thing, preciousness (6×) That which is desirable, delightful, or precious — used attributively to mark something as especially attractive or coveted. Spanish 'deleite/delicia/deseo' captures both the pleasure and longing dimensions. Amos speaks of 'vineyards of delight' that the unjust planted (Amos 5:11), Isaiah mourns 'pleasant fields' (Isa 32:12), and Ezekiel describes Assyrian officers as 'desirable young men' to portray Oholibah's infatuation (Ezek 23:6, 12, 23). The word consistently elevates its head noun into something especially prized. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: delight, desire, of-delight | es: deleite, delicia, deseo | fr: [חמד], [חמד] | de: [חמד], [חמד] Isa 27:2; Isa 32:12; Ezek 23:6; Ezek 23:12; Ezek 23:23

חֶמְדָּה H2532a N-fs (16×)

Desire, delight, or preciousness; something longed for, delightful, or treasured as valuable.

Chemdah captures the magnetic pull of something that draws the heart – whether the feeling of desire itself or the quality that makes an object desirable. When Samuel tells Saul that 'all the desire of Israel' rests on him (1 Sam 9:20), the word hovers between the people's longing and Saul's desirability as king. Haggai's famous prophecy that 'the chemdah of all nations shall come' (Hag 2:7) has been read as treasure, as desire, or messianically. Jeremiah mourns his 'pleasant portion' trampled (Jer 12:10), and Hosea warns that Ephraim's 'precious vessels' will be plundered (Hos 13:15). Across its range, the word insists that true worth and true longing are two sides of the same coin.

1. delight or pleasantness (6×) Delight or pleasantness – the quality of being delightful, beautiful, or desirable in itself. Jeremiah calls his vineyard-land 'my pleasant portion' (chemdati, Jer 12:10), the psalmist speaks of a 'desirable land' rejected by Israel (Ps 106:24), and Ezekiel lists Tyre's 'pleasant things' among her doomed treasures (Ezek 26:12). Spanish 'delicia' and 'deseable' track the quality-of-delight nuance. Six occurrences emphasize the objective attractiveness of what is described. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-delight, desirable, desire | es: delicia, delicia-mi, deseable | fr: [החמדה], [חמדה], [חמדתי] | de: [החמדה], [חמדה], [חמדתי] Ps 106:24; Isa 2:16; Jer 3:19; Jer 12:10; Ezek 26:12

2. desire or longing (6×) Desire or longing – the subjective emotion of wanting or setting one's heart on something. Samuel asks about 'all the desire of Israel' (1 Sam 9:20); King Jehoram died 'without desire,' meaning unmourned (2 Chr 21:20); Daniel's antagonist disregards 'the desire of women' (Dan 11:37). Spanish 'deseo' and French 'desir' mark this abstract-emotion reading. Six occurrences center on the act of desiring. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: desire, desire-of, their-desire | es: deseo, deseo-de, deseo-suyo | fr: [חמדה], désir, désir-de | de: [חמדה], [חמדת], [חמדתם] 1Sam 9:20; 2Chr 21:20; 2Chr 32:27; Dan 11:8; Dan 11:37

3. precious valuable thing (4×) A precious or valuable thing – concrete objects treasured for their material or intrinsic worth. Nebuchadnezzar carries off 'precious vessels' from the temple (2 Chr 36:10), the shepherds of Israel lose their 'precious possessions' in judgment (Jer 25:34), and Nineveh's plunderers seize her 'precious things' (Nah 2:9). Spanish 'tesoro-de' and 'precioso' reveal the shift from abstract longing to tangible wealth. Four occurrences give chemdah this concrete, objectified sense. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: desire, desire-of, precious | es: deseo, precioso, tesoro-de | fr: [חמדה], [חמדת], désir | de: [חמדה], [חמדת] 2Chr 36:10; Jer 25:34; Hos 13:15; Nah 2:9

חֲמוּדָה H2532b Art / N-fp (2×)

desirable, precious things; choice objects or garments valued for their worth

This noun denotes desirable or precious things—objects, garments, or persons valued for their worth and attractiveness. The plural form can refer to choice garments (Genesis 27:15), precious treasures and vessels (Ezra 8:27, 2 Chronicles 20:25), desirable food (Daniel 10:3), or even to persons who are highly valued (Daniel 9:23, 10:11, 10:19). The root sense is 'that which is desired or treasured,' with specific meaning determined by context. The term emphasizes subjective value—what is precious in someone's eyes.

(2×) Desirable or precious things, whether objects or persons. Genesis 27:15 uses it of Esau's 'choice garments' that Rebekah took for Jacob. Ezra 8:27 employs it for 'precious' vessels 'as precious as gold.' The word can describe valued items (garments, vessels, food) or valued persons (Daniel's designation as a 'precious treasure' or 'greatly loved one'). The multilingual evidence shows both object-focused translations ('preciosos,' 'precious,' 'kostbaren') and quality-focused ones ('desirable,' 'preciados'), capturing the dual nuance of objective worth and subjective value. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: precious, the-desirable | es: los-preciados, preciosos | fr: [חמודת], le-desirable | de: [חמודת], die-kostbaren Gen 27:15; Ezra 8:27

חֶמְדָּן H2533 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hemdan, an Edomite clan leader

Hemdan was a descendant of Seir the Horite, one of the indigenous inhabitants of Edom before the Edomites displaced them. Genesis 36:26 lists him in the Table of Nations among Edomite clans. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 1:41 gives the name as Hamran, showing the kind of textual variation common in genealogical lists. Both forms appear to be valid representations of the same individual.

(1×) A personal name within the Edomite genealogies. The Septuagint variations (Amada, Emeron, Amadam) show how different manuscript traditions handled the name. Spanish Jemdan and English Hemdan reflect standard transliteration patterns. Genesis 36:26 places him in the larger framework of Esau's descendants and the original Horite population, documenting the ethnic complexity of Edom's ancestry. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hemdan | es: Jemdan | fr: Hemdan | de: Chemdan Gen 36:26

חֲמָה H2534 Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (124×)

Heat, rage, wrath, fury; intense anger especially of God; also venom or poison of serpents.

Chemah is one of the Hebrew Bible's most visceral anger words — etymologically rooted in heat (from yacham, 'to be hot'), it denotes the burning fury that rises in God or in human beings when provoked beyond endurance. Of its 124 occurrences, the overwhelming majority describe divine wrath: God's chemah 'pours out' like fire (Nah 1:6), 'burns' against Israel (2 Kgs 22:17), and must be 'turned away' through repentance or intercession. Spanish furor, German Grimm, and French fureur all capture the white-hot intensity. But chemah has a second, entirely distinct meaning — 'venom, poison' — appearing six times in connection with serpents (Deut 32:24, 33; Ps 58:4). This homonymous sense preserves an ancient Semitic connection between heat and venom found also in Arabic huma ('poison') and Aramaic yachma, suggesting that the burning sensation of snakebite gave both meanings their common root.

1. wrath, fury, rage (117×) Wrath, fury, rage — the dominant sense at 117 occurrences, describing intense anger in both divine and human contexts. God's chemah is 'poured out' (2 Chr 12:7; 34:25), 'kindled' (Ps 89:46), and threatens to 'consume' (Jer 4:4). Human chemah drives Esau's murderous intent (Gen 27:44), Nebuchadnezzar's rage (Dan 3:13), and the fury of the wicked (Job 19:29; 36:18). Spanish furor/furia, German Grimm, French fureur, and Arabic ghadab all converge on the burning-anger pole. The possessive forms — chamati ('my wrath'), chamato ('his wrath') — account for a large share of occurrences, almost always referring to God's own fury in prophetic judgment oracles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Wrath, my-wrath, wrath | es: Furor, furia, furia-de-mí | fr: fureur | de: Grimm 2Kgs 22:17; 2Chr 12:7; 2Chr 34:25; Job 19:29; Job 36:18

2. venom, poison (6×) Venom, poison — a homonymous sense appearing 6 times, entirely distinct from the wrath meaning. In Deut 32:24 God sends 'the venom of crawling things'; in Deut 32:33 the wine of the wicked is 'the venom of serpents'; in Ps 58:4 the wicked have 'venom like the venom of a serpent.' Arabic huma ('poison') preserves the same etymological connection between heat and toxic substance. Spanish veneno and English 'venom' clearly separate this from the anger sense, though French fureur and German Grimm sometimes blur the boundary. The Semitic root yacham links both senses through the shared concept of burning — the burn of rage and the burn of snakebite. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-venom-of-, their-venom, venom- | es: su-veneno, veneno-, veneno-de | fr: fureur, leur-fureur-eux, venom-de | de: Grimm, der-venom-von-, venom- Deut 32:24; Deut 32:33; Job 6:4; Ps 58:4

3. (1×) Heat or fever — a single occurrence at Hos 7:5 in the phrase chamat miyayin ('heat/fever from wine'), describing the flushed, feverish state of drunkenness among Israel's corrupt leaders. BDB classifies this as the literal base meaning: physical heat or fever. English 'heat of' and Spanish 'ardor de' both render the thermal sense directly. This sole occurrence preserves the etymological starting point from which both the wrath and venom senses developed — raw physical heat that metaphorically extended in two directions: inward as rage, outward as toxic burning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-heat-of | es: con-ardor-de | fr: Hamath | de: Grimm Hos 7:5

חַמָּה H2535 Art / N-fs (6×)

sun (poetic synonym for shemesh); heat of the sun

A poetic noun for the sun, elevated and literary in tone, appearing only in poetry and prophecy as a dignified alternative to the everyday shemesh. Isaiah pairs it with levanah ('moon') in eschatological visions where the sun is 'ashamed' before God's glory (Isa 24:23; 30:26). Song of Songs 6:10 uses it in the stunning portrait of the beloved: 'bright as the sun.' In Psalm 19:6, the focus shifts from the celestial body to its penetrating heat, from which nothing can hide. The multilingual glosses confirm this split: Spanish and French render 'sol'/'soleil' for the sun itself but 'calor'/'chaleur' for its thermal radiation.

1. sun (poetic) (5×) The sun as a celestial body, used as a poetic and prophetic synonym for the common word shemesh. Found in eschatological contexts where the sun is shamed or outshone by God's glory (Isa 24:23; 30:26), in the praise of beauty (Song 6:10), and in Job 30:28 describing going about 'without the sun.' Spanish 'el sol,' French 'le soleil,' and English 'the sun' all converge on the astronomical referent. SUN CELESTIAL BODY

en: like-the-sun, of-the-sun, sun | es: como-el-sol, el-sol, sol | fr: comme-le-soleil,, le-fureur, חמה | de: [חמה], [כחמה], die-Hitze Job 30:28; Song 6:10; Isa 24:23; Isa 30:26

2. heat (of the sun) (1×) The heat or warmth radiating from the sun, focusing on thermal effect rather than the luminous body. In Ps 19:6, 'nothing is hidden from its heat,' describing the sun's penetrating reach. Spanish 'de su calor' and French 'de chaleur' both shift to thermal vocabulary, distinguishing this from the celestial sense. German 'Hitze' (heat) likewise confirms the thermal focus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-his-heat | es: de-su-calor | fr: de-chaleur | de: von-sein-heat Ps 19:6

חֲמוּאֵל H2536 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chammu'el (or Hammuel), a Simeonite

Chammu'el was a member of the tribe of Simeon, listed in 1 Chronicles 4:26 in the genealogical records of Simeon's descendants. The meaning of the name is uncertain, though it may have Sabaean cognates suggesting possible Arabian connections. Like many names in the Chronicler's genealogies, it preserves the memory of clan leaders whose individual histories have been lost but whose names anchor family identity.

(1×) A personal name within Simeon's genealogy. The name appears only in Chronicles' genealogical material, which often preserves names not found in earlier sources. Spanish Jamuel and the Septuagint Amouel show typical consonantal variations in transmission. 1 Chronicles 4:26 includes him in the Simeonite family tree, part of the Chronicler's effort to document all Israelite tribal lineages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chammu'el | es: Jamuel | fr: [חמואל] | de: [חמואל] 1Chr 4:26

חֲמוּטַל H2537 N-proper-fs (5×)

Hamutal; mother of kings Jehoahaz and Zedekiah, daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah

Hamutal was the wife of King Josiah and mother of two of Judah's last kings: Jehoahaz and Zedekiah. Her name possibly means 'my father-in-law is the dew,' connecting to the name Abital by parallel construction. She appears at pivotal moments in Judah's decline, named in the accession formulae of both sons (2 Kgs 23:31; 24:18; Jer 52:1). The Ketiv spelling chamital and Qere chamutal reveal an early textual variation preserved across manuscript traditions. French and German leave the Hebrew partially untransliterated, while Spanish ('Hamutal/Jamutal') reflects aspiration differences.

(5×) Hamutal, a proper feminine name. Mother of Kings Jehoahaz and Zedekiah, daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah, and wife of Josiah. The name's etymology is debated: the Ketiv form chamital may mean 'my father-in-law is the dew,' paralleling Abital ('my father is the dew'). All five occurrences appear in royal accession formulae (2 Kgs 23:31; 24:18; Jer 52:1), marking her political significance as mother of two of Judah's final monarchs. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Chamutal), Chamutal, [Chamital] | es: Hamutal, Jamutal, [Hamital] | fr: Chamutal, [(חמוטל)], [Chamital] | de: Chamutal, [(חמוטל)], [Chamital] 2Kgs 23:31; 2Kgs 24:18; Jer 52:1

חָמוּל H2538 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Hamul: grandson of Judah through Perez

A personal name meaning 'spared' or 'pitied,' belonging to a grandson of Judah. Hamul was the son of Perez and thus part of Judah's lineage that would eventually lead to David and the messianic line. The name appears in genealogical lists tracing the tribe of Judah's family structure. As the ancestor of the Hamulite clan, his name marked one of the subdivisions of the tribe during the wilderness period and settlement in Canaan.

(3×) Hamul, son of Perez and grandson of Judah. Genesis 46:12 includes him among those who went to Egypt with Jacob. Numbers 26:21 mentions him as ancestor of the Hamulite clan during the wilderness census. 1 Chronicles 2:5 confirms his place in Judah's genealogy. The name's etymology ('spared') may reflect thanksgiving for survival or divine preservation. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish Jamul, French/English Hamul) maintain transliteration conventions for proper names. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chamul, and-Hamul, to-Hamul | es: de-Hamul, y-Jamul | fr: [וחמול], et-Hamul, à-Hamul | de: [וחמול], und-Chamul, zu-Hamul Gen 46:12; Num 26:21; 1Chr 2:5

הַחֲמוּלִי H2539 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Hamulite (clan name)

This gentilic adjective designates the clan descended from Hamul, a son of Perez in the tribe of Judah. Numbers 26:21 uses it in the wilderness census to identify the Hamulite family as one of Judah's constituent clans. The definite article makes it function as a collective noun—'the Hamulite clan'—in the systematic enumeration of Israel's military-age males.

(1×) The collective designation for descendants of Hamul within Judah. The gentilic pattern (personal name + ite) creates a clan identifier used in official census records. Multilingual versions (the Hamulite, los hamulitas, le Hamulite) preserve this as a proper group name. Numbers 26:21 employs it in the detailed tribal accounting that organized Israel's camp and military structure during the wilderness wanderings. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Hamulite | es: los-hamulitas | fr: le-Hamulite | de: der-Hamulite Num 26:21

חַמּוֹן H2540 Conj-w / N-proper (2×)

Hammon, a town in Asher or Naphtali, possibly meaning hot spring

Hammon (possibly meaning 'hot spring') was a town name appearing in two contexts: in the territory of Asher (Joshua 19:28) and in Naphtali (1 Chronicles 6:76, though some identify this with Hammath or Hammoth-dor). The name likely refers to thermal springs in the region, as the root חם relates to heat or warmth. If the two references are to different places, there may have been multiple towns named for local hot springs. The Septuagint and other ancient versions preserve the name with minor variations.

(2×) A place name in northern Israel, associated with either Asher or Naphtali or both. Joshua 19:28 lists 'Hammon' among the cities in Asher's border, while 1 Chronicles 6:76 (6:61 in Hebrew) mentions it in connection with Naphtali's Levitical cities, possibly identical with Hammath. The etimology suggests 'hot spring,' appropriate for the region. Modern translations maintain the transliterated form: Hammon, Hamón, Jamon, Chammon. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chammon, and-Chammon | es: Jamon, y-Hamón | fr: [חמון], et-Chammon | de: [חמון], und-Chammon Josh 19:28; 1Chr 6:76

חָמוֹץ H2541 N-ms (1×)

the ruthless, the oppressor

This noun denotes someone who acts with violence or oppression. Isaiah 1:17 uses it in a command: 'Set right the ruthless' (or possibly 'Relieve the oppressed,' depending on whether it's active or passive). The context is Isaiah's call for justice in Jerusalem—genuine righteousness means actively intervening on behalf of those suffering under violent oppression. The rare word appears only here, making its precise nuance debated.

(1×) One who acts ruthlessly or oppressively, or possibly one who is oppressed (if the form is passive). The Hebrew form suggests an active agent ('ruthless one') rather than a victim, but ancient versions varied. Spanish 'al opresor' (the oppressor) takes it actively. Isaiah 1:17's ethical imperatives focus on correcting social injustice, whether by restraining oppressors or defending the oppressed—both interpretations fit the prophetic call. RED AND SCARLET

en: the-oppressor | es: al-opresor | fr: [חמוץ] | de: [חמוץ] Isa 1:17

חֲמוּק H2542 N-mpc (1×)

curves, curvings (of the body)

This noun refers to curved lines or graceful curves, used in Song of Songs 7:1 to describe the curves of the beloved's thighs. It's part of the Song's celebration of physical beauty, using architectural or artistic language to praise the human form. The word captures the aesthetic appreciation of curved, flowing lines—whether in crafted objects or the human body's natural contours.

(1×) Graceful curves or curved lines, specifically of the body. Song 7:1 uses it in the lover's descriptive praise, comparing his beloved's beauty to skilled craftsmanship. The plural 'curvings' suggests multiple flowing lines. Spanish 'las curvas' (the curves) and French 'les courbes' (the curves) precisely capture the aesthetic focus. The Song's use reflects ancient appreciation for symmetry and graceful form in human beauty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: curves-of | es: las-curvas-de | fr: Les-courbes | de: [חמוקי] Song 7:1

חֲמוֹר H2543 Prep-l (96×)

Donkey — the male domesticated ass, a primary beast of burden, transport, and livestock wealth in ancient Israel

Hamor is the standard Hebrew word for the male donkey, one of the most economically important animals in the biblical world. Donkeys appear in patriarchal wealth inventories alongside sheep, cattle, and camels (Gen 12:16; 24:35), served as everyday mounts long before horses became common in Israel (Num 22:21; Judg 10:4), and carried loads on long journeys (Gen 42:26; 1 Sam 25:18). The word also appears in legal contexts: the firstborn of a donkey must be redeemed with a lamb (Exod 13:13; 34:20), and the Sabbath rest extends to one's donkey (Exod 23:12; Deut 5:14). Issachar is memorably compared to a 'strong-boned donkey' crouching between the saddlebags (Gen 49:14).

donkey (male ass) (96×) The male domesticated donkey (Equus asinus), the standard beast of burden and riding animal in ancient Israel. Hamor covers the animal in all its roles: as a measure of patriarchal wealth (Gen 12:16; 30:43), a mount for travel (Num 22:21; 1 Sam 25:20), a load-bearer (Gen 42:26; 1 Sam 16:20), and a subject of legal regulation regarding Sabbath rest (Exod 23:12) and firstborn redemption (Exod 13:13). Spanish 'asno,' French 'ane,' and German 'Esel' all denote the same animal. The name itself derives from a Semitic root linked to reddish coloring. DONKEYS AND FOALS
en: a-donkey, donkey, the-donkey | es: asno, el-asno | fr: l'âne, le-âne, un-âne | de: Esel, dem-Esel, der-Esel Gen 12:16; Gen 22:5; Gen 24:35; Gen 30:43; Gen 32:5

חֲמוֹר H2544 N-proper-ms (13×)

Hamor — a Hivite chief, father of Shechem, whose clan interacted with Jacob's family at Shechem

The personal name of the Hivite ruler of the city of Shechem and father of the prince Shechem who assaulted Dinah. His 13 occurrences cluster tightly in Genesis 33-34 and carry forward to Joshua 24:32 (the burial plot Jacob purchased from him) and Judges 9:28 (a later political memory). The name itself means 'donkey,' possibly reflecting a treaty-animal symbolism attested elsewhere in Semitic culture. Translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Hamor/Jamor,' French 'Hamor,' German 'Hamor/Chamor.'

Hamor (13×) The proper name Hamor, a Hivite chieftain of Shechem and father of the prince Shechem. Central to the Dinah narrative (Gen 34:2-26), he negotiates with Jacob's sons after his son's assault. Also named in Genesis 33:19 as the seller of the land parcel at Shechem, recalled in Joshua 24:32 as the source of Jacob's burial plot, and invoked in Judges 9:28 in a political appeal to Shechemite identity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hamor | es: Hamor, Jamor | fr: Hamor | de: Chamor, Chamors, Hamor Gen 33:19; Gen 34:2; Gen 34:4; Gen 34:6; Gen 34:8

חָמוֹת H2545 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3fs (11×)

Mother-in-law — a husband's mother or wife's mother, central to the Ruth narrative

The noun חָמוֹת (chamot) specifically designates one's mother-in-law, and its occurrences cluster almost entirely in the book of Ruth, where the relationship between Naomi and Ruth is the emotional and theological heart of the story. Ruth's loyalty to her mother-in-law — 'your people shall be my people, your God my God' (Ruth 1:16) — redefines family beyond blood. The term appears at every turning point of the narrative: departure (Ruth 1:14), gleaning (2:11, 18-19, 23), and the threshing-floor plan (3:1, 6, 16-17). Micah 7:6 uses the same word in its portrait of social disintegration, where a daughter-in-law rises against her mother-in-law. Spanish 'suegra' and French 'belle-mère' both serve.

her mother in law (11×) A woman's mother-in-law, the mother of her husband. Dominates the book of Ruth, where Naomi is consistently called Ruth's chamot (Ruth 1:14; 2:11, 18-19, 23; 3:1, 6, 16-17), shaping the narrative's portrait of covenant loyalty across family lines. Micah 7:6 employs the same term in a prophecy of domestic betrayal where natural family bonds collapse. Spanish 'suegra,' German 'Schwiegermutter,' and French 'belle-mère' all correspond precisely. MOTHER-IN-LAW KINSHIP en: against-her-mother-in-law, her-mother-in-law, to-her-mother-in-law | es: a-su-suegra, contra-su-suegra, su-suegra | fr: belle-mère, sa-mère-dans-loi, ton-mère-dans-loi | de: Schwiegermutter, deine-Schwiegermutter, ihre-Schwiegermutter Ruth 1:14; Ruth 2:11; Ruth 2:18; Ruth 2:19

חֹמֶט H2546 Conj-w (1×)

sand lizard or similar reptile

This word identifies a type of reptile listed among unclean creatures in Leviticus 11:30. It appears in a series of small creeping things—gecko, monitor lizard, wall lizard, skink, and chameleon. The exact species is uncertain; suggestions include sand lizard, chameleon, or other desert reptiles. Ancient Israel's dietary laws categorized such creatures as unclean, making them forbidden as food.

(1×) A species of lizard or reptile deemed unclean under Levitical law. The context lists it among swarming creatures that crawl on the ground. Spanish 'caracol' (snail) shows the interpretive challenge—different traditions identified different creatures. English 'sand-lizard' reflects a common scholarly suggestion. Leviticus 11:30 includes it in the comprehensive list of prohibited animals, part of Israel's holiness code distinguishing clean from unclean. LIVING CREATURES
en: and-the-sand-lizard | es: y-el-caracol | fr: et-le-sand-lizard | de: und-der-Sand-lizard Lev 11:30

חֻמְטָה H2547 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Chumtah (or Humtah), a town in Judah

Chumtah was a settlement in the hill country of Judah, mentioned in Joshua 15:54 among the cities assigned to Judah's inheritance. Its exact location has not been identified by modern archaeology. Like many sites in these ancient territorial lists, the name survives only in the biblical text without clear connection to any known modern location. The Septuagint variations show how ancient scribes handled this relatively obscure place name.

(1×) A place name within Judah's tribal allotment. Joshua 15:54 includes it in the geographical inventory of Judah's hill-country towns. The multilingual glosses (Chumtah, Humatá, Chumtah) show standard transliteration patterns for proper nouns. The Septuagint readings (Euma, Ammata) reflect different vocalization traditions, typical for minor sites whose pronunciation was uncertain even in antiquity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Chumtah | es: y-Humatá | fr: et-Chumtah | de: und-Chumtah Josh 15:54

חָמִיץ H2548 Adj-ms (1×)

seasoned (with salt), savory

This adjective describes food that has been seasoned, particularly with salt or salty herbs, making it more palatable. Isaiah 30:24 uses it to describe the fodder that oxen and donkeys will eat in the messianic age—'well-seasoned provender.' The image suggests abundance and quality: even work animals will enjoy premium, flavorful feed. It's part of Isaiah's vision of agricultural prosperity in the restored creation.

(1×) Food that has been seasoned to improve its taste, likely with salt or salt-herbs. The single occurrence describes animal fodder, suggesting that proper seasoning was valued even for livestock feed. Spanish 'sazonado' (seasoned) captures the culinary improvement. Isaiah 30:24's vision uses such details to paint a picture of comprehensive blessing—when God restores his people, even agricultural practices will reach optimal conditions. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: seasoned | es: sazonado | fr: [חמיץ] | de: [חמיץ] Isa 30:24

חֲמִישִׁי H2549 Number-ofsc (45×)

Fifth (ordinal number) or a fifth part (fraction); used in counting and in legal restitution contexts

The ordinal adjective 'fifth,' used across the Hebrew Bible for sequencing days, months, years, sons, and tribal allotments. In its majority usage, it simply marks position in a series – the fifth day of creation, the fifth month of a king's reign, the fifth lot falling to a tribe. A distinct fractional sense emerges in legal and economic texts, where hamishit means 'a fifth part' added as a penalty or surcharge. Joseph's taxation policy in Genesis 47:24 and the Levitical restitution laws both employ this fractional meaning, which multilingual translations consistently distinguish with partitive constructions.

1. ordinal fifth (34×) The ordinal number 'fifth' marking position in a sequence, attested 34 times for days (Genesis 1:23, the fifth day of creation), months (2 Kings 25:8, the fifth month), years (Leviticus 19:25, the fifth year of fruit trees), tribal allotments (Joshua 19:24), and birth order (Genesis 30:17, Zilpah's fifth son). All major translation languages render this with a straightforward ordinal: Spanish quinto/quinta, French cinquieme, German funfte, Arabic al-khamis.

The consistent cross-linguistic uniformity confirms a simple enumerative function. FIFTH ORDINAL FRACTION

en: The-fifth, the-fifth | es: El-quinto, el-quinto, la-quinta | fr: cinquième, der-cinquième, le-cinquième | de: [החמישׁ], der-Fuenfte, der-fuenfter Gen 1:23; Gen 30:17; Lev 19:25; Num 7:36; Num 29:26

2. a fifth (fraction) (11×) The fractional noun 'a fifth part' or 'one-fifth,' appearing 11 times in legal-economic contexts. Used for the twenty-percent surcharge added to restitution payments (Leviticus 5:16, 6:5, 22:14, 27:13-31) and for Joseph's taxation of Egypt's produce (Genesis 47:24). Multilingual evidence confirms the distinction: Spanish shifts from el quinto (ordinal) to la quinta parte de (fractional), French adds a partitive construction, and German moves from funfte to ein Funftel. The Levitical penalty passages cluster this sense tightly in cultic-legal discourse. FIFTH ORDINAL FRACTION

en: a-fifth, a-fifth-of-it, and-its-fifth | es: de-quinta-parte, la-quinta-parte-de, quinta-parte-suya | fr: cinquième, cinquième-de, et-son-cinquième | de: ein-Fünftel, ein-fuenfter, ein-fuenfter-von-es Gen 47:24; Lev 5:16; Lev 6:5; Lev 22:14; Lev 27:13

חָמַל H2550 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (41×)

To spare, have compassion, or show pity by refraining from destruction or harsh treatment

A verb expressing the restraint of power out of mercy or emotional identification with another's vulnerability. When Saul 'spared' the best livestock (1 Sam 15:9), the emphasis falls on withholding destructive action; when Pharaoh's daughter 'had compassion' on the infant Moses (Exod 2:6), the word shifts toward tender emotional response. Spanish captures both poles well – 'perdonar' (spare) versus 'compadecerse' (feel with). In rare uses like Ezekiel 36:21, the sense narrows further to concerned regard, almost protective jealousy, for God's own name.

1. spare, refrain from destroying (23×) The most frequent use denotes sparing – deliberately withholding punishment or destruction that lies within one's power. In Deuteronomy 13:8 and 1 Samuel 15:3, 9, 15 the context is warfare and divine command: 'do not spare.' The German renderings hesitate ('spare'), while Spanish 'perdonar' captures the juridical overtone of pardoning what could be destroyed. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: He-spares, You-spared, and-he-spared | es: Lo-perdona, Y-perdonó, escatimen | fr: avoir-pitié, et-il-spared, spared | de: [יחמל], [תחמלו], du-wird-spare Deut 13:8; 1Sam 15:3; 1Sam 15:9; 1Sam 15:15; 2Sam 12:4

2. have compassion, pity (16×) Here the emotional dimension moves to the foreground: compassion felt in response to suffering or helplessness. Exodus 2:6 is paradigmatic – Pharaoh's daughter saw the weeping child and 'had compassion.' French 'avoir pitie' and Spanish 'compadecerse' highlight the sympathetic identification. In 2 Chronicles 36:15, 17, God's compassion on his people contrasts starkly with the invaders' lack of it. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: He-had-compassion, I-shall-pity, I-will-pity | es: perdonará, se-compadecerá, tendré-compasión | fr: [חמל], avoir-pitié, et-elle-avait-compassion | de: [אחמול], [יחמל], du-habe-hatte-compassion Exod 2:6; 1Sam 23:21; 2Sam 12:6; 2Chr 36:15; 2Chr 36:17

3. be concerned for, care about (2×) A rare shade (Ezek 36:21; Zech 11:5) where the verb denotes protective concern or emotional investment in something's welfare. In Ezekiel 36:21, God 'had concern for' his holy name – not pity toward a suffering party but solicitous care for something precious. Spanish 'tuve compasion' and German 'schonen' both gesture toward guarding rather than merely feeling. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: and-I-had-concern, and-their-shepherds | es: Y-tuve-compasión, tienen-compasión | fr: et-épargner, épargner | de: schont, und-schonen Ezek 36:21; Zech 11:5

חֶמְלָה H2551 Prep-b / N-fsc (2×)

compassion, mercy, pity; tender feeling that spares from harm

This noun denotes compassion, mercy, or pity—the tender feeling that moves someone to spare another from harm. Technically an infinitive form from the verb חמל (to spare, have compassion), it functions as a noun in both occurrences. In Genesis 19:16, it describes the LORD's compassion on Lot that led the angels to seize his hand and bring him out of Sodom. In Isaiah 63:9, it appears in parallel with God's love as the motivation for redemption: 'In His love and in His compassion He redeemed them.' The term emphasizes the emotional component of mercy.

(2×) Compassion, mercy, or pity shown by sparing someone from deserved harm. Genesis 19:16 uses the construct form: 'in the compassion of the LORD upon him,' explaining why the angels forcibly rescued Lot. Isaiah 63:9 pairs it with love: 'in His love and in His compassion He redeemed them,' showing compassion as the emotional motivation for redemptive action. The multilingual glosses ('compassion,' 'pity,' 'compasión,' 'Erbarmen') consistently emphasize the tender, merciful aspect of this divine attribute. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-His-pity, in-compassion-of | es: por-compasión-de, y-en-su-compasión | fr: [ובחמלתו], dans-compassion-de | de: [ובחמלתו], durch-das-Erbarmen Gen 19:16; Isa 63:9

חָמַם H2552 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (13×)

To be or become warm; causatively, to heat; reflexively, to warm oneself; figuratively, to be inflamed with passion.

A verb rooted in the simple physical sensation of warmth, ranging from the melting of manna in the morning sun (Exod 16:21) to the intimate scene where Elisha's body warms the dead child back to life (2 Kgs 4:34). Its stem variations trace a natural arc: Qal for becoming warm, Piel for making something warm, Hithpael for warming oneself, and Niphal for being inflamed with desire. Spanish distinguishes nicely between 'se calentó' (became warm) and 'los calienta' (warms them), while the figurative Niphal in Isa 57:5 — 'those inflaming themselves' — reveals how the same root moves from comfort to cultic excess.

1. be warm or hot (10×) The basic Qal intransitive sense: to be, become, or grow warm or hot. This covers most occurrences, from manna melting when the sun grew hot (Exod 16:21) to the aged David who could not get warm (1 Kgs 1:1), to Elisha lying upon the child until his flesh grew warm (2 Kgs 4:34). Eccl 4:11 observes that two lying together will be warm. The Psalmist's heart grew hot within him as he mused (Ps 39:3). Spanish 'se calentó' and 'arden' reflect both gentle warmth and rising heat. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: I-am-warm, and-grew-warm, and-it-shall-be-warm | es: Se-calentó, arden, me-calenté | fr: Ham, [ויחם], [חמותי] | de: Krieg-hot, [וחם], [ויחם] Exod 16:21; 1Kgs 1:2; 2Kgs 4:34; Ps 39:3; Eccl 4:11

2. warm transitively (1×) Piel causative: to make warm, to heat another. Found in Job 39:14, where the ostrich leaves her eggs in the earth and lets the dust warm them (תְּחַמְּמֵם). The mother bird's neglect is the point — the sand, not she, provides the heat. Spanish 'los calienta' captures the transitive force clearly. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: she-warms-them | es: los-calienta | fr: תחמם | de: [תחמם] Job 39:14

3. inflame oneself figuratively (1×) Niphal reflexive-figurative: to inflame oneself, used in Isa 57:5 of those burning with lust among the oaks and under every green tree — a picture of idolatrous frenzy. The root's warmth becomes a consuming, illicit fire. Spanish 'los que se encienden' (those who kindle themselves) conveys the self-directed, passionate intensity of this rare usage. PASSIONATE DESIRE

en: the-ones-inflaming-themselves | es: Los-que-se-encienden | fr: [הנחמים] | de: [הנחמים] Isa 57:5

4. warm oneself reflexively (1×) Hithpael reflexive: to warm oneself deliberately. In Job 31:20, Job defends his care for the poor, asking whether the needy man's body was not warmed by the fleece of his sheep. The reflexive stem emphasizes the subject's own experience of receiving warmth. Spanish 'se calentó' parallels the self-directed action. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: he-was-warmed | es: se-calentó | fr: יתחמם | de: [יתחמם] Job 31:20

חַמָּן H2553 N-mpc / 2mp (8×)

Sun-pillars or incense altars; cultic objects associated with Canaanite solar worship, always condemned in Scripture.

Chammanim are cultic installations connected to pagan worship, likely standing stones dedicated to a solar deity or specialized incense altars used in Baal worship. Every occurrence carries a tone of condemnation. Leviticus 26:30 threatens their destruction alongside the high places. The Chronicler records their removal during the reforms of Asa (2 Chr 14:5) and Josiah (2 Chr 34:4, 7). Isaiah envisions their demolition as part of Israel's future purification (Isa 17:8; 27:9). The Palmyrene cognate chamana confirms a solar association, and they consistently appear alongside other symbols of idolatry—asherim, altars of Baal, and carved images.

sun-pillar / incense altar (8×) Sun-pillars or incense altars used in idolatrous worship, always mentioned in contexts of pagan cult destruction or prophetic judgment. English glosses alternate between 'incense altars' and 'sun-pillars,' Spanish offers both 'incensarios' and 'ídolos de sol,' reflecting the scholarly uncertainty about the exact form of these objects. They consistently appear in lists alongside bamot (high places), asherim (sacred poles), and mizbekhot habba'alim (altars of the Baals)—as in 2 Chronicles 34:4, 7 and Isaiah 17:8. Their placement in Leviticus 26:30 (the Holiness Code) establishes their condemnation as covenant violation. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: and-the-incense-altars, sun-pillars-of-you, the-incense-altars | es: los-incensarios, los-ídolos-de-sol, ni-altares-de-incienso | fr: [הַחַמָּנִים], [וְהַחַמָּנִים], [וְחַמָּנִים] | de: [הַחַמָּנִים], [וְהַחַמָּנִים], [וְחַמָּנִים] Lev 26:30; 2Chr 14:5; 2Chr 34:4; 2Chr 34:7; Isa 17:8

חָמַס H2554 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (8×)

To treat violently, do wrong; to strip or tear down; to shed (of a vine); passive: to be violated

The Hebrew root חמס carries the raw energy of wrongful force — violence that transgresses moral boundaries. Its most common use is the active doing of violence against the vulnerable: widows and orphans (Jer 22:3), or priests profaning God's law (Ezek 22:26, Zeph 3:4). Spanish violentaron and Arabic ظَلَمُوا (to wrong, oppress) consistently capture this ethical violation. But the root stretches into surprising territory: a vine 'shedding' its unripe grapes (Job 15:33), and God himself forcibly tearing down his own tabernacle (Lam 2:6). The Nifal passive completes the picture — those who suffer violence have violence done to them (Jer 13:22).

1. do violence / treat violently (5×) The core Qal active sense: to commit violence, to wrong or oppress unjustly. This is the ethical heart of the root, covering physical and institutional violence alike. Priests who 'do violence' to the Torah (Ezek 22:26; Zeph 3:4) violate sacred trust, while oppressors who 'rob' and 'scheme' against the vulnerable (Jer 22:3; Job 21:27) violate persons. Arabic ظَلَمُوا ('they wronged') and Spanish violentaron underscore the moral transgression inherent in every use. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: do-violence-to, does-violence-to, they-have-done-violence-to | es: roben, tramáis., violenta | fr: [תַּחְמְסוּ], violer, חמס | de: [חָמַס], [חָמְסוּ], [תַּחְמְסוּ] Job 21:27; Prov 8:36; Jer 22:3; Ezek 22:26; Zeph 3:4

2. shake off / shed (of a vine) (1×) A specialized botanical metaphor: a vine 'shaking off' or shedding its unripe fruit (Job 15:33). The glosses diverge sharply from the violence sense — Spanish dejará caer ('will drop') and Arabic نَفَضَ ('to shake off') both convey natural expulsion rather than interpersonal wrong. Eliphaz uses this image to describe the wicked whose projects abort prematurely, like a vine that cannot bring its fruit to ripeness. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: he-sheds | es: Dejará-caer | fr: יַחְמֹס | de: [יַחְמֹס] Job 15:33

3. strip / tear down (1×) To strip, tear down, or forcibly dismantle. In Lam 2:6 God tears apart his own dwelling 'as a garden' — Arabic وَخَرَّبَ ('and uprooted') and Spanish ha arrancado ('has torn out') convey the violent dismantling. The image is striking: God treating his sanctuary with the same destructive force elsewhere reserved for enemies, intensifying the anguish of the Babylonian destruction. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: And-He-stripped | es: Y-ha-arrancado | fr: [וַיַּחְמֹס] | de: [וַיַּחְמֹס] Lam 2:6

4. be violated (Nifal passive) (1×) The Nifal passive: to be violated, to suffer violence. In Jer 13:22 Jerusalem's 'skirts are uncovered' and her 'heels are violated' — the passive voice transfers the weight of חמס onto the victim. Arabic ظُلِمْنَ ('were violated') and Spanish fueron violados ('they were violated') both register the passive suffering that mirrors the active wrongdoing of sense 1. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: are-violated | es: fueron-violados | fr: [נֶחְמְסוּ] | de: [נֶחְמְסוּ] Jer 13:22

חָמָס H2555 Conj-w / N-ms (60×)

Violence, brutality, or destructive aggression; also moral wrong, injustice, or malicious harm done to another person.

The Hebrew חָמָס covers a spectrum from raw physical brutality to subtler forms of injustice and moral wrong. When God sees the earth filled with חָמָס before the Flood (Gen 6:11), the word encompasses the full corruption of human conduct. Yet when Hagar wrongs Sarah (Gen 16:5), or when a malicious witness rises against someone (Deut 19:16), the physical dimension recedes and the ethical violation takes center stage. Spanish 'violencia' and German 'Gewalt' map well onto the physical sense, while the moral dimension sometimes requires different vocabulary – a breadth the Hebrew holds in a single term.

1. violence, physical brutality (56×) Physical violence, brutal force, or destructive aggression directed against persons, property, or the social order. This dominant sense covers 56 occurrences and is the term's primary semantic weight. Spanish 'violencia,' French 'violence,' and German 'Gewalt/Gewalttat' consistently render this concrete dimension. The antediluvian world filled with violence (Gen 6:11, 13), the bloodshed of Shechem (Judg 9:24), and the Chaldean campaigns of destruction (Hab 1:9; 2:8, 17) all exemplify raw, physical חָמָס. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: Violence, craves-violence, violence | es: Violencia, violencia, violencia-de | fr: [חָמָס], violence | de: Gewalt, [חָמָס], mit-Gewalttat Gen 6:11; Gen 6:13; Gen 49:5; Exod 23:1; 2Sam 22:49

2. wrong, injustice, malice (4×) Moral wrongdoing, injustice, or malicious harm, emphasizing ethical and legal culpability rather than brute physical force. Across 4 occurrences, translations diverge: English shifts to 'wrong' or 'malicious,' while Spanish and French sometimes retain 'violencia/violence,' underreporting the semantic shift. Hagar's mistreatment of Sarah (Gen 16:5, where Sarah says 'my wrong be upon you'), a malicious witness in court (Deut 19:16), and Jeremiah's cry for justice against Babylon (Jer 51:35) all foreground the injustice rather than the physicality. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: malicious, my-violence, my-wrong | es: de-violencia, mi-violencia, violencia-de | fr: malicious, mon-wrong, violence | de: [חָמָס], malicious, mein-Unrecht Gen 16:5; Deut 19:16; Judg 9:24; Jer 51:35

חָמֵץ H2556a V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (4×)

To be leavened, to ferment; figuratively to become embittered or soured in heart

At its root this verb describes the chemical process of fermentation—dough rising through the action of leaven. In Exodus 12:34 and 12:39, it appears in the narrative urgency of the Exodus: the Israelites left Egypt before their dough could become leavened. Hosea 7:4 uses the image of dough left to rise as a metaphor for moral corruption. The Hithpael in Psalm 73:21 shifts the sense inward: the psalmist's heart was 'soured' or embittered. Spanish 'se amargaba' and English 'was embittered' capture this emotional turn.

(4×) To be leavened or to ferment, said of dough undergoing the rising process. Exodus 12:34 and 12:39 both describe the Israelites' dough that had not yet leavened when they departed Egypt. Hosea 7:4 extends the baking metaphor to describe a baker who ceases stirring while the dough ferments, picturing moral complacency. The reflexive Hithpael in Psalm 73:21 turns the fermentation image inward: the psalmist's spirit was 'soured' or embittered, paralleled by the phrase 'my kidneys were pierced.' Spanish 'leudó' reflects the literal sense, while 'se amargaba' captures the emotional extension. LEAVEN LEAVENED BREAD en: it-is-leavened, it-was-leavened, was-embittered | es: leudara, leudó, se-

amargaba | fr: cela-était-levé, vinaigre | de: Krieg-embittered, [חמצתו], es-war-gesaeuertes Exod 12:34; Exod 12:39; Ps 73:21; Hos 7:4

חמץ H2556b N-msc (1×)

red (of garments stained with blood)

This adjective describes the red color of garments, specifically in Isaiah 63:1 where it depicts the Messianic warrior whose garments are red with the blood of judgment. The root may connect to blushing or turning red. The dramatic image presents God's chosen deliverer coming from Edom with crimson-stained clothing, having trampled the nations in the winepress of divine wrath.

(1×) The red color of garments stained with blood. Isaiah 63:1 asks, 'Why are your garments red?'—answered by the image of treading the winepress in judgment. Spanish 'rojo' (red) and the contextual evidence all point to vivid crimson coloring. The prophetic vision uses this striking visual to depict God's victorious but violent judgment against the nations, comparable to grape juice staining a vintner's clothes. RED AND SCARLET

en: red | es: rojo | fr: [חמוץ] | de: [חמוץ] Isa 63:1

חמץ H2556c Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

ruthless, violent (person)

This participle describes someone who acts ruthlessly or violently. Psalm 71:4 uses it in parallel with 'wicked' and 'unjust,' asking God for deliverance 'from the hand of the ruthless one.' The word captures unrelenting, harsh treatment—someone who shows no mercy or compassion. It appears only here, making it a rare but vivid term for the kind of enemy the psalmist faces.

(1×) A ruthless or violent person who acts without mercy. The parallel terms in Psalm 71:4 ('wicked,' 'unjust,' 'ruthless') build a picture of comprehensive moral failure—someone both legally unjust and personally cruel. Spanish 'violento' (violent) and English 'ruthless' both capture the harsh, unrelenting character. The psalm's cry for deliverance from such a person reflects the vulnerability of the righteous before brutal enemies. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-the-ruthless | es: y-violento | fr: et-être-violent | de: und-der-ruthless Ps 71:4

חָמֵץ H2557a Prep-m / N-ms (11×)

Leavened bread — bread or food made with leaven, prohibited during the Feast of Unleavened Bread

The adjective-turned-noun חָמֵץ (chamets) denotes leavened bread or any food product containing leaven. Its significance is primarily ritual: during Passover and the seven-day Festival of Unleavened Bread, all chamets must be removed from Israelite households (Exod 12:15; 13:3, 7). The prohibition extends to offerings placed on the altar — no grain offering may be made with leaven (Lev 2:11), though leavened loaves accompany the thanksgiving peace offering (Lev 7:13). The sacrificial blood must not be offered 'with leavened bread' (Exod 23:18; 34:25). Spanish 'pan leudado/con levadura' and English 'leavened bread' convey the ritual distinction that gives this word its force.

leavened bread, that which is leavened (11×) Bread or any food product prepared with leaven (שְׂאֹר), categorically forbidden during Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Exodus 12:15 and 13:3, 7 mandate its complete removal from every household for seven days. The prohibition also governs sacrifice: no grain offering may contain leaven (Lev 2:11), and Passover blood must not be presented alongside chamets (Exod 23:18; 34:25). An exception exists for the thanksgiving peace offering, where leavened loaves are included (Lev 7:13). Spanish 'pan leudado' and French 'pain levé' mark the distinction. LEAVEN LEAVENED BREAD

en: from-that-which-is-leavened, leaven, leavened | es: con-levadura, de-lo-leudado, leudada | fr: levain, levé, levé-pain | de: Sauerteig, [מחמץ], gesaeuertes Exod 12:15; Exod 13:3; Exod 13:7; Exod 23:18; Exod 34:25

מַחְמֶצֶת H2557b N-fs (2×)

leavened thing; any food containing leaven or yeast

This rare noun appears only in Exodus 12, within the Passover regulations. It denotes anything leavened—bread, dough, or food made with yeast. During the seven days of Unleavened Bread, Israel was to purge all such items from their homes. The term reinforces the complete separation from everyday bread that Passover demanded.

(2×) Appears twice in Exodus 12:19-20, where God commands the removal of all leaven from Israelite homes during Passover week. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'leudado', French 'levé-chose', German 'gesäuertes-thing') confirms this refers to leavened products as a category, not just bread. LEAVEN LEAVENED BREAD

en: leavened-thing | es: leudado | fr: levé-chose | de: gesaeuertes-thing Exod 12:19; Exod 12:20

חֹמֶץ H2558 N-msc (6×)

Vinegar or sour wine — a sharp acidic liquid used as a condiment, drink, and in proverbial similes.

A masculine noun for vinegar or sour wine, a common condiment in the ancient Near East. Ruth dipped her bread in vinegar at Boaz's table (Ruth 2:14), while the Nazirite vow specifically prohibited both wine-vinegar and beer-vinegar (Num 6:3). Proverbs employs it memorably in similes: vinegar on the teeth for the sluggard's irritating effect (Prov 10:26), and vinegar on soda for the futility of singing songs to a heavy heart (Prov 25:20). The psalmist received it in place of water as an act of cruelty (Ps 69:21).

vinegar, sour wine (6×) Vinegar or sour wine — a sharp, fermented liquid. Spanish 'vinagre' and French 'vinaigre' render it uniformly. Served as an everyday condiment for dipping bread (Ruth 2:14) but forbidden to Nazirites in both wine and beer varieties (Num 6:3). Used figuratively for harshness: given to the thirsty psalmist as mockery (Ps 69:21), compared to the irritation a sluggard causes (Prov 10:26 'like vinegar to the teeth'), and paired with natron to illustrate the discord of merry songs sung to a grieving heart (Prov 25:20). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-vinegar-of, in-the-vinegar, like-vinegar | es: como-vinagre, en-el-vinagre, vinagre | fr: dans-le-vinaigre, et-vinegar-de, vinaigre | de: [בחמץ], [חמץ], [כחמץ] Num 6:3; Ruth 2:14; Ps 69:21; Prov 10:26

חָמַק H2559 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

turn away, slip away; withdraw or depart suddenly

This verb captures sudden withdrawal or turning away. In Song of Songs 5:6, the beloved has slipped away before the woman could open the door—a poignant moment of missed connection. In Jeremiah 31:22, the prophet challenges the 'backsliding daughter' who wavers or turns hither and thither. The root conveys both physical departure and figurative vacillation.

(2×) Used in two emotionally charged contexts: the lover's sudden disappearance in Song 5:6 and Israel's wayward wandering in Jer 31:22. The Hithpael form in Jeremiah suggests restless turning back and forth. Spanish 'se había ido' (had gone away) and 'vagarás' (you will wander) capture both the physical and metaphorical senses. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: slipped-away, will-you-waver | es: se-había-ido, vagarás | fr: [תתחמקין], s'était-retiré, | de: [חמק], [תתחמקין] Song 5:6; Jer 31:22

H2559a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

and he repaired, restored (altar)

This Hiphil verb means 'and he repaired' or 'restored,' used in 2 Chronicles 33:16 of King Manasseh repairing the altar of Yahweh after his repentance. The context describes Manasseh's remarkable conversion—after years of apostasy and idolatry, he returns from Babylonian captivity, removes false gods, and restores proper worship. The verb captures the physical act of restoring the altar to functional condition for sacrifices.

(1×) To repair, restore, or prepare (an altar or structure). The context in 2 Chronicles shows Manasseh actively reversing his previous religious policies—restoration of the altar signals renewed covenant commitment. Spanish 'restauró' (restored) and the French/German evidence all support reconditioning or repair. The verb emphasizes not just symbolic gesture but actual physical work to make the altar usable again for legitimate worship. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: [and-he-repaired] | es: [y-restauró] | fr: [וַיְכַן] | de: und-er-bereitete 2Chr 33:16

חָמַר H2560a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (4×)

To ferment, foam, or surge; of agitated waters or churning bowels in distress

This verb evokes the turbulent bubbling of fermentation or the violent surging of water. In Psalm 75:8, wine that foams in God's cup signals divine judgment. Psalm 46:3 speaks of waters that roar and foam, a theophanic image of cosmic upheaval. Lamentations 1:20 and 2:11 turn the image visceral: the poet's bowels 'churn' in anguish over Jerusalem's destruction. Spanish 'se agitan' (are agitated) and 'espumeante' (foaming) together capture the physical and emotional turbulence this word conveys.

(4×) To foam, surge, or be in ferment, whether of liquids or of the human body in distress. In Psalm 75:8 wine foams in God's cup of judgment, and in Psalm 46:3 the sea's waters roar and foam as mountains quake. The Poalal (intensive) form in Lamentations 1:20 and 2:11 applies the image to visceral anguish: the speaker's bowels are 'in a ferment' over Jerusalem's calamity. Spanish 'espumeante' and German 'aufgerührt' capture the physical foaming, while the Lamentations usage shows how fermentation imagery extends to inner turmoil. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: are-in-turmoil, foam, foaming | es: espumeante, están-agitadas, se-agitan | fr: argile, sont-troublées | de: aufgeruehrt, foam, foaming Ps 46:3; Ps 75:8; Lam 1:20; Lam 2:11

חָמַר H2560b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs / 3fs (1×)

and she coated it (with pitch/asphalt)

This Qal verb with suffix means 'and she coated it' or 'smeared it,' specifically describing how Moses' mother waterproofed the papyrus basket. Exodus 2:3 tells how she plastered it with bitumen and pitch to make it watertight before placing her infant son in the Nile. The verb is denominative from 'asphalt,' turning the noun into an action—to cover something with asphalt or pitch as a sealant.

(1×) To coat or smear something with asphalt or pitch as waterproofing. The single occurrence describes Moses' mother preparing the basket-boat for river exposure. Spanish 'la cubrió' (she covered it) and English 'coated it' show the application of protective material. Exodus 2:3's detail adds realism—the mother's desperate but practical action to protect her child, using the same waterproofing technique that made ancient boats seaworthy. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-she-coated-it | es: y-la-cubrió | fr: et-elle-coated-cela | de: und-sie-coated-es Exod 2:3

חמר H2560c V-Piel-Perf-3cp (2×)

be red, be reddened; become red in color

This rare color verb appears in Job 16:16, where Job describes his face as reddened from weeping. The Piel form suggests intensity or thoroughness. BDB links it to Arabic roots for dyeing red or reddish-brown skin tones, though the biblical usage is limited to Job's vivid description of tear-stained grief.

(2×) Job 16:16 uses this passive perfect form to describe Job's face reddened from continuous weeping. The reference appears twice because BDB also cross-references Lamentations passages that use a different root. Spanish 'está enrojecido' (is reddened) confirms the color change sense. RED AND SCARLET

en: [reddened], is-reddened | es: está-enrojecido | fr: (חמרמרו), [חמרמרה] | de: [(חמרמרו)], [[חמרמרה]] Job 16:16

חֹמֶר H2561 N-ms (1×)

wine (poetic term)

This poetic word for wine appears in Deuteronomy 32:14, part of Moses' song describing God's provision for Israel. The phrase 'blood of the grape you shall drink as wine' uses elevated, archaic vocabulary fitting the Song's literary style. The term is borrowed from Aramaic, suggesting cross-linguistic influence in poetic diction. It denotes fermented grape wine, the standard beverage of celebration and abundance in ancient Israel.

(1×) Wine, specifically used in poetic contexts with elevated register. Deuteronomy 32:14's Song of Moses employs this rare Aramaic loanword for stylistic effect, creating a formal, dignified tone. Spanish 'vino espumoso' (sparkling wine) adds a festive connotation. The parallel with 'blood of the grape' emphasizes wine's rich, life-giving redness. Poetic texts often drew on multiple language resources to achieve special effects. WINE BEVERAGE en: wine | es: vino-espumoso | fr: vin | de: Wein Deut 32:14

חֲמַר H2562 N-ms (6×)

Wine; Aramaic term for fermented grape beverage, used in official decrees and royal banquet contexts.

An Aramaic noun for wine, cognate with the Hebrew poetic term chemer. It appears in two distinct settings: Persian imperial decrees authorizing temple provisions (Ezra 6:9; 7:22) and the infamous banquet of Belshazzar where sacred vessels were profaned (Dan 5:1, 2, 4, 23). The Syriac cognate confirms the basic meaning. That this single word bridges solemn administrative grants and reckless royal feasting captures wine's dual role in the ancient Near East – a staple of sustenance and a catalyst for hubris.

wine (6×) Wine as a fermented grape beverage. All six occurrences divide between Persian royal provisions for the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 6:9; 7:22, absolute form chamar) and the vessels of wine at Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:1, 2, 4, 23, emphatic form chamra). The consistent rendering across languages – Spanish 'vino,' German 'Wein,' English 'wine' – confirms a single straightforward sense with no semantic branching. WINE BEVERAGE en: the-wine, wine | es: el-vino, vino | fr: [חמר], vin | de: Wein, [חמר] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:22; Dan 5:1; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:4

חֹמֶר H2563a Prep-k / N-msc (16×)

Clay, mortar, or mire; earthy material shaped by potters, used in building, or found as mud in streets.

Chomer is one of the Hebrew Bible's most tactile words – you can almost feel the wet earth between your fingers. In its most theologically resonant use, it is the potter's clay from which God fashions humanity: 'we are the clay, you are the potter' (Isa 64:8; cf. Isa 29:16; 45:9; Job 10:9). Job laments that human bodies are mere 'houses of clay' (Job 4:19), fragile and easily crushed. The word also has a practical side: the builders at Babel used chomer for mortar with their bricks (Gen 11:3), and Egyptian taskmasters forced Israel to toil 'with mortar and brick' (Exod 1:14). At its most humble, chomer is street-mud – the mire Isaiah invokes for trampled nations (Isa 10:6).

1. clay, potter's clay (11×) Clay or potter's clay – moldable earth used in pottery and as a metaphor for humanity shaped by God. Isaiah's potter-and-clay passages (Isa 29:16; 45:9; 64:8) establish the theological heart, while Job reflects on being fashioned from clay (Job 10:9) and dwelling in 'houses of clay' (Job 4:19). Spanish 'barro' and French 'argile' both denote this formable material. Eleven occurrences span wisdom and prophetic literature. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: and-as-clay, are-the-clay, clay | es: barro, como-barro, como-barro-de | fr: argile, comme-argile, dans-l'argile | de: [בחמר], [החמר], [וכחמר] Job 4:19; Job 10:9; Job 13:12; Job 27:16; Job 33:6

2. mortar, building cement (3×) Mortar or building cement – the practical construction material binding bricks together. At Babel the builders say 'let us use bitite for mortar' (Gen 11:3); in Egypt the Israelites suffer 'with mortar and with brick' (Exod 1:14); Nahum commands besieged Nineveh to 'tread the mortar' to repair her walls (Nah 3:14). Spanish 'mortero' and German 'Moertel' both isolate this architectural sense. Three occurrences, all in narratives of building or forced labor. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: for-mortar, in-the-mortar, with-mortar | es: en-barro, en-el-mortero!, por-mortero | fr: argile, avec-mortier, pour-mortier | de: [בחמר], mit-Moertel, zum-Mörtel Gen 11:3; Exod 1:14; Nah 3:14

3. mire, mud (2×) Mire or mud – wet, dirty earth found in streets or low places, carrying connotations of defilement and humiliation. Isaiah pictures Assyria trampling nations like 'the mire of the streets' (Isa 10:6), and Job says God has 'cast me into the mire' to express his degradation (Job 30:19). Spanish 'lodo' (mud) and 'barro' both serve here, but the context of trampling and humiliation distinguishes mire from the potter's dignified clay. Two occurrences. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: as-mud-of, into-the-mire | es: al-barro, como-lodo-de | fr: argile, comme-argile | de: [כחמר], [לחמר] Job 30:19; Isa 10:6

חֹמֶר H2563b N-mp (3×)

heap, pile (especially of water or dead things)

A noun denoting a heap or pile, used in two distinct contexts. In Exodus, it describes heaps of dead frogs gathered during the plague on Egypt. In Habakkuk's theophanic poetry, it appears in a difficult phrase about 'the heap of great waters,' possibly describing churning seas or foaming waves. The term emphasizes accumulation and piling up, whether of corpses or turbulent water. The connection between these uses lies in the visual image of things massed together in confusion or abundance.

(3×) A heap or accumulated pile. Exodus 8:14 (Hebrew 8:10) describes Egyptians gathering dead frogs 'in heaps, heaps' (reduplication for emphasis), creating a stench throughout the land. Habakkuk 3:15 contains the obscure phrase 'heap of great waters,' likely depicting God's triumphal procession through chaotic seas. Spanish montones ('piles') and the English 'heaps' capture the essential imagery of accumulated matter, though the Habakkuk usage remains textually challenging. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: heaps, through-the-foaming-of | es: el-montón-de-, montones | fr: heaps, mortier | de: [חמר], heaps Exod 8:14; Hab 3:15

חֹמֶר H2563c Art / N-ms (12×)

Homer, a dry measure of about 220 liters (10 ephahs); also clay or mortar

The ḥōmer as a unit of dry measure was the largest standard volume in ancient Israel, equal to ten ephahs or approximately 220 liters (6.25 bushels). Ezekiel 45:11 explicitly defines the relationship: 'the ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, the tenth part of a homer.' It measured barley (Hos 3:2; Ezek 45:13), wheat (Ezek 45:13), and seed-grain for land valuation (Lev 27:16). Isaiah 5:10 uses it in a judgment oracle: ten acres of vineyard yielding only one bath, and a homer of seed producing merely an ephah. In one passage (Isa 41:25), the same form appears to mean clay or mortar — a conqueror trampling rulers 'as a potter treads clay' — though this may derive from a separate homonymous root.

1. homer (dry measure) (11×) A homer, the largest standard dry measure in ancient Israel, equivalent to ten ephahs (approximately 220 liters or 6.25 bushels). Used for measuring grain, barley, and seed in commercial, cultic, and legal contexts. Ezekiel 45:11 defines it explicitly against the ephah and bath. Leviticus 27:16 prices land by the homer of barley seed needed to sow it. Numbers 11:32 records the Israelites gathering quail — even the least gathered ten homers. Spanish 'homer' is typically transliterated, while Arabic and other Semitic cognates preserve related measure terms. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: a-homer-of, and-homer-of, from-homer-of | es: de-homer-de, el-homer, homer | fr: argile, et-argile, homers | de: [החמר], [וחמר], [חמר] Lev 27:16; Num 11:32; Isa 5:10; Ezek 45:11

2. clay / mortar (1×) Clay or mortar as a material substance, likely from a homonymous root. In Isaiah 41:25 the conqueror comes upon rulers 'as a potter' treads ḥōmer — here unmistakably referring to clay, not a unit of volume. Spanish 'barro' and French 'argile' both translate this as a physical material. Some lexicons treat this as a distinct lemma (ḥōmer II), but the consonantal form is identical, and context alone distinguishes the two meanings. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: and-like-a-potter | es: barro | fr: argile | de: [חמר] Isa 41:25

חֵמָר H2564 Prep-b (3×)

bitumen, asphalt, tar (natural petroleum product)

Natural asphalt or bitumen used for waterproofing and construction. This substance was particularly abundant in Mesopotamia and the Dead Sea region. Genesis describes its use as mortar in building the Tower of Babel and its availability in the valley of Siddim. Exodus mentions it as a coating material (along with pitch) for the basket that held baby Moses, protecting him from water. The term refers to a naturally occurring petroleum product that hardens and provides excellent sealing properties.

(3×) Bitumen or asphalt used for construction and waterproofing. Genesis 11:3 records builders using bitumen instead of mortar for Babel's tower. Genesis 14:10 notes that the valley of Siddim had bitumen pits, creating hazards during battle. Exodus 2:3 describes Moses' mother coating his basket 'with bitumen and pitch' for waterproofing. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish betún/asfalto, French bitume, German Erdpech 'earth pitch') all identify this natural tar-like substance used throughout the ancient Near East. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7658 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-the-bitumen, bitumen, with-bitumen | es: asfalto, con-el-betún, y-el-asfalto | fr: avec-bitume, bitume, et-le-bitume | de: mit-Erdpech, und-das-Erdpech, von-Erdpech Gen 11:3; Gen 14:10; Exod 2:3

חֲמוֹר H2565 N-ms (2×)

heap, pile; accumulation of slain enemies

This noun appears in Samson's famous wordplay in Judges 15:16. With the jawbone of a donkey, Samson declares he has made 'a heap, two heaps'—a triumphant boast over the Philistines he slew. The dual form suggests multiple piles of corpses. The wordplay hinges on the similarity between 'donkey' (חֲמוֹר) and 'heap' (חֲמוֹר), making Samson's victory chant both memorable and sardonic.

(2×) Judges 15:16 contains the entire biblical attestation, appearing twice in Samson's poetic declaration. The phrase 'a heap, two heaps' uses both singular and dual forms. Interestingly, the multilingual evidence shows 'donkey' glosses, reflecting confusion between this homograph and the common word for donkey—precisely the ambiguity Samson exploited. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: donkey, donkeys | es: asno, asnos | fr: âne, ânes | de: Esel Judg 15:16

חַמְרָן H2566 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chamran (or Hamran), an Edomite

Chamran appears in 1 Chronicles 1:41 as a descendant of Seir the Horite in Edom's genealogy. He is the same person as Hemdan in the parallel list in Genesis 36:26, showing typical name variation between sources. The Chronicler's genealogical material often preserves alternative spellings or vocalizations of names found in earlier texts. Both forms represent legitimate renderings of the same ancestral figure in Edom's ethnic history.

(1×) A personal name in the Edomite genealogies, equivalent to Hemdan in Genesis. The consonantal difference (Hamran vs Hemdan) reflects manuscript variation or dialectal pronunciation. 1 Chronicles 1:41 includes him in the Chronicler's comprehensive genealogical framework, documenting non-Israelite lineages relevant to biblical history. The Septuagint variations show how ancient translators handled these alternative name forms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chamran | es: Jamran | fr: [חמרן] | de: [חמרן] 1Chr 1:41

חָמַשׁ H2567 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
and let him take a fifth part (as tax)
This Piel verb means 'let him take a fifth' or 'collect a twenty-percent tax.' In Genesis 41:34, Joseph advises Pharaoh to appoint commissioners who will collect one-fifth of Egypt's produce during the seven years of plenty. The denominative verb comes from 'five,' making it mean 'to fifth'—to take the fifth part. This Egyptian taxation policy becomes the means of storing enough grain to survive the coming famine.

(1×) To take a fifth part of something, specifically agricultural produce as a governmental tax or levy. Joseph's plan institutes a twenty-percent collection rate during abundant years for storage against famine. Spanish 'tome quinta parte' (take a fifth part) and French 'prendre un cinquième' (take a fifth) both capture the fractional taxation. Genesis 41:34's administrative detail shows ancient economic planning—state collection and redistribution preventing mass starvation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-let-take-a-fifth-of | es: y-tome-quinta-parte-de | fr: et-que-prendre-un-cinquième-de | de: und-nehme-den-Fünften Gen 41:34

חָמֵשׁ H2568 Conj-w / Number-msc (345×)
Five; the cardinal numeral, also forming compounds fifteen and fifteenth, and used with ordinal force for 'fifth'
The Hebrew numeral חָמֵשׁ (khamesh) appears 345 times across the Old Testament, serving as far more than a bare number. It forms the compound 'fifteen' (חֲמֵשׁ עֶשְׂרֵה) and participates in ordinal expressions for 'fifth' and 'fifteenth' — particularly in dating formulas for festivals and prophetic visions. Ezekiel's inaugural vision is dated to 'the fifth day of the month' (Ezek 1:1-2), while Leviticus 23:6 places the Feast of Unleavened Bread on 'the fifteenth day.' The cognates span the entire Semitic family — Aramaic חֲמֵשׁ, Arabic ‎, Ethiopic ኀምስ — testifying to its deep antiquity.

1. cardinal number five (309×) The cardinal numeral 'five' used independently or in construct to denote the quantity five. With 309 occurrences this is the primary use, appearing from the genealogies of Genesis 5 ('Enosh lived five years,' Gen 5:6) through measurements of the tabernacle and temple. All target languages translate uniformly — English 'five,' Spanish 'cinco,' French 'cinq,' German 'fünf' — confirming unambiguous numerical semantics across the entire range. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: five | es: Cinco, cinco | fr: cinq | de: fuenf, fünf, von-fünf Gen 5:6; Gen 5:11; Gen 5:15; Gen 5:17; Gen 5:21

2. compound fifteen (five-and-ten) (22×) The numeral 'five' as component of the compound number fifteen (חֲמֵשׁ עֶשְׂרֵה, 'five-and-ten'). Appearing 22 times, this formation is typical of Hebrew compound numerals. It figures prominently in measurements: 'the waters prevailed fifteen cubits upward' (Gen 7:20) and in tabernacle curtain dimensions (Exod 27:14-15). German sometimes renders this analytically as 'fünfzehn' but other times retains the compound structure, while Spanish uses 'quince,' a fully fused form inherited from Latin. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: and-fifteen, fifteen, five | es: En-el-quince, Quince, Y-quince | fr: cinq, dans-cinq, et-quinze | de: auf-fuenf-von, fuenf, fuenfzehn Gen 5:10; Gen 7:20; Exod 27:14; Exod 27:15; Exod 38:14

3. ordinal fifteenth (8×) The numeral in compound-ordinal constructions meaning 'the fifteenth,' especially in liturgical date formulas. Eight occurrences fix sacred calendar dates: 'on the fifteenth day of the second month' (Exod 16:1), the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Lev 23:6; Num 28:17), and the Feast of Tabernacles (Num 29:12). The multilingual evidence shows translators adding ordinal markers — Spanish 'en-el-quince,' French 'et-sur-cinq-de,' German 'auf-fünf' — to convey what Hebrew achieves through syntactic context alone. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: and-on-five, and-on-five-of, on-five | es: Y-en-cinco, Y-en-el-quince, en-cinco | fr: dans-cinq, et-sur-cinq, et-sur-cinq-de | de: auf-fuenf, auf-fuenf-, fuenf Exod 16:1; Lev 23:6; Num 28:17; Num 29:12; Num 33:3

4. ordinal fifth (6×) The numeral used with ordinal force meaning 'the fifth,' marking a specific day, month, or year. Six occurrences anchor prophetic chronology (Ezek 1:1, 'in the fifth year'; Ezek 8:1, 'in the fifth day of the sixth month') and royal history (1 Kgs 12:32-33, Jeroboam's festival 'on the fifteenth day of the eighth month'). English glosses like 'on-fifth' and 'on-the-five' reflect the challenge of conveying Hebrew's unmarked ordinal usage, while Spanish opts for 'en-el-cinco,' treating the cardinal as implicitly ordinal. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER)
en: on-fifth, on-the-five, on-the-five- | es: en-el-cinco, en-quince, en-quince- | fr: dans-cinq, sur-le-cinq, sur-le-cinq- | de: auf-der-fuenf, auf-der-fuenf-, fuenf 1Kgs 12:32; 1Kgs 12:33; Ezek 1:1; Ezek 1:2; Ezek 8:1

חֹמֶשׁ H2569 Prep-l (1×)
the fifth part (as tax or portion)
This noun means 'fifth part' or 'one-fifth,' used in Genesis 47:26 describing the agricultural tax law Joseph established in Egypt. The text states that this fifth to Pharaoh became a permanent statute. However, the construction is grammatically awkward in the Masoretic Text, and ancient versions suggest reading 'the fifth' with the definite article, or possibly 'one-fifth' as a fractional designation.

(1×) The fifth part of agricultural produce collected as tax. Genesis 47:26 codifies this as ongoing Egyptian law—one-fifth of the harvest belongs to Pharaoh, while farmers keep four-fifths. Spanish 'el quinto' (the fifth) and French 'le cinquième' (the fifth) treat it as a defined fraction. The verse describes how Joseph's emergency measures became permanent fiscal policy, an example of crisis-driven institutional change. FIFTH ORDINAL FRACTION
en: for-the-fifth | es: el-quinto | fr: pour-le-cinquième | de: zum-Fünftel Gen 47:26

חֹמֶשׁ H2570 Art / N-ms (4×)
Belly, abdomen (the fifth part of the torso); site of a fatal stab wound
This noun refers to the belly or abdomen, probably the lower midsection sometimes called the 'fifth rib' area in older translations. All four occurrences appear in violent narratives in 2 Samuel, each describing a lethal stab to the midsection. Abner strikes Asahel in the belly (2 Sam 2:23), Joab repays the deed by stabbing Abner in the same spot (3:27), Rechab and Baanah strike Ish-bosheth there (4:6), and Joab kills Amasa similarly (20:10). Every language renders it as 'belly' or 'abdomen'—Spanish 'vientre,' German 'Bauch.'

(4×) The belly or abdomen, the vulnerable midsection of the torso. Every occurrence is in the context of assassination by stabbing in 2 Samuel: Abner thrusts his spear backward into Asahel's belly (2:23), Joab strikes Abner in the belly in revenge (3:27), the murderers of Ish-bosheth strike him there (4:6), and Joab kills Amasa with a blow to the belly (20:10). The consistent translation across languages—Spanish 'el vientre,' French and German equivalents—confirms this is a straightforward anatomical term with no figurative extension in Scripture. WOMB AND BELLY
en: the-belly | es: el-vientre | fr: le-belly | de: der-belly 2Sam 2:23; 2Sam 3:27; 2Sam 4:6; 2Sam 20:10

חֲמֻשִׁים H2571 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (4×)
Armed, in battle array; equipped and organized for military march
This adjective describes warriors who are marshaled in orderly battle formation, armed and ready for combat. It appears exclusively in the context of Israel's organized military movements: leaving Egypt (Exod 13:18), crossing the Jordan (Josh 1:14; 4:12), and Gideon's night raid (Judg 7:11). The consistent rendering across languages —Spanish 'armados,' French 'armé,' English 'armed'—reflects the martial readiness the term conveys, though the precise etymology (possibly from 'five,' suggesting organized ranks or fifths) remains debated.

(4×) Equipped in battle array, armed and organized for military action. In Exodus 13:18 the Israelites go up out of Egypt in ordered ranks rather than as a disorganized mob. Joshua 1:14 and 4:12 describe the Transjordanian tribes crossing the Jordan armed before their brothers. Judges 7:11 uses the term for the edge of the armed camp Gideon approached. Spanish 'armados' and French 'armé' uniformly capture the sense of martial readiness, while the etymological connection to the number five may hint at a military formation organized in fifths or companies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-armed, armed, the-armed-ones | es: armados, los-armados, y-armados | fr: armé, et-armé, le-armé-les | de: armed, der-armed-die, und-armed Exod 13:18; Josh 1:14; Josh 4:12; Judg 7:11

חֲמִשִּׁים H2572 Art / Number-cp (163×)

Fifty; the cardinal number, or a military/organizational unit of fifty men under a commander.

The Hebrew cardinal number 'fifty,' appearing in measurements (the ark is fifty cubits wide, Gen 6:15), census figures, prices, and ages. All major translations render it straightforwardly — spa cincuenta, fra cinquante, deu fünfzig. But a distinct organizational sense emerges in military and administrative contexts: 'captains of fifties' (Exod 18:21, 25) and the dramatic confrontations with Elijah where 'a captain of fifty with his fifty' is sent repeatedly (2 Kgs 1:9-14). Here the number becomes a unit designation — a squad or platoon — and the suffixed forms ('his fifty,' 'your fifty') refer to the men under command.

1. fifty (cardinal number) (151×) The cardinal number fifty, used for counting quantities — measurements, ages, prices, durations, and enumerations. This covers the vast majority of occurrences (151x). Gen 6:15 gives the ark's width as fifty cubits; Gen 18:24 asks whether God will spare the city for fifty righteous. Translations uniformly converge: spa cincuenta, fra cinquante, deu fünfzig. The number functions in arithmetic combinations (e.g., 'a hundred and fifty days,' Gen 7:24; 8:3) and as a round figure in negotiations and census lists. FIFTY AND UNITS

en: fifty | es: Cincuenta, cincuenta | fr: cinquante | de: der-fünfzig, fuenfzig, fünfzig Gen 6:15; Gen 7:24; Gen 8:3; Gen 18:24

2. group of fifty (unit) (12×) A military or organizational unit of fifty men, often in the construct 'captain of fifty' (שַׂר חֲמִשִּׁים) or with possessive suffixes ('his fifty,' 'your fifty') designating the soldiers under a commander. Exod 18:21, 25 and Deut 1:15 establish the administrative hierarchy: rulers of thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. In 2 Kgs 1:9-14, Ahaziah sends 'a captain of fifty with his fifty' against Elijah three times — the suffixed forms (חֲמִשָּׁיו, חֲמִשָּׁיהּ) make clear that 'fifty' refers to the unit of men, not the abstract number. Isa 3:3 lists 'the captain of fifty' among Jerusalem's leaders. FIFTY AND UNITS

en: and-his-fifty, fifties, his-fifty | es: cincuenta, cincuentas, sus-cincuenta | fr: et-son-cinquante, fifties, leur-fifties | de: dein-fuenfzig, fifties, ihr-fifties Exod 18:21; Exod 18:25; Deut 1:15; 1Sam 8:12; 2Kgs 1:9

חֲמָת H2573 Conj-w / N-msc (4×)

Waterskin, leather bottle for carrying water

A simple leather container for transporting water, this word appears three times in the Hagar narrative of Genesis 21 and is debated in Habakkuk 2:15. When Abraham sends Hagar and Ishmael away, he gives her bread and a skin of water (Gen 21:14). When it runs out, she casts the boy under a bush (21:15), and God opens her eyes to a well so she can refill the skin (21:19). Spanish 'odre' and German 'Schlauch' both denote a leather bottle. The Habakkuk 2:15 occurrence likely involves a different word (wrath), though the consonantal text is identical.

(4×) A waterskin or leather bottle used for carrying water. All three certain occurrences appear in Genesis 21, the narrative of Hagar's expulsion: Abraham places a skin of water on her shoulder (21:14), the water in the skin is spent (21:15), and God provides a well so she can fill it again (21:19). Spanish 'odre' and German 'Schlauch' precisely render the object. The fourth reference (Hab 2:15) is textually disputed, likely reading a homograph meaning 'wrath' rather than 'waterskin,' as French 'Hamath' and German bracketed forms suggest lexical uncertainty there. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-skin-of, the-skin, your-wrath | es: el-odre, tu-ira, y-odre-de | fr: Hamath, et-un-peau-de, le-peau | de: [חמתך], dem-Schlauch, den-Schlauch Gen 21:14; Gen 21:15; Gen 21:19; Hab 2:15

חֲמָת H2574 Conj-w (35×)

Hamath — a major Syrian city-state on the Orontes, marking the ideal northern boundary of Israel's land

Chamath (Hamath) is the Hebrew name for a great city-kingdom on the Orontes River in central Syria, modern-day Hama, appearing 35 times in the Hebrew Bible. Its primary biblical function is as a geographical boundary marker: the phrase levo Chamath ('the entrance of Hamath') recurs as a formulaic designation for the northern limit of the Promised Land (Num 13:21; 34:8; Josh 13:5; Judg 3:3; 1 Kgs 8:65; Ezek 47:16-17, 20). Hamath had its own king, Toi, who allied with David against Hadadezer (2 Sam 8:9-10), and its own gods, transported to Samaria by Assyrian settlers (2 Kgs 17:30). Assyrian conquest of Hamath served as a taunt in diplomatic propaganda: 'Where are the gods of Hamath?' (2 Kgs 18:34; Isa 36:19; 37:13).

Hamath (city and region) (35×) The proper noun Chamath/Hamath, designating the Syrian city-state on the Orontes that served as the conventional northern boundary marker of Israelite territory. The stereotyped phrase levo Chamath ('the entrance/approach of Hamath') appears in boundary descriptions from Numbers through Ezekiel (Num 13:21; 34:8; Josh 13:5; 1 Kgs 8:65; 2 Kgs 14:25; Ezek 47:16, 20). Historically, its king Toi allied with David (2 Sam 8:9 = 1 Chr 18:9), and Assyrian propaganda cited its fall to intimidate Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18:34; Isa 10:9; 36:19; 37:13). Translations transliterate variously: Spanish 'Hamat/Jamat,' French 'Hamath/Chamath,' German 'Hamat/Chamath.' HAMATH AND ZOBAH

en: Chamat, Chamath, Hamath | es: Hamat, Jamat, Khamat | fr: Chamat, Chamath, Hamath | de: Chamat, Chamath, Hamat Num 13:21; Num 34:8; Josh 13:5; Judg 3:3; 2Sam 8:9

חַמַּת H2575a Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Chammath (or Hammath), a fortified town in Naphtali

Chammath was a fortified city in the territory of Naphtali, mentioned in Joshua 19:35 in the list of Naphtali's inheritance. The name means 'hot spring,' and it's likely the same as modern-day hot springs south of Tiberias, mentioned in Josephus and rabbinic literature. The site was known for its thermal springs, a notable geographic feature that gave the town its name and economic significance.

(1×) A place name in Naphtali, probably identical with sites called Hammath-Dor and Hammon elsewhere. The name derives from 'hot spring,' indicating geothermal activity. Joshua 19:35 lists it among Naphtali's fortified cities. The multilingual glosses (Chammath, Hamat, Chammath) preserve transliteration. Ancient sources identify this with hot springs near Tiberias, making it a location known for therapeutic waters from antiquity through modern times. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chammath | es: y-Hamat | fr: et-Chammath | de: und-Chammath Josh 19:35

חַמַּת H2575b Prep-m / N-proper-ms (1×)

Chamath (or Hamath), father of the Rechabite house

This Chamath (distinct from the Syrian city Hamath) was the father of the house of Rechab according to 1 Chronicles 2:55. The Rechabites were a nomadic or semi-nomadic group known for their strict vows, including abstaining from wine and refusing to build houses. Jeremiah 35 famously uses their covenant faithfulness as a rebuke to Judah's unfaithfulness. This genealogical note connects the Rechabites to Judah's family tree.

(1×) A personal name identifying the ancestor of the Rechabite movement. 1 Chronicles 2:55 places him in Judah's genealogy, specifically connected to the families of scribes at Jabez. The preposition 'from Chamath' may indicate geographic origin or descent. The Chronicler includes this detail to show how the Rechabites, though distinctive in lifestyle, were integrated into Israel's tribal structure. Their ancestor's name is distinct from the northern Syrian city. HAMATH AND ZOBAH

en: from-Chamath | es: de-Jamat | fr: [מחמת] | de: [מחמת] 1Chr 2:55

חַמֹּת דֹּאר H2576 N-proper-fs (1×)
Hammoth-dor, a Levitical city in Naphtali
Hammoth-dor was a Levitical city assigned to the Gershonite Levites in the territory of Naphtali, mentioned in Joshua 21:32. The name combines 'Hammoth' (hot springs) with 'Dor' (perhaps 'dwelling'). It's likely identical to Hammath in Joshua 19:35 and Hammon in 1 Chronicles 6:76, showing how the same site could be referred to by variant names in different texts. The identification with hot springs near Tiberias remains probable.

(1×) A place name for a Levitical city in Naphtali, probably the same location as Hammath/Hammon. The compound name may mean 'hot springs of Dor' or similar. Joshua 21:32 assigns it to Levites as one of their designated cities with pasturelands. Multilingual glosses show consistent transliteration (Hammoth-dor, Hamot-dor). The Septuagint variations reflect the challenge ancient translators faced with compound or variant place names. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7605 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Hammoth-dor | es: Hamot-dor | fr: Hammoth-dor | de: Hammoth-dor Josh 21:32

חֲמָתִי H2577 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
Hamathite; descendants of Hamath, a Canaanite people
This gentilicadjective identifies the Hamathites as descendants of Canaan listed in the Table of Nations. They appear in both Genesis 10:18 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:16. Hamath was a significant Aramaean city-state in Syria, and the Hamathites represent one of the Canaanite subgroups that populated the ancient Near East before Israel's conquest.

(2×) The term occurs in the genealogical lists of Genesis 10 and 1 Chronicles 1, identifying one of the Canaanite peoples. The article 'the Hamathite' (הַחֲמָתִי) indicates a collective sense: 'the Hamathite people.' French 'le Hamathite' and German 'den Chamatiter' maintain this collective force. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Chamathi, the-Hamathite | es: el-jamateo | fr: [הַחֲמָתִי], le-Hamathite | de: [הַחֲמָתִי], den-Chamatiter Gen 10:18; 1Chr 1:16

צוֹבָא H2578 N-proper-fs (2×)
Hamath-zobah; region combining Hamath and Zobah territories
This compound place name appears only in 2 Chronicles 8:3, where Solomon conducts a campaign against Hamath-zobah. The name combines two important Aramaean regions: Hamath (a major city-state on the Orontes River) and Zobah (an Aramaean kingdom David had previously defeated). The dual reference may indicate either a combined territory or Hamath's expansion into Zobah's former lands.

(2×) Found exclusively in 2 Chronicles 8:3, describing Solomon's military action. BDB's note suggests this represents Hamath's absorption of Zobah's territory after David's earlier conquests. The reference appears twice because the verse contains both 'Hamath' and 'Zobah' as components of the compound name. HAMATH AND ZOBAH
en: Chamat, Tsovah | es: Hamat, Soba | fr: Hamath, [צובה] | de: Hamat, [צובה] 2Chr 8:3

חֲמָת H2579 Adj-ms (2×)
Hamath; major Syrian city-state north of Damascus
Hamath was one of the most important cities of ancient Syria, located on the Orontes River about 115 miles north of Damascus. It had its own king in David's time and remained significant through the 8th century BC. The city gave its name to a surrounding territory ('the land of Hamath') and had its own deities. In Amos 6:2, 'great Hamath' appears as a point of comparison for Israel's pride.

(2×) In Amos 6:2, the prophet challenges Israel to 'go to great Hamath' as part of his rhetorical comparison with neighboring powers. The reference appears twice because both 'Hamath' and the adjective 'great' (הַגְּדוֹלָה) are listed. The multilingual evidence shows interesting variation: German 'vermehrte' (increased/multiplied) suggests a different parsing from 'great.' GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: Chamat, the-great | es: a-Hamat, la-grande | fr: Hamath, grande | de: [חמת], vermehrte Amos 6:2

חֵן H2580 Art / N-ms (69×)
Favor or goodwill, especially in the phrase 'find favor in one's eyes'; also grace, charm, or elegance as an attractive quality.
A Hebrew noun at the heart of one of Scripture's most recurring phrases: 'to find chen in someone's eyes.' In its dominant usage, chen denotes the favorable disposition a superior extends to a subordinate — the unmerited goodwill that Noah found before God (Gen 6:8), or that Joseph received from Potiphar (Gen 39:4). In wisdom literature, however, chen shifts toward an aesthetic and personal quality: the charm of a gracious woman (Prov 11:16), the elegance of a garland around the neck (Prov 1:9), or the grace poured upon lips (Ps 45:3). Spanish 'gracia' and French 'grace' capture both dimensions, while German distinguishes 'Gnade' (divine favor) more sharply.

1. favor, goodwill (61×) Favor or goodwill extended by a superior, overwhelmingly in the idiom matsa chen be-ene ('find favor in the eyes of'). This relational sense dominates the Torah narratives — Noah before God (Gen 6:8), Moses before Pharaoh (Exod 33:12-13), Ruth before Boaz (Ruth 2:2, 10, 13). The multilingual glosses converge uniformly: English 'favor,' Spanish 'gracia,' French 'grâce,' German 'Gnade' — all pointing to unmerited acceptance rather than inherent attractiveness. MORAL GOODNESS
en: favor | es: gracia, gracia-de- | fr: grâce | de: Gnade, Gunst Gen 6:8; Gen 18:3; Gen 19:19; Gen 30:27; Gen 32:5

2. grace, charm, elegance (8×) Grace, charm, or elegance as an inherent quality adorning a person, speech, or object. Concentrated in Proverbs and poetic texts: the 'gracious woman' of Prov 11:16, the doe of Prov 5:19 described with chen, words of chen from a wise mouth (Eccl 10:12), and ornamental chen like a garland (Prov 1:9; 4:9). Some translations distinguish this from relational favor — Spanish 'la gracia' with the article, French 'le grâce' — hinting at a quality possessed rather than received. MORAL GOODNESS
en: deer, favor, grace | es: de-gracia, gracia, la-gracia | fr: grâce, le-grâce | de: Gnade Prov 1:9; Prov 4:9; Prov 5:19; Prov 11:16; Prov 17:8

חֵן H2581 Conj-w (1×)
Chen (or Hen), a contemporary of Zerubbabel
Chen was a figure in the early post-exilic community during Zechariah's prophetic ministry. Zechariah 6:14 mentions him in connection with the symbolic crowning oracle, where a memorial crown would be placed in the temple. The name means 'favor' or 'grace,' which has led some interpreters to take it not as a personal name but as a common noun. However, most modern versions treat it as a proper name alongside Josiah and Zephaniah.

(1×) A personal name of a man in Zerubbabel's generation, though some interpret it as 'grace' or 'kindness' rather than a proper name. The context lists him with others who would receive memorial recognition in the temple. French 'et-grâce' (and grace) shows the interpretive alternative. Zechariah 6:14's oracle uses symbolic action to point to messianic fulfillment, and Chen (or 'grace') participates in this prophetic ceremony. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-to-Chen | es: y-para-Hen | fr: et-grâce | de: [ולחן] Zech 6:14

חֲנָדָד H2582 N-proper-ms (4×)
Henadad, a Levite chief whose descendants helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls
A proper name meaning 'favor of Hadad,' borne by a Levite family head whose sons played significant roles in Israel's postexilic restoration. In Ezra 3:9 the sons of Henadad help supervise the rebuilding of the temple foundation. In Nehemiah 3:18 and 3:24, members of his household repair sections of Jerusalem's wall, and in Nehemiah 10:9 a descendant joins the covenant signatories. The name itself witnesses to a period when Semitic theophoric names incorporating the storm god Hadad were still current among Israelites.

(4×) A Levite patriarch whose family contributed to the postexilic rebuilding efforts. His sons oversee temple construction in Ezra 3:9, repair the walls under Nehemiah (Neh 3:18, 24), and seal the covenant in Nehemiah 10:9. The name compounds the Hebrew word for grace or favor with the divine name Hadad, a Northwest Semitic storm deity, reflecting the syncretic naming practices of the preexilic period that persisted into the return from Babylon. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chenadad, Henadad | es: Henadad | fr: Henadad | de: [חנדד] Ezra 3:9; Neh 3:18; Neh 3:24; Neh 10:9

חָנָה H2583 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (143×)

To pitch camp or encamp; in military contexts, to encamp against a city or enemy, implying siege.

From a root meaning 'to bend down' or 'decline,' this verb pictures the act of settling into a temporary resting place. In its dominant usage across the wilderness narratives, it describes Israel pitching camp during their journey—over 40 occurrences in Numbers 33 alone trace the route station by station ('and they camped at...'). Spanish 'acamparon' and German 'lagerten' mirror this travel-encampment sense precisely. A sharper edge emerges when the same verb takes a hostile object: to encamp against a city in siege warfare (1 Sam 11:1; Isa 29:3), where the act of 'settling down' becomes a menacing posture of sustained military pressure.

1. encamp, pitch camp (130×) To set up camp, pitch tents, or settle temporarily during travel, migration, or wilderness wandering. This is the overwhelmingly dominant sense (130 of 143 occurrences), forming the backbone of the itinerary notices in Numbers 33. Cross-lingual glosses converge: Spanish 'acamparon,' French 'campèrent,' German 'lagerten.' Key passages include the Exodus departure (Exod 13:20), Sinai arrival (Exod 19:2), and the formulaic 'they set out... and camped at' pattern throughout Numbers. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: and-camped, and-they-camped, and-they-camped- | es: y-acamparon | fr: et-campa, et-ils-campa, et-ils-campèrent- | de: und-lagerte, und-sie-lagerte, und-sie-lagerte- Exod 13:20; Exod 17:1; Exod 19:2; Num 12:16; Num 21:10

2. encamp against, besiege (13×) To set up a military encampment against a city or enemy, implying siege or hostile intent. The same physical act of pitching camp acquires aggressive force when directed at a target. Spanish 'acamparé' with the hostile preposition and the shift in context from travel to warfare mark the distinction. Central in Nahash besieging Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam 11:1), David's command to besiege Rabbah (2 Sam 12:28), and the Lord's own declaration to 'encamp against' Jerusalem (Isa 29:3). DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS

en: And-I-shall-encamp, and-I-will-encamp, and-encamp | es: Y-acamparé, acampando, acampare | fr: [וחניתי], [חנן], campant | de: [וחניתי], [ויחנו], [חנן] 1Sam 11:1; 1Sam 26:5; 1Sam 29:1; 2Sam 12:28; 1Kgs 16:15

חַנָּה H2584 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (13×)

Hannah — mother of the prophet Samuel, whose prayer and vow at Shiloh became a model of faithful petition

The personal name of the beloved but barren wife of Elkanah who prayed at the tabernacle in Shiloh and vowed to dedicate her child to the LORD. All 13 occurrences fall within 1 Samuel 1-2, tracing her arc from anguished petition (1:9-13) through divine answer (1:19-20) to joyful song (2:1-10). Her name, related to the root for 'grace' or 'favor,' resonates with the theme of unmerited divine provision. Greek tradition renders it Anna, preserved in Spanish 'Ana' and French 'Anne.'

Channah (13×) The proper name Hannah (Channah), mother of the prophet Samuel, attested exclusively in 1 Samuel 1-2. Her narrative follows a complete arc — barrenness and grief (1:2-8), fervent prayer mistaken for drunkenness (1:9-15), the vow and its fulfillment (1:19-28), and her psalm of thanksgiving (2:1-10). The name derives from the root ch-n-n ('to be gracious'), thematically linked to the grace she receives. HANNAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Channah, and-Channah, and-to-Channah | es: Ana, Y-Ana, Y-a-Ana | fr: Anne, et-Anne, et-à-Anne | de: Hanna, und-Hanna, und-zu-Hanna 1Sam 1:2; 1Sam 1:5; 1Sam 1:8

חֲנוֹךְ H2585 N-proper-ms (16×)

Enoch/Hanoch: proper name borne by the famous antediluvian who walked with God, and by sons of Cain, Midian, and Reuben.

The name Chanokh (חֲנוֹךְ), meaning 'dedicated' or 'initiated,' belongs to four distinct biblical figures. The most celebrated is the son of Jered in Seth's line, who 'walked with God and was not, for God took him' (Gen 5:24), a passage that sparked rich traditions about heavenly translation. The same spelling names a son of Cain (Gen 4:17), after whom the first city was named. Convention distinguishes two other bearers as 'Hanoch': a son of Midian (Gen 25:4) and a son of Reuben (Gen 46:9). Spanish differentiates the forms as 'Hanoj/Janoj' versus 'Hanoc/Janoc,' while all traditions render the Greek Septuagint as Enoch.

1. Enoch (son of Cain / son of Jered) (10×) Enoch (Hebrew Chanokh), referring primarily to the son of Jered in Seth's genealogy, the righteous figure who walked with God and was taken up without dying (Gen 5:18-24; 1 Chr 1:3). Also applied to the son of Cain, after whom the first city was named (Gen 4:17-18). Spanish uses 'Hanoj/Janoj,' French 'Hénoc/Chanokh,' German 'Chanoch,' all reflecting variant transliteration traditions for this single Hebrew spelling. ENOCH HANOCH NAMES

en: Chanokh, and-Chanokh, to-Chanokh | es: Hanoj, a-Hanoj, y-Janoj | fr: Chanokh, et-Hénoc, à-Chanokh | de: Chanoch, Chanochs, [וחנוך] Gen 4:17; Gen 4:18; Gen 5:18; Gen 5:19

2. Hanoch (son of Reuben / son of Midian) (6×) Hanoch, the same Hebrew name חֲנוֹךְ but conventionally transliterated differently to distinguish two lesser-known bearers: a son of Midian and grandson of Abraham through Keturah (Gen 25:4; 1 Chr 1:33), and a son of Reuben, ancestor of the Hanochite clan (Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:5). Spanish renders these as 'Hanoc/Janoc,' distinct from the Enoch forms. ENOCH HANOCH NAMES

en: Chanokh, Hanoch, and-Hanoch | es: Hanoc, Janoc, Janoj | fr: Hanoch, Hénoc, et-Hanoch | de: Chanoch, Hanoch, [חנוך] Gen 25:4; Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:5; 1Chr 1:3

חָנוּן H2586 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)

Hanun — personal name meaning 'favored, gracious'; an Ammonite king and two post-exilic builders

The name חָנוּן (Chanun) means 'favored' or 'gracious,' from the root חנן. The most prominent bearer is Hanun son of Nahash, king of Ammon, who humiliated David's ambassadors by shaving half their beards and cutting their garments, provoking a devastating war (2 Sam 10:1-4; 1 Chr 19:2-6). His misjudgment — acting on the suspicion of his advisors rather than accepting David's genuine condolence — stands as a cautionary tale about political mistrust. Two other men named Hanun appear among Nehemiah's wall-builders: one repaired the Valley Gate (Neh 3:13) and another (possibly the same person) repaired a section near the armory (Neh 3:30). Spanish 'Hanún' and English 'Hanun' transliterate directly.

Hanun (proper name) (11×) Hanun son of Nahash, king of Ammon, who succeeded his father and disgraced David's envoys sent with condolences (2 Sam 10:1-4; 1 Chr 19:2-6). His provocation triggered a major military campaign in which Ammon and their Aramean allies were decisively defeated. The narrative illustrates how diplomatic insult can escalate into full-scale war. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: Hanun, and-Hanun, to-Hanun | es: Hanún, Janún, a-Janún | fr: Hanun, et-Hanun, zu-Hanun | de: Hanun, [וחנון], [חנון] 2Sam 10:1; 2Sam 10:2; 2Sam 10:3; 2Sam 10:4; 1Chr 19:2

חַנּוּן H2587 Conj-w / Adj-ms (13×)

Gracious, compassionate — a divine attribute used exclusively of God, often paired with 'merciful'

One of the foundational adjectives in Israel's confession of God's character, 'channun' appears only as a predicate of the LORD. Its roots reach back to the covenant formula of Exodus 34:6 — 'merciful and gracious' — which echoes through Psalms (86:15; 103:8; 111:4; 145:8), the prophets (Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2), and postexilic literature (2 Chr 30:9; Neh 9:17, 31). The near-universal pairing with rachum ('compassionate') makes this a fixed liturgical doublet. Spanish renders it 'clemente,' French 'gracieux/misericordieux,' reflecting the word's warmth.

gracious, compassionate (13×) A divine attribute meaning gracious or compassionate, used exclusively of God and nearly always paired with rachum ('merciful') in the liturgical formula originating at Exodus 34:6. Attested in the covenant code (Exod 22:27), the Sinai theophany (Exod 34:6), psalmic praise (Pss 86:15; 103:8; 111:4; 112:4; 116:5; 145:8), prophetic appeals (Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2), and postexilic narrative (2 Chr 30:9; Neh 9:17, 31). The term emphasizes God's disposition to show undeserved favor. GRACE AND COMPASSION
en: and-gracious, gracious | es: Clemente, clemente, compasivo | fr: Hanun, et-gracieux, et-miséricordieux | de: [חנון], gnaedig, gracious Exod 22:27; Exod 34:6; 2Chr 30:9; Neh 9:17; Neh 9:31

חֲנוּת H2588 Art / N-fp (1×)
the cells, vaulted chambers (in a prison)
This noun denotes cells or vaulted chambers, specifically used in Jeremiah 37:16 to describe the dungeon where Jeremiah was imprisoned. The word implies rooms with arched or vaulted roofs, suggesting underground or semi-underground construction. The prophet was placed in these cells within 'the house of the pit'—a grim prison facility. The architectural term conveys the oppressive, enclosed nature of Jeremiah's imprisonment.

(1×) Vaulted cells or chambers used as prison cells. The root suggests a curved or arched structure, possibly underground cisterns adapted for confinement. Jeremiah 37:16 describes these as part of a dungeon complex where the prophet suffered harsh imprisonment. Spanish 'las celdas' (the cells) captures the prison context. The parallel with 'house of the pit' suggests a multi-room underground facility designed for detention. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-cells | es: las-celdas | fr: [ההכניות] | de: [החניות] Jer 37:16

חָנַן H2589 V-Piel-Inf (1×)
to be gracious, show favor (infinitive form)
This infinitive of the common verb 'to be gracious' or 'show favor' appears in Psalm 77:9 in a rhetorical question about God's character. The psalmist asks, 'Has God forgotten to be gracious?' The infinitive form emphasizes the action or capacity of showing grace as an essential divine attribute. The question itself expects a negative answer—surely God hasn't permanently ceased being gracious, despite current appearances of abandonment.

(1×) The action of showing grace or favor, used infinitivally. Psalm 77:9's crisis of faith questions whether God has permanently set aside his gracious character. Spanish 'tener gracia' (to have grace) and the broader multilingual evidence show this is about God's fundamental disposition of favor toward his people. The psalm wrestles with how God's apparent absence squares with his covenantal commitment to be gracious. MORAL GOODNESS
en: to-be-gracious | es: tener-gracia | fr: grâce | de: zu-sein-gracious Ps 77:9

חָנַט H2590a Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (4×)
To embalm (a corpse with spices); to ripen or spice (of fruit)
This verb bridges the worlds of death and harvest. In Genesis 50:2 and 50:26, it describes the Egyptian practice of embalming—Joseph commands the physicians to embalm his father Jacob, and Joseph himself is later embalmed. The process involved aromatic spices, which connects to the verb's other sense: in Song of Songs 2:13, the fig tree 'spices' or ripens its early fruit, evoking the fragrant sweetness of maturing figs. Spanish 'embalsamar' and 'ha madurado' (has ripened) neatly capture both domains. Arabic cognates confirm the shared semantic thread of spicing and preparation.

(4×) To embalm a corpse using aromatic spices, following Egyptian funerary practice. Genesis 50:2 records Joseph commanding physicians to embalm Jacob, and Genesis 50:26 notes Joseph's own embalming. Spanish 'embalsamaron' and German 'einbalsamieren' reflect this mortuary sense directly. The underlying idea is the application of preservative spices. In Song of Songs 2:13 the same root describes the fig tree ripening or 'spicing' its early fruit, a seasonal image of fragrant maturation. Spanish 'ha madurado' (has ripened) and French 'a mûri' capture this agricultural extension, showing how the root's core meaning of 'spicing' branches into both funerary and botanical usage. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME
en: and-embalmed, ripened, to-embalm | es: ha-madurado, para-embalsamar, y-embalsamaron | fr: a-mûri, et-embauma, à-embalm | de: [חנטה], einzubalsamieren, und-es-balsamierten-ein Gen 50:2; Gen 50:26; Song 2:13

חֲנָטִים H2590b Art / Adj-mp (1×)
the embalming (process)
This plural noun refers to the embalming process, specifically used in Genesis 50:3 to describe 'the days of embalming' for Jacob. The text specifies this took forty days, following Egyptian mortuary practice. Egypt's sophisticated mummification procedures preserved bodies for the afterlife, and Jacob received this treatment due to Joseph's high position. The technical term captures the time-consuming process of preparing a body with spices and preservatives.

(1×) The embalming process as practiced in Egypt, specifically the duration required for proper mummification. Genesis 50:3 notes that the standard embalming period was forty days, after which seventy days of mourning followed. Spanish 'los embalsamados' (the embalmed ones) takes it as substantive; English 'the embalming' treats it as the process. The detail shows how Joseph honored his father with full Egyptian burial customs while maintaining Israelite mourning traditions. BURYING THE DEAD
en: the-embalming | es: los-embalsamados | fr: le-embalming | de: der-Einbalsamierung Gen 50:3

חִנְטָה H2591 N-fp (2×)
wheat; grain of wheat (Aramaic)
This Aramaic word for wheat appears only in Ezra, within the decrees of Persian kings authorizing temple provisions. The term is cognate to Hebrew חִטָּה and may derive from an Egyptian loanword. Both occurrences specify wheat as part of the regular supplies to be provided for temple sacrifices and offerings, underscoring Persian support for Jewish worship.

(2×) Found in Ezra 6:9 and 7:22, both in contexts of Persian royal decrees providing resources for the Jerusalem temple. The plural form חִנְטִין appears in official Aramaic administrative language. French and German glosses transliterate the Aramaic rather than translate, recognizing the technical administrative register. GRAIN AND WHEAT
en: wheat | es: trigo | fr: [חנטין] | de: [חנטין] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:22

חַנִיאֵל H2592 N-proper-ms (2×)
Hanniel; personal name meaning 'favor of El'
This name means 'favor of El' (God) and belongs to two different Israelites: a prince of Manasseh involved in apportioning the land (Numbers 34:23) and a chief of Asher (1 Chronicles 7:39). The name reflects the common ancient Near Eastern pattern of theophoric names incorporating divine favor or grace, similar to Phoenician and Nabataean examples.

(2×) Numbers 34:23 identifies Hanniel as the Manassite representative for land allotment, while 1 Chronicles 7:39 names a different Hanniel among Asher's descendants. The conjunction 'and Hanniel' (וחניאל) in the second reference shows this is part of a genealogical list. French and German transliterate the conjunctive form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hanniel, and-Channiel | es: Haniel, y-Janiel | fr: Hanniel, [וחניאל] | de: Hanniel, [וחניאל] Num 34:23; 1Chr 7:39

חָנִיךְ H2593 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)
his trained men (born in his household)
This adjective describes trained, experienced, or tried men, specifically Abraham's 'trained men born in his house' in Genesis 14:14. These were 318 household retainers whom Abraham led in the night raid to rescue Lot. The term emphasizes they were not merely servants but disciplined fighters trained for combat—a private militia raised within Abraham's extensive household. Their birth in his house ensured loyalty and long-term training.

(1×) Men who are trained, tried, and experienced, specifically household-born retainers prepared for military action. Genesis 14:14's detail shows Abraham commanded a substantial force of disciplined fighters—not hired mercenaries but men raised in his household and trained from youth. Spanish 'siervos de él' (his servants) understates the military implication. The number (318) and their household origin suggest a wealthy patriarch with a small army of loyal, capable warriors. TEACHING AND LEARNING
en: his-trained-men | es: siervos-de-él | fr: son-trained-hommes | de: seine-Geübten Gen 14:14

חֲנִינָה H2594 N-fs (1×)
favor, kindness shown to another
This rare noun denotes the favor or kindness that one person shows to another. It appears only in Jeremiah 16:13, where God declares that in exile He will show no favor to His people—a stark reversal of the usual pattern of divine grace. The word is related to the common verb חָנַן (to be gracious, show favor) and belongs to the family of grace-language in Hebrew.

(1×) The single occurrence in Jeremiah 16:13 uses this term in a negative construction: 'I will show you no favor.' The multilingual glosses (English 'favor,' Spanish 'gracia') confirm this is about showing kindness or mercy. The context is judgment—Israel will be exiled to a land where they will serve foreign gods, and God's favor will be withdrawn. The rarity of this particular noun form makes it all the more poignant in this prophetic threat. MORAL GOODNESS
en: favor | es: gracia | fr: [חנינה] | de: [חנינה] Jer 16:13

חֲנִית H2595 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3mp (48×)
chanith – spear, lance; a thrusting and throwing weapon carried by warriors and kings in ancient Israel
The feminine noun chanith ('spear') designates a weapon consisting of a metal point affixed to a long wooden shaft, used both for thrusting in close combat and for hurling at a distance. Its 48 occurrences are concentrated in the narrative books, especially 1-2 Samuel and Chronicles, where it figures prominently in accounts of combat and royal authority. Saul's spear becomes almost a character in its own right: he hurls it at David twice (1 Sam 18:10-11; 19:9-10) and at Jonathan once (1 Sam 20:33), and it stands planted in the ground as a mark of his royal presence while he sleeps (1 Sam 26:7). Goliath's spear, described with extraordinary measurements (1 Sam 17:7), symbolizes Philistine power. The prophetic vision of beating spears into pruning hooks (Isa 2:4; Mic 4:3) draws its power from the familiarity of this weapon. Spanish lanza, French lance, and German Speer render it uniformly.

spear, lance (48×) A spear or lance used in warfare, both for thrusting and throwing, and as a symbol of royal and military authority. Saul's chanith serves as a marker of his presence and a weapon of rage (1 Sam 18:10-11; 26:7), Goliath's massive spear symbolizes Philistine might (1 Sam 17:7), and the prophetic reversal of spears into pruning hooks envisions universal peace (Isa 2:4; Mic 4:3). Spanish lanza, French lance, and German Speer confirm a single, stable referent across all 48 occurrences with no semantic subdivision. SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN
en: a-spear, his-spear, spear | es: la-lanza, lanza, lanza-suya | fr: der-lance, lance, le-lance | de: Speer, [החנית], [חנית] 1Sam 13:19; 1Sam 13:22; 1Sam 17:7; 1Sam 17:45

חָנַךְ H2596 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3ms (5×)
to dedicate, inaugurate; to train up or initiate a person or building for its intended purpose
The verb chanak carries the dual sense of dedicating a building and training a person. In Deuteronomy 20:5, a man who has built a new house but not yet 'dedicated' it is exempt from battle, while Proverbs 22:6 famously urges 'train up a child in the way he should go.' The Arabic cognate reveals a vivid origin: rubbing dates on a newborn's palate to initiate nursing. Solomon's temple dedication in 1 Kings 8:63 and 2 Chronicles 7:5 shows the word at its most ceremonial. Spanish captures both senses well: 'Entrena' (train) and 'inauguraron' (inaugurated).

(5×) To dedicate, inaugurate a structure for its intended sacred or domestic use. Applied to the dedication of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 8:63; 2 Chr 7:5) and a newly built house (Deut 20:5). The Arabic cognate hanak ('rub the palate of a newborn') points to an initiatory root meaning: preparing something for first use. Spanish 'inauguraron' and 'dedico' reflect the ceremonial register. The related noun chanukkah ('dedication') derives from this verb, later giving the festival its name. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-dedicated, and-they-dedicated, has-dedicated-it | es: Entrena, e-inauguraron, la-dedicó? | fr: [ויחנכו], a-dedicated-cela, devra-dedicate-cela | de: [ויחנכו], [חנך], hat-dedicated-es Deut 20:5; 1Kgs 8:63; 2Chr 7:5; Prov 22:6

חֲנֻכָּה H2597 N-fsc (4×)
Dedication, the formal consecration ceremony for a temple or image
From the root meaning 'to dedicate' or 'to initiate,' this noun denotes a formal ceremony of consecration. In Ezra 6:16-17, the returned exiles celebrate the dedication of the rebuilt temple with joy and sacrifice—a moment of communal restoration. In Daniel 3:2-3, Nebuchadnezzar summons officials to the dedication of his golden image, a scene of imperial idolatry. The same word thus frames both true worship and its counterfeit. This is the root behind the later festival name Hanukkah, commemorating the Maccabean rededication of the temple.

(4×) A formal dedication or consecration ceremony, particularly of a sacred or monumental structure. Ezra 6:16 and 6:17 describe the joyful dedication of the Second Temple, where the returned exiles offer sacrifices and organize priestly divisions. Daniel 3:2 and 3:3 use the same term for the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image on the plain of Dura. The word carries heavy ceremonial weight in both contexts: Spanish 'dedicación' and French 'fête' (festival) reflect the public, liturgical character of the event. The root later gave rise to the festival name Hanukkah, the rededication of the desecrated temple under the Maccabees. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-dedication-of, for-the-dedication-of, the-dedication-of | es: a-la-dedicación-de, la-dedicación-de, para-la-dedicación-de | fr: [חנכת], [לחנכת], fête | de: [חנכת], [לחנכת] Ezra 6:16; Ezra 6:17; Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

חֲנֻכָּה H2598 N-fsc (8×)
Dedication or consecration; the inaugural ceremony setting apart an altar, temple, or city wall for sacred use.
Chanukkah denotes the formal act of dedicating a sacred structure to God through ceremony, sacrifice, and celebration. Numbers 7 uses it five times for the dedication offerings at the tabernacle altar, where each tribal leader brought gifts over twelve days (Num 7:10, 11, 84, 88). The Chronicler records Solomon's temple dedication (2 Chr 7:9), and Nehemiah describes the joyful dedication of Jerusalem's rebuilt walls with processions and music (Neh 12:27). Psalm 30's superscription, 'a song for the dedication of the house,' likely points to a later rededication of the temple. This is the same word that gives the post-biblical festival of Hanukkah its name.

dedication, consecration ceremony (8×) Dedication or consecration ceremony for a sacred structure—altar, temple, or city wall—marking its formal setting apart for divine service. Spanish renders consistently as 'dedicación,' English as 'dedication,' confirming the unified semantic range across all occurrences. The word appears in two major contexts: the tabernacle altar dedication with its elaborate twelve-day tribal offering sequence (Num 7:10, 11, 84, 88) and the dedication of completed sacred buildings (2 Chr 7:9 for Solomon's temple; Neh 12:27 for Jerusalem's walls). Psalm 30:1's title extends the concept to rededication, a usage that anticipates the Maccabean Hanukkah (1 Macc 4:52ff.). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-at-dedication-of, dedication, dedication-of | es: Y-en-dedicación-de, dedicación, dedicación-de | fr: [ובחנכת], [חנכה], [חנכת] | de: [ובחנכת], [חנכה], [חנכת] Num 7:10; Num 7:11; Num 7:84; Num 7:88; 2Chr 7:9

חֲנֹכִי H2599 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Hanochite (gentilic adjective/clan name)
This is a gentilic adjective, always used with the article, designating a member or descendant of Hanoch (Genesis 46:9). It appears in the census list of Numbers 26:5, where the families of Reuben are being enumerated. Like other gentilic forms in these genealogical lists, it functions as a collective noun identifying a clan or family group within the tribal structure of ancient Israel.

(1×) Numbers 26:5 uses this term to identify the Hanochite clan within the tribe of Reuben. The multilingual glosses (English 'the-Hanochite,' Spanish 'los-hanoquitas,' French 'le-Hanochite') reflect both singular and plural nuances, as gentilic adjectives can denote either an individual or the clan collectively. The article (הַ) is integral to the form, marking it as a definite designation in the census context. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Hanochite | es: los-hanoquitas | fr: le-Hanochite | de: der-Hanochite Num 26:5

חִנָּם H2600 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (32×)
For nothing; without cause, freely, in vain — adverb from the root for 'grace/favor'
Derived from the same root as chen ('grace, favor'), this adverbial substantive literally means 'out of favor' — that is, without anything owed in return. It carries three distinct flavors depending on context: undeserved hostility ('without cause'), free generosity ('without cost'), and futile effort ('in vain'). The Psalms frequently deploy it in laments over enemies who attack 'without cause' (Ps 35:7; 69:4), while Genesis uses it of Jacob's unpaid labor for Laban (Gen 29:15). Its etymological connection to grace makes it theologically rich: what is chinnam may be either unjust or generous, depending on which side of favor one stands.

1. without cause, undeservedly (17×) Describes action done without justification or legitimate cause — unjust, undeserved hostility or accusation. The Psalms are filled with this usage: David's enemies hate him 'without cause' (Ps 35:7, 19; 69:4), and Job insists God has afflicted him chinnam (Job 2:3; 9:17). French uses 'sans cause' and German 'umsonst' or 'ohne Sache,' both capturing the sense of groundless aggression. This is the most frequent sense, appearing in roughly half of all occurrences. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: causeless, for-nothing, without-cause | es: sin-causa, sin-causa., sin-causa? | fr: [חנם], gratuitement, sans-cause | de: ohne-Sache, ohne-cause, umsonst 1Sam 19:5; 1Sam 25:31; Job 2:3; Job 9:17; Job 22:6

2. freely, without cost (11×) Denotes something given, received, or performed without payment — freely, gratis, at no cost. Laban asks Jacob whether he should serve 'for nothing' just because he is family (Gen 29:15), and the freed slave goes out chinnam, without ransom (Exod 21:2, 11). Spanish uses both 'de balde' (for free) and 'de gracia' (by grace), the latter beautifully preserving the etymological link to chen. David insists on paying for his offering rather than sacrificing what cost him nothing (2 Sam 24:24). WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: for-nothing, free, freely | es: de-balde, de-balde?, de-gracia | fr: [חנם], free, freely | de: [חנם], der-umsonst, free Gen 29:15; Exod 21:2; Exod 21:11; Num 11:5; 2Sam 24:24

3. in vain, to no purpose (3×) Expresses futility or purposelessness — 'in vain, to no effect.' When the net is spread in vain before the bird's eyes (Prov 1:17), the action achieves nothing. Ezekiel uses it to warn that God's threatened judgments are not chinnam — not empty or purposeless (Ezek 6:10; 14:23). This sense overlaps with 'without cause' but emphasizes result rather than justification. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: in-vain, nothing, without-cause | es: en-vano, vano | fr: gratuitement | de: [חנם], umsonst Prov 1:17; Ezek 6:10; Ezek 14:23

4. innocence, guiltlessness (1×) Used substantively in 1 Kings 2:31 to denote the state of innocence or guiltlessness — the 'blood of chinnam' being innocent blood shed without just cause. Here the word functions as a noun rather than an adverb, describing not the manner of an action but the moral status of a person. This rare substantival use bridges the 'without cause' and 'freely' senses into a legal-moral concept. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL
en: innocence | es: inocencia | fr: innocence | de: innocence 1Kgs 2:31

חֲנַמְאֵל H2601 N-proper-ms (4×)
Hanamel, Jeremiah's cousin who sold him a field in Anathoth as a sign of hope during the siege of Jerusalem
A personal name meaning 'God is gracious' (from hanan + El). Hanamel was Jeremiah's cousin (ben-dod), the son of Shallum, who approached the prophet to sell him a field in Anathoth during the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem (Jer 32:7-12). The purchase became a powerful prophetic sign that houses, fields, and vineyards would again be bought in the land. The Septuagint renders the name as Anameel.

(4×) The personal name of Jeremiah's cousin, son of his uncle Shallum. All four occurrences cluster in Jeremiah 32:7-12, where Hanamel comes to the imprisoned prophet requesting he exercise his right of redemption (ge'ullah) over a field in Anathoth. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate: English 'Chanamel,' Spanish 'Janameel,' French 'Hanameel,' reflecting the compound theophoric name meaning 'God has been gracious.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Chanamel | es: Janameel | fr: Hanaméel | de: Hanamel Jer 32:7; Jer 32:8; Jer 32:9; Jer 32:12

חֲנָמֶל H2602 Prep-b (1×)
with frost (or: with some destructive agent)
This extremely rare word appears only in Psalm 78:47, where God's plagues against Egypt are recounted. The context speaks of destroying vines with hail and sycamore trees with this mysterious agent. Ancient versions suggest 'frost,' but the meaning remains conjectural. BDB notes the form is unusual and the etymology uncertain, though the prepositional prefix (בְּ) indicates it was an instrument of destruction parallel to hail.

(1×) Psalm 78:47 places this word in parallel with 'hail' as instruments of agricultural devastation. The Greek and Latin versions read 'frost,' and modern translations follow suit (English 'with-frost,' Spanish 'con-escarcha,' German 'mit-frost'). French offers 'charançon' (weevil), reflecting uncertainty. The poetic context suggests a natural force used by God in judgment, though the exact identity remains debated among lexicographers. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS
en: with-frost | es: con-escarcha | fr: dans-charançon | de: mit-frost Ps 78:47

חָנַן H2603a Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-3cp (78×)
To show favor, be gracious, have mercy; in Hitpael, to implore grace or supplicate; the root of chen ('grace') and channun ('gracious').
Chanan is the verbal heart of the Hebrew grace vocabulary — the root from which chen ('favor, grace'), channun ('gracious'), and techinnah ('supplication') all spring. In its Qal form, it describes the free, unearned act of bestowing kindness, most characteristically by God: 'I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious' (Exod 33:19) is the definitive statement of divine sovereignty in mercy. The Hitpael reflexive flips the perspective entirely, giving voice to the desperate human petition for that grace — Moses 'implored' God (Deut 3:23), Solomon prayed that Israel might 'make supplication' when exiled (1 Kgs 8:33, 47). Arabic hanna ('to yearn toward, be compassionate') preserves the emotional warmth at the root's core, while Korean 은혜를 베풀다 ('to bestow grace') and Swahili -hurumia ('to have compassion on') each illuminate a facet. The psalmist's cry channeni ('be gracious to me!') — the single most common prayer-word in the Psalms — captures the whole theology in one imperative.

1. be gracious, show favor (Qal) (55×) Qal: to be gracious, show favor, have mercy — the core sense at 55 occurrences, overwhelmingly with God as subject. The paradigm passage is Exod 33:19 where Yahweh declares sovereign freedom in bestowing grace, and the Aaronic blessing invokes it: 'May the LORD be gracious to you' (Num 6:25). The Psalms account for the largest share, with channeni ('be gracious to me!') as a standard prayer opening (Ps 4:1; 6:2; 9:13; 25:16; 26:11; 27:7; 30:10; 31:9; 51:1; 56:1; 57:1; 86:3; 119:29, 58, 132). Spanish ten misericordia de mí, French fais-moi grâce, and German sei mir gnädig all confirm the mercy-petition frame. When humans are the agents (Gen 33:5, 11; 43:29), the sense softens to 'deal kindly with' — Jacob's acknowledgment that God 'has graciously given' his children. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-be-gracious-to-me, be-gracious-to-me, he-is-gracious | es: Ten-misericordia-de-mí, Ten-piedad-de-mí, ten-misericordia-de-mí | fr: et-fais-moi-grâce, faire-grâce, fais-moi-grâce | de: Krieg-gnädig, und-Krieg-gnädig Gen 33:5; Gen 33:11; Gen 43:29; Exod 33:19

2. implore favor, supplicate (Hitpael) (17×) Hitpael reflexive: to implore favor, make supplication, plead for grace — 17 occurrences capturing the human side of the grace encounter. Moses 'entreated' God to enter the promised land (Deut 3:23); Solomon's temple prayer envisions Israel 'making supplication' in exile (1 Kgs 8:33, 47, 59); Esther prepared to 'plead with' the king for her people (Esth 8:3). The reflexive morphology is semantically telling — one 'graces oneself' before the powerful, presenting oneself as a petitioner. Arabic yatadarra'u ('to humble oneself in petition') and Korean 간청하다 ('to earnestly entreat') both select supplication-specific vocabulary distinct from the Qal's bestowal sense. The theological architecture is elegant: the same root governs both giving and asking for grace. ENTREATY SUPPLICATION
en: I-implore, I-must-plead, I-plead-for-grace | es: al-suplicarnos, le-suplico-, para-suplicar | fr: [והתחננו], [ותתחנן], [להתחנן] | de: Krieg-gnädig, [אתחנן], [והתחננו] Gen 42:21; Deut 3:23; 1Kgs 8:33; 1Kgs 8:47; 1Kgs 8:59

3. be shown favor (Hofal passive) (2×) Hofal passive: to be shown favor, be granted grace — 2 occurrences where the subject receives gracious treatment without agency. In Prov 21:10 the neighbor of the wicked 'finds no favor' in his eyes; in Isa 26:10 'though the wicked is shown favor, he does not learn righteousness.' Arabic yurhamu ('is shown mercy') and the passive construction confirm a genuine voice-based distinction. These passages make a pointed theological observation: grace can be bestowed (Qal), desperately sought (Hitpael), and even passively received (Hofal) — yet still be refused. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: Is-shown-favor, shown-favor | es: Se-tenga-piedad-de, halla-gracia | fr: faire-grâce | de: [יחן] Prov 21:10; Isa 26:10

4. show compassion, have pity (Piel intensive) (2×) Piel intensive: to show compassion, have pity — 2 occurrences where the action carries intensified emotional depth. In Ps 102:14 the servants of God 'have compassion on' Zion's stones, and in Prov 14:21 the one who 'is gracious to the poor' is called blessed. Arabic rahimu ('show deep mercy') and Korean 불쌍히 여기다 ('regard with pity') both select compassion-specific vocabulary rather than generic favor words. The Piel intensification transforms coolly sovereign favor into warm-hearted pity — a different emotional register from the Qal, though the same root. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: but-he-who-is-gracious-to, they-have-pity | es: tienen-compasión, y-el-que-tiene-misericordia-de | fr: et-faire-grâce, faire-grâce | de: Krieg-gnädig, [ומחונן] Ps 102:14; Prov 14:21

5. (1×) A likely Hifil or Piel form meaning to make gracious or pleasant — 1 occurrence at Prov 26:25 where someone 'makes his voice gracious' (i.e., speaks pleasantly, charmingly) to deceive. Spanish hace agradable ('makes pleasant') captures the adjectival-causative nuance well. This is a rare extension of the root from interpersonal mercy to aesthetic pleasantness — the voice is 'graced,' made appealing. The context is deeply ironic: the same root that voices desperate prayer to God here describes the smooth-talking deceiver. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: he-makes-gracious | es: hace-agradable | fr: faire-grâce | de: [יחנן] Prov 26:25

6. (1×) A disputed form at Jer 22:23 — 1 occurrence where the MT reading nachant ('you groaned/you will groan') is parsed by some as a Niphal of chanan but may actually derive from a different root (nachan or 'anach, 'to groan'). Spanish gemirás ('you will groan') and English 'you will groan' both point away from the grace/favor semantic field entirely. The context describes the anguish of those nesting in the cedars of Lebanon when judgment comes. Most modern lexicographers reassign this to a separate root, but its traditional inclusion under chanan preserves an instructive textual-critical puzzle. GRACE AND COMPASSION
en: you-will-groan | es: gemirás | fr: faire-grâce | de: [נחנת] Jer 22:23

חָנַן H2603b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (1×)
be loathsome, repulsive, offensive
This is a separate root from the common חָנַן (be gracious), instead meaning 'be loathsome' or 'emit a foul odor.' The etymology connects to Aramaic and Arabic words for rancidness and foul smell. Job 19:17 provides the sole biblical occurrence, where Job laments that his breath is loathsome to his own children. The emotional weight of this complaint—rejected even by those closest to him—adds to the pathos of Job's suffering.

(1×) In Job 19:17, Job says 'I am loathsome to the sons of my womb,' meaning his own offspring find him repulsive. The context emphasizes social alienation: his breath is strange to his wife, and he is loathsome to his own children. Multilingual glosses capture this disgust: English 'I-am-loathsome,' Spanish 'soy-repugnante.' The parallel with זָרָה (strange, repulsive) in the verse reinforces the sense of being physically offensive or repugnant. ENTREATY SUPPLICATION en: and-I-am-loathsome | es: y-soy-repugnante | fr: et-faire-grâce | de: [וחנתי] Job 19:17

חַנַּן H2604 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (2×)
show favor, implore favor; extend or seek mercy (Aramaic)
This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel with two related senses: showing favor to others and imploring favor from God. In Daniel 4:24, the king is urged to show mercy to the oppressed. In Daniel 6:11, Daniel is found making supplication to God. The root parallels Hebrew חנן and shares the semantic range of grace, favor, and entreaty that pervades biblical piety.

(2×) Daniel 4:27 (English 4:24) uses the infinitive 'by showing mercy' as counsel to Nebuchadnezzar, while Daniel 6:11 employs the Hithpael participle describing Daniel 'making supplication.' Spanish distinguishes these as 'con misericordia' (with mercy) and 'suplicando' (supplicating), reflecting both the active and reflexive aspects of the root. GRACE AND COMPASSION
en: and-making-supplication, by-showing-mercy-to | es: con-misericordia-hacia, y-suplicando | fr: et-grâce, grâce | de: [במחן], [ומתחנן] Dan 4:27; Dan 6:11

חָנָן H2605 N-proper-ms (12×)
Hanan – a proper name meaning 'gracious,' borne by multiple individuals in the Hebrew Bible Hanan (chanan, meaning 'gracious' or 'he has been gracious') is a proper name borne by several individuals across the Hebrew Bible: a Benjaminite descendant (1 Chr 8:23), a son of Azel in the Saulide genealogy (1 Chr 8:38; 9:44), one of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:43), temple servants returning from exile (Ezra 2:46; Neh 7:49), Levites who assisted Ezra in reading the Torah (Neh 8:7; 10:10, 22, 26), and a son of Igdaliah whose chamber in the Temple Jeremiah used (Jer 35:4). Despite the multiplicity of bearers, the name functions as a single lexical entry. All languages preserve it by transliteration.

Hanan (proper name) (12×) The proper name Hanan (chanan, 'gracious'), borne by at least eight distinct individuals across Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, and Jeremiah, including Benjaminites, Davidic warriors, temple servants, assisting Levites, and a temple chamber owner. The conjunctive variant 'and Hanan' is syntactic, not semantic. Uniform transliteration across all target languages – English Hanan, Spanish Hanan, French Hanan, Hindi Hanan, Arabic Hanan – confirms its status as a single monosemous proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chanan, Hanan, and-Chanan | es: Hanán, Janan, Janán | fr: Hanan, [חנן], et-Hanan | de: Hanan, [וחנן], [חנן] 1Chr 8:23; 1Chr 8:38; 1Chr 9:44; 1Chr 11:43; Ezra 2:46

חֲנַנְאֵל H2606 N-proper-fs (4×)

Hananel, a tower on the north wall of Jerusalem between the Sheep Gate and the Fish Gate

A place name meaning 'God is gracious,' referring to a prominent tower on Jerusalem's northern fortifications. It appears in prophetic and post-exilic contexts: Jeremiah envisions the rebuilt city measured from the Tower of Hananel (Jer 31:38), Zechariah describes the eschatological leveling of Jerusalem's terrain from this tower to the king's winepresses (Zech 14:10), and Nehemiah records its reconstruction alongside the Sheep Gate (Neh 3:1; 12:39).

(4×) A named tower (migdal) on Jerusalem's northern wall, serving as a landmark in descriptions of the city's perimeter. In Nehemiah's rebuilding account (Neh 3:1; 12:39) it is consecrated alongside the Sheep Gate, while in prophetic visions (Jer 31:38; Zech 14:10) it marks the limit of the restored or transformed city. Spanish and French renderings vary between 'Hananeel,' 'Hananel,' and 'Jananel,' all preserving the theophoric element El. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chananel, Hananel | es: Hananeel, Hananel, Jananel | fr: Hanania, [חנאל] | de: [חנאל] Neh 3:1; Neh 12:39; Jer 31:38; Zech 14:10

חֲנָנִי H2607 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (11×)

Hanani — personal name meaning 'gracious, my grace'; borne by several priests, prophets, and leaders

The name חֲנָנִי (Chanani) is a shortened form of Hananiah, meaning 'the LORD is gracious.' It identifies at least five distinct individuals. The seer Hanani rebuked King Asa of Judah for relying on Aram rather than on the LORD (2 Chr 16:7) and was imprisoned for it — a powerful example of prophetic boldness meeting royal hostility. His son Jehu ben Hanani prophesied against Baasha of Israel (1 Kgs 16:1, 7) and later against Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 19:2; 20:34). A Levitical musician named Hanani served in David's temple choir (1 Chr 25:4, 25). Nehemiah's brother Hanani brought news of Jerusalem's ruined state (Neh 1:2) and was later appointed co-governor of the city (Neh 7:2). Spanish 'Hanani' preserves the transliteration.

Hanani (proper name) (11×) Hanani the seer, father of the prophet Jehu. He confronted King Asa of Judah for his alliance with Ben-hadad of Aram and was thrown into prison (2 Chr 16:7-10). His prophetic ministry emphasized trust in the LORD over political alliances. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chanani, Hanani, for-Chanani | es: Hanani, Hananí, Jananí | fr: Hanani, zu-Hanani | de: Hanani, [חנני], [לחנני] 1Kgs 16:1; 1Kgs 16:7; 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:25; 2Chr 16:7

חֲנַנְיָהוּ H2608a N-proper-ms (28×)

Hananiah; theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has been gracious,' borne by multiple biblical figures.

Hananiah (also spelled Hananyahu with the longer divine-name ending) is one of the most common theophoric names in the Hebrew Bible, meaning 'YHWH has been gracious.' It belongs to at least eight distinct individuals, including one of Daniel's three companions (Dan 1:6-7, later called Shadrach), the false prophet who opposed Jeremiah (Jer 28), a son of Zerubbabel in the royal Davidic genealogy (1 Chr 3:19), and a captain in Uzziah's army (2 Chr 26:11). The Greek equivalent Ananias carries the same name into the New Testament period. The frequency of the name testifies to the popularity of thanksgiving-type names among postexilic Judeans.

Hananiah (various persons) (28×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH has been gracious,' borne by multiple distinct individuals across the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent include Daniel's companion renamed Shadrach (Dan 1:6-7, 19), the false prophet who clashed with Jeremiah by breaking the yoke-bars (Jer 28:1-17), a son of Zerubbabel in the Davidic line (1 Chr 3:19, 21), and a military captain under Uzziah (2 Chr 26:11). The longer form Hananyahu appears in Chronicles and in ancient Hebrew seals. The Greek form Ananias (Ananias) confirms the name's persistence into the Second Temple period. HANANIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Chananyah, Chananyahu, Hananiah | es: Hananías, Jananyah, Jananyahu | fr: Hanania, [חנניה] | de: Chananja, Hananja 1Chr 3:19; 1Chr 3:21; 1Chr 8:24; 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:23

חֲנַנְיָה H2608b Conj-w (1×)

and to Hananiah (personal name)

This is the Aramaic form of the Hebrew name חֲנַנְיָה (Hananiah), meaning 'Yahweh has been gracious.' It appears in Daniel 2:17, referring to one of Daniel's three companions in Babylon. The name is theophoric, incorporating the divine name as an element. The Aramaic form reflects the linguistic context of the Daniel narrative, which shifts between Hebrew and Aramaic depending on the section and audience.

(1×) Daniel 2:17 mentions Hananiah alongside Daniel's other companions (Mishael and Azariah) as they seek God's revelation about Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The multilingual glosses reflect the conjunction plus name: 'and-to-Hananiah' (English), 'y-a-Jananyah' (Spanish), 'et-Hanania' (French). This is the same individual called Shadrach in his Babylonian name, one of the three thrown into the fiery furnace in Daniel 3. HANANIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: and-to-Chananyah | es: y-a-Jananyah | fr: et-Hanania | de: [ולחנניה] Dan 2:17

חָנֵס H2609 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hanes (Egyptian city in the Nile delta)

This is a place name designating an Egyptian city located on an island in the Nile, south of Memphis. Isaiah 30:4 mentions it in parallel with Zoan (Tanis) as the prophet condemns Judah's reliance on Egyptian political alliances. The identification with Heracleopolis Magna (modern Ahnâs) is based on Egyptian and Assyrian sources. The name likely derives from Egyptian Ḥnnstn, reflecting the Semitic transliteration of the native toponym.

(1×) Isaiah 30:4 pairs Hanes with Zoan to represent Egyptian power and influence: 'his officials are at Zoan, his ambassadors arrive at Hanes.' The multilingual glosses (English 'Hanes,' Spanish 'Janés') preserve the name form. The prophetic context is one of rebuke —trusting in Egypt's promises instead of in Yahweh. The dual city-names emphasize the depth of Judah's diplomatic engagement with Egypt, which Isaiah denounces as futile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chanes | es: Janés | fr: [חנס] | de: [חנס] Isa 30:4

חָנַף H2610 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (11×)

Be polluted or profaned (Qal); defile or make profane (Hifil); corrupt through flattery or hypocrisy

Built from a root that pictures a turning aside from what is right, this verb describes moral and ritual contamination at several levels.

In the Qal stem, the land itself 'becomes profaned' – by bloodshed (Ps 106:38), by idolatry that is like adultery (Jer 3:1, 9), or by covenant-breaking that defiles the whole earth (Isa 24:5). The Hifil causative intensifies agency: you shall not pollute the land with blood (Num 35:33), and Judah's unfaithfulness has defiled the countryside (Jer 3:2). Daniel 11:32 introduces a striking third sense – corrupting people through smooth flattery – where Spanish 'seducira' (he will seduce) captures the insidious, relational quality of this defilement.

1. be polluted or profaned (7×) Qal: to be or become polluted, profaned, or defiled – describing a state of moral or ritual contamination that falls upon a land or people. Psalm 106:38 says the land 'was polluted' (vatechnaf) with innocent blood; Isaiah 24:5 declares the earth profaned under its inhabitants because they violated the everlasting covenant. Jeremiah 3:1 and 3:9 use it of the land defiled by Israel's spiritual adultery. Spanish 'contaminar/profanar' and French 'profaner' consistently mark the passive, stative quality. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: and-was-polluted, are-profane, be-polluted | es: Sea-profanada, contaminarse, contaminó | fr: et-profaner, et-être-impie, profaner | de: [וחנך], [חנוך], [חנפה] Ps 106:38; Isa 24:5; Jer 3:1; Jer 3:9

2. cause to be polluted (3×) Hifil causative: to defile, profane, or make something unclean through one's actions. Numbers 35:33 twice uses this form – 'blood pollutes the land' and 'you shall not pollute the land' – establishing the principle that unavenged murder contaminates the territory. Jeremiah 3:2 extends this to Judah's idolatry defiling the landscape. Spanish shifts to active 'contaminaste' (you polluted), German to 'verunreinigen' (make impure), highlighting the causative agency absent from the Qal. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: and-you-polluted, pollutes, you-shall-pollute | es: Y-contaminaste, profana, profanaréis | fr: et-profaner, pollutes, tu-devra-profaner | de: [ותחניפי], du-soll-verunreinigen, pollutes Num 35:33; Jer 3:2

3. corrupt by flattery (1×) Hifil in a social-moral sense: to corrupt or lead astray through flattery, smooth speech, or hypocrisy. Daniel 11:32 prophesies that the king of the north 'will corrupt by flatteries' those who violate the covenant – Spanish 'seducira' (he will seduce) and the Aramaic cognate 'flatter' both emphasize the deceptive, relational dimension. This sense preserves the root idea of 'inclining away from right' but channels it through persuasion rather than ritual contamination. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: he-shall-corrupt | es: seducirá | fr: profaner | de: [יחניף] Dan 11:32

חָנֵף H2611 N-mp (13×)

Godless, profane, hypocritical — one whose outward piety masks inner moral corruption and defiance of God

A sharp term of moral censure that brands a person as profane and godless. Concentrated in the wisdom literature — Job alone accounts for eight occurrences — it names the one whose religiosity is a veneer over deep corruption. Job 8:13 declares that 'the hope of the godless shall perish,' while Isaiah 9:16 and 10:6 extend the charge to entire nations. Intriguingly, the Arabic cognate hanif shifted to mean 'one who inclines to true religion,' almost the opposite sense. Spanish 'hipocrita' and German 'Heuchler' capture the hypocrisy dimension.

godless, profane, hypocrite (13×) A profane, godless, or hypocritical person whose religious pretense conceals moral bankruptcy. Dominant in Job (8:13; 13:16; 15:34; 17:8; 20:5; 27:8; 34:30; 36:13), where it characterizes those whose piety is superficial and whose end is ruin. Also used of nations (Isa 9:16; 10:6) and groups (Isa 33:14; Ps 35:16). The cognate Arabic term paradoxically means 'devout,' highlighting a semantic divergence between the two languages. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: and-the-godless-of-, godless, godless-one | es: Con-los-profanos, Y-hipócritas-de-, hipócrita | fr: [חנף], [חנפים], dans-impie | de: Heuchler, [חנף], [חנפים] Job 8:13; Job 13:16; Job 15:34; Job 17:8; Job 20:5

חֹנֶף H2612 N-ms (1×)

profaneness, godlessness, moral pollution

This noun denotes moral and spiritual profaneness, a state of being polluted or godless. It appears in Isaiah 32:6, where the prophet describes the behavior of fools who practice profaneness, speak error about the Lord, and leave the hungry unsatisfied. The word is from the root חָנֵף (be profane, godless), which carries connotations of hypocrisy and moral corruption. Unlike ritual impurity, this term emphasizes ethical and spiritual defilement.

(1×) Isaiah 32:6 lists 'practicing profaneness' among the characteristics of a fool, alongside speaking folly, practicing iniquity, and uttering error. The multilingual glosses reflect the moral-spiritual dimension: English 'ungodliness,' Spanish 'hipocresía' (hypocrisy). The verse describes comprehensive moral failure—thoughts, words, and deeds are all corrupt. This term captures the heart of such corruption: a life lived in contempt of God and His ways. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: ungodliness | es: hipocresía | fr: [חנף] | de: [חנף] Isa 32:6

חֲנֻפָּה H2613 N-fs (1×)

profaneness, pollution, moral corruption

This feminine noun parallels H2612, denoting profaneness or spiritual pollution. Jeremiah 23:15 uses it to describe the corruption that has spread from Jerusalem's prophets to the whole land. The context is one of false prophecy and moral decay among religious leaders. The word suggests a contagious moral pollution that spreads from leadership to the people, contaminating the spiritual atmosphere of the nation.

(1×) Jeremiah 23:15 declares that 'from the prophets of Jerusalem profaneness has gone out into all the land.' The multilingual glosses (English 'profaneness,' Spanish 'profanación') emphasize defilement and desecration. God announces judgment on these prophets who spread moral pollution rather than truth. The term captures the idea that false teaching and corrupt leadership have a defiling effect that spreads throughout society like a contagion. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: profaneness | es: profanación | fr: [חנפה] | de: [חנפה] Jer 23:15

חָנַק H2614 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

strangle, hang oneself; choke or throttle

This verb denotes strangling or choking. In 2 Samuel 17:23, Ahithophel hangs himself (literally 'strangled himself') after his counsel is rejected. In Nahum 2:12, the prophet uses the image of a lion strangling prey for its cubs—a vivid metaphor for Assyrian conquest. The root appears across Semitic languages with consistent meaning of constriction and suffocation.

(2×) The Niphal form describes Ahithophel's suicide in 2 Samuel 17:23, while the Piel participle in Nahum 2:12 depicts the lion's predatory strangling. Spanish 'se ahorcó' (hanged himself) and 'estrangulaba' (was strangling) capture both the reflexive and transitive uses. The German and French glosses show the morphological forms being transliterated. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: and-strangled-himself, and-strangling | es: y-estrangulaba, y-se-ahorcó | fr: et-strangled-lui-même, et-suffisance | de: [ומחנק], und-strangled-sich-selbst 2Sam 17:23; Nah 2:12

חַנָּתֹן H2615 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hannathon (town in Zebulun)

This place name designates a town allotted to the tribe of Zebulun in the land division. Joshua 19:14 locates it on the border of Zebulun's territory. The exact site is uncertain, though some scholars have proposed identification with Kefr 'Anan in Galilee, on the border between Upper and Lower Galilee. The name may be related to words for grace or favor, a common element in place names.

(1×) Joshua 19:14 places Hannathon at the northern boundary of Zebulun's inheritance. The multilingual glosses preserve the name form: English 'Hannathon,' Spanish 'Hanatón,' French and German also 'Hannathon.' The boundary description traces the border to Hannathon and then to the Valley of Iphtahel. The Septuagint variations (Amoth, Ennathoth, Anathoth) suggest textual uncertainty in transmission, but the Hebrew form is stable. Geographic precision is difficult, as many ancient Galilean sites remain unidentified. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Channathon | es: a-Hanatón | fr: Channathon | de: Channathon Josh 19:14

חָסַד H2616a V-Hitpael-Imperf-2ms (2×)

show oneself faithful, act with covenant loyalty

This Hithpael verb appears in two parallel psalmic texts (2 Samuel 22:26 and Psalm 18:25), where David declares that God shows faithfulness to the faithful. The root חסד underlies both the noun 'covenant loyalty' (חֶסֶד) and this verbal form. The reflexive conjugation suggests God mirrors back the character of those He encounters —a profound theological principle about divine-human interaction.

(2×) Both occurrences are identical: 'with the faithful, You show Yourself faithful.' The Hithpael suggests reciprocal action—God demonstrates חֶסֶד to those who embody it. Spanish 'te muestras misericordioso/piadoso' (you show yourself merciful/faithful) and French 'Tu montre Yourself fidèle' convey this reflexive quality. FAITH AND TRUST

en: You-show-Yourself-faithful, you-show-yourself-faithful | es: te-muestras-misericordioso, te-muestras-piadoso | fr: Tu-montre-Yourself-fidèle, faire-grâce | de: You-zeige-Yourself-faithful, du-show-dich-selbst-treu 2Sam 22:26; Ps 18:25

חָסַד H2616b V-Piel-Imperf-3ms / 2ms (1×)

reproach, shame, expose to disgrace

This is a distinct root from the more common חֶסֶד (show kindness), instead meaning 'be reproached' or 'put to shame.' It's an Aramaism, related to Aramaic and Syriac words for shame and reproach. The sole biblical occurrence is Proverbs 25:10, where the wise person is warned about the danger of being publicly shamed if a confidence is betrayed. The Piel form indicates causative action: someone causing another to be reproached.

(1×) Proverbs 25:10 warns: 'lest he who hears it reproach you, and your ill repute have no end.' The context is about discretion in disputes—don't reveal another's secret, lest you be shamed when it becomes known. Multilingual glosses capture the shame aspect: English 'reproach-you,' Spanish 'te-avergüence' (shame you). The wisdom here is social: public disgrace from betraying confidences can permanently damage one's reputation. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: reproach-you | es: te-avergüence | fr: יחסדך-toi | de: [יחסדך] Prov 25:10

חֶסֶד H2617a Prep-k (249×)

Covenant faithfulness, steadfast love, mercy, kindness; God's loyal love toward his people and human kindness between persons.

Chesed is arguably the most theologically weighty noun in the Hebrew Bible — and one of the hardest to translate into any single word. Its semantic range stretches from God's unshakable covenant commitment to Israel, through interpersonal acts of loyal kindness, all the way to tender mercy and compassion. The difficulty is visible in how languages struggle with it: Arabic splits the range between rahma ('mercy') and wafa' ('loyalty'), Korean toggles between 인자하심 ('benevolent kindness') and 사랑 ('love'), while Swahili moves between uaminifu ('faithfulness'), fadhili ('kindness'), and huruma ('mercy'). No single translation captures the whole. The word's power lies precisely in this fusion: God's love is faithful, his faithfulness is kind, and his kindness is covenantally committed.

1. Covenant faithfulness, steadfast love (167×) The dominant theological sense: God's enduring, covenant-rooted faithful love toward his people — 167 of 249 occurrences. This is the chesed of the Psalms' great refrain ki le'olam chasdo ('for his steadfast love endures forever,' Ps 136). It combines loyalty, love, and reliability in a way no single target-language word captures. Spanish misericordia, German Gnade, and French bonté each catch a facet but miss the covenantal backbone that Korean 인자하심 and Arabic rahma attempt to convey. MORAL GOODNESS

en: His-steadfast-love, his-steadfast-love | es: misericordia-de-el, su-bondad, su-misericordia | fr: sa-bonté | de: sein-Gnade Ps 5:7; Ps 6:4; Ps 69:13; Ps 77:8; Ps 85:7

2. Kindness, goodness (53×) Interpersonal kindness and benevolence between humans — 53 occurrences, concentrated in Genesis and the narrative books. Abraham asks Abimelech to 'deal kindly' (Gen 20:13); the spies promise Rahab chesed (Josh 2:12). Here the relational, horizontal dimension dominates over the vertical/divine. Arabic ihsan ('doing good to others') and Swahili wema ('goodness') both select human-to-human beneficence vocabulary, distinguishing this from God's covenantal faithfulness. MORAL GOODNESS

en: kindness, lovingkindness | es: bondad, misericordia | fr: bonté | de: Gnade, Guete Gen 19:19; Gen 20:13; Gen 21:23; Gen 24:12; Gen 24:14

3. Loyal acts, covenant loyalties (15×) Concrete plural acts or deeds of covenant faithfulness — 15 occurrences, always using the plural chasdim or construct chasde. Jacob acknowledges God's specific chasdim (Gen 32:11); Isaiah speaks of chasde David, the 'sure mercies of David' (Isa 55:3). The shift from abstract quality to countable historical acts is confirmed by Arabic's plural marahim and Korean's pluralized forms. Found especially in Chronicles' summaries of royal reigns (2 Chr 32:32; 35:26). MORAL GOODNESS

en: (His-steadfast-love), (of-His-covenant-loyalties), His-lovingkindnesses | es: (sus-misericordias), Las-misericordias-de, Misericordias-de | fr: bonté, et-bonté, mes-bontés | de: Gnade, Guete, dein-Gnade 2Chr 6:42; 2Chr 32:32; 2Chr 35:26; Neh 13:14; Ps 17:7

4. Mercy, compassion (7×) The compassionate, mercy-focused dimension of chesed — 7 occurrences where the context foregrounds emotional tenderness and pity toward those in distress. In 1 Kgs 20:31 the Arameans appeal to Israel's kings as 'merciful kings'; in Lam 3:32 God's chesed follows his affliction. French miséricorde and Arabic rahma (with emphasis on womb-compassion) surface here rather than the loyalty/faithfulness vocabulary used elsewhere. MORAL GOODNESS

en: [his-lovingkindness], kindness, mercy | es: [su-misericordia], misericordia | fr: bonté, miséricorde | de: Gnade, Guete 1Kgs 20:31; Ezra 7:28; Ezra 9:9; Prov 11:17; Lam 3:32

5. Devotion, loyalty (5×) Human devotion and covenantal loyalty between persons — 5 occurrences emphasizing fidelity and steadfast commitment in personal relationships. Ruth's chesed toward Naomi (Ruth 3:10), Jonathan's appeal for chesed from David (1 Sam 20:15), and Jeremiah's nostalgic 'the chesed of your youth' (Jer 2:2) all center on human-to-human pledged loyalty. Arabic mahabbat ('committed love') and Swahili uaminifu ('faithfulness') mark the loyalty axis here, distinct from sense 2's broader kindness. MORAL GOODNESS

en: its-steadfast-love, kindness-your, lovingkindness-of | es: bondad-tuya, la-bondad-de, misericordia-de | fr: bonté, bonté-ton, sa-bonté | de: Gnade, Gnade-, Guete 1Sam 20:15; Ps 52:1; Isa 40:6; Jer 2:2; Jonah 2:8

6. Favor, grace (2×) Favorable regard or grace — only 2 occurrences, both in diaspora court settings. Esther finds chesed before the king's officer (Esth 2:9); Daniel finds chesed before his Babylonian overseer (Dan 1:9). The context is closer to 'favor' or 'grace' than to covenantal love, and Arabic huzwa/ni'ma ('favor, grace') and Swahili neema ('unmerited favor') confirm this as a distinct peripheral sense. MORAL GOODNESS

en: favor, to-favor | es: gracia, para-favor | fr: bonté | de: Gnade, Guete Esth 2:9; Dan 1:9

חֶסֶד H2617b N-ms (2×)

shame, disgrace; shameful thing or reproach

This homonym of the common word for 'covenant loyalty' (חֶסֶד) instead means 'shame' or 'disgrace.' It appears only twice: Leviticus 20:17 declares incest 'a shameful thing,' and Proverbs 14:34 states that 'sin is a reproach to peoples.' The semantic shift from kindness to shame remains puzzling—some scholars posit a connection through 'excess zeal' leading to shameful behavior.

(2×) Leviticus 20:17 uses the term as a predicate: 'it is a disgrace' (חֶסֶד הוּא). Proverbs 14:34 contrasts righteousness exalting a nation with sin being its reproach. Interestingly, several modern translations (French 'bonté', German 'Güte' = goodness) appear to confuse this with חֶסֶד I (covenant love), missing the negative sense entirely. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: but-sin, disgrace | es: vergüenza, y-misericordia-de | fr: déshonneur, et-bonté | de: disgrace, und-Guete Lev 20:17; Prov 14:34

בֶּן־חֶסֶד H2618

personal name meaning 'son of mercy' — an officer of Solomon

This theophoric personal name appears in 1 Kings 4:10 as one of Solomon's twelve district officers responsible for provisioning the royal household. The name literally means 'son of mercy' or 'son of chesed,' embodying the Hebrew concept of covenant loyalty and kindness. Such names in ancient Israel often reflected parental piety or aspirations for the child's character, and the chesed element connects to one of the most theologically rich words in Hebrew Scripture.

וְחַסַדְיָה H2619 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Hasadiah (personal name: 'Yahweh is kind')

This theophoric name means 'Yahweh is kind' or 'Yah has shown kindness,' combining חֶסֶד (kindness) with the divine name. It appears in 1 Chronicles 3:20 as one of the sons of Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah who led the return from Babylonian exile. The name reflects post-exilic piety and gratitude for God's covenant faithfulness in preserving the Davidic line.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 3:20 lists Hasadiah among the seven sons of Zerubbabel in the royal genealogy. The multilingual glosses preserve the conjunction plus name: 'and-Hasadiah' (English), 'y-Jasadya' (Spanish). The genealogical context places this name in the critical post-exilic period when the Davidic dynasty was being reconstituted. The name itself serves as a testimony to God's hesed (loyal love) in maintaining His covenant promises despite exile and judgment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chasadyah | es: y-Jasadya | fr: [וחסדיה] | de: [וחסדיה] 1Chr 3:20

חָסָה H2620 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (37×)

to seek refuge, take shelter — predominantly used of trusting in God as one's protective hiding place

Chasah is a verb of vivid physical imagery — to flee for cover, to duck under protective wings — that the Psalms have made into one of the Hebrew Bible's most intimate expressions of trust in God. Of its 37 occurrences, the overwhelming majority appear in poetry, especially the Psalms, where the worshiper 'takes refuge' under God's wings (Ps 57:2; 91:4) or in his name (Ps 17:7; 36:8). The word's emotional register sets it apart from synonyms like batach ('trust') and qawah ('hope'): chasah conveys urgency and vulnerability, the desperate dive of someone fleeing danger into a safe embrace. Ruth 2:12 captures this beautifully when Boaz blesses Ruth for coming 'to take refuge under the wings of the God of Israel.' The sole negative use appears in Deuteronomy 32:37, where Israel is mocked for having sought refuge in false gods.

take refuge, seek shelter (37×) To seek refuge or take shelter, expressing trust and dependence by fleeing to a protector. Nearly all occurrences describe the act of seeking divine protection, with God portrayed as fortress, rock, or sheltering bird. The participial form chosim ('those who take refuge') functions as a virtual title for the faithful (Ps 2:12; 5:12; 17:7; 34:9; Na 1:7). Jotham's fable uniquely applies the verb to trees: 'come, take refuge in my shade' (Judg 9:15). The Spanish 'refugiarse,' French 'se refugier,' and German 'Zuflucht nehmen' all capture the reflexive-physical metaphor of fleeing to shelter. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: I-have-taken-refuge, I-take-refuge, I-will-take-refuge | es: los-que-se-refugian, me-he-refugiado, me-refugiaré | fr: le-ceux-prenant-refuge, le-se-réfugier, se-réfugier | de: Zuflucht, der-die-nehmend-refuge, lass-mich-nehmen-Zuflucht Deut 32:37; Judg 9:15; Ruth 2:12; 2Sam 22:3; 2Sam 22:31

חֹסָה H2621 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Hosah; (1) a Levitical gatekeeper in David's time; (2) a town in the territory of Asher

Hosah serves as both a personal name and a place name, deriving from the root meaning 'refuge' or 'to take shelter.' As a person, Hosah was one of the Levitical doorkeepers appointed by David for the temple service (1 Chr 16:38; 26:10, 11, 16), entrusted with guarding the western gate. As a place, Hosah appears in the boundary description of Asher's tribal allotment (Josh 19:29), though its exact location remains unidentified. The Septuagint readings vary considerably (Iasif, Sousa, Osa), suggesting early uncertainty about the toponym.

(5×) Hosah, a proper name meaning 'refuge.' Designates (a) a Merarite Levite appointed as a gatekeeper under David, assigned to the western Shalleketh gate (1 Chr 16:38; 26:10, 11, 16), and (b) a border town in the tribal territory of Asher (Josh 19:29) whose site is unknown. The Spanish renderings 'Hosa' and French 'Chosah' preserve the aspirated initial consonant, while the divergent Septuagint forms suggest the place name was already obscure to Greek translators. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: And-to-Chosah, Chosah, and-Hosah | es: Y-para-Hosa, a-Hosa, para-Hosa | fr: Chosah, [וחסה], [ולחסה] | de: Chosah, [וחסה], [ולחסה] Josh 19:29; 1Chr 16:38; 1Chr 26:10; 1Chr 26:11; 1Chr 26:16

חֲסוּת H2622 Conj-w (1×)

and the shelter, refuge, protection

This noun denotes refuge or shelter, a place of safety from danger. Isaiah 30:3 uses it in parallel with 'stronghold' to describe Egypt's protection—which the prophet declares will become shame and disgrace. The word comes from the root חָסָה (seek refuge, trust), commonly used of taking shelter under God's wings. Here, ironically, it describes misplaced trust in a human alliance that will prove futile.

(1×) Isaiah 30:3 condemns reliance on 'the shelter of Egypt's shadow' as misplaced trust that will turn to shame. The multilingual glosses (English 'and-the-shelter,' Spanish 'y-el-refugio') emphasize protection-seeking. The verse pairs 'stronghold of Pharaoh' with 'shelter in Egypt's shadow,' using language typically reserved for God as Israel's refuge. This ironic use highlights the folly of seeking from Egypt what only Yahweh can provide—true security. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: and-the-shelter | es: y-el-refugio | fr: [והחסות] | de: [והחסות] Isa 30:3

חָסִיד H2623 Conj-w / N-mpc / 2ms (34×)

Faithful, godly, pious — one who practices covenant loyalty (chesed); of God: gracious and merciful

The adjective חָסִיד is built directly on the noun חֶסֶד ('covenant loyalty, steadfast love') and describes the person who actively practices that quality. In the Psalms especially, the חֲסִידִים ('the faithful ones' or 'saints') are God's devoted community who receive his protection and are called to praise him (Ps 149:1, 5). As an individual epithet, it describes the godly person who mirrors God's own loyalty — 'with the faithful you show yourself faithful' (2 Sam 22:26 / Ps 18:25). Most remarkably, the word is applied to God himself at Psalm 145:17 and Jeremiah 3:12, where he is declared חָסִיד — gracious, merciful, the very source of the chesed his people are called to embody.

1. faithful ones / saints (community) (21×) The faithful ones or saints as a community — the collective body of God's covenant people, always in the plural and typically with possessive suffixes ('his faithful ones,' 'your saints'). Psalm 37:28 promises that the LORD 'does not forsake his faithful ones'; Psalm 149:1 calls the חֲסִידִים to sing a new song; and 1 Samuel 2:9 declares that 'he will guard the feet of his faithful ones.' Spanish 'piadosos/fieles,' French 'fidèles,' and German 'Heiligen/Frommen' confirm the communal, devotional sense. FAITH AND TRUST

en: His-faithful-ones, My-faithful-ones, Your-faithful-ones | es: (sus-piadosos), [sus-piadosos], a-fieles-de-ti | fr: Son-fidèle-ceux, [וחסידיך], et-fidèle | de: [(חסידיו)], [[חסידו]], [וחסידיך] 1Sam 2:9; 2Chr 6:41; Ps 30:4; Ps 31:23; Ps 37:28

2. faithful/godly one (individual) (11×) A single godly or faithful individual — the substantive adjective used of one person who embodies covenant loyalty and piety before God. David is addressed as God's חָסִיד at Psalm 89:19; the psalmist appeals to his own status as חָסִיד at Psalm 86:2; and 2 Samuel 22:26 describes the reciprocal principle: 'with the faithful one (חָסִיד) you deal faithfully.' Deuteronomy 33:8 applies the term to the priestly tribe: 'your Thummim and Urim belong to your godly one.' The individual use highlights personal devotion rather than collective identity. FAITH AND TRUST

en: [ketiv-His-faithful-one], a-faithful-one, faithful | es: [su-piadoso], a-tu-santo, al-piadoso | fr: [ketiv-Son-fidèle-one], fidèle, pieux | de: [ketiv-His-faithful-one], [חסיד], dein-heilig-einer Deut 33:8; 1Sam 2:9; 2Sam 22:26; Ps 4:3; Ps 12:1

3. gracious / merciful (divine attribute) (2×) A divine attribute: gracious, merciful, kind — applied to God himself rather than to human beings. Psalm 145:17 declares 'the LORD is righteous in all his ways and חָסִיד in all his works,' and Jeremiah 3:12 has God say 'I am חָסִיד.' Here the adjective ascends from describing the human practitioner of chesed to its ultimate source. Spanish 'misericordioso' and English 'gracious' in these passages reflect the theological shift from creature to Creator as the subject of covenant faithfulness. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: and-faithful, gracious | es: misericordioso, y-fiel | fr: [חסיד], et-fidèle | de: [חסיד], und-treu Ps 145:17; Jer 3:12

חֲסִידָה H2624 Conj-w (6×)

The stork; a large migratory wading bird, named from the root meaning 'faithful, loyal' for its devoted parenting.

The feminine noun chasidah designates the stork, etymologically derived from chesed ('loyal love'), reflecting ancient observation of the bird's devoted care for its young – a connection the Latin name pietaticultrix also captures. Listed among unclean birds in the dietary laws (Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18), the stork appears as a creature of reliable seasonal migration in Jeremiah 8:7 – shaming Israel who fails to 'know the appointed times.' In Psalm 104:17 it nests in the fir trees, and in Zechariah 5:9 two women with stork-like wings carry the ephah of wickedness away.

the stork (6×) The stork, a large migratory wading bird classified as ritually unclean (Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18). Spanish 'cigueña' and English 'stork' converge on a single zoological referent. The bird's association with parental devotion (from the root ch-s-d, 'loyalty') makes Jeremiah's irony pointed: even the stork knows its seasons, but God's people do not know his ordinances (Jer 8:7). In Ps 104:17 it inhabits the treetops; in Zech 5:9 its broad wings become a prophetic image. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-the-stork, the-stork | es: cigüeña, la-cigüeña, y-la-cigüeña | fr: [חסידה], cigogne, et-le-stork | de: [החסידה], [חסידה], der-stork Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18; Job 39:13; Ps 104:17; Jer 8:7

חָסִיל H2625 Prep-l (6×)

A species of locust (collective), consistently associated with devastating agricultural destruction and divine judgment.

The masculine noun chasil refers to a specific type of locust, always collective and always destructive. It appears exclusively in contexts of agricultural plague and divine judgment – the locust swarms of Joel 1:4 and 2:25, the covenant curses of 1 Kings 8:37 and 2 Chronicles 6:28, and the gathering of spoil 'like the gathering of the chasil' in Isaiah 33:4. The exact species remains debated, but the word consistently parallels arbeh (the common locust) and yeleq (the creeping locust), suggesting a particular stage or variety within the locust family.

destroying locust (6×) A destructive species or stage of locust, always appearing as an agent of crop devastation. Spanish renders it variously as 'saltamontes' (grasshopper) and 'destructor' (destroyer), while English traditions waver between 'caterpillar' and 'destroying locust.' The word always parallels other locust terms – arbeh and yeleq in Joel 1:4; 2:25, and arbeh alone in 1 Kgs 8:37 and Ps 78:46. Isaiah 33:4 uses its swarming and gathering behavior as a simile for the plundering of Assyria's spoil. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: and-caterpillar, and-the-destroying-locust, caterpillar | es: al-saltamontes, el-destructor, la-oruga | fr: [החסיל], [וחסיל], caterpillar | de: [החסיל], [והחסיל], [וחסיל] 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 6:28; Ps 78:46; Isa 33:4; Joel 1:4

חָסִין H2626 Adj-ms (1×)

strong, mighty, powerful

This adjective describes strength or might, appearing as an Aramaism in poetic Hebrew. Psalm 89:8 uses it in a rhetorical question about God's incomparable power: 'Who is mighty like You, O Yahweh?' The word emphasizes divine strength and sovereignty, particularly in the context of God's faithfulness to His covenant. The Aramaic flavor suggests the psalm's antiquity or its incorporation of broader Semitic poetic traditions.

(1×) Psalm 89:8 (verse 9 in some versions) asks, 'Who is mighty like You, O Yah?' celebrating God's unmatched strength. The multilingual glosses (English 'mighty,' Spanish 'poderoso,' German 'mächtig') all emphasize power and strength. French 'manquer' (to lack) appears anomalous. The context is God's faithfulness surrounded by His heavenly council—His might is both cosmic and covenantal. The rhetorical question expects the answer: no one is mighty like Yahweh. POWER AND ABILITY

en: mighty | es: poderoso | fr: manquer | de: mächtig Ps 89:8

חַסַר H2627 Adj-ms (1×)

lacking, wanting, deficient, found wanting

This Aramaic adjective means 'lacking' or 'deficient,' appearing in Daniel's interpretation of the handwriting on the wall. Daniel 5:27 pronounces judgment on Belshazzar: 'You have been weighed on the scales and found wanting.' The term captures the divine verdict that the king's life and reign fall short of the required standard. It's the participial form of the Aramaic equivalent to Hebrew חָסַר (be lacking).

(1×) Daniel 5:27 delivers the devastating verdict: 'TEKEL—you have been weighed in the balances and found lacking.' The multilingual glosses (English 'lacking,' Spanish 'falto,' French 'incomplet') all convey deficiency or inadequacy. The metaphor is judicial—God has measured Belshazzar's moral and spiritual weight and found it wanting. That very night, the prophecy is fulfilled and Belshazzar is killed. The term crystallizes the moment of divine judgment when a life is assessed and found deficient. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: lacking | es: falto | fr: incomplet | de: [חסיר] Dan 5:27

חָסַל H2628 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 3mse (1×)

consume, devour, finish off, destroy completely

This verb means to consume or finish off completely, used of locusts devouring crops. The Aramaic cognate means 'come to an end' or 'bring to an end.' Deuteronomy 28:38 uses it in a covenant curse: the locust will consume the harvest, leaving nothing for the disobedient. The term emphasizes total destruction—not partial damage but complete consumption, leaving the farmer with nothing to gather.

(1×) Deuteronomy 28:38 warns that 'the locust will consume it' (the harvest), part of the curses for covenant disobedience. The multilingual glosses (English 'consumes-it,' Spanish 'la-consumirá,' French/German 'consumes-cela/es') emphasize total destruction. The context describes futile labor: you'll plant much but harvest little because the locust finishes off everything. The verb captures the voraciousness and completeness of the devastation—nothing survives the swarm. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: consumes-it | es: la-consumirá | fr: consumes-cela | de: consumes-es Deut 28:38

חָסַם H2629 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (2×)

muzzle, stop up; bind shut or block

This verb means to muzzle or obstruct. Deuteronomy 25:4 prohibits muzzling an ox while it treads grain—a humane law Paul later applies to ministers' right to support (1 Corinthians 9:9). Ezekiel 39:11 uses the term for blocking or stopping up a valley, though the text is uncertain. The root sense involves binding or constraining, whether an animal's mouth or a physical passage.

(2×) The Qal imperfect in Deuteronomy 25:4 forbids muzzling the working ox, while the participle in Ezekiel 39:11 likely describes blocking a pass or valley. Spanish 'pondrás bozal' (you shall muzzle) and 'cerrará' (will close) distinguish the two applications. The Ezekiel text is textually difficult, as BDB notes. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: and-blocking, you-shall-muzzle | es: pondrás-bozal, y-cerrará | fr: et-museler, tu-devra-muzzle | de: [וחסמת], du-soll-muzzle Deut 25:4; Ezek 39:11

חסן H2630 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

be hoarded, stored up, treasured, accumulated

This Niphal verb means 'be hoarded' or 'stored up,' appearing in Isaiah 23:18 in a prophecy about Tyre's wealth. The root is related to Aramaic and Syriac words for strength and possession. Isaiah declares that Tyre's merchandise will not be hoarded but instead dedicated to the Lord, to feed those who dwell before Him. The passive form emphasizes wealth set aside rather than circulated or used.

(1×) Isaiah 23:18 prophesies that Tyre's gain 'will not be hoarded or stored up' but will go to those dwelling before Yahweh for food and fine clothing. The multilingual glosses (English 'it-will-be-hoarded,' Spanish 'será-almacenado') emphasize accumulation and storage. The verse reverses typical economic behavior—instead of amassing wealth, Tyre's riches will flow to God's people. The term highlights the contrast between selfish hoarding and generous provision. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: it-will-be-hoarded | es: será-almacenado | fr: [יחסן] | de: [יחסן] Isa 23:18

חָסַן H2631 V-Hifil-Perf-3mp (2×)

take possession of, possess; acquire or inherit (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel 7, describing the saints of the Most High receiving and possessing the kingdom. The Hafel stem (causative) suggests they are given possession or caused to take hold of it. Related to Hebrew חָסַן (be strong), the Aramaic development emphasizes acquisition and ownership rather than mere strength.

(2×) Daniel 7:18 and 7:22 both describe the saints 'possessing' or 'receiving' the kingdom. The Hafel perfect and imperfect forms suggest both completed and future possession. Spanish 'poseyeron/poseerán' (possessed/will possess) maintains the temporal distinction. French 'amasser' (gather, amass) may reflect the accumulation sense. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-will-possess, possessed | es: poseyeron, y-poseerán | fr: amasser, et-amasser | de: [והחסנו], [ויחסנון] Dan 7:18; Dan 7:22

חֹסֶן H2632 N-msc / 1cs (2×)

power, might; royal or sovereign power (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun denotes royal power or might, appearing in Daniel's visions. In Daniel 2:37, the king of Babylon is addressed as recipient of divine sovereignty and power. In Daniel 4:30, Nebuchadnezzar boasts of building Babylon 'by the might of my power.' The term emphasizes the authority and strength inherent in kingship.

(2×) Daniel 2:37 lists 'the power' (emphatic state חֲסָנָא) among the gifts God gave Nebuchadnezzar, while 4:30 has the king claim 'my power' (חֲסָנִי with first-person suffix). Spanish 'el poder/mi poder' (the power/my power) mirrors the Hebrew emphasis and possessive forms. French and German transliterate the Aramaic. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: my-power, the-power | es: el-poder, mi-poder | fr: [חסנא], [חסני] | de: [חסנא], [חסני] Dan 2:37; Dan 4:30

חֹסֶן H2633 N-ms (5×)

wealth, treasure, stored riches; figuratively, an abundance of divine provision

Chosen denotes accumulated wealth and stored treasure, used both of material riches and of God's saving provisions. Proverbs 15:6 contrasts the 'great treasure' in the righteous person's house with the trouble that plagues the wicked's income. Jeremiah 20:5 applies it concretely to the plundered wealth of Jerusalem. Most strikingly, Isaiah 33:6 transforms the concept into spiritual abundance: 'a wealth of salvations, wisdom, and knowledge.' Spanish 'riqueza' and French 'tresor' together capture the material-to-spiritual semantic arc.

(5×) Wealth, treasure, stored riches. Refers to material abundance possessed by individuals (Prov 15:6, paired with 'great'; Prov 27:24, parallel to 'crown') or cities (Jer 20:5, the treasure of Jerusalem, alongside 'toil' and 'precious things'). Ezekiel 22:25 connects it with preciousness gained through violence. Isaiah 33:6 extends it figuratively to divine provision: 'a wealth of salvations, wisdom, and knowledge.' The Spanish 'riqueza/fortaleza' and French 'tresor' together reflect both material and metaphorical registers. MIXED MULTITUDE

en: a-wealth, has-much-treasure, treasure | es: fortaleza-de, riqueza, riqueza-de | fr: [חסן], trésor, חסן | de: [חסן] Prov 15:6; Prov 27:24; Isa 33:6; Jer 20:5; Ezek 22:25

חָסֹן H2634 Art / Adj-ms (2×)

strong, mighty; powerful in physical strength

This adjective describes physical strength. In Isaiah 1:31, 'the strong one' will burn like tinder along with his works. In Amos 2:9, the prophet recalls the Amorites as 'strong as oaks' with height like cedars. The term emphasizes raw physical power and imposing stature, often in contexts where such strength proves inadequate before God.

(2×) Isaiah 1:31 uses the substantival form 'the strong one' (הֶחָסֹן) for a powerful person whose strength cannot save him. Amos 2:9 employs the adjective to describe the Amorite's oak-like strength. Spanish 'el fuerte/y fuerte' (the strong/and strong) and German forms with the article show both attributive and substantival uses. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-strong, the-strong | es: el-fuerte, y-fuerte | fr: [החסן], et-fort | de: [החסן], [וחסן] Isa 1:31; Amos 2:9

חֶסֶף H2635 Conj-w / N-msd (9×)

Clay, potsherd; Aramaic noun for ceramic material, used exclusively in Nebuchadnezzar's statue vision (Dan 2).

This Aramaic noun denotes clay or ceramic material and appears exclusively in Daniel chapter 2, where it describes the feet and toes of Nebuchadnezzar's great statue – partly iron, partly clay. The mixture of strong iron with brittle clay becomes the prophet's key image for a divided kingdom that cannot hold together (Dan 2:41-43). The word has cognates across the Semitic languages: Syriac for 'potsherd,' Assyrian for 'clay vessel,' and even Arabic for 'pottery,' showing how fundamental this material was to ancient Near Eastern life.

clay, potsherd clay (9×) Clay or ceramic material, referring specifically to the earthenware substance that forms part of the composite feet in Nebuchadnezzar's dream-statue. Spanish translates consistently as 'barro' (clay), French as 'argile,' and German as 'Ton,' all capturing the basic material sense. All nine occurrences cluster in Daniel 2:33-45, where the clay is contrasted with iron to symbolize a kingdom that is partly strong and partly fragile. The phrase 'clay of potter' (hasap di pehar, Dan 2:41) specifies fired ceramic, while 'clay of mud' (hasap tina, Dan 2:41, 43) emphasizes its earthy, breakable nature. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: and-clay, clay, the-clay | es: barro, con-barro, el-barro | fr: argile, et-l'argile, l'argile | de: Ton, der-Ton, in-Ton Dan 2:33; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:35; Dan 2:41

חֲסַפָּס H2636 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
flaky, scale-like, thin layers (like scales)
This rare participle describes something 'scaled off' or 'scale-like,' appearing only in Exodus 16:14 to characterize the manna that appeared in the wilderness. The description is 'a fine, flaky thing, fine as frost on the ground.' The word suggests thin layers or flakes, like fish scales or frost crystals. The reduplicative form intensifies the meaning, emphasizing the delicate, layered texture of this mysterious bread from heaven.

(1×) Exodus 16:14 describes the manna as 'a fine, flaky thing, fine as the hoar-frost on the ground.' The multilingual glosses (English/French/German 'flaky,' Spanish 'escamoso' meaning scaly) capture the layered, scale-like texture. The double description ('fine... fine as frost') emphasizes delicacy and smallness. The term helps explain why the Israelites asked 'What is it?' (mān hû)—this bread from heaven had an unusual, crystalline, flake-like appearance unlike ordinary bread. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES
en: flaky | es: escamoso | fr: flaky | de: flaky Exod 16:14

חָסַר H2637 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (21×)
To lack, be in want, decrease; in Hifil, to cause lack or withhold; in Piel, to make lower or deprive
A verb of deficiency and diminishment that runs through Israel's wilderness narratives and wisdom literature alike. In its Qal stem it simply means to lack or be without, as when Moses reminds Israel 'you lacked nothing' during forty years of wandering (Deut 2:7). The same form describes the flood waters decreasing (Gen 8:3, 5). The Hifil causative means to cause lack or withhold, as when God arranges that no one gathering manna had too little (Exod 16:18). The Piel carries the striking sense of 'making lower,' as in Psalm 8:5 where humanity is made 'a little lower than the angels.' Spanish distinguishes 'carecer' (to lack) from 'hacer faltar' (to cause to lack), mirroring the stem-based semantic shifts.

1. lack, be in want (15×) The core Qal sense: to lack, be in want, be without. This covers both material need (Deut 15:8, 'whatever he lacks') and existential assurance (Ps 23:1, the related noun). Deuteronomy 2:7 and Nehemiah 9:21 use it in Israel's wilderness retrospective—'you lacked nothing'—while Proverbs 31:11 applies it to the household of a virtuous wife. Spanish 'carecer' and French 'manquer' consistently render it as simple absence or deficiency. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: I-shall-want, he-lacks, lack | es: carecerán, careceré, carecieron | fr: –manquer, [חסרו], [חסרנו] | de: [חסרו], [חסרנו], [יחסר] Gen 18:28; Deut 2:7; Deut 8:9; Deut 15:8; 1Kgs 17:14

2. cause to lack, withhold (2×) The Hifil causative sense: to cause to lack or withhold. In Exodus 16:18 the manna miracle is described so that the one who gathered little 'did not lack,' where the Hifil implies divine provision preventing deficit. Isaiah 32:6 uses it for the wicked who withhold drink from the thirsty. Spanish 'hacer faltar' and French forms with causative nuance capture the agent-directed deprivation. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: he-withholds, lacked | es: faltó, hará-faltar | fr: [יחסיר], manqua | de: [יחסיר], lacked Exod 16:18; Isa 32:6

3. decrease, diminish (2×) The Qal sense of physical decrease or diminishment, applied to natural phenomena. Genesis 8:3 and 8:5 describe the flood waters 'decreasing' and 'continually diminishing.' Spanish 'disminuir' and German 'abnehmen' (to diminish) render this as a measurable, gradual reduction in quantity—distinct from personal need or moral deprivation. DECREASE DIMINISH
en: and-decreased, and-decreasing | es: y-disminuyendo, y-disminuyeron | fr: et-decreasing, et-diminua | de: und-abnehmend, und-es-nahmen-ab Gen 8:3; Gen 8:5

4. make lower, deprive (2×) The Piel intensive-causative sense: to make lower or actively deprive someone. Psalm 8:5 famously declares that God made humanity 'a little lower than the heavenly beings,' using this stem to convey deliberate positioning in the cosmic hierarchy. Ecclesiastes 4:8 applies it to self-deprivation, depriving one's soul of good. German and Spanish renderings wrestle with the dual force of lowering rank and withholding blessing. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: and-depriving, yet-you-made-him-a-little-lower | es: Y-lo-hiciste-menor, y-privo | fr: et-manquer | de: [ומחסר], doch-du-gemacht-ihn-ein-little-lower Ps 8:5; Eccl 4:8

חָסֵר H2638 Adj-msc (19×)
Lacking, in want of, deficient: one who is without something essential, especially sense or understanding.
Ḥāsēr describes a person or thing that is deficient or in want. Its most distinctive biblical usage is the Proverbs construction ḥăsar-lēḇ, 'lacking heart'—that is, devoid of sense, judgment, or moral discernment. This phrase recurs nearly a dozen times in Proverbs to characterize the fool who falls into adultery (6:32), the naive youth who wanders into temptation (7:7), and the sluggard whose field is overgrown (24:30). Beyond Proverbs, David asks Achish 'am I in want of madmen?' (1 Sam 21:15), and Ecclesiastes 6:2 describes a man who lacks nothing yet cannot enjoy it. Spanish 'falto de,' French 'manquant,' and German 'Mangel' all capture the core deficit.

lacking, in want of (19×) Adjective describing one who is deficient, needy, or deprived of something, typically in construct with the thing lacking. The dominant biblical pattern is ḥăsar-lēḇ ('lacking heart/sense'), appearing repeatedly in Proverbs (6:32; 7:7; 9:4, 16; 10:13; 11:12; 12:11; 15:21; 17:18; 24:30) to denote foolish moral blindness. In 1 Sam 21:15 David uses it rhetorically: 'am I lacking madmen?' In Eccl 6:2 a man is described as not lacking anything yet unable to enjoy his wealth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-he-who-lacks, but-lacks, for-lack-of | es: falta, falto, falto-de | fr: dans-manquant, et-manquant, lacked | de: Mangel, in-Mangel, lacked 1Sam 21:15; 2Sam 3:29; 1Kgs 11:22; 1Kgs 17:16; Prov 6:32

חֶסֶר H2639 N-ms (2×)
want, poverty, lack; state of deprivation or need
This noun denotes want or poverty. Job 30:3 describes the destitute fleeing to the wilderness 'in want and hunger,' while Proverbs 28:22 warns that the greedy person's stinginess will bring 'want upon him.' The term is always absolute (never in construct), suggesting it functions as an abstract substantive for the condition of lacking necessities.

(2×) Job 30:3 pairs this noun with 'hunger' (רָעָב) to describe extreme deprivation, using the prepositional phrase 'in want' (בְּחֶסֶר). Proverbs 28:22 makes it the subject: 'want shall come to him.' Spanish 'por carencia/escasez' (by lack/scarcity) and German 'in Mangel/Mangel' (in want/want) capture both the state and the experience of poverty. LACK WANT POVERTY
en: in-want, want | es: Por-carencia, escasez | fr: dans-חסר ,בחסר | de: Mangel, in-Mangel Job 30:3; Prov 28:22

חֹסֶר H2640 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)
lack, want, deficiency
A noun expressing want or deficiency, appearing in contexts of severe deprivation. Deuteronomy uses it twice to describe the extreme conditions of siege warfare, when people lack everything necessary for survival. Amos employs it in the striking phrase 'cleanness of teeth,' meaning famine—the lack of food to stain one's teeth. The term emphasizes not mere scarcity but complete absence of basic necessities. It describes conditions of desperate need and total deprivation.

(3×) Complete lack or want of basic necessities. Deuteronomy 28:48, 57 portray siege conditions with 'lack of everything,' including food and basic provisions, driving people to cannibalism. Amos 4:6 uses the euphemistic 'lack of bread' (literally 'cleanness of teeth') to describe famine God sent as a wake-up call. The consistent translations (Spanish escasez/falta, French pauvreté, English lack) emphasize severe deprivation rather than mild shortage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-in-lack-of, and-lack-of, in-lack-of- | es: en-escasez-de, y-en-falta-de,

y-falta-de | fr: dans-lack-de-, et-dans-lack-de, et-pauvreté | de: in-lack-von-, und-Mangel, und-in-lack-von Deut 28:48; Deut 28:57; Amos 4:6

חַסְרָה H2641 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hasrah (personal name, grandfather of Shallum)

This personal name appears in 2 Chronicles 34:22 as the grandfather of Shallum, husband of Huldah the prophetess. It's a variant of Harhas found in the parallel passage in 2 Kings 22:14. Such variant spellings are common in genealogical records preserved in different textual traditions. The name likely relates to craftsmanship or artisanship, though the exact etymology is uncertain.

(1×) 2 Chronicles 34:22 identifies Hasrah in the genealogy of Shallum the keeper of the wardrobe, whose wife Huldah delivered the prophetic word to King Josiah. The multilingual glosses preserve the name: English 'Hasrah,' Spanish 'Jasrah.' The parallel in 2 Kings 22:14 has Harhas instead, a common type of textual variation in genealogies. The significance is in the connection to Huldah, one of the few named female prophets in Scripture. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hasrah | es: Jasrah | fr: [חסרה] | de: [חסרה] 2Chr 34:22

חֶסְרוֹן H2642 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

and (that which is) lacking, deficiency, what is missing

This noun denotes something lacking or a deficiency. Ecclesiastes 1:15 uses it in a wisdom saying about the limits of human effort: 'What is lacking cannot be counted.' The term emphasizes absence or deficiency that cannot be remedied by human calculation or effort. It comes from the root חָסַר (be lacking, decrease), and captures the Preacher's theme of human limitation and the frustration of trying to fix what is fundamentally broken.

(1×) Ecclesiastes 1:15 states: 'What is crooked cannot be made straight, and what is lacking cannot be numbered.' The multilingual glosses (English 'and-lacking,' Spanish 'y-lo-que-falta,' French 'et-manque') emphasize deficiency or absence. The parallelism pairs something twisted (which can't be straightened) with something absent (which can't be counted). The Preacher's point is existential: some deficiencies in the human condition cannot be remedied by wisdom or effort. LACK AND DEFICIENCY

en: and-lacking | es: y-lo-que-falta | fr: et-manque | de: [וחסרון] Eccl 1:15

חַף H2643 Adj-ms (1×)

clean, innocent, pure (morally)

This adjective denotes moral cleanness or innocence. Job 33:9 records Elihu quoting Job's claim of innocence: 'I am clean, without transgression; I am pure, there is no iniquity in me.' The word emphasizes moral purity and freedom from guilt. It appears in Elihu's somewhat tendentious summary of Job's protests, suggesting Job has claimed absolute innocence—a claim Elihu will challenge in the following verses.

(1×) Job 33:9 has Elihu quote Job's self-defense: 'I am pure, without transgression, I am clean.' The multilingual glosses show 'clean' (English), 'limpio' (Spanish), while French and German simply transliterate. The term is parallel to 'pure' (זָךְ) in the verse, both emphasizing moral innocence. Elihu uses this quotation to set up his argument that Job has overreached in claiming sinlessness. The vocabulary here is from the domain of ritual and moral purity. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: clean | es: limpio | fr: חף | de: [חף] Job 33:9

חָפְאוּ H2644 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

and they covered, did secretly, concealed their actions

This Piel verb means 'do secretly' or 'cover' actions, appearing in 2 Kings 17:9 describing Israel's covert idolatry. The text says they 'did things secretly' against the Lord, building high places and setting up pillars. The root may be related to חָפָה (cover), suggesting concealment or secrecy. The term emphasizes the hidden nature of Israel's apostasy—they knew it was wrong, so they hid it.

(1×) 2 Kings 17:9 condemns the Israelites who 'did things secretly against the Lord their God,' building unauthorized worship sites. The multilingual glosses vary: English 'and-they-covered,' Spanish 'hicieron-en-secreto' (did in secret), French/German 'they-covered.' The context lists Israel's sins that led to exile: secret worship, idols, divination. The secrecy implies consciousness of guilt—they hid their actions because they knew they violated the covenant. The verb captures both the concealment and the covert rebellion. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: and-they-covered | es: Y-hicieron-en-secreto | fr: et-ils-couvrit | de: und-sie-bedeckte 2Kgs 17:9

חָפָה H2645 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3ms (12×)

To cover (the head, in grief or shame); to overlay or panel (a surface with gold or wood)

The verb ḥāpāh means 'to cover,' with its two main senses distinguished by verbal stem. In the Qal, it describes covering the head as an expression of grief, shame, or death-sentence — David ascending the Mount of Olives barefoot with his head covered (2 Sam 15:30), farmers covering their heads during drought (Jer 14:3–4), and Haman led away with covered head after his downfall (Esth 6:12; 7:8). In the Piel (intensive), the word shifts to a construction term: overlaying or paneling surfaces with gold, as in the Chronicler's detailed account of Solomon's temple where walls, beams, and the Most Holy Place are overlaid with fine gold (2 Chr 3:5–9). The Niphal participle appears once describing the silver-covered wings of a dove (Ps 68:13).

1. cover or be covered (7×) To cover or be covered, especially covering the head as a sign of grief, mourning, shame, or condemnation. In the Qal stem, the head (rōʾš) is the typical object: David and his followers cover their heads while fleeing Absalom (2 Sam 15:30), and Jeremiah describes drought-stricken farmers with covered heads (Jer 14:3–4). Esther 6:12 and 7:8 use the participle ḥăpūy rōʾš for Haman's disgrace and doom. Spanish 'cubrieron/cubierta' and the Niphal in Psalm 68:13 — dove wings 'covered' with silver — round out the passive and stative uses. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-cover, and-covered, covered | es: cubierta, cubiertas, cubrieron | fr: [וחפו], [וחפרי], [חפו] | de: [וחפו], [וחפוי], [חפו] 2Sam 15:30; Esth 6:12; Esth 7:8; Ps 68:13

2. overlay or panel (5×) To overlay or panel a surface with a material, used exclusively in the Piel stem for temple construction. The Chronicler describes Solomon overlaying (wayeḥap) the main hall with cypress and then with fine gold (2 Chr 3:5), and similarly the inner sanctuary, beams, thresholds, walls, and doors (2 Chr 3:7–9). Spanish 'cubrió/y-la-cubrió' and the repeated pattern of double accusative (surface + material) distinguish this architectural sense from the grief-covering Qal usage. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-he-overlaid, and-he-overlaid-it, he-overlaid | es: Y-cubrió, cubrió, y-la-cubrió | fr: [ויחף], [ויחפהו], [חפה] | de: [ויחף], [ויחפהו], [חפה] 2Chr 3:5; 2Chr 3:7; 2Chr 3:8; 2Chr 3:9

חֻפָּה H2646 Prep-m / N-fsc / 3fs (3×)

canopy, chamber (especially bridal chamber)

A covering or enclosed chamber, used metaphorically and literally. Isaiah describes a protective canopy over Zion's glory, while the Psalms and Joel use it for a bridegroom's or bride's chamber. The term emphasizes both covering (protection from above) and enclosure (intimate private space). In wedding contexts, it refers to the special chamber where bride and groom celebrate their union. The image combines ideas of shelter, privacy, honor, and celebration.

(3×) A canopy or bridal chamber providing covering and enclosure. Psalm 19:5 compares the sun emerging to a bridegroom 'from his chamber,' radiating joy and strength. Isaiah 4:5 promises that over Zion's glory there will be 'a canopy' for protection. Joel 2:16 summons even the bride 'from her canopy' to participate in national repentance. The dual sense (protective covering and intimate space) unifies these uses, with context determining emphasis. GEOGRAPHY

AND SPACE
en: canopy, from-her-canopy, from-his-chamber | es: de-dosel-de-ella, de-su-cámara, dosel | fr: [חפה], canopée, de-chambre | de: [חפה], [מחפתה], von-sein-chamber Ps 19:5; Isa 4:5; Joel 2:16

חֻפָּה H2647 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)
for Huppah (personal name, priest of the 13th course)
This personal name belongs to a priest who headed the thirteenth priestly course in David's organization of temple service. 1 Chronicles 24:13 lists him among the twenty-four divisions of priests. The name may be related to words for covering or canopy (חֻפָּה), though the connection is uncertain. The priestly courses rotated temple duties throughout the year, ensuring continuous service and distributing the honor among Levitical families.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 24:13 lists Huppah as head of the thirteenth lot among the priestly divisions established by David. The multilingual glosses preserve the prepositional phrase: 'for-Huppah' (English), 'para-Jupa' (Spanish). The organizational context shows David and Zadok arranging the descendants of Aaron into twenty-four courses for orderly temple service. Each division served two weeks per year. Huppah's name identifies his family line, which maintained this responsibility through generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: for-Chuppah | es: para-Jupa | fr: [לחפה] | de: [לחפה] 1Chr 24:13

חָפַז H2648 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (10×)
To hurry, make haste; also to flee in alarm or panic, to be startled or agitated by fear.
A verb spanning the spectrum from purposeful haste to terror-driven panic. At the milder end, it describes Mephibosheth's nurse hurrying to flee with the child (2 Sam 4:4) and the Arameans dropping their belongings in their rush to escape (2 Kgs 7:15). At the sharper end, it captures raw alarm: the psalmist's cry 'in my alarm I said, I am cut off' (Ps 31:23; 116:11), the kings who see Zion and 'flee in alarm' (Ps 48:5), and the waters that 'hurry away' at God's rebuke (Ps 104:7). Even the behemoth of Job 40:23 is described as unalarmed when the Jordan surges — a deliberate negation of this verb's panic connotation. Spanish neatly mirrors this range with 'apresurarse' (to hurry) versus 'huyeron' (they fled).

1. hurry, make haste (6×) To hurry, make haste, rush — general urgency of movement without necessarily implying fear. This covers the nurse's hurried flight with young Mephibosheth (2 Sam 4:4), David's pressing haste to escape Saul (1 Sam 23:26), the Aramean army's hasty retreat leaving garments strewn along the road (2 Kgs 7:15), and the instruction not to 'hurry' in battle-fear (Deut 20:3, where it stands alongside 'do not fear'). French and German translations often leave these forms transliterated, but Spanish consistently uses 'apresurarse/prisa' (hurry/haste). TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv], hurrying, in-her-hurrying | es: [en-su-prisa], apresurándose, en-apresurarse-ella | fr: [ketiv], dans-leur-haste, dans-sa-se-hâtant | de: [ketiv], du-soll-sein-in-haste, hurrying Deut 20:3; 1Sam 23:26; 2Sam 4:4; 2Kgs 7:15

2. flee in alarm or panic (4×) To be in alarm, flee in panic, be startled — emphasizing the emotional component of fear and agitation. The psalmist's 'in my alarm' (bechofzi, Ps 31:23; 116:11) expresses sudden, disorienting fear. Psalm 48:5 describes hostile kings who saw Zion and 'were alarmed, fled in terror' (Niphal), while Ps 104:7 pictures primordial waters fleeing at God's thunderous rebuke. Job 40:23 negates the sense — behemoth 'is not alarmed' even when the Jordan surges against its mouth. The shift from physical hurrying to existential panic is a natural Hebrew semantic extension from motion to the emotion driving it. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: in-my-alarm, it-is-alarmed, they-fled-in-alarm | es: en-mi-apresuramiento, huyeron, se-apresura | fr: dans-se-hâter, se-hâter | de: [יחפזו], in-mein-alarm, sie-floh-in-alarm Job 40:23; Ps 48:5; Ps 104:7; Ps 116:11

חִפָּזוֹן H2649 Prep-b / N-ms (3×)
haste, hurried flight, trepidation
Urgent haste or hurried flight, often with overtones of fear or trepidation. The word appears in contexts of rapid departure, whether fleeing danger or acting under pressure. Exodus uses it for Israel's hurried exodus from Egypt, when they had to eat the Passover ready to flee. Deuteronomy connects it with the bread of affliction, reminding Israel of their hasty escape. Isaiah contrasts Israel's future exodus with their Egyptian departure, promising they won't leave in haste or panic. The term captures both speed and the emotional urgency driving it.

(3×) Haste or hurried flight, typically under duress. Exodus 12:11 commands eating the Passover 'in haste,' ready for immediate departure from Egypt. Deuteronomy 16:3 identifies unleavened bread as 'bread of affliction' because they left Egypt 'in haste,' without time for bread to rise. Isaiah 52:12 promises the opposite for the future: 'you shall not go out in haste,' but with dignity and divine protection. All languages render it with haste/prisa/hâte, capturing the urgency involved. ALARM TERROR HASTE
en: in-haste | es: con-prisa | fr: [בחפזון], dans-haste, dans-hâte | de: [בחפזון], in-haste Exod 12:11; Deut 16:3; Isa 52:12

חֻפִּים H2650 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Huppim: son or descendant of Benjamin
A Benjamite name appearing in genealogical lists with some textual variation. The name appears in Genesis among those who went to Egypt with Jacob, and in Chronicles in more complex genealogical contexts. There is some confusion in the textual tradition between Huppim, Hupham, and related names, suggesting either textual variants or multiple individuals with similar names within Benjamin's lineage. The genealogical complexity reflects the challenges of preserving tribal records across generations and through various textual transmissions.

(3×) A Benjamite personal name with genealogical significance. Genesis 46:21 lists Huppim among Benjamin's sons who went to Egypt. 1 Chronicles 7:12, 15 include references to Huppim (and variant Hupham) in complex Benjamite genealogies, though with textual difficulties. The preposition variations (and-Huppim, for-Huppim) reflect the name's integration into different genealogical statements. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Spanish Jufim/Jupim, French/English Huppim) preserve the Hebrew consonantal framework despite uncertainties. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Chuppim, and-Huppim, for-Chuppim | es: para-Jufim, y-Jufim, y-Jupim | fr: [וחפם], [לחפים], et-Huppim | de: [וחפם], [לחפים], und-Chuppim Gen 46:21; 1Chr 7:12; 1Chr 7:15

חֹפֶן H2651 Prep-b / N-mdc / 3ms (6×)
The cupped hollow of the hands; always dual, denoting both hands together as a vessel for holding or scooping.
The noun chophen appears only in the dual form chophnayim, picturing two cupped hands held together as a natural vessel. Moses and Aaron fill their chophnayim with soot to fling toward heaven, triggering boils on Egypt (Exod 9:8). The high priest takes a chophnayim-full of incense into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:12). Agur's riddle asks who has gathered the wind in his fists (Prov 30:4), and Qoheleth declares that one handful with quietness surpasses two handfuls with toil (Eccl 4:6). The Aramaic and Ethiopic cognates confirm the concrete image of cupped palms.

hollow of the hand, fistful (6×) The hollow formed by two cupped hands together, always in dual form (chophnayim), used as a measure or container for grasping and holding material. Spanish 'puños' (fists) and English 'handfuls/fists' capture the concrete bodily image. In Exod 9:8 it holds furnace soot; in Lev 16:12 burning incense coals; in Prov 30:4 it is an impossible container for the wind; in Eccl 4:6 it measures the contrast between contentment and anxious toil. Ezekiel 10:2, 7 extends the image to the cherub's hands filling with coals. FLESH AND BODY en: handfuls-his, in-his-fists, palms-of | es: ambos-puños, en-sus-puños, manos-de | fr: dans-son-בחפניו-lui, handfuls-son, poignée | de: [בחפניו], [חפני], [חפניך] Exod 9:8; Lev 16:12; Prov 30:4; Eccl 4:6; Ezek 10:2

חָפְנִי H2652 N-proper-ms (5×)
Hophni; son of Eli the priest, whose corruption at Shiloh provoked divine judgment
Hophni was one of Eli's two sons who served as priests at Shiloh but notoriously abused their office. Their story in 1 Samuel is one of priestly corruption met by divine judgment: they took sacrificial meat by force and treated the Lord's offering with contempt. The prophecy that both Hophni and Phinehas would die on the same day (1 Sam 2:34) was fulfilled at the battle of Aphek when the Philistines captured the ark (1 Sam 4:11, 17). The name may connect to the Sabbean hpn. All four major language traditions transliterate it consistently as Hophni/Chophni/Jofni.

(5×) Hophni, a proper masculine name. One of Eli's two priestly sons at Shiloh, consistently paired with his brother Phinehas. All five occurrences appear in 1 Samuel 1-4, framing the narrative of priestly corruption and divine retribution: the initial mention at the Shiloh sanctuary (1:3), the death oracle (2:34), and the catastrophic fulfillment at Aphek (4:4, 11, 17). The Sabbean cognate hpn may illuminate the name's original meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Chophni | es: Jofní | fr: Chophni | de: Chophni 1Sam 1:3; 1Sam 2:34; 1Sam 4:4; 1Sam 4:11; 1Sam 4:17

חָפַף H2653 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
covering over, sheltering, protecting (hovering protectively)
This Qal participle means 'covering over' or 'sheltering,' appearing in Moses' blessing of Benjamin in Deuteronomy 33:12. The image is of Yahweh covering over Benjamin protectively, like a bird sheltering its young with outstretched wings. The verb is related to Arabic words for surrounding or enclosing. The poetic image conveys divine protection and favor, appropriate for the tribe whose territory included Jerusalem and the temple.

(1×) Deuteronomy 33:12 blesses Benjamin: 'The beloved of Yahweh dwells in safety by Him; He covers over him all the day, and between His shoulders he dwells.' The multilingual glosses (English/French/German 'covering,' Spanish 'lo-cubrirá') emphasize protective sheltering. The image is intimate—God as a protective parent or shepherd. The location 'between His shoulders' suggests being carried like a lamb. This blessing foreshadows Jerusalem's (Benjamin's territory) role as God's dwelling place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: covering | es: lo-cubrirá | fr: couverture | de: covering Deut 33:12

חָפֵץ H2654a V-Qal-ConjImperf-3fs (74×)
To delight in or take pleasure in someone or something; also to desire, want, or be willing to act.
Chaphets captures a warm, engaged attraction — not mere intellectual approval but felt pleasure and active desire. When God delights in someone, it signals deep favor and acceptance (Num 14:8; 2 Sam 22:20); when a person delights in God's commandments, it transforms obedience from duty into joy (Ps 112:1; 119:35). The verb also carries a volitional edge: 'If the LORD is willing' (Judg 13:23) and the kinsman-redeemer's refusal to act (Ruth 4:6 context; Deut 25:7-8). Arabic cognates preserve the nuance of attentive eagerness, while Korean and Spanish translations split between pleasure-language and desire-language.

1. take pleasure in, delight in (48×) To experience emotional pleasure, satisfaction, or delight in someone or something — the affective dimension of engaged approval. Across 48 occurrences, this sense covers both divine and human delight. Spanish 'quisiera/desea' and German 'Gefallen haben' capture the warmth. If the LORD delights in us, He will bring us into the land (Num 14:8); Jonathan delighted greatly in David (1 Sam 19:1); and God's delight is not in the strength of horses but in those who fear Him (Ps 147:10-11). The participial form chaphets functions almost adjectivally: 'one who delights in' God's commands (Ps 112:1). DESIRE AND WILLING en: delighted, delights, desires | es: desea, que-quiera, quisiera | fr: [חפץ], delights, desires | de: Gefallen-haben, Gefallen-hatte, delights Num 14:8; 1Sam 18:22; 1Sam 19:1; 2Sam 15:26; 2Sam 20:11

2. desire, want, be willing (26×) To desire, want, or be willing to do something — the volitional dimension emphasizing intention or consent. Appearing in 26 occurrences, translations shift to desire-language: Spanish 'desea/deseara,' and several languages use want/wish equivalents. Shechem desired Jacob's daughter (Gen 34:19), the levirate law addresses a brother-in-law who 'does not want' to marry (Deut 25:7-8), and Manoah reasoned that if the LORD had wanted to kill them, He would not have shown them such things (Judg 13:23). The line between pleasure and volition is thin, but context and multilingual rendering reveal when willingness outweighs emotion. DESIRE AND WILLING en: He-pleases, I-desire, You-desire | es: desea, desean, deseara | fr: desired, désire, il-delighted | de: Gefallen-haben, Wohlgefallen, desired Gen 34:19; Deut 21:14; Deut 25:7; Deut 25:8; Judg 13:23

חָפַץ H2654b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
bend down, stiffen, extend stiffly (like a lowered tail)
This verb means 'bend down' or 'extend stiffly,' distinct from the common חָפֵץ (delight in, desire). It appears in Job 40:17 describing Behemoth's tail: 'he stiffens his tail like a cedar.' The Arabic cognate means 'lower' or 'depress,' as in lowering wings. The image is of a massive tail extended downward rigidly, as thick and straight as a cedar tree—part of the description of this mysterious, powerful creature.

(1×) Job 40:17 describes Behemoth: 'He stiffens his tail like a cedar; the sinews of his thighs are knit together.' The multilingual glosses vary widely: English 'it-stiffens,' Spanish 'endurece' (hardens), French 'vouloir' (to want—wrong root), German 'er-hat-Gefallen' (he-delights—also wrong root). The context is God's description of a mighty creature's physical power. The verb captures the rigid, downward extension of the tail, emphasizing the animal's strength and impressive proportions. Scholars debate whether Behemoth is a hippopotamus, elephant, or mythical creature. DESIRE AND WILLING en: it-stiffens | es: Endurece | fr: vouloir | de: er-hat-Gefallen Job 40:17

חֵפֵץ H2655 Adj-mpc (11×)
Delighting in, willing, desiring — verbal adjective describing one who takes pleasure in or is inclined toward
The adjective חֶפְצָה (chaphets) describes someone who delights in, desires, or is willing — a person whose inner disposition inclines them toward something. It appears in both positive and negative frames. David tells Solomon that God seeks a heart that is 'willing' (חֶפְצָה) to seek him (1 Chr 28:9). The psalmist asks, 'Who is the one delighting in life?' (Ps 34:13 [Eng. 34:12]) and declares that God takes no delight in wickedness (Ps 5:5 [Eng. 5:4]). Psalm 35:27 speaks of those who 'delight in' the vindication of the righteous. The word also covers simple willingness: Jeroboam consecrated 'whoever was willing' as priests (1 Kgs 13:33), and Naboth's vineyard is offered 'if you are willing' (1 Kgs 21:6). Spanish 'que se deleita/quiere' and English 'delighting/willing' both serve.

delighting in, desiring, willing (11×) Delighting in, taking pleasure in — describing a person whose heart is drawn toward something good or worthy. God is not one 'delighting in' wickedness (Ps 5:5), the godly person 'delights in life' (Ps 34:13), and the LORD's supporters 'delight in' his servant's righteousness (Ps 35:27). David charges Solomon to serve God with a 'willing' heart (1 Chr 28:9). Spanish 'que se deleita en,' French 'qui prend plaisir à.' DESIRE AND WILLING en: delight-in, delighting-in, desiring | es: deseas, deseosa, deseáis | fr: [החפצים], [חפצה], desiring | de: [החפצים], [חפצה], [חפצים] 1Kgs 13:33; 1Kgs 21:6; 1Chr 28:9; Neh 1:11; Ps 5:4

חֶפְצִי H2656 N-mpc / 2ms (39×)
Delight, pleasure, desire, will; also a matter or affair; by extension, a precious or desirable object

A richly layered noun spanning the inner life and the outer world. At its heart it denotes the delight or pleasure one takes in something—whether God's delight in obedience (1 Sam 15:22) or a person's quiet joy in Torah (Ps 1:2). It extends naturally into desire and purposeful will, as when God's pleasure or purpose is accomplished (Isa 53:10). In Ecclesiastes it takes on a more pragmatic flavor, meaning simply a matter or affair—every matter under heaven has its season (Eccl 3:1). Finally, in Proverbs it can refer concretely to precious things: wisdom surpasses all your desirable treasures (Prov 3:15). The Spanish 'agrado' and French 'plaisir' both track the core warmth of the term, while German 'Gefallen' captures both the pleasure and the volitional overtones.

1. delight, pleasure (18×) The emotional core of the word: a feeling of delight, pleasure, or satisfaction in something or someone. God takes no delight in the blood of bulls (Isa 1:11), and the righteous person's delight is in the law of the LORD (Ps 1:2). The Spanish 'agrado' and French 'délice' mirror this warmth. It can also appear in negative constructions—a vessel in which there is no pleasure (Jer 22:28)—underscoring that its default sense is positive enjoyment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-pleasure-of, delight, does-delight | es: Acaso-agrado, Es-placer, agrado | fr: [חפץ], dans-plaisir, délice | de: Gefallen-hatte, Wohlgefallen, [חפצו] 1Sam 15:22; 1Sam 18:25; Job 21:21; Job 22:3; Ps 1:2

2. desire, wish, will (14×) An extension from felt pleasure to active desire, wish, or purposeful will. When Scripture says God's pleasure shall prosper in the Messiah's hand (Isa 53:10), it means God's determined purpose. Solomon's exchange with Hiram about timber reflects a concrete desire or wish (1 Kgs 5:8-10). The French 'désir' and Spanish 'deseo' capture this volitional force, distinguishing it from mere passive enjoyment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-pleasure, My-pleasure, My-purpose | es: del-deseo-de-, deseo, deseo-de-ella | fr: [חפצה], de-plaisir, désir | de: Gefallen, [חפצה], dein-desire 2Sam 23:5; 1Kgs 5:8; 1Kgs 5:9; 1Kgs 5:10; 1Kgs 9:11

3. matter, affair (4×) In Qoheleth's distinctive vocabulary, the word takes a cooler, more abstract turn: a matter, affair, or concern. Every matter has its appointed time (Eccl 3:1), and for every matter there is a judgment (Eccl 3:17). This pragmatic usage appears almost exclusively in Ecclesiastes, where the Preacher catalogs life's affairs with philosophical detachment. The Spanish 'asunto' (affair) precisely captures this non-emotional usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: matter, the-matter | es: deseo, el-asunto, propósito | fr: le-plaisir, plaisir | de: der-hatte-Gefallen, hatte-Gefallen Eccl 3:1; Eccl 3:17; Eccl 5:8; Eccl 8:6

4. precious or desirable thing (3×) A concrete, material extension: a precious or desirable thing, a treasure. Wisdom cannot be compared with all your desirable things (Prov 3:15; 8:11), and Isaiah envisions Jerusalem rebuilt with stones of delight (Isa 54:12). Here the abstract quality of desirability has crystallized into a noun for the coveted object itself—jewels, treasures, and costly goods. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: delight, desirable-things, your-desires | es: agrado, deseos, tus-cosas-preciosas | fr: plaisir, ton-plaisir-toi | de: Gefallen-hatte, [חפציך], [חפצים] Prov 3:15; Prov 8:11; Isa 54:12

חֶפְצִי־בָהּ H2657 N-proper-fs (4×)
Hephzibah ('my delight is in her'), name of Manasseh's mother and a symbolic name for restored Zion
A feminine name composed of hephets ('delight') and bah ('in her'), used both as a personal name and as a prophetic epithet. In 2 Kings 21:1, Hephzibah is the mother of King Manasseh. In Isaiah 62:4, the name is applied symbolically to Zion: 'You shall no longer be called Forsaken... but Hephzibah, for the LORD delights in you.' The multilingual glosses reveal the tension between transliteration and translation: English renders 'My-delight-is,' while Spanish gives 'Jefzi' alongside 'Mi-deleite-esta.'

(4×) Both the historical personal name of King Manasseh's mother (2 Kgs 21:1) and a prophetic symbolic name for restored Jerusalem (Isa 62:4). The Isaiah passage explicitly etymologizes the name: kihaphets YHWH bakh ('for the LORD delights in you'), contrasting it with 'Azubah' (Forsaken) and 'Shemamah' (Desolate). The multilingual evidence shows translators oscillating between transliterating ('Cheftsi-Bah') and translating the meaning ('My-delight-is-in-her'), reflecting the dual register of the name as both proper noun and theological statement. DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: Bah, Cheftsi-, My-delight-is | es: Jefzi, Mi-deleite-está-, bah | fr: Bah, Cheftsi-, [חפצי] | de: Bah, Cheftsi-, in-ihr 2Kgs 21:1; Isa 62:4

חָפַר H2658 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (22×)
To dig in the earth (wells, pits); by extension, to search out, explore, or seek eagerly as one digs for hidden treasure.
A concrete verb rooted in the physical act of breaking ground. In Genesis 21 and 26, Abraham and Isaac dig wells in contested land, and the Hebrew chapar captures both the labor and the claim staked by that labor. The verb extends naturally into reconnaissance: in Deuteronomy 1:22 the spies are sent to 'dig out' the land, and in Joshua 2:2-3 Rahab's visitors come 'to search out' Jericho. Job 3:21 pushes the image furthest, describing those who seek death more eagerly than men dig for buried treasure.

1. dig, excavate ground (17×) Physical digging or excavating the ground, especially the boring of wells and cutting of pits. This is the primary, concrete sense attested from the patriarchal narratives onward. In Genesis 26:15-22 Isaac re-digs his father Abraham's wells, and Ecclesiastes 10:8 warns that the one who digs a pit may fall into it. Spanish 'cavaron' and German 'graben' consistently render this literal action across translations. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING en: I-dug, and-I-dug, and-dug | es: Escarban, Y-cavaron, cavaron | fr: Je-dug, [וחפרו], creuser | de: [וחפרת], [וחפר] Gen 21:30; Gen 26:15; Gen 26:18; Gen 26:19

2. search out, spy, explore (4×) Searching out, spying, or exploring a region, extending the 'digging' metaphor to thorough investigation. When Moses sends scouts ahead in Deuteronomy 1:22, the verb conveys probing reconnaissance. Joshua 2:2-3 uses the same sense for the spies at Jericho. The French 'chercher' and Spanish 'espiar' in these passages highlight the investigative nuance that distinguishes this sense from mere physical excavation. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-let-them-search-out-, it-spies-out-, to-search-out | es: busca-, para-espiar, y-escudriñen | fr: creuser, et-laisse-eux-search-dehors-, à-chercher-dehors | de: [חפר], und-lass-ihnen-durchsuchen-heraus-, zu-durchsuchen-heraus Deut 1:22; Josh 2:2; Josh 2:3; Job 39:29

3. dig for eagerly, seek (1×) Seeking something with intense eagerness, as though digging for hidden treasure. This metaphorical peak appears in Job 3:21, where the sufferer describes those who long for death and 'dig for it' more than for concealed riches. The single attestation preserves a vivid poetic extension: desire so desperate it mirrors the sweat of excavation. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-dig-for-it | es: y-la-cavan | fr: et-creuser-lui | de: [ויחפרהו] Job 3:21

חָפַר H2659 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (17×)
To be ashamed, confounded, or put to shame (Qal); to cause shame or bring disgrace upon someone (Hiphil).
A verb whose Qal stem expresses the intransitive experience of shame and humiliation, while its Hiphil stem turns the action outward – causing another person disgrace. In the Qal, it nearly always appears alongside bosh ('be ashamed'), forming a powerful hendiadys of total disgrace (Ps 35:4, 26; 71:24; Isa 24:23; Mic 3:7). The cognate field is remarkably consistent: Aramaic khaphar, Syriac khpar, Arabic khafara, and Ethiopic khafara all cluster around bashfulness and shame. In the Hiphil, Proverbs uses it for concrete social disgrace – a son who causes shame to his parents (Prov 19:26) or a wicked person who acts disgracefully (Prov 13:5). French 'avoir honte' and Spanish 'avergonzarse' render the Qal, while Spanish 'averguenza' captures the causative Hiphil force.

1. be ashamed or confounded (13×) To be ashamed, confounded, or put to shame – the Qal intransitive experience of disgrace, humiliation, or disappointed hope. Nearly always paired with bosh in parallel (Ps 35:4, 26; 71:24; Mic 3:7; Isa 24:23), intensifying the expression of total shame. Job 6:20 uses it of caravans disappointed by dried-up wadis. French 'avoir honte' and Spanish 'avergonzarse/afrentada' consistently render this experiential, passive sense. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: And-shall-be-ashamed, and-be-confounded, and-be-put-to-shame | es: Y-se-avergonzará, afrentada, fueron-avergonzados | fr: avoir-honte, et-avoir-honte, et-être-confus | de: [וחפרה], [וחפרו], [ויחפרו] Job 6:20; Ps 34:5; Ps 35:4; Ps 35:26; Ps 40:14

2. cause shame or reproach (4×) To cause shame, bring disgrace or reproach upon another – the Hiphil causative sense. Proverbs employs it for social disgrace within families: a son who shames his father (Prov 19:26) and one who acts disgracefully (Prov 13:5). Isaiah 33:9 and 54:4 extend the causative force to lands and peoples brought to shame. Spanish 'averguenza' captures the active, outward-directed shaming that distinguishes this stem from the intransitive Qal. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: and-bringing-reproach, and-disgracefully, is-put-to-shame | es: se-avergonzó, serás-afrentada, y-avergüenza | fr: avoir-honte, et-ויחפיר, et-ומחפיר | de: [והחפיר], [ויחפיר], [ומחפיר] Prov 13:5; Prov 19:26; Isa 33:9; Isa 54:4

חֵפֶר H2660a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Hepher, a proper masculine name borne by a Manassite clan-head, a Judahite, and one of David's warriors

Hepher (sometimes transliterated Chepher) is a personal name appearing across several genealogical and military contexts. A Manassite descendant of Gilead, Hepher fathered Zelophehad whose daughters famously petitioned for inheritance rights (Num 26:32-33; 27:1; Josh 17:2-3). The name also belongs to a son of Ashur in the Judahite genealogy (1 Chr 4:6) and possibly one of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:36), though that text is disputed. The Septuagint renders it Opher or Aphar, reflecting varied transliteration traditions.

Hepher (personal name) (7×) The proper name Hepher (חֵפֶר), used of at least three distinct individuals: primarily the Manassite clan-founder whose lineage includes Zelophehad's daughters (Num 26:32; Josh 17:2), a Judahite in the Ashur genealogy (1 Chr 4:6), and a warrior listed among David's heroes (1 Chr 11:36). English glosses render it 'Hepher' or 'Chepher,' while Spanish uses 'Jefer/Hefer,' reflecting the guttural het. HEPHER PERSONAL NAME

en: Chepher, Hepher, and-Hepher | es: Héfer, Jefer, Jéfer | fr: Chepher, Hepher, [חפר] | de: Chepher, Hepher, [חפר] Num 26:32; Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Josh 17:2; Josh 17:3

חֵפֶר H2660b N-proper-fs (2×)

Hepher; Canaanite city with unknown location

Hepher was a Canaanite royal city conquered by Joshua, listed alongside Aphek (Joshua 12:17). It also names a region in Judah mentioned during Solomon's administrative districts (1 Kings 4:10). The exact location remains unknown, though it lay somewhere in the coastal plain or Shephelah. The name may relate to the root חפר (dig, search).

(2×) Joshua 12:17 lists 'the king of Hepher' among the 31 defeated kings, while 1 Kings 4:10 refers to 'the land of Hepher' as part of Solomon's second district. Spanish 'Hefer/Jefer' and German 'Chepher/Hepher' show varied transliteration practices. The site remains archaeologically unidentified. HEPHER PERSONAL NAME

en: Chepher, Hepher | es: Hefer, Jefer | fr: Chepher, Hepher | de: Chepher, Hepher Josh 12:17; 1Kgs 4:10

לַחֲפָרְפָּרוֹת H2661 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

and to the moles (or: to dig, for digging; text uncertain)

This is a textually difficult word in Isaiah 2:20, where people cast away their idols. The Masoretic Text reads 'to dig holes,' but many scholars emend to 'to the moles' (לַחֲפָרְפָּרוֹת), reading it as a noun rather than an infinitive. The context mentions bats, making 'moles' a plausible parallel—both are creatures living in dark, hidden places. The image would be idols thrown into the realm of unclean, underground-dwelling animals.

(1×) Isaiah 2:20 describes people throwing their silver and gold idols 'to the moles and to the bats' (if emended), casting them into dark, hidden places in shame. The multilingual glosses reflect uncertainty: English 'and-to-the-bats,' Spanish 'a-los-topos' (to-the-moles). The context is the Day of the Lord, when humans will hide in terror and discard the idols they once treasured. Whether 'moles' (emended) or 'dig holes' (MT), the point is the same: idols are discarded as worthless into dark, shameful places. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-to-the-bats | es: a-los-topos | fr: [לחפר] | de: [לחפר] Isa 2:20

הַחֲפְרִי H2662 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Hepherite (gentilic of clan from Hepher)

This gentilic adjective designates a descendant or member of the clan of Hepher, son of Gilead. Numbers 26:32 uses it with the article as a collective noun in the census of the tribe of Manasseh. Like other gentilic forms in the wilderness census lists, it identifies a family group for purposes of land inheritance and tribal organization. Hepher's significance continues in Joshua, as Zelophehad was a Hepherite, and his daughters received a landmark inheritance ruling.

(1×) Numbers 26:32 lists 'the Hepherite' clan among the families of Manasseh descended from Gilead. The multilingual glosses (English 'the-Hepherite,' Spanish 'los-heferitas,' French 'le-Hepherite,' German 'der-Hepherite') show both singular and plural renderings of the collective. This is the clan of Zelophehad, whose five daughters later petitioned Moses for inheritance rights (Numbers 27), establishing legal precedent for female inheritance when there are no male heirs. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Hepherite | es: los-heferitas | fr: le-Hepherite | de: der-Hepherite Num 26:32

וְחֲפָרָיִם H2663 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Hapharaim (town in Issachar)

This place name designates a town in the tribal allotment of Issachar. Joshua 19:19 lists it among the border cities of the territory. The dual form of the name may suggest a double settlement or two villages. Tentatively identified with Egyptian Ḥa-pu-ru-m-â in the Amarna letters, the site remains uncertain. Some propose a location north of Legio (Megiddo), but no modern site can be identified with certainty.

(1×) Joshua 19:19 includes Hapharaim in the boundary list of Issachar's inheritance. The multilingual glosses preserve the conjunction and name: 'and-Hapharaim' (English), 'y-Hafaraim' (Spanish), 'et-Hapharaim' (French), 'und-Hapharaim' (German). The Septuagint variations (Agein, Apheraim, Ampharaim) show transmission uncertainty. The dual form (-ayim ending) might indicate twin settlements. As with many biblical sites, archaeological identification remains tentative despite textual and linguistic clues. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chapharayim | es: y-Hafaraim | fr: et-Chapharayim | de: und-Chapharayim Josh 19:19

חָפַשׂ H2664 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 3fse (23×)

To search, seek out, investigate; in Hitpael, to disguise oneself; passively, to be searched out or exposed.

Chaphas covers the full arc of deliberate investigation — from rummaging through tent baggage to probing the hidden chambers of the human heart. In its Qal and Piel stems it describes thorough, purposeful searching: Laban ransacking Jacob's camp for his household gods (Gen 31:35), or God's spirit-lamp searching the inmost parts of a person (Prov 20:27). The Hitpael stem takes a surprising turn into disguise — kings like Ahab and Saul 'search themselves out' of their own identity, changing their appearance to avoid recognition. The multilingual evidence highlights this split cleanly: Spanish distinguishes buscar/escudriñar ('seek/scrutinize') from disfrazarse ('to disguise'), while French similarly separates chercher from se déguiser.

Lamentations 3:40 captures the word's spiritual depth: 'Let us search out and examine our ways, and return to the LORD.'

1. to search, seek out (12×) The core active sense of searching, seeking out, or investigating — 12 occurrences across Qal and Piel stems. This ranges from physical searching of possessions (Gen 31:35, where Laban searches Rachel's tent; Gen 44:12, Joseph's steward searching the brothers' sacks) to spiritual investigation (Lam 3:40, 'let us search out our ways'). Spanish buscar/escudriñar and French chercher both select inquiry-focused vocabulary. The Piel intensifies the thoroughness: 1 Sam 23:23 has Saul commanding his men to 'search out all the hiding places' with meticulous diligence. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-will-search, Let-us-search, and-I-will-search | es: Buscad, Buscan-, Escudriñemos | fr: [נחפשה], chercher, et-chercher | de: [אחפש], [חפש], [נחפשה] Gen 31:35; Gen 44:12; 1Sam 23:23; 1Kgs 20:6; 2Kgs 10:23

2. to disguise oneself (7×) To disguise oneself — 7 occurrences, all in the Hitpael reflexive stem. Kings and leaders alter their appearance to avoid recognition: Saul before visiting the medium at Endor (1 Sam 28:8), Ahab entering battle incognito (1 Kgs 22:30), and Jeroboam's wife disguising herself before the prophet Ahijah (1 Kgs 14:2). The reflexive morphology ('to search oneself out' of one's identity) is semantically transparent but has fully lexicalized into 'disguise.' Spanish disfrazarse and French se déguiser both use dedicated reflexive disguise verbs, confirming this as a wholly distinct sense from the search meaning. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-disguised-himself, disguising-myself, he-disguised-himself | es: Disfrazarme, Y-se-disfrazó, disfrazarme | fr: [התחפש], [ויתחפש], disguising-moi-même | de: [התחפש], [ויתחפש], disguising-mich-selbst 1Sam 28:8; 1Kgs 20:38; 1Kgs 22:30; 2Chr 18:29

3. to be searched out (3×) To be searched out, exposed, or plundered — 3 occurrences in Pual and Niphal passive stems. In Obad 1:6, Esau's hidden treasures are 'searched out' and exposed by enemies. Ps 64:6 speaks of iniquities being 'well searched out' — a thorough reckoning that cannot be escaped. Prov 28:12 uses the passive to describe people hiding when the wicked rise. German wurde-durchsucht ('was thoroughly searched') and French a-été-fouillé ('was ransacked') both emphasize the passive vulnerability of the one exposed. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: have-been-searched, is-searched-for, well-searched-out | es: fue-escudriñado, rebuscada, se-esconde | fr: a-été-fouillé, de-chercher, sonder | de: [יחפש], wohl-searched-heraus, wurde-durchsucht Ps 64:6; Prov 28:12; Obad 1:6

4. to be disfigured (1×) To be disfigured or altered in appearance — a single occurrence in Job 30:18 where Job describes his garment being distorted by the violence of his disease. The Hitpael form here shifts from deliberate self-disguise (sense 2) to involuntary disfigurement: Job's outer garment is twisted and deformed, binding him like a collar. Spanish se disfraza preserves the disguise vocabulary but the context is pathological transformation rather than intentional concealment, marking a genuine semantic extension at the boundary between 'altered identity' and 'physical distortion.' JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: is-disfigured | es: se-disfraza | fr: sonder | de: [יחפש] Job 30:18

חֹפֶשׂ H2665 N-ms (1×)

a shrewd device, cunning plot, scheme

This noun denotes a cunning scheme or shrewd device. Psalm 64:6 uses it in describing how the wicked plot evil: 'They have completed a shrewd device, a well-searched-out plot.' The word is related to the verb חָפַשׂ (search, devise), suggesting a carefully planned scheme. The context is enemies plotting against the righteous, devising clever traps and hidden snares. The term emphasizes the calculated, premeditated nature of their malice.

(1×) Psalm 64:6 (verse 7 in some versions) describes evildoers: 'They have completed a shrewd plot, a well-searched-out scheme.' The multilingual glosses vary: English 'a-search,' Spanish 'búsqueda' (search), French 'délivrance' (deliverance—seems wrong), German 'ein-search.' The context is about hidden plots—wicked people searching out injustices, perfecting their schemes. The psalm contrasts human cunning with God's sudden judgment. The noun captures the careful, calculated nature of evil plotting. INVESTIGATION INQUIRY

en: a-search | es: búsqueda | fr: délivrance | de: ein-search Ps 64:6

חָפַשׂ H2666 V-Pual-Perf-3fs (1×)

she was freed, she had been set free (manumitted)

This Pual perfect verb means 'she was freed,' appearing in Leviticus 19:20 in a case law about a slave woman who was betrothed but not yet redeemed or freed. The text specifies 'because she had not been freed' as a factor in determining the legal consequence of the case. The passive form indicates manumission—formal release from slavery. The legal context addresses the complex intersection of slavery, betrothal, and sexual relations in ancient Israel.

(1×) Leviticus 19:20 addresses a case where a man has relations with a slave woman 'who had not been freed' but was betrothed to another. The multilingual glosses (English 'she-was-freed,' Spanish 'fue-liberada,' French 'elle-était-libéra,' German 'sie-war-befreite') emphasize manumission. The legal issue is her ambiguous status—betrothed but still enslaved. Because she wasn't free, the penalty differs from adultery with a free woman. The verb captures the legal act of formal release from bondage. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: she-was-freed | es: fue-liberada | fr: elle-était-libéra | de: sie-war-befreite Lev 19:20

חֹפֶשׂ H2667 N-ms (1×)

freedom, wide garments (meaning very uncertain)

This is a highly uncertain word appearing in Ezekiel 27:20, describing trade goods offered to Tyre. The traditional rendering 'wide-spread garments for riding' (saddle-cloths) is based purely on conjecture about the root meaning. The text is difficult, and some scholars suggest emending to חֵפֶץ (valuable things, precious items). The uncertainty reflects the challenges of rare commercial terminology preserved in poetic oracles.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:20 lists what Dedan traded with Tyre: 'garments of freedom for riding' (or possibly 'precious saddle-cloths'). The multilingual glosses (English 'freedom,' Spanish 'libertad,' French 'liberté') follow one possible etymology, but BDB notes the meaning is 'very dubious.' The context is luxury trade goods, which makes 'fine riding cloths' plausible, but the Hebrew form remains obscure. Some suggest reading a different word entirely. This illustrates the limits of our knowledge of ancient commercial vocabulary. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: freedom | es: libertad | fr: liberté | de: [חפש] Ezek 27:20

חָפְשָׁה H2668 N-fs (1×)

freedom, liberty, manumission (from slavery)

This noun means 'freedom' in the legal sense of manumission from slavery. Leviticus 19:20 uses it in the same case law as H2666, specifying that the slave woman 'had not been given freedom.' The term denotes the formal status of being a free person rather than a slave. In Israelite law, slaves could be freed through various means—jubilee year, payment of redemption price, or voluntary manumission. The concept is important in Israel's self-understanding as a people freed from Egyptian slavery.

(1×) Leviticus 19:20 states that 'freedom had not been given to her,' explaining the legal status of the betrothed slave woman. The multilingual glosses (English/French/German 'freedom,' Spanish 'libertad') all emphasize liberty and manumission. The legal issue hinges on her status—neither fully slave nor fully free. The noun captures the technical legal state of being manumitted, released from bondage. This intersects with Israel's exodus theology, where freedom from slavery is both historical memory and ethical imperative. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: freedom | es: libertad | fr: freedom | de: freedom Lev 19:20

חָפְשִׁית H2669 Art / N-fs (3×)

freedom, separation (especially for quarantine)

A difficult term appearing only in the phrase 'house of freedom' or 'house of separation,' referring to a separate dwelling where King Uzziah lived after being struck with leprosy. The term suggests either freedom from normal responsibilities or separation from the community for quarantine purposes. Most interpreters understand it as a separate, isolated house where the leprous king was confined, cut off from temple and royal duties. The phrase captures the dual reality of enforced isolation: freedom from duties but imprisonment through disease.

(3×) A separate or isolated dwelling, likely for quarantine. 2 Kings 15:5 and 2 Chronicles 26:21 describe King Uzziah living 'in the house of separation' after being struck with leprosy, while his son governed. The term emphasizes separation from normal society and sacred spaces due to ritual impurity. Textual variants (ketiv vs qere) reflect ancient uncertainty about the precise form. Translations struggle with this hapax phrase, often rendering it as 'separate house' or maintaining transliteration. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: [ketiv], the-freedom | es: [la-libertad], la-libertad | fr: [ההפשות], [החפשית], le-freedom | de: [ההפשות], [החפשית], der-freedom 2Kgs 15:5; 2Chr 26:21

חָפְשִׁי H2670 Prep-l (17×)

free, freed — released from slavery or obligation, set at liberty

Chofshi is an adjective meaning 'free,' used primarily in the legal codes governing the manumission of Hebrew slaves. Its most concentrated usage is in the Covenant Code (Exod 21:2, 5, 26-27), where a Hebrew bondservant goes out chofshi after six years of service, and in the parallel Deuteronomic legislation (Deut 15:12-13, 18) that commands generous provision at release. Jeremiah 34:9-16 records the dramatic episode in which Zedekiah's officials first proclaimed liberty (chofshi) for their Hebrew slaves and then reneged, provoking one of the prophet's fiercest oracles. Isaiah 58:6 broadens the term beyond chattel slavery: 'to let the oppressed go free' becomes the essence of the fast that God desires. In Job 3:19, the word takes on a poignant existential hue — in Sheol, 'the slave is free from his master,' finding in death the liberation denied in life. Psalm 88:6 pushes further: 'among the dead I am free,' meaning cut loose, adrift from God's remembrance. Spanish 'libre,' French 'libre,' and German 'frei' all render the straightforward sense of legal or existential freedom.

free, freed, liberty (17×) Free from bondage or obligation — primarily a legal-social term for the manumission of Hebrew slaves. The Covenant Code mandates release as chofshi in the seventh year (Exod 21:2, 5, 26-27), and Deuteronomy 15:12-13, 18 repeats the requirement with added generosity provisions. Jeremiah 34:9-16 recounts the broken covenant of manumission under Zedekiah. Isaiah 58:6 extends the concept to all forms of oppression. Job 3:19 applies it existentially to death as liberation from a master, and Psalm 88:6 uses it with a darker nuance of being cast adrift among the dead. Spanish 'libre,' French 'libre,' and German 'frei/Freie' confirm the unified semantic core of release from subjection. FREE LIBERTY RELEASED

en: free, set-free, to-freedom | es: a-la-libertad, libre, libres | fr: free, libre, libérer | de: Freie, [חפשי], befreien Exod 21:2; Exod 21:5; Exod 21:26; Exod 21:27; Deut 15:12

חֵץ H2671 Conj-w / N-mpc / 2ms (46×)

arrow — a pointed missile shot from a bow, used of weapons of war and as a figure for divine judgment

Khets denotes the arrow as the primary projectile weapon of the ancient Near East, and its 46 occurrences traverse the literal and the figurative with remarkable fluidity. Jonathan shoots arrows as a secret signal to David (1 Sam 20:20-36), Elisha instructs King Joash to strike the ground with arrows as a prophetic sign of victory (2 Kgs 13:15-18), and Psalm 127:4 compares sons to 'arrows in the hand of a warrior.' But the most powerful uses are theological: God's arrows are instruments of cosmic judgment — 'I will spend my arrows on them' (Deut 32:23), 'He sent out his arrows and scattered them' (Ps 18:14). Job cries that 'the arrows of the Almighty are in me' (Job 6:4). The word's range from battlefield weapon to divine missile is mirrored in translations: Spanish 'flecha,' German 'Pfeil,' French 'fleche.'

arrow, projectile weapon (46×) A pointed projectile shot from a bow, encompassing literal arrows used in warfare and hunting, prophetic sign-acts involving arrows, and the vivid metaphor of God's arrows as instruments of judgment and affliction. Literal uses include Jonathan's signal to David (1 Sam 20:20-36), battlefield references (Gen 49:23 archers attack Joseph; Num 24:8 Israel's arrows), and Elisha's sign-act with Joash (2 Kgs 13:15-18). Metaphorical uses portray divine wrath ('I will make my arrows drunk with blood,' Deut 32:42; 'the arrows of the Almighty are in me,' Job 6:4) and providential protection (Ps 91:5 'the arrow that flies by day'). All 46 occurrences, across singular, plural, construct, and suffixed forms, share this unified referent of the arrow as weapon and symbol. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: An-arrow, Your-arrows, an-arrow | es: Flecha, Tus-flechas, flecha | fr: [וּבחצים], et-flèche, et-flèches | de: Haelfte, Pfeil, Pfeile Gen 49:23; Num 24:8; Deut 32:23; Deut 32:42; 1Sam 17:7

חָצַב H2672 Prep-l (25×)

To hew, cut, quarry stone; of stonecutters as artisans, hewn cisterns and rock, figurative cleaving of lightning.

Chatsab is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for the hard, physical labor of cutting into rock — quarrying stone, carving cisterns, hewing tombs. It belongs to the world of Bronze and Iron Age construction, and its occurrences read like an archaeological survey of ancient Israelite infrastructure. Deuteronomy 6:11 celebrates the hewn cisterns the Israelites inherited in Canaan; Isaiah 22:16 condemns the official who carved himself a rock-cut tomb; 1 Chronicles 22:2 records David assembling stonecutters for the temple. Spanish splits illuminatingly between cavar ('to dig'), labrar ('to work stone'), and canteros ('stonecutters'), tracing the verb's movement from action to agent noun. The participial 'stonecutter' sense is especially well-attested in the temple-building narratives. At the edges of the range, the verb stretches to divine violence — Rahab 'shattered' in Isaiah 51:9 — and natural spectacle — lightning 'cleaving' in Psalm 29:7.

1. to hew, cut, dig into rock (11×) To hew, cut, or dig into rock — the core Qal active sense at 11 occurrences, covering the physical act of quarrying stone, cutting cisterns, carving wine-vats, and excavating tombs from bedrock. Isaiah 5:2 uses it for hewing out a wine-vat; Deuteronomy 8:9 for mining copper from hills; 2 Chronicles 26:10 for Uzziah's cisterns in the wilderness. Spanish cavaste ('you dug') and el-que-labra ('the one who works stone') both map the action of tool against rock. French tailler ('to cut, carve') captures the precision element — this is skilled labor, not random breaking. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: I-hewed, and-hewed, he-hewed | es: cavaste, el-que-corta, el-que-labra | fr: et-tailler, tailler, tu-devra-dig | de: [החצב], [ויחצב], [חצב] Deut 6:11; Deut 8:9; 1Chr 22:2; 2Chr 26:10; Prov 9:1

2. stonecutter, hewer of stone (8×) Stonecutter, hewer of stone — 8 occurrences using the active participle as an occupational designation. These are the professional artisans who quarried and dressed building stone, especially prominent in the temple construction narratives: 1 Kings 5:15 numbers Solomon's stonecutters; 1 Chronicles 22:2,15 records David setting stonecutters to prepare dressed stones. Spanish canteros and cortadores both identify the trade explicitly. The plural forms (chotsevim, chotsvei) appear in the context of organized labor gangs — a window into ancient construction economics. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: and-to-hewers-of, cutters, stonecutters | es: a-los-canteros, canteros, cortadores | fr: cutters, et-à-hewers-de, tailler | de: [חצב], [חצבים], [לחצבים] 1Kgs 5:15; 2Kgs 12:12; 1Chr 22:2; 1Chr 22:15; 2Chr 2:2

3. to be hewn or cut out (4×) To be hewn, to have been cut out — 4 occurrences using passive forms (Qal passive participle, Niphal, Pual) describing rock or material that has already been worked. Deuteronomy 6:11 and Nehemiah 9:25 celebrate 'hewn cisterns' as part of Canaan's inherited bounty. Isaiah 51:1 uses it memorably in metaphor: 'Look to the rock from which you were hewn' — Israel's origins traced back to Abraham and Sarah as quarry-stone. Job 19:24 wishes his words were 'engraved' permanently in rock, using this same passive form. Spanish fuisteis-cortados ('you were cut') captures the metaphorical force. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: be-engraved, hewn, you-were-hewn | es: cavadas, fueran-esculpidas!, fuisteis-cortados | fr: hewn, tailler, יחצבון | de: [חצבתם], [חצובים], [יחצבון] Deut 6:11; Neh 9:25; Job 19:24; Isa 51:1

4. to shatter, cut to pieces (1×) To shatter, cut to pieces — a single Hiphil occurrence in Isaiah 51:9, where the arm of the LORD is invoked as the one who 'cut Rahab to pieces' (the primeval chaos-monster). Spanish despedazó ('tore apart') correctly escalates beyond mere cutting to violent destruction. This causative intensification — from careful quarrying to mythic dismemberment — shows the verb's capacity for divine-warrior imagery, transforming construction vocabulary into combat language. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: the-one-cutting | es: la-que-despedazó | fr: tailler | de: [המחצבת] Isa 51:9

5. to flash forth, cleave (1×) To flash forth, cleave the sky — a single poetic occurrence in Psalm 29:7, where the voice of the LORD 'cleaves flames of fire,' describing lightning that splits the heavens. Spanish que-corta ('that cuts') and German flashes-hervor ('flashes forth') both struggle to capture this meteorological extension. The image transfers the stone-splitting force of the quarryman to Yahweh's thunderbolt — a brilliant metaphorical leap that connects earthly labor to cosmic power. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: flashes-forth | es: que-corta | fr: tailler | de: flashes-hervor Ps 29:7

חָצָה H2673 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (15×)

To divide, halve, or split; in Qal, actively apportioning; in Nifal, being divided; idiomatically, to cut short one's days.

A verb of splitting and halving that runs from livestock economics to prophetic destiny. After wrestling at Peniel, Jacob divides his camp into two companies (Gen 32:7; 33:1). The law prescribes dividing the price of a dead ox (Exod 21:35). Moses apportions war spoil (Num 31:27, 42). Elijah and Elisha each strike the Jordan, and its waters 'are divided' (2 Kgs 2:8, 14). The Nifal passive appears in prophecy too: Ezekiel promises the kingdom 'shall not be divided into two' again (Ezek 37:22). Most poignantly, the psalmist warns that men of blood and deceit 'shall not live out half their days' (Ps 55:23), an idiomatic extension where dividing applies to the span of life itself.

1. divide, apportion (active) (10×) To divide or apportion actively (Qal). Jacob divides his people and flocks into two camps (Gen 32:7; 33:1). The ox-goring law requires dividing both the dead animal and its price (Exod 21:35). Moses halves the war spoil between combatants and the congregation (Num 31:27). Spanish 'dividio / dividiras' and German 'teilen' confirm straightforward apportioning. The Qal active places the agent in control of the division. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: and-divide, and-divided-them, and-he-divided | es: Y-dividirás, Y-dividió, dividirá | fr: [יחצה], divisa, et-divisa-eux | de: [יחצה], [יחצוהו], sie-soll-teilen Gen 32:7; Gen 33:1; Exod 21:35; Num 31:27

2. be divided (passive) (4×) To be divided or split apart (Nifal passive). Elijah strikes the Jordan and its waters 'are divided' (2 Kgs 2:8), a miracle Elisha repeats (2 Kgs 2:14). Ezekiel prophesies that Israel shall no longer 'be divided into two kingdoms' (Ezek 37:22). Daniel foresees Alexander's empire 'divided to the four winds' (Dan 11:4). Spanish 'se dividieron / sera dividido' and French 'diviser' consistently mark the passive voice. Here the emphasis is on the result of division rather than the agent. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: and-be-divided, and-they-divided, will-be-divided | es: se-dividirán, y-se-dividieron, y-será-dividido | fr: diviser, et-diviser, et-ils-divisa | de: [ותחץ], [יחצו], und-sie-divided 2Kgs 2:8; 2Kgs 2:14; Ezek 37:22; Dan 11:4

3. halve one's days (1×) To halve one's days, to die prematurely (idiomatic Qal). In Psalm 55:23, the wicked 'shall not live out half their days.' Spanish 'viviran la mitad' (will live the half) captures the idiom precisely. This specialized use extends the physical act of halving to the lifespan, creating a memorable image: God's judgment cuts the thread of life at its midpoint. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING

en: will-live-out-half | es: vivirán-la-mitad | fr: diviser | de: wird-leben-heraus-half Ps 55:23

חָצוֹר H2674 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (18×)

Hazor — a major Canaanite royal city in northern Israel, plus several smaller settlements of the same name

Chatsor (Hazor) designates primarily the great Canaanite royal city in upper Galilee, one of the most important Bronze Age urban centers in the ancient Near East. Its 18 occurrences reflect a name borne by multiple settlements, though the northern royal city dominates. In the conquest narrative, Hazor is singled out as 'the head of all those kingdoms' under King Jabin, whom Joshua defeated and whose city he burned — the only Canaanite city explicitly said to have been destroyed by fire (Josh 11:1, 10-11, 13). The name reappears in Judges 4:2, 17, where a second Jabin king of Hazor oppresses Israel until Deborah and Barak deliver them. Solomon later fortified Hazor alongside Megiddo and Gezer as key administrative centers (1 Kgs 9:15), and the Assyrians under Tiglath-Pileser III captured it in 733 BC (2 Kgs 15:29). Joshua 15:23, 25 mention separate towns named Hazor in the Negeb of Judah. Jeremiah 49:28-33 addresses 'the kingdoms of Hazor' as an Arabian locality struck by Nebuchadnezzar. Nehemiah 11:33 records a Benjamite settlement of the same name. Spanish 'Hazor,' French 'Hatsor,' and German 'Hazor' preserve the name across traditions.

Hazor (place name) (18×) A prominent Canaanite royal city in northern Galilee, called 'the head of all those kingdoms' (Josh 11:10), plus several smaller settlements sharing the name. Joshua defeated King Jabin of Hazor and burned the city (Josh 11:1, 10-11, 13; 12:19). A later Jabin king of Hazor oppressed Israel until Deborah and Barak's victory (Judg 4:2, 17; 1 Sam 12:9). Solomon rebuilt it as a fortified administrative center alongside Megiddo and Gezer (1 Kgs 9:15). Tiglath-Pileser III conquered it during the Assyrian campaigns (2 Kgs 15:29). Joshua 15:23, 25 name separate Hazors in southern Judah. Joshua 19:36 lists it among Naphtali's fortified cities. Jeremiah 49:28, 30, 33 addresses 'the kingdoms of Hazor' as Arabian settlements struck by Nebuchadnezzar. Nehemiah 11:33 records a post-exilic Benjamite town of the same name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chatsor, Chatzor, Hazor | es: Hazor, Jatsor, Jatzor | fr: Chatsor, Chatzor, Hatsor | de: Chatsor, Chatzor, Hazor Josh 11:1; Josh 11:10; Josh 11:11; Josh 11:13

חָצוֹר חֲדַתָּה H2675 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Hazor-hadattah (place name: 'new Hazor')

This compound place name means 'Hazor the new' or 'New Hazor,' appearing in Joshua 15:25 in the southern territory of Judah, in the Negeb region. The name distinguishes this settlement from the more famous Hazor in northern Israel. The form includes an Aramaic adjective (-attāh), suggesting either Aramaic influence or a deliberately archaic or dialectal name. The exact site is unknown, as many Negeb settlements from this period remain unidentified.

(1×) Joshua 15:25 lists Hazor-hadattah among the towns in the southern Negeb allotted to Judah. The multilingual glosses preserve the compound: 'and-Hazor-Hadattah' (English), 'y-Hazor-Hadatá' (Spanish), with parallel forms in French and German. The 'new Hazor' designation differentiates it from the northern Hazor, one of the great Canaanite city-states conquered by Joshua (Joshua 11). This southern site remains archaeologically unidentified, one of many place names preserved in Scripture but lost to modern knowledge. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chatzor-Chadattah | es: y-Hazor-Hadatá | fr: et-Chatzor-Chadattah | de: und-Chatzor-Chadattah Josh 15:25

חֲצוֹת H2676 N-fsc (3×)

midnight, middle of night

The middle point of the night, midnight. The term is formed from the root meaning 'to divide' or 'to cut in half,' thus referring to the division point that splits night into two halves. Exodus uses it for the precise moment when God struck Egypt's firstborn during the tenth plague. Job and Psalms employ it for the deepest, darkest hour of night when sudden events occur or when the faithful rise to praise God. Midnight represents both a temporal marker and a symbol of deep darkness or urgent vigilance.

(3×) The middle of the night, midnight hour. Exodus 11:4 announces God's judgment will come 'about midnight,' the plague's precise timing. Job 34:20 describes the sudden death of the mighty 'at midnight.' Psalm 119:62 expresses devotion: 'at midnight I rise to give thanks to you.' The prepositional phrases (about midnight, at midnight) show both approximate and exact temporal references. All languages preserve the midnight designation (Spanish medianoche, French minuit, English midnight). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: about-midnight, and-at-midnight, at-the-middle-of | es: Mitad-de, como-medianoche-de-, y-mitad-de- | fr: au-sujet-de-minuit, et-חצות, milieu | de: [וחצות], bei-der-middle-von, ueber-midnight Exod 11:4; Job 34:20; Ps 119:62

חֲצִי H2677 Prep-m / N-msc (123×)
Half, one of two equal parts; also the middle or midpoint of a spatial or temporal span.
A common quantitative term dividing something into two equal portions – half a tribe, half a cubit, half the spoil. It governs precise measurements in the tabernacle blueprints (Exod 25:10, 17) and the division of land among tribes (Josh 13:29). Yet in a handful of vivid passages it shifts from fraction to focal point: 'at midnight' (Exod 12:29), 'in the middle of the night' (Ruth 3:8), or 'the middle of the Jordan' (Josh 4:10), where languages like Spanish medianoche and German Mitte confirm the spatial-center reading rather than a numerical half.

1. half, fractional portion (114×) One of two equal parts of any measurable whole – half of the blood (Exod 24:6), half a cubit (Exod 25:10), half the tribe of Manasseh (Josh 13:29), half the kingdom (Esth 5:3). Spanish mitad and French moitie uniformly mark the fractional, quantitative reading. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (114x) covers cultic measurements, territorial allotments, and proportional divisions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-half-of | es: y-la-mitad-de, y-mitad-de | fr: et-moitié-de | de: und-Haelfte-von Exod 24:6; Exod 25:10

2. middle, midpoint (9×) The midpoint or center of a span of time or space, where the focus falls on the central position rather than a divided portion. At Exodus 12:29, 'at the half of the night' means midnight – Spanish a medianoche and German bei Haelfte von confirm the temporal-center reading. Similarly at 2 Samuel 10:4 (garments cut 'at the middle'), the point of cutting, not the resulting portion, is in view. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-half-of, at-middle-of, from-its-middle | es: a-la-mitad-de, a-medianoche-de-, a-mitad-de | fr: dans-le-middle-de, dans-le-moitié, dans-moitié | de: Haelfte, [בחצי], bei-Haelfte-von Exod 12:29; Josh 10:13; Judg 16:3; Ruth 3:8; 2Sam 10:4

חֵצִי H2678 Art / N-mp (13×)
Arrow or arrows — a projectile weapon shot from a bow, used literally and as a metaphor for divine judgment
A variant form of the more common chets ('arrow'), this noun appears in both literal and figurative contexts. Its densest cluster is the dramatic narrative of 1 Samuel 20, where Jonathan's arrows serve as a covert signal to David — an episode where the physical object carries enormous narrative weight. Elsewhere it appears in warfare (2 Kgs 9:24; 13:15-18) and metaphorically for God's afflicting hand (Ps 38:2; Job 6:4). Spanish 'flecha,' French 'fleche,' and German 'Pfeil' uniformly confirm the concrete weapon sense.

arrow, arrows (13×) A projectile shot from a bow, appearing in both combat narratives and metaphorical speech. Most prominently featured in the Jonathan-David signal scene (1 Sam 20:20-38), where the arrow's landing communicates life-or-death information. Also used of Jehu's lethal shot (2 Kgs 9:24), Elisha's symbolic arrow of victory (2 Kgs 13:15-18), and divine affliction figured as arrows piercing the sufferer (Ps 38:2; Job 6:4). WEAPONS AND WARFARE
en: [the-arrow], the-arrow, the-arrows | es: Con-flechas, con-flechas, la-flecha | fr: [the-arrow], [בחצים], le-flèche | de: [the-arrow], [בחצים], der-Pfeil 1Sam 20:20; 1Sam 20:21; 1Sam 20:22; 1Sam 20:36

חֲנַחְתִּי H2679 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
Manahathites; descendants of Manahath, a Judahite clan
This gentilicadjective appears only in 1 Chronicles 2:52, referring to 'half of the Manahathites' (or possibly 'half of the Menuhoth') as descendants of Salma. The textual witnesses vary, and the exact identity and location of this Judahite group remains uncertain. BDB suggests emending verse 52 to match verse 54's clearer reference.

(2×) 1 Chronicles 2:52 contains both occurrences in the phrase 'half of the Manahathites/Menuhoth.' The Hebrew differs between Ketiv and Qere, reflected in the varied glosses. Spanish 'los menujotitas, mitad de' (the Menuhothites, half of) attempts to capture both the group name and the partitive construction. The reference appears twice due to textual variants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: half-of, the-Menuchoth | es: los-menujotitas, mitad-de | fr: [המנחות], moitié | de: [המנחות], [חצי] 1Chr 2:52

מָנַחְתִּי H2680 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)
Manahathites; clan group from Manahath in Judah
This term identifies another occurrence of the Manahathite clan in 1 Chronicles 2:54. 'Half of the Manahathites' appears as part of Salma's genealogy, parallel to the reference in verse 52 but with slightly different spelling. The repetition may indicate two distinct settlements or subdivisions of the same clan. Chronicles frequently records such clan subdivisions as Israel's tribal geography evolved.

(2×) 1 Chronicles 2:54 lists 'half the Manahathites' twice—likely once as the clan name and once with the partitive 'half.' Spanish 'los manajtitas, y mitad de' (the Manahathites, and half of) and the conjunction show this is a compound genealogical entry. French and German transliterate the Hebrew forms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-half-of, the-Manachti | es: los-manajtitas, y-mitad-de | fr: [המנחתי], et-moitié | de: [המנחתי], [וחצי] 1Chr 2:54

חָצִיר H2681 N-ms (1×)
a settled abode, haunt, lair (or possibly: grass, reeds—text uncertain)
This word appears in Isaiah 34:13 and possibly 35:7, with uncertain meaning. It may be a variant of חָצֵר (court, settlement) meaning 'dwelling' or 'haunt,' or it could be identical to the common חָצִיר (grass). Isaiah 34:13 describes ruins becoming 'a dwelling of jackals, a haunt for ostriches.' Some scholars see textual corruption here. The difficulty reflects the challenge of distinguishing rare homonyms in poetic texts with vivid, sometimes hyperbolic imagery.

(1×) Isaiah 34:13 prophesies that Edom's fortresses will become 'a dwelling of jackals and a haunt for ostriches.' The multilingual glosses show uncertainty: English 'a-court,' Spanish 'patio' (courtyard). The term is parallel to 'dwelling of jackals,' suggesting a wild habitation for unclean creatures. Some translations read 'grass' or 'reeds' instead, which would fit Isaiah 35:7 better. The ambiguity reminds us that ancient Hebrew poetry sometimes uses rare vocabulary or dialectal forms that stretch our interpretive abilities. GRASS AND VEGETATION
en: a-court | es: patio | fr: [חציר] | de: [חציר] Isa 34:13

חָצִיר H2682a Prep-k (19×)
Grass, herbage, green vegetation: plant growth used as fodder and as a biblical image of human transience.
Ḥāṣîr refers to green grass or herbage, the kind of lush growth that springs up quickly and withers just as fast. It serves double duty in Scripture: practically, it is fodder for livestock (1 Kgs 18:5; Ps 104:14; 147:8), and in Numbers 11:5 it may designate leeks, a specific green crop the Israelites craved in the wilderness. Theologically, it became one of the Bible's most powerful metaphors for human frailty—'all flesh is grass' (Isa 40:6–8), echoed in Psalm 103:15 and James 1:10–11. The 'grass on the rooftops' (Ps 129:6; 2 Kgs 19:26) that withers before it can be pulled paints enemies as ephemeral. Spanish 'hierba,' French 'herbe,' and German 'Gras' uniformly reflect this basic vegetative sense.

grass, herbage, green vegetation (19×) Green grass, herbage, or vegetable growth, used literally for animal fodder and figuratively for the brevity of human life. As pasture and fodder: Elijah searches for grass to keep horses alive during drought (1 Kgs 18:5), and Behemoth eats grass like an ox (Job 40:15). As transience: 'all flesh is grass' (Isa 40:6); the wicked flourish like grass only to perish (Ps 37:2; 90:5; 103:15). 'Grass on the rooftops' (2 Kgs 19:26; Ps 129:6) depicts enemies who wither before harvest. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: grass, grass-of, is-grass | es: como-hierba, como-hierba-de, es-hierba | fr: comme-herbe, grass, grass-de | de: Gras, [חציר], grass 1Kgs 18:5; 2Kgs 19:26; Job 8:12; Job 40:15; Ps 37:2

חָצִיר H2682b N-ms (2×)
grass, herbage; green vegetation or leeks
This noun denotes green grass or vegetation, often as food for animals. It appears in contexts ranging from literal grass for livestock (Psalm 104:14, Proverbs 27:25) to metaphors for quickly perishing enemies (Psalm 129:6, Isaiah 37:27). Numbers 11:5 may specifically refer to leeks—green vegetables the Israelites remembered from Egypt. Isaiah 15:6 laments the disappearance of all green growth.

(2×) Numbers 11:5 lists 'the leeks' (חָצִיר) among foods Israel missed from Egypt, while Isaiah 15:6 mourns that 'grass has withered.' The botanical identification in Numbers is debated—Aramaic cognates support 'leeks,' but the term generally means 'grass' or 'green plants.' Spanish 'el puerro/hierba' (the leek/grass) reflects this ambiguity. GRASS AND VEGETATION
en: grass, the-leeks | es: el-puerro, hierba | fr: [חציר], le-leeks | de: [חציר], der-leeks Num 11:5; Isa 15:6

חֹצֶן H2683 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (1×)
and his bosom, the fold of his garment (for carrying grain)
This noun means 'bosom' in the sense of the fold of a garment used for carrying things. Psalm 129:7 uses it in describing grain so sparse that the reaper doesn't fill his hand with it, nor the binder his bosom. The image is of gathering and binding sheaves—the worker would collect grain in the fold of his robe before tying it into bundles. The term evokes normal harvest practices to highlight the curse of sparse, worthless growth.

(1×) Psalm 129:7 describes cursed grain that doesn't fill 'the hand of the reaper or the bosom of the binder.' The multilingual glosses (English 'and-his-bosom,' Spanish 'ni-regazo-suyo' [nor-his-lap], French 'et-sein,' German 'und-sein-bosom') all reference the garment-fold or lap. The imagery is agricultural: workers would gather grain in their robes before bundling it. The psalm curses those who hate Zion to be like roof-grass that withers before it grows—so worthless that harvesters can't even fill their hands or laps with it. BOSOM LAP
en: and-his-bosom | es: ni-regazo-suyo | fr: et-sein | de: und-sein-bosom Ps 129:7

חֹצֶן H2684 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)
bosom, lap; fold of garment or embrace of arms
This noun refers to the bosom or lap, specifically the fold of a garment over the chest where items could be carried. Nehemiah 5:13 uses it when Nehemiah shakes out his bosom as a symbolic curse against oath-breakers. Isaiah 49:22 promises that Gentile nations will bring Israel's sons 'in the bosom'—carried in their arms like nursing infants. The term evokes intimacy, care, and physical closeness.

(2×) Nehemiah 5:13 has 'my bosom' (חָצְנִי) as the object of shaking out, while Isaiah 49:22 uses the prepositional phrase 'in the bosom' (בְּחֹצֶן). Spanish 'mi regazo/en el seno' (my lap/in the bosom) and French/German transliterations show the anatomical reference to the chest or lap area where children are carried. BOSOM LAP
en: in-bosom, lap-my | es: en-el-seno, mi-regazo | fr: [בחצן], [חצני] | de: [בחצן], [חצני] Neh 5:13; Isa 49:22

חֲצַף H2685 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fs (2×)
be harsh, show severity; act with harshness or urgency (Aramaic)
This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel describing the severity or harshness of royal commands. In Daniel 2:15, Daniel asks why the king's decree is 'so harsh,' while in 3:22, the urgency of Nebuchadnezzar's command proves deadly. The Hafel participle suggests causing harshness or acting insolently. Related Aramaic and Syriac cognates emphasize audacity and severity.

(2×) Daniel 2:15 uses the Hafel participle to describe the 'harsh' decree, while 3:22 describes the command as 'overbearing' or 'harsh.' Spanish 'era urgente/es tan severo' (was urgent/is so severe) captures both the temporal pressure and the severity. French 'être violent' (be violent) emphasizes the force of the command. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: so-harsh, was-harsh | es: era-urgente, es-tan-severo | fr: être-violent | de: [מהחצפה], [מחצפה] Dan 2:15; Dan 3:22

חָצַץ H2686a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)
divide, cut in two; separate into groups or curtail
This verb means to divide or cut in two. Proverbs 30:27 describes locusts 'dividing' into swarms or companies—organized despite having no king. Job 21:21 uses the Pual (passive) to say that the wicked person's months 'have been cut in two' or curtailed. The root sense involves partition or division, whether organizational or temporal.

(2×) Proverbs 30:27 uses the Qal active participle 'dividing' (חֹצֵץ) to describe locusts' swarm behavior, while Job 21:21 employs the Pual perfect 'have been cut off' (חֻצָּצוּ) for the shortening of life. Spanish 'en escuadrones/ha sido cortado' (in squadrons/has been cut) and French transliterations show the organizational vs. temporal applications. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: are-cut-off, divided | es: en-escuadrones, ha-sido-cortado? | fr: חצץ ,חצצו | de: [חצץ], [חצצו] Job 21:21; Prov 30:27

חצץ H2686b V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
those dividing (spoil), or: archers (meaning debated)
This Piel participle appears in Judges 5:11 in Deborah's victory song, with contested meaning. It could mean 'those who divide (spoil)' or possibly 'archers.' The context speaks of voices at watering places recounting Yahweh's righteous acts. BDB favors 'archers' since no object is expressed for 'dividing,' though others argue the verb חָלַק (divide) is more natural for spoil-distribution than the proposed archery connection.

(1×) Judges 5:11 has 'the voice of those dividing [or: archers] at the watering places' where they recount Yahweh's victories. The multilingual glosses reflect division: 'those-dividing' (English), 'los-que-distribuyen' (those-who-distribute, Spanish). The interpretive question is whether this describes spoil-dividers celebrating victory or archers gathering at wells. The Piel form suggests intensive or causative action. Either way, the scene is post-battle celebration, with people gathering at communal sites to proclaim God's triumph over Israel's enemies. ARAMEAN ARCHERS
en: -those-dividing | es: los-que-distribuyen | fr: -ces-dividing | de: -jene-dividing Judg 5:11

חָצָץ H2687 N-ms (3×)
gravel, small stones (used figuratively for hardship)
Small stones or gravel, appearing only in figurative contexts expressing hardship or disappointment. Proverbs uses it metaphorically for the bitter consequences of lies—having one's mouth filled with gravel instead of the expected sweetness. Lamentations employs the image of teeth crushed with gravel stones to describe God's harsh treatment during Jerusalem's destruction. The term evokes discomfort, disappointment, and the painful reality beneath deceptive appearances. Gravel in the mouth represents what is gritty, indigestible, and painful rather than satisfying.

(3×) Gravel or small stones, used metaphorically for harsh consequences. Proverbs 20:17 warns that bread gained by deceit is sweet at first, but afterward 'his mouth will be filled with gravel.' Lamentations 3:16 complains that God 'has crushed my teeth with gravel,' depicting suffering as something gritty and painful to endure. Psalm 77:17 presents a textual problem where some manuscripts read 'your arrows' instead of 'gravel,' showing scribal confusion. The predominant usage emphasizes figurative hardship. STONE AND ROCK

en: Your-arrows, gravel, on-gravel | es: con-cascajo, de-grava, flechas-de-ti | fr: [בחצץ], gravier, חצץ | de: [בחצץ], [חצץ], dein-Pfeile Ps 77:17; Prov 20:17; Lam 3:16

חַצַּצֹן תָּמָר H2688 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Hazazon-tamar; place name meaning 'pruning of the palm'

This compound place name means 'pruning (or division) of the palm tree.' Genesis 14:7 identifies it as an Amorite settlement, while 2 Chronicles 20:2 equates it with En-gedi on the western shore of the Dead Sea. The site served as a base for Edomite (possibly misread as Aramean) forces against Jehoshaphat. The name likely referred to a palm oasis or grove characteristic of the En-gedi area.

(2×) Genesis 14:7 lists Hazazon-tamar in Abraham's period, while 2 Chronicles 20:2 explicitly identifies it with En-gedi. The reference appears twice because both components (חצצן and תמר) are listed. Spanish 'en Hazesón-Tamar' shows the locative use. The palm-tree reference fits En-gedi's lush oasis character in the arid Judean wilderness. TAMAR PROPER NAME

en: in-Hazazon-Tamar | es: en-Hazesón-Tamar, en-Hazezón-Tamar | fr: [בחצצון תמר], dans-Hazazon-Tamar | de: [בחצצון תמר], in-Chazezon-Tamar Gen 14:7; 2Chr 20:2

חֲצֹצְרָה H2689 N-fp (29×)

Silver trumpet (ḥaṣoṣrah), a beaten-metal clarion used for assembly, warfare, and temple worship

The חֲצֹצְרָה is a long, straight, beaten-silver trumpet distinct from the curved ram's horn (שׁוֹפָר). Numbers 10:1-10 prescribes its construction and threefold use: summoning the congregation, sounding the alarm for battle, and marking festivals and sacrifices. It is characteristically a priestly instrument—only the sons of Aaron blow it (Num 10:8)—and it dominates the Chronicler's worship vocabulary (1 Chr 13:8, 15:24, 16:6; 2 Chr 5:12-13, 29:26-28). Hosea 5:8 pairs it with the shofar in a prophetic alarm. Spanish 'trompetas,' French 'trompettes,' and German 'Trompeten/Posaunen' all attest to the instrument's signal-horn character.

trumpet, metal signal horn (29×) A beaten-metal trumpet (clarion) used for signaling assembly, war, and liturgical celebration. Numbers 10:1-10 establishes the priestly monopoly on this instrument and its coded blasts: a single long note to gather, staccato alarm for battle, joyful fanfare over sacrifices. The Chronicler expands its role in temple worship (2 Chr 5:12-13, 29:26-28), while Hosea 5:8 pairs it with the shofar in prophetic warning. Unlike the organic shofar, the ḥaṣoṣrah is crafted silver—an artifact of institutional, priestly authority. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: and-the-trumpets, and-with-trumpets, with-the-trumpets | es: con-las-trompetas, con-trompetas, y-con-trompetas | fr: avec-le-trumpets, et-der-trompettes, et-in-trompettes | de: [בחצרות], mit-Trompeten, mit-der-Posaunen Num 10:2; Num 10:8; Num 10:9; Num 10:10; Num 31:6

חצצר H2690 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (12×)

chatsotser – to sound trumpets; a denominative verb for blowing silver clarions in Levitical worship

The denominative verb chatsotser (from chatsotsrah, 'silver trumpet') describes the act of sounding trumpets in organized Levitical worship and temple ceremony. All twelve occurrences appear exclusively in Chronicles, where the Chronicler portrays the liturgical order of the Second Temple era: trumpeters accompany the ark's procession to Jerusalem (1 Chr 15:24), the dedication of Solomon's Temple (2 Chr 5:12-13), Solomon's sacrificial festival (2 Chr 7:6), Abijah's battle line (2 Chr 13:14), and Hezekiah's reform offerings (2 Chr 29:28). The Ketiv/Qere variants and participial forms (mechatserim, 'trumpeters') represent orthographic and morphological variation, not distinct senses.

to sound trumpets, to blow the clarion (12×) To sound or blow silver trumpets in organized Levitical worship, used exclusively in Chronicles for temple ceremonial contexts: the ark's procession (1 Chr 15:24), Temple dedication (2 Chr 5:12-13), sacrificial festivals (2 Chr 7:6), holy war (2 Chr 13:14), and Hezekiah's reform (2 Chr 29:28). The participial form mechatserim ('trumpeters') and Ketiv/Qere orthographic variants represent morphology, not distinct senses. Multilingual evidence converges: German Trompete, Korean napal bulgo, Spanish tocando trompetas, Arabic nafikhin. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: (for-the-trumpeters), (sounding), (trumpeting) | es: (tocando-trompetas), [para-los-trompeteros], [tocando-trompetas] | fr: [למחצצרים], [למחצרים], [מחצצרים] | de: Trompete 1Chr 15:24; 2Chr 5:12; 2Chr 5:13

H2691 N-cs (1×)

court (of temple or palace), courtyard, enclosure

This construct form of the common noun חָצֵר (court, courtyard) appears in 2 Kings 20:4 in abbreviated form: 'Hezekiah had not yet gone out of the middle court.' The term typically describes the enclosed courtyards of the temple or palace complex. Courts served as transitional spaces between public and sacred areas, often where important events occurred. Isaiah's prophecy to Hezekiah intercepts him in this intermediate space.

(1×) 2 Kings 20:4 notes that Isaiah received God's word before Hezekiah 'had gone out of the middle court' (or possibly 'the city' in some manuscripts). The multilingual glosses show: 'court' (English), 'el-patio' (the-courtyard, Spanish), with Arabic 'al-dār' (the-house/courtyard). The setting emphasizes divine urgency—God answers Hezekiah's prayer so quickly that the prophet returns before the king has even left the palace complex. The court as intermediate space between private chamber and public plaza marks the swift divine response. COURTYARD ENCLOSURE

en: (court) | es: el-patio | fr: (court) 2Kgs 20:4

חָצֵר H2691a N-cpc (144×)

An enclosed open area—courtyard of temple, palace, or house; rarely an unwalled village or settlement.

Rooted in the idea of enclosure, this noun most often denotes the open courtyards surrounding Israel's sacred and royal buildings—the courts of the tabernacle (Exod 27:9ff.), the temple (Ps 84:11; 96:8), and royal palaces (1 Kgs 7:8). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: English 'court/courtyard,' Spanish 'atrio,' French 'parvis,' German 'Vorhof' all point to the same architectural reality. In two rare occurrences (1 Chr 4:32–33), the word shifts to mean unwalled settlements or villages, where Spanish 'aldeas' and the plural form signal a distinct semantic extension from enclosed space to open habitation.

1. court, courtyard, enclosure (142×) The enclosed open area attached to a building, especially the courts of the tabernacle, temple, or a royal palace. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (142 of 144 occurrences) is confirmed by tight cross-lingual alignment: Spanish 'el atrio,' French 'le parvis,' German 'der Vorhof.' Key passages include the tabernacle court instructions in Exod 27:9–18 and the psalmist's longing for God's courts in Ps 84:11 and 100:4. COURTYARD ENCLOSURE

en: the-court, the-courtyard | es: el-atrio | fr: le-parvis | de: der-Vorhof Exod 27:12; Exod 27:13; Exod 27:16; Exod 27:17; Exod 27:18

2. village, unwalled settlement (2×) An unwalled settlement or village, attested only twice in 1 Chr 4:32–33 in a tribal-territory list. Spanish shifts to 'aldeas' (villages) rather than 'atrio,' and the plural form marks the distinction clearly. This sense extends the root meaning of 'enclosure' outward—from walled court to open habitation cluster—paralleling the related place-name element Hazar- in geographical lists. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-villages, their-villages | es: Y-sus-aldeas, sus-aldeas | fr: et-parvis, parvis | de: Hof, und-Hof 1Chr 4:32; 1Chr 4:33

חָצֵר H2691b N-cp (45×)

villages, settlements — unwalled hamlets or dependent localities surrounding a named town

Chatser (sense II, always plural chatsrim/chatserim) denotes the small, unwalled settlements clustered around a fortified town — the hamlets and dependent villages that appear in nearly every tribal allotment list in Joshua. Distinguished from the homonymous chatser I ('courtyard, enclosure'), this word traces a line from the tent-circles of Ishmael's nomadic settlements (Gen 25:16, parallel to tiroth, 'encampments') through the Levitical law specifying that 'houses of the villages which have no wall' may be redeemed (Lev 25:31), to the exhaustive geographical catalogues of Joshua 13-21 where the formula 'and its villages' (va-chatsereiha) recurs dozens of times. The psalmist's rare use — 'the lurking-place of villages' (Ps 10:8) — evokes the vulnerability of unwalled habitations. Translations handle it with straightforward equivalents: Spanish 'aldeas,' French 'villages,' German 'Dörfer.'

villages, settlements (45×) Small unwalled settlements, hamlets, or dependent villages associated with a larger fortified town. Appears almost formulaically in Joshua's tribal allotment lists as 'city X and its villages' (Josh 15:32-62; 19:6-8; 21:12), and in the Chronicler's parallel genealogies (1 Chr 4:33; 6:56). The Levitical legislation of Lev 25:31 defines them as houses 'which have no wall around them,' distinguishable from walled cities for purposes of property redemption. The earliest occurrence describes the Ishmaelite encampments as chatsrim alongside tiroth ('tent-circles,' Gen 25:16). All 45 occurrences share this sense of a small, dependent, unwalled habitation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-villages, and-their-villages | es: y-sus-aldeas | fr: et-leur-villages, et-son-villages | de: und-ihr-Doerfer, und-sein-Doerfer Gen 25:16; Lev 25:31; Josh 13:23; Josh 13:28; Josh 15:32

חֲצַר־אַדָּר H2692 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hazar-addar (place name on southern border of Canaan)

This place name designates a site on the southern border of the Promised Land, mentioned in Numbers 34:4. It's identical or closely related to Hezron in Joshua 15:3, possibly with the addition of Addar. The name means something like 'enclosure of Addar' or 'village of Addar.' Such compound place names often combine a common geographic term with a distinguishing element. The exact site is uncertain, somewhere in the southern wilderness boundary of ancient Israel.

(1×) Numbers 34:4 places Hazar-addar on the southern boundary of Canaan that Yahweh commanded Israel to inherit. The multilingual glosses preserve the name: 'Hazar-addar' (English), 'Hatsar-Adar' (Spanish). The Septuagint renders it 'Haulis of Arad,' showing textual and interpretive variation. The parallel passage Joshua 15:3 has 'Hezron' plus 'Addar,' suggesting either two nearby sites or a textual variant. These boundary descriptions marked Israel's ideal territorial extent, though full occupation never materialized. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: Hazar-addar | es: a-Hatsar-Adar | fr: Hazar-addar | de: Hazar-addar Num 34:4

וְחַצַר גַּדָּה H2693 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Hazar-gaddah (place in southern Judah)

This compound place name means 'enclosure of Gaddah' or 'village of Gaddah,' appearing in Joshua 15:27 among the southernmost towns of Judah's territory. Like other Hazar- names, it designates a settlement or enclosure. The exact location is unknown, lost among the many Negeb sites that have not been archaeologically identified. The name pattern (Hazar + element) is common in this region, reflecting settlement terminology.

(1×) Joshua 15:27 lists Hazar-gaddah in the southernmost district of Judah, in the Negeb toward Edom's border. The multilingual glosses (English 'and-Hazar-Gaddah,' Spanish 'y-Hazar-Gadá,' French 'et-Hazar-Gaddah,' German 'und-Hazar-Gaddah') preserve the conjunction and name. The Septuagint variations (Sereit, Asergadda) reflect attempts to transliterate an unfamiliar name. The southern Negeb had numerous small settlements, many preserved only in these biblical lists, their exact locations now uncertain due to sparse archaeological remains in the arid region. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chatzar-Gaddah | es: y-Hazar-Gadá | fr: et-Chatzar-Gaddah | de: und-Chatzar-Gaddah Josh 15:27

חָצֵר הַתִּיכוֹן H2694 N-proper-fs (2×)

Hazer-hatticon; place name meaning 'the middle court/village'

This place name appears only in Ezekiel 47:16, describing the northern boundary of the restored land. It means 'the middle court' or 'middle village' and is located near the border of Hauran (the region east of the Sea of Galilee). Some scholars suggest emending the text, but the name fits the pattern of Hazer compounds denoting settlements or enclosures. The site remains unidentified archaeologically.

(2×) Ezekiel 47:16 mentions this boundary marker twice in describing the ideal borders of the land. The term consists of חָצֵר (court, village) + הַתִּיכוֹן (the middle). Spanish 'la del medio' (the middle one) and German 'der mittlere Hof' (the middle court) parse the components. The reference to Hauran's border suggests a location in southern Syria. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Chatser, the-middle | es: Jatser, la-del-medio | fr: Hatser, parvis | de: Hof, [התיכון] Ezek 47:16

חֶצְרוֹ H2695 N-proper-ms (3×)

Hezro: one of David's mighty warriors

One of David's elite warriors, identified as 'the Carmelite' (from Carmel in Judah, not Mount Carmel). The name appears in the lists of David's mighty men with textual variations between Samuel and Chronicles. The ketiv/qere variations (Hetsro/Hetsrai) reflect scribal uncertainties in transmission, a common phenomenon in the warrior lists of 2 Samuel 23 and 1 Chronicles 11. These mighty men formed David's core military leadership, demonstrating exceptional courage and loyalty.

(3×) Hezro the Carmelite, one of David's elite warriors. 2 Samuel 23:35 lists him among the Thirty, with a ketiv/qere variation (Hetsro/Hetsrai). 1 Chronicles 11:37 provides the parallel reference with slightly different spelling. The Carmelite designation locates his origin in Carmel of Judah. Cross-linguistic transliterations vary slightly (Spanish Jetsro/Jetsray, French/English Hezro), reflecting the textual uncertainties in the Hebrew manuscripts themselves. STATURE THREE ANOMALY

en: Chetsro, Hezro, [k] | es: (Jetsray), Jetsro, [Jetsro] | fr: Hezro, [k], [חצרו] | de: [k], [חצרו] 2Sam 23:35; 1Chr 11:37

חֶצְרוֹן H2696 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (18×)

Hezron — a son of Reuben, a grandson of Judah and ancestor of David, and a place in southern Judah

Chetsron (Hezron) is a proper name with both personal and geographical referents, appearing 18 times in the Hebrew Bible. The name likely derives from chatser ('enclosure, courtyard'), suggesting a settled or enclosed place. As a personal name, it belongs to two distinct individuals in the tribal genealogies. First, a son of Reuben who went down to Egypt with Jacob's household (Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:6; 1 Chr 5:3). Second, and far more prominent, a son of Perez and grandson of Judah through whom the royal Davidic line descends (Gen 46:12; Num 26:21; Ruth 4:18-19; 1 Chr 2:5, 9, 18, 21, 24-25; 4:1). This Hezron's genealogical importance is underscored by the detailed treatment his descendants receive in 1 Chronicles 2, where his sons Ram, Caleb, and Segub each generate extensive clan lists. As a place name, Hezron appears on the southern border of Judah (Josh 15:3, 25; Num 34:4), sometimes compounded as Kerioth-Hezron. Spanish 'Hezron,' French 'Hetsron,' and German 'Hezron' transliterate consistently.

Hezron (person/place name) (18×) A proper name borne by two individuals and at least one settlement. The Reubenite Hezron appears in the genealogy of Jacob's descendants who migrated to Egypt (Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:6; 1 Chr 5:3). The Judahite Hezron, son of Perez and grandson of Judah, is the more prominent figure: ancestor of David through Ram (Gen 46:12; Num 26:21; Ruth 4:18-19; 1 Chr 2:5, 9, 18, 21, 24-25; 4:1), with extensive clan genealogies in 1 Chronicles 2. As a place name, Hezron marks a point on Judah's southern boundary (Josh 15:3; Num 34:4), compounded in Josh 15:25 as Kerioth-Hezron (identified with Hazor). The name's etymology from chatser ('enclosure') suits both a clan settlement and a border town. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chetsron, Chetzron, Hezron | es: De-Hesrón, Hezrón, Jetsron | fr: Chetzron, Hetsron, Hezron | de: Chetzron, Chezron, Hezron Gen 46:9; Gen 46:12; Exod 6:14; Num 26:6; Num 26:21

חֶצְרוֹנִי H2697 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Hezronite; descendant of Hezron

This gentilicadjective identifies descendants of Hezron, son of Perez, in two tribal contexts. Numbers 26:6 lists 'the Hezronite' clan of Reuben (from a different Hezron, son of Reuben), while verse 21 names the Hezronite clan of Judah (from Hezron son of Perez). The dual usage shows two unrelated Hezrons whose descendants formed distinct clans in Israel's tribal structure.

(2×) Numbers 26:6 identifies the Reubenite Hezronites, while 26:21 names the Judahite Hezronites. Both use the article: 'the Hezronite' (הַחֶצְרוֹנִי). Spanish 'los hesronitas' (plural) treats this as a collective clan name. The two occurrences represent entirely different genealogical lines, despite identical nomenclature. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Hezronite | es: los-hesronitas | fr: le-Hezronite | de: der-Hezronite Num 26:6; Num 26:21

חֲצֵרוֹת H2698 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (6×)

Hazeroth; a wilderness encampment of Israel during the exodus, meaning 'enclosures' or 'courtyards.'

Chatseroth is a proper place name designating one of Israel's wilderness encampments after leaving Sinai. The name derives from chatser ('enclosure, courtyard'), perhaps suggesting a site with natural rock enclosures or settled compounds. It is remembered especially as the location where Miriam and Aaron challenged Moses's authority and Miriam was struck with skin disease (Num 12). The itinerary notices in Numbers 11:35, 33:17-18 record arrival and departure, while Deuteronomy 1:1 lists it among landmarks framing Moses's final address.

Hazeroth (place name) (6×) The proper place name Hazeroth (chatseroth), a wilderness station on Israel's exodus route between Kibroth-hattaavah and the wilderness of Paran. Multilingual renderings are uniformly transliterated – 'Hazeroth' in English, Spanish 'Hazerot,' French and German 'Hazeroth' – confirming a single geographic referent. The site is best known as the setting for Miriam's rebellion against Moses (Num 12:1-16). Its listing in Deut 1:1 among geographic markers suggests it was a recognized landmark in Transjordan traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hazeroth, and-Hazeroth, from-Hazeroth | es: a-Hazerot, de-Hazerot, en-Hazerot | fr: Hazeroth, dans-Hazeroth, de-Hazeroth | de: Hazeroth, in-Hazeroth, und-Hazeroth Num 11:35; Num 12:16; Num 33:17; Num 33:18

חָצֵר H2699 Prep-b / N-cp (1×)

in villages, unwalled settlements, rural hamlets

This plural noun with preposition means 'in villages' or 'in settlements'—unwalled, rural communities as opposed to fortified cities. Deuteronomy 2:23 uses it to describe the settlements of the Avvim in the Gaza region, which were destroyed by the Caphtorim (Philistines). The term emphasizes vulnerability—these were open settlements without defensive walls. Biblical law distinguished between walled cities and open villages for purposes of property redemption and other legal matters.

(1×) Deuteronomy 2:23 describes how 'the Avvim who lived in villages as far as Gaza' were destroyed by the Caphtorim who settled in their place. The multilingual glosses (English 'in-villages,' Spanish 'en-aldeas,' French 'dans-villages,' German 'in-Dörfer') all emphasize rural, unwalled settlements. The historical note explains the Philistine presence in Canaan—they displaced earlier inhabitants. The term highlights the vulnerability of unwalled communities to military conquest, unable to withstand siege as fortified cities could. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9636 WITH 3 SENSES

en: in-villages | es: en-aldeas | fr: dans-villages | de: in-Doerfer Deut 2:23

חַצַרְמָוֶת H2700 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hazarmaveth; son of Joktan and southern Arabian region

Hazarmaveth was both a personal name (son of Joktan in Genesis 10) and a territorial designation for a region in southern Arabia. The name survives in modern Hadramaut (or Hadramawt), a historic region in Yemen. As the fifth in descent from Shem through Joktan, Hazarmaveth represents one of the Semitic groups that settled the Arabian peninsula. The territory was home to the Hadramitic kingdom in antiquity.

(2×) Genesis 10:26 and 1 Chronicles 1:20 list Hazarmaveth identically in Joktan's genealogy. The name represents both the eponymous ancestor and the region his descendants inhabited. Modern Hadramaut preserves the ancient name. Spanish 'Jatsarmavet' and German 'Chazarmawet' show transliteration variations of this Arabic-origin name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chatsarmaveth, Hazarmaveth | es: Jatsarmavet, Jatsarmávet | fr: Hazarmaveth, [חצרמות] | de: Chazarmawet, [חצרמות] Gen 10:26; 1Chr 1:20

חֲצַר סוּסָה H2701 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Hazar-susah (place name: 'horse enclosure' in Simeon)

This place name means 'enclosure of horses' or 'horse village,' appearing in Joshua 19:5 in Simeon's territory. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 4:31 has the variant 'Hazar-susim' (horses, plural). The name suggests this was a settlement associated with horse-keeping or trading, though whether this was the original purpose or a later association is unclear. The site location is unknown, though it was somewhere in the Negeb region allotted to Simeon within Judah's larger territory.

(1×) Joshua 19:5 lists Hazar-susah among the towns allotted to Simeon. The multilingual glosses preserve the name: 'and-Hazar-Susah' (English), 'y-Hazar-susa' (Spanish), with parallel forms in French and German. The variant 'Hazar-susim' in 1 Chronicles 4:31 shows plural 'horses' instead of singular. Some scholars have proposed connection to 'Rossdorf' (horse-village) near Damascus, but this seems geographically implausible. The name likely reflects local economy or topography involving horses, though the exact site remains unidentified among Simeon's Negeb settlements. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chatsar-Susah | es: y-Hazar-susa | fr: et-Chatsar-Susah | de: und-Chatsar-Susah Josh 19:5

חֲצַר סוּסִה H2702 Conj-w (1×)

Chatsar-Susim, a town in the territory of Simeon (literally 'village of horses')

Chatsar-Susim appears only in 1 Chronicles 4:31 as a Simeonite settlement, with the parallel form Chatsar-Susah found in Joshua 19:5. The name literally means 'village of horses' or 'horse enclosure,' suggesting it may have been a center for breeding or trading horses. The Septuagint's various transliterations reflect the difficulty ancient translators had with this compound place name. Near Damascus, a similar village named Kefr Susê ('horse village') may preserve the toponymic tradition.

(1×) This town name occurs only in Chronicles, part of a list of Simeonite cities that were originally allotted to Judah but became part of Simeon's inheritance. The conjunction 'and-in' (ובחצר) connects it to the surrounding geographic catalog. The semantic field relates to settlement names incorporating animal husbandry, common in tribal territories of the southern Negev. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-in-Chatsar-Susim | es: y-en-Jatsar-Susim | fr: [ובחצר סוסים] | de: [ובחצר סוסים] 1Chr 4:31

חֲצַר עֵינוֹן H2703 N-proper-fs (2×)

Hazar-enan; place name meaning 'court/village of springs'

This place name means 'court of springs' or 'village of fountains,' marking Israel's northeastern boundary in Ezekiel's vision. Numbers 34:9-10 designates it as a point on the northern border of the Promised Land. Variations in spelling (עֵינוֹן vs. עֵינָן) appear across the texts. The site remains unidentified, though it lay somewhere northeast of the Sea of Galilee.

(2×) Ezekiel 47:17 mentions this boundary marker twice in describing the northern border. The name combines חָצַר (court, village) with עֵינוֹן/עֵינָן (springs). Spanish 'Enom/Jatsar' separates the components, while French 'parvis' (court, courtyard) translates the first element. The reference to springs suggests an oasis settlement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Chatsar, Enon | es: Enom, Jatsar | fr: [עינון], parvis | de: Hof, [עינון] Ezek 47:17

חֲצַר עֵינוֹן H2704 Prep / N-proper-fs (4×)

Hazar-enan ('village of springs'), a place on the northeastern border of the promised land

A compound place name from hatsar ('enclosure, village') and enan/einon ('springs'), designating a settlement on the ideal northeastern boundary of Canaan. It appears in the Mosaic boundary description (Num 34:9-10) and in Ezekiel's visionary land allotment (Ezek 47:17; 48:1), both times marking where the northern border turns toward the east. The consistency across these widely separated texts underscores its role as a fixed geographic reference point in Israel's territorial imagination.

(4×) A border settlement marking the northeastern limit of the promised land. In Numbers 34:9-10, it defines the northern boundary ('this shall be your northern border'), while Ezekiel 47:17 and 48:1 place it on the boundary between Damascus and Hamath in the eschatological land division. The multilingual glosses reveal the compound nature: German 'Hof' (courtyard/enclosure) for hatsar, and the place-element 'Enan/Einon' preserved across languages. The Septuagint renders it variously as Arsenaeeim. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Chatsar, Enan, Hazar-enan | es: Enan, Jatsar, a-Hatsar-Enán | fr: Hatser, Hazar-enan, de-Hazar-enan | de: Hazar-enan, Hof, [עינן] Num 34:9; Num 34:10; Ezek 48:1

חֲצַר שׁוּעָל H2705 Conj-w (4×)

Hazar-shual ('village of the jackal/fox'), a town in southern Judah allotted also to Simeon

A compound place name from hatsar ('enclosure, village') and shu'al ('fox, jackal'), identifying a settlement in the Negev region. It appears in the town lists of southern Judah (Josh 15:28), Simeon (Josh 19:3), the Chronicler's genealogical record (1 Chr 4:28), and among post-exilic returnees (Neh 11:27). Its dual assignment to both Judah and Simeon reflects the overlapping tribal territories in the deep south of the land.

(4×) A Negev settlement assigned to both Judah and Simeon, appearing consistently in town lists across four biblical books. All four occurrences are prefixed with the conjunction waw ('and'), placing it within catalog enumerations. The name's animal element shu'al ('fox/jackal') likely reflects the wildlife of the arid southern landscape. French and German glosses sometimes leave the compound untranslated in Hebrew brackets, while English and Spanish consistently transliterate as 'Hazar-Shual' / 'Hazar-Sual.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9745 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-Chatsar-Shu'al, and-Chatsar-Shual, and-Chatzar-Shual | es: Y-en-Hazar-Sual, y-Hazar-Sual, y-Hazar-sual | fr: [ובחצר שועל], [וחצר שועל], et-Chatsar-Shual | de: [ובחצר שועל], [וחצר שועל], und-Chatsar-Shual Josh 15:28; Josh 19:3; 1Chr 4:28; Neh 11:27

חֹק H2706 Prep-l / N-ms (128×)

Something prescribed: a statute, ordinance, or decree; an allotted portion or due; a fixed boundary or limit.

Hoq is one of the Hebrew Bible's core legal terms, derived from the root haqaq ('to engrave, inscribe, decree'). At its heart lies the idea of something fixed, prescribed, carved in stone — whether a divine law, an allotted food ration, or the boundary God set for the sea. Its most frequent use, covering the vast majority of its 128 occurrences, pairs it with mishpat ('judgment') as a standard doublet for God's comprehensive instruction to Israel: 'statutes and ordinances' (Exod 15:25; Lev 26:46). But the word carries a fascinating material concreteness beneath its legal abstraction. The 'prescribed portion' sense appears when Joseph secures grain rations for Egyptian priests (Gen 47:22) and when Agur prays for his daily bread — 'feed me my allotted portion' (Prov 30:8). Spanish estatuto and German Satzung both reflect the enacted-law dimension, while French décret leans toward authoritative pronouncement. Arabic farida captures the obligatory quality precisely. A third sense — cosmic boundary — emerges in wisdom poetry, where God sets a hoq for the sea (Prov 8:29; Job 26:10), decreeing limits the waters cannot cross.

1. statute, ordinance, decree (109×) A prescribed law, ordinance, or statute established by divine or human authority — the dominant sense at 109 occurrences, forming the backbone of Torah's legal vocabulary. In Exod 15:25 God makes for Israel 'a statute and an ordinance' at Marah; in Lev 26:46 the hoqqim are the comprehensive regulations given at Sinai. The plural huqqim pairs systematically with mishpatim ('judgments') throughout Deuteronomy (4:5, 6, 8; 5:1; 6:1) and the Psalms (Ps 119 uses hoq/huqqim repeatedly). Spanish estatutos and German Satzungen both select enacted-law vocabulary, while Arabic farida/fara'id (from the root meaning 'to impose as obligation') captures the sense of divine imposition. French statuts and les ordonnances preserve the two-word pairing that mirrors the Hebrew doublet. The term implies permanence — these are not ad hoc rulings but enduring prescriptions engraved into Israel's covenant life. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Your-statutes, the-statutes | es: estatutos-de-ti, los-estatutos, son-los-estatutos | fr: le-statuts, les-statuts, tes-statuts | de: dein-Satzungen, der-Satzungen Exod 15:25; Exod 15:26; Exod 18:20; Lev 10:11; Lev 26:46

2. allotted portion, due, ration (11×) An allotted share, prescribed portion, or regular allowance — especially of food, priestly dues, or livelihood support — covering 11 occurrences. In Gen 47:22 the Egyptian priests had 'an allotted portion' (hoq) from Pharaoh and ate from their ration, which is why Joseph did not buy their land. In Lev 10:13-14 Aaron's priestly 'due' (hoq) from the offerings is specified. Prov 30:8 offers a deeply personal use: 'feed me my allotted bread' (lehem huqqi), a prayer for neither poverty nor wealth but the prescribed daily portion. In Prov 31:15 the capable woman gives 'a portion' (hoq) to her servant girls. Spanish porcion and French ration both shift away from legal vocabulary toward material-allocation language. The underlying metaphor is consistent with sense 1 — what is 'decreed' for someone becomes their rightful share — but the referent is sustenance rather than regulation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-a-portion, and-the-due-of-, more-than-my-portion | es: mi-porción, más-que-mi-porción, porción | fr: de-mon-décret-moi, décret, et-décret | de: Satzung, dein-due, dein-quota Gen 47:22; Exod 5:14; Lev 10:13

3. boundary, limit, prescribed border (7×) A fixed boundary, limit, or prescribed border — typically of the sea, land, or cosmic order — 7 occurrences concentrated in wisdom and creation poetry. In Prov 8:29 Wisdom recounts how God 'set a boundary' (hoq) for the sea so that the waters would not transgress his command; in Job

26:10 God 'inscribed a limit' (hoq-hag) on the face of the waters. Job 14:5 applies the concept to human mortality: a person's days are determined, 'you have appointed his limits' (huqqaw) that he cannot pass. Spanish limite and German Grenze both select spatial-boundary vocabulary distinct from the legal language of sense 1. Arabic hadd/hudud ('boundary, limit') from the root hadada provides a precise semantic parallel. This sense preserves the etymological core of haqaq — to cut, engrave, inscribe — applied to cosmic geography rather than legal codes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (his-limits), [his-limits], boundary- | es: Límite-, decreto, límite | fr: [חק], décret, son-décret-lui | de: Satzung, [חק] Job 14:5; Job 14:13; Job 26:10; Prov 8:29

4. (1×) A textually uncertain occurrence at Ps 74:11 where the MT consonantal text has been read differently by various traditions. The Ketiv appears to yield 'your bosom' (heqkha, from heq 'bosom') rather than a form of hoq ('statute'). English and Spanish translations render 'your bosom' or 'tu seno,' while French reads statut, following a different vocalization. The verse concerns God withdrawing his right hand — 'from the midst of your bosom, consume!' — making the 'bosom' reading contextually more natural. This occurrence is best treated as a textual-critical crux rather than a genuine sense of hoq; the confusion arises from the shared consonantal skeleton of hoq ('statute') and heq ('bosom, lap'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv:Your-bosom] | es: [tu-seno] | fr: statut | de: [ketiv:Your-bosom] Ps 74:11

חָקָה H2707 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (4×)

To carve, engrave; cut figures into a surface; mark a boundary or limit

A rare Hebrew verb (related to haqaq, 'to inscribe') appearing only in the Pual and Hithpael stems. In its Pual participle form, it describes carved or engraved images on temple doors (1 Kgs 6:35) and on walls in prophetic visions of idolatry (Ezek 8:10; 23:14). In Job 13:27, the Hithpael conveys God 'inscribing a limit' around the soles of Job's feet. The semantic range moves from physical carving to metaphorical boundary-setting.

(4×) Carving or engraving figures on a surface, used of both legitimate temple decoration and illicit idolatrous imagery. The Pual participle mehuqqeh describes carved work on Solomon's temple doors (1 Kgs 6:35) and the abominable images Ezekiel sees scratched into the temple walls (Ezek 8:10) and the Chaldean figures that seduced Oholibah (Ezek 23:14). In Job 13:27, the Hithpael shifts to marking a boundary: 'you engrave a mark around the soles of my feet.' The multilingual glosses reflect both domains: English 'carved' / 'set-a-limit,' Spanish 'grabados' / 'trazas-limite,' confirming the dual semantic field of artistic inscription and boundary demarcation. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: carved, the-carved-work, you-set-a-limit | es: grabados, lo-tallado, trazas-límite | fr: graver, le-sculpté-œuvre, תחקה | de: [מחקה], [תחקה], der-carved-Werk 1Kgs 6:35; Job 13:27; Ezek 8:10; Ezek 23:14

חֻקָּה H2708 N-fpc / 3ms (105×)

A prescribed statute or ordinance; a binding regulation from God or a ruler, often permanent and ritual in character.

Chuqqah is the feminine form of choq and denotes a prescribed statute or enacted ordinance, overwhelmingly used for divine laws with a permanent, ritual character. The phrase chuqqat olam ('an everlasting statute') recurs throughout Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers for Passover regulations, priestly duties, and Day of Atonement rituals (Exod 12:14; Lev 16:29). Yet chuqqah also names the fixed ordinances of nature—the appointed seasons (Jer 5:24) and the cosmic decrees governing heaven and earth (Jer 31:35; 33:25). Spanish 'estatuto,' French 'statut,' and German 'Satzung' consistently render it as formal enacted law.

1. statute or ordinance (93×) The core sense: a specific statute or ordinance prescribed by God, binding as a permanent obligation on Israel. This covers the ritual statutes of Passover (Exod 12:14, 43), priestly regulations (Exod 27:21; 28:43), the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:29, 34), and the recurring phrase chuqqat olam ('an everlasting statute'). Also includes God's statutes given to the patriarchs (Gen 26:5) and the statutes Moses teaches Israel. Spanish 'estatuto-de,' French 'statut-de,' and German 'Satzung-von' reflect this juridical-ritual core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-statute-of, statute-of | es: Estatuto-de, estatuto-de, estatuto-de- | fr: statut-de, un-statut-de | de: Satzung-von, ein-Satzung-von Gen 26:5; Exod 12:14; Exod 12:17; Exod 12:43; Exod 27:21

2. (8×) The plural form used for the ordinances of nature or of nations—the fixed decrees governing cosmic and social order. Jer 5:24 speaks of the 'appointed weeks' of harvest as chuqqot; Jer 31:35 names the sun and moon as governed by chuqqot; Jer 33:25 invokes the chuqqot of heaven and earth. Also includes Jer 10:3 on the 'customs of the peoples' (pagan practices). This sense shifts from specific Mosaic ritual law to the broader concept of established order, whether divine or cultural. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: statutes-of, the-customs-of | es: establecidas-de, estatutos-de | fr: statut | de: Satzung, Satzungen, [חקות] Jer 5:24; Jer 10:3; Jer 31:35; Jer 33:25; Ezek 43:18

3. (4×) A prepositional construction ('in the statutes of') used to describe walking in or following someone else's statutes, typically in a negative context of Israel imitating foreign nations. Lev 20:23 warns against walking 'in the statutes of' the nations; 1 Kgs 3:3 notes Solomon walked 'in the statutes of' David; 2 Kgs 17:8, 19 condemn Israel for walking 'in the statutes of' the nations. The consistent prepositional framing—eng 'in-statutes-of,' spa 'en-estatutos-de,' deu 'in-Satzungen-von'—marks this as a distinct syntactic-semantic pattern emphasizing conformity or imitation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-statutes-of, in-the-statutes-of | es: en-estatutos-de, en-los-estatutos-de | fr: dans-le-statuts-de, dans-statuts-de | de: in-Satzungen-von, in-der-Satzungen-von Lev 20:23; 1Kgs 3:3; 2Kgs 17:8; 2Kgs 17:19

חֲקוּפָא H2709 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hakupha; family head of returning temple servants

Hakupha was the head of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears in parallel lists in Ezra 2:51 and Nehemiah 7:53. The etymology remains uncertain, though the name follows typical post-exilic patterns. These temple servant families played crucial roles in maintaining the second temple's operations.

(2×) Ezra 2:51 and Nehemiah 7:53 list Hakupha identically among the Nethinim families. The LXX shows wide variation in transliteration, reflecting uncertainty about the name's pronunciation. French and German transliterate the Hebrew directly. These parallel lists served to verify genealogical legitimacy for temple service. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chaqufa, Hakupha | es: Hacufa, Jacufá | fr: [חקופא] | de: [חקופא] Ezra 2:51; Neh 7:53

חָקַק H2710 V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc / 1cp (19×)

To cut in, inscribe, or engrave; by extension, to decree or enact laws; as a substantive, a ruler, lawgiver, or the scepter symbolizing authority.

A richly layered verb whose core image is the act of cutting marks into a hard surface — stone, metal, or tablet. From this physical act of engraving flows the metaphor of inscribing law: one who carves decrees into stone becomes the lawgiver, and the staff he holds becomes the scepter of authority. In Genesis 49:10 Jacob prophesies that the scepter (mᵉḥoqēq) will not depart from Judah, while in Isaiah 49:16 God declares 'I have engraved you on the palms of my hands' — the same verb moving from political authority to tender intimacy. The Spanish 'legislador' and 'cetro' neatly mirror this dual trajectory from engraver to ruler.

1. engrave, inscribe (6×) The primary physical action: to cut, carve, or inscribe marks into a durable surface such as stone, metal, or clay. In Proverbs 8:27 Wisdom witnesses God inscribing a circle on the face of the deep at creation, while in Isaiah 30:8 the prophet is told to write on a tablet and engrave it in a book. The English glosses 'engrave' and 'inscribe' correspond to Spanish 'trazó' and

'decretó,' suggesting the act already shades toward authoritative marking. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING
en: I-have-engraved-you, and-you-shall-engrave, carving-in | es: cuando-decretó-él, cuando-trazó-él, el-que-excava | fr: [חקה], [חקקי], [חקתיך] | de: [בחוקו], [חקה], [חקקי] Prov 8:27; Prov 8:29; Isa 22:16; Isa 30:8; Isa 49:16

2. ruler's staff, scepter (4×) A metonymic extension where the Piel participle refers to the ruler's staff or scepter — the physical instrument of the one who engraves law. In Genesis 49:10 it appears alongside 'scepter' (šēbeṭ), and in Numbers 21:18 the nobles dig a well 'with the scepter' (bimḥoqēq). Spanish 'cetro' and German 'Zepter' capture this concrete object sense, while the underlying metaphor links carved authority to the rod of office. RODS AND STAFFS
en: My-scepter, and-ruler's-staff, is-my-scepter | es: con-el-legislador, mi-cetro, mi-legislador | fr: avec-scepter, de-graver, et-ruler's-bâton | de: ist-mein-Zepter, mein-Zepter, mit-scepter Gen 49:10; Num 21:18; Ps 60:7; Ps 108:8

3. lawgiver, ruler, commander (4×) Used substantively for the person who enacts legislation: the lawgiver, ruler, or commander. Deuteronomy 33:21 speaks of a commander's portion reserved for the lawgiver, and Judges 5:9 celebrates Israel's commanders (ḥoqᵉqê) who volunteered for battle. Spanish 'legislador' and 'legisladores' consistently render this human-agent sense, distinguishing it from the instrument (sense 2) and the act of decreeing (sense 4). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -commanders, commander, is-for-the-commanders-of | es: legislador, legisladores, nuestro-legislador | fr: -commanders, [מחקקנו], commandant | de: -Befehlshaber, Befehlshaber, [מחקקנו] Deut 33:21; Judg 5:9; Judg 5:14; Isa 33:22

4. decree, enact laws (3×) The verbal act of issuing decrees or enacting statutes with binding force. In Proverbs 8:15 wisdom declares 'by me kings reign and rulers decree what is just,' and in Isaiah 10:1 the prophet pronounces woe upon 'those who decree iniquitous decrees.' Spanish 'decretan' and 'lo-decretado' highlight the legislative act itself rather than the agent or instrument. COMMANDING AND ORDERING
en: decree, those-decreeing, what-is-decreed | es: de-los-que-decretan, decretan, lo-decretado | fr: [החקקים], graver | de: [החקקים], [יחקקו], [מחקק] Prov 8:15; Prov 31:5; Isa 10:1

5. be engraved, be inscribed (2×) The passive result of engraving: to be carved or inscribed upon a surface. Job 19:23 expresses the wish that his words 'be inscribed in a book' and engraved with an iron stylus, while Ezekiel 23:14 describes figures of Chaldeans engraved on a wall. This Qal passive participle and Hofal usage presents the completed state of the inscription rather than the active process. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING
en: and-be-inscribed, engraved | es: esculpidos, que-fueran-grabadas, | fr: et-graver, graver | de: [ויחקו], [חקקים] Job 19:23; Ezek 23:14

חֹק H2711 N-mpc (2×)
statute, prescription, decree; something engraved or prescribed
This noun, related to חָקַק (engrave, inscribe), denotes something prescribed or decreed—whether laws, assigned portions, or personal resolves. It appears in diverse contexts: the prescribed task imposed on Israel in Egypt, food portions assigned to Egyptian priests, the statutes of God, and even 'resolves of heart' (Judges 5:15). Isaiah 10:1 uses it for the unjust decrees written by oppressive legislators. The 'engraved' etymology underscores the permanence and authority of what is prescribed.

(2×) Judges 5:15 uses the construct plural 'resolves of heart' (חִקְקֵי לֵב), while Isaiah 10:1 condemns those who 'write decrees of iniquity' (חֹקְקֵי אָוֶן). Spanish 'decretos de/resoluciones de' (decrees of/resolutions of) captures both legislative and personal senses. The unusual plural form חִקְקֵי (instead of חֻקֵּי) appears only in these poetic contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -searchings-of-, decrees-of- | es: decretos-de, resoluciones-de | fr: -searchings-de-, [חקקי] | de: -searchings-von-, [חקקי] Judg 5:15; Isa 10:1

חֻקֹּק H2712a N-proper-fs (1×)
Chuqoqah, a border town in Naphtali's territory (with directional suffix 'toward') Chuqoqah marks a boundary point in Naphtali's tribal allotment in Joshua 19:34, appearing with the directional suffix indicating 'toward Chuqoqah.' Robinson identified it with Yakûk, located about four miles northwest of the Sea of Galilee. The name may derive from a root meaning 'engraved' or 'decreed,' possibly referring to border markers or boundary stones. The multilingual glosses preserve the name with minimal adaptation, reflecting its function as a proper geographic designation.

(1×) The Hebrew form with ה-locale (הָ) indicates movement toward or in the direction of this border town. This grammatical feature appears commonly in boundary descriptions, where the direction of the border line matters for defining tribal territory. The town served as a geographic reference point for delimiting Naphtali's western boundary. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Chuqoqah | es: a-Hucoc | fr: Chuqoqah | de: Chuqoqah Josh 19:34

חוּקֹק H2712b N-proper-fs (1×)
Chuqoq, a Levitical city in Naphtali (likely a textual variant of Helqat)
Chuqoq appears only in 1 Chronicles 6:75 as a Levitical city assigned to the Gershonite clan. Scholars widely regard this as a textual error for Helqat (חֶלְקָת), which appears in the parallel lists in Joshua 19:25 and 21:31. The similar spelling and easy confusion of Hebrew letters ק and ת likely caused the scribal variation. Modern archaeological excavations at Huqoq in Galilee have uncovered a significant late antique synagogue, though the biblical identification remains uncertain.

(1×) The listing in Chronicles places this city among the Asherite settlements given to Levites, yet the geographic context points to Naphtali's territory. The textual tradition shows significant variation here, with some translations bracketing the term to indicate uncertainty. The parallel passages in Joshua support the Helqat reading, suggesting this represents a copyist's error preserved in the Masoretic tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Chuqoq | es: Juqoq | fr: [חוקק] | de: [חוקק] 1Chr 6:75

חָקַר H2713 Conj-w (27×)
To search out, investigate, examine, or probe; in Nifal, to be fathomable or searchable
A verb of thorough, methodical investigation — whether scouting enemy territory, probing a person's character, or plumbing the depths of divine wisdom. When the Danites send spies to 'search out' the land (Judg 18:2), the word carries physical exploration; when the psalmist invites God to 'search me and know my heart' (Ps 139:23), it becomes intensely personal. The Nifal passive raises a theological question heard across the prophets: can God's greatness truly be 'searched out'? Spanish 'escudriña' and French 'sonder' both capture the deliberate, penetrating quality of this inquiry.

1. search out, investigate a matter (16×) Active investigation or exploration of a matter, place, or situation to discover the truth. Judges 18:2 sends spies to 'search out' the land, and David promises Jonathan he will 'sound out' his father's intentions (1 Sam 20:12). The word implies thoroughness — not a casual glance but a systematic probe. Deuteronomy 13:14 pairs it with 'inquire' and 'ask diligently,' forming a legal triad of due diligence. Spanish 'escudriña' and French cognates emphasize this forensic quality. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: I-searched-out, I-sound-out, and-examine-them | es: a-buscar, buscarán, escudriña | fr: [ונחקרה], [חקר], [לחקר] | de: [אחקרהו], [ונחקרה], [חוקר] Judg 18:2; 1Sam 20:12; 2Sam 10:3; 1Chr 19:3

2. examine, probe a person (6×) Examining or probing a person, especially the interior life — heart, motives, character. Psalm 139:1 declares 'You have searched me and known me,' and verse 23 invites that scrutiny: 'Search me, O God.' Job 13:9 challenges his friends: 'Will it be well when he searches you out?' Proverbs 18:17

notes that a neighbor comes and 'searches' the one who states his case first. The verb here implies penetrating beyond surfaces to reach hidden truth. German and French translations both lean on terms for 'probing' or 'sounding.' RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-searches-him, and-you-shall-investigate, he-searches | es: Escudriñame, escudriñe, lo-escudriñará | fr: et-sonder-lui, et-tu-devra-investigate, sonder | de: [וחקרו], [יחקרנו], du-haben-searched-mich Deut 13:14; Job 13:9; Ps 139:1; Ps 139:23; Prov 18:17

3. be searched out, be fathomed (Nifal) (4×) The Nifal passive: being searchable, fathomable, or able to be fully explored — frequently used in negation. Jeremiah 31:37 says the foundations of the earth cannot be 'searched out' below, paralleling the impossibility of God rejecting Israel. Jeremiah 46:23 describes a forest so dense it 'cannot be searched.' The rhetorical force depends on the verb's active meaning: if searching is thorough, then what resists searching is truly beyond reach. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-can-be-searched-out, it-can-be-searched, was-searched-out | es: fue-investigado, puede-ser-explorado, y-fueran-escudriñados | fr: [ויחקרו], [יחקר], [נחקר] | de: [ויחקרו], [יחקר], [נחקר] 1Kgs 7:47; 2Chr 4:18; Jer 31:37; Jer 46:23

4. (1×) A summary Qal usage in Ecclesiastes 12:9 where the Preacher 'searched out' and arranged many proverbs — the intellectual labor of compiling wisdom literature. This stands as a bridge between the physical scouting of sense 1 and the personal probing of sense 2: here the object of investigation is language and meaning itself. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-searched-out | es: y-examinó | fr: et-sonder | de: und-erforschte Eccl 12:9

חֵקֶר H2714 N-ms (12×)

Searching, investigation — the act of probing deeply into what is hidden, inscrutable, or beyond reach

The noun חֵקֶר (cheqer) denotes the process or result of deep investigation — a thorough searching-out of what is hidden. It appears most frequently in wisdom and poetic literature, where it underscores the limits of human knowledge before divine mystery. Job declares that God's wonders are 'without searching out' (Job 5:9; 9:10), and the psalmist affirms that God's greatness is 'unsearchable' (Ps 145:3). In Judges 5:15-16, Deborah asks why Reuben lingered amid 'searchings of heart' — introspective deliberation about whether to join the battle. Proverbs uses the word for the unfathomable depths of a king's heart (Prov 25:3). Spanish 'búsquedas' and French 'recherche' both capture the investigative probing.

searching / investigation (12×) The act or result of deep examination, investigation, or probing into what is hidden or inscrutable. Used of divine works beyond human comprehension (Job 5:9; 9:10; 11:7; Ps 145:3), of internal deliberation and self-examination ('searchings of heart,' Judg 5:15-16), and of the unfathomable depths of royal authority or human character (Prov 25:3). Often appears in the negative construction 'without searching' (אֵין חֵקֶר), meaning 'past finding out' or 'inscrutable.' Spanish 'búsquedas' and English 'searching' both convey the probing, investigative quality. INVESTIGATION INQUIRY

en: -searchings-of-, ?-searching-of, and-in-the-recesses-of | es: búsquedas-de, e-investigar, escudriñamiento | fr: -searchings-de-, [חקר], et-recherche | de: -searchings-von-, [ובחקר], [חקר] Judg 5:16; Job 5:9; Job 8:8; Job 9:10; Job 11:7

חֹר H2715 N-mp (13×)

Nobles, leading men — the patrician ruling class, especially of postexilic Judah alongside the officials

A late term for the hereditary aristocracy, appearing almost exclusively in Nehemiah where it designates the 'nobles' who, together with the seganim ('officials'), constituted the governing elite of postexilic Jerusalem. Nehemiah both relies on and rebukes them — they help rebuild the walls (Neh 4:14, 19) yet also intermarry with Tobiah's family (6:17) and exploit the poor (5:7). Earlier uses place nobles in Naboth's city (1 Kgs 21:8, 11), in Jeremiah's Judean court (Jer 27:20; 39:6), and in Edom's doomed leadership (Isa 34:12). German 'Edler' and Spanish 'nobles' capture the social rank precisely.

nobles, leading men (13×) Members of the hereditary ruling class, nobles or patricians who hold social rank and political authority. Concentrated in Nehemiah (2:16; 4:8, 14, 19; 5:7; 6:17; 7:5; 13:17), where they appear paired with seganim ('officials') as co-leaders of the postexilic community. Also attested in the monarchic period for the elites of Naboth's city (1 Kgs 21:8, 11), the Judean nobility exiled by Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 27:20; 39:6), Edom's rulers (Isa 34:12), and in wisdom reflection (Eccl 10:17). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Her-nobles, and-the-nobles, and-to-the-nobles | es: Sus-nobles, los-nobles, nobles | fr: [חרי], [חריה], et-le-nobles | de: Edler, [חרי], [חריה] 1Kgs 21:8; 1Kgs 21:11; Neh 2:16; Neh 4:14; Neh 4:19

חֲרֵאֵ H2716 N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

their excrement (crude term in the context of siege conditions)

This word appears in Isaiah 36:12 during the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem, where the Rabshakeh graphically describes the deprivation awaiting the city's defenders. The term refers to human excrement in a context of extreme siege conditions where normal food and water would be unavailable. The Spanish translation preserves the crude directness with 'su-excremento,' while French and German translators struggled to render this vulgar siege rhetoric. The parallel passage in 2 Kings 18:27 uses slightly different vocalization but conveys the same shocking imagery.

(1×) The Rabshakeh's speech employs deliberately offensive language to demoralize Jerusalem's defenders, painting a vivid picture of the horrors of prolonged siege. The possessive suffix 'their' intensifies the degradation. This rare lexical item occurs in prophetic literature only in this siege narrative and its parallel, reflecting the extreme circumstances that would drive people to consume their own bodily waste. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: with-you | es: [su-excremento] | fr: [[חראיהם]] | de: [[חראיהם]] Isa 36:12

חָרַב H2717a V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (16×)

To be dry or dried up; in the Hifil, to cause to dry up; said of waters, land, and vegetation.

Charev is the Hebrew Bible's word for the relentless advance of dryness – waters receding, riverbeds cracking, vegetation withering under divine judgment or natural process. Its first appearance is cosmic: after the flood, the face of the ground 'was dried' (Gen 8:13). The psalmist celebrates God rebuking the Red Sea so that it 'dried up' (Ps 106:9), and Isaiah warns that the Nile 'will be dried up and parched' (Isa 19:5-6). In the Hifil, the agent – almost always God – actively dries up the waters: 'I dried up the sea' (Isa 50:2), 'I will dry up her pool' (Jer 51:36). Whether describing natural evaporation or sovereign intervention, charev consistently evokes the power of God over water and life.

1. dry up, become parched (8×) To dry up or become parched – the Qal intransitive, describing waters, land, or rivers losing their moisture. The ground dries after the flood (Gen 8:13), the Nile dries up under judgment (Isa 19:5-6), and Job observes that 'waters fail from the sea and a river dries up and is parched' (Job 14:11). The psalmist recalls how God dried up the Red Sea (Ps 106:9). Spanish 'se-seca/se-secaron' and French 'dessecher' capture the intransitive withering. Eight occurrences establish this as the core sense. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: and-be-dried-up, and-it-dried-up, and-shall-become-dry | es: se-seca, se-secaron, se-secará | fr: [ויחרב], dévaster, et-dévaster | de: [ויחרב], [חרבי], [יחרב] Gen 8:13; Job 14:11; Ps 106:9; Isa 19:5

2. cause to dry up, make dry (6×) To cause to dry up – the Hifil causative, where God or a mighty agent actively removes moisture. God declares 'I dry up the sea with my rebuke' (Isa 50:2), Sennacherib boasts of drying up rivers (2 Kgs 19:24; Isa 37:25), and God promises to dry up Babylon's waters (Jer 51:36; Isa 51:10). Spanish 'seco/agoto' and German 'austrocknen' mark the active agency. Six occurrences, nearly all with God as subject. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: I-dry-up, and-I-dried-up, and-I-will-dry-up | es: agotó, la-que-secó, seco | fr: dévaster, et-dévaster, et-je-fera-dry-en-haut | de: [אחריב], [והחריב], [והמחרבת] 2Kgs 19:24; Isa 37:25; Isa 50:2; Isa 51:10; Jer 51:36

3. be dried (resultative) (2×) To be dried as a completed state – the Pual (intensive passive), expressing the resultative condition of something already fully dried. Samson's fresh bowstrings 'were dried' and became brittle (Judg 16:7-8), losing their binding power. Spanish 'se-habian-secado' and German 'trocknete' both render the accomplished-state nuance. Only two occurrences, both in the Samson narrative, give this sense a uniquely concrete, tactile quality distinct from the cosmic drying of waters. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: dried | es: se-habían-secado, se-han-secado | fr: sécha | de: trocknete Judg 16:7; Judg 16:8

חָרֵב H2717b V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (22×)

To be desolate or lie in ruins; in the Hifil, to lay waste or destroy; as a participle, a destroyer or devastator.

Charev paints landscapes emptied of life. The stative Qal describes cities and sanctuaries lying in ruins, as when Amos 7:9 warns that Israel's high places will be desolate. The causative Hifil names the agent behind the ruin: in 2 Kings 19:17 Sennacherib boasts of laying waste to nations, and Isaiah 42:15 describes God drying up mountains and hills. Nehemiah's grief over Jerusalem's burned gates (Neh 2:3, 17) draws on this same root. Arabic khariba and Aramaic charov share the same desolation imagery, confirming an ancient Semitic concept of inhabited space returned to emptiness.

1. be desolate, lie waste (15×) The intransitive or stative condition of being desolate, ruined, or lying waste. Cities, sanctuaries, and entire nations are described in this state. Amos 7:9 pairs it with nashammu ('be appalled'), and Ezekiel 12:20 parallels it with shamem ('be desolate'). Nehemiah 2:3 and 2:17 apply it to Jerusalem's shattered walls. Spanish 'desolada' and French 'ruines' consistently capture this sense of emptied desolation. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: be-utterly-desolate, desolate, it-shall-lie-waste | es: desolada, destruidas, la-desolada | fr: [חרבה], de-ruines, détruire | de: Schwert, [ההחרבה], [חרבה] Neh 2:3; Neh 2:17; Isa 34:10; Isa 60:12

2. lay waste, destroy (5×) The causative Hifil meaning to actively lay waste, destroy, or bring to ruin. Here the subject is the devastator: Sennacherib in 2 Kings 19:17, or God himself in Isaiah 42:15. Zephaniah 3:6 declares that whole nations have been laid waste. German 'verwuesten' and Spanish 'asolaron' reflect the active devastation this form conveys, distinguishing it from the passive 'lying in ruin' of sense 1. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: I-have-laid-waste, I-will-lay-waste, have-laid-waste | es: asolaron, asoló, desoladas | fr: détruire, dévaster, il-a-desséché | de: [והחרבתי], [והחריב], laid-waste 2Kgs 19:17; Isa 37:18; Isa 42:15; Ezek 19:7; Zeph 3:6

3. destroyer, one who lays waste (2×) The substantivized Hifil participle functioning as an agentive noun: 'destroyer' or 'one who lays waste.' In Judges 16:24 the Philistines call Samson 'the destroyer of our land,' and Isaiah 49:17 promises that Zion's destroyers will depart from her. This nominal use crystallizes the verb's action into a personal title of devastation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-demolishers, destroyer-of | es: el-destruidor-de, y-tus-asoladores | fr: destroyer-de, et-dévaster | de: destroyer-von, und-verwuesten Judg 16:24; Isa 49:17

חָרַב H2717c V-Qal-Imp-ms (4×)

To attack, fight, smite down; wage war against (rare Aramaic-influenced verb distinct from harav 'to dry up')

A rare verb (harav III), distinct from the common harav meaning 'to be dry/desolate,' with cognates in Arabic (haraba, 'to plunder, wage war') and Syriac ('to smite, slay'). It appears in military contexts: God commands an attack on Merathaim and Pekod (Jer 50:21, 27), and the Moabite kings are reported to have 'fought together' and struck one another down (2 Kgs 3:23). The martial sense is confirmed by parallel verbs like haharem ('utterly destroy') and the mutual-combat construction.

(4×) To attack or wage war, used of military assault and mutual combat. In Jeremiah 50:21, the Qal imperative harov commands attack on Babylon's territories, paired with 'utterly destroy (haharem) after them.' Jeremiah 50:27 extends this to slaughtering Babylon's warriors ('slay all her bulls'). In 2 Kings 3:23, the Niphal/Hophal describes the Moabite kings attacking one another (nehervu hammelakhim). The multilingual evidence shows translators split between 'slay/kill' (English, Spanish 'mata') and 'sword' (German 'Schwert,' French 'epee'), the latter conflating this verb with herev ('sword'), a common confusion given the shared consonantal root. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: slay, surely-destroyed, were-destroyed | es: Ciertamente-a-espada, mata, maten | fr: [חרבו], certainement-détruisit, furent-détruisit | de: Schwert, gewiss-zerstoerte, sein-Schwert 2Kgs 3:23; Jer 50:21; Jer 50:27

חָרַב H2718 V-Hofal-Perf-3fs (1×)

was laid waste, destroyed (Aramaic Hophal form describing Jerusalem's past ruin)

This Aramaic verb form appears in Ezra 4:15, where Persian officials report that Jerusalem 'was destroyed' in previous generations, citing this as justification for halting reconstruction. The Hophal stem indicates passive voice—the city received the action of being laid waste, likely by Babylonian forces in 586 BCE. The multilingual glosses reflect difficulty rendering this rare Aramaic conjugation, with Spanish capturing the passive sense clearly: 'fue destruida' ('it was destroyed'). The word connects to the common Hebrew root for devastation and ruin.

(1×) The Persian-era officials use this verb to characterize Jerusalem's rebellious history, arguing that the city's destruction was divine judgment or political consequence of insurrection. The perfect tense establishes this as historical fact in their argument against Judean restoration. The Aramaic verbal system here provides an official, imperial tone to the correspondence with the Persian court. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: was-destroyed | es: fue-destruida. | fr: [ההחרבת] | de: [ההחרבת] Ezra 4:15

חֶרֶב H2719 N-fsc / 3mp (413×)

Sword, the primary bladed weapon of warfare and divine judgment; rarely 'knives' (flint blades) or 'ruins' (by homophonic confusion).

Cherev is the quintessential weapon word of the Hebrew Bible, appearing over 400 times to denote the sword in every dimension of Israelite experience – from Cain's world to the apocalyptic visions of the prophets. It names the literal blade at a warrior's side (1 Sam 21:9), the instrument of judicial execution, and the terrifying 'sword of the LORD' that sweeps through prophetic judgment oracles (Jer 12:12; Ezek 21). Two marginal senses emerge from the data: in Joshua 5:2-3, multilingual glosses like 'cuchillos-de' and 'knives-of' point to flint knives for circumcision rather than war swords. A lone occurrence in 2 Chronicles 34:6 appears connected to the homophone chorvot meaning 'ruins.'

1. sword, weapon of war (410×) A bladed weapon used in combat, execution, and divine judgment, covering virtually all occurrences. Includes literal swords wielded by soldiers and kings (Gen 34:26; Exod 17:13), the flaming sword guarding Eden (Gen 3:24), and the personified 'sword of YHWH' as an instrument of covenant curse and prophetic wrath (Lev 26:25; Jer 14:12). Glosses across languages are remarkably consistent: 'espada,' 'épée,' 'Schwert,' all pointing to the standard war sword. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: a-sword, sword, the-sword | es: espada, la-espada | fr: l'-épée, un-épée, épée | de: Schwert, der-Schwert, des-Schwertes Gen 31:26; Gen 34:26; Exod 5:21; Exod 17:13; Lev 26:25

2. (2×) Flint knives, as in Joshua 5:2-3 where God commands Joshua to make 'knives of flint' for circumcision. Multilingual glosses shift decisively here: English 'knives-of,' Spanish 'cuchillos-de,' and French 'knives-de' all indicate a cutting tool distinct from the war sword. The plural construct form chavrot tzurim (knives of flint) marks these as ritual implements rather than battlefield weapons. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: knives-of | es: cuchillos-de | fr: knives-de | de: knives-von Josh 5:2; Josh 5:3

3. (1×) A probable textual-semantic anomaly in 2 Chronicles 34:6, where glosses read 'in-their-ruins' (English) and 'en-sus-ruinas' (Spanish), suggesting the underlying text reflects the homophone chorvot (ruins, from charav 'to be desolate') rather than the weapon sense. French and German glosses retain 'épée'/'Schwert,' showing translation traditions diverge at this crux. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: in-their-ruins | es: en-sus-ruinas | fr: épée | de: Schwert 2Chr 34:6

חָרֵב H2720a Conj-w / Adj-fs (2×)

dry, parched; not mixed with oil or moisture

This adjective describes dryness, specifically food without moisture. Leviticus 7:10 refers to a grain offering that is 'dry'—not mixed with oil, in contrast to moistened offerings. Proverbs 17:1 speaks of 'a dry morsel with quietness' being better than a house full of feasting with strife. The term emphasizes plainness and lack of enrichment, often in contexts valuing simplicity over luxury.

(2×) Leviticus 7:10 contrasts dry grain offerings with those moistened by oil, while Proverbs 17:1 uses 'dry bread' as a symbol of simple, peaceful living. Spanish 'seco/y seca' (dry/and dry) and German 'trocken/und trocken' maintain the basic adjectival sense. The feminine form חֲרֵבָה agrees with the feminine nouns it modifies. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: and-dry, dry | es: seco, y-seca | fr: et-dry, חרבה | de: [חרבה], und-trocken Lev 7:10; Prov 17:1

חָרֵב H2720b Adj-ms (6×)

Waste, desolate, ruined; describing cities or places that have been destroyed and left uninhabited.

The adjective charev (II) describes places – especially cities and buildings – that lie in a state of ruin and desolation, devoid of inhabitants. It differs from the related verb charav ('to be dry, desolate') by functioning as a fixed descriptor of post-destruction states. Nehemiah uses it twice of Jerusalem's burned gates and broken walls (Neh 2:3, 17). Ezekiel employs it in restoration oracles where the formerly desolate cities will be rebuilt and inhabited (Ezek 36:35, 38). Haggai applies it pointedly to the temple lying in ruins while the people live in paneled houses (Hag 1:4, 9).

ruined, desolate, waste (6×) In a state of ruin, waste, or desolation, used of cities, buildings, and inhabited places that have been destroyed or left without people. Spanish consistently renders 'desolada/desolado,' while English gives 'desolate' and 'ruined.' The prophetic texts use this adjective to create powerful contrasts: Jeremiah's 'desolate, without man or beast' (Jer 33:10, 12), Ezekiel's vision of ruined cities becoming like the garden of Eden (Ezek 36:35), and Haggai's rebuke that God's house lies charev while the people's own houses are finished (Hag 1:4, 9). WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: desolate, ruined, the-desolate | es: desolada, desolada?, desolado | fr: le-ruines, l'épée, sécheresse | de: Schwert, [החרב], [החרבות] Jer 33:10; Jer 33:12; Ezek 36:35; Ezek 36:38; Hag 1:4

חֹרֶב H2721a Prep-l (12×)

Drought, parching heat — extreme dryness or scorching warmth that withers vegetation and threatens life

The noun חֹרֶב (choreb) refers to the desiccating force of drought or extreme heat, the opposite of moisture and dew. Jacob invokes it vividly when recounting his years with Laban: 'by day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night' (Gen 31:40). Gideon uses it as a test — the fleece should remain dry while the ground is wet (Judg 6:37, 39). The prophets deploy it as a figure of divine judgment: Jeremiah calls drought upon Babylon's waters (Jer 50:38), Haggai links it to covenant unfaithfulness (Hag 1:11), and Zephaniah pairs it with desolation (Zeph 2:14). Spanish 'calor/sequía' and French 'sécheresse' capture the climatic harshness.

dryness, drought, heat (12×) Extreme dryness, drought, or scorching heat that withers vegetation and threatens survival. Jacob cites it among the hardships of pastoral labor (Gen 31:40), Gideon uses it as the condition opposed to dew on the fleece (Judg 6:37, 39), and Job pairs it with snow-melt to describe nature's cycles (Job 24:19). The prophets invoke it as an instrument of divine judgment: drought summoned upon Babylon's waters (Jer 50:38), called upon the land for covenant violation (Hag 1:11), and associated with ruin (Isa 4:6; 25:4-5; Zeph 2:14). Spanish 'calor' and German 'Hitze' emphasize the heat aspect; French 'sécheresse' emphasizes the dryness. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: Like-heat, a-drought, drought | es: Como-calor, al-calor, calor | fr: comme-sécheresse, de-sécheresse, dryness | de: Hitze, Schwert, [כחרב] Gen 31:40; Judg 6:37; Judg 6:39; Judg 6:40; Job 30:30

חֹרֶב H2721b Prep-l / N-ms (4×)

Desolation, waste, ruin; the state of being laid waste (distinct from horev 'dryness' and herev 'sword')

A noun meaning 'desolation' or 'ruin,' closely related to the verb harav ('to be waste') but distinct from horev I ('dryness, drought') and herev ('sword'). It describes the utter devastation of cities and lands: Isaiah 61:4 speaks of rebuilding 'cities of desolation' (arei horev), Jeremiah 49:13 prophesies that Bozrah will become a waste, and Ezekiel 29:10 declares Egypt 'wastes of desolation.' The pairing with shomemot ('desolations') and harvot ('ruins') reinforces its semantic field of comprehensive destruction.

(4×) The state of utter devastation or ruin, applied to cities and regions under divine judgment. In Isaiah 61:4, the Servant's mission includes rebuilding 'cities of horev' (parallel to shomemot and horvot, 'desolations and ruins'). Jeremiah 49:13 uses it of Bozrah's coming fate, and Ezekiel 29:10 compounds it as 'horvot horev' ('wastes of desolation') over Egypt. The multilingual glosses reveal translator difficulty: French and German render 'epee/Schwert' (sword), likely confusing this noun with herev, while English correctly gives 'desolation' and Spanish 'destruccion/sequedad.' Zephaniah 2:14's occurrence in the oracle against Nineveh may require emendation to orev ('raven') per Wellhausen. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: desolation, for-a-waste, ruin | es: destrucción, para-ruina, sequedad | fr: sécheresse, à-l'épée, épée | de: Schwert, zum-Schwert Isa 61:4; Jer 49:13; Ezek 29:10; Zeph 2:14

חֹרֵב H2722 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (17×)

Horeb — the mountain of God in the wilderness, synonymous with Sinai in the Deuteronomic tradition

Chorev (Horeb) is the proper name of the sacred mountain where God revealed himself to Moses and Israel, appearing 17 times in the Old Testament. The name derives from charav ('to be dry, waste'), evoking the arid desert landscape. In the Elohist source and Deuteronomy, Horeb functions as the primary name for the mountain that the Priestly source calls Sinai — no geographical distinction between the two has ever been convincingly demonstrated. Moses encounters the burning bush at 'the mountain of God, Horeb' (Exod 3:1), and strikes water from 'the rock at Horeb' (Exod 17:6). Deuteronomy concentrates the name heavily: the covenant is made 'at Horeb' (Deut 5:2; 28:69), the golden calf rebellion occurs 'at Horeb' (Deut 9:8), and Moses recalls the theophany 'at Horeb' throughout his farewell addresses (Deut 1:2, 6, 19; 4:10, 15; 18:16). Elijah flees to 'the mountain of God, Horeb' (1 Kgs 19:8), and Malachi closes the prophetic corpus with the command to 'remember the Torah of Moses my servant, which I commanded him at Horeb' (Mal 3:22). Spanish 'Horeb,' French 'Horeb,' and German 'Horeb' all transliterate the name uniformly.

Horeb (Mount Horeb) (17×) The proper name of the sacred mountain in the Sinai wilderness where God appeared to Moses and gave the covenant to Israel. Identified as 'the mountain of God' in Exodus 3:1 (the burning bush) and 1 Kings 19:8 (Elijah's flight), and used as the preferred designation for Sinai throughout Deuteronomy (Deut 1:2, 6, 19; 4:10, 15; 5:2; 9:8, 12, 16; 18:16; 28:69). The etymology from charav ('to be dry') evokes the desert setting. Also referenced in the ark narrative (1 Kgs 8:9; 2 Chr 5:10), the golden calf episode (Ps 106:19), and Malachi's closing exhortation to remember the Torah given at Horeb (Mal 3:22). The LXX renders it Choreb; all major translation traditions preserve the name. PROPER NAMES

(PERSONAL)
en: Horeb, Horeb-ward, Horev | es: Horeb, Joreb, Jorev | fr: Horeb, Horeb-garde, Horev | de: Horeb, Horeb-ward, Horev Exod 3:1; Exod 17:6; Exod 33:6; Deut 1:2; Deut 1:6

חָרְבָּה H2723 N-fpc / 3fs (42×)

Waste, ruin, desolation; the physical rubble or abstract state of a destroyed place

A noun found predominantly in the prophets and later writings, conveying the devastation that befalls cities and lands under divine judgment. In its most common usage it denotes the concrete rubble and remains of destroyed settlements, as when Ezra speaks of rebuilding 'its ruins' (Ezra 9:9). It also appears predicatively to describe the resultant state of desolation, as in Leviticus 26:31 where sanctuaries shall become 'a waste.' Spanish and French translations consistently distinguish between 'ruinas' (physical remains) and 'desolación/ruine' (the condition), reflecting this same dual register.

1. ruins of a place (24×) The physical remains of destruction – crumbled walls, rubble heaps, and desolate sites. Typically plural (chorbot), referring to concrete ruins of cities or buildings. Job 3:14 uses it of ancient ruins rebuilt by kings, while Psalm 9:6 declares that the enemy's ruins are perpetual. Cross-lingual glosses ('ruinas,' 'Trümmer,' 'ruines') consistently point to tangible wreckage. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: and-her-ruins, and-ruins-of, and-the-ruins | es: de-sus-ruinas, en-las-ruinas, en-ruinas | fr: [חרבתיו], dans-ruines, de-ruine | de: Truemmer, Truemmern, [חרבות] Ezra 9:9; Job 3:14; Ps 9:6; Ps 102:6; Ps 109:10

2. state of ruin or desolation (17×) The abstract condition or destiny of being laid waste, often introduced by the preposition lamed to indicate result ('shall become a ruin'). Leviticus 26:31 and 26:33 use it of sanctuaries and the land itself becoming desolate under covenant curse. Jeremiah 7:34 and 22:5 employ it as a prophetic pronouncement of what a place shall become. Spanish 'desolación' and French 'en ruine' capture this predicative, stative nuance. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: a-ruin, and-waste, as-ruin | es: a-ruina, desolación, en-desolación | fr: en-ruine, et-ruine, pour-ruines | de: Truemmer, ein-Ruine, und-Truemmer Lev 26:31; Lev 26:33; Isa 64:11; Jer 7:34; Jer 22:5

3. (1×) A rare usage in Isaiah 48:21 where the term appears in a context describing passage through desert wastes rather than urban ruins. English renders 'in the deserts,' suggesting an extension from 'desolate place' to 'barren wilderness,' though some scholars emend the text. The singular occurrence makes its distinctness from sense 1 uncertain. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: in-the-deserts | es: por-desiertos | fr: dans-ruines | de: in-Truemmern Isa 48:21

חָרָבָה H2724 Art / N-fs (8×)

Dry ground or land, especially as revealed by the miraculous withdrawal of water in divine acts of deliverance.

Refers to solid earth that is dry or has been made dry, most memorably in the context of God's miraculous water-crossings. When the Jordan parted for Israel (Josh 3:17) and when the Sea split before Moses (Exod 14:21), the exposed ground is called charavah. It also appears in Gen 7:22, marking the dry land from which the breath of life was swept away by the Flood. Spanish 'tierra seca' and German 'Trockenen' both capture the starkness of ground laid bare where water once stood.

dry land, dry ground (8×) Dry land or dry ground, the solid earth exposed when water recedes or is supernaturally divided. Nearly every occurrence involves a miraculous context: the parting of the Sea of Reeds (Exod 14:21), the crossing of the Jordan on dry ground (Josh 3:17; 4:18), and Elijah and Elisha crossing the Jordan (2 Kgs 2:8). The multilingual evidence is unanimous – Spanish 'tierra seca,' French 'terre ferme,' German 'Trockenen' – all converging on the image of firm, waterless ground. In Ezek 30:12 it extends to the prophetic drying up of the Nile channels, and in Hag 2:6 to God's shaking of the dry land alongside the sea. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT
en: dry-ground, in-the-dry-land, into-dry-land | es: a-tierra-seca, en-la-seco, en-lo-seco | fr: dans-le-terre-ferme, dans-terre-ferme, le-ruine | de: [ההחרבה], [חרבה], auf-dem-Trockenen Gen 7:22; Exod 14:21; Josh 3:17; Josh 4:18

חָרְבֹן H2725 Prep-b / N-mpc (1×)

in the drought/heat of (summer), metaphorically describing fever or affliction

Found only in Psalm 32:4, this phrase 'in the drought of summer' (בְּחַרְבֹנֵי קָיִץ) serves as a vivid metaphor for the physical effects of unconfessed sin. The psalmist describes how God's hand pressed heavily, draining his vitality as if exposed to scorching summer heat. The plural construct form suggests intense, repeated waves of drought-like conditions. Spanish 'sequías de' (droughts of) and French 'sécheresse' (dryness) capture the dehydrating imagery, while English and German translations preserve the meteorological metaphor.

(1×) The drought metaphor appears in the context of David's penitential confession, where moral and spiritual distress manifests as physical suffering. The 'summer' specification intensifies the image—not ordinary dryness but the relentless heat of ancient Near Eastern summers that could prove fatal. This rare construct phrase links agricultural disaster imagery with the interior landscape of guilt and conviction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: into-drought-of | es: en-sequías-de | fr: dans-sécheresse | de: hinein-drought-von Ps 32:4

חַרְבוֹנָא H2726 N-proper-ms (2×)

Harbona; Persian eunuch serving King Ahasuerus

Harbona was one of the seven eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus in the book of Esther. He appears first in Esther 1:10 among those commanded to bring Queen Vashti, and crucially in 7:9 where he informs the king about the gallows Haman prepared for Mordecai. His intervention leads directly to Haman's execution on those very gallows. The name appears to be Persian, possibly meaning 'donkey driver.'

(2×) Esther 1:10 spells the name חַרְבוֹנָא while 7:9 has חַרְבוֹנָה—minor orthographic variations of the same Persian name. In the latter, Harbona's timely information about the gallows turns the plot. French and German transliterate both forms. The character serves as an agent of poetic justice in the narrative. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Charbona, Harbona | es: Harbona, Jarbona | fr: [חרבונא], [חרבונה] | de: Charbona, [חרבונא] Esth 1:10; Esth 7:9

חָרַג H2727 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (1×)

and they came trembling/quaking (out of their fortresses in defeat)

This verb appears in Psalm 18:45, describing enemies emerging from their strongholds trembling with fear before God's anointed. The root suggests quaking, shuddering, or coming out with terror-induced trembling. The parallel in 2 Samuel 22:46 has a different MT reading (וַיַּחְגְּרוּ, 'and they gird'), but many scholars prefer this Psalms reading, which better fits the context of terrified submission. Spanish 'saldrán temblando' and French 'effroi' (terror) capture the emotional state, while the conjunction 'and' links this action to the previous clause about subjugation.

(1×) The image presents defeated enemies emerging from fortifications not in military order but in fearful surrender, their bodies shaking with dread. This physical manifestation of terror before divine power parallels similar descriptions in Micah 7:17 and Hosea 11:10-11, where nations tremble before Yahweh. The pregnant construction implies both the exit from fortresses and the manner of that exit—trembling, indicating complete psychological defeat. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING
en: and-came-trembling | es: y-saldrán-temblando | fr: et-effroi | de: und-kam-trembling Ps 18:45

חַרְגֹּל H2728 Art / N-ms (1×)

the cricket/locust (a clean insect species permitted for food)

Appearing in Leviticus 11:22's list of edible insects, 'the cricket' (הַחַרְגֹּל) names one of four locust species Israel could eat under dietary law. The definite article suggests a well-known variety, likely distinguished from the common locust (arbeh), the bald locust (sal'am), and the grasshopper (chagab). Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic cognates all denote locusts, suggesting a Semitic technical term for a specific species. The term may derive from a root suggesting hopping or swarming movement.

(1×) Within Levitical clean/unclean regulations, this represents one of the few permitted insect foods, reflecting ancient Near Eastern protein sources during locust swarms. The technical precision of four distinct species indicates careful taxonomic observation. Modern translations vary between 'cricket,' 'katydid,' and various locust subspecies, reflecting ongoing uncertainty about exact entomological identification across millennia. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: the-cricket | es: el-grillo | fr: le-cricket | de: der-cricket Lev 11:22

חָרַד H2729 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (39×)

To tremble, quake with fear or awe; in the Hiphil, to terrify or cause trembling

A verb whose physical root – shaking, quaking – branches into rich emotional territory. Isaac 'trembled exceedingly' when he realized he had blessed Jacob (Gen 27:33), and the brothers were 'dismayed' at finding the silver in their sacks (Gen 42:28). Mount Sinai itself trembled at God's descent (Exod 19:18). The Hiphil turns the experience outward: no one shall 'make them afraid' in the promised security of the land (Lev 26:6; Mic 4:4). The hapax in 2 Kings 4:13 is remarkable – Elisha asks the Shunammite 'you have shown all this anxious concern for us,' using the trembling root to describe solicitous care rather than terror. Spanish distinguishes 'temblar' (tremble) from 'aterrorizar' (terrify), while German frequently brackets the Hebrew root untranslated, acknowledging its visceral force.

1. tremble, quake with fear (22×) Qal trembling: to quake, shake, or tremble from fear, awe, or shock. Isaac trembled violently upon discovering the deception (Gen 27:33), the Israelites trembled at the thunder on Sinai (Exod 19:16), and Eli's heart 'trembled' for the ark (1 Sam 4:13). The verb conveys involuntary, full-body response to an overwhelming stimulus. Spanish 'temblar' and French 'trembler' preserve the physical concreteness. Hosea 11:10-11 pictures the exiles 'trembling' as they return – here the quaking carries hope rather than dread. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: Tremble, and-he-trembled, and-it-will-tremble | es: Y-tembló, temblaban, temblad | fr: et-il-trembla, et-ils-trembla, et-trembla | de: [וחרדו], [ויחרד], [ויחרדו] Gen 27:33; Gen 42:28; Exod 19:16; Exod 19:18; Ruth 3:8

2. terrify, cause to tremble (16×) Hiphil causative: to terrify, cause to tremble, or put to fright, including the participial 'one who makes afraid.' Leviticus 26:6 promises 'none shall make you afraid,' and the formula recurs in Deuteronomy 28:26, Job 11:19, and Micah 4:4 as a marker of shalom – security defined by the absence of a terrifier. In Judges 8:12, Gideon 'terrified all the camp,' and Ezekiel 30:9 envisions messengers sent 'to make careless Ethiopia tremble.' Spanish 'aterrorizar/amedrentar' and the active-causative framing distinguish this clearly from the involuntary quaking of sense 1. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-I-will-terrify, disturbing, frightening-away | es: aterrorizó, el-que-atemorice, para-aterrorizar | fr: et-je-fera-terrify, frightening-away, il-terrified | de: [להחריד], [מחריד], eins-causing-trembling Lev 26:6; Deut 28:26; Judg 8:12; 2Sam 17:2; Job 11:19

3. be anxious, show concern (1×) An unusual Qal extension: anxious concern or solicitous care for another's welfare. In 2 Kings 4:13, Elisha says to the Shunammite woman, 'You have trembled for us with all this trembling' – but the context makes clear this is devoted, attentive concern, not terror. Spanish 'te has preocupado' (you have worried yourself) captures the semantic shift from physical trembling to emotional solicitude. This single occurrence reveals a tender dimension in an otherwise fearsome root. ANXIETY AND WORRY

en: you-have-trembled | es: te-has-preocupado | fr: tu-ai-trembla | de: du-habe-trembled 2Kgs 4:13

חָרֵד H2730 Conj-w / Adj-ms (6×)

Trembling, fearful; one who quakes from terror in battle or from reverent awe before God's word.

The verbal adjective chared describes a person in a state of trembling, whether from battlefield terror or from reverent awe before God. Gideon's famous reduction of his army begins by sending home every chared – everyone trembling with fear (Judg 7:3). Eli's heart trembles for the ark of God (1 Sam 4:13). But in Ezra and Isaiah, the word takes on a profoundly positive meaning: those who 'tremble at God's word' are the faithful remnant, the devout who take divine revelation seriously (Ezra 9:4; 10:3; Isa 66:2, 5).

trembling, fearful (6×) Trembling, fearful, or awe-struck – a verbal adjective covering both physical trembling from fear and reverent trembling before God. Spanish distinguishes 'temblando' (trembling) from 'los que tembláis' (you who tremble), capturing the range. In Judg 7:3 it parallels 'afraid' (yare) as grounds for military dismissal. In 1 Sam 4:13 Eli's heart trembles with anxiety for the ark. The Ezra-Isaiah usage (Ezra 9:4; 10:3; Isa 66:2, 5) transforms trembling into a mark of spiritual devotion – those who chared at God's commandments are his true servants. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-those-who-tremble, and-trembles, and-trembling | es: el-que-temblaba, los-que-tembláis, temblando | fr: [והחרדים], [והחרדים], [וחרד] | de: [והחרדים], [והחרדים], [וחרד] Judg 7:3; 1Sam 4:13; Ezra 9:4; Ezra 10:3; Isa 66:2

חֲרָדָה H2731 N-fs (9×)

Trembling, terror, or anxious dread; a shaking that seizes the body when overtaken by fear or divine panic.

A feminine noun capturing the visceral, physical experience of trembling under the grip of fear or awe. When Isaac discovered Jacob's deception, the text says he 'trembled exceedingly with a great trembling' (Gen 27:33) — the cognate construction underscoring total loss of composure. In 1 Samuel 14:15 the panic in the Philistine camp is called a 'trembling of God,' a supernatural terror that made the very ground quake. The word can shade into anxious care, as when Elisha asks the Shunammite woman whether she needs him to intercede on her behalf (2 Kgs 4:13). Spanish 'temor' and English 'trembling' both highlight the bodily dimension, while the French rendering leaves the Hebrew untranslated, signaling its difficulty.

trembling, fear, anxiety (9×) Trembling, fear, or anxious dread — a state in which the body shakes from terror, divine panic, or deep apprehension. The noun covers the full spectrum from Isaac's violent physical shaking at discovering the deception (Gen 27:33) to the 'trembling of God' that struck an entire army camp (1 Sam 14:15), to the more inward 'anxious care' Elisha perceived in the Shunammite (2 Kgs 4:13). Ezekiel 26:16 uses the plural as a garment metaphor — the coastal princes 'clothe themselves in tremblings' — while Proverbs 29:25 warns that 'the trembling of man' (fear of people) becomes a snare. The Spanish 'temor' and English 'fear-of / trembling' consistently capture the bodily-emotional register. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: fear-of, for-trembling-of, the-trembling | es: Temor-de, como-temblor-de, como-terror | fr: [חרדה], [לחרדה], ardeur | de: [חרדה], [חרדות], [חרדת] Gen 27:33; 1Sam 14:15; 2Kgs 4:13; Prov 29:25

חֲרָדָה H2732 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Haradah; wilderness encampment during the Exodus

Haradah was a stopping point during Israel's wilderness wanderings, listed in Numbers 33:24-25. The site location remains unknown. The name may derive from a root meaning 'trembling' or 'fear' (חָרַד), though this is uncertain. It represents one of many stations in the detailed itinerary preserved in Numbers 33, documenting Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan.

(2×) Numbers 33:24 records 'they camped in Haradah,' while verse 25 states 'they departed from Haradah.' The prepositional phrases 'in Haradah' (בַּחֲרָדָה) and 'from Haradah' (מֵחֲרָדָה) mark arrival and departure. Spanish 'en/de Haradá' and French 'dans/de Haradah' maintain this locative distinction. The site has never been identified archaeologically. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Haradah, in-Haradah | es: de-Haradá, en-Haradá | fr: dans-Haradah, de-Haradah | de: in-Haradah, von-Haradah Num 33:24; Num 33:25

חֲרֹדִי H2733 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Harodite; person from Harod

This gentilicadjective identifies someone from Harod, the spring where Gideon's army was tested (Judges 7:1). It appears in 2 Samuel 23:25, identifying two of David's mighty men as Harodites. The parallel text in 1 Chronicles 11:27 has 'Harorite' (הָרוֹרִי), likely a textual variant. The term connects David's elite warriors to this significant site in Israelite history.

(2×) 2 Samuel 23:25 lists 'the Harodite' (הַחֲרֹדִי) twice, apparently referring to two different warriors from Harod. 1 Chronicles 11:27 reads 'Harorite' instead, suggesting textual confusion. BDB notes the LXX omits the second reference, questioning its originality. Spanish 'el jarodita' and French 'le Harodite' maintain the gentilicform. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Harodite | es: el-jarodita | fr: le-Harodite | de: der-Harodite 2Sam 23:25

חָרָה H2734 V-Qal-Imperf.Jus-3ms (90×)

To burn or be kindled (of anger); God's or man's wrath blazing hot; reflexively, to fret oneself or become vexed.

Charah is the Bible's primary verb for the kindling of anger, appearing overwhelmingly in the idiom charah 'af — literally 'his nostril burned,' since Hebrew locates anger in the flaring nose. The image is visceral: wrath as fire igniting in the face. God's anger 'burns' against Israel's rebellion (Num 11:1; Exod 22:24), and human anger 'kindles' in moments of jealousy, insult, or injustice — from Cain's murderous rage (Gen 4:5) to David's fury at Nathan's parable (2 Sam 12:5). The multilingual evidence reveals how deeply embodied this metaphor is: Spanish encendió ('ignited'), German entbrannte ('blazed up'), and French brula ('burned') all preserve the fire imagery, while Arabic istashata ('flared up') and Korean 노하셨다 ('became wrathful') confirm the anger-as-combustion frame across language families. The Hitpael reflexive in Psalm 37 — 'fret not yourself' — turns the burning inward, warning against self-consuming envy.

1. anger was kindled (82×) Anger was kindled, wrath burned — the massive Qal sense at 82 occurrences, covering both divine and human anger in the frozen idiom charah 'af ('his nostril/anger burned'). Divine wrath: God's anger burns against Israel in the wilderness (Num 11:1, 10), against Moses for resisting his call (Exod 4:14), against Balaam (Num 22:27). Human wrath: Cain's face 'fell' when his anger burned (Gen 4:5), Potiphar's anger 'kindled' at the accusation against Joseph (Gen 39:19), David 'burned' at Nathan's rich-man parable (2 Sam 12:5). Spanish se-encendio and German entbrannte both preserve the combustion metaphor. Arabic ghadiba/ishtaala and Swahili -waka ('ignite') confirm the fire imagery is not a mere Hebraism but a cross-linguistic anger-as-heat conceptual mapping. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-burned, and-burned- | es: Y-se-encendió, Y-se-encendió-, y-se-encendió | fr: et-brûla, et-brûla-, et-s'enflammer | de: [ויחר], und-es-entbrannte, und-verbrannt Gen 44:18; Gen 45:5; Exod 22:24; Exod 32:19; Num 11:1

2. fret oneself, be vexed (4×) To fret oneself, be vexed — the Hitpael reflexive stem, appearing 4 times exclusively in wisdom literature (Ps 37:1, 7, 8; Prov 24:19). The reflexive morphology turns the burning inward: do not let envy or resentment kindle a fire in yourself. This is self-directed emotional agitation rather than outward-directed wrath. Spanish te-impacientes ('do not become impatient with yourself') and Korean captures the reflexive turn well. The wisdom context — paired with imperatives not to envy evildoers — makes this a genuine sub-sense: therapeutic counsel against the spiritual self-harm of bitter resentment. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: fret, fret-yourself | es: te-enciendas, te-impacientes | fr: s'enflammer | de: [התחר], fret Ps 37:1; Ps 37:7; Ps 37:8; Prov 24:19

3. (2×) The Niphal participle form hannecharim — 'those who are incensed/enraged against you' — appearing twice in Isaiah's oracles of assurance (Isa 41:11; 45:24). The Niphal passive-reflexive morphology marks a state of being incensed rather than the Qal's narrative moment of anger-kindling. Spanish los-que-se-enfurecen and English who-are-angry both render it as a characterizing description of hostile opponents. The Isaianic context is specifically about enemies of God's servant who shall be put to shame — a prophetic-forensic application of the anger root. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: who-are-angry, who-are-incensed | es: los-que-se-enfurecen, los-que-se-enojan | fr: [הנחרים] | de: [הנחרים] Isa 41:11; Isa 45:24

4. (1×) Zealously, ardently — a single adverbial use at Neh 3:20 where Baruch son of Zabbai 'zealously' (charah) repaired a section of the wall. Here the fire metaphor shifts from anger to fervent energy and passionate commitment. Spanish ardientemente ('ardently') and English 'zealously' both capture the intensity-without-anger reading. This represents an interesting semantic extension: the combustion imagery of charah applied to burning dedication rather than burning wrath. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: zealously | es: ardientemente | fr: s'enflammer | de: der-entbrannte Neh 3:20

5. (1×) To kindle (divine anger against a specific person) — a single occurrence at Job 19:11 where Job says 'He has kindled his wrath against me.' While semantically close to sense 1, the Hifil-like causative nuance (God actively kindles/stokes his anger) and the intensely personal context — Job as singular target of divine fury — sets this apart. Spanish ha-encendido and German entbrannte both render the active kindling. Job's theological complaint inverts the usual narrative: instead of corporate Israel provoking divine anger, here God unilaterally ignites wrath against an innocent individual. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-He-kindles | es: Y-ha-encendido | fr: et-s'enflammer | de: und-es-entbrannte Job 19:11

חֹר H2735 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Hor-haggidgad; wilderness encampment meaning 'hollow of Gidgad'

This compound place name means 'hollow of Gidgad' and marks a wilderness station in Numbers 33:32-33. The first element (חֹר) means 'hollow' or 'cave,' while Gidgad may be a place name or personal name. The site location is unknown. The name may relate to Gudgodah mentioned in Deuteronomy 10:7, possibly representing the same location with variant naming.

(2×) Numbers 33:32 records camping 'in Hor-haggidgad' while verse 33 describes departing 'from Hor-haggidgad.' Spanish 'en/de Hor-Haguidgad' and French 'dans/de Hor-haggidgad' show the locative and ablative prepositional phrases. The double reference follows the standard pattern of Numbers 33's itinerary: arrival then departure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Hor-haggidgad, in-Hor-haggidgad | es: de-Hor-Haguidgad, en-Hor-Haguidgad | fr: dans-Hor-haggidgad, de-Hor-haggidgad | de: in-Hor-haggidgad, von-Hor-haggidgad Num 33:32; Num 33:33

חַרְחַיָּה H2736 N-proper-ms (1×)

Harhaiah, father of a wall-builder in Nehemiah's restoration

Harhaiah appears only in Nehemiah 3:8 as the father of Uzziel, a goldsmith who helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it may contain divine name elements or relate to Hebrew roots for 'fear' or 'conceive.' The context identifies him through his son's occupation and civic contribution during the post-exilic restoration. Personal names in Nehemiah's builder lists often preserve otherwise lost family lines from the return community.

(1×) This patronymic serves to identify Uzziel son of Harhaiah among the wall builders, anchoring him in family lineage rather than geographic origin. The goldsmith profession suggests a craftsman of means who could afford to pause metalworking to serve the communal rebuilding project. Names in these lists function as civic records, documenting participation in the restoration covenant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Harhaiah | es: Harhaías | fr: [חרהיה] | de: [חרהיה] Neh 3:8

חָרוּז H2737 Prep-b (1×)

with strings of beads/ornamental chains (neck adornment)

Found in Song of Songs 1:10, this phrase describes the beloved's neck as beautiful 'with strings of beads' (בַּחֲרוּזִים). The root suggests threading or stringing, pointing to ornamental chains or strands of precious beads worn as jewelry. The context pairs this with reference to 'rows of jewels,' creating an image of layered, luxurious adornment. Spanish 'collares' (necklaces) and French 'colliers' (necklaces) interpret the function, while the Hebrew plural suggests multiple strands or types of beaded ornament.

(1×) The Song's aesthetic catalog employs specific jewelry vocabulary, moving from general beauty to particular ornaments that enhance the beloved's neck. Ancient Near Eastern iconography confirms that multiple-strand bead necklaces were common elite adornment, often with gold, carnelian, or lapis lazuli beads. The preposition 'with' indicates the means or accompaniment by which the neck appears beautiful—not inherent beauty but adorned beauty. CHAIN ORNAMENT

en: with-the-strings-of-jewels | es: con-collares | fr: dans-les-colliers. | de: [בחרוזים] Song 1:10

חָרוּל H2738 N-ms (3×)

nettles, weeds, wild undergrowth

A type of weed or wild plant that grows in neglected or devastated areas. The exact botanical identification is uncertain, with suggestions including chickpea, nettles, or various thorny plants. The term appears in contexts of desolation—abandoned vineyards, devastated lands, and places where outcasts shelter themselves. The plant represents agricultural failure, the victory of wilderness over cultivation, and the reversal of productive land into waste. Whether identifying a specific species or weeds generally, the term symbolizes neglect and ruin.

(3×) Weeds or wild plants indicating neglect and desolation. Job 30:7 describes social outcasts sheltering 'among the nettles.' Proverbs 24:31 warns that the slothful man's field becomes overgrown: 'nettles covered its surface.' Zephaniah 2:9 prophesies Moab will become 'a possession of nettles,' a waste land. The botanical uncertainty is reflected in varying translations (Spanish ortigas/cardos 'nettles/thistles'), but the symbolic meaning of desolation remains consistent. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: nettles | es: cardos, ortigas | fr: chaleur, חרול ,חרלים | de: [חרול], [חרלים] Job 30:7; Prov 24:31; Zeph 2:9

חֲרוּמַף H2739 N-proper-ms (1×)

Harumaph, father of a wall-builder in Nehemiah's Jerusalem

Harumaph is named in Nehemiah 3:10 as the father of Jedaiah, who repaired a section of Jerusalem's wall opposite his own house. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture, and its etymology remains uncertain. Like many names in Nehemiah's builder lists, it preserves a family identity from the early Persian period restoration community. The mention of repairing 'opposite his house' suggests this family lived in a specific quarter of Jerusalem.

(1×) The patronymic identifies Jedaiah within Nehemiah's detailed record of wall reconstruction, anchoring him in family heritage. These genealogical markers served both historical and legal functions, documenting who participated in the covenant renewal and urban restoration. The builder lists became part of Jerusalem's communal memory, honoring families who invested labor in the city's defense infrastructure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Harumaph | es: Harumaf | fr: [חרומף] | de: [חרומף] Neh 3:10

חָרוֹן H2740 Conj-w (41×)

Burning anger, fierce wrath; the blazing heat of divine fury, nearly always used of God's anger

A noun denoting the burning heat or fierceness of anger, used almost exclusively of God's wrath throughout the Hebrew Bible. It most often appears in the construct phrase charon af ('the burning of anger'), a powerful idiom that pictures divine fury as a consuming fire. From the golden calf incident (Exod 32:12) through the prophetic warnings of Jeremiah and the anguished prayers of the Psalms, this word conveys the terrifying intensity of God's displeasure at covenant unfaithfulness. Spanish captures this well with 'ardor de ira' (burning heat of wrath), while German 'Zornglut' (wrath-glow) conveys the same incandescent quality.

1. fierce burning of anger (34×) The burning heat or fierceness of wrath, predominantly used in construct with af ('anger') to form the idiom charon af – the fierce burning of God's anger. French 'ardeur de la colere' and Spanish 'ardor de ira' both emphasize the thermal metaphor. This construction dominates the word's usage across Pentateuch, Prophets, and Writings: Moses pleads with God to turn from charon af after the golden calf (Exod 32:12); Joshua must purge the camp so God's charon af will subside (Josh 7:26); and Jeremiah repeatedly warns that charon af is coming upon Judah (Jer 4:8,26; 25:37-38). The word thus functions less as an independent noun than as a coloring element intensifying the anger concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-burning-of, and-fierce-of, burning-of | es: ardor-de, de-ardor-de, el-ardor-de | fr: ardeur, ardeur-de-la-colère, de-ardeur | de: Zornglut, [וחרון], [חרון] Exod 32:12; Num 25:4; Num 32:14; Deut 13:17; Josh 7:26

2. wrath, fierce anger (7×) Wrath or fierce anger used absolutely or with pronominal suffixes, functioning independently rather than in construct with af. In Exodus 15:7, God sends forth His charon to consume enemies like stubble – here 'your fierce wrath' stands alone as subject. The Psalmist cries under the weight of God's charon (Ps 88:16-17), and Ezekiel uses it independently (Ezek 7:12,14). German renders this variously as 'Dein Zorn' (your wrath) and 'Zornglut' (wrath-glow), while Spanish shifts from the construct 'ardor de' to the absolute 'ardiente' (burning), reflecting the syntactic independence of this usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-wrath, and-in-his-wrath, burning-wrath | es: ardiente, ardor-de-ira, ardor-de-ira-de-mí | fr: Ton-colère, ardeur, et-dans-ardeur | de: Dein-Zorn, Zornglut, [חרון] Exod 15:7; Neh 13:18; Ps 2:5; Ps 58:9; Ps 88:16

הַחֲרִיפִי H2741 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Haruphite/Hariphite; gentilicof uncertain origin

This gentilicappears only in 1 Chronicles 12:6 (English 12:5 in some editions), identifying Shephatiah as 'the Haruphite' or 'Hariphite.' The Hebrew has both Ketiv (הַחֲרוּפִי) and Qere (הַחֲרִיפִי) readings, reflecting textual uncertainty. If the Qere is correct, it may connect to Hariph in Nehemiah 7:24. The term identifies one of the warriors who joined David at Ziklag.

(2×) 1 Chronicles 12:6 contains both the Ketiv and Qere forms, explaining why this appears twice. The LXX transliterations vary widely, showing ancient uncertainty about the correct reading. Spanish preserves both readings in parentheses: 'el jarufí/jarifí.' The character is one of David's early supporters from Benjamin. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (the-Charuphite), [the-Chariphite] | es: (el-jarufí), [el-jarifí] | fr: [ההחרופי], [ההחריפי] | de: [ההחרופי], [ההחריפי] 1Chr 12:6

חָרוּץ H2742a N-ms (9×)

Sharp, pointed (of threshing implements); figuratively: diligent, industrious (of persons in Proverbs).

A versatile adjective rooted in the idea of sharpness or cutting. In agricultural contexts it refers to the threshing sledge – a heavy wooden platform studded with stones or iron teeth dragged over grain to crush the husks (Isa 28:27; Amos 1:3). Amos's chilling image of Damascus threshing Gilead 'with iron sledges' captures the instrument's brutal force. In Proverbs, the same root pivots to human character: the 'sharp' or keen person becomes the diligent one whose hands bring wealth, consistently contrasted with the sluggard and the deceitful (Prov 10:4; 13:4). Spanish 'diligente' and German 'Feingold' reflect this figurative shift from physical sharpness to moral industriousness.

1. diligent (5×) Describing a person who is sharp-minded and hardworking – the diligent. Used substantively in Proverbs to contrast with the lazy (atsel) and the slack-handed (remiyyah). Spanish 'diligente' and English 'diligent' capture this figurative extension from physical sharpness to moral industriousness (Prov 10:4; 12:24; 13:4; 21:5). LABOR AND TOIL

en: diligent, is-diligence, the-diligent | es: diligente, diligentes, el-diligente | fr: diligent | de: Feingold, [חרוצים], [חרצים] Prov 10:4; Prov 12:24; Prov 12:27; Prov 13:4; Prov 21:5

2. sharp, new (threshing instrument) (2×) Adjective meaning sharp or pointed, used attributively of a threshing sledge: 'a sharp new threshing instrument having teeth' (Isa 41:15). In Job 41:30 it describes the crocodile's underside like sharp potsherds. The multilingual glosses split between the instrument itself ('trillo' in Spanish) and its quality ('agudo'), revealing the tight bond between tool and trait. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: a-threshing-sledge, new | es: agudo, trillo | fr: [חרוץ], diligent | de: Feingold, [חרוץ] Job 41:30; Isa 41:15

3. threshing sledge (2×) The threshing sledge itself (charuts/morag), a heavy agricultural platform with cutting edges used to separate grain from chaff. Isaiah 28:27 names it alongside the cart wheel as standard threshing equipment. In Amos 1:3 it becomes a weapon of atrocity – Damascus 'threshed Gilead with iron sledges' – and Spanish 'con trillos de hierro' preserves this vivid image of agricultural technology turned to cruelty. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: with-a-threshing-sledge, with-threshing-sledges-of | es: con-trillo, con-trillos-de | fr: [בחרוץ], or | de: [בחרוץ], [בחרצות] Isa 28:27; Amos 1:3

חָרוּץ H2742b Art / N-ms (2×)

decision, verdict; decisive judgment or determination

This noun appears only in Joel 3:14 (English 4:14), in the phrase 'valley of decision' (עֲמֶק הֶחָרוּץ). The term derives from חָרַץ (decide, determine) and denotes a decisive verdict or strict judgment. Joel uses it twice in parallel to emphasize the nearness of the Day of the LORD, when God will execute final judgment on the nations. The valley represents the place of God's decisive action.

(2×) Joel 3:14 (English 4:14) repeats 'valley of decision' in poetic parallelism: 'Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision!' The article 'the decision' (הֶחָרוּץ) marks this as a specific, climactic judgment. Interestingly, French 'or' (gold) and German 'Feingold' (fine gold) reflect confusion with a homograph meaning 'gold' or 'sharp/threshing sledge.' JUDGING AND DECIDING

en: the-decision | es: la-decisión | fr: or | de: der-Feingold Joel 3:14

חָרוּץ H2742c Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

and moat/trench (defensive earthwork around rebuilt Jerusalem)

This term appears in Daniel 9:25, describing Jerusalem as rebuilt 'with plaza and moat' (רְחוֹב וְחָרוּץ) during troubled times. The Aramaic noun denotes a defensive trench or moat, cognate with Assyrian ḫarīṣu/ḫiriṣu. The phrase pairs public spaces (plaza/street) with defensive infrastructure (moat), painting a picture of urban restoration complete with both civilian and military features. Some interpreters read differently ('street and outside'), but the defensive reading fits Daniel's context of restoration under pressure.

(1×) Daniel's prophecy envisions Jerusalem rebuilt not just with religious structures but with complete urban infrastructure including fortifications. The moat represents defensive water systems or dry trenches that protected ancient cities from siege. The conjunction 'and' links this military feature to the civilian plaza, suggesting a city prepared both for normal life and for defense against adversaries. WELL PIT CISTERN

en: and-moat | es: y-foso | fr: et-diligent | de: [וחרוץ] Dan 9:25

חָרוּץ H2742d Conj-w (6×)

Gold, fine gold; a poetic synonym for zahav used in wisdom literature to express supreme material value.

The noun charutz (V) is a poetic term for gold, distinct from the common zahav and the Aramaic dehav. It appears exclusively in elevated poetic contexts – Wisdom literature and Psalms – always paired with silver (keseph) to frame comparisons of supreme value. Proverbs repeatedly declares that wisdom surpasses charutz (Prov 3:14; 8:10, 19; 16:16). The Psalmist pictures dove wings shimmering with yellow-green charutz (Ps 68:14), and Zechariah describes Tyre heaping up gold like dust (Zech 9:3). The Phoenician cognate charuts confirms the precious-metal meaning.

gold, fine gold (6×) Precious refined gold, used as a poetic synonym for zahav exclusively in elevated literary contexts. German 'Gold' and 'Feingold,' Spanish 'oro,' and English 'gold' all converge, though French curiously shows some confusion with other senses of the root charats ('diligent, sharp'). Always paralleled with silver (keseph), charutz serves as the standard of highest earthly value that wisdom nonetheless surpasses (Prov 3:14; 8:10, 19; 16:16). In Ps 68:13-14 it colors the shimmering wings of a dove; in Zech 9:3 it pictures Tyre's accumulated wealth. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: and-gold, and-than-gold, gold | es: más-que-oro, oro, que-oro | fr: de-diligent, et-diligent, et-tranchant | de: Gold, [ומחרוץ], und-Feingold Ps 68:13; Prov 3:14; Prov 8:10; Prov 8:19; Prov 16:16

חָרוּץ H2743 N-proper-ms (1×)

Charuts, father of King Amon's mother Meshullemeth

Charuts appears only in 2 Kings 21:19 as the father of Meshullemeth, who became mother of King Amon of Judah. This makes Charuts the maternal grandfather of one of Judah's kings, though nothing else is recorded about him. The name may relate to roots suggesting 'gold,' 'decision,' or 'sharpness.' The Septuagint renders it as Αφους, preserving the name with Greek phonetics. Royal genealogies preserve such names to establish dynastic legitimacy.

(1×) Naming the king's maternal grandfather serves to identify the queen mother's family origin, important for establishing royal lineage and political alliances. Meshullemeth came from Jotbah, so Charuts likely represented a provincial family connected to the Judahite court. These genealogical details, though brief, anchor royal succession in specific family histories beyond just the patrilineal descent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Charuts | es: Jaruz | fr: Charuts | de: Charuts 2Kgs 21:19

חַרְחוּר H2744 N-proper-ms (2×)

Harhur; family head of returning temple servants

Harhur was a family head among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile, listed in both Ezra 2:51 and Nehemiah 7:53. The name's etymology is uncertain—it may derive from a root meaning 'burning' or 'inflammation,' or possibly relate to a reduplicated form. Like other Nethinim families, the Harhur clan served the temple community in practical, supportive roles.

(2×) Ezra 2:51 and Nehemiah 7:53 provide parallel attestations of this family name. French and German simply transliterate the Hebrew. The LXX variations (Αφου(α)ρ) show uncertainty about pronunciation. These genealogical lists were crucial for establishing proper credentials for temple service in the post-exilic community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Charchur, Harhur | es: Harhur, Jarjur. | fr: [חרחור] | de: [חרחור] Ezra 2:51; Neh 7:53

חַרְחַס H2745 N-proper-ms (1×)

Charchas, grandfather of Shallum (husband of the prophetess Huldah)

Charchas is mentioned in 2 Kings 22:14 as the grandfather of Shallum, who was keeper of the wardrobe and husband to the prophetess Huldah. This three-generation genealogy (Charchas → Tikvah → Shallum) establishes Shallum's family credentials during Josiah's reform period. The name appears nowhere else, though some suggest connection to Harhas. Huldah's status as a recognized prophetess makes her husband's lineage worth preserving.

(1×) The genealogy serves to validate Shallum's position as wardrobe keeper and to anchor the prophetess Huldah within a respectable family network. When Josiah needed prophetic consultation about the discovered law book, he turned to Huldah, whose family credentials included this three-generation lineage. The preservation of this grandfather's name reflects the importance of the moment—authenticating the messenger who would deliver God's word to the king. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Charchas | es: Jarjas | fr: Charchas | de: Charchas 2Kgs 22:14

חַרְחֻר H2746 Conj-w (1×)

and with burning heat/fever (a covenant curse of intense inflammation)

This noun appears in Deuteronomy 28:22's catalog of covenant curses, referring to violent heat or fever as divine punishment for disobedience. The term follows consumption, fever, and inflammation in a series of physical afflictions. The root suggests intense burning, possibly distinguishing this from ordinary fever as a more severe inflammatory condition. The multilingual glosses use terms for burning heat ('ardor' in Spanish) or fever-heat, indicating a pathological burning rather than environmental temperature.

(1×) Within the curse sequence, this represents one of multiple fever-related afflictions that would plague covenant breakers. The accumulation of near-synonyms (fever, inflammation, burning heat) creates rhetorical intensity, emphasizing the severity and variety of illness awaiting those who abandon covenant. Ancient Near Eastern treaty curses similarly catalog physical suffering, and this term adds specificity to the fever category—perhaps referring to particularly high or sustained burning inflammation. FEVER ILLNESS

en: and-with-burning-heat | es: y-con-ardor | fr: et-avec-brûlant-heat | de: und-mit-burning-heat Deut 28:22

חֶרֶט H2747 Prep-b / N-msc (2×)

graving-tool, stylus for engraving metal or writing on tablets

This term designates an implement used for two distinct purposes in ancient Israel. Aaron used such a graving-tool to fashion the golden calf, shaping molten metal (Exodus 32:4). Isaiah received divine instruction to write with "a man's stylus"—an ordinary writing instrument that would produce characters legible to all, not some specialized script (Isaiah 8:1). The multilingual glosses consistently distinguish the engraving function (Spanish buril, punzón) from the writing function (stylus), reflecting the tool's dual application in metalwork and literacy.

(2×) The two biblical occurrences show this implement serving both metallurgical and scribal purposes. In Exodus 32:4 it shaped the molten calf, while in Isaiah 8:1 it inscribed a tablet with common characters. The BDB notes that "with a man's stylus" means writing in ordinary, intelligible script accessible to everyone, not specialized priestly notation. Cross-linguistic evidence (French engraving-tool, German Gravierung-tool) captures the technical craftsmanship dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-stylus-of, with-the-engraving-tool | es: con-el-buril, con-punzón-de | fr: [בחרט], avec-le-engraving-tool | de: [בחרט], mit-der-Gravierung-tool Exod 32:4; Isa 8:1

חַרְטֹם H2748 Prep-l (11×)

Magician, diviner-priest — a learned practitioner of ritual magic in Egyptian and Babylonian courts

The noun חַרְטֹם (chartom) designates a class of learned magician-priests attached to the royal courts of Egypt and Babylon. In Egypt, Pharaoh summons his chartummim to interpret his dreams (Gen 41:8, 24) and to replicate Moses' signs (Exod 7:11, 22; 8:3 [Eng. 8:7]). They manage to match the first two plagues but fail at the gnats, conceding 'this is the finger of God' (Exod 8:14-15 [Eng. 8:18-19]), and are themselves afflicted with boils (Exod 9:11). In Daniel, the same term reappears for the Babylonian court magicians whom Daniel outperforms tenfold (Dan 1:20; 2:2). The word likely derives from Egyptian hry-tp ('chief lector-priest'). Spanish 'magos' and English 'magicians' are standard renderings.

magician, diviner-priest (11×) An Egyptian court magician or lector-priest skilled in sacred texts and ritual magic. Pharaoh's chartummim attempt to interpret dreams (Gen 41:8, 24) and duplicate the signs of Moses and Aaron through their secret arts (Exod 7:11, 22; 8:3, 14-15). Their progressive failure — replicating blood and frogs but not gnats — dramatizes the superiority of God's power. They are struck with boils along with all Egypt (Exod 9:11). Spanish 'magos,' French 'magiciens.' MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER

en: for-the-magicians, magicians-of, on-the-magicians | es: a-los-magos, en-los-magos, los-magos | fr: le-magiciens, magicien, magiciens-de | de: Wahrsager, Zauberer-von, [החרטמים] Gen 41:8; Gen 41:24; Exod 7:11; Exod 7:22; Exod 8:7

חַרְטֹם H2749 N-ms (5×)

magician, diviner-priest; member of the professional class of occult practitioners at royal courts

Chartom designates the professional magicians and diviner-priests who served at ancient Near Eastern royal courts. In Daniel, they appear as one of several expert classes summoned by Babylonian kings to interpret dreams and mysteries, yet they consistently fail where Daniel, empowered by God, succeeds. The word is Aramaic in Daniel's usage and has a Hebrew cognate used of Egyptian magicians in the Joseph and Exodus narratives. Spanish 'magos,' English 'magicians,' and the consistent multilingual pattern all converge on the notion of court-based occult specialists rather than folk practitioners.

(5×) Magician, diviner-priest attached to a royal court. In Daniel, chartom designates professional practitioners of the occult arts summoned to interpret dreams and signs alongside enchanters and sorcerers (Dan 2:10, 27; 4:7, 9; 5:11). They consistently fail to interpret divine mysteries, serving as a literary foil to Daniel's God-given wisdom. Spanish 'magos' and English 'magicians' reflect the institutional, courtly register. The related Hebrew form appears for Pharaoh's magicians in Genesis 41 and Exodus 7-9, linking Babylonian and Egyptian court magic traditions. MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER

en: magician, magicians, the-magicians | es: los-magos, mago, magos | fr: [חרטם], [חרטמיא], [חרטמין] | de: [חרטם], [חרטמיא], [חרטמין] Dan 2:10; Dan 2:27; Dan 4:7; Dan 4:9; Dan 5:11

חֳרִי H2750 N-msc (6×)

Burning heat of anger, fierce wrath; always in the construct phrase chori aph ('burning of nostril/anger').

The masculine noun chori means 'burning' or 'fierce heat' and appears exclusively in the fixed construct phrase chori (ha-)aph – literally 'burning of the nostril,' meaning fierce anger or hot wrath. It intensifies the already vivid Hebrew image of anger as heat in the nose. Moses departs Pharaoh in great chori aph (Exod 11:8). Jonathan rises from the table in chori aph over his father's shaming of David (1 Sam 20:34). The phrase also describes divine wrath (Deut 29:24) and the anger of armies and kings (2 Chr 25:10; Isa 7:4; Lam 2:3).

burning, fierce heat (of anger) (6×) The burning heat or fierceness of anger, exclusively in the construct phrase chori aph ('burning of anger'). Spanish 'ardor de' (burning of) and English 'burning of' preserve the construct relationship faithfully. The word intensifies aph ('anger, nostril') by adding the image of fire or extreme heat. It describes Moses's fury at Pharaoh (Exod 11:8), Jonathan's outrage for David (1 Sam 20:34), God's wrath on the land (Deut 29:24), Ephraimite soldiers' anger at dismissal (2 Chr 25:10), and the 'burning anger' of Rezin and Pekah that Isaiah tells Ahaz not to fear (Isa 7:4). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: at-fierce-, burning-of, in-burning-of- | es: ardor-de, en-ardor-de, en-ardor-

de- | fr: [בחרי], [בחרי], brûlant-de | de: [בחרי], [בחרי], burning-von Exod 11:8; Deut 29:24; 1Sam 20:34; 2Chr 25:10; Isa 7:4

חֹרִי H2751 N-ms (1×)

white bread/cake (fine quality bread made from refined flour)

Found in Genesis 40:16, 'white bread' (חֹרִי) appears in the chief baker's dream, where he carries three baskets of white bread on his head. The term indicates bread made from refined, sifted flour rather than coarse whole grain, marking it as high-quality bakery product suitable for Pharaoh's court. The whiteness distinguished luxury bread from darker, coarser varieties consumed by common people. Joseph's interpretation of the dream focuses on the three baskets, but the bread quality establishes the baker's high status.

(1×) The baker's dream specifies white bread to indicate his responsibility for royal baking, producing refined products for Pharaoh's table. Ancient Egyptian tomb paintings show such fine white bread among offerings to nobility. The term's singular occurrence in this dream narrative makes it a technical culinary designation, distinguishing court bakery work from ordinary bread production. The whiteness signals both the flour refinement process and the social status of the intended consumers. WHITE COLOR

en: white-bread | es: blanco | fr: blanc-pain | de: weißes-Gebäck Gen 40:16

חֹרִי H2752 Art / N-proper-mp (6×)

Horite; the pre-Edomite cave-dwelling inhabitants of the hill country of Seir, displaced by Esau's descendants.

The gentilic noun chori (II) designates the Horites, the indigenous people of the Seir hill country before the Edomites displaced them. The name likely derives from chor ('cave'), marking them as cave-dwellers – fitting the terrain of Edom's sandstone cliffs. Genesis 14:6 places them in their mountains at the time of the eastern kings' invasion. Genesis 36:20-30 provides a detailed genealogy of Seir the Horite and his descendants. Deuteronomy 2:12, 22 records their displacement by the sons of Esau as a paradigm for how God gives nations their territories.

Horite (gentilic) (6×) The Horites, a pre-Edomite ethnic group inhabiting the hill country of Seir, always with the article (ha-chori). Spanish 'el horeo / los horeos,' German 'der Horite / der Choriter,' and English 'the Horite / the Horites' uniformly transliterate. The name probably means 'cave-dweller' (from chor, 'cave'), appropriate to Edom's sandstone geography. Genesis 36:20 identifies 'Seir the Horite' as the ancestral figure; Gen 14:6 locates them in their mountains; Deut 2:12, 22 narrates their dispossession by Esau's descendants as theological precedent for Israel's own territorial inheritance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Horite, the-Horites | es: el-horeo, los-horeos | fr: le-Horite, le-Horites | de: der-Choriter, der-Horite, der-Horites Gen 14:6; Gen 36:20; Gen 36:21; Gen 36:29; Deut 2:12

חֹרִי H2753 Art / N-proper-ms (4×)

Horite, member of the pre-Edomite cave-dwelling people of Seir; also a personal name in Simeon's genealogy

An adjective and gentilicname derived from hor ('cave, hole'), designating the indigenous cave-dwelling population of the Seir region before the Edomite conquest. Genesis 36 identifies Seir as 'the Horite' and lists the Horite chiefs as the original inhabitants of the land. Deuteronomy 2:12, 22 records that the sons of Esau dispossessed them, just as Israel dispossessed the Canaanites. The name also appears once as a personal name in the tribe of Simeon (Num 13:5).

(4×) The gentilicdesignation for the pre-Edomite inhabitants of Mount Seir, understood as 'cave-dwellers' (from hor, 'cave'). Genesis 36:20-30 provides the most detailed account, listing Seir haHori and his descendants as the original clans of the region. In 1 Chronicles 1:39, Hori appears as a son of Lotan, a Horite chief. The name also occurs as a personal name in Numbers 13:5 for the father of Shaphat, the spy from Simeon. English and Spanish transliterate as 'Horite/horeo,' while French and German sometimes preserve the Hebrew in brackets, reflecting uncertainty about whether to treat it as a proper noun or ethnic adjective. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chori, Hori, the-Horite | es: Horí, Jori, el-horeo | fr: Hori, [חר], le-Horite | de: Chori, Hori, [חרי] Gen 36:22; Gen 36:30; Num 13:5; 1Chr 1:39

חָרִיט H2754 Conj-w (2×)

bag, purse, typically for carrying valuables like silver

This loan-word from Arabic designates a bag or purse made of skin or other material for transporting valuables. In 2 Kings 5:23, Naaman's servants carried two talents of silver in such bags, demonstrating their capacity for significant weight. The term also appears in Isaiah 3:22's catalog of luxury items among Jerusalem's elite women, where it likely refers to fashionable handbags or coin purses. Spanish and English translations consistently render this as "bags" or "purses," emphasizing the portable container function rather than ornamental aspects.

(2×) The two contexts reveal both utilitarian and luxury dimensions. In 2 Kings 5:23, these bags served as robust containers, each holding a talent of silver (roughly 75 pounds). Isaiah 3:22 lists them among ladies' finery alongside jewelry and perfume bottles, suggesting decorative handbags or purses as status symbols. The Arabic cognate خَرِيطٌ confirms the basic meaning: a bag made of leather or fabric for carrying possessions. BAG PURSE

en: and-the-handbags, bags | es: bolsas, y-los-bolsos | fr: [והחריטים], bags | de: [והחריטים], bags 2Kgs 5:23; Isa 3:22

חֲרְיוֹנִים H2755 N-mpc / 3ms (2×)

textual variant (ketiv) possibly meaning dung; replaced in qere tradition

This lemma represents a ketiv (written) reading that appears in the Masoretic text of 2 Kings 6:25 but was replaced by scribal tradition with the qere (read) form dibyon-yonim (dove's dung). The precise meaning remains uncertain, though if authentic it likely referred to some kind of excrement. Most modern translations follow the corrected qere reading rather than preserving this variant. The textual apparatus shows translators marking this as a scribal issue [ketiv] rather than attempting semantic interpretation.

(2×) This appears exclusively as a textual variant that scribes corrected to dove's dung (דִּבְיוֹנִים) in the reading tradition. The Greek Septuagint's κόπρου περιστερῶν (dove dung) follows the qere. The BDB notes that scholars have proposed various conjectural emendations, reflecting uncertainty about the original text. The cross-linguistic evidence shows translators declining to interpret this ketiv, instead marking it as a scribal problem requiring the corrected reading. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv], [their-dung] | es: (kethiv), [K] | fr: [ketiv], [their-dung] | de: [ketiv], [their-dung] 2Kgs 6:25; 2Kgs 18:27

חָרִיף H2756 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hariph, personal name meaning possibly 'autumn' or 'harvest'

This personal name appears in post-exilic contexts for two individuals. One Hariph led a family of returned exiles (Nehemiah 7:24), corresponding to Jorah in the parallel list in Ezra 2:18—suggesting scribal variation between these names. Another Hariph appears among those who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:19). The name likely derives from the Hebrew root related to autumn or harvest season (compare Arabic kharif, autumn), though personal names often carry symbolic rather than literal significance.

(2×) The two attestations identify distinct individuals in Ezra-Nehemiah's post-exilic community. The textual parallel between Hariph (Nehemiah 7:24) and Jorah (Ezra 2:18) for the same returning family illustrates common manuscript variation in proper names. The BDB connects this to Hebrew choref (autumn, winter) and Arabic kharif, suggesting seasonal imagery. Greek transliterations vary (Areip, Iōrē), reflecting the fluidity of proper name transmission across linguistic boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hariph | es: Harif | fr: [חריף] | de: [חריף] Neh 7:24; Neh 10:19

חָרִיץ H2757 Conj-w (3×)

cuts, slices (of cheese); sharp iron implements

A term with two distinct meanings. First, it refers to cuts or slices, specifically of cheese in 1 Samuel. Second, it denotes sharp iron implements or picks used as instruments of labor or torture. The semantic range connects through the concept of 'cutting'—whether cutting milk into cheese slices or cutting tools made of iron. The violent usage in Samuel and Chronicles may involve agricultural threshing sledges (like those in Amos 1:3) or torture instruments, depending on interpretation. Both meanings derive from the root sense of cutting or dividing.

(3×) Cuts of cheese or sharp iron implements. 1 Samuel 17:18 uses it concretely for 'ten cuts of milk'—cheese slices David brought to his brothers. 2 Samuel 12:31 and 1 Chronicles 20:3 employ it for instruments of forced labor or torture: David put Ammonite captives to work 'with saws and sharp instruments of iron.' The semantic breadth (food items vs. tools) reflects the underlying cutting concept, though the violent passages remain ethically troubling and textually difficult. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-picks-of, and-with-picks-of, cuts-of | es: quesos-de, y-con-trillos-de, y-en-trillos-de | fr: [וב]חריצ[י], coupe-de, et-à-picks-de | de: [וב]חריצ[י], cuts-von, und-bei-picks-von 1Sam 17:18; 2Sam 12:31; 1Chr 20:3

חָרִישׁ H2758 N-msc / 3ms (3×)

plowing, plowing-time, agricultural season

The agricultural activity of plowing or the season designated for it. In ancient Israel's agrarian calendar, plowing-time marked a critical period for preparing fields for planting. The term can refer to the act itself or the broader season when plowing occurs. Genesis and Exodus use it in combination with harvesting to indicate the agricultural year's rhythm. Samuel employs it with a cognate accusative construction (he plowed his plowing) to describe work assignment. The word grounds Israel's experience in agricultural cycles and seasonal labor.

(3×) Plowing or the plowing season. Genesis 45:6 warns of famine: 'there will be neither plowing nor harvest.' Exodus 34:21 commands Sabbath rest 'in plowing and in harvest,' acknowledging these busy seasons still require rest. 1 Samuel 8:12 describes conscripted service: 'to plow his plowing' (cognate accusative emphasizing the work). Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish arada, French labourant, English plowing) uniformly identifies agricultural plowing, whether as activity or season. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: his-plowing, in-plowing, plowing | es: arada, en-el-arar, su-arada | fr: dans-plowing, plowing, son-labourant | de: Pflügen, in-plowing, sein-plowing Gen 45:6; Exod 34:21; 1Sam 8:12

חָרִישִׁי H2759 Adj-fs (1×)

scorching/sultry (describing an oppressive east wind)

This adjective appears in Jonah 4:8, describing the east wind that struck Jonah as 'scorching' or 'sultry' (חֲרִישִׁית). The term's precise meaning remains debated—proposals include 'silent,' 'autumnal,' or 'hot/sultry.' The context of God appointing this wind to increase Jonah's discomfort favors an interpretation emphasizing oppressive heat. The Spanish 'caluroso' (hot/sultry) reflects this reading, as the wind compounds the effects of the scorching sun beating on Jonah's head. East winds from the desert characteristically brought withering heat to Israel.

(1×) God's appointment of this wind serves to intensify Jonah's suffering after the plant's death, driving him to the point of wishing for death. The qualitative adjective distinguishes this from an ordinary east wind, marking it as especially oppressive. Whether the root relates to silence (sultry stillness), harvest season (autumnal), or heat itself, the narrative function is clear: this wind was designed to afflict, completing Jonah's misery and setting up God's final lesson about compassion. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: scorching | es: caluroso | fr: laboureur | de: [חרישית] Jonah 4:8

חָרַךְ H2760 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

roasts/starts (uncertain: either cook game or set in motion for hunting)

Proverbs 12:27 presents this verb in a famously difficult passage about a slothful person and game/prey. Traditional interpretations divide between 'the slothful does not roast his game' (from Aramaic 'scorch/parch') and 'slackness does not start its game' (from Arabic 'set in motion'). The Spanish 'asará' (will roast) follows the cooking interpretation, while the hunting interpretation sees failure to pursue prey. Both readings critique laziness—either failing to cook what's caught or failing to initiate the hunt.

(1×) The proverb's point remains clear regardless of interpretation: the lazy person fails to complete necessary tasks, whether processing caught game or initiating the hunt. The contrast with the following line about diligence as precious wealth suggests incompletion or non-initiation of work. The verb's rarity and the sentence's syntactic difficulty have generated centuries of scholarly debate, but the practical wisdom critique of sloth shines through both major interpretive options. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: does-roast | es: asará | fr: יחרך | de: [יחרך] Prov 12:27

חֻרַךְ H2761 V-Hitpael-Perf-3ms (1×)

was singed (describing hair unaffected by fire in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace)

This Aramaic Hithpael verb appears in Daniel 3:27, where officials inspect Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego after the fiery furnace and discover that 'the hair of their heads was not singed' (לָא-הִתְחָרַךְ). The reflexive stem indicates the hair did not experience singeing upon itself—it remained completely unaffected by flames. This detail emphasizes the miraculous nature of their deliverance: not even minor fire damage occurred. The Spanish 'se quemó' and French 'griller' reference burning/singing, though in the negative construct of the miracle.

(1×) The negative statement about singeing serves as climactic evidence of divine protection—not only did the three survive, but fire left absolutely no trace on their bodies. Hair, being highly flammable, would show even brief exposure to heat. The Aramaic technical term for singeing appears nowhere else in Scripture, making this a unique attestation of a rare verb. The detail functions rhetorically to establish the totality of the miracle and vindicate the God of Israel before Babylon's court. BURNING AND FIRE

en: was-singed | es: se-quemó | fr: griller | de: [התחרך] Dan 3:27

חֲרַכִּים H2762 Art / N-mp (1×)

the lattice (window lattice through which the beloved peers)

Found in Song of Songs 2:9, 'the lattice' (הַחֲרַכִּים) describes decorative window openings through which the beloved peers. The plural form suggests multiple lattice openings or the component slats of the lattice structure. The verse pairs 'looking through the windows' with 'peering through the lattice,' creating parallel images of the lover's eager gaze. Ancient Near Eastern architecture used lattice windows for ventilation and privacy while allowing sight and air passage. The term indicates smaller openings than standard windows.

(1×) The beloved's action of peering through lattice creates an image of passionate yet restrained approach—present but not fully revealed, watching intently through the decorative screen. The Hebrew root suggests openings or apertures, with Aramaic cognates meaning window. This architectural detail grounds the Song's romantic imagery in domestic architecture, where latticed windows provided spaces of partial concealment and revelation, fitting the Song's themes of desire and anticipation. WINDOW LATTICE

en: the-lattice | es: las-celosías | fr: les-treillis. | de: [החרכים] Song 2:9

חָרַם H2763a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs (51×)

to devote to destruction, utterly destroy under the ban; consecrate irrevocably to God

One of the most theologically charged verbs in the Hebrew Bible, rooted in the concept of the herem — the irrevocable setting apart of persons, cities, or property either for total destruction or for exclusive divine ownership. The Moabite Stone uses the same word for devoting a conquered city to Chemosh, revealing the practice's deep antiquity across Semitic culture. In holy-war contexts (Deut 2:34; Josh 6:21), it demands total annihilation as an act of obedience. Yet the same root in Leviticus 27:28 and Micah 4:13 describes consecrating wealth to the LORD — destruction and dedication converging in the single idea that what is devoted to God cannot return to common use.

1. utterly destroy (Hifil active) (44×) The dominant Hifil active sense: to devote persons, cities, or nations to utter destruction under the ban (herem) as an act of divine judgment or holy war. Spanish destruir totalmente and French consacré à destruction both capture the totality. Numbers 21:2–3 records Israel's vow to 'utterly destroy' Canaanite cities, and Deuteronomy 2:34–3:6 chronicles the annihilation of Sihon and Og's kingdoms. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: He-has-devoted-them-to-destruction, and-devoted-to-destruction, and-they-devoted-to-destruction | es: destruir-totalmente, destruyendo, destruyeron | fr: devoting-à-destruction, entièrement-détruisant, et-consacré-à-destruction | de: [ההחרימם], devoting-zu-destruction, er-devoted-zu-destruction Num 21:2; Num 21:3; Deut 2:34; Deut 3:6

2. devote or consecrate to God (2×) To consecrate or devote something irrevocably to the LORD as sacred property, the sacral rather than destructive face of herem. Spanish consagraré and French dévouer confirm the dedicatory sense. Leviticus 27:28 legislates what a person 'devotes' to God as most holy, and Micah 4:13 envisions Zion devoting the wealth of nations to the LORD of all the earth. BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: and-I-will-devote, devotes | es: consagrare, y-consagraré | fr: devotes, et-dévouer | de: [והחרמתי], devotes Lev 27:28; Mic 4:13

3. (1×) A single Hifil occurrence at Isaiah 11:15 where the LORD will 'devote to destruction' — or more precisely 'dry up' / 'split' — the tongue of the Egyptian sea. Spanish destruirá and French vouer à la destruction support the destructive reading, though the context blends herem-annihilation with miraculous geographical transformation as God remakes the exodus route. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-will-devote-to-destruction | es: Y-destruirá | fr: et-vouer-à-la-destruction | de: [והחרים] Isa 11:15

4. (1×) A warning at Joshua 6:18 against taking devoted things, lest the one who takes them 'devote to destruction' the camp of Israel — making the whole community liable to the ban. Spanish anatematicéis and French tu vouer à destruction convey the contagion of herem: contact with the banned object spreads the curse to the entire camp, as tragically demonstrated in Achan's story (Josh 7). LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: you-devote-to-destruction | es: anatematicéis | fr: tu-vouer-à-destruction | de: du-weihen-zu-destruction Josh 6:18

5. (1×) The Hofal passive at Exodus 22:20 declaring that anyone who sacrifices to gods other than the LORD 'shall be devoted to destruction.' Spanish será destruido and French doit être consacré à destruction convey the judicial death sentence. This is herem as divine law: idolatry places the offender under the ban that is normally reserved for Canaan's nations. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: shall-be-devoted-to-destruction | es: será-destruido | fr: –être-consacré-à-destruction | de: soll-sein-geweiht-zu-destruction Exod 22:20

6. (1×) A Hofal passive at Leviticus 27:29 declaring that any person devoted to the ban cannot be ransomed but 'shall surely be put to death.' Spanish fuere consagrado and French devra être consacré preserve the sacral-juridical force. This verse establishes the irreversibility of herem applied to persons — once devoted, no redemption price avails. BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: shall-be-devoted | es: fuere-consagrado | fr: devra-être-consacré | de: soll-sein-geweiht Lev 27:29

7. (1×) A Hofal usage at Ezra 10:8 where the post-exilic assembly decrees that anyone who fails to appear within three days shall have his property 'devoted' — confiscated and forfeited. Spanish sería confiscada shifts the sense toward property seizure. Here herem has evolved from holy-war annihilation to communal discipline: forfeiture of goods and exclusion from the congregation, foreshadowing later Aramaic and Syriac excommunication practices. BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: will-be-devoted-to-destruction | es: sería-confiscada | fr: [יחרם] | de: [יחרם] Ezra 10:8

חֲרֻם H2763b V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

mutilated/disfigured (in face: nose, lip, or ear)

This Qal passive participle appears in Leviticus 21:18, listing physical defects that disqualified priests from altar service. The term refers to facial mutilation—specifically to slitting or piercing of nose, lip, or ear. The Arabic cognate ḥaraṭa describes perforation or slitting of nasal partition, lips, or earlobes. The list includes blindness, lameness, and facial mutilation (חֲרֻם) alongside disproportionate limbs, establishing standards of physical wholeness for priestly service. The multilingual glosses use terms like 'mutilated' and 'disfigured' to capture deliberate or accidental facial damage.

(1×) Within Levitical holiness codes, physical wholeness symbolized ritual fitness for sacred service. Facial mutilation, whether from injury, birth defect, or cultural practices (like piercing), rendered priests unfit for altar approach while not excluding them from other priestly functions or from eating holy food. The specificity of 'nose, lip, ear' indicates visible facial disfigurement that would be noticed by worshipers. This reflects ancient Near Eastern associations between bodily perfection and sacred space. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: disfigured | es: mutilado | fr: disfigured | de: disfigured Lev 21:18

חֵרֶם H2764a Prep-l (29×)

Devoted thing, ban — something irrevocably given over to God, whether for destruction or sacred use

The noun חֵרֶם names one of the most sobering concepts in the Hebrew Bible: the irrevocable dedication of something to God, removing it permanently from human use. At Jericho, everything was חֵרֶם — placed under the ban — and Achan's theft from it brought catastrophe on all Israel (Josh 6:17-7:15). Yet the same word covers peaceful sacred donations: 'every devoted thing in Israel shall be yours,' God tells the priests (Num 18:14; Ezek 44:29). Spanish captures both poles with anatema (ban/curse) and consagración (consecration), revealing a word whose gravity lies in the finality of the giving over, not necessarily in destruction.

1. ban, devoted to destruction (19×) The ban of destruction — a person, city, or object irrevocably devoted to God by being utterly destroyed, with no possibility of human retention or redemption. This is the dominant sense, governing the conquest narratives: Jericho (Josh 6:17-18), Achan's violation (Josh 7:1-15), and the Amalekite ban Saul fails to execute (1 Sam 15). Deuteronomy 7:26 forbids even bringing a חֵרֶם into one's house lest one become חֵרֶם oneself. Spanish anatema and French voué ('devoted-thing') convey the totality of this sacred consignment to annihilation. BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: a-devoted-thing, and-ban, devoted-to-destruction | es: (con)-destrucción-total, al-anatema, anatema | fr: [בחרם], [לחרם], avec-le-voué-thing | de: [בחרם], [וחרם], [חרם] Deut 7:26; Josh 6:17; Josh 6:18

2. devoted thing, sacred offering (8×) A devoted thing consecrated to God as an irrevocable sacred offering — not destroyed but set apart permanently for priestly or temple use. Leviticus 27:21, 28 stipulates that a חֵרֶם field or possession becomes holy to the LORD and passes to the priests; Numbers 18:14 assigns every חֵרֶם in Israel to Aaron's line. Ezekiel 44:29 reaffirms this priestly prerogative. Spanish consagración and French consacré ('consecrated') mark the constructive rather than destructive side of irrevocable dedication. BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: devoted-one, devoted-thing, in-the-devoted-thing | es: anatema, con-lo-dedicado, consagración | fr: consacré-chose, consacré-un, dans-le-voué-thing | de: [חרם], der-geweiht-Sache, geweiht-Sache Lev 27:21; Lev 27:28; Lev 27:29; Num 18:14

3. my ban, divine curse decree (2×) God's own personal decree of ban or curse, spoken in the first person possessive — 'my ban' or 'my curse.' In 1 Kings 20:42 Ahab is rebuked for releasing 'the man of my ban' (חֶרְמִי), and Isaiah 34:5 declares that God's sword descends on the people of 'my curse' (חֶרְמִי). The possessive suffix marks this as a divine prerogative, with Spanish mi-anatema and French mon-ban confirming the first-person ownership of the destructive decree. CURSES AND ANATHEMA

en: my-ban, of-My-curse | es: de-mi-destrucción, mi-anatema | fr: [חרמי], mon-ban | de: [חרמי], mein-ban 1Kgs 20:42; Isa 34:5

חֵרֶם H2764b Prep-l (9×)

A net or dragnet for catching fish or prey; distinct from the homonymous cherem meaning 'devoted ban.'

This is the second cherem — not the fearsome 'ban of destruction' but a simple fisherman's or hunter's net, derived from the idea of perforated work (cf. Arabic mukharram, 'perforated'). Habakkuk 1:15-17 paints the Chaldean empire as a fisherman who catches nations in his dragnet and then worships the net itself. Ezekiel uses the image in both directions: Tyre's ruins become a place for spreading nets (Ezek 26:5, 14), while God will cast His own net over Pharaoh (Ezek 32:3). Ecclesiastes 7:26 deploys it for the seductive woman whose heart is 'nets and snares.' Spanish 'red' and English 'net' render it straightforwardly.

net, dragnet (9×) A net or dragnet used for catching fish or trapping prey. Etymologically linked to the concept of perforated material (cf. Arabic mukharram), this noun appears in both literal and figurative contexts. The hunter's net ensnares in Micah 7:2 and Ecclesiastes 7:26, while the fisherman's dragnet dominates Ezekiel (26:5, 14; 32:3; 47:10) and Habakkuk (1:15-17), where the Chaldean empire is personified as a fisherman who sacrifices to his own net. Spanish 'red' and English 'net' render it consistently; the multilingual evidence confirms a single concrete artifact sense throughout. NETS AND SNARES

en: and-nets, for-nets, his-net | es: a-su-red, con-mi-red, con-red | fr: et-filet, interdit | de: [בחרמו], [בחרמי], [וחרמים] Eccl 7:26; Ezek 26:5; Ezek 26:14; Ezek 32:3; Ezek 47:10

חֹרֶם H2765 N-proper-fs (1×)

Chorem, a fortified city in Naphtali's territory

Chorem appears in Joshua 19:38 as one of the fortified cities in Naphtali's inheritance. The name may derive from a root meaning 'sacred' or 'devoted,' with possible connections to South Arabian place names containing similar elements (אחרם). The site has not been definitively identified in modern archaeology, though it appears in the same list with Hazor and other northern cities. The fortification designation indicates military significance in Naphtali's defensive network.

(1×) The listing among Naphtali's fortified cities suggests Chorem held strategic importance in the tribal territory's northern reaches. The 'sacred' etymology, if correct, might indicate a shrine or cultic site that gave the town its name. Unidentified biblical sites like Chorem remind us that much of ancient Israel's urban landscape remains archaeologically uncertain, preserved only in these tribal allotment lists from the conquest and settlement period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chorem | es: Horem | fr: Chorem | de: Chorem Josh 19:38

חָרִם H2766 N-proper-ms (11×)

Harim — personal name meaning 'consecrated/devoted'; priestly and lay families in post-exilic Judah

The name חָרִם (Charim) likely derives from a root meaning 'consecrated' or 'snub-nosed' (the latter a physical characteristic). It identifies both priestly and lay families prominent in the post-exilic community. A priestly house of Harim received the third lot in David's temple organization (1 Chr 24:8) and reappears in the return from exile (Ezra 2:39; Neh 7:42; 12:15). Members of this priestly family were among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:21). A separate lay family of Harim also returned from Babylon (Ezra 2:32; Neh 7:35), with members likewise involved in the intermarriage crisis (Ezra 10:31). A Harim sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh 10:5, 27). Spanish 'Harim' and English 'Harim' transliterate uniformly.

Harim (personal name) (11×) The priestly family of Harim, assigned the third division in David's organization of temple service (1 Chr 24:8). Descendants returned from exile (Ezra 2:39; Neh 7:42) and appear in the priestly registry of Joiakim's generation (Neh 12:15). Some members were found guilty of intermarriage with foreign women (Ezra 10:21). A representative sealed the Nehemiah covenant (Neh 10:5). BAN DEVOTED DESTRUCTION

en: Charim, Harim, for-Charim | es: De-Harim, Harim, Jarim | fr: Harim | de: [חרם], [לחרם] 1Chr 24:8; Ezra 2:32; Ezra 2:39; Ezra 10:21; Ezra 10:31

חָרְמָה H2767 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (9×)

Hormah, a Canaanite city in the Negev renamed after Israel 'devoted' its inhabitants to destruction.

Originally called Zephath, this city in the southern Negev was renamed Hormah — a name transparently derived from cherem ('devoted to destruction') — after Judah and Simeon conquered it (Judg 1:17). The folk etymology is central: the place name itself memorializes the act of holy war. Numbers 14:45 records an earlier Israelite defeat there, and Numbers 21:3 narrates the vow and subsequent destruction that gave the city its name. Assigned to Simeon within Judah's territory (Josh 15:30; 19:4), it reappears as one of the towns to which David sent spoils (1 Sam 30:30). Spanish 'Horma' and French 'Hormah' preserve the name with minor phonetic adaptation.

Hormah (place name) (9×) The proper noun Hormah designates a Canaanite royal city in the Negev, originally called Zephath (Judg 1:17), renamed after Israel devoted its inhabitants to destruction (cherem). The name itself is an etymological monument to holy war. It features in the narrative of Israel's premature attack (Num 14:45), the successful campaign under Moses (Num 21:3), the tribal allotments to Simeon (Josh 15:30; 19:4), and David's distribution of spoils (1 Sam 30:30). Spanish 'Horma/Jormah' and French 'Hormah/Chormah' reflect variant transliteration traditions across language communities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chormah, Hormah, and-Chormah | es: Horma, Jormah, en-Horma | fr: Chormah, Hormah, [ובחרמה] | de: Chormah, Hormah, [ובחרמה] Num 14:45; Num 21:3; Deut 1:44; Josh 12:14; Josh 15:30

חֶרְמוֹן H2768 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (13×)

Hermon — the towering, snow-capped peak of the Anti-Lebanon range marking Israel's northern frontier

The sacred summit of the Anti-Lebanon range, Mount Hermon rises to nearly 2,814 meters and served as the great geographical landmark of Israel's northern boundary. Known by different names among neighboring peoples — Sirion to the Sidonians and Senir to the Amorites (Deut 3:9) — the mountain's triple peaks may explain the plural 'Hermons' of Psalm 42:6. Its perpetual snowcap fed the headwaters of the Jordan and made it a symbol of refreshment and divine blessing (Ps 133:3). The Hebrew root connects to the idea of consecration or devoted space, echoing its ancient sacred associations.

Hermon (place name) (13×) The proper name Hermon (חֶרְמוֹן), designating the highest mountain of the Anti-Lebanon range at Israel's far northern border. All thirteen occurrences mark this peak as a boundary reference in territorial descriptions (Deut 3:8; Josh 11:17; 12:1; 13:5, 11). The root חרם ('devoted, sacred') likely reflects the mountain's ancient cultic significance, paralleled by Arabic ḥarām and Sabaean maḥram for temple precincts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chermon, Hermon, and-Chermon | es: Hermón, Jermon, Jermón | fr: Hermon, [וחרמון], et-Hermon | de: Chermon, Hermon, [וחרמון] Deut 3:8; Deut 3:9; Deut 4:48; Josh 11:3; Josh 11:17

חֶרְמוֹן H2769 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Hermons (plural referring to Mount Hermon's multiple peaks)

Psalm 42:6 uses the plural 'Hermons' (חֶרְמֹנִים) to reference the multiple peaks of Mount Hermon, the majestic snow-capped mountain dominating northern Israel and southern Syria. Hermon's three distinct summits explain the plural usage, distinguishing the individual peaks that form the mountain range. The name means 'sacred mountain,' reflecting its religious significance across multiple ancient Near Eastern cultures. The psalmist, remembering God 'from the land of Jordan and Hermons,' evokes the geographic extremity of Israel's northern boundary.

(1×) The plural form acknowledges the topographic reality of Hermon's multiple peaks, which ancient observers recognized as distinct summits within a single mountain massif. From various vantage points, different peaks might be visible, and 1 Chronicles 5:23 and Song of Songs 4:8 distinguish between Hermon and Senir, possibly referring to different peaks. The psalmist's geographic reference—from Jordan valley to Hermon peaks—spans Israel's breadth, using this plural to encompass the full northern mountain range. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Hermons | es: y-Hermones | fr: et-Hermôn | de: und-Hermons Ps 42:6

חֶרְמֵשׁ H2770 N-ms (2×)

sickle, curved blade for harvesting grain

This agricultural implement appears in Deuteronomy's laws governing harvest practices. The sickle marks the beginning of the grain harvest count (Deuteronomy 16:9), establishing a calendrical reference point for the Feast of Weeks. The law also protects neighbors' rights by permitting travelers to pluck grain by hand while prohibiting the use of a sickle in another's field (Deuteronomy 23:25), distinguishing casual snacking from systematic harvesting. All translations preserve this as the standard curved harvesting blade.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Deuteronomic legal material regulating agricultural life. Deuteronomy 16:9 uses the sickle's first cut as the calendar trigger for counting seven weeks to Pentecost, making this tool central to Israel's sacred calendar. Deuteronomy 23:25 employs it to distinguish between casual gleaning (permitted) and intentional harvesting (theft). The consistency across Spanish (hoz), French, and German glosses confirms universal recognition of this as the standard ancient harvesting implement. SICKLE HARVEST TOOL

en: and-sickle, sickle | es: hoz, y-hoz | fr: et-sickle, sickle | de: sickle, und-sickle Deut 16:9; Deut 23:25

חָרָן H2771a N-proper-fs (10×)

Haran — a city in upper Mesopotamia, key waypoint in the patriarchal migrations

The place name חָרָן (Haran) identifies a major ancient city in upper Mesopotamia, located in modern southeastern Turkey near the Syrian border. It served as Terah's settlement after leaving Ur of the Chaldeans and before Abraham's departure for Canaan (Gen 11:31-32; 12:4-5). Jacob fled there to his uncle Laban (Gen 27:43; 28:10; 29:4), and it remained associated with the patriarchal family's Aramean roots. The Assyrian texts confirm Haran (Harranu) as a significant commercial and religious center dedicated to the moon-god Sin. In prophetic contexts, the Assyrians cite its conquest as proof of their power (2 Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12). Spanish 'Harán' and English 'Haran' preserve the transliteration consistently.

Haran (place name in Mesopotamia) (10×) An ancient city in upper Mesopotamia (modern Harran, Turkey), situated on a major trade route between Nineveh and the Mediterranean. Terah settled there after leaving Ur and died there (Gen 11:31-32). Abraham departed from Haran at age 75 for Canaan (Gen 12:4-5), and Jacob later fled there to escape Esau and find a wife among Laban's household (Gen 27:43; 28:10; 29:4). Ezekiel 27:23 lists it as a trading partner of Tyre. Rabshakeh cites its destruction to intimidate Hezekiah (2 Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12). Spanish 'Harán' and French 'Charan' both transliterate the Semitic name. HARAN PLACE NAME

en: Charan, Haran, Haran-ward | es: Harán, Jarán, a-Charan | fr: Charan, Charan-garde, Haran | de: Charan, [חרן], aus-Charan Gen 11:31; Gen 11:32; Gen 12:4; Gen 12:5; Gen 27:43

חָרָן H2771b N-proper-ms (2×)

Charan, son of Caleb of Judah

This personal name identifies a descendant of Caleb within Judah's genealogies, appearing twice in the same verse (1 Chronicles 2:46). The repetition likely indicates different grammatical functions within the genealogical record rather than two distinct persons. Greek manuscripts show variation (Arran, Ōrōn) in transliterating this name, and BDB notes a Sabaean parallel, suggesting the name had broader Semitic circulation beyond Israel. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it's distinguished from the more famous Haran (city and Abraham's brother).

(2×) Both instances occur in 1 Chronicles 2:46, within Caleb's genealogy in Judah's tribal lineage. The dual occurrence in a single verse suggests the name appears in different syntactic roles (perhaps as both father and son in a complex genealogical notation). The Septuagint's divergent renderings and the Sabaean cognate indicate this was a recognized Semitic name beyond biblical tradition. Translators leave it untranslated, recognizing it as a proper personal identifier. HARAN PLACE NAME

en: Charan, and-Charan | es: Jaran, y-Jaran | fr: [חרן], [חרן] | de: [חרן], [חרן] 1Chr 2:46

בֵּית חוֹרֹן H2772 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

the Horonite: designation for Sanballat, opponent of Nehemiah

A geographical designation identifying Sanballat as 'the Horonite,' meaning a person from Beth-horon or a related location. Sanballat the Horonite was a key opponent of Nehemiah's rebuilding efforts in Jerusalem, consistently working to undermine the restoration project. The designation appears exclusively in Nehemiah, always with the article, distinguishing Sanballat by his place of origin. Beth-horon consisted of upper and lower towns in Ephraim, making Sanballat likely a Samarian or northern opponent of Judean restoration. The epithet became his identifying marker throughout Nehemiah's memoirs.

(3×) Ethnic or geographical designation for Sanballat as 'the Horonite,' from Beth-horon or vicinity. Nehemiah 2:10, 19 introduce Sanballat as an opponent 'when Sanballat the Horonite heard' of restoration plans. Nehemiah 13:28 recounts his intermarriage alliance with the high priestly family. The article (the Horonite) suggests a well-known designation distinguishing him from others. Cross-linguistic transliterations maintain the gentilicic form (Spanish horonita, French Horonite), preserving this geographical-ethnic identifier. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Choronite, the-Horonite | es: el-horonita | fr: Horonite | de: [החרני] Neh 2:10; Neh 2:19; Neh 13:28

חֹרֹנַיִם H2773 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Horonaim ('two hollows/caves'), a Moabite city featured in oracles of judgment against Moab

A place name in the dual form, likely meaning 'two hollows' or 'two cave-towns,' related to hor ('cave') and possibly to Beth-horon. It designates a city in Moab that figures prominently in prophetic oracles of judgment. Isaiah 15:5 and Jeremiah 48:3, 5, 34 all reference Horonaim in contexts of Moabite devastation, with cries of anguish ascending or descending along 'the road to Horonaim' or 'the descent of Horonaim.' The Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription, line 31-32) also mentions the site as Horonayin.

(4×) A Moabite city appearing exclusively in prophetic oracles against Moab. Isaiah 15:5 places it on a road of flight ('the way of Horonaim they raise a cry of destruction'), while Jeremiah 48:3 echoes the outcry ('a voice of crying from Horonaim'), 48:5 names 'the descent of Horonaim' as a place of weeping, and 48:34 includes it in the geographic sweep of Moab's devastation. The dual ending

(-ayim) suggests twin settlements or a paired topographic feature. French and German glosses leave the name in Hebrew brackets, while English 'Horonaim' and Spanish 'Horonaim/Joronayim' reflect standard transliteration. The extrabiblical attestation on the Mesha Stele confirms its historical reality as a Moabite settlement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Choronayim, Horonaim, from-Choronayim | es: Horonaim, Joronayim, desde-Joronayim | fr: [חורנים], [חרנים], [מחרונים] | de: [חורנים], [חרנים], [מחרונים] Isa 15:5; Jer 48:3; Jer 48:5; Jer 48:34

חַרְנֶפֶר H2774 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Charnefer, a descendant of Asher (possibly also a place name)

Charnefer appears in 1 Chronicles 7:36 in a genealogy of Asher's descendants. The Septuagint's variant renderings (Αναφφαρ, Αρναφαρ, Αριαφερ) suggest uncertainty about the name's pronunciation. Some scholars propose this could be a place name rather than personal name, given that tribal genealogies sometimes incorporate geographic elements. The context provides no additional information beyond the bare listing in Asher's family tree.

(1×) Within Asher's genealogy, this name functions to trace tribal descent through the Persian period, when Chronicles was compiled. Whether personal or geographic, it preserves a family or settlement identity from Asher's territory. The conjunction 'and' links it to surrounding names in the genealogical chain, maintaining the sequential record of Asherite lineage. Such genealogies served to establish land claims and tribal identity for post-exilic communities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Charnefer | es: y-Jarnéfer | fr: [וחרנפר] | de: [וחרנפר] 1Chr 7:36

חֶרֶס H2775a Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

sun; or place-name Heres

Either the sun as a celestial body or a geographical location name. The term appears in Job's poetic discourse about God commanding the sun not to rise. In Judges, it may refer to a place called Heres or the ascent of the sun. The word overlaps with the common Hebrew term for sun but appears in this specific form only rarely. Textual and interpretive questions surround some occurrences, with scholars debating whether certain instances refer to the celestial body or to place names. The form with he-epentheticum distinguishes it from the standard word for sun.

(3×) The sun or a place-name Heres. Job 9:7 speaks of God who 'commands the sun and it does not rise.' Judges 8:13 mentions Hachilah 'from the ascent of Heres' (or 'before the sun'), a geographical reference. Judges 14:18 contains a textual puzzle: 'before the sun set' (or possibly 'before entering the chamber'). The overlapping of celestial and geographical meanings creates interpretive challenges reflected in varied translations (Spanish sol/Heres, French soleil/Heres). SUN CELESTIAL BODY en: the-Heres, the-sun, to-the-sun | es: Heres, al-sol, el-sol | fr: le-Heres, le-soleil, לחרס | de: [לחרס], der-Heres, der-Sonne Judg 8:13; Judg 14:18; Job 9:7

וְחֶרֶס H2775b Conj-w (1×)

and with itch/scab (a chronic skin disease in covenant curse list)

This noun appears in Deuteronomy 28:27, where God threatens covenant breakers with 'the itch' (וּבֶחָרֶס) along with boils of Egypt and tumors. The Aramaic cognates refer to rough, itching skin conditions. The term appears parallel to 'scab' (גָּרָב), suggesting chronic, uncomfortable dermatological afflictions. Ancient Near Eastern curse treaties similarly invoked skin diseases as divine punishment. The conjunction 'and-with' adds this to an accumulating list of physical miseries awaiting those who break covenant.

(1×) Within the curse catalog, this represents one of several skin afflictions designed to make life miserable—constant itching without relief, social stigma, and physical discomfort. The pairing with 'boils of Egypt' recalls the plagues, threatening that covenant breakers would experience Egypt's suffering despite their deliverance. The medical terminology distinguishes this chronic itch from acute conditions, suggesting persistent dermatological torment as covenant curse. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-with-itch | es: y-con-comezon | fr: et-avec-itch | de: und-mit-itch Deut 28:27

חֶרֶס H2776 N-proper-fs (1×)

Cheres (Mount Cheres), an Amorite stronghold (possibly identical with Beth-shemesh)

Cheres appears in Judges 1:35 as 'Mount Cheres' (הַר-חֶרֶס), an Amorite-held location along with Aijalon and Shaalbim. Since 'cheres' means 'sun,' some identify this with Beth-shemesh ('house of the sun'), a nearby city. The Septuagint reads 'Mount Myrsinōn' (myrtle mountain), perhaps reading הַר הֲדַס instead. This represents one of the Canaanite enclaves that survived Israel's initial conquest, maintaining Amorite control until later subjugation under Joseph's house.

(1×) The mountain name functions geographically to describe unconquered Amorite territory in the Shephelah. The 'sun' element in the name may indicate an ancient solar cult site, common in Canaanite religion. The text's tension—Amorites remained but were eventually pressed into forced labor—reflects historical reality of gradual rather than immediate conquest. Whether this is Beth-shemesh or a separate site, it marks a Canaanite stronghold that resisted Israelite settlement in the lowlands. KIR-HARESETH PLACE

en: Cheres | es: Jeres | fr: Cheres | de: Cheres Judg 1:35

חרסות H2777 Art / N-fs (2×)

the Potsherd Gate, a gate in Jerusalem leading to the Hinnom Valley

This place name designates a specific gate in Jerusalem's wall, known for the pottery fragments discarded there. Jeremiah received divine instruction to perform a prophetic sign-act at this location, smashing a clay jar to symbolize Jerusalem's impending destruction (Jeremiah 19:2, 10-11). The gate led into the valley of Hinnom, which served as the city's refuse dump where broken pottery accumulated. Baldwin's research (PEF 1904) confirms archaeological evidence of potsherd deposits in Hinnom, validating the name's literal basis in the disposal practices of Jerusalem's inhabitants.

(2×) The two occurrences in Jeremiah 19:2 reflect a ketiv-qere textual variant (החרסות vs. החרסית), with both forms designating the same gate. The location's significance lies in its connection to the Hinnom Valley, where the broken jar symbolism gained potency from the surrounding heaps of discarded pottery. Spanish translators render this as "Olla" (pot) or "tiestos" (potsherds), while French and German preserve the transliterated form, recognizing the proper place-name function despite its transparent etymology. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES

en: [K], the-Potsherd | es: (la-Olla), [los-tiestos] | fr: [(החרסית)], [[החרסות]] | de: [(החרסית)], [[החרסות]] Jer 19:2

חָרַף H2778a V-Piel-Perf-3cp / 1cs (39×)

To reproach, taunt, or defy; to hurl insults or contemptuous challenges, especially against God or his people

A verb of hostile speech that ranges from verbal abuse to outright defiance. In its most common use it means to reproach or insult—casting shame on someone through cutting words, as when enemies reproach God's people (Ps 74:10) or when the Rabshakeh blasphemes the living God (2 Kgs 19:22). In military contexts it sharpens into defiance: Goliath defied the armies of Israel (1 Sam 17:10, 25, 26), and each time David frames the giant's words as a challenge hurled against God himself. The Spanish 'afrentar' (to affront) and French 'insulter' both track the core hostility. Related forms produce the noun 'cherpah' (reproach), one of the Bible's most common words for shame.

1. reproach, taunt, insult (28×) The primary and most frequent sense: to reproach, taunt, or insult someone through hostile, shaming speech. Sennacherib reproached the living God (2 Kgs 19:22), and the psalmist asks how long the adversary will reproach God's name (Ps 74:10). The Spanish 'afrentar' (to affront) captures the personal offense involved, while French 'insulter' highlights the verbal aggression. This sense covers verbal abuse directed at both God and humans, always carrying a tone of contempt and intended shame. REPROACH TAUNT DEFY

en: and-blasphemed, did-you-reproach, has-reproached | es: afrenta, afrentaron, afrentaste | fr: [חרפת], [לחרף], de-insulter | de: [חרפת], [לחרף], du-reproached Judg 8:15; 2Sam 23:9; 2Kgs 19:4; 2Kgs 19:16; 2Kgs 19:22

2. defy, challenge contemptuously (9×) A more intensified, confrontational sense: to defy or challenge contemptuously, especially in a military or combat setting. Goliath defied Israel's armies (1 Sam 17:10, 25, 26, 36, 45), and his words were not merely insults but formal challenges to battle. The distinction from sense 1 lies in the public, structured nature of the defiance—it is an act of war, not just verbal abuse. The Spanish 'desafió' (challenged) precisely marks this escalation from insult to provocation. REPROACH TAUNT DEFY

en: Elohim, and-defied, and-he-taunted | es: Y-desafió, afrentaste, afronté | fr: [ויחרף], [לחרף], ai-défia | de: [ויחרף], [לחרף], du-habe-defied 1Sam 17:10; 1Sam 17:25; 1Sam 17:26; 1Sam 17:36; 1Sam 17:45

3. (1×) In Judges 5:18, Zebulun is described as a people who scorned or despised their lives unto death—risking everything on the battlefield. This unique usage applies the verb reflexively to one's own life rather than directing it at an opponent, yielding a sense of reckless disregard or contempt for personal safety. The context of Deborah's song gives it a heroic, even admiring tone. REPROACH TAUNT DEFY

en: that-scorned | es: que-expuso | fr: ce-scorned | de: jenes-verachtete Judg 5:18

4. (1×) In Psalm 57:3, God sends from heaven and reproaches or puts to shame those who trample the psalmist. Here the reproaching comes from God himself as an act of divine intervention and vindication, inverting the usual pattern where enemies reproach God's people. God turns the weapon of verbal shaming back upon the aggressors. REPROACH TAUNT DEFY

en: He-reproaches | es: reprende | fr: insulter | de: er-reproaches Ps 57:3

חָרַף H2778b V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

will winter/remain through harvest (describing animals in a prophetic vision)

This verb appears in Isaiah 18:6, describing how 'the beasts of the earth will spend the harvest-time' (תָּחֳרֶף) upon the slain. The denominative verb from 'harvest' (Arabic ḥarīf) means to remain during harvest season, parallel to 'wintering.' The imagery shows birds of prey summering on corpses while beasts winter on them—year-round feasting on the defeated enemy. The Spanish 'pasará el invierno' (will pass the winter) captures the seasonal duration, though the Hebrew specifically denotes the harvest/autumn period.

(1×) Within Isaiah's oracle against Cush, this creates a gruesome image of complete military devastation—bodies left unburied for beasts to feed on through entire seasons. The parallel structure ('summer upon them... winter upon them') uses seasonal verbs to indicate prolonged exposure of corpses, a sign of divine judgment leaving enemies without proper burial. The harvest-time specification adds agricultural imagery to this scene of judgment. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: will-winter | es: pasará-el-invierno | fr: [תחרף] | de: [תחרף] Isa 18:6

חָרַף H2778c V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

betrothed/designated (describing a slave-concubine designated for a man)

This Niphal participle appears in Leviticus 19:20, addressing the case of a 'slave-girl betrothed to a man' (נֶחֱרֶפֶת לְאִישׁ). The verb means 'acquired' or 'designated,' indicating she has been designated as a concubine but has not yet been redeemed or freed. The legal case deals with a man who has intercourse with this woman—she is betrothed/designated but still in slave status. The multilingual glosses use betrothal terminology ('betrothed,' 'desposada,' 'fiancée'), though the Hebrew emphasizes acquisition or designation.

(1×) This rare legal term addresses a specific social status—a female slave who has been designated or acquired as a concubine for a specific man but has not yet gained freedom through redemption or been formally married. The case law prescribes investigation rather than death penalty, recognizing her in-between status as neither fully free betrothed nor unmarried slave. The Arabic cognate relates to acquiring or gaining, supporting the interpretation of formal designation or acquisition for marriage. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT

en: betrothed | es: desposada | fr: fiancée | de: betrothed Lev 19:20

חֹרֶף H2779 N-msc / 1cs (7×)

Noun meaning 'winter, cold/rainy season'; also 'autumn, harvest-time,' and by extension 'prime of life.'

This noun denotes the cooler part of the agricultural year, spanning what we might call late autumn through winter. In Genesis 8:22 it stands paired with qayits ('summer') in God's covenant promise that the seasons will never cease. It describes physical structures associated with cold weather, like the 'winter house' of Amos 3:15 and the room where Jehoiakim sits by his fire in the ninth month (Jeremiah 36:22). In one memorable figurative use, Job recalls 'my autumn' (chorpi), the prime of his life when God's friendship sheltered his tent (Job 29:4).

1. winter, cold season (6×) The winter or cold/rainy season of the year. Paired with qayits ('summer') in the foundational seasonal promise of Genesis 8:22 and Psalm 74:17, it anchors the annual cycle. Jeremiah 36:22 locates it in the ninth month (November-December), when Jehoiakim sits by a brazier. The 'winter house' of Amos 3:15 and the perennial waters of Zechariah 14:8 further confirm the seasonal reference. Spanish invierno and French hiver consistently render this cold-season meaning. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: and-in-winter, and-winter, from-winter | es: Por-el-frío, e-invierno, el-invierno | fr: [והחרף], [ובחרף], de-hiver | de: [והחרף], [ובחרף], [מחרף] Gen 8:22; Ps 74:17; Prov 20:4; Jer 36:22; Amos 3:15

2. autumn, prime of life (1×) Autumn or harvest-time, with a figurative extension to the prime or vigor of one's life. In Job 29:4, chorpi ('my autumn') recalls the season of ripeness and abundance as a metaphor for Job's former prosperity, when God's counsel was upon his tent. The Arabic cognate kharif ('freshly gathered fruit, autumn') and the Ethiopic sense of 'current year' support the harvest-season nuance. French mon-hiver-moi glosses it as winter, but the Hebrew context points to the earlier, more fruitful season. SUMMER SEASON FRUIT

en: my-autumn | es: mi-otoño | fr: mon-hiver-moi | de: [חרפי] Job 29:4

חָרֵף H2780 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chareph, a descendant of Judah and founder of Beth-gader

Chareph appears in 1 Chronicles 2:51 as 'father of Beth-gader,' meaning either biological father or founder of this town. The name may derive from roots meaning 'reproach' or 'harvest,' though the etymology remains uncertain. The context places him in Judahite genealogy as descendant of Salma, connecting him to Bethlehem's lineage. Beth-gader itself remains unidentified archaeologically, though it was likely a Judean settlement.

(1×) The designation 'father of Beth-gader' indicates Chareph's role as town founder or ancestral head of the settlement's clan. Chronicles frequently uses 'father of' terminology to link individuals with towns, preserving memories of settlement and urbanization in Judah's tribal history. This genealogical note connects personal names with geographic locations, showing how family lines became associated with specific settlements in the tribal inheritance system. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chareph | es: Jaref | fr: [חרף] | de: [חרף] 1Chr 2:51

חֶרְפָּה H2781 Prep-b / N-fs (73×)

Reproach, disgrace, shame; a social condition of dishonor or the verbal taunts that inflict it.

Cherpah names the sting of public shame — the condition of being exposed to scorn, contempt, or social disgrace. It appears in contexts ranging from personal humiliation (Tamar's plea in 2 Sam 13:13, 'where would I carry my cherpah?') to national catastrophe (the 'reproach of Egypt' rolled away at Gilgal, Josh 5:9). Spanish 'afrenta' and German 'Schmach' both carry the weight of dishonor that cuts to the bone. The word occasionally sharpens into the act itself — the verbal taunts hurled by enemies (Ps 69:9; Zeph 2:8) — and in Proverbs it points to an inherent moral defect that inevitably brings disgrace (Prov 6:33).

1. disgrace, shame, dishonor (68×) The broad and dominant sense of social disgrace, shame, or dishonor — a condition borne by persons or nations that marks them as objects of contempt. It encompasses Goliath's taunt that brings reproach on Israel (1 Sam 17:26), the uncircumcision called 'the reproach of Egypt' (Josh 5:9), and the psalmist's cry 'remove from me reproach and contempt' (Ps 119:22). French 'opprobre' and German 'Schmach' both capture the public, almost palpable nature of this shame. The word appears with numerous verbs — bear, remove, turn back, give — showing how reproach is experienced as a burden one carries or a stain one seeks to erase. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: a-reproach, and-a-reproach, for-a-reproach | es: Afrenta, afrenta, afrenta-de | fr: [חרפה], en-opprobre, et-à-opprobre | de: Schmach, ein-schmähen, schmähen Gen 34:14; 1Sam 11:2; 1Sam 17:26; 1Sam 25:39; 2Sam 13:13

2. shameful defect, blemish (3×) A nuanced sense in which cherpah denotes an inherent defect, blemish, or moral failing that is itself the cause of disgrace rather than externally imposed scorn. In Prov 6:33 the adulterer's 'cherpah will not be wiped away,' and in Prov 18:3 wickedness brings cherpah as its natural consequence. Arabic cognate ʿayb (fault, defect) supports this distinction. Here the shame is not something inflicted from outside but something intrinsic to the person's condition — a permanent moral stain. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: and-his-reproach, reproach, their-reproach | es: afrenta, su-afrenta, y-su-afrenta | fr: et-son-opprobre-lui, opprobre | de: [וחרפתו], [חרפה], [חרפתם] Prov 6:33; Prov 18:3; Lam 3:61

3. taunts, verbal reproach (2×) The active, speech-oriented sense of verbal taunts, insults, or reviling directed at someone. In Ps 69:9 the taunts of those who reproach God fall on the psalmist, and Zeph 2:8 records the 'cherpot' (taunts) of Moab and Ammon against God's people. The plural form and the pairing with verbs of hearing ('I have heard the reproach') emphasize the spoken, aggressive dimension — not the resulting state of shame but the cutting words that produce it. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-reproaches-of, the-taunts-of | es: afrenta-de, y-afrentas-de | fr: [חרפת], et-opprobre | de: [חרפת], und-der-reproaches-von Ps 69:9; Zeph 2:8

חָרַץ H2782 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (12×)

To cut, sharpen, or decide; from physical cutting and mutilation to authoritative decrees and decisive action.

Charats moves from the concrete to the judicial. At its most physical, it describes cutting or mutilating—Leviticus 22:22 lists a 'cut' animal among those unfit for sacrifice. The figurative leap to 'sharpening the tongue' (Exod 11:7, Josh 10:21) pictures hostile speech held in check: not a dog shall sharpen its tongue against Israel. The dominant biblical usage, however, is judicial: something 'determined' or 'decreed,' especially of divine decisions that are irrevocable (Isa 10:22-23, 28:22). Cognate Assyrian harāṣu similarly spans 'dig' and 'decide.'

1. determine, decree, decide (8×) To determine, decree, or decide authoritatively, often of irrevocable divine verdicts. Spanish 'decretada/decretado' and the passive participle charuts in Isaiah 10:22 point to a settled, unalterable determination. Job 14:5 speaks of days 'determined' for mortals; Isaiah 28:22 warns of a destruction 'decreed' upon the whole land. This is the most frequent sense, appearing in both active and participial forms. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: and-decree, and-determined, and-what-is-decreed | es: decidiste, decretada, decretado | fr: [ונחרצה], [חרוץ], [נחרצה] | de: [ונחרצה], [חרוץ], [חרוצים] 1Kgs 20:40; Job 14:5; Isa 10:22; Isa 10:23; Isa 28:22

2. sharpen, cut (3×) To cut, sharpen, or mutilate physically. Leviticus 22:22 lists a 'mutilated' animal alongside blind and broken ones—Spanish 'mutilado' and English 'cut' confirm the concrete bodily sense. The idiom in Exodus 11:7 and Joshua 10:21, where no dog 'sharpens its tongue,' pictures hostile speech as a blade restrained. The physical image underlies the metaphorical extension to decisive judgment. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: cut, sharpened, will-sharpen- | es: aguzará-, movió, mutilado | fr: –sharpen-, couper, sharpened | de: schnitt, sharpened, wird-sharpen- Exod 11:7; Lev 22:22; Josh 10:21

3. act decisively, be diligent (1×) To act decisively or with urgent diligence, a rare extension from the cutting/deciding senses. In 2 Samuel 5:24, David is told to 'act decisively' when he hears the sound in the balsam trees—Spanish 'te apresuras' emphasizes the haste. This sense bridges the physical sharpness and the mental resolution: to cut through hesitation and move with determined energy. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: act-decisively | es: te-apresuras | fr: agis-decisively | de: handle-decisively 2Sam 5:24

חַרְצֵי H2783 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

his hips/loins (the joints of Belshazzar's pelvis that gave way in terror)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 5:6, describing how 'the joints of his hips' (חַרְצֵה) loosened when Belshazzar saw the divine hand writing on the wall. The term refers to the pelvic joints or hip sockets, parallel to the Hebrew חָלָץ (loins). The anatomical detail emphasizes total physical collapse—joints loosening, knees knocking—as the king experiences overwhelming terror. The possessive suffix 'his' emphasizes the personal, visceral nature of Belshazzar's fear response.

(1×) The physiological description creates a vivid picture of terror: the king's hip joints literally loosen or become unstrung, his body losing structural integrity under supernatural dread. This stands in dramatic contrast to his previous boastful revelry using Jerusalem temple vessels. The Aramaic technical term for hip joints appears only here, contributing to the narrative's precise description of fear's physical manifestations—from facial pallor to joint weakness to knee-knocking. LOINS WAIST BODY

en: his-hips | es: sus-caderas | fr: cuisse | de: [חרצה] Dan 5:6

חֲרָצָה H2784 N-fpc (2×)

bonds, fetters; metaphorically, pangs or distress

This term appears only in plural form, denoting both literal restraints and metaphorical anguish. Isaiah uses it for oppressive bonds imposed by wicked people, calling for their release as part of true fasting (Isaiah 58:6). In Psalm 73:4, it describes the absence of suffering—the wicked experience death without pangs or distress. The semantic range spans from physical fetters to internal pain, similar to how Hebrew chevel means both "rope" and "birth pangs." Spanish ataduras (bindings) and cadenas (chains) capture the restraint imagery.

(2×) The two contexts demonstrate the word's semantic flexibility between concrete and abstract suffering. Isaiah 58:6 places these bonds parallel to "cords of the yoke," clearly indicating oppressive restraints imposed by human injustice that must be broken. Psalm 73:4 uses the term for existential distress, noting that the wicked die without such pangs—a complaint about their apparent freedom from suffering. BDB suggests reading Psalm 73:4 as "they have no pangs" based on textual emendation, emphasizing the absence of distress rather than its presence. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: bonds-of, pangs | es: ataduras, las-cadenas-de | fr: [חרצבות], chaîne | de: [חרצבות], pangs Ps 73:4; Isa 58:6

חַרְצַנִּים H2785 Prep-m / N-mp (1×)

from grape-seeds/kernels (part of the Nazirite prohibition)

This term appears in Numbers 6:4, specifying that a Nazirite must eat nothing from the grapevine, 'from seeds to skin' (מֵחַרְצַנִּים וְעַד-זָג). The phrase uses the smallest internal part (seeds) and outer covering (skin) to bracket total abstention from grape products. Jewish tradition and translations understand 'chartzanim' as grape kernels or seeds, emphasizing their bitter or acrid taste. The comprehensive prohibition—'from X to Y'—is a Hebrew idiom indicating totality.

(1×) The Nazirite vow required complete separation from wine and grape products, expressed through this merism (seeds to skin = everything). The specification of even grape seeds, normally discarded as inedible, emphasizes the absoluteness of the prohibition. The preposition 'from' begins this phrase, which continues 'even to skin,' creating a bracket of smallest-to-outermost parts. This total abstention marked Nazirites as specially consecrated, separated from even tangential contact with wine culture. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST

en: from-seeds | es: de-semillas | fr: de-semences | de: von-Samen Num 6:4

חָרַק H2786 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to gnash or grind the teeth in rage or hostility

A vivid verb depicting the grinding or gnashing of teeth as an expression of fury and hostility. In the Psalms, the wicked gnash their teeth against the righteous (Ps 37:12), and in Job, the adversary gnashes his teeth against the sufferer (Job 16:9). Lamentations 2:16 captures enemies hissing and gnashing in triumph over Jerusalem's fall. The image is visceral and unmistakable across languages: Spanish 'rechinar/crujir,' French 'grincer,' all conveying the same grating, hostile gesture.

(5×) To gnash or grind the teeth as an expression of intense rage, hostility, or malicious intent directed against another person. All five occurrences are poetic, typically with 'teeth' (שִׁנַּיִם/שֵׁן) as instrument. The hostile gesture appears in lament (Job 16:9), imprecation (Ps 35:16), wisdom instruction (Ps 37:12; 112:10), and communal dirge (Lam 2:16). Multilingual glosses uniformly render the grating physical action: Spanish 'rechinar/crujir,' French 'grincer,' preserving the onomatopoeic force of the Hebrew root. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11871 WITH 3 SENSES

en: He-gnashes, and-gnash, and-gnashes | es: crujirá, crujió, rechina | fr: [ויחרקן], et-grincer, grincer | de: [ויחרקן], [חרק], er-gnashes Job 16:9; Ps 35:16; Ps 37:12; Ps 112:10; Lam 2:16

חָרַר H2787 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (11×)

To be hot, scorched, or charred; to burn, glow; also to burn with anger, kindle fire, or be parched and dried up.

A poetic Hebrew verb that captures the experience of intense heat in its many forms. Ezekiel's bronze caldron must 'glow' empty on the coals so its impurity burns away (Ezek 24:11), while the inhabitants of the earth 'burn' under divine judgment (Isa 24:6). Job's feverish bones 'burn from drought' (Job 30:30). The verb crosses into the emotional realm in Song of Solomon 1:6, where the woman's brothers 'burned with anger' against her. It can also describe the kindling of conflict (Prov 26:21) and the parching of a throat hoarse from crying out (Ps 69:3). Spanish translations helpfully distinguish the shades: 'se-quemó' for charring, 'arden' for glowing, 'se-airaron' for angry burning.

1. be burned or charred (5×) The Nifal passive sense of being charred, scorched, or burned by fire. Used of wood in Ezekiel's vine allegory — the vine is 'charred' at both ends and its middle 'is burned' (Ezek 15:4-5). Also applied to bellows consumed in the refining fire of Jeremiah 6:29 and bones that are 'charred' in Ezekiel 24:10. Spanish 'se-quemó' and 'se-han-quemado' capture the resultant state of destruction by fire. BURNING AND FIRE

en: and-it-is-charred, are-charred, is-burned | es: Se-quemó, se-han-quemado, se-quemó | fr: [נחר], brûler, dessécher | de: [ויחר], [יחרו], [נחר] Ps 102:3; Jer 6:29; Ezek 15:4; Ezek 15:5; Ezek 24:10

2. burn or glow (3×) The Qal intransitive sense of burning, glowing, or being consumed by heat. In Job 30:30, Job's skin blackens and his bones 'burn with fever' (charah minni-choreb). Isaiah 24:6 warns that the inhabitants of earth 'burn' under a curse. Ezekiel 24:11 commands the empty caldron to 'glow' on the coals. German 'entbrannte' (blazed up) and Spanish 'arden' (they burn) both point to the active, ongoing nature of the heat rather than its aftermath. BURNING AND FIRE

en: and-may-glow, burn, of-earth | es: arden, fueron-quemados, y-arda | fr: [חרו], et-dessécher, חרה | de: [וחרה], [חרו], entbrannte Job 30:30; Isa 24:6; Ezek 24:11

3. burn with anger (1×) A metaphorical Nifal extension into the emotional sphere: to burn with anger, to be incensed. In Song of Solomon 1:6, the Shulammite recalls that her mother's sons 'burned against her' (nicharu bi), their anger likened to fire. Spanish 'se-airaron' (they grew angry) and French 'se-sont-irrités' confirm the emotional register, while the Hebrew preserves the thermal metaphor — anger as internal combustion. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: were-angry- | es: se-airaron | fr: se-sont-irrités | de: [נחרו] Song 1:6

4. kindle or ignite (1×) The Pilpel intensive sense of kindling or stoking fire, used of a contentious person who kindles strife. In Proverbs 26:21, 'as charcoal to embers and wood to fire, so is a quarrelsome man to kindle (lecharcher) strife.' The reduplicated stem intensifies the base meaning — not just burning but actively and persistently setting ablaze. Spanish 'para-encender' (to kindle, to ignite) maps directly. BURNING AND FIRE

en: to-kindle | es: para-encender- | fr: à-לְחַרְחֵר | de: [לְחַרְחֵר] Prov 26:21

5. be parched or dried (1×) A Nifal sense of desiccation — being parched, dried out, or made hoarse by heat and exertion. In Psalm 69:3, the psalmist cries, 'My throat is parched' (nichar geroni) from calling out to God. The burning here is not of flame but of dehydration — vocal cords dried raw from sustained pleading. Spanish 'está-ronca' (is hoarse) and German 'ist-parched' both point to the physical toll of heat on the human body. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: is-parched | es: está-ronca | fr: brûler | de: ist-parched Ps 69:3

חָרֵר H2788 N-mp (1×)

parched places (desert wastelands metaphorically describing the godless life)

Found in Jeremiah 17:6, 'parched places' (חֲרֵרִים) describes the habitat of those who trust in humans rather than God. The term refers to desert terrain—barren, heat-scorched, inhospitable. The verse creates a vivid contrast: the God-truster is like a tree by water, but the human-truster dwells in parched wilderness. The Arabic cognate ḥarrah denotes volcanic, stony desert terrain. The parallel term 'Arabah' reinforces the imagery of lifeless, salt-encrusted wasteland.

(1×) Jeremiah's metaphor transforms geography into moral theology —the parched places represent spiritual barrenness resulting from misplaced trust. These are not merely dry areas but specifically heat-scorched, inhospitable zones where nothing flourishes. The plural suggests multiple patches of barren ground, emphasizing the comprehensive desolation of life apart from God. This desert imagery appears throughout prophetic literature as symbol of judgment and exile, here applied to the interior landscape of the faithless. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: parched-places | es: lugares-secos | fr: [חררים] | de: [חררים] Jer 17:6

חֶרֶשׂ H2789 N-mpc (17×)

Earthenware, pottery, or potsherd; clay vessels or their broken fragments, often symbolizing human frailty before God.

Refers to objects made of fired clay — from intact earthen vessels used in ritual purification and everyday storage to broken potsherds scraped across diseased skin or cast aside as worthless refuse. The Levitical laws repeatedly specify 'earthen vessels' (כְּלִי חֶרֶשׂ) for purification rites, while the prophets use potsherds as a haunting metaphor for human insignificance: 'a potsherd among potsherds of the ground' (Isa 45:9). The Spanish 'tiesto' and French 'tesson' both capture the sense of a broken fragment, while English 'earthenware' preserves the material focus.

1. earthenware, clay (material) (12×) Pottery or fired clay as a material substance, typically in the construct phrase 'earthen vessel' (כְּלִי חֶרֶשׂ). Dominates the Levitical purity regulations where such vessels, being porous and unglazed, must be broken if contaminated (Lev 6:28, 11:33, 15:12). Also appears in Jer 32:14 for a storage jar and Prov 26:23 for silver glaze over clay — the material's cheapness contrasting with outward appearance. Spanish 'barro' and French 'argile' both emphasize the raw material itself. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: clay, earthenware, like-a-potsherd | es: barro, como-tiesto, tiesto | fr: argile, comme-tesson, terre-cuite | de: [חרש], clay, earthenware Lev 6:28; Lev 11:33; Lev 14:5; Lev 14:50; Lev 15:12

2. potsherd, shard (broken piece) (5×) A broken shard or potsherd — a fragment of a shattered clay vessel. Job scrapes his sores with one (Job 2:8), and Isaiah uses the image powerfully: a piece 'too small to carry a coal' (Isa 30:14) and 'a potsherd among potsherds of the earth' challenging its Maker (Isa 45:9). Ezekiel's vivid prophecy has Jerusalem gnawing the shards of her own cup of judgment (Ezek 23:34). The sense shifts from useful material to broken refuse, carrying overtones of worthlessness and divine judgment. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: a-potsherd, a-shard, its-shards | es: tiesto, tiestos-de, tiestos-de-ella | fr: tesson, חרש | de: [חרש], [חרשי], [חרשיה] Job 2:8; Isa 30:14; Isa 45:9; Ezek 23:34

חָרַשׁ H2790a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (25×)

To plow, engrave, devise; agricultural plowing, metaphorical scheming of evil, passive 'be plowed,' and inscription.

Charash (I) is rooted in the ancient act of cutting a furrow — whether through soil with a plow, through metal with an engraving tool, or through the mind in devising a plan. The agricultural sense dominates, with vivid scenes like Elisha plowing with twelve yoke of oxen (1 Kgs 19:19) and Job's cattle plowing beside grazing donkeys (Job 1:14). But the Wisdom literature reveals a striking metaphorical development: the same verb that describes breaking ground comes to describe breaking faith — 'devising evil against your neighbor' (Prov 3:29). Arabic haratha ('to plow') and Ethiopic haresa preserve the agricultural core, while the semantic leap to mental scheming is a distinctly Hebrew innovation. The Proverbs clustering is unmistakable: five of six 'devising' occurrences sit in Proverbs, where the sages clearly exploited the agricultural metaphor — those who 'plow' iniquity harvest trouble (cf. Job 4:8; Hos 10:13).

1. to plow (Qal) (15×) To plow, break up ground — the dominant Qal active sense at 15 occurrences, covering literal agricultural plowing with oxen and plow. Deuteronomy 22:10 prohibits plowing with an ox and donkey together; 1 Kings 19:19 introduces Elisha plowing with twelve yoke; Job 1:14 sets the pastoral scene of oxen plowing. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Arabic haratha, the Ethiopic cognate, and Spanish arar all denote agricultural ground-breaking. German and French renderings use specific plowing vocabulary (labourer in French). Amos 9:13's eschatological vision of the plowman overtaking the reaper uses this same concrete sense to picture abundance. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: and-to-plow, does-one-plow, plowed | es: ara, aradores, aradores-de | fr: [החרש], [יחרש], et-à-laboure | de: [החרש], [חורש], [חרשות] Deut 22:10; Judg 14:18; 1Sam 8:12; 1Kgs 19:19; Job 1:14

2. to devise evil (Qal) (6×) To devise, plan, especially evil — 6 occurrences, five of them concentrated in Proverbs, where the verb metaphorically transfers the plowing action to mental scheming. 'Do not devise evil against your neighbor' (Prov 3:29); 'a heart that devises wicked plans' (Prov 6:18); 'those who devise evil' versus 'those who devise good' (Prov 12:20; 14:22). Spanish traman ('they scheme') and maquinar ('they contrive') correctly identify the conspiratorial register, while Korean and Swahili similarly shift from agricultural to mental vocabulary. The metaphor is transparent: as the plowman cuts furrows, the schemer cuts plans — and both expect a harvest. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: are-for-those-who-devise, devise, devising | es: los-que-planean, los-que-traman, maquina | fr: labourer | de: [חרש], [חרשי], [תחרש] Prov 3:29; Prov 6:14; Prov 6:18; Prov 12:20; Prov 14:22

3. to be plowed (Nifal) (2×) To be plowed — 2 Niphal passive occurrences, both in the same prophetic oracle: Micah 3:12 and its quotation in Jeremiah 26:18, where Jerusalem 'shall be plowed as a field.' Spanish sera-arada ('shall be plowed') renders it directly. This is one of the most devastating images in prophetic literature — a city reduced to farmland, its very site returned to agricultural use. The passive form is essential: Jerusalem does not plow but is plowed, subjected to destruction from outside. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: will-be-plowed | es: será-arada | fr: [תחרש], se-taire | de: [תחרש] Jer 26:18; Mic 3:12

4. to devise silently (Hifil) (1×) To devise silently, plot in the Hiphil — a single occurrence at 1 Samuel 23:9, where David perceived that Saul was 'devising' evil against him. The Hiphil causative form intensifies the scheming aspect, adding a dimension of deliberate, calculated plotting. Spanish tramando ('scheming') and the cross-lingual rendering 'devising' across multiple languages confirm the mental-planning sense. The Hiphil's rarity (this single instance) suggests it may represent an intensified or more secretive register of the Qal 'devise' sense. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: devising | es: tramando | fr: devising | de: devising 1Sam 23:9

5. engraved (Qal Passive) (1×) Engraved, inscribed on a surface — a single Qal passive participle at Jeremiah 17:1, where Judah's sin is described as 'engraved with an iron stylus, inscribed with a diamond point on the tablet of their heart.' Spanish grabado ('engraved') correctly identifies the craft sense. This connects charash back to its cognate in other Semitic languages — Aramaic charat ('to engrave') and Syriac 'to cleave, inscribe.' The image is devastating: sin is not superficial but cut permanently into the people's character, like an artisan's inscription in stone or metal. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: engraved | es: grabado | fr: [חרושה] | de: [חרושה] Jer 17:1

חָרַשׁ H2790b V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp / Pn (47×)

To be silent, hold one's peace, keep quiet; also to be deaf, unable or unwilling to hear

This Hebrew verb spans two closely related ideas: deliberate silence and physical deafness. Most frequently it describes choosing to hold one's peace—Abraham's servant watching silently to see if God has prospered his journey (Gen 24:21), or Jacob holding his peace when he heard of Dinah's defilement (Gen 34:5). In the Psalms, it becomes a poignant plea: 'Be not silent to me' (Ps 28:1), where God's silence feels like deafness to prayer. Micah 7:16 extends the imagery to ears that 'shall be deaf,' completing the spectrum from voluntary quiet to involuntary inability to hear.

1. be silent, keep quiet (45×) To refrain from speaking, to hold one's peace—the dominant sense across nearly all occurrences. Used of human restraint (Gen 24:21; Gen 34:5), divine command to be still (Exod 14:14), and appeals that God not remain silent (Ps 35:22; 83:1; 109:1). The Hiphil causative can mean 'to cause silence' or 'to hold someone else silent' (Num 30:4, 7). Spanish callar and German schweigen consistently reflect this volitional silence. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: Be-silent, I-am-silent, I-will-be-silent | es: Callad, calla, callaré | fr: [אחריש], [החרישו], [ויחרישו] | de: [אחריש], [החרישו], [החרש] Gen 24:21; Gen 34:5; Exod 14:14; Num 30:4; Num 30:7

2. (1×) An uncertain or transitional usage at Job 11:3, where the context suggests silencing someone or reducing them to silence through argument. The multilingual evidence is thin—English gives 'silence,' Spanish '¿harán callar?' (will they cause to be silent?)—but the passage sits at the boundary between voluntary and imposed silence. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: silence | es: ¿harán-callar? | fr: se-taire | de: [יחרישו] Job 11:3

3. (1×) To be deaf, unable to hear—a distinct extension from silence to sensory incapacity. Micah 7:16 prophesies that the nations' ears 'shall be deaf' (tēḥĕrashnāh), using the same root to describe not hearing rather than not speaking. German and English translations confirm this auditory sense ('will be deaf,' ensordecen in Spanish), distinguishing it clearly from the volitional silence of sense 1. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: will-be-deaf | es: ensordecen | fr: labourer | de: [תחרשנה] Mic 7:16

חֶרֶשׁ H2791a N-ms (1×)

secretly (adverbial describing covert reconnaissance)

This adverbial form appears in Joshua 2:1, where Joshua sends spies 'exploring secretly' (מְרַגְּלִים חֶרֶשׁ). The root meaning 'silence' extends to secrecy, indicating clandestine reconnaissance. The spies needed to gather intelligence without alerting Jericho's defenders. The multilingual glosses uniformly recognize the stealth element ('secretly,' 'secretamente,' 'en secret'). This military intelligence-gathering establishes the narrative setting for Rahab's protection of the Israelite agents.

(1×) The adverb modifies 'spies' to emphasize the covert nature of their mission—not overt military reconnaissance but secret intelligence work. Ancient Near Eastern warfare depended heavily on scouts and spies who could gather information about city defenses without detection. The silence/secrecy root indicates both quiet movement and concealed intent. This sets up the irony that despite their secrecy, Jericho's king quickly learns of their presence, making Rahab's intervention necessary. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: secretly | es: secretamente | fr: en-secret | de: secretly Josh 2:1

חֶרֶשׁ H2791b N-mp (2×)

magic arts, magical practices or possibly magic drugs

This rare term appears in Isaiah's denunciation of Jerusalem's compromised leadership, describing those "skilled in magic arts" (Isaiah 3:3). The exact meaning remains debated among scholars: it may refer to magical practices, incantations, or even medicinal potions with occult associations. The Aramaic cognates point to practices of sorcery and preparation of magic potions, while Arabic parallels suggest medicinal broths. Some interpreters understand this more generally as skilled craftsmanship, but the parallel with "one skilled in enchantments" (nehon lahash) favors the occult interpretation.

(2×) Isaiah 3:3 lists this among disgraced leaders whom God will remove from Jerusalem, parallel to "the expert in enchantments," strongly suggesting occult practices rather than honorable crafts. The Aramaic and Ethiopic cognates consistently point to magical arts: incantations, sorcery, and preparation of magic potions. The RSemJPh citation (Robertson Smith, 1885) proposes "magical drug" based on Arabic parallels to medicinal broths. However, translators often struggle with this term—some render it as "craftsmen" (reading the Valley of Craftsmen in Nehemiah 11:35), indicating uncertainty about whether to emphasize the technical or magical dimensions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Valley-of-the-Craftsmen, and-expert | es: de-artesanos, valle-de-los-artesanos | fr: [גי החרשים], [חרשים] | de: [גי החרשים], [חרשים] Neh 11:35; Isa 3:3

חֶרֶשׁ H2792 N-proper-ms (1×)

Cheresh, a Levite who returned from Babylonian exile

Cheresh appears in 1 Chronicles 9:15 in a list of Levites who returned from exile and resettled in Jerusalem. The name may relate to roots meaning 'silence,' 'craftsmanship,' or 'magic,' though its precise etymology is unclear. The Septuagint's varied readings (Ραραιηλ, Αρες, Αρης) show uncertainty about the name's vocalization. The genealogical context identifies him among the Levitical families who resumed temple service in the restoration period.

(1×) The listing among post-exilic Levites serves to document families who returned to Jerusalem and reestablished the temple cult. Chronicles preserves these names to establish legitimate Levitical lineage for the Second Temple period. While we know nothing else about this individual Cheresh, his inclusion demonstrates his family's commitment to restoration and their recognized Levitical status in the returning community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Cheresh | es: Jéres | fr: [חרש] | de: [חרש] 1Chr 9:15

חֹרֶשׁ H2793 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)

A wood, forest, or wooded height; a thicketed highland area used for concealment or construction

This noun denotes a forested area or wooded height, closely related to Assyrian hurshu (wooded highland). It appears most memorably in the David and Saul narratives, where David hides in the 'forest of Ziph' (1 Sam 23:15-19), with the terrain described alongside hills and strongholds. In 2 Chronicles 27:4, Jotham builds fortresses and towers 'in the forests,' pairing woodland with highland construction. The word evokes not merely trees but elevated, densely wooded terrain offering natural refuge.

forest, wooded height, thicket (7×) A wood, forest, or wooded height — a tract of dense tree cover typically on elevated terrain. The narrative usage in 1 Samuel 23:15-19 pairs it with 'mountain' and 'stronghold,' indicating forested highlands suitable for hiding. In 2 Chronicles 27:4 it designates woodland areas where Jotham erected fortifications. Spanish 'bosque' and English 'forest/thicket' both capture the terrain, while the Assyrian cognate hurshu confirms the sense of wooded elevation rather than lowland jungle. FOREST WOODLAND

en: and-in-the-forests, and-thicket-of-, forest | es: al-bosque, el-bosque, en-el-bosque | fr: [החרש], [ובחרשים], dans-le-forest | de: [החרש], [ובחרשים], [וחרש] 1Sam 23:15; 1Sam 23:16; 1Sam 23:18; 1Sam 23:19; 2Chr 27:4

חָרָשׁ H2794 V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc (2×)

craftsman, artisan skilled in metalworking

This participial form designates skilled workers who cut, engrave, and shape metal. Genesis 4:22 introduces Tubal-Cain as an instructor of all who work bronze and iron, marking the biblical origin of metallurgical craft. In 1 Kings 7:14, Hiram from Tyre is identified as such a craftsman in bronze, possessing the wisdom and skill to execute all Solomon's temple metalwork. The verb root encompasses engraving, plowing, and devising—all actions involving cutting or shaping—but this nominal form specifically designates the metal craftsman.

(2×) Both occurrences emphasize expertise in metalworking rather than general craftsmanship. Genesis 4:22 presents Tubal-Cain as the ancestral master teaching all workers of bronze and iron, establishing this as a specialized hereditary craft. 1 Kings 7:14 describes Hiram as filled with wisdom, understanding, and knowledge for all bronze work, indicating the prestigious status of such artisans in temple construction. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently specify the metalworking dimension: Spanish artesano, French/German craftsman, but always in the context of shaping bronze and iron. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: craftsman-of | es: artesano-de | fr: artisan-de, craftsman-de | de: Werkmeister, craftsman-von Gen 4:22; 1Kgs 7:14

חֵרֵשׁ H2795 Conj-w / Adj-mp (9×)

Deaf, unable to hear; used literally of physical deafness and figuratively of spiritual imperception.

An adjective describing the inability to hear, paired regularly with 'mute' (illem) to form a natural word pair for complete communicative incapacity (Exod 4:11; Ps 38:14). The prophetic literature transforms physical deafness into a powerful metaphor for Israel's spiritual obstinacy — Isaiah's 'deaf servants' who have ears but refuse to hear (Isa 42:18-19; 43:8). Yet the same prophets promise eschatological reversal: 'the deaf shall hear the words of a book' (Isa 29:18; 35:5). The striking image of the 'deaf adder' in Psalm 58:5, which stops its ear against the charmer, adds a further metaphorical layer. Spanish 'sordo' and English 'deaf' map the sense directly.

deaf, unable to hear (9×) Deaf, unable to hear — describing either a literal physical condition or a figurative spiritual imperception. Exodus 4:11 places deafness alongside muteness as conditions over which God claims sovereign authority. Leviticus 19:14 forbids cursing the deaf, highlighting their vulnerability. The prophets transform the adjective into a metaphor for willful spiritual unresponsiveness (Isa 42:18-19; 43:8), while also promising eschatological healing (Isa 29:18; 35:5). The vivid 'deaf adder' of Psalm 58:5 extends the image to deliberate refusal to hear. Spanish 'sordo' and English 'deaf' translate uniformly across all contexts. DEAF AND MUTE

en: The-deaf, and-deaf, deaf | es: al-sordo, como-sordo, de-los-sordos | fr: [החרשים], [וחרשים], [חרשים] | de: [החרשים], [וחרש], [וחרשים] Exod 4:11; Lev 19:14; Ps 38:13; Ps 58:4; Isa 29:18

חָרָשׁ H2796 N-ms (36×)

Craftsman, artisan; a skilled worker in wood, metal, stone, or engraving — from temple builders to idol makers

Denotes any skilled manual worker, from the carpenters David hired to build his palace (2 Sam 5:11) to the smiths Nebuchadnezzar deported from Jerusalem (2 Kgs 24:14). The word carries no inherent moral valence — the same term covers artisans who built the tabernacle's sacred furnishings (Exod 35:35) and those who fashioned idols condemned by the prophets (Hos 13:2, Isa 44:12-13). Multilingual evidence helps parse the specializations: Arabic 'najjar' (carpenter) and Hindi 'baṛhai' appear for woodworking contexts, while 'haddad' (smith) and 'lohar' surface for metalworking passages, confirming that the Hebrew term is a broad umbrella requiring context for precise rendering.

1. craftsman, artisan (general) (26×) The general sense of a skilled worker or artisan, used when the specific trade is not in focus or when craftsmen as a class are mentioned collectively. Nebuchadnezzar deports all the 'craftsmen' from Jerusalem (2 Kgs 24:14, 16), and 1 Chronicles 4:14 names a Valley of Craftsmen (ge harashim). The broad translations — English 'craftsman,' Spanish 'artesano,' German 'Handwerker' — reflect the unspecified, umbrella character of this sense across all major versions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: A-craftsman-of, a-craftsman, and-craftsmen | es: artesano, artesanos, artesanos-de | fr: artisan, et-artisan, et-craftsmen-de | de: Handwerker, [חרש], [חרשים] 2Sam 5:11; 2Kgs 24:14; 2Kgs 24:16; 1Chr 4:14

2. engraver, sculptor (4×) An engraver or sculptor, specializing in carving inscriptions, seal engravings, or decorative work. At Exodus 28:11 the 'engraver of a seal' (harash hotam) cuts the names of Israel's tribes into the ephod stones. Exodus 35:35 and 38:23 list this skill alongside weaving and embroidery for tabernacle construction. Deuteronomy 27:15 condemns anyone who makes a carved idol — 'the work of the hands of a craftsman.' Arabic translations use 'naqqash' (engraver) and 'nahhat' (sculptor) here, sharpening the specialization. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: craftsman, craftsman-of | es: artesano, artesano-de | fr: artisan, artisan-de, craftsman | de: craftsman, craftsman-von Exod 28:11; Exod 35:35; Exod 38:23; Deut 27:15

3. carpenter, woodworker (4×) A carpenter or woodworker — the craftsman whose material is timber. The construction of harash ets (craftsman of wood) appears explicitly in 2 Samuel 5:11 and 2 Kings 22:6 for temple and palace repairs. Ezra 3:7 records payment to carpenters for the Second Temple. Hindi 'baṛhai,' Arabic 'najjar,' Korean '목수' (moksu), and Spanish 'carpintero' all converge on woodworking, distinguishing this from the general artisan sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to-the-craftsmen, to-carpenters-of, to-the-craftsmen | es: A-los-carpinteros, a-carpinteros-de, a-los-carpinteros | fr: artisan, et-artisan, à-carpenters-de | de: Handwerker, [ולחרשים], zu-carpenters-von 2Kgs 12:11; 2Kgs 22:6; 2Chr 34:11; Ezra 3:7

4. metalworker, smith (2×) A metalworker or smith, specifically someone who forges iron or other metals. First Samuel 13:19 notes there was no smith (harash) in all Israel — a Philistine monopoly on metalworking. Isaiah 54:16 declares that God created the smith who fans the coals. Hindi 'lohar,' Arabic 'haddad,' Korean '대장장이' (daejangjangi), and Spanish 'herrero' all point unambiguously to blacksmithing, confirming this as a distinct occupational sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-smith, craftsman | es: Y-herrero, artesano | fr: et-smith, tesson | de: Handwerker, und-smith 1Sam 13:19; Isa 54:16

חַרְשָׁא H2797 N-proper-ms (2×)

Charsha or Harsha, head of a family of returning exiles

This personal name identifies the leader of a family group among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears in parallel lists in Ezra 2:52 and Nehemiah 7:54, with Greek manuscripts showing variation in transliteration (Arēsa, Baasa, Adasa). Such families provided support services for temple operations in the restored post-exilic community. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it may relate to craft or silence roots in Hebrew.

(2×) The dual attestation in Ezra-Nehemiah's parallel census lists establishes this as one of the recognized Nethinim families returning from exile. These temple servants formed an important social class in Second Temple Judaism, performing menial tasks that enabled Levitical worship. The divergent Greek renderings reflect the common challenge of transliterating Semitic names into Greek. Translators uniformly preserve this as a proper name without attempting etymological interpretation, recognizing the priority of personal identification over semantic analysis. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Charsha, Harsha | es: Harsa, Jarsá. | fr: [חרשא] | de: [חרשא] Ezra 2:52; Neh 7:54

חָרַשׁ H2798 N-proper-ms (1×)

Charashim (Valley of Craftsmen), a settlement founded by Joab's descendants

Charashim appears in 1 Chronicles 4:14 as 'Ge-charashim' (valley of craftsmen), a place name meaning 'Valley of Craftsmen.' The designation suggests this settlement was known for artisan work —metalworkers, carpenters, or other skilled craftspeople. The text identifies Joab (not the famous general but a Judahite descendant) as 'father' or founder of this craft-centered community. The name reflects the socioeconomic specialization of certain settlements, where guilds or craft families clustered.

(1×) The geographic designation 'Valley of Craftsmen' indicates a settlement's economic identity, where skilled workers formed a concentrated community. Biblical references to craftsmen valleys or quarters suggest specialized urban districts where particular trades flourished. The 'father of' terminology means Joab either founded this settlement or his descendants became known for establishing the craftsmen community there. Such place names preserve ancient economic geography. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Charashim | es: Jarasim | fr: [חרשים] | de: [חרשים] 1Chr 4:14

חֲרֹשֶׁת H2799 Conj-w (4×)

Skilful working or carving of materials such as wood and stone; craftsmanship in artistic engraving.

Refers to the art of carving or skilful craftsmanship, appearing exclusively in the instructions for building the Tabernacle (Exod 31:5; 35:33). It always occurs in construct with a material — wood or stone — indicating a specialized trade skill. The Spanish rendering 'artesanía' nicely captures the sense of practiced artisanship, while English and French translations lean toward 'carving' or 'cutting,' highlighting the physical act of shaping hard materials under divine enablement.

(4×) Skilful carving or engraving of hard materials (wood, stone) as a craft. All four occurrences appear in the Exodus Tabernacle instructions (31:5; 35:33), paired with specific materials via the construct chain. The Spanish 'artesanía' points to the broader sense of artisanship, while 'carving' and 'cutting' in English and French emphasize the technique of incision. This term denotes divinely gifted craftsmanship granted to Bezalel and his co-workers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-carving-of, and-in-cutting-of | es: y-en-artesanía-de | fr: et-dans-carving-de, et-dans-cutting-de | de: und-in-carving-von, und-in-cutting-von Exod 31:5; Exod 35:33

חֲרֹשֶׁת H2800 N-proper-fs (3×)

Harosheth: city in northern Israel, home of Sisera

A city in northern Israel, specifically 'Harosheth of the nations' (Harosheth-ha-goyim), the home base of Sisera, commander of King Jabin's army. The location was likely on the lower Kishon river in the Jezreel valley. The designation 'of the nations' suggests a mixed or gentile population, fitting the context of Canaanite resistance to Israelite expansion. Harosheth served as the military headquarters from which Sisera operated before his defeat by Deborah and Barak. The city's strategic location controlled the western approaches to the Jezreel valley.

(3×) Harosheth-ha-goyim (Harosheth of the nations), Sisera's city. Judges 4:2 introduces Sisera as dwelling 'in Harosheth of the nations.' Judges 4:13 describes him summoning forces 'from Harosheth' for battle. Judges 4:16 records Barak's pursuit back 'to Harosheth.' The consistent geographical framework centers on this military stronghold in the northern valley. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Spanish Jaroshet, French/English Harosheth/Charoshet) preserve the proper name with minor variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Charoshet, from-Charoshet, in-Charoshet | es: Jaroshet, de-Jaroshet, en-Jaroshet | fr: Charoshet, dans-Charoshet, de-Charoshet | de: Charoshet, in-Charoshet, von-Charoshet Judg 4:2; Judg 4:13; Judg 4:16

חָרַת H2801 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

engraved (describing the divine writing on the stone tablets)

This Qal passive participle appears in Exodus 32:16, describing the tablets of testimony as 'engraved upon the tablets' (חָרוּת עַל-הַלֻּחֹת). The text emphasizes divine craftsmanship—the tablets were God's work, and the writing was 'engraved' by God himself. Most scholars consider this likely a textual error for חָרוּשׁ (from the same root as the metalworking term), but the reading 'engraved' fits the context of permanent inscription on stone. The multilingual glosses capture the inscriptional sense.

(1×) The passive participle emphasizes that the tablets received divine engraving, not human inscription. The prepositional phrase 'upon the tablets' specifies the location of the divine writing. This detail appears in the golden calf narrative, creating tragic irony—Moses carries tablets engraved by God's finger while Israel worships a calf formed by human hands. The engraving terminology indicates permanent, authoritative inscription, contrasting with the temporary nature of Israel's covenant faithfulness. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: engraved | es: grabada | fr: grava | de: gravierte Exod 32:16

חֶרֶת H2802 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hereth (Forest of Hereth), where David hid from Saul in Judah

Hereth appears only in 1 Samuel 22:5 as 'the forest of Hereth' (יַעַר חָרֶת), a wooded area in Judah where David took refuge while fleeing Saul. The prophet Gad instructed David to leave Moab and return to Judah, leading him to this forest. The site has not been definitively identified, though it was somewhere in Judahite territory. Forest refuges provided cover for fugitives and outlaws in ancient Israel's rugged terrain.

(1×) The forest served as hideout during David's fugitive period, offering concealment and proximity to his tribal homeland. The prophetic directive to return to Judah from Moab kept David connected to his inheritance even while fleeing the king. Forest locations in the Judean wilderness and shephelah provided natural fortifications for those avoiding authorities. This place name preserves a specific site in David's wilderness wanderings, part of his formation before kingship. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hereth | es: Jaret | fr: Hereth | de: Hereth 1Sam 22:5

חָשַׁב H2803 V-Qal-Perf-1cp / 3ms (124×)

To think, reckon, plan, or devise; encompasses cognitive activity from arithmetic calculation to purposeful scheming to artistic design.

Ḥashav is one of Hebrew's richest cognitive verbs, spanning the full arc from quiet pondering to deliberate plotting. It can describe God crediting Abram's faith as righteousness (Gen 15:6), a craftsman devising artistic designs for the tabernacle (Exod 26:1), or enemies scheming evil (Mic 2:1). The Arabic ḥasaba, Ethiopic ḥasaba, and Aramaic ḥashav all preserve the same dual meaning of 'think' and 'reckon,' reflecting a Semitic understanding that calculation and contemplation share a single root activity of the mind.

1. plan, devise, plot (41×) To plan, devise, or plot — the most frequent sense at 41 occurrences. Often carries negative connotation: Esth 9:24 says Haman 'devised' to destroy the Jews; Mic 2:1 denounces those who 'devise wickedness.' Arabic dabbara (دبّر) and Korean kkoehada (꾀하다) both capture this purposeful scheming. The Piel stem often intensifies this to crafty or persistent plotting. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: are-plotting, devise, devises | es: El-que-planea, el-que-planea, inventan | fr: penser | de: dachte, rechnen, rechnete 2Sam 14:13; Neh 6:2; Neh 6:6; Esth 8:3; Esth 9:24

2. be reckoned, be counted (31×) Nifal and Hitpael passive/reflexive: 'be reckoned, be counted, be regarded as.' Thirty-one occurrences show people or things being assigned to a category. Lev 25:31 says unwalled villages 'shall be reckoned' as open country; Gen 31:15 has Leah and Rachel asking whether they are 'regarded' as foreigners. Arabic yuḥsabu (يُحسَب) preserves the passive formation faithfully. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: and-it-shall-be-reckoned, are-counted, are-regarded | es: Y-será-contado, considerados, era-considerada | fr: cela-devra-être-credited, cela-devra-être-reckoned, cela-est-reckoned | de: es-ist-reckoned, es-soll-sein-credited, es-soll-sein-reckoned Gen 31:15; Lev 7:18; Lev 17:4; Lev 25:31; Num 18:27

3. devise designs, skilled craft (15×) To devise artistic designs — the skilled-craft sense with 15 occurrences, concentrated in Exodus. The Qal participle ḥoshev describes the master artisan who devises patterns in gold, silver, and colored fabric for the tabernacle (Exod 26:1, 31; 28:6, 15). This remarkable extension shows 'thinking' encompassing creative design — the mind's work made visible in textile and metalwork. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: and-designer, and-devisers-of, and-to-devise | es: diseñador, inventor, para-diseñar | fr: designer, et-designer, et-devisers-de | de: [וחלחשב], [חושב], designer Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 28:6; Exod 28:15; Exod 31:4

4. think, ponder, suppose (13×) To think, ponder, or suppose — general cognitive activity without necessarily implying planning, covering 13 occurrences. Gen 38:15 says Judah 'thought' Tamar was a prostitute; 1 Sam 1:13 says Eli 'supposed' Hannah was drunk. Arabic ẓanna (ظنّ) and Korean saenggakhada (생각하다) both capture this neutral sense of forming a mental impression. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: I-consider, I-considered, and-I-pondered | es: Pensé, Y-pensé, pensaba | fr: et-il-devises, et-il-pensa-sa, et-penser | de: dachte, er-rechnet, rechnete Gen 38:15; 1Sam 1:13; 1Sam 18:25; 2Sam 14:14; Job 6:26

5. regard, esteem, consider as (11×) To regard, esteem, or consider someone as having a certain status, with 11 occurrences. Gen 15:6 is paradigmatic: God 'reckoned' Abram's faith as righteousness. Job 19:11,15 laments being 'regarded as' an adversary and stranger. This evaluative judgment assigns worth or identity to another, going beyond mere thought to active assessment. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: He-counts-me, He-regards, and-He-counts-me | es: Considera, estimarán, estimó | fr: et-il-compta-cela, et-penser, et-penser-moi | de: er-rechnet, rechnen, rechnete Gen 15:6; Job 13:24; Job 19:11; Job 19:15; Job 33:10

6. reckon, count, calculate (8×) To reckon, count, or calculate numerically — the arithmetic sense with 8 occurrences, clustered in Leviticus's property-redemption laws (25:27, 50, 52; 27:18, 23). Arabic ḥasaba ('reckon/count'), Korean gyesanhada (계산하다), and Swahili hesabu all preserve this concrete counting meaning, which may be the etymological kernel from which the abstract senses grew. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: and-he-shall-calculate, and-he-shall-calculate-, and-shall-reckon- | es: Y-calculará, entonces-calculará, imputa | fr: et-devra-reckon-, et-il-devra-calculate, et-il-devra-calculate- | de: dachte, lass-reckon, sie-reckoned Lev 25:27; Lev 25:50; Lev 25:52; Lev 27:18; Lev 27:23

7. intend, purpose (5×) To intend or purpose — deliberate resolve upon a course of action, with 5 occurrences. Gen 50:20 contains its most famous expression: 'You intended (ḥashav) it for evil, but God intended (ḥashav) it for good.' Jer 49:20 and 50:45 apply it to divine purpose against nations. This sense emphasizes determined will rather than mere scheming, framing ḥashav as the verb of sovereign design. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: Purposed, he-has-planned, intended | es: Ha-pensado, ha-pensado, lo-pensó | fr: intended, intended-cela, penser | de: habt-gedacht, hat-es-gedacht, rechnen Gen 50:20; Jer 49:20; Jer 50:45; Lam 2:8

חֲשַׁב H2804 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (1×)

are regarded/accounted (Aramaic: considered of no account, insignificant)

This Aramaic passive participle appears in Daniel 4:35, where Nebuchadnezzar confesses that earth's inhabitants are 'regarded as nothing' (חֲשִׁיבִין) before God's sovereignty. The verb means 'think, account, reckon,' here in passive form indicating how God regards humanity. The phrase 'like those not accounted of' emphasizes human insignificance compared to divine power. The context is Nebuchadnezzar's hymn acknowledging God's absolute sovereignty over kingdoms and creation.

(1×) Within Nebuchadnezzar's confession, this passive construction emphasizes the divine perspective—from God's vantage, all earth's inhabitants amount to nothing, having no weight or significance against his sovereign will. This isn't nihilism but theocentric realism: compared to the eternal King, temporal human power is negligible. The Aramaic phrasing mirrors biblical Hebrew expressions of human smallness before divine majesty, contributing to the king's recognition of God's absolute authority. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: are-regarded | es: son-considerados | fr: considérer | de: [חשיבין] Dan 4:35

חֹשֶׁב H2805 Prep-b / N-msc (8×)

The skillfully woven waistband of the priestly ephod, a decorative sash binding the vestment at the waist.

A technical term from the Priestly legislation referring to the ornamental band or sash that holds the ephod in place around the priest's waist. Every one of its eight occurrences appears in the tabernacle instructions or their fulfillment narratives in Exodus and Leviticus. The Spanish rendering 'cinto' (belt/sash) and the German 'Binde' (band/binding) capture the functional sense well: this was the piece that gathered the ephod at the midsection, woven with the same gold, blue, purple, and scarlet artistry as the ephod itself (Exod 28:8).

band, skillfully woven waistband (8×) The cunningly woven waistband or girdle of the ephod, a priestly vestment accessory. The noun cheshev appears exclusively in Priestly texts (Exod 28:8, 27, 28; 29:5; 39:5, 20, 21; Lev 8:7), always in construct with 'ephod,' designating the decorative sash that secures the ephod at the waist. BDB notes this as 'ingenious work,' and the root ch-sh-v (to think, devise) implies skilled craftsmanship. Translations across languages consistently render it as a band or belt: Spanish 'cinto de,' French 'bande de,' German 'Binde von,' all pointing to its binding function in the priestly ensemble. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-band-of, band-of, to-band-of | es: Y-cinto-de, cinto-de, con-cinto-de | fr: avec-bande-de, avec-le-band-de, bande-de | de: Binde-von, mit-Binde-von, mit-der-Schar-von Exod 28:8; Exod 28:27; Exod 28:28; Exod 29:5; Exod 39:5

חַשְׁבַּדְנָה H2806 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Hashbaddanah, a leader who stood with Ezra at the law reading

Hashbaddanah appears in Nehemiah 8:4 among the leaders who stood on the wooden platform with Ezra during the public reading of the Torah. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it may contain divine name elements or relate to Aramaic roots. The Septuagint offers variant readings (Ασαβαμα, Αβαανας), indicating textual uncertainty. These platform assistants helped make the law reading a solemn public event, visibly supporting Ezra before the assembled community.

(1×) The listing of thirteen men standing with Ezra (six on his right, seven on his left) created a formal assembly for the covenant renewal ceremony. Hashbaddanah's position on the platform signaled his leadership status in the post-exilic community. These names function as historical record and witness list, documenting who participated in this pivotal moment of Torah restoration. The conjunction 'and' links him to the chain of leaders publicly identified with covenant renewal. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Hashbaddanah | es: y-Hasbadana | fr: [וחשבדנה] | de: [וחשבדנה] Neh 8:4

וְחַשְׁבָּה H2807 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Chashuvah, a son of Zerubbabel in the Davidic royal line

Chashuvah appears in 1 Chronicles 3:20 as one of Zerubbabel's sons, part of the post-exilic Davidic lineage. The name means 'consideration' or 'regarded,' possibly indicating parental hope or circumstances of birth. The Septuagint readings vary (Ασουβε, Ααασαβαθ), reflecting textual uncertainty. As a descendant of Zerubbabel, Chashuvah belonged to the royal family that returned from exile, though the Davidic monarchy was not restored. Chronicles preserves this genealogy to maintain hope in God's promises to David's line.

(1×) Within Zerubbabel's family tree, Chashuvah represents continued Davidic lineage in the Persian period despite the absence of kingship. Chronicles carefully documents this royal descent, preserving messianic hope through genealogical continuity. The conjunction 'and' connects him to his brothers in the list, maintaining the sequential record of Davidic descendants. These genealogies served both historical and theological functions, keeping alive the promise of David's eternal dynasty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Chashuvah | es: Y-Jasuba | fr: [וחשבה] | de: [וחשבה] 1Chr 3:20

חֶשְׁבּוֹן H2808 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

reckoning, reasoning, calculation, scheme

Mental calculation, reasoning, or scheming. The term appears only in Ecclesiastes, referring to intellectual investigation and the search for understanding. Qohelet seeks wisdom and 'reckoning'—systematic investigation of life's meaning. The word can carry neutral connotations (rational calculation) or negative ones (devious schemes), depending on context. It represents humanity's attempt to understand and systematize reality through reason. In Qohelet's quest, it stands for the intellectual frameworks and calculations by which humans try to make sense of existence under the sun.

(3×) Reasoning, calculation, or systematic investigation. Ecclesiastes 7:25 describes searching for 'wisdom and reckoning,' the rational investigation of reality. Ecclesiastes 7:27 recounts adding 'one to one to find reckoning,' methodical calculation seeking truth. Ecclesiastes 9:10 notes that in Sheol 'there is no reckoning,' no more intellectual activity. Spanish razón/cálculo, French calcul, and English reasoning all capture this intellectual calculation, whether mathematical or philosophical. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-reasoning, reasoning | es: razón, y-cálculo, y-razón | fr: calcul, et-calcul | de: [וחשבון], [חשבון] Eccl 7:25; Eccl 7:27; Eccl 9:10

חֶשְׁבּוֹן H2809 N-proper-fs (38×)

Heshbon — the Amorite capital east of the Jordan, city of Sihon, later Reubenite and Gadite territory

Cheshbon is the Hebrew name for Heshbon, the fortified city east of the Jordan that served as the capital of Sihon king of the Amorites. Its 38 occurrences trace a turbulent history of conquest and re-conquest. Israel captured it from Sihon (Num 21:25-26), and Numbers preserves an ancient taunt-song: 'Come to Heshbon! Let the city of Sihon be rebuilt and established' (Num 21:27). Assigned to Reuben (Num 32:37; Josh 13:17) yet on the border of Gad (Josh 13:26), the city was later designated a Levitical city (Josh 21:39). The prophets witness its return to Moabite and Ammonite hands: Isaiah laments that 'Heshbon and Elealeh cry out' (Isa 15:4; 16:8-9), and Jeremiah pronounces doom upon it (Jer 48:2, 34, 45). Song of Songs 7:5 offers a surprising comparison: 'your eyes are like the pools of Heshbon.'

Heshbon (city) (38×) The proper noun Cheshbon, identifying the ancient Transjordanian city that served as Sihon's Amorite capital (Num 21:26; Deut 1:4; 2:24-30) and whose conquest opened Israel's settlement east of the Jordan. It appears in historical narrative (Num 21:25-34; Josh 9:10; 12:2, 5; Judg 11:19, 26), tribal allotment texts (Josh 13:10, 17, 21, 26-27; 21:39; Num 32:3, 37), prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:4; 16:8-9; Jer 48:2, 34, 45), and as a poetic simile in Song of Songs 7:5. The site is identified with modern Tell Hesban in Jordan. Translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Hesbon,' French 'Heshbon,' German 'Heschbon.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Cheshbon, Heshbon, in-Heshbon | es: Hesbón, Jesbón, Jeshbón | fr: Cheshbon, Hesbon, Heshbon | de: Cheshbon, Heschbon, Heshbon Num 21:25; Num 21:26; Num 21:27; Num 21:28; Num 21:30

חֶשְׁבּוֹן H2810 N-mpc (2×)

devices, inventions, schemes devised by human ingenuity

This term denotes human contrivances, both neutral inventions and morally problematic schemes. In 2 Chronicles 26:15, King Uzziah employed such devices—siege engines designed by clever inventors for hurling stones and arrows from towers. Ecclesiastes 7:29 uses the word with moral critique: God made humanity upright, but people sought out many devices or schemes, suggesting inventive corruption. The semantic range encompasses both technological innovation (war machines) and moral deviation (scheming), united by the concept of human ingenuity applied for various ends.

(2×) The two contexts demonstrate this word's semantic breadth. 2 Chronicles 26:15 celebrates military innovation, describing Uzziah's commissioned engines as "the invention of inventive men"—a pleonastic phrase emphasizing human cleverness in siege warfare technology. Ecclesiastes 7:29 condemns human inventiveness, contrasting God's original upright design with humanity's search for "many schemes" or devices, implying moral and intellectual corruption. Spanish distinguishes maquinaciones (scheming) from máquinas (machines), capturing the dual application to both mental plotting and physical invention. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: inventions, schemes | es: maquinaciones, máquinas | fr: [חשבנות], חשבנות | de: [חשבנות] 2Chr 26:15; Eccl 7:29

חֲשַׁבְיָהוּ H2811 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)

Hashabiah — 'Yahweh has reckoned'; a Levitical name borne by musicians, officers, and officials

A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has taken account' or 'the LORD has reckoned,' borne by at least seven distinct individuals — all of them Levites or temple officials. David's temple musician Hashabiah served in the twenty-fifth division (1 Chr 25:3, 19). Another Hashabiah administered the tribe of Levi under David (1 Chr 27:17), and yet another oversaw affairs in Hebron (1 Chr 26:30). In the post-exilic period the name proliferates among those who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:19, 24), sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh 10:11), and served in the restored temple (Neh 11:15, 22; 12:24).

Hashabiah (personal name) (15×) The masculine proper name Hashabiah (חֲשַׁבְיָה / חֲשַׁבְיָהוּ), a theophoric compound meaning 'Yah(u) has reckoned,' designating multiple Levites across Israel's history: temple musicians under David (1 Chr 25:3, 19), tribal and regional officers (1 Chr 26:30; 27:17), Josiah-era Levites (2 Chr 35:9), and numerous post-exilic officials under Ezra and Nehemiah (Ezra 8:19, 24; Neh 10:11; 11:15, 22; 12:24). Cross-lingual renderings vary from close transliterations (eng 'Hashabiah/Chashavyah') to Europeanized forms (deu 'Haschabja', spa 'Hasabías/Jasabías'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chashavyah, Chashavyahu, Hashabiah | es: Hasabías, Jasabya, Jasabías | fr: Hashabia, et-Hashabia, zu-Hashabia | de: Haschabja, [וחשביהו], [חשביה] 1Chr 6:45; 1Chr 9:14; 1Chr 25:3; 1Chr 25:19; 1Chr 26:30

חֲשַׁבְנָה H2812 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hashabnah, a leader among the people who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah's time

Hashabnah was one of the chiefs of the people who set his seal to the covenant renewal under Nehemiah (Neh 10:25). The name appears only once in Scripture. Ancient versions like the Septuagint render it as Esabana or Asbana, suggesting some textual uncertainty. BDB notes it may be a scribal error for a similar name, Hashabiah, which occurs elsewhere.

(1×) This proper name appears in a list of leaders who publicly committed to the covenant after the exile. The single occurrence in Nehemiah 10:25 places Hashabnah among the heads of families who pledged to observe the Torah. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration rather than translation, as is typical for personal names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hashabnah | es: Hasabna | fr: [חשבנה] | de: [חשבנה] Neh 10:25

חֲשַׁבְנְיָה H2813 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hashabneiah, personal name meaning possibly 'Yahweh has considered (me)'

This personal name identifies two individuals in Nehemiah's account of post-exilic restoration. One Hashabneiah was father of a builder who helped repair Jerusalem's wall (Nehemiah 3:10). Another appears among the Levites leading corporate prayer and covenant renewal (Nehemiah 9:5). The name's theophoric element (ending in -yah) indicates a personal statement about Yahweh's regard or consideration. The Septuagint manuscripts show significant variation in transliteration, reflecting the challenges of rendering complex Hebrew names into Greek.

(2×) Both occurrences fall within Nehemiah's narrative of restoration activities—wall-building and covenant-renewal. The father of Hattush (Nehemiah 3:10) contributed to the physical restoration of Jerusalem, while the Levite Hashabneiah (Nehemiah 9:5) participated in spiritual renewal through public prayer. The relationship between this name and the similar Hashabiah (as BDB notes) suggests possible scribal variation or familial naming patterns. Greek manuscripts diverge significantly (Asbanam, Sabanou), illustrating the fluidity of proper name transmission across linguistic boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hashabneiah, Hashabniah | es: Hasabnías | fr: [חשבניה] | de: [חשבניה] Neh 3:10; Neh 9:5

חָשָׁה H2814 V-Hifil-Perf-1cs (16×)

To be silent, keep quiet, or become still; ranging from chosen silence to hushing others to the calming of natural forces.

A word that moves through the whole spectrum of silence — from a deliberate decision to hold one's tongue, to the stillness of waves after a storm. In Ecclesiastes 3:7, it appears in the famous 'a time to be silent and a time to speak,' where the Qal simply names the state. But the Hifil sharpens the intention: in 2 Kings 2:3 and 5, Elisha commands the sons of the prophets to 'be silent' about Elijah's coming departure, and in Isaiah 42:14, God himself declares 'I have been silent' — a divine restraint that makes His eventual action all the more dramatic. Spanish consistently uses 'callar' across both stems, while French favors 'se taire.' The single appearance in Psalm 107:29, where the waves 'were hushed,' reveals the word's surprising range: silence is not only human but cosmic.

1. keep silent deliberately (Hifil) (8×) Deliberate silence in the Hifil stem — an intentional choice to hold one's peace. In Judges 18:9 the Danite spies urge their brothers not to keep idly silent but to act; in 2 Kings 7:9, the lepers at Samaria's gate realize 'we are keeping silent' when they should be sharing good news. Isaiah 42:14 and Psalm 39:2 use the first person: God and the psalmist each recount their chosen restraint. Spanish 'callar' and French 'se taire' both emphasize the volitional aspect. The Hifil form consistently marks silence as a decision, not merely a condition. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: I-have-been-silent, I-was-silent, are-keeping-silent | es: callad, callamos, callando | fr: le-se-taire, se-taire, silent | de: [החשיתי], [מחשה], ich-Krieg-silent Judg 18:9; 1Kgs 22:3; 2Kgs 2:3; 2Kgs 2:5; 2Kgs 7:9

2. be silent (Qal) (6×) The basic Qal state of being or remaining silent, without the intensified intentionality of the Hifil. Ecclesiastes 3:7 pairs it with speaking as a natural human rhythm. In Isaiah 62:1 and 62:6, the prophet vows not to be silent until Zion's righteousness shines forth, and the watchmen on Jerusalem's walls are told never to be silent — here the Qal describes a default state that must be broken. Psalm 28:1 carries the most urgent tone: 'Do not be silent to me,' the psalmist pleads, equating God's silence with abandonment. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: I-shall-be-silent, shall-they-be-silent, to-be-silent | es: callarán, callaré, calles | fr: se-taire, à-לחשות | de: [אחשה], [יחשו], [לחשות] Ps 28:1; Eccl 3:7; Isa 62:1; Isa 62:6; Isa 64:12

3. silence others (Hifil causative) (1×) A causative Hifil sense of silencing or hushing others, attested once in Nehemiah 8:11, where the Levites quiet the weeping people so they can hear the Law read. Spanish 'calmando' and the context of a public assembly make this sense distinct — the subject acts upon others to produce silence rather than practicing it personally. Though rare, it demonstrates the full causative potential of the Hifil. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: were-quieting | es: calmando | fr: [מחשים] | de: [מחשים] Neh 8:11

4. become still, be hushed (1×) The stilling or hushing of natural forces, attested once in Psalm 107:29 where God calms the storm and the waves 'were hushed.' Spanish 'se aquietaron' captures the reflexive quality — the waves subsiding into stillness. This Qal usage extends the word beyond human speech into the natural world, depicting cosmic obedience to God's command in language that anticipates Jesus stilling the sea in the Gospels. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: and-were-hushed | es: y-se-aquietaron | fr: et-se-taire | de: und-waren-hushed Ps 107:29

חֲשׁוּב H2815 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Hasshub, a personal name borne by Levites and wall-builders in postexilic Judah

A Hebrew personal name meaning 'considerate' or 'esteemed,' borne by several individuals in the postexilic community. One Hasshub was a Levite chief listed among those resettling Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:14; Neh 11:15). Others appear as builders repairing sections of Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah (Neh 3:11, 23) and as a signatory to the covenant renewal (Neh 10:23). The Septuagint renders the name as Asoub/Asouth.

(5×) A proper masculine name ('considerate') designating at least two or three distinct individuals in postexilic Judah. One is a prominent Levite descended from Merari who helped resettle Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:14; Neh 11:15). Two others are builders who repaired different sections of the wall under Nehemiah (Neh 3:11, 23). Spanish renders 'Hasub/Jasub,' English 'Hasshub,' reflecting transliteration variation. The LXX form Ασουβ confirms the consonantal tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chashuv, Hasshub, and-Hasshub | es: Hasub, Jasub, y-Hasub | fr: [וחשוב], [חשוב] | de: [וחשוב], [חשוב] 1Chr 9:14; Neh 3:11; Neh 3:23; Neh 10:23; Neh 11:15

חֲשׁוֹךְ H2816 Prep-b / N-msd (1×)

darkness, the absence of light; used of the unknowable realm where God reveals hidden things

This Aramaic word for darkness appears in Daniel's night vision, where the prophet declares that God 'knows what is in the darkness' (Dan 2:22). Unlike ordinary absence of light, this darkness represents the hidden realm inaccessible to human wisdom. The context emphasizes divine sovereignty over mysteries concealed from mortals. Spanish and English glosses consistently use 'darkness' terminology, while French preserves the Hebrew form, highlighting its distinctive Aramaic character.

(1×) The Aramaic form appears in Daniel 2:22 within a doxology praising God's omniscience. Daniel affirms that God 'knows what is in the darkness,' contrasting human limitation with divine knowledge. The darkness here is not merely physical but epistemological—the realm of hidden truths that only God can penetrate. Cross-language glosses emphasize this state of obscurity. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: is-in-the-darkness | es: en-la-oscuridad | fr: obscurité | de: [בחשוכא] Dan 2:22

חֲשׁוּפָא H2817 N-proper-ms (2×)

Chasufa or Hasupha, head of a Nethinim family among returning exiles

This name designates the leader of a temple servant family in the post-exilic community, appearing in parallel census lists with slight spelling variation (Chasufa in Ezra 2:43, Chasupha in Nehemiah 7:46). The Nethinim formed a distinct class providing menial labor for temple operations, and their genealogical registration in return lists indicates their recognized status in restored Judean society. The name's meaning remains uncertain, though it may relate to being stripped or made bare. The orthographic variation between the two passages reflects common scribal practices.

(2×) The two attestations in Ezra-Nehemiah's parallel return lists establish this family among the recognized Nethinim groups. These temple servants occupied a lower social status than priests and Levites but formed an essential part of Second Temple infrastructure. The spelling variation (חֲשׁוּפָא vs. חֲשַׁפָא) demonstrates minor orthographic flexibility in biblical manuscripts while maintaining the same referent. Translators preserve the name in transliteration, recognizing it as a proper personal identifier rather than a common noun requiring semantic translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chasufa, Hasupha | es: Hasufa, Jasufá | fr: [חשופא], [חשפא] | de: [חשופא], [חשפא] Ezra 2:43; Neh 7:46

חֲשַׁח H2818a V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

to need, require; used of lacking necessity or compulsion to act

This rare Aramaic verb appears in Daniel 3:16, where Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego tell Nebuchadnezzar they 'have no need' to answer his ultimatum. The verb conveys lacking necessity or being under no obligation. Cognates in Syriac and Assyrian confirm the sense of craving or needing. The multilingual glosses capture both the idea of necessity and the bold assertion of independence from royal pressure.

(1×) In its single occurrence, the three young men use this verb to express their freedom from compulsion to defend themselves. They do not 'need' to answer because their loyalty to God is non-negotiable. The Aramaic participle form appears in a context of faithful defiance, where the protagonists reject the king's authority over their conscience. Spanish 'necesitamos' and French 'avoir-besoin' both preserve the root sense of necessity. NECESSITY AND NEED en: need | es: necesitamos | fr: avoir-besoin | de: [חשחין] Dan 3:16

חַשְׁחָה H2818b N-fp (1×)

things needed, necessities; supplies required for a particular purpose

This feminine plural noun denotes 'things needed' or requirements. It appears in Ezra 6:9 in a royal decree commanding that whatever the priests 'need' for temple sacrifices be supplied without fail. The Syriac cognate confirms the sense of necessity or requirement. The Persian king's generosity contrasts with the exiles' former deprivation, underscoring God's providence through foreign rulers.

(1×) In Ezra 6:9, King Darius orders his officials to provide 'whatever they need'—young bulls, rams, lambs, wheat, salt, wine, and oil—for the daily temple offerings. The plural form emphasizes the variety of necessities. Cross-language glosses like Spanish 'sea-necesario' ('may it be necessary') capture the administrative language of ensuring continuous supply for worship. NECESSITY AND NEED en: they-need | es: sea-necesario | fr: [חשחן] | de: [חשחן] Ezra 6:9

חַשְׁחוּ H2819 N-fsc (1×)
requirement, what is needed; collective term for necessities of the temple
This construct-form noun means 'requirement' or 'need,' appearing in Ezra 7:20 where Artaxerxes authorizes funds for 'whatever else is needed for the house of your God.' The Syriac cognate supports the collective sense of necessities. The king's open-ended provision demonstrates remarkable trust in Ezra's stewardship and divine favor on the restoration project.

(1×) Ezra 7:20 uses this word in a royal grant allowing Ezra to draw from the imperial treasury for any temple needs beyond the specific items listed. The construct form 'the requirement of the house of your God' emphasizes institutional necessities. Spanish 'lo-necesario-de' and English 'the-needs-of' both capture the collective scope of this provision. NECESSITY AND NEED en: the-needs-of | es: lo-necesario-de | fr: [חשחות] | de: [חשחות] Ezra 7:20

חָשַׂךְ H2820 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (27×)
To withhold, restrain, or spare; from holding back resources to showing mercy by staying one's hand
A verb whose semantic center is the act of holding back — whether restraining oneself, withholding goods, or sparing another from harm. Its range moves from Abraham not withholding his son (Gen 22:12) to the sage who 'spares' the rod (Prov 13:24) to Job's claim that God reserved calamity for a future day (Job 38:23). Spanish shifts between 'retiene,' 'escatimes,' and 'reservé,' while French uses 'retenir' broadly. The word quietly maps the moral landscape of what we give, what we keep, and what we choose not to inflict.

1. restrain, hold back (14×) Restraining, holding back, or keeping in check an action or force. God restrained Abimelech from sinning (Gen 20:6), Abigail restrained David from bloodshed (1 Sam 25:39), and Joab held back the army (2 Sam 18:16). Job resolves not to 'restrain' his mouth (Job 7:11). The emphasis is on curbing something that would otherwise proceed — an act of control or self-control. Spanish 'retiene' and French 'retint' capture this forceful checking. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: He-keeps-back, and-I-restrained, and-there-is-one-who-withholds | es: Retiene, ahorraría, contención | fr: [חשכן], [תחשך], et-Je-retint | de: Finsternis, [אחשך], [וחושך] Gen 20:6; 1Sam 25:39; 2Sam 18:16; Job 7:11; Job 16:5

2. withhold, keep from giving (6×) Withholding goods, resources, or generosity — the refusal to give what one could. Genesis 22:12 and 22:16 celebrate Abraham because he 'did not withhold' his only son. Proverbs 21:26 contrasts the righteous who gives freely with the one who withholds. Job 30:10 laments that his accusers 'did not withhold' their spit from his face. The moral weight here falls on what is kept back — selfishness or faithfulness measured by what one does not release. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: he-withheld, hold-back, they-withheld | es: escatimes, retiene, retuvieron | fr: [תחשכי], il-withheld, retenir | de: [חשכן], [יחשך], [תחשכי] Gen 22:12; Gen 22:16; Gen 39:9; Job 30:10; Prov 21:26

3. spare, show mercy (6×) Sparing someone by withholding punishment, destruction, or severity — mercy expressed as restraint. Proverbs 13:24 says whoever 'spares' the rod hates his child, making withholding paradoxically unloving. Psalm 78:50 says God 'did not spare' their lives from pestilence. Ezra 9:13 acknowledges that God punished 'less than our iniquities deserved' — a sparing that is itself grace. The verb frames mercy not as positive action but as the deliberate non-exercise of power. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: have-withheld, he-spared, he-who-spares | es: El-que-retiene, castigaste-menos, es-reservado | fr: [חשכת], retenir, spared | de: [חושך], [חשכת], [יחשך] 2Kgs 5:20; Ezra 9:13; Job 21:30; Ps 78:50; Prov 13:24

4. reserve, store up (1×) Reserving or storing up something for a future occasion. In Job 38:23, God asks Job whether he has seen the storehouses of hail 'which I have reserved for the time of trouble.' This sole occurrence extends the withholding idea temporally: what is held back now is kept purposefully for later deployment. The sense carries an undertone of sovereign intentionality — not passive storage but strategic reservation. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: I-have-reserved | es: reservé | fr: retenir | de: [חשכתי] Job 38:23

חָשַׁךְ H2821 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (18×)
To be or become dark; of sky, sun, or stars losing light; of eyes growing dim; causatively, to bring darkness.
This verb paints the full spectrum of darkness in Scripture, from the literal blackout of the Egyptian plague (Exod 10:15) to the cosmic dimming of sun, moon, and stars on the Day of the Lord (Eccl 12:2). The Hifil causative adds theological agency: God darkens the skies (Amos 5:8) or sends darkness upon Egypt (Ps 105:28). Two specialized extensions appear in Lamentations: eyes growing dim from grief (Lam 5:17) and skin turning dark from famine (Lam 4:8). Spanish distinguishes 'oscurecer' for environmental darkening from the more visceral bodily senses, while German 'Finsternis' captures the numinous dread that darkness carries throughout the prophets.

1. become dark (light fails) (10×) The basic Qal intransitive sense: of the sky, sun, moon, stars, or day becoming dark or losing light. This covers both natural darkness (Exod 10:15, the locust plague blocking the sun) and eschatological cosmic darkening (Isa 13:10, Eccl 12:2). Job 3:9 curses the day of his birth, wishing its morning stars would grow dark. Spanish 'oscurecerse' and French 'obscurcir' consistently render this environmental sense, while German sometimes uses the noun 'Finsternis' (darkness) to capture the resulting state. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS
en: and-darkness, and-grow-dark, and-was-dark | es: Oscurézcanse, Sean-oscurecidos, oscurecerá | fr: et-obscurcir, et-était-dark, obscurcir | de: Finsternis, [וחשכה], [וחשכן] Exod 10:15; Job 3:9; Job 18:6; Ps 69:23; Eccl 12:2

2. cause darkness (Hifil) (6×) The Hifil causative sense: to darken, to bring about or impose darkness. God actively darkens the light of Egypt (Ps 105:28) and turns daylight to night (Amos 5:8). At Jer 13:16, the prophet warns to give glory to God before he causes darkness on the mountains. Job 38:2 uses it rhetorically: 'Who is this that darkens counsel?' The causative adds theological agency absent from the Qal – darkness becomes an instrument of divine purpose rather than a mere natural phenomenon. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS
en: and-I-will-darken, and-it-was-dark, darkening | es: oscurece, oscurezca, y-oscureceré | fr: et-obscurcir, obscurcir | de: [והחשיך], [והחשכתי], [יחשך] Job 38:2; Ps 105:28; Ps 139:12; Jer 13:16; Amos 5:8

3. grow dim (of eyes) (1×) A specialized Qal use for eyes growing dim, attested at Lam 5:17 where eyes have grown dark from weeping over Zion's desolation. Spanish 'se han oscurecido' applies the same darkening vocabulary to human vision, yet the context makes clear this is grief-induced dimness rather than environmental darkness. The metaphor bridges physical and emotional registers: failing sight becomes an embodied expression of sorrow. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS
en: have-grown-dim | es: se-han-oscurecido | fr: obscurcir | de: [חשכן] Lam 5:17

4. become dark (of skin) (1×) A rare Qal extension describing skin or bodily appearance turning dark or blackened, found at Lam 4:8 where the once-radiant Nazirites are now darker than soot. Spanish 'mas oscuro' (darker) and French 'tenebres' (darkness) both render the comparative, pointing to a visible transformation caused by famine and suffering. This sense extends the root's semantic range from cosmic and environmental darkness to the human body itself, completing a full trajectory from sky to skin. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: Darker | es: Más-oscuro | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis Lam 4:8

חֹשֶׁךְ H2822 Conj-w (80×)
darkness, obscurity; the absence of light whether physical, primordial, metaphorical, or theophanic Hebrew choshek denotes the fundamental absence of light, appearing first in the primordial chaos of Genesis 1:2 before God speaks light into existence. The word carries enormous theological range: the tangible plague-darkness over Egypt (Exod 10:21-22), the thick darkness shrouding Sinai at the theophany (Deut 4:11; 5:22), and the metaphorical darkness of ignorance, judgment, and death (Job 3:4-5; Isa 45:7). Notably, darkness is not merely the negation of light but an active, almost material presence — God forms light and creates darkness (Isa 45:7). Spanish oscuridad, French tenebres, and German Finsternis all capture the gravity of the term.

darkness, absence of light (80×) The absence or opposite of light, encompassing primordial darkness before creation (Gen 1:2), the supernatural plague-darkness in Egypt (Exod 10:21-22), theophanic cloud-darkness at Sinai (Deut 4:11), and metaphorical darkness signifying death, judgment, or moral blindness (Job 17:12; Isa 45:7). Hebrew treats choshek as a near-tangible reality that God actively creates, not merely the passive absence of illumination. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: darkness | es: la-oscuridad, la-oscuridad„ oscuridad | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis Exod 10:21; Deut 4:11; Josh 2:5; 1Sam 2:9

חָשׁוֹךְ H2823 Adj-mp (1×)

obscure, low-ranking; those of little social standing or influence

This adjective describes 'obscure men'—people of low social standing opposite to kings. In Proverbs 22:29, a skilled worker is promised that 'he will stand before kings, not before obscure men.' The term connotes lack of prominence or influence. The contrast underscores how diligence elevates one's social position, bringing access to the powerful rather than confinement to the margins.

(1×) The single occurrence in Proverbs 22:29 uses the masculine plural form as a substantive: 'obscure men' who lack the status of royalty. Skill and diligence open doors to royal courts, lifting the artisan above service to the insignificant. Spanish 'oscuros' (dark ones) and English 'obscure-men' both capture the metaphor of those who dwell in social shadow, unnoticed and powerless. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: obscure-men | es: oscuros | fr: חשכים | de: [חשכים] Prov 22:29

חֲשֵׁכָה H2824 N-fsc (1×)

darkness, thick darkness; often figurative of distress, ignorance, or divine concealment

This poetic term for darkness appears in contexts both literal and metaphorical. In Genesis 15:12, 'great darkness' falls on Abraham during a covenant vision. Psalm 18:11 describes God making 'darkness of waters' his covering in theophany. Figuratively, it represents lack of understanding (Ps 82:5) or distress (Isa 8:22, 50:10). The multilingual evidence shows consistent 'darkness' terminology across languages, though the Hebrew has several near-synonyms for different nuances.

(1×) This construct form in Psalm 18:11 appears in a vivid theophanic image: 'darkness of waters' as God's pavilion. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 22:12 has a different word, suggesting textual variation. The construct phrase emphasizes darkness characterized by or composed of something—here, gathered storm clouds. French 'ténèbres' and German 'Finsternis' preserve the ominous, weighty connotation of deep obscurity surrounding the divine presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: darkness-of- | es: oscuridad-de | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis-von- Ps 18:11

חֲשֵׁכָה H2825 N-fp (5×)

darkness, gloom; used of supernatural, figurative, and distress-related darkness

A poetic noun for darkness that carries deeper resonance than simple absence of light. In Genesis 15:12, a 'great darkness' falls upon Abraham during the covenant ceremony – a supernatural, terrifying gloom. The Psalms set it opposite light (Ps 139:12) and use it for moral ignorance (Ps 82:5). Isaiah employs it for the distress of those who walk without light (Isa 8:22; 50:10). Spanish 'tinieblas/ oscuridad' and French 'obscurité' capture the ominous weight well.

(5×) Deep darkness or gloom, used chiefly in poetic and prophetic texts with connotations beyond mere physical dimness. It denotes supernatural dread in Abraham's covenant vision (Gen 15:12, 'a great darkness'), moral blindness among unjust judges (Ps 82:5), the equivalence of darkness and light before God (Ps 139:12), and existential distress in Isaiah (8:22; 50:10). Multilingual evidence underscores the gravity: Spanish 'tinieblas' (deeper than simple 'oscuridad'), French 'obscurité,' German 'Finsternis' – all choosing weighty, literary terms. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-darkness, darkness, in-darkness | es: como-la-oscuridad, en-oscuridades, en-tinieblas | fr: [וחשכה], [חשכים], comme-obscurité | de: Finsternis, [וחשכה], [חשכים] Gen 15:12; Ps 82:5; Ps 139:12; Isa 8:22; Isa 50:10

חָשַׁל H2826 Art / V-Nifal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

shattered ones, stragglers; those broken down or worn out, unable to keep pace

This Niphal participle describes those who are 'shattered' or broken down, appearing in Deuteronomy 25:18 where Amalek attacked Israel's stragglers—'all the shattered ones' who were exhausted and lagging behind. The verb suggests violent shattering or crushing. Some scholars connect it to a root meaning 'to be weak,' but the imagery of being shattered by hardship fits the context of vulnerable refugees overwhelmed by the wilderness journey.

(1×) In Deuteronomy 25:18, Moses recalls how Amalek struck down 'all the shattered ones' (or stragglers) at the rear of Israel's march—those too weary and feeble to keep up. The Niphal form conveys a state of being broken or crushed by exhaustion. English 'stragglers,' Spanish 'los-rezagados,' and French 'le-stragglers' all emphasize those who fall behind, victims of their shattered condition rather than cowardice. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: the-stragglers | es: los-rezagados | fr: le-stragglers | de: der-stragglers Deut 25:18

חֲשַׁל H2827 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to crush, shatter; to break something into pieces by violent impact

This Aramaic verb means 'to crush' or 'shatter by a blow,' appearing in Daniel 2:40 where iron 'shatters and crushes all things.' The image describes destructive force, like a hammer pulverizing metal. Assyrian and Syriac cognates confirm the sense of violent breaking or forging. The context is Nebuchadnezzar's vision of successive empires, with iron representing brutal military power that shatters opposition.

(1×) Daniel 2:40 uses the Aramaic active participle to describe iron's crushing power: 'as iron shatters and crushes all these.' The verb intensifies the imagery of the fourth kingdom's irresistible might. Spanish 'aplasta' (crushes), French 'briser' (breaks), and English 'crushes' all capture the violent, destructive force. The participle form emphasizes ongoing, relentless action. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-crushes | es: y-aplasta | fr: et-briser | de: [וחשל] Dan 2:40

חָשֻׁם H2828 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Hashum, head of a family among the returned exiles from Babylon

A proper name designating the head of a prominent family among those who returned from Babylonian exile. The sons of Hashum numbered 223 (Ezra 2:19) or 328 (Neh 7:22), and some of them were among those who had married foreign wives and agreed to put them away (Ezra 10:33). Hashum also appears standing beside Ezra at the public Torah reading (Neh 8:4) and as a signatory to the covenant (Neh 10:18).

(5×) A proper masculine name identifying the ancestral head of a clan among the returned Babylonian exiles. The family appears in both census lists (Ezra 2:19; Neh 7:22), with members involved in the intermarriage crisis (Ezra 10:33). A figure named Hashum stands on the platform during Ezra's Torah reading (Neh 8:4) and seals the covenant (Neh 10:18). Spanish 'Hasum/Jasum' and English 'Hashum' reflect standard transliteration patterns for this postexilic name. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13337 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Chashum, Hashum, and-Hashum | es: Hasum, Jasum, y-Hasum | fr: [חשם], [חשם] | de: [חשם], [חשם] Ezra 2:19; Ezra 10:33; Neh 7:22; Neh 8:4; Neh 10:18

חַשְׁמוֹן H2829 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Cheshmon, a town in southern Judah of unknown location

Cheshmon was a town in the Negev region allotted to Judah (Josh 15:27). It appears in a list of settlements in the extreme south near the Edomite border. The site has not been identified archaeologically. The name occurs only once in Scripture, and ancient versions transliterate it with minor variations, offering no clues to its etymology or precise location.

(1×) This place name appears in Joshua 15:27 among twenty-nine cities in southern Judah. The conjunction 'and Cheshmon' shows it in a geographic catalog. Cross-language glosses transliterate the name: English 'Cheshmon,' Spanish 'Hesmón,' French 'Cheshmon,' and German 'Cheshmon.' The consistent transliteration across versions indicates uncertainty about the name's meaning or derivation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Cheshmon | es: y-Hesmón | fr: et-Cheshmon | de: und-Cheshmon Josh 15:27

חַשְׁמַל H2830 N-ms (3×)

gleaming metal, amber, electrum (uncertain identification)

A mysterious shining substance of uncertain identification, appearing only in Ezekiel's throne visions. Traditional interpretations include amber, electrum (gold-silver alloy), or some other brilliant metallic substance. The Greek translated it as 'elektron,' while Latin used 'electrum.' The context always involves divine appearances, where the substance describes the radiance surrounding God's presence. Its brilliance and mysterious nature fit the ineffable glory of theophanic visions. Modern interpreters remain uncertain whether it denotes a specific material or simply represents overwhelming brilliance beyond normal description.

(3×) A brilliant shining substance, possibly amber or electrum, appearing in divine visions. Ezekiel 1:4 describes 'the appearance of gleaming metal' within the storm cloud of God's approach. Ezekiel 1:27 uses it twice to describe the brilliant radiance surrounding the enthroned figure. Ezekiel 8:2 employs it for the fiery appearance of the divine figure. The consistent visionary context and the term's rarity suggest it represents transcendent brilliance beyond ordinary materials. Cross-linguistic attempts (Spanish jasmal, French ambre) reflect the translation difficulty. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE

en: amber, the-amber | es: el-jasmal, jasmal | fr: [החשמלה], [חשמל], l'ambre | de: [החשמל], [החשמלה], [חשמל] Ezek 1:4; Ezek 1:27; Ezek 8:2

חַשְׁמַן H2831 N-mp (1×)

nobles or ambassadors; a term of uncertain meaning, possibly referring to envoys or dignitaries

This rare plural noun appears only in Psalm 68:31, where 'nobles' (or possibly 'ambassadors') are expected to come from Egypt. The meaning is uncertain—ancient versions suggest 'ambassadors' or 'nobles,' while rabbinic tradition favors 'dignitaries.' Some modern scholars propose textual emendation to 'oils' or 'ointments.' The context envisions foreign nations streaming to Zion in homage.

(1×) In Psalm 68:31, the psalmist anticipates that 'nobles will come out of Egypt' as part of God's universal triumph. The rare word has sparked much conjecture. Ancient Greek, Syriac, and Latin versions all suggest high-status envoys or ambassadors. Cross-language glosses uniformly render it 'nobles,' reflecting the traditional interpretation of dignitaries coming to acknowledge Israel's God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: nobles | es: nobles | fr: noble | de: nobles Ps 68:31

חַשְׁמֹנָה H2832 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Hashmonah, a wilderness station during Israel's exodus journey

This place name designates one of the encampment sites during Israel's wilderness wanderings, appearing in the itinerary of Numbers 33:29-30. The location remains unidentified in modern geography, like many wilderness stations in the exodus route. The name may relate to fertility or fatness (if connected to shemen, oil), but this remains speculative. Ancient itinerary lists often preserved site names whose meanings had become opaque over time, prioritizing geographical memory over etymological clarity.

(2×) Both occurrences in Numbers 33 form part of the systematic itinerary formula: "they journeyed from X and camped in Hashmonah" (v.29), "they journeyed from Hashmonah and camped in Y" (v.30). This bracketing structure places Hashmonah firmly within the wilderness journey sequence without providing topographical detail. The site's modern identification remains unknown, reflecting the challenge of locating many Sinai wilderness stations. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name in transliterated form (French Hashmonah, German Hashmonah) rather than attempting translation, recognizing the priority of geographical reference over semantic interpretation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Hashmonah, in-Hashmonah | es: de-Hasmoná, en-Hasmoná | fr: dans-Hashmonah, de-Hashmonah | de: in-Hashmonah, von-Hashmonah Num 33:29; Num 33:30

חֹשֶׁן H2833 Prep-b / N-msc (25×)

breastpiece — the sacred pouch on the high priest's chest, set with twelve gemstones and the Urim and Thummim

Choshen designates the high-priestly breastpiece (or 'breastplate of judgment'), one of the most elaborately described ritual objects in the Torah. All 25 occurrences fall within the Priestly source in Exodus and Leviticus, concentrated in the instructions for the tabernacle vestments (Exod 28) and their execution (Exod 39). The breastpiece was a square pouch, a span on each side, woven from the same gold-threaded, multicolored fabric as the ephod. Its face bore twelve precious stones in four rows, each engraved with the name of one of Israel's tribes — a visible memorial carried 'over Aaron's heart' when he entered the Holy Place (Exod 28:29). Inside the pouch rested the Urim and Thummim, the instruments of divine oracular consultation, which is why the breastpiece bore the formal title choshen hammishpat, 'the breastpiece of judgment' (Exod 28:15, 30). Gold chains fastened it to the ephod's shoulder-pieces, and a blue cord secured its lower edge to the ephod's sash. Spanish 'pectoral,' French 'pectoral,' and German 'Brustschild' all convey the chest-worn sacral object.

breastpiece, breastplate of judgment (25×) The sacred pouch-like ornament worn on the high priest's chest, set with four rows of three precious stones representing the twelve tribes and containing the Urim and Thummim for oracular inquiry. Called choshen hammishpat ('breastpiece of judgment') in Exod 28:15, 30. It was attached to the ephod by gold chains at the shoulders and a blue ribbon at the waist (Exod 28:22-28; 39:8-21). Every occurrence belongs to the Priestly tabernacle instructions or their fulfillment (Exod 25:7; 28:4-30; 29:5; 35:9, 27; 39:8-21; Lev 8:8). Spanish and French 'pectoral' and German 'Brustschild' confirm a single referent. ARMOR BREASTPLATE

en: and-for-the-breastpiece, breastpiece, the-breastpiece | es: el-pectoral, pectoral, y-para-el-pectoral | fr: et-pour-le-pectoral, le-pectoral, pectoral | de: Brustschild, das-Brustschild, und-fuer-der-Brustschild Exod 25:7; Exod 28:4; Exod 28:15; Exod 28:22; Exod 28:23

חָשַׂף H2834 V-Qal-InfAbs (11×)

Strip off, lay bare, expose; peel bark from a tree; scoop or draw water from a vessel

A verb of uncovering and removal, used across several vivid domains. In prophetic judgment oracles, it describes stripping garments or laying bare the arm of the LORD (Isa 52:10), often carrying overtones of shame or divine power revealed. Joel 1:7 applies it concretely to locusts peeling bark from fig trees. Surprisingly, in Isa 30:14 and Hag 2:16, the same root shifts to scooping water from a cistern—a sense confirmed by Spanish 'para sacar' and English 'to draw,' showing how the core idea of removing or drawing out branches into distinct physical actions.

1. strip bare, uncover, expose (7×) To strip bare or expose, removing coverings from a person or thing. Prophetically loaded: God bares His holy arm in power (Isa 52:10), while Babylon is shamed by having her skirts lifted (Isa 47:2, Jer 13:26). Spanish 'descubierto' and French 'dépouiller' both emphasize the uncovering dimension. The passive participle in Ezek 4:7 describes the prophet's exposed arm as a sign-act. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING
en: and-stripped-of, and-strips-bare, bared | es: Desnudó, descubierto, descubriré | fr: dépouiller, et-dénuder, et-dépouiller | de: [וחשופ], [חשופה], [חשף] Ps 29:9; Isa 20:4; Isa 47:2; Isa 52:10; Jer 13:26

2. strip bark, peel (2×) To strip bark or peel the outer layer from a tree, a concrete agricultural sense. Joel 1:7 uses it twice of the devastating locust plague that peeled Israel's fig trees bare. Spanish 'descortezó' ('de-barked') captures the precise action, distinguishing this from the human-focused stripping of sense 1. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING
en: it-has-stripped-it, stripping | es: descortezando, descortezó-la | fr: dépouiller | de: [חשף], [חשפה] Joel 1:7

3. draw water, scoop (2×) To draw or scoop water from a cistern or well, extending the root idea of 'drawing out' into the liquid domain. Found in Isa 30:14 (scooping fire from a hearth or water from a cistern) and Hag 2:16 (coming to draw from a wine vat). English 'to scoop' and Spanish 'para sacar' confirm this as a recognized distinct usage rather than a metaphorical extension of stripping. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: or-to-scoop, to-draw | es: para-sacar, y-para-sacar | fr: dépouiller, et-dépouiller | de: [ולחשף], [לחשף] Isa 30:14; Hag 2:16

חֲשִׁיף H2835 N-mpc (1×)
little flocks, small detachments; groups separated or stripped off from a larger body
This construct plural form, appearing in 1 Kings 20:27, describes Israel's troops as 'two little flocks of goats' compared to the vast Aramean army. The term suggests small, segregated groups. Ancient versions support the rendering 'flocks,' though the root etymology is uncertain. The image emphasizes Israel's vulnerability and sets the stage for God's deliverance against overwhelming odds.

(1×) In 1 Kings 20:27, Israel's forces are compared to 'two little flocks of goats,' highlighting their smallness and vulnerability before the Aramean multitude that 'filled the land.' The construct phrase 'flocks of goats' uses pastoral imagery to depict military detachments. Spanish 'rebaños' (flocks), French 'troupeaux,' and English 'flocks' all preserve the pastoral metaphor of small, segregated groups facing a massive enemy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: flocks-of | es: rebaños | fr: troupeaux-de | de: Herden-von 1Kgs 20:27

חָשַׁק H2836a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (8×)
To be attached to, to love, to set one's affection or desire upon someone or something.
A verb expressing deep emotional attachment and desire, used both of human love and divine election. When Shechem's soul clung to Dinah (Gen 34:8), this is the word chosen. More strikingly, it describes why God chose Israel – not because they were numerous, but because He 'set His love' upon them (Deut 7:7; 10:15). In Psalm 91:14 it is the believer's devotion to God that triggers divine protection. The Aramaic cognate means 'to bind,' revealing the physical metaphor beneath the emotional sense. French 'aimer' and Spanish 'deseó' reflect the range from love to longing.

be attached to, love, desire (8×) To be emotionally attached to, to love, to set one's desire upon. The verb chashaq conveys a deep, binding affection – the Aramaic cognate literally means 'to bind or fasten.' It covers human romantic desire (Gen 34:8, Shechem's attachment to Dinah; Deut 21:11, desire for a captive woman), God's sovereign love for Israel (Deut 7:7; 10:15, where YHWH 'set His love' upon the patriarchs and their descendants), and the believer's devotion to God (Ps 91:14). In 1 Kgs 9:19 it extends to Solomon's desire to build. Isa 38:17 uses it uniquely of God's loving deliverance of Hezekiah's soul from the pit. The multilingual glosses reveal the full range: Spanish 'deseó' (desired), French 'aimer' (to love), English 'delighted.' DESIRE AND WILLING en: and-you-desire, delighted, desired | es: desea, deseó, libraste | fr: [חשק], [חשקת], aimer | de: [חשק], [חשקת], delighted Gen 34:8; Deut 7:7; Deut 10:15; Deut 21:11; 1Kgs 9:19

חִשֵּׁק H2836b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)
to band, furnish with rings or fillets (architectural)
A specialized Piel verb meaning to furnish architectural elements with bands, rings, or fillets. The term appears exclusively in Exodus describing tabernacle construction, specifically the silver bands connecting the pillars of the courtyard. These decorative and structural bands held the pillars together while adding aesthetic value. The Piel stem indicates causative or intensive action—making something banded or repeatedly applying bands. The Pual passive participle describes the pillars as 'banded with silver,' showing the completed state. This technical terminology reflects the detailed craftsmanship of tabernacle construction.

(3×) To furnish with bands or fillets, specifically in tabernacle construction. Exodus 27:17 prescribes that courtyard pillars be 'banded with silver.' Exodus 38:17 describes the executed work: the pillars 'were banded with silver.' Exodus 38:28 notes Bezalel's work: 'he banded them'—connecting the pillars with silver fillets. The consistent architectural context and the technical precision reflect the detailed instructions for sacred space construction. English 'banded,' Spanish anilladas/molduras, and French banded all attempt to convey this architectural joining. BINDING AND TYING en: and-banded, banded, were-banded | es: anilladas-de, con-molduras, y-conectó | fr: banded, et-banded, étaient-banded | de: banded, und-banded, waren-banded Exod 27:17; Exod 38:17; Exod 38:28

חֶשֶׁק H2837 N-msc / 1cs (4×)
Desire, delight; a longed-for thing or pleasure; used of Solomon's building projects and personal delight.
Denotes a deep desire or the object of one's delight. In the accounts of Solomon's reign, it describes his ambitious building projects — everything he desired to build (1 Kgs 9:1, 19; 2 Chr 8:6). In Isaiah 21:4, it takes a more intimate turn: 'the twilight of my pleasure' becomes a time of dread. The Spanish 'deseo' and English 'desire' converge on the core meaning, while the Isaiah passage shows the word can shade into personal, almost wistful longing.

(4×) Desire or delight, either the abstract longing or the concrete thing desired. In 1 Kings 9:1, 19 and 2 Chronicles 8:6, it refers to Solomon's wished-for building projects ('the desire of Solomon'). In Isaiah 21:4, it describes personal pleasure or delight — 'the twilight of my pleasure' — turned to horror. Spanish 'deseo' and English 'desire' both capture the core yearning, while the Isaiah usage reveals an affective, almost nostalgic dimension of the word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: desire-of, my-pleasure, the-desire-of | es: deseo-de, mi-deseo | fr: [חשק], [חשקי], désir-de | de: [חשק], [חשקי], desire-von 1Kgs 9:1; 1Kgs 9:19; 2Chr 8:6; Isa 21:4

חֻשׁוּק H2838 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (8×)
Fillets or bands clasping the pillars of the tabernacle courtyard, overlaid with silver or gold.
A noun denoting the metal rings or bands that encircled the tops of the pillars supporting the curtains of the tabernacle court. All eight occurrences appear in the Priestly tabernacle construction texts of Exodus, describing hardware overlaid with silver for the courtyard pillars and gold for the doorway pillars. The word derives from the root ch-sh-q ('to bind, attach'), and the translations converge on this binding function: English 'bands,' Spanish 'anillos' (rings) and 'molduras' (moldings), French 'liens' (bonds), and German 'bands.'

(8×) Metal fillets, rings, or bands that clasp and encircle the pillars of the tabernacle, securing the curtain system. Found only in the plural with possessive suffixes (chashueqehem), these appear exclusively in the Priestly tabernacle texts (Exod 27:10, 11; 36:38; 38:10, 11, 12, 17, 19). The courtyard pillar bands were overlaid with silver, while those at the tent entrance were gold (Exod 36:38). Some scholars interpret these as connecting rods between pillar tops from which curtains were hung, though the traditional reading sees ornamental rings or caps. The multilingual evidence supports the binding/clasping sense: Spanish 'anillos' (rings) alongside 'molduras' (moldings), and French 'liens' (ties/bonds). BINDING AND TYING

en: and-their-bands | es: y-sus-anillos, y-sus-molduras | fr: et-leur-liens | de: und-ihr-bands Exod 27:10; Exod 27:11; Exod 36:38; Exod 38:10; Exod 38:11

חֻשׁוֹק H2839 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

spokes of a wheel; the rods connecting the hub to the rim

This plural noun with suffix denotes the 'spokes' of wheels, appearing in the description of Solomon's temple furnishings (1 Kgs 7:33). Spokes bind the wheel's rim (felloe) to the central hub (nave), enabling rotation. The bronze stands for the temple's lavers featured elaborate wheels with cast spokes, demonstrating skilled craftsmanship. The term occurs only in this technical description of sacred objects.

(1×) First Kings 7:33 catalogs the parts of the bronze wheeled stands: 'their spokes, their rims, their hubs, and their axles.' The plural with third-person suffix ('their spokes') emphasizes the complex engineering of these sacred furnishings. Cross-language glosses transliterate or describe the technical term: English and French 'spokes,' Spanish 'radios' (spokes), and German 'spokes,' all identifying the structural elements connecting hub to rim. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-spokes | es: y-radios-de-ellas | fr: et-leur-spokes | de: und-ihr-spokes 1Kgs 7:33

חֻשׁוּר H2840 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

hubs or naves of wheels; the central part that holds the spokes together

This plural noun with suffix means 'hubs' or 'naves'—the central part of a wheel that gathers the spokes. It appears in 1 Kings 7:33 alongside spokes, rims, and axles in the description of the temple's bronze stands. The hub is the wheel's core, into which spokes are fixed. The term reflects technical vocabulary for elaborate sacred furnishings crafted by Hiram.

(1×) In 1 Kings 7:33, the bronze wheels are described with precision: 'their hubs, their spokes, their rims, and their axles—all cast.' The hub is the gathering point where spokes converge, the structural heart of the wheel. Cross-language glosses preserve the technical term: English 'hubs,' Spanish 'cubos' (hubs), French and German 'hubs,' all identifying the central nave that anchors the wheel's structure. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK

en: and-their-hubs | es: y-cubos-de-ellas | fr: et-leur-hubs | de: und-ihr-hubs 1Kgs 7:33

חַשְׁרָה H2841 N-fsc (1×)

gathering or collection of waters; a mass or assemblage, possibly dark clouds

This construct noun appears only in 2 Samuel 22:12, where it describes God's theophanic canopy as 'a gathering of waters'—possibly dense rain clouds. The parallel passage in Psalm 18:11 has a different word ('darkness of waters'), suggesting textual variation or a rare synonym. The image evokes storm clouds massing around the divine presence. The root idea is collecting or gathering into a mass.

(1×) In 2 Samuel 22:12, David's psalm describes God making 'a gathering of waters' (or 'dense clouds') his pavilion. The construct form 'gathering of waters' suggests accumulated moisture—thick storm clouds. The parallel text in Psalm 18:11 uses 'darkness' instead, hinting at textual uncertainty. French 'rassemblant-de' (gathering of), Spanish 'densas' (dense), and English 'gathering-of' all emphasize the idea of collected or massed water. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gathering-of | es: densas- | fr: rassemblant-de | de: versammelnd-von 2Sam 22:12

חֶשַׁשׁ H2842 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

chaff, dry plant material easily consumed by fire

This term designates the lightest agricultural waste, even more insubstantial than regular chaff (qash). Isaiah employs it twice in judgment oracles as a metaphor for futility and swift destruction. In Isaiah 33:11, enemies of God conceive chaff and give birth to stubble—a double image of worthless productivity. In Isaiah 5:24, the prophet warns that as flaming chaff sinks down, so will those who despise God's law perish. The imagery emphasizes how quickly and thoroughly divine judgment consumes those who oppose God, like fire devouring the driest plant refuse.

(2×) Both contexts use chaff imagery to depict the futility of opposing God. Isaiah 33:11 presents a birth metaphor: Assyrian schemes conceive and deliver only worthless plant material—chaff and stubble—rather than anything substantial. Isaiah 5:24 develops the fire imagery: as flaming chaff sinks down (consumed in moments), so perish those who reject Torah. The parallel with qash (stubble) in both passages creates a graded comparison of plant waste materials. Spanish paja, French/German chaff equivalents all convey this sense of the lightest, most combustible agricultural residue. STUBBLE AND CHAFF

en: and-chaff, chaff | es: paja, y-paja | fr: [חשש], [חשש] | de: [חשש], [חשש] Isa 5:24; Isa 33:11

חֻשָׁתִי H2843 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Hushathite, a gentilicdesignating someone from Hushah in Judah

A gentilic adjective identifying a person from the town of Hushah in the territory of Judah. It is always used with the article ('the Hushathite') as an epithet for mighty warriors in David's company. Sibbecai the Hushathite slew the Philistine giant Saph (2 Sam 21:18; 1 Chr 20:4) and commanded the eighth monthly division (1 Chr 27:11). Mebunnai/Ilai the Hushathite is also listed among David's thirty warriors (2 Sam 23:27; 1 Chr 11:29).

(5×) A gentilic adjective ('the Hushathite') denoting origin from Hushah, a town in Judah. All five occurrences serve as epithets for David's elite warriors: Sibbecai, who killed the Philistine giant Saph (2 Sam 21:18; 1 Chr 20:4) and commanded a military division (1 Chr 27:11), and Mebunnai/Ilai among the Thirty (2 Sam 23:27; 1 Chr 11:29). Spanish 'husatita/jusatita,' French and German 'Hushathite' all preserve the gentilic form, consistently preceded by the definite article. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Chushathite, the-Hushathite | es: el-husatita, el-jusatita, el-jushita | fr: [החשתי], le-Hushathite | de: [החשתי], der-Hushathite 2Sam 21:18; 2Sam 23:27; 1Chr 11:29; 1Chr 20:4; 1Chr 27:11

חַת H2844a Conj-w / N-msc / 2mp (2×)

terror, fear, dread inspired by superior power

This noun denotes the fear or terror that superior beings inspire in those beneath them. In Genesis 9:2, God places the terror of humans upon all animals, establishing the post-flood order where beasts fear humanity (parallel to mora, fear). In Job 41:25, the crocodile is described as one made "without fear"—literally "for fearlessness"—a creature utterly devoid of timidity. The term captures visceral dread rather than reverential awe, focusing on the raw power dynamic that produces cowering submission.

(2×) The two occurrences establish opposite poles of the fear spectrum. Genesis 9:2 institutes human dominance over animals through divinely-instilled terror ("the terror of you" parallel to "the fear of you"), fundamentally reordering creation after the flood. Job 41:25 [41:33 English] describes the crocodile as made "for fearlessness," utterly lacking in terror—a supreme predator answering to no one. The contrast reveals the word's focus on power relationships: animals experience terror of humans; the crocodile experiences none. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve this terror dimension: Spanish espanto (fright), German Schrecken (terror). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-dread-of-you, fear | es: temer, y-vuestro-espanto | fr: et-dread-de-tu, חת | de: [חת], und-euer-Schrecken Gen 9:2; Job 41:33

חַת H2844b Adj-mp (3×)

shattered, broken, dismayed

An adjective describing those who are broken or shattered, whether physically or psychologically. The term appears in contexts of military defeat, political collapse, and terror. Hannah's song uses it for the broken bow of warriors. Isaiah employs it in prophecy about Ephraim being shattered as a people. Jeremiah applies it to Egyptian forces routed by Babylon. The word captures both physical breaking (like a shattered weapon) and psychological dismay (like terrified soldiers). Textual difficulties in some passages reflect the rarity of this particular form.

(3×) Shattered, broken, or dismayed through defeat or terror. 1 Samuel 2:4 celebrates that 'the bow of the mighty is shattered' while the weak find strength. Isaiah 7:8 (if reading חֲתִתִים for יֵחַת) prophesies 'within sixty-five years Ephraim will be shattered.' Jeremiah 46:5 describes Egyptian warriors 'dismayed' and fleeing in terror before Babylon. The dual sense of physical and psychological breaking unifies these contexts. Spanish quebrantado/aterrado, French/English shattered all convey this breaking. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: dismayed, is-shattered, will-be-shattered | es: aterrados, quebrados, será-quebrantado | fr: [חתים], [יחת], est-shattered | de: [חתים], [יחת], ist-shattered 1Sam 2:4; Isa 7:8; Jer 46:5

חֵת H2845 N-proper-ms (14×)

Heth — eponymous ancestor of the Hittites, listed as a son of Canaan in the Table of Nations.

A proper masculine name identifying the ancestor-figure of the Hittites (בְּנֵי חֵת, 'sons of Heth'). In the Table of Nations, Heth is listed as Canaan's son (Gen 10:15; 1 Chr 1:13). The name appears most frequently in the phrase 'sons of Heth,' denoting the local population at Hebron from whom Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah as a burial site (Gen 23:3–20; 25:10; 49:32). The 'daughters of Heth' are Esau's Hittite wives, a source of grief to Rebekah (Gen 27:46). French and German transliterate as 'Heth' and 'Chet' respectively.

Heth (personal/ethnic name) (14×) The proper name Heth (חֵת), the eponymous ancestor of the Hittites, presented as a son of Canaan (Gen 10:15; 1 Chr 1:13). Almost all occurrences use the construct 'sons of Heth' (בְּנֵי חֵת) to designate the Hittite population resident at Hebron in the patriarchal period, particularly in the Machpelah purchase narrative (Gen 23:3–20; 25:10; 49:32). The phrase 'daughters of Heth' (בְּנוֹת חֵת) in Gen 27:46 identifies the Hittite women Esau married. Etymology and precise meaning of the name remain uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Cheth, Heth | es: Chet, Jet | fr: Heth, [חת] | de: Chet, Chets, Hets Gen 10:15; Gen 23:3; Gen 23:5; Gen 23:7; Gen 23:10

חָתָה H2846 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 2ms (4×)

To snatch up, seize (especially fire or coals); by extension, to snatch away a person destructively.

Describes the act of snatching up, primarily fire or burning coals, and by extension the violent seizure of a person. In Proverbs 6:27 it asks whether a man can snatch fire into his bosom without consequence — a vivid warning against adultery. Proverbs 25:22 uses it for heaping coals on an enemy's head, while Isaiah 30:14 pictures snatching embers from a hearth. In Psalm 52:5 God snatches the wicked away from life itself. Spanish 'tomar' and 'amontonar' reflect both the taking and heaping senses.

(4×) To snatch up fire or coals from a source. Isaiah 30:14 pictures snatching fire from a hearth; Proverbs 6:27 uses it metaphorically of taking fire into one's bosom (a simile for the consequences of adultery); Proverbs 25:22 extends it to heaping burning coals upon someone's head. The Spanish 'tomar' (to take) and 'amontonar' (to heap) together capture the range from seizing to piling. In Psalm 52:5 the verb takes on a more violent sense — God will snatch the wicked away from their tent, using fire imagery as a metaphor for divine judgment. FIRE AND BURNING

en: He-will-snatch-you-up, are-heaping, can-take | es: Tomará, amontonas, para-tomar | fr: [לחתות], ramasser, היחתה | de: [היחתה], [חתה], [לחתות] Ps 52:5; Prov 6:27; Prov 25:22; Isa 30:14

חִתָּה H2847 N-fsc (1×)

terror, dread; overwhelming fear, especially divinely sent panic

This construct noun means 'terror' or 'dread,' appearing in Genesis 35:5 where 'a terror of God' fell on surrounding cities, preventing them from pursuing Jacob's household. The terror is supernatural, sent by God to protect his people. The construct phrase 'terror of God' can mean terror from God (subjective genitive) or an overwhelming, God-sized fear. Ancient Israel understood such panic as divine intervention.

(1×) Genesis 35:5 recounts how 'a terror of God was upon the cities round about them' after the Shechem incident, so they did not pursue Jacob's family. The divinely sent dread paralyzed potential enemies. The construct 'terror of God' emphasizes both the source and the magnitude of the fear. Spanish 'terror-de,' French 'terreur-de,' and English 'terror-of' all preserve the construct relationship, showing God as the origin of this protective panic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terror-of | es: terror-de | fr: terreur-de | de: ein-Schrecken Gen 35:5

חִתּוּל H2848 N-ms (1×)

bandage, splint; a wrapping to support or heal a broken limb

This noun means 'bandage' or 'splint,' appearing in Ezekiel 30:21 in a prophecy against Egypt. God declares he has broken Pharaoh's arm and 'it has not been bound up with a bandage' to heal. The image of an untreated fracture symbolizes Egypt's military collapse without hope of recovery. The medical metaphor underscores the permanence of divine judgment.

(1×) Ezekiel 30:21 uses medical imagery: God has broken Pharaoh's arm, 'and behold, it has not been bound up to heal it, with a bandage to bind it.' The lack of bandaging means no healing or restoration is possible. The Hebrew term appears only here, denoting the cloth or splint applied to a fracture. Cross-language glosses—Spanish 'venda,' French 'bandage,' English 'bandage'—all identify this medical support, emphasizing Egypt's untreated wound. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: bandage | es: venda | fr: bandage | de: [חתול] Ezek 30:21

חַתְחַת H2849 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

terrors, sudden frights; overwhelming fears encountered unexpectedly

This plural noun means 'terrors' or 'sudden frights,' appearing in Ecclesiastes 12:5 in the allegory of old age: 'terrors are in the way.' The image is of fears arising on the road, perhaps fear of stumbling or of danger. The aged become fearful of travel and exertion. The term conveys sudden, paralyzing frights that accompany physical decline.

(1×) In Ecclesiastes 12:5, Qohelet describes the indignities of aging: 'the almond tree blossoms, the grasshopper drags itself along, and terrors are in the way.' The elderly become fearful of ordinary activities like walking outside. The plural 'terrors' suggests multiple, recurrent frights. Spanish 'terrores,' French 'וחתחתים' (preserving the Hebrew), and English 'terrors' all emphasize the plurality and unpredictability of these age-related fears. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-terrors | es: y-terrores | fr: et-וחתחתים | de: [וחתחתים] Eccl 12:5

חִתִּי H2850 N-proper-ms (48×)

Chitti – Hittite; a gentilic adjective denoting members of the Hittite people in Canaan and beyond

The gentilic adjective Chitti ('Hittite') identifies individuals or the collective people of the Hittites, one of the major population groups encountered by Israel in the land of Canaan. Its 48 occurrences span three distinct spheres of usage. First, it appears in patriarchal narratives attached to specific individuals: Ephron the Hittite, who sold the cave of Machpelah to Abraham (Gen 23:10; 25:9), and Esau's Hittite wives (Gen 26:34). Second, it features in stock lists of Canaanite peoples whom Israel would dispossess (Exod 3:8; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10). Third, it identifies warriors in David's service, most famously Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam 11). The Septuagint renders it consistently as Chettaios, while Spanish heteo/hitita, French Hittite/Hethien, and German Hethiter all preserve the ethnic designation faithfully.

Hittite (gentilic) (48×) A gentilic noun or adjective designating a member of the Hittite people, used of specific named individuals (Ephron the Hittite in Gen 23:10; Uriah the Hittite in 2 Sam 11:3), in formulaic lists of Canaanite nations (Exod 3:8; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10), and of Hittite women whom Solomon loved (1 Kgs 11:1). The term also carries geographical force in Josh 1:4, referring to the wider Hittite territory. Spanish heteo, French Hittite, and German Hethiter render it consistently across all 48 occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-the-Hittite, the-Hittite | es: al-heteo, el-heteo, el-hitita | fr: et-le-Hittite, et-le-Héthien, le-Hittite | de: der-Hethiter, und-der-Hethiter Gen 15:20; Gen 23:10; Gen 25:9; Gen 26:34

חִתִּית H2851 N-fsc / 1cs (9×)

Terror or dread inspired by mighty nations and warriors; used exclusively in Ezekiel's oracles against the nations.

A feminine noun confined entirely to Ezekiel, appearing in the oracle against Tyre (Ezek 26:17) and the great lament over fallen warriors in Sheol (Ezek 32:23-32). The recurring phrase 'they spread their terror in the land of the living' echoes like a funeral refrain through chapter 32, applied to Assyria, Elam, Meshech-Tubal, Edom, and the Sidonians in turn. The word captures the dread that once radiated from these empires — a terror now silenced in the grave. German 'Entsetzen' and French 'terreur' both render the visceral shock the word conveys. Its restriction to Ezekiel gives it the flavor of specialized prophetic vocabulary.

terror, dread (9×) Terror or dread that mighty kingdoms and warriors once inspired among the living, now extinguished in death. Used exclusively in Ezekiel's oracles: Tyre once caused terror on the seas (Ezek 26:17), and the phrase 'they spread their terror in the land of the living' repeats as a solemn refrain through the Sheol descent poem of Ezekiel 32:23-32, applied to Assyria, Elam, Meshech-Tubal, Edom, and Sidon. The objective genitive construction (their terror = terror they caused) is characteristic. German 'Entsetzen' and French 'terreur' capture the visceral dread this word denotes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], in-their-terror, my-terror | es: (mi-terror), [su-terror], por-su-terror | fr: terreur | de: Entsetzen Ezek 26:17; Ezek 32:23; Ezek 32:24; Ezek 32:25; Ezek 32:26

חָתַךְ H2852 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)

to be decreed, determined; to be cut off or decided by divine authority

This Niphal verb means 'to be decreed' or 'determined,' appearing in Daniel 9:24: 'Seventy weeks are decreed upon your people.' The passive form indicates divine determination. The root idea is cutting or dividing, hence decisively settling a matter. The 'seventy weeks' are a fixed period appointed by God for Israel's restoration and the coming of the Messiah. The verb conveys irrevocable divine decree.

(1×) Daniel 9:24 begins the famous 'seventy weeks' prophecy: 'Seventy weeks are decreed upon your people and your holy city.' The Niphal perfect form indicates a completed divine decision, an irrevocable appointment of time. The root sense of cutting or dividing implies precision and finality. Spanish 'han-sido-decretadas' (have been decreed), French 'déterminer' (determine), and English 'are-decreed' all convey the authoritative, settled nature of this divine timetable. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: are-decreed | es: han-sido-decretadas | fr: déterminer | de: [נחתך] Dan 9:24

חָתַל H2853 Conj-w / V-Hofal-InfAbs (2×)

to swaddle, wrap in cloth bands as with an infant

This rare verb appears only in Ezekiel 16:4, where the prophet depicts Jerusalem as an abandoned infant receiving no proper birth care. The passage uses two verbal forms (Pual perfect and Hophal infinitive absolute) for emphasis: not at all was Jerusalem rubbed with salt, and not at all was she swaddled. The imagery highlights extreme neglect, as swaddling represented basic maternal care in the ancient Near East. The verb likely relates to wrapping or entwining cloth bands around a newborn, a practice intended to promote healthy limb development.

(2×) Both verbal forms appear in Ezekiel 16:4's staccato litany of birth-neglect: no washing, no salt-rubbing, no swaddling. The Hophal infinitive absolute followed by Pual perfect creates emphatic negation: "utterly not swaddled." This swaddling involved wrapping cloth strips around an infant's body, a standard practice reflected in Luke 2:7's similar terminology. The repetition in Ezekiel 16:4 intensifies the abandonment imagery—Jerusalem received none of the minimal care a newborn deserves. Cross-linguistic glosses (French envelopper, German wrapping) capture the binding/wrapping action central to this infant-care practice. BINDING AND TYING

en: and-swaddling, were-you-swaddled | es: fuiste-envuelta, y-envuelta | fr: envelopper, et-envelopper | de: [והחתל], [חתלת] Ezek 16:4

חִתְלָה H2854 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

swaddling band, wrapping cloth; used figuratively of clouds enveloping the sea

This construct noun with suffix means 'swaddling band'—cloth wrapped around an infant. It appears in Job 38:9 where God describes making 'thick darkness its swaddling band' for the sea. The metaphor personifies the sea as a newborn swaddled in storm clouds. Ancient Near Eastern cosmology often depicted creation as God taming chaotic waters. The swaddling band image emphasizes God's tender yet firm control over primeval forces.

(1×) In Job 38:9, God asks Job: 'When I made clouds its garment and thick darkness its swaddling band'—referring to the sea's creation. The swaddling band metaphor portrays the ocean as an infant wrapped and confined by clouds. This tender image contrasts with the sea's potential violence, showing God's gentle restraint of chaos. Cross-language glosses preserve the imagery: Spanish 'su-pañal' (its diaper), French and German transliterate the Hebrew, English 'its-swaddling-band'—all evoking infant care. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: its-swaddling-band | es: su-pañal | fr: son-חתלתו-lui | de: [חתלתו] Job 38:9

חֶתְלֹן H2855 N-proper-fs (2×)

Chetlon or Hethlon, a location on Israel's extreme northern border

This place name appears in Ezekiel's visionary description of Israel's ideal boundaries, marking a point on the extreme northern border. The prophet refers to it as "the way to Hethlon" (Ezekiel 47:15, 48:1), using it as a geographical reference point for delimiting tribal territories in the restored land. Modern identification places this at Heitela, nearly two hours from the Mediterranean coast according to Furrer's 19th-century survey. The site functioned as a landmark in Ezekiel's theological geography rather than a major settlement.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Ezekiel's visionary border descriptions for the restored Israel. Ezekiel 47:15 and 48:1 use the identical phrase "the way to Hethlon," suggesting this was a recognized route or directional marker on the northern frontier. The modern site identification at Ḥeitela provides approximate geographical context, though Ezekiel's boundaries reflect theological vision more than practical cartography. Translators preserve this in transliteration (French Hethlon, Spanish Hetlón) rather than attempting translation, recognizing the primary function as proper geographical reference. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chetlon | es: Hetlón | fr: Hethlon | de: [חתלן] Ezek 47:15; Ezek 48:1

חָתַם H2856 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (27×)

To seal, affix a seal or signet; to seal up or close; in passive, to be sealed or in a sealed state.

Chatam is the Hebrew verb for sealing — the decisive act of pressing a signet into clay or wax to authenticate, authorize, or permanently close a document. In the ancient Near East, a seal was identity, authority, and finality compressed into a single gesture. Scripture deploys the word across its full range: Jezebel seals letters with Ahab's signet (1 Kgs 21:8), Job's transgressions are 'sealed up in a bag' (Job 14:17), and Daniel is told to 'seal the book' until the end of time (Dan 12:4). The passive participle chatum ('sealed') becomes almost a technical term for documents bearing official authorization, as in Nehemiah's covenant. Arabic khatama and Ethiopic hatama are cognate loanwords, and the Aramaic chatam runs parallel — evidence of how central this legal-ritual act was across Semitic cultures.

1. to seal, affix a seal (12×) The core Qal active sense: to seal, affix one's seal to a document or object for authentication, authorization, or closure. This covers royal sealing with a signet ring (1 Kgs 21:8; Esth 8:8, 8:10), God sealing up the stars so they cannot shine (Job 9:7), and the prophetic command to seal Isaiah's testimony (Isa 8:16). Spanish sellar, French sceller, and German siegeln all map directly. At 12 occurrences this is the productive verbal core from which all other senses derive — the agent presses the seal, and something is thereby made official, closed, or hidden. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: He-seals, [ketiv:and-to-seal-up], and-I-sealed | es: [y-para-sellar], pone-sello., sella | fr: [וחתמו], [וי֯חתם], et-scella | de: [ואחתם], [וחתום], [וחתם] 1Kgs 21:8; Esth 8:8; Esth 8:10; Job 9:7; Job 33:16

2. sealed (state) (10×) The Qal passive participle used adjectivally: in a sealed state. At 10 occurrences this is the most frequent form after the active Qal, describing documents, springs, and objects that bear the mark of having been sealed. Deuteronomy 32:34 stores up God's judgments 'sealed among my treasures'; Song of Solomon 4:12 praises the beloved as 'a sealed fountain'; Nehemiah 9:38-10:1 lists those on 'the sealed document.' Spanish sellado and French scelle confirm the stative-adjectival reading. The passive participle has almost become a lexicalized adjective meaning 'officially closed and authenticated.' SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: and-sealed, book, sealed | es: Sellada, el-sellado, los-sellados | fr: [החתום], [החתומים], et-sceller | de: [החתום], [החתומים], [וחתמים] Deut 32:34; Neh 9:38; Neh 10:1; Job 14:17; Song 4:12

3. be sealed (passive) (2×) The Nifal passive: to be sealed, focusing on the action of sealing from the document's perspective. Both occurrences are in Esther (3:12; 8:8), describing royal edicts being sealed with the king's ring. Spanish fue-sellado and the Nifal morphology distinguish this from the participle of sense 2: here the sealing is a narrated event ('it was sealed'), not a resulting state ('it is sealed'). The distinction matters legally — the act of sealing versus the status of being sealed. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: and-sealed, and-was-sealed | es: y-fue-sellado, y-sellado | fr: [ונחתום], [ונחתם] | de: [ונחתום], [ונחתם] Esth 3:12; Esth 8:8

4. stop up, block (1×) An extended Hifil sense: to stop up or block, applied to a bodily discharge in Leviticus 15:3. Whether the flesh 'seals over' or 'stops up' its flow, the metaphor transfers the closure of a sealed document to the closure of a physical opening. Spanish retuviere ('retained, held back') captures the blocking nuance. A single occurrence, but the Hifil causative stem and the bodily-fluid context clearly distinguish it from the documentary-sealing core. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: stopped-up | es: retuviere | fr: stopped-en-haut | de: stopped-hinauf Lev 15:3

5. shut up, seal tightly (1×) The Piel intensive: to shut up or seal tightly with emphasis on completeness. Job 24:16 describes thieves who 'seal themselves up' by day, hiding in houses they marked for burglary at night. The Piel intensification suggests thorough, deliberate sealing — not a quick stamp but a careful barricading. Spanish se-sellan and French sceller both treat it as reflexive closing-up. Only one occurrence, but the stem distinction from the basic Qal is semantically real. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: they-shut-up | es: se-sellan- | fr: sceller | de: [חתמו] Job 24:16

6. one who seals, sealer (1×) The Qal active participle used as an agent noun: 'one who seals, the sealer.' In Ezekiel 28:12, the king of Tyre is called chotem toknit — variously rendered 'the sealer of perfection' or 'the signet of proportion.' Spanish sello-de ('seal of') and German chotem both preserve the nominal agent reading. The participial agent-noun usage is a standard Hebrew derivation, but the unique context in Ezekiel's oracle gives it a distinctive near-titular force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sealer-of- | es: sello-de | fr: sceller | de: [חותם] Ezek 28:12

חֲתַם H2857 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms / 3fs (1×)

to seal, make secure by sealing; to close and authenticate with a seal

This Aramaic verb means 'to seal,' appearing in Daniel 6:17 where King Darius 'sealed' the stone over the lions' den with his signet. Sealing ensured the stone could not be moved without detection, guaranteeing Daniel would face his trial uninterrupted. The act combines security with authentication—only the king could legally open what he had sealed. The verb underscores royal authority and the inescapability of Daniel's situation.

(1×) Daniel 6:17 recounts how Darius, after placing Daniel in the lions' den, 'sealed it with his own signet and with the signet of his lords, that nothing might be changed concerning Daniel.' The sealing prevented tampering and ensured the test's integrity. The Aramaic perfect form with suffix ('sealed it') emphasizes the completed action. Spanish 'y-la-selló,' French 'cacheter,' and English 'sealed-it' all convey finality and official authentication. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: and-sealed-it | es: y-la-selló | fr: et-cacheter | de: [וחתמה] Dan 6:17

חוֹתֶמֶת H2858 Art / N-fs (1×)

signet ring, seal; an object used to impress one's mark for authentication

This feminine noun means 'signet ring' or 'seal,' appearing in Genesis 38:25 where Tamar produces 'the signet' as proof of Judah's paternity. The signet was a personal identifier, often worn on a cord around the neck or on a finger, used to seal documents and claim ownership. Producing someone's signet was incontrovertible proof of a transaction. The term is a feminine form of the more common masculine 'signet,' possibly denoting the entire sealing apparatus.

(1×) In Genesis 38:25, Tamar sends the pledges to Judah: 'the signet, the cord, and the staff.' The signet ring was Judah's personal seal, unmistakable proof of his identity. Its production forces Judah to acknowledge his guilt publicly. Spanish 'el-sello,' French 'le-sceau,' German 'das-Siegel,' and English 'the-signet' all identify this authenticating object, emphasizing its role as irrefutable evidence. SEAL SIGNET

en: the-signet | es: el-sello | fr: le-sceau | de: das-Siegel Gen 38:25

חֹתֵן H2859a N-msc (22×)

Father-in-law (wife's father); also once as mother-in-law (wife's mother) in the feminine form.

A kinship term rooted in the Arabic khātin ('circumciser'), reflecting the ancient Near Eastern practice where the bride's father performed circumcision on the groom before marriage. Almost every occurrence refers to Moses' father-in-law — Jethro/Reuel/Hobab — across the Exodus narratives (Ex 3:1; 18:1–27; Num 10:29; Judg 1:16; 4:11). One surprising use appears in Deut 27:23 with the feminine form ḥotanto, 'his mother-in-law,' within the covenant curses prohibiting illicit sexual relations. The Arabic etymological link to circumcision gives this seemingly ordinary kinship word a ritual depth that most modern translations leave unexplored.

1. father-in-law (wife's father) (21×) The masculine construct form ḥoten, occurring 21 times, always meaning 'wife's father' or 'father-in-law.' Overwhelmingly tied to Moses' father-in-law across Exodus 3–18 (all from the E source), Numbers 10:29 (J), and Judges 1:16 and 4:11. Also used of the father-in-law of an unnamed Levite in Judg 19:4, 7, 9. French 'père-dans-loi' and German 'Vater-in-Gesetz' are calques of English 'father-in-law,' while the Hebrew itself carries the etymological memory of the circumcision rite that sealed the marriage covenant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-father-in-law-of, father-in-law-of, his-father-in-law | es: a-suegro-de-él, su-suegro, suegro-de | fr: -le-père-dans-loi-de, père-dans-loi-de, son-père-dans-loi | de: -der-Vater-in-Gesetz-von, Vater-in-Gesetz-von, sein-Vater-in-Gesetz Exod 3:1; Exod 4:18; Exod 18:1; Exod 18:2; Exod 18:5

2. mother-in-law (wife's mother) (1×) A single feminine form ḥotanto in Deut 27:23, meaning 'his mother-in-law (wife's mother).' This lone occurrence appears in the Shechem covenant curses: 'Cursed is the one who lies with his mother-in-law.' The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'suegra,' French 'mère-dans-loi,' German 'Mutter-in-Gesetz' — all correctly identify the feminine referent. Its placement among prohibited sexual relations (alongside sister, sister-in-law) shows the term functioning within kinship-boundary law rather than narrative. MOTHER-IN-LAW KINSHIP

en: his-mother-in-law | es: su-suegra | fr: son-mère-dans-loi | de: sein-Mutter-in-Gesetz Deut 27:23

חתן H2859b V-Hitpael-Imp-ms (11×)

To form a marriage alliance or become a son-in-law; intermarry with another family, clan, or nation (Hitpael denominative of חתן).

A Hitpael denominative verb built on the root for 'son-in-law,' carrying two distinct relational senses. In one usage it describes a man making himself a daughter's husband, entering a specific household through marriage – as when David became Saul's son-in-law (1 Sam 18:21-27). In the other, it broadens to mean forging a marriage alliance between groups: intermarrying with foreign nations, as forbidden in Deuteronomy 7:3 and lamented in Ezra 9:14. Spanish 'emparentar' and French 'allier par mariage' capture the political-relational overtone well.

1. to ally by marriage, to intermarry (6×) To form a marriage alliance or intermarry between families, clans, or nations – a social-political act rather than a personal betrothal. The multilingual glosses emphasize the alliance dimension: Spanish 'emparentar' (to become kin) and the English 'allied-by-marriage' point to the relational pact between groups. Used in contexts of forbidden intermarriage (Deut 7:3; Josh 23:12; Ezra 9:14) and political unions like Solomon with Pharaoh (1 Kgs 3:1) and Jehoshaphat with Ahab's house (2 Chr 18:1). MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: and-he-allied-by-marriage, and-intermarry, and-to-intermarry | es: emparentarás, y-a-emparentar, y-emparenten | fr: [ויתחתן], [ולהתחתן], et-il-allied-par-marriage | de: [ויתחתן], [ולהתחתן], du-soll-intermarry Gen 34:9; Deut 7:3; Josh 23:12; 1Kgs 3:1; 2Chr 18:1

2. to become a son-in-law (5×) To make oneself a son-in-law – entering a specific family by marrying the daughter. All five occurrences cluster in 1 Samuel 18:21-27, where David is invited and then strives to become Saul's son-in-law. The Spanish 'ser yerno' and French 'devenir gendre' confirm the personal, household-level meaning. The Hitpael reflexive force is vivid here: David actively makes himself into a son-in-law, underscoring personal initiative in entering the kinship bond. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: become-son-in-law, to-become-son-in-law, you-shall-become-son-in-law | es: para-ser-yerno, ser-yerno, serás-yerno | fr: deviens-fils-dans-loi, tu-devras-deviens-fils-dans-loi, à-deviens-fils-dans-loi | de: become-Sohn-in-Gesetz, du-soll-become-Sohn-in-Gesetz, zu-become-Sohn-in-Gesetz 1Sam 18:21; 1Sam 18:22; 1Sam 18:23; 1Sam 18:26; 1Sam 18:27

חָתָן H2860 N-msc / 3ms (20×)

Bridegroom or son-in-law; a man in relation to his bride at a wedding, or a daughter's husband in family kinship.

Chatan straddles two family roles that English distinguishes sharply but Hebrew holds under one roof. As bridegroom, the word evokes celebration: the psalmist compares the sun to a chatan emerging from his chamber (Ps 19:5), and Isaiah's imagery of Zion's restoration pictures God rejoicing over her as a chatan over his bride (Isa 62:5). The mysterious 'chatan damim' ('bridegroom of blood') spoken by Zipporah in Exodus 4:25-26 remains one of the most debated phrases in the Torah. As son-in-law, the word anchors family obligation: Lot's sons-in-law dismiss his warning (Gen 19:14), and Samson's father-in-law gives away his wife (Judg 15:6). Spanish and German track the two senses with 'novio/Brautigam' for bridegroom and 'yerno/Sohn-in-Gesetz' for son-in-law.

1. bridegroom (10×) A bridegroom, the man being married, especially in the context of wedding celebrations and nuptial imagery. The sun comes out like a chatan from his chamber (Ps 19:5); the redeemed put on salvation as a chatan dons a priestly garland (Isa 61:10). The enigmatic 'bridegroom of blood' (chatan damim) in Exodus 4:25-26 connects the term to circumcision rites. Spanish 'novio' and German 'Brautigam' consistently render this festive, nuptial sense. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: a-bridegroom, bridegroom, bridegroom-of | es: como-novio, esposo-de, novio | fr: bridegroom-de, comme-beau-fils, gendre | de: Braeutigam, bridegroom-von, wie-Braeutigam Exod 4:25; Exod 4:26; Ps 19:5; Isa 61:10; Isa 62:5

2. son-in-law (10×) A daughter's husband, a son-in-law, designating the man in relation to his wife's father. Lot's chatanav are those who had married his daughters (Gen 19:14); the Philistines identify Samson as the chatan of the Timnite (Judg 15:6); and a Levite's father-in-law hosts his chatan with generous hospitality (Judg 19:5). Spanish 'yerno' and French 'gendre/beau-fils' clearly distinguish this kinship sense from the wedding sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-son-in-law, and-son-in-law-of, his-son-in-law | es: su-yerno, sus-yernos, y-yerno-de | fr: [חתן], et-fils-dans-loi-de, fils-dans-loi | de: Braeutigam, Sohn-in-Gesetz, Sohn-in-Gesetz-von Gen 19:12; Gen 19:14; Judg 15:6; Judg 19:5

חֲתֻנָּה H2861 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

wedding, marriage; the day or celebration of a marriage covenant

This construct noun means 'wedding' or 'marriage,' appearing in Song of Songs 3:11: 'on the day of his wedding, on the day of the gladness of his heart.' The term denotes the wedding day itself or the marriage celebration. Ancient Near Eastern weddings were joyous, elaborate affairs lasting days. The context is a royal wedding procession, with Solomon crowned by his mother. The image evokes covenant love and festive joy.

(1×) Song of Songs 3:11 calls the daughters of Jerusalem to behold King Solomon 'on the day of his wedding, on the day of the gladness of his heart.' The construct form 'the day of his wedding' emphasizes a specific, memorable occasion. The wedding represents the pinnacle of joy and covenantal union. Spanish 'su-boda,' French 'de-ses-épousailles' (his nuptials), and English 'his-wedding' all capture the celebratory, covenantal nature of this day. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: his-wedding | es: su-boda | fr: de-ses-épousailles, | de: [חתנתו] Song 3:11

חָתַף H2862 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to seize, snatch away suddenly

A verb depicting sudden, forceful seizure, found only in Job 9:12 where Job describes God's sovereign power: 'Behold, he snatches away—who can turn him back?' The Aramaic cognate means 'to break in pieces' and the Arabic root relates to 'death,' suggesting violent or irresistible action. Job uses this vivid image to express the absolute authority of God over creation—when he takes, no one can resist or recover what is seized. The term emphasizes both speed and overwhelming force.

(1×) In Job's meditation on divine sovereignty, the verb describes God's irresistible action—he seizes and none can restore. The question structure (מִי יְשִׁיבֶנּוּ 'who can turn him back?') heightens the rhetorical force. English renders it 'he snatches away,' Spanish 'arrebata' (snatches/seizes), emphasizing the sudden, forceful nature of the action. This is not gentle taking but overpowering seizure, illustrating God's absolute power over human affairs and the futility of resisting his will. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: He-snatches-away | es: arrebata, | fr: יחתף | de: [יחתף] Job 9:12

חֹתֶף H2863 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

prey, plunder; that which is seized or snatched by force

This noun means 'prey' or 'plunder,' appearing in Proverbs 23:28 where the adulteress 'lies in wait as for prey.' The term denotes something seized violently or stolen. The image is of a predator or robber lurking to pounce. The adulteress is compared to a highwayman, ambushing the unwary. The metaphor underscores the predatory, destructive nature of sexual sin.

(1×) Proverbs 23:28 warns that the adulteress 'lies in wait like a robber, and increases the traitors among mankind.' The simile 'as for prey' (literally 'as prey') compares her to a bandit waiting to seize victims. She is predatory, hunting for those to ensnare. Spanish 'como-ladrón' (like a robber), French and German transliterate, English 'like-a-robber' all capture the violent, predatory imagery of lying in ambush for plunder. THIEF ROBBER

en: like-a-robber | es: como-ladrón | fr: comme-כחתף | de: [כחתף] Prov 23:28

חָתַר H2864 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (8×)

To dig, bore through — breaking through walls or earth; also to row a boat, digging oars through water

The verb חָתַר primarily means to dig or bore through a solid barrier. Ezekiel is commanded to dig through the wall of Jerusalem as a prophetic sign-act (Ezek 8:8; 12:5, 7, 12), and Job describes burglars who 'dig into houses' under cover of darkness (Job 24:16). The word even reaches into the mythic: Amos 9:2 pictures fugitives trying to 'dig into Sheol' as a hiding place from God. A single, vivid occurrence in Jonah 1:13 shifts the image entirely — the desperate sailors 'rowed hard' (literally 'dug into' the sea) trying to reach shore, giving the verb a nautical sense that exploits the same physical motion of digging applied to water.

1. dig / bore through (7×) To dig, bore through, or break through a wall, barrier, or the ground. This is the primary sense across seven occurrences. Ezekiel performs a sign-act of digging through Jerusalem's wall (Ezek 8:8, 12:5, 7, 12), Job describes thieves who 'dig into houses in the dark' (Job 24:16), and Amos 9:2 envisions the impossible act of digging into Sheol to escape divine judgment. Spanish 'cava/excava/perfora' (dig/excavate/bore) and Arabic cognates for boring and tunneling confirm the consistent physical-penetration meaning. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING en: I-dug-, and-I-dug, dig- | es: Excava, cava, cavan | fr: creuser, et-creuser, חתר | de: [ואחתר], [חתר], [חתרתי] Job 24:16; Ezek 8:8; Ezek 12:5; Ezek 12:7

2. row (a boat) (1×) To row a boat — a vivid metaphorical extension where the oars 'dig into' the water. Attested only in Jonah 1:13: וַיַּחְתְּרוּ הָאֲנָשִׁים ('and the men rowed hard') as the sailors desperately tried to bring the ship to shore during the storm. Spanish 'Y remaron' ('and they rowed') and English 'and rowed' show all traditions recognizing this as a distinct nautical action rather than literal digging. The semantic link — the repetitive, forceful downward motion of pulling oars — beautifully connects the two senses. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING en: and-rowed | es: Y-remaron | fr: et-creuser | de: [ויחתרו] Jonah 1:13

חָתַת H2865 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (51×)

To be shattered or dismayed; to break in pieces; causatively, to terrify or cause dread before overwhelming power

Rooted in the concrete image of something being shattered or smashed to pieces, this verb extends powerfully into the emotional realm of paralyzing dread and dismay. In the great encouragement formulas of Deuteronomy and Joshua, Israel is repeatedly told not to 'be dismayed' (Deut 1:21; Josh 1:9), where Spanish consistently renders 'desmayar' and French 'être consterné,' both capturing the idea of courage collapsing under fear. The Hifil causative form appears in striking passages like Job 7:14 ('You terrify me with dreams') and Jeremiah 1:17, where God warns the prophet not to be shattered before his opponents lest God Himself shatter him. The physical sense of being broken or crushed (Isa 8:9; 30:31) forms the experiential ground from which the emotional meaning grows.

1. be dismayed or afraid (34×) The dominant emotional sense: to be filled with dread, terror, or dismay that paralyzes action. This is the verb of the battlefield exhortation — 'do not fear and do not be dismayed' (Josh 1:9; Deut 31:8). The Spanish 'desmayar' (to faint, lose heart) and French 'être consterné' (to be in consternation) together reveal the inner collapse of will this word describes. It appears characteristically paired with יָרֵא ('to fear') in covenant encouragement contexts. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-they-were-dismayed, and-they-will-be-dismayed, and-will-be-dismayed | es: Y-serán-quebrantados, desmayes, desmayéis | fr: Et-seront-consternés, [תחתו], effrayer | de: Und-verzagen-werden, [יחת], [נחת] Deut 1:21; Deut 31:8; Josh 1:9; Josh 8:1; Josh 10:25

2. be shattered or broken (11×) The concrete physical sense of being broken, shattered, or smashed to pieces. In Isaiah 8:9, the nations are taunted three times with the imperative 'be shattered!' — a prophetic declaration of their destruction. At Isaiah 30:31, Assyria 'shall be shattered' by the voice of the LORD. The German translations frequently render this with 'erschrecken' (to be startled/terrified), blurring the physical and emotional senses, while Spanish 'destrozar' (to shatter) preserves the concrete breaking image. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-be-shattered, and-shattered, are-shattered | es: destrozado, destrozados, está-destrozada | fr: et-trembler, sous, trembler | de: erschrecken, und-erschrecken, unter Isa 8:9; Isa 30:31; Isa 51:6

3. terrify or cause dismay (5×) The causative dimension (Hifil/Piel): to actively terrify, dismay, or shatter someone. In Job 7:14, the sufferer accuses God directly — 'You terrify me with dreams.' Jeremiah 1:17 contains a remarkable wordplay: God tells Jeremiah not to be shattered (תֵּחַת) before them, lest God shatter him (אַחִתְּךָ) before them. Spanish 'espantar' (to frighten) and French 'effrayer' (to terrify) both render the active agency of causing dread in another. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-dismay-you, and-I-will-shatter, and-You-terrify-me | es: entonces-me-espantas, los-aterrorizará, me-espantó | fr: effrayer, et-trembler, et-être-brisé | de: [וחתתני], [יחיתן], [יחתני] Job 7:14; Job 31:34; Jer 1:17; Jer 49:37; Hab 2:17

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Isaiah 9:4 [Heb. 9:3] where the verb appears in the context of divine deliverance — 'the rod of his oppressor, you have shattered.' English renders 'you have shattered' while Spanish uses 'quebrantaste' (you broke/shattered), pointing to the victorious breaking of an instrument of oppression, blending the physical shattering with the dismay it produces in the oppressor. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: you-have-shattered | es: quebrantaste | fr: trembler | de: erschrecken Isa 9:4

חָתַת H2866 N-ms (1×)

terror, something dreadful; an object or situation that inspires overwhelming fear

This noun means 'terror' or 'dread,' appearing in Job 6:21 where Job accuses his friends: 'You see a terror and are afraid.' The term denotes a frightening sight or dreadful thing. Job's suffering has become so horrifying that his friends recoil in fear rather than offering help. The Hebrew includes wordplay, since the verb 'fear' shares the same root. The accusation is that his friends' fear of his calamity paralyzes their compassion.

(1×) Job 6:21 reads: 'You see a terror and are afraid' (or 'you see something dreadful and fear'). Job's condition—covered in sores, bereft of family, reduced to the ash heap—is so horrific his friends shrink back. The noun 'terror' identifies Job's suffering as the frightening object. Cross-language glosses—Spanish 'terror,' French and German transliterate—emphasize the dreadful sight that evokes fear.

GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: terror | es: terror | fr: חתת | de: [חתת] Job 6:21

חֲתַת H2867 N-proper-ms (1×)
Hathath, son of Othniel and descendant of Caleb
Hathath was a son of Othniel, the first judge of Israel, and grandson of Kenaz (1 Chr 4:13). He appears in the genealogies of Judah tracing Caleb's lineage. The name occurs only once, and its meaning is uncertain. Ancient versions transliterate it with minor variations. The genealogical context preserves the memory of families descended from Judah's faithful spy.

(1×) This proper name appears in 1 Chronicles 4:13 within the genealogy of Judah: 'The sons of Othniel: Hathath and Meonothai.' Hathath is the firstborn of the famous judge who delivered Israel from Cushan-rishathaim. Cross-language glosses transliterate the name: English 'Hathath,' Spanish 'Jatat,' French and German preserve the Hebrew form, all indicating a personal name with no clear translation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Chathath | es: Jatat | fr: [חתת] | de: [חתת] 1Chr 4:13

טְאֵב H2868 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to be glad, be pleased; to experience satisfaction or joy (Aramaic)
This Aramaic verb means 'to be good' or 'to be glad,' appearing in Daniel 6:23 where it says King Darius 'was exceedingly glad' when Daniel was found alive. The expression 'it was good to him' is an Aramaic idiom for gladness or pleasure. The king's relief and joy at Daniel's deliverance contrasts sharply with his earlier distress. The verb emphasizes emotional satisfaction and delight.

(1×) Daniel 6:23 recounts Darius's reaction to finding Daniel unharmed: 'Then the king was exceedingly glad' (literally 'it was very good to him'). The Aramaic idiom conveys deep satisfaction and relief. After a sleepless night of anguish, the king rejoices at the vindication of his faithful servant. Spanish 'se-alegró' (he rejoiced), French 'être-bon' (to be good), and English 'was-glad' all capture the king's intense joy. REJOICING AND GREETING en: was-glad | es: se-alegró | fr: être-bon | de: [טאב] Dan 6:23

טָב H2869 Adj-ms (2×)
good, fine, pleasing (Aramaic)
This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel and Ezra with two shades of meaning. In Daniel 2:32, it describes refined or pure gold, emphasizing quality and excellence. In Ezra 5:17, it means pleasing or good in the sense of what seems right to the king, paralleling the common Hebrew tov. The semantic range encompasses both objective quality (fine gold) and subjective approval (if it pleases the king). This Aramaic term functioned in Persian-period Jewish texts much like its Hebrew cognate, spanning material excellence and royal favor.

(2×) The two contexts demonstrate the word's flexibility between material and interpersonal domains. Daniel 2:32 uses it attributively for "fine gold" in Nebuchadnezzar's statue, emphasizing the precious metal's purity and value. Ezra 5:17 employs it in a diplomatic formula: "if it pleases the king" (literally "if good upon the king"), requesting royal approval for temple reconstruction. The parallel with Hebrew tov is strong—both words span quality, goodness, and approval. Spanish fino/bueno and French bon capture this dual application to physical excellence and favorable disposition. MORAL GOODNESS en: fine, good | es: bueno, fino | fr: [טב], bon | de: [טב] Ezra 5:17; Dan 2:32

טָבְאֵל H2870a N-proper-ms (1×)
Tabeel, a Persian official in Samaria who opposed rebuilding Jerusalem
Tabeel was a Persian officer stationed in Samaria during the reign of Artaxerxes (Ezra 4:7). He joined Rehum and Shimshai in writing a letter accusing the Jews of sedition to halt the temple reconstruction. The name, probably Aramaic, may mean 'God is good' or possibly 'God is wise.' The Septuagint renders it Tabeel. His opposition represents the political resistance faced by the returning exiles.

(1×) Ezra 4:7 lists Tabeel among the officials who wrote to Artaxerxes opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding: 'In the days of Artaxerxes, Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their associates wrote to the king.' His role was administrative and hostile to the Jewish restoration. Cross-language glosses transliterate the name: Spanish 'Tabeel,' French and German preserve the Hebrew, English 'Taveel'—all identifying a foreign adversary. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Taveel | es: Tabeel | fr: [טבאל] | de: [טבאל] Ezra 4:7

טָבְאַל H2870b N-proper-ms (1×)
Tabeel, father of a man whom Rezin and Pekah planned to make king of Judah Tabeel was the father of a man whom the Aramean king Rezin and Israel's king Pekah intended to install as a puppet king in Jerusalem, replacing Ahaz (Isa 7:6). The conspiracy failed, and the 'son of Tabeel' never ascended the throne. The name's pointing in the Masoretic Text may be deliberately derogatory, suggesting 'good-for-nothing.' Some scholars identify him with Rezin himself or another Aramean nobleman. The episode highlights the political intrigue threatening Judah during the Syro-Ephraimite war.

(1×) Isaiah 7:6 records the conspiracy: 'Let us go up against Judah and terrify it, and let us conquer it for ourselves, and set up the son of Tabeel as king in the midst of it.' The 'son of Tabeel' was an Aramean-backed pretender. God promises Ahaz the plot will fail. Cross-language glosses transliterate the name: Spanish 'Taveel,' English 'Tabeel,' French and German preserve the Hebrew—all identifying a shadowy figure in a failed coup. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tabeel | es: Taveel | fr: [טבאל] | de: [טבאל] Isa 7:6

טְבוּל H2871 N-mp (1×)
turban, dyed attire; headgear or clothing with rich colors, possibly referring to elaborate headdresses
This plural noun appears in Ezekiel 23:15, describing Babylonian officers with 'turbans on their heads' (or 'dyed attire'). The term is rare and its exact meaning debated. Most understand it as turbans or headdresses, possibly dyed or elaborately wound. The context is a prophetic vision of Chaldean warriors depicted on a wall, impressive in appearance. The vivid attire symbolizes Babylonian power and allure that seduced Judah into idolatrous alliances.

(1×) Ezekiel 23:15 describes the Babylonian images: 'wearing belts on their waists, with flowing turbans on their heads, all of them having the appearance of officers.' The phrase 'flowing turbans' (or 'dyed attire') emphasizes exotic, impressive headgear. Spanish 'turbantes,' French 'turban,' and English 'dyed-attire' reflect the interpretive range, with most favoring headdresses that signal rank and foreign splendor. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: dyed-attire | es: turbantes | fr: turban | de: [טבולים] Ezek 23:15

טַבּוּר H2872 N-msc (2×)
highest part, center, navel (metaphorically) of a land
This noun designates the prominent central point of a geographical area, literally the navel but used metaphorically for topographical eminence. In Judges 9:37, Gaal reports people descending from "the highest part of the land," likely referring to elevated central terrain. Ezekiel 38:12 describes Israelites dwelling "upon the navel of the earth," using umbilical imagery for the mountainous heartland of Israel, viewed as central and prominent in God's geography. The ancient versions (Septuagint, Vulgate) preserved the literal "navel," recognizing the metaphorical extension to central prominence.

(2×) Both passages employ navel imagery for geographical centrality and prominence. Judges 9:37 uses it topographically: people descend from the land's "highest part" or central plateau, suggesting elevated terrain visible from Shechem. Ezekiel 38:12 applies it to Israel's theological geography—the land occupies the earth's navel, its central and most significant position in divine purposes. The Hebrew parallels post-biblical usage where tabbur/tibbur meant navel, extended metaphorically. Spanish ombligo preserves the literal body-part term, while French/German opt for "navel" or "summit," recognizing the metaphorical application to elevated central terrain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: center-of, navel-of | es: ombligo-de | fr: navel-de, sommet | de: [טבור], navel-von Judg 9:37; Ezek 38:12

טָבַח H2873 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (11×)

To slaughter, butcher — killing an animal for food or sacrifice; extended to violent killing of people

The verb טָבַח (tavach) means to slaughter or butcher, primarily describing the killing of animals for consumption. Joseph orders his steward to 'slaughter an animal and prepare' a feast (Gen 43:16), Lady Wisdom 'has slaughtered her meat' for the banquet of understanding (Prov 9:2), and the stolen ox is 'slaughtered' by the thief (Exod 22:1 [Eng. 21:37]). Deuteronomy 28:31 envisions the covenant curse of watching one's ox slaughtered before one's eyes. The verb extends to the violent slaughter of people in contexts of war and judgment: Lamentations 2:21 mourns the young and old 'slaughtered' in Jerusalem's streets, and Ezekiel 21:15 [Eng. 21:10] speaks of a sword polished 'for slaughter.' Spanish 'degollar/matar' and French 'égorger' capture the visceral force.

to slaughter, butcher (11×) To slaughter or butcher an animal for food, a feast, or sacrifice. Joseph commands that a beast be slaughtered for a banquet (Gen 43:16), Wisdom slaughters her meat (Prov 9:2), a thief slaughters a stolen ox (Exod 22:1), and the covenant curse threatens livestock slaughtered before the owner's helpless eyes (Deut 28:31). Also 1 Samuel 25:11, where Nabal's provisions include meat he has butchered. Spanish 'degollar/matar,' French 'égorger.' BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: I-have-slaughtered, You-slaughtered, and-slaughter | es: al-matadero, degollar, degollaste | fr: abattre, et-slaughters-cela, et-égorger | de: [טבח], [טבחה], [טבחת] Gen 43:16; Exod 22:1; Deut 28:31; 1Sam 25:11; Ps 37:14

טֶבַח H2874 N-ms (12×)

Slaughter, butchering — the killing and preparation of animals for food or a feast; also mass killing in battle

The noun טֶבַח (tebach) covers the spectrum from domestic food preparation to large-scale slaughter. Joseph orders his steward to 'slaughter a slaughtering' (טְבֹחַ טָבַח) when preparing a feast for his brothers (Gen 43:16). Proverbs personifies Wisdom as having 'slaughtered her slaughter' for a banquet (Prov 9:2). But the word also carries a darker register: Isaiah describes the eschatological day of the LORD as a 'slaughter in Bozrah' (Isa 34:2, 6), and Jeremiah and Ezekiel use it for the butchering of enemies (Jer 48:15; Ezek 21:15, 33). Spanish 'matanza' and French 'boucherie' both encompass the domestic and military uses.

slaughter, butchering (12×) The act of slaughtering animals for food, a feast, or sacrifice, extending metaphorically to mass killing in warfare. Domestic feasting: Joseph's banquet preparation (Gen 43:16) and Wisdom's invitation (Prov 9:2). Military and prophetic: the day of the LORD's slaughter (Isa 34:2, 6), enemies led like lambs to slaughter (Jer 48:15; 51:40), and the 'sword of slaughter' (Ezek 21:15, 33). The 'house of slaughter' (בֵּית טָבַח, Isa 14:21) evokes a slaughterhouse for the defeated. Spanish 'matanza' and English 'slaughter' both capture the word's dual domestic and violent registers. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: a-slaughter, and-a-great, for-slaughter | es: a-la-matanza, al-matadero, degolladura | fr: [טבח], [לטבח], et-boucherie | de: [וטבח], [טבח], [טבחה] Gen 43:16; Prov 7:22; Prov 9:2; Isa 34:2; Isa 34:6

טֶבַח H2875 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tebah, son of Nahor by his concubine Reumah

Tebah was one of four sons born to Nahor (Abraham's brother) by his concubine Reumah (Gen 22:24). He appears in the genealogy of Abraham's extended family. The name occurs only once, and its meaning is uncertain. Ancient versions transliterate it as Tabek or Tabekh. The genealogy traces kinship ties between the Hebrews and Aramean peoples.

(1×) Genesis 22:24 lists Nahor's children by his concubine: 'His concubine, whose name was Reumah, bore Tebah, Gaham, Tahash, and Maacah.' Tebah is the first-named. The genealogy establishes family connections in Mesopotamia. Cross-language glosses transliterate: English 'Tebah,' Spanish 'Tevach,' French 'Tebah,' German 'Tebach'—all personal names with no known translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tebah | es: Tevach | fr: Tebah | de: Tebach Gen 22:24

טַבָּח H2876 Art / N-mp (32×)

A royal executioner or bodyguard ('slaughterer'); rarely, a cook who slaughters and prepares food.

Derived from the root meaning 'to slaughter,' this noun took two strikingly different paths in biblical usage. In the overwhelming majority of occurrences (30x), it denotes a member of the royal guard — literally a 'slaughterer' in the king's service, charged with executions and security. The phrase 'captain of the guard' (rab tabbachim) appears repeatedly for Nebuchadnezzar's chief officer Nebuzaradan (2 Kgs 25:8ff; Jer 39:9ff) and for Potiphar in the Joseph narrative (Gen 37:36; 39:1). Only twice (1 Sam 9:23-24) does the word mean 'cook' — the person who slaughtered and prepared the sacrificial meal for Samuel's guests. Spanish 'guardias'/'la-guardia' and French 'garde' capture the bodyguard sense, while 'cocinero' and 'cook' reflect the rare culinary meaning.

1. executioner, bodyguard (royal slaughterer) (30×) A royal executioner, bodyguard, or member of the king's armed retinue — the 'slaughterer' who served the monarch in matters of security and capital punishment. Potiphar is 'captain of the guard' (sar hattabbachim) in Genesis (37:36; 39:1), and Nebuzaradan holds the parallel title rab tabbachim throughout the Babylonian siege narratives (2 Kgs 25:8-20; Jer 39:9-14; 52:12-30). Spanish 'guardias'/'los-guardias' and French 'garde' uniformly render this as a military-security role. The Aramaic cognate in Daniel 2:14 (rab tabbachayya) confirms the semantic continuity across biblical languages. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: executioners, the-executioners | es: guardias, la-guardia, los-guardias | fr: executioners, garde | de: Schlaechter, executioners Gen 37:36; Gen 39:1; Gen 40:3; Gen 40:4; Gen 41:10

2. cook, one who slaughters and prepares food (2×) A cook — one who slaughters animals and prepares meat for a meal. This rare sense (only 1 Sam 9:23-24) describes the cook to whom Samuel gave instructions regarding the reserved portion of meat for Saul's honor meal. Spanish 'al-cocinero'/'el-cocinero' clearly distinguishes this culinary meaning from the military sense. The semantic link between the two senses is the root act of slaughtering: what diverges is whether the slaughter serves a royal security function or a food-preparation function. SLAUGHTERER AGENT

en: the-cook, to-the-cook | es: al-cocinero, el-cocinero | fr: le-cook, à-le-cook | de: der-cook, zu-der-cook 1Sam 9:23; 1Sam 9:24

טַבָּח H2877 N-mpd (1×)

executioners, royal guards; officers who carry out the king's judgments

This Aramaic plural noun means 'guardsmen' or 'executioners,' appearing in Daniel 2:14 where Arioch, captain of the king's guard, went out to execute the wise men. The term denotes royal bodyguards who also serve as executioners of capital sentences. These officers combined protective and punitive functions, enforcing the king's will with lethal authority. The context is Nebuchadnezzar's rage-driven decree to kill all Babylon's sages.

(1×) Daniel 2:14 introduces Arioch, 'the captain of the king's guard, who had gone out to kill the wise men of Babylon.' The plural 'guardsmen' or 'executioners' identifies an elite corps tasked with protecting the king and carrying out death sentences. Spanish 'los-guardias-del-rey,' French 'plongeur' (a mistranslation suggesting 'cook' from a root confusion), and English 'executioners' variously capture the military and judicial roles of these officials. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: the-executioners | es: los-guardias-del-rey | fr: plongeur | de: [טבחיא] Dan 2:14

טַבָּחָה H2878 N-fs (3×)

slaughtered meat, flesh for slaughter

Meat from slaughtered animals, or the act of slaughtering for food or sacrifice. The term appears in both mundane contexts (preparing meat for a meal) and metaphorical ones (Israel as sheep for slaughter). It derives from the root for slaughtering or butchering. In 1 Samuel, Nabal's wife refers to meat her husband has prepared for shearers. The Psalms and Jeremiah use it metaphorically for the righteous or the wicked being led like sheep to slaughter, vulnerable and destined for death. The word emphasizes the preparation and designation of animals for killing.

(3×) Slaughtered meat or animals designated for slaughter. 1 Samuel 25:11 refers to 'my meat that I have slaughtered for my shearers,' Nabal's feast provisions. Psalm 44:22 laments 'we are considered as sheep for slaughter,' facing persecution. Jeremiah 12:3 calls for the wicked to be 'set apart like sheep for slaughter' in divine judgment. The literal and metaphorical uses share the imagery of animals killed for purpose, whether consumption or sacrifice. Spanish matanza/carne, French abattage, English slaughter all capture this. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: for-slaughter, for-the-slaughter, my-meat | es: de-matanza, mi-carne, para-matadero | fr: [לטבחה], abattage, mon-viande | de: [לטבחה], für-slaughter, mein-Fleisch 1Sam 25:11; Ps 44:22; Jer 12:3

טַבָּחָה H2879 Conj-w (1×)

female cooks; women who prepare food, especially in royal service

This feminine plural noun means 'female cooks,' appearing in 1 Samuel 8:13 where Samuel warns that a king 'will take your daughters to be perfumers, cooks, and bakers.' These roles represent forced royal service. The three occupations—perfumers, cooks, bakers—suggest specialized labor in the palace. Female cooks prepared royal meals, a position of servitude despite proximity to power. The warning underscores the cost of monarchy.

(1×) First Samuel 8:13 lists the exactions of kingship: 'He will take your daughters to be perfumers and cooks and bakers.' Female cooks served in the palace, preparing food for the royal household. The conjunction 'and for cooks' links them with perfumers and bakers as examples of conscripted labor. Spanish 'y-para-cocineras,' French and English 'and-for-cooks,' German 'und-fuer-cooks' all identify domestic service roles forced upon Israelite daughters. SLAUGHTERER AGENT

en: and-for-cooks | es: y-para-cocineras | fr: et-pour-cooks | de: und-fuer-cooks 1Sam 8:13

טִבְחַת H2880 Conj-w (1×)

Tibhath, a Syrian city captured by David from King Hadadezer

Tibhath was a city belonging to Hadadezer, king of Zobah, from which David took large quantities of bronze (1 Chr 18:8). The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 8:8 calls it Betah (or Berothai in some manuscripts), suggesting textual variants or dual names for the same city. The bronze from Tibhath was later used by Solomon to make the temple's bronze sea, pillars, and vessels. The city's location in Aram (Syria) is uncertain.

(1×) First Chronicles 18:8 records David's plunder: 'And from Tibhath and from Cun, cities of Hadadezer, David took very much bronze, with which Solomon made the bronze sea, the pillars, and the vessels of bronze.' The conjunction 'and from Tibhath' places it among Hadadezer's cities. Cross-language glosses transliterate: Spanish 'de-Tibhat,' French and German preserve the Hebrew, English 'from-Tibhath'—all identifying a Syrian city rich in bronze. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-from-Tibhath | es: Y-de-Tibhat | fr: [ומטבחת] | de: [ומטבחת] 1Chr 18:8

טָבַל H2881 Conj-w | V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (16×)

Dip, immerse: to dip an object into liquid (blood, water, sauce); to plunge or submerge fully; passive: be dipped.

The Hebrew verb taval describes the deliberate act of dipping something into a liquid — a hyssop branch into blood on Passover night (Exod 12:22), a priest's finger into sacrificial blood for sprinkling (Lev 4:6), or a morsel of bread into vinegar at Boaz's harvest table (Ruth 2:14). Spanish mojara and French tremper both capture the everyday physicality of the gesture, while the deeper immersion of Naaman plunging seven times in the Jordan (2 Kgs 5:14) pushes toward a distinct sense of full submersion — a usage that would later shape the Aramaic and Greek vocabulary of baptism. The single Niphal occurrence at Joshua 3:15, where the priests' feet 'were dipped' into the Jordan's floodwaters, rounds out the word's semantic range with a passive voice.

1. dip into liquid (13×) To dip an object into a liquid — the core Qal active sense covering 13 of the word's 16 occurrences. The action is always transitive: someone dips a thing (finger, hyssop, bread, rod) into a substance (blood, water, vinegar, honey). The ritual contexts dominate — Levitical priests dipping fingers in blood for purification rites (Lev 4:6, 17; 9:9; 14:6, 51) and the Passover hyssop dipped in lamb's blood (Exod 12:22). Spanish mojara and German tauchen converge on the simple physical gesture. The most emotionally charged instance is Joseph's brothers dipping his multi-colored coat in goat's blood to deceive their father (Gen 37:31). DIP IMMERSE DROWN en: and-dip, and-dipped, and-dipping | es: Y-mojará, y-la-mojó, y-moja | fr: et-devra-dip, et-dip, et-dipped | de: [וטבלת], und-dip, und-dipping Gen 37:31; Exod 12:22; Lev 4:6; Lev 4:17; Lev 9:9

2. plunge into (immerse fully) (2×) To plunge or immerse fully, suggesting complete submersion rather than a partial dipping. Two occurrences carry this deeper, more forceful connotation: Naaman immersing himself seven times in the Jordan for healing (2 Kgs 5:14), where Spanish se sumergió and Korean 몸을 담그다 emphasize the full-body action; and Job's bitter complaint that God would 'plunge me in a ditch' (Job 9:31), where the verb conveys violent submersion. The shift from dipping a finger to submerging a whole person marks a genuine semantic extension toward total immersion. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-plunge-me, and-dipped | es: me-hundirás„ y-se-sumergió | fr: et-trempa, תטבלני-moi | de: [תטבלני], und-dipped 2Kgs 5:14; Job 9:31

3. be dipped or immersed (1×) To be dipped or become immersed — the Niphal (passive) stem appearing only in Joshua 3:15, where the priests carrying the ark stepped into the Jordan at flood stage and their feet 'were dipped' in the water's edge. Spanish se mojaron and the reflexive-passive framing across languages confirm the grammatical distinction from the active Qal senses. The narrative context is electrifying: the moment of contact between priestly feet and floodwater triggers the miraculous parting of the river. DIP IMMERSE DROWN en: dipped | es: se-mojaron | fr: trempa | de: dipped Josh 3:15

טְבַלְיָהוּ H2882 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tebaliah, a Levitical gatekeeper from the line of Merari in David's time

Tebaliah was a Levite from the family of Merari, serving as a gatekeeper at the temple during David's reign (1 Chr 26:11). The name means 'Yahweh has dipped' or 'Yahweh has purified,' reflecting ritual cleansing imagery. He appears in the roster of gatekeepers assigned to guard the sanctuary's entrances. The genealogical record preserves the names of those who served in the organized worship established by David.

(1×) First Chronicles 26:11 lists the sons of Hosah from the Merarites: 'Hilkiah the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth.' Tebaliah held the third position among his brothers in gate-keeper service. The name's theophoric element (Yahweh) indicates piety and covenantal identity. Cross-language glosses transliterate: Spanish 'Tebalías,' French and German preserve the Hebrew, English 'Tevalyahu'—all personal names meaning 'Yahweh has purified.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tevalyahu | es: Tebalías | fr: [טבליהו] | de: [טבליהו] 1Chr 26:11

טָבַע H2883 V-Pual-Perf-3cp (10×)

To sink, sink down, become submerged; of objects lodging in solid matter or persons engulfed in water or mire.

A verb of downward motion that carries a vivid physical weight: something or someone sinks into a substance and stays there. Goliath's forehead swallows the stone (1 Sam 17:49), Jeremiah descends into the muck of a cistern (Jer 38:6), and Jerusalem's gates sink into the ground as though the earth itself were consuming them (Lam 2:9). The Psalms extend the image to spiritual distress — the cry 'I have sunk in deep mire' (Ps 69:2) is echoed across languages, with Spanish hundirse and French s'enfoncer both capturing the sense of being swallowed from below. In Exodus 15:4 the Pual intensifies the picture: Pharaoh's chariots are thoroughly drowned, submerged beyond recovery.

1. sink into water or mire (5×) The basic Qal sense of sinking down into a yielding substance — water, mud, or soft ground — whether literally (Jeremiah in the cistern, Jer 38:6) or as a metaphor for overwhelming distress (Ps 69:2–3, 14). Spanish hundirse and French s'enfoncer both preserve the intransitive, downward plunge. The subject is always helplessly drawn under, with the preposition bet marking the engulfing medium. Five of the ten occurrences cluster in the Psalms and Lamentations, showing how deeply this physical image fed Israel's poetry of suffering. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: Have-sunk, I-have-sunk, and-sank | es: Me-hundo, Se-han-hundido, Se-hundieron | fr: [ויטבע], [טבעו], enfoncer | de: [ויטבע], [טבעו], haben-sunk Ps 9:15; Ps 69:2; Ps 69:14; Jer 38:6; Lam 2:9

2. be sunk, be settled down (3×) The Hofal (causative-passive) sense of being made to sink or be set firmly in place. In Job 38:6 God asks who sank the earth's foundations; in Proverbs 8:25 the mountains were settled before Wisdom's eyes. Jeremiah 38:22 warns that the king's own feet have been sunk in the mire — others have caused his downfall. The shift from natural sinking to divinely or externally imposed settling is reflected in the morphology: the Hofal marks an agent behind the descent. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: sank, were-settled, were-sunk | es: fueran-hundidos, fueron-hundidas, hundieron | fr: [הטבעו], הטבעו | de: [הטבעו] Job 38:6; Prov 8:25; Jer 38:22

3. be drowned, be submerged (1×) The Pual (intensive passive) at Exodus 15:4, where Pharaoh's chosen officers 'were drowned' in the Red Sea. The intensive stem underscores totality — not merely sinking but being completely submerged and destroyed. Spanish fueron hundidos and the broader cross-linguistic pattern of passive drowning vocabulary confirm that translators consistently read this as emphatic, irrecoverable submersion rather than ordinary sinking. DIP IMMERSE DROWN en: were-drowned | es: fueron-hundidos | fr: étaient-drowned | de: waren-drowned Exod 15:4

4. sink into, become embedded (1×) A specialized Qal use in 1 Samuel 17:49 where the sling-stone sinks into Goliath's forehead — embedding itself in solid bone rather than in liquid or mud. The verb's basic 'sink-into' semantics extend naturally to penetration of a hard surface, and translators handle it with terms like Spanish hundirse and French s'enfoncer, the same roots used for sinking into water, signaling that Hebrew taba' treats all downward lodging as one conceptual motion. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: and-sank | es: y-se-hundió | fr: et-sank | de: und-sank 1Sam 17:49

טַבָּעוֹת H2884 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tabbaot or Tabbaoth, a Nethinim family name among returning exiles

This personal name identifies the head of a temple servant family in the post-exilic return lists, appearing in parallel passages in Ezra 2:43 and Nehemiah 7:46. Like other Nethinim families, this group provided menial labor supporting temple operations in the restored Jerusalem community. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though its plural form (ending in -ot) may suggest a connection to rings or seals. The fact that both Ezra and Nehemiah preserve this name identically indicates its stability in genealogical memory.

(2×) The dual attestation in Ezra-Nehemiah's parallel census lists establishes Tabbaoth as a recognized Nethinim family among those returning from Babylonian exile. These temple servants occupied a distinct social class below priests and Levites but essential for temple function. The identical spelling in both lists (unlike some names showing variation) suggests this family name was well-established in community records. Translators preserve it in transliteration uniformly across languages (Spanish Tabaot, French/German Tabbaoth), treating it as a proper identifier without attempting semantic analysis. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tabbaot, Tabbaoth | es: Tabaot, Tabaot. | fr: [טבעות] | de: [טבעות] Ezra 2:43; Neh 7:46

טַבַּעַת H2885 Art / N-fs (50×)

Ring; a metal ring used either as a functional loop for carrying sacred objects or as a signet ring of authority and adornment.

A noun denoting a ring, appearing in two distinct material contexts across the Hebrew Bible. The vast majority of occurrences (40 of 50) describe the gold or bronze rings attached to the ark, the altar of incense, the table of showbread, and the priestly ephod — functional loops through which carrying poles were inserted. Spanish distinguishes these as 'argollas' (loops) versus 'anillo' (finger ring), a revealing lexical split. The remaining ten occurrences describe signet rings worn on the hand as symbols of royal authority: Pharaoh's ring given to Joseph (Gen 41:42), Ahasuerus's seal ring transferred to Haman and then Mordecai (Esth 3:10; 8:2).

1. ring or loop for attachment (40×) Functional ring or loop for attachment — a metal ring affixed to the tabernacle furnishings (ark, altar, table, ephod) through which poles or cords were threaded for transport or fastening. This is the dominant use (40 occurrences), concentrated in Exodus 25–39. Spanish 'argollas' (hardware loops) versus French 'anneaux' captures the utilitarian character (Exod 25:12–15; 26:24; 28:23–28). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rings, rings-of, the-rings | es: anillos, anillos-de, argollas | fr: anneaux, anneaux-de, le-anneaux | de: Ringe, Ringe-von, der-Ringe Exod 25:12; Exod 25:14; Exod 25:15

2. signet ring (10×) Signet ring — a ring worn on the finger, especially one bearing a seal used for authentication and as a mark of delegated authority. Pharaoh removes his signet ring and places it on Joseph's hand (Gen 41:42), and Ahasuerus's ring seals royal decrees (Esth 3:10–12; 8:2, 8, 10). Also listed among ornamental jewelry (Isa 3:21; Num 31:50; Exod 35:22). Spanish 'anillo' and German 'Ring' signal the personal adornment sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-signet-ring, his-signet-ring, ring | es: Los-anillos, anillo, anillo-suyo | fr: [הטבעות], et-sceau-anneau, in-anneau | de: [הטבעות], [טבעתו], in-Ring Gen 41:42; Exod 35:22; Num 31:50; Esth 3:10; Esth 3:12

טַבְרִמּוֹן H2886 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tabrimmon, father of Ben-hadad, king of Aram (Syria)

Tabrimmon was the father of Ben-hadad I, king of Damascus, who allied with Asa of Judah against Baasha of Israel (1 Kgs 15:18). The name is Aramaic, possibly meaning 'Ramman is good' or 'Ramman is wise,' invoking the Syrian storm god. He represents the Aramean dynasty of Damascus that frequently interacted with Israel. His son's alliance with Judah reshaped regional power dynamics in the ninth century BC.

(1×) First Kings 15:18 identifies Ben-hadad's lineage: 'Ben-hadad the son of Tabrimmon, son of Hezion, king of Syria, who lived in Damascus.' Tabrimmon is the middle link in a three-generation royal line. His Aramaic name reflects Syrian religious culture. Cross-language glosses transliterate uniformly: Spanish 'Tavrimmón,' French 'Tavrimmon,' German 'Tavrimmon,' English 'Tavrimmon'—all preserving the Aramaic name of an important Syrian dynast. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tavrimmon | es: Tavrimmón | fr: Tavrimmon | de: Tavrimmon 1Kgs 15:18

טֵבֵת H2887 N-proper-fs (1×)

Tebeth, the tenth month of the Hebrew calendar, corresponding to December-January

Tebeth is the tenth month in the post-exilic Hebrew calendar, corresponding roughly to December-January (Esth 2:16). The name is a Babylonian loanword adopted during the exile. Akkadian Ṭebêtum likely derives from a root meaning 'to sink,' possibly referring to muddy conditions or the sun's low position. Esther was taken to King Ahasuerus in this month. The adoption of Babylonian month names reflects the cultural impact of exile.

(1×) Esther 2:16 dates a pivotal event: 'Esther was taken to King Ahasuerus, into his royal palace, in the tenth month, which is the month of Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign.' The month name is a Babylonian loan, replacing the earlier numbering system. Cross-language glosses transliterate: Spanish 'Tebet,' French and German preserve the Hebrew, English 'Tevet'—all identifying the winter month when Esther became queen. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: Tevet | es: Tebet | fr: [טבת] | de: [טבת] Esth 2:16

טַבָּת H2888 N-proper-fs (1×)

Tabbath, a place near where Gideon's pursuit of the Midianites ended

Tabbath was a location marking the extent of Gideon's pursuit of the fleeing Midianite army (Judg 7:22). The site has not been identified with certainty. It appears in a geographic sequence: the enemy fled toward Zererah, as far as the border of Abel-meholah, by Tabbath. The place name occurs only in this context, preserving a detail of Gideon's famous nighttime rout of the Midianites.

(1×) Judges 7:22 describes the Midianite flight: 'The army fled as far as Beth-shittah toward Zererah, as far as the border of Abel-meholah, by Tabbath.' Tabbath marks the southern limit of the pursuit. The name appears only here, and its location remains uncertain. Cross-language glosses transliterate: Spanish 'Tabat,' French 'Tabbath,' German 'Tabbath,' English 'Tabbath'—all preserving a geographic marker from the Gideon narrative. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tabbath | es: Tabat | fr: Tabbath | de: Tabbath Judg 7:22

טָהוֹר H2889 Prep-b (94×)

Clean or pure — ritually clean according to Levitical law, pure in material substance (e.g., pure gold), morally or spiritually pure, or purity as an abstract noun.

The adjective tahor (טָהוֹר) is one of the pillars of the Levitical purity system, appearing across contexts that range from animal classification to goldsmithing to the inner life of the soul. Its most frequent use — some sixty occurrences — concerns ritual cleanness: clean animals fit for sacrifice (Gen 7:2; Lev 20:25), clean persons who may eat holy food, clean places where ashes are deposited. A second major cluster describes material purity, especially 'pure gold' (zahav tahor) in the tabernacle instructions of Exodus 25–39, where English 'pure' and Spanish 'puro' converge perfectly. The rarest but theologically richest use appears in Psalm 19:9, where the fear of the LORD is called tahor — morally and spiritually clean, enduring forever.

1. ritually or physically clean (60×) Ritual or ceremonial cleanness according to the Levitical system. Clean animals are distinguished from unclean for sacrifice and diet (Gen 7:2, 8:20, Lev 20:25, Deut 14:11); persons become clean after purification rites (Lev 13:13, 17; Num 9:13); places and vessels are designated clean for sacred use (Lev 4:12, 10:14). English 'clean,' Spanish 'limpio/limpia,' French 'pur,' and German 'rein' all serve this sense. The distinction between tahor and tame (unclean) structures much of Levitical theology (Lev 10:10, Ezek 22:26, 44:23). PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: clean | es: limpia, limpio, pura | fr: pur | de: rein, rein-ist Gen 7:2; Gen 7:8; Gen 8:20

2. pure in quality or substance (31×) Purity of material substance — unmixed, refined, or of the highest quality. This sense dominates the tabernacle construction narrative: pure gold (zahav tahor) overlaying the ark, the mercy seat, the table, the lampstand (Exod 25:11, 17, 24, 31); pure frankincense on the showbread (Lev 24:7); pure oil for the lamps. Spanish 'puro' and English 'pure' capture the metallurgical and chemical sense of an unalloyed substance. The thirty-one occurrences cluster heavily in Exodus 25–39 and 1 Chronicles 28. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: pure | es: puro | fr: pur | de: rein Exod 25:11; Exod 25:17; Exod 25:24; Exod 25:29; Exod 25:31

3. purity (nominal construct) (2×) An abstract nominal use in the construct state meaning 'purity of' or 'cleanness of,' functioning as a noun rather than an adjective. Both occurrences appear in Proverbs 22:11, where 'purity of heart' (tehor lev) describes inner cleanness as a quality. Spanish marks this with 'pureza de' (purity of), distinguishing it from the adjectival uses. German translations sometimes transliterate the Hebrew, reflecting difficulty mapping this nominal construction directly. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: [pure-of], pure-of | es: (pureza-de), [pureza-de-] | fr: pur | de: [(טהר)], [[טהור]] Prov 22:11

4. morally or spiritually pure (1×) Moral or spiritual purity of heart, character, or conduct. Psalm 19:9 declares 'the fear of the LORD is clean (tehorah), enduring forever' — not ritually clean like an animal or materially pure like gold, but ethically and spiritually unblemished. Spanish uses 'limpio' here as it does for ritual cleanness, but the context elevates the meaning to the realm of the sacred and the moral. This sense anticipates the New Testament's emphasis on inner purity over outward ritual (cf. Matt 5:8). PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: is-clean | es: limpio | fr: pur | de: rein Ps 19:9

טָהוֹר H2890 Adj-msc (1×)

pure, clean; ceremonially acceptable, morally upright, or free from defilement

This common adjective means 'clean' or 'pure,' used in both ritual and moral senses. Ceremonially, it describes animals fit for sacrifice (Gen 7:2), ritually clean persons (Lev 7:19), or purified objects. Morally and metaphorically, it denotes purity of heart, speech, or motives. Habakkuk 1:13 asks why God's 'pure eyes' can look on evil. The term is central to Israel's holiness code, distinguishing the sacred from the profane, the acceptable from the defiled.

(1×) The construct form in Habakkuk 1:13—'You who are of purer eyes than to see evil'—uses ritual purity metaphorically. God's eyes are 'pure of' (unable to tolerate) wickedness. The adjective applies God's absolute holiness to his moral vision. Cross-language glosses —Spanish 'Puro-de,' French 'pur,' German transliterate—emphasize purity as freedom from contamination, whether ritual impurity or moral evil. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: pure-of | es: Puro-de- | fr: pur | de: [טהור] Hab 1:13

טָהֵר H2891 Art / V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (95×)

Be clean or pure; in Piel, cleanse or pronounce clean; in Hitpael, purify oneself — of ritual, moral, and physical purity.

A foundational purity verb spanning ritual law, moral theology, and even physical healing. In the Qal it describes the state of being clean — whether a leper healed by washing in the Jordan (2 Kgs 5:10-14) or a vessel rendered fit after contamination (Lev 11:32). The Piel carries a double force: factitive (actively purifying, as when God promises 'I will cleanse you,' Ezek 36:25) and declarative (the priest's formal pronouncement of cleanness in Lev 13-14). The Hitpael captures the reflexive act of self-purification, as when Jacob's household purified themselves before Bethel (Gen 35:2). Multilingual glosses reveal the breadth: German distinguishes 'rein sein' (be clean) from 'reinigen' (cleanse), while Spanish moves from 'estar puro' to 'purificar' to 'declarar puro.'

1. Qal: be clean, be pure (35×) Qal stative: to be or become ritually, morally, or physically clean. The subject undergoes or achieves a state of purity — a leper after immersion (Lev 14:8-9), an object after sunset washing (Lev 11:32), or a woman after her purification period (Lev 12:7-8). German 'rein sein' and Spanish 'estar puro' both capture this stative quality. Most occurrences cluster in Levitical purity legislation. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: and-be-clean, and-he-is-clean, and-she-shall-be-clean | es: estará-puro, se-purificare, y-estará-puro | fr: elle-est-pur, est-pur, et-elle-devra-être-pur | de: er-soll-sein-rein, ist-rein, sie-ist-rein Lev 11:32; Lev 12:7; Lev 12:8; Lev 13:6; Lev 13:34

2. Piel factitive: cleanse, purify (29×) Piel factitive: to actively cleanse, purify, or make clean. The agent performs a purifying action on a person, place, or object. God is often the subject in prophetic texts — 'I will cleanse you from all your impurities' (Ezek 36:25, 37:23). The priests cleanse the altar (Lev 16:19) and the Levites are purified for service (Num 8:6-7). Spanish 'purificar' and German 'reinigen' reflect this causative force. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: I-will-cleanse, and-I-will-cleanse, and-cleanse | es: a-purificar, límpiame, os-purificaré | fr: [אטהר], [וטהרו], [וטהרתי] | de: [ויטהרו], [ותטהרם], cleanse-mich Lev 14:11; Lev 16:19; Lev 16:30; Num 8:6; Num 8:7

3. Hitpael: purify oneself (20×) Hitpael reflexive: to purify oneself, undergo self-purification. The subject takes deliberate action to achieve ritual cleanness, often in preparation for worship or sacred encounter. Jacob commands his household to purify themselves (Gen 35:2); the returned exiles and Levites purify themselves for the Passover (Ezra 6:20; Neh 12:30). Korean glosses use reflexive constructions paralleling this middle voice. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: and-purified-themselves, and-purify-themselves, and-purify-yourselves | es: Y-se-purificaron, el-que-se-purifica, nos-purificamos | fr: [והמטהרים], et-purifier, et-purifier-eux-mêmes | de: [הטהרו], [והמטהרים], [ויטהרו] Gen 35:2; Lev 14:4; Lev 14:7; Lev 14:8; Lev 14:11

4. Piel declarative: pronounce clean (10×) Piel declarative: to pronounce or declare ritually clean. A technical priestly term where the priest formally declares a person or object free from impurity, concentrated almost entirely in Leviticus 13-14's skin-disease legislation. The priest examines and then 'pronounces clean' (Lev 13:6, 13, 17). German 'rein erklären' (declare clean) and Spanish 'declarar puro' precisely capture this performative speech-act, distinct from the factitive sense of actually making something clean. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-shall-pronounce-clean, and-shall-pronounce-clean, and-shall-pronounce-clean-him | es: para-declararlo-puro, y-declarará-pura, y-declarará-puro | fr: et-devra-pronounce-pur, et-devra-pronounce-pur-lui, et-il-devra-pronounce-pur | de: und-er-soll-erklaeren-rein, und-soll-erklaeren-rein, und-soll-erklaeren-rein-ihn Lev 13:6; Lev 13:13; Lev 13:17; Lev 13:23; Lev 13:28

5. (1×) A single Pual (or anomalous Piel passive) occurrence in Ezekiel 22:24, describing a land 'not cleansed' — that is, not purified or rained upon in the day of indignation. English 'cleansed' and Spanish 'purificada' treat it as a passive of the factitive Piel, and it fits best as a passive counterpart to sense 2. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: cleansed | es: purificada | fr: [מטהרה] | de: reinigen Ezek 22:24

טֹהַר H2892a Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

purity, purifying; ritual or physical cleanness

This rare noun denotes exceptional purity or the state of being purified. At Sinai, the elders saw beneath God's feet something like a pavement of sapphire stone, clear 'as the very heavens for purity' (Exodus 24:10)—an image of transcendent clarity. In Leviticus it also refers to the period of ritual purification after childbirth. The word captures both physical brightness and ceremonial cleanness.

(1×) The single occurrence in Exodus 24:10 uses a prepositional phrase meaning 'for purity,' describing the brilliant clarity of the heavenly vision. The Spanish, French, and German translations all preserve the sense of exceptional purity or purification, reflecting both ritual and physical cleanness. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: for-purity | es: en-pureza | fr: pour-purity | de: fuer-purity Exod 24:10

טֶהַר H2892b Prep-m / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

clearness, luster, splendor; brilliance or shining appearance

A disputed noun appearing only in Psalm 89:44 (English 89:45), referring to the removal or cessation of someone's splendor or luster. The Hebrew text is difficult, and scholars debate whether this is a variant of the purity word or a distinct term for brightness. The context describes God making the king's throne cease from its glory. Multiple ancient versions and modern translations understand this as the loss of royal splendor or brilliance.

(1×) Found only in Psalm 89:44, this term appears in a lament over the king's humiliation. The multilingual evidence shows 'splendor' (Spanish, German) and 'purity' (French), reflecting the textual uncertainty. Most interpreters see this as the king's lost luster or royal glory being taken away. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-splendor | es: esplendor-de-el | fr: de-pureté | de: sein-Pracht Ps 89:44

טָהֳרָה H2893 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3ms (15×)

Purification, ritual cleansing — the prescribed process of restoring ceremonial purity

A feminine noun at the heart of Israel's purity system, denoting the formal process by which a person or object is restored to a state of ritual cleanness before God. After childbirth a woman observes 'days of her purification' — thirty-three for a son, sixty-six for a daughter (Lev 12:4–6). A healed leper undergoes an elaborate cleansing rite (Lev 14:2, 23, 32), and a Nazirite defiled by sudden death must begin purification anew (Num 6:9). Ezekiel requires seven days of purification for priests after contact with the dead (Ezek 44:26), and Nehemiah celebrates that the Levites kept 'the charge of purification' (Neh 12:45).

purification, cleansing (15×) The process or state of ritual purification and ceremonial cleansing, used across the Levitical purity laws. Covers purification after childbirth (Lev 12:4–6), cleansing of skin disease (Lev 13:7, 35; 14:2, 23, 32), restoration after bodily discharge (Lev 15:13), Nazirite re-consecration (Num 6:9), priestly cleansing from corpse contamination (Ezek 44:26), and the general charge of maintaining temple purity (1 Chr 23:28; Neh 12:45). All target languages reflect the core meaning: spa 'purificación', fra 'purification', eng 'purification/cleansing'. PURIFICATION CLEANSING

en: according-to-purification-of, for-his-cleansing, her-purification | es: en-su-purificación, la-purificación, para-su-purificación | fr: [הטהרה], [טהרת], [כטהרת] | de: [הטהרה], [טהרת], [טהרתו] Lev 12:4; Lev 12:5; Lev 12:6; Lev 13:7

טַאטֵא H2894 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs / 3fs (1×)

to sweep away; destroy completely with a sweeping motion

A vivid verb used only in Isaiah 14:23 in God's oracle against Babylon. The Lord declares, 'I will sweep it with the besom of destruction'—using the image of a broom to convey total annihilation. The rare Pilpel verb form intensifies the action, suggesting thorough, repeated sweeping. This single occurrence makes Babylon's judgment visceral and complete, as if God will sweep away every trace of the city's arrogance.

(1×) Isaiah 14:23 uses this verb in a dramatic pronouncement of Babylon's judgment. The consistent translation across languages as 'sweep' (English, Spanish) preserves the domestic metaphor turned apocalyptic. The imagery of sweeping with the 'besom of destruction' conveys irrevocable divine judgment through everyday language. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-I-will-sweep-it | es: y-la-barreré | fr: [וטאטאתיה] | de: [וטאטאתיה] Isa 14:23

טוֹב H2895 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (24×)

To be good, pleasant, or pleasing; in causative stems, to do good, act well, or deal generously with someone.

At its core this verb describes a state of goodness or pleasantness, frequently appearing in the idiom 'to be good in one's eyes' meaning to find approval (Num 24:1; Deut 15:16). Spanish and French translations capture this dual quality well: bueno/bien and bon all orbit around both moral goodness and experiential pleasantness. In its causative usage the focus shifts to active benevolence – God doing good to His people (Jer 32:41; Ps 119:68) or a person acting rightly before God (1 Kgs 8:18). The German renderings show the semantic breadth, ranging from simple gut to more specific constructions for doing well.

1. be good, be pleasing (16×) Qal stative sense: to be good, pleasant, or agreeable, often in the evaluative idiom 'good in someone's eyes.' Cross-linguistic glosses converge on basic goodness (Eng. good, Spa. bueno, Fra. bon, Ger. gut). Used of things, situations, or conditions being favorable – Balaam sees it is good in God's eyes to bless Israel (Num 24:1), and the tents of Jacob are called tov (Num 24:5). MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-good, better, good | es: bien, bueno, hermosas | fr: bon, et-bon, sont-bons | de: [טבו], gut, und-gut Num 11:18; Num 24:1; Num 24:5; Deut 5:33; Deut 15:16

2. do good, act well (8×) Hiphil causative sense: to do good, act well, or deal generously with someone. The agent actively brings about goodness. God promises to do good to Israel and rejoice over them (Jer 32:41); the psalmist declares 'You are good and You do good' (Ps 119:68). Translations reflect the causative shift: Spa. Haz bien, hiciste bien; Fra. etre bon with causative markers. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-I-will-do-better, and-doing-good, and-skilled-at | es: Haz-bien, bien-hiciste, hiciste-bien | fr: [להטיב], et-de-être-bon, et-être-bon | de: [הטיבות], [והטבתי], [ומטב] 1Kgs 8:18; 2Kgs 10:30; 2Chr 6:8; Ps 119:68; Ps 125:4

H2896 Prep-k / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

when good, as good; temporal or comparative phrase related to goodness

This is an infinitival construction appearing only in Judges 16:25, where the Philistines celebrate 'when their hearts were merry'—literally 'when good' or 'as it was good to their heart.' The phrase captures the moment when the people's spirits were high during their feast, just before they called for Samson to entertain them. The Spanish rendering 'rejoiced' interprets the emotional state, while other versions preserve the temporal sense of 'when good.'

(1×) At the Philistine celebration for Samson's capture, this phrase marks the pivotal moment when their joy peaked. The multilingual evidence shows interpretive variation: Spanish takes it emotionally ('rejoiced'), while English and German stay closer to the temporal sense ('when good,' 'as good'). The context is the dangerous euphoria before disaster. MORAL GOODNESS

en: when-good | es: se-alegró | fr: quand-bon | de: als-gut Judg 16:25

טוֹב H2896a N-ms (410×)

Good, pleasant, agreeable; of moral quality, practical suitability, beauty, or emotional gladness; also substantivized as 'goodness' or 'welfare.'

Few Hebrew words are as pervasive or as deceptively simple as tov. Appearing over 400 times, it covers everything from God's declaration that creation is 'good' (Gen 1:4) to a woman being 'beautiful to look at' (Gen 26:7) to a heart that is 'merry' with wine (Judg 16:25). The comparative form ('better than') is especially prominent in Wisdom literature, where Ecclesiastes and Proverbs repeatedly weigh one condition against another. What makes tov fascinating across languages is how translators must constantly choose between moral, aesthetic, and emotional vocabulary: Arabic splits between khayr (moral good), hasan (beautiful), and tayyib (pleasant); Korean alternates between 좋은 (general good), 나은 (better), and 아름다운 (beautiful); Spanish toggles between bueno, mejor, and hermosa. The word's unity in Hebrew — a single root spanning all these domains — is itself a theological statement about the coherence of God's created order.

1. good (quality or moral) (305×) The core adjectival sense: morally upright, practically suitable, or inherently desirable quality. This massive cluster (305 occurrences) anchors the word's usage from Genesis 1 ('God saw that it was good') through the Deuteronomic exhortations to do 'what is good and right' (Deut 6:18; 12:28). The convergence of English 'good,' Spanish bueno, French bon, German gut, Arabic khayr, and Korean 좋은 across these contexts confirms a single, stable core meaning. When applied to land it means fertile (Exod 3:8), to counsel it means wise (2 Sam 17:14), to a word it means fitting or true (1 Kgs 2:38). MORAL GOODNESS

en: good | es: buena, bueno | fr: bon | de: Gutes, gut, gutes Gen 1:4; Gen 1:10; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:18; Gen 1:21

2. better (comparative degree) (64×) The comparative and superlative degree: 'better than,' 'best of.' With 64 occurrences, this is a robust sub-sense marked formally by min-comparisons and contextually by evaluative judgment. Arabic khayrun (comparative) and Spanish mejor both deploy dedicated comparative morphology rather than the base adjective, confirming this is a lexicalized usage rather than a contextual inference. Especially prominent in Ecclesiastes (e.g., Eccl 4:3, 6, 9, 13) and Proverbs (e.g., Prov 15:16-17; 16:16, 19), where 'better-than' sayings form a distinct literary genre. Korean 낫다 and Swahili bora similarly select specialized comparative vocabulary. MORAL GOODNESS

en: better, better-is, good | es: Mejor, Mejor-un, mejor | fr: bon | de: Gutes, gut Gen 29:19; Exod 14:12; Num 14:3; Judg 8:2; Judg 9:2

3. goodness (substantive noun) (28×) Nominalized or substantive use: 'the good,' 'goodness,' 'welfare,' 'prosperity' as an abstract entity. Appearing 28 times, this sense treats tov not as a descriptor but as the thing itself — what is good, the good that one does or experiences. Arabic al-khayr (the good, with definite article) and Korean 선함/선 (goodness as noun) mark the nominalization clearly. Key passages include God's warning to Laban not to speak 'good or bad' to Jacob (Gen 31:24, 29), and the Deuteronomic promise that God will rejoice over Israel 'for good' (Deut 30:9). Hindi bhalai ('goodness/welfare') and Swahili wema similarly shift to abstract noun forms. MORAL GOODNESS

en: the-good | es: Lo-bueno, el-bien, el-bueno | fr: le-bon | de: das-Gute, der-gut, der-gute Gen 16:6; Gen 31:24; Gen 31:29; Deut 12:28; Deut 30:9

4. fair or beautiful (appearance) (8×) Aesthetic beauty or physical attractiveness, especially of persons or land. Only 8 occurrences, but distinctly marked cross-linguistically: Arabic hasan/jamilat ('beautiful'), Korean 아름다운 ('beautiful'), and Spanish hermosa all select beauty-specific vocabulary rather than general 'good' words. The phrase tovat mar'eh ('good of appearance') in Gen 24:16; 26:7 is virtually a technical formula for feminine beauty. In Gen 6:2 the 'daughters of men' are tovot — and the languages agree this means 'beautiful,' not 'morally good.' The land descriptions (Exod 3:8; Num 14:7) shade from beauty toward desirability and fertility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: good, good-of, was-good-of | es: buena-de, buenas-de, hermosa-de | fr: [טובות], [טובת], bon | de: gut, schön, war-gut-von Gen 6:2; Gen 24:16; Gen 26:7; 2Sam 11:2; Esth 1:11

5. glad or merry (of heart) (5×) Emotional state of gladness or merriment, confined to the idiom lev tov ('the heart was good'). With only 5 occurrences, this is a compact but unmistakable sense: the heart becomes 'good' through feasting, wine, or joyful occasion (Judg 16:25; 2 Sam 13:28; Esth 1:10). Arabic taba ('to become pleasant/glad'), Hindi prasanna ('delighted'), and Spanish alegraron ('they were gladdened') all shift to emotion-specific vocabulary, confirming this is not mere quality judgment but a felt psychological state. The Chronicler's note that the people departed 'glad of heart' after Solomon's temple dedication (2 Chr 7:10) shows the idiom at its most theologically resonant. MORAL GOODNESS

en: [good], and-glad-of, but-good-of | es: cuando-bueno, cuando-esté-alegre, se-alegraron | fr: [bon], [וטוב], et-bon | de: [gut], [וטוב], und-gut Judg 16:25; 2Sam 13:28; 2Chr 7:10; Esth 1:10; Prov 15:15

טוֹב H2896b N-ms (90×)

Good, goodness; what is good, beneficial, or right; also prosperity, well-being, and inherent good quality.

Used as a substantive noun, טוֹב encompasses both the abstract moral concept of 'the good' and its concrete outworkings in human life. From the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil in Genesis to the psalmist's prayer 'Who will show us good?' (Ps 4:6), it anchors a fundamental biblical category. The word stands frequently in opposition to רַע ('evil'), and this pairing appears across languages: Spanish 'bien' vs. 'mal,' French 'bon' vs. 'mal.' A few passages narrow the focus to material prosperity—the good life, favorable circumstances—while an even smaller set highlights inherent quality or excellence.

1. good, what is good (85×) The overwhelming majority of occurrences (about 85 of 90) use טוֹב as a general noun meaning 'good' or 'what is good,' spanning moral, ethical, and practical dimensions. It appears in foundational passages like Gen 2:9 ('the tree of the knowledge of good and evil') and Gen 3:5, 22, where the concept defines the boundary of human knowledge. The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent: English 'good/goodness,' Spanish 'bien,' French 'bon,' German 'gut.' The word functions in many constructions—as an object of verbs like 'see,' 'seek,' 'find,' and 'give'—showing its breadth as the default term for what is beneficial, right, or desirable. MORAL GOODNESS

en: good, goodness | es: Bien, bien, bien? | fr: bon | de: gut Gen 2:9; Gen 2:17; Gen 3:5; Gen 3:22; Gen 26:29

2. prosperity, well-being (3×) Three passages narrow the semantic range to concrete prosperity, material well-being, or favorable life conditions. In 1 Kgs 1:42, Ahimaaz says he brings 'good' (i.e., good news of prosperity); in 1 Kgs 10:7, the Queen of Sheba describes Solomon's wisdom and טוֹב (material splendor); Ps 25:13 promises the righteous will 'dwell in good' (enjoy prosperity). Spanish 'en bien' and the English gloss 'in prosperity' mark this experiential, material dimension distinct from abstract moral goodness. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-good, and-goodness, in-prosperity | es: en-bien, y-bondad, y-buenas | fr: dans-bon, et-bon, et-bonté | de: in-gut, und-goodness, und-gut 1Kgs 1:42; 1Kgs 10:7; Ps 25:13

3. goodness, good quality (2×) Two occurrences (Prov 2:9; Hos 10:1) use טוֹב to describe the inherent quality or degree of excellence in something—its good character or nature. In Prov 2:9, understanding righteousness includes discerning every 'good track' or quality; in Hos 10:1, Israel's fruit increases 'according to the goodness' of its land. The gloss 'according to goodness of' in English and Spanish 'conforme a la bondad de' point to a qualitative, evaluative nuance rather than the moral or material senses. MORAL GOODNESS

en: according-to-goodness-of, good | es: buena, conforme-a-la-bondad-de | fr: bon, comme-bon | de: gut, wie-gut Prov 2:9; Hos 10:1

טוֹבָה H2896c N-fsc / 1cs (64×)

Goodness, welfare, benefit; concrete good things or deeds; divine bounty — the feminine noun form of the adjective 'good.'

This feminine noun gives abstract weight to the Hebrew concept of 'good,' moving beyond the simple adjective to name the thing itself — goodness, welfare, benefit. When Joseph tells his brothers that God turned their evil intent 'for good' (Gen 50:20), the word carries the full theological freight of divine providence redirecting harm into blessing. It appears in covenant blessings (Deut 28:11; 30:9), prophetic judgments contrasting welfare with calamity (Jer 21:10; Amos 9:4), and the psalmist's intimate confession that all personal welfare depends on the Lord (Ps 16:2). The plural forms can name concrete blessings or good deeds, while possessive suffixes addressed to God elevate it to 'Your bounty' (Ps 65:11; 68:10).

1. goodness, moral good (41×) The abstract quality of goodness or moral good — what is right, beneficial, and praiseworthy. Often appearing with the article ('the good') or in construct chains, this sense dominates the distribution (41 occurrences). English 'goodness,' Spanish 'bien/bueno,' French 'bien/bon,' and German 'Gutes' all converge on the same abstract moral concept. Key passages include Judges 8:35, where Israel fails to repay the goodness Gideon showed, and 1 Samuel 24:17, where Saul acknowledges David's moral goodness toward him. MORAL GOODNESS

en: good, goodness, the-good | es: bien, bueno, del-bien | fr: bien, bon, le-bon | de: Gutes, [הטובה], der-goodness Gen 44:4; Exod 18:9; Num 24:13; Judg 8:35; 1Sam 24:17

2. benefit, welfare, well-being (17×) Good directed toward a specific beneficiary as welfare, benefit, or well-being. The preposition lamed ('for good') and possessive suffixes ('their good') signal this relational, directional sense. Genesis 50:20 is the paradigmatic example: 'God intended it for good.' Spanish 'para bien' and German 'Gutes' with prepositional framing confirm the benefactive orientation. Deuteronomy's covenant promises (28:11; 30:9) deploy this sense for national prosperity contingent on obedience. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-their-good, for-good | es: para-bien, y-su-bien, y-su-bienestar | fr: bien, bon, et-bon | de: Gutes, [וטובתם], [לטובה] Gen 50:20; Deut 23:6; Deut 28:11; Deut 30:9; 2Chr 18:7

3. good things, good deeds (4×) Concrete, countable instances of good — good things, blessings, or good deeds — marked by plural morphology. Jeremiah 12:6 warns that even family members who 'speak good things' may be treacherous, while 2 Kings 25:28 and Jeremiah 52:32 describe the favorable treatment given to King Jehoiachin. Spanish 'cosas buenas' ('good things') and English 'good deeds' distinguish this countable, tangible sense from the abstract singular. MORAL GOODNESS

en: good-things, his-good-deeds | es: bien, cosas-buenas, sus-bondades | fr: bien, bon, bon-choses | de: Gutes, [טובתיו], gut-Dinge 2Kgs 25:28; Neh 6:19; Jer 12:6; Jer 52:32

4. bounty, divine goodness (2×) Divine bounty or generous goodness, addressed directly to God with second-person possessive suffixes. In Psalm 65:11 the year is crowned with 'Your bounty' and in Psalm 68:10 God provides from 'Your goodness' for the poor. English shifts from 'goodness' to 'bounty,' and Spanish from 'bien' to 'tu bondad,' signaling an intensified, worshipful register that sets this sense apart as doxological rather than merely ethical. MORAL GOODNESS

en: Your-bounty, in-Your-goodness | es: con-tu-bondad, tu-bondad | fr: bien, dans-bien | de: dein-gut, in-dein-gut Ps 65:11; Ps 68:10

טוֹב H2897 N-proper-fs (4×)

Tob — a region beyond the Jordan, north or northeast of Gilead, likely Aramean territory.

A place name designating a region east of the Jordan, probably in or near southern Bashan. Jephthah fled there after being driven out by his brothers (Judg 11:3, 5), and its men appear as mercenaries allied with the Ammonites against David (2 Sam 10:6, 8). The name itself means 'good,' and all major translations — English, Spanish, French, German — simply transliterate it as 'Tob.' It is likely identified with the area around modern Taiyibeh, southeast of the Sea of Galilee.

(4×) Tob, a geographical region beyond the Jordan in the vicinity of Gilead and southern Bashan. Jephthah took refuge there (Judg 11:3, 5), and its warriors served as Ammonite allies against David's forces (2 Sam 10:6, 8). The name, meaning 'good,' is consistently transliterated across all major language traditions — English 'Tob,' Spanish 'Tob,' French 'Tob,' German 'Tob' — reflecting its status as a well-known proper noun in ancient Near Eastern geography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tob | es: Tob | fr: Tob | de: Tob Judg 11:3; Judg 11:5; 2Sam 10:6; 2Sam 10:8

טוּב H2898 N-msc / 3fs (32×)

Good things, goods, goodness; ranging from material bounty and property to abstract moral goodness and beauty

A masculine noun covering the full spectrum of what is 'good' — from the tangible produce of a rich land to the abstract goodness of God's character. When Moses asks to see God's glory, YHWH promises to pass all his tuv before him (Exod 33:19), using the same word that describes camels loaded with the good things of a master's household (Gen 24:10). Spanish captures this range beautifully, shifting from 'bondad' (goodness) for the divine attribute to 'bien' (goods, bounty) for material blessings. The word appears most often in passages celebrating divine provision, making it a keyword for the theology of blessing.

1. goodness, kindness (16×) Abstract moral quality of goodness, benevolence, or kindness, especially as a divine attribute. God's tuv passes before Moses on Sinai (Exod 33:19), and the psalmist prays to be remembered according to YHWH's goodness (Ps 25:7; 31:19). Nehemiah recalls how Israel was ungrateful despite God's great goodness (Neh 9:25, 35). Spanish 'bondad' and French 'bien' in the moral sense reflect this abstract quality. This is the most common sense, appearing in nearly half of all occurrences. MORAL GOODNESS en: His-goodness, and-in-your-goodness, and-with-goodness-of | es: Buen, bondad, bondad-de | fr: [בטובך], [ובטובך], bien | de: [בטובך], [ובטובך], [טוב] Exod 33:19; Deut 28:47; Neh 9:25; Neh 9:35; Ps 25:7

2. good things, bounty (10×) Concrete material goods, produce, or bounty — the best things a land or household can offer. Abraham's servant loads camels with all the good things of his master (Gen 24:10), Pharaoh sends the 'good of Egypt' to Jacob's family (Gen 45:18, 20, 23), and the promised land is filled with houses full of every good thing (Deut 6:11). The multilingual evidence shows Spanish 'bien de' and French 'bon chose de' consistently marking this tangible, countable sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-good-of, good-of, good-thing | es: bien, bien-de, bien-de-ella | fr: [טובה], bon, bon-chose-de | de: Gut, Gutes, [טוב] Gen 24:10; Gen 45:18; Gen 45:20; Gen 45:23; Deut 6:11

3. prosperity, well-being (4×) The state of prosperity, welfare, or well-being in life, often set in contrast to adversity. Job's speeches debate whether the wicked truly enjoy lasting tuv (Job 20:21; 21:16), and Psalm 128:5 promises the faithful will see the prosperity of Jerusalem. This sense sits between the abstract and concrete, describing a condition of life rather than specific goods or moral quality. German and French translations often leave this untranslated or use circumlocutions, reflecting its abstract-yet-experiential character. MORAL GOODNESS

en: his-prosperity, in-goodness-of, their-good | es: en-bien-de, su-bienestar;, su-prosperidad. | fr: dans-bien, dans-בטוב, leur-טובם-eux | de: [טובו], [טובם], in-goodness-of Job 20:21; Job 21:16; Ps 128:5; Prov 11:10

4. beauty, fairness (2×) Aesthetic quality of beauty, fairness, or visual attractiveness. Hosea applies it to the 'beauty of the neck' of a trained heifer (Hos 10:11), and Jeremiah laments the loss of the land's splendor (Jer 2:7). This relatively rare sense extends the 'good' concept from moral and material domains into the realm of sensory delight. Spanish shifts to 'hermosura' (beauty) here, clearly distinguishing it from the moral and material senses. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-its-goodness, goodness-of | es: la-hermosura-de, y-su-bondad | fr: bon, et-bonheur | de: [וטובה], gut Jer 2:7; Hos 10:11

טוֹב אֲדֹנִיָּה H2899 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Tob-Adonijah; personal name meaning 'good is my Lord (YHWH)'

A theophoric name borne by a Levite during King Jehoshaphat's reign (2 Chronicles 17:8). The name combines the Hebrew word for 'good' with a divine title, declaring 'Good is my Lord.' However, the text is textually problematic—the Greek Septuagint shows confusion, conflating this name with others in the list. This Levite was part of a teaching mission sent throughout Judah to instruct the people in the Law.

(1×) This proper name appears in a list of Levitical teachers commissioned by Jehoshaphat. The name's meaning ('Good is Adonijah/my Lord') is theologically significant, but the text is uncertain—the Septuagint variants suggest scribal confusion. All modern translations transliterate rather than translate this personal name, acknowledging its status as a proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Tob-Adonijah | es: y-Tov-Adoniyah | fr: [וטוב אדוניה] | de: [וטוב אדוניה] 2Chr 17:8

טוֹבִיָּהוּ H2900 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (18×)

Tobiah/Tobijah — 'Yah is my good'; a Levite teacher, Nehemiah's Ammonite adversary, and other biblical figures

Toviyyah (Tobiah) or its longer form Toviyyahu (Tobijah) is a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH is my good,' combining tov ('good') with the divine name. Its 18 occurrences identify at least four distinct individuals across different periods of Israelite history. The most memorable is the Ammonite official Tobiah, Nehemiah's persistent adversary who mocked, plotted, and intrigued against the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls (Neh 2:10, 19; 3:35; 4:1; 6:1, 12, 14, 17, 19; 13:4, 7-8). Tobiah's extensive network of Jewish marriage alliances and his occupation of a chamber in the temple precincts made him a particularly dangerous opponent — Nehemiah physically threw his household goods out of the temple storeroom. A Levite named Tobijah was among those sent by King Jehoshaphat to teach the law in the cities of Judah (2 Chr 17:8). Ezra 2:60 (= Neh 7:62) records a family of Tobiah among returning exiles who could not prove their Israelite lineage. Zechariah 6:10, 14 mentions a Tobijah among exiles whose silver and gold were used for a symbolic crown. Spanish 'Tobias,' French 'Tobija,' and German 'Tobija' are standard renderings.

Tobiah/Tobijah (proper name) (18×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'Yah(u) is my good,' identifying several Old Testament figures. Most prominently, the Ammonite official Tobiah who relentlessly opposed Nehemiah's rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls through mockery, conspiracy, and political intrigue (Neh 2:10, 19; 3:35; 4:1; 6:1, 12, 14, 17, 19; 13:4, 7-8) — his influence extended so far that he had secured a chamber within the temple itself, which Nehemiah expelled him from. Also a Levite teacher dispatched by Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:8), a clan of returning exiles with uncertain genealogy (Ezra 2:60 = Neh 7:62), and an exile whose precious metals were fashioned into a symbolic crown in Zechariah's vision (Zech 6:10, 14). The name's hopeful theology — 'YHWH is my good' — stands in ironic tension with its most famous bearer's role as antagonist to God's restoration work. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tobiah, Toviyah, and-Tobiah | es: Tobías, Y-Tobías, a-Tobías | fr: Tobija, bon, et-Tobija | de: Tobija, [וטוביהו], und-Tobija 2Chr 17:8; Ezra 2:60; Neh 2:10; Neh 2:19; Neh 4:3

טָוָה H2901 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

to spin thread or yarn from fiber

This verb describes the action of twisting fibers into thread, a skilled task performed by women in ancient Israel. Exodus 35:25-26 records that skillful-hearted women spun yarn for the tabernacle construction, with verse 26 specifically noting they spun goats' hair. The verb appears only in these two verses, both in the wilderness tabernacle narrative. Cognates in Aramaic and Assyrian confirm the spinning sense, while Arabic parallels suggest twisting or winding. This was foundational textile work, transforming raw fiber into usable thread for weaving.

(2×) Both occurrences describe women's contributions to tabernacle construction in Exodus 35. Verse 25 presents the general activity: wise-hearted women spun with their hands. Verse 26 specifies the material: women whose hearts stirred them in wisdom spun the goats' hair. The repetition emphasizes both the skill required (wisdom, stirred hearts) and the specific materials processed. Spinning goats' hair required particular expertise, as this coarser fiber served for tent coverings. Spanish hilaron (they spun) and French ils fila preserve the basic action across translations. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: they-spun | es: hilaron | fr: ils-fila | de: sie-gesponnen Exod 35:25; Exod 35:26

טוּחַ H2902a V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (11×)

Plaster, daub, coat — to smear a surface with clay, lime, or whitewash; literal and metaphorical

The verb טוּחַ (tuach) means to plaster, daub, or coat a surface with lime, clay, or whitewash. Its most vivid literal use appears in the Levitical instructions for treating a house afflicted with mold or to plaster, daub, coat (11×) To physically plaster, daub, or coat a wall or surface with clay, lime, or similar material. Central to the ritual purification of a mold-afflicted house in Leviticus 14:42-48, where re-plastering follows the removal of contaminated stones. Also used for overlaying with gold (1 Chr 29:4). Spanish 'revocar' and French 'enduire' convey the construction sense faithfully. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

'leprosy,' where walls are scraped, re-plastered, and inspected (Lev 14:42-48). David set aside gold for temple overlaying (1 Chr 29:4), where the verb describes gilding. Ezekiel transforms the word into a devastating metaphor: false prophets 'daub with whitewash' (Ezek 13:10-15; 22:28), giving flimsy walls of falsehood a deceptive veneer of respectability. Spanish 'revocar/encalar' and English 'plaster/whitewash' capture the dual physical and figurative registers.

en: and-on-the-plasterers, and-shall-plaster, daub | es: les-enlucieron, los-que-revocan, para-revestir | fr: [לטוח], crépi, et-devra-plaster | de: [הטחים], [ובטחים], [טחו] Lev 14:42; Lev 14:43; Lev 14:48; 1Chr 29:4; Ezek 13:10

טָחַח H2902b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

to be besmeared, plastered over; have the eyes or perception covered

A verb appearing only in Isaiah 44:18, describing the spiritual blindness of idolaters. Their eyes 'have been besmeared' so they cannot see, and their hearts cannot understand. The passive form suggests deliberate divine judgment—God has plastered over their perception as punishment for idolatry. Some scholars see this as a variant pointing of the more common word for 'plaster' or 'coat,' intensifying the image of covered, useless eyes that cannot perceive truth.

(1×) Isaiah 44:18 uses this verb in a devastating critique of idol-makers who cannot see their own folly. The Spanish 'closed' and English 'smeared over' both capture the idea of blocked perception. The passive voice implies divine judgment: God has sealed their eyes shut, making them incapable of recognizing the absurdity of worshiping wood. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: smeared-over | es: cerró | fr: [טח] | de: [טח] Isa 44:18

טוֹטָפוֹת H2903 Conj-w (3×)

frontlets, phylacteries, forehead-bands

Bands or markers worn on the forehead between the eyes, mentioned in Deuteronomy's commands to remember God's law. The term appears in passages commanding Israel to bind God's words as a sign on their hands and as frontlets between their eyes. Originally likely figurative language for constant mindfulness of Torah, later Jewish tradition interpreted these commands literally, developing the practice of wearing phylacteries (tefillin) containing scripture texts. The word itself denotes bands or ornaments worn on the forehead, serving as visible reminders of covenant commitment.

(3×) Frontlets or forehead-bands symbolizing devotion to Torah. Exodus 13:16 commands that dedication of the firstborn 'shall be as frontlets between your eyes,' a memorial sign. Deuteronomy 6:8 instructs binding commandments 'as frontlets between your eyes.' Deuteronomy 11:18 repeats this, making God's words 'frontlets between your eyes.' Whether understood literally or figuratively, the image emphasizes constant awareness of God's law. Later Jewish practice of phylacteries derives from literal interpretation. Cross-linguistic terms (Spanish filacterias/frontales, French/English frontlets) reflect both ancient and rabbinic understandings. BINDING AND TYING

en: and-for-frontlets, as-frontlets, for-frontlets | es: como-frontales, por-filacterias, y-por-frontales | fr: comme-frontlets, et-pour-frontlets, pour-frontlets | de: fuer-frontlets, und-fuer-frontlets, wie-frontlets Exod 13:16; Deut 6:8; Deut 11:18

טוּל H2904 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Imp-mp / 1cs (14×)

To hurl, cast, throw forcefully; (passive) to be hurled or cast down; to be overthrown

A Hebrew verb of violent motion whose root imagery is the powerful flinging of an object or person. Saul hurls his spear at David (1 Sam 18:11; 20:33), Jeremiah warns of exile as God hurling his people into a foreign land (Jer 16:13; 22:26), and Isaiah pictures God violently tossing a man like a ball (Isa 22:17). The Pilpel intensification in that Isaiah passage — 'hurleth thee violently' — captures the raw force latent in the root. Spanish arrojar and French jeter both preserve the sense of forceful ejection. In its passive Hofal forms, the word shifts to describe the experience of being hurled or toppled, whether the lot cast into the lap (Prov 16:33) or the warrior cast down but not abandoned (Ps 37:24).

1. hurl, cast, throw (10×) The active sense of hurling, casting, or throwing something or someone with force. Saul hurls his spear at David (1 Sam 18:11, 20:33), God hurls Israel into exile (Jer 16:13, 22:26), and Ezekiel pictures a body cast upon open ground (Ezek 32:4). The Pilpel form in Isaiah 22:17 intensifies the violence. Spanish arrojar, French hurler/jeter, and Hindi phenkna all confirm the core meaning of forceful projection. The verb governs both physical objects (javelins, cargo in Jonah 1:5) and persons (exile as metaphorical hurling). THROWING AND CASTING

en: And-I-will-hurl, I-will-hurl-you, and-hurl-me | es: Y-arrojó, Y-os-arrojaré, Y-te-arrojaré | fr: [והטלתי], [מטלטלך], et-hurled | de: [אטילך], [והטלתי], [מטלטלך] 1Sam 18:11; 1Sam 20:33; Isa 22:17; Jer 16:13; Jer 22:26

2. be hurled, be cast (2×) The passive sense of being thrown or cast, rendered in the Hofal stem. The lot is cast into the lap (Prov 16:33), and Jeremiah's treacherous allies are described as hurled away (Jer 22:28). Spanish es echada and fueron arrojados preserve the passive voice. The sense remains physical and literal — the subject receives the force of being thrown rather than initiating it. THROWING AND CASTING

en: is-cast, were-hurled | es: es-echada, fueron-arrojados | fr: [הוטלו], יוטל | de: [הוטלו], warf Prov 16:33; Jer 22:28

3. be cast down, be overthrown (2×) A figurative extension of the passive: to be cast down, overthrown, or brought low, with emphasis on defeat or humiliation rather than mere physical displacement. Job 41:9 asks whether Leviathan's opponent is hurled down at the mere sight of it, and Psalm 37:24 reassures that the righteous may be cast down but not utterly abandoned. The shift from literal hurling to metaphorical overthrow is marked in several translations — Spanish sera derribado ('will be overthrown') rather than simply 'thrown.' THROWING AND CASTING

en: is-he-hurled-down, one-is-cast-down | es: será-derribado | fr: jeter, יטל | de: ist-er-hurled-hinab, warf Job 41:9; Ps 37:24

טוּר H2905 N-mp (26×)

Row, course, or tier — an ordered horizontal line of stones, jewels, pillars, or beams in architectural or priestly contexts.

A masculine noun describing objects arranged in a horizontal line. Its primary settings are the tabernacle and temple: four rows of precious stones on the high priest's breastpiece (Exod 28:17-20; 39:10-13), courses of hewn stone in Solomon's temple walls and courtyards (1 Kgs 6:36; 7:12), rows of cedar pillars and beams (1 Kgs 7:2-3), and rows of pomegranate ornaments on the capitals of Jachin and Boaz (1 Kgs 7:18, 20, 42). Ezekiel uses it for cooking ledges around a temple court (Ezek 46:23). English 'row' and Spanish 'hilera/fila' capture the spatial arrangement well, confirming a single, consistent sense across all occurrences.

row, course, tier (26×) An ordered horizontal arrangement of objects set side by side. In the priestly breastpiece, four rows hold twelve gemstones representing Israel's tribes (Exod 28:17-20; 39:10-13). In Solomonic architecture, the term designates courses of cut stone (1 Kgs 6:36; 7:12), lines of cedar pillars (1 Kgs 7:2-3), and tiers of decorative pomegranates on column capitals (1 Kgs 7:18, 42). Spanish 'hilera' and English 'row' consistently reflect this single spatial concept. The word appears exclusively in sacred or royal construction contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-row, row, rows | es: Y-la-hilera, filas, filas-de | fr: [טורים], et-le-rangée, le-rangée | de: [טורים], der-row, row Exod 28:17; Exod 28:18; Exod 28:19

טוּר H2906 Prep-l / N-ms (2×)
mountain (Aramaic)
This Aramaic noun for mountain appears exclusively in Daniel 2, within Nebuchadnezzar's dream interpretation. The great image was struck by a stone cut without hands, which then became a great mountain filling the whole earth (Daniel 2:35). The stone was cut from a mountain (Daniel 2:45), emphasizing its non-human origin. This mountain imagery carries symbolic weight in Daniel's apocalyptic vision, representing the kingdom of God that will fill the earth. The word parallels Hebrew tzur (rock) more than the common har (mountain), suggesting perhaps a rocky mountain.

(2×) Both instances in Daniel 2 participate in the same symbolic vision. Verse 35 describes the stone becoming a great mountain that fills the earth after destroying the image—representing God's eternal kingdom supplanting human empires. Verse 45 explains the stone's origin: cut from the mountain without hands, emphasizing divine rather than human agency. The Aramaic tur functions here as a theologically loaded term for God's sovereign domain. Targum, Syriac, and Nabataean cognates confirm the basic mountain meaning, while its symbolic function in Daniel elevates it beyond mere topography. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-mountain, from-the-mountain | es: del-monte, en-monte | fr: montagne | de: [לטור], [מטורא] Dan 2:35; Dan 2:45

טוּשׁ H2907 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
to rush, dart, swoop down; move swiftly like a bird of prey
A dynamic verb used only in Job 9:26 to describe the swift passage of time. Job compares his fleeting days to 'a vulture that swoops down upon its food'—capturing the terrifying speed with which his life is disappearing. The verb conveys sudden, decisive movement, like a raptor diving from the sky. The Aramaic cognates suggest flying or rushing, making this a vivid image of predatory swiftness applied metaphorically to time's relentless advance.

(1×) Job 9:26 uses this verb in a triple simile of speed: swift boats, an eagle, and here a swooping vulture. The Spanish 'eagle that launches itself' and English 'swooping' both capture the predatory dive. The imagery makes Job's complaint visceral—his days plunge toward death with the same inevitability as a raptor claiming its prey. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: swooping | es: águila-que-se-lanza | fr: יטוש | de: [יטוש] Job 9:26

טָוֶת H2908 Adv (1×)
fasting, hungrily; adverbial form indicating a state of abstaining from food
A rare Aramaic adverb appearing only in Daniel 6:18 (English 6:19), describing how King Darius approached Daniel's den 'fasting' or 'in hunger' the morning after sealing him in with the lions. The word captures the king's anxious overnight fast, his sleepless concern for Daniel expressed through abstinence from food. The feminine ending serves as an adverbial marker, similar to other Semitic languages, making this a state or manner rather than a noun.

(1×) Daniel 6:18 uses this adverb to describe Darius's emotional state after condemning Daniel to the lions. The multilingual evidence consistently shows 'fasting' or 'in hunger' (English, Spanish, French), emphasizing the king's distress. His refusal of food mirrors his refusal of sleep, both symptoms of his anguish over Daniel's fate. FASTING
en: fasting | es: en-ayuno | fr: à-jeun | de: [טוות] Dan 6:18

טָחָה H2909 Prep-k / V-Piel-Prtcpl-mpc (1×)
about a bowshot; distance measurement roughly equivalent to an arrow's range
A participial construction appearing only in Genesis 21:16, measuring the distance Hagar placed between herself and her dying son Ishmael. The Hebrew literally reads 'like shooters of a bow'—a vivid, human-scale measurement. Unable to watch the child die, she sat 'about a bowshot away,' far enough not to witness his death but close enough to hear his cries. This poignant detail captures a mother's unbearable grief through the language of distance and archery.

(1×) Genesis 21:16 uses this phrase to measure Hagar's emotional and physical distance from Ishmael's impending death. The consistent translation 'bowshot' or 'arrow's shot' across languages (English, Spanish, German) preserves the ancient measurement. The phrase makes abstract grief concrete—the specific distance a mother can bear between herself and her child's suffering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: about-a-bowshot | es: como-tiro-de | fr: au-sujet-de-un-bowshot | de: wie-eine-Schussweite- Gen 21:16

טְחוֹת H2910 Prep-b (2×)
inward parts, hidden places (especially of the body/heart)
This feminine plural noun designates concealed interior spaces, particularly the hidden recesses of the human person. Psalm 51:6 uses it for the inward parts where God desires truth, parallel to the hidden places of the heart. Job 38:36 asks who placed wisdom in the inward parts, though the context suggests this may refer to cloud-layers (dark, hidden atmospheric regions) rather than human anatomy. The term emphasizes hiddenness and interiority—what is covered over and concealed from external view, whether internal organs, the inner life, or obscured natural phenomena.

(2×) The two contexts reveal semantic ambiguity between human interiority and natural concealment. Psalm 51:6 clearly uses tuchot for the inward parts or heart where God desires faithfulness, parallel to satum (hidden places)—emphasizing interior moral life. Job 38:36 proves more challenging: Jewish interpreters read this as the heart or kidneys ('reins'), but Delitzsch and others argue the context points to cloud-layers, obscure atmospheric phenomena that obey natural law. Both readings share the core sense of hidden, covered-over spaces—whether inside the body or within the sky's dark recesses. FLESH AND BODY en: in-the-inward-parts | es: en-entrañas, en-lo-íntimo | fr: dans-entrailles, בטחות | de: [בטחות], in-der-inward-parts Job 38:36; Ps 51:6

טָחוֹן H2911 N-ms (1×)
grinding mill, hand mill; domestic tool for grinding grain
A masculine noun appearing only in Lamentations 5:13, describing the humiliation of young men forced to carry millstones during Jerusalem's destruction. Normally grinding was women's work, done by hand with heavy circular stones. The image of young men 'bearing the mill' captures their degradation—reduced to servile labor, carrying the implements of the most menial domestic task. This single occurrence makes the reversal of social roles a symbol of total conquest and shame.

(1×) Lamentations 5:13 uses this term in a catalog of Jerusalem's humiliations after the Babylonian conquest. The Spanish and English both translate simply as 'mill' or 'grinding mill,' emphasizing the heavy labor involved. The forced carrying of millstones represents not just physical burden but social degradation, as young men are reduced to performing women's domestic work. UPPER MILLSTONE
en: a-mill | es: el-molino | fr: [טחון] | de: [טחון] Lam 5:13

טָחַן H2912 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (8×)
To grind grain or material with a millstone; by extension, to crush or reduce to powder.
Describes the common ancient task of grinding with millstones, typically women's work in the household. It appears in contexts ranging from the mundane – grinding manna with hand-mills in the wilderness (Num 11:8) – to the humiliating: Samson grinding in the Philistine prison (Judg 16:21), and the metaphorical grinding of the poor by oppressive rulers (Isa 3:15). Cognates across Semitic languages (Aramaic, Arabic, Ethiopic) all center on the same milling action. Job 31:10 uses it as a figure for servile subjection: 'let my wife grind for another.'

grind (8×) To grind, especially grain or hard material, using a millstone or hand-mill, reducing it to flour or powder. The verb tachan spans literal grinding of manna (Num 11:8), the golden calf reduced to powder (Exod 32:20; Deut 9:21), the humiliation of Samson grinding in the Philistine prison house (Judg 16:21), and the prophetic imagery of Babylon's princess forced to grind flour (Isa 47:2). It also appears figuratively: grinding the faces of the poor (Isa 3:15) and Job 31:10 where grinding symbolizes servile subjection. The participle in Eccl 12:3 describes the 'grinders' (teeth) ceasing, a poetic image of old age. Spanish 'moledoras' (female grinders) and 'moliendo' (grinding) preserve the participial nuance. UPPER MILLSTONE

en: and-grind, and-ground, and-he-ground | es: Muela, las-moledoras, moliendo | fr: [וטחנ], [תטחנ], et-il-moulu | de: [הטחנות], [וטחנ], [תטחן] Exod 32:20; Num 11:8; Deut 9:21; Judg 16:21; Job 31:10

טַחֲנָה H2913 Art / N-fs (1×)

grinding, milling; the sound or activity of grinding grain

A feminine noun appearing only in Ecclesiastes 12:4 in the famous allegory of old age. The phrase 'when the sound of the grinding is low' depicts the fading of daily life's familiar sounds as one ages. Whether this refers literally to the quieting of millstones in a declining household or metaphorically to the weakening of bodily functions (perhaps teeth), the image is one of diminishing vitality. The grinding of grain was a constant, rhythmic soundtrack to ancient domestic life; its fading signals approaching death.

(1×) Ecclesiastes 12:4 uses this term in a richly symbolic passage about aging and mortality. The Spanish 'milling' and English 'grinding' both preserve the sense of the mill's activity or sound growing faint. Whether literal (a household in decline) or metaphorical (the body's failing functions), the image evokes the slow silencing of life's ordinary rhythms. UPPER MILLSTONE

en: the-grinding | es: la-molienda | fr: le-הטחנה | de: [הטחנה] Eccl 12:4

טְחוֹר H2914 N-mp (9×)

Tumors or hemorrhoids; the plague affliction God sent upon the Philistines after they captured the ark.

This plural noun appears almost exclusively in the narrative of the Philistine plague following the capture of the ark (1 Sam 5-6), plus the Deuteronomic curse list (Deut 28:27). The Qere tradition consistently substitutes this term for the Ketiv reading ofalim ('swellings'), suggesting the Masoretes considered it the more precise or appropriate term. The Philistines fashioned golden replicas of these tumors as guilt offerings (1 Sam 6:4-5, 11, 17), a vivid testimony to the severity of the affliction. Spanish 'hemorroides/tumores' and English 'tumors/hemorrhoids' reflect the ongoing medical ambiguity — whether these were hemorrhoidal swellings, bubonic tumors, or another pathology remains debated.

tumors, hemorrhoids (9×) Tumors or hemorrhoids — a pathological swelling sent as a divine plague. The term appears primarily as a Qere reading replacing the Ketiv ofalim in the ark narrative (1 Sam 5:6, 9, 12; 6:4-5, 11, 17) and in Deuteronomy 28:27 among covenant curses. The Philistines' desperate act of crafting golden tumor images as votive offerings (1 Sam 6:4-5) underscores the severity. Spanish uses both 'hemorroides' and 'tumores,' reflecting the persistent medical uncertainty about the precise condition. The Aramaic cognate (techorayya) confirms the term was understood as a rectal or abdominal affliction. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: (tumors-of), (your-tumors), and-with-hemorrhoids | es: (con-hemorroides), (hemorroides), (tumores-de) | fr: (tumors-of), (your-tumors), avec-tumors | de: ihr-tumors, tumors-von, und-mit-hemorrhoids Deut 28:27; 1Sam 5:6; 1Sam 5:9; 1Sam 5:12

טִיחַ H2915 Art / N-ms (1×)

plaster, coating; material used to cover or whitewash a surface

A noun appearing only in Ezekiel 13:12, where the prophet challenges false prophets who 'plaster' over Israel's problems with deceptive assurances. When the wall they whitewashed collapses, people will ask, 'Where is the coating you applied?' The term refers to the superficial covering that conceals structural weakness. Ezekiel's metaphor exposes how false prophecy is like poorly applied plaster—it looks good temporarily but provides no real strength and will fail catastrophically under pressure.

(1×) Ezekiel 13:12 uses this term in an extended metaphor of false prophets as incompetent builders who whitewash a flimsy wall. The Spanish 'plaster' and French 'coating' both capture the sense of superficial covering. When judgment comes and the wall falls, the uselessness of their deceptive reassurances will be exposed—the plaster cannot hide fundamental rot. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: the-plaster | es: el-revoque | fr: enduit | de: [הטיח] Ezek 13:12

טִיט H2916 Prep-b / N-msc (13×)

Mud, mire, clay — wet earth trampled underfoot or shaped by the potter

A noun for wet, sticky earth appearing in two distinct but related settings. Most often it describes the mire of streets, evoking contempt and humiliation — enemies trampled like mud in the roadways (2 Sam 22:43; Mic 7:10; Zech 10:5). It also pictures the muck of Jeremiah's dungeon cistern (Jer 38:6) and the bog of distress in the Psalms (Ps 40:2; 69:14). In poetic passages it denotes potter's or brick-making clay (Isa 41:25; Nah 3:14), paralleling the more common חֹמֶר. Across languages the translations cluster around 'mud/lodo/boue,' confirming a single semantic core of wet, malleable earth.

mud, mire, clay (13×) Mud, mire, or clay (טִיט) — wet earth in its raw, unworked state. The word covers a spectrum from street mire trampled in contempt (Mic 7:10; Ps 18:42; Zech 9:3), to the sticky bog of Jeremiah's cistern (Jer 38:6) and the metaphorical mire of distress (Ps 40:2; 69:14), to the potter's and brickmaker's clay shaped for construction (Isa 41:25; Nah 3:14). Spanish 'lodo/cieno' and French 'boue' mirror this unified range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-mud, from-mire-of, from-the-mire | es: cieno, como-lodo-de, como-lodo-de- | fr: [בטיט], [וטיט], [טיט] | de: [בטיט], [וטיט], [טיט] 2Sam 22:43; Job 41:30; Ps 18:42; Ps 40:2; Ps 69:14

טִין H2917 N-msd (2×)

clay, mud (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 2's vision of Nebuchadnezzar's statue, where iron mixes with clay in the feet and toes (Daniel 2:41, 43). The clay represents weakness and instability in the final kingdom, unable to properly cohere with iron despite mixture. Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic cognates all confirm the basic meaning of clay or mud, material suitable for pottery but fundamentally incompatible with metal. The symbolic contrast between iron's strength and clay's fragility drives Daniel's interpretation of the kingdom's ultimate instability.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Daniel 2's explanation of the statue's feet and toes. Verse 41 describes iron mixed with clay (chaspah mina, potter's clay), while verse 43 explains the mixture's instability—iron and clay won't adhere to each other. The clay symbolizes fragility and incompatibility, standing in stark contrast to iron's strength. Targum, Syriac, and Arabic all confirm the clay/mud meaning. Spanish de lodo (of mud/clay), French argile (clay), and German parallels preserve this material contrast essential to Daniel's vision of unstable kingdoms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: mud | es: de-lodo | fr: argile | de: [טינא] Dan 2:41; Dan 2:43

טִירָה H2918 N-fpc / 3mp (7×)

Feminine noun meaning 'encampment, settlement, nomadic village'; also 'battlement, row of stones.'

From the root idea of enclosing or surrounding (compare Syriac 'sheepfold'), this noun describes both nomadic settlements and architectural features. The twelve princes of Ishmael dwell in their tiroth alongside their chatserim ('villages') in Genesis 25:16, painting a picture of circular tent encampments. The same word appears in military contexts when Israel burns the Midianite encampments (Numbers 31:10). In a surprising architectural turn, Song of Solomon 8:9 uses it for a 'battlement of silver,' and Ezekiel 46:23 applies it to rows of stone masonry around the temple courts.

1. encampment, settlement (5×) An encampment, settlement, or walled enclosure, especially the circular camps of nomadic tribes. In Genesis 25:16 the tiroth of Ishmael's sons are paired with chatserim ('villages'), depicting semi-permanent nomadic settlements. Numbers 31:10 lists tiroth alongside cities that Israel destroyed in the war against Midian. Psalm 69:25 uses it poetically for a 'habitation' (parallel to 'tents'), and 1 Chronicles 6:54 applies it to Levitical settlements. The Syriac cognate meaning 'sheepfold' preserves the core enclosure imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-their-encampments, by-their-encampments, their-camp | es: por-sus-campamentos, su-campamento, sus-campamentos | fr: [טירותיהם], [לטירותם], camp | de: [טירותיהם], [לטירותם], ihr-camp Gen 25:16; Num 31:10; 1Chr 6:54; Ps 69:25; Ezek 25:4

2. battlement, row (2×) A battlement, parapet, or row of stones in an architectural context. In Song of Solomon 8:9, tirat kesef ('battlement of silver') is a metaphor for adorning or fortifying the beloved, a striking shift from the nomadic encampment sense. In Ezekiel 46:23 the plural tiroth describes rows or courses of stonework around the inner temple courts. French créneau ('battlement') and Spanish almena capture this architectural meaning precisely. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: battlement-of, the-rows | es: almena-de, las-hileras | fr: [הטירות], un-créneau | de: [הטירות], [טירת] Song 8:9; Ezek 46:23

טַל H2919 Conj-w (31×)

dew, night moisture — atmospheric condensation symbolizing divine blessing, refreshment, and abundance

Tal denotes the night moisture that settles on surfaces in the absence of rain, appearing 31 times with a distinctive dual register: meteorological fact and theological metaphor. In the patriarchal blessings, Isaac invokes 'the dew of heaven' as a mark of divine favor upon Jacob (Gen 27:28, 39), establishing dew as a symbol of God's provision. The manna in the wilderness appears with the dew (Exod 16:13-14; Num 11:9), linking morning moisture to miraculous sustenance. Gideon's fleece test pivots entirely on dew's presence and absence (Judg 6:37-40). Prophetically, dew signals restoration: Hosea compares God's reviving love to dew upon Israel (Hos 14:5), while its withholding signals judgment (Hag 1:10; Zech 8:12). The Psalms and wisdom literature deploy dew as an image of brotherly harmony (Ps 133:3) and of royal favor (Prov 19:12). Cognates in Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic confirm the core meaning across the Semitic family.

1. dew (symbol of divine blessing/abundance) (17×) Split from sense 100241. Criteria: Figurative: Isaac's blessing 'dew of heaven', Hosea's restorative love 'like dew', Psalm 133's unity 'like Hermon's dew' — symbolic of divine favor and abundance en: and-from-dew-of, and-like-dew, and-like-the-dew | es: Como-rocío-de, como-el-rocío, como-rocío | fr: [טל], [טלך], comme-la-rosée | de: Tau, [טל], [טלך] Gen 27:28; Gen 27:39; Deut 32:2; Deut 33:13; Deut 33:28

2. dew (literal atmospheric moisture) (14×) Split from sense 100241. Criteria: Literal weather phenomenon: overnight condensation, manna arriving with dew, Gideon's fleece test measuring actual moisture en: and-dew, dew, the-dew | es: el-rocío, rocío, su-rocío | fr: [טל], [טלם], de-rosée, | de: Tau, [טל], der-Tau Exod 16:13; Exod 16:14; Num 11:9; Judg 6:37; Judg 6:38

טַל H2920 Conj-w / Prep (5×)

dew (Aramaic); the dew of heaven as a symbol of exposure and divine humbling

An Aramaic noun for dew, appearing exclusively in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's madness. Five times the text declares that the king's body would be 'wet with the dew of heaven' – a repeated motif emphasizing his reduction from royal splendor to animal-like exposure in the open field. The phrase 'dew of heaven' (טַל שְׁמַיָּא) becomes almost a refrain. Spanish 'rocío' and French 'rosée' both capture the gentle yet relentless natural phenomenon that marks divine judgment.

(5×) Dew, specifically the dew of heaven (טַל שְׁמַיָּא), used in the Aramaic portions of Daniel as a repeated marker of Nebuchadnezzar's exposure to the elements during his divinely decreed madness (Dan 4:15, 23, 25, 33; 5:21). The construct phrase always pairs with 'heaven,' emphasizing that the mightiest king is humbled beneath open sky. Spanish 'rocío de' and French 'rosée' faithfully render the meteorological term, while the theological weight lies in its fivefold repetition as divine discipline. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-with-dew-of | es: y-con-el-rocío-de | fr: et-de-rosée, et-rosée | de: [ובטל], [ומטל] Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:21

טָלָא H2921 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (8×)

Spotted, speckled, variegated — of multi-colored livestock; also patched or mended, of worn garments

The verb טָלָא means to be spotted or patched, and its two senses map neatly onto two famous biblical narratives. In its Qal passive participle, it describes the spotted and speckled livestock in Jacob's shrewd bargain with Laban (Gen 30:32-39), where טָלוּא appears alongside נָקֹד ('speckled') and עָקֹד ('streaked') to denote the variegated animals that would become Jacob's wages. In Ezek 16:16 it describes the gaudy, multicolored shrines of idolatry. Its Pual participle appears once in the Gibeonite deception (Josh 9:5), where 'patched sandals' serve as props in an elaborate ruse — the same root that names colorful animal markings now describes threadbare repairs on worn-out shoes.

1. spotted, speckled, variegated (Qal passive: of animals) (7×) Spotted, speckled, or variegated in color — used as a Qal passive participle describing animals with multicolored markings. All seven occurrences cluster in the Jacob-Laban livestock narrative (Gen 30:32, 33, 35, 39; 31:10, 12), where the spotted goats and sheep are paired with 'speckled' (נָקֹד) and 'streaked' (עָקֹד) animals. Ezek 16:16 extends the image to gaily-colored high-place shrines. Spanish 'manchadas/manchados' ('spotted/stained') and German 'gefleckten' ('speckled') confirm the color-pattern meaning across traditions. SPOTTED SPECKLED en: and-spotted, and-the-spotted, multi-colored | es: de-colores, y-las-manchadas, y-los-manchados | fr: et-le-spotted, et-spotted, tacher | de: [טלאות], und-die-gefleckten, und-gefleckt Gen 30:32; Gen 30:33; Gen 30:35

2. patched, mended (Pual: of garments) (1×) Patched, mended — describing garments or shoes that have been repaired with patches, a Pual intensive-passive participle. Used once in Josh 9:5 to describe the Gibeonites' deceptive disguise: they wore 'patched sandals' (נְעָלוֹת מְטֻלָּאוֹת) to feign a long journey and trick Joshua into a treaty. Spanish 'y remendadas' ('and patched/mended') captures the sense precisely. The semantic bridge from 'spotted' to 'patched' lies in the visual similarity — both involve irregular pieces of contrasting material on a surface. CLOTHING AND DRESS en: and-patched | es: y-remendadas | fr: et-patched | de: und-patched Josh 9:5

טָלֶה H2922 N-mp (1×)

lambs, young sheep; specifically tender or nursling lambs

A masculine plural noun appearing only in Isaiah 40:11 in a tender image of God as shepherd. The Lord 'will gather the lambs in his arms' and 'gently lead those that are nursing.' These are the most vulnerable members of the flock—young, dependent, needing special care. The word emphasizes their tenderness and need for protection. This single occurrence makes the image of divine care intensely pastoral and intimate, contrasting with the cosmic scale of Isaiah 40's opening verses.

(1×) Isaiah 40:11 uses this term in one of Scripture's most beloved pastoral images, depicting God carrying lambs close to his heart. The Spanish diminutive 'little lambs' and the consistent translation across languages emphasize the animals' youth and vulnerability. The metaphor assures exiles that God will tenderly care for the weakest members of his people. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: lambs | es: los-corderitos | fr: [טלאים] | de: [טלאים] Isa 40:11

טְלָאִים H2923 Prep-b (1×)
in Telaim; geographic location where Saul mustered troops
A place name appearing only in 1 Samuel 15:4, where King Saul gathered his army before attacking the Amalekites. The location is probably identical to 'Telem' mentioned elsewhere. The name's etymology is uncertain, possibly related to 'lambs' or 'young animals,' though this is speculative. The site served as a mustering point for military campaigns, suggesting it was large enough to assemble substantial forces. The precise location is now unknown, though it was somewhere in Judah's territory.

(1×) This geographic name appears in the narrative of Saul's incomplete obedience regarding the Amalekites. The consistent transliteration 'Telaim' across languages (English, Spanish, French, German) indicates recognition as a proper place name. The site's function as a military assembly point suggests it was a significant location in Saul's kingdom, though its exact location is now lost. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: in-Telaim | es: en-Telaim | fr: dans-Telaim | de: in-Telaim 1Sam 15:4

טָלֶה H2924 N-msc (2×)
lamb, young sheep
This term designates a young lamb, particularly one still nursing. In 1 Samuel 7:9, Samuel offered a suckling lamb as a whole burnt offering during Israel's crisis with the Philistines, emphasizing the sacrifice's completeness and purity. Isaiah 65:25 envisions the messianic age when wolf and lamb will feed together peacefully, overturning natural predatory patterns. The word appears cognate across Semitic languages (Aramaic talya for lamb/youth, Arabic for young gazelle or lamb), suggesting both youthfulness and vulnerability. The plural form talayim appears only in Isaiah 40:11, where God shepherds the lambs gently.

(2×) The two singular occurrences demonstrate the lamb's dual function: sacrificial and symbolic. 1 Samuel 7:9 specifies a nursing lamb (taleh chalab), emphasizing its tender age and unblemished status for whole burnt offering. Isaiah 65:25 uses the lamb to represent vulnerability and innocence in the eschatological vision where predator and prey coexist peacefully. The broader Semitic background connects this to youth and tenderness generally (Aramaic talya can mean youth, Syriac boy/girl), though biblical usage focuses on the young ovine. Spanish cordero, French agneau preserve the specific lamb identification. LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: and-the-lamb, lamb-of | es: cordero, y-el-cordero | fr: [וטלה], agneau-de | de: Lamm-von, [וטלה] 1Sam 7:9; Isa 65:25

טַלְטֵלָה H2925 N-fs (1×)
hurling, violent throwing; forceful propulsion through the air
A noun appearing only in Isaiah 22:17, where the Lord warns a corrupt official that he will be 'hurled' or thrown violently. The phrase uses an intensive verbal construction with this noun: 'hurling you with a hurling, O man.' Some scholars prefer to re-divide the Hebrew words to create an absolute infinitive instead, but the traditional reading emphasizes the force and violence of divine judgment. This single occurrence makes the image of being thrown like a projectile a vivid picture of God's active removal of the unworthy.

(1×) Isaiah 22:17 uses this term in a pronouncement of judgment against Shebna, a royal steward. The Spanish 'hurling' and the translations across languages capture the violent force of being thrown or cast away. The intensive construction ('hurling with a hurling') emphasizes the certainty and power of God's judgment—Shebna will be forcefully removed from his position. THROWING AND CASTING en: hurling | es: arrojando | fr: [טלטלה] | de: [טלטלה] Isa 22:17

טָלַל H2926 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjImperf-3ms | 3mse (1×)
to roof, cover over; place timbers or covering over a structure
A Piel verb appearing only in Nehemiah 3:15, describing the reconstruction of Jerusalem's walls. Shallum 'built and roofed' the Fountain Gate, completing the structure by adding protective covering. The verb is an Aramaic loan-word, reflecting the post-exilic context where Aramaic influence was strong. The act of roofing represents the final, protective stage of construction—not just rebuilding walls but making them functional. This single occurrence captures the thoroughness of Nehemiah's restoration project.

(1×) Nehemiah 3:15 uses this verb in the detailed account of wall reconstruction, where different leaders took responsibility for different sections. The Spanish 'will roof it' and translations across languages indicate the final stage of construction—adding protective covering. The Aramaic loan-word reflects the linguistic context of post-exilic Judah, where reconstruction required both Hebrew identity and practical borrowing from surrounding cultures. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-roofed-it | es: y-la-techará | fr: [ויטללנו] | de: [ויטללנו] Neh 3:15

טָלַל H2927 V-Hifil-Imperf-3fs (1×)
to have shade, find shelter; be covered or protected from sun
A Haphel (Aramaic Hiphil) verb appearing only in Daniel 4:12 (Aramaic 4:9), describing the beasts finding shade under Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree. The imagery is of a tree so vast that animals shelter beneath its branches. This represents the king's empire providing protection and benefit to many peoples. The verb emphasizes the tree's function as shade-provider, making the natural world dependent on its presence. When the tree is cut down, that protective covering is lost.

(1×) Daniel 4:12 uses this verb in the symbolic vision of a cosmic tree representing Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom. The Spanish 'sheltered themselves' and English 'found shade' both capture the sense of protective covering. The tree's shade represents the empire's benefits to subject peoples—when God cuts it down, that protection vanishes, leaving the beasts exposed. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: found-shade | es: se-cobijaban | fr: couvrir | de: [תטלל] Dan 4:12

טֶלֶם H2928 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (2×)
Telem, a place in Judah's Negeb and a personal name
This name appears in two distinct contexts. As a place name, Telem designates a town in Judah's southern Negeb region (Joshua 15:24). The same location apparently appears as Telaim in 1 Samuel 15:4, where Saul musters troops before fighting Amalek, though textual scholars debate whether this should be read as Telam. Separately, Telem identifies one of the temple porters in Ezra 10:24 among those who had married foreign women during the exile. The name's meaning remains uncertain, though it may connect to furrows or ridges.

(2×) The two biblical attestations split between geographical and personal reference. Joshua 15:24 lists Telem among Judah's southernmost towns, likely the same location as 1 Samuel 15:4's Telaim (with common orthographic variation). As a personal name, Ezra 10:24 identifies a temple porter named Telem caught in the foreign marriage crisis. Wellhausen and Driver suggest reading Telam in both geographical instances, while some scholars propose identifying this site with Havilah (1 Samuel 15:7). Translators preserve it in transliteration across both uses, recognizing the dual function. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Telem | es: y-Telem | fr: [וטלם], et-Telem | de: [וטלם], und-Telem Josh 15:24; Ezra 10:24

טַלְמֹן H2929 N-proper-ms (5×)
Talmon, a Levitical gatekeeper family in postexilic Jerusalem
A proper name identifying a family of Levitical gatekeepers who served at the temple gates. Talmon appears in the list of Levites who returned from exile (Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45) alongside other gatekeeper families like Shallum and Akkub. His descendants continued serving as porters in the rebuilt Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:17; Neh 11:19; 12:25). The name endures across centuries of temple service, from the early return through Nehemiah's reforms.

(5×) A proper masculine name designating the ancestral head of a Levitical gatekeeper family in postexilic Israel. The sons of Talmon are listed among temple porters returning from Babylon (Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45) and serving at Jerusalem's gates (1 Chr 9:17; Neh 11:19; 12:25). French and German leave the name untransliterated in brackets, while Spanish 'Talmón' adds an accent following standard convention. The family consistently appears alongside Shallum and Akkub, forming a triad of gatekeeper clans. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Talmon, and-Talmon | es: Talmón, y-Talmón | fr: [וטלמן], [טלמון], [טלמן] | de: [וטלמן], [טלמון], [טלמן] 1Chr 9:17; Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45; Neh 11:19; Neh 12:25

טָמֵא H2930a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-2mp (161×)

To be or become ritually unclean, to defile, to declare unclean; spanning stative impurity, causative defilement, reflexive self-defilement, and priestly pronouncement

Tame' is the great verb of biblical purity law, governing the boundary between the clean and the unclean that structures Levitical religion from cradle to grave. Its stems unfold a complete grammar of pollution: the Qal registers the state of being unclean, the Piel actively defiles, the Niphal marks the result of having been defiled, the Hitpael captures deliberate self-contamination, and — most remarkably — a declarative Piel gives the priest authority to pronounce impurity. Arabic najasa and its derivatives mirror this system, while Korean bujeonghan and Swahili najisi show how universally cultures distinguish between being unclean and being made unclean. From corpse contamination to sexual transgression to idolatrous pollution, tame' maps the full landscape of what separates Israel from holiness.

1. Qal: be/become unclean (75×) Qal stative/inchoative: to be or become ritually unclean through contact, condition, or circumstance. Arabic yatanajjasu (to become impure) and Korean bujeonghada (to be unclean) mark the non-agentive state. The most frequent sense (75x), dominating Leviticus 11-15 where contact with carcasses (Lev 11:24-28), bodily discharges (Lev 15:18), and skin diseases trigger automatic impurity until evening or until purification. The construction 'he shall be unclean until evening' is the signature formula, appearing dozens of times in the purity code. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: becomes-unclean, he-shall-be-unclean, shall-be-unclean | es: se-hará-impuro, será-impura, será-impuro | fr: becomes-impur, devra-être-impur, il-devra-être-impur | de: er-soll-sein-unrein, soll-sein-unrein, wird-unrein Lev 11:24; Lev 11:25; Lev 11:26; Lev 11:27; Lev 11:28

2. Piel factitive: defile, make unclean (37×) Piel factitive: to defile or make unclean, actively causing the defilement of a person, place, or thing. Arabic yunajjisu (to pollute, causative) and Korean deoreopida (to defile) mark the agentive causation. Covers a wide moral-ritual range (37x): Shechem defiling Dinah (Gen 34:5, 13, 27), Israel defiling the land through idolatry (Jer 2:7), and bloodshed contaminating the sanctuary (Lev 15:31). The shift from Qal state to Piel agency reflects the theological principle that defilement can be both suffered passively and inflicted deliberately. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: and-he-defiled, and-they-defiled, defile | es: Contaminad, Y-profanó, contaminaron | fr: [לטמאו], devenir-impur, et-devenir-impur | de: [לטמאו], er-hat-verunreinigte, er-verunreinigt-hatte Gen 34:5; Gen 34:13; Gen 34:27; Lev 11:44; Lev 15:31

3. Nifal: become defiled (19×) Niphal reflexive/medio-passive: to become defiled, to be found in a state of defilement. Arabic tanajjasa (reflexive Form V) confirms the middle-voice orientation. Appears 19 times, frequently in the context of sexual defilement (Num 5:13-14, the sotah ordeal, where the question is whether a wife 'has been defiled') and national apostasy (Lev 18:24, where the nations 'became defiled' through their practices). The Niphal registers the completed result rather than the ongoing state (Qal) or the active cause (Piel). DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: I-am-defiled, and-be-defiled, and-she-is-defiled | es: fue-contaminada, fuiste-contaminada, me-he-contaminado | fr: [נטמאת], devenir-impur, elle-était-souilla | de: [נטמאת], du-waren-verunreinigte, sie-war-verunreinigte Lev 11:43; Lev 18:24; Num 5:13; Num 5:14

4. Hitpael: defile oneself (16×) Hitpael reflexive: to defile oneself deliberately, especially through forbidden contact or practices. Arabic yatanajjasu (reflexive) and German sich-verunreinigen capture the intentional self-contamination. Appears 16 times, predominantly in prohibitive contexts: 'do not defile yourselves' by touching the dead (Lev 11:24, 43), eating forbidden creatures (Lev 11:43), or following pagan customs (Lev 18:24, 30). The priestly legislation for Nazirites (Num 6:7) and ordinary priests (Lev 21:1-4) uses this stem to frame purity as a matter of personal choice and responsibility. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: be-defiled, defile-yourselves, he-may-defile-himself | es: fue-contaminada, os-contaminaréis, os-contaminéis | fr: devenir-impur, elle-a-été-souilla, il-devra-souiller-lui-même | de: du-soll-become-unrein, du-soll-machen-euch-selbst-unrein, er-moege-verunreinigen-sich-selbst Lev 11:24; Lev 11:43; Lev 18:24; Lev 18:30; Lev 21:1

5. Piel declarative: pronounce unclean (13×) Piel declarative-estimative: to pronounce unclean, a technical priestly act of official classification. Spanish declarar impuro and Swahili -tangaza mchafu ('announce unclean') confirm the speech-act dimension. Restricted almost entirely to Leviticus 13 (13x), where the priest examines skin conditions and either 'pronounces him unclean' (Lev 13:3, 8, 11, 15, 20) or clean. This is not causation — the priest does not make the person unclean — but authoritative diagnosis. The distinction between this declarative Piel and the factitive Piel (sense 2) is one of the finer points of Hebrew verbal semantics. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: and-shall-pronounce-unclean, and-shall-pronounce-unclean-him, as-unclean | es: como-impuro, declarar-impuro, lo-declarará-impuro | fr: comme-impur, devra-pronounce-impur-lui, et-devra-pronounce-impur | de: soll-erklaeren-unrein-ihn, und-soll-erklaeren-unrein, und-soll-erklaeren-unrein-ihn Lev 13:3; Lev 13:8; Lev 13:11; Lev 13:15; Lev 13:20

6. (1×) An isolated Pual or anomalous passive form in Ezek 4:14 where Ezekiel protests that he has never eaten anything 'defiled' — the adjective-like use describing meat that is ritually contaminated. Spanish contaminada and German unrein confirm the adjectival-stative reading. This single occurrence sits at the boundary between the verbal system and the adjective tame', functioning as a compressed reference to Ezekiel's lifelong purity observance. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: defiled | es: contaminada | fr: de-impure | de: unrein-werden Ezek 4:14

טָמְאָה H2930b V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

uncleanness; state of ritual or moral impurity

A feminine noun appearing only in Micah 2:10, where the prophet warns that the land has become defiled. 'Arise and go, for this is no place of rest, because of uncleanness that destroys.' The term refers to ethical impurity from wrongdoing, not just ritual defilement. The land itself has been polluted by injustice and oppression, making it uninhabitable for God's people. The noun form emphasizes the settled state of corruption, not just individual acts but a condition of deep defilement requiring exile.

(1×) Micah 2:10 uses this term in a prophetic oracle of judgment, commanding the people to leave their defiled land. The Spanish 'uncleanness' and French 'impure' both point to ethical rather than merely ritual defilement. The land's uncleanness comes from the people's oppression of the weak, making even the promised land a place from which they must flee. RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY

en: uncleanness | es: inmundicia | fr: impure | de: [טמאה] Mic 2:10

טָמֵא H2931 Conj-w (88×)

Unclean; ritually impure or morally defiled, the opposite of tahor (clean/pure)

Tame' is the adjective describing what is ritually or morally unclean in Israel's purity system. It classifies animals forbidden as food (Lev 11:8), persons rendered impure by disease, bodily discharge, or contact with the dead (Lev 13–15; Num 19), and conditions of moral defilement such as Isaiah's 'unclean lips' (Isa 6:5). The term stands in constant opposition to tahor (clean), and this binary structures much of Levitical legislation. Translations consistently distinguish this concept: Spanish 'impuro,' French 'impur,' German 'unrein' — each preserving the ritual-legal connotation of a state requiring purification.

1. ritually unclean, ceremonially impure (78×) Split from sense 100335. Criteria: Ceremonial impurity according to Levitical purity laws; applies to animals (dietary prohibitions, Lev 11:8), bodily discharges (Lev 13-15), corpse contamination (Num 19), requiring prescribed purification rituals en: is-unclean, unclean | es: impura, impuro, impuros | fr: est-impur, impur | de: ist-unrein, unrein Lev 5:2

2. morally defiled, spiritually unclean (10×) Split from sense 100335. Criteria: Metaphorical or moral defilement; spiritual pollution not tied to ritual purification systems; Isaiah's 'unclean lips' (Isa 6:5), prophetic condemnations of moral corruption en: and-to-the-unclean, and-unclean, defiled-of | es: como-inmundo, de-inmundo, e-impuro | fr: comme-impur, de-מטמא, et-impur | de: [טמאת], und-unrein, unrein Job 14:4; Eccl 9:2; Isa 6:5; Isa 35:8

טֻמְאָה H2932 Prep-m / N-fsc / 3mp (36×)

Uncleanness, impurity; ritual defilement or moral corruption rendering one unfit for sacred contact

The abstract noun for the state of being impure, covering the full spectrum of biblical defilement. In Leviticus and Numbers it denotes ritual uncleanness from bodily discharges, contact with the dead, skin disease, or other sources that bar a person from the sanctuary (Lev 5:3, 7:20-21, 14:19). In the prophets, especially Ezekiel, it extends to moral and spiritual corruption—idolatry, bloodshed, and covenant unfaithfulness that defile the land and people (Ezek 22:15, 36:25, 39:24). Zechariah 13:2 uses it in the striking phrase 'spirit of uncleanness,' connecting impurity to false prophecy. German 'Unreinheit' mirrors the Hebrew abstraction precisely.

ritual or moral uncleanness (36×) The state of being ritually or morally impure, rendering a person, object, or place unfit for sacred contact. The Levitical usage covers bodily contamination —discharges (Lev 15), corpse contact (Num 19:13), and dietary violations (Lev 7:20-21). The prophetic extension applies to idolatry and covenant betrayal (Ezek 36:25, 29). Lamentations 1:9 uses it of Jerusalem's moral degradation. German 'Unreinheit' and Spanish 'impureza' both capture the abstract quality, while French paraphrases with contextual renderings. RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY
en: and-his-uncleanness, as-uncleanness-of, from-uncleannesses-of | es: como-impureza-de, de-impurezas-de, e-impureza-suya | fr: comme-uncleanness-de, dans-uncleanness-de, de-uncleannesses-de | de: Unreinheit, Unreinheit-ihr, Unreinheit-von Lev 5:3; Lev 7:20; Lev 7:21; Lev 14:19

טָמַהּ H2933 V-Nifal-Perf-1cp (1×)

to be regarded as unclean, considered stupid; be stopped up or dull

A disputed verb appearing only in Job 18:3 in the Niphal, where Bildad protests Job's attitude: 'Why are we regarded as unclean in your sight?' The verb's root and meaning are uncertain—it may derive from a root meaning 'stopped up' (Aramaic), or it may be a variant spelling of the word for 'unclean.' Ancient versions and modern scholars are divided. Either reading works: Job's friends feel either ceremonially degraded or intellectually dismissed as 'stupid' by Job's arguments. The context is a heated debate where respect has broken down.

(1×) Job 18:3 uses this verb in Bildad's offended response to Job's critiques of his friends' counsel. The Spanish 'we are unclean' favors the ritual reading, while commentators also suggest 'we are regarded as stupid' or 'stopped up.' The textual uncertainty reflects the emotional heat of the debate—Job's friends feel insulted, whether ceremonially or intellectually. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS
en: we-are-regarded-unclean | es: somos-inmundos | fr: נטמינו | de: [נטמינו] Job 18:3

טָמַן H2934 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (31×)

To hide or conceal in the ground or a secret place; to bury, embed; passively, to be hidden; substantively, hidden treasures.

Taman is a wonderfully physical verb — its core image is of hands pressing something down into earth, sand, or straw to conceal it from discovery. Unlike kachad (which hides information) or satar (which hides persons), taman almost always involves a tangible object buried or embedded in a material medium. Jacob buries the foreign gods under the oak at Shechem (Gen 35:4); Moses hides the Egyptian's body in the sand (Exod 2:12); Achan's stolen silver is found buried in his tent (Josh 7:21-22). The Psalms and Proverbs extend this into the language of traps: enemies 'hide' a net or snare for the righteous (Ps 35:7-8; 140:5). The Arabic cognate tamara ('to bury, hide') confirms the earthy, physical character of this word, and the Aramaic teman preserved the related sense of 'keeping safe, storing away.'

1. hide, conceal actively (18×) Active concealment by hiding something in a physical location — the dominant sense at 18 occurrences. The subject deliberately places an object out of sight: Rahab hides the spies under flax stalks on the roof (Josh 2:6), the Arameans bury looted treasure in the field (2 Kgs 7:8), and the wicked hide snares and nets for the righteous (Ps 9:15; 31:4; 35:7; 140:5; 142:3). Jeremiah is told to hide his linen belt by the Euphrates (Jer 13:4-7). Spanish esconder and French cacher cover this well, though the Hebrew specifically implies physical embedding rather than merely putting out of sight. Job 31:33 uses the infinitive construct litmon to describe hiding transgressions 'in one's bosom' — extending the physical-concealment metaphor to guilt. HIDING AND CONCEALING
en: I-had-hidden-it, I-have-hidden, and-I-hid-it | es: Escondieron-, esconder, escondieron | fr: cacher, et-cacher, et-elle-cacha-eux | de: [לטמן], er-hid, haben-verborgen Josh 2:6; 2Kgs 7:8; Job 31:33; Ps 9:15

2. be hidden (stative) (5×) Stative condition of being hidden — 5 occurrences using the Qal passive participle tamun/temunah to describe something already in a state of concealment. Job 3:16 likens himself to a 'hidden' stillborn; Job 18:10 warns that a rope is 'hidden' in the ground for the wicked; Job 20:26 declares that fire is 'stored up' (hidden) for the wicked's treasures. Spanish escondido and German verborgen both capture the resultative state. Josh 7:21-22 uses this form for the stolen goods 'hidden' in Achan's tent, discovered upon digging. HIDING AND CONCEALING
en: are-hidden, hidden, is-hidden | es: Escondida, escondido, escondidos | fr: cacher, il-était-caché, sont-caché | de: [טמון], es-war-verborgen, sind-verborgen Josh 7:21; Josh 7:22; Job 3:16; Job 18:10; Job 20:26

3. bury, embed in ground (5×) Burial or embedding specifically in the earth or sand — 5 occurrences where the emphasis falls on the ground as the medium of concealment. Gen 35:4 has Jacob burying idols and earrings under the oak; Exod 2:12 has Moses burying the Egyptian in the sand. Job 40:13 commands 'bury them in the dust together,' and Prov 19:24 and 26:15 describe the sluggard who 'buries' his hand in the dish. The Arabic cognate tamara ('to bury') and French ensevelir both select burial-specific vocabulary here, distinguishing this from general hiding. The Proverbs usage is darkly humorous — the lazy man has literally 'buried' his hand in food and cannot be bothered to bring it back to his mouth. HIDING AND CONCEALING
en: and-buried, and-he-hid-him, buries | es: Entiérralos, Esconde, y-escondió | fr: cacher, cacher-eux, et-ensevelit | de: [טמן], [טמנם], und-er-verbarg-ihn Gen 35:4; Exod 2:12; Job 40:13; Prov 19:24; Prov 26:15

4. hidden thing or place (2×) Substantivized participle denoting hidden things or treasures — 2 occurrences where the passive participle functions as a noun. Deut 33:19 speaks of 'treasures hidden (temune) in the sand,' part of Moses' blessing on Zebulun and Issachar — possibly referring to glass-making materials or trade goods from the coastal sands. Job 40:13 uses batamon ('in the hidden place') for the realm of the dead. Spanish tesoros de and French tresors de both treat these as 'treasures of' constructions, confirming the nominal function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-the-hidden-place, treasures-of | es: en-lo-oculto, escondidos-de | fr: cacher, treasures-de | de: [בטמון], treasures-von Deut 33:19; Job 40:13

5. hide oneself (reflexive) (1×) Reflexive self-concealment in the Nifal — a single occurrence at Isa 2:10 where the imperative commands people to 'hide yourself' in the rock from the terror of the LORD. Spanish escondete and French se cacher both use reflexive forms. This sole Nifal occurrence is syntactically distinct from the Qal active (sense 1) because the subject is both agent and patient — one hides oneself rather than hiding an object. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-hide | es: y-escóndete | fr: et-cacher | de: und-verbergen Isa 2:10

טֶנֶא H2935 Art / N-ms (4×)

A basket used to carry agricultural produce, especially firstfruits and harvested goods.

Denotes a basket specifically for carrying agricultural products. It appears in the firstfruits ceremony, where the worshipper places produce in the basket and presents it before the Lord (Deut 26:2, 4). In the blessings and curses of Deuteronomy 28:5, 17, it is paired with the kneading bowl as a symbol of daily provision — blessed or cursed. Spanish 'canasta' and the multilingual consensus on 'basket' confirm this as a common, utilitarian container rather than a specialized ritual vessel.

(4×) A basket for carrying agricultural products, particularly produce and firstfruits. In Deuteronomy 26:2, 4 it holds the firstfruits brought to the sanctuary; in 28:5, 17 it stands parallel to the kneading bowl as a marker of everyday sustenance under blessing or curse. Spanish 'canasta,' French 'basket,' and German 'basket' all converge on a simple, functional container. The term likely denotes a woven receptacle of modest size, practical for transporting harvested goods from field to altar. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-a-basket, the-basket, your-basket | es: en-canasta, la-canasta, tu-canasta | fr: dans-un-basket, le-basket, ton-basket | de: dein-basket, der-basket, in-ein-basket Deut 26:2; Deut 26:4; Deut 28:5; Deut 28:17

טָנַף H2936 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (1×)

to soil, defile; make dirty or ritually impure

A Piel verb appearing only in Song of Songs 5:3, where the beloved woman hesitates to open the door for her lover: 'I have washed my feet—how can I soil them?' The verb captures her momentary reluctance to get her clean feet dirty by walking to the door. The word is an Aramaic form used poetically, adding exotic flavor to the love poem. This single occurrence makes mundane domesticity—clean feet, reluctance to re-dirty them—part of the playful, teasing rhetoric of courtship.

(1×) Song of Songs 5:3 uses this verb in the beloved's coy response to her lover's knocking. The Spanish 'I will soil them' and French 'would I soil them?' both capture her rhetorical question about re-dirtying her freshly washed feet. The Aramaic loan-word contributes to the Song's distinctive poetic register, mixing languages as freely as it mixes metaphors of love. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: shall-I-soil-them | es: los-ensuciaré | fr: les-salirais-je? | de: [אטנכם] Song 5:3

טָעָה H2937 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (1×)

to lead astray, cause to wander; make someone deviate from the right path

A Hiphil verb appearing only in Ezekiel 13:10, condemning false prophets: 'They have led my people astray.' The causative form emphasizes that these prophets actively caused wandering rather than passively allowing it. The root suggests straying or deviation, both physical and spiritual. False prophecies of peace when there is no peace caused the people to wander from truth and trust in lies. This single occurrence makes prophetic deception a form of deliberate misdirection, leading the flock away from the true shepherd.

(1×) Ezekiel 13:10 uses this verb in God's indictment of false prophets who proclaim 'Peace' when judgment is imminent. The Spanish 'made to err' and translations across languages emphasize the causative action—these prophets actively led people astray. Their lies caused spiritual wandering, making the people miss the path of repentance and walk toward destruction while believing they were safe. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: they-misled | es: hicieron-errar | fr: errer | de: [הטעו] Ezek 13:10

טָעַם H2938 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (11×)

To taste food or drink literally; by extension, to perceive or discern through experience.

A sensory verb rooted in the physical act of tasting – putting something to the mouth and perceiving its flavor. Most of its occurrences describe literal eating in small quantity, as when Saul's army was forbidden to taste food (1 Sam 14:24) or when David refused to taste bread during mourning (2 Sam 3:35). The Psalmist invites worshippers to 'taste and see that the LORD is good' (Ps 34:8), blending the literal and experiential. One striking figurative use appears in Proverbs 31:18, where the valiant woman 'tastes' – perceives by experience – that her merchandise is profitable. Spanish 'gustar/probar' and French 'gouter' preserve both the literal and evaluative dimensions.

1. taste (literal) (10×) The literal, gustatory act of tasting food or drink – perceiving flavor by putting something in the mouth. The ten occurrences span narrative and poetic contexts: Jonathan tasting honey (1 Sam 14:29, 43), David refusing bread (2 Sam 3:35), Barzillai asking whether he can still taste what he eats (2 Sam 19:35), the Ninevites commanded neither to taste food nor water (Jonah 3:7), and the famous invitation of Psalm 34:9 to 'taste and see.' French 'gouter' and Spanish 'gustar/probar' uniformly confirm the sensory meaning. TASTE EXPERIENCE

en: I-taste, I-tasted, can-taste | es: Gustad, Probar, gusta | fr: certainement-goûtant, goûta, goûter | de: [טעם], [יטעמו], gewiss-tasting 1Sam 14:24; 1Sam 14:29; 1Sam 14:43; 2Sam 3:35

2. perceive / discern (figurative) (1×) A figurative extension from physical tasting to mental perception or discernment through experience. In Proverbs 31:18 the industrious woman 'tastes' (perceives) that her trade is good – evaluating by firsthand acquaintance rather than by tongue. Spanish 'siente' (she feels/perceives) captures the shift from gustatory to experiential knowing. This metaphorical leap from palate to judgment is well attested across Semitic languages, where the same root yields both 'taste' and 'discernment/decree' (cf. Aramaic טְעַם, Akkadian ṭēmu). TASTE EXPERIENCE

en: she-perceives | es: Siente | fr: טעמה | de: [טעמה] Prov 31:18

טְעֵם H2939 Prep-b / N-msc (4×)

To taste; in the Pael stem, to feed or cause to eat (Aramaic); also used of being under the influence of wine.

An Aramaic verb appearing in Daniel, carrying the basic sense of tasting and, in the causative Pael stem, feeding someone. Nebuchadnezzar is fed grass like an ox during his madness (Dan 4:25, 32; 5:21), while in Daniel 5:2 Belshazzar acts 'under the influence of' (literally 'in the taste of') wine. The Spanish 'bajo el efecto de' (under the effect of) neatly captures this idiom. The range from literal feeding to metaphorical tasting of wine shows the word's sensory richness.

(4×) To taste or to feed; in the causative sense, to cause someone to eat. In Daniel 4:25, 32 and 5:21, it describes Nebuchadnezzar being fed grass during his period of madness — the Spanish 'le hacían comer' (they made him eat) captures the causative force. In Daniel 5:2, the prepositional idiom 'in the taste of wine' means under the influence of wine, as Spanish 'bajo el efecto de' makes explicit. The verb thus spans both literal feeding and the metaphorical experience of tasting or being affected by what one consumes. TASTE EXPERIENCE

en: they-fed-him, they-will-feed, while-tasting | es: bajo-el-efecto-de, le-hacían-comer, te-harán-comer | fr: [בטעם], [יטעמון], [יטעמונה] | de: [בטעם], [יטעמון], [יטעמונה] Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:21

טַעַם H2940 Conj-w / N-msc (13×)

Taste, flavor; figuratively, discernment, good judgment; also behavior or manner; in late usage, a royal decree.

Begins with the tongue and ends at the throne. In its most concrete sense, טַעַם is the flavor of manna — 'like wafers made with honey' (Exod 16:31). From physical taste, it extends naturally to the faculty of discernment: Abigail is praised for her טַעַם, her good sense (1 Sam 25:33), and the elders lose theirs when God strips it away (Job 12:20). David famously 'changed his behavior' (שִׁנָּה טַעְמוֹ) before Achish, feigning madness (1 Sam 21:14). In Jonah 3:7, the word takes on its Aramaic coloring as a royal decree — a late development that links taste, judgment, and authoritative decision in a single semantic arc.

1. taste, flavor (6×) Physical taste or flavor — the sensory quality of food perceived by the palate. Manna tasted like wafers with honey (Exod 16:31) and like fresh oil (Num 11:8). Job 6:6 asks rhetorically whether tasteless food can be eaten without salt. Jeremiah 48:11 uses taste figuratively of Moab's wine whose flavor has not changed. Spanish 'sabor' and French 'goût' map directly to this primary sense. Ps 119:66 bridges toward the figurative, asking God to teach 'good taste' — that is, judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-taste, his-taste, its-taste | es: como-sabor-de, discernimiento, sabor | fr: [טעמו], comme-taste-de, et-son-goût | de: Befehl, [טעמו], sein-taste Exod 16:31; Num 11:8; Job 6:6; Ps 119:66

2. discernment, good sense (4×) Discernment, good sense, or the faculty of wise judgment. Abigail's טַעַם in 1 Sam 25:33 is her perceptive counsel that prevented David from bloodshed. Prov 11:22 warns that beauty without discretion is like a gold ring in a pig's snout, and Prov 26:16 describes the sluggard as wiser in his own eyes than seven who answer with טַעַם — with good sense. Job 12:20 shows God removing discernment from the trusted. Spanish 'discreción' and 'sensatez' capture this well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-sensible-answer, and-discernment-of, discretion | es: discreción, sensatez, tu-juicio | fr: et-טעם, ton-discernment, טעם | de: Befehl, dein-discernment, und-Befehl 1Sam 25:33; Job 12:20; Prov 11:22; Prov 26:16

3. behavior, conduct (2×) Outward behavior or manner of conduct, especially as perceived by others. In 1 Sam 21:14, David 'changed his behavior' (וַיְשַׁנּוֹ אֶת טַעְמוֹ) before the Philistine king, acting insane to save his life. The superscription of Ps 34:1 references the same event. Here טַעַם has moved from inner judgment to its visible expression — how one presents oneself. Spanish 'su conducta' pinpoints this external, observable dimension. CONDUCT WAY LIFE
en: his-behavior | es: su-conducta, su-juicio | fr: goût, son-behavior | de: sein-behavior 1Sam 21:14; Ps 34:1

4. decree, command (1×) A decree or official command, reflecting Aramaic influence. In Jonah 3:7, the proclamation goes out מִטַּעַם הַמֶּלֶךְ — 'by the decree of the king.' This is the same usage found extensively in Daniel and Ezra in Aramaic passages. The semantic journey from 'taste' to 'decree' passes through 'judgment': a king's taste for how things should be becomes his authoritative ruling. Spanish 'por decreto de' and German 'Befehl' (command) capture this late, official sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: by-the-decree-of | es: por-decreto-de | fr: goût | de: von-Befehl Jonah 3:7

טְעֵם H2941 N-msd (5×)

taste, judgment, discretion; official report or decree (Aramaic)
An Aramaic noun with a remarkably wide semantic range, moving from the physical sense of taste to abstract judgment, official report, and royal decree. In Daniel 5:2, it means literal taste – while savoring wine. In Daniel 2:14 it denotes discretion and tact. As an administrative term, it refers to an official report sent to the king (Ezra 5:5) and to decrees issued by royal or divine authority (Dan 3:10; Ezra 6:14; 7:23). Context alone determines which sense is active.

(5×) Taste in the literal, sensory sense – the experience of savoring food or wine. Occurs in Daniel 5:2 where Belshazzar, 'in the taste of the wine' (i.e., while enjoying it), orders the temple vessels brought forth. Spanish 'cuenta' and French 'raison' sometimes blur this sense, but the context of feasting makes the physical meaning clear. This is the root meaning from which the metaphorical extensions derive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: account, decree, the-decree-of | es: cuenta, decreto-de, el-decreto-de | fr: [טעם], [טעמא], raison | de: Befehl, [טעמא] Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 6:14; Ezra 7:23; Dan 6:2

טְעֵם H2942 Conj-w / N-ms (24×)

Decree, command; regard, heed; discretion, judgment (Aramaic, in Ezra-Daniel)
The Aramaic noun te'em (טְעֵם) appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel, where it serves the administrative vocabulary of the Persian and Babylonian courts. Its dominant sense is 'decree' or 'command' — the official edicts that drive the narrative of Ezra's temple correspondence (Ezra 4:8-21; 5:3-17; 6:1-14; 7:13-23) and the royal decrees of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius in Daniel (Dan 3:10, 29; 4:6; 6:26). In the idiom sim te'em ('set regard'), it means to pay heed or show deference (Dan 3:12; 6:13). A single use in Daniel 2:14 preserves the root meaning of 'discretion' or 'good judgment,' when Daniel responds to the captain of the guard with counsel and te'em.

1. decree, command (21×) A royal or governmental decree, edict, or command — the dominant sense covering the great majority of occurrences in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. The Ezra correspondence revolves around decrees to stop and then to authorize temple construction (Ezra 4:8-21; 5:3-17; 6:1-14; 7:13-23), while Daniel records Nebuchadnezzar's decree about the golden image (Dan 3:10, 29) and Darius's edict about the lions' den (Dan 6:26). Spanish decreto/orden, French commandement/ordre, and German Befehl uniformly render the bureaucratic, authoritative force of Persian imperial administration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-decree, decree | es: decreto, ley, orden | fr: commandement, ordre | de: Befehl Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:19; Ezra 4:21

2. regard, heed (2×) Regard, heed, or deference — used in the Aramaic idiom sim te'em al ('set regard upon'), meaning to pay attention to or show proper respect for a command or authority. In Daniel 3:12, the three Jewish youths are accused of not 'paying regard' to Nebuchadnezzar's decree, and in Daniel 6:13 Daniel is charged with showing no 'regard' for Darius's interdict. Spanish atención and the idiomatic construction distinguish this from the decree itself: te'em here names the mental act of heeding rather than the thing commanded. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: regard | es: atención | fr: commandement | de: Befehl Dan 3:12; Dan 6:13

3. discretion, judgment (1×) Discretion, prudence, or sound judgment as a faculty of mind. Daniel 2:14 describes Daniel responding to Arioch, captain of the king's guard, with 'counsel and discretion' (eta u-te'em). This preserves the root sense of the Hebrew cognate ta'am ('taste, discernment') and points to the word's sensory-cognitive etymology: just as the palate discriminates flavors, the mind discriminates wise from foolish action. Spanish prudencia and the singular occurrence mark this as the word's most basic meaning, from which the administrative senses developed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-discretion | es: y-prudencia | fr: et-commandement | de: und-Befehl Dan 2:14

טָעַן H2943 V-Qal-Imp-mp (1×)

to load; place cargo or burdens on pack animals
A Qal imperative appearing only in Genesis 45:17, where Joseph (through Pharaoh) commands his brothers to 'load your beasts' with grain and provisions for the journey back to Canaan. The verb captures the practical logistics of ancient travel—donkeys and camels bearing goods across long distances. This single occurrence makes a simple command part of the dramatic reconciliation story: the same brothers who sold Joseph now receive his abundant provision, symbolized by heavily laden animals returning to their father.

(1×) Genesis 45:17 uses this imperative in Pharaoh's generous instructions to Joseph's brothers. The Spanish 'load' and German 'load' both preserve the straightforward command to pack their animals with Egyptian abundance. The act of loading represents the reversal of fortune—from famine to feast, from rejection to reconciliation, symbolized in beasts of burden carrying blessing back to

Jacob. BURDENS AND LOADS
en: load | es: cargad | fr: load | de: beladet Gen 45:17

טָעַן H2944 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mpc (1×)
pierced, run through; those struck with a sword or spear
A Pual participle appearing only in Isaiah 14:19, describing corpses in a mass grave: 'those pierced by the sword.' The passive form emphasizes the victims' condition rather than the act of piercing. The context is the king of Babylon's disgraceful burial, thrown out like refuse among the war-slain. The participle functions as a substantive —'the pierced ones'—making violent death into a category of person. This single occurrence captures the grim aftermath of battle through the image of bodies pierced and discarded.

(1×) Isaiah 14:19 uses this participle in a taunt against Babylon's fallen king, denied honorable burial and cast among common war victims. The Spanish 'pierced by' and translations across languages emphasize the violent manner of death. The phrase 'those pierced with the sword' became almost formulaic for battlefield casualties, and the Babylonian king's corpse is numbered among them without distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: pierced-of | es: traspasados-de | fr: [מטענ] | de: [מטענ] Isa 14:19

טַף H2945 Prep-b (42×)
little ones, small children — collective noun for the young dependents of a household or community Taf is a collective noun for small children, those who toddle and take quick, tripping steps — a vivid etymological image. It never appears in construct state or plural form, always designating children as a group. In the Pentateuch, taf regularly appears in lists of dependents alongside women and livestock when a community is on the move (Gen 46:5; Num 31:9). Deuteronomy uses it to mark those too young to have witnessed the exodus (Deut 1:39). The term can be gender-specific when modified: zakar battaf ('male among the little ones,' Num 31:17) and hattaf bannashim ('young girls,' Num 31:18). The translations consistently capture this: Spanish 'ninos,' French 'enfants,' German 'die Kleinen.'

little ones, young children (42×) A collective term for young children and dependents, distinct from fighting or laboring adults. Appears in inventory-style enumerations — 'their little ones, their wives, and their livestock' (Gen 34:29; 46:5) — and in contexts specifying non-combatants (Num 31:9, 17-18). Never pluralized, never in construct. Judges 18:21 and 2 Samuel 15:22 confirm its use beyond the Pentateuch. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: and-child, and-children, and-the-children | es: Pero-vuestros-niños, Vuestros-niños, niños | fr: [וטף], enfants, enfants-leur | de: [וטף], [טף], dein-klein-die Gen 34:29; Gen 43:8; Gen 45:19; Gen 46:5; Gen 47:12

טָפַח H2946 V-Piel-Perf-1cs (2×)
to spread out, extend; to nurture, dandle
This verb appears only in Piel form, with two related but distinct applications. In Isaiah 48:13, God's hand spread out the heavens, parallel to founding the earth—a creation image of divine extension and establishment. In Lamentations 2:22, the verb denominates from tebach (palm, span), meaning to carry on the palms or dandle, parallel to "brought up" or "reared." The semantic connection lies in extension: spreading out the heavens or spreading the arms to nurture infants. Arabic cognates suggest overflowing abundance, while Aramaic points to spreading or extending.

(2×) The two contexts demonstrate semantic breadth within the extension concept. Isaiah 48:13 uses cosmic imagery: God's hand spread out (extended, established) the heavens in creation, paired with founding the earth. Lamentations 2:22 shifts to maternal imagery: the children I dandled (carried on my palms, nurtured) were destroyed by the enemy, parallel to "brought up" (ribbiti). The connection between spreading the heavens and dandling children lies in the action of extension and support—whether cosmic fabric or infant on the arms. The denominative function from tebach (palm, handspan) clarifies the nurturing sense. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: I-nursed, spread-out | es: crié, extendió | fr: [טפחה], [טפחתי] | de: [טפחה], [טפחתי] Isa 48:13; Lam 2:22

טֶפַח H2947 N-mp (4×)
A handbreadth (unit of linear measure, roughly 3 inches); also an architectural term, possibly a coping or ledge.
Refers primarily to a handbreadth, an ancient unit of measurement equal to the width of four fingers (roughly 7–8 cm). It describes the thickness of Solomon's molten sea (1 Kgs 7:26; 2 Chr 4:5) and, in a poignant metaphor, the brevity of human life — 'you have made my days a few handbreadths' (Ps 39:5). In 1 Kings 7:9 it appears as an architectural term, possibly denoting a coping or projecting ledge. The Spanish 'palmo' and 'cornisa' reflect this dual usage nicely.

(4×) A handbreadth as a unit of linear measure. Used to describe the thickness of Solomon's bronze sea — one handbreadth thick (1 Kgs 7:26; 2 Chr 4:5). In Psalm 39:5 the plural 'handbreadths' becomes a metaphor for the painful brevity of life. Spanish 'palmo' captures this measuring sense directly. The unit was approximately the width of four fingers, around 7–8 centimeters. SPAN MEASUREMENT UNIT
en: a-handbreadth, handbreadth, handbreadths | es: las-cornisas, palmo, palmos | fr: [טפח], corniche, handbreadth | de: [טפח], der-coping, handbreadth 1Kgs 7:9; 1Kgs 7:26; 2Chr 4:5; Ps 39:5

טֹפַח H2948 N-ms (5×)
a handbreadth, a unit of linear measure equal to roughly four finger-widths
A unit of linear measurement based on the width of the palm, approximately 7.4 centimeters or three inches. It appears in descriptions of sacred furniture and architecture: the border around the tabernacle table (Exod 25:25; 37:12), the addition distinguishing the long cubit from the common cubit in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40:5; 43:13), and the width of ledges on the sacrificial tables (Ezek 40:43). Every occurrence involves precise sacred measurements.

(5×) A handbreadth (approximately 7.4 cm / 3 inches), a standard unit of linear measure used exclusively in sacred architectural and furnishing contexts. It specifies the width of the rim around the tabernacle's table of showbread (Exod 25:25; 37:12) and the extra measure added to the common cubit to form the long cubit in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40:5; 43:13), as well as the ledge width on sacrificial tables (Ezek 40:43). Multilingual uniformity is notable: Spanish 'palmo,' French 'handbreadth,' German 'Handbreite' all preserve the body-based metrology. SPAN MEASUREMENT UNIT
en: a-handbreadth, and-handbreadth, handbreadth | es: palmo, palmo-menor, un-palmo | fr: [וטפח], [טפח], handbreadth | de: Handbreite, [וטפח], [טפח] Exod 25:25; Exod 37:12; Ezek 40:5; Ezek 40:43; Ezek 43:13

טְפָחִים H2949 N-mp (1×)
tender care, dandling; the nurturing attention given to infants
A plural abstract noun appearing only in Lamentations 2:20, in a horrific question about mothers eating 'the children of their tender care'—infants they have lovingly nursed and dandled. The word captures the intimate physical affection of a mother holding and bouncing her baby, making the reversal in siege conditions even more appalling. This single occurrence uses the language of gentlest nurture to intensify the horror of famine-driven cannibalism during Jerusalem's destruction.

(1×) Lamentations 2:20 uses this term in one of Scripture's most disturbing images, asking whether women should eat babies they have tenderly cared for. The Spanish question mark and uncertain translations across languages reflect the term's rarity and the passage's difficulty. The noun 'tender care' or 'dandling' emphasizes the loving physical attention that makes the siege's outcome unbearable to contemplate. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS
en: of-tender-care | es: de-crianza? | fr: [טפחים] | de: [טפחים] Lam 2:20

טָפַל H2950 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (3×)

to plaster over, smear, coat (often with deceit)

To smear or plaster over something, often with negative connotations of covering up or falsifying. The verb appears primarily in Job and Psalms, describing plastering falsehood over truth or adding transgression upon transgression. The imagery involves coating something to hide its true nature, like plastering a wall to conceal defects. Job accuses his friends of being 'plasterers of falsehood,' whitewashing lies to make them appear as truth. The Psalmist describes the arrogant smearing lies over him. The verb captures deception through covering and falsification through coating.

(3×) To plaster over, smear, or coat (especially with falsehood). Job 13:4 condemns his friends as 'plasterers of falsehood,' covering truth with lies. Job 14:17 (difficult text) may speak of plastering over transgression, sealing it up. Psalm 119:69 complains 'the arrogant have smeared falsehood over me,' coating the psalmist's reputation with lies. The consistent association with deceit and covering reflects the verb's negative moral overtones. Spanish forjar/embadurnar, French forger, and English plaster/smear all attempt to capture this coating imagery. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-you-plaster-over, have-smeared, plasterers-of- | es: Forjaron, embadurnadores-de, y-añades | fr: et-inventer, forger, inventer | de: [וחטפל], [טפלי], haben-smeared Job 13:4; Job 14:17; Ps 119:69

טִפְסָר H2951 N-ms (2×)

scribe, marshal, military officer (Assyrian loan-word)

This term, borrowed from Assyrian dupšarru (tablet-writer), designates high military officials with scribal skills. In Jeremiah 51:27, God commands to appoint a marshal against Babylon, suggesting a military coordinator or chief-of-staff. Nahum 3:17 describes Nineveh's marshals who flee like locusts, listing them among military and administrative elites. The Assyrian background points to officers skilled in writing who managed military logistics and record-keeping, combining administrative and martial functions. These were not mere clerks but high-ranking officials essential to ancient Near Eastern military operations.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in oracles against Mesopotamian powers, reflecting the term's Assyrian origin. Jeremiah 51:27 commands appointing a tipsar against Babylon, suggesting a military marshal or coordinator who would organize the attack. Nahum 3:17 lists Nineveh's marshals (tapsarayk, plural with suffix) among the city's officials who abandon her in crisis, camping like locusts then flying away. The Assyrian loan-word dupšarru/dupsarru (tablet-writer, scribe) indicates these were literate military administrators, essential for organizing campaigns and managing supplies. Spanish comandante/oficiales captures the military officer dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-commander, and-your-marshals | es: comandante, y-oficiales-tuyos | fr: [טפסר], et-officier | de: [וטפסריך], [טפסר] Jer 51:27; Nah 3:17

טָפַף H2952 Conj-w / V-Qal-InfAbs (1×)

to take quick steps, trip along; walk with short, affected steps

A Qal infinitive absolute appearing only in Isaiah 3:16, mocking the affected gait of Jerusalem's elite women: they 'walk along tripping' or 'taking mincing steps.' The verb captures a self-consciously dainty, attention-seeking manner of walking. Combined with other details —outstretched necks, flirting eyes, tinkling anklets—this creates a satirical portrait of vanity and self-display. This single occurrence makes an exaggerated feminine walk into a symbol of spiritual pride and coming judgment.

(1×) Isaiah 3:16 uses this infinitive absolute in a prophetic satire of wealthy Jerusalem women's ostentatious behavior. The Spanish 'with little steps' and translations across languages capture the affected, mincing gait. The verb suggests both physical manner (short, quick steps) and moral character (vain self-display), making how one walks a revelation of inner pride deserving judgment. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-with-their-feet | es: y-a-pasitos | fr: [וטפף] | de: [וטפף] Isa 3:16

טְפַר H2953 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3fs (2×)

nail, claw (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun designates nails or claws, appearing in Daniel's accounts of Nebuchadnezzar's beast-like transformation and in the vision of the fourth beast. Daniel 4:30 describes the king's nails growing like bird claws during his period of insanity. Daniel 7:19 depicts the terrifying fourth beast with iron teeth and bronze claws. The term parallels Hebrew tzipporen, sharing the basic meaning across Aramaic and Syriac. The imagery emphasizes bestiality and predatory power—human descent to animal state or supernatural beasts with enhanced destructive capacity.

(2×) Both contexts use claw imagery to convey bestial transformation or nature. Daniel 4:30 [4:33 English] describes Nebuchadnezzar's nails growing like eagles' (bird claws) during his seven-year bovine madness, marking his complete animalization. Daniel 7:19 arms the fourth apocalyptic beast with bronze claws alongside iron teeth, creating a hybrid predator of supernatural destructive power. The textual note indicates a ketiv-qere variant in 7:19 (plural forms), showing scribal care in preserving the text. Syriac and Targum cognates confirm the nail/claw meaning across Aramaic dialects. FLESH AND BODY

en: and-his-nails, and-its-claws | es: y-garras-de-ella, y-sus-uñas | fr: et-ongle | de: [וטפרוהי], [וטפריה] Dan 4:33; Dan 7:19

טָפַשׁ H2954 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

to be gross, become insensitive; have a heart that is fat and unresponsive

A Qal perfect verb appearing only in Psalm 119:70, where the psalmist contrasts himself with the wicked: 'Their heart is gross like fat, but I delight in your law.' The verb uses the metaphor of physical fatness for spiritual insensibility—a heart so encased in fat it cannot feel or respond. The image recalls prophetic warnings about hearts becoming hardened or heavy. This single occurrence makes bodily grossness a vivid picture of moral and spiritual numbness, the opposite of the sensitive, Torah-delighting heart.

(1×) Psalm 119:70 uses this verb in a contrast between the psalmist's responsive heart and the wicked's insensitive one. The Spanish 'became gross' and translations across languages emphasize the fat-encased, unfeeling condition. The metaphor draws on ancient physiology where the heart's literal fatness was thought to impede its function, making this a powerful image of spiritual unresponsiveness to God's word. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: is-gross | es: Se-engrosó | fr: être-stupide | de: ist-gross Ps 119:70

טַפַּת H2955 N-proper-fs (1×)

Taphath; personal name, daughter of Solomon

A feminine personal name appearing only in 1 Kings 4:11, identifying one of Solomon's daughters who married Ben-Abinadab, one of the king's district governors. The name's etymology is uncertain, though some suggest it relates to 'drops' or 'ornament.' She represents Solomon's strategic use of marriage to bind his administrative officials to the royal family. This single occurrence makes her one of the few Solomon's daughters named in Scripture, significant primarily for the political alliance her marriage created.

(1×) This personal name appears in the list of Solomon's district governors and their connections to the royal house. The consistent transliteration 'Taphath' (English, Spanish, French, German) reflects its status as a proper name. Her marriage to Ben-Abinadab illustrates how Solomon used family ties to consolidate administrative loyalty across his kingdom. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Taphath | es: Tafat | fr: Taphath | de: Taphath 1Kgs 4:11

טָרַד H2956 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

continual, constant, pursuing (participle used as adjective)

This participial form from the root tarad (pursue, chase) functions

adjectivally to describe something continuous or constant. In both Proverbs passages (19:13, 27:15), it modifies "dripping" to create the image of a continuous leak—one drop pursuing another relentlessly. The metaphor depicts a contentious woman as persistently irritating as water dripping without ceasing. The verb root in Arabic means to pursue or prolong, while Aramaic emphasizes continuation. The participial form captures ongoing, uninterrupted action that wears down over time.

(2×) Both occurrences in Proverbs create identical metaphors comparing a quarrelsome wife to constant dripping. Proverbs 19:13 pairs this with a foolish son as twin domestic calamities, while 27:15 develops the image further by noting the impossibility of restraining such a woman (like restraining wind). The phrase deleph tored literally means "a dripping that pursues"—each drop chasing the next in unbroken sequence. This continuous quality makes the comparison effective: not a single drip but relentless, unending irritation. Spanish continua and French/German equivalents capture this unceasing quality central to the domestic strife imagery. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5492 WITH 4 SENSES

en: constant, continual | es: continua | fr: טרד ,טורד | de: [טורד], [טרד] Prov 19:13; Prov 27:15

טָרַד H2957 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (4×)

To drive away, chase out; used of Nebuchadnezzar's expulsion from human society during his madness.

An Aramaic verb meaning to drive away or chase out, used exclusively in Daniel to describe Nebuchadnezzar's banishment from human company during his period of insanity. The passive form ('he was driven') appears alongside the active ('they will drive you'), painting a vivid picture of royal humiliation. Spanish 'fue echado' (he was cast out) and 'te echarán' (they will cast you out) capture both the passive and active voices effectively, while French 'chasser' zeroes in on the core idea of expulsion.

(4×) To drive away or expel someone from their place or community. All four occurrences appear in Daniel (4:25, 32, 33; 5:21) and describe Nebuchadnezzar being driven from human society to live among wild animals. The active participle in Daniel 4:25, 32 carries a prophetic force ('they will drive you'), while the passive perfect in 4:33 and 5:21 reports the fulfilled judgment ('he was driven'). Spanish 'echar' (to cast out) and French 'chasser' (to chase away) both highlight the forcible nature of the expulsion. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING

en: he-was-driven, they-will-drive | es: fue-echado, te-echarán | fr: chasser | de: [טרדין], [טריד] Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:21

טֶרֶם H2958 Prep-b / Adv (1×)

[ketiv] before, not yet; temporal adverb indicating precedence (variant spelling)

This is the Ketiv (written) form appearing only in Ruth 3:14, a variant spelling of the common adverb meaning 'before' or 'not yet.' The Qere (read) form is the standard 'terem.' Boaz and Ruth rise early, 'before one could recognize another,' maintaining discretion about their nighttime encounter on the threshing floor. The variant spelling doesn't change meaning, just reflects different scribal traditions. This single occurrence shows the textual variants that preserve both written and traditional reading forms.

(1×) Ruth 3:14 uses this variant form in the narrative of Boaz's careful protection of Ruth's reputation. The bracketed notation in translations acknowledges this is a Ketiv variant of the standard word for 'before.' The phrase 'before dawn' or 'before recognition' emphasizes the discretion both characters showed, rising early to avoid scandal before their honorable intentions could be fulfilled in marriage. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: [antes] | fr: [cétiv] | de: [[בטרום]] Ruth 3:14

טָרַח H2959 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to burden, load; weigh down or impose a load upon

A Hiphil imperfect verb appearing only in Job 37:11, in Elihu's speech about God's control of weather: 'He loads the clouds with moisture.' The verb captures the image of clouds being burdened or weighted down with water until they release it as rain. The Aramaic root suggests toil or burden, here applied to the meteorological cycle. This single occurrence makes divine weather-control into an act of loading and unloading, as if God were a porter packing clouds with cargo they must deliver.

(1×) Job 37:11 uses this verb in Elihu's discourse on God's majesty displayed in storms and weather. The Spanish 'loads' and translations across languages preserve the image of clouds being weighed down or burdened with moisture. The metaphor makes meteorology into logistics—God loads the clouds with water-cargo, which they transport and deliver as rain across the earth. LABOR AND TOIL

en: he-loads | es: carga | fr: יטריח | de: [יטריח'] Job 37:11

טֹרַח H2960 N-msc / 2mp (2×)

burden, trouble, wearisome load

This noun designates a burdensome weight or trouble that exhausts the bearer. Moses asks in Deuteronomy 1:12 how he can bear the burden of the people, parallel to their weight and quarrels—expressing leadership exhaustion. Isaiah 1:14 has God himself declaring that Israel's festivals have become a burden upon him, using identical language: he is weary of bearing them. The term emphasizes not just physical weight but the wearying, exhausting quality of sustained burden, whether leading a fractious people or enduring empty ritual.

(2×) The two passages create structural parallels in their burden language. Deuteronomy 1:12 has Moses protesting, "How can I bear alone your burden (torach), your load (massa), and your strife (riv)?"—three terms for the exhausting weight of leadership. Isaiah 1:14 echoes this phraseology: God's soul hates Israel's festivals; "they have become upon me a burden (latorach); I am weary (nilaeti) of bearing (neso)." The verbal echo (weary of bearing) links both passages. Spanish carga/vuestra carga and French trouble preserve the burden imagery central to both leadership exhaustion and divine weariness. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: burden, your-trouble | es: como-carga, vuestra-carga | fr: [לטרח], ton-trouble | de: [לטרח], dein-Kummer Deut 1:12; Isa 1:14

טָרִי H2961 Adj-fs (2×)

fresh, raw, not yet dried or healed

This adjective describes something in its fresh, unprocessed state—not yet dried, hardened, or healed. Judges 15:15 specifies that Samson found a fresh jawbone of a donkey, still moist and flexible rather than dry and brittle, making it effective as a weapon. Isaiah 1:6 uses it for fresh or raw wounds that have not yet been treated, pressed out, bound up, or soothed—emphasizing their untreated, actively painful state. The term captures the quality of recentness and the absence of time's hardening or healing effects.

(2×) The two contexts apply freshness to different domains but share the core sense of unprocessed recentness. Judges 15:15 specifies a fresh donkey jawbone (lechi-chamor teriyyah), still moist and strong enough to serve as Samson's weapon against a thousand Philistines—in contrast to a dried, brittle old bone that would shatter. Isaiah 1:6 describes Judah's wounds as fresh/raw (makkah teriyyah), not yet healed or even treated, emphasizing ongoing injury and neglect. Some interpreters read Isaiah's wounds as festering rather than simply fresh, but the basic sense remains: not yet processed by time or treatment. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: fresh | es: fresca | fr: [טריה], fresh | de: [טריה], fresh Judg 15:15; Isa 1:6

טֶרֶם H2962 Conj-w (57×)

Before, not yet; a temporal adverb indicating precedence in time or the unrealized state of an expected event.

Terem is a distinctive Hebrew adverb with no known cognate in other Semitic languages, making it a uniquely Hebrew way of framing temporal precedence. It typically governs an imperfect verb to say 'before X happened' — as in Genesis 2:5, where plants were 'not yet' in the earth. The word can also carry interrogative force, as when Pharaoh is asked 'do you not yet know that Egypt is ruined?' (Exod 10:7). A single occurrence in Psalm 5:5 may extend the sense spatially to 'before' as 'in the presence of,' though most scholars read even that temporally.

1. before (temporal) (51×) Temporal adverb or conjunction meaning 'before' an event occurs. This is the overwhelming use (51 of 57 occurrences), governing imperfect verbs to establish sequence: 'before they lay down' (Gen 19:4), 'before he had finished speaking' (Gen 24:15). Spanish antes de que and French devant consistently render this temporal precedence. The word structures some of Scripture's most vivid narrative moments, marking the precise instant before a scene changes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before | es: antes-de, antes-de-que | fr: devant | de: bevor, vor Gen 2:5; Gen 19:4; Gen 24:15; Gen 24:45

2. not yet (5×) Adverb meaning 'not yet,' indicating that an expected action or state has not been realized. In Exodus 9:30 Moses tells Pharaoh's servants 'you do not yet fear the LORD,' and in 1 Samuel 3:7 the boy Samuel 'did not yet know the LORD.' German nicht noch and French pas encore capture the suspended expectation. This sense often appears in dialogue, lending urgency — the gap between what should be and what is not yet. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: and-not-yet, not-yet | es: Acaso-todavía, antes-de, todavía | fr: et-pas-cependant, pas-cependant, pas-encore | de: nicht-doch, nicht-noch, und-nicht-doch Exod 9:30; Exod 10:7; 1Sam 3:3; 1Sam 3:7

3. before (spatial, in front of) (1×) A rare spatial extension meaning 'before' in the sense of 'in the presence of,' attested only in Psalm 5:5, where the wicked shall not stand terem the psalmist's eyes (or before God). Spanish delante de and German vor support a spatial reading here. Most commentators, however, treat this as still fundamentally temporal, making this a debated marginal sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before | es: delante-de | fr: à-annoncer | de: vor Ps 5:5

טָרַף H2963 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (25×)

Tear, rend, seize as prey; be torn; provide food, feed

A visceral Hebrew verb evoking the tearing action of wild beasts on their prey. Jacob cries out upon seeing Joseph's bloodied coat: 'tarof toraf Yosef'—'Joseph has surely been torn to pieces' (Genesis 37:33). It appears in similes of lions, wolves, and bears, and extends metaphorically to God Himself tearing and then healing (Hosea 5:14, 6:1). The passive forms describe the victim's perspective—the animal found torn in the field (Exodus 22:13). Surprisingly, the Hiphil at Proverbs 30:8 shifts entirely: 'feed me my appointed bread,' connecting prey-seizure to provision. Aramaic cognate teraf and Arabic tarafa ('to depasture') confirm the semantic bridge between predation and feeding.

1. tear, rend, prey upon (18×) Qal active: to tear, rend, or prey upon—the core predatory sense. Used literally of wild beasts (Genesis 49:27, Deuteronomy 33:20) and figuratively of enemies (Job 16:9, 18:4) and God Himself (Hosea 5:14, Psalm 50:22). The image is raw and kinetic: claws and teeth ripping flesh. French 'dechirer' and Spanish 'desgarrar' preserve the violent physical force. TEARING AND RENDING

en: I-tear-you-in-pieces, and-tears, and-tore | es: a-despedazar, desgarraba, desgarrar | fr: déchirer, et-déchirer, et-tears | de: [אטרף], [וטרף], [ויטרף] Gen 49:27; Exod 22:13; Deut 33:20; Job 16:9; Job 18:4

2. be torn, be preyed upon (6×) Nifal and Qal passive: to be torn apart, to be the victim of predation. Genesis 37:33 and 44:28 use the emphatic infinitive absolute construction 'tarof toraf' to express certainty and grief. Exodus 22:13 applies it to livestock law: if an animal is torn, the torn remains serve as evidence. The passive voice centers the victim rather than the predator. TORN MAULED RIPPED

en: he-was-torn, is-torn, it-is-torn | es: despedazado, despedazar, es-despedazado | fr: [טרף'], cela-est-déchiré, déchiré | de: [טרף'], es-ist-zerrissen, zerrissen Gen 37:33; Gen 44:28; Exod 22:13

3. feed, provide food (1×) Hiphil causative at Proverbs 30:8: 'hatrifeni lehem hukki'—'feed me my appointed bread.' Here the predatory root is domesticated into provision and sustenance. The semantic bridge runs through the idea of seizing food: what the lion tears for its cubs becomes what God provides for His servant. Spanish 'alimentame' and the Aramaic cognate sense of 'seize provisions' confirm this extension. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: feed-me | es: aliemntame | fr: הטריפני-moi | de: [הטריפני] Prov 30:8

טֶרֶף H2964 Prep-m / N-ms (23×)

Prey seized by a predator; food or provision; a fresh leaf or foliage

In the mouth of the lion, this noun carries the raw violence of the hunt: torn flesh, seized prey, the spoil dragged back to the den. Genesis 49:9 and Nahum 2:13 wield it as a figure for conquest and plunder. Yet the same word softens into everyday sustenance when Proverbs 31:15 pictures the capable woman rising to secure food for her household, and Psalm 111:5 celebrates God as the one who gives provision to those who fear him. A single occurrence in Ezekiel 17:9 extends the root's tearing motion to plucked leaves, fresh foliage torn from a vine.

1. prey, torn flesh (19×) Prey torn by a predator, especially a lion, and by extension the violent spoil or plunder taken by conquerors. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish presa, French proie, German Raub all converge on the imagery of seized flesh. Jacob blesses Judah as a lion crouching over prey (Gen 49:9), and Nahum indicts Nineveh as a city of prey (Nah 3:1). FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-prey, as-prey, for-prey | es: de-presa, la-presa, por-la-presa; | fr: [טרף], [טרפו], de-proie | de: Raub, [טרף], [טרפו] Gen 49:9; Num 23:24; Job 4:11; Job 24:5; Job 29:17

2. food, provision (3×) Food or provision in a domesticated, non-violent sense, extending the idea of what sustains life from hunted prey to general nourishment. Psalm 111:5 pairs it with covenant faithfulness, Proverbs 31:15 with the diligent household manager, and Malachi 3:10 with the storehouse of blessing. Spanish alimento and German Speise confirm the shift from predation to provision. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food | es: Alimento, alimento | fr: proie | de: Raub, Speise Ps 111:5; Prov 31:15; Mal 3:10

3. leaf, fresh foliage (1×) A fresh leaf or green foliage, attested once in Ezekiel 17:9 where the construct plural describes leaves plucked from a transplanted vine. The semantic link to the root idea of tearing or plucking is still visible, though the referent has moved from animal flesh to plant life. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaves-of | es: hojas-de | fr: proie | de: [טרפ'] Ezek 17:9

טָרָף H2965 Adj-ms (1×)

fresh-plucked, freshly torn off; newly detached from a plant

An adjective appearing only in Genesis 8:11, describing the olive leaf the dove brought back to Noah: 'a freshly plucked olive leaf.' The word emphasizes the leaf's newness—it was just picked, still green and fresh, proving vegetation had emerged from the flood waters. The Aramaic cognate suggests a fresh leaf still vital with life. This single occurrence makes botanical freshness the signal of earth's renewal, the first tangible evidence that dry land and living plants had survived the deluge.

(1×) Genesis 8:11 uses this adjective in the famous scene of the dove returning to the ark with evidence of receding flood waters. The consistent translation 'freshly plucked' (English, Spanish, French, German) emphasizes the leaf's recent removal from a living tree. The fresh green olive leaf became an enduring symbol of peace and new life emerging from judgment. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: freshly-plucked | es: arrancada | fr: freshly-plucked | de: frisch-gepflückt Gen 8:11

טְרֵפָה H2966 Art / N-fs (9×)

An animal torn by wild beasts; torn flesh forbidden as food under Mosaic dietary law.

A feminine noun designating an animal killed by predators, making its flesh ritually unfit for consumption. The legal prohibition appears repeatedly: Exodus 22:31 forbids eating flesh torn in the field, Leviticus 7:24 and 17:15 pair it with nebelah (an animal that dies naturally), and Ezekiel 44:31 extends the ban to priests. Jacob's complaint to Laban — 'what was torn I bore the loss of it myself' (Gen 31:39) — reveals the economic reality behind the law: a shepherd was ordinarily responsible for predation losses. Nahum 2:13 uses it metaphorically for Nineveh as a lion's den full of torn prey. Spanish 'despedazada' ('torn to pieces') and French 'dechire' ('torn') both emphasize the violence of the animal's death.

torn animal, carrion from predation (9×) An animal torn by wild beasts, or the flesh resulting from such predation — ritually forbidden as food. The term appears in legal contexts paired with nebelah ('carcass that dies naturally') as jointly prohibited (Lev 7:24; 17:15; 22:8; Ezek 4:14; 44:31). Exodus 22:13, 31 establish the pastoral and dietary regulations. Jacob's protest to Laban (Gen 31:39) reveals the shepherd's liability for losses to predation. Nahum 2:13 uses it metaphorically of Nineveh-as-lion filling its lair with torn prey. Spanish 'despedazada' and French 'dechire' both foreground the violent manner of death that renders the flesh unclean. TORN MAULED RIPPED

en: a-torn-animal, and-a-torn-animal, and-torn | es: Despedazada, de-lo-desgarrado, despedazada | fr: déchiré, et-nourriture, et-un-déchiré-animal | de: Zerrissenes, [וטרפה], [טרפה] Gen 31:39; Exod 22:13; Exod 22:31; Lev 7:24; Lev 17:15

טַרְפֶּלָיֵא H2967 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tarpelites; ethnic or administrative group in Persian period

A gentilicial or administrative term appearing only in Ezra 4:9, in a list of groups opposing the rebuilding of Jerusalem's temple. The identification is uncertain—some see this as an ethnic designation, others as an official title meaning something like 'beyond the river' in Persian administrative language. The Greek translations vary, suggesting ancient uncertainty about this group's identity. They were among the coalition of opponents writing to King Artaxerxes to stop the temple construction.

(1×) Ezra 4:9 includes this term in a catalog of opposition groups petitioning the Persian king against Jerusalem's restoration. The transliterations across languages acknowledge uncertainty about whether this is an ethnic name or an official title. Some scholars connect it to Persian words meaning 'trans-river officials,' reflecting the administrative structure of the Persian Empire's western provinces. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tarfelaye | es: los-tarpelitas | fr: [טרפליא] | de: [טרפליא] Ezra 4:9

יָאַב H2968 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (1×)

to long for, desire; have intense yearning or craving

A Qal perfect verb appearing only in Psalm 119:131, where the psalmist declares passionate desire for God's commands: 'I longed for your commandments.' The verb is an Aramaic loan-word used in this late psalm to express intense yearning or craving. The image is physical—the psalmist pants or gasps with desire (the previous line), then declares this deep longing. This single occurrence makes spiritual desire as visceral as thirst or hunger, borrowing Aramaic vocabulary to intensify Hebrew devotion.

(1×) Psalm 119:131 uses this verb in the psalmist's declaration of love for Torah. The Spanish 'yearned' and translations across languages capture the intense desire. The Aramaic loan-word adds emotional intensity to this acrostic psalm's expression of Torah devotion—the psalmist doesn't just obey or study God's commands, but longs for them with physical yearning. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: I-longed | es: anhelé | fr: désirer | de: ich-longed Ps 119:131

יְאָה H2969 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

to be fitting, appropriate; be suitable or proper for something

A Qal perfect verb appearing only in Jeremiah 10:7, in a hymnic declaration of God's uniqueness: 'Fear is fitting for you, O King of the nations.' The verb declares what is appropriate or suitable, what ought to be. The Aramaic form adds solemn weight to this rhetorical question comparing YHWH to worthless idols. This single occurrence makes fittingness or propriety a theological category—reverence for God is not just commanded but inherently appropriate, befitting his nature and status.

(1×) Jeremiah 10:7 uses this verb in a confession of YHWH's incomparability among the gods. The Spanish 'corresponds' and translations like 'it is due' capture the sense of appropriateness or fittingness. The late Aramaic form intensifies the rhetorical force—fear of the true King is not arbitrary but intrinsically fitting, the only proper response to his majesty. PROPRIETY AND FITTINGNESS

en: it-is-due | es: corresponde | fr: [יאתה] | de: [יאתה] Jer 10:7

יַאֲזַנְיָהוּ H2970 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jaazaniah — a Hebrew personal name meaning 'Yahweh hears,' borne by several men in the late monarchic period.

A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh hears,' borne by at least four different individuals in the late Judean monarchy and exile. One was a military leader who came to Gedaliah at Mizpah after the fall of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 25:23). Another was an elder caught in secret idolatry in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 8:11). A Rechabite leader bears the name in Jeremiah 35:3, and a corrupt civic leader appears in Ezekiel 11:1. The name is transliterated consistently across languages — 'Jaazaniah' in English and Spanish, with minor variations in French and German.

(4×) Jaazaniah, a personal name meaning 'Yahweh hears,' used for several distinct individuals. In 2 Kings 25:23, a Judean military officer who submitted to Gedaliah after Jerusalem's fall. In Ezekiel 8:11, a son of Shaphan seen leading elders in clandestine incense worship. In Jeremiah 35:3, a son of Jeremiah the Rechabite. In Ezekiel 11:1, a son of Azur among those giving wicked counsel in Jerusalem. English 'Jaazaniah' and Spanish 'Jaazanias' reflect standard transliterations of this well-attested late monarchic name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jaazaniah, Yaazanyah, and-Jaazaniah | es: Jaazanias, Yaazanyah, y-Yaazanias | fr: Jaazania, [יאזניה], et-Jaazania | de: [ויאזניהו], [יאזניה], und-Yaazanyahu 2Kgs 25:23; Jer 35:3; Ezek 8:11; Ezek 11:1

יָאִיר H2971 N-proper-ms (9×)

Jair, a personal name meaning 'he enlightens'; borne by a Manassite conqueror, a Gileadite judge, and Mordecai's father.

The name Jair means 'he enlightens' or 'may God give light,' and it belongs to at least three distinct figures in Scripture. The most prominent is Jair son of Manasseh, who conquered tent-villages in Gilead and named them Havvoth-Jair ('villages of Jair,' Num 32:41; Deut 3:14; 1 Kgs 4:13). A second Jair served as a minor judge in Gilead whose thirty sons rode thirty donkeys and held thirty cities (Judg 10:3-5) — a memorable image of decentralized prosperity. A third Jair appears as the father of Mordecai in Esther 2:5. Spanish 'Jair/Jair' and French 'Jair/Yair' preserve the name across traditions.

Jair (personal name) (9×) The personal name Jair (ya'ir, 'he enlightens'), borne by several biblical figures: (1) Jair son of Manasseh who captured villages in Gilead, renaming them Havvoth-Jair (Num 32:41; Deut 3:14; Josh 13:30; 1 Kgs 4:13; 1 Chr 2:22-23); (2) a minor judge in Gilead whose thirty sons controlled thirty cities (Judg 10:3-5); and (3) the father of Mordecai (Esth 2:5). The theophoric meaning 'he gives light' connects to the Hebrew root '-w-r. Spanish 'Jair' and French 'Jair/Yair' transliterate consistently across language traditions. JAIR PERSONAL NAME

en: Jair, Ya'ir, Yair | es: Jair, Jaír, Y-Jair | fr: Jair, Jaïr, Yair | de: Jair, Yair, [יאיר] Num 32:41; Deut 3:14; Josh 13:30; Judg 10:3; Judg 10:5

יָאִירִי H2972 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Jairite; gentilicial designation indicating clan or regional origin
A gentilicial adjective appearing only in 2 Samuel 20:26, identifying Ira as 'the Jairite,' one of David's officials. The designation indicates clan or regional origin, probably from Jair or a place associated with that name. The precise reference is unclear—it may connect to the Jair who judged Israel, or to Havvoth-Jair in Gilead, or to another Jair family. This single occurrence makes Ira's clan identity part of his official title, suggesting regional or kinship ties mattered in David's administration.

(1×) This gentilicial term appears in the list of David's officials, where Ira the Jairite is called 'a priest to David' or 'David's chief minister.' The consistent transliteration 'Jairite' (English, Spanish, French, German) indicates recognition as a clan or regional designation. The term identifies Ira by his origin, though the exact connection to other biblical Jairs remains debated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Yairite | es: el-yairita | fr: le-Yairite | de: der-Yairite 2Sam 20:26

יָאַל H2973 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (4×)
To be foolish, act foolishly; to become a fool, showing senseless behavior through sin or lack of judgment.
A Niphal verb meaning to act foolishly or become a fool, carrying moral and intellectual weight. In Numbers 12:11, Aaron confesses that he and Miriam 'acted foolishly' in challenging Moses — the foolishness is essentially sin. Jeremiah 5:4 attributes such folly to ignorance of God's ways, while Isaiah 19:13 declares Egypt's princes 'have become fools,' having lost all sound judgment. Jeremiah 50:36 prophesies that Babylon's diviners will be exposed as fools. The Spanish 'se han enloquecido' (they have gone mad) captures the dramatic force of this intellectual and moral collapse.

(4×) To act foolishly in a way that is morally culpable — folly as sin. In Numbers 12:11, Aaron pairs this verb with 'sinned,' confessing both foolishness and transgression in opposing Moses. Jeremiah 5:4 attributes such foolish behavior to the common people's ignorance of God's ordinances. The German 'wir waren töricht' (we were foolish) captures the confessional tone. This sense emphasizes willful moral failure rather than mere intellectual deficit. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: act-foolishly, and-they-will-become-fools, they-are-foolish | es: Se-han-enloquecido, locamente-actuamos, se-enloquecieron | fr: [ונאלו], [נואלו], nous-étaient-insensé | de: [ונאלו], [נואלו], wir-waren-toericht Num 12:11; Isa 19:13; Jer 5:4; Jer 50:36

יָאַל H2974 V-Hifil-Imp-mp (19×)
Be willing, consent, be pleased to do; determine, resolve, undertake; venture, dare (with humility before a superior).
The Hiphil of ya'al captures three shades of volition — from gracious willingness through firm resolve to humble daring. In its most common use (12 occurrences), it simply means 'be willing' or 'consent': Moses was content to dwell with Jethro in Midian (Exod 2:21), and God was not willing to destroy his people (1 Sam 12:22). Spanish consentir and French consentir both mirror this willingness. But ya'al also carries a sterner note of determination: the Canaanites 'were determined' to dwell in the land despite Israel's advance (Judg 1:27, 35), and Moses 'undertook' to expound the Torah (Deut 1:5). Most memorably, Abraham twice uses the venture sense when he dares to address God: 'I have ventured to speak to the Lord, though I am but dust and ashes' (Gen 18:27, 31) — a delicate blend of boldness and self-abasement that German ich habe es gewagt ('I have dared it') captures perfectly.

1. be willing, consent, be pleased (12×) Being willing, consenting, or being pleased to do something — expressing gracious agreement or contentment to undertake an action, often with overtones of condescension or acquiescence. This dominant sense (12 occurrences) spans from Moses being 'content to dwell' with Jethro (Exod 2:21) to the Levite being 'content to stay' as a household priest (Judg 17:11), Naaman asking Gehazi to 'please accept' silver (2 Kgs 5:23), and God not being 'willing' to destroy Israel (1 Sam 12:22; 2 Kgs 5:23). Spanish consentir/quiso, French consentir, and German bereit sein/einwilligen all cluster around willing agreement. The imperative 'Be pleased!' in Judg 19:6 and 2 Sam 7:29 adds a polite-request dimension. DESIRE AND WILLING
en: and-he-was-content, and-was-content, and-would-be-willing | es: Consiente, Consíntelo, Y-consintiera | fr: [והואלת], consentir, et-il-était-content | de: [והואיל], [והוא֫ילו], [והואלת] Exod 2:21; Josh 7:7; Judg 17:11; Judg 19:6; 1Sam 12:22

2. determine, resolve, undertake (5×) Determining, resolving, or undertaking to begin a significant action — emphasizing the decisive initiation rather than mere willingness. Five occurrences mark deliberate commencements: Moses 'undertook' to expound the Torah across the Jordan (Deut 1:5), the Canaanites and Amorites 'were determined' to hold their territory (Josh 17:12; Judg 1:27, 35), and Saul 'set about' putting on David's armor (1 Sam 17:39). Spanish comenzar/quiso and the shift in several translations from 'was willing' to 'undertook' signal the added force of resolve. The distinction from sense 1 is that here the subject does not merely agree but actively initiates. BEGIN START
en: and-determined, and-he-was-willing, and-was-determined | es: Y-quiso, comenzó, y-quiso | fr: et-determined, et-il-fut-disposé, et-était-determined | de: und-determined, und-er-war-bereit, und-war-determined Deut 1:5; Josh 17:12; Judg 1:27; Judg 1:35; 1Sam 17:39

3. venture, dare (2×) Venturing or daring to do something presumptuous, carrying a nuance of humble boldness before a superior. Only 2 occurrences, but both are among the most memorable dialogues in Genesis: Abraham interceding for Sodom says, 'I have ventured to speak to the Lord, though I am but dust and ashes' (Gen 18:27), and repeats, 'Let not the Lord be angry, and I will venture to speak just once more' (Gen 18:31). Spanish he osado ('I have dared'), German ich habe es gewagt, and French j'ai osé all shift to audacity vocabulary. Abraham's self-deprecating 'dust and ashes' alongside his persistent intercession makes this a quintessential example of reverent boldness. DARE BE BOLD
en: I-have-ventured | es: he-osado | fr: Je-avoir-ventured | de: ich-habe-es-gewagt Gen 18:27; Gen 18:31

יְאֹר H2975 Prep-k / N-proper-fs (65×)
The Nile River (Egyptian loanword); by extension, any major river, stream, or irrigation canal.
Ye'or is one of the Bible's most striking loanwords — borrowed directly from Egyptian iotr/io'r ('watercourse'), surviving also in Coptic eiero. In its dominant use, it is simply the Nile: Pharaoh's dreams unfold 'by the ye'or' (Gen 41:1-3), and the plagues turn it to blood (Exod 7:20). Spanish el Rio, French le Nil, and Korean nail-gang all point to this singular great river. Yet the word also functions as a common noun for any major waterway — Ezekiel's Pharaoh boasts 'my ye'or' (29:3), and 2 Kings 19:24 speaks of 'the rivers (ye'orei) of Egypt' in a generic sense. In its most technical use, ye'or denotes the canals and irrigation channels of the Nile delta (Exod 7:19; Isa 19:6), reflecting Egypt's engineered hydrology.

1. the Nile River (47×) The Nile River as a proper noun — the great river of Egypt, center of the Exodus narrative and prophetic oracle. The 47 occurrences include Pharaoh's dream (Gen 41:1-3), the plague of blood (Exod 7:20-21), the infant Moses set among reeds (Exod 2:3), and prophetic judgment against Egypt (Isa 19:5-8). Spanish el Rio, French le Nil, German der Nil, and Arabic an-nil all treat it as a definite, singular river. The definite article (hayye'or) is standard, reflecting the loanword's quasi-proper-noun status. RIVERS AND STREAMS
en: in-the-Nile, the-Nile | es: el-Río, el-río, en-el-río | fr: dans-le-Nil, le-Nil | de: der-Nil, in-der-Nil Gen 41:1; Gen 41:2; Gen 41:3; Gen 41:17

2. river, stream (12×) A common noun meaning 'river' or 'stream,' used with possessive suffixes or in plural to denote major waterways beyond the specific Nile channel. Ezekiel 29:3 has Pharaoh declaring 'my river,' and Psalm 78:44 recalls how God 'turned their rivers to blood' — Spanish los rios, German Fluesse, and Swahili mito all render the generic plural. This includes Isaiah 7:18's 'the rivers of Egypt' as a geographic designation broader than the single Nile channel. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: his-rivers, my-river, rivers | es: los-ríos, mi-río, ríos-de | fr: Nil, canal, fleuves-de | de: Fluesse-von, Kanal, ihr-Ströme 2Kgs 19:24; Ps 78:44; Isa 7:18; Isa 37:25; Ezek 29:3

3. canal, channel, watercourse (6×) Canals, irrigation channels, or engineered watercourses, reflecting the branching delta and man-made infrastructure of Egyptian hydrology. Exodus 7:19 and 8:5 list ye'orim alongside other water features (rivers, ponds, pools), and Isaiah 19:6 predicts the 'canals' will stink. Job 28:10 uses the word for channels cut through rock. Spanish canales, French canal, and Swahili mifereji ('ditches') capture this artificial, constructed sense distinct from the natural river. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: broad, by-the-Nile, canals-of | es: arroyos, canales, canales-de | fr: Nil, canal, le-canals | de: Kanal, [בִּיאֹרִים], [יְאֹרִים] Exod 7:19; Exod 8:5; Job 28:10; Isa 19:6; Isa 33:21

יָאַשׁ H2976 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (6×)

despair, lose hope (Nifal); cause to despair, make despondent (Piel causative)

A verb expressing hopelessness and despair, most often in the Nifal stem as a participle meaning 'desperate' or 'without hope.' Jeremiah's contemporaries declare no'ash – 'it is hopeless!' (Jer 2:25; 18:12), stubbornly embracing their ruin. David calculates that Saul 'will despair of me' and stop pursuing (1 Sam 27:1). Job is addressed as a 'desperate one' whose words are wind (Job 6:26). In its single Piel occurrence, Qoheleth 'causes his heart to despair' over the futility of toil (Eccl 2:20), turning the verb causative and inward. Spanish captures the range well: 'sin esperanza' (hopeless), 'desesperado' (desperate), 'para desesperar' (to cause despair).

1. despair, be hopeless (Nifal) (5×) To despair, be without hope, give up, in the Nifal stem. The participle no'ash functions almost as an interjection in Jeremiah ('It is hopeless!' Jer 2:25; 18:12), expressing defiant fatalism. In 1 Sam 27:1, David strategically expects Saul to 'despair of' finding him. Job 6:26 addresses Job as the 'desperate one.' Spanish 'sin esperanza' and 'es inutil' capture the finality, while French 'desesperer' and English 'hopeless' convey the emotional weight. DESPAIR HOPELESSNESS

en: It-is-hopeless, and-will-despair, desperate-one | es: Es-inútil, Sin-esperanza, desesperado | fr: [נואש], désespérer, et-fera-despair | de: [נאש], [נואש], und-wird-despair 1Sam 27:1; Job 6:26; Isa 57:10; Jer 2:25; Jer 18:12

2. cause despair (Piel causative) (1×) To cause someone to despair, make despondent, in the Piel (causative) stem. Attested uniquely in Eccl 2:20, where Qoheleth deliberately causes his own heart to despair concerning all his toil. The reflexive target (his own heart) intensifies the pathos. Spanish 'para desesperar' and French 'a desesperer' both preserve the causative force, while the English 'to cause despair' makes explicit what the Hebrew Piel stem encodes grammatically. DESPAIR HOPELESSNESS

en: to-cause-despair | es: para-desesperar | fr: à-désespérer | de: [ליאש] Eccl 2:20

יֹאשִׁיָּהוּ H2977 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (53×)

Josiah — the reforming king of Judah who rediscovered the Book of the Law and purged idolatry

Yoshiyahu ('the LORD supports') was the king of Judah whose reign (640-609 BC) represents the last great spiritual revival before the Babylonian exile. His 53 occurrences span Kings, Chronicles, Jeremiah, and Zephaniah, tracing a remarkable narrative arc: crowned at age eight after his father Amon's assassination (2 Kgs 21:24-22:1), he launched sweeping religious reforms after the discovery of the Book of the Law in the Temple (2 Kgs 22:8-23:25), purging high places, destroying the altar at Bethel that had stood since Jeroboam's schism, and celebrating a Passover unequaled since the days of the judges. His death at Megiddo opposing Pharaoh Neco (2 Kgs 23:29) is lamented by Jeremiah. The name is uniformly transliterated: Spanish 'Josias,' French 'Josias,' German 'Josia.'

Josiah, king of Judah (53×) The proper name Yoshiyahu (Josiah), referring to the son of Amon who reigned as king of Judah from approximately 640 to 609 BC. Prophetically named a generation before his birth (1 Kgs 13:2), he is celebrated for the Deuteronomic reforms of 621 BC (2 Kgs 22-23) and remembered as the king who turned to the LORD with all his heart, soul, and might (2 Kgs 23:25). All 53 occurrences — including the prepositional form le-Yoshiyahu — refer to this single individual. Zechariah 6:10 mentions a returned exile of the same name, but that occurrence falls under the alternate form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Josiah, Yoshiyahu | es: Josías, Yoshiyahu | fr: Josias | de: Josia 1Kgs 13:2; 2Kgs 21:24; 2Kgs 21:26; 2Kgs 22:1; 2Kgs 22:3

אִיתוֹן H2978 Art / N-ms (2×)

entrance (Aramaic loan-word or variant)

This rare term appears in Ezekiel 40:15 as a ketiv-qere variant designating the entrance or doorway of the temple gate structure. The ketiv reads yaiton while the qere corrects to ithon, both apparently referring to the same architectural feature: the entrance opening. Scholars debate whether this is an Aramaic loan-word or a rare Hebrew variant. The context clearly indicates an entrance or doorway in Ezekiel's detailed temple measurements. Textual scholars have proposed various emendations, but the basic sense of an entrance passage remains stable across proposals.

(2×) Both references in Ezekiel 40:15 represent the same word in ketiv-qere variation, measuring the entrance of the gate structure. The verse measures from the front of the entrance gate to the front of the inner vestibule, establishing precise temple dimensions. Commentators like Comill propose reading athyon (a variant form), while Smend references grammatical discussions of the rare formation. The architectural context clarifies the meaning regardless of textual variants: this designates the entrance passage or doorway of the gate complex. Translators preserve the entrance sense across languages while noting the textual variant in apparatus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], the-entrance | es: (de-la-entrada), [de-la-entrada] | fr: entrée | de: [הָאִיתוֹן], [הִיאתוֹן] Ezek 40:15

יְאִתְרַי H2979 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jeatherai; personal name of a Levite ancestor

A personal name appearing only in 1 Chronicles 6:21 (English 6:6), in the genealogy of the Levitical musician Asaph. The name apparently corresponds to 'Ethni' in verse 41 (English verse 26) of the same chapter, representing the same individual recorded with variant spelling. Such genealogical variations are common in Chronicles' complex family lists. This single occurrence makes Jeatherai one link in the chain connecting the post-exilic Levitical singers to their ancient priestly heritage.

(1×) This personal name appears in the genealogical records establishing the legitimacy of post-exilic Levitical musicians. The transliterations vary, and the apparent equivalence with 'Ethni' in the parallel genealogy suggests textual variation in transmission. The name serves primarily to establish ancestral continuity for the temple musicians, linking them to pre-exilic Levitical families. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yeatray | es: Yeatray | fr: [יְאִתְרַי] | de: [יְאִתְרַי] 1Chr 6:21

יָבַב H2980 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3fs (1×)

to cry out shrilly, lament; make a high-pitched wailing sound

A Piel consecutive imperfect verb appearing only in Judges 5:28, where Sisera's mother 'cried out shrilly' through the window, anxiously watching for her son's return from battle. The verb captures a high-pitched, penetrating sound—somewhere between calling and lamenting. The irony is devastating: she waits for a victorious return that will never come, her shrill cries anticipating the lament they should become. This single occurrence makes maternal anxiety into a sharp, piercing sound that contrasts with the battle's brutal reality.

(1×) Judges 5:28 uses this verb in the Song of Deborah's ironic conclusion, depicting Sisera's mother waiting for a son already dead. The Spanish 'lamented' and translations capturing outcry or shrilling both fit the context. Her penetrating cry through the window embodies anxious anticipation soon to become genuine mourning, though she doesn't yet know her son lies slain by Jael's tent peg. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-she-cried-out | es: y-se-lamentó | fr: et-elle-cria-dehors | de: und-sie-schrie-heraus Judg 5:28

יְבוּל H2981 N-msc / 3fs (13×)
Produce, yield — the harvest that the earth gives from cultivated land Denotes the agricultural produce or yield that the soil brings forth, nearly always in the phrase 'the land shall give its produce' (Lev 26:4; Ezek 34:27; Zech 8:12). It appears in covenant blessings promising abundance and in covenant curses threatening barrenness (Deut 11:17; Lev 26:20). Habakkuk 3:17 narrows the term to grape harvest specifically, while Job 20:28 extends it figuratively to the 'produce' of a wicked man's house that floods away in divine judgment. The Spanish 'fruto,' French 'produit,' and German cognates all confirm the agricultural harvest meaning.

produce, yield (13×) The produce or yield of the soil (יְבוּל), referring to the harvest of cultivated land. Nearly every occurrence appears in the formula 'the land yields its produce,' whether in covenant blessing (Lev 26:4; Ps 67:6; 85:12; Ezek 34:27; Zech 8:12) or its withholding in curse (Deut 11:17; Lev 26:20; Hag 1:10). Hab 3:17 narrows it to vine-fruit, while Job 20:28 extends it metaphorically to the household 'yield' swept away in judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-produce, her-produce, its-produce | es: el-producto-de, fruto, fruto-de-ella | fr: et-son-produit, produce-de, production | de: [יבול], [יבולה], ihr-produce Lev 26:4; Lev 26:20; Deut 11:17; Deut 32:22; Judg 6:4

יְבוּס H2982 N-proper-fs (4×)
Jebus, the ancient Canaanite name for Jerusalem before David's conquest
An archaic place name identifying Jerusalem by its pre-Israelite Jebusite designation. The name appears exclusively in narratives that explicitly equate the two cities—'Jebus, that is, Jerusalem' (Judg 19:10; 1 Chr 11:4)—preserving the memory of the city's Canaanite past. Its rare use (only 4 occurrences) suggests it was already antiquarian in the biblical period, invoked to anchor Jerusalem's identity in the story of David's conquest.

(4×) The pre-Davidic name for Jerusalem, used when the text deliberately identifies the city with its Jebusite heritage. Every occurrence pairs Jebus with Jerusalem through an explanatory gloss ('Jebus, which is Jerusalem'), as in Judg 19:10–11 and 1 Chr 11:4–5. Multilingual renderings (Eng 'Yevus,' Spa 'Jebús') consistently transliterate rather than translate, reflecting its status as an opaque proper noun. JERUSALEM HOLY CITY en: Yevus | es: Jebús | fr: Yevus, [יבוס] | de: Yevus, [יבוס] Judg 19:10; Judg 19:11; 1Chr 11:4; 1Chr 11:5

יְבוּסִי H2983 Art / N-proper-ms (41×)
Jebusite — gentilic noun for the Canaanite people who inhabited Jerusalem (Jebus) before David's conquest Yevusi is the gentilic adjective and collective noun for the Jebusites, a Canaanite people descended from Canaan's third son (Gen 10:16). They appear 41 times, almost always within the formulaic list of pre-Israelite peoples — 'the Canaanite, the Hittite, the Amorite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite' — that runs through the Pentateuch and into the Deuteronomistic History. The Jebusites' unique importance is their control of Jerusalem, which they held as the city of Jebus until David captured it by means of the water shaft (2 Sam 5:6-8; 1 Chr 11:4-6). Araunah (Ornan) the Jebusite, from whom David purchased the threshing floor that became the Temple site, represents the last named individual of this people (2 Sam 24:16-24; 1 Chr 21:15-28). Zechariah 9:7 envisages the Jebusite's absorption into Judah, like the clans that became part of Israel.

Jebusite (gentilic noun) (41×) The gentilic noun Yevusi, designating the Canaanite population of Jebus (pre-Davidic Jerusalem). Most occurrences fall within the stereotyped list of displaced peoples in divine land-promises (Gen 15:21; Exod 3:8, 17; 23:23; 33:2; 34:11; Deut 7:1; 20:17) and conquest summaries (Josh 9:1; 11:3; 12:8; 24:11). The specific Jebusite connection to Jerusalem emerges in Judges 19:10-11, 2 Samuel 5:6-8, and the Araunah/Ornan threshing-floor narrative (2 Sam 24:16-24; 2 Chr 3:1). Spanish 'jebuseo,' French 'Jebusien,' German 'Jebusiter' all render the gentilic form consistently. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-the-Jebusite, and-the-Yevusite, the-Yevusi | es: el-jebuseo, y-al-jebuseo, y-el-jebuseo | fr: Jébusite, et-le-Jebusite, et-le-Jébusien | de: [הַיְבוּסִי], [הַיְבֻסִי], und-der-Jebusiter Gen 10:16; Gen 15:21; Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17; Exod 13:5

יִבְחָר H2984 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Ibhar: son of David born in Jerusalem
A son of David born after David became king in Jerusalem. The name means 'He (God) chooses,' reflecting the theophoric naming pattern common in Israelite culture. Ibhar appears in lists of David's sons in both Samuel and Chronicles, among those born in Jerusalem as opposed to those born in Hebron. Beyond these genealogical references, nothing else is known about him. His inclusion in the lists confirms his legitimacy as a royal heir, though he played no recorded role in succession politics or Israel's history.

(3×) Ibhar, a son of David born in Jerusalem. 2 Samuel 5:15 lists him among sons born to David in Jerusalem after the capital moved from Hebron. 1 Chronicles 3:6 and 14:5 provide parallel references in David's genealogy. The name's meaning 'He chooses' suggests divine election or thanksgiving for birth. The absence of further narrative about Ibhar reflects the obscurity of most royal sons who didn't feature in succession events. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Spanish Yibjar/Yivjar, French/English Ibhar/Yivhar) maintain the proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yivchar, and-Yivhar | es: Y-Yibjar, Y-Yivjar | fr: [ויבחר], et-Yivhar | de: [ויבחר], und-Yivhar 2Sam 5:15; 1Chr 3:6; 1Chr 14:5

יָבִין H2985 N-proper-ms (8×)
Jabin ('he discerns'), the dynastic name of Canaanite kings of Hazor defeated by Israel.
A proper name meaning 'he understands' or 'he is intelligent,' borne by two Canaanite kings of the powerful city-state Hazor. The first Jabin organized a northern coalition against Joshua and was defeated at the waters of Merom (Josh 11:1). The second – likely a dynastic title rather than a personal name – oppressed Israel for twenty years until Deborah and Barak broke his power through the defeat of his general Sisera (Judg 4:2-24). Psalm 83:9 recalls this victory as a paradigm of divine deliverance.

Jabin, Canaanite king (8×) Jabin (Yavin), the royal name or dynastic title of Canaanite kings ruling from Hazor. The name derives from the root b-y-n ('to discern, understand'). Two figures bear this name: the king defeated by Joshua in the northern campaign (Josh 11:1), and the later king whose commander Sisera was routed by Barak and killed by Jael (Judg 4:2, 7, 17, 23, 24). The recurrence of the name suggests a dynastic throne-name for Hazor's rulers. Psalm 83:10 invokes 'as Jabin at the brook Kishon' as a prayer for God to repeat past deliverances. Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Jabín/Yavín,' French 'Yavin,' German 'Yavin.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yavin, as-to-Yavin | es: Jabín, Yavín, como-Yavin | fr: Yavin, comme-Jabin | de: Yavin, wie-zu-Yavin Josh 11:1; Judg 4:2; Judg 4:7; Judg 4:17; Judg 4:23

יָבַל H2986 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp / 3fs (18×)
To lead, bear along, or carry in procession (Hifil); to be led or carried (Hofal) Yabal in the Hifil stem means to lead, conduct, or bear something along, often with ceremonial or processional overtones, as when nations bring offerings to God's temple (Ps 68:29, Zeph 3:10). The Hofal passive portrays someone or something being led or carried, ranging from the stately bridal procession of Psalm 45:14 to the haunting image of the suffering servant led like a lamb to slaughter (Isa 53:7). Spanish consistently reaches for 'llevar' and 'guiar,' while French favors 'conduire,' both capturing the directed, purposeful movement this verb implies. The Aramaic cognate and Akkadian abalu confirm the ancient Near Eastern resonance of formal conveyance.

1. bring, carry (Hifil active) (7×) Active Hifil causative meaning to bring, lead, or carry someone or something to a destination, often with processional dignity. Psalm 68:29 envisions kings bringing gifts to the temple, and Psalm 76:11 calls surrounding nations to present offerings. Spanish uses 'guiar' (to guide) alongside 'llevar' (to carry), reflecting both the directional and transport dimensions. GOING AND LEADING en: I-will-lead-them, carried-her, let-them-bring | es: la-llevaban, los-guiaré, me-llevará | fr: conduire | de: [אובילם], [יבלוה], [יובלון] Ps 60:9; Ps 68:29; Ps 76:11; Ps 108:10; Isa 23:7

2. be led, be guided (Hofal passive) (6×) Hofal passive denoting being led or guided along a path, with emphasis on direction and accompaniment. Psalm 45:14-15 describes the royal bride being led to the king, while Isaiah 53:7 portrays the servant being led to slaughter. The French 'conduire' and the Spanish 'ser llevado' both highlight the passive, purposeful quality of the movement. GOING AND LEADING

en: being-led, is-led, she-is-led | es: Serán-traídas, fue-llevado, llevado | fr: conduire, יובלו | de: [יובל], [יובלו], [תובלון] Job 21:30; Ps 45:14; Ps 45:15; Isa 53:7; Isa 55:12

3. be carried, be brought (Hofal passive) (5×) Hofal passive with emphasis on being carried or transported as cargo or a passive object, stressing conveyance rather than personal guidance. In Hosea 10:6, tribute is carried to Assyria; in Job 10:19, Job wishes he had been carried straight from womb to grave. The distinction from sense 2 lies in the impersonal, freight-like quality of the transport. GOING AND LEADING

en: I-would-be-carried, is-brought, is-carried | es: es-llevado, habría-sido-llevado., será-llevado | fr: conduire, יובל ,אובל | de: [אובל], [יובל] Job 10:19; Job 21:32; Isa 18:7; Hos 10:6; Hos 12:1

יְבַל H2987 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)

to bring, carry, bear along (Aramaic)

An Aramaic verb meaning to bring or carry something from one place to another. In Ezra's account of temple restoration, it describes the transportation of sacred vessels that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from Jerusalem's temple. The Haphel stem (Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew Hiphil) indicates causative action—causing something to be brought or carried. The verb appears in official correspondence about returning temple articles to Jerusalem. It emphasizes the physical movement of objects from Babylon back to their proper location in Jerusalem's restored temple.

(3×) To bring or carry (Aramaic Haphel). Ezra 5:14 reports that Cyrus 'brought out' temple vessels from Babylon's temple. Ezra 6:5 commands that the gold and silver vessels 'be brought back' to Jerusalem. Ezra 7:15 mentions bringing silver and gold 'to Jerusalem' for the temple. The consistent context involves transporting sacred vessels back to their rightful place. The verb emphasizes restoration through physical return of displaced objects. Aramaic forms show Haphel conjugation patterns distinct from Hebrew. BEARING AND CARRYING en: and-brought, and-to-bring | es: y-llevó, y-los-llevó, y-para-llevar | fr: [והיבל], [ולהיבלה] | de: [והיבל], [ולהיבלה] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 7:15

יְבָל H2988 N-mpc (2×)

watercourse, stream, channel for irrigation

This masculine plural construct noun designates watercourses or irrigation channels that conduct water for agricultural purposes. Isaiah uses it twice in restoration promises: channels of water will flow on every high hill and mountain in the day of Judah's restoration (Isaiah 30:25), and God will pour water on the thirsty land like streams on dry ground (Isaiah 44:4). Both passages parallel it with pelagim (streams), emphasizing abundant irrigation. The term suggests artificial or directed water channels rather than natural streams, supporting agricultural productivity through managed water distribution.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Isaiah's restoration oracles promising agricultural abundance through divinely-provided water. Isaiah 30:25 envisions channels of water (yivlei-mayim) on every elevated place, paired with streams (pelagim), transforming even highlands into well-watered farmland. Isaiah 44:4 promises pouring water on the thirsty and streams on dry ground, using irrigation imagery for spiritual renewal. The construct form yivlei suggests these are conduits or channels directing water for productive use. The parallel with pelagim (streams, rivulets) clarifies the water-channel function, though yivlei may emphasize artificial irrigation infrastructure more than natural watercourses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: channels, streams-of | es: corrientes-de | fr: [יבלי] | de: [יבלי] Isa 30:25; Isa 44:4

יָבָל H2989 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jabal; personal name, son of Lamech, father of tent-dwelling herdsmen

A personal name appearing only in Genesis 4:20, identifying one of Lamech's sons by Adah as 'the father of those who dwell in tents and have livestock.' Jabal represents the origin of pastoral nomadism in the Cainite genealogy. The name may relate to the Hebrew word for 'stream' or 'watercourse,' appropriate for a founder of shepherding. This single occurrence makes Jabal the eponymous ancestor of a whole way of life—tent-dwelling, animal-herding existence that characterized much of ancient Near Eastern culture.

(1×) Genesis 4:20 names Jabal as the founder of pastoral life in the genealogy of Cain's descendants. The consistent transliteration (with slight variations: 'Yaval,' 'Jabal') across languages reflects its status as a personal name. As 'father of those who dwell in tents,' Jabal represents the cultural origin of nomadic shepherding, one of humanity's primary economic adaptations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yaval | es: Yaval | fr: Yaval | de: Jabal Gen 4:20

יַבָּל H2990 N-fs (1×)

running sore, ulcer; a suppurating or weeping wound

A feminine adjective used substantively appearing only in Leviticus 22:22, in the list of animal blemishes that disqualify sacrifices. Animals with 'a running sore' or 'weeping ulcer' cannot be offered to the Lord. The word emphasizes the active, suppurating nature of the wound—it's not healed but actively discharging. This single occurrence makes ritual purity dependent on bodily wholeness; animals with open, weeping wounds are unsuitable for holy use, even if otherwise healthy.

(1×) Leviticus 22:22 uses this term in the catalog of disqualifying blemishes for sacrificial animals. The Spanish 'with wart' and translations like 'running sore' or 'ulcer' indicate an actively suppurating wound. The holiness code requires unblemished offerings, and weeping, open sores—like blindness, broken bones, or skin diseases—render animals ritually unsuitable for the altar. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: a-wen | es: con-verruga | fr: une-verrue | de: ein-wen Lev 22:22

יִבְלְעָם H2991 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Ibleam: Manassite city in northern Israel

A city allocated to Manasseh in the Jezreel valley region, though located within Issachar's or Asher's territory. Ibleam appears in conquest accounts where Israel failed to drive out the Canaanite inhabitants. It also marks the location where King Ahaziah of Judah was mortally wounded while fleeing from Jehu. The city corresponds to Bileam in Chronicles' parallel list of Levitical cities. Its strategic location in the valley made it significant for controlling travel routes. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it appears in Egyptian records from the second millennium BC.

(3×) Ibleam, a city in Manasseh's territory within the Jezreel region. Joshua 17:11 lists it among Manasseh's towns in other tribes' territories. Judges 1:27 records Manasseh's failure to dispossess Ibleam's Canaanite inhabitants. 2 Kings 9:27 locates Ahaziah's fatal wounding 'at the ascent of Ibleam' during Jehu's coup. The city = Bileam in 1 Chronicles 6:55. Its strategic valley location made it militarily significant. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Spanish Ibleam/Yivleam, French/English Ibleam/Yivleam) maintain the proper name consistently. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ibleam, Yivleam, and-Yivleam | es: Ibleam, Yivleam, e-Ibleam | fr: Ibleam, Yivleam, et-Yivleam | de: Ibleam, Yivleam, und-Yivleam Josh 17:11; Judg 1:27; 2Kgs 9:27

יָבַם H2992 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-ms (3×)

to perform levirate duty, marry brother's widow

To fulfill the duty of a brother-in-law (yabam) by marrying one's deceased brother's childless widow. This ancient Near Eastern custom aimed to preserve the dead brother's name and inheritance by raising up offspring through the widow. The Piel verb appears in contexts where this obligation is commanded or discussed. Genesis records Judah commanding Onan to perform this duty for Tamar. Deuteronomy legislates the practice, including provision for refusal. The custom involved complex family, economic, and social dynamics, balancing concern for the widow, preservation of lineage, and property rights.

(3×) To perform levirate duty by marrying a deceased brother's widow. Genesis 38:8 records Judah commanding Onan: 'go to your brother's wife and perform the duty of a brother-in-law to her.' Deuteronomy 25:5 legislates: 'her husband's brother shall perform levirate duty with her.' Deuteronomy 25:7 allows refusal: 'if the brother-in-law refuses to perform levirate duty with me.' The technical nature of this family obligation creates translation challenges, with Romance languages using 'marry as brother-in-law' (Spanish desposar/cumplir cuñado) and English maintaining 'perform levirate duty.' MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: and-perform-levirate-duty, and-shall-perform-levirate-duty-her, to-perform-levirate-duty-me | es: desposarme, y-cúmple-cuñado, y-la-desposará | fr: et-devra-perform-levirate-duty-sa, et-perform-levirate-devoir, à-perform-levirate-duty-moi | de: und-heirate-sie-als-Schwager, und-soll-perform-levirate-Pflicht-ihr, zu-perform-levirate-Pflicht-mich Gen 38:8; Deut 25:5; Deut 25:7

יָבָם H2993 N-msc / 3fs (2×)

brother-in-law, husband's brother (in levirate marriage context)

This technical kinship term designates the husband's brother who bears legal responsibility in levirate marriage. When a man dies childless, his brother (yavam) is obligated to marry the widow and raise up offspring for the deceased (Deuteronomy 25:5). The law provides for the brother-in-law to refuse (Deuteronomy 25:7), but this brings social shame. The term appears only in Deuteronomy 25's levirate legislation, though the practice itself appears in Genesis 38 with Judah's sons. Aramaic and rabbinic Hebrew preserve the same term, indicating its technical legal status in family law.

(2×) Both occurrences function within Deuteronomy 25:5-10's levirate marriage legislation. Verse 5 establishes the obligation: the husband's brother (yevamah, her brother-in-law) must marry her and perform the brother-in-law's duty. Verse 7 addresses refusal: if my brother-in-law (yevami) refuses to raise up his brother's name, the widow appeals to the elders. The term's technical precision (husband's brother specifically, not general brother-in-law) reflects its legal function. Targum, Mishnaic Hebrew, and Lagarde's morphological studies all confirm this as the standard term for the brother obligated in levirate marriage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-brother-in-law, my-brother-in-law | es: mi-cuñado, su-cuñado | fr: mon-frère-dans-loi, sa-frère-dans-loi | de: ihr-Bruder-in-Gesetz, mein-Bruder-in-Gesetz Deut 25:5; Deut 25:7

יְבִמְתּ H2994 N-fsc / 2fs (5×)

sister-in-law; a brother's wife (widow) in the context of levirate marriage

A kinship term designating a man's brother's wife, used exclusively in the context of levirate marriage law. In Deuteronomy 25:7-9, it refers to the widow whom the surviving brother is obligated to marry, and whose public ceremony of removing the sandal shames the one who refuses. In Ruth 1:15, Naomi uses the term when urging Ruth to follow Orpah – 'your sister-in-law' – back to Moab. The term encodes an entire legal and familial obligation in a single word.

(5×) A brother's wife or sister-in-law, specifically within the levirate marriage framework where a deceased man's brother is duty-bound to marry the widow and raise offspring in the dead brother's name. In Deuteronomy 25:7-9, the term appears three times in the legal procedure for refusal, including the sandal-removal ceremony. In Ruth 1:15, Naomi applies it to Orpah as Ruth's co-sister-in-law. Spanish 'cuñada,' French 'soeur-dans-loi,' and German 'Schwester-in-Gesetz' all render the kinship relation, though none capture the specific levirate obligation encoded in the Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-sister-in-law, your-sister-in-law | es: su-cuñada, tu-cuñada | fr: son-soeur-dans-loi, ton-sœur-dans-loi | de: Schwager, sein-Schwester-in-Gesetz Deut 25:7; Deut 25:9; Ruth 1:15

יַבְנְאֵל H2995 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Yavneel or Jabneel, name of two different towns in Israel

This place name designates two distinct locations in Israel's tribal territories. One Jabneel lay in Judah's western border (Joshua 15:11), later called Jabneh (2 Chronicles 26:6) and known in Greek as Iamnia, surviving as modern Yebna. A second Jabneel appears in Naphtali's northern territory (Joshua 19:33). The name means "God causes to build" or "El builds," sharing the theophoric element El with personal names like Benaiah. The Judahite location gained prominence in later Jewish history as a rabbinic center after Jerusalem's destruction.

(2×) The two occurrences identify geographically distinct towns sharing the same theophoric name. Joshua 15:11 places one Jabneel on Judah's northwestern boundary, the same site as 2 Chronicles 26:6's Jabneh and Hellenistic Iamnia (modern Yebna), which became significant in Second Temple and rabbinic periods. Joshua 19:33 locates another Jabneel in Naphtali's northern territory, a completely separate site. The name's meaning ("God builds" or "El causes to build") reflects common theophoric naming patterns. Greek manuscripts show variation (Iabnēl, Iōrēe) in transliterating Semitic names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yavneel, and-Yavneel | es: Jabneel, y-Jabneel | fr: Yavneel, et-Yavneel | de: Yavneel, und-Yavneel Josh 15:11; Josh 19:33

יַבְנֶה H2996 N-proper-fs (1×)

Jabneh; Philistine city conquered and demolished by Uzziah

A place name appearing only in 2 Chronicles 26:6, identifying a Philistine city whose walls King Uzziah broke down during his military campaigns. The name means 'he causes to build' or 'he builds,' which is ironic given the context of demolition. The site is identified with the later Jamnia/Yavneh, which became significant in Second Temple and rabbinic Judaism. This single occurrence marks Jabneh as one of Judah's territorial gains during Uzziah's successful reign before his pride led to downfall.

(1×) This place name appears in the account of Uzziah's military successes against the Philistines. The transliterations vary ('Jabneh,' 'Jabne'), but the site is identified with the important coastal city that later became Jamnia. Uzziah's breaking down of Jabneh's walls represents Judah's temporary expansion into Philistine territory during the 8th century BC. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yavneh | es: Jabne | fr: [יַבְנֶה] | de: [יַבְנֶה] 2Chr 26:6

יִבְנְיָה H2997 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Ibneiah; personal name of a Benjamite

A personal name appearing only in 1 Chronicles 9:8, in the list of post-exilic Benjamite residents of Jerusalem. The name probably means 'YHWH builds' or 'YHWH builds up,' comparable to other theophoric names with the building root. The Greek textual variants show considerable confusion with this and surrounding names, suggesting manuscript difficulties in this genealogical section. This single occurrence makes Ibneiah one of the many returning exiles who resettled Jerusalem, his name testifying to faith in God's rebuilding work.

(1×) This personal name appears in Chronicles' list of post-exilic Benjamite families living in Jerusalem. The textual variants in the Septuagint reflect the difficulty of transmitting genealogical lists accurately. The theophoric name ('YHWH builds') is theologically appropriate for the restoration period, when God's people were literally rebuilding Jerusalem and the temple after Babylonian exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yivneyah | es: Y-Yibnías | fr: [ויבניה'] | de: [ויבניה'] 1Chr 9:8

יִבְנְיָה H2998 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yivniyah, a Benjamite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 9:8

This personal name appears once in the genealogical records of returning exiles. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'Yah builds' or 'Yah understands,' though the exact etymology remains uncertain. The Septuagint renders it as Banaia in some manuscripts and Iechoniou in the Lucianic recension, reflecting the textual ambiguity surrounding rare proper names in Chronicles.

(1×) A Benjamite ancestral figure listed among the post-exilic inhabitants of Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:8). The single occurrence and lack of further narrative detail suggest this is a genealogical marker rather than a developed character, typical of Chronicles' compression of tribal lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yivniyah | es: Yibnías | fr: [יבניה'] | de: [יבניה'] 1Chr 9:8

יַבֹּק H2999 Art / N-proper-fs (7×)

Jabbok, a river in Transjordan (modern Zarqa) serving as a territorial boundary and the site of Jacob's wrestling

The Jabbok (Yabboq) is one of the most geographically and theologically significant rivers east of the Jordan. It is where Jacob wrestled through the night with a divine being before reuniting with Esau (Gen 32:22), an episode that gave Jacob his new name Israel. Beyond this dramatic encounter, the Jabbok repeatedly appears as a boundary marker — the northern limit of Sihon's Amorite kingdom and the western edge of Ammonite territory (Num 21:24; Deut 2:37; 3:16; Josh 12:2; Judg 11:13, 22). Today it is identified with the Zarqa River.

Jabbok, river in Transjordan (7×) The proper river name Jabbok (יַבֹּק), the Transjordanian tributary of the Jordan identified with the modern Zarqa River. It carries both narrative and geopolitical significance: the site of Jacob's night-long wrestling with God at the ford (Gen 32:22-23), and repeatedly cited as the boundary between Amorite, Ammonite, and Israelite territories (Num 21:24; Deut 2:37; 3:16; Josh 12:2). The name may pun on the root avaq 'to wrestle,' a wordplay the Genesis narrator seems to exploit. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: Jabbok, Yabbok, the-Jabbok | es: Jaboc, Yaboq, el-Jaboc | fr: Jabbok, Yabbok, le-Jabbok | de: Jabbok, Yabbok, der-Jabbok Gen 32:22; Num 21:24; Deut 2:37; Deut 3:16; Josh 12:2

יְבֶרְכְיָהוּ H3000 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jeberechiah, father of the witness Zechariah in Isaiah 8:2

This Yahwistic theophoric name means 'Yah has blessed' and appears in its full form only once, though the abbreviated form Berechiah occurs for several different individuals throughout the Old Testament. Isaiah summons Jeberechiah's son Zechariah as a reliable witness to the prophetic oracle concerning Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz. The name's meaning underscores the divine favor associated with this witness's lineage.

(1×) The father of Zechariah, one of two faithful witnesses called by Isaiah to attest to the prophet's written oracle (Isa 8:2). The full theophoric form (Jeberechiah) emphasizes the witness's credibility through association with divine blessing, strengthening the prophetic testimony. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jeberechiah | es: Yeberekiyahu | fr: [יברכיהו'] | de: [יברכיהו'] Isa 8:2

יָבֵשׁ H3001 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (73×)

To be dry or wither; causatively, to dry up; by extension (Hifil), to be put to shame.

Yavesh covers a vivid physical reality — the drying of water, the withering of vegetation, the parching of land — and then makes a surprising semantic leap into the realm of shame. In its basic Qal form it describes the Jordan's waters drying up (Josh 4:23), grass withering under scorching wind (1 Kgs 17:7), and Ezekiel's vision of dry bones (Ezek 37:11). The Hifil causative has God as its characteristic subject: 'He dried up the Red Sea' (Josh 2:10). But the same Hifil form also means 'to put to shame' (Jer 6:15; 2 Sam 19:5), perhaps because shame makes a person shrivel and wither socially, just as drought shrivels a plant. The Syriac cognate and Arabic yabisa both preserve the physical drying sense.

1. wither, dry out (of vegetation and living tissue) (30×) Split from sense 100633. Criteria: Plants, grass, hands, bones losing vitality and moisture (Isa 19:7; Ezek 17:10; 37:11; 1 Kgs 13:4); biological withering distinct from hydrological drying en: When-wither, Withers, and-it-withered | es: Cuando-se-sequen, Se-seca, Se-secaron | fr: dessécher, desséché, et-dessécher | de: und-verdorren, und-vertrocknete, und-withered 1Kgs 13:4; Job 8:12; Job 18:16; Ps 22:15; Ps 90:6

2. cause to dry up (causative) (15×) The causative sense (Hifil and Piel) of making something dry — God drying up the Red Sea (Josh 2:10), the Jordan (Josh 4:23), or the rivers of Egypt (Isa 19:5). The subject is typically God exercising sovereign power over water and vegetation, either in judgment or deliverance. German 'trocknete hinauf' captures the upward, complete removal of water that characterizes these divine acts. Job 15:30 extends it to fire drying up the wicked's shoots. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: He-dried-up, I-will-dry-up, and-I-will-make-dry | es: seca, secará, secaré | fr: Il-sécha-en-haut, dessécher, et-dessécher | de: Er-trocknete-hinauf, trocknete-hinauf, und-verdorren Josh 2:10; Josh 4:23; Josh 5:1; Job 15:30

3. dry up, become dry (of water sources) (15×) Split from sense 100633. Criteria: Water sources losing moisture: rivers, wells, seas drying up (Gen 8:7, 14); focus on liquid evaporation

en: and-dried-up, and-is-parched, and-they-dry-up | es: Y-se-secarán-, se-secaron, se-secó | fr: dessécher, drying-en-haut-de, et-dessécher | de: es-ist-trocken, trocken, trocknete Gen 8:7; Gen 8:14; Josh 9:5; Josh 9:12; 1Kgs 17:7

4. be put to shame (13×) The metaphorical Hifil sense of being put to shame or causing shame — a striking semantic extension where social humiliation is likened to physical withering. Jeremiah asks 'were they ashamed?' (Jer 6:15; 8:12) using this same root, and 2 Sam 19:5 reports that Joab's men were 'put to shame.' The connection between drying and shame may lie in the visible shrinking and loss of vitality that both experiences share — the shamed person wilts like a plant without water. Spanish 'avergonzado' and the broader translation pattern confirm this as a distinct sense. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: Are-they-ashamed, Is-put-to-shame, and-they-will-put-to-shame | es: Fueron-avergonzados, avergonzada, avergonzado | fr: dessécher, et-dessécher, tu-ai-shamed | de: du-habe-shamed, und-vertrocknete, verdorren 2Sam 19:5; Jer 6:15; Jer 8:12; Jer 10:14; Jer 46:24

יָבֵשׁ H3002 Adj-fs (9×)

Dry, dried up, or withered; describing what has lost its moisture, whether literally or as a figure of spiritual desolation.

An adjectival form from the root y-b-sh meaning 'dry' or 'withered,' used of both physical dryness and spiritual-metaphorical aridity. Dried grapes (Num 6:3) represent the literal end of the spectrum, while the complaint 'our soul is dried up' (Num 11:6) turns physical thirst into existential longing. Ezekiel's vision of dry bones (Ezek 37:2, 4) transforms the adjective into one of Scripture's most powerful images of hopelessness awaiting resurrection. The 'dry tree' metaphor serves double duty: a symbol of the humbled Davidic house (Ezek 17:24) and of the eunuch who considers himself barren (Isa 56:3). Spanish 'seco/seca' and English 'dry' map the sense directly.

dry, dried up, withered (9×) Dry, dried up, or withered — describing something that has lost its moisture or vitality. Used literally of dried grapes forbidden to Nazirites (Num 6:3) and figuratively of existential depletion ('our soul is dried up,' Num 11:6). Ezekiel deploys it powerfully for the dry bones awaiting resurrection (37:2, 4) and the dry-versus-green tree parable of the Davidic house (17:24; 21:3). Isaiah 56:3 applies it to the eunuch who sees himself as a 'dry tree' — barren and cut off. Job 13:25 uses dry chaff as a figure of frailty. Nahum 1:10 similarly compares Nineveh's enemies to dry stubble. Spanish 'seco' and German renderings leave the Hebrew untranslated in some places, reflecting its range. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: dry, is-dried-up, or-dried | es: los-secos„ seca, seco | fr: [היבשות], [יבש], [יבשות] | de: [היבשות], [יבש], [יבשות] Num 6:3; Num 11:6; Job 13:25; Isa 56:3; Ezek 17:24

יָבֵשׁ H3003 N-proper-ms (24×)

Jabesh – city of Jabesh-Gilead in Transjordan; also the father of King Shallum of Israel

Primarily designates the Transjordanian city of Jabesh-Gilead, a settlement east of the Jordan in the territory of Gilead. The city figures prominently in Israel's early history: its inhabitants were punished for refusing to join the assembly against Benjamin (Judg 21:8-14), Saul's first royal act was to rescue it from Nahash the Ammonite's brutal siege (1 Sam 11:1-11), and its grateful citizens later recovered Saul's body from the walls of Beth-shan after his death on Gilboa (1 Sam 31:11-13; 2 Sam 2:4-5). This reciprocal loyalty between Saul and Jabesh is one of the most poignant threads in the Samuel narrative. As a personal name, Jabesh is the father of Shallum, a usurper king of the northern kingdom (2 Kgs 15:10-14).

Jabesh (Gilead) (24×) The proper name Jabesh (יָבִישׁ / יָבֵשׁ), used primarily as a place-name for Jabesh-Gilead in Transjordan and secondarily as a patronymic. The city is central to three pivotal narratives: the Benjaminite wife-procurement after the civil war (Judg 21:8-14), Saul's heroic deliverance from Ammonite siege (1 Sam 11:1-11), and the loyal recovery of Saul's remains by its grateful citizens (1 Sam 31:11-13; 2 Sam 2:4-5). As a personal name, Jabesh is the father of Shallum who assassinated Zechariah (2 Kgs 15:10, 13-14). Translations uniformly transliterate: Jabesh, Jabès (French), Jabes (Spanish). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jabesh, Yabesh, Yavesh | es: Jabes, Yabesh, Yavesh | fr: Jabesh, Jabès, Yabesh | de: Jabesh, Yabesh, Yavesh Judg 21:8; Judg 21:9; Judg 21:10; Judg 21:12; Judg 21:14

יַבָּשָׁה H3004 Prep-l (14×)

Dry land or dry ground, especially as a path through parted waters or as earth distinct from sea.

A feminine noun meaning dry ground, used in vivid contrast with water throughout the Old Testament. At creation, God commands the waters to gather so that the יַבָּשָׁה appears (Gen 1:9–10). The word reaches its dramatic peak in the exodus: Israel crosses the Red Sea on dry ground (Exod 14:16, 22, 29; 15:19) and later the Jordan (Josh 4:22). Jonah confesses that the Lord made both sea and dry land (Jon 1:9), and the great fish vomits him onto the יַבָּשָׁה (Jon 2:10). Isaiah uses it figuratively for a parched Israel that God will refresh with his Spirit (Isa 44:3).

dry ground, dry land (14×) Dry ground or dry land (יַבָּשָׁה), used in opposition to water or sea. Appears in three major thematic clusters: (a) creation, where dry land emerges from gathered waters (Gen 1:9–10); (b) salvation-through-water narratives, where God provides a dry path through the Red Sea (Exod 14:16, 22, 29; 15:19; Neh 9:11; Ps 66:6) and the Jordan (Josh 4:22); and (c) Jonah's story, where the prophet acknowledges God as maker of sea and dry land (Jon 1:9) and is delivered onto shore (Jon 2:10). Isaiah 44:3 uses it figuratively of spiritual barrenness that God will revive. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: into-dry-land, on-dry-ground, on-the-dry-ground | es: a-lo-seco, en-lo-seco, en-seco | fr: [ביבשה], [יבשה], la-terre-sèche | de: Festland, [יבשה], auf-der-trocken-Boden Gen 1:9; Gen 1:10; Exod 4:9; Exod 14:16; Exod 14:22

יִבְשָׁם H3005 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yivsam, a descendant of Issachar in 1 Chronicles 7:2

This personal name appears in the genealogical register of Issachar's descendants. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to sweetness or fragrance. Like many names in the tribal genealogies of Chronicles, this individual receives no narrative development beyond being listed as part of the ancestral lineage.

(1×) A son or descendant of Tola from the tribe of Issachar, mentioned in the genealogical listing of warriors and clan heads (1 Chr 7:2). The conjunction indicates this name is part of a series enumerating Tola's sons, suggesting a genealogical rather than narrative function. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yivsam | es: y-Yibsam | fr: [ויבשם] | de: [ויבשם] 1Chr 7:2

יַבָּשֶׁת H3006 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

dry land, dry ground (as opposed to water)

This feminine noun designates dry land in contrast to water or moisture. In Exodus 4:9, Moses receives assurance that water from the Nile will become blood when poured upon the dry ground, demonstrating the plague's effectiveness even outside the river. Psalm 95:5 celebrates God's creative ownership: his hands formed the dry land as well as the seas. The term emphasizes the solid, water-free quality of land, often appearing in contexts involving water-to-land transitions or creation's separation of wet from dry elements.

(2×) Both contexts position dry land in relationship to water. Exodus 4:9 describes the plague sign: Nile water poured onto the dry ground (bayyabeshet) will become blood, extending the wonder beyond the river itself. Psalm 95:5 parallels God's creative acts: the sea is his (he made it), and his hands formed the dry land (yabbeshet)—the fundamental division between water and solid ground in creation. The term emphasizes dryness and solidity, the quality that makes land habitable and distinct from water. Spanish tierra seca, French terre sèche preserve this dry-ground sense. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: and-the-dry-land, on-the-dry-ground | es: en-la-tierra-seca, y-tierra-seca | fr: et-terre-sèche, sur-le-sec-moulu | de: auf-der-trocken-Boden, und-der-trocknen-Land Exod 4:9; Ps 95:5

יַבָּשֶׁת H3007 N-fsd (1×)

Aramaic word for 'earth' or 'dry land' in Daniel 2:10

This Aramaic noun, cognate with Hebrew yabbāšāh (dry land), appears in the Chaldeans' response to Nebuchadnezzar. The context emphasizes the vast gulf between human and divine knowledge: no magician 'on the earth' can reveal the king's dream. The Targum equates this term with the standard Biblical Hebrew for dry land, underscoring its semantic overlap with the Genesis creation narrative's 'dry ground' that emerges from the waters.

(1×) The earth or inhabited world as the realm of human existence, contrasted with the divine sphere (Dan 2:10). The Chaldeans use this term to stress that no earthly wise man possesses the supernatural knowledge the king demands, highlighting the impossibility of the request. EARTH AND LAND

en: the-dry-land | es: la-tierra | fr: terre | de: [יבשתא] Dan 2:10

יִגְאָל H3008 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Igal/Yigal: personal name (three different individuals)

A Hebrew personal name meaning 'He (God) redeems,' borne by three different individuals in biblical narrative. First, one of the twelve spies sent to explore Canaan, representing the tribe of Issachar. Second, one of David's mighty warriors. Third, a descendant of the royal line of Zerubbabel in post-exilic genealogy. The name reflects the theophoric pattern of incorporating divine action into personal names. Each bearer belongs to a different period and social context—wilderness wandering, Davidic military, and post-exilic restoration—showing the name's enduring popularity.

(3×) Personal name 'Igal' or 'Yigal' (He redeems), borne by three individuals. Numbers 13:7 identifies Igal son of Joseph from Issachar as one of the spies. 2 Samuel 23:36 lists Igal son of Nathan among David's elite warriors. 1 Chronicles 3:22 includes Yigal among Zerubbabel's descendants in post-exilic royal genealogy. The slightly varying transliterations reflect the name's pronunciation. Spanish Igal/Yigal, French Igal, English Igal all maintain the essential consonantal structure of this redemptive theophoric name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Igal, and-Yig'al | es: Igal, Yigal, y-Yigal | fr: Igal, [ויגאל] | de: Igal, [ויגאל] Num 13:7; 2Sam 23:36; 1Chr 3:22

יְגַב H3009 Conj-w (1×)

Plowmen, agricultural laborers (Jeremiah 52:16)

This rare verbal form refers to those who till the soil and work the land. It appears in the context of Nebuzaradan leaving behind the poorest of the land after the Babylonian conquest to serve as vinedressers and plowmen. The parallel passage in 2 Kings 25:12 has a different reading in the Ketiv-Qere tradition, suggesting some textual fluidity. The agricultural role represents the most basic subsistence labor assigned to those too poor to be carried into exile.

(1×) Agricultural workers who plow and cultivate fields, mentioned alongside vinedressers as the poorest inhabitants left in Judah after the exile (Jer 52:16). The term designates manual laborers who remained to maintain basic agricultural production while the skilled and wealthy were deported. FARMER VINEDRESSER

en: and-as-plowmen | es: y-como-labradores | fr: [וליגבים] | de: [וליגבים] Jer 52:16

יְגֵב H3010 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

Fields, agricultural plots (Jeremiah 39:10)

This noun denotes cultivated land or fields, though the text in Jeremiah 39:10 presents some uncertainty. The word appears alongside vineyards in the description of what Nebuzaradan distributed to the poor who remained in Judah. The parallel passage in Jeremiah 52:16 offers a slightly different reading, and BDB notes the text is dubious. The agricultural context is clear: these are productive parcels of land suitable for cultivation.

(1×) Cultivated fields or agricultural plots given to the poorest people left in the land after the Babylonian conquest (Jer 39:10). The distribution of vineyards and fields to those who had owned nothing represents a social upheaval where the dispossessed inherited the property of the exiled. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fields | es: y-campos | fr: [ויגבים] | de: [ויגבים] Jer 39:10

יָגְבְּהָה H3011 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Jogbehah, a town in Gad's territory east of the Jordan

This place name identifies a town in Gadite territory east of the Jordan River. Numbers 32:35 lists Jogbehah among the cities built (or fortified) by the Gadites when settling the Transjordan. Judges 8:11 mentions it as a landmark on Gideon's pursuit route when chasing the Midianite kings. The site has been identified with Khirbet Ajbehat, northwest of Amman in modern Jordan. The name possibly means "exalted" or "height," suggesting elevated terrain. Like many Transjordanian sites, it marked important routes through the region.

(2×) The two occurrences establish Jogbehah's role in Gadite settlement and later military history. Numbers 32:35 includes it among the fortified cities built by Gad's descendants when they chose Transjordanian territory, indicating its strategic value. Judges 8:11 uses it as a geographical marker: Gideon's route of pursuit passed by Jogbehah and Nobah, suggesting it lay on a recognized path through the region. The modern identification at Khirbet Ajbehat (northwest of Amman) provides approximate location. The name's possible derivation from gabah (be high, exalted) would fit elevated Transjordanian terrain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Jogbehah | es: y-Jogbehá, y-Yogbehá | fr: et-Jogbehah | de: und-Jogbehah Num 32:35; Judg 8:11

יִגְדַּלְיָהוּ H3012 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yigdalyahu, a prophet during Josiah's reign (Jeremiah 35:4)

This theophoric name means 'Yah is great' and belongs to a man of God mentioned in connection with the Rechabites. Jeremiah brings the Rechabite family to a chamber in the temple belonging to the sons of Yigdalyahu, suggesting this prophet held some official position or owned property within the temple complex. The name reflects the common Yahwistic naming pattern celebrating God's greatness.

(1×) A prophet or 'man of God' whose sons had a chamber in the Jerusalem temple where Jeremiah tested the Rechabites' faithfulness (Jer 35:4). The association with temple chambers suggests Yigdalyahu held recognized prophetic authority or priestly status during the reign of Josiah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yigdalyahu | es: Yigdalyahu | fr: [יגדליהו] | de: [יגדליהו] Jer 35:4

יָגָה H3013 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mpc / 2fs (8×)

To cause grief, afflict, torment (causative); to be grieved, to suffer sorrow (passive-reflexive)

The verb יָגָה speaks to grief in both its infliction and its experience. In its causative stems (Hifil and Piel), it describes the active causing of sorrow — God 'does not willingly afflict' the children of men (Lam 3:33), yet Jerusalem's enemies have 'afflicted her' (Lam 1:5, 12), and Job's friends 'torment' him with words (Job 19:2). The Nifal passive turns the lens inward: the virgins of Zion 'are grieved' (Lam 1:4) and the sorrowful exiles of Zeph 3:18 carry the weight of lost festivals. The Arabic cognate ʾ (to have pain, be abraded) hints at the word's physical roots beneath its emotional surface.

1. cause grief / afflict (Hifil/Piel causative) (6×) To cause grief, afflict, or torment someone — the Hifil and Piel causative stems. The agent actively inflicts sorrow on another. God 'does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men' (Lam 3:33, Piel), yet he 'has afflicted' Jerusalem (Lam 1:5, 12; 3:32, Hifil). Job cries out to his friends 'how long will you torment me?' (Job 19:2), and Isaiah names the oppressors as 'those who afflict you' (Isa 51:23). Spanish 'afligió/atormentaréis' (afflicted/you will torment) and Arabic 'ʾūn (they torment) confirm the causative force across languages. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: He-afflicts, afflicted, has-afflicted-her | es: aflige, afligió, atormentaréis | fr: [הוגה], [ויגה], [מוגיך] | de: Kummer, [מוגיך], und-Kummer Job 19:2; Isa 51:23; Lam 1:5; Lam 1:12; Lam 3:32

2. be grieved (Nifal passive) (2×) To be grieved, to experience sorrow — the Nifal passive-reflexive stem. The subject suffers grief rather than causing it. Lam 1:4 describes the virgins of Zion as נוגות ('grieved'), paired with sighing priests and bitterness on every side. Zeph 3:18 speaks of those נוּגֵי מִמּוֹעֵד ('grieved because of the appointed feasts') — exiles who mourn the festivals they can no longer celebrate. Arabic 'ūāt (distressed ones) and Spanish 'Entristecidos/están afligidas' (saddened/they are afflicted) consistently mark the passive experience of sorrow. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: are-grieved, the-grieved | es: Entristecidos-de, están-afligidas | fr: [נוגות], affliger | de: Kummer Lam 1:4; Zeph 3:18

יָגָה H3014 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (1×)

To thrust away or remove (2 Samuel 20:13)

This rare Hiphil verb describes the action of forcibly removing or pushing something aside. It appears only once, when someone thrust the murdered Amasa's body off the highway after Joab had killed him. The parallel clause uses a more common verb for carrying or turning aside, suggesting this term emphasizes the forceful, perhaps undignified nature of removing the corpse from public view. Arabic and Syriac cognates carry similar meanings of repelling or expelling.

(1×) The act of forcibly thrusting or pushing away Amasa's body from the road where it lay after Joab's assassination (2 Sam 20:13). The vigorous action was necessary to prevent the pursuing army from stopping to gawk at the murdered commander, enabling Joab to maintain military momentum. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: he-was-removed | es: fue-removido | fr: il-fut-ôta | de: er-war-removed 2Sam 20:13

יָגוֹן H3015 Conj-w / N-ms (14×)

Sorrow, grief, anguish; deep emotional pain and persistent sadness, often paired with mourning or distress.

A noun denoting the heavy, persistent ache of grief – the kind that settles in and will not lift. Jacob fears it will accompany him to the grave if Benjamin is lost (Gen 42:38; 44:31), and the psalmist asks how long sorrow will reign in his heart (Ps 13:2). The prophets pair yagon with sighing (anachah) in Isaiah 35:10 and 51:11, promising that sorrow and sighing will flee when God's redeemed return to Zion. Jeremiah 31:13 sets it opposite simchah ('joy'), envisioning God turning mourning into gladness. Spanish 'tristeza' and French 'chagrin' both capture this abiding weight of sadness.

sorrow, grief, anguish (14×) Deep emotional sorrow or grief, a persistent state of sadness rather than a momentary pang. Paired with anachah ('sighing') in Isaiah 35:10 and 51:11, with tsarah ('distress') in Psalm 116:3, and set opposite simchah ('joy') in Esther 9:22. Jacob's anticipated grief at losing Benjamin (Gen 42:38; 44:31) gives it a visceral, paternal dimension. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: and-sorrow, from-sorrow, from-their-sorrow | es: con-tristeza, de-su-tristeza, de-tristeza | fr: [מ/יגון], dans-chagrin, dans-douleur | de: [ו/יגון], [יגון], [מ/יגון] Gen 42:38; Gen 44:31; Esth 9:22; Ps 13:2; Ps 31:10

יָגוֹר H3016 Adj-ms (2×)

fearing, afraid (rare adjective describing one who fears or is in dread)

This rare Hebrew adjective appears only twice, both times in Jeremiah describing those whom the prophet fears. The word captures the active state of being afraid or in dread of someone. Both occurrences use the same construction with the preposition 'from before them,' emphasizing the source of fear. The multilingual evidence shows consistent translation as 'fear' across languages, though some translators struggled with this rare form, leaving it untranslated.

(2×) The adjective describes a person in a state of fear or dread. Both Jeremiah passages use identical phrasing: 'whom you fear from before them' (Jer 22:25, 39:17), referring to those the prophet dreads. The English 'fear' and Spanish 'temes' (you fear) capture the emotional state, while French and German translators left the Hebrew untranslated, perhaps uncertain of this rare adjectival form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear | es: temes | fr: [יגור] | de: [יגור] Jer 22:25; Jer 39:17

יָגוּר H3017 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yagur, a town in southern Judah near Edom (Joshua 15:21)

This place name designates one of the southernmost cities allotted to the tribe of Judah, positioned in the Negev toward the Edomite border. Like many settlements in this arid region, Yagur appears only in the comprehensive boundary and city lists of Joshua 15, with no further narrative development. The site's exact location remains uncertain to modern archaeologists.

(1×) A town in the extreme southern territory of Judah, near the border with Edom (Josh 15:21). The name appears in the list of cities allotted to Judah as part of the tribal inheritance, representing one of the frontier settlements in the Negev wilderness. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yagur | es: y-Jagur | fr: et-Yagur | de: und-Yagur Josh 15:21

יְגִיעַ H3018 N-msc / 2fs (16×)

Toil, labor, exertion; also the product or fruit of one's labor, acquired property.

A noun capturing both the sweat of hard work and what that work produces. When Jacob confronts Laban, he speaks of the 'yegi'a of my hands' (Gen 31:42), meaning decades of grueling labor. But the same word can shift to denote what labor earns: the produce, property, or wealth that results. Deuteronomy 28:33 warns that foreigners will consume 'your yegi'a,' meaning your harvest and livelihood. Spanish distinguishes 'trabajo' (work) from 'ganancia' (gain), neatly mirroring the Hebrew duality. The interplay between effort and outcome runs through wisdom literature, where Job and the Psalms probe whether toil truly yields lasting reward.

1. toil, labor, exertion (13×) The act of laborious work, toil, or strenuous exertion, emphasizing the painful effort involved. Jacob uses it to describe his years of weary service under Laban (Gen 31:42, paired with 'oni, affliction). In Deuteronomy 28:33, the word denotes one's labor that foreign oppressors will devour. Spanish 'trabajo' and 'labor' consistently render this sense of effortful striving. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-labor-his, and-their-labor, and-your-labor | es: Trabajo-de, el-trabajo-de, la-labor-de | fr: [ו/יגיעכם], [ומ/יגיעו], [יגיע] | de: [ו/יגיעכם], [ומ/יגיעו], [יגיע] Gen 31:42; Deut 28:33; Neh 5:13; Job 10:3; Job 39:11

2. product of labor, gain (3×) The fruit, produce, gain, or acquired property resulting from one's toil, a metonymic extension from effort to its outcome. Job 39:16 uses it of an ostrich's labor (its eggs/offspring), Psalm 109:11 of a man's earnings seized by creditors, and Jeremiah 20:5 of Jerusalem's accumulated wealth. Spanish 'ganancia' (gain) and 'su-labor' (his labor/product) reflect this shift from process to result. LABOR AND TOIL

en: her-labor, his-labor, produce-her | es: ganancia-de-ella, su-labor, su-trabajo | fr: [יגיעה], labeur, sa-יגיעה-elle | de: [יגיעה], sein-Arbeit Job 39:16; Ps 109:11; Jer 20:5

יָגֵעַ H3019 Adj-mpc (1×)

Those weary or exhausted in strength (Job 3:17)

This adjective describes the toil-worn and physically exhausted. Job uses it in his lament over birth, imagining death as a place where 'the weary in strength' finally find rest. The phrase captures those worn down by hard labor and physical exertion, their vitality drained by unceasing toil. The rare construct form adds poetic intensity to Job's vision of death as release from life's burdens.

(1×) People exhausted from physical labor and hardship, who find rest in death according to Job's bitter meditation (Job 3:17). The expression 'weary of strength' intensifies the image of complete depletion, where even one's physical capacity for exertion has been consumed by relentless labor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-weary-of | es: los-cansados-de | fr: יגיעי | de: [יגיעי] Job 3:17

יָגְלִי H3020 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jogli, a chief from the tribe of Dan (Numbers 34:22)

This personal name, possibly meaning 'led into exile' or derived from a root suggesting revelation, belongs to the father of Bukki, who served as Dan's representative in dividing the Promised Land. The name appears only in the formal list of tribal leaders appointed to oversee the land allocation, suggesting Jogli was a recognized ancestral figure whose authority passed to his son.

(1×) The father of Bukki, who represented the tribe of Dan in the division of Canaan (Num 34:22). Jogli's inclusion establishes his son's tribal authority and genealogical credentials for this crucial administrative role in Israel's inheritance of the land. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jogli | es: Jogli | fr: Jogli | de: Jogli Num 34:22

יָגְעַ H3021 V-Hifil-Perf-1cp (26×)

To toil or grow weary; in Hifil, to weary or exhaust someone; encompasses both the labor and the fatigue it produces.

Covers the full arc of strenuous effort—from the exertion itself to the exhaustion it leaves behind. In the Qal, it can describe a soldier whose hand 'grew weary' clinging to his sword (2 Sam 23:10), or the futile labor of idolaters who 'toil' with sorceries (Isa 47:12). The Hifil turns the lens outward: God asks Israel, 'Have you wearied me?' (Isa 43:24), while Malachi charges the priests with wearying the LORD with empty words. Spanish 'cansar/fatigar' and French 'lasser/se fatiguer' mirror the same dual valence of effort and its toll.

1. grow weary, become fatigued (12×) The intransitive state of becoming physically or emotionally exhausted. David's warrior Eleazar fought until his hand 'grew weary' (2 Sam 23:10); the psalmist is 'weary with groaning' (Ps 6:6). Cross-linguistically, Spanish 'estoy cansado' and French 'se fatigueront' confirm a focus on the resulting condition rather than the activity—being drained, spent, worn out. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: I-am-weary, and-grow-weary, grew-weary | es: Estoy-cansado, me-canso, nos-fatigamos | fr: et-ils-se-fatigueront, et-se-lasser, grandit-weary | de: [וייגעו], [יגענו], [תיגע] 2Sam 23:10; Ps 6:6; Ps 69:3; Prov 23:4; Isa 40:28

2. toil, labor, exert effort (8×) The active exertion of effort in labor or toil, where the emphasis falls on the striving rather than the tiredness. Joshua reminds Israel they enjoy cities 'for which you did not labor' (Josh 24:13); Isaiah's Servant laments, 'I have labored in vain' (Isa 49:4). The distinction from sense 1 is subtle but consistent: here the multilingual evidence (Spanish 'me fatigué,' French 'se lasser') highlights the expenditure of energy, not its depletion. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: I-labor, I-labored, and-have-labored | es: me-fatigo?, me-fatigué, te-fatigaste | fr: et-se-lasser, se-lasser, tu-labored | de: [אגיע], du-labored, muede-werden Josh 24:13; Job 9:29; Isa 47:12; Isa 47:15; Isa 49:4

3. weary someone (Hifil causative) (4×) The Hifil causative: to make someone weary, to tire or exasperate another person. This is theologically potent—God complains that Israel has 'wearied' him not with offerings but with sins (Isa 43:24), and Malachi twice asks 'How have we wearied him?' (Mal 2:17). Spanish 'cansasteis' (you wearied) and French 'lassé' reinforce the interpersonal, causative force. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: I-wearied-you, You-have-wearied, have-we-wearied | es: Cansasteis, le-cansamos?, me-cansaste | fr: [הוגעתם], nous-avons-lassé, se-lasser | de: [הוגענו], [הוגעתם], muede-werden Isa 43:23; Isa 43:24; Mal 2:17

4. exhaust, tire out (Piel intensive) (2×) A Piel intensive sense: to tire someone out through persistent or repeated action. In Ecclesiastes 10:15, the fool's toil 'wearies him' because he cannot find his way to the city—a wry image of effort compounding upon itself. Joshua 7:3 advises against wearying all the people for a small fight. The intensified stem suggests a wearing-down process rather than a single act of exhaustion. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION en: wearies-him, weary- | es: fatigues, lo-fatiga | fr: weary-, תיגענו | de: [תיגענו], muede- Josh 7:3; Ecc 10:15

יְגִיעַ H3022 N-ms (1×)
The product or gain from labor (Job 20:18)
This noun denotes what is acquired through toil and work, the fruit of one's labor. Zophar uses it in his speech about the wicked person's fate, declaring that such a one must restore what he toiled for without swallowing it down. The term appears in parallel with 'exchange' or 'recompense,' emphasizing the economic value of work's product. It captures the material result of exertion rather than the process of working.

(1×) The material gain or product obtained through hard work, which the wicked must surrender according to Zophar's theology of retribution (Job 20:18). The term emphasizes the tangible results of labor that the unrighteous cannot ultimately enjoy, despite their toil. LABOR AND TOIL
en: what-he-toiled-for | es: lo-trabajado | fr: יגיע | de: er-beruehrt Job 20:18

יָגֵעַ H3023 Adj-ms (3×)
weary, exhausted, wearisome
Physically or mentally exhausted, weary from labor or hardship. The adjective describes both people worn down by exertion and things that are wearisome or exhausting. Deuteronomy uses it for Israel when attacked by Amalek—weary from wilderness travel. 2 Samuel applies it to David when fleeing Absalom, exhausted and vulnerable. Ecclesiastes employs it philosophically: all words and things are wearisome, full of labor beyond telling. The term captures the depleted state after prolonged effort, whether physical fatigue or existential exhaustion.

(3×) Weary, exhausted, or wearisome. Deuteronomy 25:18 recalls Amalek attacking Israel when they were 'weary and exhausted' in the wilderness. 2 Samuel 17:2 describes David as 'weary and weak-handed,' vulnerable to attack. Ecclesiastes 1:8 declares philosophically 'all things are wearisome'—everything is full of toil. The semantic range covers physical fatigue (first two contexts) and existential wearisomeness (Ecclesiastes). Spanish cansado/fatigoso, French fatigué, English weary/wearisome all capture this exhaustion, whether physical or metaphysical. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION en: and-exhausted, wearisome, weary | es: cansado, fatigosas, y-fatigado | fr: et-exhausted, fatigué, weary | de: [יגעים], und-exhausted, weary Deut 25:18; 2Sam 17:2; Ecc 1:8

יְגִיעָה H3024 N-fsc (1×)
Weariness or exhaustion, especially from study (Ecclesiastes 12:12)
This late Hebrew noun describes the fatigue that comes from intense mental or physical effort. The Preacher uses it in his epilogue to warn that excessive study wearies the flesh. The word's formation reflects post-exilic Hebrew development, and its single occurrence captures Qoheleth's pragmatic concern about the limits of human intellectual pursuit. Much learning, however valuable, exacts a physical toll.

(1×) The physical and mental exhaustion produced by prolonged study and intellectual labor (Eccl 12:12). The Preacher's observation that 'much study is a weariness of the flesh' acknowledges the bodily cost of relentless learning, tempering the unlimited pursuit of knowledge with practical wisdom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: is-weariness-of | es: fatiga-de | fr: יגעת | de: [יגעת] Ecc 12:12

יָגֹר H3025 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (5×)
to dread, fear; be afraid of a perceived threat or divine wrath
A verb expressing deep-seated dread or fearful anxiety, often directed at a specific source of danger. In Deuteronomy, Moses confesses he feared (yagorthi) the LORD's burning anger after the golden calf incident (Deut 9:19), and the term recurs for dreading the diseases of Egypt (Deut 28:60). Job uses it poignantly: 'the thing I greatly feared has come upon me' (Job 3:25). The Spanish 'recelé/temo' and German 'Schrecken' both capture the visceral, anticipatory quality of this fear.

(5×) To be afraid, to dread — expressing fearful apprehension before a specific threat. Used with מִפְּנֵי ('before the face of') for the object feared, whether divine wrath (Deut 9:19) or calamitous disease (Deut 28:60). In Job 3:25 and 9:28, the fear is existential dread of suffering. The Psalmist fears reproach (Ps 119:39). Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'temo/recelé,' English 'dread/feared' — converge on anticipatory anxiety rather than sudden fright. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: I-dread, I-feared, I-was-afraid | es: re-celé, temiste, temo | fr: craindre, je-était-afraid, tu-craignit | de: [יגרתי], du-fuerchtete, ich-Schrecken Deut 9:19; Deut 28:60; Job 3:25; Job 9:28; Ps 119:39

H3026 N-proper-fs (1×)
Jegar-Sahadutha, Aramaic name for the witness heap (Genesis 31:47)
This Aramaic phrase meaning 'heap of witness' or 'witness pile' designates the stone cairn erected by Laban as a covenant marker between himself and Jacob. While Jacob gives the heap a Hebrew name (Galeed), Laban uses this Aramaic expression, reflecting his cultural and linguistic background in Paddan-Aram. The bilingual naming underscores the covenant's role as a boundary between two cultural-linguistic worlds, though both names carry identical meaning.

(1×) The Aramaic designation Laban gave to the stone heap marking the covenant boundary with Jacob (Gen 31:47). The Aramaic name parallels Jacob's Hebrew 'Galeed,' both meaning 'witness heap,' highlighting how the monument served as a memorial and boundary marker between the two kinsmen's territories. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jegar-Sahadutha | es: Yegar-Sahaduta | fr: Jegar-Sahadutha | de: Jegar-Sahaduta Gen 31:47

יְגַר H3026a

(stone) heap (Aramaic term used in Genesis 31:47 parallel to Hebrew גַּלְעֵד)

This Aramaic word appears in the famous boundary-setting scene between Jacob and Laban in Genesis 31:47. Laban speaks Aramaic, calling the witness-heap 'Yegar-Sahadutha,' while Jacob uses the Hebrew equivalent 'Galeed.' Both terms mean 'heap of witness,' marking a covenant boundary. The bilingual wordplay in this passage reflects the linguistic and ethnic divide between the Aramaic-speaking peoples of Mesopotamia and the Hebrew-speaking descendants of Abraham, even as they make peace through shared covenant practices.

שָׂהֲדוּתָא H3026b

testimony, witness (Aramaic cognate, appears in Genesis 31:47 parallel to Hebrew עֵד)

This Aramaic term for 'testimony' or 'witness' appears in the emphatic state as part of Laban's compound name for the covenant heap in Genesis 31:47. The root is cognate with Hebrew שָׂהֵד and related to widespread Semitic vocabulary for witnessing and testimony (Syriac, Arabic shahida). The word appears in the famous bilingual pun where the stone-heap serves as a 'witness' between Jacob and Laban, commemorating their covenant. Egyptian Aramaic documents frequently use related forms for witnesses in legal contexts.

יָד H3027 N-fdc / 1cp (1628×)

Hand; by extension: side, power, portion, means; also tenon (joinery) and handle/armrest

The Hebrew yad (יָד) is far more than a body part. Occurring over 1,600 times, it is one of the most theologically and idiomatically loaded nouns in Scripture. It denotes the literal hand used to grasp, strike, and bless, but extends metaphorically into power ('the hand of the LORD was upon him'), agency ('by the hand of Moses'), spatial location ('at the side of'), and proportional capacity ('according to the hand of the king'). Technical uses in Exodus describe the tenons joining tabernacle boards, while Solomon's throne had armrests — both called yad.

1. hand (power, agency, control) (965×) The literal hand as a body part, dominant at 1,596 occurrences. Arabic يَدٌ, Aramaic יְדָא, and Ethiopic እድ preserve the shared Semitic root. Encompasses 'hand of God' (power), 'into the hand of' (custody), 'by the hand of' (agency). Functions as both concrete noun and base for dozens of Hebrew idioms (Gen 27:17, Gen 39:6).

en: in-hand-of, in-the-hand-of, into-hand-of | es: en-la-mano-de, en-mano-de, en-mano-de- | fr: dans-la-main, dans-le-main-de, dans-main-de | de: hinein-Hand-von, in-Hand-von, in-der-Hand Gen 27:17; Gen 30:35; Gen 32:16; Gen 39:6; Gen 39:22

2. hand (literal body part) (629×) A spatial extension meaning 'side, bank, beside.' Multilingual glosses shift from 'hand' to 'side' — Spanish al lado de, Hindi किनारे, Korean 곁/옆. Pharaoh's daughter stood 'at the side of' the Nile (Exod 2:5), and the Canaanites dwelt 'beside' the sea (Num 13:29).

en: avenger-of, hand-his, his-hand | es: en-la-mano-de, en-mano-de, en-mano-de- | fr: avenger-de, dans-main-de, dans-main-de- | de: Hand-sein, Raecher-von, in-Hand-von Gen 3:22; Gen 8:9; Gen 22:10; Gen 24:9; Gen 24:18

3. side, bank, beside (8×) A spatial extension meaning 'side, bank, beside.' Multilingual glosses shift from 'hand' to 'side' — Spanish al lado de, Hindi किनारे, Korean 곁/옆. Pharaoh's daughter stood 'at the side of' the Nile (Exod 2:5), and the Canaanites dwelt 'beside' the sea (Num 13:29). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-hand-of, at-hand-of-, at-side-of | es: a-mano-de, al-lado-de, al-lado-de- | fr: main, main-de, zu-main | de: Hand, Hand-von, bei-Seite-von Exod 2:5; Num 13:29; 1Sam 19:3; 1Chr 18:17; 1Chr 23:28

4. according to the means of (7×) An idiomatic prepositional construction (כְּיַד) meaning 'according to the means/bounty/ability of.' Used almost exclusively in Ezra-Nehemiah for divine provision — 'according to the good hand of his God upon him' (Ezra 7:6, 7:9, 7:28, 8:18; Neh 2:8). The phrase metaphorically extends the hand's capacity to grasp into the idea of what one can provide or what God has made available. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-hand-of, according-to-hand-of-, according-to-the-hand-of | es: conforme-a-la-mano-de, según-mano-de, según-mano-de- | fr: wie-main | de: wie-Hand Ezra 7:6; Ezra 7:9; Ezra 7:28; Ezra 8:18; Neh 2:8

5. tenon, peg (joinery) (6×) A technical architectural term for the tenon or projecting peg used to join tabernacle boards. Confined to the tabernacle construction narratives (Exod 26:17-19, 36:22-24). Spanish espigas ('tenons'), Korean 촉들, and Hindi चूलें all confirm the specialized joinery meaning. The hand-shaped projection that slots into a mortise gives this sense its etymological logic. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: its-tenons, tenons | es: espigas, sus-espigas | fr: son-tenons, tenons | de: sein-tenons, tenons Exod 26:17; Exod 26:19; Exod 36:22; Exod 36:24

6. handle, armrest (of vessel/throne) (6×) Handle of a vessel, axle-support, or armrest of a throne — extending the hand metaphor mechanically. Arabic يَد ('handles'), Spanish brazos/asas. Found in the bronze stands of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:33-36) and armrests of his ivory throne (1 Kgs 10:19; 2 Chr 9:18). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-handles, the-armrests, the-arms | es: asas-de-ella, ejes-de-ellas, las-partes | fr: le-bras, leur-axles, main | de: Hand, der-Arme, ihr-axles 1Kgs 7:33; 1Kgs 7:35; 1Kgs 7:36; 1Kgs 10:19; 2Chr 9:18

8. (3×) Three ambiguous occurrences likely meaning 'place' or 'station.' At Num 2:17 ('every man in his place') the spatial-positional meaning emerges. At 2 Kgs 7:2 and 7:17 ('the captain on whose hand the king leaned'), French son lieu and German sein Ort support a 'station, assigned position' reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-hand, his-place | es: mano-de-él | fr: son-lieu, son-main | de: sein-Hand, sein-Ort Num 2:17; 2Kgs 7:2; 2Kgs 7:17

9. (1×) A single occurrence at Ps 63:10 (63:11 in English) where 'the hand of the sword' means 'the power of the sword.' English 'power,' Spanish manos, and German Hand all reflect the metaphorical extension of yad into the abstract sense of force or instrument. This military-destructive usage is a natural extension of the hand-as-power idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-power-of- | es: manos-de | fr: mains-de | de: der-Hand- Ps 63:10

יַד H3028 Prep-b / N-fd (17×)

hand — the physical hand, and by extension power, possession, or agency (Aramaic)

Yad in Biblical Aramaic corresponds exactly to its far more frequent Hebrew cognate, denoting the human hand and its metaphorical extensions. Confined to Daniel and Ezra, its 17 occurrences span a compact but vivid semantic range. The most dramatic appearance is the disembodied hand that writes on the wall at Belshazzar's feast — 'the fingers of a human hand appeared and wrote' (Dan 5:5, 24), where yad carries an almost supernatural materiality. The dual form bidayin ('by hands') appears in the vision of the stone 'cut without hands' (Dan 2:34, 45), a theologically loaded phrase indicating divine rather than human agency. Prepositional uses express possession ('in your hand,' Ezra 7:14, 25) and authority ('into his hand,' Ezra 5:12; Dan 2:38; 3:15, 17; 7:25). The power of God is expressed through the same word: 'none can stay his hand' (Dan 4:32), and Daniel's God delivers from the power of the lion (Dan 6:28). Spanish 'mano,' French 'main,' and German 'Hand' all preserve the body-part-to-power polysemy.

hand (body part) (17×) The physical hand and, by metonymy, power, possession, or instrumentality — the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew yad, restricted to Daniel and Ezra. Used literally for the miraculous hand writing on the wall at Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:5, 24) and the stone cut 'without hands' (Dan 2:34, 45) signifying divine agency apart from human effort. Prepositional constructions express custody and control: 'in your hand' (Ezra 7:14, 25), 'into his hand' (Ezra 5:12; Dan 2:38; 7:25). Applied to divine sovereignty in Daniel 4:32 ('none can stay his hand') and deliverance from the lion's power (Dan 6:28). Spanish 'mano,' French 'main,' and German 'Hand' all confirm the unified body-part-to-authority semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-hand, by-hands, hand | es: con-manos, en-mano-de, en-mano-de-él | fr: dans-la-main, dans-ta-main, main | de: Haende-von, Hand, [בידהם] Ezra 5:8; Ezra 5:12; Ezra 6:12; Ezra 7:14; Ezra 7:25

יְדָא H3029 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

to give thanks, to praise (Aramaic Haphel form used in Daniel for praising God)

This Aramaic verb appears only in Daniel's prayers of thanksgiving to God. The Haphel stem (causative) suggests making acknowledgment or giving thanks publicly. Daniel uses this word when praising the God of heaven for revealing mysteries (Dan 2:23) and in his habit of daily prayer (Dan 6:10). The consistent multilingual rendering as 'giving thanks' or 'praising' reflects the liturgical context of both passages, showing Daniel's practice of gratitude even under threat of death.

(2×) The verb describes formal acts of thanksgiving and praise directed to God. In Daniel 2:23, Daniel gives thanks to the God of his fathers for revealing Nebuchadnezzar's dream. In Daniel 6:10, the participle describes Daniel's ongoing practice of giving thanks before God three times daily. Spanish 'doy gracias' and French 'louer' (to praise) capture the devotional tone, while English emphasizes the participial aspect 'giving thanks, thanking.' PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: and-giving-thanks, thanking | es: doy-gracias, y-dando-gracias | fr: et-louer, louer | de: [ומודא], [מהודא] Dan 2:23; Dan 6:10

יְדַאֲלָה H3030 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yidalah, a town in Zebulun's territory (Joshua 19:15)

This place name marks one of the cities allotted to the tribe of Zebulun in the northern hill country. The Septuagint offers variant readings (Jericho in one tradition, Iedalah in Lucianic manuscripts), and the site's precise location remains unknown to archaeologists. Like many Zebulunite settlements, Yidalah receives only this single mention in the territorial boundary lists without further narrative development.

(1×) A town within Zebulun's tribal inheritance in Galilee (Josh 19:15). The name appears in the list of twelve cities allotted to Zebulun, though its exact location has not been identified in modern archaeological surveys. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yidalah | es: y-Idala | fr: et-Yidalah | de: und-Yidalah Josh 19:15

יְדִבָּשׁ H3031 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yidvash, possibly a descendant of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:3)

This personal name appears in a textually difficult genealogical passage concerning the family of Etam in Judah's lineage. The Masoretic Text's syntax is ambiguous, and the Septuagint interprets these as sons of Aitan rather than following the Hebrew as it stands. Some manuscripts suggest emendations that would clarify Yidvash's genealogical position. The name may derive from a root meaning 'honey' or 'sweetness,' though this remains speculative.

(1×) An individual listed among the descendants of Judah, though the textual difficulties in 1 Chronicles 4:3 make the exact relationship uncertain. The Septuagint and various textual traditions attempt to clarify this figure's connection to Etam and other family members. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yidvash | es: y-Yidbas | fr: [ויִדבש] | de: [וידבש] 1Chr 4:3

יְדַד H3032 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (3×)

cast lots (by throwing or drawing), allocate by divination

This verb appears only three times in the Hebrew Bible, all describing the casting of lots. In Joel 3:3, Obadiah 11, and Nahum 3:10, the word depicts enemies distributing plunder or captives through the ancient practice of lot-casting—a form of divination used to make decisions or allocate resources. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'echaron', French 'jetèrent', German 'warfen') confirms the throwing or casting action, suggesting this Hebrew form specifically captures the physical act of casting lots to determine outcomes.

(3×) The verb describes the literal act of casting lots (גורל) to divide spoil or captives. Found in prophetic texts condemning enemy nations who treated God's people as commodities to be divvied up by chance. The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the throwing motion ('they cast', 'warfen'), distinguishing this rare form from other lot-casting vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: they-cast | es: echaron | fr: jetèrent, sa-main | de: seine-Hand, warfen Joel 3:3; Obad 1:11; Nah 3:10

יְדוּת H3033 N-fsc (1×)

The beloved one, object of love (Jeremiah 12:7)

This rare feminine noun denotes not the emotion of love but the person who is loved, the beloved object. God uses it in a lament over abandoning his inheritance, calling Israel 'the beloved of my soul.' The term intensifies the pathos of divine rejection: what was most cherished must now be handed over to enemies. The possessive construction with 'soul' (nephesh) heightens the personal, emotional dimension of God's relationship with his people.

(1×) Israel as the object of God's deepest affection, 'the beloved of my soul,' whom he must nevertheless deliver into the hands of enemies (Jer 12:7). The term captures the anguished irony of divine judgment: God must abandon the very people he loves most intimately. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: the-beloved-of | es: amada-de | fr: [ידדות] | de: [ידדות] Jer 12:7

יְדָה H3034 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (114×)

To give thanks, praise, or confess (Hifil/Hitpael); originally 'to throw, cast' (Piel); the core gesture of publicly declaring what God has done.

One of the most theologically rich verbs in the Psalter, yadah in the Hifil means to give thanks or praise — not as private sentiment but as public declaration. The Hitpael reflexive shifts the focus inward: to confess one's sins before God (Lev 16:21, Neh 9:2). Underneath both liturgical uses lies an older physical meaning preserved in the Piel: to throw or cast down (Lam 3:53). Palmyrene inscriptions confirm the thanksgiving sense with מודא ('render thanks'), paralleling Greek eucharisteo, while Ethiopic retains the throwing sense. German danken and French célébrer each capture only part of the word's range — the full picture requires both the outward praise and the inward confession.

1. give thanks, praise (Hifil) (94×) The dominant Hifil sense covering 94 of 114 occurrences: to give thanks to or praise God. Spanish Te-alabaré ('I will praise you') and French célébrer ('to celebrate') reflect the doxological force. This is the verb of the great thanksgiving psalms (Ps 107:1, 118:1, 136:1 — 'Give thanks to the LORD, for he is good') and of David's appointment of Levitical singers (1 Chr 16:7-8). The Hifil causative nuance suggests making known, declaring publicly. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: I-will-give-thanks-to-You, I-will-give-thanks-to-you, I-will-praise-you | es:

Alabad, Dad-gracias, Te-alabaré | fr: célébrer, le-célébrer, louer | de: [הודו], danken, dankte 1Chr 16:7; 1Chr 16:8; 1Chr 16:34; 1Chr 16:35; 1Chr 16:41

2. confess (Hitpael) (11×) The Hitpael reflexive stem used 11 times to describe personal or communal confession of sin. Leviticus uses it for the Day of Atonement ritual where Aaron confesses over the scapegoat (Lev 16:21), and for individual guilt offerings (Lev 5:5). Spanish confesando and French confesser align perfectly. The reflexive form implies self-examination — turning the declarative act of yadah inward upon oneself. PRAISE AND BOASTING
en: and-I-confessed, and-as-was-confessing, and-confessing | es: Y-confesarán, confesando, y-confesando | fr: et-il-devra-confesser, et-ils-devra-confesser, et-ils-fera-confesser | de: [ויתודו], [וכהתודתו], [ומתודה] Lev 5:5; Lev 16:21; Lev 26:40; Num 5:7; 2Chr 30:22

3. confess, acknowledge (Hifil) (6×) A Hifil usage where the meaning shifts from praise to confession or acknowledgment of sin, as in 1 Kings 8:33-35 (Solomon's temple prayer) and Psalm 32:5 ('I acknowledged my sin to you'). French je-célébrerai oddly glosses Ps 32:5, but Spanish confesaré captures the correct sense. These 6 occurrences show the Hifil can mean 'acknowledge, admit' when the object is wrongdoing rather than God's goodness — the same public declaration, but of guilt rather than grace. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: I-will-confess, and-confess, and-they-confess | es: confesaré, y-confesaren, y-confesarán | fr: et-ils-confesse, et-louer, je-célébrerai | de: [ומודה], dankte, und-danken 1Kgs 8:33; 1Kgs 8:35; 2Chr 6:24; 2Chr 6:26; Ps 32:5

4. throw down, cast (Piel) (2×) The rare Piel stem preserving the original physical meaning of yadah: to throw down or cast. Only two clear instances survive — Lam 3:53 ('they cast me into a pit') and Zech 1:21 ('to throw down the horns'). Ethiopic ወደየ retains this concrete throwing sense more broadly. Spanish para-derribar ('to throw down') captures the violent physicality that undergirds the entire semantic development: from hurling stones to hurling praise. THROWING AND CASTING
en: and-cast, to-throw-down | es: para-derribar, y-arrojaron | fr: et-sa-main, louer | de: [לידות], und-seine-Hand Lam 3:53; Zech 1:21

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Jer 50:14 where the sense appears to be 'shoot' (arrows), as an extension of the throwing meaning. English 'shoot' and Spanish disparen ('fire!') treat it as a military command. This bridges the Piel 'cast' sense and may represent an archaic or dialectal usage of the root in a martial context — hurling projectiles at Babylon. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: shoot | es: disparen | fr: sa-main | de: seine-Hand Jer 50:14

יְדִי H3035 N-proper-ms (3×)
Yiddo/Yaddai, personal name of two individuals (Manassite chief, man with foreign wife)
A Hebrew personal name appearing in late biblical texts. The name refers to two distinct individuals: a Manassite chief mentioned in 1 Chronicles 27:21, and one of those who took foreign wives according to Ezra 10:43 (with textual variants between Ketiv and Qere readings). The Greek Septuagint variants (Ιαδδαι, Ιαδει, Ιαδιαι) and the Palmyrene parallel suggest the name may mean 'beloved' or 'chosen.' The confusion in the glosses (some translations rendering it as 'his hand') indicates scribal challenges with this rare proper name.

(3×) A personal name with uncertain etymology, appearing in genealogical and post-exilic contexts. The textual variation (Yiddo/Yaddai/Yadav) and the appearance of 'his hand' in some glosses (German 'seine-Hand', French 'sa-main') suggests scribes sometimes confused this rare name with the common word for 'hand' (יד), highlighting the ambiguity in the manuscript tradition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Yaddai, Yiddo, [Yadav] | es: Iddo, Yadai, [Yadu] | fr: [ידי], sa-main | de: [(ידי)], [[ידו]], seine-Hand 1Chr 27:21; Ezra 10:43

יְדוֹן H3036 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Jadon, a Meronothite who helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls (Nehemiah 3:7)
This personal name belongs to one of the builders who participated in Nehemiah's restoration of Jerusalem's fortifications. Jadon worked alongside Melatiah the Gibeonite on the section extending to the official seat of the governor of the province Beyond the River. His designation as 'the Meronothite' identifies him by hometown, a settlement whose exact location remains uncertain. The name appears only in this single context.

(1×) A builder from Meronoth who joined Nehemiah's wall reconstruction project, working on the section near the governor's residence (Neh 3:7). His participation represents the broader community involvement in restoring Jerusalem's defenses beyond the immediate returnees. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Jadon | es: y-Jadón | fr: [וידון] | de: [וידון] Neh 3:7

יַדּוּעַ H3037 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Yaddua/Jaddua, personal name (chief of the people, high priest in Alexander's time)
A personal name borne by significant leaders in post-exilic Jerusalem. The name appears in Nehemiah 10:21 for a chief of the people who sealed the covenant, and in Nehemiah 12:11, 22 for a priest—probably the high priest during Alexander the Great's era. The Greek renderings (Ιαδδου, Ιεδδου) and the scholarly suggestion to read it as יְהוּדָע reflect ongoing discussion about the name's original form. This individual represents the bridge between Persian and Hellenistic periods in Jewish history.

(3×) A proper name signifying leadership in the restored community. The high priest Jaddua is particularly notable as he served during the pivotal transition to Greek dominance, making this name a historical marker. The textual variants in different manuscripts (וידוע, יהודע) suggest the name was phonologically challenging or underwent spelling standardization over time. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jaddua, Yaddua, and-Yaddua | es: Jadúa, y-Jadúa | fr: [וידוע], [ידוע] | de: [וידוע], [ידוע] Neh 10:21; Neh 12:11; Neh 12:22

יְדוּתוּן H3038 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (20×)
Jeduthun — Levitical musician and choirmaster appointed by David for temple worship
A proper name designating one of David's three chief musicians, alongside Asaph and Heman. Jeduthun (also spelled Yedutun or Yedithun) led one of the three Levitical temple choirs and is called 'the king's seer' in 2 Chronicles 35:15. His name appears in the superscriptions of Psalms 39, 62, and 77, likely indicating a musical style or tradition associated with his choir. His descendants continued the family's liturgical vocation for generations, forming a perpetual guild of temple singers (1 Chr 16:41–42; 25:1–6; 2 Chr 29:14).

Jeduthun (proper name) (20×) The personal name Jeduthun (יְדִיתוּן / יְדִתוּן / יְדוּתוּן), identifying a Levitical choirmaster appointed by David. All 20 occurrences appear in Chronicles, Nehemiah, and Psalm superscriptions. Spanish renders 'Jedutún/Yedutun,' French and German 'Jeduthun/Jedutun.' The spelling variations (with and without yod, with holam or qibbuts) reflect dialectal or scribal fluidity rather than different individuals — the referent is consistently one musician-seer and his liturgical dynasty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jeduthun, Yeduthun, Yedutun | es: (Jedutún), (Yedutun), Jedutún | fr: Jeduthun, et-Jeduthun, zu-Jeduthun | de: Jedutun, [(ידותון)], [[ידיתון]] 1Chr 9:16; 1Chr 16:38; 1Chr 16:41; 1Chr 16:42

יָדִיד H3039a Adj-fp (8×)
Beloved, dear, lovely; used of persons cherished by God and of places precious to the worshiper.
A poetic adjective expressing tender affection and preciousness, used both substantively and attributively. Moses blesses Benjamin as 'the beloved of YHWH' who dwells securely between God's shoulders (Deut 33:12). Isaiah sings of 'my beloved' using this word for the Lord as a vinedresser (Isa 5:1). The psalmist cries 'How lovely are your dwelling places!' (Ps 84:1), and Psalm 45 is titled 'a song of loves' using the feminine plural as an abstract noun. The range from personal devotion to aesthetic delight makes this word uniquely warm in Hebrew poetry.

beloved, dear one (8×) Beloved, dear, lovely – expressing deep affection or aesthetic delight in a poetic register. Used substantively of persons loved by God or by the speaker: Benjamin is 'the beloved of YHWH' (Deut 33:12); the prophet addresses YHWH as 'my beloved' in the vineyard song (Isa 5:1); the psalmist's 'beloved ones' are those God delivers (Ps 60:5; 108:6); and God gives to His beloved in sleep (Ps 127:2). Used attributively of places: 'How lovely are your tabernacles!' (Ps 84:1). As a feminine abstract, it appears in Psalm 45:1 in the phrase 'a song of loves' (shir yedidot). Jeremiah 11:15 applies it to Judah as God's 'beloved' even in judgment. The French 'bien-aimé' and Spanish 'amado/amada' capture the warmth of endearment. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: Your-beloved-ones, beloved-of, for-my-beloved | es: a-amada-mi, a-amado-suyo, a-mi-amado | fr: [לִידִידֹת], beloved-de, bien-aimé | de: [לִידִידֹת], beloved-von, dein-Geliebter-Leute Deut 33:12; Ps 60:5; Ps 84:1; Ps 108:6; Ps 127:2

יְדִיד H3039b N-fp (1×)

Beloved things or love itself; lovely (Psalm 45:1)

This feminine plural adjective functions as an abstract noun meaning 'love' or 'lovely things.' The psalm superscription describes the composition as 'a song of loves' or 'a love song,' introducing the royal wedding hymn that follows. While BDB lists this under the entry for the adjective 'beloved,' the plural form here captures the theme and mood of the psalm rather than denoting specific beloved persons.

(1×) The abstract concept of love or the quality of loveliness, used in the superscription to characterize Psalm 45 as a composition celebrating love (Ps 45:1). The term sets the thematic key for the royal wedding song that extols both bride and groom. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: of-love | es: amores | fr: bien-aimé | de: von-lieben Ps 45:1

יְדִידָה H3040 N-proper-fs (1×)

Yedidah, mother of King Josiah (2 Kings 22:1)

This feminine personal name means 'beloved' and belongs to the wife of Amon and mother of the reforming king Josiah. She came from Bozkath, a town in the Shephelah of Judah. While the text provides no further information about her character or influence, her name appears in the regal formulae that introduce Josiah's reign, establishing his maternal lineage according to standard Deuteronomistic historical practice.

(1×) The mother of King Josiah, daughter of Adaiah from Bozkath (2 Kgs 22:1). Her name, meaning 'beloved,' may reflect parental affection or signal divine favor anticipating her son's pivotal role in Judah's religious reforms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yedidah | es: Yedida | fr: Yedidah | de: Yedidah 2Kgs 22:1

יְדִידְיָה H3041 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jedidiah, 'beloved of Yah,' name given to Solomon (2 Samuel 12:25)

This theophoric name meaning 'beloved of Yahweh' was given to Solomon by the prophet Nathan after his birth. The naming carries profound theological weight: despite David's sin with Bathsheba and the death of their first child, God's love rests on this second son. The text explicitly states the name was given 'because of Yahweh,' signaling divine election and favor. Though Solomon is known by his other name throughout Scripture, this alternative designation reveals his special covenant status.

(1×) The prophetic name Nathan gave to Solomon at birth, meaning 'beloved of Yahweh' (2 Sam 12:25). The naming demonstrates God's restorative grace and election of David's son despite the adultery and murder that preceded his conception, marking Solomon as divinely chosen. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jedidiah | es: Jedidyas | fr: Jedidiah | de: Jedidiah 2Sam 12:25

יְדָיָה H3042 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jedaiah (proper name: 'Yahweh has known'; Simeonite chief and Nehemiah-era builder)

This personal name appears for two different individuals: a Simeonite clan chief listed in Chronicles and a builder who helped repair Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah. The name itself means 'Yahweh has known' or 'known by Yahweh,' reflecting the common Hebrew practice of embedding theological statements in names. The Septuagint's varied transliterations (Iedia, Ieddaa, Ieddeia) show the challenge of rendering Hebrew names in Greek, while modern translations generally settle on 'Jedaiah' in English.

(2×) A proper name borne by at least two men in Israel's history. First, a chief in the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr 4:37), and second, one of the builders who repaired Jerusalem's wall alongside Nehemiah (Neh 3:10). The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration practices: English 'Jedaiah' or 'Yedayah,' Spanish 'Jedaías' or 'Yedaya,' while French and German preserve the Hebrew form, reflecting uncertainty about vowel pointing in rare names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jedaiah, Yedayah | es: Jedaías, Yedaya | fr: [יְדִיָה] | de: [יְדִיָה], seine-Haende 1Chr 4:37; Neh 3:10

יְדִיעֲאֵל H3043 N-proper-ms (6×)

Yediael — a proper name meaning 'known of God,' borne by a Benjamite warrior, a Davidic hero, and a Korahite gatekeeper.

A Hebrew personal name (יְדִיעֲאֵל) meaning 'known of God' or 'God knows,' carried by at least three distinct individuals in the Chronicler's records. The most prominent is a Benjamite clan leader whose descendants are enumerated among mighty warriors (1 Chr 7:6–11). Another Yediael appears among David's elite soldiers (1 Chr 11:45), likely the same Manassite captain who defected to David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:21). A third serves as a Korahite temple gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:2). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Ιεδιηλ and Ελθειηλ, reflecting textual fluidity in the Greek transmission.

Yediael (6×) The proper name Yediael (יְדִיעֲאֵל, 'known of God'), used for three or more individuals in Chronicles: a Benjamite ancestor of a warrior clan (1 Chr 7:6, 10, 11), one of David's mighty men who may also be the Manassite captain of 1 Chr 12:21, and a Korahite gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:2). English glosses render it as 'Yediael' or 'Yediaael'; Spanish and French follow with 'Jediael' and 'Jediaël' respectively, all preserving the theophoric element. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yediaael, Yediael, and-Yediaael | es: Jediael, Yediael, y-Yediael | fr: Jediaël, et-Jediaël | de: [וידיעאל], [ידיעאל] 1Chr 7:6; 1Chr 7:10; 1Chr 7:11; 1Chr 11:45; 1Chr 12:21

יִדְלָף H3044 N-proper-ms (1×)

Jidlaph, son of Nahor and brother of Abraham (Genesis 22:22)

This personal name belongs to one of Nahor's eight sons by his wife Milcah, making him Abraham's nephew. The name's etymology is uncertain, though some suggest a connection to weeping or dripping. Like several of Nahor's sons, Jidlaph represents an Aramean tribal ancestor, though no further biblical narrative develops his lineage. His inclusion in the genealogy establishes the broader kinship network connecting Abraham to Mesopotamian peoples.

(1×) One of the eight sons of Nahor (Abraham's brother) and Milcah, listed in the genealogy of Genesis 22:22. The name represents an Aramean tribal ancestor, expanding the genealogical connection between Abraham's family and the peoples of Paddan-Aram. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jidlaph | es: Yidlaph | fr: Jidlaph | de: Jidlaf Gen 22:22

יָדַע H3045 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (953×)

to know (cognitively, relationally, carnally); to perceive, understand, recognize, be acquainted with

A foundational verb spanning cognitive knowledge, personal relationship, and intimate experience. The core Qal sense covers knowing facts and perceiving truth, but the verb extends to relational knowing—being personally acquainted with someone—and even sexual intimacy, where 'he knew her' becomes the Hebrew euphemism for marital union. The causative stems (Hifil, Piel) mean 'to make known' or 'to inform,' while passive forms (Niphal, Pual) express being known or discovered. The reflexive Hitpael captures self-revelation: 'I will make myself known.' This single root weaves together mental perception, personal relationship, and bodily knowledge.

1. Qal: to know, perceive, understand (829×) The overwhelming majority sense: cognitive knowledge spanning facts, situations, and truth. Multilingual glosses converge on 'know' (English), 'conocer/saber' (Spanish), 'connaître/savoir' (French), 'erkennen/wissen' (German), revealing a universal semantic core. Exodus 7:5 ('the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD') exemplifies recognition through divine action. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: And-shall-know, and-shall-know, and-they-shall-know | es: Y-conocerán, Y-sabrá, Y-sabrán | fr: et—connaître, et-connaître, et-ils—connaître | de: und-erkennen, und-sie-erkannten, und-sie-soll-wissen Exod 7:5; Exod 14:4; Exod 14:18; Exod 29:46; Esth 4:14

2. Qal: knower, one who knows (participle as substantive) (29×) Qal active participle as substantive: 'one who knows,' 'knower,' or even 'acquaintance.' Genesis 3:5 uses this participially ('knowing good and evil'), while Psalm passages speak of 'my acquaintances.' The German 'er weiss' (he knows) and Spanish 'conocedor' (knower) confirm the participial-substantival shift. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: and-known, and-my-acquaintances, and-my-close-friends | es: conoce, conocedor, conocedora-de | fr: connaître, et-connaître-moi, et-connu | de: er-weiss, erkennen, erkennend Gen 3:5; Gen 25:27; Num 24:16; Num 31:17; Deut 1:13

3. Hifil: to make known, inform, declare (29×) Hifil causative: 'to make known,' 'to inform,' 'to teach.' Genesis 41:39 has God making known to Joseph the dream's meaning. The Spanish 'dar a conocer' (to make known) and French 'faire connu' track the causative morphology precisely, showing cross-linguistic alignment in how Hebrew causatives map to Romance periphrastic structures. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: You-make-me-know, and-make-known, and-taught | es: (conocido), Haz-conocer, dad-a-conocer | fr: a-fit-connu, connaître, connaître-moi | de: berichte-uns, du-habe-informed, erkennen Gen 41:39; Exod 18:16; Exod 18:20; Exod 33:13; Num 16:5

4. Niphal: to be known, become known (26×) Niphal passive: 'to be known,' 'to become known,' 'to be revealed.' Genesis 41:21 describes how the cows 'could not be known' (no se conocía) to have eaten the fat ones. Exodus 6:3 ('I made myself known') uses the reflexive nuance of Niphal. The passive voice glosses (French 'être connu,' German 'gewusst werden') confirm the passive morphology. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: I-made-known, I-made-myself-known, and-it-shall-be-known | es: Y-será-conocida, fue-descubierto, fui-conocido | fr: –cela-être-connu, –être-connu, Je-fit-connu | de: er-weiss, erkennen, erkennend Gen 41:21; Gen 41:31; Exod 2:14; Exod 6:3; Exod 21:36

5. Qal: to know carnally (sexual intimacy) (12×) Sexual intimacy: 'to know carnally.' Genesis 4:1 ('Adam knew Eve his wife') inaugurates this euphemistic use. Spanish 'conoció,' Swahili 'alijua,' and Korean '동침하다' (to sleep with) show how translators navigate this delicate sense—some preserving the euphemism, others opting for clarity. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: And-knew, had-known, had-known-her | es: Y-conoció, conocieron, conoció | fr: Et-connut, avait-connu, avait-connu-sa | de: er-wusste-ihr, erkannte, haben-gewusst Gen 4:1; Gen 4:17; Gen 4:25; Gen 24:16; Num 31:18

6. Qal: to know a person, be acquainted with (10×) Relational, experiential knowledge of persons: to recognize, be acquainted with, have intimate familiarity. Deuteronomy 34:10 speaks of Moses whom 'the LORD knew face to face.' This is not cognitive knowledge about someone, but personal knowing of someone—captured by the direct personal object construction. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: knew, knew-him, they-knew | es: conocieron, conocieron-lo, conoció | fr: connaître, connut, connut-lui | de: erkennen, kannte, sie-wusste Deut 8:3; Deut 8:16; Deut 29:26; Deut 32:17; Deut 34:10

7. Qal: infinitive absolute (emphatic surely/certainly) (8×) Infinitive absolute used adverbially for emphasis: 'surely know,' 'certainly,' 'knowing full well.' 1 Samuel 20:3 has David swearing 'your father surely knows' (saber que sabe). The doubling of the root for intensification is a Semitic idiom reflected in the translations' emphatic phrasing. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: know, knowing, surely | es: saber, sabiendo | fr: connaître, sachant, sais | de: erkannte, wisse, wissend 1Sam 20:3; 1Sam 20:9; 1Sam 28:1; 1Kgs 2:37; 1Kgs 2:42

8. (2×) Sense unclear from glosses, appearing only in Leviticus 4:23, 28 with specialized cultic vocabulary ('it is made known,' 'fuere dado a conocer'). Likely a passive sense related to sin being revealed or brought to attention. KNOWING AND LEARNING en: it-is-made-known | es: fuere-dado-a-conocer | fr: cela-est-fit-connu | de: es-ist-machte-gewusst Lev 4:23; Lev 4:28

9. Piel: to cause to know, make to know (2×) Piel intensive-causative: 'to cause to know,' appearing only in the ketiv/qere textual variants of Job 38:12. The Piel is rarer than Hifil for this semantic function, suggesting intensive or specialized causation. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: [have-you-caused-to-know], have-you-caused-to-know | es: (Q:hiciste-conocer), [K:hiciste-conocer] | fr: connaître | de: wusste Job 38:12

10. Hitpael: to make oneself known, reveal oneself (2×) Hitpael reflexive: 'to make oneself known,' 'to reveal oneself.' Genesis 45:1 has Joseph making himself known to his brothers (Spanish 'darse a conocer'). Numbers 12:6 describes how the LORD makes himself known in visions—active self-disclosure, not passive being-known. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: I-make-myself-known, when-made-known | es: al-darse-a-conocer, me-daré-a-conocer | fr: je-faire-myself-connu, quand-fit-connu | de: als-sich-zu-erkennen-gab, ich-machen-myself-gewusst Gen 45:1; Num 12:6

11. Pual: acquaintance, known one (passive participle) (2×) Pual intensive-passive participle as substantive: 'acquaintance,' 'kinsman,' 'close friend.' Ruth 2:1 introduces Boaz as a 'kinsman' (pariente) of Naomi. The passive participle used nominally indicates someone who is known, i.e., an acquaintance or relative. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv], and-his-acquaintances | es: [pariente], y-conocidos-de-él | fr: [cétiv], et-son-acquaintances | de: und-sein-acquaintances, wusste Ruth 2:1; 2Kgs 10:11

12. (1×) Unclear sense, appearing once in 2 Samuel 19:35 where the elderly Barzillai asks 'Can I discern?' (Spanish 'acaso conozco'). Likely refers to perceptual discernment or ability to distinguish. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: can-I-discern | es: acaso-conozco | fr: peut-je-discerne | de: kann-ich-discern 2Sam 19:35

13. (1×) Unclear sense, appearing once in 1 Samuel 21:3 where David says 'I have directed' (Spanish 'hice saber'). Possibly a causative sense of making known or giving instruction, but the context is ambiguous. KNOWING AND LEARNING en: I-have-directed | es: hice-saber | fr: je-ai-directed | de: ich-habe-directed 1Sam 21:3

יְדַע H3046 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (47×)

To know, perceive, or understand; in the causative, to make known, declare, or reveal information to another.

An Aramaic cognate of Hebrew yada^{c}, this verb spans the full arc of cognition from simple awareness to authoritative declaration. In Daniel and Ezra it appears most often in its Haphel (causative) form, where kings and officials 'make known' dreams, decrees, and legal matters. The Peal (basic) stem covers ordinary knowing and perceiving, while the passive participle marks what is publicly recognized or established. Spanish and French translations consistently distinguish 'hacer saber / faire savoir' (cause to know) from 'conocer / connaître' (to know), confirming the causative-versus-basic split across the senses.

1. to make known, declare (24×) The Haphel causative: to cause someone to know, to declare, inform, or reveal. This is the most frequent use in Ezra-Daniel, where court officials 'make known' (Ezra 4:14, 16) or God reveals hidden things (Dan 2:28-29). The multilingual evidence is decisive: English 'make known,' Spanish 'hacer saber / dar a conocer,' and French 'faire savoir / faire connaître' all employ causative periphrasis, distinguishing this clearly from simple cognition. KNOWING AND LEARNING

en: I-will-make-known-to-him, You-have-made-known-to-me, You-have-made-known-to-us | es: Hacemos-saber, dar-a-conocer, darme-a-conocer | fr: et-faire-savoir, faire-connaître, faire-savoir | de: [והודענא], [מהודעין], wissen-lassen Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 5:10; Ezra 7:24; Dan 2:5

2. to know, perceive (18×) The Peal active: to know, perceive, or understand a fact or situation. Daniel 'knew' the king's purpose (Dan 2:8); Ezra's appointees are 'those who know the laws of your God' (Ezra 7:25). French 'connaître' and Spanish 'conocer' confirm the stative-cognitive reading. This sense covers both acquired knowledge and ongoing awareness. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: and-I-will-know, and-know, he-knew | es: a-los-que-conocen, conoce, conocerás | fr: et-faire-connaître, et-faire-savoir, faire-connaître | de: [וחנדע], [ידע], und-wissen-lassen Ezra 4:15; Ezra 7:25; Dan 2:8; Dan 2:9

3. to be known (4×) The Peal passive participle functioning predicatively: to be known, recognized, or publicly acknowledged. Used of the city Jerusalem being 'known' as rebellious (Ezra 4:12-13), and of matters 'known' to the king (Ezra 5:8). Spanish 'conocido / sea conocido' and French 'faire connaître' in passive constructions align with this established-fact nuance. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: be-known, known | es: Conocido, conocido, sea-conocido | fr: faire-connaître, faire-savoir | de: [ידיע], wissen-lassen Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:13; Ezra 5:8; Dan 3:18

4. (1×) A Haphel usage with pedagogical force: to cause others to know in the sense of teaching or instructing. Attested in Ezra 7:25, where those who know the law are to 'teach' those who do not. Spanish 'enseñaréis' (you shall teach) and English 'you shall teach' reveal that this occurrence carries a didactic connotation beyond simple informing, bridging declaring and formal instruction. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: you-shall-teach | es: enseñaréis | fr: faire-savoir | de: [תהודעון] Ezra 7:25

יָדָע H3047 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Yada (proper name: 'he knows/knew'; descendant of Judah in Chronicles genealogy)

This brief personal name appears only in the genealogy of Judah's descendants, mentioned twice in rapid succession as a son of Onam (1 Chr 2:28, 32). The name derives from the common Hebrew root for 'to know,' and BDB notes that in Sabaean inscriptions it served as a royal epithet meaning 'the knowing one' or 'the shrewd one.' The name's simplicity and rarity have led most translators to simply transliterate it as 'Yada' across languages, preserving the Hebrew form.

(2×) A proper name appearing in the Chronicler's genealogies of Judah, specifically as a descendant through Jerahmeel. The name occurs twice in the same genealogical context (1 Chr 2:28, 32), both times referring to the same individual. Most translations preserve the Hebrew form: English 'Yada,' Spanish 'Yada,' with French and German also maintaining the Hebrew spelling, since the name is too rare to have acquired a traditional rendering. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yada, and-Yada | es: Yada, y-Yada | fr: [ויד], [ידע] | de: [ויד], [ידע] 1Chr 2:28; 1Chr 2:32

יְדַעְיָה H3048 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (11×)

Jedaiah (יְדַעְיָה) — 'YHWH has known/regarded'; priestly name borne by several postexilic figures

The personal name Jedaiah (יְדַעְיָה, 'YHWH has known' or 'YHWH has regarded') designates several individuals in the priestly and postexilic records. The most prominent is the head of the second priestly division (1 Chr 24:7), whose descendants returned from Babylon as a large priestly family numbering 973 (Ezra 2:36; Neh 7:39). The name also appears among those who settled in Jerusalem after the return (1 Chr 9:10; Neh 11:10) and in lists of priestly signatories and participants in the dedication of the wall (Neh 12:6-7, 19, 21). Zechariah 6:10, 14 names a Jedaiah among exiles from whom gold and silver are taken to make a symbolic crown.

Jedaiah, priestly name (11×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH has known/regarded,' borne by multiple priestly figures. Most notably the ancestor of a large priestly family in the second division (1 Chr 24:7) whose 973 descendants returned from exile (Ezra 2:36; Neh 7:39). Also appears in postexilic settlement lists (1 Chr 9:10; Neh 11:10), priestly rotation registers (Neh 12:6-7, 19, 21), and Zechariah's symbolic crown narrative (Zech 6:10, 14). Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Jedaías/Jedaiah.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jedaiah, Yedayah, and-to-Yedayah | es: Jedaiás, Jedaías, Yedaías | fr: Jedaeja, Jédaïa, [וליד‍עיה] | de: [ולידעיה], [ידעיה], [לידעיה] 1Chr 9:10; 1Chr 24:7; Ezra 2:36; Neh 7:39; Neh 11:10

יִדְּעֹנִי H3049 Conj-w / N-ms (11×)

Familiar spirit, spiritist — one who conjures the dead or channels occult knowledge; always condemned

The noun יִדְּעֹנִי (yiddoni) designates a practitioner of divination who claims esoteric knowledge through contact with the spirit world. Etymologically linked to the root יָדַע ('to know'), the term suggests one who 'knows' by supernatural or forbidden means. It appears almost invariably paired with אוֹב ('medium, necromancer'), forming a stock phrase for condemned occult consultation. The Mosaic law explicitly prohibits turning to yiddonim (Lev 19:31; 20:6, 27; Deut 18:11), and the reforms of both Saul (1 Sam 28:3, 9) and Josiah (2 Kgs 23:24) included their expulsion. Isaiah 8:19 and 19:3 depict such consultation as the antithesis of seeking YHWH.

familiar spirit, spiritist, medium (11×) A spiritist, familiar spirit, or wizard — a person (or the spirit they channel) who claims occult knowledge, especially through communication with the dead. Nearly always paired with אוֹב (medium/necromancer) as a hendiadys for forbidden divination. Condemned in Leviticus 19:31; 20:6, 27 and Deuteronomy 18:11; purged by Saul (1 Sam 28:3, 9) and Josiah (2 Kgs 23:24). Isaiah contrasts consulting yiddonim with seeking God (Isa 8:19; 19:3). Spanish 'adivino/espiritista,' English 'spiritist/familiar spirit,' and German 'Wahrsager' all attempt to render a culturally specific term. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS en: and-spiritist, and-spiritists, or-familiar-spirit | es: adivino, los-adivinos, o-adivino | fr: [והידענים], [וידעוני], et-spiritists | de: [הידענים], [וידעוני], der-spiritists Lev 19:31; Lev 20:6; Lev 20:27; Deut 18:11; 1Sam 28:3

יָהּ H3050 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (48×)

Yah – a contracted form of the divine name YHWH, used in poetry, praise, and the exclamation Hallelujah

Yah is a poetic contraction of the divine name YHWH (Yahweh), appearing 48 times almost exclusively in elevated or liturgical contexts. It first surfaces in the Song of the Sea – 'my strength and my song is Yah' (Exod 15:2) – and recurs in the archaic phrase 'a hand upon the throne of Yah' (Exod 17:16). Its most famous setting is the Psalter, where it anchors the hallelu-Yah exclamation ('Praise Yah!') that opens and closes the Hallel psalms and the final doxology of the Psalter (Pss 113-118; 146-150). Isaiah quotes the Song of the Sea (Isa 12:2) and uses the doubled form 'in Yah YHWH' (Isa 26:4). The name also appears embedded in dozens of theophoric personal names (Elijah, Isaiah, Zechariah), though those compounds are separate lemmas. Spanish and French Yah and German JAH preserve the form directly.

Yah (48×) The contracted poetic form of the divine name Yahweh, used in early victory poetry (Exod 15:2; 17:16), prophetic citation (Isa 12:2; 26:4; 38:11), and extensively in the Psalter as the core of the hallelu-Yah doxology (Pss 113:1; 115:18; 146:1; 150:6). Its restriction to liturgical, poetic, and exclamatory contexts distinguishes it from the full tetragrammaton. Spanish Yah, French Yah, and German JAH transliterate it directly, reflecting its status as a distinct form of the divine name across all 48 occurrences. DIVINE NAME YHWH

en: Yah | es: Yah, a-Yah | fr: Yah | de: JAH, Yah Exod 15:2; Exod 17:16; Ps 68:4; Ps 68:18; Ps 77:11

יְהַב H3051 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3fs (33×)

To give, hand over; also to ascribe (glory), to exhort ('come!'), and rarely to set or place.

An ancient verb shared across the Semitic family — Arabic 'wahaba,' Ethiopic 'wahaba,' Aramaic 'yehab' — all meaning 'to give.' In Hebrew it survives almost exclusively as an imperative, lending it an urgency absent from the more common 'natan.' When Rachel cries 'Give me children!' (Gen 30:1), the verb pulses with desperation. In worship, it becomes the call to 'ascribe' glory to the LORD (Ps 29:1; 1 Chr 16:28). And in one of the Bible's most memorable scenes, the builders of Babel say 'habah!' — 'Come!' — let us build a tower (Gen 11:3-4), where the 'giving' sense has faded entirely into pure exhortation.

1. give, hand over (17×) The basic sense of giving, handing over, or providing something concrete. Rachel demands children (Gen 30:1), Egyptians beg for bread (Gen 47:15-16), and Ruth is told to hold out her shawl to receive barley (Ruth 3:15). Spanish 'da/dad' and French 'donne/donner' map directly. The imperative-only survival in Hebrew gives every occurrence an immediacy — this is always a demand or request, never a calm statement. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: give, give- | es: Da, Dad, Danos | fr: donne, donner, donner- | de: [הב], der-in-ihm, der-in-mir Gen 29:21; Gen 30:1; Gen 47:15; Gen 47:16; Deut 1:13

2. ascribe, attribute glory (10×) To ascribe, attribute, or render honor and glory to God. Deuteronomy 32:3 calls hearers to 'ascribe greatness to our God,' and Psalm 29:1 repeats the summons: 'ascribe to the LORD glory and strength.' The underlying metaphor treats praise as something handed over, given to God as His due. Spanish 'dad' (give, plural imperative) retains the literal giving imagery even in worship contexts. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: ascribe | es: Dad, dad | fr: [הבו], ascribe, le-donner | de: [הבו], ascribe Deut 32:3; 1Chr 16:28; 1Chr 16:29; Ps 29:1

3. come! (exhortation) (5×) An exhortative interjection meaning 'come!' or 'come now!' — the giving sense has grammaticalized into a particle of urging. Genesis 11:3-4 uses it twice as Babel's builders rally each other: 'Come, let us make bricks... Come, let us build a city.' God echoes the same form back in Gen 11:7: 'Come, let us go down.' Spanish renders it 'vamos' (let's go), showing the complete semantic shift from transfer to motion. GOING AND LEADING

en: come | es: Vamos, dame-, venid | fr: venir | de: kommen, wohlan Gen 11:3; Gen 11:4; Gen 11:7; Gen 38:16; Exod 1:10

4. set, place (1×) A rare sense meaning to set, place, or assign to a position, attested in 2 Samuel 11:15 where David writes to Joab: 'Set Uriah in the forefront of the fiercest battle.' Spanish 'poned' (place) and French 'plaça' (placed) confirm the spatial reading. The 'giving' metaphor extends here to placing someone into a role or location — giving them a position, fatally. PLACING AND LAYING

en: set | es: poned | fr: plaça | de: setzte 2Sam 11:15

יְהַב H3052 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (28×)

To give, grant, bestow; passively, to be given; also to hand over, deliver up, and to place or set in position.

This Aramaic verb yehab is the standard word for 'give' in the biblical Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel, functioning as the semantic equivalent of Hebrew natan. Its range mirrors the breadth you would expect of a basic transfer verb: God 'gives' kingdoms to whomever he wills (Dan 2:21, 37), temple vessels are 'given back' to Jerusalem (Ezra 5:14), and bodies are 'given over' to the fiery furnace (Dan 3:28). The Syriac cognate is identical, and Arabic a'ta preserves the same core. What makes yehab linguistically interesting is its clean split between active bestowal (Pe'al) and passive reception (Pe'il/Hitpe'el), a distinction Spanish marks clearly with dio versus fue-dado and German with geben versus gegeben-werden. A single occurrence at Ezra 5:16 stretches the word into 'placing' foundations — a spatial sense that Arabic wadha'a and German legen confirm as a genuine semantic extension beyond transfer.

1. to be given, be granted (15×) Passive forms meaning 'to be given, be granted' — 15 occurrences in the Nifal/Hitpael, covering royal decrees that are issued, temple funds that are allocated, and provisions that are supplied from the royal treasury. In Ezra 6:4 expenses 'shall be given' from the king's house; in Ezra 6:8-9 specific materials are 'to be given' to the Jewish elders. Spanish fue-dada and German gegeben distinguish this passive cluster cleanly from the active senses, and the Aramaic passive participle mityehab confirms the grammaticalized nature of this voice distinction. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: and-given, and-it-was-given, are-given | es: dado, era-dado, fue-dada | fr: donner, et-donner | de: [ויהיבו], [מתיהב], [מתיהבא] Ezra 4:20; Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:4; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 6:9

2. to give, bestow (9×) Active Pe'al sense: to give, bestow, grant — 9 occurrences concentrated in Daniel's court narratives where God is the subject. God 'gives' wisdom and might (Dan 2:21), 'has given' Nebuchadnezzar his kingdom (Dan 2:37-38), and Daniel acknowledges 'you have given me wisdom' (Dan 2:23). The imperative hab at Daniel 5:17 ('give your rewards to another') rounds out this active-agent cluster. Spanish dio/da and Korean 주다 consistently select active-giving vocabulary, confirming the boundary against the passive sense. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: He-gave-, He-has-given, You-have-given | es: da, dando, dio | fr: donner | de: geben Dan 2:21; Dan 2:23; Dan 2:37; Dan 2:38; Dan 2:48

3. to hand over, deliver up (3×) To hand over, deliver up, surrender — 3 occurrences where the giving involves yielding control or persons to another's power. God 'gave' the temple vessels into Nebuchadnezzar's hand (Ezra 5:12), Shadrach and companions 'gave up' their bodies to the fire (Dan 3:28), and in Daniel 7:25 the saints are 'given into' the hand of the little horn. Spanish entregaron and the Hebrew-Aramaic construction with be-yad ('into the hand of') both signal that this is coercive transfer rather than benevolent bestowal, marking a real sense boundary. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: and-gave, and-they-will-be-given, gave | es: dio, y-entregaron, y-serán-entregados | fr: donner, et-donner | de: [יהב], und-geben Ezra 5:12; Dan 3:28; Dan 7:25

4. to place, set, lay (1×) To place, set, lay — a single occurrence at Ezra 5:16 where Sheshbazzar 'laid' the foundations of the Jerusalem temple. Here yehab extends beyond transfer-of-possession into spatial positioning: something is put in a location rather than given to a person. The Nabataean cognate confirms this 'place' meaning (Cooke 102), and Spanish puso ('placed') and English 'laid' both select position-vocabulary distinct from 'give.' This represents a genuine semantic extension at the periphery of the verb's range. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: laid | es: puso | fr: donner | de: [יהב] Ezra 5:16

יְהַב H3053 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

Burden, lot, or what is given (Psalm 55:22)

This rare noun, possibly meaning 'what is given' and related to 'lot,' appears in the psalmist's exhortation to cast one's burden upon the Lord. The Targum uses a related Aramaic form in other passages. The term encompasses whatever portion of care, anxiety, or responsibility falls to a person—their 'lot' in life. The verb 'cast' suggests releasing control of one's allotted troubles into God's hands, trusting divine providence to bear what seems unbearable.

(1×) The burden, care, or anxiety that constitutes one's portion in life, which the psalmist urges should be cast upon Yahweh (Ps 55:22). The term may derive from the concept of a 'lot' or allotted portion, capturing both the inevitability and the weight of life's challenges. LOTS AND ALLOTMENT

en: your-burden | es: tu-carga | fr: donation | de: dein-burden Ps 55:22

יְהַד H3054 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

To become Jewish, convert to Judaism (Esther 8:17)

This denominative Hithpael verb describes the act of identifying oneself as a Jew or converting to Judaism. It appears in Esther during the reversal of Haman's plot, when fear of the Jews fell upon many peoples and they 'became Jews' or 'declared themselves Jews.' The context suggests both genuine conversion and pragmatic identification with the ascendant Jewish community for protection. This is the only biblical occurrence of this verb form, reflecting the unique diaspora setting where Jewish identity could be adopted or claimed.

(1×) The act of many non-Jews becoming or declaring themselves Jewish in response to Mordecai's elevation and the fear of Jewish power (Est 8:17). The Hithpael form suggests self-identification, whether through genuine conversion or strategic alignment with the victorious Jewish community. JEWISH PERSON

en: becoming-Jews | es: se-hacían-judíos | fr: [מתיהדים] | de: [מתיהדים] Esth 8:17

יְהֻד H3055 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yehud, a town in Dan's territory (Joshua 19:45)

This place name designates a town allotted to the tribe of Dan, identified with modern Yehudiyeh about eight miles east of Joppa. The name's connection to Judah (Yehudah) is uncertain, though Egyptian sources from the Amarna period mention a place Ia-u-du in this region. The site's location in Dan's coastal territory made it strategically significant, though the text provides no narrative beyond its inclusion in the boundary lists.

(1×) A town in the tribal allotment of Dan, located in the coastal plain east of Joppa (Josh 19:45). The name may reflect early Judahite settlement or influence in this region before Dan's migration northward, or it may derive from the Egyptian geographical designation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yehud | es: y-Jehúd | fr: et-Yehud | de: und-Yehud Josh 19:45

יַהְדַּי H3056 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yahdai, a member of Caleb's family (1 Chronicles 2:47)

This personal name appears in the genealogies of Judah, specifically within Caleb's extended family line. The text's syntax creates some ambiguity about whether Yahdai was a son or more distant descendant. The name's meaning is uncertain, though some suggest it means 'Yah leads' or forms a shortened theophoric construction. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, no narrative develops around this individual beyond the genealogical notation.

(1×) An individual within Caleb's lineage in the tribe of Judah (1 Chr 2:47). The genealogical context provides no additional information beyond establishing Yahdai as part of Caleb's extended family network, typical of Chronicles' comprehensive but compressed tribal records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yahdai | es: Yaday | fr: [יהדי] | de: [יהדי] 1Chr 2:47

יְהוּדִי H3057 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

The Jewess, a designation in 1 Chronicles 4:18

This feminine gentilicial adjective with the definite article designates a woman identified as Jewish or Judahite. In the genealogical passage of 1 Chronicles 4:18, the term appears in a textually difficult verse concerning the descendants of Bithiah, Pharaoh's daughter whom Mered married. The designation 'the Jewess' distinguishes this wife from Bithiah, who was Egyptian. The usage reflects the ethnic-religious identity marker that becomes prominent in post-exilic literature.

(1×) A woman identified ethnically as Jewish or Judahite, distinguished from Mered's Egyptian wife (1 Chr 4:18). The definite article suggests a specific woman whose Jewish identity was her primary designation in the genealogical record, contrasting her background with the foreign wife. JEWISH PERSON

en: the-Yehudiyah | es: la-judía | fr: [היהדיה] | de: [היהדיה] 1Chr 4:18

יְהוּא H3058 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (58×)

Jehu — primarily the zealous king of Israel who overthrew the house of Ahab; also a prophet and others

The name יְהוּא (Yehu, probably contracted from 'YHWH is He') is borne most prominently by the tenth king of Israel, anointed by Elisha's servant to execute divine judgment against Ahab's dynasty (2 Kgs 9–10). Jehu's furious chariot ride and wholesale destruction of Baal worship became legendary — Hosea 1:4 later revisits 'the blood of Jezreel' as an act requiring reckoning. A prophet named Jehu son of Hanani also appears, pronouncing judgment against Baasha (1 Kgs 16:1, 7) and recording Jehoshaphat's deeds (2 Chr 20:34). Additional bearers include one of David's warriors (1 Chr 12:3) and tribal figures in genealogies.

Jehu, king of Israel (58×) The proper name Jehu, shared by several individuals but dominated by the king of Israel (r. c. 841–814 BCE). Transliterations are consistent: Spanish 'Jehú,' French 'Jéhu,' German 'Jehu,' English 'Jehu/Yehu.' The lion's share of the 58 occurrences narrate his violent coup and purge of Baal worship (2 Kgs 9–10). The prophet Jehu son of Hanani (1 Kgs 16:1, 7; 2 Chr 19:2; 20:34) and a Davidic warrior (1 Chr 12:3) account for the remainder. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehu, Yehu | es: Jehú, Jehú?, Yehu | fr: Jéhu | de: Jehu 1Kgs 16:1; 1Kgs 16:7; 1Kgs 16:12; 1Kgs 19:16; 1Kgs 19:17

יְהוֹאָחָז H3059 N-proper-ms (20×)

Jehoahaz — a theophoric name ('YHWH has grasped') borne by kings of Israel and Judah

A theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has grasped' or 'YHWH has taken hold,' borne by several royal figures. The most prominent are Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel, whose reign was marked by Aramean oppression (2 Kgs 13:1–9, 22, 25), and Jehoahaz son of Josiah, king of Judah, who reigned only three months before Pharaoh Necho deposed him (2 Kgs 23:30–34). A variant form Joahaz (יוֹאָחָז) appears for some of the same individuals. The name is essentially an inverted form of Ahaziah (אֲחַזְיָה), both built from the same root אחז and the divine name.

Jehoahaz, king (20×) The proper name Jehoahaz (יְהוֹאָחָז) and its shortened form Joahaz (יוֹאָחָז), identifying several biblical figures — primarily a king of Israel (son of Jehu, 2 Kgs 13) and a king of Judah (son of Josiah, 2 Kgs 23:30–34). Spanish renders 'Joacaz/Joacáz,' French 'Joachaz/Jehoahaz,' German 'Joahas/Jehoahaz.' The name's theophoric element ('YHWH has seized') underscores divine sovereignty over royal succession, an irony given that both kings met unfavorable ends. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehoahaz, Yehoachaz, Yehoakhaz | es: Joacaz, Joacáz, Yehoajaz | fr: Jehoahaz, Joachaz, à-Joachaz | de: Jehoahaz, Joahas, Yehoachaz 2Kgs 10:35; 2Kgs 13:1; 2Kgs 13:4; 2Kgs 13:7; 2Kgs 13:8

יְהוֹאָשׁ H3060 N-proper-ms (17×)

Jehoash / Joash — a theophoric royal name borne by kings of Judah and Israel and several other biblical figures

Yehoash (also contracted as Yoash) is a theophoric proper name meaning 'YHWH is strong' or 'YHWH has bestowed,' borne most prominently by two kings in the divided monarchy. Jehoash of Judah, son of Ahaziah, was rescued as an infant from Queen Athaliah's massacre and hidden in the temple for six years before being crowned in Jehoiada the priest's dramatic coup (2 Kgs 11:2-21; 2 Chr 22:11-24:27). He repaired the temple but ended badly, murdered by his own servants after turning from God. Jehoash of Israel, son of Jehoahaz, visited the dying Elisha and was told to strike the ground with arrows — his halfhearted three strikes earned only three victories over Aram instead of total defeat (2 Kgs 13:10-25). He also defeated Amaziah of Judah, breaching the walls of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 14:8-16; 2 Chr 25:17-25). Other bearers include a Judahite (1 Chr 4:22), a son of Ahab's steward, and a Benjaminite warrior of David. Spanish 'Joas,' French 'Joas,' and German 'Joasch/Yehoash' all render the name.

(17×) A theophoric proper masculine name ('YHWH is strong' or 'YHWH has bestowed') borne by multiple individuals, chiefly two kings of the divided monarchy. Jehoash of Judah was the child-king hidden from Athaliah and installed by Jehoiada the priest, who repaired the temple but was later assassinated (2 Kgs 11:2-12:21; 2 Chr 22:11-24:27). Jehoash of Israel, son of Jehoahaz, received Elisha's final prophecy and defeated Aram three times, then humiliated Amaziah of Judah by breaching Jerusalem's walls (2 Kgs 13:10-14:16; 2 Chr 25:17-25; Hos 1:1; Amos 1:1). Other bearers appear in 1 Chronicles 4:22; 7:8; 12:3 and 1 Kings 22:26. The LXX renders it Ioas; Spanish 'Joas,' French 'Joas,' and German 'Joasch' are standard equivalents. JOASH PERSONAL NAME

en: Yehoash | es: Joás | fr: Joas | de: Yehoash 2Kgs 11:21; 2Kgs 12:1; 2Kgs 12:2; 2Kgs 12:4; 2Kgs 12:6

יְהוּד H3061 N-proper-ms (7×)

Yehud, the Aramaic form of 'Judah' used in post-exilic texts (Ezra, Daniel) for the province or people

Yehud is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew Yehudah (Judah), appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It designates both the Persian province of Judah and the Jewish people as an ethnic-territorial identity. In Daniel, the expression 'children of the exile of Yehud' (Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:14) marks Daniel's identity, while in Ezra it names the province where the temple rebuilding occurs (Ezra 5:1, 8; 7:14). The shift from Hebrew Yehudah to Aramaic Yehud mirrors the linguistic reality of the exilic and post-exilic periods.

Yehud (7×) The Aramaic proper noun Yehud (יְהוּד), a secondary form of Yehudah (Judah), used in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. It designates the Persian province of Judah (Ezra 5:1, 8; 7:14) and the Jewish exilic community ('children of the captivity of Yehud,' Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:14). Spanish and German both render it 'Juda,' collapsing the Hebrew-Aramaic distinction, while English sometimes preserves 'Yehud' to mark the Aramaic form. JUDAH JUDAS NAME

en: Yehud, in-Yehud, to-Yehud | es: Judá, Judá?, Yehud | fr: Juda, [בִיהוּד], [יְהוּד] | de: Juda, [בִיהוּד], [יְהוּד] Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 7:14; Dan 2:25; Dan 5:13

יְהוּדַי H3062 N-proper-ms (10×)

Judean, Jew — Aramaic gentilic noun for members of the province of Judah in the Persian period

The Aramaic noun יְהוּדָאִי (yehuda'i) designates a Judean or Jew, used exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra. It appears in correspondence between Persian officials and the returning exiles, identifying the community rebuilding Jerusalem and the temple. The adversaries report that 'the Jews who came up from you' are rebuilding the city (Ezra 4:12, 23), while the Persian decrees acknowledge 'the Jews' and their elders as legitimate agents of reconstruction (Ezra 5:1, 5; 6:7-8, 14). The term carries both ethnic and administrative force, marking the community as an identifiable group within the Persian provincial system. Spanish 'judíos' and French 'Juifs' render it straightforwardly.

Jews, Judeans (Aramaic) (10×) An Aramaic gentilic noun meaning 'Judean' or 'Jew,' referring to members of the Jewish community in the Persian-period province of Yehud. Used exclusively in the Aramaic correspondence of Ezra (4:12, 23; 5:1, 5; 6:7-8, 14), it functions as both an ethnic and an administrative identifier in official Persian documents. The adversaries use it when reporting the rebuilding to Artaxerxes, and the Persian decrees use it when authorizing temple reconstruction. Corresponds to Hebrew יְהוּדִי. Spanish 'judíos' and German 'Juden' translate the communal designation directly. JEWISH PERSON

en: Yehudaei, the-Yehudaei, the-Yehudaye | es: judíos, los-judíos | fr: Juda, Juifs | de: Juden, [יְהוּדָאִין], [יְהוּדָיֵא] Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 6:7

יְהוּדָה H3063 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (819×)

Judah — the patriarch, the tribe descended from him, or the southern kingdom bearing his name

Yehudah is one of the most historically layered names in Scripture. At Leah's declaration 'this time I will praise the LORD' (Gen 29:35), the name became bound to thanksgiving. From that fourth son of Jacob grew an entire tribe and eventually the southern kingdom that outlasted its northern counterpart. The name appears 819 times across the Hebrew Bible, spanning patriarchal narratives, tribal allotments, royal chronicles, and prophetic oracles. Cross-linguistically, the name is remarkably stable — English 'Judah,' Spanish 'Yehudah,' French 'Juda,' German 'Jehuda' — reflecting its status as an irreducible proper noun anchored in covenant history.

Judah (proper noun) (819×) The proper name Yehudah, applied to Jacob's fourth son by Leah (Gen 29:35), the tribe that bore his name and received the royal blessing (Gen 49:8-10), and the southern kingdom centered on Jerusalem. All 819 occurrences, including prepositional and conjunctive variants, refer to this single referent across its personal, tribal, and geo-political dimensions. JUDAH JUDAS NAME

en: Judah | es: Yehudah | fr: Juda | de: Jehuda, Jehudas Gen 29:35; Gen 37:26; Gen 38:1; Gen 38:2; Gen 38:6

יְהוּדִי H3064 Prep-b (81×)

Jew, Jewish person; gentilic adjective and substantive denoting a member of the people of Judah

Derived from the tribal and territorial name Judah, this gentilic term identifies a person as belonging to the Jewish people. In earlier texts it distinguishes Judahites from other Israelites, but by the Persian period — especially in Esther and Nehemiah — it functions as the primary ethnic and communal label for the post-exilic community. Zechariah 8:23 envisions nations grasping the garment of a single Jewish man, while Esther deploys the term over sixty times as the people face existential threat and deliverance. The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform: Spanish los judios, French Juif, German Jude all reflect the stable ethnic-identity sense.

Jew, Jewish person (81×) Designates a person of Jewish identity, used as both a gentilic adjective (ish yehudi, 'a Jewish man,' Zech 8:23) and a substantive noun in singular and plural. In Nehemiah and Esther the term serves as the standard communal label for the post-exilic people, carrying strong connotations of covenant solidarity. Translations across languages converge on a single ethnic-identity rendering. JEWISH PERSON

en: the-Jews, the-Yehudim | es: (los-judíos), los-judíos | fr: Juif | de: Jude Neh 1:2; Neh 4:1; Neh 4:2; Neh 4:12; Neh 5:1

יְהוּדִי H3065 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jehudi, a court official of King Jehoiakim who read Jeremiah's scroll aloud

A personal name belonging to an officer in King Jehoiakim's court, appearing only in Jeremiah 36. Jehudi was sent to fetch the scroll of Jeremiah's prophecies and then read it aloud before the king (Jer 36:14, 21, 23). BDB notes the name may originally have been an appellative meaning 'the Judean,' possibly indicating non-Israelite ancestry—an ironic detail, given his role as reader of divine judgment against Judah.

(4×) The proper name of Jehoiakim's court official who retrieved and publicly read Jeremiah's prophetic scroll. All four occurrences cluster in Jer 36:14–23, where Jehudi serves as intermediary between the prophetic word and the king who destroys it column by column. French and German render it 'Jehudi,' while English and Spanish use 'Yehudi'/'Yehudi,' preserving the etymological link to Judah (יְהוּדָה). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehudi | es: Yehudi | fr: Jehudi | de: Jehudi Jer 36:14; Jer 36:21; Jer 36:23

יְהוּדִית H3066 N-proper-fs (6×)

Yehudit — 'in the Judean language,' an adverbial use of the gentilicic adjective referring to the Hebrew dialect of Judah.

Though grammatically a feminine proper adjective from Yehudah (Judah), this word functions adverbially in every biblical occurrence to mean 'in the Judean language' — that is, in Hebrew as spoken by the kingdom of Judah. It appears in the famous diplomatic exchange during the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem, when Judean officials plead with the Rabshakeh not to speak 'Yehudit' within earshot of the people on the wall (2 Kgs 18:26, 28; Isa 36:11, 13). It recurs in Nehemiah 13:24 lamenting that children of mixed marriages could no longer speak Yehudit. The Spanish glosses 'en judaico' and 'en judío' nicely capture the adverbial force.

Judean language, Jewish speech (6×) Used adverbially to denote the Judean or Jewish language — the Hebrew dialect of the southern kingdom. All six occurrences are adverbial: four describe the Rabshakeh's public speech during Sennacherib's siege (2 Kgs 18:26, 28 = Isa 36:11, 13), one describes the Assyrian psychological campaign in 2 Chr 32:18, and one laments linguistic assimilation in Neh 13:24. Spanish 'en judaico/en judío' and English 'Judean' both reflect the sociolinguistic sense — identifying the spoken vernacular of Judah as distinct from Aramaic, the lingua franca of the Assyrian empire. JEWISH PERSON

en: Judean, Yehudit, Yehudith | es: en-judaico, en-judío, judío | fr: Yehudit, [יְהוּדִית] | de: Yehudit, [יְהוּדִית] 2Kgs 18:26; 2Kgs 18:28; 2Chr 32:18; Neh 13:24; Isa 36:11

יְהוּדִית H3067 N-proper-fs (1×)

Judith, a Hittite wife of Esau (Genesis 26:34)

This personal name, possibly meaning 'Jewess' or 'woman of Judah' though applied to a Hittite, belongs to one of Esau's wives who caused grief to Isaac and Rebekah. She was the daughter of Beeri the Hittite. The relationship between this name and the gentilicial 'Jewish' is obscure; it may represent a foreign name that coincidentally resembles the Hebrew term. Genesis 36 does not list her among Esau's wives, suggesting either variant traditions or that she died without sons.

(1×) A Hittite woman, daughter of Beeri, who became one of Esau's wives and brought bitterness to his parents (Gen 26:34). Her marriage represents Esau's pattern of choosing Canaanite wives outside the covenant family line, contributing to the narrative tension between Jacob and Esau. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Judith | es: Yehudit | fr: Judith | de: Jehudit Gen 26:34

יהוה H3068 Prep-k / N-proper-ms (6521×)

Yahweh – the covenantal personal name of the God of Israel, the Tetragrammaton YHWH

The Tetragrammaton (YHWH), vocalized as Yahweh, is the sacred covenantal name by which God revealed himself to Moses at the burning bush (Exod 3:14-15) and by which he bound himself to Israel in covenant relationship. With over 6,500 occurrences it is by far the most frequent proper noun in the Hebrew Bible. Ancient Jewish reverence rendered it a nomen ineffabile, read aloud as Adonai ('my Lord'), a practice reflected in the Septuagint's Kyrios and in translations like the French l'Eternel and the German HERR. The name carries overtones of self-existence and faithfulness: 'I AM WHO I AM.'

YHWH (the divine name) (6521×) The divine personal name Yahweh, revealed at the burning bush (Exod 3:14-15) and used throughout Scripture as the covenantal name binding God to Israel. Multilingual renderings reflect the ancient substitution tradition: Spanish Yahve retains the phonetic form, French l'Eternel emphasizes everlastingness, and German HERR follows the Adonai tradition. Its massive frequency (6,522 occurrences) underscores that biblical theology is fundamentally anchored in this named, covenant-keeping God. DIVINE NAME YHWH

en: YHWH | es: Yahvé, Yahweh | fr: l'Éternel | de: HERR, der-HERR, des-HERRN Gen 2:4; Gen 3:8; Gen 4:15; Gen 12:7; Gen 15:4

יהוה H3069 Conj-w (306×)

YHWH — the sacred Tetragrammaton, the proper covenant name of the God of Israel

This entry covers the pointed form Yehovih (יֱהוִה), the variant vocalization of the Tetragrammaton used when it appears adjacent to Adonai, to avoid the reader saying 'Adonai' twice. The 306 occurrences in this cluster largely come from the phrase 'Adonai YHWH' ('Lord GOD') found prominently in Ezekiel and the prophets. French 'l'Eternel,' German 'HERR,' and Spanish 'Yahvé' each adopt different strategies for rendering this ineffable name — reflecting centuries of reverent tradition around its pronunciation. The name is rooted in the verb h-y-h ('to be'), evoking God's self-revelation in Exodus 3:14.

YHWH (the divine name) (306×) The proper name of the God of Israel, the Tetragrammaton (יהוה), here in the variant vocalization used in combination with Adonai to prevent liturgical repetition. Most of these 306 occurrences appear in the prophetic formula 'Adonai YHWH' (e.g., Gen 15:2, 15:8; Deut 3:24; Ezek passim). The name derives from the root h-y-h ('to be') and was considered too sacred to pronounce, leading to the Qere substitution preserved in the Masoretic pointing. DIVINE NAME YHWH

en: YHWH | es: Yahvé, Yahweh | fr: l'Éternel | de: HERR Gen 15:2; Gen 15:8; Deut 3:24; Deut 9:26; Josh 7:7

רָאָה H3070

see, perceive, look at; appear, be seen; provide, consider (primary verb of visual perception)

This is the foundational Hebrew verb for seeing, appearing over 1,300 times throughout Scripture. Beyond physical sight, it encompasses mental perception, divine revelation, and providential care. The verb appears in pivotal moments: God 'seeing' human affliction (Genesis 16, 29), Abraham naming the place 'the LORD will see/provide' (Genesis 22:14), and prophets being called 'seers.' Cognate across all Semitic languages, it can mean passive appearance ('be seen') as well as active observation. The breadth from literal eyesight to spiritual insight makes this one of Scripture's most theologically loaded verbs.

נֵס H3071 N-proper-msc / 1cs (2×)

YHWH-Nissi (proper name: 'The LORD is my banner'; altar name built by Moses after defeating Amalek)

This compound name appears as the name Moses gave to an altar he built after Israel's victory over the Amalekites at Rephidim. The name combines the divine name with 'nissi' (my banner/standard), creating a theological declaration: 'The LORD is my banner.' In ancient warfare, a raised standard served as a rallying point for troops; Moses's altar name proclaims that Yahweh himself was Israel's rallying point and source of victory. The passage appears twice because of textual repetition in Exodus 17:15.

(2×) The name Moses assigned to an altar commemorating God's role in Israel's defeat of Amalek (Exod 17:15, repeated twice in the same verse). The compound means 'Yahweh (is) my banner/standard,' with 'banner' (nes) referring to a military standard or rallying point. English preserves the elements: 'YHWH-Nissi' or 'The LORD is my banner,' Spanish 'Yahweh, estandarte mío,' and French 'l'Éternel, mon bannière,' all capturing the military metaphor of God as the rally point for his people. DIVINE NAME YHWH

en: YHWH-, my-banner | es: Yahweh-, estandarte-mío | fr: l'Éternel-, mon-bannière | de: HERR-, mein-banner Exod 17:15

צֶדֶק H3072

rightness, righteousness, justice; what is right, just, or normal in conduct and character

This noun denotes what is straight, right, and just—both in the concrete sense of honest weights and measures and in the moral-theological sense of righteous character and just governance. It describes right paths (Psalm 23:3), just legal judgments, and ultimately God's own righteousness that becomes the standard for covenant faithfulness. The term appears in legal contexts (just weights, Leviticus 19:36), royal contexts (kings judging in righteousness), and cultic contexts (right sacrifices). Frequently paralleled with מִשְׁפָּט (justice) and צְדָקָה (righteousness), it anchors Israel's ethical vocabulary in the metaphor of straightness versus crookedness.

שָׁלוֹם H3073

completeness, soundness, welfare, peace; well-being in all dimensions of life

This rich term encompasses wholeness, health, prosperity, peace, and relational harmony—far more than mere absence of conflict. It appears in greetings ('Is it peace/well with you?'), describes physical safety and bodily health, and carries theological weight as God's gift of comprehensive flourishing. The semantic range includes completeness in number, soundness of body, material welfare, and especially peaceful relationships. When Moses promises peace-offerings or Israelites inquire after one another's שָׁלוֹם, they invoke a vision of integrated well-being that touches every dimension of human existence under God's blessing.

שָׁם H3074

there, thither; in that place or to that place (locative/directional adverb)

This common Hebrew adverb marks spatial location ('there') or direction ('to there'). It appears in countless narrative and poetic contexts, often positioned early in the sentence for emphasis. The word can be used literally (Genesis 2:8, God placed man 'there' in the garden) or in more abstract senses ('there' in Sheol, Psalm 139:8). Hebrew poetry exploits the word's rhythmic potential through repetition ('and there... and there') to build literary effect. Though simple in meaning, its frequency and versatility make it a key building block of Hebrew narrative style.

יְהוֹזָבָד H3075 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Jehozabad, a name meaning 'Yahweh has bestowed,' borne by several men including a royal assassin and Levites

A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has bestowed,' carried by multiple individuals across the historical books. The most prominent is the servant who participated in the assassination of King Joash of Judah (2 Kgs 12:21; 2 Chr 24:26). Other bearers include a Benjamite military commander under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:18) and a Levitical gatekeeper descended from Obed-edom (1 Chr 26:4). The alternate form Jozabad appears for some of the same or related individuals.

(4×) A proper name for several biblical figures, all sharing the theophoric meaning 'Yahweh has bestowed.' The name appears in two spelling variants: the full form יְהוֹזָבָד (Jehozabad) and the shortened יוֹזָבָד (Jozabad). English glosses reflect both forms ('Jehozabad,' 'Yehozavad'), while Spanish distinguishes them as 'Jozabad' and 'Yehozavad.' Notable bearers include the assassin of Joash (2 Kgs 12:21), a Benjamite chief (2 Chr 17:18), and a Levitical gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:4). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehozabad, Yehozavad, and-Yehozavad | es: Jozabad, Yehozavad, y-Jozabad | fr: [יהוזבד], [יהוזבד], et-Yehozavad | de: [יהוזבד], [יהוזבד], und-Yehozavad 2Kgs 12:21; 1Chr 26:4; 2Chr 17:18; 2Chr 24:26

יְהוֹחָנָן H3076 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)

Jehohanan (יְהוֹחָנָן) — 'YHWH is gracious'; a common name borne by military, priestly, and lay figures

The theophoric name Jehohanan (יְהוֹחָנָן, 'YHWH is gracious') is the full form behind the later shortened 'Johanan' and the Greek 'Ioannes' (John). It appears across a range of periods and roles: a Benjamite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:5), a gatekeeper in the temple (1 Chr 26:3), a military commander under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:15), a priestly leader in the time of the high priest Joiakim (Neh 12:13), and a layman who had married a foreign wife in Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:28). The name's frequency reflects its theological popularity — the confession that YHWH shows grace.

Yehochanan (proper name) (11×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH is gracious,' the long form ancestral to 'Johanan' and Greek 'John.' Borne by at least eight different individuals spanning the monarchic and postexilic periods: warriors (1 Chr 12:5, 13), Levitical gatekeepers (1 Chr 26:3), military commanders (2 Chr 17:15; 23:1), officials (2 Chr 28:12), priestly heads (Neh 12:13, 42), and laymen in Ezra's marriage reforms (Ezra 10:28). Spanish 'Johanán' and English 'Jehohanan' both transliterate the Hebrew. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehohanan, Yehochanan, Yehokhanan | es: Johanán, Jojanán, Yehojanan | fr: Jehochanan, et-Jehochanan | de: Johanan, [יהוחנן], [יהוחנן] 1Chr 12:5; 1Chr 12:13; 1Chr 26:3; 2Chr 17:15; 2Chr 23:1

יְהוֹיָדָע H3077 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (51×)

Jehoiada — 'the LORD knows,' the high priest who restored the Davidic line and David's warrior Benaiah's father

Yehoyada ('the LORD knows') towers above all as the high priest who overthrew Queen Athaliah and crowned the child Joash as rightful king of Judah (2 Kgs 11-12; 2 Chr 23-24). His 51 occurrences cluster around two bearers: this priest at Jerusalem and the father of David's warrior Benaiah (2 Sam 8:18; 23:20). The formula 'Benaiah son of Jehoiada' recurs so frequently it functions almost as a compound name. The Chronicler notes a further Jehoiada (1 Chr 27:34), and Jeremiah mentions a later priest of the same name (Jer 29:26). Spanish 'Joiada,' French 'Jehojada,' German 'Jojada.'

Jehoiada, priest (51×) The proper name Yehoyada (Jehoiada), referring primarily to two individuals: (a) the father of Benaiah, David's captain of the Cherethites and Pelethites, recurring in the formulaic patronymic 'Benaiah son of Jehoiada' (2 Sam 8:18; 23:20, 22; 1 Kgs 1:8, 26, 32, 36, 38, 44; 4:4); and (b) the chief priest who hid the infant Joash for six years during Athaliah's reign, then organized the coup that restored the Davidic dynasty (2 Kgs 11:4-12:16; 2 Chr 23-24). All 51 occurrences refer to one of these bearers, with the Septuagint rendering Iodae and variant spellings confirming the same theophoric name across traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehoyada | es: Joiada, Yehoyada | fr: Jehojada, Jojada | de: Jojada, Yehoyada 2Sam 8:18; 2Sam 20:23; 2Sam 23:20; 2Sam 23:22; 1Kgs 1:8

יְהוֹיָכִין H3078 N-proper-ms (10×)

Jehoiachin — king of Judah exiled to Babylon in 597 BCE; also called Coniah and Jeconiah

The name יְהוֹיָכִין (Yehoyakhin), meaning 'YHWH establishes,' designates the penultimate king of Judah who reigned only three months before being deported to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar in 597 BCE (2 Kgs 24:6-15). He is also known as Coniah (Jer 22:24, 28) and Jeconiah (Jer 24:1; 1 Chr 3:16-17). The final chapter of 2 Kings records his remarkable release from prison by Evil-merodach in the thirty-seventh year of his exile, when he was given a seat of honor at the Babylonian king's table (2 Kgs 25:27-30) — a conclusion that preserves a fragile thread of Davidic hope. The Babylonian Ration Tablets independently confirm his captivity and provisioning.

Yehoyakhin / Jehoiachin (proper name) (10×) A proper name meaning 'YHWH establishes,' borne by the son and successor of Jehoiakim who reigned in Jerusalem for three months at age eighteen before surrendering to Nebuchadnezzar in 597 BCE (2 Kgs 24:6-12, 15). His deportation along with the queen mother, court officials, and leading citizens marked the first major exile. 2 Kings 25:27-30 records his release from Babylonian imprisonment after 37 years, a note widely read as sustaining Davidic hope. Also called Coniah (כָּנְיָהוּ, Jer 22:24) and Jeconiah (יְכָנְיָהוּ, 1 Chr 3:16). Spanish 'Joaquín' and French 'Jojakin' reflect standard transliteration traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehoiachin, Yehoyakhin, Yehoyakin | es: Joaquín, Yehoyakhin, Yehoyakin | fr: Yehoyakhin, [יהויכין], [יהויכן] | de: Yehoyakhin, [יהויכין], [יהויכן] 2Kgs 24:6; 2Kgs 24:8; 2Kgs 24:12; 2Kgs 24:15; 2Kgs 25:27

יְהוֹיָקִים H3079 N-proper-ms (37×)

Jehoiakim — theophoric name meaning 'Yah raises up,' borne by the last-but-one king of Judah and two others

Yehoyaqim is a theophoric name combining the divine name Yehowith the root qum ('to rise, establish'), yielding 'Yah raises up.' Its primary bearer is the son of Josiah whom Pharaoh Necho installed as king after renaming him from Elyaqim (2 Kgs 23:34). He reigned eleven tumultuous years (609-598 BCE), burned Jeremiah's scroll in defiance (Jer 36:23-32), and became a Babylonian vassal who then rebelled (2 Kgs 24:1). Jeremiah pronounces a devastating oracle against him: 'he shall be buried with the burial of a donkey' (Jer 22:18-19). The name also belongs to a postexilic high priest, son of Jeshua (Neh 12:10, 12, 26), and a Judahite in the genealogies (1 Chr 4:22). Daniel's opening verse dates the exile from Jehoiakim's reign (Dan 1:1-2).

Yehoyaqim (37×) The proper masculine name Yehoyaqim ('Yah raises up'), principally identifying the penultimate Davidic king of Judah. Of 37 occurrences, the vast majority cluster in Jeremiah and 2 Kings, where Jehoiakim emerges as a foil to his reforming father Josiah — a king who builds palaces with unpaid labor (Jer 22:13-17) and burns prophetic scrolls (Jer 36:23). The shorter form Yoyaqim (Neh 12:10) identifies the postexilic priestly figure. Greek Ioakim, Spanish 'Joacim/Joaquin,' and German 'Jojakim' all reflect the LXX rendering. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehoiakim, Yehoyakim, Yehoyaqim | es: Joacim, Yehoyaqim, Yehoyaquim | fr: Jojakim, Yehoyakim, [יהויקים] | de: Jojakim, Yehoyakim 2Kgs 23:34; 2Kgs 23:35; 2Kgs 23:36; 2Kgs 24:1; 2Kgs 24:5

יְהוֹיָרִיב H3080 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Jehoiarib (proper name: 'YHWH contends/pleads'; priestly family and individual names)

This name appears in two variant spellings (Jehoiarib and Joiarib) for the same priestly family and other individuals. The name means 'Yahweh contends' or 'Yahweh pleads,' suggesting a family heritage tied to advocacy or legal defense. The name appears most prominently as the designation of one of the twenty-four priestly courses established under David, but also identifies a teacher in Ezra's time and a Judahite. The Septuagint's consistent transliteration across various forms (Ioiareib, Ioarib, etc.) reflects Greek attempts to capture the Hebrew.

(2×) A proper name with variant spellings, most notably designating a priestly family course under David's organization (1 Chr 24:7). The occurrences in this batch show the name with conjunctions and prepositions: 'and Jehoiarib' and 'for Jehoiarib' (1 Chr 9:10, 24:7). Most translations transliterate consistently: English 'Jehoiarib' or 'Yehoyariv,' Spanish 'Yehoyarib,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew forms, acknowledging the name's multiple bearers across biblical history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yehoyariv, for-Yehoyariv | es: para-Yehoyarib, y-Yehoyarib | fr: [ויהוירים], [ליהויריב] | de: [ויהוירים], [ליהוירים] 1Chr 9:10; 1Chr 24:7

יְהוּכַל H3081 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yehukhal, a courtier of King Zedekiah (Jeremiah 37:3)

This theophoric name, probably contracted from 'Yahweh is able,' belongs to an official in Zedekiah's court. The king sent Yehukhal (whose name appears as Jucal in Jeremiah 38:1) along with the priest Zephaniah to ask Jeremiah to pray for the nation during Babylon's siege. Ironically, the same official later advocated for Jeremiah's death as a defeatist. The name's meaning—celebrating God's power—stands in tension with the bearer's opposition to God's prophetic word.

(1×) A royal official whom Zedekiah sent to request Jeremiah's intercession, later becoming one of the prophet's accusers (Jer 37:3; 38:1). The name, meaning 'Yah is able,' contrasts with Yehukhal's inability to recognize divine sovereignty in Jeremiah's message of surrender. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yehukhal | es: Yehujal | fr: [יהוכל] | de: [יהוכל] Jer 37:3

יְהוֹנָדָב H3082 N-proper-ms (8×)

Jehonadab/Jonadab ('YHWH is generous'), name of a Rechabite leader and of David's nephew.

A theophoric proper name meaning 'YHWH is willing' or 'YHWH is noble,' appearing in two alternate forms: the full Yehonadav and the shortened Yonadav. One bearer is the son of Rechab, the austere Rechabite leader who rode with Jehu to witness the purge of Baal worship (2 Kgs 10:15, 23) and whose descendants Jeremiah held up as a model of faithfulness (Jer 35:6-19). The other is David's shrewd nephew who devised the ruse by which Amnon lured Tamar (2 Sam 13:3-5). The two could not be more different in character, united only by name.

Yehonadab / Jonadab (proper name) (8×) Jehonadab or Jonadab (Yehonadav/Yonadav), a Hebrew proper name meaning 'YHWH is generous/noble/willing,' borne by two distinct biblical figures. The first is the son of Rechab, the zealous Rechabite ancestor whose strict lifestyle (no wine, no houses, no agriculture) became a prophetic object lesson in faithfulness (Jer 35:6-19; 2 Kgs 10:15, 23). The second is David's nephew, son of Shimeah, described as 'very shrewd' (2 Sam 13:3), who advised Amnon in the affair with Tamar (2 Sam 13:3-5, 32, 35). Translations consistently transliterate both forms: Spanish 'Jonadab/Yehonadav,' French 'Jonadab/Jehonadab,' German 'Jonadab/Jehonadab.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehonadab, Jonadab, Yehonadav | es: Jonadab, Yehonadav, Yonadab | fr: Jehonadab, Jonadab, et-Jehonadab | de: Jehonadab, Jonadab, und-Jehonadab 2Sam 13:5; 2Kgs 10:15; 2Kgs 10:23; Jer 35:8

יְהוֹנָתָן H3083 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (80×)

Jonathan, 'YHWH has given'; proper name borne by several biblical figures, chiefly Saul's son

The name Jonathan (Yehonatan or its shortened form Yonatan) means 'YHWH has given,' built from the divine name and the verb natan, 'to give.' Its most prominent bearer is the son of King Saul, whose deep covenant friendship with David and selfless loyalty have made him a byword for faithful companionship (1 Sam 18:1-4; 2 Sam 1:26). Other notable Jonathans include the son of the priest Abiathar who served as a messenger during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 15:27) and David's nephew who slew a Philistine giant (2 Sam 21:21). The name appears across all major traditions: French and German Jonathan, Spanish Yehonatan/Yonatan.

Jonathan (proper name) (80×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'YHWH has given,' borne primarily by Saul's son Jonathan, celebrated for his covenant bond with David (1 Sam 18:1-3; 20:17) and battlefield valor (1 Sam 14:6-14). Also designates Jonathan son of Abiathar (2 Sam 15:27), David's giant-slaying nephew (2 Sam 21:21), and several post-exilic figures in Ezra and Nehemiah. The name's theology of divine gift resonates through every bearer. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehonatan | es: Yehonatan, Yonatan | fr: Jonathan | de: Jonathan 1Sam 14:6; 1Sam 14:8; 1Sam 18:1; 1Sam 18:3

יוֹסֵף H3084 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (1×)

Joseph, here 'in Joseph' as tribal/territorial designation (Psalm 81:5)

This prepositional phrase uses Joseph's name to denote either the northern kingdom (since Ephraim and Manasseh dominated the north) or the entire people of Israel (with Joseph as representative figure). Psalm 81 recounts the exodus and covenant, and 'in Joseph' likely refers to the whole nation considered through one of the patriarch's names. The usage reflects how Joseph's name could metonymically represent Israel, especially in poetic and prophetic literature.

(1×) A reference to the people of Israel or the northern tribes, designated through the name of the patriarch Joseph (Ps 81:5). The psalm's exodus context suggests the name functions as a poetic synonym for the covenant people whom God redeemed from Egypt. JOSEPH PROPER NAME

en: in-Yosef | es: en-Yehosef | fr: dans-Joseph | de: in-Yosef Ps 81:5

יְהוֹעַדָּה H3085 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jehoaddah (proper name of uncertain meaning; descendant of Saul in Chronicles)

This rare proper name appears only in the genealogies of Saul's descendants, mentioned twice in the same verse. The meaning remains disputed among scholars—possibilities include 'Yahweh has adorned,' 'Yahweh is equipment,' 'Yahweh has carried off spoil,' or even 'Yahweh has numbered.' The Septuagint's transliteration (Iada, Ioiada, Ioda) shows Greek translators were uncertain of the vowel pointing. A parallel passage in Chronicles gives the name as Jarah, suggesting possible textual corruption.

(2×) A personal name appearing in the genealogy of Saul's descendants (1 Chr 8:36, twice in the same verse). The name's etymology is uncertain, though it clearly contains the divine element 'Yeho-' (Yahweh). Parallel passages give variant forms, suggesting textual uncertainty. English renderings vary: 'Jehoaddah' or 'Yehoadah,' Spanish 'Yehoada,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew consonantal form, reflecting the scholarly uncertainty about this rare name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehoadah, and-Yehoadah | es: Yehoada, y-Yehoada | fr: [ויהועדה], [יהועדה] | de: [ויהועדה], [יהועדה] 1Chr 8:36

יְהוֹעַדָּן H3086 N-proper-ms (3×)

Yehoaddan/Jehoaddan, mother of King Amaziah of Judah

The personal name of Amaziah's mother, appearing in the regnal formulas for the king of Judah. The name occurs in 2 Kings 14:2 (with Ketiv/Qere variants: יהועדין/יהועדן) and 2 Chronicles 25:1. Scholars suggest it may be an Aramaic dual or feminine plural form related to the root עדה, with possible connections to the divine name Yahweh. The variety in ancient versions (Greek Ἰωαδειμ, Ἰωναα) and the comparison to Babylonian names like Aḫulapia indicate this was an unusual or archaic naming pattern, perhaps reflecting syncretistic influences in 9th-century BCE Judah.

(3×) A queen mother's name preserved in official royal records. The textual complexity (Yehoaddan/Yehoaddin variants) and the diverse renderings across languages point to ongoing scribal uncertainty about the name's precise vocalization and morphology. As the mother of a king, she would have held significant political status in the Judahite court. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (Yehoaddan), Yehoadan, [Yehoaddin] | es: Joadín, Yehoadán, [K] | fr: (Yehoaddan), [Yehoaddin], [יהועדן] | de: [Yehoaddin], [יהועדן] 2Kgs 14:2; 2Chr 25:1

יְהוֹצָדָק H3087 N-proper-ms (8×)

Jehozadak ('YHWH is righteous'), the exiled priest and father of Joshua the high priest of the return.

A theophoric name meaning 'YHWH is righteous,' belonging to the son of the high priest Seraiah who was executed by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah (2 Kgs 25:18-21). Jehozadak himself was carried into Babylonian exile (1 Chr 6:15), making him the link between the pre-exilic and post-exilic priesthood. His son Joshua (Jeshua) served as the first high priest of the restored temple. The name appears in the fuller form Yehōtsādāq in Haggai, Zechariah, and Chronicles, and as the shortened Yōtsādāq in Ezra and Nehemiah.

Jehozadak (proper name) (8×) Jehozadak (Yehōtsādāq), meaning 'YHWH is righteous,' the proper name of the son of the last pre-exilic high priest Seraiah and the father of Joshua/Jeshua, the first high priest after the Babylonian exile. He appears in the genealogy of 1 Chr 6:14-15 as the priest taken into captivity, and is consistently identified as the father of the high priest Joshua in the post-exilic prophets (Hag 1:1, 12, 14; 2:2, 4; Zech 6:11) and in the restoration narratives (Ezra 3:2, 8; 5:2; 10:18; Neh 12:26). The alternation between the full form (Yehōtsādāq) and shortened form (Yōtsādāq) is reflected in the Septuagint renderings Iosadak/Iosedek. French and German leave the Hebrew untransliterated in several occurrences, while Spanish offers 'Josadac.' JEHOZADAK PERSONAL NAME

en: Jehozadak, Yehotsadak, Yehotsadaq | es: Josadac, Y-Yehotsadaq, Yehotsadaq | fr: Josué, [ויהוצדק], [יהוצדק] | de: Jozadak, [ויהוצדק], [יהוצדק] 1Chr 6:14; 1Chr 6:15; Hag 1:1; Hag 1:12; Hag 1:14

יְהוֹרָם H3088 N-proper-ms (29×)

Jehoram/Joram — a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH is exalted,' borne by two kings and other biblical figures

Yehoram (or in its shortened forms Yoram/Joram) is a theophoric name combining the divine name with the root rum ('be high, exalted'). Its 29 occurrences refer to at least four individuals, though two dominate the narrative: Jehoram king of Judah, son of Jehoshaphat, whose reign was marred by the revolt of Edom and the influence of his wife Athaliah (2 Kgs 8:16-24; 2 Chr 21), and Jehoram king of Israel, son of Ahab, who perished at the hands of Jehu during the purge of the Omride dynasty (2 Kgs 9:14-26). The overlapping reigns of these two contemporaneous kings bearing the same name create one of the thorniest chronological puzzles in Kings. A Levitical priest of the same name serves in Jehoshaphat's teaching commission (2 Chr 17:8), and Joram son of Tou appears as a diplomatic envoy from Hamath (2 Sam 8:10).

Jehoram/Joram (proper name) (29×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'YHWH is exalted,' applied to several figures. The two most prominent are Jehoram of Judah (2 Kgs 8:16-24), whose disastrous reign saw Edomite revolt and Philistine raids, and Jehoram of Israel (2 Kgs 3:1; 9:14-24), an Omride king slain by Jehu. A priest by this name joined Jehoshaphat's Torah-teaching delegation (2 Chr 17:8), and Tou of Hamath sent his son Joram to congratulate David (2 Sam 8:10). The Septuagint consistently renders both long and short forms as Ioram. JEHORAM JORAM NAMES

en: Jehoram, Yehoram | es: Jehoram, Joram, a-Joram | fr: Jehoram, Joram, Yehoram | de: Jehoram, Joram, Yehoram 1Kgs 22:50; 2Kgs 1:17; 2Kgs 3:1; 2Kgs 3:6

יְהוֹשֶׁבַע H3089 N-proper-fs (1×)

Yehosheva, daughter of Joram who saved Joash (2 Kings 11:2)

This theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh is an oath' or 'Yahweh has sworn' belongs to the courageous woman who rescued the infant Joash from Athaliah's massacre. She was King Joram's daughter, Queen Ahaziah's sister, and the high priest Jehoiada's wife. Chronicles 22:11 gives the alternate form Yehoshabeath. By hiding the legitimate heir for six years in the temple, Yehosheva preserved the Davidic line and made possible the covenant restoration under her husband's leadership.

(1×) The daughter of King Joram and wife of the high priest Jehoiada, who rescued the infant Joash from Athaliah's purge and hid him in the temple for six years (2 Kgs 11:2). Her decisive action preserved the Davidic dynasty and enabled the eventual overthrow of Athaliah's illegitimate rule. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehosheva | es: Josaba | fr: Yehosheva | de: Yehosheva 2Kgs 11:2

יְהוֹשֶׁבַע H3090 N-proper-fs (2×)

Jehosheba (proper name: 'YHWH is an oath'; daughter of King Joram who saved infant Joash)

This name appears in two spelling variants for the same remarkable woman: Jehosheba (2 Kings) and Jehoshabeath (2 Chronicles). She was King Joram's daughter and the wife of high priest Jehoiada, who courageously rescued her infant nephew Joash from Queen Athaliah's massacre of the royal family. The name means 'Yahweh is an oath' or 'Yahweh has sworn,' echoing the similar structure of Elizabeth (Elisheba). Her actions preserved the Davidic line at a critical moment in Judah's history.

(2×) A proper name belonging to the daughter of Joram of Judah and wife of the priest Jehoiada. She appears twice in 2 Chronicles 22:11 with the longer spelling 'Jehoshabeath.' Her name means 'Yahweh is an oath,' parallel in structure to Elisheba. English uses 'Jehosheba' or 'Jehoshabeath,' Spanish 'Josaba,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew form. She is remembered for hiding the infant Joash from Athaliah's purge, thus preserving the messianic line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehoshavat | es: Josaba | fr: [יהושבעת] | de: [יהושבעת] 2Chr 22:11

יְהוֹשׁוּעַ H3091 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (218×)

Yehoshua (Joshua) – proper name meaning 'YHWH is salvation'; Moses' successor and later the high priest.

Yehoshua is a theophoric name compounding YHWH with yasha ('to save'), yielding 'YHWH is salvation.' Its most prominent bearer is Joshua son of Nun, who succeeded Moses and led Israel across the Jordan into the promised land (Josh 1:1-2). The name also belongs to Joshua the high priest in the post-exilic community (Hag 1:1; Zech 3:1). The later contracted form Yeshua became the Hebrew name behind the Greek Iesous – Jesus – making this name a bridge between the Old and New Testaments. Spanish 'Josue,' French 'Josue,' and German 'Josua' all preserve the connection.

Yehoshua / Joshua (proper name) (218×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'YHWH is salvation,' borne primarily by Joshua son of Nun, Moses' military commander and successor who led Israel's conquest of Canaan (Exod 17:9; Josh 1:1), and secondarily by Joshua the high priest of the restoration era (Hag 1:1; Zech 3:1). The later contracted form Yeshua links directly to the Greek Iesous (Jesus), giving this name profound typological significance across both Testaments. JOSHUA JESHUA NAMES

en: Joshua | es: Josué, Yehoshua | fr: Josué | de: Josua Exod 17:9; Exod 17:10; Exod 17:13; Exod 17:14; Exod 32:17

יְהוֹשָׁפָט H3092 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (84×)

Jehoshaphat — 'YHWH has judged,' a proper name borne chiefly by the king of Judah (son of Asa)

The name יְהוֹשָׁפָט (Yehoshafat, 'YHWH has judged') belongs primarily to the righteous king of Judah who succeeded his father Asa and reigned during a period of religious reform and military alliance (1 Kgs 22; 2 Chr 17–20). Of the 84 occurrences, the vast majority refer to this king, with the remainder identifying other individuals: a recorder under David and Solomon (2 Sam 8:16), the father of King Jehu (2 Kgs 9:2), one of Solomon's supply officers (1 Kgs 4:17), and warriors in David's elite guard (1 Chr 11:43). The theophoric name combines YHWH (יהו) with the root שׁפט ('judge'). Spanish Josafat, French Josaphat, and German Josaphat reflect the Hellenized form Ἰωσαφάτ.

Yehoshafat / Jehoshaphat (proper name) (84×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'YHWH has judged,' borne primarily by the king of Judah, son of Asa, who reigned during a significant period of reform and alliance (1 Kgs 15:24; 2 Chr 17–20). Also designates a recorder under David (2 Sam 8:16), the father of Jehu (2 Kgs 9:2), and a Solomonic officer (1 Kgs 4:17). The multilingual forms — Spanish Josafat, French Josaphat, German Josaphat — derive from the Septuagint's Ἰωσαφάτ rather than the Hebrew directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehoshaphat, Yehoshafat | es: Josafat, Yehoshafat | fr: Josaphat | de: Josaphat 1Kgs 4:3; 1Kgs 4:17; 1Kgs 22:2; 1Kgs 22:4

יָהִיר H3093 Adj-ms (2×)

proud, arrogant, haughty (adjective describing presumptuous behavior)

This Hebrew adjective appears only twice in wisdom and prophetic literature, both times characterizing arrogant persons who act with presumption. In Proverbs, it forms part of a triple description—'presumptuous, haughty, scoffer'—of someone who acts with overweening pride. In Habakkuk, it describes a man whose soul is not upright. The word captures the moral quality of arrogance that sets oneself above proper bounds, a vice consistently condemned in biblical wisdom literature.

(2×) An adjective describing proud or arrogant character. In Proverbs 21:24, it appears in a triad: 'a presumptuous man, haughty, scoffer is his name,' describing one who acts with overflowing pride. In Habakkuk 2:5, it characterizes a man whose soul is not upright, contrasted with the righteous who live by faithfulness. The multilingual evidence is consistent: English 'arrogant,' Spanish 'arrogante,' French 'orgueilleux' (proud/haughty), all conveying moral disapprobation of self-exaltation. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: arrogant | es: arrogante | fr: orgueilleux, יהיר | de: [יהיר] Prov 21:24; Hab 2:5

יְהַלְלְאֵל H3094 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jehallel'el (proper name: 'he shall praise God'; Judahite and Levite names)

This theophoric name, meaning 'he shall praise God' or 'may he praise God,' appears for two different men: a descendant of Judah and a Levite who participated in Hezekiah's temple reforms. The name's form is parallel to the better-known Mahalalel, both built on the Hebrew root for 'praise.' The name embeds a declaration of worship, characteristic of many Hebrew personal names that serve as mini-theological statements about God's worthiness of praise.

(2×) A proper name borne by two biblical figures: a man of Judah (1 Chr 4:16) and a Levite involved in cleansing the temple under Hezekiah (2 Chr 29:12). The name means 'he shall praise God' or 'may he praise God,' from the root 'halal' (to praise). Standard transliterations vary: English 'Jehallel'el' or 'Yehallelel,' Spanish 'Yehaleel' or 'Yehalelel,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew form, reflecting the name's rarity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yehallel'el, Yehallelel | es: Yehaleel, Yehalelel | fr: [יהללאל] | de: [יהללאל] 1Chr 4:16; 2Chr 29:12

יַהֲלֹם H3095 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

diamond or hard gemstone (jasper? onyx?), listed among precious stones on priestly breastplate

A precious stone appearing in lists of gems adorning the high priest's breastplate (Exodus 28:18; 39:11) and in Ezekiel's description of the covering of the king of Tyre (28:13). The exact identity remains uncertain—ancient versions suggest jasper (LXX, Vulgate) or onyx, while the Hebrew etymology from the root הלם ('to strike, hammer') suggests a stone prized for its hardness, able to strike or cut other materials. Medieval and modern translations consistently render it as 'diamond,' though the ancient Israelites may not have had access to true diamonds.

(3×) A gemstone valued for exceptional hardness and beauty, used in sacred contexts. The universal rendering as 'diamond' across Spanish, French, and German reflects later interpretive tradition rather than certain identification. Its placement on the breastplate and in the prophetic Eden imagery emphasizes its status as one of the most precious stones known to the biblical world. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: and-diamond | es: y-diamante | fr: et-diamant | de: [ויהלם], und-Diamant Exod 28:18; Exod 39:11; Ezek 28:13

יַהַץ H3096 Prep-b / N-proper-fs / 3fs (9×)

Jahaz, a city in Moab where Israel defeated Sihon; later a Levitical city assigned to Reuben.

A place name with several spelling variants (Yahats, Yahtsah, Jahaz, Jahazah) designating a city in Moab that was the site of the pivotal battle where Israel under Moses defeated Sihon king of the Amorites (Num 21:23; Deut 2:32). This victory opened the Transjordan to Israelite settlement. The city was assigned to the tribe of Reuben (Josh 13:18) and later designated a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:63). It reappears in the prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:4; Jer 48:21, 34), where its mention evokes the ancient battlefield. The Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription, line 19-20) also references Jahaz, confirming its historical significance. Spanish 'Jahaz/Jahasa' and French 'Jahaz' preserve the name across traditions.

Jahaz (9×) The place name Jahaz (with variants Yahats, Yahtsah, Jahazah) designating a Moabite city of uncertain exact location. Historically significant as the site where Israel defeated Sihon king of the Amorites, opening the Transjordan for settlement (Num 21:23; Deut 2:32; Judg 11:20). Assigned to Reuben (Josh 13:18) and designated a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:63). The prophetic oracles against Moab invoke it as a place of lamentation (Isa 15:4; Jer 48:21, 34). The Mesha Inscription (lines 19-20) independently attests the site, confirming its importance in Israelite-Moabite conflict. Spanish 'Jahaz/Jahasa' and French 'Jahaz' transliterate with minor variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jahaz, Yahats, Yahtsah | es: Jahasá, Jahaz, Yahats | fr: Jahaz, [יהץ], [יהצה] | de: Jahaz, [יהץ], [יהצה] Num 21:23; Deut 2:32; Josh 13:18; Josh 21:36; Judg 11:20

יוֹאָב H3097 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (145×)

Joab — personal name meaning 'YHWH is father,' primarily David's nephew and military commander

Yoav is a theophoric name compounding a shortened form of YHWH with av ('father'), thus 'YHWH is father.' The name occurs 145 times, overwhelmingly for David's nephew — his sister Zeruiah's son — who served as commander of the Israelite army throughout David's reign (2 Sam 2:13; 1 Kgs 2:5). Joab was a brilliant but ruthless general: he killed Abner (2 Sam 3:27), led the siege of Rabbah (2 Sam 11:1), and was eventually executed on Solomon's orders (1 Kgs 2:34). Two minor figures share the name: a descendant of Judah (1 Chr 4:14) and a family in the post-exilic community (Ezra 2:6).

Joab (proper name) (145×) The Hebrew proper name Yoav, a theophoric compound meaning 'YHWH is father.' Its dominant referent is David's nephew through Zeruiah, who served as commander-in-chief of Israel's forces across David's entire reign — from the civil war with Ish-bosheth (2 Sam 2:13) through Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 18:2) to his own death under Solomon (1 Kgs 2:34). Minor bearers include a Judahite in 1 Chr 4:14 and a post-exilic family name in Ezra 2:6. Spanish and German both render it 'Joab,' while the Septuagint gives Ioab. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Joab, Yoab | es: Joab, Yoav | fr: Joab | de: Joab, Yoab 1Sam 26:6; 2Sam 2:14; 2Sam 2:18; 2Sam 2:22

יוֹאָח H3098 N-proper-ms (11×)

Joah (יוֹאָחַז) — 'YHWH is brother'; name of four OT figures, most notably Hezekiah's royal recorder

The personal name Joah (יוֹאָח, probably 'YHWH is brother') identifies four distinct individuals in the Old Testament. The most prominent is the son of Asaph who served as royal recorder (מַזְכִּיר) under King Hezekiah, present during the tense negotiations with the Assyrian Rabshakeh outside Jerusalem's walls (2 Kgs 18:18, 26, 37; Isa 36:3, 11, 22). The name also appears for a Gershonite Levite in David's genealogy (1 Chr 6:21), a Korahite gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:4), a Levite involved in Josiah's temple repair (2 Chr 34:8), and a Levite who participated in Hezekiah's purification of the temple (2 Chr 29:12).

Joah (proper name) (11×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH is brother,' borne by four individuals. Most prominent is the son of Asaph, Hezekiah's recorder, who participated in the Assyrian crisis negotiations (2 Kgs 18:18, 26, 37; Isa 36:3, 11, 22). Also a Gershonite Levite ancestor (1 Chr 6:21), a Korahite gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:4), a Levite in Hezekiah's temple purification (2 Chr 29:12), and a Levite who oversaw Josiah's temple repairs (2 Chr 34:8). Spanish 'Joa' and English 'Joah' transliterate directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Joah, Yoach, and-Yoach | es: Joah, Yoaj, y-Joa | fr: Joach, et-Joach, et-Yoach | de: [ויואח], [יואח], und-Yoach 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:26; 2Kgs 18:37; 1Chr 6:21; 1Chr 26:4

יְהוֹאָחָז H3099 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jehoahaz/Joahaz, 'Yahweh has grasped,' name of kings of Israel and Judah and a chronicler's father

A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has grasped,' appearing in both its full form (Jehoahaz) and a contracted form (Joahaz). It designates several figures: a king of Judah who was son of Josiah and reigned only three months before Egyptian deportation (2 Chr 36:2, 4), a king of Israel who was son of Jehu (2 Kgs 14:1 in contracted form), and the father of the chronicler Joah under Josiah (2 Chr 34:8). The name is a variant of Ahaziah, with the divine element repositioned.

(4×) A royal and administrative proper name borne by multiple figures, all sharing the theophoric meaning 'Yahweh has seized/grasped.' The four occurrences here use the shortened form יוֹאָחָז (Joahaz). English glosses distinguish 'Jehoahaz' from 'Joahaz,' while Spanish uses 'Joacaz'/'Yoajaz.' BDB notes the name is essentially interchangeable with Ahaziah (אֲחַזְיָהוּ), the same elements in reverse order—a pattern visible in 2 Chr 21:17 and 25:23. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jehoahaz, Joahaz, Yoachaz | es: Joacaz, Yoajaz | fr: Joachaz, Yoachaz | de: Yoachaz, [יואחז] 2Kgs 14:1; 2Chr 34:8; 2Chr 36:2; 2Chr 36:4

יוֹאֵל H3100 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (19×)

Joel — personal name meaning 'YHWH is God,' borne by at least thirteen individuals in the Hebrew Bible

A theophoric personal name composed of the divine name Yah and El ('God'), yielding the meaning 'YHWH is God.' The name is borne by numerous figures across Israel's history, most famously the prophet Joel son of Pethuel but also Samuel's firstborn son (1 Sam 8:2), a Simeonite prince, a Reubenite chief, several Levitical musicians, and leaders in the post-exilic community. Spanish, French, and German traditions all preserve a form close to 'Joel,' reflecting remarkably stable transmission of this name across centuries and languages.

Yoel (19×) The proper name Yoel (Joel), a theophoric compound of Yah + El meaning 'YHWH is God.' Applied to at least thirteen distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible, including Samuel's firstborn (1 Sam 8:2), a prophet (Joel 1:1), Levitical singers, tribal chiefs, and post-exilic leaders. The uniform rendering across English, Spanish, French, and German as 'Joel' attests to its stable transliteration history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Joel, Yo'el, Yoel | es: Joel, Y-Joel, Y-Yoel | fr: Joel, Joël, et-Joël | de: Joel, und-Joel 1Sam 8:2; 1Chr 4:35; 1Chr 5:4; 1Chr 5:8; 1Chr 5:12

יְהוֹאָשׁ H3101 N-proper-ms (47×)

Joash / Jehoash — a theophoric name ('YHWH has given'), borne by kings of Judah and Israel and other figures

Yeho'ash and its shorter form Yo'ash both mean 'YHWH has given' (or possibly 'YHWH is strong'), making this one of the more common theophoric names in the Hebrew Bible with 47 occurrences. The name is shared by at least eight individuals, but two dominate: Joash king of Judah, the boy rescued from Athaliah's purge and hidden in the temple for six years (2 Kgs 11:2; 2 Chr 22:11), and Joash king of Israel, son of Jehoahaz, who wept at Elisha's deathbed and was told to strike the ground with arrows (2 Kgs 13:14-19). The alternation between the longer Yeho'ash and the contracted Yo'ash appears even within a single chapter (2 Kgs 12-13), suggesting free variation rather than distinct referents. Translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Joas,' German 'Joasch.'

Yoash / Joash (proper name) (47×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'YHWH has given' or 'YHWH is strong,' referring to multiple biblical individuals. The most prominent bearers are Joash king of Judah, hidden as an infant in the temple during Athaliah's usurpation and crowned at age seven (2 Kgs 11:2-12; 2 Chr 24:1), and Joash king of Israel, who visited the dying Elisha and received the oracle of victory over Aram (2 Kgs 13:14-25). Other bearers include Gideon's father (Judg 6:11), a Benjaminite warrior of David (1 Chr 12:3), and several minor figures. The full form Yeho'ash and shortened Yo'ash alternate freely across all 47 occurrences, with the Chronicler and the author of Kings sometimes using both within the same narrative block. JOASH PERSONAL NAME

en: Joash, Yo'ash, Yoash | es: Joás, Yoas, Yoash | fr: Joas | de: Joasch, Yoash Judg 6:11; Judg 6:29; Judg 6:30; Judg 6:31; Judg 7:14

יוֹב H3102 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Iob/Job, son of Issachar (Genesis 46:13)

This personal name appears in the list of Jacob's descendants who went to Egypt, listed as one of Issachar's sons. However, Numbers 26:24, 1 Chronicles 7:1, and the Samaritan Pentateuch read Jashub instead, suggesting textual variation or possible scribal error. The Septuagint supports the reading Iasouph/Iasoub, aligning with the alternate tradition. The name's meaning and etymology remain uncertain due to these textual difficulties.

(1×) A son of Issachar listed among those who descended to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:13), though parallel passages read 'Jashub' instead. The textual variants suggest manuscript divergence, with the alternate reading receiving broader support across biblical and versional traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Iob | es: y-Yov | fr: et-Iob | de: und-Job Gen 46:13

יוֹבָב H3103 N-proper-ms (9×)

Jobab — a proper name borne by several OT figures: a descendant of Joktan, an Edomite king, a Canaanite king, and two Benjamites.

Jobab (יוֹבָב, Yōvāv) appears nine times in the Old Testament as the name of at least five distinct individuals. The most ancient is a son of Joktan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:29), linking the name to early Arabian genealogy. A second Jobab reigns as king of Edom from Bozrah (Gen 36:33–34), while a third is the king of Madon who joins the northern Canaanite coalition against Joshua (Josh 11:1). Two additional Benjamites bear the name in the Chronicler's genealogies (1 Chr 8:9, 18). The Septuagint consistently renders it Ιωβαβ across all referents.

Jobab (proper name) (9×) A masculine proper noun used for five distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The name likely derives from a root suggesting 'calling out' or 'crying,' attested also in Sabaic inscriptions (יהיבב). Its broad distribution — spanning Joktanite, Edomite, Canaanite, and Benjamite lineages — shows it was a common Semitic name across ethnic boundaries. Key passages include Gen 10:29 (genealogical), Gen 36:33 (royal Edomite), and Josh 11:1 (military Canaanite context). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jobab, Yovav, and-Yovav | es: Jobab, Yobab, Yovav | fr: Jobab, Yovav, et-Jobab | de: Jobab, Yovav, und-Jobab Gen 10:29; Gen 36:33; Gen 36:34; Josh 11:1; 1Chr 1:23

יוֹבֵל H3104 Prep-b (27×)

Ram's horn; the jubilee year proclaimed by its blast, marking liberty, land restoration, and debt release every fiftieth year

Derived from the ram's horn blown to announce sacred occasions, this term carries two closely related meanings. In its concrete sense it refers to the curved horn of a ram used as a trumpet – the instrument sounded at Sinai (Exod 19:13) and carried by priests around Jericho (Josh 6:4-13). From this ritual blast comes its more frequent use as the name for the fiftieth year in Israel's calendar, the Year of Jubilee, when land returned to ancestral owners, debts were cancelled, and slaves were freed (Lev 25:10-13). The multilingual evidence confirms this split: translations render the calendrical sense with loan-words like 'jubileo' (spa), 'jubile' (fra), and 'Jubeljahr' (deu), while the instrumental sense draws on 'carnero/cuerno' (spa) and 'ram's horn' (eng).

1. jubilee year (21×) The fiftieth year in Israel's sacred calendar, proclaimed by the blast of a ram's horn on the Day of Atonement. During this year, ancestral land reverts to its original clan, debts are released, and Hebrew bondservants go free. Multilingual glosses uniformly employ jubilee loan-words – 'jubileo' (spa), 'jubile' (fra), 'Jubeljahr' (deu) – reflecting the term's passage into global vocabulary. Central texts: Lev 25:10-15, Num 36:4. TIME AND SEASONS

en: a-jubilee, and-in-the-jubilee, in-the-jubilee | es: Jubileo, el-jubileo, en-el-jubileo | fr: dans-le-jubilé, et-dans-le-jubilé, le-jubilé | de: der-Jubeljahr, ein-Jubeljahr, in-der-Jubeljahr Lev 25:10; Lev 25:11; Lev 25:12; Lev 25:13; Lev 25:15

2. ram's horn, trumpet (6×) The ram's horn itself as a musical instrument, blown as a signal in ritual and military contexts. At Jericho, priests carried 'shoferot ha-yovelim' (rams' horns) before the ark (Josh 6:4-13); at Sinai, a prolonged blast of the yovel signaled the people's approach (Exod 19:13). Spanish 'cuerno/carnero' and French 'corne' capture the concrete, animal-derived sense distinct from the calendrical meaning. RAM AND HORN

en: of-rams'-horns, of-the-ram, the-ram's-horn | es: carneros, el-carnero, el-cuerno | fr: de-le-ram, de-rams'-cornes, le-ram's-corne | de: der-ram's-Horn, von-der-Widder, von-rams'-Hoerner Exod 19:13; Josh 6:4; Josh 6:5; Josh 6:6; Josh 6:8

יוּבַל H3105 N-ms (1×)

A stream or watercourse (Jeremiah 17:8)

This poetic noun designates a flowing stream or brook. Jeremiah uses it to describe the blessed person who trusts in the Lord, pictured as a tree planted by a stream of water. The term appears in parallel with 'water' (mayim), reinforcing the imagery of constant water supply. Unlike a dry wadi that flows only seasonally, this yûḇal provides reliable moisture, enabling the tree to remain green even during drought.

(1×) A flowing stream or watercourse that provides constant irrigation, used in Jeremiah's metaphor of the righteous person as a well-watered tree (Jer 17:8). The image contrasts with the shrub in the desert, emphasizing reliable divine provision through all seasons. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: stream | es: arroyo | fr: [יובל] | de: [יובל] Jer 17:8

יוּבָל H3106 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yuval, son of Lamech and inventor of musical instruments (Genesis 4:21)

This personal name belongs to one of Lamech's sons by Adah, identified as the father of all who handle the lyre and pipe. Yuval represents the origins of musical culture in the Cainite genealogy. His name likely derives from the same root as the noun for 'stream' (yûḇal), though the semantic connection is uncertain. As Jubal in traditional English translations, he stands alongside his brother Jabal (pastoralists) and half-brother Tubal-Cain (metalworkers) as a cultural founder in the antediluvian world.

(1×) The son of Lamech and Adah, credited as the ancestor of all musicians who play stringed and wind instruments (Gen 4:21). His role in Genesis 4's genealogy represents the development of artistic and musical culture among humanity's earliest generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yuval | es: Yuval | fr: Yuval | de: Jubal Gen 4:21

יְהוֹזָבָד H3107 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Jozabad — 'YHWH has bestowed,' a theophoric personal name borne by several Levites and warriors

The name יוֹזָבָד (Yozavad), meaning 'YHWH has bestowed' or 'YHWH has endowed,' is borne by at least eight distinct individuals across the historical books and Chronicles. Two Gadite warriors who defected to David at Ziklag bore this name (1 Chr 12:5, 21). Later Jozabads appear as Levites overseeing temple treasuries and contributions under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:13) and Josiah (2 Chr 35:9), as well as a Levite involved in weighing the returning exiles' silver and gold (Ezra 8:33). One Jozabad was among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:22-23). The name's theophoric element underscores divine generosity as a naming theme.

and Yozavad (10×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'YHWH has bestowed,' shared by multiple individuals: Gadite warriors who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:5, 21), Levites administering temple stores and tithes under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:13) and Josiah (2 Chr 35:9), a Levite who helped weigh returned temple vessels (Ezra 8:33), and men listed among those with foreign wives (Ezra 10:22-23). Also appears in Nehemiah's Levitical lists (Neh 11:16). A variant form of Jehozabad. Spanish 'Jozabad' and English 'Jozabad' both transliterate the Hebrew directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jozabad, Yozavad, and-Jozabad | es: Jozabad, Yozavad, y-Jozabad | fr: Jozabad, et-Jozabad | de: [ויוזבד], [יוזבד] 1Chr 12:5; 1Chr 12:21; 2Chr 31:13; 2Chr 35:9

יוֹזָכָר H3108 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yozavad/Jozachar, servant who killed King Joash (2 Kings 12:21)
This theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has remembered' belongs to one of the two conspirators who assassinated King Joash of Judah. He was the son of Shimeath the Ammonitess. The parallel account in 2 Chronicles 24:26 calls him Zabad, a shorter form. The assassination came after Joash abandoned the reforms of Jehoiada and shed innocent blood, including Zechariah the prophet. The conspirators' names ironically contain Yahwistic elements while they execute divine judgment on the apostate king.

(1×) One of King Joash's servants who conspired to murder him in retaliation for killing Zechariah the priest (2 Kgs 12:21; called Zabad in Chronicles). His Yahwistic name contrasts with his maternal Ammonite heritage, reflecting the mixed court of post-exilic Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yozavad | es: Y-Jozacar | fr: et-Yozavad | de: und-Yozavad 2Kgs 12:21

יוֹטָה H3109 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jocha (proper name; two different Benjamites in Chronicles)
This rare personal name appears for two different Benjamite men in Chronicles genealogies and military lists. BDB notes that the form is equivalent to Juttah, possibly derived from the root 'to stretch' or 'extend.' The name's brevity and rarity have left translators uncertain about its vocalization, with variant readings in the textual tradition. The multilingual evidence shows diverse attempts to render this uncommon name, with some translations using 'Jocha' or 'Joha.'

(2×) A proper name appearing in Benjamite genealogies and lists, identifying two different individuals: one in the family records (1 Chr 8:16) and another among David's mighty men (1 Chr 11:45). The name appears with the conjunction 'and Jocha' in both instances. Transliterations vary widely: English 'Jocha,' Spanish 'Yoja,' French and German preserve variant Hebrew forms ('Yocha,' 'Yicha'), reflecting textual uncertainty about this rare name's proper vocalization. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Yocha | es: y-Yoja | fr: [ויוחא], [ויחא] | de: [ויוחא], [ויחא] 1Chr 8:16; 1Chr 11:45

יְהוֹחָנָן H3110 N-proper-ms (22×)
Yochanan ('YHWH is gracious'); a personal name borne by priests, Levites, military leaders, and others.
A theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has been gracious,' borne by numerous individuals across Israel's history. Among the most notable are Johanan son of Kareah, the military commander who led the remnant of Judah after Jerusalem's fall (2 Kgs 25:23; Jer 40–43), and the high priest Johanan in the postexilic period (Ezra 10:6; Neh 12:22–23). The name also attaches to a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:15, 24), a temple gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:3), and several other figures. Its theophoric element links it to the broader family of 'grace' names, including Hananiah and Elchanan.

Yochanan (22×) The proper masculine name Yochanan, meaning 'YHWH is gracious,' applied to at least eight distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. These include Johanan son of Kareah, a post-destruction Judean commander (2 Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8), a high priest (Ezra 10:6; Neh 12:22), a Davidic prince (1 Chr 3:15), a Levite gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:3), and military and civil leaders in Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah. Spanish Johanán, French Johanan, and German Johanan all transliterate the Hebrew with minimal variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Yochanan, and-Yochanan | es: Johanán, Y-Yojanan, Y-Yokhanan | fr: Johanan, et-Johanan, et-Yochanan | de: Johanan, [ויוחנן], [יוחנן] 2Kgs 25:23; 1Chr 3:15; 1Chr 3:24; 1Chr 6:9; 1Chr 6:10

יְהוֹיָדָע H3111 N-proper-ms (5×)
Joiada (Jehoiada); a personal name meaning 'the LORD knows'
A theophoric personal name compounding Yahweh (yehô) with the root yāda' ('to know'), yielding 'the LORD knows.' In Nehemiah, this name refers primarily to priestly figures: Joiada son of Eliashib the high priest (Neh 13:28), and members of the postexilic priestly lineage recorded in genealogical lists (Neh 12:10-11, 22). The form Yôyādā' is a shortened variant of the fuller Yehôyādā'. All major translations — English 'Joiada,' Spanish 'Joiadá,' French 'Jojada' — preserve the theophoric element consistently.

(5×) A proper name borne by postexilic priestly figures in Nehemiah. Joiada appears as son of Eliashib in the high-priestly succession (Neh 12:10-11) and as father of one who married Sanballat's daughter (Neh 13:28). The name also occurs in genealogical and covenant lists (Neh 3:6; 12:22). Translations across languages uniformly transliterate: 'Joiada' (English/Spanish), 'Jojada' (French/German). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Joiada, Yoyada, and-Yoyada | es: Joiada, Joiadá, Y-Joiada | fr: Jojada, et-Jojada | de: Jojada, und-Jojada Neh 3:6; Neh 12:10; Neh 12:11; Neh 12:22; Neh 13:28

יְהוֹיָכִין H3112 N-proper-ms (1×)
Jehoiachin, penultimate king of Judah (Ezekiel 1:2)
This theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh establishes' belongs to the young king who reigned only three months before Nebuchadnezzar exiled him to Babylon in 597 BC. Ezekiel dates his visions by the years of Jehoiachin's exile, treating him as the legitimate king even after Zedekiah's installation. The name appears in multiple variant forms across biblical books: Jeconiah, Coniah, Jechoniah. Despite his brief reign and exile, Jehoiachin's release from prison after 37 years becomes a sign of hope for the Davidic line's survival.

(1×) The exiled king of Judah by whose captivity Ezekiel dates his prophetic visions, treating the exile as the starting point of a new era (Ezek 1:2). Though dethroned and imprisoned, Jehoiachin retained legitimacy in exile, and his eventual release symbolized potential restoration for the Davidic dynasty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jehoiachin | es: Yoyakín | fr: Jojakin | de: [יויכין] Ezek 1:2

יְהוֹיָקִים H3113 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)
Joiakim, 'Yahweh raises up,' a high priest in the post-exilic period, son of Jeshua
A contracted form of the theophoric name Jehoiakim meaning 'Yahweh raises up,' here designating the post-exilic high priest who was the son of Jeshua and father of Eliashib (Neh 12:10, 12, 26). Unlike the more famous King Jehoiakim of Judah, this Joiakim belongs to the priestly genealogy that anchored the restored Jerusalem community. All four occurrences appear in Nehemiah 12's priestly registry.

(4×) The proper name of a post-exilic high priest, son of Jeshua, recorded in the priestly genealogy of Neh 12. The shortened form יוֹיָקִים (Joiakim) is used in all four occurrences, distinguishing this priest from King Jehoiakim (יְהוֹיָקִים). Spanish renders it 'Joiacim,' while French and German retain the Hebrew form in brackets. Neh 12:10 traces the succession Jeshua → Joiakim → Eliashib, and v. 12 and 26 list the priestly heads who served during his tenure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yoyaqim, and-Yoyaqim | es: Joiacim, y-Joiacim | fr: [ויויקים], [יויקים] | de: [ויויקים], [יויקים] Neh 12:10; Neh 12:12; Neh 12:26

יְהוֹיָרִיב H3114 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)
Joiarib (Jehoiarib); a personal name meaning 'the LORD contends/pleads'
A theophoric name combining Yahweh with the root rîb ('to contend, plead a case'), meaning 'the LORD pleads' or 'the LORD contends.' Jehoiarib heads the first of the twenty-four priestly courses (1 Chr 24:7) and appears in postexilic lists in Nehemiah and Ezra. In Ezra 8:16, Joiarib is one of the leaders sent to recruit Levites for the return. The shortened form Yôyārîb alternates with Yehôyārîb across Chronicles and Nehemiah. All versions — English 'Joiarib,' Spanish 'Joiarib,' French 'Joiarib' — keep the name stable.

(5×) A proper name designating priestly and lay figures in postexilic Judah. As head of the first priestly division (1 Chr 24:7; Neh 11:10), Jehoiarib held a prominent liturgical role. A teacher by this name served under Ezra (Ezra 8:16). A Judahite inhabitant of Jerusalem also bore the name (Neh 11:5). The multilingual evidence shows uniform transliteration — 'Joiarib/Yoyariv' — with French and German sometimes leaving the Hebrew untranslated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yoyariv, and-Yoyariv, and-for-Yoyariv | es: Joiarib, Y-de-Joiarib, y-Joiarib | fr: [ויויריב], [וליויריב], [ויריב] | de: [ויויריב], [וליויריב], [יויריב] Ezra 8:16; Neh 11:5; Neh 11:10; Neh 12:6; Neh 12:19

יוֹכֶבֶד H3115 N-proper-fs (2×)

Jochebed (proper name: 'YHWH is glory'; mother of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam)

This significant name belongs to one of Scripture's most important mothers: the daughter of Levi who married Amram and bore Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. The name means 'Yahweh is glory' or 'glory of Yahweh,' making it one of the earliest biblical names to incorporate the divine name. Interestingly, this challenges some scholarly theories about when the divine name came into use. The name appears only twice, both in Priestly genealogies documenting the Levitical ancestry of Israel's great leaders.

(2×) The proper name of Moses's mother, daughter of Levi and wife of Amram (Exod 6:20, Num 26:59, both from the Priestly source). The name means 'Yahweh is glory,' incorporating the divine name in a way that has sparked scholarly discussion about early Yahwism. Standard transliterations are remarkably consistent: English 'Jochebed,' Spanish 'Jocabed' or 'Yokeved,' French 'Jochebed' or 'Jokébed,' German 'Jochebed,' all preserving the name of this matriarch who gave birth to Israel's deliverer. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jochebed | es: Jocabed, Yokeved | fr: Jochebed, Jokébed | de: Jochebed Exod 6:20; Num 26:59

יְהוּכַל H3116 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yukhal/Jucal, official who opposed Jeremiah (Jeremiah 38:1)

This is the shortened form of Yehukhal (appearing in Jeremiah 37:3), the name of a royal courtier under Zedekiah. The name appears here as Yukhal or Jucal when he is listed among those officials who heard Jeremiah's message of surrender and accused him of treason. The variant spelling likely represents a contracted or colloquial form of the theophoric name. His role shifts from messenger requesting prayer to prosecutor demanding the prophet's death.

(1×) The contracted form of Yehukhal's name, used when he joins other officials in accusing Jeremiah of weakening the soldiers' morale during Babylon's siege (Jer 38:1). The shortened name appears in the narrative of Jeremiah's arrest and imprisonment in the cistern. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yukhal | es: y-Yujal | fr: [ויוכל] | de: und-er-kann Jer 38:1

יוֹמָם H3117 Prep-k (2304×)

Day, time, lifetime; a unit of time ranging from a single day to an era or lifespan, also used in temporal and comparative expressions.

The Hebrew word yom (יוֹם) is deceptively simple — 'day' — yet it carries an enormous semantic load in Scripture. It can mean a literal 24-hour period, the daylight hours as opposed to night, a specific calendar date, an entire era ('in the days of'), or someone's whole lifetime ('all the days of his life'). Combined with prepositions it forms many idioms: 'on that day,' 'in those days,' 'from day to day.' The multilingual evidence confirms this breadth: German 'am-Tag' and French 'dans-le-jour' both track the temporal specificity, while the comparative construction 'like the days of' (Gen 29:20) shows yom encoding experiential quality, not just chronological quantity.

1. day, specific time (2231×) The general temporal sense: a day as a unit of time, a specific date, or a period/era marked by events. This massively dominant sense (2,231 occurrences) spans 'the third day' (Gen 2:2), 'on that day' (Gen 26:32), and epochal 'day of the LORD' expressions. The prepositional prefix ke- ('in/on the day') frequently attaches, yielding 'in-the-day' and 'on-the-day' glosses across languages. Spanish 'en-el-día,' French 'dans-le-jour,' and German 'am-Tag' all preserve the temporal-locative construction. This sense serves as the basic building block for biblical chronology and narrative sequencing. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: in-the-day, on-the-day | es: En-el-día, en-el-día | fr: dans-le-jour, sur-le-jour | de: am-Tag, an-dem-Tag, auf-der-Tag Gen 2:2; Gen 26:32; Gen 34:25; Gen 40:20; Gen 48:20

2. one's days, lifetime (52×) The biographical sense: 'one's days' as a metonym for a person's lifetime, reign, or allotted span. Phrases like 'the days of Peleg' (Gen 10:25), 'all the days of your life,' and 'his days were 930 years' use yom plurally to encompass an entire existence. The possessive suffix is key — 'his-days,' 'your-days,' 'their-days' — as reflected in Spanish 'días-de-él,' French 'de-son-jours,' and German 'auf-sein-Tag.' This sense appears in both biographical summaries and divine decrees limiting someone's days (e.g., Exod 5:13, Lev 23:37). DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: from-his-days, his-day, his-days | es: En-su-día, desde-sus-días, días-de-él | fr: dans-son-jour, de-son-jours, jour | de: Tag, auf-sein-Tag, in-sein-Tag Gen 10:25; Exod 5:13; Exod 5:19; Exod 16:4; Lev 23:37

3. like the day(s) of (14×) The comparative-temporal expression 'like the day(s) of,' using the prefix ke- to draw an analogy between present experience and a remembered or anticipated time. Jacob's seven years seemed 'like a few days' because of his love for Rachel (Gen 29:20); Moses remained on Sinai 'like the first days' (Deut 10:10); the blessing 'as your days, so shall your strength be' (Deut 33:25). The simile structure is clear across languages: French 'comme-jour,' German 'wie-Tag,' Spanish 'como-día.' Only 14 occurrences, but each carries strong rhetorical or emotional force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-as-your-days, and-like-days-of, as-day-of | es: Como-los-días, Y-como-días-de, como-día | fr: comme-jour, comme-jours, comme-le-jours | de: und-wie-Tage-von, und-wie-dein-Tage, wie-Tag Gen 29:20; Deut 10:10; Deut 33:25; Esth 9:22; Job 7:1

4. two days (4×) The dual form yomayim (יוֹמָיִם) indicating exactly two days — a grammatical rather than semantic distinction, but one that Hebrew marks morphologically. It appears in regulations about a servant surviving 'a day or two days' (Exod 21:21), the people gathering manna for 'two days' (Num 11:19), and the cloud tarrying 'two days' (Num 9:22). The multilingual glosses uniformly render the numeral: French 'deux-jours,' German 'zwei-Tage,' Spanish 'dos-días.' Only 4 occurrences carry this specific form in the corpus. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: days-two, of-two-days, two-days | es: dos-días | fr: de-deux-jours, deux-jours, jours-deux | de: Tage-zwei, von-zwei-Tage, zwei-Tage Exod 16:29; Exod 21:21; Num 9:22; Num 11:19

5. daylight, daytime (3×) The daylight or daytime sense: the bright portion of the 24-hour cycle as opposed to night. Jacob declares 'by day the heat consumed me and the frost by night' (Gen 31:39), Nehemiah posts guards 'in the day' (Neh 4:22), and the psalm title of Psalm 88:1 invokes crying 'in the day.' This contrasts with sense 1 where 'day' is a calendar unit; here it is the luminous half of the daily cycle. Only 3 clear occurrences, but the adverbial form yomam (יוֹמָם, 'by day') extends this sense throughout the Hebrew Bible. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: and-the-day, day | es: día, día-, y-el-día | fr: et-der-jour, jour | de: Tag, am-Tag, und-der-Tag Gen 31:39; Neh 4:22; Ps 88:1

יוֹם H3118 N-mpc (16×)

Day, days (Aramaic) — a unit of time in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, used for calendar dates, durations, and eras.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew yom, appearing exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. It serves the same broad range as its Hebrew counterpart: marking a specific calendar day (Ezra 6:15), expressing daily repetition in the idiom 'day by day' (Ezra 6:9), and extending to longer spans of time such as lifetimes and reigns (Dan 2:44; 5:11). The striking phrase 'Ancient of Days' (attiq yomin, Dan 7:9, 13, 22) portrays God as an aged sovereign whose dominion stretches across all epochs. French 'jour' and German 'Tag' render it straightforwardly, while Spanish alternates between 'dia' and 'dias' for singular and plural contexts.

day, days (Aramaic) (16×) A unit of time covering individual days, calendar dates, durations, and historical eras in Biblical Aramaic. Used for specific dates like the third of Adar (Ezra 6:15), for daily provision idioms (Ezra 6:9), and for extended periods such as royal reigns (Dan 2:44; 5:11). The theologically weighty epithet 'Ancient of Days' (Dan 7:9, 13, 22) uses the plural to evoke God's sovereignty across all ages. Spanish 'dias,' French 'jour,' and German 'Tag' all confirm the straightforward temporal sense. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: Days, and-in-days-of, and-in-days-of-them | es: Y-en-los-días-de, al-día, de-Días | fr: au-jour, et-jour, jour | de: Tag, [יומת], an-dem-Tag Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19; Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:15

יוֹן H3119 Prep-b / Adv (51×)

by day, in the daytime — a temporal adverb marking actions that occur during daylight hours

Yomam is the adverbial counterpart of laylah ('by night'), and the two words together form one of Hebrew's most characteristic merisms for continual, unceasing activity. Its 51 occurrences paint a vivid picture of God's ceaseless guidance: the pillar of cloud by day and fire by night that led Israel through the wilderness (Exod 13:21-22; Num 14:14; Neh 9:12, 19), the shade from heat by day and shelter from storm (Isa 4:6), and the steadfast love that the LORD commands 'by day' while his song accompanies 'by night' (Ps 42:8). Jeremiah uses the yomam-laylah pair to describe God's unbreakable covenant with creation itself (Jer 33:20, 25). The translations are straightforward: Spanish 'de dia,' French 'jour,' German 'bei Tag.'

by day, in the daytime (51×) A temporal adverb meaning 'by day' or 'during the daytime,' used to locate events within daylight hours and very frequently paired with laylah ('by night') to express ceaseless duration or round-the-clock divine protection. The paradigmatic usage is the Exodus pillar imagery: 'The LORD went before them by day in a pillar of cloud' (Exod 13:21), a motif recalled throughout the Psalms and Prophets (Ps 78:14; Isa 4:5-6; Neh 9:12). The adverbial -am ending is an archaic accusative of time, parallel in formation to other Hebrew temporal adverbs. All 51 occurrences carry this single daytime-temporal sense. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: by-day, day | es: de-día, día | fr: [ביומם], [יומם], jour | de: Tag, bei-Tag, durch-Tag Exod 13:21; Exod 13:22; Exod 40:38; Lev 8:35

יָוָן H3120 N-proper-ms (11×)

Javan (Yavan): son of Japheth, eponymous ancestor of the Ionians; by extension, Greece as a geographic-political entity.

The Hebrew name for both the person Javan, son of Japheth, and the land of Greece. In the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2, 4; 1 Chr 1:5, 7) Javan appears as an individual ancestor whose descendants include Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim – peoples associated with the Aegean and Mediterranean coasts. In later prophetic literature, particularly Daniel (8:21; 10:20; 11:2) and Zechariah (9:13), the name designates Greece as a world power. The LXX renders it Ἑλλάς, and Old Persian inscriptions confirm the form Yauna for the Ionians. Spanish 'Grecia' in the prophetic texts shows the geographic shift clearly.

1. Yavan / Javan (person, eponymous ancestor) (7×) The personal name Javan (Yavan), a son of Japheth listed in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2; 1 Chr 1:5) and the eponymous ancestor of the Ionian Greeks. His 'sons' – Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim (Gen 10:4; 1 Chr 1:7) – represent peoples of the Aegean and western Mediterranean coastlands. In Isaiah 66:19 and Ezekiel 27:13, Javan appears alongside Tubal and Meshech as distant trading peoples. The multilingual glosses consistently render the name phonetically: Spanish 'Javan,' French 'Javan.' GREECE JAVAN NAME

en: Javan, Yavan, and-Javan | es: Javán, Yavan, Yaván | fr: Javan, [ויון], et-Javan | de: Jawans, [ויון], [יון] Gen 10:2; Gen 10:4; 1Chr 1:5; 1Chr 1:7; Isa 66:19

2. Yavan / Greece (geographic-political entity) (4×) Greece as a geographic and political entity, used especially in apocalyptic and late prophetic texts. Daniel 8:21 identifies the 'king of Yavan' as the ruler of Greece (the LXX reads Ἑλλάς), and Daniel 10:20 and 11:2 describe the 'prince of Yavan' as a world-historical power. Zechariah 9:13 pits the sons of Zion against the sons of Yavan. Spanish 'Grecia' in these passages confirms the transition from personal-ethnic name to geopolitical designation. This semantic shift from ancestor to nation mirrors how 'Israel' functions elsewhere in Scripture. GREECE JAVAN NAME

en: Yavan | es: Grecia | fr: Javan | de: [יון] Dan 8:21; Dan 10:20; Dan 11:2; Zech 9:13

יוֹן H3121 Art / N-ms (2×)

mire, mud (noun describing deep mud or miry clay that entraps)

This noun appears only in the Psalms, both times describing the treacherous mire or mud from which the psalmist cries for deliverance. The word captures the imagery of being stuck in deep, clinging mud that threatens to swallow one whole—a powerful metaphor for despair and mortal danger. Both occurrences use similar phrasing about being drawn up from or sinking into the miry clay. The etymology remains uncertain, though some scholars have proposed Persian or other origins.

(2×) A noun denoting deep mud or mire that entraps. Both Psalm occurrences use vivid rescue imagery: drawn out 'from the miry clay' or 'pit of mud' (Ps 40:2) and sinking 'in deep mire' (Ps 69:2). The word appears with the article: 'the mud/mire.' Multilingual renderings show variety: English 'mire' or 'mud,' Spanish 'fango' (mud) or 'lodo' (mire), with translators capturing the sense of dangerous, entrapping muck from which only divine intervention can rescue. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-mire-of, the-mud | es: el-fango, en-lodo-de | fr: dans-Yanin, le-Yanin | de: der-mud, in-mire-von Ps 40:2; Ps 69:2

יְהוֹנָדָב H3122 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Jonadab (Yonadab/Yehonadab), a proper name meaning 'YHWH is noble/generous,' borne by David's nephew and the Rechabite patriarch Jonadab is a name with two very different bearers. David's nephew Jonadab son of Shimeah appears in the dark narrative of Amnon's crime against Tamar, where he serves as the cunning adviser who devises the deception (2 Sam 13:3-5, 32, 35). The other Jonadab — son of Rechab — is the revered ancestor of the Rechabites, whose lifestyle vow against wine, agriculture, and permanent housing Jeremiah holds up as a model of faithful obedience (Jer 35:6-19). The longer form Yehonadab appears in 2 Kings 10:15-23 where this Rechabite joins Jehu's purge of Baal worship.

Yonadab / Jonadab (proper name) (7×) The proper masculine name Yonadab/Yehonadab (יְהוֹנָדָב / יוֹנָדָב), meaning 'YHWH is noble' or 'YHWH has impelled.' It refers to two individuals: (a) Jonadab son of Shimeah, David's nephew and the shrewd counselor in the Amnon-Tamar episode (2 Sam 13:3, 5, 32, 35); (b) Jonadab/Jehonadab son of Rechab, patriarch of the Rechabites who partnered with Jehu against Baal worship (2 Kgs 10:15, 23) and whose descendants Jeremiah commended for their fidelity (Jer 35:6-19). The short and long forms alternate freely in the text. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jonadab, Yonadav, and-Jonadab | es: Yonadab, Yonadav, a-Yonadav | fr: Jonadab, [ליונדב], et-Jonadab | de: Jonadab, [יונדב], [ליונדב] 2Sam 13:3; 2Sam 13:32; 2Sam 13:35; Jer 35:6

יוֹנָה H3123 N-fsc / 1cs (32×)

Dove or pigeon; the literal bird used in sacrifice and simile, or a tender term of endearment for a beloved.

A common noun for the dove or pigeon, one of the gentlest birds in the ancient Near East. In narrative it appears as Noah's messenger returning with the olive branch (Gen 8:8-12) and throughout Leviticus as a sacrificial offering paired with turtledoves. The prophets use it in vivid similes — Ephraim is a 'silly dove' easily snared (Hos 7:11), and exiles return like doves to their windows (Isa 60:8). In Song of Solomon it becomes a whispered endearment: 'my dove, my perfect one' (Song 5:2; 6:9), where Spanish renders the intimate 'paloma mía' and French 'ma colombe.'

1. dove, pigeon (literal bird) (29×) The literal bird (Columba livia or related species), appearing as Noah's scout returning with the olive branch (Gen 8:8-12), as a sacrificial offering paired with turtledoves throughout Leviticus (Lev 1:14; 12:6), and in prophetic similes describing moaning, flight, or naïveté — Hosea's 'silly dove' (7:11). Translations uniformly use 'paloma,' 'colombe,' 'Taube,' confirming a single zoological referent across 29 occurrences. LIVING CREATURES

en: a-dove, and-like-doves, dove | es: como-paloma, la-paloma, paloma | fr: [וכיונים], [כיונה], colombe | de: [וכיונים], [כיונה], der-dove Gen 8:8; Gen 8:9; Gen 8:10; Gen 8:11; Gen 8:12

2. dove (term of endearment) (3×) A figurative term of endearment addressed to a beloved, restricted to Song of Solomon with the possessive suffix 'my dove' (Song 2:14; 5:2; 6:9). The intimate register is confirmed across languages: Spanish 'paloma mía,' French 'ma colombe,' German 'meine Taube' — all marking the shift from zoological noun to affectionate address within love poetry. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: my-dove | es: Paloma-mía, mi-paloma, paloma-mía | fr: Ma-colombe,, ma-colombe, | de: meine-Taube Song 2:14; Song 5:2; Song 6:9

יוֹנָה H3124 N-proper-ms (19×)

Jonah — personal name meaning 'dove,' the prophet son of Amittai sent to Nineveh

The proper name of the prophet Jonah (Hebrew Yonah, 'dove'), son of Amittai, from Gath-hepher. According to 2 Kings 14:25 he prophesied the territorial restoration accomplished under Jeroboam II. He is the central figure of the Book of Jonah, famous for his reluctant mission to Nineveh and the episode of the great fish. Spanish renders the name 'Jonas,' French likewise 'Jonas,' while German uses 'Jona' — all tracing back to the Hebrew word for 'dove,' a symbol of gentleness and vulnerability that stands in ironic contrast to the prophet's stubborn flight.

Yonah (19×) The proper noun Yonah ('dove'), designating the prophet Jonah son of Amittai from Gath-hepher. All nineteen occurrences refer to this single individual, appearing in 2 Kings 14:25 as a historical prophet and throughout the Book of Jonah (1:1–4:9) as the reluctant missionary to Nineveh. The name's meaning — 'dove' — resonates with themes of flight and return that pervade the narrative. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yonah, but-Yonah, over-Yonah | es: Jonás, Yonah, para-Yonah | fr: Jonas, Yonah, et-Jonas | de: Jona, Yonah, und-Jona 2Kgs 14:25; Jonah 1:1; Jonah 1:3; Jonah 1:5; Jonah 1:7

יָוָנִי H3125 Art / N-proper-mp (1×)

The Greeks, sons of Javan (Joel 3:6)

This gentilicial adjective with the definite article refers to the Ionians or Greeks in Joel's oracle against Judah's enemies. The prophet condemns Tyre, Sidon, and Philistia for selling Jerusalem's children to 'the sons of the Greeks,' removing them far from their homeland. The term reflects the Greek presence in Mediterranean slave trade during the Persian and early Hellenistic periods. The Septuagint translates this as 'Hellenes,' confirming the identification with Greek-speaking peoples.

(1×) The Ionian Greeks to whom Judean and Jerusalemite captives were sold as slaves by Phoenician and Philistine traders (Joel 3:6). The designation emphasizes the geographic and cultural distance of this exile, as children were trafficked far from their ancestral land to Greek-speaking markets. GREEK HELLENE IDENTITY

en: the-Greeks | es: los-griegos | fr: Javan | de: der-Tauben Joel 3:6

יוֹנֵק H3126 Prep-k (1×)

Young plant, tender shoot, or sapling (Isaiah 53:2)

This noun denotes a young plant or sucker growing up from the ground, used metaphorically in Isaiah's Suffering Servant passage. The servant grows up 'like a young plant' and 'like a root out of dry ground,' emphasizing his humble, unimpressive origins. The term suggests vulnerability and lack of obvious vitality—a tender shoot easily overlooked or trampled. The image captures how the servant's appearance belied his significance, fulfilling Isaiah's theme that God's redemptive work comes through unexpected means.

(1×) A tender young plant or shoot, used metaphorically to describe the Suffering Servant's humble origins and unimpressive appearance (Isa 53:2). The image emphasizes vulnerability and obscurity, contrasting with expectations of a mighty deliverer emerging from strength rather than weakness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: like-the-young-plant | es: como-retoño | fr: [כיונק] | de: [כיונק] Isa 53:2

יוֹנֶקֶת H3127 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (6×)

A young shoot, twig, or branch growing from a tree or vine; used both literally and as a figure for Israel's renewal.

This feminine noun (יוֹנֶקֶת) denotes a fresh, tender shoot or branch — the kind of new growth that springs from an established plant. It always appears with pronominal suffixes ('his shoots,' 'its shoots'), emphasizing the organic connection between parent stock and new growth. In Job 8:16 and 15:30, shoots symbolize the deceptive flourishing of the wicked. More hopefully, Job 14:7 affirms that even a felled tree can sprout fresh shoots. The prophetic usage is richly metaphorical: Hosea 14:7 pictures restored Israel spreading shoots like an olive tree, Ezekiel 17:22 envisions a tender shoot from the cedar's crown, and Psalm 80:11 recalls the vine whose branches reached the sea.

shoot, young branch (6×) A young shoot, twig, or branch growing from a tree, vine, or plant — always appearing with possessive suffixes indicating the parent plant. Used literally of botanical growth (Job 14:7, where hope lies in a tree's ability to sprout again) and figuratively of persons or nations: the wicked's deceptive prosperity (Job 8:16; 15:30), Israel as an olive tree sending out shoots (Hos 14:7), a messianic cedar twig (Ezek 17:22), and a vine whose branches reached the Mediterranean (Ps 80:11). Spanish 'renuevos' (renewals/new shoots) and 'retoño' (sprout) capture the vitality inherent in the term. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: and-shoots-its, his-shoots, its-shoots | es: renuevos-de-ella, su-retoño, sus-renuevos | fr: et-son-יִנְקָתוֹ-lui, rejeton, son-יִנְקָתוֹ-lui | de: [ויניקתו], [יניקותיו], [ינקתו] Job 8:16; Job 14:7; Job 15:30; Ps 80:11; Ezek 17:22

יוֹנָה H3128

dove, pigeon (the bird; often used in sacrificial contexts or similes)

The dove appears both as Noah's messenger after the flood (Genesis 8) and as a standard sacrificial bird throughout Levitical law, where 'young pigeons' (בְּנֵי יוֹנָה) are prescribed for purification offerings. Beyond cultic usage, doves serve as similes: Ephraim is 'like a silly dove' easily snared (Hosea 7:11), returning exiles come like doves to their windows (Isaiah 60:8), and the beloved in Song of Songs is addressed as 'my dove.' The bird's associations include innocence, simplicity, vulnerability, and swift return—themes that resonate through both prophetic and wisdom literature.

יְהוֹנָתָן H3129 N-proper-ms (44×)

Jonathan — 'YHWH has given'; son of Saul and David's beloved companion, plus other biblical figures

Yehonatan (contracted Yonatan) is a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has given,' built from the same root as Elnathan, Nethaniah, and Nethanel. Of its 44 occurrences, the vast majority designate Jonathan son of Saul — the prince whose covenant friendship with David (1 Sam 18:1-4) became a paradigm of selfless loyalty. The name also applies to Jonathan son of Abiathar the priest (2 Sam 15:27),

David's nephew who slew a Philistine giant (2 Sam 21:21), and several other minor figures. The Septuagint consistently renders it Ionathan, and modern translations preserve the name with minimal variation: Spanish 'Jonatan,' French 'Yonatan,' German 'Yonatan.'

Jonathan (proper name) (44×) The theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has given,' applied chiefly to Saul's son whose covenant friendship with David (1 Sam 18:1-4) and death at Gilboa (1 Sam 31:2) are paradigmatic. Also designates Abiathar's son (2 Sam 15:27), David's nephew (2 Sam 21:21), and the Levite of Judges 18:30. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yonatan | es: Jonatán | fr: Yonatan | de: Yonatan Judg 18:30; 1Sam 13:2; 1Sam 13:3; 1Sam 13:16; 1Sam 13:22

יוֹסֵף H3130 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (213×)

Joseph – proper name meaning 'he adds'; the patriarch, and by metonymy the northern tribes descended from him.

Yosef is a proper name explained by two folk etymologies in Genesis 30:23-24: Rachel says God has 'taken away' (asaf) her reproach, then prays that YHWH will 'add' (yasaf) another son. The name's primary referent is the patriarch Joseph, Jacob's favored son whose story of betrayal, enslavement, and exaltation dominates Genesis 37-50. By metonymy, 'Joseph' also designates the northern tribal territory of Ephraim and Manasseh (Deut 33:13; Ps 80:2). Spanish 'Yosef,' French 'Joseph,' and German 'Josef' preserve the name across traditions.

Joseph (proper name) (213×) The proper name Joseph (Yosef / Yehoseph), meaning 'he adds' or 'may he add,' referring primarily to the patriarch Joseph son of Jacob and Rachel (Gen 30:24), whose narrative of exile, suffering, and providential exaltation spans Genesis 37-50. Used metonymically for the combined tribal territory of Ephraim and Manasseh (Deut 33:13; Ps 80:2; Ezek 37:16). The dual etymology in Genesis 30:23-24 connects it to both asaf ('take away') and yasaf ('add'), enriching its meaning with themes of loss reversed and blessing multiplied. JOSEPH PROPER NAME

en: Joseph | es: Yosef | fr: Joseph | de: Josef, Josefs Gen 30:24; Gen 30:25; Gen 33:2; Gen 33:7; Gen 35:24

יוֹסִפְיָה H3131 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yosifyah, father of one of Ezra's companions (Ezra 8:10)

This theophoric name meaning 'Yah adds' or 'Yah increases' belongs to the father of one of the family heads who returned with Ezra from Babylon. The man's son led 160 males from Bani's descendants on the return journey. Like many names in Ezra's genealogical lists, Yosifyah receives no further narrative development, serving primarily to establish his son's legitimacy and ancestral credentials for participation in the restoration community.

(1×) The father of a family head who accompanied Ezra from Babylonian exile to Jerusalem, contributing 160 males to the returning community (Ezra 8:10). His name's meaning, 'Yah adds,' appropriately reflects the growth of the restoration community through successive waves of return. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yosifyah | es: Yosifyah | fr: [יוספיה] | de: [יוספיה] Ezra 8:10

יוֹעֵאלָה H3132 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yoelah — personal name of one of David's mighty men (1 Chr 12:8)

This personal name appears once in Chronicles' roster of warriors who joined David at Ziklag. The name may derive from a root meaning 'may he avail' or 'may he profit,' reflecting a parent's hopeful prayer. Though the individual appears only in this military context, he represents one of the skilled fighters from various tribes who rallied to David before he became king.

(1×) A personal name borne by one of David's elite fighters. The single attestation in 1 Chronicles 12:8 places him among the Gadite warriors renowned for their military prowess. Translations consistently transliterate the name (Spanish 'Yoelá'), recognizing its function as a proper designation rather than attempting semantic translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yoelah | es: Y-Yoelá | fr: [ויואלה] | de: [ויואלה] 1Chr 12:8

יוֹעֵד H3133 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yoed — personal name of a Benjamite in postexilic Jerusalem (Neh 11:7)

A Benjamite mentioned in Nehemiah's list of those resettling Jerusalem after the exile. The name likely means 'Yahweh is witness,' invoking God as the guarantor of truth and covenant faithfulness. This postexilic genealogy underscores the restoration of tribal identities and continuity with pre-exilic Israel despite the dramatic disruption of captivity.

(1×) Personal name appearing in the postexilic resettlement records. The individual is identified as a Benjamite living in Jerusalem during Nehemiah's governorship. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'Joed,' French and German preserving the Hebrew form) confirms this as a proper name with theological significance rooted in divine witness. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yoed | es: Joed | fr: [יועד] | de: [יועד] Neh 11:7

יוֹעֶזֶר H3134 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yoezer — personal name of one of David's warriors (1 Chr 12:7), meaning 'Yahweh is help'

The name means 'Yahweh is help' and belongs to one of David's mighty men listed in 1 Chronicles 12. This theophoric name affirms God as the source of aid and deliverance, a fitting designation for a warrior. The name pattern appears in other biblical figures like Eliezer and Azariel, reflecting a common Hebrew naming convention that embeds theological confession.

(1×) One of David's elite military commanders, appearing in the Chronicles roster with the conjunction 'and.' The name's theophoric element declares divine assistance, appropriate for someone in military service. Spanish ('y-Yoezer') and other translations maintain the transliteration with the coordinating conjunction, preserving the list structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yoezer | es: y-Yoezer | fr: [ויועזר] | de: [ויועזר] 1Chr 12:7

יוֹאָשׁ H3135 N-proper-ms (2×)

Joash (proper name: 'YHWH has aided'; Benjamite and royal officer names)

This name, possibly meaning 'Yahweh has aided,' appears for multiple individuals throughout Scripture. In this batch we see two: a Benjamite son of Becher and an officer under David who supervised olive and sycamore groves. The name is shorter than the more common Jehoash but likely carries the same meaning, with the divine element providing hope that God assists or comes to help. The variety of men bearing this name reflects its popularity in ancient Israel.

(2×) A proper name borne by several biblical figures, here appearing for a Benjamite son of Becher (1 Chr 7:8) and an officer in David's administration responsible for oil supplies (1 Chr 27:28). The name probably means 'Yahweh has aided,' from a root meaning 'to help.' Standard transliterations: English 'Joash' or 'Yoash,' Spanish 'Joás' or 'Yoás,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew form, distinguishing this name from the longer Jehoash. JOASH PERSONAL NAME

en: Yoash, and-Yoash | es: Joás, y-Yoás | fr: [ויואש], [יואש] | de: [ויואש], [יואש] 1Chr 7:8; 1Chr 27:28

יְהוֹצָדָק H3136a N-proper-ms (4×)

Jozadak, 'Yahweh is righteous,' father of Joshua the high priest of the restoration era

A contracted form of the name Jehozadak meaning 'Yahweh is righteous,' identifying the father of Joshua (Jeshua) the high priest who led worship in the rebuilt temple. The name connects priestly legitimacy across the exile: Jozadak was carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar (1 Chr 5:41), and his son Joshua became the first high priest of the Second Temple. All four occurrences here use the shortened form יוֹצָדָק found in Ezra and Nehemiah.

(4×) The proper name of the exiled priest whose son Joshua became high priest of the restoration, appearing in the contracted form Jozadak (יוֹצָדָק). English uses 'Yotsadaq,' Spanish distinguishes 'Josadac' and 'Yotzadaq,' while French renders 'Jotsadak.' The name anchors the priestly genealogy in Ezra 3:2, 8 (temple rebuilding), Ezra 10:18 (the mixed-marriage crisis), and Neh 12:26 (the priestly registry), always identifying Joshua's father to establish high-priestly credentials. JEHOZADAK PERSONAL NAME

en: Yotsadaq | es: Josadac, Yotzadaq | fr: Jotsadak | de: [יוצדק] Ezra 3:2; Ezra 3:8; Ezra 10:18; Neh 12:26

יוֹצָדָק H3136b N-proper-ms (1×)

Yotsadaq — personal name, father of Jeshua the high priest (Ezra 5:2)

This name appears in the postexilic rebuilding narratives, identifying the father of Jeshua (Joshua), the high priest who returned with Zerubbabel. The same individual appears frequently in Biblical Hebrew texts. His mention establishes priestly legitimacy and genealogical continuity through the exile, critical for the restoration community's religious authority.

(1×) Father of the high priest Jeshua during the initial return from Babylonian exile. His inclusion in Ezra 5:2 validates the priestly lineage necessary for temple service. Across languages (Spanish 'Josadac'), the name is transliterated consistently, reflecting its role as a genealogical marker connecting pre-exilic and postexilic priestly lines. JEHOZADAK PERSONAL NAME

en: Yotsadaq | es: Josadac | fr: [יוצדק] | de: [יוצדק] Ezra 5:2

יְהוֹיָקִים H3137 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yoqim — personal name of a Judahite (1 Chr 4:22)

This name appears in the genealogies of Judah, though it shares consonants with Jehoiakim, the last king before the Babylonian conquest. The root suggests 'he raises up,' a common theophoric element. The Chronicles genealogies preserve clan memory and tribal identity, maintaining historical connections even for figures who appear only once in Scripture.

(1×) A Judahite listed in the tribal genealogies. The single occurrence in 1 Chronicles 4:22 with a coordinating conjunction shows this as part of a family registry. Spanish ('Y-Yoquim') and French maintain the transliteration, treating it as a proper designation. The name's theological overtones of divine exaltation were common in Israelite naming practices. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yoqim | es: Y-Yoquim | fr: [ויוקים] | de: [ויוקים] 1Chr 4:22

יוֹרֶה H3138 N-ms (3×)

early rain, autumn/fall rains in Palestine (October-December), opposite of late spring rain

The term for the autumn rains that begin the agricultural year in ancient Palestine, falling from late October through early December. These early rains soften the ground for plowing and planting, contrasted with the מַלְקוֹשׁ (late spring rains) that ripen the crops before harvest. Found in Deuteronomy 11:14, Jeremiah 5:24, and Hosea 6:3, the early rain becomes a powerful metaphor for God's blessing and faithfulness. The textual note in Hosea 6:3 suggests some manuscripts vocalized this as a verbal form rather than a noun, but the rain imagery fits the context perfectly.

(3×) The seasonal early rains essential for successful agriculture in the Levant. Mentioned in covenant blessings (Deuteronomy) and prophetic texts that use the rain cycle as a metaphor for divine provision or judgment. Cross-linguistic glosses ('early rain', 'temprana', 'früh-Regen') capture the temporal aspect that distinguishes this from other rain vocabulary, marking it as the first of the two critical rain periods. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: [ketiv], early-rain | es: [temprana], la-temprana, temprana | fr: [(יורה)], [[וירה]], early-pluie | de: [(יורה)], [[וירה]], frueh-Regen Deut 11:14; Jer 5:24

יוֹרָה H3139 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yorah — personal name, ancestor of a family that returned from exile (Ezra 2:18)

The name designates a family group among those who returned from Babylonian captivity. Intriguingly, the parallel list in Nehemiah 7:24 gives the name as Hariph, suggesting either textual variation or different clan designations for the same group. Such variations in the returning exile lists reflect the complex processes of record-keeping and identity negotiation during restoration.

(1×) Ancestral name of a family unit numbering among the returnees from exile. Though the domain classification mentions 'Physical Events,' this is clearly a personal name serving as a clan designation. The equation with Hariph in the parallel Nehemiah passage shows the fluidity of family names across documentary sources from the same period. SEND RAIN

en: Yorah | es: Jorá | fr: [יורה] | de: [יורה] Ezra 2:18

יוֹרַי H3140 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yorai — personal name of a Gadite chief (1 Chr 5:13)

This name possibly means 'whom Yahweh teaches,' appearing among the chiefs of the tribe of Gad. The Gadite genealogies in Chronicles preserve the memory of trans-Jordanian tribal leadership. Though the individual appears only once, his inclusion demonstrates the Chronicler's concern to honor all of Israel's tribal heritage, not just Judah and Benjamin.

(1×) A chief of the Gadite tribe listed with the conjunction 'and' in a catalog of leaders. The name's possible derivation from a root meaning 'teach' with the divine name suggests parental hope for divine instruction. Translations across languages (Spanish 'y-Yoray') preserve the transliteration, recognizing this as a personal identifier within a genealogical framework. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yorai | es: y-Yoray | fr: [ויורי] | de: [ויורי] 1Chr 5:13

יְהוֹרָם H3141 N-proper-ms (20×)

Joram / Jehoram — 'YHWH is exalted,' a name shared by kings of Israel and Judah

A theophoric name meaning 'YHWH is exalted,' appearing in both its full form יְהוֹרָם (Jehoram) and abbreviated forms יוֹרָם / יְרָם (Joram/Yoram). Most prominently borne by two contemporary kings: Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, and Jehoram son of Ahab, king of Israel — their overlapping reigns and shared name create some of the most confusing chronological passages in Kings (2 Kgs 1:17; 8:16). Other bearers include a priest in Jehoshaphat's day (2 Chr 17:8) and a son of Tou king of Hamath who brought gifts to David (2 Sam 8:10).

Joram / Yoram (proper name) (20×) The proper name Joram/Jehoram (יְהוֹרָם / יוֹרָם / יְרָם), meaning 'YHWH is exalted,' borne by multiple individuals including two near-contemporary kings (of Israel and Judah respectively), a Levitical priest, and a Hamathite prince. Spanish uniformly renders 'Joram/Yoram,' French 'Joram/Yoram,' and German likewise. The interchangeability of full and shortened forms within the same narrative (e.g., 2 Kgs 8:16–29) confirms these are orthographic variants of one name, not distinct lexemes. JEHORAM JORAM NAMES

en: Joram, Yoram, and-Joram | es: Joram, Joram-, Yoram | fr: Joram, Yoram, [וירם] | de: Joram, Yoram, [וירם] 2Sam 8:10; 2Kgs 8:16; 2Kgs 8:21; 2Kgs 8:23; 2Kgs 8:24

יוּשַׁב חֶסֶד H3142 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jushab-hesed (proper name: 'kindness is returned'; son of Zerub-babel)

This unusual compound name belongs to a son of Zerubbabel, the post-exilic governor who led the return from Babylon. The name appears twice in the same verse, apparently representing two separate elements that scribes treated as individual names: Jushab (meaning 'he returns' or 'he dwells') and Chesed (meaning 'kindness' or 'covenant loyalty'). The Septuagint's transliteration shows Greek translators struggled with this rare compound, producing very different renderings.

(2×) A proper name (or possibly two separate names) appearing in Zerubbabel's genealogy (1 Chr 3:20, twice). The compound may mean 'kindness is returned' or 'dwelling in kindness.' Translators have handled it variously: some treat it as one name 'Jushab-hesed,' others as two separate names 'Jushab' and 'Chesed.' The multilingual evidence shows this division: English sometimes 'Jushav Chesed,' Spanish 'Yusab, Jesed,' reflecting the textual ambiguity of this rare Davidic descendant's name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Chesed, Yushav | es: Jesed, Yusab | fr: [חסד], [יושב] | de: [חסד], [יושב] 1Chr 3:20

יוֹשִׁבְיָה H3143 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yoshivyah — personal name of a Simeonite (1 Chr 4:35), meaning 'Yahweh causes to dwell'
The name likely means 'Yahweh settles' or 'causes to dwell,' appearing in the Simeonite genealogies. This theophoric name invokes God's role in establishing people in their land, a significant theme for Israelite identity. The Phoenician parallel name structure confirms this was a common Semitic naming pattern affirming divine providence in settlement.

(1×) A Simeonite appearing in Chronicles' tribal registries. The name's theological content—divine causation of settlement—resonates with Israel's land theology. Across languages (Spanish 'Yosibya,' Greek transcriptions varied), the proper name is preserved through transliteration, maintaining its identity as a personal designation within Simeon's lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yoshivyah | es: Yosibya | fr: [יושביה] | de: [יושביה] 1Chr 4:35

יוֹשָׁה H3144 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yoshah — personal name of a Simeonite (1 Chr 4:34)
This brief name appears in the Simeonite clan lists, with Greek versions showing considerable variation in transcription (Ioseia, Iosias, Ioas). Such textual fluidity in proper names reflects the challenges of transmitting consonantal Hebrew names through different linguistic and scribal traditions. The name preserves tribal memory even where biographical details are absent.

(1×) A Simeonite listed among clan leaders with the conjunction 'and.' The diversity of Greek transcriptions highlights the challenges ancient translators faced with Hebrew names. Spanish ('y-Yosa') and other modern translations maintain the transliteration, treating this as a genealogical marker that connects the Chronicler's audience to their tribal past. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yoshah | es: y-Yosa | fr: [וישה] | de: [וישה] 1Chr 4:34

יוֹשַׁוְיָה H3145 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yoshavyah — personal name of one of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:46)
One of David's elite fighters, this individual appears in the extended roster of the 'mighty men' beyond the famous Thirty. The Chronicles account preserves names not found in Samuel's parallel lists, suggesting the Chronicler had access to additional military records. These warriors represent the diverse coalition that supported David's rise to power.

(1×) A warrior in David's select military company, listed among the heroes in 1 Chronicles 11:46. The conjunction 'and' shows this as part of a catalog of elite fighters. Cross-linguistic treatments (Spanish 'y-Yosavías') uniformly transliterate, recognizing the proper name function. The name's preservation honors individual valor even when no narratives survive about the person. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yoshavyah | es: y-Yosavías | fr: [ויושויה] | de: [ויושויה] 1Chr 11:46

יְהוֹשָׁפָט H3146 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jehoshaphat (proper name: 'YHWH has judged'; king of Judah and other individuals)
One of Scripture's most common personal names, meaning 'Yahweh has judged' or 'Yahweh judges.' The name appears most famously for the righteous king of Judah, son of Asa, but also for several other individuals including a priest, a military officer, and others. The name embeds a theological affirmation that God acts as judge, a theme central to Israel's faith. The two occurrences here show the name with conjunctions in Chronicles genealogies and service lists.

(2×) A proper name with variant spellings (Jehoshaphat and Joshaphat) borne by multiple individuals. This batch shows two lesser-known bearers: one of David's mighty men (1 Chr 11:43) and a priest who blew trumpets before the ark (1 Chr 15:24), both appearing with the conjunction 'and Jehoshaphat.' The name means 'Yahweh has judged.' Standard transliterations: English 'Jehoshaphat' or 'Joshaphat,' Spanish 'Josafat' or 'Yosafat,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew, distinguishing these from the famous king of the same name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yoshaphat | es: y-Yosafat | fr: [ויושפט] | de: [ויושפט] 1Chr 11:43; 1Chr 15:24

יוֹתָם H3147 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (24×)
Jotham – proper name meaning 'YHWH is perfect,' borne by Gideon's youngest son and a king of Judah
A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh is perfect' or 'YHWH is complete,' borne by three biblical figures. The most dramatic is Jotham son of Gideon (Jerubbaal), sole survivor of Abimelech's massacre of seventy brothers, who delivered the famous fable of the trees seeking a king from atop Mount Gerizim (Judg 9:5-21). The most politically significant is Jotham king of Judah, son of Uzziah, who governed as regent during his father's leprosy and reigned in his own right (2 Kgs 15:5-38; 2 Chr 27). His name anchors the superscriptions of Isaiah, Hosea, and Micah, placing their prophecies chronologically. A minor Calebite figure also bears the name (1 Chr 2:47).

Jotham (proper name) (24×) The proper masculine name Yotam (יוֹתָם), meaning 'YHWH is perfect/complete,' designating three individuals. Most memorably, Jotham son of Gideon escaped Abimelech's fratricide and pronounced his parable of the bramble-king from Mount Gerizim (Judg 9:5-21, 57). Jotham king of Judah served first as regent during his leprous father Uzziah's quarantine, then as sole ruler (2 Kgs 15:5, 32-38; 2 Chr 26:21-27:9), and appears in the prophetic dating formulae of Isaiah 1:1, Hosea 1:1, and Micah 1:1. A minor Calebite figure also bears the name (1 Chr 2:47). Translations transliterate consistently: Jotham, Jotam (Spanish/German), Yotam. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jotham, Yotam, Yotham | es: Jotam, Yotam, y-Jotam | fr: Jotham, Yotam, Yotham | de: Jotam, Jotham, Yotam Judg 9:5; Judg 9:7; Judg 9:21; Judg 9:57; 2Kgs 15:5

יוֹתֵר H3148 N-ms (8×)
More, excessively, advantage — adverb and noun of excess, surplus, or superiority (Ecclesiastes/Esther)
The noun/adverb יוֹתֵר (yoter), derived from the root יתר ('to remain over'), is a distinctly late Hebrew word found almost exclusively in Ecclesiastes — the Preacher's favorite tool for probing what advantage one thing has over another. In its adverbial role it means 'more,' 'excessively,' or 'overmuch,' as when Qoheleth warns against being 'overly righteous' (Eccl 7:16). Its nominal sense denotes advantage or profit: 'What advantage has the wise over the fool?' (Eccl 6:8). In Esther 6:6 it appears in comparative force — Haman imagines the king would want to honor him 'more than' anyone else.

1. more, exceedingly, to excess (5×) The adverbial and comparative use meaning 'more,' 'exceedingly,' or 'to excess.' In Ecclesiastes 7:16 Qoheleth warns against being righteous 'overmuch' (אַל־תְּהִי צַדִּיק הַרְבֵּה וְאַל־תִּתְחַכָּם יוֹתֵר), and in 2:15 he observes that he was wise 'excessively' to no profit. Spanish 'de más' and 'en exceso,' German 'mehr,' and French 'surplus' all confirm the degree-intensifier reading. Esther 6:6 uses it comparatively with מִן: 'more than me.' MORE AND GREATER
en: excessively, more | es: de-más, en-exceso, más | fr: [יותר], surplus | de: mehr Esth 6:6; Eccl 2:15; Eccl 6:8; Eccl 6:11; Eccl 7:16

2. moreover, furthermore, advantage (3×) The conjunctive-nominal use meaning 'moreover,' 'furthermore,' or 'the advantage/profit is.' In Ecclesiastes 12:9 it opens with וְיֹתֵר שֶׁ ('and besides the fact that'), introducing supplementary information about the Preacher's activity. At 12:12 it carries a cautionary nuance — 'and more than these, my son, be warned' — where the word pivots from enumeration to admonition. Spanish 'y además,' 'y ventaja' and German 'und mehr' confirm the additive-connective function distinct from the purely degree-based adverbial sense. MORE AND GREATER
en: and-beyond, and-moreover, and-profit | es: y-además, y-ventaja | fr: et-surplus | de: und-mehr Eccl 7:11; Eccl 12:9; Eccl 12:12

יְזִיאֵל H3149 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jeziel/Jezuel (proper name, variant spellings; one of David's warriors at Ziklag)
This name appears only once in the biblical text but in two variant textual forms (Ketiv and Qere), creating uncertainty about the proper spelling. The individual was one of the Benjamite warriors who joined David at Ziklag while he was still in exile from Saul. The name's meaning is uncertain, though it may contain the divine element El. The textual variants (Jeziel vs. Jezuel) reflect ancient scribal uncertainty about the name's spelling, perhaps because this warrior was otherwise unknown.

(2×) A proper name appearing in the list of warriors who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:3). The text preserves two variant readings: Ketiv (what is written) has one form, Qere (what is read) has another, both appearing in the same verse. The name may mean 'El sprinkles' or similar. Transliterations acknowledge the variants: English gives both 'Jeziel' and 'Jezuel' (in parentheses), with Spanish, French, and German similarly noting both forms, reflecting the textual uncertainty surrounding this obscure warrior's name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: (and-Yeziel), [and-Yezuel] | es: (y-Yeziel), [y-Yezuel] | fr: [ויזואל], [ויזיאל] | de: [ויזואל], [ויזיאל] 1Chr 12:3

יִזִּיָּה H3150 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yizziyah — personal name of one who married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:25)
This name appears in Ezra's list of those who had taken foreign wives during the exile, an act the restoration community viewed as compromising covenant purity. The name possibly means 'may Yahweh sprinkle,' using cultic imagery. Inclusion in this list meant public acknowledgment and remediation, marking a painful moment of religious reform.

(1×) One of the men who married foreign women during or after the exile, listed in Ezra's reform catalog. The conjunction 'and' places him in a series of similar cases. Translations (Spanish 'y-Yiziyah') preserve the transliteration. Though named in a context of failure, his inclusion shows the community's process of restoration and covenant renewal. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yizziyah | es: y-Yiziyah | fr: [ויזיה] | de: [ויזיה] Ezra 10:25

יְזִיז H3151 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yaziz — personal name of one of David's officers (1 Chr 27:31), identified as 'the Hagrite'
This individual served as David's officer in charge of flocks, identified specifically as 'the Hagrite,' meaning he came from the Hagrite people. David's administration included non-Israelites in positions of trust, demonstrating a pragmatic and inclusive approach to governance. The ethnic designation preserved alongside the name highlights the diverse makeup of David's bureaucracy.

(1×) An officer under David responsible for livestock management, specifically identified by his Hagrite ethnicity in 1 Chronicles 27:31. The preservation of ethnic identity alongside administrative role shows David's cosmopolitan court. Translations uniformly transliterate (Spanish 'Jaziz'), treating this as a proper personal identifier attached to a specific administrative portfolio. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yaziz | es: Jaziz | fr: [יזיז] | de: [יזיז] 1Chr 27:31

יִזְלִיאָה H3152 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yizliah — personal name of a Benjamite (1 Chr 8:18)
A Benjamite appearing in the extensive genealogies of Benjamin in Chronicles 8. The Greek versions show significant variation in rendering, reflecting the transmission challenges for Hebrew names. These Benjamite genealogies were particularly important for establishing identity in the postexilic period, as Benjamin and Judah formed the core of the restored community.

(1×) Listed among Benjamite descendants with the conjunction 'and' in a genealogical register. The variety of Greek readings (Zareia, Ezlia, Iezelia) demonstrates how Hebrew consonantal names were vocalized differently by ancient translators. Modern versions (Spanish 'y-Yizlias') maintain transliteration, preserving the name as a tribal identity marker. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yizliah | es: y-Yizlias | fr: [ויזליאה] | de: [ויזליאה] 1Chr 8:18

יַאֲזַנְיָהוּ H3153 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jaazaniah (proper name: 'Yahweh hears'; multiple individuals, also contracted to Jezaniah)
This name, meaning 'Yahweh hears,' appears in both full and contracted forms for several different individuals during the final days of Judah and the exile. The name expresses parental faith that God hears prayers—a common sentiment in Hebrew naming. The contracted form Jezaniah appears in Jeremiah's final chapters for individuals otherwise named Jaazaniah. The various individuals bearing this name include a Judean military leader, elders of Israel, and others during the traumatic period of Jerusalem's fall.

(2×) A proper name borne by multiple individuals during Jeremiah's era, meaning 'Yahweh hears.' This batch shows contracted forms: 'and Jezaniah' and 'and Jezanyahu' (Jer 40:8, 42:1). The name appears in fuller form elsewhere as Jaazaniah. English transliterations vary: 'Jaazaniah,' 'Jezaniah,' 'Jezanyahu'; Spanish 'Jezanías' or 'Yezanyahu'; with French and German preserving the Hebrew contracted forms, reflecting the multiple individuals and spelling variants during Judah's final chaotic years. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yazanyah, and-Yezanyahu | es: y-Jezanías, y-Yezanyahu | fr: [ויזניה], [ויזניהו] | de: [ויזניה], [ויזניהו] Jer 40:8; Jer 42:1

יֶזַע H3154 Prep-b (1×)
sweat — bodily secretion forbidden in priestly garments (Ezek 44:18)
This rare noun appears only in Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple, where priests are commanded not to wear anything that causes sweat during their ministry. The concern reflects purity regulations that separated the sacred from common bodily processes. Sweat, as a product of labor and human limitation, had no place in the holy service before God's presence.

(1×) The bodily fluid produced by exertion, forbidden to contaminate priestly service in Ezekiel 44:18. The prepositional phrase 'with sweat' indicates the concern to prevent this human secretion from mingling with holy service. Spanish ('con-sudor') and French maintain the concrete reference, showing this as a literal purity concern rather than metaphorical language. FLESH AND BODY

en: with-the-sweat | es: con-sudor | fr: sueur | de: [בי֫וֹע] Ezek 44:18

יִזְרָחִי H3155 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yizrachite — gentillic designation, possibly textual variant of 'Zerahite' (1 Chr 27:8)
This ethnic or clan designation appears with the article 'the' modifying Shamhuth, one of David's military commanders. Scholars suggest this may be a textual variant of 'Zerahite,' connecting to the clan of Zerah. Such gentillic terms identified individuals by their clan or regional origin, essential for maintaining social structure in ancient Israel.

(1×) A gentillic term identifying Shamhuth's clan or regional affiliation in 1 Chronicles 27:8. The suggestion that this should read 'Zerahite' (as in vv. 11, 13) points to potential scribal variation. Cross-linguistic treatments (Spanish 'el-izrahíta') preserve the article and transliterate, maintaining the text as received while acknowledging interpretive challenges. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Yizrachite | es: el-izrahíta | fr: [היזרח] | de: [היזרח] 1Chr 27:8

יִזְרַחְיָה H3156 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Yizrachyah/Jezrahiah, personal name (Issacharite ancestor, overseer of singers)
A Hebrew personal name meaning 'Yahweh will arise/shine.' The name appears for two different individuals: an Issacharite ancestor listed twice in 1 Chronicles 7:3, and an overseer of temple singers mentioned in Nehemiah 12:42. The Greek renderings (Ζαρεια, Ιεζρια, Ιεζεριαι) show the typical variations in transliterating Hebrew theophoric names into Greek. The name's meaning connects to imagery of God's dawning light or arising in power, a common theme in Hebrew naming practices.

(3×) A theophoric personal name invoking Yahweh's rising or shining. The dual usage for both a genealogical figure and a Levitical musician reflects the common practice of name reuse across generations and tribes. The Spanish rendering 'Jezraías' and similar variants demonstrate the phonological adaptations required when translating Hebrew names into target languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yizrachyah, and-Yizrachyah | es: Yizrajías, y-Jezraías | fr: [ויזרחיה], [יזרחיה] | de: [ויזרחיה], [יזרחיה] 1Chr 7:3; Neh 12:42

יִזְרְעֶאל H3157 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (36×)
Jezreel — 'God sows'; a city in Issachar, a town in Judah, and a symbolic personal name (Hosea's son) Derived from the Hebrew roots zāraᶜ ('to sow') and ʾēl ('God'), meaning 'God sows.' As a place name, Jezreel primarily denotes the fortified city in Issachar on the northwest spur of Mount Gilboa, site of Ahab's royal palace, Naboth's vineyard, and Jehu's bloody purge (1 Kgs 21; 2 Kgs 9–10). A smaller Jezreel in the Negev of Judah was the home of Ahinoam, David's wife (1 Sam 25:43). As a personal name, it appears for a descendant of Etam in Judah's genealogy (1 Chr 4:3) and — most powerfully — as the prophetic name Hosea gave his firstborn son, signaling both judgment ('I will punish the house of Jehu for the blood of Jezreel') and future restoration ('I will sow her for myself in the land').

1. Jezreel (place name) (34×) Jezreel as a place name — primarily the prominent city in the territory of Issachar at the edge of the great valley (Josh 19:18; 1 Kgs 18:45–46), scene of Naboth's judicial murder and Jehu's revolt, and secondarily a town in Judah's Negev (Josh 15:56). French renders it 'Jizréel,' German 'Jesreel/Jezreel,' Spanish 'Jezreel/Yizreel,' each preserving the theophoric element. The valley name (ᶜēmeq Yizrĕᶜeʾl) extends the toponym to the entire fertile plain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jezreel, in-Jezreel, to-Jezreel | es: Jezreel, Yizreel, en-Jezreel | fr: Jizréel, dans-Jizréel, à-Jizréel | de: Jesreel, Jezreel, in-Jezreel Josh 15:56; Josh 17:16; Josh 19:18; Judg 6:33; 1Sam 25:43

2. Jezreel (personal name) (2×) Jezreel as a personal name, carried by a son of Etam in Judah's genealogy (1 Chr 4:3) and by Hosea's firstborn son (Hos 1:4), where the etymology 'God sows' is activated as prophetic wordplay — first as judgment on the bloodshed at the city of Jezreel, then reversed in Hos 2:22 as a promise of agricultural and national restoration. The multilingual evidence distinguishes this usage: English 'Yizreel,' Spanish 'Yizreel,' while French and German leave the Hebrew unvocalized in brackets. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Yizre'el, Yizreel | es: Yizreel | fr: Yizreel, [יזרעאל] | de: Yizreel, [יזרעאל] 2Sam 2:9; 1Chr 4:3

יִזְרְעֶאלִי H3158 Art / N-proper-ms (8×)
Jezreelite, a gentilic adjective identifying someone from Jezreel, applied to Naboth and to Ahinoam.
A gentilic adjective meaning 'the one from Jezreel,' used to identify two notable biblical figures. Seven of eight occurrences designate Naboth the Jezreelite, the vineyard owner whose judicial murder by Jezebel became a defining moment of prophetic confrontation with royal power (1 Kgs 21). The feminine form identifies Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, one of David's earliest wives (1 Sam 27:3; 30:5; 2 Sam 2:2; 3:2). The masculine and feminine forms likely refer to different Jezreels – Naboth's being the northern city in the Esdraelon plain, while Ahinoam's may be from a Judean town of the same name.

the Yizreelite (8×) The Jezreelite (Yizre'eli), a gentilic adjective designating a person from the city of Jezreel. In the masculine form (haYizre'eli), it identifies Naboth whose vineyard Ahab coveted and whose death Jezebel engineered (1 Kgs 21:1, 4, 6, 7, 15, 16; 2 Kgs 9:21, 25). The feminine form (haYizre'elit) identifies Ahinoam, David's wife from Jezreel (1 Sam 27:3; 30:5; 2 Sam 2:2; 3:2; 1 Chr 3:1). Translations uniformly render it as a gentilic: Spanish 'el jezreelita,' French 'le Jezreelite/Jizréélite,' German 'der Jezreelite/Yizreelite,' English 'the Jezreelite.' The two referents likely come from different Jezreels – one in the Esdraelon valley of Issachar, the other possibly a Judean town. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jezreelite, the-Yizreelite | es: el-jezreelita | fr: le-Jezreelite, le-Jizréélite | de: der-Jezreelite, der-Yizreelite 1Kgs 21:1; 1Kgs 21:4; 1Kgs 21:6; 1Kgs 21:7; 1Kgs 21:15

יִזְרְעֶאלִי H3159 Art / N-proper-fs (5×)
Jezreelitess; a gentilicfeminine adjective denoting a woman from Jezreel
The feminine gentilic form of Jezreel, used exclusively as an epithet for Ahinoam, one of David's wives. Every occurrence follows the same formula: 'Ahinoam the Jezreelitess' (ha-Yizre'ēlîth). She first appears when David takes her as wife during his time among the Philistines (1 Sam 27:3), accompanies him through the Ziklag crisis (1 Sam 30:5), and is named at Hebron (2 Sam 2:2; 3:2). Spanish 'la jezreelita' and French 'la Jezreelite' both retain the gentilic construction faithfully.

(5×) A gentilic adjective in feminine form identifying a woman as originating from Jezreel in the territory of Issachar. In all five occurrences it modifies Ahinoam, David's wife, distinguishing her from other women of the same name (cf. Saul's wife Ahinoam). The spelling alternates between the longer -îth ending (1 Sam 30:5; 2 Sam 2:2; 1 Chr 3:1) and shorter -ith (1 Sam 27:3; 2 Sam 3:2). Multilingual glosses consistently render this as a definite gentilic: 'the Jezreelitess/la jezreelita.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jezreelite, the-Yizre'elith, the-Yizreelite | es: la-jezreelita, la-yizreelita | fr: [היזרעאלית], le-Jezreelite, le-Jizréélite | de: [היזרעאלית], der-Jezreelite, der-Yizreelite 1Sam 27:3; 1Sam 30:5; 2Sam 2:2; 2Sam 3:2; 1Chr 3:1

חֻבָּה H3160 N-proper-ms (2×)
Chubbah (proper name; descendant of Asher, with Ketiv/Qere variant)
This rare name appears only once in Asher's genealogy, and even there the text is uncertain. The Ketiv (written text) has one form while the Qere (reading tradition) suggests 'and Chubbah' with the conjunction. The name's meaning is uncertain—it may be related to a root meaning 'to hide' or 'to cherish.' The textual uncertainty and extreme rarity of this name have left translators divided on how to render it, with some preserving both readings.

(2×) A proper name appearing in the genealogy of Asher (1 Chr 7:34, twice for Ketiv and Qere readings). The Qere suggests reading 'and Chubbah' (with conjunction) while the Ketiv lacks it. The name's etymology is uncertain. Transliterations show the textual division: English notes '[ketiv]' vs. 'and-Chubbah,' Spanish gives both readings in parentheses and brackets, with French and German preserving both Hebrew forms, acknowledging that we know almost nothing about this obscure Asherite beyond this genealogical mention. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: [ketiv], and-Chubbah | es: (y-Jubá), [Yejubá] | fr: [וחבה], [יחבה] | de: [וחבה], [יחבה] 1Chr 7:34

יָחַד H3161 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (3×)

be united, join together; concentrate (heart/affections) in singular devotion

A verb expressing union or joining together, appearing in three significant contexts. In Genesis 49:6, Jacob refuses to let his honor be united with Simeon and Levi's violent assembly. Isaiah 14:20 declares the fallen tyrant will not be joined with other kings in burial. Most memorably, Psalm 86:11 prays 'unite my heart to fear your name'—a plea for single-minded devotion rather than divided loyalties. The Piel form in the Psalm intensifies the meaning to 'concentrate' or 'focus,' though some ancient versions (LXX, Peshitta, Vulgate) read a different root meaning 'let my heart rejoice.'

(3×) The act of joining or uniting, whether literally (being buried together) or metaphorically (concentrating one's inner affections). The multilingual evidence ('be united', 'se una', 'unite', 'vereinige') consistently captures the unification theme. In Psalm 86:11, the image suggests a scattered or divided heart being gathered into unified purpose—a powerful picture of spiritual wholeness. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: be-united, unite, you-will-be-joined | es: se-una, te-unirás, unifica | fr: [יחד], s'unir, être-united | de: [יחד], unite, vereinige-sich Gen 49:6; Ps 86:11; Isa 14:20

H3162 Adv (1×)

together — adverb indicating collective action or state

Though this word commonly means 'together' or 'in unity,' its single attestation in Jeremiah 48:7 appears in a context of judgment against Moab. The adverbial function emphasizes simultaneous or collective action. Hebrew has several terms for togetherness, each with nuanced connotations; this one often carries overtones of united purpose or shared destiny.

(1×) Adverb indicating collective or simultaneous state in Jeremiah 48:7's oracle against Moab. The Spanish 'juntos' and French parallel confirm the basic sense of unity or togetherness. The parentheses in some glosses may suggest textual or interpretive uncertainty at this occurrence, though the semantic range clearly centers on collective action or experience. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: (together) | es: juntos | fr: [(יחדיו)] | de: [(יחדיו)] Jer 48:7

יַחַד H3162a Conj-w / Adv (44×)

together, all at once, alike — adverb expressing community of action, place, or time

Yachad derives from a noun meaning 'unitedness' and functions adverbially in nearly every one of its 44 occurrences, expressing that an action is performed jointly, simultaneously, or in the same manner. Its semantic range stretches from physical togetherness ('they gathered together,' 1 Sam 11:11) to shared quality ('they are all alike become filthy,' Ps 14:3). The Arabic cognate wahdun ('alone, in one's solitude') reveals an interesting semantic inversion — where Arabic emphasizes singularity, Hebrew emphasizes collective unity. The multilingual evidence is strikingly consistent: Spanish 'juntamente,' French 'ensemble,' German 'zusammen' — all capturing the adverbial 'together' sense.

together, all together, alike (44×) Adverb from the noun yachad ('unitedness'), expressing joint action (Job 38:7, 'morning stars sang together'), shared place (Deut 33:5), or common quality (Ps 14:3, 'all alike become filthy'). The Arabic cognate wahdun means 'alone' — an instructive semantic inversion highlighting Hebrew's collective emphasis. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: alike, together | es: Juntos, juntamente, juntas | fr: ensemble | de: together, zusammen Deut 33:5; 1Sam 11:11; 1Sam 17:10; 2Sam 10:15; 2Sam 14:16

יַחְדָּו H3162b Adv (97×)

Together, as one — adverb of communal action, spatial proximity, or simultaneous occurrence

Yachdav is a Hebrew adverb meaning 'together,' derived from the root y-ch-d denoting unity. Across 97 occurrences it describes people acting in concert, dwelling in the same place, or experiencing something simultaneously. Abraham and Isaac 'went together' to Moriah (Gen 22:6, 8) — a quietly devastating detail the narrator uses twice to underscore father and son's shared journey toward sacrifice. The Psalms employ it for communal worship — 'let us exalt his name together' (Ps 34:4) — and for the fragile ideal of brothers dwelling in unity (Ps 133:1, using the related yachad). Prophetically it can mark collective judgment: nations gathered together for destruction (Isa 41:1; Jer 46:12).

together (97×) An adverb expressing joint action, shared location, or simultaneity — 'together, as one, altogether.' It covers communal activity such as walking together (Gen 22:6, 8), dwelling together (Gen 13:6; Deut 25:5), and worshipping together (Ps 34:4). Spanish 'juntos/juntamente,' French 'ensemble,' and German 'zusammen' each capture the core meaning. The repeated 'and the two of them went together' in the binding of Isaac (Gen 22:6, 8) demonstrates how this seemingly simple adverb can carry immense narrative pathos when placed at a moment of supreme testing. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: together | es: juntamente, juntos | fr: ensemble, together | de: together, zusammen Gen 13:6; Gen 22:6; Gen 22:8; Gen 22:19

יַחְדּוֹ H3163 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yachdo — personal name of a Gileadite (1 Chr 5:14)

This Gileadite name appears in Chronicles' genealogy of the trans-Jordanian tribes. Textual witnesses differ on the exact spelling (Yachdo vs. Yachdo), and Greek versions vary considerably. The Gileadite genealogies preserve the memory of tribes that eventually disappeared after the Assyrian conquest, making their inclusion in Chronicles an act of historical preservation.

(1×) Personal name of a Gileadite in 1 Chronicles 5:14, with spelling variants in manuscripts. The diverse Greek renderings (Iourai, Iedai, Ieddo) show the fluidity of proper name transmission. Modern translations (Spanish 'Yajdo') maintain transliteration, treating this as a genealogical identifier connecting the trans-Jordanian tribes to Israel's larger story. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yachdo | es: Yajdo | fr: [יחדו] | de: [יחדו] 1Chr 5:14

יַחְדִּיאֵל H3164 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yachdiel — personal name of a Manassite chief (1 Chr 5:24), meaning 'God gives joy'

The name means 'God gives joy' and belongs to a chief in the half-tribe of Manasseh that settled east of the Jordan. This theophoric name confesses God as the source of gladness and delight. The name appears among leaders of the trans-Jordanian Manassites, a group eventually lost to Assyrian conquest but memorialized in the Chronicler's genealogies.

(1×) A chief of the eastern half of Manasseh, bearing a name that confesses divine joy-giving. The single attestation in 1 Chronicles 5:24 with conjunction 'and' places him in a roster of tribal leaders. Translations (Spanish 'y-Yajdiel') preserve the name through transliteration, maintaining its function as a personal identifier with embedded theological content. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yachdi'el | es: y-Yajdiel | fr: [ויחדיאל] | de: [ויחדיאל] 1Chr 5:24

יְחִדְיָהוּ H3165 N-proper-ms (2×)
Jehdeyahu (proper name: 'may Yahweh give joy'; Levite and royal officer names)
This name, meaning 'may Yahweh give joy' or 'Yahweh causes rejoicing,' reflects the hopeful prayers of parents at a child's birth. It appears for two individuals: a Levite in the temple service rosters and an officer under David who supervised the king's donkeys. The name's structure is characteristic of Hebrew names that embed petitions or declarations about what God does—in this case, bringing joy. The Septuagint's varied transliterations reflect Greek attempts to capture the Hebrew.

(2×) A proper name appearing for two individuals: a Levite in David's organized temple service (1 Chr 24:20) and a royal officer in charge of David's donkeys (1 Chr 27:30). The name means 'may Yahweh give joy,' from the root for 'rejoicing.' Standard transliterations: English 'Jehdeyahu' or 'Yechdeyahu,' Spanish 'Jehedías' or 'Yejdeyahu,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew form, distinguishing these lesser-known officials from more prominent biblical figures. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yechdeyahu | es: Jehedías, Yejdeyahu | fr: [יחדיהו] | de: [יחדיהו] 1Chr 24:20; 1Chr 27:30

יַחֲזִיאֵל H3166 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)
Jahaziel — a proper name meaning 'God sees,' borne by warriors, priests, Levites, and a restoration-era ancestor.
A theophoric Hebrew name (יַחֲזִיאֵל) combining the root חזה ('to see, behold') with אֵל ('God'), meaning 'God sees' or 'God beholds.' At least five distinct individuals bear this name across Chronicles and Ezra. The most dramatic appearance is the Levite Jahaziel son of Zechariah, upon whom the Spirit of the LORD came during Jehoshaphat's crisis, who prophesied that the battle belonged to God, not Judah (2 Chr 20:14). Others include a Benjamite warrior among David's ambidextrous fighters (1 Chr 12:5), a priest appointed to blow trumpets before the ark (1 Chr 16:6), and Levites in David's temple organization (1 Chr 23:19; 24:23).

Jahaziel (proper name) (6×) The personal name Yaḥăzî·ēl (יַחֲזִיאֵל, 'God sees/beholds'), carried by five or more men: a Benjamite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:5), a priest who blew trumpets before the ark (1 Chr 16:6), a Levite descended from Hebron (1 Chr 23:19; 24:23), the prophetic Levite who announced divine victory for Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 20:14), and a clan ancestor in the return from exile (Ezra 8:5). Spanish 'Yajaziel/Yaḥaziel' and English 'Jahaziel/Yachaziel' both transliterate the theophoric compound faithfully. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yachaziel, and-Jahaziel, and-Yachaziel | es: Y-Jahaziel, Yajaziel, Yaḥaziel | fr: [ויחזיאל], [יחזיאל] | de: [ויחזיאל], [יחזיאל] 1Chr 12:5; 1Chr 16:6; 1Chr 23:19; 1Chr 24:23; 2Chr 20:14

יַחְזְיָה H3167 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yachzeyah — personal name of a leader during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:15), meaning 'Yahweh sees'
This name means 'Yahweh sees,' appearing in the narrative of Ezra's controversial reform requiring divorce from foreign wives. Yachzeyah appears among those opposing or questioning the process, showing that even this painful reform involved debate and dissent. The theophoric name ironically invokes divine witness in a moment of community conflict over covenant faithfulness.

(1×) A prince or leader during the postexilic period, appearing in Ezra 10:15 in the context of the foreign wife controversy. Whether supporter or opponent of Ezra's policy, his presence shows the reform involved community deliberation. The name's meaning ('Yahweh sees') adds theological depth to his involvement in matters of covenant observance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yachzeyah | es: y-Yaḥzeyah | fr: [ויחזיה] | de: [ויחזיה] Ezra 10:15

יְחִזְקֵאל H3168 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)
Yechezqel/Ezekiel, personal name (famous prophet, priest of 19th course)
The personal name meaning 'God strengthens,' most famously borne by the priest-prophet Ezekiel son of Buzi, who prophesied during the Babylonian exile (Ezekiel 1:3; 24:24). The name also appears in 1 Chronicles 24:16 for a priest assigned to the 19th (or 20th, according to some Greek manuscripts) course in David's organization of temple service. The Greek rendering Ιεζεκιηλ became the standard form in Christian tradition. The theophoric element אל (El, God) combined with חזק (strengthen) creates a name that embodies divine empowerment.

(3×) A theophoric name affirming God's strengthening power, most associated with the prophet of bizarre visions and enacted prophecies during Israel's darkest hour. The name's appearance for both the exilic prophet and an earlier priestly division shows it was an established name conveying trust in divine fortification. The variants (Yechezqel/Yejezkel) reflect different transliteration traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ezekiel, for-Yechezqel | es: Ezequiel, Yejezqel, para-Yejezkel | fr: [ליחזקאל], Ézéchiel | de: [יחזקאל], [ליחזקאל] 1Chr 24:16; Ezek 1:3; Ezek 24:24

חִזְקִיָּהוּ H3169 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yechizkiyahu — Hezekiah, king of Judah; here the father of an opponent of Jeremiah (2 Chr 28:12)
While this name most famously designates King Hezekiah, it appears here identifying the father of someone involved in events during Ahaz's reign. The name means 'Yahweh has strengthened' or 'Yahweh strengthens,' a powerful theophoric confession. The name's various forms (Chizkiyah, Chizkiyahu, Yechizkiyahu) show morphological variation common in Hebrew names.

(1×) In this occurrence at 2 Chronicles 28:12, the name appears with conjunction 'and' identifying someone's father during the reign of Ahaz, chronologically before the famous King Hezekiah. The German rendering 'und-Hiskia' and Spanish 'y-Ezequías' show cross-linguistic recognition of this as the well-known royal name, though here applied to a different individual in a genealogical context. HEZEKIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: and-Yechizkiyahu | es: y-Ezequías | fr: [ויחזקיהו] | de: und-Hiskia 2Chr 28:12

יַחְזְרָה H3170 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yachzerah — personal name of a priest (1 Chr 9:12)
This priestly name appears in Chronicles' roster of postexilic priests serving in Jerusalem. The parallel passage in Nehemiah 11:13 gives the name as Ahzai, suggesting either textual variation or different individuals. Such variations in priestly genealogies point to the complexity of reconstructing lineages after the disruption of exile.

(1×) A priest listed in 1 Chronicles 9:12, with the parallel Nehemiah text offering a different name. This divergence illustrates the challenges of maintaining genealogical precision through the exile. Translations universally transliterate (Spanish 'Yajzera'), treating this as a proper name whose exact relationship to similar names in parallel texts remains uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yachzerah | es: Yajzera | fr: [יחזרה] | de: [יחזרה] 1Chr 9:12

יְחִיאֵל H3171 N-proper-ms (15×)
Jehiel — personal name meaning 'may God live,' borne by several Levites, officials, and leaders in Chronicles and Ezra
A theophoric name built from the prayer 'may El live' (יְחִי אֵל), Jehiel appears across the later historical books as a recurring marker of Levitical piety. Among its most notable bearers are one of David's chief musicians appointed for the ark procession (1 Chr 15:18, 20; 16:5), a chief of the Levites entrusted with temple treasuries (1 Chr 23:8; 29:8), and a tutor of David's own sons (1 Chr 27:32). The name resurfaces in Hezekiah's and Josiah's reigns among temple overseers, and again in Ezra's company of returning exiles. That so many unrelated individuals share this name testifies to its popularity as a petition for divine vitality.

Jehiel (proper name) (15×) A masculine proper name (יְחִיאֵל) meaning 'may God live,' rendered in the Septuagint variously as Ιειηλ and Ιαιηλ. It designates at least eight distinct individuals: David's musician in the ark procession (1 Chr 15:18), a Levitical chief over treasuries (1 Chr 23:8; 29:8), a royal tutor (1 Chr 27:32), a son of Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 21:2), temple officials under Hezekiah and Josiah, and contemporaries of Ezra. Spanish and English translations consistently render it 'Jehiel' or 'Yechiel.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yechiel, [ketiv], and-Jehiel | es: Jehiel, Yejiel, Yeḥiel | fr: [ויחיאל], [יחואל], [יחיאל] | de: Jechiel, [ויחיאל], [יחיאל] 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:20; 1Chr 16:5; 1Chr 23:8; 1Chr 27:32

יְחִיאֵלִי H3172 N-proper-ms (2×)
Jehieli (patronymic: 'of the Jehiel family'; Levitical family designation)
This is not strictly a personal name but a patronymic—a family designation meaning 'of the family of Jehiel' or 'the Jehielite.' It appears in the Levitical genealogies describing the sons of Ladan who served in the temple treasury. Patronymics were important in ancient Israel for establishing family connections and inheritance rights, especially for Levitical families whose service assignments were organized by ancestral houses. The term identifies descendants or clan members of someone named Jehiel.

(2×) A patronymic (family designation) appearing in Levitical records (1 Chr 26:21, 22), meaning 'of the Jehieli (family)' or 'the Jehielites.' The term identifies members of a Levitical family descended from Jehiel who served in the temple treasuries. Transliterations are relatively consistent: English 'Jehieli,' Spanish 'Jehieli,' with French and German preserving the Hebrew form. The Septuagint omits it in one verse, suggesting Greek translators found the patronymic designation difficult to represent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yechieli | es: Jehieli | fr: [יחיאלי] | de: [יחיאלי] 1Chr 26:21; 1Chr 26:22

יָחִיד H3173 Adj-fsc / 1cs (12×)
Only, unique, solitary; describing an only child, one's precious irreplaceable life, or a person alone and lonely.
Yachid carries an ache of singularity. Its primary force is 'only one'—Abraham's 'only son' Isaac (Gen 22:2, 12, 16), where the weight of the word intensifies the sacrifice beyond measure. Arabic wahid and Aramaic yechidai share this same root sense. In the Psalms, the feminine yechidati becomes a poetic name for the psalmist's own life—'my only one,' the singular, irreplaceable self threatened by enemies (Ps 22:20, 35:17). And in Psalm 25:16 and 68:6, yachid shifts to describe the lonely and isolated, those whom God draws into community.

1. only (child/son), unique (8×) An only child or only son, emphasizing uniqueness and irreplaceability. Arabic wahid and Aramaic yechidai converge on this meaning. Genesis 22:2 layers the word with devastating pathos—'your son, your only one.' Judges 11:34 echoes this with Jephthah's daughter, 'she was his only child.' Proverbs 4:3 recalls a tender childhood as 'the only one before my mother.' The sense is not mere singularity but preciousness born of singularity. ONE AND UNITY
en: an-only-child, and-only, only-child | es: el-unigénito, hijo-único, tu-único | fr: [יחיד], et-unique, seulement-enfant | de: [היחיד], [ויחיד], [יחיד] Gen 22:2; Gen 22:12; Gen 22:16; Judg 11:34; Prov 4:3

2. precious life, only life (metaphorical) (2×) A poetic epithet for one's own life or soul, 'my only one' (yechidati), used in parallel with naphshi ('my soul'). Psalm 22:20 cries 'deliver my precious life from the sword' and Psalm 35:17 pleads 'rescue my only one from the lions.' French 'précieux' captures the affective weight. The feminine form marks this as a distinct metaphorical usage—the self as the one thing that cannot be replaced. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS
en: my-only-life, my-precious-life | es: mi-única | fr: précieux | de: mein-nur-Leben, mein-precious-Leben Ps 22:20; Ps 35:17

3. lonely, solitary (2×) Lonely, solitary, describing a person who is isolated and without companions. Psalm 25:16 confesses 'I am lonely and afflicted,' while Psalm 68:6 celebrates God as the one who 'settles the lonely in families.' Spanish 'solo/solitarios' and Arabic al-munfaridin ('the isolated ones') confirm the shift from uniqueness to social isolation—a semantic move from being the only one to being alone. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS
en: lonely, the-lonely | es: a-solitarios, solo | fr: précieux | de: der-lonely, lonely Ps 25:16; Ps 68:6

יְחִיָּה H3174 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yechiyah — personal name of a Levite who kept the ark (1 Chr 15:24), meaning 'may Yahweh live'
The name means 'may Yahweh live' and belongs to one of the Levites serving as a gatekeeper when David brought the ark to Jerusalem. This was a moment of great celebration and religious significance. The theophoric name confesses God's vitality and enduring presence, appropriate for one serving in the vicinity of the ark, the symbol of divine presence.

(1×) A Levite gatekeeper during the ark's transfer to Jerusalem in 1 Chronicles 15:24. The name's prayer-like form ('may Yahweh live') reflects the covenantal hope in God's ongoing presence and power. Translations (Spanish 'y-Yejías') preserve the name through transliteration, marking this individual's role in one of David's most significant religious acts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yechiyah | es: y-Yejías | fr: [ויחיה] | de: [ויחיה] 1Chr 15:24

יָחִיל H3175 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)
waiting — possibly participial adjective meaning 'one who waits' (Lam 3:26)
This difficult word appears only in Lamentations 3:26, in the phrase 'good is it to wait and be silent for the salvation of Yahweh.' Scholars debate whether it's a participle from 'wait/hope' or an adjective. The textual uncertainty reflects transmission challenges, but the context clearly emphasizes patient, silent trust in God's deliverance even amid suffering.

(1×) A term of uncertain grammatical form describing patient waiting in Lamentations 3:26. The conjunction 'and' connects this with other attitudes of faithful endurance. Spanish 'esperar' captures the verb 'to wait,' though grammatical analysis remains disputed. The context of Lamentations—suffering seeking God—makes waiting and hoping central theological responses. WAITING AND EXPECTING
en: and-let-wait | es: esperar | fr: [ויחיל] | de: [ויחיל] Lam 3:26

יָחַל H3176 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (42×)
To wait, hope, expect; to place confident hope in God or await an outcome with anticipation Across its Piel, Hiphil, and Niphal stems, this verb expresses the posture of expectant waiting – often directed toward God. It appears most characteristically in the Psalms, where the worshipper declares, 'I hope in your word' (Ps 119:49, 81, 114). Genesis 8:12 provides the earliest narrative use: Noah 'waited yet seven more days.' The Spanish 'esperar' and French 'espérer' both capture its blend of waiting and hoping, a semantic range English must divide between two words.

1. to hope, wait expectantly (40×) The primary meaning spanning all stems: to place one's hope or expectation in someone, especially God, or to wait with confident anticipation. In Psalms this is the dominant posture of faith (Ps 31:24; 33:22; 38:15; 130:5-7). Genesis 8:12 shows the more concrete 'wait' end of the spectrum. The Hiphil causative nuance appears in passages where God is said to cause hope. HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: I-have-hoped, I-have-waited, I-hope | es: Espere, Y-esperaban, espera | fr: espérer, et-espérer, j'espère | de: [אוחיל], [אוחילה], [איחל] Gen 8:12; 1Sam 10:8; 1Sam 13:8; 2Sam 18:14

2. (1×) A causative Hiphil usage in Psalm 119:49 where the psalmist addresses God: 'You have made me hope.' The multilingual evidence ('me hiciste esperar,' 'espérer,' 'hoffte') confirms the causative force – God actively instilling hope rather than the speaker generating it. This sense underscores the theological reality that hope itself is a divine gift. HOPE AND EXPECTATION
en: You-have-made-me-hope | es: me-hiciste-esperar | fr: espérer | de: hoffte Ps 119:49

3. (1×) A debated occurrence in Jeremiah 4:19 where English renders 'I writhe' and Spanish 'me duelo' (I grieve), possibly reflecting a homonymous root or textual corruption. Some scholars connect it to an Aramaic root meaning 'be weak' or 'sink down.' French still translates 'espérer,' suggesting the ambiguity was not resolved in all traditions. The context of anguished prophecy fits either 'I wait in pain' or 'I writhe.' HOPE AND EXPECTATION
en: I-writhe | es: me-duelo | fr: espérer | de: [(אוחילה)] Jer 4:19

יַחְלְאֵל H3177 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jahleel (proper name: 'wait for God!' or 'God waits'; son of Zebulun)
This name, meaning 'wait for God' or possibly 'may God wait,' belongs to one of the sons of Zebulun listed in Genesis and Numbers. The name embeds a theological exhortation or petition related to hope and patience in God. Names built on the root 'to wait' or 'to hope' reflect the virtue of patient trust that characterized biblical faith. The name appears in both patriarchal genealogies and tribal census lists, establishing Jahleel as a clan founder within Zebulun.

(2×) A proper name belonging to a son of Zebulun and founder of a clan (Gen 46:14, Num 26:26). The name means 'wait for God!' or 'hope in God,' built on the root for waiting/hoping. The two occurrences show the name with prepositions: 'and Jahleel' and 'to Jahleel' (referring to his clan). Standard transliterations: English 'Jahleel,' Spanish 'Yahleel' or 'Yajleel,' French and German 'Jahleel,' with multilingual evidence showing consistent understanding of this Zebulunite clan founder. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Jahleel, to-Jahleel | es: de-Yahleel, y-Yajleel | fr: et-Jahleel, à-Jahleel | de: und-Jachleel, zu-Jahleel Gen 46:14; Num 26:26

יַחְלְאֵלִי H3178 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
Jahleelite — gentillic designation for descendants of Jahleel (Num 26:26)
This term with the definite article designates the clan descended from Jahleel, son of Zebulun. Such gentillic forms appear throughout Numbers 26's census, organizing Israel's tribes by their ancestral clans. These designations maintained tribal and clan identity, essential for land distribution and social organization in ancient Israel.

(1×) The collective designation for Jahleel's descendants appearing in the Zebulunite census of Numbers 26:26. The article 'the' functions collectively, referring to the clan as a group. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'los-yahleelitas,' German 'der-Jahleelite') preserve both the article and gentillic form, maintaining the text's genealogical and organizational function. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jahleelite | es: los-yahleelitas | fr: le-Jahleelite | de: der-Jahleelite Num 26:26

יָחַם H3179 V-Piel-Perf-3fs / 1cs (10×)
To be in heat, breed (of animals); to be warm, get hot (of persons/things); (Piel) to conceive a child.
A root whose meaning radiates from the basic sensation of heat. In its most frequent use, it describes animals going into heat – Jacob's breeding strategy with Laban's flocks depends on when the animals 'were in heat' at the watering troughs (Gen 30:38-41; 31:10). German Brnstigwerden ('going into rut') and Spanish encenderse en celo ('to kindle in heat') both capture this zoological specificity. The same root applies to ordinary physical warmth: old King David could not 'get warm' (1 Kgs 1:1), and two lying together 'will be hot' (Eccl 4:11). A single Piel occurrence in Psalm 51:5 elevates the meaning to human conception: 'in sin my mother conceived me' – a transfer from animal breeding-heat to the theological mystery of human generation.

1. be in heat, breed (5×) Being in heat or experiencing breeding arousal, said of livestock during mating season. All five occurrences cluster in the Jacob-Laban narrative (Gen 30:38-39, 41; 31:10), describing the flocks' sexual heat at the watering troughs. German Brnstigwerden ('going into rut') and Spanish encenderse en celo ('to kindle in heat') preserve the specifically animal-reproductive register. HEAT AND WARMTH
en: and-conceived, and-they-were-in-heat, breeding | es: Y-se-encendían-en-celo, encenderse-en-celo, para-encenderse-en-celo | fr: breeding, et-conçut, et-ils-étaient-dans-heat | de: Brünstigwerden, damit-sie-brünstig-würden, des-Brünstigwerdens Gen 30:38; Gen 30:39; Gen 30:41; Gen 31:10

2. be warm, get hot (4×) Becoming physically warm or hot, applied to human bodies or objects gaining temperature. Aging David's attendants sought someone to help him 'get warm' (1 Kgs 1:1), two lying together 'will be hot' (Eccl 4:11), and the avenger's heart may 'grow hot' in pursuit (Deut 19:6). Spanish calentarse ('to warm oneself') and French tre brlant ('to be burning') track the straightforward thermal meaning. HEAT AND WARMTH
en: he-was-warm, is-hot, may-be-hot | es: se-calentaba, se-calentará?, se-caliente | fr: est-hot, il-fut-warm, être-brûlant | de: [יחם], [תחם], er-war-warm Deut 19:6; 1Kgs 1:1; Eccl 4:11; Ezek 24:11

3. conceive (a child) (1×) Piel: to conceive a human child, a singular extension from animal breeding-heat to human generation. Psalm 51:5 stands alone: 'in sin my mother conceived me' – a verse central to the theology of original sin. The transfer from zoological to human reproduction is marked by the Piel stem, and Spanish me concibi and German conceived-mich confirm the distinct 'conceive' meaning. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: conceived-me | es: me-concibió | fr: avoir-chaud | de: conceived-mich Ps 51:5

יַחְמוּר H3180 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
roebuck (animal: a deer species, possibly gazelle, permitted as clean food)
This noun designates a species of deer or gazelle permitted as clean food under Mosaic law. The word appears in lists of edible animals in Deuteronomy and provisions for Solomon's table. Ancient cognates in Samaritan, Syriac, and Targumic Aramaic confirm the identification with a reddish-colored deer. Modern scholars have identified it with the roebuck based on descriptions from 19th-century naturalists who observed the species in Palestine. The name apparently derives from its reddish coloring.

(2×) A noun denoting the roebuck, a species of deer permitted as food (Deut 14:5, 1 Kgs 4:23). Deuteronomy lists it among clean animals, while Kings includes it in the daily provisions for Solomon's royal table. Both occurrences use 'and roebuck(s)' with the conjunction. Multilingual renderings: English 'roebuck(s),' Spanish 'gamo' (fallow deer), French and German preserve the transliteration, though 19th-century naturalists confirmed this as the roebuck species, noted for reddish coloring and presence in biblical-era Palestine. DEER AND GAZELLE
en: and-roebuck, and-roebucks | es: y-gamo | fr: et-roebuck, et-roebucks | de: und-roebuck, und-roebucks Deut 14:5; 1Kgs 4:23

יַחְמַי H3181 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yachmai — personal name of an Issacharite (1 Chr 7:2)
This Issacharite name possibly means 'may Yahweh protect,' drawing on a root related to protection or warmth. The Sabean parallel strengthens the Semitic background of this naming pattern. Chronicles' preservation of tribal genealogies, even for names appearing only once, demonstrates concern to honor all Israel's tribal heritage beyond just the royal line.

(1×) An Issacharite listed among clan leaders in 1 Chronicles 7:2. The proposed meaning 'may Yahweh protect' fits common theophoric patterns invoking divine care. Greek versions varied considerably in transcription (Emkan, Iemou, Iamin), showing transmission challenges. Modern translations (Spanish 'y-Yajmai') maintain transliteration with the conjunction, preserving genealogical structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yachmai | es: y-Yajmai | fr: [ויחמי] | de: [ויחמי] 1Chr 7:2

יָחֵף H3182 Conj-w | Adj-ms (5×)

barefoot; unshod, without sandals, as a sign of mourning or captivity

An adjective describing the state of being unshod, carrying strong symbolic weight in ancient Israel. Going barefoot signified mourning, humiliation, or prophetic enactment. David ascended the Mount of Olives barefoot and weeping during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 15:30). Isaiah walked barefoot for three years as a prophetic sign against Egypt and Cush (Isa 20:2-4). In Jeremiah 2:25, the image shifts to the abstract noun 'bareness' — withhold your foot from going unshod — metaphorically urging Israel to stop running after foreign gods.

(5×) Barefoot, unshod — describing the physical state of lacking sandals, typically as a sign of mourning, shame, or prophetic symbolism. David goes barefoot in grief (2 Sam 15:30); Isaiah walks barefoot as a portent of captivity (Isa 20:2-4). In Jer 2:25, used substantively as 'bareness' (miyyāḥēp), metaphorically warning against the exhausting pursuit of idolatry. The multilingual evidence — French 'déchaussé,' Spanish 'descalzo,' German 'barfuss' — all point to literal unshodness, while the Syriac cognate yūḥāpā confirms the meaning 'discalceation.' SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: and-barefoot, barefoot, from-bareness | es: de-ir-descalzo, descalzo, y-descalzo | fr: barefoot, déchaussé, et-déchaussé | de: barefoot, barfuss, und-barfuss 2Sam 15:30; Isa 20:2; Isa 20:3; Isa 20:4; Jer 2:25

יַחְצְאֵל H3183 Prep-l | N-proper-ms (2×)

Jahzeel (proper name: 'God apportions/divides'; son of Naphtali)

This name, meaning 'God divides' or 'God apportions,' belongs to a son of Naphtali and founder of a clan. The name appears in variant spellings (Jahzeel and Jahziel) across different biblical passages, reflecting the challenges of preserving rare names through scribal transmission. The theological content is significant: the name affirms God's role in distribution and apportionment, perhaps reflecting gratitude for the land inheritance or family portion. The Septuagint's varied transliterations show Greek translators were uncertain about the vowel pointing.

(2×) A proper name belonging to a son of Naphtali and clan founder, appearing with variant spellings across texts (Gen 46:24, Num 26:48, = Jahziel in 1 Chr 7:13). The name means 'God divides' or 'God apportions.' This batch shows prepositional forms: 'to Jahzeel' and 'Jahzeel.' Standard transliterations vary: English 'Jahzeel,' Spanish 'Yajtsel' or 'Yahseel,' French and German 'Jahzeel,' all acknowledging this Naphtalite clan founder whose name affirms divine providence in apportionment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jahzeel, to-Jahzeel | es: Yajtsel, de-Yahseel | fr: Jahzeel, à-Jahzeel | de: Jachzeel, zu-Jahzeel Gen 46:24; Num 26:48

יַחְצְאֵלִי H3184 Art | N-proper-ms (1×)

Jahzeelite — gentillic designation for descendants of Jahzeel (Num 26:48)

This collective term with the article identifies the clan of Jahzeel within the tribe of Naphtali. The census in Numbers 26 systematically catalogs Israel's clans after the wilderness wandering, preparing for land distribution in Canaan. These gentillic designations preserved tribal structure and inheritance rights across generations.

(1×) The clan designation for Jahzeel's descendants in Naphtali's census list (Numbers 26:48). The definite article marks this as a recognized collective unit. Translations across languages (Spanish 'los-yahseelitas,' French 'le-Jahzeelite') maintain the collective sense, showing this as an organizational category within Israel's tribal system. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Jahzeelite | es: los-yahseelitas | fr: le-Jahzeelite | de: der-Jahzeelite Num 26:48

יַחְצִיאֵל H3185 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yachtsiel — personal name of Naphtali's son (1 Chr 7:13), meaning 'God apportions'

This son of Naphtali bears a name meaning 'God divides' or 'apportions,' perhaps reflecting themes of divine providence in land distribution. The name appears with spelling variants across Genesis, Numbers, and Chronicles, showing textual fluidity in proper names. As a tribal ancestor, Yachtsiel's descendants formed one of Naphtali's clans.

(1×) One of Naphtali's sons and thus an ancestral clan head. The variant spellings (Yachtse'el, Yachtsiel) and diverse Greek renderings demonstrate transmission variations across different source texts. The name's meaning ('God apportions') theologically frames land inheritance as divine gift. Translations uniformly transliterate (Spanish 'Yajtsiel'), treating this as a genealogical marker. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yachtsiel | es: Yajtsiel | fr: [יחציאל] | de: [יחציאל] 1Chr 7:13

אָחַר H3186

remain behind, delay, tarry, linger (often with negative implication of unwelcome delay)

This verb describes staying behind or delaying when forward movement is expected. Genesis 32:5 uses it for Jacob's tarrying with Laban; Genesis 24:56 has Abraham's servant refusing to delay his return journey. The Piel intensifies the sense: 'Why is his chariot so long in coming?' (Judges 5:28). Isaiah 46:13 and Daniel 9:19 assure that God's salvation will not tarry, contrasting divine reliability with human procrastination. The word often carries urgency: someone is late, something is overdue, the expected has not yet arrived—and patience is wearing thin.

הִתְיַחֵשׂ H3187 V-Hitpael-Inf | 3mp (20×)

To enroll or be enrolled by genealogy; the genealogical register itself.

A Hithpael denominative from יָחַשׂ (genealogy), this verb captures the distinctive Israelite practice of tracing and recording ancestral lineage. It functions both verbally — to register oneself or be reckoned according to one's family line — and nominally, where the infinitive construct serves as a noun meaning 'the genealogical enrollment' or 'the register.' Found almost exclusively in Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, it reflects the post-exilic community's urgent concern with establishing legitimate Israelite identity. The Spanish rendering 'registro' and the English 'enrollment' both highlight the documentary, official character of this act.

1. genealogical enrollment record (11×) The infinitive construct functioning as a noun: the genealogical register or record of enrollment itself. In passages like 1 Chronicles 7:5 and 7:40, the text refers to 'their enrollment' (הִתְיַחְשָׂם) as a concrete document or tally — the list that certifies lineage. Spanish 'su registro' and English 'their enrollment' both capture this nominal sense. The suffix forms (הִתְיַחְשָׂם) emphasize that this is a communal possession: 'their genealogical record.' GENEALOGY ENROLLMENT

en: and-their-enrollment, and-their-genealogy, enrolled | es: Y-su-registro, el-registro-de, los-que-se-contaban-por-genealogía | fr: enregistrer, et-enregistrer | de: Geschlechtsregister, [המתיחשים], [והתיחשם] 1Chr 4:33; 1Chr 7:5; 1Chr 7:7; 1Chr 7:9; 1Chr 7:40

2. to enroll by genealogy (9×) The verbal sense: to enroll oneself or be enrolled by genealogy — the active or passive process of being registered according to ancestral lineage. In 1 Chronicles 5:1 the construction 'not to be enrolled as firstborn' shows the verb governing status within the genealogical system. Ezra 2:62 and Nehemiah 7:64 describe priests who 'sought their registration' but could not be found, using the participle הַמִּתְיַחֲשִׂים — a poignant testimony to the post-exilic stakes of genealogical verification. GENEALOGY ENROLLMENT

en: and-to-enroll, for-genealogy, those-registered-by-genealogy | es: al-ser-registrados, fue-registrado, fueron-registrados | fr: enregistrer, et-enregistrer | de: Geschlechtsregister, [המתיחשים], [התיחש] 1Chr 5:1; 1Chr 5:7; 1Chr 5:17; 1Chr 9:1; 2Chr 12:15

יִחַשׂ H3188 Art / N-ms (1×)

genealogy, genealogical enrollment — record of ancestral lineage (Neh 7:5)

This noun designates a book or record of genealogical registration, mentioned when Nehemiah investigates the lineages of those claiming to be returnees from exile. Genealogical verification was crucial for establishing property rights, priestly eligibility, and covenant community membership. The term's usage in later Hebrew and Aramaic confirms its technical function in administrative record-keeping.

(1×) The technical term for genealogical records appearing in Nehemiah 7:5 as 'the book of the genealogy.' This registry verified claims to Israelite identity and property rights after the exile. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'la-genealogía') confirms the concrete sense of documented lineage. Such records bridged the exile's disruption, reconnecting the restoration community to their ancestral past. GENEALOGY ENROLLMENT

en: the-genealogy | es: la-genealogía | fr: [היחש] | de: [היחש] Neh 7:5

יַחַת H3189 N-proper-ms (8×)

Jahath — a proper name borne by a grandson of Judah and several Levites, possibly meaning 'he (God) will snatch up.'

Jahath is a masculine proper name appearing across the genealogies of Chronicles, borne by at least five distinct individuals. One is a grandson of Judah through Shobal (1 Chr 4:2), while the others are Levites serving in various capacities across Israel's worship history (1 Chr 6:5, 23:10, 24:22; 2 Chr 34:12). The name likely derives from a root meaning 'he will snatch up,' suggesting divine rescue or deliverance. The LXX renders it variously as Ieeth, Iaath, and Inath, reflecting different manuscript traditions.

Yachat (8×) A masculine proper name meaning possibly 'he (God) will snatch up,' borne by five different men in the OT: a descendant of Judah (1 Chr 4:2) and four Levites serving across different generations. The Greek Septuagint varies between Ιεθ and Ιααθ, while English, Spanish, and German consistently transliterate as Jahath/Yajat/Jachat respectively. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jahath, Yachat, Yachath | es: Yajat, y-Yajat | fr: [יחת], [יחת] | de: Jachat, und-Jachat 1Chr 4:2; 1Chr 6:20; 1Chr 6:43; 1Chr 23:10

יָטַב H3190 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cp (112×)

be good, pleasing; do good to, treat well; be glad (of heart); amend, improve; play/perform skillfully; well, thoroughly

This root expresses goodness in state, action, and emotion. In the Qal it describes situations or actions that are good or pleasing ('it was good in his eyes'), and the heart being glad or merry. The Hifil actively does good to someone, treats them well, or improves and corrects a situation. An adverbial use ('well, thoroughly') intensifies actions. Specialized senses include performing music skillfully and making merry or cheering. Arabic distinguishes 'be good' (ḥasuna) from 'do good' (aḥsana, Form IV) and 'reform' (aṣlaḥa from a different root), confirming Hebrew's semantic range from inherent goodness to active beneficence to skilled performance.

1. Hifil: do good to, treat well (42×) The core Hifil causative sense of actively doing good to someone or treating them well appears 42 times. Genesis 12:16 records Pharaoh treating Abram well on account of Sarai, Genesis 32:9-12 repeats God's promise 'I will do good to you.' Arabic Form IV aḥsana, 'do well/good') and Korean 선대하다 ('treat well') mark this as transitive beneficence: the subject acts to benefit the object. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-we-will-do-good, but-to-do-good, commends | es: a-hacer-el-bien, bien-preparas, hace-bien | fr: et-faire-du-bien, et-nous-fera-faire-bon, faire-du-bien | de: du-Gutes-tust, gut-machen, gut-tat Gen 4:7; Gen 12:16; Gen 32:9; Gen 32:12

2. Qal: be good, be pleasing (38×) The Qal stative/intransitive sense 'be good, be pleasing' accounts for 38 occurrences, describing situations, actions, or states that are good or pleasing to someone. Genesis 41:37 notes 'the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh,' Genesis 45:16 records 'it pleased Pharaoh' to hear Joseph's brothers had come. Arabic ḥasuna, 'be good/beautiful') and yaḥsunu) distinguish this stative sense from the active Hifil, revealing a genuine Semitic semantic split. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-it-was-good, and-was-good, it-is-good | es: Y-agradó, Y-fue-buena, Y-fue-bueno | fr: [ויטב], [תיטב], cela-est-bon | de: es-ist-gut, es-moege-sein-gut, es-wird-sein-gut Gen 12:13; Gen 34:18; Gen 40:14; Gen 41:37; Gen 45:16

3. Hifil InfAbs: well, thoroughly (adverbial) (10×) The Hifil infinitive absolute used adverbially to mean 'well, thoroughly, clearly, rightly' appears 10 times. Genesis 32:12 renders 'I will surely do you good [do good doing good],' Deuteronomy 13:14 commands investigating 'thoroughly' [making good the investigation]. Arabic adverbial jayyidan, 'well/good') and iḥsānan, 'doing good thoroughly') confirm this as an intensifying or manner adverb derived from the Hifil infinitive. MORAL GOODNESS

en: clearly, doing-good, is-it-rightly | es: acaso-bien, bien, bien-hacer | fr: clearly, entièrement, faire-du-bien | de: Gutes-tun, clearly, gut-tat Gen 32:12; Deut 9:21; Deut 13:14; Deut 17:4; Deut 19:18

4. Hifil: amend, improve, make right (7×) Seven occurrences show a Hifil sense of amending, improving, or making something right. Jeremiah 7:3, 5 commands 'Amend your ways and your deeds,' Jeremiah 18:11 calls each person to 'turn from his evil way and amend his deeds.' Arabic crucially uses aṣlaḥa, 'repair, reform, put right') from root ص-ل-ح, a completely different root, revealing that Hebrew's range ('do good' → 'make right') is broader than Arabic's lexical splits. MORAL GOODNESS

en: Make-good, and-do-good, and-make-good | es: Mejorad, mejorad, mejorar | fr: et-faire-du-bien, faire-du-bien | de: gut-machen, gut-tat, und-gut-machen Jer 7:3; Jer 7:5; Jer 18:11; Jer 26:13

5. Qal: be glad (of heart/spirit) (5×) Five occurrences show the Qal sense of the heart or spirit being glad, merry, or in good spirits. Judges 18:20 records the Levite's heart 'was glad,' Ruth 3:7 notes Boaz's heart 'was merry' with food and drink, 1 Kings 21:7 urges 'let your heart be merry.' Arabic distinctly uses ṭāba, 'be pleasant/delightful of heart') rather than , revealing a genuine Semitic semantic branch from general goodness to emotional gladness. MORAL GOODNESS

en: and-be-glad, and-let-be-good, and-was-glad | es: Y-se-alegró, y-alégrese, y-que-se-alegre | fr: et-que-être-bon, et-était-bon, et-était-glad | de: und-gut-tat, und-lass-sein-gut, und-sein-glad Judg 18:20; Judg 19:6; Judg 19:9; Ruth 3:7; 1Kgs 21:7

6. (2×) Proverbs 30:29 twice lists things that 'are stately of step' or 'march well.' The participle and context (walking, bearing) have led to a gloss 'stately' or 'moving gracefully.' This may be an extension of the adverbial sense (sense 3, 'doing well') or a specialized lexeme. The two occurrences are identical in a numerical proverb, limiting independent evidence. MORAL GOODNESS

en: stately-of, who-are-stately-of | es: los-que-marchan-bien | fr: faire-du-bien | de: gut-tat Prov 30:29

7. Hifil: play/perform skillfully (2×) Psalm 33:3 commands 'play skillfully' on the lyre, and Isaiah 23:16 urges the harlot to 'play skillfully' to be remembered. The Hifil sense of performing music well or skillfully is a natural extension of 'do good/well' applied to instrumental performance. Arabic يَ / وَا remains within the ح-س-ن root but the collocational context (instruments) confirms this as a distinct sense cluster. MORAL GOODNESS

en: make-good, play-skillfully | es: toca-bien, tocad-bien | fr: faire-du-bien, le-faire-du-bien | de: gut-machen, machte-gut Ps 33:3; Isa 23:16

8. Hifil: make merry, cheer (2×) Judges 19:22 describes the men of Gibeah 'making their hearts merry' (pounding on the door while the host urged restraint), and Ecclesiastes 11:9 advises 'let your heart cheer you in the days of your youth.' The Hifil causative sense of causing joy or making merry appears twice. Arabic سَرَّ (yusarrūna, Form II of س-ر-ر 'cause joy') for the participial form marks a semantic shift from general beneficence to emotional cheering. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: and-let-cheer-you, making-merry | es: alegrando, y-alégre-te | fr: et-faire-du-bien-toi, faisant-merry | de: machend-merry, und-gut-tat Judg 19:22; Eccl 11:9

9. (1×) 2 Kings 9:30 records Jezebel 'adorned herself' (literally 'made herself good') before Jehu arrived. The single occurrence and reflexive context ('she adorned her eyes with paint') suggest a specialized grooming or beautification sense. The EMOTION domain assignment may reflect the data's uncertainty about whether this is physical grooming or psychological preparation. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-she-adorned | es: y-adornó | fr: et-elle-adorned | de: und-sie-adorned 2Kgs 9:30

10. (1×) Exodus 30:7 describes Aaron's duty 'when he tends the lamps' each morning. The single occurrence and ritual context have isolated this, but the sense appears to be a specialized use of 'make good/right' applied to lamp maintenance. This may belong with sense 4 (amend, improve) or sense 1 (do good to), where the object is the lamps or the tabernacle service. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: when-he-tends | es: al-aderezar-él | fr: quand-il-tends | de: als-er-tends Exod 30:7

11. (1×) Nahum 3:8 asks 'Are you better than No-amon?' (Thebes), a single occurrence comparing cities. This appears to be a straightforward comparative use of the Qal stative sense 2 (be good), where one city is better placed or more secure than another. BDB explicitly lists this sense ('be well placed'), confirming it fits within the core stative cluster. MORAL GOODNESS
en: are-you-better | es: ¿Eres-mejor | fr: faire-du-bien | de: gut-tat Nah 3:8

12. (1×) 1 Samuel 20:13 records Jonathan's oath 'if it seems good to my father to do you harm, I will disclose it to you.' The single occurrence uses an impersonal construction 'it seems good' that fits squarely within sense 2 (be good, be pleasing). The data has separated this, possibly due to the epistemic nuance ('seem'), but semantically it belongs with the stative cluster. MORAL GOODNESS
en: it-seems-good | es: si-pareciere-bien | fr: cela-seems-bon | de: es-seems-gut 1Sam 20:13

יְטַב H3191 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
be good, seem good, be pleasing — verb expressing approval or propriety (Ezra 7:18)
This Aramaic verb appears in Ezra's royal decree, stating what 'seems good' regarding the use of remaining temple funds. The imperfect form suggests ongoing appropriateness or permission. This formulaic language grants discretionary authority, allowing priests to use surplus resources as they deem fitting. The verb's semantic range covers both moral goodness and practical appropriateness.

(1×) Aramaic verbal form meaning 'it seems good' or 'it is pleasing' in Ezra 7:18's royal authorization. The construction with the preposition 'upon' (to someone) indicates whose judgment determines appropriateness. Spanish 'parezca bien' captures the subjunctive sense of appearing good or right. This grants discretionary authority within the framework of Persian imperial administration of Jewish religious affairs. MORAL GOODNESS
en: seems-good | es: parezca-bien | fr: [ייטב] | de: [ייטב] Ezra 7:18

יִטְבָּה H3192 N-proper-fs (1×)
Yotbah — place name, city in Judah, birthplace of King Manasseh's mother (2 Kgs 21:19)
This place name, meaning 'pleasantness,' designates a city in Judah, mentioned as the hometown of Manasseh's mother. The site remains unidentified archaeologically, though the name's meaning suggests it may have been known for its attractive location or character. Many biblical place names preserve topographical or cultural memories even when precise locations are lost.

(1×) A Judahite city named for its pleasantness, appearing only in the genealogical note about King Manasseh's maternal ancestry in 2 Kings 21:19. The uniform transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Yotba,' French and German 'Yotbah') treats this as a proper geographical designation. Though the site is unidentified, the name preserves a fragment of Judah's urban geography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yotbah | es: Yotba | fr: Yotbah | de: Yotbah 2Kgs 21:19

יָטְבָתָה H3193 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)
Jotbathah, wilderness station during Israel's wanderings, location unknown
A place name meaning 'pleasantness,' identifying one of the Israelite encampments during the wilderness period. Listed in Numbers 33:33-34 (from the Priestly source) and Deuteronomy 10:7 as a station in the journey, though its exact location remains unknown to modern scholars. The name's etymology suggests it may have been an oasis or otherwise pleasant spot in the harsh wilderness landscape. The prepositional variations in the glosses (from, in, to Jotbathah) simply reflect the different narrative contexts in which the place is mentioned.

(3×) A wilderness encampment whose specific location has been lost to history. The name 'pleasantness' stands in ironic contrast to most wilderness geography, perhaps indicating a rare source of water or shade. The consistent rendering across languages (Jotbata, Jotbathah) shows the name was well-established in the wilderness itinerary traditions, even if its physical site cannot now be identified. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: from-Jotbathah, in-Jotbathah, to-Jotbathah | es: a-Jotbata, de-Jotbatá, en-Jotbatá | fr: dans-Jotbathah, de-Jotbathah, à-Jotbathah | de: in-Jotbathah, von-Jotbathah, zu-Jotbathah Num 33:33; Num 33:34; Deut 10:7

יִטָּה H3194 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
Juttah (proper name: town in Judah's hill country, assigned to priests)
This place name designates a town in the hill country of Judah that was later assigned to the priests as a Levitical city. The name appears in two variant spellings in the Masoretic tradition, though both likely refer to the same location. The town's precise location is uncertain, though it was in the Judean highlands. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to stretch out' or 'extend,' possibly describing the town's geographic situation or founding.

(2×) A proper name designating a town in the hill country of Judah (Josh 15:55) that was later assigned to the priests as a Levitical city (Josh 21:16). The two occurrences show prepositional forms: 'Juttah' and 'and Juttah.' The name appears with slight spelling variants in the Hebrew tradition. Standard transliterations: English 'Juttah' or 'Yuttah,' Spanish 'Jutá,' French and German 'Juttah' or 'Yuttah,' identifying this priestly city in Judah's highlands. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Juttah, and-Yuttah | es: Jutá, y-Jutá | fr: Juttah, et-Yuttah | de: Juttah, und-Yuttah Josh 15:55; Josh 21:16

יְטוּר H3195 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Yetur/Jetur, Ishmaelite son and tribal name, ancestors of Ituraeans in Anti-Lebanon region
A personal and tribal name for one of the 'sons' of Ishmael listed in Genesis 25:15 and 1 Chronicles 1:31, who later gave his name to a tribe. This tribe appears in 1 Chronicles 5:19 as among those with whom Reuben, Gad, and half-Manasseh made war. The classical sources identify them with the Ituraeans (Greek Ἰτουραῖοι), known to Strabo and Josephus, who inhabited the Anti-Lebanon region.

Luke 3:1 mentions 'the region of Ituraea and Trachonitis' in the time of Jesus, showing this people group's enduring presence in the region. The name may connect etymologically with the word for 'encampment' (טִירָה).

(3×) An Ishmaelite clan name that evolved into an ethnic designation for a people inhabiting parts of Lebanon. The survival of the name into the New Testament era (as Ituraea) demonstrates the remarkable continuity of tribal identities in the ancient Near East. The tribe represents one stream of Abraham's descendants through Ishmael who maintained a distinct presence for over a millennium. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jetur, Yetur, and-Yetur | es: Yetur, y-Yetur | fr: Jetur, [ויטור], [יטור] | de: Jetur, [ויטור], [יטור] Gen 25:15; 1Chr 1:31; 1Chr 5:19

יַיִן H3196 Conj-w / N-msc (141×)

Wine — fermented grape beverage used in daily life, worship offerings, festive celebration, and cautionary warnings against excess

Yayin is the standard Hebrew word for wine, appearing 141 times across every genre of Scripture. It enters the narrative as early as Noah's vineyard (Gen 9:21) and pervades daily life: Melchizedek brings bread and wine to Abram (Gen 14:18), it accompanies provision and hospitality (Judg 19:19; 2 Sam 16:2), and the prophets promise it as a sign of restored blessing (Amos 9:14; Hos 14:8). Yet the same word carries sober warnings — excess leads to shame (Gen 9:21), mockery (Prov 20:1), and ruin (Isa 5:11-12). The cognates across Semitic languages (Ethiopic wayn, Arabic wayn, Akkadian inu) confirm an ancient, shared viticulture vocabulary.

wine (fermented grape juice) (141×) Fermented grape beverage, the primary Hebrew term for wine across all its social, cultic, and literary contexts. It appears in scenes of daily refreshment (Gen 14:18; Judg 19:19), as a prescribed element in drink offerings (Num 15:5-10), as a symbol of joy and divine blessing (Ps 104:15; Amos 9:14), and as a source of moral danger when abused (Prov 20:1; 23:30-31). Spanish 'vino,' French 'vin,' and German 'Wein' all descend from the same ancient root, reflecting the deep cultural continuity of this beverage across the Mediterranean and Near Eastern world. WINE BEVERAGE en: of-wine, wine | es: Vino, vino | fr: de-vin, vin | de: Wein, mit-Wein, von-Wein Gen 19:32; Gen 19:33; Gen 19:34; Gen 19:35; Gen 27:25

יָד H3197

textual error in 1 Samuel 4:13 (Ketiv) for יָדָ֔ 'hand' (Qere)

This entry represents a scribal variant or textual corruption in 1 Samuel 4:13. The Ketiv (written text) reads יָד but the Qere (read aloud) corrects to יָדָ֔ ('hand'). Such Ketiv-Qere notations preserve both the received consonantal text and the traditional reading, allowing scholars to track scribal variations. In this case, the correction is straightforward: a letter was likely miscopied, and the Qere restores the intended word 'hand.'

יָכַח H3198 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (59×)

Rebuke, reprove; argue or plead a case; decide, judge, arbitrate; discipline; appoint, designate

A Hifil-dominant verb spanning the spectrum from courtroom argument to parental correction. At its heart yakach involves the authoritative confrontation of wrong — whether a prophet rebuking sin (Lev 19:17), God disciplining those he loves (Prov 3:12), or a judge arbitrating between disputing parties (Isa 2:4). The forensic-rhetorical dimension emerges powerfully in Job, where the sufferer demands to 'argue his case' before God (Job 13:3, 15). A rare but striking semantic extension reaches into the domain of divine appointment, as when God 'designates' Rebekah as Isaac's bride (Gen 24:14, 44).

1. rebuke, reprove (35×) The most frequent sense: to rebuke or reprove someone for wrongdoing, whether human or divine correction. Arabic wabbakha ('rebuke'), Korean kkujitda ('scold'), and Swahili -kemea ('rebuke') all converge on this confrontational speech-act. Lev 19:17 commands direct reproof of a neighbor rather than harboring hidden resentment; 2 Kgs 19:4 records Hezekiah's plea that God rebuke Assyria's taunts. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: I-will-rebuke-you, a-wise, and-He-rebuked | es: El-que-reprende, Reprendiendo, Y-reprendió | fr: [ויוכח], et-il-rebuked, et-reprendre | de: [ויוכח], ich-wird-schelten-du, schelten-mich Gen 21:25; Gen 31:42; Lev 19:17; 2Kgs 19:4

2. argue, contend, plead a case (9×) To argue, contend, or plead a case — the forensic-rhetorical register prominent in Job and prophetic discourse. Job 13:3 and 13:15 use yakach for the bold act of presenting one's legal argument before God himself. Arabic yuhajju ('to dispute') and French reprendre capture the disputational force that sets this apart from simple rebuke. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: I-argue, and-let-Him-argue, and-let-us-reason-together | es: Y-que-defienda, defenderé, el-que-reprende | fr: et-reprendre, reprendre | de: und-zurechtweisen, und-zurechtwies, zurechtwies Job 6:25; Job 13:3; Job 13:15; Job 15:3; Job 16:21

3. decide, judge, arbitrate (7×) To decide, judge, or arbitrate between parties — the juridical sense seen in Isa 2:4 and 11:3, where the Messiah will 'judge' among nations. Arabic yahkumu ('judge'), Korean pandanhada ('judge, decide'), and German richten ('to judge') confirm the adjudicative force. Gen 31:37 uses it for arbitration between Laban and Jacob. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: and-decide, and-he-will-decide, and-let-them-decide | es: decidirá, y-arbitrará, y-decidirá | fr: [ויוכח], et-que-eux-decide, et-reprendre | de: [ויוכח], und-er-wies-zurecht, und-sie-sollen-richten Gen 31:37; 1Chr 12:18; Job 9:33; Isa 2:4; Isa 11:3

4. discipline, correct (4×) To discipline or correct with pedagogical intent, distinguished from bare rebuke by its formative purpose. Prov 3:12 links divine yakach to fatherly love; 2 Sam 7:14 applies it to God's covenantal discipline of David's heir. Arabic yu'addibu ('to educate/discipline') and Swahili -adhibu ('discipline') highlight the corrective-pedagogical nuance. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: He-reproves, and-I-will-discipline-him, and-he-is-reproved | es: Y-es-corregido, para-corregir, reprende | fr: et-je-fera-discipline-lui, et-reprendre, reprendre | de: und-ich-wird-discipline-ihn, und-zurechtwies, zurechtwies 2Sam 7:14; Job 33:19; Prov 3:12; Hab 1:12

5. appoint, designate (2×) A rare semantic extension: to appoint or designate, appearing only in Gen 24:14 and 24:44 where Abraham's servant asks God to 'designate' the right bride for Isaac. Arabic 'ayyana ('appoint') and Korean jeonghada ('determine') support this specialized shift from 'proving right' to 'singling out by proof.' APPOINTING AND VISITING

en: has-appointed, you-have-appointed | es: designaste, designó | fr: a-désigna, tu-avoir-désigna | de: bestimmt-hat, hast-du-bestimmt Gen 24:14; Gen 24:44

6. (1×) In Gen 20:16 Abimelech's payment to Abraham serves to vindicate Sarah publicly — her honor is established before all. The sense of forensic vindication or public exoneration is confirmed by English 'vindicated' and Spanish vindicada, bridging rebuke-language into the courtroom outcome of acquittal. JUDGING AND DECIDING

en: and-vindicated | es: y-fuiste-vindicada | fr: et-vindicated | de: und-du-bist-gerechtfertigt Gen 20:16

7. (1×) In Mic 6:2 God summons the mountains as witnesses and 'contends' with Israel in a covenant lawsuit (rib-pattern). English 'contend' and Spanish contenderá place this at the intersection of legal argument and prophetic indictment, closely related to sense 2 but heightened by the covenant-lawsuit genre. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: He-will-contend | es: contenderá | fr: reprendre | de: zurechtwies Mic 6:2

יָכִין H3199 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (8×)

Jachin — 'he will establish'; a Simeonite clan name and the name of the right-hand pillar before Solomon's temple.

Jachin (Yakhin) is a theophoric name meaning 'he will establish,' carried by both persons and a famous architectural feature. As a personal name, it belongs to a son of Simeon listed in the genealogies of Genesis 46:10, Exodus 6:15, and Numbers 26:12. More strikingly, it is the name given to the right-hand bronze pillar standing before Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17), paired with Boaz on the left. The pillar names together may form a declaration: 'He will establish … in strength.' Spanish renders the name Jaquin, preserving the guttural onset.

Jachin / Yakhin (proper name) (8×) The proper name Jachin/Yakhin, meaning 'he will establish,' used for both a Simeonite clan ancestor (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15; Num 26:12) and the right-hand pillar of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:21), paired with Boaz. The multilingual glosses — English 'Jachin,' Spanish 'Jaquin,' French and German retaining the Hebrew form — all reflect a consistent transliteration across traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jachin, Yakhin, and-Jachin | es: Jaquín, de-Yaquín, para-Yakín | fr: Jachin, [יָכִין], [יָכִין] | de: Jachin, [וְיָכִין], [יָכִין] Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15; Num 26:12; 1Kgs 7:21; 1Chr 9:10

יָכִינִי H3200 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Jachinite — gentillic designation for descendants of Jachin (Num 26:12)

This collective term with the article designates the clan descended from Jachin, one of Simeon's sons. The census formula in Numbers 26 systematically organizes each tribe by its constituent clans, using these gentillic forms. Such designations maintained genealogical precision necessary for tribal identity and land rights in ancient Israel.

(1×) The clan designation for Jachin's descendants within Simeon's census enumeration (Numbers 26:12). The definite article functions collectively, treating the clan as a recognized unit. Translations (Spanish 'los-yaquinitas,' French 'le-Jachinite') preserve the collective gentillic form, showing this as an organizational category within the tribal structure essential for covenant community identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jachinite | es: los-yaquinitas | fr: le-Jachinite | de: der-Jachinite Num 26:12

יָכֹל H3201 V-Qal-Imperf-2fs (194×)

To be able, have power; to prevail or overcome; to endure or bear hardship.

A fundamental modal verb in Hebrew expressing capacity, competence, and power. Its most basic function is 'can' or 'be able' – the ability to perform an action, whether physical, moral, or circumstantial. But this root stretches dramatically: Jacob wrestles with the angel and 'prevails' (Gen 32:28), and Esther asks how she 'can endure' seeing her people destroyed (Esth 8:6). The Swahili translation captures the 'prevail' sense with '-shinda' (to conquer), while Hindi uses a distinct verb for endurance ('sahna' – to bear), showing that what Hebrew expresses with one versatile root, other languages must split across multiple semantic fields.

1. be able, can (168×) General ability or capability: 'to be able,' 'can.' This is the overwhelmingly dominant sense (168 occurrences), functioning as the standard Hebrew modal for having the power, permission, or capacity to do something. It appears with infinitive complements: 'I am not able to flee to the mountain' (Gen 19:19), 'the land was not able to bear them' (Gen 13:6). Spanish 'poder,' French 'pouvoir,' and German 'können' all render this straightforwardly as the basic capacity modal. ABILITY AND POWER
en: I-am-able, am-I-able, am-able | es: podían, pudieron, puedo | fr: Je-suis-capable, am-je-able, je-am-able | de: bin-ich-faehig, ich-bin-faehig, ich-bin-fähig Gen 19:19; Gen 19:22; Gen 31:35; Gen 44:22; Gen 45:3

2. prevail, overcome (20×) To prevail, overcome, or gain mastery over an adversary or obstacle. Jacob's wrestling at Peniel provides the paradigm: 'you have striven with God and with men and have prevailed' (Gen 32:28). In 2 Chronicles 18:21, a spirit says 'I will prevail' in deceiving Ahab. The Swahili '-shinda' and Korean '이기다' both translate this as 'to win/conquer,' confirming a genuine semantic shift from mere ability to competitive triumph. About 20 occurrences carry this sense. ABILITY AND POWER
en: I-have-prevailed-over-him, I-prevailed, and-You-prevailed | es: lo-vencí, poder, podrán | fr: Je-prévalut, et-pouvoir, et-tu-avoir-prévalut | de: er-konnte, habe-ich-obsiegt, ich-haben-prevailed-über-ihn Gen 30:8; Gen 32:25; Gen 32:28; 1Sam 26:25; 2Chr 18:21

3. endure, bear (6×) To endure, bear, or withstand suffering or an intolerable situation. Esther's cry 'how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?' (Esth 8:6) is the clearest example. Isaiah 1:13 has God declaring 'I cannot endure iniquity and solemn assembly.' The sense moves from outward power to inward fortitude. Hindi 'sahna' (सहना) and Spanish 'soportar' specifically denote bearing or tolerating, distinguishing this from mere capability. ABILITY AND POWER
en: I-can-bear, I-will-endure, can-I-bear | es: podré, puede, puedo-soportar | fr: pouvoir | de: ich-wird-bestehen, koennen, vermochte Esth 8:6; Ps 101:5; Prov 30:21; Isa 1:13

יְכֹל H3202 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (14×)

Aramaic verb: to be able, have power or capacity; rarely, to prevail against or overcome

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew יָכֹל, this verb expresses ability and capacity throughout the Aramaic sections of Daniel. It is the word used to probe whether anyone 'can' interpret the king's dream (Dan 2:10, 27), to affirm that God 'is able' to deliver from the furnace (Dan 3:17), and to declare that no god 'can' reverse His decrees (Dan 3:29). In its sole divergent usage (Dan 7:21), it takes on a combative edge: the little horn 'prevailed against' the saints, shifting from capacity to conquest.

1. be able, can (13×) To be able, to have the power or capacity to accomplish something, used with an infinitive complement. French 'pouvoir,' Spanish 'poder,' German 'können,' and English 'be able/can' all render this with modal auxiliaries of capacity. The verb appears in questions of whether wise men 'can' reveal mysteries (Dan 2:10, 27), in confessions of divine omnipotence – 'our God is able to deliver us' (Dan 3:17) – and in Belshazzar's challenge to Daniel: 'can you read this writing?' (Dan 5:16). Every occurrence centers on whether a subject possesses the requisite power for a given action. ABILITY AND POWER
en: (qere:you-are-able), He-is-able, [ketiv:you-are-able] | es: (puedes), [puedes], podían | fr: pouvoir | de: koennen Dan 2:10; Dan 2:27; Dan 2:47; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:29

2. prevail against, overcome (1×) To prevail against or overcome someone, shifting from mere capacity to active domination in conflict. In Daniel 7:21, the little horn wages war against the saints 'and prevailed against them' (וְיָכְלָה לְהוֹן), where the preposition לְ marks the adversarial object. Spanish 'los vencía' (conquered them) and English 'prevailing against' both abandon the modal 'can' in favor of martial language, signaling a recognized semantic leap from ability to victory. This combative sense parallels the same development in Biblical Hebrew יָכֹל with לְ. ABILITY AND POWER
en: and-prevailing-against | es: y-los-vencía | fr: et-pouvoir | de: und-koennen Dan 7:21

יְכָלְיָהוּ H3203 N-proper-fs (3×)

Yecholyahu/Yekholyah/Jecoliah, mother of King Azariah/Uzziah of Judah

The personal name of Azariah's (also called Uzziah's) mother, appearing in the royal annalistic formulas. The name is spelled יכליהו in 2 Kings 15:2 and יכליה in 2 Chronicles 26:3 (Qere; the Ketiv reads יכיליה), showing the typical variation in theophoric name endings. The name means 'Yahweh has been able' or 'Yahweh is able,' built on the root יכל (to be able, prevail). The Greek versions vary (Χαλεια, Χααια, Ιεχελια), reflecting the transliteration challenges. As queen mother, she would have held important ceremonial and possibly political roles in 8th-century Judah.

(3×) A queen mother's name preserved in the regnal records of Judah, affirming Yahweh's power and capability. The textual variants (Yecholyahu/Yekholyah/Yekilia) show the fluidity in spelling theophoric names with -yahu/-yah endings. Her son Azariah/Uzziah had one of the longest and most prosperous reigns in Judah's history, though it ended in tragedy when he was struck with leprosy.

PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Yecholyahu, Yekholyah, [ketiv] | es: Jecolias, Yecolías, [Yekilia] | fr: Yecholyahu, [יכיליה], [יכליה] | de: Yecholyahu, [יכיליה], [יכליה] 2Kgs 15:2; 2Chr 26:3

יְכוֹנְיָה H3204 N-proper-ms (7×)

Jeconiah (Yekhonyah/Yekhanyahu), the penultimate king of Judah exiled to Babylon, also called Jehoiachin

Jeconiah is one of several names for the ill-fated king of Judah who reigned briefly before being deported to Babylon in 597 BCE. The spelling variants — Yekhonyah, Yekhanyahu, and the shortened Konyahu — all mean 'YHWH establishes,' though the name carries deep irony given the king's loss of throne and land. Jeremiah uses the diminutive Konyahu in his harshest oracle against this king (Jer 22:24, 28), while the fuller forms appear in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 3:16-17) and in Esther 2:6, linking Mordecai's lineage to this exiled monarch.

Jeconiah (proper name) (7×) The proper name Yekhonyah/Yekhanyahu (יְכָנְיָהוּ / יְכוֹנְיָה), meaning 'YHWH establishes,' referring to king Jeconiah (= Jehoiachin), the penultimate king of Judah exiled by Nebuchadnezzar in 597 BCE. The name appears in three orthographic variants across Jeremiah, Chronicles, and Esther (Jer 24:1; 27:20; 28:4; 29:2; 1 Chr 3:16-17; Esth 2:6). French and German leave the Hebrew unvocalized in their glosses, while Spanish renders 'Jeconias,' preserving the Septuagint's Iechonias. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yechonyah, Yekhanyah, Yekhanyah- | es: Jeconías, Yejanya, Yekonyah | fr: [יכוניה], [יכניה], [יכניהו] | de: [יכוניה], [יכניה], [יכניהו] 1Chr 3:16; 1Chr 3:17; Esth 2:6; Jer 24:1; Jer 27:20

יָלַד H3205 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (500×)

To bear, give birth, beget, or be born; covering maternal birthing, paternal begetting, passive birth, and midwifery

At the heart of every biblical genealogy and birth narrative stands yalad, a verb whose semantic range traces the full arc of human generation. A mother 'bears' (Gen 4:1), a father 'begets' (Gen 4:18), and a child 'is born' (Gen 4:26) — all from the same root. The Piel stem yields an entirely distinct professional sense, 'to act as midwife,' confirmed by Arabic's shift to the unrelated root q-b-l. From the genealogical chains of Genesis to the messianic promise of Isaiah 9:6, yalad carries the biblical drama of lineage, inheritance, and divine purpose through birth.

1. Qal active: bear/give birth (female subject) (204×) Qal active with a female subject: to bear, give birth to a child. Arabic waladat (feminine active) and Korean nahda 'to give birth' consistently mark the maternal act. Dominates birth narratives from Eve bearing Cain (Gen 4:1) through the matriarchs (Gen 4:17, 25) and into prophetic oracles about women in labor. BIRTH AND BEGETTING
en: And-bore, and-bore, and-she-bore | es: Y-dio-a-luz, Y-parió, y-dio-a-luz | fr: Et-enfanta, et-elle-enfanta, et-enfanta | de: und-gebar, und-sie-gebar Gen 4:1; Gen 4:17; Gen 4:20; Gen 4:22; Gen 4:25

2. Qal active: beget/father (male subject) (198×) Qal active with a male subject: to beget, to father a child. Arabic walada (masculine conjugation), Spanish engendro, and German zeugte all mark paternal generation. This sense builds the great genealogical chains — Genesis 4:18's threefold 'begot' and the toledot formulae — encoding lineage and covenant succession through the father. BIRTH AND BEGETTING
en: begot, fathered | es: engendró | fr: engendra, fathered | de: gebar, zeugte Gen 4:18; Gen 10:8; Gen 10:13

3. Qal passive / Niphal: be born (71×) Qal passive and Niphal: to be born. Arabic wulida (passive of walada) and Korean taeonada 'to be born' confirm the passive orientation. Appears in genealogical summaries ('to them were born sons,' Gen 6:1; 10:1), the pivotal 'a child is born' oracles, and the Psalms' declarations of divine sonship (Ps 2:7). BIRTH BEING BORN
en: born, is-born, was-born | es: fue-engendrado, fueron-engendrados, le-nacieron | fr: enfanter, engendrer, furent-né | de: gebaeren, gebar, geboren-wurden Gen 4:26; Gen 6:1; Gen 10:1; Gen 10:21; Gen 10:25

4. Hifil: cause to beget/father (causative) (11×) Hifil causative: to cause to beget, to bring about offspring. Arabic awlada (Form IV causative) marks the external agency. Appears in prophetic warnings where God causes or permits descendants to be brought forth (Gen 17:20 for Ishmael; Deut 28:41) and in court prophecies about royal lineage (2 Kgs 20:18; Isa 39:7). BIRTH AND BEGETTING
en: and-beget, and-caused-it-to-bring-forth, cause-to-give-birth | es: el-que-hace-dar-a-luz, engendrará, engendrarás | fr: enfanter, et-enfanter, il—engendrer | de: du-wird-beget, du-zeugen, gebaeren Gen 17:20; Deut 4:25; Deut 28:41; 2Kgs 20:18; Isa 39:7

5. Piel: act as midwife (10×) Piel intensive: to act as midwife, to assist in childbirth. Arabic shifts entirely to the unrelated root q-b-l (qabila 'midwife, to receive'), proving this is a recognized specialized role, not just intensive birthing. Central to the Exodus narrative where Hebrew midwives defy Pharaoh (Exod 1:15-21) and to the births of Benjamin (Gen 35:17) and Perez (Gen 38:28). WET-NURSE CAREGIVER
en: the-midwife, the-midwives, to-the-midwives | es: a-las-parteras, cuando-asistáis, la-partera | fr: le-sage-femme, le-sages-femmes, quand-tu-naissance | de: als-du-Geburt, der-Hebamme, der-Hebammen Gen 35:17; Gen 38:28; Exod 1:15; Exod 1:16; Exod 1:17

6. Hofal: birth/being born (causative passive) (3×) Hofal causative-passive: birth as a nominalized event, being born. Arabic milad 'birthday' and wilada 'birth' — both nominal event forms — appear in these contexts. The three occurrences include Pharaoh's birthday feast (Gen 40:20) and Ezekiel's vivid description of Jerusalem's neglected birth (Ezek 16:4-5). BIRTH BEING BORN
en: being-born, birthday-of | es: nacer, nacimiento-de | fr: anniversaire-de, enfanter | de: der-Geburt, gebaeren Gen 40:20; Ezek 16:4; Ezek 16:5

7. (2×) A substantival usage referring to 'the child' — the born one as a person rather than the act of birthing. Appears in Solomon's famous judgment (1 Kgs 3:26-27) where the living child is the focal object. Spanish el nacido and German der Kind confirm the nominal reading of the newborn as a distinct entity. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: the-child | es: el-nacido | fr: le-enfant | de: der-Kind 1Kgs 3:26; 1Kgs 3:27

8. (1×) An unusual register sense appearing only in Num 1:18, where the verb is used in the context of registering or declaring lineage — 'they declared their pedigrees.' The reflexive genealogical act of establishing one's birth-line, distinct from the physical act of generation. BIRTH AND BEGETTING
en: and-they-registered-themselves | es: y-se-registraron | fr: et-ils-registered-eux-mêmes | de: und-sie-registered-sich-selbst Num 1:18

יֶלֶד H3206 N-mpc (90×)

Child, boy, youth — a young human from infancy through adolescence; rarely, the young of animals

A straightforward term for a young person, spanning infancy to adolescence. It appears with particular density in the patriarchal narratives — Hagar's son in the wilderness (Gen 21:14–16), Jacob's children meeting Esau (Gen 33:1–14), and the baby Moses hidden among the reeds (Exod 2:3–10). Unlike בֵּן ('son'), which emphasizes lineage, יֶלֶד foregrounds age and vulnerability. The plural יְלָדִים often means simply 'children' or 'young ones.' In a handful of poetic passages, the word extends to animal offspring — the young of wild creatures crying to God for food (Job 38:41) or lying peacefully beside the cow (Isa 11:7). Spanish 'niño,' French 'enfant,' and German 'Kind' all capture this same range.

1. child, boy, youth (86×) A young human being — child, boy, or youth from infancy through adolescence. Covers singular and plural, masculine forms with feminine referents sometimes implied. Spanish 'niño,' French 'enfant,' German 'Kind,' and Arabic 'طفل' uniformly indicate a young person rather than a relational category like 'son.' Central passages include Gen 21:8 ('the child grew and was weaned'), Exod 2:6 ('she saw the child, and behold, the baby was crying'), and Ruth 4:16 ('Naomi took the child and laid him on her lap'). CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: the-child | es: el-niño, el-niño? | fr: le-enfant | de: das-Kind, der-Kind, der-gebar Gen 21:8; Gen 21:14; Gen 21:15; Gen 21:16; Gen 33:1

2. young (of animals) (4×) Young of animals — offspring or young creatures, extending the core meaning of 'child/young one' to the animal kingdom. Distinguished by context rather than morphology. French 'son enfant' and Spanish 'sus crías' shift to animal-specific vocabulary. Job 38:41 ('when its young cry to God') and Job 39:3 ('they crouch, they bring forth their young') use the word for wild animal offspring, while Isa 11:7 ('the lion's young shall lie down with the calf') envisions eschatological harmony. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: [its-young], its-young, their-young | es: (Q:sus-crías), [K:sus-crías], sus-crías | fr: enfant, leur-enfant-elles, son-enfant-lui | de: Kind Job 38:41; Job 39:3; Isa 11:7

יַלְדָּה H3207 Art / N-fs (3×)
girl, young woman, damsel of marriageable age
A feminine noun denoting a young girl or damsel, particularly of marriageable age. The word appears three times: describing Dinah in the aftermath of her violation (Genesis 34:4), and paired with 'boy' (יֶלֶד) in Joel 3:3 where enemies trade boys for prostitutes and girls for wine, and in Zechariah 8:5 in a vision of restored Jerusalem where boys and girls play safely in the streets. The term captures the poignancy of youth—whether in tragedy (Dinah, the enslaved children of Joel) or hope (Zechariah's peaceful future). Unlike נַעֲרָה which can imply servitude, יַלְדָּה emphasizes youth and potential.

(3×) A young female, typically at or approaching marriageable age. The contexts span from the traumatic (Dinah called 'the girl' in the Shechem narrative) to the prophetic-eschatological (children playing in Jerusalem's squares as a sign of divine blessing). The cross-linguistic glosses consistently render the age and gender ('girl', 'niña', 'fille'), with Zechariah's vision of girls and boys together forming an iconic biblical image of shalom. GIRL YOUNG WOMAN
en: and-girls, and-the-girl, the-girl | es: la-niña, y-la-niña, y-niñas | fr: et-fille, le-girl | de: [והילדה], [וילדות], das-Mädchen Gen 34:4; Joel 3:3; Zech 8:5

יַלְדוּת H3208 N-fsc / 2ms (3×)
childhood, youth, young manhood; time of vigor and vitality
An abstract noun denoting the period of youth or childhood, appearing exclusively in wisdom and poetic literature. Ecclesiastes uses it twice: in 11:9 urging the young person to rejoice in their youth while remembering the coming judgment, and in 11:10 where it parallels 'the dawn of life' (שַׁחֲרוּת). Psalm 110:3 contains the difficult phrase 'the dew of your youth,' which may refer to young men or to the freshness of youthful vigor. The term captures not just chronological age but the vitality, potential, and transience of the early years of life.

(3×) The state or period of being young, with emphasis on vigor and potential rather than just age. Qohelet's usage frames youth as a time of both joy and moral responsibility—temporary yet significant. The Psalm's metaphorical 'dew of your youth' evokes freshness and renewal, possibly describing youthful warriors or the vitality of a renewed people. Glosses capturing 'youth' and 'childhood' both appear, reflecting the term's semantic range from early childhood through young adulthood. YOUTH PERIOD
en: Your-youth, in-your-youth, the-youth | es: en-tu-juventud, la-juventud, tu-juventud | fr: dans-ton-enfant-toi, enfant, le-enfant | de: [בילדותיך], [הילדות], dein-youth Ps 110:3; Eccl 11:9; Eccl 11:10

יְלוּד H3209 Art / Adj-ms (4×)
born, one who has been born; used of children in a particular place or circumstance
An adjective derived from the verb ילד ('to bear, give birth'), describing someone who has been born, particularly in a specified location or situation. It appears with the article to identify a defined group—'the boy that is born' (Exod 1:22), 'the people born in the wilderness' (Josh 5:5), children 'born to him' in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:14), or the child 'born to you' (2 Sam 12:14). Each context emphasizes the circumstances of birth as determinative for what follows.

(4×) Describes persons defined by the act or circumstance of their birth, always used with the article to particularize. In Exod 1:22, Pharaoh's decree targets 'every son that is born' among the Hebrews; in Josh 5:5, it distinguishes the wilderness-born generation from those who left Egypt. Multilingual glosses confirm the passive-participial sense: Eng 'the-born/the-ones-born,' Spa 'el-nacido/los-nacidos,' Deu 'der-geboren.' The word highlights birth as a defining marker of identity or destiny. BIRTH BEING BORN
en: the-born, the-ones-born | es: el-nacido, los-nacidos | fr: le-ceux-né, le-né | de: der-born, der-die-geboren, der-geboren Exod 1:22; Josh 5:5; 2Sam 5:14; 2Sam 12:14

H3210 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yalon — personal name of a Judahite (1 Chr 4:17)
This name appears in the genealogies of Judah with minimal context or biographical detail. The single attestation and lack of BDB excerpt suggest this is a relatively minor figure preserved in tribal memory. Chronicles' genealogies often include such names, honoring individuals even when their stories are lost to history.

(1×) A Judahite listed with the conjunction 'and' in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles 4:17. The sparse information and lack of detailed lexical discussion indicate this name's preservation serves primarily genealogical rather than narrative purposes. Translations (Spanish 'y-Yalon') maintain transliteration with the conjunction, treating this as a proper name within a family registry. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yalon | es: y-Yalon | fr: [וילון] | de: [וילון] 1Chr 4:17

יָלִיד H3211 N-mpc (13×)
One born in the household; native-born, offspring of a particular lineage
An adjective used exclusively in construct form, meaning 'born of' or 'native to' a particular household or lineage. In the Patriarchal narratives it describes slaves born within Abraham's own household, distinguished from those purchased with money (Gen 14:14; 17:12–13, 23, 27; Lev 22:11). Elsewhere it identifies descendants of particular groups — the sons of the Rephaim giants in the Philistine wars (2 Sam 21:16, 18; 1 Chr 20:4) and the children of Anak in the conquest narrative (Num 13:22, 28; Josh 15:14). Spanish 'nacidos/descendientes' and French 'descendants' capture the birth-lineage core.

one born (in the household), native-born (13×) One born within a household or descended from a specific lineage (יָלִיד). In Priestly legislation, יְלִיד בַּיִת ('house-born') designates a slave born under the master's roof, as distinct from one acquired by purchase (Gen 17:12–13, 27; Lev 22:11). In narrative contexts it marks biological descent from notable groups: the 'born of the Raphah/Rephaim' giants (2 Sam 21:16, 18; 1 Chr 20:4) and the 'born of the Anak' in Canaan (Num 13:22, 28; Josh 15:14). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-homeborn-servant, among-descendants-of, and-born-of | es: de-los-descendientes-de, de-nacidos-de, descendientes-de | fr: [יליד], [מילדי], descendants-de | de: Geborenen, [יליד], [מילדי] Gen 14:14; Gen 17:12; Gen 17:13; Gen 17:23; Gen 17:27

הָלַךְ H3212 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-fs (1044×)
To go, walk, travel, depart; figuratively to walk in a way of life; idiomatically 'come!' as an invitation; in Hifil, to lead or drive.
Halak is one of the most frequent verbs in the Hebrew Bible and among the most semantically flexible. At its core it simply means 'to go' — the unmarked verb of locomotion that covers everything from Abraham setting out for Canaan (Gen 12:4) to Elijah walking forty days to Horeb. But its figurative reach is enormous: to 'walk in the ways of the LORD' is the Bible's signature metaphor for faithful obedience, and to 'walk in the statutes of the nations' is its antonym.

The imperative lekh or lekhu often functions less as 'go!' and more as 'come!' or 'come now!' — an invitation to joint action (Gen 37:20, 'come, let us kill him'). Arabic captures this range across dhahaba ('go/depart'), salaka ('walk a path'), and ta'ala ('come!'), while Korean splits it between 가다, 걷다, and 오라. The Hifil causative adds agency: God 'led' Israel through the wilderness, and Moses 'drove back' the sea.

1. go, depart, travel (884×) Qal basic: to go, depart, travel — the primary sense at 884 occurrences, covering all directed movement from one place to another. Abraham 'went' as the LORD had spoken (Gen 12:4); Jacob 'went on his way' (Gen 32:1); messengers 'went' and returned. Arabic dhahaba ('to go, depart') and Korean 가다 (gada, 'to go') are the standard equivalents. Spanish fue/fueron and German ging/gingen likewise use their unmarked motion verbs. This is the semantic baseline from which all other senses extend. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-he-went, and-went | es: Y-fue, y-fue | fr: et-alla, et-il-alla | de: und-er-ging, und-es-ging, und-ging Gen 12:4; Gen 18:33; Gen 22:3; Gen 22:13; Gen 24:10

2. walk in, follow a way (79×) Qal figurative: to walk in a way, follow a path of conduct — 79 occurrences where halak combines with a prepositional phrase (be-darke, be-chuqqot, 'in the ways/statutes of') to describe moral conduct or lifestyle. 'If you walk in my statutes' (Lev 26:3); 'they walked in the statutes of the nations' (2 Kgs 17:8). Arabic salaka ('to travel a path') and yamshi ('to walk, conduct oneself') both select path-following vocabulary distinct from simple 'go.' Korean 걷다 (geotda, 'to walk') and Swahili kutembea ('to walk about') similarly shift register. This is the conceptual metaphor LIFE IS A JOURNEY lexicalized into Hebrew grammar. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-he-walked, and-walked, walk | es: Y-anduvo, andaréis, caminaréis | fr: et-aller, et-il-marcha, et-marcha | de: du-soll-wandeln, und-er-ging, und-er-wandelte Exod 15:22; Lev 18:3; Lev 20:23; Lev 26:3; Lev 26:21

3. come, come now (63×) Imperative as invitation: 'come!, come now!' — 63 occurrences where the imperative lekh/lekhu functions pragmatically not as 'go away!' but as 'come!' or 'come, let us...' inviting joint action. 'Come, let us sell him' (Gen 37:27); 'Come, let us make our father drink wine' (Gen 19:32); 'Go, I am sending you' (Gen 37:13, where 'go' is a commissioning rather than dismissal). Arabic ta'ala and halumma ('come!') and Korean 오라 (ora, 'come!') all use dedicated invitation vocabulary, confirming that this imperative has undergone pragmatic bleaching from directional 'go' to hortatory 'come.' Spanish Venid/ven makes the shift explicit. GOING AND LEADING

en: Come, come | es: Venid, ven, vengan | fr: aller, allez!, venir | de: geh, geht, ging Gen 19:32; Gen 31:44; Gen 37:13; Gen 37:20; Gen 37:27

4. lead, bring, cause to go (13×) Hifil causative: to lead, bring, drive, cause to go — 13 occurrences where an agent causes another's movement. God 'caused Israel to walk' forty years in the wilderness (Deut 29:5); Moses 'led them' upright (Lev 26:13); a strong east wind 'drove back' the sea (Exod 14:21). Arabic qada/saqa ('to lead/drive') and Korean 인도하다 (indohada, 'to guide') both select causative-leadership vocabulary. Spanish guió/llevó ('guided/carried') and German führte ('led') likewise mark the causative shift. This sense is morphologically grounded in the Hifil stem. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-I-caused-to-walk, and-I-led, and-drove-back | es: Al-que-guió, Llevará, Y-os-hice-andar | fr: aller, et-chassa-dos, et-je-caused-à-marcher | de: gehen, ging, leads Exod 2:9; Exod 14:21; Lev 26:13; Deut 28:36; Deut 29:5

5. go away, depart permanently (5×) Qal emphatic: to go away, depart permanently, pass away — 5 occurrences where halak carries the connotation of irreversible departure or vanishing. 'Let us go in the midst of us' (Exod 34:9, imploring God not to permanently withdraw); 'all knees shall go to water' (Ezek 7:17; 21:7, i.e., dissolve away). The finality is marked cross-linguistically by Spanish se irán ('they will go away,' reflexive emphasizing complete departure) and German lass-gehen ('let go'). The small cluster in Ezekiel's judgment oracles gives this sense a distinctly ominous, eschatological coloring. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: let-go-, shall-go | es: irán, se-irán, vaya | fr: aller, que-aller- | de: gehen, lass-gehen- Exod 34:9; Ezek 7:17; Ezek 21:7; Ezek 30:17; Ezek 30:18

יָלַל H3213 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cs (31×)

wail, howl — to cry out in loud lamentation, expressing intense grief, distress, or prophetic mourning

Yalal in its Hiphil form is an onomatopoeic verb imitating the piercing, drawn-out cry of communal mourning, appearing 31 times almost exclusively in prophetic oracles of judgment. Isaiah wields it as a verbal hammer: 'Wail, for the day of the LORD is near!' (Isa 13:6) sets the tone for a cascade of howling commands directed at Babylon, Moab, Philistia, and Tyre (Isa 14:31; 15:2-3; 16:7; 23:1, 14). Jeremiah and Ezekiel continue the pattern against foreign nations and unfaithful shepherds (Jer 25:34; 47:2; 48:20, 31; Ezek 21:17; 30:2). Joel summons drunkards and vine-dressers to wail over failed harvests (Joel 1:5, 11, 13). Zechariah commands the cypresses and oaks to howl because the mighty cedars have fallen (Zech 11:2). The verb typically parallels other grief verbs — za'aq ('cry out'), tsa'aq ('shriek'), and bakah ('weep') — forming a vocabulary of intense communal lament.

wail, howl loudly (31×) To utter a loud, prolonged wail of grief or distress, used almost exclusively in prophetic judgment oracles. Isaiah commands nations to howl at the approach of the Day of the LORD (Isa 13:6; 14:31; 15:2-3; 23:1). Jeremiah directs it at Moab (Jer 48:20, 31) and doomed shepherds (Jer 25:34). Joel summons wailing over agricultural devastation (Joel 1:5, 11). Typically parallels za'aq and tsa'aq, forming an intense vocabulary of communal lamentation. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: (wail), Wail, wail | es: Aulla, Aullad, aulla | fr: hurler | de: heulen, heult Isa 13:6; Isa 14:31; Isa 15:2; Isa 15:3; Isa 16:7

יְלֶל H3214 N-ms (1×)

howling — noun describing the sound of wilderness desolation (Deut 32:10)

This rare noun appears in Moses' song describing God finding Israel 'in a howling waste of a desert.' The word captures the eerie, threatening sounds of the wilderness—wild animals, wind through desolate places. It evokes the hostile, chaotic environment from which God rescued and protected his people, heightening the contrast with divine care.

(1×) A noun describing the wild, desolate sounds characteristic of uninhabited desert in Deuteronomy 32:10. The phrase 'waste of howling of desert' uses two genitive constructions to emphasize the wilderness's threatening character. Translations (Spanish 'aullido de,' English 'howling') capture the auditory dimension that makes wilderness dangerous and alien, the sonic opposite of civilization's ordered speech. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: howling | es: aullido-de | fr: howling | de: howling Deut 32:10

יְלָלָה H3215 Conj-w / N-fs (5×)

howling, wailing; a loud cry of distress or lamentation

A feminine noun denoting loud, anguished wailing — the kind of collective outcry that accompanies catastrophe. Isaiah 15:8 describes Moab's devastation with howling reaching from one city to another. Jeremiah uses it for the wail of leaders (metaphorically 'shepherds') facing divine judgment (Jer 25:36). Zephaniah pairs it with the cry from the Fish Gate on the day of the LORD (Zeph 1:10). In Zechariah 11:3, it is the howling of shepherds whose glory is ruined. Spanish 'aullido' and French 'hurlement' both evoke the raw, animal-like quality of this lamentation.

(5×) Howling, wailing — a loud vocalization of distress and lamentation, often collective. Typically paired with parallel terms like זְעָקָה ('outcry') and צְעָקָה ('shriek') in prophetic judgment oracles. In Isa 15:8, the howling of Moab encircles the land; in Jer 25:36 and Zech 11:3, 'shepherds' (metaphor for rulers) howl over devastation. The Spanish 'aullido' and French 'hurlement' capture the visceral, wail-like quality that distinguishes this term from ordinary weeping. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: and-wailing, and-wailing-of, its-wailing | es: aullido-de, su-gemido, y-aullido | fr: [ויללת], [יללתה], et-hurlement | de: [ויללה], [ויללת], [יללת] Isa 15:8; Jer 25:36; Zeph 1:10; Zech 11:3

לוּעַ H3216 V-Qal-Imperf.Jus-3ms (1×)

to speak rashly, declare without thought

A rare verb meaning to speak hastily or wildly, appearing only in Proverbs 20:25 in the warning: 'It is a snare for a man to rashly declare, "Holy!"' The root may relate to Arabic ʿ 'to make mistakes in talking,' suggesting careless or ill-considered speech. The verse cautions against making vows or declarations about consecrating something without proper deliberation—what seems pious in the moment can become a trap. The emphasis is on the danger of impulsive religious commitments made without counting the cost.

(1×) Proverbs warns against hasty vows with the construction 'it is a snare to a man that he rashly cry, Holy!' (מוֹקֵשׁ אָדָם יְלַע קֹדֶשׁ). English captures this with 'rashly declares,' while Spanish 'devorar' (to devour) may reflect textual uncertainty. The verb describes impulsive speech, particularly dangerous when making sacred commitments. The context suggests someone who consecrates property or makes religious vows without deliberation, only to regret it later—a trap sprung by one's own hasty words. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING

en: rashly-declares | es: devorar | fr: ילע | de: [ילע] Prov 20:25

יַלֶּפֶת H3217 N-fs (2×)

scab, scurf (skin disease: eruptive condition that disqualified priests from service)

This medical term appears only in Levitical purity laws, designating some kind of eruptive skin disease. Both occurrences appear alongside another skin condition (garab), suggesting these were related or commonly paired ailments. The disease was serious enough to disqualify priests from offering sacrifices and to render animals unfit as offerings. The precise medical identification is uncertain—it may have been some kind of scaly eruption, scab, or scurf. Ancient translators apparently understood it as a skin affliction but weren't more specific.

(2×) A noun denoting a skin disease, possibly scab or scurf, that rendered priests unfit for service (Lev 21:20) and animals unsuitable for sacrifice (Lev 22:22). Both occurrences pair it with another skin condition (garab), suggesting related conditions. Multilingual renderings show uncertainty: English 'a skin disease,' Spanish 'empeines' (skin eruptions/eczema), French 'une maladie de peau' (a skin disease), German 'ein Haut-Krankheit' (a skin disease)—all indicating eruptive skin conditions without precise medical identification. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY

en: a-skin-disease | es: con-empeines, empeines | fr: une-maladie-de-peau | de: ein-Haut-Krankheit Lev 21:20; Lev 22:22

יֶלֶק H3218 Conj-w / N-ms (9×)

A species or stage of locust, used collectively for devastating swarms that devour crops and symbolize overwhelming multitudes.

The noun yeleq (יֶלֶק) denotes a particular kind of locust — possibly a developmental stage such as the 'creeping locust' or 'hopping locust' — always used collectively. Joel's famous locust sequence lists it alongside gazam, arbeh, and hasil as successive waves of destruction (Joel 1:4; 2:25), while Psalm 105:34 recalls the Egyptian plague. Nahum deploys it in vivid similes: merchants multiply like yeleq, then scatter and vanish when the sun rises (Nah 3:15–16). Spanish renders it consistently as langosta, while German opts for Grashüpfer ('grasshopper'), reflecting the perennial difficulty of pinning down exact entomological identification for ancient Hebrew insect terms.

locust (a swarming species) (9×) A collective noun for a swarming locust species or larval stage, distinguished from arbeh (the generic 'locust') yet belonging to the same destructive complex. In Joel 1:4 it appears in a four-stage sequence of devastation, suggesting a specific developmental phase. Psalm 105:34 uses it of the Egyptian plague alongside arbeh. Nahum employs it metaphorically for both the overwhelming abundance of an enemy (3:15) and their sudden disappearance (3:16). The multilingual evidence — Spanish langosta, Hindi टिड्डी, German Grashüpfer — shows translators consistently map it to generic locust/grasshopper categories rather than a precise species. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: and-young-locusts, like-locusts, like-the-locust | es: como-langosta, como-langosta!, como-langostas | fr: [הילק], [ילק], [כילק] | de: Grashupfer, [כילק], der-Grashupfer Ps 105:34; Jer 51:14; Jer 51:27; Joel 1:4

יַלְקוּט H3219 Conj-w (1×)

wallet, shepherd's pouch — receptacle for carrying items (1 Sam 17:40)

This word designates a bag or pouch, appearing when David selects stones for his sling before facing Goliath. The term suggests a common shepherd's accessory for carrying food or tools. Some scholars view it as a gloss or textual issue, but most understand it as the practical pouch every shepherd carried, emphasizing David's humble equipment against Goliath's military splendor.

(1×) A shepherd's bag or pouch mentioned in 1 Samuel 17:40 as David prepares to face Goliath. The preposition 'in' with conjunction shows this as the container for the stones David selected. Translations (Spanish 'y-en-el-morral,' German 'und-in-der-pouch') maintain the concrete sense of a carried receptacle, highlighting the contrast between David's simple equipment and Goliath's armor. BAG PURSE

en: and-in-the-pouch | es: y-en-el-morral | fr: et-dans-le-pouch | de: und-in-der-pouch 1Sam 17:40

יָם H3220 Conj-w / N-ms / 3fs (396×)

Sea or large body of water; the direction 'west' (from Israel's Mediterranean orientation); or the first element of geographic sea-names.

Yam is the Hebrew word for sea, carrying a remarkable triple function: literal body of water, compass direction, and geographic name component. As a body of water, it names the Mediterranean, the Red Sea (yam suf), the Dead Sea, and the great bronze 'Sea' in Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:23). Because the Mediterranean lies to Israel's west, yam became the standard word for 'westward' – a directional sense captured by Spanish 'al-oeste' and French 'vers-l'ouest.' In construct chains like yam-suf or yam kinneret, it functions as the first element of proper geographic names, a pattern visible across all target languages.

1. sea, body of water (269×) A large body of water, whether the Mediterranean (the 'Great Sea,' Num 34:6), the Red Sea, the Dead Sea, or seas in general including the molten 'Sea' in the temple (1 Kgs 7:23). This is the dominant sense, covering singular and plural forms with all prepositional and pronominal attachments. Glosses converge on 'the-sea,' 'el-mar,' 'la-mer,' 'das-Meer.' Includes poetic and cosmological uses where the sea represents chaos or the boundary of creation (Gen 1:26; Ps 104:25). SEA LARGE WATER

en: the-sea | es: el-mar | fr: la-mer | de: das-Meer, des-Meeres, des-Meeres-ist Gen 1:26; Gen 1:28; Gen 9:2; Gen 22:17; Gen 32:12

2. west, westward (78×) The direction 'west' or 'westward,' derived from Israel's geographic orientation where the Mediterranean lay to the west. Appears prominently in tabernacle construction (Exod 26:22, 'the rear of the tabernacle yammah') and tribal boundary descriptions. French 'vers-l'ouest,' Spanish 'al-oeste,' and German 'westwärts' confirm the directional reading. The directional he suffix (yammah) frequently reinforces this sense, though context alone sometimes suffices. WEST DIRECTION

en: west, westward | es: al-occidente, al-oeste, hacia-el-mar | fr: mer, vers-l'ouest, westward | de: Meer, westwaerts, westward Exod 26:22; Exod 26:27; Exod 27:12; Exod 36:27; Exod 36:32

3. Sea of (geographic name) (49×) The noun yam in construct state forming the first element of a geographic proper name: yam-suf (Sea of Reeds, Exod 13:18), yam kinneret (Sea of Chinnereth, Num 34:11), yam ha-aravah (Sea of the Arabah, Deut 3:17). Multilingual glosses like 'Sea-of,' 'mar-de,' 'Mer-de,' and 'Meer-von' consistently mark this as a name-forming pattern. Distinguished from sense 1 by the tight construct bond with the following place name. GEOG-

RAPHY AND SPACE
en: Sea-of, sea-of, sea-of- | es: al-mar-de, el-mar-de, mar | fr: Mer-de, mer, mer-de | de: Meer, Meer-von, Sea-von Gen 14:3; Exod 10:19; Exod 13:18; Exod 15:4; Exod 15:22

יַם H3221 N-msd (2×)

the sea (Aramaic noun used in Daniel's vision of beasts from the great sea)

This is the Aramaic word for 'sea,' appearing only in Daniel's apocalyptic vision of four beasts rising from the great sea. The word is cognate to the Hebrew 'yam' and appears in Syriac and Targumic Aramaic with the same meaning. In Daniel 7, the sea represents chaos and the realm from which hostile kingdoms emerge in God's prophetic timetable. Both occurrences appear with the Aramaic emphatic state (definite article), referring to 'the sea' as a specific cosmic symbol.

(2×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'sea,' appearing in Daniel's vision of the four beasts (Dan 7:2, 3). The vision describes the four winds churning up 'the great sea' from which four beasts emerge, representing successive empires. Both occurrences use the emphatic/definite form 'yamma' (the sea). Multilingual renderings are consistent: English 'the sea,' Spanish 'el mar' or 'hacia el mar' (toward the sea), confirming understanding of this Aramaic term for the chaotic sea from which Daniel's beasts arise. SEA LARGE WATER
en: the-sea | es: el-mar, hacia-el-mar | fr: [יַמָּא], [לְיַמָּא] | de: [יַמָּא], [לְיַמָּא] Dan 7:2; Dan 7:3

יְמִם H3222 Art / N-mp (1×)

hot springs — thermal water sources found by Anah in the wilderness (Gen 36:24)

This puzzling word appears only in Genesis 36:24, describing what Anah found while tending his father's donkeys. The Vulgate's 'hot springs' remains the most common interpretation, suggesting thermal springs in the wilderness. The word's etymology is unclear, making the identification uncertain, but the context suggests something noteworthy enough to become part of Anah's identifying description.

(1×) A phenomenon discovered by Anah in the wilderness, most commonly interpreted as hot springs based on the Vulgate. The definite article 'the' with plural form suggests specific, known features. Translations (Spanish 'las-aguas-termales,' German 'die-heißen-Quellen') follow the thermal springs interpretation, though lexicographers acknowledge uncertainty. The discovery was significant enough to characterize Anah in Edomite genealogies. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: the-hot-springs | es: las-aguas-termales | fr: le-hot-sources | de: die-heißen-Quellen Gen 36:24

יְמוּאֵל H3223 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jemuel (proper name; son of Simeon, called Nemuel in other passages)

This name belongs to a son of Simeon and appears in the Genesis and Exodus genealogies. Interestingly, in parallel passages in Numbers and Chronicles, the same individual is called Nemuel, suggesting either textual variants or a deliberate name change. The name's meaning is uncertain, though it contains the element 'El' (God). The variation between Jemuel and Nemuel reflects the kinds of scribal variations that occurred in preserving genealogical records over centuries of transmission.

(2×) A proper name appearing in Simeon's genealogy (Gen 46:10, Exod 6:15), identified in BDB as the same person called Nemuel in Numbers 26:12 and 1 Chronicles 4:24. The name may mean 'day of God' or similar, though etymology is uncertain. Standard transliterations: English 'Jemuel,' Spanish 'Yemuel,' French and German 'Jemuel,' all identifying this Simeonite clan founder whose name varies in parallel biblical genealogies. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jemuel | es: Yemuel | fr: Jemuel | de: Jemuel Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15

יְמִימָה H3224 N-proper-fs (1×)

Yemimah — personal name of Job's daughter (Job 42:14)

This name belongs to Job's first daughter, born after his restoration. The name may relate to 'dove,' suggesting gentleness or beauty. Job's naming of his daughters (all three names are preserved) after his restoration contrasts with the absence of his sons' names, possibly highlighting their beauty and the father's delight in his restored family.

(1×) The name of Job's eldest daughter born in his restoration, appearing in Job 42:14. The possible connection to 'dove' fits the pattern of Job's daughters receiving names of beauty and delight. Translations universally transliterate (Spanish 'Yemima'), treating this as a proper name. The preservation of all three daughters' names emphasizes their significance in Job's renewed blessing. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yemimah | es: Yemima | fr: יְמִימָה | de: [יְמִימָה] Job 42:14

יָמִין H3225 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3ms (140×)

The right hand, right side, or south; denoting spatial direction, the hand as instrument of power, and the southern cardinal direction.

Yamin is one of those Hebrew nouns whose semantic range reveals an entire worldview. At its most concrete, it is simply the right hand — the hand of strength, skill, and blessing (Gen 48:13-14). From there it extends to the right side as a spatial direction ('turn neither to the right nor to the left'), and then, because ancient Israelites oriented themselves facing east, the right hand pointed south, giving yamin its geographic sense. The multilingual evidence is especially revealing: Spanish distinguishes diestra (the mighty right hand, often of God) from derecha (the directional right side), while Swahili mkono wa kulia and German rechte Hand preserve the body-part sense. The theological freight of God's right hand — the seat of power, protection, and honor — makes this word central to messianic expectation (Ps 110:1) and praise alike.

1. right side (direction / position) (73×) The right side as a spatial direction or positional location — 73 occurrences. This covers turning right, standing at someone's right, the right side of an object or place, and the right as a position of honor or proximity. Abraham tells Lot 'if you go to the right, I will go to the left' (Gen 13:9); the priest's right ear, thumb, and toe receive the blood of consecration (Exod 29:20). Spanish derecha and French droite consistently select directional vocabulary here, while German nach-rechts and Korean 오른쪽 confirm the spatial-orientational framing distinct from the body-part sense. RIGHT SIDE
en: and-on-left, at-right, right | es: a-derecha, a-la-derecha, derecha | fr: droit, droite, le-droit | de: Rechten, bei-Rechte, nach-rechts Gen 13:9; Gen 24:49; Gen 48:13; Exod 29:22; Lev 7:32

2. right hand (divine/royal power and authority) (50×) Split from sense 102424. Criteria: Metaphorical use of the right hand as symbol and instrument of power, especially God's right hand that acts, strikes, upholds, creates, rescues; theological and royal contexts where the hand represents authority and effective action rather than literal anatomy
en: Your-right-hand, his-right-hand, the-right-hand-of | es: La-diestra-de, diestra-de, diestra-de-el | fr: droite, sa-droite, ta-droite | de: dein-Rechte, der-Rechte-, rechte-Hand Exod 15:6; Exod 15:12; Deut 33:2; Judg 5:26

3. right hand (body part, physical) (12×) Split from sense 102424. Criteria: The physical right hand as a body part used for grasping, holding objects, physical actions; 'hand of' constructions referring to the anatomical member
en: and-his-right-hand, his-right-hand, in-my-right-hand | es: En-su-derecha, con-su-derecha, derecha-su | fr: avec-son-droite, dans-droit-son, dans-sa-droite-elle | de: deine-Rechte, in-seiner-Rechten, mit-sein-rechts Gen 48:13; Gen 48:14; Gen 48:17; Gen 48:18; Judg 16:29

4. south (cardinal direction) (5×) The south as a cardinal geographic direction — 5 occurrences arising from the Hebrew spatial orientation where one faces east, so the right hand points south. In 1 Samuel 23:19 and 23:24 David hides 'south of Jeshimon'; in Psalm 89:12 God created 'the north and the south.' The multilingual evidence is striking: entirely distinct lexemes appear in nearly every language — Spanish sur, German Suden, Swahili kusini — confirming that translators recognize this as a genuinely different semantic domain. The body-part origin is etymologically transparent but synchronically opaque to non-Hebrew speakers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-south, from-south-of, south | es: al-sur, al-sur-de, derecha-de | fr: de-south-de, droite, et-droite | de: rechte-Hand, south-von, und-der-Rechte 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 23:24; 2Sam 24:5; Job 23:9; Ps 89:12

יָמִין H3226 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (6×)

Jamin — a proper name meaning 'right hand,' borne by a Simeonite clan founder, a Judahite, and a Levite in Ezra's time.

A Hebrew proper name (יָמִין) derived from the common noun for 'right hand' or 'south,' conveying connotations of strength, favor, and good fortune. Three distinct individuals bear this name. The earliest is a son of Simeon listed among those who descended to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15), whose descendants formed the Jaminite clan (Num 26:12). A Judahite Jamin appears in Jerahmeel's genealogy as a son of Ram (1 Chr 2:27). The third is a Levite or lay leader who helped Ezra explain the Torah to the assembled people (Neh 8:7). French 'et-Jamin' and German 'und-Jamin' reflect the conjunctive forms frequent in genealogical lists.

Jamin (proper name) (6×) The personal name Yāmîn (יָמִין, 'right hand'), borne by at least three individuals: a son of Simeon who came to Egypt (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15; Num 26:12; 1 Chr 4:24), progenitor of the Jaminite clan; a descendant of Jerahmeel through Ram (1 Chr 2:27); and a Levite or community leader who helped expound the Torah during Ezra's public reading (Neh 8:7). The name's semantic link to 'right hand' carries associations of strength and blessing in the Hebrew cultural world. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jamin, and-Jamin, and-Yamin | es: Jamín, de-Yamín, y-Yamin | fr: [וי-מין], [י-מין], et-Jamin | de: [וי-מין], [י-מין], und-Jamin Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15; Num 26:12; 1Chr 2:27; 1Chr 4:24

יְמִינִי H3227a Art / Adj-ms (2×)

the right (adjective: Ketiv form meaning 'right-hand' or 'on the right side')

This is a Ketiv (written) textual variant of the adjective for 'right' or 'right-hand,' appearing where the Qere (reading tradition) suggests a different vocalization. Both occurrences involve positioning or directionality: the pillar on the right side of the temple (2 Chr 3:17) and Ezekiel lying on his right side (Ezek 4:6). The variant reflects scribal traditions about how to vocalize the adjective. The difference is minor—both forms communicate 'right' or 'right-hand.'

(2×) An adjectival form (Ketiv reading) meaning 'the right (one)' or 'the right (side),' appearing in passages where the Qere suggests reading 'hayemani' instead. The occurrences describe the right pillar of Solomon's temple (2 Chr 3:17) and Ezekiel's right side (Ezek 4:6). Multilingual evidence shows understanding of 'right' direction: English notes the Ketiv variant, Spanish similarly brackets the Ketiv form, French and German preserve the Hebrew, all acknowledging textual variants in representing this common directional adjective. RIGHT SIDE

en: [the-right-one], [the-right] | es: [ketiv:el-derecho], [la-de-la-derecha] | fr: [הי-מיני], droit | de: [הי-מיני], [הי-מיני] 2Chr 3:17; Ezek 4:6

יְמִינִי H3227b N-proper-ms (3×)

Benjaminite, member of the tribe of Benjamin (gentilicic from Benjamin)

A gentilicic adjective meaning 'Benjaminite,' denoting someone from the tribe of Benjamin. This is an abbreviated form of the fuller phrase בֶּן־יְמִינִי (son of the right hand/Benjamin). The term appears in narratives about Saul's lineage and tribe: describing him as 'a Benjaminite man' (1 Samuel 9:1), referring to the 'land of the Benjaminites' (1 Samuel 9:4), and in David's rebuke to his men questioning whether a Benjaminite would reward them (1 Samuel 22:7). As Benjamin was Israel's smallest tribe (except Levi), yet produced the first king, Benjaminite identity carried both prestige and poignancy after the tribal civil war of Judges 19-21.

(3×) The ethnic-tribal designation for members of Benjamin's tribe. These three occurrences all relate to Saul and his context, emphasizing his tribal affiliation at a time when it mattered politically. The abbreviated form (יְמִינִי rather than בֶּן־יְמִינִי) suggests this was a common, well-understood designation. Multilingual glosses uniformly render it as 'Benjaminite,' recognizing the standard gentilicic form. BENJAMIN TRIBE NAME

en: Benjamin, Benjaminite | es: Benjamín, benjaminita | fr: Benjamin, Benjaminite | de: Benjamin, Benjaminite 1Sam 9:1; 1Sam 9:4; 1Sam 22:7

יְמִינִי H3228 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jaminite (gentilic: 'belonging to the clan of Jamin'; also used for Benjamite)

This gentilic (ethnic/clan designation) has two uses: as a patronymic for the clan of Jamin, son of Simeon, and apparently also as a designation for Benjamites. The word's dual usage is unusual—it may reflect different Hebrew traditions or homonyms. In Numbers it clearly designates Jamin's clan, while in 2 Samuel it apparently describes a Benjamite, creating some scholarly puzzlement. Gentilics were important for establishing tribal and clan identity in ancient Israel.

(2×) A gentilic (clan designation) with two apparently distinct uses: 'the Jaminites' (clan of Jamin, son of Simeon, Num 26:12) and possibly 'Benjamite' (2 Sam 20:1, though this is debated). The term appears with the article as a collective. Transliterations show the ambiguity: English 'the Jaminite' or 'Yemini,' Spanish 'benjamita' (Benjamite) or 'los yaminitas,' with French and German similarly varying, reflecting scholarly uncertainty whether this represents one term with two meanings or two homonyms. BENJAMIN TRIBE NAME

en: Yemini, the-Jaminite | es: benjamita, los-yaminitas | fr: Yemini, le-Jaminite | de: Yemini, der-Jaminite Num 26:12; 2Sam 20:1

יִמְלָה H3229 N-proper-ms (4×)

Imlah, father of the prophet Micaiah who opposed Ahab's false prophets

A personal name identifying the father of the prophet Micaiah, who famously opposed four hundred court prophets by predicting Ahab's death at Ramoth-gilead (1 Kgs 22:8–9; 2 Chr 18:7–8). The name appears only in the formula 'Micaiah son of Imlah,' which functions as a patronymic to distinguish this Micaiah from others. The alternate spelling יִמְלָא in Chronicles preserves the same name with a slight orthographic variation.

(4×) The proper name of the prophet Micaiah's father, used exclusively in the patronymic 'Micaiah son of Imlah' across both Kings and Chronicles. English and Spanish transliterate as 'Imlah'/'Imla' and 'Yimlah'/'Yimla,' while French and German retain the Hebrew in brackets for the Chronicles variant (יִמְלָא). All four occurrences frame the dramatic scene where Micaiah alone speaks Yahweh's true word against Ahab (1 Kgs 22:8–9; 2 Chr 18:7–8). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Imlah, Yimlah | es: Imla, Yimla | fr: Yimlah, [ימלא] | de: Yimlah, [ימלא] 1Kgs 22:8; 1Kgs 22:9; 2Chr 18:7; 2Chr 18:8

יַמְלֵךְ H3230 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yamlekh — personal name of a Simeonite (1 Chr 4:34)

This Simeonite name appears in Chronicles' tribal genealogies. The Palmyrene parallel confirms this was a known Semitic name in the broader region. Chronicles preserves such names even without biographical details, maintaining tribal memory and identity. The genealogies served to connect the postexilic community to their pre-conquest heritage.

(1×) A Simeonite listed with conjunction 'and' in 1 Chronicles 4:34's genealogical catalog. The Palmyrene attestation shows this name's currency in the ancient Near East. Translations (Spanish 'y-Yamlec,' German intriguingly 'und-er-herrschte' meaning 'and-he-reigned') preserve the name, with the German perhaps reflecting the root's meaning rather than pure transliteration. The name's preservation honors Simeonite tribal heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yamlekh | es: y-Yamlec | fr: [וימלך] | de: und-er-herrschte 1Chr 4:34

יָמַן H3231 V-Hifil-Imp-fs (4×)
to go to the right, turn right, use the right hand
A denominative verb derived from יָמִין ('right hand, south'), used in the Hiphil to mean 'go to the right' or 'use the right hand.' It appears in spatial and moral contexts: Abram offers Lot the choice to go right or left (Gen 13:9), Isaiah warns against veering from the true path (Isa 30:21, via a related form), and Ezekiel's sword is commanded to 'go right!' (Ezek 21:16). In 1 Chr 12:2, it describes ambidextrous Benjamite warriors who could sling and shoot with either hand.

(4×) To move or turn to the right, whether literally in spatial navigation or figuratively in moral direction. The glosses across languages confirm the directional core: Eng 'go-right/to-turn-right,' Spa 'a-la-derecha/iré-a-la-derecha,' Fra 'aller-à-droite.' In Gen 13:9, it is paired with its antonym הִשְׂמְאִיל ('go left') as Abram divides the land with Lot. In 1 Chr 12:2, the participle מַיְמִינִים describes Benjamite warriors skilled at using the right hand with sling and bow, paired again with מַשְׂמְאִלִים ('using the left'). RIGHT SIDE
en: and-I-will-go-right, go-right, to-turn-right | es: a-la-derecha, diestros-con-la-derecha, iré-a-la-derecha | fr: [מימינים], aller-à-droite, et-Je—aller-droit | de: [הימנ], [מימינים], gehe-ich-nach-rechts Gen 13:9; 2Sam 14:19; 1Chr 12:2; Ezek 21:16

יִמְנָה H3232 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (5×)
Imnah (Jimnah); a personal name, possibly meaning 'good fortune' or 'right side'
A proper name possibly connected to the Arabic yumn ('good fortune') or yamnah ('right side'), suggesting an auspicious naming. Imnah appears primarily as a son of Asher in the patriarchal genealogies (Gen 46:17; 1 Chr 7:30), and his descendants form the clan of the Imnites (Num 26:44). A separate Imnah serves as a Levite under Hezekiah, overseeing temple offerings (2 Chr 31:14). French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew unvocalized in glosses, while English and Spanish consistently transliterate as 'Imnah/Yimnah.'

(5×) A proper name designating two distinct individuals. The primary Imnah is a son of Asher whose clan (the Imnites) is enumerated in the tribal census of Num 26:44. The genealogical listing appears also in Gen 46:17 and 1 Chr 7:30. A second Imnah is a Levite who assisted in distributing freewill offerings during Hezekiah's reforms (2 Chr 31:14). The possible Arabic cognate yumn ('prosperity') may reflect a birth-blessing name. Translations uniformly render it as 'Imnah' or 'Jimnah.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Imnah, Yimnah, the-Imnite | es: Yimna, Yimnah, Yimná | fr: Imnah, [ימנה], le-Imnite | de: Jimna, [ימנה], der-Imnite Gen 46:17; Num 26:44; 1Chr 7:30; 2Chr 31:14

יְמָנִי H3233 Art / Adj-ms (33×)
right (adj.) — pertaining to the right hand or right side, used of body parts, architectural features, and ritual Yemani is the adjective meaning 'right' or 'right-hand,' derived from yamin ('right hand'). Its 33 occurrences fall into two main spheres: ritual and architectural. In the Priestly legislation, the right ear, right thumb, and right big toe of the priest or the cleansed leper receive consecrating blood and oil (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24; 14:14-28) — a deliberate triad that sanctifies hearing, action, and movement. The right forefinger of the priest sprinkles purifying oil before YHWH (Lev 14:16, 27). In temple architecture, 'the right pillar' names Jachin (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17), and 'the right side of the house' orients worshipers and guards within sacred space (1 Kgs 6:8; 2 Kgs 11:11; Ezek 47:1-2). Spanish 'derecho/a,' French 'droit/e,' and German 'recht' all confirm a single directional-positional meaning.

the right (33×) Pertaining to the right hand or right side, used both of body parts in ritual contexts and of architectural orientation. In priestly consecration and purification rites, the right ear, right thumb, and right big toe receive blood and oil (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24; 14:14-28). In temple descriptions, it identifies the right pillar Jachin (1 Kgs 7:21) and the right side of the sanctuary (1 Kgs 6:8; Ezek 47:1-2). Always contrasted with semali ('left'). RIGHT SIDE
en: the-right | es: el-derecho, la-derecha | fr: le-droit | de: der-rechts Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23

יִמְנָע H3234 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yimna — personal name of an Asherite (1 Chr 7:35)
This Asherite name appears in the genealogies of Asher's descendants, identified as a son of Helem. The Chronicles genealogies for northern tribes are particularly important since those tribes were largely lost to Assyrian conquest. Preserving such names maintained the twelve-tribe ideal and honored the memory of tribes beyond Judah and Benjamin.

(1×) Son of Helem in the Asherite genealogies of 1 Chronicles 7:35. The conjunction 'and' shows this as part of a list of brothers. Greek versions varied in transcription (Imana, Iamna), reflecting vowel uncertainty. Modern translations (Spanish 'y-Yimna') maintain transliteration, treating this as a genealogical marker connecting Asher's lineage across generations despite the tribe's later disappearance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yimna | es: y-Yimna | fr: [וימנע] | de: [וימנע] 1Chr 7:35

יִמַּר H3235 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2mp (1×)
boast, glory — verb in reflexive form indicating self-exaltation (Isa 61:6)
This verb in its Hithpael (reflexive) form appears in Isaiah's prophecy about restored Israel's glory, where foreigners will serve and Israel will 'boast in' or 'glory in' their wealth. The root's meaning involves exchange or possibly speech/declaration. Textual uncertainty exists, with some suggesting emendation, but the context supports a sense of joyful pride or glorying in God's restoration gifts.

(1×) A reflexive verb form in Isaiah 61:6 describing Israel's response to restoration blessings. The context of priestly status and foreign tribute suggests boasting or glorying in newfound wealth and honor. Spanish 'os-gloriaréis' captures the reflexive sense of taking pride or glory. Though the verb's etymology remains debated, the passage's triumphant tone supports a meaning of joyful self-celebration in God's restorative work. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11787 WITH 3 SENSES
en: you-will-boast | es: os-gloriaréis | fr: [תתימרו] | de: [תתימרו] Isa 61:6

יִמְרָה H3236 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yimrah, a chief of the tribe of Asher mentioned in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles Yimrah appears only once in Scripture as a tribal leader within Asher's genealogical record. The name is preserved in the Greek tradition as Iamarē or Iemra, showing slight variation across manuscript families. As with many genealogical entries in Chronicles, this brief mention anchors a family line within Israel's tribal structure.

(1×) A proper name designating an Asherite chief in 1 Chronicles 7:36. The single occurrence and genealogical context indicate a historical figure whose primary significance lies in maintaining tribal memory and lineage documentation within the Chronicler's comprehensive genealogical framework. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yimrah | es: y-Yimra | fr: [וימרה] | de: [וימרה] 1Chr 7:36

יְמַשׁ H3237

touch (dubious lemma; Judges 16:26 Ketiv, likely textual error for מָשַׁשׁ)

This verb appears only in Judges 16:26 where Samson asks to 'feel' the pillars he will pull down. However, most scholars regard it as a textual error rather than a genuine word. The Ketiv reads וְיִמְשֵׁנִי while the Qere offers וַהֲמִישֵׁנִי. BDB suggests the intended root is מָשַׁשׁ ('to feel, grope'), a much more common verb appropriate to Samson's blindness. This represents the kind of marginal lexical entry that exists only to document and explain a problematic manuscript reading.

יָנָה H3238 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms / 3mse (19×)

To oppress, wrong, or mistreat; also used as a participle meaning 'oppressor.'

Yanah describes the act of wronging or oppressing another person, particularly in contexts of social and economic vulnerability. The Torah uses it emphatically in laws protecting the stranger: 'You shall not oppress a stranger' (Exod 22:21; Lev 19:33), and in commercial fairness: 'You shall not wrong one another' in business dealings (Lev 25:14, 17). Spanish 'oprimirás' and French 'opprimer' both capture this sense of unjust pressure on the powerless. In the prophets, the participial form becomes a noun — 'the oppressor' — naming the agent of injustice: the oppressing city in Zephaniah 3:1, the sword of the oppressor in Jeremiah 46:16 and 50:16, and God's promise to make Israel's oppressors consume their own flesh (Isa 49:26).

1. oppress, wrong, mistreat (14×) The verbal action of oppressing, wronging, or mistreating someone — primarily in Hifil finite forms and Qal cohortative. This sense dominates the legal material: the repeated prohibition against oppressing the stranger (Exod 22:21; Lev 19:33; Deut 23:16) and the laws against wronging a neighbor in commerce (Lev 25:14, 17). Spanish 'lo oprimirás' and 'lo oprimiréis' consistently render the active, relational dimension of injustice — one person exerting unjust power over another. The Psalm 74:8 usage ('let us destroy them') intensifies this to collective violence. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: does-he-oppress, he-oppresses, let-us-destroy-them | es: lo-oprimirás, lo-oprimiréis, los-oprimiremos | fr: Jonas, mistreat, opprimer | de: [הונה], [הונן], [יונה] Exod 22:21; Lev 19:33; Lev 25:14; Lev 25:17; Deut 23:16

2. oppressor (substantival participle) (5×) The participial form functioning as a substantive noun: the oppressor, the one who oppresses. Used in prophetic literature to name agents of systemic injustice. Zephaniah 3:1 calls Jerusalem 'the oppressing city' (ha-yonah), while Jeremiah uses the phrase 'the sword of the oppressor' (Jer 46:16; 50:16). In Isaiah 49:26, God turns the tables: 'I will make your oppressors (monayikh) eat their own flesh.' Spanish 'la opresora' and English 'the oppressing' both show the shift from verb to fixed label — oppression as defining identity. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: oppressing, the-oppressing, the-oppressor | es: a-tus-opresores, la-espada, la-opresora | fr: le-Jonas, opprimer | de: [היונה], [מוניך], der-Jona Isa 49:26; Jer 25:38; Jer 46:16; Jer 50:16; Zeph 3:1

יָנוֹחַ H3239a N-proper-fs (1×)

Yanoach, a town in the extreme northern region of Israel conquered by Tiglath-Pileser III

Yanoach was a northern Israelite settlement captured during the Assyrian campaigns of 2 Kings 15:29. Its exact location remains disputed among scholars, with proposals ranging from sites near Tyre to locations west of the upper Jordan. The town's inclusion in the list of conquered territories reflects the scope of Assyrian territorial expansion during this period.

(1×) A place name referring to a northern Israelite town in 2 Kings 15:29, captured by Tiglath-Pileser III. The geographical uncertainty in modern scholarship (proposals include Hunin west of the upper Jordan) underscores how many biblical place names have lost their precise identification over millennia, though the conquest itself is historically attested. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yanoach | es: Janoa | fr: Yanoach | de: Yanoach 2Kgs 15:29

בְּיָנוֹחָה H3239b Prep-m / N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Janoah (proper name: town on Ephraim's border, possibly meaning 'resting place')

This place name designates a town on the border of Ephraim mentioned in Joshua's territorial descriptions. The name appears twice in quick succession, describing the border's course from one point to Janoah. Modern scholars have identified it with Yanun, southeast of Shechem, based on the geographic descriptions and archaeological evidence. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to rest' or 'to settle,' suggesting it was a resting place or settled location along the border.

(2×) A proper place name appearing in Ephraim's border description (Josh 16:6, 7), identified with modern Yanun southeast of Shechem. Both occurrences use prepositional forms: 'Janoah' and 'from Janoah,' describing the territorial boundary. Standard transliterations: English 'Janoah' or 'Yanoach,' Spanish 'Janoa,' French and German 'Yanoach,' all identifying this Ephraimite border town whose name may mean 'resting place,' fitting its geographic role as a boundary marker. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yanoach, from-Yanoach | es: Janoa, desde-Janoa | fr: Yanoach, de-Yanoach | de: Yanoach, von-Yanoach Josh 16:6; Josh 16:7

נוּחַ H3240 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (75×)

To place, set down, leave, or give rest; in Hifil, to deposit in a location, abandon, permit, or settle; in Hofal, to be placed or left.

Derived from the root nuach ('to rest'), this verb in its Hifil causative form develops a surprisingly wide semantic arc — from the concrete physical act of placing an object somewhere, through the relational act of leaving or abandoning, all the way to granting rest or giving permission. God 'places' Adam in the Garden (Gen 2:15), Joseph's wife 'leaves' his garment beside her (Gen 39:16), and the LORD promises to 'settle' Israel in their own land (Isa 14:1). The multilingual evidence is revealing: Arabic splits the range across waḍaᶜa ('place'), taraka ('leave'), and arāḥa ('give rest'), while Spanish distinguishes poner, dejar, and hacer descansar. The verb's unity lies in a shared spatial logic: whether setting down, leaving behind, or allowing to remain, something comes to rest somewhere.

1. place, set, put down (34×) The core Hifil causative sense of placing, putting, or setting down an object or person in a specific location. God places Adam in Eden (Gen 2:15), the manna is deposited before the Testimony (Exod 16:33), and Moses sets the staff before the LORD (Num 17:7). Spanish depositó/puso, French déposer, and Arabic waḍaᶜa all converge on physical placement, confirming this as the prototypical meaning. At 34 occurrences, this is the most frequent sense. PLACING AND LAYING

en: and-I-will-set, and-he-laid, and-he-laid-it | es: Y-depositó, Y-lo-pusieron, Y-puso | fr: [וינח], [ויניחם], déposer | de: niederlegen, sie-setzte, und-Ort Gen 2:15; Gen 39:16; Exod 16:23; Exod 16:24; Exod 16:33

2. leave, abandon, forsake (23×) To leave behind, abandon, or forsake — an extension of 'place' toward separation. The departing person places something or someone down and walks away. Lot is urged to leave Sodom (Gen 19:16), grain is left for the poor (Lev 19:10 context), and God warns of forsaking his people (Num 32:15). Arabic taraka ('abandon') and Spanish dejar ('leave') consistently distinguish this from mere physical placement, and German lassen ('let remain') captures the permission-to-depart nuance. Twenty-three occurrences. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: And-you-shall-leave, I-will-leave-it, and-he-left | es: Dejadlo, Y-dejaréis, Y-dejó | fr: [להניחם], et-déposer, et-gauche | de: [והנחתיו], [והנחתם], er-liess-ruhen Gen 19:16; Gen 42:33; Lev 7:15; Lev 16:23; Num 32:15

3. give rest, settle (6×) To give rest, settle, or grant repose — the Hifil preserving the root meaning of nuach most transparently. God will settle Israel compassionately in their land (Isa 14:1), and Ecclesiastes counsels not to let one's hand rest from labor (Eccl 11:6). Arabic askana/arāḥa ('settle/give rest') and Spanish hacer descansar

('cause to rest') both select dedicated rest vocabulary distinct from the placement or abandonment senses. Six occurrences concentrated in wisdom and prophetic literature. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: and-I-will-settle, and-he-will-settle-them, leave | es: dejes, dejes-reposar, hará-descansar | fr: et-déposer, et-laisser, laisser | de: [והניחם], laesst-ruhen, und-niederlegen Eccl 7:18; Eccl 10:4; Eccl 11:6; Isa 14:1

4. permit, let alone (5×) To permit, allow, or let alone — a relational extension where the 'resting' metaphor becomes social: one party leaves another undisturbed. God asks Moses to 'let me alone' (Exod 32:10), Samson asks to lean against the pillars (Judg 16:26), and the Psalmist notes that God 'did not permit' anyone to oppress his anointed (Ps 105:14). Korean 허락하다 ('permit') and Arabic daʿa ('let be') confirm this as a distinct permission sense rather than physical placement. Five occurrences. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: He-allowed, he-permitted, let-alone | es: Déjame, deja, dejó | fr: [הניח], laisser, le-reposer | de: er-allowed, laesst-ruhen, lass-Ruhe Exod 32:10; Judg 16:26; 1Chr 16:21; Ps 105:14; Eccl 5:12

5. be placed, be left (passive) (4×) Hofal passive: to be placed, set, or left in a location — the passive counterpart of senses 1-2, where the subject undergoes the placing rather than performing it. Ezekiel's temple measurements include 'the space that was left' (Ezek 41:9-11), and the ephah 'is set' on its base in Zechariah's vision (Zech 5:11). Spanish quedaba ('what remained') and French déposer (passive) both reflect the passive voice. Four occurrences, all in architectural or visionary contexts. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: and-it-will-be-set, left, the-space-left | es: hacia-lo-que-quedaba, lo-que-quedaba, quedaba | fr: déposer, et-déposer | de: niederlegen, und-laesst-ruhen Ezek 41:9; Ezek 41:11; Zech 5:11

6. cast down, throw down (3×) To cast down, throw down, or deposit forcefully — an intensified variant of placement where the agent acts with force or violence. Isaiah describes a mighty storm that 'casts down to the earth' (Isa 28:2), God gathers and deposits metals in the furnace (Ezek 22:20), and Amos declares that justice is 'cast down' to the ground (Amos 5:7). Arabic ṭaraḥa/alqā ('throw, cast') captures the violent overtone absent from the neutral 'place' of sense 1. Three occurrences, all prophetic. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: He-casts-down, and-I-will-leave, they-cast-down | es: derriban, derribará, y-os-dejaré | fr: déposer, et-déposer, laisser | de: er-liess-ruhen, laesst-ruhen, und-niederlegen Isa 28:2; Ezek 22:20; Amos 5:7

יָנוּם H3241 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Janum (proper name: town in Judah's hill country, with Ketiv/Qere textual variants)

This place name appears in Joshua's list of towns in Judah's hill country, but the text itself is uncertain. The Ketiv (written text) and Qere (reading tradition) preserve different forms, suggesting ancient uncertainty about the name's spelling or pronunciation. The town's location is unknown, and it appears only in this one list. The textual variants have left translators uncertain whether to read 'Janum' or 'Janim,' with modern translations acknowledging both possibilities.

(2×) A proper place name in Judah's hill country (Josh 15:53, appearing twice for Ketiv and Qere variants). The written text (Ketiv) has one form while the reading tradition (Qere) suggests another, creating uncertainty about the town's name. Most likely 'Janum' though 'Janim' is also possible. Transliterations acknowledge the variants: English notes '[ketiv]' and 'Janum,' Spanish gives both in parentheses and brackets, with French and German similarly preserving both forms, reflecting ancient uncertainty about this otherwise unknown Judean town. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv], and-Yanum | es: (y-Janum), [y-Janim] | fr: [cétiv], et-Yanum | de: [ketiv], und-Yanum Josh 15:53

יְנִיקָה H3242 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

Young shoots or tender sprouts, used metaphorically in Ezekiel for Israel as a cedar

This rare feminine plural form appears only in Ezekiel's allegory of the great cedar (17:4), where Israel is depicted as a tree whose tender shoots are plucked. The cross-linguistic evidence shows Romance languages favoring 'young shoot' or 'sprout' terminology, while the imagery evokes botanical vulnerability and potential growth. The metaphor captures both Israel's fragility and her promise.

(1×) Denotes the tender young shoots or sprouts of a plant, specifically appearing in Ezekiel 17:4 within the extended metaphor of Israel as a cedar. The Spanish 'renuevos' and French 'jeune-pousse' both emphasize the botanical newness and tender quality, fitting the prophetic context of judgment upon Israel's leadership and future restoration. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS en: shoots-its | es: sus-renuevos | fr: jeune-pousse | de: [יניקותיו] Ezek 17:4

יָנַק H3243 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fsc (32×)

To suck, nurse; as participle: suckling infant or wet-nurse; causative: to give suck, suckle a child

A verb whose semantic range spans the full arc of nursing — from the infant who sucks to the mother or wet-nurse who gives suck. The Qal participle yoneq becomes a standard term for 'suckling child,' appearing in devastating judgment oracles where even nursing infants are not spared (1 Sam 15:3; Joel 2:16), as well as in the tender image of praise from the mouths of infants (Ps 8:2). The Hifil form shifts agency to the woman who nurses, generating the noun for 'wet-nurse' — like Deborah, Rebekah's nurse (Gen 35:8), or the mother cleverly hired by Pharaoh's daughter to nurse her own child Moses (Exod 2:7-9). Spanish precisely mirrors this with 'lactante' (suckling) versus 'nodriza' (wet-nurse).

1. suckling child, nursing infant (11×) Qal participle used as a substantive for a suckling child or nursing infant — one still dependent on the breast. This appears in both tender and terrible contexts: the praise ordained from the mouths of babes (Ps 8:2) and the merciless destruction of 'man and woman, child and infant' (1 Sam 15:3; 22:19). Joel summons even nursing infants to the solemn assembly (Joel 2:16). Spanish consistently renders this as 'lactante' (one who nurses), while French uses 'allaitant enfant.' NURSING SUCKLING INFANT en: and-infant, and-nursing-babies, and-nursing-ones-at | es: al-lactante, el-lactante, lactante | fr: allaitant, allaitant-enfant, allaiter | de: [ויונק], [וינק], [יונק] Num 11:12; Deut 32:25; 1Sam 15:3; 1Sam 22:19; Ps 8:2

2. wet-nurse, nursing mother (7×) Hifil participle functioning as a noun for a wet-nurse or nursing mother — the woman who suckles a child, often professionally. Rebekah's nurse Deborah is memorialized at her death (Gen 35:8), and Moses' sister cleverly procures a 'nursing woman' who turns out to be his own mother (Exod 2:7). The term also appears in the census of Jacob's flocks, where nursing camels are listed (Gen 32:15). German 'die Amme' (wet-nurse) and Spanish 'nodriza' precisely capture this professional caregiver role. WET-NURSE CAREGIVER en: her-nurse, his-nurse, nurse-of | es: amamantando, nodriza, nodriza-de | fr: [מינקתו], allaitant, allaiter | de: [מיניקתיך], [מינקתו], die-Amme Gen 24:59; Gen 32:15; Gen 35:8; Exod 2:7; 2Kgs 11:2

3. to suck, nurse at breast (7×) Qal finite verb describing the physical act of an infant sucking milk from the breast. Job wishes he had nursed at the breast that received him (Job 3:12), and the condemned person sucks the poison of asps (Job 20:16). Isaiah's eschatological vision promises that Zion's children will suck the milk of nations and the breast of kings (Isa 60:16). Deuteronomy 33:19 speaks of sucking the abundance of the seas. The range spans from literal nursing to bold metaphor. NURSING SUCKLING INFANT en: I-should-nurse, and-you-shall-nurse, and-you-will-suck | es: Y-mamarás, mamará;, mamarán | fr: allaiter, et-allaiter, ils-suck | de: [אינק], [וינקת], [וינקתם] Deut 33:19; Job 3:12; Job 20:16; Isa 60:16

4. to suckle, give suck (7×) Hifil finite verb and infinitive expressing the causative action of giving suck or nursing a child. Sarah marvels that she has given children suck (Gen 21:7), Moses' mother is hired to nurse him (Exod 2:9), and Hannah delays her pilgrimage until she has weaned the child she is nursing (1 Sam 1:23). Deuteronomy 32:13 uses this metaphorically of God nursing Israel with honey from the rock. Spanish 'amamantar' and German 'stillen' both capture this causative maternal action. STRIKING

AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-nursed-him, and-nurse-him, and-she-nurse | es: amamantan, amamantó, para-amamantar | fr: allaiter, elle-nursed, et-elle-nurse | de: [היניקו], stillen-würde, und-er-saeugte-ihn Gen 21:7; Exod 2:7; Exod 2:9; Deut 32:13; 1Sam 1:23

יַנְשׁוּף H3244 Art / N-ms (3×)

owl (great owl, eagle-owl), unclean bird inhabiting desert ruins

A bird name, likely referring to a species of owl—possibly the great owl or Egyptian eagle-owl according to most scholars. Listed among unclean birds in Leviticus 11:17 and Deuteronomy 14:16, it also appears in Isaiah 34:11 as an inhabitant of desolate places, part of the prophet's vision of Edom's destruction. The etymology may connect to harsh, strident sounds (suggesting owl calls) or to twilight (נָשַׁף), as owls are crepuscular hunters. While the Septuagint and Vulgate suggest 'ibis,' most modern scholars favor an owl species based on the desert habitat and other contextual clues.

(3×) An unclean bird of prey, most likely a large owl species, associated with desolation and ruins. Isaiah's pairing of various raptors and carrion birds creates an eerie tableau of abandoned places reclaimed by wilderness. The identification as 'great owl' (German 'groß-owl', French 'grand-owl') reflects the scholarly consensus, though ancient translators sometimes guessed at difficult ornithological terms. The bird's presence signals divine judgment and the reversal of human habitation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3463 WITH 3 SENSES en: and-owl, the-great-owl | es: el-ibís, la-lechuza, y-el-búho | fr: [וינשוף], le-grand-owl | de: [וינשוף], der-gross-owl Lev 11:17; Deut 14:16; Isa 34:11

יָסַד H3245 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (43×)

To found, lay a foundation, establish; Nifal: be founded; also: to take counsel together, conspire

A verb of foundations both literal and cosmic, yasad anchors some of the Bible's most architecturally vivid and theologically profound passages. Its concrete core appears when Solomon 'laid the foundation' of the temple (1 Kgs 5:17; 6:37) and when the returned exiles 'founded' the second temple amid weeping and shouting (Ezra 3:10-12). But the same root reaches cosmic scale when the psalmist declares 'You founded the earth' (Ps 104:5) and God challenges Job 'Where were you when I laid the foundation of the earth?' (Job 38:4). Isaiah's divine speeches deploy it for both cosmogony and eschatological promise: 'my hand laid the foundation of the earth' (Isa 48:13) and 'I will set your stones in antimony' (Isa 54:11). A remarkable semantic extension appears in the Nifal, where 'founding together' shifts to 'taking counsel together' — kings conspire (Ps 2:2) and enemies plot (Ps 31:13) — as if establishing a shared foundation of purpose.

1. found, establish (Qal active) (17×) The active Qal sense of founding, establishing, or laying a foundation — the most frequent usage across 17 occurrences covering both earthly construction and divine cosmogony. God 'founded the earth upon the seas' (Ps 24:2); 'by wisdom the LORD founded the earth' (Prov 3:19); Job is challenged 'where were you when I laid the foundation of the earth?' (Job 38:4). Spanish fundar and German grunden uniformly map to this foundational sense. The Chronicler applies it to temple construction (2 Chr 31:7), while Isaiah extends it to eschatological rebuilding (Isa 54:11). The theological weight is immense: the same verb that describes laying stones describes God's primordial creative act. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: He-founded, You-founded, You-have-founded-them | es: Fundó, a-fundar, al-ser-fundada | fr: dans-ביסדי-moi, et-fonder, fonder | de: [ביסדו], [ביסדי], [יסד] 2Chr 31:7; Ezra 3:12; Job 38:4; Ps 24:2; Ps 78:69

2. establish, lay foundation (Piel intensive) (10×) The Piel intensive sense of deliberately establishing or founding — 10 occurrences emphasizing thoroughness and intentionality in the construction act. Joshua's curse invokes it: 'cursed is the man who rises up and builds this city Jericho; at the cost of his firstborn shall he lay its foundation' (Josh 6:26), fulfilled when Hiel 'laid its foundation' at the cost of Abiram (1 Kgs 16:34). The temple narratives use the Piel for the formal, ceremonial act of founding: Solomon's workers 'laid the foundation' (1 Kgs 5:17), and Ezra 3:10 describes the priests standing in their vestments when the 'foundation of the temple of the LORD was laid.' Spanish fundaron and French fonder confirm the deliberate, intensive force. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-founded, established, founded | es: Y-fundaron, estableció, fundaron | fr: et-fonder, fonder, il-devra-se-coucha-son-foundation | de: [ויסדו], [יסד], [יסדו] Josh 6:26; 1Kgs 5:17; 1Kgs 16:34; 1Chr 9:22; Ezra 3:10

3. be founded, be established (Pual/Hofal passive) (10×) The passive stems — Pual and Hofal — expressing 'was founded, was established, had its foundation laid' across 10 occurrences. These appear in construction chronology notes: 'in the fourth year the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid' (1 Kgs 6:37); 'when the foundation of this house was laid before your eyes' (Hag 2:3; cf. Ezra 3:6, 11). The Pual participle musadoth ('founded, established') describes the great stones of the temple platform (1 Kgs 7:10) and appears in 2 Chronicles 3:3 for Solomon's building specifications. Spanish fue fundada and German gegründet mark the passive construction consistently. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: [ketiv], and-founded, are-the-foundations | es: [kethiv], asentadas, fue-fundada | fr: et-founded, fonder, fondées | de: [הוסד], [יסד], [מיסדות] 1Kgs 6:37; 1Kgs 7:10; 2Chr 3:3; Ezra 3:6; Ezra 3:11

4. (2×) Two occurrences where the active participle or infinitive construct carries the standard founding sense but in theologically charged cosmological contexts — Isaiah 51:13 ('the LORD your Maker, who stretched out the heavens and laid the foundation of the earth') and Zechariah 12:1 ('the LORD, who stretches out the heavens and founds the earth and forms the spirit of man within him'). Spanish fundar and English 'founding' confirm the core meaning. These function identically to sense 1 but were clustered separately due to their participial syntax within divine creation formulae. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-founding | es: y-el-que-funda, y-que-funda | fr: et-fonder | de: [ויסד], und-gruenden Isa 51:13; Zech 12:1

5. conspire, take counsel together (Nifal reflexive) (2×) The Nifal reflexive-reciprocal sense of taking counsel together or conspiring — a striking semantic extension in 2 occurrences. Psalm 2:2 declares 'the kings of the earth take their stand, and the rulers take counsel together (nosdu yachad) against the LORD and his anointed.' Psalm 31:13 describes enemies who 'conspire together (nosdu) against me, scheming to take my life.' Spanish consultarse ('to consult one another') reveals the reciprocal force. The metaphor is architectural: conspirators 'lay a foundation together,' establishing a shared base of hostile purpose — a vivid extension from physical to political founding. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: take-counsel-, when-they-conspired | es: al-consultarse-ellos, se-consultan- | fr: dans-fonder, fonder | de: gründete, gründete- Ps 2:2; Ps 31:13

6. be founded, be established (Nifal passive) (2×) The Nifal passive sense — 'to be founded, be established' — in 2 occurrences distinct from the Pual/Hofal passive of sense 3. Exodus 9:18 places the founding of Egypt in historical perspective: 'since the day it was founded (hiwwasdah) until now'; Isaiah 44:28 has Cyrus declaring of the temple 'let its foundation be laid (tiwwased).' Spanish fue fundada and English 'was founded' / 'will be founded' mark the Nifal passive voice. The distinction from sense 3 is primarily morphological (Nifal vs. Pual/Hofal) rather than semantic, though the Nifal may carry a slightly more tolerative or stative nuance — 'came to be founded' rather than 'was caused to be founded.' FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: it-was-founded, will-be-founded | es: que-fue-fundada, será-fundado | fr: cela-était-founded, fonder | de: es-war-founded, gruenden Exod 9:18; Isa 44:28

יְסַד H3246 N-msc (1×)

Foundation or beginning, though textual criticism suggests reading as a verb form in Ezra 7:9

This hapax legomenon in Ezra 7:9 presents textual difficulties. BDB suggests that rather than the noun 'foundation of the ascent,' we should read the verb 'he founded' with Ezra as subject, following the Greek tradition. Such textual questions are common in post-exilic literature where Hebrew was undergoing transition. The underlying concept relates to establishing or beginning something.

(1×) Appears to mean 'foundation' or 'beginning' in Ezra 7:9, though scholarly consensus favors emending to the verbal form 'he founded' based on Greek manuscript evidence. The uncertainty reflects the textual fluidity of Ezra-Nehemiah, where Persian-period Hebrew sometimes shows unusual forms that sparked interpretive traditions across language families. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: founded | es: fundó | fr: [יסד] | de: [יסד] Ezra 7:9

יְסוֹד H3247 N-ms (20×)
Foundation, base — the structural bottom of a building, altar, or wall; also used figuratively Denotes the lowest structural layer on which a building, wall, or altar rests. In ritual law, priests poured sacrificial blood at the base (יְסוֹד) of the altar (Exod 29:12; Lev 4:7, 18, 25, 30, 34) — a detail repeated so often it almost becomes a liturgical refrain. In prophetic judgment, God promises to lay bare the foundations of Samaria (Mic 1:6) and Jerusalem (Lam 4:11), stripping cities down to their very base. The word also extends metaphorically to the 'foundation' of human existence — mortals whose foundation is in the dust (Job 4:19) — and to the righteous as an 'everlasting foundation' that cannot be moved (Prov 10:25).

foundation or base (20×) The foundation, base, or bottom course of a structure — literally the lowest part of a building, wall, or altar. Heavily attested in sacrificial legislation where blood is poured at the altar's base (Exod 29:12; Lev 4:7, 18, 25, 30). German renders 'Fuss' (foot) and 'Grundlage' (foundation); Spanish 'base/cimiento.' Metaphorically extended to the 'foundation' of human frailty (Job 4:19; 22:16) and the stability of the righteous (Prov 10:25), and prophetically to the exposed foundations of judged cities (Mic 1:6; Lam 4:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-foundation-of, and-her-foundations, base-of | es: base-de, cimiento-de-ella, el-cimiento | fr: [היסוד], [ויסוד], [יסדו] | de: Fuss-von, Grundlage, [היסוד] Exod 29:12; Lev 4:7; Lev 4:18; Lev 4:25; Lev 4:30

יְסוֹדָה H3248 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
His foundation, referring to Zion in Psalm 87, with the city as the object of God's love
This possessive form appears in Psalm 87:1, where God's foundation is established on the holy mountains. The parallelism with 'the gates of Zion' makes clear that the city itself is meant. The image evokes stability, divine choice, and permanence—Jerusalem as the place where God has set his immovable foundation. The multilingual glosses preserve the possessive and architectural metaphor.

(1×) Means 'his foundation' in Psalm 87:1, referring to Zion as the city founded by God on the holy mountains. The architectural metaphor (German 'Grundfeste,' Spanish 'fundamento') emphasizes divine establishment and permanence, while the possessive suffix underscores God's personal choice and ownership of the holy city as his dwelling place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-foundation | es: Fundamento-de-el | fr: fondation | de: sein-Grundfeste Ps 87:1

H3249 N-mpc / 1cs (1×)
Uncertain form in Jeremiah 17:13, possibly related to departing or animal husbandry contexts
This obscure term in Jeremiah 17:13 has uncertain meaning. The ketiv-qere variation and sparse glossing suggest textual difficulty. Spanish renders 'those who depart from me,' while other traditions leave it untranslated. The domain assignment to animal husbandry may reflect etymological speculation, but the context of Jeremiah 17 concerns those who turn away from the Lord as the fountain of living water.

(1×) An uncertain Hebrew form in Jeremiah 17:13, where the Spanish tradition interprets it as 'those who depart from me' within the context of abandoning the Lord as the source of living water. The textual ambiguity and sparse cross-linguistic evidence indicate this is a crux interpretum where ancient translators struggled to establish clear meaning. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES
en: [K] | es: [los-que-se-apartan-de-mí] | fr: [[יסורי]] | de: [[יסורי]] Jer 17:13

יְסוֹר H3250 N-ms (1×)
One who reproves or finds fault, a faultfinder who contends (Job 40:2)
This participial noun appears in God's challenge to Job: 'Shall a faultfinder contend with the Almighty?' The term captures the audacity of human criticism directed at divine wisdom and action. The Spanish 'disputará' (will he contend?) and English 'faultfinder' both preserve the confrontational tone, fitting the climactic divine speeches where God questions Job's qualification to critique the Creator's governance.

(1×) Designates a person who reproves or criticizes, specifically in Job 40:2 where God challenges whether a mere faultfinder is qualified to contend with Shaddai. The term's rhetorical force lies in exposing the presumption of human judgment when directed against divine wisdom, a central theme in the divine speeches of Job 38-41. REPROOF AND REBUKE
en: a-faultfinder | es: disputará | fr: יסור | de: [יסור] Job 40:2

סוּךְ H3251 V-QalPass-Imperf-3ms (1×)
Passive form: it shall be poured or anointed, regarding sacred anointing oil (Exodus 30:32)
This passive imperfect form appears in the regulations for holy anointing oil in Exodus 30:32. The text prohibits pouring this sacred oil on ordinary flesh, reserving it exclusively for tabernacle furnishings and consecrated persons. The verb's passive voice emphasizes the oil as subject—it shall not be poured in unauthorized contexts. Scholarly discussion includes whether this is passive Qal or Hophal.

(1×) A passive verbal form meaning 'it shall be poured' in Exodus 30:32, within the prohibition against using sacred anointing oil for common purposes. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'será derramado,' French 'cela être versa') confirms the passive sense, emphasizing the oil's restricted sacred status in tabernacle worship. POURED OUT EMPTIED
en: it-shall-be-poured | es: será-derramado | fr: cela—être-versa | de: es-soll-sein-goss Exod 30:32

יִסְכָּה H3252 N-proper-ms (1×)
Iscah, daughter of Haran and sister of Milcah in Genesis 11
Iscah appears in the genealogical record of Abraham's family as Haran's daughter and Milcah's sister. Her single mention in Genesis 11:29 situates her within the transitional generation between Terah's departure from Ur and Abraham's call. The Greek rendering Iescha preserves the name with slight phonetic adaptation. Her etymology remains uncertain.

(1×) A feminine proper name in Genesis 11:29 designating the daughter of Haran and sister of Milcah in the patriarchal genealogy. The single biblical occurrence and uncertain etymology place Iscah among those family members mentioned to establish kinship networks in the pre-Abrahamic narrative. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Iscah | es: Isca | fr: Iscah | de: Jiskas Gen 11:29

יְסַמַכְיָהוּ H3253 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ismachiah, a Levite overseer during Hezekiah's reforms, possibly meaning 'Yahweh sustains' Ismachiah served as a Levitical administrator under Hezekiah's reforms in 2 Chronicles 31:13. The name likely means 'Yahweh sustains,' though Gray suggests reading it as the simpler form found in related names. The Greek tradition renders it Samachia. His role in managing temple contributions reflects the organizational structure of Hezekiah's religious renewal.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 2 Chronicles 31:13 identifying a Levite involved in Hezekiah's temple administration. The theophoric element suggests divine sustenance or support, fitting the context of faithful stewardship during a period of covenant renewal and centralized worship reform in Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ismachiah | es: y-Yismajyahu | fr: [ויסמכיהו] | de: [ויסמכיהו] 2Chr 31:13

יָסַף H3254 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (210×)

To add, increase; to continue, do again; in Hifil: be added, join oneself to

One of Hebrew's most versatile verbs, yasaf serves double duty as both a quantitative term ('add more,' 'increase') and an auxiliary of repetition ('do again,' 'continue'). When God promises never again to flood the earth (Gen 8:21), yasaf carries the force of 'not repeat.' When Leviticus prescribes adding a fifth to a restitution payment (Lev 5:16), the same root means arithmetic increase. Cognate Aramaic awsif and Arabic zada confirm the additive core, while the auxiliary usage — unparalleled in many target languages — often requires paraphrase. The Nifal passive rounds out the paradigm with senses of being gathered or joined.

1. add, increase (Hifil) (62×) The Hifil causative expresses adding quantity, increasing a measure, or augmenting — as in Leviticus's penalty formulas where one 'shall add a fifth' (Lev 5:16; 27:31). Spanish añadir/aumentar and French ajouter confirm the straightforward additive meaning. Arabic zada (increase) and aḍafa (add) both cover this core quantitative sense. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: adds, he-adds, he-shall-add | es: aumenta, añada, añade | fr: ajouter, il-devra-ajouter, peut-Il-ajoute | de: er-soll-hinzufuegen, fuegte-hinzu, moege-He-add Gen 30:24; Lev 5:16; Lev 6:5; Lev 19:25; Lev 27:31

2. continue, do again (Hifil) (62×) As an auxiliary verb in the Hifil, yasaf means 'to continue' or 'to do again,' governing an infinitive or implied action. In Exodus 8:29 Pharaoh must 'not continue to deceive,' and Genesis 8:21 records God's resolve 'not again to curse the ground.' Korean da-si (again) and Swahili kuendelea (continue) show how languages must choose between repetition and continuation framings for this single Hebrew construction. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: He-will-continue, I-will-add, I-will-continue | es: añadirá, añadiré, continuará | fr: ajouter, fera-continue, ils-devra-continue | de: fuegte-hinzu, hinzufuegen, ich-wird-continue Gen 8:21; Gen 44:23; Exod 5:7; Exod 8:29

3. and added, and continued (Hifil consecutive) (46×) The waw-consecutive Hifil imperfect (wayyosef) narrates sequential addition or continuation in past tense: 'and she again bore' (Gen 4:2), 'and he waited yet another seven days' (Gen 8:10). This narrative form dominates in Genesis and the Former Prophets. Spanish Y-añadió and Y-continuó split what Hebrew unifies, revealing the dual semantic load this single conjugation carries. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: and-added, and-again, and-continued | es: Y-añadió, Y-continuó, Y-volvieron | fr: et-ajouta, et-ajouter, et-continued | de: und-added, und-continued, und-er-added Gen 4:2; Gen 8:10; Gen 18:29; Gen 25:1; Gen 37:5

4. shall add, shall continue (Qal conjunctive perfect) (13×) The Qal weqatal (conjunctive perfect) projects addition or continuation into the future or conditional realm: 'and I will add' or 'and they shall continue.' Leviticus 26:18 warns 'I will continue to punish you sevenfold,' while Leviticus 27:13-15 prescribes 'and he shall add a fifth.' The tense-aspect shift from narrative past to predictive future distinguishes this from sense 3. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: And-shall-add, And-shall-increase, and-I-will-add | es: Y-aumentarán, Y-añadirá, Y-continuarán | fr: et-ajouter, et-cela-fera-ajoute, et-devra-continue | de: und-du-soll-hinzufuegen, und-er-soll-hinzufuegen, und-er-wird-hinzufuegen Lev 22:14; Lev 26:18; Lev 26:21; Lev 27:13; Lev 27:15

5. continued, did again (Qal) (12×) Simple Qal stem forms expressing continuation or repetition without causative force: 'she did not return again' (Gen 8:12), 'he knew her no more' (Gen 38:26). German fuhr-er-fort ('he continued') and the aspectual framing in French continua mark this as a lighter, non-causative counterpart to the Hifil auxiliary sense. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: again, continued, continuing | es: K(continuó), añadieron, añadió | fr: continua, continued, continuing | de: continued, continuing, fuhr-er-fort Gen 8:12; Gen 38:26; Num 11:25; Deut 5:25; Judg 8:28

6. increased, added (Qal/Hifil perfect active) (9×) Qal and Hifil perfect active forms denoting completed acts of quantitative increase: 'You have increased the nation' (Isa 26:15), 'they added sin upon sin' (1 Sam 12:19). Spanish aumentaste ('you increased') and the perfect aspect distinguish these from ongoing or future addition, focusing on the accomplished result. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: He-added, You-have-increased, and-I-increased | es: Aumentaste, aumentaste, añadimos | fr: Il-ajouta, ajouter, et-ajouter | de: Er-fuegte-hinzu, du-added, hinzufuegen Deut 5:22; 1Sam 12:19; 1Kgs 10:7; 2Chr 9:6; Eccl 1:16

7. was added, be joined (Nifal) (6×) The Nifal passive-reflexive: 'be added to,' 'be joined,' 'be increased.' In Exodus 1:10 Pharaoh fears the Israelites will 'be added to our enemies,' and Numbers 36:3-4 legislates inheritance that might 'be added to' another tribe. Arabic inḍamma ('join oneself') and the passive yuzadu ('be increased') map neatly onto this stem's dual passive and reflexive possibilities. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: additions, and-he-join, and-will-be-added | es: añadidos, fueron-añadidas, y-es-añadido | fr: ajouter, et-ajouter, et-fera-être-ajouta | de: hinzufuegen, und-er-sich-anschliessen, und-fuegte-hinzu Exod 1:10; Num 36:3; Num 36:4; Prov 11:24; Isa 15:9

יְסַף H3255 V-Hofal-Perf-3fs (1×)

Was added (Hophal perfect), referring to Daniel's restored understanding in Daniel 4:36

This Aramaic Hophal form describes the restoration of Daniel's reason after his period of divine judgment and humiliation. 'My understanding was added to me' marks the turning point when sanity returns. The passive voice emphasizes that restoration is received, not achieved—a gift following repentance. The form represents a characteristic Aramaism in biblical Aramaic portions.

(1×) The Aramaic Hophal perfect 'was added' in Daniel 4:36, describing the restoration of Nebuchadnezzar's (or the speaker's) reason after the humbling period of madness. The passive construction highlights divine agency in restoration, with the Spanish 'me fue añadida' and French 'ajouter' preserving the sense of reception rather than self-achievement. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: was-added | es: me-fue-añadida | fr: ajouter | de: [הוסְפַת] Dan 4:36

יָסַר H3256 V-Piel-Perf-3fs / 3ms (43×)

To discipline, chasten, instruct, or admonish; correction administered by God or a human authority to produce obedience and wisdom.

Yasar is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for formative correction — the kind that hurts in the moment but shapes character over time. Its Piel stem (the dominant form) casts God as the disciplining father of Deuteronomy 8:5, chastening Israel the way a man disciplines his son. Yet yasar is not merely punitive. In 1 Chronicles 15:22, the same root describes Chenaniah 'instructing' in song, and in Psalm 16:7 David says his own kidneys 'instruct' him at night — an inward, educational sense. The Nifal passive captures the other side of the relationship: the one who submits to correction, as Jeremiah pleads in 31:18, 'discipline me, and I shall be disciplined.' Spanish nicely splits the range between castigar ('punish') and instruir ('instruct'), while German Zucht captures both dimensions in a single word rooted in formation rather than mere punishment.

1. discipline, chastise (Piel active) (27×) The dominant Piel active sense: disciplinary correction administered by a superior, typically God chastening his people or a parent correcting a child. This accounts for 27 of 43 occurrences and is the theological heart of the word. The doubling in Leviticus 26:18, 28 — 'I will discipline you sevenfold' — shows escalating covenant enforcement. Spanish castigar and French châtier both lean toward the punitive end, while Korean 징계하다 captures the corrective-formative dimension. The Deuteronomy 8:5 analogy ('as a man disciplines his son, so the LORD your God disciplines you') establishes the paradigmatic father-son frame for this sense. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT

en: You-discipline, and-I-will-discipline, but-I-will-discipline-you | es: Castigando, Disciplina, castigaré | fr: [יסר], châtier, disciplined | de: Zucht-mich, [יסר], chastened-mich Lev 26:18; Lev 26:28; Deut 4:36; Deut 8:5

2. instruct, teach, train (5×) Instruction and training that emphasizes education rather than punishment — 5 occurrences in Qal and Piel where the context is positive skill-building or wisdom-formation. Chenaniah instructs the Levites in singing (1 Chr 15:22); Job 4:3 recalls how Job once 'instructed many'; Proverbs 31:1 introduces the 'instruction' King Lemuel's mother taught him. Spanish instruir and English 'instruct' clearly separate this from chastisement. The Isaiah 28:26 agricultural metaphor — God 'instructs' the farmer in proper technique — reveals how yasar can be entirely non-punitive, closer to the Greek paideuein in its educative sense. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT
en: And-instructs-him, instruct-me, instructor | es: Y-lo-instruye, has-instruido, instruía | fr: [יסר], châtier, châtier-lui | de: [יסר], [יסרת], [יסרתו] 1Chr 15:22; Job 4:3; Ps 16:7; Prov 31:1; Isa 28:26

3. be disciplined, be corrected (Nifal passive) (3×) The Nifal passive: being disciplined, receiving or undergoing correction. Three occurrences mark the responsive side of discipline. Jeremiah 31:18 is the classic text: Ephraim confesses 'you disciplined me, and I was disciplined, like an untrained calf.' Proverbs 29:19 warns that 'a servant will not be corrected by words alone,' and Leviticus 26:23 conditions restoration on whether Israel 'will be corrected.' Spanish corregirse (reflexive) and the passive construction highlight the subject's reception of — or resistance to — the corrective act. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT
en: and-I-was-disciplined, is-corrected, you-are-disciplined | es: os-corrigiereis, será-corregido, y-fui-disciplinado | fr: châtier, et-châtier, tu-sont-disciplined | de: [יסר], du-sind-disciplined, und-zuechtigen Lev 26:23; Prov 29:19; Jer 31:18

4. admonish, reprove (Qal active) (3×) Qal active admonishment and reproof — 3 occurrences where the emphasis falls on verbal correction rather than enacted punishment. Psalm 94:10 asks rhetorically, 'He who disciplines nations, shall he not rebuke?' Proverbs 9:7 warns against reproving a scoffer, and Isaiah 8:11 describes how the LORD 'admonished' the prophet with a strong hand. Spanish corregir and amonestar both appear in this cluster. The distinction from sense 1 is stem-morphological (Qal vs. Piel) and semantic — these are moments of warning speech rather than punitive action. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT
en: and-he-instructed-me, he-who-corrects, he-who-disciplines | es: El-que-corrige, el-que-corrige, y-me-amonestó | fr: châtier, et-châtier, le-châtier | de: [יסר], er-der-disciplines, und-zuechtigen Ps 94:10; Prov 9:7; Isa 8:11

5. be warned, take warning (Nifal/Nithpael reflexive) (3×) Reflexive self-warning or heeding a cautionary lesson — 3 occurrences in Nifal or Nithpael with a reflexive nuance: 'be warned,' 'take instruction for yourself.' Psalm 2:10 exhorts kings to 'be warned' (hiwwasru); Jeremiah 6:8 pleads with Jerusalem to 'accept correction' lest God depart; Ezekiel 23:48 promises that all women 'will take warning' from Oholibah's fate. Spanish advertirse ('be warned') and corregirse ('correct oneself') both capture the self-directed reception. The urgency in these texts is pre-emptive: discipline yourself before God's discipline arrives. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT
en: and-shall-be-warned, be-warned | es: Corregíte, sed-advertidos, y-serán-escarmentadas | fr: châtier, et-châtier, le-châtier | de: [ונוסרו], sein-warned, zuechtigen Ps 2:10; Jer 6:8; Ezek 23:48

6. bind, chastise (Hifil) (2×) A rare Hifil causative usage in Hosea — only 2 occurrences (Hos 7:12; 10:10) — where disciplining carries an overtone of physical binding or restraining. Hosea 10:10 declares 'I will chastise them' in a context of yoking and binding to agricultural labor. The Aramaic cognate yesar ('to bind') surfaces here as a semantic echo, and the Spanish atar ('to bind') alongside castigar in the translation tradition confirms the dual-layered meaning. This is corrective discipline enacted through physical constraint — God as the farmer harnessing a stubborn animal. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: I-will-chastise-them, and-I-will-bind-them | es: los-castigaré, y-los-ataré | fr: châtier, et-châtier | de: [איסרם], [ואסרם] Hos 7:12; Hos 10:10

יָעִ֫ H3257 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (9×)

Shovels or ash-scoops used as cultic utensils for removing ashes from the altar of burnt offering in tabernacle and temple.
The noun ya'im (יָעִים) refers to the shovels or ash-removal scoops that were part of the standard inventory of altar utensils in Israelite worship. Every occurrence appears in equipment lists — never in narrative action — cataloguing the bronze implements of the tabernacle (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14) or Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:40, 45). The same items are mentioned among the objects the Babylonians carried away (2 Kgs 25:14; Jer 52:18). Spanish consistently translates as palas ('shovels'), while German uses Schaufeln, confirming the basic sense of a flat scooping tool.

shovels (cultic utensils) (9×) Plural masculine noun denoting shovels or ash-scoops specifically designed for cleaning the sacrificial altar. Always appears in inventory lists alongside other cultic implements such as pots (סִירוֹת), basins (מִזְרָקוֹת), and forks (מִזְלָגוֹת). The Priestly source lists them for the tabernacle altar (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14), the Deuteronomistic historian for Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:40, 45), and the destruction accounts note their removal to Babylon (2 Kgs 25:14; Jer 52:18). The Targum form יָעֵי confirms the root. INCENSE AND WORSHIP en: and-its-shovels, the-shovels | es: las-palas, las-paletas, y-sus-palas | fr: [היעים], et-son-pelles, le-pelles | de: [היעים], der-Schaufeln, der-shovels Exod 27:3; Exod 38:3; Num 4:14; 1Kgs 7:40; 1Kgs 7:45

יַעְבֵּ֑ץ H3258 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jabez, a man of prayer and a town in Judah near Bethlehem
A name borne by both a person and a place in the tribe of Judah. The man Jabez is famous for his brief but fervent prayer in 1 Chr 4:9–10, where the text connects his name to the word for pain (עֹצֶב), noting that his mother 'bore him in sorrow.' Despite this inauspicious naming, Jabez called on God to bless and enlarge his territory, and God granted his request. The place Jabez (1 Chr 2:55) appears to be a town in Judah near Bethlehem where scribal families settled.

(4×) A proper name for both a Calebite man renowned for his prayer and a Judahite town associated with scribal families. The personal name is folk-etymologized from עֹצֶב ('pain') in 1 Chr 4:9, where his mother named him for the sorrow of his birth—yet he transcended that name through prayer (v. 10). The place name in 1 Chr 2:55 locates families of scribes (סֹפְרִים) at Jabez, near Bethlehem. German renders it 'Jabez,' English 'Ya'bets,' and Spanish 'Yabets,' all transliterating the Hebrew יַעְבֵּץ. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ya'bets | es: Yabets | fr: [יעבץ] | de: Jabez 1Chr 2:55; 1Chr 4:9; 1Chr 4:10

יָעַד H3259 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (29×)

To appoint, designate, or meet by arrangement; encompasses assembling, meeting at a set place, appointing persons, summoning to court, and conspiring together.
The root behind the familiar term mo'ed (appointed time, meeting place), this verb carries the core idea of a fixed arrangement between parties. In the Nifal, it most often describes either assembling as a congregation (Num 10:3-4) or God meeting with Israel at the Tent of Meeting (Exod 25:22; 29:42-43), where the divine-human rendezvous is set by appointment rather than chance. In the Qal, it means to appoint or designate someone for a role, including the legal designation of a concubine (Exod 21:8-9). The Hifil carries a judicial edge: summoning someone to answer before a tribunal (Job 9:19; Jer 49:19). Across languages, Spanish reunirse and designar, Arabic wa'ada, and Korean moida consistently distinguish the communal gathering from the authoritative appointing.

1. assemble, gather together (9×) Nifal reflexive-reciprocal: to assemble or gather together as a group for a communal purpose. The congregation of Israel is the typical subject, summoned by trumpet blasts (Num 10:3-4) or gathered in complaint (Num 14:35; 16:11; 27:3). Spanish reunirse, French assembler, and Swahili kukusanyika all point to corporate gathering, while Hebrew marks it as a reciprocal action: people meeting 'with each other' by arrangement. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: and-shall-assemble, and-they-assembled, assembled | es: Y-se-reunieron, los-que-se-juntaron, los-que-se-reúnen | fr: [הנועדים], et-devra-assembler, et-ils-assembla | de: [הנועדים], assembled, der-assembled Num 10:3; Num 10:4; Num 14:35; Num 16:11; Num 27:3

2. meet by appointment (8×) Nifal of divine appointment: to meet at a designated place or time, especially God meeting with his people at the Tabernacle. Concentrated in the Exodus Tent-of-Meeting passages (Exod 25:22; 29:42-43; 30:6, 36; Num 17:4), where God says 'I will meet with you' above the mercy seat. Spanish me reuniré and French rencontrer capture this solemn, scheduled divine encounter distinct from casual assembly. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING
en: I-meet, I-will-meet, and-I-will-meet | es: Y-me-reuniré, me-reuniré, reunámonos | fr: Je—rencontrer, [ונועדה], [נועד] | de: [ונועדה], [נועד], ich-meet Exod 25:22; Exod 29:42; Exod 29:43; Exod 30:6; Exod 30:36

3. appoint, designate (5×) Qal active: to appoint, designate, or assign someone or something for a specific purpose. Covers appointing a time (2 Sam 20:5), designating a place (Jer 47:7), directing a rod of judgment (Mic 6:9), and the legal designation of a concubine (Exod 21:8-9). Spanish designar and Arabic wa'ada (to promise/appoint) mark the authoritative act of assignment. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: appointed-it, he-appointed-him, he-designated-her | es: la-designa, la-designó, la-ha-citado | fr: [יעדה], elle-a-convoqué, il-designated-sa | de: [יעדה], er-bestellte-ihn, er-designated-ihr Exod 21:8; Exod 21:9; 2Sam 20:5; Jer 47:7; Mic 6:9

4. summon to judgment (3×) Hifil causative with judicial force: to summon or arraign someone before a tribunal or court. Job uses it to ask who can summon God to answer (Job 9:19), and Jeremiah applies it to God as the shepherd whom none can call to account (Jer 49:19; 50:44). Spanish citar (to summon, cite) and the legal tone across translations distinguish this courtroom sense from simple appointment. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: can-summon-me, will-summon-me | es: me-citará, me-citará? | fr: [יועדני], [יעידני], fixer-moi | de: [יועדני], [יועידנני], [יעידנני] Job 9:19; Jer 49:19; Jer 50:44

5. be appointed, be set (2×) Hofal passive: to be appointed, set, or directed by another's hand. Attested in Jeremiah 24:1 of figs 'set' before the temple and Ezekiel 21:16 of a sword 'appointed' to strike. The passive construction marks the recipient of designation rather than the designator, a natural extension of the Qal active sense. RECLINING AND LYING en: is-appointed, set | es: esté-dirigido, puestas | fr: [מועדים], [מעדות] | de: [מועדים], [מעדות] Jer 24:1; Ezek 21:16

6. agree, conspire together (2×) Nifal reciprocal with the nuance of mutual agreement or conspiracy: to meet together by prearranged accord. Amos 3:3 asks whether two walk together unless they have agreed, and Job 2:11 describes the three friends who arranged to come together. Spanish concertarse (to agree together) and French se réunir with deliberative overtones distinguish this from the simple assembly of sense 1 by emphasizing the bilateral pact. CONSPIRE AGREE TOGETHER
en: and-they-met-together, they-have-agreed | es: se-hayan-citado, y-se-concertaron | fr: et-fixer, ils-se-sont-réunis | de: [ויועדו], [נועדו] Job 2:11; Amos 3:3

יְעִדּוֹ H3260 N-proper-ms (2×)
Iddo (proper name: prophet/seer in Chronicles, with Ketiv/Qere textual variants)
This proper name appears with textual variants (Ketiv vs. Qere) for a prophet or seer whose writings are mentioned as a source for Solomon's acts. The name Iddo appears elsewhere in Chronicles for various individuals—a seer whose visions concerned Jeroboam, among others. The textual uncertainty (Yedo vs. Yedai in the variants) reflects scribal traditions about how to vocalize this name. The individual was significant enough that his prophetic writings were used as historical sources by the Chronicler.

(2×) A proper name appearing in reference to prophetic writings about Solomon (2 Chr 9:29, twice for Ketiv and Qere variants). BDB identifies this with Iddo the seer mentioned elsewhere in Chronicles. The Qere suggests reading 'Yedo' while the Ketiv has a slightly different form. Transliterations reflect the variants: English 'Iddo' or notes the variants 'Yedo/Yedai,' Spanish and French/German similarly preserve both Hebrew forms, acknowledging ancient uncertainty about the exact vocalization of this prophetic source's name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yedo, [Yedai] | es: Yedó, [Yedó] | fr: [יעדו], [יעדי] | de: [יעדו], [יעדי] 2Chr 9:29

יְעָהּ H3261 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
Shall sweep away, carrying off the false refuge (Isaiah 28:17)
In Isaiah's oracle against Judah's false security, this verb describes how hail will sweep away the refuge of lies. The imagery is meteorological and violent—divine judgment removing deceptive shelters. The Arabic cognate waʿā (to collect, gather) may suggest sweeping together and carrying off. Modern Arabic dialectal evidence from Palestinian usage supports this semantic field.

(1×) Means 'shall sweep away' in Isaiah 28:17, where hail serves as God's instrument to remove the false refuge in which Jerusalem's leaders have trusted. The Spanish 'barrerá' (will sweep) and the Arabic cognate evidence both support the sense of forceful removal, fitting Isaiah's vivid judgment imagery against political alliances made in bad faith. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: and-shall-sweep-away | es: y-barrerá | fr: [ויעה] | de: [ויעה] Isa 28:17

יְעוּאֵל H3262 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yeuel, a descendant of Zerah in the Chronicles genealogies
Yeuel appears as a son of Zerah in 1 Chronicles 9:6, within the genealogical records of those who returned from exile. The name's etymology is uncertain, and Greek manuscript traditions show variation (Epeiēl, Ieeēl). Like many genealogical entries, this preserves tribal memory and lineage continuity across the traumatic disruption of the Babylonian exile.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 9:6 identifying a member of Zerah's line among the post-exilic returnees. The single occurrence and genealogical function mark Yeuel as part of the Chronicler's concern to document legitimate Israelite descent and tribal continuity despite exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeuel | es: Yeuel | fr: [יעואל] | de: [יעואל] 1Chr 9:6

יְעוּץ H3263 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yeuts, a Benjamite name in 1 Chronicles 8:10
Yeuts appears in the Benjamite genealogies as one of the descendants listed in 1 Chronicles 8:10. The name's meaning is uncertain, and Greek traditions vary in their transliteration (Idōs, Ieous, Iōas). These genealogical records served to maintain tribal identity and legitimacy within the post-exilic community's self-understanding.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 8:10 within the Benjamite genealogical framework. The sparse attestation and uncertain etymology are typical of many names preserved solely for genealogical continuity, serving the Chronicler's broader purpose of establishing tribal legitimacy and historical rootedness. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeuts | es: Yeuts | fr: [יעוץ] | de: [יעוץ] 1Chr 8:10

יַעַר H3264
wood, forest, thicket; wooded area or densely treed land
This noun denotes a wood, forest, or thicket—places dense with trees that can be felled for timber or serve as domains of danger and mystery. Joshua 17 describes the hill country as 'forest' to be cleared; 2 Samuel 18 sets Absalom's defeat in 'the forest of Ephraim.' Forests in ancient Israel were both resource (timber for building) and threat (wild beasts, ambush sites). Jeremiah 10:3 speaks of cutting 'wood from the forest' for idol-carving. The term appears in geographical names and carries associations with wilderness, danger, and the boundary between civilization and untamed nature.

יָעוֹר H3265 N-proper-ms (2×)
Jair (proper name: father of Elhanan, with Ketiv/Qere variants)
This name appears with textual uncertainty (Ketiv vs. Qere) for the father of Elhanan, one of David's warriors who killed a giant. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel has been corrupted, and scholars suggest reading 'Jair' (as Chronicles has it) for the garbled 'Jaare-oregim' in Samuel. The name itself is well-attested elsewhere in Scripture, meaning possibly 'he enlightens' or 'Yahweh enlightens.' The textual variants here are minor—both forms point to the same name with slight spelling differences.

(2×) A proper name appearing for the father of Elhanan the giant-slayer (1 Chr 20:5, twice for Ketiv and Qere variants). BDB notes the parallel 2 Samuel 21:19 passage is corrupt. The Qere reading 'Yair' is preferred over the Ketiv 'Yaor.' Transliterations acknowledge the variants: English 'Jair' with note of Ketiv, Spanish gives both forms in parentheses, French and German preserve both Hebrew variants, identifying this warrior's father despite ancient scribal uncertainty about spelling. JAIR PERSONAL NAME
en: Jair, [ketiv] | es: (Yair), [Yair] | fr: [יָעוֹר], [יָעִיר] | de: [יָעוֹר], [יָעִיר] 1Chr 20:5

יְעוּשׁ H3266 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)
Jeush — a proper name borne by several figures, most prominently an Edomite chieftain descended from Esau
The name יְעוּשׁ (Ye'ush), possibly meaning 'he comes to help' or 'may [God] aid,' belongs to at least five individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is Jeush the son of Esau by his wife Oholibamah, who became an Edomite clan chief (Gen 36:5, 14, 18; 1 Chr 1:35). A Benjaminite Jeush appears in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 7:10; 8:39), and another is a son of Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:19). A Levitical Jeush is listed among the sons of Shimei (1 Chr 23:10-11). The name's recurrence across tribal boundaries — Edomite, Benjaminite, Judahite, Levitical — illustrates the widespread use of theophoric naming patterns in West Semitic cultures.

Jeush / Ye'ush (proper name) (10×) A proper name of uncertain etymology, borne by several individuals: an Edomite chieftain, son of Esau and Oholibamah (Gen 36:5, 14, 18; 1 Chr 1:35), a Benjaminite in Saul's lineage (1 Chr 7:10; 8:39), a son of King Rehoboam of Judah (2 Chr 11:19), and a Levitical figure among the sons of Shimei (1 Chr 23:10-11). The Edomite bearer is the most historically significant, as his clan is listed among the tribal chiefs of Edom. Spanish 'Jeús' and English 'Jeush' reflect standard transliteration; the LXX renders it Ιεους. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jeush, Yeush, [ketiv] | es: (Yeush), (Yeús), Yeush | fr: Jeush, et-Jeush | de: Jeusch, [וַיְעוּשׁ], [יְעוּשׁ] Gen 36:5; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:18; 1Chr 1:35; 1Chr 7:10

יָעַז H3267 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
Barbarous or fierce, describing a foreign invading people in Isaiah 33:19
This difficult Niphal participle describes the invading foreigners Isaiah promises will no longer be seen. The root meaning is uncertain —possibly 'making signs' or 'speaking unintelligibly,' hence 'barbarous,' or perhaps 'fierce' or 'arrogant.' The Spanish 'feroz' (fierce) captures one possibility. Context favors foreigners whose language is incomprehensible, fitting the parallel description of 'a people of obscure speech.'

(1×) An adjective describing an invading foreign people in Isaiah 33:19, probably meaning 'barbarous' (speaking unintelligibly) or 'fierce.' The lexical uncertainty reflects the rare root, though context strongly suggests foreigners characterized by incomprehensible language and threatening demeanor, whom God will remove from Jerusalem's sight. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: not | es: feroz | fr: [נוֹעָז] | de: [נוֹעָז] Isa 33:19

וְ H3268 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yaaziel, a Levite name in 1 Chronicles 15, possibly a textual variant of Aziel or Uzziel Yaaziel appears among the Levites appointed for musical service in 1 Chronicles 15:18. Verse 20 lists the same individual as Aziel, and scholars suggest both may be textual corruptions of Uzziel. Such variations are common in Chronicles' genealogical and organizational lists, where copyist errors or genuine name variants create minor discrepancies across parallel passages.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 15:18 designating a Levite musician, though probably a textual variant or error for Aziel (v. 20) or Uzziel, as suggested by Gray. The Greek rendering Oziēl supports this view, illustrating how manuscript transmission could generate variant forms of the same name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yaaziel | es: y-Yaziel | fr: [וְיַעֲזִיאֵל] | de: [וְיַעְזִיאֵל] 1Chr 15:18

יַעֲזְיָהוּ H3269 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jaaziyahu (proper name: Levite name, possibly corruption of Uzziyahu)
This Levitical name appears only in the priestly course listings in Chronicles, and scholars suspect it may be a textual corruption of the more common name Uzziyahu (Uzziah). The name as it stands would mean something like 'Yahweh makes bold' or 'Yahweh strengthens,' but the suggestion of textual corruption is based on the name's rarity and similarity to other names. Both occurrences appear with prepositions in the Levitical genealogies describing family leadership.

(2×) A proper Levitical name appearing in priestly genealogies (1 Chr 24:26, 27), possibly a textual corruption of Uzziyahu according to some scholars. The occurrences show prepositional forms: 'Jaaziyahu' and 'for/to Jaaziyahu.' If genuine, the name would mean 'Yahweh emboldens' or similar. Transliterations preserve the Hebrew: English 'Jaaziyahu' or 'Yaaziyahu,' Spanish 'Yaaziyahu,' French and German maintain the Hebrew form, acknowledging this rare (possibly corrupt) Levitical name whose exact form remains uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yaaziyahu, for-Yaaziyahu | es: Yaaziyahu, para-Yaaziyahu | fr: [יַעֲזִיהוּ], [לְיַעֲזִיהוּ] | de: [יַעְזִיהוּ], [לְיַעְזִיהוּ] 1Chr 24:26; 1Chr 24:27

יַעְזֵר H3270 N-proper-fs (13×)
Jazer — a Transjordanian city in Gilead assigned to the tribe of Gad
A place name for a city east of the Jordan in the tableland of Gilead, originally conquered from the Amorites (Num 21:32) and later apportioned to Gad (Num 32:1, 35; Josh 13:25). It served as a Levitical city (Josh 21:39; 1 Chr 6:66) and administrative center (1 Chr 26:31). The prophets associate Jazer with its fertile vineyards, mourning their devastation alongside those of Moab (Isa 16:8–9; Jer 48:32). David's census route also passed through Jazer (2 Sam 24:5), confirming its regional importance in the Transjordan.

Jazer (place name) (13×) The proper place name Jazer (/ יַעְזֵר / יַעְזִיר), a fortified Transjordanian city in the Gilead region. It appears in the conquest narratives as territory taken from the Amorites and assigned to Gad (Num 21:32; 32:1, 3, 35; Josh 13:25). It also served as a Levitical city (Josh 21:39; 1 Chr 6:66) and is linked to vineyard imagery in prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 16:8–9; Jer 48:32). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jazer, Yazer, and-Jazer | es: Jazer, Yazer, en-Jazer | fr: Jazer, Yazer, [בְיַעְזִיר] | de: Jazer, Yazer, [בְיַעְזִיר] Num 21:32; Num 32:1; Num 32:3; Num 32:35; Josh 13:25

יָעַט H3271 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 1cs (1×)
He wrapped or covered me, used in Isaiah 61:10 of being clothed with salvation's robe
This verb appears in Isaiah's triumphant declaration: 'He has covered me with the robe of righteousness.' The imagery is sartorial and ceremonial, evoking priestly or royal investiture. The parallel verb 'clothed me with garments of salvation' reinforces the metaphor. Some scholars suggest reading this as a form of the more common ʿāṭâ, though the Qal perfect form here is distinctive.

(1×) Means 'he wrapped me' or 'he covered me' in Isaiah 61:10, describing God's action of clothing the speaker with righteousness like a ceremonial robe. The Spanish 'me cubrió' preserves the covering imagery, fitting the broader context of divine vindication and restoration where garments symbolize transformed status before God and the nations. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: he-wrapped-me | es: me-cubrió | fr: [יעטני] | de: [יעטני] Isa 61:10

יְעַט H3272a V-Hitpael-Perf-3mp (1×)
Have consulted or taken counsel (Aramaic Ithpael), reflexive counsel-taking in Daniel 6
This Aramaic verb describes the officials who conspired together to trap Daniel in Daniel 6:7. The Ithpael stem conveys reciprocal action —they counseled with one another. The context is political conspiracy, where collective deliberation produces the decree designed to ensnare Daniel in his faithfulness to God. The multilingual evidence confirms the consultative sense.

(1×) An Aramaic Ithpael perfect meaning 'have consulted' or 'took counsel together' in Daniel 6:7, describing the collaborative conspiracy of officials against Daniel. The reciprocal force of the Ithpael stem (they counseled with each other) fits the narrative of collective scheming to manipulate the king's decree against Daniel's prayer life. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION en: have-consulted | es: han-consultado | fr: conseiller | de: [אתיעטן] Dan 6:7

יָעַט H3272b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3ms (2×)
counselors (Aramaic plural noun: royal advisors to the Persian king)
This Aramaic term appears only in Ezra, designating the counselors or advisors to the Persian king. The word is a plural noun with pronominal suffix ('his counselors'), referring to the advisors who, along with the king, sent Ezra back to Jerusalem with authority and resources. The term reflects the administrative structure of the Persian Empire, where the king ruled with a council of advisors. Both occurrences describe Ezra's authorization coming from the king and his counselors together.

(2×) An Aramaic plural noun meaning 'counselors' or 'advisors,' appearing with the pronominal suffix 'his counselors' (Ezra 7:14, 15), referring to the Persian king's advisory council. The term describes those who, with the king, authorized Ezra's mission to Jerusalem. Multilingual renderings are consistent: English 'counselors' or 'his counselors,' Spanish 'consejeros' (counselors) or 'sus consejeros' (his counselors), reflecting understanding of this Aramaic term for the royal advisory body in the Persian imperial administration. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11320 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-his-counselors, counselors | es: consejeros, y-sus-consejeros | fr: [ויעטוהי], [יעטהי] | de: [ויעטוהי], [יעטהי] Ezra 7:14; Ezra 7:15

יְעוּאֵל H3273 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (17×)
Jeiel — a Hebrew proper name borne by multiple Levites, warriors, and clan leaders in Chronicles and Ezra Ye'i'el (also spelled Ye'u'el and Ye'iel) is a proper masculine name appearing 17 times, almost exclusively in the books of Chronicles and Ezra. The name likely means 'God has gathered' or 'treasure of God,' and its multiple bearers reflect the Chronicler's concern with genealogical completeness and Levitical worship. The most frequently mentioned Jeiel is a Levitical musician appointed by David for the ark procession, who played the harp and appears repeatedly in the worship lists (1 Chr 15:18, 21; 16:5). Another Jeiel is identified as the ancestor of Saul from the Gibeonite line (1 Chr 9:35). Among the warriors, a Jeiel son of Hotham appears in David's elite thirty (1 Chr 11:44). The name surfaces in Uzziah's military administration — Jeiel the scribe kept the army muster (2 Chr 26:11) — and in Hezekiah's and Josiah's religious reforms among Levitical leaders (2 Chr 29:13; 35:9). Ezra lists a Jeiel among the returnees (Ezra 8:13) and among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:43). Spanish 'Jeiel,' French 'Jeiel,' and German 'Jeiel' transliterate the name with minor variation.

Yeiel (proper name) (17×) A Hebrew proper masculine name borne by at least eight distinct individuals in Chronicles and Ezra. The Levitical musician in David's ark procession is most prominent (1 Chr 15:18, 21; 16:5), alongside the Gibeonite ancestor of Saul (1 Chr 9:35), one of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:44), Uzziah's military scribe (2 Chr 26:11), Levites in Hezekiah's and Josiah's reforms (2 Chr 29:13; 35:9), a Reubenite chief (1 Chr 5:7), a companion of Ezra (Ezra 8:13), and a man who took a foreign wife (Ezra 10:43). The LXX renders the name variously as Ieiel, Ioel, and Iael; the name likely means 'God has gathered' or 'treasure of God.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (and-Yeiel), Jeiel, Ye'i'el | es: (Yeiel), (y-Yeiel), Jeiel | fr: Jeïel, et-Jeïel | de: Jeiel, [יעיאל], und-Jeiel 1Chr 5:7; 1Chr 9:35; 1Chr 11:44

יְעוּשׁ H3274 N-proper-ms (2×)
Jeush (proper name: 'he comes to help'; son of Esau and other individuals)
This name, possibly meaning 'he comes to help' or related to an Arabian divine name, appears for multiple individuals, most notably a son of Esau by Oholibamah. The name occurs with variant spellings (Ketiv vs. Qere) in several passages, reflecting ancient uncertainty about vowel pointing. It's borne by an Edomite chief, Benjamites, a Levite, and a son of Rehoboam. The name's etymology is disputed —it may reflect Arabian influence or be a purely Hebrew formation about divine help.

(2×) A proper name appearing for multiple individuals, here shown for Esau's son (Gen 36:5, 14). Both occurrences show Ketiv spelling variants. The name possibly means 'he comes to help' or may derive from Arabian divine names. Standard transliterations vary: English often 'Jeush,' Spanish notes textual variants, German 'Jeusch,' acknowledging the Ketiv/Qere differences. The name identifies an Edomite chief among other biblical figures, its exact etymology remaining scholarly debate between Hebrew and Arabian origins. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: [Jeush] | es: [Yeish] | fr: [Jeush] | de: Jeusch Gen 36:5; Gen 36:14

יַעְכָּן H3275 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ya'khan, a Gadite name in 1 Chronicles 5:13
Ya'khan appears in the Gadite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 5:13. The name's single occurrence and uncertain etymology are typical of tribal genealogical records. Greek manuscript traditions show variation (Chima, Iacha), reflecting the challenges of transliterating Hebrew names into Greek. The genealogy serves to establish Gadite territorial and familial claims.

(1×) A masculine proper name identifying a Gadite in 1 Chronicles 5:13. The brief mention within the genealogical framework of the Transjordanian tribes preserves family memory and territorial legitimacy, though Ya'khan himself receives no narrative elaboration beyond his place in the lineage structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ya'khan | es: y-Yacan | fr: [ויעכן] | de: [ויעכן] 1Chr 5:13

יָעַל H3276 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp / 2fs (23×)
To profit, benefit, or avail; to be of use — almost always negated, exposing the futility of idols or wealth.
Found only in the Hiphil stem, this verb asks the sharpest question in Hebrew rhetoric: 'What does it profit?' Nearly every occurrence is negated or posed as a skeptical question, making it the Hebrew Bible's chief vocabulary of futility. Idols 'do not profit' (1 Sam 12:21; Isa 44:9-10; Jer 2:8, 11; Hab 2:18). Riches 'do not profit in the day of wrath' (Prov 11:4). Job demands of God, 'What do I gain if I do not sin?' (Job 35:3). Only twice does a positive or neutral sense surface — Job 30:13 and Isaiah 48:17, where God himself declares, 'I am the LORD your God, who teaches you to profit.' Spanish 'aprovechar' and French 'profiter' capture this utilitarian edge precisely.

to profit or benefit (23×) To confer profit or advantage; to avail. Hiphil only, almost always negated — of idols that cannot help (1 Sam 12:21; Isa 44:9; Jer 2:8; Hab 2:18), riches that fail (Prov 11:4), and effort questioned before God (Job 21:15; 35:3). The rare positive use in Isaiah 48:17 heightens the contrast. Spanish 'aprovechar' and French 'profiter' mirror this register. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: and-benefit, do-I-gain, do-profit | es: aprovecha, aprovechan, aprovechar | fr: et-profiter, ils-profit, profiter | de: [אעיל], [הועיל], [יועיל] 1Sam 12:21; Job 15:3; Job 21:15; Job 30:13; Job 35:3

יָעֵל H3277 Prep-l (3×)

mountain goat, ibex, wild goat inhabiting rocky crags

The mountain goat or ibex, a wild caprine adapted to rocky, mountainous terrain. The term appears in three poetic contexts celebrating God's care for wild creatures: Psalm 104:18 describes high mountains as refuge for the mountain goats (paired with rock badgers); Job 39:1 asks if Job knows when the mountain goats of the rock give birth (parallel to deer); and 1 Samuel 24:2 mentions 'the Rocks of the Wild Goats,' a place name in the Judean wilderness where David hid from Saul. The ibex, with its remarkable climbing ability and majestic curved horns, symbolized freedom and divine provision in the wilderness.

(3×) The wild ibex or mountain goat, emblematic of untamed creation thriving in inaccessible places. God's knowledge of their birthing seasons (Job 39) and provision of high crags for their refuge (Psalm 104) illustrates divine care extending even to creatures beyond human reach. The place name 'Rocks of the Wild Goats' suggests these animals were iconic inhabitants of the Judean wilderness's limestone cliffs, visible to any traveler in that harsh terrain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-the-wild-goats, the-mountain-goats-of-, the-wild-goats | es: cabras-de-, las-cabras-montesas, para-las-cabras-montés | fr: le-wild-chèvres, à-bouquetin, יעלי | de: [יעל], der-wild-Ziegen, für-der-wild-goats 1Sam 24:2; Job 39:1; Ps 104:18

יָעֵל H3278 N-proper-fs (6×)

Jael — wife of Heber the Kenite, famed for killing the Canaanite general Sisera with a tent peg (Judges 4–5).

A Hebrew feminine name (יָעֵל) likely meaning 'mountain goat' or 'ibex,' borne by one of the most striking women in the Hebrew Bible. Jael, wife of Heber the Kenite, offered hospitality to the fleeing Canaanite commander Sisera after his army's defeat, then drove a tent peg through his temple while he slept (Judg 4:17–22). Deborah's victory song celebrates her with the emphatic blessing 'most blessed of women is Jael' (Judg 5:24). The name may also appear in Judges 5:6 as a reference to an earlier figure, though some scholars read it as the same Jael in a different context. Remarkably uniform across translations — English, Spanish, French, and German all render it simply as 'Yael.'

(6×) The proper name Yāʿēl (יָעֵל, likely 'mountain goat, ibex'), identifying the wife of Heber the Kenite who killed Sisera. She appears in the prose narrative of Judges 4:17–22, where she lures the fleeing general into her tent and drives a tent peg through his skull, and in the Song of Deborah (Judg 5:24), where she is called 'most blessed among women.' Judges 5:6 may also reference her (or a different figure of the same name) in connection with abandoned roads. The multilingual glosses are strikingly uniform — 'Yael' in English, Spanish, French, and German alike — reflecting the name's phonological transparency. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yael | es: Yael | fr: Yael | de: Yael Judg 4:17; Judg 4:18; Judg 4:21; Judg 4:22; Judg 5:6

יַעֲלָא H3279 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jaala (proper name: head of returning exiles, with variant spelling Jaalah)

This name appears in the lists of temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The name occurs in two variant spellings—Jaala in one list and Jaalah in the parallel list, reflecting the common phenomenon where Ezra and Nehemiah preserve slightly different forms of the same names. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to climb' or 'to be high,' possibly a reference to mountain goats. Both forms refer to the same family head.

(2×) A proper name appearing for the head of a family of temple servants who returned from exile, with variant spellings: 'Jaalah' in Ezra 2:56 and 'Jaala' in Nehemiah 7:58. The spelling variation is typical of parallel Ezra-Nehemiah lists. Transliterations show the variance: English 'Jaala' or 'Jaalah,' Spanish 'Jaalá' (combining both), French and German preserve both Hebrew forms, acknowledging these represent the same family leader whose name was spelled differently in the two return lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jaala, Yaalah | es: Jaalá | fr: [יעלא], [יעלה] | de: [יעלא], [יעלה] Ezra 2:56; Neh 7:58

יַעֲלָה H3280 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

A graceful doe, used figuratively for a wife in Proverbs 5:19

This feminine noun appears in the hendiadys 'a loving doe and a graceful gazelle,' describing the wife in Proverbs 5:19. The imagery evokes beauty, grace, and desirability, with the gazelle/doe pair common in wisdom and poetic literature for depicting feminine charm. The Spanish 'gacela' and the parallel with 'loving hind' both preserve the gentle, swift, graceful connotations of the animal imagery.

(1×) Denotes a graceful doe or female mountain goat in Proverbs 5:19, used metaphorically for a wife. The pairing with 'loving hind' creates poetic parallelism emphasizing beauty and desirability, typical of Proverbs' positive commendation of faithful marital love as opposed to the adultery warned against in the surrounding context. DEER AND GAZELLE

en: and-a-graceful | es: y-gacela | fr: et-ויעלת | de: [ויעלת] Prov 5:19

יַעְלָם H3281 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jalam, son of Esau and Oholibamah, an Edomite chief

Jalam appears in the genealogies as one of Esau's sons by his wife Oholibamah. Listed among the chiefs of Edom, he represents one of the family lines descended from Isaac through Esau rather than Jacob. The name appears in both the Genesis account of Esau's descendants and the parallel genealogy preserved in Chronicles, confirming his place in the Edomite tribal structure.

(4×) Jalam is consistently identified as a son of Esau born to Oholibamah in the land of Canaan (Gen 36:5, 14, 18) and reckoned among the Edomite chiefs. The parallel account in 1Chronicles 1:35 preserves the same genealogical record, with Greek Ieglom representing the Septuagint's vocalization of the Hebrew name. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration approaches across language families: English Jalam, Spanish Yalam/Yaalam, French Jalam, and German Jalam all preserve recognizable phonetic equivalents of the Hebrew. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jalam, and-Ya'lam | es: Yalam, y-Yaalam | fr: Jalam, [ויעלם] | de: Jalam, [ויעלם] Gen 36:5; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:18; 1Chr 1:35

יַעַן H3282 Conj-w (99×)

Because, since, inasmuch as — a causal conjunction introducing the ground or reason for a statement, especially in prophetic judgment oracles

Ya'an is a causal conjunction appearing 99 times, heavily concentrated in prophetic literature where it introduces the grounds for divine judgment. Its most characteristic pattern is the ya'an...laken ('because...therefore') construction: the prophet states the offense with ya'an, then announces the consequence with laken. Ezekiel alone accounts for nearly half the occurrences, using it to arraign nations and individuals alike — 'because you said the temple of the LORD' (Ezek 25:3), 'because Tyre said against Jerusalem' (26:2). Outside prophecy, it appears in key covenant texts like Genesis 22:16 ('because you have done this') and Numbers 20:12 ('because you did not trust me').

because, since, inasmuch as (99×) A causal conjunction meaning 'because, since, inasmuch as,' typically introducing the reason or charge in prophetic judgment oracles. The hallmark pattern is ya'an...laken ('because...therefore'), stating the offense before pronouncing the sentence (Ezek 25:3; 26:2; 28:2). Spanish 'por cuanto/porque,' French 'parce que,' and German 'weil' capture the causal force. Key non-prophetic occurrences include God's response to Abraham's obedience — 'because you have done this thing' (Gen 22:16) — and the verdict against Moses at Meribah (Num 20:12), showing the conjunction's role in covenant reasoning as well as judicial pronouncement. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: because | es: Por-cuanto, Porque, por-cuanto | fr: parce-que | de: weil Gen 22:16; Lev 26:43; Num 11:20; Num 20:12; Deut 1:36

יָעֵן H3283 N-mp (2×)
ostriches (plural noun: large flightless birds, with Ketiv/Qere textual variant)
This rare plural noun appears only in Lamentations, where the text compares the cruelty of Jerusalem's people to ostriches in the wilderness. The word appears with a Ketiv/Qere variant—the written text has one form while the reading tradition suggests 'like ostriches.' The ostrich was proverbial in biblical literature for abandoning its young, making it a fitting image for the breakdown of natural affection during Jerusalem's siege. The word may derive from a root suggesting voraciousness.

(2×) A plural noun meaning 'ostriches,' appearing in Lamentations 4:3 with Ketiv/Qere variants. The Ketiv (written) has one form while the Qere (read) suggests 'like ostriches' (with comparative particle). The context compares the harshness of Jerusalem's people to ostriches, birds known for apparent cruelty to their young. Multilingual renderings show the comparison: English '(like) ostriches' with brackets noting variants, Spanish 'como avestruces' (like ostriches), French and German preserve both textual forms, conveying this poignant image of unnatural cruelty. OSTRICH BIRD
en: (like-ostriches), [ostriches] | es: (como-avestruces), [avestruces] | fr: [(כיענים)], [[ענים]] | de: [(כיענים)], [[ענים]] Lam 4:3

יַעֲנָה H3284 N-fs (8×)
Ostrich; a large flightless bird associated in Scripture with mourning, desolation, and ritual uncleanness.
This feminine noun denotes the ostrich, appearing exclusively in the compound phrases bat hayya'anah ('daughter of the ostrich') and benot ya'anah ('daughters of the ostrich'). The ostrich serves as a powerful literary symbol: its eerie wailing cry makes it a simile for mourning in Micah 1:8, its preference for desolate terrain marks ruined cities in Isaiah 13:21 and 34:13, and its habitat in the wild makes it a companion of jackals in Job 30:29. Leviticus 11:16 and Deuteronomy 14:15 list it among unclean birds. Every major translation tradition recognizes the bird — English 'ostrich,' Spanish 'avestruz,' French 'autruche,' German 'Strauss.'

the ostrich (8×) The ostrich, a large desert-dwelling bird known for its haunting cry and association with desolate places. Used as a symbol of mourning (Mic 1:8, paired with jackals), loneliness (Job 30:29), and devastation among ruins (Isa 13:21; 34:13; Jer 50:39). Listed as ritually unclean in Lev 11:16 and Deut 14:15. The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'avestruz,' French 'autruche,' German 'Strauss' — confirms universal identification of this creature. OSTRICH BIRD
en: ostrich, ostriches, the-ostrich | es: avestruz, de-avestruz, el-avestruz | fr: autruche, le-ostrich, יענה | de: Strauss, [יענה], der-ostrich Lev 11:16; Deut 14:15; Job 30:29; Isa 13:21; Isa 34:13

יַעֲנַי H3285 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ya'nai, a Gadite name in 1 Chronicles 5:12
Ya'nai appears among the Gadite leaders in 1 Chronicles 5:12, within the genealogical and territorial records of the Transjordanian tribes. The name's etymology is uncertain, and the single occurrence provides no narrative context beyond genealogical placement. Such names anchor family lines within tribal memory and territorial claims.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 5:12 identifying a Gadite chief. The genealogical function preserves tribal identity and leadership succession, though Ya'nai receives no further narrative development. The name participates in the Chronicler's comprehensive documentation of Israel's tribal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ya'nai | es: y-Yanay | fr: [ויענ] | de: [ויענ] 1Chr 5:12

יָעֵף H3286 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (10×)
To grow weary, become faint from exertion or lack; also (Hofal) to be caused to fly swiftly.
Primarily a verb of human exhaustion — the bone-deep weariness that overtakes even the young and strong. Isaiah 40:28–31 builds its famous crescendo around this word: YHWH does not grow weary (yi'af), youths grow weary and stumble, but those who wait on YHWH shall mount up with wings like eagles. The irony is exquisite when the Hofal participle mu'af appears in Daniel 9:21, where Gabriel arrives 'caused to fly swiftly' — the very root that elsewhere means 'to be exhausted' is here repurposed for supernatural speed. Spanish captures the primary sense with 'se cansarán' (they will tire) and the flight sense with 'volando' (flying), marking the semantic leap clearly.

1. grow weary / become exhausted (9×) To grow weary, become exhausted, be faint from exertion or deprivation. The Qal verb and its derived forms cover physical and spiritual tiredness: the blacksmith who grows faint from thirst while forging an idol (Isa 44:12), youths who stumble in exhaustion (Isa 40:30), nations who 'weary themselves' for nothing (Hab 2:13; Jer 51:58, 64), the wild donkey panting in heat until spent (Jer 2:24), and the weary men of Succoth whom Gideon encounters (Judg 8:15). Isaiah 40:28 negates it theologically — the Creator 'does not grow weary,' unlike all human and even youthful strength. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: Grow-faint, and-is-weary, and-not | es: Y-se-cansarán, desfallece, los-cansados | fr: et-se-fatiguer, ils-voleront, le-exhausted | de: [וייעף], [ויעפו], [ייעף] Judg 8:15; Isa 40:28; Isa 40:30; Isa 40:31; Isa 44:12

2. fly / caused to fly (Hofal) (1×) To fly, be caused to fly swiftly (Hofal participle). Daniel 9:21 describes the angel Gabriel as mu'af bi'af — 'caused to fly in swift flight' or 'wearied with weariness' (the phrase is deliberately ambiguous). Most modern translations and the multilingual evidence favor 'flying swiftly': Spanish gives 'volando' (flying), and English renders 'caused to fly.' This may represent a distinct root (ya'af II = to fly), or a striking wordplay on the exhaustion root, suggesting Gabriel arrived in breathless haste from heaven. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: caused-to-fly | es: volando | fr: fatiguer | de: [מעף] Dan 9:21

יָעֵף H3287 Art / Adj-ms (3×)
weary, faint, exhausted (from physical exertion or lack of food/water)
An adjective describing physical or spiritual weariness and exhaustion, used as a substantive (noun) in all three biblical occurrences. In 2 Samuel 16:2, David's provisions are 'for the weary' who lack drink in the wilderness. Isaiah 40:29 promises God gives strength to those who have no might, parallel to 'the weary.' Isaiah 50:4 speaks of knowing how to sustain the weary with a word. The term captures not just tiredness but genuine depletion—whether from hunger, thirst, or the burdens of life—making divine sustenance all the more necessary and precious.

(3×) Those in a state of exhaustion or depletion, whether physical (from lack of food/drink) or spiritual (from life's burdens). The Isaianic Servant knows how to speak to such people, while Yahweh himself strengthens them. The contexts consistently portray the weary not as lazy but as depleted, making them appropriate objects of compassion and divine intervention. Multilingual glosses uniformly capture the exhaustion state ('weary', 'cansado', 'שׁלח'). WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION

en: the-weary, to-the-faint | es: al-cansado, el-cansado | fr: [יעף], [ליעף], le-weary | de: [יעף], [ליעף], der-weary 2Sam 16:2; Isa 40:29; Isa 50:4

יְעָף H3288 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

In weariness or swift flight, describing Gabriel's manner in Daniel 9:21

This difficult term in Daniel 9:21 has sparked interpretive debate. The traditional view sees weariness from winged flight (Gabriel arriving weary), while others render it simply 'in swift flight.' The Spanish 'en vuelo' (in flight) and French 'forme' show divergent interpretations. Lagarde identified it as an Aramaism. The context describes Gabriel's rapid arrival during Daniel's prayer.

(1×) An uncertain term in Daniel 9:21, probably meaning 'in weariness' or possibly 'in swift flight,' describing Gabriel's arrival to Daniel. The phrase 'caused to fly swiftly in weariness' suggests the angel's rapid transit from heaven, though the exact nuance remains debated. Cross-linguistic variation reflects the exegetical uncertainty surrounding this hapax expression. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: in-weariness | es: en-vuelo | fr: forme | de: [ביעף] Dan 9:21

יָעַץ H3289 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (79×)

To advise, counsel, consult together; as participle, a counselor; also to purpose, plan, or determine, especially of God's sovereign decree.

Ya'ats covers the full arc of deliberation — from the private act of planning in one's heart, through seeking and giving counsel between persons, to the grand theological claim that God himself 'purposes' and none can thwart it. The word's range is visible in its most famous contexts: Jethro counseling Moses on governance (Exod 18:19), Ahithophel whose advice 'was as if one consulted the oracle of God' (2 Sam 16:23), and Isaiah's messianic title yo'ets ('Wonderful Counselor,' Isa 9:6). Arabic wa'aza ('to exhort, admonish') preserves a cognate that has shifted toward moral instruction, while Hebrew ya'ats retains the broader deliberative-strategic sense. The participle yo'ets became a virtual political title in Israel's court, standing alongside the king's officers and military commanders.

1. to consult together (Niphal/Hitpael) (23×) Niphal/Hitpael reciprocal: to consult together, to take counsel mutually, to deliberate with others — 23 occurrences concentrated in the narrative books. Rehoboam 'consulted' with the elders, then with the young men (1 Kgs 12:6-9); Nehemiah 'consulted with himself' before acting (Neh 5:7). Arabic tashawara ('to consult mutually') and Korean 의논하다 ('to discuss/deliberate') both capture the reciprocal deliberative sense. The Niphal plural at Ps 83:5 describes nations 'consulting together' against God's people — collective strategizing with hostile intent. This sense emphasizes the communal, dialogical nature of counsel. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION en: advising, and-consulted, and-he-consulted | es: Y-aconsejaron, Y-consultó, Y-se-consejó | fr: [ויועץ], [ויועצו], [ונועצה] | de: [ונועצה], advising, raten 1Kgs 12:6; 1Kgs 12:8; 1Kgs 12:9; 1Kgs 12:28

2. counselor (Qal participle) (23×) Qal active participle substantivized: a counselor, adviser — 23 occurrences functioning as a title or office designation. Ahithophel is David's yo'ets (2 Sam 15:12); the chronicler lists 'counselors' among royal officials (1 Chr 27:32-33); Isaiah includes yo'ets in his catalogue of leaders removed from Jerusalem (Isa 3:3). Arabic mushir ('counselor'), Korean 모사 ('strategist/counselor'), and Swahili mshauri ('adviser') all select dedicated role-nouns rather than verbal paraphrases, confirming this as a lexicalized office term. The messianic title in Isa 9:6 — 'Wonderful Counselor' — elevates this political role to divine status. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: Counselor, a-counselor, a-counselor-of | es: Consejero, consejero, consejero-de | fr: [להליועץ], [ויועצין], [ויעצין] | de: Ratgeber, [ויועצין], [ויעץ] 2Sam 15:12; 1Chr 26:14; 1Chr 27:32; 1Chr 27:33; 2Chr 22:3

3. to counsel or advise (Qal) (18×) Qal active: to counsel, advise, give counsel to another — 18 occurrences emphasizing the direct act of advising. Jethro says to Moses 'I will counsel you' (Exod 18:19); Balaam tells Balak 'I will advise you' (Num 24:14); Ahithophel's counsel to Absalom was legendary (2 Sam 16:23; 17:7-11). Spanish aconsejar, German raten, and Korean 조언하다 all converge on interpersonal counsel-giving. The quality and reliability of the counsel given is often a narrative focus — Hushai's counsel 'defeats' Ahithophel's, with fatal consequences (2 Sam 17:14). COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: I-counsel, I-counsel-you, I-will-advise-you | es: Aconsejaste, aconsejaba, aconsejaste | fr: Je—advise-tu, [יעצהו], conseiller | de: [יעץ], [יעצת], counseled Exod 18:19; Num 24:14; 2Sam 16:23; 2Sam 17:7; 2Sam 17:11

4. to purpose, plan, or determine (Qal) (14×) Qal with emphasis on purposing, planning, or determining a course of action — 14 occurrences, often with God as subject expressing sovereign decree. In Isa 14:24-27 God declares 'as I have purposed, so it shall stand' and 'who will annul it?' In Isa 19:12 the rhetorical question is 'what has the LORD of hosts purposed against Egypt?' Arabic qasada/qada ('to intend/decree') and Korean 계획하다 ('to plan') both select volitional-determination vocabulary. This sense merges counsel with authority: God's 'counsel' is not advice but irrevocable determination. Ps 62:4 uses it of hostile human plotting: 'they consult only to cast him down.' COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: I-have-purposed, counseled, has-counseled | es: aconseja, aconsejó, consejó | fr: [יעץ], conseiller | de: Ratgeber, raten, riet 2Chr 25:16; Ps 62:4; Isa 7:5; Isa 14:24; Isa 14:27

5. (1×) Qal passive participle: the thing purposed or decreed — 1 occurrence at Isa 14:26, 'this is the purpose that is purposed concerning the whole earth.' The passive participle ha-ya'utsah treats the divine plan as an accomplished, characterized entity — the decree-already-determined. Spanish el aconsejado and German das Beschlossene substantivize the result of God's planning. This form completes the semantic arc from active deliberation (senses 1, 3) through sovereign determination (sense 4) to the finalized, irrevocable purpose standing over all nations. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: the-purposed | es: el-aconsejado | fr: conseiller | de: raten Isa 14:26

יַעֲקֹב H3290 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (349×)

Jacob; the patriarch (son of Isaac), later renamed Israel, and by extension the nation descended from him

Ya'aqov (Jacob) is one of the Bible's most prominent names, appearing 349 times as both a personal name and a national designation. The folk etymology in Genesis 25:26 connects it to 'aqev ('heel'), since Jacob grasped Esau's heel at birth, and the narrative of Genesis 27:36 puns on 'aqav ('to supplant'). Egyptian records mention a place called Ya'qub-'el, suggesting the name may have originally contained a divine element. As patriarch, Jacob received the name Israel after wrestling with God (Gen 32:28), and the name Jacob thereafter alternates with Israel as a designation for his descendants and their nation, especially in prophetic poetry.

Jacob (patriarch/nation) (349×) Proper masculine name of the patriarch, son of Isaac and Rebekah (Gen 25:26), whose 349 occurrences span his personal biography and his role as eponymous ancestor of the twelve tribes. The name is folk-etymologized from 'aqev ('heel,' Gen 25:26) and 'aqav ('to supplant,' Gen 27:36). After his theophany at Peniel he received the name Israel (Gen 32:28), and thereafter 'Jacob' and 'Israel' alternate as designations for the covenant people, especially in prophetic and poetic parallelism (Isa 41:8; Ps 14:7). JACOB JAMES NAMES

en: Jacob | es: Yaaqov | fr: Jacob | de: Jakob, Jakobs Gen 25:26; Gen 25:28; Gen 25:29; Gen 25:30; Gen 25:31

יַעֲקָבָה H3291 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ya'aqovah, a Simeonite name in 1 Chronicles 4:36

Ya'aqovah appears in the Simeonite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 4:36. The name may be a variant or derivative form related to Jacob (Ya'aqov), though the precise etymology is uncertain. Greek traditions vary (Iōkaba, Iakaba, Iekeba), showing the transliteration challenges. The genealogical context establishes Simeonite family lineage and territorial associations.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 4:36 within Simeonite genealogical records. The possible connection to the root meaning 'heel' or 'supplant' (as in Jacob) remains speculative, and the name's primary function is genealogical—preserving a family line within Simeon's tribal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ya'aqovah | es: y-Yaaqoba | fr: [ויעקבה] | de: [ויעקבה] 1Chr 4:36

עֲקָן H3292 N-proper-md (1×)
Ya'aqan, an Edomite name in 1 Chronicles 1:42, parallel to Akan in Genesis 36:27
Ya'aqan appears in the Edomite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 1:42, parallel to Akan in Genesis 36:27. The name also appears in the wilderness itinerary as 'wells of Bene-yaaqan.' Greek manuscript traditions show variation (Ōnan, Iaakan), typical of proper name transmission. The dual occurrence (personal and place name) reflects common ancient Near Eastern naming practices.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 1:42 identifying an Edomite descendant of Seir, parallel to Akan in Genesis 36:27. The name's appearance in both personal and geographical contexts (wells of Bene-yaaqan) illustrates how ancestral names often became attached to tribal territories and landmarks in ancient Near Eastern genealogical memory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ya'aqan | es: Yaaqan | fr: [יַעְקָן] | de: [יַעְקָן] 1Chr 1:42

יַעַר H3293a Prep-m / N-ms (56×)
Forest, wood, thicket; once as a place name (Yaar) associated with Kiriath-jearim Denotes a wooded area, forest, or dense thicket — the wild, untamed terrain that contrasts with cultivated land in the Hebrew imagination. Named forests like the 'forest of Lebanon' (1 Kgs 7:2), the 'forest of Hereth' (1 Sam 22:5), and the 'forest of Ephraim' (2 Sam 18:6) serve as settings for pivotal biblical events. Joshua 17:15–18 uses it practically: if the hill country is too narrow, go up to the forest and clear it. In Ps 132:6, the term appears to function as a place name (Yaar) linked to the Ark's sojourn at Kiriath-jearim, 'city of forests.' Translations across languages consistently render 'forest/bosque/forêt/Wald.'

1. forest, wood, thicket (55×) A forest, wood, or thicket (55x), referring to natural wooded terrain. Deut 19:5 envisions a man going with his neighbor into the יַעַר to cut trees, and 2 Sam 18:6–8 describes the forest of Ephraim consuming more soldiers than the sword in Absalom's rebellion. Jer 10:3 speaks of cutting wood from the forest to make an idol. Multilingual evidence ('forest/bosque/forêt/Wald') is unanimous in rendering natural woodland. The term carries occasional overtones of danger and wildness, as beasts of the forest threaten in Ps 50:10 and Isa 56:9. FOREST WOODLAND
en: forest, the-forest | es: bosque, el-bosque | fr: [היער], de-la-forêt,, forest | de: Wald, der-forest Deut 19:5; Josh 17:15; Josh 17:18; 1Sam 22:5; 2Sam 18:6

2. Yaar (place name) (1×) A place name 'Yaar' (1x) in Ps 132:6, within the liturgical recollection of finding the Ark: 'we heard of it in Ephrathah, we found it in the fields of Yaar.' This likely refers to Kiriath-jearim ('city of forests'), where the Ark rested for twenty years (1 Sam 7:1–2). The German gloss 'Yaar' preserves the proper-noun reading, while Spanish 'bosque' and French 'forêt' assimilate it to the common noun, obscuring the geographic reference. FOREST WOODLAND
en: Yaar | es: bosque | fr: forêt | de: Yaar Ps 132:6

יַעַר H3293b Prep-b (3×)
honeycomb (containing honey), wild honey in the forest
A noun denoting honeycomb filled with wild honey, distinct from the more common word for 'forest' (though possibly etymologically related). Found in three memorable passages: the difficult text of 1 Samuel 14:25-26 where Jonathan's eyes brighten after tasting honeycomb despite Saul's oath (the MT is obscure, but versions confirm honey/honeycomb); and Song of Songs 5:1 where the lover says 'I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey.' The term captures wild honey still in its natural comb, as opposed to extracted honey, suggesting sweetness in its most natural and abundant form—a rare delicacy in the ancient world where sugar was unknown.

(3×) The honeycomb structure containing wild honey, discovered in forests or rocky areas. Jonathan's encounter with forest honeycomb (where 'the bees had departed,' per LXX) portrays honey as providential sustenance in wilderness contexts. In Song of Songs, eating honeycomb with honey intensifies the imagery of sweetness and satisfaction. The term appears in settings where wild honey represents unexpected blessing or sensory delight beyond cultivated provision. FOREST WOODLAND en: into-the-forest, my-honeycomb, the-forest | es: el-bosque, en-el-bosque, mi-panal | fr: dans-le-forest, le-forest, mon-rayon-de-miel | de: [יַעַר], der-forest, hinein-der-forest 1Sam 14:25; 1Sam 14:26; Song 5:1

יַעְרָה H3294 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Jarah (proper name: descendant of Saul, possibly corrupt text for Jehoaddah)
This name appears only in the genealogy of Saul's descendants in Chronicles, but scholars widely regard it as a textual corruption of Jehoaddah, which appears in the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 8. The name as it stands would derive from a root meaning 'forest' or 'honeycomb,' but the scholarly consensus favors seeing it as a scribal error. Both occurrences appear in the same verse in the genealogical record, representing the repeated name structure common in biblical genealogies.

(2×) A proper name appearing in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 9:42, twice), which BDB identifies as probably corrupt for 'Jehoaddah' based on the parallel in 1 Chronicles 8:36. If genuine, it would mean 'forest' or similar. Transliterations preserve the form: English 'Jarah' or 'Yarah,' Spanish 'Yaara,' French and German maintain the Hebrew, though most scholars consider this a scribal error for the name that appears in the parallel genealogy. The textual uncertainty leaves the true name of this Saulide descendant in doubt. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yarah, and-Yarah | es: Yaara, y-Yaara | fr: [ויערה], [יערה] | de: [ויערה], [יערה] 1Chr 9:42

יַעְרָה H3295 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)
In the honeycomb of, a construct form appearing in 1 Samuel 14:27
This rare construct form appears when Jonathan dips his staff into the honeycomb in 1 Samuel 14:27. The phrase 'honeycomb of honey' uses construct syntax to specify the forest honey available during the battle with the Philistines. The multilingual glosses consistently preserve the honeycomb imagery, though some Germanic traditions leave it transliterated, suggesting lexical uncertainty.

(1×) A construct form meaning 'honeycomb of' in 1 Samuel 14:27, appearing in the narrative of Jonathan's unwitting violation of Saul's oath. The phrase 'in the honeycomb of honey' emphasizes the forest honey's natural abundance, contrasting with the enforced fast that weakened Israel's troops during battle. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-honeycomb-of | es: en-panal-de | fr: dans-honeycomb-de | de: in-honeycomb-von 1Sam 14:27

יַעֲרֵי אֹרְגִים H3296 N-proper-ms (2×)
Jaare-Oregim, father of Elhanan mentioned in 2 Samuel 21:19; likely a scribal error
This proper name appears in 2 Samuel 21:19 as the father of Elhanan, one of David's warriors. Most scholars view it as a textual corruption, comparing it with the parallel account in 1 Chronicles 20:5 which reads "Jair." The name may have arisen from scribal anticipation of "Oregim" (weavers) in the following line, leading to a compound form that doesn't appear elsewhere in Scripture.

(2×) Appears only in 2 Samuel 21:19 in connection with Elhanan's genealogy. The widespread scholarly consensus, reflected in BDB and textual commentaries, is that this represents a corrupted reading. The multilingual glosses preserve the unusual form (Oregim, Yaare) while recognizing its problematic status through question marks and brackets in some traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jaare, Oregim | es: Oreguim, Yaare | fr: Jaare, Oregim | de: Jaare, Oregim 2Sam 21:19

יְעָרִים H3297 N-proper-fs (1×)
Mount Yearim, a geographical location in Joshua 15:10 identified with Kesalon
Mount Yearim appears in the border description of Judah in Joshua 15:10, where it is explained as equivalent to Kesalon (modern Kesla), northeast of Beth-shemesh. The name means 'mount of forests,' and Greek traditions render it as 'city of Iarain.' The geographical marker helps define tribal boundaries in the allotment narratives.

(1×) A place name in Joshua 15:10 designating a mountain on Judah's northern border, identified with Kesalon (modern Kesla). The reference to 'mount of forests' connects to the root for forest/woodland, and the boundary description helps establish the territorial limits of Judah's inheritance in the conquest allocation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yearim | es: Jearim | fr: Yearim | de: Yearim Josh 15:10

יַעַרְשְׁיָה H3298 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yaareshyah, a Benjamite name in 1 Chronicles 8:27
Yaareshyah appears in the Benjamite genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 8:27. The name's etymology is uncertain, and Greek manuscript traditions show variation (Iasaraia, Iarasia, Iersia). These genealogical lists in Chronicles function to maintain tribal identity and legitimacy, particularly important for the Benjamite community's post-exilic self-understanding.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 8:27 within Benjamin's genealogical framework. The single occurrence and uncertain etymology are typical of genealogical preservation, where names maintain family memory and tribal continuity even when their original meanings have become obscure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yaareshyah | es: Y-Yaaresías | fr: [ויערשיה] | de: [ויערשיה] 1Chr 8:27

יעשׂו H3299 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Yaasu/Yaasai, an Israelite who married a foreign wife during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:37)
This name appears twice in Ezra 10:37, once in the consonantal text (Ketiv) and once in the marginal reading (Qere), representing a common scribal practice of preserving variant readings. The individual is listed among those who had taken foreign wives and were compelled to divorce them during Ezra's religious reforms. The Septuagint renders it as "and they did," suggesting some textual confusion in the Greek tradition.

(2×) Found exclusively in Ezra 10:37 among the list of men with foreign wives. The dual attestation (Ketiv/Qere) shows textual uncertainty about the precise vocalization. Spanish and English preserve both forms (Yaasu/Yaasai), while French and German maintain the Hebrew consonantal spelling in brackets, reflecting the manuscript variation. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [and-Yaasu], and-Yaasay | es: [y-Yaasu], y-Yaasai | fr: [ויעשו], [ויעש] | de: [(ויעש)], [[ויעשו]] Ezra 10:37

יַעֲשִׂיאֵל H3300 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Yaasiel, the name of two men: a warrior of David (1 Chr 11:47) and a Benjamite ruler (1 Chr 27:21)
This personal name designates two distinct individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies and military rosters. The first Yaasiel was one of David's mighty warriors listed in the expanded roster found only in Chronicles. The second served as a tribal leader over Benjamin during David's administrative organization. The name appears with the conjunction "and" in one occurrence, showing its integration into narrative lists.

(2×) Attested in 1 Chronicles 11:47 and 27:21 for two separate individuals. The Septuagint variations (Iessiēl, Aseiēr, Iassiēl) show the expected Greek adaptation of the Hebrew name. Multilingual glosses preserve both the simple form and the conjunctive form, with French and German maintaining Hebrew script in brackets to indicate textual precision. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yaasiel, and-Yaasiel | es: Jaasiel, y-Yaasiel | fr: [ויעשיאל], [יעשיאל] | de: [ויעשיאל], [יעשיאל] 1Chr 11:47; 1Chr 27:21

יִפְדֵיָה H3301 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yifdeiyah, a Benjamite name in 1 Chronicles 8:25, possibly related to redemption
Yifdeiyah appears in Benjamin's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 8:25. BDB cross-references the root pādâ (to redeem), suggesting the name may mean 'Yahweh redeems.' Such theophoric names were common in Israelite naming practices, expressing theological convictions about God's character and activity. The genealogical context serves to establish legitimate Benjamite lineage.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 8:25 identifying a Benjamite. The likely etymology from the root 'redeem' suggests a theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh redeems,' reflecting the common practice of encoding theological affirmations within personal names that commemorated divine attributes or family circumstances. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yifdeiyah | es: Y-Yifdeyás | fr: [ויפדיה] | de: [ויפדיה] 1Chr 8:25

יָפָה H3302 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms / 3ms (7×)
Verb meaning 'to be beautiful, be fair' (Qal); 'to beautify, adorn' (Piel); 'to make oneself beautiful' (Hitpael).
The verbal root behind the famous adjective yafeh ('beautiful'), this word moves from describing inherent beauty to the active creation of it. In the Qal stem it celebrates natural loveliness: the beloved's caresses in Song of Solomon 4:10, the graceful feet of the Shulammite in 7:1, and Jerusalem's transformation into breathtaking beauty in Ezekiel 16:13. The Piel and Hitpael stems shift to intentional beautification: craftsmen adorning an idol with silver in Jeremiah 10:4, and Judah painting her eyes and decking herself out to attract allies in Jeremiah 4:30. The Spanish hermosa and French belle consistently render the stative beauty, while the reflexive te-embelleces captures the self-adornment vividly.

1. be beautiful, be fair (5×) To be beautiful, to be fair in appearance (Qal). Describes intrinsic or God-given beauty. Song of Solomon 4:10 exclaims 'how beautiful are your caresses,' and 7:6 declares 'how beautiful you are, O loved one.' Ezekiel 16:13 narrates Jerusalem becoming exceedingly beautiful under God's adornment, while Ezekiel 31:7 describes Egypt's greatness under the figure of a magnificent tree. Psalm 45:2 praises the king as 'fairer than the sons of men.' French tu-es-belle and Spanish hermosa reflect the stative, descriptive force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: You-are-fairer, and-it-was-beautiful, and-you-became-beautiful | es: Eres-hermoso, Y-era-hermoso, hermosa | fr: et-être-beau, sont-belles, tu-es-belle | de: [ויי֫ף], [ותיפי], [יפו] Ps 45:2; Song 4:10; Song 7:6; Ezek 16:13; Ezek 31:7

2. make beautiful, adorn (2×) To beautify, adorn, or make beautiful, covering the Piel causative and Hitpael reflexive stems. In Jeremiah 10:4 the Piel yeyappehu describes craftsmen beautifying an idol with silver and gold overlays. In Jeremiah 4:30 the Hitpael tittyappi portrays Judah adorning herself, painting her eyes and decking herself in crimson to attract lovers who will ultimately reject her. Spanish lo-embellecen and te-embelleces effectively distinguish the transitive and reflexive applications of this active beautification sense. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE
en: they-beautify-it, you-make-yourself-beautiful | es: lo-embellecen, te-embelleces | fr: [ייפהו], [תתיפי] | de: [ייפהו], [תתיפי] Jer 4:30; Jer 10:4

יָפֶה H3303 Adj-fpc (43×)
Beautiful, handsome, fair (of persons, animals, objects); occasionally 'fitting' or 'appropriate' in wisdom contexts.
One of the primary Hebrew words for physical beauty, applied to both men and women throughout the Old Testament. Sarah is 'beautiful of appearance' (Gen 12:11), Rachel is 'beautiful of form and beautiful of appearance' (Gen 29:17), Joseph is 'handsome of form' (Gen 39:6), and even Pharaoh's cows are 'beautiful of appearance' (Gen 41:2). Spanish 'hermosa/hermoso,' French 'beau/belle,' and German 'schon' all converge on aesthetic attractiveness. In Song of Songs, it becomes a term of endearment – 'my beautiful one' (Song 1:8; 2:10, 13). Qoheleth extends the word beyond physical appearance: God has made everything 'fitting' in its time (Eccl 3:11), where beauty shades into appropriateness and proper order.

1. beautiful, handsome, fair (41×) Physical beauty or handsomeness of persons, animals, or objects. Used of women (Gen 12:11, 14; 1 Sam 25:3; Esth 2:7), men (2 Sam 14:25; 1 Kgs 1:6), cows (Gen 41:2, 4), and trees (Jer 11:16). The construct phrase 'beautiful of form/appearance' (yephat-toar, yephat-mareh) is formulaic. Spanish 'hermosa,' French 'belle/beau,' and German 'schon' all consistently render aesthetic attractiveness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-beautiful-of, beautiful, beautiful-of | es: Hermosa, hermosa, hermosa-de | fr: Belle, beau, beau-de | de: schoen, schoen-von, schön Gen 12:11; Gen 12:14; Gen 29:17; Gen 39:6

2. fitting, appropriate (2×) Fitting, appropriate, or suitable for its context. Found in Ecclesiastes where Qoheleth declares God has made everything 'beautiful/fitting' in its time (Eccl 3:11) and observes what is 'good and fitting' for a person (Eccl 5:18). The semantic shift from visual beauty to propriety is subtle – Spanish still uses 'hermoso,' but the contextual force is closer to 'apt' or 'right.' This wisdom usage anticipates the Greek kalos. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beautiful, fitting | es: es-hermoso, hermoso | fr: beau | de: schoen Eccl 3:11; Eccl 5:18

יְפֵה־פִיָּה H3304 Adj-fs (2×)
A reduplicative adjective meaning "very pretty" or "beautiful," used of Egypt as a heifer in Jeremiah 46:20
This unusual form appears only in Jeremiah 46:20, where Egypt is compared to a beautiful heifer. The word employs reduplication, a Hebrew device that intensifies meaning or adds a diminutive quality, similar to forms like "reddish" or "greenish." BDB suggests the original vocalization was likely "yephephiyyah" rather than the Masoretic "yepheh-piyyah." The Septuagint translates it as "adorned" or "beautified," capturing the aesthetic dimension.

(2×) Exclusively used in Jeremiah 46:20 in the prophetic oracle against Egypt. The reduplicative structure creates emphasis on the heifer's beauty, making the coming judgment more striking. Spanish renders it straightforwardly as "hermosa" (beautiful), while French and German preserve the Hebrew components in brackets, acknowledging the compound's unusual morphology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beautiful-, fair | es: hermosa | fr: [יפה], [פיה] | de: [יפה], [פיה] Jer 46:20

יָפוֹ H3305 N-proper-fs (4×)
Joppa (modern Jaffa), a Mediterranean seaport town assigned to Dan, northwest of Jerusalem
Joppa served as ancient Israel's primary Mediterranean seaport, the harbor where Jonah attempted to flee from God's command and where timber from Lebanon arrived for Solomon's and Zerubbabel's temple projects. Located on the coast northwest of Jerusalem, this city appears in Egyptian, Assyrian, and Phoenician records under similar names (Ye-pu, Jappu), confirming its longstanding strategic importance. The Greeks knew it as Ioppa, and it became the Lydda of New Testament times, where Peter ministered.

(4×) Joppa appears as the coastal destination for cedar timber floated from Lebanon to build the second temple (2Chr 2:16; Ezra 3:7), assigned to the tribal territory of Dan in Joshua's land distribution (Josh 19:46), and most memorably as the port where Jonah boarded a ship bound for Tarshish in his attempt to flee from God's command to preach to Nineveh (Jonah 1:3). The multilingual glosses show phonetic preservation: Spanish Jope/Yafo, French Japho/Yapho, German Jafo/Yapho, all maintaining recognizable equivalents of the two Hebrew spellings (יפו and יפוא). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yafo, Yapho, to-Yapho | es: Jope, Yafo, a-Yafo | fr: Japho, Yapho, [יכו] | de: Jafo, Yapho, [יפו] Josh 19:46; 2Chr 2:16; Ezra 3:7; Jonah 1:3

יָפַח H3306 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3fs (1×)
Gasping for breath (Hithpael), describing a woman in labor in Jeremiah 4:31
This Hithpael form describes Daughter Zion gasping for breath like a woman in her first labor in Jeremiah 4:31. The reflexive stem emphasizes the involuntary, desperate nature of the breathing. The image is one of extreme distress and vulnerability, fitting Jeremiah's vivid description of coming judgment. The verb is a by-form of the more common pûaḥ (to puff, breathe).

(1×) A Hithpael imperfect meaning 'gasping for breath' in Jeremiah 4:31, used of Daughter Zion's desperate condition under judgment. The reflexive stem and the comparison to a woman in first labor both heighten the imagery of involuntary distress, while the Spanish 'jadea' (gasps, pants) preserves the labored breathing connotation. BLOWING AND BREATHING
en: gasping | es: que-jadea | fr: [תתיפח] | de: [תתיפח] Jer 4:31

יָפֵחַ H3307 Conj-w / Adj-msc (1×)
One breathing out violence, a participial phrase in Psalm 27:12
This rare participial adjective describes enemies who 'breathe out' or 'puff out' violence in Psalm 27:12. The imagery suggests menacing intent expressed through speech or aggressive posture. The construct relationship 'one breathing out violence' captures the threatening demeanor of David's adversaries. Spanish 'el que respira' (one who breathes) and French 'soufflant' (blowing) both preserve the breathing metaphor.

(1×) A participial adjective meaning 'one breathing out' or 'puffing out' in Psalm 27:12, used with 'violence' to describe threatening enemies. The image evokes aggressive speech or menacing posture, fitting the lament context where David seeks protection from adversaries whose very bearing communicates hostile intent. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-one-breathing-out | es: y-el-que-respira | fr: et-soufflant | de: und-einer-breathing-heraus Ps 27:12

יְפִי H3308 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (19×)
Beauty, splendor, comeliness — outward loveliness of persons, cities, or the land Denotes physical beauty, splendor, or aesthetic perfection. In Scripture this word is used of a woman's attractiveness (Prov 6:25; Esth 1:11), the ideal beauty of a king (Isa 33:17), the perfection of Zion (Ps 50:2, 'the perfection of beauty'), and the splendid adornment of Tyre and its prince (Ezek 27–28). The term carries an undertone of warning: Proverbs 31:30 declares beauty 'vain,' and Ezekiel shows how Tyre's beauty led to pride and downfall. Spanish 'belleza' and German 'Schoenheit' both capture the same broad semantic range from personal attractiveness to civic grandeur.

beauty, splendor (19×) Physical beauty or aesthetic splendor, predicated of persons (a bride's comeliness in Ps 45:11; a king's ideal form in Isa 33:17), cities (Zion as 'perfection of beauty' in Ps 50:2; Tyre's maritime glory in Ezek 27:3–4), and the bounty of the land (Zech 9:17). Spanish 'belleza' and German 'Schoenheit' both map to this single sense. The term often appears in contexts where beauty becomes a source of either praise or peril, as in Ezekiel 28:17 where splendor corrupts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: beauty, beauty-of-, beauty-your | es: belleza, en-hermosura-de-ti, en-su-

belleza | fr: [ביפיו], [יפי], [יפיה] | de: Schoenheit, [ביפיו], [היפי] Esth 1:11; Ps 45:11; Ps 50:2; Prov 6:25; Prov 31:30

יְפִיעַ H3309 N-proper-ms (5×)

Japhia; a personal name and place name, possibly meaning 'he shines forth'

A name borne by both persons and a place, likely derived from the root yāpha' ('to shine, be radiant'). As a personal name, Japhia designates a Canaanite king of Lachish who joined the coalition against Gibeon (Josh 10:3) and also a son of David born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:15; 1 Chr 3:7; 14:6). As a place name, Japhia marks a town on the border of Zebulun (Josh 19:12), possibly modern Yafa near Nazareth. The LXX renders the royal name as Iephtha but the Davidic son differently, suggesting early textual fluidity.

(5×) A proper name applied to both persons and a locale. The Canaanite king Japhia of Lachish joined four other kings against Joshua at Gibeon (Josh 10:3). David's son Japhia was born during the Jerusalem period (2 Sam 5:15; 1 Chr 3:7; 14:6). The town Japhia on Zebulun's border (Josh 19:12) may be modern Yafa near Nazareth. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'Jafía,' French/German 'Yaphia' — consistently transliterate, while the varied LXX forms (Iephtha, Ianue, Iaphie) reveal early transmission complexity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yaphia, and-Yafia, and-Yaphi'a | es: Jafía, a-Jafía, y-Yafia | fr: Yaphia, [ויפיע], et-Yafia | de: Yaphia, [ויפיע], und-Yafia Josh 10:3; Josh 19:12; 2Sam 5:15; 1Chr 3:7; 1Chr 14:6

יַפְלֵט H3310 N-proper-ms (3×)

Yaflet/Japhlet, Asherite personal name in genealogical records

A personal name appearing exclusively in the genealogies of the tribe of Asher in 1 Chronicles 7:32-33. The name appears three times in rapid succession as both a descendant of Heber (v. 32, where one manuscript reads יַפְלָט instead) and as ancestor of other Asherites (v. 33, twice). The Greek versions render it variously (Ιφαμηλ, Αφαληκ, Ιαφαλητ), showing the typical uncertainty in transliterating Hebrew proper names. The etymology and meaning remain obscure, though the root may relate to deliverance or escape (פלט).

(3×) An Asherite personal name preserved in Chronicles' genealogical framework. The triple occurrence within two verses establishes Yaflet as a significant link in Asher's lineage, though we know nothing of his individual story. The textual variants (Yaflet/Yaflat) and diverse Greek renderings demonstrate the challenges of preserving and transmitting proper names through multiple scribal hands and linguistic systems. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yaflet | es: Yaflet | fr: [יפלט] | de: [יפלט] 1Chr 7:32; 1Chr 7:33

יַפְלֵטִי H3311 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Japhletites, a clan or family on the southwestern border of Ephraim

The Japhletites appear as a gentilics (clan designation) marking Ephraim's southwestern border in Joshua 16:3. The definite article with the gentilic functions as a collective noun—'the territory of the Japhletites.' Greek traditions vary (Aphtaleim, Iephalti), and the group's identity beyond this border reference is uncertain. Such markers were crucial for tribal land allocation.

(1×) A gentilic (clan designation) in Joshua 16:3 marking the southwestern border of Ephraim's tribal allotment. The use of the definite article creates a collective sense—'the Japhletite territory'—functioning as a geographical landmark in the distribution of the promised land among the tribes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Yaphleti | es: el-jafletita | fr: le-Yaphleti | de: der-Yaphleti Josh 16:3

יְפֻנֶּה H3312 N-proper-ms (16×)

Jephunneh — a proper name borne by the father of Caleb the Kenizzite and by an Asherite clan head.

A personal name (Yephunneh) carried primarily by the father of Caleb, the faithful spy who survived the wilderness generation alongside Joshua. The name appears in nearly every passage recounting Caleb's loyalty: his selection as Judah's scout (Num 13:6), his exemption from the wilderness decree (Num 14:6, 30, 38; 26:65; 32:12; Deut 1:36), and his inheritance claim at Hebron (Josh 14:6, 13, 14; 15:13; 21:12). A second Jephunneh appears briefly as an Asherite in 1 Chronicles 7:38. The name's etymology is uncertain but may relate to the root panah, 'to turn,' perhaps meaning 'he was turned [toward God].' All major translations transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Jefone,' French 'Jephunne,' German 'Jephunneh.'

Jephunneh (proper name) (16×) The proper name Yephunneh (Jephunneh), identifying primarily the father of Caleb the Kenizzite, who with Joshua alone survived the wilderness generation because of his wholehearted faithfulness (Num 14:6, 30; 26:65; 32:12; Deut 1:36). Also borne by a minor Asherite figure (1 Chr 7:38). The Septuagint renders it as Iephonne, and modern translations uniformly transliterate — Spanish 'Jefone/Jefune,' French 'Jephunne/Yephunneh' — confirming its status as a personal name throughout. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jephunneh, Yefunneh, Yephunneh | es: Jefone, Jefoné, Jefune | fr: Jephunneh, Jephunné, Yephunneh | de: Jephunneh, Yephunneh, [יפנה] Num 13:6; Num 14:6; Num 14:30; Num 14:38; Num 26:65

יָפַע H3313 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (8×)

To shine forth, radiate beams of light; used especially of God's theophanic glory breaking through in splendor.

This Hiphil verb captures the dramatic moment when light bursts forth — particularly the radiant splendor of God's appearing. In Deuteronomy 33:2, YHWH 'shone forth' from Mount Paran in the great theophanic blessing of Moses. Psalm 50:2 declares that from Zion, the perfection of beauty, God has 'shone forth.' The verb carries an almost physical force: light does not merely exist but actively breaks out and displays itself. In Job's speeches it describes both longed-for and terrifying luminosity (Job 3:4; 10:22; 37:15). Spanish captures the range beautifully with 'resplandece/resplandeció,' emphasizing radiant splendor.

shine forth / cause to shine (8×) To shine forth, send out beams, cause to radiate — exclusively in the Hiphil, describing the active bursting-forth of light. Primarily theophanic: God shines forth from Paran (Deut 33:2), from Zion (Ps 50:2), and is invoked to appear in radiance (Ps 80:2; 94:1). In Job it describes both desired light (3:4) and the terrifying brightness of storm-clouds (37:15). Spanish 'resplandeció' and French 'briller' both convey the active radiance this verb denotes. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING

en: You-shine, and-causes-to-shine, and-it-shines | es: apareció, resplandece, resplandeció | fr: briller, et-briller, le-briller | de: [הופיע], [והופיע], [ותפע] Deut 33:2; Job 3:4; Job 10:3; Job 10:22; Job 37:15

יְפְעָה H3314 N-fsc / 2ms (2×)

Brightness, splendor; used of the glory of the prince of Tyre in Ezekiel 28:7, 17

This feminine noun denotes radiant beauty or splendor, appearing only in Ezekiel's oracle against the prince of Tyre. The prophet uses it twice with a pronominal suffix ("your splendor") to describe the magnificent glory that will be profaned and destroyed. The word captures both physical brilliance and the honor or majesty associated with royal power, making its destruction all the more dramatic in the prophetic judgment scene.

(2×) Found exclusively in Ezekiel 28:7 and 17 within the taunt against Tyre's ruler. The context emphasizes hubris and coming humiliation: the splendor that led to pride will be cast down. Spanish "esplendor" and French "briller" both capture the luminous quality, while German preserves the Hebrew form, reflecting the word's rare and specialized usage. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: your-splendor | es: tu-esplendor | fr: briller | de: [יפעתך] Ezek 28:7; Ezek 28:17

יֶפֶת H3315 N-proper-ms (11×)

Japheth (יֶפֶת) — third son of Noah; ancestor of the peoples spread across Asia Minor and the coastlands

Japheth (יֶפֶת) is one of Noah's three sons, consistently listed alongside Shem and Ham. The name may derive from the root פתה ('to be open, spacious'), a connection exploited in Noah's blessing: 'May God enlarge (יַפְתְּ) Japheth' (Gen 9:27). Japheth's fourteen descendants enumerated in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2-5) include Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras — peoples traditionally associated with Anatolia, the Aegean, the Iranian plateau, and the Black Sea coastlands. Japheth and Shem together covered their father's nakedness (Gen 9:23), earning a contrasting blessing to Ham's curse. The name reappears in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 1:4-5).

Japheth (proper name) (11×) The third son of Noah and brother of Shem and Ham, ancestor of peoples associated with Asia Minor, the Mediterranean coastlands, and regions to the north. Listed in birth-order contexts (Gen 5:32; 6:10; 7:13; 9:18; 10:1; 1 Chr 1:4) and in the Table of Nations as father of seven sons (Gen 10:2-5; 1 Chr 1:5). Received Noah's blessing of 'enlargement' through a wordplay on his name (Gen 9:27). Spanish 'Jafet' and English 'Japheth' both preserve the Hebrew form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Japheth, Yapheth, Yepheth | es: Yafet, Yefet, a-Yafet | fr: Japhet, Japheth, et-Japhet | de: Japhet, Japhets, [יכת] Gen 5:32; Gen 6:10; Gen 7:13; Gen 9:18; Gen 9:23

יִפְתָּח H3316 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (30×)

Yiphtach — 'he opens'; the Gileadite judge Jephthah (Judg 11-12), and a town in Judah's lowlands (Josh 15:43)

A proper name meaning 'he opens' (from patach), borne most prominently by Jephthah the Gileadite, a warrior-judge who delivered Israel from the Ammonites despite his tragic vow (Judg 11:1-12:7). Samuel later lists Jephthah among the faithful judges God raised up (1 Sam 12:11). A single occurrence designates a different referent entirely: Iphtah, a town in Judah's Shephelah listed alongside Ashnah and Nezib (Josh 15:43). The feminine singular grammar in Joshua confirms the place-name usage. Spanish Yiftaj and French Jephte reflect the personal name, while German und-Yiphtach renders the place name in its list context.

1. Jephthah (person) (29×) Jephthah the Gileadite — a judge of Israel whose story dominates Judges 11-12. Son of Gilead by a prostitute, he was expelled by his half-brothers, became a leader of outlaws, then was recalled to fight the Ammonites. His rash vow and its fulfillment (Judg 11:30-40) make him one of Scripture's most complex figures. Samuel remembers him among divinely appointed deliverers (1 Sam 12:11). Spanish Yiftaj, French Jephte, and German Jeftah all transliterate the name consistently across their respective traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jephthah | es: Yiftáj | fr: Jephté | de: Jeftah Judg 11:1; Judg 11:2; Judg 11:3

2. Iphtah (place name) (1×) Iphtah — a town in the Shephelah (lowland) of Judah listed in Joshua's tribal allotment (Josh 15:43), grouped with Ashnah and Nezib. The feminine singular grammatical marking (N-proper-fs) distinguishes this place name from the masculine personal name. This is a hapax for the geographic sense. German und-Yiphtach and Spanish y-Jifta both render it as a simple list item, reflecting the cadastral context of Joshua's boundary descriptions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yiphtach | es: y-Jiftá | fr: et-Yiphtach | de: und-Yiphtach Josh 15:43

יִפְתַּח־אֵל H3317 N-proper-ms (2×)

Iphtah-el, a valley forming a boundary between Zebulun and Asher (Joshua 19:14, 27)

This place name means "God opens" and designates a valley that served as a tribal boundary marker in the Promised Land allotments. Located near Jefat (ancient Jotapata), it likely corresponds to the upper portion of Wady Abellin in Galilee. The valley appears in Joshua's boundary descriptions for both Zebulun and Asher, marking a shared geographic reference point between the two northern tribes. (2×) Attested in Joshua 19:14 and 27 in boundary contexts. The Septuagint shows variation (Gaiphael, Gai kai Phthaiel) in attempting to render the compound Hebrew name. All major translation traditions preserve the proper-name status, with slight variations in transliteration (Jifta-el in Spanish, Yiphtach-El in English and others). EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Yiphtach-El | es: Jifta-el | fr: Yiphtach-El | de: Yiphtach-El Josh 19:14; Josh 19:27

יָצָא H3318 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms / 2ms (1075×)

To go out, come forth, depart; in Hifil, to bring out, lead forth, produce. The fundamental Hebrew verb of outward movement.

Yatsa is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for every kind of outward movement — a person leaving a house, an army marching out to battle, water flowing from a spring, words proceeding from a mouth, offspring coming forth from a womb. With over a thousand occurrences, it anchors some of Scripture's most defining moments: Israel's exodus from Egypt, the sun rising over Sodom as Lot escapes (Gen 19:23), and the fire that 'went out from before the LORD' on Sinai (Lev 9:24). The Hifil causative adds a theological agent to the movement: God is the one who 'brought Israel out of Egypt,' a formula repeated so often it becomes virtually creedal. Arabic kharaja (Qal) and akhraja (Hifil) mirror the Hebrew stem pattern almost exactly, while Korean 나가다/나오다 ('go out'/'come out') and Swahili -toka ('exit') confirm the spatial core across language families.

1. Qal: go out, depart, come forth (890×) Qal intransitive: to go out, come forth, depart — the overwhelming base sense at 891 occurrences. Physical movement outward from an enclosed or defined space: leaving a city (Gen 14:8), departing a tent (Gen 31:33), emerging from an ark (Gen 8:7), escaping a doomed place (Gen 19:14). Arabic kharaja and Korean 나가다 both select basic exit vocabulary. The range extends naturally to water 'going forth' from springs, fire 'coming out' from the LORD's presence, and descendants 'proceeding' from a patriarch's loins — all unified by the directional schema of inside-to-outside. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-came-out, and-he-went-out, and-went-out | es: Y-salió, y-salió | fr: et-alla-dehors, et-il-alla-dehors, et-sortit | de: und-auszog, und-er-flog-hinaus, und-er-ging-heraus Gen 8:7; Gen 14:8; Gen 19:14; Gen 31:33; Gen 34:6

2. Hifil: bring out, lead out, take out (persons) (172×) Hifil causative with persons: to bring out, lead out, take out — 172 occurrences, dominated by the Exodus formula 'who brought you out of the land of Egypt' (Exod 6:13, 6:27; Deut 5:6). The causative adds a powerful agent: God, Moses, or a human leader causes people to exit bondage, prison, or danger. Arabic akhraja (Form IV causative) mirrors the Hebrew morphology exactly, and both Spanish sacó ('took out') and German brachte-heraus ('brought out') consistently select causative extraction vocabulary. This is arguably the most theologically loaded sense of the verb. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-He-brought-out, and-brought-out, and-he-brought-out | es: E-hizo-salir, Y-me-sacó, Y-sacó | fr: apporta-dehors, et-Il-apporta-dehors, et-apporta-dehors | de: brachte-heraus, und-Er-brachte-heraus, und-He-brachte-heraus Gen 14:18; Gen 43:23; Exod 6:13; Exod 6:27; Exod 8:18

3. Hifil: bring forth, produce, utter (11×) Hifil causative with non-personal objects: to bring forth, produce, utter — 11 occurrences where what is 'brought out' is not a person but a thing, utterance, or natural product. Aaron's rod 'brings forth' buds and almonds (Num 17:8); the spies 'bring forth' an evil report (Num 14:37); a wife is to be 'put out' in divorce proceedings (Ezra 10:3, 19). The shift from person-extraction to thing-production is cross-linguistically marked: Spanish uses sacar ('extract') or producir ('produce') rather than the liberation vocabulary of sense 2, and Korean shifts from 이끌어내다 ('lead out') to 내다 ('put forth, produce'). GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-bringing-out, and-brought-forth, and-he-who-utters | es: Sacadla, el-que-saca, para-despedir | fr: bringers-dehors-de, de-sortir, et-apporta-forth | de: bringers-heraus-von, ging-heraus, herausgehen Num 14:37; Num 17:8; 2Chr 23:14; Ezra 10:3; Ezra 10:19

4. (1×) Hofal passive: to be brought out — a single occurrence at Ezek 38:8 where Israel is described as a people 'brought out from the sword,' using the passive of the Hifil. The agent is implied (God) and the focus falls on the nation as recipient of deliverance rather than the deliverer. English 'was brought out,' Spanish fue sacada, and French sortir all render the passive accurately. Though only one clear occurrence, the Hofal form is morphologically and semantically distinct from the active Hifil. GOING OUT AND FORTH en: was-brought-out | es: fue-sacada, | fr: sortir | de: herausgehen Ezek 38:8

5. (1×) Qal with celestial/natural subject: going forth of the sun — a specialized occurrence at Gen 19:23 where 'the sun had gone forth upon the earth' as Lot entered Zoar. While structurally identical to sense 1 (intransitive outward movement), the subject is not a person but a heavenly body, and the sense is 'to rise, to come up.' German war-aufgegangen ('had risen') and Korean 떠올랐다 ('rose up') both select dedicated sunrise vocabulary rather than generic 'exit' words, suggesting this astronomical usage is a lexicalized subsense recognized cross-linguistically. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: came-out | es: salió | fr: vint-dehors | de: war-aufgegangen Gen 19:23

שִׁצִיא H3319 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

Was completed or finished (Aramaic Shafel), describing the temple's completion in Ezra 6:15

This Aramaic verb describes the completion of the Second Temple in Ezra 6:15. Scholars identify it as a Shafel (causative) stem of a root borrowed from Assyrian (šûṣû, bring out to completion). Textual critics suggest reading the plural 'they finished' rather than singular, following some Greek manuscripts. The completion marks the culmination of the post-exilic community's restoration efforts.

(1×) An Aramaic verbal form meaning 'was completed' in Ezra 6:15, describing the Second Temple's construction finish. The form represents an Assyrian loanword in Aramaic (from yṣ°/wṣ°), and textual evidence suggests reading a plural 'they finished' with the community as subject, emphasizing the collective achievement of the restoration generation. FULFILL AND COMPLETE en: and-was-completed | es: y-fue-terminada | fr: [ושיציא] | de: [ושיציא] Ezra 6:15

יְצַב H3320 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-3cp (48×)

To station oneself, take one's stand; Hithpael reflexive: present oneself before God or authority, stand firm, withstand.

Yatsab appears exclusively in the Hithpael stem in Biblical Hebrew, giving it an inherently reflexive and deliberate quality — one does not merely stand, but stations oneself with purpose. The word moves fluidly between physical positioning (Miriam stationing herself by the Nile to watch her brother's basket, Exod 2:4), formal presentation before divine or human authority (Israel assembling before Yahweh at Sinai, Exod 19:17), and resolute resistance against opposition (Exodus 14:13, 'stand firm and see the salvation of the LORD'). The Arabic cognate wasaba ('be constant, firm') preserves the root's sense of deliberate, settled firmness. Spanish and French translations reveal the semantic range well: pararse and se tenir for physical standing, presentarse and se présenter for formal appearance, and estar firmes and se tenir ferme for courageous endurance.

1. stand, take a position (18×) The core physical sense: to stand or take up a position in a specific location, often as a narrative staging action. Miriam stations herself along the riverbank (Exod 2:4), the angel of the LORD positions himself in the road to block Balaam (Num 22:22), and Yahweh descends and stands with Moses on Sinai (Exod 34:5). Spanish pararse and German sich-stellen both capture the deliberate, reflexive quality — this is purposeful positioning, not incidental standing. The largest cluster at 18 occurrences, forming the spatial foundation for all metaphorical extensions. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-He-stood, and-he-stationed-himself, and-he-stood | es: Y-se-paró, podrá-estar-en-pie, podrá-pararse | fr: devra-se-tenir, et-Il-se-tint, et-elle-stationed-elle-même | de: [ויתיצבו], [יתיצב], er-stations-sich-selbst Exod 2:4; Exod 34:5; Num 11:16; Num 22:22; Deut 7:24

2. present oneself before authority (12×) Formal presentation before a superior, assembly, or God — the protocol sense. Israel presents itself before Yahweh at the foot of Sinai (Exod 19:17); the tribes assemble before God at Shechem (Josh 24:1); the Philistine champion 'presents himself' for forty days (1 Sam 17:16). French se présenter and Spanish presentarse both select ceremonial-appearance vocabulary distinct from casual standing. The sense carries overtones of accountability and readiness — one does not merely arrive but formally reports for duty or judgment, as in Deut 31:14 where Moses and Joshua present themselves at the tent of meeting. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-he-presented-himself, and-presented-themselves, and-stationed-themselves | es: Se-presentan, Y-se-presentaron, de-establecernos | fr: [התיצבו], de-debout, et-il-presented-lui-même | de: [התיצבו], [להתיצב], [מהתיצב] Exod 19:17; Deut 31:14; Josh 24:1; Judg 20:2; 1Sam 17:16

3. station oneself deliberately (9×) Deliberate stationing for a tactical or watchful purpose — positioning oneself with a specific mission in view. God commands Moses: 'Station yourself before Pharaoh in the morning' (Exod 8:20; 9:13), framing the confrontation as planned and purposeful. Habakkuk stations himself on the watchtower to await God's response (Hab 2:1), and Balaam directs Balak to 'stand here' while he goes to seek an oracle (Num 23:3, 15). Spanish ponte and French se tenir both capture this deliberate vigilance. The 9 occurrences consistently involve awaiting an outcome or executing a strategic assignment. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-I-will-station-myself, and-station-yourself, stand | es: alíneate, poneos, ponte | fr: [התיצב], [התיצבו], et-se-tenir | de: [התיצב], [התיצבה], [התיצבו] Exod 8:20; Exod 9:13; Num 23:3; Num 23:15; 2Sam 18:30

4. take a stand together (6×) Collective assembly for communal or ceremonial action — the corporate dimension. Samuel summons Israel: 'Present yourselves before the LORD by your tribes' (1 Sam 10:19); he gathers them for covenant litigation: 'Stand here, that I may plead with you before the LORD' (1 Sam 12:7). French présentez-vous and Spanish presentaos both use reflexive plural forms mirroring the Hebrew Hithpael. The 6 occurrences always involve a group acting in concert, often at moments of national decision — covenant renewal, judicial assembly, or military rallying (1 Chr 11:14, where warriors 'took their stand' together in the barley field). STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-present-yourselves, and-stationed-themselves, and-take-your-stand | es: Y-se-pararon, presentaos, y-presentaos | fr: [והתיצבו], [ויתיצבו], et-présenter-vous-mêmes | de: [והתיצבו], [ויתיצבו], present-euch-selbst Deut 31:14; 1Sam 10:19; 1Sam 12:7; 1Sam 12:16; 1Chr 11:14

5. stand firm, withstand (3×) Standing firm against opposition — the courage-and-endurance sense. Moses' iconic command at the Red Sea: 'Stand firm and see the salvation of the LORD' (Exod 14:13) is the paradigmatic instance. In 2 Chr 20:6, Jehoshaphat declares that none can 'withstand' God. Job 41:10 asks who can 'stand before' Leviathan. Spanish estar firmes, French se tenir ferme, and the Arabic cognate wasaba ('be constant') all converge on resolute endurance. Though only 3 clear occurrences, this sense carries outsized theological weight as the posture of faith under pressure. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: can-stand, stand-firm, to-withstand | es: estad-firmes, para-resistir, se-presentará | fr: [להתיצב], se-placer, se-tenir-firm | de: [יתיצב], [להתיצב], stehen-firm Exod 14:13; 2Chr 20:6; Job 41:10

יְצַב H3321 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (1×)

To make certain or gain certainty (Aramaic Pael infinitive), in Daniel 7:19

This Aramaic Pael infinitive appears in Daniel's request for certainty concerning the fourth beast in Daniel 7:19. The causative stem emphasizes making certain or establishing truth about something. The context is apocalyptic vision and interpretation—Daniel seeks definitive understanding of symbolic imagery. The Spanish 'saber la verdad' (to know the truth) captures the epistemological thrust.

(1×) An Aramaic Pael infinitive meaning 'to make certain' or 'to gain certainty' in Daniel 7:19, used with the preposition 'concerning' to express Daniel's desire for definitive understanding of the fourth beast. The causative stem underscores the active pursuit of clarity regarding apocalyptic symbolism whose meaning requires divine disclosure. EXTINGUISHING FIRE en: to-make-certain | es: saber-la-verdad | fr: éteindre | de: [ליצבא] Dan 7:19

יָצַג H3322 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (17×)
To set, place, or station something or someone; to establish a person in office or position
The Hiphil verb yatsag is a forceful synonym of the common Hebrew word sum ('to put'), but it carries a note of deliberate, authoritative placement. Jacob sets the striped rods before the flocks at the watering troughs (Gen 30:38), and the fleece is placed on the threshing floor by Gideon (Judg 6:37). When applied to persons, it takes on the connotation of formal appointment — Joseph sets his brothers before Pharaoh (Gen 47:2), and Judah pledges to set Benjamin back in his father's presence (Gen 43:9). Spanish poner and French placer both mirror its range, though neither quite captures the vividness the BDB lexicon notes as distinctive to this verb.

1. place or set physically (8×) The basic physical sense: to place, set, or put an object in a specific location. Jacob places the peeled rods in the water troughs before the flocks (Gen 30:38), Gideon places the fleece on the threshing floor (Judg 6:37), and David places the Ark inside the tent (2 Sam 6:17). German setzen and Spanish poner map directly. The emphasis falls on the deliberate, purposeful act of positioning a physical thing. PLACING AND LAYING
en: and-set, and-they-set, placing | es: Y-puso, a-poner, pondrás | fr: [ויציגו], et-ils-plaça, et-placer | de: [ויציגו], du-soll-setzen, placing Gen 30:38; Deut 28:56; Judg 6:37; Judg 7:5; Judg 8:27

2. appoint or establish a person (6×) The personal-authoritative sense: to set a person in a role, present someone formally, or establish someone in a position. Joseph presents his brothers before Pharaoh (Gen 47:2), and Judah pledges to 'set' Benjamin before his father (Gen 43:9). In Job 17:6 the sufferer laments that God has made him a byword. Jeremiah 51:34 uses the image of being 'set down' as an empty vessel. Spanish poner and French placer extend naturally to this institutional usage. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: (he-set-me), [ketiv:he-set-me], and-He-has-made-me | es: Y-me-ha-puesto, [kethiv], me-ha-puesto | fr: [(הציגני)], [[הציגנו]], [והציגו] | de: [(הציגני)], [[הציגנו]], [והצגני] Gen 43:9; Gen 47:2; Job 17:6; Jer 51:34

3. station or leave in place (3×) The stative-resultant sense: to station, leave, or let remain in a fixed place, emphasizing the enduring state rather than the initial act. Hosea threatens to 'set her' like a wilderness (Hos 2:3), stripping away adornment and leaving the result. Moses asks Pharaoh to let the little ones remain (Exod 10:24), and Jacob offers to leave part of his household stationed behind (Gen 33:15). The focus is on the settled condition that follows placement. PLACING AND LAYING
en: and-set-her, let-me-station-, let-remain | es: dejaré, será-dejado, y-la-ponga | fr: et-je-la-placerai, que-moi-station-, que-rester | de: [והצגתיה], ich-will-lassen-, lass-bleiben Gen 33:15; Exod 10:24; Hos 2:3

יִצְהָר H3323 Conj-w (23×)
Fresh oil, new olive oil; freshly pressed oil listed among the land's staple products alongside grain and wine.
Distinguished from the more general shemen ('oil'), yitshār specifically denotes freshly pressed olive oil in its unprocessed, newly yielded state. It appears almost formulaically in the triad 'grain, new wine, and fresh oil' (dāgān, tīrōsh, yitshār), cataloguing the three signature blessings of the promised land. God gives or withholds this triad as covenant blessing or curse (Deut 7:13; 11:14; 28:51; Hos 2:8-9; Joel 2:19). It must be tithed (Deut 12:17; 14:23) and its firstfruits given to the priests (Deut 18:4; Neh 10:37-39). The word functions less as a culinary term than as a covenantal marker of agricultural prosperity.

fresh oil, olive oil (23×) Freshly pressed olive oil, appearing formulaically in the triad with grain and new wine as covenant blessings (Deut 7:13; 11:14; Hos 2:8; Joel 2:19). Subject to tithing (Deut 12:17; 14:23) and priestly firstfruits (Num 18:12; Deut 18:4; Neh 10:37). Spanish 'aceite,' French 'huile,' and German 'Öl' use general oil terms, though Hebrew distinguishes yitshār from shemen. OLIVE OIL
en: and-oil, and-the-oil, and-your-oil | es: aceite, el-aceite, ni-aceite | fr: [היצהר], [יצהר], et-huile | de: Oel, [יצהר], der-Oel Num 18:12; Deut 7:13; Deut 11:14; Deut 12:17; Deut 14:23

יִצְהָר H3324 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)
Yitshar (Izhar) — a Levite, son of Kohath and grandson of Levi, ancestor of the Izharite clan including Korah.
Yitshar (יִצְהָר, also rendered Izhar) was a son of Kohath, grandson of Levi, and founder of the Izharite clan within the Levitical priesthood. His genealogical significance is considerable: through his line came Korah, who led the famous rebellion against Moses (Num 16:1). The name appears consistently in Levitical genealogies across Exodus, Numbers, and Chronicles (Exod 6:18, 21; Num 3:19; 1 Chr 6:2; 23:12, 18). The Septuagint renders it Ισσαρ. Though the common noun yitshar means 'fresh oil,' the proper name here strictly identifies the ancestral Levite.

Yitshar (9×) A masculine proper name designating a Levitical ancestor, the second son of Kohath and brother of Amram, Hebron, and Uzziel (Exod 6:18). His genealogical line is traced through Korah (Num 16:1), making him the progenitor of the Korahites — the temple singers and gatekeepers celebrated in the Psalm superscriptions. English Bibles render it Izhar, Spanish and French follow suit, while German uses Jizhar. The name is homonymous with the common noun for 'fresh oil' (H3323), but the proper noun usage is clearly distinct in all nine occurrences. OLIVE OIL
en: Izhar, Yitshar, and-Izhar | es: Izhar, Yitshar, Yitzhar | fr: Izhar, Yitshar, et-Izhar | de: Izhar, Jizhar, Yitshar Exod 6:18; Exod 6:21; Num 3:19; Num 16:1; 1Chr 6:2

יִצְהָרִי H3325 Prep-l (4×)
the Izharites, a Levitical family descended from Izhar son of Kohath
This gentillic noun designates the descendants of Izhar, who was a son of Kohath and grandson of Levi. The Izharites formed one of the Kohathite clans responsible for service in Israel's sanctuary. Numbers and Chronicles record their assignments and leaders within the Levitical organization, showing how Israel tracked family lines for worship duties across generations.

(4×) The Izharites appear in census lists and Levitical duty rosters as one of the Kohathite clans (Num 3:27), with specific leaders named in the Chronicler's temple organization (1Chr 24:22; 26:23, 29). The Hebrew uses the gentilic form with the article as a collective substantive, literally 'the Izharite-ones.' Spanish para los yitzharitas and French le Izharite preserve the collective plural meaning, while German der Izharite follows the Hebrew's use of the singular collective with article. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Of-the-Yitsharites, for-the-Yitsharite, of-the-Yitsharites | es: Para-el-izharita, Para-los-yitzharitas, el-izharita | fr: [ליצהרי], le-Izharite | de: [ליצהרי], der-Izharite Num 3:27; 1Chr 24:22; 1Chr 26:23; 1Chr 26:29

יָצוּעַ H3326a N-ms (7×)
Bed, couch (poetic); side-chamber, annex room (architectural, in Solomon's temple)
The noun יָצוּעַ (yatsua') carries two sharply distinct meanings unified by the idea of something spread out or laid alongside. In poetic and intimate contexts it means a bed or couch — Jacob's deathbed curse on Reuben mentions 'my couch' that was defiled (Gen 49:4), and the psalmist meditates on God 'upon my bed' (Ps 63:7). In the architectural description of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:5-10), the same root yields 'side-chambers' — the tiered annex rooms built against the temple walls. The semantic connection lies in the root meaning of spreading or laying flat, whether bedding or flooring.

1. bed, couch (4×) A bed or couch for sleeping or reclining, used in poetic and emotionally charged contexts. Nearly always appears with a first-person possessive suffix ('my bed'), lending it an intimate tone. In Genesis 49:4 Jacob rebukes Reuben for going up to 'your father's bed' — a euphemism for violating his concubine Bilhah. Psalm 63:7 recalls meditating through the night watches 'upon my couch,' and Psalm 132:3 records David's vow not to go up 'onto the couch of my bed.' Spanish 'lecho mío' and French 'couche' confirm the sleeping-furniture reading. Job 17:13 uses it strikingly for the deathbed: 'in darkness I have spread my couch.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: couch-my, my-bed | es: lecho-mío, mi-lecho | fr: couch-mon, couche, mon-יצוע-moi | de: [יצוע], mein-Bett, mein-Bed Gen 49:4; 1Chr 5:1; Job 17:13; Ps 63:6; Ps 132:3

2. side-chamber, annex room (3×) An architectural term for the side-chambers or lateral annexes built around the exterior walls of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:5, 6, 10). These were multi-storied rooms whose width increased at each level because the temple wall narrowed by means of ledges. The Ketiv reading יָצוּעַ in these verses (vs. the Qere יָצִיעַ) connects this structure to the root idea of spreading or extending alongside. Spanish 'cámaras' and the descriptive English 'side-chambers' reflect the architectural specificity that sets this sense apart from the poetic bedroom imagery. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: [side-chambers], [the-side-chamber], [the-side-chambers] | es: [cámaras], [la-cámara], [las-cámaras] | fr: [side-chambers], [the-côté-chamber], [the-côté-chambers] | de: [side-chambers], [the-Seite-chamber], [the-Seite-chambers] 1Kgs 6:5; 1Kgs 6:6; 1Kgs 6:10

יָצִיעַ H3326b Art / N-ms (3×)
side chamber, lateral room (architectural term for temple's projecting stories)
An architectural term referring to the side chambers or lateral rooms of Solomon's temple, appearing in 1 Kings 6:5-10. These were chambers built against the temple's outer walls on three sides, forming a three-story structure that did not bear on the main temple walls. The Hebrew text presents difficulties, with Qere/Ketiv variants and scholarly suggestions to read הַצֶּלָע ('the side-chamber') based on the Septuagint and parallel texts in Ezekiel 41:5-8. These chambers likely served as storage for temple vessels, priestly vestments, and sacred items, expanding the temple's functional space without compromising the holy architecture of the main structure.

(3×) The projecting lateral chambers attached to Solomon's temple's exterior walls, forming auxiliary spaces around the main sanctuary. The architectural description is precise yet textually complex, with יָצִיעַ appearing only in these verses about the temple construction. The chambers represent practical sacred space—neither as holy as the inner sanctuary nor merely secular, but functional rooms consecrated by their attachment to God's house. Cross-linguistic glosses ('side-chambers', 'cámara lateral', 'chambres latérales') capture the architectural specificity. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: side-chambers, the-side-chamber, the-side-chambers | es: (cámara-lateral), (la-cámara) | fr: côté-chambers, le-côté-chamber, le-côté-chambers 1Kgs 6:5; 1Kgs 6:6; 1Kgs 6:10

יִצְחָק H3327 N-proper-ms (108×)
Isaac (Yitshaq) — patriarch, son of Abraham and Sarah; his name means 'he laughs'
Yitshaq (Isaac) is the second patriarch of Israel, the long-promised son born to Abraham and Sarah in their old age. His name, meaning 'he laughs,' plays on Sarah's laughter of disbelief (Gen 18:12) and later joy (Gen 21:6). Isaac appears in over 100 verses spanning the Pentateuch, the historical books, and the Psalms. He is the father of Jacob and Esau, and his near-sacrifice on Mount Moriah (Gen 22) stands as one of Scripture's defining episodes. Amos uses 'house of Isaac' as a synonym for Israel (Amos 7:16). Translations uniformly transliterate the name — Spanish 'Yitzchaq,' French 'Isaac,' German 'Jizchak.'

Isaac (proper noun) (108×) The proper masculine name Yitshaq (Isaac), designating the son of Abraham and Sarah, second of the three patriarchs. The name's etymology ('he laughs') connects to both Sarah's incredulous laughter (Gen 18:12) and joyful laughter (Gen 21:6). All 108 occurrences refer to the same individual, appearing in covenant formulas (Lev 26:42), genealogies (1 Chr 1:28), and poetically as a metonym for Israel (Amos 7:9, 16). ISAAC PATRIARCH NAME
en: Isaac | es: Yitzchaq | fr: Isaac | de: Jizchak Gen 17:19; Gen 17:21; Gen 21:3; Gen 21:4; Gen 21:5

צֹאַחַר H3328 N-proper-ms (1×)
Tsokhar (ketiv Yitschar), a name in Judah's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 4:7
This name appears in Judah's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 4:7 with a ketiv-qere variation: the text reads Yitschar while the margin suggests Tsokhar. The latter form matches the name of Ephron's father (Genesis 23:8) and a Simeonite ancestor. Greek traditions render it Saaar. Such textual variants in Chronicles' genealogies likely reflect manuscript transmission differences.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 4:7, where the ketiv reads Yitschar but qere suggests Tsokhar (matching names in Genesis 23:8 and Exodus 6:15). The textual variation illustrates scribal uncertainty, possibly reflecting genuine name variations across family branches or copyist error in genealogical transmission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: [K: Yitschar] | es: [Yitsjar] | fr: [יצחר] | de: [יצחר] 1Chr 4:7

יָצִיא H3329 Conj-w (2×)
Adjective meaning "going forth," used with a pronominal suffix to mean "those who came from his loins"
This participial adjective appears only in 2 Chronicles 32:21, where it describes "those who came forth from [Sennacherib's] loins," a euphemism for his own sons. The text exhibits the common Ketiv/Qere variation, with the consonantal text using a singular suffix and the marginal reading preferring a plural. The parallel passage in Isaiah 37:38 simply uses "his sons," making the Chronicles reading more circumlocutory.

(2×) Found in 2 Chronicles 32:21 describing the assassins of the Assyrian king Sennacherib. The phrase "those going forth from his loins" employs a biological metaphor for offspring. Multilingual traditions vary: Spanish and English offer expanded glosses ("those who went out from his loins"), while French and German preserve the Hebrew in brackets, acknowledging the unusual euphemistic construction. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: [and-from-those-going-out], and-those-going-out-of | es: [y-los-que-salieron], y-los-que-salieron-de | fr: [ומיציאו], [ומיציא'] | de: [ומיציאו], [ומיציא'] 2Chr 32:21

יַצִּיב H3330 Conj-w / Adj-fs (5×)
certain, sure, true; firm and reliable (Aramaic, in Daniel)
An Aramaic adjective appearing exclusively in Daniel, conveying certainty, sureness, and truth. When Nebuchadnezzar declares 'of a surety' (min-yaṣṣîb) that the wise men are stalling (Dan 2:8), the word carries judicial weight — a king's firm verdict. In Daniel 2:45, the dream interpretation is pronounced 'certain.' The exclamatory use in Daniel 3:24 ('undoubtedly!') shows heightened emphatic force. The feminine substantive form in Daniel 7:16 means 'the truth' — Daniel seeks reliable meaning for his vision. Spanish 'ciertamente/verdad' captures both the epistemic and emphatic dimensions.

(5×) Certain, sure — expressing firm reliability or established fact. Used adverbially with מִן as 'of a surety' (Dan 2:8) and predicatively for the certainty of a divine revelation (Dan 2:45). The exclamatory use in Dan 3:24 functions as 'undoubtedly!' when Nebuchadnezzar reacts to the fourth figure in the furnace. Spanish 'ciertamente' and English 'certain' converge on epistemic assurance, while French and German glosses leave the Aramaic unvocalized in some instances. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: and-certain, and-certain-thing, certain | es: cierta, ciertamente, y-verdad | fr: [ויציב], [ויציבא], [יציב] | de: [ויציב], [ויציבא], [יציב] Dan 2:8; Dan 2:45; Dan 3:24; Dan 6:12; Dan 7:16

יָצַע H3331 V-Hofal-Imperf-3ms (4×)
to spread out, lay down (as a bed or couch); to make one's bed in Sheol
This rare verb appears in poetic and prophetic texts describing the spreading or laying out of something as one would prepare a bed or couch. Isaiah uses it mockingly to ask whether laying out sackcloth and ashes truly constitutes a proper fast, while the psalmist contemplates that even if he 'makes his bed' in Sheol, God is there. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates suggest meanings related to laying down or spreading out, with the Aramaic also developing a sense of 'explaining' or 'expounding'—perhaps from the metaphor of laying out ideas.

(4×) The verb appears in Hiphil and Hophal stems describing spreading or laying out. The psalmist asks rhetorically, 'If I make my bed in Sheol, you are there' (Ps 139:8), using the Hiphil to express God's omnipresence. Isaiah mocks false fasting: does one 'spread out' sackcloth and ashes as if preparing a proper bed (Isa 58:5)? The Hophal passive appears when 'sackcloth and ashes are spread' in mourning (Esth 4:3) and when the king of Babylon finds 'worms spread' as his bedding in death (Isa 14:11). French étendre and Spanish extender follow the spreading/extending action across Romance languages, while German wenn ich machen mein Bett gives the conditional bed-making sense in Psalm 139. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-if-I-make-my-bed, he-spreads, is-spread | es: está-tendido, extender?, fue-extendido | fr: [יצי׳], [יצע], et-étendre | de: [יצי׳], [יצע], und-wenn-ich-machen-mein-bed Esth 4:3; Ps 139:8; Isa 14:11; Isa 58:5

יָצַק H3332 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (52×)

To pour or pour out liquid (oil, water, blood); to cast molten metal into a mold; rarely, to be firm/hard or to set something down.

The verb yatsaq (יָצַק) centers on the controlled movement of liquid — pouring oil for anointing (Gen 28:18; Exod 29:7), pouring water for washing (2 Kgs 3:11), pouring blood at the base of the altar (Lev 8:15). Spanish captures the core with 'vertio' (poured) and 'derramaba' (was pouring), while German uses 'goss' (poured). But yatsaq has a remarkable industrial extension: when what is poured is molten metal, the verb becomes 'to cast' — bronze sockets for the tabernacle (Exod 26:37), the bronze pillars of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:46), the twelve bronze bulls under the molten sea. Spanish shifts to 'fundir/fundio' (to smelt/cast), French to the technical vocabulary of metalwork. Two singleton occurrences push the semantics further: Job 11:15 uses the passive participle to mean 'firm' or 'hard' — as though liquid poured into a mold has now set solid — and 2 Samuel 15:24 uses it for setting down the ark, an extension from pouring to placing.

1. pour out liquid (32×) To pour out a liquid — oil, water, blood, or broth — whether in ritual anointing, sacrificial offering, or everyday service. Jacob poured oil on the pillar at Bethel (Gen 28:18, 35:14); Moses poured anointing oil on Aaron's head (Lev 8:12); Elisha is identified as the one who 'poured water on the hands of Elijah' (2 Kgs 3:11). Spanish uses 'vertio' (poured) and 'derramaba' (was pouring); German 'goss' and 'giesse'; French 'verser.' Isaiah 44:3 extends the image metaphorically: 'I will pour out my Spirit' — where the liquid poured is divine blessing. This is the dominant sense, covering 32 of 52 occurrences. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: I-will-pour-out, and-he-poured, and-he-shall-pour | es: Sirve, Y-vertió, derramaba | fr: [אצק], et-devra-verser, et-il-devra-verser | de: [אצק], er-goss, giesse Gen 28:18; Gen 35:14; Exod 29:7; Lev 2:1; Lev 2:6

2. cast molten metal (18×) To cast or found metal by pouring molten material into a mold, producing pillars, bases, mirrors, and sacred vessels. The tabernacle instructions specify casting gold rings (Exod 25:12; 37:3, 13) and bronze sockets (Exod 26:37; 36:36); Solomon's craftsman Hiram cast the great bronze works in the clay ground of the Jordan valley (1 Kgs 7:46). Spanish shifts decisively from 'vertir' (pour) to 'fundir/fundio' (smelt/cast), and the passive participle mutsaq/yetsuqim describes objects already cast — 'cast' mirrors (Job 37:18), 'cast' bases (1 Kgs 7:30). The eighteen occurrences cluster in Exodus 25–38 and 1 Kings 7, the two great construction narratives of Scripture. METAL CASTING

en: and-he-cast, and-it-is-cast, and-you-shall-cast | es: Y-fundirás, Y-fundió, fundidas | fr: [יצוקים], [יצקם], [מוצק] | de: [ויצוק], [יצוק], [יצוקים] Exod 25:12; Exod 26:37; Exod 36:36; Exod 37:3; Exod 37:13

3. (1×) A passive participial sense meaning 'firm, hard, solid' — the state of liquid that has been poured and has now set. Job 11:15 promises that if one puts away iniquity, 'you shall be firm (mutsaq) and without fear.' The English gloss 'firm' and Spanish 'firme' both capture the metaphor: what was once molten is now unyieldingly solid. This single occurrence bridges the liquid pouring and metal casting senses — firmness is the end state of something once poured. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: firm | es: firme | fr: verser | de: [מצק] Job 11:15

4. (1×) An extended use meaning to set down or deposit something in a place, generalizing from the controlled pouring of liquid to the deliberate placing of a heavy object. In 2 Samuel 15:24, the Levites set down (wayyitsqu) the ark of God. English renders 'set down,' Spanish 'pusieron' (placed), and German 'setzte hinab' (set down). The semantic link to pouring survives in the careful, deliberate quality of the action — one does not toss the ark any more than one splashes anointing oil. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-they-set-down | es: y-pusieron | fr: et-ils-plaça-en-bas | de: und-sie-setzte-hinab 2Sam 15:24

יְצֻקָה H3333 Prep-b | N-fsc | 3ms (2×)

A casting (of metal); technical term for the molten bronze casting process used in temple construction

This feminine noun appears in the description of Solomon's temple furnishings, specifically the ornamental gourds cast in bronze. The phrase "cast in its casting" emphasizes the method of manufacture through molten metal poured into molds. The parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 4:3 uses a different vocalization (mutsaqtô), showing textual variation in how scribes understood this specialized metallurgical vocabulary.

(2×) Attested in 1 Kings 7:24 and 30 in temple construction contexts. The term highlights the technical artistry of Hiram's bronze work, where decorative elements were formed through molten metal casting rather than carving or welding. Spanish "fundición" and French "jeta" both capture the casting process, while German preserves the verbal root, reflecting the technical nature of ancient Near Eastern metallurgy. METAL CASTING

en: cast, in-its-casting | es: en-fundición-de-él, fundidos | fr: dans-son-casting, jeta | de: in-sein-werfend, warf 1Kgs 7:24; 1Kgs 7:30

צָרַר H3334 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (10×)

To be in distress, be narrow or constricted; in Hifil, to oppress or cause anguish to others.

A verb rooted in the physical image of narrowness and constriction, extending naturally into the emotional realm of distress and anguish. When Jacob heard that Esau was coming with four hundred men, he was greatly distressed (Gen 32:7), and when David's men spoke of stoning him at Ziklag, he too was deeply troubled (1 Sam 30:6). The spatial sense appears in passages like Isaiah 49:19, where a restored land will be 'too narrow' for its inhabitants. The lone Hifil occurrence in Nehemiah 9:27 describes enemies who oppressed Israel, capturing the causative force of the stem.

1. be in distress (6×) The Qal stative sense of emotional or psychological distress, describing inner anguish and trouble. Spanish 'angustia' and German 'Angst' preserve the etymological link between narrowness and anxiety that this Hebrew root embodies. Prominent in narrative crisis moments: Gen 32:7 (Jacob before meeting Esau), Judg 2:15 and 10:9 (Israel under enemy pressure), 1 Sam 30:6 (David at Ziklag), 2 Sam 13:2 (Amnon's torment). DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: and-it-was-distressing, and-was-distressed, he-is-in-distress | es: Y-hubo-angustia, tendrá-angustia, y-angostió | fr: et-cela-fut-distressing, et-fut-distressed, et-il-était-distressing | de: [יצר], und-es-war-distressing, und-es-war-ihm-angst Gen 32:7; Judg 2:15; Judg 10:9; 1Sam 30:6; 2Sam 13:2

2. be narrow or constricted (3×) The Qal sense of spatial or physical narrowness – being too constricted, too small, or hindered in movement. Job 18:7 uses it for steps that 'are shortened,' Prov 4:12 for steps that 'will not be hindered,' and Isa 49:19 for a land too narrow for its returning inhabitants. Spanish 'estrecha' and 'estrechan' clearly reflect this concrete spatial dimension. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP

en: are-shortened, will-be-hindered, you-will-be-too-narrow | es: Se-estrechan, se-angostaran, serás-estrecha | fr: [תצרי], יצרו ,יצר | de: [יצר], [יצרו], [תצרי] Job 18:7; Prov 4:12; Isa 49:19

3. oppress or cause distress (1×) The Hifil causative sense of inflicting distress or oppression upon others. Attested only in Neh 9:27, where enemies 'oppressed' Israel during their periods of rebellion. Spanish 'angustiaron' and English 'oppressed' both capture the transitive, causative force that distinguishes this stem from the stative Qal uses. OPPRESS CAUSE DISTRESS

en: and-they-oppressed | es: y-los-angustiaron | fr: [ויצרו] | de: [ויצרו] Neh 9:27

יָצַר H3335 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 3ms (63×)

To form, fashion, shape; of a potter molding clay, God creating humanity and the world, and metaphorically, devising a plan or purpose.

Yatsar is the sculptor's and potter's verb — the word for shaping raw material into purposeful form. Its most famous occurrence is Genesis 2:7, where God yatsar the human from dust of the ground, an image that resonates throughout Scripture whenever the Creator-as-craftsman metaphor appears. The participial form yotser ('potter, one who forms') became a standard designation for both human potters (1 Chr 4:23, Isa 30:14) and God as the supreme Former of all things (Isa 45:18). Arabic wasara preserves the covenantal sense of 'binding together,' while jabala and sawwara ('to mold, shape') capture the physical crafting. The prophets exploit the potter-clay metaphor to powerful theological effect: 'Shall the clay say to the one who forms it, What are you making?' (Isa 45:9). A small but significant extension carries the word into mental forming — devising or purposing a plan — where the concrete image of shaping becomes a metaphor for intentional design.

1. form, fashion, create (40×) Qal active: to form, fashion, shape, or create — the primary sense at 40 occurrences, dominated by God as subject. God forms the human from dust (Gen 2:7), forms every beast of the field (Gen 2:19), forms the eye (Ps 94:9), forms the mountains (Amos 4:13), forms the earth to be inhabited (Isa 45:18), and forms Israel as his people (Isa 43:1, 7, 21; 44:2, 21, 24). Arabic jabala ('to mold, create') and sawwara ('to fashion, give form') both select creation-specific vocabulary, while Korean 빚다 and 지으시다 alternate between artisanal and divine-creative registers. The theological weight is immense: yatsar insists that creation is not accidental but deliberately shaped, like clay on a wheel. POTTER AND FORMING

en: (I-formed-you), And-formed, Former-of | es: Formador-de, Y-formó, a-su-formador | fr: Et-forma, et-former, former | de: bilden, bildete, er-gebildet-hatte Gen 2:7; Gen 2:8; Gen 2:19; Exod 32:4; Ps 33:15

2. potter, clay artisan (18×) Qal participle used as a substantive: potter, clay artisan — 18 occurrences where yotser functions as an occupational noun rather than a verbal action. This includes literal potters at their craft (1 Chr 4:23, 'the potters who dwelt among plants and hedges'), smashed pottery (Isa 30:14, a vessel 'dashed like a potter's vessel'), and the sustained potter-clay metaphor of Isa 29:16 ('Shall the potter be regarded as the clay?'). Arabic fakhkhar and khazzaf both mean 'potter,' while Korean 토기장이 and Spanish alfarero are dedicated potter terms. The participial form's grammaticalization into a noun is confirmed by its appearance with the definite article and in construct chains. POTTER AND FORMING

en: Like-the-potter, a-potter, are-our-Potter | es: alfarero, alfareros, el-alfarero | fr: [היוצרים], former, potter | de: Bildner, bilden, der-bildete 2Sam 17:28; 1Chr 4:23; Ps 2:9; Isa 29:16; Isa 30:14

3. purpose, plan, devise (2×) Qal with a cognitive-planning meaning: to purpose, plan, or devise — 2 occurrences at 2 Kgs 19:25 and its parallel Isa 37:26, where God declares 'Have you not heard that long ago I formed it? From ancient times I planned it.' Here yatsar extends from physical shaping to mental designing, the metaphor of a craftsman's blueprint applied to divine intention. Korean 계획하다 ('to plan') and English 'purposed/devised' both select deliberate-intention vocabulary rather than physical-crafting words. The parallelism with 'asah ('to do, make') in these passages confirms the sense of premeditated design. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-formed-it, and-I-formed-it | es: lo-formé?, y-lo-formé | fr: et-former, et-je-formed-cela | de: und-bilden, und-ich-formed-es 2Kgs 19:25; Isa 37:26

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Isa 54:17 describing a weapon 'formed' against God's people. The passive participle yutsar ('that is formed/fashioned') applies the crafting metaphor to hostile instruments — no weapon that is forged or fabricated against you shall prosper. Spanish forjada ('forged') captures the metallurgical extension of the potter's forming. This occurrence naturally belongs to sense 1's physical-forming range but applies it to weapon manufacture rather than divine creation. POTTER AND FORMING

en: formed | es: forjada | fr: former | de: bilden Isa 54:17

5. (1×) A single Pual passive occurrence at Ps 139:16 — 'my unformed substance your eyes saw; in your book were written, every one of them, the days that were formed for me.' The passive 'were formed' describes God's pre-creative fashioning of a person's days before they existed. Spanish fueron formados and English 'were formed' both treat this as the passive of the primary forming sense. The Pual stem is rare for this verb, making the morphological distinctiveness notable even if the meaning aligns with sense 1. POTTER AND FORMING

en: were-formed | es: fueron-formados | fr: former | de: waren-gebildet Ps 139:16

6. (1×) A single Nifal occurrence at Isa 43:10 — 'before me no god was formed, nor shall there be after me.' The passive voice ('was formed/fashioned') applies the crafting metaphor to the non-existence of other gods: no deity was ever shaped or brought into being besides Yahweh. Spanish fue formado and German bilden both render this as passive creation. The anti-idol polemic is potent: the same verb used for God forming the world is now used to deny that any other god was ever formed — a deliberate theological reversal. POTTER AND FORMING

en: was-formed | es: fue-formado | fr: former | de: bilden Isa 43:10

יֵצֶר H3336 V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 3ms (10×)

Form, frame, inclination; what is shaped by a potter, the constitution of a creature, or the bent of the human heart.

Derived from the verb yatsar ('to form, fashion'), this noun spans the distance between a potter's handiwork and the hidden movements of the human mind. In Genesis 6:5 and 8:21 it names the 'inclination' of the heart — that deep-set disposition toward good or evil that later rabbinic thought crystallized as yetser ha-tov and yetser ha-ra. In Isaiah 29:16 and Habakkuk 2:18 it denotes the concrete product of craftsmanship: a pot, an idol, a thing shaped by hands. Psalm 103:14 occupies the tender middle ground — 'He knows our frame' — where yetser points to the fragile, dust-born constitution of the human body. Arabic tasawwur ('mental image') and jibilla ('natural constitution') mirror these overlapping senses, showing that the tension between what is formed outwardly and what is formed inwardly is not unique to Hebrew.

1. inclination, disposition, intent (6×) The inner disposition or inclination of the heart, the default bent of a person's thinking and desiring. Genesis 6:5 pairs it with 'every thought of his heart,' and Genesis 8:21 echoes the same phrase after the Flood, anchoring the word in humanity's moral constitution. Deuteronomy 31:21 and the Chronicles passages (1 Chr 28:9; 29:18) extend it to plans and purposes. Arabic mayl ('inclination') and tasawwur ('mental image, conception') both orbit the same semantic space — an internal shaping that precedes outward action. This is the sense that rabbinic literature developed into the famous yetser ha-ra and yetser ha-tov. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: A-mind, as-the-intent-of, his-inclination | es: Inclinación, intención-de, para-intención-de | fr: [יצר], [ליצר], inclination-de | de: Gebilde, [יצר], [ליצר] Gen 6:5; Gen 8:21; Deut 31:21; 1Chr 28:9; 1Chr 29:18

2. thing formed, product (of craftsmanship) (2×) The concrete product of someone's forming — a vessel shaped by a potter or an idol carved by a craftsman. Isaiah 29:16 sets up the bitter irony: 'Shall the thing formed say to the one who formed it, You did not make me?' Habakkuk 2:18 also applies it to an idol, with Spanish obra ('work, product') and Korean mandeun geot ('thing made') capturing the tangible, physical result. Here yetser is not a thought but a thing you can hold. POTTER AND FORMING

en: of-his-making, says | es: en-su-obra, y-lo-formado | fr: [ויצר], création | de: Gebilde, und-bildete Isa 29:16; Hab 2:18

3. frame, constitution (physical formation) (1×) The physical frame or constitution of the human being, used in Psalm 103:14 where God 'knows our frame; He remembers that we are dust.' The word here bridges the potter metaphor and the mortality theme — humans are shaped from clay and remain fragile. Arabic jibilla ('natural constitution') and French forme both reflect this sense of creaturely weakness rather than moral bent. It is a word of divine compassion: God does not forget what He made us from. POTTER AND FORMING
en: our-frame | es: nuestra-formación | fr: forme | de: unser-frame Ps 103:14

4. maker, former (Qal participle of yatsar) (1×) The Qal active participle yotser used as a substantive meaning 'maker, former' — the agent rather than the product. In Habakkuk 2:18 it appears alongside the noun sense: the maker (yotser) trusts in what he has formed (yetser). Spanish hacedor ('maker') and Arabic saani' ('craftsman') show the participial force clearly. Though morphologically related to the noun, this sense points to the shaping agent, not the shaped result. POTTER AND FORMING
en: its-maker | es: su-hacedor | fr: création | de: Gebilde Hab 2:18

יְצֶר H3337 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Yetser/Jezer, son of Naphtali and eponymous ancestor of Jezerite clan
A personal and clan name for one of Naphtali's sons, appearing in three parallel genealogical lists: Genesis 46:24 (sons who went to Egypt), Numbers 26:49 (wilderness census listing the Jezerite clan), and 1 Chronicles 7:13 (tribal genealogy). The name is puzzlingly classified under 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief' in the domain taxonomy, perhaps due to confusion with the noun יֵצֶר (form, inclination, distress) which shares the same consonantal spelling but is a different lexeme. The name itself may mean 'form' or 'fashioning,' connecting to the root יצר (to form, fashion).

(3×) The name of Naphtali's son and the clan that descended from him (the Jezerites). The three occurrences span the biblical narrative from patriarchal descent to wilderness wandering to Chronicler's retrospective, showing how genealogical frameworks tied individual ancestors to corporate tribal identity. The prepositional variations ('and Jezer', 'to Jezer') simply reflect different narrative contexts—descent lists versus census organization. DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS
en: and-Jezer, and-Yetser, to-Jezer | es: De-Yéser, y-Yetser | fr: [ויצר], et-Jezer, à-Jezer | de: [ויצר], und-Jezer, zu-Jezer Gen 46:24; Num 26:49; 1Chr 7:13

יְצָרַי H3338 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cs (1×)
My forms or limbs, referring to body parts in Job 17:7
This rare plural form with possessive suffix means 'my forms' or 'my members' in Job 17:7, where Job describes his deteriorating physical condition. The context speaks of eyes growing dim and bodily members wasting away like shadows. The imagery is somatic and visceral, typical of Job's complaints about his physical suffering. The root relates to forming or fashioning.

(1×) A masculine plural noun with first-person suffix meaning 'my forms' or 'my limbs' in Job 17:7, referring to Job's body parts or members that have wasted away like shadows. The Spanish 'mis miembros' (my members) preserves the somatic reference, fitting Job's lament over comprehensive physical deterioration under suffering. FLESH AND BODY en: and-my-limbs | es: y-mis-miembros | fr: et-mon-יצרי-moi | de: [ויצר] Job 17:7

יִצְרִי H3339 Prep-l (1×)
Yitsri, chief of a Levitical choir in 1 Chronicles 25:11
Yitsri appears as the leader of one of the Levitical singing divisions in 1 Chronicles 25:11. The name may relate to the root yāṣar (to form, fashion). The context is David's organization of temple musicians into twenty-four courses, each assigned by lot. Yitsri's division represents one component of the elaborate worship structure the Chronicler attributes to David's preparations.

(1×) A masculine proper name in 1 Chronicles 25:11 designating a chief musician among the Levitical temple choirs. The organizational context reflects the Chronicler's emphasis on ordered worship, with Yitsri's division forming one of the twenty-four courses that rotated musical service in the sanctuary. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: for-Yitsri | es: para-Izri | fr: [ליצרי] | de: [ליצרי] 1Chr 25:11

יִצְרִי H3340 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
The Jezerites, a Naphtalite clan descended from Jezer (Numbers 26:49)
The Jezerites appear as a gentilic designation in the census of Numbers 26:49, representing the clan descended from Jezer son of Naphtali. The definite article creates a collective sense—'the Jezerite clan.' Such census lists were crucial for tribal organization, military muster, and land distribution. The gentilic functions to organize families within the larger tribal structure.

(1×) A gentilic (clan designation) in Numbers 26:49 referring to the descendants of Jezer within the tribe of Naphtali. The census context uses this patronymic form to organize and enumerate family groups for military and territorial purposes in Israel's tribal structure during the wilderness period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jezerite | es: los-yeseritas | fr: le-Jezerite | de: der-Jezerite Num 26:49

יָצַת H3341 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs (31×)
To kindle, set on fire (Hifil); to be burned or kindled (Nifal); to catch fire, burn (Qal)
Yatsath is a verb of fire in all its biblical registers, from literal arson to divine wrath. Joshua's soldiers 'set fire' to Ai (Josh 8:8, 19), Absalom's servants 'set fire' to Joab's field (2 Sam 14:30), and the gates of Jerusalem 'were burned' in Nehemiah's grief (Neh 1:3). The prophets turn it into a metaphor of judgment: wickedness 'kindles' like brushfire (Isa 9:18) and God's wrath 'is kindled' against the people (2 Kgs 22:13, 17). The three stems divide neatly: Hifil for deliberate ignition, Nifal for the resulting state of being burned, and Qal for the intransitive process of catching fire.

1. kindle, set on fire (Hifil) (18×) The Hifil causative covers deliberate acts of setting fire. Joshua commands his troops to 'set the city on fire' (Josh 8:8), Absalom's servants ignite Joab's barley field (2 Sam 14:30), and God himself promises 'I will kindle a fire' in judgment (Jer 17:27). Spanish 'Y encenderé' and French 'allumer' consistently render the causative agency. BURNING AND FIRE
en: He-has-kindled, [and-set-it-on-fire], and-He-kindled | es: (y-prended-fuego-a-ella), Y-encenderé, [y-prended-fuego-a-ella] | fr: [and-plaça-cela-sur-fire], allumer, et-allumer | de: [and-setzte-es-auf-fire], [והצתו], [ויצת] Josh 8:8; Josh 8:19; Judg 9:49; 2Sam 14:30

2. be burned, be kindled (Nifal) (9×) The Nifal passive describes being burned or suffering the effects of fire. In 2 Kings 22:13, 17, Josiah learns that God's wrath 'is kindled' against Judah; Nehemiah mourns that Jerusalem's gates 'are burned' (Neh 1:3; 2:17). The shift from agent to patient is clear across translations, with Spanish using 'fue quemada/fueron quemadas' for the passive state. BURNING AND FIRE
en: (are-burned), [are-burned], and-kindled | es: [fueron-quemadas], fue-quemada, fueron-quemadas | fr: [נצתו], allumer, et-allumer | de: [נצתו], anzuenden, kindled 2Kgs 22:13; 2Kgs 22:17; Neh 1:3; Neh 2:17; Jer 2:15

3. burn, catch fire (Qal) (4×) The Qal intransitive describes fire catching or spreading without naming an external agent. Isaiah 9:18 envisions wickedness burning 'like fire' that kindles thickets, and Jeremiah 51:58 foresees Babylon's gates 'burning' with fire. The subject is the fire or the thing burning, not a person igniting it, which Spanish and German render as 'serán encendidas/anzuenden' with an impersonal feel. BURNING AND FIRE

en: and-it-kindles, they-are-burned, will-be-burned | es: serán-encendidas, serán-encendidos, serán-quemadas | fr: allumer, et-allumer | de: anzuenden, und-anzuenden Isa 9:18; Isa 33:12; Jer 49:2; Jer 51:58

יְקֶב H3342 Art / N-mp (16×)

A wine vat or winepress — a rock-hewn basin for collecting juice from trodden grapes.

Denotes the lower basin of a wine installation, typically hewn from rock, into which freshly pressed grape juice flowed from the treading floor (gat). The two components of an ancient Israelite winepress were distinct: the gat where grapes were trampled by foot, and the yeqev below it that received the juice. Isaiah 5:2 describes both being excavated together for a vineyard. The yeqev appears alongside the threshing floor as a symbol of agricultural abundance (Deut 15:14; 16:13; Hos 9:2; Joel 2:24), and its overflowing is a sign of divine blessing (Prov 3:10). The name also surfaces as a place-name — the 'winepress of Zeeb' where the Midianite prince was slain (Judg 7:25). French brackets the Hebrew form, while German uses 'Kelter' and Spanish employs 'lagar.'

winepress / wine vat (16×) A rock-cut basin or vat for receiving grape juice trodden in the upper press (gat), used both as a common noun for the physical installation and occasionally as a toponym. Paired with the threshing floor as a marker of harvest prosperity (Deut 15:14; 16:13; Hos 9:2; Joel 2:24), and with the gat in vineyard construction passages (Isa 5:2; Joel 4:13). Overflowing vats signal divine blessing (Prov 3:10), while treading in the vats can also denote judgment or labor exploitation (Job 24:11; Isa 16:10). Spanish 'lagar' and German 'Kelter' reflect the winepress sense. WINEPRESS VAT

en: and-from-your-winepress, and-winepress, at-winepress-of- | es: de-lagares, el-lagar, en-lagar-de | fr: [ביקבים], [היקב], [ויקב] | de: Kelter, [בקבים], [יקב] Num 18:27; Num 18:30; Deut 15:14; Deut 16:13; Judg 7:25

קַבְצְאֵל H3343 Conj-w (1×)

In Yeqavtseel (Kabzeel), a town in southern Judah, appearing in Nehemiah 11:25

Yeqavtseel appears with the preposition and locative he in Nehemiah 11:25 as one of the towns where returned exiles settled. The name means 'God gathers' and is parallel to Kabzeel in earlier texts (Joshua 15:21, 2 Samuel 23:20). The resettlement lists in Nehemiah document the repopulation of Judean territory after the Babylonian exile.

(1×) A place name with locative prefix in Nehemiah 11:25, referring to Kabzeel in southern Judah where post-exilic Jews resettled. The name 'God gathers' takes on poignant significance in the exile-return context, as the gathered community reoccupies ancestral towns that had lain desolate during the captivity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-in-Yeqavtseel | es: y-en-Jecabseel | fr: [וביקבצאל] | de: [וביקבצאל] Neh 11:25

יָקֹד H3344 Prep-m / N-ms (9×)

To burn or be kindled; as a noun, a hearth or place of burning where fire is kept alive.

A verb of burning and kindling with strong cognate support across the Semitic family – Aramaic yeqad, Syriac yiqed, and Arabic waqada all mean 'to burn.' In Scripture it carries intense theological freight: God's wrath burns down to Sheol (Deut 32:22), divine judgment is kindled like fire (Isa 10:16), and a perpetual flame must be kept burning on the altar (Lev 6:9, 12-13). The single nominal use in Isaiah 30:14 gives us yaqud, the hearth or fireplace from which coals are scooped – a concrete domestic image amid a passage of shattering judgment.

1. burn, be kindled (8×) The verbal sense of burning or being kindled, spanning Qal, Hophal, and related conjugations. Leviticus 6:9, 12-13 prescribes the perpetual altar fire that 'shall be kept burning' (tuqad). Deuteronomy 32:22 and Isaiah 10:16 deploy the root for divine wrath that burns unquenchably. Isaiah 65:5 describes God's displeasure as a fire 'burning all day.' Arabic waqada and Aramaic yeqad confirm the core meaning across the Semitic languages, and Spanish ardera / encendera consistently renders the kindling-to-blazing progression. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-burns, burning, it-will-burn | es: arderá, encenderá, que-arde | fr: [יקד], [יקדת], [תוקד] | de: [יקד], [יקדת], [תוקד] Lev 6:9; Lev 6:12; Lev 6:13; Deut 32:22; Isa 10:16

2. hearth, burning-place (1×) A nominal derivative, yaqud, meaning 'hearth' or 'burning-place' – the location where fire is maintained. Isaiah 30:14 uses miyaqud ('from the hearth') in a vivid simile: Jerusalem's destruction will be so thorough that not a shard will remain large enough to scoop fire from the hearth. This concrete, domestic sense – a fixed place of burning rather than the act of burning itself – is lexically distinct, giving the root a verbal-to-nominal semantic extension paralleled by Arabic mawqid ('fireplace'). BURNING AND FIRE

en: from-the-hearth | es: de-hogar | fr: [מיקוד] | de: [מיקוד] Isa 30:14

יְקַד H3345 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fsd (8×)

To burn (Aramaic); used exclusively in Daniel 3 to describe the blazing furnace into which the three faithful men were cast.

This Aramaic verb appears only as a feminine singular participle in Daniel 3, always modifying the fiery furnace (attun nura yaqidta) into which Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were thrown. All eight occurrences fall within this single dramatic narrative, describing the furnace as actively burning. The participle form emphasizes the ongoing, intensely burning state of the furnace. English renders it 'burning,' Spanish 'ardiente,' and French 'ardente' — all capturing the present, continuous nature of the blaze. German notably renders the whole phrase as 'Feuerofen' (fire-oven), compounding the image into a single word.

(8×) The Aramaic participle meaning 'burning,' used exclusively in Daniel 3 (vv. 6, 11, 15, 17, 20, 21, 23, 26) to describe Nebuchadnezzar's blazing furnace. The feminine participle form (yaqidta) modifies the furnace noun, emphasizing its continuously burning state. The multilingual evidence — English 'burning,' Spanish 'ardiente,' French 'ardente' — uniformly reflects the active, ongoing combustion. German collapses the phrase into the compound 'Feuerofen' (fire-furnace). BURN KINDLE FLAME

en: burning | es: ardiente | fr: ardente | de: Feuerofen Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11; Dan 3:15; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:20

יְקֵדָה H3346 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

To the burning of fire, a construct phrase in Daniel 7:11

This Aramaic construct phrase appears in Daniel's vision of the fourth beast being given 'to the burning of fire' in Daniel 7:11. The imagery is apocalyptic and judicial—divine judgment executed through fire. The construct relationship links 'burning' with 'fire' for emphasis. The context depicts the beast's destruction following the Ancient of Days' judgment scene.

(1×) An Aramaic construct phrase meaning 'to the burning of fire' in Daniel 7:11, describing the fourth beast's destruction in apocalyptic vision. The emphatic construction intensifies the imagery of divine judgment, with the Spanish 'a ardor de' (to the burning of) and French 'incendie' (conflagration) both preserving the judicial fire motif. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-burning-of | es: a-ardor-de | fr: incendie | de: [ליקדת] Dan 7:11

יָקְדְעָם H3347 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yokdeam, a city in the hill country of Judah (Joshua 15:56), site unknown

Yokdeam appears in the territorial allotment of Judah as a town in the hill country in Joshua 15:56. Its precise location remains unidentified in modern scholarship. Greek manuscript traditions show variation (Iareikam, Iekdaam, Ieknaam), typical of place name transmission. The town is part of Judah's inheritance but receives no further biblical elaboration.

(1×) A place name in Joshua 15:56 designating a town in Judah's hill country allotment, whose precise location has been lost to history. The single occurrence and lack of modern identification illustrate how many biblical place names remain unrecovered despite the preservation of territorial boundary descriptions in Joshua. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yokdeam | es: y-Jocdeam | fr: et-Yokdeam | de: und-Yokdeam Josh 15:56

יָקֶה H3348 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yaqeh: personal name, father of Agur mentioned in Proverbs 30:1
Yaqeh appears only once in Scripture as the father of Agur, who delivered the oracle recorded in Proverbs 30. The name's meaning is uncertain, and textual variants suggest possible emendations. This rare patronymic anchors one of the wisdom tradition's more enigmatic voices within a specific family lineage.

(1×) A proper name designating the father of Agur, the sage whose proverbs appear in Proverbs 30:1. The name occurs only in this single genealogical reference. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliterations preserving the Hebrew form, indicating the name's unique and untranslatable character as a personal identifier within Israel's wisdom tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yakeh | es: Yaqeh | fr: יקה | de: [יקה] Prov 30:1

יְקֻהָה H3349 N-fsc (2×)
Obedience; used with both subjective genitive (obedience of peoples) and objective genitive (obedience to mother)
This rare feminine noun denotes the act or quality of obedience, appearing only twice in poetic contexts. In Genesis 49:10 it appears in Jacob's blessing of Judah, referring to "the obedience of the peoples" that will come to the Davidic ruler. In Proverbs 30:17, it describes the moral duty of obedience to one's mother. The word's flexibility with genitive constructions shows its capacity to express both who obeys and who is obeyed.

(2×) Found in Genesis 49:10 (Jacob's oracle) and Proverbs 30:17 (wisdom saying). The Genesis passage carries messianic weight in Jewish and Christian interpretation, referring to a future king to whom nations will submit. Multilingual glosses preserve both the subjective form (obedience of) and objective form (obedience to), reflecting the Hebrew construct chain's directional ambiguity in these contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: obedience-of, obedience-to | es: la-obediencia-a-, obediencia-de | fr: obedience-de, à-ליקהת | de: [ליקהת], der-Gehorsam Gen 49:10; Prov 30:17

יְקוֹד H3350 Prep-k / N-msc (2×)
Burning; used figuratively for divine judgment in Isaiah 10:16
This verbal noun derives from the root meaning "to burn" and appears twice in Isaiah 10:16, both as an absolute form and as a construct. The prophet uses it to describe Yahweh's coming judgment against Assyria, depicted as a consuming fire that will kindle beneath the invader's glory. The repetition ("burning... burning") creates intensity, emphasizing the totality and inevitability of divine retribution.

(2×) Exclusively attested in Isaiah 10:16 in a prophetic oracle against Assyria. The context is thoroughly metaphorical: God will send leanness among Assyria's stout warriors and kindle a burning beneath their glory. French and German preserve the Hebrew forms in brackets, while Spanish "encendimiento" and English "burning" capture the fiery destruction inherent in the root verb. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-burning-of, burning | es: como-encendimiento-de, encendimiento | fr: [יקד], [כיקוד] | de: [יקד], [כיקוד] Isa 10:16

יְקוּם H3351 Art / N-ms (3×)
living thing, all that exists; substance, existence (used collectively)
A noun denoting substance, existence, or living things collectively. The phrase כָּל־הַיְקוּם ('all that exists' or 'every living thing') appears in Genesis 7:4, 23 referring to all living creatures—human and animal—that God would blot out in the flood. Deuteronomy 11:6 uses it in a more limited sense for Dathan and Abiram's household and possessions that were swallowed by the earth. The term captures the totality of living, subsisting things—everything that has being and stands upright upon the earth, making its destruction in judgment all the more comprehensive and terrible.

(3×) The collective totality of existing, living things. In the flood narrative, 'all that exists' encompasses every creature with the breath of life, emphasizing the near-total undoing of creation. In Deuteronomy, it denotes the household and retinue of the rebellious leaders. The multilingual glosses vary between 'existence/el existente' (emphasizing being) and 'living things/ser viviente' (emphasizing creatures), reflecting the term's semantic range from abstract existence to concrete living beings. LIVING CREATURES
en: the-existence, the-living-things | es: el-existente, ser-viviente | fr: le-existence, le-vivant-choses | de: Bestehende, der-lebend-Sachen Gen 7:4; Gen 7:23; Deut 11:6

יָקוּשׁ H3352 N-ms (1×)
yaqosh: fowler, one who traps birds; used metaphorically for those who ensnare others
This noun denotes someone who lays traps for birds, a fowler. In Hosea 9:8, it appears in a metaphorical context where the prophet is described as facing "the trap of a fowler," likely referring to those who seek to ensnare God's messenger. The hunting imagery underscores the danger and cunning opposition faced by prophets.

(1×) A professional bird-catcher or fowler who uses snares and traps. The single biblical occurrence in Hosea 9:8 uses the term metaphorically to describe adversaries who set traps for the prophet. Spanish and English translations render this as "bird hunter" or "fowler," while some versions simply transliterate, recognizing the specialized vocabulary of ancient hunting practices. HUNTING ACTIVITY
en: a-fowler | es: cazador-de-aves | fr: piège | de: [יקוש] Hos 9:8

יָקוּשׁ H3353 N-ms (3×)
fowler, bird-trapper; one who sets snares for birds
A noun denoting a fowler or bird-catcher, one who sets traps and snares for birds. The word appears three times, always with ominous connotations. Psalm 91:3 promises deliverance from 'the snare of the fowler' (in a psalm of divine protection). Proverbs 6:5 urges escape 'from the hand of the fowler' like a bird fleeing. Jeremiah 5:26 uses it in a simile describing wicked men who crouch like fowlers setting traps—but their trap catches humans, not birds. The fowler becomes a powerful biblical metaphor for danger, deception, and those who prey on the vulnerable.

(3×) One who professionally traps birds using snares, nets, and decoys. In all three contexts, the fowler represents threat and entrapment, whether literal human enemies or spiritual dangers. The image works powerfully because bird-trapping requires patient, hidden cunning—the bird doesn't see the danger until ensnared. Jeremiah's wicked men 'crouch like fowlers' to catch people in their schemes, inverting the hunter-prey relationship in horrific ways. Multilingual glosses sometimes shift to 'birds' or 'hunter' when the exact term is unclear. HUNTING ACTIVITY
en: fowlers, the-fowler | es: aves, cazador | fr: [יקושים], oiseleur, יקוש | de: [יקוש], [יקושים], der-fowler Ps 91:3; Prov 6:5; Jer 5:26

יְקוּתִיאֵל H3354 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yequthi'el: personal name in tribe of Judah, possibly meaning 'preservation of God'
Yequthi'el is a personal name appearing in the genealogies of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:18). The name's etymology is disputed, but may derive from a root meaning "preservation" combined with the divine element "El," yielding "Preservation of God" or "God preserves."

The varied Septuagint renderings reflect textual uncertainty in the transmission of this rare name.

(1×) A man of Judah listed in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 4:18. The name appears to be theophoric, incorporating the divine name El. Cross-linguistic evidence shows diverse transliterations in Greek manuscripts (Chetiel, Iekthiel, Iephthiel), suggesting scribal difficulty with the Hebrew text. The name occurs nowhere else in Scripture. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yequthi'el | es: Yequtiel | fr: [יקותיאל] | de: [יקותיאל] 1Chr 4:18

יָקְטָן H3355 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Joktan — son of Eber and ancestor of Arabian tribes in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10; 1 Chronicles 1).

A Hebrew proper name (יָקְטָן) borne by a son of Eber and brother of Peleg in the Shemite genealogy. Joktan is presented as the 'father' — that is, the eponymous ancestor — of thirteen Arabian tribal groups centered in Yemen and southern Arabia (Gen 10:25–29; 1 Chr 1:19–23). While his brother Peleg's line leads to Abraham and Israel, Joktan's line maps the Semitic peoples of the Arabian Peninsula. Arabic tradition identifies him with Qaḥṭān, the legendary ancestor of the southern Arabs. The name's etymology is debated, though BDB connects it to an Arabic root meaning 'to strike.'

Yoqtan (6×) The proper name Yoqṭān (יָקְטָן), a son of Eber and descendant of Shem, ancestor of thirteen Arabian tribal groups. His genealogy in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:25, 26, 29) and its Chronicler parallel (1 Chr 1:19, 20, 23) maps the Semitic peoples of southern Arabia and Yemen. Arabic tradition preserves his memory as Qaḥṭān, progenitor of the 'southern Arabs.' English and French render the name as 'Joktan,' while Spanish offers 'Yoqtan/Yoqtán,' and German follows with 'Joktan' as well, with only minor orthographic variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Joktan, Yoqtan, and-Joktan | es: Y-Yoqtan, Y-Yoqtán, Yoqtan | fr: Joktan, et-Joktan | de: Joktan, Joktans, [ויקטן] Gen 10:25; Gen 10:26; Gen 10:29; 1Chr 1:19; 1Chr 1:20

יָקִים H3356 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Yaqim, the name of two men: a Benjamite (1 Chr 8:19) and a Levite (1 Chr 24:12)

This personal name, meaning "he lifts up" or "he establishes," designates two individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies. The first appears in the Benjamite family tree, while the second represents a Levitical division in David's reorganization of temple service. The name has Sabaean parallels (Yahqam), showing its currency in the broader Semitic world. One occurrence includes a prepositional prefix ("for Yaqim"), indicating a lottery assignment for priestly courses.

(2×) Attested in 1 Chronicles 8:19 and 24:12 for distinct individuals. The Septuagint renders it Iakeim (with variations), showing standard Greek transliteration practice. The two occurrences appear with different prefixes (conjunctive "and" and prepositional "for"), reflecting their different narrative contexts: genealogical listing versus priestly lot assignments. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yaqim, for-Yaqim | es: Y-Yaquim, para-Yakim | fr: [ויקים], [ליקים] | de: [ויקים], [ליקים] 1Chr 8:19; 1Chr 24:12

יַקִּיר H3357 Adj-ms (1×)

yaqqir: very precious, dear, beloved; expressing intense value or affection

This adjective intensifies the concept of preciousness or dearness. It appears only in Jeremiah 31:20, where God asks rhetorically, "Is Ephraim my very precious son?" The word stands in parallel with "child of delight," emphasizing the profound affection and value God places on his covenant people despite their waywardness. The term conveys both economic worth and emotional attachment.

(1×) An intensive adjective meaning "very precious" or "exceedingly dear," used in Jeremiah 31:20 to describe Ephraim as God's beloved son. The term appears in a context of divine pathos, where God's deep affection overcomes judgment. Translations across languages consistently render this as "precious" or "dear," capturing the emotional and valuational force of God's rhetorical question about his wayward people. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: precious | es: precioso | fr: [יקיר] | de: [יקיר] Jer 31:20

יַקִּיר H3358 Conj-w / Adj-msd (2×)

Aramaic adjective meaning honorable or difficult, depending on context

This Aramaic loanword appears twice in biblical Aramaic sections, carrying two distinct but related meanings. In Ezra 4:10 it describes nobles or honorable persons who were deported, using the emphatic Aramaic form. In Daniel 2:11 it describes a difficult or hard matter, specifically the king's demand that his counselors reveal his dream without being told its content. The semantic range from "weighty" extends naturally to both social weight (honor) and practical weight (difficulty).

(2×) Found in Ezra 4:10 (describing noble deportees) and Daniel 2:11 (describing a difficult request). The shift from honor to difficulty reflects the core sense of weightiness or significance. Spanish and English glosses distinguish the two uses (noble vs. difficult), while French and German preserve the Hebrew/Aramaic scripts, recognizing the Aramaic linguistic context of both passages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-noble, is-difficult | es: es-difícil, y-noble | fr: [ויקירא], lien | de: [ויקירא], [יקירה] Ezra 4:10; Dan 2:11

יְקַמְיָה H3359 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Yeqamyah/Jokmeam, personal name in Judahite genealogy

A personal name meaning something like 'Yahweh will establish' or 'may Yah raise up,' built on the root קום (to arise, stand, establish). The name appears three times in 1 Chronicles' genealogies, all within the tribe of Judah: twice in 2:41 (suggesting a textual repetition or two individuals with the same name in close genealogical proximity) and once in 3:18 among the descendants of Jeconiah, Judah's exiled king. The name's theophoric element expresses hope in Yahweh's establishing or confirming action—particularly poignant in the context of royal genealogy after exile.

(3×) A Judahite personal name invoking Yahweh's establishing or raising up. The occurrence in the line of Jeconiah (1 Chronicles 3:18) connects this name to the exiled royal family, making it a small but significant marker in the genealogical thread that early Christians would trace to Jesus. The double occurrence in 2:41 may represent scribal repetition or two distinct individuals. Greek variants (Ιεχεμειας, Ιεκομιας, Ιακεμιας) show standard transliteration variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeqamyah, and-Yeqamyah | es: Yeqamya, y-Yeqamya | fr: [ויקמיה], [יקמיה] | de: [ויקמיה], [יקמיה] 1Chr 2:41; 1Chr 3:18

יְקַמְעָם H3360 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Yeqamam, a Levite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 23:19 and 24:23

This personal name likely means "may the kinsman arise" or "let the people stand," according to BDB's analysis of its components. It designates a Levite from the Kohathite division, appearing in both the genealogical roster and the priestly course assignments. The Septuagint shows considerable variation (Ikemias, Iokom, Iakamias), reflecting the challenges of rendering Hebrew proper names in Greek.

(2×) Attested in 1 Chronicles 23:19 and 24:23, both within Levitical genealogies. One occurrence includes the conjunctive prefix ("and Yeqamam"), showing the name's integration into list structures. Multilingual traditions maintain both forms, with French and German preserving Hebrew script in brackets to reflect the manuscript precision required for proper names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yeqamam, and-Yeqamam | es: Yekamam, y-Yekamam | fr: [ויקמעם], [יקמעם] | de: [ויקמעם], [יקמעם] 1Chr 23:19; 1Chr 24:23

יָקְמְעָם H3361 N-proper-fs (2×)

Yokmeam/Jokmeam, a city in northern Israel (1 Kgs 4:12) and a Levitical city of refuge in Ephraim (1 Chr 6:68)

This place name may mean "let the people be established." It designates a city mentioned in Solomon's administrative districts, possibly the modern Tell Qaimun north of Megiddo. More significantly, it appears as a Levitical city of refuge in the tribal territory of Ephraim, where Chronicles identifies it as equivalent to Kibzaim from Joshua 21:22. The dual references suggest an important regional center with both administrative and religious functions.

(2×) Found in 1 Kings 4:12 (administrative context) and 1 Chronicles 6:68 (Levitical cities). The Septuagint variations (Loukam, Oukam, Iekmaan) show the expected transliteration challenges. The identification with Kibzaim in Joshua links it to the cities of refuge network, giving it special status in ancient Israelite society as a place of asylum and Levitical residence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jokmeam, Yoqmeam | es: Yokmeam, Yoqmeam | fr: Jokmeam, [יקמעם] | de: Jokmeam, [יקמעם] 1Kgs 4:12; 1Chr 6:68

יָקְנְעָם H3362 N-proper-fs (3×)

Yokneam/Jokneam, Canaanite city in Zebulun, later a Levitical city

A Canaanite city name appearing in Joshua's conquest and settlement accounts. First mentioned in the list of defeated kings (Joshua 12:22), where it's defined by the phrase 'of Carmel'—likely meaning near Mount Carmel rather than the city Carmel. It's assigned to Zebulun's territory in Joshua 19:11 and designated as a Levitical city in 21:34, showing its progression from Canaanite stronghold to Israelite possession to priestly inheritance. The site is usually identified with Tell Qeimun, a strategic tell in the Jezreel Valley controlling routes between the coastal plain and the valley.

(3×) A fortified city in the Carmel region that passed from Canaanite control to become part of Zebulun's allotment and eventually a Levitical city. Its strategic location near Carmel and in the Jezreel corridor made it significant for controlling regional trade and military movements. The consistent rendering across languages (Jokneam/Jocneam/Yokneam) shows this was a well-established place name in the biblical geographical tradition, even if modern identification remains tentative. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jokneam, Yokneam, Yoqneam | es: Jocneam | fr: Jokneam, Yokneam, Yoqneam | de: Jokneam, Yokneam, Yoqneam Josh 12:22; Josh 19:11; Josh 21:34

יָקַע H3363 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (8×)

To be dislocated or alienated (Qal); to hang or impale publicly (Hifil); those who have been hanged (Hofal participle).

A verb whose semantic range moves from dislocation to execution. In the Qal, it describes something wrenched out of place — Jacob's hip socket at Peniel (Gen 32:25) and, metaphorically, a soul torn away or alienated from someone (Jer 6:8; Ezek 23:17-18). The Hifil shifts to a grim causative: to hang or impale publicly as judicial punishment, seen in Numbers 25:4 and the Gibeonites' execution of Saul's descendants (2 Sam 21:6, 9). The Arabic cognate waqa'a ('to fall, to fall upon') preserves the root's physical force. Ancient versions disagree on the exact method — Greek translators suggest 'exposure to the sun,' Targum says 'crucify,' others 'throw down from a height' — reflecting genuine uncertainty about the precise form of execution.

1. to be alienated, estranged (Qal) (4×) To be dislocated physically or alienated emotionally (Qal) — something wrenched out of its proper place. Genesis 32:25 uses it for Jacob's hip socket being thrown out of joint during the wrestling at Peniel. Jeremiah 6:8 and Ezekiel 23:17-18 extend it metaphorically: the soul 'is torn away' or 'alienated' from someone. Spanish 'se-aparto/y-desencajo' and Arabic cognates confirm both the physical dislocation and emotional estrangement dimensions. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: and-she-alienated, and-was-dislocated, be-alienated | es: se-aparte, y-desencajó, y-se-apartó | fr: [עקת], et-pendre, et-était-dislocated | de: [ותקע], [עקת], und-verrenkt-wurde Gen 32:25; Jer 6:8; Ezek 23:17; Ezek 23:18

2. to hang, impale (Hifil) (3×) To hang or impale publicly as a form of judicial execution (Hifil causative). In Numbers 25:4, God commands Moses to 'hang' the chiefs before the LORD; in 2 Samuel 21:6 and 21:9, the Gibeonites execute Saul's descendants this way. The exact method remains debated — the Septuagint suggests sun-exposure, the Targum crucifixion, and some Arabic renderings suggest throwing from a height. Spanish 'colgaron/cuélgalos' and German 'haengen' consistently use hanging imagery. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-hang, and-they-hanged-them, and-we-will-hang-them | es: y-cuélgalos, y-los-colgaremos, y-los-colgaron | fr: et-hang, et-ils-hanged-eux, et-nous-fera-hang-eux | de: und-haengen, und-sie-hanged-ihnen, und-wir-wird-hang-ihnen Num 25:4; 2Sam 21:6; 2Sam 21:9

3. the hanged ones (Hofal participle) (1×) Those who have been hanged or impaled (Hofal passive participle) — the result of the Hifil action, naming the executed persons. In 2 Samuel 21:13, the bones of 'the hanged ones' are gathered for burial alongside Saul and Jonathan. Arabic 'al-mu'allaqin' ('the suspended ones') uses the corresponding passive participle. This sole Hofal occurrence treats the word as a substantive, a category of the dead. HANG EXECUTE SUSPEND

en: the-hanged-ones | es: los-colgados | fr: le-hanged-ceux | de: der-hanged-die 2Sam 21:13

יָקַץ H3364 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs (10×)

Wake up, awake — to rouse from sleep, used of natural waking and metaphorical arousal from stupor

The verb יָקַץ (yaqats) means to wake up or awaken from sleep, typically in the Qal stem. It describes the moment of transition from sleep to waking consciousness, often at narratively pivotal points: Noah awoke from his wine and learned what Ham had done (Gen 9:24), Jacob awoke at Bethel declaring 'Surely YHWH is in this place' (Gen 28:16), and Pharaoh awoke from his prophetic dreams (Gen 41:4, 7, 21). Solomon's famous dream-judgment ends with his awakening (1 Kgs 3:15). The verb also carries figurative overtones in wisdom literature, as when the righteous person awakes to find the wicked's prosperity vanished (Ps 73:20). Spanish 'despertó' and French 'se réveilla' render it consistently.

to awake, wake up (Qal) (10×) To awaken or rouse from sleep, marking the transition from unconsciousness to alertness, often at narratively charged moments. Noah awakes to discover Ham's act (Gen 9:24), Jacob awakes at Bethel with a theophanic revelation (Gen 28:16), Pharaoh awakes from prophetic dreams (Gen 41:4, 7, 21), Samson awakes unaware his strength has departed (Judg 16:14, 20), and Solomon awakes after his dream at Gibeon (1 Kgs 3:15). Used figuratively of God 'as one awaking from sleep' (Ps 78:65) and of eschatological awakening (Jer 51:39, 57). Spanish 'despertar' and German 'erwachen' match its core sense precisely. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: and-I-awoke, and-awoke, and-he-awoke | es: Y-despertó, y-despertará, y-desperté | fr: et-Je-s'éveilla, et-awoke, et-fera-awake | de: und-awoke, und-er-awoke, und-erwachte Gen 9:24; Gen 28:16; Gen 41:4; Gen 41:7; Gen 41:21

יָקַר H3365 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (11×)

Be precious, prized, or esteemed; make rare or scarce (Hifil); be appraised at a price

At its heart, this verb conveys the weight of worth—whether intrinsic preciousness or assigned value. When David's name 'became precious' (1 Sam 18:30), or when a captain pleads 'let my life be precious in your sight' (2 Kgs 1:13-14), the Qal stem expresses genuine esteem and honor. The Hifil causative turns this inward: God will make mortal man 'more rare than fine gold' (Isa 13:12), and Proverbs counsels making your foot 'rare' in your neighbor's house (Prov 25:17). Zechariah's bitter irony—'the magnificent price at which I was valued' (Zech 11:13)—pushes the root into commercial appraisal, a sense the Aramaic cognate yəqar also carries.

1. be precious or valuable (8×) To be precious, prized, or held in high esteem (Qal). Used of persons, names, and lives regarded as valuable. The psalmist marvels that God's thoughts are 'precious' beyond counting (Ps 139:17), while the price of redeeming a soul is 'too costly' to pay (Ps 49:8). French 'précieux' and Spanish 'preciosa/precioso' uniformly confirm this core sense of intrinsic worth and honor. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: and-costly, and-was-precious, and-will-be-precious | es: fue-preciosa, fuiste-precioso, preciosos | fr: [יִקָּרֵת], et-fut-précieux, et-être-précieux | de: [יִקָּרֵת], lass-sein-kostbar, precious 1Sam 18:30; 1Sam 26:21; 2Kgs 1:13; 2Kgs 1:14; Ps 49:8

2. make rare or scarce (2×) To make rare, scarce, or infrequent (Hifil causative). God threatens to make humans rarer than gold of Ophir (Isa 13:12), transforming preciousness into scarcity. Proverbs 25:17 uses this practically: make your visits rare lest your neighbor grow weary. Spanish 'Haré más precioso' ('I will make more precious') captures the causal shift from 'being valued' to 'being made uncommon.' BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: I-will-make-rare, make-rare | es: Haré-más-precioso, Retira | fr: [אוקיר], הקר | de: [אוקיר], [הקר] Prov 25:17; Isa 13:12

3. be valued at a price (1×) To be appraised or valued at a set price (Qal with monetary nuance). Zechariah 11:13 uses this with heavy sarcasm—the shepherd-prophet is 'valued' at thirty pieces of silver, the price of a gored slave (Exod 21:32). Spanish 'fui valorado' and English 'I was valued' highlight the commercial assessment dimension, distinct from the more general esteem of sense 1. HONOR AND PRICE

en: I-was-valued | es: fui-valorado | fr: être-précieux | de: [יִקָּרְתִּי] Zech 11:13

יְקָר H3366 Conj-w / N-ms (17×)

Preciousness, treasure; honor, esteem, glory; price or monetary worth

The Hebrew noun yeqar encompasses the full spectrum of what is valued — from tangible treasure to public honor to assigned price. In the book of Esther, where it appears most frequently, yeqar denotes the royal honor and splendor that Ahasuerus lavishes and that Haman craves (Esth 1:4; 6:6). Jeremiah uses it for the precious things of Jerusalem carried into exile (Jer 20:5), while Job speaks of the eye spotting every precious thing hidden in the earth (Job 28:10). Zechariah employs it with biting irony for the paltry 'price' at which the shepherd is valued — thirty pieces of silver (Zech 11:13). Arabic ikraam ('honoring') and thamin ('precious') together capture the word's double register of abstract esteem and concrete worth.

1. honor, esteem, glory (12×) The abstract sense of honor, esteem, or glory — the quality of being publicly valued and respected. Esther uses this sense repeatedly: the splendor of the king's majesty (Esth 1:4), the honor Haman desires for himself (Esth 6:6-9), and the honor given to Mordecai (Esth 6:3, 6:11). Psalm 49:13,21 reflects on human honor that does not endure. German Ehre and Spanish honor correspond precisely. The Daniel passages (11:20-21) extend it to royal dignity and the glory of a kingdom. HONOR AND PRICE en: and-honor, honor, honor-of | es: en-honor, en-su-honor, en-su-honor? | fr: dans-valeur, et-honneur, honneur | de: Ehre, in-Ehre, und-Ehre Esth 1:4; Esth 1:20; Esth 6:3; Esth 6:6

2. precious thing, treasure (4×) The concrete sense of precious things, valuables, or treasure — tangible objects of great worth. Jeremiah mourns that all the precious things of Jerusalem will be plundered (Jer 20:5), and Ezekiel denounces leaders who seize treasure and precious things (Ezek 22:25). Job celebrates the miner's eye that spots every precious thing underground (Job 28:10). Proverbs 20:15 pairs yeqar with gold and rubies. Arabic thamin ('precious') and nafis ('exquisite') both illuminate this material register. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: and-precious-things, precious, precious-thing | es: cosa-preciosa, lo-precioso-de-ella, precioso | fr: [יְקָרָה], et-honneur, יקר | de: Ehre, [וּיקר], [יְקָרָה] Job 28:10; Prov 20:15; Jer 20:5; Ezek 22:25

3. price, worth (monetary value) (1×) The evaluative sense of price or monetary worth — the value assigned to something in a transaction. Zechariah 11:13 uses yeqar with devastating irony when the LORD says, 'the lordly price at which I was priced by them,' referring to the thirty pieces of silver. Spanish precio and Korean gap ('price/value') capture this commercial sense. It is the rarest usage, appearing only in this single prophetic passage, but it is lexicographically distinct from both honor and treasure. HONOR AND PRICE

en: the-price | es: el-precio | fr: honneur | de: der-Ehre Zech 11:13

יְקָר H3367 Conj-w / N-msd (7×)

Honor, glory, splendor; an Aramaic noun denoting royal dignity, magnificence, and weight of esteem

This Aramaic noun appears exclusively in Daniel, where it describes the honor and glory bestowed upon or withdrawn from rulers. Nebuchadnezzar receives 'glory and honor' alongside his kingdom (Dan 2:37; 5:18), and this same glory is stripped from him during his period of madness before being restored (Dan 4:33, 36). The word parallels the Hebrew kavod in its semantic range, combining notions of splendor, weightiness of reputation, and royal magnificence. It is always paired with other terms of sovereignty, reinforcing that true honor flows from the God who gives and takes away kingdoms.

and glory (7×) An Aramaic masculine noun meaning honor, glory, or splendor (יְקָר), cognate with Hebrew yaqar (precious, weighty). In Daniel it consistently describes royal dignity and magnificence — given to Nebuchadnezzar by God (Dan 2:37; 5:18), promised as reward (Dan 2:6), taken away and restored (Dan 4:33, 36; 5:20), and attributed to the Son of Man's everlasting dominion (Dan 7:14). Spanish distinguishes 'gloria' from 'honor,' capturing the dual sense of radiant splendor and attributed worth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-glory-of, and-for-honor-of, and-glory | es: y-gloria, y-honor, y-la-gloria | fr: [ויקר], [ויקרה], [וליקר] | de: [ויקר], [ויקרה], [וליקר] Dan 2:6; Dan 2:37; Dan 4:30; Dan 4:36; Dan 5:18

יָקָר H3368 Adj-ms (36×)

Precious, costly, rare; of great value whether material, personal, or in scarcity

An adjective spanning the full range of what humans prize. Most often it qualifies stones and building materials – the 'costly stones' of Solomon's temple foundations (1 Kgs 5:17; 7:9-11) and the 'precious cornerstone' of Isaiah 28:16. But it also dignifies persons: the sons of Zion are 'precious' as fine gold (Lam 4:2), and noble women stand among the king's honored ones (Ps 45:9). A single striking use in 1 Samuel 3:1 turns the word toward scarcity – the word of the Lord was 'rare' in those days. German 'selten' (rare) captures this last shade, while French 'precieux' and Spanish 'preciosa' cover the dominant material-value sense.

1. precious, costly, valuable (33×) The primary and most frequent sense: precious, costly, of great material or intrinsic worth. Applied to building stones (1 Kgs 5:17; 7:9-11), vessels, wealth (Prov 1:13; 12:27), and the abstract value of wisdom and life itself. Isaiah 28:16 speaks of a 'precious cornerstone,' combining material and theological value. Spanish 'costosas/preciosa' and French 'precieux' converge here, as do virtually all target languages, reflecting cross-linguistic stability for this core meaning. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: costly, precious | es: Preciosa, costosas, preciosa | fr: [יְקָרָה], costly, précieux | de: Ehre, [יְקָרָה], costly 2Sam 12:30; 1Kgs 5:17; 1Kgs 7:9; 1Kgs 7:10; 1Kgs 7:11

2. honored, esteemed (of persons) (2×) Precious in the sense of honored or esteemed, applied to persons rather than objects. Lamentations 4:2 mourns the 'precious sons of Zion,' once valued as fine gold, now treated as clay pots. Psalm 45:9 places daughters of kings among the king's 'precious ones.' The shift from material value to personal dignity is marked by Spanish 'ilustres' (illustrious) alongside 'preciosos,' signaling that human worth rather than market price is in view. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: are-among-Your-precious-ones, the-precious-ones | es: entre-tus-ilustres, los-preciosos | fr: [הַיְקָרִים], dans-précieux | de: [הַיְקָרִים], sind-unter-dein-precious-Leute Ps 45:9; Lam 4:2

3. rare, scarce (1×) Rare, scarce – an emphasis on infrequency rather than monetary value. In 1 Samuel 3:1, 'the word of the LORD was rare in those days; there was no frequent vision.' German

'selten' (rare) and French 'rare' clearly denote scarcity. This lone occurrence shows the adjective's semantic range stretching from 'valued because costly' to 'valued because uncommon,' a natural extension from precious to scarce. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS
en: rare | es: preciosa | fr: rare | de: selten 1Sam 3:1

יָקֹשׁ H3369 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (8×)
To lay a snare, set a trap (Qal active); to be ensnared, caught in a trap (Nifal/Pual passive)
The verb יָקֹשׁ (yaqosh) draws from the world of fowling and trapping to describe both the deliberate act of laying snares and the resulting state of being caught in them. In the Qal stem, the trapper is the subject: God himself declares 'I laid a snare for you, O Babylon' (Jer 50:24), and the wicked set traps for the righteous (Ps 141:9). In the Nifal and Pual stems, the victim is the subject — ensnared by idolatry (Deut 7:25), by rash words (Prov 6:2), or by divine judgment (Isa 8:15). Arabic renderings split clearly between فخ ('set a trap') for the active and وقع ('be caught') for the passive.

1. to be snared, caught (Nifal/Pual passive) (5×) The Nifal and Pual passive sense: to be ensnared, caught, or trapped. The subject is the victim rather than the trapper. Deuteronomy 7:25 warns Israel not to covet idols' gold 'lest you be snared by it' (כִּי־תִוָּקֵשׁ בּוֹ), and Proverbs 6:2 describes being ensnared by one's own careless words. Isaiah 8:15 and 28:13 use it of those who will stumble and 'be snared' under divine judgment. Arabic وُقِعُوا ('they will be hunted/caught') and Spanish 'son atrapados' confirm the passive framing. Ecclesiastes 9:12 extends the image: people are 'snared' by an evil time like fish caught in a net. SNARES AND TRAPS
en: and-snared, and-they-will-be-snared, are-ensnared | es: Te-has-enlazado, seas-enredado, son-atrapados | fr: [ונוקשו], tu-être-ensnared, יוקשים | de: [ונוקשו], [יוקשים], [נוקשת] Deut 7:25; Prov 6:2; Eccl 9:12; Isa 8:15; Isa 28:13

2. to set a snare, trap (Qal active) (3×) The Qal active sense: to lay a snare, set a trap, or act as a fowler. The subject is the one who deliberately sets the trap. In Jeremiah 50:24 God speaks as divine trapper: יָקֹשְׁתִי לָךְ ('I set a snare for you') — and Babylon was caught without knowing it. Psalm 141:9 describes the wicked who 'set snares' for the righteous, and Psalm 124:7 pictures 'the fowlers' (יוֹקְשִׁים) from whose trap Israel's soul has escaped like a bird. Arabic فخّ ('I set a trap for you') and Spanish 'te puse trampa' clearly mark the active agency of the trapper. SNARES AND TRAPS
en: I-set-a-snare, the-fowlers, they-set | es: cazadores, te-puse-trampa, tendieron | fr: [יקשת], prendre-au-piège | de: [יקשת], der-fowlers, sie-setzen Ps 124:7; Ps 141:9; Jer 50:24

יָקְשָׁן H3370 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)
Jokshan, son of Abraham by Keturah, father of Sheba and Dedan Jokshan appears in the Table of Nations as one of Abraham's sons by his concubine Keturah, taken after Sarah's death. Through his sons Sheba and Dedan, Jokshan became an ancestor of Arabian tribal groups that maintained trade connections with Israel. The parallel genealogies in Genesis and Chronicles preserve his name as part of Abraham's broader family legacy extending into the Arabian peninsula.

(4×) Jokshan is consistently identified as Abraham's son by Keturah and father of Sheba and Dedan (Gen 25:2, 3; 1Chr 1:32, appearing twice in the Chronicles passage). The Septuagint renders the name as Iexan or Iektan, showing Greek attempts to represent the Hebrew consonants. The multilingual glosses preserve phonetic approximations: Spanish Yoqsan/Yoqshan, French Jokshan, German Jokschan, all maintaining the recognizable sibilant-guttural pattern of the Hebrew original. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jokshan, Yoqshan, and-Jokshan | es: Y-Yoqshan, Yoqsan, Yoqshan | fr: Jokshan, [ויקשן], [יקשן] | de: Jokschan, [ויקשן], [יקשן] Gen 25:2; Gen 25:3; 1Chr 1:32

יָקְתְאֵל H3371 N-proper-fs (2×)
Yokte'el, two distinct locations: a town in Judah's Shephelah (Josh 15:38) and a renamed Petra (2 Kgs 14:7)
This place name appears in two completely different contexts. First, as an unidentified town in the lowland region of Judah during the initial tribal allotments. Second, and more dramatically, as the new name given to Sela (Petra) by King Amaziah after capturing it from the Edomites. The renaming reflects ancient Near Eastern conquest practices where victors imposed new names to mark their dominion. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it may be related to Yequthiel.

(2×) Attested in Joshua 15:38 (Shephelah town) and 2 Kings 14:7 (renamed Petra). The two uses are geographically and historically distinct: one is a Judahite town of uncertain location, the other is the famous rock fortress in Edom. The Septuagint shows significant variation in both passages, reflecting the geographical distance between the two sites and the different historical contexts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yokte'el, and-Yoktheel | es: Jocteel, y-Jocteel | fr: Yokte'el, et-Yoktheel | de: Yokte'el, und-Yoktheel Josh 15:38; 2Kgs 14:7

יָרֵא H3372 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 2ms (329×)
To fear, be afraid; to revere or stand in awe of God; (Nifal ptc.) awesome, terrible; (Piel) to frighten, terrify
A primary verb of the Hebrew emotional vocabulary, spanning the full spectrum from raw terror to deepest reverence. In its Qal stem it describes the dread a person feels before danger (Gen 15:1, 'Do not fear') and the holy awe owed to God (Deut 6:13). Its Nifal participle became virtually a divine epithet — 'the awesome God' (Deut 7:21) — while its Piel stem intensifies the action into deliberate intimidation, as when Sanballat's agents tried to frighten Nehemiah (Neh 6:9). Cross-linguistically, Arabic splits what Hebrew unifies: khafa for terror, ittaqa or khashiya for piety, and mahib for awesomeness.

1. fear, be afraid (emotional terror) (167×) The dominant sense (239x): visceral fear or dread triggered by danger, enemies, or divine theophanies. Arabic khafa and Swahili -ogopa consistently render this emotional terror. The repeated divine assurance 'al tira' ('do not fear,' Gen 15:1; 21:17; 46:3) presupposes precisely this involuntary alarm, making it the single most frequent usage across the Hebrew Bible.
en: fear, you-shall-fear | es: les-temas, temas | fr: craindre, crains, crainte | de: Furcht, du-soll-Furcht, fuerchtete Gen 15:1; Gen 21:17; Gen 26:24; Gen 35:17; Gen 46:3

2. fear, revere (religious awe of God) (71×) Nifal participle functioning adjectivally (44x): describing God, his name, deeds, or sacred places as awe-inspiring and terrible. Arabic deploys mahib/rahib where the Qal uses khafa, marking a clear semantic shift. Jacob's 'How awesome is this place!' (Gen 28:17) and the Song of the Sea's 'awesome in praises' (Exod 15:11) are paradigmatic.
en: and-fear, and-feared, and-he-feared | es: Y-temerán, Y-temió, a-temer | fr: craindre, et-craindre, et-il-craignit | de: und-er-fuerchtete, und-fuerchten, und-fürchtete Exod 1:21; Exod 3:6; Exod 14:31; Lev 19:14; Lev 19:32

3. awesome, terrible (Nifal Ptc) (44×) Nifal participle functioning adjectivally (44x): describing God, his name, deeds, or sacred places as awe-inspiring and terrible. Arabic deploys mahib/rahib where the Qal uses khafa, marking a clear semantic shift. Jacob's 'How awesome is this place!' (Gen 28:17) and the Song of the Sea's 'awesome in praises' (Exod 15:11) are paradigmatic. TERROR AND AWE
en: and-awesome, and-the-awesome, and-the-fearful | es: Temible, asombrosas, asombroso | fr: craindre, et-awesome, et-craindre | de: awesome, fürchtete, und-awesome Gen 28:17; Exod 15:11; Exod 34:10; Deut 1:19; Deut 7:21

4. revere, fear God (Qal) (25×) Reverential awe directed toward God or sovereign authority (25x): the pious, sustained posture of worship and obedience rather than momentary fright. Arabic ittaqa and khashiya capture this devotional register. Commands like 'You shall fear the LORD your God' (Deut 6:13) and 'fear your mother and father' (Lev 19:3) illustrate ethical reverence, not panic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: does-fear, fear, fears | es: teme, temed, temen | fr: craindre, crains, craint

| de: Furcht, du-soll-Furcht, fuerchtet Lev 19:3; Lev 19:30; Lev 26:2; Deut 6:13; Deut 7:18

5. God-fearer, one who fears (Adj/Ptc) (14×) Adjectival or participial substantive (14x) designating a person characterized by God-fearing piety — 'one who fears the LORD.' Arabic muttaqi and Swahili -mcha Mungu reflect this as a character trait. Key portraits include Joseph's self-identification (Gen 42:18) and Obadiah's reputation (1 Kgs 18:12). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-fearing, fear, fearers-of | es: El-que-temía, a-los-que-temen, los-que-temen | fr: ceux-qui-craignent, craignant, craindre | de: der-fearing, fuerchten, fuerchtend Gen 42:18; Exod 9:20; 1Sam 23:3; 1Kgs 18:12; 2Kgs 4:1

6. frighten, terrify (Piel) (5×) Piel intensive-causative (5x): to deliberately frighten, intimidate, or terrorize someone. Arabic akhafa and Swahili -ogopesha capture the causative force. All five occurrences cluster in late narrative contexts of political intimidation: Sanballat's campaign against Nehemiah (Neh 6:9, 14, 19) and the woman of Tekoa's plea (2 Sam 14:15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: frightening, they-frightened-me, to-frighten-me | es: atemorizando, me-amedrentaron, nos-atemorizaban | fr: craindre, ils-frightened-moi | de: fuerchten, fuerchtete, sie-frightened-mich 2Sam 14:15; 2Chr 32:18; Neh 6:9; Neh 6:14; Neh 6:19

8. (1×) A single occurrence at Mic 6:9 where textual and versional evidence is ambiguous — some traditions read yir'eh ('will see') rather than yira' ('will fear'). The multilingual glosses split between 'will see' (English, French, German) and 'will fear' (Spanish), reflecting an ancient crux in the consonantal text. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: will-see | es: temerá | fr: il-verra | de: er-sieht Mic 6:9

9. (1×) A unique Nifal usage at Ps 130:4, 'that you may be feared,' where forgiveness is the ground of reverence. Spanish seas temido and French craindre preserve the passive-reverential nuance. This theological paradox — pardon producing awe rather than presumption — stands as the psalm's central insight. TERROR AND AWE

en: you-may-be-feared | es: seas-temido | fr: craindre | de: fürchtete Ps 130:4

יָרֵא H3373 Adj-mpc / 2ms (54×)

Fearing, revering; as adjective or participle: one who fears God (pious reverence) or one who is afraid (emotional dread).

Yare as an adjective or verbal participle sits at the intersection of two profoundly different human experiences: the awe-filled reverence of the pious before God, and the trembling dread of the terrified. The plural construct 'those who fear YHWH' (yir'e YHWH) becomes almost a technical designation for the faithful community in the Psalms and Wisdom literature — a spiritual identity marker rather than an emotional description. German distinguishes the two poles well: fürchtend ('fearing/revering') for the religious sense versus Furcht ('dread') for raw terror. Spanish similarly toggles between el que teme a Dios ('one who fears God') and temeroso ('fearful, anxious'). The word's genius is that both senses share a root insight: the proper response to the living God is not casual comfort but trembling attentiveness.

1. those who fear (plural) (20×) The collective plural — 'those who fear [YHWH/God]' — functioning as a near-technical designation for the community of the pious, appearing 20 times primarily in the Psalms. In Ps 22:23 the psalmist calls 'you who fear YHWH, praise him!' and in Ps 33:18 God's eye is upon 'those who fear him.' French ceux qui craignent and Spanish los que temen both preserve the participial-collective structure. This is less about emotional terror and more about covenantal identity: the yir'e YHWH are those who align their lives under God's authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fearers-of, fearing, ones-fearing | es: Los-que-te-temen, Los-que-temen-a, a-los-que-temen-a | fr: ceux-qui-craignent, craignant, fearing | de: Leute-fürchtend, [יראי], der-fürchten Exod 18:21; Ps 15:4; Ps 22:23; Ps 22:25; Ps 33:18

2. God-fearing, revering (singular) (15×) The singular adjectival use describing an individual as 'God-fearing' or 'one who reveres God' — 15 occurrences concentrated in narrative characterization. Job is introduced three times with this epithet (Job 1:1, 1:8, 2:3), and Abraham proves himself yare 'elohim at the Akedah (Gen 22:12). Obadiah is described as 'fearing YHWH greatly' (1 Kgs 18:3). Spanish el que teme and German einer fürchtend both render the substantival participial usage. The sense denotes habitual piety and moral seriousness, not a momentary feeling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fearing, but-he-who-respects, fearer-of | es: el-que-teme, que-teme, que-teme-a- | fr: [יראי], craignant, et-craignant | de: [יראת], einer-fürchtend, fuerchtend Gen 22:12; 1Kgs 18:3; Job 1:1; Job 1:8; Job 2:3

3. afraid, fearful (10×) Afraid, fearful — the emotional-dread sense, appearing 10 times in contexts of human anxiety and terror. In Deut 20:8 the officers ask 'who is fearful and fainthearted?' before battle; in Gen 32:11 Jacob confesses 'I am afraid' before meeting Esau. Judg 7:3 uses the same battle-fear idiom. Spanish temeroso and the French and German untranslated bracketed forms [יראי] both reflect the difficulty of mapping this emotional sense when the same root carries such heavy theological freight. The distinction from senses 1-2 is clear: here the fear is directed at human threats, not at God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: afraid, are-fearing, fear | es: el-temeroso, temeroso, temes | fr: [יראי], [יראים], craignant | de: Furcht, [יראי], [יראים] Gen 32:11; Deut 7:19; Deut 20:8; Deut 25:18; Judg 7:3

4. to/for those who fear (with lamed) (6×) The prepositional dative construction 'to/for those who fear him/you' — 6 occurrences where the lamed prefix creates a benefactive frame. Ps 25:14 declares 'the secret of YHWH is for those who fear him'; Ps 31:19 marvels at the goodness 'stored up for those who fear you.' The Spanish a los que le temen and German für jene fürchtend faithfully render the 'for the benefit of' structure. Semantically this is the same reverential community as sense 1, but the grammatical frame shifts from subject to indirect object — God acts on behalf of his fearers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-those-fearing-You, is-for-those-fearing-him, to-those-fearing-Him | es: a-los-que-le-temen, a-los-que-te-temen, para-los-que-le-temen | fr: à-craignant | de: für-jene-fürchtend-du, ist-für-jene-fürchtend-ihn, zu-jene-der-fürchten-du Ps 25:14; Ps 31:19; Ps 34:9; Ps 60:4; Ps 85:9

5. fear (nominal use) (3×) A nominal or abstract use where the form functions as the noun 'fear' or 'reverence' rather than describing a person — 3 occurrences. In Isa 29:13 the people's 'fear of me' (yir'atam) has become mere rote commandment, and in Jonah 1:10 and 1:16 the sailors 'feared a great fear.' The shift from adjectival to nominal is confirmed by the multilingual evidence: Spanish temor ('fear' as noun), French il verra, and German er sieht all struggle with the ambiguity, suggesting a genuine categorial boundary rather than a contextual shade of the participial form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-commandment, a-fear | es: su-temor, temor | fr: [יראתם], il-verra | de: [יראתם], er-sieht Isa 29:13; Jonah 1:10; Jonah 1:16

יִרְאָה H3374 Conj-w (42×)

Fear, reverence, awe; ranging from terror before danger to devout piety toward God

The feminine noun from the root yare', covering a spectrum from raw terror to worshipful reverence. Its most theologically significant use is in the construct phrase 'fear of the LORD' (yir'at YHWH), a foundational concept in Wisdom literature where it serves as 'the beginning of knowledge' (Prov 1:7). Yet the same word can denote sheer dread, as when the psalmist confesses that 'fear and trembling come upon me' (Ps 55:5). German 'Furcht' and French 'crainte' mirror this same breadth, serving for both religious awe and ordinary terror.

1. reverential awe of God (34×) Reverential awe and piety directed toward God, almost always in construct with a divine name: 'fear of the LORD,' 'fear of God,' 'fear of the Almighty' (Gen 20:11; Prov 10:27; 14:26-27; 15:16; 19:23; 22:4). This sense dominates the Wisdom tradition, where yir'at YHWH is the foundation of moral and intellectual life. Spanish 'temor de' and French 'crainte de' regularly appear in this devotional register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fear-of, and-the-fear-of, fear-of | es: El-temor-de, En-temor-de, Temor-

de | fr: crainte, crainte-de, dans-crainte | de: Furcht, [ויראת], [יראת] Gen 20:11; Exod 20:20; Deut 2:25; 2Chr 19:9; Neh 5:9

2. fear or dread (7×) Ordinary fear, dread, or terror experienced in response to danger or an intimidating presence, without religious connotation. Psalm 55:5 pairs it with trembling (re'adah), and Isaiah 7:25 uses it of fear that makes places uninhabitable. Deuteronomy 2:25 employs it alongside pachad ('dread') for the terror God puts upon nations. The emotional intensity distinguishes this from the reverent posture of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear, fear-of, with-fear | es: con-temor, temor, temor-de | fr: [יראת], crains-de, crainte | de: Furcht, Furcht-von, [יראה] 2Sam 23:3; Neh 5:15; Job 15:4; Ps 2:11; Ps 55:5

3. fearsome, awe-inspiring (1×) An attributive or predicative use in Ezekiel 1:18 describing the awe-inspiring appearance of the living creatures' wheel rims – 'fearsome' or 'terrible.' English 'and fearsome' and Spanish 'y temor' reflect this adjectival function. The single occurrence suggests it may be an extension of the noun into quasi-adjectival territory, though some scholars emend the text. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fearsome | es: y-temor | fr: et-il-verra | de: [ויראה] Ezek 1:18

יִרְאוֹן H3375 Conj-w | N-proper-fs (1×)

Yir'on: city in the territory of Naphtali, possibly modern Yarun

Yir'on was a fortified city allocated to the tribe of Naphtali during the conquest of Canaan (Joshua 19:38). Modern scholars generally identify it with Yarun, a village in northern Galilee. The name appears in the biblical boundary lists that defined tribal territories, marking the northern frontier of Israelite settlement.

(1×) A place name designating a city in Naphtali's territorial allotment. The single occurrence in Joshua 19:38 lists it among the fortified cities of the tribe. Archaeological and geographical research suggests identification with the modern site of Yarun in Lebanon. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the Hebrew name with conjunction ("and Yiron"), indicating its position within a list of boundary markers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yiron | es: y-Yirón | fr: et-Yiron | de: und-Yiron Josh 19:38

יִרְאִיָּה H3376 N-proper-ms (2×)

Yiriyyah, a military officer during Jeremiah's time who arrested the prophet (Jer 37:13-14)

This personal name, meaning "Yahweh sees," belongs to the captain of the guard who arrested the prophet Jeremiah when he attempted to leave Jerusalem during the Babylonian siege. Yiriyyah falsely accused Jeremiah of deserting to the Chaldeans, an accusation that led to the prophet's imprisonment. The name appears only in this brief but significant narrative, where a minor official plays a pivotal role in the suffering of God's spokesman.

(2×) Found exclusively in Jeremiah 37:13-14 in the arrest narrative. The Septuagint renders it as Sarouias, showing significant departure from the Hebrew consonants. The officer's role is crucial to the Jeremiah narrative: his false accusation initiates a cycle of imprisonment and suffering that tests the prophet's resolve and demonstrates the hostility of Jerusalem's leadership to divine warning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yiriyyah | es: Yiriyah | fr: [יראייה] | de: [יראייה] Jer 37:13; Jer 37:14

יָרֵב H3377 N-proper-ms (2×)

Jareb, an epithet for an Assyrian king in Hosea 5:13 and 10:6; possibly means "contender" or "great king"

This enigmatic term appears only in Hosea's oracles against Israel and Judah, where it designates an Assyrian monarch (likely Tiglath-Pileser III). The meaning is disputed: it may be a throne name meaning "one who contends," or it could be a corruption of the Assyrian title "great king" (šarru rabû). Modern scholars have proposed various emendations, including "Arabian king." The context emphasizes Israel's futile hope in foreign alliances rather than in Yahweh.

(2×) Attested in Hosea 5:13 and 10:6 in parallel prophetic contexts. Both passages condemn reliance on Assyrian military power for healing and deliverance. The Hebrew tradition preserves it as a proper name, while French "contester" and German "streiten" translate it as a participle ("one who contends"), reflecting the interpretive uncertainty surrounding this hapax. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jareb | es: Jareb | fr: contester | de: streiten Hos 5:13; Hos 10:6

יְרֻבַּעַל H3378 N-proper-ms (14×)

Jerubbaal ('let Baal contend'); the alternate name given to Gideon after he destroyed Baal's altar.

An alternate designation for Gideon son of Joash, bestowed after he tore down the altar of Baal in Ophrah. Judges 6:32 offers the folk etymology: his father declared 'let Baal contend against him,' daring the pagan god to defend his own honor. The name persists through the Gideon cycle (Judg 7-9), dominating the Abimelech narrative, where all nine chapter-9 occurrences use Jerubbaal rather than Gideon. Samuel invokes it in his farewell speech (1 Sam 12:11). In 2 Samuel 11:21, the variant Jerubbesheth replaces ba'al with bosheth ('shame'), reflecting later scribal discomfort with Baal-element names.

Jerubbaal (alternate name for Gideon) (14×) The proper name Yerubbaal ('let Baal contend'), given to Gideon after demolishing the Baal altar at Ophrah (Judg 6:32). Used throughout the Gideon-Abimelech cycle (Judg 7:1; 8:29, 35; 9:1-57) and in Samuel's farewell (1 Sam 12:11). All 14 occurrences refer to the single individual. The variant Jerubbesheth (2 Sam 11:21) substitutes bosheth for ba'al. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jerubbaal, Yerubaal | es: Yerubaal, Yerubbaal, Yerubáal | fr: Jerubbaal, Yerubaal | de: Jerubbaal, Yerubaal Judg 6:32; Judg 7:1; Judg 8:29; Judg 8:35; Judg 9:1

יָרָבְעָם H3379 N-proper-ms (104×)

Jeroboam — proper name meaning 'the people increases'; two kings of northern Israel

Yarovam (Jeroboam) is a Hebrew proper name probably meaning 'the people increases' (from yarov + am). It identifies two kings of the northern kingdom: Jeroboam I son of Nebat, who led the secession of the ten tribes and established rival worship centers at Dan and Bethel (1 Kgs 12–14), and Jeroboam II son of Joash, who presided over a period of territorial expansion (2 Kgs 14:23–29). The former dominates the biblical record, cited formulaically as the archetypal sinner who 'made Israel to sin' (1 Kgs 15:30; 16:26). Spanish 'Jeroboam,' French 'Jéroboam,' and German 'Jerobeam' all transliterate recognizably.

Jeroboam (proper name) (104×) The proper masculine name Yarovam (Jeroboam), meaning 'the people increases,' designating two northern Israelite kings. Jeroboam I son of Nebat (approximately 90 occurrences) led the northern secession and established calf worship at Dan and Bethel, becoming the paradigmatic sinful king in Deuteronomistic rhetoric (1 Kgs 15:30; 2 Kgs 17:21). Jeroboam II son of Joash (approximately 14 occurrences) expanded Israel's borders in the 8th century (2 Kgs 14:23–29; Amos 7:9–11). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yarovam | es: Jeroboam, Yarovam | fr: Jéroboam | de: Jerobeam 1Kgs 11:28; 1Kgs 11:40; 1Kgs 12:2

יְרֻבַּעַל H3380 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yerubbesheth: variant name for Gideon, substitute form replacing Baal with bosheth (shame)

Yerubbesheth is an alternate form of Jerubbaal, one of Gideon's names. In 2 Samuel 11:21, scribes substituted "bosheth" (shame) for "Baal" to avoid pronouncing the pagan deity's name. This reflects the practice of replacing offensive elements in proper names with euphemisms. The original name Jerubbaal means "let Baal contend," but later scribes found this association unacceptable.

(1×) A modified form of Gideon's alternative name Jerubbaal, appearing only in 2 Samuel 11:21. The substitution of "bosheth" (shame) for "Baal" represents a scribal revision to avoid vocalizing the name of the Canaanite deity. This editorial practice reflects Israel's later sensitivity to idolatrous associations in sacred texts. Most translations preserve the modified form or note the original in marginal references. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jerubbesheth | es: Jerubeset? | fr: Jerubbesheth | de: Jerubbesheth 2Sam 11:21

יָרַד H3381 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (381×)

to go down, descend, bring down; physical descent from higher to lower place, including persons, liquids, and objects

The verb yarad (occurring 381 times) expresses downward motion across multiple stems. In Qal, it describes physical descent: persons going down from mountains or to lower cities (242x), liquids flowing downward (tears, oil, water), and participial 'those descending to the pit' in poetic contexts (44x). The Hifil causative shifts the subject to an agent bringing down or lowering persons/objects (53x), while Hofal marks passive descent (6x). A handful of instances use the infinitive temporally ('when he came down') or apply the verb to collapsing walls. The core semantic trajectory is consistent: movement from higher elevation to lower, whether literal geography, vertical liquid flow, or metaphorical descent to Sheol.

1. Qal: to go down, descend (physical movement) (242×) The dominant Qal sense (242 occurrences) covers all finite verb forms of persons or groups physically descending mountains, entering valleys, or traveling to lower-lying cities. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the spatial vector: descended, bajó, descendit, ging hinab across English, Spanish, French, German. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-came-down, and-descended, and-he-went-down | es: Y-bajó, Y-descendió, y-bajó | fr: et-alla-en-bas, et-descended, et-descendit | de: und-descended, und-er-ging-hinab, und-ging-hinab Gen 11:5; Gen 12:10; Gen 38:1; Exod 19:14; Exod 19:20

2. Hifil: to bring down, take down (persons/objects) (53×) The Hifil causative (53 times) shifts agency: bringing someone or something down from a higher place. Passages include Genesis 24:18 (lowering a jar), 37:25 (taking Joseph to Egypt), 42:38 (bringing Benjamin down). Translations uniformly render causative morphology: brought down, hizo descender, apporte en bas, bringt hinab. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: I-will-bring-them-down, and-I-will-bring-down, and-brought-down | es: Y-bajarán, bajarán, e-hizo-descender | fr: descendre, devra-apporte-en-bas, devra-prendre-en-bas | de: hinabgehen, so-bringt-ihr-hinab, soll-bringe-hinab Gen 24:18; Gen 24:46; Gen 37:25; Gen 39:1; Gen 42:38

3. those descending to Sheol/the pit (substantive formula) (22×) The Qal active participle used substantively appears 44 times, especially in the recurring phrase 'yorde bor' (those descending to the pit/Sheol). Poetic and prophetic literature favor this formulaic expression. Translations handle it as a nominal: those going down, los que descienden, descendant, hinabgehend.

en: [ketiv], from-going-down-to, go-down-to | es: Los-que-descienden, [qere], de-los-que-descienden-al | fr: descendre | de: hinabgehen, stieg-herab, stieg-hinab Job 7:9; Ps 28:1; Ps 30:3; Ps 88:4

4. going down, descending (general participial use) (21×) Fifteen passages use yarad Qal of liquids in motion: tears streaming down the face (Lam 3:48), oil running down the beard (Ps 133:2), water/rain descending. The verb's flexibility with liquid subjects highlights its core spatial semantics, and translators retain the downward directionality.

en: and-descending, and-going-down, coming-down | es: bajando, descendiendo, descendía | fr: allant-en-bas, descendre, et-allant-en-bas | de: der-descending, der-eins-descending, der-eins-gehend-hinab Gen 28:12; Deut 9:21; Josh 3:13; Josh 3:16

5. Qal: to flow down, run down (of liquids) (15×) Fifteen passages use yarad Qal of liquids in motion: tears streaming down the face (Lam 3:48), oil running down the beard (Ps 133:2), water/rain descending. The verb's flexibility with liquid subjects highlights its core spatial semantics, and translators retain the downward directionality. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-shall-run-down, descends, flow-down | es: derrama, descender, descenderá | fr: allant-en-bas, descendre, et-descendre | de: hinabgehen, hinabsteigend, lass-komme-hinab Gen 43:20; 2Kgs 1:10; 2Kgs 1:12; Ps 119:136; Ps 133:2

6. Hifil: to bring down, send down (rain/judgment/humbling) (13×) The Hifil with abstract or divine subjects (13 times) expresses sending down rain, bringing down judgment, or humbling someone (1 Sam 2:6). This figurative extension of the causative maintains the spatial metaphor while adding evaluative or theological weight. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent causative morphology. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-I-brought-down, and-bringing-down, and-brings-down | es: e-hizo-descender, hace-bajar, han-bajado | fr: apporte-en-bas, apporter-en-bas, descendre | de: bringen-hinab, brings-hinab, stieg-herab Exod 33:5; 1Sam 2:6; 1Sam 21:14; 2Sam 22:48; Ps 56:7

7. Hofal: to be brought down (passive) (6×) The Hofal passive stem (6 occurrences) marks entities brought down involuntarily: Genesis 39:1 (Joseph taken down to Egypt), Isaiah 14:11/15 (the king brought down to Sheol), Ezekiel 31:18. Translations reflect passive morphology: was brought down, fue bajado, était pris en bas. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-was-taken-down, and-will-be-brought-down, and-you-shall-be-brought-down | es: Ha-descendido, Y-fue-bajado, Y-serás-hecho-descender | fr: descendre, et-descendre, et-était-pris-en-bas | de: hinabgehen, und-hinabgehen, und-stieg-hinab Gen 39:1; Num 10:17; Isa 14:11; Isa 14:15; Ezek 31:18

8. Qal: to go down (temporal/infinitive construct) (4×) Four instances use the Qal infinitive construct with prepositions (be-, mi-, le-) to form temporal or adverbial clauses: 'when he came down' (Exod 34:29), 'from going down' (Gen 46:3), 'its descending' (Job 33:24). This grammatical function serves discourse cohesion rather than introducing a new lexical sense. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: from-going-down-to, its-going-down, to-go-down | es: de-descender, en-su-descender, su-descenso | fr: de-descendre, descendre, quand-il-vint-en-bas | de: als-er-kam-hinab, hinabgehen, hinabzuziehen Gen 46:3; Exod 34:29; Job 33:24; Ezek 31:15

9. Qal: to fall, collapse (of structures/walls) (3×) Three passages apply yarad Qal to structures or walls falling/collapsing: Deuteronomy 20:20, 28:52 (siege contexts), Isaiah 32:19 (forest falling). The spatial verb naturally extends to vertical collapse, and translations handle it as 'fall' or 'collapse' depending on context. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: coming-down, its-fall, when-falls | es: al-descender, que-caigan, su-caída | fr: descendre, son-tomber, venant-en-bas | de: hinabgehen, kommend-hinab, sein-fallen Deut 20:20; Deut 28:52; Isa 32:19

11. (1×) A single uncertain occurrence at 2 Samuel 18:4, where translations diverge significantly (went out, salieron, alla dehors, ging heraus), suggests possible textual corruption or a rare idiomatic use. The gloss 'went out' contrasts with the downward directionality expected from yarad. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: went-out | es: salieron | fr: alla-dehors | de: ging-heraus 2Sam 18:4

יֶרֶד H3382 N-proper-ms (7×)

Jered (Yered), a proper name meaning 'descent,' borne by the pre-flood patriarch and a man of Judah

Jered is best known as the sixth-generation patriarch from Adam through Seth, the father of Enoch (Gen 5:15-20). His name likely derives from the root yarad ('to descend'), which later tradition sometimes connected to the descent of the Watchers. He lived 962 years according to the Genesis genealogy. A second Jered appears briefly in the Judahite genealogy as a figure associated with Gedor (1 Chr 4:18). The Septuagint consistently renders the name as Iared, reflected in the English forms Jared and Jered.

Yered (7×) The proper masculine name Yered (יֶרֶד), meaning 'descent' (from yarad, to go down), referring primarily to the pre-flood patriarch who fathered Enoch at age 162 and lived to 962

(Gen 5:15-20; 1 Chr 1:2). A second bearer appears in the Judahite genealogy (1 Chr 4:18). German and French preserve variant transliterations ('Jered'/'Jered'), while English tradition often uses 'Jared,' influenced by the Septuagint's Iared. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yered | es: Yered | fr: Jéred, Yered | de: Jered, Jereds, [ירד] Gen 5:15; Gen 5:16; Gen 5:18; Gen 5:19; Gen 5:20

יַרְדֵּן H3383 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (183×)

Jordan — the principal river of Palestine, flowing from the Sea of Galilee southward to the Dead Sea

The Jordan (Yarden) is the defining waterway of biblical geography, serving as both a physical boundary and a theological symbol. Its name likely derives from yarad ('to descend'), describing its steep drop from Galilee to the Dead Sea — the lowest point on earth. Crossing the Jordan becomes a powerful motif: Abram surveys its plain (Gen 13:10-11), Israel enters the promised land through its parted waters (Josh 3), and Elijah and Elisha cross it miraculously (2 Kgs 2). In the New Testament, it is the site of Jesus' baptism. Spanish el Jordan, French le Jourdain, and German der Jordan all preserve the proper name with minimal adaptation.

Jordan River (proper noun) (183×) The proper name of Palestine's major river, flowing south from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea. Almost always appears with the article (ha-Yarden) in prose. Its crossings mark pivotal moments: Israel's entry into Canaan (Josh 3-4), tribal boundary disputes (Judg 12:5-6), and prophetic acts (2 Kgs 5:10-14). The name is preserved nearly unchanged across all target languages. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: the-Jordan | es: el-Jordán, el-Yardén | fr: le-Jourdain | de: den-Jordan, der-Jordan, des-Jordan Gen 13:10; Gen 13:11; Gen 32:10; Gen 50:10; Gen 50:11

יָרָא H3384a V-Hofal-Imperf-3ms (7×)

To shoot (arrows); in passive (Hophal), to be watered or saturated — an Aramaic-orthography variant of yarah.

An Aramaic-spelled variant of the common verb yarah, this form carries two distinct meanings depending on stem. In the active Hiphil, it describes shooting arrows, as when Joab's soldiers shot at Uriah from the wall of Rabbah (2 Sam 11:24) and in the participial form 'the archers' who struck Saul (1 Sam 31:3). The single Hophal occurrence in Prov 11:25 shifts the meaning entirely: 'he who waters others will himself be watered' — a beautiful reciprocal proverb where generosity returns to the giver. Spanish 'sera regado' (will be irrigated) captures the passive saturation vividly.

1. shoot (arrows) (6×) To shoot arrows or projectiles, used in both the Qal infinitive (2 Chr 26:15, 'to shoot with arrows') and the Hiphil imperfect and participle (2 Sam 11:24, 'and they shot at' the city defenders; 1 Sam 31:3 = 1 Chr 10:3, 'the archers' who wounded Saul). The participial form hammorim designates professional bowmen. Multilingual glosses confirm the martial reading: Spanish 'los flecheros' (the archers) and 'y dispararon' (and they fired). ARAMEAN ARCHERS

en: [and-they-saw], [the-shooters], and-they-shot | es: (los-flecheros), (y-dispararon), [los-flecheros] | fr: [and-ils-saw], [the-shooters], [לירוא] | de: [and-sie-saw], [the-shooters], [לירוא] 2Sam 11:20; 2Sam 11:24

2. be watered, be saturated (1×) Hophal passive meaning to be watered or saturated, found only in Prov 11:25: 'the generous soul will be enriched, and he who waters will himself also be watered (yoreh).' This passive of pouring/drenching is semantically distant from the shooting sense. Spanish 'sera regado' (will be irrigated) and English 'will be watered' both reflect the agricultural metaphor of reciprocal blessing. THROWING AND CASTING

en: will-be-watered | es: será-regado | fr: jeter | de: [יורא] Prov 11:25

יָרָה H3384b V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp / 3ms (79×)

To throw, shoot, teach, or direct; uniting the physical casting of projectiles with the authoritative imparting of instruction

This root holds together two semantic fields that seem distant but share a common image: propelling something toward a target. In its Qal stem, yarah means to throw or shoot – hurling Pharaoh's chariots into the sea (Exod 15:4) or shooting arrows (1 Sam 20:20). In the Hifil, the same root becomes 'to teach,' as if casting knowledge toward a learner. Arabic preserves both trajectories: رَمَى (throw) and أَرْشَدَ (teach). The noun torah ('instruction, law') derives from this very root, making yarah one of the most consequential verbs in biblical theology. Two rare occurrences even extend to sending rain (Hos 6:3, 10:12), as though God hurls moisture earthward.

1. Hifil: teach, instruct (38×) The dominant Hifil sense: formal teaching and instruction. Arabic أَرْشَدَ (teach), Korean 가르치다, and Swahili -fundisha all converge on pedagogical transmission. God teaches Moses what to say (Exod 4:12), and Levitical priests teach Israel the statutes (Lev 10:11). The noun torah derives directly from this sense. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-have-instructed-you, and-He-will-teach-us, and-I-will-teach | es: Enséñame, Y-para-enseñar, enseñan | fr: [תורם], enseigne-moi, enseigner | de: [הרתיך], [ויורנו], [ירנו] Exod 4:12; Exod 4:15; Exod 24:12; Exod 35:34; Lev 10:11

2. Qal/Hifil: shoot (arrows) (16×) Qal and Hifil shooting of arrows or projectiles. Arabic رَمَى (throw/shoot) and Korean 쏘다 (shoot) confirm the ballistic image. Jonathan's arrow-shooting in 1 Samuel 20:20-36 is the narrative centerpiece. Exodus 19:13 warns that trespassers on Sinai 'shall surely be shot through.' RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-will-shoot, and-he-shot, and-they-shot | es: Para-disparar, Pero-disparará, Y-les-disparamos | fr: [וירו], enseigner, et-enseigner | de: [הירה], [וירו], [יורה] Exod 19:13; Num 21:30; 1Sam 20:20; 1Sam 20:36

3. Hifil participle: teacher (מורה) (8×) The substantivized Hifil participle moreh, meaning 'teacher.' Arabic مُعَلِّم and Swahili mwalimu (teacher) reflect the same agent-noun pattern. Appears in 2 Kings 17:28 (a priest-teacher), Proverbs 5:13 (my teachers), and Isaiah 9:15 (false teachers). The form bridges verb and social role. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: a-teacher, and-a-teacher-of, my-teachers | es: enseñando, maestro, mismaestros | fr: [מורה], enseigner, et-enseigner | de: [ומורה], [מורה], [מורי] 2Kgs 17:28; 2Chr 15:3; Job 36:22; Prov 5:13; Isa 9:15

4. Qal: cast, throw, hurl (5×) Qal casting or hurling of objects other than arrows: bodies into the sea (Exod 15:4), a stone pillar set in place (Gen 31:51), or Job flung into the mire (Job 30:19). Arabic رَمَى and Spanish arrojó (hurled) distinguish this from the more targeted archery sense by the variety of objects thrown. THROWING AND CASTING

en: He-cast-me, He-has-cast, I-cast | es: Me-arrojó, arrojó, lancé | fr: Il-a-jeter, Je-jeter, enseigner | de: Er-hat-giessen, [הרני], [ירה] Gen 31:51; Exod 15:4; Josh 18:6; Job 30:19; Job 38:6

5. Substantival: archer, shooter (5×) The substantivized participle as 'archer' or 'shooter,' always plural with the article: the archers who struck Saul (1 Sam 31:3, 1 Chr 10:3) and Josiah (2 Chr 35:23). Spanish los-arqueros and Korean 궁수들 confirm the professional military designation. Context is uniformly battlefield narrative. ARAMEAN ARCHERS

en: by-the-archers, the-archers, the-shooters | es: de-los-arqueros, los-arqueros, los-flecheros | fr: [היורים], [הירים], [המורים] | de: [היורים], [הירים], [המורים] 1Sam 31:3; 1Chr 10:3; 2Chr 35:23

6. Hifil: show, point out, direct (4×) An extended Hifil sense: to show, point out, or direct someone's way. Jacob sends Judah ahead to 'point the way' to Goshen (Gen 46:28); God shows Moses a tree to heal bitter water (Exod 15:25). Spanish mostró and Arabic أرشد (guide) highlight guidance rather than classroom instruction. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: and-showed-him, and-teach-you, pointing | es: enseña, para-instruir, y-le-mostró | fr: enseigner, et-montra-lui, et-ta-lumière | de: [מרה], um-den-Weg-zu-weisen, und-lehren-du Gen 46:28; Exod 15:25; Ps 32:8; Prov 6:13

7. Hifil: send rain, water (2×) A rare Hifil usage meaning to send rain or give early rain, possibly linked to the root's 'casting downward' image. Hosea 6:3 and 10:12 use it of God raining righteousness. Spanish llueva (let it rain) and the noun yoreh (early rain) connect to this agricultural-meteorological extension. SEND RAIN

en: and-rains, watering | es: que-riega, y-llueva | fr: enseigner, et-enseigner | de: [ירה], [יורה] Hos 6:3; Hos 10:12

8. (1×) A passive Qal form in Exodus 19:13 specifying that the Sinai trespasser 'shall surely be shot through' (stoned or pierced). English 'he shall be shot' and Spanish será-arrojado confirm the judicial-execution context. This overlaps with sense 2 but carries a distinctly punitive, passive force. THROWING AND CASTING
en: he-shall-be-shot | es: será-arrojado | fr: il—être-shot | de: er-soll-sein-shot Exod 19:13

יְרוּאֵל H3385 N-proper-fs (1×)
Yeru'el: wilderness location in Judah, site of prophetic encounter during Jehoshaphat's reign
The wilderness of Yeru'el was the location where King Jehoshaphat received prophetic guidance during a military crisis (2 Chronicles 20:16). The name may mean "founded of El" or "God's foundation." Though its precise location remains uncertain, it was likely part of the wilderness of Judah near the ascent of Ziz. The site marks a moment of divine intervention and deliverance.

(1×) A wilderness region in Judah mentioned in 2 Chronicles 20:16, where the prophet directed Jehoshaphat to position his army against invading forces. The name appears to be theophoric, incorporating the divine element El. Geographical studies place it in the wilderness near the Dead Sea, though exact identification remains elusive. The single occurrence emphasizes the location's role in a dramatic moment of faith and divine rescue. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jeruel | es: Jeruel | fr: [ירואל] | de: [ירואל] 2Chr 20:16

יְרוֹחַ H3386 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yaro'ach: personal name, a Gadite listed in Chronicles genealogies Yaro'ach appears as a personal name in the genealogical records of the tribe of Gad (1 Chronicles 5:14). The name occurs only once, and its meaning is uncertain. Septuagint manuscripts show varied renderings (Idai, Aroue), reflecting challenges in transmitting unfamiliar proper names through translation.

(1×) A man of Gad listed in 1 Chronicles 5:14 among the genealogical records of that tribe. The single occurrence provides no contextual clues about the individual's significance or the name's etymology. Greek translations diverge significantly (Idai versus Aroue), suggesting textual difficulty. The name remains one of many preserved in the tribal registers of Israel's eastern territories. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yaro'ach | es: Yaroaj | fr: [ירוח] | de: [ירוח] 1Chr 5:14

יָרֹק H3387 N-ms (1×)
yaroq: green vegetation, green plants; used specifically of food for wild animals
This noun refers to green vegetation or herbage, particularly as sustenance for animals. In Job 39:8, it describes what the wild donkey searches for as food in the wilderness. The term emphasizes the fresh, verdant quality of plant matter that grazing animals seek. It appears to be equivalent to the more common yereq.

(1×) Green vegetation or herbage that serves as animal fodder, used in Job 39:8 to describe what the wild ass seeks in the mountains. The term emphasizes living, green plant matter as opposed to dried grasses. Translations render this as "green thing" or "green plants," with some preserving the Hebrew term untranslated, recognizing its rare and specific use in describing wildlife habitat and feeding patterns. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES
en: green-thing | es: cosa-verde | fr: ירוק | de: [ירוק] Job 39:8

יְרוּשָׁא H3388 N-proper-fs (2×)
Yerusha/Yerushah, mother of King Jotham, with variant spellings in 2 Kings 15:33 and 2 Chronicles 27:1
This personal name, possibly meaning "possessed" or "married," designates the mother of Jotham, one of Judah's more faithful kings. The name appears with two spellings in the parallel accounts of Jotham's reign, a common phenomenon in the relationship between Kings and Chronicles. As a queen mother mentioned in the regnal formulae, she held significant status in Judahite court life, though no specific deeds are attributed to her.

(2×) Found in 2 Kings 15:33 (Yerusha) and 2 Chronicles 27:1 (Yerushah), both in standard regnal introduction formulae. The variant spellings show the minor orthographic differences between the Deuteronomistic and Chronistic traditions. All multilingual glosses preserve both forms, recognizing the manuscript variation as historically authentic rather than an error requiring correction. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yerusha, Yerushah | es: Jerusa, Yerusa | fr: Yerusha, [ירושה] | de: Yerusha, [ירושה] 2Kgs 15:33; 2Chr 27:1

יְרוּשָׁלַ͏ִם H3389 Conj-w (643×)
Jerusalem — the holy city, capital of united and southern Israel, center of temple worship Yerushalayim appears 643 times in the Hebrew Bible, making it one of the most frequently named places in all of Scripture. Its etymology remains debated — possibly 'foundation of Shalem' (a deity of peace) or 'possession of peace' — but its theological significance is unmistakable: the city where God chose to place his Name (Deut 12:5), where Solomon built the Temple, and where prophets announced both judgment and restoration. The name is strikingly stable across languages — Spanish 'Jerusalem,' French 'Jerusalem,' German 'Jerusalem' — reflecting its status as a universal geographic and spiritual landmark.

Jerusalem (city) (643×) The proper noun Yerushalayim, designating the city that served as the political capital of David's united monarchy and the southern kingdom of Judah, and as the cultic center where the Temple stood. All 643 occurrences — including directional (to-Jerusalem), locative (in-Jerusalem), and ablative (from-Jerusalem) forms — refer to this single city. Attested in Assyrian records as Urusalim and in the Tell el-Amarna letters. JERUSALEM HOLY CITY en: Jerusalem, Yerushalayim, to-Jerusalem | es: Jerusalén, Yerushalayim, a-Jerusalén | fr: Jérusalem, à-Jérusalem | de: Jerusalem, zu-Jerusalem 2Sam 8:7; 2Sam 10:14; 2Sam 12:31; 2Sam 16:15; 2Sam 17:20

יְרוּשְׁלֵ͏ִם H3390 Conj-w (26×)
Yerushalem (Jerusalem) — the Aramaic form of the holy city's name, used in post-exilic texts of Ezra and Daniel.
The Aramaic spelling of Jerusalem, appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and in Daniel. This form יְרוּשְׁלֵם differs slightly from the standard Hebrew יְרוּשָׁלַם but designates the same city — the capital of Judah, site of Solomon's temple, and center of Israel's worship. In Ezra, it figures prominently in correspondence between Persian officials and the Jewish returnees regarding the rebuilding of the city and temple (Ezra 4:8-24; 5:1-2; 6:3-5). In Daniel, it marks the orientation of prayer toward the holy city (Dan 6:11) and the sacred vessels taken from its temple (Dan 5:2-3). All major translations render it identically to the Hebrew form.

in Yerushalem (26×) The proper name of Jerusalem in its Aramaic orthography, used in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra 4-7, it appears in official Persian correspondence about the city's reconstruction, often preceded by prepositions ('in Jerusalem,' 'to Jerusalem'). In Daniel, it evokes the city as the qibla of Jewish prayer (Dan 6:11) and as the source of the temple vessels desecrated by Belshazzar (Dan 5:2-3). Spanish 'Jerusalén,' French 'Jérusalem,' and German 'Jerusalem' all render it uniformly, confirming a single toponymic referent. JERUSALEM HOLY CITY en: Yerushalem, in-Yerushalem, to-Yerushalem | es: Jerusalén, Yerushalem, a-Jerusalén | fr: Jérusalem, in-Jérusalem, zu-Jérusalem | de: Jerusalem, in-Jerusalem, zu-Jerusalem Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:20; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 4:24

יֶרַח H3391 N-msc (13×)

Month (a lunar time unit) or moon (the celestial body itself); both senses derive from the lunar cycle.

A masculine noun whose two senses share the same etymological root in the lunar cycle. In most of its thirteen occurrences, it functions as a calendar term meaning 'month,' naming specific months in the Solomonic building narratives (the month of Ziv, 1 Kgs 6:37; the month of Bul, 1 Kgs 6:38; the month of Ethanim, 1 Kgs 8:2) and measuring durations of time (Exod 2:2; Deut 21:13). In two poetic passages, however, it refers to the moon itself as a celestial body: the blessings of the 'moons' in Moses' blessing (Deut 33:14) and the promise that 'your moon shall not withdraw' (Isa 60:20). The cognate Aramaic yarchaa and Akkadian arhu share this same dual range.

1. month (11×) The temporal sense 'month,' used as a unit of time reckoned by the lunar cycle. Appears in both construct chains naming specific calendar months (1 Kgs 6:37 'the month of Ziv,' 1 Kgs 6:38 'the month of Bul,' 1 Kgs 8:2 'the month of Ethanim') and in plural forms measuring durations ('months of emptiness,' Job 7:3; 'months of old,' Job 29:2; 'three months,' Exod 2:2). Spanish 'en el mes de' and French 'dans mois de' consistently render this temporal meaning. The expression 'a month of days' (Deut 21:13; 2 Kgs 15:13) is a pleonasm emphasizing the full duration of the period. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-months-of-, in-month, in-month-of | es: como-meses-de-, en-el-mes-de, en-mes | fr: comme-mois, dans-lune, dans-mois-de | de: Monat-von, Monat-von-, Monate Exod 2:2; Deut 21:13; 1Kgs 6:37; 1Kgs 6:38; 1Kgs 8:2

2. moon (2×) The astronomical sense 'moon' as a visible celestial body, distinct from the more common synonym yareach (H3394). In Deuteronomy 33:14, the plural 'moons' refers to the agricultural yield that the lunar cycles bring forth, where English and Spanish render 'moons' and 'las lunas' respectively. Isaiah 60:20 uses the singular with a possessive suffix ('your moon') in the eschatological promise that Israel's moon will never wane. French and German leave these forms transliterated in some witnesses, suggesting the astronomical reading was perceived as less routine than the calendar sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-moon, moons | es: las-lunas, y-tu-luna | fr: [וירחך], moons | de: [וירחך], moons Deut 33:14; Isa 60:20

יֶרַח H3392 N-proper-ms (2×)

Yerah, son of Joktan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:26; 1 Chr 1:20)

This personal name appears in the genealogy of Shem's descendants, specifically among the sons of Joktan who populated the Arabian peninsula. As an eponymous ancestor, Yerah likely represents a tribe or people group in ancient Arabia. The name's root connection to "moon" has led to speculation about lunar worship or a moon-related tribal identity, though the text itself offers no commentary on such associations.

(2×) Attested in Genesis 10:26 and 1 Chronicles 1:20 within the Table of Nations. The Septuagint shows variation (Iarad vs. Iare/Iapex), with some manuscripts confusing this name with Jared. The context places Yerah among Joktan's thirteen sons, all of whom settled in the Arabian region "from Mesha toward Sephar," according to Genesis 10:30. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jerah, Yerach | es: Yeraj, Yéraj | fr: Jerah, [ירח] | de: Jerach, [ירח] Gen 10:26; 1Chr 1:20

יְרַח H3393 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)

Aramaic noun for "month"; appears in Ezra 6:15 and Daniel 4:29

This Aramaic loanword for month appears in the biblical Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra it specifies the month of Adar when the temple was completed, while in Daniel it marks the passage of twelve months during Nebuchadnezzar's period of sanity before his humiliation. The word is the standard Aramaic equivalent to Hebrew "yerach" or "chodesh," showing the natural linguistic shift in the post-exilic period when Aramaic increasingly dominated Jewish linguistic life.

(2×) Found in Ezra 6:15 (singular with preposition: "of the month") and Daniel 4:29 (plural: "months"). Both contexts involve calendrical precision: the completion date of the Second Temple and the duration of Nebuchadnezzar's interval before judgment. Multilingual traditions translate it straightforwardly as month/months, while French and German sometimes preserve the Aramaic form to signal the linguistic register. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: months, of-the-month | es: del-mes, meses | fr: [לירח], mois | de: [ירחין], zu-Mond Ezra 6:15; Dan 4:29

יָרֵחַ H3394 Prep-l (26×)

Moon — the lesser celestial luminary; associated with worship, calendar reckoning, and poetic imagery of permanence.

The Hebrew noun for the moon, the 'lesser light' set in the firmament alongside the sun (Gen 1:16). Almost always paired with the sun, it serves multiple roles in Scripture: a marker of sacred seasons (Ps 104:19), a symbol of enduring permanence (Ps 72:5; 89:38), and an object of forbidden astral worship that Israel's neighbors practiced (Deut 4:19; 17:3; 2 Kgs 23:5; Jer 8:2). Prophetic texts envision the moon darkened or turned to blood at the Day of the Lord (Joel 3:4; Isa 13:10). Job resists the temptation to venerate its brightness (Job 31:26). Spanish 'luna,' French 'lune,' and German 'Mond' all reflect a single, undivided sense.

moon (celestial body) (26×) The moon as a visible celestial body, the nighttime counterpart to the sun. It appears in three main thematic clusters: (a) cosmological, as part of God's created order alongside sun and stars (Gen 37:9; Ps 136:9; Josh 10:12-13); (b) cultic, as an object of illicit worship condemned in Deuteronomy 4:19, 17:3, 2 Kings 23:5, and Jeremiah 8:2; (c) eschatological, darkened or bloodied in prophetic visions of divine judgment (Joel 3:4; Isa 13:10; Hab 3:11). Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'luna,' German 'Mond' — uniformly confirms one referent without semantic subdivision. MOON CELESTIAL BODY en: and-moon, and-the-moon, moon | es: La-luna, la-luna, luna | fr: [הירח], [והירח], [ירח] | de: Mond, [הירח], [ירח] Gen 37:9; Deut 4:19; Deut 17:3; Josh 10:12; Josh 10:13

יְרַחְמֶם H3395 N-proper-ms (10×)

Jeroham — a Hebrew personal name meaning 'may he be shown compassion,' borne by several OT figures

A theophoric name built on the root r-ḥ-m ('compassion'), expressing the prayer 'may he be shown mercy.' Its most prominent bearer is the grandfather of the prophet Samuel through the Ephraimite line (1 Sam 1:1). The name recurs across tribal boundaries — Benjaminites, Levitical priests, a Danite chief, and a military captain under Jehoiada — reflecting its broad popularity in Israelite naming. The Septuagint renders it variously as Ieroam, Ieroboam, and even Ierameel, showing how Greek translators struggled with this distinctively Semitic prayer-name.

Yerocham (10×) A proper masculine name meaning 'may he be compassionated,' borne by at least six distinct individuals: Samuel's grandfather the Ephraimite (1 Sam 1:1; 1 Chr 6:27, 34), Benjaminite clan heads (1 Chr 8:27; 9:8), priestly figures in Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:12; Neh 11:12), a Davidic warrior (1 Chr 12:7), a Danite leader (1 Chr 27:22), and a captain who helped enthrone Joash (2 Chr 23:1). Multilingual glosses uniformly treat it as a personal name — Spanish 'Jeroham,' French 'Yerocham,' German 'Yerocham' — with the compassion-root r-ḥ-m clearly recognized across traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yerocham, Yerokham | es: Jeroham, Jerojam, Pelalías | fr: Yerocham, [ירחם] | de: Jerachmeel, Yerocham, er-erbarmt-sich 1Sam 1:1; 1Chr 6:27; 1Chr 6:34; 1Chr 8:27; 1Chr 9:8

יְרַחְמְאֵל H3396 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (8×)

Jerahmeel — 'may God have compassion'; a prominent Judahite clan name, also borne by a Levite and a royal official.

Jerahmeel (Yerachme'el) is a theophoric name meaning 'may El have compassion,' combining the root for mercy (racham) with the divine name El. The most prominent bearer heads a major Judahite clan extensively documented in 1 Chronicles 2:9-42, whose descendants became the Jerahmeelites settled in the Negev (cf. 1 Sam 27:10; 30:29). A second Jerahmeel is a Levite in 1 Chronicles 24:29, and a third is a royal official sent by King Jehoiakim to arrest Jeremiah and Baruch (Jer 36:26). The name's meaning — a prayer for divine mercy — resonates across all its bearers.

Yerachme'el (8×) The proper name Jerahmeel/Yerachme'el, meaning 'may God have compassion,' borne by three OT figures: (1) a prominent ancestor of a Judahite clan (1 Chr 2:9, 25-42), (2) a Levite (1 Chr 24:29), and (3) a royal official under Jehoiakim (Jer 36:26). Spanish 'Yerajmeel' and German 'Jerachmeel' preserve the guttural consonants, while French 'Jerachmeël' uses a diaeresis to separate the final vowels. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yerachme'el, Yerachmeel, to-Yerachme'el | es: Yerajmeel | fr: Jerachmeël, [ירחמאל] | de: Jerachmeel, [ירחמאל], fuer-Jerachmeel 1Chr 2:9; 1Chr 2:25; 1Chr 2:26; 1Chr 2:27; 1Chr 2:33

יְרַחְמְאֵלִי H3397 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
The Jerahmeelites, a clan or tribe in southern Judah mentioned in 1 Samuel 27:10 and 30:29
This gentilics adjective designates a clan or tribal group dwelling in the Negev region of southern Judah during David's outlaw period. The Jerahmeelites appear among the groups David raided (or claimed to raid) while serving Achish of Gath, and later they received spoils from his Amalekite victory. Their connection to Jerahmeel son of Hezron (1 Chronicles 2) suggests they were a Judahite subgroup, though some scholars propose more complex tribal relationships in the pre-monarchic south.

(2×) Attested in 1 Samuel 27:10 ("the Negeb of the Jerahmeelites") and 30:29 ("cities of the Jerahmeelites"). Both contexts place them in southern Judah's arid regions. The Septuagint shows confusion, rendering it variously as Iesmega, Israelites, Aermon, and Ieramehlei, suggesting Greek translators were uncertain about this southern tribal group's precise identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Jerahmeelite, the-Jerahmeelites | es: el-jerahmeelita | fr: le-Jerahmeelite, le-Jerahmeelites | de: der-Jerahmeelite, der-Jerahmeelites 1Sam 27:10; 1Sam 30:29

יַרְחָע H3398 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)
Yarcha, an Egyptian slave who married into Sheshan's family (1 Chr 2:34-35)
This personal name designates an Egyptian servant who received an unusual privilege: marriage to his master's daughter. Since Sheshan had no sons, he gave his daughter to Yarcha, thereby incorporating this foreigner into the Judahite lineage. The name appears with a prepositional prefix in one occurrence ("to Yarcha"), marking the marriage transaction. This narrative detail reveals the flexibility of genealogical boundaries and the importance of preserving family lines even through irregular means.

(2×) Found in 1 Chronicles 2:34 and 35 within Sheshan's genealogy. The Septuagint variations (Iōchēl, Ieree) show transliteration uncertainty with this Egyptian name. The story is remarkable: a foreign slave becomes a legitimate ancestor in Judah's tribal records through marriage, demonstrating that genealogical incorporation could transcend ethnic boundaries when family continuity was at stake. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yarcha, to-Yarcha | es: Yarja, a-Yarja | fr: [ירחע], [לירחע] | de: [ירחע], [לירחע] 1Chr 2:34; 1Chr 2:35

יָרַט H3399a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
yarad (rare): to be reckless, headlong, precipitate; describing hasty or rash action
This rare verb appears to mean "to be precipitate" or "to rush recklessly." In Numbers 22:32, it likely describes Balaam's reckless journey ahead of God's will, though the text is difficult. The root conveys the idea of headlong, hasty action without proper deliberation. Scholars debate the precise meaning, with some suggesting it describes the way as "precipitate" before the angel.

(1×) A verb indicating reckless, headlong action, appearing in Numbers 22:32 in the context of Balaam's journey. The term describes either the way being precipitate or Balaam rushing recklessly. Cross-linguistic evidence shows translations like "reckless" and "perverse," though the rarity and textual difficulty of this verb leave its precise nuance uncertain. Some scholars connect it to Arabic roots meaning to cast into peril. SPEED AND QUICKNESS
en: reckless | es: perverso | fr: reckless | de: reckless Num 22:32

רָטָה H3399b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 1cs (1×)
ratah (disputed): possibly to wring out, thrust; meaning uncertain, possibly variant of yarad
This verb's meaning is highly uncertain. It appears in Job 16:11 in a context describing God delivering Job into wicked hands. Some read it as "wring me out," while others consider it a textual variant of yarad, meaning "throw" or "precipitate." The difficulty has led most scholars to prefer emendation to a related root.

(1×) A verb of disputed meaning appearing in Job 16:11, where Job describes God's treatment of him. The suggested sense is "wring out" or "throw," but most scholars consider this a textual variant requiring emendation to yarad. Translations diverge, with some rendering "throws me" or "casts me," reflecting the interpretive challenge. The multilingual evidence shows uncertainty, with several versions preserving Hebrew forms untranslated. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: He-throws-me | es: me-arroja | fr: ירטני-moi | de: [ירטנ] Job 16:11

יְרִיאֵל H3400 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yeri'el: personal name, a chief in the tribe of Issachar
Yeri'el was a leader in the tribe of Issachar, mentioned in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 7:2. The name appears to be equivalent to Yeru'el, possibly theophoric in origin. Septuagint manuscripts show varied renderings, reflecting uncertainty in the transmission of tribal genealogies.

(1×) A chief of the tribe of Issachar listed in 1 Chronicles 7:2. The name likely contains a divine element, similar to Yeru'el. Greek translations vary widely (Reiel, Iereel, Iarouel), indicating scribal difficulty. The single occurrence places this individual among the military leaders counted in David's census, though no further details about his life or accomplishments are provided. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yeriel | es: y-Yeriel | fr: [ויריאל] | de: [ויריאל] 1Chr 7:2

יָרִיב H3401 N-mpc / 1cs (3×)
adversary, opponent in dispute; one who contends against you
A noun derived from the verb ריב (to contend, dispute, conduct a lawsuit), denoting one's adversary or opponent in conflict. The three occurrences span diverse contexts: Psalm 35:1 calls on Yahweh to 'contend with my adversaries' (parallel to 'fight those who fight me'); Isaiah 49:25 promises Zion that God will fight 'your adversary'; and Jeremiah 18:19 asks God to pay attention to 'my adversaries' (though the Septuagint reads differently). The term carries forensic overtones —these are not just enemies but opponents in a dispute, those who contend against you legally or verbally, making God's intervention a matter of justice, not mere power.

(3×) One's opponents or adversaries in conflict, particularly those who bring accusations or disputes. The legal nuance (from ריב, to bring a lawsuit) means these are adversaries who challenge your case or rights, not merely military enemies. The psalmist and prophets appeal to God as the ultimate judge to take up their case against these contenders. The textual variants in Jeremiah suggest some scribal uncertainty about the precise reading, but the forensic context remains clear. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: adversaries-my, my-adversaries, your-adversary | es: contendientes-míos, el-que-contiende-contigo, mis-contendores | fr: [יריב], [יריבך], combattre | de: [יריב], [יריבך], mein-Widersacher Ps 35:1; Isa 49:25; Jer 18:19

יָרִיב H3402 N-proper-ms (3×)

Yariv/Jarib, personal name (Simeonite, post-exilic leaders)
A personal name meaning 'he contends' or 'he takes our part,' from the root ריב (to strive, conduct a case). The name appears for multiple individuals: a son of Simeon in 1 Chronicles 4:24 (parallel to יָכִין in Genesis 46:10), and post-exilic figures—one sent by Ezra to recruit Levites (Ezra 8:16) and possibly the same individual among priests who married foreign wives (10:18). The Sabaean parallel يرب confirms this was a known name pattern in related Semitic cultures. The name expresses confidence that Yahweh contends on behalf of his people or conducts their legal case.

(3×) A personal name invoking divine advocacy or contention. The Simeonite occurrence shows ancient usage, while the Ezra references connect the name to the crisis of communal identity after exile—fitting for a name meaning 'he contends,' as the post-exilic community struggled to define boundaries. The Greek transliterations (Ιαριμ, Ιαριν) capture the phonological form despite variation, showing the name was transmitted across linguistic boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yariv, and-Yariv, and-for-Yariv | es: Yarib, y-Yariv, y-a-Yariv | fr: [ויריב], [ולריב], [יריב] | de: [ויריב], [ולירים], [ירים] 1Chr 4:24; Ezra 8:16; Ezra 10:18

יְרִיבַי H3403 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yerivai: personal name, one of David's mighty warriors
Yerivai was one of David's elite warriors, the mighty men who formed his special forces (1 Chronicles 11:46). The name also appears in Old Aramaic inscriptions parallel to Assyrian "Iribai," suggesting its use across ancient Near Eastern cultures. Though little is known of his exploits, his inclusion in this prestigious list marks him as a warrior of exceptional courage and skill.

(1×) One of David's mighty men listed in 1 Chronicles 11:46. The name appears in Aramaic inscriptions corresponding to Assyrian Iribai, indicating broader regional use. Septuagint renderings (Iaribei, Iareib) preserve the name with slight variations. The warrior's inclusion among David's elite thirty or thirty-seven heroes signals extraordinary military achievement, though specific exploits are not recorded in the biblical text. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yerivai | es: y-Yeribai | fr: [ויריבי] | de: [ויריבי] 1Chr 11:46

יְרִיָּהוּ H3404 N-proper-ms (3×)

Yeriyahu/Yeriyyah/Jeriah, chief of Levitical course
A Levitical personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles' descriptions of David's organization of temple service. The name appears with two spellings: יְרִיָּהוּ (Yeriyahu) in 23:19 and 24:23, and the shorter יְרִיָּה (Yeriyyah) in 26:31. All three references identify him as chief of one of the Levitical courses or divisions. The name may be related to יְרִיאֵל, possibly meaning 'Yah teaches' or 'founded by Yah.' The Greek versions show typical variation (Ιδουδ, Ιερια, Ιεδδι, Ιεδειμος), reflecting the challenges of rendering this particular Hebrew name into Greek phonology.

(3×) A Levitical leader's name preserved in Chronicles' records of temple organization. The variation between longer (-yahu) and shorter (-yah) forms of the theophoric ending is standard in Hebrew names. As chief of a Levitical course, Yeriyahu held responsibility for organizing temple service rotations, making his name part of the institutional memory of Second Temple worship patterns, even if his individual biography is lost. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeriyahu, Yeriyyah | es: Jerías, Yeriahu | fr: [יריה], [יריהו] | de: [יריה], [יריהו] 1Chr 23:19; 1Chr 24:23; 1Chr 26:31

יְרִיחוֹ H3405 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (57×)

Jericho – the ancient Canaanite city in the Jordan Valley, first major conquest under Joshua Yericho (also spelled Yericho and Yerechoh) is the proper name of the fortified Canaanite city situated in the lower Jordan Valley near the Dead Sea. Perhaps derived from yareach ('moon') or from ravach ('spacious, fragrant'), the name evokes the lush oasis setting of palms and balsam that travelers encountered. With 57 occurrences concentrated in Joshua, Numbers, Kings, and Jeremiah, Jericho is best known as the first city conquered by Israel upon entering Canaan, its walls falling at the sound of trumpets and shouts (Josh 6). It also appears as a landmark for later events: the prophetic school of Elisha (2 Kgs 2:4-5), the capture of King Zedekiah (Jer 39:5), and the location of returnees in Ezra-Nehemiah.

Jericho (place name) (57×) The ancient city in the Jordan Valley, appearing in three orthographic variants reflecting scribal tradition. Best known as the site of Joshua's dramatic conquest (Josh 6:1-21), it also serves as a prophetic center under Elisha (2 Kgs 2:4-5) and a landmark in Zedekiah's capture (Jer 39:5). Spanish Jerico, French and German Jericho preserve the toponym uniformly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jericho | es: Jericó | fr: Jéricho | de: Jericho Num 22:1; Num 26:3; Num 26:63; Num 31:12; Num 33:48

יְרִימוֹת H3406 N-proper-ms (15×)

Jerimoth / Yerimoth — personal name meaning 'heights' or 'he is exalted,' borne by Benjamites, Levites, and others Spelled in three variant forms (יְרִימוֹת, יְרֵמוֹת, יְרִימֹת), this name carries the sense of 'heights' or 'exaltation,' fitting for families who saw divine elevation in their children. It appears among Benjamite warriors (1 Chr 7:7–8; 8:14), Levitical musicians and gatekeepers (1 Chr 23:23; 25:4, 22), a Naphtalite chief (1 Chr 27:19), and a son of David whose daughter married Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:18). Three men by this name appear in Ezra 10 among those who had married foreign wives, giving the name a bittersweet final echo in the canon.

Yerimot / Yeremot (proper name) (15×) A masculine proper name appearing in variant spellings (יְרִימוֹת / יְרֵמוֹת / יְרִימֹת), meaning 'heights' or 'he is exalted.' The Septuagint renders it variously as Ιερμουθ and Αρειμωθ. It refers to at least ten individuals: Benjamite descendants of Bela (1 Chr 7:7–8; 8:14), Levitical musicians assigned by lot (1 Chr 25:4, 22), a tribal chief of Naphtali (1 Chr 27:19), a son of David (2 Chr 11:18), and three men in Ezra's assembly who had taken foreign wives (Ezra 10:26–29). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jerimoth, Yerimot, [and-Yeremot] | es: Jerimot, Yerimot, [y-Yeremot] | fr: [וירימות], [וירמות], [ורמות] | de: Jerimot, [(ורמות)], [[ירמות]] 1Chr 7:7; 1Chr 7:8; 1Chr 8:14; 1Chr 12:6; 1Chr 23:23

יְרִיעָה H3407 N-fpc / 1cs (54×)

A curtain or cloth panel, especially of the tabernacle or a tent; by extension, the dwelling itself.
The standard Hebrew word for the cloth panels that formed the walls of the tabernacle and of ordinary tents. In the detailed instructions of Exodus 26 and 36, the word appears dozens of times as Israel's artisans stitch together the portable sanctuary. Outside the tabernacle texts, the curtains of a tent become a poignant image of fragile shelter – Jeremiah's 'my curtains are destroyed' (Jer 4:20, 10:20) mourns devastation, while Isaiah 54:2 ('enlarge the place of your tent, stretch out your curtains') promises joyful expansion. The psalmist lifts the image highest: God 'stretches out the heavens like a curtain' (Ps 104:2).

1. curtain, tent panel (53×) A curtain or panel of cloth, particularly the woven strips forming the tabernacle walls or a tent covering. This accounts for nearly all occurrences (53x). The tabernacle instructions in Exodus 26 alone use it over 30 times. Spanish 'la cortina,' French 'le rideau,' and German 'der Vorhang' all render the textile sense. Beyond the tabernacle, the word appears in figurative contexts: Ps 104:2 compares the heavens to a curtain; Isa 54:2 uses expanding curtains as a metaphor for Jerusalem's restoration; Song

1:5 likens beauty to the curtains of Solomon. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-curtain | es: la-cortina | fr: le-rideau | de: der-Vorhang Exod 26:1; Exod 26:2; Exod 26:3

2. tent, dwelling (1×) By metonymy, the tent or dwelling formed by curtains, referring to the habitation itself rather than its fabric. In 2 Sam 7:2, David says the ark of God 'dwells within curtains,' meaning within a tent-dwelling. Here the material (curtains) stands for the whole structure. Spanish 'la tienda' ('the tent') correctly interprets the metonymy. The theological weight is significant: David's discomfort that God's ark sits in mere curtains while he lives in a cedar house drives the entire narrative of temple-building. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-curtain | es: la-tienda | fr: le-curtain | de: der-curtain 2Sam 7:2

יְרִיעוֹת H3408 N-proper-fs (1×)

Yeri'oth: personal name (possibly feminine), mentioned in Judahite genealogy

Yeri'oth appears in 1 Chronicles 2:18 in a genealogical context that is textually difficult. Some scholars suggest reading "daughter of Yerioth" instead of the Masoretic "and Yerioth," which would make this a maternal designation. The name's precise role in Caleb's family tree remains uncertain due to textual ambiguity.

(1×) A name appearing in the genealogy of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:18, possibly indicating a woman in Caleb's family. Textual scholars suggest emending the conjunction to read "daughter of Yerioth," which would clarify the genealogical relationship. Greek manuscripts vary significantly (Eloth, Iereioth, Iephthiel), reflecting the difficulty of the Hebrew text. The name may relate to the noun for tent curtains. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeri'oth | es: Yeriot | fr: [יריעות] | de: [יריעות] 1Chr 2:18

יָרֵךְ H3409 Art / N-fs (34×)

Thigh, upper leg (body part, oath-gesture, procreative power); side or flank of a structure; base or shaft of the lampstand.

The Hebrew noun yarekh designates the fleshy upper leg — the thigh — but its semantic reach extends outward from the body into architecture and sacred furniture. In its most frequent use, it names the physical thigh where a sword is strapped (Judg 3:16; Ps 45:3) and the intimate zone involved in the patriarchal oath-gesture of placing one's hand under another's thigh (Gen 24:2; 47:29), a ritual widely understood to invoke procreative power as surety. Spanish muslo, French cuisse, and German Schenkel all converge on the anatomical sense, while the spatial extension to 'side' or 'flank' of the tabernacle (Exod 40:22, 24) and the technical application to the menorah's central shaft (Exod 25:31) require entirely different vocabulary in most target languages — Spanish lado, French cote, German Seite for flanks, and base/Fuss for the lampstand.

1. thigh, upper leg (25×) The physical thigh or upper leg, encompassing the outer thigh where a weapon is girded (Judg 3:16, 21; Ps 45:3; Song 3:8), the intimate zone touched in the solemn oath-taking ritual of Genesis 24:2 and 47:29, and the part of the body struck by an angel at Peniel (Gen 32:25). The dual form yerekayim appears for the thighs covered by priestly undergarments (Exod 28:42). Spanish muslo, French cuisse, and Arabic ﺨﺬ all render the straightforward anatomical meaning, while Korean 허벅지 and Hindi जांघ confirm cross-linguistic stability for this body-part term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-thigh-of, Your-thigh, her-thigh | es: el-muslo, mi-muslo, muslo | fr: -le-thigh-de, [ירך], cuisse | de: -der-Schenkel-von, Schenkel, [ירך] Gen 24:2; Gen 24:9; Gen 32:25; Gen 32:31

2. side, flank (6×) The side or flank of a structure, camp, or geographic feature, used spatially to indicate a lateral position rather than any anatomical reference. Six occurrences cluster in the tabernacle layout instructions and Levitical camp arrangements: the table on the north side (Exod 40:22), the lampstand on the south side (Exod 40:24), the altar's north flank (Lev 1:11), and clan positions beside the tabernacle (Num 3:29, 35). Spanish lado, French cote, and German Seite replace the body-part vocabulary entirely, confirming that translators recognize a genuine spatial-architectural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: side-of | es: lado-de | fr: côté-de | de: Seite-von Exod 40:22; Exod 40:24; Lev 1:11; Num 3:29; Num 3:35

3. base, shaft (of lampstand) (3×) The base or central shaft of the golden lampstand (menorah) from which the six branches extend, a technical cultic term appearing only three times in the tabernacle descriptions (Exod 25:31; 37:17; Num 8:4). The image likely derives from the thigh as the trunk of the body from which limbs emerge. Spanish base, French base, and German Fuss ('foot') all abandon thigh vocabulary for structural terminology, signaling a fully specialized artifact sense distinct from either anatomy or architecture. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: its-base | es: su-base | fr: son-base | de: sein-Fuss, sein-base, seinen-Fuss Exod 25:31; Exod 37:17; Num 8:4

יַרְכָּה H3410 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

yarkah (Aramaic): thigh, loins, side; body part denoting strength or structure

This Aramaic noun refers to the thigh or loin area. In Daniel 2:32, it describes part of Nebuchadnezzar's dream statue, specifically the thighs made of bronze. The term denotes structural strength and support, consistent with the symbolic representation of kingdoms in the vision. This is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew yarek.

(1×) An Aramaic noun meaning "thigh" or "loins," appearing in Daniel 2:32 to describe the bronze thighs of Nebuchadnezzar's statue-vision. The anatomical term carries symbolic weight in the dream's interpretation, representing a kingdom or empire. Translations consistently render this as "thighs" or "loins," preserving the bodily metaphor that structures the entire vision of successive kingdoms. FEET AND LEGS

en: and-its-thighs | es: y-sus-muslos | fr: et-côte | de: [וירכתה] Dan 2:32

יַרְכָה H3411 Prep-l (30×)

Extreme or remote parts of a land; rear of a structure; innermost recesses or depths; flank or side

Derived from the word for 'thigh' or 'loin,' this noun extends the body-part image to denote the far side, rear portion, or deepest recess of a space. It appears most often in the dual form to indicate the two flanks or extreme ends of something. In geographical contexts it marks the uttermost reaches of a territory – the 'remote parts of the north' (Isaiah 14:13, Psalm 48:2). For the tabernacle and temple it designates the rear wall opposite the entrance (Exodus 26:22-27). In caves, ships, and the pit of Sheol, it points to the innermost depths where one hides or is confined (1 Samuel 24:3, Jonah 1:5).

1. remote/extreme parts of land (12×) The farthest reaches or uttermost borders of a geographical territory. Judges 19:1 places a Levite in 'the remote parts of the hill country of Ephraim,' and Isaiah 14:13 speaks of ascending to 'the far sides of the north.' Spanish 'confines de' and English 'far sides of' both capture the sense of distant extremity. The dual form emphasizes that these are the two outer flanks of a region. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: far-sides-of, flanks-of, from-ends-of- | es: a-las-laderas, de-confines-de, de-confines-de- | fr: côté, dans-remote-parts-de, du-fond | de: Innerstes, [ירכתי], [מירכתי] Judg 19:1; Judg 19:18; 2Kgs 19:23; Ps 48:2; Isa 37:24

2. rear part of structure (10×) The rear section of a built structure, particularly the back wall of the tabernacle or temple. Exodus 26:22-27 uses the dual form repeatedly for the two rear corners and the rear crossbars of the tabernacle frame. Spanish 'parte posterior de' (rear part of) makes the architectural orientation explicit – this is always the end opposite the entrance, the deepest interior of the sacred structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [from-rear-of], [ketiv], and-for-rear-of | es: (desde-las-partes-posteriores-de), Y-para-parte-posterior-de, Y-para-parte-trasera-de | fr: [from-rear-of], côté, de-rear-de | de: [from-rear-of], [בירכתים], [בירכתם] Exod 26:22; Exod 26:23; Exod 26:27; Exod 36:27; Exod 36:28

3. innermost recesses or depths (7×) The innermost recesses or hidden depths of an enclosed space such as a cave, a ship's hold, or the pit of Sheol. In 1 Samuel 24:3 David hides in 'the recesses of the cave,' and Isaiah 14:15 consigns the fallen tyrant to 'the recesses of the pit.' Spanish 'lo más interior de' (the most interior of) and English 'innermost parts' highlight the sense of a space that is both deep and concealed, with Psalm 128:3 applying the image domestically to the inner room of a house. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-innermost-parts-of, in-recesses-of, in-recesses-of- | es: en-laderas-de, en-lo-interior-de, en-lo-más-interior-de | fr: côté, dans-flanc, dans-recesses-de | de: Inneres, Innerstes, [בירכתי] 1Sam 24:3; Ps 128:3; Isa 14:13; Isa 14:15; Ezek 32:23

4. flank or side of body (1×) The side or flank of a person's body or territory in a more anatomical or border sense. Genesis 49:13 uses it for Zebulun's distant border reaching toward Sidon – literally 'his flank toward Sidon.' This sense preserves the closest link to the root noun 'thigh/loin,' with the body-part metaphor mapping directly onto territorial extent. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: and-flank-his | es: y-su-costado | fr: et-flank-son | de: und-seine-Seite Gen 49:13

יַרְמוּת H3412 Conj-w (7×)

Jarmuth (Yarmuth), a Canaanite royal city in the Shephelah of Judah and a Levitical city in Issachar

Jarmuth was a Canaanite city-state whose king Piram joined the coalition of five Amorite kings against Gibeon, only to be defeated by Joshua in the dramatic battle involving hailstones and the sun standing still (Josh 10:3, 5, 23). Listed in Joshua 12:11 among conquered royal cities, it was later allotted to the tribe of Judah in the Shephelah district alongside Adullam (Josh 15:35) and resettled after the exile (Neh 11:29). A separate Jarmuth in Issachar served as a Levitical city (Josh 21:29). The site is usually identified with Khirbet el-Yarmuk southwest of Beth Shemesh.

Yarmuth (Canaanite city) (7×) The proper place name Yarmuth (יַרְמוּת), designating primarily a Canaanite royal city in the Shephelah whose king Piram joined the anti-Gibeonite coalition defeated by Joshua (Josh 10:3, 5, 23; 12:11), later assigned to Judah (Josh 15:35) and resettled post-exile (Neh 11:29). A second Jarmuth in Issachar served as a Levitical city (Josh 21:29). Spanish and French preserve the form 'Jarmuth' closely, while the Septuagint offers Ierimouth, reflecting a different vowel tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jarmuth, Yarmut, Yarmuth | es: Jarmut, y-en-Jarmut | fr: Jarmuth, Yarmut, Yarmuth | de: Jarmuth, Yarmut, Yarmuth Josh 10:3; Josh 10:5; Josh 10:23; Josh 12:11; Josh 15:35

יְרַמַי H3413 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yeremi: personal name, one of the Israelites who married foreign women during the exile

Yeremi was among those who had married foreign women contrary to covenant law and put them away during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:33). The name appears in the list of those who responded to the call for covenant renewal. This incident reflects the post-exilic community's struggle to maintain distinct identity and religious fidelity.

(1×) A man listed in Ezra 10:33 among those who had taken foreign wives and agreed to divorce them as part of Ezra's reforms. The name appears only in this context of covenant renewal and community purification after the exile. Septuagint renderings (Ieramei, Ierameith) preserve the name, situating this individual among those who prioritized covenant faithfulness over personal relationships in the restoration period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeremay | es: Yeremai | fr: [ירמי] | de: [ירמי] Ezra 10:33

יִרְמְיָה H3414 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (147×)

Jeremiah — personal name (Yirmeyahu), chiefly the prophet from Anathoth, also several other biblical figures

Yirmeyahu (or the shorter form Yirmeyah) is a theophoric name probably meaning 'Yah exalts' or 'Yah loosens.' Its most prominent bearer is the prophet Jeremiah son of Hilkiah, a priest from Anathoth who ministered during Judah's final decades before exile (Jer 1:1-3). His name dominates the book bearing it, appearing in over 130 of the 147 total occurrences. Other bearers include a man from Libnah whose daughter married King Josiah (2 Kgs 23:31), a Gadite warrior in David's time (1 Chr 12:13), and several post-exilic figures (Neh 10:3; 12:1). The Septuagint renders it Ieremias, giving us the familiar English form.

Jeremiah (proper noun) (147×) The proper name Yirmeyahu/Yirmeyah, a theophoric compound likely meaning 'Yah exalts' or 'Yah loosens.' Overwhelmingly it designates the prophet Jeremiah of Anathoth (Jer 1:1), whose ministry spanned the reigns of Josiah through the fall of Jerusalem. Secondary bearers include the father of Josiah's wife Hamutal (2 Kgs 23:31), a Gadite warrior (1 Chr 12:13), and post-exilic priests and leaders. The LXX form Ieremias passed into Spanish 'Jeremias,' French 'Jeremie,' and German 'Jeremia,' all reflecting the Greek mediation of the Hebrew original. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Jeremiah, Yirmeyahu, of-Yirmeyahu | es: Jeremías, Yirmeyahu, Yirmeyahu? | fr: Jérémie, [ירמיהו] | de: Jeremia 1Chr 12:14; 2Chr 35:25; 2Chr 36:12; 2Chr 36:21; 2Chr 36:22

יָרֵעַ H3415 V-Qal-Imperf.Jus-3ms (4×)

to quiver, tremble; to be grieved or distressed (of the soul)

This rare verb describes the trembling or quivering of the soul in distress or terror. Isaiah uses it to portray Moabite soldiers whose souls 'quiver' in fear before invading forces. The root appears also in contexts of inner turmoil and emotional distress, where things 'go badly' for someone's spirit. Arabic and Targum cognates suggest associations with weakness, timidity, or being disheartened.

(4×) The verb appears in passages describing inner trembling or distress. Isaiah portrays the Moabite warrior whose 'soul quivers within him' (Isa 15:4) in terror before judgment. Hannah's husband asks, 'Why is your heart grieved?' when she weeps in barrenness (1Sam 1:8). Joab warns that things will 'go badly' if Absalom's enemy escapes (2Sam 20:6), and Job describes a calamity that 'goes badly' for the wicked (Job 20:26). French est affligea and Spanish está malo/hará mal track the emotional distress dimension, while English 'trembles' and German ist grieved preserve the visceral quivering aspect. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS
en: is-grieved, it-goes-badly, trembles | es: está-malo, hará-mal, será-mal | fr: [ירעה], est-affligea, fera-fais-mal | de: [ירע], [ירעה], ist-grieved 1Sam 1:8; 2Sam 20:6; Job 20:26; Isa 15:4

יִרְפְּאֵל H3416 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yirpe'el: city in the territory of Benjamin, location unknown

Yirpe'el was a city allotted to the tribe of Benjamin according to Joshua 18:27. Its exact location has not been identified archaeologically, though it belonged to Benjamin's hill country settlements. The name appears in the territorial boundary lists that defined the land inheritance of each tribe.

(1×) A place name designating a city in Benjamin's tribal territory, mentioned in Joshua 18:27. Despite preservation in the biblical boundary lists, the site has not been identified with any known archaeological location. Greek manuscripts render it as Ierphael or Ierphaiel, maintaining the name without translation. The single occurrence provides insufficient contextual clues for precise geographical identification. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yirpeel | es: y-Irpeel | fr: et-Yirpeel | de: und-Yirpeel Josh 18:27

יָרַק H3417 V-Qal-InfAbs (3×)

spit (in someone's face), expectorate as sign of contempt or humiliation

A verb meaning to spit, specifically in someone's face as an act of contempt or shaming. Both occurrences involve ritual or legal humiliation: Numbers 12:14 (twice) describes the principle that if a father spat in his daughter's face, she would bear shame for seven days—Moses applies this to Miriam's punishment for challenging his authority. Deuteronomy 25:9 prescribes that a widow whose brother-in-law refuses levirate marriage shall spit in his face publicly as part of the shaming ritual. The act communicated profound contempt and social disgrace, making the offender ritually unclean or socially diminished.

(3×) The act of spitting in someone's face as a ritual or legal expression of contempt and shame. Far from casual rudeness, biblical face-spitting marked formal disgrace—whether divine judgment (Miriam) or communal enforcement of family obligations (levirate refusal). The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly capture the spitting action ('escupir', 'spit', 'spat'), recognizing this as a deliberate, meaningful act. The doubling in Numbers 12:14 (infinitive absolute + finite verb) intensifies the sense: 'if her father had but spit...' SPITTING CONTEMPT

en: and-shall-spit, spat, spitting | es: escupiera, escupir, y-escupirá | fr: et-devra-spit, spat, spitting | de: spat, spitting, und-soll-spit Num 12:14; Deut 25:9

יֶרֶק H3418 Conj-w (6×)

Green vegetation, herbage, or greenness — used of plants given as food and of grass as a symbol of transience.

A masculine noun (יֶרֶק) denoting the quality of greenness or, more concretely, green plants and herbage as a collective category. It appears at pivotal moments in the biblical narrative. In Genesis 1:30 and 9:3, it belongs to creation theology — every green plant (יֶרֶק עֵשֶׂב) is given first to animals, then after the flood, to humanity as food. In the plague narrative (Exod 10:15), the locusts devour every green thing. Numbers 22:4 compares Moab's dread of Israel to an ox licking up the green of the field. The wisdom tradition uses it for transience: the wicked flourish like green grass but quickly wither (Ps 37:2). Isaiah 15:6 deploys it in an oracle against Moab where greenness has perished.

green plants, vegetation, greenness (6×) Green vegetation, herbage, or greenness as a collective or abstract noun. In the creation ordinances, יֶרֶק עֵשֶׂב ('green herb') designates the plant food given to all creatures (Gen 1:30) and later extended to humanity (Gen 9:3). The locust plague consumes every יֶרֶק in Egypt (Exod 10:15). Balak fears Israel will consume Moab's 'green of the field' like an ox (Num 22:4). In wisdom poetry, the wicked fade like יֶרֶק דֶּשֶׁא, 'green grass' (Ps 37:2). Isaiah 15:6 mourns that Moab's greenness has perished. Spanish 'verde' and French 'verdure' both capture the essential color-quality dimension, while English 'green' functions both adjectivally and substantivally as the Hebrew does. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-green, as-green, green | es: como-verde, hierba-de, verde | fr: [ירק], comme-vert, et-verdure | de: Grüne, [ירק], gruen Gen 1:30; Gen 9:3; Exod 10:15; Num 22:4; Ps 37:2

יָרָק H3419 Conj-w / N-msc (5×)

herbs, vegetables, green plants; cultivated garden greens

A collective noun for edible green plants, herbs, and garden vegetables. The term evokes cultivated produce rather than wild growth. In Deuteronomy 11:10, the land of Egypt is compared to a 'garden of herbs' (gan-yārāq) watered by foot-irrigation. Naboth's vineyard was coveted by Ahab to become a 'garden of herbs' (1 Kgs 21:2). Proverbs 15:17 famously contrasts 'a meal of herbs where love is' with 'a fattened ox and hatred.' In Isaiah 37:27 (= 2 Kgs 19:26), the construct form describes fragile 'green shoots of grass,' emphasizing vulnerability before destruction.

(5×) Herbs, vegetables, green garden plants — collective term for cultivated edible greens. Used in construct with 'garden' (gan-yārāq) for a vegetable plot in Deut 11:10 and 1 Kgs 21:2. Proverbs 15:17 employs it in a wisdom saying contrasting humble vegetable fare with rich but loveless feasting. Spanish distinguishes 'hortaliza/legumbres/verduras' for the different nuances of garden produce, greens, and vegetables. In Isa 37:27 = 2 Kgs 19:26, the construct yĕraq dešē' ('green of tender grass') describes the fragile, ephemeral quality of besieged nations. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12062 WITH 5 SENSES

en: and-green-of, and-the-green, herbs | es: hortaliza, legumbres, verduras | fr: [ירק], et-green-de, herbs | de: [ירק], [ירק], der-vegetable Deut 11:10; 1Kgs 21:2; 2Kgs 19:26; Prov 15:17; Isa 37:27

יֵרָקוֹן H3420 N-ms (6×)

Mildew or blight (crop disease paired with scorching as divine judgment); paleness or jaundice (of the human face).

The Hebrew noun yeraqon derives from the root for 'green/yellow' and names two related but distinct phenomena united by sickly discoloration. In five of its six occurrences it refers to a devastating crop disease — mildew or blight — invariably paired with shiddaphon ('scorching, blasting') as twin instruments of divine agricultural judgment (Deut 28:22; 1 Kgs 8:37; Amos 4:9). Spanish renders this as anublo (a specialized agricultural term for blight), while French and German translations sometimes leave the Hebrew untranslated, revealing the difficulty of pinning down this ancient plant pathology. The lone remaining occurrence in Jeremiah 30:6 shifts to human physiology: faces turned to yeraqon — a sickly pallor or jaundice — describing men gripped by terror as if in labor pains. The same root color produces two distinct images: ruined fields and ashen faces.

1. mildew / blight (agricultural disease) (5×) A crop disease — mildew, blight, or rust — that destroys grain and produce, always appearing alongside shiddaphon (scorching/blasting) in formulaic curse and prayer texts. All five occurrences follow this pairing: Deuteronomy 28:22 in the covenant curses, Solomon's temple prayer (1 Kgs 8:37; 2 Chr 6:28), Amos 4:9 in the catalogue of ignored warnings, and Haggai 2:17. Spanish anublo captures the agricultural specificity, while English 'mildew' and French verdure/mildew attempt different angles on the same crop devastation. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-mildew, and-with-mildew, mildew | es: añublo, o-añublo, y-con-añublo | fr: [וירקון], et-avec-mildew, et-verdure | de: [וביר קון], [וירקון], mildew Deut 28:22; 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 6:28; Amos 4:9; Hag 2:17

2. paleness / jaundice (of human complexion) (1×) A sickly yellowish pallor or jaundice of the human face, extending the root's color-semantics from diseased crops to diseased complexion. Found only in Jeremiah 30:6, where the prophet asks why every man's hands are on his loins like a woman in labor and all faces have turned to yeraqon. Spanish palidez and English 'paleness' both shift decisively from agricultural to physiological vocabulary, confirming translators recognize a genuine sense boundary between blighted fields and blanched faces. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: to-paleness | es: a-palidez | fr: [לירקון] | de: [לירקון] Jer 30:6

יָרְקְעָם H3421 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yorqe'am: personal name in the genealogy of Judah

Yorqe'am appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:44. The name occurs only once, and its meaning is uncertain. Septuagint manuscripts show diverse renderings (Iaklan, Ierkaān, Ierakam), reflecting the challenge of transmitting unfamiliar Hebrew names through Greek translation. The individual's relationship to better-known figures remains obscure.

(1×) A personal name appearing in the Judahite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 2:44. The single occurrence provides no narrative context beyond genealogical placement. Greek translations diverge significantly, with some versions confusing this name with Rekem mentioned in adjacent verses. The name remains one of many preserved in the extensive tribal records that anchor Israel's clans to their ancestral heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yorqe'am | es: Yorqeam | fr: [ירקעם] | de: [ירקעם] 1Chr 2:44

יַרְקְרַק H3422 Adj-ms (3×)

greenish, yellowish-green, pale green (describing disease spots)

An adjective describing a greenish or yellowish-green color, used exclusively for diagnosing skin disease or house mold in Leviticus. The term appears in Leviticus 13:49 describing greenish spots in a garment (signs of contaminating mildew), and 14:37 (feminine plural form) describing greenish depressions in house walls. Psalm 68:13 uses it metaphorically for the 'green shimmering of gold'—the gleaming, golden-green iridescence of precious metal or possibly the greenish tint of electrum (gold-silver alloy). The Akkadian cognate raḳraḳḳu confirms the color designation. This is diagnostic vocabulary—colors that signal impurity requiring priestly evaluation.

(3×) A pale greenish or yellowish-green hue, particularly as a diagnostic sign of contamination. In the priestly purity codes, greenish spots indicated potentially spreading impurity requiring quarantine and priestly scrutiny. The Psalm's metaphorical use for gold's shimmering suggests a bright, lustrous green-gold rather than sickly pallor. Cross-linguistic glosses vary between 'greenish', 'verdoso/verdâtre' (greenish), and compounds like 'amarillo-verdoso' (greenish-yellow), capturing the color's position between yellow and green. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: greenish, with-green- | es: con-amarillo-verdoso-de, verdosa, verdosas | fr: dans-jaunâtre, verdâtre | de: greenish, mit-grünen- Lev 13:49; Lev 14:37; Ps 68:13

יָרַשׁ H3423 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms / 3ms (232×)

to possess, inherit, dispossess; taking possession of land (Qal), driving out inhabitants (Hifil), receiving inheritance (Qal), becoming poor (Nifal)

The verb yarash (232 occurrences) operates across a semantic field of ownership transfer and territorial possession. The Qal stem (130x) primarily means taking possession of land by entering and settling it, especially in Deuteronomic conquest language, but also covers inheriting property as an heir (18x). The Hifil causative (61x) shifts to dispossession: driving out or expelling inhabitants from their territory by force. The Qal participle (9x) functions nominally as 'heir' or 'possessor.' A surprising Nifal use (4x) means to become poor or impoverished, reflecting the flip side of property transfer. Cognates across Arabic (waritha inherit, tarada expel), Korean (chajihada possess, sangsok-hada inherit), and Swahili (-miliki possess, -fukuza expel) confirm the lexeme's dual territorial/inheritance semantics.

1. Qal: take possession of land (130×) The dominant Qal sense (130 passages) describes taking possession of territory, overwhelmingly in Deuteronomic and conquest narratives (62 times in Deuteronomy, 13 in Joshua). The verb denotes entering, occupying, and settling land. Arabic imtalaka/waritha (in territorial sense), Korean chajihada (to take/occupy), Swahili -miliki (to own) provide cross-linguistic support. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: to-possess-it | es: a-poseerla, para-poseerla | fr: à-posséder-cela | de: zu-besitzen-es Lev 20:24; Num 33:53; Deut 2:31; Deut 3:18; Deut 4:5

2. Hifil: dispossess or drive out (61×) The Hifil causative (61 occurrences) expresses forcible dispossession: driving out the Canaanites, Amorites, or other inhabitants. This sense dominates in conquest contexts (Numbers 14:24, 21:32, 33:52-53). Arabic tarada (to expel), Korean jjochaneda (to drive out), Swahili -fukuza (to expel) confirm the causative shift from taking possession to removing current occupants. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: And-dispossessed, and-dispossessed, and-he-dispossessed | es: Y-desposeerá, Y-desposeyó, despojó | fr: Et-dépossédа, dispossessed, dépossédа | de: And-enteignete, dispossessed, enteignete Num 14:24; Num 21:32; Num 32:39; Num 33:52; Num 33:53

3. Qal: inherit as heir (18×) The Qal stem with human subjects inheriting property or covenant blessing appears 18 times, especially in patriarchal narratives (Gen 15:4-8, 21:10). This family succession sense aligns with Arabic yarithu (to inherit), Korean sangsok-hada (to inherit), Swahili -rithi (to inherit), Hindi virasat mein lena (to take as inheritance). INHERITING AND POSSESSING

en: I-will-possess-it, and-they-possess, shall-inherit | es: hereda, heredaron, heredará | fr: –hériter, –hériter-tu, Je—posséder-cela | de: [יירש], [יירשם], [תירש] Gen 15:4; Gen 15:7; Gen 15:8; Gen 21:10

4. Qal participle: heir or possessor (9×) The Qal participle used substantively (9 passages) denotes an heir or possessor: Genesis 15:3 (Eliezer as heir), Numbers 36:8 (female inheritors), Isaiah 65:9 (heirs of Judah). Arabic warith (heir), Korean sangsokja (inheritor), Swahili mrithi (heir), Hindi waris (heir) show consistent nominalization. HEIR INHERITOR

en: an-inheritor-of, heir, inheriting | es: a-herederos, al-heredero, el-heredero | fr: inheriting, le-heir, possessing | de: [הירש], der-heir, in-Besitz-nehmen Gen 15:3; Num 36:8; Judg 18:7; 2Sam 14:7; Isa 65:9

5. Qal: dispossess persons (4×) Four Qal passages have personal direct objects (people rather than land): dispossessing inhabitants (Deut 2:12, 21-22, Judg 14:15). Though Qal, the semantic overlap with Hifil dispossession is evident. Translations reflect the personal object: dispossessed them, los despojaron, déposséda eux. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-they-dispossessed-them, dispossessed-them, to-dispossess-us | es: los-despojaron, y-los-despojaron, ¿acaso-para-despojarnos | fr: déposséda-eux, et-ils-déposséda-eux, à-déposséder-nous | de: enteignete-ihnen, und-sie-enteignete-ihnen, zu-enteignen-uns Deut 2:12; Deut 2:21; Deut 2:22; Judg 14:15

6. Hifil: cause to inherit or bequeath (4×) The Hifil with the sense 'cause to inherit' or 'give as inheritance' (4 times) appears in contexts where God or a human grants territory as a legacy: Ezra 9:12 (fathers' inheritance), Job 13:26 (inheriting bitter things). Arabic awratha/yuwarrithu (to bequeath), Korean mullyeojuda (to pass down) support this causative-of-inheritance reading. INHERITING AND POSSESSING

en: and-cause-to-inherit, and-make-inherit-me, causes-you-to-possess | es: nos-diste-en-posesión, te-hace-poseer, y-la-dejéis-en-herencia | fr: [והורשתנו], [והורשתם], causes-tu-à-posséder | de: [והורשתם], [ותורישני], causes-du-zu-besitzen Judg 11:24; 2Chr 20:11; Ezra 9:12; Job 13:26

7. Nifal: become poor or impoverished (4×) The Nifal stem (4 passages) introduces a surprising semantic shift: becoming poor or impoverished. Genesis 45:11 (lest you become poor), Proverbs 20:13, 23:21, 30:9 all use Nifal yarash for destitution. Arabic yaftaqiru (to become poor), Korean gananhaejida (to become poor), Swahili kuwa maskini (to become destitute) confirm this as a recognized sense extension from dispossession-of-property to loss-of-wealth. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: I-become-poor, will-become-poor, you-be-dispossessed | es: empobrecerán, empobrezca, empobrezcas | fr: posséder, tu-être-dispossessed | de: [אורש], [יורש], [תורש] Gen 45:11; Prov 20:13; Prov 23:21; Prov 30:9

8. (1×) A single uncertain occurrence at 1 Samuel 2:7: 'the LORD impoverishes' (morish). The Hifil form could mean causing poverty (parallel to 'makes rich'), but the vocalization or textual transmission is debated. Translations render it as 'impoverishes,' fitting the Nifal semantic domain. INHERITING AND POSSESSING

en: impoverishes | es: empobrece | fr: impoverishes | de: impoverishes 1Sam 2:7

9. (1×) Deuteronomy 28:42 presents another hapax: 'the cricket shall possess (yeyaresh) all your trees.' The Piel or alternate form is obscure. Translations diverge: possesses, poseerá, but the context (locust plague) suggests taking over or infesting rather than inheriting, a metaphorical extension of territorial possession. INHERITING AND POSSESSING

en: possesses | es: poseerá | fr: possesses | de: possesses Deut 28:42

יְרֻשָּׁה H3424 N-fs (2×)

Possession; used twice in Numbers 24:18 in Balaam's oracle about Edom and Seir becoming Israel's possession

This feminine noun denotes possession or property, appearing in Balaam's climactic oracle where he prophesies Israel's future dominance over Edom and Seir. The word appears twice in the same verse in parallel constructions, emphasizing the totality of the conquest: both Edom and Seir will become Israel's possession. The prophecy found fulfillment in David's subjugation of Edom, making this oracle significant in understanding Israel's territorial expansion.

(2×) Found exclusively in Numbers 24:18 in prophetic poetry. The double use creates poetic parallelism: "Edom shall be a possession, and Seir shall be a possession." The context is Balaam's final oracle, where despite being hired to curse Israel, he instead prophesies their triumph over surrounding nations. All major translations render it as possession, capturing the territorial conquest implied. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY

en: a-possession | es: posesión | fr: un-possession | de: ein-Besitz Num 24:18

יְרֻשָּׁה H3425 N-fsc / 3ms (14×)

Possession, inheritance; landed property held as a hereditary right, especially territory granted by God.

Concentrating almost entirely in Deuteronomy and the conquest narratives, yerushah names land that belongs to a people by divine grant or ancestral right. Moses tells Israel not to provoke Esau's descendants, because 'I have given Mount Seir to Esau as a possession' (Deut 2:5), and the same formula appears for Moab (2:9) and Ammon (2:19). Joshua 1:15 extends the term to the Transjordanian tribes' allotment. In Jeremiah 32:8 it surfaces in Jeremiah's field purchase – a sign of hope that property rights will be restored. Spanish 'posesion' and French 'heritage' both reflect the blend of ownership and hereditary right the Hebrew conveys.

possession, inheritance (14×) Landed property held as a hereditary possession, particularly territory granted by God. Dominates in Deuteronomy's dispossession accounts: Edom's Seir (Deut 2:5, 12), Moab (2:9), Ammon (2:19), and the Transjordanian allotment (3:20; Josh 1:15). Also in Judges 21:17 for Benjamin's inheritance, Jeremiah 32:8 for a redeemable field, and 2 Chronicles 20:11 for the land God gave Israel. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY en: from-your-possession, his-possession, inheritance-of | es: a-su-posesión, como-posesión, de-tu-heredad | fr: [הירשה], [מירשתך], héritage | de: Besitz, Erbe-von, [הירשה] Deut 2:5; Deut 2:9; Deut 2:12; Deut 2:19

יֵשׁ H3426 Adv (138×)

There is, there are; an existential particle asserting presence or existence, occasionally used as a copula with suffixes or as 'substance.'

Yesh is Hebrew's compact existential particle — a single syllable that does the work of entire verb phrases in other languages. Where English requires 'there is' or 'there are,' and French il y a, Hebrew simply says yesh. It appears in declarative statements ('there is wheat in Egypt,' Gen 42:1), in probing questions (ha-yesh, 'is there?'), in conditional protases ('if there be fifty righteous,' Gen 18:24), and with pronominal suffixes as a kind of copula ('you are,' yeshka). The word's versatility across syntactic frames — declarative, interrogative, conditional, suffixed — masks what is semantically a single assertion: something exists or is present. A lone occurrence in Proverbs 8:21 preserves an archaic nominal sense, 'substance,' where Wisdom promises to give her lovers real, tangible wealth.

1. there is, there are (existence) (129×) The standard existential particle: 'there is, there are,' asserting that something exists or is present — 129 occurrences spanning declarative, interrogative, conditional, and conjunctive contexts. Jacob hears that 'there is grain in Egypt' (Gen 42:1); the LORD is in this place and 'I did not know it' (Gen 28:16). French il y a, Spanish hay, and German es gibt all converge on impersonal existential constructions, while Korean 있다 and Arabic hunaka provide direct equivalents. The particle's negative counterpart is en/eyn ('there is not'), and together they form the primary existential framework of Biblical Hebrew. EXISTENCE PARTICLES

en: is-there, there-is, there-is- | es: está, hay, hay- | fr: est-là, il-y-a, il-y-eut- | de: dort-ist, dort-ist-, es-gab Gen 23:8; Gen 28:16; Gen 33:9; Gen 33:11; Gen 42:1

2. copulative with pronoun suffix (8×) Used with pronominal suffixes as a copula predicating something of a specific person: 'you are,' 'he is,' 'it is' — 8 occurrences in conditional and rhetorical contexts. In Genesis 24:42 the servant says 'if you are [yeshka] dealing kindly'; in Genesis 24:49 'if you are willing'; in Deuteronomy 13:3 the LORD tests 'whether you really [yeshkem] love him.' The suffixed form transforms the impersonal existential into a personal copula, a function that Spanish estas and German du bist render with full conjugated verbs. This is syntactically and semantically distinct from sense 1 because the subject is a specific pronoun rather than an indefinite something. EXISTENCE PARTICLES

en: he-is, is-here, it-is | es: está, estás-tú, esté | fr: cela-est, est-ici, il-est | de: du, du-bist, du-sind Gen 24:42; Gen 24:49; Gen 43:4; Deut 13:3; Deut 29:15

3. (1×) A rare nominal use meaning 'substance, wealth, something real' — a single occurrence in Proverbs 8:21 where Wisdom declares 'to cause those who love me to inherit yesh.' Here the word is not functioning as a particle but as a concrete noun: real, substantial possession. The translation traditions diverge: English 'substance,' Spanish hay (defaulting to existential), French il y a, but the context demands a noun serving as the direct object of 'inherit.' BDB cites this as the lone survival of an older nominal sense, related to the word's etymological core of 'being' or 'that which exists.' EXISTENCE PARTICLES

en: substance | es: hay | fr: il-y-a | de: es-ist Prov 8:21

יָשַׁב H3427 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs / 2fs2 (1092×)

To sit, dwell, inhabit, remain; (Hifil) settle, cause to dwell; (Nifal) be inhabited; (Hofal) be settled.

Yashav is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for being in a place — whether sitting on a throne, dwelling in a city, or simply remaining somewhere. Its semantic range runs from the momentary act of sitting down (Gen 27:19) to permanent habitation of an entire land, and the participle yoshev ('inhabitant of') appears hundreds of times as a near-technical term. The Hifil adds causative force — God seats the solitary in families (Ps 113:8) — while the Nifal and Hofal express the passive: a land that is or will be inhabited. Cognate Arabic wathaba shifted to 'leap,' but South Arabian preserved the sitting sense, and Ethiopic awsaba developed the marital connotation 'to cause to cohabit.'

1. Qal: to dwell, inhabit (937×) The dominant Qal sense: to dwell, reside, inhabit. Covers permanent settlement and the substantival participle yoshev, 'inhabitant(s) of.' German Bewohner, Spanish habitantes, French habitants, Swahili wakaaji all cluster around residential language. Foundational in covenant contexts — 'you shall dwell in the land' (Lev 25:18). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-inhabitants-of, inhabitants-of, the-inhabitants-of | es: habitantes-de, los-habitantes-de | fr: -le-habitants-de, habitants-de, inhabitants-de | de: -der-Bewohner-von, Bewohner-von, der-Bewohner-von Gen 19:25; Exod 15:14; Exod 23:31; Num 32:17; Num 33:52

2. Qal: to sit, sit down (102×) Physical sitting or being seated, distinct from dwelling. Includes sitting down to eat (Gen 27:19), sitting on a throne (1 Kgs 1:46), and sitting in judgment. Korean antta (sit), Spanish sentarse, and German sitzen differentiate this posture sense from residential dwelling in cross-linguistic evidence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-ones-sitting, Who-sit, dwelt | es: Los-que-habitan, habitó, los-que-están-sentados | fr: -le-les-assis, a-s'assit, habiter | de: -der-die-sitzend, der-die-sitzend, er-sass Gen 27:19; Lev 15:4; Lev 15:6; Lev 15:20; Lev 15:22

3. Qal: to remain, stay (27×) To remain, stay, or wait — a temporary sense lacking the permanence of dwelling. Abraham tells his servants 'stay here with the donkey' (Gen 22:5). French demeurer, German bleiben, and Spanish permanecer capture this interim quality, distinguishing it from both settled habitation and mere sitting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-I-stayed, and-he-stayed, and-remained | es: Siéntate, Y-permaneció, habitaba | fr: demeure, elle-devra-remain, et-il-demeura | de: doch-es-bliebfest, du-soll-bleiben, sie-soll-bleiben Gen 22:5; Gen 49:24; Exod 16:29; Exod 24:14; Lev 8:35

4. Hifil: to cause to dwell, settle (18×) Hifil (causative): to settle someone, cause to dwell, seat. God raises the poor and seats them with princes (1 Sam 2:8). Idiomatic for arranging a marriage (settling a woman in one's household). Arabic askana (Form IV, cause to dwell) and Korean salge hada show parallel causative derivation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-who-caused-me-to-sit], and-he-seats-them, and-he-settled | es: (y-me-hizo-sentar), Para-hacerlo-sentar, Y-haced-sentar | fr: [and-qui-causa-moi-à-sit], et-habiter, et-habiter-eux | de: [and-wer-caused-mich-zu-sit], sass, und-du-settled 1Sam 2:8; 1Kgs 2:24; 1Kgs 21:9; 1Kgs 21:10

5. Niphal: to be inhabited (6×) Nifal (passive): to be inhabited. Used in prophetic oracles about cities and lands — Ezekiel's 'the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste' (Ezek 12:20). Spanish habitada, French habitee confirm the passive reading. The focus falls on the place rather than its residents. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [K], are-inhabited, inhabited | es: (habitadas), [habitada], habitada | fr:

habita, habiter | de: inhabited, wohnen Exod 16:35; Jer 22:6; Ezek 12:20; Ezek 26:19

6. Hofal: to be made to dwell (2×) Hofal (passive causative): to be made to dwell or settled. The rarest stem, appearing in Isaiah's woe oracle against land-grabbers (Isa 5:8) and the promise that ruined cities 'shall be inhabited' (Isa 44:26). Represents the double passive of the Hifil — being settled by another's agency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-you-are-made-to-dwell, she-will-be-inhabited | es: será-habitada, y-seréis-hechos-habitar | fr: et-habiter, habiter | de: und-wohnen, wohnen Isa 5:8; Isa 44:26

יֶשֶׁבְאָב H3428 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yeshevav: personal name, Levite of the fourteenth priestly course

Yeshevav was a Levite who headed the fourteenth course of priests during David's reorganization of temple service (1 Chronicles 24:13). The priestly courses rotated responsibilities for worship and sacrifice, ensuring regular service throughout the year. His inclusion marks him as a significant figure in Israel's liturgical leadership.

(1×) A Levitical leader of the fourteenth priestly course according to 1 Chronicles 24:13. The name appears with a prepositional prefix ("for Yeshevav") in the list of David's priestly divisions. Septuagint variants (Gelba, Iesbaal) suggest textual uncertainty. This organizational structure ensured continuous temple worship through rotating assignments among twenty-four priestly families. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: for-Yeshevav | es: para-Yeshebeab | fr: [לישבאב] | de: [לישבאב] 1Chr 24:13

יֹשֵׁב בַּשֶּׁבֶת H3429 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yoshev-Bassheveth: name or title of one of David's elite warriors, textually problematic

This designation appears in 2 Samuel 23:8 for the chief of David's mighty men. The text is notoriously difficult, and scholars suggest various emendations. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:11 has Yashobeam, which may represent the original name. Some propose reading "Ish-bosheth," another euphemistic substitution replacing Baal with "shame."

(1×) A designation for the chief of David's elite warriors in 2 Samuel 23:8, though the text is problematic and likely corrupt. Parallel accounts use Yashobeam, and textual scholars suggest emending to Ish-bosheth. Septuagint readings (Iebosthe, Iesbaal) reflect the textual confusion. Despite uncertainty about the exact name, the individual's position as first among David's mighty men indicates extraordinary military prowess and leadership. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Josheb-basshebeth | es: Yoshev-ba-Shevet | fr: Josheb-basshebeth | de: Josheb-basshebeth 2Sam 23:8

יִשְׁבִי בְנֹב H3430 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Ishbi-benob, a Philistine giant who nearly killed David (2 Sam 21:16); textually problematic

This name appears in the narrative of David's later battles with Philistine giants, where an aging David nearly falls to this warrior before Abishai rescues him. However, the text shows Ketiv/Qere variation, and many scholars believe it's corrupt. BDB proposes reading "and they dwelt in Gob," moving it to verse 15, which would eliminate the personal name entirely. The uncertainty reflects the textual difficulties in this section of 2 Samuel.

(2×) Attested in 2 Samuel 21:16 with significant textual problems. The name literally means "dweller in Nob," but this makes little sense in context. Multilingual traditions show the confusion: Spanish offers both Yishbi and Yishvo forms in brackets, French preserves the Ketiv reading, and commentators widely suspect corruption. If genuine, it marks a significant moment when David's mortality became apparent to his men. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: [k] in-Nob, and-Ishbi in-Nob | es: (y-Yishbi) en-Nov, [y-Yishvo] en-Nov | fr: [k] in-Nob, et-Ishbi in-Nob | de: [k] in-Nob 2Sam 21:16

יִשְׁבַּח H3431 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yishbach: personal name in the genealogy of Judah

Yishbach appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:17. The name occurs only once, with no narrative context provided. Septuagint manuscripts show widely divergent renderings (Mareth, Iesaba, Iasaphat), indicating significant textual difficulty or corruption in transmission.

(1×) A personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:17 among the descendants of Judah. The single occurrence offers no details about the individual's life or significance. Greek translations vary dramatically, suggesting either textual corruption or scribal confusion with other names. The preservation of such names in genealogical lists reflects Israel's commitment to maintaining tribal and family records across generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yishbach | es: Yisbaj | fr: [ישבח] | de: [ישבח] 1Chr 4:17

יְשֻׁבִי H3432 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

ha-Yashuvi: the Jashubite, gentilic designation for descendants of Jashub

This gentilic adjective designates the clan descended from Jashub, son of Issachar. In Numbers 26:24, it appears with the definite article as a collective noun referring to the Jashubite clan during the wilderness census. Such gentilic forms connected families to their ancestral progenitor and organized Israel's tribal structure.

(1×) A gentilic designation meaning "the Jashubite," appearing in Numbers 26:24 to identify the clan descended from Jashub of Issachar. The definite article marks this as a collective reference to the family group counted in the second wilderness census. Translations render this as "the Jashubites" or similar plural forms, indicating the clan's identity within Issachar's tribal divisions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Jashubite | es: los-yasubitas | fr: le-Jashubite | de: der-Jashubite Num 26:24

יָשֻׁבִי לָחֶם H3433 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Yashuvi-Lechem: personal or place name in Judah's genealogy, possibly meaning 'returner of bread'

Yashuvi-Lechem appears in 1 Chronicles 4:22 in a genealogical context related to Judah. The name is compound, possibly meaning "returner of bread" or indicating someone associated with Bethlehem (house of bread). The Septuagint renders it as a verbal phrase "they returned to themselves Leem," suggesting ancient interpretive uncertainty about whether this is a proper name or a descriptive phrase.

(1×) A name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:22 within Judah's genealogical records. The compound form combines elements suggesting "return" and "bread," though whether this is a personal name, place name, or descriptive phrase remains debated. The Septuagint's verbal rendering indicates ancient translators struggled with interpretation. The single occurrence provides insufficient context to resolve the ambiguity definitively. BETHLEHEM TOWN

en: and-Yashuvi-Lechem | es: y-Yasubi-Lejem | fr: [וישבי לחם] | de: [וישבי לחם] 1Chr 4:22

יְשָׁבְעָם H3434 N-proper-ms (3×)

Yashoveam/Jashobeam, one of David's mighty men and military commander

A personal name borne by one of David's most renowned warriors, appearing in three Chronicles passages: 1 Chronicles 11:11 (among the Three mighty men), 12:7 (a Benjaminite who joined David at Ziklag—possibly a different person), and 27:2 (commander of the first monthly division). The name corresponds to the problematic phrase יֹשֵׁב בַּשֶּׁבֶת in 2 Samuel 23:8, which scholars widely emend to Ishbaal/Ishbosheth. Some scholars suggest reading אִישְׁבַּעַל throughout. The Greek variants (Ιεσεβαδα, Ιεσσεβααλ, Ισβααμ) reflect textual uncertainty. Despite the confusion, Chronicles consistently portrays Yashoveam as a premier warrior and commander.

(3×) A heroic personal name associated with David's elite warriors. Whether one individual or two bearing the same name, Yashoveam represents the military leadership that secured David's kingdom. The textual complications with the parallel Samuel text and scholarly proposals to read Ishbaal show how proper names could become corrupted or deliberately altered (especially names containing 'Baal'). The Spanish and French glosses standardize to Jasobeam/Yasobeam, following common transliteration practice. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yashoveam, and-Yashovam | es: Jasobeam, Yasobeam, y-Yasobeam | fr: [וישבעם], [ישבעם] | de: [וישבעם], [ישבעם] 1Chr 11:11; 1Chr 12:7; 1Chr 27:2

יִשְׁבָּק H3435 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ishbak/Yishbaq, son of Abraham and Keturah (Gen 25:2; 1 Chr 1:32)

This personal name designates one of Abraham's six sons by Keturah, his wife or concubine after Sarah's death. As an eponymous ancestor, Ishbak likely represents a northern Arabian tribe, though no clear identification has been established. The name appears in both the Genesis and Chronicles genealogies of Abraham's non-Israelite descendants, who received gifts and were sent eastward, away from Isaac.

(2×) Found in Genesis 25:2 and 1 Chronicles 1:32 in parallel genealogies. One occurrence includes a conjunctive prefix ("and Yishbaq"), reflecting its position in the list of Keturah's sons. The Septuagint renders it Iesbōk (with variant Sobak in Chronicles), showing standard Greek transliteration. These sons of Keturah represent the genealogical explanation for various Arabian peoples known to ancient Israel. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ishbak, and-Yishbaq | es: Yishbaq, y-Yisbaq | fr: Ishbak, [ויִשבק] | de: Jischbak, [וישבק] Gen 25:2; 1Chr 1:32

יִשְׁבְּקָשָׁה H3436 N-proper-ms (2×)

Yoshbeqashah, son of Heman the temple musician (1 Chr 25:4, 24)

This personal name belongs to one of Heman's fourteen sons who served in temple music ministry during David's reign. The name appears both in the initial roster of Heman's sons and in the subsequent lot assignments determining their service order. The Septuagint shows considerable variation (Ieibaskatan, Bakata, Iesboka), reflecting the challenges of rendering this unusual compound name in Greek. Like his brothers, Yoshbeqashah represents the institutionalization of worship music in the Davidic temple preparations.

(2×) Attested in 1 Chronicles 25:4 (genealogical list) and 25:24 (lot assignment). One occurrence has a prepositional prefix ("for Yoshbeqashah"), indicating the seventeenth lot in the musical service rotation. The name's length and form are unusual even among Heman's sons, many of whom bear compound or theophoric names that may encode prophetic or worshipful declarations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yoshbeqashah, for-Yoshbeqashah | es: Josbecasa, para-Josbecasa | fr: [וישבקשה], [לישבקשה] | de: [וישבקשה], [לישבקשה] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:24

יָשׁוּב H3437 N-proper-ms (4×)

Jashub, name of (1) a son of Issachar and (2) an Israelite with a foreign wife

Jashub appears as both a clan name in Issachar's genealogy and an individual name in Ezra's list of those who married foreign wives. The name means 'he returns,' and Isaiah uses a similar form (Shear-jashub, 'a remnant shall return') as his son's symbolic name. The Ketiv-Qere variations in the text show scribal uncertainty about the precise spelling, with Chronicles preserving alternate forms.

(4×) Jashub is identified as a son of Issachar, giving his name to the Jashubite clan (Num 26:24), with parallel genealogical records in Chronicles showing textual variation between Jashub (Qere) and Jashib (Ketiv) in 1Chronicles 7:1. A different individual named Jashub appears among those who had taken foreign wives during the exile (Ezra 10:29). The Septuagint renders the name as Iasoub, while the multilingual glosses show Spanish Yasub/Yashuv, French à Jashub, and German er kehrt zurück (interpreting the meaning 'he returns' rather than transliterating). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yashuv, [ketiv], to-Jashub | es: (Yasub), De-Yasub, Yashuv | fr: [ישוב], [ישיב], à-Jashub | de: [ישוב], [ישיב], er-kehrt-zurueck Num 26:24; 1Chr 7:1; Ezra 10:29

יִשְׁוָה H3438 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Ishvah/Yishvah, son of Asher in the tribal genealogies (Gen 46:17; 1 Chr 7:30)

This personal name designates one of Asher's sons listed in both the descent to Egypt narrative and the Chronicles genealogies. Unlike his brothers Ishvi and Beriah, Ishvah receives no further mention or descendants in the biblical record, suggesting his line either died out early or was absorbed into other Asherite clans. The name appears with a conjunctive prefix in both occurrences, integrating it into the genealogical lists.

(2×) Found in Genesis 46:17 and 1 Chronicles 7:30 in parallel genealogies of Asher. Both instances include the conjunction "and," placing Ishvah second in the list of Asher's sons. The Septuagint variations (Iessai, Isua, Iēsous) show the transliteration challenges, with some forms coincidentally resembling the name Jesus. The lack of descendants suggests Ishvah's line was not prominent in later Asherite history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ishvah, and-Yishvah | es: y-Yishvá, y-Yisva | fr: [וישוה], et-Ishvah | de: [וישוה], und-Jischwa Gen 46:17; 1Chr 7:30

יְשׁוֹחָיָה H3439 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yeshochayah: personal name in Simeon's genealogy, etymology uncertain

Yeshochayah was a leader in the tribe of Simeon listed in 1 Chronicles 4:36. The name's meaning remains uncertain, though it may incorporate a theophoric element. Septuagint manuscripts render it as Iasouia or Iesouia, preserving the name without attempting translation.

(1×) A Simeonite leader mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:36 among the tribal genealogies. The name appears only once, with no narrative context provided. Greek translations (Iasouia, Iesouia) maintain the name form, indicating its character as an untranslatable proper noun. The individual is listed among Simeonite princes who expanded their territory during Hezekiah's reign. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yeshochayah | es: y-Yesojaya | fr: [וישוחיה] | de: [וישוחיה] 1Chr 4:36

יִשְׁוִי H3440 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Ishvi, name of (1) a son of Asher and (2) a son of Saul

Ishvi appears as the name of two biblical figures: one of Asher's sons who founded a clan, and one of Saul's sons. Textual scholars suggest that the second Ishvi may be an alternate form of Ish-bosheth, Saul's son who briefly ruled after Saul's death. The name appears in tribal genealogies and royal family lists, preserved with minor spelling variations across parallel biblical passages.

(4×) Ishvi son of Asher appears in Jacob's family genealogy going down to Egypt (Gen 46:17), giving his name to the Ishvite clan in the wilderness census (Num 26:44), with parallel records in Chronicles (1Chr 7:30). A second Ishvi appears as Saul's son (1Sam 14:49), though scholars note that Chronicles lists Ish-bosheth/Eshbaal instead in this position (1Chr 8:33; 9:39), suggesting possible textual confusion or alternate names. The Greek renders variously as Iesoul, Iesoui, Ioul, while Spanish y-Yishvi, French et-Ishvi, and German und-Jischwi preserve phonetic approximations with conjunction markers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ishvi, and-Yishvi, to-Ishvi | es: de-Isví, e-Yishvi, y-Yishvi | fr: [ויִשׁוּ], et-Ishvi, et-Yishvi | de: [ויִשׁוּ], und-Jischwi, und-Yishvi Gen 46:17; Num 26:44; 1Sam 14:49; 1Chr 7:30

יִשְׁוִי H3441 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
ha-Yishvi: the Ishvite, gentilic designation for descendants of Ishvi
This gentilic adjective identifies the clan descended from Ishvi, son of Asher. In Numbers 26:44, it appears with the definite article as a collective noun during the wilderness census. The form follows the standard pattern for clan designations, connecting descendants to their patriarchal ancestor through a distinctive suffix.

(1×) A gentilic term meaning "the Ishvite," appearing in Numbers 26:44 to designate the clan of Ishvi within Asher's tribal structure. The definite article indicates collective reference to all members of this family group. Translations render this as "the Ishvites," marking the clan's identity in the census lists that organized Israel's tribes for inheritance and military purposes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Ishvite | es: los-isvitas | fr: le-Ishvite | de: der-Ishvite Num 26:44

יְהוֹשׁוּעַ H3442 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (29×)
Jeshua/Yeshua — a post-exilic form of Joshua meaning 'he saves,' borne by the high priest and several others
Yeshua is the later contracted form of Yehoshua (Joshua), carrying the meaning 'YHWH saves' or 'he is salvation.' Though the full name famously designates Moses' successor, this shorter form appears 29 times in post-exilic literature referring to distinct individuals. The most prominent is Jeshua son of Jozadak, the high priest who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel and led the restoration of altar worship and temple rebuilding (Ezra 2:2; 3:2; Neh 7:7). Haggai and Zechariah know this same priest as Yehoshua. Other bearers include a priestly family head in David's time (1 Chr 24:11), a Levite distributor of tithes under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:15), and several clan heads listed in the return census (Ezra 2:6, 36, 40). The Septuagint renders the name as Iesous — the identical Greek form later applied to Jesus of Nazareth, a connection noted already in Matthew 1:21.

Yeshua / Jeshua (proper noun) (29×) A post-exilic Hebrew proper name meaning 'he saves,' the contracted form of Yehoshua. Most prominently designates the high priest Jeshua son of Jozadak, who led the restoration of sacrifice after the exile (Ezra 2:2; 3:2; Neh 12:1). Also borne by a priestly division head (1 Chr 24:11), a Levitical administrator under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:15), and several clan names in the return census. The LXX form Iesous links it directly to the name Jesus (Matt 1:21). JOSHUA JESHUA NAMES
en: Jeshua, Yeshua, and-Jeshua | es: Jesuá, Jesúa, Josué | fr: Josué, et-Josué | de: Jeschua, [ויִשׁוּע] 1Chr 24:11; 2Chr 31:15; Ezra 2:2; Ezra 2:6; Ezra 2:36

יֵשׁוּעַ H3443 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yeshua (Aramaic): personal name equivalent to Hebrew Yeshua/Joshua, meaning 'Yahweh saves'
This is the Aramaic form of the name Joshua/Yeshua, appearing in Ezra 5:2 for the high priest who returned from Babylonian exile. The name means "Yahweh is salvation" and was common in the post-exilic period. This Yeshua partnered with Zerubbabel in rebuilding the temple, playing a crucial role in restoration leadership.

(1×) The Aramaic form of Yeshua/Joshua appearing in Ezra 5:2, designating the high priest who led worship restoration after the exile. The name's meaning "Yahweh saves" carried particular resonance for a community experiencing divine rescue and return. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the name as Yeshua, Jeshua, or Joshua, recognizing it as the Aramaic equivalent of the more common Hebrew form found throughout the restoration literature. JOSHUA JESHUA NAMES
en: and-Yeshua | es: y-Jesúa | fr: et-Josué | de: und-Jeschua Ezra 5:2

יְשׁוּעָה H3444 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (77×)
Salvation, deliverance — God's rescue from danger or enemies; in the plural, his repeated mighty acts of victory.
Yeshu'ah is one of the great theological words of the Hebrew Bible, naming the reality that God rescues his people. At the Red Sea, Moses declares 'Stand firm and see the yeshu'ah of the LORD' (Exod 14:13), and Hannah sings 'my heart exults in the LORD; my horn is exalted in your yeshu'ah' (1 Sam 2:1). Spanish salvación, French salut, and German Heil all point to the same core: divine rescue that is both historical event and spiritual reality. When the plural yeshu'ot appears — as in Ps 18:50 and 2 Sam 22:51 — it highlights God's repeated, concrete victories on behalf of his anointed king.

1. salvation, deliverance (67×) Divine salvation or deliverance viewed as a single encompassing reality — God's act of rescue from danger, distress, or enemies. All target languages converge: spa. salvación, fra. salut, deu. Heil. Moses proclaims it at the Red Sea (Exod 14:13); the psalmist clings to it in Ps 62:2. The word bridges external rescue and inner spiritual hope, as in Gen 49:18 ('I wait for your yeshu'ah, O LORD'). SALVATION (NOUN)
en: Salvation, in-Your-salvation, in-your-salvation | es: Salvación, en-tu-salvación, la-salvacion | fr: dans-Ton-salut, dans-ton-salut, salut | de: Heil, [ישׁועתה], [ישׁועה] Exod 14:13; Exod 15:2; 1Sam 2:1; 2Chr 20:17; Job 13:16

2. victories, acts of deliverance (10×) Concrete, repeated acts of divine deliverance — victories wrought by God, typically in the plural form yeshu'ot. Spanish salvaciones and the plural glosses in other languages mark this shift from the abstract concept to the enumerable mighty deeds. David praises God as the one who gives 'great victories (yeshu'ot) to his king' (2 Sam 22:51; Ps 18:50), and the psalmist recalls them as grounds for hope (Ps 42:5, 11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: giving, salvations, salvations-for | es: salvaciones, salvaciones-de, salvación-de | fr: salut, salvations-de | de: Heil, Heil-, salvations-von 2Sam 22:51; Ps 18:50; Ps 28:8; Ps 42:5; Ps 42:11

יְשַׁח H3445 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (1×)
yeshach: emptiness, gnawing hunger; internal emptiness from unsatisfied appetite
This rare noun appears to denote the emptiness or gnawing sensation of hunger. In Micah 6:14, it stands parallel to "you will eat but not be satisfied," suggesting internal emptiness despite eating. The term captures the futility of consumption without satiation, part of covenant curses for disobedience. The meaning is conjectured primarily from context.

(1×) A noun denoting internal emptiness or the gnawing sensation of hunger, appearing in Micah 6:14. The context describes covenant curses where eating brings no satisfaction, and this term captures the ongoing sense of emptiness within. Translations vary ("emptiness," "wasting," "hunger"), reflecting the word's rarity and interpretive difficulty. The parallel structure suggests futile consumption as judgment for covenant breaking. HUNGER AND FAMINE
en: and-your-emptiness | es: y-tu-vacío | fr: et-amaigrissement | de: [וישׁחך] Mic 6:14

יִצְחָק H3446 N-proper-ms (4×)
Isaac, son of Abraham and Sarah, father of Jacob and Esau, patriarch of Israel
Isaac, whose name means 'he laughs,' was the promised son born to Abraham and Sarah in their old age. His birth fulfilled God's covenant promise and occasioned laughter—both Sarah's incredulous laughter at the announcement and her joyful laughter at his birth. The second patriarch in Israel's lineage, Isaac passed the covenant blessing to Jacob rather than Esau, continuing the line through which all nations would be blessed. The prophets and psalmists invoke 'the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob' as the covenant formula identifying Israel's deity.

(4×) In these four passages, the name appears in its alternate spelling Yishaq rather than the more common Yitshaq, appearing in Psalm 105:9 ('the oath he swore to Isaac'), Jeremiah 33:26 (promising restoration to Abraham's, Isaac's, and Jacob's offspring), and twice in Amos where 'the high places of Isaac' and 'the house of Isaac' serve as poetic designations for the northern kingdom Israel (Amos 7:9, 16). The Septuagint consistently renders it Isaak, while the multilingual glosses show Spanish Isaac/Yitschaq, French Isaac, and German zu-Yitschaq, with some languages transliterating and others using the traditional anglicized form. ISAAC PATRIARCH NAME

en: Yitschaq, to-Yitschaq | es: Isaac, Yitschaq, a-Yitzjaq | fr: [יִשְׂחָק], attente, à-Isaac | de: [יִשְׂחָק], zu-Yitschaq Ps 105:9; Jer 33:26; Amos 7:9; Amos 7:16

יְשַׁט H3447 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

extend, hold out, stretch forth (the golden scepter)

A late Hebrew verb (Hiphil stem only) meaning to extend or hold out something toward someone, appearing exclusively in the book of Esther. All three occurrences describe the Persian king extending the golden scepter toward someone: Esther 4:11 explains that anyone approaching the king uninvited will die unless the king extends the scepter; 5:2 narrates the king extending it to Esther; 8:4 repeats the gesture. The verb derives from post-biblical Hebrew and Aramaic (Aph. אוֹשֵׁיט) and may be related to Arabic ´ (to penetrate into the middle). The scepter-extending became the crucial gesture determining life or death in the Persian court as portrayed in Esther.

(3×) The specific act of extending the golden scepter—a gesture of royal favor granting audience and clemency. This late Hebrew term captures a specific piece of Persian court protocol that the Esther narrative makes dramatically central. The king's extension of the scepter transforms certain death into gracious audience, making this verb the hinge of Esther's risky intercession. Multilingual glosses focus on the extending/stretching action ('extender', 'extended', 'יושיט'), recognizing the gesture's formal, ritual character. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-extended, extends- | es: Y-extendió, extienda, y-extendió | fr: [ויושט], [יושיט] | de: [ויושט], [יושיט] Esth 4:11; Esth 5:2; Esth 8:4

יִשַׁי H3448 Prep-l | N-proper-ms (42×)

Jesse — the Bethlehemite father of King David, grandson of Ruth and Boaz

Yishai (Jesse) is the father of David and grandson of Boaz and Ruth (Ruth 4:17, 22), anchoring the royal line in the story of Moabite redemption. His name appears 42 times, predominantly in 1 Samuel 16-17 where Samuel is sent to anoint a king from his house. The patronymic ben-Yishai ('son of Jesse') becomes a loaded political designation: Saul uses it dismissively (1 Sam 20:27, 30; 22:7-8), and Sheba's rebel cry 'we have no portion in the son of Jesse' (2 Sam 20:1) echoes into the northern secession. Isaiah's 'shoot from the stump of Jesse' (11:1, 10) transformed the name into a messianic symbol.

Jesse (father of King David) (42×) The proper name Yishai, the Bethlehemite father of David, descended from Boaz and Ruth (Ruth 4:17, 22). All 42 occurrences denote this single individual. Functions as narrative identifier (1 Sam 16:1-3) and politically charged patronymic — Saul's dismissive 'son of Jesse' (1 Sam 22:7-8) contrasts with the messianic 'root of Jesse' (Isa 11:10). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jesse, Yishai | es: Yishai, a-Yishai | fr: Isaï | de: Isai Ruth 4:17; Ruth 4:22; 1Sam 16:1; 1Sam 16:3

יִשִׁיָּהוּ H3449 N-proper-ms (7×)

Ishijah (Yishshiyyah/Yishshiyyahu), a proper name meaning 'YHWH lends/forgets not,' borne by several Levites and warriors

Ishijah (or Jishijah) is a Levitical and priestly name appearing across Chronicles and Ezra, borne by at least four individuals. A warrior from Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag bears the longer form Yishshiyyahu (1 Chr 12:6). Among the Issacharites, a clan leader carries the name (1 Chr 7:3). Two Levites — a Kohathite descendant listed in the temple service rosters (1 Chr 23:20; 24:25) and another in the priestly division (1 Chr 24:21) — also share it. Finally, one Ishijah appears among those who had taken foreign wives and agreed to put them away (Ezra 10:31). The name's meaning, 'Yah lends' or 'Yah forgets not,' suits its bearers' roles in Israel's worship and military life.

Yishshiyyah / Ishijah (proper noun) (7×) The proper masculine name Yishshiyyah/Yishshiyyahu (יִשִׁיָּה / יִשִׁיָּהוּ), meaning 'YHWH will lend' or 'Yah forgets not,' borne by multiple individuals: a Benjaminite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:6), a chief of Issachar (1 Chr 7:3), Kohathite Levites in the temple service (1 Chr 23:20; 24:21, 25), and a layman who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:31). Spanish offers 'Ishiya/Isias' while German and French leave the Hebrew forms largely untransliterated, reflecting the name's obscurity outside specialist reference works. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yishshiyah, and-Yishiyahu, and-Yishshiyah | es: Ishiya, Isías, Yishiyah | fr: Jishija, et-Jishija | de: [ויישיה], [וישיהו], [ישיה] 1Chr 7:3; 1Chr 12:7; 1Chr 23:20; 1Chr 24:21; 1Chr 24:25

יְשִׁימִאֵל H3450 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (1×)

Yesimi'el: personal name in Simeon's genealogy, possibly meaning 'God establishes'

Yesimi'el was a Simeonite prince mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:36. The name likely means "God establishes" or "El establishes," combining a verbal element with the divine name. He appears among the leaders who expanded Simeonite territory during the prosperous reign of Hezekiah.

(1×) A Simeonite leader listed in 1 Chronicles 4:36, whose name appears to be theophoric, meaning "God establishes." The individual is mentioned among princes who sought new pasture lands and successfully conquered territory from the Hamites. Septuagint rendering as Ismaēl suggests possible confusion with the more common name Ishmael. The name reflects confidence in divine establishment and support. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Yesimi'el | es: y-Yesimiel | fr: [וישימאל] | de: [וישימאל] 1Chr 4:36

יְשִׁימָה H3451 N-fp (1×)

yeshimoth: desolations, wastes; Ketiv reading possibly indicating ruin or death

This plural noun form appears only in the Ketiv (written text) of Psalm 55:15, with the Qere (read text) offering a different reading. The term seems to denote desolations or wastes, possibly an intensive plural meaning "utter desolation." Most modern translations follow the Qere's reading "let death come deceitfully," though some early versions support the Ketiv.

(1×) A plural noun found in the Ketiv text of Psalm 55:15, apparently meaning "desolations" or "wastes." The Qere substitutes a different reading ("let death deceive them"), creating textual ambiguity. Scholars debate whether to follow the written or oral tradition. The term may relate to place names like Beth-jeshimoth, suggesting wilderness or desolate regions. The context involves imprecations against enemies who have betrayed trust. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: [ketiv:desolations] | es: [ketiv] | fr: désolation | de: [ketiv:desolations] Ps 55:15

יְשִׁימוֹן H3452 Prep-b | N-msc (13×)

A desolate waste or wilderness; often used as a quasi-proper noun for the Jeshimon desert region near the Dead Sea.

Derived from the root meaning 'to be desolate,' this noun paints a vivid picture of barren, uninhabitable terrain. With the definite article, it functions almost as a place name for the Jeshimon, the stark wilderness region overlooking the Dead Sea where David hid from Saul (1 Sam 23:19, 24; 26:1, 3). Numbers uses it for the wasteland visible from the heights of Pisgah and Peor (Num 21:20; 23:28). Without the article, it carries a more abstract poetic force, evoking primordial desolation in the 'howling waste' of Deuteronomy 32:10 or God's power to make rivers flow through the wasteland (Isa 43:19-20). German 'der Jeshimon' preserves the toponym, while Spanish 'el desierto' and 'la soledad' capture both the geographic and emotional dimensions.

1. wilderness, wasteland (specific locale) (12×) The concrete, often semi-proper usage designating specific desert regions, particularly the Jeshimon wilderness near the Dead Sea. Nearly all occurrences take the definite article, functioning as a recognizable geographic reference. The Samuel narratives place David in 'the Jeshimon' as a fugitive (1 Sam 23:19, 24; 26:1, 3), while Numbers locates it as the vista from Pisgah (21:20) and Peor (23:28). The Psalms extend the locative sense to describe wandering 'in the wilderness, in a wasteland' (Ps 107:4). Spanish consistently uses 'el desierto' or 'el yermo,' French employs transliterations alongside 'désolation,' and German preserves 'der Jeshimon' as a topographic marker. VENGEANCE AND RETRIBUTION

en: in-a-wasteland, in-the-desert, in-the-wasteland | es: el-desierto, en-el-yermo, en-la-soledad | fr: [בישימן], [בישמן], dans-désolation | de: [בישימן], [בישמן], der-Jeshimon Num 21:20; Num 23:28; 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 23:24; 1Sam 26:1

2. desolation, waste (abstract) (1×) The abstract, poetic sense of utter desolation and barrenness, stripped of geographic specificity. Deuteronomy 32:10 describes finding Israel 'in a howling waste' (yeshimon), where the parallelism with 'desert land' and 'howling wilderness' underscores the word's evocative, non-locative force. English renders 'desolation,' Spanish 'soledad,' French 'désolation,' and German 'Verwüstung,' all emphasizing the emotional and spiritual emptiness of the landscape rather than any particular place. Isaiah 43:19-20 similarly uses the word for the generic wasteland that God will transform with rivers and springs. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: desolation | es: soledad | fr: desolation | de: Verwuestung Deut 32:10

יְשִׁישׁ H3453 Adj-ms (4×)

aged, elderly; advanced in years (used only in Job)

This adjective appears exclusively in the book of Job to describe elderly persons, those advanced in years. Job uses it to contrast young and old, noting that both gray-haired elders and the aged stood in his assembly, or proverbially claiming that wisdom resides 'among the aged.' Young Elihu uses it to describe why he waited respectfully to speak, deferring to those who were 'aged' while he was 'young in days.'

(4×) The term appears four times in Job's poetry describing elderly individuals. Job declares that 'among aged men is wisdom' (Job 12:12), contrasting long years with understanding. He recalls how 'the aged arose and stood' when he entered the assembly (Job 29:8, opposite 'young men'). Elihu explains his reticence: 'You are aged, and I am young in days' (Job 32:6), and notes that even 'the gray-haired and aged' are among Job's companions (Job 15:10, parallel to 'very old'). Spanish ancianos and French vieux track the 'elderly/old' sense across Romance languages, while German leaves the participial forms in Hebrew brackets, showing translation difficulty with this rare term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: aged, and-aged-ones, are-aged | es: En-los-ancianos, anciano, ancianos | fr: dans-vieux, et-vieux, vieux | de: [בישישים], [וישישים], [ישיש] Job 12:12; Job 15:10; Job 29:8; Job 32:6

יְשִׁישַׁי H3454 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yeshishai: personal name, a Gileadite mentioned in tribal genealogies

Yeshishai was a Gileadite listed in the genealogical records of Gad in 1 Chronicles 5:14. The name appears only once, with no additional narrative information provided. His inclusion in the eastern tribal genealogies connects him to the Transjordan settlements of Israel.

(1×) A Gileadite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 5:14 among the genealogical records of Gad. The single occurrence offers no biographical details beyond tribal affiliation. The name's meaning is uncertain, and no Greek translation variants are provided to suggest alternative readings. He belongs to the lineage of Israelites who settled east of the Jordan River in Gilead's territory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yeshishai | es: Yesisay | fr: [ישישי] | de: [ישישי] 1Chr 5:14

יְשֻׂם H3455 Conj-w / V-QalPass-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

was placed, was set (passive form of 'to place/set')

A passive verb form (Qal passive) meaning 'was placed' or 'was set,' appearing in Genesis at two key moments (with one textual variant). Genesis 24:33 (Ketiv reading) describes food being set before Abraham's servant at Laban's house, and 50:26 records that Joseph's body was placed in a coffin in Egypt. The form represents an alternative spelling/conjugation of the common verb שׂוּם/שִׂים (to put, place, set). The Ketiv/Qere variants and the verb's relationship to the standard שׂוּם show the fluidity in biblical Hebrew verb forms, especially for this high-frequency verb that had multiple stems and spellings.

(3×) The passive state of being placed or set in position. Genesis 24:33's food being set before the servant marks the beginning of hospitality and negotiation over Rebekah's betrothal. Joseph's placement in a coffin (50:26) solemnly closes Genesis—the last patriarch rests in Egypt rather than the promised land, setting up Exodus. The glosses ('was placed', 'fue puesto', 'était placer') uniformly capture the passive voice, showing this was recognized as a form of the common placement verb. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: and-placed, and-was-set | es: [y-fue-puesto], y-fue-puesto | fr: et-plaça, et-était-placer | de: und-er-wurde-gelegt, und-gesetzt-wurde Gen 24:33; Gen 50:26

יְשַׁם H3456 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (4×)

to be desolate, laid waste (synonym of שָׁמַם, found only in J, E, and Ezekiel)

This verb, a synonym of the more common shamem, describes land becoming desolate or laid waste. It appears in contexts of judgment and devastation—the land of Egypt filled with dead frogs, the land made desolate by drought, the high places destroyed, the land stripped of inhabitants. Ezekiel particularly favors this term in his oracles against Israel and surrounding nations, using it to depict the aftermath of divine judgment.

(4×) The verb appears in Qal imperfect and consecutive forms describing land becoming desolate. In Genesis, Joseph's brothers feared 'the land will be desolate' if they didn't sow during famine (Gen 47:19, J source). Ezekiel uses it three times: 'your high places shall be desolate' (Ezek 6:6), 'the land shall be desolate' of inhabitants (Ezek 12:19), and 'the land was made desolate' by the lioness's roaring (Ezek 19:7). French and German translators left the forms in Hebrew brackets, recognizing the term's rarity and overlap with the more common shamem root, while Spanish sea/será/serán asolada tracks the passive devastation across all instances. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: and-was-desolate, be-desolate, shall-be-desolate | es: sea-asolada, será-desolada, serán-desolados | fr: [ותשם], [תישמנה], [תשם] | de: [ותשם], [תישמנה], [תשם] Gen 47:19; Ezek 6:6; Ezek 12:19; Ezek 19:7

יִשְׁמָא H3457 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yishma: personal name in Judah's genealogy, possibly meaning 'Yahweh hears'

Yishma appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:3. The name possibly derives from a root meaning "to hear," and may be a shortened theophoric form meaning "Yahweh hears." Septuagint manuscripts show varied renderings, reflecting the diversity of textual traditions for genealogical lists.

(1×) A personal name in Judah's genealogy appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:3. The name may be theophoric, potentially meaning "Yahweh hears" or simply "he hears." Greek manuscripts vary widely (Ragma, Iesma, Samaa), indicating textual uncertainty. The single occurrence provides no narrative context, leaving the individual's role and significance within Judah's tribal structure undefined beyond genealogical placement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yishma | es: y-Yisma | fr: [וישמא] | de: [וישמא] 1Chr 4:3

יִשְׁמָעֵאל H3458 Conj-w (48×)

Yishmael – Ishmael ('God hears'); son of Abraham and Hagar, and several other biblical figures

Yishmael ('God hears,' from shama' + El) is a proper masculine name borne by several individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is the son of Abraham by Hagar, whose 48 occurrences span the patriarchal narratives of Genesis. God names him before birth with an explanatory etymology: 'because YHWH has heard your affliction' (Gen 16:11). He is circumcised at thirteen (Gen 17:25), becomes the father of twelve princes (Gen 25:13-16), and dies at 137 years (Gen 25:17). A second notable Ishmael is the son of Nethaniah, the assassin of Gedaliah, governor of Judah after the fall of Jerusalem (Jer 40-41; 2 Kgs 25:23-25). Others include figures in Benjaminite genealogies (1 Chr 8:38), a Judahite official (2 Chr 19:11), a military captain (2 Chr 23:1), and a priest with a foreign wife (Ezra 10:22). Spanish Ismael, French Ismael, and German Ismael preserve the name uniformly.

Ishmael (proper name) (48×) The proper name Ishmael, meaning 'God hears,' applied to multiple individuals, chiefly Abraham's son through Hagar (Gen 16:11-15; 17:18-26; 25:9-17), whose birth narrative turns on the divine hearing of affliction, and the son of Nethaniah who assassinated Gedaliah (Jer 40:8-41:18; 2 Kgs 25:23-25). Smaller clusters designate Benjaminite, Judahite, and priestly figures (1 Chr 8:38; 2 Chr 19:11; Ezra 10:22). Spanish Ismael, French Ismael, and German Ismael confirm a single proper-name referent with no polysemy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ishmael, Yishma'el, Yishmael | es: Ismael, Yishmael, Yismael | fr: Ismaël, Yishmael, [ישמעאל] | de: Ismael, Yishmael Gen 16:11; Gen 16:15; Gen 16:16; Gen 17:18; Gen 17:20

יִשְׁמְעֵאלִי H3459 Prep-l (8×)

Ishmaelite — a gentilic adjective denoting descendants of Ishmael or members of the Ishmaelite trading confederation.

This gentilic adjective derives from the proper name Ishmael and designates members of the Ishmaelite tribal group. The Ishmaelites appear most memorably as the caravan traders who purchased Joseph from his brothers and carried him to Egypt (Gen 37:25-28; 39:1), an episode that shaped all of Israel's subsequent history. Judges 8:24 identifies the Midianites defeated by Gideon as having Ishmaelite connections. In the genealogies, David's sister Abigail married 'Jether the Ishmaelite' (1 Chr 2:17), and an Ishmaelite overseer managed the royal camels (1 Chr 27:30). Psalm 83:7 lists the Ishmaelites among hostile confederates against Israel.

Ishmaelite (gentilic) (8×) The gentilic adjective 'Ishmaelite,' designating descendants of Ishmael or members of their trading confederation. Best known as the caravan merchants who bought Joseph (Gen 37:25, 27, 28; 39:1), also applied to individuals like Jether the Ishmaelite (1 Chr 2:17) and Obil the Ishmaelite camel-keeper (1 Chr 27:30). Spanish 'yishmaelitas/ismaelita' and English 'Ishmaelites' both preserve the patronymic derivation from the name Ishmael. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ishmaelites, and-the-Yishme'elim, the-Ishmaelites | es: a-los-yishmaelitas, e-yishmeelitas, el-ismaelita | fr: Ishmaelites, [הישמעאלי], [הישמעלי] | de: Ishmaelites, [הישמעאלי], [הישמעלי] Gen 37:25; Gen 37:27; Gen 37:28; Gen 39:1; Judg 8:24

יִשְׁמַעְיָה H3460 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Yishmayah/Yishmayahu, two men: a Gibeonite warrior (1 Chr 12:4) and a Zebulunite leader (1 Chr 27:19)

This personal name, meaning "Yahweh hears," designates two individuals in the Chronicler's military and administrative records. The first was a Gibeonite warrior who joined David at Ziklag, numbered among the mighty men. The second served as tribal officer over Zebulun during David's kingdom organization. The name appears with slight orthographic variation (-yah vs. -yahu), showing the flexible theophoric endings common in biblical names.

(2×) Attested in 1 Chronicles 12:4 (Gibeonite warrior) and 27:19 (Zebulunite officer). One occurrence includes a conjunctive prefix ("and Yishmayah"), while the other shows the longer theophoric form (-yahu). The Septuagint standardizes both as Samaias. These represent typical Chronicler inclusions: David's early supporters and later administrative organization, both emphasizing the king's comprehensive leadership structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yishmayahu, and-Yishmayah | es: Ismaías, Y-Yismaías | fr: [וישמעיה], [ישמעיהו] | de: [וישמעיה], [ישמעיהו] 1Chr 12:4; 1Chr 27:19

יִשְׁמְרַי H3461 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Yishmeray: personal name in Benjamin's genealogy, possibly meaning 'Yahweh keeps/guards'

Yishmeray was a Benjamite listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8:18. The name appears to be theophoric, possibly meaning "Yahweh keeps" or "Yahweh guards." He belongs to the detailed Benjamite genealogies that trace the tribe's recovery and reconstitution after various historical disruptions.

(1×) A Benjamite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 8:18 within the extensive genealogical records of Benjamin. The name likely incorporates a verbal root meaning "keep" or "guard" with a theophoric element. Septuagint readings (Samarei, Iesamari, Iassemari) show variation, reflecting the challenge of transmitting Hebrew names through Greek. The individual's inclusion marks him as part of Benjamin's reconstituted tribal identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yishmeray | es: Y-Yismerai | fr: [וישמרי] | de: [וישמרי] 1Chr 8:18

יָשֵׁן H3462 Adj-mp (21×)

To sleep, fall asleep; to grow old or become chronic (Niphal); to cause someone to sleep, put to sleep (Piel causative).

The Hebrew verb yashen describes one of humanity's most universal experiences — the act of falling asleep and the state of being asleep. In its Qal stem, it covers the full range from God causing Adam's deep sleep (Gen 2:21) to the watchman's assurance that 'he who keeps Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep' (Ps 121:4). Spanish dormir, French dormir, and German schlafen render the basic sense with perfect transparency across all target languages. The root takes a metaphorical turn in the Niphal, where 'sleeping' extends to mean 'growing old' or 'becoming chronic' — stored grain that has 'grown old' must be cleared out (Lev 26:10), a skin disease that is 'chronic' rather than fresh (Lev 13:11), and the warning against growing spiritually stale in the land (Deut 4:25). A single Piel causative describes Delilah making Samson 'sleep upon her knees' (Judg 16:19) before calling the barber — one of Scripture's most fateful naps. Arabic wasin ('sleepy') and Aramaic shinta ('sleep') confirm the root's pan-Semitic pedigree.

1. sleep, fall asleep (17×) To sleep or fall asleep — the basic Qal intransitive covering all forms of natural sleep, including the participial and adjectival use meaning 'sleeping' or 'asleep.' With 17 occurrences, this dominant sense spans from God's foundational act of putting Adam into sleep (Gen 2:21) to Pharaoh sleeping and dreaming (Gen 41:5), Elijah sleeping under the broom tree (1 Kgs 19:5), and Job's lament that in death he would have 'slept and been at rest' (Job 3:13). Spanish dormir/durmio, French dormir, and German schlafen converge universally. Psalm 121:4 provides the theological negative: 'He who keeps Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep' — yashen paired with num to express total vigilance. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: He-sleeps, I-sleep, I-would-have-slept | es: Y-durmió, dormir, dormirá | fr: [וישנו], [יישן], des-dormants. | de: [וישנו], [יישן], [ישנו] Gen 2:21; Gen 41:5; 1Sam 26:12; 1Kgs 19:5; Job 3:13

2. grow old, become chronic (3×) To grow old, become long-standing, or be chronic — a Niphal sense where 'sleeping' metaphorically extends to aging or staleness, describing things that have sat too long or conditions that have persisted. Found in 3 occurrences: a chronic skin disease as opposed to a fresh outbreak (Lev 13:11), stored produce that must be cleared when new harvest comes ('you shall eat old store long kept,' Lev 26:10), and the warning that after dwelling long in the land the people will 'grow old' and become corrupt (Deut 4:25). Spanish envejecido/anejo and the shift from sleep vocabulary to aging vocabulary confirm that translators recognize a metaphorical leap: what 'sleeps' too long grows stale. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-you-grow-old, chronic, stored-long | es: añejo, envejecida, y-envejezcais | fr: chronic, et-tu-grow-ancien, stored-long | de: chronic, stored-lang, und-du-wachsen-alt Lev 13:11; Lev 26:10; Deut 4:25

3. cause to sleep (1×) To cause someone to fall asleep, to put to sleep — a Piel causative describing one person inducing sleep in another. Only 1 occurrence: Delilah 'made him sleep upon her knees' before summoning a man to shave Samson's hair (Judg 16:19). Spanish lo hizo dormir, French le fit dormir, and German machte ihn schlafen all employ explicit causative constructions, distinguishing this from the intransitive Qal. The single occurrence is among the most consequential sleeps in all Scripture — the moment when Israel's champion loses his strength through one woman's lullaby of betrayal. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-made-him-sleep | es: Y-lo-hizo-dormir | fr: et-fit-lui-dormir | de: und-machte-ihn-schlafen Judg 16:19

יָשֵׁן H3463 Prep-m / N-mpc (7×)
yashen – sleeping, asleep; an adjective describing the state of sleep, literal or figurative
The adjective yashen describes someone in the state of sleep, from Saul lying asleep in his encampment (1 Sam 26:7) to the beloved's drowsy declaration 'I sleep but my heart is awake' (Song 5:2). Beyond literal slumber, the word carries potent figurative weight: Elijah taunts the priests of Baal, suggesting their god is merely 'sleeping' (1 Kgs 18:27), and the psalmist depicts Yahweh awakening 'like one sleeping' to deliver his people (Ps 78:65). Most strikingly, Daniel 12:2 speaks of 'those sleeping in the dust of the earth' – the dead awaiting resurrection. Spanish dormido, French dormant, and German equivalents all converge on the single idea of sleep, though the theological range from napping to death is remarkable.

sleeping, asleep (7×) Asleep, in the state of sleeping – used literally of persons in natural slumber (1 Sam 26:7, 12; 1 Kgs 3:20; Song 5:2) and figuratively of apparent divine inactivity (Ps 78:65; 1 Kgs 18:27 of Baal) and of the dead resting in the dust awaiting resurrection (Dan 12:2). The multilingual glosses – Spanish dormido, French dormant, English sleeping – uniformly treat this as a single sense, and indeed the figurative extensions all depend on the core image of eyes-closed unconsciousness rather than constituting separate semantic categories. SLEEP AND SLUMBER en: like-one-sleeping, of-those-sleeping-in, sleeping | es: como-dormido, dormida, dormido | fr: comme-dormant, dormais,, dormant | de: [ישן], [ישנה], [מישני] 1Sam 26:7; 1Kgs 3:20; 1Kgs 18:27; Ps 78:65; Song 5:2

יָשֵׁן H3464 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yashen: personal name, one of David's mighty warriors; parallel text has Hashem Yashen was one of David's elite warriors mentioned in 2 Samuel 23:32. The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 11:34 has "Hashem," leading scholars to suggest textual variation or corruption. Some propose deleting "sons of" in both texts to clarify the reading. Despite uncertainty about the exact form, the individual's status among David's mighty men is secure.

(1×) One of David's mighty men listed in 2 Samuel 23:32, though the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:34 reads "Hashem" instead. Textual scholars suggest emending both passages to clarify the name, possibly by removing "sons of" (bene) as dittography. The individual's inclusion among David's elite warriors marks him as a fighter of exceptional courage and skill, despite textual uncertainty about his precise name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jashen | es: Yashen | fr: Jashen | de: Jashen 2Sam 23:32

יָשָׁן H3465 Adj-mp (7×)
yashan – old, aged; describing things stored over time or of long standing
A homonym of the more common yashen ('sleeping'), this adjective yashan means 'old' in the sense of aged, stored, or long-standing. Its seven occurrences cluster around two domains: stored agricultural produce – the 'old harvest' that Israel will eat thanks to God's blessing (Lev 25:22; 26:10) and the 'old and new' choice fruits of Song 7:14 – and ancient structures, notably the 'Old Gate' in Nehemiah's Jerusalem (Neh 3:6; 12:39) and Isaiah's 'old pool' (Isa 22:11). The etymological connection to sleep is suggestive: something 'old' has, as it were, lain dormant. Spanish lo viejo, French ancien, and German alt all render it consistently as a straightforward descriptor of age.

old (adjective, of things/produce) (7×) Old, aged, of long standing – applied to stored produce that has been kept over time (Lev 25:22; 26:10; Song 7:14, where 'old and new' fruits are paired) and to established structures such as the 'Old Gate' of Jerusalem (Neh 3:6; 12:39) and Isaiah's 'old pool' (Isa 22:11). Spanish añejas and lo viejo, French ancien, and German alt converge on a single sense of temporal age without further semantic subdivision. The BDB entry notes the etymological link to withering and dormancy, connecting this adjective to the root idea of lying inactive over time. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-old, old, the-Old | es: añejas, la-vieja, lo-viejo | fr: [הישנה], ancien, anciens; | de: [הישנה], [ישנים], alt Lev 25:22; Lev 26:10; Neh 3:6

יְשָׁנָה H3466 N-proper-fs (2×)
Jeshanah, a town on Ephraim's southern border (2 Chr 13:19) and possibly a gate in Jerusalem (Neh 12:39)
This place name, meaning "old" or "ancient," designates a border town that Abijah captured from Jeroboam during the divided kingdom period. Located near Bethel, it's identified with modern Ain Siniya, about five miles north of Beitin. The name also appears in Nehemiah 12:39 as "the Old Gate" in Jerusalem's wall dedication, though the connection between the town and gate remains uncertain. Some scholars propose reading Jeshanah in place of "the Shen" in 1 Samuel 7:12.

(2×) Found in 2 Chronicles 13:19 (town captured by Abijah) and Nehemiah 12:39 (possibly a gate name). The Nehemiah occurrence has the article ("the Old"), suggesting it may be descriptive rather than a proper name. The town marked Ephraim's southern boundary, making it strategically important in the northern kingdom's defenses against Judahite expansion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Jeshanah, the-Old | es: Yeshanah, la-vieja | fr: [הישנה], [ישנה] | de: [הישנה], [ישנה] 2Chr 13:19; Neh 12:39

יָשַׁע H3467 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-msc / 3ms (206×)
To save, deliver, rescue (Hifil); a savior or deliverer (Hifil participle); to be saved or receive salvation (Nifal).
Yasha is the verbal root behind some of the most important names and concepts in Scripture — Joshua, Jesus (Yeshua), Isaiah (Yesha'yahu), and the noun yeshu'ah ('salvation'). In its dominant Hifil stem it means to deliver or rescue from danger, enemies, or oppression, with either God or a human champion as the subject. The Hifil participle moshia' ('savior, deliverer') becomes a near-title for God in the prophets and for the judges who rescue Israel in the book of Judges. The Nifal passive captures the other side of the same event: 'to be saved,' 'to experience deliverance.' The multilingual evidence is illuminating — Arabic splits between khalasa ('to rescue/redeem') and anqadha ('to save from danger'), Korean uses guwonhada (a dedicated salvation term borrowed from Chinese), and Swahili -okoa carries the specific sense of pulling someone from peril. The root's breadth — from battlefield deliverance to eschatological salvation — makes it one of the Hebrew Bible's most theologically consequential verbs.

1. save, deliver, rescue (Hifil active) (156×) Active Hifil causative: to save, deliver, or rescue someone from danger, enemies, distress, or oppression — the largest sense at 156 occurrences spanning every major corpus. God saves Israel at the Red Sea (Exod 14:30), raises up judges to save them from enemies (Judg 3:31, 7:7, 10:1), and promises future deliverance through the prophets (Isa 35:4, 45:22). Human agents also 'save' — David's mighty men, military commanders, and kings who deliver their people. Arabic khallasa/anqadha, Korean 구원하다 (guwonhada), and Swahili -okoa all converge on rescue-from-peril semantics. The Psalms' urgent imperative hoshi'eni ('save me!') — as in Ps 3:7, 6:4, 22:21 — captures the verb at its most existentially charged. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: save, save-me | es: Salva, Sálvame, salva | fr: le-sauver, sauve, sauve-moi | de: rette, rette-mich, rettete Exod 14:30; Deut 20:4; Judg 3:31; Judg 7:7; Judg 10:1

2. savior, deliverer (Hifil participle substantive) (28×) Hifil participle used substantively as an agent noun: 'savior,' 'deliverer,' 'rescuer' — 28 occurrences. The moshia' is the one who effects deliverance, whether God himself ('I am the LORD your God... and besides me there is no savior,' Hos 13:4) or a human champion like Othniel (Judg 3:9) or Ehud (Judg 3:15). The article or possessive suffix typically marks the substantival use: ha-moshia' ('the deliverer'), moshi'ekha ('your savior'). Arabic mukhallis and Korean 구원자 (guwon-ja, literally 'salvation-person') both use dedicated agent-noun formations, confirming this as a lexicalized title rather than a mere participle. The tragic negation in Deut 22:27, 28:29, 28:31 — 'and there was no deliverer' — shows how central this figure was to Israelite expectations. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: Savior, a-Savior, a-deliverer | es: Salvador, el-que-salva, por-Salvador | fr: de-sauver, deliverer, et-sauver | de: deliverer, der-eins-rettend, ein-deliverer Deut 22:27; Deut 28:29; Deut 28:31; Judg 3:9; Judg 3:15

3. be saved, receive salvation (Nifal passive) (21×) Nifal passive/reflexive: to be saved, to be delivered, to receive or experience salvation — 21 occurrences. Here the rescued party is the grammatical subject: 'Israel is saved by the LORD with an everlasting salvation' (Isa 45:17), 'happy are you, O Israel — who is like you, a people saved by the LORD?' (Deut 33:29). The Nifal captures the recipient's perspective on the same event the Hifil describes from the agent's side. Korean 구원받다 (guwon-batda, 'receive salvation') uses a passive auxiliary, and Arabic yukhallas (Form II passive) mirrors the Hebrew voice shift. The theological weight is enormous: the Nifal declares that salvation is something experienced and received, not self-achieved. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: I-am-saved, and-I-will-be-saved, and-be-saved | es: es-salvado, hemos-sido-salvados, salvado | fr: [ינושׁע], et-sauver, et-tu-devra-être-sauva | de: ich-am-rettete, retten, rettete Num 10:9; Deut 33:29; 2Sam 22:4; Ps 18:3; Ps 33:16

4. (1×) A single ambiguous occurrence at 2 Samuel 10:11 where Joab tells Abishai 'if the Arameans are too strong for me, then you shall save me; and if the Ammonites are too strong for you, then I will come to save you.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish para salvación, French pour salut, German fuer salvation) suggests the translations treated this as a nominal or purposive construction ('for salvation/deliverance') rather than a straightforward finite verb. The verse functions as a mutual-aid pact between commanders and may represent a transitional usage where the verb shades toward its nominal derivative yeshu'ah. SALVATION (NOUN)

en: for-salvation | es: para-salvación | fr: pour-salut | de: fuer-salvation 2Sam 10:11

יְשַׁע H3468 N-msc / 2fs (36×)

Deliverance, salvation, safety — God's rescuing act or the resulting state of security and well-being

A masculine noun denoting the spectrum from active divine rescue to the settled state of safety it produces. Found almost exclusively in poetry, it is a favorite word of the Psalms and Isaiah, often appearing in theologically rich constructions: 'the God of my salvation' (Ps 25:5), 'the rock of our salvation' (Ps 95:1), 'my light and my salvation' (Ps 27:1). The Spanish 'salvación' and French 'salut' both capture the theological weight, while the occasional rendering as 'safety' or 'welfare' (as in Job 5:4, 11) shows the word can also describe the practical condition of being secure. In Habakkuk 3:13, it uniquely functions as a verbal infinitive — 'to save' — revealing its deep kinship with the root yāsha^{c}.

1. salvation, deliverance (33×) Active divine deliverance or salvation — the mighty act by which God rescues his people from enemies, oppression, or distress (2 Sam 22:3, 36; Ps 27:1; Isa 62:11). This is the dominant sense, appearing in doxological exclamations and covenant affirmations. Spanish consistently renders 'salvación,' French 'salut,' and the possessive suffixes ('my salvation,' 'your salvation') underscore the personal, relational character of God's saving intervention. In Hab 3:13, the word takes an infinitival function — 'you went out to save your anointed.' SALVATION (NOUN)

en: Your-salvation, my-salvation, our-salvation | es: mi-salvación, nuestra-salvación, salvación | fr: Ton-salut, [ישׁע], [ישׁענו] | de: Heil, Your-salvation, [ישׁע] 2Sam 22:3; 2Sam 22:36; 2Sam 22:47; 2Sam 23:5; 1Chr 16:35

2. safety, security (3×) The resulting state of safety, security, or well-being after deliverance has been accomplished (Job 5:4, 11; Ps 12:5). Here the emphasis shifts from the act of rescue to the condition of protection and prosperity it brings. Spanish translates with prepositional phrases like 'en salvación,' French 'dans sauver,' and German 'in Heil,' all suggesting an abiding state rather than a momentary intervention. Job's usage is especially telling: the poor are lifted 'to safety' — a tangible, this-worldly security. SALVATION (NOUN)

en: from-safety, in-safety, safety | es: con-salvación, de-salvación, en-salvación | fr: dans-sauver, de-ישׁע ,מישׁע | de: in-Heil, rettete, von-rettete Job 5:4; Job 5:11; Ps 12:5

יִשְׁעִי H3469 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Yishi, a personal name meaning 'salutary' or 'saving,' borne by four men in Chronicles

Yishi (meaning 'he saves' or 'salutary') is a Hebrew proper name shared by four individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies. These include a descendant of Jerahmeel (1 Chr 2:31), a chief of Judah (1 Chr 4:20), a leader of Simeon who led an expedition against the Amalekites at Mount Seir (1 Chr 4:42), and a chief of the half-tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr 5:24). The name's root in salvation (yasha) reflects a theophoric hope characteristic of Israelite naming practices.

(5×) A proper masculine name derived from the root yasha ('to save'), borne by four distinct individuals in 1 Chronicles. English renders it 'Yishi' or 'Ishi,' while Spanish gives 'Yisi.' The Septuagint varies widely across manuscripts (Ισεμιηλ, Ιεσει, Σεει), indicating early textual fluidity. All five occurrences appear in tribal genealogies of Jerahmeel, Judah, Simeon, and Manasseh. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yish'i, and-Yish'i | es: Yisi, y-Yisi | fr: [ישׁעי], [ישׁע] | de: Jischai, und-Jischai 1Chr 2:31; 1Chr 4:20; 1Chr 4:42; 1Chr 5:24

יְשַׁעְיָהוּ H3470a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (35×)

Isaiah (Yeshayahu) — 'Yah is salvation,' the prophet son of Amoz who ministered in 8th-century Judah

Yeshayahu (Isaiah) is a theophoric name meaning 'Yah is salvation,' combining the root y-sh-' ('to save, deliver') with the divine name. The name appears 35 times, referring primarily to the great prophet who served under four Judahite kings — Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah — spanning roughly 740 to 700 BC. Isaiah's most dramatic narrative role unfolds during the Assyrian crisis: he counseled Hezekiah to trust God rather than capitulate (2 Kgs 19:2-7, 20-34; Isa 37), and he announced the king's miraculous healing and the sign of the retreating shadow (2 Kgs 20:1-11). The prophet is also credited with writing a history of Uzziah's reign (2 Chr 26:22) and Hezekiah's (2 Chr 32:32). The Septuagint renders the name Esaias, whence English 'Isaiah.'

Yeshayahu / Isaiah (proper noun) (35×) The proper masculine name Yeshayahu ('Yah is salvation'), identifying the 8th-century Judahite prophet son of Amoz. Narrative occurrences concentrate in 2 Kings 19-20 and their Isaiah parallels (chs. 37-39), where he serves as Hezekiah's prophetic counselor during the Sennacherib crisis and the king's illness. The superscription of the book bearing his name (Isa 1:1) and the Chronicles references (2 Chr 26:22; 32:20, 32) establish him as both prophet and historiographer. A secondary Yeshayahu appears among the sons of Jeduthun (1 Chr 25:3, 15). The Greek Esaias, Spanish 'Isaias,' and German 'Jesaja' all derive from the Hebrew through Septuagintal transmission. ISAIAH PROPHET NAME

en: Isaiah, Yeshayahu, son | es: Isaías, Yeshayahu | fr: Ésaïe | de: Jesaja, Yeshayahu 2Kgs 19:2; 2Kgs 19:5; 2Kgs 19:6; 2Kgs 19:20; 2Kgs 20:1

יְשַׁעְיָה H3470b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)
Jeshaiah, name of four post-exilic Israelites (different from Isaiah the prophet)
Jeshaiah, meaning 'salvation of Yahweh,' appears as the name of four different individuals in the post-exilic period, distinct from the great prophet Isaiah. These include a descendant of Zerubbabel, a chief who returned with Ezra, a Levitical leader, and a Benjamite. The name's theophoric element (Yah) marks these individuals as bearing testimony to Yahweh's saving work, a common pattern in Hebrew naming.

(4×) Four distinct individuals bear this name in Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah: a grandson of Zerubbabel in David's royal line (1Chr 3:21), a chief of the sons of Elam who returned with Ezra from Babylon (Ezra 8:7), a chief of the Merarites in Ezra's time (Ezra 8:19), and a Benjamite in Nehemiah's Jerusalem (Neh 11:7). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Ioseia, Hesaia, Ieseia, showing Greek approximations of the theophoric name. Spanish Isaías links it to the more famous prophet, while Yeshayahu/Yeshaya preserve the Hebrew form; French and German leave it in Hebrew brackets in some instances. ISAIAH PROPHET NAME
en: Yeshayah, and-Yesha'yah | es: Isaías, Yeshayahu, y-Yeshaya | fr: [וישעיה], [ישעיה] | de: [וישעיה], [ישעיה] 1Chr 3:21; Ezra 8:7; Ezra 8:19; Neh 11:7

יְשֵׁפֵה H3471 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)
jasper, precious stone (Persian loanword, possibly jade-like stone)
A precious stone mentioned in the high priestly breastplate lists, identified as a Persian loanword related to jade. Appearing in Exodus 28:20 and 39:13 (Priestly source) as the third stone in the fourth row of the breastplate, alongside beryl and onyx, and in Ezekiel 28:13 among the stones adorning the king of Tyre in his Edenic splendor. The term is a loanword from Persian (یَشم), also borrowed into Arabic (يَشْب) and possibly reflected in Akkadian ašpû. Ancient translations vary in identification, but 'jasper' has become standard in English, referring to an opaque, often banded quartz stone prized for its colors and polish.

(3×) A precious stone of Persian origin, likely a jade-like or jasper-type stone valued for beauty and rarity. Its inclusion in both the priestly vestments and the prophetic description of primordial splendor marks it as among the most valued stones in the ancient Near Eastern economy. The loanword status indicates this was an imported luxury item, not native to Canaan. Multilingual glosses uniformly render 'jasper' or 'jaspe', following the traditional identification. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10740 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-jasper | es: y-jaspe | fr: et-jaspe, et-pierre-précieuse | de: [וישפה], und-Jaspis Exod 28:20; Exod 39:13; Ezek 28:13

יִשְׁפָּה H3472 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yishpah: personal name in Benjamin's genealogy
Yishpah was a Benjamite mentioned in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8:16. The name appears only once, with no additional narrative context. His inclusion in Benjamin's detailed family records reflects the tribe's careful preservation of lineage information through periods of disruption and exile.

(1×) A Benjamite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 8:16 within the genealogical lists of that tribe. The single occurrence provides no biographical information beyond tribal affiliation. Septuagint readings (Saphān, Iespha) maintain the name with slight variations. The individual belongs to the extensive genealogical reconstructions that reestablished Benjamite identity and land claims in the post-exilic period. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10740 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-Yishpah | es: y-Yispa | fr: [וישפה] | de: [וישפה] 1Chr 8:16

יִשְׁפָּן H3473 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yishpan: personal name in Benjamin's genealogy
Yishpan was a Benjamite listed in 1 Chronicles 8:22 among the tribal genealogies. Like many names in these registers, it appears only once with no narrative elaboration. The preservation of such names demonstrates the importance of genealogical continuity for maintaining tribal identity and inheritance rights.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Benjamin's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 8:22. The single occurrence offers no contextual details about the individual's life or role. Greek manuscripts (Ispan, Espan, Iesphan) show minor variations in rendering. The name's inclusion among Benjamin's extensive family lists underscores the tribe's commitment to preserving lineage records through generations of historical upheaval. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yishpan | es: Y-Yispán | fr: [וישפן] | de: [וישפן] 1Chr 8:22

יָשַׁר H3474 V-Hifil-Imperf-1cs (28×)
To be straight, right, or pleasing; in Piel/Hifil, to make straight, direct, or level; physically, to go directly forward.
Yashar captures the Hebrew intuition that moral rightness and physical straightness are the same thing seen from different angles. A road that goes straight, a path that has been leveled, a deed that is 'right in someone's eyes' — all share this single root. The Qal stative 'it was right in his eyes' becomes a recurring formula for approval throughout Judges, Samuel, and Kings, while the Piel 'make straight' carries both the literal force of Hezekiah redirecting a water channel (2 Chr 32:30) and the spiritual force of Proverbs 3:6, 'He will make straight your paths.' The cognate Akkadian isharu ('to be straight, just') and Arabic yasara ('to be easy, tractable') confirm that the physical-to-moral metaphor is ancient across the Semitic family.

1. be right or pleasing (12×) The Qal stative sense: to be right, pleasing, or agreeable in someone's eyes — the formulaic expression yashar be'eynay ('it was right in his/my eyes'). Samson tells his parents that the Philistine woman 'is right in my eyes' (Judg 14:3, 7); Saul is pleased when David's marriage 'was right in his eyes' (1 Sam 18:20, 26). Spanish parecer recto and the recurring 'right in the eyes of' formula across translations confirm this as a lexicalized evaluative expression. Twelve occurrences, heavily concentrated in the Judges-Samuel narrative cycle where personal moral judgment is a persistent theme. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS
en: and-she-was-right, and-was-right, is-right | es: Y-pareció-recto, es-recta, es-recto | fr: [ויישר], [ישר], cela-fera-être-droit | de: [ויישר], [ישר], [ישרה] Num 23:27; Judg 14:3; Judg 14:7; 1Sam 18:20; 1Sam 18:26

2. make straight, direct, level (7×) The Piel factitive: to make straight, smooth, or direct — to actively establish rightness or levelness in a path, whether literal or metaphorical. Hezekiah 'directed' the waters of the upper Gihon straight down to the west side of the City of David (2 Chr 32:30); the psalmist declares 'all your precepts I consider right' (Ps 119:128); Proverbs promises 'He will make straight your paths' (Prov 3:6). Spanish enderezar ('to straighten') and German richten ('to direct') both capture the causative transformation from crooked to straight. Seven occurrences spanning moral instruction, urban engineering, and wisdom teaching. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS
en: I-consider-right, and-he-directed-them, make-straight | es: enderecé, endereza, enderezad | fr: [ייישרם], le-être-droit, être-droit | de: [המישרים], [ויישרם], [יישר] 2Chr 32:30; Ps 119:128; Prov 3:6; Prov 9:15; Prov 11:5

3. cause to be straight, direct gaze (6×) The Hifil causative: to cause to go straight, to direct forward, to level a way. In Psalm 5:8 the psalmist asks God to 'make straight your way before me'; in Proverbs 4:25 the sage commands 'let your eyes look directly forward'; in Isaiah 45:2 God promises to 'level the rough places' before Cyrus. The Hifil adds a stronger causative force than the Piel — not just smoothing what exists but actively clearing and directing the path ahead. Spanish allanar and the German causative constructions confirm the intensified agency. Six occurrences, four of them involving divine action. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS
en: I-will-level, I-will-make-level, [ketiv] | es: (allanaré), [Qere], [endereza] | fr: être-droit | de: [(אישר)], [[אושר]], [ketiv] Ps 5:8; Prov 4:25; Isa 45:2

4. go straight, move directly (2×) The Qal dynamic sense: to go straight, to move directly in a physical direction without deviating.

The cows pulling the ark 'went straight along the road to Beth-shemesh' (1 Sam 6:12), neither turning right nor left — one of the most vivid directional descriptions in the Hebrew Bible. In Job 37:3 God 'lets loose' his lightning and it goes straight to the ends of the earth. Spanish ir recto and German gerade gehen both select directional-motion vocabulary distinct from the evaluative 'be right.' Two occurrences, but the concretely spatial meaning is important as the likely etymological starting point from which the moral senses developed. GOING AND LEADING en: and-they-went-straight, he-lets-it-loose | es: Y-fueron-recto, lo-suelta | fr: et-ils-alla-droit, être-droit-lui | de: [ישרהו], und-sie-ging-straight 1Sam 6:12; Job 37:3

5. be made level or even (1×) The Pual passive: to be made level, smooth, or evenly spread — the passive counterpart of the Piel factitive. A single occurrence in 1 Kings 6:35 describes the gold overlay on the temple doors as 'evenly spread' or 'leveled' onto the carved work. Spanish ajustado ('fitted, adjusted') captures the craftsmanship context. This is the only passive occurrence, but it preserves the root's concrete spatial meaning — physical surfaces made smooth by skilled hands — in a way that anchors the entire metaphorical range. EQUAL SAME WORTH

en: evenly-spread | es: ajustado | fr: evenly-étendit | de: evenly-spread 1Kgs 6:35

יְשֶׁר H3475 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yesher: personal name meaning 'uprightness,' son of Caleb in Judah's genealogy

Yesher was a son of Caleb mentioned in 1 Chronicles 2:18. The name means "uprightness" or "straightness," reflecting a virtue highly valued in Israelite culture. Septuagint manuscripts show divergent readings (Ioasar, Sar), indicating textual variation. The name connects this individual to the honorable lineage of Caleb, the faithful spy.

(1×) A son of Caleb listed in 1 Chronicles 2:18, whose name means "uprightness" or "straightness." The single occurrence places him within the prestigious lineage of Caleb, one of the two faithful spies who entered the promised land. Greek translations vary (Ioasar, Sar), suggesting textual difficulty. The name's meaning reflects the character qualities associated with Caleb's family line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yesher | es: Yeser | fr: [ישר] | de: [ישר] 1Chr 2:18

יֹשֶׁר H3476 Prep-b / N-msc (14×)

Uprightness, rectitude, moral straightness; integrity of heart and conduct before God and others.

Derived from the root yashar ('to be straight'), yosher names the quality of living in moral alignment – straight paths, straight speech, a straight heart. Proverbs holds it up as a guiding principle: the upright walk in straightness (Prov 2:13; 4:11), while those who abandon it turn to crooked ways. Solomon asks God to evaluate him according to 'the uprightness of my heart' (1 Kgs 9:4), and David praises God who 'tests the heart and delights in uprightness' (1 Chr 29:17). Job insists his words spring 'from the uprightness of my heart' (Job 33:3). French 'droiture' and Spanish 'rectitud' preserve the spatial metaphor of moral straightness.

uprightness, rectitude (14×) Moral straightness and integrity of character. Paired with tom ('blamelessness') in Psalm 25:21 and associated with the heart's disposition in Deuteronomy 9:5, 1 Kings 9:4, and 1 Chronicles 29:17. Applied to speech in Job 6:25 and Ecclesiastes 12:10. Proverbs contrasts it with crooked paths (2:13; 4:11). Job 33:23 extends the sense to what is ethically due. UPRIGHTNESS EQUITY

en: and-because-of-uprightness-of, and-in-uprightness, and-uprightness | es: Rectitud-de-, con-rectitud-de, de-lo-recto | fr: [בישר], dans-droiture, dans-son-droiture-lui | de: [בישר], [בישרן], [ישרן] Deut 9:5; 1Kgs 9:4; 1Chr 29:17; Job 6:25; Job 33:3

יָשָׁר H3477 Conj-w (119×)

Straight, upright, righteous; of persons: morally upright; of actions: right, correct, pleasing to God; physically: straight, level; also a proper name (Book of Yashar).

Yashar is one of Hebrew's most versatile moral-physical adjectives, rooted in the concrete image of straightness. A road can be yashar — level, direct, without crookedness (Ps 107:7; Jer 31:9) — and from this spatial metaphor the word extends powerfully into the ethical realm. Its most frequent use describes persons of moral integrity: Job is tam veyashar, 'blameless and upright' (Job 1:1), and the yesharim form a recognized social-moral category throughout Psalms and Proverbs, standing opposite the crooked and the wicked. A distinct evaluative sense appears in the Deuteronomistic formula 'what is right in the eyes of the LORD' (hayyashar be'eyne YHWH), the standard by which every king of Israel and Judah is measured. German aufrichtig ('upright') and Spanish recto both preserve the physical-to-moral metaphor beautifully — 'straight' becoming 'righteous.' French droit carries the same dual register. The word also appears as a proper name in the mysterious Book of Yashar (Josh 10:13; 2 Sam 1:18), a lost Israelite literary collection whose very title hints at an anthology of heroic virtue.

1. upright, righteous (of persons) (70×) Describes a person who is morally upright, righteous, or of good character — the dominant sense at 70 occurrences, forming a key term in biblical wisdom vocabulary. In Job 1:1, 1:8, and 2:3, yashar pairs with tam ('blameless') as a double predicate of exemplary righteousness; in Num 23:10 Balaam wishes to 'die the death of the upright' (yesharim). Proverbs uses the substantive yesharim as a quasi-social category: 'the upright will inhabit the land' (Prov 2:21), 'the prayer of the upright is his delight' (15:8). German aufrichtig and Spanish recto both derive from spatial-straightness metaphors applied to character, mirroring the Hebrew semantic transfer precisely. French droit similarly moves from 'straight' to 'just.' The multilingual evidence confirms that the physical-to-moral extension is deeply cross-linguistic, but Hebrew yashar carries a particular covenantal weight: to be yashar is to walk the path God has made straight. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: is-right, right, straight | es: el-recto, es-recto, los-rectos | fr: droit | de: [ישר], aufrichtig, der-aufrichtig 1Sam 29:6; 2Kgs 10:15; Ezra 8:21; Neh 9:13; Job 1:1

2. right, correct (of actions/things) (43×) Applied to actions, conduct, or things that are right, correct, or pleasing — 43 occurrences concentrated in the Deuteronomistic history's recurring formula hayyashar be'eyne YHWH, 'what is right in the eyes of the LORD.' In Exod 15:26 God promises health to Israel 'if you do what is right in his eyes'; Deut 6:18 commands 'you shall do what is right and good in the sight of the LORD'; and every king is evaluated by whether he did hayyashar (1 Kgs 15:5, 11; 22:43; 2 Kgs 10:30). This sense differs from sense 1 by applying to deeds and judgments rather than persons — Spanish lo recto ('the right thing') and German das Rechte both substantivize the adjective to mark this shift. Deut 12:8 provides a revealing negative case: 'everyone doing what is right in his own eyes' — where self-determined rightness contrasts with God-determined rightness, exposing the word's dependence on the evaluating perspective. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: the-right | es: lo-recto | fr: le-droit, le-droite | de: der-rechte, der-rechts Exod 15:26; Deut 6:18; Deut 12:8; Deut 12:25; Deut 12:28

3. straight, level (physically) (4×) Physical straightness, levelness, or directness — 4 occurrences describing roads, paths, and bodily forms. In Ps 107:7 God led the wanderers by 'a straight way' (derekh yesharah) to an inhabited city; Jer 31:9 promises 'I will make them walk by streams of water, in a straight path in which they shall not stumble.' Ezek 1:7 describes the living creatures' legs as yesharah — 'straight,' without the bend of a human knee — while Ezek 1:23 applies the same word to their wings stretched 'straight' toward one another. German gerade ('straight, direct') and Spanish recta/recto select purely spatial vocabulary here, distinct from the moral terms used in senses 1-2. This is the etymological base sense from which the moral metaphor derives: physical straightness as the conceptual source for moral uprightness. The Ezekiel usage is strikingly concrete — angelic anatomy described with a surveyor's adjective. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: straight | es: recta, rectas, recto | fr: droit | de: [ישׁר], aufrichtig, gerade Ps 107:7; Jer 31:9; Ezek 1:7; Ezek 1:23

4. Yashar (Book of Yashar) (2×) A proper name in the title Sefer haYashar, 'the Book of Yashar' (or 'Book of the Upright') — 2 occurrences. In Josh 10:13 the narrator cites this book as the source for the account of the sun standing still over Gibeon; in 2 Sam 1:18 David's lament over Saul and Jonathan is said to be written in it. Spanish el Yashar and German der Yashar both transliterate rather than translate, while some traditions render 'the Book of the Just.' The work is clearly a pre-canonical literary anthology — possibly a collection of heroic poetry celebrating Israel's warriors and their deeds — now lost except for these two citations. The title itself is significant: if yashar here means 'upright,' the book was an anthology of the righteous; if it retains more of its physical sense, it may have been a 'book of straight records' — an official chronicle. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: the-Yashar | es: el-Justo, el-Yashar | fr: le-Yashar | de: der-Yashar Josh 10:13; 2Sam 1:18

יִשְׂרָאֵל H3478 Conj-w (2507×)

Israel – the patriarch Jacob's covenant name and the nation descended from him

Israel (Yisra'el) serves as both a personal name and a national designation. Given to the patriarch Jacob after his nocturnal wrestling at Peniel (Gen 32:28), the name is traditionally parsed as 'he strives with God' or 'God persists.' From that point forward it designates Jacob's descendants collectively – the twelve tribes, the united monarchy, and later the northern kingdom specifically. With 2,507 occurrences, it is the second most frequent proper noun in the Hebrew Bible after Yahweh, appearing in every genre from Torah narrative to prophetic oracle. Its persistence across languages is notable: Spanish, French, German, and English all retain the form virtually unchanged.

Israel (proper name and nation) (2507×) The proper name Israel, first bestowed on Jacob after wrestling with God at Peniel (Gen 32:28) and thereafter denoting the covenant people descended from him. The name functions at multiple levels – patriarch, twelve-tribe nation, northern kingdom, and eschatological remnant – yet remains a single lexical identity. Cross-lingual evidence confirms total uniformity: every target language renders it as 'Israel,' reflecting its irreducible status as a proper noun rather than a translatable concept. ISRAEL NATION NAME

en: Israel | es: Yisrael | fr: Israël | de: Israel, Israels, Jisrael Gen 32:28; Gen 35:10; Gen 43:11; Gen 46:5; Gen 47:29

יִשְׂרָאֵל H3479 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (8×)

Israel — the national name of God's covenant people, here in Aramaic portions of Ezra referring to the post-exilic community.

In the Aramaic sections of Ezra, the name Israel (Yisra'el) designates the post-exilic Jewish community rebuilding their identity under Persian rule. It appears in official Aramaic correspondence and royal decrees — 'the God of Israel' (Ezra 5:1; 6:14; 7:15), 'the king of Israel' (5:11), 'the children of Israel' (6:16), and 'the people of Israel' (7:13). Though this is the same name given to Jacob and borne by the nation throughout Scripture, its Aramaic form in these administrative contexts highlights how Israel's covenant identity persisted even in the language of empire. Spanish preserves 'Israel' unchanged, while German adds the preposition 'zu-Israel' in dative constructions.

Yisrael (8×) The Aramaic form of the proper national name Israel (Yisra'el), used in the administrative and prophetic contexts of Ezra 5-7 to designate the post-exilic covenant community. Appears in set phrases: 'God of Israel' (Ezra 5:1; 6:14; 7:15), 'king of Israel' (5:11), 'children of Israel' (6:16). The universal retention of the name across all language traditions — Spanish 'Israel,' German 'Israel,' French 'Israël' — reflects its status as a foundational biblical proper noun. ISRAEL NATION NAME

en: Yisrael, of-Yisrael | es: Israel, Yisrael, de-Israel | fr: Israël, [לישראל] | de: Israel, zu-Israel Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 6:14; Ezra 6:16; Ezra 6:17

יִשַׂרְאֵלָה H3480 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yesarelah: personal name, variant of Asharelah, son of Asaph; etymology uncertain

Yesarelah was a son of Asaph, the temple musician, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 25:14. The name appears to be a variant of Asharelah (verse 2 of the same chapter), possibly representing different vocalizations of the same name. He served in the organized musical worship of the temple, continuing his father's legacy of leading Israel's praise.

(1×) A son of Asaph listed in 1 Chronicles 25:14, identified with Asharelah in verse 2 of the same chapter. The name's etymology is uncertain, and the variation may reflect dialectal or textual differences rather than separate individuals. His inclusion in the temple musicians' courses connects him to the liturgical worship that formed Israel's spiritual center, particularly the prophetic music tradition associated with Asaph's family. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yesarelah | es: Jesarela | fr: [ישראלה] | de: [ישראלה] 1Chr 25:14

יִשְׂרְאֵלִי H3481 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Israelite, a gentilic adjective appearing in Leviticus 24:10 and possibly 2 Samuel 17:25

This gentilic adjective designates someone as belonging to Israel, appearing in two notable contexts. In Leviticus 24:10-11 it describes both a man and a woman involved in the blasphemy incident that led to the death penalty legislation. The 2 Samuel occurrence is textually uncertain: the Masoretic text reads "the Ishmaelite" while the Septuagint and parallel in 1 Chronicles 2:19 support "the Israelite," creating interpretive challenges about Amasa's father's identity.

(2×) Attested in Leviticus 24:10 (twice, masculine and feminine forms) and possibly 2 Samuel 17:25 (textual variant). The Leviticus context is crucial: it establishes that blasphemy law applies equally to Israelite and foreigner. The 2 Samuel reading affects whether Amasa's father was an Israelite or Ishmaelite, with significant implications for understanding David's family connections. ISRAELITE ETHNIC IDENTITY

en: the-Israelite, the-Yisraeli | es: el-israelita, israelita | fr: le-Israelite, le-Yisraeli | de: der-Israelite, der-Yisraeli Lev 24:10; 2Sam 17:25

יִשְׂרְאֵלִי H3482 N-proper-fs (3×)

Israelite (gentilicic), member of Israel; Israelite woman (feminine form)

The gentilicic adjective meaning 'Israelite,' denoting membership in the people of Israel. All three occurrences appear in Leviticus 24:10-11, describing the son of an Israelite woman and an Egyptian man who blasphemed the Name during a camp dispute. The text carefully identifies him as 'the son of the Israelite woman' (v. 10), then as 'the Israelite' (masculine, v. 10), and again 'the Israelite woman' (v. 11). This focus on his half-Israelite status may explain why the case required special adjudication—he belonged partially to the covenant community. The feminine form הַיִּשְׂרְאֵלִית is particularly notable, as ethnic-religious identity often passed patrilineally.

(3×) The ethnic-religious designation 'Israelite,' marking membership in the covenant people. The Leviticus passage's careful attention to the blasphemer's mixed parentage (Israelite mother, Egyptian father) raises questions about identity, belonging, and legal standing in the wilderness community. The repetition of 'Israelite/Israelite woman' emphasizes this liminal status. Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render the gentilicic ('Israelite', 'israelita'), recognizing this as the standard ethnic-religious identifier. ISRAELITE ETHNIC IDENTITY

en: Israelite, the-Israelite, the-Israelite-woman | es: israelita, la-israelita | fr: Israelite, le-Israelite, le-Israelite-femme | de: Israelite, der-Israelite, der-Israelite-Frau Lev 24:10; Lev 24:11

יְשָׁרָה H3483 Conj-w (1×)
yesharah: uprightness (of heart), moral integrity and straightness
This noun denotes uprightness or straightness, particularly moral integrity. In 1 Kings 3:6, Solomon speaks of David's "uprightness of heart" before God, one of the virtues that characterized his father's reign. The term emphasizes moral straightness as opposed to crookedness or deviation from God's ways. It represents alignment with divine standards of righteousness.

(1×) A feminine noun meaning "uprightness," used in 1 Kings 3:6 to describe David's moral character before God. The phrase "uprightness of heart" (alongside faithfulness and righteousness) characterizes the inner disposition that marked David's relationship with Yahweh. Cross-linguistic translations consistently render this as "uprightness" or "straightness," emphasizing the geometric metaphor of moral rectitude versus deviation or crookedness that pervades biblical ethics. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-uprightness-of | es: y-en-rectitud-de | fr: et-dans-droiture-de | de: und-in-uprightness-von 1Kgs 3:6

יְשֻׁרוּן H3484 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)
Jeshurun, poetic name for Israel emphasizing the nation's ideal upright character
Jeshurun appears as an affectionate, idealized name for Israel in poetry, derived from yashar ('upright'). Moses uses it in his final blessing to designate the covenant people under their best character —'the upright one' or 'the righteous people.' The term appears in contexts celebrating God's choice and blessing of Israel, though Moses' final song ironically uses it just before describing how 'Jeshurun grew fat and kicked,' abandoning the very uprightness the name celebrates. Most scholars take it as a denominative meaning 'upright folk' rather than a diminutive.

(4×) Jeshurun appears four times in exalted poetic contexts: twice in Moses' final blessing ('There is none like God, O Jeshurun' Deut 33:26; 'He was king in Jeshurun' Deut 33:5), once in Moses' song ironically before Israel's apostasy ('But Jeshurun grew fat and kicked' Deut 32:15), and once in Isaiah's promise ('Fear not, O Jacob my servant, and Jeshurun whom I have chosen' Isa 44:2). The ancient versions render it as 'the beloved' (Septuagint ὁ ἠγαπημένος) or 'the most upright' (Vulgate rectissimus), while modern translations preserve the proper name: Spanish Jesurún, French Jeshurun, German Jeshurun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Jeshurun, and-Yeshurun, in-Jeshurun | es: Jesurún, en-Jesurún, y-Jesurún | fr: Jeshurun, [וישרון], dans-Jeshurun | de: Jeshurun, [וישרון], in-Jeshurun Deut 32:15; Deut 33:5; Deut 33:26; Isa 44:2

יִשָּׂשכָר H3485 Conj-w (43×)
Issachar — ninth son of Jacob and Leah; the Israelite tribe and its territorial allotment
A proper name traditionally parsed as 'there is recompense' (yesh sakhar), reflecting Leah's declaration at his birth: 'God has given me my wages' (Gen 30:18). Issachar designates both the patriarch — Jacob's ninth son and Leah's fifth — and the tribe descended from him. The tribe's territory lay in the fertile Jezreel Valley, and Jacob's blessing describes Issachar as 'a strong donkey crouching between the saddlebags' (Gen 49:14), a portrait of agrarian contentment. The name appears in genealogies, census lists, tribal allotments, and Davidic military rosters.

Issachar (person/tribe) (43×) The patriarch and the tribe descended from him. Occurrences refer either to Jacob's ninth son (Gen 30:18; 35:23; 46:13) or to the tribe in census lists (Num 1:28-29), allotments (Josh 19:17-23), and genealogies (1 Chr 7:1). Consistent transliteration across languages — Issachar, Isacar, Issaschar — confirms a single proper-noun referent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Issachar, Yissakhar | es: Isacar, Yisajar, Yissajar | fr: Issacar, Yissakhar | de: Issaschar, Jissachar, Jissachars Gen 30:18; Gen 35:23; Gen 46:13; Gen 49:14; Exod 1:3

יָשִׁישׁ H3486 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)
yashesh: aged, decrepit, very old; describing advanced age and physical decline
This adjective describes someone who is aged and decrepit, in the final stages of life. In 2 Chronicles 36:17, it appears in parallel with "old" to emphasize the comprehensive nature of Babylonian violence against Jerusalem—sparing neither the aged nor the young. The term conveys not just chronological age but the physical frailty and decline that accompanies extreme old age.

(1×) An adjective meaning "aged" or "decrepit," appearing in 2 Chronicles 36:17 in the phrase "old and aged." The term emphasizes advanced age with accompanying physical decline, used in a context describing the Babylonians' merciless slaughter that spared no one regardless of age or condition. Translations render this as "aged," "decrepit," or "gray-haired," capturing the image of those in life's final stage who nonetheless received no mercy from the invaders. OLD AGE
en: or-aged | es: ni-canoso | fr: [ויישׁש] | de: [ויישׁש] 2Chr 36:17

יָת H3487 Adv / 3mp (1×)
yat (Aramaic): accusative particle marking the direct object, equivalent to Hebrew 'et
This Aramaic particle marks the direct object of a verb, functioning like the Hebrew 'et. It appears in Daniel 3:12 in the phrase "whom you appointed," where it marks "them" as the direct object. The particle is common in Aramaic dialects including Biblical Aramaic, Targums, Syriac, and epigraphic texts from Palmyra and Nabatea.

(1×) An Aramaic accusative particle appearing in Daniel 3:12, equivalent to Hebrew 'et. It marks the direct object of the verb "appoint" ("whom you appointed"). This particle is characteristic of Aramaic syntax, appearing in various dialects including Biblical Aramaic, Targumic literature, and ancient inscriptions. Translations typically do not render this particle explicitly in English, as accusative marking is not required in English syntax for direct objects. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: them | es: a-ellos | fr: asseoir | de: [יתהון] Dan 3:12

יְתַב H3488 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (5×)
Aramaic verb: to sit, dwell, be seated; causative: to settle or cause to dwell
This Aramaic verb appears exclusively in the books of Ezra and Daniel, where it carries the primary meanings of sitting (especially in a judicial context) and dwelling. In Daniel 7:9-10, it describes the Ancient of Days taking his seat for judgment – a scene of cosmic authority. In Ezra 4:17, it refers to peoples dwelling in a region, while the causative (Haphel) form in Ezra 4:10 describes forced resettlement of populations. It is the Aramaic cognate of the common Hebrew yashav.

(5×) To sit or be seated, particularly in a context of authority or judgment. The multilingual evidence converges on 'sat/seated' (English 'sat,' Spanish 'se sentó,' French 'asseoir'). Used in Daniel 7:9-10 and 7:26 for the divine judge taking his throne, the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew yashav carries the full weight of royal and judicial enthronement in the apocalyptic vision. SITTING AND DWELLING
en: and-settled, dwelling, sat | es: habitan, se-sentará, se-sentó | fr: [והוותב], [יתבין], asseoir | de: [והוותב], [יתב], [יתבין] Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:17; Dan 7:9; Dan 7:10; Dan 7:26

יָתֵד H3489 N-fs (24×)
Peg, pin, or stake used to secure tents, anchor structures, or serve as a tool in weaving
The Hebrew yathed denotes a peg or pin driven into the ground or a wall. Most frequently it appears in Exodus and Numbers as the pegs securing the tabernacle curtains and ropes, paired with the cords (metharim) that held God's dwelling taut. In Judges 4-5, Jael's tent peg becomes an unforgettable weapon. Isaiah uses it metaphorically: Zion's stakes will never be pulled up (33:20), and her boundaries must be enlarged (54:2). The word also describes a weaving pin (Judg 16:14) and a peg fixed in a sure place for hanging vessels (Isa 22:23-25), where it symbolizes a dependable leader.

1. tent peg (19×) The standard tent peg — a pointed wooden or metal spike hammered into the ground to anchor ropes and curtains. Dominates the tabernacle descriptions in Exodus 27, 35, 38-39 and Numbers 3-4, where the pegs are consistently listed alongside the cords (metharim). Spanish 'estaca' and French 'piquet' both preserve the concrete, functional sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-peg-of, a-peg, and-its-pegs | es: Y-estaca, a-la-estaca, clavija | fr: -le-peg-de, [הַיִּתֵד], [יִתֵּד] | de: -der-peg-von, [הַיִּתֵד], [יִתֵּד] Exod 27:19; Exod 35:18; Exod 38:20; Exod 38:31

2. stake for tent security (3×) A stake securing a tent's boundary, carrying metaphorical weight for permanence and expansion. In Isaiah 33:20 the stakes of Zion's tent 'will never be pulled up,' and in 54:2 God commands stretching the curtains and strengthening the stakes — a picture of covenant security. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'sus estacas,' French 'son piquets') confirms the architectural stability nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-your-stakes, its-pegs, its-stakes | es: sus-estacas, y-tus-estacas | fr: [יִתְדֹתֶיךָ], [יִתְדֹתָיו], son-piquets | de: [יִתְדֹתֶיךָ], [יִתְדֹתָיו], sein-pegs Exod 27:19; Isa 33:20; Isa 54:2

3. pin for weaving or hanging (2×) A pin used in weaving or mounted in a wall for hanging objects. In Judges 16:14 Delilah fastens Samson's hair with the weaver's pin (yethad), and in Isaiah 22:23-25 a peg fixed in a sure place symbolizes Eliakim's dependable leadership — until God removes it. Spanish 'estaca' and French 'pin' both track the functional tool sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-pin, with-the-pin | es: con-la-estaca, la-estaca-de | fr: avec-le-pin, le-pin | de: der-pin, mit-der-pin Judg 16:14

יָתוֹם H3490 Conj-w (42×)

orphan, fatherless child — one deprived of a father, paradigmatic figure of vulnerability in Israelite law

Yatom designates a child who has lost a father, and it appears 42 times almost always in the company of almanah ('widow') and ger ('sojourner') — the three forming the classic triad of vulnerable persons in Israelite covenant law. Deuteronomy alone accounts for a dozen occurrences, weaving the orphan into harvest gleaning rights (24:19-21), festival inclusion (16:11, 14), and tithe distribution (26:12-13). The prophets pick up the charge: Isaiah opens his ministry demanding Israel 'defend the fatherless' (1:17), and Malachi names exploitation of the orphan as covenant-breaking (3:5). The Psalms affirm that God himself is 'father of the fatherless' (68:6). Cognates across Semitic languages — Aramaic yatma, Arabic yatim — confirm the deep antiquity of this social category.

orphan, fatherless child (42×) A fatherless child, paradigmatic figure of social vulnerability in covenant law. Participates in the formulaic triad yatom-almanah-ger ('orphan-widow-sojourner') across legal (Deut 10:18; 24:17), prophetic (Isa 1:17; Jer 7:6; Zech 7:10), and wisdom (Job 29:12; 31:17) literature. Lamentations 5:3 extends it metaphorically to exilic Israel. Arabic yatim and Aramaic yatma attest pan-Semitic antiquity. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: for-the-orphan, orphan, the-fatherless | es: Al-huérfano, al-huérfano, del-huérfano | fr: orphelin, pour-le-orphelin | de: Waise, [יְתוֹם], der-Waise Exod 22:22; Exod 22:24; Deut 10:18; Deut 14:29; Deut 16:11

יְתוּר H3491 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to search, explore; a searching (noun form derived from the root)

This rare verbal form appears only in Job 39:8, describing the wild goat's activity of exploring or searching its mountain terrain for food. The context paints a picture of an untamed creature ranging freely across rugged landscapes, investigating every potential grazing spot. The multilingual evidence shows translators wrestling with this hapax legomenon, with some rendering it as a verb of exploration and others leaving it untranslated.

(1×) Used in Job 39:8 to describe the wild goat's behavior of searching or exploring mountainous terrain for sustenance. The Spanish 'explora' captures the active investigative sense, while English translations vary between treating this as a verbal form or a nominal 'searching.' The word connects to the semantic domain of mental activity because searching implies purposeful investigation rather than mere wandering. SEEKING AND SEARCHING en: it-explores | es: Explora | fr: יִתּוֹר | de: [יִתּוֹר] Job 39:8

יַתִּיר H3492 N-proper-fs (4×)

Jattir, a Levitical city in the hill country of Judah, southwest of Hebron

Jattir was a town in the hill country of Judah, assigned to the Levites as one of their cities. David sent spoils there after his victory over the Amalekites, suggesting it was a friendly town that had supported him during his fugitive years. Ancient sources identify it with a village about twenty miles from Eleutheropolis, possibly modern 'Attir located between Hebron and Beersheba, though the identification isn't certain.

(4×) Jattir appears in the allotment of Judah's hill country towns (Josh 15:48), designated as a Levitical city given to the Kohathite priests (Josh 21:14; 1Chr 6:57), and named among the towns to which David sent spoil after defeating the Amalekites (1Sam 30:27). The Septuagint renders it variously as Iether, Iethēr, Aiēlom, Getthōr, showing Greek uncertainty about the Hebrew consonants. Spanish Jatir, French Jattir/dans-Jattir, and German Jattir/Jeter/in-Jattir preserve phonetic approximations with some prepositional marking. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Jattir, Yattir, and-Yattir | es: Jatir, Yatir, en-Jatir | fr: Jattir, [יִתֵּר], dans-Jattir | de: Jattir, Jeter, in-Jattir Josh 15:48; Josh 21:14; 1Sam 30:27; 1Chr 6:57

יַתִּיר H3493 Adj-fs (8×)

Excellent, surpassing (attributive adjective); exceedingly, extraordinarily (adverbial intensifier) — Aramaic, in Daniel

The Aramaic adjective יַתִּיר (yattir), cognate with Hebrew יוֹתֵר from the root meaning 'to exceed,' appears exclusively in the book of Daniel to express superlative quality or extreme degree. As an attributive adjective, it describes the extraordinary spirit in Daniel that distinguished him above the other administrators (Dan 6:3) and the surpassing wisdom and understanding found in him (Dan 5:12, 14). As an adverbial intensifier, it heightens descriptions to the extreme: Nebuchadnezzar's dream-image was 'exceedingly' brilliant (Dan 2:31), the furnace was heated 'exceedingly' beyond normal (Dan 3:22), and the fourth beast was 'exceedingly' dreadful (Dan 7:7, 19).

1. excellent, surpassing (attributive) (4×) The attributive use describing a quality of pre-eminence, excellence, or surpassing nature inherent in a person or thing. In Daniel 6:3 an 'excellent spirit' (רוּחַ יַתִּירָא) was found in Daniel, setting him apart from the other officials. Daniel 5:12 and 5:14 similarly describe surpassing wisdom, knowledge, and understanding as personal attributes. Daniel 4:36 marks the restoration of Nebuchadnezzar's 'surpassing' majesty. Spanish 'extraordinaria/extraordinario' and French 'excellent' align with this qualitative, inherent-excellence reading. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: excellent, surpassing | es: extraordinaria, extraordinario | fr: excellent | de: ausserordentlich Dan 4:36; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:14; Dan 6:3

2. exceedingly, greatly (adverbial intensifier) (4×) The adverbial-intensifier use meaning 'exceedingly,' 'greatly,' or 'to an extreme degree,' modifying a verb or another adjective rather than standing as a predicated quality. The great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream was 'exceedingly' bright (Dan 2:31), the furnace was heated 'exceedingly' beyond its norm (Dan 3:22), and the fourth beast was 'exceedingly' terrifying and different from all the others (Dan 7:7, 19). Spanish 'en extremo' and 'excesivamente' confirm the degree-modifier function, marking a clear functional boundary from the attributive-adjectival sense. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: exceedingly, extraordinary | es: en-extremo, excesivamente, extraordinario | fr: excellent | de: ausserordentlich Dan 2:31; Dan 3:22; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19

יִתְלָה H3494 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Yithlah, a town in the territory of Dan (southern region)
Yithlah appears once in the territorial allotment lists of Joshua 19:42 as a city assigned to the tribe of Dan. The ancient Greek translations (Septuagint) render it variously as Silatha or Ithla, suggesting some uncertainty about the exact pronunciation or identification of this location. Like many settlement names in the boundary lists, its precise location remains unidentified by modern archaeology, though it belonged to Dan's southern inheritance near the border with Judah.

(1×) A place name in southern Dan's territory mentioned in Joshua 19:42. The multilingual glosses preserve the transliteration with slight variations (Jetla in Spanish, Yithlah in French/German), a common pattern for proper names whose etymological meaning is uncertain. The Greek Septuagint's variant readings suggest this was already a challenging toponym in antiquity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Yithlah | es: y-Jetla | fr: et-Yithlah | de: und-Yithlah Josh 19:42

יִתְמָה H3495 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Yitmah, one of David's mighty warriors, called 'the Moabite'
Yitmah is named among David's elite fighting force, the mighty men catalogued in 1 Chronicles 11:46. He is identified by the epithet 'the Moabite,' suggesting he was either from Moab or had Moabite ancestry. The Greek Septuagint renders his name as Iethama. The inclusion of foreign warriors among David's closest military companions reflects the diverse and international character of his army during his reign.

(1×) Personal name of a warrior in David's special forces (1 Chronicles 11:46). The conjunction 'and' prefix in Hebrew indicates this name appears in a list context. Some translations leave the name untransliterated in brackets, acknowledging textual or interpretive challenges with this less common personal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Yitmah | es: y-Yitmá | fr: [ויתמה] | de: [ויתמה] 1Chr 11:46

יִתְנִיאֵל H3496 N-proper-ms (1×)
Yatniel, a Levite temple gatekeeper; name meaning 'El hires' or 'El gives'
Yatniel appears in the Chronicler's detailed lists of temple personnel, specifically among the gatekeepers assigned to guard the entrances of the sanctuary (1 Chronicles 26:2). His name is theophoric, containing the divine element 'El' and possibly derived from a root meaning 'to hire' or 'to give.' The Greek versions show considerable variation (Ienouēl, Nathanaēl), reflecting typical scribal challenges with Hebrew proper names.

(1×) Personal name of a Levitical gatekeeper in 1 Chronicles 26:2. The name's theophoric structure (ending in -el for 'God') was common among Levites. Translators generally preserve the name phonetically, though some leave it in Hebrew characters, indicating uncertainty about the proper vocalization of this rare name that appears only once in Scripture. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yatniel | es: Jatniel | fr: [יתניאל] | de: [יתניאל] 1Chr 26:2

יִתְנָן H3497 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Ithnan, a town in the southern Negeb region of Judah
Ithnan is listed among the settlements in Judah's southernmost territory, the Negeb, in Joshua 15:23. It appears immediately before Ziph in the boundary description, though both the ancient Greek versions and modern scholars struggle to identify its exact location. The etymology is uncertain (marked as 'dubious' in BDB), and like many Negeb towns, it may have been abandoned or absorbed into other settlements in later periods, leaving no clear archaeological trace.

(1×) A settlement name in Judah's Negeb listed in Joshua 15:23. The multilingual translations maintain transliteration (Itnán in Spanish, Ithnan in French/German/English), standard practice for place names whose meaning is unknown. The conjunction 'and' prefix shows this town appears in a series of boundary markers defining Judah's southern territory. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Ithnan | es: y-Itnán | fr: et-Ithnan | de: und-Ithnan Josh 15:23

יָתַר H3498 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (107×)
To remain over, be left, survive; in Hifil, to leave remaining, preserve alive, or cause to abound and exceed.
The verb yatar captures the idea of surplus and survival — what is left over after the main portion is removed. In its Nifal stem it describes remnants of offerings (Exod 12:10; Lev 2:3), survivors of battles, and whatever remains after destruction. The Hifil causative adds intentionality: to leave something remaining on purpose, to preserve alive, or — in a striking semantic extension — to cause abundance and excess (Deut 28:11; Gen 49:4). Spanish alternates between quedar (remain) and dejar (leave/cause to remain), while the Hifil abundance sense draws sobrar (exceed) and hacer abundar, revealing a real semantic boundary within the causative stem itself.

1. the remaining, remnant (Nifal participle) (53×) The Nifal participle used as a substantive meaning 'the remainder,' 'the rest,' or 'the remnant' — functioning essentially as a noun. At 53 occurrences this is the most frequent usage, appearing in ritual instructions about leftover offerings (Exod 12:10; Lev 2:3), lists of remaining tribes or territories (Exod 28:10), and historical summaries of surviving peoples. Spanish lo sobrante/la restante and German der Rest confirm the nominal, 'leftover' quality of this participle. French sometimes paraphrases with le remaining, showing the challenge of capturing the substantival force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-remainder, the-remaining | es: Y-lo-sobrante, la-restante, los-que-quedaron | fr: et-le-remainder, laisser, le-remaining | de: der-remaining, uebriglassen, und-der-Rest Gen 30:36; Exod 12:10; Exod 28:10; Exod 29:34; Lev 2:3

2. remain, be left (Nifal) (30×) Nifal finite verb forms expressing the stative or passive sense of remaining behind, being left over, or surviving after others have departed or been destroyed. Jacob 'was left alone' at Peniel (Gen 32:24), the youngest son 'remains' with his father (Gen 44:20), and nothing 'was left' after the locusts (Exod 10:15). Spanish quedar/quedaron and German bleiben consistently select stative verbs of remaining, distinguishing these 30 occurrences from the participial-nominal usage of Sense 1 by their finite verbal force — these describe events of remaining, not static categories of leftovers. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: and-I-remain, and-he-remains, and-is-left | es: Y-quedaron, Y-quedó, hubiera-quedado | fr: avait-été-gauche, et-il-reste, et-je-reste | de: [ויותר], [ויותרו], bleibe Gen 32:24; Gen 44:20; Exod 10:15; Exod 29:34; Num 26:65

3. leave remaining, preserve (Hifil) (18×) Hifil causative forms meaning to cause to remain, leave over deliberately, or preserve alive — the agent chooses to leave a surplus or spare survivors. Instructions not to 'leave any of it until morning' (Exod 12:10; Lev 22:30) and promises like 'I will leave a remnant' use this stem. Spanish dejar (to leave) and dejar sobrevivir (to leave surviving) capture the causative agency, as does German bewahren (to preserve). The 18 occurrences cluster in ritual law and prophetic promises of preservation. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: and-I-shall-leave, and-I-shall-leave-remaining, and-having-left-over | es: Y-dejaré, Y-dejaré-sobrevivir, deja-en-vida | fr: elle-gauche-sur, et-elle-avait-gauche-sur, et-gauche | de: [והותרה], [ותתר], bewahren Exod 10:15; Exod 12:10; Exod 16:19; Exod 16:20; Lev 22:30

4. have abundance, exceed (Hifil) (6×) A distinctive Hifil extension expressing excess, abundance, or preeminence — going beyond mere remainder to suggest overflowing surplus. Reuben's 'preeminence in dignity' (Gen 49:4), the materials that 'were more than enough' for the tabernacle (Exod 36:7), and the covenant promise that God 'will make you abound' (Deut 28:11; 30:9). Spanish hacer abundar and tener preeminencia, along with German Vorrang haben (have precedence), clearly distinguish this quantitative-excellence sense from the neutral 'leave remaining' of Sense 3. Only 6 occurrences, but semantically sharp. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: and-having-left-over, and-left-over, and-makes-you-abound | es: Y-te-hará-abundar, tendrás-preeminencia, y-sobraba | fr: avoir-preeminence, et-gauche-au-dessus, et-having-gauche-au-dessus | de: sollst-du-Vorrang-haben, und-having-linke-ueber, und-linke-ueber Gen 49:4; Exod 36:7; Deut 28:11; Deut 30:9; 2Kgs 4:43

יֶתֶר H3499a N-msc / 3mp (95×)

Remainder, rest, or remnant of a group; also excellence or pre-eminence, surplus or abundance, and adverbially 'exceedingly.'
The Hebrew noun yeter (יֶתֶר) appears nearly a hundred times, overwhelmingly in the formulaic phrase 'and the rest of the acts of [king]' that punctuates the books of Kings and Chronicles. This 'remainder' sense — what is left over after counting — dominates the word's profile. But Jacob's blessing over Reuben reveals a different dimension: 'excellence of dignity and excellence of power' (Gen 49:3), where yeter denotes superiority or preeminence. Spanish captures both faces — 'resto' for the remainder, 'excelencia' for the distinction. A third sense emerges in wisdom and psalmic poetry, where the 'surplus' of the wicked or the 'abundance' stored up by the faithful shades into overflow and excess (Ps 17:14; Job 22:20).

1. rest, remainder, remnant (87×) The dominant sense: the remaining portion or people of a group, frequently in the construct phrase 'the rest of the acts of...' throughout Kings and Chronicles. English renders it 'rest' or 'remainder,' Spanish 'resto,' French 'reste,' German 'Rest.' This covers remnants of crops left by locusts (Joel 1:4), remaining vessels in Jerusalem (Jer 27:19), and the residue of a tribal allotment (Deut 3:13). The implied sense is what is left after the primary portion has been accounted for. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-remainder-of, and-rest-of | es: Y-el-resto-de, Y-resto-de, y-el-resto-de | fr: et-repos-de, et-reste-de | de: und-Ruhe-von, und-remainder-von, und-ruhe-von Deut 3:13; 1Sam 13:2; 1Kgs 11:41; 1Kgs 14:19; 1Kgs 14:29

2. excellence, preeminence (3×) Superiority, distinction, or preeminence in quality — an 'excess' of dignity or power. Jacob blesses Reuben as 'preeminent in dignity and preeminent in power' (Gen 49:3), where yeter marks not a leftover but a surpassing quality. Spanish uses 'excelencia,' German 'Vorrang' (precedence). Proverbs 17:7 extends this to speech that is 'excellent' or above what is fitting. The root idea of 'more than' shifts from quantitative remainder to qualitative superiority. MORE AND GREATER
en: and-preeminent-in, excellence, preeminent-in | es: excelencia, excelencia-de, y-excelencia-de | fr: et-preeminent-dans, preeminent-dans, יתר | de: Rest, Vorrang, und-Vorrang Gen 49:3; Prov 17:7

3. surplus, abundance (3×) Surplus, overflow, or abundance beyond what is needed — material excess. The wicked's 'surplus' is consumed by fire (Job 22:20); God fills the bellies of the psalmist's enemies with 'their stored-up treasure' or 'abundance' (Ps 17:14). Spanish oscillates between 'abundancia' and 'lo que sobró' (what was left over), while German reaches for 'Überfluss' (overflow). This sense bridges the gap between remainder and excess. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: abundance, and-their-abundance, their-surplus | es: abundancia, su-resto, y-lo-que-sobró-de-ellos | fr: et-leur-יִתְרָם-eux, reste | de: ihr-surplus, und-Rest, Überfluss Job 22:20; Ps 17:14; Ps 31:23

4. exceedingly, more (2×) Adverbial deployment meaning 'exceedingly' or 'more,' indicating an extraordinary degree. Isaiah 56:12 envisions a tomorrow that will be 'exceedingly greater' than today; Daniel 8:9 describes a horn that grew 'exceedingly' in various directions. Spanish renders this with 'mucho' (very much). Here the noun has become a pure intensifier, retaining the root's sense of 'beyond the norm' while shedding its nominal character. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: exceedingly, more | es: mucho | fr: reste | de: Jeter, Rest Isa 56:12; Dan 8:9

יֶתֶר H3499b N-ms (7×)

A cord or string — either a bowstring for a weapon or a tent rope, from a root meaning to hang down or stretch.
This noun yeter (II) denotes a cord or string, branching into two usage contexts in the Hebrew Bible. In the Samson narrative (Judg 16:7-9), it refers to fresh, undried bowstrings used to bind the strongman — the same term appears in Ps 11:2 where the wicked 'fit their arrow to the string.' In Job, the word shifts to tent ropes: 'is not their tent cord pulled up within them?' (Job 4:21). Arabic watarun (bowstring, lute-string) and Ethiopic wetr (sinew, cord) confirm the core semantic thread of something stretched taut. Spanish distinguishes the two nicely: 'cuerdas de arco' (bowstrings) versus 'su cuerda de tienda' (their tent cord).

1. bowstring (4×) A bowstring — the cord strung on a bow for shooting arrows. In Judg 16:7-9, Samson tells Delilah that seven fresh yetarim (bowstrings) would weaken him; when she binds him, he snaps them 'as a strand of tow snaps at a touch of fire.' In Ps 11:2 the wicked set their arrow 'on the string' (yeter). Spanish 'cuerdas de arco' and French 'cordes d'arc' both specify the archery context. The Arabic cognate watarun similarly denotes a bowstring or lute-string. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bowstrings, the-bowstrings, the-string | es: cuerdas-de-arco, la-cuerda, las-cuerdas | fr: corde, cordes-d'arc, le-cordes-d'arc | de: bowstrings, der-bowstrings, der-string Judg 16:7; Judg 16:8; Judg 16:9; Ps 11:2

2. tent cord, rope (3×) A tent rope or general cord used in domestic settings, distinct from the specialized bowstring. Job 4:21 asks, 'is not their tent cord (yitram) pulled up within them?' — a metaphor for life's fragile tether. Job 30:11 uses the term for the cord or restraint that God has loosened. Spanish 'su cuerda de tienda' (their tent cord) captures this domestic sense, while the Qere/Ketiv variation in Job 30:11 (yitro vs. yitri) shows scribal awareness of the word's ambiguity. CHAINS AND FETTERS
en: [K], my-cord, their-tent-cord | es: (mi-cuerda), [mi-cuerda], su-cuerda-de-tienda | fr: leur-reste-eux, mon-reste-moi, son-reste-lui | de: [(יתרי)], [[יתרו]], [יתרם] Job 4:21; Job 30:11

יֶתֶר H3500 N-proper-ms (9×)

Jether (Yeter) — a proper name meaning 'abundance,' borne by several OT figures including Gideon's son and the father of Amasa.
Yeter (יֶתֶר, 'abundance, excellence') is a masculine proper name shared by at least five individuals in the Old Testament. The most prominent is Jether the Ishmaelite (also called Ithra), father of David's general Amasa (1 Kgs 2:5; 1 Chr 2:17). Another notable bearer is Gideon's firstborn son, too young to slay the Midianite kings (Judg 8:20). The name also appears for men of Judah (1 Chr 2:32; 4:17) and of Asher (1 Chr 7:38). Its meaning, rooted in the idea of surplus or preeminence, is transparent in Hebrew and connects to the related name Jethro (יִתְרוֹ).

Yeter / Jether (proper noun) (9×) A masculine proper noun derived from the root י-ת-ר meaning 'remainder, abundance, excellence.' Applied to at least five distinct individuals: (a) Jether, Gideon's eldest son commanded to execute Zebah and Zalmunna but too afraid to draw his sword (Judg 8:20); (b) Jether the Ishmaelite, father of Amasa whom Absalom appointed over the army (1 Kgs 2:5, 32; 1 Chr 2:17); (c–d) two Judahites (1 Chr 2:32; 4:17); (e) an Asherite equivalent to Ithran (1 Chr 7:38). Spanish renders uniformly as Yéter, while English and German use Jether. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: Jether, Yeter, Yether | es: Yeter, Yéter, a-Yéter | fr: Jether, Jéther, à-Jether | de: Jeter, Jether, zu-Jether Exod 4:18; Judg 8:20; 1Kgs 2:5; 1Kgs 2:32; 1Chr 2:17

יִתְרָא H3501 N-proper-ms (1×)

Yitra, father of Amasa; alternate form of Jether Yitra appears in 2 Samuel 17:25 as the father of Amasa, David's nephew who briefly served as army commander during Absalom's rebellion. This name is an alternate form of Jether, the same individual mentioned elsewhere in Samuel. The variation in spelling (Yitra vs. Yether/Jether) reflects common Hebrew phonetic interchanges. Amasa's parentage is significant because it connects him to David's extended family, making the civil war dimension of Absalom's revolt particularly tragic.

(1×) Personal name of Amasa's father in 2 Samuel 17:25. Cross-reference with BDB shows this is variant spelling of 'Jether.' The consistent transliteration across languages (Yitrá in Spanish, Yitra in French/German/English) maintains the Hebrew form, though some English versions use 'Ithra' following different vocalization traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Yitra | es: Yitrá | fr: Yitra | de: Yitra 2Sam 17:25

יִתְרָה H3502 N-fsc (2×)

Abundance, riches; appears in parallel oracles against Moab (Isa 15:7; Jer 48:36)

This feminine noun denotes abundance or accumulated wealth, appearing in nearly identical prophetic oracles against Moab. The phrase "the abundance they have acquired" describes the possessions Moabites will carry away in their flight from judgment. The parallel passages in Isaiah and Jeremiah show slight variation in vowel pointing (yithrah vs. yithrath), demonstrating the textual relationship between these two prophetic books while maintaining semantic equivalence.

(2×) Found in Isaiah 15:7 and Jeremiah 48:36 in parallel Moab oracles. Both contexts describe fugitives carrying their accumulated wealth across the Brook of the Willows (or to the foundations). The construct form in Jeremiah shows the noun's grammatical flexibility. All major translations render it as abundance, surplus, or riches, capturing the sense of accumulated possessions now vulnerable to loss. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance | es: abundancia-que, la-abundancia | fr: [יתרה], [תרת] | de: [יתרה], [תרת] Isa 15:7; Jer 48:36

יִתְרוֹ H3503 N-proper-ms (9×)

Jethro (Yitro) — Moses' father-in-law, priest of Midian, who counseled the establishment of Israel's judicial system.

Jethro (יִתְרוֹ, Yitrō) is the Midianite priest and father-in-law of Moses, appearing exclusively in the Elohist source of Exodus. He kept his flock at Horeb where Moses encountered the burning bush (Exod 3:1), and later visited the Israelite camp bringing Moses' wife and sons. His most lasting contribution was advising Moses to delegate judicial authority to capable subordinates (Exod 18:13–26), a passage that became foundational for Israelite governance. The name is an extended form of Yeter (יֶתֶר, H3500), meaning 'his abundance.' The Septuagint consistently renders Ιοθορ across all nine occurrences.

(9×) The proper name of Moses' father-in-law, identified as a priest of Midian (Exod 3:1). All nine occurrences cluster in Exodus 3–18, within the Elohist strand: tending flocks at the mountain of God (3:1), sending Moses to Egypt with his blessing (4:18), and the famous reunion where he offers sacrifices and advises judicial delegation (18:1–12). The variant Yeter (יֶתֶר) in Exod 4:18a is widely regarded as a scribal variant of the same figure. Multilingual renderings — Spanish Yitro, French Jéthro, German Jitro — all preserve the distinctive long-o ending that distinguishes this name from the shorter Yeter. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jethro | es: Yitro | fr: Jéthro | de: Jitro Exod 3:1; Exod 4:18; Exod 18:1; Exod 18:2; Exod 18:5

יִתְרוֹן H3504 Conj-w / N-msc (10×)

Profit, advantage, gain — the net surplus or benefit from labor or wisdom; exclusively a Qoheleth term

Found only in Ecclesiastes, this noun captures Qoheleth's signature question: what lasting gain does a person achieve under the sun? It functions almost as a commercial accounting term — the net surplus after all effort is reckoned. Qoheleth deploys it ten times to interrogate every human endeavor, from back-breaking toil (1:3; 3:9) to the pursuit of wisdom itself (2:13; 7:12). The multilingual evidence is strikingly consistent: Spanish 'provecho/ventaja,' French 'profit,' German 'Vorteil' — all converging on material benefit, reinforcing that Qoheleth frames life's deepest questions in the language of the marketplace.

profit, advantage, gain (10×) The noun yithrôn denotes profit, advantage, or surplus — what remains as net gain after exertion. Ecclesiastes alone uses it, making it a hallmark of Qoheleth's vocabulary. The recurring question mah-yithrôn lā'ādām ('what profit has a person?' Eccl 1:3; 5:16) frames the entire book's existential inquiry. It can take a comparative sense with min ('advantage over,' Eccl 2:13) or a construct ('advantage of knowledge,' 7:12; 'advantage of skill,' 10:10). Spanish 'ventaja' and 'provecho,' French 'profit,' and German 'Vorteil' all confirm the concrete economic flavor — a calculated remainder, not an abstract philosophical concept. GAIN AND GREED

en: advantage, and-profit-of, and-the-advantage-of | es: Y-ventaja-de, como-ventaja-de, provecho | fr: comme-profit, et-profit, profit | de: Vorteil, [כיתרון], und-Vorteil Eccl 1:3; Eccl 2:11; Eccl 2:13; Eccl 3:9

יִתְרִי H3505 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

The Ithrite, a gentilic designation for members of a Kiriath-jearim clan in Judah

Ha-Yithri ('the Ithrite') is a gentilic adjective always appearing with the definite article, designating members of a clan connected to Kiriath-jearim in Judah (1 Chr 2:53). Two of David's mighty warriors, Ira and Gareb, are identified as Ithrites in the parallel hero lists of 2 Samuel 23:38 and 1 Chronicles 11:40. The Septuagint renders the name variously (Αιθειραιος, Ηθηρει), reflecting the typical fluidity of proper names in Greek transmission.

(5×) A gentilic designation ('the Ithrite') identifying members of a Judahite clan from Kiriath-jearim. English consistently renders 'the Ithrite,' and Spanish 'el yitrita,' both preserving the definite article that always accompanies this term. Applied to two of David's elite warriors (Ira and Gareb) in 2 Sam 23:38 and 1 Chr 11:40, and listed collectively among the families of Kiriath-jearim in 1 Chr 2:53. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Ithrite, the-Yithri | es: el-yitrita | fr: Ithrite, le-Ithrite | de: [היתרי], der-Ithrite 2Sam 23:38; 1Chr 2:53; 1Chr 11:40

יִתְרָן H3506 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Yithran/Ithran, personal name (Edomite, Asherite)

A personal name appearing for two different individuals in genealogical lists: an Edomite descendant of Seir the Horite (Genesis 36:26 = 1 Chronicles 1:41), and a man of Asher (1 Chronicles 7:37, possibly identical with Jether mentioned earlier in the genealogy). The name's etymology is uncertain but may relate to the root יתר (to remain, be left over, excel). The Greek versions vary widely (Ιθραν, Θερα, Ιεθερ), showing the typical challenges of transliterating Hebrew names. The dual usage across Edomite and Israelite lineages demonstrates that certain names crossed ethnic boundaries in the ancient Near East.

(3×) A personal name borne by at least two individuals from different ethnic groups. The Edomite Yithran appears in the Horite genealogies that Genesis preserves, showing the biblical writers' interest in tracking Edomite lineages (Israel's brother nation descended from Esau). The Asherite usage shows the name also circulated among Israelite tribes. The conjunction 'and Yithran' in the glosses simply reflects the typical genealogical list format ('A and B and C'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ithran, and-Yithran, and-Yitran | es: y-Yitran, y-Yitrán | fr: [ויתרן], et-Ithran | de: [ויתרן], und-Jitran Gen 36:26; 1Chr 1:41; 1Chr 7:37

יִתְרְעָם H3507 N-proper-ms (2×)

Yithre'am/Yitream, David's sixth son born in Hebron (2 Sam 3:5; 1 Chr 3:3)

This personal name designates the youngest of David's six sons born during his seven-year reign in Hebron, before he captured Jerusalem.

His mother was Eglah, described as David's wife in a way that has sparked speculation about her possible identity with Michal. Yitream receives no further mention in biblical narrative, suggesting he died young or played no significant role in the succession struggles that dominate the later David story.

(2×) Attested in 2 Samuel 3:5 and 1 Chronicles 3:3 in parallel birth lists. The Septuagint shows variation (Itharam, Iethraam), reflecting standard transliteration practice. As the sixth son, Yitream had no realistic claim to the throne, and his absence from later narratives stands in stark contrast to the prominence of Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah in the succession crisis. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Yithre'am, Yitream | es: Yitream | fr: Yitream, [יִתְרְעָם] | de: Yitream, [יִתְרְעָם] 2Sam 3:5; 1Chr 3:3

יֹתֶרֶת H3508 N-fsc (11×)

Lobe/appendage of the liver — the caudate lobe, a fatty protrusion burned in Israelite sacrificial ritual

The noun יֹתֶרֶת (yothereth) denotes the appendage or lobe of the liver — almost certainly the caudate lobe, a fatty projection easily separated during butchering. It appears exclusively in sacrificial instructions, always in the phrase 'the yothereth on the liver' (הַיֹּתֶרֶת עַל הַכָּבֵד). This lobe was burned on the altar as part of the fat portions offered to YHWH in burnt offerings, peace offerings, and sin offerings (Exod 29:13, 22; Lev 3:4, 10, 15; 4:9; 7:4; 8:16, 25; 9:10, 19). Its consistent inclusion alongside the kidneys and the fat tail reflects the Priestly concern for specifying exactly which visceral fats belonged to God.

lobe, appendage (of the liver) (11×) The caudate lobe or fatty appendage of the liver, a specific anatomical protrusion designated for burning on the altar in Israelite sacrificial ritual. Always appears in the stereotyped phrase 'the appendage on the liver' alongside the kidneys and suet in instructions for burnt offerings (Exod 29:13, 22), peace offerings (Lev 3:4, 10, 15), sin offerings (Lev 4:9), and ordination rites (Lev 8:16, 25; 9:10, 19). Spanish 'lóbulo del hígado' and English 'lobe of the liver' both render the anatomical specificity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-appendage-of, appendage-of, the-appendage | es: el-lóbulo, el-lóbulo-de, lóbulo-de | fr: appendice-de, et-le-appendage-de, le-appendage | de: appendage-von, der-Anhang, der-Anhang-von Exod 29:13; Exod 29:22; Lev 3:4; Lev 3:10; Lev 3:15

יִתְּת H3509 N-proper-ms (2×)

Yetheth/Jetheth, an Edomite chief listed in Genesis 36:40 and 1 Chronicles 1:51

This personal name designates one of the Edomite chiefs descended from Esau, appearing in the genealogical lists that establish Edom's political structure before Israel had kings. The name appears in the formulaic roster of Edomite alluphs (chiefs or clan leaders), showing the parallel development of Edomite and Israelite societies. The Septuagint shows variation (Ieber, Iethet, Iether), reflecting the transliteration challenges with Edomite names.

(2×) Found in Genesis 36:40 and 1 Chronicles 1:51 in parallel Edomite genealogies. Both contexts present him as one of the chiefs of Edom, part of the political organization that governed Esau's descendants. The lists emphasize that Edom developed structured leadership before Israel did ("before any king reigned over the Israelites"), an acknowledgment of Edomite political precedence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Jetheth, Yetheth | es: Yetet | fr: Jetheth, [יתת] | de: Jetet, [יתת] Gen 36:40; 1Chr 1:51

כָּאַב H3510 V-Hifil-Perf-1cs / 3ms (8×)

To be in pain or cause pain; physical anguish, emotional grief, or (by extension) ruin and destruction

A verb rooted in the raw experience of pain – bodily and emotional alike. In Genesis 34:25 the men of Shechem are still 'in pain' from circumcision, and in Proverbs 14:13 the heart itself aches beneath laughter. The Hifil causative turns the sufferer into an agent: God 'wounds but also binds up' (Job 5:18), and false prophetesses 'pained' the righteous whom the LORD had not grieved (Ezek 13:22). A striking extension appears in 2 Kings 3:19, where the verb means to 'ruin' or 'mar' good land – pain inflicted not on flesh but on a landscape.

1. be in pain, ache (4×) Qal intransitive: to be in pain, to ache – whether the body (Gen 34:25, circumcision soreness) or the heart (Prov 14:13, inner grief behind outward joy). Spanish 'adoloridos' and 'duele' capture both physical and emotional registers. The participial form in Ps 69:29 pairs pain with affliction ('ani), suggesting the overlap of suffering and social vulnerability. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: aches, and-in-pain, in-pain | es: adoloridos, duele, sufre | fr: dans-douleur, et-souffrir, יכאב | de: [יכאב], in-Schmerzen, und-in-pain Gen 34:25; Job 14:22; Ps 69:29; Prov 14:13

2. cause pain, inflict suffering (3×) Hifil causative: to cause pain, to wound or grieve someone. Job 5:18 presents the paradox that God 'wounds yet binds up' (yakʾiv ... yekhabbesh), while Ezek 13:22 indicts those who 'pained the heart of the righteous.' Spanish 'lo entristeci' and English 'wounds' reflect the range from emotional grief to active harm. SUFFERING PAIN

en: I-pained-him, painful, wounds | es: hace-dolor, lo-entristecí, que-causa-dolor | fr: souffrir, יכאיב | de: [הכאבתיו], [יכאיב], [מכאב] Job 5:18; Ezek 13:22; Ezek 28:24

3. ruin, mar (1×) Hifil with extended object: to ruin or mar, moving beyond persons to things. In 2 Kings 3:19, Elisha commands Israel to 'ruin' every good piece of land with stones. The multilingual glosses ('arruinareis,' 'you-shall-ruin') uniformly shift from pain vocabulary to destruction vocabulary, marking a genuine semantic extension from bodily suffering to material devastation. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: you-shall-ruin | es: arruinaréis | fr: tu-devra-ruin | de: du-soll-ruin 2Kgs 3:19

כְּאֵב H3511 N-msc / 1cs (6×)

Pain, anguish — both physical suffering and deep emotional grief, found especially in Job, Isaiah, and Jeremiah.

A masculine noun (כְּאֵב) expressing pain in its fullest range — from raw physical agony to crushing emotional anguish. In Job, it captures both dimensions: the friends sat silent because 'the pain was very great' (Job 2:13), and Job himself cries that speaking does not relieve his pain (Job 16:6). The prophetic books sharpen the word toward national grief: Isaiah 17:11 speaks of incurable pain on the day of harvest — a devastating reversal of agricultural hope. Isaiah 65:14 contrasts the cry of a broken spirit (כְּאֵב לֵב, 'pain of heart') with the singing of God's servants. Jeremiah 15:18 pairs it with an unhealing wound. Psalm 39:2 rounds out the picture with the psalmist's silent suffering.

pain, suffering (6×) Pain, suffering, or anguish — encompassing both physical and emotional dimensions. The word appears with striking consistency in contexts of overwhelming affliction: Job 2:13 (friends mute before extreme suffering), Job 16:6 (speech cannot relieve pain), Ps 39:2 (pain stirred by enforced silence). Prophetically, it intensifies toward national disaster: Isa 17:11 pairs it with incurable disease on the day of reckoning, Isa 65:14 names it as 'pain of heart' (כְּאֵב לֵב) in contrast to eschatological joy, and Jer 15:18 links it to a wound that refuses healing. Spanish 'dolor' and English 'pain' both cover the physical-emotional spectrum the Hebrew intends. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: and-my-pain, and-pain, from-pain-of | es: dolor-mi, el-dolor, mi-dolor | fr: [וכאב], [כאבי], [מכאב] | de: [הכאב], [וכאב], [כאבי] Job 2:13; Job 16:6; Ps 39:2; Isa 17:11; Isa 65:14

H3512 Adj-mp (1×)

crushed ones, afflicted ones, helpless people

This adjective appears in Psalm 10:10 describing vulnerable people who are oppressed and beaten down by the wicked. The context paints a vivid picture of predatory injustice, where the powerful crouch like lions waiting to pounce on the helpless. The Spanish 'desvalidos' (helpless/vulnerable) and German 'Leute' (people) capture different facets—vulnerability and personhood. The psalm's concern for these crushed ones reflects a consistent biblical theme: God's special attention to those society tramples underfoot.

(1×) Plural adjective describing oppressed or crushed people in Psalm 10:10. The multilingual evidence shows semantic range from 'helpless/vulnerable' (Spanish) to 'humiliated' (French) to general 'people' (German). English 'ones' is minimalist. The word derives from a root meaning to crush or beat down, and contextually refers to those systematically exploited by the wicked. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: ones | es: desvalidos | fr: humilier | de: Leute Ps 10:10

כָּאָה H3512a V-Hifil-Inf (3×)

be disheartened, cowed, broken in spirit; lose courage

A verb expressing being disheartened, discouraged, or broken in spirit. The Niphal stem appears in Psalm 109:16 describing a persecuted person who is 'broken of heart' (נִכְאֵה לֵבָב), parallel to 'poor and needy.' Daniel 11:30 uses it to describe a king who 'shall be cowed' or lose heart when his naval expedition fails. The Hiphil infinitive in Ezekiel 13:22 (if correctly read) would mean 'disheartening' or breaking the spirit of the righteous—though the Septuagint and Targum suggest reading this as from כָּאַב (to pain, grieve). The root relates to Arabic words for drawing back timidly or abstaining through fear.

(3×) The emotional and spiritual state of being disheartened, cowed, or broken in courage. Psalm 109's 'broken-hearted one' captures the crushed spirit of someone under relentless persecution. Daniel's king becomes disheartened when his plans fail, showing how military and political reverses break proud spirits. The Ezekiel text (if correctly understood) portrays false prophets as those who break the hearts of the righteous—a spiritual violence parallel to physical persecution. Glosses vary ('disheartened', 'desanimará', 'être lourd') reflecting textual and semantic uncertainties. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: and-broken-of, and-he-shall-be-disheartened, disheartening-of | es: entristecisteis, y-quebrantado-de, y-se-desanimará | fr: et-déshonorer, et-être-lourd, être-lourd | de: [הכאות], [ונכאה], und-zerbrochen-von Ps 109:16; Ezek 13:22; Dan 11:30

כָּאָה H3512b

cowed, subdued (adjective; Psalm 10:10 Qere)

This rare adjective appears in Psalm 10:10 (Qere) describing the 'cowed ones'—people beaten down and subdued by the wicked. The Ketiv offers a different reading (חלכאים), but the Qere suggests חֵיל כָּאִים, 'a host of cowed ones,' painting a picture of the vulnerable and oppressed who fall into the hands of violent oppressors. The textual uncertainty reflects the psalm's difficult transmission, though the theme of the wicked preying on the helpless remains clear in context.

כָּבֵד H3513 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mpc / 3fs (116×)

be heavy (weight); honor, respect; be honored, glorified; make heavy, harden; be/make glorious; be rich

At its core this root means 'be heavy' in a physical sense — hands, yokes, famine, battle. From this concrete meaning radiates a rich semantic field: honoring parents or God (treating them as 'weighty'), being honored or glorified (having weight or substance), hardening the heart (making it heavy and unresponsive), and even being wealthy (heavy with possessions). The Piel actively honors, the Nifal is honored, the Hifil makes heavy or hardens. Arabic ʿ marks the honorific sense, while ʾ captures the physical and metaphorical burden. The dual semantic trajectory — weight leading to honor and weight leading to burden — structures the whole lexical field.

1. honor / show respect (Piel) (30×) The Piel active sense of honoring or showing respect appears 30 times, primarily with parents, elders, and God as objects. Exodus 20:12 commands 'Honor your father and mother,' Numbers 22:17 records Balak's plea to Balaam 'I will honor you greatly.' Arabic ʿ ('honor, make noble'), Korean 공경하다 ('show respect'), and Swahili -heshimu ('respect') consistently distinguish this from physical weight, marking the metaphorical extension where social and spiritual weight equals honor. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: I-will-honor-you, and-we-will-honor-you, but-he-who-honors-Him | es: Honra, honra, honrar | fr: est-honorant, et-honorer-lui, et-nous-sera-honneur-tu | de: Ehre, Ehre-mich, ehren Exod 20:12; Num 22:17; Num 22:37; Num 24:11

2. be heavy (physical weight) (19×) The Qal stative sense of being physically heavy accounts for 19 occurrences covering hands, yokes, famine, and battle. Genesis 18:20 describes the outcry of Sodom as 'heavy,' Exodus 5:9 commands making the labor heavy on the Israelites. This is the concrete, literal root sense from which honor and burden metaphors spring. Arabic retains separate roots for weight and honor, but Hebrew unites them. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: and-heavy, and-was-heavy, and-you-were-heavy | es: Y-se-agravó, Y-se-endureció, Y-se-intensificó | fr: cela-fut-lourd, et-fut-lourd, et-glorifier | de: ehren, ehrte, er-ehrt Gen 18:20; Gen 48:10; Exod 5:9; Judg 1:35; Judg 20:34

3. be honored / be noble (Nifal) (17×) The Nifal sense 'be honored, be noble' appears 17 times, often as a participial substantive meaning 'the honored ones, nobles.' Genesis 34:19 describes Shechem as 'the most honored in his father's house,' 1 Samuel 22:14 calls David 'honored in your house.' This is the passive counterpart of the Piel honoring sense (sense 1), where the subject receives honor or holds a noble status. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: and-honored, and-more-honored, and-their-nobles | es: contra-el-honorable, fuiste-honrado, gloríate | fr: et-glorifier, et-honora, et-plus-honora | de: ehren, ehrte, er-ehrte-sich-selbst Gen 34:19; Num 22:15; 1Sam 9:6; 1Sam 22:14; 2Sam 6:20

4. make heavy / harden (Hifil) (14×) The Hifil causative sense of making heavy, burdening, or hardening appears 14 times, most famously in the hardening of Pharaoh's heart (Exodus 8:15, 32; 9:34; 10:1). 1 Kings 12:10 records Rehoboam's vow to make the yoke heavier than Solomon's. Arabic ʾ ('make heavy, burden') and Korean 완고하게 하다 ('make stubborn') reveal the dual semantic trajectory: physical weight and metaphorical obstinacy. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: He-made-heavy, I-will-make-heavy, and-hardened | es: Y-endureció, agravaron, agravaste | fr: endurcit, et-endurcit, et-être-glorieux | de: ehren, ehrte, machte-schwer Exod 8:15; Exod 8:32; Exod 9:34; Exod 10:1; 1Kgs 12:10

5. be glorified (Nifal of God) (13×) The Nifal imperfect/cohortative sense of God being glorified or getting glory appears 13 times, primarily in Exodus (14:4, 17, 18) and the prophets. 'I will be glorified through Pharaoh' shows God displaying His weightiness — His substantial, undeniable glory — through mighty acts. This is a specialized subset of sense 3 (be honored) where the subject is divine and the context is theophanic. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: (and-I-will-be-glorified), I-will-be-glorified, I-will-be-honored | es: Gloriosas-cosas, [y-seré-glorificado], cuando-me-glorifique | fr: et-Je—être-glorifié, et-honorer, et-être-glorieux | de: als-ich-bin-glorified, der-herrlich, ehren Exod 14:4; Exod 14:17; Exod 14:18; Lev 10:3; Deut 28:58

6. glorify (Piel of God) (9×) The Piel sense of glorifying God or His name appears 9 times, the active counterpart of sense 5. Psalm 22:23 commands 'glorify Him,' Psalm 86:9 promises 'they shall glorify your name.' Arabic ʿ ('glorify, magnify') and Korean 영화롭게 하다 ('make glorious') mark this as worship language where the object is exclusively God or His name, not human honor recipients. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: I-will-honor, YHWH, a-strong | es: glorificad, glorificad-lo, glorificaré | fr: comme-glorifier, et-glorifier, glorifier | de: ehren, ehrte, und-ehrte Ps 22:23; Ps 50:15; Ps 50:23; Ps 86:9; Ps 86:12

7. multiply oneself / boast (Hitpael) (4×) The Hitpael reflexive sense 'make oneself heavy' — i.e., multiply, boast, or glorify oneself — appears 4 times. 2 Chronicles 25:19 mocks Amaziah 'Why should you make yourself heavy [boast] to your hurt?' Proverbs 12:9 contrasts the one who honors himself with the humble. The reflexive stem signals self-promotion or self-aggrandizement, a negative extension of the honor sense. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: make-yourself-heavy, than-one-who-honors-himself, to-boast | es: paraglorificarte, que-el-que-se-glorifica, ¡Hazte-pesada | fr: de-honorer, glorifier, être-glorieux | de: ehren, ehrte 2Chr 25:19; Prov 12:9; Nah 3:15

8. harden heart (Piel/Qal) (3×) Three occurrences show hardening the heart as a Piel or Qal construction. Exodus 9:7 notes Pharaoh's heart 'was heavy,' 1 Samuel 6:6 warns 'Why do you harden your hearts as Egypt hardened?' This may overlap with sense 4 (Hifil make heavy/harden), but the data separates the causative (Hifil) from the stative/active (Qal/Piel). Further analysis of stem distribution would clarify whether these should merge. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: and-was-heavy, do-you-harden, hardened | es: endureceréis, endurecieron, y-se-endureció | fr: et-était-lourd, fais-tu-harden, hardened | de: hardened, tue-du-harden, und-war-schwer Exod 9:7; 1Sam 6:6

9. be wealthy / be rich (2×) Two occurrences show an adjectival or stative sense of being wealthy or rich. Genesis 13:2 describes Abram as 'very heavy [rich] in livestock, silver, and gold,' Proverbs 8:24 speaks of springs 'heavy [abounding] with water.' This is a natural metaphorical extension: wealth is substance, weight, having much. Arabic does not use the same root for wealth, but Hebrew's metaphor is transparent. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: abounding-with, heavy | es: cargadas-de, rico | fr: honorer, lourd | de: ehrte, war-sehr-reich Gen 13:2; Prov 8:24

10. let YHWH be glorified (Qal passive/stative) (2×) Job 14:21 and Isaiah 66:5 use Qal imperfect in a jussive or optative sense: 'let [the LORD] be glorified' or 'may [His name] be honored.' This may belong with sense 5 (be glorified) but appears in a modal construction rather than indicative. The data has isolated these two instances, possibly recognizing a grammatical rather than semantic distinction. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: are-honored, let-be-glorified | es: Sea-glorificado, Son-honrados | fr: honorer | de: ehren, ehrte Job 14:21; Isa 66:5

11. honor / make glorious (Hifil honorific) (2×) Isaiah 9:1 and Jeremiah 30:19 show Hifil used with a positive honorific sense: bringing honor to a land or people, making them glorious. Isaiah 9:1 promises 'He will make glorious the way of the sea,' Jeremiah 30:19 pledges 'I will honor them.' This contrasts with sense 4 (Hifil make heavy/harden), showing the Hifil stem can express either burden or honor depending on object and context. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: and-I-will-honor-them, he-made-heavy | es: honrará, y-los-honraré | fr: et-honorer, honorer | de: ehren, und-ehren Isa 9:1; Jer 30:19

12. (1×) 2 Samuel 13:25 records 'we will burden [you]' as a single occurrence in the domain of LINEAR MOVEMENT. The context is Absalom urging the king not to accompany him ('lest we be a burden to you'). This appears to be a straightforward use of sense 2 (be heavy) or sense 4 (make heavy), applied to the social context of imposing on someone. The domain assignment suggests it may have been split due to the motion context, but semantically it belongs with the burden cluster. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: we-will-burden | es: seamos-carga | fr: nous-fera-burden | de: wir-wird-burden 2Sam 13:25

כֹּבֶד H3514 N-msc (4×)

heaviness, weight; mass, abundance; vehemence, intensity

This noun, derived from the common root kbd ('be heavy'), appears in contexts describing physical weight, massive quantities, or intense force. A stone has 'weight,' corpses accumulate in 'mass,' a storm comes with 'vehemence,' and war presses with overwhelming 'intensity.' The term captures the oppressive or overwhelming quality that heaviness conveys, whether literal or metaphorical.

(4×) The noun appears in four distinct contexts showing its semantic range. Proverbs observes that 'the weight of a stone' is heavy, using it to illustrate that a fool's provocation is even heavier (Prov 27:3). Nahum describes 'the mass of corpses' piled in conquered Nineveh (Nah 3:3). Isaiah twice uses it for intensity: warriors flee 'from the vehemence of war' (Isa 21:15) and God's wrath comes 'with vehemence of storm' (Isa 30:27). Spanish peso (weight) and pesada (heavy), French pesanteur (heaviness), and German ehrte show the morphological connection to the glory/honor sense of the kbd root across language families. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-heavy, and-mass-of, weight-of | es: Peso-de-, peso-de, y-pesada | fr: [וכבד], [כבד], et-pesanteur | de: [וכבד], [כבד], ehrte Prov 27:3; Isa 21:15; Isa 30:27; Nah 3:3

כָּבֵד H3515 Conj-w / Adj-ms (39×)

Heavy, weighty; severe, grievous; burdensome; by extension, abundant or numerous

An adjective built on the same root as 'kavod' (glory, heaviness), carrying a physical and metaphorical weight through the entire Old Testament. At its most literal it describes heavy hands (Exod 17:12), thick hair (2 Sam 14:26), or a corpulent body (1 Sam 4:18). More often it is figurative: a severe famine (Gen 12:10; 41:31; 43:1), a heavy yoke of oppression (1 Kgs 12:4), or grievous mourning (Gen 50:11). Isaiah uses it to describe a people laden with iniquity—heavy under the burden of their own sin (Isa 1:4). The Spanish 'grave' and German 'schwer' both capture the dual physical-moral gravity. In one striking use (Exod 12:38) it shades into abundance, describing the very great mixed multitude that left Egypt.

1. heavy, severe, grievous (36×) The dominant sense spanning both literal and figurative weight: physically heavy (Moses' hands in Exod 17:12, Absalom's hair in 2 Sam 14:26) and figuratively severe or grievous (a heavy famine in Gen 12:10; 41:31; 43:1, a burdensome yoke in 1 Kgs 12:4, sore mourning in Gen 50:11). The Spanish 'pesada/grave' and German 'schwer' consistently translate both the physical and metaphorical dimensions. This sense accounts for the vast majority of occurrences and forms the semantic backbone of the word. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: heavy | es: espesa, grave, pesada | fr: lourd | de: gewaltig, schwer, schwer-war Gen 12:10; Gen 41:31; Gen 43:1; Gen 47:4; Gen 47:13

2. weighty, important (1×) Describing something weighty in the sense of important, significant, or consequential. In 1 Kings 3:9, Solomon asks for wisdom to judge God's weighty people—a nation too great and significant for any ordinary judge. Here the heaviness is social and moral rather than physical, pointing to gravity of responsibility and consequence. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: the-weighty | es: el-pesado | fr: le-lourd | de: der-weighty 1Kgs 3:9

3. laden, burdened with (1×) Laden or burdened with something, carrying the weight of guilt or sin. Isaiah 1:4 denounces Israel as a people heavy with iniquity ('am keved avon')—the nation staggers under the accumulated load of its transgressions. The construction emphasizes the burden itself rather than mere severity, picturing sin as a crushing weight borne on the shoulders. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: heavy-with | es: cargado-de | fr: lourd | de: schwer Isa 1:4

4. abundant, numerous (1×) An extension into quantity: abundant, numerous, very great. The mixed multitude that departed Egypt was exceedingly abundant (Exod 12:38), using the adjective almost adverbially to intensify the scale of the exodus. The Spanish 'muy' (very) and German 'sehr' reflect this quantitative rather than qualitative heaviness. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: very | es: muy | fr: très | de: sehr Exod 12:38

כָּבֵד H3516 Prep-b (14×)

Liver; the bodily organ, referenced in sacrificial ritual, divination, and as a seat of strong emotion.

The noun kaved as a substantive designates the liver, the largest internal organ and one regarded across the ancient Near East as a seat of deep feeling. The root kbd means 'heavy,' and the liver was named as the heaviest organ – a connection preserved in cognate Arabic kabid and Aramaic kabda. Most occurrences appear in Priestly sacrificial legislation, where the 'appendage on the liver' (yoteret ha-kaved) is burned upon the altar (Exod 29:13, 22; Lev 3-9). Ezekiel 21:26 records the Babylonian king consulting the liver in hepatoscopy. Proverbs 7:23 depicts an arrow piercing the liver, and Lamentations 2:11 pours it out in anguish.

liver (organ) (14×) The bodily organ known as the liver, prominent in Priestly sacrificial texts where the yoteret ('appendage') upon it is burned on the altar (Exod 29:13, 22; Lev 3:4, 10, 15; 4:9; 7:4;

8:16, 25; 9:10, 19). Also appears in hepatoscopy (Ezek 21:26), a fatal arrow wound (Prov 7:23), and grief poured out in anguish (Lam 2:11). Etymologically 'the heavy one.' FLESH AND BODY
en: at-the-liver, his-liver, my-liver | es: el-hígado, hígado-de-él, mi-hígado | fr: [כבדי], foie, le-foie | de: [בכבד], [כבדו], [כבדי] Exod 29:13; Exod 29:22; Lev 3:4; Lev 3:10; Lev 3:15

כִּבֶּדֶת H3517 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
with difficulty, with heaviness; laborious impediment
This noun appears in Exodus 14:25 at a pivotal moment in the Red Sea narrative. As Egyptian chariots pursue Israel into the seabed, God causes their wheels to malfunction, making them drive 'with heaviness' or 'with difficulty.' The word captures the panic-inducing experience of military equipment failing at the worst possible moment—wheels binding, axles breaking, chariots lurching. The Egyptian cry 'Let us flee from Israel!' follows immediately, showing how this divine impediment transformed predators into terrified prey.

(1×) Exodus 14:25 describes Egyptian chariots afflicted by supernatural impediment during the Red Sea crossing. The Hebrew noun derives from a root meaning 'heavy' and indicates laborious difficulty or impediment. Multilingual glosses converge on 'difficulty' (English/French/German) or 'heaviness' (Spanish 'pesadez'), capturing both the physical and metaphorical weight of impeded movement. This is the only occurrence of this particular noun form. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP
en: with-difficulty | es: con-pesadez | fr: avec-difficulty | de: mit-difficulty Exod 14:25

כָּבָה H3518 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (24×)
To be quenched or go out (of fire/lamp); in Piel, to extinguish or put out actively.
A vivid verb for the dying of fire or light, carrying powerful theological weight. In its intransitive sense it describes a flame going out on its own – the sacred altar fire that must never be quenched (Lev 6:12-13), or the lamp of God not yet gone out in the sanctuary at Shiloh (1 Sam 3:3). Spanish apagarse and German ausloeschen both capture this self-extinguishing quality. The transitive Piel form introduces an agent who actively puts out the fire, as when David's men protect him lest he 'extinguish the lamp of Israel' (2 Sam 21:17), or when the Song of Songs declares that many waters cannot quench love (Song 8:7).

1. be quenched, go out (14×) Qal intransitive: of a fire, lamp, or flame ceasing to burn, going out without an agent extinguishing it. Often appears with negation to stress perpetual burning, as in the altar fire commands (Lev 6:12-13). Used prophetically of divine judgment fires that will not be quenched (2 Kgs 22:17; Isa 66:24). Spanish apagarse and German ausloeschen both reflect the self-extinguishing nuance. EXTINGUISHING FIRE
en: be-quenched, goes-out, it-shall-be-quenched | es: apagarse, se-apaga, se-apaga- | fr: [תכבה], cela-fera-être-quenched, comme-en-lui | de: [יכבה], [תכבה], ausloeschen Lev 6:12; Lev 6:13; 1Sam 3:3; 2Kgs 22:17; 2Chr 34:25

2. extinguish, put out (10×) Piel transitive/causative: to actively quench, extinguish, or put out a fire or lamp, with an explicit or implied agent performing the action. The Chronicler records that the priests had shut up the temple and extinguished the lamps (2 Chr 29:7). Figuratively, the metaphor of 'extinguishing the lamp of Israel' (2 Sam 21:17) warns against losing David in battle. Song 8:7 memorably declares that many waters cannot extinguish love. EXTINGUISHING FIRE
en: and-extinguished, and-they-will-extinguish, extinguishing | es: apagar, apagará, apagarás | fr: [ויכבו], et-ils-fera-extinguish, tu-devra-extinguish | de: [בכבותך], [ויכבו], [לכבות] 2Sam 14:7; 2Sam 21:17; 2Chr 29:7; Song 8:7; Isa 1:31

כָּבוֹד H3519 Art / N-ms (200×)
Glory, honor, splendor; the visible radiance of God's presence, human dignity and esteem, or material wealth.
Kavod derives from the root k-b-d meaning 'to be heavy, weighty,' and this etymological weight pervades every use of the noun. At its most exalted, it denotes the visible, luminous manifestation of God's presence — the kavod that fills the tabernacle (Exod 40:34), settles on Sinai (Exod 24:16), and departs from the temple in Ezekiel's devastating vision (Ezek 10:18). Yet the same word describes earthly honor, social standing, and even material prosperity, as when Laban's sons complain that Jacob has acquired all their father's kavod (Gen 31:1). The multilingual evidence is illuminating: German Herrlichkeit and Spanish gloria track the divine majesty sense, while French richesse and Arabic tharvah appear when wealth is in view — confirming that ancient Hebrew held these meanings together under one 'weighty' roof in a way few modern languages replicate.

1. glory, splendor of God (170×) The dominant theophanic and doxological sense: the visible radiance, splendor, and manifest presence of God. This is the kavod that appears in the cloud over Sinai (Exod 24:16-17), fills the tabernacle and temple (Exod 40:34; 1 Kgs 8:11), and which Isaiah sees enthroned (Isa 6:3). The 170 occurrences confirm this as the overwhelmingly primary meaning. German Herrlichkeit, Spanish gloria, and Korean 영광 all lexicalize this theophanic-doxological sense as distinct from mere 'honor.' When Joshua says 'give glory to the LORD' (Josh 7:19), the word means both 'acknowledge his weightiness' and 'let his radiance be seen.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: glory-of, glory-of-, the-glory-of | es: Gloria-de, gloria-de, gloria-de- | fr: gloire | de: Herrlichkeit, Herrlichkeit-, der-Herrlichkeit- Josh 7:19; 1Sam 2:8; 1Sam 4:21; 1Sam 4:22; 1Sam 6:5

2. honor, respect, dignity (26×) Honor, esteem, and dignity accorded to a human person — 26 occurrences. This sense appears in wisdom literature and royal contexts: Solomon receives kavod alongside wealth (1 Chr 29:12, 28; 2 Chr 1:11), and Proverbs teaches that humility precedes kavod (Prov 15:33; 18:12). Spanish honor and French gloire both appear in these passages, whereas the theophanic sense draws gloria and Herrlichkeit. The distinction is real: this is social weight, the gravity a respected person carries in the community, not luminous divine presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-honor, and-the-honor, honor | es: Honor, gloria, honor | fr: et-gloire, gloire | de: Herrlichkeit, und-Herrlichkeit, und-der-Herrlichkeit Num 24:11; 1Chr 17:18; 1Chr 29:12; 1Chr 29:28; 2Chr 1:11

3. wealth, abundance (2×) Material wealth, riches, and abundance — a small but etymologically significant sense appearing clearly in Gen 31:1 (Jacob took all Laban's kavod) and Nah 2:9 (the plundering of Nineveh's kavod). Here the 'heaviness' metaphor is most concrete: kavod is the sheer mass of possessions. French richesse and the Arabic rendering tharvah ('wealth') confirm this as a genuinely distinct sense from 'honor' or 'glory.' It represents the oldest, most physical layer of the root's meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: glory, the-wealth | es: abundancia, la-gloria | fr: gloire, le-richesse | de: die-Ehre, ehrte Gen 31:1; Nah 2:9

4. (1×) Personal honor or inner dignity in a poetic/tribal context. In Gen 49:6 Jacob's blessing declares 'let my kavod not enter their assembly,' referring to his personal honor or life-force. The feminine form used here (unique in the corpus) and the parallelism with nephesh ('soul') suggest kavod functions as a near-synonym for one's essential self or reputation. Spanish mi honra, French mon gloire, and German meine Ehre all capture this reflexive, personal dimension of the word. HONOR AND WEIGHT
en: glory-my | es: mi-honra | fr: gloire-mon | de: meine-Ehre Gen 49:6

5. (1×) The collective glory or splendor of a people or nation — as in Isa 5:13 where Israel's kavod goes into exile alongside its multitude. Spanish sus nobles ('its nobles'), German seine Herrlichkeit, and English 'its glory' show translators divided on whether this is the nation's honor, its elite class, or its splendor. The parallelism with hamon ('multitude') suggests kavod here encompasses the entire impressive weight of a people — their dignity, prosperity, and social substance taken together. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-glory | es: y-sus-nobles | fr: et-sa-gloire | de: und-seine-Herrlichkeit Isa 5:13

כָּבוֹד H3520a N-fs (2×)

Glorious, honorable; feminine adjective describing a bed (Ezek 23:41) and a queen (Ps 45:13)

This feminine adjective denotes something glorious or splendid, appearing in two poetic contexts. In Psalm 45:13 it describes the princess in her chamber, arrayed in glory for her wedding. In Ezekiel 23:41 it describes the bed on which unfaithful Jerusalem reclines in her idolatrous luxury. The word's vocalization (kevuddah) shows the construct form pattern, and its root connection to "glory" (kavod) links external splendor with inherent worth or honor.

(2×) Attested in Psalm 45:13 (royal wedding psalm) and Ezekiel 23:41 (prophetic accusation). The contexts are ironically opposite: one celebrates legitimate royal splendor, the other condemns false glory in spiritual adultery. Spanish renders both as "gloriosa/glorioso," while French and German preserve Hebrew forms, acknowledging the specialized vocabulary of these poetic and prophetic passages. POWER AND ABILITY

en: glorious | es: gloriosa, glorioso | fr: Caboul, comme-Késiluth | de: [כבודה], glorious Ps 45:13; Ezek 23:41

כְּבוּדָּה H3520b Art / N-fs (1×)

valuables, possessions, wealth; abundant goods

This feminine noun denoting possessions or valuable goods appears in Judges 18:21 during the Danite migration narrative. As the tribe relocates northward, they organize their caravan carefully: children and livestock in front, and 'the valuables' bringing up the rear. The term's connection to the common word for 'glory' or 'weight' (kavod) suggests substantial, weighty possessions—not pocket change but significant accumulated wealth. The careful positioning shows both the importance of these goods and strategic thinking about protecting them during transit.

(1×) Judges 18:21 uses this noun for the valuable possessions the Danites carried during their northern migration. Related to the common root kbd (heavy, weighty, glorious), it specifically denotes material wealth and goods of substance. The multilingual glosses agree on 'valuables' or equivalent terms, showing clear semantic consensus. The definite article ('the valuables') indicates these were the tribe's accumulated riches, worthy of strategic placement in the traveling formation. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: the-valuables | es: lo-valioso | fr: le-valuables | de: der-valuables Judg 18:21

כָּבוּל H3521 N-proper-fs (2×)

Cabul/Kavul, a border town in Asher (Josh 19:27) and a district Solomon gave to Hiram (1 Kgs 9:13)

This place name designates both a specific town and a broader district in Galilee. The town served as a boundary marker for Asher's tribal territory, identified with modern Kabul about nine miles southeast of Acre. More famously, it names the twenty-city district Solomon gave King Hiram as payment for temple construction materials, which Hiram rejected as inadequate. The folk etymology suggests "as good as nothing" (ke + bal), explaining Hiram's displeasure, though this may be popular wordplay rather than true etymology.

(2×) Found in Joshua 19:27 (Asher's border) and 1 Kings 9:13 (district given to Hiram). The Kings passage preserves the negative assessment: Hiram saw the cities and they did not please him, calling them "the land of Cabul." The etymological wordplay suggests the name became synonymous with worthlessness, at least in this transaction, though the actual town remained a legitimate settlement in Asher. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cabul, Kavul | es: Cabul | fr: Cabul, Kavul | de: Cabul, Kavul Josh 19:27; 1Kgs 9:13

כַּבּוֹן H3522 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Kabbon, a town in the lowland territory of Judah

Kabbon appears in Joshua 15:40 within the Shephelah (lowland) district of Judah's inheritance. The Greek Septuagint renders it as Chabra or Chabbo, and BDB suggests it may be the same location as a nearby town mentioned in the following verse. Like many settlements in these territorial lists, its precise identification remains uncertain. The Shephelah formed Judah's western frontier, a region of rolling hills between the coastal plain and the central mountains, marked by numerous fortified towns.

(1×) Place name in Judah's Shephelah region from Joshua 15:40. The conjunction prefix 'and' indicates its position in a series of boundary towns. Translations maintain phonetic transliteration: Cabón (Spanish), Kabbon (French/German/English). The Greek Septuagint's variant forms suggest textual or pronunciation uncertainty even in antiquity. Possibly identical with an adjacent settlement, showing how town names sometimes shifted or merged. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kabbon | es: y-Cabón | fr: et-Kabbon | de: und-Kabbon Josh 15:40

כְּבִיר H3523 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

A woven covering, either a quilt or mosquito net made of goats' hair (1 Sam 19:13, 16)

This masculine noun designates a woven goat-hair covering that Michal used to simulate David's presence in bed when deceiving Saul's messengers. Scholars debate whether it was a thick quilt or a mosquito net spread over the face during sleep. The phrase "quilt of goats" or "goats' hair net" appears identically in both verses. Either interpretation explains how Michal created the illusion of David lying ill in bed while he escaped.

(2×) Attested in 1 Samuel 19:13 and 16 in the David escape narrative. One occurrence includes a conjunctive prefix ("and a pillow of"). The root suggests something netted or woven, making both quilt and fly-net plausible. All major translations preserve the ambiguity with terms like "pillow," "quilt," or "woven covering," acknowledging that ancient bedding vocabulary doesn't map neatly onto modern categories. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-pillow-of, pillow-of | es: tejido-de, y-tejido-de | fr: et-pillow-de, pillow-de | de: pillow-von, und-pillow-von 1Sam 19:13; 1Sam 19:16

כַּבִּיר H3524 Adj-mp (10×)

Mighty, great, powerful; of persons, God, natural forces, or abundance – a poetic synonym for 'great.'

A distinctly poetic adjective found almost exclusively in Job and Isaiah, functioning as a dignified synonym for 'great' or 'mighty.' It describes God as the 'just mighty one' (Job 34:17), powerful warriors (Job 34:24), and overwhelming natural forces like 'mighty waters' (Isa 17:12, 28:2). Bildad uses it memorably for a 'mighty wind' to characterize Job's words (Job 8:2). In one instance it shades toward sheer quantity – 'my hand had gotten much' (Job 31:25) – where Spanish 'abundante' distinguishes this economic sense from personal power.

1. mighty, powerful (of persons or God) (6×) Personal might or sovereign power, applied to God or strong individuals. Arabic 'azim (great/mighty) and Spanish 'poderoso' capture the dignified personal authority intended. Job employs it for God's might (Job 34:17, 36:5) and for warriors (Job 34:24). The doubled occurrence in Job 36:5 – 'mighty in strength of understanding' – shows it can denote intellectual as well as physical power. POWER AND ABILITY

en: mighty, the-Mighty, the-mighty | es: fuerte, muchos, poderoso | fr: [כביר], puissant | de: [כביר], maechtig Job 8:2; Job 34:17; Job 34:24; Job 36:5

2. great, mighty (of things, forces, quantity) (3×) Greatness or might applied to impersonal forces and natural phenomena. Isaiah's 'mighty waters' (Isa 17:12, 28:2) and Bildad's 'mighty wind' (Job 8:2) illustrate this sense. Arabic 'jarifa' (sweeping, torrential) and Spanish 'impetuosas' (impetuous) point to overwhelming natural force. Job 15:10 uses it for advanced age – 'greater than your father in days' – extending 'greatness' to duration. POWER AND ABILITY

en: greater, mighty | es: impetuosas, mayor, poderosas | fr: [כבירים], puissant | de: [כבירים], maechtig Job 15:10; Isa 17:12; Isa 28:2

3. much, abundant (quantity) (1×) Abundance or sheer quantity, distinct from power or force. Job 31:25 – 'because my hand had gotten much' – is the sole attestation. Spanish 'abundante' and English 'much' clearly mark this as a quantitative rather than qualitative sense, describing material wealth rather than personal might or natural force. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: much | es: abundante | fr: puissant | de: maechtig Job 31:25

כֶּבֶל H3525 Prep-b / N-mpc (2×)

Fetters, shackles; used in parallel with iron chains in Psalms 105:18 and 149:8

This masculine noun denotes fetters or shackles, appearing in two psalms with quite different contexts. In Psalm 105:18 it describes Joseph's imprisonment in Egypt, where his feet were bound with fetters and iron. In Psalm 149:8 it appears in the triumphant vision of Israel binding enemy kings with fetters of iron. The word is late biblical Hebrew, appearing only in these poetic contexts where it parallels "iron" and "chains."

(2×) Found in Psalm 105:18 (Joseph's affliction) and Psalm 149:8 (eschatological judgment). Both passages use "fetters" in parallel with iron, emphasizing the material and security of the binding. The singular collective in Psalm 105 ("they humbled his feet with fetters") contrasts with the construct plural in Psalm 149 ("with fetters of iron"), showing the noun's grammatical flexibility in poetic parallelism. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: with-fetters, with-fetters-of | es: con-grillos, con-grillos-de | fr: dans-chaîne | de: mit-fetters, mit-fetters-of Ps 105:18; Ps 149:8

כָּבַס H3526 V-Piel-Imp-ms / 1cs (51×)

To wash or launder garments by treading or kneading in water; a fuller's professional trade of cleansing cloth

Unlike the more general Hebrew word for washing (רָחַץ, used for bathing the body), כבס specifically denotes the vigorous laundering of fabric — originally by treading it underfoot in water, the ancient Near Eastern equivalent of a washing machine. The Piel intensive stem dominates its usage across the ritual purity laws of Leviticus and Numbers, where garments contaminated by contact with uncleanness must be 'washed' before the person can re-enter the camp. Strikingly, the same root provides the title of the 'fuller' (כּוֹבֵס), the professional cloth-washer whose field near Jerusalem becomes a landmark in Isaiah 7:3 and 2 Kings 18:17. Malachi 3:2 compares the coming messenger to 'fuller's soap,' using the language of this trade to picture divine purification.

1. wash, launder (Piel active) (43×) The primary active Piel sense: to wash, launder, or cleanse garments and fabrics by treading or kneading them in water. This is overwhelmingly the most common usage, appearing in the ritual legislation of Leviticus and Numbers where contaminated garments must be laundered (Lev 11:25; 13:6; 15:5). In Genesis 49:11, Judah figuratively 'washes his garments in wine' — a striking image of abundance. All four major translation languages agree on the core washing sense: Spanish 'lavar,' French 'laver,' German 'waschen.' WASHING AND BATHING

en: and-he-shall-wash, and-shall-wash, let-wash | es: Y-lavará, lavará, y-lavará | fr: devra-laver, et-devra-laver, et-il-lavera | de: lass-waschen, soll-waschen, und-er-soll-waschen Gen 49:11; Exod 19:10; Exod 19:14; Lev 6:27; Lev 11:25

2. washer, fuller (participle) (4×) The participial/substantival sense denoting a professional washer or fuller of cloth. The 'fuller's field' (שְׂדֵה כוֹבֵס) near Jerusalem appears as a geographic landmark in three parallel passages (2 Kgs 18:17; Isa 7:3; 36:2). Malachi 3:2 uses the plural participle מְכַבְּסִים to describe the refining work of God's messenger — 'like fullers' soap.' Spanish 'lavador' and French 'fouler' both preserve the occupational meaning. WASHING AND BATHING

en: fuller, launderers, of-the-Washer | es: del-lavador, lavador, lavandero | fr: [כובס], fouler, fuller | de: [כובס], [מכבסים], fuller 2Kgs 18:17; Isa 7:3; Isa 36:2; Mal 3:2

3. be washed (Hitpael reflexive) (2×) The Hitpael reflexive/reciprocal sense: to be washed or to undergo washing. Appearing only in Leviticus 13:55-56 in the context of inspecting garments for persistent skin disease marks after laundering. The reflexive stem suggests the garment itself as undergoing the process, viewed from the perspective of the fabric being subjected to cleansing rather than the agent performing it. WASHING AND BATHING

en: being-washed | es: lavarse | fr: étant-lava | de: seiend-wusch Lev 13:55; Lev 13:56

4. be washed (Pual passive) (2×) The Pual passive sense: to be washed, indicating that the garment is the recipient of the laundering action without specifying the agent. Found in Leviticus 13:58 (a garment whose mark disappears after washing) and 15:17 (fabric on which there is a bodily emission that must be washed). Spanish 'será lavado' (shall be washed) captures the passive construction precisely. WASHING AND BATHING

en: and-it-shall-be-washed, and-shall-be-washed | es: y-será-lavado | fr: et-cela-devra-être-lava, et-devra-être-lava | de: und-es-soll-sein-wusch, und-soll-sein-wusch Lev 13:58; Lev 15:17

כָּבַר H3527 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to make many, to multiply (Hiphil); to make great

This verb appears in Job 35:16 where Elihu accuses Job of multiplying words without knowledge. The Hiphil causative form emphasizes the deliberate proliferation of speech—not just talking, but making words abundant. Elihu's rhetoric is sharp: Job 'multiplies words without knowledge,' piling up arguments that sound impressive but lack true understanding. The verb connects to a root meaning 'great' or 'numerous' (cognate with Arabic kabir, 'great'). The image is of speech production untethered from wisdom, quantity without quality.

(1×) Job 35:16 uses this Hiphil verb to describe Job's prolific but supposedly empty speech. The causative stem means 'to cause to be many' or 'to make numerous,' here applied metaphorically to words. Spanish 'multiplica' and English 'he-multiplies' capture the sense clearly. The verb's only appearance comes in Elihu's speeches, which are characterized by this kind of sharp rhetorical critique. Some translations leave it untransliterated, suggesting textual challenges. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: he-multiplies | es: multiplica | fr: יכבר | de: [יכבר] Job 35:16

כְּבָר H3528 Prep-b (9×)

Already; an adverb of past time indicating something has previously occurred, used exclusively in Ecclesiastes.

The adverb kevar (כְּבָר) means 'already' and is a hallmark of Ecclesiastes' distinctive late Biblical Hebrew vocabulary. It appears nine times, all within Qoheleth's philosophical reflections on the cyclical nature of existence. The famous declaration 'there is nothing new under the sun — it has already been' (Eccl 1:10) captures its characteristic use. The word emphasizes prior completion or established reality, reinforcing Qoheleth's theme that everything repeats. Common in Mishnaic Hebrew and attested in Aramaic and Syriac, its restriction to Ecclesiastes within the Bible is one of the clearest markers of that book's late linguistic profile.

(9×) A temporal adverb meaning 'already, previously,' marking an action or state as having occurred before the present moment. Confined entirely to Ecclesiastes, it serves Qoheleth's argument about the futility of novelty: what exists has 'already been' in ages past (Eccl 1:10; 3:15). Spanish ya and German schon capture the sense precisely. The word's frequency in Mishnaic Hebrew and its cognates in Aramaic (כבר) and Syriac (ḥḇṯ) confirm it as a late linguistic feature, making it a key diagnostic for dating Ecclesiastes within the biblical corpus. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: already, in-that-already, that-already | es: que-ya, ya, ya-que | fr: déjà | de: schon Eccl 1:10; Eccl 2:12; Eccl 2:16; Eccl 3:15

כְּבָר H3529 N-proper-fs (8×)

Kebar — a river or canal in Babylonia beside which the Jewish exiles settled and where Ezekiel received his visions.

Kebar (Kevar) is the name of a river or canal in Babylonia, always appearing in the fixed phrase nehar Kevar ('the river Kebar'). This waterway is the setting for Ezekiel's entire prophetic ministry: beside it he received his inaugural vision of the divine chariot (Ezek 1:1, 3), sat stunned among the exiles for seven days (3:15), and witnessed the glory of the LORD (3:23; 10:15, 20, 22; 43:3). Though the exact identification remains uncertain — possibly the naru kabari canal near Nippur — its repeated mention anchors Ezekiel's visions in a concrete place of exile. All major traditions transliterate consistently: English and French 'Kebar,' Spanish 'Quebar,' German 'Kebar.'

(8×) The proper name of a Babylonian river or canal (nehar Kevar) where the Jewish exiles settled and where Ezekiel received his prophetic visions. All eight occurrences are in Ezekiel (1:1, 3; 3:15, 23; 10:15, 20, 22; 43:3), always in the fixed phrase 'the river Kebar.' The site is likely a canal near Nippur. Transliterations are remarkably consistent: English/French/German 'Kebar,' Spanish 'Quebar/Kebar,' reflecting a stable toponym across manuscript traditions. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: Kebar, Kevar | es: Kebar, Quebar | fr: Kebar | de: Kebar Ezek 1:1; Ezek 1:3; Ezek 3:15; Ezek 3:23; Ezek 10:15

כִּבְרָה H3530 N-fsc (3×)

distance of land, stretch of ground; short distance (exact measure uncertain)

A feminine noun denoting a measure of distance, appearing only in the phrase כִּבְרַת אֶרֶץ/כִּבְרַת הָאָרֶץ ('a distance of land' or 'a stretch of ground'). Genesis 35:16 and 48:7 both use it to describe the remaining distance to Ephrath/Bethlehem when Rachel died giving birth to Benjamin ('when there was still a kibrat of land to come to Ephrath'). 2 Kings 5:19 uses it for the distance Naaman traveled from Elisha before turning back. The exact distance is uncertain, but 2 Kings suggests it was relatively short—perhaps a few miles or the distance visible to the eye. Akkadian kibrâti means an extended territory or quarter of the world, but the Hebrew usage seems more modest.

(3×) An indeterminate but apparently short distance, perhaps what one could see or travel in a brief time. The phrase marks Rachel's tragic proximity to her destination—so close yet too far, dying within sight of Bethlehem. The term's vagueness ('a certain distance', 'cierta distancia', 'un distance') in translations reflects genuine uncertainty about the exact measure. What's clear is that it described a recognizable unit of travel, short enough that Jacob could specify Rachel died 'just a kibrat from' their goal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-distance-of, distance-of-, stretch-of- | es: cierta-distancia-de, distancia-de, trecho-de- | fr: distance-de-, un-distance-de, étendre-de- | de: ein-distance-von, eine-Strecke, eine-Strecke- Gen 35:16; Gen 48:7; 2Kgs 5:19

כִּבְרָה H3531 Prep-b (1×)

sieve, a net-like implement for winnowing grain

This noun appears in Amos 9:9 within a powerful metaphor of divine judgment. God declares he will shake the house of Israel among the nations 'as grain is shaken in a sieve,' yet not one kernel will fall to the ground. The image draws from agricultural practice: a sieve separates valuable grain from chaff and debris, with the fine mesh retaining what matters. Amos applies this to the scattering of Israel—dispersed but not destroyed, sifted but not lost. The sieve becomes an instrument of both judgment and preservation.

(1×) Amos 9:9 employs this agricultural tool metaphorically for God's sifting of Israel. The Hebrew noun with preposition 'in the sieve' describes the instrument used to separate grain from chaff. Multilingual glosses converge: English 'sieve,' Spanish 'criba,' French 'tamis' all denote the same winnowing implement. Some versions leave it untransliterated, but the agricultural context strongly supports the sieve identification, confirmed by Wetzstein's ethnographic observations of Palestinian grain-processing. NETS AND SNARES

en: in-the-sieve | es: en-la-criba | fr: tamis | de: [בכברה] Amos 9:9

כֶּבֶשׂ H3532 Prep-l (107×)

Lamb, young male sheep — primarily a sacrificial animal in Levitical law; also used in prophetic similes of innocence

Kebes is the standard Hebrew term for a young male sheep and appears overwhelmingly in the ritual legislation of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers. It names the animal of the daily burnt offering (Exod 29:38), the sin offering (Lev 4:32), purification rites (Lev 14:10), and every major festival calendar in Numbers 28-29. Yet the word breaks free of cultic lists in two prophetic passages where it becomes a simile of heartbreaking vulnerability — Jeremiah 'like a gentle lamb led to slaughter' (Jer 11:19) and Hosea's wayward Israel 'like a lamb in a broad pasture' (Hos 4:16). Translations universally use 'lamb/cordero/agneau/Lamm' for both senses, letting context carry the shift from ritual to rhetoric.

1. lamb, young male sheep (105×) A young male sheep specified for sacrificial and offering contexts — burnt offerings, sin offerings, peace offerings, purification rites, and festival prescriptions throughout the Priestly legislation. The daily offering alone requires two lambs (Exod 29:38-39; Num 28:3-4), and Numbers 7 lists them repeatedly in the tribal dedication of the altar. Multilingual glosses (spa: corderos, fra: agneaux, deu: Laemmer) are uniform across all 105 occurrences, reflecting an unambiguous referent in the pastoral-ritual world. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: lambs | es: corderos | fr: agneaux | de: Laemmer Exod 29:38; Lev 23:18; Lev 23:19; Lev 23:20; Num 7:15

2. like a lamb (simile) (2×) Used in comparative constructions (with the ke- prefix) to liken a person to a lamb, evoking innocence, meekness, or vulnerability. Jeremiah 11:19 — 'I was like a gentle lamb led to the slaughter' — anticipates the Suffering Servant imagery of Isaiah 53, while Hosea 4:16 compares wayward Israel to 'a lamb in a broad pasture.' Spanish como-cordero and French agneau preserve the simile, and these two occurrences stand apart from the cultic register by foregrounding the lamb's character rather than its sacrificial role. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: like-lamb, was-like-a-lamb | es: como-cordero | fr: [ככבש], agneau | de: [ככבש] Jer 11:19; Hos 4:16

כָּבַשׁ H3533 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (15×)

To subdue, conquer, or bring into bondage; ranging from dominion over creation to military conquest, enslavement, and sexual violation.

First appearing in God's mandate to humanity—'fill the earth and subdue it' (Gen 1:28)—this verb carries an inherent force that intensifies across its stems. In the Qal it describes bringing peoples or land under dominion; in the Nifal, territory being subdued before Israel (Num 32:22; Josh 18:1). The Hifil causative appears in Jeremiah's grim account of slaveholders re-enslaving freed servants (Jer 34:11). Its darkest usage is Haman's assault on Esther (Esth 7:8), where 'subdue' becomes sexual violation. Arabic cognate 'kabasa' (press, knead, assault) confirms this physical-force core across Semitic languages.

1. subdue, conquer (Qal) (6×) Subdue or conquer in the Qal stem: The foundational sense of bringing under dominion by force. Genesis 1:28 uses the imperative—humanity is charged to 'subdue' the earth as stewards. Micah 7:19 applies it metaphorically: God will 'subdue' Israel's iniquities, treading them underfoot. Spanish 'someter' (to subject) and the Arabic cognate 'kabasa' (press, squeeze) both preserve the idea of applied pressure. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: He-will-subdue, and-subdue-it, and-they-will-subdue | es: sometemos, someter, someterá | fr: [וחכבשו], [כבשים], [לכבש] | de: [וכבשו], [וחכבשו], [יכבש] Gen 1:28; 2Chr 28:10; Neh 5:5; Jer 34:16; Mic 7:19

2. be subdued, be conquered (Nifal) (5×) Be subdued or conquered in the Nifal passive: Land or territory that has been brought under control. Numbers 32:22 and Joshua 18:1 use this form for Canaan being 'subdued' before the LORD. The shift from active conquest to accomplished state is important: 1 Chronicles 22:18 presents the land as already subjugated, providing the theological basis for temple-building. Spanish 'fue sometida' captures the completed

passive well. HUMILITY AND LOWERING en: and-is-subdued, and-was-subdued, being-subjected | es: Y-será-conquistada, fue-sometida, sometidas | fr: [ונכבשה], [נכבשות], et-est-subdued | de: [ונכבשה], [נכבשות], und-ist-unterwarf Num 32:22; Num 32:29; Josh 18:1; 1Chr 22:18; Neh 5:5

3. subjugate by force (Hifil) (2×) Subjugate by force in the Hifil causative: To compel others into servitude or bondage. Jeremiah 34:11 records the nobles forcing freed slaves back into bondage—a covenant violation that provokes divine judgment. The causative stem emphasizes the coercive agency of the oppressor rather than the state of the oppressed. Both the Ketiv and Qere readings in Jeremiah point to this intensified causative meaning. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: [and-they-subjugated-them], and-they-subjugated-them | es: (y-los-subyugaron), [y-los-subyugaron] | fr: [(ויכבשום)], [[ויכבישום]] | de: [(ויכבשום)], [[ויכבישום]] Jer 34:11

4. force, violate sexually (Qal) (1×) Force or violate sexually in the Qal: A specialized and disturbing usage where physical subjugation becomes sexual assault. In Esther 7:8, the king interprets Haman's posture near Esther as an attempt to 'subdue' (violate) the queen. BDB notes this parallels the earlier Hebrew term 'innah. Spanish 'para forzar' (to force) makes the violent intent explicit. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: subdue | es: para-forzar | fr: [לכבוש] | de: [לכבוש] Esth 7:8

5. conquer thoroughly (Piel) (1×) Conquer thoroughly in the Piel intensive: Complete subjugation of conquered peoples, with the Piel stem emphasizing thoroughness or repetition. In 2 Samuel 8:11, David dedicates spoils from nations he had 'subdued'—the intensive form underscoring total military domination. Spanish 'conquistó' (he conquered) reflects the completeness of the victory. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING
en: he-subdued | es: conquistó | fr: il-subdued | de: er-subdued 2Sam 8:11

כֻּבְּשׁ H3534 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
footstool, supporting structure for the feet
This noun appears in 2 Chronicles 9:18 describing Solomon's magnificent throne. The text notes that the throne had a footstool 'of gold,' emphasizing the opulence of the king's seat. In ancient Near Eastern iconography, footstools served both functional and symbolic purposes—elevating the monarch's feet and representing his dominion. The word appears in late Hebrew and related languages (Mishnaic Hebrew, Aramaic), always denoting a support for the feet. Solomon's golden footstool epitomizes the splendor of his reign at its zenith.

(1×) 2 Chronicles 9:18 describes the golden footstool attached to Solomon's throne. The noun, used in late Biblical Hebrew, denotes a structure supporting the feet of a seated person. Most multilingual glosses render it accurately: 'footstool' (English), 'estrado' (Spanish). German's 'Lamm' (lamb) appears to be a mistranslation or textual confusion. The conjunction prefix 'and' links this detail to the broader throne description. Related to Aramaic terms for rough seating. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-a-footstool | es: y-estrado | fr: [וכבש] | de: und-Lamm 2Chr 9:18

כִּבְשָׂה H3535 N-fs (8×)
Ewe-lamb — a young female sheep, used in sacrificial regulations and memorably in Nathan's parable to David.
This feminine noun denotes a ewe-lamb, the young female counterpart of keves (male lamb). It appears in two deeply memorable contexts. In Genesis 21:28-30, Abraham sets apart seven ewe-lambs as witnesses to his covenant with Abimelech at Beersheba — the very name of the place derives from this act. In 2 Samuel 12:3-6, Nathan's parable of the poor man's single ewe-lamb, raised like a daughter, is one of Scripture's most emotionally powerful stories, convicting David of his sin. The word also appears in sacrificial legislation: the purification offering (Lev 14:10) and the Nazirite vow (Num 6:14). French renders it with 'brebis-agneaux' (ewe-lambs), capturing both the feminine and juvenile aspects.

ewe lamb (female sheep) (8×) A young female sheep or ewe-lamb, the feminine form of keves (lamb). Used in covenant-making (Gen 21:28-30, Abraham's seven ewe-lambs at Beersheba), in sacrificial law for purification and Nazirite offerings (Lev 14:10; Num 6:14), and most memorably in Nathan's parable of the poor man's beloved ewe-lamb (2 Sam 12:3-6). Spanish 'corderita' (little lamb, feminine diminutive) and French 'brebis-agneaux' together capture the word's tenderness and specificity. LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: a-lamb, and-ewe-lamb, ewe-lambs | es: corderas, corderas-de, corderita | fr: agneau-de, brebis-agneaux, brebis-agneaux-de | de: Lamm-von, Lämmer, der-Lamm Gen 21:28; Gen 21:29; Gen 21:30; Lev 14:10; Num 6:14

כִּבְשָׁן H3536 N-ms (4×)
kiln, furnace (for burning lime or pottery)
This noun designates a kiln or furnace used for firing pottery or burning lime. The smoke rising from such a kiln serves as a vivid simile in biblical descriptions—the smoke of Sodom and Gomorrah ascended 'like the smoke of a kiln,' and Mount Sinai smoked 'like the smoke of a furnace' when God descended upon it. The ashes of a kiln also feature in the plague narrative, where Moses scattered them toward heaven to produce boils on the Egyptians.

(4×) The term appears exclusively in vivid comparisons and plague accounts. Abraham saw the smoke of the destroyed cities rising 'like smoke of a kiln' (Gen 19:28, J). Moses and Aaron took 'ashes of a kiln' and scattered them to produce the plague of boils (Exod 9:8, 10, P). Mount Sinai 'smoked like a furnace' when Yahweh descended in fire (Exod 19:18, E). Spanish horno and French furnace preserve the basic kiln/furnace sense, while German der Schmelzofen (smelting furnace) specifies one kiln function. The consistent association with rising smoke creates the metaphoric link across all biblical uses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: furnace, the-furnace | es: el-horno, horno | fr: furnace, le-furnace | de: der-furnace, eines-Schmelzofens, furnace Gen 19:28; Exod 9:8; Exod 9:10; Exod 19:18

כַּד H3537 N-fsc (18×)
A clay jar or pitcher used for carrying water, storing flour, or holding other provisions.
Refers to a common earthenware vessel central to everyday domestic life in ancient Israel. Most memorably, Rebekah carries her kad on her shoulder at the well when Abraham's servant encounters her (Gen 24:14-46), and this same vessel sustains the widow of Zarephath whose flour jar never runs empty during the famine (1 Kgs 17:12-16). In Gideon's night raid, empty jars conceal torches that blaze forth when shattered (Judg 7:16-20). Ecclesiastes uses the image of a pitcher broken at the spring as a poignant metaphor for death (Eccl 12:6). Across languages the translations converge on a medium-sized portable vessel: Spanish 'cantaro/tinaja,' French 'cruche,' German 'Krug.'

jar, pitcher, jug (18×) A medium-sized clay container designed for carrying or storing liquids and dry goods. Evidence from Rebekah's well scene (Gen 24) shows it balanced on a woman's shoulder for water transport, while the widow's jar in 1 Kings 17 holds flour. Gideon's warriors use empty jars to conceal torches (Judg 7:16). Multilingual glosses consistently render it as a portable earthenware vessel (Spanish 'cantaro,' French 'cruche,' German 'Krug'), confirming its everyday domestic character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-her-jar, and-jars, from-your-jar | es: La-tinaja-de, cántaro, cántaros | fr: dans-le-jar, de-ton-cruche, et-cruches | de: [כד], aus-deinem-Krug, deinen-Krug Gen 24:14; Gen 24:15; Gen 24:16; Gen 24:17; Gen 24:18

כְּדַב H3538 N-fs (1×)
false, lying; deceptive (Aramaic)
This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel 2:9, where King Nebuchadnezzar accuses his advisors of conspiring to tell him 'a false and corrupt word' until circumstances change. The context drips with paranoia: the king suspects a cover-up, demands they prove their abilities by revealing his undisclosed dream. The adjective 'false' modifies 'word,' indicating deceptive speech calculated to mislead.

The Aramaic term parallels Hebrew kazav (lie/falsehood), showing linguistic continuity across related Semitic languages.

(1×) Daniel 2:9 uses this Aramaic adjective to characterize the deceptive speech Nebuchadnezzar suspects from his wise men. The feminine singular form modifies 'word' (millah), creating the phrase 'a lying word.' English 'lying' and Spanish 'mentirosa' (lying/false) capture the semantic force accurately. French 'force' and German's untranslated form suggest textual uncertainty or mistranslation. The term belongs to the semantic domain of truth/falsehood, specifically deception through speech. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: lying | es: mentirosa | fr: force | de: [כדבה] Dan 2:9

כַּדְכֹּד H3539 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

A precious stone, possibly ruby or carnelian; mentioned in Isaiah 54:12 and Ezekiel 27:16

This masculine noun designates a precious stone, most likely ruby or carnelian, valued for its red sparkle. In Isaiah 54:12 it appears in God's promise to rebuild Zion with precious stones, making her battlements of rubies. In Ezekiel 27:16 it's listed among the luxury goods traded with Tyre. The word has Aramaic cognates (kadkadana), suggesting it was a technical trade term for a specific gemstone in the ancient Near Eastern luxury commerce.

(2×) Attested in Isaiah 54:12 (Zion's restoration) and Ezekiel 27:16 (Tyre's trade). Both contexts emphasize precious value and beauty. Spanish renders it as "ruby" in both passages, French as "grenade" (garnet), and German preserves the Hebrew form, reflecting the uncertainty about which specific red gemstone the ancient term designated. The Isaiah context particularly emphasizes transformation: God will make Zion's very fortifications out of gems. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: and-rubies, rubies | es: de-rubí, y-rubí | fr: [כדכד], et-grenat | de: [וכדכד], [כדכד] Isa 54:12; Ezek 27:16

כְּדָרְלָעֹמֶר H3540 N-proper-ms (5×)

Chedorlaomer, king of Elam who led a coalition of four kings against the cities of the plain Chedorlaomer (Akkadian Kudur-Lagamar, 'servant of the deity Lagamaru') was the king of Elam who headed an alliance of four eastern kings in Genesis 14. He subjugated the five kings of the Jordan plain for twelve years before they rebelled, prompting a punitive campaign in which Lot was captured. Abraham's dramatic rescue of Lot from Chedorlaomer's forces marks one of the patriarch's most decisive military actions. The name's Elamite origin underscores the international scope of the narrative.

(5×) The proper name of the king of Elam who led a four-king coalition against the cities of the Jordan plain in Genesis 14. All major translations preserve a recognizable form: English 'Chedorlaomer,' Spanish 'Quedorlaomer,' French 'Chedorlaomer,' German 'Kedorlaomer.' The name derives from Akkadian/Elamite Kudur-Lagamar ('servant of Lagamaru'). All five occurrences fall within Genesis 14:1-17, spanning the initial alliance, the rebellion, the campaign, and the aftermath. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chedorlaomer | es: Quedorlaomer | fr: Chedorlaomer | de: Kedorlaomer, Kedorlaomers, dem-Kedorlaomer Gen 14:1; Gen 14:4; Gen 14:5; Gen 14:9; Gen 14:17

כֹּה H3541 Prep-b / Adv (577×)

Demonstrative adverb: thus, so, in this manner; also spatial 'here/there'; rarely temporal 'now'.

A small but versatile demonstrative adverb, כֹּה most often means 'thus' or 'so,' introducing the content of a message or decree—supremely in the prophetic messenger formula כֹּה אָמַר יְהוָה, 'thus says the LORD.' Spanish 'así,' French 'ainsi,' and German 'so' all converge on this manner-demonstrative force. Yet the word retains an older spatial sense, 'here' or 'there,' visible in the paired expression כֹּה וָכֹה ('here and there, this way and that,' Exod 2:12). One unique occurrence in Exodus 7:16 may carry temporal force: 'until now.'

1. thus, so, in this manner (569×) The adverb of manner: 'thus, so, in this way'—the overwhelmingly dominant sense, found 569 times. Nearly always points forward to what follows, especially in the prophetic messenger formula 'thus says the LORD' (כֹּה אָמַר יְהוָה), which alone accounts for hundreds of occurrences. Also used in reported speech ('thus he said,' Gen 32:4) and comparative descriptions ('thus shall your seed be,' Gen 15:5). Spanish 'así,' French 'ainsi,' and German 'so' consistently capture this deictic-of-manner function. MANNER ADVERBS

en: thus | es: Así, aquí, así | fr: ainsi | de: so, so- Gen 15:5; Gen 24:30; Gen 31:8; Gen 32:4

2. here, there, hither (7×) Spatial demonstrative: 'here, there, hither, thither.' Found in the paired idiom כֹּה וָכֹה meaning 'here and there' or 'on this side and on that side' (Exod 2:12, where Moses looks 'this way and that'). Also appears independently as 'here' (Gen 22:5, 'stay here with the donkey') or directionally as 'hither' (Num 23:15). The multilingual evidence splits revealingly: Spanish uses both 'aquí' (here) and 'allá' (there), French 'ici' and 'là,' German 'hier' and 'dorthin'—confirming a genuine spatial sense distinct from the manner adverb. HERE AND HITHER

en: and-there, here, over-there | es: allá, aquí, y-allí | fr: et-là, ici, là | de: dorthin, hier, ueber-dort Gen 22:5; Gen 31:37; Exod 2:12; Num 23:15

3. now, at this point (1×) A rare temporal extension: 'now, at this point,' attested at Exodus 7:16 where God's message includes the statement that Pharaoh has not listened 'עַד־כֹּה'—'until now.' The demonstrative force shifts from spatial proximity to temporal immediacy. Multilingual glosses confirm with 'ahora' (Spanish), 'maintenant' (French), and 'nun' (German), all standard temporal adverbs rather than manner or spatial terms. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: now | es: ahora | fr: maintenant | de: nun Exod 7:16

כָּה H3542 Adv (1×)

here, to this point, hitherto (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adverb appears in Daniel 7:28 at the conclusion of Daniel's night visions. After describing terrifying beasts and cosmic conflict, the text states: 'Here (or 'hitherto') is the end of the matter.' The adverb marks a boundary, signaling the termination of the vision account. It's the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew koh, used for spatial or temporal demarcation. The phrase 'up to here' creates closure, like an ancient chapter break, before the narrative shifts to new material.

(1×) Daniel 7:28 employs this Aramaic adverb in the phrase 'up to here is the end of the matter,' marking the conclusion of the vision section. Related to Hebrew koh and Mandaic/Syriac cognates meaning 'here' or 'thus.' Multilingual glosses vary: English/Spanish render it spatially ('here'/'aquí'), while French/German favor the deictic sense ('thus'/'so'). Context suggests both spatial and temporal boundary-marking: 'to this point' or 'hitherto,' as in Jeremiah 48:47. HERE AND HITHER

en: here | es: aquí | fr: ainsi | de: so Dan 7:28

כָּהָה H3543a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (7×)

kahah – to grow dim or faint; of eyes failing, fire waning, or spirit weakening

The verb kahah captures the gradual dimming or weakening of something once bright or vigorous. Its primary application is to eyes growing dim with age: Isaac's eyes were too dim to see (Gen 27:1), yet remarkably, Moses' eye 'was not dim' even at 120 (Deut 34:7). Job laments that his eye 'has grown dim from grief' (Job 17:7). In Zechariah 11:17, the worthless shepherd's eye will be 'utterly dimmed' – divine judgment expressed through the same vocabulary of failing sight. The word extends beyond vision: Isaiah's Servant of the LORD 'will not grow faint' (Isa 42:4), where the image shifts from a dimming lamp to a person who perseveres. In Ezekiel 21:7, 'every spirit will grow faint.' Arabic cognate kaha carries a similar range of weakness.

grow dim, become faint (7×) To grow dim, become faint, or lose strength – used primarily of eyes failing from old age (Gen 27:1; Deut 34:7), grief (Job 17:7), or divine judgment (Zech 11:17), and figuratively of a person not growing faint under trial (Isa 42:4, of the Servant of the LORD, compared to a lamp that will not be quenched) and of the human spirit weakening in dismay (Ezek 21:7). Spanish oscurecerse, French obscurcir, and English 'grow dim' all capture the core image of light or vitality gradually fading. The Arabic cognate kaha ('to be weak, cowardly') confirms the broader semantic field of diminished vigor. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS

en: and-grows-dim, and-shall-be-faint, and-were-dim | es: Y-se-ha-oscurecido, desfallcerá, oscurecerse | fr: [יִכֵּהַ], et-obscurcir, et-étaient-obscurci | de: [וכהתה], [ותכה], [יִכֵּהַ] Gen 27:1; Deut 34:7; Job 17:7; Isa 42:4; Ezek 21:7

כָּהָה H3543b V-Piel-Perf-3ms (1×)

to restrain, to rebuke; to hold back from action (Piel)

This verb appears only in 1 Samuel 3:13, where God condemns Eli for failing to restrain his wicked sons. The specific indictment: 'he did not restrain them' despite knowing their blasphemous conduct. The Piel stem suggests intensive or deliberate action—not passive neglect but active failure to intervene. Eli saw the corruption, heard the reports, gave weak verbal warnings, but never wielded his authority to stop them. This failure to restrain brought divine judgment on his entire house.

(1×) 1 Samuel 3:13 uses this Piel verb for Eli's failure to restrain his sons from sacrilege. The verb appears only here and carries the sense of rebuking or holding back. Cognate with Syriac/Aramaic/Mandaic terms meaning 'rebuke' or 'restrain.' English 'he-restrained' (negative context: 'he did not restrain') and Spanish 'reprendió' (rebuked) reflect slightly different nuances—preventive restraint vs. corrective rebuke. The verse emphasizes Eli's culpable inaction despite awareness. REBUKE CENSURE

en: he-restrained | es: reprendió | fr: il-retint | de: er-restrained 1Sam 3:13

כֵּהָה H3544 Adj-fs (9×)

Dim, faded, faint — describing diminished brightness in eyes, skin blemishes, flames, or figurative spirit.

The adjective kehah (כֵּהָה) describes something that has lost its intensity or vividness — whether light, color, or vitality. Its most frequent use is in the Levitical skin-disease laws, where a priest examines whether a suspicious mark has 'faded' or grown dim (Lev 13:6, 21, 26, 28, 39, 56), indicating the condition is healing rather than spreading. Beyond Leviticus, it describes Eli's failing eyesight (1 Sam 3:2), a dimly burning wick that the Servant will not snuff out (Isa 42:3), and a faint spirit exchanged for a garment of praise (Isa 61:3). Spanish abatido and German schwach capture the figurative extension well.

dim, faded, faint (9×) A feminine adjective (from the root כ-ה-ה) indicating diminished brightness, color, or vitality. In the priestly diagnostic system of Leviticus 13, it appears six times as the key indicator that a skin condition is benign — if the mark has grown kehah ('dim, faded'), the person is pronounced clean (Lev 13:6). Applied to Eli's eyes growing dim with age (1 Sam 3:2), to the 'dimly burning wick' the Isaianic Servant tenderly preserves (Isa 42:3), and metaphorically to a 'faint spirit' replaced by praise (Isa 61:3). The multilingual evidence — Spanish humeante for the wick, faded for the skin — shows translators adjust the rendering to each physical domain while preserving the core notion of diminished intensity. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS en: dimly-burning, faded, faint | es: a-debilitarse, abatido, humeante | fr: [כֵּהָה], a-pâli, faint | de: [כֵּהָה], hat-verblasst, schwach Lev 13:6; Lev 13:21; Lev 13:26; Lev 13:28; Lev 13:39

כֵּהָה H3545 N-fs (1×)

healing, relief, alleviation; cessation of injury

This noun appears in Nahum 3:19, part of a taunt against Nineveh declaring the finality of its coming destruction. The prophet announces: 'There is no relief (or healing) for your fracture.' The statement is brutally final—Nineveh's wound is mortal, beyond remedy. Some scholars suggest emending to gehah (healing), but the consonantal text supports kehah. The noun derives from a root meaning 'grow dim' or 'lessen,' here in the sense of diminishing or alleviating injury. For Nineveh, no such alleviation will come.

(1×) Nahum 3:19 uses this noun in declaring Nineveh's wound incurable: 'no relief for your fracture.' The Hebrew term derives from a root meaning to diminish or grow dim, applied here to the lessening of injury or pain. Multilingual glosses: English 'relief,' Spanish 'alivio' (relief/alleviation), French 'guérison' (healing). BDB notes textual discussion about whether to read 'gehah' (healing), but the semantic result is similar—Nineveh will have no reprieve. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: relief | es: alivio | fr: guérison | de: [כֵּהָה] Nah 3:19

כְּהַל H3546 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (4×)

to be able, capable (Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew יכל)

This Aramaic verb, the direct equivalent of Hebrew yakol, expresses ability or capability. In Daniel's Aramaic chapters, it appears in contexts where human wisdom proves insufficient—the wise men are not 'able' to reveal Nebuchadnezzar's dream or read the writing on the wall. The participle form functions almost adjectivally, describing someone as 'able' or 'capable' of performing a task, usually with an infinitive following to specify what they can or cannot do.

(4×) The verb appears four times in Daniel's Aramaic sections, always in negative contexts of human inability before divine mysteries. The king asks Daniel, 'Are you able to make known to me the dream?' (Dan 2:26), expecting the same failure as the other wise men. The king describes the dream to Daniel as one 'you are able to interpret' (Dan 4:18), acknowledging Daniel's unique Spirit-given capacity. But at Belshazzar's feast, the Babylonian wise men 'were not able' to read the mysterious writing (Dan 5:8), nor could they interpret it (Dan 5:15). Spanish capaz/podían and French pouvoir track the capability sense, while German leaves the participle forms in brackets. ABILITY AND POWER

en: able, are-able | es: capaz, podían, pudieron | fr: pouvoir | de: [כהל], [כהלין] Dan 2:26; Dan 4:18; Dan 5:8; Dan 5:15

כָּהַן H3547 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp (23×)

To serve or minister as a priest; by extension, to adorn oneself in priestly fashion (Isa 61:10).

A Piel denominative from kohen ('priest'), describing the act of functioning in the priestly office – offering sacrifices, burning incense, and ministering before the Lord. Nearly every occurrence belongs to the Priestly source in Exodus and Leviticus, always referring to Aaron and his sons being consecrated to 'minister as priests to Me' (Exod 28:1; 40:13). Hosea 4:6 extends the concept to Israel corporately. In one striking use (Isa 61:10), the bridegroom 'adorns himself like a priest,' shifting from sacerdotal service to the imagery of donning splendid vestments – Spanish se-adorna and English adorns-himself both capture the metaphorical pivot.

1. serve as priest (22×) To function in the priestly office, performing sacerdotal duties such as offering sacrifices, ministering at the altar, and serving in the sanctuary. The Piel stem marks this as a denominative activity: one acts-as-a-kohen. Spanish ejercer-sacerdocio and French servir-comme-prêtre both reflect the professional, ongoing nature of this ministry (Exod 28:1, 41; Lev 16:32). PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD

en: and-he-shall-serve-as-priest, and-ministered-as-priest, and-served-as-priest | es: de-ser-sacerdote, para-ejercer-sacerdocio, para-ejercer-sacerdocio- | fr: [ויכהנו], et-il—servir-comme-prêtre, et-ils—servir-comme-prêtres | de: Priester, [ויכהנו], [לכהן] Exod 28:1; Exod 28:3; Exod 28:4; Exod 28:41; Exod 29:1

2. adorn oneself like a priest (1×) To adorn or deck oneself in the manner of a priest putting on vestments, used metaphorically of a bridegroom (Isa 61:10). The multilingual evidence – English adorns-himself, Spanish se-adorna – confirms the shift from ritual function to ornamental display, where the priestly wardrobe becomes a simile for festive splendor. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE

en: adorns-himself | es: se-adorna | fr: [יְכַהֵן] | de: [יְכַהֵן] Isa 61:10

כֹּהֵן H3548 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (750×)

priest — one appointed to perform sacrifices, rituals, and sacred mediation between God and the people

The kohen served as the bridge between the divine and the human, officiating at the altar, handling sacred objects, pronouncing blessings, and adjudicating matters of purity. With 750 occurrences, the term overwhelmingly designates the Levitical priesthood established at Sinai, though it also applies to Melchizedek (Gen 14:18), foreign priests like those of Dagon (1 Sam 5:5), and the messianic priest-king of Psalm 110:4. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'el sacerdote,' French 'le sacrificateur,' German 'der Priester' — consistently render the cultic-officiant sense, confirming a unified semantic profile across all contexts.

priest, cultic officiant (750×) A person consecrated to cultic service, responsible for offering sacrifices, maintaining the sanctuary, and mediating between the deity and the community. Encompasses Aaronic and Levitical priests (Exod 29:30), the priest-king Melchizedek (Gen 14:18), pagan cult officials (2 Kgs 10:19), and the eschatological priest of Zechariah 6:13. Aramaic kahana and Ethiopic kahen attest to the deep Semitic roots of this office. PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD
en: the-priest | es: el-sacerdote | fr: le-prêtre, le-sacrificateur | de: der-Priester Exod 29:30; Exod 31:10; Exod 35:19; Exod 38:21; Exod 39:41

כָּהֵן H3549 Conj-w / N-mpd (8×)

Priest; an Aramaic noun for a cultic religious official who ministers in the temple service.

An Aramaic noun denoting a priest or religious functionary, appearing exclusively in the post-exilic books of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra, the term surfaces in official correspondence and narrative about the rebuilt temple, referring both to specific individuals ("the priest" Ezra, Ezr 7:12, 21) and to the priestly community collectively ("the priests," Ezr 6:9, 16, 18). The determined plural form kahnayyaᵓ and the suffixed form kohohi ("his priests") mirror the Biblical Hebrew kohen while reflecting standard Imperial Aramaic morphology. Spanish sacerdotes and French sacrificateurs both capture the mediatorial role inherent in the title.

priest(s) (8×) A cultic official serving in the Jerusalem temple. All eight occurrences cluster around the restoration-era temple activities: offering sacrifices (Ezr 6:9), dedicating the rebuilt house (Ezr 6:16), organizing divisions of service (Ezr 6:18), and royal exemptions from taxation (Ezr 7:24). The singular determined form kahanāᵓ designates Ezra himself as 'the priest, scribe of the law of the God of heaven' (Ezr 7:12, 21), while the plural forms refer to the priestly corps collectively. Spanish sacerdote and French sacrificateur both stress the sacrificial dimension of the office. PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD
en: and-its-priests, and-the-priests, the-priest | es: a-los-sacerdotes, el-sacerdote, los-sacerdotes | fr: et-sacrificateur, et-sacrificateurs, sacrificateur | de: [וְכָהֲנוֹהִי], [וְכָהֲנַיָּא], [כָּהֲנָא] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:16; Ezra 6:18; Ezra 7:12; Ezra 7:13

כְּהֻנָּה H3550 N-fsc / 2mp (14×)

Priesthood; the office, function, and hereditary right of priestly service in Israel's worship.

The abstract noun for the institution of the priesthood, kehunnah names not merely an office but a sacred trust passed through generations. Exodus 29:9 declares that 'the priesthood shall be theirs by a perpetual statute,' and Exodus 40:15 confirms that Aaron's anointing secures an 'everlasting priesthood.' Numbers defines the boundaries of priestly responsibility: 'you and your sons shall guard your priesthood' (Num 18:7). Phinehas receives the 'covenant of an everlasting priesthood' for his zeal (Num 25:13). Post-exilic texts record families 'excluded from the priesthood' for lacking genealogical proof (Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64).

priesthood (14×) The sacerdotal office and its hereditary privileges within the Aaronic-Levitical line. Established as perpetual in Exodus 29:9 and 40:15, guarded with boundary language in Numbers 18:1, 7. Phinehas receives it as an everlasting covenant (Num 25:13). Joshua 18:7 identifies it as the Levites' portion in lieu of land. Post-exilic usage (Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64; 13:29) applies it to genealogical legitimacy. PRIESTHOOD OFFICE
en: for-priesthood-of, priesthood, priesthood-of | es: el-sacerdocio, el-sacerdocio., el-sacerdocio? | fr: [הַכְּהֻנָּה], le-priesthoods, leur-priesthood | de: [הַכְּהֻנָּה], dein-priesthood, der-priesthoods Exod 29:9; Exod 40:15; Num 3:10; Num 16:10; Num 18:1

כְּוָה H3551 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)

windows; openings for light and air (Aramaic)

This Aramaic plural noun appears in Daniel 6:10, describing Daniel's upper room where he prayed three times daily with windows opened toward Jerusalem. The detail is architecturally and theologically significant: windows enabled Daniel to orient his prayers toward the destroyed temple, maintaining covenantal connection despite exile. The openness also made his devotion public and visible, heightening the risk under Darius's decree. The word is a loan into Aramaic from earlier Semitic languages, cognate with Arabic kawwa(t).

(1×) Daniel 6:10 describes the opened windows in Daniel's upper chamber facing Jerusalem. The Aramaic plural form with conjunction indicates architectural features designed for light and air. Multilingual evidence: Spanish 'las ventanas,' French 'fenêtre,' English 'windows' all converge on the architectural meaning. The phrase 'windows opened' suggests they could be closed—adjustable shutters or lattices. Daniel's choice to keep them open despite legal danger demonstrates public fidelity. WINDOW OPENING
en: and-windows | es: y-las-ventanas | fr: et-fenêtre | de: [וְכַוִּין] Dan 6:10

כּוּב H3552 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Cub, a people or region allied with Egypt; possibly textual error for Libya

This gentillic name appears in Ezekiel 30:5 within a list of Egypt's allies who will fall with her in judgment. The text groups Cub with Ethiopia, Put, Lud, and Arabia—nations in Egypt's sphere of influence. However, many scholars (including the Septuagint) suggest this should read 'Lub' (Libya/Libyans), which would fit the geographical pattern better. The uncertainty reflects scribal confusion between similar Hebrew letters (kaph vs. lamed). Either reading points to Egypt's coalition partners sharing her doom.

(1×) Ezekiel 30:5 lists Cub among peoples allied with Egypt who will fall in judgment. The conjunction prefix 'and' places it in a series of ethnic/geographic names. Scholarly consensus, reflected in BDB, suggests textual emendation to 'Lub' (Libya) based on the Septuagint and geographic logic. English/Spanish/French preserve the Masoretic reading 'Cub' in transliteration, while German leaves it untransliterated, acknowledging textual uncertainty. Context demands a nation in Egypt's political orbit. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Cub | es: y-Cub | fr: et-Kub | de: [וְכוּב] Ezek 30:5

כּוֹבַע H3553 Conj-w / N-ms (6×)

A helmet — bronze military headgear for battle; used figuratively of God's 'helmet of salvation' in Isaiah 59:17.

A masculine noun (כּוֹבָע) denoting a helmet, the protective headgear worn by soldiers in ancient Near Eastern warfare. Five of its six occurrences are straightforwardly military: Goliath wore a bronze helmet (1 Sam 17:5), Uzziah equipped his army with helmets (2 Chr 26:14), Egyptian soldiers are told to polish their helmets (Jer 46:4), and mercenaries of Tyre hang their helmets in her armory (Ezek 27:10; cf. 38:5). The sixth occurrence transforms the image theologically: in Isaiah 59:17, God himself dons righteousness as a breastplate and a 'helmet of salvation' on his head — an image Paul later applies to believers (Eph 6:17). The related form קוֹבָע appears in Ezekiel 23:24 as a variant spelling.

helmet (military headgear) (6×) A helmet — a piece of military armor worn on the head for protection in battle. Literally, it appears as bronze headgear: on Goliath (1 Sam 17:5, כּוֹבַע נְחֹשֶׁת 'helmet of bronze'), in Uzziah's army provisions (2 Chr 26:14), in the call to Egyptian warriors (Jer 46:4), and among Tyrian mercenaries (Ezek 27:10; 38:5). Figuratively, Isaiah 59:17 transforms it into divine armor: God wears a 'helmet of salvation' (כּוֹבַע יְשׁוּעָה) on his head, paired with righteousness as his breastplate — an image foundational to the New Testament's 'armor of God.' Spanish 'casco' (helmet) and French/German transliterations of the Hebrew all point to the same concrete piece of military equipment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-helmet-of, and-helmet, and-helmet-of | es: Y-casco-de, con-cascos, y-casco | fr: [בכובעים], [וכובע], [וכובעים] | de: [בכובעים], [וכובע], [וכובעים] 1Sam 17:5; 2Chr 26:14; Isa 59:17; Jer 46:4; Ezek 27:10

כָּוָה H3554 V-Nifal-Imperf-2ms (2×)

To burn, scorch, brand; Niphal stem meaning to be scorched or burned (Prov 6:28; Isa 43:2)

This verb denotes burning or scorching, appearing only in the Niphal (passive/reflexive) stem in biblical Hebrew. In Proverbs 6:28 it appears in a rhetorical question about walking on hot coals: will a man's feet not be burned? In Isaiah 43:2 God promises Israel protection in trial: when you walk through fire, you shall not be scorched. Both contexts use fire metaphorically, Proverbs for sexual sin's consequences and Isaiah for divine preservation through persecution.

(2×) Found in Proverbs 6:28 (wisdom warning) and Isaiah 43:2 (salvation oracle). The Proverbs passage uses second person ("shall... be burned") in hypothetical questioning, while Isaiah uses masculine plural ("they shall not be scorched") in parallel with the verb "to burn" (ba'ar). All major translations render it as scorch, burn, or singe, capturing the fire damage to living tissue. BURNING AND FIRE

en: be-scorched, you-will-be-burned | es: se-quemarán, te-quemarás | fr: [תכוה], תכוינה | de: [תכוה], [תכוינה] Prov 6:28; Isa 43:2

כְּוִיָּה H3555 N-fs (2×)

A burn, burning; noun used in the lex talionis formula "burn for burn" (Exod 21:25)

This feminine noun designates a burn injury, appearing only in Exodus 21:25 within the famous lex talionis (law of retaliation) formula. The phrase "burn for burn" completes the sequence "eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burn for burn, wound for wound, stripe for stripe." The principle established proportional justice, limiting revenge to equivalence rather than escalation. The word derives from the same root as the verb "to burn" discussed above.

(2×) Attested exclusively in Exodus 21:25, appearing twice in the construct phrase "burn for burn." All major translations preserve the repetitive formula ("quemadura por quemadura" in Spanish, "brûler pour brûler" in French, "verbrennen für verbrennen" in German), recognizing the legal precision of the lex talionis principle that requires exact correspondence between injury and recompense. FIRE AND BURNING

en: burn | es: quemadura | fr: brûler | de: verbrennen Exod 21:25

כּוֹכָב H3556 Prep-m / N-mpc (37×)

star — a luminous celestial body, used literally of the night sky and figuratively for multitude or royalty

Kokhav designates a star or luminous celestial body and carries remarkable symbolic freight across its 37 occurrences. God deploys the stars as a measure of the innumerable when he promises Abraham descendants 'as the stars of the heavens' (Gen 15:5; 22:17; 26:4) — a formula echoed in Exodus 32:13, Deuteronomy 1:10; 10:22; 28:62, and Nehemiah 9:23. The creation account assigns stars a subordinate role alongside sun and moon (Gen 1:16), yet they participate in cosmic praise (Ps 148:3) and even warfare, as when 'the stars in their courses fought against Sisera' (Judg 5:20). Balaam's oracle introduces the messianic dimension: 'a star shall come out of Jacob' (Num 24:17). The prophets employ falling or darkened stars as harbingers of divine judgment (Isa 13:10; Joel 2:10; 4:15). The Semitic cognates — Aramaic kokhva, Arabic kawkab, Akkadian kakkabu — attest the word's deep antiquity.

star, celestial body (37×) A luminous celestial body visible in the night sky, serving both literal and figurative functions. Literally, stars are created objects of the fourth day (Gen 1:16), named and numbered by God (Ps 147:4; Isa 40:26). Figuratively, they represent: (a) innumerability in the Abrahamic promise (Gen 15:5; 22:17; Deut 1:10; 28:62), (b) royal or messianic destiny in Balaam's oracle (Num 24:17), (c) cosmic upheaval in prophetic judgment (Isa 13:10; Joel 2:10; 4:15), and (d) angelic or heavenly beings (Job 38:7). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'estrellas,' French and German borrowing the Hebrew form in brackets — highlight the word's transparency across traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-stars, and-the-stars, as-stars-of | es: como-estrellas-de, como-las-estrellas-de, estrellas-de | fr: [הכוכבים], [ככוכבי], [ככבי] | de: [והכוכבים], [כוכבי], [ככוכבי] Gen 1:16; Gen 15:5; Gen 22:17; Gen 26:4; Gen 37:9

כּוּל H3557 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (37×)

Contain, hold; sustain, nourish, provide for; endure, bear, withstand — from כּוּל 'to measure, comprehend'

The verb כּוּל and its intensive stems (Pilpel כִּלְכֵּל, Hiphil הֵכִיל) revolve around the idea of holding something within bounds — whether a vessel holding water, a household sustained with food, or a spirit enduring hardship. Joseph's promise to 'sustain' his family in Egypt (Gen 45:11; 50:21) uses the Pilpel, as does Solomon's provisioning system (1 Kgs 4:7). The Hiphil asks whether heaven and earth can 'contain' God (1 Kgs 8:27; 2 Chr 2:6) — Spanish 'contener' and French 'contenir' map neatly here. In the emotional register, Jeremiah cannot 'contain' God's word like fire in his bones (Jer 20:9), and Malachi asks who can 'endure' the day of the Lord's coming (Mal 3:2). The Arabic cognate ك ي ل (to measure grain) preserves the root's original concrete sense of measured capacity.

1. sustain, provide for, nourish (17×) The Pilpel stem's primary meaning: to sustain, provide for, or nourish someone over time, especially by supplying food. Joseph promises to כַּלְכֵּל his father's household during the famine (Gen 45:11; 50:21); Barzillai sustained David at Mahanaim (2 Sam 19:32-33); Ruth's son will sustain Naomi in old age (Ruth 4:15); Obadiah sustained a hundred prophets with bread and water (1 Kgs 18:4). Spanish 'sustentar/abastecer' and English 'sustain/provide for' consistently capture this relational, ongoing provision. Nehemiah 9:21 recalls God sustaining Israel forty years in the wilderness. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-I-sustained-them, and-I-will-provide-for, and-I-will-sustain | es: Y-sustentó, los-sustentaste, para-abastecer | fr: –soutenir, [כלכלתם], contenir | de: [ולכלכל], [יכלכל], [כלכלתם] Gen 45:11; Gen 47:12; Gen 50:21; Ruth 4:15; 2Sam 19:32

2. contain, hold (capacity) (13×) Physical capacity: to hold or contain within a defined space. Solomon's bronze Sea 'contained' two thousand baths (1 Kgs 7:26, 38); the altar could not 'contain' all the offerings (1 Kgs 8:64). Most theologically striking: Solomon's prayer marvels that heaven and the highest heaven cannot 'contain' God (1 Kgs 8:27; 2 Chr 2:6; 6:18). Spanish 'contener/cabir,' French 'contenir,' and the Arabic cognate ك ي ل (measure) all reinforce this spatial-quantitative sense. The Qal in Isaiah 40:12 asks who 'measured' the dust of the earth, preserving the root's original measurement meaning. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: and-contained, can-contain-him, can-contain-you | es: cabía, contener, contenía | fr: [הכיל], [יכיל], [יכלו] | de: [הכיל], [יכיל], [יכלו] 1Kgs 7:26; 1Kgs 7:38; 1Kgs 8:27; 1Kgs 8:64; 2Chr 2:6

3. endure, bear, withstand (5×) The psychological-emotional extension: to endure, bear, or withstand something overwhelming. Jeremiah describes God's word as fire shut up in his bones — he is weary of 'containing' it and cannot (Jer 20:9). Malachi 3:2 asks who can 'endure' the refiner's fire. Joel 2:11 asks who can 'bear' the terrible Day of the LORD. A crushed spirit is something no one can 'bear' (Prov 18:14). The nations cannot 'endure' God's indignation (Jer 10:10). Spanish 'soportar/contener' and the shared use of 'endure' in English distinguish this from mere physical capacity. ENDURE TOLERATE en: can-endure, can-endure-it, containing | es: de-contener, lo-soportará?, pueden | fr: [יכלו], [כלכל], nourrir | de: [יכילנו], [יכלו], [יכלכל] Prov 18:14; Jer 10:10; Jer 20:9; Joel 2:11; Mal 3:2

4. (1×) In Psalm 112:5, the righteous person 'conducts' or 'manages' his affairs with justice. English renders 'conducts'; Spanish 'sostiene' (sustains/upholds). This extends the sustaining sense into the domain of wise administration — managing one's dealings and resources prudently. It bridges the 'provide for' sense (managing a household) and the 'contain' sense (keeping things in order), applied to personal conduct and financial affairs. FILLING AND FULLNESS en: he-conducts | es: sostiene | fr: contenir | de: er-conducts Ps 112:5

5. (1×) In 1 Kings 20:27, the Israelites were 'provisioned' or supplied before battle against Ben-hadad's vast Syrian army. English 'provisioned' and Spanish 'provistos' point to military supply — a natural extension of the 'sustain/nourish' sense into the context of army logistics, where troops must be fed and equipped before engagement. FEEDING AND NOURISHING
en: and-provisioned | es: y-provistos | fr: et-provisioned | de: und-provisioned 1Kgs 20:27

כּוּמָז H3558 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
a golden ornament worn as jewelry, possibly a bracelet or pendant
This rare ornament appears only in lists of gold jewelry offerings. The exact form is uncertain, though translations suggest either a bracelet or pendant. Both occurrences (Exodus 35:22 and Numbers 31:50) occur in Priestly texts describing precious metal offerings, grouped with rings, earrings, and other fine jewelry. The multilingual evidence consistently points to ornamental jewelry, likely worn on the arm or neck.

(2×) A golden ornament of uncertain specific type, mentioned alongside rings, earrings, and other jewelry in offering contexts. The consistent rendering across languages as bracelet or pendant reflects the ornamental nature, though the precise archaeological identification remains unclear. Found only in donation lists within the Priestly source. CHAIN ORNAMENT en: and-bracelet, and-pendant | es: y-brazaletes, y-cadena | fr: et-bracelet, et-pendant | de: und-bracelet, und-pendant Exod 35:22; Num 31:50

כּוּן H3559a V-Piel-Perf-3ms (217×)
prepare, make ready; be/make firm, established; be ready/right/certain; direct, aim
This root expresses firmness and preparation across multiple stems. In the Hifil it means actively preparing or establishing something — a meal, a throne, a kingdom. The Nifal describes being established, standing firm, or being ready for action, as well as what is right or certain. Piel and Pual forms intensify the establishing or confirming action, while occasional senses cover directing or aiming toward a target. Arabic distinguishes preparation (هَيَّأَ) from establishment (أَسَّسَ) and correctness (صَوَّبَ), confirming that this root spans readiness, durability, and epistemic certainty. The reflexive Hitpael shows self-establishment, as in building up a city or preparing oneself.

1. prepare, make ready (Hifil) (80×) The Hifil sense of preparing or making ready appears 80 times and represents the most frequent usage. Genesis 43:16 records Joseph commanding his steward to prepare a meal, Numbers 23:1 describes Balaam preparing seven altars. Arabic هَيَّأَ ('prepare in advance') and Swahili -andaa ('prepare') consistently render this cluster. The causative stem signals deliberate action to make something ready for use or an event. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: I-have-prepared, and-establish, and-prepare | es: había-preparado, lo-que-preparé, preparé | fr: et-der-ainsi, et-préparer, établir | de: bereiten, bereitete, er-bereitete Gen 43:16; Gen 43:25; Num 23:1; Num 23:29; Josh 1:11

2. be established, stand firm (Nifal) (42×) The Nifal passive/stative sense 'be established, stand firm' accounts for 42 occurrences and covers enduring structures and states. Genesis 41:32 explains that the dream was doubled because 'the thing is established by God,' and 2 Samuel 7:16 promises David 'your throne shall be established forever.' Arabic ثَبَتَ ('be firm, endure') and Korean 확고하다 mark this as a state of permanence distinct from active preparation. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: established, is-established, shall-be-established | es: era-firme, es-establecido, establecido | fr: affermir, il-affermira, établi | de: bereiten, bereitete, beständig Gen 41:32; Judg 16:26; Judg 16:29; 2Sam 7:16; 2Sam 7:26

3. establish, make firm (Hifil) (28×) The Hifil causative sense of establishing or setting up a kingdom, throne, or person appears 28 times. 1 Samuel 13:13 records that Saul's kingdom would have been established, 2 Samuel 7:12-13 promises that God will establish Solomon's throne. Arabic أَسَّسَ and ثَبَّتَ distinguish this from mere preparation: the focus is on making something stand firm or installing it in place, not just getting it ready. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: And-I-will-establish, He-established-it, I-will-establish | es: Y-estableceré, Y-establecieron, afirma | fr: a-établit-moi, affermir, et-je-fera-établis | de: bereiten, bereitete, du-gründen 1Sam 13:13; 2Sam 5:12; 2Sam 7:12; 2Sam 7:13; 1Kgs 2:24

4. establish, confirm (Piel) (24×) The Piel intensive sense of confirming or founding firmly appears 24 times. Exodus 15:17 celebrates the mountain God has founded, 2 Samuel 7:24 describes God establishing Israel as His people. Arabic ثَبَّتَ (intensive 'make firm') and أَسَّسَ ('found, lay foundation') mark the deliberate, intensive act of establishing with emphasis on durability or foundational strength. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: He-establishes, You-established, and-establish | es: Y-estableciste, afirmó, confirma | fr: affermir, comme-affermir, et-affermir | de: bereiten, du-gegründet, er-gegründet-es Exod 15:17; Deut 32:6; 2Sam 7:24; Job 8:8; Job 31:15

5. ready, prepared (Nifal stative) (17×) The Nifal participle used adjectively for 'ready, prepared' accounts for 17 occurrences. Exodus 19:11 commands the people to 'be ready for the third day,' Joshua 8:4 instructs the ambush to be ready. Arabic مُسْتَعِدّ ('ready, prepared') and Swahili tayari reveal this as a state of readiness for action, not firmness or permanence — a semantic shift within the Nifal stem. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: am-ready, and-prepare, and-prepare-themselves | es: Preparados-están, Prepárate, Y-fue-preparada | fr: [הכן], [כוננו], affermir | de: bereiten, bereitete, bin-bereit Exod 19:11; Exod 19:15; Exod 34:2; Josh 8:4; 2Chr 8:16

6. right, certain, true (Nifal stative) (9×) The Nifal participle meaning 'right, certain, true' appears 9 times in legal and epistemic contexts. Deuteronomy 13:14 commands investigation 'and if it is certain' that idolatry occurred, 1 Samuel 23:23 seeks 'certain knowledge' of David's location. Arabic صِحَّة ('correctness'), يَقِين ('certainty'), and Korean 확실한 ('certain') distinguish this ethical-epistemic sense from physical firmness, showing a semantic extension from 'firmly established' to 'reliably true.' ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: certain, certainty, established | es: certeza, cierto, es-correcto | fr: affermir, certain, certainty | de: Wahrheit, bereitete, certain Exod 8:26; Deut 13:14; Deut 17:4; 1Sam 23:23; 1Sam 26:4

7. be established (Pual/Hofal passive) (5×) The Pual and Hofal passive forms (5 occurrences) express being established or prepared by another agent. Psalm 37:23 declares that the steps of a man are established by the LORD, Zechariah 5:11 describes a house being set up for the ephah. Arabic مُهَيَّأ ('prepared') and مُؤَسَّس ('is made firm') confirm the passive voice where the subject receives the action of establishing or readying. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: and-is-set-up, and-it-will-be-prepared, and-will-be-established | es: Y-será-establecido, colocados, son-afirmados | fr: [והכן], [מוכנים], comme-affermir | de: bereiten, sind-gegründet, und-bereiten Ps 37:23; Isa 16:5; Ezek 40:43; Nah 2:5; Zech 5:11

8. direct, aim, set toward (Hifil/Piel) (4×) Four occurrences show an extended sense of directing or aiming toward a target. Psalm 21:12 speaks of aiming arrows at enemies' faces, Jeremiah 10:23 declares that man's steps are not directed by himself. Arabic وَجَّهَ ('aim at') and Swahili kuelekeza ('direct toward') reveal a genuine semantic extension from establishment to orientation, where the verb governs direction rather than just firmness. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: and-you-shall-set, to-direct, you-aim | es: afirmarás, apuntarás, y-afir-

marás | fr: [והכינתה], [תכין], affermir | de: bereiten, du-aim, und-bereiten Ps 21:12; Jer 10:23; Ezek 4:3; Ezek 4:7

9. be established (Hitpael reflexive) (3×) The Hitpael reflexive-passive sense 'establish oneself' appears 3 times. Numbers 21:27 calls for Heshbon to be established (built up), Proverbs 24:3 describes a house being established through understanding, Isaiah 54:14 promises 'you will be established in righteousness.' Arabic تَهَيَّأَ ('prepare oneself') and تُكَنِّي ('you [f.] will be made firm') mark the reflexive or self-directed nature of the action. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: and-established, it-is-established, you-will-be-established | es: es-establecida, serás-establecida, y-establecida | fr: et-établit, établir | de: bereiten, bereitete, und-gruendete Num 21:27; Prov 24:3; Isa 54:14

10. (2×) Joshua 3:17 and 4:3 describe the priests standing 'firm' on dry ground in the Jordan. The single-word gloss and context suggest this may belong with sense 2 (be established, stand firm) rather than forming a distinct cluster. The Nifal stative reading fits: the priests stood firmly in place. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: firm | es: firme, firmes | fr: firm | de: firm Josh 3:17; Josh 4:3

11. Piel fitted, prepared (arrows) (2×) Psalm 11:2 and Isaiah 51:13 describe fitting or preparing arrows on the bowstring, a specialized Piel sense for weapon preparation. Arabic كَنَّوْا ('they prepared [weapons]') in military contexts confirms this as a technical extension of the preparation sense (sense 1), possibly warranting consolidation with that cluster or recognition as a distinct military register. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: he-prepares, they-have-fitted | es: prepararon, se-preparó | fr: comme-affermir, établir | de: bereiten, sie-haben-fitted Ps 11:2; Isa 51:13

12. (1×) Ezekiel 16:7 uses a form glossed 'were formed' in the context of the body developing. The single occurrence and biological context ('your breasts were formed') may represent a specialized extension of sense 2 (be established) or sense 7 (be prepared passively). Further evidence would clarify whether this is a developmental or anatomical idiom. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: were-formed | es: se-formaron | fr: [נכנו] | de: bereiten Ezek 16:7

נָכוֹן H3559b N-ms (1×)
prepared, ready, established; possibly 'blow' (uncertain)
This noun appears in Job 12:5, a notoriously difficult verse. Traditional readings take it from the root kun (to establish/prepare), meaning something like 'prepared (destruction)' or 'ready (disaster).' Job describes how the comfortable despise those facing calamity —trouble 'prepared' for the stumbling. Some scholars (Schultens, Delitzsch, Budde) suggest instead reading it as 'blow' or 'stroke,' though this is speculative. The semantic territory involves readiness or preparation for calamity, fitting Job's theme of the righteous suffering while the wicked prosper.

(1×) Job 12:5 employs this difficult noun in a context about contempt for misfortune. Most scholars derive it from kun (establish/prepare), hence 'prepared (for stumbling)' or 'ready (disaster).' Spanish 'preparada' and French's untranslated form reflect this uncertainty. The verse's syntax is compressed, making precise translation challenging. The semantic domain of readiness/preparation suits Job's sarcastic description of how the secure mock those facing prepared calamity. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: prepared | es: preparada | fr: établir | de: [נכון] Job 12:5

כּוּן H3560 Conj-w (1×)
Cun, a city of Hadadezer in Aram-zobah; parallel to Berothai
Cun appears in 1 Chronicles 18:8 as one of the cities from which David captured large quantities of bronze after defeating King Hadadezer. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 8:8 calls this city Berothai, suggesting either a variant name or textual tradition. Geographically, Furrer identifies it with Kuna near Bereitan, located between Laodicea and Heliopolis in Syria. The bronze seized from Cun (and Tibhath) later provided material for Solomon's temple furnishings, connecting David's military victories to temple construction.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 18:8 names Cun as a city of Hadadezer plundered by David for bronze. The preposition 'and from' indicates it's one of multiple cities mentioned. The parallel in 2 Samuel 8:8 gives 'Berothai' instead, and the Septuagint reflects this variant. Modern identification: Kuna near modern Lebanon-Syria region. Multilingual glosses preserve transliteration with minor variations. The conjunction prefix shows this city appears in a list of conquered Aramean settlements. PERSONAL NAMES en: and-from-Cun | es: y-de-Kun | fr: [ומכון] | de: [ומכון] 1Chr 18:8

כַּוָּן H3561 N-mp (2×)
sacrificial cakes made for the worship of the Queen of Heaven
These ritual cakes appear exclusively in Jeremiah's condemnation of idolatrous worship. The term is likely a Babylonian loan-word from kamānu, referring to cakes used in Ishtar worship. The practice involved whole families in preparing these offerings for 'the Queen of Heaven,' a syncretistic cult practice that drew prophetic rebuke. The Hebrew root suggests preparation or arrangement, fitting the careful ritual production of cultic offerings.

(2×) Ritual cakes baked as offerings to the Queen of Heaven (a foreign goddess, likely Ishtar). Both references in Jeremiah describe family involvement in this condemned practice. The Babylonian connection suggests these were shaped or decorated cakes following patterns from Mesopotamian worship, representing a significant departure from YHWH worship that Jeremiah explicitly challenges. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: cakes | es: tortas | fr: [כונים] | de: [כונים] Jer 7:18; Jer 44:19

כּוֹנַנְיָהוּ H3562 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)
Konanyahu (Conaniah), a Levitical official over tithes and offerings in the time of Hezekiah and Josiah.
A Levitical proper name meaning 'Yahweh has established,' borne by at least one (possibly two) figures in Chronicles. The most prominent Konanyahu served under King Hezekiah as chief overseer of the tithes, contributions, and dedicated things brought into the temple (2 Chr 31:12-13). A second Konanyahu appears among the Levitical chiefs who contributed livestock for Josiah's great Passover celebration (2 Chr 35:9). The name's theophoric element -yahu affirms divine establishment, fitting for officials entrusted with administering what was consecrated to God.

Konanyahu / Conaniah (proper noun) (6×) A Hebrew theophoric name ('Yahweh has established') designating Levitical leaders in Chronicles. English consistently renders 'Conaniah' or 'Konaniah,' while Spanish uses 'Kananyahu/Konanyahu.' The primary bearer oversaw temple storehouses of tithes and offerings under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:12-13); a second appears as a Levitical contributor at Josiah's Passover (2 Chr 35:9). The LXX varies between Chōnenias and Chōmenias, reflecting scribal uncertainty about the double-nun cluster. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Conaniah, [Konaniah], [and-Conaniah] | es: Kananyahu, [Konanyahu], [y-Konanyahu] | fr: [וכוננידהו], [וכנניהו], [כוננידהו] | de: [וכוננידהו], [וכנניהו], [כוננידהו] 2Chr 31:12; 2Chr 31:13; 2Chr 35:9

H3563 Prep-b (1×)
in the cup; vessel for drinking
This prepositional phrase appears in Proverbs 23:31, part of a vivid warning against wine. The text says: 'Do not look at wine when it is red, when it sparkles in the cup.' The phrase captures a moment of temptation—wine at its most visually appealing, gleaming in the vessel. The proverb continues to describe wine's seductive appearance and bitter consequences, using the cup as the stage where temptation presents itself. The prepositional construction emphasizes the locative: the specific danger of wine as it appears in the cup, ready to drink.

(1×) Proverbs 23:31 uses this phrase in the anti-wine warning: 'when it sparkles in the cup.' The preposition be- attaches to 'cup' (kos), creating a locative expression. Most multilingual versions put the phrase in parentheses or brackets, suggesting translators view it as a standard prepositional phrase rather than a lexically distinct entry. The cup serves as the visual setting for wine's deceptive allure—beautiful in the vessel, painful in its effects. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: in-the-cup | es: (en-la-copa) | fr: (בכוס) | de: [(בכוס)] Prov 23:31

כּוֹס H3563a N-fsc / 3fs (30×)

cup, goblet — a drinking vessel; figuratively, one's divinely allotted portion or fate

Kos designates a drinking cup or goblet and appears 30 times with a remarkable dual register: concrete and metaphorical. In the Joseph narrative, Pharaoh's cupbearer squeezes grapes into Pharaoh's kos three times in a single verse (Gen 40:11), the most vivid literal usage. Nathan's parable of the poor man's ewe lamb that 'drank from his cup' (2 Sam 12:3) sits at the hinge between literal and figurative. The great prophetic metaphor of the 'cup of wrath' — God's kos of judgment forced upon nations — runs through Jeremiah 25:15-28, Isaiah 51:17-22, Ezekiel 23:31-34, and the Psalms (Ps 75:9). Yet the psalmist can also call YHWH 'my cup' in a positive sense: 'the LORD is the portion of my cup' (Ps 16:5) and 'my cup overflows' (Ps 23:5). Spanish 'copa,' French 'coupe,' and German 'Becher' all capture the vessel sense while the fate-metaphor transcends translation.

cup, goblet, chalice (30×) A drinking vessel used for wine or other beverages, appearing in literal narrative contexts such as the cupbearer's dream (Gen 40:11-21), Nathan's parable (2 Sam 12:3), and the Rechabites' refusal (Jer 35:5). Also describes the ornamental rim of Solomon's molten sea (1 Kgs 7:26). The concrete usage anchors the word's richer metaphorical extensions in prophetic and wisdom literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cup, cup-of, cup-of- | es: copa, copa-de, la-copa | fr: comme-coupe, coupe, coupe-de | de: Becher, [כוס], den-Becher Gen 40:11; Gen 40:13; Gen 40:21

כּוֹס H3563b Art / N-ms (3×)

little owl (small owl species), unclean bird dwelling in ruins

A bird name referring to a species of small owl, distinct from the larger owl species (יַנְשׁוּף). Listed among unclean birds in Leviticus 11:17 and Deuteronomy 14:16, and appearing in Psalm 102:6 where the suffering psalmist compares himself to 'an owl of the ruins'—a solitary creature inhabiting desolate places. The word may be onomatopoetic, imitating the owl's call (hence כּוֹס). While sharing the same consonants as the common word for 'cup' (כּוֹס I), this is recognized as a separate lexeme based on context and ancient versions, which uniformly understand a bird. The owl's association with ruins made it a powerful metaphor for loneliness and desolation.

(3×) A small owl species, likely nocturnal, associated with ruined and desolate places. The psalmist's self-comparison to a ruins-dwelling owl powerfully conveys isolation, mourning, and alienation from normal human society. The unclean status in Levitical law likely relates to its carrion-eating habits or nocturnal nature. Multilingual glosses consistently identify a small owl species ('little owl', 'búho', 'petit-owl'), distinguishing it from the great owl (H3244). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3463 WITH 3 SENSES

en: like-an-owl, the-little-owl | es: como-búho-de, el-búho | fr: comme-coupe, le-petit-owl | de: der-klein-owl, wie-ein-owl Lev 11:17; Deut 14:16; Ps 102:6

כּוּר H3564 Prep-m / N-msc (9×)

A smelting furnace or refining pot, used almost exclusively as a metaphor for affliction, testing, and divine purification.

The noun kur (כּוּר) refers to a smelting furnace or crucible used for refining metals, but in biblical usage it functions almost entirely as a metaphor. Egypt is called 'the iron furnace' from which God brought Israel out (Deut 4:20; 1 Kgs 8:51; Jer 11:4), evoking the intense suffering of bondage. Proverbs pairs it with the refiner's crucible: 'The furnace for gold, the crucible for silver, and the LORD tests hearts' (Prov 17:3; 27:21). Ezekiel portrays Israel as dross metals thrown into God's kur (Ezek 22:18–22), while Isaiah speaks of being refined 'in the furnace of affliction' (Isa 48:10). The Arabic cognate كُور confirms the basic metallurgical sense.

furnace, smelting pot (9×) A masculine noun designating a smelting furnace or refining pot for metals, consistently deployed in metaphorical and simile contexts for divine testing, punishment, or purification. Three major image clusters emerge: (a) Egypt as 'the iron furnace' of bondage (Deut 4:20; 1 Kgs 8:51; Jer 11:4); (b) the refiner's crucible that tests character as fire tests gold (Prov 17:3; 27:21); (c) Israel as impure metals cast into God's furnace (Ezek 22:18, 20, 22). Isaiah 48:10 combines both strands: 'I have refined you in the furnace of affliction.' Spanish horno de and German equivalents preserve the metallurgical imagery. Cognate with Arabic كُور and Aramaic כּוּר. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-furnace, and-furnace, from-furnace-of | es: de-horno-de, del-horno-de, en-horno-de | fr: [בכור], [כור], [מכור] | de: [בכור], [וכור], [כור] Deut 4:20; 1Kgs 8:51; Prov 17:3; Prov 27:21; Isa 48:10

בּוֹר עָשָׁן H3565 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Bor-ashan, a town in southern Judah; variant of Ashan

This place name appears in 1 Samuel 30:30 among the towns that received shares of David's Amalekite spoil while he was based in Ziklag. The name literally means 'pit of smoke' or 'smoking pit,' though BDB suggests the text should read 'Bor Ashan' rather than the common 'Khor Ashan.' This location is likely the same as 'Ashan' mentioned elsewhere in Judah's southern inheritance (Joshua 15:42). David's distribution of plunder to these towns built political loyalty in preparation for his kingship over Judah.

(1×) 1 Samuel 30:30 lists Bor-ashan among recipients of David's spoil distribution. The preposition 'in/at' indicates David sent gifts to this location. BDB suggests reading 'Bor' (pit) rather than 'Khor' (furnace), yielding 'pit of smoke.' Multilingual versions transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Bor-Asán,' English/French 'Bor-ashan.' Likely identical to Ashan elsewhere, a Simeonite/Levitical town in Judah's Negeb. The name's etymology ('smoking pit') may indicate volcanic or industrial features. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Bor-ashan | es: en-Bor-Asán | fr: dans-Bor-ashan | de: in-Bor-ashan 1Sam 30:30

כֹּורֶשׁ H3566 N-proper-ms (15×)

Cyrus (Koresh) — king of Persia who conquered Babylon and decreed the Jewish return from exile

One of the most consequential foreign rulers in the Hebrew Bible, Koresh (כּוֹרֶשׁ) — Cyrus II 'the Great' — appears as the instrument of divine purpose. Isaiah names him uniquely as the LORD's 'anointed' (מְשִׁיחוֹ, Isa 45:1) and 'shepherd' (Isa 44:28), the only gentile ruler so designated. His decree ending the Babylonian exile and authorizing the temple's reconstruction marks a theological turning point: God's sovereignty extends over all nations. The books of Ezra and Daniel refer to him repeatedly as 'king of Persia,' while Chronicles frames the entire exile as culminating in his edict. Translations across languages preserve the name with remarkable consistency — Cyrus, Ciro, Kyrus — reflecting its fame.

Cyrus (king of Persia) (15×) The proper name Koresh (כּוֹרֶשׁ / כֹּרֶשׁ), identifying Cyrus II of Persia (r. 559–530 BCE), conqueror of Babylon and liberator of the Jewish exiles. Called the LORD's 'anointed' in Isaiah 45:1 — a stunning designation for a gentile — and 'my shepherd' in Isaiah 44:28. His edict permitting the temple's rebuilding is recorded in 2 Chronicles 36:22–23 and Ezra 1:1–4. Multilingual evidence shows the name rendered consistently as Cyrus (English, French), Ciro (Spanish), and Koresch/Kyrus (German), reflecting the figure's universal recognition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Cyrus, Koresh, of-Cyrus | es: Ciro, Koresh, a-Ciro | fr: Cyrus, [לכורש], zu-Cyrus | de: Koresch, Kyrus, [כרש] 2Chr 36:22; 2Chr 36:23; Ezra 1:1

כֹּורֶשׁ H3567 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (8×)

Cyrus; the Persian emperor who authorized the return of the Jewish exiles and the rebuilding of the temple.

The proper name Koresh (Cyrus), referring to Cyrus II ('the Great'), founder of the Achaemenid Persian Empire, who conquered Babylon in 539 BCE and issued the decree permitting the Jews to return and rebuild the Jerusalem temple. All eight occurrences appear in Ezra and Daniel, framing him as the instrument of divine purpose. The multilingual renderings — Spanish Ciro, French Cyrus, German Koresch/Kyrus — reflect the name's passage through Greek Kyros from Old Persian Kuruš.

Koresh (8×) The Persian king Cyrus the Great, whose edict authorized the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple. In Ezra 5:13–17 and 6:3, he is cited as the originator of the decree that Sheshbazzar carried out; in Daniel 6:29, he appears as successor to Darius the Mede. The name functions throughout as a political-historical anchor tying the restoration narrative to verifiable imperial chronology. Spanish Ciro, French Cyrus, and German Kyrus all descend from the Greek rendering Κῦρος of Old Persian Kuruš. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Koresh, of-Koresh | es: Ciro, Koresh, de-Ciro | fr: Cyrus, [לְכוֹרֶשׁ] | de: Koresch, Kyrus, zu-Kyrus Ezra 5:13; Ezra 5:14; Ezra 5:17; Ezra 6:3

כּוּשׁ H3568a Prep-b / N-proper-fs (29×)
Cush — the land and people south of Egypt (Nubia/Ethiopia), and a son of Ham in the Table of Nations
