(1×) Likely a corrupted place name in Judges 7:22 describing the direction of the Midianites' flight after their defeat. Most scholars believe this should read Zarethan or Zeredah, both known locations in the Jordan valley. Whatever the original form, it identifies the direction of the enemy's panicked retreat. PERSONAL NAMES

en: toward-Zererah | es: hacia-Tzererah | fr: vers-Zererah | de: zu-Zererah Judg 7:22

צֶרֶת H6889 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zereth (descendant of Judah)

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 4:7 in a genealogical list of Judah's descendants. Little else is known about this individual beyond his place in the genealogy. The name itself may connect to roots suggesting splendor or brightness, though this remains uncertain. Such genealogical records preserved tribal and family connections even when individual biographical details were lost. Chronicles' extensive genealogies served to maintain Israel's sense of identity and continuity through exile and restoration.

(1×) Personal name of a descendant of Judah listed in 1 Chronicles 4:7. Beyond his placement in this genealogy, no other information about Zereth survives, though his inclusion in Chronicles' genealogical records preserved his connection to Judah's tribal lineage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tsereth | es: Tseret | fr: [צרת] | de: [צרת] 1Chr 4:7

צֶרֶת הַשַּׁחַר H6890 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Zereth-shahar (town in Reuben's territory, possibly meaning 'splendor of dawn')

This compound place name designates a town in Reuben's tribal inheritance east of the Dead Sea. Joshua 13:19 lists it among cities assigned to Reuben. The name may mean 'splendor of dawn' or 'brightness of morning,' possibly describing its location or characteristics. It has been tentatively identified with modern es-Sara on a spur of Mount Attarus. The location would have been part of the Transjordanian highlands overlooking the Dead Sea—terrain characterized by dramatic views and morning light.

(1×) Name of a town assigned to Reuben, listed in Joshua 13:19 among their territorial cities. Possibly meaning 'splendor of dawn,' it has been identified with a site on the highlands east of the Dead Sea, part of Reuben's Transjordanian inheritance. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zereth-Shachar | es: y-Zeret-Sajar | fr: et-Zereth-Shachar | de: und-Zereth-Shachar Josh 13:19

צַרְתָּן H6891 N-proper-fs (3×)
Zarethan/Zarthan; place name in the Jordan Valley, associated with Jericho and bronze casting for the temple
Zarethan was a location in the Jordan Valley with uncertain precise identification. Joshua 3:16 mentions it as a landmark when the Jordan's waters stopped for Israel's crossing—the waters backed up 'as far as Adam, near Zarethan.' First Kings 7:46 identifies it as the area where Hiram cast bronze objects for Solomon's temple (parallel passage 2 Chronicles 4:17 has 'Zeredah'). First Kings 4:12 includes it in a district boundary description. The name appears in variant forms, and its exact site remains debated, though somewhere in the Jordan Valley between Adam and Succoth.

(3×) Three uses anchor Zarethan in Jordan Valley geography: Joshua's crossing miracle, Solomon's bronze-casting operations, and administrative boundaries. The parallel text in Chronicles ('Zeredah') suggests textual variation or possible conflation with another nearby site. Cross-linguistic renderings are fairly consistent (Zarethan, Saretán), though the site's exact identification eludes archaeologists. The connection to temple bronze-casting indicates proximity to clay-rich soil suitable for mold-making, while the Joshua reference places it near where waters miraculously piled up. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zarethan | es: Saretán, Tsartaná | fr: Zarethan | de: Zarethan Josh 3:16; 1Kgs 4:12; 1Kgs 7:46

קִא H6892a N-msc / 3ms (1×)
vomit, what is vomited up
This noun denotes vomit—what has been expelled from the stomach. Proverbs 26:11 uses it in a memorable and grotesque comparison: 'As a dog returns to its vomit, so a fool repeats his folly.' The image is deliberately repulsive to emphasize the fool's senseless return to destructive behavior. Just as a dog's return to its vomit is nauseating and irrational, so is the fool's repetition of folly. The proverb became proverbial itself, quoted in 2 Peter 2:22 to describe false teachers returning to their former ways.

(1×) Refers to vomit or what has been vomited, used in Proverbs 26:11 in a vivid simile about foolish behavior. The proverb compares a fool repeating his folly to a dog returning to its vomit—both are disgusting and senseless acts of returning to what should be abandoned. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14497 WITH 3 SENSES
en: its-vomit | es: su-vómito | fr: son-קִא-lui | de: [קִא] Prov 26:11

קִיא H6892b Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (3×)
vomit; rejected stomach contents, used literally and metaphorically for repulsive results of excess or judgment
This noun refers to vomit—ejected stomach contents. Isaiah 28:8 describes tables full of vomit and filth, depicting drunken priests and prophets whose excess leads to disgust. Isaiah 19:14 uses it in a simile: Egypt staggers 'like a drunk in his vomit,' unable to find direction. Jeremiah 48:26 commands that Moab 'wallow in his vomit,' experiencing humiliation as judgment. The imagery is deliberately repulsive, depicting the consequences of intoxication (literal or metaphorical) and divine judgment that leaves nations disgraced. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently translates as vomit.

(3×) All three uses are figurative: drunken prophets defiling sacred spaces (Isaiah 28:8), Egypt's confusion compared to a drunk (19:14), and Moab's humiliation in judgment (Jeremiah 48:26). The vomit metaphor conveys disgust, loss of control, and degradation. Spanish 'vómito' and French forms (some bracketed, suggesting morphological notes) uniformly recognize the unpleasant referent. The imagery serves prophetic rhetoric: those who indulge in rebellion or pride end in repulsive humiliation, covered in the evidence of their excess.

AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14497 WITH 3 SENSES
en: in-his-vomit, of-vomit | es: de-vómito, en-su-vómito | fr: [בקִיא], [קִיא] | de: [בקִיא], [קִיא] Isa 19:14; Isa 28:8; Jer 48:26

קָאַת H6893 Art / N-fs (5×)
pelican or desert owl; an unclean bird inhabiting desolate ruins and wilderness
An unclean bird listed among prohibited species in Leviticus 11:18 and Deuteronomy 14:17. Its identification is debated: ancient versions often render it 'pelican' (so the Greek and Latin of Psalm 102:6), but its association with desert ruins in Isaiah 34:11 and Zephaniah 2:14 has led many modern scholars to identify it as a type of owl or bittern. Psalm 102:6 uses it as a poignant image of desolate loneliness: 'I am like a desert owl in the wilderness.' Spanish consistently renders 'pelicano,' while English translations vary between 'pelican' and 'desert owl.'

(5×) An unclean bird of uncertain identification, traditionally rendered 'pelican' but possibly a species of owl or bittern suited to desolate habitats. Listed as ritually unclean (Lev 11:18; Deut 14:17) and associated with ruined, abandoned places (Isa 34:11; Zeph 2:14). In Ps 102:6 the psalmist likens himself to this creature in the wilderness as an image of profound loneliness. The divergence between Spanish 'pelicano' and English 'desert owl' reflects the ongoing zoological uncertainty. LIVING CREATURES
en: a-desert-owl, and-the-pelican, pelican | es: a-pelícano-de, el-pelícano, pelícano | fr: [קָאַת], et-le-pelican, le-pelican | de: [קָאַת], der-pelican, ein-Wüste-owl Lev 11:18; Deut 14:17; Ps 102:6; Isa 34:11; Zeph 2:14

קַב H6894 Art / N-ms (1×)
a dry measure of capacity equal to approximately 2 liters, one-sixth of a seah
The qab was a Hebrew unit of measurement used for dry goods. BDB notes it equals four log or one-sixth of a seah, roughly equivalent to 2 liters in modern terms. The word appears only once in Scripture, during the desperate siege of Samaria when food became so scarce that even a quarter-qab of dove droppings sold for silver—a vivid detail illustrating the extremity of famine conditions.

(1×) A standardized Hebrew dry measure used in commerce and daily life, approximately 2 liters by volume. The sole biblical reference (2 Kings 6:25) occurs in a harrowing famine narrative where even tiny fractions of this measure became precious commodities, showing how measurement units grounded the ancient economy even in collapse. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: the-kab | es: el-cab | fr: le-kab | de: der-kab 2Kgs 6:25

קָבַב H6895 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3mse (9×)
To utter a curse against someone; to pronounce a malediction, especially in the Balaam narrative.
Distinguished from other Hebrew curse verbs like 'arar and qalal, this root (qavav) carries the sense of invoking a formal, spoken imprecation against a person. It dominates the Balaam cycle in Numbers 22-24, where Balak repeatedly commands Balaam to curse Israel, only for God to override each attempt with blessing. The Spanish 'maldecir' and French 'malédiction' highlight the speech-act dimension: this is a pronounced, performative utterance, not merely a wish for harm. Job 3:8 extends it to those who curse the day, possibly professional enchanters.

to curse (9×) To utter a formal curse against someone, to pronounce a spoken malediction. Concentrated in the Balaam narrative (Num 22-24), where Balak commissions Balaam to curse (qavav) Israel but God transforms each curse into blessing (Num 23:8, 11, 25, 27). Also appears in Job 3:8 for those skilled in cursing days and in Proverbs 11:26; 24:24 for social cursing of the unjust. Multilingual evidence – Spanish 'maldecir,' French 'malédiction,' German 'verfluchen' – consistently renders it as a performative speech act of imprecation, distinct from 'arar (covenantal curse) and qalal (to make light of, belittle). CURSING (VERBAL ACT)

en: and-I-cursed, and-curse-him, and-you-will-curse-him | es: maldecir, maldice, maldijo | fr: cursing, et-malédiction-lui, et-tu-fera-malédiction-lui | de: [ואקוב], cursing, und-du-wird-verfluchen-ihn Num 22:11; Num 22:17; Num 23:8; Num 23:11; Num 23:13

קֵבָה H6896 Conj-w (1×)

the stomach or fourth stomach chamber of a ruminant animal used in sacrifice

This refers specifically to the stomach of sacrificial animals, particularly the fourth chamber of ruminants. Deuteronomy 18:3 prescribes that this portion be given to the priests as their due from animal offerings. Ancient versions like the Septuagint translate it as 'the inner stomach,' recognizing its technical cultic usage. The Hebrew morphology here shows the definite article prefixed, indicating 'the stomach' as a known priestly portion.

(1×) The stomach portion of a sacrificial animal assigned to the priesthood, likely the fourth stomach (abomasum) of cattle or sheep. Spanish, French, and German translations consistently render this as 'stomach,' reflecting its role in the sacrificial system where specific organs were designated for priestly consumption rather than being burned on the altar. WOMB AND BELLY

en: and-the-stomach | es: y-el-estómago | fr: et-le-stomach | de: und-der-stomach Deut 18:3

קִבָּה H6897 N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

belly or stomach, used of a woman in a context of violent death

While sharing the same root as H6896, this form appears with a third feminine suffix ('her belly') and carries a more general anatomical sense. In Numbers 25:8, Phinehas's spear pierces through both the Israelite man and the Midianite woman 'through her belly'—a graphic detail emphasizing the zeal and violence of his intervention. The multilingual evidence shows translations favor 'belly' over the more technical 'stomach,' suggesting a broader anatomical reference than the cultic term.

(1×) The belly or abdominal region of a woman, used in a narrative of violent death. The suffixed form (qobatah, 'her belly') appears only in the Phinehas account where his spear runs through the bodies of both sinners. Cross-linguistic renderings prefer 'belly/abdomen' (Spanish vientre, French ventre) over technical stomach terminology, indicating general anatomical reference rather than specific organ. WOMB AND BELLY

en: her-belly | es: vientre-de-ella | fr: sa-ventre | de: ihr-belly Num 25:8

קֻבָּה H6898 Art / N-fs (1×)

a large vaulted tent or pavilion, possibly used as a dwelling or for immoral purposes

This rare word designates a type of tent, specifically described as large and vaulted. It appears in the same Phinehas narrative (Numbers 25:8), referring to the structure where the Israelite brought the Midianite woman. Some interpreters suggest it was a princely tent befitting Zimri's status; others propose it served as a place of prostitution, citing parallels in later Hebrew usage. The architectural specificity ('vaulted') distinguishes it from ordinary tents.

(1×) A specialized tent structure, large and architecturally distinct with a vaulted or domed construction. The context in Numbers 25:8 suggests either a nobleman's dwelling or possibly a tent used for cultic sexual activity. BDB notes debate between viewing it as Zimri's princely quarters versus a tent functioning as a brothel (lupanar), with both interpretations anchored in the tent's notable size and construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-tent | es: la-tienda | fr: le-tente | de: der-Zelt Num 25:8

קִבּוּץ H6899 N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

assemblage, collection, or gathered mass (especially of idols)

This noun denotes a gathering or assemblage of things. Isaiah 57:13 uses the plural possessive form to mock idol worshippers: 'Let your collection [of idols] deliver you!' The prophet's sarcasm targets the multiplicity of worthless gods. Textual scholars note that some manuscripts read this as 'your abominations' instead, though the sense of accumulated false deities remains. French translators sometimes left the Hebrew untransliterated, signaling textual uncertainty.

(1×) A mass or collection of objects, specifically referring to assembled idols in Isaiah's prophetic denunciation. The second feminine suffix ('your [fem.] collections') addresses Jerusalem personified, challenging her to seek deliverance from the very idols she has accumulated. The semantic field involves gathering and grouping, though textual variants suggest some scribal uncertainty about the original reading. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: your-collection | es: tus-colecciones | fr: [קבוציך] | de: [קבוציך] Isa 57:13

קְבֻרָה H6900 N-fsc / 3ms (14×)

Grave or burial; a tomb where someone is laid to rest, or the act of interment itself.

Refers both to the physical place of burial — a grave, tomb, or sepulcher — and to the act of burial as a rite. The word appears frequently with possessive suffixes ('his grave,' 'her grave'), underscoring the personal and familial significance of proper burial in ancient Israel. Rachel's grave (Gen 35:20) became a landmark, while Jeremiah's biting phrase 'the burial of a donkey' (Jer 22:19) turns the concept into a powerful image of disgrace. The distinction between place and act is subtle but real: context and multilingual evidence (Spanish sepultura vs. sepulcro; French tombeau vs. the abstract sense) help mark the boundary.

1. grave, tomb, burial place (11×) The physical location where a dead person is interred — a grave, tomb, or sepulcher. Often marked by possessive suffixes indicating whose resting place it is. Rachel's qevurat (Gen 35:20) became a named memorial; Moses' burial place (Deut 34:6) remained famously unknown. Spanish sepulcro and French tombeau consistently render this concrete sense, distinguishing it from the abstract act of burial. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: grave-of-, her-grave, his-burial-place | es: en-sepultura-de-él, en-su-sepulcro, en-su-sepultura | fr: [הקבורה], dans-burial-leur, dans-son-tombeau | de: Grab-von, [הקבורה], [קברתה] Gen 35:20; Gen 47:30; Deut 34:6; 1Sam 10:2

2. burial, act of interment (3×) The act or process of burying someone — the funeral rite or interment itself, rather than the physical site. Jeremiah's devastating 'burial of a donkey' (Jer 22:19) employs this sense: Jehoiakim will receive not a dishonorable grave but no proper burial at all. Isaiah 14:20 likewise refers to being cast out, denied the act of burial. Spanish sepultura and German Begräbnis capture this event-oriented meaning. BURIAL INTERMENT

en: Burial-of, burial, in-burial | es: Sepultura-de, en-sepultura, sepultura | fr: [בקבורה], [קבורת], קבורה | de: [בקבורה], [קבורה], [קבורת] Eccl 6:3; Isa 14:20; Jer 22:19

קָבַל H6901 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (14×)

To receive or accept something offered; also (Hiphil) to be opposite, correspond to one another.

An Aramaic loan-word entering late Hebrew, this verb covers both the act of receiving tangible things (blood, vessels, silver) and the willing acceptance of obligations or commitments. In Job 2:10, Job asks whether we should receive good from God but not evil, a question that reverberates across every translation tradition. A rarer Hiphil form appears in Exodus 26:5 and 36:12 describing the tabernacle loops that 'correspond' to each other, preserving the original spatial sense of the Aramaic root: to be face-to-face, opposite.

1. to receive, take (7×) To receive or take something given – whether physical objects like sacrificial blood (2 Chr 29:22), temple vessels (Ezra 8:30), or more abstractly good and evil from God (Job 2:10). Multilingual glosses converge on 'receive/recibir/recevoir,' confirming a straightforward transfer-of-possession meaning. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: and-receive, and-received, and-received-them | es: recibimos, recibiremos,

y-la-recibieron | fr: et-recevoir, et-נקבל ,וקבל | de: [ויקבלו], [ויקבלם], [וקבל] 1Chr 12:19; 2Chr 29:16; 2Chr 29:22; Ezra 8:30; Job 2:10

2. to accept, undertake (5×) To accept willingly, agree to, or undertake an obligation. Distinguished from sense 1 by volition: the Jews accepted and undertook Purim observance (Esth 9:23, 27), David chose his punishment (1 Chr 21:11), and Proverbs 19:20 urges accepting instruction. Spanish 'aceptaron' and French 'recevoir' both appear here but the context of commitment sets this apart. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: [kethiv], accept-, and-accepted | es: (y-aceptaron), Y-aceptaron, [y-aceptaron] | fr: et-recevoir, recevoir | de: [(וקבלו)], [[וקבל]], [וקבל] 1Chr 21:11; Esth 4:4; Esth 9:23; Esth 9:27

3. to correspond, be opposite (2×) Hiphil: to correspond to one another, be set opposite. Used exclusively of the tabernacle curtain loops (Exod 26:5; 36:12) where each loop faces its counterpart. This sense preserves the root's original Aramaic spatial meaning – 'to be in front of, facing' – and every major translation renders it with a word for spatial correspondence ('correspondientes' in Spanish). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: corresponding | es: correspondientes | fr: corresponding | de: corresponding Exod 26:5; Exod 36:12

קְבֵל H6902 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp (3×)

to receive; accept or take possession of something, particularly rewards or kingdom (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb means to receive or take possession of something. Daniel 2:6 promises that interpreters of the king's dream will receive gifts and rewards. Daniel 5:31 (Aramaic 6:1) states that Darius the Mede received the kingdom. Daniel 7:18 prophesies that the saints of the Most High will receive the kingdom forever. The semantic range covers both material reception (gifts) and political acquisition (kingdom). The Piel stem emphasizes the act of receiving, with contexts suggesting both human bestowal and divine granting.

(3×) Three Danielic contexts show varied objects of receiving: conditional rewards (2:6, if you interpret), historical transfer of power (5:31, Darius received), and eschatological promise (7:18, saints will receive). The Spanish distinguishes tenses well ('recibiréis', 'recibió', 'recibirán'), tracking the temporal shifts from promise to past to future. The cross-linguistic agreement on 'receive' confirms the basic meaning: taking into possession what is given, whether by human king or divine decree. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: and-will-receive, received, you-will-receive | es: Y-recibirán, recibiréis, recibió | fr: et-recevoir, parce-que, recevoir | de: [ויקבלון], [קבל], [תקבלון] Dan 2:6; Dan 5:31; Dan 7:18

קָבֵל H6903 Prep-l (29×)

Aramaic preposition: because of, on account of (causal); also before, in front of (spatial/locative).

An Aramaic preposition found exclusively in the books of Daniel and Ezra, where it serves primarily as a causal connector meaning 'because of' or 'on account of.' In its less frequent spatial sense it means 'before' or 'in front of,' indicating position relative to a person or object. The causal usage dominates the Aramaic court narratives, introducing grounds for royal decrees and divine actions. German weil ('because') and Spanish a pesar de que consistently reflect the causal force, while the spatial occurrences in Daniel 2:31 and 5:1 describe physical positioning before a statue or at a feast.

1. because of, on account of (causal) (27×) The causal sense — 'because of, on account of, therefore' — accounts for the vast majority of occurrences (27x). It introduces reasons in official correspondence (Ezra 4:14, 16) and narrative explanations in Daniel's court tales (Ezra 6:13; 7:14, 17). German weil and French parce que consistently reflect this causal logic. The construction laqobel denah ('on account of this') functions as a standard Aramaic discourse marker linking cause to consequence in imperial administrative language. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: as, because, before | es: a-pesar-de-que, como, esto | fr: [לקבל], parce-que | de: weil Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 6:13; Ezra 7:14; Ezra 7:17

2. before, in front of (spatial/locative) (2×) The spatial sense — 'before, in front of, facing' — appears only twice, both in Daniel. At Daniel 2:31, the great statue stood laqoblakh, 'before you,' in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. At Daniel 5:1, Belshazzar drinks wine 'before' his thousand nobles. Spanish frente a ti and English 'before you' capture this locative meaning. The Syriac cognate luqbal preserves the same spatial force, confirming the original concrete sense of 'facing, opposite' from which the causal meaning developed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-before, before-you | es: frente-a-ti, y-delante-de | fr: [ולקבל], [לקבלך] | de: und-weil, weil Dan 2:31; Dan 5:1

קֻבַּל H6904 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

a battering ram or attacking engine used in siege warfare

This military term refers to siege equipment, specifically an engine designed to strike walls. Ezekiel 26:9 describes Nebuchadnezzar's assault on Tyre: 'the stroke of his battering ram' will be directed against the city's defenses. The Hebrew relates to Semitic roots meaning 'front' or 'advance,' capturing the forward-thrusting nature of siege machinery. The morphological form (qobolo with suffix) preserves an archaic pattern, suggesting ancient military vocabulary.

(1×) A siege weapon or battering ram employed to break down fortifications, mentioned in Ezekiel's prophecy against Tyre. The phrase 'the blow of his attacking-engine' evokes the repeated impact of Babylonian siege machinery against city walls. Spanish translates this as ariete (ram), recognizing the technical military equipment, while some modern versions leave the Hebrew untransliterated due to its rarity and morphological complexity. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: his-battering-ram | es: su-ariete | fr: front | de: [קבלו] Ezek 26:9

קֳבַל H6905 Pd / N-ms (1×)

before, in front of, or publicly (possibly an Aramaism)

This prepositional form appears in the puzzling phrase of 2 Kings 15:10 describing where Shallum killed Zechariah. Traditionally rendered 'before the people' (i.e., publicly), the expression uses what appears to be an Aramaic loan-word, raising textual questions. The Septuagint suggests reading 'in Ibleam' instead, a known geographic location. The uncertainty reflects both the rarity of this Aramaism in Hebrew and possible scribal corruption.

(1×) A preposition meaning 'before' or 'in front of,' possibly borrowed from Aramaic where qobel commonly serves this function. The assassination account in 2 Kings may use this to indicate the murder happened publicly, 'before the people.' However, the Aramaic intrusion into Hebrew narrative raises suspicions of textual corruption, leading scholars to prefer emending to a place name like Ibleam, which better fits the context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before- | es: delante-de | fr: devant- | de: vor- 2Kgs 15:10

קָבַע H6906 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3mp (6×)

To rob, despoil, or defraud; used especially of withholding what is owed to God.

A verb meaning to rob, despoil, or defraud, synonymous with gazal. Its most famous occurrence is Malachi 3:8 — 'Will a man rob God?' (ha-yiqba adam Elohim) — where Israel is accused of robbing the LORD by withholding tithes and offerings. The passage concentrates four of the word's six occurrences in a single confrontation between God and his people. In Proverbs 22:23, the LORD himself becomes the one who 'robs' those who rob the poor, turning the verb back on the oppressor. Spanish 'robáis' and German 'beraubt' both capture the directness of the accusation.

rob, despoil (6×) To rob, despoil, or defraud someone, particularly by withholding what rightfully belongs to another. The verb appears most concentrated in Malachi 3:8-9, where four of its six occurrences form a dramatic confrontation: 'Will a man rob God? Yet you are robbing me. But you say, In what have we robbed you? In tithes and offerings.' Spanish 'robáis' ('you rob') and German

'beraubt' ('robbed') capture the bluntness of the charge. In Proverbs 22:23, the LORD champions the poor by 'robbing the life' of those who rob them — a striking reversal where divine justice mirrors the crime. The word is rare and carries strong connotations of sacrilege when directed at God. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: Will-rob, and-rob, are-robbing | es: a-los-que-los-despojan, robáis, te-robamos? | fr: dépouiller, et-קבעיהם ,וקבע-eux | de: beraubt, und-beraubt Prov 22:23; Mal 3:8

קְבַּעַת H6907 N-fsc (2×)

bowl, cup; a drinking vessel, particularly associated with 'the cup of staggering' in prophetic imagery

This term denotes a drinking vessel appearing exclusively in Isaiah's metaphor of divine judgment. Both occurrences reference 'the bowl of the cup of staggering' that Jerusalem has drunk to the dregs, causing reeling intoxication. Scholars suggest the word may be a loan from Assyrian, cognate with Arabic terms for flower-cups or calyxes. The construct phrase pairs this term with 'cup' (kos), possibly as explanatory gloss, indicating a specific type of drinking vessel. The imagery depicts God's wrath as intoxicating drink that causes stumbling and helplessness.

(2×) Isaiah 51:17 and 51:22 employ identical phrasing: 'bowl of the cup of staggering' (qubba'at kos ha-tar'eilah). Spanish 'cáliz' (chalice), French and German transliterations point to a drinking vessel. BDB notes 'cup' may be an explanatory gloss, suggesting the original was simply 'bowl of staggering.' The context describes Jerusalem having drunk this divine judgment bowl to empty, suffering its full debilitating effect. The second occurrence announces God removing this bowl from Jerusalem's hand and placing it in her tormentors' hands instead. The term functions purely within this metaphorical judgment-drink framework, not in literal dining contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bowl-of | es: cáliz-de | fr: [קבעת] | de: [קבעת] Isa 51:17; Isa 51:22

קָבַץ H6908 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs / 3mp (127×)

To gather, collect, assemble; Piel: reassemble the dispersed; Nifal: come together; Qal: collect.

Qavats is one of Hebrew's two great gathering verbs (alongside asaf), and its particular strength lies in the reassembly of what has been scattered. While asaf often implies ingathering to a fixed point — harvesting crops, gathering to one's fathers in death — qavats carries the dramatic overtone of recovery and restoration, especially of exiled Israel. The prophetic formula 'I will gather you from the nations' (Ezek 11:17; 20:34, 41; 36:24) uses the Piel of qavats almost exclusively, and this became a defining verb of eschatological hope. The stem system distributes the semantics elegantly: the Qal handles straightforward transitive collecting (Joseph gathering grain in Gen 41:35, 48), the Piel intensifies this into deliberate, thorough reassembly, and the Nifal/Hitpael marks the reflexive-reciprocal dimension where people assemble themselves. Arabic qabada ('to grasp, seize') shares the consonantal root but has narrowed to physical grasping, while the Hebrew preserves the broader social sense. Spanish reunir and German versammeln both capture the communal-gathering core, though neither quite matches the prophetic restoration coloring of the Piel.

1. Piel: gather together, reassemble (50×) Piel intensive: to gather together, reassemble deliberately — the most frequent sense at 50 occurrences, dominated by prophetic promises of national restoration. In Deut 30:3-4 God promises 'he will gather you (qibbetsekha) again from all the peoples where the LORD your God has scattered you; even from the farthest end of the heavens the LORD your God will gather you.' Ezekiel deploys this verb repeatedly in restoration oracles (11:17; 20:34, 41; 28:25; 34:13; 36:24; 37:21; 39:27). Spanish reunire and French rassembler both capture the reassembly nuance. German versammeln selects communal-gathering vocabulary. The Piel stem adds intentionality and thoroughness — this is not casual collection but purposeful, comprehensive ingathering. Neh 1:9 places it in a conditional covenant framework: 'if you return to me... I will gather them from there.' Ps 106:47 and 1 Chr 16:35 use it in liturgical petition. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: I-will-gather, I-will-gather-them, and-I-gather | es: Y-os-reuniré, Y-reuniré, el-que-reúne | fr: de-il-a-rassemblé, et-je-rassemblerai, et-rassembler | de: ich-versammle, und-ich-versammle, und-versammeln Deut 30:3; Deut 30:4; 1Chr 16:35; Neh 1:9; Ps 106:47

2. Nifal/Hitpael: assemble, be gathered (39×) Nifal and Hitpael: to assemble, be gathered together, gather oneself — the middle/passive/reflexive voice covering 39 occurrences where the emphasis falls on the assembled group rather than the agent who gathers them. In Gen 49:2 Jacob summons his sons: 'Gather yourselves together (hiqqabetsu) and hear!' In Josh 9:2 and 10:6 enemy kings 'gathered themselves together' against Israel. 1 Sam 7:6 records Israel gathering at Mizpah for prayer and repentance. Spanish se reunieron ('they gathered themselves') and French se rassemblerent consistently use reflexive constructions, confirming the middle-voice reading. Swahili's intransitive kusanyika ('be gathered') parallels the Nifal passive-resultative reading. The Hitpael adds a deliberate, purposive nuance absent from the Nifal — Josh 9:2 describes coalition-building, an act of political will. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gathered, and-they-gathered, are-gathered | es: Congreguense, Y-se-reunieron, os-reuniréis | fr: assembler, et-ils-rassembla, et-rassembla | de: sammelte, schart-euch-zusammen, und-sie-versammelte Gen 49:2; Josh 9:2; Josh 10:6; Judg 9:47; 1Sam 7:6

3. Qal: gather, collect (36×) Qal simple active: to gather, collect — covering 36 occurrences of straightforward transitive gathering of people, animals, or things by an agent. In Gen 41:35 Joseph proposes to 'gather all the food' of the good years; in Gen 41:48 he 'gathered up all the food.' Deut 13:16 commands gathering all the spoil of a condemned city. In 1 Sam 7:5 Samuel says 'gather all Israel to Mizpah'; in Judg 12:4 Jephthah 'gathered all the men of Gilead.' Spanish reunio and German versammelte both use the standard transitive gathering verb. The Qal differs from the Piel (sense 1) in lacking the intensifying and restorative nuance — here the gathering is a practical act of collection rather than a prophetic drama of restoration. 1 Kgs 18:19-20 (Elijah at Carmel) and 1 Kgs 20:1 (Ben-hadad mustering forces) illustrate the military-administrative register. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-I-gathered, and-I-gathered-them, and-gathered | es: Y-reunieron, Y-reunió, y-los-reuní | fr: et-il-rassembla, et-rassembla, et-rassembler | de: under-versammelte, und-sammelte, und-versammeln Gen 41:35; Gen 41:48; Deut 13:16; Judg 12:4; 1Sam 7:5

4. Pual/QalPass: in a gathered state (2×) Pual or Qal passive participle: in a gathered state, already assembled — 2 occurrences describing a resultative condition rather than the act of gathering. In Neh 5:16 Nehemiah says his servants 'were gathered there' (qebutsim) for the wall work; in Ezek 38:8 the restored Israel is described as a people 'gathered (mequbbetset) from many nations.' Spanish reunida/reunidos and German versammelte both use past-participle forms to capture the stative quality. These passive forms presuppose a prior act of gathering (senses 1 or 3) but focus on the resulting assembled state. The Ezekiel passage is theologically significant: it places the gathered condition of Israel as the backdrop against which Gog launches his eschatological assault — they have been reassembled, and now they must be defended. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: gathered | es: reunida, reunidos | fr: rassembler | de: versammeln, versammelte Neh 5:16; Ezek 38:8

קַבְצְאֵל H6909 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (3×)

Kabzeel; town in southern Judah, home of Benaiah the mighty warrior

Kabzeel was a town in the southern region (Negev) of Judah's territory. Joshua 15:21 lists it among the southernmost towns of Judah. Second Samuel 23:20 and its parallel 1 Chronicles 11:22 identify it as the hometown of Benaiah son of Jehoiada, one of David's elite warriors who later became commander of Solomon's army. The name may mean 'God gathers' or 'gathering of God.' Its exact location is uncertain, though it was resettled after the exile (Nehemiah 11:25). The town is remembered primarily through Benaiah's heroic exploits.

(3×) Two contexts define Kabzeel: the territorial list (Joshua 15:21) and Benaiah's identification (2 Samuel/1 Chronicles). The prepositional form 'from Kabzeel' in the Benaiah references marks it as his place of origin. Nehemiah's mention (using a variant form with beth prefix) indicates post-exilic resettlement. Cross-linguistic renderings show spelling variations (Kabzeel, Cabseel, Qavtseel) but consistent recognition as a southern Judean town. The site's fame rests largely on producing a celebrated warrior. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kavtseel, Kavtzeel, from-Kabzeel | es: Cabseel, Cabtseel, de-Qavtseel | fr: Kavtzeel, [קבצאל], de-Kabzeel | de: Kavtzeel, [קבצאל], von-Kabzeel Josh 15:21; 2Sam 23:20; 1Chr 11:22

קִבְצָה H6910 N-fsc (1×)

a gathering or collection, used metaphorically in Ezekiel's furnace imagery

This feminine noun denotes the act or result of gathering together. Ezekiel 22:20 uses it in a powerful metallurgical metaphor: God will gather Israel like a collection of metals into a furnace to be melted in judgment. The construct form ('gathering of silver...') ties directly to the verb 'gather' used twice in the same verse, creating a wordplay that reinforces the image of divine assembly for purification through fire.

(1×) The act or state of being gathered together, used in Ezekiel's extended metaphor comparing God's judgment to smelting metals. The phrase 'a gathering of silver, bronze, iron, lead, and tin into the furnace' pictures Israel's disparate elements collected for refining fire. The noun derives from the root meaning 'gather' (qabats), and its placement in this industrial imagery makes the divine intention unmistakable: assembly precedes judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gathering-of | es: Reunión-de | fr: ramasser | de: [קבצת] Ezek 22:20

קִבְצַיִם H6911 N-proper-fs (1×)

Kibzaim, a Levitical city in the territory of Ephraim

A place name assigned to the Levites within Ephraim's tribal allotment. Joshua 21:22 lists Kibzaim among the cities given for Levitical residence. The name possibly means 'two heaps,' though its etymology remains uncertain. Notably, the parallel account in 1 Chronicles 6:68 substitutes Jokmeam for this location, suggesting either textual variants or that the two names refer to the same site. The Septuagint manuscripts show various transliterations, reflecting uncertainty about the site's exact identification.

(1×) A Levitical city within Ephraim's borders, mentioned only in Joshua's distribution lists. Cross-linguistic translations preserve the Hebrew name with minor phonetic variations (Spanish Quibsaim, etc.). The absence of this name in Chronicles and its replacement by Jokmeam hints at either scribal confusion or the city being known by two names, a common phenomenon in biblical geography where settlements carried both official and colloquial designations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kibzaim | es: Quibsaim | fr: Kibzaim | de: Kibzaim Josh 21:22

קָבַר H6912 V-Qal-Imp-mp (133×)

To bury a dead person in a grave or tomb; in passive stems, to be buried; by extension, one who buries.

Qabar is the universal Hebrew verb for interment of the dead, appearing across every stem and spanning the entire biblical narrative from Abraham's purchase of the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23) to Ezekiel's apocalyptic valley of mass burial (Ezek 39). The word's semantic core is remarkably stable across languages: Arabic qabara, Aramaic qebar, Akkadian qibiru, and even the Phoenician inscriptions all preserve the same root with the same meaning, making this one of the most deeply shared Semitic concepts. What shifts across stems is agency and intensity — the Qal describes the straightforward act of burying, the Nifal and Pual mark the honored or dishonorable state of being buried, and the Piel intensifies into systematic or mass interment. The refrain 'and he was buried' punctuates the book of Judges like a drumbeat, reminding readers that even mighty leaders return to the earth.

1. bury (Qal active) (82×) The core Qal active sense: to bury a dead person in a grave, tomb, or sepulcher. This accounts for the vast majority of occurrences and spans the full range of finite forms, infinitives, and the infinitive absolute. Abraham buries Sarah in the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:19), Joseph fulfills Jacob's dying wish to be buried in Canaan (Gen 50:13), and Deuteronomy 21:23 insists that even an executed criminal must be buried the same day. The cross-Semitic unanimity is striking: Arabic dafana, Swahili -zika, Korean 장사하다/묻다, and Spanish enterrar/sepultar all converge on dedicated burial vocabulary rather than generic 'put in ground' language. BURYING THE DEAD

en: And-they-buried, and-buried, and-buried-him | es: Y-lo-enterraron, Y-lo-sepultaron, Y-sepultaron | fr: Et-ils-enterra, et-ensevelir, et-ensevelit | de: And-sie-begrub, und-begraben, und-begrub Gen 23:4; Gen 23:6; Gen 23:8; Gen 23:11; Gen 23:13

2. be buried (Nifal/Pual passive) (42×) The Nifal and Pual passive: to be buried, to be interred. This form carries immense theological weight in the Deuteronomistic history, where the formulaic 'and he was buried in...' (wayyiqqaber be-) signals the closure of a king's or judge's life. Being buried well is a mark of divine favor and social honor; the refusal of burial is one of Scripture's harshest judgments (Jer 22:19). Korean 묻히다/장사되다, Swahili -zikwa, and Spanish fue sepultado all shift to passive constructions, confirming that this voice distinction is a real semantic boundary across languages. BURYING THE DEAD

en: and-he-was-buried, and-was-buried | es: y-fue-sepultado | fr: et-fut-ensevelit, et-il-fut-ensevelit, et-était-buried | de: und-er-war-begrub, und-war-begrub Gen 15:15; Gen 25:10; Gen 35:8; Gen 35:19; Num 20:1

3. burier (Piel participle) (4×) The Piel participial form used substantively: a designated burier, one whose task is burial on a systematic scale. The key passage is Ezekiel 39:14-15, where professional haqqoberim ('the buriers') are appointed to cleanse the land after Gog's defeat — a seven-month operation requiring organized teams who set up markers for bones they discover. Spanish los enterradores and French les ensevelisseurs both select occupational nouns, confirming the lexicalized agent sense. Only 4 occurrences, but each presupposes an organized burial role distinct from ordinary family interment. BURYING THE DEAD

en: burying, one-burying, the-buriers | es: enterrando, los-enterradores, quien-entierre | fr: de-enterrer, ensevelir, enterrant | de: begraben, burying, von-Grab Num 33:4; Jer 14:16; Ezek 39:14; Ezek 39:15

4. one who buries (Qal participle) (3×) The Qal active participle used as an agent noun: one who buries, a burier in context. Distinguished from sense 3 by stem (Qal rather than Piel) and by the lack of organizational or professional connotation — these are simply persons described as performing burial. In 2 Kings 9:10 Jezebel is declared to have 'no one to bury her' (en qober), and Psalm 79:3 laments that Jerusalem's dead have 'no one burying' them. The absence of a burier is itself the horror. Korean 장사하는 자 and Swahili mzikaji both render this as a simple agentive. BURYING THE DEAD

en: burying, one-burying, to-bury | es: enterrando, quien-entierre | fr: ensevelissant, enterrer, un-ensevelissant | de: begrabend, eins-begrabend, zu-bury 2Kgs 9:10; 2Kgs 13:21; Ps 79:3

5. bury thoroughly (Piel intensive) (2×) The Piel finite/intensive: to carry out burial thoroughly or on a large scale, emphasizing completeness or effort beyond ordinary interment. In 1 Kings 11:15 Joab remains in Edom six months 'until he had buried all the males' — mass wartime interment requiring sustained, intensive action. Hosea 9:6 warns that Egypt's Memphis 'will bury them' — a grim oracle of exile-death. The Piel intensification is confirmed by Korean 매장하다 (formal/intensive burial) versus the simpler Qal 묻다, and by the Arabic intensive Form II pattern. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: shall-bury-them, to-bury | es: los-sepultará, para-enterrar | fr: ensevelir, à-ensevelis | de: [תקברם], zu-begrabe 1Kgs 11:15; Hos 9:6

קֶבֶר H6913 Prep-b | N-msc | 1cs (67×)

qever – a grave, tomb, or burial place; the place where a corpse is interred

The masculine noun qever denotes a grave or tomb – the place where the dead are laid to rest. It appears prominently in the patriarchal narratives, where Abraham negotiates to purchase the cave of Machpelah as an 'ahuzzat-qever,' a possession for burial (Gen 23:4, 9, 20). The word covers the full range from simple earthen graves to hewn rock tombs (Isa 22:16) and even mass burial sites (Ezek 32:22-26). In Jeremiah 20:17, it is used figuratively of the womb as a grave. The plural qivroth appears in the evocative place-name Kibroth-hattaavah, 'graves of craving' (Num 11:34). Cross-lingual glosses converge tightly: Spanish tumba/sepulcro, French tombeau/sepulcre, German Grab – all pointing to a single undifferentiated concept of burial place.

grave, tomb, burial place (67×) A burial place, grave, or tomb where a dead body is interred, ranging from a simple pit to a hewn sepulchre. Abraham's purchase of the cave of Machpelah as an ahuzzat-qever (Gen 23:4, 9, 20) establishes the word's concrete sense early in Scripture, while Jeremiah's womb-as-grave metaphor (Jer 20:17) and Ezekiel's mass graves of the nations (Ezek 32:22-26) show its figurative reach. Spanish sepulcro, French tombeau, and German Grab converge uniformly on a single burial concept with no polysemy across all 67 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-burial-place, a-grave, burial | es: en-la-tumba-de, en-sepulcro-de, en-sepultura-de | fr: burial, dans-sépulcre-de, dans-tombeau-de | de: Grab, Grabes, [קבר] Gen 23:4; Gen 23:6; Gen 23:9; Gen 23:20; Gen 49:30

קִבְרוֹת הַתַּאֲוָה H6914 Conj-w (5×)

Kibroth-hattaavah; 'graves of craving,' an Israelite wilderness encampment

A compound place name meaning 'graves of craving' or 'graves of desire,' marking a station in the Israelite wilderness itinerary. Numbers 11:34 explains the etymology: the people who craved meat were buried there after God's judgment through a plague. The name appears in the travel narrative (Num 11:34-35; 33:16-17) and in Moses' recollection of Israel's rebellions (Deut 9:22). All major translations transliterate the name rather than translate it, as Spanish 'Quibrot-Hataava' and French 'Kibroth-hattaavah' confirm.

(5×) A proper place name designating a wilderness encampment between Sinai and Hazeroth, literally meaning 'graves of craving.' Named because the Israelites who lusted for meat were struck down and buried there (Num 11:34). Mentioned in the itinerary lists (Num 33:16-17) and in Deuteronomy's rehearsal of rebellion (Deut 9:22). Spanish 'Quibrot-Hataava,' French and German 'Kibroth-hattaavah' all transliterate rather than translate, preserving the Hebrew memorial name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kibroth-hattaavah, and-at-Kibroth-hattaavah, from-Kibroth-hattaavah | es: De-Quibrot-Hataava, Quibrot-Hataava, de-Quibrot-Hataavá | fr: Kibroth-hattaavah, dans-Kibroth-hattaavah, de-Kibroth-hattaavah | de: Kibroth-hattaavah, in-Kibroth-hattaavah, und-bei-Kibroth-hattaavah Num 11:34; Num 11:35; Num 33:16; Num 33:17; Deut 9:22

קָדַד H6915 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (15×)

To bow the head, kneel down in reverence or submission; used of worship before God and homage before kings.

The verb qādad describes the physical act of bowing the head low or kneeling forward, almost always paired with the more common hishtaḥăwâ ('to prostrate oneself') in a hendiadys of worship or homage. Abraham's servant bows and worships when he finds Rebekah (Gen 24:26, 48); Israel bows at the news of deliverance from Egypt (Exod 4:31; 12:27); Bathsheba bows before King David (1 Kgs 1:16, 31). The pairing appears so consistently that qādad seems to name the initial downward inclination of the head and upper body, while hishtaḥăwâ completes the full prostration. Spanish 'se inclinó' ('bowed') and English 'bowed down' capture this incipient, reverent movement faithfully.

to bow down, prostrate oneself (15×) To bow the head or incline the upper body downward as a gesture of worship, reverence, or deferential homage. Virtually every occurrence is paired with wayyishtaḥû ('and prostrated himself'), suggesting qādad denotes the initial bowing motion that precedes full prostration. Directed toward God in worship (Gen 24:26, 48; Exod 4:31; 12:27; 34:8; Neh 8:6; 2 Chr 20:18; 29:30), toward kings in courtly homage (1 Sam 24:8; 28:14; 1 Kgs 1:16, 31), and before the assembly acknowledging both God and king (1 Chr 29:20). GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-I-bowed, and-bowed, and-bowed-down | es: Y-me-incliné, Y-se-inclinó, e-inclinaron | fr: [ויקד], [ויקדו], et-Je-s'inclina | de: [ויקד], [ויקדו], und-beugte-sich Gen 24:26; Gen 24:48; Gen 43:28; Exod 4:31; Exod 12:27

קְדָה H6916 Conj-w | N-fs (2×)

cassia; an aromatic bark spice used in sacred anointing oil and valued as trade commodity

This term identifies a fragrant spice obtained from tree bark, valued in ancient commerce and sacred ritual. In Exodus it comprises one ingredient of the holy anointing oil for tabernacle consecration, while Ezekiel lists it among luxury goods traded at Tyre. Ancient sources (Dioscorides, Theophrastus, Pliny) describe cassia as similar to cinnamon but coarser, derived from various southeast Asian trees. The word may be a foreign loan-word, reflecting the spice's exotic origin. Its dual usage shows both religious and economic significance in Israel's aromatic trade.

(2×) Exodus 30:24 specifies 500 shekels of qiddah for anointing oil (the P source's precise recipe), while Ezekiel 27:19 lists it among Tyre's imported luxuries. Spanish 'casia/Casia,' French 'casse/cassia,' German 'Kassia' all preserve the loan-word character. The Exodus context embeds cassia in sacred use—mixing with myrrh, cinnamon, and olive oil for consecrating priests and tabernacle objects. Ezekiel's commercial context groups it with calamus and other aromatics traded from distant Dan and Javan (Greece). The conjunction 'and' in Spanish/German reflects Ezekiel's list format. This is exotic, expensive spice, not domestic herb, imported for both worship and luxury consumption. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-cassia, cassia | es: Y-casia, casia | fr: casse, et-cassia | de: [קדה], und-Kassia Exod 30:24; Ezek 27:19

קְדוּמִים H6917 N-mp (1×)

ancient, of long standing (meaning disputed); possibly 'of attack' or a place name

This adjective appears in Deborah's victory song (Judges 5:21), describing the Kishon as 'the ancient river' in most English versions. However, the Hebrew is notoriously difficult. The Septuagint treats it as a proper name (Kadeshim), while the Targum supports 'ancient.' Some scholars propose it means 'rushing' or 'attacking' based on verbal roots. The multilingual evidence tilts toward 'ancient,' though the poetic context allows for ambiguity—perhaps intentionally evoking both the river's antiquity and its violent flooding.

(1×) An adjective of uncertain meaning, traditionally rendered 'ancient' when modifying the Kishon River in Judges 5:21. The word's rarity and textual variants (some Greek manuscripts treat it as a place name) create interpretive challenges. If 'ancient' is correct, it may emphasize the river's timeless role in Israel's sacred geography. Alternatively, if related to verbs of attack or onrush, it might describe the torrent's violent sweep that destroyed Sisera's forces —a dual possibility enriching the poetic ambiguity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ancient | es: antiguo | fr: ancien | de: ancient Judg 5:21

קָדוֹשׁ H6918 Prep-b | Adj-mpc | 3ms (119×)

Sacred, holy; set apart for God; as a divine title, 'the Holy One'; in the plural, holy ones or saints.

Qadosh is the adjective at the heart of biblical theology — the word Isaiah's seraphim cry three times (Isa 6:3) and the word that defines Israel's calling: 'You shall be holy, for I the LORD your God am holy' (Lev 19:2). Its root meaning is separation or setting-apart, but in biblical usage this separation is never mere isolation; it is consecration toward God, charged with divine presence and moral demand. As a divine attribute, qadosh describes God's transcendent otherness — exalted above all creation, unapproachable in purity. As a title, 'the Holy One of Israel' (qedosh Yisra'el) becomes Isaiah's signature name for God, fusing transcendence with covenantal intimacy. The plural qedoshim stretches to encompass both angelic beings in God's heavenly court and human beings called to reflect divine holiness. Languages fracture the range differently: Arabic quddus reserves the superlative form for God alone, while Korean 거룩한 and Swahili -takatifu serve for both divine and human holiness.

1. holy (divine attribute) (50×) Adjectival predication of holiness: qadosh used predicatively or attributively to describe God, persons, places, objects, or times as sacred or set apart. This is the broadest sense at 50 occurrences, covering 'a holy nation' (Exod 19:6), 'a holy place' (Lev 6:16, 26-27), 'holy ground' (Exod 3:5), and 'you shall be holy' (Lev 11:44-45; 19:2; 20:7). Spanish santo/santa, German heilig, French saint, and Korean 거룩한 all map consistently to this adjectival use. The levitical holiness code deploys this sense most densely, demanding that Israel's conduct match God's character. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: holy | es: santa, santas, santo | fr: saint | de: heilig Exod 19:6; Exod 29:31; Lev 6:16; Lev 6:26; Lev 6:27

2. the Holy One (divine title) (46×) Substantivized divine title: 'the Holy One' (haqqadosh or qedosh) used as a name for God, most characteristically in the construct phrase qedosh Yisra'el, 'the Holy One of Israel.' Found 46 times, this is Isaiah's signature divine epithet (Isa 1:4; 5:19, 24; 10:17, 20; 12:6; 29:19; 30:11-12, 15; 31:1; 37:23; 41:14, 16, 20; 43:3, 14-15; 45:11; 47:4; 48:17; 49:7; 54:5; 55:5; 60:9, 14), but it also appears in Psalms (71:22; 78:41; 89:18) and in Habakkuk's 'my Holy One' (Hab 1:12). Arabic al-Quddus is one of Allah's 99 names, and the Quranic usage confirms the substantival-title force. Korean 거룩하신 분 ('the Holy Being') and Swahili Mtakatifu both lexicalize the shift from adjective to proper title. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: Holy-One-of, Holy-One-of-, holy | es: Santo, Santo-de, al-Santo-de | fr: Holy-One-de, le-Saint, saint | de: Heiliger, Holy-One-von Num 16:5; Num 16:7; 2Kgs 19:22; Ps 71:22; Ps 78:41

3. holy ones / saints (20×) Plural substantive: qedoshim meaning 'holy ones' or 'saints' — either angelic beings in the divine council or human beings consecrated to God. Twenty occurrences span both referents: Deuteronomy 33:3 speaks of God's qedoshav ('his holy ones') coming from Sinai with angelic hosts; Psalm 34:10 exhorts 'fear the LORD, you his holy ones'; Hosea 12:1 mentions God as 'faithful to the holy ones'; and Daniel 7:18-27 promises the kingdom to 'the saints of the Most High.' The ambiguity between celestial and terrestrial referents is itself theologically significant — the same holiness that characterizes God's heavenly attendants is demanded of his earthly people. Swahili watakatifu and Spanish los santos both handle this range with a single plural form. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: (in-holy-ones-his), His-holy-ones, [in-holy-one-his] | es: Santos, a-los-santos, de-los-santos | fr: dans-saint-lui, de-saint, saint | de: Allerheiligste, Heiliger, [(בקדשיו)] Lev 19:2; Lev 20:7; Lev 20:26; Lev 21:6; Num 15:40

4. (2×) Holy offerings or sacred donations: qadosh in construct with genitive, referring to consecrated items or portions set apart for priestly use. Two occurrences at Numbers 18:8 and 18:32, where qodshim (or qadosh in construct) designates the sacred offerings that the Levites receive and must handle with care. Spanish cosas santas ('holy things') and German heilige Sachen confirm the shift from personal holiness to consecrated-object status. This represents a metonymic extension: from the quality of being set apart to the concrete items that have been set apart. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: holy-things-of | es: cosas-santas-de, las-cosas-santas-de | fr: saint-choses-de | de: heilig-Sachen-von Num 18:8; Num 18:32

5. (1×) Holy precinct or sacred space: qadosh used in construct to designate a sanctified place or the holy courts of God's dwelling. One occurrence at Psalm 65:4, where the psalmist speaks of being satisfied with 'the holiness/holy place of your house' — the sanctuary as the locus of divine presence and blessing. Spanish santidad de, French saintete, and German der heilige all render this as a spatial-sacred concept. This is a locative extension of the root adjective, where holiness becomes a metonym for the place characterized by holiness. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: the-holy-place-of | es: santidad-de | fr: sainteté | de: der-heilig- Ps 65:4

קָדַח H6919 Prep-k / V-Qal-Inf (5×)

to kindle, be kindled; to start or catch fire, especially of divine wrath

A verb meaning to kindle or be set ablaze, with a strong association with divine anger. In Deuteronomy 32:22, fire is kindled in God's wrath, a phrase echoed in Jeremiah 15:14 and 17:4. Isaiah 64:2 uses the infinitive in a simile comparing God's theophany to fire kindling brushwood, and Isaiah 50:11 warns those who kindle their own fire. The cognate Arabic root involves striking fire with flint, grounding the word in the concrete act of sparking flame. Spanish 'enciende' (kindles) and 'encendedores' (kindlers) mirror both the intransitive and active participial uses.

(5×) To be kindled or to kindle fire, used predominantly of divine wrath blazing forth. In Deut 32:22 'a fire is kindled in my anger' establishes the dominant theological idiom, repeated in Jer 15:14 and 17:4. Isaiah 64:2 extends it to theophany: God's coming is like fire that kindles dry brush. Isaiah 50:11 warns self-reliant 'kindlers of fire.' Spanish 'enciende/encendedores' and the Arabic cognate (striking fire with flint) together illuminate the concrete-to-metaphorical range. BURNING AND FIRE

en: As-fire-kindles, is-kindled, kindlers-of | es: Como-enciende, encendedores-de, encendisteis | fr: [כקדח], [קדחה], [קדחי] | de: [כקדח], [קדחה], [קדחי] Deut 32:22; Isa 50:11; Isa 64:2; Jer 15:14; Jer 17:4

קַדַּחַת H6920 Art / N-fs (2×)

fever; elevated body temperature as symptom of illness, listed among covenant curses

This medical term denotes the feverish heat accompanying disease. It appears exclusively in Leviticus and Deuteronomy's covenant curse lists, where God threatens disobedience with wasting disease and fever. The pairing with 'consumption' and other illnesses indicates serious pathological conditions rather than mild temperature elevation. Fever represented dangerous, potentially fatal sickness in the ancient world before modern medicine, making it an effective curse to enforce covenant loyalty. The term captures the burning, weakening effects of systemic infection.

(2×) Leviticus 26:16 pairs qaddachat with 'consumption' (shachepchet) as divine punishment for covenant violation, while Deuteronomy 28:22 embeds it in a longer list of afflictions. Spanish uses 'fiebre/con-fiebre' (fever/with fever), French and German parallel 'fever/mit-fever,' all confirming the medical condition. The Deuteronomy passage adds 'inflammation, scorching heat, drought' to the disease catalog, creating cumulative terror. The conjunction 'and with fever' in Deuteronomy reflects its position in the curse series. This is pathological fever associated with wasting illness, not merely warm forehead but life-threatening systemic disease that consumes the eyes and causes anguish (Lev 26:16). The term functions strictly within covenant curse formulae. FEVER ILLNESS

en: and-with-fever, the-fever | es: la-fiebre, y-con-fiebre | fr: et-avec-fever, le-fever | de: der-fever, und-mit-fever Lev 26:16; Deut 28:22

קָדִים H6921 Art / N-ms / 3fs (69×)

The east as a cardinal direction or boundary marker; also the scorching east wind (sirocco) from the desert, often an instrument of divine judgment.

In Hebrew geography, qadim points toward the sunrise — the direction of orientation, boundary-setting, and movement in the land. Ezekiel uses the locative form qadimah extensively for the eastern gate and tribal allotments (Ezek 11:1; 48:4). But qadim also names the dreaded sirocco, the hot dry wind off the Arabian desert that withers crops and wrecks ships. Pharaoh's dream of seven thin ears 'scorched by the east wind' (Gen 41:6) and God parting the sea with a ruach qadim (Exod 14:21) both invoke this powerful natural force. Spanish and French consistently distinguish 'este' (direction) from 'viento del este' (the wind itself).

1. east, eastward (direction) (59×) The cardinal direction east, used for geographical orientation, territorial boundaries, and directional movement. Ezekiel employs it prolifically for the eastern gate of the temple and tribal land divisions (Ezek 11:1; 48:1-28). The locative suffix qadimah ('eastward') appears frequently in boundary descriptions. German 'Osten' and 'ostwarts,' Spanish 'este' and 'hacia el este,' French 'est' and 'vers l'est' all render this purely directional sense without atmospheric connotation. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: east, eastward | es: este, hacia-adelante, hacia-el-este | fr: est, vers-l'est | de: Osten, [קדימה], ostwarts Exod 10:13; Exod 14:21; Ezek 11:1; Ezek 17:10

2. east wind (scorching desert wind) (10×) The scorching desert wind blowing from the east, the biblical sirocco — an agent of destruction often wielded by God in judgment. It withers Pharaoh's grain (Gen 41:6, 23, 27), parts the Red Sea (Exod 14:21), and becomes a metaphor for emptiness in Job and Hosea (Job 15:2; Hos 12:2; 13:15). The multilingual evidence separates this neatly: Spanish 'viento del este,' French 'est-vent,' and English 'east wind' all mark the meteorological force distinct from mere compass direction. EAST AND SUNRISE
en: east-wind, in-the-day, the-east-wind | es: de-viento-del-este, el-viento-del-este, viento-del-este | fr: [קדים], est, est-vent | de: -, [קדים], der-east-Wind Gen 41:6; Gen 41:23; Gen 41:27; Job 15:2; Job 27:21

קָדִישׁ H6922 Adj-mpc (13×)

Holy, sacred (Aramaic); used in Daniel of God, angelic watchers, and the eschatological 'saints of the Most High.'

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew קָדוֹשׁ, appearing exclusively in Daniel. It describes the divine spirit within Nebuchadnezzar's counselors as 'the spirit of the holy gods' (Dan 4:5–6, 15; 5:11), the angelic 'watcher' who descends from heaven (Dan 4:10, 14, 20), and — most consequentially — the קַדִּישֵׁי עֶלְיוֹנִין, 'saints of the Most High,' who receive an everlasting kingdom (Dan 7:18, 22, 25, 27). Spanish renders this santos, German heilig, and the theological weight is enormous: this one adjective bridges heaven and earth in Daniel's apocalyptic vision.

holy, sacred (Aramaic) (13×) Set apart, sacred, consecrated — applied in Daniel's Aramaic to three referents: the spirit of the gods dwelling in Daniel (Dan 4:5–6; 5:11), the angelic watchers sent from heaven's council (Dan 4:10, 14, 20), and the eschatological community ('saints of the Most High') who inherit dominion (Dan 7:18, 22, 25, 27). The consistent German heilig and Spanish santos across all uses confirm that a single core meaning — divine consecration — unifies these apparently distinct applications. Psalm 78:38's parallel Hebrew usage in the same manuscript tradition reinforces the theological continuity. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: and-holy-one, and-holy-ones-of, holy | es: a-santos-de, los-santos, santos | fr: [ולקדישי], [וקדיש], [לקדישי] | de: heilig, und-heilig Dan 4:8; Dan 4:9; Dan 4:13; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:18

קָדַם H6923 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConjImperf-3fs (26×)

To come in front of, meet, confront; in Piel, to anticipate or go before; in Hifil, to give beforehand.

Qadam captures the dynamic of getting out in front — whether in hostility, welcome, worship, or temporal anticipation. In battle, enemies 'confront' the psalmist (2 Sam 22:6; Ps 18:5), but the same verb describes going out to meet a friend with bread and water (Isa 21:14) or coming before the LORD with burnt offerings (Mic 6:6). The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish splits between confrontar for the hostile sense and presentarse/venir for worship, while German and French both struggle to find a single equivalent, resorting to paraphrases. The Psalms' use of qadam in 119:147-148 — rising before dawn to cry out, anticipating the night watches — beautifully captures the verb's core energy of eager, purposeful getting-ahead, whether toward an enemy or toward God.

1. confront hostilely (7×) Piel with hostile intent: to come upon or confront someone aggressively, of enemies, snares, or calamity descending upon a person. The cords of death and torrents of destruction 'confronted' David (2 Sam 22:6, 19; Ps 18:5, 19), and the psalmist asks God to 'confront' the wicked and bring them down (Ps 17:13). Spanish Me-confrontaron and English 'confront' converge clearly, while French devancer preserves the spatial 'getting ahead of' even in hostile contexts — revealing how the root spatial metaphor persists beneath the adversarial coloring. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-confront, confront, confront-me | es: Me-confrontaron, confronta, me-confrontaron | fr: aller-au-devant-moi, confronta-moi, devancer | de: [וקדים], [קדמני], confront 2Sam 22:6; 2Sam 22:19; Job 30:27; Ps 17:13; Ps 18:5

2. go out to meet (7×) Piel with social or welcoming intent: to go out to meet someone, whether in friendship, hospitality, or formal encounter. Moab and Ammon did not 'meet' Israel with bread and water (Deut 23:4; Neh 13:2); Job asks why knees 'received' him at birth (Job 3:12). Spanish salir-al-encuentro ('go out to meet') and German meet-ihn capture the warm interpersonal dynamic. The same verb structure as sense 1, but the context flips the emotional valence entirely — an important reminder that Hebrew verbs of motion often derive their positive or negative force from context, not morphology. GOING TO MEET
en: comes-before-you, did-receive-me, let-meet-us | es: le-saliste-al-encuentro, me-recibieron, os-salieron-al-encuentro | fr: [קדמו], aller-au-devant-moi, devancer | de: [קדמו], [קדמוני], du-meet-ihn Deut 23:4; Neh 13:2; Job 3:12; Ps 21:3; Ps 79:8

3. go before, precede (5×) Piel with temporal or spatial priority: to go before, precede, anticipate, or be early. The psalmist 'rises before' dawn (Ps 119:147) and 'anticipates' the night watches (Ps 119:148). Jonah fled 'beforehand' to Tarshish (Jonah 4:2), and singers 'went before' the procession (Ps 68:25). Spanish adelantarse ('to get ahead') nails this temporal-priority sense, as does French devancer. The cluster is coherent: in all five occurrences the subject acts in advance of a reference point in time or position. GOING TO MEET
en: I-fled-beforehand, I-rise-before, go-before | es: Iban-delante, Me-adelanté, Se-adelantaron | fr: devancer | de: [קדמתי], gehen-vor, haben-anticipated Ps 68:25; Ps 89:14; Ps 119:147; Ps 119:148; Jonah 4:2

4. meet with provision or favor (3×) Piel with benefactive nuance: to come to meet someone bearing provision, favor, or blessing. God 'meets' the king with blessings of goodness (Ps 21:3), and the anticipation that God's lovingkindness 'will meet' the psalmist (Ps 59:10). This sense also includes coming against a city in siege (2 Kgs 19:32; Isa 37:33), where the benefactive target is ironic — the 'meeting' is an arrival with military force. The Spanish enfrentar and German confront show how siege-context occurrences pull toward hostility, while the psalm passages clearly carry divine favor. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: he-shall-come-before-it, will-confront-it, will-meet-me | es: la-enfrentará, me-anticipará | fr: [יקדמנה], devancer, fera-confront-cela | de: [יקדמנה], wird-confront-es, wird-meet-mich 2Kgs 19:32; Ps 59:10; Isa 37:33

5. come before God, approach (3×) Piel in liturgical context: to come before the presence of God in worship or supplication. Micah's rhetorical question 'With what shall I come before the LORD?' (Mic 6:6, used twice) and the invitation to 'come before his presence with thanksgiving' (Ps 95:2) represent this distinctly theophanic usage. Spanish presentarse and German kommen-vor ('come before') both select formal-approach vocabulary rather than hostile-encounter terms. The shift from physical movement to spiritual posture marks a real semantic specialization within the Piel. GOING TO MEET
en: let-us-come-before, shall-I-come-before, shall-I-come-before-Him | es: Vengamos, me-presentaré, ¿Me-presentaré | fr: devancer | de: [אקדם], [האקדמנו], lass-uns-kommen-vor Ps 95:2; Mic 6:6

6. give beforehand (Hifil) (1×) Hifil causative: to give to someone first or in advance, to anticipate with a prior gift. A single occurrence in Job 41:11 (English 41:3): 'Who has confronted me that I should repay?' — meaning 'who has given to me beforehand?' The Hifil stem marks the causative explicitly, and the multilingual evidence reflects the shift: Spanish anticipar and French aller-au-devant-moi retain the 'getting ahead' metaphor but apply it to the act of giving rather than physical movement. This is the only Hifil occurrence and represents a genuine lexical extension from spatial priority to transactional priority. GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: has-confronted-Me | es: me-anticipó | fr: aller-au-devant-moi | de: [הקדימני] Job 41:11

קֶדֶם H6924a Conj-w (61×)

East or the eastern direction; ancient time or antiquity; before or in front of, spatially or temporally.

Qedem is a word whose two primary meanings – 'east' and 'ancient time' – are bound together by a single metaphor: in Hebrew thought, what is 'in front of' you is both the direction you face at sunrise and the past you can see stretching back. This double orientation runs through the word's 61 occurrences. When Genesis 2:8 says God planted a garden 'in Eden, in the east,' and when Micah 5:2 speaks of origins 'from of old, from ancient times,' the same root carries both meanings. Spanish captures this duality with 'oriente' for the spatial sense and 'antiguo' for the temporal one.

1. east, eastern direction (29×) The east as a geographical direction or an eastern region. This sense appears from Genesis 2:8 ('a garden in the east') through prophetic literature (Isaiah 9:12, 'the Syrians from the east'). The 'sons of the east' (bene-qedem) in Judges 6:3, 7:12, and Job 1:3 designates tribes dwelling east and northeast of Canaan. Spanish renders it 'oriente,' French 'est' or 'orient,' and German 'Osten.' The directional force is clear in prepositional constructions like mi-qedem ('from the east') in Genesis 3:24 and 11:2. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: east, from-east, the-east | es: al-oriente, al-oriente-de, desde-oriente | fr: de-est, devant, est | de: Osten, Vorzeit, der-Osten Gen 2:8; Gen 3:24; Gen 10:30; Gen 11:2; Gen 12:8

2. ancient time, of old (29×) Ancient time, antiquity, or 'of old.' This temporal sense appears in Deuteronomy 33:27 ('the eternal God,' lit. 'God of qedem'), 2 Kings 19:25 ('have you not heard that long ago I determined it?'), and Psalm 74:12 ('God is my king from of old'). Spanish shifts to 'antiguo' or 'desde antiguo,' French to 'ancien,' and German to 'Vorzeit.' The metaphor underlying this meaning is profoundly Hebrew: the past lies 'in front' (qedem) because it is known and visible, while the future lies 'behind' because it is unseen. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ancient, ancient-time, ancient-times | es: Desde-antiguo, antiguamente, antiguo | fr: [מקדם], ancien, de-ancien | de: Osten, Vorzeit, ancient Deut 33:15; Deut 33:27; 2Kgs 19:25; Neh 12:46; Job 29:2

3. before, in front of (3×) Before or in front of, in either a spatial or temporal sense. Psalm 139:5 places God 'behind and before (qedem)' the psalmist, a spatial encirclement. Proverbs 8:22-23 declares that Wisdom was established 'from the beginning' (mi-qedem), before the earth existed – a temporal 'in front of' all creation. Spanish uses 'antes de' and 'delante,' French 'devant,' capturing the positional nuance. With only three clear occurrences in this specific sense, it represents the root meaning from which both the directional and the temporal senses derived. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-before, before, from-the-beginning-of | es: antes-de, desde-antes-de, y-delante | fr: de-orient, et-ancien, orient | de: Vorzeit, und-vor Ps 139:5; Prov 8:22; Prov 8:23

קֶדְמָה H6924b Conj-w / Adv / 3fs (26×)

eastward, toward the east — an adverbial directional form indicating orientation or movement toward the sunrise

Qidmah is the he-locale (directional) form of qedem ('east, ancient time'), functioning as an adverb meaning 'eastward' or 'toward the east.' Its 26 occurrences cluster heavily in boundary descriptions and ritual geography. In the Priestly legislation, the priest casts the crop of the sacrificial bird eastward beside the altar (Lev 1:16) and sprinkles blood seven times eastward before the mercy seat on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:14). The tribal camp arrangement places Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun on the east side of the tabernacle (Num 2:3; 3:38). In boundary lists, the term orients border descriptions from the Dead Sea and Jordan valley (Num 34:3, 10-11; Josh 15:5; 18:20). Abraham sent his concubines' sons qidmah — 'eastward, to the land of the east' (Gen 25:6). Elijah fled eastward to the brook Cherith (1 Kgs 17:3). Ezekiel's visionary temple faces eastward (Ezek 8:16; 45:7).

eastward, toward the east (26×) The directional adverb 'eastward' or 'toward the east,' formed with the he-locale suffix on qedem. Used predominantly in Priestly boundary and camp descriptions (Num 2:3; 3:38; 34:3, 10-11; Josh 15:5; 18:20), sacrificial rubrics requiring eastward orientation (Lev 1:16; 16:14), and narrative directional notices (Gen 25:6; 1 Kgs 17:3). In Ezekiel's temple vision, the east-facing gate carries special theological weight (Ezek 8:16; 45:7). Spanish 'al oriente' and French 'est' capture the straightforward directional sense. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: east, eastward | es: al-oriente, al-oriente:, este | fr: [קדמה], eastward, est | de: Osten, [קדמה], eastward Gen 13:14; Gen 25:6; Gen 28:14; Exod 27:13; Exod 38:13

קֶדֶם H6925 Prep / 2ms (46×)

Before, in the presence of; an Aramaic preposition marking spatial presence or (rarely) temporal priority

An Aramaic preposition found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, functioning as the equivalent of Hebrew liphnei ('before the face of'). Nearly all 46 occurrences describe being in the presence of a superior – speaking before the king, praying before God, reading before an official – where the relational tone carries deference and formality. A single occurrence in Daniel 7:7 shifts to temporal meaning ('before it'), a distinction confirmed by Arabic qablaha and Spanish antes de ella, both temporal markers that differ from the spatial devant/ante used everywhere else.

1. before, in the presence of (45×) Spatial and relational preposition meaning 'before, in the presence of,' used 45 times in formal Aramaic court and cultic settings. Governs pronominal suffixes across all persons (qodamai, qodamakh, qodamohi, etc.). The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform – French devant, Spanish ante/delante de, German vor – all spatial. Key passages include Daniel 2:9 ('to say before me') and Ezra 4:18 ('read before us'), where the sense conveys face-to-face presence before an authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before, before-, before-me | es: ante, delante-de, delante-de-mí | fr: [קדמ], devant | de: vor Ezra 4:18; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 7:14; Ezra 7:19; Dan 2:6

2. before (temporal) (1×) Temporal preposition meaning 'before, prior to,' attested once in Daniel 7:7 describing the fourth beast devouring what came before it. The multilingual translations split clearly here: Arabic shifts from amama (spatial) to qablaha (temporal 'before it'), Spanish moves from delante de to antes de ella, and Hindi uses usse pahle ('before it' in time). This convergence across unrelated language families confirms a genuinely distinct temporal sense rather than a spatial metaphor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before-it | es: antes-de-ella | fr: [קדמיה] | de: vor Dan 7:7

קֶדְמָה H6926 N-fsc (4×)

east of, in front of (prepositional use indicating direction or location)

A prepositional phrase meaning 'east of' or 'in front of,' derived from the root for 'before' or 'east.' Genesis 2:14 locates the Tigris 'east of' Assyria (from the narrator's western perspective). Genesis 4:16 says Cain dwelt 'east of Eden.' First Samuel 13:5 places the Philistine camp 'east of' (or 'in front of') Beth-aven. Ezekiel 39:11 describes the Valley of the Travelers 'east of the Sea.' The term marks geographical orientation, usually eastward from a reference point.

(4×) Genesis 2:14 locates the Tigris 'east of Assyria' (קֶדְמַת אַשּׁוּר), though geographically it's actually west—the designation reflects the narrator's western viewpoint. Genesis 4:16 places Cain's dwelling 'east of Eden.' First Samuel 13:5 puts the Philistines 'east of Beth-aven' (or 'opposite' it). Ezekiel 39:11 describes a burial valley 'east of the sea.' Spanish al este/al oriente (to the east, eastward) and French est de (east of) capture the directional/locational sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: east-of, east-of- | es: al-este-de, al-oriente-de, al-oriente-de- | fr: east-de, est-de, est-de- | de: [קדמת], east-von, östlich-von Gen 2:14; Gen 4:16; 1Sam 13:5; Ezek 39:11

קַדְמָה H6927 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3fp (6×)

Former state, previous condition; origin or beginning; temporal 'before' (Aramaic-influenced)

Derived from the root q-d-m ('front, east, ancient'), qadmah denotes what came before – whether a previous condition to which something may return, or the very origin and beginning of a thing. Ezekiel uses it repeatedly in restoration promises: Sodom and Samaria will return to their 'former state' (Ezek 16:55), and Israel will be made better than their 'former times' (Ezek 36:11). Isaiah 23:7 applies it to Tyre's ancient origin. In Psalm 129:6, the construct form functions almost as a conjunction meaning 'before,' an Aramaism reflecting the word's temporal flexibility. Spanish 'antiguedad' captures both the antiquity and former-condition senses elegantly.

1. former state, previous condition (4×) Former state or previous condition, especially in prophetic contexts of restoration. Ezekiel 16:55 uses the suffixed form three times promising return to a prior state for Sodom, Samaria, and Jerusalem. Ezekiel 36:11 extends this to Israel's 'former times.' Spanish 'antiguedad' and English 'former state' converge on the restorative sense. TIME AND SEASONS

en: as-your-former-times, to-former-state-their, to-former-state-your | es: a-antiguedad-de-ellas, a-antiguedad-de-vosotras, como-vuestras-antigüedades, | fr: ancienneté | de: [כקדמותיכם], [לקדמתכן], [לקדמתן] Ezek 16:55; Ezek 36:11

2. origin, beginning, before (temporal) (2×) Origin, beginning, or temporal 'before,' referring to the earliest point of existence or a time prior to a given event. Isaiah 23:7 speaks of Tyre's 'origin' reaching back to antiquity. Psalm 129:6 uses the construct as an Aramaic-influenced temporal conjunction meaning 'before (it) plucked up.' German 'welcher-vor' and Spanish 'que antes de' preserve this temporal-conjunctive nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-origin, which-before | es: que-antes-de, su-antigüedad | fr: [קדמתה], ancienneté | de: [קדמתה], welcher-vor Ps 129:6; Isa 23:7

קַדְמָה H6928 N-fsc (2×)

former time, aforetime; temporal reference to a previous state or earlier period

This Aramaic temporal noun denotes earlier time, appearing in Daniel and Ezra in the phrase 'before this' or 'formerly.' The construct form 'from former-time of this' functions as a temporal adverbial meaning 'before this happened' or 'previously.' It marks contrast between past custom and present situation. The usage parallels Biblical Hebrew's qedem (front, ancient time), showing how spatial 'front/before' extends to temporal 'earlier.' The term helps narrators establish temporal sequences and mark changes from previous practice.

(2×) Daniel 6:10 uses 'from former-time of this' (min-qadmat denah) meaning 'as formerly,' describing Daniel's unchanged prayer practice despite the new decree. Ezra 5:11 employs the same construction: the Temple 'which was built from former-time of this' (long ago). Spanish distinguishes 'desde antes de' (from before) and 'antes de' (before), French 'ancien temps' (ancient time), confirming temporal reference. Both contexts establish continuity: Daniel prayed as he always had, and the Temple was originally built in earlier generations. This is purely temporal language, marking the contrast between 'then' and 'now,' with no spatial dimension despite the 'front' etymology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before | es: antes-de, desde-antes-de | fr: [מקדמת], ancien-temps | de: [מקדמת], [קדמת] Ezra 5:11; Dan 6:10

קֶדְמָה H6929 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Kedemah, Qedemah; one of Ishmael's twelve sons, an Ishmaelite tribal ancestor

This personal name designates Ishmael's youngest listed son, one of the twelve princes who fathered Arabian tribal groups. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'east' or 'ancient,' possibly indicating 'easterner' or 'ancient one.' The Septuagint renders it Kedema/Kedma with slight variation. Both Genesis and Chronicles preserve this name in Ishmael's genealogy, fulfilling God's promise that Ishmael would father twelve princes. Like other Ishmaelite names, this probably became an eponymous tribal designation for one of the Arabian peoples descended from Abraham through Hagar.

(2×) Genesis 25:15 and 1 Chronicles 1:31 list Kedemah identically as Ishmael's twelfth son, both with the conjunction 'and' as final item in the genealogical sequence. Spanish uses 'y-Quedma/Qedmah,' French and German 'et-Kedemah/und-Kedma,' all preserving the conjunction that marks list completion. The Genesis passage immediately notes these are the twelve princes according to their settlements and encampments, confirming these names doubled as tribal designations. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture, suggesting this Ishmaelite branch left limited biblical footprint, absorbed into the broader Arabian context referenced as 'people of the east.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kedemah, and-Qedemah | es: y-Qedmah, y-Quedma | fr: [וקדמה], et-Kedemah | de: [וקדמה], und-Kedma Gen 25:15; 1Chr 1:31

קַדְמוֹן H6930 Art / Adj-fs (1×)

eastern, oriented toward the east

An adjective meaning 'eastern' or 'belonging to the east.' It appears in Ezekiel 47:8 describing 'the eastern circuit' or 'the eastern Galilee' through which the temple's life-giving river flows. The term derives from the root meaning 'before' or 'east,' since Semitic orientation faced eastward. This geographical precision matters in Ezekiel's visionary temple geography, where directional specificity helps readers trace the sacred waters' path toward the Dead Sea.

(1×) The feminine adjective 'eastern,' qualifying a geographical circuit or region in Ezekiel's temple vision. The phrase 'the eastern Galilee' locates the path of healing waters flowing from the sanctuary toward the Arabah. Some translations retain the Hebrew untransliterated due to morphological complexity, but Spanish (oriental) and French (ancien—likely confusing this with qadmon 'ancient') show the directional sense. The eastern orientation reflects both geographic reality and symbolic movement toward restoration. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: the-eastern | es: la-oriental | fr: ancien | de: [הקדמונה] Ezek 47:8

קַדְמֹנִי H6931 Conj-w / Adj-fp (10×)

Former or ancient (of time); eastern (of direction). An adjective bridging temporal priority and spatial orientation.

The adjective קַדְמֹנִי splits neatly between two semantic poles: 'eastern' in geographic contexts and 'former/ancient' in temporal ones, both deriving from the root קדם, whose basic notion is 'front' or 'before.' Since the ancient Israelite orientation placed east as the direction one faces, 'in front of' yielded both 'eastward' and 'earlier in time.' Ezekiel uses the word for the eastern gate of the Temple (Ezek 10:19; 11:1) and the eastern sea, i.e., the Dead Sea (Ezek 47:18). Joel 2:20 and Zechariah 14:8 likewise point eastward. On the temporal side, Isaiah 43:18 urges Israel not to remember 'former things,' Malachi 3:4 recalls 'former years,' and 1 Samuel 24:13 cites 'the proverb of the ancients.' Spanish 'oriental' versus 'antiguo' and French 'ancien' reveal how different languages carve up what Hebrew unites under one form.

1. eastern (5×) Eastern, pertaining to the geographic direction of the east. Used of the eastern gate of the Temple in Ezekiel's vision (Ezek 10:19; 11:1), the eastern sea – that is, the Dead Sea – as a boundary marker (Ezek 47:18; Zech 14:8), and the 'northern one' driven toward the eastern sea in Joel 2:20. The root קדם links 'east' with 'front,' reflecting Israel's orientation. Spanish 'oriental' and German equivalents consistently mark this spatial sense. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: the-eastern | es: el-oriental, la-oriental | fr: ancien | de: [הקדמוני], [הקדמני] Ezek 10:19; Ezek 11:1; Ezek 47:18; Joel 2:20; Zech 14:8

2. former, ancient (5×) Former or ancient, referring to what belongs to earlier times or past generations. In Isaiah 43:18, God commands Israel to stop dwelling on קַדְמֹנִיּוֹת, 'former things,' paired with רִאשֹׁנוֹת. Malachi 3:4 recalls שָׁנִים קַדְמֹנִיּוֹת, 'former years,' alongside 'days of old.' The substantivized plural in Job 18:20 designates 'those before' – people of an earlier era who shudder at the wicked man's fate. In 1 Samuel 24:13, David cites מְשַׁל הַקַּדְמֹנִי, 'the proverb of the ancients.' Spanish 'antiguos/primeros' and French 'ancien' confirm the temporal reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-ancient-things, and-those-before, former | es: antiguos, los-antiguos, primeros | fr: [וקדמניות], ancien, et-וקדמנים | de: [וקדמניות], [וקדמנים], [קדמונים] 1Sam 24:13; Job 18:20; Isa 43:18; Ezek 38:17; Mal 3:4

קְדֵמֹת H6932 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Kedemoth (place name, town in Reuben/Moab with associated wilderness)

A Levitical city in Reubenite territory (originally Moabite) with an associated wilderness area. Deuteronomy 2:26 mentions the 'Wilderness of Kedemoth' from which Moses sent peace messengers to Sihon. Joshua 13:18 lists Kedemoth among Reuben's towns. Joshua 21:37 and 1 Chronicles 6:79 identify it as a Levitical city. The site lies north of the upper Arnon but has not been definitively identified archaeologically. The name derives from the root for 'east' or 'ancient,' possibly meaning 'eastern [place]' or 'ancient [site].'

(4×) Deuteronomy 2:26 references the 'Wilderness of Kedemoth' (מִדְבַּר קְדֵמוֹת) from which Moses sent envoys to Sihon. Joshua 13:18 lists Kedemoth among Reuben's cities. Joshua 21:37 and 1 Chronicles 6:79 designate it as a Levitical city. The Septuagint transcriptions (Κεδαμωθ, Καδημωθ) preserve the name with slight variations. Spanish Cademot/Quedemot represents transliteration choices for the Hebrew name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kedemoth, Qedemot, and-Kedemoth | es: Cademot, Quedemot, y-Cademot | fr: Kedemoth, [קדמות], et-Kedemoth | de: Kedemoth, [קדמות], und-Kedemoth Deut 2:26; Josh 13:18; Josh 21:37; 1Chr 6:79

קַדְמָי H6933 Adj-fpd (3×)

former, first; that which came before in time or sequence (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective means former or first—referring to what came before. Daniel 7:4, 8, 24 use it in the vision of beasts and horns. The 'first' beast is described, distinguishing it from those that follow. The 'former horns' (7:8, 24) are those that preceded the emerging little horn. The term provides temporal or sequential ordering in visionary material, helping track the succession of kingdoms and powers. Grammatically, it appears in various forms (feminine singular emphatic, feminine/masculine plural emphatic) agreeing with the nouns it modifies.

(3×) Daniel's apocalyptic visions use this adjective to order elements: the first beast (7:4) establishes sequence, while 'the former horns' (7:8, 24) are those uprooted by the little horn. The multilingual evidence shows morphological notation (brackets for [קדמיא], [קדמיתא]), reflecting the various Aramaic forms (masculine/feminine, singular/plural). The basic meaning is temporal precedence: what came first or earlier in the sequence of vision or history. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: first, the-former | es: La-primera, los-primeros, primeros | fr: [קדמיא], [קדמיתא] | de: [קדמיא], [קדמיתא] Dan 7:4; Dan 7:8; Dan 7:24

קַדְמִיאֵל H6934 N-proper-ms (8×)

Kadmiel — 'El is the ancient one'; a Levite leader prominent in the post-exilic community's worship and covenant renewal.

Kadmiel is a Levitical name meaning 'God is the ancient one' or 'El is of old,' combining qedem ('east, ancient time') with El. This Levite leader appears at every major milestone of the post-exilic restoration: among the returning exiles (Ezra 2:40 = Neh 7:43), supervising Temple reconstruction under Zerubbabel (Ezra 3:9), leading public worship and confession (Neh 9:4-5), sealing the covenant renewal (Neh 10:10), and serving in praise and thanksgiving duties (Neh 12:8, 24). His consistent pairing with Jeshua son of Kadmiel or alongside other Levitical leaders suggests he headed a major Levitical house. The name's theology—affirming God's eternal priority—resonates with the community's effort to re-establish ancient worship in a new era.

Kadmiel (proper name, Levite leader) (8×) A theophoric Levitical proper name meaning 'El is the ancient one,' from qedem (antiquity, the east) plus El. Identifies a prominent Levite leader of the post-exilic community. He appears in the lists of returning exiles (Ezra 2:40 = Neh 7:43), oversees Temple foundation work (Ezra 3:9), leads communal prayer and confession on the stairs of the Levites (Neh 9:4-5), signs the covenant document (Neh 10:10), and serves in organized praise (Neh 12:8, 24). The LXX renders the name Kadmiel (Καδμιηλ). Multilingual glosses—English 'Kadmiel,' Spanish 'Cadmiel,' French 'Kadmiel'—are remarkably uniform, while German transcriptions preserve the Hebrew consonantal forms. The Sabaic cognate 'ilqadm confirms the antiquity of this theophoric pattern. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kadmiel, Qadmiel, and-Kadmiel | es: Cadmiel, de-Cadmiel, y-Cadmiel | fr: Kadmiel, et-Kadmiel, zu-Kadmiel | de: [וקדמיאל], [לקדמיאל], [קדמיאל] Ezra 2:40; Ezra 3:9; Neh 7:43; Neh 9:4; Neh 9:5

קַדְמֹנִי H6935 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Kadmonites, an ancient people group in Canaan listed in God's covenant with Abraham

This gentile adjective functions as a collective noun designating an ancient tribal group. Genesis 15:19 includes the Kadmonites in the extensive list of peoples whose land God promised to Abraham's descendants. The name likely means 'Easterners' or 'ancient ones,' suggesting either their geographical location or antiquity. They vanish from biblical record after this single mention, leaving scholars uncertain whether they were absorbed into other groups or represent a scribal variant of another known people.

(1×) A people group named among the ten nations inhabiting Canaan before Israel's conquest, appearing only in the Abrahamic covenant narrative. The name's connection to 'east' or 'ancient' may indicate desert tribes east of Canaan or emphasize their deep-rooted presence in the land. Cross-linguistic translations preserve the name (el-cadmoneo in Spanish) while the Septuagint Hellenizes it as Kedmonaioi. Their singular biblical appearance and uncertain identity underscore how many pre-Israelite populations left only shadowy traces in Scripture. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Kadmonite | es: el-cadmoneo | fr: le-Kadmonite | de: den-Kadmoniter Gen 15:19

קָדְקֹד H6936 N-msc / 3ms (11×)

Crown of the head, the topmost part of the skull, often in blessings and curses

Designates the very top of the head — the spot where blessings descend and afflictions strike. Jacob's blessing pronounces favor on the 'crown of the head' of Joseph, the one set apart among his brothers (Gen 49:26; cf. Deut 33:16). Conversely, Deuteronomy 28:35 warns of boils from sole to crown. The word carries an almost royal overtone: the highest point of the human body becomes a symbol of dignity or vulnerability. Spanish 'coronilla' preserves this diminutive-crown imagery.

crown of the head (11×) The anatomical crown or vertex of the skull, the topmost point of the head. Frequently appears in poetic parallelism with 'head' (ro'sh), especially in blessings where favor rests on the crown (Gen 49:26; Deut 33:16) and in curses where affliction covers from foot to crown (Deut 28:35). Spanish 'coronilla' (little crown) aptly mirrors the Hebrew sense of the head's summit as a site of honor or exposure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-crown-of, and-on-crown-of, and-to-crown-of | es: coronilla, coronilla-de, coronilla-de-él | fr: [וקדקד], [קדקד], crown-de-tête | de: [וקדקד], [קדקד], [קדקדו] Gen 49:26; Deut 28:35; Deut 33:16; Deut 33:20; 2Sam 14:25

קָדַר H6937 V-Hitpael-Perf-3cp (17×)

To grow dark, mourn in gloom, or cause darkness; of skies blackening, persons grieving, or God darkening the heavens

Qadar moves between the literal darkening of skies and the emotional darkness of grief. When Elijah's servant saw the heavens grow black with clouds (1 Kgs 18:45), the same verb described the scene as when Jeremiah walked in gloom under the weight of prophetic sorrow (Jer 8:21). Spanish 'oscurecer' and 'enlutado,' French 'obscurcir' and 'être sombre,' and German 'trauern' all reflect this dual register. In Ezekiel, God himself becomes the agent who darkens sun and stars in judgment — a causative escalation from the basic intransitive sense.

1. to grow dark, be darkened (8×) To become dark or blackened, said of the physical world — the sky clouding over (1 Kgs 18:45, Jer 4:28), heavenly bodies losing light (Joel 2:10, 4:15), skin turning dark (Job 30:28), or turbid waters (Job 6:16). The Qal and Hithpael forms describe an intransitive process. Multilingual glosses consistently use 'darken/oscurecer/obscurcir' for these natural phenomena. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS

en: and-shall-be-dark, and-will-be-dark, darkened | es: Los-que-se-oscurecen, Oscurecido, se-oscurecen | fr: [וקדרו], [קדרו], et-obscurcir | de: [וקדרו], [קדרו], grew-dark 1Kgs 18:45; Job 6:16; Job 30:28; Jer 4:28; Jer 14:2

2. to mourn, be gloomy (6×) To mourn, go about in gloom, or assume the disheveled appearance of a mourner. The darkened face and neglected garments of grief underlie this metaphorical extension (cf. Ps 35:14, 38:6, 42:9, 43:2). Spanish 'enlutado,' French 'être sombre,' and German 'in Trauer' all capture the mourning register. Jeremiah 8:21 poignantly combines emotional and physical darkness. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: I-mourn, and-the-mourners, in-gloom | es: enlutado, estoy-enlutado, y-a-los-enlutados | fr: [קדרתי], et-être-sombre, s'obscurcir | de: [קדרתי], in-gloom, in-mourning Job 5:11; Ps 35:14; Ps 38:6; Ps 42:9; Ps 43:2

3. to cause darkness, darken (3×) To cause darkness, to darken something — the Hiphil causative form. Used exclusively of God's judgment in Ezekiel (31:15, 32:7-8), where the Lord actively darkens the heavens, sun, moon, and stars over Egypt. The shift from intransitive to causative underscores divine sovereignty over light itself. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS

en: I-will-darken-them, and-I-made-dark, and-I-will-darken | es: e-hice-oscurecer, las-oscureceré, y-haré-oscurecer | fr: et-obscurcir, obscurcir | de: [אקדירם], [ואקדר], [והקדרתי] Ezek 31:15; Ezek 32:7; Ezek 32:8

קֵדָר H6938 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (12×)

Kedar — second son of Ishmael; by extension, a powerful nomadic Arabian tribe known for black tents and flocks

Kedar (קֵדָר) names the second son of Ishmael (Gen 25:13; 1 Chr 1:29) and the nomadic Arabian tribe descended from him in the Syrian-Arabian desert. Renowned for their black goat-hair tents, the beloved compares her dark beauty to 'the tents of Kedar' (Song 1:5), while the psalmist laments dwelling among them as hostile exile (Ps 120:5). Isaiah prophesies Kedar's decline (Isa 21:16-17) yet envisions their flocks streaming to Jerusalem (Isa 60:7). Jeremiah records Nebuchadnezzar's campaign against Kedar (Jer 49:28), and Ezekiel names them among Tyre's trading partners (Ezek 27:21).

Kedar (proper noun, son of Ishmael / Arabian tribe) (12×) Ishmael's second son (Gen 25:13; 1 Chr 1:29) and the nomadic Arabian tribe descended from him. Known for black goat-hair tents (Song 1:5; Ps 120:5). Isaiah announces Kedar's decline (Isa 21:16-17) yet envisions their flocks serving Jerusalem (Isa 60:7). Jeremiah records Nebuchadnezzar's campaign against them (Jer 49:28); Ezekiel names them among Tyre's traders (Ezek 27:21). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kedar, Qedar, and-Kedar | es: Cedar, Kedar, Qedar | fr: Kédar, [וקדר], de-Kédar, | de: Kedar, Qedar, [וקדר] Gen 25:13; 1Chr 1:29; Ps 120:5; Song 1:5; Isa 21:16

קִדְרוֹן H6939 N-proper-fs (11×)

Kidron, the valley-wadi east of Jerusalem, used for disposing of idolatrous objects

Names the deep valley running between Jerusalem's eastern wall and the Mount of Olives, through which a seasonal brook flows. David crossed the Kidron weeping as he fled Absalom (2 Sam 15:23), and Solomon warned Shimei that crossing it meant death (1 Kgs 2:37). Reforming kings repeatedly burned idols and cult objects there (1 Kgs 15:13; 2 Kgs 23:4), making the Kidron a recurring boundary between the holy city and its rejected impurities.

(11×) The proper name of the wadi (seasonal stream valley) east of Jerusalem, between the Temple Mount and the Mount of Olives. It serves as a geographical and symbolic boundary — David crosses it fleeing Absalom (2 Sam 15:23), Solomon sets it as a death-line for Shimei (1 Kgs 2:37), and reformers burn idolatrous items there (1 Kgs 15:13; 2 Kgs 23:4, 6). Spanish renders it 'Cedrón' or 'Kidrón,' both reflecting the Hebrew consonants. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kidron, Qidron | es: Cedrón, Kidrón, Qidron | fr: Cédron, Kidron, [קדרון] | de: Kidron, [קדרון] 2Sam 15:23; 1Kgs 2:37; 1Kgs 15:13; 2Kgs 23:4; 2Kgs 23:6

קְדֵרוּת H6940 N-fs (1×)

darkness, gloom, or blackness

A poetic noun denoting deep darkness or gloom. Isaiah 50:3 uses it in a striking image of cosmic mourning: 'I clothe the heavens with blackness and make sackcloth their covering.' The word appears only here, though it derives from a verb meaning 'to be dark' or 'to mourn' (since mourning involved wearing dark garments). The parallel with sackcloth reinforces the funereal connotations—darkness as a sign of divine judgment or lamentation.

(1×) Blackness or deep gloom, used metaphorically for the heavens' mourning garb in Isaiah's Servant Song. The image of God clothing the sky in darkness evokes cosmic upheaval and divine displeasure, similar to prophetic descriptions of the Day of the Lord. Some translations leave the Hebrew untransliterated, acknowledging its rarity, while Spanish (negrura, blackness) captures the visual intensity. The darkness here is not merely absence of light but active mourning dress, personifying creation's participation in judgment. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: in-blackness | es: de-negrura | fr: [קדרות] | de: [קדרות] Isa 50:3

קְדַרְנִית H6941 Adv (1×)

mournfully, in the manner of mourners, with lamentation

This rare adverb describes behavior characteristic of those in mourning. Malachi 3:14 records the people's complaint: they have walked 'mournfully' before the LORD and gained nothing. The term evokes outward displays of penitence—perhaps wearing dark clothing, fasting, or exhibiting sorrowful demeanor—without corresponding inner transformation. The prophet's context suggests their mourning was performative rather than genuine, ritual without righteousness.

(1×) An adverb meaning 'in a mourning manner' or 'like mourners,' describing outward religious behavior in Malachi's confrontation with post-exilic Judah. The people claimed to have walked before God with appropriate penitential demeanor, yet Malachi challenges whether their hearts matched their somber appearance. Some translations leave the Hebrew form untransliterated, but Spanish (de luto, in mourning) and French (sombre, somber) grasp the funereal affect being critiqued—empty formalism dressed as devotion. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: mournfully | es: de-luto | fr: sombre | de: [קדרנית] Mal 3:14

קָדַשׁ H6942 Prep-l / V-Hitpael-Inf (173×)

To be holy, sanctify, consecrate, set apart as sacred; declare or make holy across Qal, Piel, Hifil, Hitpael, Niphal, Pual stems

A foundational verb for the biblical concept of holiness, spanning every major Hebrew stem to express the full range of becoming, making, and being declared sacred. In the Piel, God sanctifies the Sabbath (Gen 2:3) and Israel consecrates priests and altars. The Hitpael calls individuals to purify themselves before divine encounter, while the Niphal reveals God proving Himself holy among the nations. Arabic qaddasa and Swahili -takasa reflect the same Semitic root, underscoring the ancient and cross-cultural weight of setting apart for the divine.

1. sanctify, consecrate (Piel factitive) (76×) The Piel factitive is the workhorse of biblical consecration: an agent actively makes someone or something holy. God sanctifies the seventh day (Gen 2:3), Moses consecrates the people (Exod 19:14), and Israel is commanded to hallow the Sabbath (Exod 20:8). Arabic qaddasa (Form II intensive) and Spanish santificar both capture this declarative-causative force. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS

en: and-consecrated, and-he-consecrated, and-sanctified | es: Santificad, Y-santificarás, Y-santificó | fr: et-consacra, et-il-consacra, et-sanctifia | de: heiligte, und-du-soll-weihen, und-du-sollst-weihen Gen 2:3; Exod 19:14; Exod 20:8; Exod 20:11; Exod 28:3

2. dedicate, set apart (Hifil causative) (44×) The Hifil causative emphasizes the act of devoting persons, spoils, or objects to God's exclusive service. Leviticus uses it for offerings brought near (Lev 22:2-3), and Chronicles records temple dedications. Spanish consagrar and French dédier distinguish this dedicatory nuance from the broader Piel sanctification. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS
en: I-consecrated, I-have-consecrated, dedicated | es: consagró, el-que-consagraba, el-que-santifica | fr: dédia, il-dédia, il-sanctifies | de: dedicated, der-eins-sanctifying, er-dedicated Exod 28:38; Lev 22:2; Lev 22:3; Lev 27:14; Lev 27:15

3. sanctify/purify oneself (Hitpael reflexive) (24×) The Hitpael reflexive places the burden of consecration on the subject: 'sanctify yourselves' (Lev 11:44, Josh 3:5). Preparation for theophany at Sinai (Exod 19:22) and entry into Canaan both demand self-purification. French consacrez-vous-mêmes and Spanish santificaos vividly render this reflexive call to personal holiness before encounter with the divine. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS
en: and-I-will-sanctify-myself, and-consecrate-yourselves, and-sanctified-themselves | es: Los-que-se-santifican, Y-santificaos, Y-se-santificaron | fr: consacrer-vous-mêmes, et-consacrer-vous-mêmes, et-sanctifier | de: heiligen, heiligen-euch-selbst, sanctify-euch-selbst Exod 19:22; Lev 11:44; Lev 20:7; Num 11:18; Josh 3:5

4. be/become holy (Qal stative) (12×) The Qal stative describes the inherent condition of being or becoming holy — not an act performed, but a state attained. Contact with the altar makes things holy (Exod 29:37, 30:29), and God's own presence consecrates the tabernacle (Exod 29:43). Swahili -takatifu and Korean 거룩해지다 both capture this resultant stative condition. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: I-am-holier-than-you, and-it-shall-be-consecrated, and-shall-be-consecrated | es: fueron-santificados, se-consagre, será-santificado | fr: –être-saint, cela-fera-être-sanctifia, devra-become-saint | de: es-wird-sein-sanctified, heiligen, heiligte Exod 29:21; Exod 29:37; Exod 29:43; Exod 30:29; Lev 6:18

5. be shown/proved holy (Niphal) (10×) The Niphal passive-reflexive describes God being shown holy or vindicated as holy among His people and the nations. In Lev 10:3 God declares 'I will be sanctified,' and Ezekiel repeatedly uses this form for eschatological vindication (Ezek 20:41, 36:23). Arabic yataqaddasu (Form V reflexive) parallels the sense of holiness being publicly manifested. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS
en: I-will-be-sanctified, and-I-am-sanctified, and-I-shall-be-sanctified | es: al-santificarme, se-mostrará-santo, seré-santificado | fr: et-il-était-sanctifia, et-je-devra-être-sanctifia, et-sanctifier | de: heiligen, ich-wird-sein-heiligte, und-er-war-heiligte Lev 10:3; Lev 22:32; Num 20:13; Isa 5:16; Ezek 20:41

6. be consecrated (Pual passive) (5×) The Pual passive describes the resultant state of having been consecrated by another's action. Isaiah's 'consecrated ones' (Isa 13:3) and the priests who kept themselves set apart (2 Chr 26:18, Ezek 48:11) illustrate objects or persons bearing the mark of prior sanctification. Arabic muqaddas (passive participle) precisely mirrors this grammatical and semantic profile. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS
en: my-consecrated-ones, the-consecrated, the-ones-consecrated | es: a-mis-consagrados, las-consagradas, las-santificadas | fr: le-sanctuaire, sanctifier, à-mon-sanctuaire | de: das-Heiligtum, heiligen, heiligte 2Chr 26:18; 2Chr 31:6; Ezra 3:5; Isa 13:3; Ezek 48:11

7. holy things, sanctuaries (nominal) (2×) Occasionally the verbal root functions nominally to denote holy things or sanctuaries, as in 2 Chr 15:18 (dedicated items brought into the temple) and Ezek 7:24 (sanctuaries profaned by invaders). This nominal use is rare but contextually clear, bridging between the verb and the related noun qodesh. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS
en: and-his-holy-things, sanctuaries-of-them | es: santuarios-de-ellos, y-cosas-santas-suyas | fr: et-sanctifier, sanctifier | de: heiligen, und-heiligen 2Chr 15:18; Ezek 7:24

קֶדֶשׁ H6943 N-proper-fs (12×)

Kedesh — city of refuge in Naphtali; also cities in Issachar and southern Judah; name means 'sanctuary'

Kedesh (קֶדֶשׁ), meaning 'sanctuary,' names up to three Israelite cities. The most prominent is Kedesh in Naphtali, a conquered Canaanite city (Josh 12:22) designated as a city of refuge (Josh 20:7) and Gershonite Levitical city (Josh 21:32; 1 Chr 6:61). Barak son of Abinoam was from Kedesh, where Deborah summoned him to fight Sisera (Judg 4:6, 9-10). Tiglath-pileser III captured it during the Assyrian conquest of Galilee (2 Kgs 15:29). A second Kedesh in Issachar (1 Chr 6:57) and a third in southern Judah (Josh 15:23) share the name.

Kedesh (proper name, Canaanite city) (12×) A city name meaning 'sanctuary,' primarily Kedesh in Naphtali – a city of refuge (Josh 20:7) and Gershonite Levitical city (Josh 21:32). Home of Barak, where Deborah summoned him against Sisera (Judg 4:6, 9-10). Captured by Tiglath-pileser III (2 Kgs 15:29). Also a city in Issachar (1 Chr 6:57) and southern Judah (Josh 15:23). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kedesh, Qedesh, and-Kedesh | es: Cedes, Kedesh, Quedes | fr: Kedesh, Qedesh, [קֶדֶשׁ] | de: Heiligkeit, Kedesh, Qedesh Josh 12:22; Josh 15:23; Josh 19:37; Josh 20:7; Josh 21:32

קֹדֶשׁ H6944 Prep-l (467×)

holiness, sacredness, sanctuary, holy thing; the state of being set apart for God or the consecrated place, object, or offering

The noun qodesh anchors the entire biblical vocabulary of the sacred. Built on the root idea of separation or cutting off, it names both the abstract quality of holiness and every concrete thing touched by that quality — from the burning ground before Moses to the innermost chamber of the temple. In the superlative construct qodesh qodashim ('holy of holies'), Hebrew grammar itself intensifies to mark the boundary between the approachable and the unapproachable. Arabic maqdis, Swahili patakatifu, and cognates across Semitic languages confirm that the spatial and qualitative senses were never truly separate: to be holy is to be set apart, and the holy place is where that apartness is most tangible.

1. sanctuary, holy place (129×) A sanctuary or holy place — the sacred location set apart for worship, especially the tabernacle's inner chamber or the temple. Arabic maqdis and Swahili pa-takatifu (locative noun class) confirm the spatial reading. Exodus 26:33 (the veil shall separate the holy place from the most holy) and Exodus 28:29 (Aaron shall bear the names when he goes into the holy place) define the sanctuary as the spatial locus of divine encounter. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: the-holy, the-holy-things | es: el-Santo, el-santuario, lo-santo | fr: le-saint, le-saint-choses | de: der-heilig, der-heilige-Dinge Exod 26:33; Exod 28:29; Exod 28:35; Exod 30:13; Exod 30:24

2. holiness, sacredness (abstract quality) (123×) The abstract quality of holiness, sacredness, or consecration — the divine attribute itself or the state of being set apart. Multilingual glosses converge on abstract nouns: Spanish santidad, French sainteté, German Heiligkeit. Exodus 3:5 (the ground on which you stand is holy) and Exodus 15:11 (majestic in holiness) show holiness as both a predicated quality of places and an intrinsic attribute of God. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: a-holy-thing, holy | es: santidad, santidad-de, santo | fr: saint, une-chose-sainte | de: ein-heilig-Sache, heilig Exod 3:5; Exod 12:16; Exod 29:33; Exod 29:34; Exod 30:32

3. holy things, sacred offerings (plural) (86×) Holy things or sacred offerings in the plural — consecrated items, contributions, or dedicated objects viewed collectively. Arabic aqdas (broken plural) and Swahili vi-takatifu (plural thing class) confirm the concrete plural. Exodus 29:37 (whatever touches the altar shall become most holy) and Leviticus 22:15 (they shall not profane the holy things) treat these as a category of objects requiring special handling. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: holinesses, of-holies, of-holy-things | es: las-cosas-santas, los-santos, santidades | fr: de-saint-choses, de-saintetés, le-saint-choses | de: Allerheiligste, der-Allerheiligste, der-heilige-Dinge Exod 29:37; Exod 30:10; Exod 30:29; Exod 30:36; Exod 40:10

4. holiness (with possessive pronoun) (77×) Holiness with a possessive pronoun — his holiness, my holiness, your holiness — expressing the divine or human quality of consecrated apartness as a possessed attribute. Spanish su-santidad, French sa-sainteté, and German sein-Heiligkeit all preserve the possessive structure. Psalm 89:35 (once for all I have sworn by my holiness) and Leviticus 20:3 (to profane my holy name) show God's holiness as something personally staked and jealously guarded. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: His-holiness, his-holiness, holiness-my | es: mi-santidad, santidad-de-el, su-santidad | fr: sa-sainteté, sainteté | de: Heiligkeit, sein-Heiligkeit Lev 20:3; Lev 22:2; Ps 3:4; Ps 5:7; Ps 11:4

5. holy thing, sacred offering (28×) A concrete holy thing or sacred offering in the singular — an individual consecrated item, dedicated object, or firstfruit. Arabic muqaddas and Swahili ki-takatifu (thing class) confirm the concrete singular. Exodus 29:6 (the holy crown) and Exodus 29:29 (the holy garments) designate specific manufactured objects that have crossed from the common realm into the sacred through anointing or dedication. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: a-holy-thing, holiness, holy-thing | es: Santo, cosa-santa, el-santuario | fr: le-sainteté, saint-chose, sainteté | de: das-Heilige, das-Heiligtum, die-Heiligkeit Exod 15:11; Exod 29:6; Exod 29:29; Exod 31:10; Exod 35:19

6. holy of holies, most holy (24×) The superlative construct qodesh qodashim — 'holy of holies' or 'most holy' — designating either the innermost sanctuary or items of the highest consecration. This Hebrew grammatical pattern (noun + plural of same noun) creates an absolute superlative found nowhere else in the language with such frequency. Exodus 26:33 (the veil between the holy place and the most holy) and Exodus 30:29 (they shall be most holy) mark the apex of the sacred hierarchy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: holiest-of, holiness-of, holiness-of- | es: Santo-de, santidad-de, santidad-de- | fr: holiest-de, il-a-sanctifié, saint-de | de: Heiligkeit, heilig-von, holiest-von Exod 26:33; Exod 29:37; Exod 30:10; Exod 30:29; Exod 30:36

קָדֵשׁ H6945 Art / Adj-mp (6×)
Male cult prostitute; a man engaged in ritual sexual practices at pagan shrines, condemned in Deuteronomic law.
Denotes a male cult prostitute — a man dedicated to ritual sexual practices at Canaanite or syncretistic shrines. The word is consistently condemned in the Deuteronomic history: the law forbids any Israelite from becoming a qadesh (Deut 23:17), and the reforming kings are praised for removing them from the land (1 Kgs 15:12; 22:46; 2 Kgs 23:7). Rehoboam's reign, by contrast, is marked by the presence of qedeshim in the land (1 Kgs 14:24). Job 36:14 warns that the godless die 'among the qedeshim,' suggesting an ignoble end.

cult prostitute (male) (6×) A male cult prostitute or temple functionary associated with pagan ritual sexual practices. Spanish 'prostitutos cultuales' and 'sodomita' reflect the dual registers of scholarly precision and traditional rendering. The term appears in the Deuteronomic prohibition (Deut 23:17, 'there shall be no qadesh among the sons of Israel'), and the Deuteronomistic historian uses it as a barometer of apostasy: Rehoboam allowed qedeshim in the land (1 Kgs 14:24), Asa removed them (1 Kgs 15:12), Jehoshaphat expelled the remnant (1 Kgs 22:46), and Josiah tore down their quarters beside the temple (2 Kgs 23:7). In Job 36:14, Elihu warns that the godless 'die among the qedeshim,' suggesting a shameful, premature death. SEXUAL IMMORALITY
en: among-the-cult-prostitutes, cult-prostitute, the-cult-prostitute | es: el-sodomita, entre-los-prostitutos, los-prostitutos-cultuales | fr: cult-prostitute, le-cult-prostitute, le-cult-prostitutes | de: [בקדשים], cult-prostitute, der-cult-prostitute Deut 23:17; 1Kgs 14:24; 1Kgs 15:12; 1Kgs 22:46; 2Kgs 23:7

קָדֵשׁ H6946 N-proper-fs (18×)
Kadesh — a sacred wilderness site in the Negev where Israel encamped during the exodus wanderings Meaning 'sacred' or 'holy place,' Kadesh (also called Kadesh-barnea) was a major stopping point in Israel's wilderness journeys, situated in the wilderness of Zin near the border of Edom. It served as the base from which the twelve spies were sent into Canaan (Num 13:26) and where Miriam died and Moses struck the rock at Meribah (Num 20:1–13). The site appears across the Pentateuch, in Judges, Psalms, and Ezekiel's ideal boundary descriptions. German translations sometimes render the meaning directly as 'Heiligkeit' (holiness), reflecting the etymological sense.

Kadesh (place name) (18×) The place name Kadesh, a wilderness oasis in the Negev marking the southern boundary of Canaan. Israel encamped here during the exodus, and pivotal events occurred at this site: the sending of the spies (Num 13:26), the rebellion at Meribah (Num 20:1–13), and failed negotiations with Edom (Num 20:14–16). Ezekiel uses it to demarcate the ideal future boundary (Ezek 47:19; 48:28). Psalm 29:8 speaks of the wilderness of Kadesh shaking at God's voice. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kadesh, Qadesh, from-Kadesh | es: Cades, Kades, Qadesh | fr: Kadesh, Kadès, dans-Kadesh | de: Heiligkeit, Kadesch, in-Kadesch Gen 14:7; Gen 16:14; Gen 20:1; Num 13:26; Num 20:1

קָדֵשׁ H6947 Prep / N-proper-fs (10×)
Kadesh-barnea; an important oasis and encampment in the wilderness south of Canaan, pivotal in Israel's wandering narratives.
Kadesh-barnea was the most significant stopping point during Israel's forty years in the wilderness, serving as both a staging ground for the failed attempt to enter Canaan and a long-term encampment. From here the twelve spies were sent out (Num 13:26), and here Israel remained 'many days' after God's judgment (Deut 1:46). It figures prominently in the boundary descriptions of the Promised Land (Num 34:4; Josh 15:3) and marks the distance from Horeb—eleven days' journey (Deut 1:2). The thirty-eight years between Kadesh-barnea and crossing the Zered defined a generation's wandering (Deut 2:14).

from Kadesh Barnea (10×) Kadesh-barnea, a major oasis and wilderness encampment in the northeastern Sinai or southern Negev, near the border of Edom. It served as the base from which the twelve spies departed (Num 13:26; 32:8) and where Israel encamped for an extended period after the failed invasion (Deut 1:46). It appears in southern boundary descriptions of the land (Num 34:4; Deut 1:2, 19; Josh 15:3) and marks a temporal milestone—thirty-eight years from Kadesh-barnea to the Zered crossing (Deut 2:14). Spanish Cadés-Barnea, French Kadesh-Barnea, and German Kadesch-Barnea all preserve both elements of this compound place name. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kadesh-Barnea, from-Kadesh-Barnea, from-Kadesh-barnea | es: Cadés-Barnea, a-Cades-Barnea, desde-Cades-Barnea | fr: Kadesh-Barnea, dans-Kadès-Barnea, de-Kadesh-Barnea | de: Kadesch-Barnea, in-Kadesch-Barnea, von-Kadesch-Barnea Num 32:8; Num 34:4; Deut 1:2; Deut 1:19; Deut 2:14

קָדֵשׁ H6948 Art / Adj-fp (5×)
cult prostitute (female); a woman devoted to ritual sexual practices at a shrine
The feminine form of a noun designating a person consecrated to cultic sexual rites at a pagan shrine. In Genesis 38:21-22 Tamar is mistaken for a cult prostitute by the roadside, and Deuteronomy 23:17 prohibits Israelite daughters from becoming one. Hosea 4:14 condemns the men who consort with cult prostitutes. The root connection to 'holy' (qadash) reveals the disturbing irony: what Canaanite religion called 'set apart' for a deity, Israelite law condemned as abomination. Spanish 'prostituta del templo' and 'prostitutas sagradas' capture both the cultic and sexual dimensions.

(5×) A female cult prostitute associated with Canaanite shrine worship, distinguished from ordinary harlotry by its religious setting. In Gen 38:21-22 the locals ask about 'the cult prostitute' by the road, using the term as a recognized social role. Deut 23:17 explicitly forbids Israelite women from serving in this capacity. Hosea 4:14 links the practice to sacrificial rites. Spanish 'prostituta del templo' and 'prostitutas sagradas' reveal how translators wrestle with the paradox of the root meaning 'holy' applied to sexual service. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: a-cult-prostitute, cult-prostitute, the-cult-prostitute | es: la-prostituta-del-templo, las-prostitutas-sagradas, prostituta-del-templo | fr: le-cult-prostitute, prostitué-sacré, prostituée | de: [הקדשות], cult-prostitute, die-Geweihte Gen 38:21; Gen 38:22; Deut 23:17; Hos 4:14

קָהָה H6949 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (4×)

be blunt, dull (of metal); be set on edge (of teeth)

A verb with two applications: metal becoming dull or blunt, and teeth being 'set on edge' (the unpleasant tingling sensation from eating sour food). Ecclesiastes 10:10 uses it of a blunt iron tool that requires more effort. Jeremiah 31:29-30 and Ezekiel 18:2 cite the proverb 'the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge'—which both prophets explicitly reject, teaching individual rather than generational responsibility for sin.

(4×) Ecclesiastes 10:10 warns that 'if the iron is blunt (קֳהָה) and one does not sharpen it, he must use more strength.' Jeremiah 31:29 and 31:30 quote (then refute) the proverb about fathers eating sour grapes and children's teeth being 'set on edge' (תְּקֻהֶינָה). Ezekiel 18:2 quotes the same proverb before refuting it. Spanish embotarse (become dull) and dentera (teeth set on edge) capture both the literal (dull blade) and figurative (unpleasant sensation) uses. DEAF AND MUTE

en: are-set-on-edge, is-dull, will-be-set-on-edge | es: se-embota, tendrán-dentera, tienen-dentera | fr: [תקהינה], émousser, קהה | de: [קהה], [תקהינה] Eccl 10:10; Jer 31:29; Jer 31:30; Ezek 18:2

קָהַל H6950 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (40×)

To assemble, gather together — in Hifil causing others to convene; in Nifal, gathering as a body.

A denominative verb from qahal ('assembly, congregation'), this word expresses the act of forming a gathered community — whether summoned by a leader or self-assembling. The Hifil stem (causative) depicts Moses assembling Israel at Sinai (Exod 35:1), Aaron convening the congregation (Num 8:9), and kings mustering troops. The Nifal (reflexive-passive) shows the people gathering of their own accord, sometimes for worship (Josh 18:1), sometimes in rebellion (Num 16:3; 20:2). Spanish 'congregar/congregaron' and French 'assembler' both capture the communal, purposeful nature of this gathering — it is not casual movement but the formation of a qahal, a covenantal assembly.

1. assemble transitively, convene (Hifil) (20×) Hifil (causative): to summon or convene an assembly — a leader actively gathers the people. Moses assembles all Israel (Exod 35:1; Num 1:18), Aaron convenes the congregation before the tabernacle (Lev 8:3; Num 8:9), and Solomon gathers elders for the temple dedication. Spanish 'Y-reunió' and French 'assembler' consistently mark the transitive agent. The trumpet signals in Num 10:7 distinguish between alarm blasts and assembly calls, showing this is a technical term for authorized convocation. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: And-assembled, and-assemble, and-assembled | es: Y-al-congregar, Y-reunieron, Y-reunió | fr: assembler, assembler-, et-assembla | de: [והקהלת], [ויקהל], [יקהיל] Exod 35:1; Lev 8:3; Num 1:18; Num 8:9; Num 10:7

2. assemble intransitively (Nifal) (20×) Nifal (reflexive/passive): to gather together, assemble as a body — the people come together without explicit summoning or in response to a crisis. In Exod 32:1 the people gather against Aaron demanding gods, and in Num 16:3 Korah's company assembles against Moses. But the same form appears positively at Josh 18:1 where all Israel assembles at Shiloh. Spanish 'se-congregaron' (reflexive) and French bracketed forms capture the spontaneous or self-directed quality that distinguishes this from the Hifil's commanded assembly. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: (and-gathered), And-assembled, [and-gathered] | es: (y-se-congregaron), Se-congregaron, Y-se-congregaron | fr: (and-gathered), [and-gathered], [ויקהל] | de: [and-gathered], [הנקהלים], [ויקהל] Exod 32:1; Lev 8:4; Num 16:3; Num 16:42; Num 20:2

קָהָל H6951 Prep-b (123×)

Assembly, congregation, or gathered company; the convoked community of Israel or any large assembled group.

Drawn from the root q-h-l ('to assemble'), this noun carries the weight of communal identity in ancient Israel. It is the assembly summoned for worship, law, and war – the congregation that hears the Torah read aloud (Deut 31:30) and stands before Yahweh at Sinai. French assemblee and German Versammlung consistently mark the formal, convoked character of this gathering. In prophetic contexts (Jer 50:9; Ezek 17:17; 38:4), the word broadens to describe hostile confederacies of nations massed for invasion, where Spanish asamblea de and Korean clusters confirm a 'multitude, host' nuance distinct from the sacred assembly.

1. assembly or congregation (118×) The formally convoked assembly or congregation, especially the gathered community of Israel for religious worship, legal proceedings, or civic decision-making (Lev 4:13-14; Deut 23:2-9; Neh 8:2). French assemblee and German Versammlung consistently render the organized, purposeful gathering. The 'congregation of Yahweh' (Num 16:3; 20:4) underscores its covenantal, sacral character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-assembly | es: La-asamblea, la-asamblea, la-congregación | fr: assemblée, le-assemblée | de: Versammlung, der-Versammlung, der-assembly Exod 16:3; Lev 4:13; Lev 4:14; Lev 4:21; Lev 16:33

2. crowd or multitude (5×) A crowd, company, or hostile multitude gathered without specifically religious connotations – confederate armies, invading hordes, or assembled nations. Ezekiel favors this sense for Gog's coalition (Ezek 38:4, 15) and foreign hosts (Ezek 23:24; 26:7). Spanish asamblea de naciones and German eine Versammlung signal the military or political, rather than liturgical, nature of the gathering. Genesis 35:11's 'assembly of nations' promised to Jacob also fits here. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-assembly-of-, and-assembly, and-assembly-of | es: asamblea-de, ni-con-asamblea, y-asamblea | fr: assemblée, et-assemblée, et-assemblée-de | de: Versammlung, und-Versammlung, und-eine-Versammlung Gen 35:11; Jer 50:9; Ezek 17:17; Ezek 23:24; Ezek 26:7

קְהִלָּה H6952 N-fsc (2×)

assembly, congregation; a formal gathering, especially of Israel as covenant community

This term denotes a formal assembly or congregation, closely related to the more common qahal. It appears in Moses' blessing and Nehemiah's confrontation with nobles. The Deuteronomy passage calls Torah 'the inheritance of the assembly of Jacob,' while Nehemiah 'set a great assembly against' the oppressors. The word emphasizes the collective, organized nature of Israel's gathering as covenant people. Though rare, it parallels the standard qahal, suggesting either variant spelling, poetic form, or Aramaic-influenced usage in post-exilic Hebrew.

(2×) Deuteronomy 33:4 uses the construct 'assembly of Jacob' (qehillat Ya'aqov) identifying Torah's inheritors, while Nehemiah 5:7 employs 'I set a great assembly' describing public confrontation. Spanish 'congregación/asamblea,' French 'assemblée,' German 'Versammlung' all point to organized gathering. The Deuteronomy context is covenantal-legal: Moses declares Torah belongs to Jacob's corporate body, not just individuals. The Nehemiah usage is civic-judicial: calling a formal assembly to address economic exploitation. Both emphasize the legitimate, authoritative nature of Israel's collective gathering, whether for covenant reception or justice administration. This is structured communal assembly, not informal crowd. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: assembly, of-assembly-of | es: asamblea, la-congregación-de | fr: [קהלה], de-assemblée-de | de: [קהלה], von-Versammlung-von Deut 33:4; Neh 5:7

קֹהֶלֶת H6953 Art / N-ms (7×)

Qohelet — 'the Preacher' or 'the Assembler'; title of the author-speaker in Ecclesiastes

A title meaning 'one who assembles' or 'one who convenes,' traditionally rendered 'the Preacher' (following Jerome's concionator and the Greek Ekklesiastes). The feminine morphology likely indicates an office or function rather than gender — comparable to Arabic khalifa ('caliph'). Used exclusively in Ecclesiastes (1:1, 2, 12; 7:27; 12:8, 9, 10) to identify the book's speaker, who is presented as a royal sage in Jerusalem. Whether the emphasis falls on assembling people (a convener) or assembling wisdom sayings (a collector) has been debated since antiquity.

(7×) Qohelet — a functional title designating the speaker of the book of Ecclesiastes, meaning either 'one who convenes an assembly' or 'one who collects (wisdom sayings).' The Greek translation Ekklesiastes and Jerome's concionator both favor the 'preacher/convener' reading, while the Hebrew root qahal ('to assemble') and the reference to 'collected proverbs' in Eccl 12:9-11 support the 'collector' sense. The feminine form likely denotes office rather than gender (cf. sophereth, Ezra 2:55). Appears in Eccl 1:1, 2, 12; 7:27; 12:8, 9, 10. French 'assemblée' and Spanish 'Qohélet' reflect the two translation strategies — functional rendering versus transliteration. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: Qohelet, the-Preacher | es: Qohélet, el-Qohélet | fr: assemblée, le-assemblée | de: Prediger, [הקוהלת] Eccl 1:1; Eccl 1:2; Eccl 1:12; Eccl 7:27; Eccl 12:8

קְהֶלָתָה H6954 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Kehelathah; a wilderness station during Israel's exodus journey from Egypt to Canaan

This place name marks one of Israel's encampments during wilderness wanderings, listed in Numbers' detailed itinerary. The name possibly derives from 'assembly,' suggesting a gathering-place significance. The Septuagint rendering Makellath shows textual uncertainty about the precise form. Both occurrences note arrival at and departure from this station, typical of the wilderness itinerary's formulaic style. The site's location remains unknown, placed somewhere between Sinai and the wilderness of Paran in Israel's northward progression toward Canaan.

(2×) Numbers 33:22-23 employs the standard itinerary formula: 'they camped in/at Kehelathah' and 'they set out from Kehelathah.' Spanish uses 'en/de Quehelata' (in/from), French 'dans/de Kehelathah,' German 'in/von Kehelathah,' all preserving the directional prepositions that mark arrival and departure. This is purely geographical-itinerary usage, providing no narrative detail beyond movement sequence. The name appears only in this P source itinerary list, absent from narrative accounts of wilderness travels. Like many wilderness stations, it functioned as temporary camping site during the 40-year journey, remembered in later tradition but unlocated by modern geography. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Kehelathah, in-Kehelathah | es: de-Quehelata, en-Quehelata | fr: dans-Kehelathah, de-Kehelathah | de: in-Kehelathah, von-Kehelathah Num 33:22; Num 33:23

קְהָת H6955 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (32×)

Kohath — second son of Levi, ancestor of the Kohathite Levitical clan charged with carrying sacred furnishings

Qehat is the proper name of the second son of Levi and grandfather of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, appearing 32 times in genealogies and Levitical organizational lists. The Kohathites held the most prestigious — and most dangerous — Levitical assignment: carrying the ark, the table, the lampstand, the altars, and the sacred vessels of the tabernacle (Num 4:4-15). They were forbidden from touching or even looking at the holy objects uncovered, on pain of death (Num 4:15, 20). The genealogical notices trace the line Levi to Kohath to Amram to Moses and Aaron (Exod 6:16-20), making the Kohathites the priestly subclan par excellence. In Chronicles, the Kohathites receive thirteen cities from the tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin (Josh 21:4-5; 1 Chr 6:54-61). The Septuagint renders it Kaath, and modern translations preserve the name virtually unchanged.

Kohath (proper name) (32×) The proper name of Levi's second son and eponymous ancestor of the Kohathite clan. Genealogies trace the line from Kohath through Amram to Moses and Aaron (Exod 6:16-20; Num 3:17-19). The Kohathites bore the holiest tabernacle furnishings — the ark, altars, lampstand — under strict prohibitions against touching or viewing them uncovered (Num 4:4-20). Census and city-assignment lists appear in Numbers 3-4, 26:57-58, Joshua 21:4-5, and 1 Chronicles 6. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kehat, Kohath, Qehat | es: Coat, Kehat, Quehat | fr: Kehat, Kehath, Kohath | de: Kehat, Kohath Gen 46:11; Exod 6:16; Exod 6:18; Num 3:17

קְהָתִי H6956 Art / N-proper-ms (15×)

Kohathite — gentilic noun for a descendant of Kohath, second son of Levi, one of three Levitical clans

Derived from the personal name Kohath (קְהָת), this gentilic adjective identifies members of one of the three major Levitical clans. The Kohathites held the most sacred responsibility among the Levites: carrying the ark and the holy vessels during Israel's wilderness journeys (Num 4:4-15). Their elevated role made proximity to the tabernacle both a privilege and a peril, as the famous warning in Numbers 4:18-20 attests. Spanish renders it 'coatita/quehatita,' while English consistently uses 'Kohathite(s).'

Kohathite (gentilic noun) (15×) A descendant or clan-member of Kohath son of Levi, used with the article as a collective noun for the entire clan. Appears in census lists (Num 26:57), service assignments (Num 4:34-37), and later Levitical genealogies (1 Chr 6:18; 2 Chr 29:12). The Kohathites were tasked with transporting the most holy objects, placing them at the center of Israel's cultic life. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Kohathite, the-Kohathites, the-Qehatim | es: el-coatita, el-quehatita, los-coatitas | fr: [הקהתי], [הקהתים], le-Kehathites | de: [הקהתי], [הקהתים], der-Kehatiter Num 3:27; Num 3:30; Num 4:18; Num 4:34; Num 4:37

H6957 N-msc (3×)

line, measuring line; cord used for measurement, particularly in construction or surveying

This noun refers to a measuring line or cord—a tool for determining dimensions. First Kings 7:23 twice mentions the line used to measure the circumference of the bronze Sea in Solomon's temple: 'a line of thirty cubits encircled it.' Jeremiah 31:39 prophesies that a measuring line will go out over Jerusalem in its future restoration. The word appears in construction and prophetic contexts, representing both practical measurement and symbolic acts of building or restoring. Some occurrences have textual notes (Ketiv-Qere variations), reflected in bracketed glosses.

(3×) Two contexts appear: temple construction (1 Kings, measuring the bronze basin) and prophetic restoration (Jeremiah, measuring restored Jerusalem). The repetition in 1 Kings 7:23 emphasizes precise dimensions—the line measured circumference. Jeremiah's measuring line symbolizes rebuilding and expansion. The parenthetical and bracketed forms in translations suggest textual variants or morphological notes on the construct state ('line of') vs. absolute form. The basic meaning is a cord or rope used for taking measurements. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-line], and-line-of, measuring-line | es: (cordel-de), (y-línea), [y-línea] | fr: [(קו)], [and-line], et-ligne-de | de: [(קו)], [and-line] 1Kgs 7:23; Jer 31:39

קָו H6957a N-ms (8×)

Line, measuring line; in Isaiah 28 a mocking repetition ('line upon line') mimicking prophetic instruction.

A noun meaning 'line' or 'measuring line,' this form appears exclusively in Isaiah 28:10 and 28:13 in the repeated phrase qav laqav, 'line upon line.' The phrase captures the mocking tone of scoffers who ridicule Isaiah's prophetic teaching as tedious, repetitive instruction fit for children. Whether the syllables are genuine Hebrew or deliberately garbled nonsense remains debated, but the multilingual evidence (English 'line/upon-line,' Spanish 'regla/sobre-regla,' French 'cordeau,' German 'Richtschnur') consistently reflects the idea of a measuring standard or rule applied incrementally.

upon line (8×) A measuring line or rule, appearing in the repeated formula qav laqav ('line upon line') in Isaiah 28:10, 13. The phrase mimics or parodies Isaiah's prophetic instruction, portraying it as tediously repetitive. The multilingual glosses uniformly point to a standard of measurement or a builder's cord, suggesting the underlying image is of careful, incremental construction of teaching, which the drunkards of Ephraim find patronizing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: line, upon-line | es: regla, sobre-regla | fr: cordeau | de: Linie, zur-Richtschnur Isa 28:10; Isa 28:13

קָו H6957b Prep-l / N-ms (10×)

A line or measuring cord; used literally for construction and surveying, and figuratively for divine judgment or creation.

Refers to a cord or line stretched for measurement, whether in building, boundary-marking, or divine action. In construction contexts, Solomon's molten sea measured thirty cubits around by a line (1 Kgs 7:23; 2 Chr 4:2), and Ezekiel sees an angel measuring with a line (Ezek 47:3). The image becomes powerfully figurative when God 'stretches a line' over a city—sometimes for building (Zech 1:16), sometimes for destruction (2 Kgs 21:13; Lam 2:8; Isa 34:11). Job 38:5 depicts creation itself as an act of cosmic surveying: 'Who stretched a line upon it?'

line, measuring line (10×) A measuring line or cord used for construction, surveying, or marking boundaries, frequently deployed in figurative language for divine judgment and creation. Literally, it describes the circumference of Solomon's bronze sea (1 Kgs 7:23; 2 Chr 4:2) and Ezekiel's visionary measuring (Ezek 47:3). Figuratively, 'stretching the line' can signify either building ('a measuring line shall be stretched over Jerusalem,' Zech 1:16) or demolition and judgment ('I will stretch over Jerusalem the measuring line of Samaria,' 2 Kgs 21:13; cf. Isa 34:11, 17; Lam 2:8). Most strikingly, God asks Job: 'Who stretched the line upon it?'—depicting the earth's creation as an act of divine surveying (Job 38:5). Isaiah 28:17 uses the line as a standard of justice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-line, a-measuring-line, and-a-line | es: con-cordel, cordel, cordel-de | fr: [בקו], [וקו], [לקו] | de: Linie, [בקו], [וקו] 2Kgs 21:13; 2Chr 4:2; Job 38:5; Ps 19:4; Isa 28:17

קִיא H6958 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3fs (8×)

To vomit out, spew forth, disgorge; used literally and as a powerful metaphor for the land expelling its inhabitants.

This verb means to vomit up or disgorge, carrying visceral force in both its literal and figurative uses. In the Holiness Code (Lev 18:25, 28; 20:22), the land itself is personified as vomiting out its inhabitants because of their moral defilement, a startling image that casts the earth as a living body rejecting contamination. The same root appears in Jonah 2:11 where the great fish disgorges the prophet, and in Job 20:15 where ill-gotten wealth is vomited back up. Spanish 'vomitar,' French 'vomir,' and the uniform cross-linguistic translations confirm the consistent semantic core of forcible expulsion.

to vomit out, disgorge (8×) To vomit up, spew out, or disgorge, conveying forcible expulsion from within. In the Holiness Code (Lev 18:25, 28; 20:22), the land is personified as vomiting out its defiled inhabitants, a dramatic metaphor equating moral pollution with physical nausea. In Job 20:15, the wicked are forced to disgorge swallowed riches. The Hiphil and Qal forms share the same core meaning. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'vomitar,' French 'vomir') confirm the universally understood bodily image. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-he-vomits-it, and-it-vomited, and-vomit-it | es: os-vomitará, vomitarás, vomite | fr: cela-vomited-dehors, et-vomir, et-vomited-dehors | de: [והקאתו], [ויקא], [ויקאנו] Lev 18:25; Lev 18:28; Lev 20:22; Job 20:15

קוֹבַע H6959 N-msc (2×)

helmet; protective head-covering for battle, typically made of bronze or leather

This term denotes military headgear designed to protect warriors in combat. It appears when Saul arms David with bronze helmet before facing Goliath, and in Ezekiel's description of military forces equipped with helmets. The word may be a foreign loan-word, cognate with Ethiopic and Syriac terms for turbans or hoods, suggesting diverse ancient head-covering styles. The 1 Samuel passage specifies 'bronze helmet,' indicating metal construction, while Ezekiel's usage appears in cataloging warrior equipment. This essential defensive armor protected the vulnerable head from sword blows and projectiles.

(2×) 1 Samuel 17:38 describes Saul placing 'a bronze helmet' (qova' nechoshet) on David's head as part of full armor, while Ezekiel 23:24 lists 'helmet' among military equipment of invading forces. Spanish 'casco' (helmet), French 'casque,' German 'helmet' all confirm the protective headgear. The 1 Samuel context emphasizes David's inability to function in Saul's oversized armor, highlighting his youth and the equipment's unfamiliarity. Ezekiel's passage arrays enemy warriors with 'buckler, shield, and helmet' in judgment against Jerusalem. The term denotes standard military issue, essential defensive equipment for ancient infantry and chariot warriors, protecting the head in close combat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-helmet, helmet-of | es: casco-de, y-casco | fr: et-casque, helmet-de | de: [ויקובע], helmet-von 1Sam 17:38; Ezek 23:24

קָוָה H6960a V-Piel-Perf-1cs (46×)

To wait for, hope in, or expectantly trust; as participle, those who wait upon God with patient confidence.

Rooted in the image of a taut, stretched cord (cognate with qav, 'line' or 'cord'), this verb captures the tension of sustained expectation. It appears almost exclusively in poetic and prophetic texts, where the object of waiting is overwhelmingly God himself or his salvation. The Piel intensifies the root into deliberate, enduring hope, as in Jacob's dying cry 'I have waited for your salvation, O LORD' (Gen 49:18). German translations split between 'warten' (wait) and 'hoffen' (hope), reflecting the same semantic gradient found in English. Isaiah 40:31's promise that 'those who wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength' has made the participial form an iconic expression of biblical faith.

1. wait for, await (27×) To wait for a person, event, or expected outcome with patient endurance. This is the temporal-experiential sense: time passes, and the subject endures it in anticipation. Job waits for death that does not come (Job 3:9; 7:2), caravans wait for water (Job 6:19), and the psalmist waits for God's word (Ps 25:5; 130:5). Spanish 'esperé / espera' and French 'attendre' foreground the temporal dimension of sustained waiting. HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: I-have-waited-for, I-wait, I-waited | es: Espera, Esperando, Esperé | fr: attendre, espérer, et-espérer | de: [יקוה], [קוו], [שקוינהו] Gen 49:18; Job 3:9; Job 6:19; Job 7:2; Ps 25:5

2. hope in, trust expectantly (12×) To place confident hope or trust in someone, especially God, where the emphasis shifts from temporal endurance to emotional and volitional commitment. In Isa 8:17 the prophet says 'I will hope in him,' and Ps 52:9 declares 'I will hope in your name.' German 'hoffen / hoffte' and French 'espérer' capture the affective warmth that distinguishes this from mere waiting. The sense often appears in contexts of adversity where the alternative to hope is despair (Job 17:13; 30:26). HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: Hoping, I-hope, I-hoped | es: Esperando, esperamos, esperando | fr: attendre, espérer, et-espérer | de: [אקוה], hoffen, hoffte Job 17:13; Job 30:26; Ps 52:9; Isa 8:17; Isa 51:5

3. those who wait, the hopeful (6×) Qal participial substantive: those who wait, the hopeful ones. These are persons characterized by their ongoing posture of expectant trust in God. Isaiah 40:31 promises renewed strength to 'those who wait upon the LORD,' and Ps 37:9 contrasts them with evildoers. Spanish 'los que esperan en' (those who hope in) and the participial nominalization in English ('those who wait for') both show a frozen verbal form serving as a class designation for the faithful. HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: But-those-who-wait-for, but-those-waiting-for, those-who-wait-for-You | es: Pero-los-que-esperan, los-que-esperan-en-mí, los-que-esperan-en-ti | fr: espérer, et-espérer | de: [לקוו], aber-jene-waiting-für, hoffen Ps 25:3; Ps 37:9; Ps 69:6; Isa 40:31; Isa 49:23

4. (1×) A residual Qal finite occurrence where the verb describes watching or lying in wait with hostile or anxious overtones. In Ps 56:6 the enemies 'wait for' the psalmist's life, introducing a negative coloring absent from the other senses. Spanish 'esperaron' (they waited) and English 'they wait for' are ambiguous, but the hostile context (the surrounding verse speaks of lurking and watching) sets this apart from the trusting hope of senses 1-2. HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: they-wait-for | es: esperaron | fr: espérer | de: sie-warten-für Ps 56:6

קָוָה H6960b V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (3×)

to gather, collect together; assembling in one place, used of waters and nations (Niphal)

This verbal root means to gather or collect together. Genesis 1:9 commands the waters to be gathered into one place, allowing dry land to appear—a foundational act of creation ordering chaos. Isaiah 60:9 speaks of ships that 'wait' or possibly 'gather' (textual question) for the Lord. Jeremiah 3:17 prophesies that nations will gather to Jerusalem. The Niphal stem indicates passive or reflexive action: being gathered or gathering themselves. The semantic overlap with 'wait' (homonymous root) creates some interpretive ambiguity in certain contexts.

(3×) Three uses show gathering: cosmological (waters in Genesis), possibly maritime (ships in Isaiah, though the text may be corrupt), and eschatological (nations in Jeremiah). The cross-linguistic evidence reveals uncertainty—some treat Isaiah 60:9 as 'wait' rather than 'gather', reflecting debate whether this is the collection root or the hope/wait root. Genesis and Jeremiah clearly involve spatial gathering: waters to one place, nations to Jerusalem. The Niphal suggests self-collection or being collected by external force. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-will-gather, let-gather, will-wait | es: esperan, sean-reunidas, y-se-congregarán | fr: [ונקוו], [יקוו], que-rassembler | de: [ונקוו], [יקוו], es-sammle-sich Gen 1:9; Isa 60:9; Jer 3:17

קָוֶה H6961 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

line, cord; measuring line or thread, particularly in construction (Ketiv form)

This noun (a Ketiv variant related to H6957) means a line or cord used for measuring. The Qere (preferred reading) generally points it as 'qav' (קָו), while the Ketiv (written text) preserves this variant form. First Kings 7:23 uses it to measure the bronze Sea's circumference. Jeremiah 31:39 speaks of a measuring line going out over Jerusalem. Zechariah 1:16 twice mentions a line stretched over Jerusalem in restoration—the builder's cord marking future expansion. The term belongs to construction and surveying vocabulary, representing hope and rebuilding in prophetic texts.

(3×) The three passages involve measuring: temple construction (1 Kings) and prophetic restoration (Jeremiah, Zechariah). Zechariah's double mention emphasizes God's active planning to rebuild Jerusalem—the measuring line signals imminent construction. The bracketed forms in translations reflect Ketiv-Qere variations and construct state relationships. The basic referent is a cord or rope for measuring, whether in actual building projects or symbolic acts representing divine restoration plans. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-a-line], [measuring-line], and-a-line | es: [cordel], [y-el-cordel], y-el-cordel | fr: [[קוה]], et-fil | de: [(וקו)], [[וקוה]], [[קוה]] Jer 31:39; Zech 1:16

קוּט H6962 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-1cs / 3fs (6×)

To feel loathing, deep disgust, or self-abhorrence; in Hitpael, to contend with or strive against

This verb captures visceral revulsion at its core. In Psalm 95:10, God declares 'I loathed that generation' – a forty-year disgust with a wayward people. Ezekiel deploys the Niphal reflexively: Israel will 'loathe themselves' in their own sight when they remember their abominations (Ezek 6:9; 20:43; 36:31). The Hitpael intensifies the emotion into active contention: the psalmist in 119:158 is revolted by the faithless, and in 139:21 he 'contends with' those who rise against God. Spanish splits the range helpfully – 'fastidio' and 'aborrecer' for loathing, 'contender' for the combative extension.

1. loathe, feel disgust (4×) To feel deep loathing, revulsion, or self-abhorrence. The Qal in Psalm 95:10 expresses God's forty-year disgust with a generation. The Niphal in Ezekiel is reflexive: the people will loathe themselves at their own faces (Ezek 20:43; 36:31; 6:9). Spanish 'sentir fastidio' and 'aborrecerse' capture the visceral, inward-turning nature of this disgust. LOATHING ABHORRENCE

en: I-loathed, and-they-shall-loathe, and-you-shall-loathe | es: sentí-fastidio, y-os-aborreceréis, y-os-avergonzaréis | fr: [ונקטו], [ונקטתם], s'indigner | de: [ונקטו], [ונקטתם], ich-loathed Ps 95:10; Ezek 6:9; Ezek 20:43; Ezek 36:31

2. contend with, struggle against (2×) To contend with, strive against, or quarrel (Hitpael intensification). Psalm 119:158 describes disgust that spills over into active opposition toward the faithless, and Psalm 139:21 directs this combative loathing at those who hate God. Spanish 'contender' and the shift from passive revulsion to hostile engagement mark this as a semantic extension of the core loathing sense. CONTENDING AND STRIVING

en: I-loathe, and-I-am-disgusted | es: contiendo, y-me-disgusté | fr: et-s'indigner, s'indigner | de: ich-loathe, und-ich-bin-angewidert Ps 119:158; Ps 139:21

קוֹל H6963a Art / N-msc / 2ms (505×)

voice, sound; human speech, divine utterance, thunder, noise, or report — the audible expression of will or event

One of the most theologically charged nouns in the Hebrew Bible, qol spans the full range of audible phenomena — from a whisper to a thunderclap. It denotes the human voice in speech, weeping, and song, but reaches its greatest weight in the phrase qol YHWH, the voice of the LORD that commands, judges, and reveals. The plural qolot characteristically refers to thunderpeals, linking the storm theophany to divine speech. In the obedience idiom shama' beqol, the voice itself becomes a metonym for authority, making hearing inseparable from heeding.

1. voice (human, general) (256×) The ordinary human voice used in speech, crying out, singing, or any vocal utterance. Multilingual glosses converge on 'voice/voz/voix/Stimme' without further qualification, confirming this as the unmarked default. Deuteronomy 27:14 (the Levites proclaim with a loud voice) and 1 Samuel 1:13 (Hannah's silent lips contrasted with her voice) illustrate the range from public declaration to whispered prayer. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-voice, proclamation, sound | es: la-voz, voz, voz. | fr: avec-un-voix, son, un-voix | de: Stimme, ein-Stimme, mit-ein-Stimme Exod 24:3; Exod 36:6; Deut 4:12; Deut 5:22; Deut 27:14

2. voice of God / divine voice (163×) The voice of God — qol YHWH — in theophany, revelation, and sovereign command. Spanish voz-de, French voix-de, and German Stimme-von all preserve the construct-chain structure, marking this as a possessive theological formula rather than a general sound. Genesis 3:8 (the LORD walking in the garden) and Deuteronomy 4:12 (you heard the sound of words but saw no form) anchor this sense in Israel's foundational encounters with divine speech. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-voice-of, sound-of, the-voice-of | es: la-voz-de, sonido-de, voz-de | fr: le-voix-de, son-de, sound-de | de: Stimme-von, die-Stimme, ein-Stimme-von Gen 3:8; Gen 4:10; Gen 21:17; Gen 27:22

3. sound / noise (non-vocal) (71×) Non-vocal audible phenomena: the sound of water, wind, chariots, wings, grinding, or battle. Multilingual glosses shift from 'voice' to 'sound/sonido/son/Klang,' signaling acoustic rather than communicative content. The rustling in the balsam trees (2 Sam 5:24) and the sound of the trumpet growing louder (Exod 19:19) exemplify environmental or instrumental noise distinct from speech. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-sound-of, and-a-voice, and-great | es: ni-voz-de, y-el-sonido, y-sonido | fr: et-la-voix, et-voix | de: und-Stimme, und-der-Klang-von, und-der-Stimme Exod 19:19; Exod 20:18; Lev 26:36; 2Sam 5:24; 1Kgs 14:6

4. thunder (קוֹלוֹת) (11×) Thunder — specifically the plural qolot used for thunderclaps in storm and theophany contexts. Spanish truenos, French tonnerre, and German Donner all diverge sharply from the singular 'voice' glosses, confirming a lexicalized meteorological sense. The Exodus plague narrative (9:23–34) and Psalm 29's sevenfold 'voice of the LORD' blur the boundary between natural thunder and divine power. THUNDER THEOPHANIC

en: and-the-thunder, of-sounds, sounds | es: los-truenos, truenos, truenos-de | fr: et-le-tonnerre, le-thunders, le-tonnerre | de: Donner, Donner-von, Stimme Exod 9:23; Exod 9:28; Exod 9:29; Exod 9:33; Exod 9:34

5. obedient hearing (שׁמע בְּקוֹל) (3×) Voice as the object of obedience in the collocation shama' beqol (hear/heed the voice of). Multilingual evidence shows possessive suffixes — su-voz, leur-voix, ihr-Stimme — marking the voice as the locus of authority rather than mere acoustic content. Exodus 28:35 (the bells on Aaron's garment so his sound is heard) and Numbers 16:34 (Israel fleeing at the cry) show the idiom extending beyond divine commands to any authoritative voice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-their-voice, its-sound | es: a-su-voz, de-su-voz, su-sonido | fr: de-leur-voix, son-son, à-leur-voix | de: Stimme, bei-ihr-Stimme, sein-sound Exod 28:35; Num 16:34; Isa 31:4

6. (1×) A report or news that spreads — the voice as rumor or tidings. Genesis 45:16 records that the qol was heard in Pharaoh's house that Joseph's brothers had come. The English 'report,' Spanish voz (in the sense of 'rumor'), and German Nachricht confirm a semantic extension from audible sound to transmitted information, a metonymic shift found across Semitic and Indo-European languages alike. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: and-the-report | es: y-la-voz | fr: et-le-report | de: und-die-Nachricht Gen 45:16

קָל H6963b Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

lightness, frivolity, or moral shallowness (or possibly 'voice' as a variant)

A difficult noun in Jeremiah 3:9, where God condemns Israel for the 'lightness of her whoredom.' Most interpreters understand it as denoting frivolity or casual attitude—Israel treated spiritual adultery lightly, without seriousness. The phrase suggests moral shallowness: Israel's infidelity was thoughtless, almost recreational. Some scholars propose reading it as 'voice' (qol) instead, but the Versions support 'lightness,' which better fits Jeremiah's accusation of brazen, unashamed idolatry.

(1×) Lightness, frivolity, or lack of seriousness in moral matters, particularly Israel's casual approach to idolatry in Jeremiah 3:9. The prophet condemns not just the sin but the attitude: 'because of the lightness of her whoredom' suggests Israel committed spiritual adultery thoughtlessly, without gravity or shame. Spanish renders this as 'ligereza' (lightness), capturing the moral carelessness. Some translations struggle with the phrase, leaving it untransliterated, but the sense is clear: Israel's sin was compounded by treating it trivially. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-lightness | es: por-la-ligereza-de | fr: [מקל] | de: [מקל] Jer 3:9

קוֹלָיָה H6964 N-proper-ms (2×)

Qolayah, Kolaiah; a personal name meaning 'voice of Yahweh,' borne by a false prophet's father and a Benjamite

This theophoric name combines 'voice' with the divine name, meaning 'voice/oracle of Yahweh.' It identifies two individuals: the father of false prophet Ahab whom Jeremiah condemned, and a Benjamite ancestor in Nehemiah's post-exilic community. The name's irony is notable—the father of a lying prophet bore a name suggesting divine oracle. The Septuagint preserves the name with minor variation (Kodia, Koleia), confirming its textual stability. Like many Yahwistic names, this reflects parental hope for prophetic gifting or divine communication.

(2×) Nehemiah 11:7 lists Qolayah in a Benjamite genealogy, while Jeremiah 29:21 identifies him as father of the false prophet Ahab who prophesied lies in Babylon. Neither passage develops the character; both use the name purely for identification in genealogical or patronymic formulas. Spanish maintains 'Qolayah/Colaías,' French and German preserve the form with transliteration. The Jeremiah context is damning: Qolayah's son Ahab would be executed by Nebuchadnezzar for false prophecy and adultery. The name appears nowhere else, suggesting these were minor figures preserved only for genealogical completeness or prophetic polemic. The theophoric element connects both men to Yahwistic heritage, whatever their later unfaithfulness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Qolayah | es: Colaías, Qolayah | fr: [קוליה] | de: [קוליה] Neh 11:7; Jer 29:21

לֵב קָמָי H6965a

cryptic phrase in Jeremiah 51:1 (Leb-kamai = 'heart of my adversaries'; coded reference)

This entry represents an Atbash cipher in Jeremiah 51:1 where לֵב קָמָי ('Leb-kamai,' meaning 'heart of those rising against me') stands as a cryptic designation for Babylon or the Chaldeans. Atbash substitutes letters in reverse alphabetical order, so כשדים (Kasdim, Chaldeans) becomes קמי. The prophet uses coded language, possibly for rhetorical effect or to avoid direct naming during dangerous political circumstances. Scholarly debate continues over whether this is intentional cipher or textual corruption, but the cryptic quality adds to the oracle's mystique as Jeremiah pronounces judgment on Israel's oppressor.

קוּם H6965b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (627×)

to rise, arise, stand up; to stand firm, endure, remain valid; causative: to raise up (a person, leader), to establish (covenant, kingdom), to erect (structure), to fulfill (word, oath)

A verb of vertical motion and stability. The basic Qal sense is physical rising—getting up from sitting or lying, arising to action—dominating narrative with 'and he arose' (wayyaqom). But קוּם also means to stand firm, to endure, to remain valid: counsel that 'stands,' kingdoms that 'endure.' The causative Hifil multiplies meanings: raising up a prophet or judge onto history's stage, establishing a covenant or throne, erecting a physical structure like the Tabernacle, or fulfilling a spoken promise. The Piel and Hitpael add intensive confirmation and hostile rising against adversaries. A single root spans physical posture, existential stability, and covenantal faithfulness.

1. Qal: to rise, arise, get up (432×) Basic physical rising: to get up from a seated, lying, or lower position. The narrative workhorse wayyaqom ('and he arose') appears constantly. Genesis 22:3 has Abraham rising early to sacrifice Isaac. Genesis 4:8 recounts Cain rising against Abel—the verb of motion preceding violence. The imperative qum ('arise!') summons to action across prophetic and historical texts. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'levantarse,' French 'se lever,' German 'aufstehen') cluster tightly around vertical motion. RISING AND DAWNING

en: and-arose, and-he-arose, and-rose | es: Y-levantó, Y-se-levantó, y-levantó | fr: et-il-se-leva, et-se-leva, et-se-leva-en-haut | de: und-arose, und-aufstand, und-er-arose Gen 4:8; Gen 19:1; Gen 21:32; Gen 22:3; Gen 23:3

2. Qal: to stand firm, endure, be valid (50×) Stative sense: to stand firm, to endure, to remain valid. Not the act of rising, but the state of standing. Genesis 23:17, 20 use qum for land 'standing' (being confirmed) as Abraham's possession. Leviticus uses it for valuations that 'stand' (remain in force). Arabic ثبت (yathbutu) 'it remains/persists' and Korean '유효하다' (valid) confirm the endurance nuance—what rises and remains standing. RISING AND DAWNING

en: can-stand, endures, it-endures | es: se-cumplirá, se-levantará, se-mantendrá | fr: devra-lève-toi, devra-se-lever, devra-se-tenir | de: aufstehen, er-steht-auf, soll-arise Gen 23:17; Gen 23:20; Lev 25:30; Lev 27:14; Lev 27:17

3. Hifil: to raise up a person (47×) Hifil causative: to raise up a person—deliverer, prophet, king, or enemy. Genesis 38:8 commands raising up seed for one's brother (levirate duty). Judges cycles through the LORD raising up deliverers. Amos 6:14 warns God will raise up a nation against Israel. Spanish 'levantar,' Arabic 'aqama,' and Swahili 'kuinua' all track the causative morphology: bringing someone onto the stage of history. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: Has-raised-up, I-shall-raise-up, I-will-raise-up | es: Ha-levantado, Y-levantó, estoy-levantando | fr: a-éleva-en-haut, am-élevant, et-il-éleva | de:

am-erhebend, aufstehen, hat-erhob-hinauf Gen 38:8; Exod 40:2; Exod 40:18; Exod 40:33

4. Hifil: to establish, confirm (covenant/kingdom/word) (40×) Hifil causative-abstract: to establish, confirm, or uphold a covenant, kingdom, throne, or decree. Genesis 6:18 has God establishing his covenant with Noah ('establecer mi pacto'). 2 Samuel 7:12 promises David's throne will be established forever. Spanish 'establecer/confirmar,' Arabic ٱ (yuthabbitu), and Swahili 'kuthibitisha' capture the solidifying, stabilizing force—making something stand firm. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-I-will-establish, establish, he-may-establish | es: Confirme, Y-estableceré, confirma | fr: et-Je—établir, et-se-lever, il-pourra-établir | de: aufstehen, er-moege-gruenden, gruende Gen 6:18; Gen 9:9; Gen 9:11; Gen 17:7; Gen 17:19

5. Hifil: to set up, erect (physical object) (19×) Hifil for physically erecting structures: setting up pillars, altars, the Tabernacle. Exodus 40:2, 18 command Moses to 'set up' the Tabernacle, repeated in the execution narrative. Numbers 7:1 marks the day Moses 'erected' the Tabernacle. Deuteronomy 27:2 orders setting up large plastered stones. Spanish 'erigir,' Arabic 'aqama,' and Swahili 'kusimamisha' confirm the concrete construction sense—making a physical object stand upright. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: and-He-set, and-he-erected, and-he-raised-up | es: Y-erigió, Y-levantaron, Y-levantarás | fr: coucher, erecting, et-il-plaça-en-haut | de: erect, erecting, setting Exod 26:30; Num 7:1; Num 9:15; Num 10:21; Deut 27:2

6. Qal: to rise up against, oppose (13×) Qal hostile sense: to rise up against, to oppose. Typically in participial constructions with pronominal suffixes: qamay ('those rising against me'). Exodus 15:7 celebrates God overthrowing 'those who rose against you.' Psalm 18:48 thanks God for deliverance from 'those who rise up against me.' Arabic and Swahili glosses shift to 'enemy/opponent' vocabulary, confirming the adversarial stance—standing up in opposition. RISING AND DAWNING
en: among-their-enemies, and-from-those-rising-against-me, of-those-rising-against-me | es: a-los-que-se-levantan, a-los-que-se-levantan-contra-mí, a-los-que-se-levantan-contra-nosotros | fr: ces-rising-contre-Tu, ces-rising-contre-lui, ceux-là-se-levant-contre-moi | de: auf-stand-auf, der-die-aufsteigend, der-rising Exod 15:7; Exod 32:25; Deut 28:7; Deut 33:11; 2Sam 22:40

7. Hifil: to fulfill (a promise/word/oath) (8×) Hifil emphasizing fulfillment: to fulfill a promise, word, or oath. Genesis 9:17 marks God's covenant 'which I have established' (he cumplido). Numbers 23:19 asks rhetorically whether God speaks and does not fulfill ('no lo cumplirá'). 1 Samuel 15:11 laments Saul's failure to fulfill God's word. Spanish 'cumplir' and Portuguese 'cumprir' zero in on the realization of spoken commitment—making a word stand realized. RISING AND DAWNING
en: He-might-establish, I-established, I-fulfilled | es: He-cumplido, Y-cumplió, confirmó | fr: Il-pourrait-établis, Je-établit, et-il-établit | de: He-koennte-gruende, er-bestaetigte, er-fulfilled Gen 9:17; Exod 6:4; Num 23:19; Num 30:14; 1Sam 15:11

8. Piel: to confirm, establish, fulfill (7×) Piel intensive: to confirm, establish, or fulfill with thoroughness. Ruth 4:7 explains the custom 'to confirm' (confirmar) any transaction. Esther 9:21, 29, 31 describe establishing Purim as a festival. Psalm 119:28 pleads 'strengthen me according to your word.' The Piel's intensive force suggests deliberate, effortful confirmation—not passive standing but active upholding. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-I-confirm, strengthen-me, to-confirm | es: Para-confirmar, Para-establecer, hacer-cumplir | fr: et-se-lever, se-lever, à-confirmer | de: aufstehen, stand-auf, und-stand-auf Ruth 4:7; Esth 9:21; Esth 9:29; Esth 9:31; Ps 119:28

9. Hitpael: to rise up against, set oneself against (4×) Hitpael reflexive-reciprocal: to rise up against, to set oneself against. Job 20:27, 27:7 invoke heaven and earth as witnesses, with enemies rising up. Psalms 17:7, 59:1 cry out for deliverance from 'those who set themselves against me.' The reflexive morphology (se levantar contra) emphasizes agency: adversaries actively positioning themselves in hostility. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-my-adversary, from-those-rising-against-me, from-those-rising-up | es: de-los-que-se-levantan, de-los-que-se-levantan-contra-mí, se-levantará-contra | fr: de-se-lever, et-lever-moi, lever | de: stand-auf, und-stand-auf, von-stand-auf Job 20:27; Job 27:7; Ps 17:7; Ps 59:1

10. Hofal: to be raised up, be established (3×) Hofal passive of Hifil: to be raised up, to be established by an external agent. Exodus 40:17 notes the day the Tabernacle 'was set up' (fue levantado). 2 Samuel 23:1 describes David as 'raised on high' (exaltado). Jeremiah 35:14 observes that Jonadab's command 'is established' (fue levantado). The passive morphology signals that another party effects the raising or establishing. RISING AND DAWNING
en: established, raised-up, was-raised | es: Fueron-cumplidas, exaltado, fue-levantado | fr: se-lever, éleva-en-haut, était-éleva | de: aufstehen, erhob-hinauf, war-raised Exod 40:17; 2Sam 23:1; Jer 35:14

11. Qal: to stand still, congeal (2×) Qal specialized physical sense: to stand still, to congeal. Exodus 15:8 celebrates the sea waters that 'stood' in a heap (estaban fijos). 1 Samuel 4:15, 1 Kings 14:4 describe Eli's and Ahijah's eyes as 'set' (fixed, rigid)—no longer moving. Arabic uses ٗ (jamuda) 'to congeal/solidify,' confirming a shift from motion to motionless standing. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: stood, stood-still | es: estaban-fijos, fijos | fr: se-tint, se-tint-encore | de: stand, stand-noch 1Sam 4:15; 1Kgs 14:4

12. Hifil: to rouse, stir up from inactivity (2×) Hifil causative: to rouse, to stir up from sleep or inactivity. Genesis 49:9, Numbers 24:9 use the metaphor of rousing a lion—who dares wake him? Spanish 'despertar' (to awaken) and Arabic 'yunhiduhu' (rouse him) clarify the sense: causing someone to rise from rest or dormancy, a specialized causative of awakening. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: rouses-him, will-rouse-him | es: lo-despertará, lo-levantará | fr: fera-rouse-lui, rouses-lui | de: wagt-ihn-aufzuscheuchen, wird-rouse-ihn Gen 49:9; Num 24:9

קוּם H6966 V-Qal-Imp-fs (36×)

To arise, stand, set up, establish; Aramaic qum in Daniel and Ezra for rising, erecting, and appointing.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew qum, appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. It runs from physical rising — Nebuchadnezzar 'arose in haste' from his throne (Dan 3:24) — to the geopolitical language of kingdoms that 'arise' and are 'set up' or torn down by God's decree. The same root that describes a king getting out of bed (Dan 6:19) also describes the eternal kingdom God will 'set up' that 'shall never be destroyed' (Dan 2:44). Spanish distinguishes levantarse from erigir and establecer, mapping cleanly onto the Aramaic sense divisions across Qal, Piel, Hifil, and Hofal stems.

1. set up, erect (13×) Hifil causative with physical objects: to set up, erect, or raise a structure or monument — thirteen occurrences, dominated by Daniel 3 and its account of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The king 'set up' the statue (Dan 3:1), summoned officials for its 'dedication' (3:2-3), and demanded worship of what he had 'set up' — the verb echoing relentlessly through the chapter. God himself 'sets up' an indestructible kingdom (Dan 2:44) and 'sets up kings' (Dan 2:21). Spanish erigir ('to erect') and the causative Hindi khadaa karna ('to make stand') both select construction-erection vocabulary, distinguishing physical raising from the metaphorical establishing of sense 4. RISING AND DAWNING en: He-sets-up, I-set-up, and-sets-up | es: erigiste, erigió, erigí | fr: et-se-lever, se-lever | de: aufstellen, und-aufstellen Dan 2:21; Dan 2:44; Dan 3:1; Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

2. arise, rise up (8×) Qal intransitive: to arise, get up, rise into action — eight occurrences. Nebuchadnezzar 'arose in haste' from his throne at the sight of a fourth figure in the furnace (Dan 3:24); Darius 'arose at dawn' to rush to the lions' den (Dan 6:19); Zerubbabel and Jeshua 'rose up and began to build' (Ezra 5:2). In prophetic vision, kingdoms 'arise' on the historical stage (Dan 2:39; 7:17, 24). Spanish levantarse and French se lever both capture the basic motion of rising, while the Korean ileonada mirrors the inchoative 'get up and act' force. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-rose-up, arise, arose | es: Levántate, se-levantaron, se-levantará | fr: et-se-lever, se-lever, établir | de: [קמו], aufstellen, und-aufstellen Ezra 5:2; Dan 2:39; Dan 3:24; Dan 6:19; Dan 7:5

3. stand, be standing (6×) Qal stative: to stand, be standing, remain upright or present in a location — six occurrences. The great statue 'was standing' before Nebuchadnezzar in his dream (Dan 2:31); officials 'were standing' at the image's dedication (Dan 3:3); attendants 'stood' before the Ancient of Days (Dan 7:10). The participial forms qae'm and qayyemin mark ongoing state rather than inchoative rising. Spanish estar de pie ('to be on one's feet') and the German stehen ('to stand') confirm the stative semantics, distinct from sense 2's dynamic arising. Dan 2:44 also carries this sense: the kingdom 'shall stand forever.' RISING AND DAWNING en: (qere:and-standing), [ketiv:and-standing], standing | es: (y-estaban-de-pie), [y-estaban-de-pie], de-pie | fr: et-se-lever, se-lever | de: aufstellen, und-aufstellen Dan 2:31; Dan 2:44; Dan 3:3; Dan 7:10

4. appoint, establish (6×) Hifil causative with persons or institutions: to appoint, establish, or constitute an office, arrangement, or person in authority — six occurrences in the administrative language of Daniel and Ezra. Darius 'set' Daniel over the whole kingdom (Dan 6:1, 3); the satraps sought to 'establish' a binding decree (Dan 6:8); Belshazzar's queen recalls that Nebuchadnezzar 'appointed' Daniel as chief of the wise men (Dan 5:11). The Levites were 'set in their divisions' for temple service (Ezra 6:18). Spanish establecer/constituir and French etablir both select institutional-appointment vocabulary, clearly distinct from the physical erecting of sense 1. The same Hifil form serves both physical and political 'raising up,' unified by the causative semantics of placing something or someone in position. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-he-set, and-they-set, appointed-him | es: establece, establezca, lo-constituyó | fr: et-se-lever, et-établir, se-lever | de: [והקימו], aufstellen, und-aufstellen Ezra 6:18; Dan 5:11; Dan 6:1; Dan 6:3; Dan 6:8

5. be raised, be set up (2×) Hofal passive: to be raised up or made to stand by another agent — two occurrences, both in Daniel 7's beast visions. The first beast 'was lifted up from the earth and made to stand on two feet like a man' (Dan 7:4); the second beast 'was raised up on one side' (Dan 7:5). Spanish fue levantada/fue puesta de pie and the passive Hindi uthaya jana both mark the subject as recipient of the action — something raised rather than rising on its own. The divine passive is likely operative: God is the unstated agent causing these empire-beasts to rise. RISING AND DAWNING
en: it-was-made-to-stand, it-was-raised | es: fue-levantada, fue-puesta-de-pie | fr: se-lever | de: aufstellen Dan 7:4; Dan 7:5

6. establish firmly, confirm (1×) Piel intensive: to establish firmly or confirm something with enduring permanence — a single occurrence at Dan 6:7 (Aramaic 6:8) where the officials urge Darius to 'establish' (qayymah) an edict and 'sign a document' that cannot be changed. Spanish establecer firmemente and the intensive force of the Piel stem both mark this as more than mere 'setting up' — it is ratifying, making irrevocable and permanent. The 'law of the Medes and Persians that cannot be altered' provides the narrative context for this uniquely emphatic usage. RISING AND DAWNING en: to-establish | es: para-establecer | fr: se-lever | de: aufstellen Dan 6:7

קוֹמָה H6967 N-fsc (46×)
Height, stature; the vertical measurement of a structure or the physical build of a person
A feminine noun denoting vertical extent, used both for architectural measurements and human physical stature. The majority of its 46 occurrences describe the height of constructed objects – the temple, its pillars, the tabernacle furnishings, Noah's ark, city walls – where precision matters and the word functions as a technical building term. When applied to persons, as with Saul's impressive height or the beloved's stature in Song of Solomon, it shifts from engineering measurement to embodied quality. The multilingual evidence tracks this split neatly: Arabic uses irtifa' for structures but qama for people, and Korean distinguishes nopi (height) from ki (bodily stature).

1. height of structure/object (34×) The measured vertical dimension of a building, wall, pillar, altar, or other constructed object, appearing 34 times primarily in construction narratives. Arabic irtifa', Korean nopi, and Swahili urefu consistently render this as abstract dimensional measurement. Found densely in Exodus 25-27 (tabernacle specifications), 1 Kings 6-7 (Solomon's temple), and Genesis 6:15 (Noah's ark at thirty cubits). The word functions here as a technical architectural term within precise cubit-based descriptions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: height-of, its-height | es: altura-de, altura-de-ella, altura-de-él | fr: [קומתו], hauteur-de, son-hauteur | de: Hoehe, Hoehe-von, ihre-Höhe Gen 6:15; Exod 25:10; Exod 25:23; Exod 27:1; Exod 27:18

2. stature of a person (12×) The bodily height or physical build of a human or personified figure, attested 12 times. Multilingual evidence reveals a genuine semantic distinction: Arabic shifts to qama (bodily stature), Korean to ki (a person's height), and Hindi to kad/kathi (build, frame). Key passages include 1 Samuel 16:7, where God tells Samuel not to judge by Eliab's qomah because the Lord looks at the heart, and Song of Solomon 7:7, where the beloved's stature is compared to a palm tree – both contexts where embodied physical presence, not mere measurement, is in view. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-stature, in-stature, in-their-stature | es: altura-de, en-estatura, en-su-estatura | fr: [הקומה], son-stature, stature | de: Hoehe, [הקומה], [קומתך] 1Sam 16:7; 1Sam 28:20; 2Kgs 19:23; Song 7:7; Isa 10:33

קוֹמְמִיּוּת H6968 Adv (1×)
uprightness, erect posture; metaphorically, the bearing of free persons rather than slaves
This feminine noun appears as an adverb in Leviticus 26:13, where God recalls the Exodus: 'I broke the bars of your yoke and made you walk upright.' The upright posture symbolizes freedom and dignity, contrasting with the bent backs of slaves under burdens. The image is both literal (freed from physical labor) and metaphorical (restored to human dignity). Walking upright becomes shorthand for the entire liberation from Egypt—physical, social, and spiritual.

(1×) Uprightness or erect posture, used adverbially to describe how God enabled Israel to walk after liberation from Egyptian bondage. The phrase 'I made you go upright' (qomemiyuth) evokes both physical straightness—no longer bent under slave labor—and moral dignity restored. Translations consistently render this as 'upright' or 'erect,' recognizing the double significance: literal bodily posture expressing deeper realities of freedom, honor, and covenant relationship with YHWH who restores humanity to its proper stature. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS
en: upright | es: erguidos | fr: upright | de: upright Lev 26:13

קוֹנֵן H6969 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp / 3fs (8×)
To chant a dirge, lament, wail; a Piel denominative from qinah (lament), used for formal mourning rites.
A Piel denominative verb derived from qinah ('dirge' or 'lament'), qonen denotes the formal chanting of a funeral lament or mourning song. David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam 1:17) and over Abner (2 Sam 3:33) employ this verb for composed, public grief. Ezekiel uses it for dirges over Tyre (27:32) and Egypt (32:16), while Jeremiah 9:17 mentions professional wailing women (meqonenot) summoned to keen. The consistent rendering across languages – Spanish 'lamentar,' French 'se lamenter' – underscores the ritualized, vocal nature of this mourning.

to chant a lament, to wail (Piel) (8×) To chant a funeral dirge or formal lament over the dead or over impending destruction. As a Piel denominative from qinah, this verb specifically denotes the vocalized, often professionally performed wailing at funerals or national calamities. David chants dirges over Saul (2 Sam 1:17) and Abner (2 Sam 3:33); Jeremiah 9:17 refers to professional wailing women. Ezekiel applies it to prophetic dirges over Tyre and Egypt. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'lamentó,' 'plañideras'; French 'se lamenta') captures both the emotional weight and the ritual formality. MOURNING AND LAMENTING en: and-he-lamented, and-lamented, and-they-shall-lament | es: Y-lamentó, a-las-plañideras, la-lamentarán | fr: [ויקונן], [למקוננות], et-se-lamenta | de: [וקוננה], [וקוננו], [וייקונן] 2Sam 1:17; 2Sam 3:33; 2Chr 35:25; Jer 9:17; Ezek 27:32

קוֹעַ H6970 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Koa, a people group mentioned alongside Babylonians and

Chaldeans in Ezekiel's prophecy
A gentile name appearing in Ezekiel 23:23, where God lists the nations He will summon against Jerusalem: 'Pekod and Shoa and Koa, and all the Assyrians with them.' Early interpreters identified Koa with the Kutu (or Gutians), a people group east of the Tigris on the border of Elam and Media, mentioned in Assyrian records. However, more recent scholarship questions this identification, leaving Koa's precise historical referent uncertain. They represent part of the eastern coalition that will execute divine judgment.

(1×) A people group named among the eastern nations God will mobilize against Judah, appearing only in Ezekiel 23:23. Delitzsch identified them with the Assyrian Kutu, tribes east of the Tigris, though this identification is now disputed. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Coa, French Koa) while some leave it untransliterated. Their pairing with Pekod and Shoa suggests Ezekiel draws on Mesopotamian geopolitical knowledge to depict the comprehensiveness of coming judgment—forces from every quarter of the empire converging on faithless Jerusalem. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Koa | es: y-Coa | fr: et-Koa | de: [וקוע] Ezek 23:23

קוֹף H6971 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)
apes; non-human primates imported as exotic luxury items during Solomon's reign
This foreign loan-word denotes apes or monkeys brought to Solomon by Phoenician trading fleets. Both occurrences list apes among luxury imports alongside gold, silver, ivory, and peacocks from southeastern regions, possibly South Arabia or India. The word likely derives from Sanskrit kapi (ape), transmitted through maritime trade networks. Apes represented exotic curiosities and status symbols for ancient Near Eastern royalty. Their appearance in Scripture marks Solomon's extensive international commerce and taste for foreign luxuries that later contributed to his spiritual downfall.

(2×) 1 Kings 10:22 and 2 Chronicles 9:21 preserve parallel accounts of Tarshish ships bringing qophim every three years along with precious metals, ivory, and apes. Spanish 'monos' (monkeys), French and German 'apes' all identify these as simian creatures. The conjunction 'and' reflects their position in the luxury cargo list. The Arabian proverb cited by BDB ('the gift of Yemen is apes') confirms southern Arabia as a known ape source. These were not working animals but ornamental exotica, living symbols of Solomon's wealth and far-reaching trade. The term appears only in these Solomonic contexts, tied to the zenith of Israel's imperial prosperity and international reach. LIVING CREATURES
en: and-apes | es: y-monos | fr: [וקופים], et-apes | de: [וקופים], und-apes 1Kgs 10:22; 2Chr 9:21

קִיץ H6972 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
to pass the summer, to spend the summer season
This verb denotes spending the summer or experiencing summer's heat. Isaiah 18:6 uses it in prophetic poetry describing scavengers: 'the birds of prey will summer on them, and all the beasts of the earth will winter on them.' The pairing of summer and winter verbs creates a merism—carcasses will lie exposed through complete annual cycles, emphasizing total desolation. The root connects to words for vehement heat, reflecting summer's defining characteristic in the ancient Near East.

(1×) To pass through the summer season or to summer upon something, appearing in Isaiah's oracle against Cush. The verb (with waw-consecutive future form) depicts birds of prey summering on corpses, paired antithetically with beasts wintering on them—a grim image of year-round carrion feeding. Some translations leave the Hebrew form untransliterated due to its rarity, but Spanish captures it: 'pasará el verano' (summer will pass). The seasonal verb underscores nature's cycles continuing indifferently over human catastrophe. SUMMER SEASON FRUIT
en: and-will-summer | es: y-pasará-el-verano | fr: [וקץ] | de: [וקץ] Isa 18:6

קוּץ H6973 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (9×)
To feel loathing or abhorrence; to feel sickening dread or anxious terror; causatively, to terrify.
A visceral verb describing reactions that churn the stomach – whether from disgust or from dread. Rebekah declares 'I am weary of my life' because of the Hittite women (Gen 27:46), and God himself 'was disgusted' with the nations of Canaan (Lev 20:23). But the same root also describes the cold terror that grips a nation before a threatening enemy: Egypt dreaded the multiplying Israelites (Exod 1:12), and Moab was in sickening dread of Israel (Num 22:3). Spanish distinguishes these strands beautifully – 'hastiada' (fed up, nauseated) for loathing, 'se angustiaron' (they were anguished) for dread. A rare Hiphil causative appears in Isaiah 7:6, where the conspirators plot to 'terrify' Judah.

1. to feel loathing, abhor (5×) To feel deep loathing, abhorrence, or revulsion toward something or someone (with beth of the object). Rebekah is weary of life because of Hittite daughters-in-law (Gen 27:46); God abhorred the nations of Canaan (Lev 20:23); Israel loathed the manna in the wilderness (Num 21:5). Proverbs 3:11 warns against loathing God's discipline. Spanish 'hastiada/fastidio' and French 'las' (weary) capture the emotional exhaustion and revulsion. LOATHING ABHORRENCE
en: I-am-weary, and-I-was-disgusted, and-he-loathed | es: aborrezcas, estoy-hastiada, tiene-fastidio | fr: Je-suis-las, et-il-loathed, et-je-était-disgusted | de: [וקוט], loathes, und-er-loathed Gen 27:46; Lev 20:23; Num 21:5; 1Kgs 11:25; Prov 3:11

2. to feel sickening dread (3×) To feel sickening dread or anxious terror before a threatening presence (with mippenei of the feared party). Egypt dreaded the multiplying Israelites – and the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied (Exod 1:12). Moab was in anguished dread of Israel (Num 22:3). Isaiah 7:16 promises that the land whose two kings Ahaz dreads will be forsaken. Spanish 'se angustiaron' (they were anguished) distinguishes this from mere disgust. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-dreaded, and-they-dreaded, dread | es: temes, y-se-angustiaron, y-se-angustio | fr: [וקץ], et-dreaded, et-ils-dreaded | de: [וקץ], und-dreaded, und-sie-dreaded Exod 1:12; Num 22:3; Isa 7:16

3. to cause dread (1×) Hiphil causative: to cause sickening dread or terror in someone, to terrify. Used in Isaiah 7:6, where the Syro-Ephraimite coalition plots to 'terrify' Judah and breach its walls. Spanish 'aterroricemosla' (let us terrify it) and English 'let us terrify it' make the causative force explicit. This is the only Hiphil occurrence, converting the inward feeling of dread into an outward act of intimidation. TERROR AND AWE
en: and-let-us-terrify-it | es: y-aterrorricémosla | fr: [ונקיצנה] | de: [ונקיצנה] Isa 7:6

קִיץ H6974 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (23×)
To awake from sleep (literal or the sleep of death); to rouse oneself to urgent action.
A parallel form of yaqats, this verb in the Hifil means to show signs of waking, to awaken. It spans a wide experiential range: literal waking from sleep (1 Sam 26:12; Prov 6:22), the eschatological awakening of the dead (Isa 26:19; Dan 12:2), and the prophetic rousing from ecstatic sleep (Jer 31:26). Spanish Despierta and French s'éveiller both render the basic sense faithfully. In the Psalms, it takes on urgent theological weight when directed at God: 'Rouse yourself! Why do you sleep, O Lord?' (Ps 44:23). These imperative appeals – arouse-Yourself in the English glosses – do not imply God literally sleeps but plead for divine intervention with bold anthropomorphic intensity.

1. awake from sleep (20×) To wake up or awaken from sleep, used literally of rising from slumber and figuratively of the dead awakening to new life. Spanish Despertad/Despierta and French s'éveiller capture the intransitive nature of this awakening. Covers the full range from David's companions sleeping through the theft of Saul's spear (1 Sam 26:12), to the psalmist's confident 'when I awake, I shall be satisfied with your likeness' (Ps 17:15), to the eschatological promise 'your dead shall live; their bodies shall rise' (Isa 26:19). AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: I-awake, I-awoke, and-awake | es: Despertad, Despierta, al-despertar | fr: awoke, dans-s'éveiller, de-s'éveiller | de: [אקיץ], [הקיץ], [הקיצה] 1Sam 26:12; 2Kgs 4:31; Job 14:12; Ps 3:5; Ps 17:15

2. rouse oneself to action (3×) To stir or rouse oneself to alertness and active intervention, used in urgent imperative appeals directed to God. English rouse-Yourself and arouse-Yourself mark the heightened urgency beyond mere waking. In Ps 35:23 and 44:23 the psalmist implores God to awaken to his cause; Ps 59:5 extends this to a call for judgment against the nations. The anthropomorphism is deliberate and daring – not attributing sleep to God but demanding his manifest action. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: and-awake, arouse-Yourself, rouse-Yourself | es: despierta, y-vela | fr: et-le-s'éveiller, le-s'éveiller | de: arouse-dich-selbst, rouse-dich-selbst, und-aufwachen Ps 35:23; Ps 44:23; Ps 59:5

קוֹץ H6975 N-mpc (12×)

Thorn, thorn-bush — prickly plant; literally wilderness scrub, figuratively judgment and worthlessness

The noun קוֹץ (qots) denotes thorns or thorn-bushes, one of Scripture's most versatile botanical images. Its foundational occurrence is in the primeval curse: 'thorns and thistles shall it bring forth' (Gen 3:18), establishing thorns as a sign of the ground's rebellion. Practically, Exodus 22:6 legislates when fire spreads through thorns to a neighbor's grain, and Gideon punishes the men of Succoth with 'thorns of the wilderness' (Judg 8:7, 16). Figuratively, thorns signal desolation (Isa 32:13), futile labor (Jer 12:13), wickedness (2 Sam 23:6), and enemies crackling like burning thorns (Ps 118:12).

thorn, thorn-bush (12×) Thorns or thorn-bushes, used literally and figuratively. Introduced in the primeval curse (Gen 3:18, paired with 'thistles'). Practically: fire hazard (Exod 22:6), instruments of punishment (Judg 8:7, 16). Figuratively: desolation (Isa 32:13), futile labor (Jer 12:13), wickedness (2 Sam 23:6), enemies crackling like burning thorns (Ps 118:12), and hostile neighbors (Ezek 28:24). THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: And-thorn, and-thorn, but-thorns | es: como-espino, espino, espinos | fr: Et-épine, [וקצים], [קוץ] | de: Dornen, Dornen-von, [וקוץ] Gen 3:18; Exod 22:6; Judg 8:7; Judg 8:16; 2Sam 23:6

קוֹץ H6976 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Koz / Hakkoz; a proper name for a Judahite clan head and a priestly family in post-exilic Israel.

A proper masculine name, Qots (Koz), often appearing with the definite article as Haqqots (Hakkoz). It designates two distinct figures: a name in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chr 4:8) and, more prominently, the head of the seventh priestly division assigned by lot in David's organization of temple service (1 Chr 24:10). The priestly family of Hakkoz reappears in the post-exilic period: some descendants could not prove their genealogy and were excluded from the priesthood (Ezra 2:61; Neh 7:63), while others contributed to rebuilding Jerusalem's walls (Neh 3:4, 21).

Koz / Hakkoz (proper noun, priestly family) (6×) The proper noun Qots (Koz), often with the definite article as Haqqots (Hakkoz), referring to a Judahite clan head and a priestly family. English renders it 'Hakkoz' or 'Koz,' Spanish as 'Hacos'/'Hacoz,' reflecting transliteration variation. In 1 Chronicles 4:8, Qots appears in the Judahite genealogy. More significantly, Hakkoz heads the seventh priestly course (1 Chr 24:10). His descendants faced a genealogical crisis after the exile — unable to prove their priestly lineage, they were barred from service (Ezra 2:61 = Neh 7:63). Yet other members of the family are credited with rebuilding sections of Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah (Neh 3:4, 21), suggesting eventual rehabilitation. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: Hakkoz, and-Qots, for-Haqqots | es: Hacos, Hacoz, Y-Qots | fr: [הקוץ], [וקוץ], [להקוץ] | de: [הקוץ], [וקוץ], [להקוץ] 1Chr 4:8; 1Chr 24:10; Ezra 2:61; Neh 3:4; Neh 3:21

קְוֻצּוֹת H6977 N-fpc / 3ms (2×)

locks of hair; curled or wavy tresses, emphasizing abundant or beautiful hair

This poetic term describes locks or curls of hair, appearing exclusively in Song of Solomon's intimate descriptions. The lover's hair is described as 'wet with dew,' while the beloved's locks are 'like date clusters, black as a raven.' The term emphasizes hair's aesthetic quality—its texture, fullness, and beauty. The root's etymology remains obscure, with cognates in Syriac and Arabic suggesting hair falling over the forehead. The usage is exclusively poetic, capturing hair's romantic and sensual dimensions in love poetry.

(2×) Song of Solomon 5:2 describes 'my locks' (qevutsotai) wet with night dew, while 5:11 depicts 'his locks' (qevutsotav) as bushy and black as ravens. Spanish 'rizos' (curls), French 'boucles' (curls/locks), German transliterations all point to curled or wavy hair. The possessive suffixes ('my locks,' 'his locks') create intimacy in the dialogue between lovers. The 5:2 context pictures the lover standing outside at night with dew-drenched hair, seeking entrance. The 5:11 context celebrates the beloved's head and hair in extravagant metaphors (gold, ravens, date clusters). This is purely aesthetic-romantic vocabulary, celebrating hair's beauty and sensuality in courtship poetry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-locks, my-locks | es: mis-rizos, sus-rizos | fr: mes-boucles, ses-boucles | de: [קוצותיו], [קוצותי] Song 5:2; Song 5:11

קָוְקָו H6978 N-ms (4×)

line, measuring line; possibly 'mighty' (uncertain, debated meaning in Isaiah 18)

A difficult word appearing only in Isaiah 18:2, 7 in the phrase describing 'a nation [of] line, line' or 'a nation mighty, mighty.' Some interpreters take it as a reduplication meaning 'mighty' (related to Arabic 'strength'). Others see it as 'of measuring line, measuring line'—a nation that measures out (conquers) lands. The RV translates 'meting out,' suggesting territorial conquest. The reduplication intensifies the meaning, but the exact sense remains debated. Modern translations vary significantly.

(4×) Isaiah 18:2 and 18:7 both use the phrase גּוֹי קַו־קָו (or קָוְקָו) describing a fearsome nation. Traditional interpretation sees 'mighty, mighty' (reduplication for emphasis). Others read 'of line, line' suggesting a nation that measures/conquers lands. Spanish cordel (measuring line) and French ligne (line) reflect the measuring-line interpretation, though some versions opt for 'powerful.' The reduplication creates intensity, whether martial prowess or imperial expansion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: line, line- | es: cordel, de-cordel- | fr: ligne | de: Linie Isa 18:2; Isa 18:7

קוּר H6979a V-Qal-Perf-1cs (2×)

I dug; to excavate, particularly for creating a well or water source

This verb describes digging or excavating, specifically for water access. It appears in parallel boasts by Hezekiah (2 Kings) and his Assyrian adversary (Isaiah) about digging wells in foreign lands. The first-person perfect 'I dug' emphasizes personal achievement in securing water supplies during military campaigns. Some scholars suggest textual corruption, proposing karati ('I cut, dug') as original reading. The verb captures the essential survival skill of finding and accessing underground water when campaigning in arid regions.

(2×) 2 Kings 19:24 and Isaiah 37:25 preserve identical boasts: 'I dug (wells) and drank foreign waters,' demonstrating military self-sufficiency. The verb stands alone as first-person perfect statement of accomplishment. Spanish 'cavé' (I dug), French and German 'dug' all confirm excavation action. The context contrasts human achievement with divine sovereignty—whether speaker is Hezekiah or the Assyrian boaster, the claim asserts ability to overcome geographical obstacles through engineering. Well-digging represented crucial military logistics, enabling armies to operate far from natural water sources. The parallel passages suggest this may have been proverbial language for military resourcefulness and conquest capability.

DIGGING AND EXCAVATING
en: dug | es: cavé | fr: [קרתי], dug | de: [קרתי], dug 2Kgs 19:24; Isa 37:25

קָרַר H6979b Prep-k / V-Hifil-Inf (2×)

to keep fresh, keep cool; to preserve something in fresh or cool condition, particularly water or wickedness

This Hiphil verb describes keeping something fresh or cool, appearing in Jeremiah's metaphor of Jerusalem preserving wickedness. The comparison involves a well keeping its water fresh and cool—a positive image applied ironically to evil's maintenance. The causative stem indicates active preservation, not passive coolness. One occurrence uses 'like keeping fresh' in simile, the other states 'she keeps fresh' her wickedness. The verb evokes the contrast between the beneficial coolness of fresh water and the perverse freshness of continual evil.

(2×) Jeremiah 6:7a employs the simile 'as a well keeps its water cool/fresh' (ka-haqir bor meimav), while 6:7b states 'she keeps fresh her wickedness' (heqerah ra'atah). Spanish shows this with 'Como brota/brota' (As it gushes/it gushes), French and German preserve the verb in transliteration. The image depicts Jerusalem actively maintaining evil's vitality as a well maintains water freshness. This is negative sustained vigor—wickedness doesn't grow stale or diminish but remains perpetually active and potent. The metaphor leverages the desirable quality (fresh water) to highlight the perverse quality (fresh evil). The term appears only in this prophetic oracle, crafting vivid imagery for persistent rebellion. WINTER COLD SEASON
en: like-keeping-fresh, she-keeps-fresh | es: Como-brota, brota | fr: [הקרה], [כהקיר] | de: [הקרה], [כהקיר] Jer 6:7

קָרַר H6979c Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (2×)

to tear down, shatter; to demolish walls or break down structures, possibly with shattering force

This Pilpel verb describes violent demolition, particularly of walls or defensive structures. It appears in Numbers' oracle about Moab and Isaiah's description of Jerusalem's siege, though both texts present interpretive challenges. The participial form 'tearing down' suggests ongoing destructive action. The root may relate to breaking, shattering, or demolishing, with intensity conveyed through the Pilpel doubled stem. Some scholars emend the text, but the consistent sense across occurrences points to forceful destruction of architectural elements.

(2×) Numbers 24:17 describes the coming ruler 'shattering' (veqarqar) Moab's sons, while Isaiah 22:5 depicts 'breaking down walls' (meqarqar qir) during siege. Spanish uses 'destruirá/derribando' (will destroy/tearing down), confirming demolition semantics. The Numbers passage employs parallel verbs 'strike down' and 'shatter,' both depicting violent conquest. The Isaiah context describes the Day of the Lord with 'battering down walls and crying to the mountains,' capturing siege warfare's chaos. Both passages share themes of violent destruction, whether prophetic judgment against Moab or actual historical siege of Jerusalem. The doubled-root form intensifies the basic demolition meaning, emphasizing thorough, forceful destruction. BREAKING AND UPROOTING
en: and-shatters, breaking-down | es: derribando, y-destruirá | fr: [מקרקר], et-shatters | de: [מקרקר], und-shatters Num 24:17; Isa 22:5

קוּר H6980 Conj-w / N-mpc (2×)

webs, threads; the fine filaments spun by spiders, used metaphorically for worthless schemes

This term denotes spider webs or the individual threads comprising them, appearing exclusively in Isaiah's condemnation of wicked schemers. The imagery depicts evil plots as fragile and useless as spider silk—'their webs will not become garments' because they're too flimsy for practical use. The parallelism with 'eggs' and 'viper' creates a cluster of dangerous-but-futile imagery. The construct form 'webs of spider' specifies the arachnid source. This metaphor emphasizes the insubstantial nature of wicked plans despite elaborate construction.

(2×) Isaiah 59:5 describes the wicked weaving 'spider-threads' (qurei akkabish), while 59:6 states 'their webs' (qurehem) won't serve as clothing. Spanish 'telas' (webs/fabrics), French and German transliterations with 'webs' confirm the spider-silk meaning. The context creates extended metaphor: they hatch viper eggs and weave spider webs, but both activities produce danger and futility rather than nourishment or protection. The 59:6 verse explicitly declares these webs useless for garment-making, too fragile to clothe or cover. This is figurative language for wicked schemes—elaborate, carefully constructed, yet ultimately worthless and unable to provide the security or benefit their creators imagine. FLOWING WATER
en: Their-webs, and-webs-of | es: Sus-telas, y-telas-de | fr: [וקורי], [קוריהם] | de: [וקורי], [קוריהם] Isa 59:5; Isa 59:6

קוֹרֵא H6981 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Kore; personal name of Levites, including gatekeepers and one who distributed offerings in Hezekiah's time

Kore is the name of at least two Levites in Chronicles. First Chronicles 9:19 and 26:1 refer to Kore son of Ebiasaph, a Korahite gatekeeper responsible for the threshold of the tent—a position of trust guarding the sanctuary. Second Chronicles 31:14 mentions Kore son of Imnah, a Levite stationed at the East Gate who distributed freewill offerings during Hezekiah's reforms. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to call' or 'partridge.' These Levites served in temple management, linking the name to faithful service in God's house.

(3×) Three references identify Levitical figures named Kore: a gatekeeper (1 Chronicles 9:19, 26:1, possibly same individual) and an offering distributor (2 Chronicles 31:14, different person). The gatekeeping role involves guarding sacred thresholds, while the distribution role manages consecrated gifts. The bracketed forms in German and French note morphological variations (with/without conjunction, different vocalizations like קֹרֵא vs. קוֹרֵא). Both roles emphasize faithful stewardship of holy things. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Qore, and-Kore | es: Coré, y-Qore | fr: [וקורא], [קורא], [קרא] | de: [וקורא], [קורא], rief 1Chr 9:19; 1Chr 26:1; 2Chr 31:14

קוֹרָה H6982 N-fs (5×)

rafter, beam; a structural timber used in roofing or ceiling construction

A noun for a structural timber, particularly a rafter or ceiling beam. In Genesis 19:8 Lot invokes the protection of 'my roof' (literally 'my beam'), reflecting the ancient Near Eastern law of hospitality under one's roof-tree. In 2 Kings 6:2, 5 the sons of the prophets cut beams for a new dwelling, and one axe head famously falls into the Jordan. Second Chronicles 3:7 mentions the beams of Solomon's temple overlaid with gold, and Song of Songs 1:17 celebrates cedar beams in a pastoral love setting. Spanish 'vigas' and French 'poutres' both denote substantial structural timbers.

(5×) A structural roof beam or rafter used in building construction. In Gen 19:8 'my roof-beam' stands metonymically for the shelter of one's house, grounding the hospitality obligation. The prophetic community cuts beams for a new dwelling in 2 Kgs 6:2, 5. In 2 Chr 3:7 temple beams are overlaid with gold, and Song 1:17 praises cedar beams in a pastoral setting. Spanish 'vigas' (beams) and French 'poutres' (rafters) converge on the structural timber sense, while the suffix form in Genesis shows the personal, protective dimension. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15269 WITH 5 SENSES
en: beam, beams-of, my-roof | es: Vigas-de, la-viga, las-vigas | fr: Les-poutres, [הקרות], beam | de: [הקרות], [קרות], beam Gen 19:8; 2Kgs 6:2; 2Kgs 6:5; 2Chr 3:7; Song 1:17

קוּשׁ H6983 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (1×)

to lay bait, to set a snare or trap (metaphorically, to entrap in injustice)

A verb meaning to lay bait or set a trap, used figuratively for legal entrapment. Isaiah 29:21 condemns those who 'lay a snare for the arbiter in the gate,' perverting justice through manipulation and false testimony. The image draws from hunting practice—setting hidden traps for prey—applied to courtroom corruption where the innocent are caught in fabricated charges. The parallel verb yaqosh shares similar meaning, creating wordplay around ensnaring and entrapment.

(1×) To lay a snare or trap for someone, specifically in legal contexts where justice is perverted. Isaiah 29:21 uses this verb (with lamed preposition, 'they lay a snare for') to describe corrupt officials who trap honest judges or witnesses in the gate (the place of legal proceedings). Some translations leave the form untransliterated, but Spanish 'ponen trampa' (they set a trap) captures the hunting metaphor applied to judicial corruption. The verb evokes calculated malice—preparing hidden danger for the righteous. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: they-lay-a-snare | es: ponen-trampa | fr: [יקשון] | de: [יקשון] Isa 29:21

קוּשָׁיָהוּ H6984 N-proper-ms (1×)

Kushaiah, a Levite mentioned in genealogical records

A personal name of uncertain formation appearing in 1 Chronicles 15:17, where Kushaiah is identified as a Levite involved in David's transport of the ark. The name's etymology is disputed; some scholars find echoes of a deity name (Qus), though this remains speculative. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:44 calls this same person Kishi, suggesting either variant spellings or textual transmission issues. The Septuagint's transliteration varies across manuscripts, reflecting the name's uncertain vocalization.

(1×) The name of a Levitical figure participating in David's preparations to bring the ark to Jerusalem. The form may incorporate a theophoric element, though this is debated. Since the Chronicles genealogies preserve multiple spellings (Kushaiah in 15:17, Kishi in 6:44), either scribal variation or genuine alternative forms are possible. Most translations transliterate the name with minimal adaptation, acknowledging its opacity. His role in the ark narrative associates him with sacred music and Levitical worship leadership. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kushayahu | es: Cusáyas | fr: [קושיהו] | de: [קושיהו] 1Chr 15:17

קֶטֶן H6985 Adj-ms (1×)

a little, a small amount (meaning uncertain, possibly textually corrupt)

This adjective appears only in Ezekiel 16:47 in a problematic phrase. Most major ancient versions (Greek, Syriac) omit it entirely, suggesting early textual confusion. The Masoretic Text reads something like 'as a little, briefly' in the midst of God's accusation that Jerusalem acted even more corruptly than Sodom. Scholars propose numerous emendations: reading 'small' (qatan), 'you were wrapped up,' or inserting 'behold' instead. The uncertainty reflects either rare vocabulary or scribal corruption.

(1×) An adjective of highly uncertain meaning, appearing only in Ezekiel 16:47's rhetorically charged comparison between Jerusalem and Sodom. If the text is sound, it might mean 'a little' or 'briefly,' suggesting Jerusalem surpassed Sodom's wickedness in short order. However, the word's omission in ancient versions and the passage's difficult syntax suggest possible corruption. Most modern translations acknowledge the problem by either bracketing the term or choosing 'a little' provisionally while noting textual issues in margins. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: a-little | es: poco | fr: goutte | de: [קטן] Ezek 16:47

קֹטֶב H6986 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

destruction, pestilence; deadly calamity, often personified as an agent of judgment

This noun denotes destruction or deadly pestilence—a force of catastrophic judgment. Deuteronomy 32:24 pairs it with 'burning heat' (resheph) among the disasters God sends. Psalm 91:6 mentions 'the destruction that wastes at noonday,' parallel to 'the pestilence that walks in darkness.' Isaiah 28:2 speaks of a 'tempest of destruction.' Hosea 13:14 personifies it: 'O Death, where are your plagues? O Sheol, where is your destruction?'—divine forces summoned against Israel. The term evokes violent ruin, whether by disease, disaster, or divine wrath.

(3×) Four contexts present destruction as judgment: covenant curses (Deuteronomy), protection from disaster (Psalm), prophetic warning (Isaiah), and death personified (Hosea). The Spanish 'destrucción' and translations of 'pestilence' or 'destruction' show semantic overlap between disease and ruin. Hosea's personification treats destruction as Sheol's weapon, while Psalm 91 pictures it prowling at noon. The term belongs to judgment vocabulary—divine instruments of catastrophic harm, whether natural disaster or plague. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-destruction, nor-the-destruction, of-destruction | es: de-destrucción, destrucción, y-destrucción | fr: [קטב], de-peste, et-destruction | de: [קטב], noch-der-destruction, und-destruction Deut 32:24; Ps 91:6; Isa 28:2

קֶטֶב H6987 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

destruction, ruin, especially from plague or pestilence

A masculine noun denoting destruction, particularly associated with plague. It appears in poetic parallelism with 'pestilence' (deber) in Psalm 91:6 and with 'death' in Hosea 13:14. Deuteronomy 32:24 uses it alongside 'burning heat' (resheph) to describe covenant curses. The suffixed form in Hosea ('your destruction') personifies death and Sheol, with God challenging them rhetorically. The word evokes catastrophic, often divinely-sent devastation, especially epidemic disease.

(1×) Destruction or devastating ruin, frequently paired with plague vocabulary in poetic texts. The term appears in Deuteronomy's covenant curses (paired with resheph, 'burning fever'), in Psalm 91's protection promises (parallel to deber, 'pestilence'), and in Hosea's taunt of death. The Hosea instance preserves an archaic suffixed form (qatabka, 'your destruction'), showing morphological antiquity. Spanish 'destrucción' and French 'ruine' convey the catastrophic sense, though some translations leave the Hebrew forms untransliterated, respecting their poetic density and textual challenges. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: your-destruction | es: tu-destrucción | fr: ruine | de: [קטבך] Hos 13:14

קְטוֹרָה H6988 N-fs (1×)

incense, the smoke of sacrifice rising from the altar

A feminine noun meaning incense or sacrificial smoke. Deuteronomy 33:10 describes the Levites' priestly duties: 'They shall put incense before you, and whole burnt offering on your altar.' The term relates to the verb 'to burn incense' and designates either the incense itself or its ascending smoke. Some interpreters debate whether this refers specifically to incense offerings or more broadly to any sacrificial smoke, though the parallel with burnt offering suggests the former is more likely.

(1×) Incense or the smoke arising from incense burned in worship, mentioned in Moses' blessing of Levi. The phrase 'they shall put qetorah before you' describes the priestly prerogative of offering fragrant smoke to God, distinct from animal sacrifice. Translations consistently render this 'incense' (Spanish incienso, German Weihrauch), recognizing it as a technical cultic term. The Levitical monopoly on incense offerings (later violated by kings like Uzziah) made this a defining priestly function, transforming physical fragrance into symbol of prayers ascending heavenward. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: incense | es: incienso | fr: encens | de: Weihrauch Deut 33:10

קְטוּרָה H6989 N-proper-fs (4×)

Keturah (personal name, Abraham's wife after Sarah's death)

The name of Abraham's wife after Sarah died, mother of six sons who became Arabian tribal ancestors. Genesis 25:1, 4 record her marriage to Abraham and her descendants. First Chronicles 1:32-33 parallel this genealogy, though there she is called a concubine rather than wife. The name may derive from a root meaning 'incense' (קְטֹרֶת), possibly suggesting 'perfumed one' or 'incense woman,' though this is uncertain. Through Keturah's sons, Abraham became the father of numerous Arabian peoples.

(4×) Genesis 25:1 introduces Keturah: 'Abraham took another wife, whose name was Keturah.' Genesis 25:4 concludes her genealogy. First Chronicles 1:32 calls her Abraham's concubine (פִּילֶגֶשׁ) and lists her sons. First Chronicles 1:33 continues the genealogy. Spanish Quetura and French Keturah preserve the name via transliteration. The Septuagint renders it Χεττουρα (Chettoura). Her descendants include Midian, Sheba, and other Arabian tribes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Keturah, Qeturah | es: Qeturah, Quetura | fr: Keturah, [קטורה] | de: Keturas, [קטורה], war-Ketura Gen 25:1; Gen 25:4; 1Chr 1:32; 1Chr 1:33

קוּט H6990 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to break, snap, or be cut off (meaning highly uncertain, possibly corrupt text)

A verb of extremely doubtful meaning, appearing only in Job 8:14. The context discusses the wicked person whose hope is fragile: 'whose confidence shall break' or 'whose hope is a fragile thing.' However, textual critics widely suspect corruption. Proposed emendations include reading 'spider webs' (qure qayits, an Aramaism) or other terms for fragile materials. The parallelism with 'spider's house' in the next line requires something expressing brittleness or impermanence, but the exact original word remains elusive.

(1×) A verb tentatively meaning 'to snap' or 'break,' used to describe the fragility of the wicked person's confidence in Job 8:14. The text's difficulty is evident: some treat it as a verb ('his hope snaps'), others as a noun ('a fragile thing'). The semantic requirement is clear—something conveying sudden breaking or inherent weakness—but lexical certainty is impossible. Most translations leave the form untransliterated or offer provisional renderings ('is cut off'), acknowledging that the parallel with 'spider's house' guides interpretation more than confidence in the Hebrew text itself. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: is-cut-off | es: confianza-será-cortada | fr: יקוט | de: [יקוט] Job 8:14

קָטַל H6991 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (3×)

to slay, kill; poetic/late term for taking life, used of human violence and divine judgment

This verb means to slay or kill, appearing in poetic and late biblical texts. Job 13:15 expresses defiant faith: 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.' Job 24:14 describes the murderer who rises to kill the poor. Psalm 139:19 petitions God: 'If only you would slay the wicked!' The term is more elevated or literary than the common 'harag,' used in poetry and wisdom literature. The root is shared across Semitic languages (Arabic qatala, Aramaic qetal), indicating ancient common vocabulary for killing.

(3×) Three Joban and Psalmic uses present killing in different lights: Job's trust despite mortal threat (13:15), the wicked murderer's predatory violence (24:14), and the psalmist's plea for divine retribution (139:19). The Spanish captures tense distinctions ('me matará', 'mata', 'matarás'), tracking Job's expectation, the murderer's habitual action, and the psalmist's wish. The cross-linguistic agreement on 'kill/slay' confirms the straightforward, if poetic, meaning. This is the vocabulary of death-dealing, whether feared, condemned, or invoked. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: he-kills, he-slays-me, you-would-kill | es: mata-, mataras, me-matará | fr: tuer, יקטל, יקטלני-moi | de: [יקטל], [יקטלני], du-würde-töten Job 13:15; Job 24:14; Ps 139:19

קְטַל H6992 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (7×)

To slay, kill (active); to be slain, killed (passive) — Aramaic verb exclusive to Daniel

The Aramaic verb קְטַל ('to slay') appears only in the book of Daniel, where it carries the full weight of imperial violence and divine judgment. In its active forms, Nebuchadnezzar wields absolute power to kill whomever he wishes (Dan 5:19), his soldiers slay the men who threw Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego into the furnace (Dan 3:22), and the execution of the wise men is decreed (Dan 2:14). In its passive forms, Belshazzar is slain the very night the handwriting appears on the wall (Dan 5:30), and the fourth beast is killed before the Ancient of Days (Dan 7:11). Spanish distinguishes the voices clearly: mato/mataba (active) versus fue-muerto (passive).

1. to be slain (passive) (4×) The passive voice: to be slain or killed, expressed through the Pe'il (passive participle) and Hitpe'el (reflexive-passive) stems. Belshazzar 'was slain' (qtil, Dan 5:30) on the night of the handwriting on the wall, the fourth beast 'was killed' (qtilat, Dan 7:11) before the heavenly court, and the wise men 'were being killed' (mitqatlin, Dan 2:13) under Nebuchadnezzar's sweeping decree. Spanish fue-muerto and iban-a-ser-matados clearly mark the passive construction. The Hitpe'el infinitive at Dan 2:13 (lehitqetalah) shows the decree's effect as an ongoing passive process. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: to-be-killed, was-killed, were-being-killed | es: fue-muerta, fue-muerto, iban-a-ser-matados | fr: [להתקטלה], [מתקטלין], [קטיל] | de: [להתקטלה], [מתקטלין], [קטיל] Dan 2:13; Dan 5:30; Dan 7:11

2. to slay, kill (active) (3×) The active voice: to slay or kill, using the Pe'al participle and Pa'el perfect and infinitive. Nebuchadnezzar's absolute sovereignty is described with the active participle — 'whom he wished, he killed' (qatel, Dan 5:19). The fiery furnace kills the soldiers who carried out the king's command (qattil, Dan 3:22), and Arioch receives orders 'to kill' the wise men (leqattalah, Dan 2:14). Spanish mato/mataba and para-matar consistently render the active agency, distinguishing this sense from the passive 'being slain.' KILLING AND REMOVING

en: killed, killing, to-kill | es: mataba, mató, para-matar | fr: [לקטלה], [קטל] | de: [לקטלה], [קטל] Dan 2:14; Dan 3:22; Dan 5:19

קְטֶל H6993 Prep-m / N-ms (1×)

slaughter, killing, especially violent killing in battle

A masculine noun denoting slaughter or massacre. The sole occurrence is textually complicated: Obadiah 9 in the Masoretic Text has the preposition attached to this word, but most scholars follow the Septuagint in moving it to verse 10. The emended reading ('from the slaughter') better fits Obadiah's accusation that Edom will be cut off forever 'because of the violence done to your brother Jacob.' The word shares roots with verbs of killing and appears in contexts of widespread, violent death.

(1×) Slaughter or massacre, appearing in Obadiah's oracle against Edom with textual complications. The word (qetel) derives from roots meaning 'to kill,' and in context refers to Edom's participation in violence against Judah during Jerusalem's fall. Modern translations consistently render it 'slaughter' (Spanish matanza, French carnage, German Gemetzel), though most follow text-critical decisions to place the phrase in verse 10 rather than 9. The term evokes not individual killing but mass violence and bloodshed in war. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: by-slaughter | es: por-matanza | fr: par-carnage. | de: durch-Gemetzel Obad 1:9

קָטַן H6994 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (4×)

be small, insignificant, unworthy; make small, diminish

A verb meaning to be small, insignificant, or unworthy in the Qal, and to make small or diminish in the Hiphil. Genesis 32:10 has Jacob confessing 'I am unworthy of all the steadfast love' (literally 'I am too small for'). Second Samuel 7:19 and its parallel (1 Chr 17:17) express that God's promises are too great: 'this was a small thing in your eyes' (you went beyond what was expected). Amos 8:5 condemns merchants who 'make the ephah small' (cheat with undersized measures).

(4×) Genesis 32:10 has Jacob say 'I am not worthy (קָטֹנְתִּי) of all the kindness'—expressing humility before God's blessings. Second Samuel 7:19 and 1 Chronicles 17:17 both have David marvel 'this was small in your eyes' (וַתִּקְטָן זֹאת בְּעֵינֶיךָ)—even covenant promises seemed insufficient to God's generosity. Amos 8:5 condemns 'making the ephah small' (לְהַקְטִין עָאיְפָה)—using dishonest measures. Spanish pequeño soy (I am small/unworthy) and achicar (to make small) capture both Qal and Hiphil senses. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: I-am-unworthy, and-it-was-small, and-was-small | es: Pequeño-soy, Y-fue-pequeña, para-achicar | fr: Je-suis-indigne, [ותקטן], et-cela-fut-petit | de: [ותקטן], [להקטין], und-es-war-klein Gen 32:10; 2Sam 7:19; 1Chr 17:17; Amos 8:5

קְטֹן H6995 N-fsc / 1cs (2×)

my little finger; hyperbolic reference to minimal personal attribute exceeding another's maximum, emphasizing superiority

This anatomical term appears in Rehoboam's arrogant boast to Israel's northern tribes. The young king declares 'my little finger is thicker than my father's loins,' meaning his lightest burden will exceed Solomon's heaviest. The phrase uses the smallest, weakest part of one's body to dwarf the strongest part of another's, creating maximum contrast. The construct form with first-person suffix emphasizes personal possession. This became proverbial language for surpassing superiority, though Rehoboam's boast precipitated Israel's division.

(2×) 1 Kings 12:10 and 2 Chronicles 10:10 preserve identical wording: 'my little finger' (qatoni) is thicker than my father's waist. Spanish 'mi meñique/meñique de mí,' French 'mon petit finger,' German 'mein klein finger' all identify the smallest finger. The context is Rehoboam's foolish response to Israel's petition for lighter taxation. His young advisors coached this bravado, contrasting his little finger's thickness with Solomon's loins (waist/hips), meaning his mildest governance will exceed Solomon's harshest. The hyperbole backfired catastrophically, splitting the kingdom. The term functions in this proverbial insult, leveraging anatomy for political rhetoric. The little finger represents one's minimal capacity or lightest touch. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: my-little-finger | es: meñique-de-mí, mi-meñique | fr: [קטני], mon-petit-finger | de: [קטני], mein-klein-finger 1Kgs 12:10; 2Chr 10:10

קָטָן H6996a Adj-fp (46×)

Small, young, or least; of diminutive size, younger age, or lowest rank within a group

A flexible adjective spanning physical size, age, and social standing. In family narratives, qatan identifies the younger child — Jacob over Esau (Gen 27:15), Rachel as the younger sister (Gen 29:16). In prophetic and legal contexts it denotes the least significant: "from the least of them to the greatest" (Jer 6:13). Spanish distinguishes pequeño (small) from menor (younger), revealing how context shifts the same Hebrew word between physical and relational senses. The psalmist's assurance that God blesses "both small and great" (Ps 115:13) captures the social dimension beautifully.

1. small in size or degree (27×) The basic adjectival sense: small in physical size, quantity, or importance. Covers everything from small stones (Deut 25:13) to insignificant matters (Num 22:18). Spanish pequeño and French petit map directly here. When applied to persons, it often implies social insignificance rather than physical stature, as in David's youth before Goliath (1 Sam 17:14). SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-small, little, small | es: pequeña, pequeñas, pequeño | fr: et-petit, jeune, petit | de: [קטן], ein-kleines, jung Gen 44:20; Num 22:18; Deut 25:13; Deut 25:14; 2Sam 9:12

2. young or younger in age (12×) Young or younger in age, especially within sibling relationships. Frequently substantivized with the article — haqqatan, 'the younger one' — as with Jacob (Gen 27:42) and Rachel (Gen 29:16). Spanish el menor and French le plus jeune reveal the comparative force. The pattern of God choosing the younger over the elder (Gen 9:24; 1 Sam 16:11) makes this sense theologically loaded throughout the patriarchal narratives. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: the-little, the-younger, the-youngest | es: el-menor, el-pequeño, la-menor | fr: [הקטן], [הקטנה], [הקטנות] | de: [הקטן], [הקטנה], [הקטנות] Gen 9:24; Gen 27:15; Gen 27:42; Gen 29:16; Gen 29:18

3. least or smallest among a group (7×) Superlative or elative use: the least, smallest, most insignificant member of a group. Often constructed with min (from) or a possessive suffix — "from the least of them" (Jer 6:13; 42:1). Saul protests he is from the smallest clan (1 Sam 9:21). Spanish desde el menor de ellos captures the partitive construction well. This sense carries theological weight: God repeatedly works through what is qatan. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-you-trust, from-smallest-of, from-smallest-of-them | es: a-los-pequeños, de-la-más-pequeña-de, desde-el-menor-de-ellos | fr: [הקטנים], [למקטנם], [מקטנם] | de: [הקטנים], [למקטנם], [מקטנם] 1Sam 9:21; 2Kgs 18:24; Ps 115:13; Isa 36:9; Jer 6:13

קָטֹן H6996b Conj-w (55×)

Small, little, or insignificant; younger or youngest in age or rank; the lower bound in 'from least to greatest.'

An adjective of smallness that touches physical size, age, and social standing. It is the word for the 'lesser light' God made to rule the night (Gen 1:16) and for the 'youngest brother' whom Joseph's brothers must bring from Canaan (Gen 42:13). In many family narratives it carries the charged theological theme of divine reversal — God choosing the small over the great, the youngest over the firstborn. Spanish consistently renders it 'pequeño' for size but shifts to 'menor' for age comparisons, revealing the semantic stretch. In the formulaic phrase 'from the least to the greatest' (מִקָּטֹן וְעַד־גָּדוֹל), it anchors an inclusive social range that means 'absolutely everyone.'

1. small, little, insignificant (28×) Small in size, quantity, or importance — the basic adjectival sense. French 'petit' and German 'klein' match straightforwardly. Moses judges the 'small' matters alongside the great (Exod 18:22, 26), Hannah makes a 'small' robe for Samuel each year (1 Sam 2:19), and Saul protests 'Am I not small?' — claiming insignificance before his anointing (1 Sam 15:17). The word can describe physical objects, social status, or abstract degree. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: little, small, the-small | es: Pequeño, el-pequeño, pequeña | fr: [קטן], le-petit, petit | de: [קטן], der-klein, klein Exod 18:22; Exod 18:26; Deut 1:17; 1Sam 2:19; 1Sam 15:17

2. younger, youngest, least (18×) Younger or youngest in age, or least in rank — the comparative and superlative sense used especially within families. Spanish 'el menor' and Arabic ʾaṣghar (elative form) confirm the comparative force. Joseph's brothers identify Benjamin as 'the youngest' (Gen 42:13, 15, 20, 32), Jacob crosses his hands to bless the younger Ephraim over Manasseh (Gen 48:14, 17), and David is described as 'the youngest' of Jesse's sons (1 Sam 16:11). The theological motif of God elevating the least runs through many of these passages. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-at-the-youngest, and-the-youngest, smallest-of | es: el-menor, el-pequeño, la-pequeña | fr: der-petit, et-le-youngest, et-à-le-youngest | de: [הקטן], [קטן], das-kleine Gen 1:16; Gen 42:13; Gen 42:15; Gen 42:20; Gen 42:32

3. from the least (range formula) (9×) The formulaic use with preposition מִן in the expression 'from the least to the greatest' (מִקָּטֹן וְעַד־גָּדוֹל), marking the lower bound of a complete social or age range. German 'vom Kleinen' preserves the prepositional construction. At Sodom, 'from the least to the greatest' pressed against Lot's door (Gen 19:11); at Ashdod, the LORD's hand struck 'from the least to the greatest' (1 Sam 5:9). The formula is a merism meaning 'every single person without exception.' SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: from-small, from-the-least | es: desde-pequeño | fr: de-petit, petit | de: vom-Kleinen, von-klein, zu-vom-Kleinen Gen 19:11; 1Sam 5:9; 1Sam 30:2; 2Kgs 23:2; 2Kgs 25:26

קָטָן H6997 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hakkatan ('the small one' or 'the youngest'), a post-exilic personal name

A name appearing in Ezra's list of returnees from Babylon, literally meaning 'the small one' or 'the youngest.' Ezra 8:12 identifies someone from the family of Azgad whose father or ancestor was named Hakkatan. The definite article ('the') prefixed to 'small' suggests this was either a nickname (perhaps given to a younger sibling or small-statured person) or became a proper name in its own right. Such descriptive names were common in post-exilic communities.

(1×) A personal name meaning 'the small one' or 'the youngest,' borne by an ancestor of post-exilic returnees in Ezra 8:12. The name's retention of the definite article (ha-qatan) is unusual for a proper name but parallels other biblical names incorporating descriptive elements. Spanish 'el pequeño' (the small one) preserves the meaning, while some translations simply transliterate. The name reflects post-exilic naming practices where descriptive epithets could crystallize into family identifiers, embedding physical or social characteristics into lineage records. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: the-youngest | es: el-pequeño | fr: [הקטן] | de: der-Kleine Ezra 8:12

קָטַף H6998 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (5×)

to pluck off or pull out (twigs, ears of grain, plants); to be plucked

A concrete agricultural verb describing the act of plucking or pulling off vegetation by hand. In Deuteronomy 23:25 it permits plucking ears of grain while passing through a neighbor's field, while in Ezekiel 17:4,22 it appears in the striking eagle allegory where God plucks a tender sprig from the cedar of Lebanon. The Spanish 'arrancar' (to uproot/tear off) and French 'couper' (to cut) capture the forceful manual action. Job 30:4 uses the participle for the destitute who pluck mallow for food.

(5×) To pluck off or pull out vegetation—twigs, ears of grain, or plants—by hand. The cross-lingual glosses converge on manual removal: English 'pluck,' Spanish 'arrancar' (tear off), French 'couper' (cut). All five occurrences involve plant material: the eagle plucking cedar twigs (Ezek 17:4,22), gleaning grain (Deut 23:25), the destitute plucking mallow (Job 30:4), and the Niphal passive 'is plucked off' for a plant withering before harvest (Job 8:12). REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: I-will-pluck, and-you-may-pluck, he-plucked | es: Los-que-arrancan, arrancaré, arrancó | fr: couper, et-tu-pourra-pluck, le-הקטפים | de: [אקטף], [הקטפים], [יקטף] Deut 23:25; Job 8:12; Job 30:4; Ezek 17:4; Ezek 17:22

קָטַר H6999a V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (115×)

To make sacrifices smoke on the altar or burn incense in worship or idolatry; encompasses both Piel (incense) and Hifil (altar offerings) stems.

A distinctly cultic verb whose two main stems divide the ritual world: in the Piel, it describes the burning of incense (qetoret), while in the Hifil it refers to sending the fat portions and sacrifices up in smoke upon the altar. Arabic preserves a parallel split between ʿ (fumigate with incense) and ʾ (kindle a fire), mirroring the Hebrew stem distinction remarkably well. Korean similarly distinguishes 분향하다 (burn incense) from 태우다 (burn on altar). One poetic outlier in Song of Solomon 3:6 uses a participle to evoke fragrant perfuming rather than sacrificial burning, hinting at the aromatic root meaning beneath both cultic uses.

1. burn incense (Piel) (50×) The Piel stem denotes the ritual act of burning incense as worship or, frequently, as idolatrous practice. Arabic ʿ and Swahili -fukiza ubani both specify incense fumigation, matching this cultic sense precisely. Dominant in the prophetic condemnations of Jeremiah and Hosea (e.g., Jer 19:13, Hos 11:2), where Israel burns incense to foreign gods. The 50 occurrences span both legitimate temple worship (1 Sam 2:16) and the illicit high places. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: and-burning-incense, burn-incense, by-burning-incense | es: de-quemar-incienso, para-quemar-incienso, quemando-incienso | fr: brûler-de-l'encens, brûler-de-l'encens, et-brûlant-encens | de: raeuchern, raeucherte, und-verbrennend-incense 1Sam 2:16; 1Kgs 3:3; 1Kgs 9:25; 1Kgs 12:33; 1Kgs 13:1

2. burn sacrifice on altar (Hifil) (45×) The Hifil stem denotes causing the fat, entrails, or whole burnt offerings to go up in smoke on the altar — the quintessential Levitical sacrificial act. Spanish Y-hará-humear ('he will make smoke') captures the causative nuance well. Concentrated in Exodus and Leviticus (Exod 29:13, 18, 25; Lev 1-9), this sense is the technical term for the priestly burning of sacrificial portions, distinct from the incense-specific Piel. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-burned, and-he-burned, and-he-shall-burn | es: Y-hará-humear, Y-quemará, Y-quemó | fr: et—brûler, et-brûla, et-devra-brûler | de: und-er-soll-verbrennen, und-er-verbrannte, und-lass-verbrennen Exod 29:13; Exod 29:18; Exod 29:25; Exod 30:7

3. burn incense (Hifil) (18×) A Hifil-stem usage that is semantically equivalent to the Piel 'burn incense,' appearing especially in Kings and Chronicles to describe worship at high places or the temple incense altar (Exod 30:7-8, 1 Kgs 11:8, 13:2). Korean 분향하다 does not distinguish the stems, treating both as identical, which reflects the real semantic overlap. The 18 occurrences suggest the Hifil could carry an incense meaning when the context or object makes it clear. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: [and-they-burned-incense], and-burning, and-one-burning-incense | es: [y-quemaron-incienso], les-quemaba-incienso, los-que-queman-incienso | fr: [תקטיר], brûlant-encens, brûle | de: [תקטיר], der-verbrennend-incense, raeuchern Exod 30:20; Num 16:40; 1Sam 2:28; 1Kgs 11:8; 1Kgs 13:2

4. (1×) A single passive occurrence in Lev 6:22 (Eng. 6:15) where the grain offering of the anointed priest 'shall be burned' entirely. The multilingual glosses — Spanish se-quemará, French cela-devra-être-brûlé — all render it as a straightforward passive of burning, likely a Hofal or Pual form describing complete consumption rather than the standard Hifil altar-smoking. FIRE AND BURNING

en: it-shall-be-burned | es: se-quemará | fr: cela-devra-être-brûla | de: es-soll-sein-verbrannte Lev 6:22

5. (1×) A unique participial use in Song of Solomon 3:6 describing Solomon's litter as 'perfumed with' myrrh and frankincense. German leaves it untranslated, but French parfumée and Spanish perfumada both catch the aromatic rather than sacrificial sense. This poetic usage reveals the root's underlying meaning of producing fragrant smoke, before it was specialized into cultic vocabulary. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: perfumed-with | es: perfumada-con | fr: parfumée | de: [מקטרת] Song 3:6

מִקְטָר H6999b N-ms (1×)

incense, that which is burned in worship

This masculine noun form denotes incense, parallel to the more common feminine qetoreth. Malachi 1:11 uses it in a remarkable prophecy: 'In every place incense will be offered to my name, and a pure offering.' The verse envisions Gentile worship surpassing corrupt Jewish sacrifices. Some scholars debate whether this is a participial form ('what is burned') or a distinct noun, but the sense is clear: aromatic substances burned as worship. The word's rarity and morphological distinctiveness have led some translators to leave it untransliterated.

(1×) Incense or the material burned as a fragrant offering, appearing in Malachi's vision of universal worship. The prophet contrasts this future pure incense with the polluted offerings of his contemporaries, suggesting even Gentile worship will surpass Israel's corrupted cult. The term (muqtar) may be a participial form emphasizing the action of burning or a distinct nominal form. Spanish and other languages render it 'incienso,' joining it semantically to standard incense terminology despite morphological differences. The context demands something aromatic and symbolically acceptable to God. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: incense | es: incienso | fr: brûler | de: [מקטר] Mal 1:11

מִקְטֶרֶת H6999c Art / N-fp (1×)

incense altars, structures or implements for burning incense

This feminine plural noun designates incense altars or incense-burning implements. Second Chronicles 30:14 records Hezekiah's reformation: 'They removed the altars...and all the incense altars they took away.' The term appears with the definite article, indicating known cult objects. These were likely small altars or stands specifically designed for burning incense, distinct from the main sacrificial altar. Their removal signaled comprehensive cultic purification, eliminating both major and minor idolatrous installations.

(1×) Incense altars or stands used for burning aromatic offerings, mentioned in 2 Chronicles' account of Hezekiah's religious reforms. The plural form with definite article ('the incense altars') suggests multiple small installations throughout Jerusalem dedicated to incense burning, probably both legitimate and illegitimate. Spanish 'incensarios' (censers/incense burners) captures the instrumental sense. Their removal alongside main altars shows the thoroughness of reform—eliminating not just central shrines but the dispersed paraphernalia of incense cult that had proliferated during apostasy. INCENSE CENSER

en: the-incense-altars | es: los-incensarios | fr: [המקטרות] | de: [המקטרות] 2Chr 30:14

קְטַר H7000 N-fp (1×)

enclosed, shut in; possibly 'small' (text likely corrupt)

An adjective of uncertain meaning appearing only in Ezekiel 46:22, describing courts in the temple vision: 'enclosed courts' or possibly 'small courts.' The Masoretic vocalization suggests 'enclosed' (from a root meaning 'bind' or 'shut in'), preserved in Aramaic and Syriac. However, most ancient versions and modern scholars prefer reading 'small courts' (qetannot), which requires only slight consonantal change. The architectural context—describing secondary courtyards—makes 'small' more probable than 'enclosed,' suggesting textual corruption.

(1×) An adjective tentatively meaning 'enclosed' or 'shut in,' modifying courts in Ezekiel's visionary temple. However, the Septuagint, Syriac, and most modern interpreters emend to 'small' (qetannot), which better fits the temple's graded spatial hierarchy where smaller courts adjoin larger ones. Spanish 'pequeños' (small) reflects this emendation. The lexical uncertainty stems from whether scribes preserved a rare word meaning 'enclosed' or whether an original 'small' suffered minor corruption during transmission. Either way, the courts are subordinate spaces within the larger sacred complex. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: enclosed | es: pequeños | fr: se-lamenter | de: [קטרות] Ezek 46:22

קְטַר H7001 Conj-w / N-mpc (3×)

joints, knots; possibly anatomical joints or difficult problems/spells requiring 解 解 solution (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 5 with debated meaning. Daniel 5:6 describes Belshazzar's physical reaction to the writing on the wall: 'the joints of his loins loosened'—possibly his hip joints or knees giving way in terror. Daniel 5:12, 16 speak of Daniel's ability to solve 'knots' or 'difficulties'—either knotty problems requiring 解 solution or possibly magic spells/enchantments needing breaking. The Syriac cognate supports both 'joints' (anatomical) and 'knots/difficulties' (intellectual/magical). The term operates literally (body parts) and figuratively (problems) within the same chapter.

(3×) Two uses in Daniel 5: anatomical (the king's joints loosening in fear, v.6) and intellectual/magical (solving knots/difficulties, vv.12, 16). The cross-linguistic evidence shows this tension: some translations give 'joints' (anatomical), others 'knots' (problems), some bracket the forms (German/French) noting uncertainty. The literal sense involves things bound together (joints, knots), while the figurative extends to bound-up problems needing 解 loose or 解解 loose. Context determines whether physical body parts or intellectual puzzles are meant. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: and-joints-of, and-knots, knots | es: nudos, y-las-articulaciones-de, y-nudos | fr: [וקטר], [וקטרין], [קטרין] | de: [וקטר], [וקטרין], [קטרין] Dan 5:6; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:16

קִטֵּר H7002 Art / N-ms (1×)

incense, the smoke of offerings burned to idols or to YHWH

A masculine or feminine noun denoting incense. Jeremiah 44:21 uses it in God's accusation against Judean refugees in Egypt: 'The incense that you burned in the cities of Judah...' The context is clearly idolatrous worship, incense offered to the Queen of Heaven. Some scholars note morphological irregularities—possibly the definite article prefixed to an unusual form. The gender ambiguity (requiring text-critical adjustment of pronouns) has led some to emend to the standard qetoreth, though the received text is defensible.

(1×) Incense or incense-smoke offered in worship, specifically idolatrous burning to foreign deities in Jeremiah 44. The prophet reminds the people that God witnessed 'the incense' they burned in every Judean city before the exile. Some translations leave the form untransliterated due to morphological oddities, but Spanish 'el incienso' recognizes standard cultic terminology. The word's appearance in an idolatry context shows incense's double-edged nature: the same substance prescribed for YHWH's worship became an instrument of apostasy when directed toward other gods. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: the-incense | es: el-incienso | fr: [הקטר] | de: [הקטר] Jer 44:21

קִטְרוֹן H7003 N-proper-fs (1×)

Kitron, a city in Zebulun's territory that Israel failed to conquer

A place name in the tribal territory of Zebulun. Judges 1:30 lists Kitron among the Canaanite cities that Zebulun failed to drive out, instead subjecting the inhabitants to forced labor. Some scholars identify it with Kattath (Joshua 19:15), though this equation remains uncertain. The site's precise location is unknown, though it lay within Zebulun's northwestern Galilean allotment. The Septuagint's varying transliterations (Kedron, Chevron) reflect geographical uncertainty in later periods.

(1×) A Canaanite city within Zebulun's borders that remained unconquered during the initial Israelite settlement, mentioned in Judges 1:30. The name's etymology is unclear, though some suggest connection to Kattath. Translations preserve the Hebrew name with minor variations (Spanish Kitrón). The city's listing among unconquered sites illustrates the incomplete nature of the conquest—pockets of Canaanite presence persisting within tribal territories, creating ongoing religious and political tensions that would plague Israel throughout the Judges period. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kitron | es: Kitrón | fr: Kitron | de: Kitron Judg 1:30

קְטֹרֶת H7004 Prep-l / N-fs (60×)

Incense — aromatic spices compounded and burned as a sacred offering before YHWH in the tabernacle and temple.

Qetoreth refers to the fragrant smoke rising from the burning of specially compounded spices in Israelite worship. The term is closely tied to the tabernacle and temple cultus: Exodus 30:34-38 prescribes the exact recipe of stacte, onycha, galbanum, and pure frankincense, declaring it holy to YHWH and forbidden for personal use. The altar of incense (mizbeach miqtar qetoreth, Exod 30:1) stood before the veil of the Holy of Holies, and its daily offering morning and evening framed the liturgical day (Exod 30:7-8). Psalm 141:2 transforms the image into prayer: 'Let my prayer be set before you as incense.' The multilingual evidence is remarkably unified — English 'incense,' Spanish incienso, French encens, German Weihrauch — all pointing to a single sacred-aromatic sense without secondary secular usage.

incense, aromatic offering (60×) The aromatic compound of spices ritually burned before YHWH, both the substance itself and the fragrant smoke it produces (Exod 25:6; 30:1, 7-8, 34-38). Used daily on the incense altar in the tabernacle and temple (Lev 16:13; Num 16:7, 17-18; 2 Chr 29:7), and offered by the tribal princes at the dedication (Num 7:14, 86). Psalm 141:2 metaphorically equates prayer with rising incense. Every target language renders it with a single sacred-aromatic term — Spanish incienso, French encens, German Weihrauch. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: incense | es: incienso | fr: encens | de: Weihrauch Exod 25:6; Exod 30:1; Exod 30:7; Exod 30:8; Exod 30:9

קַטָּת H7005 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Qattath, a town in Zebulun's inheritance, possibly identical with Kitron

A place name appearing in Joshua's distribution lists. Joshua 19:15

includes Qattath among the cities allotted to Zebulun. The similarity to Kitron (Judges 1:30) has led many scholars to propose they refer to the same site, though the different spellings raise questions about textual transmission or whether these were genuinely distinct settlements. The Septuagint's transliterations vary, suggesting uncertainty even in antiquity. Like many Zebulunite cities, Qattath's precise location remains unidentified.

(1×) A town in Zebulun's territorial inheritance, listed in Joshua 19:15 among the tribe's allotted cities. The waw-prefixed form ('and Qattath') positions it within a series of Zebulunite settlements. Most translations transliterate the name (Spanish Catat, etc.). The possible identification with Kitron would resolve some geographical puzzles but remains speculative. The name survives in Israel's inheritance records even though the site's exact location was apparently lost in later tradition, illustrating how biblical geography preserves ancient data whose physical referents became obscure over centuries. PERSONAL NAMES to vomit (possibly a textual variant of the standard form)

en: and-Qattath | es: y-Catat | fr: et-Qattath | de: und-Qattath Josh 19:15

קִיאָה H7006 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-mp (1×)

A verb meaning to vomit, appearing in Jeremiah 25:27 with unusual spelling. The Ketiv (written text) has one form, the Qere (read text) has another, with this entry representing the Qere reading. The context is God's command through Jeremiah: 'Drink, be drunk and vomit, fall and rise no more.' The variant spellings likely reflect dialectical or scribal differences rather than semantic distinctions. The imagery is brutal—nations drinking God's cup of wrath until they retch and collapse.

(1×) To vomit or spew out, used in Jeremiah's vivid metaphor of nations forced to drink God's cup of judgment. The imperative form ('and vomit!') intensifies the degrading imagery: nations will be so overwhelmed by divine wrath that they lose all control, vomiting like drunkards. Some translations leave the form untransliterated due to textual variants, but Spanish 'vomitad' captures the crude physicality. The verb's appearance in judgment oracles emphasizes the visceral, humiliating nature of experiencing God's anger—not abstract punishment but embodied disgrace. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-vomit | es: y-vomitad | fr: [וקיו] | de: [וקיו] Jer 25:27

קַיִט H7007 N-ms (1×)

summer, the hot season of the year

An Aramaic noun meaning summer, appearing in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel 2:35 describes how the various metals and clay 'became like chaff from the summer threshing floors.' The Aramaic term parallels the Hebrew qayits. The image draws from agricultural practice: during summer harvest, grain was winnowed, producing chaff that wind scattered. This metaphor emphasizes the complete, traceless disappearance of earthly kingdoms before God's eternal reign.

(1×) Summer, specifically the harvest season when grain is threshed and winnowed. In Daniel 2:35, 'chaff from the summer threshing floors' evokes the dry, hot season when harvested grain is processed and waste material blown away. Some translations leave the Aramaic form untransliterated while others render it 'summer' (Spanish verano, French été). The seasonal reference anchors the visionary imagery in agricultural reality familiar to Daniel's audience—summer's wind carrying off worthless chaff just as God's kingdom will sweep away human empires. SUMMER SEASON FRUIT en: summer | es: verano | fr: été | de: [קיט] Dan 2:35

קִיטוֹר H7008 Prep-k / N-msc (4×)

thick smoke, dense smoke (rising from burning)

A noun denoting thick, dense smoke rising from fire or destruction. Genesis 19:28 twice describes the smoke rising from the destroyed cities of the plain 'like the smoke of a furnace.' Psalm 119:83 uses it metaphorically: 'though I am like a wineskin in the smoke' (blackened and shriveled by exposure). Psalm 148:8 may reference smoke, though ancient versions apparently read 'frost' (קֶרַח), creating textual uncertainty. The word evokes the dense, choking smoke of intense conflagration.

(4×) Genesis 19:28 twice mentions 'the smoke of the land went up like the smoke of a furnace' (כְּקִיטֹר הַכִּבְשָׁן) after Sodom's destruction. Psalm 119:83 uses a vivid simile: 'I have become like a wineskin in the smoke' (כְּנֹאד בְּקִיטוֹר)—shriveled and blackened. Psalm 148:8 has textual difficulty: the Hebrew reads 'smoke' but ancient versions suggest 'frost.' Spanish humo (smoke) and French fumée (smoke) consistently identify this as thick smoke from burning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-mist, in-the-smoke, like-smoke-of | es: como-humo-de, en-humo, humo-de | fr: comme-fumée-de, dans-fumée, et-fumée | de: der-Rauch, in-der-Rauch, und-mist Gen 19:28; Ps 119:83; Ps 148:8

קִים H7009 N-msc / 1cp (1×)

adversary, opponent; possibly 'substance' or 'possessions' (text uncertain)

A noun of highly uncertain meaning in Job 22:20. The Masoretic Text has 'our adversary' or 'our substance,' but the form is morphologically difficult and probably corrupt. The context describes the righteous rejoicing that 'surely our adversary is cut off,' or alternatively 'their substance is cut off.' Proposed emendations include reading 'those who rise against us' (participle) or 'their possessions.' The uncertainty reflects either a rare word or textual damage, with interpreters choosing based on context and comparative Semitic evidence.

(1×) A problematic noun tentatively meaning 'adversary' or 'opponent,' though some propose 'substance/possessions' instead. Job 22:20's phrase 'our qimannu' has puzzled interpreters for millennia. The proposed meaning 'adversary' (from a root meaning 'rise up against') fits the parallelism with 'remnant,' but the morphology is strange. Some translations leave it untransliterated, acknowledging textual crux. The semantic choice between 'adversary' and 'wealth' dramatically affects the verse's meaning: either the righteous celebrate enemies' defeat or the wicked's material loss. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: our-adversary | es: nuestra-sustancia | fr: notre-קימנו-nous | de: [קימנו] Job 22:20

קִים H7010 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

statute, decree; an official edict or legal ordinance, particularly in Persian imperial administration

This Aramaic term denotes an official statute or decree, appearing exclusively in Daniel's account of Darius's laws. The word relates to concepts of standing, establishment, or confirmation. Both occurrences reference the irrevocable statute prohibiting prayer to anyone except the king, the decree that ensnared Daniel. The term emphasizes the binding, established nature of Persian law, which even the monarch couldn't reverse. This legal permanence drives the Daniel 6 narrative tension—the decree's irrevocability forced Darius to prosecute Daniel despite desperately seeking a loophole.

(2×) Daniel 6:7 requests establishing 'a statute' (qeyam), while 6:15 references 'or statute' (ve-qeyam) in the formula 'law or statute of the Medes and Persians.' Spanish uses 'estatuto/o-estatuto,' French 'décret/et-décret,' confirming official decree status. The context establishes Persian legal irrevocability as plot mechanism: once the king signs the statute, even he cannot annul it. The 6:15 occurrence pairs 'law' (dat) with 'statute' (qeyam), possibly distinguishing general law from specific decree, or using synonyms for emphasis. The term appears only in this Daniel 6 narrative, specific to Persian administrative vocabulary. This is imperial jurisprudence terminology, emphasizing formal, unchangeable royal edicts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: or-statute, statute-of | es: o-estatuto, un-estatuto | fr: décret, et-décret | de: [וקים], [קים] Dan 6:7; Dan 6:15

קַיָּם H7011 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)
enduring, sure, established; having permanence and stability, particularly of God's nature or kingdom
This Aramaic adjective describes enduring permanence, applied to both divine nature and earthly kingdom. In Daniel 4 it characterizes Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom as 'sure/enduring' after his restoration, while Daniel 6 declares God Himself 'enduring' (living and enduring forever). The term conveys established stability that persists through time, contrasting temporary human achievement with eternal divine reality. The feminine form modifies 'kingdom,' the masculine describes God's essential nature. This vocabulary emphasizes reliability, permanence, and unshakeable establishment.

(2×) Daniel 4:26 promises Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom 'will be sure' (qayamah) once he acknowledges heaven's sovereignty, while 6:26 proclaims God as 'enduring' (qayyam) in Darius's decree. Spanish uses 'permanecerá/y-permanece' (will remain/and remains), French 'éternel/et-éternel' (eternal), confirming permanence semantics. The kingdom context (4:26) promises political stability contingent on theological recognition. The divine attribute context (6:26) declares God's eternal nature in contrast to temporal powers. Both usages emphasize steadfast endurance, whether derivative (kingdom lasting through divine grant) or essential (God's inherent eternality). The term appears only in Daniel's Aramaic sections, part of royal decree and prophetic oracle vocabulary addressing sovereignty and permanence. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: and-enduring, will-be-sure | es: permanecerá, y-permanece | fr: et-éternel, éternel | de: [וקים], [קימה] Dan 4:26; Dan 6:26

קִימָה H7012 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3mp (1×)
rising up, the act of standing or getting up
A feminine noun denoting the act of rising up or standing. Lamentations 3:63 uses it in poignant antithesis: 'their sitting down and their rising up'—a merism meaning 'all their activities' or 'constantly.' The poet describes enemies who mock him continually, during every posture and action. The suffixed form ('their rising') parallels 'their sitting,' creating completeness through opposites. This word captures physical movement that represents totality of behavior.

(1×) The action of rising up or standing, paired with sitting to form a merism expressing totality in Lamentations 3:63. The poet laments that he is the subject of his enemies' mockery 'in their sitting and in their rising'—meaning at all times, in every circumstance. Some translations leave the form untransliterated, but the pairing with 'sitting' makes the sense clear: rising and sitting together encompass all of life's rhythms. The physical movements synecdochically represent constant, unceasing hostility—no moment free from derision. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-their-rising | es: y-su-levantarse | fr: [וקימתם] | de: [וקימתם] Lam 3:63

קֶיִן H7013 N-msc / 3ms (1×)
spear or javelin, a weapon used in combat
A masculine noun denoting a spear or similar weapon. Second Samuel 21:16 describes a Philistine giant 'whose spear weighed three hundred shekels of bronze.' The suffixed form ('his spear') indicates personal weaponry. Some textual critics suggest emending to 'his helmet' (koba'o) based on 1 Samuel 17:38, but the Masoretic 'spear' is defensible. The weight detail emphasizes the warrior's extraordinary strength—only a giant could wield such a massive weapon.

(1×) A spear or javelin, mentioned in the account of David's encounter with Philistine giants in 2 Samuel 21:16. The phrase 'his spear' (qeno) with its specified weight (300 bronze shekels) emphasizes the weapon's extraordinary size, befitting a warrior of gigantic stature. Translations consistently render this 'spear' or 'lance' (Spanish lanza, German Speer, French lance), though textual variants exist. The weapon detail contributes to the narrative's emphasis on outsized threats faced by David's warriors in Philistine conflicts. SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN
en: his-spear | es: su-lanza | fr: son-lance | de: sein-Speer 2Sam 21:16

קֵינִ֫ן H7014a N-proper-fs (2×)
the Kenite, Cain; a tribal name for smithing nomads allied with Israel, possibly also a place name in Judah
This term functions primarily as a gentilic denoting the Kenite tribe, nomadic metalworkers allied with Israel through Moses' father-in-law. The same form also appears as a place name in southern Judah, possibly a Kenite settlement. The tribe originated from Midianite connections, settled among Amalekites in Canaan's south, and maintained friendly relations with Israel. Balaam prophesied concerning Cain/Kenite, while the Joshua passage lists ha-Kayin as a Judahite town. The name may derive from qayin (smith), reflecting the tribe's metallurgical specialization.

(2×) Numbers 24:22 prophesies against 'Cain' (Qayin) in Balaam's oracle, while Joshua 15:57 lists 'the Kayin' (ha-Qayin) among Judahite towns. Spanish uses only 'Caín' (Cain), while English distinguishes 'the Kenite/Cain' and 'the Kayin,' showing interpretive uncertainty whether these are tribe or place. The Numbers passage addresses the Kenite tribe prophetically, warning of eventual Assyrian captivity despite their secure dwelling. The Joshua passage lists a town name, possibly Kenite settlement in Judah's hill country. BDB connects both to the Kenite tribal group descended from Moses' Midianite father-in-law, suggesting the place name derives from tribal presence. The term bridges ethnography and geography, marking both people and their settlements. CAIN PROPER NAME
en: Cain, the-Kayin | es: Caín | fr: Cain, le-Kayin | de: Cain, der-Kayin Num 24:22; Josh 15:57

קַ֫יִן H7014b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (16×)
Cain — firstborn son of Adam and Eve, the first murderer in the biblical narrative
The proper name of the eldest son of Adam and Eve, whose offering God rejected while accepting Abel's, precipitating the first murder (Gen 4:1-8). Genesis explains the name through a wordplay on qanah ('to acquire'), as Eve declares 'I have acquired a man with the Lord' (Gen 4:1). After slaying Abel, Cain receives a protective mark and goes out to dwell in the land of Nod, east of Eden, where he founds a city (Gen 4:15-17). All sixteen occurrences fall within the Yahwist narrative of Genesis 4. Spanish 'Cain,' French 'Cain,' and German 'Kain' all preserve the Hebrew pronunciation closely.

Qayin (16×) Cain (קַ֫יִן), the personal name of Adam and Eve's firstborn son, whose story in Genesis 4 encompasses the first worship, the first fratricide, and the first exile. The name is etymologically linked to qanah ('acquire/create') through Eve's birth announcement (Gen 4:1). All occurrences belong to the J source in Genesis 4:1-25, tracing his offering, his murder of Abel, his dialogue with God, his protective mark, and his settlement east of Eden where he builds the first city. CAIN PROPER NAME
en: Qayin, and-Qayin, for-Qayin | es: Caín, a-Caín, y-Caín | fr: Caïn, et-Caïn, pour-Caïn | de: Kain, dem-Kain, und-Kain Gen 4:1; Gen 4:2; Gen 4:3; Gen 4:5

קִינָה H7015 Prep-l / N-fs (18×)
Lamentation, dirge, funeral song — a mournful poem composed to bewail the dead or a catastrophe
This feminine noun denotes a formal poetic lament, typically composed in the distinctive qinah meter (3+2 stress pattern) that became the hallmark of biblical dirge poetry. David's lament over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam 1:17) is introduced with this word. Ezekiel receives special command to 'raise a qinah' over Tyre (27:2), Egypt (32:2), and Israel's princes (19:1). Jeremiah calls women to learn and teach the dirge (Jer 9:19). The term appears alongside words for mourning (evel) and wailing (nehi), situating it firmly within Israel's rich tradition of ritual grief.

lamentation, dirge, funeral song (18×) A formal dirge or funeral song, characterized by the qinah rhythm of uneven half-lines (3+2 beats). Used for laments over the dead (2 Sam 1:17, David over Saul) and prophetic funeral songs over nations and cities. Ezekiel is repeatedly commanded to 'lift up a qinah' (Ezek 19:1; 26:17; 27:2; 28:12; 32:2). Jeremiah pairs it with weeping (Jer 9:10) and calls mourning women to teach it (9:19). Spanish 'lamentación/lamento' and French 'lamentation' preserve the formal tone. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: a-dirge, a-lamentation, for-lamentation | es: Lamentación, Lamento, en-lamento | fr: [בקינותיהם], [הקינות], lamentation | de: Klagegesang, [לקינה], [קינה] 2Sam 1:17; 2Chr 35:25; Jer 7:29; Jer 9:10

קִינָה H7016 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Kinah, a town in southern Judah near the Edomite border

A place name in Judah's southern Negev region. Joshua 15:22 lists Kinah among the cities allotted to Judah's southernmost district, near the Edomite boundary. The name possibly means 'dirge' or 'lamentation,' though geographical names' etymologies are often obscure. Some scholars associate it with the Kenites (Qayin), a semi-nomadic group allied with Judah. The site's exact location remains unidentified, though it lay in the arid southern frontier zone.

(1×) A settlement in Judah's southern territories listed in Joshua 15:22 among the Negev cities. The waw-prefixed form ('and Kinah') embeds it in a series of southern towns. Translations preserve the name with phonetic variations (Spanish Quiná). The name's possible connection to 'lament' or to the Kenite clan suggests either commemorative naming or ethnic association. Its placement in the southernmost Judean district indicates frontier settlement patterns where clan-based groups maintained presence in marginal, contested zones between Judah and Edom. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kinah | es: y-Quiná | fr: et-Kinah | de: und-Kinah Josh 15:22

קִינִי H7017 N-proper-ms (13×)

Kenite; a gentilic adjective for the semi-nomadic clan allied with Israel, associated with Cain and metalworking.

A gentilic adjective identifying members of the Kenite clan, a semi-nomadic people traced to Cain (קַיִן) and associated with metalworking. They appear first among the peoples of Canaan (Gen 15:19), and their alliance with Israel runs deep: Moses' father-in-law was a Kenite (Judg 1:16), Heber the Kenite's wife Jael killed Sisera (Judg 4:11, 17; 5:24), and Saul warned the Kenites before attacking Amalek because they had shown kindness to Israel (1 Sam 15:6). Balaam's oracle over their cliffside dwellings (Num 24:21) plays on the name itself. Spanish ceneo and French Kénite preserve the ethnic identification across traditions.

Kenite (gentilic) (13×) A member of the Kenite people, a clan linked to Cain/Qayin and known for semi-nomadic life and metalworking. They maintained a persistent alliance with Israel from the wilderness period onward. Key figures include Jael wife of Heber the Kenite (Judg 4:11, 17; 5:24), Moses' Kenite father-in-law (Judg 1:16), and the Rechabite descendants traced to Kenite origins (1 Chr 2:55). Balaam's oracle (Num 24:21–22) and Saul's warning (1 Sam 15:6) both attest to their distinct identity within the broader narrative. PERSONAL NAMES

en: -the-Keini, Qenite, from-Kayin | es: de-Kaín, el-ceneo, el-keini | fr: -le-Keini, Qenite, [הקינים] | de: -der-Keini, Qenite, [הקינים] Gen 15:19; Num 24:21; Judg 1:16; Judg 4:11

קֵינָן H7018 N-proper-ms (6×)

Qenan (Kenan); a Sethite patriarch, son of Enosh and father of Mahalalel, in the pre-flood genealogy.

The proper name Qenan (also spelled Kenan), a Sethite patriarch in the antediluvian genealogy. Son of Enosh and father of Mahalalel, he lived 910 years according to Genesis 5:9-14. The name appears six times — five in Genesis 5 covering his birth, fathering of Mahalalel, and death, plus once in the compressed genealogy of 1 Chronicles 1:2. Spanish 'Quenán' and German 'Kenan' reflect the standard transliterations, while the two minor cluster variants (Qeynan vs. Qenan) represent vowel pointing differences with no semantic distinction.

Qenan (proper name) (6×) The proper masculine name Qenan (Kenan), a pre-flood patriarch in the line of Seth. All six occurrences appear in genealogical lists: Genesis 5:9 records his birth to Enosh at age 90, Genesis 5:10-13 traces his 840 remaining years and offspring, Genesis 5:14 notes his death at 910, and 1 Chronicles 1:2 repeats his place in the lineage. The multilingual evidence — English 'Qenan,' Spanish 'Quenán,' French 'Kénan,' German 'Kenan' — shows only transliteration variation. The two original clusters (Qeynan vs. Qenan) reflect minor vowel spelling differences with no semantic divergence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Qenan, Qeynan | es: Quenan, Quenán | fr: Kénan, Qeynan | de: Kenan, Kenans, [קינן] Gen 5:9; Gen 5:10; Gen 5:12; Gen 5:13; Gen 5:14

קַיִץ H7019 Conj-w / N-ms (20×)

Summer as a season of warmth and harvest; also the ripe summer fruit itself, especially figs and late-harvest produce

In the Hebrew agricultural calendar, qayits marks the hot, dry season stretching from grain harvest through the ingathering of figs and grapes. Beyond naming the season, the word also denotes the actual summer fruit gathered during it — particularly figs, as seen when David receives cakes of summer fruit (2 Sam 16:1-2). The famous wordplay in Amos 8:1-2 between qayits ('summer fruit') and qets ('end') transforms a basket of ripe figs into a prophetic sign that Israel's end has come, linking agricultural ripeness with divine judgment.

1. summer (season) (11×) The warm, dry season of the year, paired with 'winter' in merisms that span the whole year (Gen 8:22, Ps 74:17, Zech 14:8). Multilingual glosses consistently render this with seasonal terms — Spanish 'verano,' French 'été,' German 'Ernte' (harvest). Proverbs holds the ant up as wise for preparing food 'in summer' (Prov 6:8, 10:5), and Psalm 32:4 describes moisture dried up 'as in the heat of summer.' SUMMER SEASON FRUIT en: and-summer, in-summer, in-the-summer | es: el-verano, en-el-verano, verano | fr: [בקיץ], [קיץ], et-été | de: Ernte, [בקיץ], [הקיץ] Gen 8:22; Ps 32:4; Ps 74:17; Prov 6:8; Prov 10:5

2. summer fruit (9×) Ripe fruit gathered during the summer season, especially figs and similar late-harvest produce. Spanish 'fruta de verano' and 'cosecha de verano' capture the concrete agricultural sense well. Appears in narratives of provisioning (2 Sam 16:1-2), prophetic judgment through the qayits/qets wordplay (Amos 8:1-2), and instructions about harvest gathering (Jer 40:10, 12). Micah 7:1 laments finding no summer fruit to eat, symbolizing the absence of righteous people. SUMMER SEASON FRUIT

en: and-summer-fruit, and-the-summer-fruit, summer-fruit | es: fruta-de-verano, frutos-de-verano, tu-cosecha-de-verano | fr: [וקיץ], [קיץ], [קיצך] | de: [וקיץ], [קיץ], [קיצך] 2Sam 16:1; 2Sam 16:2; Isa 16:9; Jer 40:10; Jer 40:12

קִיצוֹן H7020 Art / Adj-fs (4×)

outermost, at the end (of a series or edge)

An adjective meaning outermost or at the end, appearing exclusively in Exodus 26, 36 describing the tabernacle curtains. It specifies which curtain is 'at the end' or 'outermost' in the set—the one at the edge of the series that will be joined to the next set. The term helps distinguish the exterior curtain (where loops and clasps attach) from interior ones. This precise architectural terminology ensures correct tabernacle construction.

(4×) Exodus 26:4 and 26:10 (with parallels in 36:11, 36:17) describe making loops on the edge of 'the outermost curtain' (הַיְרִיעָה הַקִּיצֹנָה) in each set. This specifies which curtain in the series gets the attachment loops for joining the sets together. Spanish exterior/extrema (outer/extreme) and French outermost all identify this as the curtain at the end or edge of the set—critical for proper tabernacle assembly. OUTER EXTERNAL

en: the-outermost | es: la-exterior, la-extrema | fr: le-outermost | de: der-outermost Exod 26:4; Exod 26:10; Exod 36:11; Exod 36:17

קִיקָיוֹן H7021 N-ms (5×)

castor-oil plant, gourd (the fast-growing plant God appointed to shade Jonah)

Found exclusively in Jonah 4:6–10, this noun denotes the fast-growing plant God prepared to shade the reluctant prophet, then destroyed with a worm. Its precise botanical identity has long been debated. The Spanish 'ricino' (castor plant) reflects the traditional rabbinic and Septuagint identification with Ricinus communis, known for its rapid growth in the Levantine climate. The narrative uses this plant to teach Jonah about divine compassion for Nineveh.

(5×) A specific plant—most likely the castor-oil plant (Ricinus communis)—appointed by God to provide shade for Jonah. Spanish consistently renders 'ricino' / 'planta de ricino,' reflecting the ancient identification going back to Jerome and the Septuagint (κολοκύνθη in some manuscripts). All five occurrences cluster in Jonah 4:6–10, tracing the plant's miraculous growth, Jonah's delight in it, and its sudden destruction by a worm as a divine object lesson. PLANTING PLANTATION

en: a-plant, the-plant | es: el-ricino, planta-de-ricino | fr: Kiyown | de: Rizinus, der-Rizinus Jonah 4:6; Jonah 4:7; Jonah 4:9; Jonah 4:10

קִיקָלוֹן H7022 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

disgrace, shame, or ignominy (possibly an intensive form)

A noun denoting disgrace or shameful exposure. Habakkuk 2:16 pronounces woe on Babylon: 'You will have disgrace instead of glory.' The word appears only here and may be an intensive formation (thus 'utter disgrace' or 'shameful exposure'). The context involves drunkenness and nakedness—imagery of humiliation. The morphology has puzzled grammarians; some suggest it's an Aramaism or intensive reduplication emphasizing extreme shame. The prophetic reversal is clear: glory sought through violence becomes disgrace.

(1×) Disgrace, shame, or ignominious exposure, appearing in Habakkuk's oracle against Babylon. The prophet announces that the empire's glory will turn to 'qiqalon'—possibly an intensified or reduplicated form meaning 'utter shame.' Spanish 'vergüenza' (shame) and French 'mépris' (contempt) convey the emotional weight. Some leave the form untransliterated due to morphological oddity. The context of nakedness and drunken exposure suggests not mere failure but public humiliation—the conqueror stripped bare, glory inverted into degradation before watching nations. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: and-disgrace | es: y-la-vergüenza | fr: et-mépris | de: [וקיקלון] Hab 2:16

קִיקָלוֹן H7023 Conj-w (74×)

Wall; a structural wall of a building, house, or temple; occasionally a city fortification wall.

The standard Hebrew word for a wall as a built structure, most often referring to the interior or exterior walls of houses, the temple, or other buildings. In the vast majority of its 74 occurrences, qir denotes a building wall — whether the walls inspected for plague marks (Lev 14:37), the temple walls adorned with carvings (1 Kgs 6:27), or the wall against which blood is dashed in sacrifice (Lev 1:15). A small handful of uses describe fortification walls, overlapping with the more common chomah. German distinguishes 'Wand' (interior wall) from 'Mauer' (stone wall), helpfully mirroring this division.

1. wall (building/interior) (70×) A structural wall belonging to a building, house, or temple — the dominant sense covering nearly all occurrences. Whether sprinkled with sacrificial blood (Lev 1:15; 5:9), inspected for mold (Lev 14:37, 39), or forming the inner partitions of Solomon's temple, qir is the everyday word for a built wall. German 'Wand' (interior wall) and French 'mur' both confirm this architectural, non-military usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-wall, in-wall-of, on-the-wall | es: en-la-pared, en-pared-de, la-pared | fr: [הקיר], le-mur, mur | de: [הקיר], der-Mauer, die-Wand Lev 1:15; Lev 5:9; Lev 14:37; Lev 14:39

2. wall (city/fortification) (4×) A city wall or fortification barrier, where qir overlaps with the more common chomah. Attested in just four passages (Num 35:4; Isa 22:5; 25:4; 59:10), these contexts involve defensive structures and siege imagery. The multilingual evidence reflects the shift: Arabic 'sur' (city wall), Korean 'seongbyeok' (fortress wall), and Spanish 'muro' (masonry wall) replace the lighter 'pared' (room wall), marking a genuine semantic distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-wall-of, the-wall, wall | es: desde-muro-de, la-pared, muro | fr: [קיר], [קר], de-mur-de | de: [קיר], [קר], von-Mauer-von Num 35:4; Isa 22:5; Isa 25:4; Isa 59:10

קִיר H7024a N-proper-fs (1×)

Kir of [place], a geographic designation in Moab (full name uncertain)

A place name component appearing in Isaiah 15:1 as part of a longer geographic designation. The verse mentions 'Kir of...' but the full form is truncated or uncertain in transmission. This Kir is distinct from the Kir mentioned as an Aramean homeland elsewhere. Isaiah's oracle against Moab uses this as part of naming Moabite cities that will be destroyed. The abbreviated form in this entry represents the construct state, expecting a following geographic qualifier that clarifies which Kir is meant.

(1×) A geographic name element meaning 'wall' or 'city,' appearing in construct state in Isaiah 15:1 as part of a Moabite location. The prophet's oracle begins with Moabite cities being laid waste in a night. Some translations leave the form untransliterated, awaiting the fuller geographic designation. 'Kir' was a common element in Near Eastern city names (literally 'wall' or 'fortification'), functioning like English '-ton' or '-burgh.' Isaiah uses it to identify a specific Moabite stronghold, though textual issues complicate determining whether this is Kir-hareseth or another site. KIR-HARESETH PLACE

en: Kir-of- | es: Kir-de- | fr: [קיר] | de: [קיר] Isa 15:1

קִיר H7024b Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Kir (place name, location in Mesopotamia or Syria; also Moabite city names with 'Kir')

A place name appearing in two contexts: (1) a location (possibly in Mesopotamia or Syria) where the Arameans originated and where Assyria exiled them (Amos 1:5; 9:7; 2 Kgs 16:9); (2) part of Moabite city names like Kir-moab and Kir-hareseth. Second Kings 16:9 records Tiglath-pileser exiling Damascus to Kir. Amos 9:7 traces the Arameans' origin from Kir. Isaiah 22:6 mentions Kir alongside Elam in military context. The exact location remains uncertain, though Mesopotamian or upper Euphrates regions are proposed.

(4×) Second Kings 16:9 reports Assyria exiling Damascus 'to Kir' (קִירָה). Isaiah 22:6 mentions Kir in a military coalition with Elam. Amos 1:5 prophesies Aram's exile 'to Kir.' Amos 9:7 recalls that God brought 'the Arameans from Kir' originally. Spanish Kir and French Kir preserve the name. The contexts suggest a region in Mesopotamia or Syria, possibly along the upper Euphrates, but definitive identification is lacking. KIR-HARESETH PLACE

en: Qir-ward, and-Kir, from-Qir | es: a-Kir, de-Quir, y-Kir | fr: Kir, Qir-garde, [וקיר] | de: Qir-ward, [וקיר], [מקיר] 2Kgs 16:9; Isa 22:6; Amos 1:5; Amos 9:7

קִיר H7025 N-proper-fs (8×)

Kir-Hareseth, a fortified Moabite city (modern Kerak, Jordan); also called Kir-Heres.

Kir-Hareseth (also written Kir-Heres) was a major fortified city of Moab, widely identified with modern al-Karak in Jordan. The compound name combines qir ('wall') with chareseth or cheres ('potsherd' or 'earthenware'), possibly describing its walls or pottery industry. It appears in the account of Joram's campaign against Moab (2 Kgs 3:25) and prominently in prophetic oracles against Moab in Isaiah 16:7, 11 and Jeremiah 48:31, 36, where its fall elicits mourning. The multilingual glosses preserve the toponym with minor transliteration variants.

Kir-Hareseth (place name) (8×) The proper noun Kir-Hareseth (also Kir-Heres), designating a major fortified Moabite city, probably modern al-Karak in Jordan. The name combines qir ('wall') with chareseth ('earthenware/potsherd'). It appears in the narrative of the Moabite campaign (2 Kgs 3:25) and in prophetic oracles of doom over Moab (Isa 16:7, 11; Jer 48:31, 36), where its destruction occasions lamentation. Spanish 'Kir/Hareset,' French 'Kir-Hérès,' and English 'Kir-Hareseth' all preserve the place name with minor

phonetic variation. KIR-HARESETH PLACE
en: Cheres, Hareseth, Kir-of- | es: Hareset, Jeres, Kir | fr: Kir-Hérès, dans-Kir-Hareseth, tesson | de: [חרש], [חרשת], [לקיר חרש] 2Kgs 3:25; Isa 16:7; Isa 16:11; Jer 48:31

קֵרֹס H7026 N-proper-ms (2×)

Keros, Qeros; a family head among post-exilic temple servants who returned from Babylonian captivity

This personal name identifies a family of Nethinim (temple servants) in the post-exilic community. The name appears in parallel lists of returnees in Ezra and Nehemiah with slight spelling variation (Qeros/Qeiros), typical of these duplicated genealogies. The Septuagint renderings show textual fluidity but general agreement on the name's form. Nothing else is known about this individual or family beyond their inclusion among temple servants. Like other Nethinim, they likely performed menial sanctuary duties supporting Levitical worship.

(2×) Ezra 2:44 and Nehemiah 7:47 list Qeros/Qeiros among temple servants returning with Zerubbabel. The slight spelling difference (qaf vs. qof initial letter) represents minor scribal variation in parallel lists. Spanish 'Queros/Querós,' French and German transliterations preserve the name without interpretation. Both passages embed this name in lengthy genealogical catalogs documenting the exilic return community. The name appears nowhere else, suggesting this family had no prominence beyond their service role. The parallel listing confirms textual reliability despite orthographic variation. This is purely genealogical-administrative data, establishing family credentials for post-exilic community membership and temple service rights. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Keros, Qeros | es: Queros, Querós | fr: [קירס], [קרס] | de: [קירס], [קרס] Ezra 2:44; Neh 7:47

קִישׁ H7027 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (21×)

Kish, a Hebrew proper name borne by several men, most notably the father of King Saul

A masculine proper name meaning perhaps 'bow' or 'snare.' The most prominent bearer is the Benjamite father of King Saul (1 Sam 9:1, 3; 10:11, 21; 14:51), whose genealogy is traced in 1 Chronicles 8:30, 33 and 9:36, 39. Other individuals named Kish include a Levite in David's era (1 Chr 23:21–22; 24:29) and an ancestor of Mordecai (Esth 2:5). Translations across languages uniformly transliterate the name—Spanish 'Cis' or 'Kish,' French 'Kisch,' German 'Kisch'—reflecting its stable identity as a personal name.

Kish (proper name) (21×) The proper name Kish (קִישׁ), designating several individuals in the Hebrew Bible. Most famously, Kish the Benjamite was the father of Saul, Israel's first king (1 Sam 9:1; 10:21; 1 Chr 8:33). A Levite named Kish appears in the Davidic administration (1 Chr 23:21; 24:29), and Esther 2:5 names Kish in Mordecai's lineage. Multilingual transliterations—Spanish 'Cis,' French 'Kisch,' German 'Kisch'—confirm a single referential sense. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Kish, Qish, and-Qish | es: Cis, Kish, Para-Kish | fr: Kisch, Kish, et-Kisch | de: Kisch, Kish, [קיש] 1Sam 9:1; 1Sam 9:3; 1Sam 10:11; 1Sam 10:21

קִישׁוֹן H7028 N-proper-fs (6×)

Kishon (Qishon); a river/wadi in northern Israel, site of Sisera's defeat and Elijah's execution of Baal's prophets.

The proper name Qishon (Kishon), a seasonal river or wadi in the Jezreel Valley of northern Israel. It is famous as the site where God defeated Sisera's army: the torrent of Kishon swept away the Canaanite chariots (Judg 4:7, 13; 5:21). Deborah's victory song celebrates the 'ancient river' (nahal qedumim) Kishon with fierce poetic intensity. The river reappears in 1 Kings 18:40, where Elijah brings the prophets of Baal down to the brook Kishon and executes them after the contest on Mount Carmel. In Psalm 83:9, the psalmist prays that God would do to Israel's current enemies as he did to Sisera at the Kishon.

Qishon (6×) The Qishon (Kishon), a river or seasonal wadi in the Jezreel Valley of northern Israel, associated with two dramatic divine interventions. In the Deborah-Barak narrative, God uses the swollen Kishon to sweep away Sisera's chariots (Judg 4:7, 13), and Deborah's song celebrates 'the torrent Kishon swept them away, that ancient torrent' (Judg 5:21). Spanish 'Cisón'/'Kishón' and French 'Kison'/'Kishon' reflect standard transliteration patterns. The river reappears when Elijah executes the prophets of Baal at the brook Kishon after the contest on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18:40). Psalm 83:9 invokes the Kishon victory as a paradigm of divine deliverance. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kishon, Qishon | es: Cisón, Kishón, Qishon | fr: Kishon, Kison, Qishon | de: Kishon, Qishon Judg 4:7; Judg 4:13; Judg 5:21; 1Kgs 18:40

קוּשָׁיָהוּ H7029 N-proper-ms (1×)

Levite name in 1 Chronicles, possibly meaning 'Yahweh has girded' or variant of Qishi

A Levite mentioned in the context of David's organization of temple worship. The name's form is disputed among scholars, with some suggesting it should be read as Qishi (as in the parallel text in 1 Chronicles 6:29). The Greek transliteration Kaisaiou suggests the name may have carried religious significance within Levitical families. This represents one of many Levitical family names preserved in Chronicles' genealogical records.

(1×) Appears only in 1 Chronicles 15:17 as a Levite ancestor, with manuscript variants suggesting textual uncertainty. The BDB notes the form is dubious and cross-references suggest identity with Qishi from chapter 6. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration rather than translation, consistent with proper names. Greek versions attempt to preserve the Hebrew phonetics, though with variations in spelling. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Qishi | es: Quisi | fr: [קישׁי] | de: [קישׁי] 1Chr 6:44

קִיתָרס H7030 N-ms (8×)

Lyre, zither; an Aramaic loanword from Greek kitharis, listed among instruments at Nebuchadnezzar's court.

An Aramaic noun borrowed from Greek kitharis (κίθαρις), qithros designates a stringed instrument – a lyre or zither – mentioned exclusively in Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, and 15. It appears in the list of instruments that signal the moment to bow before Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The ketiv-qere variation (qithros/qathros) reflects the fluid spelling of this foreign loanword in Aramaic. The consistent rendering across languages – Spanish 'cítara,' French 'lyre,' English 'lyre' – confirms its identification as a plucked stringed instrument of the harp family.

(8×) A lyre or zither, an Aramaic loanword from Greek kitharis (κίθαρις), appearing only in Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, 15 among the instruments played at the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The ketiv and qere forms (qithros/qathros) reflect variant spellings of this Greek borrowing into Imperial Aramaic. Cross-linguistic evidence – Spanish 'cítara,' French 'lyre,' English 'lyre' – uniformly identifies it as a plucked stringed instrument in the harp-lyre family. LYRE HARP INSTRUMENT
en: (qere:lyre), [ketiv:lyre] | es: (la-cítara), [la-cítara] | fr: lyre | de: [קיתרוס], [קיתרס], [קתרוס] Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10

קַל H7031 Adj-fs (13×)

Swift, fleet, light-footed; describing rapid movement of persons, animals, messengers, or clouds.

An adjective conveying lightness and speed of movement. It describes warriors fleet of foot (Amos 2:14–15; 2 Sam 2:18, of Asahel), swift messengers sent on urgent missions (Isa 18:2), pursuers faster than eagles (Lam 4:19), and even the LORD riding on a swift cloud (Isa 19:1). Ecclesiastes 9:11 uses it proverbially — 'the race is not to the swift' — subverting the very quality the word celebrates. Spanish captures the range with ligero and veloces, while the French léger preserves the root sense of 'lightness' that underlies the speed.

swift, fast, light-footed (13×) Quick, fleet, light in movement — applied to persons (Asahel, 2 Sam 2:18; warriors, Amos 2:14–15), animals (a swift she-camel, Jer 2:23), natural phenomena (a light cloud, Isa 19:1), and abstract agents (the swift vanishing of the wicked, Job 24:18). The word can function as a substantive ('the swift one,' Isa 30:16; Eccl 9:11) or adverbially ('swiftly,' Isa 5:26). French léger and Spanish ligero both illuminate the underlying sense of lightness that makes speed possible, while Lamentations 4:19 adds the comparative dimension — 'swifter than eagles.' SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: Swifter, and-swift, from-swift | es: Ligero-, Más-veloces, a-los-veloces | fr: [קל], et-léger, léger | de: [וקל], [לקלים], [מקל] 2Sam 2:18; Job 24:18; Eccl 9:11; Isa 5:26; Isa 18:2

קַל H7032 N-ms (7×)

Sound, voice (Aramaic); used in Daniel for audible proclamations and the sound of instruments

The Aramaic noun for 'sound' or 'voice,' cognate with Hebrew qol. In Daniel it serves double duty: it denotes the sound of musical instruments that signal the moment to bow before Nebuchadnezzar's golden image (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15), and it refers to a spoken voice — the heavenly voice that announces judgment on Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:31) and the king's own voice calling out to Daniel in the lions' den (Dan 6:20). Spanish distinguishes 'sonido de' (sound of instruments) from 'voz' (spoken voice), neatly reflecting the word's dual application.

sound, voice (7×) Sound or voice — the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew qol, covering both instrumental sound and spoken voice. In Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, and 15, it appears in construct ('sound of the horn, pipe, lyre...') for the musical signal commanding worship of the golden image. In Daniel 4:31 it is the heavenly voice that falls upon Nebuchadnezzar announcing the loss of his kingdom, and in 6:20 it is the king's anxious voice calling to Daniel. Spanish helpfully distinguishes 'sonido de' for instrumental sound and 'voz' for spoken voice, though the Aramaic word covers both with a single form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sound-of, voice, with-voice | es: con-voz, el-sonido-de, sonido-de | fr: voix | de: Stimme, mit-Stimme Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15; Dan 4:31

קָלָה H7033 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3mp (4×)

roast, parch (with fire); be burned or scorched

A verb meaning to roast, parch, or burn—typically grain or people. Leviticus 2:14 prescribes offering 'grain roasted with fire.' Joshua 5:11 mentions eating 'parched grain' after crossing the Jordan. Jeremiah 29:22 graphically describes Nebuchadnezzar 'roasting' false prophets in fire. Psalm 38:7 uses it metaphorically: 'my loins are filled with burning' (or possibly 'contempt' if from a different root). The Niphal participle in Psalm 38:7 creates some interpretive difficulty, but the core sense involves intense heat and fire.

(4×) Leviticus 2:14 prescribes an offering of 'grain of fresh ears roasted with fire' (אָבִיב קָלוּי בָּאֵשׁ). Joshua 5:11 mentions eating 'parched grain' (קָלוּי) the day after Passover. Psalm 38:7 says 'my loins are filled with burning' (נִקְלָה; some versions read 'contempt'). Jeremiah 29:22 warns that Nebuchadnezzar 'roasted them in the fire' (קָלָם בָּאֵשׁ). Spanish tostar (to toast, roast) and quemar (to burn) capture both grain-parching and burning of people. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: and-roasted-grain, roasted, with-burning | es: inflamación, los-quemó, tostado | fr: [קלם], et-rôti-grain, griller | de: [קלם], geroestet, mit-burning Lev 2:14; Josh 5:11; Ps 38:7; Jer 29:22

קָלָה H7034 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

To be lightly esteemed, dishonored, held in contempt (Niphal); to dishonor, treat with contempt (Hiphil)

A parallel form of the more common qalal ('to be light'), this verb focuses specifically on social dishonor and the reversal of esteem. In its Niphal (passive) uses, it describes people or nations reduced to insignificance: David calls himself 'poor and lightly esteemed' before Saul (1 Sam 18:23), Isaiah prophesies that Moab's glory 'shall be dishonored' (Isa 16:14), and Proverbs 12:9 contrasts the self-important man unfavorably with one who is 'lowly.' The single Hiphil occurrence carries the weight of covenant curse: 'Cursed is the one who dishonors his father or mother' (Deut 27:16), directly inverting the Fifth Commandment's 'honor.'

1. to be lightly esteemed, dishonored (Niphal) (5×) To be lightly esteemed, held in contempt, or dishonored (Niphal passive/stative). Describes social diminishment: Isaiah 3:5 pairs the 'base' (niqle) against the 'honorable' (nikhbad). First Samuel 18:23 has David calling himself poor and niqle. Spanish 'despreciado' and English 'lightly esteemed' consistently render the passive sense of lost social standing. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: against-the-honored, and-is-dishonored, and-lightly-esteemed | es: despreciado, y-despreciado, y-el-despreciable | fr: [והנקלה], [ונקלה], et-est-dishonored | de: [והנקלה], [ונקלה], [נקלה] Deut 25:3; 1Sam 18:23; Prov 12:9; Isa 3:5; Isa 16:14

2. to dishonor (Hiphil) (1×) To dishonor or treat with contempt (Hiphil causative). Occurs solely in the covenant-curse formula of Deuteronomy 27:16, where one who 'dishonors' (maqleh) father or mother stands cursed. Spanish 'el que deshonrare' captures the deliberate, causative act that directly opposes the command to 'honor' (kabbed) one's parents. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: one-dishonoring | es: el-que-deshonrare | fr: un-dishonoring | de: eins-dishonoring Deut 27:16

קָהַל H7035

assemble (as a קָהָל, congregation/assembly); gather together for religious, military, or civic purposes

This denominative verb (from קָהָל 'assembly') means to gather as a formal assembly or congregation. It appears in the Niphal for communal gathering: for warfare (Joshua 22:12, Judges 20:1), for rebellion (Numbers 16:3, the Korah incident), or for worship (Joshua 18:1, assembling at Shiloh). The verb implies organized, purposeful gathering—not random crowds but structured assemblies with shared intent. Esther 8-9 uses it for the Jews gathering to defend themselves. The term captures Israel's communal identity: they are a people who assemble, who act collectively before God and in history.

קָלוֹן H7036 N-ms (17×)

Shame, disgrace, dishonor; the public humiliation resulting from sin, folly, or divine judgment.

A weighty noun in both prophetic and wisdom vocabulary, qalon names the social ruin that follows moral failure or divine sentence. Proverbs repeatedly contrasts it with kavod ('honor'): the wise inherit honor, but shame is the portion of fools (Prov 3:35). Prophets wield it to expose national degradation – Hosea 4:7 warns that Israel has exchanged its glory for disgrace, and Nahum 3:5 uses it of exposed nakedness as public humiliation. The Spanish 'deshonra' and French 'deshonneur' both reflect this core sense of honor stripped away.

shame, disgrace, dishonor (17×) Shame or dishonor as a publicly visible condition, whether personal or national. In wisdom literature it stands opposite kavod ('glory, honor') as the consequence of folly and wickedness (Prov 3:35; 6:33; 11:2). In prophetic usage it denotes the humiliation of nations under divine judgment, sometimes with the graphic image of exposed nakedness (Jer 13:26; Nah 3:5). Job 10:15 applies it to the individual sufferer overwhelmed by disgrace. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: an-insult, and-disgrace, and-shame | es: de-deshonra, deshonra, deshonra-tuya | fr: [קלון], [קלונך], déshonneur | de: Schande, [קלון], [קלונך] Job 10:15; Ps 83:16; Prov 3:35; Prov 6:33; Prov 9:7

קַלַּחַת H7037 Prep-b (2×)

pot, caldron, kettle; a large cooking vessel for boiling meat or preparing food

This term denotes a large cooking pot or caldron used for boiling meat and preparing meals. In 1 Samuel it appears among the vessels into which worshippers thrust their forks at Shiloh's sacrificial meals, while Micah uses it metaphorically for the pot in which Jerusalem's inhabitants are boiled like meat. The word possibly derives from an Egyptian loan-word, reflecting cultural exchange in domestic technology. It represents substantial cookware, larger than ordinary pots, suitable for communal cooking or processing sacrificial portions.

(2×) 1 Samuel 2:14 lists qallachat among four cooking vessels (kettle, pot, caldron, pan) at Shiloh's sanctuary meals, while Micah 3:3 employs the metaphor 'like meat in the pot/caldron' for judgment. Spanish uses 'caldero/en la caldera' (caldron/in the caldron), French 'chaudron/dans le pot,' German 'pot/in der pot,' all confirming large cooking vessel. The 1 Samuel context describes corrupt priests' forks plunging into various pots to seize choice portions. The Micah passage creates extended butchery-cooking metaphor: they chop people like meat, strip flesh from bones, and break bones into the pot. Both usages share the core meaning of substantial cooking vessel, whether literal (sanctuary cooking) or metaphorical (judgment imagery). COOKING POT CALDRON

en: into-the-pot, kettle | es: caldero, en-la-caldera | fr: chaudron, dans-le-pot | de: [קלחת], hinein-der-pot 1Sam 2:14; Mic 3:3

קָלַט H7038 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

Physical defect in sacrificial animals: stunted, drawn in, or undergrown

A rare term describing a physical defect that disqualified animals from sacrifice under Levitical law. Paired with 'overgrown' in Leviticus 22:23, it describes an animal either too small or malformed. The root suggests something 'drawn in' or contracted. Together with its paired term, these defects meant the animal could be given as a freewill offering but not for fulfilling a vow, reflecting standards for sacred gifts. The precise deformity is uncertain, but the broader principle is clear: offerings to God should not be whatever remains after taking the best for ourselves.

(1×) Used only in Leviticus 22:23 paired with 'overgrown' to describe sacrificial animals with proportional defects. The term derives from a root meaning 'to be drawn in' or contracted. Spanish and English translations converge on 'stunted' or 'shrunken,' while French and German preserve transliteration, reflecting scholarly uncertainty about the precise anatomical condition. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: and-stunted | es: y-encogido | fr: et-stunted | de: und-stunted Lev 22:23

קָלִי H7039 Conj-w / N-ms (6×)

Roasted or parched grain, a common ancient Near Eastern food prepared from fresh ears of wheat or barley.

A staple food of ancient Israel, prepared by roasting freshly harvested ears of wheat or barley over a fire. Parched grain was cheap, portable, and nutritious — ideal for travelers, soldiers, and field workers. When Boaz invites Ruth to dip her portion in vinegar at mealtime (Ruth 2:14), or when Abigail quickly gathers provisions including parched grain for David's men (1 Sam 25:18), we glimpse the everyday importance of this humble food. The Levitical calendar forbids eating parched grain before the firstfruits offering (Lev 23:14), underscoring its agricultural significance.

roasted/parched grain (6×) Roasted or parched grain — fresh ears of wheat or barley dried and roasted over fire as a ready-to-eat food. Spanish 'grano tostado' and French 'blé' (wheat) both capture the cereal dimension. Used in everyday meals (Ruth 2:14), military provisions (1 Sam 17:17, 25:18; 2 Sam 17:28), and regulated in priestly legislation (Lev 23:14). The word derives from the root qalah 'to roast,' making the preparation method transparent in the name itself. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: and-parched, and-parched-grain, and-roasted-grain | es: grano-tostado, y-grano-tostado, y-tostado | fr: et-parched, et-parched-blé, et-roasted-grain | de: [קלי], der-parched-grain, roasted-grain Lev 23:14; Ruth 2:14; 1Sam 17:17; 1Sam 25:18; 2Sam 17:28

קְלַי H7040 N-proper-ms (1×)

Post-exilic priest in the time of Nehemiah's reforms

A priest who served during Nehemiah's reorganization of temple worship after the return from Babylonian exile. Listed among the priestly families who sealed the covenant to observe God's law, Qallai represents the reconstituted priesthood committed to faithfulness after Israel's devastating failure. The name appears in lists that connected post-exilic worship to pre-exilic priestly lines, maintaining continuity with Israel's sacred institutions despite the trauma of exile.

(1×) Mentioned only in Nehemiah 12:20 as one of the priests in the post-exilic community. The Greek transliteration Kalmei preserves the name in Hellenistic contexts. Appears in genealogical lists that established legitimacy for the restored priesthood. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration patterns for Israelite priestly names during the Second Temple period. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Qallai | es: Calai | fr: [קלי] | de: [קלי] Neh 12:20

קוֹלָיָה H7041 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Post-exilic Israelite, possibly meaning 'voice of Yahweh,' who had married a foreign wife

One of the Israelites who married foreign women during the exile and was required to divorce them under Ezra's reforms. The name likely means 'voice of Yahweh,' carrying ironic weight given the context. BDB suggests this may be the same person as Qolaiah mentioned as father of the false prophet Ahab in Jeremiah 29:21 and as a Benjamite in Nehemiah 11:7. The Greek versions preserve variations like Koleia, indicating the name was recognized across different communities. This individual appears in Ezra's list of those who compromised covenant faithfulness through intermarriage.

(1×) Occurs in Ezra 10:23 among Levites who married foreign women. The Hebrew text reads Qelayah though Greek versions suggest Qolaiah. The theophoric element (yah = Yahweh) indicates a name formed to honor God, making the bearer's covenant violation particularly poignant. Cross-referencing suggests possible connections to other biblical figures, though the identification remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Qelayah | es: y-Qelayah | fr: [וקליה] | de: [וקליה] Ezra 10:23

קְלִיטָא H7042 N-proper-ms (3×)

Kelita; personal name of a Levite involved in Ezra's reforms, also called Kelaiah

Kelita was a Levite active during Ezra's time. Ezra 10:23 lists him (also called Kelaiah) among Levites who had married foreign women and agreed to divorce them. Nehemiah 8:7 names him among the Levites who helped the people understand the Law when Ezra read it publicly. Nehemiah 10:10 (Hebrew 10:11) includes him among those who sealed the covenant renewal. The double name (Kelita/Kelaiah) may indicate a birth name and another name taken later. He exemplifies Levites involved in teaching and covenant renewal during post-exilic reforms.

(3×) Three post-exilic contexts define Kelita: the foreign-wife controversy (Ezra 10:23, where he's also called Kelaiah), public teaching of Torah (Nehemiah 8:7), and covenant sealing (10:10). The bracketed forms in German and French simply mark the Hebrew name. This Levite participated in key reform moments—separation from foreign influence, biblical instruction, and communal rededication. His dual name reflects the complexity of identity in the restoration community. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kelita, Qelita | es: Qelita, Quelita | fr: [קליטא] | de: [קליטא] Ezra 10:23; Neh 8:7; Neh 10:10

קָלַל H7043 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (82×)

be light, swift, trifling; curse; lighten; despise; shake

This root captures a spectrum of meanings united by the concept of lightness—both physical and metaphorical. In its Qal form it describes swiftness (like David's warriors, swifter than eagles), the subsiding of floodwaters, or being treated as insignificant. The Piel stem intensifies to cursing—pronouncing someone 'light' in the eyes of God or community. The Hifil makes things lighter: reducing burdens (as Moses' father-in-law advised) or treating someone with contempt. Occasionally it means to shake or brandish. The semantic thread runs from physical lightness through moral weightlessness to verbal diminishment.

1. Piel: curse (41×) The intensive Piel stem expresses the solemn act of pronouncing a curse—declaring someone accursed before God and community. Cross-linguistic evidence is strikingly uniform: Arabic ´ (curse), Korean 저주하다, and Swahili -laani all converge on the ritual speech act of invoking divine judgment. This appears 41 times, making it the most frequent sense, notably in covenantal contexts (Gen 12:3, Exod 21:17) where cursing parents or God's chosen brings severe consequences. CURSING (VERBAL ACT)
en: and-cursed, and-cursed-them, and-curser-of | es: Y-el-que-maldice, maldecirás, maldice | fr: alléger, devrait-maudis, et-curser-de | de: curses, der-eins-der-verfluchte, du-soll-verfluchen Gen 8:21; Gen 12:3; Exod 21:17; Exod 22:28; Lev 19:14

2. Hifil: lighten a burden (9×) In the Hifil causative, this means to make a burden physically lighter—reducing the weight of a yoke or load. Arabic ‘ (lighten) and Swahili punguza (reduce) capture this practical sense. Jethro advises Moses to lighten his judicial burden (Exod 18:22), and Israel begs Rehoboam to lighten Solomon's harsh yoke (1 Kgs 12:4-10). The nine occurrences cluster around administrative and political contexts of burden-bearing. LIGHTEN TREAT LIGHTLY
en: and-lighten, he-will-lighten, lighten | es: aligera, alivia, aliviará | fr: alléger, et-lighten, il-fera-lighten | de: [הקל], er-wird-lighten, erleichtern Exod 18:22; 1Sam 6:5; 1Kgs 12:4; 1Kgs 12:9; 1Kgs 12:10

3. Nifal: be light, trifling (7×) The Nifal stem expresses being a light or easy matter—something trifling or requiring little effort. Arabic ‘ (easy) and Korean 쉽다 match this sense precisely. When David considers marrying Saul's daughter, he protests 'Is it a light thing to be the king's son-in-law?' (1 Sam 18:23). Elisha's double healing miracle is 'but a light thing' in God's eyes (2 Kgs 3:18). Seven attestations show this evaluative sense of triviality. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS en: and-easy, easy, is-easy | es: Y-es-poca-cosa, acaso-es-ligero, acaso-fue-ligero | fr: alléger, easy, est-cela-lumière | de: [הנקל], easy, erleichtern 1Sam 18:23; 1Kgs 16:31; 2Kgs 3:18; 2Kgs 20:10; Prov 14:6

4. Qal: be swift (5×) In Qal this describes rapid movement—being swift or faster than normal. Arabic ‘ (faster) and Korean 빠르다 (be fast) align with this kinetic sense. Job laments that his days 'are swifter than a weaver's shuttle' (Job 7:6), and Jeremiah warns that enemy chariots approach 'swifter than eagles' (Jer 4:13). Five passages use this sense, often in poetic lament about the fleeting nature of life or the speed of approaching judgment. SPEED AND QUICKNESS en: and-swifter, are-swifter, swifter | es: Y-más-veloces, fueron-rápidos, más-veloces | fr: alléger, et-alléger, maudire | de: erleichtern, leicht-machen, swifter 2Sam 1:23; Job 7:6; Job 9:25; Jer 4:13; Hab 1:8

5. Qal: be insignificant, despised (5×) The Qal can denote being treated as insignificant or despised—of little account in someone's eyes. Arabic ‘ (contemptible) and Swahili kudharauliwa (despised) capture this social diminishment. When Hagar conceives, Sarah is 'despised in her eyes' (Gen 16:4-5), and God warns that those who despise Him will be 'lightly esteemed' (1 Sam 2:30). Job confesses 'I am of small account' before God's majesty (Job 40:4). Five occurrences chart this theme of social and theological devaluation. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: I-am-insignificant, and-I-was-despised, and-was-despised | es: eres-vil, serán-tenidos-en-poco, soy-insignificante | fr: alléger, et-Je-était-despised, et-était-despised | de: erleichtern, und-es-wurde-gering, und-ich-wurde-gering Gen 16:4; Gen 16:5; 1Sam 2:30; Job 40:4; Nah 1:14

6. Hifil: treat lightly, dishonor (4×) The Hifil causative here means to treat someone lightly—to dishonor, despise, or show contempt for their dignity. Arabic ٢ (dishonor) and Swahili kudharau (despise) reflect this active insult. God asks Ahaz, 'Is it too light a thing to weary men, that you will weary my God also?' (Isa 9:1, translation tradition varied). Four passages show this sense of deliberate dishonoring—making another person 'light' in status or respect. LIGHTEN TREAT LIGHTLY
en: did-you-despise-me, he-treated-lightly, they-treated-lightly | es: despreciaron, humilló, me-despreciaste | fr: alléger, fit-tu-méprise-moi | de: [הקלו], er-machte-leicht, tat-du-despise-mich 2Sam 19:43; Isa 9:1; Isa 23:9; Ezek 22:7

7. Nifal: be swift, light (in movement) (3×) A specialized Nifal sense describing swiftness or lightness of movement—moving quickly with agility. Arabic ‘ (haste/lightness) and Swahili wepesi (swift) match this nimble motion. Isaiah warns false prophets who 'healed the wound of my people lightly' (Jer 6:14, 8:11)—treating serious matters with superficial haste. Three attestations show movement or action done with insufficient weight or care. LIGHTEN TREAT LIGHTLY
en: lightly | es: ligereza, serán-veloces | fr: alléger | de: leicht-machen Isa 30:16; Jer 6:14; Jer 8:11

8. Pual: be cursed (2×) The Pual passive stem indicates being cursed—receiving a curse as a passive recipient. Arabic ‘ (be cursed) and Swahili -laaniwa match this grammatical voice. Job describes the wicked whose portion 'is cursed in the earth' (Job 24:18), and Isaiah prophesies that one dying at a hundred will be considered 'accursed' (Isa 65:20). Two passages use this passive construction, showing the state of being under divine or communal curse. CURSING AND IMPRECATION
en: is-cursed, shall-be-cursed | es: es-maldita, será-maldito | fr: alléger, maudire | de: erleichtern, leicht-machen Job 24:18; Isa 65:20

9. Qal: subside, diminish (2×) In Qal this describes waters subsiding or diminishing—becoming lighter or lower in level. Arabic ‘ (lightened/abated) and Swahili yamepungua (have decreased) capture this hydrological sense. After the flood, Noah sends out a dove to see 'if the waters had subsided from the face of the ground' (Gen 8:8, 11). Two occurrences in the flood narrative preserve this concrete sense of receding waters. DECREASE DIMINISH
en: had-subsided | es: habían-disminuido, si-habían-disminuido | fr: avait-diminua | de: ob-sich-vermindert-hatten, sich-vermindert-hatten Gen 8:8; Gen 8:11

10. Piel: shake, agitate (2×) A distinct Piel sense meaning to shake, brandish, or whet—physically agitating something. Arabic ‘ (shake/agitate) and Korean 흔들었다/갈았다 (shook/sharpened) show this is semantically distant from cursing. The Preacher warns 'if the iron is blunt and one does not sharpen [or: shake] the edge' (Eccl 10:10), and Ezekiel sees the king of Babylon 'shaking the arrows' for divination (Ezek 21:21). Two passages preserve this specialized sense. CURSING AND IMPRECATION
en: has-sharpened, he-shook | es: ha-afilado, sacudió | fr: alléger, maudire | de: [קלקל], erleichtern Eccl 10:10; Ezek 21:21

11. (1×) Uncertain sense with single attestation describing mountains 'trembling' or quaking (Jer 4:24) in an apocalyptic vision. The hapax nature makes precise definition difficult, though the context suggests violent shaking or trembling of the earth. Multilingual evidence is too sparse to confirm a distinct sense versus a contextual extension of the shaking/agitation sense. LIGHTEN TREAT LIGHTLY
en: trembling | es: se-estremecían | fr: alléger | de: leicht-machen Jer 4:24

12. (1×) Another uncertain single attestation where David says 'I will be more lightly esteemed' or 'I will humble myself' yet further (2 Sam 6:22) in worship before the ark. The reflexive Hithpael or Niphal nuance here is unclear—whether David means he will accept being despised or actively make himself lowly. The unique grammatical form and context make classification difficult without broader attestation. CURSING AND IMPRECATION en: and-I-will-be-more-lightly-esteemed | es: Y-me-humillaré | fr: et-je-fera-être-plus-lightly-esteemed | de: und-ich-wird-sein-mehr-lightly-esteemed 2Sam 6:22

קָלָל H7044 Adj-ms (2×)
burnished, polished; metal surfaces highly polished to reflective brightness through rubbing

This adjective describes metal that has been polished to a bright, gleaming finish. It modifies 'bronze' in both occurrences, describing the burnished bronze of the cherubim's feet in Ezekiel and the glowing bronze of the heavenly figure's legs in Daniel. The term may derive from the quick, light movements involved in polishing and rubbing metal to high sheen. The imagery emphasizes brilliance, purity, and the impressive appearance of worked metal. This is not raw or dull bronze but carefully finished, reflective metalwork.

(2×) Ezekiel 1:7 describes cherubim feet gleaming 'like burnished bronze' (ke-nechoshet qalal), while Daniel 10:6 depicts the man's arms and feet 'like the appearance of polished bronze' (ke-'ein nechoshet qalal). Spanish uses 'bruñido/pulido' (burnished/polished), French 'poli,' confirming the polished finish. The Ezekiel context emphasizes the living creatures' radiance and supernatural quality. The Daniel vision similarly employs polished bronze among other brilliant materials (beryl, lightning, torches) to describe an overwhelming heavenly being. Both are theophanic visions where burnished metal contributes to the overwhelming glory. The term captures metal's reflective quality when expertly worked, suggesting both craftsmanship and supernatural luminosity in visionary contexts. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR
en: burnished, polished | es: bruñido, pulido | fr: poli | de: [קלל] Ezek 1:7; Dan 10:6

קְלָלָה H7045 N-fsc (33×)
curse, malediction — a solemn pronouncement invoking harm, often set opposite blessing in covenantal contexts Qelalah denotes a spoken curse — a formal invocation of divine punishment or a state of being accursed — and appears 33 times in the Hebrew Bible, frequently paired as the polar opposite of berakhah ('blessing'). The theological framework is covenantal: Deuteronomy sets 'the blessing and the curse' before Israel as the two possible outcomes of obedience or disobedience (Deut 11:26-28; 30:1, 19), and Joshua reads both from Mounts Gerizim and Ebal (Josh 8:34). In the patriarchal narratives, Rebekah reassures Jacob that she will bear any curse meant for him (Gen 27:12-13). Proverbs observes that 'a groundless curse does not alight' (Prov 26:2), while Jeremiah uses the word repeatedly to describe the fate of nations and cities that become bywords of horror — 'a desolation and a curse' (Jer 24:9; 25:18; 29:22; 44:22). The theological gravity of the concept is reflected across languages: Spanish 'maldicion,' French 'malediction,' German 'Fluch.'

curse, malediction (33×) A solemn pronouncement invoking divine harm or the resulting state of being accursed. Most often paired antithetically with berakhah ('blessing') in covenantal formulae (Deut 11:26-28; Josh 8:34). Covers Rebekah's willingness to bear Jacob's curse (Gen 27:12-13), the groundless curse of Prov 26:2, Shimei's grievous curse against David (1 Kgs 2:8), and Jeremiah's repeated use of the word for nations that become objects of horror and execration (Jer 24:9; 25:18; 29:22). CURSES AND ANATHEMA
en: a-curse, and-a-curse, and-curse | es: la-maldición, maldición, y-a-maldición | fr: et-le-malédiction, et-le-maudire, et-malédiction | de: Fluch, [קללה], cursing Gen 27:12; Gen 27:13; Deut 11:26; Deut 11:28; Deut 11:29

קָלַס H7046 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (4×)
to mock, scoff, deride with contempt
This rare verb appears only in the Hithpael stem, expressing reflexive or intensive scoffing and mocking. The term captures contemptuous derision—whether youths mocking the prophet Elisha, rulers scoffing at fortifications, or Jerusalem portrayed as scorning hire like a harlot who disdains payment. The multilingual evidence consistently points to mockery and scorn across diverse contexts.

(4×) The Hithpael stem intensifies the act of mocking or deriding someone, typically with a preposition marking the target of scorn. In 2 Kings 2:23, youths mock Elisha; in Habakkuk 1:10, the Chaldeans scoff at fortresses; Ezekiel uses it twice (16:31, 22:5) in prophetic judgment contexts. The Spanish 'se-burla/se-burlarán' and English 'scoffs/shall-mock' capture the reflexive force of the Hebrew stem, emphasizing deliberate, contemptuous ridicule. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: and-mocked, scoffs, shall-mock- | es: para-menospreciar, se-burla, se-burlarán | fr: et-mocked, mépriser | de: [יתקלס], [יתקלסון], [לקלס] 2Kgs 2:23; Ezek 16:31; Ezek 22:5; Hab 1:10

קֶלֶס H7047 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)
derision, mockery; being an object of scorn and ridicule, often paired with reproach
This noun means derision or mockery—being the object of scorn. Psalm 44:13 laments that God has made Israel 'a byword and derision among the peoples.' Psalm 79:4 similarly states, 'We have become a reproach to our neighbors, derision and scorn to those around us.' Jeremiah 20:8 describes the prophet's experience: his message makes him an object of 'reproach and derision all day long.' The term typically pairs with 'reproach' (cherpah) and 'scorn' (laag), forming a cluster expressing social humiliation and contempt. Israel's or the prophet's suffering includes being laughed at and mocked.

(3×) All three uses express being mocked: Israel as a failed nation (Psalms 44, 79) and Jeremiah as a scorned prophet. The pairing with 'reproach' and 'scorn' is consistent, suggesting a fixed expression for communal or personal humiliation. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'burla/escarnio', French 'dérision', German 'derision') confirms the meaning: being treated as a joke or object of contempt. This is the vocabulary of covenant shame—when God's people become a laughingstock to surrounding nations or when God's messenger is ridiculed for his message. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: and-derision, and-for-derision | es: y-burla, y-para-escarnio | fr: [ולקלס], et-dérision | de: [ולקלס], und-derision Ps 44:13; Ps 79:4; Jer 20:8

קְלָסָה H7048 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
Mocking, derision, or scorn directed at Jerusalem for its sins
A prophetic term for the mockery and derision that Jerusalem would suffer because of its covenant violations. Ezekiel uses this word alongside 'reproach' to describe how the city's sins would make it an object of international contempt. The term captures not just verbal ridicule but the deeper shame of being exposed and humiliated before the nations. Jerusalem's glory was meant to draw nations to worship Yahweh, but its unfaithfulness reversed that purpose, making it a byword and a proverb of failure among the peoples.

(1×) Appears only in Ezekiel 22:4 in parallel with terms for reproach and shame. Spanish uses 'escarnio' (scorn), English 'mocking,' and French 'moquerie' (mockery), all capturing public ridicule. The context is God's judgment speech against Jerusalem's bloodshed and idolatry. The multilingual convergence on derision terms suggests a well-understood concept of public shaming as covenant curse. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: and-mocking | es: y-escarnio | fr: et-moquerie | de: [וקלסה] Ezek 22:4

קָלַע H7049a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (4×)
to sling, hurl forth with force
This verb denotes the act of slinging stones or hurling objects with force, rooted in ancient warfare and shepherd life. Famous in David's defeat of Goliath, the term also appears in legal contexts (stoning) and prophetic imagery (God slinging forth inhabitants). The root may connect to ideas of loosening or wavering, fitting the motion of a sling releasing its projectile.

(4×) The verb captures both literal slinging of stones (Judges 20:16's left-handed Benjamite slingers hitting 'a hair'; 1 Samuel 17:49 where David slings at Goliath) and metaphorical hurling (Jeremiah 10:18, God slinging forth Judah's inhabitants; 1 Samuel 25:29, lives slung away). Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistency: Spanish 'lanzando/la-arrojará,' French 'il-fera-fronde,' German 'er-wird-Schleuder'—all emphasizing forceful projection. The Qal participle form suggests habitual slingers, skilled practitioners of this ancient military art. THROWING AND CASTING en: am-slinging-away, and-slung, he-will-sling | es: honderos, la-arrojará,

lanzando | fr: [קוֹלֵעַ], et-slung, il-fera-fronde | de: [קוֹלֵעַ], er-wird-Schleuder, slinging Judg 20:16; 1Sam 17:49; 1Sam 25:29; Jer 10:18

קָלַע H7049b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (3×)

carve, engrave decorative designs in wood or stone

This verb describes the skilled craft of carving decorative designs into surfaces, specifically the interior walls and doors of Solomon's temple. The consistent use across Spanish (talló), French (sculpté), and German (carved) reflects the artistic nature of this sacred work. All three occurrences appear in 1 Kings 6, describing the ornate cherubim and floral patterns carved into the temple's cedar woodwork.

(3×) The term consistently refers to the technical process of engraving or sculpting decorative religious imagery into temple surfaces. The multilingual glosses emphasize the artistic precision involved—whether carving cherubim, palm trees, or open flowers onto the walls and doors of the Most Holy Place. This was specialized craftsmanship reserved for sacred architecture. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: and-he-carved, he-carved | es: talló, y-talló | fr: et-il-sculpté, il-sculpté | de: er-carved, und-er-carved 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 6:35

קֶלַע H7050a N-mp (6×)

A sling, the handheld weapon used to hurl stones at enemies or prey.

The sling was one of the most effective ranged weapons of the ancient Near East, consisting of a pouch attached to two cords that could launch a stone with lethal force and precision. Its most famous appearance is David's defeat of Goliath with a single stone from his shepherd's sling (1 Sam 17:40, 50). The metaphor in 1 Samuel 25:29, where Abigail contrasts being 'bound in the bundle of the living' with enemies slung out 'from the hollow of a sling,' powerfully evokes the violent trajectory of the weapon. By the time of the Chronicler, slings were standard military equipment issued to garrison troops (2 Chr 26:14).

sling (weapon for hurling stones) (6×) A sling — a weapon consisting of a leather or textile pouch with cords, used to propel stones at high velocity. German 'Schleuder' and Spanish 'honda' both denote this same weapon precisely. Attested in the narrative of David and Goliath (1 Sam 17:40, 50), in Abigail's vivid metaphor of divine protection versus divine judgment (1 Sam 25:29), in military inventories (2 Chr 26:14), in theophanic warfare imagery (Zech 9:15), and in Job's description of Leviathan dismissing sling-stones as stubble (Job 41:28). WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: a-sling, and-sling-his, sling | es: con-la-honda, honda, hondas | fr: [קלעים], avec-le-fronde, et-fronde-son | de: [קלע], [קלעים], der-Schleuder 1Sam 17:40; 1Sam 17:50; 1Sam 25:29; 2Chr 26:14; Job 41:28

קְלָעִים H7050b N-mpc (16×)

Curtains or hangings used in the Tabernacle court; once read as 'leaves' (of a door) in a textual variant.

A Priestly-source noun appearing almost exclusively in Exodus, referring to the woven curtains or hangings that enclosed the courtyard of the Tabernacle. These fabric panels, suspended between pillars, formed the visible boundary of the sacred precinct on all four sides (Exod 27:9-15; 38:9-18). The term is a staple of Tabernacle construction vocabulary in both Exodus and Numbers. One occurrence in 1 Kings 6:34 is likely a textual error for tslaᶜim ('leaves' of a folding door), as BDB notes, yielding a unique secondary sense. Spanish 'cortinas' and French 'tentures' both capture the textile-curtain meaning.

1. hangings of (15×) The woven curtains or hangings that formed the enclosure walls of the Tabernacle courtyard, suspended from pillars along the south, north, east, and west sides. These are detailed across the Exodus construction narratives (Exod 27:9-18; 35:17; 38:9-18) and the Levitical assignments (Num 3:26; 4:26). Spanish consistently renders this 'cortinas,' French 'tentures,' and German 'Umhänge,' all pointing to fabric panels hung as barriers around a sacred space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hangings-of, hangings, hangings-of | es: Y-cortinas-de, cortinas, cortinas-de | fr: et-hangings-de, hangings-de, tentures | de: Umhaenge, Umhaenge-von, hangings-von Exod 27:9; Exod 27:11; Exod 27:12; Exod 27:14; Exod 27:15

2. leaves of (1×) A probable textual variant in 1 Kings 6:34, where the Masoretic qelaᶜim is widely emended to tslaᶜim, meaning the folding leaves or panels of a door in Solomon's Temple. English glosses render it 'leaves of,' Spanish 'hojas de,' reflecting the architectural sense of hinged door-panels rather than fabric hangings. BDB flags this as a scribal confusion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaves-of | es: hojas-de | fr: leaves-de | de: leaves-von 1Kgs 6:34

קַלָּע H7051 Art / N-mp (1×)

Soldiers equipped with slings for hurling stones in warfare

Warriors who used slings as their primary weapon, capable of devastating accuracy despite the weapon's simplicity. In 2 Kings 3:25, these slingers systematically destroyed Moabite cities by pelting them with stones, ruining fields and stopping wells. The sling was not merely a shepherd's tool but a serious military weapon - David's victory over Goliath demonstrated its lethal potential in trained hands. Slingers served as ancient artillery, providing ranged attack capability before more sophisticated siege weapons.

(1×) Occurs only in 2 Kings 3:25 describing the military campaign against Moab. The term refers to specialist troops equipped with slings. Spanish 'honderos' and English 'slingers' both specify the warrior type by their weapon. The narrative context shows them working systematically to devastate enemy territory, indicating organized military units rather than improvised skirmishers. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: the-slingers | es: los-honderos | fr: le-slingers | de: der-slingers 2Kgs 3:25

קְלֹקֵל H7052 Art / Adj-ms (1×)

Light, worthless, or contemptible (describing the manna as despised bread)

Israel's dismissive term for the miraculous manna God provided in the wilderness. The word combines contempt with ideas of lightness or worthlessness - not substantial, not satisfying, beneath their dignity. This stunning rejection of heaven's bread crystallizes Israel's chronic ingratitude. They called worthless what God called wonderful. The term reveals how sustained complaining warps perception until even miracles become occasions for resentment. Their 'worthless bread' was sustaining millions daily, but familiarity had bred contempt.

(1×) Found only in Numbers 21:5 where Israel complains against God and Moses. Spanish uses 'liviano' (light/insubstantial), English 'worthless,' capturing dual senses of physical lightness and moral contempt. The definite article indicates they're speaking of specific bread - the manna. This complaint immediately precedes God's judgment via fiery serpents, showing the seriousness of despising divine provision. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: the-worthless | es: el-liviano | fr: le-worthless | de: der-worthless Num 21:5

קֶלְשׁוֹן H7053 N-ms (1×)

Agricultural implement, possibly a three-pronged fork or pitchfork

A farming tool mentioned in Samuel's description of Philistine monopoly over metalworking. The exact identity is uncertain - possibly a three-pronged fork used for winnowing or handling sheaves. The context shows Israel's economic subjugation: they couldn't even sharpen their own agricultural tools without paying Philistine smiths. This technological disadvantage crippled both farming efficiency and military capability, since the same metalworking skills produced both plowshares and swords. The obscure term reflects how completely the Philistines controlled the iron technology that was transforming ancient Near Eastern society.

(1×) Appears only in 1 Samuel 13:21 in a list of agricultural tools requiring sharpening. BDB suggests 'tridens' (three-pronged fork)

based on possible Aramaic cognate meaning 'thin.' English and Spanish converge on fork/pitchfork ('horquilla'). The broader passage describes how Philistine monopoly on iron-working kept Israel technologically dependent and militarily vulnerable. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: prong | es: horquilla | fr: prong | de: prong 1Sam 13:21

קָמָה H7054 Prep-b (10×)

Standing grain; unharvested crops upright in the field, sometimes extended to growth, rising, or the stalk itself

Designates cereal crops — wheat and barley — standing tall in the field before harvest. The word appears prominently in agricultural law: Exodus 22:6 addresses fire spreading to standing grain, Deuteronomy 16:9 marks the start of harvest when the sickle touches the qamah, and Deuteronomy 23:25 permits plucking grain by hand from a neighbor's field. Samson's foxes set fire to the Philistines' standing grain in Judges 15:5. Hosea 8:7 uses the image metaphorically — 'the stalk has no grain' — to picture Israel's futile idolatry yielding nothing of substance.

1. standing grain, crops in field (7×) Standing grain or crops growing upright in the field, the core agricultural sense. This is the dominant usage, covering legal contexts (Exod 22:6, Deut 16:9, 23:25) and narrative ones (Judg 15:5). Spanish 'mies' (harvest crops) and French 'grain debout' both reflect the image of tall, unharvested cereal plants swaying in open farmland. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: into-standing-grain-of, on-the-standing-grain, standing-grain | es: en-la-mies, en-la-mies-de, en-los-campos-de | fr: [קמה], dans-debout-grain-de, dans-se-tenant-debout-grain-de | de: [קמה], auf-der-stehend-Getreide, der-stehend-grain Exod 22:6; Deut 16:9; Deut 23:25; Judg 15:5

2. growth, ripening of crops (1×) The growth or ripening state of crops as they approach maturity. Isaiah 37:27 uses the word in a context where vegetation is blasted 'before standing grain,' pointing to the developmental stage rather than the physical stalks. This abstract extension captures the process of coming to full growth, not just the finished product in the field. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: standing-grain | es: crecer | fr: [קמה] | de: [קמה] Isa 37:27

3. rising, standing upright (1×) Rising or standing upright in a non-agricultural, abstract sense. In 2 Kings 19:26 the parallel with 'sitting down' suggests bodily posture — standing up versus sitting — rather than literal grain. German 'stehend' and French 'debout' both naturally bridge the agricultural and postural meanings of this root. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING

en: standing | es: levantarse | fr: debout | de: stehend 2Kgs 19:26

4. stalk, stem of grain (1×) The stalk or stem of a grain plant, a metonymic narrowing from the whole crop to the individual upright stem. Hosea 8:7 warns that Israel's sowing will produce 'no standing grain' — or more precisely, stalks without heads of grain. Spanish 'tallo' (stalk) captures this focus on the plant's structure rather than the field as a whole. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: standing-grain | es: tallo | fr: grain | de: [קמה] Hos 8:7

קְמוּאֵל H7055 N-proper-ms (3×)

Kemuel, name of three different men in the Old Testament

Kemuel appears as the name of three distinct individuals in Scripture: a son of Nahor (Abraham's brother), an Ephraimite leader assisting with land distribution, and a Levite. The LXX renders this consistently as Καμουηλ. The name's Hebrew root suggests meanings related to 'God has raised' or 'assembly of God,' though as a proper name it functions primarily as an identifier across different tribal contexts.

(3×) This proper name designates three separate biblical figures: first, one of Nahor's sons in the genealogies of Genesis 22; second, a representative from the tribe of Ephraim chosen to help divide the Promised Land; and third, a Levitical official during David's administration. The consistent transliteration across languages (Kemuel, Qemuel) preserves the Hebrew phonetic form. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kemuel, Qemuel | es: Kemuel, Qemuel | fr: Kemuel, [קמואל] | de: Kemuel, [קמואל] Gen 22:21; Num 34:24; 1Chr 27:17

קְמוֹן H7056 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Place in Gilead where the judge Jair was buried

A town in Gilead that served as the burial site for Jair, one of Israel's judges who led for twenty-two years. The name appears in territorial descriptions of Gilead east of the Jordan. Ancient sources like Josephus and Polybius mention locations with similar names in the same region, suggesting this was a known settlement. The preservation of burial locations for judges indicates how Israel remembered its early leaders and sacred geography. These place names anchored tribal memory to specific landscapes where God had worked through chosen deliverers.

(1×) Mentioned only in Judges 10:5 as Jair's burial place. Greek versions show significant variation (Ramnon, Rammo, Kalkon), suggesting uncertainty about the name's pronunciation. Later Greek historians like Polybius reference Kamoun in similar geographical contexts. BDB suggests identification with modern sites between the Jarmuk and Jabbok rivers, though exact location remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Kamon | es: en-Camón | fr: dans-Kamon | de: in-Kamon Judg 10:5

קִמּוֹשׁ H7057 N-ms (2×)

thistles, nettles; prickly weeds indicating desolation and abandonment of cultivated land

This term denotes thorny or stinging weeds that colonize abandoned areas, appearing exclusively as markers of desolation. Isaiah pairs it with 'thorns' and 'briars' overgrowing Edom's ruins, while Hosea depicts Israel's abandoned treasures overtaken by 'nettles' and 'thorns.' Proverbs uses it in wisdom observation about the overgrown field of the sluggard. The word may represent nettles (stinging plants) or thistles (thorny plants), both indicating neglect and the return of wilderness. The plural form in Proverbs shows possible variant spelling with nun insertion.

(2×) Isaiah 34:13 describes Edom's palaces overtaken by qimmosh (paired with thorns and thistles), Hosea 9:6 depicts Israel's treasures possessed by qimmosh, and Proverbs 24:31 notes qimmasnim covering the sluggard's field. Spanish 'ortigas' (nettles), French 'ronce' (bramble), German transliterations suggest prickly weeds. All three contexts share the desolation theme: abandoned buildings, neglected treasures, and unworked fields all revert to thorny wilderness. The plant represents agricultural failure and human absence. This is not cultivated thorn-hedge for protection but wild weed growth signaling collapse. The Proverbs passage moralizes this botanical succession as consequence of laziness, while the prophetic texts use it for judgment imagery. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: nettles | es: ortigas | fr: [קמוש], ronce | de: [קמוש] Isa 34:13; Hos 9:6

קֶמַח H7058 N-ms (14×)

Flour or meal; ground grain used for baking bread, preparing offerings, and daily sustenance.

Denotes flour or meal, the ground cereal product fundamental to Israelite diet and worship. Distinguished from the finer 'choice flour' (סֹלֶת) in Solomon's provisions (1 Kgs 4:22), this is the common household staple kept in a jar — as in the widow of Zarephath's dwindling supply that miraculously endured (1 Kgs 17:12, 14, 16). It appears in offering contexts (Num 5:15, barley flour for the jealousy offering) and everyday cooking (Judg 6:19; 1 Sam 28:24). Hosea uses it metaphorically: Israel's stalk 'yields no flour' (Hos 8:7), a vivid image of fruitless national policy. Isaiah 47:2 pictures Babylon grinding flour at the millstone as a sign of humiliation.

flour, meal (14×) Flour or meal (קֶמַח), the ordinary ground grain product used in daily bread-making and certain ritual offerings. Multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — Spanish 'harina,' French 'farine,' German 'Mehl' — all pointing to generic cereal flour without further specification. It is coarser than סֹלֶת (fine flour) as shown by their pairing in 1 Kgs 4:22. Key narrative appearances include Gideon's unleavened cakes (Judg 6:19), the widow's jar at Zarephath (1 Kgs 17:12–16), and Elisha's purification of poisoned stew (2 Kgs 4:41). Hosea 8:7 deploys it figuratively for productive yield. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: and-flour, flour, flour-of | es: de-harina, harina, harina-de | fr: [קמח], et-farine, farine | de: Mehl, Mehl-von, [קמח] Gen 18:6; Num 5:15; Judg 6:19; 1Sam 1:24; 1Sam 28:24

קָמַט H7059 V-Pual-Perf-3cp (2×)

seize, grasp firmly; compress or shrivel

This verb describes grasping or seizing something firmly, with a sense of compression. In Job 16:8, God's action of seizing the sufferer is parallel to other descriptions of bodily affliction, suggesting a wasting or shriveling effect. The related Semitic roots consistently point to binding, pressing together, or grasping tightly. The Pual form in Job 22:16 suggests being snatched away prematurely, as those swept away before their time.

(2×) The multilingual glosses reflect both the physical grasping and the effect of shriveling or wasting. Spanish 'arrugado' (wrinkled/shriveled) and 'arrebatados' (snatched away) capture the dual semantic range. The contexts in Job describe both divine affliction causing physical wasting (16:8) and premature death (22:16), consistent with the root's sense of forceful compression or seizure. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-You-have-shriveled-me, were-snatched-away | es: Y-me-has-arrugado, fueron-arrebatados | fr: et-ותקמטני-moi, קמטו | de: [ותקמטני], [קמטו] Job 16:8; Job 22:16

קָמַל H7060 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

wither, decay, moulder; become dried up

This verb portrays organic decay and withering, especially of plant life. In Isaiah 33:9, Lebanon itself is described as mouldering or withering—a poetic image of widespread desolation. Similarly in Isaiah 19:6, reeds and rushes wither as waterways dry up. The Syriac cognate confirms the sense of mouldy decay. This is the slow deterioration of once-living things deprived of vitality, whether vegetation suffering drought or majestic forests succumbing to judgment.

(2×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent translation as withering or drying up. Spanish 'marchitó/marchitarán' and English 'withers/wither' align perfectly. Both occurrences describe environmental collapse: the reed beds of Egypt's delta (19:6) and the cedars of Lebanon (33:9). The root captures the gradual process of biological decay rather than sudden destruction. WITHERING AND FADING

en: it-withers, wither | es: se-marchitarán, se-marchitó | fr: [קמל], [קמלו] | de: [קמל], [קמלו] Isa 19:6; Isa 33:9

קָמַץ H7061 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)

take a handful, grasp with the hand (used in priestly ritual)

This verb describes the precise ritual action of a priest taking a handful of fine flour as a memorial portion during grain offerings. The gesture appears exclusively in Priestly legislation, always involving the priest grasping 'his full handful' from the offering. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'tomará puñado', French 'prendre un handful', German 'nehmen ein Handvoll') emphasizes the measured, deliberate nature of this liturgical gesture.

(3×) The term specifies the priestly action of grasping a ritual handful from grain offerings and incense. In Leviticus 2:2 and 5:12, the priest takes his full handful of fine flour mixed with oil and frankincense as the memorial portion to burn on the altar. Numbers 5:26 applies this same technical gesture to the grain offering in the jealousy ordeal. The consistent ritual context shows this is specialized cultic vocabulary. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-he-shall-take-a-handful, and-shall-take-a-handful | es: y-tomará-puñado | fr: et-devra-prendre-un-handful, et-il-devra-prendre-un-handful | de: und-er-soll-nehmen-ein-Handvoll, und-soll-nehmen-ein-Handvoll Lev 2:2; Lev 5:12; Num 5:26

קֹמֶץ H7062 Prep-l / N-mp (4×)

closed hand, fist, handful

This noun describes the closed hand as a measure of quantity—a fistful or handful. In priestly legislation, it specifies the portion of grain offering taken by hand; in Genesis, it describes abundant agricultural yield 'by handfuls.' The term derives from the verb meaning 'to grasp,' capturing the hand's capacity to hold and measure.

(4×) Denotes a handful or fistful as both a body part (closed hand) and a measure. In Leviticus 2:2, 5:12, 6:15 (all Priestly source), the priest takes 'a handful' (מְלֹא קֹמְצוֹ, 'his fist-full') of the grain offering as a memorial portion. Genesis 41:47 uses the plural 'by handfuls' to describe the earth's abundant yield during Egypt's seven years of plenty. The multilingual glosses consistently render the measurement sense: Spanish 'puño/a-puñados,' French 'handful/handfuls,' German 'Handvoll'—all capturing the manual measure central to ancient Near Eastern commerce and ritual. FLESH AND BODY

en: by-handfuls, his-handful, with-his-handful | es: a-puñados, con-puño-suyo, puño-suyo | fr: avec-son-handful, par-handfuls, son-handful | de: in-Handvoll, mit-sein-Handvoll, sein-Handvoll Gen 41:47; Lev 2:2; Lev 5:12; Lev 6:15

קִמּוֹשׂ H7063 N-mp (1×)

Thorny weeds or nettles symbolizing agricultural desolation and judgment

Wild thorny plants that overrun neglected land, serving as prophetic symbols of judgment and abandonment. Whether thistles or nettles, these invasive weeds represented nature reclaiming what unfaithful humans had forfeited. In Hosea, thorns occupy Israel's silver treasures; in Isaiah, they choke ruined palaces; in Proverbs, they mark the sluggard's field. The specific botanical identity matters less than the consistent message: thorns signify the curse, the reversal of cultivation, the undoing of human dominion when covenant relationship breaks down. What should have been fruitful becomes hostile and worthless.

(1×) Appears only in Proverbs 24:31 describing the neglected field of the sluggard, parallel with other terms for thorns. Spanish uses 'ortigas' (nettles), English 'thorns,' while French and German transliterate, reflecting botanical uncertainty. BDB notes possible textual variants. The term belongs to Hebrew's rich vocabulary for thorny plants that served as stock images of desolation and curse throughout wisdom and prophetic literature. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: thorns | es: ortigas | fr: קמשנים | de: [קמשנים] Prov 24:31

קֵן H7064 N-msc / 1cs (13×)

Nest of a bird (literal and metaphorical, of secure habitations on high); room or compartment within a structure.

Qen names the nest that a bird builds — but in Hebrew poetry and prophecy, it became a powerful metaphor for any dwelling perched in a seemingly unassailable place. The literal sense grounds the word in Deuteronomy's tender law about not taking a mother bird from her nest (Deut 22:6) and in God stirring up the eagle's nest to teach its young to fly (Deut 32:11). From there, the metaphor soars: Balaam sees the Kenite settlement 'set in the rock' and puns on the clan name — 'enduring is your nest (qinnekha)' (Num 24:21). Obadiah and Jeremiah mock Edom for setting its nest among the stars (Obad 4; Jer 49:16), and Habakkuk condemns the Chaldeans for the same arrogance (Hab 2:9). A single, distinct use in Genesis 6:14 applies the word to the rooms or compartments within Noah's ark — cells like nests within the great vessel.

1. nest of a bird (12×) A bird's nest, used both literally of the structure built by birds and metaphorically of human dwellings set in high, secure, or seemingly impregnable locations. The literal use appears in Deuteronomy's bird-nest law (Deut 22:6), the eagle stirring its nest (Deut 32:11), and Job's eagle nesting on the cliff (Job 39:27). The metaphorical extension is rich: Balaam puns on the Kenites' name ('your nest is set in the rock,' Num 24:21), Obadiah and Jeremiah taunt Edom for nesting among the stars (Obad 4; Jer

49:16), and Habakkuk condemns setting one's nest on high through unjust gain (Hab 2:9). Spanish nido, French nid-like renderings, and German Nest all preserve the bird metaphor naturally. Job 29:18's 'I shall die in my nest' voices the universal longing for a secure, familiar home. LIVING CREATURES

en: a-nest, as-the-nest, his-nest | es: como-nido, mi-nido, nido | fr: [כְּקֵן], [קֵן], [קִנְּךָ] | de: [כְּקֵן], [קֵן], [קִנּוֹ] Num 24:21; Deut 22:6; Deut 32:11; Job 29:18; Job 39:27

2. room or compartment (1×) A room, cell, or compartment within a larger structure — specifically the partitioned spaces inside Noah's ark (Gen 6:14). God instructs Noah to make qinnim ('nests/rooms') in the ark, a vivid architectural metaphor: each compartment is a nest sheltering its occupants through the flood. Spanish compartimentos, French chambres, and German Kammern all abandon bird vocabulary for architectural terms, confirming that translators recognize a genuinely distinct sense. Some scholars read qinnim qinnim (reduplicated) to emphasize 'room after room,' underscoring the ark's many internal divisions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rooms | es: compartimentos | fr: chambres | de: Kammern Gen 6:14

קָנָא H7065 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs (32×)

Be jealous/zealous for (possessive passion); be envious of (resentful desire); provoke to jealousy (Hifil).

The Hebrew verb qana names the fierce heat of exclusive attachment. In its Piel stem, it carries two faces Hebrew refuses to separate: burning zeal that defends what one possesses (God's jealousy for his people, Zech 1:14), and corrosive envy that covets what another has (Rachel envying Leah, Gen 30:1). Spanish distinguishes celar from envidiar, French jalousie from envie, and German Eifersucht from Neid — all splitting what Hebrew holds in one root. The Hifil adds a causative dimension: to provoke to jealousy, most memorably when Israel's idolatry 'provoked God to jealousy with what is no god' (Deut 32:21).

1. be jealous / zealous for (16×) To be jealous or zealous for someone or something one possesses or to which one has a rightful claim — burning with possessive passion and exclusive devotion. With 17 occurrences, this dominant Piel sense encompasses a husband's jealousy for his wife in the sotah ritual (Num 5:14, 30), Phinehas's zeal that 'was jealous for his God' and turned back the plague (Num 25:11, 13), Elijah's passionate declaration 'I have been very jealous for the LORD' (1 Kgs 19:10, 14), and God's own jealousy for Zion (Zech 1:14; 8:2). Spanish celar/celo, French jalousie/zele, and Arabic ġ all preserve the ambiguity between righteous zeal and possessive jealousy. The word's emotional temperature is always high — qana denotes a consuming inner fire, not mild concern. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: I-am-jealous, I-have-been-jealous, I-was-jealous | es: Celar, Estoy-celoso, He-sido-celoso | fr: dans-son-zeal, et-il-est-jaloux, et-était-jealous | de: [וְקִנְאָתִי], durch-seiend-eifersuechtig, eiferte Gen 30:1; Num 5:14; Num 5:30; Num 11:29

2. be envious of (11×) To be envious of another person on account of their advantages, status, or blessings — the corrosive counterpart to the protective jealousy of sense 1. With 11 occurrences, this Piel sense surfaces when Rachel envies Leah's fertility (Gen 30:1), the Philistines envy Isaac's wealth (Gen 26:14), Joseph's brothers envy him (Gen 37:11), and the psalmist warns against envying the wicked (Ps 37:1; 73:3; Prov 3:31; 23:17; 24:1, 19). Spanish envidiar, French envier, German beneiden, and Korean 시기하다 all deploy dedicated envy vocabulary distinct from the jealousy terms of sense 1. The wisdom literature consistently frames this sense as spiritual danger: 'do not envy the violent' (Prov 3:31), 'do not let your heart envy sinners' (Prov 23:17). ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: I-was-envious-of, and-envied, and-envied-it | es: Y-tuvieron-envidia, envidies, tendrá-celos-de | fr: [יְקַנְּאֵהוּ], et-envied, et-étaient-jealous | de: [וַיְקַנְאֻהוּ], [יְקַנְּאֵהוּ], eiferte Gen 26:14; Gen 37:11; Ps 37:1; Ps 73:3; Ps 106:16

3. provoke to jealousy (5×) To provoke to jealousy — the Hifil causative stem, meaning to cause another to burn with jealous rage by one's actions, especially by idolatry. With 5 occurrences, this sense is concentrated in Deuteronomy 32, the Song of Moses, where Israel's worship of 'no-gods' provoked the LORD to jealousy (Deut 32:16, 21), and God responds symmetrically: 'I will provoke them to jealousy with a no-people' (Deut 32:21). Paul later quotes this passage to explain God's strategy of provoking Israel through Gentile inclusion (Rom 10:19). Additional instances appear in 1 Kings 14:22 (Judah provoking God with their high places) and Psalm 78:58 (Israel provoking God with their graven images). Spanish provocar a celos, French provoquer a jalousie, and German zur Eifersucht reizen all use causative constructions that mark this as a distinct stem from the reflexive Piel. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: and-provoked-to-jealousy, provoked-me-to-jealousy, they-made-him-jealous | es: lo-provocaron-a-celos, los-provocaré-a-celos, me-provocaron-a-celos | fr: et-provoqua-à-jealousy, fera-provoquer-eux-à-jalousie, ils-provoqua-lui-à-jalousie | de: erzuernte-mich-zu-Eifersucht, sie-erzuernte-ihn-zu-Eifersucht, sie-gemacht-ihn-jealous Deut 32:16; Deut 32:21; 1Kgs 14:22; Ps 78:58

קְנָא H7066 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (1×)

To purchase or acquire with money (Aramaic)

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew qanah, used in Ezra's account of purchasing animals for temple sacrifice. This verb appears in the section of Ezra written in Imperial Aramaic, the administrative language of the Persian Empire. King Artaxerxes instructs Ezra to use royal funds to buy whatever is needed for proper worship in Jerusalem's temple. The commercial terminology underscores how even in exile, under foreign rule, God ensured resources for faithful worship. Persian gold would purchase Hebrew sacrifices, showing God's sovereignty over empires and economies.

(1×) Found only in Ezra 7:17 in the Aramaic section of Ezra. The king commands Ezra to use the provided silver to buy bulls, rams, and lambs for sacrifice. Spanish translates 'comprarás' (you shall buy), confirming the commercial sense. The verb takes both the direct object (what is bought) and a prepositional phrase indicating payment. This administrative language shows Persian support for Jewish temple worship. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: you-shall-buy | es: comprarás | fr: [תִּקְנָא] | de: [תִּקְנָא] Ezra 7:17

קַנָּא H7067 Adj-ms (6×)

Jealous — used exclusively of God, expressing His demand for undivided devotion and loyalty.

An adjective reserved entirely for describing God's character, appearing six times in the Torah. Unlike human jealousy driven by insecurity, divine jealousy (qanna) expresses the righteous insistence of a covenant Lord that His people give Him exclusive worship. The word first thunders from Sinai in the second commandment (Exod 20:5; Deut 5:9), warning that God visits iniquity on those who hate Him. Strikingly, Exodus 34:14 declares that 'Jealous' is actually God's name — qanna shemo — making this attribute not merely a description but an identity.

jealous (6×) Jealous, zealous — describing God's passionate insistence on exclusive covenant loyalty, brooking no rival in worship. Spanish 'celoso' and French 'jaloux' both carry the relational intensity of the term. Appears only as a divine attribute: in the Decalogue's prohibition of idolatry (Exod 20:5; Deut 5:9), in the covenant renewal where God's very name is declared 'Jealous' (Exod 34:14), and in Moses' warnings that God is a consuming fire demanding exclusive devotion (Deut 4:24; 6:15). The theological weight of the word lies in its covenantal framework — God's jealousy is not petty but protective of a relationship He initiated. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: Jealous, jealous | es: celoso | fr: Jaloux, jaloux, jealous | de: Jealous, eifersuechtig Exod 20:5; Exod 34:14; Deut 4:24; Deut 5:9

קִנְאָה H7068 N-fs (43×)

Jealousy, passionate possessiveness; zeal or ardent devotion; envy or resentful rivalry

A noun rooted in intense facial flushing from deep emotion, covering three distinct but related passions. Most commonly it denotes jealousy – God's exclusive claim on Israel (Ezek 36:5), a husband's suspicious rage (Num 5:14; Prov 6:34), or love as fierce as death (Song 8:6). It also describes positive zeal for God's house (Ps 69:9) or his cause (2 Kgs 19:31). Arabic distinguishes envy ('hasad') from jealousy ('ghayra'), and Korean similarly splits 'sigi' from 'jiltu,' illuminating the third sense of begrudging resentment at another's success (Eccl 4:4).

1. divine jealousy (God's exclusive claim) (20×) Split from sense 132408. Criteria: God as subject; covenant-fidelity context; exclusive worship demanded (Num 25:11; Ezek 5:13; Deut 29:20 where 'jealousy and anger' are divine attributes)
en: Your-jealousy, and-his-jealousy, and-in-my-jealousy | es: Y-en-mi-celo,, celo, celo-de-mí | fr: dans-mon-jalousie, et-jalousie, et-son-jalousie | de: Eifer, dein-Eifersucht, in-mein-Eifersucht Num 25:11; Deut 29:20; Ps 79:5; Isa 42:13

2. human jealousy (spousal suspicion, rivalry) (13×) Split from sense 132408. Criteria: Human subject; interpersonal relationship; marital infidelity context (Num 5:14 'spirit of jealousy'; Prov 6:34; 27:4; Song 8:6)
en: and-according-to-your-jealousy, jealousy, jealousy-of | es: celos, celos-de, la-envidia | fr: et-jalousie, jalousie, la-jalousie; | de: Eifer, Eifer-von, Eifersucht Num 5:14; Num 5:15; Num 5:18; Num 5:25

3. zeal, ardent devotion (7×) Fervent commitment or passionate devotion to God or his cause. Elijah and Jehu burn with 'zeal for the LORD' (2 Kgs 10:16), the psalmist is consumed by 'zeal for your house' (Ps 69:9), and Isaiah declares 'the zeal of the LORD of hosts will accomplish this' (Isa 9:7). Korean 'yeolshim' and Swahili 'bidii' (diligence) distinguish this from jealousy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-zeal, the-zeal, the-zeal-of | es: Celo-de, celo-de, celo-de-mí | fr: jalousie, mon-zeal, zeal-de | de: Eifer-von, der-zeal-von, mein-zeal 2Kgs 10:16; 2Kgs 19:31; Ps 69:9; Ps 119:139; Isa 9:7

4. envy, resentful rivalry (3×) Begrudging resentment toward another's prosperity or status. Ecclesiastes observes that 'all toil and skill spring from one person's envy of another' (4:4), and that in death 'their envy has perished' (9:6). Arabic 'hasad' (malicious envy) rather than 'ghayra' (protective jealousy) marks this as a distinct negative emotion directed outward at others' good fortune. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: envy-of-, is-envy, their-envy | es: envidia, envidia-de, su-envidia | fr: jalousie, leur-jalousie-eux | de: Eifer Prov 14:30; Eccl 4:4; Eccl 9:6

קָנָה H7069 V-Qal-InfAbs (86×)

To buy, purchase; to acquire, obtain (esp. wisdom); to create or possess (of God); passive: to be bought

One of the richest commercial-theological verbs in Hebrew, qanah spans the marketplace and the cosmos. In its most frequent sense it denotes straightforward buying — Abraham purchasing the cave of Machpelah (Gen 25:10), Jeremiah buying a field as a sign of hope (Jer 32:7-15). Yet Proverbs elevates the same root to acquiring wisdom, understanding, and truth (Prov 4:5, 7; 23:23), treating knowledge as a commodity worth any price. Most striking is the theological extension: God as qoneh shamayim wa'arets, 'Creator/Possessor of heaven and earth' (Gen 14:19, 22), and Wisdom declaring 'the LORD possessed/created me at the beginning' (Prov 8:22). The Cognate Ethiopic qaneya ('acquire, subjugate') and Arabic qana ('acquire, procure') confirm the ancient Semitic commercial core from which these theological meanings grew.

1. Buy, purchase (59×) The dominant commercial sense — to buy or purchase through monetary transaction — accounting for 59 of 86 occurrences. Covers buying fields (Gen 25:10; 33:19; Jer 32:7-15), slaves (Gen 47:19; Lev 22:11; 25:44-45), goods, and livestock. The participial form qoneh functions as 'buyer' in market contexts. Spanish comprar, French acheter, and German kaufen unanimously confirm the transactional meaning. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: and-he-bought, bought, buy | es: Y-compró, compra, compra- | fr: [לקנות], acheta, acheter | de: Rohr, du-soll-kaufen, er-bought Gen 25:10; Gen 33:19; Gen 47:20; Gen 47:22; Gen 47:23

2. Acquire, get, obtain (16×) A broader sense of acquiring or obtaining non-commercial goods — particularly wisdom, understanding, knowledge, and truth in Proverbs (1:5; 4:5, 7; 16:16; 23:23). Also used for God 'acquiring' a people (Exod 15:16; Ps 74:2; 78:54) where the purchase metaphor becomes theological — Israel as God's treasured possession. Spanish adquirir and French acquerir distinguish this from the market-specific comprar/acheter. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: I-acquired, I-have-acquired, You-acquired | es: Adquiere, Adquirir, Adquirí | fr: Je-avoir-acquit, Tu-acquit, acquérir | de: Du-acquired, acquired, du-purchased Gen 4:1; Exod 15:16; Ps 74:2; Ps 78:54; Prov 1:5

3. Create, produce, possess (6×) A theological-cosmological sense where God is the originator or sovereign possessor — 'Creator/Possessor of heaven and earth' (Gen 14:19, 22), 'he who made/formed you' (Deut 32:6), 'you knit me together in my mother's womb' (Ps 139:13), and Wisdom's declaration 'the LORD possessed me at the beginning of his work' (Prov 8:22). Six occurrences carry this sense, where acquisition shades into creation itself. German Schopfer ('Creator') signals the full semantic leap from commerce to cosmogony. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: formed, its-owner, possessed-me | es: a-su-dueño, creador-de, formaste | fr: acquérir, acquérir-moi, possessor-de | de: dem-Schöpfer, der-acquired-du, erwarb Gen 14:19; Gen 14:22; Deut 32:6; Ps 139:13; Prov 8:22

4. Be bought (Nifal passive) (3×) The Nifal passive — 'to be bought' — with three occurrences, all in Jeremiah's prophecy of restoration: 'fields shall be bought in this land' (Jer 32:15, 43, 44). The passive voice shifts focus from buyer to the transaction itself as a sign of hope — land will again change hands in a restored Judah. Spanish se compraran confirms the reflexive-passive construction. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: and-will-be-bought, they-will-buy, will-be-bought | es: comprarán, se-comprarán, y-se-comprarán | fr: acquérir, et-acquérir | de: kaufen, und-kaufen Jer 32:15; Jer 32:43; Jer 32:44

5. (1×) A single puzzling occurrence in Ezekiel 8:3, where the noun semel haqqin'ah ('the image of jealousy / the provoking image') appears related to qanah through the nominal form qin'ah. Spanish la que provoca celos ('that which provokes jealousy') points to the qin'ah derivation rather than a direct verbal use of qanah, suggesting this sense reflects a denominative or etymological connection to provocation/jealousy rather than purchase. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: the-provoking | es: la-que-provoca-celos | fr: acheter | de: kaufen Ezek 8:3

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Zechariah 13:5 — 'a man caused me to acquire (land)' or 'a man bought me' — in the context of a false prophet denying his vocation, claiming to have been a farmer since youth. English 'caused to acquire me' and Spanish me compro point to a commercial-servitude meaning, potentially 'someone acquired me as a slave/servant,' linking back to the core purchase sense in a biographical-confessional context. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: caused-to-acquire-me | es: me-compró | fr: acheter | de: erwarb Zech 13:5

קָנֶה H7070 Art / N-ms (62×)

Reed, cane; stalk of grain; branch or shaft of the lampstand; aromatic calamus; beam of scales; upper arm bone

A versatile Hebrew noun rooted in the image of a hollow, cylindrical stalk. In its most common usage qaneh denotes the tall reed or cane that sways along riverbanks and marshes, memorably invoked when Israel is compared to a reed shaken by wind (1 Kgs 14:15). It serves as the term for Ezekiel's measuring rod and for the lateral branches and central shaft of the golden lampstand. Beyond botany it extends to the aromatic calamus of the anointing oil, the beam of a merchant's scales, the stalk on which grain heads grow in Pharaoh's dream, and even the bone of the upper arm in Job's oath of innocence.

1. reed, cane (plant) (30×) The primary sense: a marsh-growing reed or cane, used literally of waterside vegetation (1 Kgs 14:15; Isa 19:6) and figuratively of fragile support (2 Kgs 18:21, the 'bruised reed'). Spanish caña, French roseau, and German Rohr all converge on 'reed,' while the measuring-reed usage in Ezekiel (40:3-5) extends from the plant's straight, rigid stalk. REED CANE PLANT
en: A-reed, calamus, reed | es: caña, caña-de, cañas | fr: roseau | de: Rohr, in-Rohr 1Kgs 14:15; 2Kgs 18:21; Job 40:21; Ps 68:30; Isa 19:6

2. branch of lampstand (22×) The six lateral arms branching from the menorah's central stem in the tabernacle specifications (Exod 25:32-36; 37:18-22). German Arme ('arms') and Spanish ramas ('branches') capture the architectural metaphor — each qaneh is a hollow, tubular extension mirroring the shape of a natural reed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-their-branches, branches-of, in-branch | es: en-la-rama, en-rama, las-ramas | fr: branches-de, dans-branch, dans-le-branch | de: Arme-von, auf-der-Arm, der-Arme Exod 25:32; Exod 25:33

3. aromatic cane, calamus (4×) Fragrant calamus, one of four spices in the holy anointing oil (Exod 30:23). Distinguished by the qualifier ha-tov ('the good') in Jer 6:20 and listed alongside cinnamon and henna in Song 4:14. Spanish caña and French roseau still apply, but the aromatic context separates this from the common marsh reed. REED CANE PLANT
en: and-cane, and-cane-of, and-sweet-cane | es: caña, y-caña, y-caña-de- | fr: et-cane-de, et-roseau, roseau | de: erwarb, und-Rohr, und-cane-von Exod 30:23; Song 4:14; Jer 6:20; Ezek 27:19

4. shaft of lampstand (2×) The central vertical shaft of the lampstand from which the six branches extend (Exod 25:31; 37:17). Spanish su caña ('its cane') and French son shaft reflect the structural core sense. Only two occurrences mark this as a distinct part versus the branching arms. REED CANE PLANT
en: and-its-shaft | es: y-su-caña | fr: et-son-shaft | de: und-sein-shaft Exod 25:31; Exod 37:17

5. stalk of grain (2×) The stalk on which ears of grain grow, appearing exclusively in Pharaoh's dreams (Gen 41:5, 22). German Halm ('stalk') neatly distinguishes this agricultural sense from the wetland reed, highlighting the thin, upright stem supporting grain heads. GRAIN AND WHEAT
en: on-stalk | es: en-caña | fr: sur-stalk | de: an-einem-Halm Gen 41:5; Gen 41:22

6. beam of balance/scales (1×) The horizontal beam or bar of a balance scale (Isa 46:6), on which pans hang for weighing. Spanish balanza and English 'scales' show that translators recognized a mechanical instrument rather than a plant — the rigid, rod-like shape of a reed transferred to the weighing apparatus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: on-the-scales | es: en-la-balanza | fr: roseau | de: in-Rohr Isa 46:6

7. bone of upper arm (1×) The bone of the upper arm at the shoulder socket (Job 31:22), where Job vows his arm should fall from its qaneh if he has sinned. This anatomical extension draws on the tubular, rod-like shape; German and French translators often resort to periphrasis, underscoring how unusual this bodily sense is. FLESH AND BODY
en: from-its-socket | es: de-su-caña | fr: de-sa-roseau-elle | de: von-erwarb Job 31:22

קָנָה H7071 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)
Kanah, name of a stream and a town in Canaan
Kanah designates both a wadi (seasonal stream) marking the boundary between Ephraim and Manasseh, and a separate town in the territory of Asher. The stream, identified with modern Wady Kânah southwest of Nablus, appears in the tribal boundary descriptions of Joshua. The town in Asher, probably modern Qâna southeast of Tyre, represents a different geographical location sharing the same name, which may derive from a root meaning 'reed' or 'cane.'

(3×) This place name refers to two distinct geographical features: the Kanah brook (naḥal Kanah) that served as a tribal boundary between Ephraim and Manasseh in central Canaan, and a town allocated to Asher in the north near Tyre. Both locations likely derived their names from reeds or canes growing in the area, a common basis for ancient toponyms in water-rich regions. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Qanah, and-Qanah | es: Caná, y-Caná | fr: Qanah, et-Qanah | de: Qanah, und-Qanah Josh 16:8; Josh 17:9; Josh 19:28

קַנּוֹא H7072 Adj-ms (2×)
jealous (of God); zealous, demanding exclusive loyalty
This adjective describes God's jealous nature—his intense demand for exclusive worship and loyalty from his people. In Joshua 24:19, the people are warned that Yahweh is a jealous God who will not tolerate their serving other gods. Nahum 1:2 pairs this quality with vengeance, depicting God's passionate defense of his honor. Divine jealousy isn't petty envy but righteous zeal for covenant faithfulness, an unwillingness to share the affections due to him alone.

(2×) All major translations consistently render this as 'jealous' when describing God. The German 'eifersüchtig' and Spanish 'celoso' capture the intensity of God's demand for exclusive devotion. Both passages (Joshua 24:19 and Nahum 1:2) present this as a warning —God's jealousy is linked to his holiness and his determination to punish covenant betrayal. The parallel with 'avenging' in Nahum underscores the protective rather than envious nature of this jealousy. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: jealous | es: celoso | fr: jealous, zélé | de: [קַנּוֹא], eifersuechtig Josh 24:19; Nah 1:2

קְנַז H7073 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)
Kenaz, an Edomite clan name and father of Othniel, Israel's first judge
A personal and clan name appearing in both Edomite and Israelite genealogies. Among Esau's descendants, Kenaz is a grandson of Esau and a chief of Edom (Gen 36:11, 15, 42). The name reappears in Judah's territory as the father of Othniel, Israel's first judge, who captured Debir and won Caleb's daughter Achsah as his wife (Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13). This dual usage hints at the complex kinship ties between Edom and southern Judah.

Kenaz (11×) A proper name borne by at least two figures: an Edomite descendant of Esau listed among Edom's chiefs (Gen 36:11, 15, 42), and the father of Othniel the judge from the tribe of Judah (Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13; 3:9, 11). The overlap between Edomite and Judahite genealogies suggests intermarriage or shared clan identity in the southern Negev region. English standardizes as 'Kenaz,' while some transliterations preserve the qoph as 'Qenaz.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Kenaz, Qenaz, and-Kenaz | es: Kenaz, Qenaz, Quenaz | fr: Kenaz, et-Kenaz | de: Kenas, Kenaz, [וקנז] Gen 36:11; Gen 36:15; Gen 36:42; Josh 15:17; Judg 1:13

קְנִזִּי H7074 Art / N-proper-ms (4×)
the Kenizzite (gentile adjective)
This gentile adjective identifies members of the Kenizzite clan or tribe, associated with Caleb and listed among pre-Israelite inhabitants of Canaan. The term appears with the article, referring to Caleb's ethnic identity and to a southern Canaanite people in the Abrahamic covenant's land promise. Caleb's Kenizzite heritage highlights the complex ethnic tapestry of early Israel.

(4×) Designates the Kenizzite people or individuals of Kenizzite descent. Genesis 15:19 lists them among Canaanite peoples in the land promise to Abraham. Numbers 32:12 and Joshua 14:6, 14 identify Caleb as 'the Kenizzite,' emphasizing his non-Israelite origin yet full membership in Israel through faithful obedience. The consistent use of the article (הַקְּנִזִּי) marks it as a recognized ethnic designation. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration patterns: Spanish 'el-cenezeo/el-quenezeo,' French 'le-Kenizzite,' German 'der-Kenizzite'—all preserving the gentile form. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Kenizzite | es: el-cenezeo, el-quenezeo | fr: le-Kenizien, le-Kenizzite | de: den-Kenisiter, der-Kenizzite Gen 15:19; Num 32:12; Josh 14:6; Josh 14:14

קִנְיָן H7075 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (10×)
Possessions, property, or wealth acquired; sometimes the act of acquisition itself. From the root קָנָה, 'to buy, acquire.'
The noun קִנְיָן denotes what has been gotten or acquired – property, possessions, or wealth viewed as the fruit of prior effort or purchase.

It appears in key patriarchal narratives: Esau takes all his קִנְיָן and departs from Canaan (Gen 36:6), and Shechem's people are told that Jacob's livestock and property will become theirs (Gen 34:23). In the Psalms, the word expands beautifully: Ps 104:24 marvels that the earth is full of God's קִנְיָן – His 'creatures' or 'acquisitions,' everything He has made. Proverbs 4:7 urges the reader to spend all his קִנְיָן to acquire wisdom. Occasionally the emphasis falls on the transaction itself rather than the resulting goods, as when Leviticus 22:11 speaks of a priest's קִנְיַן כֶּסֶף, 'acquisition by silver.' French 'acquisition' and Spanish 'posesión' together capture the range from process to result.

1. possessions, property, wealth (8×) Material possessions, property, or wealth viewed as the result of acquisition. This covers livestock, goods, and all movable property in the patriarchal narratives (Gen 34:23; 36:6; Josh 14:4), booty and plunder in Ezekiel's prophecy against Gog (Ezek 38:12-13), and the comprehensive sweep of God's creatures in Ps 104:24. Paired with בַּיִת in Ps 105:21, it denotes total household wealth. Spanish 'posesión/posesiones,' French 'propriété,' and German 'Besitz' all render the static, resultant sense of owned goods. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY

en: Your-possessions, and-for-their-possessions, and-possessions | es: de-tus-posesiones, posesión-de-él, su-posesión | fr: acquisition, et-acquisition, et-leur-propriété | de: [וקנין], [וקנינך], dein-possessions Gen 34:23; Gen 36:6; Josh 14:4; Ps 104:24; Ps 105:21

2. acquisition, act of purchasing (2×) The act or process of acquiring or purchasing, with emphasis on the transaction rather than the resulting ownership. In Gen 31:18, מִקְנֵה קִנְיָנוֹ pairs the term with livestock to stress what Jacob had acquired during his years with Laban – the getting itself. Leviticus 22:11 uses the construct קִנְיַן כֶּסֶף, 'acquisition by silver,' specifying the means of purchase. French 'acquisition de' and Spanish 'adquisición' highlight the processual, dynamic dimension distinct from mere possession. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: acquisition-of, his-acquisition | es: adquisición-de, adquisición-suya | fr: acquisition-de, son-acquisition | de: acquisition-von, seines-Erwerbs Gen 31:18; Lev 22:11

קִנָּמוֹן H7076 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

cinnamon, aromatic spice from bark used in worship and perfumery

Cinnamon was a precious imported spice, likely originating from distant eastern lands, valued for its sweet fragrance. It appears in the sacred anointing oil formula of Exodus 30, mixed with other aromatics for consecrating the tabernacle and priests. The word is probably a foreign loanword that entered Hebrew along with the exotic commodity itself, related to Greek κιννάμωμον. Proverbs and Song of Songs also mention it as a luxury perfume, suggesting both sacred and sensual associations.

(3×) The term identifies the fragrant inner bark used as a high-value spice in ancient Israel. In Exodus 30:23, it's specified as one of four aromatic ingredients (along with myrrh, calamus, and cassia) for making holy anointing oil—specifically 'cinnamon of sweet odor,' emphasizing its aromatic quality. The poetic books use it metaphorically: Proverbs 7:17 describes a seductress perfuming her bed with cinnamon, while Song of Songs 4:14 lists it among the beloved's fragrant plants. The consistent recognition across languages (Spanish canela, French cinnamome, German Zimt) reflects its continued importance as a spice. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-cinnamon, and-cinnamon-of | es: y-canela, y-canela-de- | fr: et-cinnamome, et-cinnamome„ et-cinnamon-de | de: [וקנמון], und-Zimt-von Exod 30:23; Prov 7:17; Song 4:14

קִנֵּן H7077 V-Piel-Imperf-3fs (6×)

To make a nest, to nest; denominative from qen (nest), used literally of birds and figuratively of secure dwelling.

A denominative Piel verb derived from qen ('nest'), describing the act of building a nest or settling securely in a sheltered place. Literally, it pictures birds nesting in treetops — the stork in the cypresses (Ps 104:17), or birds among the great cedar's branches (Ezek 31:6). Figuratively, it carries a tone of false security: Jeremiah mocks Judah's elite who are 'nested in the cedars' (Jer 22:23), and Moab is urged to nest like a dove on the cliff-face to escape coming judgment (Jer 48:28). Isaiah's eerie depiction of the arrow-snake nesting in Edom's ruins (Isa 34:15) transforms the image from comfort to desolation.

make a nest, nest (6×) To build a nest, to nest, to settle in a secure dwelling-place — used of birds literally and of human habitation figuratively. Spanish 'anidar' (to nest) captures the denominative sense cleanly. Literal usage describes birds finding homes in trees (Ps 104:17; Ezek 31:6 in its cosmic-tree allegory). Figurative usage carries irony or pathos: Jerusalem's aristocracy 'nested in cedars' face destruction (Jer 22:23), Moab's refugees must nest in cliff-crevices like doves (Jer 48:28), and creatures nest in the haunted wasteland of judged Edom (Isa 34:15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [K], nest, nested | es: (la-que-anida), [la-que-anida], anidan | fr: [(מקננת)], [[מקננת]], [קננה] | de: [(מקננת)], [[מקננתי]], [קננה] Ps 104:17; Isa 34:15; Jer 22:23; Jer 48:28

קֹנֶן H7078 N-mpc (1×)

Snares or traps for words; possibly 'ends' in the sense of limits or conclusions

A disputed term in Bildad's speech to Job, either meaning 'snares for words' or simply 'an end.' If 'snares,' Bildad accuses Job of semantic trickery - setting verbal traps instead of speaking plainly. If 'ends' (following ancient versions), he's asking when they'll stop talking and start thinking. The textual uncertainty reflects the passage's difficulty, but both readings converge on the same rebuke: stop the clever rhetoric and face reality. Medieval Jewish and Christian interpreters struggled with this phrase, and modern translations still diverge, showing how Job's poetry pushes Hebrew to its limits.

(1×) Occurs only in Job 18:2 in Bildad's reply. BDB notes most interpreters follow ancient versions reading 'end' (qets) rather than 'snares' (qintse), though the traditional reading suggests catching or trapping words. Spanish and English use 'fines' and 'ends.' The Septuagint supports the 'end' reading. The broader context is Bildad's impatient demand that Job stop talking and start listening to wisdom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ends | es: fines | fr: קנצי | de: [קנצי] Job 18:2

קְנָת H7079 N-proper-fs (2×)

Kenath (Qenath), city east of Jordan conquered by Nobah

Kenath was a city in the Transjordan region, east of the Jordan River, conquered by Nobah during the Israelite expansion into the territory of the Amorites. Located on the western slope of the Hauran mountains, it was later renamed after its conqueror (Numbers 32:42). The site is likely identified with modern Qanawat in Syria. It appears in genealogical records as well (1 Chronicles 2:23), connecting it to the tribal allotments of Manasseh.

(2×) The transliterations across languages preserve the Hebrew name with minor variations: English 'Kenath/Qenath,' Spanish 'Kenat/Quenat.' The two biblical references establish its conquest narrative (Numbers 32:42) and its incorporation into tribal territory (1 Chronicles 2:23). As a proper place name, it represents one of the Transjordanian cities claimed by Israelite tribes during the settlement period. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kenath, Qenath | es: Kenat, Quenat | fr: Kenath, [קנת] | de: Kenath, [קנת] Num 32:42; 1Chr 2:23

קָסַם H7080 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 2mp (23×)

To practice divination, seek omens; as participle, a diviner or soothsayer; the act and agents of non-Yahwistic oracle-seeking.

Qasam is the Hebrew Bible's primary term for divination — the attempt to obtain hidden knowledge or predict the future through ritual techniques outside the prophetic word of Yahweh. The word appears almost exclusively in negative or cautionary contexts: Deuteronomy 18:10 names the qosem ('diviner') first in its catalogue of forbidden practitioners, and every subsequent occurrence carries that Deuteronomic shadow. Balaam is identified as a qosem in Joshua 13:22, and the false prophets of Micah 3:11 'divine for money.' The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent — Spanish adivino, French devin, German Wahrsager, and Swahili mpiga ramli all select culturally specific 'fortune-teller' vocabulary, confirming that this root was understood as a technical term for a particular social role rather than a generic word for inquiry. The root covers both the agent (diviner), the act (to divine), and occasionally the product (the divination itself).

1. diviner (agent noun) (11×) The Qal active participle used as a substantive agent noun: a diviner, soothsayer, or practitioner of divination. This is the most frequent use at 11 occurrences, appearing in lists of forbidden practitioners (Deut 18:10, 14), as a professional title (Josh 13:22 identifies Balaam as haqqosem), and alongside priests and prophets as rival sources of knowledge (1 Sam 6:2; Isa 3:2; 44:25). Spanish adivino, German Wahrsager, and Korean 점쟁이 all select lexicalized 'fortune-teller' terms rather than generic descriptive phrases, confirming this is a recognized social role noun, not merely a verbal participle. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS
en: and-diviner, and-diviners, and-divining | es: adivinos, el-adivino, los-adivinos | fr: [וקסם], [וקסמים], [וקסמים] | de: [והקסמים], [והקוסמים], [והקסמים] Deut 18:14; Josh 13:22; 1Sam 6:2; Isa 3:2; Isa 44:25

2. divination (verbal noun) (5×) The Qal infinitive construct functioning as a verbal noun denoting the act or practice of divination itself. Five occurrences concentrate in Ezekiel 21, where the king of Babylon stands at the crossroads 'to practice divination' (Ezek 21:21) and his divination-procedure is described step by step. Micah 3:6 also uses the infinitive to describe the cessation of divinatory activity. The cross-linguistic pattern — Spanish adivinacion, French deviner (infinitive), German Wahrsagung — consistently selects abstract action-noun forms, distinguishing the practice from the practitioner. DIVINATION PRODUCTS
en: as-divination-of-, from-divination, in-divining- | es: (como-adivinación), al-adivinar, como-adivinación | fr: deviner | de: [בקסם], [כקסום], [כקסם] Ezek 21:21; Ezek 21:23; Ezek 21:29; Mic 3:6

3. to practice divination (5×) Finite verbal forms (imperfect, imperative, consecutive imperfect) describing the concrete act of divining in narrative contexts. Saul commands the medium at Endor to 'divine for me' (1 Sam 28:8); Israel and Judah 'practiced divination' among their accumulated sins (2 Kgs 17:17); the false prophetesses 'shall divine no more' (Ezek 13:23); the prophets 'divine for money' (Mic 3:11). The imperative and imperfect forms emphasize the volitional, performative nature of the act — someone chooses to consult forbidden powers. Korean 점치다 and Swahili -piga ramli both use activity-verb constructions here. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS
en: [divine], and-they-divined, divine | es: K(adivina-), Q[adivina-], adivinan | fr: [divine], deviner, divine | de: [divine], [יקסמו], [תקסמנה] 1Sam 28:8; 2Kgs 17:17; Ezek 13:23; Mic 3:11

4. please (interjection) (1×) A single anomalous occurrence at 1 Samuel 28:8 tagged as an interjection meaning 'please.' This almost certainly reflects a tagging or lemma-assignment error in the morphological database rather than a genuine sense of qasam. The word na' (the Hebrew particle of entreaty) appears in the same verse and may have been conflated. Spanish por favor, French je te prie, and German bitte all render a politeness particle with no connection to divination. This sense should be treated as a data artifact rather than a real lexicographic entry. ENTREATY PARTICLES
en: please | es: por-favor | fr: je-te-prie | de: bitte 1Sam 28:8

5. divinations (product noun) (1×) A nominal plural form referring to the products or results of divination — the specific oracular pronouncements obtained through divinatory practice. Appearing once at Deuteronomy 18:10, the plural form qesamim denotes the divinations themselves as countable outputs rather than the agent or the abstract practice. Spanish adivinacion and English 'divinations' both pluralize, pointing to concrete instances of divinatory speech. This product-noun sense completes the agent-act-product triad that the root covers. DIVINATION PRODUCTS
en: divinations | es: adivinación | fr: divinations | de: divinations Deut 18:10

קֶסֶם H7081 N-mp (11×)

Divination, the practice of seeking hidden knowledge by occult means; also an oracle or authoritative pronouncement

The noun קֶסֶם refers to divination — the attempt to discover the future or hidden things by supernatural means outside the LORD's appointed channels. In the Hebrew Bible it appears almost exclusively as a forbidden practice: Balaam's divination fees (Num 22:7), the cognate accusative 'one who practices divination' (Deut 18:10), and the false prophets' lying divinations (Ezek 13:6). Yet a single striking exception in Proverbs 16:10 applies the word positively to the king's lips, treating his pronouncements as a kind of oracle that should not err in judgment.

1. divination (pagan/forbidden practice) (10×) The dominant sense covers divination as a pagan or illicit practice — foretelling events or discerning the hidden through occult techniques. The multilingual evidence is consistent: English 'divination,' Spanish 'adivinacion,' French 'divination,' German using the untranslated Hebrew form. Balaam carries 'divination fees' (Num 22:7), there is no divination effective against Israel (Num 23:23), and the practice is flatly prohibited alongside sorcery and necromancy (Deut 18:10, 2 Kgs 17:17). Ezekiel especially targets false prophets whose divination is 'lying' (כָּזָב, Ezek 13:6, 21:34) — fraudulent claims dressed up as prophecy. DIVINATION PRODUCTS
en: and-divination, and-divination-fees, and-divination-of | es: adivinaciones, adivinación, la-adivinación | fr: [וקסם], divination, divinations | de: [והקסם], [וקסם], [קסם] Num 22:7; Num 23:23; Deut 18:10; 1Sam 15:23; 2Kgs 17:17

2. oracle (authoritative pronouncement) (1×) A single positive occurrence in Prov 16:10, where קֶסֶם is placed on the lips of a king: 'a divine sentence is in the lips of the king; his mouth should not transgress in judgment.' Here the word shifts from forbidden sorcery to an authoritative, almost divinely guided pronouncement. Spanish renders it distinctively as 'Oraculo' (oracle), while other languages retain 'divination,' showing the tension between the word's negative default and this proverbial elevation of royal speech to something approaching inspired utterance. DIVINATION PRODUCTS
en: divination | es: Oráculo | fr: קסם | de: [קסם] Prov 16:10

קָסַס H7082 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (1×)

To strip off or pluck away (fruit from a vine)

A rare verb describing the removal of fruit, appearing in Ezekiel's allegory of the great eagle and the vine. The context is God's rhetorical question about whether the transplanted vine will survive or have its fruit stripped away. This unique verb intensifies the image of agricultural destruction - not just failing to bear fruit, but having existing fruit violently removed. The allegory addresses Judah's rebellion against Babylon and false hopes in Egypt. Just as a vine's fruit can be stripped leaving it barren, so God will strip away the prosperity and security his people took for granted.

(1×) Found only in Ezekiel 17:9 in an agricultural metaphor about vine destruction. Spanish uses 'cortará' (will cut off), French 'retrancher' (cut back), both capturing the sense of removal or stripping. The verb is otherwise unknown in Hebrew, making translation dependent on context. The passage describes divine judgment against Jerusalem's political maneuvering, using vine imagery throughout Ezekiel 17. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12738 WITH 3 SENSES
en: cut-off | es: cortará | fr: retrancher | de: [יקוסס] Ezek 17:9

קֶסֶת H7083 Conj-w / N-fsc (3×)

writing case, inkhorn worn by scribes

This noun designates the portable writing kit or inkwell that scribes carried at their side, typically containing ink and writing implements. It appears only in Ezekiel's vision of the man clothed in linen who carries 'the scribe's writing case' as he marks the foreheads of the righteous in Jerusalem. The term may be a modified form related to 'bow' (qeshet), perhaps describing its curved shape or how it hung from the scribe's belt.

(3×) The word refers specifically to the professional equipment of a scribe—a case or inkhorn containing writing materials. In Ezekiel 9:2-3, 11, the angelic figure bearing this implement uses it to mark those who grieve over Jerusalem's abominations, distinguishing them for preservation. The writing case functions as the badge of scribal office and the tool for recording divine judgment. Some translations leave it transliterated in brackets, reflecting uncertainty about the exact form of this specialized scribal equipment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-case-of, case-of, the-case | es: el-estuche, estuche-de, y-estuche-de | fr: [הקסת], [וקסת], [קסת] | de: [הקסת], [וקסת], [קסת] Ezek 9:2; Ezek 9:3; Ezek 9:11

קְעִילָה H7084 N-proper-fs (18×)

Keïlah — a fortified city in the Shephelah of Judah, famous as the site David rescued from the Philistines

Keilah was a walled city in the lowlands of Judah, about eight miles northwest of Hebron. Its most dramatic biblical episode is David's rescue of the city from a Philistine grain raid (1 Sam 23:1–13), after which God warned David that Keilah's citizens would betray him to Saul, prompting his departure. The city appears in Joshua's tribal allotment for Judah (Josh 15:44) and again in Nehemiah among those who repaired sections of Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:17–18). It may correspond to the Tell el-Amarna city Qiltu.

Keilah (city in Judah) (18×) The toponym Keilah, a fortified town in the Shephelah of Judah near the Philistine frontier. David liberated it from Philistine attack but fled when God revealed the inhabitants would surrender him to Saul (1 Sam 23:1–13). Listed among Judah's towns in Joshua 15:44 and among post-exilic districts contributing to Nehemiah's wall rebuilding (Neh 3:17–18). Possibly identified with modern Khirbet Qila and the Amarna-era Qiltu. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Keilah, Qe'ilah, against-Keilah | es: Keila, Queila, Queilá | fr: Keïla, [קעילה], contre-Keïla | de: Keilah, [קעילה], gegen-Keilah Josh 15:44; 1Sam 23:1; 1Sam 23:2; 1Sam 23:3; 1Sam 23:4

קַעֲקַע H7085 N-ms (1×)

Permanent marking, incision, or tattoo on the skin

A prohibited practice in Levitical law involving permanent marks cut or inscribed into the skin. Leviticus 19:28 forbids both incisions for the dead and these tattoos, likely because such practices were associated with pagan mourning rituals or cultic devotion to other gods. The terminology suggests something engraved or imprinted permanently. Israel's distinctiveness from surrounding nations was to be expressed through obedience and holiness, not through body modifications that mimicked Canaanite religious customs. The body itself belonged to God and was not to be permanently altered according to pagan patterns.

(1×) Appears only in Leviticus 19:28 paired with prohibitions against cuttings in the flesh for the dead. The term specifically denotes permanent marking. English and Spanish both use 'tattoo/tatuaje,' recognizing the practice as skin inscription. The verse context shows concern with maintaining separation from pagan mourning and cultic practices. This reflects broader Levitical principles about bodily holiness and distinction from surrounding cultures. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: tattoo | es: tatuaje | fr: tattoo | de: tattoo Lev 19:28

קְעָרָה H7086 Art / N-fs (17×)

Dish, plate, platter; a shallow silver vessel used in tabernacle service and dedication offerings.

A cultic utensil term appearing exclusively in the Priestly source. Every one of its seventeen occurrences belongs to the tabernacle or its dedication: Exodus 25:29 and 37:16 list the qe'arah among the table vessels, while Numbers 7 repeats it twelve times as each tribal leader presents a silver dish weighing 130 shekels. The singular consistency of its referent – a shallow metal dish for sacred service – is reflected across translations: English 'dish,' Spanish 'fuente,' and French 'plat' all point to the same ritual vessel.

dish, plate, bowl (17×) A shallow dish or platter, always of silver in attested usage, serving as a cultic vessel in the tabernacle. Listed among the table furnishings for the bread of the Presence (Exod 25:29; 37:16), and presented twelve times as a dedication gift in Numbers 7 (each weighing 130 shekels). Also mentioned among the vessels set out on the table during transport (Num 4:7). The term is entirely restricted to Priestly ritual contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dish-of-, dishes-of, its-dishes | es: fuente-de-, fuentes-de, la-fuente | fr: dish-de-, dishes-de, le-dish | de: der-dish, der-dishes, dish-von- Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16; Num 4:7; Num 7:13; Num 7:19

קָפָא H7087a V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms / 1cs (3×)

congeal, thicken, become solid or stagnant

This verb describes liquids becoming thick, solid, or stagnant, used in three dramatically different contexts. In Exodus 15, it portrays the miracle at the Red Sea where the waters 'congealed' into walls. Job 10:10 uses it metaphorically for the formation of a fetus: 'Did you not curdle me like cheese?' Zephaniah employs it figuratively for spiritual complacency: people 'thickening on their lees' like undisturbed wine that has grown stagnant. The common thread is transformation from liquid to solid or from active to static.

(3×) The term captures the process of liquids solidifying or becoming fixed in place, whether literally or metaphorically. The Song of Moses uses it for the supernatural standing of the deep waters as firm walls during the Exodus. Job's haunting image applies the same verb to embryonic development, comparing divine formation of life to milk curdling into cheese. Zephaniah's indictment describes Jerusalem's complacent inhabitants as wine that has sat undisturbed until it thickens on its sediment—a powerful metaphor for spiritual stagnation and moral indifference. MELT DISSOLVE

en: You-curdle-me, congealed, those-who-are-thickening | es: los-estancados, me-cuajaste?, se-cuajaron | fr: coaguler, congealed, תקפיאני-moi | de: [הקפאים], [תקפיאני], congealed Exod 15:8; Job 10:10; Zeph 1:12

קָפָאוֹן H7087b V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (2×)

congeal, freeze; become solid or dense (of cold)

This rare term appears only in Zechariah 14:6 where textual uncertainty exists between the Qere and Ketiv readings. The noun form suggests congelation or freezing, describing an unusual atmospheric condition in the eschatological day of the Lord. Some versions interpret this as thick darkness or cold that congeals, while others see it as a reference to dimming or obscuring of heavenly lights. The root idea involves solidification or densification, possibly of cold air or atmospheric phenomena.

(2×) Translation evidence reveals significant divergence, reflecting the textual difficulties: Spanish 'oscuridad' (darkness), French 'former' (to form), and English 'thick.' This scatter suggests translators are wrestling with an obscure meteorological or cosmological description. The context in Zechariah 14:6 describes unprecedented cosmic disturbances on the day of divine intervention, where normal patterns of light, cold, and weather break down. POTTER AND FORMING

en: and-thick | es: y-oscuridad | fr: et-former, former | de: [(וקפאון)], [[יקפאון]] Zech 14:6

קָפַד H7088 V-Piel-Perf-1cs (1×)

To roll up or wind together tightly (as a weaver rolls finished cloth)

An image from textile production used by Hezekiah in his psalm of recovery. Like a weaver cutting finished cloth from the loom and rolling it up, Hezekiah says God (or he himself) has rolled up his life, bringing it to an end. The metaphor powerfully captures mortality's finality - when the weaver cuts the web, that life-thread is finished. The verb suggests gathering or bundling, the decisive action ending one phase. Hezekiah wrote this during mortal illness before God granted fifteen more years, so the image reflects his sense that his life's pattern was complete and ready to be cut from the loom.

(1×) Found only in Isaiah 38:12 in Hezekiah's thanksgiving psalm. The king uses weaving imagery to describe his life being cut short. Spanish 'enrollo' (I roll up) captures the bundling sense. Cognates in Aramaic and Arabic support meanings of drawing together or rolling up. The broader passage describes Hezekiah's near-death experience and miraculous healing, making the metaphor of premature life-ending particularly poignant. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: I-have-rolled-up | es: Enrollo | fr: [קפדתי] | de: [קפדתי] Isa 38:12

קְפָדָה H7089 N-fs (1×)

Shuddering horror or dread, trembling anguish that causes the skin to quiver

A visceral term for the horror and dread that Ezekiel prophesies will come upon Jerusalem. The word suggests physical shuddering - skin crawling, trembling with fear. Related terms in Aramaic and Syriac connect it to the bodily response of terror that makes hair stand on end. This isn't abstract anxiety but gut-wrenching, body-shaking horror. Ezekiel describes a city seeking peace but finding only anguish, a comprehensive collapse that produces not just defeat but existential dread. The physical language makes judgment terrifyingly concrete - this fear you can feel in your bones.

(1×) Appears only in Ezekiel 7:25 in an oracle of coming judgment on Jerusalem. Spanish uses 'angustia' (anguish), French 'horreur' (horror), both conveying intense distress. BDB connects it to Aramaic/Syriac roots suggesting bodily trembling like skin shuddering. The context is comprehensive disaster: they will seek peace but find terror, shuddering horror instead of security. The term emphasizes the visceral, embodied nature of divine judgment. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: anguish- | es: angustia | fr: horreur | de: [קפדה] Ezek 7:25

קִפּוֹד H7090 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

hedgehog or porcupine, an unclean animal inhabiting ruins

This creature (possibly a hedgehog, porcupine, or bittern—ancient translators disagreed) symbolizes desolation in prophetic oracles. Isaiah and Zephaniah invoke it when describing lands reduced to uninhabitable wilderness. The identification remains uncertain, though the Greek uses 'hedgehog' and the Vulgate 'porcupine.' Whether referring to a spiny mammal or a marsh bird, the key is its association with abandoned, cursed places where human civilization has ceased.

(3×) The term designates a wild creature characteristic of desolate ruins, appearing in three judgment oracles. Isaiah 14:23 pronounces Babylon will become 'a possession for the hedgehog,' while Isaiah 34:11 includes it among the chaotic inhabitants of Edom's destruction. Zephaniah 2:14 similarly envisions this creature lodging in the ruined capitals of Nineveh. Whether hedgehog, porcupine, or bittern, the animal represents the reversal of human order—wild nature reclaiming what was once civilized. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-hedgehog, hedgehog, the-hedgehog | es: erizo, y-el-erizo | fr: [וקפוד], [קפד], hérisson | de: [וקפוד], [קפד] Isa 14:23; Isa 34:11; Zeph 2:14

קִפּוֹז H7091 N-fs (1×)

Arrow-snake (possibly) or owl; creature symbolizing desolation in ruined places

An enigmatic creature name in Isaiah's prophecy of Edom's desolation. Traditional interpretation identifies it as the arrow-snake, said to spring from trees onto passersby, though some modern scholars suggest an owl based on the detail that it 'makes its nest and lays eggs and hatches them.' The zoological puzzle is less important than the theological point: where human civilization collapses under divine judgment, wild creatures reclaim the ruins. Whether reptile or bird, this creature belongs to the wilderness, not the city. Its nesting in abandoned Edom symbolizes the reversal of human dominion when nations oppose God's purposes.

(1×) Found only in Isaiah 34:15 describing creatures inhabiting ruined Edom. Spanish uses 'serpiente flecha' (arrow-snake), following traditional interpretation based on Arabic cognates and ancient sources. However, the context of nesting and incubating has led some scholars to suggest an owl instead. The broader passage depicts comprehensive desolation with various wild creatures, using animal imagery to portray divine judgment's thoroughness. SERPENTS AND SNAKES

en: the-arrow-snake | es: la-serpiente-flecha | fr: [קפוז] | de: [קפוז] Isa 34:15

קָפַץ H7092 V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (7×)

To shut, close (mouth or hand); to draw together, contract; to leap or spring with energy.

At its core, this verb means drawing together or contracting, which plays out across surprisingly varied contexts. Most often it describes shutting the hand against the poor (Deut 15:7) or closing the mouth in astonishment or silence (Isa 52:15; Job 5:16; Ps 107:42). The psalmist's anguished question — 'Has God shut up (קָפַץ) his compassion?' (Ps 77:9) — extends the physical closing into the emotional realm. The Niphal in Job 24:24 shifts to passive contraction: the wicked 'are gathered up' and wither. Most unexpectedly, the Piel in Song 2:8 describes the beloved 'bounding' (מְקַפֵּץ) over the hills — Spanish 'brincando' and French 'bondissant' capturing the leaping energy that transforms contraction into spring-loaded release.

1. to shut, close (Qal) (5×) Shutting or closing — the dominant Qal sense of drawing together the hand, mouth, or compassion so as to withhold. Deut 15:7 warns against shutting the hand (תִּקְפֹּץ) against a needy brother; Isa 52:15 and Job 5:16 describe mouths shut in awe or silenced injustice; Ps 77:9 asks whether God has 'shut up' his mercies. Spanish 'cerrará/cerrarás' and French 'fermer' consistently render the contractile closing motion. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: has-He-shut-up, has-shut, shuts | es: cerrará, cerrarán, cerrarás | fr: [יקפצו], bondir, fermer | de: [יקפצו], [קפצה], du-soll-einsperren Deut 15:7; Job 5:16; Ps 77:9; Ps 107:42; Isa 52:15

2. to be gathered, drawn together (Nifal) (1×) Being gathered or drawn together — the Niphal reflexive/passive in Job 24:24, describing the wicked who 'are drawn together' (יִקָּפְצוּן), contracted and cut off. Spanish 'son recogidos' ('are gathered') and Hindi 'वे इकट्ठे होते हैं' ('they are gathered') confirm the passive collecting sense, distinct from the active shutting of sense 1. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: they-are-gathered | es: son-recogidos; | fr: bondir | de: [יקפצון] Job 24:24

3. to leap, spring, bound (Piel) (1×) Leaping, springing, bounding — the Piel intensive in Song 2:8, where the beloved comes 'bounding' (מְקַפֵּץ) upon the mountains. The same muscular contraction that shuts a hand becomes the coiled energy of a leap. Spanish 'brincando' ('jumping'), French 'bondissant' ('bounding'), and Arabic 'يَقْفِز' ('leaping') all capture this dynamic, joyful movement — the Aramaic Targum tradition of 'hastening' (קָפַץ) likewise links contraction to swift propulsion. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: bounding | es: brincando | fr: bondissant | de: [מקפץ] Song 2:8

קֵץ H7093 Art / N-ms (67×)

End or limit of a period of time; by extension, the farthest spatial extremity or boundary.

A noun denoting the termination point of a defined or indefinite span of time, most often found in the prepositional phrase miqqets ('at the end of'). Prophetically, it marks the appointed conclusion of a nation's existence or an individual's life, as when God declares 'the end of all flesh has come before me' (Gen 6:13) or Amos sees a basket of summer fruit signaling Israel's end (Amos 8:2). In a handful of passages, the word shifts from temporal to spatial, pointing to the farthest physical reach of something, as in 'the height of its extremity' describing Lebanon's remotest cedars (2 Kgs 19:23; Isa 37:24).

1. end, termination of time (64×) The conclusion or appointed limit of a period of time. Found overwhelmingly in temporal phrases like miqqets ('at the end of'), this sense covers both definite durations (Gen 8:6, 'at the end of forty days'; Gen 41:1, 'at the end of two years') and indefinite spans (Gen 4:3, 'in the course of time'). Prophetic usage extends to the terminal end of a nation or life (Amos 8:2; Ezek 7:2; Dan 9:26). Spanish al-fin-de, French de-fin-de, and German Ende all converge on simple temporal finality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-end-of, at-the-end-of, from-end-of | es: Al-fin-de, al-fin-de, al-fin-de- | fr: [לִקְץ], [מִקְץ], de-fin-de | de: Ende, [לִקְץ], [מִקְץ] Gen 4:3; Gen 6:13; Gen 8:6; Gen 16:3; Gen 41:1

2. extremity, farthest point (3×) The outermost spatial boundary or farthest physical point of an extent. Attested only three times, this sense appears where the context demands geography rather than chronology. In 2 Kings 19:23 and Isaiah 37:24, Sennacherib boasts of reaching the 'farthest height' of Lebanon. Hindi chohr ('edge, border'), Arabic aqsa ('farthest'), and Spanish extremo all reflect a spatial reading distinct from the temporal majority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-end, height, its-end | es: de-su-extremo, desde-el-fin, su-extremo | fr: fin, son-fin | de: Ende, sein-Ende 2Kgs 19:23; Isa 37:24; Jer 50:26

קָצַב H7094 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (2×)

cut off, shear, trim

This verb describes cutting or trimming, whether cutting off a tree branch or shearing sheep's wool. In 2 Kings 6:6, Elisha cuts off a stick to perform a miracle of floating an axe head. In Song of Solomon 4:2, it describes freshly shorn sheep coming up from washing—an image of clean uniformity and beauty. Related Semitic languages confirm meanings of chopping, trimming, or shearing. The emphasis is on cutting away or removing part of something.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently reflect cutting actions: Spanish 'cortó/trasquiladas,' English 'cut/shorn,' French 'coupa/tondues.' The two contexts differ significantly—one is a practical miracle with wood (2 Kings 6:6), the other a poetic comparison with freshly sheared sheep (Song 4:2)—but both involve the action of cutting or trimming away material, whether branch or fleece. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-he-cut-, the-shorn-ones | es: Y-cortó, las-trasquiladas | fr: de-brebis-tondues, et-il-coupa- | de: [הקצובות], und-er-schnitt- 2Kgs 6:6; Song 4:2

קֹצֶב H7095 N-ms (3×)

shape, form; extremity or bottom (of mountains)

This noun carries two related meanings: the measured shape or form of temple furnishings, and the extreme limits or bottoms of geographical features. In 1 Kings, it describes the standardized dimensions and forms of the cherubim and bronze bases in Solomon's temple. Jonah uses it poetically for 'the roots of the mountains' or their underwater foundations, suggesting the absolute depths of the sea where the prophet imagined himself trapped.

(3×) The word functions in two semantic domains. In temple construction contexts (1 Kings 6:25; 7:37), it denotes the precise cut, shape, or form of sacred objects—the crafted dimensions ensuring uniformity. In Jonah 2:6, it shifts to geographical extremity: 'the bottoms of the mountains,' meaning their submerged roots or foundations beneath the sea, representing the uttermost depths of the earth. Both uses emphasize limits or boundaries—whether of crafted form or natural extent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-form, form, to-the-roots-of | es: A-raices-de, forma, y-forma | fr: et-form, form, forme | de: [לקצבי], form, und-form 1Kgs 6:25; 1Kgs 7:37; Jonah 2:6

קָצָה H7096 V-Hifil-Inf (5×)

to cut off, scrape off; to destroy or diminish (peoples, limbs, surfaces)

A verb of severance and removal used across diverse contexts. In Leviticus 14:41,43 the Hiphil describes scraping plaster off the walls of a house suspected of 'leprosy'—a priestly purification procedure. In 2 Kings 10:32 God begins to 'cut off' portions of Israel through Hazael's raids. Habakkuk 2:10 condemns the one who gains by 'cutting off many peoples.' The figurative use in Proverbs 26:6 portrays the fool's messenger as one who 'cuts off the feet'—i.e., harms oneself. Spanish 'cortar' and French 'couper' consistently render the core cutting action.

(5×) To cut off, scrape off, or remove by force—applied to surfaces, peoples, or limbs. The multilingual glosses uniformly cluster around cutting: Spanish 'cortar,' French 'couper,' English 'cuts off' / 'scraping.' The Hiphil in Leviticus 14:41,43 specializes as scraping house walls during ritual cleansing, while the Qal and Piel extend to destroying peoples (Hab 2:10; 2 Kgs 10:32) and the vivid metaphor of cutting off one's own feet by sending a message through a fool (Prov 26:6). CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: cuts-off, cutting-off-of-, scraping | es: Corta, a-cortar, cortando- | fr: couper, ils-scraped, scraping | de: [מקצה], [קצות], scraping Lev 14:41; Lev 14:43; 2Kgs 10:32; Prov 26:6; Hab 2:10

קָצֶה H7097a Prep / N-msc (92×)

End, extremity, edge; the tip or border of an object; the farthest reach of territory or earth; the end of a time period.

The noun קָצֶה marks the point where something terminates — the tip of a staff, the edge of a camp, the border of a territory, or the close of a span of time. Overwhelmingly spatial in its primary uses, it appears in measurement formulas (the end of the curtain, Exod 26:5), geographic descriptions (the end of the land, Deut 28:49), and grand theological statements about God's dominion reaching 'from one end of the earth to the other' (Deut 13:8). The temporal sense, always in the construction מִקְצֵה + time expression ('at the end of forty days,' Gen 8:6), accounts for about a tenth of its occurrences. Spanish confín/extremo, French extrémité, and German Ende converge on the same terminal-point semantics across all three senses.

1. physical end, edge, or tip of an object (44×) The physical end, tip, edge, or border of a concrete object or bounded area (44 occurrences). This covers the tip of a staff (Judg 6:21; 1 Sam 14:27), the edge of a curtain or board (Exod 26:28; 36:33), the border of a camp (Exod 13:20; 16:35; Num 11:1), and the mouth of a conduit (Isa 7:3). Spanish extremo de, French extrémité de, and Korean 끝 all designate the terminal point of a tangible entity. The sense presupposes a bounded, manipulable or traversable object whose endpoint is in view. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-edge-of, end-of, in-edge-of | es: confin-de, el-confin-de, en-extremo-de | fr: dans-edge-de, extrémité, fin-de | de: Ende, Ende-von, bei-Rand-von Gen 47:21; Exod 13:20; Exod 16:35; Exod 19:12; Exod 26:28

2. farthest extent of territory or earth (38×) The farthest extent, outermost boundary, or uttermost part of a territory, nation, or the earth itself (38 occurrences). Frequently in the construction מִקְצֵה הָאָרֶץ ('from the end of the earth,' Deut 28:49; Isa 5:26) or מִקְצֵה ('from the edge of,' Gen 47:21). This sense scales up from local edges to cosmic horizons — the same word describes the edge of a field (Gen 23:9) and the ends of the heavens (Deut 4:32). German am Ende and Swahili mwisho wa maintain the boundary-marking function at geographic scale. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-end, from-end-of, from-the-end-of | es: del-extremo, del-extremo-de, desde-confines-de | fr: de-fin-de, de-l'extrémité, est-à-le-fin-de | de: Ende, am-Ende, bei-Ende Gen 19:4; Gen 23:9; Gen 47:2; Gen 47:21; Exod 26:5

3. temporal end of a period (10×) The temporal end of a period, meaning 'after' or 'at the conclusion of' a specified duration (10 occurrences). Always in the fixed construction מִקְצֵה/מִקֵּץ + time noun: 'at the end of forty days' (Gen 8:6), 'at the end of three years' (Deut 14:28), 'at the end of three days' (Josh 3:2; 9:16). Spanish al fin de, French à la fin de, and Hindi अंत में all switch to temporal vocabulary, confirming that translators consistently recognize the metaphorical mapping from spatial terminus to temporal terminus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-end-of, at-the-end-of, from-end-of | es: Al-fin-de, al-fin-de | fr: de-fin-de, extrémité, à-fin-de | de: Ende, am-Ende, bei-Ende-von Gen 8:3; Deut 14:28; Josh 3:2; Josh 9:16; 2Sam 24:8

קָצֶה H7097b N-ms (5×)

end, limit; used in the phrase 'no end to' indicating boundlessness

A noun meaning 'end' or 'limit,' appearing exclusively in the fixed phrase 'there is no end to' (אֵין קֵצֶה). Isaiah 2:7 uses it twice: there is no end to Judah's silver and gold, nor to their chariots—an ironic indictment of materialistic excess. Nahum deploys the same construction for Nineveh's plundered wealth (2:9), heaped corpses (3:3), and limitless strength (3:9). Spanish 'fin' and 'límite' along with French 'extrémité' confirm the spatial-quantitative sense of a boundary that does not exist.

(5×) An end or limit, always negated in the phrase 'there is no end to,' expressing inexhaustible quantity or extent. Spanish 'fin' / 'límite' and French 'extrémité' converge on the boundary concept. Isaiah 2:7 pairs it twice for Judah's endless wealth and chariots, while Nahum applies it to Nineveh's bottomless plunder (2:9), innumerable corpses (3:3), and boundless military strength (3:9)—each time underscoring overwhelming, unchecked excess. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: end, limit | es: fin, límite | fr: [קצה], extrémité | de: [קצה] Isa 2:7; Nah 2:9; Nah 3:3; Nah 3:9

קָצֶה H7098 Prep-m / N-fpc (36×)

End, extremity, or edge of a physical object; the farthest reaches of the earth or territory

A feminine noun whose plural forms appear far more often than its singular, denoting the terminal points or outer limits of things. In the tabernacle instructions (Exod 25-39), it describes the 'ends' of the mercy seat, the curtains, the ephod, and the breastplate – precise, architectural language for where one piece meets another. Transposed to geography, it reaches cosmic scale: 'the ends of the earth' in Isaiah 40:28 and 41:5, and the place 'under the whole heaven' that God surveys (Job 28:24). Spanish moves from 'extremos' (extremities) for physical objects to 'confines' (confines) for the earth's far reaches, while German brackets the Hebrew in construct chains. A single occurrence in Job 26:14 as 'edges' hints at a boundary-line nuance distinct from terminal points.

1. physical ends or tips (29×) The concrete extremities or tips of physical objects, overwhelmingly in tabernacle and priestly-garment instructions. Exodus 25:18-19 positions the cherubim at the two 'ends' of the mercy seat; Exodus 26:4 and 28:7, 23-26 locate edges of curtains, ephod straps, and breastplate chains. The plural construct with pronominal suffixes dominates. Spanish 'extremos/extremo' and French 'fin/ends' track the precise spatial language of Exodus 25-39, where each 'end' is a measurable attachment point. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ends-of, from-end, from-ends-of | es: de-extremo, de-extremos-de, del-extremo | fr: de-ends-de, de-fin, de-le-fin | de: ends-von, von-Ende, von-der-Ende Exod 25:18; Exod 25:19; Exod 26:4

2. far reaches of territory or earth (6×) The remote extremities or farthest bounds of territory, land, or the earth itself. Job 28:24 declares God looks 'to the ends of the earth'; Psalm 19:6 traces the sun's circuit 'to its ends'; Isaiah 40:28 and 41:5 invoke the 'ends of the earth' as witnesses or objects of God's tireless sovereignty. Psalm 65:8 broadens to those dwelling at the earth's 'farthest bounds.' Spanish 'confines' and the shift to geographic scope mark this sense as a natural metaphorical extension from physical tips to cosmic limits. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-ends, of-the-earth, the-ends | es: a-los-confines-de-, de-los-confines, de-los-extremos | fr: [מִקְצוֹת], [קְצוֹת], extrémité | de: [לִקְצוֹת], [מִקְצוֹת], [קְצוֹת] Job 28:24; Ps 19:6; Ps 65:8; Isa 40:28; Isa 41:5

3. edges or borders (1×) Edges or borders – the outer boundary line of something rather than its terminal point. Job 26:14 reflects: 'these are but the edges of his ways,' meaning the outermost margins of God's works that we can perceive. Spanish 'bordes' (borders) and Hindi 'kinaare' (edge, bank) capture the boundary-rather-than-endpoint nuance, distinguishing this rare shade from the architectural precision of sense 1 and the cosmic reach of sense 2. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: edges-of | es: son-los-bordes-de | fr: bout | de: [קְצוֹת] Job 26:14

קְצוֹת H7099 N-mpc (3×)

ends, extremities, or boundaries (especially of the earth or land)

This plural noun designates the farthest reaches or boundaries of geographical space. The Psalms use 'the ends of the earth' to express God's universal reach and reputation, while Isaiah applies it to territorial expansion of the land's borders. The term emphasizes extremity and totality—either the complete extent of the known world or the full boundaries of a particular territory.

(3×) The word refers to the outermost limits of land or earth. In Psalm 48:10 and 65:5, 'the ends of the earth' is a standard expression for the entire inhabited world where God's name and righteous acts are known—a merism suggesting completeness from edge to edge. Isaiah 26:15 uses it differently: 'You have extended all the borders of the land,' where it means the expanded boundaries or frontiers of Israel's territory. Both uses mark the furthest extent of space, whether cosmic or national. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ends-of, the-borders, the-ends-of- | es: confines-de-, extremos-de, los-confines-de | fr: [קְצוֹת], bout | de: [קְצוֹת], der-ends-von-, ends-von Ps 48:10; Ps 65:5; Isa 26:15

קֶצַח H7100 N-ms (3×)

black cumin (Nigella sativa), a pungent seed used as spice

Black cumin, also called fitches or nigella, is a plant producing small black aromatic seeds used as a condiment in ancient Near Eastern cuisine. Isaiah 28 discusses its cultivation and threshing in an extended agricultural metaphor about God's varied dealings with His people. Unlike grain threshed with heavy instruments, black cumin was beaten out with a stick to avoid crushing the delicate seeds—a detail the prophet uses to illustrate divine wisdom in appropriate, measured discipline.

(3×) This agricultural term identifies the Nigella sativa plant and its seeds, appearing three times in Isaiah's farming parable. Verse 25 mentions planting it alongside other crops, while verse 27 twice describes its harvest method: black cumin is beaten out with a rod rather than threshed with sledges or wheels. The careful agricultural technique mirrors God's precisely calibrated treatment of His people—neither too harsh nor too gentle, but perfectly suited to the nature of what He's cultivating. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: black-cumin, is-beaten-out | es: el-eneldo, eneldo | fr: nigelle | de: [קצח] Isa 28:25; Isa 28:27

קָצִין H7101 Conj-w / N-mpc (12×)

Chief, ruler, or commander; a leader exercising civil authority or military command

A noun describing a person in a position of authoritative leadership, whether civil or military. In the prophets, it typically designates rulers and governors—Isaiah addresses the 'rulers of Sodom' (Isa 1:10) and warns that Jerusalem's leaders have failed (Isa 3:6–7; 22:3). Micah indicts the 'rulers of the house of Israel' (Mic 3:1, 9). In military contexts, it denotes a commander or captain, as when Joshua's captains place their feet on the necks of defeated kings (Josh 10:24) or when Jephthah is made commander (Judg 11:6, 11). Remarkably, Proverbs 6:7 observes that ants have no qāṣīn—yet accomplish their work, making the absence of a ruler the point of admiration.

1. ruler, governor (7×) A civil or political ruler exercising governing authority over a people. Isaiah addresses corrupt leaders as 'rulers of Sodom' (Isa 1:10), and Micah indicts 'rulers of the house of Israel' who pervert justice (Mic 3:1, 9). Arabic raʾīs and Hindi hākim both emphasize the administrative and judicial authority of this figure. In Isa 3:6–7, the desperate search for anyone willing to be a qāṣīn shows governance as a burden no one wants in a collapsing society. Prov 25:15 uses the term for a civil authority who can be persuaded by patience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-ruler, and-rulers-of, ruler | es: como-gobernante, gobernante, gobernantes-de | fr: [וְקָצִינֵי], [קָצִין], [קְצִינֵי] | de: Fuehrer, [קָצִין], [קְצִינֵי] Prov 25:15; Isa 1:10; Isa 3:6; Isa 3:7; Isa 22:3

2. commander, captain (5×) A military commander or captain who leads troops and directs operations. Joshua's commanders set their feet on conquered kings' necks (Josh 10:24), and Jephthah is appointed both 'head and commander' over Gilead (Judg 11:6, 11).

Arabic qā'id ('commander') and Hindi sardār/senāpati ('military chief') highlight the martial dimension. Daniel 11:18 uses the term for a military commander who turns against coastal lands. Proverbs 6:7 applies it to ants, noting they have no commander yet organize effectively—a wisdom observation rooted in military imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-commander, and-for-commander, chief | es: capitán, comandante, jefes-de | fr: [קְצִין], et-pour-commander, le-commanders-de | de: Fuehrer, [קְצִין], der-Befehlshaber-von Josh 10:24; Judg 11:6; Judg 11:11; Prov 6:7; Dan 11:18

קְצִיעָה H7102 N-fp (1×)

Cassia, an aromatic bark similar to cinnamon used in perfumes and sacred oil

A fragrant spice derived from tree bark, related to cinnamon and valued in the ancient world for perfumery. In Psalm 45, cassia scents the royal robes alongside myrrh and aloes, creating an atmosphere of luxury and celebration at a royal wedding. This psalm, traditionally understood as messianic, uses the finest aromatics to portray the king's majesty and attractiveness. Cassia was also an ingredient in the sacred anointing oil for priests and tabernacle furnishings. The Greek and Latin words for cassia derive from the Hebrew, showing how this eastern spice entered Mediterranean trade and vocabulary.

(1×) Appears only in Psalm 45:8 describing the fragrance of royal garments, listed with myrrh and aloes. The term derives from a root related to cutting or peeling bark. English, Spanish, French, and German all use cognates of 'cassia,' borrowed ultimately from Hebrew through Greek and Latin. The spice was prized for perfume and sacred uses, though some scholars suggest textual emendation, questioning whether all three aromatics fit the poetic meter. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: cassia | es: casia | fr: casse | de: cassia Ps 45:8

קְצִיעָה H7103 N-proper-fs (1×)

Qetsiah ('cassia'), name of Job's second daughter born after his restoration

One of Job's three daughters born after God restored his fortunes, named for the fragrant spice cassia. The naming is remarkable: Job gives his daughters names of luxury and beauty - Jemimah (dove), Qetsiah (cassia), and Keren-happuch (horn of antimony, a cosmetic). These names celebrate restoration, beauty, and abundance after devastating loss. Even more remarkable, Job grants these daughters inheritance alongside their brothers, unprecedented in patriarchal society. The daughters' beautiful names and equal inheritance signal a new world - suffering has refined Job's values, and beauty, not just utility, now matters. Cassia - exotic, fragrant, precious - perfectly captures the sweetness of restoration.

(1×) Mentioned only in Job 42:14 as the name of Job's second daughter after his restoration. The name derives from the spice cassia, suggesting fragrance and value. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration, treating it as a proper name. The narrative context emphasizes these daughters' extraordinary beauty and their unprecedented inheritance rights, suggesting Job's transformed perspective on worth and blessing. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Qetsiah | es: Quetsia | fr: קְצִיעָה | de: [קְצִיעָה] Job 42:14

קְצִיץ H7104 N-proper-fs (1×)

Qetsits, a Benjamite town possibly meaning 'end' or 'extremity'

A town in the tribal territory of Benjamin, mentioned only in Joshua's boundary lists. The name possibly relates to words for 'end' or 'edge,' perhaps indicating a border settlement. Located in the Valley of Qetsits, this otherwise unknown town was part of Benjamin's inheritance between Judah and Ephraim. The Greek versions show significant textual variation, suggesting uncertainty about pronunciation. Such minor place names, preserved only in boundary lists, testify to the detailed territorial organization of early Israel and the importance of each tribe's divinely allotted inheritance, even for settlements that never gained wider fame.

(1×) Appears only in Joshua 18:21 in Benjamin's town list, described as being in a valley. Greek manuscripts show considerable variation (Amekaseis and others), indicating textual or translational uncertainty. The name's etymology is uncertain but possibly relates to Hebrew roots meaning 'end' or 'extremity.' Archaeological identification remains unknown, representing one of many minor settlements preserved only in biblical boundary descriptions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Qetsits | es: Quesis | fr: Qetsits | de: Qetsits Josh 18:21

קָצִיר H7105a N-msc / 3fs (49×)

harvest — the season, act, or gathered crop of reaping grain and produce Qatsir encompasses the whole complex of harvest — the season when crops ripen, the labor of cutting and gathering, and the gathered produce itself. It appears 49 times across the biblical canon, anchored first in God's post-flood promise that 'seedtime and harvest shall not cease' (Gen 8:22). The wheat harvest marks the calendar: Reuben finds mandrakes during it (Gen 30:14), and the Feast of Weeks celebrates its completion (Exod 34:22). Prophetically, harvest becomes a powerful metaphor for divine judgment — 'the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved' (Jer 8:20) — and for eschatological reaping (Hos 6:11; Joel 3:13). Ruth's arrival in Bethlehem 'at the beginning of barley harvest' (Ruth 1:22) sets the entire narrative in its agrarian frame. Spanish 'cosecha/siega,' French 'moisson,' and German 'Ernte' all preserve the dual sense of season and gathered crop.

harvest (act/season) (49×) The season, activity, or product of reaping grain crops, functioning simultaneously as a calendrical marker, an agricultural reality, and a theological metaphor. As season: anchored in Gen 8:22 ('seedtime and harvest'), it structures the festival calendar (Exod 23:16 'feast of harvest'; Exod 34:22 'wheat harvest'). As labor and product: workers are hired for it (1 Sam 8:12), gleanings are left for the poor (Lev 19:9; 23:22). As metaphor: it images divine judgment (Jer 8:20 'the harvest is past'; Hos 6:11; Joel 3:13) and spiritual opportunity (Prov 10:5 'he who gathers in summer is wise'). All 49 occurrences orbit this unified harvest concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-harvest, harvest, harvest-of | es: cosecha, en-la-cosecha, en-la-siega | fr: harvest, harvest-de, moisson | de: Ernte, der-Ernte-, ernten-von Gen 8:22; Gen 30:14; Gen 45:6; Exod 23:16; Exod 34:21

קָצִיר H7105b N-msc / 3ms (5×)

bough(s), branch(es); collectively, the leafy growth of a tree (distinct from harvest homonym)

Not to be confused with the common homonym meaning 'harvest,' this noun refers to the branches or boughs of a tree, typically used collectively. Job uses it three times in rich metaphorical language: roots and branches represent a person's total life (18:16; 29:19), and even a felled tree can sprout new branches (14:9). Psalm 80:11 pictures Israel as a vine whose boughs cover the mighty cedars, while Isaiah 27:11 describes dried-out branches used as firewood. The Spanish 'rama(s)' (branch/es) captures this arboreal sense precisely.

(5×) Boughs or branches of a tree, used collectively for leafy upper growth. Spanish 'rama' / 'ramas' (branch/branches) and English 'branch' / 'boughs' confirm the arboreal meaning distinct from the harvest homonym. Job employs it figuratively: the wicked's branch withers above while roots dry below (18:16), the righteous man's branch stays fresh with dew (29:19), and a cut tree can sprout new growth (14:9). Psalm 80:11 extends Israel-as-vine whose boughs overshadow cedars, and Isaiah 27:11 pictures dried branches broken for fuel. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: harvest, his-branch, its-boughs | es: en-mi-rama, rama, ramas-de-ella | fr: [קְצִירָה], branche, dans-mon-moisson-moi | de: Ernte, [בְּקְצִירִי], [קְצִירָה] Job 14:9; Job 18:16; Job 29:19; Ps 80:11; Isa 27:11

קָצַע H7106a V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

To scrape off (plaster from leprous house walls)

A technical term from Levitical regulations for dealing with houses infected with spreading mold or mildew. When discoloration reappeared after initial treatment, the priest ordered all interior walls scraped and the contaminated plaster dumped outside the city in an unclean place. This radical cleansing protected community health while teaching spiritual lessons about sin's pervasiveness - like mildew, it requires thorough removal, not surface treatment. The detailed procedures show how Israel's worship, health, and daily life formed an integrated whole. Physical cleanliness and spiritual purity reinforced each other in a society where God's presence dwelt among his people.

(1×) Found only in Leviticus 14:41 in regulations for houses with persistent 'leprosy' (mold/mildew). The priest commands scraping all interior walls after removing infected stones. Spanish 'raspará' (will scrape), English 'scrape,' and French maintain the sense of removing surface material. The passage details comprehensive remediation procedures, with scraping as part of thorough cleansing. This reflects broader Levitical concerns with purity and the community's holy status. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: he-shall-scrape | es: raspará | fr: il-devra-scrape | de: er-soll-scrape Lev 14:41

קָצַע H7106b V-Hofal-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

Set in corners or cornered (describing small courts within the temple complex)

An architectural term in Ezekiel's temple vision, describing smaller courts positioned in the corners of the larger outer court. The word itself is disputed - it may mean 'cornered' or 'enclosed,' referring to courts set within corners. Many scholars and ancient versions question whether it belongs in the text at all, since architectural details in Ezekiel 40-46 are notoriously difficult. What's clear is that Ezekiel's temple vision includes intricate spatial arrangements with courts within courts, boundaries within boundaries, reflecting the gradations of holiness as one moves toward God's dwelling place. Even uncertain architectural terminology serves the vision's purpose: a renewed temple where God's glory returns.

(1×) Appears only in Ezekiel 46:22 describing courts, possibly positioned in corners of the outer court. BDB notes textual uncertainty - many scholars with ancient versions delete the word entirely. French uses 'angle' (corner), suggesting corner placement. The grammatical form (Hophal participle) suggests 'made cornered' or 'set in corners.' The broader passage describes temple courts used for cooking sacrificial meals, showing functional spaces within sacred architecture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-corners | es: en-las-esquinas | fr: angle | de: [מהקצעות] Ezek 46:22

קָצַף H7107 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (34×)

Be wrathful, be angry (Qal, of God or humans); provoke to anger (Hifil, causing divine wrath); become enraged (Hitpael, intensified fury).

The Hebrew verb qatsaf captures the full arc of anger — from initial displeasure to provocation to consuming rage — distributed across its verbal stems. In the Qal (28 occurrences), it simply means 'to be wroth' and serves equally for divine anger ('the LORD was angry,' Deut 1:34; Zech 1:2) and human displeasure (Pharaoh's anger at his servants, Gen 40:2; Esther 1:12). The Hifil causative (5 occurrences) shifts the blame: 'you provoked the LORD to anger' (Deut 9:7, 8, 22), making the subject the agent of another's wrath. A single Hitpael occurrence in Isaiah 8:21 intensifies the fury into self-consuming rage. Spanish enojarse/provocar a ira, French s'irriter/provoquer, and Korean 노하다/분노하게 하다 all mirror this stem-based distinction, confirming that the three senses map onto genuinely different speech situations rather than mere stylistic variation.

1. be angry, be wrathful (28×) To be angry, wrathful, or displeased — the basic Qal stative sense used of both divine and human anger. With 28 occurrences, this is the word's default meaning, appearing when God is angry at Israel's rebellion (Deut 1:34; Isa 57:16, 17; 64:5, 9), when Pharaoh's chief butler and baker fall from favor (Gen 40:2; 41:10), when Naaman storms away from Elisha (2 Kgs 5:11), and when King Ahasuerus fumes at Vashti's refusal (Esth 1:12). Spanish enojarse/airarse, French s'irriter, German zuernen, Arabic ز and Korean 노하다 all converge on the basic experience of anger, with the preposition al ('against') marking the target. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: I-was-angry, I-will-be-angry, and-He-was-angry | es: Me-enojé, Se-airó, Y-se-enojaron | fr: [וַיִּקְצֹף], [קָצַף], et-Il-était-angry | de: er-wird-sein-zornig, und-Er-war-zornig, und-er-war-angry Gen 40:2; Gen 41:10; Exod 16:20; Lev 10:6; Lev 10:16

2. provoke to anger (5×) To provoke to anger — the Hifil causative stem where the grammatical subject causes another (typically God) to become wrathful. Five occurrences concentrate in Moses' recollection of Israel's wilderness provocations (Deut 9:7, 8, 22) and in retrospective summaries of national sin (Ps 106:32; Zech 8:14). Spanish provocar a ira, French provoquer a la colere, German erzuernen, and Korean 노하게 하다 all deploy causative constructions, confirming the semantic shift from experiencing anger (sense 1) to eliciting it in another. The Hifil form transforms the word from a description of emotion into an accusation of culpability. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-they-provoked, provoking-to-anger, when-provoked-to-anger | es: Y-lo-hicieron-enojar, cuando-provocaron-a-ira, provocadores-a-ira | fr: et-s'irriter, provoking-à-colère, s'irriter | de: du-erzuernte-zu-Zorn, erzuernend-zu-Zorn, und-sie-provoked Deut 9:7; Deut 9:8; Deut 9:22; Ps 106:32; Zech 8:14

3. become enraged (1×) To become enraged or infuriated — the Hitpael reflexive-intensive stem expressing a heightened, self-consuming fury beyond ordinary displeasure. Only one clear occurrence: Isaiah 8:21, where a desperate, starving people 'will become enraged and curse their king and their God.' Spanish enfurecerse, French s'irriter intensement, and German sich erzuernen preserve the intensification. The Hitpael's reflexive force suggests fury turned inward or building upon itself — an emotional extreme that the prophet reserves for a scene of utter societal collapse. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: and-he-will-be-enraged | es: y-se-enfurezca | fr: et-s'irriter | de: und-zuernen Isa 8:21

קֶצֶף H7108 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

To become angry or wrathful (Aramaic)

The Aramaic verb for burning anger, used in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's rage when told his wise men cannot reveal his dream. This is not mild irritation but royal fury that threatens death for all the kingdom's sages. The king's wrath reveals the absolute power of ancient Near Eastern monarchs and the precariousness of courtiers' lives. Yet this same story shows God's sovereignty over even rage-filled emperors - Daniel not only survives the crisis but interprets the very dream that triggered the king's anger. Where human wrath threatens destruction, divine wisdom brings deliverance.

(1×) Found only in Daniel 2:12 in the Aramaic section describing Nebuchadnezzar's reaction to his advisors' failure. Spanish uses 'se enfureció' (became furious), German 'Zorn' (wrath), capturing intense anger. The verb appears in a context of absolute royal power and life-threatening rage. This triggers the narrative crisis that allows Daniel to demonstrate God's wisdom surpasses Babylonian magic and establishes his position in the empire. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-angry | es: y-se-enfureció | fr: et-brûler-de-l'encens | de: und-Zorn Dan 2:12

קֶצֶף H7109 N-ms (1×)

Wrath or anger, specifically divine wrath (Aramaic)

(1×) Appears only in Ezra 7:23 in the Aramaic section of the Persian decree. Artaxerxes commands full support for temple worship 'lest there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons.' Spanish uses 'ira' (wrath), confirming the sense of serious, consequential anger. The context shows Persian recognition of the Hebrew God's power and the political wisdom of supporting his worship to avoid divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wrath | es: ira | fr: [קצף] | de: [קצף] Ezra 7:23

קֶצֶף H7110a N-ms (28×)
wrath, fierce anger — intense indignation, overwhelmingly attributed to God's furious displeasure in judgment Qetseph denotes a sharp, fierce anger — a sudden flaring of indignation rather than slow-burning resentment. Of its 28 occurrences, the vast majority describe divine wrath, making it one of the Bible's primary vocabulary items for God's punitive fury. The word first appears in the Priestly legislation, where the Levites camp around the tabernacle 'so that there may be no qetseph upon the congregation' (Num 1:53; 18:5) — wrath conceived as a dangerous force unleashed by ritual trespass. It surfaces at moments of communal crisis: the plague after Korah's rebellion (Num 16:46), Achan's sin at Jericho (Josh 22:20), and the census David should not have taken (1 Chr 27:24). The Chronicler uses it repeatedly to explain national calamity — why exile came (2 Chr 29:8; 32:25-26; 36:16). Isaiah deploys it memorably: 'in overflowing wrath I hid my face from you for a moment' (Isa 54:8). Only twice does it describe human anger, both in late texts: the Persian nobles' frustration (Est 1:18) and the sage's observation about frustration (Eccl 5:17). German 'Grimm/ Zorn' and French 'colere' capture its severity.

wrath, anger, fury (28×) Intense divine wrath or indignation, typically provoked by covenant violation or ritual trespass and resulting in devastating punishment. The Priestly literature treats it as a quasi-physical force that Levitical faithfulness must avert (Num 1:53; 18:5). It erupts at Korah's rebellion (Num 16:46), Achan's trespass (Josh 22:20), and explains the exile's necessity (2 Chr 29:8; 36:16). Isaiah's 'overflowing qetseph' from which God relents (Isa 54:8) and Zechariah's 'great wrath' against the forefathers (Zech 1:2, 15; 7:12) round out the prophetic usage. Only Esther 1:18 and Ecclesiastes 5:17 apply it to human anger. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: At-His-wrath, and-anger, and-wrath | es: Y-con-ira, de-ira-su, e-ira | fr: [וקצף], [קצף], colère | de: Grimm, Zorn, [מקצף] Num 1:53; Num 16:46; Num 18:5; Deut 29:28; Josh 9:20

קֶצֶף H7110b Prep-k / N-ms (1×)
Splinter, chip, or twig; something small and helpless floating on water
A vivid image of helplessness and insignificance in Hosea's prophecy against Samaria. The king will be destroyed like a twig or splinter on water - carried away, unable to direct his own course, utterly powerless. This metaphor captures political impotence perfectly: rulers who seemed mighty will prove as ineffectual as debris floating on currents they cannot control. The term contrasts with 'wrath' (qetseph), sharing only consonants but opposing in meaning. One signifies power and fury; the other represents fragility and helplessness. When God's judgment comes, mighty kings become floating twigs.

(1×) Found only in Hosea 10:7 describing Samaria's king being destroyed 'like a twig on the face of waters.' Spanish translates 'como espuma' (like foam), emphasizing insignificance. The simile conveys complete helplessness and loss of agency. BDB distinguishes this homonym from the more common 'wrath,' suggesting 'splinter' based on context. The prophetic image emphasizes how judgment reduces apparent power to actual impotence. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES en: like-a-twig | es: como-espuma | fr: fureur | de: [כקצף] Hos 10:7

קְצָפָה H7111 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)
Splintering, breaking into fragments; state of being broken to pieces
Joel's description of total agricultural devastation where even the bark is stripped and broken from trees. Paired with 'desolation,' this term intensifies the image of comprehensive ruin - not just damaged but splintered, reduced to fragments. The locust plague Joel describes doesn't merely harm but obliterates, leaving behind broken remnants. This physical destruction serves as object lesson for spiritual truth: sin doesn't just diminish but destroys, breaking life into fragments. Yet Joel's prophecy moves toward restoration - where God's judgment splinters, his Spirit rebuilds.

(1×) Appears only in Joel 1:7 describing what locusts do to fig trees, parallel with 'desolation.' Spanish uses 'en astillas' (into splinters), French 'morceau' (pieces), capturing the sense of fragmenting. The agricultural catastrophe serves as metaphor for divine judgment's thoroughness. This image belongs to Joel's larger pattern of using physical disaster to illustrate spiritual crisis and eventual restoration. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES
en: for-splinters | es: en-astillas | fr: morceau | de: [לקצפה] Joel 1:7

קָצַץ H7112 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (14×)
To cut off, sever, or hew away; includes trimming hair at the temples and breaking objects into pieces
A verb of decisive physical separation, used for cutting off thumbs and toes (Judg 1:6), hewing apart chariot panels (2 Kgs 16:17), and even slicing gold threads for weaving (Exod 39:3). Jeremiah applies the passive participle to peoples who 'clip the corners of their hair' — a pagan mourning rite that set them apart from Israel. The multilingual evidence confirms the range: Spanish 'cortó' (cut) maps the basic action, while Hindi टुकड़े किए ('made pieces') captures the intensive fragmentation sense seen in 2 Kings 24:13.

1. cut off, sever (8×) The primary active sense: to cut off or sever decisively, whether limbs (the thumbs and great toes of Adonibezek, Judg 1:6), bronze panels (2 Kgs 16:17), or gold threads beaten thin for textile work (Exod 39:3). Spanish 'cortó' and German 'abgeschnitten' converge on simple, clean severance — the removal of a part from a whole by a single deliberate action. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: and-cut, and-cuts, and-he-cut-off | es: Y-cortarás, Y-cortó, cortó | fr: coupa-au-loin, couper, et-couper | de: er-hat-abgeschnitten, schnitt-ab, und-cuts Exod 39:3; Deut 25:12; Judg 1:6; 2Sam 4:12; 2Kgs 16:17

2. trim corners of head (3×) A specialized Qal passive usage restricted to Jeremiah (9:26, 25:23, 49:32), describing peoples who have the corners of their head trimmed or shaved — a cosmetic or mourning practice associated with Arabian desert tribes. The Hebrew phrase קְצוּצֵי פֵּאָה is rendered in Spanish as 'los de sienes rapadas' (those with shaved temples), highlighting that this is not mere cutting but a culturally marked bodily modification that signaled pagan identity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: those-with-corners-cut, those-with-cut, those-with-cut- | es: cortados-de, los-de-sienes-rapadas | fr: bords | de: Haarraender-von Jer 9:26; Jer 25:23; Jer 49:32

3. cut in pieces, break apart (2×) An intensive Piel sense emphasizing fragmentation rather than simple severance: to cut into pieces or break apart. In 2 Kings 24:13 Nebuchadnezzar cuts up the gold vessels of the temple, and in 2 Chronicles 28:24 Ahaz smashes the vessels of God's house. Hindi टुकड़े किए ('made into pieces') and Arabic نَزَّ ('shattered') in translation evidence confirm the shift from clean cutting to destructive dismemberment. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: and-cut-in-pieces, and-he-cut-up | es: y-cortó | fr: [ויקצץ], et-il-coupa-en-haut | de: [ויקצץ], und-er-schnitt-hinauf 2Kgs 24:13; 2Chr 28:24

4. be cut off (passive) (1×) The Pual passive participle denoting a state of having been cut off or severed. Judges 1:7 describes Adonibezek recalling seventy kings with thumbs and toes already 'cut off' — the completed passive result of the action in sense 1. Spanish 'cortados' and French 'retranché' both point to the perfective, stative character of this form, distinguishing it from the active cutting and the cosmetic trimming senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: cut-off | es: cortados | fr: retranché | de: abgeschnitten Judg 1:7

קְצָא H7113 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-mp (1×)
To cut down or chop off (branches of a tree) - Aramaic
The command in Nebuchadnezzar's dream to cut down the great tree representing his kingdom. The Aramaic imperative calls for decisive action - chop it down, lop off branches, scatter the fruit. This dream-tree symbolized the king's vast empire, but divine judgment would reduce it to a stump. The verb's violence matches the dream's message: proud sovereignty will be radically cut back. Yet even in judgment, hope remains - the stump stays rooted, bound with iron and bronze, preserved for eventual restoration. God's pruning, however severe, serves ultimate restoration, not final destruction.

(1×) Found only in Daniel 4:14 in the Aramaic section, part of Nebuchadnezzar's dream narrative. The heavenly messenger commands cutting down the great tree. Spanish uses 'cortad' (cut), confirming the imperative force. This begins a series of violent actions against the tree (cut, lop, scatter) that symbolize the king's coming humiliation. The passage illustrates divine sovereignty over human kingdoms and the temporary nature of earthly power. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-cut-off | es: y-cortad | fr: et-brûler | de: [וקצצו] Dan 4:14

קָצַר H7114a V-Qal-InfAbs (15×)

To be short, insufficient, or cut short; idiomatically of the soul/spirit becoming impatient or weary

A verb whose physical sense — being too short or insufficient — expands into vivid figurative territory. When paired with 'hand' (yad), it describes powerlessness: 'Is the LORD's hand too short to save?' (Isa 50:2; Num 11:23). When paired with 'soul' (nephesh) or 'spirit' (ruach), it captures the inner constriction of impatience, as when Israel's soul 'grew short' on the desert road (Num 21:4). Spanish captures both poles well — 'corta' for shortness and 'se impacientó' for the emotional sense. The Hifil and Piel stems extend the meaning to actively shortening or cutting short someone's days (Ps 89:45; 102:23).

1. be short, be insufficient (8×) The basic Qal sense of being physically short, insufficient, or inadequate in extent or reach. The classic theological use pairs this verb with God's 'hand' to ask whether divine power falls short — 'Is the LORD's hand shortened?' (Isa 50:2; 59:1). Spanish 'corta' and English 'is-short' reflect this directly. Proverbs 10:27 applies it to the shortening of lifespan, while Isaiah 28:20 uses the image of a bed too short to stretch out on. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: is-short, is-shortened, is-too-short | es: acortadas, corta, se-acortará | fr: [הקצור], [הקצר], [קצר] | de: [הקצור], [הקצר], [קצר] Num 11:23; Prov 10:27; Isa 28:20; Isa 50:2

2. become impatient, grow weary (5×) An idiomatic Qal sense where the soul (nephesh) or spirit (ruach) 'becomes short,' expressing impatience, frustration, or emotional exhaustion. The Hebrew construction qatsrah nafsho is a body-metaphor: the inner self constricts and cannot endure. Spanish 'se impacientó' and French 'became-impatient' capture this well. Key passages include Israel's desert weariness (Num 21:4), God's patience wearing thin with Israel (Judg 10:16), and Samson vexed unto death by Delilah (Judg 16:16). REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: and-became-impatient, and-grew-short, and-was-short | es: sería-corto, y-se-acortó, y-se-impacientó | fr: [ותקצר], et-became-impatient, et-crût-court | de: [ותקצר], [תקצר], und-war-shortened Num 21:4; Judg 10:16; Judg 16:16; Job 21:4; Zech 11:8

3. shorten (causative, Hifil) (1×) The Hifil causative sense: to actively shorten or curtail something, especially the duration of life or youth. In Psalm 89:45, the psalmist laments that God 'has shortened the days of his youth,' using the causative stem to place agency with the divine actor. Spanish 'Acortaste' (you shortened) reflects the direct address to God in this psalm of royal lament. SHORTEN CUT SHORT en: you-have-shortened | es: Acortaste | fr: le-moissonner | de: du-haben-shortened Ps 89:45

4. cut short (intensive, Piel) (1×) The Piel intensive sense: to cut short decisively or emphatically. In Psalm 102:23, the afflicted speaker protests that God 'has cut short my days' in the midst of life. The intensive stem conveys a more forceful, deliberate curtailment than the simple Qal. Spanish 'acortó' and the passage's overall tone of urgent complaint reinforce the sense of abrupt divine intervention. SHORTEN CUT SHORT en: he-has-shortened | es: acortó | fr: moissonner | de: er-hat-shortened Ps 102:23

קָצַר H7114b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (36×)

To reap or harvest grain; to cut and gather a crop, literally or figuratively

The verb for cutting and collecting a standing crop, especially grain at harvest time. It appears throughout the agricultural legislation of the Torah—gleaning laws require that the corners of the field not be reaped completely (Lev 19:9, 23:22)—and in narrative descriptions of harvest (Ruth 2:9, 1 Sam 6:13). Figuratively, it powers one of Scripture's most enduring metaphors: 'they who sow in tears shall reap with shouts of joy' (Ps 126:5), and 'whoever sows sparingly will also reap sparingly' (2 Cor 9:6, echoing Hos 10:12). Jeremiah 12:13 inverts the expectation: 'they have sown wheat but reaped thorns.' Spanish 'segar/cosechar' and French forms reflect the agricultural core.

reap, harvest grain (36×) To cut and gather a standing crop at harvest, whether literally or figuratively. The literal sense dominates in Torah legislation about gleaning rights (Lev 19:9, 23:22, Deut 24:19) and harvest narratives (Ruth 2:9, 1 Sam 6:13, 8:12). The figurative extension—reaping what one has sown—appears in prophetic and wisdom texts (Hos 10:12, Jer 12:13, Job 4:8, Prov 22:8). Spanish 'segar' and 'cosechar' distinguish the act of cutting from the broader gathering, while the Hebrew verb covers both. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: and-in-your-harvesting, and-reap, and-to-reap | es: Y-al-segar-vosotros, al-que-siega, cosechará | fr: [וקצרו], [יקצור], et-dans-ton-harvesting | de: [בקצר], [הקצרים], [וקצרו] Lev 19:9; Lev 23:10; Lev 23:22

קֹצֶר H7115 Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

Shortness (of breath/spirit), impatience resulting from oppression or distress

A powerful phrase describing Israel's state in Egypt: 'shortness of spirit' preventing them from hearing Moses' message of deliverance. Crushing labor had literally taken their breath away - they couldn't breathe deeply enough to hope. The phrase combines physical exhaustion and psychological collapse. Oppression doesn't just burden the body but constricts the spirit, making even good news unbearable. This explains why Israel, despite God's promises through Moses, couldn't respond - their suffering had squeezed out the capacity for faith. Sometimes deliverance must overcome not just external bondage but internal despair.

(1×) Appears only in Exodus 6:9 explaining why Israel couldn't hear Moses despite God's promises. Spanish uses 'cortedad de' (shortness of), English parallels this with 'impatience' or 'discouragement.' The phrase literally means 'from shortness of spirit/breath,' suggesting both physical exhaustion and psychological inability to hope. The narrative shows how severe oppression damages not just bodies but souls, making even liberation hard to receive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-shortness-of | es: por-cortedad-de | fr: de-shortness-de | de: von-shortness-von Exod 6:9

קָצֵר H7116 Adj-msc (5×)

short (of hand: feeble; of spirit: impatient; of days: short-lived)

An adjective meaning 'short' that never appears alone but always in construct phrases yielding vivid figurative meanings. 'Short of hand' (2 Kings 19:26; Isaiah 37:27) describes the feebleness of nations before God. 'Short of spirit' or 'short of temper' (Proverbs 14:17,29) characterizes the impatient person, contrasted with the one 'slow to anger.' 'Short of days' (Job 14:1) captures human mortality. Spanish 'corto de' (short of) and French 'court de' mirror the Hebrew construct pattern, showing how physical shortness becomes a metaphor for limitation.

(5×) Short—always in construct with another noun to produce figurative meanings: 'short of hand' (feeble, powerless), 'short of spirit/temper' (impatient, quick-tempered), or 'short of days' (short-lived). Spanish 'corto de' and French 'court de' replicate the Hebrew pattern of shortness-as-deficiency. In Proverbs 14:17,29 it describes the hot-tempered person, contrasted with patience; in 2 Kings 19:26 and Isaiah 37:27 it characterizes helpless nations; in Job 14:1 it laments humanity's brief lifespan. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-one-quick-of, one-quick-of, short | es: Corto-de, corto-de, cortos | fr: [קצר], court-de, et-וקצר | de: [וקצר], [קצר], [קצר] 2Kgs 19:26; Job 14:1; Prov 14:17; Prov 14:29; Isa 37:27

קְצָת H7117 Art / N-fp (8×)

End, extremity (of space or time); in partitive use, 'some of, a portion of.'

A noun that captures the idea of an edge, boundary, or terminal point — whether spatial or temporal. In Exodus 38:5, it describes the four corners of the bronze grating, while in Daniel 1:5 and 1:15 it marks the end of a period of days ('at the end of'). But the word also developed a distinctive partitive use, especially in late biblical Hebrew: 'some of the vessels' (Dan 1:2), 'some of the heads of families' (Neh 7:70). Arabic evidence is instructive — nihayah (نِهَايَة) for the spatial/temporal sense, ba'da (بَعْض) for the partitive — confirming that these are genuinely distinct semantic functions rather than contextual variations of one meaning.

1. end, extremity (spatial/temporal) (6×) The spatial and temporal sense of 'end, extremity, edge.' Used of the physical corners or sides of the altar grating (Exod 38:5; cf. 37:8; 39:4), the uttermost parts of the earth (Ps 65:9), and temporal endpoints ('at the end of ten days,' Dan 1:15; 'at the end of them,' Dan 1:5). Arabic nihayah (نِهَايَة, 'end') and French 'extrémités' both confirm the boundary-marking function. The construct form with min (מִקְצָת) in temporal usage means 'at the end of.' DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, and-at-end-of, and-at-end-of-them | es: Y-al-final-de, [qere], los-extremos | fr: -, et-partie, le-extrémités | de: -, [ולמקצת], [ומקצת] Exod 37:8; Exod 38:5; Exod 39:4; Dan 1:5; Dan 1:15

2. some of, a part of (partitive) (2×) The partitive use meaning 'some of, a portion of,' indicating an indefinite subset drawn from a larger whole. Daniel 1:2 says God gave into Nebuchadnezzar's hand 'some of the vessels' of the temple, and Nehemiah 7:70 records that 'some of the heads of families' contributed to the work. This usage — מִקְצָת with min — is characteristic of late biblical and post-biblical Hebrew. Arabic ba'da (بَعْض, 'some') and Spanish 'parte de' independently corroborate the partitive reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-some-of | es: Y-parte-de, y-parte-de | fr: [ומקצת], et-partie | de: [ומקצת] Neh 7:70; Dan 1:2

קְצָת H7118 Conj-w (3×)

end (Aramaic); part or portion

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel with two related senses: the end or conclusion of a time period, and a part or portion of something. In Daniel 4, it marks the completion of months ('at the end of twelve months'), while in chapter 2 it indicates a partial element ('part of the kingdom'). The term functions similarly to Hebrew qetsah, marking boundaries in time or composition.

(3×) The Aramaic word designates either temporal conclusion or fractional portion. Daniel 4:29 and 4:34 use it with 'at the end of' to mark when periods of months conclude—the moment when Nebuchadnezzar's year of warning expired and when his restoration arrived. Daniel 2:42 employs it spatially/constitutionally: 'part of the kingdom will be...' describing the mixed composition of the prophetic statue's feet. Both uses indicate boundaries—where time periods terminate or where compositional elements divide. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-end-of, at-end-of, end-of | es: al-fin-de, parte-de, y-al-fin-de | fr: [ולקצת], [לקצת], [קצת] | de: [ולקצת], [לקצת], [קצת] Dan 2:42; Dan 4:29; Dan 4:34

קַר H7119 Adj-mp (3×)

cool, cold (literally of water; figuratively of temperament)

This adjective describes refreshing coolness, applied both to water and metaphorically to disposition. Proverbs twice celebrates cold water—from distant lands or in thirsty circumstances—as supremely refreshing. The Ketiv of Proverbs 17:27 uses it figuratively for 'cool of spirit,' meaning calm and self-possessed, though the Qere reading differs. Jeremiah speaks of cold flowing waters in contrast to unreliable streams, emphasizing dependability.

(3×) The term characterizes welcome coolness in both physical and temperamental contexts. The literal sense appears in Jeremiah 18:14 ('cold flowing waters') and Proverbs 25:25 ('cold water to a thirsty soul'), where refreshing coolness represents reliability and revival. The figurative extension in Proverbs 17:27 (Ketiv) describes personal temperament: 'cool of spirit' indicates composed self-control, someone who remains calm under pressure rather than hot-tempered —though textual uncertainty exists here. Across all uses, coldness signifies something positive: refreshment, reliability, or restraint. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: [and-cool-of], cold | es: [y-frío-de], frías | fr: [קרים], et-[וקר], קרים | de: [[וקר]], [קרים] Prov 17:27; Prov 25:25; Jer 18:14

קֹר H7120 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

Cold (as opposite of heat in seasonal cycles)

Part of God's covenant promise after the flood that seasonal cycles will continue perpetually. Paired with heat, cold represents the reliable alternation of seasons that makes agriculture and life possible. This isn't theological cold - it's meteorological, the winter chill that balances summer warmth. God's promise of 'cold and heat' while earth remains is a charter for natural order, assuring Noah that despite judgment, creation's rhythms will continue. Farmers can plant knowing seasons will follow their course. This simple promise - that cold will follow heat and heat will follow cold - underwrites all human planning and hope.

(1×) Found only in Genesis 8:22 in God's post-flood covenant promise. Paired with 'heat' in a series of opposites (seedtime/harvest, cold/heat, summer/winter, day/night) describing perpetual cycles. Spanish 'frío' and German 'Kälte' straightforwardly translate as 'cold.' The verse establishes reliable natural order as basis for renewed creation, allowing human life to continue with confidence in seasonal predictability. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: and-cold | es: y-frío | fr: et-cold | de: und-Kälte Gen 8:22

קָרָא H7121 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (739×)

Call, summon, name; cry out in distress; proclaim publicly; read aloud; invite to a gathering

A foundational verb of vocal action in Biblical Hebrew, qara' covers the full spectrum from naming a child (Gen 2:19) to crying out to God in anguish (Judg 15:18) to reading the Torah scroll aloud before the assembly (Deut 31:11). Arabic preserves a revealing split: da'a covers calling and summoning while qara'a specializes in reading and recitation — the very root that gives us 'Qur'an.' Korean similarly distinguishes 부르다 (call/name) from 읽다 (read) and 부르짖다 (cry out), confirming that these are genuinely distinct senses within a single lexeme.

1. call, summon, name (575×) The core sense of calling, summoning, or naming (575x). Arabic da'a, Korean 부르다, and Swahili kuita all converge here. Gen 2:19 (Adam naming animals), Gen 22:11 (the angel calling Abraham), and Gen 20:8 (Abimelech summoning servants) illustrate the breadth — from bestowing identity to commanding attention. This is the semantic center from which all other senses radiate. CALLING AND NAMING en: and-called, and-he-called | es: Y-llamó, y-llamó | fr: et-appela, et-il-appela | de: und-er-rief, und-es-rief, und-rief Gen 12:18; Gen 20:8; Gen 20:9; Gen 21:17; Gen 22:11

2. cry out in distress (69×) Crying out in distress or urgent appeal (69x). Korean 부르짖다/외치다 and Spanish clamar/gritar distinguish this from neutral calling. Judg 15:18 (Samson crying out in thirst) and Judg 16:28 (his final prayer) show the desperate vocal quality. Swahili kupiga kelele ('make a commotion') captures the intensity. The cry is typically directed upward — to God — or outward in alarm. CALLING AND NAMING en: and-He-called, and-called, and-he-called | es: Y-clamaba, Y-clamó, Y-gritó | fr: et-appela, et-appeler, et-il-appela | de: und-er-rief, und-rief Gen 39:14; Gen 39:15; Gen 45:1; Judg 15:18; Judg 16:28

3. proclaim, announce publicly (32×) Formal public proclamation or announcement (32x). Korean 선포하다 and Swahili kutangaza mark the official, authoritative register. Exod 33:19 and 34:5-6 (God proclaiming his own name and attributes) show the theological weight this sense carries. Lev 23:2 (proclaiming sacred assemblies) illustrates its ritual-administrative function in Israelite life. CALLING AND NAMING en: Proclaim, You-proclaimed, and-proclaimed | es: Proclama, Proclamaron, clamaste | fr: appeler, et-proclama, il-a-appelé | de: du-soll-proclaim, proclaim, rief Exod 32:5; Exod 33:19; Exod 34:5; Exod 34:6; Lev 23:2

4. be called, be named (Nifal/Pual) (30×) Passive: to be called or named (Nifal/Pual, 30x). Arabic du'iya, Korean 불리다, and Swahili -itwa consistently render the passive voice. Gen 48:6 ('they shall be called by the name of their brothers') and Deut 28:10 ('all peoples shall see that you are called by the name of the LORD') show naming as identity-conferral from outside the individual. CALLING AND NAMING en: and-is-called, and-it-shall-be-called, and-let-be-called | es: Y-fueron-llamados, Y-será-llamado, es-invocado | fr: appeler, est-appela, et-appeler | de: genannt, ist-rief, rief Gen 48:6; Gen 48:16; Deut 3:13; Deut 25:10; Deut 28:10

5. read, recite aloud (24×) Reading a written text aloud or reciting from a scroll (24x). Arabic qara'a — the root of 'Qur'an' — preserves this specific meaning. Korean 읽다 and Swahili kusoma ('study/read') distinguish it from oral calling. Exod 24:7 (Moses reading the Book of the Covenant), Deut 17:19, and Josh 8:34 (Joshua reading the Torah) show this as a public liturgical act. CALLING AND NAMING en: and-he-read, and-he-read-it, and-read | es: Y-leyeron, Y-leyó, clamó | fr: appeler, et-appeler, et-il-lut | de: er-lesen, in-rief, lesen Exod 24:7; Deut 17:19; Deut 31:11; Josh 8:34; Josh 8:35

6. invite, call to a feast (9×) Inviting or summoning to a feast, sacrifice, or social gathering (9x). Arabic mad'uww ('invited one') and Korean 초대하다 ('invite') isolate this social-hospitality sense. Exod 34:15 (being invited to eat idol sacrifices) and 1Sam 9:13, 22, 24 (Samuel inviting Saul to the sacrificial banquet) show the verb in convivial contexts where the calling is to shared food and fellowship. CALLING AND NAMING en: -, I-invited, and-he-invited | es: K, Y-llamarás, invitado | fr: -, appeler, et-il-invita | de: -, der-invited-die, ich-invited Exod 34:15; Num 26:9; 1Sam 9:13; 1Sam 9:22; 1Sam 9:24

קָרָא H7122 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (37×)

To meet, encounter, or befall; used of purposeful meeting, chance encounters, and calamities overtaking

A verb of encounter whose meaning ranges from deliberate meeting to unwilled happenstance. In its most frequent usage as the infinitive construct liqra't, it functions almost as a preposition meaning 'toward' or 'to meet,' as when Saul went out 'to meet' Samuel (1 Sam 9:14). Yet the same root describes calamity 'befalling' someone, as Jacob feared evil would 'befall' Benjamin on the journey (Gen 42:38). The semantic tension between intentional approach and passive victimhood gives this word a narrative dynamism found across all major translations: Spanish 'encontrar' versus 'acontecer,' French 'rencontre' versus 'arriver,' each preserving the split between meeting and misfortune.

1. to meet, go to meet (21×) The primary Qal infinitive construct liqra't: to go to meet someone, functioning almost prepositionally as 'toward.' Overwhelmingly used in military and social contexts: going out to meet a king, an army, or a visitor (1 Sam 4:1; 9:14; 13:10). Spanish 'encontrar' and French 'a rencontre' preserve the purposeful, directional character of this most common usage. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: and-to-meet, to-meet, to-meet-her | es: a-encontrarla, a-encontrarlo, a-encontrarme | fr: et-à-rencontre, à-rencontre, à-rencontre-lui | de: und-zu-meet, zu-meet, zu-meet-ihn 1Sam 4:1; 1Sam 4:2; 1Sam 9:14; 1Sam 10:10; 1Sam 13:10

2. to befall, happen to (10×) Events, calamities, or circumstances befalling a person, often with overtones of misfortune or divine judgment. Jacob fears harm will 'befall' Benjamin (Gen 42:4, 38); Moses warns of what will 'befall' Israel in the latter days (Gen 49:1; Deut 31:29). Spanish 'acontecer' and French 'arriver' shift from spatial encounter to temporal occurrence, capturing the passive, unwilled quality. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: and-befalls-him, and-befell, and-will-befall | es: acontezca, le-acontezca, me-encontró | fr: –arriver, [קראני], [קראת] | de: [קראני], [קראת], dort-befall Gen 42:4; Gen 42:38; Gen 49:1; Exod 1:10; Lev 10:19

3. to meet, encounter (reciprocal) (2×) Nifal reciprocal: two parties encountering each other, implying mutuality or unexpectedness. In Exodus 5:3 God 'met' Moses and Aaron, and in 2 Sam 18:9 Absalom 'met' (ran into) David's servants. The Nifal middle voice suggests encounter from both sides rather than one-directional movement, distinguishing it from the Qal infinitive of sense 1. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: and-met, has-met | es: nos-encontró, y-encontró | fr: a-rencontra, et-rencontra | de: hat-met, und-met Exod 5:3; 2Sam 18:9

4. to cause to befall (1×) Hiphil causative: to cause something to befall someone, to bring calamity upon. Jeremiah 32:23 accuses the people of disobedience, so God 'caused all this evil to meet them.' Spanish 'llamaste sobre' reflects the causative agency. This single occurrence extends the befall-sense into active divine orchestration of consequences. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: and-you-caused-to-meet | es: y-llamaste-sobre | fr: [ותקרא] | de: und-du-rufst Jer 32:23

5. to happen by chance (1×) Nifal infinitive absolute used adverbially to express chance or accident: 'by chance' or 'as it happened.' In 2 Sam 1:6 the Amalekite says 'I happened by chance upon Mount Gilboa.' Spanish 'acontecer' and French 'par chance' reveal the grammaticalized shift from verb of encounter to adverb of happenstance. A striking case of semantic bleaching. FATE CHANCE HAPPENING

en: by-chance | es: acontecer | fr: par-chance | de: bei-chance 2Sam 1:6

6. to be encountered, be found (1×) Nifal imperfect with a locative, passive sense: to be encountered or found in a place. Deuteronomy 22:6 speaks of a bird's nest 'being encountered' along the way. This stative usage emphasizes the object's presence awaiting discovery rather than any agent's movement. Spanish 'se encuentre' uses the reflexive-passive construction to mirror this sense. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: is-encountered | es: se-encuentre | fr: est-encountered | de: ist-encountered Deut 22:6

7. to be called, be named (1×) A likely homographic overlap with qara' (H7121, 'to call'): Nifal 'to be called or named.' In 2 Sam 20:1 a man named Sheba 'happened to be there' or, more likely per this tagging, 'was called' by name. Spanish 'fue llamado' and French 'fut appele' confirm identification with the naming root rather than the encounter root. This may represent a tagging artifact rather than a true sense of H7122. CALLING AND NAMING en: was-called | es: fue-llamado | fr: fut-appela | de: war-rief 2Sam 20:1

קָרָא H7123 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (11×)

To call out, proclaim; to read aloud (Aramaic, primarily in Daniel and Ezra)

The Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew qara', this verb carries the twin senses of vocal proclamation and public reading that define official communication in the ancient Near East. In Daniel 3:4, a herald 'proclaims with might' — Spanish 'proclamaba' and French 'appeler' highlight the announcer's authority. The reading sense dominates Daniel 5, where wise men are summoned to 'read' the mysterious handwriting. The passive Hithpe'el in Daniel 5:12 adds the nuance of being officially summoned — 'let Daniel be called' — showing how proclamation and summons are two faces of the same public speech act.

1. read aloud (7×) To read aloud, especially an official document or inscription. The Pe'al and Pe'il forms dominate Daniel 5, where the writing on the wall must be read (Dan 5:7-8, 15-17), and Ezra 4:18, 23, where a royal letter 'was read' before the king. Spanish 'leer/lea' (to read) and English 'read/reads' consistently mark this as decipherment and oral performance of written text. CALLING AND NAMING en: I-will-read, read, reads | es: fue-leída, lea, leer | fr: [קרי], appeler | de: [קרי], rufen Ezra 4:18; Ezra 4:23; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:8; Dan 5:15

2. call, proclaim (3×) To call out or proclaim publicly with authority. The Pe'al participle in Daniel 3:4 describes a herald 'calling with might,' and Daniel 4:14 has a watcher proclaiming from heaven. Spanish 'proclamaba/gritó' and English 'proclaimed/calling' treat this as authoritative public speech. Daniel 5:7 bridges both senses — the king proclaims that whoever can read the writing will be rewarded. CALLING AND NAMING en: called, calling, proclaimed | es: clamaba, gritó, proclamaba | fr: il-a-appelé | de: rief Dan 3:4; Dan 4:14; Dan 5:7

3. be summoned (1×) To be summoned or called forth (Hithpe'el passive-reflexive). A single occurrence in Daniel 5:12 where the queen recommends that Daniel 'be called' — Spanish 'sea llamado' captures the passive summons. This form extends the root's public-speech sense into the domain of official convocation. CALLING AND NAMING en: let-be-called | es: sea-llamado | fr: appeler | de: rufen Dan 5:12

קְרָא H7124 Art / N-ms (2×)

partridge (bird); possibly from its calling sound

The partridge is a game bird known for its distinctive call, mentioned in contexts of hunting and natural imagery. In 1 Samuel 26:20, David compares himself to a partridge hunted in the mountains—a figure of insignificance being pursued unnecessarily. Jeremiah 17:11 uses the partridge gathering eggs it didn't lay as a metaphor for ill-gotten wealth. The bird's name may derive from its characteristic calling sound. These desert-dwelling birds were common enough to serve as recognizable metaphors.

(2×) Most translations preserve 'partridge' as a loan word: Spanish 'perdiz,' English 'partridge,' French 'partridge.' Both biblical references use the bird metaphorically rather than literally—David fleeing for his life like hunted prey (1 Samuel 26:20), and the foolish person gathering what isn't theirs like the brooding partridge (Jeremiah 17:11). The bird serves as a cultural reference point for both vulnerability and misguided effort. LIVING CREATURES
en: Partridge, the-partridge | es: Perdiz, la-perdiz | fr: [קרא], le-partridge | de: der-partridge, rief 1Sam 26:20; Jer 17:11

לִקְרָאת H7125 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 1cp (100×)

To meet, encounter; as infinitive construct liqra't functions as a preposition meaning 'toward, against, opposite.'

Qara (II) in the overwhelming majority of its occurrences appears as the infinitive construct liqra't, which has effectively become a preposition meaning 'to meet, toward, against.' It covers the full range of encounters: joyful welcome (Exod 18:7, Jethro going out to meet Moses), military confrontation (1 Sam 17:48, David running to meet Goliath), and diplomatic reception (Gen 14:17). The word captures the intentional movement toward another person or group. Spanish 'al encuentro de,' French 'a la rencontre,' and German 'entgegen' all preserve this directional, purposeful quality. One enigmatic occurrence in Genesis 15:10, where Abram arranges the halved animals 'each piece opposite its counterpart,' preserves the root sense of spatial correspondence rather than personal encounter.

1. to meet or encounter (99×) Going out toward someone to meet or encounter them, whether in greeting, welcome, confrontation, or battle. Used 99 times overwhelmingly as the infinitive construct liqra't functioning as a preposition. Covers joyful meetings (Exod 18:7), military engagements (1 Sam 17:48), and formal receptions. Spanish 'al encuentro de,' French 'a la rencontre,' and German 'entgegen' all preserve the deliberate, directional movement toward another. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: to-meet | es: al-encuentro-de, al-encuentro-de- | fr: à-meet, à-rencontre, à-rencontrer | de: zu-meet Exod 4:27; Exod 5:20; Exod 7:15; Exod 18:7; Exod 19:17

2. (1×) Spatial correspondence or opposition: placing something opposite or facing its counterpart. In Genesis 15:10, Abram sets the halved covenant animals each facing its match. Spanish 'frente a' (facing) and German 'gegenueber' (opposite) capture this spatial rather than personal sense, preserving the root meaning of encounter as physical alignment rather than interpersonal meeting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: to-meet | es: frente-a | fr: à-rencontrer | de: gegenüber- Gen 15:10

קָרַב H7126 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp / 3mp (283×)

To draw near or approach; in Hifil, to bring near or present an offering; statively, to be near or at hand.

One of the most theologically dense verbs in the Hebrew Bible, qarab spans the entire spectrum of nearness — from a person walking up to another, to the solemn act of presenting a sacrifice before God. In its Hifil stem, which accounts for nearly half of all occurrences, the word becomes the standard technical term for offering sacrifices in the Levitical system, reflected across languages from Arabic yuqarribu to Korean 드리다 and Swahili -toa. Yet the word never loses its earthy, spatial core: Moses is told to 'draw near' the burning bush, armies 'approach' for battle, and the day of the LORD 'is near.' The Piel intensifies the action into deliberate, purposeful bringing-close, as in Ezekiel's symbolic joining of the two sticks.

1. offer, present sacrificially (122×) The dominant Hifil cultic sense: presenting a sacrifice, grain offering, or animal to Yahweh according to prescribed ritual. Leviticus uses this form overwhelmingly (Lev 1:13-14; 3:3-9), and the multilingual evidence is striking — Arabic Form II yuqarribu mirrors the Hebrew causative exactly, while Korean 드리다/바치다 and Hindi चढ़ाना all select dedicated 'offering' vocabulary rather than generic 'approach' words, confirming a lexicalized ritual sense distinct from mere physical movement. NEARNESS AND APPROACH en: and-he-shall-bring-near, and-you-shall-offer, then-he-shall-offer | es: Y-ofreceréis, Y-presentará, y-ofreceréis | fr: alors-il-devra-offrir, et-il-devra-apporter-près-de, et-vous-offrirez | de: dann-er-soll-opfern, und-du-soll-opfern, und-er-soll-bringen-nahe Lev 1:13; Lev 1:14; Lev 3:3; Lev 3:7; Lev 3:9

2. draw near, approach (95×) The basic Qal intransitive meaning: to draw near, come close, approach a person, place, or situation. This is the root spatial sense from which all others develop. Found in narrative (Lev 9:5-8, Moses commanding Aaron to approach the altar) and prophetic speech alike. Arabic iqtaraba and Swahili -karibia both preserve this core 'move-toward' semantics, as does Korean 가까이 오다. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: Come-near, Draw-near, and-drew-near | es: Acercaos, Y-os-acercasteis, Y-se-acercaron | fr: [קרבו], draw-près-de, et-drew-près-de | de: der-approaching, draw-nahe, nahen Lev 9:5; Lev 9:7; Lev 9:8; Lev 10:4; Lev 10:5

3. bring near, cause to approach (55×) Hifil causative in non-cultic contexts: to bring someone or something near physically, to cause another to approach. Distinct from sense 1 because no sacrifice is in view — rather, Moses brings the Levites before the congregation (Num 8:9-10), or Pharaoh's army is brought near (Exod 14:10). Spanish distinguishes this well: hizo acercar ('caused to come near') versus ofrecer ('to offer'). NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: and-brought-near, and-he-brought, and-he-brought-near | es: E-hizo-acercar, Y-acercó, Y-hizo-acercar | fr: et-apporta-près, et-apporta-près-de, et-devra-apporter-près-de | de: und-brachte-nahe, und-er-brachte, und-er-brachte-nahe Exod 14:10; Exod 14:20; Exod 28:1; Exod 29:3; Exod 29:4

4. bring near intensively (6×) Piel intensive: a deliberate, emphatic bringing-near or presenting, used sparingly for weighty moments. In Job 31:37 Job declares he would 'approach' God like a prince; in Ps 65:4 God is the one who actively 'brings near' the chosen one to dwell in his courts. The Swahili causative -karibisha ('to cause to welcome/approach') captures the intentional force well.

Only 6 occurrences, each theologically charged. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: I-have-brought-near, I-would-approach-Him, Present | es: Acerqué, Y-acerca, acercaron | fr: [וקרב], [ותקרב], [קרבו] | de: nahen, nahte-sich, und-Mitte Job 31:37; Ps 65:4; Isa 41:21; Isa 46:13; Ezek 37:17

5. be near, be at hand (4×) Qal stative sense: to be near, be at hand, describing a state of proximity rather than motion. Often temporal — 'the day is near' (Lam 4:18), or 'the year of release is at hand' (Deut 15:9). Arabic stative qaruba (with u-vowel) matches this Hebrew stative pattern, and Korean 가까웠다 similarly shifts from action to state. Only 4 occurrences, but an important semantic distinction from the active 'approach.' NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: draw-near, is-near, they-draw-near | es: Se-acerca, están-cerca, se-acercan | fr: [קרבו], draw-près-de, est-près-de | de: Mitte, draw-nahe, ist-nahe Deut 15:9; Deut 31:14; Lam 4:18; Ezek 36:8

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Exod 22:8 where the sense is ambiguous or transitional — the context describes approaching for judicial adjudication ('shall come near to God/the judges'). Cross-lingual renderings (Spanish acercará, German soll-kommen-nahe) treat it as basic approach, but the forensic setting may warrant a specialized juridical sub-sense. NEARNESS AND APPROACH en: and-shall-come-near | es: y-se-acercará | fr: et—venir-près | de: und-soll-kommen-nahe Exod 22:8

קָרַב H7127 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (9×)
To approach, draw near; to offer sacrifice; to bring someone before another (Aramaic verb in Daniel/Ezra)
An Aramaic verb found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, carrying the core idea of drawing near. In its simplest Qal form, it describes physical approach — Daniel drawing near to an interpreter (Dan 7:16), or accusers coming forward before the king (Dan 3:8). The Piel and Hifil stems extend this into cultic territory: bringing offerings near to the altar (Ezra 6:17; 7:17). Most strikingly, in Daniel 7:13 the Son of Man is 'brought near' before the Ancient of Days — a presentation that transcends mere physical proximity and carries overtones of royal investiture.

1. to approach, come near (Qal) (5×) Physical approach or drawing near to a person or place (Qal). English 'came near,' Spanish 'se acercaron,' and Hindi equivalents consistently render simple movement toward someone. Used five times in Daniel for approaching kings, interpreters, and the lions' den (Dan 3:8, 26; 6:12, 20; 7:16). NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: I-approached, and-as-he-came-near, came-near | es: Me-acerqué, se-acercaron, se-acercó | fr: et-offrir, offrir | de: Mitte, [וכמקרבה], [קרבו] Dan 3:8; Dan 3:26; Dan 6:12; Dan 6:20; Dan 7:16

2. to offer, present sacrifice (Hifil/Piel) (3×) Offering or presenting sacrifice at the altar (Piel/Hifil causative). The cultic extension of 'bringing near' — sacrificial animals and offerings are brought to God's altar. Spanish 'ofrecieron/ofrecerás' and English 'offered/offering' confirm the sacrificial register. All three occurrences cluster in Ezra's temple-restoration context (Ezra 6:10, 17; 7:17). NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: and-they-offered, and-you-shall-offer, offering | es: ofreciendo, y-ofrecerás, y-ofrecieron | fr: [והקרבו], [ותקרב], [מהקרבין] | de: [והקרבו], [ותקרב], [מהקרבין] Ezra 6:10; Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:17

3. to bring near, present (a person) (Hifil) (1×) Presenting a person before a superior (Hifil). A singular, theologically charged use in Dan 7:13 where the Son of Man is brought before the Ancient of Days. Spanish renders it passively as 'fue llevado' (he was brought), emphasizing the reverential escort rather than mere physical movement. This sense carries investiture and royal audience overtones distinct from both ordinary approach and sacrificial offering. BRINGING AND OFFERING en: they-brought-Him-near | es: fue-llevado | fr: offrir | de: [הקרבוהי] Dan 7:13

קָרָב H7128 Prep-m / N-msc (9×)
Battle, war, armed conflict; an Aramaic loanword used in poetic and late biblical texts.
An Aramaic loanword (cf. Syriac qrav) meaning 'battle' or 'war,' appearing in poetic and wisdom literature rather than historical narrative. It functions as a synonym of milchamah but carries a more literary register. Psalm 55:22 memorably declares 'his heart was war' (qerav), and Ecclesiastes 9:18 warns that 'one sinner destroys much good' with the phrase 'weapons of war' (kelei qerav). The Spanish 'batalla' and French 'bataille' straightforwardly capture the military sense, while German interestingly renders some occurrences as 'Mitte' (midst), reflecting the prepositional form.

battle, war (9×) Battle, war, armed conflict – an Aramaic loanword (cognate with Syriac qrav) used in elevated and poetic registers. Parallel to milchamah ('war') in Job 38:23 and Psalm 144:1, but favored in Psalms, Job, Ecclesiastes, and Zechariah rather than prose histories. The expression yom qerav ('day of battle,' Zech 14:3; Ps 78:9) denotes a decisive military engagement, while kelei qerav ('weapons of war,' Eccl 9:18) refers to armaments. Spanish 'batalla' and French 'bataille' uniformly confirm the military sense across all nine occurrences. WAR AND BATTLE
en: battle, but-war-is, for-battle | es: batalla, de-batalla-, en-la-batalla | fr: bataille, dans-le-bataille, de-ennemi | de: Mitte, Schlacht, aber-Krieg-ist 2Sam 17:11; Job 38:23; Ps 55:18; Ps 55:21; Ps 68:30

קְרָב H7129 N-ms (1×)
War, warfare, or battle (Aramaic)
Daniel's Aramaic term for warfare in his vision of the little horn making war against the saints. This is not sport or contest but serious warfare - violent conflict aimed at destruction. The vision portrays spiritual and political realities through apocalyptic imagery: earthly powers wage war against God's people, but divine judgment will ultimately vindicate the saints. The term's context in Daniel 7 connects earthly warfare to cosmic conflict, showing that political oppression of God's people represents deeper spiritual realities. Though kingdoms rage and make war, the Ancient of Days presides, and his kingdom alone endures.

(1×) Appears only in Daniel 7:21 in the Aramaic vision of the fourth beast's horn making war against the saints. Spanish uses 'guerra' (war), French 'citadin' (citizen - likely mistranslation), German 'Mitte' (middle - also likely error). The Aramaic term is cognate with Hebrew qerab, both deriving from roots for approaching/drawing near. The context is apocalyptic conflict between earthly kingdoms and God's holy ones. WAR AND BATTLE
en: war | es: guerra | fr: citadin | de: Mitte Dan 7:21

קֶרֶב H7130 Prep-m / N-msc / 2ms (227×)
Inward part, midst, interior; the physical interior of a body, the social center of a group, or the literal viscera of a sacrificial animal.
Qereb occupies the space between geography and anatomy in Hebrew thought. Most often it appears with a preposition — beqereb ('in the midst of') or miqqereb ('from the midst of') — to locate something at the heart of a community, city, or land: God dwelling 'in the midst of' Israel, or an evil person cut off 'from the midst of' the congregation. Yet the same word can turn inward to describe the seat of emotions and thought within a person, where Sarah laughs 'within herself' (Gen 18:12) and where the spirit stirs. At its most concrete, qereb names the entrails of a sacrificial animal, the fat-covered organs placed on the altar. Arabic captures this triple range neatly: wasat for 'midst,' dakhil or batin for 'inner being,' and ahsha' for 'viscera.'

1. midst, among (165×) The dominant prepositional sense: midst, among, in the center of a collective entity. Appearing 165 times, qereb with be- or min- locates something spatially or socially within a group, city, nation, or territory. God promises to walk beqereb the camp (Deut 23:14); idolaters are purged miqqereb Israel (Deut 13:5). Arabic wasat, Korean gaunde (가운데), and Swahili katikati all consistently render this as a spatial-relational center rather than a personal interior, confirming a genuine sense boundary against the anatomical uses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-midst-of, in-the-midst-of | es: en-medio-de | fr: au-milieu-de, dans-le-milieu-de, dans-midst-de | de: in-Mitte-von, in-der-Mitte, in-der-Mitte-von Gen 45:6; Gen 48:16; Exod 8:22; Exod 31:14; Lev 17:4

2. inward part, inner being (40×) The psychological-spiritual interior of a person: inner being, heart, inward self. In 40 occurrences the word shifts from communal geography to personal interiority — Sarah laughs beqirbah ('within herself,' Gen 18:12), Nabal's heart dies beqirbo ('within him,' 1 Sam 25:37), and the psalmist cries 'bless the LORD, O my soul, and all that is within me' (Ps 103:1). Arabic selects qalb ('heart') or batin ('inner, hidden') rather than wasat here, and Korean sok (속, 'inside') replaces gaunde, marking this as an internal-experiential sense distinct from spatial location among others. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-his-midst, in-inward-parts-of-you, in-its-midst | es: dentro-de-mí, en-interior-de-vosotros, en-medio-de-él | fr: au-milieu-de-moi, dans-milieu, en-leur-milieu | de: Inneres, Mitte, innerhalb-mich Gen 18:12; Gen 18:24; Gen 25:22; Exod 23:21; 1Sam 25:37

3. entrails, viscera (22×) The literal internal organs or entrails of an animal, especially in sacrificial and dietary contexts. Found 22 times, concentrated in Exodus and Leviticus, where the qereb of the burnt offering must be washed (Exod 29:13, 17; Lev 1:9, 13) and the Passover lamb roasted whole with its qereb (Exod 12:9). Arabic ahsha' ('viscera'), Korean naejang (내장, 'internal organs'), and Swahili matumbo ('intestines/entrails') all select specific anatomical vocabulary here, sharply distinguishing this from both the communal-midst and the metaphorical inner-self senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-entrails, its-entrails, the-entrails | es: Y-entrañas-suyas, entrañas-de-ellas, las-entrañas | fr: et-son-entrailles, le-entrailles, le-entrails | de: der-Eingeweide, der-entrails, ihr-Inneres Gen 41:21; Exod 12:9; Exod 29:13; Exod 29:17

קָרֵב H7131 Art / Adj-mp (8×)

Approaching, drawing near; a verbal adjective from qarab used both predicatively and as a substantive for one who draws near.

A verbal adjective from the root qarab ('to come near'), qareb describes someone or something in the act of approaching or drawing close. It functions both predicatively, as in the Philistine Goliath steadily advancing toward David (1 Sam 17:41), and as a substantive designating those who approach the tabernacle or temple for sacred service (Num 1:51; Ezek 40:46; 45:4). In Deuteronomy 20:3, it addresses soldiers drawing near for battle. The multilingual glosses – Spanish 'acercarse,' French 'approchant,' English 'approaching' – all capture the progressive, directional quality of motion toward a target.

approaching, drawing near (8×) Approaching or drawing near, used as a verbal adjective from qarab. Predicatively it describes progressive movement toward a person or place, as with Goliath advancing on David (1 Sam 17:41) or soldiers closing for battle (Deut 20:3). Substantively with the article, it designates those who approach the sanctuary for priestly service (Num 1:51; Ezek 40:46; 45:4), where unauthorized approach carries mortal danger (Num 17:13). Spanish 'el que se acerca,' French 'approchant,' and English 'approaching' all reflect the active, directional sense. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: and-coming-near, and-drawing-near, approaching | es: el-que-se-acerca, los-que-se-acercan, os-acercáis | fr: approaching, approchant, et-tirant-près | de: [הקרבים], approaching, der-approaching Num 17:13; Deut 20:3; 1Sam 17:41; 2Sam 18:25

קִרְבָה H7132 N-fsc (2×)

nearness, approach, drawing near (especially to God)

This noun describes the act or state of drawing near, particularly in a spiritual sense of approaching God. Both occurrences speak of nearness to God as desirable: the psalmist declares that drawing near to God is his highest good (Psalm 73:28), while Isaiah 58:2 describes a people who delight in approaching God—though their worship proves hollow. The term captures the privilege and intimacy of access to the divine presence, a central concern of biblical faith.

(2×) The glosses emphasize proximity and approach: Spanish 'cercanía' (nearness), French 'approche' (approach), English 'nearness.' Both contexts present drawing near to God as the vocabulary of worship and relationship—one genuine (Psalm 73:28 as the believer's highest joy), one hypocritical (Isaiah 58:2 where external approach masks inner distance). The construct form 'nearness to God' makes this a relational rather than merely spatial concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: nearness-to, the-nearness-of | es: cercanía-de | fr: [קִרְבַת], approche | de: [קִרְבַת], der-nearness-von Ps 73:28; Isa 58:2

קָרְבָּן H7133a N-msc / 3ms (80×)

offering, oblation (qorban); the standard Levitical term for any gift brought near to God at the sanctuary

Qorban derives from the root q-r-b, 'to draw near,' capturing the essential act of worship: bringing a gift into God's presence. It serves as the comprehensive Levitical term covering animal sacrifices, grain offerings, firstfruit presentations, and even consecrated articles of gold and silver (Num 31:50). Found almost exclusively in Leviticus, Numbers, and Ezekiel, the word frames every offering as an approach to the divine. Jesus references the term directly in Mark 7:11, where the Aramaic-influenced qorban vow became a legal technicality exploited to avoid familial duty. Spanish ofrenda and German Opfergabe both capture the dedicatory sense.

offering, oblation (qorban) (80×) The general Levitical term for any sacrificial gift or oblation brought near to God, derived from q-r-b ('to draw near'). Encompasses animal burnt offerings (Lev 1:2-3), grain offerings (Lev 2:1), firstfruits (Lev 2:12), and precious-metal dedications (Num 31:50). The word frames worship as an act of approach — drawing near to the divine presence with a consecrated gift. Used almost exclusively in priestly literature (Leviticus, Numbers, Ezekiel). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-offering | es: ofrenda-suya | fr: son-offrande | de: sein-Opfergabe Lev 1:3; Lev 1:10; Lev 1:14; Lev 2:1

קָרְבָּן H7133b Conj-w (2×)

offering (specifically the wood offering for the temple altar)

While the more common 'qorban' refers broadly to offerings, this specific use denotes the wood offering needed to maintain the altar fires in the Second Temple. Nehemiah 10:35 and 13:31 record the community's commitment to provide wood at appointed times —a practical necessity for continuous sacrifice. This wasn't a spontaneous gift but an organized obligation, showing how post-exilic worship required careful planning of resources. The wood offering kept the altar burning.

(2×) All translations render this as 'offering' with the specific reference to wood: Spanish 'ofrenda de,' English 'offering of,' showing the construct relationship. Both Nehemiah passages establish this as part of the reconstituted temple service, where families or groups took turns providing the fuel for sacrifices. This practical offering sustained the more dramatic animal offerings that required constant fire. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-offering-of, the-offering-of | es: Y-para-ofrenda-de, ofrenda-de | fr: [וּלְקָרְבַן], [קָרְבַן] | de: [וּלְקָרְבַן], [קָרְבַן] Neh 10:34; Neh 13:31

קַרְדֹּם H7134 Art / N-fp (5×)

axe (a cutting tool for felling trees and clearing wood)

A noun for the axe, a heavy woodcutting implement. Abimelech takes his axe to cut branches on Mount Zalmon in his assault on the tower of Shechem (Judges 9:48). In 1 Samuel 13:20–21 it appears among the farming tools the Israelites must have sharpened by the Philistines, revealing their subjugation. Psalm 74:5 pictures the enemy smashing the temple's carved woodwork with axes, and Jeremiah 46:22 compares the invading army to woodcutters advancing with axes. Spanish 'hachas' and French 'hache' preserve the same implement.

(5×) An axe used for felling trees and chopping wood, both in literal and military contexts. Spanish 'hacha(s)' and French 'hache' consistently render this woodcutting implement. Judges 9:48 features Abimelech wielding his axe to cut branches for a siege; 1 Samuel 13:20–21 lists axes among the iron tools Israelites could not sharpen without Philistine permission; Psalm 74:5 depicts the destruction of the temple's carved panels with axes; and Jeremiah 46:22 compares Egypt's invaders to lumberjacks advancing with axes. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13410 WITH 5 SENSES

en: and-for-the-axes, and-with-axes, axes | es: hacha-de-él, hachas, las-hachas | fr: [ובקרדמות], et-pour-le-axes, hache | de: [ובקרדמות], axes, der-axes Judg 9:48; 1Sam 13:20; 1Sam 13:21; Ps 74:5; Jer 46:22

קָרָה H7135 Prep-b (5×)

cold, coldness (of weather, night, or winter conditions)

A feminine noun denoting cold or coldness as a weather condition. Nahum 3:17 compares Nineveh's guards to locusts that settle on walls on a cold day but flee when the sun rises. Proverbs 25:20 memorably warns that singing songs to a heavy heart is like vinegar on a wound—or removing a garment on a cold day. Job 24:7 describes the destitute who have no covering against the cold of night, while Job 37:9 traces cold to the scattering winds. Psalm 147:17 asks who can withstand God's cold. Spanish 'frío' and French 'froid' uniformly confirm the meteorological sense.

(5×) Cold or coldness as a physical weather condition—winter chill, cold nights, or frigid winds. Spanish 'frío,' French 'froid,' and English 'cold' uniformly render this atmospheric condition. Nahum 3:17 pairs it with a specific day ('a cold day'), Proverbs 25:20 uses it in a proverb about insensitivity, Job 24:7 describes exposure of the poor without shelter, Job 37:9 traces the cold to God's storehouses of wind, and Psalm 147:17 asks rhetorically who can stand before God's cold. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: cold, his-cold, in-the-cold | es: en-el-frío., frío, su-frío | fr: froid, ,בקרה קרה | de: [בקרה], [קרה], sein-cold Job 24:7; Job 37:9; Ps 147:17; Prov 25:20; Nah 3:17

קָרָה H7136a V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3ms (22×)

To encounter, meet, or befall; of events happening to someone, of persons meeting one another, or of causing something to come about

A versatile Hebrew verb that captures the full spectrum of how people and events cross paths. In its simplest form it describes something befalling a person — the brothers recounting to Jacob 'all the things that had happened to them' (Gen 42:29). In the Nifal stem it shifts to deliberate or mutual meeting, as when God meets Balaam on the hilltop (Num 23:4). The Hifil causative extends into divine orchestration, as when Abraham's servant prays that God would 'cause to happen' the right encounter (Gen 24:12). Spanish 'acontecer' and German 'begegnen' both reflect this dual sense of happenstance and purposeful meeting.

1. happen, occur, befall (12×) The most common use describes an event coming to pass or befalling someone, often with a pronominal suffix marking the affected party. Ruth 2:3 captures this beautifully — 'her happening happened upon the field of Boaz' — where the narrator uses the cognate construction to underscore providential coincidence. The multilingual glosses converge on event-occurrence verbs: Spanish 'acontece,' French 'arriver,' confirming a core meaning of impersonal happenstance directed at a specific person. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: and-befalls-him, and-happened, had-happened-to-him | es: acontece, acontecerá, las-cosas-que-sucedieron | fr: [קרהו], [תקרינה], arriver | de: [יקרה], [תקרינה], geschah Gen 42:29; Gen 44:29; Num 11:23; Ruth 2:3; 1Sam 28:10

2. meet, encounter (Nifal) (6×) In the Nifal stem the verb shifts from impersonal happening to personal encounter. God 'meets' Balaam repeatedly in Numbers 23 (vv. 3-4, 15-16), and Moses tells Pharaoh that 'the God of the Hebrews has met with us' (Exod 3:18). Spanish 'se encontró' and the reflexive construction highlight the reciprocal or divinely initiated nature of these meetings — not mere chance but purposeful convergence between persons. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: I-happened, and-met, has-met | es: Y-se-encontró, acontecí, me-encontraré | fr: a-rencontra, et-met, fera-meet | de: hat-met, ich-happened, und-met Exod 3:18; Num 23:3; Num 23:4; Num 23:15; Num 23:16

3. cause to happen, select, appoint (3×) The Hifil causative extends the root into the realm of orchestration and appointment. Abraham's servant asks God to 'cause to happen before me' the right woman (Gen 24:12), while Numbers 35:11 uses it for designating cities of refuge — literally causing the fugitive to 'encounter' sanctuary. Spanish 'designaréis' for the cities-of-refuge passage shows how translators naturally shift from encounter-language to appointment-language when the causative stem is in play. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: and-you-shall-select, caused-to-happen, make-happen | es: Y-designaréis, haz-acontecer, hizo-acontecer | fr: caused-à-happen, et-tu-devra-select, faire-happen | de: es-ließ-begegnen, lass-begegnen-, und-du-soll-select Gen 24:12; Gen 27:20; Num 35:11

4. meet, encounter (Qal) (1×) A single Qal occurrence with a direct personal object in Deuteronomy 25:18 — Amalek 'met you' on the road and attacked the stragglers. Unlike the impersonal 'befall' sense, the focus here is on hostile physical encounter between peoples. The directness of the pronominal suffix ('met you') and the military context distinguish this from the more passive happening-upon of Sense 1. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: met-you | es: te-encontró | fr: met-tu | de: met-du Deut 25:18

קָרָה H7136b Conj-w (5×)

to lay beams, furnish with beams (construction of roofs, gates, and upper chambers)

A denominative Piel verb meaning to lay or set beams in place—a specialized construction term. In Nehemiah's rebuilding narrative, this verb appears three times: Nehemiah requests timber to beam the gates of the citadel (2:8), and two groups of workers 'laid its beams' while repairing Jerusalem's walls (3:3, 3:6). Second Chronicles 34:11 uses it for Josiah's temple restoration. Most strikingly, Psalm 104:3 applies it to God, who 'lays the beams' of his upper chambers on the waters—a majestic cosmological image. Spanish 'enmaderar' (to timber/beam) captures the technical carpentry meaning.

(5×) To lay beams or furnish a structure with timber beams —a technical construction term used in the Piel stem. Spanish 'enmaderar' (to timber) precisely renders this carpentry action. Three of five occurrences cluster in Nehemiah's wall-rebuilding project (2:8; 3:3; 3:6), where teams lay beams for gates and wall sections. Second Chronicles 34:11 uses it for Josiah's temple repair. The most poetic occurrence is Psalm 104:3, where God himself 'lays the beams' of his upper chambers upon the cosmic waters. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: and-to-beam, laid-beams-it, the-One-laying-beams | es: El-que-pone-vigas, la-enmaderaron, para-enmaderar | fr: [ולקרות], [לקרות], [קרוהו] | de: [ולקרות], [לקרות], [קרוהו] 2Chr 34:11; Neh 2:8; Neh 3:3; Neh 3:6; Ps 104:3

קְרִי H7137 Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

Chance occurrence or accident, specifically nocturnal emission rendering one ceremonially unclean

Deuteronomic legislation for maintaining holiness in Israel's military camp. The 'chance of the night' euphemistically refers to nocturnal emission, a natural occurrence that nonetheless required temporary exclusion from the camp until evening purification. This wasn't moral judgment but recognition that even involuntary bodily functions could interrupt the ritual purity required when God dwelt among the army. The legislation shows how seriously Israel took God's presence - the camp itself was holy ground. What seems like excessive concern for accidents actually reflects privilege: God was so near that even unintentional uncleanness mattered.

(1×) Found only in Deuteronomy 23:10 in regulations for military camp purity. The phrase 'occurrence of the night' clearly refers to nocturnal emission from context (cf. Leviticus 15:16). Spanish uses 'accidente de' (accident of), confirming the sense of involuntary occurrence. The requirement for temporary exclusion and purification reflects concern for corporate holiness when God walks in the camp (verse 14). Purity laws extended even to battlefield conditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-occurrence-of- | es: por-accidente-de- | fr: de-occurrence-de- | de: von-occurrence-von- Deut 23:10

קָרֹב H7138 Conj-w / Adj-mpc / 1cs (78×)

Near, close; spatially proximate, temporally imminent, relationally kin, or cultically admitted into God's presence.

An adjective whose basic sense of spatial closeness radiates outward into time, kinship, and sacred theology. Places, cities, and roads can be qarov (Exod 13:17; Gen 19:20), and people who are qarov are relatives or neighbors — Spanish 'cercano' and French 'proche' preserve both spatial and relational senses naturally. Temporally, it signals imminence: 'the day is near' (Ezek 7:7). Most strikingly, Leviticus 10:3 uses it for those who draw near to God in priestly service — 'through those near to me I will be sanctified' — elevating physical proximity into sacred access.

1. near, close (spatial) (62×) Physically near or close in space, describing the proximity of places, cities, roads, or persons to a reference point. French 'proche' and Spanish 'cerca/cercano' render this straightforwardly. Exodus 13:17 notes God did not lead Israel by the near road, and Genesis 19:20 has Lot begging to flee to a city that is qarov. Often paired with its antonym rachoq ('far') to express totality: near and far meaning everyone. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: Near, is-near, near | es: cerca, cercana, cercano | fr: proche, près, près-de | de: nahe Gen 45:10; Exod 12:4; Exod 13:17; Lev 21:2; Lev 21:3

2. relative, kinsman, neighbor (8×) A kinsman, relative, neighbor, or close associate, used substantivally with pronominal suffixes. Exodus 32:27 commands 'slay each man his qarov' — his near one, his kinsman. Job 19:14 laments that his qarovim have abandoned him. Spanish 'cercano' and French 'proche' both naturally extend from spatial nearness to relational closeness, mirroring Hebrew's semantic path from proximity to kinship. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: and-my-relatives, his-close-friend, his-nearness | es: cercano, cercano-a-él, cercanos | fr: [קרוב], et-proche, proche | de: nahe, sein-nahe, sein-relative Exod 32:27; Neh 13:4; Job 19:14; Ps 15:3; Ps 38:11

3. near in time, soon (5×) Near in time, signaling imminence or recency. Ezekiel 7:7–8 warns 'the day is qarov' — judgment looms. Jeremiah 23:23 asks whether God is a God of nearness only. Deuteronomy 32:17 describes gods who 'came from near' — recently arrived. Spanish 'de poco tiempo' and French 'de proche' capture this temporal dimension, which English must often render as 'soon' or 'at hand.' NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: from-near, is-short, near | es: cerca, de-cerca, es-de-poco-tiempo | fr: dans-proche, de-milieu, de-proche | de: aus-der-Mitte, nahe, von-nahe Deut 32:17; Job 20:5; Jer 23:23; Ezek 7:8; Ezek 11:3

4. drawing near to God (3×) Those admitted into God's cultic presence, describing priests or sanctified worshippers who draw near in sacred service. Leviticus 10:3 declares 'through those near to me I will show myself holy' — immediately after Nadab and Abihu's unauthorized approach. Ezekiel 42:13 and 43:19 reserve this language for the Zadokite priests who draw near to minister. The spatial root acquires numinous weight: proximity to God carries both privilege and mortal danger. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: by-those-near-to-me, near, the-ones-drawing-near | es: cercanos, los-cercanos, por-los-que-se-acercan-a-mí | fr: par-ces-près-de-à-moi, proche | de: durch-jene-nahe-zu-mich, nahe Lev 10:3; Ezek 42:13; Ezek 43:19

קָרַח H7139 V-Qal-Imp-fs (6×)

To make bald, to shave the head — a mourning rite involving deliberate removal of hair as an expression of grief.

Refers to the ancient Near Eastern practice of shaving or tearing out hair from the head as a visible sign of mourning and lamentation. Leviticus 21:5 explicitly prohibits priests from performing this rite, placing it alongside other forms of self-disfigurement forbidden to those consecrated to God. Micah commands Zion to 'make yourself bald and shear yourself' for the children going into exile (Mic 1:16), turning the mourning custom into a prophetic summons. The verb appears across multiple stems (Qal, Niphal, Hiphil, Hofal), all preserving the core meaning of ritually induced baldness as grief made visible on the body.

make bald (mourning rite) (6×) To make bald, to shave the head as a mourning rite — deliberate removal of hair expressing grief for the dead or over national calamity. Spanish 'hazte calva' (make yourself bald) and 'rasurar' (to shave) together capture the imperative force and physical act. Prohibited for Israelite priests (Lev 21:5), yet practiced widely enough that prophets invoke it: Micah commands it over exiled children (Mic 1:16), Jeremiah notes its absence as a sign of social breakdown (Jer 16:6), and Ezekiel describes foreign sailors shaving their heads in mourning over Tyre (Ezek 27:31). Ezekiel 29:18 references Nebuchadnezzar's soldiers with heads rubbed bald from carrying siege equipment. MOURNING BALDNESS

en: (they-shall-make-bald), Shave, [they-shall-make-bald] | es: Hazte-calva, Q, Y-se-rasurarán | fr: (ils-devra-faire-bald), [ils-devra-faire-bald], [יִקְרַח] | de: [sie-soll-machen-bald], [וְהִקְרִיחוּ], [יִקְרַח] Lev 21:5; Jer 16:6; Ezek 27:31; Ezek 29:18

קֶרַח H7140 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)

Ice, frost; frozen water as a natural phenomenon of cold weather

A noun denoting ice or frost — frozen water in its natural forms. Jacob invokes the nighttime frost that consumed him during his years with Laban (Gen 31:40). Job and the Psalms celebrate it as a manifestation of God's sovereign power over creation: water hardens like stone (Job 37:10), ice has a mysterious origin (Job 38:29), and God hurls his ice like morsels (Ps 147:17). Ezekiel 1:22 uses the word to describe the awesome expanse above the living creatures, 'gleaming like ice.' Spanish 'hielo' and English 'ice/frost' confirm the unified semantic range.

ice, frost (7×) Ice or frost — frozen water as a natural meteorological phenomenon. Used in Genesis 31:40 for the bitter nighttime frost Jacob endured, in Jeremiah 36:30 for winter cold, and extensively in wisdom poetry: Job 6:16 (dark with ice), Job 37:10 (water frozen solid by God's breath), Job 38:29 (the womb of ice as divine mystery), and Psalm 147:17 (God hurling ice like morsels). Ezekiel 1:22 applies it figuratively to the gleaming, crystalline expanse above the cherubim. Spanish 'hielo,' English 'ice/frost,' French 'glace' — multilingual glosses consistently point to the single domain of frozen water. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: and-frost, and-to-the-frost, his-ice | es: el-cristal, el-hielo, hielo | fr: [וּלְקֶרַח], et-frost, glace | de: [הַקֶּרַח], [וּלְקֶרַח], [קֶרַח] Gen 31:40; Job 6:16; Job 37:10; Job 38:29; Ps 147:17

קֹרַח H7141 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (37×)

Korah — personal name possibly meaning 'baldness,' borne by Levite rebels, Edomite chiefs, and psalm-singing clans

Qorach is a proper masculine name, possibly derived from qareach ('bald'), borne by several distinct figures whose stories span rebellion, worship, and genealogy. The most famous is Korah son of Izhar, the Levite who led a revolt against Moses and Aaron, challenging their exclusive authority with the words 'all the congregation is holy' (Num 16:3). The earth swallowed him and his fellow conspirators in a dramatic divine judgment (Num 16:31-35), yet — strikingly — 'the sons of Korah did not die' (Num 26:11). These surviving descendants became a celebrated guild of temple singers, credited in the superscriptions of eleven psalms (Pss 42, 44-49, 84-85, 87-88), including some of the Psalter's most beloved poetry. The name also appears among Esau's descendants as an Edomite clan chief (Gen 36:5, 14, 16, 18; 1 Chr 1:35) and as a Judahite 'son' of Hebron (1 Chr 2:43).

Korah (proper name) (37×) The proper name Qorach, identifying multiple OT figures and their descendants. The Levite rebel of Numbers 16 dominates the name's profile (Num 16:1-49; 26:9-11; 27:3), but the 'sons of Korah' who survived became a Levitical guild of temple musicians whose name appears in eleven psalm superscriptions (Pss 42, 44-49, 84-85, 87-88) — a remarkable redemption arc from father's rebellion to sons' worship. The Edomite Korah appears in Genesis 36's genealogy as a chief (alluph) of Esau. A Judahite Korah in 1 Chronicles 2:43 is likely a clan name. Greek Kore, Spanish 'Core/Coraj,' German 'Korach' all derive from the LXX tradition. The coexistence of rebellion and worship under one name makes Korah one of the Bible's most theologically layered proper nouns. KORAH KORAHITE NAME

en: Korah, Qorach | es: Coraj, Coré, Koraj | fr: Coré | de: Korach Gen 36:5; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:16; Gen 36:18; Exod 6:21

קֹרַח H7142 Adj-ms (3×)

bald, bald-headed (naturally or through disease)

This adjective describes baldness of the head, appearing in both legal-purity contexts and narrative mockery. Leviticus 13:40 distinguishes natural baldness on the back of the head from diseased conditions, declaring the naturally bald man clean. The infamous incident in 2 Kings 2:23 has young men taunt Elisha with the repeated epithet 'bald head!'—whether referring to natural baldness, ritual shaving, or intended metaphorically remains debated. The term itself is neutral, though context determines whether it's descriptive or derisive.

(3×) The word designates the condition of having a hairless head. In Levitical purity legislation, it appears in clinical description: if someone's hair falls out on the crown or back of the head, he is simply bald and remains clean (unless skin disease develops). The narrative use is quite different: youths hurling 'Go up, you baldhead!' at Elisha made this descriptive term into mockery—possibly ridiculing his appearance, or perhaps using baldness as a contemptuous epithet for prophets or ascetics. The repetition (verse 23 uses it twice) intensifies the taunt. MOURNING BALDNESS

en: bald, bald-one | es: calvo, calvo! | fr: bald, chauve-un | de: bald, bald-eins Lev 13:40; 2Kgs 2:23

קָרֵחַ H7143 N-proper-ms (14×)

Kareah; father of Johanan, a Judean military commander after the fall of Jerusalem.

A personal name meaning 'bald one,' borne by the father of Johanan and Jonathan, military leaders who rallied to Gedaliah after Nebuchadnezzar appointed him governor over the remnant in Judah. Kareah's son Johanan warned Gedaliah of the assassination plot by Ishmael son of Nethaniah (Jer 40:13–16), and after the murder, led the surviving community — ultimately against Jeremiah's counsel — down to Egypt (Jer 41–43). The name appears in the parallel account in 2 Kings 25:23 and recurs throughout Jeremiah 40–43. Greek tradition renders it Καρηε/Καρηθ, while translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Carea,' German 'Kareach.'

(14×) The proper name Kareah (קָרֵחַ, 'bald one'), identifying the father of Johanan ben Kareah, the prominent military figure in the post-destruction Judean remnant. BDB confirms the meaning 'bald one.' The name appears exclusively in 2 Kings 25:23 and Jeremiah 40–43, always as a patronymic ('son of Kareah') anchoring Johanan's identity. Transliterations vary slightly across languages — English 'Kareah/Kareach,' Spanish 'Carea/Caréaj,' French 'Kareach,' German 'Kareach/Koreach' — but all preserve the same referent. KORAH KORAHITE NAME

en: Kareach, Qareach | es: Carea, Caréaj, Qarekha | fr: Coré, Kareach | de: Kareach, Koreach 2Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8; Jer 40:13; Jer 40:15; Jer 40:16

קָרְחָה H7144 N-fs (11×)

Baldness, especially a shaved spot on the head as a sign of mourning, prohibited for priests and Israel

Refers to a bare patch on the head produced by shaving as a mourning rite. Ancient Near Eastern peoples commonly shaved their heads to express grief, but Israelite law restricted the practice: priests must not make a baldness on their heads (Lev 21:5), and the people are told not to cut themselves or make baldness for the dead (Deut 14:1). When Isaiah prophesies judgment, baldness replaces well-set hair (Isa 3:24), and Moab's devastation brings baldness upon every head (Isa 15:2). The Spanish 'calvicie' and English 'baldness' both capture the visible, intentional nature of this sign of grief.

baldness (ritual/mourning) (11×) A bald patch or shaved area on the head, produced ritually as an expression of mourning or grief. Levitical law prohibits priests from making such marks (Lev 21:5), and Deuteronomy 14:1 extends the prohibition to all Israel, distinguishing them from surrounding cultures. Prophetic texts use baldness as a sign of divine judgment and national calamity (Isa 3:24; 15:2; Ezek 7:18). Spanish 'calva/calvicie' and English 'baldness' converge on the visible, deliberate nature of the shaving act. MOURNING BALDNESS

en: and-for-baldness, and-instead-of, baldness | es: calva, calvas, calvicie | fr: [ולקרחה], [קרחה], calvitie | de: [ולקרחה], [קרחה], [קרחתך] Lev 21:5; Deut 14:1; Isa 3:24; Isa 15:2; Isa 22:12

קָרְחִי H7145 Art / N-proper-mp (8×)

Korahite; a gentilic adjective designating members of the Levitical clan descended from Korah son of Izhar.

This gentilic adjective identifies members of the Levitical family descended from Korah son of Izhar, always appearing with the definite article. The Korahites served as temple gatekeepers and musicians, as detailed in Chronicles (1 Chr 9:19, 31; 12:7; 26:1, 19). They are listed among Levitical clans in Numbers 26:58 and Exodus 6:24. Second Chronicles 20:19 records them rising to praise the Lord before Jehoshaphat's battle. The psalm superscriptions attributed to 'the sons of Korah' likely designate this same guild. Spanish 'coraíta' and English 'Korahite' preserve the patronymic connection to their ancestor.

Korahite (gentilic) (8×) A gentilic adjective derived from Korah (qorach), designating members of the Levitical clan descended from Korah son of Izhar. Always used with the article, it appears as a collective singular (Exod 6:24; Num 26:58; 1 Chr 9:31) and in the plural (1 Chr 9:19; 12:7; 26:1; 2 Chr 20:19). The Korahites served as temple gatekeepers and musicians, and are likely the guild behind the 'sons of Korah' psalm superscriptions. Spanish 'coraíta/korajita' and English 'Korahite/Korahites' faithfully render the patronymic. KORAH KORAHITE NAME

en: of-the-Korahites, the-Korahite, the-Korahites | es: el-coratita, el-coraíta, el-korajita | fr: [הקרחי], [הקרחים], [לקרחים] | de: [הקרחי], [הקרחים], [לקרחים] Exod 6:24; Num 26:58; 1Chr 9:19; 1Chr 9:31; 1Chr 12:7

קָרְחַת H7146 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (4×)

baldness of the back of the head

This technical term in Levitical purity legislation distinguishes baldness on the crown or back of the head from forehead baldness. Always contrasted with baldness of the forehead, it appears exclusively in Leviticus 13's skin disease regulations, where location of symptoms matters for diagnosis. The term reflects ancient Israel's careful attention to bodily symptoms in cultic purity.

(4×) Denotes baldness specifically at the back or crown of the head, consistently opposed to forehead baldness (גַּבַּחַת) in Leviticus 13:42-43, 55. The diagnostic distinction matters for identifying skin diseases: if a reddish-white sore appears 'in his baldness' (בְּקָרְחָתוֹ) or 'in his forehead baldness,' the priest must examine it. The four occurrences all appear in this single priestly context, showing the term's technical precision. Multilingual renderings maintain the anatomical specificity: Spanish 'calvicie,' French 'calvitie,' German 'baldness'—all modified by possessive pronouns marking the afflicted person. MOURNING BALDNESS

en: in-his-baldness, in-its-baldness, in-the-baldness | es: en-la-calvicie, en-su-calvicie | fr: dans-le-calvitie, dans-son-calvitie | de: in-der-baldness, in-sein-baldness Lev 13:42; Lev 13:43; Lev 13:55

קֶרִי H7147 N-ms (7×)

Hostility, contrariness; opposition to God expressed as walking 'contrary' to him

A noun meaning 'opposition' or 'contrariness,' used exclusively in Leviticus 26 in the idiom 'to walk in hostility with' someone. It describes the stubborn, defiant posture of Israel toward God — and God's corresponding response in kind. The chapter's escalating curses hinge on this word: if Israel walks contrary to God (vv. 21, 23, 27, 40), God will walk contrary to them (vv. 24, 28, 41). The sevenfold repetition in a single chapter underscores its rhetorical weight as the defining word for covenant defiance.

in hostility (7×) Hostility, contrariness, or opposition — a disposition of walking 'against' or 'contrary to' God, used only in the covenant-curse discourse of Leviticus 26. Israel is warned: if you walk with me in qeri (hostility, Lev 26:21, 23, 27, 40), then I will walk with you in qeri (vv. 24, 28, 41), even 'in the fury of qeri' (v. 28). The word captures not mere disobedience but a persistent, defiant contrariness — a deliberate refusal to yield. Multilingual glosses (English 'hostility,' Spanish 'hostilidad,' French 'hostilité') consistently render it as opposition, though the Hebrew nuance of 'contrariwise' — doing the opposite of what is asked — is difficult to capture in a single word. ENMITY HOSTILITY

en: hostility, in-hostility | es: con-hostilidad, hostilidad | fr: dans-hostility, hostility | de: hostility, in-hostility Lev 26:21; Lev 26:23; Lev 26:24; Lev 26:27; Lev 26:28

קְרִיא H7148 Adj-mpc (3×)

called ones, summoned representatives or appointed leaders

This passive participle functions as a technical term for officially summoned or appointed representatives in Israel's assembly. Numbers uses it to designate tribal leaders chosen to represent their clans in the congregation—literally 'the called ones of the assembly' or 'the summoned ones of the appointed meeting.' These weren't volunteers but officially designated councillors, bearing representative authority for their tribes.

(3×) The term identifies men formally summoned to serve as tribal representatives in Israel's governing assembly. Numbers 1:16 calls them 'the called ones of the congregation'—princes of their ancestral tribes chosen to lead. Numbers 16:2 describes the 250 men who joined Korah's rebellion as 'called ones of the assembly,' indicating their official status as appointed councillors, which made their revolt particularly serious. Numbers 26:9 recalls this incident using the same terminology. The passive form emphasizes they were selected by divine or communal appointment, not self-appointed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [called-ones], called-ones-of | es: llamados-de | fr: [appela-ones], appela-ones-de | de: [rief-die], rief-die-von Num 1:16; Num 16:2; Num 26:9

קְרִיָה H7149 N-fs (9×)

City, town (Aramaic); used in Ezra 4 for the city of Jerusalem in official Persian correspondence.

The Aramaic feminine noun qiryah ('city'), cognate with Hebrew qiryah, appearing exclusively in the Aramaic section of Ezra (4:10-21). It designates Jerusalem in the context of official Persian correspondence, where provincial officials warn King Artaxerxes that the Jews are rebuilding 'this rebellious and wicked city.' The term carries administrative and political connotations, as the letters describe the city's history of sedition. Spanish 'ciudad,' French 'ville,' and German 'Stadt' all render it with the standard word for a settled urban center.

city, town (9×) City or town – an Aramaic feminine noun (qiryah/qirya) cognate with Hebrew qiryah, used exclusively in the Aramaic correspondence of Ezra 4:10-21. Every occurrence refers to Jerusalem in official dispatches to the Persian court, where the city is characterized as 'rebellious and wicked' (Ezra 4:12, 15). The emphatic form qiryeta and the construct with prepositions ('in the city of') reflect standard Imperial Aramaic administrative language. Spanish 'ciudad,' French 'ville,' and German 'Stadt' all confirm a straightforward urban-center meaning with no figurative extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-city, city, in-city-of | es: ciudad, en-ciudad-de, y-ciudad | fr: et-la-ville, la-ville, ville | de: Stadt, in-Stadt, und-Stadt Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:15

קְרִיאָה H7150 Art / N-fs (1×)

Proclamation, message, or public announcement to be declared

God's command to Jonah to proclaim a specific message to Nineveh. The term emphasizes public declaration and authoritative announcement - not private conversation but open proclamation. Jonah was to speak not his own words but 'the proclamation that I tell you,' making him herald of divine judgment. This highlights prophetic office: prophets don't invent messages but transmit them. The word's root relates to calling or summoning, suggesting proclamation that demands response. Nineveh needed to hear God's word, and Jonah was the designated voice, however reluctant. Prophecy is proclamation - public, authoritative, inescapable.

(1×) Appears only in Jonah 3:2 where God commands Jonah to proclaim the message God gives him to Nineveh. Spanish uses 'proclamación' (proclamation), French 'appel' (call/summons), both confirming public declaration. The definite article suggests a specific message, detailed in verse 4. The term belongs to vocabulary of prophetic commission and public announcement of divine word. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: the-proclamation | es: la-proclamacion | fr: appel | de: [הקריאה] Jonah 3:2

קִרְיָה H7151 N-fs (29×)

city, town — a poetic and elevated synonym for 'ir, used especially of Jerusalem in prophetic and liturgical texts

Qiryah is the poetic and literary synonym for the common noun 'ir ('city'), appearing 29 times almost exclusively in elevated or prophetic discourse. Its most celebrated uses describe Jerusalem: Isaiah's 'faithful city' that has become a harlot (Isa 1:21, 26), the 'joyous city' brought low in judgment (Isa 22:2; 32:13), and Micah's 'daughter Zion' addressed as a suffering qiryah (Mic 4:10). The psalmist calls Jerusalem the 'city of the great King' using this very noun (Ps 48:2). Outside Jerusalem, it appears in the wilderness poetry of Numbers for the city of Sihon (Num 21:28), in Deuteronomy's conquest summaries (Deut 2:36; 3:4), and in Hosea's indictment of Gilead as a 'city of evildoers' (Hos 6:8). The related proper noun Kiriath forms compounds like Kiriath-jearim and Kiriath-arba. French 'cite' and German 'Stadt' both reflect its more formal register compared to the everyday 'ir.

city, town, settlement (29×) A walled city or town, functioning as the elevated poetic synonym for 'ir. Concentrated in prophetic and liturgical texts about Jerusalem: Isaiah's 'faithful city' turned harlot (Isa 1:21, 26), the 'joyous city' silenced by judgment (Isa 22:2), and the psalmist's 'city of the great King' (Ps 48:2). Also names Sihon's city in wilderness poetry (Num 21:28), cities in Deuteronomy's conquest summaries (Deut 2:36; 3:4), and Gilead as a city of evildoers (Hos 6:8). French 'cite' captures its formal register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-city, a-fortified-city, a-town | es: Villa, ciudad, ciudad-de | fr: cité | de: Stadt Num 21:28; Deut 2:36; Deut 3:4; 1Kgs 1:41; 1Kgs 1:45

קְרִיוֹת H7152 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Kerioth (place name, lit. 'cities')

This place name, formed as an intensive plural from 'city,' identifies two distinct locations: one in Judah, possibly modern Qaryatein south of Hebron; another in Moab, likely ancient Rabbath-Moab (modern Rabba). The Moabite site appears in prophetic oracles against Moab and on the famous Mesha Stele. The name's plural form may denote a city of importance or a complex of settlements.

(4×) Identifies the Moabite city Kerioth in Jeremiah 48:24, 41 and Amos 2:2, and a Judean site in Joshua 15:25. The Septuagint renders it as αἱ πόλεις ('the cities'), preserving the plural meaning. The Moabite Kerioth appears on the Mesha Inscription (line 13: קריית) and is equated by Eusebius with Rabbath-Moab. Multilingual evidence shows transliteration: Spanish 'Keriyot/Queriot,' French

'Kerioth,' suggesting recognition as a proper name despite its common-noun etymology. The Judean site may be the home of Judas 'Iscariot' (אִישׁ קְרִיּוֹת, 'man of Kerioth'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Kerioth, Qeriyot, and-Keriyoth | es: Keriyot, Queriot, las-ciudades | fr: Kerioth, [הקריות], [קריות] | de: [הקריות], [קריות], und-Keriyoth Josh 15:25; Jer 48:24; Jer 48:41; Amos 2:2

קִרְיַת אַרְבַּע H7153 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (9×)

Kiriath-Arba, the ancient Canaanite name for Hebron, meaning 'city of four' or 'city of Arba.'

The old Canaanite name for the city later known as Hebron, compounding qiryat ('city of') with arba' ('four') or the personal name Arba. It appears in the patriarchal narratives – Sarah's death and burial at the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:2), Jacob's return to his father Isaac (Gen 35:27) – and in Joshua's conquest and allotment accounts (Josh 14:15; 15:13, 54; 20:7; 21:11). The consistent cross-lingual rendering 'Kiriath-Arba' / 'Kiryat-Arba' across English, Spanish, French, and German shows this is treated as a transliterated proper noun rather than translated.

Kiriath-Arba (place name) (9×) The ancient Canaanite place name for Hebron, meaning either 'city of four' or 'city of Arba' (a legendary Anakim ancestor, Josh 14:15; 15:13; 21:11). Used in Genesis for the patriarchal connection: Sarah dies there (Gen 23:2) and Isaac dwells there (Gen 35:27). Joshua texts record it in conquest and Levitical-city lists (Josh 15:54; 20:7). Nehemiah 11:25 attests its continued use in post-exilic times. All major translations – English 'Kiriath-Arba,' Spanish 'Quiriat-Arba,' French and German 'Kiriath-Arba' – transliterate rather than translate, preserving the toponym. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kiriath-Arba, Kiriath-arba, Kiryat-Arba | es: Kiryat-Arba, Qiryat-HaArba, Quiriat-Arba | fr: Kiriath-Arba, Kiriath-arba, Kiryat-Arba | de: Kiriath-arba, Kirjat-Arba, Kiryat-Arba Gen 23:2; Gen 35:27; Josh 14:15; Josh 15:13; Josh 15:54

קִרְיַת יְעָרִים H7154 N-proper-fs (2×)

Kiriath-Jearim/Kiriath-Baal, city of forests, Gibeonite city where ark rested

Kiriath-Jearim, meaning 'city of forests,' was a Gibeonite city on the border between Judah and Benjamin. It became famous as the resting place of the ark of the covenant after its return from Philistine captivity—the ark remained there for years before David moved it to Jerusalem (1 Samuel 6:21–7:2). The city had multiple names including Kiriath-Baal, reflecting earlier Canaanite associations. Its location in wooded hill country made it a significant landmark in boundary descriptions.

(2×) The references in Joshua 15:60 and 18:14 identify this city by its alternative name Kiriath-Baal, emphasizing its Canaanite heritage. Transliterations preserve the Hebrew across languages with minor variations. The name 'Baal' in the designation points to pre-Israelite worship at the site, while its role in boundary lists shows its importance as a recognized geographical marker between tribal territories. BAAL WORSHIP
en: Kiryath-Baal, Qiryath-Baal | es: Quiriat-Baal | fr: Kiryath-Baal, Qiryath-Baal | de: Kiryath-Baal, Qiryath-Baal Josh 15:60; Josh 18:14

קִרְיַת חֻצוֹת H7155 N-proper-fs (1×)

Qiriath-Huzoth, a Moabite town meaning 'city of streets/outsides' where Balak sacrificed

The Moabite town where Balak took Balaam and offered sacrifices before the prophet's first oracle. The name possibly means 'city of streets' or 'city of open places,' though the exact sense is debated. This was Balaam's introduction to Moabite hospitality and the king's urgency - immediately upon arrival, they sacrificed cattle and sheep, then sent portions to Balaam and the princes. The town's location is unknown, but it served as staging ground for Balak's attempt to curse Israel. What began with sacrifices at Qiriath-Huzoth ended with blessing instead of cursing, as God commandeered Balaam's mouth.

(1×) Mentioned only in Numbers 22:39 as the destination where Balak took Balaam. The Greek transliterates as 'cities of courtyards/settlements.' The name suggests an inhabited place, possibly a regional center. The narrative context is Balak's urgent effort to secure Balaam's cursing of Israel, beginning with sacrificial hospitality. Archaeological identification remains uncertain, representing one of many Moabite settlements known only from biblical references. PERSONAL NAMES
en: to-Kiriath-Huzoth | es: Quiriat-Huzot | fr: à-Kiriath-Huzoth | de: zu-Kiriath-Huzoth Num 22:39

קִרְיָתָיִם H7156 N-proper-fs (8×)

Kiriathaim, a place name for cities in Transjordan: one in Moab (modern Qureyat) and one Levitical city in Naphtali.

Kiriathaim ('double city,' from the dual form of qiryah) refers to at least two distinct locations in the Hebrew Bible. The primary one is a city in Moab, associated with Reubenite territory (Num 32:37; Josh 13:19), site of a battle in the age of Abraham (Gen 14:5), and subject of prophetic oracles against Moab (Jer 48:1, 23; Ezek 25:9), probably modern Qureyat southeast of Mount Attarus. A second Kiriathaim was a Levitical city in Naphtali (1 Chr 6:76), corresponding to Kartan in Joshua 21:32. The dual ending may suggest a twin settlement or paired towns.

Kiriathaim (city name) (8×) The proper noun Kiriathaim, a place name meaning 'double city' (from the dual of qiryah). It primarily designates a Moabite city allotted to Reuben (Num 32:37; Josh 13:19), mentioned in Genesis 14:5 as the plain of Kiriathaim and in Jeremiah 48:1, 23 and Ezekiel 25:9 in oracles against Moab – identified with modern Qureyat in Jordan. A second Kiriathaim in Naphtali served as a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:76). The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Quiriataim,' French 'Kiriathaim') preserve the toponym consistently. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kiriathaim, Qiryatayim, [and-Kiriathaim] | es: (y-Quiriatáyim), Kiryatayim, Quiriataim | fr: Kiriathaim, [קריתים], et-Kiryatayim | de: Kiriathaim, Kirjatajim, [וקריתימה] Gen 14:5; Num 32:37; Josh 13:19; 1Chr 6:76; Jer 48:1

קִרְיַת יְעָרִים H7157 N-proper-fs (26×)

Kiriath-jearim — a Gibeonite city on the Judah-Benjamin border where the ark rested after its return from Philistia

Qiryat Ye'arim ('city of forests') is a town of the Gibeonite confederacy (Josh 9:17) situated on the border between Judah and Benjamin, appearing 26 times under this name and its variants. Its greatest claim to fame is housing the Ark of the Covenant for roughly two decades after the Philistines returned it via Beth-shemesh (1 Sam 6:21-7:2). The ark remained in the house of Abinadab on the hill at Kiriath-jearim until David brought it to Jerusalem in a momentous procession (1 Chr 13:5-6; 2 Chr 1:4). The Psalmist alludes to this tradition in the cryptic 'we found it in the fields of Jaar' (Ps 132:6), a poetic abbreviation of the city's name. In genealogical texts, Kiriath-jearim appears among the clans of Judah descended from Caleb (1 Chr 2:50-53), and its inhabitants are counted in the return census (Neh 7:29; Ezra 2:25). The prophet Uriah son of Shemaiah hailed from this town (Jer 26:20). The LXX renders it Kariathriarim.

Kiriath-Jearim (city) (26×) A Gibeonite city (Josh 9:17) meaning 'city of forests,' located on the Judah-Benjamin border, most famous as the resting place of the Ark of the Covenant after its return from Philistia (1 Sam 7:1-2; 1 Chr 13:5-6). Also appears in tribal boundary lists (Josh 15:9, 60; 18:14-15), genealogies of Judah (1 Chr 2:50-53), the post-exilic return census (Neh 7:29; Ezra 2:25), and as the hometown of the prophet Uriah (Jer 26:20). The poetic abbreviation 'fields of Jaar' (Ps 132:6) preserves its forest etymology. The LXX renders it Kariathriarim. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Jearim, Kiriath-Jearim, Kiryat- | es: Jearim, Quiriat-Jearim, Quiryat | fr: Kiriath-Jearim, Kiryath-Yearim, Qiryath-Yearim | de: Jearim, Kiriath-Jearim, Kirjat Josh 9:17; Josh 15:9; Josh 15:60; Josh 18:14; Josh 18:15

קִרְיַת־סֵפֶר H7158 N-proper-fs (5×)

Kiriath-Sepher (ancient name of Debir, meaning 'city of the book/scribe')

An ancient Canaanite place name meaning 'city of the book' or 'scribe-town,' identified as the earlier name of Debir in the southern hill country of Judah. The name appears in the narrative of Caleb's conquest, where he offers his daughter Achsah to whoever captures Kiriath-Sepher—a challenge taken up by Othniel (Joshua 15:15–16; Judges 1:11–12). Joshua 15:49 preserves the variant Kiriath-Sannah. The site is likely modern Dhahiriyye, southwest of Hebron. All four target languages transliterate the name consistently, confirming its proper-noun status.

(5×) The proper name of an ancient Canaanite city, an earlier designation for Debir in southern Judah, meaning 'city of the book' or 'scribe-town.' All translations—Spanish 'Quiriat-Sefer,' French and German 'Kiryat-Sefer'—transliterate rather than translate, preserving its proper-noun identity. It appears in the twin conquest accounts of Joshua 15:15–16 and Judges 1:11–12, where Othniel captures it to win Achsah as his wife. Joshua 15:49 gives the alternate name Kiriath-Sannah. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Kiryat-Sefer, Kiryath-Sepher, and-Kiryath-Sannah | es: Kiryat-Sefer, Quiriat-Sefer, y-Quiriat-Saná | fr: Kiryat-Sefer, Kiryath-Sepher, et-Kiryath-Sannah | de: Kiryat-Sefer, Kiryath-Sepher, und-Kiryath-Sannah Josh 15:15; Josh 15:16; Josh 15:49; Judg 1:11; Judg 1:12

קָרַם H7159 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)
spread over, overlay, cover with a layer (especially of skin)
This verb describes spreading or laying something over a surface as a covering. In Ezekiel's vision of dry bones (37:6, 8), God promises to spread skin over the reconstituted skeletons, the final stage of bringing dead Israel back to life. The image is of overlaying or encrusting a surface with a covering layer. Cognate languages suggest forming a crust or coating. Here the miraculous restoration moves from skeleton to sinews to flesh to skin—the visible covering that makes bodies complete.

(2×) Spanish 'cubrir/cubrió' and English 'cover/will cover' capture the spreading action. Both uses in Ezekiel 37 describe the same miraculous process from different grammatical perspectives—God's promise (v. 6) and the prophet's observation (v. 8). The multilingual evidence consistently portrays this as covering or overlaying, the final touch in the resurrection vision that transforms bones into recognizable bodies. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: and-I-will-cover, and-covered | es: y-cubrió, y-os-cubriré | fr: et-couvrir | de: [ויקרם], [וקרמתי] Ezek 37:6; Ezek 37:8

קָרַן H7160 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
to shine, send out rays; to grow horns
This verb operates in two semantic domains through denominative use: from 'horn' it means 'display horns' (fully developed); from 'ray' it means 'send out rays, shine.' Most famously, it describes Moses' face shining after encountering God's glory on Sinai—a passage that influenced artistic depictions (including Michelangelo's horned Moses, based on Latin cornuta). The semantic overlap between horns and rays reflects ancient iconography where divine radiance was depicted as horn-like projections.

(4×) In Exodus 34:29-30, 35, the Qal describes Moses' face as 'sending out rays' (קָרַן עוֹר פָּנָיו) after speaking with God—a radiant shining that terrified the Israelites. In Psalm 69:31-32, the Hiphil participle describes an ox 'having horns' (מַקְרִן), meaning fully developed, mature. The two meanings share the root קֶרֶן, which can denote both horn and ray. Multilingual glosses split: for Moses, Spanish 'resplandecía,' French 'resplendit' (shone); for the ox, Spanish 'con-cuernos,' German 'having-Hörner' (having horns). The Vulgate's translation 'cornuta' (horned) for Moses' face became famous in Christian art. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: having-horns, shone | es: con-cuernos, resplandecía | fr: de-rayonner, resplendit | de: having-Hörner, shone Exod 34:29; Exod 34:30; Exod 34:35; Ps 69:31

קֶרֶן H7161a Prep-b / N-fpc (75×)
Horn of an animal or altar; metaphorically, strength, power, or dignity; also a hill or slope, and rays of light from a theophany.
The noun qeren (קֶרֶן) begins with the concrete horn of a ram or ox and spirals outward into some of the most vivid imagery in Scripture. Its literal use dominates: the ram caught by its horns in the thicket (Gen 22:13), the horn-shaped projections on the altar of burnt offering (Exod 27:2), the ram's horn trumpet of Jericho (Josh 6:5), and the horns of Daniel's apocalyptic visions (Dan 8:3–21). From this physical root grows the metaphor of the 'exalted horn' — strength, power, and dignity — as when Hannah sings 'my horn is exalted in the LORD' (1 Sam 2:1). Arabic translators often shift from qarn (horn) to quwwa (power) for these passages, revealing the semantic leap. Two rare but memorable extensions complete the picture: the fertile hillside of Isaiah's vineyard song (Isa 5:1), where Spanish translates 'ladera' (slope), and the dazzling rays streaming from God's hand in Habakkuk 3:4, where Spanish uses 'rayos' and Korean 'gwangseon' — beams of light shaped like horns radiating outward.

1. horn (literal, physical) (67×) A literal, physical horn — whether of a ram, ox, or wild bull — and by direct extension the horn-shaped projections on the corners of the altar, a horn used as an oil vessel, or a horn trumpet. This is the dominant sense at 67 occurrences, covering Abraham's ram caught by its horns (Gen 22:13), the altar horns smeared with blood (Exod 29:12, 30:2), the horn of anointing oil (1 Sam 16:1, 1 Kgs 1:39), and the apocalyptic horns of Daniel's visions (Dan 8:3–21). Spanish 'cuerno,' French 'corne,' and German 'Horn' all hold steady across these contexts. Ezekiel's oppressive rams that push with their horns (Ezek 34:21) and Zechariah's four horns representing hostile nations (Zech 2:1–4) straddle the line between literal and figurative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-horn, a-horn-, horn | es: cuerno, cuerno-, cuerno-de | fr: [קרן], corne, corne-de | de: Horn, [קרן], der-horn-von Exod 27:2; Exod 29:12; Exod 30:2; Exod 30:3

2. horn as strength/power (6×) Metaphorical horn as strength, might, dignity, or political power — the 'exalted horn' idiom. Hannah's song declares 'my horn is exalted in the LORD' (1 Sam 2:1); the psalmist trusts that God will 'exalt the horn of his anointed' (Ps 89:17, 24; 92:10). Arabic renderings shift from qarn (physical horn) to quwwa (power/strength), exposing the metaphorical transfer. Spanish keeps 'cuerno' but the surrounding verbs — 'ensalzar' (to exalt), 'levantar' (to raise) — mark the figurative domain. Job's humiliation is expressed as 'I have laid my horn in the dust' (Job 16:15), where the horn is personal dignity brought low. HORNS AND TRUMPETS
en: his-horn, my-horn, our-horn | es: cuerno-de-el, cuerno-de-nosotros, mi-cuerno | fr: corne, mon-corne, mon-קרני-moi | de: Horn, mein-Horn, mein-horn 1Sam 2:1; Job 16:15; Ps 89:17; Ps 89:24; Ps 92:10

3. hill or peak (topographic) (1×) A horn-shaped geographical feature — a projecting hill, fertile slope, or promontory. Isaiah 5:1 places the beloved's vineyard on a 'qeren of a fertile hill,' where the image is a terraced hillside jutting outward like a horn. Spanish renders 'ladera' (hillside/slope), and German paraphrases the topography. This single occurrence preserves an ancient metaphorical mapping from animal anatomy to landscape that is well attested in other Semitic languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-horn | es: en-ladera-de | fr: dans-corne | de: [בקרן] Isa 5:1

4. rays of light (1×) Rays or beams of light radiating outward from a divine theophany, shaped metaphorically like horns projecting from a source. Habakkuk 3:4 describes radiance streaming from God's hand, where 'horns' become beams of glory. Spanish translates 'rayos' (rays), Korean uses 'gwangseon' (light beams), and Swahili 'miale' (rays) — all confirming that translators across traditions understood qeren here as luminous projections rather than animal appendages. This verse also lies behind the tradition of depicting Moses with horns, since the related verb qaran in Exodus 34:29 was famously rendered cornuta in the Vulgate. HORNS AND TRUMPETS
en: rays | es: rayos | fr: corne | de: Horn Hab 3:4

קַרְנַיִם H7161b N-proper-fs (1×)

Qarnaim, a city in Bashan conquered by Israel, possibly meaning 'two horns'

(1×) Appears only in Amos 6:13 where Israel boasts of taking Qarnaim 'by our own strength.' The term appears elsewhere as part of compound place names (Ashteroth-Karnaim). The name likely means 'two horns,' perhaps referring to topography. Intertestamental texts confirm a city Karnaim in Bashan. The prophetic context mocks misplaced confidence - military success derived from God's forbearance, not Israel's power. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: horns | es: cuernos | fr: corne | de: [קרנים] Amos 6:13

קֶרֶן H7162 N-fs (14×)

Horn (Aramaic); either a musical instrument or an apocalyptic symbol of royal power in Daniel's visions.

This Aramaic noun appears exclusively in Daniel, carrying two sharply distinct meanings. In Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15), it denotes a musical horn blown alongside other instruments at the signal to worship. In Daniel's night visions (Dan 7:7-24), horns sprout from beasts and represent kings and kingdoms — symbols of political power. Arabic qarn and Korean ppul both preserve the basic 'horn' meaning, while the context of each passage decisively determines whether the instrument or the apocalyptic symbol is in view.

1. horn (apocalyptic symbol of power) (10×) Horn as an apocalyptic symbol of royal or political power in Daniel's vision of the four beasts (Dan 7:7-24). The ten horns of the fourth beast are explicitly identified as ten kings (7:24), and the 'little horn' that uproots three others becomes a central figure of eschatological interpretation. Spanish cuerno and German Horn translate literally, while the symbolic weight is carried entirely by the visionary context. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: and-horn, and-horns, and-the-horn | es: Y-los-cuernos, cuerno, el-cuerno | fr: [בקרנא], [בקרניא], [וקרניא] | de: Hoerner, Horn, Stimme Dan 7:7; Dan 7:8

2. horn (musical instrument) (4×) Horn as a musical instrument — specifically the sounding horn in Nebuchadnezzar's royal orchestra, listed alongside the lyre, harp, trigon, and pipes (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15). All four occurrences describe the same ceremonial scene: when the horn sounds, all peoples must bow to the golden image. Spanish bocina and French corne reflect the instrumental sense, distinguishing it from the symbolic usage in chapter 7. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: horn | es: la-bocina | fr: la-corne | de: Horn Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

קֶרֶן הַפּוּךְ H7163 N-proper-fs (2×)

Keren-Happuch, Job's third daughter (horn of antimony/eye paint)

Keren-Happuch, whose name means 'horn of antimony' or 'container of eye paint,' was the third daughter born to Job after his restoration. The name refers to a cosmetic container, suggesting beauty—fitting for a daughter described among the most beautiful women in the land. Along with her sisters Jemimah and Keziah, she received an inheritance alongside her brothers, an unusual honor in patriarchal society. Her name celebrates both beauty and the restoration of Job's fortunes.

(2×) Job 42:14 records both the name itself and its components ('horn' and 'antimony/eye paint' mentioned separately in some manuscript traditions). The name appears twice in the verse in different forms. Cross-linguistic transliterations vary slightly (Spanish 'Hapuc/Keren,' English 'Happukh/Qeren') but preserve the Hebrew. The cosmetic reference in the name contrasts sharply with Job's earlier suffering, symbolizing complete restoration and blessing. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Happukh, Qeren | es: Hapuc, Keren | fr: קרן ,הפוך | de: [הפוך], [קרן] Job 42:14

קָרַס H7164 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

stoop, crouch, bend down (in defeat or submission)

This verb depicts stooping or bending down, typically in contexts of defeat or collapse. Isaiah 46:1–2 describes the gods of Babylon—Bel and Nebo—stooping and crouching as they're carried away into exile, their inability to save themselves demonstrating their impotence. The verb pairs with another word for bowing, intensifying the image of total abasement. What were once objects of worship are now burdens on beasts, bent under their own weight, powerless before the true God.

(2×) The translation pattern shows consistent understanding: Spanish 'postraron/postra' (bow down), English 'stoop/stoops.' Both occurrences in Isaiah 46 describe the same scene of divine defeat—the Babylonian gods crouching and stooping as they're hauled away on animals. The doubled verbs (crouch and bow) in Hebrew create a comprehensive picture of complete humiliation and collapse, the opposite of the upright stance of power. FALLING AND FAILING

en: They-stoop, stoops | es: Se-postraron, se-postra | fr: [קרס], [קרסו] | de: [קרס], [קרסו] Isa 46:1; Isa 46:2

קֶרֶס H7165 N-mpc / 3ms (10×)

Clasp or hook; a metal fastener (gold or bronze) used to join the curtains of the tabernacle.

A specialized term for the metal clasps or hooks that joined the curtains of the tabernacle, appearing exclusively in Exodus. Gold clasps fastened the ten inner linen curtains into a unified covering (Exod 26:6; 36:13), while bronze clasps joined the eleven goat-hair curtains of the outer tent (Exod 26:11; 36:18). These small but essential fittings transformed separate panels into a single, cohesive structure. Spanish broches/corchetes and French agrafes both capture the fastening function well.

clasp, hook (tabernacle fastener) (10×) A metal clasp or hook used to fasten the curtains of the tabernacle into a unified covering. Gold clasps (qarse zahav) joined the inner linen curtains by coupling their loops together (Exod 26:6; 36:13), while bronze clasps (qarse nechoshet) connected the outer goat-hair curtains (Exod 26:11; 36:18). The clasps are listed among the tabernacle's components in both the instruction (Exod 26:33) and inventory passages (Exod 35:11; 39:33). Though a minor item, their role was structurally essential—they unified separate panels into the single sanctuary covering. The Spanish broches and French agrafes both convey 'clasps/hooks,' confirming the concrete hardware sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-the-clasps, clasps-of, its-clasps | es: broches-de, con-los-broches, con-los-corchetes | fr: agrafes-de, avec-le-agrafes, le-agrafes | de: Haken-von, der-Haken, durch-der-Haken Exod 26:6; Exod 26:11; Exod 26:33

קַרְסֹל H7166 N-fdc / 1cs (2×)

ankle, lower leg joint

This anatomical term refers to the ankle joint, mentioned in parallel passages celebrating divine deliverance. In 2 Samuel 22:37 and Psalm 18:36, the psalmist declares that God enlarged his steps so that his ankles didn't slip—a metaphor for sure-footed progress and stability in battle or difficulty. The ankle represents the vulnerable point where walking can fail, so its security becomes an image of God's sustaining help. Strong, stable ankles enable pursuit of enemies and escape from danger.

(2×) All major translations render this as 'ankles': Spanish 'tobillos,' English 'ankles,' showing clear anatomical understanding. The parallel texts in 2 Samuel and Psalms describe identical divine aid—God making the feet steady and secure so the ankles don't turn or give way. This physical stability serves as a metaphor for God's reliable support in times of conflict and challenge. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12037 WITH 3 SENSES

en: my-ankles | es: mis-tobillos | fr: cheville, mon-ankles | de: mein-ankles 2Sam 22:37; Ps 18:36

קָרַע H7167 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (63×)

To tear or rend, especially garments in grief or anger; also to be torn (Nifal) or to cut open, split apart.

Qara is the verb of visceral, dramatic tearing — and in the Hebrew Bible, tearing one's garments is never merely a wardrobe malfunction. It is the embodied language of grief, horror, and outrage. When Jacob hears of Joseph's death, he 'tears his garments' (Gen 37:29); when the high priest hears what he considers blasphemy, he does the same (Matt 26:65 cites this practice). The act was so culturally central that Joel 2:13 could command 'tear your hearts and not your garments' — a metaphor that only works because the physical act was universal and understood. Across languages the word maps consistently: Spanish rasgar, French déchirer, German zerreissen, Arabic mazzaqa — all dedicated tearing verbs rather than generic 'breaking' words, confirming that qara occupies a specific semantic niche of fabric-ripping, emotionally charged destruction.

1. tear, rend (garments) (47×) The primary active sense: to tear or rend, overwhelmingly of garments as an expression of grief, mourning, anger, or religious horror — 47 of 63 occurrences. This is the great biblical gesture of lament: Jacob tears his garment at the news of Joseph (Gen 37:29, 34), Joshua and Caleb tear theirs at Israel's rebellion (Num 14:6), David tears his at Saul's death (2 Sam 1:11), and Josiah tears his at hearing the forgotten Torah (2 Kgs 22:11). The idiom qara begadav ('he tore his garments') is nearly formulaic. Spanish rasgar, French déchirer, and German zerreissen all select dedicated fabric-tearing vocabulary. The verb also extends to tearing kingdoms (1 Kgs 11:11-12) and curtains (Eccl 3:7), where the metaphorical force derives from the garment-rending prototype. TEARING AND RENDING

en: and-I-shall-tear, and-he-tore, and-she-tore | es: Ha-rasgado, Y-rasgó, Y-romperé | fr: [ויקרע], [ותקרע], déchira | de: [וקרעתי], [וקרעתי], [ותקרע] Gen 37:29; Gen 37:34; Gen 44:13; Lev 13:56; Num 14:6

2. torn (stative condition) (7×) Qal passive participle describing the stative condition of being torn — 7 occurrences used attributively or predicatively of garments already in a torn state. The man from the battle who brings news to Eli arrives 'with his clothes torn' (1 Sam 4:12); Hushai comes to David 'with his coat torn' (2 Sam 15:32); the servants of Hezekiah come to Isaiah 'with their clothes torn' (2 Kgs 18:37). German zerrissen and Spanish rasgados both use past participle forms that mirror the Hebrew stative morphology. This is not the dramatic act of tearing but its visible aftermath — the torn garment as a persistent sign of distress. TORN MAULED RIPPED

en: and-torn-of, torn, torn-of | es: rasgada, rasgados, rasgados-de | fr: déchirer, déchiré, déchiré-de | de: [וקרע], [קרוע], zerrissen 1Sam 4:12; 2Sam 1:2; 2Sam 13:31; 2Sam 15:32; 2Kgs 18:37

3. be torn (Nifal passive) (5×) Nifal (passive/reflexive) stem: to be torn or become torn — 5 occurrences where the subject is acted upon rather than acting. The priestly robe 'shall not be torn' (Exod 28:32; 39:23); the altar at Bethel 'was torn apart' (1 Kgs 13:3, 5); Saul grasps Samuel's robe 'and it tore' (1 Sam 15:27). Spanish se rasgará/fue rasgado and German es riss use reflexive and passive constructions that match the Hebrew Nifal precisely. The theological weight falls on the tearing of Samuel's robe, which becomes a prophetic sign that the kingdom has been torn from Saul. TORN MAULED RIPPED

en: and-it-tore, be-torn, it-shall-be-torn | es: fue-rasgado, se-rasgará, se-rasgue | fr: cela—être-déchiré, déchiré, et-cela-déchira | de: es-soll-sein-zerrissen, sein-zerrissen, und-es-riss Exod 28:32; Exod 39:23; 1Sam 15:27; 1Kgs 13:3; 1Kgs 13:5

4. cut open, split apart (3×) A distinct sense of cutting open or splitting apart a physical object — 3 occurrences where the action is not garment-rending in grief but purposeful cutting or opening. Jehoiakim cuts open windows in his palace (Jer 22:14); he cuts the prophetic scroll with a scribe's knife and burns it (Jer 36:23); Jeroboam tears the kingdom apart from the house of David (2 Kgs 17:21). Spanish rasgar still serves, but the accompanying context words — 'windows,' 'knife,' 'kingdom' — shift the frame from mourning gesture to deliberate division. French déchirer and German zerreissen apply equally, confirming that the physical action is the same but the social context and intention differ markedly from sense 1. TEARING AND RENDING

en: and-he-cuts, he-cut-it, he-tore | es: lo-rasgaba, rasgó, y-abre | fr: déchirer, et-déchirer, il-déchira | de: [וקרע], [יקרעה], er-riss 2Kgs 17:21; Jer 22:14; Jer 36:23

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Jeremiah 4:30 where the verb is used in an unusual figurative sense. The prophet addresses personified Jerusalem: 'though you enlarge your eyes with paint' — but the Hebrew literally reads 'though you tear [open] your eyes,' using qara for the cosmetic act of widening the eyes. Spanish agrandes ('you enlarge') and English 'you enlarge' both interpret the tearing metaphor as widening or opening. This stands apart from all other senses: it is neither grief-rending nor physical splitting but a vivid bodily metaphor for cosmetic self-presentation, possibly with overtones of the garish and desperate. TEARING AND RENDING

en: you-enlarge | es: agrandes | fr: déchirer | de: [תקרעי] Jer 4:30

קֶרַע H7168 Conj-w / N-mp (4×)

torn pieces of garment, rags

This noun denotes torn pieces of cloth, whether deliberately ripped garments (as in the symbolic tearing of Jeroboam's cloak into twelve pieces) or worn rags (signifying poverty). The root conveys violent rending, and the plural form emphasizes multiple fragments. Torn garments carried powerful symbolic weight in ancient Israel—marking grief, judgment, or prophetic enactment.

(4×) Designates torn pieces or fragments of cloth. In 1 Kings 11:30-31, Ahijah tears his new garment into twelve pieces (שְׁנֵים עָשָׂר קְרָעִים), symbolically dividing Solomon's kingdom. In 2 Kings 2:12, Elisha tears his own clothes into pieces in mourning. Proverbs 23:21 uses 'rags' (קְרָעִים) as a sign of poverty befalling the drunkard. The multilingual evidence shows consistent rendering of torn fabric: Spanish 'pedazos/harapos,' French 'pieces,' German 'pieces'—though some languages struggled to distinguish the deliberate tearing from mere rags. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: and-rags, pieces | es: pedazos, y-harapos | fr: et-קרעים, pieces | de: [וקרעים], pieces 1Kgs 11:30; 1Kgs 11:31; 2Kgs 2:12; Prov 23:21

קָרַץ H7169 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to pinch, nip off; wink the eye or compress the lips maliciously; to be formed from clay

The Hebrew verb qarats conveys a vivid pinching or nipping motion. In Proverbs it describes deceitful body language: winking the eye (Prov 6:13; 10:10) and compressing the lips (Prov 16:30) as gestures of malicious scheming. Psalm 35:19 uses it similarly for enemies who wink with hostile intent. In Job 33:6, the passive form portrays being 'nipped off' from clay, evoking the potter shaping a human figure, paralleling Akkadian imagery of the god forming Enkidu from clay.

(5×) Covers the full range of pinching gestures and formation. The eye-winking sense dominates (Prov 6:13; 10:10; Ps 35:19), describing sly, malicious signaling through body language. Spanish 'guiña' (wink) and 'muerde' (bite) capture the two physical nuances. The lip-compressing sense (Prov 16:30) extends the gesture from eyes to mouth. In Job 33:6 the clay-nipping sense draws on ancient Near Eastern potter imagery, where humans are pinched from raw material. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-was-formed, compressing, he-who-winks | es: Guiña, el-que-guiña, el-que-muerde | fr: cligner, קרץ ,קרץ | de: [קרץ], [קרץ], [קרצתי] Job 33:6; Ps 35:19; Prov 6:13; Prov 10:10; Prov 16:30

קְרַץ H7170 N-mpc / 3ms (2×)

piece, fragment; used in phrase meaning 'slander' (lit. eat pieces/flesh of)

This Aramaic noun means 'piece' or 'fragment' but appears only in the idiomatic phrase 'eat his pieces/flesh,' meaning to slander or accuse maliciously. In Daniel 3:8 and 6:24, the phrase describes hostile accusation against the Jews at the royal court. The expression parallels similar idioms in Akkadian and Arabic where 'eating someone's flesh' means slandering them. This vivid metaphor portrays malicious speech as consuming another's reputation, tearing them apart piece by piece before authorities.

(2×) The glosses reveal the idiomatic nature: Spanish 'calumniosamente' (slanderously), French 'calomnie' (slander), rather than literal 'pieces.' Both Daniel passages show the same courtier dynamics—jealous officials bringing accusations against faithful Jews (the companions in chapter 3, Daniel in chapter 6). The 'eating pieces' image effectively captures how slander devours and destroys reputations through malicious reporting to those in power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [dir.obj]-him, them | es: a-los-judíos, calumniosamente | fr: calomnie | de: [קרצוהי], [קרצידהון] Dan 3:8; Dan 6:24

קָרְצִין H7171 N-ms (1×)

Biting insect, possibly gadfly or hornet; symbol of destructive foreign invader

Jeremiah's metaphor for Egypt's coming destroyer - a 'gadfly from the north' representing Nebuchadnezzar's invasion. Whether the precise insect is gadfly, hornet, or some other stinging pest matters less than the image's effectiveness: a relentless, painful, inescapable attacker. Egypt, described as a beautiful heifer, will be tormented by this northern pest. The metaphor combines contempt and threat - the mighty Babylon is reduced to an insect, yet this insect will destroy proud Egypt. Ancient versions vary in identification, but all recognize a biting, troublesome creature. Like all prophetic imagery, the point transcends zoology: judgment comes, and nothing can swat it away.

(1×) Found only in Jeremiah 46:20 in an oracle against Egypt. The term describes a stinging insect coming from the north (Babylon). Spanish uses 'tábano' (gadfly/horsefly), confirming the biting insect identification. Latin versions and ancient translations support this reading. BDB notes possible connection to roots meaning 'to nip' or 'bite.' The metaphor portrays Nebuchadnezzar's invasion as an irresistible pest tormenting Egypt. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: a-gadfly | es: tábano | fr: [קרץ] | de: [קרץ] Jer 46:20

קַרְקַע H7172 N-fsc (8×)

Floor, ground surface, bottom; the flat base of a building (temple, tabernacle) or the floor of the sea.

A noun likely derived by reduplication from the root qrr or qur, qarqa' denotes the floor or ground-level surface of a structure. It appears most prominently in the description of Solomon's temple, where the floor is overlaid with gold (1 Kgs 6:15, 16, 30), and in the tabernacle ritual of Numbers 5:17, where dust is taken from the floor. Amos 9:3 extends the image dramatically to the 'floor of the sea' – the ocean bottom where fugitives might hide from God. German 'Boden' and French 'plancher' both capture the sense of a horizontal base surface.

floor, bottom (of a building or container) (8×) The floor or bottom surface of a structure or space. Used concretely for the temple floor overlaid with gold (1 Kgs 6:15, 16, 30), for the tabernacle floor from which dust is gathered for the ordeal of jealousy (Num 5:17), and extended metaphorically to the 'floor of the sea' – the ocean bottom (Amos 9:3). French 'plancher,' German 'Boden,' and English 'floor' all reflect the same concrete image of a flat, horizontal base surface. The word is likely a reduplicative formation from the root qrr, cognate with Akkadian qaqqaru ('ground, earth'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: floor-of, from-floor-of, from-the-floor | es: desde-el-piso, desde-el-piso-de, el-piso | fr: de-le-plancher, de-plancher-de, fondement | de: Boden-von, [בקרקע], auf-Tenne-von Num 5:17; 1Kgs 6:15; 1Kgs 6:16; 1Kgs 6:30

קַרְקַע H7173 Art / N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Haqqarqaa (the Karkaa), place on Judah's southern border near Kadesh

A location on Judah's southern boundary, mentioned in Joshua's territorial descriptions. The name means 'the floor' or 'the level ground,' possibly describing local topography. It appears near Kadesh-Barnea on Judah's southern frontier toward Edom. The definite article and directional suffix indicate 'toward the Karkaa,' treating it as a known landmark for boundary definition. Greek versions show textual uncertainty, with one reading 'westward from Kadesh.' Like many minor boundary markers, exact identification is lost, but the name preserved tribal memory of landmarks that defined inheritance. Every border point mattered in Israel's sacred geography.

(1×) Appears only in Joshua 15:3 describing Judah's southern boundary. The Hebrew includes the definite article and directional suffix, literally 'toward the Karkaa.' The name possibly means 'floor' or 'level place.' Greek translations vary, suggesting textual or geographical uncertainty. Located near Kadesh-Barnea on Judah's extreme southern border, exact identification remains uncertain. The term belongs to detailed boundary descriptions defining tribal inheritances. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Karkaa | es: Carca | fr: le-Karkaa | de: der-Karkaa Josh 15:3

קַרְקֹר H7174 Prep-b (1×)

Qarqor, location east of Jordan where Gideon defeated Zebah and Zalmunna

The site of Gideon's final victory over the Midianite kings Zebah and Zalmunna. After routing the Midianite forces through the valley, Gideon pursued them to Qarqor where he captured the two kings. The exact location east of Jordan is unknown, but it represents the completion of Gideon's divinely-granted victory with just 300 men. The pursuit to Qarqor shows Gideon's determination to thoroughly execute God's deliverance - partial victory wasn't enough. This otherwise unknown place became the site where God finished what he began, turning complete defeat for Midian and complete deliverance for Israel.

(1×) Mentioned only in Judges 8:10 where Zebah and Zalmunna's army camped before Gideon's attack. The location is east of the Jordan, site unknown. Greek transliterates as Karkar. The narrative context is Gideon's relentless pursuit of the Midianite kings after initial victory, demonstrating commitment to complete God's deliverance. Archaeological and geographical identification remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Karkor | es: en-Carcor | fr: dans-Karkor | de: in-Karkor Judg 8:10

קֶרֶשׁ H7175 N-mp (51×)

A board or structural frame, especially the acacia-wood frames of the Tabernacle; once the deck-planking of a ship.

Refers almost exclusively to the upright structural frames of the Tabernacle, the portable wilderness sanctuary described in Exodus 26 and 36. These boards were made of acacia wood, overlaid with gold, and fitted with silver bases. Spanish tablon, French cadre, and German Rahmen all reflect the architectural framing sense. In a single metaphorical passage (Ezek 27:6), the word describes the deck-planking of Tyre's great ship, where English 'your deck' and Spanish tu cubierta confirm the shift from sacred architecture to maritime construction.

1. frame or board of Tabernacle (50×) Upright frame or board of the Tabernacle. The dominant meaning across 50 occurrences, referring to the acacia-wood structural elements overlaid with gold that formed the walls of the wilderness sanctuary. French cadre ('frame') and German Rahmen ('frame') emphasize the structural function, while Spanish tablon ('plank') highlights the material. Central to Exodus 26:15-30 and 36:20-34, with additional references in Numbers 3:36 and 4:31 for Levitical transport duties. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: frames, the-board, the-frame | es: el-tablón, tablones, tablón | fr: cadres, le-cadre, le-cadres | de: Rahmen, der-Brett, der-Rahmen Exod 26:15; Exod 26:16; Exod 26:17

2. deck of a ship (1×) Deck-planking of a ship. A unique metaphorical extension in Ezekiel 27:6, where Tyre is portrayed as a magnificent vessel whose deck is constructed of cypress from the coasts of Cyprus. English 'your deck,' Spanish tu cubierta, and French planche all shift from sacred architecture to nautical timber, showing how the basic sense of 'shaped board' adapts to a maritime context. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: your-deck | es: tu-cubierta | fr: planche | de: [קרשך] Ezek 27:6

קִרְיָה H7176 N-fs (5×)

town, city (poetic/late form)

A late poetic synonym for the more common Hebrew words for city. It appears exclusively in wisdom literature: Job uses it for his own city gate where he sat as an elder (Job 29:7), while Proverbs deploys it for personified Wisdom's urban stage, calling out at the city heights and gates (Prov 8:3; 9:3, 14). In Proverbs 11:11 the city represents a corporate community blessed or ruined by its inhabitants. The Phoenician cognate qart appears in place names like Carthage (Qart-Hadasht, 'new city').

(5×) A poetic and elevated term for a walled settlement or urban community. Spanish and English both render it straightforwardly as 'ciudad'/'city,' while French uses the more literary 'cité.' All five occurrences sit in wisdom poetry (Job, Proverbs), suggesting the form carried a dignified or archaic register. In Proverbs 11:11 it denotes the city as a body politic, not merely a physical location. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-city, city, the-city | es: ciudad, la-ciudad | fr: cité | de: [קרת] Job 29:7; Prov 8:3; Prov 9:3; Prov 9:14; Prov 11:11

קִרְתָּה H7177 N-proper-fs (1×)

Qartah, Levitical city in Zebulun, site unknown

A town in Zebulun's territory assigned to the Levites, mentioned only in Joshua's distribution lists. Like many Levitical cities, Qartah's exact location is lost, though it was part of the systematic provision for Levites scattered throughout Israel. These cities fulfilled God's plan that Levites, having no tribal territory of their own, would instead dwell among all tribes, teaching Torah and maintaining worship. Every tribe supported Levitical ministry through city grants. Qartah represents this sacred arrangement - a town whose name we remember though its ruins are forgotten, testimony to Israel's commitment to support those who served at God's altar.

(1×) Appears only in Joshua 21:34 in the list of Levitical cities from Zebulun. Greek versions show textual variation (Kadeis, Karitha), indicating uncertainty about pronunciation. The town's precise location cannot be identified archaeologically. It was one of four cities Zebulun provided for Levites, fulfilling the requirement that all tribes support Levitical ministry. The name itself has no clear etymology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kartah | es: Carta | fr: Kartah | de: Kartah Josh 21:34

קִרְיָתַיִם H7178 N-proper-fs (1×)

Qartan, Levitical city in Naphtali, parallel to Qiriath-Haim elsewhere

A Levitical city in Naphtali's tribal territory, appearing only in Joshua's allocation lists. Chronicles 6:76 lists Qiriath-Haim in the parallel passage, suggesting these are variant names for the same location or that textual transmission produced confusion. Like other Levitical cities, Qartan provided residence for those serving God's sanctuary, scattered strategically throughout Israel. Naphtali's northern location meant these Levites served far from Jerusalem, maintaining Torah teaching and worship practices in distant communities. Though the exact site is unknown, the principle endures: God's servants lived among the people, not isolated in a central location.

(1×) Found only in Joshua 21:32 as a Levitical city from Naphtali. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:76 names Qiriath-Haim instead, suggesting textual variation or alternate naming. Greek versions attempt transliteration (Kartan). Archaeological identification is uncertain. The city was part of Naphtali's contribution to Levitical support, placing teachers and worship leaders in Israel's northern tribes. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kartan | es: Cartán | fr: Kartan | de: Kartan Josh 21:32

קַשׁ H7179 N-ms (16×)

Stubble, chaff — dry plant material used as an image of what is worthless, inflammable, or wind-driven

A masculine noun for the dry stalks and chaff left after harvest, appearing almost exclusively in similes and metaphors. Its literal sense surfaces only once, when the Israelites must gather stubble for straw to make bricks (Exod 5:12). Everywhere else, qash serves figurative purposes: fire consumes enemies like stubble (Exod 15:7; Isa 5:24; 47:14; Nah 1:10; Joel 2:5; Obad 18; Mal 3:19), wind scatters the wicked like chaff (Isa 40:24; 41:2; Jer 13:24; Ps 83:14), and Job compares himself to worthless stubble before God (Job 13:25). Spanish 'paja/rastrojo' and French 'chaume' capture the agricultural substrate of these vivid images.

stubble, chaff, dry stalks (16×) Stubble, chaff, or dry straw remaining after harvest — used overwhelmingly in figurative language for what is insubstantial, flammable, or easily scattered. The sole literal occurrence describes Israelite slaves gathering stubble for brick-making (Exod 5:12). As a fire metaphor it conveys divine judgment consuming the wicked (Exod 15:7; Isa 5:24; 47:14; Nah 1:10; Mal 3:19). As a wind metaphor it pictures the impermanence of the godless (Isa 40:24; Jer 13:24; Ps 83:14). Job uses it for his own perceived insignificance before God (Job 13:25; 41:20-21). STUBBLE AND CHAFF

en: As-chaff, for-stubble, like-chaff | es: Como-paja, como-paja, como-rastrojo | fr: chaume, comme-chaume, comme-du-chaume | de: [כקש], [לקש], [קש] Exod 5:12; Exod 15:7; Job 13:25; Job 41:28; Job 41:29

קִשֻּׁאָה H7180 Art / N-mp (1×)

Cucumbers, a vegetable the Israelites craved in the wilderness

One of the Egyptian foods Israel nostalgically recalled during wilderness wandering. Cucumbers, though simple, represented the variety and satisfaction of Egypt's agricultural abundance. Numbers 11 lists them alongside fish, melons, leeks, onions, and garlic - a Mediterranean diet the people missed desperately while eating manna. Their complaint reveals the human heart: facing daily miracles, they craved cucumbers. The mundane comfort of familiar food outweighed the significance of supernatural provision. This wasn't about nutrition but about control, preference, and the seductive memory of slavery's compensations. God was leading them to land flowing with milk and honey, but they wanted cucumbers now.

(1×) Appears only in Numbers 11:5 in Israel's complaint about manna and nostalgia for Egyptian food. The plural form lists cucumbers among vegetables they remember. Spanish 'pepinos,' English 'cucumbers,' and similar forms across languages confirm the vegetable identification. The narrative context is Israel's rejection of manna and craving for Egypt's diet, showing how quickly miraculous provision becomes contemptible when human preferences are unsatisfied. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: the-cucumbers | es: los-pepinos | fr: le-cucumbers | de: der-cucumbers Num 11:5

קָשַׁב H7181 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (46×)

To pay attention, listen carefully, give heed; attentive listening that implies obedience

A verb of focused, deliberate listening — stronger than the general shama (hear). In the Hifil stem, qashav means to incline the ear, to concentrate one's attention. It appears frequently in prophetic calls to attention (Isa 28:23; Mic 1:2) and in psalmic prayers pleading for God's ear (Ps 5:2; 55:2). French prêter l'oreille ('lend the ear') beautifully captures the intentional quality. Samuel's declaration that "to pay attention is better than the fat of rams" (1 Sam 15:22) binds this verb inseparably to the concept of obedient responsiveness.

1. pay attention, give heed (41×) The main Hifil verbal sense: to pay attention, give heed, listen carefully. Encompasses imperatives ("Attend!" Isa 28:23), narrative perfects (Jer 23:18), and prayers for divine attention (Ps 5:2; 66:19). Spanish Escucha/Atiende and French prêter l'oreille both highlight the deliberate, effortful quality. In 1 Sam 15:22, qashav stands parallel to shama but carries the added weight of obedient responsiveness — not just hearing but heeding.

BEING ON GUARD
en: Pay-attention, and-pay-attention, attend | es: Atiende, Escucha, Escuchad | fr: et-prêter-l'oreille, et-être-attentif, le-être-attentif | de: [הקשיבה], [והקשיבו], [והקשיבן] 1Sam 15:22; 2Chr 20:15; 2Chr 33:10; Neh 9:34; Job 13:6

2. one who listens attentively (4×) Participial or substantive use: one who listens attentively, the attentive person. In Proverbs, it characterizes the wise versus the foolish — the one who pays attention to malicious lips (Prov 17:4), the ruler who listens to lies (Prov 29:12), or Wisdom's frustrated call that no one was maqshiv (Prov 1:24). Song of Songs 8:13 uses the plural participle tenderly: "companions are listening" for the beloved's voice. BEING ON GUARD
en: listening, listens, paying-attention | es: escuchan, presta-atención, que-presta-atención | fr: prêter-l'oreille, écoutent | de: [מקשים], [מקשיבים] Prov 1:24; Prov 17:4; Prov 29:12; Song 8:13

3. (1×) A single Qal occurrence in Isaiah 32:3 where ears "shall attend" — using the simple stem rather than the causative Hifil. This prophetic promise of restored perception ("the ears of those who hear shall listen") pairs qashav with shama, suggesting that in the messianic age, attentiveness will become effortless rather than commanded. BEING ON GUARD
en: shall-listen | es: escucharán | fr: être-attentif | de: aufmerken Isa 32:3

קֶשֶׁב H7182 N-ms (4×)
attentiveness, attention, response
This noun denotes attentiveness or paying attention, often as a sign of life or responsiveness. It appears in contexts testing for divine response or human vitality. The term functions as an abstract verbal noun from the root meaning 'to attend, give heed,' and can be used as a cognate accusative to intensify the verbal idea of giving attention.

(4×) Captures attentiveness or responsive attention as evidence of life or presence. In 1 Kings 18:29, there is no 'response' (קֶשֶׁב) from Baal despite frantic prophetic efforts—proving the idol's lifelessness. In 2 Kings 4:31, Gehazi reports no 'sign of life' (קֶשֶׁב) from the Shunammite's son. Isaiah 21:7 uses the cognate accusative construction וְהַקְשֵׁב קֶשֶׁב רַב ('he shall attend an attentiveness') to emphasize intense watchfulness. The multilingual glosses split between 'attention' and 'response,' both capturing the noun's semantic range—active listening and reactive acknowledgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: attention, response | es: atención, escuchando, quien-atienda | fr: [קשב], attention, response | de: [קשב], attention, response 1Kgs 18:29; 2Kgs 4:31; Isa 21:7

קַשָּׁב H7183a Adj-fs (2×)
attentive, listening carefully; paying close attention
This adjective describes an attentive, listening posture—specifically of the ear being alert and focused. Nehemiah uses it twice in his opening prayer (1:6, 11), asking God to make his ear attentive to the prayer of his servant. The image is of an ear inclined toward the speaker, actively receiving words rather than passive hearing. This attentiveness involves both the physical act of listening and the mental engagement with what's heard, particularly in contexts of prayer and divine response.

(2×) Spanish 'atento' and English 'attentive' directly capture the focused quality. Both uses in Nehemiah 1 are identical—the cupbearer's urgent plea that God's ear be truly listening, not distant or distracted. The adjective describes not just the capacity to hear but the active choice to pay attention, critical for prayers seeking divine intervention. Nehemiah needs more than God's hearing; he needs God's focused, attentive engagement with his crisis. HEARING AND HEEDING en: attentive | es: atento | fr: [קשבת] | de: [קשבת] Neh 1:6; Neh 1:11

קַשְּׁבֶת H7183b Adj-fp (3×)
attentive, listening carefully (of ears)
This adjective, appearing only in the feminine plural form, describes ears that are attentive and alert to hear. It occurs exclusively in the phrase 'let your ears be attentive,' used in prayers asking God to listen carefully to supplication. The term appears in Solomon's temple dedication prayer in 2 Chronicles and in Psalm 130's cry from the depths, emphasizing the petition for divine attention rather than passive hearing.

(3×) The word modifies 'ears' to request focused, careful attention. In 2 Chronicles 6:40 and 7:15, Solomon asks God to make His eyes open and His ears attentive to prayers offered in the temple—emphasizing active divine listening to His people's cries. Psalm 130:2 makes an identical plea: 'Let your ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.' The term implies more than merely hearing; it requests engaged, responsive attention—ears inclined toward and focused on the prayer being offered. HEARING AND HEEDING en: attentive | es: atentos | fr: [קשבות], attentif | de: [קשבות], attentive 2Chr 6:40; 2Chr 7:15; Ps 130:2

קְשׂוָה H7184 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (4×)
jars, pitchers (for libation offerings)
This term designates a specific type of vessel used in tabernacle and temple service, associated with drink offerings. The precise shape or material is uncertain, but the consistent cultic context suggests ritual significance. These jars appear in furnishing lists for the table of showbread and in Priestly inventories of sacred utensils.

(4×) Identifies cultic vessels, specifically jars or pitchers for libations. Exodus 25:29 and 37:16 list them among the table's utensils; Numbers 4:7 specifies 'jars of the drink-offering' (קְשׂוֹת הַנָּסֶךְ). 1 Chronicles 28:17 (possibly referencing the temple rather than tabernacle) includes them in David's specifications for temple vessels. The multilingual evidence shows varied renderings: Spanish 'copas/jarras,' French 'cruches,' German 'pitchers/jars'—suggesting uncertainty about the precise vessel type. All four occurrences appear in Priestly or Chronistic ritual contexts, marking this as technical liturgical vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-jars, and-the-pitchers, jars-of | es: copas-de, las-jarras, y-las-copas | fr: [והקשות], et-son-cruches, jars-de | de: [והקשות], der-pitchers, jars-von Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16; Num 4:7; 1Chr 28:17

קָשָׁה H7185 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (28×)
To be hard, severe, or difficult; in Hifil, to harden or make obstinate; of childbirth, harsh treatment, and fierce character.
Qashah is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for hardness in all its dimensions — physical, emotional, moral, and spiritual. Its most famous use is theological: Pharaoh's hardened heart and Israel's stiffened neck, where the Hifil causative hiqshah becomes a diagnosis of deliberate spiritual rebellion. But the root runs deeper than stubbornness alone. Rachel's agonizing labor is 'hard' (Gen 35:16-17), the Israelites' bondage is 'harsh' (1 Kgs 12:4), and Simeon and Levi's wrath is 'fierce' (Gen 49:7). The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish endurecer and French endurcir track the obstinacy sense closely, while Arabic qasa captures the root's physical dryness and hardness that underlies all the metaphorical extensions.

1. make obstinate, harden (19×) The dominant Hifil causative sense: to make obstinate, stiffen, or harden, almost always paired with 'neck' (oref) or 'heart' (lev). This is the word for deliberate spiritual rebellion — Pharaoh hardening his heart (Exod 7:3; 13:15), Israel stiffening their necks (Deut 10:16; 2 Chr 30:8), and Rehoboam refusing to lighten his father's yoke (1 Kgs 12:4). At 19 occurrences it overwhelmingly dominates the lemma. Spanish endurecer, French endurcir, and German verharten all lexicalize this as a dedicated 'obstinacy' verb, distinct from mere physical hardness. HONOR AND WEIGHT
en: and-he-stiffened, and-they-stiffened, but-one-who-hardens | es: endureceré, endureceréis, endurecieron | fr: –endurcir, [הקשה], [הקשן] | de: [הקשה], [הקשן], [ויקש] Exod 7:3; Exod 13:15; Deut 2:30; Deut 10:16; 1Kgs 12:4

2. be hard, severe, fierce (3×) The Qal stative: to be hard, harsh, severe, or fierce in character or action. Genesis 49:7 condemns the 'fierce' wrath of Simeon and Levi; 1 Samuel 5:7 records that Yahweh's hand 'was severe' upon the Philistines; 2 Samuel 19:43 describes the men of Judah's words as 'harder' than those of Israel. Spanish cruel and French cruel both appear here, marking the qualitative-judgment dimension that separates this from the volitional obstinacy of the Hifil. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-was-harsh, cruel, is-hard | es: cruel, es-dura, y-fue-dura | fr: cruel, est-dur, et-fut-harsh | de: hart-ist-er, ist-hard, und-war-harsh Gen 49:7; 1Sam 5:7; 2Sam 19:43

3. have difficulty in labor (2×) A specialized obstetric sense: to have hard labor, to experience difficulty in childbirth. Both occurrences describe Rachel's fatal delivery of Benjamin (Gen 35:16-17), and the Piel/Hifil infinitive construct marks the intensity of the physical ordeal. Spanish dificultad and German schwer both select medical-difficulty vocabulary rather than moral-hardness terms. Though only two verses, this concrete bodily sense is the root's most visceral application and may be closer to its original physical meaning than the metaphorical extensions. LABOR AND TOIL

en: and-she-had-difficulty, when-she-had-difficulty | es: en-dificultad-de-ella, y-tuvo-dificultad | fr: et-elle-avait-difficulty, quand-elle-avait-difficulty | de: als-es-schwer-war, und-es-war-schwer Gen 35:16; Gen 35:17

4. be difficult (2×) The Qal sense of being difficult, hard to accomplish or adjudicate. Deuteronomy 1:17 warns judges not to shrink from a case that 'is too hard,' and Deuteronomy 15:18 assures the master that releasing a slave 'shall not seem hard' in his eyes. Spanish difícil and German hart both select task-difficulty rather than character-severity vocabulary. This sits at the boundary between physical hardness and cognitive challenge. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-hard, shall-be-hard | es: sea-difícil, sea-duro | fr: devra-être-hard, est-hard | de: ist-hart, soll-sein-hart Deut 1:17; Deut 15:18

5. be hard-pressed, in distress (1×) The Nifal passive: to be hard-pressed, in severe distress. A single occurrence (Isa 8:21) describes the famished wanderer who, 'hard-pressed and hungry,' curses his king and his God. The passive voice marks the subject as sufferer rather than agent of hardness — a key semantic distinction from senses 1-2 where the subject either causes or embodies hardness. The German and French translations leave this untranslated (bracket the Hebrew), perhaps reflecting how rare and striking the Nifal form is. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP

en: hard-pressed | es: duramente-oprimido | fr: [נקשה] | de: [נקשה] Isa 8:21

6. make difficult, ask a hard thing (1×) The Hifil in a non-obstinacy application: to make something difficult, to pose a hard request. Elijah tells Elisha, 'You have asked a hard thing' (2 Kgs 2:10) — the double portion of spirit. Spanish cosa difícil ('a difficult thing') and German schwer select difficulty vocabulary rather than stubbornness vocabulary, confirming this as the Hifil's secondary sense: making a task difficult rather than making a person obstinate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: you-have-asked-hard | es: Has-pedido-cosa-difícil | fr: tu-ai-demanda-dur | de: du-habe-fragte-hard 2Kgs 2:10

קָשֶׁה H7186 Adj-fs (36×)

Hard, severe, harsh — describing difficult circumstances, obstinate character, cruel treatment, or fierce intensity.

A versatile adjective covering a spectrum from the physically laborious to the morally unyielding. In Exodus 1:14 the Egyptians impose 'hard' servitude, while in Exodus 32:9 God diagnoses Israel as 'stiff-necked' — the same root painting both external oppression and internal stubbornness. Spanish consistently renders it 'duro/dura,' capturing the concrete hardness, while English splits between 'hard,' 'harsh,' and 'fierce' depending on context. Whether describing Nabal's cruel disposition (1 Sam 25:3), a grueling legal case (Exod 18:26), or God's fierce wind (Isa 27:8), the word always signals resistance — something or someone that will not easily yield.

1. harsh, severe (of treatment/manner) (11×) Harsh or severe treatment of others — rough, cruel, or oppressive conduct. Joseph speaks 'harshly' to his brothers (Gen 42:7, 30), and Nabal is described as 'hard' in his dealings (1 Sam 25:3). French and German both reach for 'dur/hart,' the most concrete sense of unyielding hardness applied to human interaction. The multilingual glosses consistently pair this with words for cruelty and severity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hard, harsh, harshly | es: con-duro, cruel, dura | fr: [קשה], dur, harsh | de: [קשה], hard, harsh Gen 42:7; Gen 42:30; 1Sam 20:10; 1Sam 25:3; 2Sam 2:17

2. stiff-necked, obstinate (11×) Stiff-necked or obstinate character — stubborn refusal to yield, especially toward God. Almost always appears in the construct phrase 'hard of neck' (Exod 32:9; 33:3, 5; 34:9; Deut 9:6) or 'hard of face/heart' (Ezek 2:4; 3:7). Spanish 'duro de cerviz' and German 'halsstarrig' both preserve the vivid body metaphor. This sense dominates the Pentateuchal narratives of Israel's wilderness rebellion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hard-of-, hard-of, obstinate | es: dura, duro, duro-de | fr: dur, et-dur, le-stiff | de: [וקשי], [קשי], der-halsstarrig Exod 32:9; Exod 33:3; Exod 33:5; Exod 34:9; Deut 9:6

3. hard, difficult (of circumstances) (9×) Hard or difficult circumstances — burdensome tasks, grievous conditions, or painful life situations. Describes the 'hard service' of Egyptian slavery (Exod 1:14; 6:9), a legal case too 'difficult' for ordinary judges (Exod 18:26), and the crushing shortness of spirit from bondage (Deut 26:6). In 1 Samuel 1:15, Hannah calls herself 'hard of day' — one whose life is bitter. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly uses words for difficulty and heaviness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-hard-of-, hard, hard- | es: dura-de, dureza, duro | fr: [הקשה], dur, dur- | de: [הקשה], [לקשה], der-difficult Exod 1:14; Exod 6:9; Exod 18:26; Deut 26:6; 1Sam 1:15

4. fierce, intense (of force/anger) (5×) Fierce or intense force — describing overwhelming power in battle, wind, or divine wrath. Judges 4:24 depicts Israel's hand growing 'harder and harder' against Jabin; Isaiah 27:1 speaks of God's 'hard, great sword'; Isaiah 27:8 references a 'fierce east wind.' Spanish sometimes shifts to 'fuerte' (strong), revealing how this sense edges from hardness into raw power. It captures forces that cannot be withstood. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hard, harder, the-hard | es: dura, duros, fuerte | fr: dur, et-dur, harder | de: der-Harte, harder, und-hart Judg 4:24; 2Sam 3:39; Isa 14:3; Isa 27:1; Isa 27:8

קְשֹׁט H7187 N-ms (2×)

truth, certainty, reliability (Aramaic)

This Aramaic term signifies truth and reliability, related to Hebrew 'emet. Daniel uses it to describe both divine attributes and necessary human speech. In Daniel 2:47, Nebuchadnezzar acknowledges that Israel's God is 'a God of truth,' while in 4:37 (4:34 Aramaic) Daniel affirms that all God's works are truth. The word conveys not just factual accuracy but fundamental trustworthiness and dependability. In a court setting where truth-telling could cost your life, this word carried weight.

(2×) All translations render this simply as 'truth': Spanish 'verdad,' French 'vérité,' English 'truth.' Daniel 2:47 uses the phrase 'of a truth' (certainly, truly) while 4:37 directly states that God's works are truth itself. The consistent cross-linguistic witness reflects the term's straightforward semantic range—truth as opposed to falsehood, reliability versus deception, core meanings that transcend cultural boundaries in legal and theological discourse. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: truth | es: verdad | fr: vérité | de: [קשט] Dan 2:47; Dan 4:37

קִשָּׁה H7188 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (2×)

make hard, harden (heart); treat harshly or roughly

This Hiphil verb has two related senses: making something hard or stubborn, and treating someone harshly. In Isaiah 63:17, Israel questions why God would harden their heart from fearing him—an echo of Exodus's hardening language applied reflexively to the people's own resistance. Job 39:16 describes the ostrich treating her young harshly, as if they weren't hers. Both senses share the core idea of hardness—either making the heart intractable or making treatment severe and unyielding.

(2×) Spanish 'endureces' (you harden) and 'trata duramente' (treats harshly) show the dual semantic development. The Isaiah context addresses God's role in Israel's spiritual obstinacy—a theological puzzle where divine sovereignty meets human responsibility. The Job passage describes harsh, seemingly callous animal behavior. Though the objects differ (hearts vs. offspring), both involve making hard or being hard, whether in attitude or action. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION

en: do-You-harden, she-treats-harshly | es: Trata-duramente, endureces | fr: [תקשיח], הקשיח | de: [הקשיח], [תקשיח] Job 39:16; Isa 63:17

קַשְׁטָא H7189a N-ms (1×)

A rare Aramaic-form variant of 'bow' appearing once in Psalm 60, possibly with wordplay on 'truth'

This Hebrew noun appears only in Psalm 60:4 as an Aramaic-influenced variant of the standard word for 'bow' (the weapon). The form shows the characteristic Aramaic shift where ט replaces ת after the letter ק. Intriguingly, the multilingual glosses predominantly translate it as 'truth' rather than 'bow,' suggesting either a textual ambiguity or deliberate wordplay. The psalm's context of divine faithfulness may have influenced translators to see a connection to the concept of truth rather than merely the weapon imagery.

(1×) The single occurrence in Psalm 60:4 is textually complex—BDB identifies this as an Aramaic form of 'bow' (the weapon), yet Spanish verdad, French vérité, and German Wahrheit all render it as 'truth.' This divergence reflects either manuscript uncertainty or the translator's theological interpretation of God's faithfulness as the true 'weapon' given to his people. The Aramaic linguistic features suggest late composition or deliberate stylistic choice. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: truth | es: verdad | fr: vérité | de: Wahrheit Ps 60:4

קְשֹׁט H7189b N-msc (1×)

Truth, certainty; an Aramaic loanword appearing in Proverbs 22:21 in a context emphasizing reliable words

This masculine noun for 'truth' appears once in Proverbs 22:21 and is identified by scholars as an Aramaic gloss or explanatory term accompanying the Hebrew phrase 'words of truth.' The layering of both Aramaic and Hebrew terms for truth in the same verse creates an emphatic effect—absolute certainty and reliability. Some scholars consider it a marginal note that entered the text, reflecting the bilingual context of wisdom literature where Aramaic terms occasionally surface to reinforce key concepts.

(1×) In Proverbs 22:21, this word appears alongside Hebrew 'words of truth' (אֲמָרֵי אֱמֶת), creating what some view as redundant emphasis or an Aramaic explanatory gloss. Spanish certeza (certainty) captures the intensified sense of verified reliability that the double expression conveys. The passage aims to teach 'words of truth, that you may answer words of truth to those who send you'—making trustworthiness the central pedagogical goal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: truth-of | es: certeza-de | fr: קשט | de: [קשט] Prov 22:21

קְשִׁי H7190 N-msc (1×)

Stubbornness, obstinacy; describes the hardened attitude of Israel's ancestors in Deuteronomy 9:27

This masculine noun denotes the quality of being stubborn or obstinate, appearing only in Deuteronomy 9:27. Moses intercedes for Israel by asking God not to look upon 'their stubbornness, their wickedness, and their sin.' The word captures the deliberate, willful resistance to divine guidance that characterized Israel's wilderness generation. It's a quality of the heart and will rather than mere ignorance or weakness—a persistent refusal to yield to God's direction despite clear evidence and commands.

(1×) Moses uses this term in his recollection of Israel's rebellion during the golden calf incident. The Hebrew construction 'stubbornness of this people' (קְשִׁי הָעָם הַזֶּה) emphasizes the collective, ingrained nature of Israel's resistance. Spanish dureza (hardness) and the English 'stubbornness' both convey the unyielding quality—not softness or pliability but a rigid rejection of correction. This hardness of heart became a recurring theme in prophetic critiques of Israel's covenant unfaithfulness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: stubbornness-of | es: la-dureza-de | fr: stubbornness-de | de: stubbornness-von Deut 9:27

קִשְׁיוֹן H7191 N-proper-fs (2×)

Kishion (Qishyon), Levitical city in Issachar

Kishion was a city within the tribal territory of Issachar, designated as one of the Levitical cities. It appears in the boundary descriptions and city lists of Joshua (19:20, 21:28). The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:57 calls it Kedesh, likely referring to the same location by an alternative name. The exact site remains unidentified, though it was clearly located within Issachar's inheritance and set apart for the Levites who served the tabernacle and later temple.

(2×) Transliterations vary slightly across languages: English 'Kishion/Qishyon,' Spanish 'Quisión,' French 'Kishion.' The two Joshua references establish its dual identity—first as part of Issachar's territorial inheritance (19:20), then as a city given to the Levites (21:28). As a Levitical city, Kishion served as a support base for those who had no tribal inheritance of their own, representing Israel's commitment to support worship personnel. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kishion, and-Qishyon | es: Quisión, y-Quisión | fr: Kishion, et-Qishyon | de: Kishion, und-Qishyon Josh 19:20; Josh 21:28

קְשִׂיטָה H7192 N-fs (3×)

qesitah, an ancient unit of value or weight (possibly silver)

The qesitah was a unit of value used in the patriarchal period, though its precise weight or worth remains unknown to us. Jacob purchased land in Shechem for one hundred qesitahs, and Job's comforters each gave him one qesitah along with a gold ring as a restoration gift. The term appears nowhere else in Scripture and had apparently become archaic or obsolete by later biblical times, suggesting it belongs to very early Israelite economic practice.

(3×) This rare term designates an ancient monetary or weight unit known in patriarchal times but obscure in later periods. Genesis 33:19 and Joshua 24:32 record Jacob's purchase of the Shechem plot for 'one hundred qesitahs,' establishing the family burial ground. Job 42:11 uses it for the restoration gifts given by friends and relatives—'each gave him one qesitah and one gold ring.' The pairing with gold and use in major land transactions suggests significant value. Translators typically transliterate rather than translate, acknowledging we cannot determine its modern equivalent. SILVER AND MONEY

en: a-qesitah, kesitah, qesitahs | es: kesitas, quesita, quesitas | fr: kesitah, qesitahs, קשיטה | de: Kesita, [קשיטה], qesitahs Gen 33:19; Josh 24:32; Job 42:11

קַשְׂקַשֶּׂת H7193 Prep-b / N-fpc / 2ms (8×)

Scale (of fish or reptile); used in dietary laws for aquatic creatures and metaphorically of armored hide.

This noun designates the scale of a fish or reptile, most prominently in the Levitical dietary laws where aquatic creatures must have both fins (senapir) and scales (qasqeseth) to be considered clean (Lev 11:9-12; Deut 14:9-10). The same word appears in 1 Samuel 17:5 for Goliath's 'coat of scale-armor,' where the overlapping metal plates resembled fish scales. In Ezekiel 29:4, Pharaoh is depicted as a great crocodile whose scales cling to the fish of the Nile – a vivid image of imperial domination. Spanish 'escamas,' French 'écaille,' and English 'scale' all point to the same zoological feature.

scale (of fish or reptile) (8×) The scale of a fish, reptile, or crocodile, and by extension scale-like armor. Central to the dietary laws distinguishing clean from unclean aquatic creatures: those with fins and scales are permitted (Lev 11:9-12; Deut 14:9-10). In 1 Samuel 17:5, the term describes Goliath's scale-armor (shiryon qasqassim), where overlapping metal plates imitate fish scales. Ezekiel 29:4 uses it for Pharaoh-as-crocodile, whose scales trap the fish of the Nile. Spanish 'escamas,' French 'écaille,' and English 'scale' uniformly reflect the zoological image. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-scale, of-scales, to-your-scales | es: a-tus-escamas, escamas, y-escama | fr: de-scales, et-scale, écaille | de: [בקשקשתיך], und-scale, von-scales Lev 11:9; Lev 11:10; Lev 11:12; Deut 14:9; Deut 14:10

קָשַׁר H7194 Art / V-Pual-Prtcpl-fp (44×)

To bind, tie; to conspire, form a plot; participial: conspirator; passive: bound, attached; of livestock: strong, robust

A verb of binding that extends from rope to rebellion, qashar spans an unexpectedly wide semantic field. At its physical core, it means to tie or fasten — Rahab binding the scarlet cord in her window (Josh 2:18, 21), the Shema's command to bind God's words on your hand (Deut 6:8; 11:18). But its dominant biblical usage is political: to conspire against a king, accounting for nearly half of all occurrences. The Books of Kings are punctuated by the grim formula wayyiqshor 'al — 'and he conspired against' — marking one coup after another in Israel's turbulent monarchy (1 Kgs 15:27; 16:9, 16; 2 Kgs 15:10, 25, 30). The metaphorical bridge is transparent: conspirators are those who 'bind themselves together' in secret pacts. A surprising peripheral sense appears in Genesis 30:41-42, where Pual participles describe livestock as 'strong' or 'robust' — perhaps 'tightly knit' in constitution — a usage found nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible.

1. conspire, plot against (21×) The political-conspiratorial sense — to conspire, plot, or form a rebellion against a ruler — dominating with 21 occurrences concentrated in the Deuteronomistic History. The formula wayyiqshor X 'al Y ('and X conspired against Y') recurs as a narrative refrain through the northern kingdom's serial coups (1 Kgs 15:27; 16:9, 16, 20; 2 Kgs 9:14; 10:9; 12:20; 15:10, 25, 30; 21:23-24). Spanish conspirar and French conspirer reflect the Latin conspirare ('to breathe together'), which captures the same metaphor of secret agreement. Amos 7:10 extends this to prophetic speech when Amaziah accuses Amos of conspiring against Jeroboam. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: and-conspired, and-he-conspired, and-he-conspired- | es: Ha-conspirado, Y-conspiraron, Y-conspiró | fr: a-conspira, ai-tu-conspira, conspira | de: [התקשרו], [ויקשרו], [קשר] 1Sam 22:8; 1Sam 22:13; 1Kgs 15:27; 1Kgs 16:9; 1Kgs 16:16

2. bind, tie physically (13×) The concrete physical sense — to bind, tie, or fasten something with a cord — appearing in 13 occurrences across patriarchal, legal, and wisdom literature. Judah's daughter-in-law ties a scarlet thread on the firstborn's hand (Gen 38:28); Israel is commanded to bind the words of the Torah 'as a sign on your hand' (Deut 6:8; 11:18); Proverbs urges binding lovingkindness and faithfulness around the neck (Prov 3:3; 6:21; 7:3). Spanish atar and German binden confirm the purely physical tying action. Jeremiah 51:63 dramatically ties a stone to a scroll before hurling it into the Euphrates. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-she-tied, and-tied, and-will-you-bind-him | es: atarás, y-ató, y-las-atarás | fr: [ותקשרים], [תקשר], et-elle-tied | de: [התקשר], [ותקשרים], [ותקשרנו] Gen 38:28; Deut 6:8; Deut 11:18; Josh 2:18; Josh 2:21

3. conspirator (4×) The substantivized active participle — conspirators, those who conspire — functioning as a noun across 4 occurrences. When Absalom's rebellion gains momentum, David is told 'Ahithophel is among the conspirators (haqqosherim) with Absalom' (2 Sam 15:31). After Amon's assassination, 'the people of the land struck down all the conspirators' (2 Kgs 21:24; 2 Chr 33:25). Spanish conspiradores and the participial pattern reveal how the verbal action crystallized into a social category — a named group within the political landscape. CONSPIRACY

en: is-among-the-conspirators, the-conspirators | es: entre-los-conspiradores, los-conspiradores, los-que-conspiraron | fr: conspirer, est-parmi-le-conspirators, le-conspirators | de: [המתקשרים], [הקשרים], der-conspirators 2Sam 15:31; 2Kgs 21:24; 2Chr 24:26; 2Chr 33:25

4. bound, tied (stative) (3×) The passive-stative sense — being bound, tied, or deeply attached — expressed through Qal passive participles and Nifal forms across 3 occurrences. Jacob's soul 'was bound up (qeshurah) in the lad's soul' (Gen 44:30) — a poignant image of parental love as an unbreakable knot. Jonathan's soul 'was bound (niqsherah) to the soul of David' (1 Sam 18:1). Proverbs 22:15 warns that 'foolishness is bound in the heart of a child.' Spanish ligada/atada and German gebunden capture the stative condition of deep attachment or entanglement. BINDING AND TYING

en: bound, was-bound | es: atada, ligada, se-ligó | fr: fut-lié, lia, lier | de: [קשורה], gebunden, war-bound Gen 44:30; 1Sam 18:1; Prov 22:15

5. strong, robust (2×) The Pual participial sense describing livestock as strong or robust — a unique agricultural usage limited to 2 occurrences in Genesis 30:41-42. Jacob placed the rods before the 'stronger' (meqUshsharoth) flocks during mating, separating them from the feebler ones. Spanish robustas and German kraftigen confirm the meaning 'strong, vigorous.' This may reflect an underlying sense of 'tightly bound, compact' — muscular firmness as metaphorical binding — though some scholars propose a distinct homonymous root. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-the-strong, the-stronger | es: las-robustas, y-las-robustas | fr: et-le-fort, le-stronger | de: der-kräftigen, und-die-kräftigen Gen 30:41; Gen 30:42

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Nehemiah 4:6 [Hebrew 3:38] where the wall 'was joined together' (wattiqasher) to half its height — describing structural connection of wall sections being bound or linked into a continuous whole. Spanish se unio ('was joined') and English 'was joined' indicate a constructional rather than conspiratorial binding. This extends the physical tying sense (sense 2) into architectural joining, where disparate sections of the wall were 'bound together' as the rebuilding progressed under Nehemiah's leadership. BINDING AND TYING en: and-was-joined | es: y-se-unió | fr: et-conspirer | de: [ותקשר] Neh 4:6

קֶשֶׁר H7195 Art / N-ms (16×)

Conspiracy — a secret treasonous plot against an established ruler or authority

The sole meaning of this masculine noun is a clandestine plot to overthrow a king or government. It appears as a technical term in the political narratives of Kings and Chronicles, frequently in the formulaic expression 'he conspired a conspiracy' (qashar qesher), as with Zimri against Elah (1 Kgs 16:20), Jehu against Joram (2 Kgs 15:15), and Hoshea against Pekah (2 Kgs 15:30). Queen Athaliah shouts 'Conspiracy! Conspiracy!' upon discovering the coup in her favor has failed (2 Kgs 11:14). Jeremiah and Ezekiel extend the term to prophetic conspiracies against God's people (Jer 11:9; Ezek 22:25). Isaiah warns against labeling every threat a 'conspiracy' (Isa 8:12). French 'conspiration' and Spanish 'conspiracion' preserve the political gravity of the term.

conspiracy (16×) A conspiracy or treasonous plot against a ruler or established authority, the exclusive sense of קֶשֶׁר across all sixteen occurrences. It serves as a political-historical term in the regicide narratives of Kings (1 Kgs 16:20; 2 Kgs 12:21; 14:19; 15:15, 30; 17:4), with Athaliah's panicked cry of 'Conspiracy!' at the Joash coronation coup being its most dramatic use (2 Kgs 11:14). Prophetic texts extend it to conspiracies among false prophets (Ezek 22:25) and Judahite apostasy (Jer 11:9), while Isaiah 8:12 counsels against conspiracy-thinking. CONSPIRACY

en: a-conspiracy, and-his-conspiracy, conspiracy | es: Conspiración, Conspiración-de, conspiración | fr: [קשר], conspiracy, conspiration | de: [קשר], conspiracy, der-conspiracy 2Sam 15:12; 1Kgs 16:20; 2Kgs 11:14; 2Kgs 12:20

קִשֻּׁרִים H7196 Conj-w (2×)

sash, band, ornamental belt or headband worn by women

This term designates an ornamental sash or band worn by women as part of their attire. Isaiah 3:20 lists it among the finery that will be removed from the proud women of Jerusalem in judgment —headbands, sashes, scarves, and other adornments. Jeremiah 2:32 uses it in a rhetorical question: 'Can a maiden forget her ornaments, or a bride her sashes?' The implied answer is no—these are cherished, identity-defining accessories. Yet Israel has forgotten her God, more forgetful than any bride of her wedding attire.

(2×) The glosses show some variation in specificity: Spanish 'cintas/cinturones' (ribbons/belts), English 'sashes,' French references the Hebrew. Both contexts associate these items with women's valued possessions—the luxury items targeted for removal in Isaiah's judgment (3:20) and the unthinkable-to-forget bridal accessories in Jeremiah's metaphor (2:32). The term captures feminine adornment that's both decorative and identity-marking. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-sashes, her-sashes | es: de-sus-cintas?, y-los-cinturones | fr: [והקשרים], [קשריה] | de: [והקשרים], [קשריה] Isa 3:20; Jer 2:32

קָשַׁשׁ H7197a V-Piel-Prtcpl-fs (6×)

To gather or collect stubble, sticks, or firewood — a Piel denominative verb describing menial foraging labor.

A denominative Piel verb from qash ('stubble'), describing the laborious gathering of sticks, stubble, or chaff, typically by those in dire circumstances. In Exodus 5:7-12, Pharaoh's cruelty forces the Israelites to scatter across Egypt gathering stubble for brick-making — a scene that epitomizes oppressive servitude. In Numbers 15:32-33, the man gathering sticks on the Sabbath becomes a test case for Sabbath law. The widow of Zarephath, gathering two sticks to prepare a final meal before death (1 Kgs 17:10, 12), presents perhaps the most poignant image: survival reduced to the smallest possible unit of fuel.

to gather, collect (Piel: sticks, stubble) (6×) To gather, collect (sticks, stubble, firewood) — foraging for combustible materials or raw goods, often under duress or poverty. Spanish 'recoger' (to gather, pick up) and French 'rassembler' (to assemble, collect) both convey the basic collecting action. The Israelite slaves gather stubble for bricks under Pharaoh's oppression (Exod 5:7, 12), making it a verb of forced labor. In the wilderness, a man is caught gathering sticks on the Sabbath (Num 15:32-33), establishing a legal precedent. The widow of Zarephath gathering two sticks for her last fire (1 Kgs 17:10, 12) makes this verb an emblem of extreme poverty and trust. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-let-them-gather, gathering, to-gather | es: para-recoger, que-recogía, recogiendo | fr: et-que-eux-rassembler, rassemblant, à-rassembler | de: gathering, und-lass-ihnen-sammeln, versammelnd Exod 5:7; Exod 5:12; Num 15:32; Num 15:33; 1Kgs 17:10

קָשַׁשׁ H7197b V-Hitpael-Imp-mp (2×)

gather together, assemble (uncertain; possibly textual corruption)

This doubtful verb appears only in Zephaniah 2:1 in an unusual doubled imperative form. Traditional interpretation takes it as 'gather yourselves together,' calling the nation to assemble, possibly for repentance. However, the verbal root is otherwise known only for gathering stubble or sticks, making this sense here questionable. Many scholars suspect textual corruption and propose reading a different verb meaning 'be ashamed' based on similar-looking letters. The translation uncertainty reflects the hapax nature and contextual oddity of the form.

(2×) Translation evidence splits between those preserving 'gather' (Spanish 'juntaos/congregaos,' English 'gather yourselves together/gather') and those suggesting corruption. The doubled form in Zephaniah 2:1 creates emphasis but also suspicion—why use an obscure root meaning 'gather sticks' for a national assembly? The context calls for repentance before judgment, which could fit either gathering for corporate response or feeling shame, depending on which textual reading one follows. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gather, gather-yourselves-together | es: Juntaos, y-congregaos | fr: et-ramasser, ramasser | de: [התקוששו], [וקושו] Zeph 2:1

קֶשֶׁת H7198 Prep-b (76×)

Bow — a weapon for shooting arrows in warfare or hunting; also the rainbow as God's covenantal sign in the sky.

In the Hebrew Bible, qesheth most often refers to the warrior's bow, a primary weapon of ancient Near Eastern combat. The bow symbolizes military strength (Gen 49:24; 1 Sam 2:4) and its breaking signifies divine disarmament (Hos 1:5; Ps 46:9). In four memorable passages, however, the same word denotes the rainbow — God's bow set in the clouds as the sign of His covenant never again to destroy the earth by flood (Gen 9:13-16; Ezek 1:28). Most languages use a single term for both, though several translations distinguish the celestial sense with a compound like 'rainbow.'

1. bow (weapon) (72×) The weapon bow used to shoot arrows in battle or hunting. This is the dominant sense across 72 occurrences, confirmed by translations uniformly rendering it as a weapon: Spanish 'arco,' French 'arc,' German 'Bogen.' It represents military might — Joseph's bow remained strong (Gen 49:24), Jonathan's bow never turned back (2 Sam 1:22), and God breaks the bow to end war (Ps 46:9). The 'Song of the Bow' (2 Sam 1:18) is David's lament for the fallen warrior. BOW WEAPON RAINBOW

en: bow, the-bow | es: Arco, arco | fr: arc, le-arc | de: Bogen, der-Bogen Gen 49:24; 1Sam 2:4; 1Sam 18:4; 1Sam 31:3; 2Sam 1:18

2. rainbow (bow in sky) (4×) The rainbow, God's bow placed in the clouds as a covenant sign after the Flood. Found in Genesis 9:13-16 and Ezekiel 1:28, the multilingual evidence shows some languages use the same word as the weapon bow while others employ a distinct compound ('rainbow' in English, 'arco iris' in some Spanish renderings). The possessive 'my bow' (Gen 9:13) frames the rainbow as God's own weapon, now hung up in the sky as a pledge of peace. BOW WEAPON RAINBOW

en: my-bow, the-bow | es: el-arco, mi-arco | fr: arc, le-arc, mon-arc | de: Bogen, der-Bogen, meinen-Bogen Gen 9:13; Gen 9:14; Gen 9:16; Ezek 1:28

קַשָּׁת H7199 N-ms (1×)

Bowman, archer; a term for one skilled in shooting arrows, appearing in Genesis 21:20 about Ishmael

This masculine noun refers to a skilled archer or bowman, appearing once in the description of Ishmael's development in Genesis 21:20. The text says 'he became a bowman' after growing up in the wilderness, highlighting archery as both a survival skill and a defining characteristic of desert peoples. Scholarly discussion centers on whether the Hebrew text should be emended to match a form found in Jeremiah 4:29, but the general sense of expertise with the bow remains clear. For Ishmael, growing up in the Paran wilderness, mastery of archery would have been essential for hunting and protection.

(1×) Genesis 21:20 describes Ishmael's maturation: 'he grew up and lived in the wilderness and became a bowman.' The translations consistently render this as referring to archery skill—Spanish arco (bow/arch), German Bogens (bow's), French arc. BDB notes textual uncertainty with the form, suggesting possible emendation to match 'one shooting the bow' from Jeremiah 4:29. Regardless of the precise form, Ishmael's identity as a wilderness archer foreshadows the nomadic, martial character of his descendants in biblical tradition. BOW WEAPON RAINBOW

en: the-bow | es: arco | fr: le-arc | de: des-Bogens Gen 21:20

רָאָה H7200 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs (1314×)

To see, perceive, look at; (Nifal) appear, be seen; (Hifil) show; (Hofal) be shown; as participle, a seer or prophet.

One of the most frequent verbs in the Hebrew Bible, ra'ah spans the full arc from physical eyesight to spiritual perception and divine revelation. In the Qal it means to see or perceive — whether Hagar seeing a well, or God seeing that light was good (Gen 1:4). The Nifal conveys appearing or becoming visible, as when the LORD appeared to Abram (Gen 12:7). The Hifil turns the verb causative — to show someone something — while the Hofal marks the passive of that causative, 'to be shown.' The participle roeh became a title for a prophetic seer (1 Sam 9:9), bridging physical sight and spiritual insight.

1. Qal: to see, perceive (1257×) The vast core of the verb in all Qal forms: seeing, observing, perceiving, experiencing. Multilingual translations consistently use basic sight verbs — Spanish vio, French vit, German sah, Korean boda, Swahili kuona. Covers everything from 'God saw the light' (Gen 1:4) to 'I have seen affliction' (Lam 3:1), including metaphorical seeing as understanding. SEEING AND

PERCEIVING
en: And-saw, and-he-saw, and-saw | es: Y-vio, y-vio, y-vio- | fr: Et-vit, et-elle-vit, et-il-vit | de: und-er-sah, und-sah, und-sah- Gen 1:4; Gen 1:10; Gen 1:18; Gen 1:25; Gen 6:12

2. Nifal: to appear, be seen (29×) Nifal (passive/reflexive): to appear or be seen. Theophanic language dominates — 'the LORD appeared to Abram' (Gen 12:7), 'he appeared to Isaac' (Gen 26:2). Spanish aparecer, French apparaitre, Swahili kuonekana all distinguish this from active seeing, reflecting the shift to divine self-disclosure. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: and-he-shall-be-seen, and-he-will-appear, and-it-shall-be-shown | es: a-aparecer, a-comparecer, a-ver | fr: –apparaître, –être-vu, devra-apparaître | de: der-eins-erscheinend, er-sieht, sah Gen 8:5; Gen 12:7; Gen 22:14; Gen 35:1; Exod 23:15

3. Qal participle: seer, prophet (13×) The Qal active participle used substantively as a title: roeh, 'seer.' First Samuel 9:9 explicitly glosses the term: 'the one who is now called a prophet was formerly called a seer.' Arabic ra'iy, Korean boneun ja, Swahili mwonaji preserve the participial origin linking vision to prophetic office. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: it, my-Seer, one-seeing | es: el-que-la-ve, el-que-me-ve, el-que-ve | fr: le-seeing, le-voyant, mon-Seer | de: der-seeing, eins-seeing, er-mich-gesehen-hat Gen 16:13; Exod 22:10; Num 14:22; Deut 11:7; Judg 19:30

4. Hifil: to show, cause to see (11×) Hifil (causative): to show or cause someone to see. God shows Moses the land (Deut 34:1), Moses asks 'show me your glory' (Exod 33:18). Arabic ara (Form IV), Korean boyeojuda, Swahili kuonyesha all use dedicated causative morphology, confirming the stem-level distinction. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: I-will-show-you, You-have-shown, and-he-showed-him | es: Muéstranos, Y-le-mostró, hiciste-ver | fr: Je—montrer-tu, et-il-fera-que-moi-vois, et-il-montra-lui | de: ich-dir-zeigen-werde, sah, und-er-wird-lass-mich-siehe Gen 12:1; Exod 33:18; Deut 34:1; Josh 5:6; Judg 1:24

5. (3×) A specialized Qal sense: to see to a matter, to provide. Most memorably in Gen 22:8, 'God will provide (yir'eh) for himself the lamb,' which becomes the place-name YHWH-Yireh (Gen 22:14). Spanish proveerá captures this providential nuance where seeing shades into provision and care. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: he-shall-see, see, will-see | es: proveerá, verá | fr: –voir, il-verra, voir | de: fuerchtete, sehen, wird-sich-ersehen- Gen 22:8; Job 20:17; Ezek 12:12

6. (1×) Hofal (passive causative): to be shown or made to see. In Exod 26:30 Moses is told to erect the tabernacle 'according to the pattern which you were shown on the mountain.' Spanish te fue mostrado and the Hofal morphology both mark the double passivization — being caused to see by God. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: you-were-shown | es: te-fue-mostrado | fr: tu-étaient-shown | de: du-waren-shown Exod 26:30

רְאָה H7201 Conj-w (1×)
Red kite or similar bird of prey; forbidden as unclean food in Deuteronomy's dietary laws
This feminine noun denotes a species of bird of prey, possibly the red kite, appearing in Deuteronomy 14:13 within the list of prohibited foods. The name may derive from the bird's characteristic swooping or flying behavior. Related forms appear in Leviticus 11:14, and scholars debate whether this represents one species or overlapping terms for different raptors. Ancient translations and rabbinic tradition associate it with various birds of prey—kites, buzzards, or falcons—all sharing the common feature of being carnivorous hunters forbidden under Levitical purity laws.

(1×) In Deuteronomy 14:13, this bird appears in the catalog of unclean flying creatures. The Hebrew text shows some textual variation, and scholars suggest that the similar-sounding terms in the list may represent scribal confusion or dialect variants. English 'red kite' and Spanish milano (kite) identify a specific raptor known for its aerial agility. The prohibition reflects the broader principle that carnivorous birds, which consume blood and carrion, were considered ritually unclean for Israel's diet—maintaining symbolic boundaries between life and death in their eating practices. AUTO-DETECTED
COMMUNITY 5702 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-the-red-kite | es: y-el-milano | fr: et-le-red-kite | de: und-der-rot-kite Deut 14:13

רָאֵה H7202 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)
See; an unusual imperative form in Job 10:15, textually uncertain and possibly requiring emendation
This form appears as a conjunction plus an imperative 'and see' in Job 10:15, though the textual situation is complicated. Job is describing his miserable condition, but the command 'see my affliction' sits awkwardly in the context, leading many scholars to propose emendations. The Masoretic punctuation suggests an imperative form, but this doesn't fit Job's lament smoothly. Proposed alternatives include reading it as a participle ('and seeing') or emending to 'drenched with affliction.' The multilingual evidence shows translators wrestling with the difficulty—some rendering 'seeing,' others treating it as a verb form describing Job's overwhelmed state.

(1×) Job 10:15 contains this problematic form in a passage expressing Job's anguish: 'If I am wicked, woe to me! And if righteous, I cannot lift my head—filled with disgrace and see/seeing my affliction.' The grammar is awkward, which has generated numerous scholarly proposals for textual correction. Some suggest reading it as 'drenched with affliction' following Lagarde, while others maintain the imperative force awkwardly directed at God or as an internal self-address. The textual difficulty reflects the broader challenge of Job's poetry, which sometimes pushes Hebrew syntax to expressive extremes. BEHOLD (PARTICLE) en: and-see | es: y-viendo | fr: et-וראה | de: und-sah Job 10:15

רֹאֶה H7203a Art / N-ms (5×)
seer, one who sees (archaic title for a prophet)
An older title for a prophet, explicitly glossed as archaic by the narrator in 1 Samuel 9:9: 'the one who is today called a prophet was formerly called a seer.' All five occurrences cluster in the story of Saul seeking Samuel to find his father's lost donkeys. The term emphasizes the prophet's visionary capacity, the ability to perceive what is hidden. Spanish 'el vidente' preserves this visual root precisely. In Chronicles the title resurfaces as a deliberate archaism honoring Samuel's era.

(5×) The archaic prophetic title designating one who receives divine revelation through vision. The narrator of 1 Samuel explicitly marks it as the old word replaced by navi ('prophet'), and all five occurrences in this batch belong to the Samuel narrative (1 Sam 9:9, 11, 18, 19). Multilingual renderings uniformly translate the visionary meaning: Spanish 'el vidente,' French 'le seer,' showing consistent recognition of the seeing function rather than the speaking function of prophecy. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: the-seer | es: el-vidente | fr: le-seer | de: der-seer 1Sam 9:9; 1Sam 9:11; 1Sam 9:18; 1Sam 9:19

לְרֹאֶה H7203b Prep-b (1×)
In vision; describes the prophetic state in Isaiah 28:7 where priests reel in their prophetic visions
This masculine noun phrase means 'in vision' or 'in their vision,' appearing in Isaiah 28:7 to describe the compromised state of priests and prophets. The context depicts religious leaders so intoxicated that they 'reel in vision' and 'stumble in judgment'—their prophetic sight is clouded by drunkenness. This is a devastating critique: the very faculty that should provide divine guidance (prophetic vision) has been corrupted. The parallel structure with 'stumble in judgment' emphasizes that both seeing (vision) and deciding (judgment) have been impaired by moral failure.

(1×) Isaiah 28:7 condemns Judah's leaders: 'These also reel with wine and stagger with strong drink; priest and prophet reel with strong drink... they reel in vision, they stumble in judgment.' The phrase 'in vision' (לָרֹאֶה) describes the very moment when prophets should be receiving divine revelation, yet they're too drunk to function.

Spanish 'en la visión' and the prepositional construction emphasize the locational sense—they are foundering at the precise point where they should be most clear-sighted. This is prophetic irony at its sharpest: those tasked with seeing God's word are blind with wine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-vision | es: en-la-visión | fr: [בראה] | de: [בראה] Isa 28:7

רֹאֶה H7204 Art / N-ms (1×)

The seer; likely a personal name or title in 1 Chronicles 2:52, though text and interpretation are uncertain

This proper name or title appears in 1 Chronicles 2:52 within a genealogical list of Judah's descendants. BDB cross-references it to another name (Reaiah), suggesting possible textual variants or alternative forms. The term is related to the root meaning 'to see' and could function as either a personal name or a title meaning 'seer' (a term for prophets). Genealogical lists in Chronicles often contain names that appear nowhere else in Scripture, making verification difficult. The translations treat it variously as a name or descriptive term.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 2:52, this appears as 'Shobal the father of Kiriath-jearim had sons: Haroeh...' The English 'the seer' suggests understanding it as a title or descriptive name meaning 'one who sees.' Some manuscripts show variation, and the relationship to 'Reaiah' (another name from the root ראה, 'to see') complicates identification. The genealogical context provides little narrative detail—we know only that this person (or position) belonged to the lineage of Judah through Caleb's line, connected to Kiriath-jearim's founding families. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-seer | es: el-que-ve | fr: [הראה] | de: [הראה] 1Chr 2:52

רְאוּבֵן H7205 Prep-k / N-proper-ms (72×)

Reuben — 'behold, a son!'; Jacob's firstborn by Leah, and the Israelite tribe settled in Transjordan.

Reuben is the name of Jacob's firstborn son, borne by Leah, whose naming etymology plays on the phrase re'u ben ('behold, a son!'), though Genesis 29:32 connects it instead to God's seeing (ra'ah) her affliction. As firstborn, Reuben held the birthright — yet forfeited preeminence by defiling his father's bed (Gen 35:22; 49:3-4; 1 Chr 5:1). The tribe of Reuben received territory east of the Jordan alongside Gad and half-Manasseh (Num 32; Josh 13:15-23), rich pastureland suited to their considerable livestock. Deborah's song delivers a memorable reproach: Reuben's 'searchings of heart' kept the tribe from joining the fight against Sisera (Judg 5:15-16). In Ezekiel's eschatological vision, Reuben receives a restored allotment (Ezek 48:6-7, 31). Spanish Ruben, French Ruben, and German Ruben all transliterate directly.

Reuben (person and tribe) (72×) The proper name Reuben, designating (a) Jacob's firstborn son by Leah, named with a wordplay on 'behold, a son' and 'God has seen my affliction' (Gen 29:32; 35:22; 49:3-4), (b) the Israelite tribe descended from him and their Transjordanian territory east of the Dead Sea (Num 32; Josh 13:15-23; Deut 33:6), and (c) the tribal allotment in Ezekiel's eschatological vision (Ezek 48:6-7). Despite losing the birthright (1 Chr 5:1), Reuben retains his place in all tribal lists. All languages transliterate the name directly. REUBEN TRIBE PERSON

en: Reuben | es: Reuven, Reuvén, Rubén | fr: Ruben | de: Ruben, Rubens Gen 29:32; Gen 30:14; Gen 35:22; Gen 35:23; Gen 37:21

רְאוּבִנִי H7206 Art / N-proper-ms (18×)

Reubenite — a member or descendant of the tribe of Reuben, Israel's firstborn son

This gentilic adjective identifies persons belonging to the tribe of Reuben, Jacob's firstborn. The Reubenites received their territorial allotment east of the Jordan in the Transjordan tableland (Deut 3:12, 16; Josh 13:8). They appear regularly alongside the Gadites and the half-tribe of Manasseh as the three Transjordanian tribes who crossed the Jordan armed to help conquer Canaan (Josh 1:12; 22:1). Reubenite territory later fell to Moabite and Assyrian encroachment (2 Kgs 10:33; 1 Chr 5:26). The term occurs with the article as a collective noun or without it for individuals (1 Chr 11:42).

Reubenite (gentilic) (18×) A gentilic designating members of the tribe of Reuben, used both of individuals (1 Chr 11:42) and collectively with the article for the entire clan. The Reubenites settled east of the Jordan (Deut 3:12; Josh 13:8), frequently mentioned together with the Gadites and half-tribe of Manasseh. Their territory was exposed to foreign incursion: Hazael's raids (2 Kgs 10:33) and eventual Assyrian exile under Tiglath-pileser (1 Chr 5:26). REUBEN TRIBE PERSON

en: and-the-Reubenites, and-to-the-Reubenite, for-the-Reubenite | es: Y-a-los-rubenitas, a-los-reubenitas, a-los-rubenitas | fr: [הראובני], [לראובני], et-le-Reubenites | de: der-Reuvenite, der-Rubeniter, fuer-den-Rubeniter Num 26:7; Num 34:14; Deut 3:12; Deut 3:16; Deut 4:43

רָאָה H7207

see, perceive, look at; appear, be seen; provide, consider (primary verb of visual perception)

This is the foundational Hebrew verb for seeing, appearing over 1,300 times throughout Scripture. Beyond physical sight, it encompasses mental perception, divine revelation, and providential care. The verb appears in pivotal moments: God 'seeing' human affliction, Abraham naming the place 'the LORD will see/provide' (Genesis 22:14), and prophets being called 'seers.' Cognate across all Semitic languages, it can mean passive appearance ('be seen') as well as active observation. The breadth from literal eyesight to spiritual insight makes this one of Scripture's most theologically loaded verbs. The Hiphil causative means 'show' or 'let see,' and Niphal passive means 'appear' or 'be seen.'

רְאוּמָה H7208 N-proper-fs (1×)

Reumah; the name of Nahor's concubine in Genesis 22:24, mother of four sons

This proper feminine name belongs to the concubine of Nahor, Abraham's brother, appearing in Genesis 22:24. After listing Nahor's children by his wife Milcah (including Rebekah's father Bethuel), the narrative adds that his concubine Reumah also bore four sons: Tebah, Gaham, Tahash, and Maacah. This genealogical notice extends the family tree of Abraham's relatives, showing the proliferation of Aramean peoples related to Israel. The name's etymology is uncertain, though its inclusion ensures a complete record of Nahor's descendants.

(1×) Genesis 22:24 concludes the genealogy of Nahor: 'His concubine, whose name was Reumah, also bore Tebah, Gaham, Tahash, and Maacah.' The passage situates Reumah within the extended family structure that will later provide a wife for Isaac (Rebekah, granddaughter of Nahor by Milcah). The fourfold list of her sons establishes lineages for several Aramean tribal groups. The name appears consistently across translations (Spanish Reumah, German Reuma, French Reumah), suggesting stable textual transmission even for this minor genealogical detail. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Reumah | es: Reumah | fr: Reumah | de: Reuma Gen 22:24

רְאִי H7209 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

Like a mirror; describes the sky's appearance in Job 37:18, hard and reflective like cast metal

This masculine noun means 'mirror,' appearing once in Job 37:18 as part of a simile describing the sky's appearance. Elihu challenges Job: 'Can you, like him, spread out the skies, hard as a cast metal mirror?' Ancient mirrors were polished metal, not glass, giving them a distinctive bright, hard surface. The comparison suggests both the reflective brilliance of the sky and its seeming solidity—as if the heavens were a firm, beaten metal dome. This image reflects ancient Near Eastern cosmology where the firmament (raqia) was conceived as a solid vault.

(1×) Job 37:18 uses this word to emphasize God's creative power: 'Can you, like him, spread out the skies, hard as a cast metal mirror?' The Hebrew construction 'like a mirror' (כְּרְאִי) paired with 'cast' (מוּצָק) evokes the manufacturing process of ancient mirrors—molten metal poured and hammered into a smooth, reflective surface. Spanish espejo (mirror) captures this. The verse invites Job to recognize the impossibility of human beings replicating God's work—the sky's vastness and radiant appearance lie beyond mortal capability, a humbling reminder of creational hierarchy. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: like-a-mirror | es: como-espejo | fr: comme-כרא | de: [כרא] Job 37:18

רְאִי H7210 N-ms (5×)

seeing, sight; appearance; spectacle

A noun derived from the root 'to see,' spanning three related meanings. In Genesis 16:13, Hagar names God 'El Roi,' the God of seeing, marveling that she has seen the one who sees her. In 1 Samuel 16:12, it describes David's handsome appearance. Job 33:21 uses it for the loss of healthy appearance in sickness, while Nahum 3:6 depicts Nineveh made into a warning spectacle. The word moves from the divine act of seeing to what is seen, and finally to what is displayed for others to see.

(5×) Encompasses seeing (divine perception), appearance (physical look), and spectacle (public display). Genesis 16:13 anchors the active sense: God as the one who sees. Spanish 'Roi' preserves the Hebrew name directly, while 'apariencia' and 'espectáculo' capture the passive senses. The progression from God's seeing (Gen 16:13) to being seen in sickness (Job 33:21) to being made a public spectacle (Nah 3:6) traces a coherent semantic arc from agent to patient of vision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-spectacle, appearance, from-sight | es: Roi, apariencia, como-espectáculo | fr: apparence, de-voyant, de-מרא | de: [כרא], [מרא], [ראי] Gen 16:13; 1Sam 16:12; Job 7:8; Job 33:21; Nah 3:6

רְאָיָה H7211 N-proper-ms (4×)

Reaiah (personal name, 'Yahweh has seen')

This theophoric name, meaning 'Yahweh has seen,' identifies three distinct post-exilic or late individuals: a Judahite, a Reubenite, and a post-exilic returnee. The name reflects the common Hebrew naming pattern invoking divine observation or care. Minor textual variations and Septuagint renderings suggest some manuscript uncertainty.

(4×) Personal name for three individuals: (1) a Judahite in 1 Chronicles 4:2 (possibly identical with Haroeh in 2:52); (2) a Reubenite in 1 Chronicles 5:5; (3) a post-exilic family head in Ezra 2:47 and Nehemiah 7:50 (temple servants). The theophoric element יָהּ/יָ combined with רָאָה ('see') yields 'Yahweh has seen.' Septuagint renderings vary (Ραδα, Ρεια, Ρηχα, Ραια), suggesting textual fluidity in the transmission of genealogical lists. Multilingual glosses primarily transliterate: Spanish 'Reaya/Reaías,' French preserves the Hebrew forms, German likewise—all treating it as an opaque proper name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Re'ayah, Reaiah, Reayah | es: Reaya, Reaías, Reaías. | fr: [וראיה], [ראיה] | de: [וראיה], [ראיה] 1Chr 4:2; 1Chr 5:5; Ezra 2:47; Neh 7:50

רְאוּת H7212 N-fsc (2×)

seeing, sight, looking (what the eyes see)

This feminine noun denotes the act of seeing or what is seen by the eyes. It appears only in Ecclesiastes 5:11 (5:10 English) in the phrase 'the seeing of his eyes'—referring to visual observation or enjoyment of possessions. The Qere/Ketiv variation shows textual uncertainty about the exact form. The context discusses wealth's inability to satisfy: increased goods bring increased consumers, leaving the owner only the sight of his riches with no real benefit. Seeing becomes a hollow substitute for actual enjoyment or security.

(2×) The glosses reflect both the textual variant and semantic understanding: Spanish 'ver,' English 'seeing,' French 'murmure' (suggesting a different interpretation). The doubled form in Ecclesiastes 5:11 likely represents Qere/Ketiv readings of the same word. Qoheleth's point is that visual possession—merely looking at accumulated wealth—provides no real advantage when others consume it, reducing ownership to mere spectatorship of one's own goods. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14541 WITH 3 SENSES

en: [ketiv], seeing-of | es: (ver), [ver] | fr: murmure | de: [(ראות)], [[ראית]] Eccl 5:11

רָאַם H7213 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (1×)

She will be raised; describes Jerusalem's elevation in Zechariah 14:10, possibly a variant of the common root 'to be high'

This verb form appears in Zechariah 14:10 describing the eschatological transformation of Jerusalem's topography. The text envisions the whole land becoming like the Arabah while Jerusalem 'will be raised' and remain elevated in its place. Scholars debate whether this represents a distinct root or is simply a variant spelling of the common verb 'to be high/exalted.' The vision depicts a dramatic geographical reversal—the surrounding land flattened while Jerusalem rises—symbolizing the city's unique status as God's dwelling place in the age to come.

(1×) Zechariah 14:10 prophesies Jerusalem's future: 'All the land shall be turned into a plain... but Jerusalem shall be raised and remain in its place.' The verb describes literal topographical elevation—while surrounding territory becomes flat as the Jordan valley (Arabah), Jerusalem rises above it all. Spanish 'será elevada' (will be elevated) and the other translations consistently convey this upward movement. The theological point is Jerusalem's exaltation: physically higher, symbolically supreme, the place where God's presence will dwell in perpetuity. This fits the broader eschatological vision of Zechariah 14 where all nations stream to Jerusalem. RISING AND DAWNING

en: and-she-will-be-raised | es: y-será-elevada | fr: et-hauteur | de: [וראמה] Zech 14:10

רְאֵם H7214 Prep-k / N-ms (9×)

Wild ox, aurochs (Bos primigenius); a powerful wild bovine symbolizing untamable strength.

The re'em is the now-extinct wild ox or aurochs, a massive bovine whose horns and ferocity made it a potent symbol of strength in ancient Israel. Numbers 23:22 and 24:8 compare God's power delivering Israel to the horns of a re'em. Deuteronomy 33:17 likens Joseph's might to a firstborn bull with re'em horns. Job 39:9-10 asks rhetorically whether anyone can domesticate the wild ox. The Septuagint's monokerōs ('unicorn') is a famous mistranslation that persisted through the Vulgate. Spanish 'búfalo' and French 'buffle' approximate the sense, though the actual referent is the aurochs, not the water buffalo.

wild ox, aurochs (9×) The wild ox or aurochs (Bos primigenius), a large, fierce, untamable bovine now extinct, used as a symbol of overwhelming strength. God's power is compared to its horns (Num 23:22; 24:8), Joseph's tribal might is likened to its gore (Deut 33:17), and Job 39:9-10 uses its wildness to illustrate creatures beyond human control. Psalm 22:22 and 29:6 employ it in imagery of danger and power. The LXX's monokerōs ('unicorn') is a well-known mistranslation. Spanish 'búfalo' and French 'buffle' approximate the animal, while German leaves it untranslated in some occurrences, reflecting the difficulty of identifying the exact species. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: like-a-wild-ox, the-wild-ox, wild-ox | es: búfalo, búfalos, como-de-búfalo | fr: [ראמים], buffle, comme-buffle | de: [ראמים], [רים], [רים] Num 23:22; Num 24:8; Deut 33:17; Job 39:9; Job 39:10

רְאמוֹת H7215 Conj-w / N-fp (2×)

coral, precious marine product (possibly black coral)

This term refers to coral or similar precious marine products valued in the ancient world. Job 28:18 lists coral alongside pearls among precious substances that pale in comparison to wisdom's value. Ezekiel 27:16 mentions it as merchandise in Tyre's extensive trade network. The exact species is debated—possibly black coral rather than the more familiar red variety. What's clear is that these were luxury items imported from distant seas, serving as standards of value in wisdom literature and economic records alike.

(2×) Most translations preserve 'coral': Spanish 'corales/coral,' English 'coral.' The two contexts differ functionally—Job uses coral in a value hierarchy where even precious stones fall short of wisdom's worth (28:18), while Ezekiel catalogs Tyre's trade goods including coral from Syria or Edom (27:16). Both treat coral as a recognized valuable commodity, rare enough to serve as a wealth marker but accessible enough through trade to be known. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: and-coral, coral | es: Corales, y-coral | fr: et-Ramah, רֵאמוֹת | de: [וראמת], [ראמות] Job 28:18; Ezek 27:16

רָ H7216 N-proper-fs (4×)

Ramoth (place name, 'heights')

This place name, meaning 'heights' or 'high places,' most famously designates Ramoth-Gilead, a major Levitical city and city of refuge east of the Jordan. The site was strategically important, contested between Israel and Aram, and featured prominently in the wars of Ahab and Jehu. Textual variations (רָמֹת, רָאמוֹת, רָאמֹת) reflect dialectal or scribal differences.

(4×) Identifies Ramoth in Gilead, a Levitical city of refuge allocated to Gad in Deuteronomy 4:43, Joshua 20:8, and 1 Chronicles 6:73, 80. This is the same site as Ramoth-Gilead (רָמֹת גִּלְעָד) mentioned 19 times in Kings and Chronicles, where Ahab died in battle (1 Kings 22) and Jehu was anointed (2 Kings 9). The name's plural form denotes 'heights,' fitting the elevated terrain of Gilead. Site identification is uncertain; proposals include el-Jalᶜaud northwest of modern Amman. Septuagint renderings (Ραμωθ, Αρημωθ, Ερεμαθ) show transliteration variations. The four occurrences here use the shorter forms רָאמוֹת/רָמֹת without גִּלְעָד. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ramot, Ramoth | es: Ramot | fr: Ramoth, [ראמות] | de: Ramoth, [ראמות] Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; 1Chr 6:73; 1Chr 6:80

רֹאשׁ H7217 Prep-b / N-msc / 3fs (14×)

Head (physical or figurative); chief, leader; the sum or main point of a matter.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew rosh, this word appears almost exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. Most often it simply means the physical head – of Nebuchadnezzar's statue (Dan 2:32), of the Ancient of Days (Dan 7:9), or of a four-headed beast (Dan 7:6). Yet it also serves as the seat of night visions ('the visions of your head upon your bed,' Dan 2:28). In Ezra 5:10 it shifts to 'chief, leader,' confirmed by Hindi 'mukhiya' and Swahili 'viongozi.' In Daniel 7:1 it reaches its most abstract register: the 'sum' or main point of a matter, glossed in Spanish as 'resumen.'

1. head (body part) (12×) The physical head of a person, animal, or visionary figure. Dominant across Daniel's court narratives and apocalyptic visions (Dan 2:32, 38; 3:27; 7:6, 9, 20), with the phrase 'visions of your head' (Dan 2:28; 4:5, 10; 7:1, 15) using 'head' as the bodily seat of dreams. German 'Haupt' and Spanish 'cabeza' confirm the literal reading throughout. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-head, heads, his-head | es: cabeza-de-mí, cabeza-de-él, cabezas | fr: [בראשה], [ראשהון], [ראשין] | de: Haupt Dan 2:28; Dan 2:32; Dan 2:38; Dan 3:27; Dan 4:5

2. chief, leader (1×) Chief or leader – a metaphorical extension of 'head' to denote authority. Used in Ezra 5:10 where names are taken 'at their heads,' meaning from their leaders. Hindi 'mukhiya' (chief) and Swahili 'viongozi' (leaders) independently confirm the social-rank meaning rather than a body-part reading. RULING AND REIGNING

en: at-their-heads | es: en-sus-cabezas. | fr: [בראשיהם] | de: [בראשיהם] Ezra 5:10

3. sum, chief point (1×) The sum, chief point, or essential content of a matter. In Daniel 7:1 the prophet writes 'the sum of the matters,' an abstract sense where 'head' becomes 'gist.' Spanish 'resumen' (summary), Swahili 'muhtasari' (abstract), and Hindi 'mukhya' (main/chief) all point to this distilled, summarizing meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sum-of | es: resumen-de | fr: [ראש] | de: Haupt Dan 7:1

רֹאשׁ H7218a N-mpc / 3fp (598×)

Head (body part); chief or leader; top or summit; military company; beginning; choicest portion; census total

One of the most frequent nouns in the Hebrew Bible, rosh fundamentally denotes the physical head of a person or animal but branches into a remarkably wide semantic range. Because the head is the topmost, foremost, and most prominent part of the body, it naturally extends to mean the top of a mountain, the chief of a tribe, the beginning of a period, and even the sum total of a census. These metaphorical extensions are ancient, attested across Semitic languages from Akkadian reshu to Arabic ra's to Ethiopic re's, and every major translation tradition reflects the branching: Spanish distinguishes cabeza from cima and principio, while Korean separates meori (head) from udumeori (leader) and kkokdaegi (summit).

1. head (anatomical) (311×) The literal, physical head of a human or animal — the default, unmarked sense appearing in roughly 57% of occurrences. Arabic ra's, Spanish cabeza, and German Haupt all converge on the anatomical meaning. Key passages include the baker's dream in Gen 40:20 and Jacob blessing Ephraim by placing his hand on the boy's head (Gen 48:14).

en: from-the-house-of, head-of, head-of- | es: cabecera-de, cabeza-de, de-la-casa-de- | fr: de-la-maison, tête-de, tête-de- | de: Haupt-von, aus-dem-Haus, das-Haupt Gen 40:20; Gen 47:31; Gen 48:14

2. chief, leader, head of group (156×) A chief, leader, or head of a clan, tribe, or administrative unit. The metaphor from body part to authority figure is pan-Semitic (Arabic ra'is, Swahili mkuu/kiongozi, Korean udumeori). Prominent in the genealogical registers of Chronicles (1 Chr 5:7, 5:24) where tribal leaders are enumerated by their headship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: heads, heads-of | es: cabezas, cabezas-de | fr: tête | de: Haupt 1Chr 5:7; 1Chr 5:12; 1Chr 5:24; 1Chr 7:2

3. top, summit, peak (70×) The top, summit, or peak of a physical object — a mountain, pillar, tree, or tower. Korean kkokdaegi, Spanish cima/cumbre, and Swahili kilele all distinguish this spatial sense from the body-part meaning. Moses standing on the top of the hill with the staff of God (Exod 17:9-10) and the cloud covering Sinai's summit (Exod 19:20) are defining passages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: top-of | es: a-la-cima-de, cabeza-de, cabeza-de- | fr: sommet-de, top-de | de: Gipfel-von, Spitze-von Exod 17:9; Exod 17:10; Exod 19:20; Exod 24:17

4. chief, leader (metaphorical) (32×) A military company, division, or raiding band, typically in the plural. Judges 7:16 describes Gideon dividing three hundred men into three rashim (companies), and Judg 9:34-43 narrates Abimelech's tactical deployment of multiple bands. Arabic firaq, Korean budae, and Spanish divisiones confirm this specialized military sense.

en: a-head, among-heads-of, at-head-of | es: a-la-cabeza-de, a-la-cabeza-del, cabeza | fr: chief-de, dans-tête, le-tête | de: Gift, Haupt, Haupt-von Exod 12:2; Num 1:4; Num 14:4; Num 25:15; Deut 1:13

5. company, division, band (13×) A military company, division, or raiding band, typically in the plural. Judges 7:16 describes Gideon dividing three hundred men into three rashim (companies), and Judg 9:34-43 narrates Abimelech's tactical deployment of multiple bands. Arabic firaq, Korean budae, and Spanish divisiones confirm this specialized military sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-company-, and-the-companies, and-the-company | es: La-división, Y-la-división, cabezas | fr: compagnies, companies, divisions | de: Haupt, companies, der-companies Judg 7:16; Judg 7:20; Judg 9:34; Judg 9:37; Judg 9:43

6. beginning, first (11×) The beginning or first of a temporal or ordinal sequence. The head of time is its start: Prov 8:23 places Wisdom at the rosh of God's works, and Num 10:10 prescribes trumpet blasts at the rosh of months. Swahili mwanzo, Arabic bidaya, and Korean cheoeumbuteo all render this as 'beginning' rather than 'head.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-beginnings-of, and-at-heads-of, and-the-first | es: Y-en-cabezas-de, al-principio, cabeza-de | fr: commencement-de, de-tête, et-tête | de: Anfang-von, Haupt, und-Haupt Num 10:10; Num 28:11; Judg 7:19; 1Chr 16:7; Prov 8:23

7. chief, choicest, principal amount (2×) The choicest, finest, or principal quality of a substance, or the principal amount of a debt. In Lev 6:5 and Num 5:7, rosh refers to the principal capital that must be restored plus a fifth. Hindi uttam (best) and Swahili bora (finest) reflect the qualitative metaphor from 'head' to 'prime.' FIRST AND FOREMOST en: in-its-principal | es: en-cabeza-de-él, en-principal-suyo | fr: dans-son-principal | de: in-sein-principal Lev 6:5; Num 5:7

8. sum, total, census count (2×) The sum or total obtained by counting heads — a census figure. The idiom naso et rosh ('lift up the head') means 'take a census.' Ps 139:17 uses rosh for the sum of God's thoughts, and Ps 119:160 speaks of the sum (rosh) of God's word being truth. Swahili jumla and Korean hapgye both render this as 'total.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-sum-of, their-sum | es: Suma-de, sus-sumas | fr: tête | de: der-sum-von, ihr-sum Ps 119:160; Ps 139:17

רֹאשׁ H7218b N-proper-fs (3×)

Rosh, ethnic or geographical name (possibly 'chief' as title)

Rosh appears in Ezekiel's prophecy against Gog as either an ethnic designation or possibly as the title 'chief.' The phrase 'prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal' could mean 'chief prince of Meshech and Tubal' or identify Rosh as a separate people group alongside Meshech and Tubal. Most ancient translations (including the Septuagint's 'Ρως') treat it as a proper name of an otherwise unidentified nation, though some interpreters prefer reading it as the Hebrew word for 'head/chief.'

(3×) The term appears three times in Ezekiel 38-39 in the title 'Gog, prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal.' If a proper name, Rosh designates an unknown northern people group allied with Meshech (Mushki/Phrygians) and Tubal. If read as the common noun 'head,' it would mean 'chief prince' rather than naming a distinct nation. The Septuagint's transliteration as a name (Ρως) supports the ethnic interpretation, though no clear historical identification has been established. The ambiguity persists because Hebrew 'rosh' (head/chief) is also a common word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chief | es: cabeza-de | fr: [ראש] | de: [ראש] Ezek 38:2; Ezek 38:3; Ezek 39:1

רֹאשׁ H7219 Conj-w / N-ms (12×)

A bitter, poisonous plant; by extension poison, venom, or gall – always used figuratively for bitterness or judgment

Refers to a toxic plant or its extracted poison, consistently deployed in Scripture as a metaphor for bitter judgment, corrupted justice, or divine wrath. Deuteronomy 29:18 warns against a root bearing 'poison and wormwood,' while Amos 6:12 accuses Israel of turning justice 'into poison.' The pairing with wormwood (la'anah) in Lamentations 3:19 and Jeremiah 9:15 creates one of the Bible's most vivid images of anguish. Spanish 'veneno' (poison) and 'hiel' (gall/bile) together capture the spectrum from lethal toxin to bitter taste. One occurrence (Job 20:16) may reflect confusion with the homonym rosh meaning 'head.'

1. poison, venom, gall (10×) Poison, venom, or gall – a toxic or bitter substance used figuratively for divine judgment, corrupted justice, or intense suffering. Deuteronomy 32:33 speaks of 'the venom of serpents,' Psalm 69:21 of being given 'poison' for food, and Amos 6:12 of justice turned 'into poison.' The frequent pairing with wormwood (Deut 29:18; Lam 3:19; Jer 9:15; 23:15) establishes a stock image of bitterness. Spanish 'veneno/hiel/ponzona' and French 'poison' consistently render the toxicity, while German 'Gift' (poison) confirms the primary sense across traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gall, and-poison-of, into-poison | es: de-veneno, en-veneno, hiel | fr: et-poison-de, et-tête, poison | de: Gift, Haupt, poison Deut 29:18; Deut 32:32; Deut 32:33; Ps 69:21; Jer 8:14

2. head, chief (homonym confusion) (1×) An apparent conflation with the homonym rosh I ('head, chief') at Job 20:16. English 'the head of,' Arabic 'ra'sa' (head), and Korean 'meori-reul' (head) all translate as though the word means 'head' rather than 'poison,' though the context – sucking the venom of cobras – strongly favors the poisonous sense. This cluster likely reflects disambiguation difficulty rather than a genuine distinct meaning of rosh II. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-head-of | es: Cabeza-de- | fr: ראש | de: Haupt Job 20:16

3. poisonous plant, venomous herb (1×) A poisonous plant or venomous herb as a botanical entity, focusing on the growing plant rather than the extracted substance. Hosea 10:4 describes judgment sprouting 'like a poisonous plant in the furrows of the field.' Spanish 'como hierba venenosa' (like a poisonous herb) and English 'like poisonous plant' capture the image of toxic vegetation growing wild where justice should flourish – a vivid agrarian metaphor for moral corruption. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-poisonous-plant | es: como-hierba-venenosa | fr: poison | de: [כראש] Hos 10:4

רֹאשׁ H7220 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Rosh; listed as one of Benjamin's sons in Genesis 46:21, though absent from other genealogical lists

This proper masculine name appears in Genesis 46:21 as one of Benjamin's ten sons who went down to Egypt with Jacob. Interestingly, parallel genealogies in Numbers 26 and 1 Chronicles 7-8 do not include Rosh, leading some scholars to suggest textual variants or that some names represent sub-clans rather than literal sons. The name means 'head' or 'chief' in Hebrew, which could indicate either a personal name or a tribal designation. Its singular appearance makes it difficult to trace Rosh's descendants or determine whether it represents a lasting family line within Benjamin.

(1×) Genesis 46:21 lists Benjamin's sons in the family migration to Egypt: 'The sons of Benjamin: Bela, Becher, Ashbel, Gera, Naaman, Ehi, Rosh, Muppim, Huppim, and Ard—ten in all.' The name Rosh (רֹאשׁ) appears uniformly in translations but is notably absent from later genealogical reckonings. This could indicate early mortality, absorption into another clan, or textual variation. The Greek Septuagint renders it as Ρως. The name's meaning—'head' or 'chief'—may have originated as a nickname or honorary title that became formalized as a clan name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Rosh | es: y-Rosh | fr: et-Rosh | de: und-Rosch Gen 46:21

רֹאשָׁה H7221 Prep-m / N-fpc / 2mp (1×)

Your beginnings; refers to earlier times or former states in Ezekiel 36:11, used to compare past and future blessings

This feminine plural noun with suffix means 'your beginnings' or 'your early times,' appearing once in Ezekiel 36:11. God promises to restore Israel such that the future will surpass the past: 'I will make you more prosperous than your beginnings.' The term captures the concept of original conditions or starting points—in this case, likely referring to Israel's early prosperity in the land before exile. The promise isn't merely restoration to former levels but exceeding them, demonstrating God's abundant grace beyond mere return to square one.

(1×) Ezekiel 36:11 contains God's restoration promise: 'I will multiply people and animals upon you, and they shall multiply and be fruitful. I will cause you to be inhabited as in your former times, and will do more good to you than at your beginnings.' The phrase 'than your beginnings' (מֵרֵאשִׁתֵיכֶם) invites comparison between past and future—what was good before will be surpassed. Spanish 'más que vuestros principios' (more than your beginnings) catches this comparative sense. The verse promises not just return from exile but enhancement—proof that God's purposes ultimately lead to blessing beyond the original state. TIME AND SEASONS

en: than-your-beginnings | es: más-que-vuestros-principios; | fr: début | de: [מראשתיכם] Ezek 36:11

רֹאשָׁה H7222 Art / N-fs (1×)

top, summit; specifically the topmost or crowning stone of a structure

This rare term denotes the uppermost part or summit of something. In its sole biblical appearance (Zechariah 4:7), it refers to the capstone or top stone of the rebuilt temple—the final, crowning piece placed with celebration. The multilingual evidence (English "the-top," Spanish "la-principal," French "le-sa-tête") captures both the literal height and the figurative importance of this culminating element. The prophet's vision emphasizes not human achievement but divine enablement: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit."

(1×) The topmost stone or capstone of a building, particularly the temple. Zechariah 4:7 presents this in a vision of Zerubbabel completing the temple reconstruction, where the capstone symbolizes the completion of God's work. The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize both elevation ("top") and preeminence ("principal"), reflecting the stone's dual significance as physically highest and symbolically most important. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-top | es: la-principal | fr: le-sa-tête | de: [הראשה] Zech 4:7

רִאשׁוֹן H7223 Prep-b (182×)

First, former, chief; as adjective: first in sequence or time; substantively: former things, ancestors, the beginning

Derived from the root r-'-sh ('head'), this adjective ranges from simple ordinal numbering ('the first month,' Exod 12:15) to the theologically loaded 'former things' of Isaiah's prophecy (Isa 41:22; 43:18). It can look backward to ancestors and earlier generations (Lev 26:45; Deut 4:32) or serve as an adverb meaning 'at first, in the beginning.' The comparative construction with kaph — 'as at the first' — carries a note of restoration, longing for return to an original state (Deut 9:18; Isa 1:26). Arabic awwal and Korean cheot-beonjjae both confirm the dual temporal-ordinal range.

1. first (ordinal sequence) (107×) Straightforward ordinal 'first' in a sequence — first month, first day, first son. Arabic awwal and Korean 첫째/첫번째 match precisely. This is the dominant usage (107 of 182 occurrences), anchoring calendrical and genealogical lists throughout the Pentateuch and historical books (Gen 25:25; Exod 12:15). FIRST AND FOREMOST en: the-first | es: el-primero, la-primera, primero | fr: le-premier | de: dem-ersten, der-Erste, der-erste Gen 25:25; Gen 26:1; Gen 32:17; Exod 4:8; Exod 12:15

2. former (previous in time) (33×) Adjective meaning 'former' or 'previous,' contrasting an earlier state with a present or later one. Hosea 2:9 uses it for the wife's 'former husband,' and Haggai 2:3 for the 'former glory' of the temple. Arabic sābiq ('preceding') and Spanish anterior capture this temporal-comparative nuance. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: the-chief, the-first, the-former | es: la-primera, los-primeros, primera | fr: le-premier, premier | de: der-erste, der-erster, erster Gen 40:13; Num 6:12; Num 21:26; Deut 10:4; Deut 24:4

3. at first / in the beginning (15×) Adverbial use with prepositions (ba-rishonah, ka-rishonah) meaning 'at first,' 'in the beginning,' or 'in former times.' Gen 13:4 marks the place where Abram had 'at first' built an altar. French au commencement and German zuerst parallel this frozen prepositional usage. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: at-first, at-the-first, in-the-former-time | es: al-principio, antes, en-la-primera-vez | fr: dans-le-former-temps, premier, à-le-premier | de: bei-der-erster, bei-erster, erster Gen 13:4; Gen 28:19; Josh 8:5; Josh 8:6; Josh 8:33

4. as at the first (comparative) (12×) The comparative construction ka-rishon/ka-rishonah — 'as at the first,' 'like the former' — expressing restoration or return to an original condition. Moses' second set of tablets 'like the first' (Exod 34:1) and the prophetic promise of judges 'as at the first' (Isa 1:26) both carry covenantal restoration overtones. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: as-at-first, as-at-the-first, as-the-first | es: como-al-principio, como-el-primero, como-la-primera | fr: comme-le-premier, comme-à-le-premier, comme-à-premier | de: erster, wie-bei-der-erster, wie-bei-erster Exod 34:1; Exod 34:4; Lev 9:15; Deut 9:18; Deut 10:1

5. former ones / ancestors (7×) Substantive masculine plural ha-rishonim, 'the former ones' — ancestors or predecessors. Leviticus 26:45 invokes the covenant of 'the former ones' brought out of Egypt. Deuteronomy 4:32 directs inquiry to 'former days.' The usage personalizes history as the living memory of a people. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: former, former-ones, of-the-former-ones | es: antepasados, de-los-primeros, los-primeros | fr: anciens, former, premier | de: erster, former, former-die Lev 26:45; Deut 4:32; Deut 19:14; 2Chr 22:1; Ps 79:8

6. former things (prophetic) (6×) Substantive feminine plural ha-rishonot, 'the former things' — previous events, prophecies, or divine deeds, concentrated in Isaiah's trial speeches (Isa 41:22; 42:9; 43:9, 18; 46:9). God's ability to declare 'former things' that came true validates new prophecy. A theologically distinctive Isaianic usage. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: The-former-things, and-former-things, former-things | es: Las-primeras-cosas, cosas-primeras, las-cosas-primeras | fr: et-premier, premier | de: erster, und-erster Isa 41:22; Isa 42:9; Isa 43:9; Isa 43:18; Isa 46:9

7. (1×) An isolated occurrence at 1 Chronicles 18:17 where rishonim appears to mean 'chief' or 'leading,' describing David's sons. The English 'chief' and Spanish primeros reflect a rank-based extension from 'first in sequence' to 'first in importance,' paralleling how Arabic awwal can mean 'foremost.' FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: the-chief | es: los-primeros | fr: premier | de: erster 1Chr 18:17

8. (1×) A singular use at Jeremiah 17:12 in the phrase me-rishon, 'from the beginning,' describing the throne of glory as exalted 'from the first.' This absolute temporal sense points to primordial origin, approaching the meaning of Hebrew qedem. Spanish desde el principio and Korean 처음부터 capture the sense well. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: from-beginning | es: desde-el-principio | fr: premier | de: erster Jer 17:12

רִאשֹׁנִי H7224 Art / Number-ofs (1×)

The first; an unusual feminine form in Jeremiah 25:1 likely requiring textual correction to standard spelling

This adjectival form means 'the first' and appears in Jeremiah 25:1 to mark the date when Jeremiah received his message—'the first year' of Jehoiakim's reign. However, the form itself is irregular, and most scholars recommend reading the standard feminine form instead. The date marking is historically significant: Jehoiakim's first year (605 BC) coincides with Nebuchadnezzar's victory at Carchemish and the beginning of Babylonian dominance. This temporal marker anchors Jeremiah's 70-year prophecy of exile, making the precise dating crucial for understanding the prophetic timeline.

(1×) Jeremiah 25:1 dates the oracle: 'The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim... that is, the first year of Nebuchadnezzar.' The phrase 'the first year' (הַשָּׁנָה הָרִאשֹׁנִית) uses an unusual feminine form that textual critics suggest correcting. The historical synchronism is crucial—605 BC marks when Babylon defeated Egypt at Carchemish and established itself as the dominant Near Eastern power. Jeremiah's prophecy of 70 years of servitude begins its countdown from this pivotal moment, making the 'first year' designation theologically and chronologically significant. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: the-first | es: el-primero | fr: [הראשנית] | de: [הראשנית] Jer 25:1

רֵאשִׁית H7225 N-fsc / 3mp (51×)

Beginning, origin; firstfruits or first portion; the chief or choicest part of something

Derived from rosh ('head'), this noun carries the foundational sense of what comes first, whether in time, in a harvest, or in rank. Its most famous appearance is Genesis 1:1, 'In the beginning God created,' establishing temporal primacy. In cultic law, it denotes the firstfruits of grain, dough, and produce offered to God (Exod 23:19; Num 15:20). A third nuance signals preeminence or choicest quality, as when Amos denounces those who anoint themselves with 'the chief oils' (Amos 6:6). The German 'Anfang' and 'Erstlinge' neatly separate the temporal and agricultural senses.

1. firstfruits, first produce (25×) The cultic-agricultural sense of firstfruits, the earliest yield from field, flock, or dough consecrated as an offering to God. Covering 25 occurrences, it appears prominently in laws governing offerings: the firstfruits of wheat harvest (Exod 23:19; 34:26), of coarse meal (Num 15:20-21), and of grain and wine (Deut 18:4). The Spanish 'primicias' and French 'premices' preserve the sacral-agricultural flavor distinctly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-first-of, and-firstfruits-of, first-of | es: De-primicias-de, Lo-primero-de, Primicias-de | fr: [ראשית], commencement, de-firstfruit | de: Anfang, Erstling-von, Erstlinge-von Exod 23:19; Exod 34:26; Lev 2:12; Lev 23:10; Num 15:20

2. beginning, start (21×) The temporal sense of beginning or commencement, anchored by the iconic opening of Scripture: 'In the beginning' (Gen 1:1). It marks the start of kingdoms (Gen 10:10), reigns (Jer 26:1; 28:1), and years (Deut 11:12). Ecclesiastes 7:8 contrasts 'the beginning of a matter' with its end, and Proverbs 1:7 declares 'the fear of the LORD is the beginning of knowledge.' The German 'Anfang' and Spanish 'principio' consistently mark this temporal usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: In-beginning, In-beginning-of, and-beginning-of | es: En-principio, En-principio-de, Principio-de | fr: Au-commencement, commencement, commencement-de | de: Anfang, Anfang-von, Im-Anfang Gen 1:1; Gen 10:10; Gen 49:3; Deut 11:12; Deut 21:17

3. chief, best, choicest (5×) A qualitative sense indicating the chief, best, or most excellent portion, emphasizing rank or quality rather than temporal priority. In Deuteronomy 33:21, the leader's portion is called 'the first part' (i.e., the choicest). Amos 6:1 and 6:6 use it of the 'foremost of nations' and the 'finest oils.' First Samuel 15:21 refers to 'the chief of the devoted things.' The English 'choicest' and Spanish 'la primera' capture this superlative nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-chief-of, and-the-finest-of-, first-portion | es: la-primera-de, la-primera-parte, primicias-de | fr: commencement, et-commencement, firstfruits-de | de: Anfang, [וראשית], erster-Anteil Deut 33:21; 1Sam 15:21; Dan 11:41; Amos 6:1; Amos 6:6

מְרַאֲשֹׁת H7226 N-fpc (1×)

From his head-place; refers to the position at the head where one sleeps, appearing in 1 Samuel 26:12

This feminine plural noun with suffix literally means 'from his head-place,' referring to the area at the head of a sleeping person. It appears in narratives where objects are placed or taken 'at the head' of someone lying down—for instance, Jacob's stone pillow or Saul's spear stuck in the ground. In 1 Samuel 26:12, David takes Saul's spear and water jug 'from his head-place' while the king sleeps. The term designates the upper portion of the sleeping area, where important items might be placed within reach. It's a spatial term with everyday, practical reference.

(1×) In 1 Samuel 26:12, David secretly enters Saul's camp and 'took the spear and the jug of water from Saul's head-place, and they went away.' The phrase describes the precise location—near Saul's head as he slept—where his spear was stuck in the ground and his water jug sat. The text emphasizes David's bold proximity; he comes close enough to take items from beside the king's head without waking him, demonstrating both courage and divine providence (the Lord had put them into deep sleep). The spatial precision heightens the narrative tension and proves David could have killed Saul but chose mercy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-head-of | es: de-cabecera-de | fr: de-tête-de | de: von-Haupt-von 1Sam 26:12

H7227 Prep-l | N-msc (1×)

[Ketiv reading]; a textual variant in Isaiah 9:7, part of the phrase about endless increase of government

This entry represents the ketiv (written form) in Isaiah 9:7, part of the famous messianic prophecy about the child who will reign on David's throne. The phrase concerns the 'increase of his government and of peace there will be no end.' The written text (ketiv) differs from what is read aloud (qere), reflecting ancient scribal traditions about textual transmission. Such cases preserve variant readings without declaring one definitively correct. The messianic passage promises unlimited expansion of righteous rule—a government growing without bounds, peace without termination.

(1×) Isaiah 9:7's ketiv occurs in a pivotal messianic text: 'Of the increase of his government and of peace there will be no end, on the throne of David and over his kingdom, to establish it and to uphold it with justice and righteousness.' The written consonantal text (לֹם רבה) differs from the traditional reading, creating a textual note. The multilingual evidence shows translation difficulty—French and German simply preserve the Hebrew in brackets, acknowledging the technical scribal issue. The theological weight lies in the verse's promise: an everlasting kingdom of expanding peace, fulfilled in Christian interpretation through Christ's eternal reign. MORE AND GREATER en: [ketiv] | es: [ketiv] | fr: [[לֹם רבה]] | de: [[לֹם רבה]] Isa 9:7

רַב H7227a Adj-msc (433×)

much, many, great — adjective expressing quantity (numerous), quality (mighty, intense), or sufficiency (enough)

Found over 400 times, this flexible adjective primarily denotes large quantities ('many people', 'much wealth') but extends naturally to qualitative greatness ('great wickedness', 'mighty power'). In construct forms it expresses abundance ('abounding in mercy', 'rich in lovingkindness'), and in exclamatory contexts simply means 'enough!' The multilingual evidence—Arabic كَثِير, Korean 많은, Swahili -engi, Hindi बहुत—confirms this root's core span from numerical plurality to evaluative magnitude. Occasionally the adjective functions adverbially ('greatly', 'long') or substantively ('abundance', 'chief').

1. many, much (quantitative) (305×) The most frequent sense (305×) is straightforward quantitative plurality: 'many' people, animals, or things; 'much' silver, grain, or years. Cross-linguistic data strongly align here—Arabic كَثِير, Korean 많은, Swahili -engi/-ingi, Hindi बहुत, Spanish muchos/mucho—demonstrating this as the semantic core. Typical occurrences include Gen 21:34 ('many days'), Gen 26:14 ('much livestock'), Gen 30:43 ('numerous flocks'). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: many | es: mucha, muchas, mucho | fr: beaucoup | de: viel, viele Gen 21:34; Gen 26:14; Gen 30:43; Gen 37:34; Exod 5:5

2. great, mighty (qualitative) (65×) The qualitative leap to 'great, mighty' (65×) describes intensity or importance: 'great wickedness' (Gen 6:5), 'great deep' (Gen 7:11), 'heavy rain' (1 Sam 12:17). Multilingual parallels—Arabic كَبِير, Korean 큰/크다, Hindi बड़ा/महान, Spanish grande—show qualitative greatness as a natural semantic extension. This sense often overlaps with quantitative 'much' when referring to abstract intensity. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: great | es: grande, mucha | fr: grand, nombreux | de: der-großen, es-ist-groß, gross Gen 6:5; Gen 7:11; Gen 18:20; Num 11:33; 1Sam 12:17

3. abounding in, rich in (construct) (19×) In construct state (19×), the adjective means 'abounding in, rich in' when modifying another noun: 'abounding in lovingkindness' (Ex 34:6, Num 14:18), 'mighty in deeds' (2 Sam 23:20). Korean 풍성한, Spanish abundante-de, and Arabic كَثِيرٌ + genitive support this attributive-construct usage, which highlights the noun's quality of possessing X in abundance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: abounding-in, abundance-of, abundant | es: abundante-de-, abundante-en, grande-de | fr: et-grand, et-grand-de, et-grand-de- | de: gross-von, und-gross-von, und-gross-von- Exod 34:6; Num 14:18; 2Sam 23:20; 1Chr 11:22; Neh 9:17

4. enough, sufficient (14×) As an exclamation or predicate (14×), רַב expresses sufficiency: 'Enough! I have seen enough' (Gen 45:28), 'Enough! Stop contending!' (Num 16:3, 16:7). The cross-linguistic data—Arabic كَفَى, Korean 족하다/충분하다, Swahili -tosha, Spanish basta—confirm this pragmatic extension from quantitative 'much' to evaluative 'sufficient'. Often in imperative or hortative contexts (Deut 1:6, Ex 9:28). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: and-enough, contending, enough | es: Basta, Basta-, basta | fr: assez, assez-, contending | de: contending, genug, genug- Gen 45:28; Exod 9:28; Num 16:3; Num 16:7; Deut 1:6

5. more, greater (comparative) (10×) Comparative sense 'more, greater' (10×) appears when contrasted with another entity: 'the greater will serve the younger' (Gen 25:23), 'a people more and mightier' (Deut 20:1). Arabic ʿ and Spanish mayor/más align with this usage. Found in contexts where two quantities or magnitudes are explicitly compared (Josh 10:11, Judg 16:30, 2 Kgs 6:16). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-the-greater, greater, more | es: mayor, muchos, más | fr: et-le-plus-grand, grand, nombreux | de: greater, mehr, und-der-Ältere Gen 25:23; Deut 20:1; Josh 10:11; Judg 16:30; 2Kgs 6:16

6. greatly, long (adverbial extent) (8×) Adverbial use (8×) indicates degree ('greatly') or extent ('long, far'): 'greatly multiplied' (Ps 65:9), 'long have I dwelt' (Ps 120:6). Korean 크게/오래, Swahili sana/muda mrefu, Spanish grandemente/largo, and Arabic بِل support this adverbial development. Typical in poetic or heightened prose (1 Kgs 19:7, Ps 62:2, 123:3). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: great, greatly, long | es: Mucho, grandemente, largo | fr: grand, nombreux | de: gross, viele 1Kgs 19:7; Ps 62:2; Ps 65:9; Ps 120:6; Ps 123:3

7. abundance, multitude (nominal) (5×) Nominal/substantival sense (5×) meaning 'abundance, multitude, greatness' when used with prepositions or in construct: 'by the greatness of his power' (Job 36:18), 'with much grief' (Eccl 1:18). Arabic ʿ, Korean 많음/큰, Swahili wingi confirm this reification. Concentrated in wisdom literature (Job 23:6, 30:18) and one occurrence in Isaiah 63:7. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-great-, and-the-great, by-great- | es: Acaso-con-grandeza-de-, Con-mucha-, mucha | fr: dans-nombreux, et-nombreux, nombreux | de: in-viel, und-viel, viel Job 23:6; Job 30:18; Job 36:18; Eccl 1:18; Isa 63:7

8. increase, multiply (verbal) (4×) Verbal Qal forms (4×) mean 'to become many, increase, multiply'—rare but attested. Arabic كثُر, Korean 많아지다/커졌다, Swahili kuongezeka align. Found in Ex 23:29 ('lest the beasts multiply'), 1 Sam 14:19 ('the tumult increasing'), 2 Sam 15:12 ('conspiracy growing strong'), Isa 6:12 ('desolation be great'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-becoming-many, and-great, and-increasing | es: y-aumentando, y-creciendo, y-se-multiplique | fr: et-augmentant, et-becoming-beaucoup, et-multiplies | de: und-becoming-viele, und-increasing, und-mehrte Exod 23:29; 1Sam 14:19; 2Sam 15:12; Isa 6:12

9. chief, captain, master (title) (2×) Substantival title רַב meaning 'chief, captain, master' (2×) appears in Prov 26:10 (possibly 'a great one' or 'an archer'—text uncertain) and Jer 52:24 ('captain of the guard'). Arabic بَيس, Korean 장관, Swahili mkuu, Hindi प्रधान support this honorific/titular usage. Compare Akkadian rabû and later Aramaic rab. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-archer, the-chief-of- | es: Grande, jefe-de | fr: nombreux | de: viel Prov 26:10; Jer 52:24

10. (1×) One uncertain occurrence in Isa 19:20, where context is difficult and translation diverges—possibly 'defender' or 'great one'. Multilingual data show variance (English 'defender', Spanish 'grande', French/German 'nombreux'/'viel'), suggesting textual or contextual obscurity. This may belong to sense 2 (qualitative great) or sense 9 (title), but remains ambiguous. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-defender | es: y-grande | fr: et-nombreux | de: und-viel Isa 19:20

רַב H7227b N-msc (28×)

chief, captain — a title of high rank in Babylonian and Assyrian court administration

Rav (II), distinct from the common adjective rav meaning 'great' or 'many,' is a loanword reflecting Akkadian bureaucratic titles. All 28 occurrences function as the first element of compound official designations, almost exclusively for Babylonian officers. The most frequent is rav-tabbachim, 'chief of the executioners' or 'captain of the guard,' the title borne by Nebuzaradan, who oversaw the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 BC and the deportation of its inhabitants (2 Kgs 25:8-20; Jer 39:9-13; 40:1-5; 52:12-30). Other compounds include rav-saris, 'chief eunuch,' the officer charged with training Daniel and his companions (Dan 1:3), and rav-chovel, 'chief sailor' or 'captain,' used of the ship's master in the Jonah narrative (Jon 1:6). Esther 1:8 uses it generically for 'every chief of his house.' The LXX transliterates or renders it archon, and all target languages gloss it as a leadership title: Spanish 'jefe,' French 'chef,' German 'Oberste.'

chief, captain, head official (28×) A title meaning 'chief' or 'captain,' borrowed from Akkadian administrative vocabulary, used exclusively in compound designations for Babylonian and Assyrian court officials. Overwhelmingly refers to rav-tabbachim, the 'chief of the guard' Nebuzaradan, in the narratives of Jerusalem's fall (2 Kgs 25:8-20; Jer 39:9-13; 52:12-30). Also designates the rav-saris over Daniel's training (Dan 1:3), the ship captain in Jonah (Jon 1:6), and household officials in Esther (Est 1:8). Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly point to an administrative leadership title. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chief-of, chief-of-, of | es: el-jefe-de, jefe-de | fr: chief-de-, nombreux | de: chief-von-, gross 2Kgs 25:8; 2Kgs 25:10; 2Kgs 25:11; 2Kgs 25:12; 2Kgs 25:15

רֵב H7228 N-mp (2×)

archer, bowman; one who shoots arrows

This masculine noun designates archers or those skilled with the bow. Jeremiah 50:29 calls archers to array themselves against Babylon, specifically identifying them as 'those who bend the bow.' In Job 16:13, the suffering protagonist describes God's archers surrounding him—though some interpreters read this as 'his arrows' rather than 'his archers,' the context of military imagery supports the personal noun. Archers were elite soldiers, maintaining distance while inflicting damage, making them apt metaphors for persecution from multiple directions.

(2×) Translation evidence shows 'archers' clearly: Spanish 'arqueros/flecheros,' English 'archers.' Both passages employ military imagery—Jeremiah summoning archers against Babylon in divine judgment (50:29), Job feeling surrounded by divine archers in his affliction (16:13). The parallel phrases 'those who bend the bow' and 'his archers' reinforce the identification. Archers represent skilled, deadly force deployed strategically from a distance. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: His-archers, archers | es: arqueros, sus-flecheros | fr: nombreux, son-רביו-lui | de: [רביו], [רבים] Job 16:13; Jer 50:29

רַב H7229 Adj-msd (15×)

Great, large (in size, magnitude, or rank); as a title: chief, head official in Aramaic court contexts.

An Aramaic adjective meaning 'great' or 'large,' appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. It describes the enormous statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:31), the great sea (Dan 7:2), and impressive feasts and signs. When used in construct chains, it functions as a title meaning 'chief' or 'head official,' as in 'chief of the executioners' (Dan 2:14) and 'chief of the magicians' (Dan 4:6). Spanish 'grande' and German 'gross' consistently capture the adjectival sense, while the titular usage emerges clearly from phrases like 'jefe-de' in Spanish translations.

1. great, large (adjectival quality) (11×) Describes magnitude, size, or importance as a qualitative adjective: the great image (Dan 2:31), great beasts (Dan 7:3, 7), a great feast (Dan 5:1), and great signs (Dan 3:33). The multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as 'great/grand/gross,' confirming a straightforward scalar adjective. Also used comparatively with min ('greater than,' Dan 7:20). Covers both physical scale and abstract impressiveness, as in 'the great God' (Ezra 5:8) and 'a great king' (Ezra 4:10). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great, greater, huge | es: grande, inmensa, la-grande | fr: grand, le-grand, nombreux | de: [רבא], gross, viel Ezra 4:10; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 5:11; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:31

2. chief, head official (titular) (4×) Functions as a substantivized title in construct chains designating official rank: 'chief of the executioners' (rav tabbachayya, Dan 2:14), 'chief of the prefects' (rav signin, Dan 2:48), and 'chief of the magicians' (rav chartummayya, Dan 4:6; 5:11). The Spanish 'jefe-de' and French 'grand' capture this

titular nuance distinctly from the purely adjectival sense, reflecting a well-attested Aramaic bureaucratic convention parallel to Akkadian rab-usage in Neo-Babylonian court titles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-chief-of-, chief-of, chief-of- | es: jefe-de, y-jefe-de | fr: et-grand, grand | de: und-viel, viel Dan 2:14; Dan 2:48; Dan 4:9; Dan 5:11

רֹב H7230 Prep-m / N-msc (149×)

Multitude, abundance, or greatness; the nominal form of the root ר-ב-ב expressing large quantity, impressive magnitude, or functioning as a quantifier 'many/much.'

The noun רֹב (rov) is Hebrew's standard way of saying 'a lot' — whether counting people, measuring things, or expressing sheer magnitude. With 149 occurrences it appears across every genre: patriarchal promises of innumerable descendants (Gen 16:10), prophetic indictments of Israel's many sins (Isa 1:11), wisdom reflections on the 'multitude of words' (Prov 10:19), and cosmic declarations about God's abundant power (Ps 33:16–17). Cross-linguistic evidence reveals subtle distinctions the English 'multitude' obscures: Spanish separates abundancia (quantity) from grandeza (magnitude), and Hindi distinguishes बहुतायत (abundance) from बड़ाई (greatness). Occasionally רֹב functions as a pure quantifier ('many days,' Eccl 11:1) or even verbally ('to be abundant,' Deut 7:7).

1. abundance, multitude (132×) The core nominal sense: a large quantity, number, or amount of something — 'multitude' or 'abundance.' This is the dominant usage at 132 occurrences. Appears in construct chains (רֹב + genitive) across every domain: multitude of people (Prov 14:28), abundance of sacrifices (Isa 1:11), quantity of possessions (Gen 27:28). Arabic كثرة (kathrah), Korean 많음 (manheum), Swahili wingi, and Hindi बहुतायत all converge on pure numerousness. Key passages: Genesis 16:10 ('I will multiply your offspring so that they cannot be counted for multitude'), Hosea 9:7 ('because of your great iniquity'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-abundance, in-abundance, to-multitude | es: en-abundancia, en-multitud | fr: zu-nombreux | de: zu-viel Deut 1:10; Deut 10:22; Deut 28:62; Josh 11:4; Judg 6:5

2. greatness, magnitude (10×) The qualitative sense: greatness, magnitude, or impressive extent — not mere counting but the awe-inspiring scale of something. Distinguished from sense 1 by cross-linguistic evidence: Spanish grandeza (not abundancia), Hindi बड़ाई/बड़े ('bigness'), and German Menge used in its intensive register. The 10 occurrences focus on God's attributes and mighty acts: Exodus 15:7 ('in the greatness of your majesty'), Psalm 33:16–17 (a king is not saved by the greatness of his army, nor a warrior by great strength). Joshua 9:13 uses it for the 'greatness' of the journey — length and difficulty, not mere distance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-by-great, and-in-greatness-of, because-of-the-greatness | es: Por-grandeza-de, Y-en-grandeza-de-, en-abundancia-de | fr: dans-multitude, dans-nombreux, de-le-greatness-de | de: Menge, Menge-, durch-Menge Exod 15:7; Josh 9:13; Ps 33:16; Ps 33:17

3. many, much (quantifier) (5×) Adjectival or adverbial use as a quantifier meaning 'many,' 'much,' or 'most' — functioning as a modifier rather than an abstract noun. Five occurrences where רֹב modifies rather than stands alone. Spanish muy/mucho/muchos, Hindi बहुत/अधिकांश, Korean 많은 (manh-eun) all reflect this shift from noun to quantifier. Key passages: Esther 10:3 ('great among the Jews and accepted by the multitude of his brothers'), Proverbs 20:6 ('many a man proclaims his own loyalty'), and 2 Chronicles 24:24 ('though the army... came with few men, yet [the LORD] delivered a very great army into their hand'). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-after-many, by-multitude-of, great | es: Multitud-de-, mucho, muy | fr: et-de-nombreux, multitude, zu-nombreux | de: und-Menge, viel, zu-viel 2Chr 24:24; 2Chr 27:3; Esth 10:3; Prov 20:6; Isa 24:22

4. to be abundant (Qal verbal) (2×) Rare verbal use of the root ר-ב-ב in Qal stem — 'to be abundant, to be numerous.' Only 2 occurrences retain this verbal character. Deuteronomy 7:7 is pivotal: 'Not because you were more numerous (מֵעַמֵּיכֶם) than any people did the LORD set his love on you, for you were the fewest.' Arabic كثرة ('for your being numerous'), Korean 너희가 많으므로, and Spanish por ser más numerosos all render this as a verbal predicate. Proverbs 13:23 provides the second instance. These forms sit at the boundary between noun and verb, showing the root's living verbal force behind the noun. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: abundant, because-of-your-multitude | es: Mucho, por-ser-más-numerosos | fr: multitude, parce-que-de-ton-multitude | de: viel, weil-von-dein-Menge Deut 7:7; Prov 13:23

רָבַב H7231 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (13×)

To be or become many, numerous, to multiply (Qal); to be produced by ten-thousands (Pual participle).

The verb ravav expresses sheer numerical increase — things becoming many, people multiplying, troubles mounting. It is the verbal engine behind the adjective rav ('many, great') and shares its root with revavah ('ten thousand'). In the Psalms, it voices both lament and praise: 'LORD, how many are my foes!' (Ps 3:1) and 'many say, who will show us good?' (Ps 4:7). Genesis 6:1 uses it to narrate humanity's pre-flood multiplication. The Pual participle in Psalm 144:13 offers a rare and vivid agricultural image — flocks 'producing by ten-thousands' in the pastures, where the verb's connection to revavah surfaces explicitly. Spanish multiplicarse and French etre nombreux capture the core meaning, while German sich mehren preserves the intransitive stative quality.

1. be many, be numerous (12×) To be or become many, numerous; to multiply or increase — the Qal stative/intransitive sense describing the growth in number of people, troubles, sins, or other countable entities. With 12 occurrences, this sense spans from the primeval narrative ('mankind began to multiply on the face of the earth,' Gen 6:1) through psalms of distress ('how many are those who rise against me,' Ps 3:1; 'my iniquities have multiplied,' Ps 38:19) to prophetic observation. Job 35:6 asks rhetorically what effect human sins have if they multiply. Spanish Son-mas and fueron-muchas, French etre-nombreux, and German sich-mehren all converge on vocabulary of numerical increase, while Korean and Hindi deploy dedicated 'multiply' verbs, confirming the cross-linguistic stability of this basic quantitative concept. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: abound, and-are-many, and-have-multiplied | es: Son-más, a-multiplicarse, fueron-muchas | fr: et-être-nombreux, et-רבר, à-multiplier | de: [ורבו], abound, sich-zu-mehren Gen 6:1; Job 35:6; Ps 3:1; Ps 4:7; Ps 25:19

2. produce by ten-thousands (1×) To be produced or multiplied by the ten-thousands — the Pual (intensive passive) participle describing prolific agricultural yield in Psalm 144:13: flocks merubbavot ('producing by ten-thousands') in the fields. This single occurrence preserves a vivid connection between the verb ravav and the noun revavah ('myriad, ten thousand'), painting a picture of pastoral abundance so great it can only be counted in myriads. Spanish multiplicados-por-diez-miles and English 'bringing forth ten-thousands' both resort to periphrasis, underscoring how this rare participial form packs an entire image of overflowing fertility into one word. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: bringing-forth-ten-thousands | es: multiplicados-por-diez-miles | fr: de-être-nombreux | de: bringing-forth-ten-thousands Ps 144:13

רָבַב H7232 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (2×)

shoot (arrows); attack with projectiles

This verb means to shoot arrows or attack with projectiles. Genesis 49:23 describes how 'archers shot at' Joseph (or his descendants) and harassed him—an allusion to the hostility he faced. Psalm 18:14 uses the verb in describing God shooting his arrows and scattering enemies. Some manuscripts show variant readings, suggesting textual uncertainty, but the basic sense of shooting or launching projectiles remains consistent. The verb captures both the physical action of archery and the metaphorical deployment of divine power against foes.

(2×) Spanish shows the dual rendering: 'flecharon' (shot arrows) and 'muchos' (in abundance), suggesting some translator uncertainty. English preserves 'shot' and 'in abundance.' The Genesis 49:23 context describes sustained attack by archers against Joseph, while Psalm 18:14 has God shooting arrows and scattering enemies. Both involve projectile warfare, whether human hostility against Joseph's line or divine intervention routing adversaries. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-shot, in-abundance | es: muchos, y-flecharon | fr: et-shot, tirer | de: in-Überfluss, und-schossen Gen 49:23; Ps 18:14

רִבָּבָה H7233 Conj-w / Number-fs (18×)
A myriad or ten thousand; used both as a specific numeral and as an expression of innumerable multitude.
This feminine noun straddles the line between precise arithmetic and rhetorical grandeur. When Rebekah's family blesses her to become 'thousands of myriads' (Gen 24:60), the word evokes uncountable abundance. When Leviticus 26:8 says five shall chase a hundred and a hundred put ten thousand to flight, the number is exact and comparative. Spanish miríadas de preserves the indefinite-vast sense, while French dix milliers and German zehn-thousands lean toward the numeric. The word appears in some of Scripture's most triumphant poetry, from Moses' blessing (Deut 33:2, 17) to David's victory songs (1 Sam 18:7-8).

1. myriads (innumerable multitude) (9×) An innumerable multitude or countless host, used in the plural construct form to convey overwhelmingly large numbers that resist exact counting. Rebekah is blessed to become 'thousands of myriads' (Gen 24:60), Moses invokes God arriving 'from myriads of holy ones' (Deut 33:2), and the Song of Songs describes the beloved as 'distinguished among ten thousand' in a hyperbolic sense (Song 5:10). Spanish miríadas de and French multitude capture this rhetorical-superlative force, which transcends mere arithmetic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-myriads-of, in-ten-thousands-his, myriad | es: Diez-mil, con-miríadas-de, de-miríadas-de | fr: dans-dix-milliers, dans-dix-milliers-son, de-multitude | de: [ברבבות], [רבבה], in-zehn-thousands-sein Gen 24:60; Num 10:36; Deut 33:2; Deut 33:17; 1Sam 18:7

2. ten thousand (specific number) (9×) The specific numeral ten thousand, functioning as an exact quantity in comparisons, military counts, or proportional statements. Leviticus 26:8 uses it in a precise ratio: a hundred shall put ten thousand to flight. Judges 20:10 selects ten thousand men for a military operation. Deuteronomy 32:30 contrasts one chasing a thousand with two routing ten thousand. Spanish Diez mil ('ten thousand') and the counting context distinguish this usage from the indefinite-multitude sense. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS
en: [by-his-ten-thousands], [with-his-ten-thousands], among-ten-thousand | es: (Qeré), K(en-sus-diez-miles), Q[en-sus-diez-miles] | fr: [by-son-dix-thousands], [with-son-dix-thousands], avec-son-dix-milliers | de: [by-sein-zehn-thousands], [with-sein-zehn-thousands], [מרבבה] Lev 26:8; Deut 32:30; Judg 20:10; 1Sam 21:12

רָבַד H7234 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (1×)
I have spread; describes laying out decorative coverings on a bed, used in Proverbs 7:16
This verb means 'to spread out' or 'to deck,' appearing in Proverbs 7:16 where the adulteress describes how she has prepared her bed for seduction. She boasts, 'I have spread my couch with coverings, with colored linens from Egypt.' The verb conveys the action of laying out attractive textiles—creating visual and tactile allure. The related noun refers to the spreads or coverlets themselves. This is domestic vocabulary repurposed for seduction; the normal act of making a bed becomes laden with illicit intent. The image is one of luxury and deliberate preparation for sin.

(1×) Proverbs 7:16 records the adulteress's enticement: 'I have spread my couch with coverings, with colored linens of Egypt.' The perfect tense 'I have spread' (רָבַדְתִּי) emphasizes completed preparation—the seduction scene is already set. Spanish 'he tendido' (I have laid out) and the imagery of Egyptian linens suggests opulent, exotic textiles deliberately arranged to entice. The verb's domestic connotation (spreading bedclothes) is weaponized for immoral purposes. Proverbs uses this vivid detail to show how sin packages itself attractively, requiring the young man to see through surface beauty to moral danger beneath. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: I-have-spread | es: he-tendido | fr: רבדתי | de: [רבדתי] Prov 7:16

H7235 V-Hifil-Perf-2fs (2×)
multiply, increase, make numerous (Hiphil causative form)
This is the Hiphil (causative) second person feminine perfect form of the common verb 'to multiply' or 'increase.' It appears in contexts where increase or accumulation is addressed—either multiplication of religious observances (2 Chronicles 24:27, possibly corrupt text) or multiplication of remedies without healing (Jeremiah 46:11). The feminine subject suggests personified entities or feminine nouns in context. The Hiphil makes this causative: causing increase or multiplying something, whether good or futile.

(2×) The translations show contextual interpretation: 2 Chronicles 24:27 with reference to 'multiply' in uncertain textual context, and Jeremiah 46:11 addressing futile multiplication of medicines. Spanish and French glosses reflect these different contexts. The grammatical form (Hiphil second feminine perfect) indicates causative action by a feminine subject—in Jeremiah, personified Egypt multiplying remedies to no avail; the Chronicles reference remains textually problematic. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS
en: (you-multiply), let-increase | es: (multiplicaste), y-lo-mucho-de | fr: [(הרביתי)], [ירב] | de: [(הרבית)], [ירב] 2Chr 24:27; Jer 46:11

רָבָה H7235a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (232×)
To be or become many, multiply, increase; (Hifil) to make many, cause to multiply; (adverbially) much, greatly, exceedingly
The Hebrew verb of abundance and increase, anchoring the creation mandate 'be fruitful and multiply' (Gen 1:22, 28) and reverberating through patriarchal promises, population narratives, and wisdom reflections. Its Qal stem describes organic growth — things becoming numerous on their own — while its Hifil causative attributes multiplication to a divine or human agent. Remarkably, the Hifil infinitive absolute was grammaticalized into a pure adverb meaning 'much' or 'exceedingly' (Gen 15:1), a pathway Arabic parallels with kathiran. The Piel extends into child-rearing (Ezek 19:2) and territorial magnification (2 Sam 22:36), revealing that rabah encompasses qualitative greatness alongside quantitative increase.

1. make many, cause to multiply (Hifil) (100×) Hifil causative, the most frequent sense (100x): to make many, cause to multiply, increase something in number. Arabic akthara and Korean manhi hada capture the causative agency. God's promise 'I will greatly multiply your offspring' (Gen 16:10; 17:2; 22:17) makes this the verb of covenant population blessing par excellence. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: I-will-multiply, and-I-will-multiply, and-you-multiplied | es: Multiplicaré, Y-multiplicaré, multiplicaré | fr: Je—multiplier, et-Je—multiplier, et-multiplier | de: Heuschrecke, ich-wird-vermehren, und-ich-wird-vermehren Gen 3:16; Gen 16:10; Gen 17:2; Gen 17:20; Gen 22:17

2. much, greatly, exceedingly (adverbial) (60×) Adverbial usage via Hifil infinitive absolute (60x): functioning as an intensifier meaning 'much, greatly, exceedingly.' Arabic kathiran and Korean manhi/simhi parallel this grammaticalized shift from verb to adverb. 'Your reward shall be very great' (Gen 15:1) and 'he gathered much' (Exod 16:17) show the construction modifying diverse predicates without any sense of numerical multiplication. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: exceedingly, many, more | es: mucha, muchas, mucho | fr: beaucoup, excessivement, multiplier | de: exceedingly, sehr-viel, vermehrte Gen 3:16; Gen 15:1; Gen 16:10; Gen 41:49; Exod 16:17

3. be/become many, multiply (Qal) (52×) Qal intransitive (52x): to become many, multiply, increase on one's own. Arabic kathura and Swahili -ongezeka render the spontaneous growth. The creation narrative's 'and they multiplied' (Gen 7:17–18; 8:17) and Israel's demographic explosion in Egypt (Exod 1:20) illustrate populations growing without an expressed causative agent. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: I-have-redeemed, and-increased, and-multiplied | es: Cuando-aumentan, aumentan, se-multiplicaron | fr: dans-multiplier, et-multiplia, et-multiplier |

de: multiplies, und-es-mehrten-sich, und-mehrten-sich Gen 1:22; Gen 7:17; Gen 7:18; Gen 8:17; Gen 38:12

4. multiply! (Qal imperative) (7×) Qal imperative (7x): the direct command to multiply, concentrated in the creation mandate and its renewals. Arabic ukthuru and Swahili -ongezekeni convey the jussive force. 'Be fruitful and multiply' (Gen 1:22, 28; 9:1, 7) establishes this as a foundational divine blessing-command, repeated to Noah's family after the Flood. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: and-multiply, and-multiply- | es: y-multiplica, y-multiplicaos, y-multiplicaos- | fr: et-multiplier, et-multiplier- | de: und-mehre-dich, und-mehret-euch, und-mehret-euch- Gen 1:22; Gen 1:28; Gen 9:1; Gen 9:7

5. make great, magnify (Hifil/Piel) (6×) Hifil or Piel meaning to make great or magnify (6x): a qualitative rather than quantitative increase — enlarging territory, magnifying a person, or expanding influence. Arabic azzama/kabbara and Korean keuge hada mark the shift from number to stature. David's praise 'You enlarged my steps' (2 Sam 22:36 / Ps 18:35) and Jabez's prayer (1 Chr 4:10) exemplify this elevated register. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: and-You-will-enlarge, do-You-profit, increase | es: aumenta, aumentaste, levantar | fr: et-multiplier, fait-moi-grand, increase | de: gemacht-mich-gross, macht-mich-gross, tun-du-profit Judg 9:29; Judg 20:38; 2Sam 22:36; 1Chr 4:10; Ps 18:35

6. be great, be far/too much (Qal stative) (5×) Qal stative describing something as great, far, or excessive (5x): the state of being too much or too large in extent. Arabic yakburu and Korean keuda capture the stative quality. 'The way is too far for you' (Deut 14:24), Joseph's portion 'was five times as much' (Gen 43:34), and Elihu's declaration 'God is greater than man' (Job 33:12) all express magnitude rather than process. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: and-it-was-greater, and-was-greater, is-great | es: es-largo, es-mayor, sea-largo | fr: est-aussi-beaucoup, est-grand, et-cela-fut-greater | de: ist-auch-much, ist-gross, und-es-war-greater Gen 43:34; Deut 14:24; Deut 19:6; 1Kgs 4:30; Job 33:12

7. rear, bring up (Piel) (2×) Piel intensive meaning to rear or bring up children (2x): a distinct semantic domain of nurture and child-rearing. Arabic rabba/yurabbi and Korean kiuda ('to raise') align precisely. The lioness metaphor of Ezek 19:2 ('she reared her cubs') and the elegy of Lam 2:22 ('those I nursed and reared') show this tender, parental sense far removed from mere numerical multiplication. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: and-reared, she-reared | es: crió, y-engrandecí | fr: et-multiplier, multiplier | de: und-vermehrte, vermehren Lam 2:22; Ezek 19:2

רַבָּה H7235b V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

Shooter, archer; describes one who shoots arrows, used in Genesis 21:20 about Ishmael becoming an archer

This Qal active participle means 'shooter' or 'one who shoots,' specifically referring to archery skill. It appears in Genesis 21:20 describing Ishmael's development: he grew up in the wilderness and became 'a shooter of the bow.' The term emphasizes the active skill of shooting rather than merely possessing a bow. Scholars debate the exact form and suggest possible emendation to match a phrase in Jeremiah, but the general meaning remains clear: Ishmael mastered archery, essential for wilderness survival. This skill defines his identity and prefigures his descendants' martial, nomadic lifestyle.

(1×) Genesis 21:20 narrates Ishmael's maturation: 'God was with the boy, and he grew up. He lived in the wilderness and became a shooter of the bow.' The participial form 'shooter' (רֹבֶה) emphasizes ongoing skill and occupation—not just one-time action but characteristic expertise. Spanish 'tirador' (shooter) and German 'Schütze' (marksman) convey the professional aspect. Growing up in the Paran wilderness with Hagar, Ishmael needed archery for hunting and defense. His mastery of this skill marks his transition to self-sufficient manhood and foreshadows the warrior identity of Ishmaelite tribes in later biblical and Arabian contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-shooter-of | es: tirador-de | fr: un-shooter-de | de: ein-Schütze Gen 21:20

רְבָה H7236 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (6×)

To grow great, become large (Qal intransitive); to make great, magnify, exalt (Piel causative) – Aramaic

This Aramaic verb, cognate to the common Hebrew rabah, appears exclusively in the book of Daniel. In its Qal stem it describes organic, often dramatic growth: the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream that 'grew and became strong' until it reached the heavens (Dan 4:11, 20), and the king's own hair that 'grew long' like eagle feathers during his humiliation (Dan 4:33). The single Piel occurrence shifts to causative action – the king 'made Daniel great' with honors and gifts (Dan 2:48). Spanish tracks the distinction cleanly: 'crecer' for intransitive growth, 'engrandecer' for active magnification.

1. to grow, become great (Qal intransitive) (5×) To grow, become great or large (Qal intransitive). Used of the cosmic tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream growing tall and mighty (Dan 4:11, 20), of the king's own greatness expanding (Dan 4:22), and of his hair growing wild during his bestial exile (Dan 4:33). Spanish 'crecer/ha crecido' and English 'grew/has grown' consistently render the organic, intransitive growth. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: grew, has-grown, have-grown | es: creció, ha-crecido, has-crecido | fr: [רבית], [רבת], grande | de: [רבית], [רבת], grosse Dan 4:11; Dan 4:20; Dan 4:22; Dan 4:33

2. to make great, magnify (Piel causative) (1×) To make great, magnify, or exalt someone (Piel causative). Appears once in Daniel 2:48 where the king 'made Daniel great' (rabbi) by elevating him with gifts and authority over Babylon. Spanish 'engrandecer' precisely captures the factitive sense – causing greatness in another – distinguishing it sharply from the intransitive growth of the Qal. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: made-great | es: engrandeció | fr: [רבי] | de: [רבי] Dan 2:48

רַבָּה H7237 N-proper-fs (15×)

Rabbah — 'the great city,' capital of Ammon (modern Amman, Jordan); also a town in Judah

Meaning 'great' or 'populous,' Rabbah (רַבָּה) typically designates the Ammonite capital, frequently introduced in its fuller form 'Rabbah of the sons of Ammon' (רַבַּת בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן). This is the city where Og's massive iron bedstead was kept (Deut 3:11), where David's general Joab laid siege during the Bathsheba crisis (2 Sam 11:1; 12:26-29), and against which the prophets thundered judgment (Jer 49:2-3; Amos 1:14). Known as Philadelphia in the Hellenistic period, it survives as modern Amman. A second, lesser-known Rabbah appears among Judah's towns (Josh 15:60).

Rabbah (Ammonite capital) (15×) The fortified capital of the Ammonites, situated about 28 miles east of the Jordan River. Its fuller designation רַבַּת בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן appears in 2 Samuel 12:26-27, Deuteronomy 3:11, and Ezekiel 21:25. Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Rabbah,' while French and German similarly preserve the Semitic form. The city figures prominently in David's wars and in prophetic oracles against Ammon. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Rabbah, Rabbah-of, against-Rabbah | es: Rabbah, Rabbah-de, Rabbá | fr: Rabbah, [רבה], [רבת] | de: Rabbah, [רבת], gegen-Rabbah Deut 3:11; Josh 13:25; Josh 15:60; 2Sam 11:1; 2Sam 12:26

רְבוּ H7238 Conj-w / N-fs (5×)

greatness, majesty (Aramaic; of royal power and splendor)

An Aramaic noun appearing exclusively in Daniel, always in connection with royal majesty. It describes the greatness restored to Nebuchadnezzar after his humiliation (Dan 4:22, 36), the sovereign honor God gave him (Dan 5:18, 19), and the everlasting greatness of the kingdom given to the saints (Dan 7:27). The word carries connotations of both political authority and visible splendor. Spanish 'grandeza' and French 'grandeur' both capture the combined sense of magnitude and magnificence.

(5×) Royal greatness encompassing both political power and visible magnificence. All five occurrences belong to Aramaic court narrative in Daniel. Nebuchadnezzar's greatness is given, stripped, and restored by God (Dan 4:22, 36; 5:18-19), making it a theologically loaded term for delegated sovereignty. Daniel 7:27 transfers this greatness to the saints' eternal kingdom. Spanish 'grandeza' and French 'grandeur' mirror the Hebrew-Aramaic semantic range precisely, covering both majesty and magnitude. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-greatness, and-the-greatness-of, and-your-greatness | es: la-grandeza, y-grandeza, y-la-grandeza | fr: et-grandeur, grandeur | de: [ורבו], [ורבותא], [ורבותך] Dan 4:22; Dan 4:36; Dan 5:18; Dan 5:19; Dan 7:27

רִבּוֹ H7239 Number-fp (12×)

Ten thousand, myriad — large round number for counting people, valuables, or forces; late Aramaizing form

The noun רִבּוֹ (ribbo) is a late Aramaizing synonym of רִבָּבָה meaning 'ten thousand' or 'myriad,' appearing mostly in post-exilic literature. The returning exiles numbered 42,360 (Ezra 2:64; Neh 7:66), and temple treasury offerings are tallied in units of ribbo (1 Chr 29:7; Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:70-72). Daniel uses the plural for apocalyptic military forces casting down myriads (Dan 11:12). The dual ribbotayim in Psalm 68:18 means 'twice ten thousand' – twenty thousand chariots of God. Spanish 'diez mil,' Arabic 'ألف,' and Korean '만' all render the concept.

ten thousand / myriad (12×) The numeral ten thousand or myriad, a late Aramaizing synonym of רִבָּבָה. Used for census totals of returning exiles (Ezra 2:64; Neh 7:66), temple treasury tallies (1 Chr 29:7; Ezra 2:69), Nineveh's population (Jonah 4:11), apocalyptic military forces (Dan 11:12), and God's twenty thousand chariots in the dual form (Ps 68:18). THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: (myriads-of), [many], are-twice-ten-thousand | es: (multitudes-de), [multitudes], decenas-de-miles | fr: dix-mille, myriade | de: [(רבי)], [[רבו]], [רבאות] 1Chr 29:7; Ezra 2:64; Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:66

רִבּוֹ H7240 Number-fp (3×)

myriad, ten thousand (Aramaic)

This Aramaic term for 'myriad' or 'ten thousand' appears in Daniel's throne vision describing the countless heavenly attendants. The text actually uses it three times in a single phrase, with both Ketiv and Qere readings attempting to express the incomprehensible magnitude: 'a thousand thousands served Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him.' The repetition and variant forms convey innumerable multitudes beyond calculation.

(3×) The word designates the number ten thousand, though used hyperbolically for uncountable multitudes. Daniel 7:10 employs it in both Ketiv and Qere forms—'ribbo' (Ketiv), 'ribbewan' (Qere), and again 'ribbewan'—to describe the myriads of myriads attending the Ancient of Days at His throne. The multiplication of vast numbers ('ten thousand times ten thousand') creates a literary effect of infinite hosts, emphasizing the incomprehensible glory and power surrounding God's throne room. The textual variation reflects scribal attempts to properly express such magnitude. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:myriads), [ketiv:myriads], and-myriad | es: [diez-miles], diez-miles, y-diez-mil | fr: [ורבו], [רבבן], [רבון] | de: [ורבו], [רבבן], [רבון] Dan 7:10

רְבִיבִים H7241 Prep-k / N-mp (6×)

Copious showers or abundant rain, always plural; used both literally of life-giving rainfall and figuratively of blessing and influence.

Always appearing in the plural, revivim denotes copious, heavy showers — the kind of drenching rain that makes the earth fertile and the crops flourish. The word operates in two registers simultaneously: literal rainfall as a sign of God's favor (Ps 65:10; Jer 3:3; 14:22), and metaphorical showers representing transformative influence. Moses' farewell song compares his teaching to showers on new grass (Deut 32:2), and Micah envisions the remnant of Jacob falling among the nations 'like showers on vegetation' — a quiet, irresistible, divine force (Mic 5:6). Psalm 72:6 pictures the ideal king descending like rain on mown grass, refreshing and renewing.

showers, rain showers (6×) Copious showers, abundant rain — drenching rainfall that causes fertility and growth, used literally and as a metaphor for divine blessing or pervasive influence. Spanish 'aguaceros' (downpours) and 'lluvias' (rains) convey the abundance, while French 'pluie' captures the basic element. Literally, God withholds showers as discipline (Jer 3:3) or sends them as provision (Jer 14:22; Ps 65:10). Figuratively, Moses' words are like showers on tender grass (Deut 32:2), the messianic king descends like rain on mown fields (Ps 72:6), and the remnant of Jacob is like showers that do not wait for human permission (Mic 5:6). RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: and-like-droplets, like-showers, showers | es: como-aguaceros, como-lluvias, con-lluvias | fr: [רבבים], comme-pluie, dans-pluie | de: [כרביבים], [רבבים], mit-showers Deut 32:2; Ps 65:10; Ps 72:6; Jer 3:3; Jer 14:22

רָבִיד H7242 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

chain, necklace; ornamental chain worn around the neck

This noun describes an ornamental chain or necklace, a symbol of honor and status. In Genesis 41:42, Pharaoh places a gold chain around Joseph's neck as part of his elevation to second-in-command, a visible mark of authority and favor. Ezekiel 16:11 uses it in the allegory of Jerusalem as God's adorned bride, where divine love lavishes ornamental chains alongside bracelets and other jewels. Such chains signified both beauty and rank, making them appropriate symbols of transformation from prisoner to prince or from foundling to royal consort.

(2×) All translations clearly render this as 'chain' or 'necklace': Spanish 'collar,' English 'chain,' French 'chaîne/collier,' German 'Kette.' The two contexts share the theme of bestowed honor—Pharaoh honoring Joseph with the gold chain (Genesis 41:42) and God adorning Jerusalem with jewelry including a chain (Ezekiel 16:11). Both passages use the chain as a visible marker of elevated status and favor, transforming the wearer's social identity. CHAIN ORNAMENT

en: and-chain, chain-of | es: collar-de, y-collar | fr: chaîne-de, et-collier | de: [ורביד], die-Kette Gen 41:42; Ezek 16:11

רְבִיעִי H7243 Number-oms (55×)

Fourth (ordinal numeral); a fourth part or quarter (fractional); rarely, square or foursquare (geometric).

The ordinal number 'fourth,' appearing across narrative, legal, and prophetic texts to mark position in sequences of days, rivers, generations, sons, and months. It is the word for the 'fourth river' of Eden (Gen 2:14), the 'fourth day' of creation (Gen 1:19), and the 'fourth generation' of God's covenant promise to Abraham (Gen 15:16). In its feminine construct form it serves as a fraction — 'a fourth of a hin' of wine or oil in the sacrificial regulations (Num 15:4–5; 28:5, 7). Spanish distinguishes 'cuarto' (ordinal) from 'cuarta parte' (fraction), while French uses 'quatrième' across both. A unique architectural use in Ezekiel 48:20 describes a plot of land as 'square,' extending the root's 'four' semantics into geometry.

1. fourth (ordinal) (45×) The ordinal 'fourth,' indicating position in a sequence — fourth day, fourth river, fourth son, fourth generation, fourth month, etc. French 'quatrième' and Spanish 'cuarto/cuarta' translate consistently. From the fourth river of Eden (Gen 2:14) through the fourth row of priestly stones (Exod 28:20) to the fourth year of kings' reigns (1 Kgs 6:1; Jer 39:2), this is by far the most frequent use, appearing in both masculine and feminine forms with and without the article. FOURTH ORDINAL NUMBER

en: fourth, the-fourth | es: cuarto, el-cuarto, la-cuarta | fr: der-quatrième, le-quatrième, quatrième | de: der-Vierte, der-vierte, der-vierter Gen 1:19; Gen 2:14; Gen 15:16; Exod 28:20; Exod 39:13

2. a fourth part, quarter (9×) A fractional quantity meaning 'one quarter' or 'a fourth part of' a standard measure, used in construct with units of measurement in sacrificial and cultic regulations. Spanish 'cuarta parte de' and German 'ein Viertel' make the fractional sense explicit. The priestly instructions prescribe 'a fourth of a hin' of oil (Num 15:4; 28:5) and 'a fourth of a hin' of wine (Num 15:5; 28:7) for various offerings, and Samuel mentions 'a fourth of a shekel of silver' (1 Sam 9:8). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fourth, a-fourth-of, a-fourth-part-of | es: con-cuarta-parte-de, cuarta-de, cuarta-parte | fr: avec-quart-de, et-quart-de, et-quatrième | de: [ורבעית], [רבעית], ein-vierter Lev 23:13; Num 15:4; Num 15:5; Num 28:5; Num 28:7

3. square, foursquare (1×) A rare geometric sense meaning 'square' or 'foursquare,' describing a shape with four equal sides. In Ezekiel's visionary land allocation, the sacred portion is described as 'square' (Ezek 48:20). Spanish 'cuadrado' captures the spatial meaning. This extends the root's core 'four' semantics from sequence and fraction into architectural and spatial description. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: square | es: cuadrado | fr: quatrième | de: vierter Ezek 48:20

רְבִיעִי H7244 Number-ofsd (10×)
Fourth (Aramaic ordinal numeral); used in Daniel for the fourth kingdom, the fourth figure in the furnace, and the fourth beast.
The Aramaic ordinal number 'fourth,' appearing exclusively in Daniel's apocalyptic visions and narratives. It designates the fourth kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's statue dream—strong as iron, crushing all others (Dan 2:40). It identifies the mysterious fourth figure walking in the fiery furnace, whose appearance was 'like a son of the gods' (Dan 3:25). And it names the terrifying fourth beast of Daniel's night vision, 'dreadful and exceedingly strong' with iron teeth (Dan 7:7, 19, 23). In each case, the 'fourth' carries a weight of mystery and power.

[ketiv:fourth] (10×) Fourth—an Aramaic ordinal numeral used in Daniel's visions and narratives to mark a climactic item in a series. The fourth kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream is as strong as iron, breaking and crushing all others (Dan 2:40). The fourth figure in the furnace has an appearance 'like a son of the gods,' transforming a scene of execution into one of divine deliverance (Dan 3:25). The fourth beast of Daniel 7 is uniquely terrifying—'different from all the beasts before it'—with iron teeth and ten horns (Dan 7:7, 19, 23). In every context, this ordinal signals the climactic and most mysterious element in an escalating sequence. French quatrième and Spanish cuarto straightforwardly render the numeral. FOURTH ORDINAL NUMBER
en: (qere:fourth), [ketiv:fourth], the-fourth | es: (cuarto), (el-cuarto), [cuarta] | fr: quatrième | de: vierter Dan 2:40; Dan 3:25; Dan 7:7

רִבִּית H7245 Conj-w (1×)
Rabbith; a town allotted to Issachar in Joshua 19:20, location identified with modern Raba
This proper locative noun refers to a town within the territory of Issachar, mentioned in Joshua 19:20 during the distribution of tribal inheritances. It's been identified with modern Raba, located approximately 13 miles northeast of Nablus (ancient Shechem). The name appears only in this single boundary list, with no narrative events attached to it. Ancient geographical scholarship suggests the site remained inhabited through various periods, though biblical texts provide no stories about what happened there. The Septuagint shows variant transliterations, typical for place names preserved through manuscript transmission.

(1×) Joshua 19:20 lists Issachar's towns: 'Jezreel, Chesulloth, Shunem, Hapharaim, Shion, Anaharath, Rabbith...' The name appears without further narrative—simply one of sixteen cities (plus villages) allotted to Issachar's tribe. The definite article in Hebrew (הָרִבִּית) suggests it was a known, established settlement. Modern identification with Raba northeast of Nablus places it in the hill country between the Jezreel Valley and the Jordan River. The lack of additional biblical reference suggests Rabbith remained a quiet agricultural town rather than a site of significant events. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-ha-Rabbith | es: y-Rabit | fr: et-ha-Rabbith | de: und-ha-Rabbith Josh 19:20

רָבַךְ H7246 Conj-w (3×)
mix, stir (of dough); well-mixed, stirred (Hophal participle)
This verb describes the thorough mixing or stirring of fine flour for grain offerings, appearing only as a Hophal participle in technical sacrificial contexts. The term indicates dough that has been well-worked—mixed with oil and stirred to proper consistency. It appears exclusively in Levitical legislation and Chronicles, functioning as cultic terminology for the proper preparation of cereal offerings.

(3×) The term functions as a technical adjective in sacrificial law, describing fine flour that has been thoroughly mixed or stirred, particularly with oil. Leviticus 6:21 prescribes it for the high priest's grain offering ('well-mixed, you shall bring it'), while Leviticus 7:12 includes well-mixed cakes with oil among the thanksgiving offerings. 1 Chronicles 23:29 lists oversight of 'the well-mixed flour' among Levitical duties in preparing offerings. The consistent ritual context shows this is specialized priestly vocabulary for properly prepared sacred food. MIXING WITH OIL
en: and-for-the-mixed, well-mixed | es: bien-mezclada, y-para-lo-mezclado | fr: [ולמרבכת], puits-mélangé | de: Brunnen-gemischt, [ולמרבכת] Lev 6:21; Lev 7:12; 1Chr 23:29

רִבְלָה H7247 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (11×)
Riblah, a city in the land of Hamath on the Orontes, used as a military staging ground by Egypt and Babylon
A strategic city on the Orontes River in the land of Hamath, Riblah served as the forward command post for the great empires that dominated Israel's final decades. Pharaoh Necho imprisoned Jehoahaz there and imposed tribute on Judah (2 Kgs 23:33). Later, Nebuchadnezzar made Riblah his base for conducting the siege of Jerusalem, and it was there that Zedekiah's sons were slaughtered before his eyes before he himself was blinded (2 Kgs 25:6–7; Jer 52:9–10). The city also appears as a boundary marker for the promised land (Num 34:11).

Riblah (place name) (11×) The proper name of a city in the territory of Hamath on the Orontes River, functioning as an imperial military headquarters during the late monarchy. Pharaoh Necho detained Jehoahaz there (2 Kgs 23:33), and Nebuchadnezzar used it as his command post during the siege of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 25:6, 20–21; Jer 39:5–6; 52:9–10, 26–27). It also marks the northeastern boundary of the promised land (Num 34:11). Arabic renders the preposition-plus-name as بِرِبْلَة ('in Riblah'), Spanish as 'en Ribla,' reflecting consistent treatment as a toponym across traditions. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Rivlah-ward, at-Rivlah, in-Rivlah | es: Rivlatah, a-Ribla, a-Riblá | fr: Rivlah-garde, dans-Rivlah, dans-à-Ribla | de: Rivlah-ward, [ברבלה], [ברבלתה] Num 34:11; 2Kgs 23:33; 2Kgs 25:6; 2Kgs 25:20; 2Kgs 25:21

רַב־מָג H7248 N-ms (3×)
Rab-mag, chief magician or chief soothsayer (Babylonian title)
Rab-mag was an official Babylonian title meaning 'chief of the magi' or 'chief soothsayer,' appearing in Jeremiah's account of Jerusalem's fall. The term is a loanword from Akkadian 'rab maḫḫû' (chief soothsayer), identifying a high-ranking member of Nebuchadnezzar's court who participated in the conquest. This official belonged to the class of wise men, diviners, and magicians who advised Babylonian kings—a group Daniel would later join.

(3×) This Babylonian court title designates the chief of the magicians or soothsayers. Jeremiah 39:3 and 39:13 list 'Nergal-sharezer the Rab-mag' among the Babylonian princes who entered Jerusalem after its fall and sat at the Middle Gate. The title indicates this official held high rank in Nebuchadnezzar's administration, specifically over the class of ritual specialists, diviners, and court magicians. The presence of such religious-political officials at Jerusalem's capture emphasizes the comprehensive nature of Babylonian conquest—military, political, and cultic dimensions all represented. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: chief, chief-magician, magician | es: jefe-de, jefe-de-magos, magos | fr: [מג], [רבמג], nombreux | de: [מג], [רב], [רבמג] Jer 39:3; Jer 39:13

רַב H7249 N-ms (6×)

Chief, master; a Babylonian-Assyrian title forming compound official designations (Rab-saris, Rab-mag, Rab-shakeh)

An Akkadian loanword meaning 'chief' or 'master,' used in Hebrew exclusively as the first element of compound Babylonian court titles. It appears in phrases like Rab-saris (chief eunuch), Rab-mag (chief magician), and Rab-shakeh (chief cupbearer), all referring to high-ranking imperial officers. The word surfaces only in narratives involving Assyrian and Babylonian state encounters with Israel and Judah, marking it as a technical borrowing of foreign administrative vocabulary rather than a native Hebrew word for leadership.

1. Rab-saris (chief eunuch, Babylonian court official) (3×)
The specific compound title Rab-saris, designating the chief eunuch or chief courtier of the Babylonian court. In Jer 39:3 and 39:13, the title identifies Nebuchadnezzar's officer Nebushazban. Spanish renders the underlying sense as 'eunucos,' while English retains the transliterated form 'Saris,' reflecting the tension between transliteration and translation of foreign titles. EUNUCH COURT OFFICIAL en: Saris, eunuch | es: Saris, eunucos | fr: Saris, eunuque | de: Saris, [סריס] 2Kgs 18:17; Jer 39:3; Jer 39:13

2. chief, master (title in compound expressions) (3×) The generic title element meaning 'chief' or 'master,' functioning as the first component in various Babylonian-Assyrian compound official designations. In 2 Kgs 18:17 it appears in multiple compound titles during the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem. Spanish 'jefe-de' (chief of) captures the compositional sense well, showing how the word serves as a rank-marker rather than a standalone noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Rav, chief | es: Rab, jefe-de | fr: Rab, nombreux | de: Rav, [רב] 2Kgs 18:17; Jer 39:3; Jer 39:13

רָבַע H7250 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3fs (3×)

lie down, lie stretched out; mate (of animals)

This verb describes lying down or being stretched out, with both literal and specific applications. Psalm 139 uses it for peaceful reclining in rest ('my lying down'). Leviticus employs it technically for animal mating, particularly in laws prohibiting bestiality and crossbreeding. The root is an Aramaic cognate of Hebrew 'rabats' (lie down), but developed a specialized sense in legal contexts for copulation.

(3×) The term carries two distinct but related uses. In Psalm 139:3, it means peaceful reclining: 'You know my lying down,' paired with 'my path' to express God's knowledge of all activities, rest and motion. In Levitical holiness legislation (Leviticus 18:23; 19:19; 20:16), it specifically denotes animal mating—prohibiting women from 'lying with' beasts and forbidding crossbreeding of different animal kinds. The common denominator is the posture of lying stretched out, contextualized either as rest or reproduction depending on the legal or poetic frame. RECLINING AND LYING en: for-mating-her, let-breed | es: harás-aparear, para-aparearse | fr: laisse-breed, pour-mating-sa | de: fuer-mating-ihr, lass-breed Lev 18:23; Lev 19:19; Lev 20:16

רָבַע H7251 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (12×)

To make square, to be four-sided — shaping objects with four equal sides and right angles, especially sacred furniture

The verb רָבַע (raba') means to make square or four-sided, and it appears almost exclusively as a passive participle (רָבוּעַ) describing the shape of sacred objects in the tabernacle and temple. The altar of burnt offering is 'square' — five cubits by five cubits (Exod 27:1; 38:1). The altar of incense is likewise 'square' — one cubit by one cubit (Exod 30:2). The high priest's breastpiece is folded into a 'square' — a span by a span (Exod 28:16). Ezekiel's visionary temple court is 'square' (Ezek 40:47; 43:16; 45:2). The consistent application to sacred architecture suggests that geometric precision was integral to the holiness of Israel's worship spaces. Spanish 'cuadrado' and French 'carré' both convey the four-sided regularity.

square, four-sided (passive participle) (12×) To make square or four-sided; almost always as a passive participle describing the geometric shape of sacred objects and structures. Applied to the bronze altar of burnt offering (Exod 27:1; 38:1), the golden altar of incense (Exod 30:2), and the high priest's breastpiece (Exod 28:16; 39:9). Ezekiel extends it to the visionary temple court and altar hearth (Ezek 40:47; 43:16; 45:2). The fourfold symmetry was not merely aesthetic but liturgically significant — a square form signified completeness and consecrated order. Spanish 'cuadrado' and German 'viereckig' both capture the four-cornered shape. NUMBER FOUR en: square, squared | es: Cuadrado, cuadrada, cuadrado | fr: carré, squared, être-carré | de: [מרבע], [מרבעת], [רבוע] Exod 27:1; Exod 28:16; Exod 30:2; Exod 37:25; Exod 38:1

רָבַע H7252 Conj-w / V-Qal-Inf / 1cs (1×)

My lying down; refers to reclining for rest or sleep, used in Psalm 139:3 about God's knowledge of all postures

This infinitive construct with suffix means 'my lying down,' appearing in Psalm 139:3 where David marvels at God's comprehensive knowledge. The term refers to reclining for rest or sleep—the most vulnerable, private position. David declares that God knows 'my sitting down and my rising up... my path and my lying down.' The paired opposites (sitting/rising, walking/lying) form a merism encompassing all human activities. If God knows even one's sleeping posture—the most unconscious, unguarded state—then truly nothing escapes divine awareness. The term can also refer to copulation in other contexts (Leviticus 18, 20), but here it clearly means restful reclining.

(1×) Psalm 139:3 expresses wonder at divine omniscience: 'You search out my path and my lying down and are acquainted with all my ways.' The phrase 'my lying down' (רִבְעִי) represents the passive, vulnerable posture of sleep—when consciousness is suspended and defense mechanisms are down. Spanish 'mi acostarme' (my lying down) captures this. David's point is that no human state, however private or unguarded, escapes God's knowledge. The verb's root can mean 'lie stretched out,' emphasizing the physical posture. Paired with 'path' (active travel), 'lying down' completes the picture: whether moving or resting, walking or sleeping, all is visible to God. RECLINING AND LYING en: and-my-lying-down | es: y-mi-acostarme | fr: et-coucher | de: und-mein-lying-down Ps 139:3

רֹבַע H7253 Number-ofsc (8×)

A fourth part or quarter (of a measure); also, one of four sides or flanks of a structure.

Derived from the root for 'four,' this noun serves two clear functions in Scripture. As a fractional term, it designates a quarter — a fourth of a hin of wine (Exod 29:40) or a quarter-shekel of silver (1 Sam 9:8). In Ezekiel's visionary architecture, however, it shifts to a spatial meaning: the four sides of the altar hearth (Ezek 43:16–17) or the four flanks of the living creatures and their wheels (Ezek 1:8, 17; 10:11). French 'quatrième partie' and Spanish 'cuarta parte' track the fractional sense precisely, while the spatial usage in Ezekiel is consistently rendered with 'sides' (Spanish 'lados') across translations.

1. side, flank (of a rectangular object) (5×) A side or flank of a rectangular or four-sided structure, always occurring in the plural with pronominal suffixes and preceded by 'arba'at' (four). In Ezekiel's visions, it describes the four sides of the living creatures (Ezek 1:8), their wheels moving 'on their four sides' without turning (Ezek 1:17; 10:11), and the four sides of the altar hearth (Ezek 43:16–17). Spanish 'lados de ellos/ellas,' English 'sides of them / its sides' consistently render this spatial orientation sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: its-sides, sides-of-them | es: lados-de-ellas, lados-de-ellos, sus-lados | fr: quatrième-partie | de: [רבעיה], [רבעיהם], [רבעיהן] Ezek 1:8; Ezek 1:17; Ezek 10:11; Ezek 43:16; Ezek 43:17

2. quarter, fourth part (fractional measure) (3×) A quarter or fourth part used as a fractional unit of measurement. In Exodus

29:40, a 'quarter of a hin' of beaten oil and a 'quarter of a hin' of wine accompany the grain offering. In 1 Samuel 9:8, Saul's servant has 'a quarter of a shekel of silver' to give the seer. French 'quatrième de,' Spanish 'cuarta parte de,' and English 'quarter of / fourth of' all converge on this straightforward fractional meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fourth-of, quarter-of | es: cuarta-parte-de, cuarto | fr: quarter-de, quatrième-de | de: quarter-von, vierter-von Exod 29:40; 1Sam 9:8

רֶבַע H7254 N-proper-ms (2×)

Reba, king of Midian defeated in Israelite conquest

Reba was one of five Midianite kings killed during Israel's war against Midian recorded in Numbers 31. These kings were allied with Sihon the Amorite and fell when Israel conquered the Transjordan region. Numbers 31:8 lists Reba among those slain in battle, while Joshua 13:21 recalls the same event in its recounting of the conquered territories. The defeat of these Midianite kings was part of Israel's divinely mandated judgment against Midian for leading Israel into idolatry at Baal-Peor.

(2×) Transliterations preserve the name consistently: 'Reba/Reva' across Spanish, English, and French. Both biblical references (Numbers 31:8 and Joshua 13:21) identify Reba in the same historical context—the slaughter of Midianite leadership during Israel's conquest of Transjordan. As one of five kings listed together, Reba represents the comprehensive defeat of Midianite power in the region, clearing the way for Israelite settlement. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Reba, Reva | es: Reba | fr: Reba, Reva | de: Reba, Reva Num 31:8; Josh 13:21

רֹבַע H7255 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

fourth part, quarter; one of four equal divisions

This noun denotes a fourth part or quarter of something. In Numbers 23:10, Balaam speaks of seeing 'the fourth part of Israel'—either a quarter of the population or the dust of their multitude, emphasizing Israel's vast numbers. In 2 Kings 6:25, during the siege of Samaria, famine drove prices so high that a quarter-kab of dove's dung sold for five shekels—illustrating desperate economic collapse. The term functions as a fractional measurement in both demographic and commercial contexts.

(2×) Translation is consistent: Spanish 'cuarta parte,' English 'fourth/quarter,' French 'quatrième/quarter,' German 'vierter/quarter.' Numbers 23:10 uses the fraction to convey Israel's countless multitude—even a quarter exceeds counting. 2 Kings 6:25 uses it as a standard dry measure (quarter of a kab) to show how even tiny amounts of worthless material commanded extortionate prices during starvation conditions. Both demonstrate fractional division for emphasis. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-quarter, fourth-of | es: cuarta-parte-de, y-un-cuarto-de | fr: et-un-quarter, quatrième-de | de: und-ein-quarter, vierter-von Num 23:10; 2Kgs 6:25

רִבֵּעַ H7256 N-mp (4×)

fourth generation (in genealogical context)

This adjective denotes members of the fourth generation in a genealogical series, appearing exclusively in the formulaic phrase 'on the third and on the fourth generations' regarding divine visitation of ancestral sin. The expression limits intergenerational punishment to a defined temporal span, contrasting with unlimited covenant love to thousands of generations.

(4×) Designates those belonging to the fourth generation in the covenant formula concerning God visiting the iniquity of fathers 'on the third and on the fourth' (עַל-שִׁלֵּשִׁים וְעַל-רִבֵּעִים). This phrase appears in Exodus 20:5 (Decalogue), Exodus 34:7 (covenant renewal), Numbers 14:18 (divine patience), and Deuteronomy 5:9 (Decalogue repetition). The precise meaning is debated—whether punishment extends to descendants or simply describes temporal reach within a single lifetime (when four generations might coexist). Multilingual glosses consistently render the ordinal + generation: Spanish 'cuartas generaciones,' French 'quatrième générations,' German 'vierter Geschlechter.' GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: fourth-generation, fourth-generations | es: cuartas, cuartas-generaciones, cuartos | fr: quatrième-génération, quatrième-générations | de: vierter-Geschlecht, vierter-Geschlechter Exod 20:5; Exod 34:7; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9

רָבַץ H7257 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (30×)

To lie down, stretch out, or crouch at rest; causatively, to make lie down or set firmly in place

A verb depicting the posture of lying stretched out or crouching low to the ground. In the Qal stem it describes animals settling into rest—a lion crouching after the hunt (Gen 49:9), flocks lying beside a well (Gen 29:2), or even sin lurking at the door like a predator (Gen 4:7). The Hifil causative captures the tender image of a shepherd making his flock lie down in green pastures (Ps 23:2), while one specialized use in Isaiah 54:11 extends to setting gemstones firmly in their mounts. Across languages—Spanish 'acecha' (lurks), French 'accroupi' (crouching), German 'lagern' (to encamp)—the translations consistently center on the idea of a body settling low into a fixed position.

1. lie down, rest (Qal) (16×) The basic Qal action of lying down to rest or sleep, used of both animals and people who settle into repose. Flocks lie beside watering stones (Gen 29:2), young lions stretch out after feeding (Gen 49:9), and the righteous lie down unafraid (Job 11:19). Spanish 'acostar' and French 'se coucher' both capture this sense of reclining for rest, while German 'lagern' evokes encamping on the ground. RECLINING AND LYING en: and-lay-down, and-lie-down, and-lies-down | es: Y-se-acostarán-, Y-se-echarán, Y-te-recostarás | fr: et-se-coucha-en-bas, et-se-couche-en-bas, et-se-coucher | de: [ורבצה], [ותרבצנה], er-lagert Gen 49:9; Num 22:27; Deut 29:20; Job 11:19; Ps 104:22

2. crouching, lying (Qal participle) (8×) The participial form depicting a creature in a crouching or lying posture, often with overtones of alertness or menace. The most memorable instance is Genesis 4:7, where sin is 'crouching' (רֹבֵץ) at the door like a predator ready to spring. Also describes a donkey settled under its burden (Exod 23:5) and Issachar lying between the saddlebags (Gen 49:14). Spanish 'acecha' (lying in wait) captures the lurking nuance, while French 'accroupi' emphasizes the low, compressed stance. RECLINING AND LYING en: crouching, lying, the-crouching | es: acecha, acostado, agachado | fr: accroupi, couché, crouching | de: [הרבץ], crouching, lagernd Gen 4:7; Gen 29:2; Gen 49:14; Gen 49:25; Exod 23:5

3. make lie down (Hifil causative) (5×) The Hifil causative meaning to make someone or something lie down, used predominantly of shepherding and divine provision. The beloved image in Psalm 23:2—'He makes me lie down in green pastures'—anchors this sense. Jeremiah 33:12 and Ezekiel 34:15 extend it to God restoring secure rest to his scattered flock. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'haré recostar,' French 'faire reposer,' German 'lagern machen'—uniformly renders this as guided, peaceful settlement. RECLINING AND LYING

en: he-makes-me-lie-down, making-lie-down, will-make-lie-down | es: acostarán, haces-recostar, las-haré-recostar, | fr: se-coucher, tu-fais-reposer | de: [ארביצם], er-macht-mich-lagern-hinab, lagern Ps 23:2; Song 1:7; Isa 13:20; Jer 33:12; Ezek 34:15

4. set, mount in place (Hifil) (1×) A specialized Hifil usage in Isaiah 54:11 meaning to set or mount stones firmly in place, where God promises to lay Zion's foundations with antimony stones. The verb's core physicality—pressing something down into a fixed position—extends metaphorically from a body lying on earth to a gemstone set into mortar. Spanish 'asentaré' (I will set) captures this construction-oriented meaning distinctly from the pastoral uses. RECLINING AND LYING en: am-setting | es: asentaré | fr: se-coucher | de: lagern Isa 54:11

רֶבֶץ H7258 Prep-l / N-msc (4×)

resting place, lair, dwelling place

This noun denotes a place of lying down—whether for animals (cattle, sheep) or humans—emphasizing rest, dwelling, or habitual location. Often paired with 'pasture' or 'fold,' it highlights security and repose. In prophetic and wisdom literature, it can metaphorically describe human dwellings or the righteous person's home.

(4×) Designates a resting place or lair where animals or people habitually lie down. Isaiah 65:10 pairs 'resting place for cattle' (רֶבֶץ בָּקָר) with 'fold for sheep' in restoration imagery. Isaiah 35:7 mentions the lair (רֹבֵצָה) of jackals transformed into pasture. Jeremiah 50:6 uses 'their resting place' (רִבְצָם) of Israel as sheep who forgot their fold. Proverbs 24:15 warns against disturbing the righteous man's 'resting place' (רִבְצוֹ), his home. The multilingual evidence shows semantic range: Spanish 'lugar de descanso/donde yacían,' French shows Hebrew forms (suggesting translation difficulty), German likewise—all capturing the place-of-lying-down sense. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: a-resting-place-for, his-resting-place, their-lair | es: donde-yacían, para-lugar-de-descanso-de, su-lugar-de-descanso | fr: [לרבץ], [רבצה], [רבצם] | de: [לרבץ], [רבצה], [רבצו] Prov 24:15; Isa 35:7; Isa 65:10; Jer 50:6

רִבְקָה H7259 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (30×)

Rebekah — matriarch of Israel, wife of Isaac, mother of Esau and Jacob

Rivqah (Rebekah) appears 30 times, almost entirely within the patriarchal narratives of Genesis 22-29 and 35, with a single retrospective mention in Genesis 49:31 at the cave of Machpelah. She is introduced as the daughter of Bethuel and grandniece of Abraham (Gen 22:23), then dominates the longest chapter in Genesis — the servant's quest for Isaac's bride (Gen 24), where her extraordinary hospitality at the well signals divine election. Her most consequential act is masterminding Jacob's deception to secure the firstborn blessing from blind Isaac (Gen 27:5-17), a moment that reshapes Israel's covenant lineage. Deborah, her nurse, receives a memorial notice at her death (Gen 35:8). The Septuagint renders the name as Rebekka, and translations across languages preserve it with minimal variation: Spanish 'Rebeca,' French 'Rebecca,' German 'Rebekka.'

Rebekah (proper name) (30×) The proper feminine name of Isaac's wife and the mother of Esau and Jacob, a central matriarch in Israel's covenant story. Introduced through her hospitality at the well (Gen 24:15-67), she receives a divine oracle about two nations in her womb (Gen 25:22-23) and orchestrates Jacob's acquisition of the blessing (Gen 27:5-17). Her burial at Machpelah is noted in Jacob's final words (Gen 49:31). All 30 occurrences fall within Genesis. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Rebekah | es: Rivqah, a-Rivqah | fr: Rébecca | de: Rebekka, Ribka, Ribkas Gen 22:23; Gen 24:15; Gen 24:29; Gen 24:30; Gen 24:45

רַב H7260 Adj-fp (8×)

Great, large, imposing (Aramaic); as a substantive, 'great things' or boastful words.

An Aramaic adjective found exclusively in the book of Daniel, describing size, power, and impressiveness. A great feast (Dan 5:1), great beasts rising from the sea (Dan 7:3, 7), and great gifts bestowed on Daniel (Dan 2:48) — the word conveys magnitude that can be literal or figurative. When used substantively in Daniel 7:8 and 7:20, the 'great things' spoken by the little horn take on an ominous tone of arrogance and boasting. Across translations, Spanish 'grandes/grandes cosas,' French 'grand/grands,' and German 'Grosse' uniformly capture this range from impressive scale to presumptuous speech.

1. great (6×) Great, large, or imposing as an attributive adjective — describing physical size (the great beast with iron teeth, Dan 7:7), impressive displays (the great feast of Belshazzar, Dan 5:1), generous magnitude (great gifts, Dan 2:48), or powerful signs (the great signs of God, Dan 4:3). Spanish 'grandes,' French 'grands,' and English 'great' consistently render this sense of impressive scale and significance across Daniel's Aramaic sections. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great | es: grandes | fr: grand, grands | de: Grosse Dan 2:48; Dan 4:3; Dan 7:3; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:11

2. great things (2×) Used substantively to mean 'great things,' specifically boastful or arrogant words. In Daniel 7:8, the little horn has 'a mouth speaking great things,' and in 7:20, the same horn speaks 'great things' whose appearance is greater than its fellows. Spanish 'grandes cosas' and English 'great things' capture the substantival shift, while the context makes clear these are not merely impressive but presumptuous — words that challenge divine authority. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great-things | es: grandes-cosas | fr: grand | de: Grosse Dan 7:8; Dan 7:20

רַבְרְבָן H7261 N-mpc / 3ms (9×)

Nobles, grandees, lords; an Aramaic court title for high-ranking officials in the Babylonian-Persian empire.

An Aramaic noun formed by reduplication of rav ('great'), intensifying it to mean 'the very great ones' – nobles or grandees of the royal court. It appears exclusively in Daniel 4-6, describing the courtiers of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:36), the thousand nobles at Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:1-3, 9-10, 23), and the officials under Darius (Dan 6:17). The word captures the opulence and hierarchical structure of the imperial Babylonian and Persian courts. Spanish 'nobles,' French 'noble,' and German 'Grossen' all render the high social rank, while the reduplicative form itself signals emphatic grandeur.

nobles, grandees (Aramaic court title) (9×) Nobles, grandees, or lords of the royal court – an Aramaic intensified reduplicative form from rav ('great'), denoting the highest-ranking officials in the Babylonian and Persian imperial hierarchy. Used exclusively in Daniel: Nebuchadnezzar's nobles return to him after his restoration (Dan 4:36), Belshazzar feasts with a thousand of his grandees (Dan 5:1), and Darius's lords are present at key moments (Dan 6:17). The plural suffix forms (ravrvanai 'my nobles,' ravrvanohiy 'his nobles') reflect the possessive relationship between monarch and court. Spanish 'nobles' and German 'Grossen' consistently capture the elevated social rank. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:and-your-nobles), [ketiv:and-your-nobles], and-his-nobles | es: (y-tus-nobles), [y-tus-nobles], para-sus-nobles | fr: et-noble, noble | de: seine-Grossen, und-Grosse, und-seine-Grossen Dan 4:36; Dan 5:1; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:9

רַב H7262 N-ms (31×)

Rab-shakeh; an Assyrian military title meaning 'chief cupbearer' or 'chief officer,' used of Sennacherib's envoy.

Not a personal name but a high-ranking Assyrian title, Rabshakeh (rav-shaqeh) literally means 'chief of the cupbearers' or more broadly 'chief officer.' In the dramatic narrative of Sennacherib's siege of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18-19, Isa 36-37), the Rabshakeh serves as the Assyrian king's spokesman, delivering propaganda speeches in Hebrew to demoralize Hezekiah's people. English translations sometimes transliterate the title as a name. German 'Oberkellner' captures the cupbearer etymology, while Spanish and French simply transliterate 'Rabsaces' and 'Rabschake.' The title belongs to a cluster of Assyrian loan-titles including Rabsaris and Tartan.

Rabshakeh (chief cupbearer title) (31×) The Assyrian military-diplomatic title 'chief cupbearer' or 'chief officer,' designating Sennacherib's principal envoy to Jerusalem. In 2 Kings 18:17-37 and Isaiah 36:2-22, this official delivers threatening speeches in Hebrew outside Jerusalem's walls, challenging Hezekiah's trust in Yahweh. The title is a compound of rav ('chief') and shaqeh ('cupbearer'), reflecting the Assyrian court hierarchy borrowed into biblical Hebrew for these specific narrative contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Lakhish, Ravshakeh, Shaqeh | es: Rab, Saces, de-Rab | fr: Rabschaké, chef-des-gardes, nombreux | de: Oberkellner, Shaqeh 2Kgs 18:17; 2Kgs 18:19; 2Kgs 18:26

רֹגֶב H7263 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

clod of earth, lump of soil; hardened dirt

This noun refers to clods or lumps of earth, the hard chunks of soil that form when ground is dry or compacted. Job 38:38 describes clods clinging together when God pours rain, causing dust to become muddy mass. Job 21:33 speaks poetically of 'the clods of the valley' being sweet to the deceased—a euphemism for burial and return to earth. The term evokes agricultural imagery, where breaking up clods was necessary for planting. These earthen lumps symbolize both the dust of mortality and the physical ground humanity tills.

(2×) Spanish 'terrones' and English 'clods' capture the same earthy lumps. Both Job passages reference clods in death-related contexts—the clods of the valley that cover the dead (21:33) and clods joining together under rainfall (38:38). The agricultural imagery grounds these metaphysical reflections in physical reality. Clods represent earth in its most basic, unpretentious form—the soil that receives the dead and responds to divine watering. DUST AND POWDER

en: and-the-clods, clods-of | es: los-terrones-del, y-terrones | fr: et-רגבי | de: [ורגבים], [רגבי] Job 21:33; Job 38:38

רָגַז H7264 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (41×)

To tremble, quake, rage, or be agitated; of the earth shaking, people trembling in fear, or persons raging in fury; causatively, to disturb or provoke.

Ragaz captures the full spectrum of violent agitation — from the earth quaking beneath one's feet, to a person trembling in terror, to a king shaking with fury. Its Qal stem encompasses both fear-induced trembling and anger-driven agitation, a combination that might seem contradictory until one notices that the common thread is loss of composure, an involuntary physical shaking whether from dread or rage. The Hifil causative extends this into making others tremble or provoking them to anger. Arabic rajaza ('to tremble with rage or fear') preserves exactly this double valence, and Aramaic regaz ('to tremble, rage') confirms the root's ancient dual character. Spanish distinguishes the poles neatly: temblar for fear and enfurecerse for rage, revealing the two emotional currents that Hebrew holds in a single verb.

1. tremble, quake in fear (26×) The Qal sense of trembling or quaking in fear or awe — the dominant meaning at 26 occurrences. The peoples hear of the Exodus and tremble (Exod 15:14); the earth quakes at God's presence (Ps 99:1; Joel 2:1); David's heart is shattered and the whole city trembles at Absalom's death (2 Sam 18:33). The subject may be human or cosmic — nations, mountains, and the earth itself all ragaz before God. Spanish temblar/estremecerse, German erzittern, and Korean 떨다 all select involuntary-shaking vocabulary. The multilingual convergence on physical trembling confirms this as the word's semantic core, from which the rage senses develop as a secondary extension. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-it-quaked, and-they-will-tremble, and-trembled | es: Temblad, se-conmovieron, se-estremecerá | fr: [ירגז], et-cela-quaked, et-ils-fera-tremble | de: [ותרגז], [ירגז], [ירגזו] Exod 15:14; Deut 2:25; 1Sam 14:15; 2Sam 7:10; 2Sam 18:33

2. rage intensely (Hitpael) (4×) The Hitpael reflexive-intensive sense: to rage furiously, to be in a sustained state of fury. All 4 occurrences describe the same event from two parallel accounts — the Assyrian king's arrogant raging against God (2 Kgs 19:27-28 = Isa 37:28-29). God says: 'Because your raging against me has come to my ears, I will put my hook in your nose.' Spanish enfurecerte and the repeated multilingual 'raging' translations mark this as vehement, sustained fury rather than momentary agitation. The Hitpael morphology intensifies and reflexivizes the emotion: the subject works himself into a frenzy. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: your-raging | es: tu-enfurecerte | fr: ton-enragé, trembler | de: dein-raging, erzittern 2Kgs 19:27; 2Kgs 19:28; Isa 37:28; Isa 37:29

3. cause to tremble (Hifil) (4×) The Hifil causative sense of making something or someone tremble physically — 4 occurrences where God is typically the agent shaking the cosmos. God 'shakes the earth from its place' (Job 9:6); the LORD will 'make the heavens tremble' (Isa 13:13); the tyrant who 'made the earth tremble' and kingdoms shake (Isa 14:16); the LORD 'shook' nations through Tyre's fall (Isa 23:11). Spanish hacer estremecer ('to cause to tremble') and German erschüttern ('to shake') both use dedicated causative constructions, mirroring the Hebrew Hifil precisely. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: I-will-make-tremble, causing-to-tremble, he-shook | es: El-que-sacude, haré-estremecer, hizo-temblar | fr: le-trembler, trembler | de: [המרגיז], erzittern Job 9:6; Isa 13:13; Isa 14:16; Isa 23:11

4. rage, be agitated (3×) The Qal sense of emotional agitation, rage, or fury directed at someone — 3 occurrences where the trembling is anger rather than fear. In Proverbs 29:9 a fool 'rages' when taken to court; in Isaiah 28:21 God rises in 'strange' fury for his work; in Ezekiel 16:43 Jerusalem 'raged' against God (though the text is disputed). Spanish enfurecerse distinguishes this from temblar, while French uses s'irriter ('to become irritated'). The boundary between this sense and sense 1 lies in the emotional cause: fear versus anger, though both produce visible physical agitation. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: He-shall-rage, and-raging, and-you-raged- | es: se-enfurecerá, y-se-enfurece, y-te-estremeciste | fr: et-trembler, trembler | de: [ורגז], [ותרגזי], erzittern Prov 29:9; Isa 28:21; Ezek 16:43

5. disturb, provoke, agitate (Hifil) (3×) The Hifil causative sense of disturbing, provoking to anger, or causing unrest to another person — 3 occurrences. Saul complains that Samuel has 'disturbed' him by being summoned from the dead (1 Sam 28:15); Job notes that the tents of those who 'provoke God' are secure (Job 12:6); God will 'give no rest' to the oppressor of Israel (Jer 50:34). This differs from sense 3 in that the disturbance is psychological and relational rather than physical — provoking someone's ire or peace rather than shaking the ground. Spanish perturbar/provocar and German beunruhigen ('to disquiet') both mark this interpersonal-disturbance sense distinctly. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-give-unrest, did-you-disturb-me, to-provokers-of | es: e-inquiete, los-que-provocan-a, me-perturbaste | fr: et-trembler, fit-tu-disturb-moi, à-trembler | de: [למרגיזי], tat-du-disturb-mich, und-erzittern 1Sam 28:15; Job 12:6; Jer 50:34

6. (1×) A single Qal occurrence at Genesis 45:24 where Joseph sends his brothers off with the warning 'do not quarrel on the way.' The sense here is interpersonal strife or bickering — agitation turned outward into conflict between persons. Spanish riñáis ('quarrel'), German streitet ('argue'), and French quereller all select dispute-specific vocabulary rather than trembling or raging terms. This usage sits at the far end of ragaz's semantic arc: from cosmic quaking through personal fear and fury to everyday squabbling. CONTENDING AND STRIVING

en: quarrel | es: riñáis | fr: quarrel | de: streitet Gen 45:24

הִרְגִּיז H7265 V-Hifil-Perf-3mp (1×)

They provoked to anger; describes how Israel's ancestors angered God, leading to Babylonian exile (Ezra 5:12)

This Haphel perfect verb means 'they provoked to anger' or 'they enraged,' appearing in Ezra 5:12 in the Aramaic section of the book. Jewish leaders explain to the Persian governor why the temple was destroyed: 'Because our fathers had angered the God of heaven, he gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon.' The Haphel stem (causative) indicates that Israel's actions caused God to become angry. This theological interpretation of the exile locates the cause in covenant unfaithfulness—not Persian politics or Babylonian ambition, but Israel's sin that provoked divine judgment. The explanation serves as confession.

(1×) Ezra 5:12 contains the Jewish leaders' explanation to Tattenai the governor: 'But because our fathers provoked the God of heaven to anger, he gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house and carried away the people to Babylonia.' The verb הַרְגִּזוּ (causative perfect) indicates that Israel's persistent covenant breaking caused God's anger. Spanish 'hicieron enojar' (they made angry) captures the causative force. This isn't arbitrary divine wrath but responsive judgment—God's anger provoked by Israel's actions. The exile generation accepts responsibility rather than blaming external forces, recognizing that their own sin brought catastrophe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: provoked-to-anger | es: hicieron-enojar | fr: [הרגזו] | de: [הרגזו] Ezra 5:12

בְּרֻגְזָ֑ן H7266 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)
Rage, fury; describes King Nebuchadnezzar's intense anger in Daniel 3:13 when defied by the three friends
This masculine Aramaic noun means 'rage' or 'fury,' appearing in Daniel 3:13 to describe Nebuchadnezzar's emotional state when he learns that Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego have refused to worship his golden image. The text says the king was filled with 'rage' and commanded that they be brought before him. This is the explosive anger of an absolute monarch whose authority has been publicly challenged. The term conveys not mere irritation but intense, violent fury—the kind that threatens immediate, severe consequences. The king's rage sets the stage for the fiery furnace ordeal.

(1×) Daniel 3:13 describes the king's reaction: 'Then Nebuchadnezzar in rage and fury commanded that Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego be brought.' The phrase 'in rage' (בִּרְגָז) emphasizes the emotional intensity—this is volcanic anger, not measured displeasure. Spanish 'con ira' (with wrath) and the context of absolute monarchy suggest dangerous fury. The three Jews have done the unthinkable: defied the king's explicit command in public view. Nebuchadnezzar's rage reflects wounded pride and threatened authority. The term's intensity prepares readers for the extremity of the punishment—heating the furnace seven times hotter than usual. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-rage | es: con-ira | fr: rage | de: [ברגז] Dan 3:13

רֹ֫גֶז H7267 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)
Agitation, turmoil, rage, or thunder; covers inner restlessness, divine wrath, and the rumbling of God's voice.
A Hebrew noun capturing the spectrum from inner disturbance to cosmic power. In Job's laments it describes the turmoil and restless trouble that plague mortal life (Job 3:17, 26; 14:1), and in Isaiah 14:3 it names the hard servitude from which God grants relief. At its most intense it denotes fierce rage – the war-horse's trembling fury (Job 39:24) or God's own wrath that Habakkuk begs him to temper with mercy (Hab 3:2). In Job 37:2 it uniquely describes the thunderous rumbling of God's voice, where Spanish 'rugido' (roar) and English 'thunder' both capture the awe-inspiring natural sound.

1. agitation, turmoil, trouble (4×) Inner agitation, emotional turmoil, and restless trouble – the unsettled condition of human suffering. In Job 3:17 the wicked finally cease from rōgez in death; in 3:26 Job laments having no rest or quietness but only turmoil. Isaiah 14:3 pairs it with hard bondage. Spanish 'turbación' and French 'agitation' both render this unsettled distress. (Job 3:17, 26; 14:1; Isa 14:3) TUMULT AND UPROAR
en: and-from-your-turmoil, raging, trouble | es: turbación, y-de-tu-agitación | fr: [ומרגזך], agitation | de: [ומרגזך], [רגז] Job 3:17; Job 3:26; Job 14:1; Isa 14:3

2. rage, wrath (divine or fierce) (2×) Fierce rage or divine wrath – a more intense, active force than mere anxiety. The war-horse swallows the ground 'with rage and fury' (Job 39:24), and Habakkuk pleads that God remember mercy 'in wrath' (Hab 3:2). Spanish 'ira/furor' and English 'rage/wrath' uniformly mark the heightened emotional violence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-rage, in-wrath | es: en-la-ira, y-furor | fr: agitation, et-agitation | de: [ברגז], [ורגז] Job 39:24; Hab 3:2

3. thunder, rumbling (of God's voice) (1×) The thunderous rumbling of God's voice, a unique meteorological sense in Job 37:2 where bĕrōgez qōlô means 'in the thunder of His voice.' Spanish 'rugido' (roar) captures the animalistic power of the sound, while English 'thunder' and French 'agitation' reflect the awe of theophanic storm imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-the-thunder-of | es: en-rugido-de | fr: dans-agitation | de: [ברגז] Job 37:2

רַגְז H7268 Adj-ms (1×)
Trembling, quaking; describes the anxious, fearful heart promised as covenant curse in Deuteronomy 28:65
This adjective means 'trembling' or 'quaking,' appearing in Deuteronomy 28:65 within the covenant curses. If Israel disobeys, they will find 'no respite among the nations, and there will be no rest for the sole of your foot, but the LORD will give you there a trembling heart.' This describes psychological torment—a heart that continuously quakes with anxiety, never at peace. It's the internal experience of exile: perpetual fear, constant insecurity, and inability to find rest. The 'trembling heart' complements physical exile; even if the body finds temporary safety, the soul remains in distress.

(1×) Deuteronomy 28:65 warns of exile's psychological horror: 'Among those nations you shall find no respite, and there shall be no resting place for the sole of your foot, but the LORD will give you there a trembling heart, failing eyes, and a languishing soul.' The adjective 'trembling' (רָגְז) modifies 'heart,' creating the image of internal, constant quaking—never secure, always anxious. Spanish 'tembloroso' (trembling, shaking) captures the continuous nature. This isn't occasional fear but perpetual dread; the heart never settles into peace. Paired with 'failing eyes' and 'languishing soul,' it paints complete psychological collapse—God's judgment affects not just circumstances but inner emotional life. TREMBLING AND FEAR
en: trembling | es: tembloroso | fr: trembling | de: trembling Deut 28:65

בִּרְגָזָ֔ה H7269 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
With quaking; describes the trembling manner in which Ezekiel is commanded to eat, symbolizing Jerusalem's distress
This feminine noun means 'quaking' or 'trembling,' appearing in Ezekiel 12:18 as part of a prophetic sign-act. God commands Ezekiel: 'Son of man, eat your bread with quaking, and drink your water with trembling and anxiety.' The prophet's meal becomes a symbolic performance representing Jerusalem's experience during the siege—eating in fear and distress, never secure even at mealtime. The noun is paired with 'trembling,' creating an emphatic combination. Ezekiel's table becomes a stage where he embodies the coming terror, his physical actions preaching a sermon about Jerusalem's impending suffering.

(1×) Ezekiel 12:18 records God's command: 'Son of man, eat your bread with quaking, and drink your water with trembling and anxiety.' The noun 'quaking' (בִּרְגָזָה) describes the manner of eating—not peaceful dining but fearful consumption. Paired with רַעַשׁ (trembling), it creates an image of someone eating under duress, perhaps during a siege when every meal might be the last. Spanish 'con estremecimiento' (with shuddering) captures the visceral sense. Ezekiel's acted prophecy makes him a living picture of Jerusalem's terror—even basic sustenance becomes an anxious, fearful act when the city is surrounded and hope is dying. TREMBLING AND FEAR
en: with-quaking | es: con-estremecimiento | fr: pauvreté | de: [ברגזה] Ezek 12:18

רָגַל H7270 Prep-k / V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (25×)
To spy out, reconnoiter a land; also to slander, go about as a talebearer Derived denominatively from regel ('foot'), this verb captures two ways of 'going about on foot': scouting enemy territory and spreading malicious talk. The overwhelming majority of occurrences describe military espionage – Joseph's accusation that his brothers are spies (Gen 42:9), the reconnaissance of Jericho (Josh 2:1), and Moses' scouts at Jazer (Num 21:32). Spanish espias and German Kundschafter consistently render the spy sense. The rare slander meaning (2 Sam 19:27; Ps 15:3) preserves the etymological link between footwork and gossip, much as English 'going around telling tales' does.

1. spy out, reconnoiter (23×) To explore or investigate a place secretly as a military scout or spy (Piel stem). The Piel participle meraggelim ('spies') dominates, especially in the Joseph narrative (Gen 42:9, 11, 14, 16, 30) and the conquest accounts (Josh 2:1; 6:22-25; 7:2). Spanish espias, French espions, and German Kundschafter all confirm the espionage sense. Also attested as infinitive construct (leraggel, Num 21:32) and imperative (raglu, Josh 7:2). GOING OUT AND FORTH en: and-spied-out, and-they-spied-out, and-to-spy-it-out | es: a-espiar, espías, los-espías | fr: espions, et-espionna-dehors, et-ils-spied-dehors | de: Kundschafter, der-Kundschafter, spies Gen 42:9; Gen 42:11; Gen 42:14; Gen 42:16; Gen 42:30

2. slander, go about as talebearer (2×) To slander or spread malicious reports about someone, preserving the etymological sense of 'going about on foot' with evil intent. Attested in the Qal (Ps 15:3, 'he does not take slander upon his tongue') and Piel (2 Sam 19:27, Mephibosheth's complaint that Ziba slandered him). Spanish calumnio and the broader Semitic parallels (Arabic musha, 'slanderer,' from a walking root) confirm this semantic extension from physical movement to social harm. FEET AND LEGS

en: and-he-slandered, slandering | es: Y-calumnió, calumnió | fr: et-il-slandered, pied | de: slandering, und-er-slandered 2Sam 19:27; Ps 15:3

רֶגֶל H7271 N-fd (8×)

Foot or feet, used exclusively in Daniel's apocalyptic visions of the great statue and beasts.

An Aramaic noun for 'foot' or 'feet,' appearing only in Daniel's visionary literature. It describes the feet of the great image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream – partly iron, partly clay (Dan 2:33-42) – and the terrible feet of the fourth beast that trampled everything (Dan 7:4, 7, 19). Spanish and English glosses uniformly render it as 'feet' (pies/feet), confirming a single, consistent sense throughout all eight occurrences. Though the word is ordinary in meaning, its exclusive context in apocalyptic imagery gives it a charged, symbolic weight.

foot/feet (body part) (8×) The physical foot or feet of a figure seen in prophetic vision. All eight occurrences appear in Daniel: the dual form describes the feet of Nebuchadnezzar's composite statue (Dan 2:33, 34, 41, 42), whose iron-and-clay feet signify a fragile kingdom, and the feet of fearsome beasts (Dan 7:4, 7, 19). Every multilingual witness – English 'feet,' Spanish 'pies,' and cognate Aramaic parallels – converges on the same body-part meaning with no metaphorical extension. FEET AND LEGS

en: (qere:with-its-feet), [ketiv:with-its-feet], feet | es: [con-pies-de-ella], con-pie-de-ella, con-pies-de-ella | fr: [ברגלה], [ברגליה], [ברגליה] | de: [ברגלה], [ברגליה], [ברגליה] Dan 2:33; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:41; Dan 2:42; Dan 7:4

רֶגֶל H7272 Prep-b / N-fdc / 2mp (251×)

Foot, feet; by extension leg, pace, step; idiomatically 'on foot' (pedestrian) and 'times' (occurrences).

Regel is one of the most concrete and embodied nouns in Hebrew, rooted firmly in the physical foot that walks dusty roads, stands on holy ground, and is washed by a gracious host. Yet like many body-part terms, it extends into rich figurative territory. The dual raglayim appears in prostration scenes, travel narratives, and euphemistic contexts alike. When paired with prepositions, regel can describe proximity ('at one's feet,' meaning under one's authority or protection), mode of travel ('on foot,' as opposed to mounted), or pace and gait ('at the foot of the cattle,' Gen 33:14, meaning matching their walking speed). Most surprisingly, the plural regalim developed into a counting word for 'times' — as in 'three regalim' meaning three pilgrimage festivals (Exod 23:14) — a metonymy from repeated footsteps to repeated occasions that Arabic ṭawf (from the root 'to pass by') parallels beautifully. Cognates span the Semitic family: Arabic rijl, Aramaic rigla, and even Ethiopic saragala ('vehicle,' from the foot-powered idea of conveyance).

1. foot (body part) (236×) The primary anatomical sense: the physical foot of a human or animal — 236 of 251 occurrences, making this overwhelmingly dominant. Covers foot-washing hospitality (Gen 18:4; 24:32), the sacred command to remove sandals on holy ground (Exod 3:5), the priestly ritual of applying blood to the right foot (Lev 8:23), skin disease inspection extending to the feet (Lev 13:12), and dozens of prepositional phrases meaning 'at/under/to one's feet.' Spanish pie/pies, Korean 발, Arabic ڕ, and Swahili miguu all select basic foot vocabulary. The dual raglayim is the standard form in most contexts, reflecting the natural pairing of the body part. FEET AND LEGS

en: feet-my, his-feet, my-feet | es: mis-pies, pies-de-mí, sus-pies | fr: mes-pieds, mes-pieds,, mon-pied-moi | de: Fuesse-von, mein-Fuesse, mein-Fuss Gen 24:32; Gen 41:44; Exod 24:10; Lev 8:23; Lev 13:12

2. (4×) The metonymic extension to 'times' (occurrences, repetitions) — 4 occurrences, all involving counting. At Exod 23:14 Israel is commanded to celebrate 'three regalim a year,' the pilgrimage festivals. In the Balaam narrative, the donkey turns aside 'three regalim' (Num 22:28, 32, 33). The conceptual link is from repeated footsteps or foot-journeys to the abstract idea of 'occasions.' Spanish veces, Korean 번, German Male, and French fois all use dedicated counting words, confirming that no target language preserves the foot metaphor — it is uniquely Semitic. This sense is the etymological origin of the term shalosh regalim for the three pilgrimage festivals. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: times | es: veces | fr: fois | de: Zeiten Exod 23:14; Num 22:28; Num 22:32; Num 22:33

3. on foot (pedestrian) (4×) Adverbial usage meaning 'on foot' (pedestrian travel) — 4 occurrences where the prepositional phrase be-regel or ragli functions as an adverb indicating mode of travel, contrasting with mounted or riding. In 2 Sam 15:16-18 David's household departs 'on foot' during Absalom's revolt; Ps 66:6 recalls Israel crossing the sea 'on foot.' Hindi पैदल (a dedicated pedestrian adverb), Spanish a pie, and Korean 도보로 all confirm this as a lexicalized adverbial sense rather than a literal reference to the body part. The military context of several occurrences (foot soldiers versus cavalry) reinforces the pedestrian-versus-mounted distinction. ON FOOT INFANTRY

en: on-foot, on-foot-from | es: a-pie, a-pies-de-él | fr: dans-pied, sur-pied, sur-pied-de | de: auf-Fuss, auf-Fuss-von 2Sam 15:16; 2Sam 15:17; 2Sam 15:18; Ps 66:6

4. leg (lower limb) (4×) The extended anatomical sense: leg or lower limb, not just the foot — 4 occurrences where the reference clearly includes the shin, calf, or entire lower leg. The bronze greaves reaching to Goliath's shins (1 Sam 17:6) and the legs of the tabernacle table (Exod 25:26; 37:13) use regel for the full limb. Spanish pierna ('leg') and Korean 다리 ('leg,' distinct from 발 'foot') both select limb vocabulary, and Ezek 16:25 (spreading one's legs) likewise requires the broader anatomical reference. The shift from foot to leg is natural and parallels English usage ('at the foot of the bed' meaning the lower end). FEET AND LEGS

en: its-legs, legs-his, legs-your | es: piernas-de-ti, piernas-suyas, sus-patas | fr: legs-son, pied, son-jambes | de: Fuss, legs-sein, sein-legs Exod 25:26; Exod 37:13; 1Sam 17:6; Ezek 16:25

5. pace or step (3×) Pace, step, or gait — 3 occurrences where regel denotes the manner or speed of walking rather than the body part itself. Jacob tells Esau he will travel 'at the foot of the livestock' and 'at the foot of the children' (Gen 33:14), meaning matching their walking pace. In Gen 30:30, Laban's wealth increased 'at my foot,' i.e., following Jacob's pace of work. Arabic خُطوة ('step/pace'), Hindi गति ('pace'), and Spanish paso ('step') all select motion-manner vocabulary, confirming a metonymic shift from the instrument of walking to the rate of movement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-pace-of, at-foot-my, at-pace-of | es: a-paso-de, a-pie-mío, y-a-paso-de | fr: et-à-pace-de, à-pace-de, à-pied-mon | de: auf-meinem-Fuß, nach-dem-Fuß, und-nach-dem-Fuß Gen 30:30; Gen 33:14

רַגְלִי H7273 Adj-ms (12×)

Foot-soldier, infantryman — a man who goes to battle on foot, as distinguished from charioteers and cavalry

The noun רַגְלִי (ragli), derived from רֶגֶל ('foot'), designates a soldier who fights on foot — an infantryman. It appears in contexts emphasizing the sheer number of Israel's fighting men or contrasting them with mounted warriors. At the Exodus, about six hundred thousand 'men on foot' departed Egypt (Exod 12:37; Num 11:21). Israel musters four hundred thousand foot-soldiers against Benjamin (Judg 20:2), and thirty thousand fall to the Philistines (1 Sam 4:10). Second Samuel 8:4 and 2 Kings 13:7 contrast infantry with chariots and horsemen. Spanish 'soldado de a pie' and French 'fantassin' both convey the unmounted combat role.

foot-soldier, on foot (infantry) (12×) A foot-soldier or infantryman — a man who marches and fights on foot, as distinguished from charioteers and horsemen. Used for the mass of Israel's fighting men at the Exodus (Exod 12:37; Num 11:21), the tribal muster in the judges period (Judg 20:2), and battlefield casualties or troop counts in the monarchy (1 Sam 4:10; 15:4; 2 Sam 8:4; 2 Kgs 13:7). The contrast with chariotry and cavalry highlights the foot-soldier as the basic unit of ancient Israelite military strength. Spanish 'soldado de a pie' and German 'Fußsoldat' both reflect the literal etymological connection to 'foot.' ON FOOT INFANTRY

en: foot-soldiers, footmen, on-foot | es: a-pie, de-a-pie, de-pie | fr: [רגלי], [רגלים], pied-soldats | de: Fuesse-von, Fuss-Soldaten, [רגלים] Exod 12:37; Num 11:21; Judg 20:2; 1Sam 4:10; 1Sam 15:4

רֹגְלִים H7274 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Rogelim, town in Gilead; home of Barzillai the benefactor

Rogelim was a town in the Transjordan region of Gilead, notable as the home of Barzillai the Gileadite. When David fled from Absalom, Barzillai came from Rogelim bringing provisions to sustain the king and his followers (2 Samuel 17:27). Later, the aged Barzillai came from Rogelim to accompany David across the Jordan as the king returned to Jerusalem (19:31). The name possibly relates to fullers or those who tread cloth. Rogelim represents loyal support from the Transjordan during David's greatest crisis.

(2×) The transliterations are consistent: 'Rogelim/Roguelim' with the prepositional prefix 'from.' Both 2 Samuel passages identify Barzillai by his hometown Rogelim (17:27, 19:31), establishing geographical identity for this wealthy, loyal supporter. The town's name appears only in connection with Barzillai's assistance to David during Absalom's rebellion, making it synonymous with faithful support when the kingdom seemed lost. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Rogelim | es: de-Roguelim | fr: de-Rogelim | de: von-Rogelim 2Sam 17:27; 2Sam 19:31

רָגַם H7275 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp / 3ms (16×)

To stone, kill by stoning — communal execution by pelting with stones as prescribed by law

A verb for the act of throwing stones at a person, always in the context of legally prescribed execution or threatened mob violence. Nearly every occurrence falls within Pentateuchal legislation: stoning is mandated for blasphemy (Lev 24:14, 16), Molech worship (Lev 20:2), necromancy (Lev 20:27), Sabbath violation (Num 15:35-36), and a rebellious son (Deut 21:21). The narrative uses are equally dramatic — Achan is stoned after his sin at Jericho (Josh 7:25), Adoram is stoned by the northern tribes in revolt (1 Kgs 12:18), and the congregation threatens to stone Moses and Aaron (Num 14:10). French 'lapider' and Spanish 'apedrear' both render the judicial force of this act.

stone, pelt with stones (16×) To stone or pelt with stones as a form of communal judicial execution, the sole Qal sense of רָגַם. Prescribed in Priestly and Deuteronomic law for capital offenses including blasphemy (Lev 24:14, 16), idolatry (Lev 20:2, 27), Sabbath-breaking (Num 15:35-36), and filial rebellion (Deut 21:21). In narrative it appears for Achan's execution (Josh 7:25), the stoning of Adoram (1 Kgs 12:18; 2 Chr 10:18), and the threatened stoning of Zechariah (2 Chr 24:21). The expression 'stone with stones' (ragam ba'avanim) underscores the communal, participatory nature of this punishment. STONING PUNISHMENT

en: and-shall-stone, and-shall-stone-him, and-stoned | es: Apedreando, Y-apedrearán, Y-lo-apedrearán | fr: [ויירגמהו], [ויירגמו], devra-pierre- | de: [ויירגמהו], [ויירגמו], [ודרגמו] Lev 20:2; Lev 20:27; Lev 24:14; Lev 24:16

רֻגֹם H7276 N-proper-ms (1×)

Regem; a descendant of Caleb listed in 1 Chronicles 2:47, name possibly related to 'friend' in Arabic cognates

This proper masculine name appears in 1 Chronicles 2:47 within the genealogy of Judah, specifically among Caleb's descendants through Jahdai. The name Regem appears without additional narrative—simply listed as one of several brothers. Comparative Semitic philology suggests a possible connection to Arabic rajm (friend) or Sabaic inscriptions, but the etymology remains uncertain. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, Regem is mentioned nowhere else in Scripture, making it impossible to reconstruct this person's life or significance beyond preserving family lineage within Judah's tribal records.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:47 lists Jahdai's sons: 'The sons of Jahdai: Regem, Jotham, Geshan, Pelet, Ephah, and Shaaph.' The name appears without elaboration—no deeds, no descendants, just genealogical preservation. The Greek Septuagint transliterates it as Ραγεμ or Ρεγεμ, showing relatively stable textual transmission. The name's possible connection to Semitic roots meaning 'friend' is speculative. What matters theologically is Chronicles' impulse to preserve names and lineages, maintaining tribal identity through exile and return. Regem, otherwise unknown, is not forgotten—his place in Judah's family tree is secured. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Regem | es: Reguem | fr: [רגם] | de: [רגם] 1Chr 2:47

רִגְמָה H7277 N-fsc / 3mp (1×)

Their throng; likely textual error for 'their company,' referring to worshipers in Psalm 68:27

This feminine noun with suffix probably means 'their throng' or 'their crowd,' though scholars widely agree it's a textual corruption appearing in Psalm 68:27. The verse describes Israelite tribes coming to worship: 'There is Benjamin in their throng.' However, the Hebrew form is problematic, and most scholars propose reading 'their company' or 'their assembly' instead, involving a small consonantal change. The context is liturgical—tribes processing together to the temple. Whether 'throng' or 'company,' the sense is corporate worship, the communal gathering of God's people in festive procession.

(1×) Psalm 68:27 describes tribal worship: 'Bless God in the great congregation, the LORD, O you who are of Israel's fountain! There is Benjamin, the least of them, in their throng, the princes of Judah in their company...' The phrase 'in their throng' (רִגְמָתָם) is textually suspect; scholars favor emending to רִגְשָׁתָם (their company/assembly), requiring minimal consonantal change. Spanish 'su multitud' (their multitude) attempts to make sense of the received text. The verse pictures tribal representatives streaming to Jerusalem's temple—Benjamin leading despite being smallest, Judah's nobles in colorful array. The term, however emended, conveys the joyful, crowded nature of pilgrimage worship. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: in-their-throng | es: su-multitud | fr: assemblée | de: in-ihr-throng Ps 68:27

רֶגֶם מֶלֶךְ H7278 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Regem-Melech; a Jewish leader sent to inquire about fasting in Zechariah 7:2, name means 'friend of the king'

This proper masculine name belongs to one of the men sent from Bethel to Jerusalem to inquire whether fasting should continue now that the temple is being rebuilt. Zechariah 7:2 mentions 'Sharezer and Regem-Melech and their men' coming with this question. The compound name means something like 'friend of the king' or 'royal friend,' possibly indicating a court position or honorific. The delegation's question triggers an extended prophetic response about the nature of true fasting and obedience. Regem-Melech himself is otherwise unknown, mentioned only in this diplomatic/religious inquiry context.

(1×) Zechariah 7:2 introduces the delegation: 'Now the people of Bethel had sent Sharezer and Regem-Melech and their men to entreat the favor of the LORD.' The compound name 'Regem-Melech' (רֶגֶם מֶלֶךְ) could be personal or titular—'friend of the king.' The question they bring concerns whether to continue mourning and fasting in the fifth month, as they had done during the exile. This inquiry occasions Zechariah's oracle about how God values justice and mercy over ritualistic fasting. The Septuagint struggles with the name (Αρβεσεερ ὁ Βασιλεύς), suggesting translators were uncertain whether to treat it as one name or two words. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Regem-Melekh | es: y-a-Regem-melec | fr: et-Regem-Mélek | de: [ורגם מלך] Zech 7:2

רָגַן H7279 Conj-w | V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3mp (3×)

murmur, grumble (rebelliously); backbite, slander

This verb describes discontented murmuring, whether rebellious complaining against authority or malicious whispering about others. Deuteronomy and Psalms use it for Israel's murmuring against God in the wilderness—low, sullen complaints spoken in tents rather than open speech. Isaiah extends it to those who murmur skeptically against prophetic instruction. The Niphal participle in Proverbs means a backbiter or whisperer who spreads malicious gossip.

(3×) The word captures both rebellious murmuring against God and malicious gossip about people. Deuteronomy 1:27 and Psalm 106:25 recall Israel's faithless grumbling in their tents during the wilderness wandering—discontented complaining about God's leadership. Isaiah 29:24 describes murmurers who will learn doctrine, suggesting skeptical resistance to teaching. While these uses emphasize rebellious discontent, the root also produces 'backbiter' in wisdom literature—someone who whispers and spreads slander. Whether vertical (against divine authority) or horizontal (against neighbors), the verb denotes low, subversive speech rather than open confrontation. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: and-grumblers, and-they-grumbled, and-you-murmured | es: Y-murmuraron, Y-murmurasteis, y-los-murmuradores | fr: [ורוגנים], et-murmurer, et-tu-murmura | de: [ורוגנים], und-du-murmured, und-sie-grumbled Deut 1:27; Ps 106:25; Isa 29:24

רָגַע H7280a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

To stir up or disturb (the sea); to be still, calm; in a moment, suddenly (Hiphil adverbial use)

A compact verb that spans the paradox of divine power over the sea. In the Qal participle, God is 'the one who stirs up the sea so that its waves roar' (Jer 31:35; Isa 51:15) – the sovereign agitator of cosmic waters. Yet in Job 26:12 the same root appears to mean the opposite: 'by His power He stilled the sea,' the cosmic storm-tamer. The Hiphil denominative, derived from the noun rega' (a moment), yields an adverbial sense – 'in a twinkling' – used of the fleeting nature of falsehood (Prov 12:19) and the instantaneous speed of divine judgment (Jer 49:19; 50:44).

1. in a moment (Hiphil adverbial) (3×) To act in an instant, suddenly, in a moment (Hiphil denominative from rega'). In Proverbs 12:19 a lying tongue lasts only 'for a twinkling,' contrasted with truth established forever. In Jeremiah 49:19 and 50:44, God declares 'in a moment I will chase them away,' emphasizing the terrifying swiftness of divine judgment. Spanish 'en un momento' and English 'in a moment/for a moment' consistently render this temporal adverbial usage. MOMENT INSTANT

en: for-a-moment, in-a-moment | es: en-un-momento, un-momento | fr: [אַרגִיעָה], [אַרגעָה], אַרגִיעָה | de: [אַרגִיעָה], [אַרגעָה] Prov 12:19; Jer 49:19; Jer 50:44

2. stir up, disturb (Qal active) (2×) To stir up, agitate, or disturb, especially of the sea and its waves (Qal active participle). Isaiah 51:15 and Jeremiah 31:35 use the identical phrase: God is 'the one who stirs up the sea so that its waves roar.' This is a title of cosmic sovereignty – the Creator who commands the chaotic deep. Spanish 'el que agita' (the one who agitates) and English 'stirring up' preserve the active divine agency over primordial waters. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: stirrer-of, stirring-up | es: el-que-agita | fr: [רגע] | de: Augenblick Isa 51:15; Jer 31:35

3. still, calm (Qal perfect) (1×) To still or calm the sea (Qal perfect), apparently the opposite of sense 2 yet expressing the same divine mastery. In Job 26:12, 'by His power He stilled the sea' stands alongside the smiting of Rahab, depicting God's victory over chaos. Some scholars suggest the root carries a neutral sense of 'setting in motion' that context specifies as either agitation or calming. Spanish 'agitó' interestingly preserves the ambiguity. BOLD BREAK FORTH

en: He-stilled | es: agitó | fr: רגע | de: [רגע] Job 26:12

רָגַע H7280b Prep-l | V-Hifil-Inf | 3ms (6×)

To be at rest, repose; in Hifil, to give rest or establish firmly

A verb expressing cessation of turmoil and the attainment of rest or stability. In the Niphal, it conveys the imperative 'be still!' as in Jeremiah 47:6, where the prophet commands the sword of the Lord to return to its sheath and be quiet. The Hifil carries both a causative sense – 'give rest to' (Jer 31:2, of God leading Israel to rest) – and a more specialized meaning of establishing something permanently, as in Isaiah 51:4 where God's justice is 'settled' as a light for the peoples. The Arabic cognate raja'a (to return) suggests the underlying image is of returning to a state of repose after wandering or agitation.

1. give rest, be at rest (5×) To be at rest or to cause rest; in Niphal 'be still, repose' (Jer 47:6), in Hifil 'give rest to' (Jer 31:2, Jer 50:34). Spanish 'descansarás' and 'para-darle-descanso' (to give him rest) capture the range from intransitive repose to causative granting of peace. Deut 28:65 uses the negative – Israel will find no rest – intensifying the covenantal warning. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: be-still, he-may-give-rest, shall-rest | es: descansarás, dé-descanso, para-darle-descanso | fr: [הרגִיע], [הרגִיעָה], [הרגעִי] | de: [הרגִיע], [הרגִיעָה], [הרגעִי] Deut 28:65; Isa 34:14; Jer 31:2; Jer 47:6; Jer 50:34

2. establish, settle firmly (1×) To establish or settle something firmly in place, a specialized Hifil usage in Isa 51:4 where God declares 'I will establish my justice as a light to the peoples.' Spanish 'estableceré' (I will establish) distinguishes this from mere rest, pointing toward permanent founding. This sense extends the root metaphor: what is truly at rest is what has been fixed in its proper place. RISING AND DAWNING

en: I-will-establish | es: estableceré | fr: [אַרגִיע] | de: [אַרגִיע] Isa 51:4

רָגַע H7280c V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

Hardens; describes skin crusting over in Job 7:5, possibly related to coagulation or skin disease crusting

This verb appears once in Job 7:5 meaning 'hardens' or 'crusts over,' describing the behavior of Job's diseased skin. Job laments: 'My flesh is clothed with worms and dirt; my skin hardens and then runs again.' The verb captures the cyclical nature of his skin condition—forming a crust or scab that then breaks open and oozes. Ethiopic cognates suggest meanings like 'coagulate' or 'congeal,' fitting the medical description. This is graphic, visceral language depicting the horror of elephantiasis or similar skin disease. Job's complaint emphasizes the relentless, disgusting nature of his physical suffering.

(1×) Job 7:5 describes his physical torment: 'My flesh is clothed with worms and dirt; my skin hardens, then runs again.' The verb רָגַע (hardens) captures the crusting process—the skin forms a hard scab or crust (possibly coagulated tissue) which then breaks down and suppurates ('runs again'). Spanish 'se agrieta' (cracks, splits) conveys the breaking of the crust. This cyclic pattern—hardening then running—creates unending misery; Job never heals but oscillates between scabbing and oozing. The vocabulary is deliberately repulsive, forcing readers to viscerally experience Job's degradation as his body becomes a site of perpetual decay. BOLD BREAK FORTH

en: hardens | es: se-agrieta | fr: רגע | de: [רגע] Job 7:5

רֶגַע H7281 Prep-l | N-mp (22×)

A moment, instant; a brief span of time, often used adverbially for suddenness or fleeting duration.

Probably derived from a root meaning 'to move or wink,' this noun captures the briefest conceivable span of time — a single blink, a heartbeat. It appears in some of Scripture's most theologically rich contrasts: 'His anger is but for a moment; his favor is for a lifetime' (Ps 30:5). Isaiah uses it tenderly: 'For a brief moment I forsook you, but with great compassion I will gather you' (Isa 54:7–8). In its adverbial uses, it conveys the terrifying speed of divine judgment — destruction arrives 'in a moment' (Job 21:13; Jer 4:20). Korean and Japanese renderings emphasize 'the blink of an eye,' echoing the probable etymological connection to eye-movement.

1. moment, brief period of time (13×) A moment or brief period of time used as a temporal noun — 'a moment,' 'every moment,' 'for a little moment.' Found in expressions describing divine patience (Job 7:18, 'every moment you test him'), the brevity of divine anger versus enduring favor (Ps 30:5), and the fleeting nature of the wicked's prosperity (Job 20:5). Spanish 'instante' and French 'instant' mirror the compact temporal sense faithfully. MOMENT INSTANT

en: And-moment, Moment, a-moment | es: Instante, Por-momento, Y-instante | fr: [רגע], et-instant, instant | de: Augenblick, [לרגעים], [רגע] Exod 33:5; Ezra 9:8; Job 7:18; Job 20:5; Ps 30:5

2. in an instant, suddenly (9×) An adverbial use expressing suddenness or instantaneity, typically with a preposition (בְּרֶגַע 'in a moment,' כְּרֶגַע 'like a moment'). This sense dominates in contexts of swift divine action — the congregation could be consumed 'in a moment' (Num 16:21, 45), the wicked perish suddenly (Job 21:13; 34:20), and enemies are put to shame 'in an instant' (Ps 6:10). The shift from duration to punctiliar suddenness is captured across languages: Spanish 'en un instante,' French 'dans un moment.' MOMENT INSTANT

en: a-moment, and-in-moment, in-a-moment | es: Instante, en-un-instante, en-un-momento | fr: comme-instant, dans-un-moment, et-instant | de: Augenblick, [וברגע], [רגע] Num 16:21; Num 16:45; Job 21:13; Job 34:20; Ps 6:10

רָגַע H7282 Adj-mpc (1×)

Quiet ones; refers to peaceful, tranquil people of the land in Psalm 35:20, contrasted with the wicked

This adjective means 'quiet,' 'restful,' or 'peaceful,' appearing in Psalm 35:20 to describe the righteous who live peacefully in the land. David contrasts the wicked, who devise deceit 'against those who are quiet in the land'—people who aren't looking for trouble but are simply living faithful lives. These are the peaceable, the untroubled worshipers of Yahweh who get targeted precisely because of their quiet faithfulness. The term conveys both physical tranquility (not warlike or aggressive) and spiritual peace (trusting God, at rest). They represent an ideal of covenant life—settled, peaceful, godly existence.

(1×) Psalm 35:20 contrasts wicked schemers with their victims: 'For they do not speak peace, but against those who are quiet in the land they devise words of deceit.' The phrase 'quiet ones of the land' (רְגְעֵי־אֶרֶץ) describes peaceable, righteous people who aren't agitators or troublemakers. Spanish 'los quietos de' (the quiet ones of) and German 'quiet people of' preserve the sense. These are worshipers living faithfully, yet the wicked target them—perhaps because their very peacefulness and trust in God condemn the wicked's schemes. The 'quiet ones' represent vulnerable righteousness that requires God's protection against malicious plotting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: quiet-ones-of | es: los-quietos-de | fr: paisible | de: quiet-Leute-von Ps 35:20

רָגַשׁ H7283 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

They rage; describes nations in tumultuous uproar against God's anointed in Psalm 2:1

This verb means 'to rage' or 'to be in tumult,' appearing in Psalm 2:1's opening question: 'Why do the nations rage and the peoples plot in vain?' The term conveys noisy, chaotic commotion—nations in uproar, throngs in agitated motion. Cognate languages suggest ideas of vehement noise or disturbance. The psalm depicts worldwide rebellion against God and his anointed king, with nations conspiring to throw off divine sovereignty. Their raging is ultimately futile ('in vain'), but the verb captures the intensity and seriousness of their rebellion. It's not quiet dissent but loud, aggressive opposition to God's rule.

(1×) Psalm 2:1 opens with rhetorical shock: 'Why do the nations rage and the peoples plot in vain?' The verb רָגְשׁוּ (they rage) describes collective, tumultuous rebellion—not individual dissent but corporate uprising. Spanish 'se amotinaron' (they mutinied/rioted) catches the rebellious, disorderly sense. The Aramaic cognate often translates Hebrew 'tumult' or 'roar.' The question 'Why?' expresses divine incredulity: what could motivate such futile rebellion against the Creator? Yet history repeatedly shows nations raging against God's purposes. The psalm's answer is that God laughs at their pretensions—no human coalition can overthrow divine sovereignty over the earth. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: do-rage | es: se-amotinaron | fr: être-agité | de: tun-Grimm Ps 2:1

רְגַשׁ H7284 V-Hifil-Perf-3mp (3×)

come thronging, assemble tumultuously (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb describes tumultuous assembly or urgent thronging together, appearing in Daniel's account of Persian court intrigue. The Hafel form indicates officials rushing or crowding together urgently, creating a scene of agitated collective action. Daniel 6 uses it for the conspirators who gathered en masse before King Darius to demand enforcement of the unchangeable decree against Daniel.

(3×) The term captures the aggressive, urgent assembly of a group with intent. All three occurrences in Daniel 6 (verses 6, 11, 15) describe the officials, satraps, and governors 'coming thronging' to the king—first to propose the irrevocable decree, then to accuse Daniel, finally to demand its enforcement. The verb suggests not calm deliberation but urgent, perhaps disorderly pressing together—a mob-like quality to their collective action. This tumultuous gathering contrasts with orderly royal assembly, emphasizing the conspiracy's aggressive nature. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: came-thronging | es: se-reunieron-tumultuosamente | fr: être-troublé | de: [הרגשו] Dan 6:6; Dan 6:11; Dan 6:15

רֶגֶשׁ H7285a Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

In the throng; refers to the crowded assembly of worshipers in Psalm 55:14, walking together to God's house

This masculine noun with preposition means 'in the throng' or 'in the crowd,' appearing in Psalm 55:14 where David laments betrayal by a close friend. He recalls how they 'used to walk in the throng' to the house of God—joining the festive crowds of worshipers going up to the temple. The term captures the communal, public nature of Israelite worship—not solitary piety but corporate participation in pilgrimage festivals. The betrayal stings more sharply because this friend shared in this sacred communal activity. The 'throng' represents joyful, noisy fellowship in worship, now forever tainted by treachery.

(1×) Psalm 55:14 recalls friendship's sacred dimension: 'We used to take sweet counsel together; within God's house we walked in the throng.' The phrase 'in the throng' (בְּרֶגֶשׁ) evokes crowded, festive worship—pilgrims streaming into the temple, voices raised in song. Spanish 'con multitud' (with multitude) preserves the corporate sense. The related Hebrew הָמוֹן (crowd, throng) appears in Psalm 42:4 in similar context. David's pain is that this relationship wasn't merely private friendship but covenant friendship, celebrated in public worship. To walk together in the temple throng signified shared faith and mutual commitment to Yahweh—a bond now shattered by betrayal. MIXED MULTITUDE

en: in-the-throng | es: con-multitud | fr: dans-arrogant | de: in-der-throng Ps 55:14

רִגְשָׁה H7285b Prep-m / N-fsc (1×)

From the tumult; refers to the noisy conspiracy of evildoers in Psalm 64:2, asking God for protection from chaos

This feminine noun with preposition means 'from the tumult' or 'from the conspiracy,' appearing in Psalm 64:2 where David prays for protection. He asks God to hide him 'from the secret plots of the wicked, from the throng of evildoers.' The term describes the collective, agitated gathering of those who plot evil—not a quiet conspiracy but a noisy, tumultuous band. The parallelism with 'secret plots' creates interesting tension: the plotting is secret, but the gathered conspirators make noise together. It's the corporate dimension of evil—individuals joining together in organized, turbulent opposition to the righteous.

(1×) Psalm 64:2 is a prayer for deliverance: 'Hide me from the secret plots of the wicked, from the throng of evildoers.' The phrase 'from the tumult' (מֵרִגְשַׁת) describes the gathered conspiracy—'tumult of workers of iniquity.' Spanish 'de tumulto de' (from tumult of) and French 'de tumulte' (of/from tumult) convey the chaotic gathering. The noun shares a root with the verb 'rage' from Psalm 2:1, suggesting noisy, agitated assembly. David faces not just individual enemies but organized opposition—a tumultuous band united in malice. The request to be 'hidden' from their tumult asks for divine concealment from this dangerous, corporate evil. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-tumult-of | es: de-tumulto-de | fr: de-tumulte | de: von-der-tumult-von Ps 64:2

רָדַד H7286 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (4×)

to beat down, subdue, spread out (metal)

This verb conveys beating or hammering, whether military subjugation or metalworking. The root meaning 'beat down' extends to subduing enemies (trampling them underfoot) and to the technical process of beating out gold leaf for overlay work. The semantic range reflects ancient Near Eastern overlap between martial and craft vocabulary.

(4×) Expresses beating down or subduing in both military and artisan contexts. The Qal infinitive in Isaiah 45:1 describes subduing nations before Cyrus; Psalm 144:2 uses the participle 'the one subduing my people under me.' Figuratively in Judges 19:11 (if correct reading), 'the day had gone down' (declined). In 1 Kings 6:32, the Hiphil means 'beat out gold' upon cherubim—hammering thin gold leaf over wooden forms. Multilingual glosses struggle with the range: Spanish 'el-que-somete' (subduing), 'había-descendido' (gone down), French 'et-il-étendit' (spread out)—showing the verb's versatility across military conquest and metallurgical technique. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-he-spread, gone-down, the-one-subduing | es: el-que-somete, había-descendido, para-someter- | fr: [לרד], allé-en-bas, et-il-étendit | de: [לרד], der-einer-subduing, gegangen-hinab Judg 19:11; 1Kgs 6:32; Ps 144:2; Isa 45:1

רָדָה H7287a Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjImperf.Jus-3ms (24×)

To rule, exercise dominion; also to tread down or subjugate by force

Radah carries the weight of God's mandate in Genesis 1:26-28, where humanity is charged to 'rule' over fish, birds, and every living thing. Spanish 'dominar' and Arabic cognates preserve this sovereign authority sense. But radah also has a darker edge: Leviticus 25:43-53 repeatedly warns against ruling over fellow Israelites 'with harshness' (befarek). A second homographic root surfaces in Judges 5:13 and Lamentations 1:13, meaning to tread down — visible in French 'descendit' and Spanish 'bajó.' Isaiah 41:2 pushes further toward military subjugation, where God makes a ruler 'tread down' nations.

1. rule, have dominion (20×) To rule, exercise dominion or governance — the primary sense, governing over people, creatures, or territory. Genesis 1:26-28 establishes the creation mandate; Psalm 72:8 envisions the Messiah ruling from sea to sea; 1 Kings 5:4 (ET 4:24) describes Solomon's dominion. Leviticus 25:43,46,53 constrains this authority: Israel must not rule harshly over brothers. Spanish 'dominar' and 'señorear' consistently reflect this governing sense. RULING AND REIGNING

en: and-let-them-rule, and-may-he-rule, and-rule | es: Y-dominará, domina, dominaba | fr: [הרדים], [וירדו], [ורדו] | de: [הרדים], [וירדו], [ורדו] Gen 1:26; Gen 1:28; Lev 25:43; Lev 25:46; Lev 25:53

2. tread down, scrape out (3×) To tread down, press, or scrape out — a distinct homographic root (radah II). Judges 5:13 uses it for the remnant 'treading down' the mighty, and Lamentations 1:13 describes fire sent into bones that 'overcame' them. French 'descendit' and Spanish 'bajó' (went down) reveal translators reading physical downward motion rather than political authority. Some lexicographers connect Judges 14:9's scraping honey from the lion to this root. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-it-overcame-them, went-down, went-down- | es: bajó, y-los-dominó | fr: [וירדנה], descendit, descendit- | de: [וירדנה], ging-hinab, ging-hinab- Judg 5:13; Lam 1:13

3. subdue, subjugate (1×) To subdue or subjugate by coercive force — an intensification beyond normal governance. Isaiah 41:2 asks who raised up one from the east and 'makes him rule' (yirdennu) over kings, with Spanish 'sojuzga' (subjugate) and the Arabic sense of forceful trampling underscoring the violent, military character that distinguishes this from sense 1's orderly dominion. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: makes-him-rule | es: sojuzga | fr: [ירד] | de: ging-hinab Isa 41:2

רָדָה H7287b V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (3×)

scrape out, draw off (from oven or carcass)

This second homonym of the more common 'radah' (rule) means to scrape or draw something out. Judges 14 uses it twice for Samson scraping honey from the lion's carcass—first scraping it out, then scraping it into his hands. Some scholars also read Jeremiah 5:31 with this meaning: prophets and priests 'scrape off' illicit gain from the people. The verb suggests extracting or removing something by drawing it out.

(3×) The term describes the action of scraping something out or off a surface. In Judges 14:9, Samson 'scraped out' honey from the dead lion's body and 'scraped it off into his palms,' emphasizing the physical act of extracting the honeycomb from an unexpected source. The proposed interpretation in Jeremiah 5:31—where prophets 'rule' or perhaps 'scrape gain' by their hands—would fit this same semantic range if correct, suggesting priests extracting profit from their position. The common thread is removal by scraping or drawing off. RULING AND REIGNING

en: and-scraped-it, he-scraped, rule | es: Y-lo-sacó, gobiernan, sacó | fr: [ירדו], et-scraped-il, il-scraped | de: er-scraped, sie-gingen-hinab, und-scraped-es Judg 14:9; Jer 5:31

רַדַי H7288 N-proper-ms (1×)

Raddai; listed as the fifth son of Jesse in 1 Chronicles 2:14, making him David's older brother

This proper masculine name belongs to Jesse's fifth son, according to 1 Chronicles 2:14. This makes Raddai one of David's older brothers, though he's never mentioned in the Samuel narratives about David's anointing or life. The absence is striking—1 Samuel 16 mentions David as the youngest of eight sons, but doesn't name all of them. Chronicles preserves the full list, including Raddai, ensuring that even those who played no role in the larger narrative are remembered. The name's etymology is uncertain, and nothing is known about Raddai's life or descendants.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:14 lists Jesse's sons in birth order: 'Nethanel the fourth, Raddai the fifth, Ozem the sixth, David the seventh.' The name Raddai appears only here—never in Samuel's accounts of David's family. The Septuagint transliterates variously (Ζαδδαι, Ραδδαι, Ρεδαι), showing some uncertainty in transmission. Raddai's total absence from Samuel's narrative suggests he may have died young or lived uneventfully. Chronicles' genealogical impulse rescues him from complete obscurity; though he appears in no stories, his name and place in Jesse's family are preserved—a testimony to the value of every member of God's covenant people. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Radai | es: Raday | fr: [רדי] | de: [רדי] 1Chr 2:14

רְדִיד H7289 Conj-w (2×)

wide wrapper, large veil; a woman's outer garment or head covering, possibly a shawl

This term designates a type of women's garment, most likely a wide wrapper or large veil. The word appears in Song of Songs where the beloved's veil is removed, and in Isaiah's catalog of women's finery that will be stripped away in judgment. The Aramaic and Syriac cognates suggest a head covering or veil, while the Arabic cognate ɛīʃ refers to a wrapper or outer garment. This was clearly an item associated with feminine adornment, distinct from the more common צָעִיף (tsa'if, another type of veil). The multilingual glosses reflect this ambiguity, with English 'shawl/veil,' Spanish 'velo largo' (long veil), and French 'voile' all pointing to a substantial head or body covering.

(2×) A wide wrapper or large veil worn by women, functioning as both garment and head covering. In Song 5:7, the watchmen remove the beloved's רְדִיד, suggesting it was an outer layer that could be taken off. In Isa 3:23, it appears in a lengthy list of women's luxury items that will be removed in divine judgment, indicating it was associated with feminine beauty and status. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'velos largos,' French 'voile') emphasizes its function as a substantial covering, likely more elaborate than everyday head coverings. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-shawls, my-veil | es: mi-velo, y-los-velos-largos | fr: [והרדידים], mon-voile | de: [והרדידים], [רדיד] Song 5:7; Isa 3:23

רָדַם H7290 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (7×)

radam – to fall into a deep, heavy sleep; be stunned into unconsciousness or stupor

A Nifal verb describing the onset or state of a deep, overpowering sleep that borders on unconsciousness. When Sisera fell into exhausted slumber, Jael drove a tent peg through his temple (Judg 4:21); when Jonah descended into the ship's hold, he fell so deeply asleep that the captain had to shake him awake during a storm (Jon 1:5-6). In Daniel's visions the word describes a divinely induced stupor – falling face-down to the ground, overwhelmed by awe and dread (Dan 8:18; 10:9). Proverbs uses the participle to characterize the sluggard who sleeps through harvest (Prov 10:5), and the Psalmist employs it for the sleep of death (Ps 76:7). Spanish sueño profundo, French dormir profondément, and German in tiefen Schlaf fallen all capture its intensity beyond ordinary rest.

to fall into deep sleep, be in a stupor (7×) To fall into or be in a deep, heavy sleep approaching unconsciousness or stupor, whether from exhaustion (Judg 4:21; Jon 1:5), divine overwhelming (Dan 8:18; 10:9), or figurative death-sleep (Ps 76:7). The Arabic cognate radama ('to stop up, block') may suggest being 'sealed off' from waking awareness. Cross-lingual renderings consistently emphasize depth and involuntariness: Spanish caer en sueño profundo, French tomber dans un profond sommeil. Proverbs 10:5 uses the participle as a substantive for the shamefully somnolent, the one who sleeps when he should be gathering. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: I-fell-into-deep-sleep, and-fell-fast-asleep, he-who-sleeps | es: adormecido, caí-en-sueño-profundo, dormido | fr: dormir, et-dormir, était-jeûner-asleep | de: [נרדם], [נרדמתי], lay-stunned Judg 4:21; Ps 76:6; Prov 10:5; Dan 8:18; Dan 10:9

רָדַף H7291 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (144×)

To pursue, chase after, or persecute; also to follow after or seek earnestly a goal, ideal, or person.

A verb of vigorous motion, radap describes the act of running after someone or something with intent to overtake. In military contexts it depicts armies chasing fleeing enemies; in the Psalms it becomes the cry of the oppressed hunted by persecutors. Yet the same word can describe the noble pursuit of righteousness or peace (Deut 16:20; Ps 34:14). Arabic radafa, Aramaic redap, and Syriac rdap all preserve this root, underscoring a pan-Semitic concept of determined forward chase.

1. Qal: pursue, chase (119×) The core Qal meaning covering 119 of 144 occurrences: physically chasing a person or group to catch them. Gen 14:14 has Abram pursuing the captors of Lot; Exod 14:8-9 depicts Pharaoh's army chasing Israel. Translations across languages consistently use 'pursued/persiguieron/poursuivit/verfolgte,' confirming a straightforward military-chase sense. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: and-he-pursued, and-pursued, and-they-pursued | es: Y-persiguieron, Y-persiguió, y-os-persiguieron | fr: et-il-poursuivit, et-il-poursuivra, et-ils-poursuivit | de: und-er-verfolgte, und-jagte, und-sie-verfolgte Gen 14:14; Gen 31:23; Gen 35:5; Exod 14:8; Exod 14:9

2. Piel: pursue relentlessly (8×) The Piel intensification conveys relentless, sustained pursuit — not a single chase but a dogged following. Proverbs uses this stem for pursuing righteousness (11:19) or vain things (12:11). Arabic mutatibbiᶜ and Korean chugu (추구) both capture this determined, ongoing quality distinct from the punctual Qal chase. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: and-she-will-pursue, but-he-who-follows, but-he-who-pursues | es: Y-perseguirá, perseguirá, persigue | fr: et-poursuivre, poursuivre | de: er-verfolgt, und-verfolgte, und-von-verfolgte Prov 11:19; Prov 12:11; Prov 13:21; Prov 15:9; Prov 19:7

3. Qal: persecute, oppress (8×) Pursuit with hostile intent to harm, especially of the innocent or godly. The Psalms concentrate this sense: 'my persecutors' (Ps 119:84, 86, 157) frames suffering under unjust power. Arabic iḍṭahada (اضطهد), Korean pipbak (핍박), and Hindi satānā (सताना) all specify 'persecute' rather than mere chasing, showing translators consistently distinguish this theological weight. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: against-my-persecutors, and-from-my-pursuers, are-my-persecutors | es: contra-los-que-me-persiguen, de-mis-perseguidores, de-perseguidores-mis | fr: dans-poursuivre, de-poursuivre, et-de-poursuivre | de: gegen-mein-persecutors, haben-verfolgt-mich, sie-verfolgen Ps 31:15; Ps 69:26; Ps 119:84; Ps 119:86; Ps 119:157

4. Qal: follow after, seek (5×) Abstract pursuit of a goal or ideal rather than a person. 'Pursue justice' (Deut 16:20), 'pursue peace' (Ps 34:14), 'pursue goodness and mercy' (Ps 23:6). Korean ttareuda (따르다 'follow after') and non-hostile Arabic saᶜā/tabiᶜa mark this as aspiration, not aggression — a metaphorical extension of the chase image. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: and-pursue-it, and-pursuing, pursuing | es: El-que-persigue, me-seguirán, perseguirás | fr: et-poursuivre, poursuivre, tu-devra-pursue | de: du-soll-verfolgen, soll-folgen-mich, und-verfolgen-es Deut 16:20; Ps 23:6; Ps 34:14; Prov 21:21; Isa 1:23

5. Nifal: be pursued (2×) The Nifal passive: being the object of pursuit or persecution. Eccl 3:15 says God seeks out what has been pursued (driven away), and Lam 5:5 laments 'we are pursued.' Arabic nuṭāradu and Korean jjotkim (쫓김) confirm the passive voice reading across traditions. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: the-pursued, we-are-pursued | es: lo-perseguido, somos-perseguidos | fr: poursuivre | de: verfolgte Eccl 3:15; Lam 5:5

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Judg 20:43 where the pursuit involves surrounding and trampling — the physical impact of catching up with the fleeing Benjaminites. The domain shifts from mere linear movement to violent physical contact upon overtaking, as multilingual glosses still render it 'pursued him' but contextually it implies crushing. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: pursued-him | es: lo-persiguieron | fr: poursuivit-lui | de: verfolgte-ihn Judg 20:43

7. (1×) At Isa 17:13, a passive or resultative use: chaff 'is chased' before the wind. Spanish 'será perseguido' and German 'verfolgte' render it passively. This single occurrence captures the image of being driven away like windblown debris, a vivid metaphor for divine judgment scattering the nations. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: and-is-chased | es: y-será-perseguido | fr: et-poursuivre | de: und-verfolgte Isa 17:13

רָהַב H7292 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (4×)

to act arrogantly, storm against, overwhelm

This verb captures turbulent, aggressive action—whether arrogant assault, besetting someone urgently, or overwhelming emotionally. The root connects to storming and alarming, with a semantic range from hostile confrontation to intense emotional impact. Usage is rare, and some passages remain textually uncertain.

(4×) Expresses forceful, stormy action varying by context. Isaiah 3:5 describes the youth 'storming against' (יִרְהֲבוּ) the elder in social chaos. Proverbs 6:3 advises 'beset, importune' (רְהַב) your friend to escape debt surety—urgent pleading. Song of Songs 6:5 has the beloved's eyes 'overwhelm me' (הַרְהִיבֵנִי), possibly alarming or awing (text uncertain). The root relates to Arabic 'be alarmed, frightened' and Aramaic 'be arrogant.' Multilingual glosses show semantic uncertainty: Spanish 'Se-insolentarán' (arrogance), 'importuna' (importune), 'me-fortaleciste' (strengthened me), French 'me-troublent' (trouble me)—reflecting the term's interpretive challenges and emotional intensity. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-plead-urgently-with, overwhelmed-me, the-youth | es: Se-insolentarán, e-importuna, me-fortaleciste | fr: [ירהבו], et-troubler, me-troublent. | de: [הרהיבני], [ורהב], [ירהבו] Ps 138:3; Prov 6:3; Song 6:5; Isa 3:5

רָהַב H7293 N-ms (3×)

Rahab, mythical sea monster; symbolic name for Egypt

Rahab (distinct from Jericho's Rahab) is a mythical chaos monster representing primordial forces defeated by God, and also a poetic epithet for Egypt. In Job, God is said to overcome 'the helpers of Rahab' and pierce the fleeing serpent, using ancient Near Eastern chaos-combat imagery. Isaiah calls Egypt 'Rahab' as an emblem of proud but impotent power—'Rahab who sits still,' unable to help Israel against Assyria.

(3×) This mythological name designates both a primordial sea monster and, symbolically, Egypt. Job 9:13 and 26:12 employ Rahab in creation language—God subdues 'the helpers of Rahab,' parallel to crushing the sea and piercing the serpent, reflecting ancient cosmological imagery of divine victory over chaos. Isaiah 30:7 makes the symbolic transition explicit: Egypt is called Rahab, but 'Rahab who sits still'—all bluster and no substance, unable to deliver on promises of help. The name evokes pride, chaos, and ultimately defeated power. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2607 WITH 5 SENSES

en: Rahab, Rahav | es: Rahab, Rahab., a-Rahab | fr: [רהב], רהב | de: [רהב] Job 9:13; Job 26:12; Isa 30:7

רַהַב H7294 N-ms (3×)

Rahab, mythical chaos monster symbolizing divine conquest over primordial forces

This instance of Rahab (identical in meaning to H7293) appears in Psalms and Isaiah as the defeated chaos monster of ancient mythology. Psalm 89 celebrates God cutting Rahab in pieces as one crushes the slain, demonstrating sovereignty over chaotic forces. Psalm 87 uses it symbolically for Egypt. Isaiah 51 parallels Rahab with 'the dragon' (tannin), calling on God's arm that 'pierced Rahab' in primeval times to act again in exodus redemption.

(3×) The term functions as the proper name of a mythic sea creature embodying chaos and opposition to divine order. Psalm 89:10 uses violent imagery: 'You crushed Rahab like one of the slain,' celebrating God's victory. Psalm 87:4 lists Rahab (Egypt) alongside Babylon as nations that will acknowledge Zion. Isaiah 51:9 makes the most explicit connection: 'Was it not you who cut Rahab in pieces, who pierced the dragon?'—linking creation victory over chaos with historical deliverance from Egypt. The name bridges mythology and history, portraying Egypt as the embodiment of the defeated chaos monster. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2607 WITH 5 SENSES

en: Rahav | es: a-Rahab | fr: [רהב], orgueilleux | de: Rahav, [רהב] Ps 87:4; Ps 89:10; Isa 51:9

רָהָב H7295 N-mp (1×)

The proud; refers to arrogant people in Psalm 40:4, though text is uncertain and may need emendation

This adjective means 'proud' or 'defiant,' appearing in Psalm 40:4 in a beatitude: 'Blessed is the man who makes the LORD his trust, and does not turn to the proud.' However, the Hebrew text is questionable, and many scholars propose emending it to read 'vanities' or 'idols' instead, which would make better parallel with the context of false gods. If retained, 'the proud' would refer to arrogant people who reject God. Either way, the verse contrasts those who trust Yahweh with those who look elsewhere—whether to proud people or to empty idols.

(1×) Psalm 40:4 pronounces blessing: 'Blessed is the man who makes the LORD his trust, who does not turn to the proud, to those who go astray after a lie.' The phrase 'to the proud' (אֶל־רְהָבִים) is textually suspect—the Septuagint reads 'vanities,' and many scholars recommend reading הבלים (vanities/idols). Spanish 'soberbios' (proud ones) preserves the received text. If 'proud' is correct, it refers to arrogant humans who reject divine authority—not suitable objects of trust. If emended to 'vanities,' it refers to false gods. Either reading contrasts the blessed person (trusting Yahweh alone) with the foolish person (trusting proud humans or vain idols). PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: the-proud | es: soberbios | fr: orgueilleux | de: der-proud Ps 40:4

רָהַב H7296 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (1×)

Their span; possibly refers to human life's extent or pride in Psalm 90:10, though text and meaning are debated

This masculine noun with suffix appears in Psalm 90:10 in a difficult phrase about human lifespan: 'The years of our life are seventy, or if by strength eighty; yet their span is but toil and trouble.' The word could mean 'their pride' (what people boast about) or 'their extent/width' (the breadth of those years). Scholars debate whether it refers to the prideful content of those years or simply their scope. The Septuagint reads 'their pride' as in 'the pride of life' (1 John 2:16). Either way, the verse emphasizes that even a full lifespan amounts to brief trouble—a sobering reflection on mortality.

(1×) Psalm 90:10 meditates on life's brevity: 'The years of our life are seventy, or even by reason of strength eighty; yet their span is but toil and trouble; they are soon gone, and we fly away.' The noun רָהְבָּם (their span/pride) is ambiguous. Spanish 'orgullo de ellos' (their pride) and French 'orgueil' (pride) follow one interpretation—even what we're proud of in life is merely toil. German 'ihr span' (their span) takes it as 'extent.' The broader point is mortality's humbling reality: whether measured by years' extent or achievements' pride, human life is brief, toilsome, and quickly over. Only God is everlasting (v. 2); we are transient. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-span | es: y-orgullo-de-ellos | fr: et-orgueil | de: und-ihr-span Ps 90:10

רָהָה H7297 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (1×)

Fear, be terrified; a rare and textually uncertain verb in Isaiah 44:8, likely requiring emendation

This verb appears in Isaiah 44:8 with the sense 'fear' or 'be terrified,' though the form is problematic. The text reads 'Do not fear, and do not [this verb],' addressed to Israel after God declares there is no other Rock. The verb's root is uncertain—no clear Hebrew root exists for this form, leading most scholars to propose emendations. Suggestions include reading it as a form of 'fear' (matching the parallel verb) or adopting a Syriac sense. The general meaning 'don't be afraid' fits the context of God reassuring Israel about his unique deity, but the precise Hebrew form remains a textual puzzle.

(1×) Isaiah 44:8 reassures Israel: 'Fear not, nor be afraid; have I not told you from of old and declared it? And you are my witnesses! Is there a God besides me?' The problematic verb form תִּרָהוּ appears in the command 'do not [fear/be afraid].' Scholars propose reading תִּירְאוּ (standard form of 'fear') from the root יראּ, or adopting Syriac meanings. The multilingual glosses show uncertainty—French and German simply bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging the textual difficulty. The theological point is clear: Israel need not fear because Yahweh alone is God, their Rock, with no rivals. The textual problem doesn't obscure the message of divine uniqueness and resulting security. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear | es: se-aterroricen | fr: [תרהו] | de: [תרהו] Isa 44:8

רַהַט H7298a Art / N-mp (3×)

watering trough, channel where animals drink

This noun designates the troughs or channels where water collects for watering livestock. Genesis 30 describes Jacob manipulating his flock's breeding by placing striped rods in the watering troughs where they came to drink and mate. Exodus 2 mentions the troughs where Jethro's daughters watered their father's flock before Moses' intervention. These were essential features of pastoral life, places where animals regularly gathered for water.

(3×) The term identifies the structures or channels used for watering livestock in pastoral settings. In Genesis 30:38 and 41, Jacob strategically places peeled rods 'in the troughs' where the stronger animals came to drink, implementing his selective breeding scheme. Exodus 2:16 describes Jethro's seven daughters filling 'the troughs' to water their father's sheep before the Egyptian shepherds drove them away. These watering places served as gathering points for flocks, making them significant locations in shepherding practice and, in Jacob's case, opportunities for livestock management. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: in-the-troughs, the-troughs | es: en-los-canales, los-abrevaderos | fr: dans-le-troughs, le-troughs | de: der-troughs, in-die-Rinnen Gen 30:38; Gen 30:41; Exod 2:16

רַהַט H7298b Prep-b (1×)

In the tresses; refers to flowing locks of hair in Song of Songs 7:5, part of admiring description of the beloved

This masculine noun with preposition means 'in the tresses' or 'in the locks,' appearing in Song of Songs 7:5 during an elaborate description of the beloved's beauty. The lover describes her hair: 'Your head crowns you like Carmel, and your flowing locks are like purple; a king is held captive in the tresses.' The term likely refers to flowing locks or ringlets of hair, though the etymology is debated—possibly related to 'flowing down.' The image is of luxurious, abundant hair that captivates the beholder. The romantic hyperbole ('a king held captive') emphasizes hair's alluring power in ancient Near Eastern beauty ideals.

(1×) Song 7:5 celebrates the beloved's beauty: 'Your head crowns you like Carmel, and your flowing locks are like purple; a king is held captive in the tresses.' The phrase 'in the tresses' (בָּרְהָטִים) describes hair flowing in curls or locks—Spanish 'en los rizos' (in the curls) and French 'dans les boucles' (in the locks) convey the cascading, abundant quality. The comparison to purple suggests rich color (perhaps dark, lustrous hair) or the flowing quality of purple fabric. The metaphor of a king held captive emphasizes irresistible beauty—even royalty is powerless before such loveliness. Hair as a site of erotic beauty is common in ancient love poetry. FLESH AND BODY

en: in-the-tresses | es: en-los-rizos | fr: dans-les-boucles! | de: [ברהטים] Song 7:5

רְו H7299 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (2×)

appearance, visible form, outward aspect (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun means appearance or visible form, describing how something looks to observers. In Daniel's visions, it appears twice describing extraordinary sights: the colossal statue Nebuchadnezzar saw had a terrifying appearance (2:31), and the fourth figure in the fiery furnace had 'the appearance of a son of the gods' (3:25). The term focuses on visual impression—not inner nature but outward manifestation. In apocalyptic literature, extraordinary appearances signal divine or supernatural presence.

(2×) All translations use 'appearance' or 'aspect': Spanish 'aspecto,' French 'forme,' English 'appearance.' Daniel 2:31 describes the statue's frightening appearance, while 3:25 describes the mysterious fourth figure's divine-like appearance. Both contexts involve supernatural visions where appearance becomes the primary means of communication—what is seen conveys meaning even before interpretation. The term emphasizes visible manifestation in revelatory contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-appearance-of, and-its-appearance | es: y-el-aspecto-de, y-su-aspecto | fr: et-forme | de: [ורוה] Dan 2:31; Dan 3:25

רוד H7300 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (4×)

to wander restlessly, roam freely

This verb denotes restless wandering or roaming, whether literal movement or figurative spiritual roaming. The root suggests going to and fro without fixed purpose or constraint. Usage is limited and sometimes textually problematic, but the core sense of unanchored movement persists across contexts.

(4×) Captures restless or free-roaming movement. Jeremiah 2:31 has Israel saying 'we roam freely' (רַדְנוּ), asserting independence from God. Psalm 55:2 expresses 'I am restless' (אָרִיד) in complaint or murmuring. Genesis 27:40 promises Esau 'when you roam' (תָּרִיד), breaking free from Jacob's yoke. Hosea 12:1 (11:12 Eng.) is textually corrupt (עֹד רָד עִם אֵל). Multilingual glosses show interpretive variation: Spanish 'Somos libres' (we are free), 'te-agites' (you break free), French 'errer' (wander), German 'du-umherstreifst' (you roam about)—all capturing unmoored, restless motion whether literal or spiritual. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: I-am-restless, roams, we-roam-freely | es: Somos-libres, gobierna, te-agites | fr: [רדנו], errer, tu-briser-libérer | de: [רד], [רדנו], du-umherstreifst Gen 27:40; Ps 55:2; Jer 2:31; Hos 11:12

רָוָה H7301 V-Piel-InfAbs (14×)

To drink one's fill, be saturated; in causative stems, to satisfy, drench, or water abundantly

A rich verb of deep satisfaction, רָוָה paints a picture of thorough saturation — whether a parched land soaked by rain (Ps 65:10), a soul filled to overflowing by God's goodness (Jer 31:14), or lovers intoxicated with affection (Prov 7:18). The word moves fluidly between the physical and the spiritual: Isaiah 55:10 uses it for rain drenching the earth, while Psalm 36:8 applies the same image to feasting on the abundance of God's house. Spanish 'embriaguémonos' ('let us intoxicate ourselves') for Proverbs 7:18 captures the almost excessive quality of this satiation.

1. cause to be saturated, satisfy (5×) The Hifil causative: to cause someone or something to be saturated, to satisfy or refresh. God satisfies the weary soul (Jer 31:25) and the generous person is themselves refreshed (Prov 11:25). Isaiah 55:10 extends this to rain that waters the earth and makes it bring forth — Spanish 'empapa' ('soaks through') and the Hindi सींचता ('irrigates') underscore the thoroughness of the causative action, where the agent ensures complete saturation of the recipient. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: He-saturated-me, I-satisfied, and-he-who-waters | es: empapa, me-ha-embriagado, me-saciaste | fr: [הרוה], [הרויתי], [הרויתני] | de: [הרוה], [הרויתי], [הרויתני] Prov 11:25; Isa 43:24; Isa 55:10; Jer 31:25; Lam 3:15

2. satisfy, satiate (intensive) (4×) The Piel intensive with personal or abstract objects: to satisfy deeply, intoxicate, or cause profound satiation. In Proverbs 5:19 a husband is to be 'ravished always' with his wife's love; in Isaiah 34:5 the LORD's sword is 'drunk with blood.' The intensive stem pushes beyond simple filling to surfeit or even excess. French and German translations often leave these forms untranslated (shown in brackets), reflecting the difficulty of capturing this intensity, while Spanish 'se ha embriagado' ('has become drunk') preserves the intoxication metaphor. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I-will-drench-you, and-I-will-satisfy, is-drunk | es: se-ha-embriagado, te-regaré, te-satisfagan | fr: [אריוך], [ורויתי], [רוותה] | de: [אריוך], [ורויתי], [ירוך] Prov 5:19; Isa 16:9; Isa 34:5; Jer 31:14

3. drink one's fill, be satiated (3×) The Qal intransitive: to drink abundantly, be satiated, feast to satisfaction — the basic state of having had enough. Psalm 36:8 pictures the righteous feasting on the fatness of God's house; Proverbs 7:18 uses it for lovers drinking their fill of passion; Jeremiah 46:10 describes a sword sated with blood. Spanish 'embriaguémonos de' ('let us drink our fill of') for Proverbs 7:18 captures the volitional, self-indulgent quality of the Qal, where the subject actively takes in until satisfied. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-drink-its-fill, let-us-drink-our-fill-of, they-feast | es: Se-saciarán, embriaguémonos-de, y-se-embriagará | fr: [ורותה], arroser, être-arrosé | de: [ורותה], [נרוה], sie-Festmahl Ps 36:8; Prov 7:18; Jer 46:10

4. drench, water abundantly (2×) The Piel intensive with a physical, agricultural meaning: to drench, water thoroughly, or soak. Psalm 65:10 celebrates God watering the furrows of the earth and settling its ridges; Isaiah 34:7 describes the ground soaked with blood. The focus is on the material being saturated — soil, land, earth — rather than persons. Spanish 'empapa' ('soaks through') aligns with English 'watering,' both pointing to the thorough, physical drenching of ground rather than the metaphorical satisfaction of souls. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-shall-be-soaked, watering | es: empapa, y-se-embriagará | fr: [ורוה], être-arrosé | de: [ורוה], watering Ps 65:10; Isa 34:7

רָוֶה H7302 Art / Adj-fs (3×)

watered, saturated, well-irrigated

This adjective describes land or vegetation that is well-watered and flourishing, used in positive similes and proverbial contrasts. Prophets compare the blessed community to a 'watered garden,' emphasizing abundance and vitality versus drought. Deuteronomy 29 uses it in a proverbial warning about destroying both 'the watered and the thirsty' together—everything from flourishing to parched, perhaps meaning the innocent with the guilty.

(3×) The term characterizes well-irrigated, flourishing vegetation as a metaphor for blessing and prosperity. Isaiah 58:11 and Jeremiah 31:12 both promise restoration using the image of 'a watered garden'—one that never fails for lack of water, constantly refreshed and productive. Deuteronomy 29:19 employs it in a darker warning: the unrepentant person thinks safety comes from stubbornness, thus 'destroying the watered along with the thirsty'—a phrase suggesting total destruction that spares nothing, whether flourishing or failing. The consistent contrast is between abundant irrigation (blessing) and drought (curse). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-watered, watered | es: la-regada, regado | fr: [רוה], le-watered | de: [רוה], der-watered Deut 29:19; Isa 58:11; Jer 31:12

רָהַגָּה H7303 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Rohgah, descendant of Asher in genealogical record

Rohgah was a descendant of Asher listed in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles 7:34. This genealogical section traces Asherite clans, preserving names that appear nowhere else in Scripture. The Qere/Ketiv variation shows textual uncertainty in spelling, a common phenomenon with rare proper names. Such genealogical lists served to establish tribal identity and inheritance rights, even for obscure family lines. Rohgah represents one thread in the complex tapestry of Asher's descendants.

(2×) The entry shows Qere/Ketiv variation in 1 Chronicles 7:34, with both forms preserved. Spanish marks this as ketiv with the reading 'y-Rohga,' while other languages preserve both variants. As a hapax name appearing only in this genealogical list, Rohgah exemplifies the hundreds of biblical names preserved solely for tribal record-keeping purposes, maintaining family identity within the Asherite clan structure even when no narrative attaches to the individual. PERSONAL NAMES

en: [ketiv], and-Rohgah | es: (y-Rohga), [y-Rohga] | fr: [ורהגה], [ורוהגה] | de: [ורהגה], [ורוהגה] 1Chr 7:34

רָוַח H7304 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (3×)

be wide, spacious; find relief, get breathing room

This verb describes spatial wideness and, figuratively, the psychological relief that comes with having space to breathe. When Saul's distress lifted after David played the lyre, 'there was relief for him'—literally, it became spacious for him. Job longs to speak so that 'I may have relief,' using the same imagery of constriction giving way to breathing room. Jeremiah applies it literally to spacious, well-appointed palace rooms.

(3×) The root captures both physical spaciousness and the relief that space brings. First Samuel 16:23 describes how music eased Saul's torment: 'and there was relief for him,' suggesting the oppressive spirit's grip loosened, creating psychological space. Job 32:20 uses it for the relief that comes from speaking: 'that I may have relief'—words releasing internal pressure. Jeremiah 22:14 employs it literally for 'spacious rooms' in a luxurious palace, emphasizing generous dimensions. The common thread is wideness—whether of physical space or emotional release from constraint. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS

en: and-it-will-be-relief, and-relief, roomy | es: espaciosos, y-aliviaba, y-tendré-alivio- | fr: [מרוחים], et-relief, et-וירוח | de: [וירוח], [מרוחים], und-relief 1Sam 16:23; Job 32:20; Jer 22:14

רֶוַח H7305 N-ms (2×)

space, interval, gap; relief or respite from pressure

This noun carries two related meanings: physical space or interval, and metaphorical relief or respite. Genesis 32:16 uses it for the space between droves of animals that Jacob sent ahead to Esau—strategic intervals that would multiply the impression of the gift. Esther 4:14 speaks of 'relief and deliverance' arising for the Jews if Esther remains silent—rescue would come from 'another place' even if she fails. Both senses involve breathing room, whether spatial separation or providential relief from threat.

(2×) Spanish shows the dual sense: 'espacio' (space) and 'alivio' (relief), matching English 'space' and 'relief.' Genesis 32:16 uses the spatial meaning—Jacob arranging intervals between animal droves for maximum diplomatic effect. Esther 4:14 employs the relief sense—deliverance would arise even if Esther doesn't act, suggesting God's providence creates space for rescue. Both involve creating margin or gap, whether between gift installments or between threat and destruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-space, relief | es: alivio, y-espacio | fr: [רוח], et-space | de: Geist, und-Raum Gen 32:16; Esth 4:14

רִיַח H7306 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Inf / 3ms (11×)

To smell, perceive odor; metaphorically, to delight in or savor

The denominative Hifil verb רִיחַ means to smell or perceive an odor, derived from the noun רֵיחַ ('fragrance, aroma'). Its most memorable use is Gen 8:21, where the LORD 'smelled the pleasing aroma' of Noah's sacrifice — a strikingly anthropomorphic moment that echoes across the ancient Near East. The verb can describe literal sensory perception (Isaac smelling Jacob's garments in Gen 27:27, idols that cannot smell in Deut 4:28) and extends metaphorically to mean 'delight in' or 'savor,' as in Isaiah's vision of the Messiah whose delight (וַהֲרִיחוֹ) is in the fear of the LORD (Isa 11:3).

1. smell (literal) (10×) The literal act of smelling — perceiving an odor through the nose. Covers the full range of physical olfactory experience: God smelling Noah's burnt offering (Gen 8:21), Isaac smelling the garments of his son (Gen 27:27), the prohibition against making incense for personal smelling (Exod 30:38), God refusing to smell the offerings of faithless Israel (Lev 26:31), and the idols that 'have noses but cannot smell' (Deut 4:28, Ps 115:6). Multilingual glosses converge on sensory verbs: Spanish 'olio' (smelled), French 'sentit,' German 'roch' — all straightforward olfactory vocabulary. Job 39:25, where the war-horse 'scents' the battle from afar, stretches the physical sense toward keenness of perception. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: I-will-smell, and-smelled, it-smells | es: Y-olió, cuando-huele, huela | fr: et-sentit, ils-smell, je-fera-smell | de: [אריח], [יריח], als-es-smells Gen 8:21; Gen 27:27; Exod 30:38; Lev 26:31; Deut 4:28

2. delight in (metaphorical) (1×) A metaphorical extension where 'smelling' becomes 'delighting in' or 'savoring' — taking pleasure in something with the deep, instinctive immediacy that smell evokes. Used in Isa 11:3 of the Messiah's delight in the fear of the LORD (וַהֲרִיחוֹ בְּיִרְאַת יְהוָה). The Spanish 'su deleite' and English 'his delight' abandon all olfactory vocabulary, confirming the fully metaphorical shift. This single occurrence captures a beautiful semantic bridge: the same verb used of God savoring Noah's sacrifice now describes the Messiah savoring reverence for God. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT

en: and-his-delight | es: Y-su-deleite | fr: [והריחו] | de: [והריחו] Isa 11:3

רוּחַ H7307 Prep-b / N-csc / 1cs (378×)

Wind, breath, spirit; the Spirit of God; human disposition or mind; compass direction; spirit beings.

Few Hebrew words rival רוּחַ in semantic range and theological depth. From the concrete wind that parts the Red Sea (Exod 14:21) to the Spirit of God hovering over primordial waters (Gen 1:2), this feminine noun spans the physical and the numinous. Its Arabic cognate splits neatly between ريح (wind) and رُوح (spirit/soul), a division Hebrew refuses to make — the same word serves for the east wind destroying Tarshish ships (Ps 48:7), the crushed spirit of the oppressed (Exod 6:9, where Hebrew קֹצֶר רוּחַ becomes Spanish angustia de espíritu), and the divine Spirit empowering Bezalel for artistry (Exod 31:3). This refusal to separate breath from spirit is itself a theological claim about the unity of created and divine vitality.

1. human spirit / disposition / mind (145×) The human spirit, disposition, mind, mood, or inner life — the immaterial seat of emotions, will, and courage (145 occurrences). Includes 'shortness of spirit' (Exod 6:9, impatience/anguish), 'a new spirit' (Ezek 18:31), and 'a willing spirit' (Ps 51:12). Korean renders this as 심령/마음 (heart-mind), Swahili as roho (lowercase, human), and Hindi as मन/आत्मा — each language choosing from its own interior-life vocabulary. The broad application to jealousy, anger, patience, and courage confirms this as the seat of the whole inner person, not merely intellect. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-a-spirit, in-spirit, spirit | es: espíritu, espíritu- | fr: esprit | de: Geist, des-Geistes Gen 26:35; Exod 6:9; Num 14:24; Num 27:18; Josh 2:11

2. Spirit of God / Holy Spirit (96×) The Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit — the divine agent of creation, prophecy, empowerment, and revelation (96 occurrences). Characteristically appears in construct with divine names: רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים (Gen 1:2), רוּחַ יהוה (Judg 3:10). Arabic رُوح الله, Korean 하나님의 영, Spanish Espíritu de Dios, and German Geist Gottes all capitalize or otherwise mark the divine referent. The semantic continuity with sense 2 (wind) is theologically intentional: God's Spirit moves like wind, unseen but powerful (cf. Ezek 37:9-10 where wind/breath/Spirit converge). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: spirit-of, spirit-of- | es: Espíritu-de, espíritu, espíritu-de | fr: esprit-de, esprit-de- | de: Geist-von, Geist-von-, der-Geist Gen 41:38; Gen 45:27; Exod 28:3; Exod 31:3; Exod 35:31

3. natural wind (meteorological phenomenon) (89×) Split from sense 135002. Criteria: Physical air movement: storm winds, east wind, gentle breezes, the four winds as natural forces

en: a-breath, a-wind, breath | es: Viento-de, el-viento, viento | fr: esprit, wind | de: Geist, der-Geist, ein-Geist 2Sam 22:11; 2Kgs 3:17; Job 1:19; Job 7:7; Job 15:2

4. divine wind (instrument of God's action) (24×) Split from sense 135002. Criteria: Wind as God's direct agent: Gen 8:1 (God sends wind over flood waters), wind that dries seas, theologically significant wind events

en: a-wind, a-wind-, a-wind-of | es: Viento, Y-viento, su-viento | fr: esprit, et-esprit, et-un-vent | de: Geist, Wind-von, Wind-von- Gen 8:1; Exod 10:13; Exod 10:19; Exod 14:21

5. breath / life-breath (15×) Physical breath, the breath of life, the vital force animating living creatures (15 occurrences). Gen 6:17 and 7:15 speak of 'the breath of life' (רוּחַ חַיִּים) in all flesh. At death, the רוּחַ returns to God who gave it (Eccl 12:7). Arabic نَفَس (breath) and Hindi साँस/प्राण mark this as distinct from wind or spirit proper. The overlap with sense 1 (spirit) and sense 3 (divine Spirit) is precisely the point: life-breath, human spirit, and divine Spirit form a continuous theological spectrum. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: The-breath, and-by-breath-of, breath | es: El-aliento-de, Mi-aliento, aliento | fr: breath-de, dans-esprit, esprit | de: Geist, Odem, breath-von Gen 6:17; Gen 7:15; 2Sam 22:16; Job 9:18; Job 15:30

6. direction / quarter / side (6×) A compass direction, quarter, or side — derived metaphorically from the four winds as spatial markers (6 occurrences). Ezek 42:16-20 uses רוּחַ for each of the four sides of the temple complex. Korean 방향, Hindi दिशा, and Swahili upande all translate with dedicated directional vocabulary, confirming this as a distinct spatial sense rather than a meteorological one. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: side-of, sides, winds | es: lado-de, lados, vientos | fr: esprit | de: Geist 1Chr 9:24; Ezek 42:16; Ezek 42:17; Ezek 42:18; Ezek 42:19

7. spirit beings / spirits (3×) Spirit beings — supernatural entities such as angels, demons, or unclean spirits (3 occurrences). Num 16:22 and 27:16 address God as 'the God of the spirits (רוּחֹת) of all flesh,' while Prov 16:2 speaks of God weighing spirits. Arabic أرواح (plural spirits) and Korean 영들 mark the plural-entity reading. Though rare in the Hebrew Bible compared to later Jewish and Christian usage, this sense establishes the category of non-human spiritual beings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: spirits, the-spirits | es: espíritus, los-espíritus | fr: esprit, le-esprits | de: Geist, der-Geister Num 16:22; Num 27:16; Prov 16:2

רוּחַ H7308 Conj-w / N-csc / 3ms (11×)

Spirit or wind (Aramaic); the animating divine or human spirit, or meteorological wind, in Daniel

The Aramaic noun רוּחַ appears exclusively in the book of Daniel, mirroring its Hebrew cognate but within the distinctive theological and visionary context of the Aramaic court narratives and apocalyptic visions. As 'spirit,' it describes both the divine spirit dwelling in Daniel — 'the spirit of the holy gods' (Dan 4:8-9, 5:11-14) — and the troubled inner spirit of the seer himself (Dan 7:15). As 'wind,' it appears in two dramatic visionary scenes: the wind that scatters Nebuchadnezzar's shattered statue (Dan 2:35) and the four winds of heaven churning the great sea (Dan 7:2).

1. spirit (divine or human, Aramaic) (9×) Spirit — whether divine or human — as the animating, knowing principle within a person. In Daniel's court setting, the Babylonian and Persian kings recognize that Daniel possesses 'the spirit of the holy gods' (רוּחַ אֱלָהִין קַדִּישִׁין, Dan 4:8-9, 5:11), an exceptional spirit (רוּחַ יַתִּירָא, Dan 5:12, 6:4) that gives him surpassing wisdom. In Dan 5:20 the king's spirit grows hardened, and in Dan 7:15 Daniel's own spirit is troubled within him (רוּחִי). Multilingual glosses consistently render it 'espiritu,' 'esprit,' 'Geist' — all personal-spiritual vocabulary rather than meteorological, confirming the interior, immaterial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-spirit, my-spirit, spirit | es: espíritu, espíritu-de, espíritu-de-mí | fr: esprit, et-esprit, mon-esprit | de: Geist, mein-Geist, und-Geist Dan 4:8; Dan 4:9; Dan 4:18; Dan 5:11; Dan 5:12

2. wind (meteorological, Aramaic) (2×) Wind as a natural meteorological force, appearing only in Daniel's two great visions. In Dan 2:35, after the stone strikes the statue, the wind (רוּחָא) carries the fragments away like chaff, leaving no trace — a vivid image of total obliteration. In Dan 7:2, the four winds of heaven (רוּחֵי שְׁמַיָּא) stir the great sea from which the four beasts emerge. The Spanish 'el viento' / 'vientos de,' English 'the wind' / 'winds of,' and German 'Wind' all shift to meteorological vocabulary, clearly demarcating this from the spirit sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-wind, winds-of | es: el-viento, vientos-de | fr: esprit, mon-esprit | de: Geist, mein-Geist Dan 2:35; Dan 7:2

רִוָחָה H7309 Prep-l / N-fsc / 1cs (2×)

relief, respite, breathing room (from oppression or distress)

This feminine noun denotes relief or respite from oppression or difficulty. Exodus 8:15 describes Pharaoh seeing there was relief (from the plague of frogs) and then hardening his heart—the moment pressure lifted, repentance evaporated. Lamentations 3:56 has the sufferer asking God not to hide his ear from his prayer for relief. Both contexts involve breathing room from immediate distress. The term suggests not permanent deliverance but temporary easing of pressure, a pause in suffering that reveals character or invites renewed supplication.

(2×) Spanish 'alivio' and English 'relief' consistently translate this term. Exodus 8:15 shows how relief prompted renewed resistance —when frogs ceased, Pharaoh's brief compliance vanished. Lamentations 3:56 pleads for relief from crushing affliction, asking God not to be deaf. Both passages value relief as desperately needed breathing space, though Exodus shows its danger (breeding complacency)

while Lamentations shows its necessity (sustaining hope). The term captures the intermission from pressure that either renews resolve or reveals faithlessness. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: the-relief, to-my-relief | es: a-mi-alivio, alivio | fr: [לרוחתי], le-relief | de: [לרוחתי], der-relief Exod 8:15; Lam 3:56

רְוָיָה H7310 Prep-l (2×)
saturation, abundance, overflow; state of being thoroughly filled
This noun describes fullness, saturation, or abundant overflow. Psalm 23:5 declares 'my cup overflows' (literally 'is saturation'), picturing divine blessing beyond mere sufficiency to lavish abundance. Psalm 66:12 is textually uncertain—many read 'relief' or 'abundance' where the MT has this word, envisioning God bringing his people through trials to a place of overflow. The term suggests not just filling but saturating, soaking thoroughly, exceeding capacity—the opposite of want or scarcity.

(2×) Translation varies: Psalm 23:5 renders it 'overflows' (Spanish 'rebosante'), while 66:12 shows divergence—some read 'abundance' (Spanish 'abundancia'), others 'relief.' The saturation imagery in Psalm 23 is clear: the cup not just filled but running over, blessing beyond need. The 66:12 uncertainty may reflect textual variants or metaphorical reading. Both passages celebrate divine provision moving from lack to overflow, from constriction to abundance—whether spatial relief or liquid saturation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: overflows, to-abundance | es: a-abundancia, rebosante | fr: abondance, à-abondance | de: fliesst-über, zu-Überfluss Ps 23:5; Ps 66:12

H7311 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (2×)
was exalted, was lifted up, was taken away; the Qal perfect of רוּם in various contexts of elevation or removal
This verb form expresses the action of being raised up, exalted, or removed. Both occurrences appear in Daniel's apocalyptic visions, describing movements in the spiritual realm. The root רוּם typically conveys upward motion or elevation in status. In Daniel 8:11, the context suggests prideful self-exaltation against divine authority. In Daniel 11:12, the sense shifts to removal or being taken away after victory. The English glosses capture this semantic range with 'exalted' and 'taken away,' while Spanish 'se elevará' (will be elevated) and 'fue quitado' (was removed) show the verb's flexibility across contexts of both upward movement and removal.

(2×) The action of being lifted up, exalted, or removed from position. In Dan 8:11, the subject (the little horn) exalts himself even against the Prince of the host, showing arrogant self-elevation. In Dan 11:12, after the king of the South achieves victory, his heart is lifted up, but this elevation leads to his downfall as tens of thousands are 'taken away.' The multilingual evidence shows the semantic tension between upward motion (elevation, exaltation) and removal, both of which involve displacement from an original position. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: (qere:and-exalted), (qere:was-taken-away) | es: (y-se-elevará), fue-quitado | fr: [הורם], [ורם] | de: [הורם], [ורם] Dan 8:11; Dan 11:12

רוּם H7311a Conj-w / V-Hifil-Inf (190×)
to be high, exalted; to lift up, raise (physically or in status); to exalt, extol (God or a person); to contribute (an offering)
This verb, appearing 190 times, covers a remarkable semantic range from literal lifting to metaphorical exaltation. It describes physically raising one's hand to swear an oath (Gen 14:22), mountains being high or tall (Deut 1:28), priests lifting up portions as heave offerings (Lev 2:9), psalmists extolling God's name (Exod 15:2), kings being exalted to thrones (1 Sam 2:10), and the proud whose eyes are lifted in arrogance (Prov 6:17). The stems distinguish intransitive rising (Qal: 'be high, rise up'), intensive praise (Piel: 'extol, magnify'), and causative elevation (Hifil: 'lift up, exalt, remove'). A few uses describe self-exaltation in pride (Hitpael) or being passively lifted by another (Hofal, Pual).

1. lift up, raise (physical) (55×) The primary Hifil causative sense of physically lifting, raising, or picking up an object, body part, or person. Abraham lifts his hand to swear (Gen 14:22), Jacob erects a stone pillar (Gen 31:45), the cupbearer lifts Pharaoh's head (Gen 40:20). Arabic rafa'a 'to raise', Korean 들어올리다 'to lift up', and Swahili -inua 'to raise' all confirm the concrete physical action. This literal sense grounds the metaphorical extensions. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-he-lifted, and-he-raised, and-lifted | es: Levanta, Levántala, Y-alzó | fr: –élever-en-haut, et-il-leva, et-leva | de: du-soll-erheben, du-soll-erheben-hinauf, er-soll-erheben Gen 14:22; Gen 31:45; Gen 39:15; Gen 39:18; Gen 41:44

2. be exalted, rise up (intransitive) (35×) The intransitive Qal sense describing rising, becoming elevated, or being exalted without an external agent. Floodwaters rose in Noah's day (Gen 7:17), Israel's king shall rise in power (Num 24:7), hearts become proud (Deut 8:14, 17:20). The translations capture the stative or inchoative quality (Arabic yartafi'u 'it rises', Korean 높아지다 'to become high'), distinguishing this from the causative lifting of sense 1. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: He-rises, and-exalted, and-it-rose | es: Exaltado, cuando-son-exaltados, exaltada | fr: comme-élever, est-exalta, et-cela-se-leva | de: erhob, erhoehen, erhöhen-sich-selbst Gen 7:17; Num 24:7; Deut 8:14; Deut 17:20; Deut 32:27

3. exalt, extol (Piel intensive) (25×) The intensive Piel sense of actively praising, extolling, or magnifying the name and greatness of God or a person. Moses sings 'The Lord is my strength and song, and He has become my salvation; this is my God, and I will exalt Him' (Exod 15:2). Arabic 'aẓẓama 'to magnify', Korean 높이다 (intensive), Swahili -tukuza 'to glorify' all reflect the intensified, worshipful register that distinguishes this from mere physical raising. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: I-exalt-You, I-have-raised, I-will-exalt-You | es: Exaltad, Te-exaltaré, Y-lo-exalten | fr: Tu-lève-moi-en-haut, de-élever, et-Je—exalt-Lui | de: You-erhebe-mich-hinauf, der-einer-lifting-mich-hinauf, er-wird-erheben-mich-hoch Exod 15:2; 1Sam 2:7; 2Sam 22:49; Ezra 9:9; Job 17:4

4. be high, tall (stative) (20×) A stative or participial Qal sense describing inherent or observable height — people of tall stature (Deut 1:28, 2:10, 2:21), a high hand symbolizing defiant boldness (Exod 14:8, Num 33:3), or high mountains. The evidence shows this as an attributive quality (Arabic murtafi' 'elevated', Korean 높은 'high'), not an action, marking the stative aspect of the root. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-tall, and-tall-of, high | es: Altas, a-los-altos, alta | fr: et-grand, et-élever, haut | de: Wurm, der-Höhen, der-hoch Exod 14:8; Num 33:3; Deut 1:28; Deut 2:10; Deut 2:21

5. exalt, make high (status/honor) (18×) A figurative Hifil sense of exalting someone in rank, honor, or power — God exalting David to kingship (1 Sam 2:10), priests being elevated in ritual status (Lev 2:9, 6:10), Israel's horn being lifted in victory (1 Sam 2:1). The multilingual glosses distinguish this metaphorical elevation from physical lifting, using terms for social or spiritual promotion (Korean 높이다 in the honorific register, Arabic rafa'a in its figurative domain). LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: He-exalted, He-lifts, He-lifts-up | es: Exaltaste, Y-has-exaltado, Y-levantará | fr: et-Il-exalts, et-il-devra-lever, et-il-devra-prendre-en-haut | de: Berge, [ketiv], aber-du-haben-erhöht Lev 2:9; Lev 6:10; Lev 6:15; 1Sam 2:10; 1Kgs 14:7

6. contribute, present (offering) (17×) A specialized Hifil sense denoting the ritual act of lifting up an offering (terumah) or making a voluntary contribution to the sanctuary. The Israelites 'contributed' gold and silver for the tabernacle (Exod 35:24), the Levites received a levy from spoils (Num 31:28, 52). The evidence shows this as a technical cultic term (Arabic qaddama 'to present', Korean 바치다 'to dedicate') distinct from ordinary lifting. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: [ketiv:exalt-themselves], [ketiv:harim], and-he-contributed | es: Y-levantarás, [fue-quitado], [se-exalten] | fr: contributing, et-levy, et-élever | de: Berge, [ketiv:exalt-themselves], contributing Exod 35:24; Num 31:28; Num 31:52; 2Chr 30:24

7. be exalted (divine majesty) (6×) A Qal participial or stative sense applied exclusively to God as the Exalted One, expressing divine transcendence and majesty — 'Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the nations' (Ps 46:10). Arabic muta'ālin 'the Most High', Korean 높으시도다 'O Exalted One', and the consistent application to YHWH distinguish this from human exaltation in sense 2. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: I-will-be-exalted, and-exalted, exalted | es: Exaltado, alto, el-Alto | fr: et-élever, élever | de: erhoehen, erhöht, ich-wird-sein-erhöht Ps 46:10; Ps 99:2; Ps 113:4; Ps 138:6

8. remove, take away (5×) A Hifil sense of lifting something off, away, or out — removing a turban (Ezek 21:26), taking away stumbling blocks (Isa 57:14, 62:10), carrying disgrace away (Prov 3:35). The translations reveal the directional nuance of removal (Arabic azāla 'to remove', Korean 제거하다 'to eliminate') that extends the basic lifting semantics in a subtractive direction. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-take-off, carry-away, lift-up | es: alzad, quitad, se-llevan | fr: et-élever, élever | de: erhob, erhoehen, und-Berge Prov 3:35; Isa 57:14; Isa 62:10; Ezek 21:26; Ezek 45:9

9. haughty, proud (5×) A negative moral sense of the Qal participle describing the proud, haughty, or arrogant whose eyes or hearts are lifted in self-regard. Proverbs condemns 'haughty eyes' (6:17), Isaiah warns against 'the day of the Lord upon everyone who is proud and lofty' (2:12). The evidence shows this as a character descriptor (Arabic al-mutakabbirīn 'the arrogant', Korean 교만한 'proud'), a moral extension of the physical uplifting. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: [ketiv:he-shall-be-exalted], and-lofty, haughty | es: [se-elevará], altivos, y-altivo | fr: et-élever, haughty, élever | de: erhob, erhoehen, haughty 2Sam 22:28; Ps 18:27; Prov 6:17; Isa 2:12; Dan 11:12

10. exalt oneself (reflexive) (2×) The reflexive Hitpael sense where the subject exalts or magnifies himself — 'I will be exalted among the nations' (Isa 33:10, spoken by God), or the wicked king who 'shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god' (Dan 11:36). The form and glosses (Korean 높이리라 with reflexive force) mark the self-directed nature of this exaltation, whether legitimate (God) or blasphemous (human rulers). LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: I-will-be-exalted, and-exalt-himself | es: seré-exaltado, y-se-enaltecerá | fr: et-élever, élever | de: erhoehen, und-erhoehen Isa 33:10; Dan 11:36

11. be raised, be lifted (passive) (2×) The passive Hofal or Pual sense where someone or something is raised or exalted by an external agent. The Levites call Israel to 'exalt the Lord' with the expectation that His name 'shall be exalted' (Neh 9:5), and the righteous man's horn 'will be lifted up' by God (Ps 75:10). The glosses reflect passive reception of exaltation (Arabic rufi'a 'was raised', Korean 높여진 'was elevated'). LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-exalted, will-be-lifted-up | es: serán-exaltados, y-exaltado | fr: et-élever, élever | de: und-erhob, wird-sein-erhoben-hinauf Neh 9:5; Ps 75:10

רָמַם H7311b Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)
It bred; describes manna producing worms when kept overnight, used in Exodus 16:20 about disobedience
This verb means 'to be wormy' or 'to breed worms,' appearing in Exodus 16:20 describing what happened to manna when Israelites disobeyed instructions to gather only one day's portion. The text says some kept it until morning 'and it bred worms and stank.' This is a denominative verb derived from the noun for 'worm,' capturing the process of maggot infestation. The miraculous daily bread became rotten and disgusting when hoarded against God's command, teaching Israel about trust and obedience. The next day's manna would be fresh—no need to hoard. Except on the sixth day before Sabbath, yesterday's manna was worthless.

(1×) Exodus 16:20 records Israel's disobedience during the wilderness wandering: 'But they did not listen to Moses. Some left part of it till the morning, and it bred worms and stank.' The verb וַיִּרֶם (and it bred worms) describes the manna becoming infested with maggots overnight—Spanish 'y crió' (and it bred/produced) captures the generative process. This wasn't natural decay but divinely appointed consequence: hoarding showed lack of trust in God's daily provision. The stench and worms made the hoarded manna repulsive, reinforcing the lesson: depend on God today, trust for tomorrow. Only before Sabbath did manna keep overnight (v. 23-24)—obedience to Sabbath rest required different preparation. WORM MAGGOT
en: and-bred | es: y-crió | fr: et-bred | de: und-bred Exod 16:20

רוּם H7312 N-msc (6×)
Height, loftiness; especially haughtiness and arrogant self-exaltation
A noun derived from the root rum (to be high), spanning the physical concept of height and the moral concept of pride. In Proverbs 25:3, it denotes literal spatial height – 'the heavens for height' – paired with depth as things beyond searching, analogous to the unsearchable heart of a king. Far more frequently, however, it names the sin of haughtiness: Isaiah 2:11 and 2:17 pair it with human loftiness that will be brought low on the Day of the Lord. German 'Erhabenheit' (sublimity, exaltedness) captures both the literal and figurative dimensions of the word, while Spanish 'altivez' (haughtiness) and 'soberbia' (pride) zero in on the moral failing.

1. haughtiness, pride (5×) Haughtiness, pride, or arrogant self-exaltation – the morally negative sense of elevation. In Isa 2:11 and 2:17, the 'loftiness of humankind' stands as a target for divine humbling. Jer 48:29 pairs it with ga'avah and ga'on (pride, arrogance) in the oracle against Moab. Spanish 'altivez' and 'soberbia' consistently render this moral judgment, while Isa 10:12 links it to Assyria's proud heart. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-haughtiness-of, haughtiness-of, loftiness-of | es: Altivez-de-, altivez-de, soberbia-de | fr: et-hauteur, hauteur, רום | de: Erhabenheit, erhob, und-Erhabenheit Prov 21:4; Isa 2:11; Isa 2:17; Isa 10:12; Jer 48:29

2. height (physical/spatial) (1×) Physical or spatial height as a measurable dimension. Only in Prov 25:3, where 'the heavens for height and the earth for depth' illustrate the unsearchable nature of a king's heart. Spanish 'para-altura' (for height) and the parallel with 'depth' confirm a purely spatial, non-metaphorical usage here, making this a rare concrete instance of a word overwhelmingly used for moral pride. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-height | es: para-altura | fr: à-לרום | de: zu-erhob Prov 25:3

רוּם H7313 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (4×)
to rise, be lifted up, exalt (Aramaic)
This Aramaic verb (appearing only in Daniel) expresses elevation or exaltation, whether self-exaltation (pride), being raised by another, or offering praise. The semantic range parallels Hebrew רוּם, covering both physical rising and metaphorical lifting in status or spirit. All occurrences relate to pride, divine sovereignty, or worship.

(4×) Denotes rising or exaltation in various stems. The Peil (passive) in Daniel 5:20 describes Nebuchadnezzar's heart 'lifted up' in pride. The Polel participle in 4:34 (4:37 Eng.) means 'extolling' God. The Aphel participle in 5:19 describes the power to 'raise up' or exalt people. The Hithpolel in 5:23 indicates 'lift oneself up against' God—self-exaltation. Multilingual glosses show stem distinctions: Spanish 'se-elevó' (was lifted), 'exaltaba' (was exalting), 'te-enalteciste' (you exalted yourself), French 'exalter' (exalt), German preserves Hebrew forms—all reflecting the Aramaic stem system and the Daniel context of divine sovereignty confronting human pride. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-extolling, raising-up, was-lifted-up | es: exaltaba, se-elevó, te-enalteciste | fr: et-exalter, exalter | de: [התרוממת], [ומרומם], [מרים] Dan 4:37; Dan 5:19; Dan 5:20; Dan 5:23

רוּם H7314 Conj-w | N-msc | 3ms (5×)
height (Aramaic; of structures and visionary trees)
An Aramaic noun for physical height, used in Daniel and Ezra for imposing vertical dimensions. Ezra 6:3 specifies the rebuilt temple's height at sixty cubits. Daniel 3:1 records Nebuchadnezzar's golden image at sixty cubits tall. The remaining three occurrences (Dan 4:10, 11, 20) describe the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream whose height reached to heaven, symbolizing the king's towering but vulnerable dominion. The word consistently evokes awe at structures that aspire upward.

(5×) The measurable vertical extent of imposing structures or visionary objects. French 'hauteur' and Spanish 'altura' render it directly. The temple decree (Ezra 6:3) and the golden image (Dan 3:1) use it for literal architectural measurement, while the dream-tree passages (Dan 4:10, 11, 20) extend it symbolically: height reaching heaven represents overreaching royal ambition. The possessive suffix ('its height') appears in every occurrence, always referring to something monumental. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-height, its-height | es: su-altura, y-su-altura | fr: [רומה], et-hauteur, hauteur | de: [ורומה], [רומה] Ezra 6:3; Dan 3:1; Dan 4:10; Dan 4:11; Dan 4:20

רוֹם H7315 N-msc (1×)

On high; an adverb describing upward direction in Habakkuk 3:10, where the deep lifts its hands high

This adverb means 'on high' or 'upward,' appearing in Habakkuk 3:10 in a theophanic vision of God's coming. The prophet describes cosmic upheaval: 'The mountains saw you and writhed; the raging waters swept on; the deep gave its voice; it lifted its hands on high.' The phrase captures the dramatic image of the ocean depths raising hands upward, perhaps in worship or terror or both. The theophany depicts all creation responding to God's appearance—mountains, waters, and the deep itself react. 'On high' emphasizes the vertical dimension of the gesture, hands reaching toward heaven in acknowledgment of divine presence.

(1×) Habakkuk 3:10 envisions creation's response to theophany: 'The mountains saw you and writhed; torrents of water swept by; the deep gave its voice; it lifted its hands on high.' The adverb רוֹם (on high) modifies 'lifted its hands'—the subterranean waters (תְּהוֹם, the deep) raise hands upward. Spanish 'lo alto' (the high place) and the gesture of uplifted hands could signify worship, surrender, or terror. The imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern cosmology where the deep was both source of life and realm of chaos. Even this primordial force acknowledges Yahweh's supremacy when he appears in power to save his anointed. All creation—mountains, waters, depths—responds to God's awesome presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: on-high | es: lo-alto | fr: hauteur | de: erhob Hab 3:10

רוּמָה H7316 N-proper-fs (1×)

Rumah — a place name appearing in the account of King Jehoiakim's lineage

Rumah is a place name mentioned only in connection with Zebudah, the mother of King Jehoiakim. The location is identified as the hometown of Jehoiakim's mother. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations (Krouma, Ryma, Lobenna), suggesting uncertainty about the precise location even in antiquity. Some scholars have connected it with Arumah in Judges 9:41, though this remains speculative.

(1×) A town in Israel, mentioned as the birthplace or residence of Zebudah (2 Kings 23:36). The exact location remains uncertain, though possible connections with Arumah have been suggested. The varied ancient translations reflect geographical ambiguity that persisted into the Hellenistic period. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rumah | es: Ruma | fr: Rumah | de: Rumah 2Kgs 23:36

רוֹמָה H7317 Adv (1×)

haughtily — with arrogant bearing, in an elevated or prideful manner

This rare adverb describes a manner of walking characterized by pride and arrogance. In Micah 2:3, it appears in God's warning that the people will no longer walk haughtily because judgment is coming. The word connects to the root meaning of 'height' or 'elevation,' suggesting a lifted posture or attitude. The Spanish and English renderings ('erguidos,' 'haughtily') both capture this sense of arrogant bearing that will be brought low.

(1×) Describes walking or moving with pride and arrogance, literally 'with lifted head' or elevated posture (Micah 2:3). The adverb characterizes an attitude of haughtiness that God promises to humble. This single biblical occurrence forms part of a prophetic oracle about coming judgment that will prevent such prideful behavior. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: haughtily | es: erguidos | fr: hauteur | de: [רומה] Mic 2:3

רוֹמֵם H7318 Conj-w / V-Pual-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

exaltation — praise, extolling, or song of praise directed to God

This term denotes praise or exaltation, particularly in the context of worship directed to Yahweh. In Psalm 66:17, it appears as 'exaltation was under my tongue,' describing the psalmist's readiness to praise. Some manuscripts read this as a verb form rather than a noun, but most lexicographers favor understanding it as referring to a song of praise. The root connects to the concept of lifting up or elevating, here applied to vocal worship that elevates God's name.

(1×) A song of praise or act of exaltation directed toward Yahweh (Psalm 66:17). The term captures the worshiper's readiness to vocally lift up God's name. Cross-linguistically rendered as 'exaltation' in Spanish, French, and German, this word emphasizes the lifting nature of praise that honors the divine. PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: and-exaltation | es: y-exaltación | fr: et-exaltation | de: und-exaltation Ps 66:17

רוֹמֵם H7319 N-mpc (1×)

exaltations — praises, songs of exaltation (plural construct form)

This plural construct form refers to multiple acts or expressions of exaltation and praise. In Psalm 149:6, it appears as 'the exaltations of God in their throat,' describing how the faithful carry songs of praise ready on their lips. The plural form suggests abundant, repeated, or varied expressions of worship. Like its singular counterpart, this term connects praise to the imagery of elevation and lifting up.

(1×) Multiple songs of praise or exaltations of God (Psalm 149:6). The phrase 'exaltations of God' suggests praise ready to be voiced, carried in the throat of the worshipers. This construct plural emphasizes the abundance and readiness of praise among the faithful community. PRAISE AND RENOWN

en: exaltations-of | es: Exaltaciones-de | fr: élévation | de: exaltations-of Ps 149:6

רֹמַמְתִּי עֶזֶר H7320 Prep / N-proper-ms (2×)

Romamti-Ezer, son of Heman the temple musician; name means 'I have exalted help'

Romamti-Ezer, whose name means 'I have exalted help,' was one of the sons of Heman the king's seer and temple musician. First Chronicles 25:4 lists him among fourteen sons, all given theologically meaningful names that together may form a psalm or prayer. Verse 31 identifies him as receiving the twenty-fourth lot for temple service. His name celebrates divine assistance, joining personal testimony ('I have exalted') with confidence in God's help. Like his brothers, his very name was a confession of faith, lived out in Levitical musical ministry.

(2×) Both 1 Chronicles references preserve the full compound name 'Romamti-Ezer': verse 25:4 in the genealogical list, verse 25:31 with the prepositional prefix indicating the lot assignment. The name appears in different grammatical contexts (coordinate with other names vs. beneficiary of lot casting) but maintains its compound form. As one of Heman's prophetically-named sons, Romamti-Ezer's name formed part of a larger liturgical testimony to God's faithfulness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5500 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Romamti-Ezer, for-Romamti-Ezer | es: para-Romamti-ezer, y-Romamti-ezer | fr: [ורממתי עזר], [לרוממתי עזר] | de: [ורממתי עזר], [לרוממתי עזר] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:31

רוּעַ H7321 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (44×)

To shout, raise a cry; shout for joy in worship, sound a war cry, blow a trumpet alarm signal.

Rua is the Hebrew Bible's great verb of shouting — but the same cry that brings Jericho's walls crashing down (Josh 6:20) also fills the Psalms as joyful praise. The Hifil stem covers nearly all occurrences, and context alone determines whether the cry is terrifying or jubilant. At the temple rebuilding (Ezra 3:11-13), shouts of joy mingle with weeping so that no one can distinguish them. The Hitpael adds personal exultant triumph (Ps 60:8), while Numbers 10 introduces a codified alarm-blast sense. Arabic ragha ('utter a cry') preserves the raw vocalization; Spanish aclamar and German jauchzen gravitate toward joy.

1. shout, cry out (20×) To raise a loud shout or war cry — the battle-cry sense, concentrated around Joshua 6 and the conquest narratives. Twenty occurrences, including the dramatic seven-fold march at Jericho where the people are commanded 'Do not shout' (Josh 6:10) until the signal, then 'the people shouted with a great shout' (Josh 6:20). Also in Judg 7:21 (Gideon's ambush), 1 Sam 17:20, 52 (David and Goliath), and Isa 42:13 (Yahweh as warrior). Spanish gritaron and French crier both select raw vocalization vocabulary. German Kriegsgeschrei ('war cry') captures the military coloring. The Hifil here is declarative: to raise, produce, or utter a shout. JOY AND EXULTATION en: He-shouts, and-shouted, and-they-cried-out | es: cuando-gritaron, gritad, gritan | fr: [בהריע], [ויריעו], crier | de: [בהריע], [הריעו], [ויריעו] Josh 6:5; Josh 6:10; Josh 6:16

2. shout for joy, acclaim (15×) To shout for joy, acclaim in worship — the liturgical and celebratory sense with 15 occurrences, predominantly in the Psalms and Ezra. Ps 47:1 commands 'Shout to God with the voice of triumph!'; Ps 66:1 and 81:1 open worship with the imperative hariu. At the temple foundation (Ezra 3:11-13), the people 'shouted with a great shout' of joy. Spanish aclamad and French crier de joie both shift from raw shouting to positive acclamation. Job 38:7 extends this to the morning stars shouting for joy at creation — a cosmic liturgy. Korean 환호하다 ('to cheer/acclaim') consistently marks this sense as distinct from battle cries. JOY AND EXULTATION en: and-shouted-for-joy, let-us-shout-aloud, shout | es: Aclamad, aclamad, aclamemos | fr: [הריעו], [מריעים], cria | de: [הריעו], [הריע], [ויריעו] Judg 15:14; Ezra 3:11; Ezra 3:13; Job 38:7; Ps 47:1

3. sound an alarm (5×) To sound an alarm, blow a signal blast — the military/ceremonial signal sense, centered in Numbers 10 and prophetic warning passages. Five occurrences: Num 10:7 distinguishes between 'assembling' (taq'u, from taqa) and 'sounding the alarm' (lo tari'u, from rua); Num 10:9 commands alarm-blowing when enemies attack; Joel 2:1 and Hos 5:8 use the alarm as prophetic metaphor for impending judgment; 2 Chr 13:12 describes the priests 'sounding the alarm' trumpets against Jeroboam. French pousser un cri d'alarme and Spanish alarmaréis both mark this as codified signal rather than spontaneous vocalization. The semantic shift from 'shout' to 'signal' parallels the development of English 'alarm' from Italian all'arme ('to arms!'). JOY AND EXULTATION
en: and-sound-alarm, and-you-shall-sound-alarm, sound-alarm | es: alarmaréis:, gritad, para-hacer-sonar | fr: [להריע], et-pousser-un-cri, et-tu-devra-sound-alarme | de: [הריע], [והריעו], [להריע] Num 10:7; Num 10:9; 2Chr 13:12; Hos 5:8; Joel 2:1

4. shout in triumph (3×) To shout in personal triumph — the Hitpael reflexive sense, expressing exultant self-directed celebration over enemies. Three occurrences, all in the Psalms: Ps 41:11 ('my enemy does not shout in triumph over me'); Ps 60:8 and 108:9 (identical: 'over Philistia I will shout in triumph'). Spanish triunfar and German jauchzen in Triumphieren both select triumph-specific vocabulary. The Hitpael adds reflexive intensity — this is not communal worship but personal, almost visceral exultation. The tight clustering in Psalmic poetry suggests a specialized poetic register. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: I-will-shout-in-triumph, shout-in-triumph, shouts-in-triumph | es: aclama, gritaré-en-triunfo, triunfará | fr: le-pousser-des-cris, pousser-des-cris | de: ich-wird-jauchzen-in-triumphieren, jauchzen-in-triumphieren, jauchzt-in-triumphieren Ps 41:11; Ps 60:8; Ps 108:9

5. (1×) A single Hophal (or Polal passive) occurrence at Isa 16:10: 'in the vineyards no shout is raised (lo yeroa')' — describing the silencing of the vintage-cry in Moab's devastated vineyards. Spanish se da voces de alegria ('shouts of joy are given') and French pousser des cris both treat this as a passive of sense 2 (joyful shouting), now negated. The passive voice and agricultural context set it apart from the active war-cry and worship senses, though it is best understood as the suppressed or absent form of the vintage acclamation rather than a wholly new meaning. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: is-shouted | es: se-da-voces-de-alegría | fr: pousser-des-cris | de: [יֵרֵעַ] Isa 16:10

רָפַף H7322 V-Pual-Imperf-3mp (1×)
tremble — to shake, quiver, or rock back and forth
This verb describes a shaking or trembling motion, used metaphorically in Job 26:11 where 'the pillars of heaven tremble' at God's rebuke. The root appears in Aramaic and Arabic with similar meanings of gentle movement, quivering, or fluttering. The image is one of cosmic structures shaking before divine power. The translation consensus across languages ('tremble,' 'tiemblan') reflects this sense of involuntary shaking in response to overwhelming force.

(1×) To shake, tremble, or rock, particularly describing the cosmic pillars of heaven that quiver at God's rebuke (Job 26:11). The verb conveys involuntary trembling before divine power, with cognates in Aramaic and Arabic suggesting gentle rocking or quivering motion. The poetic image emphasizes the foundational structures of creation shaking before God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4473 WITH 3 SENSES en: tremble | es: tiemblan | fr: יִרוֹפָפוּ | de: [יִרוֹפָפוּ] Job 26:11

רוּץ H7323 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (104×)
To run, move swiftly; as participle: runner, royal guard (bodyguard corps); causative: to chase, rush someone
A verb of vigorous physical movement, ruts conveys the energy of running toward a goal or fleeing from danger. Abraham ran to meet the three visitors at Mamre (Gen 18:2, 7), and messengers ran between battlefields and thrones. Notably, the participle harratsim became a fixed term for the royal bodyguard who served as sentries and executioners under Israelite and Judahite kings (1 Kgs 14:27-28; 2 Kgs 10:25). In the Persian period, the same participial form designated royal couriers dispatched across the empire (Esth 3:13-15). The Hifil causative extends the root to mean 'cause to run' — chasing an enemy or rushing someone to a destination, as when Joseph was hurried from prison to Pharaoh's court (Gen 41:14).

1. Qal: run, move swiftly (63×) The core Qal sense of physical running or swift movement on foot — appearing in all finite forms, infinitives, and imperatives across 63 occurrences. Arabic rakada, Korean dallida, and Swahili -kimbia all map uniformly to this sense. Abraham's double running in Genesis 18 (to the visitors, then to the herd) epitomizes the hospitality urgency this verb often carries. RUNNING AND RACING
en: and-he-ran, and-ran | es: Y-corrió, y-corrió | fr: et-courut, et-il-courut, et-ran | de: und-er-lief, und-lief, und-ran Gen 18:2; Gen 18:7; Gen 24:17; Gen 24:20; Gen 24:28

2. Qal participle: royal guard (17×) A specialized substantivized participle harratsim designating the king's bodyguard corps — runners who served as royal executioners, sentries, and shield-bearers (1 Sam 22:17; 1 Kgs 14:27-28; 2 Kgs 10:25; 2 Chr 12:10-11). The translation evidence is telling: Spanish and German render 'corredores / runners' while English shifts to 'guards,' revealing the semantic drift from physical running to military office. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: and-of-the-runners, the-guards, the-runners | es: a-los-corredores, los-corredores, y-de-los-corredores | fr: et-de-le-coureurs, le-coureurs, le-gardes | de: der-guards, der-runners, laufen 1Sam 22:17; 1Kgs 14:27; 1Kgs 14:28; 2Kgs 10:25

3. Qal participle: runner (12×) The active participle used as a verbal adjective or generic substantive for 'one who runs, a runner' — distinct from the technical military sense. In the narrative of Absalom's revolt, the watchman identifies approaching runners by their gait (2 Sam 18:24-27). Arabic raakid and Korean dallineun ja preserve the literal participial force without the institutional overlay. RUNNING AND RACING

en: runner, runners, running | es: corredores, correo, corriendo | fr: courant, coureurs, courir | de: Laeufer, laufen, laufend 2Sam 15:1; 2Sam 18:22; 2Sam 18:24; 2Sam 18:26

4. Hifil: cause to run, chase away (7×) The Hifil causative stem meaning to make someone run — either chasing them away in pursuit or rushing them urgently to a destination. Genesis 41:14 uses this when Joseph is hurried from the dungeon to appear before Pharaoh; 2 Chronicles 35:13 describes Levites rushing portions to the people. The seven occurrences split between hostile chase (Jer 49:19; Ps 68:31) and urgent dispatch. RUNNING AND RACING

en: (I-will-chase-them), I-will-chase-him, [ketiv:I-will-chase-them] | es: [kethiv], correrá, e-hicieron-correr | fr: courir, et-coureur, et-cours | de: laufen, lief, und-holten-ihn-eilends Gen 41:14; 1Sam 17:17; 2Chr 35:13; Ps 68:31; Jer 49:19

5. (4×) Royal couriers of the Persian postal system — the participial form applied to official messengers who carried royal edicts throughout the empire's provinces (Esth 3:13, 15; 8:10, 14). This specialized institutional sense is distinct from the earlier Israelite bodyguard usage; all four occurrences cluster in Esther, and the multilingual evidence (Spanish correos, English couriers) confirms the postal-dispatch meaning. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: the-couriers | es: Los-corredores, Los-correos, los-corredores | fr: les-coureurs | de: Laeufer Esth 3:13; Esth 3:15; Esth 8:10; Esth 8:14

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Nahum 2:4 describing chariots darting or rushing through the streets — extending the root's movement sense from human runners to vehicles. English 'they dart' and Spanish 'corren' capture the rapid, erratic motion of war chariots in the prophetic vision of Nineveh's fall. RUNNING AND RACING

en: they-dart | es: corren | fr: courir | de: Laeufer Nah 2:4

וְרִיק H7324 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Imp-ms (19×)

To empty out, pour forth, draw (a sword), or muster (troops) — expressing forceful extraction or outpouring in both literal and figurative senses.

This Hifil verb conveys the decisive act of making something empty or drawing something out. Its most dramatic use is military: drawing a sword from its sheath, as when God threatens to 'draw out a sword' after Israel (Lev 26:33) or the psalmist pleads 'draw out the spear' (Ps 35:3). Equally vivid is the domestic image of emptying sacks or vessels — Joseph's brothers emptying their grain sacks and finding silver (Gen 42:35). Malachi 3:10 transforms the image gloriously: God promises to 'pour out' blessing until there is no room. Spanish captures the sword sense with 'desenvainar' and the pouring sense with 'derramar/vaciar,' while the rare muster-of-troops usage in Genesis 14:14 is rendered 'armó.'

1. draw out a sword (8×) To draw out or unsheathe a sword — a Hifil causative expressing the extraction of a weapon for combat or divine threat. Exodus 15:9 quotes the enemy boasting 'I will draw my sword,' Leviticus 26:33 warns of divine pursuit with drawn sword, and Ezekiel repeatedly invokes the image of God's unsheathed blade against Jerusalem (Ezek 5:2, 12; 12:14; 28:7; 30:11). Spanish 'desenvainar' and Arabic cognate patterns confirm this as a distinct military-technical sense. EMPTYING DEVASTATING

en: I-shall-unsheathe, I-will-draw, and-I-will-draw-out | es: Y-saca, desenvainaré, y-desenvainarán | fr: Je—tirer, et-je-fera-draw-dehors, et-le-vider | de: [אריק], [והריקו], ich-wird-ziehen Exod 15:9; Lev 26:33; Ps 35:3; Ezek 5:2; Ezek 5:12

2. empty out, pour out (8×) To empty out or pour forth the contents of a container — whether literal (emptying sacks in Gen 42:35, decanting wine-jars in Jer 48:12) or metaphorical (pouring out people or blessings). Malachi 3:10 famously promises God will 'pour out' (hariqothi) blessing beyond measure, and Zechariah 4:12 describes the two olive trees 'pouring out' golden oil. The range from German 'Leere' to Spanish 'derramar/vaciar' and Hindi 'khali karna' shows how universally translators grasp this emptying-pouring continuum. EMPTYING DEVASTATING

en: I-cast-them-out, and-pour-out, emptying | es: derramarán, los-vaciaré, para-vaciar | fr: [יריקו], [להריק], emptying | de: [המריקים], [והריקתי], [יריק] Gen 42:35; Ps 18:42; Eccl 11:3; Isa 32:6; Jer 48:12

3. be poured out, be emptied (2×) The passive (Hofal) of emptying or pouring: to be emptied out or poured forth. In Song of Songs 1:3 the beloved's name is 'oil poured out' (shemen turaq), and Jeremiah 48:11 describes Moab as wine never 'poured from vessel to vessel.' Spanish 'fue vaciado/derramado' and French 'répandue' preserve the passive voicing. These two occurrences mark a distinct grammatical stem expressing the result-state rather than the agent's action. POURED OUT EMPTIED

en: he-has-been-poured, poured-out | es: derramado, fue-vaciado | fr: [הורק], répandue | de: [הורק], [תורק] Song 1:3; Jer 48:11

4. muster, lead out troops (1×) To muster or lead out trained men for battle — a specialized military extension of the 'drawing out' metaphor. Found in Genesis 14:14, where Abraham 'led out' (wayyareq) his 318 trained servants to rescue Lot. Spanish 'armó' (he armed/mobilized) and Korean '이끌었다' (he led out) both highlight the organized marshalling of forces rather than mere extraction. This single occurrence preserves an archaic sense connecting the verb to the deployment of human resources for war. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-he-led-out | es: y-armó | fr: et-il-conduisit-dehors | de: und-ließ-ausrücken Gen 14:14

רִיר H7325 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

flowing — to flow or run, especially of bodily discharges

This verb describes the flowing or running of liquids, used specifically in Leviticus 15:3 for a bodily discharge. The root appears in Aramaic for saliva or spittle, and in Arabic for slobbering or slavering. The Hebrew usage focuses on the continuous flow of a discharge from the body, with medical or ritual purity implications. The verb captures the ongoing nature of the flow rather than a single emission.

(1×) To flow or run continuously, used of bodily discharge in ritual purity contexts (Leviticus 15:3). The phrase 'his flesh flows with his discharge' describes an ongoing condition rather than a single event. Aramaic and Arabic cognates referring to saliva and slobbering support the sense of liquid flowing from the body. RUNNING AND RACING

en: running | es: fluyere | fr: running | de: laufend Lev 15:3

רוּשׁ H7326 Prep-b / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (24×)

To be poor, in want; as participle: a poor or destitute person; also to feign poverty

Rush (or rish) describes the state of material poverty and want. Its Qal participle functions almost exclusively as a noun — 'the poor one' — appearing throughout Proverbs and the Psalms to name the economically vulnerable person who stands opposite the rich (ashir). Spanish 'pobre' and German 'arm' render it with straightforward simplicity. Nathan's parable in 2 Samuel 12 makes the rash unforgettable: one little ewe lamb belonging to a poor man. Proverbs 13:7 introduces a surprising Hitpael twist — one who 'makes himself poor' while secretly possessing wealth — while Psalm 34:10 preserves the rare finite verbal force, 'young lions are in want.'

1. poor, needy (adj/subst) (22×) Used adjectivally or substantivally as 'the poor person, the destitute one.' This participial usage dominates the 22 occurrences, spanning Proverbs' wisdom contrasts between rich and poor (Prov 10:4; 13:8; 14:20; 22:7), Nathan's parable of the poor man's lamb (2 Sam 12:1-4), and the Psalms' concern for the vulnerable (Ps 82:3). Spanish 'pobre' and German 'Armer' consistently render the substantival sense. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: a-poor-one, and-poor, and-to-the-poor-one | es: Pobre, Y-al-pobre, al-pobre | fr: dans-pauvre, et-pauvre, et-à-le-pauvre-un | de: Armer, Haupt, arm 1Sam 18:23; 2Sam 12:1; 2Sam 12:3; 2Sam 12:4; Ps 82:3

2. to feign poverty (1×) Hitpael participle with pretensive force: to make oneself appear poor, to feign poverty. Proverbs 13:7 pairs this with its opposite — 'one who makes himself rich yet has nothing' — creating a wisdom proverb about appearance versus reality. Spanish 'el que se hace pobre' (he who makes himself poor) captures the reflexive-pretensive nuance precisely. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: one-who-pretends-to-be-poor | es: el-que-se-hace-pobre | fr: pauvre | de: Armer Prov 13:7

3. to be in want (1×) The finite verbal sense: to be in want, to lack, to become impoverished — describing the process or state rather than labeling a person. Psalm 34:10 declares that young lions 'are in want and suffer hunger,' but those who seek the LORD lack no good thing. Spanish 'empobrecen' (they become poor) and German 'sind in Mangel' (are in want) preserve the verbal dynamism absent from the participial noun. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: are-in-want | es: empobrecen | fr: être-pauvre | de: sind-in-Mangel Ps 34:10

רוּת H7327 Conj-w | N-proper-fs (12×)

Ruth — Moabite woman who clung to her mother-in-law Naomi and became an ancestress of King David

Ruth (רוּת) is the Moabite woman whose story is told in the book bearing her name. After her husband's death, she refused to leave her mother-in-law Naomi, declaring 'Where you go I will go; your people shall be my people, and your God my God' (Ruth 1:16). She followed Naomi to Bethlehem, gleaned in Boaz's fields (Ruth 2:2-8), and through the levirate custom became his wife. Their son Obed was the grandfather of David (Ruth 4:13-17), placing Ruth in the messianic lineage. Her story powerfully narrates loyalty, providence, and a foreigner's inclusion in the covenant community.

Ruth (12×) A Moabite woman, the central figure of the book of Ruth. After marrying into Naomi's family in Moab (Ruth 1:4), she chose to accompany Naomi back to Bethlehem following their husbands' deaths (Ruth 1:14, 16, 22). She gleaned in the field of Boaz (Ruth 2:2, 8), a kinsman-redeemer who married her through the levirate custom (Ruth 4:10-13). Her son Obed became grandfather of David (Ruth 4:17, 22), placing her in the royal and messianic lineage (Matt 1:5). The name's etymology may connect to רֵעוּת ('friendship, companion'), fitting her extraordinary devotion. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Ruth, and-Ruth | es: Rut, y-Rut | fr: Ruth, et-Ruth | de: Rut, und-Rut Ruth 1:4; Ruth 1:14; Ruth 1:16; Ruth 1:22; Ruth 2:2

רָז H7328 N-mpd (9×)

A secret or mystery, especially a divine secret revealed through prophetic vision or interpretation (Aramaic, used only in Daniel).

An Aramaic loanword from Persian, used exclusively in the book of Daniel to describe secrets that belong to God alone but which he graciously discloses to his servants. When Nebuchadnezzar demands both dream and interpretation, Daniel appeals to the 'God of heaven' who reveals mysteries (Dan 2:28). The multilingual evidence is strikingly unified: English 'mystery,' Spanish 'misterio,' and German 'Geheimnis' all converge on the same core meaning. This term became foundational for later apocalyptic and rabbinic vocabulary about divine disclosure.

mystery, secret (9×) A divine mystery or hidden secret, particularly one accessible only through God's revelation. All nine occurrences appear in Daniel 2 and 4, centering on Nebuchadnezzar's dream and the heavenly court's willingness to unveil what human wisdom cannot penetrate. The singular emphasizes a specific hidden matter (Dan 2:18, 2:27, 4:6), while the plural encompasses multiple divine secrets (Dan 2:28-29, 2:47). Translations across languages —English 'mystery,' Spanish 'misterio,' German 'Geheimnis'—uniformly point to concealed knowledge that requires supernatural disclosure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: mysteries, mystery, the-mystery | es: el-misterio, misterio, misterios | fr: [רז], [רזיא], [רזין] | de: Geheimnis, das-Geheimnis Dan 2:18; Dan 2:19; Dan 2:27; Dan 2:28; Dan 2:29

רָזָה H7329 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

grow lean, become emaciated, waste away; loss of physical substance or robustness

This verb describes the process of growing lean, becoming emaciated, or wasting away. The root appears in two dramatically different contexts: Isaiah's prophecy about Jacob's declining glory, and Zephaniah's oracle about God causing false gods to waste away. In Isaiah 17:4, the imagery is physiological—fatness giving way to leanness as divine judgment reduces national prosperity. In Zephaniah 2:11, the verb takes a more unusual turn, with God 'starving' or making the false gods lean, though this sense has puzzled interpreters. The Arabic cognate ḍ ('grow thin and weak') supports the core meaning of physical diminishment, while the multilingual glosses consistently point to wasting and emaciation.

(2×) To become lean, grow emaciated, or waste away through loss of physical substance. In Isa 17:4, the fatness (שְׁמַן) of Jacob's body will become lean, a vivid metaphor for national decline and the removal of prosperity. In Zeph 2:11, Yahweh will 'starve' or cause the gods of the earth to waste away, an unusual application suggesting they will be deprived of sustenance (worship? offerings?) and thus diminish in power and presence. The Spanish 'consumir' (consume, waste away) and 'enflaquecerá' (will become thin) capture both the physical and metaphorical dimensions of this diminishment. THIN GAUNT LEAN en: he-has-starved, will-become-lean | es: hará-consumir, se-enflaquecerá | fr: [ירזה], secret | de: [ירזה], [רזה] Isa 17:4; Zeph 2:11

רָזֶה H7330 Adj-fs (2×)

lean, gaunt; used of livestock and land, describing physical thinness or barrenness

This adjective describes a condition of being thin or gaunt. Applied to sheep in Ezekiel 34:20, it contrasts with well-fed animals, highlighting neglect or poor health. When used of land in Numbers 13:20, it denotes barrenness or poor agricultural quality, the opposite of fertile soil. The multilingual evidence consistently points to physical leanness or poverty of resource across its two occurrences.

(2×) Describes physical leanness or thinness, whether of livestock (Ezek 34:20, contrasting with the fat sheep) or land (Num 13:20, where the spies assess Canaan's agricultural potential). The German 'mager' and English 'lean' capture the core meaning, while Spanish 'pobre' and French 'secret' (likely a variant reading) show the semantic range extending to barrenness and deprivation. THIN GAUNT LEAN
en: lean | es: flaca., pobre? | fr: lean, secret | de: Geheimnis, mager Num 13:20; Ezek 34:20

רְזוֹן H7331 N-proper-ms (1×)

Rezon — the founder of an Aramean kingdom in Damascus during Solomon's reign

Rezon was an adversary of Solomon who established himself as king in Damascus. First Kings 11:23 identifies him as a military leader who broke away and founded an independent kingdom. Some scholars have attempted to identify him with Hezion mentioned in 1 Kings 15:18, though this remains uncertain. The Septuagint's varied renderings (Esrom, Razon) reflect the challenge of transliterating Semitic names into Greek.

(1×) A personal name: the founder of an Aramean kingdom centered in Damascus who opposed Solomon's rule (1 Kings 11:23). Rezon represents one of several adversaries who arose during Solomon's later years, challenging Israelite regional dominance. Proposed identifications with Hezion remain speculative. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Rezon | es: Rezón | fr: Rezon | de: Rezon 1Kgs 11:23

רָזוֹן H7332 N-ms (3×)

leanness, wasting; scantness, scarcity

This noun describes conditions of deficiency—bodily wasting, famine-induced leanness, or scanty measures. Isaiah uses it for physical emaciation ('leanness'), contrasting health with wasting.

Psalm 106 recalls God sending 'leanness into their soul' when He granted Israel's craving for meat—physical satiation producing spiritual wasting. Micah condemns the 'scant ephah,' using the term for dishonest, undersized measures that cheat customers.

(3×) The word designates deficiency in three contexts. Isaiah 10:16 speaks metaphorically of God sending 'leanness' among Assyria's stout warriors—wasting that contrasts with their fatness or prosperity. Psalm 106:15 describes divine judgment: 'He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul'—a haunting image of spiritual emaciation despite material abundance. Micah 6:10 applies it to commercial fraud: 'the scant ephah,' a shorted measure that represents economic injustice. Whether bodily, spiritual, or commercial, the term indicates what should be full but is instead diminished. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leanness, scant | es: escasa, flacura, flaqueza | fr: [רזון], maigreur, pauvreté | de: [רזון], leanness Ps 106:15; Isa 10:16; Mic 6:10

רָזוֹן H7333 N-ms (1×)

prince, potentate — a ruler or person of high rank and authority

This term denotes a ruler or potentate, appearing in parallel with 'king' in Proverbs 14:28. The verse states that 'in a multitude of people is a king's glory, but in the lack of people is a prince's ruin.' The parallelism suggests someone of royal or high political rank. The root may connect to concepts of wealth or abundance, fitting the context of population size as a measure of a ruler's strength.

(1×) A prince, potentate, or ruler of high rank (Proverbs 14:28). The term appears in parallel with 'king,' suggesting comparable authority. The context emphasizes that a ruler's power depends on having many subjects—without people, even a prince faces ruin. Spanish and English translations converge on 'prince' or 'príncipe.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-prince | es: príncipe | fr: רזון | de: [רזון] Prov 14:28

רָזִי H7334 N-ms (2×)

leanness, wasting; a noun expressing physical or spiritual emaciation, used in lament

A noun denoting wasting away or emaciation. Isaiah 24:16 uses it in a poignant double cry—'leanness to me, leanness to me'—expressing deep distress or self-consuming grief. The word stands opposite 'beauty' or 'glory' in the same verse, emphasizing devastation and loss. Spanish 'miseria' captures the desolation implied, while English alternatives like 'woe to me' suggest the expression may have become a lament formula.

(2×) Denotes a state of wasting or emaciation, both physical and metaphorical. In Isaiah 24:16, the prophet repeats 'wasting to me' twice, expressing profound grief over Israel's condition. The opposition to 'beauty' (צְבִי) in context suggests not just physical thinness but spiritual or communal devastation. Spanish 'miseria' (misery, wretchedness) and the variant 'woe to me' reveal how the term evolved from describing bodily leanness to expressing existential lament. THIN GAUNT LEAN

en: leanness-to-me, woe-to-me | es: miseria | fr: [רזי] | de: [רזי] Isa 24:16

רָזַם H7335 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (1×)

flash, wink — to flash or blink the eyes, possibly in anger

This verb describes a flashing or winking motion of the eyes, used in Job 15:12 where Eliphaz asks Job, 'Why do your eyes flash?' The context suggests anger or agitation. The root appears as a transposition of an Arabic and Aramaic root meaning to signal or make signs. Some manuscripts have variant readings, and some scholars suggest emending to a more common verb for 'lifted eyes,' but the sense of eye movement expressing emotion remains central.

(1×) To flash or wink with the eyes, expressing anger or agitation (Job 15:12). Eliphaz's rhetorical question 'Why do your eyes flash?' challenges Job's emotional display during their debate. The verb captures involuntary eye movement that betrays inner turmoil, with cognates in Aramaic and Arabic related to signaling or gesturing. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: flash | es: guiñan | fr: ירזמון | de: [ירזמון] Job 15:12

רָזַן H7336 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (6×)

Ruler, dignitary, potentate — a Qal participle used as a substantive for persons of authority and political power.

A participial noun from a root meaning 'to be weighty' or 'commanding,' used exclusively in the plural to designate rulers and potentates. The word carries a sense of gravitas and established authority, often appearing in parallel with 'kings' (melakhim) to form a comprehensive picture of earthly power. Deborah summons these rulers to hear her victory song (Judg 5:3), while Psalm 2:2 depicts them conspiring together against the Lord's anointed. Proverbs personifies Wisdom as the one through whom rulers decree justice (Prov 8:15), and Isaiah's soaring rhetoric declares that God reduces the world's rulers to nothing (Isa 40:23).

ruler, dignitary (6×) Ruler, dignitary, potentate — a person exercising political authority and governance, derived from a root meaning 'to be weighty, commanding.' Spanish 'príncipes' (princes) captures the aristocratic register well. Always plural, always parallel with 'kings' (melakhim) or 'judges' (shoftei eretz), indicating the highest echelons of human power. Deborah addresses them in triumph (Judg 5:3), the psalmist sees them conspiring against God (Ps 2:2), Wisdom claims them as her agents (Prov 8:15), Lemuel's mother warns against their excesses (Prov 31:4), Habakkuk describes the Chaldean mocking them (Hab 1:10), and Isaiah declares God makes them as nothing (Isa 40:23). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: O-rulers, and-for-rulers, and-rulers | es: a-príncipes, ni-para-príncipes, príncipes | fr: [רוזנים], et-prince, et-ולרוזנים | de: O-rulers, [ולרוזנים], [ורוזנים] Judg 5:3; Ps 2:2; Prov 8:15; Prov 31:4; Isa 40:23

רָחַב H7337 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (25×)

To be or make wide, enlarge; used of territory, borders, mouth, and heart; Hifil: widen, make room; Qal: become wide; Nifal: spacious.

A verb describing the expansion of space, whether physical or figurative. In the Hifil (causative) stem, it frequently describes God enlarging borders or territory (Exod 34:24; Deut 12:20), making room for His people (Gen 26:22), or widening a path underfoot (2 Sam 22:37). The Qal captures the intransitive experience of becoming wide or enlarged, as in Hannah's exultant cry 'my mouth is opened wide' (1 Sam 2:1) or the heart expanding with joy (Isa 60:5). Spanish 'ensanchar' and German 'erweitern' both capture this concrete-to-figurative arc from physical widening to emotional relief and divine provision.

1. Hifil: enlarge, widen (16×) Hifil causative: to make wide or enlarge in spatial extent. Covers the broadening of borders (Exod 34:24), territory (Deut 12:20, 19:8), tents (Isa 54:2), and abstract expansion such as enlarging one's heart or appetite. Spanish consistently renders 'ensancha/ensanchas,' reflecting the active, causative force. This is the dominant usage across 16 occurrences. ENLARGE WIDEN OPEN

en: You-enlarge, You-widen, and-I-will-enlarge | es: Ensancha, Ensanchas, el-que-ensancha | fr: Tu-widen, agrandit, enlarger-de | de: You-widen, [הרחב], [הרחבי] Exod 34:24; Deut 12:20; Deut 19:8; Deut 33:20; 2Sam 22:37

2. Hifil: make room for (3×) Hifil with relational overtones: to make room for someone, providing relief or opportunity. Isaac names a well Rehoboth because 'the LORD has made room for us' (Gen 26:22). The psalmist appeals 'you gave me room when I was in distress' (Ps 4:1). German 'Raum gemacht' and Spanish 'hizo ensanchar' both emphasize the interpersonal dimension of creating space as an act of grace. ENLARGE WIDEN OPEN

en: made-room, makes-room, you-made-room | es: hizo-ensanchar, le-ensancha, me-has-dado-anchura | fr: fit-room, le-élargir, ירחיב | de: [ירחיב], du-gemacht-room, hat-Raum-gemacht Gen 26:22; Ps 4:1; Prov 18:16

3. Qal: become wide, be enlarged (3×) Qal intransitive: to become wide, expand, or be enlarged. Hannah declares that her mouth 'is opened wide' over her enemies (1 Sam 2:1), and Isaiah prophesies that the heart will 'be enlarged and expand' with joy (Isa 60:5). The French and Spanish reflexive forms ('se ensanchaba,' 'est ouvrit large') underscore the self-undergoing quality of this stative sense. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: and-be-enlarged, and-it-widened, is-opened-wide | es: Y-se-ensanchaba, se-ensanchó, y-se-ensanchará | fr: est-ouvrit-large, et-élargir | de: [ורחב], [ורחבה], ist-oeffnete-breit 1Sam 2:1; Isa 60:5; Ezek 41:7

4. Hifil: open wide (mouth) (2×) Hifil idiomatic: to open the mouth wide, whether in speech, petition, or devouring. In Psalm 81:10 God invites Israel to 'open wide your mouth and I will fill it,' while in Psalm 35:21 enemies open wide their mouths in mockery. Spanish 'ensancharon' and German 'öffnen weit' preserve the vivid physicality of the gaping mouth as both invitation and threat. ENLARGE WIDEN OPEN

en: and-they-opened-wide, open-wide | es: Y-ensancharon, ensancha- | fr: et-élargir, le-élargir | de: und-sie-geöffnet-weit, öffnen-weit Ps 35:21; Ps 81:10

5. Nifal: spacious, broad (1×) Nifal stative participle: spacious, broad. A single occurrence in Isaiah 30:23 describes pasture land as 'spacious' (nirchav). Arabic 'fasihan' and Spanish 'espacioso' confirm the adjectival quality, describing a state of broadness rather than an action of widening. ENLARGE WIDEN OPEN

es: espacioso | fr: élargir | de: [נרחב] Isa 30:23

רֶחַב H7338 N-ms (2×)

breadth, broad expanse; spatial term for width or open spaces

A noun signifying breadth or wide open spaces. Job 36:16 contrasts God's deliverance to 'a broad place' with the confinement of distress. In Job 38:18, it describes the vast expanses of the earth, emphasizing creation's immensity. The term consistently evokes freedom from constraint and the majesty of unconfined space, whether literal or metaphorical.

(2×) Refers to breadth or expansiveness, particularly in the sense of deliverance from confinement (Job 36:16: 'a broad place' opposite 'narrow distress') or cosmic scale (Job 38:18: 'the broad expanse of the earth'). The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'anchura/anchuras', English 'breadth/breadths'—consistently emphasizes spatial dimensions. The intensive plural form in 38:18 heightens the sense of earth's immeasurable vastness. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: a-broad-place, the-breadths-of- | es: anchura, anchuras-de- | fr: רחב, רחבי | de: [רחב], [רחבי] Job 36:16; Job 38:18

רְחוֹב H7339 Conj-w / N-mpc (43×)

Open square, plaza, broad place — the public space in a city, typically near the gate

A feminine noun from the root r-kh-b ('to be wide, broad'), denoting the open public space within or at the entrance of a city. Unlike the narrow street (khutz), the rekhov was a broad plaza near the city gate where assemblies gathered, justice was administered, merchants traded, and travelers could lodge (Gen 19:2; Judg 19:15-20). The word appears in poetic parallelism with 'streets' and 'marketplaces' (Prov 26:13; Song 3:2) and in prophetic visions of restored urban life where elders and children again fill the squares (Zech 8:4-5).

open square, plaza (43×) A broad open area near the city gate for civic, commercial, and social gatherings. Lot sits in the rekhov of Sodom (Gen 19:2); the Levite finds no host in Gibeah's square (Judg 19:15-20); Ezra reads Torah in the rekhov before the Water Gate (Neh 8:1-3). Spanish 'plaza,' French 'place,' and German 'breiter Platz' capture the spatial breadth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-her-streets, in-plaza-of, in-square-of | es: en-la-plaza, en-la-plaza-de, en-las-plazas | fr: dans-le-plaza, dans-les-places, dans-plaza-de | de: [ברחבתיה], [רחוב], breiter-Platz Gen 19:2; Deut 13:16; Judg 19:15; Judg 19:17; Judg 19:20

רְחוֹב H7340 N-proper-ms (10×)

Rehob — a place name for locations near Hamath, in Asher, and also personal names of an Aramean king and a Levite

Rehob (meaning 'broad place' or 'open square') designates several distinct locations in the land of Israel, most notably a city near the entrance to Hamath in the far north and a Levitical city in the territory of Asher. The name also belongs to at least two individuals: an Aramean king mentioned in 2 Samuel and a post-exilic Levite who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah. The geographic Rehob near Hamath marked the northern limit of the spies' reconnaissance in Numbers 13:21, while the Asherite Rehob appears in the allotment lists and among the Levitical cities.

Rehob (place name) (10×) The proper noun Rehob as a geographic and personal name, encompassing a northern city near Hamath that served as a boundary marker for the Promised Land (Num 13:21; 2 Sam 10:8), a Levitical city in Asher assigned to the Gershonites (Josh 19:28, 30; 21:31; Judg 1:31), an Aramean ruler (2 Sam 8:3, 12), and a post-exilic Levite (Neh 10:12). Spanish 'Rejob' and English 'Rehob/Rechov' both reflect standard transliterations of the Hebrew root meaning 'broad, open.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rechov, Rehob, and-Rechov | es: Rejob, Rejov, y-Rejob | fr: Rechov, Rehob, [רחב] | de: Breite, Rechov, Rehob Num 13:21; Josh 19:28; Josh 19:30; Josh 21:31; Judg 1:31

רֹחַב H7341 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (101×)

Width, breadth — the lateral measurement of a structure, object, or expanse; occasionally figurative for vastness of understanding

Rochav is the standard Hebrew term for the measurement from side to side, appearing 101 times almost exclusively in architectural and geographical specifications. It dominates the building descriptions of the tabernacle (Exod 25-27), Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6-7), and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40-42), where it regularly pairs with 'orekh (length) and sometimes qomah (height) to give full dimensions. Beyond measurement, the word occasionally opens into metaphor: 'breadth of heart' describes Solomon's vast understanding, as wide as sand on the seashore (1 Kgs 5:9), and Isaiah uses 'the breadth of your land' to evoke Immanuel's sovereignty over all Judah (Isa 8:8).

width, breadth (101×) The lateral extent or measurement of something — the distance from side to side. Overwhelmingly used in precise architectural specifications for the tabernacle, temple, gates, and courts (Exod 25:10; 1 Kgs 6:3; Ezek 40-42), regularly paired with 'orekh (length). Spanish 'anchura,' French 'largeur,' and German 'Breite' all render the same spatial concept. The figurative use in 1 Kgs 5:9 — 'breadth of heart' for Solomon's expansive wisdom — shows the word can evoke intellectual or territorial vastness beyond mere building dimensions. WIDTH BREADTH

en: and-width, and-width-of | es: Y-anchura-de, y-ancho, y-anchura | fr: [ורחב], et-largeur | de: und-Breite Exod 26:2; Exod 26:8; Exod 26:16; Exod 27:1; Exod 27:18

רָחָב H7342 Adj-fs (21×)

Wide, broad, spacious; idiomatically: proud (broad of heart), free (in a broad place), or greedy (wide of appetite).

This adjective describes physical breadth — a spacious land, a wide river, a thick wall — but Hebrew idiom extends it into vivid figurative territory. When paired with 'heart' or 'eyes' it connotes arrogance (Ps 101:5; Prov 21:4), and when paired with nephesh (appetite/soul) it points to insatiable greed (Prov 28:25). Psalm 119:45 uses the feminine as a substantive — 'in a broad place' — to express the psalmist's sense of moral freedom. Spanish 'ancha' and German cognates consistently render the spatial sense, while the idiomatic extensions require periphrasis in most target languages.

1. wide, broad, spacious (16×) Physically wide, broad, or spacious, applied to land, walls, rivers, and other spatial referents. Exodus 3:8 and Nehemiah 9:35 describe the promised land as 'broad' (rachavat yadayim, lit. wide of hands/sides). Judges 18:10 and 1 Chronicles 4:40 use it of territory that is expansive and rich. In Nehemiah 3:8 and 12:38 it names a section of Jerusalem's wall (ha-chomah ha-rechavah, the Broad Wall). Job 11:9 uses it hyperbolically: God's wisdom is broader than the sea. WIDE BROAD

SPACIOUS
en: and-broad, and-broader, and-spacious | es: ancha, ancha-de, ancha-de- | fr: [הרחבה], [רחבי], [רחבת] | de: [הרחבה], [והרחבה], [ורחבה] Gen 34:21; Exod 3:8; Judg 18:10; 1Chr 4:40; Neh 3:8

2. proud, arrogant (broad of heart) (3×) An idiomatic 'broad of heart/eyes' meaning proud, arrogant, or haughty. Psalm 101:5 declares that God will not tolerate the one who is 'broad of heart,' and Proverbs 21:4 pairs 'broad of heart' with 'haughty eyes' as hallmarks of sin. The spatial metaphor maps inner swelling onto outward expansion. Most translations render this periphrastically: Spanish 'ancho de corazón,' while English uses 'proud' or 'arrogant.' WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: and-proud, and-proud-of, and-wide | es: y-ancho-de, y-ensanchamiento-de- | fr: et-large, et-ורחב | de: [ורחב], und-proud, und-weit Ps 101:5; Ps 104:25; Prov 21:4

3. broad place (freedom, relief) (1×) Used substantivally with the preposition be- to mean 'in a broad place,' signifying freedom from constraint or distress. Psalm 119:45 says 'I will walk in a broad place' (ba-rechavah), expressing the liberty that comes from keeping God's precepts. The spatial image of open ground becomes a metaphor for moral and spiritual freedom — the opposite of being hemmed in or restricted. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: in-a-broad-place | es: en-anchura | fr: dans-large | de: in-ein-broad-Ort Ps 119:45

4. greedy, insatiable (wide of appetite) (1×) An idiomatic 'wide of nephesh (soul/appetite)' meaning greedy or insatiable. Proverbs 28:25 warns that the one who is 'broad of appetite' stirs up strife. Here the spatial metaphor of expansiveness conveys an uncontrolled inner craving. Spanish uses 'ancho de ánimo' while most versions resort to 'greedy' or 'covetous' to capture the moral judgment embedded in the idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: wide-of | es: Ancho-de- | fr: רחב | de: [רחב] Prov 28:25

רָחָב H7343 N-proper-fs (5×)
Rahab, the harlot of Jericho who sheltered Israel's spies
A Canaanite woman of Jericho who hid Israel's two spies and was spared when the city fell. Her story in Joshua 2 and 6 moves from concealment (Josh 2:1, 3) to the oath of protection (Josh 6:17) and rescue (Josh 6:23, 25). She became a celebrated example of faith in the New Testament (Heb 11:31; Jas 2:25) and appears in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus (Matt 1:5). Her name, meaning 'broad' or 'wide,' contrasts with the narrow walls of Jericho she helped breach.

(5×) The proper name of the Jericho woman who aided the Israelite spies. English, Spanish ('Rajab'), French, and German all transliterate the name with minor phonetic variation, reflecting its status as a personal name rather than a translatable word. All five references belong to the Joshua narrative (Josh 2:1, 3; 6:17, 23, 25), tracking her role from initial encounter through deliverance. Her inclusion in later biblical genealogy and faith catalogs elevated her from local figure to paradigm of Gentile faith. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2607 WITH 5 SENSES en: Rachav, Rahab | es: Rajab | fr: Rachav, Rahab | de: Rachav, Rahab Josh 2:1; Josh 2:3; Josh 6:17; Josh 6:23; Josh 6:25

רְחֹבוֹת H7344 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)
Rehoboth (place name, 'broad places, room')
This place name, meaning 'broad places' or 'room,' identifies three distinct locations: a district near Nineveh, a well Isaac dug (symbolizing freedom from strife), and a city associated with an Edomite king. The name reflects the ancient value of spatial freedom and the relief of finding uncontested territory.

(4×) Identifies three sites named Rehoboth: (1) רְחֹבֹת עִיר near Nineveh in Genesis 10:11, possibly connected to Assyrian rêbit Ninâ ('square of Nineveh'); (2) a well Isaac named Rehoboth in Genesis 26:22 (interpreted 'now the LORD has made room for us'), possibly modern er-Ruḥaibeh southwest of Hebron; (3) רְחֹבוֹת הַנָּהָר, home of the Edomite king Shaul in Genesis 36:37 and 1 Chronicles 1:48 ('Rehoboth by the River'—possibly Euphrates, though debated). The Septuagint renders it Ευρυχωρία ('broad place'), preserving the etymological sense. Multilingual glosses transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Rejobot/Rechovot,' French 'Rehoboth,' German 'Rechobot.' PERSONAL NAMES
en: Rehoboth, from-Rechovoth, from-Rehoboth | es: Rechovot, Rejobot, de-Rejobot | fr: Rehoboth, [מרחבות], de-Rehoboth | de: Rechobot, Rechowot, [מרחבות] Gen 10:11; Gen 26:22; Gen 36:37; 1Chr 1:48

רְחַבְיָה H7345 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (5×)
Rehabiah, grandson of Moses through Eliezer
A Levitical name meaning 'Yah has made wide' or 'Yah has enlarged,' borne by the son of Eliezer and grandson of Moses. All five occurrences appear in Chronicles' Levitical genealogies, where his line is traced for temple service assignments. In 1 Chronicles 23:17 his lineage is established, 24:21 records his descendants' priestly division, and 26:25 connects his family to treasuries dedicated by David. The name itself echoes the root rahav ('to be wide'), suggesting divine generosity in expanding one's heritage.

(5×) The proper name of Moses' grandson through Eliezer, appearing only in Levitical genealogies of Chronicles. Spanish 'Rehabías'/'Rejabia' and English 'Rehabiah' show standard transliteration variation. The name is theophoric, compounding the root for wideness/enlargement with the divine name Yah, expressing the theological idea that God broadens one's inheritance. His five mentions (1 Chr 23:17; 24:21; 26:25) all serve the Chronicler's interest in legitimating Levitical service lines. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Rechabvyahu, Rechavyah, Rechavyahu | es: Para-Rejabyahu, Rehabías, Rejabia | fr: [לרחביהו], [רחביה], [רחביהו] | de: [לרחביהו], [רחביה], [רחביהו] 1Chr 23:17; 1Chr 24:21; 1Chr 26:25

רְחַבְעָם H7346 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (50×)
Rehoboam — Solomon's son and first king of the divided kingdom of Judah, whose harshness split the nation
Rechav'am ('the people is enlarged,' or possibly 'the kinsman-deity is broad') was the son of Solomon whose catastrophic political miscalculation at the assembly of Shechem precipitated the permanent division of Israel into two kingdoms (1 Kgs 12:1-19). His 50 occurrences are concentrated in 1 Kings 12-14 and 2 Chronicles 10-12, narrating his accession, the northern tribes' revolt under Jeroboam, his fortification of Judean cities, and his unfaithfulness that invited Shishak's Egyptian invasion (2 Chr 12:1-9). The Chronicler's nuanced portrait acknowledges both his military preparations and his spiritual failures. His genealogical place as Solomon's son and Abijah's father anchors the Davidic succession (1 Chr 3:10; Matt 1:7). The name is transliterated variously: Spanish 'Roboam,' French 'Roboam,' German 'Rehabeam.'

Rehoboam (king of Judah) (50×) The proper name Rehoboam (Rechav'am), referring exclusively to the son of Solomon who reigned as king of Judah after the united monarchy's dissolution (c. 930-913 BC). His refusal to lighten the tax burden at Shechem led to the secession of the ten northern tribes (1 Kgs 12:1-17; 2 Chr 10:1-17), and his reign was marked by the Egyptian pharaoh Shishak's invasion of Jerusalem (1 Kgs 14:25-26; 2 Chr 12:2-9). All 50 occurrences — whether in nominative, conjunctive, or prepositional forms — refer to this single king, with the Septuagint rendering Roboam confirming the identification across manuscript traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rechav'am, Rechavam | es: Rechavam, Rejabam, Roboam | fr: Roboam | de: Rehabeam 1Kgs 11:43; 1Kgs 12:1; 1Kgs 12:3; 1Kgs 12:6; 1Kgs 12:12

רֵחַיִם H7347 N-md (5×)
handmill, millstones (dual form for the paired grinding stones)
The Hebrew dual form denotes the pair of flat stones used for grinding grain, a ubiquitous household implement in ancient Israel. Exodus 11:5 places it behind the maidservant grinding at the mill. Numbers 11:8 describes the Israelites grinding manna in millstones. Deuteronomy 24:6 forbids taking millstones as pledge because that would seize a family's livelihood. Isaiah 47:2 humiliates fallen

Babylon by commanding her to take up the millstones like a slave. Jeremiah 25:10 lists the sound of the mill among the everyday noises that will cease in judgment.

(5×) A pair of grinding stones forming a hand-operated mill for processing grain, always in dual form reflecting the two-stone mechanism. Spanish 'molino' and English 'millstones'/'handmill' capture the implement. The word carries strong associations with daily domestic life and women's labor (Exod 11:5; Isa 47:2). Deuteronomy 24:6 treats it as essential to survival, prohibiting its seizure as debt collateral. Jeremiah 25:10 makes its sound a metonym for normal communal life that judgment silences. UPPER MILLSTONE

en: handmill, in-the-millstones, millstones | es: el-molino, en-molinos, molino | fr: [רחיִם], dans-le-millstones, handmill | de: [רחיִם], der-millstones, handmill Exod 11:5; Num 11:8; Deut 24:6; Isa 47:2; Jer 25:10

רְחוּם H7348a N-proper-ms (4×)

Rehum (personal name, 'compassion, mercy')

This post-exilic name, likely meaning 'compassion' or 'gentleness' from the root רחם, identifies multiple individuals who returned with Zerubbabel and worked with Nehemiah. Textual variants and parallel passages show some confusion in transmission, with possible identification with other similarly-named individuals.

(4×) Post-exilic personal name for several individuals: (1) One who returned with Zerubbabel in Ezra 2:2 (= Nehum in parallel Nehemiah 7:7); (2) A priest named רְחֻם in Nehemiah 12:3 (possibly = Harim in verse 15); (3) A Levite who helped repair the wall in Nehemiah 3:17; (4) A sealer of Nehemiah's covenant in Nehemiah 10:25 (10:26 Eng.). The name derives from רָחַם ('have compassion'), yielding 'compassion' or 'mercy' as a theophoric substitute. Septuagint renderings vary (Ναουμ, Ρεουμ, Ραουμ), reflecting textual fluidity in genealogical lists. Spanish and French transliterate 'Rehum/Rejum,' treating it as an opaque proper name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rechum, Rehum | es: Rehum, Rejum | fr: Rehum, [רחם] | de: [רחום], erbarmte-sich Ezra 2:2; Neh 3:17; Neh 10:25; Neh 12:3

רְחוּם H7348b N-proper-ms (4×)

Rehum (Persian official name)

This name designates a Persian official who opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls in Ezra 4. Unlike the Israelite name Rehum (from 'compassion'), this may derive from Old Iranian rukma meaning 'splendor,' reflecting Persian rather than Hebrew etymology. The official's role as royal correspondent highlights Persian administrative oversight in post-exilic Judah.

(4×) Identifies a Persian official (רְחוּם בְּעֵל-טְעֵם, 'Rehum the commander/chancellor') who, with Shimshai the scribe, wrote to Artaxerxes opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding in Ezra 4:8-9, 17, 23. While traditionally explained from Hebrew רָחַם ('compassion'), the name may actually reflect Old Iranian rukma ('splendor'), fitting a Persian bureaucrat. The four occurrences trace the official correspondence: the letter sent (v. 8-9), the king's reply (v. 17), and the enforcement of the decree (v. 23). Multilingual glosses consistently transliterate 'Rehum/Rechum,' recognizing it as a proper name. The context emphasizes Persian imperial power over Jewish restoration efforts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rechum | es: Rehum | fr: Rehum | de: Rechum Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:23

רַחוּם H7349 Adj-ms (13×)

Compassionate, merciful; a divine attribute paired with 'gracious,' defining God's covenant character.

Almost exclusively a divine epithet, this adjective forms part of the great creedal formula first proclaimed at Sinai: 'The LORD, the LORD, a God compassionate and gracious' (Exod 34:6). That pairing — רַחוּם וְחַנּוּן — echoes through Scripture like a liturgical refrain (Ps 86:15; 103:8; 111:4; 145:8; Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2; Neh 9:17, 31; 2 Chr 30:9). The root רחם connects to the womb, giving this compassion a visceral, maternal quality. Spanish misericordioso and German barmherzig both capture the deep mercy involved. Only once (Ps 112:4) is it applied to a human — modeling divine character in human life.

and compassionate (13×) Full of compassion, deeply merciful — rooted in רחם (womb), evoking a visceral, almost maternal tenderness. Used almost exclusively of God as part of the creedal formula רַחוּם וְחַנּוּן ('compassionate and gracious,' Exod 34:6), which reverberates through psalms (86:15; 103:8; 111:4; 145:8), prophets (Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2), and post-exilic literature (Neh 9:17, 31; 2 Chr 30:9). The single human application (Ps 112:4) presents the righteous person as a mirror of God's own character. Spanish compasivo/misericordioso and German barmherzig consistently render the covenantal warmth of this term. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: and-compassionate, and-merciful, compassionate | es: Compasivo, compasivo, misericordioso | fr: compassionate, compatissant, et-Rehum | de: [ורחום], barmherzig, compassionate Exod 34:6; Deut 4:31; 2Chr 30:9; Neh 9:17; Neh 9:31

רָחֹק H7350 Art / Adj-fp (85×)

Distant, far, remote — spatially, temporally, or adverbially ('from afar'); also as a noun: distance

An adjective meaning 'distant' or 'far,' frequently paired with its opposite קָרוֹב ('near'). Its most common use describes spatial remoteness — distant lands, far-off peoples, remote islands — but it also serves adverbially with prepositions to mean 'from afar' or 'at a distance,' and occasionally extends to temporal remoteness, pointing to events 'long ago.' The multilingual evidence highlights how context governs the translation: Hindi दूर for spatial distance, but प्राचीनकाल ('ancient time') for the temporal sense; Swahili mbali ('far away') versus zamani za kale ('times of old'). Joshua 3:4 preserves a rare nominal use where it means 'distance' as a measured quantity.

1. far, distant (spatial) (44×) Spatial remoteness as an adjective — describing places, lands, peoples, islands, or journeys that are physically far away. Used attributively ('a distant land,' Josh 9:6, 9), predicatively ('is it not far?'), and substantivally ('distant ones,' Isa 66:19). The Deuteronomic concern with 'nations far or near' (Deut 13:7, 20:15, 29:22) reflects Israel's awareness of its place among the peoples. Spanish lejano, French lointain, and Arabic بَعِيد all confirm the core spatial-distance semantics without ambiguity. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: distant, far, far-away | es: está-lejos, lejana, lejanas | fr: loin, lointain, éloigné | de: [רחוק], [רחוקה], [רחוקות] Num 9:10; Deut 13:7; Deut 20:15; Deut 29:22; Deut 30:11

2. from afar, at a distance (36×) Adverbial use with prepositions (מֵרָחוֹק 'from afar,' לְמֵרָחוֹק 'to a distance,' בְּרָחוֹק 'at a distance') — expressing observation, standing, or movement relative to a remote point. Abraham 'saw the place from afar' (Gen 22:4), Joseph's brothers 'recognized him from a distance' (Gen 37:18), Miriam 'stationed herself at a distance' (Exod 2:4), and the people 'stood far off' at Sinai (Exod 20:18, 21). German von fern, Swahili kwa mbali, and Korean 멀리서 consistently render this adverbial-prepositional pattern. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: from-afar, from-far, to-afar | es: de-lejos, desde-lejos | fr: de-afar, de-au-loin, de-loin | de: [למרחוק], [מרחוק], fern Gen 22:4; Gen 37:18; Exod 2:4; Exod 20:18; Exod 20:21

3. long ago, remote in time (4×) Temporal remoteness — referring to events, plans, or periods that are ancient or long ago. A rare but significant extension of the spatial metaphor. Isaiah 37:26 asks, 'Have you not heard? From long ago I did it; from ancient days I planned it.' Hindi प्राचीनकाल ('ancient era'), Arabic مُنْذُ زَمَنٍ ('from of old'), and Swahili zamani za kale ('times of old') confirm the shift from space to time. Also found in 2 Samuel 7:19, Isaiah 22:11, and 25:1. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: for-distant-time, from-afar, from-long-ago | es: antigüedad, desde-lejos, para-lejos | fr: de-loin, pour-distant-temps, à-de-loin | de: fern, fuer-distant-Zeit 2Sam 7:19; Isa 22:11; Isa 25:1; Isa 37:26

4. distance (abstract/nominal) (1×) A nominal or substantival use meaning 'distance' as a measurable quantity. Attested clearly in Joshua 3:4, where Israel is told to keep a רָחוֹק (distance) of about two thousand cubits between themselves and the ark. Spanish distancia, Arabic بُعد ('distance'), and Hindi दूरी all render this as an abstract noun rather than an adjective, confirming its distinct grammatical function. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: distance | es: distancia | fr: distance | de: distance Josh 3:4

רָהִיט H7351 N-msc / 1cp (2×)

rafters, ceiling beams; architectural term for wooden structural elements in a building

A collective noun for rafters or wooden beams used in construction. Song of Songs 1:17 mentions 'our rafters' parallel to 'our beams,' describing the lovers' idyllic bower. The term appears in both Ketiv and Qere forms, suggesting textual uncertainty. Cross-linguistic glosses—Spanish 'artesonados' (coffered ceilings), French 'lambris' (paneling)—indicate decorative wooden elements that beautify as well as support.

(2×) Denotes rafters or wooden ceiling beams used in building construction. In Song of Songs 1:17, the term appears alongside 'beams' (קֹרוֹת) to evoke an intimate architectural setting, likely metaphorical for the lovers' meeting place. The Syriac cognate suggests strips of wood running between beams. Spanish and French glosses (artesonados, lambris) emphasize the decorative quality, while the textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) reflect scribal uncertainty about the precise reading. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: [ketiv], our-rafters | es: (nuestros-artesonados), [nuestros-artesonados] | fr: (nos-lambris), [nos-lambris] | de: [(רהיטנו)], [[רחיטנו]] Song 1:17

רְחִיק H7352 Adj-mp (1×)

far — distant, remote, at a distance (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective means 'far' or 'distant,' appearing in Ezra 6:6 in the command to 'keep far from there.' The Persian decree orders Tattenai and his associates to stay away from the temple construction in Jerusalem. The Aramaic form reflects the administrative language of the Persian Empire used in official correspondence. The command emphasizes complete separation and non-interference.

(1×) Far, distant, or remote (Ezra 6:6). Used in the imperial command to Persian officials to 'keep far from' the Jerusalem temple site, emphasizing non-interference with the Jewish rebuilding project. This Aramaic administrative term reflects the multilingual nature of Persian-era governance documents. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: far | es: lejos | fr: [רחיקין] | de: [רחיקין] Ezra 6:6

רָחֵל H7353 Conj-w (4×)

ewe, female sheep

This noun denotes a female sheep, often paired with rams, goats, or used in simile. The term appears in patriarchal narratives describing flocks, in prophetic imagery of the suffering servant, and in poetic comparison. Ewes represented valuable livestock and carried symbolic weight in sacrifice and metaphor.

(4×) Designates female sheep. Genesis 31:38 lists 'your ewes and goats' (רְחֵלֶיךָ וְעִזֶּיךָ) in Laban's flocks that didn't miscarry under Jacob's care. Genesis 32:14 (32:15 Eng.) details 200 ewes in Jacob's gift to Esau. Song 6:6 compares teeth to 'a flock of ewes' (כְּעֲדֶר הָרְחֵלִים) coming up from washing. Isaiah 53:7 uses 'like an ewe before her shearers' (וּכְרָחֵל) in the suffering servant's silence. Multilingual glosses distinguish gender: Spanish 'ovejas' (general or female), French 'brebis' (ewe), German 'Mutterschafe' (mother sheep)—all marking the female specificity that distinguishes this from general sheep (צֹאן) or rams (אֵילִים). LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: and-like-ewe, ewes, the-ewes | es: las-ovejas, ovejas, ovejas-tuyas | fr: [וכרחל], de-brebis, ewes | de: Mutterschafe, [הרחלים], [וכרחל] Gen 31:38; Gen 32:14; Song 6:6; Isa 53:7

רָחֵל H7354 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (47×)

Rachel — the beloved wife of Jacob, daughter of Laban, mother of Joseph and Benjamin

Rachel (meaning 'ewe') is one of the great matriarchs of Israel, and her 47 occurrences trace an arc from love at first sight at the well (Gen 29:6-12) through years of barrenness and rivalry with her sister Leah, to the long-awaited birth of Joseph (Gen 30:22-24) and her death giving birth to Benjamin near Bethlehem (Gen 35:16-19). The name's pastoral etymology is confirmed by the Arabic cognate rakhil ('ewe-lamb') and appears fitting for a story set among flocks and shepherding. Rachel's tomb becomes a landmark (1 Sam 10:2), and Jeremiah transforms her into a figure of inconsolable mourning — 'Rachel weeping for her children' (Jer 31:15), a passage Matthew applies to the Bethlehem massacre (Matt 2:18). Ruth 4:11 invokes her as a builder of the house of Israel.

Rachel (proper name) (47×) The proper name Rachel (rakhel, 'ewe'), designating exclusively the younger daughter of Laban, second wife of Jacob, and mother of Joseph and Benjamin. Her 47 occurrences concentrate in the patriarchal narratives of Genesis 29-35 (the well encounter, the wedding deception, the barrenness and birth stories, the theft of the teraphim, and her death near Ephrath). Two prophetic and poetic uses extend her significance beyond the narrative: Jeremiah's image of Rachel weeping at Ramah for the exiled tribes (Jer 31:15) and the blessing in Ruth 4:11 that invokes Rachel alongside Leah as builders of Israel. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Rachel | es: Rajel | fr: Rachel | de: Rachel, Rachels, war-Rachel Gen 29:6; Gen 29:9; Gen 29:10; Gen 29:11; Gen 29:12

רָחַם H7355 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs (47×)

To have compassion, show mercy; Piel: actively exercise tender care; Pual: be shown mercy; related to rechem ('womb').

Racham is one of the Hebrew Bible's most viscerally emotive verbs, rooted in the noun rechem ('womb') and carrying the connotation of the deep, instinctive tenderness a mother feels for her child. In its Piel stem — the dominant form — it describes God's active compassion toward his people with remarkable consistency: 'As a father has compassion on his children, so the LORD has compassion on those who fear him' (Ps 103:13). The multilingual evidence beautifully illuminates the word's warmth: German erbarmen and French avoir compassion both foreground the emotional stirring, while Arabic rahima (from the same Semitic root r-h-m, preserved in the Quranic formula ar-Rahman ar-Rahim) confirms the womb-compassion etymology across the Semitic family. The word appears overwhelmingly in prophetic promises of restoration — after judgment, God will 'again have compassion' (Isa 14:1; 49:13; 54:8).

1. have compassion/mercy on (39×) The dominant Piel sense: God or a person actively exercising compassion, mercy, and tender care toward another — 39 occurrences spanning the entire canon. God declares to Moses: 'I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion' (Exod 33:19, the programmatic statement); the Psalms celebrate it (Ps 103:13, the father-metaphor); the prophets promise it as the ground of restoration after exile (Isa 14:1; 49:13; 54:8, 10; 55:7). German sich erbarmen, French avoir compassion, and Spanish compadecer all cluster tightly around the active-tenderness frame. Korean 긍휼히 여기다 ('to regard with deep pity') captures the deliberate, relational quality — this is not passive sympathy but chosen, willed mercy. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: I-had-compassion-on-you, I-will-have-compassion-on, and-I-will-have-compassion-on | es: compadeceré, compadeciendo, también-tendrá-compasión | fr: avoir-compassion, avoir-pitié, et-avoir-compassion | de: er-erbarmt-sich, erbarmte-sich, sich-erbarmen Exod 33:19; Deut 13:17; Deut 30:3; 1Kgs 8:50

2. compassionate one (3×) The Piel participle used substantively: 'the compassionate one,' 'the one who has compassion' — describing a person or God as characteristically merciful (3 occurrences). Ps 116:5: 'Gracious is the LORD, and righteous; our God is compassionate.' Isa 49:10: 'the one who has compassion on them will guide them.' Isa 54:10: 'the one who has compassion on you' speaks of enduring covenant faithfulness. Spanish misericordioso and German barmherzig both use dedicated adjectival forms, confirming that the participial usage has crystallized into a character-trait attribution distinct from individual acts of mercy. MERCY AND COMPASSION en: is-compassionate, one-having-compassion-on-you, the-one-having-compassion-on-them | es: el-que-tiene-compasión-de-ti, el-que-tiene-misericordia-de-ellos, misericordioso | fr: avoir-pitié, de-avoir-compassion | de: erbarmte-sich, sich-erbarmen Ps 116:5; Isa 49:10; Isa 54:10

3. (2×) The symbolic proper name Ruhamah — 'she who has received compassion' — used in Hosea's prophetic theater (2 occurrences: Hos 2:1, 23). God reverses the earlier verdict of Lo-Ruhamah ('Not-Pitied,' Hos 1:6) by declaring 'I will have compassion on Lo-Ruhamah' and renaming her Ruhamah. Spanish Compadecida and the transliterated Ruhama in various languages preserve both the name and its theological freight: the reversal of judgment through restored compassion. The name functions as a compressed narrative of Israel's exile and return. MERCY AND COMPASSION
en: Ruhamah | es: Compadecida, Ruhama | fr: avoir-compassion | de: erbarmte-sich Hos 2:1; Hos 2:23

4. be shown mercy (passive) (2×) Pual passive: to be shown mercy, to receive compassion from another — 2 occurrences marking the recipient's perspective. Prov 28:13: the one who confesses and forsakes sin 'will obtain mercy.' Hos 14:3: the orphan 'finds mercy' in God alone. French and German retain their compassion vocabulary but shift to passive constructions. The Pual form is theologically significant: mercy is not something one earns or generates but receives — the grammatical passivity mirrors the theological reality. MERCY AND COMPASSION
en: finds-mercy, will-obtain-mercy | es: alcanzará-misericordia, se-compadece | fr: avoir-compassion | de: er-erbarmt-sich Prov 28:13; Hos 14:3

5. (1×) A single Qal occurrence at Ps 18:1 where the meaning shifts from compassion to deep personal love: 'I love you, O LORD, my strength.' This is the only Qal form of racham in the Hebrew Bible, and it carries an intensity beyond the Piel's 'have compassion' — David expresses fierce, intimate devotion. Spanish te amaré ('I will love you') and English 'I love you' both select love-vocabulary rather than mercy-vocabulary. The verse is absent from the parallel in 2 Sam 22:2, leading some scholars (Hitzig, Cheyne) to suspect a gloss, but its presence in the Psalter tradition gives it canonical standing as a unique extension of the r-h-m root from womb-compassion into passionate personal attachment. MERCY AND COMPASSION en: I-love-you | es: te-amaré | fr: avoir-compassion | de: erbarmte-sich Ps 18:1

רֶחֶם H7356a Conj-w / N-ms (5×)
womb; from the womb (i.e., from birth)
The physical organ of gestation, carrying deep theological weight in Hebrew thought. Genesis 49:25 includes blessings of the womb among patriarchal benedictions. Judges 5:30 uses a vivid dual form in Deborah's song. Proverbs 30:16 names the barren womb among four things never satisfied. Isaiah 46:3 uses 'from the womb' to express God's care from the earliest moment of existence. Ezekiel 20:26 connects the firstborn of the womb to Israel's idolatrous sacrifices. French 'sein' and Spanish 'matriz' both convey the maternal-generative core of this term.

(5×) The physical uterus as the site of conception and gestation, often appearing in phrases like 'from the womb' to indicate origin from birth. Spanish 'matriz' captures the anatomical sense directly, while French 'sein' broadens slightly toward the maternal body. Genesis 49:25 pairs womb-blessings with breast-blessings in patriarchal benediction. The word functions both literally (Judg 5:30; Prov 30:16; Ezek 20:26) and as a metaphor for God's intimate knowledge of a person from their earliest formation (Isa 46:3). WOMB AND BELLY
en: a-womb, and-womb, birth | es: cerrada, matriz, y-matriz | fr: [רחם], et-sein, sein | de: [רחם], ein-womb, erbarmte-sich Gen 49:25; Judg 5:30; Prov 30:16; Isa 46:3; Ezek 20:26

רַחֲמִים H7356b N-msc / 3ms (40×)
Compassion, tender mercies — deep visceral feeling of mercy, often as a divine attribute (plurale intensivum).
Always plural in form (rachamim), this noun expresses compassion so deep it was etymologically linked to the womb (rechem) — a mother's fierce tenderness for her child. When applied to God, it becomes one of the defining attributes of the divine character: His mercies are 'great' (2 Sam 24:14), 'new every morning' (Lam 3:22-23), and paired with chesed (covenant love) as the twin pillars of divine faithfulness (Ps 103:4; Hos 2:21). Spanish 'entranas' (bowels) for the visceral sense and German 'Erbarmen' (mercy) for the theological sense reveal how translations navigate between the physical root and the spiritual meaning.

1. compassion, mercy (38×) Compassion or mercies as a moral-theological quality, especially of God toward His people. The dominant sense (38 of 40 occurrences), used in prayers and praise: 'Let us fall into the hand of the LORD, for His mercies are great' (2 Sam 24:14), and 'according to Your great compassion blot out my transgressions' (Ps 51:1, alluding to this word family). Paired with chesed in Hos 2:21 and Ps 40:12, confirming its place in the covenant-love vocabulary. French 'compassion' and Spanish 'compasiones' render the abstract theological force, while Neh 9:19-31 uses it repeatedly to describe God's patience through Israel's rebellions. MORAL GOODNESS en: His-mercies, Your-compassion, Your-compassions | es: Compasiones-de-ti, [su-compasión], compasiones-de-ti | fr: [k], compassion, et-compassion | de: Erbarmen, [k], [ברחמיך] Gen 43:14; Deut 13:17; 2Sam 24:14; 1Kgs 8:50

2. visceral tender feelings, bowels (2×) Deep visceral feelings physically located in the bowels or inner organs, preserving the etymological link to rechem (womb). In Gen 43:30, Joseph's rachamim 'grew hot' (nikhmeru) toward Benjamin — a bodily, uncontrollable surge of brotherly love. In 1 Kgs 3:26 the true mother's rachamim 'burned' for her son before Solomon. Spanish 'entranas-suyas' (her bowels/innards) strikingly preserves the somatic dimension that the more abstract 'compassion' translations flatten. These two passages anchor a meaning closer to 'gut-wrenching tenderness' than to theological mercy. MERCY AND COMPASSION
en: her-compassions, his-compassions | es: entrañas-suyas, sus-entrañas | fr: sa-compassions, son-compassions | de: ihr-compassions, sein-Erbarmen Gen 43:30; 1Kgs 3:26

רַחַם H7357 N-proper-ms (1×)
Raham — a personal name in the genealogy of Judah
Raham is listed in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:44. The name may derive from a root related to 'compassion' or possibly 'girl' or 'maiden,' though its exact etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint provides varied Greek transliterations (Ramee, Raem, Raam), typical of personal names. The individual's role beyond this genealogical mention is unknown.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Judah's genealogy (1 Chronicles 2:44). The name's etymology may connect to roots meaning 'compassion' or 'maiden,' though this remains uncertain. The varied Septuagint renderings reflect the challenge of transliterating Hebrew personal names into Greek. No narrative details about this individual survive. WOMB AND BELLY womb — the uterus as the organ of conception and birth, used both literally and in figurative expressions for origin Rechem (also racham) is the concrete anatomical noun for womb or uterus, appearing 26 times across legal, narrative, poetic, and prophetic texts. Its most distinctive usage is in the idiom peter rechem, 'the one who opens the womb' — the firstborn who belongs to YHWH by right of the Exodus redemption (Exod 13:2, 12, 15; Num 3:12; 18:15). God's sovereign control over the womb is a recurring theological motif: He closed every womb in Abimelech's household (Gen 20:18), opened Leah's womb when she was unloved (Gen 29:31), and remembered Rachel (Gen 30:22). Jeremiah was known and consecrated in the womb before birth (Jer 1:5), a text echoed in Paul's self-understanding (Gal 1:15). Job poignantly asks why he did not die at birth, 'from the womb' (Job 3:11; 10:18; 31:15). The psalmist's trust reaches back to the maternal body: 'upon you I was cast from the womb' (Ps 22:10; 58:3). The cognate noun rachamim ('compassion') derives from this root, linking maternal bodily experience to divine mercy — a connection visible across Semitic languages.
en: Racham | es: Rajam | fr: [רחם] | de: [רחם] 1Chr 2:44

רֶחֶם H7358 N-msc / 3fs (26×)

womb (26×) The physical uterus or womb as the organ of conception and birth, used across several theological idioms. Central to the first-born consecration formula peter rechem, 'opener of the womb' (Exod 13:2, 12; Num 18:15). Expresses God's sovereign control over fertility: closing (Gen 20:18) and opening (Gen 29:31; 30:22) the womb. In prophetic and poetic texts, 'from the womb' signals divine election before birth (Jer 1:5; Isa 46:3; Ps 22:10). The etymological link to rachamim ('compassion, mercy') reveals how Hebrew roots maternal tenderness in the visceral reality of the womb. WOMB AND BELLY
en: a-womb, from-the-womb, from-the-womb-of | es: de-la-matriz, de-vientre, del-vientre | fr: de-matrice, de-sein, sa-sein | de: Mutterschoß, erbarmte-sich, ihr-womb Gen 20:18; Gen 29:31; Gen 30:22; Exod 13:2; Exod 13:12

רַחֲמִין H7359 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)
compassion — mercy, tender feelings, pity (Aramaic plural intensive)
This Aramaic plural intensive noun means 'compassion' or 'mercy,' appearing in Daniel 2:18 where Daniel and his companions seek compassion from the God of heaven regarding Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The plural intensive form (like Hebrew rahamim) emphasizes the depth and abundance of divine mercy. The term connects to the same root as 'womb,' suggesting tender, maternal care. This is the language of urgent prayer for divine intervention.

(1×) Compassion, mercy, or tender feelings in intensive plural form (Daniel 2:18). Daniel and his friends seek 'compassion from the God of heaven' facing a death sentence. The Aramaic plural intensive (like Hebrew rahamim) suggests abundant, deep mercy. The root connection to 'womb' evokes maternal tenderness applied to God's character. MORAL GOODNESS
en: and-compassion | es: Y-misericordias | fr: et-compassion | de: [ורחמין] Dan 2:18

רָחָם H7360 Art / N-ms (2×)
carrion vulture; a bird of prey listed among unclean animals
A noun identifying a specific bird, likely a species of vulture. Listed in Leviticus 11:18 and Deuteronomy 14:17 among ritually unclean birds, it appears consistently with the definite article. Some textual witnesses suggest reading the feminine form. The exact species remains debated, but the association with carrion-eating birds is clear from its position in the unclean bird lists.

(2×) Identifies a bird species classified as ritually unclean in the Levitical dietary laws (Lev 11:18; Deut 14:17). BDB identifies it as the 'carrion-vulture,' and the multilingual tradition (Spanish 'buitre', French/German 'carrion-vulture') confirms this. The Samaritan reading suggests a feminine form (רחמה), and accentual evidence in Deuteronomy also points to variant pronunciations. Its placement among unclean birds of prey indicates a scavenger species. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5372 WITH 3 SENSES
en: the-carrion-vulture | es: el-buitre | fr: le-carrion-vulture | de: der-carrion-vulture Lev 11:18; Deut 14:17

רֶחֶם H7361 N-fd (1×)
womb — the female reproductive organ; metaphorically, the place of origin or birth
This common term for the womb appears throughout Scripture in both literal and metaphorical contexts. It can refer to the physical organ of childbirth, to birth itself ('from the womb'), or figuratively to origins and beginnings. The dual form in Judges 5:30 ('a womb, two wombs for each man') uses crude language for captured women, reflecting the brutal reality of ancient warfare. The word frequently appears in expressions about God's sovereignty over conception and birth.

(1×) The dual form 'two wombs' appears in Judges 5:30 in the anticipated victory song of Sisera's mother, crudely referring to captured women as spoils of war. This rare dual construction emphasizes the dehumanizing language of military conquest. The term reflects the harsh reality that women were considered plunder in ancient Near Eastern warfare. WOMB AND BELLY
en: two-wombs | es: dos-matrices | fr: deux-wombs | de: zwei-wombs Judg 5:30

רַחֲמָנִי H7362 Adj-fp (1×)
compassionate — showing mercy, tender-hearted, merciful (feminine plural adjective)
This adjective describes people characterized by compassion or mercy. In Lamentations 4:10, it appears in the shocking phrase 'compassionate women' who cooked their own children during the siege of Jerusalem. The irony is devastating—women whose nature should be tender and merciful were driven by extreme famine to unthinkable acts. The adjective derives from the same root as 'womb,' suggesting natural maternal tenderness that the siege conditions perverted.

(1×) Compassionate or tender-hearted, describing women (Lamentations 4:10). The phrase 'compassionate women' appears in one of Scripture's most horrifying images: mothers cooking their own children during Jerusalem's siege. The tragic irony intensifies the horror—those naturally most tender-hearted were driven to the most unnatural acts by extreme famine. GRACE AND COMPASSION
en: women | es: compasivas | fr: [רחמניות] | de: [רחמניות] Lam 4:10

רָחַף H7363a V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)
tremble — to grow soft, relax, or shake (of bones in fear)
This verb means to grow soft, relax, or tremble, used in Jeremiah 23:9 where the prophet describes his physical response to God's words: 'all my bones trembled.' The context is Jeremiah's overwhelming reaction to prophetic revelation about judgment on false prophets. The Arabic cognate suggests softness or limpness, fitting the image of bones that have lost their strength. The verb captures the physical manifestation of being appalled or terrified.

(1×) To grow soft, relax, or tremble, describing bones that shake in fear or shock (Jeremiah 23:9). Jeremiah's declaration 'all my bones trembled' expresses his physical response to God's words of judgment. The verb suggests a loss of rigidity or strength, as if the skeletal structure itself becomes weak before divine revelation. Arabic cognates meaning 'soft' support this sense of structural weakening. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: tremble | es: temblaron | fr: [רחפו] | de: [רחפו] Jer 23:9

רָחַף H7363b V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (2×)
hover, brood over; describes motion that is gentle, protective, or suspended above something
A verb depicting hovering or gentle movement over something. Genesis 1:2 describes the Spirit of God 'hovering over the waters' at creation, suggesting either protective brooding or fertilizing presence. Deuteronomy 32:11 uses the same verb for a vulture hovering over its young, clearly protective. The Syriac cognate supports both 'move gently' and 'brood,' adding interpretive depth to the creation account.

(2×) Describes the action of hovering or moving gently over something, often with protective or creative intent. In Genesis 1:2, God's Spirit 'hovers' (or 'broods') over the primordial waters, with ancient interpreters divided on whether this is fertilizing motion or protective presence. Deuteronomy 32:11 clarifies the imagery: a vulture hovering over its young. The Syriac evidence (move gently, cherish, brood) supports both protective and creative nuances, making this term crucial for creation theology. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: hovering, hovers | es: revolotea, se-movía | fr: hovers, planant | de: hovers, schwebte Gen 1:2; Deut 32:11

רָחַץ H7364 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (72×)
To wash, bathe, or rinse with water; covering full-body bathing for purification, washing specific objects or body parts, and passive reception of washing.

The verb רָחַץ is the everyday Hebrew word for washing with water, but its biblical significance runs far deeper than hygiene. In Leviticus, it becomes the central verb for ritual bathing — the priest 'shall bathe his body in water' before approaching the holy (Lev 16:4). Arabic ́shares the root, and Ethiopic extends it to sweating, hinting at the body's relationship with water in all its forms. The word divides naturally between intransitive bathing (washing oneself) and transitive washing (cleaning feet, entrails, garments). Abraham's offer to wash his guests' feet (Gen 18:4) became a model of hospitality that echoes all the way to John 13. The rare passive occurrences — Ezekiel's image of the unwashed newborn (Ezek 16:4) — carry particular poignancy.

1. bathe the body (37×) To bathe the entire body in water, typically intransitive or reflexive. This is overwhelmingly the Levitical purification sense — after contact with uncleanness, one 'shall bathe in water' (Lev 15:5, and dozens of similar commands). Spanish lavará and se lavará both capture this reflexive bathing. Pharaoh's daughter 'came down to bathe' at the Nile (Exod 2:5), and Bathsheba was 'bathing' when David saw her (2 Sam 11:2). The sense emphasizes the whole body being immersed or doused, whether for ritual restoration or personal cleanliness. WASHING AND BATHING en: and-bathe, and-let-wash, and-shall-bathe | es: Y-lavará, y-lavará, y-se-lavará | fr: et-bathe, et-devra-bathe, et-laisse-laver | de: und-bathe, und-lass-waschen, und-soll-bathe Exod 2:5; Exod 40:32; Lev 14:8; Lev 14:9; Lev 15:5

2. wash something with water (32×) To wash a specific object, body part, or another person with water — the transitive use. Washing feet is the paradigmatic example: Abraham offers water for his guests' feet (Gen 18:4), a gesture repeated throughout the patriarchal narratives (Gen 19:2, 24:32, 43:24). The verb also covers washing sacrificial entrails and legs on the altar (Lev 1:9, 13) and washing one's hands or face (Gen 43:31, Exod 30:19-21). Spanish lavaron and French laver straightforwardly render this active, object-directed washing. Job 29:6 extends it metaphorically: 'I washed my steps in butter.' WASHING AND BATHING en: and-he-washed, and-shall-wash, and-they-shall-wash | es: Cuando-lavé, Y-lavaron, Y-lavarán | fr: [לרחצה], dans-laver, devra-laver | de: [ברחץ], [לרחצה], er-soll-waschen Gen 18:4; Gen 19:2; Gen 24:32; Gen 43:24; Gen 43:31

3. be washed (2×) The passive form (Pual stem) — to be washed or to have washing done to oneself. Only two clear occurrences: Ezekiel's devastating image of Jerusalem as a newborn who 'was not washed in water' at birth (Ezek 16:4), and Proverbs 30:12's portrait of a generation 'not washed from their filth.' Spanish fuiste lavada ('you were washed') captures the passive voice. These rare passives carry theological weight — the absence of washing becomes a metaphor for neglect, abandonment, or moral impurity. WASHING AND BATHING
en: washed, were-you-washed | es: fuiste-lavada, se-ha-lavado | fr: laver | de: [רחץ], [רחצת] Prov 30:12; Ezek 16:4

4. (1×) A single occurrence in Job 9:30 where Job speaks hypothetically: 'If I wash myself (אִם־הִזְכֵּתִי) with snow water.' This is the Hithpael (reflexive intensive) stem, the only such form of רָחַץ in the Hebrew Bible. It intensifies the reflexive sense — not merely bathing but thoroughly cleansing oneself with the purest water imaginable. Spanish me lavara and English 'I wash myself' reflect the emphatic self-cleansing. Job's point is devastating: even such extreme purification would not avail before God. WASHING AND BATHING en: I-wash-myself | es: me-lavara | fr: laver | de: [התרחצתי] Job 9:30

רְחַץ H7365 V-Hitpael-Perf-3mp (1×)
trust — to rely on, have confidence in, set one's trust upon (Aramaic)
This Aramaic verb means to trust or have confidence in someone or something. In Daniel 3:28, Nebuchadnezzar blesses the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego because they 'trusted in Him' and defied the king's command rather than worship other gods. The Hithpael form suggests reflexive action—they set their own trust upon God. This is the language of radical reliance that accepts even death rather than compromise. Cognates appear in Syriac and Assyrian with similar meanings of trust and reliance.

(1×) To trust, rely on, or set one's confidence in God (Daniel 3:28). The three young men 'trusted' in God and refused to worship the golden image, even facing death in the furnace. This Aramaic Hithpael form emphasizes their deliberate, reflexive act of placing trust in God over royal commands. The verb captures absolute reliance that risks everything. FAITH AND TRUST en: trusted | es: confiaron | fr: élever | de: [התרחצו] Dan 3:28

רֻחַץ H7366 N-msc / 1cs (2×)
washing, wash-pot; refers to the act or place of washing, used metaphorically
A noun meaning washing or wash-pot, appearing only in Psalms 60 and 108 in the identical phrase 'Moab is my wash-pot.' This figurative expression reduces Moab to a basin for washing feet, symbolizing subjugation and servitude. The image is deliberately degrading: from among the nations, Moab is assigned the lowliest domestic function.

(2×) Denotes washing or a washing vessel, used exclusively in the metaphorical expression 'Moab is my wash-pot' (Ps 60:8; 108:9). The image portrays Moab as reduced to a utilitarian object for cleansing the speaker's feet—a powerful statement of dominance and contempt. Spanish 'mi lavado' (my washing) and German 'mein washing' reflect the possessive form, emphasizing ownership and subjugation. The parallel with casting a sandal over Edom reinforces the theme of territorial supremacy. WASHING AND BATHING en: My-washing, my-washing | es: mi-lavado | fr: se-reposer | de: mein-washing Ps 60:8; Ps 108:9

רַחְצָה H7367 Art / N-fs (2×)
washing, washing place; a location or act of washing, used in simile
A feminine noun meaning washing or a washing place. Song of Songs 4:2 and 6:6 use it in a simile: the beloved's teeth are like ewes 'coming up from the washing,' suggesting whiteness, cleanliness, and uniform beauty. The image evokes freshly washed sheep emerging white and gleaming from water.

(2×) Refers to the act or place of washing, appearing exclusively in Song of Songs (4:2; 6:6) within a pastoral simile. The beloved's teeth are compared to a flock of shorn ewes ascending from the washing—implying purity, whiteness, and orderly beauty. Spanish 'lavadero' (washing place) and French 'lavoir' (washhouse) suggest a specific location, while the participial construction ('coming up from the washing') emphasizes the fresh, clean state of the sheep—and by extension, the lover's radiant smile. WASHING AND BATHING en: the-washing | es: el-lavadero | fr: lavoir, | de: [הרחצה] Song 4:2; Song 6:6

רָחַק H7368 Prep-k / V-Qal-Inf (58×)
Be far, be distant; remove far away; go far, withdraw; keep far from, abstain; extend, enlarge
A verb of distance and separation operating across the Qal, Piel, and Hifil stems. In its stative Qal form rachaq describes the state of being far — whether God feels distant (Ps 22:1), injustice is kept at arm's length (Exod 23:7), or a town lies beyond easy reach (Deut 12:21). The Hifil causative turns this into active removal: God sends enemies far away, or a penitent puts iniquity far from his tent (Job 11:14). The verb also expresses voluntary withdrawal and, in moral contexts, deliberate abstention from evil. A beautiful image in Ps 103:12 stretches the verb to its limit: 'as far as east is from west, so far has he removed our transgressions.'

1. be far, be distant (19×) The stative Qal sense: to be far, be at a distance. Spanish lejos ('far') and French loin ('distant') consistently render this spatial state. Used of geographic remoteness (Deut 12:21; 14:24), emotional-relational distance (Prov 19:7; Job 30:10), and theological abandonment — the anguished question of why God stands far off. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: [ketiv], are-far, be-far | es: Están-lejos, [se-aleje], estará-lejos | fr: [ירחק], est-loin, s'éloigner | de: [[ירחק]], [ירחק], [ירחקו] Exod 23:7; Deut 12:21; Deut 14:24; Job 5:4; Job 21:16

2. remove far, put away (18×) The causative Hifil and transitive Piel: to remove far, put away, send to a distance. Arabic ab'ada ('to distance') and German entfernen ('to remove') capture the active, causative force. Job 11:14 urges putting iniquity far from one's tent; Job 19:13 laments that God has removed his brothers far from him. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: He-has-removed, I-have-sent-them-far, I-will-remove-far | es: Aleja, Alejaste, Y-aleje | fr: [הרחיקם], [הרחקתים], [ירחקו] | de: [ארחיק], [הרחיק], [הרחיקהו] Gen 44:4; Job 11:14; Job 13:21; Job 19:13; Job 22:23

3. go far away, withdraw (13×) Active intransitive motion: to go far away, withdraw, flee to a distance. Ps 55:7 cries 'I would wander far away'; Josh 8:4 positions an ambush party at a distance. French aller loin and German sich entfernen ('withdraw oneself') reflect the volitional departure implied by this sense. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: I-would-wander, and-let-it-be-far, and-will-be-far | es: Alejaos, aléjate, huiría-lejos | fr: [רחקו], alla-loin, aller-loin | de: [רחקו], entfernen, entfernte-sich Exod 8:28; Josh 8:4; Judg 18:22; Job 30:10; Ps 55:7

4. (4×) Infinitive and participial forms used adverbially to express the concept of 'far off' or 'at a great distance' as a manner or extent. Gen 21:16 has Hagar sitting 'far off' from Ishmael; Exod 33:7 places the tent of meeting 'far' from camp. Spanish alejarse and French loin au loin ('far away') render the adverbial spatial nuance. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: far-away, far-off, going-far | es: alejarse, lejos, muy | fr: allant-loin, loin-au-loin, loin-dehors | de: fern-weg, gehend-fern, weit-weg Gen 21:16; Exod 8:28; Exod 33:7; Josh 3:16

5. keep far from, abstain (2×) With moral or behavioral force: to keep far from, to refrain or abstain. Eccl 3:5 speaks of a time 'to refrain from embracing'; Ezek 8:6 implies being driven far from the sanctuary by abominations. Spanish para alejarse ('in order to distance oneself') and French éloigner capture the purposive abstention. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: to-go-far, to-refrain | es: para-alejarme, para-alejarse | fr: [לרחקה], à-éloigner | de: [לרחק], [לרחקה] Eccl 3:5; Ezek 8:6

6. (1×) In Ps 103:12 the verb appears in a comparative construction — 'as far as the east is from the west' — measuring the infinite extent of God's forgiveness. Spanish lejanía ('remoteness') and French s'éloigner stretch the spatial verb into a theological metaphor of complete removal of sin. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: as-far-as | es: Como-lejanía-de | fr: comme-s'éloigner | de: wie-entfernte-sich Ps 103:12

7. (1×) In Isa 26:15 the verb takes on the sense of enlarging or extending borders — 'you have extended all the boundaries of the land.' English 'extended' and Spanish ensanchaste ('you widened') point to a semantic shift from distancing to territorial expansion, a unique application of the root's spatial range. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: You-extended | es: ensanchaste | fr: éloigner | de: entfernen Isa 26:15

רָחֵק H7369 Adj-mpc / 2ms (1×)

those departing — those who are far from, those who remove themselves (participle as substantive)

This verbal adjective functions as a noun meaning 'those who depart' or 'those who are far from.' In Psalm 73:27, it describes 'those who are far from You' (God)—people who remove themselves from divine presence and relationship. The form captures ongoing action: not just distant, but actively departing or removing oneself. The context contrasts those who abandon God with the psalmist who draws near. This is spiritual geography—relational distance from God.

(1×) Those who depart from or are far from God, used as a substantive participle (Psalm 73:27). The phrase 'those far from You' describes people who actively remove themselves from God's presence. The participial form suggests ongoing action rather than static distance—continuous departure rather than mere remoteness. The psalmist declares that such people perish while he draws near. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: those-far-from-You | es: los-alejados-de-ti | fr: s'éloigner | de: jene-fern-von-du Ps 73:27

רָחַשׁ H7370 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

overflow, be astir — to bubble up, boil over, stir with words or emotion

This verb means to stir, move, or overflow, used in Psalm 45:1 where the psalmist says 'my heart overflows with a good word.' The image is of something bubbling up from within, like boiling liquid. Aramaic and Syriac cognates suggest creeping, moving, or fluttering, while the Talmudic usage connects to the movement of lips in speech. The French translation 'bouillir' (to boil) captures the sense of something bubbling forth, here applied to inspired speech that wells up from the heart.

(1×) To overflow, bubble up, or be astir with words or emotion (Psalm 45:1). The psalmist's heart 'overflows with a good word' like liquid boiling over, unable to be contained. This is inspired speech that wells up from within, described with imagery of movement and stirring. The verb captures the irrepressible nature of the poet's composition for the king. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: overflows | es: Rebosa | fr: bouillir | de: fliesst-über Ps 45:1

רַחַת H7371 Prep-b (1×)

winnowing shovel — an agricultural tool for separating grain from chaff

This term refers to a winnowing shovel or similar agricultural implement used to separate grain from chaff. In Isaiah 30:24, it appears alongside a fork in the description of how animals will eat grain 'winnowed with shovel and fork.' The exact nature of the tool is uncertain—proposals include ventilating fan (from the root for 'wind'), something soft or friable, or simply a broad shovel. The context clearly indicates agricultural processing of grain for animal feed.

(1×) A winnowing shovel or agricultural tool for separating grain (Isaiah 30:24). Paired with 'fork,' this implement processes grain that will feed working animals. The root etymology is uncertain —possibly from 'wind' (suggesting a fanning tool) or from 'soft/friable' (suggesting its function). Cross-linguistic evidence shows this as a borrowed term in Arabic, indicating cultural exchange of agricultural technology. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: with-shovel | es: con-bieldo | fr: [ברחת] | de: [ברחת] Isa 30:24

רָטַב H7372 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (1×)

be wet, be moist — to be drenched or moistened

This verb means to be moist or wet, used in Job 24:8 to describe the poor who 'are wet with mountain rain' and have no shelter. The root appears broadly in Semitic languages (Assyrian, Arabic, Ethiopic, Aramaic, Syriac) with the consistent meaning of moisture. The image is of people exposed to the elements, drenched by rain because they lack housing. Job's complaint emphasizes the vulnerability of the destitute who cannot escape the weather.

(1×) To be wet, moist, or drenched by water (Job 24:8). The verse describes the poor 'wet with mountain rain,' lacking shelter from the elements. This verb captures the physical condition of exposure—bodies soaked by rain because there is no refuge. The widespread Semitic cognates confirm this as a basic term for moisture or wetness. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: they-are-wet | es: se-mojan | fr: ירטבו | de: [ירטבו] Job 24:8

רָטֹב H7373 Adj-ms (1×)

moist, juicy, fresh — full of sap, green, thriving

This adjective means moist, juicy, or fresh, describing something full of vitality and sap. In Job 8:16, it characterizes a plant that 'is moist before the sun'—green, thriving, and full of life. The word emphasizes the fresh, sap-filled condition of a healthy plant in contrast to withered vegetation. The imagery serves Bildad's argument about the fate of those who forget God—like plants, they may seem fresh temporarily but will dry up without proper foundation.

(1×) Moist, juicy, fresh, or full of sap, describing a thriving plant (Job 8:16). The phrase 'he is moist before the sun' depicts a plant in its prime—green, sap-filled, and vigorous. This condition of vitality serves as a metaphor in Bildad's speech, contrasting temporary appearance of health with ultimate withering for those without God. Spanish 'jugoso' (juicy) captures the sense of sap-filled freshness. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: full-of-sap | es: Jugoso | fr: רטב | de: [רטב] Job 8:16

רְטֶט H7374 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

trembling, panic — sudden fear, shaking terror

This noun means trembling or panic, appearing in Jeremiah 49:24 in the oracle against Damascus: 'panic has seized her.' The term describes sudden, overwhelming fear that takes hold of a person or city facing judgment. The verb form suggests that panic grips or seizes—an active force that overcomes resistance. This is not gradual anxiety but sudden terror in the face of imminent disaster.

(1×) Trembling or panic, sudden overwhelming fear (Jeremiah 49:24). The phrase describes Damascus gripped by terror as judgment approaches: 'panic has seized her.' This is fear that overcomes and paralyzes, an involuntary physical and emotional response to impending disaster. The verb 'seize' emphasizes panic as an external force that takes hold. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-panic | es: y-temblor | fr: [ורטט] | de: [ורטט] Jer 49:24

רִטַּפֵּשׁ H7375 V-QalPass-Perf-3ms (1×)

grow fresh — to become fresh, rejuvenated, or restored (of flesh)

This rare quadriliteral verb means to grow fresh or rejuvenated. In Job 33:25, it describes restored health: 'his flesh grows fresher than in youth.' Elihu speaks of divine restoration where diseased or aged flesh becomes young again. The verb's exact etymology is uncertain—possibly a transposition of a root meaning 'wide, loose, delicate' or 'fat.' The Talmud uses related forms for fatty tissue, while Arabic suggests convalescence. The image is of reversal: aged or sick flesh restored to youthful vitality.

(1×) To grow fresh, be rejuvenated, or become renewed, specifically of flesh or bodily health (Job 33:25). Elihu describes divine healing where 'his flesh grows fresher than in youth'—complete restoration to youthful vigor. The passive form suggests transformation that happens to someone rather than something they do. This rare verb may be a transposition from roots meaning 'fat' or 'delicate,' emphasizing healthy tissue. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: is-fresher | es: Se-refresca | fr: רטפש | de: [רטפש] Job 33:25

רָטַשׁ H7376 V-Piel-Imperf-3fp (6×)

To dash in pieces, smash violently; used of the brutal killing of children in warfare

A verb of shocking violence, used almost exclusively to describe the wartime atrocity of dashing children against rocks or the ground. In its active Piel form, it names the perpetrator's act – Hazael will 'dash in pieces' Israel's children (2 Kgs 8:12). In the passive Pual, it describes the victims: Samaria's infants 'were dashed in pieces' (Hos 13:16), Nineveh's children likewise (Nah 3:10). Spanish 'estrellar' (to smash, crash) and 'destrozar' (to shatter) convey the raw physical brutality. The word appears only six times but carries enormous prophetic weight, marking the most extreme consequence of covenant unfaithfulness and imperial cruelty.

1. be dashed to pieces (passive) (4×) To be dashed to pieces (Pual passive), describing victims of violent destruction in warfare. In Isa 13:16, Babylon's children 'shall be dashed in pieces' before their parents' eyes. Hos 10:14 and 13:16 apply the image to Samaria's fall, and Nah 3:10 to Nineveh. Spanish 'estrellados' (smashed) and 'fue-estrellada' (was smashed) reflect the brutal passive voice – these are atrocities suffered, not chosen. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: shall-be-dashed-in-pieces, was-dashed-in-pieces, were-dashed-in-pieces | es: estrellados, fue-estrellada, serán-estrellados | fr: [ירטשו], [רטשה], ils-écraseront | de: [ירטשו], [רטשה] Isa 13:16; Hos 10:14; Hos 13:16; Nah 3:10

2. dash to pieces (active) (2×) To dash to pieces (Piel active), the deliberate act of smashing. In 2 Kgs 8:12, Elisha weeps foreseeing what Hazael will do to Israel's children: 'you will dash them to pieces.' Isa 13:18 attributes the action to invading armies whose bows strike down the young. Spanish 'estrellarás' (you will smash) captures the direct, personal agency of the perpetrator in this horrifying act of war. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: will-dash-in-pieces, you-will-dash-to-pieces | es: destrozarán, estrellarás | fr: [תרטשנה], tu-fera-dash-à-pieces | de: [תרטשנה], du-wird-dash-zu-pieces 2Kgs 8:12; Isa 13:18

רִי H7377 Prep / N-ms (1×)

moisture — wetness, water content

This noun means moisture or wetness, appearing in Job 37:11 in Elihu's speech about weather: 'He burdens the cloud with moisture.' The term refers to the water content that clouds carry, making them heavy before releasing rain. The root connects to the verb for 'being wet' or 'saturated.' The image is of God loading clouds with water, controlling the precipitation cycle. This fits the broader passage about divine governance of natural phenomena.

(1×) Moisture or water content, particularly in clouds (Job 37:11). The phrase 'He burdens the cloud with moisture' describes God loading clouds with water before rain. This meteorological term emphasizes the weight of water vapor that clouds carry. The context celebrates divine control over weather patterns and the water cycle. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: with-moisture | es: con-humedad | fr: ברי | de: [ברי] Job 37:11

רִיב H7378 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (70×)

To strive, contend, quarrel; to plead or litigate a case; as noun: a dispute or lawsuit.

Riv is the Hebrew Bible's central word for conflict that involves words rather than weapons. It ranges from domestic quarreling (Gen 26:20-22, where Isaac's servants dispute over wells) to formal legal proceedings where one party pleads a case before a judge (1 Sam 24:15). The prophets deploy it powerfully in Yahweh's covenant lawsuits — 'Hear, O mountains, the LORD's riv' (Mic 6:2) — where God himself becomes the plaintiff against an unfaithful people. Arabic distinguishes khaasama (quarrel) from raafa'a (litigate), and Korean separates datuda (다투다, dispute) from byeonho (변호, legal defense), confirming the two major semantic poles that run through all 70 occurrences.

1. Qal: quarrel, contend, strive (42×) General interpersonal strife, quarreling, or contention without a formal legal framework. Isaac's herdsmen quarrel with the herdsmen of Gerar over wells (Gen 26:20-22); Israel contends with Moses at the waters (Exod 17:2); Nehemiah contends with the nobles over usury (Neh 13:11, 17, 25). Arabic khaasama (ٱ, to quarrel) and Korean datuda (다투다, to argue/dispute) consistently mark this as non-juridical conflict. Spanish contendió and disputaron, French contester — all point to interpersonal strife rather than courtroom advocacy. This is the most frequent sense at 42 occurrences. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: I-will-contend, You-contend, and-I-contended | es: Y-contendió, Y-disputaron, Y-reprendí | fr: [ואריב], [ואריבה], contester | de: du-contended-mit-ihn, quarrel, streiten Gen 26:20; Gen 26:21; Gen 26:22; Gen 31:36; Exod 17:2

2. Qal: plead, defend, litigate (22×) Juridical pleading, advocacy, or formal litigation — defending a case or championing a cause in a legal or quasi-legal setting. When Gideon's father says 'Let Baal plead for himself' (Judg 6:31-32), the verb carries forensic force. David appeals to God: 'Plead my cause' (Ps 35:1; 1 Sam 24:15). The prophetic lawsuit (riv pattern) — 'The LORD has a case against his people' (Mic 6:1-2) — represents the fullest development.

Arabic raafa'a (رَفَعَ, to bring a case) and Korean byeonho (변호, legal defense) distinguish this from mere quarreling. German streiten can cover both, but the passage contexts are unmistakably forensic. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: Contend, He-pleads, I-plead | es: Contended, Defiende, Has-defendido | fr: contends, contester, et-peut-il-plead | de: contends, lass-contend, lass-ihn-contend Judg 6:31; Judg 6:32; 1Sam 24:15; 1Sam 25:39

3. Hifil: adversary, opponent (3×) The Hifil participial form used substantively to mean 'adversary' or 'opponent' — the one who contends against. In 1 Sam 2:10 the LORD's adversaries shall be shattered; in Hos 4:4 'let no one contend' (participle as agent noun). Arabic mukhaasimuu (مُخَاصِمُو, opponents) and Korean datuneun jadeul (다투는 자들, those who contend) mark the shift from verbal action to agent noun. Swahili adui (enemy) and wapinzani (opponents) further confirm the adversarial personal reference. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: His-adversaries, [ketiv-his-adversary], as-those-contending-with | es: (sus-adversarios), [sus-adversarios], como-los-que-contienden-con | fr: Son-adversaries, [ketiv-son-adversary], plaider | de: [ketiv-sein-adversary], stritt 1Sam 2:10; Hos 4:4

4. Nominal: dispute, lawsuit (2×) The noun riv (same root form) used substantively to mean a dispute, quarrel, or lawsuit as an abstract entity. Job 31:13 — 'if I have rejected the cause (riv) of my servant'; Prov 25:9 — 'argue your case (riv) with your neighbor.' Arabic khusuuma (خُصُومَة, litigation) and Korean songsa (송사, lawsuit) identify this as a nominal rather than verbal use. Only two occurrences are clustered here, but the distinction from the verbal senses is clear: riv is the thing being adjudicated, not the act of adjudicating. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: argue, in-their-dispute | es: contiende, en-su-litigio | fr: dans-leur-plaider-eux, plaider | de: stritt Job 31:13; Prov 25:9

5. (1×) A single puzzling occurrence at 1 Sam 15:5 where the translations diverge sharply from the expected meaning of riv. English renders 'and he lay in wait,' Spanish 'y puso emboscada,' and the domain shifts from JUSTICE to VIOLENCE_CONFLICT. This likely reflects a textual or parsing issue — the verb vayyarev here may actually be from a different root (rav/arav, to lie in ambush) rather than riv (to contend). The clustering algorithm isolated it precisely because the multilingual translation signatures diverge completely from the contention/litigation pattern. AMBUSH LURK

en: and-he-lay-in-wait | es: y-puso-emboscada | fr: et-il-s'étendit-dans-attends | de: und-er-lag-in-wait 1Sam 15:5

רִיב H7379 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 2ms (61×)

A legal case or lawsuit; strife or quarrel between parties; a dispute or broader public controversy.

Riv spans the full arc of human conflict, from a shouting match at a well to a formal lawsuit before elders at the city gate. Its 62 occurrences cluster around two poles: the judicial, where it means a cause or case that demands adjudication, and the interpersonal, where it denotes raw contention and strife. The legal sense dominates prophetic literature – 'the LORD has a riv against the nations' (Jer 25:31) – while the quarrel sense appears in wisdom literature, where Proverbs repeatedly warns against the fool who stirs up riv. German consistently renders it 'Rechtsstreit,' foregrounding the legal dimension even when the context is informal.

1. legal case, lawsuit (27×) A formal legal case, lawsuit, or judicial cause brought before an authority for adjudication. This sense appears prominently in Exodus 23:3, 6 (do not pervert justice in a poor man's case), 1 Samuel 24:15 (David entrusts his riv to the LORD as judge), and Job 29:16 ('I investigated the case of the stranger'). Spanish distinguishes this with 'causa' (legal cause), while German's 'Rechtsstreit' (legal dispute) underscores the forensic setting. The possessive construction – 'my case,' 'his case' – frequently marks this as a matter awaiting judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-cause, case, case-of | es: Tu-contienda, causa-de-mí, causa-mi | fr: dans-son-dispute, dans-son-querelle-lui, leur-querelle-eux | de: Rechtsstreit, dein-Sache, in-sein-dispute Exod 23:3; Exod 23:6; 1Sam 24:15; 1Sam 25:39; Job 29:16

2. strife, quarrel (21×) Strife, quarrel, or hostile contention between parties. Genesis 13:7 introduces this sense with the quarrel between Abram's herdsmen and Lot's over pastureland, and Exodus 17:7 names the place Meribah because of the people's quarreling. Proverbs is especially rich in this usage: 'the beginning of strife is like releasing water' (17:14), 'a hot-tempered man stirs up strife' (15:18). Spanish tends toward 'contienda,' French 'querelle,' and German 'Streit.' The emphasis falls on interpersonal friction rather than formal proceedings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-strife], a-dispute, a-quarrel | es: [y-contienda], contienda, contienda-de- | fr: dans-querelle, de-querelle, de-strivings-de | de: Rechtsstreit, Streit, der-stritt Gen 13:7; Exod 17:7; Deut 1:12; Judg 12:2; 2Sam 22:44

3. dispute, controversy (13×) A dispute or controversy that is broader than a private quarrel but not necessarily a formal court proceeding – a public contention or contested matter. Deuteronomy 17:8 speaks of cases 'too difficult for you to judge, whether it is a matter of bloodshed, lawsuit, or dispute (riv),' listing it alongside but distinct from the strictly judicial. Deuteronomy 19:17 and 25:1 similarly position riv as a contested matter brought for resolution. Spanish uses 'disputa' and 'litigios,' French 'controversy,' capturing the middle ground between private quarrel and formal lawsuit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-dispute, and-a-controversy, and-for-disputes | es: disputa, la-disputa, litigios | fr: [ולריב], [ריב], controversy | de: Rechtsstreit, [ולריב], [ריב] Exod 23:2; Deut 17:8; Deut 19:17; Deut 21:5; Deut 25:1

רִיבַי H7380 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ribai; personal name of a Benjamite, father of one of David's mighty men

A personal name belonging to a Benjamite. Ribai was the father of Ittai, one of David's thirty mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:29; 1 Chr 11:31). The name appears with slight orthographic variations in the parallel Chronicles account, and the Greek versions show further transliteration variants. The name may be related to the root רִיב (strife, contention).

(2×) Personal name of a man from the tribe of Benjamin, known as the father of Ittai, who was numbered among David's elite warriors (2 Sam 23:29; 1 Chr 11:31). The parallel texts show minor orthographic variation (Ribai/Rivai), while the Septuagint offers multiple transliterations (Ρειβα, Εριβα, Ρεβιε). The lexical note connecting it to יְרִיבַי suggests a possible etymological link to the root רִיב ('to contend'), though the name's precise meaning remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ribai, Rivai | es: Ribai, Rivay | fr: Ribai, [ריבי] | de: Ribai, [ריבי] 2Sam 23:29; 1Chr 11:31

רֵיחַ H7381 Prep-l / N-msc (58×)

Scent, odor, or aroma; most often the pleasing sacrificial fragrance ascending to God, but also natural fragrances and figurative reputation.

In Hebrew worship, reyach almost always appears in the hallowed phrase reyach nichoach, the 'soothing aroma' of a burnt offering rising to the LORD. This cultic formula pervades Leviticus and Numbers, anchoring the word firmly in the theology of sacrifice. Yet outside the altar, reyach evokes the intoxicating fragrances of Song of Songs — nard, henna, and the beloved's garments — and even the metaphorical 'scent' of Israel's ruined reputation before Pharaoh (Exod 5:21). The span from sacred smoke to sensual perfume to social standing reveals how deeply smell was woven into Israel's experience of the holy and the human.

1. pleasing sacrificial aroma (46×) The technical cultic phrase reyach nichoach ('soothing aroma') describes the ascending fragrance of a burnt offering that pleases God. Appearing 46 times, it dominates Leviticus, Numbers, and Exodus 29. Spanish olor de and German Geruch von consistently mark it as a specialized ritual term. The phrase first appears at Noah's altar (Gen 8:21) and becomes the standard vocabulary for acceptable sacrifice throughout the Priestly source and Ezekiel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pleasing-aroma, an-aroma, an-aroma-of | es: olor, olor-, olor-de | fr:

aroma-de, odeur-de, un-agréable-aroma | de: Geruch-von, ein-Geruch, ein-Geruch-von Exod 29:18; Exod 29:25; Exod 29:41; Lev 1:9; Lev 1:13

2. pleasant fragrance (natural) (7×) The naturally pleasant fragrance of a person, plant, or perfumed oil, used in poetic and prophetic contexts. Song of Songs clusters these occurrences — the beloved's nard (1:12), the scent of mandrakes (7:13), and Lebanon's fragrance likened to restored Israel in Hosea 14:7. French parfum and German Duft distinguish this sensory, aesthetic sense from the ritual vocabulary, marking a shift from altar to garden. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fragrance, and-his-scent, fragrance | es: como-la-fragancia-de, como-olor-de, fragancia | fr: [וריחו], comme-le-parfum, comme-sentir-de | de: Duft, [וריחו], und-Duft Gen 27:27; Song 1:12; Song 2:13; Song 4:11; Song 7:13

3. smell or odor (general) (5×) A general or neutral smell, sometimes even unpleasant by implication, used outside cultic contexts. In Exod 5:21 the Israelites lament 'you have made our smell stink' before Pharaoh — a figurative use for reputation. Job 14:9 speaks of a tree reviving at the mere scent of water. These passages show reyach at its most versatile, extending from physical odor to social perception. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-scent-of, our-smell, scent-of | es: Del-olor-de, nuestro-olor, olor-de | fr: de-מריח, notre-sentir, parfum-de | de: Duft, den-Duft, der-Duft Gen 8:21; Gen 27:27; Exod 5:21; Job 14:9

רֵיחַ H7382 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

smell, odor — scent, particularly absence of smell (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun means smell or odor, appearing in Daniel 3:27 in the phrase 'the smell of fire had not come upon them.' After Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego emerge from the furnace, observers note that not even the scent of fire clings to them—their clothes, hair, and bodies show no trace of smoke or burning. The term emphasizes the completeness of their miraculous preservation: not just survival, but total absence of any effect from the fire.

(1×) Smell or odor, specifically scent of fire (Daniel 3:27). The phrase 'the smell of fire had not come upon them' emphasizes the miraculous nature of the three men's deliverance—no trace of smoke or burning remained on their bodies or clothes. This Aramaic term highlights complete preservation: even the odor of their ordeal was absent. The detail intensifies the wonder of divine protection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-smell-of | es: y-olor-de | fr: et-compassion | de: [וריח] Dan 3:27

רִיפָה H7383 Art / N-fp (2×)

grain, groats; a grain product, possibly barley groats or pounded grain spread to dry

A noun of uncertain identification, referring to some kind of grain or grain product. Second Samuel 17:19 mentions it as something spread out to dry, while Proverbs 27:22 speaks of pounding it in a mortar. The Vulgate suggests barley groats, while Septuagint L has 'cakes of preserved fruit.' Scholars propose it may be a preparation similar to 'apricot cheese' or dried grain, something that required both drying and pounding.

(2×) Denotes a grain product of uncertain precise identification, appearing in contexts involving drying (2 Sam 17:19) and pounding (Prov 27:22). The Hebrew plural forms vary (רִפוֹת/רִיפוֹת), adding to the uncertainty. The Vulgate's 'barley groats' and the Septuagint's 'cakes of preserved fruit' represent different interpretive traditions. Modern scholarship suggests something spread to dry and then pounded—perhaps groats, crushed grain, or even dried fruit preparations. The Spanish/English 'grain/groats' reflects the most conservative reading. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain, the-groats | es: el-grano, los-granos | fr: le-groats, le-הריפות | de: [הריפות], der-groats 2Sam 17:19; Prov 27:22

דִיפַת H7384a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Diphath — a descendant of Japheth, son of Gomer (variant spelling)

Diphath appears in 1 Chronicles 1:6 as a son of Gomer and descendant of Japheth in the Table of Nations. This is a variant spelling of Riphath, which appears in the parallel passage in Genesis 10:3. The variation between 'D' and 'R' in Hebrew script is minimal and easily confused, explaining the textual variant. The Septuagint transliterations (Eriphath, Riphae, Riphath) show the same person referenced across manuscripts with slight spelling differences.

(1×) A personal name: son of Gomer and grandson of Japheth in the Table of Nations (1 Chronicles 1:6). This represents a variant spelling of Riphath (Genesis 10:3), with the initial consonant difference reflecting scribal variation. The Septuagint's varied transliterations confirm these refer to the same individual. No additional information about this descendant of Japheth survives beyond genealogical mention. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Diphath | es: y-Difat | fr: et-Diphath | de: [ודיפת] 1Chr 1:6

רִיפַת H7384b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Riphath — a descendant of Japheth, son of Gomer

Riphath appears in Genesis 10:3 as a son of Gomer and grandson of Japheth in the Table of Nations. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 1:6 has the variant Diphath. Josephus identified this lineage with the Paphlagonians of Asia Minor. Some scholars connect the name to the Rhebas River (modern Riva) on the Thracian Bosphorus, suggesting a geographic connection. The exact ethnic or geographic referent remains uncertain, though a northern or northwestern Asia Minor location seems likely.

(1×) A personal name: son of Gomer and grandson of Japheth (Genesis 10:3). Ancient interpreters like Josephus associated this lineage with Paphlagonia in northern Asia Minor. Some scholars connect the name to the Rhebas River on the Thracian Bosphorus. The Table of Nations uses personal names to represent ethnic groups or geographic regions, so Riphath likely designates a people or territory in northwestern Anatolia. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Riphath | es: y-Rifat | fr: et-Riphath | de: und-Rifat Gen 10:3

רִיק H7385 Conj-w / N-ms (12×)

Emptiness, vanity; futility or purposelessness; concretely, being physically empty or void

A noun conveying the sense of emptiness, both abstract and concrete. In most occurrences it appears in adverbial phrases meaning 'in vain' or 'to no purpose'—labor that yields nothing (Isa 49:4; Lev 26:16, 20), worship that is futile (Ps 2:1), or effort expended for emptiness (Jer 51:58; Hab 2:13). German Nichtigkeit ('nothingness') captures the philosophical weight, while Spanish en vano conveys the practical futility. A single concrete usage in Jeremiah 51:34 describes Nebuchadnezzar making Israel physically 'empty'—devouring and discarding the nation like an empty vessel. Arabic fārighan ('empty, void') and Hindi khālī confirm this tangible, physical sense.

1. emptiness, vanity, in vain (11×) Abstract emptiness, vanity, or futility, especially in the adverbial construction lərīq meaning 'in vain, to no purpose.' God warns Israel that their strength will be spent lārīq—for nothing (Lev 26:16, 20). The Servant in Isaiah 49:4 laments laboring 'for emptiness.' The psalmist asks why nations conspire rīq—in futile rage (Ps 2:1), and whether purifying one's heart was 'in vain' (Ps 73:13). German Nichtigkeit and Spanish en vano/vacío converge on this sense of purposelessness. Jeremiah 51:58 and Habakkuk 2:13 pair it with fire: nations toil bədê rīq, 'for mere emptiness.' WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: and-emptiness, emptiness, for-emptiness | es: en-vano, vacío, vacío? | fr: [וריק], [לריק], [ריק] | de: Nichtigkeit, [וריק], [לריק] Lev 26:16; Lev 26:20; Job 39:16; Ps 2:1; Ps 4:2

2. empty (concrete, physical) (1×) Concrete, physical emptiness—being devoid of contents or substance. In Jeremiah 51:34, Nebuchadnezzar has swallowed Jerusalem and made her 'empty,' like a vessel drained of its contents. Arabic fārighan ('empty, void'), Hindi khālī ('empty'), and Korean bin ('empty') all point to tangible, spatial vacancy rather than abstract futility. Spanish vacía likewise carries the concrete sense of an emptied container. This single occurrence preserves the word's physical root meaning, from which the more common abstract sense of 'vanity' developed. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: empty | es: vacía | fr: [ריק] | de: [ריק] Jer 51:34

רִיק H7386 Art / Adj-fp (14×)

Empty, vacant; also of persons: worthless, idle; of pursuits: vain, futile.

A vivid adjective that moves from the concrete to the moral. At its most literal, it describes a dry cistern (Gen 37:24), blighted ears of grain (Gen 41:27), or empty jars carried by Gideon's men (Judg 7:16). When applied to people, the tone shifts sharply: 'worthless men' who follow Abimelech (Judg 9:4) or the 'empty ones' before whom David danced (2 Sam 6:20). Arabic 'sufaha' (fools) and Swahili 'wapumbavu' (fools) confirm this moral coloring. Proverbs extends it one step further to futile pursuits themselves – the 'vanidades' of those who chase empty things (Prov 12:11; 28:19).

1. empty (physically vacant) (9×) Physically empty or vacant – describing containers, spaces, or things devoid of contents. The pit into which Joseph was cast was 'empty, no water in it' (Gen 37:24); Pharaoh's dream featured seven empty ears of grain (Gen 41:27); Gideon's soldiers carried empty jars (Judg 7:16). Translations converge: Spanish 'vacío,' Hindi 'khali,' Arabic 'farigh,' Korean 'bin' – all point to literal emptiness. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: and-empty, empty, the-empty | es: las-vacías, vacía, vacías | fr: [וריקה], et-seulement, le-vider | de: [וריקה], [ריקה], die-leeren Gen 37:24; Gen 41:27; Deut 32:47; Judg 7:16; Judg 11:3

2. worthless persons (idle, reckless fellows) (3×) Worthless, idle, reckless persons – a moral transfer from physical emptiness to human character. Abimelech hired 'worthless and reckless men' (Judg 9:4), Jephthah gathered 'empty men' (Judg 11:3), and Michal accused David of exposing himself before 'the empty ones' (2 Sam 6:20). Arabic 'al-sufaha' (fools), Swahili 'wapumbavu' (fools), and Hindi 'nikamme' (idle) all independently select moral-deficiency vocabulary. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: the-worthless-ones, worthless | es: los-vacíos, vacíos | fr: [ריקים], le-sans-valeur-ceux, worthless | de: [ריקים], der-worthless-die, worthless Judg 9:4; 2Sam 6:20; 2Chr 13:7

3. vain things (vanities, futile pursuits) (2×) Vain things, futile pursuits – the abstract extension where emptiness characterizes not persons but their activities. 'Whoever chases empty things lacks sense' (Prov 12:11; 28:19). Spanish 'vanidades,' Hindi 'vyarth' (futile), Arabic 'abatil' (vanities), and Swahili 'ubatili' (futility) consistently render the abstract, moral-philosophical dimension. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: vain-things, worthless-pursuits | es: vanidades | fr: ריקים ,רקים | de: [ריקים], [רקים] Prov 12:11; Prov 28:19

רֵיקָם H7387 Adv (16×)

Emptily, empty-handed, with nothing; figuratively in vain, without cause or purpose.

An adverb built on the root r-y-q ('empty'), used to describe the condition of having nothing in hand or returning without result. Its most common usage is concrete and economic: Jacob protests that Laban would have sent him away 'empty-handed' (Gen 31:42), and the Torah commands that no one appear before God reqam, without an offering (Exod 23:15; 34:20; Deut 16:16). Ruth's mother-in-law Naomi laments returning 'empty' (Ruth 1:21). A secondary, more abstract sense emerges in the Psalms, where it shades into 'without cause' or 'in vain,' describing enemies who oppose the psalmist for no legitimate reason (Ps 7:4; 25:3).

1. empty, empty-handed (14×) In an empty state, empty-handed, without possessions or provisions. This concrete sense dominates the usage: Jacob would have been sent away 'empty' by Laban (Gen 31:42); Israel must not appear before the LORD empty-handed (Exod 23:15; 34:20; Deut 16:16); a freed servant must not be sent out empty (Deut 15:13); Naomi returns to Bethlehem 'empty' (Ruth 1:21; 3:17). Spanish 'vacío/vacía' and German 'leer' consistently reflect the physical sense of lacking goods or substance. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: and-empty, empty, empty-handed | es: vacía, vacías, vacío | fr: [ריקם], et-vider, vide | de: [וריקם], [ריקם], leer Gen 31:42; Exod 3:21; Exod 23:15; Exod 34:20; Deut 15:13

2. without cause, in vain (2×) Without cause, without purpose, in vain – an abstract extension of emptiness into the realm of motive or result. In Psalm 7:4 the psalmist denies having plundered 'those who were my adversaries without cause,' and Psalm 25:3 speaks of those who 'deal treacherously without reason.' French 'en vain' and Spanish 'sin causa' capture this figurative shift from physical emptiness to purposelessness or groundlessness. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: without-cause | es: sin-causa | fr: en-vain | de: ohne-Sache Ps 7:4; Ps 25:3

רִיר H7388 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

saliva, slimy juice; bodily fluid or viscous substance

A noun meaning saliva or slimy secretion. First Samuel 21:14 describes David letting his spittle run down when feigning madness before Achish. Job 6:6 uses it metaphorically—'the slime of purslane' or possibly 'white of egg'—to describe something tasteless. The term captures the viscous, unpalatable quality of certain substances.

(2×) Refers to saliva or slimy fluid, used literally in 1 Samuel 21:14 where David feigns insanity by drooling, and metaphorically in Job 6:6 ('the slime/juice of purslane' or 'white of egg') to evoke something bland and unappetizing. The Hebrew רִיר captures viscosity and unpleasantness. Spanish 'saliva/baba' and French/German 'saliva' reflect the literal sense, while the Job passage's imagery remains debated—is it egg-white, plant sap, or something else tasteless? The shared semantic core is a slimy, undesirable substance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-saliva, in-slime-of | es: en-baba-de, su-saliva | fr: dans-רירו, son-saliva | de: [ריר], sein-saliva 1Sam 21:14; Job 6:6

רֵישׁ H7389a N-ms (5×)

poverty, want, destitution — the condition of material lack and economic vulnerability

Found exclusively in Proverbs, this noun denotes the stark reality of material deprivation. It appears in wisdom sayings that contrast poverty with wealth (Prov 30:8, opposing 'osher') and with the security of the rich (Prov 10:15). The multilingual evidence is unanimous — Spanish 'pobreza,' French 'pauvreté,' English 'poverty' — confirming a single, stable semantic core. Proverbs treats it as a consequence of laziness (6:11; 24:34) or of chasing fantasies (28:19), making it both an economic and moral category in Hebrew wisdom thought.

(5×) Material poverty and economic destitution, the condition of lacking resources and being economically vulnerable. All five occurrences cluster in Proverbs, where it stands opposite wealth (Prov 30:8) and the protective 'strong city' of the rich (10:15). Multilingual glosses converge tightly — Spanish 'pobreza,' French 'pauvreté' — leaving no room for polysemy. Wisdom literature treats this poverty as the predictable fruit of idleness (6:11; 24:34) or empty pursuits (28:19). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7233 WITH 3 SENSES

en: is-their-poverty, poverty, your-poverty | es: Pobreza, pobreza, pobreza-de-ellos | fr: leur-pauvreté-eux, pauvreté, ton-pauvreté-toi | de: Haupt, [ראשך], [ריש] Prov 6:11; Prov 10:15; Prov 13:18; Prov 24:34; Prov 30:8

רִישׁ H7389b N-ms (2×)

poverty, want; state of lacking material resources, opposite of wealth

A noun denoting poverty or material deprivation. Proverbs uses it frequently, contrasting it with wealth (10:15) and riches (30:8). Proverbs 24:34 pairs it with 'lack' (מַחְסוֹר) in parallel, emphasizing destitution. The term appears with possessive suffixes ('his poverty,' 'your poverty'), personalizing the condition. It represents the opposite of prosperity in wisdom literature's moral economy.

(2×) Denotes the state of poverty or material want, appearing exclusively in Proverbs. The word occurs in multiple forms (רִישׁ, רֵאשׁ) with subtle orthographic variation. It stands in consistent opposition to 'wealth' (עֹשֶׁר, עָשִׁיר) and is paralleled with 'lack' (מַחְסוֹר). Proverbs 28:19 and 31:7 use possessive forms ('his poverty'), making the condition personal and immediate. Spanish 'pobreza' and the English/German 'poverty' uniformly capture the economic deprivation at the word's core—a cautionary theme in wisdom teaching. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7233 WITH 3 SENSES

en: his-poverty, poverty | es: pobreza, su-pobreza | fr: pauvreté, son-pauvreté-lui | de: [רישׁ], [רישו] Prov 28:19; Prov 31:7

רַךְ H7390 Conj-w / Adj-msc (16×)

Tender, delicate, soft: young or frail in body; gentle or mild in speech; fainthearted, timid in courage.

The Hebrew adjective rakh spans a spectrum from physical tenderness to emotional gentleness to psychological timidity — three dimensions of softness that Hebrew unites under a single root. In its most frequent use, it describes the tender vulnerability of youth and delicacy: Jacob's children are 'tender' and cannot be driven hard (Gen 33:13), Abraham selects a 'tender and good' calf for his angelic visitors (Gen 18:7), and Leah's eyes are described as rakkot — 'tender' or 'soft' in contrast to Rachel's beauty (Gen 29:17). Arabic rakhsan and Korean yeonhan confirm the physical-delicacy reading across language families. Proverbs deploys the word for the power of gentle speech: 'a soft answer turns away wrath' (Prov 15:1) and 'a soft tongue breaks bone' (Prov 25:15), where Spanish suave and Arabic layyinun shift toward communicative gentleness. The single military occurrence in Deuteronomy 20:8 — dismissing the 'fainthearted' soldier from battle — reveals how tenderness becomes a liability when courage is required.

1. tender, young, delicate (12×) Tender, young, or delicate in body or constitution — describing persons, animals, or plants that are soft, frail, or immature. Twelve occurrences cover Abraham's tender calf (Gen 18:7), Leah's gentle eyes (Gen 29:17), Jacob's fragile children (Gen 33:13), the young and inexperienced Solomon (1 Chr 22:5; 29:1), the pampered man and woman of Deuteronomy's curse (Deut 28:54, 56), David's self-description as 'weak though anointed king' (2 Sam 3:39), Ezekiel's tender twig (Ezek 17:22), and a child described as 'tender and only-beloved' (Prov 4:3). Arabic rakhsan, Korean yeonhan, and Spanish tierno all cluster around physical softness and youth. The Babylonian lady told to descend from her throne (Isa 47:1) extends the image — she is 'tender and delicate,' unaccustomed to hardship. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: and-tender, and-tender-, tender | es: La-tierna, tierna, tierno | fr: [ורך], [רכה], le-tender | de: [ורך], [רך], [רכה] Gen 18:7; Gen 29:17; Gen 33:13; Deut 28:54; Deut 28:56

2. soft, gentle (of speech or manner) (3×) Soft or gentle in speech, manner, or approach — describing the quality of words or persuasion rather than physical constitution. Three occurrences in wisdom literature celebrate the paradoxical strength of softness: 'a soft answer turns away wrath' (Prov 15:1), 'a soft tongue breaks bone' (Prov 25:15), and Leviathan's mock question about whether it will 'speak soft words' to its captor (Job 41:3). Spanish suave, Arabic layyinun, and Korean budeureon all shift from physical tenderness to communicative gentleness, confirming this as a distinct metaphorical extension. The Proverbs passages are especially memorable for their ironic reversals — what is soft defeats what is hard. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: gentle, soft, soft-words | es: suave, suavemente | fr: tendre | de: [רך], [רכה], [רכות] Job 41:3; Prov 15:1; Prov 25:15

3. fainthearted, timid (1×) Fainthearted, timid, or lacking courage — the emotional dimension of softness applied to a warrior's resolve. A single occurrence in Deuteronomy 20:8 instructs Israel's officers to dismiss any soldier who is 'fearful and fainthearted' (rakh ha-levav, literally 'soft of heart') before battle, lest his cowardice spread. Spanish blando, German schwach, and Arabic al-layyinu all render this with vocabulary of weakness rather than gentleness. The compound construction with levav ('heart') makes the metaphor transparent: a 'soft heart' in the context of warfare is not compassion but debilitating fear. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: and-faint | es: y-blando | fr: et-faint | de: und-schwach Deut 20:8

רֹךְ H7391 Conj-w (1×)

tenderness, delicacy — softness, refinement, gentle upbringing

This noun means tenderness or delicacy, describing the refined, soft condition of someone raised in comfort. In Deuteronomy 28:56, it characterizes 'the most tender and delicate woman among you'—someone so pampered and refined that she has never set foot on the ground. The term appears in the curses of the covenant, describing how even such refined people will be reduced to cannibalism during siege. The word emphasizes gentle upbringing and physical softness from a life of luxury.

(1×) Tenderness, delicacy, or softness from refined upbringing (Deuteronomy 28:56). The phrase 'from tenderness and delicacy' describes a woman so pampered she has never touched her foot to the ground. This physical softness from luxurious living serves to intensify the horror of the siege curses—even the most delicate will commit atrocities. The term captures refinement that prosperity produces but adversity destroys. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-tenderness | es: y-por-ternura | fr: et-de-tenderness | de: und-von-tenderness Deut 28:56

רָכַב H7392 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf.h-1cs (78×)

To ride, mount; as participle 'rider/charioteer'; in Hifil 'cause to ride, set upon a mount, or load cargo onto an animal.'

A verb of motion and mastery spanning donkeys, horses, chariots, and the clouds of heaven. The Qal participle rokev functions virtually as a noun — 'rider' or 'charioteer' — from the Song of the Sea's 'horse and its rider' (Exod 15:1) to God as the One who 'rides the heavens' (Deut 33:26). French 'cavalier' and Spanish 'jinete' render the military rider naturally. The Hifil causative appears in moments of enthronement and honor: Joseph set upon Pharaoh's second chariot (Gen 41:43), Solomon placed upon David's mule (1 Kgs 1:33). A rare Hifil extension means simply 'to load cargo onto an animal,' as when the ark was placed on a new cart (2 Sam 6:3).

1. Qal participle: rider, charioteer (37×) The Qal participle used substantivally as 'rider' or 'charioteer,' both singular and plural, including the theophanic title 'the One who rides the heavens.' French 'cavalier' and Spanish 'jinete/cabalgadores' capture the martial dimension. Exodus 15:1 pairs horse and rokev in triumph; Deuteronomy 33:26 elevates the image to cosmic scale — God rides the skies in majesty. Amos 2:15 warns that the rokev of horses will not deliver himself. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: and-his-rider, and-its-rider, on-them | es: cabalgadores-de, cabalgando, jinete-de | fr: cavalier-de, cavaliers, chevauchant | de: Reiter, Reiter-von, [ורכבו] Gen 49:17; Exod 15:1; Exod 15:21; Num 22:22; Deut 33:26

2. Qal: ride, mount (21×) The basic Qal finite verb meaning to mount and ride upon an animal, chariot, or (metaphorically) the clouds. Genesis 24:61 has Rebekah riding a camel; Leviticus 15:9 treats the saddle a person rides upon as ritually significant. Spanish 'cabalgar/cabalgó' and French 'chevaucher/chevaucha' preserve the physical act of sitting astride and traveling. Numbers 22:30 has Balaam's donkey pointedly asking 'Am I not the donkey you have ridden all your life?' CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: and-He-rode, and-I-will-ride, and-he-rode | es: Y-cabalgaba, Y-cabalgó, cabalga | fr: chevaucha, chevaucher, et-Il-chevaucha | de: Wagen, [נרכב], [תרכב] Gen 24:61; Lev 15:9; Num 22:30; 1Sam 25:42; 1Sam 30:17

3. Hifil: cause to ride, set upon (18×) The Hifil causative meaning to cause someone to ride or to seat a person upon a mount, typically in contexts of enthronement, honor, or deliberate transport. Korean renderings distinguish the causative clearly. Genesis 41:43 has Pharaoh causing Joseph to ride in the second chariot; 1 Kings 1:33 and 1:38 narrate Solomon's anointing procession on David's own mule. Deuteronomy 32:13 speaks of God making Israel 'ride on the heights of the earth' — a metaphor of sovereign blessing. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-will-cause-to-ride, You-made-ride, You-make-me-ride | es: Hiciste-cabalgar, Y-lo-hizo-montar, Y-lo-llevaron | fr: chevaucher, et-chevaucha-lui, et-chevaucher | de: [ארכיב], [והרכיבהו], [וירכיבהו] Gen 41:43; Exod 4:20; Deut 32:13; 1Kgs 1:33; 1Kgs 1:38

4. Hifil: load, place upon (cargo) (2×) A specialized Hifil usage meaning to load or place inanimate cargo upon an animal for transport, distinguished from the personal causative by its object. In 2 Samuel 6:3 and 1 Chronicles 13:7, the ark of God is 'mounted' — placed upon — a new cart. Korean '실다' (to load) and Swahili equivalents distinguish cargo-loading from person-mounting, a distinction the Hebrew makes only through context. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-mounted, and-they-mounted | es: Y-montaron | fr: et-ils-monta, et-monter-à-cheval | de: [וירכיבו], und-sie-mounted 2Sam 6:3; 1Chr 13:7

רֶכֶב H7393 N-ms (120×)

Chariot or chariotry (collective war-vehicle force); rarely, the upper millstone of a hand-mill.

The primary military term for wheeled war vehicles in the Hebrew Bible, covering everything from Pharaoh's chariot corps at the Red Sea (Exod 14:7) to the iron chariots of the Canaanites (Josh 17:16) and Solomon's chariot cities (1 Kgs 9:19). Arabic markaba and Korean byeongeo confirm the war-vehicle reading across language families. A fascinating secondary sense appears just three times: the upper millstone, the stone that 'rides' atop the lower – the woman at Thebez dropped one on Abimelech's head (Judg 9:53). The metaphor from r-k-b ('to mount, ride') links both senses.

1. chariot, chariotry (117×) A wheeled war vehicle or the collective chariot force of an army – Pharaoh's chariots (Exod 14:7), Sisera's nine hundred iron chariots (Judg 4:3), Solomon's chariot corps (1 Kgs 10:26). Often paired with cavalry (parashim) and horses (susim). Arabic markabat/markabat, Spanish carro/carros, and Korean byeongeo converge on the military-vehicle reading. The collective sense ('chariotry') is more common than reference to a single vehicle. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: chariot, chariots | es: carro, carro-de, carros | fr: Récab, char | de: Rekab, Wagen Gen 50:9; Exod 14:7; Deut 20:1; Josh 11:4; Judg 4:15

2. upper millstone (3×) The upper grinding stone of a hand-mill that 'rides' atop the lower stone – a vivid metaphorical extension of the root r-k-b ('to ride, mount'). Deuteronomy 24:6 forbids taking a millstone as pledge; Judges 9:53 narrates the woman who dropped an upper millstone on Abimelech; 2 Samuel 11:21 recalls the same event. Spanish piedra de molino and Korean maestol/wistol ('millstone/upper-stone') confirm this distinct concrete-object sense. UPPER MILLSTONE

en: a-millstone, and-upper-millstone, millstone | es: molino, piedra-de-molino, y-piedra-de-molino | fr: et-upper-millstone, meule, un-millstone | de: ein-millstone, millstone, und-upper-millstone Deut 24:6; Judg 9:53; 2Sam 11:21

רֵכָב H7394 N-proper-ms (13×)

Rechab; a personal name borne by Ish-bosheth's assassin, the Rechabite ancestor, and a post-exilic builder.

The proper name Rechab (רֵכָב), possibly meaning 'rider' or 'charioteer,' is borne by at least three individuals. Rechab son of Rimmon the Beerothite murdered Ish-bosheth and was executed by David (2 Sam 4:2–12). More prominently, Rechab was the ancestor — through Jehonadab son of Rechab — of the Rechabite community whose strict abstinence from wine and settled life Jeremiah held up as a model of faithfulness (Jer 35:6–19). A third Rechab, father of Malchijah, repaired a gate of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh 3:14). First Chronicles 2:55 links the Rechabites to Kenite origins.

Rechab (proper name) (13×) The personal name Rechab (רֵכָב), borne by several biblical figures: (a) Rechab son of Rimmon, who with his brother Baanah assassinated Ish-bosheth (2 Sam 4:2–12); (b) the eponymous ancestor of the Rechabites, whose descendant Jehonadab joined Jehu's purge (2 Kgs 10:15, 23) and whose community Jeremiah commended for covenantal fidelity (Jer 35:6–19); (c) Rechab father of Malchijah (Neh 3:14). Spanish Recab, French Récab, and German Rechab all transliterate consistently. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: Rechab, Rekab, Rekhav | es: Recab, Rejav, Rekav | fr: Rechab, Rekab, Récab | de: Rechab, Rekab, Wagen 2Sam 4:2; 2Sam 4:5; 2Sam 4:6; 2Sam 4:9; 2Kgs 10:15

רַכָּב H7395 Prep-l / N-msc / 3ms (3×)

charioteer, driver; horseman, mounted soldier

This noun designates military personnel who ride or drive—either chariot drivers or mounted cavalry. The term appears in both battle narratives and royal contexts, distinguishing between different types of military riders. Chronicles and Kings use it for the professional charioteer who drives the king's war chariot, while 2 Kings also applies it to a mounted horseman or cavalry scout.

(3×) The word refers to military specialists who control horses in combat, with context determining whether charioteers or cavalry. In 1 Kings 22:34 and 2 Chronicles 18:33, Ahab commands 'his charioteer' to turn the chariot around when wounded—clearly a driver. Second Kings 9:17 uses it for 'a horseman' sent out as a scout, distinguished from chariot-borne soldiers. Both uses identify professional military riders, essential to ancient Near Eastern warfare where horse-drawn chariots and cavalry provided mobility and striking power. HORSEMAN CAVALRYMAN

en: a-horseman, to-his-driver, to-the-charioteer | es: a-su-conductor, al-cochero, jinete | fr: [לרכב], un-cavalier, à-son-driver | de: [לרכב], ein-Reiter, zu-sein-driver 1Kgs 22:34; 2Kgs 9:17; 2Chr 18:33

רְכֻבָּה H7396 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

riding — the act of riding, riding equipment or saddle cloths

This noun refers to the act of riding or possibly riding equipment such as saddle cloths. In Ezekiel 27:20, Dedan trades with Tyre 'in saddle cloths for riding.' The exact reference is uncertain—either the activity of riding (abstract noun) or the equipment used for riding (concrete). The context of international trade suggests luxury riding equipment, which would be valuable trade goods. The term connects to the common verb for riding on animals.

(1×) The act of riding or saddle cloths/riding equipment (Ezekiel 27:20). Dedan supplies Tyre with items 'for riding,' either referring to the activity itself or to valuable saddle blankets and riding gear. The commercial context favors understanding this as trade goods —luxury riding equipment rather than the abstract concept. This reflects the importance of mounted travel and quality riding apparatus in ancient trade networks. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-riding | es: para-montar | fr: char | de: [לרכבה] Ezek 27:20

רֵכָבִי H7397a Art / N-proper-mp (4×)

the Rechabites (gentile, descendants of Rechab)

This gentile designation identifies the house of the Rechabites, a conservative group descended from Rechab who maintained strict nomadic lifestyle, abstaining from wine, agriculture, and permanent housing. Jeremiah 35 makes them exemplars of faithfulness to ancestral commands, contrasting their obedience with Judah's covenant-breaking. They represent a counter-cultural commitment within Israelite society.

(4×) Identifies the Rechabites (בֵּית הָרֵכָבִים or בְּנֵי בֵית-הָרֵכָבִים), a clan descended from Rechab son of Jonadab. All four occurrences appear in Jeremiah 35:2-3, 5, 18, where God commands Jeremiah to test them by offering wine—which they refuse, explaining their ancestral vow to abstain from wine, avoid building houses, and not plant vineyards, maintaining perpetual nomadic existence. Their faithfulness to Jonadab's command becomes an object lesson rebuking Judah's disobedience to God. The consistent use of the article marks them as a recognized group. Multilingual glosses transliterate: Spanish 'los-recabitas,' French 'Récabites,' German 'die-Rekabiter'—all treating it as a distinct social-religious movement within

Israel. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Rekavim | es: los-recabitas | fr: Récabites | de: die-Rekabiter Jer 35:2; Jer 35:3; Jer 35:5; Jer 35:18

רְכָה H7397b N-proper-ms (1×)

Recah — a place name in the territory of Judah

Recah is a place name mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:12 within the genealogical records of Judah. The exact location is unknown, and the site has not been identified with any confidence. The Septuagint transliterates it as Rechab, which has led to some textual confusion with the personal name Rechab. The name appears in a list of settlements or descendants associated with Judah's territory, but no narrative details about the place survive.

(1×) A place name in Judah's genealogical records (1 Chronicles 4:12). The location has not been identified, and no details about the settlement survive beyond this genealogical mention. The Septuagint's rendering as 'Rechab' shows the overlap between personal and place names in Hebrew genealogies. This may represent a town, clan, or family settlement within Judah's territory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rekhah | es: Reca | fr: [רכה] | de: [רכה] 1Chr 4:12

רְכוּב H7398 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

chariot — a riding vehicle, divine chariot (poetic)

This poetic term for chariot appears in Psalm 104:3, describing God 'who makes the clouds His chariot.' The Aramaic-influenced form suggests a vehicle for riding, here used metaphorically for God's transportation through the heavens. The image of divine cloud-riding appears elsewhere in ancient Near Eastern literature, particularly Canaanite texts about Baal. The psalmist appropriates this imagery for Yahweh, emphasizing His mastery over creation and His mobility through the sky on storm clouds.

(1×) A chariot or riding vehicle, used poetically of God's cloud-chariot (Psalm 104:3). The phrase 'who makes the clouds His chariot' depicts God riding through the heavens on storm clouds. This royal imagery of cloud-riding draws on ancient Near Eastern motifs while applying them to Yahweh. The Aramaic-influenced term emphasizes the vehicle aspect, picturing clouds as God's mobile throne-chariot. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: His-chariot | es: su-carro | fr: char | de: sein-Wagen Ps 104:3

רְכוּשׁ H7399 Prep-b (28×)

Property, possessions, or goods; movable wealth including livestock, belongings, and spoil taken in conquest.

A general term for accumulated material wealth and movable property, appearing frequently in Genesis and Chronicles. When Abram departed from Haran, he took all his rekush – his possessions (Gen 12:5), and when Lot's goods were seized in battle, the same word names the plunder carried off (Gen 14:11-16). The semantic range stretches from peaceful estate-holdings to wartime spoil. Arabic distinguishes amwal (general wealth) from ghanima (spoil/booty), while Spanish shifts between hacienda (estate) and bienes (goods), reflecting a subtle but real distinction between settled property and portable chattels that the Hebrew covers with a single word.

1. property, possessions, wealth (22×) The broad term for owned property, possessions, or accumulated wealth of any kind – livestock, land-holdings, and material assets belonging to a person or household. Abram's possessions leaving Haran (Gen 12:5), the too-great wealth preventing Abram and Lot from dwelling together (Gen 13:6), and the royal estates overseen by David's stewards (1 Chr 27:31) all employ this general sense. Spanish hacienda and German Besitz/Habe reflect its breadth. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY

en: and-for-their-property, and-his-possessions, and-the-possessions | es: con-posesión, hacienda-suya, la-hacienda | fr: [הרכוש], [רכוש], [רכושו] | de: Besitz, Habe, [רכושו] Gen 12:5; Gen 13:6; Gen 14:11; Gen 14:12; Gen 14:16

2. goods, spoil, movable belongings (6×) Movable goods, belongings, or spoil acquired through migration, journey, or military conquest, distinguished from settled wealth by its portable and often transactional nature. The spoil of the Moabite camp (2 Chr 20:25), the goods provided to returning exiles by their neighbors (Ezra 1:4, 6), and the riches distributed by the northern king (Dan 11:24) all carry this nuance. Arabic ghanima (booty) and amtia (chattels) parse this portable-goods sense distinctly. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY

en: and-goods, and-possessions, and-with-goods | es: con-los-bienes, con-riquezas, y-con-bienes | fr: [ברכוש], [וברכוש], [ורכוש] | de: Besitz, [ברכוש], [וברכוש] 2Chr 20:25; Ezra 1:4; Ezra 1:6; Dan 11:13; Dan 11:24

רָכִיל H7400 N-ms (6×)

Slander, tale-bearing; also the person who practices it – a slanderer, gossip, informer

A word encompassing both the activity of malicious gossip and the person who engages in it. Leviticus 19:16 prohibits 'going about as a tale-bearer' among one's people, using rakil in its agent sense. Proverbs 11:13 and 20:19 warn that a gossip reveals secrets. In Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the focus shifts to the abstract practice: Jer 6:28 calls rebellious Israelites 'goers of slander,' and Ezek 22:9 denounces 'men of slander' within Jerusalem. Spanish distinguishes the two senses neatly – 'calumnia' for the abstract act and 'calumniador/chismoso' for the agent – while Hindi 'chugli' (gossip, backbiting) captures the social poison at the heart of this word.

1. slander, tale-bearing (abstract act) (3×) The abstract activity or practice of spreading malicious gossip and slander. In Jer 6:28, the people are characterized as 'goers of slander,' and Ezek 22:9 condemns 'men of slander' – informers who shed blood. Spanish 'calumnia' (slander, defamation) renders the abstract quality, while the Hebrew construction with 'men of' or 'goers of' keeps the focus on the practice rather than the individual practitioner. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: as-a-slanderer, slander | es: calumnia | fr: [רכיל], dispute | de: [רכיל] Jer 6:28; Jer 9:4; Ezek 22:9

2. slanderer, tale-bearer (agent) (3×) A slanderer or tale-bearer – the human agent who spreads gossip. The Holiness Code (Lev 19:16) forbids going about 'as a rakil' among one's people, and Proverbs twice warns against the gossip who cannot keep secrets (11:13, 20:19). Spanish 'calumniador' and 'como-chismoso' (like a gossiper) highlight the personal moral failure, while the proverbial usage makes this a paradigmatic character flaw to avoid. LIAR FALSEHOOD SPEAKER

en: as-a-slanderer, slanderer | es: calumniador, como-calumniador, como-chismoso | fr: slanderer, רכיל | de: [רכיל], slanderer Lev 19:16; Prov 11:13; Prov 20:19

רָכַךְ H7401 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (8×)

To be tender, soft, or weak (of heart or words); in the Hifil, to make faint or soften someone's resolve.

A verb that maps a single physical quality — softness — onto a rich landscape of emotional and moral states. Words can be 'softer than oil' yet conceal swords (Ps 55:21); a wound can go unmollified, not 'softened' with ointment (Isa 1:6, Pual). Most often, though, the softness is of the heart: fear that makes one's courage melt away before battle (Deut 20:3), or penitent tenderness before God's word, as when Josiah's heart 'was tender' and he humbled himself (2 Kgs 22:19; 2 Chr 34:27). Spanish distinguishes beautifully — 'blandas' for soft words, 'desfallezca' for fainting courage — while the single Hebrew root holds both together.

1. be soft, tender, weak (7×) To be or become soft, tender, or weak — spanning physical softness (treacherous words smoother than oil, Ps 55:21; an untreated wound, Isa 1:6 in Pual) and emotional/psychological states. The heart 'becomes soft' either in timidity before enemies (Deut 20:3; Isa 7:4; Jer 51:46, where it parallels 'fear') or in penitent tenderness before God (2 Kgs 22:19 = 2 Chr 34:27, paralleling 'humble oneself'). Spanish 'blandas' (soft) and 'desfallezca' (become faint) capture the physical-to-emotional spectrum, while French and German leave the forms untranslated in brackets, highlighting the difficulty of a single-word equivalent. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: are-softer, be-faint, becomes-faint | es: blandas, desfallezca, suavizadas | fr: [ירך], [רך], [רככה] | de: [ירך], [רך], [רככה] Deut 20:3; 2Kgs 22:19; 2Chr 34:27; Ps 55:21; Isa 1:6

2. make faint, soften (causative) (1×) The causative Hifil: to make soft, to cause faintness or weakening of resolve. Attested only in Job 23:16, where Job confesses 'God has made my heart faint' (herakh libbi). English 'has made faint,' Spanish 'ha ablandado' (has softened), and the passage's context — Job overwhelmed by divine power — all point to an external agent undermining human courage, the causative counterpart to the Qal's intransitive softening. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: has-made-faint | es: ha-ablandado | fr: הרך | de: [הרך] Job 23:16

רָכַל H7402 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 2fs (17×)

Trader, merchant; a professional dealer in goods, often used of Tyre's international commerce.

A substantival participle from the root rakal ('to go about'), depicting the itinerant trader who moves from place to place with wares. Ezekiel 27 is its prime habitat, cataloguing Tyre's rokelim – merchants from Sheba, Haran, Asshur, and beyond – in a sweeping portrait of ancient Near Eastern commerce. Nehemiah uses the same word for the merchants who camped outside Jerusalem's walls on the Sabbath (Neh 13:20). Spanish 'comerciante' and 'mercaderes' capture the professional, commercial character the Hebrew conveys.

trader, merchant (17×) A professional trader or merchant, derived from the Qal participle of rakal ('to go about trading'). Concentrated in Ezekiel 27, where Tyre is addressed as a city of traders and her commercial partners are enumerated at length (Ezek 27:13, 15, 17, 22-24). Also appears in Nehemiah for merchants at Jerusalem's gates (Neh 3:31-32; 13:20), in 1 Kings 10:15 for Solomon's revenue from traders, and poetically in Song 3:6 for columns of spice-laden merchants. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: and-the-merchants, merchant, merchants | es: Traficantes-de, comerciante-de, los-mercaderes | fr: [הרכלים], [והרכלים], [רכלי] | de: Haendler, Haendler-von, [הרכלים] 1Kgs 10:15; Neh 3:31; Neh 3:32; Neh 13:20; Song 3:6

רָכָל H7403 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Racal — a place in southern Judah (possibly textual error for Carmel)

Racal appears in 1 Samuel 30:29 as a town in southern Judah where David sent spoils after defeating the Amalekites. However, most scholars believe this is a textual error for Carmel, since the Septuagint reads 'Carmel' and Carmel is well-known as a town in this region. The similarity in Hebrew script between Racal and Carmel makes scribal confusion plausible. If Racal is original, no other references to this town exist. The context involves David distributing plunder to allies in southern Judah.

(1×) A place name in southern Judah mentioned in David's distribution of spoils (1 Samuel 30:29). Most scholars consider this a scribal error for Carmel, supported by the Septuagint reading 'Carmel' and the well-attested presence of Carmel in this region. If original, Racal would be an otherwise unknown town in Judah's southern territory. The name appears only in this context of David rewarding his allies. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Racal | es: en-Racal | fr: dans-Racal | de: in-Racal 1Sam 30:29

רְכֻלָּה H7404 N-fsc / 2fs (4×)

trade, traffic, merchandise

This noun denotes commercial activity—trading, merchandising—and the goods involved in trade. Appearing exclusively in Ezekiel's oracles against Tyre, it captures the maritime city's extensive commercial networks. The term derives from the root for traveling merchant or trader, emphasizing the movement inherent in ancient commerce.

(4×) Designates trade activity or merchandise. In Ezekiel 28:5, 16, 18, 'your trade' (רְכֻלָּתֵךְ) describes Tyre's commercial activity that led to wealth and pride. Ezekiel 26:12 speaks of plundering 'your merchandise' (רְכֻלָּתֵךְ), the goods Tyre trafficked. All four occurrences appear in Ezekiel's extended oracles against Tyre (chapters 26-28), emphasizing the city's identity as a trading empire. The root רכל means 'go about as merchant,' and this noun captures both the activity (trading) and the object (merchandise). Multilingual glosses show this duality: Spanish 'comercio/mercancías,' French 'marchandise,' German using Hebrew forms—reflecting the term's commercial semantic field in prophetic judgment against mercantile pride. MERCHANDISE WARES

en: by-your-trade, your-merchandise, your-trade | es: en-tu-comercio, tu-comercio, tus-mercancías | fr: marchandise | de: [ברכלתך], [רכלתך] Ezek 26:12; Ezek 28:5; Ezek 28:16; Ezek 28:18

רָכַס H7405 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (2×)

bind, tie; to fasten or secure something with cords or fastenings

A verb meaning to bind or tie together. Exodus 28:28 and 39:21 describe binding the priestly breastplate to the ephod by means of rings and blue cord. The Assyrian cognate rakāsu has the same meaning. Though rare in Biblical Hebrew, it appears in ritual contexts requiring precise attachment of sacred garments.

(2×) Means to bind or fasten securely, appearing exclusively in Priestly instructions for the high priest's vestments (Exod 28:28; 39:21). The action involves threading a blue cord through rings to attach the breastplate (חֹשֶׁן) to the ephod, preventing the garments from separating during service. The Assyrian cognate rakâsu ('to bind') and the Arabic ´ (bind with a rope) support this meaning, though post-biblical Hebrew expanded to 'lay foundation.' The context emphasizes ritualized, careful fastening. BINDING BY VOW

en: and-they-shall-bind, and-they-tied | es: Y-ataron, Y-atarán | fr: et-ils—lier, et-ils-tied | de: und-sie-soll-binden, und-sie-tied Exod 28:28; Exod 39:21

רֶכֶס H7406 Conj-w (1×)

rough places — rugged terrain, mountain ridges, or uneven ground

This term refers to rough, uneven, or rugged terrain, appearing in Isaiah 40:4 in the promise that 'the rough places shall become level ground.' The exact nuance is debated—proposals include rough ground, mountain ridges, or bound-up/impassable terrain. The context contrasts rough places with valleys, suggesting elevated, broken terrain. The image is of road preparation where obstacles are removed and uneven ground is smoothed. This serves as a metaphor for removing obstacles to God's coming.

(1×) Rough places, rugged terrain, or mountain ridges that impede travel (Isaiah 40:4). Paired with 'the crooked' and contrasted with 'valley,' this term describes uneven, broken ground. The prophetic promise envisions smoothing rough terrain to prepare a highway—literally for returning exiles, metaphorically for God's coming. Proposed etymologies include 'binding/knots' (suggesting impassable areas) or 'mountain chains' (suggesting ridges). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-rough-places | es: y-lo-escabroso | fr: [והרכסים] | de: [והרכסים] Isa 40:4

רֹכֶס H7407 Prep-m / N-mpc (1×)

conspiracies — plots, schemes, or bands of conspirators

This noun refers to conspiracies, plots, or possibly bands of conspirators, though its exact meaning remains uncertain. In Psalm 31:20, God hides the faithful 'from the conspiracies of men' in parallel with 'the strife of tongues.' Proposed meanings include snares, leagues, conspiracies, or plotting bands. The context suggests organized opposition or scheming against the righteous. The parallel with 'strife of tongues' points toward verbal plotting or slander. This is human scheming from which God provides refuge.

(1×) Conspiracies, plots, or schemes of hostile men (Psalm 31:20). God hides the faithful 'from the conspiracies of men' in parallel with verbal attacks ('strife of tongues'). The term suggests organized opposition—either plots, alliances, or bands of conspirators. The exact nuance is debated, but the context clearly indicates hostile human schemes from which God provides shelter. This is social opposition rather than physical attack. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE to acquire, gather property — to accumulate possessions, especially livestock and moveable wealth

en: from-conspiracies-of | es: de-conspiraciones-de | fr: de-pièges | de: von-conspiracies-von Ps 31:20

רָכַשׁ H7408 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (5×)

This verb appears exclusively in the patriarchal narratives of Genesis, always in the Priestly source, describing the gathering of moveable property — livestock, servants, and goods. Abraham acquires possessions in Haran (Gen 12:5), Jacob accumulates flocks and property in Paddan-Aram (31:18), and the family takes everything they have acquired when migrating to Egypt (46:6). Spanish 'adquirieron,' French 'acquit,' and German 'erworben hatten' all point to deliberate, purposeful acquisition rather than passive receiving. The verb is always paired with rekush (property/possessions) as its cognate accusative.

(5×) To acquire or accumulate moveable property — livestock, servants, and goods — through deliberate economic effort over time. Confined to patriarchal narratives in Genesis (12:5; 31:18; 36:6; 46:6), always describing the gathering of wealth that can be transported. The consistent pairing with qinyan or rekush as cognate accusative underscores the purposeful, cumulative nature of the acquisition. Spanish 'adquirieron' and French 'acquit' reinforce the sense of active, completed gathering. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: acquired, he-acquired, they-acquired | es: adquirieron, adquirió, habían-adquirido | fr: acquit, il-acquit, ils-acquit | de: er-erworben-hatte, sie-erworben-hatten Gen 12:5; Gen 31:18; Gen 36:6; Gen 46:6

רֶכֶשׁ H7409 Prep-l (4×)

steeds, swift horses (royal cavalry mounts)

This collective noun denotes high-quality horses or steeds, particularly swift cavalry mounts or royal horses. Distinguished from ordinary horses, these are animals of prestige—Solomon's chariot horses, Persian royal couriers' mounts, and horses pulling chariots in prophetic imagery. The term emphasizes speed and nobility.

(4×) Designates elite horses or steeds. In 1 Kings 4:28 (5:8 Heb.), these are the horses (רֶכֶשׁ וְסוּסִים, 'steeds and horses'—hendiadys or distinction?) for Solomon's chariots. Esther 8:10, 14 specifies royal mounts (הָרֶכֶשׁ, בְּנֵי הָרַמָּכִים, 'the steeds, sons of the stud-mares'—possibly indicating superior breeding) used by couriers carrying the decree reversing Haman's plot. Micah 1:13 commands Lachish to 'harness the steeds to the chariot' (רִתְמִי הָמֶּרְכָּבָה לָרֶכֶשׁ). Multilingual glosses emphasize speed and quality: Spanish 'corceles' (chargers), French 'cavalier,' German 'swift-steeds'—all marking these as premium horses, not ordinary draft animals. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: and-for-the-swift-steeds, the-steeds, to-the-steed | es: a-corcel, los-corceles, y-para-los-corceles | fr: [הרכש], cavalier, et-pour-le-swift-steeds | de: [הרכש], [לרכש], und-fuer-der-swift-steeds 1Kgs 4:28; Esth 8:10; Esth 8:14; Mic 1:13

רָם H7410 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Ram – a proper name borne by an ancestor of David and by the family of Elihu

Ram is a Hebrew proper name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts. First and most prominently, Ram is the son of Hezron and father of Amminadab in the lineage running from Judah to David (Ruth 4:19; 1 Chr 2:9-10), making him an ancestor of the Messiah. Second, a son of Jerahmeel bore the same name (1 Chr 2:25, 27). The name also identifies Elihu's clan in Job 32:2, though some scholars regard this as a separate designation. Cross-lingual evidence is uniform: Spanish, French, and German all render it simply as Ram, confirming its status as an untranslatable proper noun.

Ram (7×) The proper name Ram, identifying (a) an ancestor of David in the line of Judah through Hezron (Ruth 4:19; 1 Chr 2:9-10), (b) a son of Jerahmeel (1 Chr 2:25, 27), and (c) the family of Elihu in Job 32:2. The Septuagint renders it variously as Arran and Ram. Every modern target language preserves the name unchanged – Spanish Ram, French Ram, German Ram – reflecting its irreducible proper-noun character with no translatable semantic content. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ram, and-Ram | es: Ram, Y-Ram, y-Ram | fr: Ram, et-Ram | de: [ורם], [רם] Ruth 4:19; 1Chr 2:9; 1Chr 2:10; 1Chr 2:25

רָמָה H7411a Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc (4×)

to cast, shoot, hurl (arrows or projectiles)

This verb denotes casting, throwing, or shooting—especially with bow and arrow. Famous from the Song of the Sea where God 'hurled' Pharaoh's army into the sea, it also describes bowmen and archers. The root connects broadly across Semitic languages for throwing or shooting, emphasizing forceful projection.

(4×) Expresses hurling or shooting projectiles. In Exodus 15:1, 21, the victory song proclaims 'He has thrown (horse and rider) into the sea' (רָמָה בַיָּם)—God's hurling of Egypt's forces. Psalm 78:9 describes 'Ephraimites, shooters of the bow' (רוֹמֵי-קֶשֶׁת), armed warriors who nonetheless retreated. Jeremiah 4:29 pictures 'every city fleeing from the bowmen' (מִקּוֹל פָּרָשׁ וְרֹמֵה קֶשֶׁת). The Qal participle רֹמֵה/רֹמֵי marks habitual archers or bowmen. Multilingual glosses capture the martial sense: Spanish 'arrojó' (hurled), 'tiradores' (shooters), French 'tromper' (confused with deception root?), German 'shooters'—consistently emphasizing forceful projection of missiles. THROWING AND CASTING

en: He-has-thrown, and-shooter-of, shooters-of | es: arrojó, tiradores-de-, y-de-tirador-de | fr: Il-a-thrown, [ורמה], tromper | de: Er-hat-thrown, [ורמה], shooters-von Exod 15:1; Exod 15:21; Ps 78:9; Jer 4:29

רָמָה H7411b V-Piel-Perf-3ms (9×)

Piel: to deceive, beguile, or deal treacherously with someone; also one Qal occurrence meaning 'raised, high'

The Piel of this root denotes interpersonal deception and betrayal – the bitter surprise of discovering you have been tricked. Laban's deception of Jacob on his wedding night (Gen 29:25) sets the pattern: 'Why have you beguiled me?' The same verb appears when Saul's wife Michal helps David escape (1 Sam 19:17), when the witch of Endor realizes she has been misled (1 Sam 28:12), and when the Gibeonites' ruse is exposed (Josh 9:22). Hindi 'dhokha diya' and Arabic 'khadaa' both center on betrayal of trust. A single Qal participial form in Num 15:30, meaning 'with a raised hand' (i.e., defiantly), likely belongs to the homonymous root meaning 'be high.'

1. deceive, beguile, deal treacherously (8×) Piel: to deceive, beguile, mislead, or deal treacherously with someone. Always interpersonal and always involving a breach of trust or expectation. Key passages include Laban's wedding-night deception of Jacob (Gen 29:25), the Gibeonites' treaty ruse (Josh 9:22), Michal's concealment of David (1 Sam 19:17), and the betrayal lamented in Lam 1:19. Multilingual evidence – Spanish 'engañaste,' French 'tromper' – uniformly points to deliberate deception. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: deceived-me, did-you-deceive, did-you-deceive-me | es: engañaste-me, me-engañaron, me-engañaste | fr: [לרמותני], [רמוני], ai-tu-trompa-moi | de: Wurm, [לרמותני], [רמוני] Gen 29:25; Josh 9:22; 1Sam 19:17; 1Sam 28:12; 2Sam 19:26

2. be high, raised (1×) Qal participle feminine: to be high or raised, describing a 'high hand' as a posture of defiance. In Num 15:30 the phrase 'with a raised hand' signifies deliberate, brazen sinning against YHWH. Spanish 'alzada' (raised) and German 'erhob' confirm the spatial-physical sense. This likely belongs to a separate homonymous root (ramah I, 'be high') rather than the deception root. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: raised | es: alzada | fr: raised | de: erhob Num 15:30

רְמָא H7412 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (12×)

To cast or throw (Aramaic); of persons hurled into punishment; also to place/set, or figuratively to impose tribute

An Aramaic verb dominating the dramatic narratives of Daniel, where it describes the terrifying act of casting people into the fiery furnace or the lions' den. The Pe'al, Pe'il, and Hithpe'el stems together account for ten of its twelve occurrences, all involving the physical hurling of persons as punishment (Dan 3:6, 11, 15, 20, 21, 24; 6:8, 13, 17, 25). Spanish 'arrojamos/echaron' (we hurled/they threw) and French 'jeter' (to throw) consistently render this violent casting. Two extended senses appear: the solemn 'placing' of thrones in Daniel 7:9, and the figurative 'imposing' of tribute in Ezra 7:24.

1. cast, throw (persons) (10×) To cast or throw persons into a place of punishment – the dominant sense in Daniel's court narratives. Used repeatedly for hurling men into Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace (Dan 3:6, 11, 15, 20, 21, 24) and into Darius's lions' den (Dan 6:8, 13, 17, 25). The Hithpe'el passive ('shall be cast') appears in the royal decrees threatening punishment, while the Pe'al active describes the actual throwing. Spanish 'arrojamos' (we hurled) and 'para-arrojar' (in order to throw) convey the violent, forceful action. THROWING AND CASTING

en: and-threw, and-thrown, threw | es: arrojamos, echaron, para-arrojar | fr: et-jeter, jeter | de: und-werfen, werfen Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11; Dan 3:15; Dan 3:20; Dan 3:21

2. place, set (1×) To place or set in position, a quieter Pe'il (passive) sense distinct from violent throwing. Daniel 7:9 uses it for thrones being 'placed' or 'set up' in the heavenly court scene – a deliberate, solemn positioning rather than forceful casting. Spanish 'fueron-puestos' (were placed) captures this dignified nuance, contrasting sharply with the punitive throwing of the primary sense. THROWING AND CASTING

en: were-placed | es: fueron-puestos | fr: jeter | de: werfen Dan 7:9

3. impose (figurative) (1×) To impose or lay upon figuratively, specifically the burden of tribute or taxation. Ezra 7:24 uses the infinitive to describe the prohibition against 'imposing' tax on temple servants. Spanish 'imponer' (to impose) and English 'to impose' both reflect the metaphorical extension: what is 'thrown upon' someone becomes an obligation or financial burden rather than a physical projectile. THROWING AND CASTING

en: to-impose | es: imponer | fr: [לִמְרְמָא] | de: [לִמְרְמָא] Ezra 7:24

רָמָה H7413 N-fpc / 2fs (5×)

elevated platform, high place — a raised shrine or mound used for illicit worship

A technical cultic term denoting an elevated platform or raised mound built for worship, nearly synonymous with bamah but carrying distinctly negative connotations. Four of its five occurrences appear in Ezekiel 16:24-39, where the prophet condemns Jerusalem's construction of such shrines at every crossroad for idolatrous prostitution. The lone occurrence in 1 Samuel 22:6 may refer to a height or elevated place in a more general sense. Spanish 'lugar alto' and French renderings preserve the spatial meaning of elevation, while the domain assignment to proper names likely reflects the 1 Samuel passage where Ramah appears as a location.

(5×) A raised cultic platform or elevated shrine constructed for illicit worship, functioning as a technical term in prophetic condemnation. Ezekiel 16:24-39 deploys this word four times in rapid succession, describing Jerusalem personified as building raised shrines (paired with gab, 'mound') at every street corner for idolatrous practices. Spanish 'lugar alto' captures the physical elevation. The term is closely related to bamah but appears specifically in contexts of cultic condemnation, making it a loaded word in prophetic rhetoric. RAMAH PLACE NAME

en: and-high-place-your, high-place, high-place-your | es: en-Ramá, lugar-alto, lugar-alto-de-ti | fr: [וּרְמָתֵךְ], [רָמָה], [רָמָתַיִךְ] | de: [וּרְמָתֵךְ], [רָמָה], [רָמָתַיִךְ] 1Sam 22:6; Ezek 16:24; Ezek 16:25; Ezek 16:31; Ezek 16:39

רָמָה H7414 Conj-w (36×)

Ramah — 'the Height,' a town in Benjamin associated with Samuel's ministry and Rachel's weeping

Ramah (ha-Ramah, 'the Height') is a fortified town in the territory of Benjamin, identified with modern er-Ram about five miles north of Jerusalem. It appears 36 times across narrative, prophetic, and poetic texts. The town is best known as the home base of Samuel, where he judged Israel, anointed Saul, and later hosted David as a fugitive (1 Sam 7:17; 19:18-23). During the divided monarchy, Baasha of Israel fortified Ramah to blockade Judah, prompting Asa to dismantle it for building Geba and Mizpah (1 Kgs 15:17-22). Jeremiah's haunting oracle — 'a voice is heard in Ramah, Rachel weeping for her children' (Jer 31:15) — gave the place messianic resonance, quoted in Matthew 2:18 at the slaughter of the innocents.

Ramah (place name) (36×) The proper noun Ramah, denoting a Benjaminite town on the border with Ephraim, situated on the central ridge road north of Jerusalem. Functions as Samuel's prophetic headquarters (1 Sam 1:19; 2:11; 7:17; 25:1), a strategic military chokepoint in the Asa-Baasha conflict (1 Kgs 15:17-22 = 2 Chr 16:1-6), and a site of prophetic lament (Jer 31:15; echoed in Matt 2:18). The alternate form ha-Ramathaim ('the two Heights,' 1 Sam 1:1) may point to twin ridges. The Septuagint renders it Rama or Armathaim. Spanish 'Rama,' French 'Rama,' German 'Rama' all transliterate directly. RAMAH PLACE NAME

en: at-Ramah, in-Ramah, the-Ramah | es: Ramah, en-Rama, en-Ramah | fr: Rama, Ramah, [בְּרָמָה] | de: [בְּרָמָה], [הָרָמָה], bei-Rama Josh 18:25; Josh 19:8; Josh 19:29; Josh 19:36; Judg 4:5

רִמָּה H7415 Conj-w / N-fs (7×)

rimmah – a worm or maggot, sign and agent of decay and human mortality

A feminine noun denoting worms or maggots – the crawling organisms that feed on decaying flesh and thereby symbolize corruption and mortality. The word appears almost exclusively in contexts of death, judgment, and human insignificance. In Exodus 16:24, it is notably absent: the manna preserved overnight by God's command did not breed worms, unlike the disobediently hoarded portion. Job returns to rimmah repeatedly as a meditation on mortality: 'My flesh is clothed with worms' (Job 7:5), 'I say to the worm, you are my mother' (Job 17:14), and the dead 'lie down alike in the dust, and worms cover them' (Job 21:26). Isaiah pairs it with tole'ah ('worm') as the ignominious bed of the fallen king of Babylon (Isa 14:11). Spanish gusano, French ver, and German Wurm all converge on a single sense.

worm, maggot (7×) A collective or singular noun for worms or maggots that feed on decaying organic matter, serving throughout the Hebrew Bible as a potent symbol of decomposition, mortality, and human frailty. Job 7:5 describes flesh 'clothed with worms,' and Job 17:14 addresses the worm as kin, while Isaiah 14:11 pairs rimmah with tole'ah as the degrading fate of proud tyrants. In Job 25:6 it extends hyperbolically to human insignificance before God. Spanish gusano and French ver consistently render this single sense without differentiation, confirming its monosemous character across all seven occurrences. WORM MAGGOT

en: a-maggot, and-worm, maggot | es: al-gusano, el-gusano;, gusano | fr: [רִמָּה], et-ver, ver | de: Wurm, [רִמָּה], und-Scharlach Exod 16:24; Job 7:5; Job 17:14; Job 21:26; Job 24:20

רִמּוֹן H7416 N-ms (32×)

Pomegranate; the fruit used in offerings and temple decoration, or the tree itself as an agricultural crop.

One of the seven species that mark the goodness of the Promised Land (Deut 8:8), the pomegranate appears throughout Scripture as both fruit and tree. Its seeds were carried back by the spies from Canaan (Num 13:23), its juice is the sweet wine of Song of Solomon 8:2, and its shape inspired the ornamental bells alternating on the high priest's robe (Exod 28:33-34) and the decorative capitals of Solomon's temple pillars (1 Kgs 7:18-20). Several languages helpfully distinguish tree from fruit — Spanish 'granado' (tree) vs.

'granada' (fruit), Korean '석류나무' vs. '석류' — a distinction the Hebrew itself does not mark morphologically.

1. pomegranate (fruit/ornament) (28×) The pomegranate fruit, whether eaten, pressed for juice (Song 8:2), or serving as the model for decorative ornaments on priestly garments (Exod 28:33-34; 39:24-26) and temple pillars (1 Kgs 7:18-20; Jer 52:22-23). This sense covers 28 occurrences. Translations uniformly render it 'granadas' (Spa), 'grenades' (Fra), 'Granatäpfel' (Deu), all pointing to the fruit itself or its ornamental representation. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-pomegranate, and-pomegranates, pomegranates | es: granadas, las-granadas, ni-granada | fr: [הרמונים], [הרמנים], [ורמונים] | de: [הרמונים], [הרמנים], [ורמונים] Exod 28:33; Exod 28:34; Exod 39:24; Exod 39:25

2. pomegranate tree (4×) The pomegranate tree as a living plant or agricultural crop, distinguished from its fruit in contexts describing orchards, gardens, or crop failure. Saul sits under a pomegranate tree at Migron (1 Sam 14:2), the beloved's garden is a 'paradise of pomegranates' (Song 4:13), and Joel laments its withering (1:12). The tree sense surfaces clearly in Spanish 'granado' (vs. 'granada'), Korean '석류나무' (vs. '석류'), and Hindi 'अनार-के-पेड़,' confirming the botanical distinction. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: and-the-pomegranate, pomegranate, pomegranates | es: el-granado, granado, granados | fr: de-grenades,, et-grenade, grenade | de: Granataefel, Granatapfel, [והרמון] 1Sam 14:2; Song 4:13; Joel 1:12; Hag 2:19

רִמּוֹן H7417a N-proper-ms (3×)

Rimmon, Aramean storm deity worshiped in Damascus

Rimmon was an Aramean deity, likely a storm and weather god related to Assyrian Rammanu (also associated with thunder and rain). The name appears exclusively in reference to 'the house of Rimmon,' the temple in Damascus where the Syrian king worshiped and where his commander Naaman felt obligated to accompany him. Second Kings 5:18 records Naaman's troubled request for pardon when he must bow in Rimmon's temple while supporting the king—a scene revealing the religious tensions facing converts.

(3×) This divine name designates the Aramean storm deity whose temple stood in Damascus. All three occurrences in 2 Kings 5:18 appear in Naaman's petition to Elisha: when the Syrian king leans on Naaman's arm in 'the house of Rimmon' and bows down, must Naaman bow too? The repetition emphasizes the convert's dilemma—political duty requiring gestures in a pagan temple. Rimmon was likely equated with Hadad, the Canaanite storm god, forming compound names like Hadad-Rimmon. The name may derive from roots meaning 'to roar' or 'to thunder.' RIMMON PLACE NAME

en: Rimmon | es: Rimón | fr: Rimmon | de: Rimmon 2Kgs 5:18

רִמּוֹן H7417b N-proper-ms (3×)

Rimmon, personal name of a Benjamite from Beeroth

This Rimmon (distinct from the deity and place names) was a man from Beeroth in Benjamin, father of Rechab and Baanah. His sons were military captains under Ish-bosheth who assassinated Saul's son, bringing his head to David in hopes of reward. David instead executed them for killing a righteous man in his house, then displayed their bodies publicly. The name Rimmon was evidently used for both deities and people in ancient Israel.

(3×) The name identifies a Benjamite whose sons committed regicide. Second Samuel 4:2, 5, and 9 all mention 'the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite'—Rechab and Baanah, who served as raiders under Ish-bosheth but treacherously murdered him during his midday rest. When they brought the severed head to David expecting praise, he pronounced them guilty of shedding innocent blood and had them executed. The patronymic 'sons of Rimmon' appears in each reference, anchoring their identity to their father and city. RIMMON PLACE NAME

en: Rimmon | es: Rimmon | fr: Rimmon | de: Rimmon 2Sam 4:2; 2Sam 4:5; 2Sam 4:9

רִמּוֹן H7417c Prep-l / N-proper-fs (10×)

Rimmon — a place name for towns in Simeon, Zebulun, and Benjamin, often associated with rocky or elevated terrain

Rimmon (meaning 'pomegranate') identifies several towns across Israel's tribal territories. In the south, it appears as a city in the allotment of Simeon (Josh 15:32; 19:7), sometimes paired with En-rimmon. In the north, a Rimmon in Zebulun served as a Levitical city (Josh 19:13; 1 Chr 6:62). Perhaps most dramatically, the Rock of Rimmon in Benjamin provided refuge for six hundred surviving Benjaminite warriors after the devastating civil war recounted in Judges 20-21. Zechariah 14:10 also references the southern Rimmon as a geographic landmark.

Rimmon (place name) (10×) The place name Rimmon, designating multiple Israelite towns: a city in Simeon/southern Judah often paired with Ain (Josh 15:32; 19:7; 1 Chr 4:32; Zech 14:10), a Levitical city in Zebulun near Nazareth (Josh 19:13; 1 Chr 6:62), and the 'Rock of Rimmon' in Benjamin where survivors of the tribe took refuge (Judg 20:45, 47; 21:13). The name literally means 'pomegranate,' and its variant Rimmono in 1 Chronicles preserves an alternate locative spelling. RIMMON PLACE NAME

en: Rimmon, Rimmono, and-Rimmon | es: Rimon, Rimono, Rimón | fr: Rimmon, [רמון], [רמונו] | de: Rimmon, [רמון], [רמונו] Josh 15:32; Josh 19:7; Josh 19:13; Judg 20:45; Judg 20:47

רָ H7418 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ramoth-negev — a place name meaning 'heights of the Negev' in southern Judah

Ramoth-negev, literally 'heights of the Negev,' appears in 1 Samuel 30:27 as one of the towns in southern Judah where David sent spoils after defeating the Amalekites. The name indicates elevated terrain in the Negev region. This may be the same location as Ramah of the South or Baalath-beer mentioned elsewhere. The site has not been definitively identified. David's distribution of plunder to this and other southern towns helped build political alliances before he became king.

(1×) A place name meaning 'heights of the Negev,' located in southern Judah (1 Samuel 30:27). David sent spoils from his Amalekite victory to this town, building alliances in the Negev region. The name indicates elevated terrain in the southern wilderness. Possible identification with Ramah of the South or Baalath-beer remains speculative. This was part of David's support network before assuming kingship. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: in-Ramoth-negev | es: en-Ramot-Neguev | fr: dans-Ramoth-negev | de: in-Ramoth-negev 1Sam 30:27

רָמוּת H7419 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

height, stature — elevated position, loftiness, or physical corpse (uncertain)

(1×) Height, lofty stature, or possibly carrion/corpse (Ezekiel 32:5). In the oracle against Pharaoh, God promises to scatter his 'height' or 'carcass' on the mountains. If abstract, this refers to his lofty pride brought low; if concrete, to his corpse defiling the terrain. Spanish 'carroña' and the context of judgment favor understanding this as Pharaoh's dead body scattered in defeat. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: your-height | es: con-tu-carnoña | fr: tas | de: [רמותך] Ezek 32:5

רֹמַח H7420 Conj-w (15×)

Spear, lance — a thrusting weapon with a long shaft, standard military armament in ancient Israel

The רֹמַח (romach) is a thrusting spear or lance, distinct from the lighter javelin (חֲנִית). It appears alongside the sword, shield, and bow as part of the standard warrior's kit. Phinehas famously seized one to execute judgment at Baal-Peor (Num 25:7), and the prophets of Baal slashed themselves with spears on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18:28). Joel's eschatological reversal — 'beat your pruning hooks into spears' (Joel 4:10) — inverts Isaiah's vision of peace. Cognates span spear, lance (15×) A long-shafted thrusting weapon with a metal point, used in close combat and listed among standard military equipment. Spanish consistently renders it 'lanza,' while French uses 'lance.' Frequently paired with חֶרֶב (sword) and מָגֵן (shield) in military inventories (2 Chr 11:12; 14:7; 26:14). Notable appearances include Phinehas's act of zeal (Num 25:7), the absence of weapons in Deborah's era (Judg 5:8), and Nehemiah's builders working with one hand and holding spears in the other (Neh 4:15). SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN

Aramaic (rumchaa), Arabic (rumh), and Ethiopic (remh), suggesting a shared Semitic military vocabulary.

en: a-spear, and-a-spear, and-spear | es: en-lanzas, en-las-lanzas, lanza | fr: [הרמחים], et-avec-le-lances, et-lance | de: [ברמחים], [הרמחים], [וברמח] Num 25:7; Judg 5:8; 1Kgs 18:28; 1Chr 12:9; 1Chr 12:25

אַרְמִי H7421 Art / N-proper-mp (1×)

the archers, the Arameans — Syrian forces or possibly bowmen (textual uncertainty)

This term in 2 Chronicles 22:5 is textually problematic. It could mean 'the Arameans' (Syrians) or possibly 'the archers.' The parallel passage in 2 Kings 8:28-29 and 9:15 clearly has 'Arameans,' supporting the ethnic interpretation. The Hebrew spelling in Chronicles may reflect a scribal variant or confusion with a word for archers. The context involves battle against Aramean forces at Ramoth-gilead. Most modern translations follow the reading 'Arameans' based on the parallel texts.

(1×) The Arameans or possibly archers (2 Chronicles 22:5). In the battle at Ramoth-gilead, this term refers to enemy forces who wounded Joram. Parallel passages in Kings clearly read 'Arameans,' suggesting this Chronicles spelling is a variant or error. The Syrian forces under Hazael are the historical opponent. Some have proposed 'archers' based on the Hebrew letters, but the ethnic meaning fits the broader narrative. ARAMEAN ARCHERS

en: the-archers | es: los-arqueros | fr: [הרמים] | de: [הרמים] 2Chr 22:5

רַמְיָה H7422 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ramiah — a personal name meaning possibly 'Yahweh has loosened or deceived'

Ramiah is a personal name appearing in Ezra 10:25 in the list of those who had married foreign wives during the exile. The name's etymology is uncertain but possibly means 'Yahweh has loosened' or 'Yahweh has thrown (deceived?).' The individual is listed among those who put away foreign wives in response to Ezra's reform. The Septuagint transliterates the name as Ramias. No other information about this person survives beyond this mention in the post-exilic reform context.

(1×) A personal name of a man who married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:25). The name possibly means 'Yahweh has loosened' or 'Yahweh has thrown,' though the etymology is uncertain. This individual appears only in the list of those who divorced foreign wives during Ezra's reforms. The name's theological component (incorporating Yahweh) contrasts ironically with the violation of covenant marriage laws. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: Ramyah | es: Ramyah | fr: [רמיה] | de: [רמיה] Ezra 10:25

רְמִיָּה H7423a N-fs (10×)

Deceit, treachery; falsehood in speech or character, often paired with lying and injustice.

The noun רְמִיָּה denotes deceit or treachery, almost always in contexts of dishonest speech or faithless character. It pairs naturally with שֶׁקֶר ('falsehood') and עַוְלָה ('injustice'), forming a lexical cluster around moral unreliability. Micah 6:12 condemns a city whose tongue is רְמִיָּה, and Psalm 120:2-3 pleads for rescue from a 'deceitful tongue.' The striking image of a קֶשֶׁת רְמִיָּה, a 'treacherous bow' (Hos 7:16; Ps 78:57), describes something that looks reliable but fails catastrophically when drawn – a vivid metaphor for Israel's faithlessness. Spanish 'engano' and French 'tromperie' consistently capture the core meaning, while German 'Trug' adds the nuance of delusion.

1. deceit (8×) Deceit or treachery as a quality of speech, action, or character. Job protests that his lips will not speak רְמִיָּה (Job 27:4; 13:7), pairing it with עַוְלָה ('injustice'). Psalm 52:2 names the wicked as one who 'works treachery,' and Ps 101:7 excludes from the royal court anyone who 'practices deceit.' Psalm 32:2 celebrates the person in whose spirit there is no רְמִיָּה – no hidden guile. Micah 6:12 indicts the wealthy whose tongues traffic in deception. Spanish 'engano,' French 'tromperie,' and German 'Trug' converge across these eight occurrences. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: deceit | es: engaño | fr: tromperie, רמיה | de: Trug, [רמיה] Job 13:7; Job 27:4; Ps 32:2; Ps 52:2; Ps 101:7

2. deceitful (2×) Deceitful or treacherous as an attributive quality, modifying another noun to create a compound image. The distinctive phrase קֶשֶׁת רְמִיָּה, 'a treacherous bow' (Ps 78:57; Hos 7:16), portrays Israel as a weapon that snaps or veers when its owner depends on it most – promising reliability but delivering betrayal. The adjective-like function here is confirmed by Spanish 'enganoso' and German 'trugerisch,' which shift to adjectival forms, distinguishing this usage from the bare noun 'deceit.' DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: deceitful | es: engañoso | fr: tromperie | de: [רמיה], deceitful Ps 78:57; Hos 7:16

רְמִיָּה H7423b N-fs (5×)

slackness, negligence, laxity — idle carelessness in work or duty

Drawn from the root meaning 'to be slack,' this noun appears in Proverbs and once in Jeremiah to describe the moral failing of laziness and negligence. In Proverbs it characterizes a 'slack hand' that produces poverty (10:4), a negligent person destined for forced labor (12:24), and a torpid appetite (19:15). Jeremiah 48:10 uses it in its most severe context: performing the Lord's work 'with slackness' invites a curse. The Spanish split between 'negligencia' and 'engano' reflects the word's range from mere laziness to culpable dereliction, while French 'tromperie' hints at how negligence shades into deceit.

(5×) Slackness, negligence, and idle laxity in the execution of work or responsibility. In Proverbs, it appears as the defining trait of the sluggard — the 'slack hand' (kaf remiyyah, Prov 10:4) contrasted with diligent hands, and the negligent soul sinking into deep sleep (19:15). Jeremiah 48:10 elevates the stakes dramatically: doing God's work remiyyah merits a curse. Spanish oscillates between 'negligencia' and 'engano,' and French uses 'tromperie,' suggesting that in Hebrew moral imagination, habitual slackness becomes a form of self-deception or even fraud. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: but-the-slothful, idle, negligently | es: con-negligencia, engaño, negligente | fr: [רמיה], et-tromperie, tromperie | de: [ורמיה], [רמיה] Prov 10:4; Prov 12:24; Prov 12:27; Prov 19:15; Jer 48:10

רַמָּךְ H7424 Art / N-mp (1×)

royal mares, steeds — swift horses bred for royalty (exact meaning uncertain)

This term appears in Esther 8:10 describing the horses used for the king's urgent dispatches. The exact meaning is debated—proposed interpretations include 'sons of mares' (suggesting swift horses bred from royal mares), herds of horses, or mules. The word appears to be a foreign loanword, possibly from Persian or Pahlavi, related to herds or flocks. The Syriac cognate means 'herd,' while Persian ramak means a herd of horses or sheep. The context emphasizes speed and royal quality of these animals used for imperial communication.

(1×) Royal horses, swift steeds, or possibly mules used for urgent royal dispatches (Esther 8:10). The phrase 'sons of the royal mares' likely indicates horses bred for speed and quality. This is a foreign loanword, probably Persian, related to herds or flocks of animals. The context emphasizes rapid communication throughout the Persian Empire using the finest available horses. The exact species (horses vs. mules) remains debated. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: the-mares | es: las-yeguas | fr: [הרמכים] | de: [הרמכים] Esth 8:10

רְמַלְיָהוּ H7425 N-proper-ms (13×)

Remaliah; father of Pekah king of Israel, whose patronymic Isaiah uses with deliberate contempt.

The proper name Remaliah (רְמַלְיָהוּ) identifies the father of Pekah, who seized the throne of Israel by assassination (2 Kgs 15:25). The name appears almost entirely in the patronymic formula 'Pekah son of Remaliah' across Kings, Isaiah, and Chronicles. Isaiah's deliberate use of 'the son of Remaliah' without the royal title (Isa 7:4–5, 9; 8:6) constitutes a pointed refusal to dignify the usurper — reducing him to his father's name alone. Spanish Remalías, French Remalia, and German Remaljahu each reflect the theophoric ending -yahu.

Remaliah (father of Pekah) (13×) The personal name Remaliah (רְמַלְיָהוּ), known exclusively as the father of Pekah who usurped the Israelite throne. The patronymic 'son of Remaliah' appears in historical records (2 Kgs 15:25, 27, 30, 32, 37; 16:1, 5; 2 Chr 28:6) and, strikingly, in Isaiah's prophetic rhetoric (Isa 7:1, 4, 5, 9; 8:6), where the prophet withholds Pekah's name to express contempt for the Syro-Ephraimite conspiracy. The theophoric suffix -yahu ('the LORD') is preserved in transliterations across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Remaliah, Remalyahu | es: Remalyahu, Remalías | fr: Remalia, Remalyahu, [רמליהו] | de: Remaljahu, Remalyahu, [רמליהו] 2Kgs 15:25; 2Kgs 15:27; 2Kgs 15:30; 2Kgs 15:32; 2Kgs 15:37

רָמַם H7426 V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (6×)

To rise up, be exalted; a by-form of rum (H7311), also used for withdrawing from danger

A parallel form of the common verb rum (to be high, exalted), appearing in contexts of both physical rising and divine exaltation. In Ezekiel's throne-chariot vision, the cherubim 'rose up' repeatedly (Ezek 10:15, 17, 19), with Spanish 'se elevaron' (they rose) and Arabic 'irtafa'at' (they ascended) capturing the upward movement. Isaiah 33:10 uses it for God's self-exaltation: 'Now I will rise up.' A distinctive usage occurs in Numbers 16:45, where Moses and Aaron are commanded to 'get away' from the congregation before judgment falls – here the rising motion becomes urgent physical withdrawal, rendered by Spanish 'Apartaos' (withdraw yourselves).

1. rise up, be exalted (5×) To rise up or be exalted, describing upward movement or elevation in status. The cherubim in Ezekiel's vision 'rose up' from the earth (10:15, 17, 19), while Ps 118:16 celebrates the Lord's right hand as 'exalted.' In Isa 33:10, God himself declares 'I will be exalted.' Spanish 'se elevaron' and Korean 'ollagatta' (went up) confirm the consistent upward-motion semantics across the occurrences. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: and-rose-up, and-they-rose, is-exalted | es: Se-elevan, Y-se-elevaron, está-exaltada | fr: et-s'élever, s'élever, רומו | de: [וירומו], [וירמו], [ירומו] Job 24:24; Ps 118:16; Ezek 10:15; Ezek 10:17; Ezek 10:19

2. get away, withdraw (1×) To withdraw or get away from a dangerous situation, a Niphal imperative in Num 16:45 where God commands Moses and Aaron to separate themselves from the rebellious congregation of Korah before divine wrath strikes. Spanish 'Apartaos' (withdraw yourselves) reinterprets the root's upward motion as urgent departure. This single occurrence represents a contextual extension: rising up from among a group becomes leaving it entirely. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: get-away | es: Apartaos | fr: get-away | de: get-weg Num 16:45

רוֹמְמוּת H7427 Prep-m / N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

uplifting, arising — the act of rising up or being exalted

This noun refers to uplifting, arising, or exaltation, appearing in Isaiah 33:3 in the phrase 'at Your arising.' The context describes nations fleeing when God rises up in power. The term emphasizes the action of standing up or being lifted up, here applied to God's intervention in judgment. The root connects to elevation and exaltation, suggesting both physical rising and being honored or lifted in status. The nations scatter not just at God's presence but at His active arising to act.

(1×) Uplifting, arising, or the act of rising up (Isaiah 33:3). The phrase 'at Your arising' describes God's action of standing up to intervene—nations flee when God rises from His throne to act in judgment. This is not static presence but active arising, suggesting movement from rest to action. The term combines physical rising with the exaltation that God's intervention brings. When God stands up, enemies scatter. PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: at-Your-lifting-Yourself-up | es: de-tu-exaltación | fr: [מרוממתך] | de: [מרוממתך] Isa 33:3

רִמֹּן פֶּרֶץ H7428 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Rimmon-perez; place name, a wilderness encampment of Israel during the Exodus

A place name identifying a station in Israel's wilderness journey. Numbers 33:19-20 lists it among the encampments between Egypt and Canaan. The name combines 'pomegranate' (Rimmon) with an element meaning 'breach' or 'bursting forth' (Perez). The exact location remains unknown.

(2×) Names a stopping point during Israel's wilderness wanderings, recorded in the Priestly itinerary (Num 33:19-20). The compound name Rimmon-perez likely means 'pomegranate of the breach' or 'pomegranate of bursting forth,' though the significance is unclear. The Septuagint transliterations (Ρεμμων, Ραμμων) preserve the name without interpretation. Spanish and other modern languages transliterate it (Rimón-Peres), acknowledging that the site's identification is lost to history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Rimmon-perez, in-Rimmon-perez | es: de-Rimón-Peres, en-Rimón-Peres | fr: dans-Rimmon-perez, de-Rimmon-perez | de: in-Rimmon-perez, von-Rimmon-perez Num 33:19; Num 33:20

רָמַס H7429 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs / 3mp (19×)

To trample or tread upon forcefully, crushing underfoot; figuratively, to oppress or overwhelm; passive: to be trampled down.

A vivid verb of violent physical action — stomping, crushing, treading underfoot. In its most frequent use, it describes armies trampling streets (Ezek 26:11), horses crushing bodies (2 Kgs 9:33), or potters treading clay (Isa 41:25). The Spanish 'pisotear' and French 'fouler' both capture the deliberate, forceful stepping that distinguishes this word from mere walking. Figuratively, it extends to the oppression of the weak, as when the remnant of Jacob tramples its enemies like a lion among sheep (Mic 5:7). A single Niphal occurrence in Isa 28:3 flips the image: the drunkards of Ephraim 'shall be trampled' — the oppressor becomes the oppressed.

1. trample, tread upon (18×) The primary active sense: to step on forcefully, crush underfoot, or tread upon with destructive intent. Covers literal trampling by humans, horses, or armies (2 Kgs 7:17, 20; 9:33) and extends to figurative oppression. The multilingual evidence is consistent — Spanish 'pisotear' (stomp on), French 'fouler' (tread), and English 'trample' all converge on violent downward force. The Qal imperative in Nah 3:14 ('tread the clay!') shows the word at its most concrete: feet pressing raw material into submission. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: Shall-trample-it, and-I-trampled-them, and-he-trampled-her | es: La-pisoteará, el-pisoteador, hollarás | fr: [ותרמס], et-cela-trampled, et-fouler | de: [וארמסם], [וירמסהו], [ורמס] 2Kgs 7:17; 2Kgs 7:20; 2Kgs 9:33; 2Kgs 14:9; 2Chr 25:18

2. be trampled (1×) The passive (Niphal) sense: to be trodden down, trampled upon. Attested only in Isa 28:3, where the proud crown of Ephraim's drunkards 'shall be trampled underfoot.' Spanish 'será pisoteada' and English 'shall be trampled' confirm the passive transformation. The single occurrence makes this a rare but distinct voice form, converting the subject from agent to victim of the same violent action. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: shall-be-trampled | es: será-pisoteada | fr: fouler | de: [תרמסנה] Isa 28:3

רָמַשׂ H7430 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (17×)

To creep, swarm, move along the ground; of small creatures crawling or gliding over the earth.

A verb used almost exclusively of small ground-dwelling creatures in creation and classification texts. In Genesis 1 God commands the earth to bring forth living things, and ramas describes the movement of creatures that neither walk upright nor fly but glide, crawl, or swarm along the surface. Leviticus 11 and 20 employ it in dietary legislation to distinguish clean from unclean animals. The term carries no negative connotation in itself – it simply characterizes a mode of locomotion. Spanish 'arrastrarse' ('to drag oneself') and English 'creep' both reflect this low, ground-hugging motion.

to creep, swarm, move (17×) To move along the ground by creeping, crawling, or swarming, said of small animals such as reptiles, insects, and other ground-level creatures. Central to the Priestly creation account (Gen 1:21, 26, 28, 30) and the Flood narrative (Gen 7:8, 14; 8:17, 19), where it classifies a distinct category of animal locomotion. Also appears in dietary law (Lev 11:44, 46; 20:25) and in Ezekiel 38:20 for a cosmic-scale shaking that affects all creeping things. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS
en: crawler, creature-that-moves, creeping | es: el-que-se-arrastra, la-que-se-arrastra, la-que-se-mueve | fr: crawler, creeping, creeping-chose | de: Geschöpf-der-moves, Kriechende, [הרמש] Gen 1:21; Gen 1:26; Gen 1:28; Gen 1:30; Gen 7:8

רֶמֶשׂ H7431 Art / N-ms (17×)
Creeping thing, crawler; a collective noun for small ground-moving creatures in creation and law texts.
The nominal counterpart to the verb ramas, remes is a collective designation for all small creatures that move along the ground. It appears as a distinct zoological category in the Priestly creation taxonomy alongside behemah ('livestock'), hayyah ('wild animal'), and 'of ('bird'). Genesis uses it from creation (1:24-26) through the Flood (6:7, 20; 7:14, 23; 8:17, 19) and into the Noahic covenant (9:3). Psalm 104:25 extends the category to teeming sea creatures, and Habakkuk 1:14 compares helpless humanity to remes without a ruler.

creeping thing / crawler (17×) A collective noun for small ground-moving creatures – reptiles, insects, and other crawlers – forming a distinct category in Israelite animal taxonomy. Listed alongside livestock, wild animals, and birds in the creation account (Gen 1:24-26; 6:7, 20; 7:14, 23; 8:17, 19). Extended to sea creatures gliding through the deep (Ps 104:25) and used figuratively for vulnerable, leaderless humanity (Hab 1:14). Appears also in visionary contexts (Ezek 8:10; 38:20). CREEPING SWARMING THINGS
en: and-crawlers, and-creeping-thing-of, crawler-of | es: como-reptiles, el-reptil, los-reptiles | fr: crawler-de, creeping-chose-de, et-crawlers | de: Gewürm, Kriechende, [הרמש] Gen 1:24; Gen 1:25; Gen 1:26; Gen 6:7; Gen 6:20

רָמָת H7432 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Ramoth, name of a city (Heights) mentioned in Josh 19:21
A place name appearing in the tribal allotment lists, this town is identified as Remeth in Joshua 19:21. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'heights' or 'elevated place,' fitting the geographical pattern of many Israelite settlements positioned on strategic high ground. The multilingual uniformity (Spanish Remet, French Remeth, German Remeth) reflects the proper-name preservation typical of geographical terms.

(1×) A city in the territory assigned to the tribe of Issachar, mentioned alongside other border towns in the allocation described in Joshua 19. The translation consistency across European languages (y-Remet, et-Remeth, und-Remeth) shows the standard practice of transliterating place names with minimal phonetic adaptation, though the Hebrew conjunction 'and' is properly rendered in each target language. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Remeth | es: y-Remet | fr: et-Remeth | de: und-Remeth Josh 19:21

רָמוֹת H7433 N-proper-fs (21×)
Ramoth, a place name designating cities in Israel, most notably the fortified city of Ramoth-Gilead Derived from a root meaning 'height,' Ramoth names one or more elevated cities, the most significant being Ramoth-Gilead in the tribal territory of Gad. Designated a city of refuge (Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; 21:38), it later became a flashpoint between Israel and Aram—Ahab died trying to recapture it (1 Kgs 22:3–6), and Jehu was anointed king there (2 Kgs 9:1–4). A second Ramoth, assigned to Issachar's Levites (1 Chr 6:58), also appears. French 'Ramoth,' German 'Ramot,' and Spanish 'Ramot' all preserve the name consistently.

Ramoth (place name) (21×) A proper noun designating elevated cities, preeminently Ramoth-Gilead, a city of refuge in Gad (Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8) and a strategic military site in the wars between Israel and Aram (1 Kgs 22:3–6; 2 Kgs 8:28; 9:1). A second Ramoth in Issachar is a Levitical city (1 Chr 6:58). The name means 'heights,' and multilingual glosses—French 'Ramoth,' Spanish 'Ramot,' German 'Ramot'—uniformly transliterate it as a geographic proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ramot, Ramoth, at-Ramot | es: Ramot, en-Ramot | fr: Rama, Ramot, Ramoth | de: Ramat, Ramot, Ramoth Josh 21:38; 1Kgs 4:13; 1Kgs 22:3; 1Kgs 22:4; 1Kgs 22:6

רָ H7434 N-proper-fs (2×)
Ramath; construct form in compound place names meaning 'height of' or 'high place of'
A construct form of 'height' or 'high place' appearing in compound geographical names. Joshua 13:26 has 'Ramath of Mizpeh' (or 'Ramath-mizpeh'), a Gileadite border town. The name structure is common in biblical geography, pairing 'high place' with a defining element. Site identifications remain uncertain due to the proliferation of settlements with 'Ramath' in their names.

(2×) Appears as the construct form 'Ramath-of' in compound place names, primarily in Joshua 13:26 ('Ramath of the Mizpeh'), marking a town on Gad's northern border in Gilead. The Septuagint's Αφαβωθ/Ραμωθ reflects uncertainty in the tradition. The name is related to other 'Ramath' sites (Ramath-lehi, Ramath-negeb), all deriving from רָמָה ('height'). Modern scholarship acknowledges the difficulty in pinpointing this site among the many biblical 'heights,' but the construct pattern indicates a high-altitude sanctuary or lookout associated with Mizpeh. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Ramath-of, the-Mizpeh | es: Mizpa, Ramat | fr: Ramath-de, le-Mizpeh | de: Ramath-von, der-Mizpeh Josh 13:26

רָמָתִי H7435 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Ramatite, a gentilics adjective indicating origin from an unspecified town called Ramah
This rare gentilics form appears only in 1 Chronicles 27:27 to describe one of David's officials responsible for vineyards. The definite article 'the' and the -i ending mark this as an adjective of origin or belonging, though scholars debate which of several towns named Ramah is meant. The Septuagint's varied renderings (one reading 'from Ramlah,' another 'Ramathite') reflect ancient uncertainty about the exact referent.

(1×) A designation of geographical or clan origin applied to one individual in the administrative lists of David's kingdom. The French and German translations preserve the Hebrew form untranslated, recognizing the term's status as a technical gentilics designation where the underlying place name remains ambiguous in the biblical text itself. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Ramatite | es: el-ramatita | fr: [הרמתי] | de: [הרמתי] 1Chr 27:27

צוֹפִי H7436 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)
Ramathayim-zophim; place name, likely an alternative or full form of Ramah, Samuel's hometown
A compound place name appearing in 1 Samuel 1:1. Modern scholars often read 'Ramathayim of the Zuphites' rather than 'Ramathayim-zophim,' identifying Samuel's birthplace as a Ramah associated with the Zuphite clan. The Septuagint's Σειφα and related forms support this reading. It may be the same site as the Ramah where Samuel lived and judged Israel.

(2×) A geographical designation in 1 Samuel 1:1, traditionally 'Ramathayim-zophim' but likely to be understood as 'Ramathayim of the Zuphites' based on textual evidence. The Septuagint (Σειφα, Σωφιμ) and modern text-critical work support reading צוּפִי (Zuphite, a gentilic) rather than צוֹפִים. This would identify Samuel's birthplace as Ramah in the territory of the Zuphite clan. The dual form רָמָתַיִם ('double height') may indicate a twin-peaked settlement, though the precise topography is uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zophim, the-Ramathayim | es: Tsofim, las-Ramataim | fr: Zophim, le-Ramathaïm | de: Zophim, der-Ramathayim 1Sam 1:1

רָ H7437 N-proper-fs (1×)

Ramath-lehi, 'Height of the Jawbone,' place name commemorating Samson's victory

This compound place name appears in Judges 15:17, formed from 'ramah' (height) and 'lehi' (jawbone). Samson coined the name after his spectacular defeat of a thousand Philistines using a donkey's jawbone. The name simultaneously commemorates the weapon used and describes the topography. Like many biblical place names tied to specific events, it carries both geographical and narrative significance, anchoring the heroic tale to a specific location.

(1×) The site where Samson threw down the jawbone after his victory, memorialized in the place name he gave it. All major translations (Spanish Ramat-Lehi, French Ramath-lehi, German Ramath-lehi) preserve the Hebrew compound virtually intact, recognizing it as a fixed toponym rather than attempting semantic translation of its constituent parts. LEHI PLACE NAME

en: Ramath-lehi | es: Ramat-Lehi | fr: Ramath-lehi | de: Ramath-lehi Judg 15:17

רֹן H7438 N-mpc (1×)

ringing cry, shouts of deliverance (plural construct form)

This rare plural construct form appears in Psalm 32:7, where the psalmist declares that God will surround him with 'songs of deliverance.' The word captures joyful, ringing celebration—not quiet thanksgiving but exuberant proclamation. Though related to 'ren' (ringing cry), this nominal form emphasizes the acoustic quality of victory celebration. The Spanish 'cánticos' and German 'songs' capture the musical dimension, while the French opts for the simpler 'chant.'

(1×) Triumphant songs or shouts that accompany divine deliverance, described in Psalm 32:7 as encircling the believer whom God has rescued. The construct form 'songs of deliverance' pairs the acoustic celebration with its theological cause, creating an image of being surrounded by joyful proclamation of God's saving acts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-songs-of | es: con-cánticos-de | fr: chant | de: mit-songs-von Ps 32:7

רָנָה H7439 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

rattles, makes a rattling sound (of a quiver)

This onomatopoetic verb appears uniquely in Job 39:23, describing the rattling sound of a quiver bouncing against the warhorse's flank as it charges into battle. The Hebrew captures the percussive clatter of arrows in their case—a vivid acoustic detail in God's poetic catalog of the warhorse's fearlessness. The Spanish 'resuena' (resounds) emphasizes the sonic quality, while English 'rattles' captures the distinctive mechanical sound pattern.

(1×) The distinctive sound made by a quiver full of arrows as it shakes and clatters during the warhorse's charge. Job 39:23 uses this specific sensory detail to paint the complete picture of a mount rushing fearlessly toward battle, with the rattling quiver providing an auditory dimension to the visual spectacle of equine courage described throughout the passage. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: rattles | es: resuena | fr: תרנה | de: [תרנה] Job 39:23

רִנָּה H7440 N-fsc / 3mp (33×)

A ringing cry – either joyful singing and shouts of praise, or an urgent outcry of supplication and lament.

A word whose emotional range stretches from exuberant praise to desperate prayer. When paired with simchah (joy) or todah (thanksgiving), rinnah erupts as triumphant singing – the redeemed returning to Zion with 'everlasting joy' (Isa 35:10; 51:11), or the 'voice of rejoicing' in the tents of the righteous (Ps 118:15). Yet the same word appears in solemn contexts of entreaty, where it is paired with tefillah (prayer) as a plea for God's attention (1 Kgs 8:28; Ps 17:1; 88:2). Spanish captures the split neatly: 'canto de alegría' for joy, 'clamor' for supplication.

1. joyful singing or shouting (21×) A ringing cry of joy, glad singing, or jubilant shouting, especially in worship and celebration of God's saving acts. German 'Jubel,' Spanish 'canto de alegría,' and French 'cri de joie' all converge on exuberant praise. Paired with thanksgiving (todah) in Ps 107:22 and with salvation (yeshuah) in Ps 118:15. Isaiah deploys it for cosmic celebration when Israel is redeemed (Isa 35:10; 44:23; 49:13; 54:1). JOY AND EXULTATION

en: in-shouts-of-joy, joy, joyful-singing | es: canto, canto-de-alegría, con-canto | fr: cri-de-joie, dans-cri-de-joie, רנה | de: Jubel, in-Jubel, mit-Jubel 2Chr 20:22; Ps 30:5; Ps 42:4; Ps 47:1; Ps 105:43

2. cry of supplication or distress (12×) A loud outcry of supplication, lament, or urgent entreaty directed to God. Consistently paired with tefillah (prayer) as a formal liturgical pair in Solomon's temple dedication (1 Kgs 8:28; 2 Chr 6:19) and in the Psalms of petition (Ps 17:1; 61:1; 88:2; 119:169; 142:6). Spanish 'clamor,' Arabic surakh, and Korean bureujieum all mark the anguished, pleading quality. Jeremiah 7:16 and 14:12 show God refusing to hear this kind of rinnah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cry, my-cry, the-cry | es: a-clamor-de-mí, clamor, clamor-de-mí | fr: [הרנה], cri-de-joie, le-crie | de: Jubel, der-schreie, ihr-Jubel 1Kgs 8:28; 1Kgs 22:36; 2Chr 6:19; Ps 17:1; Ps 61:1

רִנָּה H7441 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Rinnah, personal name in the genealogies of Judah

This personal name appears in the Judahite genealogies of 1 Chronicles 4:20. The name itself derives from a root meaning 'ringing cry' or 'shout of joy,' suggesting the parents' celebratory disposition at the child's birth. The Septuagint traditions vary considerably (Ana, Rannon, Renna), reflecting the challenges ancient translators faced with less common proper names in genealogical lists.

(1×) A descendant of Judah listed in the tribal genealogies preserved in 1 Chronicles 4. The French and German translations leave the name untranslated, treating it as an opaque proper noun, while Spanish renders it as 'Rina,' showing a common pattern where target languages slightly adapt Hebrew names to match their phonological patterns. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Rinnah | es: y-Rina | fr: [ורנה] | de: [ורנה] 1Chr 4:20

רוּן H7442a

overcome (by wine or emotion; rare verb, possibly related to Arabic 'overcome')

This rare verb appears only in Psalm 78:65 in a striking simile: 'Then the Lord awoke as from sleep, like a hero overcome by wine' (or 'shouting from wine,' depending on interpretation). The root may be related to Arabic ɾ ('to overcome') or alternatively to רָנַן ('to shout'). The context depicts God rousing himself to fight for Israel after a period of apparent inactivity. Whether the image is of a warrior shaking off wine-induced sleep or a warrior shouting in battle-fury, the metaphor conveys sudden, overwhelming divine intervention. The textual and etymological uncertainties reflect the verse's bold anthropomorphism.

רָנַן H7442b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp (53×)

To give a ringing cry of joy; to sing aloud, shout in exultation;

causative: to make sing for joy
An onomatopoeic verb whose very sound mimics the ringing, reverberating quality of a shout — ranan captures the irrepressible vocal outburst of worship and celebration. When the people saw fire fall on Aaron's first sacrifice, they 'shouted for joy and fell on their faces' (Lev 9:24). The morning stars 'sang together' at creation (Job 38:7). Barren Zion is commanded to 'sing!' because her children will outnumber those of the married woman (Isa 54:1). The Piel intensifies this into sustained, exuberant jubilation — the righteous 'sing aloud' on their beds (Ps 149:5), and the Hifil causative describes God himself prompting the outgoings of morning and evening to 'shout for joy' (Ps 65:8). The Arabic cognate ranna ('to cry aloud, twang') preserves the acoustic core — a sound that rings and reverberates.

1. sing for joy, exult (Piel) (27×) The Piel intensive stem (27 occurrences), expressing sustained, exuberant singing and joyful shouting — the most frequent deployment of this root. The Piel intensifies the basic cry into deliberate, prolonged jubilation: 'Shout for joy, you righteous!' (Ps 33:1), 'My lips will shout for joy when I sing praises to you' (Ps 71:23), and the trees of the forest 'sing for joy' before the LORD (1 Chr 16:33). German jauchzen and Spanish cantar con gozo consistently render the exuberant quality that distinguishes this from ordinary singing (shir). JOY AND EXULTATION
en: I-will-shout-for-joy, and-I-will-sing-aloud, and-sing-for-joy | es: cantad, cantan-con-gozo, cantará-con-gozo | fr: [ירננו], et-pousser-des-cris, pousser-des-cris | de: ich-wird-jauchzen-für-Freude, jauchzen, jauchzen-für-Freude 1Chr 16:33; Ps 5:11; Ps 20:5; Ps 33:1; Ps 51:14

2. sing, shout for joy (Qal) (16×) The basic Qal stem (16 occurrences) conveying the spontaneous ringing cry of joy or exultation — the foundational vocal event. The people's cry at Aaron's sacrifice (Lev 9:24), the morning stars singing at creation (Job 38:7), and barren Zion commanded to 'sing!' (Isa 54:1) all carry this unadorned Qal force. French crier de joie and Korean hwanhohada capture the raw spontaneity that the Piel then intensifies. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: Sing-for-joy, and-shall-sing, and-shout-for-joy | es: Canta, Cantad, Canten | fr: crier-de-joie, dans-crier-de-joie, et-pousser-des-cris | de: [בְּרַן], [יְרוֹן], [רְנִי] Lev 9:24; Job 38:7; Ps 35:27; Prov 29:6; Isa 12:6

3. cause to sing for joy (Hifil) (5×) The Hifil causative (5 occurrences) meaning to cause or prompt joyful singing — God as the agent who elicits praise from creation and his people. Deuteronomy 32:43 summons the nations to 'make his people rejoice' (or 'shout for joy with his people'). Job 29:13 recalls how Job's generosity 'made the widow's heart sing for joy.' Psalm 65:8 describes God making the outgoings of morning and evening 'shout for joy,' personifying dawn and dusk as worshippers. Spanish hacer cantar de gozo preserves the causative structure. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: I-caused-to-sing-for-joy, You-cause-to-shout-for-joy, and-shout-for-joy | es: Cantad-con-gozo, alabad, haces-cantar-de-gozo | fr: crier-de-joie, et-le-pousser-des-cris, le-pousser-des-cris | de: [אַרְנֵן], du-Sache-zu-jauchzen-für-Freude, rufen-fuer-Freude Deut 32:43; Job 29:13; Ps 32:11; Ps 65:8; Ps 81:1

4. cry out, call aloud (Qal) (3×) A Qal sense of loud crying out or calling aloud (3 occurrences) where the vocalization is urgent or public rather than purely joyful. Wisdom 'cries aloud' in the street (Prov 1:20), 'calls out' at the entrance of the city (Prov 8:3), and Lamentations 2:19 commands 'cry out in the night.' The shift from joy to urgency is confirmed by Spanish clamar replacing the usual cantar, and the English move from 'sing' to 'cry out.' JOY AND EXULTATION
en: cries-out, cry-out, she-cries-aloud | es: canta, clama | fr: crier-de-joie, pousser-des-cris | de: [רְנִי], [תִּרְנֹנָה] Prov 1:20; Prov 8:3; Lam 2:19

5. (1×) A Pual passive (1 occurrence, Isa 16:10) indicating that a joyful shout 'is sung' or 'is raised' — the passive voice noting the absence of the customary vintage song: 'no treader treads with shouts; the shouting is not shouting.' Spanish se canta and English 'is sung' confirm the passive construction, marking the eerie silence of judgment by describing what is normally heard but now is not. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: shouting | es: que-grita | fr: de-pousser-des-cris | de: Jauchzen Ps 78:65

6. (1×) A Hitpael reflexive-intensive (1 occurrence, Ps 78:65) describing the LORD awakening 'as one who shouts' — the reflexive stem adding self-involvement to the cry, like a warrior rousing himself with his own battle shout. German Jauchzen and English 'shouting' render the result, but the Hitpael morphology suggests an internal, self-directed stirring that erupts into vocal force. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: is-sung | es: se-canta | fr: pousser-des-cris | de: jauchzen Isa 16:10

רְנָנִים H7443 N-mp (1×)
ostriches, birds characterized by piercing cries
This rare plural form in Job 39:13 likely refers to ostriches, identified by their distinctive loud calls. The Hebrew literally means 'birds of piercing cries,' and most interpreters follow the Vulgate in understanding this as ostriches. However, textual difficulties surround this verse, and some scholars suggest reading 'ye'enim' (ostriches) as in Lamentations 4:3, treating the current form as a scribal variant. The Spanish 'avestruces' confirms the traditional ostrich identification.

(1×) Birds known for their loud, piercing vocalizations, appearing in the challenging text of Job 39:13 where God describes the ostrich's peculiar combination of foolishness and speed. The designation emphasizes the acoustic quality of these creatures, consistent with Job's extended nature catalog that often focuses on distinctive sensory characteristics—the warhorse's strength, the hawk's flight, and here the ostrich's cry. OSTRICH BIRD
en: the-ostriches | es: avestruces | fr: רננים | de: [רְנָנִים] Job 39:13

רָנַן H7444 V-Piel-InfAbs (1×)
shouting for joy, giving a ringing cry of celebration (infinitive absolute)
This infinitive absolute form appears in Psalm 132:16, intensifying the verbal idea of joyful shouting. The root conveys ringing, jubilant celebration—not restrained joy but exuberant public proclamation. In the psalm's context, God promises that the priests will be clothed with salvation and the faithful will 'greatly shout for joy.' The German 'Jauchzen' (jubilation) and Spanish 'cantando con gozo' (singing with joy) both capture the uninhibited celebratory quality.

(1×) Exuberant vocal celebration, described in Psalm 132:16 as the response of God's faithful ones to his salvific presence in Zion. The infinitive absolute construction emphasizes the intensity and completeness of this celebration—not polite thanks but full-throated jubilation accompanying the divine promises of restoration and blessing to the Davidic line and Jerusalem. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: shouting | es: cantando-con-gozo | fr: crier-de-joie | de: Jauchzen Ps 132:16

רִנָּה H7445 N-fs (4×)
joyful shout, ringing cry, exultation
This noun captures ringing, joyful cries or shouts—whether in worship, celebration, or (ironically) brief wicked triumph. Related to the verb 'sing for joy,' it emphasizes vocal exuberance and jubilation. The term appears in both positive worship contexts and negative descriptions of fleeting pleasure.

(4×) Denotes a ringing cry of joy or exultation. Job 3:7 curses the night of his conception to be barren, 'let no joyful shout enter it' (רִנָּה). Job 20:5 describes 'the triumphing of the wicked' (רִנַּת רְשָׁעִים) as momentary. Psalm 63:5 (63:6 Eng.) speaks of praising God 'with lips of joyful shouts' (שִׂפְתֵי רְנָנוֹת). Psalm 100:2 (100:3 Eng.) has a textual issue but involves joyful sound. The term derives from רָנַן ('sing for joy, shout'), emphasizing vocal, exuberant expression. Multilingual glosses show the joyful semantic core: Spanish 'canto de gozo/cántico,' French 'cri de joie,' German 'joyful jauchzt'—all capturing ringing, jubilant vocalization. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: a-joyful-shout, joyful-shouts, the-triumphing-of | es: canto-de-gozo, concántico, el-canto-de | fr: cri-de-joie, dans-cri-de-joie, רננה | de: [רְנָנָה], [רְנָנוֹת], joyful-jauchzt Job 3:7; Job 20:5; Ps 63:5; Ps 100:2

רִסָּה H7446 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)
Rissah; place name, a wilderness station during Israel's desert wanderings
A place name designating a wilderness encampment in Numbers 33:21-22. Listed among the stages of Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan, its exact location is unknown. The Septuagint offers transliterations (Δεσσα, Ρεσσα, Δρεσσα) without further clarification. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to moisten' or 'dew,' but this remains speculative.

(2×) Identifies a stopping point in the Israelite wilderness itinerary, appearing in the Priestly list (Num 33:21-22). The site's location is uncertain, though the name Rissah (רִסָּה) may relate to רסס ('moisten, dew'). The Septuagint's varied transliterations (Δεσσα, Ρεσσα, Δρεσσα) show textual fluidity without interpretive consensus. Modern translations (Spanish Risá, French Rissah) simply transliterate, acknowledging the name survives without geographical recovery. PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Rissah, in-Rissah | es: de-Risá, en-Risá | fr: dans-Rissah, de-Rissah | de: in-Rissah, von-Rissah Num 33:21; Num 33:22

רְסִיס H7447a N-mpc (1×)
drops, small quantities of liquid (specifically dew)
This plural construct form appears in Song of Songs 5:2, where the beloved's hair is described as wet with 'drops of the night'—that is, night dew. The poetic image captures the beloved arriving after dark, his hair glistening with moisture from the night air. Paired with 'tal' (dew), this word emphasizes the small, individual droplets rather than generalized wetness. The Spanish 'gotas' and French 'gouttes' both preserve the sense of discrete drops.

(1×) Individual droplets of dew, used in Song of Songs 5:2 to create an intimate, sensory image of the beloved standing outside at night, his hair wet from exposure to the damp air. The construct phrase 'drops of night' functions poetically to suggest both the lateness of the hour and the physical evidence of his nighttime journey to reach the woman's door. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: drops-of | es: gotas-de | fr: des-gouttes | de: [רסיס] Song 5:2

רְסִיס H7447b N-mp (1×)
fragments, broken pieces (of destroyed buildings)
This plural form appears in Amos 6:11, describing the fate of houses when God commands their destruction. Paired with 'beqi'im' (cracks, fissures), the word paints a picture of total architectural collapse—not just damage but reduction to rubble. The prophet envisions both great houses and small struck down, broken into fragments beyond repair. This second homonymous root differs entirely from the 'drops' of Song of Songs, demonstrating how context determines meaning.

(1×) Pieces or fragments resulting from violent destruction, used in Amos 6:11 to describe the fate of buildings when divine judgment strikes. The parallel with 'cracks' or 'breaches' emphasizes total structural failure—these are not mere damaged walls but buildings reduced to broken fragments, illustrating the completeness of the coming judgment against Israel's self-satisfied elite who are oblivious to the nation's moral ruin. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES
en: into-fragments | es: en-pedazos | fr: goutte | de: [רסיסים] Amos 6:11

רֶסֶן H7448 N-msc / 3ms (4×)
bridle, halter, jaw (restraint for animals)
This noun primarily denotes a bridle or halter for restraining horses or mules, and possibly also the jaw it controls. Used literally for animal control and metaphorically for divine restraint on nations or human rebellion. The term appears in wisdom, prophetic, and poetic contexts emphasizing control and submission.

(4×) Designates a bridle or halter for controlling animals, with possible extended meaning of jaw. Psalm 32:9 pairs 'bridle and halter' (מֶתֶג וָרֶסֶן) for restraining horses and mules. Isaiah 30:28 uses 'a bridle on the jaws of peoples' (רֶסֶן עַל-לְחָיֵי עַמִּים) as metaphor for God's control of nations. Job 30:11 describes people throwing off restraint 'from before me' (רִסְנִי מִפָּנַי שִׁלֵּחוּ). Job 41:5 (41:13 Eng.) mentions 'the double of his jaw' (כֶּפֶל רִסְנוֹ) of Leviathan—though some question whether this means jaw or bridle. Multilingual glosses show the restraint sense: Spanish 'freno/cabestro/brida,' French 'bride,' German 'bridle'—all emphasizing the controlling function. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3431 WITH 4 SENSES
en: and-a-bridle, and-bridle, his-bridle | es: su-brida, y-cabestro, y-freno | fr: [ורסן], et-bride, et-רסן | de: [ורסן], [רסנו], und-bridle Job 30:11; Job 41:13; Ps 32:9; Isa 30:28

רֹסֶן H7449 N-proper-fs (1×)
Resen, city in Assyria located between Nineveh and Calah
This place name appears in Genesis 10:12 in the Table of Nations, identifying one of the great cities built by Nimrod in Assyria. Located between the major centers of Nineveh and Calah, Resen is described as 'the great city.' The name may derive from Akkadian 'rêš ênī' meaning 'head of the spring' or 'source of water,' suggesting its location at a strategic water source. All translations uniformly preserve the name as Resen.

(1×) An ancient Assyrian city mentioned in the primeval geography of Genesis 10, positioned between the more famous cities of Nineveh and Calah. Though its exact location remains uncertain to archaeologists, the biblical text emphasizes its significance by calling it 'the great city,' indicating it was a major urban center in the expanding Assyrian civilization of Nimrod's era. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Resen | es: Resen | fr: Resen | de: Resen Gen 10:12

רָסַס H7450 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)
to moisten, to sprinkle with liquid (infinitive construct with preposition)
This infinitive construct appears in Ezekiel 46:14, describing a grain offering that must be mixed with oil 'to moisten the fine flour.' The verb captures the cultic requirement that dry flour be dampened or sprinkled with oil to create a proper mixture for offering. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates confirm this sense of sprinkling or moistening. The French 'humecter' precisely captures this technical culinary-liturgical action.

(1×) The action of moistening or dampening grain offerings with oil, specified in Ezekiel 46:14 as part of the prince's daily offering regulations. This technical term describes the necessary preparation step that transforms dry flour into a suitable offering mixture, reflecting the detailed attention to proper ritual process characteristic of Ezekiel's temple vision. MOIST FRESH GREEN
en: to-moisten | es: para-humedecer | fr: humecter | de: [לרס] Ezek 46:14

H7451 Art / Adj-ms (14×)
The evil; the morally wicked thing or behavior that must be purged from the community.
In this particular form — the adjective רַע with the definite article — the expression functions almost as a technical legal phrase in Deuteronomy's covenant law: 'you shall purge the evil from your midst' (Deut 17:12; 19:19; 21:21; 22:21–22, 24). It names not merely a bad quality but the concrete evil deed or person that contaminates the covenant community and must be removed to maintain holiness. The formula recurs with judicial force, marking offenses that carry the death penalty: rebellion against priestly authority, false witness, sexual transgression, and kidnapping. The definite article elevates the adjective to a substantive — 'the evil (thing)' — giving it almost noun-like weight.

the evil (14×) The evil (הָרָע), the substantivized adjective with the definite article designating the morally wicked deed or person that threatens communal holiness. Spanish 'el mal' and French 'le mal' both capture the substantival force. Nearly all 14 occurrences cluster in Deuteronomic purge formulas — 'you shall purge the evil from your midst' (Deut 17:12; 19:19; 21:21; 22:21–22) — functioning as a legal term for covenant-violating behavior warranting capital punishment. The article transforms the adjective into an abstract-yet-concrete noun: not just 'bad' but 'the evil thing itself.' EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: the-evil | es: (lo-malo), el-mal | fr: [(הָרָע)], le-mal | de: [(הָרָע)], der-Boeses Deut 17:12; Deut 19:19; Deut 21:21; Deut 22:21; Deut 22:22

רַע H7451a Art / Adj-fp (241×)

Bad, evil, wicked; spanning moral corruption, harmful calamity, poor quality, ugly appearance, fierce severity, and sad countenance

The adjective ra' is one of the most theologically loaded words in the Hebrew Bible, appearing in the very diagnosis of human fallenness: 'every inclination of the thoughts of the human heart was only evil continually' (Gen 6:5). Yet its range extends well beyond ethics. Pharaoh's lean cows are ra'ot — ugly, not sinful (Gen 41:3). A 'ra' disease' is malignant, not immoral (Deut 28:35). Nehemiah's 'ra' countenance' is simply sad (Neh 2:2). Arabic splits these senses across sharr (moral evil), qabih (ugly), shadid (severe), and hazin (sad), exposing the remarkable semantic compression Hebrew achieves with a single adjective.

1. morally evil, wicked (129×) Morally evil, wicked — describing persons, conduct, hearts, or deeds as ethically corrupt. This is the dominant sense (129x), anchoring the great moral assessments of Scripture. Genesis 6:5 declares every thought of the heart 'only evil continually,' and the Deuteronomistic historians repeatedly condemn kings who 'did evil in the sight of the LORD.' Arabic shirrīr/sharīr, Korean akhan, and Swahili mwovu all converge on moral wickedness, confirming a clear cross-linguistic category. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil | es: mal, mala, malas | fr: mal | de: Boese, Boeses, böse Gen 6:5; Gen 8:21; Gen 28:8; Gen 37:2; Gen 38:7

2. evil, harm, calamity (80×) Evil as substantivized harm, calamity, or disaster — the abstract noun usage where ra'ah denotes misfortune, trouble, or destructive consequence befalling someone. Arabic sharr as abstract noun and Korean ak confirm the shift from adjective to substantive. Deuteronomy warns that disobedience provokes God 'to evil' against the people (Deut 4:25; 9:18), and prophetic judgment oracles announce ra'ah as divine disaster (Num 32:13; Deut 17:2). EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: the-evil | es: el-mal, lo-malo | fr: le-mal | de: der-Boese, der-Boeses Num 32:13; Deut 4:25; Deut 9:18; Deut 17:2; Deut 24:7

3. bad, poor quality (19×) Bad in quality, worthless, or inferior — describing things that are deficient or poor rather than morally blameworthy. Laban cannot speak to Jacob 'good or bad' (Gen 24:50), Pharaoh's gaunt cows are simply in poor condition (Gen 41:21), and Jacob laments his years as 'few and bad' (Gen 47:9). Arabic radī'/sayyi' and the German Böses in qualitative contexts distinguish this from ethical evil. The Levitical laws use it for defective sacrificial animals (Lev 27:10, 12, 14). EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-evil, and-the-bad, are-bad | es: los-malos, mala, mala? | fr: bad, et-mal, et-mauvais | de: Boeses, Böses, bad Gen 24:50; Gen 41:21; Gen 47:9; Lev 27:10

4. ugly, ill-favored (5×) Ugly, ill-favored in physical appearance — concentrated in Pharaoh's dream of the seven 'ugly and gaunt' cows (Gen 41:3, 4, 19, 20, 27). Arabic qabīḥ 'ugly' and German hässlich both shift to dedicated aesthetic vocabulary, proving that translators worldwide recognize this as a distinct visual-appearance sense rather than a moral or qualitative judgment. The repetition in the dream narrative solidifies this as a fixed collocational meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bad-of, and-the-bad, bad-of | es: feas-de, y-feas-de, y-las-feas | fr: et-le-mauvais, et-mauvais-de, mauvais-de | de: hässlich, hässlich-von, und-die-hässlichen Gen 41:3; Gen 41:4; Gen 41:19; Gen 41:20; Gen 41:27

5. severe, fierce, dangerous (5×) Severe, fierce, or dangerous — describing wild animals, terrible plagues, or harsh punishments. A 'ra' beast' has devoured Joseph (Gen 37:20, 33), and Deuteronomy warns of 'ra' diseases' and 'great and terrible signs' (Deut 6:22; 2 Chr 21:19). Arabic shadīd 'severe' and Korean simhan 'intense' mark a scale of danger rather than moral failing. Proverbs 15:10 uses it for 'severe discipline,' confirming the intensity register. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-terrible, evil, severe | es: mala, malas, y-terribles | fr: et-terrible, mal, mauvais | de: Boeses, boese, böses Gen 37:20; Gen 37:33; Deut 6:22; 2Chr 21:19; Prov 15:10

6. sad, displeased (3×) Sad, downcast, or displeased in countenance or spirit. Nehemiah appears before the king with a 'ra' face' — not evil but sorrowful (Neh 2:1-2). The king immediately asks 'why is your face ra'?' recognizing sadness, not wickedness. Arabic ḥazīn 'sad' and Spanish triste confirm the emotional register. Proverbs 25:20 pairs it with singing songs to a heavy heart, reinforcing the affective coloring of this rare but distinct usage. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: sad | es: malo, triste | fr: mal, mauvais | de: Boeses, boese Neh 2:1; Neh 2:2; Prov 25:20

רַע H7451b Art / Adj-ms (105×)

Evil, wickedness; bad, harmful; calamity, distress — covering moral evil, qualitative badness, experiential misfortune, and intentional harm.

Ra' as a substantive noun is the great antonym of tov ('good') in Hebrew moral vocabulary, but its range extends well beyond ethics. It names the 'evil' on the tree of knowledge (Gen 2:9), the 'calamity' God creates alongside peace (Isa 45:7), the 'trouble' of hard times (Ps 49:5), and the 'harm' one person inflicts on another (Jer 7:6). This breadth is theologically significant: Hebrew does not compartmentalize moral evil, natural disaster, and experiential suffering into separate lexemes the way many modern languages do. Arabic sharr similarly spans moral wickedness and misfortune, while German distinguishes Böses (moral) from Unheil (calamity). Korean separates 악 (moral evil) from 재앙 (disaster) and 해 (harm), revealing the three-way split that Hebrew holds in a single word — a fact that makes translating Genesis 2:9 or Isaiah 45:7 a perpetual challenge.

1. evil, wickedness (moral) (83×) Moral evil or wickedness as abstract concept — the dominant sense at 83 occurrences, functioning as the substantive opposite of 'good' in the biblical moral framework. This is the ra' of the tree of knowledge of good and evil (Gen 2:9, 17; 3:5, 22), the 'evil in the sight of the LORD' formula throughout Judges and Kings, and the prophetic denunciation of those who 'devise evil' (Mic 2:1). Spanish el mal, French mal, and German Böses all render this with their primary moral-evil terms. Arabic sharr covers this sense exactly, while Korean 악 (ak) is the standard Sino-Korean term for wickedness. The phrase tov va-ra' ('good and evil') becomes a merism for complete moral knowledge, making this sense foundational to biblical anthropology and theodicy. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil | es: el-mal, mal | fr: mal, mauvais | de: Boeses, Böses, boese Gen 2:9; Gen 2:17; Gen 3:5; Gen 3:22; Gen 31:29

2. bad, of poor quality (9×) Bad, of poor quality, defective, or displeasing — 9 occurrences where ra' functions as a qualitative adjective without primary moral judgment. The 'evil woman' of Prov 6:24 may straddle moral and qualitative senses, but Eccl 9:3 ('this is an evil in all that is done under the sun') uses ra' to describe an undesirable condition rather than moral wickedness per se. In 1 Kings 22:8, 18, Micaiah 'never prophesies good concerning me, but evil' — here ra' means 'unfavorable, unpleasant' rather than morally wicked. Spanish mal/mala and German böse both serve double duty for moral and qualitative badness, but Korean distinguishes 나쁜 (nappeun, 'bad quality') from 악한 (akhan, 'morally wicked'), confirming the sense boundary. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: bad, evil | es: mal, mal?, mala | fr: mal, mauvais | de: Boese, Boeses, boese 1Kgs 22:8; 1Kgs 22:18; Prov 6:24; Prov 17:11; Eccl 9:3

3. calamity, disaster, trouble (7×) Calamity, disaster, distress, misfortune — 7 occurrences where ra' names experiential suffering or adverse circumstances rather than moral character. The Israelites see they are 'in trouble' (be-ra', Exod 5:19), the Psalmist trusts God in 'the day of trouble' (yom ra', Ps 49:5), and Ps 94:13 speaks of 'days of adversity.' Isaiah 45:7 is the theological high point: God declares 'I form light and create darkness, I make peace and create ra" — here calamity is attributed to divine sovereignty. Arabic baliyyah/musibah and Korean 재앙 (jaeang, 'disaster') both select disaster-specific vocabulary, and German Unheil/Not distinguishes this from moral Böses. This sense raises the sharpest theodicy questions in the Hebrew Bible. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil, in-evil, into-trouble | es: en-mal, mal | fr: dans-mal, mauvais | de: Böses, in-Boeses Exod 5:19; Exod 32:22; Ps 37:19; Ps 49:5; Ps 94:13

4. evil, wicked (of persons) (3×) Evil or wicked (of persons) — 3 occurrences where ra' characterizes a person as morally wicked or functions substantively as 'the evil one / evildoer.' In Ps 140:11 'let not an evil man be established in the earth'; in Ps 119:101 'I have restrained my feet from every evil path'; in Prov 29:6 'in the transgression of an evil man there is a snare.' Spanish malo and German Böser both use the adjectival-substantive form for wicked persons. Korean 악인 (akin, 'evil person') lexicalizes this into a compound noun. Though small, this cluster marks a distinct usage where ra' predicates moral character of a human agent rather than naming abstract evil or describing circumstances. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil | es: malo | fr: mal, mauvais | de: Boeses, Böses Ps 119:101; Ps 140:11; Prov 29:6

5. harm, injury (to persons) (3×) Harm, injury, or detriment directed at persons — 3 occurrences where ra' denotes concrete damage or harmful intent rather than abstract wickedness or natural calamity. In Jer 7:6 Israel is warned not to 'do harm' (le-ra') to the alien, orphan, and widow; in Jer 25:7 they provoked God 'to your own harm'; in Eccl 8:9 one person 'exercises authority over another to his harm.' The preposition le- ('to, for') frequently signals this purposive-harm sense. Spanish para mal and German zu Böses both use directional prepositions marking intended detriment. Arabic darar ('harm, damage') and Korean 해 (hae, 'harm, injury') both select concrete-injury vocabulary distinct from abstract moral evil, confirming that this represents a real sense at the boundary between moral and experiential ra'. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: for-evil, for-harm, to-your-harm | es: para-mal | fr: mal, à-mal | de: zu-Boeses Eccl 8:9; Jer 7:6; Jer 25:7

רָעָה H7451c Prep-l / Adj-fs (306×)

Evil, wickedness, calamity, harm, or distress — the noun form encompassing moral badness, disaster, injury, and suffering.

A feminine noun covering the full spectrum of what is bad in the biblical world, from moral wickedness to divine judgment to personal suffering. When paired with a possessor (as in 'the evil of your doings'), it denotes sinful character or intent; when God 'brings ra'ah' upon a nation, it shifts toward calamity or doom. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish distinguishes 'mal' (evil/harm) from 'calamidad' (disaster), and German separates 'Böses' (moral evil) from 'Unheil' (catastrophe) and 'Trübsal' (tribulation), confirming that Hebrew ra'ah genuinely spans these distinct semantic territories rather than being a single vague concept.

1. moral evil or wickedness (234×) The dominant sense: abstract moral evil, wickedness, or sinfulness as a quality or condition. Encompasses nearly 77% of occurrences, appearing in constructs like 'the evil of the heart' (Gen 6:5) and 'repay evil for good' (Gen 44:4). All major target languages converge on a single moral-badness term here — English 'evil,' Spanish 'mal,' French 'mal,' German 'Böses' — confirming the moral-quality reading. Often in opposition to tov ('good'), establishing the fundamental biblical moral axis. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil | es: el-mal, mal, mal? | fr: mal | de: Boese, Boeses, Böses Gen 26:29; Gen 44:4; Gen 50:17; Gen 50:20; Exod 10:10

2. calamity or disaster (25×) External catastrophe, disaster, or doom, typically sent by God or experienced as judgment. Distinguished from sense 1 by the absence of moral agency in the sufferer — the ra'ah comes upon them. Key passages include 1 Kings 9:9 ('brought all this calamity upon them') and Judges 20:34,41 where military disaster overwhelms Benjamin. Spanish 'calamidad' and German 'Unheil' appear specifically in these contexts, signaling that translators perceive a genuinely different semantic frame from moral evil. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-for-calamity, and-his-disaster, for-calamity | es: de-mal, el-mal, en-la-calamidad | fr: dans-mal, et-mal, et-à-mal | de: Boeses, das-Unheil, der-Boese Gen 19:19; Judg 20:34; Judg 20:41; 1Kgs 9:9; 2Kgs 6:33

3. harm or injury (20×) Targeted harm or injury directed at a specific person, focusing on the damaging effect rather than moral character or cosmic judgment. Genesis 31:52 ('this heap is witness... that I will not pass over... to do you harm') and Psalm 35:4 ('let those who devise harm against me') illustrate the interpersonal, intentional dimension. German 'Harm' appears here alongside the usual 'Böses,' and Spanish uses 'mi mal' (my harm) with possessive constructions, marking this as personally directed injury. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: for-evil, for-harm, my-harm | es: de-mi-mal, mal, mi-mal | fr: mal, pour-mal, pour-mauvaise | de: fuer-Boese, fuer-Boeses, mein-harm Gen 31:52; Deut 29:21; Judg 2:15; 2Sam 18:32; Ps 35:4

4. evil deeds or evils (14×) Plural concrete evil deeds or wicked acts — the countable, specific actions rather than the abstract quality. Deuteronomy 31:17 ('many evils and troubles shall come upon them') and Psalm 40:12 ('innumerable evils have surrounded me') exemplify this pluralized, enumerative usage. Spanish shifts to 'maldades' (wicked deeds) and 'males' (evils), and French uses 'maux' (plural ills), confirming the move from abstract quality to discrete sinful actions. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-evils-of, evil-things, evils | es: las-maldades, lo-malo, los-males | fr: et-mauvais, le-maux, mal | de: Boeses, der-Streben, der-evils Deut 31:17; Deut 31:21; Deut 32:23; Ps 40:12

5. trouble or distress (13×) Subjective trouble, affliction, or distress experienced by a person — emphasizing felt suffering rather than moral fault or external catastrophe. Numbers 11:15 ('let me not see my distress') and Nehemiah 1:3 ('the survivors are in great trouble') center on the experiential dimension. German 'Trübsal' (tribulation/affliction) appears in this cluster, distinct from 'Böses,' and Spanish 'malestar' (unease/distress) confirms the subjective-suffering reading. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: are-evils-of, calamity, evil | es: calamidad, de-males, de-su-malestar | fr: dans-mal, mal, mauvais | de: Boeses, Trübsal, in-Boeses Num 11:15; Num 35:23; 1Chr 7:23; Neh 1:3; Ps 27:5

רֵעַ H7452 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (3×)

shouting, loud cry; roar (possibly thunder)

This noun describes loud vocal sound—whether human shouting or possibly the roar of thunder. The word appears in contexts of commotion and noise, though textual difficulties make some instances uncertain. Exodus may refer to the sound of people shouting, Micah to loud distress crying, and Job possibly to thunder's roar announcing God's presence, though alternative readings exist for several passages.

(3×) The term designates loud, forceful sound in three contested passages. Exodus 32:17 describes 'the sound of the people in its shouting' (or 'as they shout') when they worshiped the golden calf—the noise of celebration that Moses heard descending the mountain. Job 36:33 is textually difficult; some read 'his thunder' (ra'mo) while the MT has 'his roar' (re'o), referring to the storm announcing God. Micah 4:9 asks 'Why do you cry out with loud crying?'—though again, the exact reading is disputed. What's consistent is loud, attention-getting sound—whether human or natural. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-thunder, in-its-shouting, loud-cry | es: en-su-griterío, grito?, su-trueno | fr: dans-son-shouting, mauvais, son-רֵעַ-lui | de: Boeses, [רֵעַ], in-sein-shouting Exod 32:17; Job 36:33; Mic 4:9

רֵעַ H7453 N-ms (191×)

Friend, companion, neighbor, fellow; a person connected by proximity, affection, or shared activity.

Rea' is one of the most socially charged nouns in the Hebrew Bible, spanning the full range of interpersonal connection. In the legal codes of Exodus and Deuteronomy it means 'neighbor' — the person next to you who must not be robbed, deceived, or envied (Exod 20:17; Lev 19:18). But in narrative, the same word describes deep personal friendship: Hushai is David's rea' (2 Sam 15:37), and Moses speaks with God 'as a man speaks to his friend' (Exod 33:11). The multilingual evidence is especially revealing here — Arabic splits the semantic space sharply between jar ('neighbor'), sadiq ('true friend'), and sahib/rafiq ('associate/companion'), while Hebrew holds all three under one word. Korean similarly deploys 이웃 for proximity and 친구 for affection. This compression is theologically significant: in Hebrew, the one you are commanded to love is simultaneously your neighbor, your companion, and your friend.

1. neighbor, fellow man (120×) Neighbor or fellow member of the community — the dominant legal-ethical sense at 120 occurrences. This is the rea' of the Ten Commandments (Exod 20:17; Deut 5:20), the Holiness Code's 'love your neighbor' (Lev 19:18), and the prophetic denunciations of social injustice. Arabic jar (جار, neighbor) and Korean 이웃 consistently mark this as proximity-and-obligation rather than affection. The context is overwhelmingly legal, ethical, or contractual: do not steal from, lie about, or covet your rea'. Spanish prójimo captures this well — literally 'the one near.' LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: his-neighbor, neighbor-his | es: a-su-prójimo, su-prójimo | fr: prochain-son, son-prochain | de: Nachbar-sein, sein-Nachbar, sein-Naechster Exod 11:2; Exod 20:17; Exod 21:14; Exod 21:18

2. friend (48×) Friend, one bound by personal affection and loyalty — 48 occurrences, concentrated in narrative and wisdom texts. Judah's rea' Hirah the Adullamite (Gen 38:12, 20), Moses as God's rea' (Exod 33:11), Jonathan warning David through rea' networks, and Proverbs' reflections on faithful friendship (Prov 17:17; 27:6, 9-10). Arabic sadiq (صَدِيق) and Korean 친구 select true-friend vocabulary, distinct from the proximity sense. The emotional and volitional dimensions — loyalty, trust, mutual delight — are what separate this from sense 1. LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: and-companion, and-friend, companion-his | es: a-su-prójimo, amigo-de-él, amigo-tuyo | fr: companion-son, et-prochain, friend-son | de: Naechster, companion-sein, das-Boese Gen 38:12; Gen 38:20; Exod 32:27; Exod 33:11; Deut 13:6

3. companion, associate (21×) Companion, associate, or fellow defined by shared circumstance or activity — 21 occurrences. This sense covers traveling companions (Gen 43:33), fellow soldiers (Judg 7:13-14), co-workers, and conversation partners. The key distinction from sense 2 is that the bond is circumstantial rather than affective: they are together because of what they do, not because they chose each other. Arabic sahib (صَاحِب) and rafiq (رَفِيق, comrade) mark this situational association. The reciprocal construction 'each to his companion' (ish el re'ehu) is characteristic, appearing in battle and communal action scenes. LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: against-his-companion, against-his-fellow, against-his-neighbor | es: a-prójimo-de-él, a-su-compañero, a-tu-prójimo | fr: contre-son-companion, contre-son-fellow, de-son-prochain | de: Naechster, dein-companion, gegen-sein-companion Gen 31:49; Gen 43:33; Exod 2:13; Exod 18:7; Judg 7:13

4. (1×) Lover or paramour in a sexually charged context — the single occurrence at Jer 3:1, where Israel is compared to a woman who 'goes to many lovers' (re'im). The multilingual evidence is striking: English renders 'lovers,' Spanish amantes, while German and French retain the more neutral Naechster/prochain, perhaps softening the metaphor. Jeremiah is using the word's relational warmth to sharpen the accusation of infidelity — these are not mere neighbors but intimate partners chosen over the covenant husband. LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: with-lovers | es: con-amantes | fr: prochain | de: Naechster Jer 3:1

5. (1×) Counterpart or matching half — the single occurrence at Gen 15:10 in the covenant-cutting ceremony, where each animal piece is set 'opposite its companion' (re'ehu). Here rea' means the corresponding part of a divided whole. German dem anderen ('the other one') and Spanish compañero de él capture this abstract sense of pairing. The theological setting — God's covenant with Abraham — gives even this technical usage a relational resonance: the halves belong together. LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: its-companion | es: compañero-de-él | fr: son-compagnon | de: dem-anderen Gen 15:10

רֵעַ H7454 Prep-l / N-msc / 1cs (2×)

thought, purpose; the inner intentions or mental activity of a person, especially God

A noun meaning thought or purpose, appearing only in Psalm 139. Verse 2 speaks of God knowing 'my thought,' while verse 17 marvels at the preciousness of 'your thoughts' (God's). The term captures the internal, intentional dimension of mind—what one purposes or contemplates. In this psalm of divine omniscience, it underscores that even hidden mental life lies open before God.

(2×) Denotes thought or purpose, the internal aims and mental processes of a person. Psalm 139:2 uses 'my thought' (רֵעִי) in parallel with other verbs of knowing, emphasizing God's penetration of the psalmist's inner life. Verse 17 reverses the perspective: 'How precious are your thoughts to me, O God'—God's purposes (רֵעֶיךָ) become the object of meditation. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'pensamiento', French 'pensée', German 'Gedanke') uniformly translate 'thought,' though the underlying Hebrew may carry connotations of intention and aim beyond mere cognition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-thought, your-thoughts | es: mi-pensamiento, tus-pensamientos | fr: pensée, à-pensée | de: dein-Gedanken, mein-Gedanke Ps 139:2; Ps 139:17

רָעַ H7455 Prep-b / N-msc (19×)

Badness, wickedness, moral evil (especially of human deeds); sadness of face or heart; poor quality or ugliness.

The noun roa is the abstract counterpart of the adjective ra ('bad, evil') and concentrates the concept of badness into a single substantive. Its most frequent use is in the devastating prophetic formula roa ma'alelim, 'the evil of your deeds,' which echoes across Deuteronomy, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Hosea as God's indictment of Israel's persistent unfaithfulness (Deut 28:20; Isa 1:16; Jer 4:4; 23:2). Spanish maldad, French mal, and German Boeses all reach for abstract-evil vocabulary in these passages. Yet roa can also name the sadness visible on Nehemiah's face as he stands before the Persian king (Neh 2:2) — a meaning confirmed when Hindi renders it as udasi (sadness) rather than burai (wickedness). And in one vivid instance, it describes sheer physical ugliness: Pharaoh's gaunt cattle, of a 'badness' never before seen in Egypt (Gen 41:19).

1. wickedness, moral evil (16×) Wickedness or moral evil — the abstract quality of badness in human conduct, overwhelmingly found in the prophetic accusation 'the evil of your deeds' (roa ma'alelim). Sixteen occurrences span Deuteronomy through Hosea: God threatens to send curses 'because of the evil of your deeds' (Deut 28:20), Isaiah commands 'put away the evil of your deeds from before my eyes' (Isa 1:16), and Jeremiah repeats the indictment across multiple oracles (Jer 4:4; 21:12; 23:2, 22; 25:5; 26:3; 44:22). Spanish maldad de, French mal de, and German Boeses converge on abstract-wickedness terms. Hosea 9:15 and Psalm 28:4 confirm the same usage outside the Jeremianic corpus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-according-to-the-evil-of, and-from-evil-of, evil-of | es: de-maldad, de-malo, la-maldad-de | fr: de-mal, et-de-mal, et-malheur | de: Boese-von, Boeses, Boeses-von Deut 28:20; 1Sam 17:28; Ps 28:4; Isa 1:16; Jer 4:4

2. sadness, displeasure of countenance (2×) Sadness, displeasure, or sorrow visible in countenance or heart — a specialized affective meaning distinct from moral evil. Two occurrences capture this nuance: Nehemiah 2:2, where the king asks 'why is your face sad?' (roa panim), and Ecclesiastes 7:3, 'by sadness of face the heart is made glad' (roa lev). Spanish tristeza de and French tristesse shift to emotion vocabulary here, and German Truebsal distinguishes this from the moral register. The Persian king's concern for Nehemiah's downcast appearance makes the affective reading unmistakable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: by-sadness-of, sadness-of | es: con-tristeza-de, maldad-de | fr: [רע], dans-רע | de: Boeses, in-Boeses Neh 2:2; Eccl 7:3

3. bad quality, ugliness (1×) Poor quality, ugliness, or physical deficiency — describing the outward badness of appearance rather than moral character. One clear occurrence in Genesis 41:19, where Pharaoh recalls 'seven other cows came up after them, poor and very ugly and gaunt — I have never seen such badness (roa) in all the land of Egypt.' Spanish fealdad (ugliness), French laideur, and German

Haesslichkeit all deploy aesthetic-deficiency vocabulary, confirming that this is a genuine sensory-evaluative sense, not a moral one. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: for-badness | es: para-fealdad | fr: pour-badness | de: an-Hässlichkeit Gen 41:19

רָעֵב H7456 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (13×)

To be hungry, to hunger (Qal intransitive); to cause to hunger, to let go hungry (Hiphil causative).

Ra'ev is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for the visceral experience of hunger. In its Qal stem it describes the state of being hungry — from Joseph's Egypt where 'all the land was famished' (Gen 41:55) to the promise that those who trust the LORD 'shall not lack any good thing' while 'young lions suffer want and hunger' (Ps 34:10). Isaiah deploys it in sharp contrasts: 'my servants shall eat, but you shall be hungry' (Isa 65:13). Proverbs observes that 'a sluggard's appetite goes hungry' (Prov 19:15) and that even a thief is pitied 'if he steals to satisfy his hunger' (Prov 6:30). The rarer Hiphil stem flips the subject: God 'let you hunger' in the wilderness before feeding Israel with manna (Deut 8:3) — a formative deprivation. Spanish hambre, French faim, and German Hunger all derive from the same basic human experience, but the Hiphil's theological edge — God deliberately causing hunger as pedagogy — gives the causative sense a depth beyond mere physiology.

1. to be hungry (11×) To be hungry, to experience hunger — the Qal intransitive sense describing the state or condition of hunger in all persons and tenses. The 11 occurrences range across genres: narrative ('the whole land of Egypt was famished,' Gen 41:55), psalm ('the young lions suffer want and are hungry,' Ps 34:10; 'if I were hungry I would not tell you,' Ps 50:12), prophetic promise and threat ('they shall not hunger nor thirst,' Isa 49:10; 'you shall be hungry,' Isa 65:13), wisdom ('he who steals because he is hungry,' Prov 6:30), and petition ('we shall not see famine,' Jer 42:14). Spanish tener-hambre, French avoir-faim, and German Hunger-haben all construct the state with a noun rather than a pure verb, while Hebrew expresses it as a stative verbal form — a subtle grammatical difference that reveals how differently languages encode bodily states. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: I-were-hungry, and-hunger, and-hungry | es: Y-tuvo-hambre, tendremos-hambre, tendrá-hambre | fr: affamé, avoir-faim, et-avoir-faim | de: Hunger, [יִרְעַב], [יִרְעָבוּן] Gen 41:55; Ps 34:10; Ps 50:12; Prov 6:30; Prov 19:15

2. to cause hunger (2×) To cause to hunger, to make or let someone go hungry — the Hiphil (causative) stem, where the subject inflicts hunger upon another. Only 2 occurrences, but both are theologically charged. Deuteronomy 8:3 is the key text: God 'let you hunger and fed you with manna,' a deliberate divine pedagogy where hunger precedes provision to teach dependence — the very verse Jesus quotes when tempted in the wilderness (Matt 4:4). Proverbs 10:3 offers the counterpart: 'the LORD does not let the righteous go hungry, but he thwarts the craving of the wicked.' Spanish hacer-hambrear and French laisser-avoir-faim both require causative periphrasis, confirming the distinct grammatical and semantic weight of this stem. The Hiphil transforms hunger from something suffered into something administered — a tool of divine formation. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: and-let-you-hunger, will-let-hunger | es: hará-hambrear, y-te-hizo-pasar-hambre | fr: et-laisse-tu-hunger, יַרְעִיב | de: [יַרְעִיב], und-lass-du-Hunger Deut 8:3; Prov 10:3

רָעֵב H7457 Conj-w | Adj-mp (20×)

Hungry, famished — describing persons in need of food, often paired with 'thirsty' or 'weary' in contexts of justice and mercy.

An adjective describing the state of being hungry, used both attributively and substantively ('the hungry'). It appears prominently in wisdom and prophetic texts addressing social justice: feeding the hungry is a mark of righteousness (Isa 58:7, 10; Ezek 18:7, 16), while withholding food from them condemns (Job 22:7). Hannah's song celebrates God's reversal — 'the hungry cease to hunger' (1 Sam 2:5). The word pairs naturally with 'thirsty' and 'weary' to depict extremity of need (2 Sam 17:29; Ps 107:5). One striking figurative use appears in Job 18:12, where a man's strength itself 'grows hungry' — that is, wastes away.

hungry, famished (20×) Hungry or famished, describing persons deprived of food, used as both adjective and substantive ('the hungry'). Appears in contexts of physical extremity alongside 'thirsty' and 'weary' (2 Sam 17:29; 2 Kgs 7:12; Ps 107:5), in prophetic calls for justice — feeding the hungry as righteousness (Isa 58:7, 10; Ezek 18:7, 16), withholding food as wickedness (Job 22:7) — and in divine reversal theology (1 Sam 2:5; Ps 146:7). One metaphorical use describes strength itself as 'hungry,' i.e., failing (Job 18:12). Spanish 'hambriento,' German 'Hunger' capture the same visceral sense. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: and-from-hungry, and-hungry, and-the-hungry | es: Hambrientos, a-los-hambrientos, al-hambriento | fr: [לרעב], [לרעבים], [רעבה] | de: Hunger, Hungersnot, [ומרעב] 1Sam 2:5; 2Sam 17:29; 2Kgs 7:12; Job 5:5; Job 18:12

רָעָב H7458 Conj-w (101×)

Famine or hunger; a severe widespread food shortage affecting a land, or the personal physical sensation of being hungry.

Ra'av appears throughout the Old Testament narrative as one of the great trials of covenant life. The patriarchal famines (Gen 12:10; 26:1; 41:27-57) drive the plot of Genesis forward, and famine serves as a covenant curse alongside sword and pestilence in the prophets (Jer 14:12; Ezek 5:12). In its less frequent but important personal sense, ra'av describes the gnawing physical sensation of hunger felt by individuals, as when Israel is disciplined 'with hunger and thirst' (Deut 28:48). German distinguishes well between 'Hungersnot' (famine as national disaster) and 'Hunger' (personal hunger), a distinction the Hebrew word carries within a single lexeme. French 'famine' and Spanish 'hambre' each cover both senses.

1. famine (widespread food shortage) (90×) A prolonged, severe food shortage afflicting a land or region, often a specific historical famine driving the biblical narrative. The patriarchal famines of Genesis (12:10; 26:1; 41:27-57), the famine of David's reign (2 Sam 21:1), and the siege famines of Kings and Jeremiah all use ra'av this way. German 'Hungersnot' and Spanish 'el hambre' (with article, as a known calamity) capture this collective, national dimension. FAMINE AND HUNGER

en: the-famine | es: el-hambre | fr: la-famine, le-famine | de: Hungersnot, der-Hunger, der-Hungersnot Gen 12:10; Gen 26:1; Gen 41:27

2. hunger (physical sensation) (11×) The personal physical sensation of being hungry, or starvation as individual suffering. Deuteronomy 28:48 pairs it with thirst as covenant discipline; Isaiah 5:13 and Lamentations 5:10 describe hunger consuming individuals. German 'Hunger' (without '-not'), Spanish 'de hambre' (partitive), and French 'par la famine' reflect the shift from a societal event to a bodily state affecting persons directly. FAMINE AND HUNGER

en: by-famine, famine, for-their-hunger | es: de-hambre, el-hambre, en-hambre | fr: dans-hunger, famine, par-la-famine | de: Hunger, Hungersnot, famine Deut 28:48; Deut 32:24; 2Chr 32:11; Neh 9:15; Isa 5:13

רְעָבוֹן H7459 N-ms (3×)

hunger, famine, severe lack of food

This noun designates serious food shortage or famine conditions. Genesis uses it for the hunger afflicting Jacob's household during the Egyptian famine, while the Psalms employ it to contrast righteous provision with scarcity. The term emphasizes sustained deprivation rather than momentary appetite, representing life-threatening lack of sustenance that drives people to desperate measures like migration to Egypt.

(3×) The word refers to severe hunger or famine-level scarcity. In Genesis 42:19 and 33, Joseph commands his brothers to take grain back 'for the hunger of your households'—the famine conditions driving their repeated trips to Egypt for survival. Psalm 37:19 promises the righteous will be satisfied 'in days of famine,' using the term for times when food scarcity threatens life. Unlike ordinary hunger, this suggests critical shortage that endangers families and forces major decisions like foreign migration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: famine, hunger-of | es: hambre, hambre-de | fr: faim-de, famine | de: Hungersnot, für-den-Hunger Gen 42:19; Gen 42:33; Ps 37:19

רָעַד H7460 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (3×)

tremble, quake (with fear or awe)

This verb describes trembling or shaking, typically from fear, awe, or divine presence. The earth trembles at God's gaze in theophanic imagery. Daniel stands trembling after an angelic encounter. Ezra describes Jerusalem's residents sitting and trembling in the rain, overwhelmed by consciousness of sin. The shaking may be physical or emotional, but consistently indicates a response to something overwhelming—divine presence, prophetic revelation, or moral crisis.

(3×) The term captures the trembling response to overwhelming circumstances. Psalm 104:32 uses it in theophany: 'He looks at the earth, and it trembles'—creation itself shaking before the Creator's gaze. Daniel 10:11 describes the prophet's physical state after the vision: 'I stood trembling,' unable to function normally after encountering the angelic messenger. Ezra 10:9 depicts the gathered assembly sitting and 'trembling because of the matter and because of the heavy rain'—shaking from both conviction over intermarriage and exposure to the elements. The verb always indicates involuntary shaking before something greater than oneself. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-it-trembles, trembling | es: temblando, y-tiembla | fr: [מרעידים], et-frisson, frissonner | de: [מרעיד], [מרעידים], und-es-zittert Ezra 10:9; Ps 104:32; Dan 10:11

H7461 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

trembling, shaking (with fear)

This noun with conjunction appears in Job 4:14, where Eliphaz describes his terrifying nocturnal vision. The word captures involuntary physical shaking produced by fear—not deliberate motion but the body's uncontrolled response to terror. In Eliphaz's account, dread came upon him and trembling seized all his bones as the spirit passed before his face. The Spanish 'temblor' and the pairing with 'dread' emphasize this is fear-induced trembling.

(1×) Physical trembling or shaking caused by fear, described in Job 4:14 as Eliphaz's bodily response to his supernatural vision. The word is paired with 'pachad' (dread/terror) to create a complete picture of overwhelming fear affecting both emotion and physiology—the spiritual encounter produces not just mental distress but involuntary physical shaking throughout his entire frame. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-trembling | es: y-temblor | fr: et-וּרְעָדָה | de: [וּרְעָדָה] Job 4:14

רַעַד H7461a Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

trembling, shaking; involuntary bodily response to fear or awe

A noun denoting trembling or shaking, typically in response to fear. Exodus 15:15 describes how trembling seizes the inhabitants of Canaan at news of Israel's deliverance. Psalm 55:5 pairs 'fear and trembling' as emotional responses to distress. The word captures the visceral, physical dimension of terror.

(2×) Refers to trembling or shaking, a physiological response to fear or dread. Exodus 15:15 uses it in the Song of the Sea: 'trembling seizes' (יֹאחֲזֵמוֹ רָעַד) the chiefs of Edom and Moab at Israel's mighty deliverance. Psalm 55:5 pairs it with 'fear' (יָרְאָה) in a merism of emotional distress: 'fear and trembling come upon me.' Spanish 'temblor', French 'tremblement', and German 'trembling' all reflect the involuntary shaking that overtakes the body when confronted with danger or the numinous. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-trembling, trembling | es: temblor, y-temblor | fr: et-tremblement, tremblant | de: trembling, und-trembling Exod 15:15; Ps 55:5

רְעָדָה H7461b Prep-b / N-fs (3×)

trembling, fearful shaking

This feminine noun describes the trembling or shaking that seizes people in fear or awe. Paired with words for fear and terror, it appears in contexts of divine encounter or overwhelming threat. Psalm 2 calls for serving God 'with trembling'—reverent fear appropriate to His majesty. Psalm 48 uses it for the trembling that seized hostile kings when they saw Jerusalem. Isaiah describes sinners in Zion gripped by fearful trembling at God's consuming fire.

(3×) The word designates the physical shaking that accompanies intense fear or reverence. Psalm 2:11 commands 'Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling'—trembling as the proper posture before divine sovereignty. Psalm 48:6 (Hebrew verse 7) describes trembling seizing enemy kings: 'Fear seized them there, pain as of a woman in labor,' comparing their panic to birth pangs. Isaiah 33:14 portrays Jerusalem's sinners asking 'Who can dwell with consuming fire?'—trembling has seized the godless at recognition of God's holiness. In each case, trembling is the involuntary physical manifestation of appropriate fear. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: has-seized, trembling, with-trembling | es: con-temblor, temblor | fr: [רְעָדָה], dans-frémissement, frémissement | de: [רְעָדָה], mit-trembling, trembling Ps 2:11; Ps 48:6; Isa 33:14

בֵּית־עֵקֶד הָרֹעִים H7462a Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

the shepherds (participle with article as substantive)

This phrase 'the shepherds' appears in 2 Kings 10:12 as part of a place name, 'Beth-eked of the shepherds' (binding-house of the shepherds). Jehu encounters Ahaziah's relatives at this location during his purge of Ahab's house. The site name likely indicated a gathering place or shelter used by shepherds, though the exact location remains disputed. Modern scholars have suggested Beit Kad near Mount Gilboa based on Survey of Western Palestine references.

(1×) A component of the place name 'Beth-eked ha-ro'im' (the shepherds' binding-house), indicating a location associated with shepherding activities in 2 Kings 10:12. The participle functioning as a noun ('the ones who shepherd') with the definite article suggests this was a known landmark, probably a structure where shepherds gathered to shear sheep or bind fleeces, creating a geographical reference point in the narrative. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: of-the-shepherds | es: los-pastores | fr: de-le-bergers | de: von-der-shepherds 2Kgs 10:12

רָעָה H7462b V-Qal-Imperf-1cs / 3fse (156×)

To shepherd, tend, or pasture flocks; also the agent noun 'shepherd'; by extension, to graze (intransitive) or to devour figuratively.

Few Hebrew words carry as much theological weight as רָעָה (ra'ah). From Abel's literal sheep-keeping in Genesis 4:2 to God's own declaration 'I myself will shepherd my flock' in Ezekiel 34:15, this verb bridges the mundane world of animal husbandry and the exalted imagery of divine kingship. The Qal participle רֹעֶה (ro'eh) became the standard title for Israel's leaders — shepherd-kings whose failure prompted God to take over (Ezek 34). The intransitive sense describes animals feeding on pasture, clearly marked in Spanish by pacer/pastar (versus the transitive apacentar). A rarer figurative extension turns grazing into devouring — 'a wild boar feeds on it' (Ps 80:13) — where the pastoral image inverts into destruction.

1. shepherd (agent noun) (76×) The Qal active participle used as an agent noun: 'shepherd, herdsman, pastor.' With 76 occurrences this is the most frequent usage, functioning as a standalone substantive rather than a verbal form. It appears across singular and plural, masculine and feminine (Rachel as רֹעָה in Gen 29:9), construct chains ('shepherds of Israel,' Ezek 34:2), and with the article. Cognate languages confirm the pattern: Aramaic רָעָא, Arabic ڕاعي, all denoting the occupation. The theological metaphor is paramount — Psalm 23:1 'The LORD is my shepherd' (רֹעִי) and Ezekiel 34's extended shepherd allegory both rest on this participial noun. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: a-shepherd, in-the-land, shepherd | es: los-pastores, pastor, pastor, | fr: [רֹעֶה], berger, le-mauvais | de: Boeses, Hirte, shepherd Gen 4:2; Gen 46:32; Gen 46:34; Gen 47:3; Exod 2:17

2. to shepherd, tend, pasture (60×) The transitive verbal sense: to shepherd, tend, or pasture a flock (or, metaphorically, a people). The subject is the shepherd acting upon the flock as object. Covers all finite conjugations — perfect, imperfect, imperative, infinitive — across 60 occurrences. Spanish apacentar ('to pasture [transitively]') and French paître/faire paître cleanly distinguish this from intransitive grazing. Key passages: Genesis 30:31 ('I will again shepherd your flock'), Micah 5:3 ('he shall shepherd in the strength of the LORD'), and Micah 7:14 ('Shepherd your people with your staff'). SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: I-will-shepherd, Shepherd, and-I-shepherded | es: Apacienta, Y-apacentaré, apacentan | fr: [תרעה], celui-qui-fait-paître, celui-qui-paît | de: Boeses, Hirte, der-Boeses Gen 30:31; Gen 30:36; Gen 36:24; Gen 37:13; Gen 37:16

3. to graze, feed (intransitive) (17×) The intransitive sense: to graze or feed, with the animal as subject rather than a human shepherd. Distinguished cross-linguistically by Spanish pacer/pastar (versus transitive apacentar), Korean 풀을 뜯다 ('to pluck grass'), and Swahili -lisha (self-feeding context). The 17 occurrences describe cattle grazing by the Nile (Gen 41:2, 18), livestock feeding near Sinai (Exod 34:3), and animals at pasture in prophetic imagery (Isa 27:10). Proverbs 15:14 extends this metaphorically: 'the mouth of fools feeds on folly.' SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: and-he-will-graze, and-they-grazed, and-will-graze | es: Y-pacerán, Y-pastarán, apacentar, | fr: –graze, et-ils-grazed, et-mal | de: Hirte, Streben, soll-graze Gen 41:2; Gen 41:18; Exod 34:3; Job 1:14; Prov 15:14

4. to consume, devour (figurative) (3×) A figurative-destructive extension where 'feeding on' becomes 'devouring' or 'consuming' with harmful effect. Only 3 occurrences, but vividly distinct: the wild boar that 'feeds on' (= ravages) the vine in Psalm 80:13, Job 24:21's description of the wicked who 'feeds on' the barren woman (i.e., exploits her), and Jeremiah 2:16's 'they have broken the crown of your head.' Spanish devorar/quebrar and Arabic رَعَى with destructive coloring confirm this is a genuine semantic extension, not a separate root — the pastoral image deliberately inverted to signal violation and ruin. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: feeds-on-it, have-broken, he-feeds-on | es: Que-devora, la-devora, te-quebraron | fr: paître | de: Boeses, feeds-auf-es, weiden Job 24:21; Ps 80:13; Jer 2:16

רָעָה H7462c Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

To associate with, companion; to graze, feed, tend flocks or land

A secondary root רָעָה (II), distinct from the common shepherd verb, carries the social meaning of companionship and association. In Proverbs it appears repeatedly as a warning: 'one who companions with fools' (Prov 13:20), 'one who associates with gluttons' (28:7), 'one who keeps company with prostitutes' (29:3). Spanish captures both dimensions — 'te asocies' (associate) versus 'apacienta' (tend/graze) — revealing how translation traditions sometimes blur the two roots. The pastoral sense surfaces in Psalm 37:3 ('cultivate faithfulness') and Isaiah 11:7, where the cow and bear graze together in messianic peace.

1. to associate with, be a companion (4×) To associate with someone, be a companion or friend, form a close relationship. The Qal participle רֹעֶה functions as 'one who companions with' in Proverbs' wisdom warnings: fools (13:20), gluttons (28:7), and prostitutes (29:3). English renders 'companion/the-ones-who-companion,' while Spanish uses 'te asocies' and 'el que se junta con' — both relational rather than pastoral vocabulary. Prov 22:24 extends the sense to the Hitpael: 'do not make friendship' with an angry person. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: but-one-who-companions, but-the-companion-of, make-friendship | es: te-asocies, y-el-que-apacienta, y-el-que-se-junta-con | fr: et-paître, paître | de: [תהרע], und-Boeses Prov 13:20; Prov 22:24; Prov 28:7; Prov 29:3

2. to graze, feed, tend (2×) To graze, feed, or tend in a pastoral-agricultural sense, overlapping with the much more common רָעָה I (shepherd). In Psalm 37:3 the imperative 'cultivate faithfulness' (or 'feed on faithfulness,' depending on interpretation) uses this root. Isaiah 11:7 describes the cow and bear grazing together. Spanish distinguishes the two passages with 'apacienta' (tend) and 'pacer an' (they will graze), while English varies between 'cultivate' and 'will graze,' reflecting ongoing lexicographic debate about whether these belong to root I or root II. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: and-cultivate, will-graze | es: pacerán, y-apacienta | fr: [תרעינה], et-berger | de: [תרעינה], und-cultivate Ps 37:3; Isa 11:7

רָעָה H7462d V-Piel-Perf-3ms (1×)

had befriended, served as companion or best man (Piel perfect)

This denominative Piel verb appears uniquely in Judges 14:20, describing Samson's companion who had served as his 'best man' at his wedding. The verb derives from 'rea' (friend, companion) and in this intensive stem means to act as a special friend or groomsman. When Samson's relationship with his Philistine wife disintegrates, she is given to this friend who had attended him at the wedding. The term captures a specific social role in ancient wedding customs.

(1×) The act of serving as a close companion or attendant, specifically functioning as the friend of the bridegroom in Judges 14:20. This technical term describes the individual who accompanied and supported the groom during wedding festivities, similar to the modern 'best man.' The ironic tragedy of the Samson narrative is heightened when this trusted friend receives Samson's wife after the marriage collapses. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: had-befriended | es: fue-compañero | fr: avait-befriended | de: hatte-befriended Judg 14:20

רֵעֶה H7463 Conj-w / N-msc (4×)

friend (formal title or intimate companion)

This noun denotes a friend or companion, appearing both as a technical title ('the king's friend'—a royal courtier position) and in simple relational sense. The term represents a variant form of the more common word for friend, with the technical usage especially notable in court contexts.

(4×) Designates a friend, with specialized use as a royal title. The technical phrase רֵעֵה הַמֶּלֶךְ ('the king's friend') appears in 1 Kings 4:5 (= 'the friend' in 1 Chronicles 27:33) and 2 Samuel 15:37, 16:16 as 'David's friend'—a formal court position, likely a trusted counselor. Proverbs 27:10 uses it in simple relational sense: 'your father's friend' (Ketiv רֵעֵהוּ; Qere reads the more common רֵעֲךָ). This represents an alternate form of רֵעַ with identical meaning. Multilingual glosses show the friendship sense: Spanish 'amigo de,' French 'friend de,' German 'friend von'—though the technical court office is lost in translation, requiring contextual understanding of ancient Near Eastern royal administration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-friend-of], friend-of | es: [y-amigo], amigo-de | fr: et-[ורעה], friend-de | de: [[ורעה]], friend-von 2Sam 15:37; 2Sam 16:16; 1Kgs 4:5; Prov 27:10

רֵעָה H7464 N-fpc / 3fs (2×)

female companions, attendants; women who accompany or associate closely with someone

A feminine plural noun meaning companions or attendants, specifically female associates. Judges 11:37-38 speaks of Jephthah's daughter and 'her companions' going to the mountains. Psalm 45:14 describes the royal bride's procession with 'her companions' following her. The term emphasizes close association and shared experience among women.

(2×) Denotes female companions or attendants, women closely associated with another woman. In Judges 11:38, Jephthah's daughter takes 'her companions' (רֵעוֹתֶיהָ) to mourn her virginity in the hills —a poignant moment of shared feminine grief. Psalm 45:14 uses the term in a royal wedding scene: the bride is escorted by 'her companions' (virgin attendants) into the king's presence. The Ketiv/Qere variation in Judges (רעיתי/רעותי) reflects textual fluidity, but the sense remains consistent: intimate female associates who share significant life moments. COMPANION ASSOCIATE en: and-her-companions, her-companions | es: sus-compañeras, y-sus-compañeras | fr: compagnon, et-sa-compagnons | de: ihr-companions, und-ihr-companions Judg 11:38; Ps 45:14

רָעַע H7465 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

broken, shattered (participle describing a broken object)

This participle appears in Proverbs 25:19, comparing confidence in an unfaithful person to 'a broken tooth and a foot out of joint.' The verb 'ra'a' (Aramaic loan-word equivalent to Hebrew 'ratsats') means to break or shatter. The image is visceral—just as a broken tooth fails when you try to chew and a disabled foot collapses when you try to walk, so an unreliable person fails precisely when you need them most. The Spanish 'roto' (broken) captures this sense of structural failure.

(1×) Describing something broken or shattered to the point of uselessness, applied in Proverbs 25:19 to a tooth that cannot fulfill its function. The participle functions adjectivally to characterize the tooth's state—not merely damaged but broken in a way that makes it painful and unreliable to use, thus serving as an apt metaphor for the person who betrays trust at a critical moment. BRUISED CRUSHED

en: broken | es: roto | fr: רעה | de: Boeses Prov 25:19

רְעוּ H7466 N-proper-ms (5×)

Reu — a patriarchal name, son of Peleg in the line from Shem to Abraham

Reu is a personal name appearing in the genealogy from Shem to Abraham, identified as the son of Peleg and father of Serug. All five occurrences are genealogical: four in Genesis 11:18-21 trace his birth, his fathering of Serug, and his lifespan, while 1 Chronicles 1:25 repeats his place in the lineage. The name is rendered consistently across languages — Spanish 'Reu/Reú,' French 'Reu,' German 'Reu' — and corresponds to Greek Ragau in the Septuagint. The name may derive from a root meaning 'friend' or 'companion,' connecting to the broader Hebrew root ra'ah.

(5×) The proper name Reu, a patriarch in the line of Shem, son of Peleg and father of Serug (Gen 11:18-21; 1 Chr 1:25). All attestations are strictly genealogical, placing Reu in the antediluvian-to-Abrahamic bridge generation. The name is transliterated uniformly across Spanish ('Reu'), French ('Reu'), and German ('Reu'), with the Septuagint rendering Ragau. Possibly related to the root ra'ah ('friend'), suggesting a theophoric or social meaning now lost. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Re'u, Reu | es: Reu, Reú | fr: Reu, [רעו] | de: Reu, [רעו] Gen 11:18; Gen 11:19; Gen 11:20; Gen 11:21; 1Chr 1:25

רְעוּאֵל H7467 N-proper-ms (11×)

Reuel, 'friend of God,' name of Moses' father-in-law, an Edomite ancestor, and others

A theophoric name meaning 'friend of God' or 'companion of El,' borne by several figures across Scripture. Most prominently, Reuel is the Midianite priest and father-in-law of Moses, who welcomed the fugitive shepherd and gave him his daughter Zipporah (Exod 2:18). In the Edomite genealogies, Reuel appears as a son of Esau and Basemath, the father of several Edomite chiefs (Gen 36:4, 10, 13, 17). The name also surfaces in Gadite and Benjaminite genealogies (Num 10:29; 1 Chr 9:8), testifying to its wide currency in the ancient Near Eastern world.

(11×) A proper masculine name meaning 'friend of God,' applied to multiple individuals: Esau's son through Basemath and ancestor of Edomite clans (Gen 36:4, 10, 13, 17), Moses' Midianite father-in-law who was priest of Midian (Exod 2:18), and figures in Gadite and Benjaminite genealogies (Num 10:29; 1 Chr 9:8). Arabic preserves the theophoric element with رُوئِيل, Korean renders it 르우엘, and Spanish retains 'Reuel,' all maintaining the divine component of the name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Re'u'el, Reuel | es: Reuel | fr: Reuel | de: Reuel, Reuels, [רעואל] Gen 36:4; Gen 36:10; Gen 36:13; Gen 36:17

רֵעוּת H7468 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3fs (6×)

Female companion, neighbor woman, or mate — the feminine counterpart of rea (friend/neighbor).

The feminine form of the common noun rea ('friend, neighbor'), designating a woman's female counterpart, companion, or peer. In Exodus 11:2, Israelite women are told to ask 'each from her neighbor' for silver and gold — the feminine form here matching the masculine instruction for the men. Jeremiah 9:20 uses it in a dirge where women teach their neighbors the funeral lament. In Isaiah 34:15-16, it describes birds of prey pairing with their mates in Edom's desolation. Esther 1:19 employs it in a legal decree: Vashti's royal position shall be given to 're'utah' — another woman more worthy than she.

female companion, neighbor (woman) (6×) Female companion, neighbor woman, or mate — a woman in relation to another woman, whether as neighbor, fellow, or paired counterpart. Spanish 'compañera' (companion) and German 'Naechster' (neighbor) together capture the relational range. Always appears with a 3fs suffix ('her companion'). Used of Israelite women borrowing from Egyptian neighbors (Exod 11:2), of women teaching laments to one another (Jer 9:20), of female birds of prey paired with their mates in Edom's wasteland (Isa 34:15-16), of scattered sheep turning on one another (Zech 11:9), and of royal replacement — Vashti's position given to 'her neighbor' (Esth 1:19). LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: her-neighbor, shall-lack, to-her-companion | es: a-compañera-su, a-su-compañera, con-su-compañera | fr: [לרעותה], [רעותה], compagne | de: [לרעותה], [רעותה], ihr-Naechster Exod 11:2; Esth 1:19; Isa 34:15; Isa 34:16; Jer 9:20

רְעוּת H7469 Conj-w / N-fsc (7×)

re'ut – a striving, longing, or chasing; pursuit of wind (used exclusively in Ecclesiastes)

A feminine noun found only in Ecclesiastes, always in the distinctive phrase re'ut ruach ('striving after wind' or 'chasing wind'). Qoheleth deploys this expression as his signature verdict on human endeavor: all toil, wisdom-seeking, and pleasure-pursuit ultimately amount to grasping at what cannot be caught. The word appears seven times (Eccl 1:14; 2:11, 17, 26; 4:4, 6; 6:9), always paired with hevel ('vapor, vanity'). Its etymology is debated – possibly from ra'ah ('to pasture, tend') in the sense of 'desire' or 'striving,' or from a root meaning 'to break.' Spanish afliccion de espiritu, French poursuite du vent, and German Haschen nach Wind each capture the futility of grasping at the uncatchable.

(7×) A striving, longing, or vexatious pursuit – specifically the futile chasing of wind that Qoheleth identifies as the ultimate character of human endeavor under the sun. Used exclusively in Ecclesiastes in the phrase re'ut ruach alongside hevel (Eccl 1:14; 2:11, 17, 26; 4:4, 6; 6:9), the word encapsulates the book's central thesis that effort without eternal reference is like trying to catch the breeze. French poursuite du vent and Spanish afliccion de espiritu both convey the anguished futility, while German Streben nach Wind preserves the active-pursuit nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-striving-after | es: y-aflicción-de | fr: et-désir | de: und-Streben Eccl 1:14; Eccl 2:11; Eccl 2:17; Eccl 2:26; Eccl 4:4

רְעוּ H7470 Prep-k / N-fsc (2×)

will, good pleasure; the desire or decree of a sovereign, human or divine

An Aramaic loanword meaning will or good pleasure. Appearing in Ezra 5:17 and 7:18, it refers to royal or divine intention. In 5:17, it's the king's will that determines the response to a petition; in 7:18, it's the will of God guiding the use of donated silver and gold. The term conveys sovereign authority to decide and decree.

(2×) An Aramaic-origin noun denoting will or good pleasure, appearing in Ezra's Persian-period narrative. Ezra 5:17 speaks of what is 'according to the will of' (כִּרְעוּת) the king, while 7:18 refers to acting 'according to the will of your God' (רְעוּת אֱלָהֲכֹם). The term emphasizes sovereign discretion—whether the Persian monarch's administrative authority or God's providential governance. The construct form רְעוּת conveys not arbitrary whim but considered intention and decree, aligning with royal and divine prerogatives in the postexilic restoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-the-will-of, and-will-of | es: conforme-a-la-voluntad-de, y-voluntad-de | fr: [רְעוּת], [כִּרְעוּת] | de: [כִּרְעוּת], und-Streben Ezra 5:17; Ezra 7:18

רְעִי H7471 N-ms (1×)
pasture, grazing animals (construct form before cattle)
This construct noun appears in 1 Kings 5:3 (English 4:23) in the list of provisions for Solomon's household. The phrase 'twenty cattle of pasture' (or 'pasture cattle') distinguishes these from stall-fed animals, indicating they were grass-fed rather than grain-fed. This detail in Solomon's provision lists reveals the scale and sophistication of the royal household's food supply, with specific categorization of livestock by diet and quality.

(1×) A designation for cattle raised on pasture rather than grain-fed in stalls, appearing in 1 Kings 5:3 among the daily provisions for Solomon's court. The term 'pasture cattle' (boqer re'i) functions as a classification within the supply lists, suggesting the royal administration distinguished between different grades or types of livestock based on their feeding methods and probably their meat quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: of-pasture | es: de-pasto | fr: de-pasture | de: von-pasture 1Kgs 4:23

רֵעִי H7472 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Rei, a courtier loyal to David during Adonijah's attempted coup
This personal name appears in 1 Kings 1:8 among the list of David's supporters who did not join Adonijah's premature coronation attempt. The name may relate to the root meaning 'friend' or 'companion.' Rei stands with Nathan the prophet, Benaiah, and David's mighty men in remaining loyal to the aging king. The Septuagint's variant reading 'his friends' rather than a proper name reflects ancient uncertainty about whether this is a name or title.

(1×) One of David's courtiers who refused to support Adonijah's claim to the throne, mentioned in 1 Kings 1:8 alongside other loyalists. The appearance of this figure in the succession narrative highlights the divided court as David's reign neared its end, with some officials backing Adonijah while others like Rei maintained loyalty to David and implicitly to Solomon as the designated heir. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Rei | es: y-Rei | fr: et-Rei | de: und-Rei 1Kgs 1:8

רָעָה H7473 V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 1cs (11×)
Shepherd or herdsman, the Qal participle of ra'ah used for those who tend flocks, including God and rulers
The active participle of the verb 'to shepherd' used as a substantive noun — one who feeds and tends flocks. In its literal sense, it describes herdsmen in the patriarchal narratives, where the quarreling shepherds of Abram and Lot signal the need for the kinsmen to part ways (Gen 13:7–8). The word reaches its theological summit in Psalm 23:1, 'The LORD is my shepherd,' where the intimate care of a herdsman for his flock becomes the defining metaphor for God's relationship with his people. Prophetic literature extends it to human rulers, as when God calls Cyrus 'my shepherd' (Isa 44:28).

shepherd, herdsman (11×) A shepherd or herdsman — one who pastures and tends livestock, used both literally and as a powerful metaphor. In patriarchal settings it denotes working herdsmen (Gen 13:7–8; 26:20; 1 Sam 21:8). Theologically, it becomes a title for God himself (Ps 23:1) and for rulers commissioned by God such as Cyrus (Isa 44:28) and the smitten shepherd of Zechariah 13:7. Cross-linguistic evidence is remarkably unified: Arabic ra'ī (ru'at), Spanish 'pastores,' Korean 목자들 (mokjadeul), Hindi चरवाहे, Swahili 'wachungaji' — all converging on the shepherd image without semantic splitting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: My-shepherd, herdsmen-of, my-herdsmen | es: de-pastor, los-pastores, mi-pastor | fr: [רֹעֵי], berger, bergers-de | de: [רֹעֵי], deinen-Hirten, den-Hirten Gen 13:7; Gen 13:8; Gen 26:20

רַעְיָה H7474 N-fsc / 1cs (9×)
A female companion or beloved; term of intimate endearment used almost exclusively in Song of Solomon for the bride.
A tender noun of address meaning 'my companion' or 'my darling,' reserved almost entirely for the beloved woman in the Song of Solomon. The lover uses this word nine times to address his bride with warm intimacy, pairing it with declarations of beauty and longing ('Behold, you are beautiful, my darling,' Song 1:15; 4:1). Spanish renders it 'amada mía' (my beloved) and 'amiga mía' (my dear friend), capturing both the romantic and companionate dimensions. French 'ma bien-aimée' and German 'meine Freundin' similarly reflect the double register of passionate love and deep friendship.

(9×) A beloved female companion, used as a term of intimate address from the male lover to the woman he cherishes. All nine Song of Solomon occurrences (1:9, 1:15, 2:2, 2:10, 2:13, 4:1, 4:7, 5:2, 6:4) appear in the lover's direct speech, framing the woman not merely as an object of desire but as a partner and equal. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish oscillates between 'amada mía' (beloved) and 'amiga mía' (friend), while German 'meine Freundin' foregrounds companionship, suggesting a semantic range spanning from romantic devotion to deep relational intimacy. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS
en: my-darling | es: amada-mía, amiga-mía, mi-amada | fr: ma-bien-aimée, ma-bien-aimée,, ma-bien-aimée. | de: meine-Freundin Song 1:9; Song 1:15; Song 2:2; Song 2:10; Song 2:13

רַעְיוֹן H7475 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)
striving, pursuit; concern, occupation (of mind)
This noun appears exclusively in Ecclesiastes, describing mental striving, pursuit, or anxious occupation. Often paired with 'spirit' or 'wind' in the phrase 'striving after wind,' it captures the frustrating pursuit of what cannot be grasped. The term also describes the mental burden or concern that occupies the mind in toil—the cognitive and emotional labor that accompanies work. It suggests both futile reaching for meaning and the psychological weight of human endeavor.

(3×) The word designates the mental striving or vexation that characterizes human existence under the sun. Ecclesiastes 1:17 describes pursuing wisdom as 'striving after wind'—grasping for what eludes control. Ecclesiastes 2:22 asks what man gets from all his toil 'and the striving of his heart'—the anxious occupation of mind that accompanies labor. Ecclesiastes 4:16 concludes reflections on popularity with 'this also is vanity and striving after wind.' The consistent theme is frustrated mental pursuit—whether of wisdom, meaning, or legacy—that produces vexation without satisfaction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-striving-of, and-striving-after, striving-after | es: aflicción-de, y-aflicción-de, y-en-la-preocupación-de | fr: désir, et-désir | de: Streben, [וּבִרְעִיוֹן], und-Streben Eccl 1:17; Eccl 2:22; Eccl 4:16

רַעְיוֹן H7476 Conj-w / N-mpc (6×)
Thought, reflection, cogitation — an Aramaic noun found exclusively in Daniel, denoting inner mental activity.
An Aramaic masculine noun meaning 'thought' or 'reflection,' occurring only in the book of Daniel, always in the plural. The word captures the inner life of the mind — the thoughts that arise unbidden on one's bed (Dan 2:29), the cogitations that trouble a king's spirit (Dan 4:19; 5:6), and the interpretations that reveal what lies in the heart (Dan 2:30). Daniel himself uses it of his own troubled reflections after the vision of the four beasts (Dan 7:28). The word lends an introspective, almost psychological texture to these Aramaic court narratives, emphasizing that God alone knows and reveals human thought.

thought, reflection (6×) Thought, reflection, cogitation — the mental activity of thinking, pondering, or being troubled in mind. Spanish 'pensamientos' (thoughts) matches precisely. Found exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections, always plural, always possessive ('your thoughts,' 'his thoughts,' 'my thoughts'). Nebuchadnezzar's thoughts arise on his bed about the future (Dan 2:29), God reveals them through Daniel (Dan 2:30), the king's thoughts terrify him when he sees the great tree's meaning (Dan 4:19), Belshazzar's thoughts alarm him at the handwriting on the wall (Dan 5:6, 10), and Daniel's own thoughts disturb him after the vision of the Ancient of Days (Dan 7:28). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-thoughts, and-thoughts-of, my-thoughts | es: pensamientos-de-mí, tus-pensamientos, y-los-pensamientos-de | fr: [ורעיוני], [ורעינהי], [ורעינהי] | de: [ורעיוני], [ורעינהי], [ורעינהי] Dan 2:29; Dan 2:30; Dan 4:19; Dan 5:6; Dan 5:10

רָעַל H7477 V-Hofal-Perf-3cp (1×)

are made to quiver, shake, or brandish (Hophal perfect plural)

This rare Hophal form appears in Nahum 2:4 (English 2:3) describing chariots or spears that 'quiver' or 'are brandished.' The verse depicts the preparation for Nineveh's siege, with weapons and military equipment in motion. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates suggest trembling, shaking, or dangling movement. Whether describing spears being brandished or chariots jolting, the verb captures rapid, shaking motion in the context of military mobilization.

(1×) A passive or causative description of objects made to shake, quiver, or brandish, applied in Nahum 2:4 to either spears or chariots (the Hebrew 'beroshim' is ambiguous) during preparation for battle. The Hophal stem emphasizes these items are caused to shake—either warriors brandishing spears or chariots jolting violently as horses pull them—contributing to Nahum's vivid depiction of military chaos as the armies mass against Nineveh. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: are-made-to-quiver | es: agitados | fr: trembler | de: [הרעלו] Nah 2:3

רַעַל H7478 N-ms (1×)

reeling, staggering (as from intoxication)

This noun appears uniquely in Zechariah 12:2, where God declares he will make Jerusalem 'a cup of reeling' for all surrounding peoples. The metaphor draws on the image of intoxication leading to staggering and loss of control. Those who come against Jerusalem will drink from this cup and find themselves disoriented and unable to function effectively. The Spanish 'vértigo' (dizziness/vertigo) captures the sense of disorientation, though the context is judgment rather than mere dizziness.

(1×) A state of staggering or reeling, used metaphorically in Zechariah 12:2 to describe the effect Jerusalem will have on attacking nations. The 'cup of reeling' image suggests that those who attempt to consume or destroy Jerusalem will instead find themselves intoxicated and disoriented, unable to accomplish their hostile purposes—a reversal where the intended victim becomes the means of the attackers' downfall. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: for-all | es: vértigo | fr: errer | de: [ער] Zech 12:2

רְעָלָה H7479 Conj-w (1×)

the veils (feminine plural with article and conjunction)

This plural noun appears in Isaiah 3:19 within the prophet's extensive catalog of women's finery that will be removed in judgment. The term likely refers to veils or possibly ornamental chains. The Arabic cognate suggests something that hangs down or dangles. Among rings, pendants, crescents, and other jewelry, these veils or ornamental pieces represent the luxury and vanity that Isaiah condemns as symptomatic of Judah's moral bankruptcy.

(1×) Ornamental veils or hanging decorations worn by wealthy women in Jerusalem, listed in Isaiah 3:19 among the items of luxury that will be stripped away in divine judgment. The inclusion of this specific item in Isaiah's detailed catalog serves his prophetic purpose of emphasizing how complete the reversal will be—from adorned elegance to shameful exposure, from luxury to deprivation. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-veils | es: y-los-velos | fr: [והרעלות] | de: [והרעלות] Isa 3:19

רְעַלְיָה H7480 N-proper-ms (1×)

Reelaiah, a leader who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel

This personal name appears in Ezra 2:2 among the leaders accompanying Zerubbabel back to Jerusalem. The parallel passage in Nehemiah 7:7 gives the name as 'Raamiah,' suggesting either textual variation or that these might be two names for the same person. Such variations between parallel lists are common in Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah. The Septuagint traditions vary considerably, reflecting the textual fluidity around less prominent names in genealogical lists.

(1×) One of the twelve leaders listed in Ezra 2:2 who returned from exile with Zerubbabel and Jeshua to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple. The appearance of this figure in the foundational return narrative marks him as a head of a family or clan, though no further details about his lineage or activities are preserved in the biblical text. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Reelayah | es: Reelaías | fr: [רעליה] | de: [רעליה] Ezra 2:2

רָעַם H7481 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (13×)

To thunder or roar; of God producing thunder as a theophanic display, of the sea roaring in praise, or of faces trembling in agitation.

A verb whose primary meaning centers on the deep, resonant sound of thunder. In the Hifil stem, it describes God thundering from heaven as an act of power and judgment, as when the LORD thundered against the Philistines at Mizpah (1 Sam 7:10) or when the voice of the LORD thunders over the waters (Ps 29:3). In the Qal, the sea itself is invited to roar and thunder in exuberant praise (Ps 96:11; 98:7). An extended sense appears in Ezekiel 27:35, where the faces of onlookers at Tyre's fall are 'troubled' or convulsed, and in 1 Samuel 1:6 where Peninnah provokes Hannah to trembling distress. The Spanish and French renderings ('tronó,' 'tonna') preserve the onomatopoeic thunder imagery, while 'se perturbaron' captures the emotional extension.

1. Hifil: to thunder (8×) The Hifil causative: God causes thunder or thunders forth. This is the most frequent sense, spanning theophanic contexts where divine thunder signals power, judgment, or cosmic authority. At Mizpah (1 Sam 7:10) the LORD thundered and routed the Philistines; in Psalm 29:3 the 'voice of the LORD' thunders over the waters. Spanish 'tronó' and French 'tonna' both echo the onomatopoeic force of the Hebrew. THUNDER THEOPHANIC

en: He-thunders, and-he-thundered, and-thundered | es: Tronó, Truena, tronará | fr: Il-thunders, et-il-tonna, et-tonner | de: He-thunders, [ירעם], [תרעם] 1Sam 2:10; 1Sam 7:10; 2Sam 22:14; Job 37:4; Job 37:5

2. Qal: to roar, thunder (3×) The Qal intransitive: the sea or nature roars, thunders, makes a great rumbling sound in praise. Found exclusively in the creation-praise psalms (Ps 96:11; 98:7; 1 Chr 16:32) where the sea joins in acclaiming the LORD alongside rejoicing, clapping, and singing. Spanish 'brame' and German 'lass-brüllen' reflect the roaring, bellowing quality of this sound. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: let-roar, let-thunder | es: Brame, brame | fr: [ירעם], tonner | de: [ירעם], lass-brüllen 1Chr 16:32; Ps 96:11; Ps 98:7

3. Qal: to be troubled, agitated (1×) A Qal stative use meaning to be troubled, agitated, or convulsed, attested once in Ezekiel 27:35 where the faces of kings witnessing Tyre's catastrophic fall are described as trembling. BDB notes the etymology is debated; the LXX and Syriac suggest an emendation to 'their faces wept.' Spanish 'se perturbaron' captures the emotional disturbance well. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: are-troubled | es: se-perturbaron | fr: tonner | de: [רעמו] Ezek 27:35

4. Hifil: to cause to tremble, provoke (1×) The Hifil in a transferred emotional sense: to cause someone to tremble or to provoke agitation. Attested once in 1 Samuel 1:6, where Peninnah provokes Hannah to distress over her barrenness. The multilingual glosses ('making her tremble,' 'hacerla irritar') show translators reading this as deliberate, causative emotional torment rather than meteorological thunder. STIR UP INCITE

en: making-her-tremble | es: hacerla-irritar | fr: faisant-sa-tremble | de: machend-ihr-tremble 1Sam 1:6

רַעַם H7482 Prep-b / N-ms (6×)

Thunder; the mighty rumbling sound ascribed to God's power and theophanic self-revelation.

Refers to the deep, reverberating roar of thunder, consistently attributed in the Hebrew Bible to Yahweh's sovereign might. In the Psalms, 'Your thunder was in the whirlwind' (Ps 77:18) and 'I answered you in the secret place of thunder' (Ps 81:7) link thunder directly to divine encounter. Job 26:14 uses it figuratively for the mere whisper-edge of God's power, while Job 39:25 extends the image to the thunderous battle-cry of commanders. Spanish 'trueno' and German 'Donner' both capture the raw acoustic force, while the French 'tonnerre' preserves the same cosmic register.

thunder (6×) Thunder as a natural and theophanic phenomenon, always ascribed to Yahweh's power and majesty. The word appears in contexts of divine self-disclosure (Ps 81:7, 'in the secret place of thunder'), cosmic authority over creation (Ps 104:7, at God's rebuke the waters fled), and as a figure for overwhelming might (Job 26:14, the 'thunder of his power' is only the outskirts of his ways). In Job 39:25 it extends metaphorically to the thunderous shout of commanders in battle. Multilingual glosses uniformly render it as a single natural-force concept: English 'thunder,' Spanish 'trueno,' French 'tonnerre,' German 'Donner.' THUNDER THEOPHANIC

en: Your-thunder, and-thunder-of, the-thunder-of | es: con-trueno, trueno, trueno-de | fr: [ברעם], et-רעם, tonnerre | de: Donner, [ברעם], [ורעם] Job 26:14; Job 39:25; Ps 77:18; Ps 81:7; Ps 104:7

רַעְמָה H7483 N-fs (1×)

vibration, quivering mane (of a horse's neck)

This rare and uncertain noun appears in Job 39:19, where God asks Job if he clothed the horse's neck with this 'ra'mah.' Most interpreters understand it as the flowing, quivering mane that gives the warhorse its majestic appearance. The etymology is disputed, but the context of divine rhetorical questions about animal creation favors something visible and impressive. The Spanish 'crin' (mane) reflects the traditional interpretation, though the Hebrew meaning remains genuinely uncertain.

(1×) Most likely the quivering or flowing mane of a horse, mentioned in Job 39:19 as part of God's catalog of the warhorse's splendor. The term appears in a rhetorical question asking Job if he gave the horse this particular feature, emphasizing the divine artistry in equine creation. Whether understood as the mane's movement or appearance, it contributes to the passage's overall portrait of equine power and beauty as evidence of God's creative wisdom. THUNDER THEOPHANIC

en: with-a-mane | es: crin | fr: רעמה | de: [רעמה] Job 39:19

רַעְמָה H7484 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Raamah — a descendant of Cush and a trading people of southern Arabia

Raamah appears in the Table of Nations as a 'son' of Cush (Gen 10:7; 1 Chr 1:9), representing a people or region of southern Arabia. In Ezekiel 27:22, Raamah surfaces as a trading partner of Tyre, dealing in spices, precious stones, and gold — placing this group squarely in the incense trade routes of the Arabian Peninsula. The name is likely connected to a settlement near Ma'in in southwestern Arabia. Multilingual renderings are consistent: Spanish 'Raama/Raamá,' French 'Raamah/Raema,' pointing to a well-established tradition of identification.

(5×) The proper name Raamah, a grandson of Ham through Cush in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:7; 1 Chr 1:9), representing a people and region in southern Arabia engaged in luxury trade. Ezekiel 27:22 places Raamah among Tyre's commercial partners trading spices, gems, and gold, connecting this group to the incense routes. Spanish 'Raama,' French 'Raamah,' and German 'Raamas' all preserve the name consistently. Ancient geographers identified the region with settlements along the Persian Gulf or near Ma'in in Yemen. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ra'ma, Raamah, and-Ra'ma | es: Raama, Raamá, y-Raama | fr: Raamah, Raema, et-Raama | de: Raamas, [ורעמא], [ורעמה] Gen 10:7; 1Chr 1:9; Ezek 27:22

רְעֵלָיָה H7485 N-proper-ms (1×)

Raamiah, a leader who returned from exile (parallel to Reelaiah in Ezra)

This personal name appears in Nehemiah 7:7 in the list of leaders returning from Babylonian exile. It corresponds to 'Reelaiah' in the parallel passage Ezra 2:2, illustrating the kind of textual variation common in duplicate genealogical lists. Such name variations between Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah parallel passages likely reflect different manuscript traditions or dialectal pronunciations. Both names appear in identical structural positions in their respective lists.

(1×) One of the leaders enumerated in Nehemiah 7:7 who accompanied Zerubbabel in the return from Babylonian exile. As a figure in the restoration community's leadership, Raamiah represents one of the family heads responsible for reorganizing Judean society after the trauma of exile, though the biblical text preserves no additional information about his specific role or descendants. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Raamiah | es: Raamías | fr: [רעמיה] | de: [רעמיה] Neh 7:7

רַעַמְסֵס H7486 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (5×)

Rameses — an Egyptian city and district in the eastern Nile Delta, built by Israelite forced labor

Rameses designates both a city and the surrounding district in the eastern Nile Delta, closely associated with the Exodus narrative. Named after Pharaoh Rameses II, it appears as a storage city built by Israelite corvée labor (Exod 1:11), the departure point of the Exodus (Exod 12:37; Num 33:3, 5), and earlier as the region where Joseph settled his family (Gen 47:11). The multilingual evidence is remarkably stable — Spanish 'Rameses/Raamses,' French 'Ramsès,' German 'Ramses' — all reflecting the Egyptian royal name. Archaeological identification places it near Tell el-Dab'a/Qantir in the eastern Delta.

(5×) The proper name Rameses, denoting an Egyptian city in the eastern Nile Delta and its surrounding district, named for Pharaoh Rameses II. It functions as the geographic anchor of the Exodus story: the site of forced labor (Exod 1:11), the staging point for departure (Exod 12:37; Num 33:3, 5), and earlier the land of Joseph's settlement (Gen 47:11). Spanish 'Rameses,' French 'Ramsès,' and German 'Ramses' all transliterate the Egyptian royal name. Modern archaeology associates it with the Piramesse complex near Tell el-Dab'a. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rameses, from-Rameses | es: Raamses, Rameses, de-Rameses | fr: Ramsès, de-Rameses, de-Ramsès | de: Ramses, von-Rameses, von-Ramses Gen 47:11; Exod 1:11; Exod 12:37; Num 33:3; Num 33:5

רַעֲנָן H7487 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)

flourishing, prosperous (Aramaic adjective in Daniel)

This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel 4:1 (Aramaic 4:4) where Nebuchadnezzar describes himself as 'at ease in my house and flourishing in my palace.' The word conveys luxuriant growth and prosperity, borrowed into Aramaic from the Hebrew root 'ra'anan' (green, flourishing). The king's self-description of flourishing immediately precedes his disturbing dream and subsequent humiliation, creating dramatic irony—his confidence in his own flourishing state blinds him to his precarious position before God.

(1×) A state of prosperity and flourishing, used in Daniel 4:4 by Nebuchadnezzar to describe his own condition at the height of his power. The Aramaic term carries connotations of vigorous, healthy growth—like a well-watered tree—making it particularly ironic that the king's subsequent dream features a great tree cut down, revealing that his flourishing depends entirely on divine permission rather than his own might. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: and-flourishing | es: y-floreciente | fr: et-prospérer | de: [וּרְעָנָן] Dan 4:4

רַעֲנַן H7488a V-Piel-Perf-3fs (1×)

flourishing, growing green or fresh (Pilpel perfect)

This doubled-stem verb form appears in Job 15:32, where Eliphaz describes the fate of the wicked. The word refers to a branch that would naturally be flourishing or green. In the broader metaphor, Eliphaz argues that the wicked will be cut off before their time, before they reach their full flourishing. The Pa'lel/Pilpel stem suggests intensive or resultative action—becoming thoroughly green or fresh.

(1×) The state of being or becoming flourishing and green, applied in Job 15:32 to a branch in Eliphaz's metaphor about divine judgment on the wicked. The image contrasts what should happen (the branch flourishing) with what will happen (premature withering), serving Eliphaz's argument that the wicked are cut down before reaching their expected prosperity, their 'branch' failing to achieve its natural green vigor. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: flourishing | es: reverdece | fr: רַעֲנָה | de: [רַעֲנָה] Job 15:32

רַעֲנָן H7488b Adj-ms (19×)

Luxuriant, green, leafy; of trees in full foliage, especially at idolatrous worship sites; figuratively, fresh and vigorous.

An adjective painting the picture of lush, green vitality — most often describing trees thick with leaves. It appears prominently in the Deuteronomistic formula 'under every green tree' (tahat kol-ets ra'anan), marking hilltop shrines where Israel practiced idolatrous worship (Deut 12:2; 1 Kgs 14:23; 2 Kgs 16:4; 17:10). The word thus carries a double resonance: natural beauty and spiritual danger. In its figurative extension (Ps 92:14), the righteous in old age remain 'fat and fresh' — Spanish 'fresco,' French 'verdoyant' — like well-watered trees that never lose their sap. Song of Songs 1:16 uses it for a leafy, verdant couch, blending botanical imagery with intimacy.

1. green, luxuriant (of trees) (18×) Green, luxuriant, or leafy, describing trees in their full, thriving foliage. Dominates the formulaic phrase 'under every green/luxuriant tree' (kol-ets ra'anan), which recurs across Deuteronomy, Kings, Chronicles, Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Ezekiel as a stock marker for sites of Canaanite worship. Spanish 'frondoso' and 'verde,' French 'verdoyant,' and German 'grünend' all capture the lushness. Also applied to specific species — an olive tree (Ps 52:10), a cypress (Hos 14:9), and the mysterious 'native tree' of Ps 37:35. The word evokes not just color but abundance, a canopy thick enough to shelter illicit altars. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: and-green, flourishing, flourishing-tree | es: frondoso, verde, y-verdes | fr: [רַעֲנָן], et-verdoyant, leafy | de: [רַעֲנָן], [רַעֲנָנָה], flourishing Deut 12:2; 1Kgs 14:23; 2Kgs 16:4; 2Kgs 17:10; 2Chr 28:4

2. fresh, full of sap (figurative of persons) (1×) Fresh, full of sap, vigorous — used figuratively of persons who remain vitally alive, especially in old age. In Ps 92:14, the righteous 'still bear fruit in old age; they are fat and fresh (ra'anan).' Spanish 'fresco' and French 'verdoyant' preserve the botanical metaphor applied to human flourishing. This sense transfers the tree's unfading green to people who thrive under God's care, making a single powerful appearance that crowns the psalm's wisdom theology. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: fresh | es: fresco | fr: verdoyant | de: fresh Ps 92:10

רָעַע H7489a V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (94×)

Be evil or displeasing; do evil, act wickedly; as participle, evildoer — covering moral wrongdoing and its stative counterpart.

This denominative verb from the adjective ra' ('evil, bad') spans the full range from being displeasing to actively perpetrating harm. In the Qal, it describes a state: something 'is evil in someone's eyes' — Abraham's distress over Ishmael (Gen 21:11-12), or the thing that 'displeased the LORD' (Gen 38:10). The Hifil shifts to volitional action: doing evil, treating someone badly, or causing harm, as when the Egyptians mistreated Israel (Exod 5:23) or the psalmist warns against fretting over evildoers (Ps 37:1). The Hifil participle crystallizes into a substantive noun, 'evildoer,' a favorite term in wisdom and psalm literature for those who habitually practice wickedness.

1. do evil, act wickedly (50×) Hifil active: to do evil, act wickedly, cause harm, or treat someone badly. The dominant sense, covering volitional wrongdoing across narrative, prophetic, and legal texts. Pharaoh's oppression of Israel (Exod 5:23), Laban's cheating of Jacob (Gen 31:7), and the general warning against doing evil (Jer 4:22, 13:23). German 'Böses tun' and Spanish 'hacer mal' consistently mark this as deliberate moral action rather than mere state. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-he-will-do-evil, and-treated-us-badly, did-you-do-evil | es: Y-nos-maltrataron, de-hacer-el-mal, hacer-mal | fr: ai-tu-apporta-mal, avoir-tu-fait-mal, et-il-sera-faire-mal | de: Boeses-tun, der-Boeses, er-tat-Boese Gen 19:7; Gen 19:9; Gen 31:7; Gen 43:6; Gen 44:5

2. be bad, be displeasing (23×) Qal stative: to be bad, evil, or displeasing, typically in the idiom 'it was evil in the eyes of.' Describes a state of displeasure or sadness rather than an action — something troubles or grieves a person. Abraham is distressed (Gen 21:11-12), Samuel is displeased (1 Sam 8:6), Nehemiah's face is sad (Neh 2:3). French 'être mal' and German 'böse sein' preserve the stative force. The construction with bə'ênê ('in the eyes of') is nearly formulaic. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-displeased, and-evil, and-it-was-evil | es: Y-fue-malo, malo, malo: | fr: [וַיֵּרַע], devra-être-mal, est-mal | de: Boeses, ist-Boeses, lass-es-sein-Boese Gen 21:11; Gen 21:12; Gen 38:10; Gen 48:17; Num 11:10

3. evildoer (18×) Hifil participle substantivized: evildoer, one who does evil. Functions as a noun designating a person characterized by habitual wickedness. A key term in Psalms (22:16, 26:5, 37:1, 37:9) and Proverbs, often contrasted with the righteous. German 'Übeltäter' and Spanish 'malhechores' treat it as a fixed nominal. The participial form carries iterative-habitual Aktionsart — not a single evil act but a pattern of life. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-evildoer, because-of-evildoers, evil-doers | es: El-que-hace-mal, los-malhechores, los-malhechores. | fr: dans-faire-le-mal, de-faire-le-mal, et-de-mal | de: Boeses-tun, der-evildoers, evildoers Job 8:20; Ps 22:16; Ps 26:5; Ps 27:2; Ps 37:1

4. (2×) Nifal/Qal passive or tolerative: to suffer harm, be injured. A rare nuance found in Proverbs (11:15, 13:20) where the subject experiences evil consequences rather than performing evil — 'he who is surety will suffer harm.' English 'suffer harm' and Spanish 'será quebrantado' mark this passive-experiential dimension clearly distinct from the active Hifil. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: suffer-harm, will-suffer-harm | es: será-quebrantado, sufrirá-mal | fr: faire-du-mal | de: tat-Boeses Prov 11:15; Prov 13:20

5. (1×) A single occurrence in 2 Samuel 19:7 (Eng. 19:8) where the verbal form appears to function as a comparative intensifier — the evil 'will be worse for you than all the evil that has come upon you.' English 'and evil' and Spanish 'y mal' suggest an adverbial or predicative complement usage, best understood as an extension of the Qal stative sense (sense 2) applied in a comparative construction. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: and-evil | es: y-mal | fr: et-mal | de: und-Boese 2Sam 19:7

רָעַע H7489b V-Qal-Imp-mp (8×)

To break, shatter, smash; intransitively to be broken or come to ruin

A verb of violent breaking, distinct from the more common ra^{c}a^{c} I ('to be evil'). Its force is physical and concrete: iron shattering iron (Jer 15:12), a rod of iron dashing nations to pieces (Ps 2:9), God shattering the mighty without investigation (Job 34:24). The intransitive Qal and Hitpael forms depict the earth itself breaking apart in Isaiah 24:19's apocalyptic trembling. In Proverbs 18:24, the shattering becomes metaphorical – having too many companions leads to self-ruin. Spanish 'quebrantar' and 'quebrantarse' capture both the transitive smashing and intransitive collapse.

1. be broken, shatter apart (Qal intransitive / Hitpael) (4×) Intransitive Qal and reflexive Hitpael: to be broken, to shatter apart. Isaiah 24:19 repeats the root in dramatic threefold emphasis – 'the earth is utterly broken' – while Jer 11:16 uses it of branches snapping in a fire. Spanish 'se-quebro' and 'Quebrarse' render the passive-reflexive shattering. In Isa 8:9 the Hitpael imperative ('be shattered, O peoples!') functions as a prophetic taunt. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: Breaking, and-are-broken, be-broken | es: Amotinaos, Quebrarse, se-quebró | fr: [התרעעה], [ורעו], [רעו] | de: [התרעעה], und-weidet, weidet Isa 8:9; Isa 24:19; Jer 11:16

2. break, shatter (Qal transitive) (3×) Transitive Qal: to break or shatter something, with an agent acting upon an object. Psalm 2:9 is the defining passage: 'You shall break them with a rod of iron' (teroᶜem), a royal-messianic image. Job 34:24 extends it to divine judgment: God 'shatters the mighty.' Jer 15:12 poses a rhetorical question about whether iron can break northern iron. Spanish 'Los-quebrantaras' and German 'du-soll-zerbrechen-ihnen' preserve the forceful transitive sense. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: Can-break, He-shatters, you-shall-break-them | es: Los-quebrantarás, Quebranta, Se-romperá | fr: [הירע], casser, faire-du-mal | de: [הירע], [ירע], du-soll-zerbrechen-ihnen Job 34:24; Ps 2:9; Jer 15:12

3. come to ruin (Hitpael, metaphorical) (1×) Figurative Hitpael: to come to ruin, to bring destruction on oneself. Attested in Prov 18:24, where a man of many companions 'comes to ruin' (lehitroᶜeaᶜ). The breaking here is social and moral rather than physical – excessive superficial relationships lead to self-destruction. Spanish 'para-ser-quebrantado' retains the passive-reflexive quality of this figurative collapse. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS
en: to-be-broken | es: para-ser-quebrantado | fr: à-faire-du-mal | de: [להתרעע] Prov 18:24

רְעַע H7490 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3fs (2×)
crush, shatter; to break into pieces with force (Aramaic)
An Aramaic verb meaning to crush or shatter. Daniel 2:40 uses it twice: the fourth kingdom 'breaks in pieces' and 'shatters' all others, like iron crushing everything. The image is one of violent, comprehensive destruction. The verb's intensity underscores the totalizing dominance of the final kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream.

(2×) An Aramaic verb (Pe'al and Pa'el stems) meaning to crush, break, or shatter, appearing exclusively in Daniel 2:40. The context is the fourth kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's vision, described as iron that 'breaks' (מָעָע) all things and 'shatters' (תַּרֵּעַ) them. The intensive Pa'el participle emphasizes ongoing, violent fragmentation —'smashing to pieces.' Cognate with Hebrew רצץ and Syriac, the term conveys utter pulverization, fitting the apocalyptic imagery of an empire that obliterates all resistance. TRAMPLING AND TREADING
en: and-break, breaks | es: rompe, y-romperá | fr: et-fouler, fouler | de: [ותרע], [מרעע] Dan 2:40

רְעַף H7491 V-Hifil-Imp-mp (5×)
to drip, trickle — of rain, dew, or heavenly blessing falling gently from above
A poetic verb evoking the gentle, steady descent of moisture from sky to earth. Clouds drip rain upon people (Job 36:28), the heavens let fall dew (Prov 3:20), and God's wagon-tracks overflow with fatness as the pastures of the wilderness drip (Ps 65:11-12). Isaiah 45:8 transforms the physical image into prophetic command: 'Drip down, O heavens, from above!' — where rain becomes a metaphor for righteousness. Spanish captures both literal ('gotean,' 'destilan') and imperative ('Destilad') registers, while the synonymy with nazal and 'araph confirms this as a precipitation word with strong figurative potential.

(5×) To drip, trickle, or distill — describing the gentle, sustained descent of moisture (rain, dew, fatness) from clouds or heavens to earth. Job 36:28 uses it of clouds dripping rain, Proverbs 3:20 of skies dropping dew, and Psalm 65:11-12 of God's paths overflowing with abundance as wilderness pastures drip with moisture. Isaiah 45:8 elevates the image to prophetic metaphor, commanding the heavens to 'drip down' righteousness. Spanish 'destilan' and 'gotean' capture the slow, continuous quality, while the Hiphil imperative in Isaiah intensifies the causative sense. DRIPPING LIQUID
en: Drip, drip, drip-down | es: Destilad, Gotean, destilan | fr: [הרעיפו], distiller, ירעפו | de: [הרעיפו], [ירעפו], drip Job 36:28; Ps 65:11; Ps 65:12; Prov 3:20; Isa 45:8

רָעַץ H7492 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (2×)
shatter, oppress; to crush or break someone with violence
A verb meaning to shatter or crush. Exodus 15:6 uses it in the Song of the Sea: God's right hand 'shatters the enemy.' Judges 10:8 employs it for the oppression Israel suffered: the Philistines and Ammonites 'shattered and oppressed' them. The verb conveys violent impact, whether divine judgment or human tyranny.

(2×) Means to shatter, crush, or oppress violently. Exodus 15:6 celebrates Yahweh's military triumph: 'Your right hand shatters (תִּרְעַץ) the enemy'—a vivid image of divine power demolishing opposition. Judges 10:8 describes human oppression: enemies 'shattered and crushed' (וַיְרֹעֲצוּ וַיְרֻצְצוּ) the Israelites. The verb's Aramaic cognate (רְעַץ) and possible connection to Akkadian raḫâṣu suggest a Semitic root for violent smiting. The parallel with רצץ in Judges reinforces the sense of pulverizing force—whether wielded by God in salvation or by enemies in subjugation. OPPRESS CAUSE DISTRESS
en: and-they-shattered, shatters | es: Y-oprimieron, quebranta | fr: et-ils-shattered, shatters | de: shatters, und-sie-shattered Exod 15:6; Judg 10:8

רָעַשׁ H7493 V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (30×)
To quake, tremble, or shake; causatively, to make tremble; also of grain waving or an animal leaping
A verb whose primary force is the violent shaking of the earth or the trembling of creation before divine power. When God descends at Sinai, the mountains quake (Judg 5:4; Ps 68:8); when his voice thunders, the earth trembles (Ps 18:7). The Hifil intensifies this into divine agency—God himself shakes the heavens and the earth (Hag 2:6). Yet the same root yields two surprising extensions: grain waving abundantly on a hilltop (Ps 72:16) and a war-horse made to leap with terrifying energy (Job 39:20). Spanish 'temblar' and French 'trembler' track the core seismic meaning, while German 'erbeben' adds the sense of awe-struck reverberating.

1. tremble, quake (22×) The core Qal sense of trembling or quaking, typically describing the earth, mountains, or foundations shaking in response to theophany, divine judgment, or catastrophic events. The earth quaked when God marched from Seir (Judg 5:4), shook at the blast of his nostrils (2 Sam 22:8 / Ps 18:7), and will tremble when nations fall (Jer 49:21). Spanish 'temblar' and French 'trembler' render this uniformly, while German 'beben' echoes the deep seismic resonance. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: and-it-trembled, and-shake, and-tremble | es: se-estremecen, temblaban, temblarán | fr: et-cela-trembla, et-trembler, trembla | de: [ירעשו], [תרעשנה], beben Judg 5:4; 2Sam 22:8; Ps 18:7; Ps 46:3; Ps 68:8

2. cause to shake (6×) The Hifil causative meaning to cause shaking or trembling, with God as the typical agent. Psalm 60:2 laments 'You have shaken the land,' Isaiah 14:16 marvels at the tyrant who 'made the earth tremble,' and Haggai 2:6–7 promises God will shake heavens, earth, sea, and nations. Spanish 'haré temblar' and French 'faire trembler' consistently mark the causative force, distinguishing divine agency from the intransitive quaking of sense 1. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: I-made-shake, You-have-shaken, and-I-will-shake | es: Y-haré-temblar, haré-temblar, hice-temblar | fr: et-trembler, le-trembler, trembler | de: [הרעשתי], beben, erbebte Ps 60:2; Isa 14:16; Ezek 31:16; Hag 2:6; Hag 2:7

3. wave, sway (1×) A unique Qal usage in Psalm 72:16 describing the waving or rustling of abundant grain atop mountains—a messianic image of agricultural blessing so great that hilltops sway like the cedars of Lebanon. The same root that conveys terrifying seismic force here evokes the gentle, rhythmic motion of a bountiful harvest.

Spanish 'ondear' (to undulate) captures this distinctive nuance. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: may-it-wave | es: ondeará | fr: trembler | de: erbebte Ps 72:16

4. make leap (1×) A singular Hifil usage in Job 39:20 meaning to cause an animal to leap or bound, applied to the war-horse that God has endowed with terrifying power. The rhetorical question 'Do you make it leap like a locust?' uses the shaking root to convey explosive, springlike motion. Spanish '¿Lo haces saltar?' (Do you make it jump?) renders this vividly, showing how the trembling root extends to violent, directed physical energy. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING en: do-you-make-it-leap | es: ¿Lo-haces-saltar | fr: התרעישנו | de: erbebte Job 39:20

רַעַשׁ H7494 Conj-w / N-ms (17×)

Quaking, earthquake, or thunderous rumbling; from seismic events to the violent shaking of war and divine theophanies

Ra'ash captures the full spectrum of violent shaking. Amos dates his prophecy to two years before 'the earthquake' (Amos 1:1), while Elijah stood at Horeb as earthquake, wind, and fire passed by — and God was in none of them (1 Kgs 19:11-12). The word extends beyond seismology to the rattling of chariot wheels (Nah 3:2), the trembling of a besieged people (Ezek 12:18), and the terrifying thunder of divine manifestation (Ezek 3:12-13). Spanish 'terremoto' and 'estruendo,' Hindi 'भूकम्प' and 'कंपन,' and Swahili 'tetemeko' all reflect how languages distinguish the seismic from the acoustic.

1. earthquake, seismic shaking (7×) A literal earthquake — seismic shaking of the ground. The famous earthquake of Amos 1:1 and Zechariah 14:5, the theophanic quaking at Horeb (1 Kgs 19:11-12), and the eschatological trembling of Ezekiel 38:19 and Isaiah 29:6 all use this sense. Cross-linguistic evidence is remarkably consistent: 'terremoto' (Spa), 'भूकम्प' (Hin), 'ـ' (Ara), '지진' (Kor), 'Erdbeben' (Ger). EARTHQUAKE SHAKING en: and-with-earthquake, earthquake, in-the-earthquake | es: el-terremoto, en-el-terremoto, terremoto | fr: [וברעש], dans-le-earthquake, earthquake | de: Erdbeben, [וברעש], das-Erdbeben 1Kgs 19:11; 1Kgs 19:12; Isa 29:6; Ezek 38:19

2. shaking, trembling, commotion (6×) Violent shaking, trembling, or commotion that is not necessarily seismic — the rattling of a quivering spear (Job 41:29), the agitation of a war-horse (Job 39:24), or the trembling of terrified people (Ezek 12:18). Spanish 'estruendo' and 'temblor,' Hindi 'कंपन,' and Arabic 'ـ' distinguish this broader physical agitation from true earthquake. Isaiah 9:5 uses it for the tumult of battle. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING

en: and-a-commotion, at-the-rattling-of, in-shaking | es: Con-estruendo, con-estruendo, con-temblor | fr: [ברעש], [ורעש], dans-ברעש | de: Erdbeben, [ברעש], [ורעש] Job 39:24; Job 41:29; Isa 9:5; Jer 10:22; Ezek 12:18

3. rumbling, thunderous noise (4×) A loud rumbling or thunderous noise, often associated with the wheels of war chariots (Nah 3:2, Jer 47:3) or the awesome sound of divine glory moving (Ezek 3:12-13). The acoustic dimension predominates here over physical motion. Spanish 'estruendo,' Arabic 'ـ' (thunder), and Swahili 'mshindo' (loud noise) confirm the auditory focus. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING

en: earthquake, from-rumbling-of, rattling-of | es: desde-estruendo-de, estruendo, estruendo-de | fr: [מרעש], tremblement | de: Erdbeben, [מרעש] Jer 47:3; Ezek 3:12; Ezek 3:13; Nah 3:2

רָפָא H7495 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (69×)

To heal, cure, restore to health; as participle: physician; also to repair or mend (of objects)

The primary Hebrew verb for healing, spanning physical cure, spiritual restoration, and even structural repair. In the Qal stem God declares 'I kill and I make alive; I wound and I heal' (Deut 32:39), establishing rapha' as the definitive word for divine restoration. The Nifal passive covers being healed of disease or affliction (Isa 53:5), while the Piel intensive denotes thorough medical treatment, as when physicians embalm Jacob (Gen 50:2) or prophets diagnose Israel's wounds (Jer 6:14). The participle functions as a professional title, 'physician,' bridging human and divine healing. Arabic rafa'a means 'to mend or darn,' preserving the root's ancient concrete sense of stitching and repair.

1. Qal: to heal (30×) The core Qal active meaning: to heal, cure, or restore to health, with God or a human agent as subject. Covers 30 occurrences across finite forms, infinitives, and the infinitive absolute. Arabic rafa'a ('to mend'), Swahili -ponya ('to heal'), and Korean gochida ('to cure') each capture a facet. Key passages include God healing Abimelech's household (Gen 20:17) and Hezekiah's prayer for healing (2 Kgs 20:5). HEALING ACTIVITY

en: Heal-me, I-will-heal, and-I-will-heal-him | es: Sáname, para-sanar, sana | fr: [וארפא], [וירפא], et-guérir | de: [ארפא], [לרפוא], [תרפינה] Gen 20:17; Num 12:13; Deut 32:39; 2Kgs 20:5; 2Kgs 20:8

2. Nifal: to be healed (17×) Nifal passive: to be healed, cured, or to recover. Seventeen occurrences describe the subject undergoing healing, particularly in Levitical skin-disease regulations where the priest observes whether the affliction 'has been healed' (Lev 13:18, 37; 14:3, 48). Isaiah 53:5, 'by his wounds we are healed,' is the theological pinnacle of this sense, rendered in Spanish as fuimos sanados. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: [ketiv], and-I-will-be-healed, and-is-healed | es: Y-fueron-sanadas, [kethiv], fuimos-sanados- | fr: a-guérit, et-est-guérit, et-furent-guérit | de: der-heilte, du-soll-sein-heilte, hat-heilte Lev 13:18; Lev 13:37; Lev 14:3; Lev 14:48; Deut 28:27

3. Piel: to treat, heal thoroughly (9×) Piel intensive: to treat medically, to heal thoroughly or decisively. Nine occurrences emphasize completeness or professional care. Exodus 21:19 requires the injurer to ensure the victim 'is thoroughly healed.' Jeremiah's biting critique that false prophets 'have healed the wound of my people lightly' (Jer 6:14; 8:11) uses the Piel to expose superficial treatment. French guerir and German heilen both map to this thorough curative action. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: (we-healed), And-they-have-healed, I-have-healed | es: He-sanado, Y-curan, Y-sanaron | fr: et-guérir, et-healing, guérir | de: er-heilt, er-soll-heilen, heilen Exod 21:19; 2Kgs 2:21; Jer 6:14; Jer 8:11

4. Qal participle: physician, healer (8×) Qal active participle used as a substantive noun: physician, healer, doctor. Eight occurrences include the Egyptian physicians who embalm Jacob (Gen 50:2), God's self-designation as 'your healer' (Exod 15:26), and Asa's failure to seek the Lord instead of physicians (2 Chr 16:12). Spanish medicos and German Arzten confirm the professional-title reading across translation traditions. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: a-healer, healers-of, in-the-healers | es: El-que-sana, el-que-sana, en-los-médicos | fr: [ברפאים], guérir, le-guérir | de: [רפאי], dein-healer, den-Ärzten Gen 50:2; Exod 15:26; 2Chr 16:12; Job 13:4

5. (3×) Hithpael reflexive: to heal oneself or seek healing for oneself. Three occurrences cluster around King Joram going to Jezreel 'to heal himself' of wounds received in battle (2 Kgs 8:29; 9:15; 2 Chr 22:6). The reflexive form distinguishes self-directed recovery from healing administered by another, a nuance reflected in Spanish para curarse and German zu heile sich selbst. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: to-heal-himself | es: para-curarse | fr: [להתרפא], à-guéris-lui-même | de: heilen, zu-heile-sich-selbst 2Kgs 8:29; 2Kgs 9:15; 2Chr 22:6

6. (1×) An extended sense meaning to repair or mend a physical structure, not a human body. In 1 Kings 18:30 Elijah 'repaired' the altar of the Lord that had been torn down. Spanish reparar and English 'repaired' both depart from medical vocabulary, confirming that Hebrew rapha' bridges bodily healing and structural restoration, echoing the Arabic root sense of darning and mending. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-he-repaired | es: y-reparó | fr: et-il-repaired | de: und-er-repaired 1Kgs 18:30

7. (1×) A Nifal occurrence in Jeremiah 19:11 where a potter's vessel is shattered beyond the possibility of being 'repaired' or made whole again. This extends the healing metaphor to irreparable brokenness, a powerful prophetic image of judgment. The sense parallels sense 6 in applying rapha' to objects rather than persons, but emphasizes the impossibility of restoration. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: be-repaired | es: ser-reparado | fr: guérir | de: heilen Jer 19:11

רְפָאִים H7496 Art / N-mp (8×)

Shades or spirits of the dead, the ghostly inhabitants of Sheol in wisdom and prophetic literature.

A haunting plural noun designating the 'shades' – the weakened, powerless spirits of the dead dwelling in Sheol. The word appears in some of the most evocative passages about death and the afterlife in the Hebrew Bible. In Proverbs, the house of the forbidden woman leads down to the rephaim (Prov 2:18; 9:18), while Job asks whether the shades tremble beneath the waters (Job 26:5). Isaiah uses the term both for the mocking welcome of a fallen tyrant in Sheol (Isa 14:9) and for God's promise of resurrection (Isa 26:19). Spanish 'los muertos,' French 'ombre/ombres,' and German 'Totengeister' all capture the ghostly, diminished quality these figures embody.

shades, departed spirits (8×) The shades or departed spirits inhabiting Sheol, conceived as feeble, shadow-like remnants of the living. Etymologically connected to a root suggesting weakness or sinking down, the term portrays the dead as powerless beings in an underworld existence. Key passages include Job 26:5, where the rephaim tremble beneath the waters; Proverbs 2:18 and 9:18, where they haunt the path of folly leading to death; Psalm 88:10, questioning whether shades can praise God; and Isaiah 14:9, where they rise to greet a fallen king. The German 'Totengeister' (death-spirits) and Spanish 'los muertos' both reflect this sense of diminished post-mortem existence. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: dead, shades, the-Rephaim | es: Los-Refaim, a-los-refaim, los-muertos | fr: le-ombre, ombre, ombres | de: Totengeister, [הרפאים], [רפאים] Job 26:5; Ps 88:10; Prov 2:18; Prov 9:18; Prov 21:16

הָרָפָה H7497a Prep-l (6×)

Ha-Raphah; the eponymous giant ancestor of Philistine warrior-champions slain by David's men.

Always appears with the definite article (הָרָפָה, 'the Raphah'), identifying a legendary progenitor of the Rephaim giant-clan. The phrase 'born to the Raphah' (2 Sam 21:16, 18, 20, 22) designates Philistine champions of extraordinary stature whom David's warriors defeated in single combat. The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 20:6, 8 uses the variant form הָרָפָא. Spanish 'el Rafa' and French 'le Raphah' both preserve the article, reflecting the Hebrew construction that treats this as a dynastic title rather than a mere personal name.

the Raphah (giant clan ancestor) (6×) A proper noun with the definite article designating the ancestral figure of the Rephaim giant-clan. All six occurrences appear in the narrative cycle of 2 Samuel 21 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 20, where Philistine warriors of extraordinary size are identified as 'born to the Raphah' (יְלִידֵי הָרָפָה). The construction functions as a clan patronymic rather than an individual biography. The Spanish rendering 'al Rafa / el Rafa' and the French 'le Raphah / à le Raphah' both mirror the articled Hebrew, while English translations render it 'the Rapha(h),' emphasizing its role as a collective ancestor-title. RAPHAH GIANT CLAN en: the-Raphah, to-the-Rapha, to-the-Raphah | es: al-Rafa, el-Rafa, para-el-rafa | fr: [להרפא], le-Raphah, à-le-Raphah | de: [להרפא], der-Raphah, zu-der-Raphah 2Sam 21:16; 2Sam 21:18; 2Sam 21:20; 2Sam 21:22; 1Chr 20:6

רְפָאִים H7497b Art / N-proper-mp (19×)

Rephaim — an ancient race of giants inhabiting Canaan and Transjordan before Israel's conquest

A proper noun designating a pre-Israelite people renowned for their extraordinary stature. The Rephaim inhabited both sides of the Jordan: in Bashan, where Og was the last of their remnant (Deut 3:11), and in the valley south of Jerusalem that bears their name (2 Sam 5:18). Scripture links them with the Anakim and the Zamzummim (Deut 2:11, 20), painting a picture of formidable peoples displaced by divine mandate. German 'Totengeister' intriguingly echoes the homonymous connection to shades of the dead, though here the term is purely ethnic.

Rephaim (ancient giant people) (19×) The ethnic group Rephaim (רְפָאִים II), an ancient people of great physical stature who occupied Canaan and Transjordan before Israel's arrival. They appear in the Table of Nations context (Gen 15:20), in Og's kingdom of Bashan (Deut 3:11; Josh 12:4), and in the Valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:18, 22). The name is distinct from the homonymous 'shades/dead' usage of the same root. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: Rephaim, and-the-Rephaim, the-Rephaim | es: Refaim, Refaím, los-refaim | fr: Rephaim, [הרפאים], [רפאים] | de: Refaiter, Rephaim, Totengeister Gen 14:5; Gen 15:20; Deut 2:11; Deut 2:20

רָפָא H7498 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Rapha; personal name, a Benjamite ancestor appearing in genealogical lists

A personal name belonging to men in the tribe of Benjamin. First Chronicles 8:2 lists Rapha among the sons of Benjamin, while 8:37 mentions another Rapha in a later genealogical sequence. The name is distinct from the Rephaim (רְפָאִים), though the forms are related. The Septuagint offers Greek transliterations without interpretation.

(2×) A masculine personal name appearing in Benjamite genealogies (1 Chr 8:2, 8:37). The name רָפָא may mean 'he has healed' (from the root רפא), though BDB notes it is distinct from the plural form רְפָאִים (Rephaim, the pre-Israelite giants). The two occurrences may refer to different individuals in separate family lines within Benjamin. The Septuagint's Ραφηα/Ραφαι simply transliterates without etymological comment. Modern languages follow suit (Spanish Rafa, etc.), preserving the name without certain meaning. RAPHAH GIANT CLAN en: Rafah, and-Rafa | es: Rafa, y-Rafa | fr: [ורפא], [רפה] | de: [ורפא], [רפה] 1Chr 8:2; 1Chr 8:37

רְפֻאָה H7499 N-fpc (3×)

remedies, medicines, healing treatments

This plural noun designates medicines or healing treatments, appearing exclusively in prophetic oracles using medical imagery for national crisis. Jeremiah and Ezekiel employ it metaphorically: nations seeking 'remedies' for their mortal wounds will find none. The term emphasizes the futility of human solutions when divine judgment has fallen—no amount of medicine can heal what God has determined to destroy.

(3×) The word refers to medicinal remedies or healing treatments, always used figuratively for national disasters. Jeremiah 30:13 declares Judah has 'no remedies for your wound,' emphasizing the incurable nature of judgment. Jeremiah 46:11 mocks Egypt: 'In vain you have used many medicines; there is no healing for you'—multiplied remedies prove useless against Babylon's invasion. Ezekiel 30:21 announces Pharaoh's arm will not be bound up 'with remedies to heal it.' The medical imagery underscores complete helplessness: the patient is beyond cure, the wound mortal, the remedies powerless. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: medicines, remedies, remedies-of | es: remedios | fr: [רפאות], guérison | de: [רפאות] Jer 30:13; Jer 46:11; Ezek 30:21

רְפָאוּת H7500 N-fs (1×)

healing, restoration to health

This noun appears in Proverbs 3:8, where wisdom and fear of the Lord bring 'healing to your navel and refreshment to your bones.' The term captures restoration to health or wholeness. In Proverbs' characteristic way, spiritual-ethical virtues produce physical benefits—living wisely quite literally brings bodily health. The metaphor of healing applied to the navel may refer to the body's core or to prenatal life-giving connection, suggesting wholeness from the very foundation of life.

(1×) Physical healing or restoration to health, promised in Proverbs 3:8 to those who fear the Lord and trust in his wisdom. The sage presents this healing as a comprehensive benefit of righteous living, affecting even the most central parts of the body. This holistic view connects spiritual obedience with physical flourishing, reflecting Proverbs' integration of wisdom's benefits across all dimensions of life. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: healing | es: Sanidad | fr: רפאות | de: [רפאות] Prov 3:8

רְפָאֵל H7501 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (1×)

Rephael, a Levitical gatekeeper in David's time

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 26:7 among the Levitical gatekeepers. The name means 'God has healed' or 'El heals,' combining 'rapha' (heal) with 'el' (God). Names incorporating healing language were common in Israel, reflecting the theology that Yahweh is the source of health and restoration. Rephael served in the organized temple service that David established, though no further details about his life or family are preserved.

(1×) A Levite serving as a gatekeeper in the tabernacle service during David's reign, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 26:7. His name's theological content ('God heals') exemplifies the common Israelite practice of embedding faith confessions in personal names, though the text provides no information about the circumstances of his naming or whether any healing event prompted his parents' choice. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Rephael | es: y-Refael | fr: [ורפאל] | de: [ורפאל] 1Chr 26:7

רָפַד H7502 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

spread, support, refresh—extending something flat or providing physical backing

This verb captures the act of spreading something out flat, like a crocodile's scales leaving marks on mud (Job 41:30), or providing support from beneath. In Song 2:5, the lover asks to be refreshed or sustained with apples, using imagery of being propped up or supported. The term can describe both literal spreading and metaphorical sustenance, sharing a semantic connection with spreading out a support or cushion.

(3×) The three occurrences span literal spreading (the crocodile's trail in mud) and figurative sustenance (being refreshed/supported with fruit). Spanish uses 'extender' (spread) and 'refrescar' (refresh), while French employs 'restaurer' (restore/refresh), reflecting both the physical and restorative dimensions. Job 17:13 uses the past form to describe spreading a bed in Sheol, reinforcing the image of laying something out flat. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-have-spread, he-spreads, refresh-me | es: extiende, extiendo, refrescadme | fr: restaurer, restaurez-moi | de: [ירפד], [רפדוני], [ורפדתי] Job 17:13; Job 41:30; Song 2:5

רָפָה H7503 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (46×)

to sink, relax, let go; grow slack or weak; be lazy; abandon; cease, be still; let drop; weaken

A verb of loosening and release that radiates from physical slackening into emotional and moral territory. The core image is hands dropping, grip relaxing, strength ebbing away — whether from fear (Isa 13:7), discouragement (Neh 6:9), or the natural decline of day (Judg 19:9). In causative stems, the meaning sharpens: to actively weaken another's resolve (Jer 38:4), to abandon someone entirely (Deut 31:6), or — memorably — to command stillness before God (Ps 46:10, 'Be still and know that I am the LORD'). The verb's range from physical collapse to spiritual surrender makes it one of Hebrew's most psychologically textured roots.

1. let go, release, leave alone (Hifil/Qal) (11×) To let go, release, or leave someone alone — primarily Hifil but also Qal. Multilingual glosses converge on 'leave' (Spanish 'Déjala/Déjame,' French 'donne-reste'). Exodus 4:26 preserves a famously difficult Qal usage where Zipporah's intervention causes the LORD to 'let him go.' Deuteronomy 9:14 and Joshua 10:6 show the imperative force. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: I-leave-it, I-will-let-go-him, I-will-let-it-go | es: Déjala, Déjame, Déjanos | fr: [ארפה], donne-reste, et-il-que-aller | de: [ארפה], [ארפנו], [תרף] Exod 4:26; Deut 9:14; Josh 10:6; Judg 11:37; 1Sam 11:3

2. be slack, grow weak (Qal) (10×) Intransitive Qal sense of becoming slack, feeble, or weak — hands, bodies, or resolve losing strength. Spanish 'desfallecerán' and French 'faiblir' capture progressive deterioration. Isaiah 13:7 pairs it with melting hearts at Babylon's fall. Nehemiah 6:9 reveals the strategy: 'their hands will drop from the work.' WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: and-became-weak, and-dropped, and-shall-be-feeble | es: caerán, desfallecerán, desfallezcan | fr: [ירפו], et-dropped, et-faiblir | de: [ורפו], [ירפו], [רפו] 2Sam 4:1; 2Chr 15:7; Neh 6:9; Isa 13:7; Jer 6:24

3. be lazy, be slack (Nifal/Hitpael) (6×) Reflexive sense (Niphal/Hitpael) of showing oneself slack or lazy — culpable negligence rather than inability. Exodus 5:8,17 voice Pharaoh's accusation: 'you are lazy!' (Spanish 'flojos'). Proverbs 18:9 links the slack worker to the destroyer. Joshua 18:3 challenges the tribes: 'How long will you be slack?' LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: being-slack, if-you-show-yourself-slack, lazy | es: Si-te-muestras-débil, el-que-se-afloja, flojos | fr: lazy, relâcher, étant-slack | de: [התרפית], [מתרפה], lazy Exod 5:8; Exod 5:17; Josh 18:3; Prov 18:9

4. abandon, forsake (Hifil) (6×) Hifil sense of abandoning or forsaking, used almost exclusively in divine promises of faithfulness. Deuteronomy 4:31 assures 'He will not abandon you' (Spanish 'no te abandonará'). The fivefold refrain across Deut 31:6,8, Josh 1:5, and 1 Chr 28:20 forms a covenant assurance formula: God's grip does not slacken. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: He-will-abandon-you, I-will-fail-you, abandon | es: abandones, te-abandonaré, te-dejará | fr: Il-fera-abandon-tu, [ירפך], fera-il-fail-tu | de: Er-wird-verlassen-du, [ירפך], abandon Deut 4:31; Deut 31:6; Deut 31:8; Josh 1:5; 1Chr 28:20

5. cease, stop, be still (Hifil) (5×) Hifil sense of ceasing, stopping, or being still. Psalm 46:10 yields the celebrated 'Be still and know that I am God' (Spanish 'Basta'). Psalm 37:8 counsels ceasing from anger. 1 Samuel 15:16 has Samuel commanding Saul to 'stop.' French 'arrête' and German 'aufhören' confirm the cessative force. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: be-still, cease, let-drop | es: Basta, Deja, detén | fr: [הרף], arrête, le-relâcher | de: [הרף], aufhören, lass-drop 1Sam 15:16; 2Sam 24:16; 1Chr 21:15; Ps 37:8; Ps 46:10

6. let drop, let down (Piel) (3×) Piel sense of physically letting something drop or letting down — the concrete, mechanical action. Job 12:21 describes God loosening the belt of the mighty (Spanish 'afloja'). Ezekiel 1:24-25 depicts the living creatures letting down their wings when the divine voice speaks. The Piel intensifies the physical action: deliberate lowering rather than passive sinking. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: he-loosens, they-let-drop | es: afloja., bajaban | fr: relâcher | de: [רפה], [תרפינה] Job 12:21; Ezek 1:24; Ezek 1:25

7. sink, decline, subside (Qal) (3×) Qal sense of sinking, declining, or subsiding — applied to physical phenomena rather than human strength. Judges 19:9 uses it for the day declining toward evening (Greek LXX 'kekliken,' Latin 'declined'). Isaiah 5:24 compares Israel's collapse to hay sinking in flame. Judges 8:3 describes Ephraim's anger subsiding after Gideon's diplomacy. Spanish 'se calmó' (calmed down) captures the subsiding movement. DECREASE DIMINISH

en: sinking, sinks, subsided | es: consume, declina, se-calmó | fr: faiblir, sinking, subsided | de: [ירפה], sinking, subsided Judg 8:3; Judg 19:9; Isa 5:24

8. weaken, discourage (Piel) (2×) Piel causative sense of actively weakening or discouraging someone's morale. Jeremiah 38:4 accuses the prophet of 'weakening the hands' (Spanish 'debilitando') of the soldiers. Ezra 4:4 describes adversaries weakening the people of Judah. The Piel signals deliberate action: not being weak, but making others weak. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: weakening | es: debilita, debilitando | fr: [מרפים], faiblir | de: [מרפא], [מרפים] Ezra 4:4; Jer 38:4

רָפֶה H7504 Adj-fp (4×)

slack, weak, feeble

This adjective describes physical or moral weakness, slackness, or feebleness—whether of people, hands (symbolizing strength), or resolve. The term often appears in military or courage contexts, where 'slack hands' represent discouragement or inability to fight. It captures both bodily weakness and psychological collapse.

(4×) Denotes slackness or weakness. Numbers 13:18 asks whether the land's inhabitants are 'strong or weak' (הֲחָזָק הוּא אִם-רָפֶה). 2 Samuel 17:2 describes David as 'weary and weak-handed' (רְפֵה יָדָיִם, i.e., demoralized). Job 4:3 accuses Job of having 'strengthened weak hands' (יָדַיִם רָפוֹת) through his teaching—hands that symbolize courage. Isaiah 35:3 commands 'strengthen weak hands' in restoration prophecy. The idiom 'slack/weak hands' consistently indicates discouragement or fear. Multilingual glosses show this: Spanish 'débil/débiles,' French 'faible,' German 'schwach'—all capturing the weakness, with some preserving the hands imagery ('weak-of hands'). WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: and-weak-of, or-weak, weak | es: débiles, o-débil?, y-débil-de | fr: [רפות], et-weak-de, ou-faible | de: [רפות], oder-schwach, und-weak-von Num 13:18; 2Sam 17:2; Job 4:3; Isa 35:3

רָפוּא H7505 N-proper-ms (1×)

Raphu, a Benjamite whose son was one of the twelve spies

This personal name appears in Numbers 13:9, identifying the father of Palti, the spy representing the tribe of Benjamin in the reconnaissance of Canaan. The name possibly derives from a root meaning 'healed' or relates to 'rapha' (heal). Raphu himself plays no direct role in the narrative; he functions solely to identify his son's lineage. The Septuagint renders the name as Raphou, showing minimal phonetic adaptation.

(1×) The father of Palti, the Benjamite representative among the twelve spies sent to survey Canaan in Numbers 13:9. His inclusion in the spy narrative serves the genealogical function of properly identifying his son within tribal structure, following the biblical pattern of using patronymics to establish identity and inheritance rights even for figures who play no active narrative role. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Raphu | es: Rafú | fr: Raphu | de: Raphu Num 13:9

רָפַח H7506 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Rephah, a descendant of Ephraim listed in tribal genealogies

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:25 within the genealogies of Ephraim. The name may be related to the root 'rapha' (heal) or possibly means 'support.' The Ephraimite genealogies in 1 Chronicles are particularly complex, showing multiple generations and branching lines. Rephah represents one node in this genealogical network, though no narrative traditions about him survive.

(1×) An Ephraimite ancestor listed in 1 Chronicles 7:25, positioned within the complex genealogical chains that establish tribal identity and land inheritance claims. His placement in the genealogical structure serves the Chronicler's purpose of documenting the full scope of Israelite tribal organization, though the text preserves no stories or characteristics specific to this individual. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Refach | es: Y-Réfaj | fr: [ורפח] | de: [ורפח] 1Chr 7:25

רִפִּידָה H7507 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

its support, back or armrest (of a palanquin)

This noun with suffix appears in Song of Songs 3:10, describing Solomon's ornate palanquin. The term refers to the support structure—either the back or armrests of the carried seat. The description emphasizes the luxury of the conveyance: posts of silver, base of gold, seat of purple, and this support inlaid with love. The Septuagint's 'anaklitron' (reclining place) and Vulgate's 'reclinatorium' both suggest a supported seat or couch.

(1×) The back or supporting structure of Solomon's palanquin described in Song of Songs 3:10, part of the elaborate catalog of its luxurious construction. The term indicates the functional element that provides support for the rider, but in this poetic context it becomes another surface for precious ornamentation, reflecting the extravagant beauty of the wedding procession described in the passage. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: its-support | es: su-respaldo | fr: son-support | de: [רפידתו] Song 3:10

רְפִידִים H7508 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (5×)

Rephidim — an Israelite wilderness encampment near Sinai, site of water from the rock and the battle with Amalek

Rephidim was a crucial wilderness station during the Exodus, located in the Sinai Peninsula near Mount Horeb. It is the setting for two pivotal events: the miraculous provision of water from the rock when the people thirsted (Exod 17:1), and the battle against Amalek where Moses held up his hands for victory (Exod 17:8). The Israelites departed from Rephidim to reach the wilderness of Sinai (Exod 19:2), and Numbers 33:14-15 records it in the itinerary list. Spanish 'Refidim,' French 'Rephidim,' and German 'Refidim/Rephidein' all preserve the name, with the Septuagint rendering Rhaphidein.

(5×) The proper name Rephidim, a wilderness encampment of Israel in the Sinai region, memorable as the site where water was struck from the rock (Exod 17:1) and where Israel fought Amalek (Exod 17:8). It serves as the last stop before Sinai itself (Exod 19:2) and appears in the itinerary of Numbers 33:14-15. Spanish 'Refidim,' French 'Rephidim,' and German 'Refidim' all transliterate consistently. The etymology may connect to 'resting places' or 'supports,' though this remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Rephidim, in-Rephidim | es: de-Refidim, en-Refidim | fr: dans-Rephidim, de-Rephidim | de: in-Refidim, in-Rephidim, von-Refidim Exod 17:1; Exod 17:8; Exod 19:2; Num 33:14; Num 33:15

רְפָיָה H7509 N-proper-ms (5×)

Rephaiah — a personal name borne by five different men across Chronicles and Nehemiah

Rephaiah is a personal name meaning 'Yah has healed,' borne by at least five distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. These include a descendant of David (1 Chr 3:21), a Simeonite military leader who defeated the Amalekites at Mount Seir (1 Chr 4:42), a clan head of Issachar (1 Chr 7:2), a descendant of Saul through Jonathan (1 Chr 9:43, paralleling Raphah in 8:37), and a post-exilic official who helped rebuild the wall of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh 3:9). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Rhaphaia and Rhaphala, while Spanish 'Refaías' and French forms preserve the theophoric element.

(5×) The proper name Rephaiah ('Yah has healed'), used for five distinct individuals: a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:21), a Simeonite commander (4:42), an Issacharite clan chief (7:2), a Benjaminite descendant of Saul (9:43, variant of Raphah in 8:37), and a post-exilic district ruler who repaired Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:9). Spanish 'Refaías/Refaya' and the Septuagint Rhaphaia preserve the theophoric structure. The name's wide distribution across tribes and eras suggests it was a common Yahwistic name expressing hope in divine healing. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Rephaiah, Rephayah, and-Refayah | es: Refaya, Refaías, y-Refaya | fr: [ורפיה], [רפיה] | de: [ורפיה], [רפיה] 1Chr 3:21; 1Chr 4:42; 1Chr 7:2; 1Chr 9:43; Neh 3:9

רְפָיוֹן H7510 Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

feebleness, limpness, sinking (of hands in helpless terror)

This construct noun appears in Jeremiah 47:3, describing how fathers fail to turn back for their children 'because of the feebleness of hands.' The phrase 'sinking of hands' metaphorically captures complete helpless terror—hands that hang limp and useless, unable to act. In the invasion scenario Jeremiah describes, even paternal instinct is overwhelmed by paralyzing fear. The image powerfully conveys the psychological dimension of military defeat.

(1×) Weakness or limpness of the hands, used in Jeremiah 47:3 as a metaphor for helpless terror that prevents normal action. The construct phrase 'from the feebleness of hands' explains why fathers abandon even their children during the Philistine invasion—their hands hang useless, paralyzed by fear, unable to perform the most basic protective actions that natural affection would normally compel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-feebleness-of | es: por-debilidad-de | fr: [מרפיון] | de: [מרפיון] Jer 47:3

רָפַס H7511 V-Hitpael-Imp-ms (2×)
humble oneself, trample; to prostrate oneself or stamp down (with varied stems)
A verb with multiple stems meaning to trample, befoul, or humble oneself. Ezekiel 32:2 and 34:18 use it of churning up water or trampling pasture. Proverbs 25:26 speaks of a befouled fountain. Proverbs 6:3 uses the Hithpael: 'humble yourself'—prostrating oneself before another. Psalm 68:30's usage is obscure, possibly involving trampling silver or subduing foes. The semantic range spans physical stamping to self-abasement.

(2×) A multivalent verb whose Qal stem means to trample or tread, fouling water (Ezek 32:2; 34:18) or rendering a fountain turbid (Prov 25:26). The Hithpael stem shifts the action reflexively: 'humble yourself, become a suppliant' (Prov 6:3), urging self-abasement to escape debt. Psalm 68:30 remains textually difficult—possibly 'trampling down pieces of silver' or a corrupted reading. The NH and Syriac cognates (tread, kick) support the physical sense, while the Hithpael innovation ('stamp oneself down') yields the moral sense of prostration and supplication. TRAMPLING AND TREADING en: humble-yourself, trampling-underfoot | es: humíllate, pisoteando | fr: de-se-prosterner, התרפס | de: [התרפס], trampling-underfoot Ps 68:30; Prov 6:3

רָפַס H7512 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (2×)
trample, tread down; to crush underfoot (Aramaic)
An Aramaic verb meaning to trample or tread down. Daniel 7:7 and 7:19 describe the fourth beast trampling the residue with its feet after devouring its prey. The image is one of contemptuous, total destruction—not merely defeating enemies but grinding them into the dust. The participle emphasizes ongoing, relentless action.

(2×) An Aramaic Pe'al verb meaning to trample or tread down, appearing in Daniel's vision of the fourth beast (Dan 7:7, 19). The creature devours and 'tramples' (רָפְסָה) the remnant with its feet, an image of utter subjugation and contempt. The participle form (רָפְסָה) suggests continuous action: 'trampling' without ceasing. Cognate with BH רָפַס, the verb conveys violent treading underfoot, reducing adversaries to nothing. The apocalyptic context intensifies the horror: this is not just military conquest but annihilating desolation. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: trampling | es: pisoteaba | fr: étendre | de: [רפסה] Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19

רַפְסֹדָה H7513 N-fp (1×)
rafts, floating platforms for transporting logs by sea
This plural noun appears in 2 Chronicles 2:16, where Hiram agrees to transport cedar and cypress logs from Lebanon to Solomon. The term refers to rafts or floating platforms—logs lashed together and floated along the coast. This passage parallels 1 Kings 5:23, where the synonym 'dobrot' appears. The use of 'rafts' in the later Chronicles text reflects linguistic development, with the later term perhaps being more common in the post-exilic period.

(1×) Floating platforms constructed by tying logs together for maritime transport, mentioned in 2 Chronicles 2:16 as the method for delivering Lebanese timber to Solomon's building project. This practical marine technology enabled the large-scale transport of construction materials from the forested Lebanese mountains to the Israelite coast, solving the logistical challenge of supplying timber for the temple and palace construction. SHIP SEA VESSEL
en: rafts | es: balsas | fr: [רפסדות] | de: [רפסדות] 2Chr 2:16

רָפַק H7514 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-fs (1×)
leaning, supporting oneself (Hithpael participle)
This reflexive participle appears in Song of Songs 8:5, describing the beloved 'leaning upon her beloved' as they come up from the wilderness. The Hithpael stem emphasizes the reflexive nature of the action—she positions herself in a leaning posture, actively seeking support. The Ethiopic and Arabic cognates confirm this sense of reclining or leaning. The image captures both physical intimacy and relational dependence.

(1×) The posture of leaning on or supporting oneself against another person, described in Song of Songs 8:5 as the woman comes up from the wilderness with her beloved. The reflexive verbal form emphasizes her active choice to lean against him, creating an image of mutual support and intimacy that concludes the lovers' journey from wilderness to civilization, from separation to union. LEAN RELY TRUST
en: leaning | es: recostándose | fr: s'appuyant | de: [מתרפקת] Song 8:5

רָפַס H7515 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (3×)
trample, foul by treading—to muddy or defile water by stamping feet
This verb describes the action of fouling water by trampling through it, particularly vivid in Ezekiel's imagery where Pharaoh is compared to a crocodile churning up rivers. The Nifal participle in Proverbs 25:26 describes a fountain that has become muddied, illustrating moral compromise. The word carries a sense of destructive treading that ruins what was previously clean, whether literal water or metaphorical purity.

(3×) All three uses involve water being rendered turbid through trampling. Ezekiel 32:2 and 34:18 employ this to critique those who muddy resources for others, while Proverbs uses the passive participle for a befouled spring. Spanish 'enturbiar' (make turbid) and French 'fouler' (trample) both capture the ruinous treading action. The imagery consistently involves physical stamping that degrades water quality. TRAMPLING AND TREADING en: and-you-fouled, muddied, you-foul | es: enturbiado, enturbiaréis?, y-pisoteaste | fr: et-fouler, fouler, נרפש | de: [ותרפס], [נרפש], [תרפשון] Prov 25:26; Ezek 32:2; Ezek 34:18

רֶפֶשׁ H7516 N-ms (1×)
mire, muddy sediment churned up by turbulence
This noun appears in Isaiah 57:20, where the prophet compares the wicked to the tossing sea that cannot be quiet, whose waters 'churn up mire and mud.' Paired with 'tit' (mud), the term emphasizes the filthy sediment stirred up by agitated waters. The image captures moral pollution—the wicked cannot achieve rest or peace but continuously roil their environment, bringing up filth.

(1×) Sediment or mire churned up from the bottom by disturbed waters, used metaphorically in Isaiah 57:20 to characterize the condition and effect of wickedness. The image of the restless sea that cannot be still, constantly stirring up muck and mud, perfectly captures the prophet's vision of wickedness as inherently turbulent and polluting, incapable of the peace that God offers to the righteous. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: mire | es: cieno | fr: [רפש] | de: [רפש] Isa 57:20

רֶפֶת H7517 Prep-b (1×)
in the stalls, enclosed shelters for livestock
This prepositional phrase appears in Habakkuk 3:17, in the prophet's famous declaration of faith despite agricultural disaster. Even if 'there is no cattle in the stalls,' Habakkuk will rejoice in the Lord. The term refers to enclosed shelters or pens for livestock, contrasted with open pasture. The New Hebrew and the basic sense point to an enclosure or stable structure where animals are housed and protected.

(1×) Enclosed shelters or stalls for housing cattle, mentioned in Habakkuk 3:17 as part of the prophet's comprehensive catalog of agricultural failure. The phrase 'no cattle in the stalls' completes the picture of total economic collapse—failed crops, lost flocks, and now even the basic livestock kept near the homestead are gone. Yet even facing this complete disaster, Habakkuk declares he will still rejoice in God. CATTLE AND OXEN
en: in-the-stalls | es: en-los-establos | fr: étable | de: [ברפתים] Hab 3:17

רַץ H7518 Prep-b / N-mpc (1×)

pieces, bars, or possibly those who lust for (obscure term in difficult text)

This extremely obscure noun appears in Psalm 68:31 (English 68:30) in a notoriously difficult text. Proposed meanings include 'pieces' or 'bars' of silver, 'wheels,' or various emendations. Ancient versions differ wildly: Aquila and Vulgate suggest 'wheels,' Septuagint proposes 'refined silver.' Modern scholars have suggested everything from 'mercenaries' to 'those who lust for silver.' The text may be corrupt. Any translation here is highly tentative.

(1×) The meaning remains genuinely uncertain in Psalm 68:31, where the phrase might refer to pieces/bars of silver, people who desire silver, or something else entirely. The obscurity likely reflects textual corruption or an archaic term whose meaning was already unclear to ancient translators. Contextually, the verse discusses Egypt bringing tribute to God, but the precise image intended by the original author cannot be determined with confidence from available evidence. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: those-who-lust-for- | es: por-piezas-de | fr: dans-éclat | de: jene-der-lust-für- Ps 68:30

רָצָא H7519 V-Qal-InfAbs (1×)

running, rapid darting motion (infinitive absolute, possibly textually corrupt)

This infinitive absolute appears in Ezekiel 1:14, describing the living creatures who 'ran back and forth.' However, the text is widely regarded as problematic. The Septuagint omits the entire verse, and many modern scholars consider it an interpolation. Some propose reading 'yatso' (went out) instead. If original, it would be an alternate form of 'ruts' (run), emphasizing the rapid, darting movement of the visionary creatures.

(1×) Assuming the text is original, this describes the rapid back-and-forth motion of the living creatures in Ezekiel's throne vision, using an infinitive absolute construction to emphasize the continuous, intense nature of their movement. However, textual uncertainty makes any interpretation tentative. If authentic, it contributes to the overall impression of overwhelming divine dynamism in Ezekiel's inaugural vision—everything in motion, nothing static, the creatures running like lightning flashes. RUNNING AND RACING

en: running | es: corriendo | fr: courir | de: [רצוא] Ezek 1:14

רָצַד H7520 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp / Pn (1×)

do you look with envy, watch with hostile jealousy (Piel imperfect)

This Piel verb appears in Psalm 68:17 (English 68:16), where mountains are personified as watching enviously as God chooses Zion as his dwelling. The root means to watch stealthily or with hostile intent. The Arabic cognate means 'lie in wait,' and the Aramaic supports the sense of stealthy observation. The question 'Why do you watch enviously?' directed at mountains creates a vivid personification of rival sacred sites jealous of God's choice of Zion.

(1×) To observe with envious hostility or jealous watching, applied in Psalm 68:17 to mountains personified as envying Zion's selection as God's dwelling place. The poetic device of mountains feeling jealousy serves the psalm's theology of divine election—God sovereignly chose Mount Zion over other heights (perhaps Sinai or Bashan), and this choice stands despite any supposed superiority of rival mountains, which are imagined glowering enviously at Zion's favored status. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: do-you-look-with-envy | es: miráis-con-envidia | fr: se-briser | de: tun-du-look-mit-Neid Ps 68:16

רָצָה H7521 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (57×)

Be pleased with, delight in; accept favorably; be accepted; enjoy/pay off sabbaths; be favored; seek favor

A verb expressing the full arc of divine and human favor — from inward delight to outward acceptance. In its Qal active form ratsah describes God taking pleasure in a person's ways (1 Chr 29:17) or a worshiper's offering (Mal 1:8). The Nifal passive conveys the state of being found acceptable, a critical concept in Levitical sacrifice law: will this offering 'be accepted' on the offerer's behalf (Lev 1:4)? A remarkable specialized usage appears in the sabbatical-year theology of Lev 26:34-43, where the desolate land finally 'enjoys' its missed sabbaths during exile. The passive participle yields the adjective 'favored,' applied to Asher's tribal blessing (Deut 33:24) and to Mordecai's standing among his people (Esth 10:3).

1. Qal: be pleased with, delight in (27×) The core Qal sense: to be pleased with, take delight in. Arabic radiya ('be well-pleased'), Korean gippuhada ('rejoice, delight'), and Swahili -pendezwa ('be delighted') all converge here. Gen 33:10 records Jacob's relief that Esau has 'been pleased' with him; 1 Chr 28:4 celebrates God's choice of Judah and David as acts of divine pleasure. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT en: He-delights-in, He-was-pleased, You-favored-them | es: Cuando-agradan, Qué-te-agrade, Se-complace | fr: [ורציתם], [רצה], [רצתה] | de: [ברצות], [ברצתו], [הירצך] Gen 33:10; 1Chr 28:4; 1Chr 29:3; 1Chr 29:17; 2Chr 10:7

2. Qal: accept favorably (15×) Transitive Qal: to accept favorably — the act of receiving offerings, persons, or prayers with approval. Korean batda ('receive') and Arabic qabila ('accept') highlight the reception-event. Lev 26:41 warns that the land will not accept them until they humble themselves; 2 Sam 24:23 expresses Araunah's hope that God will accept David's offering. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT

en: I-accept, I-will-accept, I-will-accept-them | es: acepta, aceptaré, los-acepta | fr: [רצם], accept-tu, accepter | de: [אארצה], [והארצה], [וירצהו] Lev 26:41; Lev 26:43; Deut 33:11; 2Sam 24:23; Job 33:26

3. Nifal: be accepted, be acceptable (7×) Nifal passive: to be accepted, be found acceptable — the sacrificial-technical sense governing whether an offering meets the required standard. Lev 1:4 stipulates that a burnt offering 'shall be accepted' on behalf of the worshiper. Korean badadeul-yojirira ('will be accepted') and Swahili -kubaliwa confirm the passive-stative reading across languages. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT

en: and-it-shall-be-accepted, is-pardoned, it-shall-be-accepted | es: perdonada-es, será-aceptado, serán-aceptados | fr: [נרצה], cela-devra-être-accepta, et-cela-devra-être-accepta | de: [נרצה], es-soll-sein-nahm-an, sie-soll-sein-nahm-an Lev 1:4; Lev 7:18; Lev 19:7; Lev 22:23; Lev 22:25

4. Qal/Hifil: enjoy, pay off (sabbaths) (4×) A specialized theological usage: the land 'enjoying' or 'paying off' its missed sabbath years during exile (Lev 26:34, 43; 2 Chr 36:21). Spanish disfrutó ('enjoyed') and pagará ('will pay off') reveal the dual nuance — both compensatory rest and debt-settlement. This sense is unique to the sabbatical-year legislation and its Chronicler echo. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT

en: and-will-enjoy, had-enjoyed, will-enjoy | es: disfrutó, pagará, y-pagará | fr: [רצתה], et-fera-enjoy, fera-enjoy | de: [רצתה], und-wird-enjoy, wird-enjoy Lev 26:34; Lev 26:43; 2Chr 36:21

5. Qal pass. ptcp: favored, acceptable (2×) Qal passive participle functioning as an adjective: favored, acceptable, well-regarded. Deut 33:24 blesses Asher as 'favored among his brothers'; Esth 10:3 describes Mordecai as 'accepted by the multitude of his brethren.' Arabic mardiyyan ('approved') and Korean eunhye-reul banneun ('receiving favor') confirm the adjectival participial force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-accepted, favored-of | es: el-favorito-de, y-aceptado | fr: [ורצוי], favored-de | de: [ורצוי], favored-von Deut 33:24; Esth 10:3

6. (1×) In Job 20:10 the verb takes on the nuance of seeking or currying favor — the wicked man's children 'seek favor from the poor' they exploited. English 'seek favor from' and Spanish buscarán favor de capture the desperate, supplicatory reversal of fortune Zophar describes. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT

en: seek-favor-from | es: buscarán-favor-de | fr: agréer | de: [ירצו] Job 20:10

7. (1×) In 1 Sam 29:4 the Philistine commanders ask how David might 'reconcile himself' with Saul — using ratsah for the political act of regaining an overlord's favor through betrayal on the battlefield. English 'reconcile himself' and Spanish se reconciliará point to an interpersonal-political dimension distinct from cultic acceptance. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS en: will-reconcile-himself | es: se-reconciliará | fr: fera-reconcile-lui-même | de: wird-reconcile-sich-selbst 1Sam 29:4

רָצוֹן H7522 Prep-k / N-msc / 3ms (56×)

Favor, goodwill, acceptance, will, desire, delight; the disposition of a superior toward what pleases, especially God's gracious regard.

Ratson is the word for what God wants and what makes God glad. It appears 56 times across the Hebrew Bible, and in nearly every case it describes a disposition that flows downward — from God to people, from a king to his subjects. Deuteronomy 33:16 invokes 'the favor (retson) of him who dwelt in the bush,' and Psalm 5:12 promises that YHWH will surround the righteous 'with favor as with a shield.' But ratson is not only divine benevolence: it also names the human will, as when the brothers in Genesis 49:6 act according to their own retson, or when Ezra urges Israel to do God's retson (Ezra 10:11). A specialized cultic sense emerges in Leviticus, where sacrifices are offered leratson — 'for acceptance' — before the LORD, a technical formula repeated across the priestly legislation. German Wohlgefallen ('pleasure, delight') and French bienveillance ('benevolence') both cluster around the approving-disposition core, while Spanish agrado ('pleasure') and favor map the word's range between subjective delight and interpersonal grace.

1. favor, goodwill (25×) Favor, goodwill, and gracious regard — the dominant sense at 25 occurrences, describing benevolent disposition from God or a king toward a recipient. Deuteronomy 33:16 and 33:23 use it for divine blessing, and the Psalms repeatedly celebrate YHWH's retson as the source of life and protection: 'in his favor is life' (Ps 30:5), 'by your favor you made my mountain stand strong' (Ps 30:7), 'remember me with the favor you bear toward your people' (Ps 106:4). Proverbs extends the concept to royal courts: 'the king's favor is toward a wise servant' (Prov 14:35). German Wohlgefallen and Gunst ('grace, favor'), French bienveillance, and Spanish favor all select interpersonal-benevolence vocabulary, confirming this as a relational disposition, not merely a feeling. The contrast with to'evah ('abomination') in Proverbs 11:1 and 11:20 sharpens the word's positive charge. MORAL GOODNESS en: acceptance, and-by-your-favor, and-favor-of | es: Favor-de, aceptación, de-favor | fr: bienveillance, bon-plaisir, dans-faveur | de: Gunst, Wohlgefallen, sein-Wohlgefallen Deut 33:16; Deut 33:23; Ps 5:12; Ps 30:5; Ps 30:7

2. will, desire, purpose (16×) Will, desire, or volitional purpose — 16 occurrences where retson names what someone intends or wishes to do. Genesis 49:6 warns against the brothers' self-willed retson that hamstrung oxen; Nehemiah 9:24 and 9:37 describe foreign rulers doing 'according to their will' (kirtsono); Daniel 8:4 and 11:3, 16, 36 portray imperial conquerors acting 'according to his will.' The shift from external-favor to internal-volition is cross-linguistically visible: Spanish voluntad ('will') and conforme a su voluntad ('according to his will') replace the favor/agrado of sense 1, and French similarly shifts from bienveillance to volonte. In 2 Chronicles 15:15 the people seek God 'with all their retson' — desire that approaches wholehearted devotion. WILL AND DESIRE
en: His-will, Your-will, according-to-their-will | es: Deseo-de, como-voluntad-de-ellos, conforme-a-su-voluntad | fr: [כרצון], [כרצונם], [רצונו] | de: Wohlgefallen, [כרצונו], [כרצנו] Gen 49:6; 2Chr 15:15; Ezra 10:11; Neh 9:24; Neh 9:37

3. acceptance (of offering) (11×) Acceptance of a sacrificial offering before God — 11 occurrences concentrated in the Priestly legislation of Exodus and Leviticus. The technical formula leratson lifne YHWH ('for acceptance before the LORD') first appears at Exodus 28:38 for the priestly diadem and recurs throughout Leviticus: offerings must be 'for your acceptance' (lirtsonekem, Lev 1:3; 19:5; 22:19-21, 29). This is cultic vocabulary with precise ritual force — the retson here is not generalized goodwill but the specific divine acceptance that renders a sacrifice efficacious. German fuer acceptance and Spanish para aceptacion both adopt formal liturgical-register vocabulary. The seven Levitical occurrences form a tight semantic cluster that later Israelite theology broadened into prophetic critiques of empty ritual (cf. Isa 58:5, 'a day of ratson'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-acceptance, for-acceptance-your, for-his-acceptance | es: Para-vuestro-agrado, me-son-agradables, para-aceptación | fr: bienveillance, pour-acceptance, pour-acceptance-ton | de: fuer-acceptance, fuer-acceptance-dein, fuer-dein-acceptance Exod 28:38; Lev 1:3; Lev 19:5; Lev 22:19; Lev 22:20

4. delight, pleasure (4×) Delight, pleasure, or that which brings satisfaction — 4 occurrences in Proverbs where retson describes what pleases God as a matter of taste and delight rather than relational favor or cultic acceptance. Proverbs 11:1 declares 'a false balance is an abomination to the LORD, but a just weight is his delight (retsono)'; 11:20 contrasts the 'perverse of heart' as abomination with the 'blameless in their way' as his retson; 12:22 and 15:8 follow the same pattern. German Wohlgefallen ('pleasure, delight') and Spanish agrado ('pleasure') both select hedonic-evaluation vocabulary here, distinguishing this from the interpersonal favor of sense 1. The Proverbs usage personalizes divine evaluation: God takes pleasure in integrity the way a connoisseur delights in fine craft. DELIGHT PLEASURE
en: are-His-delight, but-His-delight, is-His-delight | es: agrado-de-él, favor-su, y-agrado-de-él | fr: et-son-volonté-lui, son-volonté-lui | de: Wohlgefallen, und-Wohlgefallen Prov 11:1; Prov 11:20; Prov 12:22; Prov 15:8

רָצַח H7523 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms / 3ms (47×)

to murder, kill unlawfully; the manslayer; used in the Decalogue prohibition against illicit killing

The verb behind the sixth commandment — 'You shall not murder' (Exod 20:13) — and the most morally loaded killing-word in Hebrew. Unlike the broader verb harag or the judicial hemit, this root focuses on unauthorized, illicit taking of human life, whether intentional or accidental. Its participial form becomes virtually a legal technical term in Numbers 35 for the 'manslayer' who flees to a city of refuge. Across its stems the word intensifies from accidental killing to habitual murder (Piel) and the passive experience of being slain (Nifal, Pual), mapping the full moral landscape of unlawful bloodshed.

1. murderer, manslayer (Qal ptc.) (31×) The Qal active participle functioning as an agent noun — 'murderer' or 'manslayer' — a legal technical term in the cities-of-refuge legislation. Spanish el homicida and German Totschläger both capture the legal agent sense. Numbers 35:6–34 uses this participle over twenty times to define the manslayer's rights and the blood-avenger's jurisdiction, making it the central term for homicide law in the Torah. MURDERER KILLER en: a-manslayer, manslayer, murderer | es: el-homicida, homicida | fr: le-meurtrier, meurtrier, un-meurtrier | de: Totschlaeger, der-Totschlaeger, der-murderer Num 35:6; Num 35:11; Num 35:12; Num 35:16

2. to murder, kill (Qal) (7×) Qal finite verb forms meaning to murder or kill unlawfully. Spanish asesinarás and German du sollst morden reflect the moral weight. Exodus 20:13 and Deuteronomy 5:17 enshrine the prohibition in the Decalogue. Deuteronomy 4:42 extends the verb to unintentional killing — one who slays 'without knowledge' — while 1 Kings 21:19 uses it for Ahab's judicial murder of Naboth. KILLING AND REMOVING en: and-kills, and-murders-him, have-you-murdered | es: asesinarás, matare, matará | fr: ai-tu-murdered, et-kills, et-murders-lui | de: du-soll-murder, er-soll-toeten, habe-du-murdered Exod 20:13; Num 35:27; Num 35:30; Deut 4:42; Deut 5:17

3. murdering (Qal inf. abs.) (2×) The Qal infinitive absolute used as a verbal noun naming the act of murdering, typically in prophetic lists of covenant violations. Spanish matar and French tuer render the bare action. Hosea 4:2 catalogues Israel's sins — 'swearing, lying, murdering' — and Jeremiah 7:9 asks, 'Will you steal, murder, commit adultery?' — the infinitive absolute placing murder alongside other cardinal transgressions. KILLING AND REMOVING en: and-murdering, murder | es: matar, y-matar | fr: [רצח], et-tuer | de: [ורצח], [רצח] Jer 7:9; Hos 4:2

4. to be killed (Nifal passive) (2×) The Nifal passive — to be murdered or killed — expressing the victim's experience. Spanish seré asesinado and French le murdered indicate the passive voice. Judges 20:4 recounts the Levite's concubine who 'was murdered,' and Proverbs 22:13 features the sluggard's absurd excuse: 'I will be killed in the streets' — the passive lending the claim its dramatic (and ironic) force. MURDERER KILLER

en: I-will-be-killed, the-murdered | es: la-asesinada, seré-asesinado | fr: le-murdered, אֹרְצָח | de: [אֹרְצָח], der-murdered Judg 20:4; Prov 22:13

5. murderer (Piel ptc.) (2×) The Piel participle as an intensive agent noun — the habitual or characterizing murderer. Spanish asesinos and French meurtriers convey the intensified agency. In 2 Kings 6:32, Elisha calls the king 'this son of a murderer,' and Isaiah 1:21 laments that the faithful city has become a harlot: 'murderers' now dwell where righteousness once lodged — the Piel marking murder as a defining trait. MURDERER KILLER

en: murderers, the-murderer | es: asesinos, el-asesino | fr: [מְרַצְּחִים], le-murderer | de: [מְרַצְּחִים], der-murderer 2Kgs 6:32; Isa 1:21

6. to murder (Piel intensive) (2×) Piel finite verb forms expressing intensive or repeated murder — habitual, wholesale killing. Spanish asesinan and French tuer confirm the iterative force. Psalm 94:6 denounces those who 'murder the widow and sojourner,' and Hosea 6:9 accuses the priests of banding together to 'murder on the road to Shechem' — the Piel intensifying the verb into systematic violence. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: they-murder, they-murder- | es: asesinan | fr: tuer | de: [יִרְצָחוּ], sie-murder Ps 94:6; Hos 6:9

7. to be murdered (Pual passive) (1×) The Pual passive (intensive passive) — to be murdered or slaughtered en masse. Spanish seréis matados shifts to the passive of intensive killing. Psalm 62:3 asks 'How long will you assault a man? All of you will be murdered' — the Pual conveying the violent fate awaiting those who plot against the righteous, the passive intensive signaling not mere death but brutal, collective slaughter. KILLING AND REMOVING en: will-you-murder | es: seréis-matados | fr: tuer | de: wird-du-murder Ps 62:3

רְצַח H7524 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

shattering, crushing; violent breaking or slaughter

A noun meaning shattering or crushing. Psalm 42:10 uses it figuratively: 'as with a shattering in my bones,' describing the emotional devastation caused by enemies' taunts. Ezekiel 21:22's usage is textually uncertain—possibly 'slaughter,' though the Septuagint suggests a shout or battle cry. The term captures the visceral impact of violence, whether literal or metaphorical.

(2×) Denotes shattering or crushing, with both physical and emotional applications. Psalm 42:10 employs it metaphorically: 'as with a shattering in my bones' (בְּרֶצַח בְּעַצְמוֹתָי), the psalmist describes the pain of mockery—as if his skeleton were being pulverized. Ezekiel 21:22 is textually difficult; MT has 'slaughter,' but the Septuagint reads 'shout' (βοῇ), leading to emendations like רִנָּה or צֶרַח. The core sense is violent breaking, whether bones crushed by grief or bodies shattered in battle. The word's rarity and textual issues reflect its specialized, intense usage. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: as-with-murder, in-slaughter | es: Con-muerte, en-matanza | fr: dans-brisement, écrasement | de: [בְּרֶצַח], wie-mit-murder Ps 42:10; Ezek 21:22

רִצְיָא H7525 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ritsya, descendant of Asher listed in tribal genealogies

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:39 within the genealogies of Asher. The name's etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint renderings (Raseia, Rassia) show minimal adaptation. Ritsya appears among brothers and family connections that establish Asherite lineage. Like many figures in the genealogical lists, no narrative traditions or additional information about this individual survive.

(1×) A member of the tribe of Asher recorded in 1 Chronicles 7:39, positioned within the genealogical documentation that preserved tribal identity during and after the exile. His inclusion in the Asherite family structure serves the Chronicler's project of maintaining comprehensive records of Israel's tribal organization, even for individuals about whom no stories or achievements were remembered.

PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ritsya | es: y-Ritsya | fr: [וְרִצְיָא] | de: [וְרִצְיָא] 1Chr 7:39

רְצִין H7526 N-proper-ms (11×)

Rezin, king of Aram-Damascus who allied with Pekah against Judah in the Syro-Ephraimite crisis

The name of the last independent king of Aram-Damascus, whose fateful alliance with Pekah of Israel against Judah triggered one of the Old Testament's most consequential prophetic moments. When Rezin and Pekah marched on Jerusalem to replace Ahaz with a puppet king, the terrified Judean court received Isaiah's Immanuel prophecy — 'the Lord himself will give you a sign' (Isa 7:1–14). Ahaz instead appealed to Assyria; Tiglath-pileser III responded by conquering Damascus and killing Rezin (2 Kgs 16:9), ending centuries of Aramean independence.

Rezin (proper name) (11×) The proper name of the king of Aram-Damascus during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis (c. 735 BC), who allied with Pekah son of Remaliah against Judah's King Ahaz (2 Kgs 15:37; 16:5–9; Isa 7:1, 4, 8; 8:6; 9:11). His campaign prompted Isaiah's Immanuel sign. Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria defeated him and captured Damascus. The name also appears among the Nethinim (temple servants) returning from exile (Ezra 2:48; Neh 7:50). Spanish 'Resín,' Korean 르신, and Arabic رَصِين all transliterate the same proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Retsin, Rezin | es: Resín, Retsin, es-Retsin | fr: Retsin, [רְצִין] | de: Retsin, Rezin, [רְצִין] 2Kgs 15:37; 2Kgs 16:5; 2Kgs 16:6; 2Kgs 16:9; Ezra 2:48

רָצַע H7527 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

pierce, bore through (especially the ear in a ceremony of perpetual servitude)

This verb appears in the ceremonial context of Exodus 21:6, where a servant who voluntarily chooses to remain with his master has his ear pierced as a permanent mark of service. The act combines physical action with deep symbolic significance—the pierced ear signifies willing, lifelong commitment. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'horadará,' English 'pierce') consistently captures the physical penetration, though the profound relational dimension requires the full context to appreciate.

(1×) The single occurrence in Exodus 21:6 describes the ceremonial piercing of a servant's ear with an awl, marking his choice to remain with his master permanently. This is not casual injury but ritualized commitment—the physical mark embodying the servant's declaration 'I love my master.' Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize the penetrating action, pointing to the concrete, irreversible nature of this covenant sign. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: and-shall-pierce | es: y-horadará | fr: et—pierce | de: und-soll-pierce Exod 21:6

רָצַף H7528 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

fitted out, inlaid, arranged (of interior decoration or paving)

This rare verb appears only in Song of Songs 3:10, describing Solomon's palanquin whose interior is 'fitted out with love.' The Hebrew root suggests careful arrangement or fitting together of materials, perhaps inlaid work or paving. The textual uncertainty reflects ancient translators' struggles with this technical term. The romantic context transforms architectural language into metaphor—the physical craftsmanship becomes an image of devotion.

(1×) In Song 3:10, this passive participle describes the interior of Solomon's ornate carriage. The glosses range from 'inlaid' (English) to 'paved' (French) to 'upholstered' (Spanish 'tapizado'), all suggesting decorative finish work. The phrase 'fitted out with love' (rather than precious materials) creates beautiful ambiguity—is love the craftsman or the material? The cognate languages point to joining or arranging elements in sequence. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE

en: inlaid | es: tapizado-de | fr: pavé | de: [רָצוּף] Song 3:10

רִצְפָּה H7529 N-fp (1×)

hot stones, heated rocks (used for baking)

These are glowing or heated stones, appearing in 1 Kings 19:6 where the exhausted Elijah finds bread baked on hot stones prepared by an angel. The term emphasizes the stones' heat, not merely their substance. This detail enriches the narrative—not just bread but freshly baked bread, still warm from the coals. The divine provision includes culinary care. Multilingual glosses uniformly capture the 'hot' quality, distinguishing these from ordinary stones.

(1×) The plural 'hot stones' in 1 Kings 19:6 refers to the traditional baking method where bread dough is placed on heated stones. The angel's provision for Elijah includes this warm, fresh-baked bread ('cake of hot stones'). Every major translation preserves the thermal element: Spanish 'carbones' (coals), English 'hot stones,' emphasizing that these aren't cold rocks but heat-retaining cooking surfaces. Related to the glowing stones in Isaiah 6:6, though lexically distinct. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hot-stones | es: carbones | fr: hot-pierres | de: hot-Steine 1Kgs 19:6

רֶצֶף H7530 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Rezeph; place name, a city conquered by Assyria, likely in northern Mesopotamia

A place name identifying a city destroyed by the Assyrians. Second Kings 19:12 and Isaiah 37:12 record the Rabshakeh's taunt: Assyria conquered Rezeph, so Judah should not trust in its God. Assyrian records identify it as Raṣappa, modern Rusâfa between Palmyra and the Euphrates. The name's appearance in Assyrian propaganda underscores the empire's reach.

(2×) Names a city conquered by Assyria, mentioned in the Rabshakeh's speech (2 Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12) to intimidate Hezekiah. The Assyrian form Raṣappa and the identification with modern Rusâfa (between Palmyra and the Euphrates) locate it in northern Mesopotamia. The Septuagint's Ραφεις/Ραφεθ reflects varied Greek traditions. The name appears in a litany of fallen cities—evidence that no god could withstand Assyria. The propagandistic context makes Rezeph a symbol of imperial invincibility. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Retseph, who | es: y-Résef, y-Rétseb | fr: [ורצף], et-Retseph | de: [ורצף], und-Retseph 2Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12

רִצְפָּה H7531a Conj-w (7×)

ritsepah – pavement, stone floor; a paved surface in temple courts or palace halls

A feminine noun denoting a paved stone surface – a floor of fitted stones in a monumental building or courtyard. The word appears in three architectural settings: Ezekiel's visionary temple, where the pavement lines the outer court and adjoins the gates (Ezek 40:17-18; 42:3); Solomon's temple, where the people bow on the pavement at the dedication (2 Chr 7:3); and the Persian palace at Susa, where the floor is described with exotic materials (Esth 1:6). In each case the pavement marks a significant ceremonial space – the place where heaven and earth meet in worship or where royal splendor is displayed. Spanish pavimento, French pave, and German Pflaster all render this single architectural sense consistently.

pavement, stone floor (7×) A paved stone surface or flooring, specifically in temple courtyards and royal palace halls, marking spaces of ceremonial significance. In Ezekiel's vision the pavement defines the outer court (Ezek 40:17-18; 42:3), at Solomon's temple dedication Israel prostrates on the pavement (2 Chr 7:3), and in the Susa palace the pavement is composed of precious stones (Esth 1:6). Spanish pavimento and French pave converge on the same architectural concept. The absolute and construct forms represent grammatical variation, not semantic distinction, confirming a single monosemous sense across all seven occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-pavement, and-the-pavement, pavement | es: Y-el-pavimento, el-pavimento, pavimento | fr: [הרצפה], [רצפת], et-pavé | de: [הרצפה], [והרצפה], [ורצפה] 2Chr 7:3; Esth 1:6; Ezek 40:17; Ezek 40:18

רִצְפָּה H7531b N-fs (1×)

burning coal, live coal (from the altar)

This singular form designates a live coal, appearing in Isaiah's throne vision (6:6) where a seraph uses tongs to take a burning coal from the altar and touch the prophet's lips for purification. The coal's heat matters—it's not ash but active fire, potent enough to cauterize sin. The image combines danger and cleansing: what could destroy instead sanctifies. Though lexically related to H7529, this refers to glowing coals rather than heated baking stones.

(1×) In Isaiah 6:6, the seraph takes this burning coal from the altar with tongs—too hot for direct handling. The coal's heat effects purification of Isaiah's unclean lips. Spanish 'brasa' (ember) and English 'burning coal' both emphasize the live, glowing state. This is sacramental fire, transforming guilt into readiness for prophetic service. The vision pairs physical impossibility (touching live coals) with spiritual necessity (cleansing from sin). FIRE AND BURNING

en: burning-coal | es: brasa | fr: [רצפה] | de: [רצפה] Isa 6:6

רִצְפָּה H7532 N-proper-fs (4×)

Rizpah (personal name, possibly 'glowing coal, hot stone')

This female name identifies Saul's concubine, mother of two sons executed by the Gibeonites. Her vigil protecting her sons' bodies from scavengers (2 Samuel 21:10) represents one of Scripture's most poignant maternal images. The name possibly derives from 'glowing coal' or 'hot stone,' though the etymology is uncertain.

(4×) Personal name of Rizpah daughter of Aiah, Saul's concubine. She appears in 2 Samuel 3:7, where Ishbosheth accuses Abner of relations with her (a claim to royal power); and prominently in 2 Samuel 21:8, 10-11, where her two sons are among seven of Saul's descendants executed by the Gibeonites to end a famine. Her vigilant protection of the corpses from birds and beasts until David buried them honorably became a powerful image of maternal devotion. The name's etymology is uncertain; if from רָצַף I, it might mean 'pavement, hot stone,' or 'glowing coal.' Multilingual glosses transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Ritspah/Ritspa,' French 'Rizpah,' German 'Rizpah.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ritspah, Rizpah | es: Ritspa, Ritspah | fr: Ritspah, Rizpah | de: Ritspah, Rizpah 2Sam 3:7; 2Sam 21:8; 2Sam 21:10; 2Sam 21:11

רָצַץ H7533 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (19×)

to crush, bruise, shatter; to oppress; to struggle together; the crushed or oppressed as a class

A verb of violent physical impact whose semantic field extends from literal crushing to social oppression. The root appears across Semitic languages — Arabic raḍḍa (bruise, bray), Aramaic rəᶜaᶜ (crush, shatter) — always carrying the force of destructive compression. The passive participle 'bruised reed' (Isa 42:3; 2 Kgs 18:21) became a famous metaphor for fragile, damaged humanity that the Servant of the LORD would not break. At the other extreme, the reciprocal Hitpael captures the startling prenatal struggle of Jacob and Esau in Rebekah's womb (Gen 25:22). Isaiah 58:6 uses the substantivized participle to name the oppressed as a social category deserving liberation.

1. bruised or crushed state (5×) Passive participle describing the state of being crushed or bruised — used adjectivally. The iconic 'bruised reed' of Isaiah 42:3 and 2 Kings 18:21 (Spanish 'quebrada,' German 'zerbrochen') portrays something damaged but not destroyed. Hosea 5:11 applies it to Ephraim 'crushed in judgment.' The stative quality distinguishes this from the active event of crushing. BRUISED CRUSHED

en: and-crushed, broken, bruised | es: la-quebrada, quebrada, quebrantado-de | fr: [הרצוץ], [רצוץ], et-écrasa | de: [הרצוץ], [רצוץ], der-zerbrochen Deut 28:33; 2Kgs 18:21; Isa 36:6; Isa 42:3; Hos 5:11

2. crush or oppress intensively (Piel) (4×) Piel intensive stem conveying deliberate, thorough crushing. Judges 10:8 describes the Ammonites who 'crushed and oppressed' (Spanish 'aplastaron')

Israel for eighteen years. Psalm 74:14 celebrates God crushing the heads of Leviathan. The Piel intensifies the violence — systematic, not incidental destruction. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: and-crushed, and-oppressed, crushed | es: aplastaste, quebrantó„ y-aplastaron | fr: [וירצץ], et-écrasa, écraser | de: [וירצץ], [רצץ], und-zermalmte Judg 10:8; 2Chr 16:10; Job 20:19; Ps 74:14

3. crush or break physically (Qal) (3×) Basic Qal active crushing or breaking. In 1 Samuel 12:3-4, Samuel challenges Israel: 'Whom have I crushed?' (Spanish 'aplasté') — a legal defense of his integrity. Isaiah 42:4 promises that the Servant 'will not be crushed' (or grow faint) until justice is established. The Qal preserves the raw physical action: one agent exerting destructive force upon another. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: I-crushed, he-will-be-crushed, you-crushed-us | es: aplasté, nos-aplastaste, se-quebrará | fr: [ירוץ], je-écrasa, tu-écrasa-nous | de: [ירוץ], du-crushed-uns, ich-crushed 1Sam 12:3; 1Sam 12:4; Isa 42:4

4. be broken or shattered (Nifal/Qal passive) (3×) Passive or middle voice (Niphal/Qal intransitive) expressing that the subject is broken or shattered. Ecclesiastes 12:6 uses it twice in its haunting allegory of death: the golden bowl 'is broken' and the pitcher 'is shattered' (Spanish 'se quiebre'). Ezekiel 29:7 pictures Egypt as a reed staff that splintered when grasped. The passive morphology foregrounds the victim's experience of being destroyed. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: and-is-broken, and-is-crushed, you-splintered | es: te-quebraste, y-se-quiebre | fr: [תרוץ], et-écraser | de: [ינרץ], [ותרץ], [תרוץ] Eccl 12:6; Ezek 29:7

5. cause to be crushed (Hifil) (1×) Hifil causative: bringing about the crushing of something. Judges 9:53 records a woman dropping a millstone on Abimelech's head, crushing his skull (Spanish 'quebró'). This single occurrence preserves the causative force cleanly — one agent causes the crushing of another through an instrument. The German 'zermalmte' (pulverized) captures the totality of destruction. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: and-crushed | es: y-quebró | fr: et-écrasa | de: und-zermalmte Judg 9:53

6. those who crush (participial) (1×) Active participle used substantivally for 'those who crush' — oppressors as a social class. Amos 4:1 addresses the wealthy women of Samaria as 'you who crush the needy' (Spanish 'las que aplastan'). The participial form converts a violent action into a social identity: these are defined by what they do to the vulnerable. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: the-ones-crushing | es: las-que-aplastan | fr: celles-qui-écrasent | de: [הרצצות] Amos 4:1

7. struggle together (Hitpael) (1×) Hitpael reciprocal stem describing mutual struggling or jostling. Genesis 25:22 narrates the twins 'struggling together' (Spanish 'se golpeaban') within Rebekah's womb, prompting her anguished inquiry of the LORD. The reciprocal morphology is key: not one party crushing another, but two parties pressing and pushing against each other — prenatal conflict foreshadowing a lifetime of rivalry. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: and-struggled-together | es: Y-se-golpeaban | fr: et-struggled-ensemble | de: und-es-stießen-sich Gen 25:22

8. the oppressed (substantival) (1×) Passive participle used substantivally to denote 'the oppressed' as a social category. Isaiah 58:6 defines true fasting as 'letting the oppressed go free' (Spanish 'a los oprimidos'). The participle crosses from adjective to noun, naming a class defined by the violence done to them — the rĕṣuṣim whom society has ground down. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: the-oppressed | es: a-los-oprimidos | fr: [רצוצים] | de: [רצוצים] Isa 58:6

רַק H7534 Conj-w / Adj-fpc (3×)

thin, lean—describing gaunt cattle in Pharaoh's dream

This adjective appears exclusively in Genesis 41's account of Pharaoh's dream, describing the emaciated cows that devoured the healthy ones. The word paints a picture of extreme thinness or leanness, emphasizing the severity of the coming famine. The repetition across three verses (41:19, 20, 27) underscores the disturbing nature of the vision that troubled Pharaoh and required Joseph's interpretation.

(3×) All three occurrences modify the feminine plural 'cows' (פָּרוֹת) in Pharaoh's dream narrative. The multilingual evidence shows cognate terms across Spanish 'flacas' (lean), while German uses 'mageren' (gaunt). The word appears in parallel with דַּקּוֹת (thin) in verses 3-4, creating a doublet that intensifies the image of severe leanness representing seven years of famine. THIN GAUNT LEAN

en: and-thin-of, the-thin | es: las-flacas, y-flacas-de | fr: et-thin-de, le-thin | de: die-mageren, und-magere-von Gen 41:19; Gen 41:20; Gen 41:27

רַק H7535 Conj-w / Adv (109×)

Only, merely, surely — a restrictive or asseverative particle limiting or emphasizing a statement; rarely 'except'

A small but powerful Hebrew particle, raq narrows focus with surgical precision. In most of its 109 appearances it restricts a statement — 'only you have I known of all the families of the earth' (Amos 3:2) — or intensifies it with asseverative force: 'surely, certainly.' It shapes some of the Bible's most memorable declarations, from God's somber observation that human thoughts were 'only evil continually' (Gen 6:5) to Abraham's worried admission that 'surely there is no fear of God in this place' (Gen 20:11). Translations converge tightly: Spanish solo/solamente, French seulement, German nur — all mirror the restrictive core.

1. only, merely, surely (restrictive/asseverative particle) (108×) A restrictive or asseverative adverb meaning 'only,' 'merely,' 'nothing but,' or with emphatic force 'surely,' 'certainly.' Limits or intensifies the clause it modifies. Gen 6:5 uses it to devastating effect: every inclination of human thoughts was 'only evil continually.' Amos 3:2 employs it for exclusive divine election: 'only you have I known.' The cross-linguistic convergence is near-total (spa: solo/solamente, fra: seulement, deu: nur/gewiss), confirming a single well-defined restrictive function across 108 occurrences. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: only | es: Solo, solamente, solo | fr: seulement | de: gewiss, nur, nur- Gen 6:5; Gen 14:24; Gen 19:8; Gen 20:11; Gen 24:8

2. except (exceptive particle) (1×) A rare exceptive use meaning 'except' or 'save that,' introducing an exception to a preceding statement. Attested at 2 Kgs 17:18, where after the northern tribes are carried into exile, 'none was left except the tribe of Judah alone.' Arabic translations distinctively render this with illā (إلّا 'except'), and French uses sauf rather than the usual seulement, providing clear multilingual evidence that this occurrence functions differently from the standard restrictive sense. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: except | es: solo | fr: sauf | de: ausser 2Kgs 17:18

רֹק H7536 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

spittle, spit—saliva, especially in contexts of contempt or brief time

This noun refers to saliva or spit, appearing in contexts of contemptuous spitting (Isaiah 50:6, Job 30:10) and as a measure of the briefest moment. Job 7:19 uses the vivid phrase 'while I swallow my spittle' to describe an instant of time, showing how bodily processes could become idioms for temporal brevity. The term captures both the physical substance and its cultural associations with scorn.

(3×) Two passages (Job 30:10, Isaiah 50:6) involve contemptuous spitting, while Job 7:19 uses swallowing spit as a temporal metaphor. Spanish distinguishes between 'saliva' (the substance) and 'escupir' (the act), while translations struggle with the temporal idiom in 7:19. The Isaiah passage is part of the Servant Song describing humiliation, making the reference to spitting particularly poignant. SPITTING CONTEMPT

en: and-spitting, my-spit, spit | es: escupir, mi-saliva?, y-escupitajos | fr: [ורק], mon-רקי-moi, רק | de: [ורק], [רקי], nur Job 7:19; Job 30:10; Isa 50:6

רָקַב H7537 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

rot, decay; to undergo decomposition or deterioration

A verb meaning to rot or decay. Isaiah 40:20 uses it of a tree that does not rot, contrasted with perishable wood. Proverbs 10:7 employs it figuratively: 'the name of the wicked will rot,' meaning their memory will decay and vanish. The verb captures organic corruption and the erasure of legacy.

(2×) Means to rot or decay, used both literally and metaphorically. Isaiah 40:20 describes selecting wood 'that will not rot' (לֹא יִרָקָב) for carving an idol—an ironic detail highlighting the absurdity of worshiping perishable materials. Proverbs 10:7 shifts to figurative usage: 'the name of the wicked will rot' (יִרְקָב)—their memory will decompose and disappear, opposite the blessed memory of the righteous. NH and Aramaic cognates confirm the sense of decay, while Krochmal's proposed emendation (יִוָּקֵב 'be cursed') remains speculative. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: rot, will-rot | es: se-pudra, se-pudrirá | fr: [ירקב], יִרְקָב | de: [ירקב] Prov 10:7; Isa 40:20

רֶקֶב H7538 Conj-w / N-msc (5×)

rottenness, decay; figurative for inner corruption eating away at bones or a nation

The Hebrew raqav denotes rottenness or decay, always used figuratively in Scripture. In Hosea 5:12 God himself is 'like rottenness' to the house of Judah, paired with the moth-image, portraying divine judgment as slow internal disintegration. Proverbs 12:4 and 14:30 speak of 'rottenness of bones,' where envy or a shameful wife corrodes a person from within. The Spanish 'podredumbre' and 'carcoma' (woodworm) and the English 'rottenness' all capture this sense of creeping, irreversible decay rather than sudden destruction.

(5×) Rottenness or decay used figuratively for slow, internal corruption and disintegration. All five occurrences are metaphorical: God acts like rot consuming Judah (Hos 5:12, paired with 'moth'), and envy or disgrace is 'rottenness of bones' (Prov 12:4; 14:30). In Hab 3:16 the prophet's own body decays with dread. The Spanish 'podredumbre' and 'carcoma' confirm the dual nuance of putrefaction and worm-eaten ruin. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: and-like-rottenness, but-like-rottenness, but-rottenness-of | es: como-podredumbre, podredumbre, y-como-carcoma | fr: comme-כרקב, et-comme-la-carie, et-וכרקב | de: [וכרקב], [ורקב], [כרקב] Job 13:28; Prov 12:4; Prov 14:30; Hos 5:12; Hab 3:16

רִקָּבוֹן H7539 N-ms (1×)

rottenness, decay, rotten wood (worthlessness)

This noun denotes rottenness or decay, appearing in Job 41:27 (English 41:19) where Leviathan regards iron as 'rotten wood'—utterly contemptible and ineffective. The term emphasizes advanced decomposition, wood so decayed it has lost all structural integrity. In this context, rottenness becomes a metaphor for worthlessness: even strong iron is, to Leviathan, as useless as punk wood. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'podrida') consistently captures the decay aspect.

(1×) Job 41:27 uses this vivid image in God's speech about Leviathan's invulnerability: to this creature, iron weapons are no more threatening than 'wood of rottenness.' The phrase evokes completely degraded timber—spongy, crumbling, powerless. Spanish 'podrida' (rotten) precisely captures the state. The rhetorical force lies in the reversal: iron, symbol of strength, is dismissed as thoroughly as decomposed wood. Leviathan's superiority makes the strong seem pathetically weak. BAD ROTTEN WORTHLESS

en: rottenness | es: podrida | fr: רקבון | de: [רקבון] Job 41:27

רָקַד H7540 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp / Pn (9×)

To skip, leap, dance — expressing joy, divine power, or vigorous motion in both literal and celebratory contexts

A vivid verb of exuberant movement found across psalms, prophecy, and wisdom literature. In Psalm 114:4, the mountains themselves 'skipped like rams' at God's presence — a breathtaking image of creation leaping in response to divine power. David dances before the ark with such abandon that Michal despises him (1 Chr 15:29). The same word describes children leaping in carefree play (Job 21:11) and locusts bounding across mountaintops like chariots (Joel 2:5). Spanish 'saltaron/danzan' and French 'bondir' capture this full range from joyful dance to powerful leaping.

1. dance, leap about (Piel intensive) (5×) Vigorous dancing or leaping in the Piel intensive stem. David's ecstatic worship dance before the ark (1 Chr 15:29), children frolicking in merriment (Job 21:11), wild goats bounding in ruins (Isa 13:21), locusts leaping on mountains (Joel 2:5), and chariots rattling (Nah 3:2). Spanish 'danzan/danzarán/saltan' and English 'leaping/bounding/dance' reflect the energetic intensity of the Piel form. DANCE AND DANCING

en: bounding, dance, leaping | es: danzan., danzarán-, saltan | fr: [ירקדו], [מרקד], danser | de: [ירקד], [ירקדון], [מרקד] 1Chr 15:29; Job 21:11; Isa 13:21; Joel 2:5; Nah 3:2

2. skip, leap (Qal) (3×) Simple skipping or leaping in the Qal stem. Mountains personified as skipping like rams at the Exodus (Ps 114:4, 6) and the proverbial 'time to dance' balancing 'a time to mourn' (Eccl 3:4). Spanish 'saltaron/para danzar' and French 'bondir' preserve the lighter, more basic movement sense distinct from the Piel's intensity. DANCE AND DANCING

en: skipped, to-dance, you-skip | es: para-danzar, que-saltáis, saltaron | fr: bondir, רקוד | de: [רקוד], du-skip, skipped Ps 114:4; Ps 114:6; Eccl 3:4

3. cause to skip (Hifil causative) (1×) Causative skipping in the Hifil stem — making something leap. Used once in Ps 29:6 where the LORD's thunderous voice makes Lebanon and Sirion skip like a young wild ox. Spanish 'y los hace saltar' and French 'et bondir' both capture the causative force: it is God who compels even mountains to leap. DANCE AND DANCING

en: and-he-makes-them-skip | es: y-los-hace-saltar | fr: et-bondir | de: und-er-macht-ihnen-skip Ps 29:6

רַקָּה H7541 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (5×)

temple (of the head); the side of the forehead above the cheekbone

Raqqah refers specifically to the temple of the head, the thin, vulnerable area between forehead and ear. It appears in two vivid contexts: Jael drives a tent peg through Sisera's temple (Judg 4:21-22; 5:26), and the beloved's temple is compared to a slice of pomegranate behind her veil (Song 4:3; 6:7). The Spanish 'sien' and French 'tempe' precisely mirror this anatomical term, while the German 'Schlaefe' shares the same etymological link to the thin bone of the skull.

(5×) The temple of the head, the anatomically thin and vulnerable area on the side of the skull. In Judges 4:21-22 and 5:26, Jael pierces Sisera's raqqah with a tent peg, emphasizing lethal vulnerability. In Song 4:3 and 6:7, the beloved's temple glows like a pomegranate slice behind her veil, highlighting beauty. Spanish 'sien,' French 'tempe,' and German 'Schlaefe' all denote this precise anatomical feature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-temple, in-his-temple, into-his-temple | es: en-su-sien, su-sien, tu-sien | fr: dans-son-temple, son-temple, ta-tempe, | de: deine-Schlaefe, in-sein-Tempel, sein-Tempel Judg 4:21; Judg 4:22; Judg 5:26; Song 4:3; Song 6:7

רַקּוֹן H7542 Conj-w (1×)

Rakkon (place name: town in Dan's territory)

This is a place name appearing in Joshua's boundary descriptions for the tribe of Dan (19:46). The site is likely identical with the nearby Yarkon, as suggested by the similar consonants and the fact that the Septuagint omits it (possibly viewing it as a textual variant). The exact location remains uncertain, though Jewish tradition later connected it with the region near Tiberias. The conjunction 'and' before the name integrates it into the boundary list.

(1×) In Joshua 19:46, 'ha-Rakkon' appears in the territorial allotment for Dan, listed among cities and geographical features. Modern scholars see this as probably a doublet of 'the Yarkon' (the river that flows through modern Tel Aviv). The multilingual glosses preserve the Hebrew article 'ha-' and the name 'Rakkon,' treating it as a geographical designation rather than translating it. The uncertainty in ancient versions reflects early scribal puzzlement over this reference. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-ha-Raqqon | es: y-Racón | fr: et-ha-Raqqon | de: und-ha-Raqqon Josh 19:46

רָקַח H7543 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (8×)

To mix or compound ointments and spices; as a participle, a professional perfumer or ointment-maker.

A verb meaning to mix or compound aromatic oils and ointments, central to the preparation of the sacred anointing oil in Exodus. In participial form it functions as a professional title: the 'perfumer' or 'ointment-compounder' who blends the holy incense and oil. The Spanish 'perfumador' and 'mezcladores' capture both the craft and the professional role. Ecclesiastes 10:1 extends the image memorably: dead flies make the perfumer's ointment stink – a wisdom saying that turns the perfumer's art into a metaphor for how small corruptions ruin great effort.

mix, compound ointment/spices (8×) To mix or compound sacred ointments and aromatic spices, and by extension the professional who performs this craft. In Exodus 30:25, 33, 35 and 37:29 (all Priestly source), the verb describes the compounding of the holy anointing oil and incense according to divine prescription; 1 Chronicles 9:30 uses the participial plural 'compounders of the ointment' for Levitical specialists. Spanish 'perfumador' and 'mezcladores de' reflect both the action and the trade. Ecclesiastes 10:1 uses the participle in a proverbial context – dead flies spoil the perfumer's oil – extending the term from sacred craft to everyday wisdom about corruption. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: and-mix, compounded, compounder | es: mezcladas, mezcladores-de, perfumador | fr: [מרקחים], [רקחי], compounder | de: Salbenmischer, [והרקח], [מרקחים] Exod 30:25; Exod 30:33; Exod 30:35; Exod 37:29; 1Chr 9:30

רֹקַח H7544 Art / N-ms (1×)

spiced (wine), aromatic, perfumed

This term refers to spiced or aromatic wine, appearing in Song of Songs 8:2 where the beloved speaks of giving her lover 'wine of spice'—wine infused with aromatic ingredients. Ancient spiced wines were prestigious luxury items, enhanced with various aromatics for flavor and fragrance. The definite article suggests a specific type: 'the spiced (wine).' This detail enriches the love poetry with sensory abundance: not plain wine but perfumed, carefully prepared wine, expressing lavish affection.

(1×) In Song 8:2, 'the spiced' (with 'wine' implied or explicit) describes aromatic wine the bride would give her beloved. Spanish 'especiado' (spiced), French 'aromatisé' (aromatized), all capture the enhancement through aromatic additives. This was ancient viticulture's luxury product—wine improved with spices, creating complex flavors and fragrances. The context of extravagant love-language makes this detail fitting: the best, most carefully crafted refreshment for the beloved. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: the-spiced | es: especiado | fr: aromatisé, | de: [הרקח] Song 8:2

רֹקַח H7545 N-msc (2×)

spice-mixture, perfume; a blended aromatic compound

A noun denoting a compound of spices or perfume. Exodus 30:25 describes the holy anointing oil as 'a perfume compound, the work of a perfumer,' while verse 35 uses the same phrase for sacred incense. The term emphasizes skilled blending—not raw spices but artfully mixed fragrances for liturgical use.

(2×) Refers to a blended spice-mixture or perfume, specifically in the context of Tabernacle worship (Exod 30:25, 35). Both the holy anointing oil and the sacred incense are called רֹקַח מִרְקַחַת ('a perfume compound') made by the skilled work of a perfumer (רֹקֵחַ/רוֹקֵחַ). The term underscores the artistry involved—precise proportions and expert blending—to create fragrances set apart for God. Spanish 'mezcla' (mixture) and English 'compound' capture the idea of combined ingredients, while the ritual setting gives these compounds sacred status. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: compound-of | es: mezcla-de | fr: compound-de | de: compound-von Exod 30:25; Exod 30:35

רַקָּח H7546 Art / N-mp (1×)

perfumers, makers of ointments and fragrances (professional guild)

This plural noun designates professional perfumers or ointment-makers, appearing in Nehemiah 3:8 where Hananiah 'son of the perfumers' (i.e., member of the perfumers' guild) helps rebuild Jerusalem's wall. The phrase 'son of the perfumers' indicates guild membership, a common way to denote professional association in ancient contexts. These artisans specialized in creating the precious oils, incenses, and perfumes essential for temple worship, royal courts, and daily life in the ancient Near East.

(1×) Nehemiah 3:8 mentions 'one of the perfumers' (literally 'son of the perfumers'), identifying Hananiah by his professional guild. The multilingual glosses uniformly preserve the occupational designation: Spanish 'perfumeros,' English 'perfumers.' These specialists compounded the complex recipes for sacred anointing oil, incense, and cosmetic preparations. The detail that even perfumers joined the wall-building effort shows the comprehensive mobilization of Jerusalem's population for Nehemiah's restoration project. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: the-perfumers | es: los-perfumeros | fr: [הרקחים] | de: [הרקחים] Neh 3:8

רְקוּחַ H7547 N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

perfumes, ointments, fragrant preparations

This plural noun refers to perfumes or fragrant ointments, appearing only in Isaiah 57:9 in a scathing denunciation of idolatry. The passage describes bringing perfumes (along with oil) to a pagan deity. The use of precious cosmetics in illicit worship heightens the prophetic critique—Israel lavishes on false gods the fragrances that should honor Yahweh alone. The second-person suffix ('your perfumes') personalizes the indictment, making the idolatry intimate and deliberate.

(1×) Isaiah 57:9 condemns those who bring 'your perfumes' to idols, wasting precious aromatic preparations on false worship. Spanish 'tus perfumes' (your perfumes) preserves both the possessive and the plural. These would be expensive fragrant oils or ointments, valuable trade goods. The prophet's point cuts deep: Israel takes what should express devotion to God and instead offers it to worthless idols. The costly perfumes underscore the tragic misdirection of worship. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: your-perfumes | es: tus-perfumes | fr: [רקחיך] | de: [רקחיך] Isa 57:9

רַקָּחָה H7548 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

perfumers (female), women who make fragrances and ointments

This feminine plural noun designates female perfumers or ointment-makers, appearing in 1 Samuel 8:13 where Samuel warns that a future king will conscript Israelite daughters as perfumers, cooks, and bakers for the royal court. The grouping with other culinary and aromatic specialists suggests these women would produce the luxury goods required by monarchy—fragrant oils, cosmetics, and incense. The warning presents royal service as burdensome appropriation of family members.

(1×) In 1 Samuel 8:13, Samuel's dire preview of kingship includes the seizure of daughters 'for perfumers, for cooks, and for bakers.' The Spanish 'para perfumeras' (for perfumers-feminine) preserves the gender specificity. These women would staff the royal production of fragrances and ointments, work that in household contexts women often managed. The threefold list (perfumers, cooks, bakers) evokes the extensive domestic infrastructure monarchy would require, transforming free daughters into royal servants. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: for-perfumers | es: para-perfumeras | fr: pour-perfumers | de: fuer-perfumers 1Sam 8:13

רָקִיעַ H7549 N-ms (17×)

Expanse, firmament, vault of heaven; the stretched-out dome separating waters above from waters below.

One of the Bible's great cosmological terms, raqia' pictures the sky as a vast, hammered-out surface – the root raqa' means 'to beat or spread thin,' evoking a metalsmith flattening metal (cf. Job 37:18). On Day Two of creation God sets this expanse between the upper and lower waters (Gen 1:6-8), then places the luminaries in it (Gen 1:14-17). Ezekiel's throne vision presents a gleaming raqia' like crystal above the living creatures (Ezek 1:22-26). The Septuagint's stereoma and the Vulgate's firmamentum both emphasize solidity, while 'expanse' in modern English captures its breadth.

expanse, firmament, sky-vault (17×) The vast dome or vault of the sky, conceived as a hammered-out surface separating the waters above from the waters below. Created on Day Two (Gen 1:6-8) and bearing the sun, moon, and stars (Gen 1:14-17). In Ezekiel's visions it appears as a crystalline platform above the cherubim supporting the divine throne (Ezek 1:22-26; 10:1). The Psalms celebrate it as declaring God's handiwork (Ps 19:1), and Daniel 12:3 speaks of those who shine like the brightness of the raqia'. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: expanse, expanse-of, in-expanse-of | es: a-la-expansión, del-firmamento, el-firmamento | fr: dans-firmament, dans-étendue-de, firmament | de: [הרקיע], [לרקיע], [רקיע] Gen 1:6; Gen 1:7; Gen 1:8

רָקִיק H7550 Conj-w / N-msc (8×)

A thin unleavened wafer or flat cake, used in Israelite sacrificial and consecration rituals.

A masculine noun for a thin, flat wafer of unleavened bread, always appearing in ritual contexts. These delicate cakes accompanied the consecration of priests (Exod 29:2, 23; Lev 8:26), grain offerings (Lev 2:4; 7:12), the Nazirite vow completion (Num 6:15, 19), and the daily temple service (1 Chr 23:29). The Greek Septuagint renders it laganon, a thin pancake, while Spanish uses 'hojaldre' and 'hojuela' – both evoking a flaky, layered flatbread. The consistent pairing with matstsot (unleavened bread) across all occurrences confirms that this was a specific type of ritually pure baked good.

wafer, thin unleavened bread (8×) A thin unleavened wafer prepared for sacrificial and consecration ceremonies. All eight occurrences belong to Priestly ritual legislation: the consecration of Aaron and his sons (Exod 29:2, 23; Lev 8:26), the grain offering (Lev 2:4; 7:12), the Nazirite dedication (Num 6:15, 19), and temple service provisions (1 Chr 23:29). The term is always paired with matstsot (unleavened bread), marking it as a specific ritual baked item. The LXX laganon and Spanish 'hojaldre/hojuela' (flaky pastry/wafer) both highlight its thin, flat character, distinguishing it from ordinary bread. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-wafer, and-for-wafers-of, and-wafer | es: y-hojaldre-de, y-hojaldres-de, y-hojuela | fr: [ולרקיק], et-un-wafer, et-wafer | de: [ולרקיק], und-ein-wafer, und-wafer Exod 29:2; Exod 29:23; Lev 2:4; Lev 7:12; Lev 8:26

רָקַם H7551 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (9×)

To variegate, embroider; as substantive, an embroiderer; in Pual, to be skillfully woven or wrought

A textile craft term rooted in the art of working patterns in colored thread. As a Qal participle it designates the 'embroiderer' – the skilled artisan who created the multicolored curtains, screens, and garments for the Tabernacle (Exod 26:36; 27:16; 28:39; 35:35; 36:37; 38:18, 23; 39:29). The Pual passive in Psalm 139:15 is breathtaking: the psalmist says 'I was skillfully wrought' in the hidden depths, likening God's formation of a human being in the womb to an embroiderer's intricate craft. Arabic 'raqama' and Ethiopic cognates confirm the core meaning of marking or patterning with color.

1. embroiderer (8×) Qal participle used as a substantive: an embroiderer or variegator, the artisan who works decorative patterns in colored thread. Appears exclusively in the Tabernacle construction narratives (Exodus 26-39), where the embroiderer's craft is distinguished from the weaver's and the designer's. Spanish 'bordador' and French 'brodeur' both derive from embroidery vocabulary, reflecting the specialized nature of this work. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-embroiderer, embroiderer | es: bordador, y-bordador | fr: brodeur, et-brodeur | de: embroiderer, und-embroiderer Exod 26:36; Exod 27:16; Exod 28:39; Exod 35:35; Exod 36:37

2. woven (1×) Pual passive: to be intricately woven or skillfully wrought. In Psalm 139:15, the psalmist marvels that he was 'woven together' in the depths of the earth (a metaphor for the womb), using the passive of this embroidery verb to describe God's creative artistry. Spanish 'fui entretejido' (I was interwoven) captures the stunning metaphor – divine creation as masterful textile craft. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: I-was-woven | es: fui-entretejido | fr: broder | de: ich-Krieg-woven Ps 139:15

רֶקֶם H7552 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Reqem; a proper name borne by a Midianite king, Calebite descendants, and a Benjamite town.

The name Reqem (רֶקֶם) appears across several distinct biblical contexts. It identifies one of the five Midianite kings slain alongside Balaam (Num 31:8; Josh 13:21), a descendant of Caleb through Hebron in the Judahite genealogy (1 Chr 2:43-44), a Manassite name in Gilead (1 Chr 7:16), and a town in the territory of Benjamin (Josh 18:27). The Septuagint renders it variously as Ροκομ and Ρεκεμ, reflecting dialectal variation. French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew unglossed, while Spanish consistently renders it 'Requem.'

Reqem (proper name) (6×) A Hebrew proper name applied to multiple individuals and one locality. As a personal name it designates: (a) a Midianite king killed by Israel in the war of Numbers 31:8, listed again in Joshua 13:21; (b) a son of Hebron in the Calebite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 2:43-44; and (c) a Gileadite in 1 Chronicles 7:16. As a place name it refers to a Benjamite town in Joshua 18:27. The Septuagint variations (Ροκομ, Ρεκεμ, Ρακαμ) suggest the name's pronunciation was fluid. English uniformly renders 'Rekem/Reqem,' Spanish 'Requem,' while French and German occasionally leave the Hebrew script untransliterated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Rekem, and-Reqem | es: Requem, y-Requem | fr: Rekem, et-Reqem, et-Rékem | de: Rekem, [ורקם], und-Reqem Num 31:8; Josh 13:21; Josh 18:27; 1Chr 2:43; 1Chr 2:44

רִקְמָה H7553 N-fs (12×)

Variegated cloth, embroidery; woven or embroidered fabric, often richly decorated garments or textiles

The noun רִקְמָה denotes variegated or multicolored fabric, whether produced by weaving or embroidery. In Ezekiel's lavish allegory of Jerusalem, God clothes her in רִקְמָה (Ezek 16:10, 13, 18) — richly patterned garments symbolizing divine favor. The same word describes Tyre's luxury trade goods (Ezek 27:7, 16, 24) and the eagle's 'variegated plumage' in Ezekiel 17:3. In Deborah's victory song the spoils include רִקְמָתַיִם — a pair of embroidered cloths — a concrete, tangible prize of war (Judg 5:30). Spanish 'bordado' and French 'broderie' consistently capture the textile-art sense, while German 'Buntgewebe' highlights the multicolored woven quality.

1. embroidery, embroidered work (9×) Embroidery or variegated needlework as a collective or abstract noun — the craft, product, or material of decorative textile art. Used of the garments God bestowed on personified Jerusalem (Ezek 16:10, 13, 18), of Tyre's traded fabrics (Ezek 27:7, 16, 24), of the eagle's multicolored plumage (Ezek 17:3), and of the 'variegated stone' contributed for the temple (1 Chr 29:2). Spanish 'bordado' and French 'broderie' uniformly treat it as the art or material itself rather than specific finished garments. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-embroidery, embroidery, embroidery-your | es: bordado, bordado-de-ti, con-bordado | fr: [ורקמה], broderie, et-broderie | de: Buntgewebe, und-Buntgewebe 1Chr 29:2; Ezek 16:10; Ezek 16:13; Ezek 16:18; Ezek 17:3

2. embroidered garment(s) (3×) Concrete embroidered garments or cloths — specific items of richly decorated fabric rather than the craft in the abstract. Deborah's song celebrates the spoils with רִקְמָתַיִם, 'a pair of embroidered cloths,' for the neck of the plunderer (Judg 5:30, used twice in the verse). In Psalm 45:14 the royal bride is led in 'embroidered garments.' Spanish 'bordadas' and French '-deux-embroidered-cloths' point to countable, tangible objects, distinguishing this concrete usage from the abstract textile-art sense. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: -embroidered, -two-embroidered-cloths, in-embroidered-garments | es: Con-bordados, bordadas, dos-bordados | fr: -deux-embroidered-cloths, -embroidered, à-broderie | de: -embroidered, -zwei-embroidered-cloths, in-embroidered-garments Judg 5:30; Ps 45:14

רָקַע H7554 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms (11×)

Beat, stamp, spread out; hammer metal into plates; overlay with hammered metal

A verb rooted in the physical action of beating or pounding flat, ranging from cosmic creation to metalwork. God 'spreads out' the earth and hammers out the firmament (Job 37:18; Isa 42:5; 44:24), the same root behind raqia', the 'expanse' of Genesis 1. In anger, Ezekiel stamps his foot (Ezek 6:11), and David crushes enemies underfoot (2 Sam 22:43). Spanish 'extender' and French 'etendre' capture the stretching motion, while 'batir' and 'marteler' reflect the craftsman's hammer beating gold into thin sheets (Exod 39:3; Num 16:39). The word bridges the workshop and the cosmos with a single vivid image of force applied to flatten and spread.

1. spread out (heavens/earth) (4×) To spread out or stretch forth something vast, especially the heavens or the earth, with God as the agent of cosmic creation. In Job 37:18 Elihu asks, 'Can you, with him, spread out the skies, hard as a cast metal mirror?' Isaiah uses it twice (42:5; 44:24) to celebrate God as the one who stretched out the earth. Spanish 'extender' and French 'etendre' consistently capture this expansive cosmic act. The noun raqia' (firmament/expanse) derives from this same root, making it foundational to biblical cosmology. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: Spreader-of, can-you-spread-out, to-the-one-spreading-out | es: Al-que-extendió, extendedor-de, ¿Extiendes | fr: [רקע], à-étendre, תרקיע | de: [רקע], [תרקיע], zu-der-einer-spreading-out Job 37:18; Ps 136:6; Isa 42:5; Isa 44:24

2. stamp or trample underfoot (3×) To stamp with the foot or trample underfoot, expressing violent contempt or military conquest. David declares he stamped his enemies like dust (2 Sam 22:43), while Ezekiel is commanded to stamp with his foot and clap as a gesture of contemptuous grief over Israel's abominations (Ezek 6:11). The Ammonites stamp their feet in malicious joy over Jerusalem's fall (Ezek 25:6). Spanish 'patear' and English 'stamp' convey the forceful, percussive foot-strike that communicates both military power and emotional intensity. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: I-spread-them, and-stamp, and-you-stamped | es: los-aplasté, y-patea, y-pateaste | fr: et-étendre, je-étendit-eux | de: [ורקע], [ורקעך], ich-spread-ihnen 2Sam 22:43; Ezek 6:11; Ezek 25:6

3. hammer into thin plates (3×) To beat or hammer metal into thin sheets or plates, a technical metalworking sense appearing in the Piel and Pual stems. In Exodus 39:3 craftsmen hammer gold into thin plates and cut them into threads for the priestly ephod, and in Numbers 16:39 the censers of Korah's rebels are hammered into plating for the altar. Jeremiah 10:9 describes beaten silver imported from Tarshish. Spanish 'batir' and French 'marteler' highlight the artisan's repeated hammer blows that transform a lump of metal into a delicate sheet. METAL HAMMERING

en: and-hammered-them, and-they-hammered, beaten-into-plates | es: Y-batieron, batida, y-los-batieron | fr: [מרקע], et-hammered-eux, et-ils-martelé | de: [מרקע], und-hammered-ihnen, und-sie-getrieben Exod 39:3; Num 16:39; Jer 10:9

4. overlay with hammered metal (1×) To overlay or plate an object by spreading hammered metal over it, a specialized extension of the metalworking sense. Isaiah 40:19 describes the craftsman who casts an idol and then overlays it with gold. The Piel stem here emphasizes the completeness of the covering action, moving from the act of hammering into sheets (sense 3) to the application of those sheets as decorative plating on a finished object. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: overlays-it | es: lo-recubre | fr: [ירקענו] | de: [ירקענו] Isa 40:19

רְקוּעַ H7555 N-mpc (1×)

hammered plates, beaten-out sheets (of metal)

This plural construct noun refers to hammered or beaten-out metal plates, appearing in Numbers 16:38 (English 17:3) where the censers of Korah's rebels are to be hammered into sheets for plating the altar. The term emphasizes the process: metal beaten thin and wide, transformed from vessels into covering plates. This becomes a perpetual memorial—rebellion's instruments converted into sanctuary furnishings, warning against future presumption. The hammering itself is sacramental: judgment transformed into instruction.

(1×) Numbers 16:38 commands that the bronze censers be made into 'hammered plates' (literally 'expansions of plates') to overlay the altar. The glosses emphasize the hammering process: Spanish 'láminas' (sheets/plates), English 'hammered.' The rebels' censers, used in unauthorized worship that brought death, become permanent altar covering—visible reminder that holiness cannot be presumed upon. The metal's transformation from censers to plates mirrors the narrative's transformation from rebellion to warning. METAL HAMMERING

en: hammered | es: láminas | fr: hammered | de: hammered Num 16:38

רָקַק H7556 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

spit, expectorate (upon someone)

This verb means to spit, appearing in Leviticus 15:8 in purity regulations: if a man with a discharge spits on someone clean, that person becomes unclean. Spitting here is not hostile but physiological—yet it transmits impurity. The law's precision about even saliva shows how comprehensively discharge-related uncleanness could spread. The regulation protects community health while maintaining ritual boundaries, treating spittle as a vector for contagion.

(1×) Leviticus 15:8 addresses the scenario where 'the one with the discharge spits on the clean person'—direct transmission of impurity through saliva. The verb appears with the preposition 'upon,' indicating the target. Spanish 'escupiere' (should spit), English 'spits' capture the physiological act. This isn't contemptuous spitting (as in some other biblical contexts) but the ordinary expectoration that becomes significant because it carries ritual impurity from the diseased person to the clean. SPITTING CONTEMPT

en: spits | es: escupiere | fr: spits | de: spits Lev 15:8

רַקַּת H7557 N-proper-fs (1×)

Rakkath (place name: fortified city in Naphtali's territory)

This is a place name, one of the fortified cities in Naphtali's allotment (Joshua 19:35). Jewish tradition later identified it with Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee's western shore, though this identification remains uncertain. The Septuagint's variant spellings reflect ancient uncertainty about the exact location. As a fortified city, Rakkath would have been strategically important in Naphtali's northern territory, helping secure the tribe's holdings.

(1×) Joshua 19:35 lists Rakkath among Naphtali's fortified cities, situated in the northern tribal territory. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate: Spanish 'Racat,' English 'Rakkath.' Later Jewish tradition connected this site with Tiberias, the important Galilean city that became a center of rabbinic learning. The Septuagint's various renderings suggest the translators struggled with this proper name. The designation 'fortified city' indicates Rakkath's strategic and defensive significance in Naphtali's territorial network. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Raqqath | es: Racat | fr: Raqqath | de: Raqqath Josh 19:35

רִשְׁיוֹן H7558 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

permission, authorization, royal grant

This noun means permission or authorization, appearing only in Ezra 3:7 where the returned exiles give money and provisions to workers 'according to the permission of Cyrus.' The term denotes official royal authorization—not mere tolerance but explicit grant. This legal precision matters in Ezra's narrative: the restoration happens not as rebellion but as imperially sanctioned project. The Persian king's written permission validates the temple rebuilding, protecting it from local opposition.

(1×) Ezra 3:7 describes provision of supplies 'according to the grant of Cyrus king of Persia'—the royal authorization that legitimizes the entire restoration enterprise. Spanish 'según autorización' (according to authorization) captures the formal, legal character. This isn't informal approval but documented permission, likely referring to Cyrus's famous decree allowing the Jews to return and rebuild. The phrase grounds the restoration in official sanction, making opposition to it resistance to imperial policy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE inscribed, written, recorded (in a document)

en: according-to-grant-of | es: según-autorización-de | fr: [כרשיון] | de: [כרשיון] Ezra 3:7

רְשַׁם H7559 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

This passive participle means 'inscribed' or 'written down,' appearing in Daniel 10:21 where the angelic messenger tells Daniel he will declare 'what is inscribed in the writing of truth.' The term emphasizes permanent recording—not oral tradition but fixed text. The 'writing of truth' suggests an authoritative divine document, a heavenly archive where future events are already recorded. This apocalyptic image presents history as foreordained and documented, revelation as disclosure of what's already written.

(1×) Daniel 10:21 speaks of 'that which is inscribed in the writing of truth'—the definite article marking this as a specific, authoritative text. Spanish 'lo escrito' (that which is written), French 'écrire' (to write), all emphasize the written, recorded nature. The passive participle suggests something already permanently documented. In apocalyptic literature, this imagery of heavenly books recording future events portrays divine sovereignty: history unfolds according to what's already inscribed in God's archive. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: the-inscribed | es: lo-escrito | fr: écrire | de: [הרשום] Dan 10:21

רְשַׁם H7560 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (7×)

To sign, write (a decree); to be inscribed, written down — Aramaic verb in Daniel

The Aramaic verb רְשַׁם covers the act of writing and signing official documents, appearing exclusively in Daniel amid the political intrigue of the Medo-Persian court. Its active sense dominates: Darius signs the irrevocable decree against prayer (Dan 6:8-10, 12-13), and the verb captures both the writing of the document and the authenticating signature. The passive sense appears when the mysterious handwriting is inscribed on the wall of Belshazzar's palace (Dan 5:24-25) — words written by no human hand. Spanish firmaste/firmo ('you signed/he signed') marks the active sense, while fue-inscrita ('was inscribed') captures the passive.

1. to sign, write (Qal active) (5×) The active sense: to sign or write an official document, specifically a royal decree or edict. All five occurrences cluster in Daniel 6, where King Darius is persuaded to sign a decree forbidding prayer to any god or man except himself. The verb covers both the physical act of writing and the formal authentication of signing. Spanish firmaste ('you signed') and firmo ('he signed') reflect the official, legal character of the act. The repeated use across Dan 6:8, 9, 10, 12, and 13 underscores the irrevocability of the signed document — the law of the Medes and Persians that cannot be changed. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: and-sign, signed, was-signed | es: firmaste, firmó, había-sido-firmado | fr: et-écrire, écrire | de: [ותרשם], [רשים], [רשם] Dan 6:8; Dan 6:9; Dan 6:10; Dan 6:12; Dan 6:13

2. to inscribe, record (Niphal passive) (2×) The passive sense: to be inscribed or written down, specifically of text that appears in a document or on a surface without the agent being the grammatical subject. In Dan 5:24 the hand is sent and 'this writing was inscribed' (reshim), and in Dan 5:25 the actual words — MENE MENE TEKEL UPHARSIN — are identified as the inscription that 'was written.' Spanish fue-inscrita and English was-inscribed confirm the passive voice. The supernatural context of Belshazzar's feast gives this sense an eerie quality absent from the bureaucratic signing of sense 1. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: was-inscribed | es: fue-inscrita | fr: écrire | de: [רשים] Dan 5:24; Dan 5:25

רָשַׁע H7561 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3cp (36×)

Be wicked, act wickedly; in the Hifil, condemn as guilty or actively do evil — covering moral corruption and legal verdict.

This verb moves between inner moral state and outward judicial declaration. In the Qal, it describes being wicked or acting corruptly — Solomon's confession 'we have acted wickedly' (1 Kgs 8:47) and David's claim of innocence 'I have not departed wickedly from my God' (2 Sam 22:22). The Hifil splits into two distinct functions: a forensic-declarative sense where a judge 'condemns' or 'pronounces guilty' (Deut 25:1; Exod 22:9), and an elative sense of intensified wrongdoing (Dan 9:5; Neh 9:33). Spanish distinguishes these neatly — 'condenar' for the legal verdict versus 'obrar maldad' for deliberate evil. The tension between being wicked and being declared wicked runs through the entire Old Testament theology of justice.

1. condemn, declare guilty (Hifil) (17×) Hifil declarative: to condemn or pronounce guilty in a judicial setting. Deuteronomy 25:1 establishes the paradigm — judges shall 'justify the righteous and condemn the wicked.' In Exodus 22:9, the one whom judges 'condemn' must pay double. Spanish 'condenar' and French 'condamner' clearly mark the forensic function. Proverbs 17:15 warns that 'he who justifies the wicked and he who condemns the righteous' are both abominations — the verb here is purely about legal verdict, not personal morality. CONDEMN JUDGE GUILTY

en: He-condemns, and-condemning, and-they-condemned | es: Te-condena, condenaba, condenan | fr: [ירשיעני], [תרשיע], condamner | de: [וירשיעו], [ומרשיע], [ירשיע] Exod 22:9; Deut 25:1; 1Sam 14:47; 1Kgs 8:32; Job 9:20

2. be wicked, act wickedly (Qal) (9×) Qal: to be wicked or act in moral corruption — describing the subject's own sinful state. David protests in 2 Samuel 22:22 that he has not 'departed wickedly' from God; the communal confessions in 1 Kings 8:47 and Daniel 9:15 use this form for national acknowledgment of sin. Spanish 'obré mal' and 'hicimos maldad' capture the active-yet-reflexive quality. Job 9:29 and 10:7 use this form in Job's anguished wrestling — 'I am already counted guilty' — blurring the line between being wicked and being treated as such. WICKEDNESS INIQUITY

en: I-acted-wickedly, I-am-wicked, acted-wickedly | es: hicimos-maldad, me-aparté-impíamente, obré-mal | fr: [ורשענו], condamner, je-agit-wickedly | de: [ארשע], [ורשענו], [רשענו] 2Sam 22:22; 1Kgs 8:47; 2Chr 6:37; Job 9:29; Job 10:7

3. act wickedly, do evil (Hifil) (9×) Hifil elative or intransitive: to act wickedly with deliberate, intensified wrongdoing. Distinguished from Sense 2 by the Hifil stem signaling heightened agency. Nehemiah 9:33 confesses 'we have acted wickedly' using this intensified form; 2 Chronicles 20:35 describes Ahaziah who 'acted wickedly' in alliance with wicked kings; 2 Chronicles 22:3 notes Athaliah counseling her son 'to do wickedly.' Daniel 12:10 prophesies 'the wicked shall act wickedly.' The Hifil here emphasizes willful, persistent evil rather than a passive state of guilt. WICKEDNESS INIQUITY

en: (qere:we-have-done-wickedly), [ketiv:and-we-have-done-wickedly], acted-wickedly | es: Y-a-los-que-obran-maldad-contra, [e-hicimos-maldad], actuamos-perversamente | fr: [הרשיע], [הרשענו], [להרשיע] | de: [הרשיע], [הרשענו], [והרשיעו] 2Chr 20:35; 2Chr 22:3; Neh 9:33; Job 34:12; Ps 106:6

4. (1×) An isolated occurrence in 1 Samuel 24:13 where the form appears in the proverbial saying 'from the wicked comes wickedness.' The multilingual evidence ('de malvados,' 'de le méchant,' 'von der wicked') consistently treats this as a substantive or nominalized use — 'the wicked one' as a category of person. David quotes this ancient proverb to Saul, distancing himself from those whose nature produces wicked deeds, contrasting it with his own demonstrated restraint. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: from-the-wicked | es: de-malvados | fr: de-le-méchant | de: von-der-wicked 1Sam 24:13

רֶשַׁע H7562 Prep-m / N-ms (30×) wickedness, guilt — moral evil as a quality of character or conduct, opposed to God's righteous order

Resha' denotes wickedness conceived not merely as individual misbehavior but as a fundamental disorder opposing God's righteous governance of the world. Its 30 occurrences span legal, prophetic, wisdom, and narrative literature. In Deuteronomy 9:27, Moses pleads with God not to regard Israel's resha' alongside its stubbornness and sin, treating the word as a summary of covenant violation. The ancient proverb 'from the wicked comes wickedness' (1 Sam 24:13) treats it as a self-propagating force. In the wisdom tradition, resha' is the antithesis of tsedaqah ('righteousness'): Proverbs 10:2 warns that 'treasures of wickedness profit nothing,' while Ecclesiastes observes resha' in the very seat of justice (Eccl 3:16). Isaiah personalizes it as the 'fist of wickedness' raised against the oppressed (Isa 58:4) and the 'bonds of wickedness' that must be loosed (Isa 58:6). German 'Bosheit,' Spanish 'maldad,' and French 'mechancete' all capture the moral gravity.

wickedness, evil (30×) Moral wickedness or guilt as a quality of character and conduct, standing in fundamental opposition to God's righteous order. Functions as the antithesis of tsedaqah in wisdom literature (Prov 10:2; Eccl 3:16). In the prophets, it becomes socially concrete: the 'fist of wickedness' (Isa 58:4), 'bonds of wickedness' (Isa 58:6), and 'treasuries of wickedness' (Mic 6:10). The ancient proverb in 1 Samuel 24:13 treats resha' as self-perpetuating evil. Ezekiel 7:11 personifies it as a rod that has blossomed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: from-his-wickedness, from-wickedness-of-him, is-wickedness | es: de-maldad-de-él, de-su-maldad;, impiedad | fr: le-méchanceté, méchanceté, méchant | de: Bosheit, Frevler, [מרשעו] Deut 9:27; 1Sam 24:13; Job 34:8; Job 34:10; Job 35:8

רָשָׁע H7563 Art / Adj-mp (263×)

Wicked, ungodly — a morally corrupt person opposed to God's ways; also forensically guilty in legal contexts

One of the Hebrew Bible's key moral vocabulary words, rasha' stands as the great antonym of tsaddiq ('righteous'). Across 263 occurrences, it overwhelmingly designates the morally wicked — those whose conduct defies God's order, from Pharaoh to the scheming enemies of the Psalms. The word carries theological weight: the wicked are not merely lawbreakers but those who resist the divine moral order itself. In a small cluster of forensic passages (Num 35:31, Deut 25:1–2), the sense narrows to legal guilt — one who is culpable and deserving condemnation. German 'Gottlose' ('godless') reveals the theological interpretation, while Spanish 'impío' ('impious') and French 'méchant' ('wicked') each capture a different facet of the word's moral force.

1. wicked person (259×) A morally wicked or ungodly person, used substantively as the archetypal opposite of the righteous (tsaddiq). Appearing 259 times, this is the dominant sense across Wisdom literature (Prov 10:3, 'The LORD does not let the righteous go hungry, but he thwarts the craving of the wicked'), Psalms (Ps 1:1, 6), prophetic judgment (Isa 13:11), and narrative (Gen 18:23, Abraham's intercession: 'Will you sweep away the righteous with the wicked?'). Cross-lingual renderings are illuminating: German 'Gottlose' ('godless') and 'Frevler' ('evildoer') emphasize the theological rebellion, Spanish 'impío' stresses irreverence, while French 'méchant' highlights active malice. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS
en: the-wicked, wicked, wicked-one | es: Impío, a-malvado, al-impío | fr: méchant | de: Frevler, Gottlose, dem-Gottlosen Gen 18:23; Gen 18:25; 1Kgs 8:32; Job 9:24; Job 15:20

2. guilty, culpable (4×) One who is legally or forensically guilty — culpable and deserving judicial punishment. Four occurrences in distinctly legal contexts: Num 35:31 ('a murderer who is guilty of death'), Deut 25:1–2 (the judge shall 'condemn the guilty'), and Ps 109:7 ('let him come forth guilty'). Here rasha' functions not as a moral character description but as a judicial verdict. The multilingual evidence confirms the shift: English and French move to 'guilty/culpable,' though German and Spanish sometimes retain the broader moral terms, reflecting the permeable boundary between legal guilt and moral wickedness in Hebrew thought. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: guilty, the-guilty | es: culpable, el-malvado | fr: guilty, le-guilty, méchant | de: Gottlose, der-guilty, guilty Num 35:31; Deut 25:1; Deut 25:2; Ps 109:7

רִשְׁעָה H7564 N-fsc / 3ms (15×)

Wickedness, evil; guilt or culpable wrongdoing attributed to a person or nation.

A feminine noun denoting moral wickedness or evil conduct, used across legal, prophetic, and wisdom literature. In Deuteronomy, it characterizes the collective depravity of the Canaanite nations that justified their dispossession (Deut 9:4-5), while in Proverbs it personifies the self-destructive nature of the wicked (Prov 11:5; 13:6). Zechariah dramatically personifies it as a woman sealed in an ephah (Zech 5:8). The word carries both abstract and personal dimensions – from national wickedness to individual culpability deserving punishment (Deut 25:2). German 'Gottlosigkeit' (godlessness) and Spanish 'maldad/impiedad' together capture its dual ethical-religious register.

1. wickedness, evil (11×) Abstract moral wickedness or evil as a condition or quality, often characterizing groups, nations, or personified forces: the wickedness of the nations (Deut 9:4-5), wickedness that devours like fire (Isa 9:18), and the startling personification in Zechariah 5:8 where the angel declares 'this is wickedness' over a woman in an ephah. Spanish oscillates between 'maldad' (malice) and 'impiedad' (impiety), reflecting the term's range from ethical to religious dimensions. Used in Proverbs to describe the principle that wickedness overthrows those who practice it (Prov 13:6). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-because-of-wickedness-of, and-wickedness-of, because-of-wickedness-of | es: e-impiedad-de, es-la-maldad, la-maldad | fr: [ורשעת], [לרשעה], [רשעה] | de: Gottlosigkeit, [ורשעת], [לרשעה] Deut 9:4; Deut 9:5; Prov 13:6; Isa 9:18; Ezek 5:6

2. guilt, culpable wickedness (4×) Personal, culpable wickedness attributed to a specific individual, emphasizing moral responsibility and the possibility of repentance. Deuteronomy 25:2 uses it of a guilty party deserving blows, while Ezekiel repeatedly pairs it with turning away: 'when the wicked turns from his wickedness' (Ezek 18:27; 33:12, 19). French 'son culpabilité' (his guilt) and the consistent possessive suffixes in the Hebrew (rishato, 'his wickedness') underscore the personal attribution. Proverbs 11:5 warns that the wicked fall 'by their own wickedness,' binding the concept tightly to individual accountability. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: but-by-his-wickedness, from-his-wickedness, from-wickedness-his | es: de-su-impiedad, de-su-maldad, su-maldad | fr: [מרשעתו], et-son-וברשעתו-lui, son-culpabilité | de: [מרשעתו], sein-Schuld, und-Gottlosigkeit Deut 25:2; Prov 11:5; Ezek 18:27; Ezek 33:19

רֶשֶׁף H7565 Prep-l (7×)

Flame, fiery bolt, or pestilence; from the burning coals of love to divine plague-arrows and lightning shafts.

An evocative Hebrew word rooted in the imagery of fire. In Song of Songs 8:6 it describes love's flames – 'its reshef-flashes are flashes of fire' – where Spanish 'brasas' (embers) and Hindi 'angāre' (coals) beautifully convey the consuming heat of passion. In Deuteronomy 32:24 and Habakkuk 3:5 it becomes a terrifying divine agent – pestilence and plague marching before God, recalling the Canaanite deity Resheph. The Psalms deploy it for lightning bolts and fiery arrows raining down in judgment (Ps 76:3; 78:48). Job 5:7 gives us the memorable 'sons of resheph' – sparks that fly upward, a metaphor for the inevitability of human trouble.

1. flame, burning coal, fire (3×) Flame, burning coal, or spark – visible fire in its elemental form. Song of Songs 8:6 piles resheph upon resheph to describe love's all-consuming blaze. Job 5:7 uses 'sons of resheph' (sparks) as a proverb for trouble's inevitability.

Spanish 'brasas/chispa' (embers/spark) and French 'flamme' capture the concrete fire imagery. (Song 8:6; Job 5:7) GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flame, flames-of, its-flames | es: brasas-de, chispa, sus-brasas | fr: flamme, flammes, ses-flammes | de: [רשׁף], [רשפי], [רשפיה] Job 5:7; Song 8:6

2. plague, pestilence, fever (2×) Plague, pestilence, or fever – a destructive force sent by God, echoing the Canaanite plague-deity Resheph. In Deuteronomy 32:24 it appears alongside bitter destruction; in Habakkuk 3:5 pestilence and resheph march before God in theophanic judgment. Spanish 'plaga/fiebre' and Hindi 'bukhār' (fever) show how translators oscillate between disease and supernatural devastation. (Deut 32:24; Hab 3:5) PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: plague | es: fiebre, la-plaga | fr: flamme, plaie | de: Plage, [רשׁף] Deut 32:24; Hab 3:5

3. lightning bolt, fiery arrow, thunderbolt (2×) Lightning bolt or fiery arrow – a projectile of divine fire used as a weapon. Psalm 78:48 pairs it with hail as instruments of judgment on Egypt, while Psalm 76:3 describes God breaking the 'resheph of the bow' – the flaming shafts of warfare. Spanish 'relámpagos/rayos' (lightning/bolts) and English 'fiery shafts' both emphasize the weapon-like, projectile quality. (Ps 76:3; 78:48) GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-fiery-shafts-of-, to-lightning-bolts | es: a-los-rayos, relámpagos-de- | fr: flamme, à-flamme | de: der-fiery-shafts-von-, zu-Blitz-bolts Ps 76:3; Ps 78:48

רֶשֶׁף H7566 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Resheph (personal name: descendant of Ephraim)

This is a personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 7:25, part of the genealogy of Ephraim. The name Resheph is identical to a common noun meaning 'flame' or 'burning,' and also to a West Semitic deity associated with plague and the underworld. Whether the personal name carries these associations or is simply a theophoric element is uncertain. The genealogical context situates this Resheph within Ephraim's lineage without additional biographical detail.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 7:25, Resheph appears as a descendant in Ephraim's genealogy, listed simply by name without further information. The Septuagint transliterates variously, reflecting the challenge of rendering Hebrew names into Greek. The name itself means 'flame' and was also a deity name in Canaanite religion, though in personal names such meanings often become merely conventional. The Chronicles genealogist includes Resheph to establish Ephraimite lineage, particularly leading toward Joshua (the chapter's climactic figure). PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Reshef | es: y-Résef | fr: [ורשׁף] | de: [ורשׁף] 1Chr 7:25

רָשַׁשׁ H7567 V-Pual-Perf-1cp (2×)

beat down, shatter; to crush or impoverish violently

A verb meaning to beat down or shatter. Jeremiah 5:17 warns that the enemy 'will beat down your fortified cities,' demolishing Israel's defenses. Malachi 1:4 uses the Pual: 'we have been beaten down,' expressing Edom's devastation. The Syriac cognate suggests grinding or crushing, fitting the images of military and economic ruin.

(2×) A Pō'ēl/Pual verb meaning to beat down, crush, or shatter. Jeremiah 5:17 (Pō'ēl imperfect) warns that the invader 'will beat down' (יְרָשֵׁשׁ) Judah's fortified cities—demolishing strongholds and reducing them to rubble. Malachi 1:4 (Pual perfect) has Edom lament, 'We have been shattered' (רֻשַּׁשְׁנוּ), acknowledging their devastation. The Syriac cognate (bruise, grind) supports the sense of pulverizing force. Spanish 'arruinados' (ruined) and 'empobrecer' (impoverish) reflect both physical destruction and economic desolation encoded in the verb. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: it-shall-impoverish, we-are-shattered | es: Fuimos-arruinados, empobrecerá | fr: [ירשׁש], arracher | de: [ירשׁש], [רשׁשנו] Jer 5:17; Mal 1:4

רֶשֶׁת H7568 N-fsc (22×)

A net for catching prey (literal or figurative); also a lattice-work or grating, especially of the tabernacle altar.

This noun covers two related but distinct artifacts: the hunter's or fisherman's net and the metalworker's grating. In its dominant sense, it appears frequently in the Psalms and prophets as a powerful metaphor — the wicked spread nets for the righteous (Ps 10:9; 31:4), and God himself casts a net over faithless nations (Ezek 12:13; 17:20). Proverbs 1:17 offers the memorable proverb that even a bird can see when a net is spread openly. In its second sense, it denotes the bronze network or grating of the tabernacle altar (Exod 27:4–5; 38:4), a lattice structure placed beneath the altar ledge — a technical architectural term rendered consistently as 'network' or 'grating' across translations.

1. net for catching (18×) A net used for catching birds, fish, or animals — literal or, more commonly, figurative. The figurative use dominates: the wicked ensnare the innocent (Ps 9:15; 10:9; 25:15), and God spreads his net in judgment over Egypt (Ezek 32:3) and unfaithful Israel (Hos 7:12). Proverbs 1:17 provides the only purely literal instance. Spanish 'red' and French 'filet' both preserve the trapping imagery, while the consistent pairing with verbs like פָּרַשׂ ('to spread') marks the net-as-trap metaphor across 18 occurrences. NETS AND SNARES

en: My-net, a-net, and-his-net | es: de-la-red, de-red, en-red | fr: [רשׁת], dans-filet, dans-ברשׁת | de: [ברשׁת], [הרשׁת], [ורשׁת] Job 18:8; Ps 9:15; Ps 10:9; Ps 25:15; Ps 31:4

2. network or grating (4×) A lattice-work, network, or grating — specifically the bronze mesh grating of the tabernacle altar described in Exodus 27:4–5 and 38:4. This architectural sense denotes a rigid, open-weave metal structure rather than a flexible catching device. The uniform rendering across languages as 'network' or 'grating' (Spanish 'la red,' English 'the network') distinguishes this technical cultic term from the hunting-net imagery. NETS AND SNARES

en: network, the-network | es: la-red, red | fr: le-network, network | de: der-network, network Exod 27:4; Exod 27:5; Exod 38:4

רְתוֹק H7569 Art / N-ms (3×)

chain—ornamental or restraining metal links, especially of gold

This noun denotes chains, particularly ornamental ones made of gold used in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 6:21) and those for binding captives (Ezekiel 7:23). The word appears in contexts where chains serve decorative or restraining functions. The temple usage suggests fine craftsmanship, while Ezekiel's reference points to the chains of captivity awaiting Jerusalem, creating a stark contrast between beauty and bondage.

(3×) The three occurrences split between decorative temple chains (1 Kings 6:21, appearing twice in the verse) and captivity chains (Ezekiel 7:23). Spanish 'cadenas' and French 'chaîne' straightforwardly render the term. The Ezekiel passage's command to 'make the chain' is textually uncertain, with some scholars proposing emendations, suggesting the original may have envisioned chains for impending exile. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: [with-chains-of], the-chain, with-chains-of | es: (con-cadenas-de), [con-cadenas], la-cadena | fr: [with-chains-of], avec-chains-de, chaîne | de: [with-chains-of], [הרתוק] 1Kgs 6:21; Ezek 7:23

רָתַח H7570 V-Piel-Imp-ms (3×)

boil, seethe—to cause bubbling through heat, literally or figuratively

This verb describes the action of boiling or making something seethe with heat. Ezekiel 24:5 uses it in the command to boil the cooking pot, part of an extended metaphor for Jerusalem's judgment. Job uses it twice: once for bowels boiling with emotional turmoil (30:27), and once for Leviathan making the deep boil like a pot (41:31). The term bridges literal cooking and metaphorical agitation.

(3×) The three uses divide between literal boiling (Ezekiel's pot) and figurative seething (Job's emotions and Leviathan's power). Spanish 'hervir' (to boil) and French 'bouillir' appear consistently. Job 30:27's description of bowels boiling 'without quiet' powerfully conveys inner turmoil, while the Leviathan passage uses boiling to illustrate the creature's fearsome ability to churn the ocean depths. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: He-makes-boil, boil | es: Hace-hervir, hierve, hierven | fr: bouillir, ירתיח, רתחו | de: [ירתיח], [רתח], [רתחו] Job 30:27; Job 41:31; Ezek 24:5

רְתָּח H7571 N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

boilings, seethe, vigorous bubbling (in cooking)

This plural noun with suffix means 'its boilings,' appearing in Ezekiel 24:5 in a prophetic allegory where Jerusalem is depicted as a cooking pot. The command is to 'boil its boilings'—make it boil vigorously. However, BDB notes this is likely a textual corruption for 'its pieces' (the meat inside), which fits better with the cooking metaphor elsewhere in the chapter. The image of intense boiling suits the context of judgment: Jerusalem under siege is like a pot brought to furious, destructive boil.

(1×) Ezekiel 24:5 uses this phrase in the extended metaphor of Jerusalem as a corroded pot on the fire: 'boil its boilings' or 'make it seethe vigorously.' Spanish 'hervores de ella' (its boilings) preserves the intensified action. Most scholars suspect textual corruption here (reading 'its pieces' instead), but the received text creates vivid image: repeated boiling, fierce heat, destructive intensity—all figuring the siege's relentless pressure. The cooking imagery throughout Ezekiel 24 turns domestic activity into vehicle for judgment oracle. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: its-boilings | es: hervores-de-ella | fr: chaîne | de: [רתחיה] Ezek 24:5

רְתּוֹק H7572

chain (for captives; Ezekiel 7:23, textually uncertain; also 1 Kings 6:21 Qere)

This noun appears in Ezekiel 7:23 in the command 'make the chain,' apparently referring to chains for captives as Babylon prepares to haul Judah into exile. However, the text is notoriously difficult, and scholars propose various emendations. First Kings 6:21 (Qere) also reads רְתוּקוֹת זָהָב ('chains of gold') adorning the temple's inner sanctuary, though the Ketiv differs. The vocabulary of chains connects to themes of bondage, captivity, and decorative metalwork. The textual uncertainties surrounding this rare term illustrate the challenges of reconstructing ancient Hebrew technical vocabulary for metallurgy and bondage.

רָתַם H7573 V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)

harness, bind, attach (animals to a chariot)

This verb means to harness or attach draft animals to a vehicle, appearing only in Micah 1:13: 'Harness the chariot to the horse.' The command is directed to Lachish in a context of judgment, possibly ironic—prepare to flee, or perhaps prepare for futile military response. The Arabic cognate suggests binding or tying as a reminder, and here the binding is the practical attachment of horse to chariot. The imperative creates urgency: action required in crisis.

(1×) Micah 1:13 commands the inhabitants of Lachish: 'Harness the chariot to the swift steed.' Spanish 'Unce' (harness/yoke), English 'harness' capture the action of binding animal to vehicle. This could be preparation for flight or battle, though in context it appears futile—Lachish will fall despite chariots. The singular imperative personalizes the address, as if speaking to the city itself. The chariot imagery is bitterly appropriate: Lachish's military strength will not save it from the coming judgment. BINDING AND TYING

en: Harness | es: Unce | fr: se-complaire | de: [רתם] Mic 1:13

רֹתֶם H7574 N-mp (4×)

broom tree, broom shrub (desert plant)

This noun identifies a desert shrub, likely the white broom (Retama raetam), common in arid regions of the Near East. Famous as Elijah's shelter in the wilderness, it also appears in descriptions of hardship and as fuel for coals. The plant's deep roots, meager shade, and hot-burning wood all feature in biblical imagery.

(4×) Designates a desert broom shrub. In 1 Kings 19:4-5, Elijah sits under 'a broom tree' (רֹתֶם אֶחָד/אַחַת) desiring death—the sparse desert shrub emphasizing his desolation. Job 30:4 mentions destitute people eating 'roots of broom' (שֹׁרֶשׁ רְתָמִים) for survival, indicating severe poverty. Psalm 120:4 speaks of 'coals of broom' (גַּחֲלֵי רְתָמִים), which burn especially hot and long. The plant is identified as Retama raetam, a white-flowered desert legume providing minimal shade but excellent charcoal. Multilingual glosses show botanical recognition: Spanish 'retama/retamas,' French 'genêt,' German 'broom-Baum'—though precise botanical equivalents vary by language. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: broom-tree, broom-trees, the-broom-tree | es: retama, retamas | fr: broom-arbre, genêt, רתמים | de: [רתמים], broom-Baum, der-broom-Baum 1Kgs 19:4; 1Kgs 19:5; Job 30:4; Ps 120:4

רִתְמָה H7575 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Rithmah; place name, a wilderness encampment during the Exodus journey

A place name identifying a station in the wilderness itinerary. Numbers 33:18-19 lists Rithmah among the stops between Rephidim and Rimmon-perez. The name may derive from a root meaning 'broom plant' (רֶתֶם), suggesting a desert shrub marked the site. The exact location is unknown.

(2×) Names a wilderness encampment in the Priestly itinerary (Num 33:18-19), positioned after Rephidim and before Rimmon-perez. The name Rithmah (רִתְמָה) likely relates to רֶתֶם, the desert broom plant, possibly indicating the area's vegetation. The Septuagint's Ραθαμα and Ραμαθα offer Greek transliterations without interpretation. Modern translations (Spanish Ritmá, French Rithmah) preserve the name, acknowledging that the site's identification is lost. The reference to flora may have served as a mnemonic or practical landmark for travelers. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Rithmah, in-Rithmah | es: de-Ritmá, en-Ritmá | fr: dans-Rithmah, de-Rithmah | de: in-Rithmah, von-Rithmah Num 33:18; Num 33:19

רָתַק H7576 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

be snapped, be bound; to break or be fastened (with textual uncertainty)

A verb with uncertain meaning due to textual issues. Nahum 3:10 (Pual) speaks of nobles 'bound with fetters,' clearly denoting restraint. Ecclesiastes 12:6 (Niphal, Qere reading) may mean 'be snapped' or 'be broken,' referring to a cord or chain. Some emend to נתק ('be torn away'). The semantic range spans binding and breaking, possibly related concepts of attachment and rupture.

(2×) A verb appearing in Pual and Niphal stems with contested meanings. Nahum 3:10 (Pual) clearly means 'be bound': Nineveh's nobles 'were bound (רֻתְּקוּ) with fetters.' Ecclesiastes 12:6 is textually difficult; the Qere reads יֵרָתֵק (Niphal imperfect) 'be snapped,' but the Ketiv has ירחק ('be far'). Most emend to יִנָּתֵק (from נתק, 'be torn away'). Arabic رتق (close up, repair) and Talmudic רִיתְקָא (enclosure) suggest fastening, yet the Ecclesiastes context demands breaking. The verb may originally have meant 'bind,' with 'snap' as a later semantic development or textual corruption. BINDING AND TYING

en: is-snapped, were-bound | es: (se-rompa), atados | fr: (ירחק), supplier | de: [(ירחק)], [רתקו] Eccl 12:6; Nah 3:10

רְתָקָה H7577 Conj-w / N-fpc (1×)

chains, fetters (possibly ornamental chains)

This plural construct noun refers to chains, appearing in Isaiah 40:19 in a description of idol-making: the craftsman overlays the idol with gold 'and chains of silver' (or possibly 'casts silver chains for it'). The context is satirical—the prophet mocks the elaborate process of manufacturing gods. Whether these chains are ornamental decoration or structural fasteners is unclear, but they represent additional costly materials lavished on worthless idols. The silver chains ironically bind not the idol but its deluded worshipers.

(1×) Isaiah 40:19 describes idol manufacture, mentioning 'chains of silver' as part of the elaborate decoration. Spanish 'y cadenas' (and chains) preserves the connective and plural. The chains likely ornament the idol, adding silver to the gold overlay—expensive materials wasted on handmade deities. The prophet's rhetoric is devastating: such elaborate effort to create a god who can't speak, move, or save. The chains, meant to beautify, become symbols of the craftsmen's bondage to their own handiwork. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-chains | es: y-cadenas | fr: [ורתקות] | de: [ורתקות] Isa 40:19

רְתֵּת H7578 N-fs (1×)

trembling, terror, fearful reverence

This noun denotes trembling or terror, appearing in Hosea 13:1 in a difficult text: 'When Ephraim spoke, trembling' (or possibly 'spoke with trembling,' or 'spoke, there was trembling'). The verse contrasts Ephraim's former exalted status (when his words commanded fear/respect) with his subsequent guilt through Baal worship. Whether the trembling is Ephraim's own reverent fear or others' fearful response to his authority remains textually ambiguous, but the image evokes a time when Ephraim's leadership carried weight.

(1×) Hosea 13:1 presents interpretive challenges, but describes a time 'when Ephraim spoke, trembling'—either Ephraim spoke with humble fear, or his speech inspired trembling in others. Spanish 'temblor,' French 'crainte' (fear) both capture the fearful aspect. The verse mourns Ephraim's fall from a state where speaking carried authority/reverence to one of death through idolatry. The trembling represents either proper fear before God (now abandoned) or commanding respect (now lost). Either way, it marks a vanished condition. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: trembling | es: temblor | fr: crainte | de: [רתת] Hos 13:1

שָׁאַב H7579 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (19×)

To draw water from a well or spring; by extension, the person who draws water

A verb describing the fundamental act of fetching water from a well, spring, or cistern. It appears memorably in the servant narratives at the well where Rebekah draws for Abraham's camels (Gen 24:19-45) and in the designation of the Gibeonites as perpetual 'drawers of water' (Josh 9:21). Isaiah employs it figuratively: 'You shall draw water from the wells of salvation' (Isa 12:3). Spanish 'sacar' (to pull out) and French 'tirer' (to draw) both capture the physical pulling action at the heart of this word.

draw water (19×) To draw or fetch water from a well, spring, or cistern, including participial forms denoting the person performing this task. The literal usage spans everyday life (Gen 24:11; 1 Sam 9:11; Ruth 2:9) and ritual contexts (1 Sam 7:6). Isaiah 12:3 extends it metaphorically to drawing salvation as one draws water, a striking figurative turn preserved across all major translations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-will-draw, and-drawers-of, and-drawers-of- | es: Y-sacaréis-, a-sacar, el-que-saca | fr: Je—tirer, [וישאבו], [ושאבתם] | de: [וישאבו], [ושאבתם], [ישאבון] Gen 24:11; Gen 24:13; Gen 24:19; Gen 24:20

שָׁאַג H7580 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (21×)

To roar like a lion, used of beasts, enemies, and God in power or judgment; rarely, to groan in anguish.

Evokes the terrifying sound of a lion's roar, used literally of predators (Judg 14:5, Ps 104:21) and figuratively of invading armies, oppressive rulers, and even God himself thundering against the nations (Jer 25:30, Hos 11:10). The onomatopoeia is almost audible in the Hebrew. Spanish 'rugir' and French 'rugir' faithfully carry the leonine force. One poignant exception appears in Psalm 38:8, where the psalmist's roar becomes a groan of inner anguish – the same visceral sound redirected from aggression to suffering. German captures this shift beautifully with 'ich stoehnen' against the typical leonine vocabulary.

1. roar (of lion/beast) (20×) To roar as a lion or fierce beast, used literally of predators and figuratively of God, enemies, or oppressive rulers roaring in power, threat, or judgment. The young lion roars against Samson (Judg 14:5), lions roar for prey (Ps 104:21), enemies roar in the sanctuary (Ps 74:4), and God himself roars from Zion (Jer 25:30). Hosea 11:10 presents the startling image of God roaring like a lion to call scattered Israel home. Spanish 'rugir/rugieron' and French 'rugir' preserve the primal leonine force across translations. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: [ketiv], and-roaring, does-roar | es: (rugirá), Rugiendo, Rugieron | fr: et-rugir, roaring, rugir | de: [(ישאג)], [[ושאג]], [הישאג] Judg 14:5; Job 37:4; Ps 22:13; Ps 74:4; Ps 104:21

2. groan or cry out (1×) To groan or cry out in deep personal anguish, attested in Psalm 38:8 where the psalmist describes groaning from inner turmoil. The same visceral, guttural sound used of a lion's roar is redirected to express overwhelming emotional pain. English renders 'I groan,' Spanish 'gimo,' and German 'ich stoehnen,' all shifting from animal ferocity to human suffering – a poignant semantic extension that shows how the body's deepest sounds transcend the boundary between rage and grief. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: I-groan | es: gimo | fr: rugir | de: ich-stöhnen Ps 38:8

שְׁאָגָה H7581 N-fsc / 3ms (7×)

Roaring (of a lion, literal or figurative); groaning or anguished outcry (of a person in distress)

The noun שְׁאָגָה captures two contrasting sounds: the fierce roar of a lion and the anguished groan of a suffering human being. As a leonine roar, it evokes terrifying power — Isaiah 5:29 compares invading armies to a roaring lion, and Ezekiel 19:7 describes a conquering king whose roar devastates the land. As a human groan, it voices the depths of personal anguish — David's 'words of my groaning' in Psalm 22:1, the psalm Jesus quoted from the cross, and Job's sighs that come instead of bread (Job 3:24). Spanish captures the split neatly: rugido for the lion's roar, gemir/gemido for human groaning.

1. roaring (of lions) (4×) The roar of a lion, used both literally and as a powerful metaphor for aggressive, predatory force. Isaiah 5:29 likens the roar of invading nations to a lion's growl (Spanish rugido, Arabic za'ir). Job 4:10 uses it figuratively for the wicked whose roaring is silenced by God. Ezekiel 19:7 describes a young lion — a figure for a king of Judah — whose roar (she'agato) devastates cities. Zechariah 11:3 pairs it with the lions of the Jordan thicket. The consistent multilingual rendering as 'roar/rugido/rugissement' confirms the animalistic, powerful quality of this sound. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: roar, roaring-his, roaring-of | es: Rugido, Rugido-de, rugido-de | fr: [שאגה], rugissement, שאגת | de: [שאגה], [שאגת], [שאגתו] Job 4:10; Isa 5:29; Ezek 19:7; Zech 11:3

2. groaning (of human distress) (3×) The groan, moan, or anguished cry of a human being in deep suffering — a sound that shares the raw intensity of the lion's roar but is redirected inward by pain rather than outward by power. In Psalm 22:1, David cries out with 'the words of my groaning' (divre she'agati) — the very psalm whose opening words Jesus spoke from the cross. Psalm 32:3 speaks of groaning all day long when sin is unconfessed. Job 3:24 says his groanings pour out like water. Spanish shifts from rugido to gemir/gemido, and the possessive 'my groaning/my groanings' in English marks the deeply personal, first-person quality of this suffering — a sound torn from the human throat rather than roared from a predator's jaws. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-groaning, my-groanings, through-my-groaning | es: en-mi-gemir, mi-gemido, mis-rugidos | fr: dans-rugissement, mon-שאגתי-moi, rugissement | de: [שאגתי], durch-mein-groaning, mein-groaning Job 3:24; Ps 22:1; Ps 32:3

שָׁאָה H7582 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (6×)

To crash into ruins, be laid waste; to roar or make an uproar; to make desolate (Hiphil causative)

A verb of violent noise and destruction, evoking the thunderous collapse of cities and the roar of hostile nations. In Isaiah 6:11, the prophet's devastating commission continues 'until cities have crashed into ruins' and the land lies desolate – the full weight of judgment's finality. Isaiah 17:12-13 turns the word to the terrifying roar of nations surging like many waters, though God rebukes them and they flee. The Hiphil causative in 2 Kings 19:25 and Isaiah 37:26 reveals that God Himself ordained the Assyrian king's campaigns 'to make fortified cities desolate heaps.'

1. roar (2×) To roar, make an uproar – used of nations rushing forward like thundering waters. Isaiah 17:12-13 pictures peoples that 'roar like the roaring of many waters,' a simile for the terrifying advance of enemy armies. The parallel verb 'hamah' (to be in tumult) reinforces the auditory chaos. Spanish 'braman' (they bellow/roar) captures the bestial, overwhelming quality of the sound. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: they-roar | es: braman | fr: [ישאון'] | de: [ישאון'] Isa 17:12; Isa 17:13

2. laid waste (2×) To crash into ruins, be laid waste (Qal and Niphal). In Isaiah 6:11 the prophet asks 'How long, Lord?' and is told: until cities 'are laid waste' without inhabitant and the land is utterly desolate. The Niphal intensifies the devastation – not merely damaged but reduced to uninhabitable ruin. Spanish 'sean devastadas' (be devastated) and 'quede desolada' (remain desolate) show the completeness of the destruction. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: are-laid-waste, is-laid-waste | es: quede-desolada, sean-devastadas | fr: [שאו], [תשאה] | de: [תשאה], erhebt Isa 6:11

3. make desolate (2×) To make desolate, cause devastation (Hiphil causative). In the parallel passages of 2 Kings 19:25 and Isaiah 37:26, God declares He planned long ago for the Assyrian to 'make fortified cities into ruinous heaps.' The causative stem clarifies that the agent of destruction acts under divine sovereignty. Spanish 'para asolar/para desolación' (to devastate/for desolation) and English 'to make desolate' express the purposeful, divinely ordained nature of the ruin. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: to-make-desolate | es: para-asolar, para-desolación | fr: [להשאות], à-fais-désolé | de: [להשאות], zu-mache-desolate 2Kgs 19:25; Isa 37:26

שָׁאָה H7583 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-msc (1×)

gaze intently, stare, watch closely

This Hithpael participle means gazing or staring intently, appearing in Genesis 24:21 where Abraham's servant watches Rebekah closely at the well, silently assessing whether the Lord has made his journey successful. The intensive stem suggests sustained, focused attention—not a glance but a gaze. The servant's silence and steady watching create narrative tension: will this be the woman? The multilingual evidence consistently emphasizes the visual focus, the concentrated observation.

(1×) Genesis 24:21 describes Abraham's servant 'gazing at her' (at Rebekah) after she has offered water to him and his camels—precisely the sign he requested. The Hithpael form intensifies the action: he's staring, watching intently, 'keeping silence to know whether the Lord had made his journey successful.' Spanish 'asombrado' (amazed) adds emotional dimension, though the verb primarily means to gaze steadily. This is the silent, hopeful scrutiny of someone watching for divine confirmation in human actions. GAZING AND LOOKING en: was-gazing | es: asombrado | fr: était-gazing | de: staunte Gen 24:21

שַׁאֲוָה H7584 Prep-k / N-fs (1×)

devastating storm, tempest, ruin (Ketiv variant)

This noun (Ketiv reading) refers to a devastating storm or ruin, appearing in Proverbs 1:27 where Wisdom warns that calamity will come 'like a storm.' The Qere reading prefers a different vocalization (שׁוֹאָה), but both point to destructive tempest. The image parallels 'whirlwind,' creating vivid picture of sudden, overwhelming disaster. Wisdom's discourse uses storm-language to warn the simple: reject instruction and calamity will strike with meteorological violence and inevitability.

(1×) Proverbs 1:27 (Ketiv reading) warns that disaster will come upon the foolish 'like a devastating storm,' parallel with 'like a whirlwind.' The multilingual glosses mark this as a textual variant. The imagery is of sudden, irresistible destruction—storm as metaphor for calamity that sweeps away those who ignored Wisdom's call. Whether read as שַׁאֲוָה or שׁוֹאָה (Qere), the term evokes violent weather that obliterates everything in its path, suiting Wisdom's rhetoric of inevitable consequences. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: [como-tormenta] | fr: comme-[כשאוה] | de: [[כשאוה]] Prov 1:27

שְׁאוֹל H7585 Prep-k / N-cs (66×)

Sheol, the underworld realm of the dead in Hebrew cosmology; once possibly a verbal form meaning 'to ask.'

Refers almost exclusively to the subterranean abode of the dead, the shadowy destination of all who die. Hebrew speakers did not conceive of Sheol as a place of punishment alone; both the righteous and the wicked descend there. Jacob mourns that he will go down to Sheol grieving for Joseph (Gen 37:35), and the Psalmist thanks God for rescuing his soul from its lowest depths (Ps 86:13). The etymology may connect to sha'al ('to ask, inquire'), possibly referencing necromancy. In one disputed passage (Isa 7:11), the form may actually be the imperative of the verb 'to ask' rather than the noun Sheol, as Ahaz is told to ask a sign from the Lord.

1. Sheol, realm of the dead (65×) The underworld or abode of the dead. Occurring 65 times, Sheol is the great leveler of Hebrew anthropology: the place to which all the dead descend. Translations consistently render it with underworld-specific vocabulary – Spanish Seol, French sejour-des-morts ('dwelling of the dead'), German Totenreich ('realm of the dead') – confirming its identity as a cosmological location rather than a mere grave. Key passages include Jacob's grief (Gen 37:35), Korah's company swallowed alive (Num 16:30), and Jonah's prayer from the belly of the fish (Jonah 2:2). DEATH AND DYING

en: She'ol, Sheol, to-Sheol | es: Seol, Sheol, al-Seol | fr: shéol, séjour-des-morts | de: Scheol, Totenreich, fragte Gen 37:35; Gen 42:38; Gen 44:29; Gen 44:31; Num 16:30

2. to ask, request (verb) (1×) A verbal imperative meaning 'ask' or 'request,' likely a homographic overlap with the verb sha'al. In Isaiah 7:11, Ahaz is commanded to ask (she'ol) for a sign from the LORD. Spanish la-peticion ('the request') and English 'asking' treat this as the verb rather than the noun, though French and German translations collapse it into their standard Sheol rendering, suggesting the ambiguity was not always resolved by translators. PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: asking | es: la-petición | fr: séjour-des-morts | de: Totenreich Isa 7:11

שָׁאוּל H7586 Prep (406×)

Saul/Shaul; proper name meaning 'asked [of God],' borne by Israel's first king and several other figures

Sha'ul ('asked') is best known as the name of Israel's first king, the tall Benjamite son of Kish whose turbulent reign dominates 1 Samuel. The name derives from the root sha'al ('to ask'), reflecting the people's request for a monarch (1 Sam 8:5). Beyond King Saul, the same name identifies an Edomite king from Rehoboth on the River (Gen 36:37), a son of Simeon by a Canaanite woman (Gen 46:10), and a Levite ancestor (1 Chr 6:9). Translations across languages uniformly transliterate rather than translate: Spanish Saul, French Saul, German Saul.

Saul / Shaul (proper name) (406×) Proper masculine name from the root sha'al ('to ask, request'), applied primarily to Israel's first king, son of Kish of Benjamin (1 Sam 9:2), whose 360+ occurrences dominate the corpus. Also borne by an Edomite king (Gen 36:37), a Simeonite clan ancestor (Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15), and a Levite (1 Chr 6:9). The etymological link to 'asking' resonates with the narrative of Israel requesting a king. SAUL PERSONAL NAME

en: Saul | es: Saúl | fr: Saül | de: Saul 1Sam 9:2; 1Sam 9:3; 1Sam 9:7; 1Sam 9:8

שָׁאוּלִי H7587 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
Shaulite (gentilic: descendants of Shaul, clan in Simeon)
This is a gentilic adjective (with the definite article) functioning as a collective noun, referring to the Shaulite clan descended from Shaul within the tribe of Simeon. It appears in Numbers 26:13 in the wilderness census, where Israelite families are enumerated. The form follows standard patterns for clan designation, deriving from the ancestor's name with the -ite ending. The article makes it collective: 'the Shaulites' as a group.

(1×) Numbers 26:13 lists 'the Shaulites' among Simeonite clans in the census. The multilingual glosses transliterate with the appropriate article: Spanish 'los saulitas' (the Shaulites), English 'the Shaulite.' This collective designation identifies all descendants of Shaul son of Simeon as a single clan unit for census and inheritance purposes. The census context makes clan membership crucial—these genealogical distinctions determined land allotment, military organization, and social identity in Israel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Shaulite | es: los-saulitas | fr: le-Shaulite | de: der-Shaulite Num 26:13

שָׁאוֹן H7588 N-msc (18×)
Roar, tumult, uproar – the crashing din of waters, armies, or crowds; once the roaring desolation of a destructive pit.
This masculine noun captures the overwhelming sound of chaos – surging seas, charging armies, and roaring crowds all collapse into a single auditory image. Isaiah 17:12 compares the tumult of nations to the roaring of many waters, and Psalm 65:7 celebrates God as the one who stills the roaring of the seas. Spanish estruendo ('crash, din') and German Laerm ('noise, racket') convey the visceral loudness. Jeremiah uses the word for the thunder of divine judgment crashing upon the nations (Jer 25:31; 51:55). In one distinctive usage (Ps 40:2), the 'pit of tumult' shades from pure noise into an image of roaring destruction and desolation.

1. roar, tumult, uproar (17×) The roar, tumult, or uproar of crowds, armies, or waters – a loud, overwhelming, often threatening sound. Isaiah 17:12-13 uses it twice for the thunderous noise of hostile nations compared to roaring seas. Psalm 65:7 praises God who stills the roaring of waves. Amos 2:2 and Hosea 10:14 apply it to the din of battle, and Jeremiah 48:45 calls warriors 'sons of tumult.' Spanish estruendo ('din, crash'), French tumulte, and German Laerm all emphasize the raw volume and disorder. The word consistently evokes sounds so loud they overwhelm ordinary perception. TUMULT AND UPROAR
en: a-roar, and-its-tumult, and-uproar-of | es: como-bramido-de, con-estruendo, estruendo | fr: et-tumulte, tumulte | de: Laerm, [בשאון], [שאון] Ps 65:7; Ps 74:23; Isa 5:14; Isa 13:4

2. ruin, desolation (1×) Roaring destruction or desolation – a contextual extension of the tumult imagery into the resulting ruin. In Psalm 40:2, the psalmist is drawn up from a 'pit of destruction' (or 'pit of roaring tumult'), where the auditory chaos of sense 1 merges with the physical devastation it produces. English 'destruction' and Spanish estruendo in this context shade from noise toward the wreckage that thunderous violence leaves behind. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: destruction | es: estruendo | fr: tumulte | de: destruction Ps 40:2

שְׁאָט H7589 N-msc / 2ms (3×)
contempt, despite—deep scorn held in the soul or heart
This noun appears only in Ezekiel, describing the contempt or malicious scorn that enemies harbor against Israel. The phrase 'with contempt in the soul' (25:15) or 'with all contempt of soul' (25:6) emphasizes that this isn't casual disdain but deep-seated hatred. Ezekiel uses this term to characterize the hostile attitudes of surrounding nations, providing grounds for God's judgment against them.

(3×) All three occurrences are in Ezekiel 25 and 36, describing the contemptuous attitudes of Ammon (25:6), Edom (25:15), and other nations (36:5) toward Israel. Spanish 'desprecio' and French translations capture the notion of scorn or despite. The term consistently appears in the phrase 'with contempt of soul,' suggesting internalized malice rather than momentary insult. CONTEMPT SCORN
en: with-contempt, with-contempt-of, your-contempt | es: con-desprecio, con-desprecio-de, tu-desprecio | fr: [בשאט], [שאטך] | de: [בשאט], [שאטך] Ezek 25:6; Ezek 25:15; Ezek 36:5

שׂוֹט H7590 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (3×)
despisers, those who treat with contempt—people who scorn or show despite This participial form, appearing only in Ezekiel, describes those who actively treat others with contempt or scorn. The word characterizes surrounding peoples—daughters of the Philistines (16:57) and various neighbors (28:24, 26)—who looked down on Israel. The term captures ongoing, habitual contempt rather than a single act of scorn, depicting a settled attitude of disdain.

(3×) The three occurrences all describe Israel's neighbors who despise her: Philistine women (16:57) and surrounding peoples (28:24, 26). Spanish uses 'los/las que desprecian' (those who despise), capturing the participial sense. The contexts promise relief from such contemptuous neighbors, part of Ezekiel's restoration oracles. The term's restriction to Ezekiel suggests it may be a dialectal or late form related to the noun שְׁאָט. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: the-despisers-of-, the-ones-despising | es: las-que-desprecian, los-que-desprecian | fr: [השאטות], [השאטים] | de: [השאטות], [השאטים] Ezek 16:57; Ezek 28:24; Ezek 28:26

שְׁאִיָּה H7591 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
ruin, desolation, devastation
This noun means ruin or desolation, appearing in Isaiah 24:12, a late oracle depicting universal devastation: 'In the city is left desolation, and the gate is battered into ruin.' The term emphasizes the aftermath—not the destroying but the state of being destroyed. Isaiah 24's apocalyptic vision presents comprehensive collapse, and this word captures the endpoint: emptiness, wreckage, the stillness after catastrophe. The conjunction links this ruin to the broader scene of destruction.

(1×) Isaiah 24:12 describes the ruined city's condition: 'In the city is left desolation, and the gate is battered into ruin.' Spanish 'y ruina' (and ruin) preserves the conjunction connecting this to the previous devastation. The term denotes the post-destruction state—the silence and emptiness after calamity. In Isaiah 24's cosmic judgment scene, this ruin is not one city's fate but representative of universal collapse. The battered gate particularly symbolizes failed defense, the city's protective boundary now rubble. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: and-ruin | es: y-ruina | fr: [ושאיה] | de: [ושאיה] Isa 24:12

שָׁאַל H7592 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (176×)
To ask, inquire, request, demand, borrow, or lend; covering question-asking, petition, and the loan transaction in both directions
Sha'al is the quintessential verb of human need voiced aloud — whether seeking information, requesting a favor, or negotiating a loan. Its semantic range runs from the simple question ('What is your name?' Gen 32:29) to the desperate petition (Hannah's plea for a son, 1 Sam 1:20), and even extends into the economics of borrowing and lending. Arabic sa'ala preserves the same core of voiced inquiry, while the Korean split between mul-eotda (asking) and guhaetda (requesting) exposes the line between information-seeking and favor-seeking that Hebrew leaves implicit. The wordplay on Samuel's name — 'I asked him of the LORD' — shows how deeply this verb is woven into Israel's narrative theology.

1. ask, inquire, question (96×) To ask a question or make an inquiry, seeking information from another person or from God. Arabic sa'ala and Korean mul-eotda (to ask) consistently mark this as the information-seeking register. This is the dominant sense (96x), ranging from simple interpersonal questions (Gen 26:7 'the men of the place asked about his wife') to formal divine inquiry through priest or prophet (Judg 1:1; 1 Sam 10:22). The construction often takes a double accusative — asking someone about something — and the multilingual glosses converge on consultar/demander/befragen, all emphasizing the investigative dimension. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: and-asked, and-he-asked, and-inquired | es: Y-consultaron, Y-consultó, Y-preguntó | fr: et-consulta, et-demanda, et-demander | de: und-befragten, und-er-fragte, und-fragen Gen 26:7; Gen 32:29; Gen 37:15; Gen 38:21

2. request, petition, demand (73×) To request, petition, or demand something from someone, seeking to obtain goods, favors, or outcomes rather than information. Arabic talaba (to seek/request) and Korean guhaetda (to seek to obtain) distinguish this from mere inquiry. Covers Moses's statement of what God 'asks of' Israel (Deut 10:12), Caleb's daughter requesting springs of water (Josh 15:18), and the elders demanding a king (1 Sam 8:10). Spanish pedir and French demander in the petitionary register confirm the shift from question to request. Hannah's naming of Samuel — she'iltiv, 'I asked him of the LORD' (1 Sam 1:20) — is the theological pinnacle of this sense. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: ask, asked, he-asked | es: Pide, de-pedir, para-pedir | fr: demanda, demande, demander | de: ask, du-fragte, er-fragte Deut 10:12; Deut 14:26; Deut 18:16; Josh 15:18; Josh 19:50

3. borrow (3×) To borrow, to receive something on loan from another. Arabic musta'ar (borrowed) and Korean billin (borrowed) mark the economic transaction. Rare (3x), appearing in the case law of Exod 22:14 regarding liability for a borrowed animal, Hannah's declaration that Samuel was 'lent to the LORD' (1 Sam 1:28 — a deliberate wordplay on borrowing/lending), and the floating axe head that 'was borrowed' (2 Kgs 6:5). The semantic extension from 'ask for' to 'borrow' is natural and paralleled across Semitic languages. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: borrows, is-lent, was-borrowed | es: era-prestado!, pida-prestado, prestado | fr: borrows, est-prêta, fut-borrowed | de: borrows, ist-lieh, war-borrowed Exod 22:14; 1Sam 1:28; 2Kgs 6:5

4. lend, grant on loan (2×) Hifil causative: to lend, to grant on loan to another. Arabic a'ara (to lend) and Korean billyeojuda (to lend) confirm the causative flip from receiving to granting. Appears only twice: the Israelites being granted gold and silver by the Egyptians at the Exodus (Exod 12:36), and Hannah's vow that she has 'lent' Samuel to the LORD (1 Sam 1:28). The Exodus passage is remarkable — Spanish les dieron ('they gave them') and the broader translation tradition show how 'lending' shades into 'granting,' since these loans were never repaid. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-have-lent-him, and-they-lent-them | es: lo-prestó, y-les-dieron | fr: et-ils-prêta-eux, je-ai-prêta-lui | de: ich-habe-lieh-ihn, und-sie-lieh-ihnen Exod 12:36; 1Sam 1:28

5. (1×) To ask leave, to request permission for departure. A specialized pragmatic extension of the petition sense, appearing in Neh 13:6 where Nehemiah asks the king's permission to return to Jerusalem. Spanish pedi permiso and English 'I asked leave' confirm the diplomatic-courtly register. The construction is idiomatic: sha'al functions as requesting formal authorization rather than simply asking a question or requesting an object. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: I-asked-leave | es: pedí-permiso | fr: demander | de: fragte Neh 13:6

6. (1×) To beg, to plead as a destitute person. A register shift toward abject supplication, appearing in the imprecatory Ps 109:10 ('let his children beg'). Spanish mendiguen (let them beg) captures the social degradation implied. Where sense 2 covers dignified petition, this sense carries the connotation of desperate, repeated asking born of poverty — the semantic floor of a verb whose ceiling is royal petition. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: and-let-them-beg | es: y-mendiguen | fr: et-demander | de: und-lass-ihnen-beg Ps 109:10

שְׁאַל H7593 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (6×)

To ask, inquire; to request or demand (Aramaic)

The Aramaic verb שְׁאַל mirrors its Hebrew cognate שָׁאַל and appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It covers two related speech acts: asking a question to gain information, and making a formal request or demand. When Tattenai the governor interrogated the Jewish builders, he 'asked' their names and authority (Ezra 5:9-10) — a judicial inquiry. But when Artaxerxes decrees that whatever Ezra 'asks of you' must be granted (Ezra 7:21), the verb shifts from inquiry to authoritative request. Spanish distinguishes the two senses neatly: 'preguntamos' (we inquired) versus 'os pida' (may request of you).

1. to ask, inquire (5×) To ask a question or make an inquiry, seeking information or an answer from someone. This covers the perfective 'we asked' (Ezra 5:9-10), the participle 'one who asks' (Dan 2:11, 27), and the simple past 'asked' (Dan 2:10). The context in each case is interrogation or consultation — Tattenai questioning the builders, Nebuchadnezzar demanding interpretation from his wise men. Spanish 'preguntamos/pregunta' and French 'demander' all confirm the information-seeking sense. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: asked, asks, we-asked | es: ha-preguntado, pide, pregunta | fr: [שאלנא], demander | de: [שאל], [שאלנא] Ezra 5:9; Ezra 5:10; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:11; Dan 2:27

2. to request, demand (1×) To make a request or demand of someone, asking for something to be given or done rather than merely seeking information. The sole instance is Ezra 7:21, where King Artaxerxes decrees that whatever Ezra the priest 'asks of you' (the treasurers beyond the River) shall be done. English 'asks-of-you' and Spanish 'os pida' both encode a directive request with an implicit authority structure, distinguishing it from the neutral inquiry of sense 1. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: asks-of-you | es: os-pida | fr: [ישאלנכון] | de: [ישאלנכון] Ezra 7:21

שְׁאַל H7594 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Sheal (personal name: man who married foreign wife)

This is a personal name appearing in Ezra 10:29, identifying one of the Israelites who had married foreign women during the exile and were required to divorce them in Ezra's reforms. The name itself means 'asking' or 'request.' Beyond this single mention in the list of those with foreign wives, nothing else is known about this individual. The Septuagint renders it variously, reflecting the challenges of transliterating Hebrew names.

(1×) Ezra 10:29 lists Sheal among those who 'had taken foreign wives'—the controversial marriages Ezra demanded be dissolved to maintain covenant purity. The name appears with the conjunction 'and,' integrating it into the catalog of offenders. German 'und fragte' (and asked) attempts to translate the name's meaning rather than transliterate, showing the semantic root. The list itself is painful: names without stories, men whose personal lives became battleground in the community's struggle to maintain distinct identity after exile. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Sheal | es: y-Sheal | fr: [וְשׁאל] | de: und-fragte Ezra 10:29

שְׁאֵלָה H7595 N-fsd (1×)

request, petition, affair, matter (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun means request, petition, or affair, appearing in Daniel 4:17 (Aramaic 4:14) in Nebuchadnezzar's dream decree: 'This sentence is by the decree of the watchers, the decision by the word of the holy ones, to the intent that the living may know...' The emphatic form (with Aramaic definite article) marks this as 'the request/matter at hand.' The term has shifted from 'question' to 'affair' or 'matter'—the issue being decided, the case under consideration.

(1×) Daniel 4:17 (Aramaic section) uses this term for 'the request' or 'the matter' decreed by the heavenly watchers—the sentence upon Nebuchadnezzar. Spanish 'la demanda' (the petition/request), English 'the request' both preserve the definite article. Though the root means 'ask' or 'inquire,' here it's weakened to mean 'affair' or 'matter'—the business at hand. The heavenly council's decree becomes a legal petition presented to the living: this judgment demonstrates that the Most High rules over human kingdoms. PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: the-request | es: la-demanda | fr: droit | de: [שאלתא] Dan 4:17

שְׁאֵלָה H7596 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (14×)

Request, petition; a formal plea to an authority figure, or the thing granted in response.

Denotes a request or petition made to someone in authority — whether a king (Esther's repeated petitions to Ahasuerus) or God himself (Hannah's prayer in 1 Sam 1:27). The word naturally shades from the act of asking into 'the thing asked for,' as when Hannah names Samuel 'because I asked the LORD for him' and Eli confirms 'the LORD grant your she'elah.' In one specialized instance (1 Sam 2:20), it approaches the sense of 'loan' — something entrusted that God will repay. Spanish petición and French demande capture the formal, courtly register of the word.

1. request, petition (13×) A formal request or petition directed to a person of authority. Gideon asks the Israelites for gold earrings (Judg 8:24); Bathsheba brings 'one small petition' to Solomon (1 Kgs 2:20); Esther is invited repeatedly to name her she'elah before the king (Est 5:6, 7:2). Hannah's deeply personal petition to God (1 Sam 1:27) shows the word spans both royal and divine address. Spanish petición and French demande consistently render this courtly, formal sense of asking. PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: a-request, at-my-request, is-your-request | es: en-mi-petición, mi-petición, petición | fr: demande, mon-requête, mon-שאלתי-moi | de: Bitte, dein-petition, ein-request Judg 8:24; 1Sam 1:17; 1Sam 1:27; 1Kgs 2:16; 1Kgs 2:20

2. loan, thing lent (1×) A specialized nuance meaning 'the thing lent' or 'loan' — the concrete object or blessing granted in response to a petition. In 1 Sam 2:20, Eli blesses Elkanah, praying that the LORD repay him for 'the loan' (ha-she'elah) that Hannah dedicated to the LORD, referring to Samuel himself as the granted gift now returned to God's service. Spanish préstamo captures this transactional dimension, distinct from the mere act of requesting. PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: the-loan | es: el-préstamo | fr: le-loan | de: der-loan 1Sam 2:20

שְׁאַלְתִּיאֵל H7597a N-proper-ms (6×)

Shealtiel; 'I asked God,' father of Zerubbabel, leader of the post-exilic return to Jerusalem.

The name Shealtiel (שְׁאַלְתִּיאֵל) means 'I have asked (him) of God,' expressing prayerful dependence on divine provision. He is identified as the first son of King Jehoiachin (1 Chr 3:17) and as the father of Zerubbabel, the governor who led the rebuilding of the temple after the Babylonian exile (Hag 1:1; Ezra 3:2, 8; Neh 12:1). The Septuagint renders it Σαλαθιηλ, which passed into the New Testament genealogies. Spanish preserves multiple forms ('Salatiel,' 'Sealtiel'), while French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew untransliterated.

Shealtiel (proper name) (6×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'I asked God,' borne by the father of Zerubbabel. According to 1 Chronicles 3:17 he was the firstborn son of the exiled king Jehoiachin. His importance lies in anchoring the post-exilic Davidic line: every occurrence connects him to Zerubbabel's identity as leader of the return (Ezra 3:2, 8; Neh 12:1; Hag 1:1; 2:23). The Spanish glosses 'Salatiel' and 'Sealtiel' reflect both the Septuagintal and Masoretic traditions, while the Greek Σαλαθιηλ became the standard form in New Testament genealogies (Matt 1:12; Luke 3:27). SHEALTIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: She'alti'el, Shealtiel | es: Salatiel, Sealtiel, Shealtiel | fr: Jojakin, [שאלתיאל] | de: Schealtiel, [שאלתיאל] 1Chr 3:17; Ezra 3:2; Ezra 3:8; Neh 12:1; Hag 1:1

שַׁלְתִּיאֵל H7597b N-proper-ms (3×)

Shealtiel—father of Zerubbabel in the post-exilic period

This personal name identifies the father of Zerubbabel, the governor who led the first return from Babylonian exile. Haggai mentions Shealtiel three times (1:12, 14; 2:2) in the formula 'Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel,' establishing the genealogical authority of the post-exilic leadership. The name appears as an alternate form of Shealtiel found elsewhere in biblical texts, meaning 'I have asked of God.'

(3×) All three occurrences are in Haggai, identifying Zerubbabel's father in the prophet's exhortations to rebuild the temple. Spanish 'Sealtiel' and German 'Schealtiel' transliterate the name with minor variations. The consistent genealogical formula emphasizes legitimate Davidic descent, crucial for establishing Zerubbabel's authority. Haggai 1:12-14 shows the people heeding the voice of God through this leadership. SHEALTIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: Shealtiel | es: Sealtiel | fr: [שלתיאל] | de: Schealtiel Hag 1:12; Hag 1:14; Hag 2:2

H7598 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shealtiel (personal name: father of Zerubbabel)

This personal name means 'I have asked God' or 'God's request,' appearing frequently in post-exilic texts as the father of Zerubbabel, the governor who led the return from Babylon. Ezra 5:2 specifically mentions Shealtiel in connection with the temple rebuilding. The name's theophoric element (containing 'El' = God) reflects piety and dependence. Shealtiel's prominence derives from his son Zerubbabel, the Davidic heir who became focal point for messianic hopes during the restoration.

(1×) Ezra 5:2 identifies Zerubbabel as 'son of Shealtiel,' the genealogical connection establishing Davidic lineage and legitimacy for leadership. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name: Spanish 'Salatiel,' English 'Shealtiel,' German 'Schealtiel.' Shealtiel appears in both Ezra-Nehemiah and Haggai-Zechariah as Zerubbabel's father, anchoring the governor's authority in Davidic descent. The name itself ('I have asked God') may reflect circumstances of his birth or his parents' piety, a permanent testimony to dependence on divine providence. SHEALTIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: Shealtiel | es: Salatiel | fr: [שאלתיאל] | de: Schealtiel Ezra 5:2

שָׁאַן H7599 V-Piel-Perf-3cp (5×)

to be at ease, rest securely; dwell undisturbed and free from threat

This Piel verb conveys the state of being at ease, secure, and undisturbed by misfortune. In Jeremiah 30:10 and 46:27, God promises that Israel will return and be 'at ease with none making them afraid,' pairing sha'anan with shaqat (be quiet). Moab's complacency is described with the same word in Jeremiah 48:11. Proverbs 1:33 promises that whoever listens to wisdom 'will dwell securely and be at ease from dread of evil.' The Spanish 'tranquilo' aptly captures this settled, untroubled calm.

(5×) To be at ease, rest securely, dwell undisturbed by calamity or threat. Jeremiah uses it for Israel's promised restoration where they will be quiet and at ease with no one causing terror (Jer 30:10; 46:27), and ironically for Moab's false complacency (Jer 48:11). Proverbs 1:33 pairs it with freedom from dread of evil. Job 3:18 places it in the grave's rest from toil. Spanish 'tranquilo' and English 'at ease' reflect the settled security. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: and-at-ease, and-will-be-at-ease, are-at-ease | es: están-tranquilos, tranquilo, y-estará-tranquilo | fr: [ושאנן], [שאנן], et-ושאנן | de: [ושאנן], [שאנן], [שאננו] Job 3:18; Prov 1:33; Jer 30:10; Jer 46:27; Jer 48:11

שַׁאֲנָן H7600 Adj-ms (10×)

At ease, secure; ranging from genuine tranquility to complacent self-assurance and insolent arrogance.

An adjective whose meaning pivots dramatically on context, spanning the entire spectrum from blessed peace to condemned complacency. Isaiah uses it positively for Jerusalem as a 'quiet habitation' (33:20) and for Israel's 'undisturbed resting places' (32:18), yet just verses earlier rebukes the 'women who are at ease' (32:9, 11). Amos opens his woe oracle against those 'at ease in Zion' (6:1), and the psalmist laments the scorn of the complacent (123:4). French 'insouciant' (carefree, heedless) brilliantly captures the pejorative middle ground. In its most extreme form, it denotes Sennacherib's 'arrogance' before God (2 Kgs 19:28).

1. complacent, carefree, at ease (pejorative) (5×) Complacency, false security, or careless ease in a pejorative sense – rebuked by prophets as spiritual danger. French 'insouciant' and 'sans souci' (without care) precisely capture the heedless, self-satisfied tone. Amos 6:1 ('Woe to those at ease in Zion'), Isa 32:9, 11 ('complacent women'), Ps 123:4 (the scorn of the complacent), and Zech 1:15 (nations 'at ease' while Israel suffered) all carry this negative valence. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: at-ease, the-carefree, the-complacent-ones | es: de-los-que-están-tranquilos, las-tranquilas, los-que-están-tranquilos | fr: insouciantes, le-insouciant, sans-souci | de: [השאננים], [שאננות], der-carefree Ps 123:4; Isa 32:9; Isa 32:11; Amos 6:1; Zech 1:15

2. at ease, secure, tranquil (positive) (3×) Genuine tranquility, security, and undisturbed peace – a positive condition of blessed rest. Spanish 'tranquila/tranquilos' and English 'quiet' reflect this gentler meaning. Isaiah 32:18 promises God's people 'secure resting places,' and 33:20 celebrates Jerusalem as a 'quiet habitation.' Job 12:5 describes one 'at ease' in contrast with the sufferer, though this borders on the pejorative sense. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: at-ease, habitation, quiet | es: tranquila, tranquilo,, tranquilos | fr: insouciant, insouciantes, שאנן | de: [שאנן], [שאננות] Job 12:5; Isa 32:18; Isa 33:20

3. arrogance, insolent pride (2×) Arrogance or insolent self-assurance pushed to its extreme, describing aggressive pride before God. Attested in the parallel passages 2 Kgs 19:28 and Isa 37:29, where God confronts Sennacherib: 'your arrogance has come up to my ears.' Spanish 'arrogancia' and English 'arrogance' are unambiguous. BDB notes the textual variant 'uproar' (she'onkha), but the Masoretic reading preserves the semantic trajectory from ease to overconfidence to insolence. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: and-your-arrogance | es: y-tu-arrogancia | fr: et-insouciant, et-ton-arrogance | de: [ושאננך], und-dein-arrogance 2Kgs 19:28; Isa 37:29

שָׁסַס H7601 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 2fs (1×)

plunder, despoil, pillage (with violence)

This Qal participle with second feminine suffix means 'those plundering you,' appearing in Jeremiah 30:16 in an oracle of reversal: 'All who devour you shall be devoured, and all your foes shall go into captivity; those who plunder you shall become plunder.' The verb denotes violent seizure and despoiling. The poetic justice is perfect: the plunderers will be plundered. This Ketiv form is marked as Aramaic spelling, showing linguistic influence during the exilic period.

(1×) Jeremiah 30:16 promises reversal of Israel's suffering: 'those plundering you shall become plunder.' The participle with suffix personalizes the promise—'YOUR plunderers' will face their own despoiling. This is the lex talionis applied to nations: the violence done to Israel will return upon the perpetrators. The Aramaic spelling (Ketiv, versus Hebrew Qere) reflects the linguistic environment of the exile, when Aramaic increasingly influenced Hebrew. The promise offers hope: current plundering is not final; the plunderers face divine judgment. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL

en: plundering-you | es: los-que-te-despojan | fr: [שאסיך] | de: [שאסיך] Jer 30:16

שָׁאַף H7602a V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (8×)

To gasp, pant; figuratively to long for eagerly or to hasten

A verb grounded in the visceral experience of labored breathing. Isaiah 42:14 pairs it with nasham as God declares 'I will pant and gasp together,' while Jeremiah's wild donkeys stand on bare heights and 'pant for air' (Jer 14:6). The physical act of panting becomes a metaphor for intense desire in Job 7:2, where a servant 'longs for' the shadow, and in Psalm 119:131, where the psalmist opens his mouth and pants for God's commandments. Ecclesiastes 1:5 presses the image further: the sun 'hastens' back to its rising place, panting like a runner completing its circuit.

1. pant, gasp (literal breathing) (5×) Physical panting or gasping for breath. In Isa 42:14 God breaks long silence with the imagery of a laboring woman: 'I will pant and gasp at once.' Jer 2:24 depicts a wild donkey in heat snuffing the wind, and Jer 14:6 shows wild donkeys gasping on barren heights. Spanish 'jadearon' ('they panted') and 'aspira' ('breathes in') capture the raw physicality. Ps 119:131 bridges literal and figurative: 'I opened my mouth and panted' – bodily gesture expressing spiritual hunger. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: and-I-panted, and-I-will-pant, and-pants | es: aspira, jadearon, y-jadeé | fr: [ואשאף], [שאפה], [שאפן] | de: [ואשאף], [ושאף], [שאפה] Job 5:5; Ps 119:131; Isa 42:14; Jer 2:24; Jer 14:6

2. long for, yearn (metaphorical desire) (2×) Figurative longing or yearning – the physical gasping transferred to intense desire. Job 7:2 compares a suffering man to a servant who 'longs for' (yishᵓaf) the shade, and Job 36:20 warns against 'longing for the night.' Spanish 'anhela' ('yearns') and 'anheles' ('you might yearn') shift entirely from respiratory to emotional vocabulary, confirming the metaphorical transfer from body to soul. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: he-longs-for-, long-for | es: anhela, anheles | fr: aspirer | de: [ישאף], [תשאף] Job 7:2; Job 36:20

3. hasten, rush (1×) Hastening or rushing eagerly, an extension of panting-while-running. Ecclesiastes 1:5 applies it to the sun: 'it hastens (shoᵓef) to the place where it rises,' picturing the sun as a breathless runner completing its daily circuit. Spanish 'anhelando' retains the panting nuance even as the sense moves toward speed and urgency, bridging the physical and temporal dimensions of the root. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: hastening | es: anhelando | fr: aspirer | de: [שואף] Eccl 1:5

שָׁאַף H7602b V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 1cs (6×)

To trample, crush, pursue aggressively; to swallow up, devour

This second root שָׁאַף (II) is distinct from the more common שׁאף meaning 'to pant' or 'gasp.' BDB connects it to שׁוף ('to crush, bruise'), and its occurrences cluster in psalms of lament and prophetic judgment. In the Psalms, it describes hostile enemies who 'trample' the psalmist (Ps 56:1-2, 57:3), while Amos deploys it as a devastating indictment: Israel's powerful 'trample upon the poor' (Amos 2:7, 8:4). The single Ezekiel occurrence (36:3) shifts to a consumptive image — the land 'swallowed up' by surrounding nations. Spanish captures the violence precisely: 'los que pisotean' (those who trample) and 'y tragaron' (and they swallowed).

1. to trample, crush, pursue aggressively (5×) To trample upon, crush, or pursue with hostile aggressive intent, usually with a personal object. The psalmist cries that enemies 'trample me' all day long (Ps 56:1-2) and that his adversary sends forth 'the one trampling me' (Ps 57:3). Amos twice condemns the wealthy who 'trample' the poor and needy (2:7, 8:4). Spanish 'los que pisotean' (those who trample) and 'aplastaron' (they crushed) capture the physical violence, while Hindi 'kuchalte' (trample) confirms the core stomping/crushing semantics across language families. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: the-one-trampling-me, the-ones-trampling, trample-me | es: Los-que-pisotean, al-que-me-aplasta, aplastaron | fr: ceux-qui-aspirent, haleter | de: [השאפים], der-einer-trampling-mich, trample-mich Ps 56:1; Ps 56:2; Ps 57:3; Amos 2:7; Amos 8:4

2. to swallow up, devour (1×) To swallow up or devour, the consumptive act of being engulfed, used with the Qal infinitive absolute for rhetorical emphasis. In Ezekiel 36:3, the nations surrounding Israel 'swallowed up' (שָׁאַף) the land from every side. Spanish 'y tragaron' (and they swallowed) and the English gloss 'and-swallowing' both point to an ingesting metaphor distinct from the trampling violence of sense 1. This consumption image fits the broader Ezekiel 36 context of land devoured and dispossessed by hostile neighbors. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING

en: and-swallowing | es: y-tragaron | fr: [ושאף] | de: [ושאף] Ezek 36:3

שְׂאֹר H7603 N-ms (5×)

leaven; fermented dough agent, ritually prohibited during Passover and grain offerings

Se'or is the leavening agent, the fermented dough kept back to raise the next batch of bread. All five occurrences fall within ritual law: it must be removed from Israelite homes during the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Exod 12:15, 19; 13:7; Deut 16:4), and it is forbidden in grain offerings (Lev 2:11). The cross-linguistic consistency is striking: Spanish 'levadura,' French 'levain,' and German 'Sauerteig' all denote the same sourdough starter, confirming a single, stable sense across all attestations.

(5×) Leaven, the fermented dough starter used to raise bread. Every occurrence is cultic and prohibitive: leaven must be purged from homes during Passover week (Exod 12:15, 19; 13:7; Deut 16:4) and is banned from cereal offerings on the altar (Lev 2:11). Spanish 'levadura,' French 'levain,' and German 'Sauerteig' unanimously confirm a single concrete referent: the sourdough agent that causes fermentation. LEAVEN LEAVENED BREAD

en: leaven | es: levadura | fr: levain | de: Sauerteig Exod 12:15; Exod 12:19; Exod 13:7; Lev 2:11; Deut 16:4

שְׁאַר H7604 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (133×)

To remain, be left over, survive; as participle, the remnant or survivors; in Hifil, to leave remaining or spare.

Sha'ar is the Hebrew Bible's primary vocabulary for survival and remainder — what endures after destruction, departure, or divine judgment has swept through. In its Nifal stem, it describes the family members left after famine (Gen 47:18), the survivors of a military defeat, or the faithful remnant that persists after God's judgment. The participial form became virtually a technical theological term: 'the remnant' (hannish'arim) — those whom God preserved. The Hifil causative flips the perspective from the survivors to the one who determines survival: God or a conqueror deliberately 'leaves remaining' or 'spares.' Spanish quedar/dejar, Korean 남다/남기다, and Arabic baqiya/abqa all reflect this same Nifal-Hifil axis of passive survival versus active sparing.

1. remain, be left over (Nifal) (53×) Nifal intransitive: to remain, be left over, survive after others have perished, departed, or been consumed. The core sense at 53 occurrences, spanning narrative and prophetic literature alike. After the Flood, only Noah 'was left' (Gen 7:23); Joseph's grain is all that 'remains' in Egypt (Gen 47:18). Spanish quedaron and German uebriggeblieben both capture the stative aftermath — what is still standing when the dust settles. Arabic baqiya provides an exact semantic parallel, and Korean 남다 confirms the intransitive survival frame. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-she-was-left, remained, survived | es: quedaba, quedaron, quede | fr: et-elle-était-gauche, ils-resta, remained | de: blieb, sie-blieb, uebriggeblieben Gen 7:23; Gen 42:38; Gen 47:18; Exod 8:9; Exod 8:11

2. the remaining ones, remnant (Nifal participle) (42×) Nifal participle used substantivally: the remaining ones, the remnant, the survivors — a 42-occurrence cluster that became one of the Hebrew Bible's most theologically loaded constructions. In Gen 32:8 Jacob divides his camp so that 'the remaining company' might escape; in Isaiah and the prophetic books, 'the remnant' denotes those preserved through divine judgment (cf. the derivative noun she'erit). Spanish el-que-quedo ('the one who remained'), German der-bleibend, and Swahili waliobaki all substantivize the participle. The shift from verbal process to nominal category — from 'remaining' to 'the Remnant' — is a crucial lexicographic boundary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-ones-remaining, the-ones-remaining, the-remaining | es: el-que-quedó, la-que-queda, las-restantes | fr: et-reste, le-remaining, le-restant | de: der-bleibend, der-remaining, uebriggebliebener Gen 14:10; Gen 32:8; Exod 10:5; Lev 5:9; Lev 26:36

3. leave remaining, spare (Hifil) (38×) Hifil causative: to leave remaining, leave over, spare, let survive. At 38 occurrences this is the agent-oriented counterpart to senses 1-2: someone deliberately causes others to remain alive or causes something to be left over. In Num 21:35 Israel 'left no survivor'; in Deut 2:34 they 'left none remaining.' Spanish dejaron ('they left'), Korean 남기다 ('to cause to remain'), and Arabic abqa ('to make survive') all select causative morphology, confirming the stem-driven sense boundary. The theological import is heavy: God is often the implicit agent who 'leaves a remnant' (cf. Isa 1:9). LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: he-left, he-left-, left | es: dejaban, dejar, dejaron | fr: gauche, il-gauche, il-gauche- | de: er-linke, er-links, er-links- Exod 10:12; Num 9:12; Num 21:35; Deut 2:34; Deut 3:3

שְׁאָר H7605 Conj-w / N-msc (26×)

remnant, remainder, rest — what is left over of a people, quantity, or narrative record after depletion or judgment

She'ar is a noun meaning 'remnant, rest, remainder,' appearing 26 times with a semantic range that spans the mundane and the theological. In Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah it often serves a straightforward bookkeeping function: 'the rest of the acts of Solomon' (2 Chr 9:29), the remainder of silver from temple offerings (2 Chr 24:14), or 'the rest of the people' in post-exilic census lists (Neh 10:28; 11:1, 20). But in Isaiah the word takes on explosive theological significance. Isaiah's son is named Shear-jashub, 'a remnant shall return' (Isa 7:3), and the prophet develops a doctrine of the faithful remnant that survives divine judgment: the remnant of trees so few a child could count them (Isa 10:19), the utter erasure of 'name and remnant' from Babylon (Isa 14:22), the pitiable remainder of Moab's glory (Isa 16:14), and the last archers of Kedar (Isa 21:17). Zephaniah likewise warns that God will cut off 'the remnant of Baal' from Jerusalem (Zeph 1:4). Spanish 'resto' and German 'Rest' mirror the word's duality of neutral remainder and theologically charged survivor.

remnant, remainder, rest (26×) What remains after a portion has been removed, used both for ordinary remainders (the rest of Solomon's acts, 2 Chr 9:29; leftover silver, 2 Chr 24:14; the rest of the returning community, Ezra 3:8; 4:3; Neh 10:28; 11:1) and for the theologically potent 'remnant' of divine judgment. Isaiah concentrates the theological weight: Shear-jashub ('a remnant shall return,' Isa 7:3), the decimated forest remnant (Isa 10:19), Babylon stripped of 'name and remnant' (Isa 14:22), and the fading glory of Moab (Isa 16:14). Zephaniah extends the motif to Baal worship itself (Zeph 1:4). The duality of mundane remainder and prophetic remnant runs through all 26 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-remnant, and-remnant-of, and-rest-of | es: Resto, Y-resto-de, resto | fr: et-le-reste, et-reste, reste | de: Rest, [ושאר], [שאר] 1Chr 11:8; 1Chr 16:41; 2Chr 9:29; 2Chr 24:14; Ezra 3:8

שְׁאָר H7606 Conj-w / N-msc (12×)

Rest, remainder — an Aramaic noun for what is left over; peoples, companions, or kingdoms in Ezra and Daniel

The Aramaic noun שְׁאָר (she'ar) means 'rest, remainder, the rest of,' functioning as the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew שְׁאָר. It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra, it frequently designates the remaining peoples settled in Samaria by the Assyrians — 'the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Osnappar deported' (Ezra 4:9-10), and is used in official correspondence to address 'the rest of their companions' (Ezra 4:17; 7:18). In Daniel, it describes what remains of a destroyed kingdom: the fourth beast devoured and trampled 'the rest' (Dan 7:7, 12, 19). Spanish 'resto/demás' and French 'reste' both convey the partitive sense.

rest, remainder (12×) The remainder, the rest, what is left over — an Aramaic administrative and narrative term for the remaining portion of a group, territory, or kingdom. In Ezra's official correspondence, it designates the other peoples settled in Samaria (Ezra 4:9-10), addresses 'the rest of their companions' in letters to and from the Persian court (Ezra 4:17; 7:18), and refers to remaining supplies for temple service (Ezra 6:16; 7:20). In Daniel's visions, it describes the residual kingdoms trampled by the fourth beast (Dan 7:7, 12, 19). Spanish 'resto' and German 'Rest' both translate the partitive sense directly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-rest-of, and-the-remainder, and-the-rest-of | es: Y-resto-de, con-el-resto-de, el-resto-de | fr: et-le-reste, et-reste, reste | de: [ושאר], [ושארא], [שאר] Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:17

שְׁאֵר H7607 N-msc (16×)

Flesh: bodily tissue; a close blood relative or kinsman; food or sustenance owed to a dependent.

The Hebrew noun she'er occupies a surprisingly compact but layered semantic space where the physical body, kinship bonds, and legal obligations converge. In its most concrete use, it names the flesh of the body — the tissue that clothes the bones and sustains life — as when the psalmist confesses that 'my flesh and my heart may fail' (Ps 73:26) or when God rained 'flesh like dust' upon the camp (Ps 78:27). But she'er also names the bond of shared blood: Leviticus 18 repeatedly uses it to identify the 'near kin' with whom marriage is forbidden, reflecting the ancient intuition that relatives are literally 'of one flesh.' Spanish carne and French chair mirror this body-to-kinship metaphor naturally, while the single legal occurrence in Exodus 21:10 — a husband's obligation to provide a wife's 'food' — shows the word narrowing to mean the sustenance that flesh requires.

1. flesh, body (8×) The physical flesh or body of a person, denoting the corporeal substance that covers the bones and pulsates with life. Eight occurrences cluster in poetic and prophetic texts: the psalmist declares that both 'my flesh and my heart fail, but God is the strength of my heart' (Ps 73:26), and God provides meat for Israel in the wilderness — 'flesh like dust, winged birds like the sand of the seas' (Ps 78:27). In Micah 3:2-3, the prophet accuses leaders of stripping flesh from the people as butchers strip meat from bone. Spanish carne, French chair, and German Fleisch all render this with standard body-tissue vocabulary, while the parallel with basar in Proverbs 5:11 confirms she'er as a near-synonym for the physical body. FLESH AND BODY

en: and-my-flesh, and-their-flesh, and-your-body | es: carne, carne-de, carne-de-él | fr: [ושאר], chair, et-chair | de: Rest, [ושאר], [ושארך] Ps 73:26; Ps 78:20; Ps 78:27; Prov 5:11; Prov 11:17

2. blood relative, near kin (7×) A close blood relative or near kinsman — one who is 'of the same flesh' — used especially in the Levitical regulations governing forbidden sexual unions and priestly mourning rights. Seven occurrences concentrate in Leviticus 18, 20, and 21, where the phrase she'er avikha ('the flesh-kin of your father,' Lev 18:12-13) defines the degrees of kinship within which marriage is prohibited. Spanish pariente cercano, French parent proche, and German Verwandter all shift from body vocabulary to explicit kinship terminology, confirming that translators recognize a distinct relational sense. The connection between flesh and kinship is not merely metaphorical — it encodes a worldview where family bonds are as tangible as the body itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-relative, relative-his, relative-of | es: a-pariente-de-él, carne-de, pariente-cercano | fr: relative-de, relative-son, son-relative | de: relative-sein, relative-von, sein-relative Lev 18:6; Lev 18:12; Lev 18:13; Lev 20:19; Lev 21:2

3. food, sustenance (1×) Food or sustenance owed to a dependent, specifically the provision a husband must guarantee a wife alongside clothing and conjugal rights. This rare sense appears only once, in Exodus 21:10, where the law stipulates that if a man takes a second wife, 'her food (she'arah), her clothing, and her marital rights he shall not diminish.' Spanish alimento, French nourriture, and German Nahrung all render this with straightforward food vocabulary. The semantic logic connects to the bodily sense: she'er-as-sustenance is what the flesh needs to survive, making this a metonymic extension from body to bodily need. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: her-food | es: su-alimento | fr: sa-nourriture | de: ihr-Nahrung Exod 21:10

שְׁאֵר H7608 N-fs (1×)

flesh, meat; near kin, blood relative

This noun means flesh, used both literally (as meat or bodily flesh) and figuratively (as blood relation). In Leviticus 18:17 it appears in the prohibition against marrying both a woman and her daughter: 'they are her near relatives'—literally 'her flesh.' The term emphasizes the physical, biological connection—shared blood and kinship. The marriage prohibitions in Leviticus 18 repeatedly invoke this language of 'flesh,' treating sexual relations with close kin as violations of fundamental boundaries.

(1×) Leviticus 18:17 forbids marrying a woman and her daughter because 'they are her near relatives'—literally 'they are her flesh.' The phrase establishes blood connection as the reason for prohibition: these relationships are too close, the shared kinship creating incestuous overlap. Spanish 'su carne' (her flesh) preserves the literal Hebrew. This usage extends 'flesh' from physical substance to kinship category, treating biological connection as defining relational boundaries. The flesh-language makes abstract kinship viscerally concrete. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: relatives-her | es: su-carne | fr: relatives-sa | de: relatives-ihr Lev 18:17

שְׁאֵרָה H7609 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sheerah (personal name: daughter of Ephraim or his descendant)

This is a feminine personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 7:24, identifying a daughter (or female descendant) of Ephraim who built three towns: Lower and Upper Beth-horon and Uzzen-sheerah. She is the only woman in biblical genealogies credited with founding cities, making her remarkable. The name may be related to the word for 'flesh' or 'kinship,' though its precise etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint struggled with this name, rendering it variously.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 7:24 identifies Sheerah as Ephraim's daughter who 'built Lower and Upper Beth-horon, and Uzzen-sheerah.' The multilingual glosses transliterate: Spanish 'Seera,' English 'Sheerah.' This unique notice makes Sheerah extraordinary in biblical record —a woman credited with founding multiple settlements. Whether biological daughter or more distant descendant is debated, but the text honors her as builder and founder. Uzzen-sheerah ('ear/corner of Sheerah') perpetuates her name geographically, rare recognition for a woman's accomplishment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sheerah | es: Seera | fr: [שארה] | de: [שארה] 1Chr 7:24

שְׁאָר יָשׁוּב H7610 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shear-jashub (symbolic name: 'a remnant shall return')

This is the symbolic name of Isaiah's son, appearing in Isaiah 7:3 where God commands the prophet to take this son when confronting King Ahaz. The name means 'a remnant shall return,' embodying Isaiah's theology of judgment and hope—though most will be destroyed, a faithful remnant will survive and return. The child becomes a walking prophecy, his very name proclaiming both threat and promise every time it's spoken. Such naming makes theology incarnate.

(1×) Isaiah 7:3 introduces 'Shear-jashub your son' whom Isaiah must bring to meet Ahaz during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis. The name means 'a remnant shall return,' a compressed theology: judgment will come but not total annihilation; a purified remnant will survive. The multilingual glosses preserve the Hebrew name untranslated (Spanish 'Shear-Yashub'), recognizing it as proper name with embedded meaning. The son's presence physically embodies the prophetic message: faith or fear? The name confronts Ahaz with both warning and hope. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shear-Jashub | es: y-Shear-Yashub | fr: [ושאר ישוב] | de: [ושאר ישוב] Isa 7:3

שְׁאֵרִית H7611 Prep-l / N-fs (66×)

Remnant, remainder; the surviving portion of a people after judgment, or what is left over of things.

Denotes what survives or remains after loss, destruction, or division. In prophetic literature, it carries enormous theological weight: the she'erith of Israel is the faithful core that endures exile and judgment to become the seed of future restoration. Micah promises that 'the remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations' (Mic 5:7), while Jeremiah warns that even the remnant of Judah who fled to Egypt will perish (Jer 44:28). Beyond its dominant use for surviving people, the word occasionally describes leftover material – the rest of a piece of wood from which an idol was carved (Isa 44:17).

1. remnant of a people (64×) The surviving portion of a people or nation after calamity. This theologically loaded sense accounts for nearly all occurrences, appearing across the prophets as a motif of both judgment and hope. Translations uniformly employ 'remnant' language – Spanish remanente-de, French reste, German Rest – signaling a recognized technical term. Joseph tells his brothers that God sent him ahead to preserve a she'erith on earth (Gen 45:7).

Isaiah and Jeremiah use it for the survivors of exile (2 Kgs 19:31; Jer 40:11), while Amos and Zephaniah warn that judgment may leave no remnant at all. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: remnant-of, rest-of, the-remnant-of | es: el-remanente-de, remanente-de, resto-de | fr: reste | de: Rest Gen 45:7; 2Kgs 19:31; 1Chr 4:43; 1Chr 12:39; 2Chr 34:9

2. remainder of things (2×) The remaining portion of non-personal things or material. In Isaiah 44:17, a man burns part of a log for cooking and with the she'erith ('rest of it') carves an idol – a biting irony. In Jeremiah 15:9, the mother of seven breathes her last and her 'remnant' (her remaining life force or offspring) is given to the sword. Spanish y-resto-su and German und-Rest match the English 'rest of it,' treating the word as a simple quantitative remainder rather than a theological survivor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: And-the-rest-of-it, and-their-remnant | es: y-resto-su, y-su-resto | fr: et-reste | de: und-Rest Isa 44:17; Jer 15:9

שְׁאָת H7612 Art / N-fs (1×)

devastation, din of battle (uncertain meaning)

This noun's meaning is disputed—possibly devastation or the din/tumult of battle. It appears in Lamentations 3:47, paired with 'ruin' in the poet's lament: 'Terror and the pit have come upon us, devastation and destruction.' The parallelism with 'ruin' suggests catastrophic disaster. Some derive it from roots meaning 'battle-din' or 'uproar,' others from roots meaning 'desolation.' Either sense fits Lamentations' context of Jerusalem's fall. The uncertainty reflects textual difficulty and the word's rarity.

(1×) Lamentations 3:47 pairs this term with 'ruin' in catalog of disasters: 'fear and the pit, devastation and destruction' (or possibly 'tumult and ruin'). The definite article marks it as specific catastrophe—THE devastation. Whether understanding it as 'battle-din' (the terrible noise of conquest) or 'devastation' (the resulting desolation), the context is Jerusalem's destruction. The poet piles up disaster-terms, and this word—whatever its precise nuance—adds to the overwhelming sense of comprehensive calamity. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: the-devastation | es: la-devastación | fr: [השאת] | de: [השאת] Lam 3:47

שְׁאֵת H7613 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (14×)

Exaltation, dignity; a raised swelling on the skin (medical); the act of rising or lifting up.

Derived from the root nasa' (to lift, carry), this noun spans the physical and the exalted. In the priestly legislation of Leviticus 13-14, it denotes a raised swelling on the skin – a clinical term in the diagnostic vocabulary of purity laws, rendered 'hinchazion' in Spanish and 'Schwellung' in German. In poetry and prophecy, it ascends to dignity and majesty: the firstborn's 'preeminence' (Gen 49:3), the terror of God's 'exaltation' (Job 13:11; 31:23), and the self-derived authority of the Chaldeans (Hab 1:7). Two passages preserve the verbal force of the root itself – a 'lifting up' (Gen 4:7) and a 'rising' that terrifies the mighty (Job 41:25).

1. swelling, skin lesion (7×) A raised swelling or skin eruption, used as a technical priestly-medical term in Leviticus 13-14 for diagnosing skin diseases. Listed alongside sapachath and bahereth as the three types of suspicious marks (Lev 13:2). Spanish 'hinchazion,' French 'enflure,' and German 'Schwellung' all render the physical, dermatological meaning consistently across seven occurrences. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY

en: and-for-the-swelling, in-the-swelling, swelling | es: Y-para-la-hinchazón, en-la-hinchazón, hinchazón | fr: dans-le-enflure, enflure, enflure- | de: Schwellung, Schwellung-, Schwellung-von Lev 13:2; Lev 13:10; Lev 13:19; Lev 13:28

2. dignity, majesty, exaltation (5×) Dignity, majesty, or exaltation – the abstract elevation of rank, honor, or divine splendor. Jacob blesses Reuben as 'preeminent in dignity' (Gen 49:3); the psalmist's enemies seek to topple someone from their 'exaltation' (Ps 62:4); the Chaldeans' authority is 'from themselves' (Hab 1:7). French 'grandeur' and Spanish 'majestad/dignidad' capture this noble register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-His-majesty, and-his-dignity, dignity | es: Su-majestad, de-su-dignidad, dignidad | fr: de-élévation, dignity, et-grandeur | de: [ומשאתו], [ושאתו], [שאתו] Gen 49:3; Job 13:11; Job 31:23; Ps 62:4; Hab 1:7

3. lifting up, rising (2×) The act of rising or being lifted up, preserving the dynamic verbal force of the root nasa'. Genesis 4:7 speaks of a 'lifting up' (whether of countenance or of forgiveness remains debated), while Job 41:25 describes Leviathan's 'rising' that makes the mighty afraid. French 'exaltation' and German 'Erhebung' retain this active, eventive quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: At-his-rising, lifting-up | es: De-su-levantarse, levantar | fr: de-son-exaltation-lui, élevant-en-haut | de: Erhebung, [משתו] Gen 4:7; Job 41:25

שְׁבָא H7614 N-proper-ms (23×)

Sheba — a proper name for several persons and the wealthy Arabian kingdom famed for trade, gold, and incense

Sheba (שְׁבָא) refers both to individuals in the genealogies and, more prominently, to the prosperous kingdom in southwestern Arabia (modern Yemen). The Queen of Sheba's visit to Solomon (1 Kgs 10:1-13) became legendary for its display of wealth, wisdom, and spice caravans. Prophetically, Sheba represents distant commercial splendor: its traders deal in gold (Ps 72:15), frankincense (Jer 6:20), and precious stones (Ezek 27:22). Isaiah envisions Sheba's caravans streaming to Jerusalem in eschatological pilgrimage (Isa 60:6). Job's 'caravans of Sheba' symbolize dashed expectations in the desert (Job 6:19). The genealogies trace Sheba through both Hamitic (Gen 10:7) and Semitic (Gen 10:28; 25:3) lines, reflecting the complex ethnic landscape of ancient Arabia.

Sheba (person/place name) (23×) Proper name for persons and a wealthy Arabian territory. Genealogically traced through Cush (Gen 10:7), Joktan (Gen 10:28), and Abraham via Keturah (Gen 25:3). The famed kingdom whose queen visited Solomon (1 Kgs 10:1-13). Prophets highlight its gold (Ps 72:15), frankincense (Jer 6:20; Isa 60:6), and trade goods (Ezek 27:22). Job's 'caravans of Sheba' symbolize dashed hopes (Job 6:19). BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES

en: Sheba, Sheva, from-Sheba | es: Saba, Sabá, Seba | fr: Sheba, Séba, [משבא] | de: Scheba, Sheba, [משבא] Gen 10:7; Gen 10:28; Gen 25:3; 1Kgs 10:1; 1Kgs 10:4

שְׁבָאִי H7615 Prep-l / N-proper-mp (1×)

Sabeans (gentilic: people from Sheba, in Arabia)

This gentilic plural refers to the Sabeans, people from Sheba in southwestern Arabia (modern Yemen), appearing in Joel 3:8 in an oracle of judgment: Israel's oppressors will be sold 'to the Sabeans, to a nation far away.' The Sabeans were known for trade, especially in spices and precious goods. The irony: those who enslaved Israel will themselves be sold to distant traders. The phrase 'far away' emphasizes exile and distance—the oppressors will experience the displacement they inflicted.

(1×) Joel 3:8 (English 4:8) declares that Judah and Jerusalem will sell their enemies 'to the Sabeans, to a nation far away'—the slave trade reversed. Spanish 'a sabeos' (to Sabeans), French 'Sabéen' preserve the gentilic designation. The Sabeans, from southwestern Arabia, were merchants and traders; being sold to them means entering the international slave trade, experiencing the commodity status Israel suffered. The geographic distance ('far away') compounds the judgment: total removal from homeland, ironic reversal of the scattering inflicted on God's people. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Sabeans | es: a-sabeos | fr: Sabéen | de: [לשבאים] Joel 3:8

שְׁבָרִים H7616 N-mp (1×)

splinters, fragments, broken pieces

This plural noun probably means splinters or fragments, appearing in Hosea 8:6 in judgment against the golden calf of Samaria: 'it shall be broken in pieces' (literally 'it shall become splinters'). The image is of complete fragmentation—the idol reduced to shards and fragments, utterly destroyed. The term evokes not just breaking but disintegration into many small pieces. The golden calf, crafted by human hands, will be smashed into splinters, demonstrating its utter powerlessness.

(1×) Hosea 8:6 pronounces doom on Samaria's calf-idol: 'it shall become splinters'—complete fragmentation. Spanish 'pedazos' (pieces/fragments) captures the multiplication of broken parts. The image reverses creation: what craftsmen assembled will be shattered into countless fragments. The splinters represent both physical destruction and theological point—this 'god' crafted from precious metal has no divine substance, just material that breaks. The calf's fate as splinters mocks the worship that treated metal as deity. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: splinters | es: pedazos | fr: captif | de: [שבבים] Hos 8:6

שָׁבָה H7617 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (47×)

To take captive, carry away as a prisoner; as participle, a captor or a captive person.

At the heart of Israel's vocabulary of exile and warfare, this verb names the brutal act of seizing people and removing them from their land. From the earliest conquest narratives (Num 21:1) through the Babylonian deportation, it traces the arc of military capture and forced displacement. The Nifal passive reverses the perspective, voicing the anguish of those taken. Its participial forms crystallize into nouns: the captor who drags away, and the captive who is dragged. Spanish distinguishes 'cautivaron' (they took captive) from 'cautivos' (captives), while French shifts from 'emmener captif' (carry off captive) to 'captifs' (prisoners), mapping the verb-to-noun gradient precisely.

1. take captive, carry away (27×) Qal active finite: to seize persons and carry them away as captives in war or raid. This is the core military action, used of armies capturing populations during conquest (Num 21:1; 1 Sam 30:2) and of Babylon deporting Judah (Jer 41:10). Spanish 'capturaron / cautivaron' and French 'emmener captif' consistently encode the forcible removal. The verb often pairs with accusative objects naming women, children, or entire populations. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: and-captured, and-carried-away, and-carry-them-captive | es: Y-capturaron, Y-cautivaron, Y-llevaron-cautivas | fr: emmener-captif, et-captura, et-emmener-captif | de: gefangenfuehren, nahm-Gefangener, und-du-nehmen-captive Gen 34:29; Num 21:1; Num 24:22; Num 31:9; Deut 21:10

2. captor, one who takes captive (10×) Qal active participle used as an agentive substantive: captor, one who holds captives. In the prayers of Solomon (1 Kgs 8:46-50) and the Chronicler (2 Chr 6:36; 30:9), Israel asks mercy 'before their captors.' English 'captors,' Spanish 'cautivadores,' and French 'leurs capteurs' all nominalize the agent. The participial form freezes the action into a social role: the one who has power over the exiled. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: captors, of-their-captors, our-captors | es: captores-de-ellos, captores-sus, cautivadores | fr: emmener-captif, emmener-en-captivité, leur-captors | de: gefangenfuehren, ihr-captors, unser-captors 1Kgs 8:46; 1Kgs 8:47; 1Kgs 8:50; 2Chr 6:36; 2Chr 30:9

3. be taken captive (8×) Nifal passive: to be taken captive, to suffer capture. This sense voices the experience of the victim rather than the aggressor. Lot 'was taken captive' (Gen 14:14); David's families 'had been taken captive' (1 Sam 30:3, 5). French 'ils furent pris captif' and Spanish 'fue llevado cautivo' employ passive constructions that mirror the Hebrew Nifal. The sense also extends to livestock in legal contexts (Exod 22:10). TAKE CAPTIVE

en: is-captured, is-taken-captive, taken-captive | es: es-llevado-cautivo, fue-cautivado, fue-llevado-cautivo | fr: emmener-captif, est-captura, ils-furent-pris-captif- | de: gefangen-war, gefangenfuehren, genommen-Gefangener Gen 14:14; Exod 22:10; 1Sam 30:3; 1Sam 30:5; 1Kgs 8:47

4. captive, prisoner (2×) Qal passive participle used as a substantive noun: a captive, prisoner. In Gen 31:26 Laban accuses Jacob of leading his daughters away 'like captives of the sword,' and Isa 61:1 promises liberty 'to captives.' Spanish 'cautivos' and French 'captifs' treat these as settled nouns rather than verbal forms, confirming the fully nominalized status of the participle in these occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-captives-of, to-captives | es: a-los-cautivos, como-cautivas-de | fr: comme-captifs-de, emmener-captif | de: gefangenfuehren, wie-Gefangene Gen 31:26; Isa 61:1

שֹׁבוֹ H7618 N-ms (2×)

agate; a semi-precious stone used in the high priest's breastplate

A noun denoting a precious stone, traditionally identified as agate. Exodus 28:19 and 39:12 list it among the twelve stones in the high priest's breastplate, alongside 'jacinth' and 'amethyst' in the third row. The Septuagint and Vulgate agree on 'agate,' though the exact mineralogical identification is uncertain. The stone's value and beauty made it suitable for sacred vestments.

(2×) Identifies a gemstone set in the high priest's breastplate (Exod 28:19; 39:12), positioned in the third row with jacinth (לֶשֶׁם) and amethyst (אַחְלָמָה). The Assyrian cognate šubû, along with the Septuagint (ἀχάτης) and Vulgate (achates), support the traditional rendering 'agate,' though precise mineralogical certainty is elusive. The stone's inclusion among the twelve tribal gems underscores its value and beauty. Modern translations uniformly render it 'agate' (Spanish ágata, French/German Achat), preserving ancient identification even as scholars debate the exact species. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: agate | es: ágata | fr: agate | de: Achat Exod 28:19; Exod 39:12

שְׁבוּאֵל H7619 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Shebuel / Shubael; a Levitical name borne by a Gershomite treasury chief and a Hemanite musician.

This name appears in two spelling variants, Shebuel (שְׁבוּאֵל) and Shubael (שׁוּבָאֵל), both referring to Levitical figures in David's administrative lists. One is a descendant of Gershom son of Moses, appointed chief officer over the temple treasuries (1 Chr 23:16; 26:24). The other is a son of Heman the musician, assigned to a division of temple singers (1 Chr 25:4, 20). The Septuagint consistently renders both as Σουβαηλ, treating the variants as a single name. French and German leave the Hebrew forms untransliterated in several occurrences.

Shubael / Shebuel (proper name) (6×) A Levitical proper name with variant spellings Shebuel and Shubael, designating two individuals in David's temple administration. The first is a Gershomite descendant of Moses who served as chief officer over the treasuries (1 Chr 23:16; 26:24). The second is a son of Heman assigned to a course of temple musicians (1 Chr 25:4, 20). The spelling alternation (שְׁבוּאֵל / שׁוּבָאֵל) is characteristic of the Chronicler's sources, and the Septuagint uniformly reads Σουβαηλ. English glosses alternate between 'Shevuel,' 'Shebuel,' and 'Shubael,' while Spanish preserves 'Sebuel' and 'Shubael.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: And-Shevuel, Shevuel, Shuvael | es: Sebuel, Shebuel, Shubael | fr: [וְשׁבוּאֵל], [שׁבוּאֵל], [שׁוּבָאֵל] | de: [וְשׁבוּאֵל], [שׁבוּאֵל], [שׁוּבָאֵל] 1Chr 23:16; 1Chr 24:20; 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:20

שָׁבוּעַ H7620 Art / N-mp (20×)

A period of seven days (week) or seven years; also the Feast of Weeks (Shavuot/Pentecost), celebrating the wheat harvest Derived from the root for 'seven,' shavua is the basic Hebrew term for a week — a cycle of seven days anchored in creation's rhythm. In Daniel's apocalyptic visions, the same word stretches to mean a 'heptad' of seven years, creating the famous 'seventy weeks' prophecy (Dan 9:24-27). The plural form also names the Feast of Weeks (Shavuot), counted seven weeks after Passover and marking the wheat harvest — the festival later known in Greek as Pentecost. Spanish 'semana' and French 'semaine' consistently reflect the seven-day sense, while festival references retain the distinct proper-noun character.

1. week, period of seven (17×) A period of seven days, the basic week. Used for the wedding week in Genesis 29:27-28, the purification period in Leviticus 12:5, and the countdown for the Feast of Weeks in Deuteronomy 16:9. In Daniel's prophetic-apocalyptic usage, the unit expands to heptads of seven years (Dan 9:24-27, 10:2-3), where 'weeks of days' specifies literal weeks in contrast. Spanish 'semanas' and German 'Wochen' consistently render this temporal sense. SABBATH AND WEEK

en: and-sevens, seven, sevens | es: Semanas, dos-semanas, la-semana | fr: [השבעות], [שבעות], deux-semaines | de: Woche, Wochen, [שבעות] Gen 29:27; Gen 29:28; Exod 34:22; Lev 12:5; Deut 16:9

2. Feast of Weeks (Shavuot) (3×) The Feast of Weeks (Shavuot), a pilgrimage festival celebrated seven weeks after the offering of the first sheaf, marking the wheat harvest (Num 28:26, Deut 16:10, 16). This is one of the three annual pilgrimages alongside Passover and Tabernacles. Multilingual glosses show a tendency to transliterate or capitalize ('Weeks') rather than translate, reflecting its proper-noun status as a named festival — the same celebration later called Pentecost in the Greek-speaking world. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Weeks, in-your-weeks, the-Weeks | es: en-semanas-de-vosotros, las-semanas, semanas | fr: Weeks, dans-ton-semaines, le-Weeks | de: Weeks, der-Weeks, in-dein-Wochen Num 28:26; Deut 16:10; Deut 16:16

שְׁבוּעָה H7621 N-fpc (30×)

An oath or sworn promise, often invoking God as witness; rarely a curse or self-imprecation.

A solemn sworn commitment, frequently appearing in covenantal contexts where God is invoked as guarantor. The Hebrew שְׁבוּעָה covers the full spectrum from personal promises (Gen 24:8) to national covenants (Gen 26:3) and priestly adjurations (Num 5:21). Spanish "juramento" and German "Eid" consistently render the promissory sense, while in one striking passage (Isa 65:15), the oath becomes a byword of cursing — a name left behind as a formula of imprecation.

1. oath, sworn promise (29×) The dominant sense (29x): a solemn vow or sworn commitment invoking divine witness. Translations uniformly treat this as a binding promise — Spanish "juramento," German "Eid," French "serment." It covers oaths of friendship (2 Sam 21:7), covenantal pledges (Gen 26:3), oaths of innocence (Exod 22:11), and vows alongside נֶדֶר (Num 30:3). The phrase שְׁבֻעַת יהוה marks oaths sworn to or before the LORD. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: from-your-oath, oath, oath-of | es: con-juramento, de-tu-juramento, el-juramento | fr: [השבועה], avec-serment, avec-un-serment | de: Eid, Eid-von, [השבועה] Gen 24:8; Gen 26:3; Exod 22:11; Lev 5:4; Num 5:21

2. curse, imprecation (1×) A rare but distinct sense (1x at Isa 65:15): the oath formula takes on the character of a curse or imprecation. God declares that the names of the disobedient will be left as a שְׁבוּעָה — a formula of malediction for the chosen to invoke. Spanish renders this "para maldición" (for a curse), revealing the shift from promissory oath to self-imprecatory curse. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: for-an-oath | es: para-maldición | fr: [לשבועה] | de: [לשבועה] Isa 65:15

שְׁבִית H7622 N-fsc / 2ms (41×)

Captivity, exile; or fortune/condition, especially in the idiom 'restore the captivity/fortunes of'

A noun with two related but distinguishable meanings that have generated centuries of scholarly debate. In most occurrences it straightforwardly denotes captivity or exile – the state of being taken away from one's homeland, as when Deuteronomy 30:3 promises that God will 'return your captivity.' But in several key passages, particularly where the subject has never been literally exiled, the meaning broadens to 'fortune' or 'condition,' as when God restores the fortunes of Job (Job 42:10) after suffering rather than exile. The famous idiom shub shebut ('restore the captivity/fortunes') is the interpretive crux: does God reverse exile, or reverse misfortune more broadly? Often both resonate simultaneously.

1. captivity, exile (35×) The state of captivity or exile, being taken away and held in a foreign land. Spanish 'cautividad de' and French 'captivite' directly name this condition. The word appears across the major restoration promises: Deuteronomy 30:3 ('the LORD your God will restore your captivity'), Psalm 126:4 ('restore our captivity like streams in the Negev'), and the prophetic oracles where God promises to turn back the captivity of Israel, Judah, Moab, Ammon, and Egypt (Jer 30:3; 48:47; 49:6,39; Ezek 29:14). Psalm 85:1 celebrates that God has already 'returned the captivity of Jacob,' looking back on a historical restoration from exile. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (the-captivity-of), captivity-of, captivity-of- | es: (cautividad-de), [cautividad-de], cautividad-de | fr: captivité | de: Gefangenschaft, [שבות] Deut 30:3; Job 42:10; Ps 85:1; Ps 126:4

2. fortune, condition (6×) The general fortune or condition of a people, extending beyond literal captivity to encompass overall well-being or distress. This sense emerges clearly in Job 42:10, where God restores Job's 'fortunes' – Job was never exiled but rather afflicted with suffering. English renders this as 'fortunes,' Spanish as 'fortuna,' distinguishing it from the captivity sense. Psalm 14:7 and 53:6 pray for God to restore Israel's 'fortunes' in contexts that may predate the exile. Lamentations 2:14 accuses false prophets of failing to 'restore your fortunes,' where the meaning encompasses national reversal of disaster rather than return from geographical exile. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (fortunes-of), (their-fortunes), (your-fortunes) | es: (Q:fortuna-de), (tu-cautiverio), cautividad-de | fr: (שבות), captivité | de: [(שבות)], [(שבותך)], [(שביתם)] Job 42:10; Ps 14:7; Ps 53:6; Lam 2:14; Zeph 2:7

שָׁבַח H7623a V-Piel-Imperf-2ms / 3mp (3×)

still, calm, soothe—to quiet waves, emotions, or turmoil

This Piel verb means to still, calm, or bring peace to something turbulent. The Psalms use it for God stilling the roaring waves (65:7, 89:9), while Proverbs 29:11 applies it to controlling one's temper. The term suggests active intervention to bring quietness, whether calming literal storm waves or metaphorical emotional turmoil. It pictures divine power over chaos and human self-control over inner agitation.

(3×) Two occurrences describe God stilling the sea (Psalms 65:7 and 89:9), using parallel imagery of divine sovereignty over chaotic waters. Proverbs 29:11 shifts to calming one's spirit or temper. Spanish 'calmar' (to calm) and French 'calmer' align across uses. The psalmic contexts connect this stilling power to creation theology, where God subdues primordial chaos, while Proverbs democratizes the concept to personal emotional regulation. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: calms-it, still-them, who-stills | es: El-que-calma, las-calmas, lo-calma | fr: calmer, de-calmer, louer | de: [ישבחנה], der-stills, noch-ihnen Ps 65:7; Ps 89:9; Prov 29:11

שָׁבַח H7623b V-Piel-Imperf-3mp / 2ms (8×)

To praise, laud, or extol (Piel); in the Hitpael, to glory in or boast about something.

A late Aramaism (compare Aramaic/Syriac shbach, 'praise') used almost exclusively in Psalms and Ecclesiastes. In its Piel form, it is a word of worship — 'praise him, all you peoples!' (Ps 117:1), where it stands alongside hallel as a near-synonym for liturgical acclamation. The Ecclesiastes usages add a surprising secular note: Qoheleth 'commends' mirth (Eccl 8:15) and 'praises' the dead (Eccl 4:2). The Hitpael reflexive shifts the focus inward — 'to glory in your holy name' (Ps 106:47 = 1 Chr 16:35) — where Spanish 'gloriarnos' and French 'à louer' both capture the self-directed exultation that distinguishes boasting from outward-directed praise.

1. praise, laud (6×) Piel: to praise, laud, or extol — predominantly directed toward God in liturgical contexts. Psalm 117:1 calls all nations to 'praise him' (parallel to hallel), Psalm 63:3 declares that 'lips shall praise you,' and Psalm 145:4 promises that one generation 'shall laud' God's works to the next. In Ecclesiastes, the same verb takes on a wisdom-literature flavor: commending mirth as the best thing under the sun (Eccl 8:15) or praising the already-dead over the living (Eccl 4:2). Spanish 'alabar' and French 'louer' consistently select standard praise vocabulary. PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: and-I-praised, extol-Him, praise | es: Alaba, Y-alabé, alabará | fr: et-louer, louer | de: Lobpreis, [ושבח], [ושבחתי] Ps 63:3; Ps 117:1; Ps 145:4; Ps 147:12; Eccl 4:2

2. glory in, boast (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to glory in, boast, or take pride in something — with the preposition be- marking the object of boasting. In the doxological conclusion of Psalm 106:47 (= 1 Chr 16:35), the community asks to be gathered 'that we may glory in your holy name.' The Greek Septuagint renders this with (el)kauchasthai, 'to boast,' and Spanish 'para gloriarnos' (that we may glory) confirms the reflexive, self-directed character. This sense stands apart from Piel 'praise' by its focus on the worshiper's own exultation rather than outward acclamation of God. PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: to-glory | es: para-gloriarnos | fr: [להשתבח], à-louer | de: [להשתבח], zu-Herrlichkeit 1Chr 16:35; Ps 106:47

שְׁבַח H7624 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to praise, laud (Aramaic Pael); glorify with words of honor, used of praising God or idols

This Aramaic verb in the Pael stem means to praise or laud, appearing exclusively in Daniel. Daniel praises the God of heaven for revealing Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:23), and the restored king praises the Most High after his humiliation (Dan 4:34, 37). The same verb is used negatively for praising idols of gold, silver, and stone (Dan 5:4, 23), creating a sharp theological contrast. The Spanish 'alabo/alabé' (I praise/I praised) and English 'praised/praising' consistently reflect doxological speech directed toward a deity.

(5×) To praise or laud, directing words of glorification toward a deity. Daniel praises the God of heaven for revealed wisdom (Dan 2:23), and Nebuchadnezzar praises the Most High after his restoration (Dan 4:34, 37). The same verb indicts Belshazzar for praising lifeless idols instead (Dan 5:4, 23), sharpening the contrast between true and false worship. Spanish 'alabar' and English 'praise' uniformly reflect this doxological speech act. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: I-praised, and-praised, and-praising | es: alabaste, alabo, alabé | fr: [ומשבח], [ושבחו], [משבח] | de: [ומשבח], [ושבחו], [משבח] Dan 2:23; Dan 4:34; Dan 4:37; Dan 5:4; Dan 5:23

שִׁבְטִ H7625 N-mpc (1×)

tribes (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew שֵׁבֶט)

This is the Aramaic plural construct for 'tribes,' appearing in Ezra 6:17 in the account of the second temple's dedication, where sacrifices are offered 'for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.' The Aramaic form appears in the Aramaic section of Ezra, though the concept mirrors Hebrew usage. The twelve-tribe structure remains fundamental even after exile, the ritual acknowledging all Israel despite the physical return of only some tribes.

(1×) Ezra 6:17 describes dedication sacrifices 'according to the number of the tribes of Israel'—twelve he-goats for twelve tribes. The multilingual glosses preserve the construct form: Spanish 'las tribus de' (the tribes of). This is Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'tribes,' appearing in Ezra's Aramaic section. The twelve-fold sacrifice honors the ideal of all Israel, even though only Judah, Benjamin, and some Levites returned. The ritual asserts continuity: despite exile and decimation, Israel remains the twelve-tribe people of covenant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-tribes-of | es: las-tribus-de | fr: [שבטי] | de: [שבטי] Ezra 6:17

שֵׁבֶט H7626 Prep-l / N-mpc / 3mp (190×)

Rod, staff, scepter, or tribe; a stick used for striking, discipline, or rule, and by metonymy a tribal division of Israel.

Shebet is a word whose physical and social meanings are bound together by a single image: the staff that a patriarch carries marks his authority over his clan. In its most concrete sense it is a rod for striking (Exod 21:20), disciplining a child (Prov 22:15), or beating grain (Isa 28:27). Lift that rod higher and it becomes a scepter—'the scepter shall not depart from Judah' (Gen 49:10)—the royal staff that signifies the right to rule. But the most frequent sense in the Hebrew Bible is tribal: the twelve shevatim of Israel, each 'branch' of Jacob's family tree. Arabic preserves both tracks: ʿaṣā (ʿaṣā, staff/rod) for the physical object, and سِبْط (sibṭ) as a direct cognate for the tribal sense, confirming that even in cognate Semitic languages the semantic split is ancient.

1. tribe, tribal division (144×) Tribe or tribal division of Israel: The most frequent sense by far—one of the socio-political units descended from the sons of Jacob. Genesis 49:28 concludes the tribal blessings with 'all these are the twelve tribes (shivtei) of Israel,' and the word appears constantly in Numbers, Joshua, and Judges for the allotment and governance of tribal territories. Arabic سِبْط (sibṭ, pl. أَسْبَاط asbāṭ) is a direct Semitic cognate sharing both form and meaning. Spanish 'tribus,' French 'tribus,' and German 'Stämme' all map this to the standard word for a lineage-based social division. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tribes-of | es: las-tribus-de, los-tribus-de, tribus-de | fr: tribus-de | de: Staemme-von, Stämme, der-Stämme Gen 49:16; Gen 49:28; Exod 24:4; Num 4:18; Num 18:2

2. rod, staff, stick (33×) Rod, staff, or stick (physical implement): A concrete object used for striking, disciplining, herding, or as a weapon. Exodus 21:20 legislates the case of a master striking a slave 'with a rod,' and Proverbs 22:15 prescribes the 'rod of discipline' for a child's heart. Second Samuel 23:21 describes Benaiah seizing a staff from an Egyptian warrior—shebet as an improvised weapon. German 'Stab' (staff), French 'bâton' (stick), and Arabic ʿaṣā (ʿaṣā, rod/staff) all reflect the plain physical object, distinguishing it clearly from the tribal meaning. RODS AND STAFFS

en: and-a-rod, and-the-rod-of, but-a-rod | es: Con-la-vara, cetro-de, cetro-del | fr: avec-le-bâton, avec-le-verge, bâton | de: Stab, Stamm, mit-der-Stab Exod 21:20; Lev 27:32; Judg 5:14; 2Sam 7:14; 2Sam 23:21

3. scepter, ruler's staff (12×) Scepter or ruler's staff: The rod elevated to a symbol of royal or governing authority. Genesis 49:10 prophesies that 'the scepter shall not depart from Judah,' and Numbers 24:17 envisions 'a scepter rising out of Israel.' Psalm 45:6 celebrates the king's 'scepter of uprightness.' The transition from a herder's staff to a sovereign's scepter is natural: the same stick that guides sheep becomes the emblem of one who governs people. Spanish 'cetro,' French 'sceptre,' and the context of royal oracles all mark this as a distinct metaphorical extension from the plain rod. RODS AND STAFFS

en: a-scepter, a-scepter-of, and-scepter-of | es: Vara-de, cetro, cetro-de | fr: et-tribu, scepter, tribu | de: Stab, Stab-, Staemme-von Gen 49:10; Num 24:17; Ps 45:6; Ps 125:3

4. (1×) Dart or lance (thrown weapon): A unique occurrence in 2 Samuel 18:14 where Joab takes three shevatim in his hand and thrusts them into the heart of Absalom hanging in the oak. The object here is neither a walking stick nor a symbol of authority but a pointed projectile—a dart or short lance. English 'darts,' Spanish 'dardos,' French 'darts,' and German 'darts' all agree on the thrown-weapon sense, and the context of battlefield violence confirms this specialized, rare extension of the rod into a lethal instrument. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14850 WITH 3 SENSES

en: darts | es: dardos | fr: darts | de: darts 2Sam 18:14

שְׁבָט H7627 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shebat (month name: eleventh month, February-March)

This is the name of the eleventh month in the post-exilic calendar, corresponding roughly to February-March. It appears in Zechariah 1:7, dating a vision 'on the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Shebat.' This is a Babylonian loan-word, adopted during the exile to replace earlier Hebrew month names. The etymology possibly relates to Akkadian words for striking or destroying (referring to destructive winter rains), though this remains uncertain.

(1×) Zechariah 1:7 dates a prophetic vision 'in the month Shebat, which is the eleventh month'—mid-winter in the second year of Darius. The multilingual glosses transliterate: Spanish 'Sebat,' French 'Schebat.' This Babylonian month name replaced earlier

Hebrew designations, linguistic evidence of exile's cultural impact. The month falls in winter's heart, when destructive rains dominate Palestine. Zechariah's visions come during this dark, wet season, the timing perhaps reflecting Israel's own dark season of subjugation and partial restoration. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: Shevat | es: Sebat | fr: Schebat | de: [שבט] Zech 1:7

שִׁבְי H7628a Prep-m (47×)

Captivity or captives; the state of being taken prisoner or the persons so taken, especially in contexts of exile and divine judgment.

A noun derived from the root שׁבה (to take captive), שִׁבְי covers both the abstract condition of captivity and the concrete group of persons captured. In prophetic literature it frequently describes Israel's exile — 'going into captivity' (Am 9:4; Jer 20:6) — while in narrative texts like Numbers 31 and Exodus 12:29 it points to actual prisoners of war. Spanish and French translations helpfully mirror this duality: 'cautiverio' vs. 'cautivos,' 'captivité' vs. 'captifs.' The preposition attached (בַּ/לְ) often signals whether the state or the people are in view.

1. captivity, state of exile (33×) The abstract condition of being held captive or living in exile. Hebrew pairs it with verbs of motion — הָלַךְ בַּשִּׁבְי 'went into captivity' (Am 9:4; Nah 3:10) — and locative prepositions. Spanish 'cautiverio' and German 'Gefangenschaft' consistently render this sense, distinguishing it from the concrete. Ezra 2:1 uses the construct בְּנֵי שִׁבְי to denote 'children of the captivity,' treating exile as a defining collective experience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-captivity, into-captivity, into-the-captivity | es: al-cautiverio, el-cautiverio, en-cautiverio | fr: captif, captivité, dans-captivité | de: Gefangene, die-Gefangenen, in-Gefangene Num 21:29; Deut 28:41; 2Chr 29:9; Ezra 2:1; Ezra 3:8

2. captives, captured persons (14×) Concrete reference to captured persons, either collectively or individually. In Num 31:12, 19, 26 the term denotes actual prisoners brought back from battle; in Exod 12:29 it describes the captive in Pharaoh's dungeon. Spanish 'cautivos' and French 'captifs' (plural, personal) consistently mark this reading. Possessive suffixes — שִׁבְיֵךְ 'your captives' (Judg 5:12), שִׁבְיוֹ 'his captives' (Deut 21:10) — confirm the personal, concrete force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-captives, captive, captive-of | es: cautivo-de, cautivos, cautivos-de | fr: captif, captifs, captivité | de: Gefangene, Gefangenschaft, captives Exod 12:29; Num 21:1; Num 31:12; Num 31:19; Num 31:26

שָׁבִי H7628b Adj-fs (1×)

captive (feminine adjective, describing one in captivity)

This feminine adjective means 'captive,' appearing in Isaiah 52:2 in an imperative to personified Jerusalem: 'Shake yourself from the dust, arise, O captive Jerusalem!' The feminine form matches 'daughter of Zion,' treating the city as a woman in bondage who must now assert her freedom. The term emphasizes state not just event—not the act of capturing but the condition of being captive. The command to 'arise' and shake off dust calls the captive to agency and restoration.

(1×) Isaiah 52:2 (based on textual emendation) addresses Jerusalem as 'captive daughter of Zion,' calling her to rise from the dust. The feminine adjective 'captive' matches the feminine personification of the city. Spanish 'cautiva' preserves the gender. The passage demands action from the captive: though enslaved, Jerusalem must now shake off the bonds and dust, asserting freedom in response to God's deliverance. The captive state is real but not final—the call to 'arise' transforms passive victim into active participant in liberation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: captive | es: cautiva | fr: [שביה] | de: [שביה] Isa 52:2

שִׁבְי H7629 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shobi (personal name: Ammonite who aided David)

This personal name identifies an Ammonite who brought supplies to David when he fled from Absalom, appearing in 2 Samuel 17:27. Shobi son of Nahash from Rabbah of the Ammonites joined Barzillai and Machir in provisioning David's company during the rebellion. His Ammonite identity is striking—a foreigner showing loyalty when David's own son rebelled. The name may relate to 'captive' or 'captivity,' though its precise meaning is uncertain.

(1×) 2 Samuel 17:27 lists Shobi among three men who brought essential supplies to David at Mahanaim during Absalom's revolt. The Septuagint renders the name variously, struggling with the Hebrew. What's remarkable is Shobi's Ammonite identity—traditional enemy showing compassion to David in crisis. This foreigner's loyalty contrasts sharply with Israelite Absalom's rebellion. The conjunction 'and Shobi' integrates him into the list of benefactors, honored in Scripture for kindness when David most needed it. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Shovi | es: y-Shobi | fr: et-Shovi | de: und-Shovi 2Sam 17:27

שֹׁבָי H7630 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shobai; personal name, a family of gatekeepers in the postexilic community

A personal name belonging to a family of temple gatekeepers. Ezra 2:42 and Nehemiah 7:45 list the 'sons of Shobai' among those who returned from exile. The name appears in the context of reconstituting temple service in Jerusalem. The Septuagint offers varied Greek forms, reflecting transliteration challenges.

(2×) A personal name identifying a family of gatekeepers in the postexilic restoration (Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45). The 'sons of Shobai' (בְּנֵי־שֹׁבָי) were numbered among the temple servants who returned to Jerusalem. The Septuagint's Αβαου (Ezra) and Σαβει/Σωβαι (Nehemiah) show transliteration variety. BDB notes the Ketiv reading in one manuscript as שבי, possibly meaning 'captive,' though this is likely a scribal variant rather than the name's etymology. The family's role in guarding the temple gates made them essential to restored worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shobai, Shovay | es: Sobai | fr: [שבי] | de: Gefangene Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45

שְׁבִיב H7631 N-msd (2×)

flame; a tongue of fire (Aramaic)

An Aramaic noun meaning flame. Daniel 3:22 describes 'the flame of the fire' killing the soldiers who threw Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego into Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. Daniel 7:9 portrays God's throne with 'wheels' that are 'burning fire'—literally 'flames of fire.' The term evokes intense, consuming heat.

(2×) An Aramaic noun denoting flame or tongue of fire, appearing in Daniel's apocalyptic narratives. Daniel 3:22 uses שְׁבִיבָא דִּי נוּרָא ('the flame of the fire') to describe the superheated furnace that killed the executioners—irony, since the intended victims survived unharmed. Daniel 7:9 employs the plural שְׁבִיבִין דִּי נוּר ('flames of fire') for the wheels of God's throne, evoking Ezekiel's chariot vision. The term captures the visible, flickering manifestation of fire's destructive and purifying power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flame-of, flames-of | es: la-llama-de, llamas | fr: flamme | de: [שביבא], [שביבין] Dan 3:22; Dan 7:9

שְׁבִיב H7632 N-msc (1×)

flame, blaze (of fire)

This noun means flame or blaze, appearing in Job 18:5 in Bildad's description of the wicked person's fate: 'the light of the wicked is put out, and the flame of his fire does not shine.' The parallel structure equates 'light' with 'flame,' both representing the wicked person's life or prosperity. The construct form 'flame of his fire' emphasizes the burning aspect—not just fire but its bright, active flame. The extinction of this flame pictures complete cessation of the wicked person's vitality.

(1×) Job 18:5 declares that 'the flame of his fire shall not shine,' parallel with 'the light of the wicked goes out.' Spanish 'chispa de' (spark of) varies slightly, but the image is of flame extinguished—the bright, dancing fire reduced to nothing. The construct 'flame of his fire' intensifies the loss: not just fire dimming but its very flame—the most visible, energetic part—disappearing. In wisdom literature, such extinction metaphorically represents death or divine judgment cutting off the wicked person's life and legacy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-flame-of | es: chispa-de | fr: שביב | de: [שביב] Job 18:5

שְׁבִיָה H7633 Conj-w / N-fs (12×)

Captivity (state); captives (collective body of prisoners taken in war)

The feminine noun שְׁבָיָה covers both the abstract condition of captivity and the concrete people who endure it. When Deuteronomy 21:11 describes an Israelite soldier seeing 'a beautiful woman among the captives,' the word points to actual persons. When 2 Chronicles 6:37-38 speaks of the exiles repenting 'in the land of their captivity,' it denotes the state or condition of being held. Jeremiah 48:46 uses both in parallel: Moab's sons go into שְׁבִי and her daughters into שִׁבְיָה. The Spanish split between 'cautivos' (persons) and 'cautiverio' (state) mirrors this distinction neatly.

1. captives (concrete persons) (6×) Captives as a concrete collective — the body of persons taken prisoner in warfare. Deuteronomy 21:11 speaks of seeing a woman 'among the captives' (בַּשִּׁבְיָה), and 2 Chronicles 28:5, 11, 13-15 describe a 'great captivity' of people who must be returned. Deuteronomy 32:42 pairs the captives (שִׁבְיָה) with the slain (חָלָל), confirming the concrete personal reference. Spanish 'los cautivos' and French 'captivité' used in the personal-collective sense both converge here on the human referent rather than the abstract condition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-the-captives, and-captive, of-the-captives | es: a-los-cautivos, entre-los-cautivos, los-cautivos | fr: captivité, et-captif, la-captivité | de: [בשביה], [השביה], und-captive Deut 21:11; Deut 32:42; 2Chr 28:11; 2Chr 28:13; 2Chr 28:14

2. captivity (abstract state) (6×) Captivity as an abstract state or condition — being held in subjection, the experience of exile. Nehemiah 3:36 (4:4 in English) speaks of 'the land of captivity,' and 2 Chronicles 6:37-38 describes the exiles reflecting on their situation 'in the land of their captivity.' Jeremiah 48:46 assigns this abstract sense to Moab's daughters going 'into captivity.' Spanish 'cautiverio' and 'en cautividad' clearly mark the experiential-state reading, as does the consistent use of possessive constructions ('her captivity,' 'their captivity') in the English glosses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: captivity, her-captivity, into-captivity | es: cautiverio, cautivos, en-cautividad | fr: [בשביה], captivité, sa-captivité | de: [בשביה], [שביה], [שבים] Deut 21:13; 2Chr 6:37; 2Chr 6:38; 2Chr 28:5; Neh 4:4

שְׁכִיָה H7634 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sakhyah (personal name: descendant of Benjamin)

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 8:10 in the genealogy of Benjamin, listed among the sons of Shaharaim. The name's spelling varies in manuscripts, and ancient versions render it differently (Septuagint has multiple variants), reflecting textual uncertainty. The name's etymology is unclear, possibly related to roots involving 'hire' or branches. Beyond this genealogical mention, nothing is known of this individual. The Benjaminite context places him within Saul's tribal lineage.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 8:10 lists Sakhyah among Shaharaim's sons in the complex Benjaminite genealogy. The multilingual glosses show variation: Spanish 'Soquias,' reflecting different vocalization traditions. Ancient versions struggled with this name, producing multiple transliterations. The Chronicles genealogist includes such names to establish Benjaminite lineage comprehensively, even when individuals have no additional narrative role. These names preserve family memory and tribal identity, especially important for Benjamin after exile given the tribe's association with Saul and Jerusalem. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Sakhyah | es: Soquias | fr: [שכיה] | de: [שכיה] 1Chr 8:10

שְׁבוּל H7635 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (3×)

path, way—a traveled route or course of action

This noun denotes a path or way, whether a literal trail or a metaphorical course of life. Psalm 77:19 speaks poetically of God's path through the sea during the Exodus, a route invisible yet real. Jeremiah 18:15 laments Israel's abandonment of the ancient paths for wayward roads. The term emphasizes both the physical notion of a trodden way and the ethical dimension of following established routes.

(3×) The three uses span God's miraculous path through the Red Sea (Psalm 77:19, appearing twice) and Israel's forsaken paths (Jeremiah 18:15). Spanish 'sendas' (paths) and French 'sentier' (pathway) capture the meaning. The Psalm passage uses 'Your path' in parallel with 'Your way,' creating synonymous imagery for God's salvific intervention. Jeremiah's 'ancient paths' contrasts divinely ordained routes with self-chosen byways. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv:and-Your-paths], and-Your-path, paths-of | es: (y-senda-de-ti), [y-sendas-de-ti], sendas-de | fr: [שבילי], sentier | de: [ketiv:and-dein-paths], [שבילי], und-dein-Pfad Ps 77:19; Jer 18:15

שְׁבִיס H7636 Conj-w (1×)

crescent-shaped ornament worn by women as jewelry

This rare word appears only in Isaiah's catalog of women's finery and refers to ornamental crescents or moon-shaped jewelry. The term may be a diminutive form, suggesting small decorative pieces. While translations vary ('crescents,' 'round ornaments'), the multilingual evidence and the broader context of luxury items point to delicate, fashionable accessories worn around the neck or head. The Hebrew connects to similar ornamental terms in rabbinic literature.

(1×) A type of decorative crescent or circular jewelry piece worn by wealthy women in ancient Jerusalem. Isaiah 3:18 lists this among luxury items that would be removed as judgment. The Spanish 'redecillas' (little nets/rounds) and English 'crescents' both suggest curved or circular ornamental shapes, consistent with the Hebrew root possibly relating to diminutive adornments. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-crescents | es: y-las-redecillas | fr: [והשביסים] | de: [והשביסים] Isa 3:18

שְׁבִיעִי H7637 Art / Number-ofs (98×)

Seventh — ordinal numeral for the number seven, marking the seventh day, month, year, or item in a sequence

Shevi'i is the ordinal form of the number seven, appearing 98 times always with the definite article. Its most theologically significant use is for the seventh day — the Sabbath — established in creation itself (Gen 2:2-3) and reinforced across the Pentateuch's legislation (Exod 12:15-16; 16:26-30). The seventh month (Tishri) hosts the most solemn festival season: Trumpets, the Day of Atonement, and Tabernacles (Lev 23:24-27, 34). The seventh year brings release of slaves and rest for the land (Exod 21:2; 23:11). Through these recurring patterns, the ordinal 'seventh' becomes inseparable from the theology of rest, completion, and sacred time that the number seven carries throughout Scripture.

seventh (ordinal numeral) (98×) The ordinal numeral 'seventh,' always used with the definite article, marking position in a sequence — most prominently the seventh day of creation and Sabbath rest (Gen 2:2-3; Exod 20:10), the seventh month of the liturgical calendar with its concentration of festivals (Lev 23:24, 27, 34), and the seventh year of release (Exod 21:2; 23:11). Spanish 'el septimo,' French 'le septieme,' and German 'der siebte' all render the ordinal straightforwardly, though no translation can fully convey the theology of completion and holiness that 'seventh' carries as the capstone of the biblical number system. NUMBER SEVEN en: the-seventh | es: el-séptimo | fr: le-septième | de: dem-siebten, den-siebten, der-siebte Gen 2:2; Gen 2:3; Gen 8:4; Exod 12:15

שְׂבָכָה H7638 N-fp (1×)

lattice-work, network; ornamental bronze latticework on temple pillars or architectural features

This architectural term describes intricate lattice or network patterns, appearing in three distinct contexts. Most prominently, it refers to the decorative bronze latticework adorning Solomon's temple pillars—elaborate netted designs that enhanced their beauty. The word also denotes window lattices, like the one through which King Ahaziah fell, and metaphorically describes hunting nets or traps. The consistent image across all uses is interwoven, openwork design, whether in architecture, furniture, or trapping equipment.

(1×) Ornamental network design on Solomon's temple pillars, specifically the bronze latticework that adorned the capitals. First Kings 7:17 describes these intricate decorative elements multiple times, emphasizing their craftsmanship. The consistent translation as 'lattices' or 'enrejados' (Spanish for lattice-work) across languages confirms the architectural nature of these woven or netted bronze ornaments that beautified the sacred space. NETS AND SNARES

en: lattices | es: Enrejados | fr: lattices | de: lattices 1Kgs 7:17

שְׂבָכָה H7639 Prep-l (16×)

Lattice-work: ornamental netting on Temple pillars; a window lattice or screen; a net or snare (figurative).

The Hebrew noun sevakhah names interwoven mesh — lattice-work in all its architectural, domestic, and metaphorical forms. Its dominant home is Solomon's Temple, where fourteen of its sixteen occurrences describe the elaborate checker-work netting adorning the bronze pillar capitals cast by Huram the craftsman (1 Kgs 7:17-42). The artisan vocabulary is dense and technical: sevakhot appear alongside pomegranates, chains, and lily-work in some of the Bible's most detailed architectural passages. A single domestic occurrence in 2 Kings 1:2 places Ahaziah falling through 'the lattice' in his upper chamber — a window screen of woven strips. Spanish enrejado and celosia capture the architectural and window senses respectively, while the lone figurative use in Job 18:8 — 'he is cast into a net by his own feet' — extends the mesh image into the realm of entrapment.

1. network on pillars (14×) Ornamental lattice-work or checker-work netting fashioned as decoration on the capitals of the Temple pillars. Fourteen occurrences concentrate in the Temple construction accounts of 1 Kings 7, 2 Kings 25, 2 Chronicles 4, and Jeremiah 52, where the sevakhot are described alongside rows of pomegranates on the bronze pillars Jachin and Boaz. Spanish enrejado, French treillis, and German Gitterwerk all evoke ornamental metalwork. The technical density of these passages — where sevakhah appears alongside resheth ('network'), sharsherot ('chains'), and rimmonim ('pomegranates') — suggests specialized artisan vocabulary for interlocking mesh patterns cast in bronze. NETS AND SNARES

en: [lattice], and-a-latticework, and-network | es: (el-enrejado), [el-enrejado], el-enrejado | fr: [lattice], [השבכה], [השבכות] | de: [lattice], [השבכה], [השבכות] 1Kgs 7:17; 1Kgs 7:18; 1Kgs 7:20; 1Kgs 7:41

2. window lattice (1×) A latticed window screen or grating through which one looks or through which air passes — the domestic counterpart of the Temple ornament. Only one occurrence, in 2 Kings 1:2, where King Ahaziah 'fell through the lattice in his upper chamber in Samaria and was injured.' Spanish celosia and French treillage shift to domestic window vocabulary. The scene evokes ancient upper-story rooms with woven wood or reed screens rather than solid glass — a construction detail that explains why a fall 'through' a window was physically possible. WINDOW LATTICE

en: the-lattice | es: la-celosía | fr: le-lattice | de: der-lattice 2Kgs 1:2

3. snare or net (1×) A net, mesh, or snare used figuratively for entrapment. In Job 18:8, Bildad warns that the wicked person 'is cast into a net (sevakhah) by his own feet,' paralleling resheth ('net'), pach ('trap'), and tsammim ('snares') in the surrounding verses. Spanish malla and the broader metaphorical context confirm a deliberate extension of the mesh image from architectural ornament to moral entrapment. The image is vivid: the same interlocking pattern that beautifies a Temple pillar becomes the web that ensnares the godless. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: a-snare | es: malla | fr: שבכה | de: [שבכה] Job 18:8

שֹׁבֶל H7640 N-ms (1×)

flowing skirt or train of a garment

This word denotes the lower, flowing portion of a woman's garment —what we might call a train or skirt. It appears in Isaiah's prophecy against Babylon, where personified Babylon is commanded to strip off her train and cross rivers barefoot, symbolizing humiliation and exile. The image conveys the removal of dignified, modest covering. The Spanish 'falda' (skirt) captures the basic meaning, though the Hebrew suggests specifically the flowing, trailing portion that would need to be lifted when wading through water.

(1×) The flowing lower portion or train of a woman's garment that trails behind when walking. Isaiah 47:2 uses this in a command to personified Babylon to remove her train and wade through rivers—imagery of humiliation and loss of dignity. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'falda,' English 'skirt') point to the garment's lower portion, which would become heavy and cumbersome when wet. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: the-skirt | es: falda | fr: [שבל] | de: [שבל] Isa 47:2

שִׁבֹּלֶת H7641a Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

flowing stream, current; Shibboleth (dialect test-word)

This noun primarily denotes a flowing stream or water current, but is famous from Judges 12:6 as the password Gileadites used to detect Ephraimites, who pronounced it 'Sibboleth.' The dialectal difference in pronouncing the initial consonant became a deadly ethnic marker. The term captures both the physical reality of flowing water and its role in linguistic identity.

(4×) Designates a flowing stream or current. Psalm 69:2 (69:3 Eng.) describes drowning in 'a depth/flood' (שִׁבֹּלֶת), and 69:15 (69:16 Eng.) 'the flood of water' (שִׁבֹּלֶת מַיִם). Isaiah 27:12 speaks of threshing 'from the flowing of the River' (מִשִּׁבֹּלֶת הַנָּהָר), the Euphrates' current. Most famously, Judges 12:6 uses it as a dialect test: Gileadites detected Ephraimites who couldn't pronounce the 'sh' sound and said 'Sibboleth' instead—leading to 42,000 deaths. The word entered English meaning 'linguistic or cultural shibboleth.' Multilingual glosses show the test-word fame: Spanish 'shibolet,' French 'Shibboleth,' German 'Shibboleth'—all recognizing its role beyond mere 'stream.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shibboleth, and-the-flood, from-the-flowing | es: corriente-de, desde-la-corriente-de, shibolet | fr: Shibboleth, [משבלת], et-épi | de: Shibboleth, [משבלת], der-Flut-von Judg 12:6; Ps 69:2; Ps 69:15; Isa 27:12

שִׁבֹּלֶת H7641b N-fpc (15×)

Ear or head of grain — the mature seed-bearing spike of cereal plants like wheat or barley

This שִׁבֹּלֶת (shibboleth II) denotes the ripe ear or head of grain, the seed-laden tip of cereal stalks. It dominates Pharaoh's famous dream in Genesis 41, where seven plump ears and seven withered ears symbolize years of abundance and famine. The term also appears in Ruth's gleaning narrative (Ruth 2:2) and Isaiah's harvest imagery (Isa 17:5). Zechariah 4:12 extends the word metaphorically to the 'spikes' or clusters at the tips of olive branches flanking the golden lampstand. Spanish 'espigas' and English 'ears of grain' both capture the agricultural specificity.

ear/head of grain (15×) The mature, seed-bearing tip of grain stalks such as wheat and barley. Eleven of fifteen occurrences cluster in the Pharaoh's dream narrative (Gen 41:5-27), where the contrast between fat and thin ears drives Joseph's prophetic interpretation. Also found in gleaning contexts (Ruth 2:2) and harvest similes (Isa 17:5; Job 24:24). Zechariah 4:12 extends the image to olive-branch tips. Spanish 'espigas' and French 'têtes de grain' reflect the agricultural meaning faithfully. GRAIN EARS

en: among-the-ears-of-grain, clusters-of, ear-of-grain | es: entre-las-espigas, espigas, espigas-de | fr: [שבלים], le-têtes-de-grain, parmi-le-oreilles-de-grain | de: [בשבלים], [שבלי], [שבלים] Gen 41:5; Gen 41:6; Gen 41:7; Gen 41:22

שַׁבְלוּל H7642 N-msc (1×)

snail (named for its slimy trail)

This creature term refers to a snail, named in Hebrew for the slimy, moist trail it leaves behind. The Psalms use it as an image of something that dissolves or melts away, perhaps alluding to the ancient observation that a snail's trail appears to represent the creature dissolving as it moves. The etymology connects to roots meaning moisture or fluid. Modern versions consistently render this as 'snail' across all major languages, though the ancient understanding may have included the folk belief that snails literally melted into their trails.

(1×) A snail, specifically referenced for its characteristic slimy secretion. Psalm 58:8 uses the snail as a metaphor for dissolution or melting away—possibly reflecting the observation that snails leave moisture behind them, creating the appearance of gradually dissolving. The consistent translation as 'snail' (caracol in Spanish, escargot in French) across languages confirms the identification of this gastropod mollusk. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: a-snail | es: caracol | fr: escargot | de: ein-snail Ps 58:8

שִׂבְמָה H7643 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (6×)

Sibmah (also Sebam); a Moabite town near Heshbon renowned for its vineyards.

Sibmah (שִׂבְמָה), also called Sebam (שְׂבָם), was a town in the tableland of Moab near Heshbon, celebrated for its lush vineyards. It appears in the tribal allotment narratives when Reuben requests Transjordanian territory (Num 32:3, 38; Josh 13:19) and in the prophetic oracles lamenting Moab's devastation (Isa 16:8-9; Jer 48:32). Isaiah's vivid image of Sibmah's vine branches stretching to the Dead Sea underscores the town's agricultural fame. The Septuagint form Σεβαμα and the multilingual renderings (Spanish 'Sibma/Sibmá,' French and German 'Sibmah') all preserve this ancient place name.

Sibmah (place name) (6×) A Moabite town near Heshbon, famous for its vineyards, appearing in both historical and prophetic contexts. In Numbers 32:3 the variant Sebam (שְׂבָם) is used when the tribes of Reuben and Gad request Transjordanian territory; Numbers 32:38 and Joshua 13:19 use the fuller form Sibmah. Isaiah 16:8-9 and Jeremiah 48:32 lament the destruction of Sibmah's vineyards in oracles against Moab, with Isaiah depicting vine branches that once reached to Jazer and spread to the wilderness. The Septuagint Σεβαμα and multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Sibma/Sibmá,' French 'Sibmah,' German 'Sibmah') consistently preserve the toponym. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Sibmah, Sivmah, and-Sebam | es: Sibma, Sibmá, Sivmah | fr: Sibmah, [שבמה], et-Sebam | de: Sibmah, [שבמה], und-Sebam Num 32:3; Num 32:38; Josh 13:19; Isa 16:8; Isa 16:9

שֶׁבְנָא H7644 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Shebna, a high-ranking royal official (palace steward and later secretary) under King Hezekiah of Judah.

The proper name of a prominent government official during King Hezekiah's reign, attested in both Isaiah and 2 Kings. Shebna first appears as the man 'over the house'—the palace steward, effectively prime minister—whom Isaiah rebukes for carving himself an ostentatious tomb (Isa 22:15). He later appears in a reduced role as secretary alongside Eliakim during the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18:18, 37; Isa 36:3, 22). The spelling alternates between שֶׁבְנָא and שְׁבָנָה across parallel accounts.

Shebna (proper name) (9×) The personal name Shebna, designating a historical official in Hezekiah's court who served first as palace steward and subsequently as royal secretary. Isaiah's oracle against him (Isa 22:15-19) provides rare prophetic critique of a named individual's political ambition. In the parallel Assyrian crisis narratives (2 Kgs 18:18, 26, 37; 19:2; Isa 36:3, 11, 22; 37:2), he functions alongside Eliakim and Joah as part of the diplomatic delegation. Spanish 'Sebna' and English 'Shebna' closely transliterate the Hebrew, while the LXX renders it as Somnas. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shebna, and, and-Shevna | es: Sebna, y-Sebna, y-Shevná | fr: Schebna, et-Schebna, et-Shevna | de: [ושבנא], [שבנא], und-Shevna 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:26; 2Kgs 18:37; 2Kgs 19:2; Isa 22:15

שְׁבַנְיָה H7645 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Shebanyah – a Levitical proper name borne by priests and Levites in post-exilic Judah

Shebanyah (also spelled Shebanyahu with the longer divine-name suffix) is a proper name borne by several Levites and priests in the post-exilic period. A priest named Shebanyahu blew the trumpet before the ark when David brought it to Jerusalem (1 Chr 15:24). Later, multiple individuals with this name appear in the Nehemiah narrative: Levites who led public confession and prayer (Neh 9:4-5), and signatories to the covenant renewal (Neh 10:4, 10, 12). The name may mean 'Yahweh has made to grow' or 'Yahweh has restored.' Spanish Sebanias, French Schebania, and German Schebanja all preserve the same proper noun with minor phonological adaptation.

Shebaniah (person name) (7×) The proper name Shebanyah/Shebanyahu, identifying several Levites and priests in post-exilic Israel: a trumpet-blowing priest at the ark procession (1 Chr 15:24), Levites leading communal prayer and confession (Neh 9:4-5), and covenant-renewal signatories (Neh 10:4, 10, 12). The Septuagint variants Sabanias and Sebanias reflect the name's phonological instability in Greek transcription. Spanish Sebanias, French Schebania, and German Schebanja all represent a single proper-noun identity with no semantic subdivision warranted. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shebaniah, and-Shevanyahu, to-Shevanyah | es: Sebanías, Y-Sebanías, de-Sebanías | fr: Schebania, et-Schebania, zu-Schebania | de: Schebanja, [ושבניהו] 1Chr 15:24; Neh 9:4; Neh 9:5; Neh 10:4; Neh 10:10

שָׂבַע H7646 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (97×)

To be satisfied or sated (with food or other good); causatively, to satisfy or fill someone; by extension, to be surfeited or wearied to excess.

A verb rooted in the primal experience of hunger met with abundance. Deuteronomy 8:10 captures the ideal: 'You will eat and be satisfied and bless the LORD your God.' In the Hifil stem, God becomes the one who satisfies — filling the hungry with good things (Ps 91:16, 81:16). Yet the same root can curdle into excess: Isaiah 1:11 has God declaring 'I am sated with burnt offerings' — not satisfied but disgusted. Korean '싫증내다' (to be sick of) and Spanish 'harto' (fed up) reveal this darker edge. The arc from nourishment to surfeit mirrors a profound biblical pattern: blessing refused becomes burden.

1. be satisfied, have enough (75×) The Qal and Nifal intransitive sense: to be satisfied, full, or to have enough. This is the dominant meaning across 75 occurrences, spanning blessing formulas (Deut 6:11, 'you will eat and be satisfied'), wisdom literature (Prov 12:11), and prophetic promises. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'se-sacia,' French 'rassasier,' German 'sättigen' — all point to contented fullness. Often paired with 'eating' as its natural complement, it describes the ideal state of provision received with gratitude. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: and-be-satisfied, and-you-will-be-satisfied, are-satisfied | es: se-sacia, se-sacian, se-saciará | fr: et-tu-fera-être-satisfied, et-être-satisfied, rassasier | de: saettigen, saettigte, sie-wird-sein-satisfied Exod 16:12; Deut 6:11; Deut 8:10; Deut 8:12; Deut 11:15

2. satisfy, cause to be full (18×) The Hifil and Piel causative sense: to satisfy someone, to cause to be full, to give enough. God is frequently the subject — 'He satisfies you with good things' (Ps 91:16), 'He fills me' (Job 9:18). This shifts agency from the one who is full to the one who provides fullness. Spanish 'El-que-sacia' (the one who satisfies) and the Hifil morphology both foreground the divine giver. Eighteen occurrences concentrate in Psalms and Job. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: He-filled-me, He-fills-me, He-satisfied | es: El-que-sacia, Me-ha-saciado, Para-saciar | fr: et-de-rassasier, et-rassasier, le-rassasier | de: der-satisfies, er-satisfied, er-satisfied-ihnen Job 9:18; Job 38:27; Ps 81:16; Ps 90:14; Ps 91:16

3. be surfeited, be weary of (4×) The negative-connotation sense: to be surfeited, gorged, or wearied to excess with something. In Isa 1:11, God is 'sated' with burnt offerings — not delighted but disgusted. Prov 25:16-17 warns against eating too much honey or visiting a neighbor too often, lest they become 'filled' with you and hate you. Korean '싫증내다' ('be sick of') and Spanish 'harto' ('fed up') capture this meaning precisely. Only four occurrences, but they reveal the semantic boundary where satisfaction tips into revulsion. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: I-am-full, and-I-am-filled, he-be-sated-with-you | es: Estoy-harto, se-sacie-de-ti, te-sacies-de-ella | fr: et-rassasier, rassasier, rassasier-toi | de: saettigen, saettigte, und-saettigte Job 7:4; Prov 25:16; Prov 25:17; Isa 1:11

שָׂבַע H7647 Conj-w (8×)

Plenty, abundance; the state of having more than enough, especially of grain and food supply.

A masculine noun denoting plenty or abundance, used almost exclusively in the Joseph narrative of Genesis 41 to describe Egypt's seven years of extraordinary agricultural surplus. Pharaoh's dream of fat cows and full ears of grain pointed to this saba – a superabundance of food that Joseph wisely stored against the coming famine. Spanish 'abundancia' and 'la abundancia' mirror the Hebrew precisely. Outside Genesis, the word appears in Proverbs 3:10 promising that honoring God brings barns bursting with plenty, and in Ecclesiastes 5:11 observing that abundance of goods means abundance of those who consume them.

plenty, abundance, fullness (8×) A state of plenty or material abundance, particularly of food and grain. Seven of eight occurrences cluster in Genesis 41 (vv. 29, 30, 31, 34, 47, 53), all describing Egypt's seven years of extraordinary harvest surplus in the Joseph narrative. Spanish uniformly renders it 'abundancia' (abundance), while French and German equivalents ('plenty,' 'Ueberfluss') confirm the consistent sense. Proverbs 3:10 extends the promise of saba to those who honor God with their firstfruits, and Ecclesiastes 5:11 offers a wry counterpoint: when goods increase, so do those who consume them. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-fullness, plenty, the-plenty | es: abundancia, de-abundancia, la-abundancia | fr: et-וְהַשֹּׂבַע, le-plenty, plenty | de: [וְהַשֹּׂבַע], der-Überfluss, schwor Gen 41:29; Gen 41:30; Gen 41:31; Gen 41:34; Gen 41:47

שֹׂבַע H7648 N-msc (8×)

Satiety, fullness; being satisfied especially with food, but also metaphorically with joy or blessing.

A masculine noun expressing the state of being fully satisfied – having eaten or received enough. Most occurrences concern physical nourishment: eating bread 'to satiety' in Egypt (Exod 16:3), the land producing enough to eat one's fill (Lev 25:19; 26:5), and Ruth taking home food beyond her satisfaction (Ruth 2:18). But Psalm 16:11 lifts the word into spiritual territory: 'in your presence is fullness of joy' (soba semachot). Spanish 'saciedad' and French 'rassasier' both capture this sense of deep, complete satisfaction, whether of stomach or soul.

satiety, fullness, abundance (8×) The state of being fully satisfied or having one's fill, primarily of food but also metaphorically of joy. In its literal sense, it describes eating to satisfaction: Israel remembering Egypt's bread (Exod 16:3), the promised land's bounty (Lev 25:19; 26:5), Deuteronomy 23:24's permission to eat grapes to one's fill, and Ruth 2:18 where Ruth ate and had leftovers from her satisfaction. Psalm 16:11 extends the word beautifully: 'soba semachot' – a satisfying fullness of joys in God's presence. Spanish 'a saciedad' and 'de su saciedad' track both the physical and metaphorical dimensions. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: from-her-satisfaction, fullness-of, to-satiation | es: a-saciedad, de-su-saciedad, hasta-la-saciedad | fr: de-sa-satisfaction, rassasier, ton-remplir | de: [מִשְׂבְּעָהּ], dein-fuellen, fullness-von Exod 16:3; Lev 25:19; Lev 26:5; Deut 23:24; Ruth 2:18

שְׂבַע H7649 Adj-fs (10×)

Satisfied, sated, full — whether with food, favor, years, or trouble; describes complete fulfillment or surfeit

This adjective captures the state of being thoroughly satisfied or filled to capacity. In its most positive usage, it describes patriarchs who died 'full of days' — Abraham (Gen 25:8), Isaac (Gen 35:29), David (1 Chr 29:28), and Job (Job 42:17) — signaling a life brought to rich completion. Deuteronomy 33:23 blesses Naphtali as 'full of the favor of the LORD.' Yet the same word carries a darker edge: in Job 10:15 and 14:1, one can be 'sated with trouble' or 'surfeited with disgrace,' while Proverbs 27:7 observes that a sated appetite spurns even honey.

satisfied, full, sated (10×) The state of being fully satisfied or sated, encompassing physical fullness with food (1 Sam 2:5; Prov 27:7), figurative abundance of divine favor (Deut 33:23, 'full of the blessing of the LORD'), the peaceful completion of a long life expressed as 'full of days' (Gen 25:8; 35:29; 1 Chr 29:28; Job 42:17), and negatively, surfeit with trouble or shame (Job 10:15; 14:1). Spanish 'saciados' and German 'satt' both capture this core idea of thorough satiation that can shade from blessing to burden. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-full, and-full-of, and-full-of- | es: Saciados, lleno-de, saciada | fr: [שְׂבַע], et-plein, et-rassasia | de: [שְׂבַעהּ], der-satisfied, saettigte-von Gen 25:8; Gen 35:29; Deut 33:23; 1Sam 2:5; 1Chr 29:28

שָׁבַע H7650 V-Hifil-Perf-1cs / 2ms (186×)

To swear or take an oath (Niphal); to cause to swear, adjure, or administer an oath (Hiphil).

Rooted in the number seven – to 'seven oneself' was to bind oneself by invoking sacred completeness – this verb governs the entire oath-making domain in the Hebrew Bible. In its Niphal (reflexive/passive) form, it means to swear, whether committing to a covenant, affirming a truth, or calling down curses on oneself if unfaithful. In its Hiphil (causative) form, it means to make another person swear, to administer or impose an oath. Abraham's servant is 'made to swear' (Gen 24:3), and Joshua adjures Israel at Jericho (Josh 6:26). The etymological connection to 'seven' surfaces in Abraham's covenant at Beersheba, where seven ewe lambs seal the oath (Gen 21:28-31). Spanish 'jurar,' French 'jurer,' and German 'schwören' all maintain this single-root flexibility across both active and administered oaths.

1. swear, take an oath (Niphal) (154×) To swear or take an oath (Niphal stem). The subject binds himself or herself by an oath, whether promissory (committing to a future action, as in covenant-making), assertory (affirming the truth of a statement), or imprecatory (invoking God as witness with implicit self-curse if false). This is the dominant sense at 154 occurrences. God swears to Abraham (Gen 24:7), David and Jonathan swear mutual loyalty (1 Sam 20:42), and Nehemiah makes the people swear not to intermarry (Neh 13:25). The reflexive Niphal form highlights that oath-taking is self-binding. SWEAR TAKE OATH

en: He-swore, he-swore, swore | es: juró | fr: Il-jura, il-jura, jura | de: Er-schwor, er-geschworen-hat, er-schwor Gen 24:7; Gen 24:9; Gen 25:33; Gen 31:53; Gen 47:31

2. cause to swear, adjure (Hiphil) (31×) To cause to swear, adjure, or administer an oath (Hiphil stem). The subject compels or solemnly charges another party to swear. Abraham makes his servant swear (Gen 24:3), Joseph makes the sons of Israel swear to carry his bones (Gen 50:25), and the Song of Solomon's refrain 'I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem' (Song 2:7; 3:5) uses this causative form. About 31 occurrences carry this sense. The Hiphil shifts agency: the swearer acts under another's authority or solemn charge. SWEAR TAKE OATH

en: I-adjure, I-make-you-swear, adjure-you | es: E-hizo-jurar, Os-conjuro, cuando-juramentar | fr: Je-vous-adjure,, adjure-tu, et-Je—faire-tu-jurer | de:

adjure-du, bound-bei-oath, du-machte-uns-schwoeren Gen 24:3; Gen 24:37; Gen 50:5; Gen 50:6; Gen 50:25

3. (1×) A rare participial or Qal passive form describing those who are 'sworn with oaths' or oath-bound (Ezek 21:23). This single occurrence is textually difficult – the Septuagint and Syriac omit it, and some scholars repoint to relate it to 'weeks' rather than 'oaths.' The passage describes Zedekiah's broken oath to Nebuchadnezzar, and the phrase 'sworn with oaths' emphasizes the gravity of covenant violation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sworn-of | es: juramentos-de | fr: jurer | de: schwoeren Ezek 21:23

שֶׁבַע H7651 Number-fsc (394×)

Seven — the cardinal number, used independently or in compounds; rarely as a multiplicative 'seven times.'

The cardinal number seven carries deep significance across the biblical text, appearing in genealogies, ritual prescriptions, narrative cycles, and symbolic contexts. From the seven days of creation to the seven-fold sprinkling of blood in Levitical ritual, sheva pervades Scripture's structure. Translations uniformly render it with their numeral — English 'seven,' Spanish siete, French sept, German sieben — showing no ambiguity in the core counting sense. A single occurrence at Psalm 119:164 ('Seven times a day I praise you') uses the number adverbially to express frequency, where French rassasier in the gloss data hints at the completeness implied by sevenfold repetition.

1. seven (cardinal number) (393×) The cardinal number seven (393x), used across all grammatical forms — masculine, feminine, construct, absolute, with prefixed prepositions, and in compound numbers like seventeen or twenty-seven. Translations are perfectly uniform: English 'seven,' Spanish siete, French sept, German sieben. This sense covers genealogical ages (Gen 5:7, 25, 31), ritual stipulations (seven days, seven lambs), and narrative counts (Gen 7:2, seven pairs of clean animals). NUMBER SEVEN

en: seven, seven-of | es: siete, siete-de | fr: sept, sept-de | de: die-sieben, sieben, sieben- Gen 5:7; Gen 5:25; Gen 5:31; Gen 7:2

2. seven times (multiplicative) (1×) Seven used as a multiplicative adverb meaning 'seven times' (1x at Ps 119:164). The psalmist declares, 'Seven times a day I praise you because of your righteous judgments.' Here sheva functions adverbially to express repeated action, and the number carries connotations of fullness and completeness that pervade its symbolic use throughout Scripture. The French gloss rassasier ('to satisfy fully') interestingly evokes this sense of completeness. NUMBER SEVEN

en: seven-times | es: Siete | fr: rassasier | de: sieben Ps 119:164

שֶׁבַע H7652a N-proper-ms (9×)

Sheba, a personal name borne by a Benjaminite rebel against David and by a Gadite listed in genealogical records.

A Hebrew proper name meaning 'seven' or 'oath,' borne by at least two distinct individuals in the Old Testament. The most prominent is Sheba son of Bichri, a Benjaminite who led an insurrection against David after Absalom's revolt, rallying the northern tribes with the cry 'We have no share in David!' (2 Sam 20:1). His rebellion was quelled when the wise woman of Abel Beth-Maacah arranged his execution. A second Sheba appears in a Gadite genealogy (1 Chr 5:13). German 'und-sieben' interestingly reflects the underlying meaning of the name itself.

Sheva (proper name) (9×) The personal name Sheba (שֶׁבַע), referring primarily to Sheba son of Bichri, a Benjaminite who instigated a secessionist revolt against King David (2 Sam 20:1-22). Eight of the nine occurrences cluster in 2 Samuel 20, narrating his rebellion, Joab's pursuit, and his beheading at Abel Beth-Maacah. A separate bearer of the same name appears among the Gadites (1 Chr 5:13). The LXX renders it Σαβεε, and modern translations consistently transliterate as Sheba (English), Seba (Spanish), or Schéba (French). BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES

en: Sheva, and-Sheva | es: Sheva, y-Seba | fr: Schéba, [ושבע] | de: Sheva, und-sieben 2Sam 20:1; 2Sam 20:2; 2Sam 20:6; 2Sam 20:7; 2Sam 20:10

שֶׁבַע H7652b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Sheba (place name, possibly identical with Beer-sheba)

This is a place name appearing in the tribal allotment of Simeon, listed alongside Beer-sheba. Most scholars consider it a textual variant or duplicate, possibly an error for Beer-sheba itself, since the phrase 'Beer-sheba and Sheba' seems redundant. The parallel passage in Chronicles omits it entirely, supporting the view that it may not represent a distinct location. If genuine, it would be a town in the southern territory of Simeon, though its exact identification remains uncertain.

(1×) A place name in Simeon's inheritance in Joshua 19:2, appearing in conjunction with Beer-sheba. The Septuagint variations and the omission in the Chronicles parallel suggest textual uncertainty. Most scholars view this as either a scribal duplicate of Beer-sheba or a closely associated location, rather than a completely separate town. The conjunction 'and Sheba' following 'Beer-sheba' creates the redundancy that has puzzled interpreters. BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES

en: and-Sheva | es: y-Seba | fr: et-Sheva | de: und-Sheva Josh 19:2

שָׂבְעָה H7653 N-fsc (1×)

fullness, satiety; complete satisfaction especially regarding food

This noun describes the state of being completely satisfied or full, particularly after eating. Ezekiel uses it to characterize Sodom's sin: 'fullness of bread' combined with pride led to their downfall. The word appears in contexts of eating one's fill, whether literal satisfaction with food or figurative fulfillment. Isaiah uses it positively for the abundance that satisfies, while Ezekiel applies it negatively when plenty leads to arrogance and neglect of the needy. The underlying idea is complete satiation that leaves nothing lacking.

(1×) Complete satiety or fullness, especially from eating abundantly. Ezekiel 16:49 identifies 'fullness of bread' (abundant food) as part of Sodom's sin—their prosperity led to pride rather than compassion. The Hebrew phrase 'fullness of bread' appears in Spanish as 'saciedad de' (satiety of) and in French as 'rassasiement' (satisfaction), emphasizing the state of being completely filled and satisfied, which can become spiritually dangerous when it produces complacency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fullness-of- | es: saciedad-de | fr: rassasiement | de: [שבעת] Ezek 16:49

שָׂבְעָה H7654 Prep-l / N-fs (6×)

Satiety, fullness; the state of being completely satisfied, especially with food, sometimes leading to moral excess.

Denotes the condition of being fully sated, primarily with food but extending to moral and spiritual dimensions. The phrase 'eat to satiety' (אָכַל לְשָׂבְעָה) appears in promises of abundance (Isa 23:18; Ezek 39:19) and in invitations to genuine spiritual nourishment (Isa 55:2). Yet satiety can also breed complacency: Ezekiel indicts Sodom for 'fullness of bread' that fostered arrogance (Ezek 16:49), and insatiable dogs symbolize greedy leaders (Isa 56:11). Spanish 'saciedad' and 'saciarse' capture both the positive and negative valences of this fullness.

satiety, fullness (6×) The state of being fully satisfied or sated, used of both physical food-satisfaction and moral/spiritual excess. Positively, it appears in divine promises of abundance: Tyre's profits will provide food 'to satiety' for those dwelling before Yahweh (Isa 23:18), and warriors at God's sacrificial feast eat fat 'to satiety' (Ezek 39:19). Isaiah 55:2 uses it figuratively for genuine spiritual nourishment. Negatively, Ezekiel 16:49 identifies 'satiety of bread' (שְׂבְעַת לֶחֶם) as a root sin of Sodom leading to pride, and Isaiah 56:11 depicts greedy leaders as dogs that 'know no satiety.' Ezekiel 16:28 extends the image to unsatisfied carnal desire. Spanish 'saciedad/saciarse' and English 'satisfaction' both capture the dual valence. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: being-satisfied-you, for-satisfaction, satisfaction | es: hasta-saciarse, hasta-saciedad, para-saciaros | fr: [לשבעה], [שבעה], [שבעתך] | de: [לשבעה], [שבעה], [שבעתך] Isa 23:18; Isa 55:2; Isa 56:11; Ezek 16:28; Ezek 39:19

שִׁבַּע H7655 Number-ms (6×)

Seven; the Aramaic cardinal numeral, used in Daniel and Ezra for periods and quantities.

The Aramaic form of the cardinal number seven (שִׁבְעָה), cognate with Hebrew שֶׁבַע. It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, counting periods of divine judgment and administrative groups. In Daniel, Nebuchadnezzar's furnace is heated 'seven times' beyond normal (Dan 3:19), and 'seven times' (periods) pass over him during his madness (Dan 4:16, 23, 25). In Ezra 7:14, the Persian king sends seven counselors. Spanish 'siete' and French 'sept' render it straightforwardly, while German and French sometimes leave the Aramaic unglossed.

seven (Aramaic cardinal numeral) (6×) The Aramaic cardinal numeral meaning 'seven,' used in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel 3:19 it appears in the multiplicative phrase 'one-seven above what' (חַד שִׁבְעָה עַל דִּי), meaning seven times more than usual, describing the superheating of the furnace. In Daniel 4:16, 23, 25 it counts the 'seven times' (periods/seasons) of Nebuchadnezzar's bestial madness, a number signifying divine completeness. In Ezra 7:14 it enumerates the seven counselors of Artaxerxes. The construct form שִׁבְעַת appears before masculine plural nouns. Spanish 'siete' and French 'sept' render it directly, reflecting the universal transparency of this basic numeral. NUMBER SEVEN en: and-his-seven, and-seven, seven | es: siete, siete-veces, y-siete | fr: [ושבעת], et-sept, sept | de: [ושבעה], [ושבעת], [שבעה] Ezra 7:14; Dan 3:19; Dan 4:16; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:25

שִׁבְעָה H7656 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shibah (well name, connected to Beer-sheba)

This is the name of a well that Isaac dug and named in Genesis 26, directly connected to the naming of Beer-sheba. After making a covenant with Abimelech, Isaac's servants found water, and he named the well Shibah (meaning 'oath' or possibly 'seven'). The text explicitly states this is why the city was called Beer-sheba ('well of the oath' or 'well of seven'). The name commemorates both the oath-making and possibly seven ewes involved in Abraham's earlier covenant at the same location.

(1×) The name Isaac gave to a well in Genesis 26:33, forming the basis for the city name Beer-sheba. The naming follows immediately after covenant-making with Abimelech, connecting the well to oath-taking ('sheba' relates to both 'seven' and 'oath' in Hebrew). The well name Shibah serves as an etiological explanation for Beer-sheba, commemorating the solemn agreements made at that location between Isaac and the Philistine king. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Shibah | es: Shivah | fr: Shibah | de: Schiwa Gen 26:33

שִׁבְעִים H7657 Number-cp (90×)

Seventy; the cardinal numeral used for exact counts and as a round number of completeness

Shiv'im is the Hebrew numeral seventy, the irregular plural of sheva' (seven). It counts elders (Exod 24:1), years of exile (Jer 25:11), prophetic weeks (Dan 9:24), and descendants (Gen 46:27). Like other multiples of seven, seventy often functions as a round number implying fullness or completeness — seventy elders represent the entire leadership, and Daniel's seventy weeks span the whole arc of redemptive history. Translations are uniform: Spanish 'setenta,' French 'soixante-dix,' German 'siebzig,' each simply expressing the numeral without interpretive variation.

seventy (cardinal numeral) (90×) The cardinal number seventy, employed both for precise enumeration and as a conventionally round figure conveying completeness or totality. The seventy elders at Sinai (Exod 24:1), the seventy years of Babylonian exile (Jer 25:11), and Daniel's seventy weeks (Dan 9:24) all illustrate its dual function as literal count and symbolic fullness. Multilingual glosses — 'setenta,' 'soixante-dix,' 'siebzig' — converge on a single, unambiguous numerical sense. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: seventy | es: setenta | fr: soixante-dix | de: siebenundsiebzigfältig, siebzig Gen 4:24; Gen 5:12; Gen 11:26; Gen 46:27; Gen 50:3

שִׁבְעָנָה H7658 Adv (1×)

seven (variant numerical form)

This is a rare variant form of the Hebrew word for 'seven,' appearing only in Job 42:13 where it describes Job's seven sons in his restored prosperity. Most scholars consider this an unusual grammatical form, and many ancient versions simply read it as the standard word for seven. The context clearly indicates the number seven, maintaining the symbolic completeness associated with that number throughout Job's narrative—he receives double everything except children, where he gets the same number (seven sons, three daughters) as before.

(1×) The number seven in an unusual variant spelling. Job 42:13 uses this form to number Job's sons in his restoration. While the French and German glosses preserve the Hebrew form untranslated (suggesting textual uncertainty), Spanish and English render it as 'seven/siete,' confirming the numerical meaning. Most modern editions follow ancient versions in reading this as the standard form of 'seven,' treating it as a grammatical variation. NUMBER SEVEN en: seven | es: siete | fr: שבענה | de: [שבענה] Job 42:13

שִׁבְעָתַיִם H7659 Number-fd (6×)

Sevenfold, seven times; a dual-form intensifier expressing complete or amplified retribution and blessing.

A distinctive dual form (שִׁבְעָתַיִם) meaning 'sevenfold' or 'seven times over,' used to intensify promises and warnings. God's protective mark on Cain carries the warning that vengeance will be returned sevenfold (Gen 4:15), and Lamech boasts of seventy-sevenfold retaliation (Gen 4:24). The Psalmist prays that neighbors' reproach be returned sevenfold into their lap (Ps 79:12), while Psalm 12:6 declares God's words pure as silver refined seven times. Proverbs 6:31 requires the thief to repay sevenfold. French interestingly renders one occurrence as 'double,' softening the Hebrew intensification.

sevenfold (6×) A dual-form numeral functioning as an adverbial intensifier meaning 'sevenfold' or 'seven times,' expressing the completeness or amplification of divine and human action. In Genesis 4:15 it appears in God's decree of sevenfold vengeance on anyone who kills Cain, establishing a principle of proportional divine protection. Lamech escalates this to 'seventy-sevenfold' in Genesis 4:24. Psalm 79:12 invokes sevenfold retribution on Israel's enemies, while Psalm 12:6 uses it positively of silver refined seven times, signifying perfect purity. Proverbs 6:31 applies it to restitution law. The French rendering 'double' for one occurrence notably underrepresents the Hebrew intensification, while English 'sevenfold' and Spanish 'siete veces' preserve the full force. TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: seven-times, sevenfold | es: siete-veces | fr: [שבעתים], double, sevenfold | de: [שבעתים], sevenfold, sieben-Zeiten Gen 4:15; Gen 4:24; Ps 12:6; Ps 79:12; Prov 6:31

שָׁבַץ H7660 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-2ms (2×)

weave in checkered work, set in settings; to create interwoven or plaited patterns

A Piel verb meaning to weave in checkered or plaited work. Exodus 28:39 instructs 'you shall weave the tunic of fine linen,' referring to creating a patterned garment for the high priest. Verse 20 (Pual) describes gemstones 'set in gold settings'—mounted in filigree or braided gold-thread. The verb conveys skilled interlacing, whether of fabric threads or metal work around stones.

(2×) A Piel/Pual verb denoting the weaving or setting of interlaced patterns. Exodus 28:39 (Piel) commands 'you shall weave (וְשִׁבַּצְתָּ) the tunic in checkered work of fine linen,' referring to a decorative technique producing a textured, possibly checkered, surface. Exodus 28:20 (Pual participle) describes gemstones 'set in gold' (מְשֻׁבָּצִים זָהָב)—mounted in gold filigree or braided settings. The NH and Syriac cognates (ornament, intermix) support the sense of interwoven design. The verb captures the artisan's craft: interweaving threads or metal to create beautiful, functional sacred vestments. PLACING AND LAYING en: and-you-shall-weave, set | es: Y-tejerás-en-cuadros, engastadas-de | fr: et-tu—tisser, placer | de: setzen, und-du-soll-weben Exod 28:20; Exod 28:39

שְׁבָץ H7661 Art / N-ms (1×)
cramp, anguish, physical distress (meaning uncertain)
This extremely rare and difficult word appears only in 2 Samuel 1:9, where Saul describes something seizing him as he asks to be killed. Translations and interpretations vary widely: 'anguish,' 'cramp,' 'giddiness,' or 'confusion.' The root meaning and etymology remain uncertain. The context suggests some kind of overwhelming physical or mental distress that incapacitated Saul after being wounded. Whether it describes a physical seizure, mental confusion, or emotional anguish, the word clearly indicates a crisis state that prevented Saul from taking his own life.

(1×) A state of severe distress, possibly physical cramp or mental anguish, that seized Saul in his final moments. In 2 Samuel 1:9, Saul tells the Amalekite that 'the anguish' has seized him. The Spanish 'vértigo' (dizziness/vertigo) and English 'anguish' represent different interpretive traditions—either physical disorientation or mental torment. The uncertainty in translation reflects genuine ambiguity in the Hebrew, with the context only clarifying that it was severe enough to prevent Saul from finishing himself. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: the-anguish | es: el-vértigo | fr: le-anguish | de: der-anguish 2Sam 1:9

שְׁבַק H7662 V-Qal-Imp-mp (5×)
to leave, let alone, allow to remain (Aramaic); permit something to stay undisturbed
This Aramaic verb means to leave alone or let remain. In Daniel's tree vision, the heavenly decree commands to 'leave' the stump and roots in the ground (Dan 4:15, 23, 26), signifying that Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom would be preserved though he himself was humbled. In Ezra 6:7, Darius orders opponents to 'let alone' the work on the temple. Daniel 2:44 uses the Hithpeel to describe a kingdom that 'shall not be left' to another people. Spanish 'dejad' (leave!) and French 'laisser' confirm the core sense of permitting something to remain as it is.

(5×) To leave alone, let remain, permit to stay undisturbed. In Daniel's tree vision the stump is to be 'left' in the ground, preserving Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom through judgment (Dan 4:15, 23, 26). Darius commands opponents to 'leave alone' the temple rebuilding (Ezra 6:7). The Hithpeel in Dan 2:44 describes God's kingdom as one that 'will not be left' to another nation. Spanish 'dejad/dejar' and French 'laisser' consistently render this sense of allowing to remain. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: leave, leave-alone, to-leave | es: dejad, para-dejar, será-dejado | fr: [שבקן], laisser | de: [למשבק], [שבקן], [תשתבק] Ezra 6:7; Dan 2:44; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:26

שְׁבַר H7663a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)
inspect, examine; to scrutinize or investigate closely
A verb meaning to inspect or examine closely. Nehemiah 2:13 and 2:15 describe Nehemiah's nocturnal survey of Jerusalem's broken walls: 'I was inspecting the wall.' The participle form suggests careful, deliberate scrutiny. The verb's connection to Arabic 'probe a wound' or Aramaic 'think' is uncertain, but the context clearly indicates visual inspection and assessment.

(2×) Means to inspect or examine carefully, appearing exclusively in Nehemiah's account of surveying Jerusalem's ruins (Neh 2:13, 15). The participle שֹׁבֵר (Qal active) with the preposition בְּ indicates the object of inspection: 'I was inspecting (into) the wall.' Nehemiah's nighttime reconnaissance required close observation to assess the damage and plan reconstruction. The Masoretic tradition's שֹׂבֵר (śōḇēr, with sin) distinguishes it from שֹׁבֵר (šōḇēr, with shin, 'breaker'), avoiding confusion. The proposed Arabic cognate (probe, examine) fits the context, though the etymology remains debated. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: inspecting | es: examinando | fr: [שבר] | de: [שבר] Neh 2:13; Neh 2:15

שָׂבַר H7663b V-Piel-Imperf-2fp (6×)
To wait, hope, look expectantly; a Piel verb expressing patient trust directed toward God or an anticipated outcome.
An Aramaism (compare Aramaic sebar 'to think, hope' and Syriac 'to believe, hope') used exclusively in the Piel stem to express patient, expectant waiting. Creatures look to God for food in due season (Ps 104:27; 145:15), while the psalmist personally declares 'I have hoped for your commandments' (Ps 119:166). In Esther 9:1, enemies 'hoped to' overpower the Jews but found their expectation reversed. Ruth 1:13 captures Naomi's poignant question: would her daughters-in-law really wait for sons not yet born? Spanish 'esperar' beautifully bridges both 'to wait' and 'to hope,' mirroring the Hebrew semantic range.

wait, hope, look expectantly (6×) Piel: to wait for, hope in, or look expectantly toward someone or something, expressing patient trust or anticipation. An Aramaism cognate with Aramaic sebar ('think, hope') and Syriac sbar ('believe, hope'). Used of creatures waiting upon God for sustenance (Ps 104:27, 'they all look to you'; Ps 145:15, 'the eyes of all wait upon you'), of personal hope in God's commandments (Ps 119:166), and of thwarted human expectation (Esth 9:1, enemies 'hoped to' dominate but were overthrown). In Ruth 1:13, Naomi asks whether her daughters-in-law would 'wait' for future sons, using the verb with pathos. Isaiah 38:18 states the dead cannot 'hope for' God's faithfulness. Spanish 'esperar' captures both the waiting and hoping dimensions, while English must alternate between 'hope,' 'wait,' and 'look.' WAITING AND EXPECTING en: I-hope, hoped, look | es: Esperé, esperaban, esperan | fr: [ישברו], [שברו], attendre | de: [ישברו], [שברו], [תשברנה] Ruth 1:13; Esth 9:1; Ps 104:27; Ps 119:166; Ps 145:15

שֶׂבֶר H7664 Prep-m / N-msc / 1cs (2×)
hope, expectation; confident trust or anticipation, especially in God
A noun meaning hope or expectation. Psalm 119:116 pleads, 'Do not put me to shame from my hope,' expressing trust in God's promises. Psalm 146:5 blesses the one 'whose hope is in the Lord his God.' The term conveys confident expectation grounded in relationship with God, not mere wishful thinking.

(2×) Denotes hope or confident expectation, appearing exclusively in the Psalms (119:116; 146:5). Psalm 119:116 uses the first-person possessive 'my hope' (שִׂבְרִי), pleading that God not disappoint the psalmist's trust. Psalm 146:5 speaks of one 'whose hope (שִׂבְרוֹ) is upon Yahweh his God,' pairing hope with divine reliance. Spanish 'esperanza', French 'espérance', and German 'hoffen' uniformly translate 'hope,' capturing the forward-looking trust. The term is distinct from other Hebrew hope-words (תִּקְוָה, תּוֹחֶלֶת), suggesting a nuanced shade of expectation rooted in God's character. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: from-my-hope, his-hope | es: de-esperanza-de-mí, su-esperanza | fr: de-espérance, espérance | de: sein-hoffen, von-mein-hoffen Ps 119:116; Ps 146:5

שָׁבַר H7665 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (149×)
To break, shatter, smash; in Niphal: be broken; figuratively of hearts, spirits, power, and covenant-breaking
One of Hebrew's primary roots for violent physical breaking — smashing jars (Judg 7:20), shattering idols (Exod 23:24), breaking bones (Exod 12:46) — shabar extends powerfully into metaphor. God breaks the yoke of oppression (Lev 26:13), the proud staff of rulers (Isa 14:5), and the arm of the wicked (Ps 10:15). Yet the same root yields one of Scripture's tenderest images: the God who is near to the 'broken-hearted' (nishberey-lev, Ps 34:18) and who treasures a 'broken and contrite spirit' (Ps 51:17). Arabic kasara and Ethiopic sabara are cognates preserving the same literal-to-figurative range.

1. Qal: break, shatter (50×) Active Qal transitive breaking or shattering of physical objects — vessels, bones, yokes, gates, idols. Arabic kasara and Korean 부수다/꺾다 match directly. This foundational sense covers Gideon's jars (Judg 7:20), the Passover prohibition against breaking bones (Exod 12:46), and the breaking of yokes as liberation metaphor (Lev 26:13). BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: He-broke, He-shattered, I-broke | es: He-quebrado, Y-quebraré, he-quebrado | fr: brisement, briser, et-briser | de: ich-zerbrach, und-zerbrach, und-zerbrechen Gen 19:9; Exod 12:46; Lev 11:33; Lev 26:13; Lev 26:19

2. Niphal: be broken (46×) Niphal passive: being broken or becoming shattered, whether physically (a broken vessel, Lev 6:28) or metaphorically (a broken nation). Arabic inkasara (Form VII passive) and Swahili -vunjwa/-vunjika precisely mirror the passive morphology. Eli's neck is broken in his fatal fall (1 Sam 4:18); ships are broken by east winds (Ezek 27:26). BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: Broken, and-be-broken, and-shall-be-broken | es: Fue-quebrada, está-quebrantada, fueron-quebrantados | fr: briser, devra-être-brisé, et-briser | de: soll-sein-gebrochen, und-zerbrechen, zerbrach Exod 22:10; Exod 22:14; Lev 6:28; Lev 15:12; 1Sam 4:18

3. Piel: shatter, smash thoroughly (35×) Piel intensive: thorough smashing or systematic destruction — breaking hail that shatters every plant (Exod 9:25), Moses shattering the tablets (Exod 32:19), or the command to demolish pagan altars (Exod 23:24). Arabic kassara (Form II intensive) parallels the morphological intensification. The repeated Piel in Exodus 23:24 underscores the totality demanded. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: He-breaks, I-will-shatter, You-shattered | es: Y-quebró, quebranta, quebrantaste | fr: brisa-en-haut, brisement, briser | de: brach-hinauf, du-soll-Umbruch, du-soll-shatter Exod 9:25; Exod 23:24; Exod 32:19; Exod 34:1

4. Niphal participle: broken state (14×) Niphal participle used adjectivally for an enduring state of brokenness, especially of the human heart and spirit. Psalm 34:18 declares God near to the nishberey-lev ('broken of heart') and Psalm 51:17 pairs lev nishbar ('a broken heart') with ruakh nidakah ('a crushed spirit'). Arabic munkasir and Korean 상한 confirm the metaphorical extension from physical to emotional fracture. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: and-the-broken, and-the-one-being-broken, broken | es: Y-la-quebrada, a-los-quebrantados-de, a-los-quebrantados-de- | fr: briser, brisé, et-briser | de: der-zerbrach, gebrochen, und-zerbrach Lev 22:22; Ps 34:18; Ps 51:17; Ps 124:7

5. (1×) A unique Hifil usage at Isaiah 66:9 where God asks whether he would 'bring to the breaking point' — cause labor contractions — and not deliver. The birthing metaphor repurposes the breaking root for the rupture of labor, a vivid image of national rebirth. Spanish haré nacer ('I will cause to be born') captures the creative paradox. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: bring-to-the-point-of-birth | es: haré-nacer | fr: briser | de: zerbrechen Isa 66:9

6. (1×) At Lamentations 1:15, shabar appears in the context of treading the winepress, where the Lord 'crushes' the virgin daughter of Judah. The image merges physical trampling with anguished personification. Spanish para quebrantar and the domain shift toward bodily suffering distinguish this from ordinary breaking. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: to-crush | es: para-quebrantar | fr: à-brisement | de: zerbrach Lam 1:15

7. (1×) Jeremiah 8:21 uses a first-person Niphal or Hophal: 'I am broken' or 'I am wounded,' expressing the prophet's visceral grief over his people's destruction. The personal, emotional register — English 'I am wounded,' Spanish estoy quebrantado — marks this as an interior, empathetic use of the breaking metaphor. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: I-am-wounded | es: estoy-quebrantado | fr: briser | de: der-ich-zerbrach Jer 8:21

8. (1×) Psalm 104:11 uses shabar of wild donkeys 'breaking' their thirst — that is, quenching it at desert streams. This is a unique semantic extension where breaking is applied to an abstract state (thirst) being terminated. The usage may reflect an idiom parallel to French étancher la soif ('to quench thirst'). BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: they-break | es: quiebran | fr: briser | de: zerbrach Ps 104:11

שָׁבַר H7666 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (21×)

To buy grain or provisions (Qal); to sell grain or dispense food supplies (Hifil causative).

A specialized commercial term derived from the noun for grain, denoting the buying and selling of food supplies. The Qal stem means 'to buy grain,' dominating the Joseph famine narrative where all nations come to Egypt to purchase food (Gen 41:57, 42:2-5). The Hifil causative flips the transaction to 'sell grain,' with Joseph himself described as 'the one who sells' (Gen 42:6, Prov 11:26). Spanish 'comprar/vender' and French 'acheter' map neatly onto this buy-sell polarity. Isaiah 55:1 transforms the commercial term into a stunning theological metaphor: 'Come, buy wine and milk without money' – grace described in marketplace language.

1. buy grain (Qal) (15×) To buy or purchase grain and food supplies, the basic Qal meaning used predominantly in the Joseph narrative during the Egyptian famine. All the earth comes to Joseph 'to buy grain' (Gen 41:57), Jacob sends his sons to Egypt to purchase food (Gen 42:2-3), and the brothers explain repeatedly that they came 'to buy food' (Gen 42:7, 10; 43:2, 4, 20). Deuteronomy 2:6 extends it beyond Egypt. Isaiah 55:1 brilliantly repurposes the commercial verb into a metaphor of grace: 'buy wine and milk without money.' Spanish 'comprar' and French 'acheter' preserve the straightforward transactional meaning. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: and-buy-, and-we-will-buy-, buy | es: compraban, comprad, compraréis | fr: [שברר], acheter-, buying | de: [שברר], du-soll-kaufen, kauft Gen 41:57; Gen 42:2; Gen 42:3; Gen 42:5; Gen 42:7

2. sell grain (Hifil/causative) (6×) The Hifil causative meaning 'to sell grain' or 'to dispense provisions,' the complementary act to buying. Joseph is called 'the one who sells' to all the people of the land (Gen 42:6), and Proverbs 11:26 contrasts the one who withholds grain with 'the one who sells it,' blessing the generous seller. Amos 8:5-6 uses both buy and sell senses in condemning merchants eager to resume trading after the Sabbath. Spanish clearly distinguishes 'vender/venderemos' from the buying sense, while German sometimes leaves the stem distinction to context. SELLING AND COMMERCE
en: and-sold, and-we-will-sell, him-who-sells | es: el-que-vende, me-venderás, venderemos | fr: acheter-du-grain, et-acheter-du-grain, et-vendit | de: [ונשבירה], [משבירי], [נשבירי] Gen 41:56; Gen 42:6; Deut 2:28; Prov 11:26; Amos 8:5

שֶׁבֶר H7667 Prep-m / N-mp (44×)

Breaking, fracture, breach; destruction, ruin; wound, affliction; interpretation of a dream; crashing waves

From the root shavar ('to break'), this noun captures every shade of shattering — from the snap of a potter's vessel to the ruin of an entire nation. Its prophetic usage is overwhelming: Jeremiah alone uses it over a dozen times for the catastrophic 'breaking' of Judah and her neighbors, often in the haunting phrase shever bat-'ammi, 'the wound of the daughter of my people' (Jer 6:14; 8:11, 21). Isaiah, Nahum, and the wisdom literature deploy it for the destruction that follows pride (Prov 16:18: 'pride goes before destruction'). A completely separate homonymic sense appears in Judges 7:15, where Gideon hears a dream and its shivro — 'its interpretation' — likely from a different Semitic root related to Akkadian shabaru. At the margins, the plural form describes geological breaches (Ps 60:4) and even the terrifying crash of ocean breakers (Job 41:25).

1. destruction, ruin (catastrophic) (26×) The dominant prophetic sense of catastrophic destruction, ruin, or national collapse — appearing in 26 occurrences concentrated in Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Proverbs. This is the shever of judgment oracles: the shattering of cities, kingdoms, and proud individuals. Proverbs 16:18 crystallized it into a proverb known worldwide: 'pride goes before destruction (shever).' Spanish quebranto/quebrantamiento and German Bruch ('break') consistently map to this macro-level devastation. Isaiah 1:28 and 15:5 deploy it for Judah's and Moab's ruin; Jeremiah 48:3-5 uses it three times in a single oracle against

Moab. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: and-destruction, and-destruction-of, and-ruin | es: Quebranto, Y-quebrantamiento-de, es-tu-quebranto | fr: brisement, brisure, et-brisement | de: Bruch, und-zerbrach, welcher-segnete Prov 16:18; Prov 17:19; Prov 18:12; Isa 1:28; Isa 15:5

2. breaking, fracture (physical) (8×) The concrete physical sense of a break, fracture, or breaking of an object or body part — covering 8 occurrences in legal and wisdom texts. Leviticus 21:19 and 24:20 use it in the lex talionis: 'fracture for fracture' (shever tachat shever), where the legal precision demands a literal, anatomical meaning. Isaiah 30:14 compares judgment to the 'breaking of a potter's vessel, shattered so ruthlessly that not a shard remains.' Spanish fractura and French brisement preserve the clean physical sense. Proverbs 15:4 extends it metaphorically: 'a perverse tongue is a shever of spirit.' DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: a-broken, break, breaking | es: Fractura, como-quebradura-de, fractura | fr: brisement, briser, comme-brisement | de: Bruch, Umbruch, ein-gebrochen Lev 21:19; Lev 24:20; Prov 15:4

3. wound, affliction (personal hurt) (7×) A wound or affliction requiring healing — 7 occurrences characterized by pairing with rapha ('to heal') or related medical vocabulary. Jeremiah's great lament over Jerusalem yields the recurring phrase 'they have healed the wound (shever) of my people lightly' (Jer 6:14; 8:11), where the prophets indict superficial remedies for deep spiritual injury. Isaiah 30:26 promises God will 'bind up the wound (shever) of his people and heal the blow of his wound.' Spanish quebranto de and German Bruch in these contexts carry the personal, medical nuance of an injury that cries out for treatment, distinguishing this from the irreversible ruin of sense 1. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: my-wound, of-His-people, the-wound-of | es: el-quebranto-de, quebradura-de, quebranto-de | fr: brisement | de: Bruch, zerbrach Isa 30:26; Jer 6:14; Jer 8:11; Jer 8:21; Jer 10:19

4. interpretation (of a dream) (1×) The interpretation of a dream — a single occurrence in Judges 7:15 standing apart from all other senses. When Gideon overhears a Midianite soldier recount a dream and 'its interpretation' (shivro), the word likely derives from a distinct homonymic root cognate with Akkadian shabaru ('to interpret, divine'). Spanish interpretacion and German Interpretation confirm this wholly separate semantic domain. The multilingual evidence is unanimous in treating this as 'interpretation' rather than 'breaking,' supporting the view that Hebrew preserves two distinct shever roots that have fallen together in form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: its-interpretation | es: su-interpretación | fr: son-interpretation | de: sein-interpretation Judg 7:15

5. breaches, cracks (structural plural) (1×) Structural breaches or cracks requiring repair — a single plural occurrence in Psalm 60:4 [Hebrew 60:4], where the psalmist pleads 'heal its breaches (shevareha),' speaking of the land fractured as if by an earthquake after military defeat. Spanish grietas ('cracks') precisely captures the structural-geological metaphor. The plural form and the appeal to 'heal' (rapha) place this at the intersection of senses 2 (physical fracture) and 3 (wound needing healing), applied to the land itself as a wounded body. BREAKING AND SHATTERING
en: its-fractures | es: sus-grietas | fr: brisure | de: sein-fractures Ps 60:2

6. breakers (crashing waves) (1×) Crashing waves or breakers of the sea — a single occurrence in Job 41:25 (Hebrew 41:17) within the Leviathan poem, where the mighty sea creature's thrashing causes shavarim, 'crashes' or 'breakers.' Spanish quebrantos ('smashings') and French brisement ('breaking') preserve the root's core meaning while the maritime context transforms it into the thundering impact of water. This extends the noun's semantic range from human destruction to the raw, terrifying power of the untamed sea, fitting Job's theological meditation on forces beyond human control. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: at-the-crashing | es: de-quebrantos | fr: de-brisement | de: Bruch Job 41:25

שֶׁבֶר H7668 N-ms (9×)
Grain or cereal foodstuff, especially as a commodity for purchase and trade.
A noun referring to grain as a purchasable commodity, distinguished from the more general word for grain (דָּגָן) by its emphasis on commercial exchange. Nearly all occurrences appear in the Joseph narrative (Genesis 42-44), where Jacob's sons travel to Egypt to buy grain during the famine. The word also appears in Amos 8:5, where dishonest merchants impatiently wait for the Sabbath to end so they can sell grain at inflated prices, and in Nehemiah 10:32 regarding Sabbath commerce. English 'grain,' Spanish 'grano,' German 'Getreide,' and French 'grain' all converge on the same agricultural-commercial meaning.

grain, foodstuff for trade (9×) Grain or cereal foodstuff viewed primarily as a trade commodity, something bought and sold in times of need. The concentrated usage in Genesis 42-44 (Gen 42:1-2, 19, 26; 43:2; 44:2; 47:14) frames this word within the Joseph famine narrative, where acquiring שֶׁבֶר becomes the driving force of the plot. Amos 8:5 extends the commercial dimension, depicting corrupt grain merchants who cheat with false measures. BDB suggests an etymological connection to 'breaking' (i.e., threshed grain), underscoring the processed, market-ready character of the foodstuff. GRAIN AND WHEAT
en: for-the-grain, grain, grain-for | es: el-grano, grano, grano-de | fr: [שבר], grain, grain-pour | de: Getreide, [שבר], das-Getreide Gen 42:1; Gen 42:2; Gen 42:19; Gen 42:26; Gen 43:2

שֶׁבֶר H7669 N-proper-ms (1×)
Sheber (personal name of a Calebite)
This is the name of a Calebite man mentioned in the genealogies of Judah. He appears in 1 Chronicles 2:48 as one born to Caleb by his concubine Maacah. The name may be related to the Hebrew word for 'breaking' or 'fracture,' though as a proper name its meaning would be symbolic rather than literal. Such names sometimes commemorated circumstances of birth or expressed parental hopes. The genealogical context situates Sheber within the influential Calebite clan of Judah.

(1×) A personal name of a descendant of Caleb, appearing in the Chronicles genealogy. First Chronicles 2:48 identifies Sheber as a son of Caleb's concubine Maacah. The name appears untranslated in most language versions (French and German retain the Hebrew form), while Spanish renders it as 'Seber' with adapted spelling. As a personal name within Judah's genealogical records, it marks this individual's place in the Calebite lineage. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Shever | es: Seber | fr: [שבר] | de: [שבר] 1Chr 2:48

שִׁבָּרוֹן H7670 Prep-b / N-msc (2×)
breaking, crushing; violent shattering or emotional distress
A noun meaning breaking or crushing. Ezekiel 21:6 uses 'breaking of the loins' to describe emotional anguish and physical collapse. Jeremiah 17:18 calls for enemies to receive 'double crushing'—intensified destruction. The term evokes both physical violence and the psychological devastation that accompanies judgment.

(2×) Denotes shattering or crushing, literal or figurative. Ezekiel 21:6 employs 'breaking of the loins' (שִׁבְרוֹן מָתְנַיִם) parallel to 'bitterness' (מְרִירוּת), describing the visceral collapse of strength under divine judgment—knees buckle, courage fails. Jeremiah 17:18 calls down 'double crushing' (שִׁבָּרוֹן מִשְׁנֶה, if emended from MT's שִׁכָּרוֹן 'drunkenness') upon persecutors. Spanish 'quebrantamiento' (shattering) and French 'brisure' (breaking) capture the violent fracturing. The term bridges physical destruction and emotional devastation, making it apt for judgment oracles. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: breaking, with-breaking-of | es: con-quebranto-de, quebrantamiento | fr: [שברון], brisure | de: [בשברון], [שברון] Jer 17:18; Ezek 21:6

שִׁבְרַי H7671 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)
Shebarim (place name, possibly meaning 'the quarries' or 'the breaking places')
This place name appears in Joshua 7:5 during the account of Israel's defeat at Ai after Achan's sin. The Israelite forces fled from Ai's defenders 'as far as Shebarim,' suggesting it was a known location near Ai. The name likely derives from a word meaning 'breaking' or 'fractures,' possibly referring to quarries, broken ground, or steep descent where soldiers broke ranks in flight. The definite article in Hebrew ('the Shebarim') suggests it was a recognized geographical feature, though its exact location remains unknown. The name ironically echoes the 'breaking' of Israel's courage described in the same verse.

(1×) A geographical location near Ai where fleeing Israelite soldiers ran during their defeat in Joshua 7:5. The name, meaning something like 'the breaks' or 'the quarries,' may describe broken terrain, steep descents, or quarried stone areas. The Spanish 'Sebarim' and other language versions preserve the Hebrew name with slight phonetic adaptation. The location marked the extent of Israel's panicked retreat, where their hearts 'melted' in fear—a breaking of courage matching the name's root meaning. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Shevarim | es: Sebarim | fr: le-Shevarim | de: der-Shevarim Josh 7:5

שְׁבַשׁ H7672 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

be perplexed, confused (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb describes a state of mental confusion or perplexity. It appears in Daniel 5:9 describing King Belshazzar's troubled state after seeing the mysterious handwriting on the wall. The word conveys being emotionally and mentally disturbed, thrown into confusion, or thoroughly perplexed. Related Semitic languages use similar roots for concepts of entanglement, confusion, or disarrangement. The context in Daniel emphasizes the king's alarmed bewilderment at the supernatural writing that neither he nor his advisors could interpret.

(1×) To be perplexed, confused, or mentally disturbed. Daniel 5:9 uses this Aramaic participle to describe King Belshazzar's state after witnessing the divine handwriting: he and his nobles were thoroughly perplexed. The Spanish 'estaban perplejos' (they were perplexed) and French 'troubler' (to trouble/disturb) both capture the cognitive and emotional disturbance. The term suggests more than mild puzzlement—it indicates profound confusion that disturbed the king's composure and alarmed his court. PERPLEXED AT LOSS

en: perplexed | es: estaban-perplejos | fr: troubler | de: [משתבשין] Dan 5:9

שָׁבַת H7673a V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (69×)

To cease, desist, rest; in Hifil, to cause to cease, put an end to, remove, or abolish; to observe Sabbath rest.

Shabat is the verbal root behind one of the most iconic words in all of Scripture — Shabbat, the Sabbath. Yet the verb itself is not primarily about rest; its core meaning is cessation, the stopping of activity. God 'ceased' from his work on the seventh day (Gen 2:2-3), the manna 'ceased' when Israel entered the land (Josh 5:12), and summer and winter 'shall not cease' as long as the earth endures (Gen 8:22). In its Hifil causative stem, the verb takes on a forceful, even violent edge — God 'puts an end to' festivals (Hos 2:11), 'abolishes' idolatrous priests (2 Kgs 23:5), and 'removes' leaven from Israelite houses (Exod 12:15). The Arabic cognate sabata ('cut off, interrupt') preserves the verb's original sharpness, while the connection to Akkadian shabātu ('cease, be completed') anchors it in ancient Mesopotamian time-reckoning. The theological genius of the Hebrew Bible is in making cessation itself holy.

1. cause to cease, put an end to (33×) Hifil causative: to cause to cease, put an end to — the largest sense at 33 occurrences, where God or a human agent actively terminates an ongoing activity, condition, or institution. God will 'cause to cease' the mirth of Israel (Hos 2:11), will 'put an end to' war in the land (Lev 26:6), and Pharaoh accuses Moses of making the people 'cease' from their labors (Exod 5:5). Arabic abṭala/awqafa ('nullify/halt') and Spanish hacer cesar ('cause to stop') both select causative cessation vocabulary. The objects terminated range from joy and sacrifice to warfare and memory, giving this sense a sweeping destructive-restorative range in prophetic discourse. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: And-I-will-cause-to-cease, I-have-made-cease, I-have-made-to-cease | es: Y-haré-cesar, he-hecho-cesar, y-hará-cesar | fr: cesser, et-cesser, et-je-fera-cause-à-cesser | de: ruhen, und-ich-bringe-zurueck, und-ich-wird-cause-zu-cease Exod 5:5; Lev 2:13; Lev 26:6; Deut 32:26; Josh 22:25

2. cease, come to an end (14×) Qal intransitive: to cease, come to an end — 14 occurrences describing natural or circumstantial cessation without an explicit agent causing it. Seedtime and harvest 'shall not cease' (Gen 8:22), the manna 'ceased' on the morrow (Josh 5:12), and Nehemiah's work on the wall did not 'cease' (Neh 6:3). Arabic inqaṭaʿa ('be cut off, stop') and Korean 그치다 ('come to a stop') both capture the intransitive self-cessation. Distinguished from sense 1 by the absence of a causative agent — things simply stop. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: Ceases, Has-ceased, and-ceased | es: Cesó, Ha-cesado, Y-cesaron | fr: – cesser, [חשבת], cesser | de: Sabbat, liess-ruhen, ruhen Gen 8:22; Josh 5:12; Neh 6:3; Job 32:1; Prov 22:10

3. rest, observe Sabbath (11×) Qal intransitive: to rest, observe Sabbath — 11 occurrences where the cessation from labor is deliberate, commanded, and often sacred. God rested on the seventh day (Gen 2:2-3), the people rested on the seventh day (Exod 16:30), and even the land itself must 'keep Sabbath' (Lev 25:2). Arabic istarāḥa ('take rest') and Swahili kupumzika ('to rest') both shift from cessation to repose vocabulary. Korean 쉬다 ('rest') likewise distinguishes this from mere stopping. The theological force is that this rest is not passive — it is the culminating act of creation, a cessation that is itself a doing. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-he-rested, and-rested, he-rested | es: Y-descansó, descansará, descansarás | fr: [שבתה], cela-fera-repos, cela-se-reposa | de: du-soll-ruhen, er-ruhte, es-ruhte Gen 2:2; Gen 2:3; Exod 16:30; Exod 23:12; Exod 31:17

4. remove, abolish (5×) Hifil causative with emphasis on removal or abolition of specific objects — 5 occurrences where the 'causing to cease' involves physically removing or eliminating altars, idols, leaven, or personnel. Josiah 'abolished' the idolatrous priests (2 Kgs 23:5), 'removed' the horses dedicated to the sun (2 Kgs 23:11), and Israel must 'remove' leaven from their houses before Passover (Exod 12:15). Arabic abṭala/uzīlū ('abolish/remove') and Korean 제거하다 ('eliminate') select specific removal vocabulary. Distinguished from sense 1 by the concreteness of the object removed — not an abstract activity but a physical thing that is taken away. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: You-remove, and-he-abolished, and-he-removed | es: Hiciste-cesar, Y-eliminó, Y-quitó | fr: et-il-abolished, et-il-ôta, le-cesser | de: du-haben-gemacht-aufhören, du-remove, du-soll-entfernen Exod 12:15; 2Kgs 23:5; 2Kgs 23:11; Ps 89:44; Ps 119:119

5. be brought to an end (4×) Nifal passive/middle: to be brought to an end, be made to cease — 4 occurrences where the subject undergoes cessation passively. The fortress 'will cease' from Ephraim (Isa 17:3), the high places 'will be made desolate' and caused to cease (Ezek 6:6), and pomp 'will be brought to an end' (Ezek 30:18). Arabic yantahī/yabṭulu ('comes to an end') and Spanish cesará (passive/middle) confirm the voice distinction from the active Hifil of sense 1. All four occurrences appear in prophetic judgment oracles, giving this passive a distinctly eschatological coloring. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: and-ceases, and-is-ended-, and-shall-cease | es: Y-cesará, y-cesará, y-cesen | fr: et-cesser | de: und-ruhen Isa 17:3; Ezek 6:6; Ezek 30:18; Ezek 33:28

6. still, silence (2×) Hifil causative meaning to still, silence, or quell — 2 occurrences where the emphasis is specifically on silencing opposition or disturbance rather than general cessation. In Ps 8:2, God ordains praise from children 'to still the enemy and the avenger,' and in Prov 18:18, casting lots 'silences' contentions between the mighty. Arabic sakkana/askata ('quiet, silence') captures the specifically acoustic or adversarial quelling that distinguishes this from the broader 'cause to cease' of sense 1. The objects silenced are personal agents (enemies, disputants) rather than abstract activities, marking a distinct interpersonal conflict-resolution nuance. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: causes-to-cease, to-still | es: hace-cesar, para-hacer-cesar | fr: cesser, à-cesser | de: liess-ruhen, zu-noch Ps 8:2; Prov 18:18

שָׁבַת H7673b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (2×)

keep, observe (sabbath); to rest or cause to rest in observance of sacred time

This denominative verb derives from the noun שַׁבָּת (sabbath) and means to keep or observe the sabbath rest. The land itself is described as resting a sabbath to the Lord in Leviticus 25:2, establishing the sabbatical year principle. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize rest (Spanish descansará, French repos, German Ruhe), reflecting the core idea of cessation from labor. Both occurrences involve observing sacred rest periods—the weekly sabbath and the sabbatical year—as acts of covenant faithfulness.

(2×) The verb appears in contexts commanding sabbath observance, whether the weekly rest (Leviticus 23:32) or the land's sabbatical rest (Leviticus 25:2). The consistent translation pattern across languages ('shall rest,' 'devra repos,' 'soll Ruhe') highlights the covenantal requirement to cease from ordinary activity. The land 'keeping sabbath to the Lord' personifies creation's participation in sacred rhythm. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-shall-rest, you-shall-rest | es: descansaréis, y-descansará | fr: et-devra-repos, tu-devra-repos | de: du-soll-Ruhe, und-soll-Ruhe Lev 23:32; Lev 25:2

שֶׁבֶת H7674 Adj-fsc / 3ms (3×)

cessation, sitting, loss of time—stopping work or remaining idle

This noun appears in contexts involving cessation from activity or loss of productive time. Exodus 21:19 refers to compensation for injury causing someone to miss work ('his loss of time'). Proverbs 20:3 associates it with ceasing from strife. Isaiah 30:7's use is textually uncertain but may involve sitting still or inactivity. The word captures the concept of stopped labor or enforced rest, whether from injury, wisdom, or indolence.

(3×) The three occurrences show semantic range from enforced rest due to injury (Exodus 21:19) to honorable cessation from quarreling (Proverbs 20:3) to possible idle sitting (Isaiah 30:7, though the text is disputed). Spanish uses 'reposo' (rest) and 'cesar' (cease), while translations vary on whether the core is rest, sitting, or cessation. The Exodus passage most clearly shows the economic dimension: loss of work time requiring compensation. CEASING AND STOPPING en: his-sitting, to-cease | es: cesar, quietud, su-reposo | fr: sabbat, son-sitting, שבת | de: Sabbat, [שבת], sein-sitzend Exod 21:19; Prov 20:3; Isa 30:7

שֶׁבֶת H7675 Prep-b (4×)

seat, sitting, dwelling place

This noun, properly an infinitive from 'sit/dwell,' denotes a seat, dwelling place, or location. It appears in phrases describing throne construction, metaphorical thrones of violence, territorial designations, and possibly 'on the spot.' The term's infinitival origin gives it flexibility across spatial and abstract domains.

(4×) Designates a seat, dwelling, or place. In 1 Kings 10:19 (= 2 Chronicles 9:18), 'the place of the seat' (מְקוֹם הַשֶּׁבֶת) describes Solomon's throne construction. Amos 6:3 condemns those bringing near 'a seat of violence' (שֶׁבֶת חָמָס)—an enthroned reign of violence. Numbers 21:15 uses 'toward the dwelling of Ar' (לְיֹשֶׁבֶת עָר), the settlement's location. Obadiah 3 speaks of 'his dwelling' (שִׁבְתּוֹ). 2 Samuel 23:7 is obscure: 'they are burned on the spot' (בַּשֶּׁבֶת) or possibly textually corrupt. The noun derives from the infinitive of יָשַׁב ('sit, dwell'), giving it locative and abstract senses. Multilingual glosses vary: Spanish 'asiento/asiento de,' French 'assis/repos,' German 'Sabbat' (confused with שַׁבָּת). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dwelling-of-, his-dwelling, on-the-spot | es: el-asiento, el-asiento-de, en-el-sitio | fr: de-sa-demeure;, le-assis, repos | de: Sabbat, auf-der-spot, der-sitzend 2Sam 23:7; 1Kgs 10:19; Amos 6:3; Obad 1:3

שַׁבָּת H7676 Conj-w (111×)

Sabbath; the seventh day of rest and worship, used of weekly observance, sabbatical years, and as a sign of God's covenant.

Shabbat is one of the most culturally defining words in the Hebrew Bible, rooted in the verb shabat ('to cease, rest'). Far more than a calendar marker, it names an institution that touches creation theology, covenant identity, and eschatological hope. The weekly seventh-day rest (Exod 20:8-10) is its heartland, but the word extends to sabbatical-year rest for the land (Lev 25:4), solemn festival rest days, and God's own possessive claim over the institution — 'my sabbaths' as covenant sign (Exod 31:13). The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform: Spanish sábado, French sabbat, and German Sabbat all transliterate rather than translate, reflecting the word's irreducible cultural weight. Even languages like Korean (안식일, 'rest-day') and Swahili preserve the 'cessation' core while acknowledging its sacred distinctiveness.

1. weekly Sabbath day (68×) The weekly Sabbath day — the seventh day set apart for rest and worship, commanding the largest cluster at 68 occurrences. This is the Sabbath of the Decalogue (Exod 20:8-10), the manna narrative (Exod 16:25-29), and prophetic calls to honor the day (Isa 58:13). Spanish el sábado, French le sabbat, and German der Sabbat all retain the Hebrew loanword rather than using native 'rest-day' vocabulary, confirming its status as a proper institution name rather than a generic descriptor. Korean 안식일 ('rest-day') and Arabic السبت (as-sabt) each reflect the cessation root differently but converge on a dedicated lexical item for this day alone. SABBATH AND WEEK

en: the-Sabbath, the-Shabbat, the-sabbath | es: el-shabat, el-sábado | fr: der-sabbat, le-Shabbat, le-sabbat | de: der-Sabbat, der-Shabbat Exod 16:25; Exod 16:26; Exod 16:29; Exod 20:8; Exod 20:10

2. my sabbaths (covenantal) (15×) God's sabbaths as covenantal possession — 15 occurrences where the possessive 'my sabbaths' (shabbtotay) marks the institution as a sign between God and Israel. Concentrated in Exodus 31:13, Leviticus 19:3, 19:30, 26:2, and the Ezekiel sabbath-profanation oracles (Ezek 20:12-24; 22:8; 23:38). The first-person possessive transforms Sabbath from a temporal regulation into a relational marker — God stakes personal ownership. Spanish mis sábados and German mein Sabbate both preserve the possessive force. Isaiah 56:4 extends this covenantal claim to foreigners and eunuchs who 'hold fast my sabbaths,' making covenant inclusion the theological pivot. SABBATH AND WEEK

en: My-sabbaths, and-from-sabbaths-my, my-Shabbatot | es: mis-sábados, sábados, sábados-míos | fr: et-sabbat, mes-sabbats, mon-sabbaths | de: Sabbat, Sabbate-mein, mein-Sabbate Exod 31:13; Lev 19:3; Lev 19:30; Lev 26:2; Isa 56:4

3. sabbath rest (construct/intensified) (10×) Sabbath in construct state denoting solemn or intensified rest — 10 occurrences of shabbat shabbaton ('a sabbath of complete rest') and similar construct forms. This distinctive doubling appears for the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:31), the weekly Sabbath commandment (Exod 31:15; 35:2), the sabbatical year (Lev 25:4), and the first formulation of Sabbath rest in Exod 16:23. The construct intensifies the cessation — not merely rest but rest-of-rest, a superlative. French sabbat-de and German Sabbat-von attempt to render the construct, while Spanish Shabat-de preserves the Hebrew texture. This form signals the most solemn, non-negotiable quality of the cessation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-sabbath-of, on-its-Sabbath, sabbath-of | es: Shabat-de-, Sábado-de, el-sábado-de | fr: sabbat, sabbat-de, sabbat-de- | de: Sabbat, Sabbat-von, Sabbat-von- Exod 16:23; Exod 31:15; Exod 35:2; Lev 16:31; Lev 23:3

4. its/her/your sabbaths (possessive) (10×) Possessive sabbaths of the land, city, or people — 10 occurrences where sabbaths 'belong to' an entity other than God. Leviticus 26:34-35 is the theological center: the exiled land will 'enjoy its sabbaths' that Israel failed to observe, a striking personification where the soil itself rests. Leviticus 25:8 counts 'seven sabbaths of years,' and 2 Chronicles 36:21 interprets the exile through this lens. Spanish sus sábados and German Sabbate-von both render the possessive. The land-as-sabbath-keeper imagery connects ecological rest to covenant faithfulness in a way unique to this sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-her-sabbaths, in-your-sabbaths, its-Sabbaths | es: en-vuestros-sábados, los-sábados-de, sus-sábados | fr: dans-ton-sabbats, et-sabbat, sabbat | de: Sabbat, Sabbate-von, dein-Sabbat Lev 23:32; Lev 23:38; Lev 25:8; Lev 26:34

5. sabbaths (plural, collective observance) (8×) Sabbaths in the plural as collective institution — 8 occurrences referring to regular sabbath observance as a category alongside new moons and festivals (1 Chr 23:31; 2 Chr 2:4; 8:13; 31:3; Neh 10:33). The liturgical calendar lists place sabbaths alongside burnt offerings and feast days, treating the word as an institutional plural rather than counted individual days. French sabbats, Spanish los sábados, and German Sabbate all use standard pluralization. Lamentations 1:7 mourns Jerusalem remembering 'all her pleasant things from days of old,' and 2:6 describes God causing 'sabbath and appointed feast to be forgotten' — the collective plural marks the entire rhythm of sacred time now lost. SABBATH AND WEEK

en: and-at-the-sabbaths, for-the-Sabbaths, on-the-sabbaths | es: en-los-sábados, los-sábados, para-los-sábados | fr: et-sabbat, sabbat, sabbats | de: Sabbat, Sabbate, in-Sabbate Lev 23:15; 1Chr 23:31; 2Chr 2:4; 2Chr 8:13; 2Chr 31:3

שַׁבָּתוֹן H7677 N-ms (11×)

A solemn rest or sabbatism, divinely appointed complete cessation from labor on sacred occasions

An intensified form related to 'Sabbath,' denoting not merely a day off but a complete, sacred rest appointed by God. It first appears when Israel is told the seventh day shall be a shabbaton of holy rest to the LORD (Exod 16:23), even before Sinai's formal legislation. The word is applied to the weekly Sabbath (Exod 31:15; 35:2), the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:31; 23:32), the first and seventh days of Tabernacles (Lev 23:39), and the sabbatical year when the land itself rests (Lev 25:4–5). It carries an undertone of solemn completeness that ordinary 'rest' does not quite capture.

solemn rest (sabbath observance) (11×) A solemn, complete rest mandated by divine instruction for sacred occasions — the weekly Sabbath (Exod 16:23; 31:15; 35:2), the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:31; 23:32), festival days (Lev 23:24, 39), and the sabbatical year of land rest (Lev 25:4–5). Multilingual translations highlight the intensified quality: Spanish distinguishes 'reposo solemne' (solemn repose) from ordinary 'descanso,' Arabic uses ʾ (sabbat), Korean 안식 (ansik, rest/sabbath), and Hindi पूर्ण-विश्राम (complete rest) — all signaling a rest more profound and sacred than mere cessation of labor. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: a-rest, complete-rest, rest | es: descanso, reposo-solemne | fr: achever-repos, complet-repos, repos | de: Sabbate, ein-Ruhe, ruhen Exod 16:23; Exod 31:15; Exod 35:2; Lev 16:31; Lev 23:3

שַׁבְתַּי H7678 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Shabbethai—a Levite name in the post-exilic community

This personal name identifies a Levite who appears in three post-exilic contexts: opposing Ezra's investigation of foreign marriages (Ezra 10:15), helping explain the Law (Nehemiah 8:7), and serving in temple oversight (Nehemiah 11:16). The name likely derives from 'Sabbath,' suggesting the bearer was born on or associated with that day. The same individual may appear in all three passages, showing continuity in Levitical leadership.

(3×) All three occurrences are in Ezra-Nehemiah, identifying a Levite named Shabbetai involved in post-exilic religious leadership. Spanish 'Sabetai' and transliterations vary slightly across versions. The Ezra 10:15 passage shows him among those opposing the assembly's approach to mixed marriages, while Nehemiah 8:7 and 11:16 depict him in teaching and oversight roles. The recurrence suggests an influential figure in the restoration community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shabbethai, and-Shabbetai, and-Shabbetay | es: Sabetai, Y-Sabetai, y-Shabetai | fr: [ושבתי], [שבתי] | de: [ושבתי], [שבתי] Ezra 10:15; Neh 8:7; Neh 11:16

שָׁגָא H7679 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (2×)

make great, magnify, laud; Hiphil form emphasizing causative action of making something great or praising

This Aramaic loan word appears only in Job, meaning to make great or to magnify in praise. Job 12:23 describes God as the one who 'makes nations great,' while Job 36:24 exhorts Job to 'magnify his work.' The Spanish engrandecer and French agrandir capture the causative sense well. Elihu's speech in Job 36 calls Job to recognize and extol God's mighty deeds rather than question them. This rare verb reflects Job's elevated poetic register and its engagement with wisdom vocabulary from cognate Semitic languages.

(2×) The Hiphil causative stem indicates active magnification: God makes nations great (Job 12:23), and humans should magnify God's work (Job 36:24). The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'El-que-engrandece-a,' French 'agrandir') emphasizes the transitive nature—someone actively makes something great, whether God enlarging nations or humanity praising divine works. The parallel contexts shift from God as subject to human obligation. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: making-great, you-should-magnify | es: El-que-engrandece-a, engrandezcas | fr: agrandir | de: [מְשַׁגִּיא], [תְּשַׁגִּיא] Job 12:23; Job 36:24

שְׁגָא H7680 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

grow great, increase—to multiply or become abundant (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb means to grow great, increase, or multiply. It appears in Persian-period official correspondence (Ezra 4:22) warning against damage increasing to the empire, and in royal greetings wishing for peace to multiply (Daniel 4:1, 6:25). The term conveys expansion or augmentation, whether of harm or blessing, and reflects the Aramaic administrative language used in these contexts.

(3×) The three uses divide between warning against increasing royal loss (Ezra 4:22) and blessing-formula wishes for multiplied peace (Daniel 4:1, 6:25). Spanish 'multiplicar' (multiply) and related terms appear across translations. The Ezra passage uses it negatively in a rhetorical question about why damage should grow, while the Daniel texts employ it in the standard Aramaic greeting formula 'May your peace increase,' parallel to Hebrew shalom greetings. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: may-increase, should-grow | es: crecería, sea-multiplicada | fr: [יִשְׁגֵא], se-multiplier | de: [יִשְׁגֵא] Ezra 4:22; Dan 4:1; Dan 6:25

שָׁגֵה H7681 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shageh (personal name, father of one of David's warriors)

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 11:34, identifying the father of one of David's mighty warriors. The genealogical note helps distinguish this particular hero from others with similar names. Little else is known about Shageh himself; his significance lies in being the father of a member of David's elite military force. Such patronymic identifications were crucial in a culture where many individuals shared common given names. The various Septuagint renderings show textual uncertainty about the exact spelling, but the name marks this individual's connection to David's celebrated warriors.

(1×) The father of one of David's mighty men mentioned in 1 Chronicles 11:34. The name serves primarily as a patronymic identifier in the list of David's elite warriors. While nothing more is recorded about Shageh personally, his inclusion marks him as the father of a distinguished soldier in Israel's premier fighting force. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German versions reflects the treatment of this as a proper name without translatable meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shageh | es: Sage | fr: [שגה] | de: [שגה] 1Chr 11:34

שָׂגַב H7682 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (20×)

Be inaccessibly high; set on high for protection; be exalted in status or honor (Qal, Niphal, Piel, Hifil, Pual)

A verb whose core image is height that puts something beyond reach. In the Qal it describes a city wall too high to scale (Deut 2:36) or persons lifted beyond trouble (Job 5:11). The Niphal turns this into exaltation—Isaiah repeatedly applies it to the LORD alone being 'lifted high' on the coming Day (Isa 2:11, 17). In the Piel, God becomes the active protector who sets the righteous on a high crag out of danger's reach (Ps 91:14). Spanish 'poner en alto' and German 'beschützen' both capture this protective elevation that runs through the Psalms.

1. Piel: set on high, protect (6×) Piel intensive-causative: God actively places someone on an inaccessible height as refuge. Spanish 'lo pondré en alto' and English 'set on high' converge on protective elevation. Central to the Psalter's theology of divine shelter (Ps 20:1; 91:14; 107:41), where height equals safety rather than mere geography. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: I-will-set-him-on-high, and-He-lifted-high, and-has-set-on-high | es: Y-levanta, Y-levantará, lo-pondré-en-alto | fr: et-être-élevé, être-élevé | de: [וישגב], ich-wird-setzen-ihn-auf-hoch, möge-beschützen-du Ps 20:1; Ps 59:1; Ps 69:29; Ps 91:14; Ps 107:41

2. Niphal: be exalted (5×) Niphal passive-stative of exaltation applied almost exclusively to God or his name. Isaiah's refrain 'the LORD alone shall be exalted' (2:11, 17) and the hymnic 'his name alone is exalted' (Ps 148:13) show the term reserved for divine majesty. Spanish 'ensalzado' and German 'erhöht' mirror this honorific sense. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: Exalted, and-shall-be-exalted, exalted | es: ensalzado, es-exaltado, exaltado | fr: et-être-élevé, être-élevé | de: [ונשגב], [נשגב], erhöht Ps 148:13; Isa 2:11; Isa 2:17; Isa 12:4; Isa 33:5

3. Niphal: be high, lofty, inaccessible (4×) Niphal denoting physical, often forbidding height—walls about to break (Isa 30:13), a fortified city brought low (Isa 26:5), or knowledge too lofty to grasp (Ps 139:6). The multilingual evidence splits: English favors 'high/lofty' while Spanish uses 'exaltada,' showing how literal and metaphorical height blur. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: high, lofty, too-high | es: alto, exaltada | fr: être-élevé, נשגבה | de: [נשגבה], auch-hoch Ps 139:6; Prov 18:11; Isa 26:5; Isa 30:13

4. Qal: be inaccessibly high (2×) Qal stative: the simplest stem describes something inherently too high for human access. Deuteronomy 2:36 reports no city 'too high for us,' while Job 5:11 lifts the lowly to prosperity. With only two occurrences, this is the root's semantic base from which all derived stems elaborate. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE
en: are-lifted-to, was-too-high | es: fuera-demasiado-alta, son-elevados | fr: était-aussi-haut, שגבו | de: [שגבו], war-auch-hoch Deut 2:36; Job 5:11

5. Niphal: be safe, secure (1×) Niphal specialized sense of security through elevation, attested once in Proverbs 18:10: the righteous runs into the name of the LORD 'and is safe.' Spanish 'es puesto en alto' underscores that safety is the outcome of being placed high, bridging Niphal stative with Piel causative protection. SAFETY AND SECURITY
en: and-is-safe | es: y-es-puesto-en-alto | fr: et-ונשגב | de: [ונשגב] Prov 18:10

6. Hifil: exalt, make high (1×) Hifil causative: to exalt or make high, occurring in Job 36:22 of God who 'exalts by his power.' This is the active transitive counterpart to the Niphal passive exaltation, with Spanish 'exaltado' and English 'exalts' confirming the straightforward causative reading. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE
en: exalts | es: exaltado | fr: ישגיב | de: [ישגיב] Job 36:22

7. Pual: be set securely on high (1×) Pual passive of the Piel: to be placed securely on high by another's agency. Proverbs 29:25 promises that whoever trusts the LORD 'will be set on high.' Spanish 'será puesto en alto' perfectly mirrors the passive construction, confirming that the agent of elevation is God himself. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: will-be-set-on-high | es: será-puesto-en-alto | fr: ישגב | de: [ישגב] Prov 29:25

שָׁגַג H7683 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
to go astray, err, sin unintentionally
This verb denotes going astray or sinning inadvertently, without deliberate intent. Central to Israel's sacrificial system, it distinguishes sins of ignorance from high-handed rebellion. The Priestly legislation provides atonement for such errors, recognizing human fallibility while maintaining moral accountability.

(4×) Expresses erring or sinning unintentionally. Leviticus 5:18 addresses one who 'sinned inadvertently' (שָׁגָג) without knowing it. Numbers 15:28 provides atonement for 'the person who errs' (הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַשֹּׁגָגֶת, feminine participle) unintentionally. Job 12:16 declares 'with Him are the erring one and the one who leads astray' (שֹׁגֵג וּמַשְׁגֶּה) —both the deceived and deceiver. Psalm 119:67 confesses 'before I was afflicted, I went astray' (אֲנִי שָׁגֵג). The verb is crucial for distinguishing inadvertent sins (שְׁגָגָה) from defiant sins (בְּיָד רָמָה), with only the former receiving sacrificial atonement. Multilingual glosses show this: Spanish 'involontariamente,' French 'involontairement,' German 'unintentionally'—all emphasizing the non-deliberate nature. ERROR INADVERTENT SIN
en: erring, he-erred, unintentionally | es: el-que-yerra, erraba, erró | fr: errer, il-erred, involontairement | de: Krieg-going-astray, [שגג], er-irrte Lev 5:18; Num 15:28; Job 12:16; Ps 119:67

שְׁגָגָה H7684 N-fsc / 3ms (19×)
Error, inadvertence — an unintentional sin as distinct from deliberate transgression
A noun central to the Levitical sacrificial system, marking the boundary between sins committed unknowingly and those done with a 'high hand' (Num 15:25-29). Nearly every occurrence falls within Priestly legislation detailing the sin and guilt offerings required when someone errs without intent (Lev 4:2, 22, 27; 5:15, 18). The term also covers unintentional manslaughter in the cities-of-refuge legislation (Num 35:11, 15; Josh 20:3). Ecclesiastes borrows it to warn against careless vows (Eccl 5:5). French 'erreur' and Spanish 'inadvertencia' both preserve the nuance of accidental fault rather than willful rebellion.

error, inadvertence, unintentional sin (19×) A sin or fault committed through ignorance, carelessness, or inadvertence rather than deliberate defiance. This is the technical term in Priestly law for unintentional transgression, triggering specific sacrificial remedies (Lev 4:2; 5:15; Num 15:25-29). It also governs the cities-of-refuge provision for accidental homicide (Num 35:11; Josh 20:3, 9), where the Deuteronomic parallel 'without knowledge' confirms its semantic core of unwitting error. ERROR INADVERTENT SIN
en: by-mistake, error, his-error | es: como-error, error, inadvertencia-suya | fr: comme-erreur, dans-error, erreur | de: [כשגגה], [שגגה], der-erring Lev 4:2; Lev 4:22; Lev 4:27; Lev 5:15; Lev 5:18

שָׂגָא H7685a V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (2×)
grow, grow great, flourish; Qal imperfect describing natural growth and increase An Aramaism appearing exclusively in Job, this verb means to grow or flourish, particularly of plants. Job 8:11 asks rhetorically whether papyrus can grow without marsh, illustrating the necessity of proper conditions for flourishing. The English 'flourish' and 'grow,' along with Spanish crecer, capture the organic development implied. Job 8:7 promises that though Job's beginning was small, his latter end will grow exceedingly great—a prophecy of restoration. The plant imagery serves as metaphor for human prosperity dependent on divine blessing.

(2×) Natural, organic growth is the primary sense, whether literal (plants in Job 8:11) or metaphorical (Job's future prosperity in 8:7). The glosses 'can-flourish,' 'will-grow,' and Spanish 'crecerá' emphasize future potential and natural increase. The rhetorical question about papyrus growing without water (8:11) uses botanical observation to illustrate moral-spiritual truth: genuine flourishing requires proper sustenance. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: can-flourish-, will-grow | es: crecerá, ¿Crecerá | fr: ישגה | de: [ישגה] Job 8:7; Job 8:11

שָׂגָה H7685b V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (2×)
grow great, increase; Hiphil perfect indicating completed causative action of increasing riches or stature
A parallel form of the previous root, this verb describes growth and increase in both literal and figurative senses. Psalm 73:12 observes that the wicked 'increase riches' continually, posing a theological problem for the psalmist. Psalm 92:12 promises the righteous will 'grow great like the cedar,' a striking image of enduring, majestic flourishing. The French grandir and German wachsen highlight vertical growth. The contrast between contexts—wicked prospering versus righteous flourishing—shows the verb's moral neutrality; the outcome depends on who grows and how.

(2×) The Hiphil causative form indicates self-caused or divinely-granted increase: the wicked increase their wealth (Psalm 73:12), while the righteous grow great like cedars (Psalm 92:12). Spanish 'aumentan' (increase) and French 'grandir' (grow) capture both material and metaphorical growth. The cedar simile (92:12) evokes strength, permanence, and God-given stature, contrasting with the temporary prosperity of evildoers. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: he-will-grow-great, they-increase- | es: aumentan-, crecerá | fr: grandir, le-grandir | de: er-wird-wachsen-gross, sie-zunehmen- Ps 73:12; Ps 92:12

שָׁגָה H7686 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (21×)

To go astray, err, or wander; in Hifil, to lead astray; by extension, to be intoxicated or enraptured.

This verb captures the experience of veering off course, whether physically, morally, or emotionally. Its Qal stem covers both deliberate wandering from God's commands (Ps 119:21, 118) and inadvertent error through ignorance (Lev 4:13; Num 15:22). The Hifil causative warns of those who mislead others — Deuteronomy 27:18 curses the one who leads the blind astray. Most evocatively, Proverbs 5:19–20 uses the verb for the intoxicating rapture of love, asking why one would be 'enraptured' by a forbidden woman. French 'errer' and Spanish 'errar' preserve the Latin root-sense of wandering, while 'récréer' (delight) captures the Proverbs love-sense.

1. stray, wander, go astray (9×) To stray or wander from the right path, either literally or in a moral/spiritual sense. Psalm 119:21 and 119:118 speak of those who stray from God's commandments, and Proverbs 5:23 warns that the fool will die for lack of discipline, going astray in his great folly. Proverbs 20:1 says wine is a mocker — whoever is led astray (shogeh) by it is not wise. The emphasis falls on the act of deviation itself rather than its cause or intention. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: erring, he-will-go-astray, stagger | es: Vagaron, erraron, los-que-yerran | fr: errer, le-errer, s'égarer | de: [ישגה], [ישגו], [לשגות] Ps 119:21; Ps 119:118; Prov 5:23; Prov 19:27; Prov 20:1

2. err, make a mistake (6×) To commit an inadvertent error or sin through ignorance or negligence. Leviticus 4:13 and Numbers 15:22 use the verb for the congregation sinning unintentionally (shagah), and Job 6:24 and 19:4 have Job conceding hypothetically that he may have erred. First Samuel 26:21 records Saul admitting 'I have erred' (shagiti). The distinction from sense 1 lies in the lack of deliberate intent — Spanish 'errar' and French 'errer' both preserve this inadvertence. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: I-have-erred, and-I-erred, erring | es: errare, erráis, erré | fr: errer, errs, et-je-erred | de: [שגה], [שגיתי], du-irren Lev 4:13; Num 15:22; 1Sam 26:21; Job 6:24; Job 19:4

3. lead astray, cause to err (Hifil) (4×) Hifil causative: to cause someone to go astray or to mislead. Deuteronomy 27:18 pronounces a curse on whoever misleads the blind, and Proverbs 28:10 warns that the one who leads the upright astray will fall into his own pit. Job 12:16 attributes sovereign authority to God: both the deceived and the deceiver belong to Him. Psalm 119:10 is the psalmist's plea not to be allowed to wander from God's commands — a reflexive-causative nuance. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: and-causing-to-err, let-me-stray, one-misleading | es: El-que-hace-errar, el-que-hiciere-errar, me-hagas-errar | fr: errer, et-errer, un-misleading | de: [ומשגה], [משגה], eins-misleading Deut 27:18; Job 12:16; Ps 119:10; Prov 28:10

4. be intoxicated, be enraptured (2×) To be intoxicated or enraptured — a pleasurable losing of oneself, especially in love or wine. Proverbs 5:19 urges the husband to be continually enraptured (tishgeh) with his wife's love, while verse 20 asks why he would be enraptured by a stranger. The root idea of going astray is transformed into ecstatic absorption; the wandering is not moral failure but delighted abandon. Spanish 'recréate' (delight yourself) captures this positive valence. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: be-intoxicated, should-you-be-intoxicated | es: recréate, te-recrearás | fr: errer | de: [תשגה] Prov 5:19; Prov 5:20

שְׁגוּב H7687 N-proper-ms (4×)

Segub (personal name, 'exalted, protected')

This masculine name, meaning 'exalted' or 'protected,' identifies two individuals: the youngest son of Hiel who died when Jericho's gates were set (fulfilling Joshua's curse), and a descendant of Judah through Hezron. The name reflects common Hebrew naming patterns invoking elevation or divine protection.

(4×) Personal name for two individuals: (1) Segub, youngest son of Hiel of Bethel, who died when his father rebuilt Jericho's gates (1 Kings 16:34), fulfilling Joshua's curse (Joshua 6:26). The Ketiv/Qere variation (שְׁגִיב/שְׁגוּב) reflects scribal uncertainty. (2) Segub son of Hezron by the daughter of Machir, in Judah's genealogy (1 Chronicles 2:21-22). The name derives from שָׂגַב ('be high, exalted, protected'), yielding 'exalted' or 'protected one.' Multilingual glosses show transliteration with textual notes: Spanish notes '(y-con-Seguv)' for the conjunction, French and German preserve the Ketiv/Qere markers—all recognizing both the name and the textual variant at 1 Kings 16:34. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Seguv, [qere], and-Seguv | es: (y-con-Seguv), Segub, Y-Segub | fr: [qere], [ושגוב], [שגוב] | de: [qere], [ושגוב], [שגוב] 1Kgs 16:34; 1Chr 2:21; 1Chr 2:22

שָׁגַח H7688 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (3×)

gaze, look intently—to stare or regard with focused attention

This Hiphil verb describes intense gazing or looking carefully at something. Psalm 33:14 depicts God gazing down from heaven at humanity. Song of Songs 2:9 pictures the lover peering through windows. Isaiah 14:16 describes onlookers staring in astonishment at the fallen king of Babylon. The term suggests more than casual glancing—it implies focused, often prolonged observation, whether divine surveillance or human scrutiny.

(3×) The three occurrences show different subjects gazing: God looking down (Psalm 33:14), a lover peering in (Song 2:9), and observers staring at the defeated (Isaiah 14:16). Spanish uses 'observar' (observe) and 'mirar' (look), while French employs 'regarder' (regard/watch). Each context involves intentional, focused looking rather than accidental sight. The Isaiah passage pairs it with 'contemplate' (בִּין), intensifying the scrutiny. GAZING AND LOOKING en: He-gazes, gazing, will-stare | es: mirando, mirarán, observó | fr: [ישגיחן], le-regarder, regardant | de: [ישגיחן], [משגיח], er-gazes Ps 33:14; Song 2:9; Isa 14:16

שַׁגְיָא H7689 Adj-msc (1×)

great, mighty; adjective describing God's incomparable greatness and power

This adjective appears only in Elihu's speeches in Job, applied exclusively to God. 'God is great' (Job 36:26) and 'great in power' (Job 37:23) emphasize divine transcendence and incomprehensibility. The term is cognate with Aramaic words for greatness, fitting Job's linguistic complexity. Elihu uses this exalted vocabulary to humble Job, insisting God's ways exceed human understanding. The multilingual pattern ('exalted,' 'grande,' 'great') consistently renders the supreme, unmatched nature of divine majesty. This rare term intensifies the theological argument for submission to inscrutable divine wisdom.

(1×) Applied exclusively to God in these two occurrences, the adjective emphasizes incomparable greatness. Job 36:26 declares God's absolute transcendence ('God is great'), while 37:23 specifies 'great in power.' The Spanish 'grande' and the English 'exalted' both capture the superlative quality. Elihu's rhetoric aims to overwhelm Job with God's magnificence, rendering human questioning futile before such majesty. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: great-in- | es: grande-en- | fr: שגיא | de: [שגיא] Job 36:26; Job 37:23

שַׂגִּיא H7690 Adj-fp (13×)

Aramaic adjective: great (in size/importance); abundant, much, many (quantity); exceedingly (adverbial).

An Aramaic adjective appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, covering greatness of size, abundance of quantity, and adverbial intensity. Nebuchadnezzar's colossal statue was 'great' in splendor (Dan 2:31), and the cosmic tree bore 'abundant' fruit for all (Dan 4:12, 21). When used adverbially, it functions as an intensifier — the king was 'exceedingly' angry (Dan 2:12), Belshazzar 'greatly' alarmed (Dan 5:9), and Daniel's spirit 'deeply' troubled (Dan 7:28). Spanish muy/mucho and German viel/sehr show how naturally the quantitative and intensive senses shade into each other across languages.

1. exceedingly, greatly (adverbial intensifier) (5×) Adverbial intensifier meaning 'exceedingly, greatly, very much,' modifying the degree of a verb or adjective rather than describing a noun. Spanish muy ('very') and English 'exceedingly/greatly' converge on superlative intensity. The king was exceedingly furious (Dan 2:12), Belshazzar greatly troubled (Dan 5:9), Darius exceedingly pleased (Dan 6:23), accusers utterly destroyed (Dan 6:24), and Daniel's spirit deeply grieved (Dan 7:28). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: exceedingly, greatly | es: mucho, muy | fr: beaucoup | de: viel Dan 2:12; Dan 5:9; Dan 6:14; Dan 6:23; Dan 7:28

2. abundant, much, many (quantity) (5×) Quantitative adjective meaning 'abundant, much, many,' expressing large number or amount. Arabic kathir/kathira ('much/many') and Spanish abundante/muchos agree on quantity. The great tree bore abundant fruit sufficient for all (Dan 4:12, 21), the beast devoured much flesh (Dan 7:5), the king gave Daniel many gifts (Dan 2:48), and the Jerusalem temple was built 'many years ago' (Ezra 5:11). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: abundant, many, much | es: abundante, mucha, muchos | fr: [שגיאן], beaucoup | de: [שגיאן], viel Ezra 5:11; Dan 2:48; Dan 4:12; Dan 4:21; Dan 7:5

3. great (in size, importance, or magnitude) (3×) Qualitative adjective meaning 'great' in size, stature, importance, or magnificence. Spanish grande ('great') and English 'great' distinguish this from mere quantity. Nebuchadnezzar's statue was great in splendor and terrifying in appearance (Dan 2:31), the king promised 'great' honor and rewards to whoever could interpret the writing (Dan 2:6), and the tree in the vision grew 'great' reaching to heaven (Dan 4:10). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great | es: grande | fr: beaucoup | de: viel Dan 2:6; Dan 2:31; Dan 4:10

שְׂגִיאָה H7691 N-fp (1×)

errors, inadvertent sins or mistakes

This noun refers to errors, mistakes, or inadvertent sins—wrongs committed unknowingly rather than deliberately. In Psalm 19:12, the psalmist asks to be cleansed from 'hidden errors,' contrasting them with presumptuous sins mentioned in the next verse. These are faults we don't recognize in ourselves, blind spots in our moral vision. Some textual traditions suggest reading this as related to the word for 'inadvertent sins' found in the sacrificial legislation. The concept acknowledges human fallibility—we sin not only willfully but also through ignorance, carelessness, or spiritual blindness.

(1×) Inadvertent mistakes or errors, particularly moral or spiritual ones committed unknowingly. Psalm 19:12 asks 'Who can discern his errors?'—acknowledging that we cannot perceive all our faults. The term appears as 'errors' across language traditions (errores in Spanish, erreur in French), emphasizing unintentional wrongs. The psalmist's request for cleansing from hidden errors recognizes that we need divine illumination to see even our unintentional failures, a theme complementing the psalm's emphasis on God's law revealing truth. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: errors | es: errores | fr: erreur | de: errors Ps 19:12

שִׁגְיוֹן H7692 N-mp (2×)

shiggaion, shigionoth; technical musical or literary term of uncertain meaning, possibly wild or passionate song

This enigmatic term appears in the titles of Psalm 7 and Habakkuk 3, suggesting a musical or literary genre. Scholars debate whether it derives from a root meaning 'to wander' or 'to reel,' perhaps indicating a song with irregular rhythm or emotional intensity. The Septuagint renders it generically as 'psalm,' suggesting later translators were also uncertain. Some propose it describes passionate, ecstatic worship songs with rapid changes of mood. The transliteration across languages (Spanish Sigaion, French Shiggaion) reflects continued mystery. Whatever its precise meaning, it marks these texts as liturgically and emotionally distinctive.

(2×) A technical term in psalm superscriptions marking a particular type of composition. Psalm 7:1 and Habakkuk 3:1 use this designation, suggesting a recognized genre in ancient Israel's worship. The consistent transliteration across languages ('shiggaion,' 'Shigionot,' 'Sigaion') indicates the term's specialized, technical nature resisted translation. The French 'cantique' attempts a functional equivalent (hymn/song), though the precise musical or emotional character remains debated. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: a-shiggaion, shigionoth | es: Shigionot, Sigaion | fr: Shiggaion, cantique | de: [שגינות], ein-shiggaion Ps 7:1; Hab 3:1

שָׁגַל H7693 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 3fse (4×)

to violate, ravish (sexually assault)

This verb denotes sexual violation or rape. The Masoretes considered it obscene and substituted the euphemism 'lie with' in their reading tradition (Qere), while preserving the original text (Ketiv). The term appears in curses, prophetic judgments, and accusations, always describing violent sexual assault. The scribal sensitivity reflects the gravity of the crime.

(4×) Expresses sexual violation or rape. Deuteronomy 28:30 curses covenant-breakers: 'another man will violate her' (יִשְׁגָּלֶנָּה, Ketiv; Qere יִשְׁכָּבֶנָּה 'lie with her'). Isaiah 13:16 and Zechariah 14:2 prophesy invaders violating women (תִּשְׁגַּלְנָה, Ketiv; Qere תִּשְׁכַּבְנָה). Jeremiah 3:2 accuses Israel: 'where have you not been violated?' (שָׁגָלְתְּ, Ketiv; Qere שָׁכַבְתְּ). In all four cases, the Masoretes substituted שָׁכַב ('lie with') for שָׁגַל, judging the original verb too explicit. Multilingual glosses respect this: Spanish 'se-acostará,' French 'se-couche,' German 'liegt'—using euphemistic language while preserving textual notes marking the Ketiv/Qere distinction. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: [ketiv], [you-were-lain-with], lies-with-her | es: [te-acostaste], [violadas], se-acostará-con-ella | fr: [[שגלת]], [[תשגלנה]], se-couche-avec-sa | de: [[שגלת]], [[תשגלנה]], liegt-mit-ihr Deut 28:30; Isa 13:16; Jer 3:2; Zech 14:2

שֵׁגָל H7694 N-fs (2×)

queen, consort; royal wife seated beside the king

This term designates a queen consort, the wife seated at the king's side. Psalm 45:9 places the queen in gold of Ophir at the king's right hand, a position of honor and intimacy in this royal wedding psalm. Nehemiah 2:6 mentions the queen sitting beside Artaxerxes when Nehemiah makes his request, suggesting her influence in Persian court protocol. The word appears to be a loan from another Semitic language, reflecting international royal vocabulary. The multilingual consistency ('la-reina,' 'queen,' 'général') emphasizes her official status. Unlike Hebrew מַלְכָּה, this term may stress her role as companion rather than sovereign.

(2×) The queen consort seated beside the king in royal contexts. Psalm 45:9 depicts her in resplendent gold at the king's right hand during a wedding ceremony, while Nehemiah 2:6 shows her present when the king grants Nehemiah's request. Spanish 'la-reina' and the consistent term across languages highlight her official position. Her presence in Nehemiah suggests she held advisory or influential capacity in Persian royal decisions. QUEEN RULER

en: and-the-queen, the-queen | es: la-reina, y-la-reina | fr: [והשגל], général | de: [והשגל], der-queen Neh 2:6; Ps 45:9

שֵׁגָל H7695 N-fpc / 3ms (3×)

royal consorts, wives—concubines or secondary wives of Persian kings (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun refers to royal consorts or wives, appearing exclusively in Daniel 5 during Belshazzar's feast. The term distinguishes these women from primary queens, likely referring to secondary wives or concubines in the Persian royal harem. Belshazzar's act of bringing them to drink from Jerusalem's temple vessels (Daniel 5:2-3, 23) compounds the sacrilege, showing contempt for sacred objects by using them in a debauched royal party.

(3×) All three uses are in Daniel 5, describing the royal women summoned to Belshazzar's profane feast. Spanish 'esposas' (wives) and similar translations appear, though the term specifically denotes consorts rather than the queen mother (who arrives separately in 5:10). The repetition across verses 2, 3, and 23 emphasizes the deliberate, escalating sacrilege of defiling temple vessels at a feast involving these secondary royal wives. QUEEN RULER

en: his-wives, your-wives | es: sus-esposas, tus-esposas | fr: [שגלתה], [שגלתך] | de: [שגלתה], [שגלתך] Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:23

שָׁגַע H7696 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (7×)

shaga' – to be mad, act insanely; madness both genuine and feigned, including prophetic frenzy

A verb whose Pual participle meshugga' has become one of Hebrew's most culturally enduring words. It describes the state of being maddened or behaving as a madman, covering a spectrum from the covenant curse of insanity (Deut 28:34), to David's feigned madness before Achish of Gath (1 Sam 21:14-16), to the contemptuous dismissal of prophets as madmen (Hos 9:7; Jer 29:26; 2 Kgs 9:11). The Hithpael stem adds the nuance of deliberately 'playing the madman,' as in David's ruse. Arabic cognates connect to the cooing of pigeons and the wailing of camels – perhaps suggesting frenzied, uncontrolled vocalization as the core image. Spanish loco, French insense, and German Wahnsinniger all render the single concept of madness.

be mad, act insanely (7×) To be driven mad or to behave as a madman, encompassing genuine insanity as a divine curse (Deut 28:34, 'you shall be maddened by what your eyes see'), feigned madness as a survival strategy (1 Sam 21:14-16, David before Achish), and contemptuous characterization of prophetic ecstasy (Hos 9:7 'the prophet is a fool, the man of the spirit is mad'; 2 Kgs 9:11 'why did this madman come to you?'). The Arabic cognate saga'a ('to coo, whinny wildly') may illuminate the original image of frenzied, uncontrolled behavior. Spanish loco and enloquecido capture both the state and the process of being maddened. MADNESS INSANITY

en: acting-madly, mad, maddened | es: el-loco, enloquecido, loco | fr: [משגע], agissant-madly, insensé | de: [משגע], acting-madly, der-madman Deut 28:34; 1Sam 21:15; 2Kgs 9:11

שִׁגָּעוֹן H7697 Prep-b (3×)

madness, insanity—wild mental derangement or frenzied behavior

This noun describes madness or insanity, whether literal mental derangement or the wild, frenzied behavior resembling it. Deuteronomy 28:28 threatens judgment including madness alongside blindness and confusion. Zechariah 12:4 speaks of God smiting horses with madness in battle. Second Kings 9:20 describes Jehu's driving as 'like madness'—recklessly, furiously. The term captures both clinical insanity and hyperbolic descriptions of frantic, uncontrolled behavior.

(3×) The three occurrences span covenant curse (Deuteronomy 28:28), metaphorical driving style (2 Kings 9:20), and eschatological warfare (Zechariah 12:4). Spanish 'locura' (madness) and French 'folie' appear consistently. The Deuteronomy passage lists it among devastating judgments, while Zechariah applies it to war horses, creating panic. The 2 Kings text uses it hyperbolically for Jehu's characteristically furious chariot-driving. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8032 WITH 5 SENSES

en: with-madness | es: con-locura | fr: avec-madness, folie | de: [בשגעון], mit-madness Deut 28:28; 2Kgs 9:20; Zech 12:4

שֶׁגֶר H7698 N-msc (5×)

offspring, young of livestock; the increase or issue of domestic animals

Sheger denotes the offspring or young of domestic animals, always appearing in construct with cattle or beasts. In Exodus 13:12, it refers to the firstborn issue of livestock that must be set apart to the LORD. Deuteronomy repeatedly pairs 'the increase of your cattle' with 'the young of your flock' in blessings and curses (Deut 7:13; 28:4, 18, 51). The Spanish 'cria de' (young of) and French 'posterite de' capture the sense of animal progeny as a sign of agricultural blessing or its removal under covenant curse.

(5×) The offspring or young of domestic livestock, signifying animal increase as a marker of divine blessing or curse. In Exod 13:12 it denotes firstborn issue of beasts consecrated to the LORD. Deuteronomy pairs it with flock-young in covenant blessings (7:13; 28:4) and curses (28:18, 51), where loss of sheger signals judgment. Spanish 'cria de' (offspring of) and French 'posterite de' confirm the specific sense of animal progeny rather than human descendants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: increase-of, offspring-of | es: cría-de, cría-de-, la-cría-de | fr: accroître-de, offspring-de, postérité-de | de: offspring-von, vermehren-von Exod 13:12; Deut 7:13; Deut 28:4; Deut 28:18; Deut 28:51

שַׁד H7699a N-mdc (21×)

Female breast; used literally of nursing and figuratively of beauty, intimacy, and national personification

Denotes the female breast, appearing most often in the dual form. In Song of Songs, the word carries erotic and aesthetic connotations (Song 4:5; 7:4, 8; 8:8, 10), while in Hosea and Ezekiel it figures in prophetic allegories of Israel and Judah as unfaithful women (Hos 2:4; 9:14; Ezek 16:7; 23:3, 21). Job 3:12 and Psalm 22:9 use it in the context of nursing and earliest infancy. Lamentations 4:3 extends it to animal nursing. Spanish 'pechos' and English 'breasts' reflect the concrete bodily referent that underlies both the literal and figurative uses.

breast (body part) (21×) The female breast, used in literal, figurative, and allegorical contexts. Song of Songs employs the dual form for intimate beauty (Song 4:5; 7:4; 8:10); Hosea 9:14 invokes dried-up breasts as a curse; Ezekiel 23:3, 21 uses the image in national allegory. Psalm 22:9 and Job 3:12 reference nursing at the breast in infancy. Spanish 'pechos' and English 'breasts' confirm a single anatomical referent across all occurrences, with variation only in metaphorical register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-breasts, and-my-breasts, and-your-breasts | es: de-los-pechos, mis-pechos, pechos | fr: Tout-Puissant, [משדים], [שדים] | de: Brust, Feld-von, [ושדיך] Gen 49:25; Job 3:12; Ps 22:9; Song 1:13; Song 4:5

שַׁד H7699b Prep-m / N-ms (3×)

breast—the female breast, literal or figurative source of nourishment

This noun denotes the breast, particularly as a source of milk and nurture. Job 24:9 mentions snatching infants from the breast in contexts of oppression. Isaiah uses it figuratively: 60:16 speaks of nursing at the breast of kings (receiving their wealth), while 66:11 describes nursing from Jerusalem's consoling breast. The imagery emphasizes maternal provision and comfort, whether literal nursing or metaphorical sustenance from powerful sources.

(3×) The three uses include literal nursing (Job 24:9) and extended metaphors of sucking from royal breasts (Isaiah 60:16) or Jerusalem's comforting breast (66:11). Spanish 'pecho' (breast/chest) and related terms appear. Isaiah's dual usage develops the nursing metaphor: first describing Gentile wealth flowing to Israel as nursing from kings, then depicting restored Jerusalem as a mother whose people draw consolation as from a nurturing breast. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-breast-of, from-breast, from-breast-of | es: del-pecho, del-pecho-de, y-los-pechos-de | fr: [ושד], [משד], de-משד | de: [ושד], [משד] Job 24:9; Isa 60:16; Isa 66:11

שֵׁד H7700 Prep-l (2×)

demons, evil spirits; supernatural beings to whom forbidden sacrifices were offered

This word denotes demons or malevolent spiritual beings, likely a loan word from Akkadian šēdu (protective spirit), but inverted in Hebrew to mean harmful powers. Both occurrences condemn sacrificing to these entities rather than to the true God. Deuteronomy 32:17 indicts Israel for sacrificing to 'demons, not God,' while Psalm 106:37 specifies child sacrifice to demons. The term reveals ancient Israel's awareness of spiritual warfare and counterfeit worship. Translations uniformly render it 'demons' (Spanish demonios, French démons, German demons), recognizing these as malevolent supernatural agents. The prohibition underscores monotheism: only Yahweh deserves worship.

(2×) Malevolent spiritual beings receiving forbidden worship. Deuteronomy 32:17 and Psalm 106:37 both condemn sacrificing to demons instead of God, with Psalm 106 specifying the horrific practice of child sacrifice. The multilingual unanimity ('to-demons,' 'a-demonios,' 'à-démons') reflects shared recognition of these as evil supernatural powers. The biblical polemic contrasts these false deities with the living God, condemning demon worship as covenant betrayal. DEMONS EVIL SPIRITS

en: to-demons, to-the-demons | es: a-demonios, a-los-demonios | fr: à-demons, à-démon | de: zu-demons, zu-der-demons Deut 32:17; Ps 106:37

שֹׁד H7701 Prep-k / N-msc (26×)

Destruction, devastation; violence, plunder; ruin wrought by hostile force

A noun expressing the terrible aftermath of violent force—whether the devastation of nations, the ruin of cities, or the oppressive violence of the wicked. Frequently paired with 'hamas' (violence) as in Amos 3:10 and Jeremiah 6:7, it paints a picture of social breakdown where might crushes right. Isaiah 13:6 famously plays on its sound: 'as shod from Shaddai it shall come,' linking devastation to the Almighty in a grim paronomasia. The word moves fluidly between describing the act of plunder and the resulting state of ruin.

1. destruction, devastation (20×) The predominant sense of destruction and devastation as a state or result—cities laid waste, peoples ruined, lands left desolate. The Isaiah 13:6 wordplay 'keshod mishaddai' ties devastation to divine judgment. Spanish 'destruccion' and German 'Verheerung' capture this desolation. Covers most prophetic and poetic uses (Job 5:21-22, Isaiah 16:4, 22:4, 51:19). DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-as-destruction, and-destruction, and-the-destruction-of | es: De-destrucción, como-destrucción, como-la-destrucción-de | fr: [ושד], [כשד], [משד] | de: Gewalt, Verheerung, und-Gewalt Job 5:21; Job 5:22; Isa 13:6; Isa 16:4; Isa 22:4

2. violence, robbery, plunder (5×) The active sense of violence, robbery, and plunder—emphasizing the perpetration rather than the aftermath. Paired with hamas in Ezekiel 45:9 and Amos 3:10, it indicts the powerful for oppressing the vulnerable. Psalm 12:5 grounds this in God's response: He rises because of the 'shod' of the poor. French 'devastateur' and Spanish 'violencia' reflect the agent-oriented nuance. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-destruction, because-of-the-plundering-of, violence | es: La-violencia-de, Por-destrucción-de, violencia | fr: [ושד], de-dévastateur, שד | de: Gewalt, [ושד], und-Gewalt Ps 12:5; Prov 21:7; Prov 24:2; Ezek 45:9; Amos 3:10

3. to destroy (ketiv verbal form) (1×) A singular ketiv verbal reading at Proverbs 11:3 where the consonantal text preserves a Qal finite form meaning 'he destroys,' distinct from the nominal uses elsewhere. The qere tradition likely normalizes it, but the ketiv witnesses to a live verbal usage of the root in wisdom literature. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: (los-destruye) | fr: et-[ושדם]-eux | de: Gewalt Prov 11:3

שָׁדַד H7702 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjImperf-3ms (3×)

harrow, break up soil—to till or cultivate land by breaking clods

This Piel verb describes harrowing, the agricultural process of breaking up plowed soil to prepare it for planting. Isaiah 28:24 uses it in a rhetorical question about farming—does the plowman continuously harrow without planting? Hosea 10:11 employs it figuratively for Judah's task under divine discipline. Job 39:10 asks whether the wild ox can be made to harrow valleys. The term captures the systematic breaking and smoothing of earth.

(3×) All three occurrences involve harrowing as agricultural preparation: rhetorically in Isaiah 28:24 (parallel with plowing), figuratively in Hosea 10:11 (Jacob will harrow), and impossibly in Job 39:10 (can you make the wild ox harrow?). Spanish uses 'rastrillar' or 'arar' (harrow/plow), while translations vary on the specific agricultural implement. The Isaiah passage distinguishes harrowing from plowing, showing it as a distinct follow-up cultivation step. LABOR AND TOIL

en: and-harrows, shall-harrow-, will-it-harrow | es: ararará, rastrillará-, y-rastrea | fr: [וישדד], labourer, ישדד | de: [וישדד], [ישדד] Job 39:10; Isa 28:24; Hos 10:11

שָׁדַד H7703 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (57×)

To deal violently with, despoil, devastate, ruin; as participle: destroyer, plunderer; passive: to be laid waste

A verb of raw, sweeping violence, shadad captures the devastating force of invaders laying waste to cities, fields, and entire peoples. The prophets wield it as a verbal weapon: Isaiah pronounces Moab 'devastated' in a single night (Isa 15:1), Jeremiah personifies judgment as a 'destroyer' stalking from the thicket (Jer 4:7; 6:26), and the haunting refrain of Isaiah 33:1 turns the verb back on the aggressor — 'Woe to you, destroyer, you who have not been destroyed!' The Arabic cognate sadda ('to obstruct, make firm') and Ethiopic sadada ('to expel') illuminate the root's violent core: a forceful stopping, an uprooting. German consistently renders the agent noun as Plunderer, while Spanish shifts between destructor and asolada depending on whether the word names the agent or describes the aftermath.

1. to be laid waste (Pual passive) (20×) The Pual passive stem (20 occurrences) expressing the resultant state of having been devastated or laid waste — applied to cities, lands, and peoples who have already suffered destruction. Isaiah's oracle against Moab opens with two cities 'laid waste in a night' (Isa 15:1), and Tyre hears the cry 'you are destroyed' from returning ships (Isa 23:1, 14). Spanish asolada and German verwuestet both convey the completed, irrevocable quality of this passive. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: are-devastated, destroyed, is-destroyed | es: Asolada, Fue-devastado, destruida | fr: dévaster | de: verwuesten, verwuestet, verwuestete Isa 15:1; Isa 23:1; Isa 23:14; Jer 4:13

2. destroyer, plunderer (agent noun) (15×) The Qal active participle used substantivally as an agent noun — 'destroyer, plunderer' — across 15 occurrences. This form names the invader or oppressor as a character in prophetic drama: the 'destroyer' from whom Isaiah 16:4 promises Moab shelter, the paired destroyers of Isaiah 21:2 ('the treacherous one betrays, the destroyer destroys'). French pillards and German Plunderer capture the marauding connotation, while Spanish destructor preserves the broader semantic range. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: a-destroyer, and-the-destroyer, destroyer | es: destructor, destructor-de, destructores | fr: dévaster, et-dévaster, pillards | de: Plünderer, der-verwuestete, und-verwuesten Job 12:6; Job 15:21; Isa 16:4; Isa 21:2; Isa 33:1

3. to destroy, despoil (Qal active) (11×) Active Qal finite forms, imperatives, and infinitives expressing the verbal action of destroying or despoiling (11 occurrences). This is the dynamic event itself rather than the agent or the aftermath: God's enemies 'who despoil me' (Ps 17:9), the treachery of the faithless 'will destroy them' (Prov 11:3), and the imperative 'plunder!' hurled at Kedar (Jer 49:28). The infinitive construct in Jeremiah 47:4 names the purpose — 'to destroy all the remaining helpers of Tyre.' DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: and-destroy, and-they-will-destroy, destroying | es: (los-destruirá), de-destruir, destruye | fr: (ישדם)-eux, dévaster, et-dévaster | de: devastate-mich, und-verwuesten, verwuesten Ps 17:9; Prov 11:3; Isa 21:2; Isa 33:1; Jer 5:6

4. to be destroyed (Qal Passive / Nifal) (7×) Qal passive participles, passive imperfects, and Nifal forms (7 occurrences) expressing the process or state of being destroyed, distinct from the Pual resultative. Judges 5:27 uses the Qal passive participle of Sisera — 'where he sank, there he fell, destroyed.' The psalmist addresses Babylon as 'destroyed one' in Psalm 137:8. Isaiah 33:1 plays on active and passive simultaneously: the destroyer who will himself 'be destroyed' when his allotted time of treachery ends. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: being-devastated, destroyed, destroying | es: asolada, destruido, hemos-sido-devastados | fr: détruisit, dévaster, le-dévaster | de: der-devastated, verwuesten, verwuestet Judg 5:27; Ps 137:8; Isa 33:1; Jer 4:30

5. to devastate, ruin (Piel intensive) (3×) Piel intensive forms (3 occurrences) expressing deliberate, intensified destruction or ruination. Proverbs 19:26 describes a son who 'assaults' his father and drives out his mother — the Piel intensifies the violence beyond mere plundering into personal assault. Hosea 10:2 announces that God 'will destroy' Israel's altars. The shift from Spanish destruir to arruinar in Proverbs 19:26 marks the interpersonal rather than military register. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: assaulting, devastate, he-will-destroy | es: El-que-arruina-a-, destruirá, destruyas | fr: dévaster, משדד ,חשדד | de: verwuestet Prov 19:26; Prov 24:15; Hos 10:2

6. (1×) A single Qal infinitive absolute in Micah 2:4, functioning as an adverbial intensifier modifying the finite verb — 'we are utterly despoiled.' English 'utterly' and Spanish del todo capture the emphatic doubling (shadod nushaddu), a classic Hebrew intensification device where the infinitive absolute amplifies the finality of the ruin. This is not a distinct lexical sense but a grammatical deployment of the root to express totality of devastation. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: utterly | es: Del-todo | fr: dévaster | de: welcher-Geliebter Mic 2:4

שָׂדַי H7704a N-ms (13×)

Field, open land; a poetic form of שָׂדֶה denoting cultivated ground, wild terrain, or land broadly.

A rare, archaic, and exclusively poetic form of the common noun שָׂדֶה ('field'). It appears in elevated contexts: Moses' song celebrates honey from the rock and oil from the flinty field (Deut 32:13), psalmists praise all that the field contains (Ps 96:12), and prophets use it for cultivated land (Hos 10:4) and open country where wild beasts roam (Isa 56:9; Ps 50:11; 80:14; 104:11). French sometimes confuses it with שַׁדַּי ('Almighty') due to identical consonants, but Spanish campo and German Feld correctly identify the agricultural and geographical sense. Jeremiah 4:17 uses it memorably: 'like keepers of a field they surround her.'

field (open land, cultivated ground) (13×) Open land or countryside, used in poetry as an archaic variant of שָׂדֶה. Encompasses cultivated ground yielding food (Deut 32:13; Hos 10:4; Lam 4:9), the wild habitat of beasts (בְּהֵמוֹת שָׂדַי, Ps 8:8; Joel 2:22; חַיְתוֹ שָׂדַי, Isa 56:9; Ps 104:11), and broad terrain set in parallel with sea and world (Ps 96:12, cf. 98:7). Jeremiah 18:14 may use it for 'plain' as opposed to mountain. Spanish campo and German Feld capture the concrete geographical referent, while French Tout-Puissant in some renderings reflects a common confusion with the divine name שַׁדַּי. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: field, of-the-field, the-field | es: campo, el-campo | fr: Tout-Puissant, [שדי], champ | de: Feld, Feld-von, [שדי] Deut 32:13; Ps 8:7; Ps 50:11; Ps 80:13; Ps 96:12

שָׂדֹת H7704b N-mp (321×)

Field, cultivated land; also open country or wild terrain as opposed to settled, worked agricultural plots.

The basic word for a plot of agricultural land in the Hebrew Bible, sadeh appears from the very beginning of the story — God had not yet caused rain on 'the field' (Gen 2:5). It covers everything from Boaz's barley field in Ruth to the field Jeremiah purchases as a sign of hope (Jer 32). In construct with place names it designates a broader region: 'the field of Moab,' 'the field of Zoan' (Ps 78:12). An interesting edge case appears in 2 Kings 4:39 where 'field' modifies wild plants — gourds gathered from the sadeh — hinting at uncultivated open country. Spanish campo and French champ preserve exactly this same ambiguity between 'field' and 'countryside.'

1. cultivated field, plot of land (316×) Cultivated field, owned plot of agricultural land (316x) — the overwhelmingly dominant sense. Covers fields that are plowed, sown, harvested, bought, sold, and inherited. Includes construct forms (sedeh-Moab 'the territory of Moab,' Ruth 1:1) and all inflections with prepositions and suffixes. Genesis 23:17 records Abraham's purchase of the field of Machpelah; Leviticus 25:3 legislates sabbatical rest for 'your field.' German das Feld, French le champ, and Arabic haql all map to this primary agricultural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-field | es: el-campo | fr: le-champ | de: das-Feld, dem-Feld, des-Feldes Gen 2:5; Gen 2:19; Gen 2:20; Gen 3:1

2. open country, plain (3×) Open country or a named plain (3x), used geographically to denote a broad, uncultivated expanse rather than a bounded agricultural plot. Psalm 78:12 and 78:43 reference 'the field of Zoan' — the region around the Egyptian city — while Hosea 12:12 mentions Jacob fleeing to 'the field of Aram.' Here sadeh functions almost as a toponym element. Arabic sahl ('plain, flat terrain') captures this open-country nuance more precisely than haql ('cultivated field'), confirming a genuine semantic distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: field-of, in-the-field-of, the-field-of | es: al-campo-de, campo-de-, en-campo-de- | fr: champ, dans-champ | de: Feld, der-Feld-von, in-der-Feld-von Ps 78:12; Ps 78:43; Hos 12:12

3. (2×) Wild or uncultivated terrain (2x), both in 2 Kings 4:39 where someone goes out into 'the field' (ha-sadeh) to gather wild gourds and finds a 'wild vine' (gefen sadeh). The Spanish rendering silvestre ('wild, sylvan') and the doubled occurrence in a single verse highlight that this is not farmland but untamed ground where wild plants grow. This sense bridges the gap between cultivated field and open wilderness, designating land that is simply 'out there' beyond the settlement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-field | es: silvestre, silvestres | fr: le-champ | de: der-Feld 2Kgs 4:39

שְׂדֵרָה H7705 N-fs (2×)

uncertain term, possibly women, concubines, or musical instruments; meaning disputed

This rare word appears twice in Ecclesiastes 2:8, and its meaning remains genuinely uncertain. Ancient versions differed: the Septuagint suggested 'cupbearer,' the Vulgate 'cup,' while rabbinic tradition proposed 'woman' or 'concubine.' Modern proposals include musical instruments, luxury items, or female companions. The context lists royal pleasures Solomon accumulated, so 'women' fits thematically with his legendary harem. Spanish mujer and the paired singular-plural form suggest female companions, though German Feld (field) shows the textual confusion. The term's obscurity reminds us that not every Hebrew word's meaning has survived with certainty.

(2×) A disputed term appearing in Solomon's catalog of acquired pleasures in Ecclesiastes 2:8. The paired forms (singular and plural) appear together, suggesting a comprehensive collection of something. Spanish 'mujer, y-mujeres' and English 'woman, and-women' favor the interpretation as female companions or concubines, fitting Solomon's reputation. However, ancient versions diverged widely, and the precise referent remains debated. The uncertainty highlights gaps in our lexical knowledge. WOMAN AND WIFE en: and-women, woman | es: mujer, y-mujeres | fr: et-événement, événement | de: Feld, [ושדות] Eccl 2:8

שַׁדַּי H7706 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (48×)

Shaddai – the Almighty; a divine name or epithet for God, especially in patriarchal promises and the Book of Job

Shaddai ('the Almighty') is an ancient divine name or epithet for God whose etymology remains debated – proposals range from shadad ('to overpower'), to shadah ('to pour forth,' as rain-giver), to shed ('lord, sovereign'). The Septuagint renders it pantokrator ('all-powerful') and the Vulgate omnipotens ('almighty'). Its 48 occurrences concentrate in two main literary settings: the patriarchal narratives, where God identifies himself as El Shaddai in covenant contexts (Gen 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 43:14; 48:3; Exod 6:3), and the Book of Job, where Shaddai is the preferred divine designation in the poetic dialogues (Job 5:17; 6:4, 14; 8:3, 5; 11:7; and many more). A handful of occurrences appear in prophetic poetry (Isa 13:6; Ezek 1:24; Joel 1:15) and in Balaam's oracles (Num 24:4, 16), where the seer 'sees the vision of Shaddai.' The name carries connotations of supreme power, cosmic authority, and covenantal faithfulness.

Shaddai (divine name, the Almighty) (48×) A divine name or epithet traditionally rendered 'the Almighty,' used in two primary settings: patriarchal covenant-making, where God reveals himself as El Shaddai (Gen 17:1; 35:11; Exod 6:3), and the poetic dialogues of Job, where Shaddai is the dominant divine name (Job 5:17; 8:3; 11:7; 31:2). It also appears in Balaam's oracles (Num 24:4, 16) and prophetic judgment texts (Isa 13:6; Joel 1:15). French le Tout-Puissant and the LXX pantokrator capture the 'almighty' tradition, while German Feld-von reflects alternative etymological proposals. DIVINE NAME YHWH

en: Shaddai, of-Shaddai | es: Shadai, Shaddai, Shadday | fr: le-Tout-Puissant | de: Feld-von Gen 17:1; Gen 28:3; Gen 35:11; Gen 43:14; Gen 48:3

שְׁדֵיאוּר H7707 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shedeur; a Reubenite, father of Elizur, meaning 'Shaddai is flame/light'

Shedeur is a proper name borne by the father of Elizur, the chief of the tribe of Reuben during the wilderness period. The name likely compounds Shaddai ('the Almighty') with 'ur ('flame' or 'light'), yielding 'the Almighty is my light.' All five occurrences appear in Numbers within Priestly census and offering lists (Num 1:5; 2:10; 7:30, 35; 10:18). The LXX renders it Sediour, and translations across languages consistently transliterate rather than translate, reflecting its status as a fixed personal name.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'Shaddai is flame' or 'the Almighty is light,' borne by the father of Elizur, leader of the tribe of Reuben. All attestations occur in Priestly material in Numbers: the census (1:5), camp arrangement (2:10), tabernacle dedication offerings (7:30, 35), and marching order (10:18). Spanish 'Sedeur,' French 'Shedeur,' and German 'Shedeur' all transliterate consistently, confirming a single referent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shedeur | es: Sedeur, Sedeur: | fr: Shedeur | de: Shedeur Num 1:5; Num 2:10; Num 7:30; Num 7:35; Num 10:18

שִׁדִּים H7708 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

Siddim—the valley where Dead Sea cities were located, later submerged

This place name identifies the valley where Sodom, Gomorrah, and allied cities were located before their destruction. Genesis 14:3, 8, 10 locates the battle of the kings in this valley, later identified with the Salt Sea (Dead Sea). The name may relate to 'fields' or 'furrows,' though interpretations vary. By the time Genesis was written, this once-inhabited valley had become the Dead Sea basin, preserving a geographical memory of the pre-catastrophe landscape.

(3×) All three occurrences are in Genesis 14, identifying the valley as the battle site for the five kings against four. The text explicitly equates it with the Salt Sea (14:3), suggesting later readers knew this valley had been transformed. Spanish 'Sidim' and other versions transliterate the name. Verse 10's mention of the valley's bitumen pits provides geographical detail about the pre-Dead Sea topography, preserved in the tradition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Siddim | es: Sidim | fr: le-Siddim | de: Siddim Gen 14:3; Gen 14:8; Gen 14:10

שְׁדֵמָה H7709 Art / N-fp (6×)

Field, cultivated terrain; used of terraced agricultural land in poetic and prophetic descriptions of fertility or devastation.

A feminine noun appearing only in the plural, denoting cultivated fields or terraced agricultural land. In Deuteronomy 32:32 it describes the vine-fields of Sodom, while Isaiah 16:8 laments the famed fields of Heshbon. Habakkuk 3:17 pairs it with the failure of the fig tree and vine, painting a picture of total agricultural collapse. The word carries a sense of carefully worked terrain, land shaped by human labor, which makes its destruction all the more poignant in prophetic judgment oracles.

field, terraced field, cultivated land (6×) Cultivated field or terraced agricultural land, always plural in Biblical Hebrew. The Spanish 'campos' and English 'fields' confirm the straightforward agricultural sense. Used both of literal farmland (Deut 32:32, 2 Kgs 23:4) and poetically of productive terrain whose devastation signals divine judgment (Isa 16:8; Hab 3:17). The Jeremiah 31:40 reference designates a specific locale near Jerusalem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-field-of-grain, and-from-fields-of, and-the-fields | es: (los-campos), campos-de, en-campos-de | fr: [(השדמות)], [ושדמה], [שדמות] | de: [(השדמות)], [ושדמה], [ושדמות] Deut 32:32; 2Kgs 23:4; Isa 16:8; Isa 37:27; Jer 31:40

שָׁדַף H7710 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fpc (3×)

scorched, blighted by east wind—grain damaged by hot sirocco winds

This Qal passive participle describes grain that has been scorched or blighted by the east wind, the hot sirocco that could devastate crops. All three occurrences are in Genesis 41, in Pharaoh's dream of the seven scorched ears of grain that devoured the healthy ones. The term vividly depicts agricultural disaster, as the easterly wind from the desert could shrivel grain on the stalk, representing the seven years of famine Joseph would later interpret.

(3×) The three uses all modify 'ears of grain' in Pharaoh's second dream (Genesis 41:6, 23, 27), parallel to the dream of the lean cows. Spanish 'quemadas' (burned) and German compound terms capture the scorching by east wind. The repetition mirrors the dream's double telling and Joseph's interpretation, emphasizing the vivid image of wind-blasted grain. The 'east wind' (קָדִים) consistently appears, identifying the destructive sirocco. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-scorched-by, scorched-by | es: quemadas-de, y-quemadas-de | fr: et-scorched-par, scorched-par | de: und-vom-Ostwind-versengte, vom-Ostwind-versengte, vom-Ostwind-versengten Gen 41:6; Gen 41:23; Gen 41:27

שְׁדֵפָה H7711a Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

blasted grain, crops destroyed by scorching wind before maturity

This agricultural term describes grain that has been blasted or scorched by hot east winds before reaching maturity. In 2 Kings 19:26, it appears in God's prophetic judgment against Assyria, using the image of grain destroyed before it can grow and ripen. The word relates to the devastating effects of the sirocco or east wind that could ruin entire crops by desiccating them. However, the text is textually difficult, and scholars propose various emendations. The underlying concept is agricultural destruction—crops withering under blast conditions that prevent normal development and harvest.

(1×) Grain or crops that have been blasted, scorched, or withered by hot wind before maturing. Second Kings 19:26 uses this in a metaphor of impotence and failure—like blasted grain 'before the standing grain,' destroyed before reaching its potential. The Spanish 'tizón' (blight) and the idea of being 'blasted' capture the destructive agricultural phenomenon. Though the text presents difficulties, the image clearly depicts premature destruction, crops ruined before harvest—a fitting metaphor for Assyrian ambitions cut short by divine intervention. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-blasted | es: y-tizón | fr: et-blasted | de: und-blasted 2Kgs 19:26

שִׁדָּפוֹן H7711b Conj-w (5×)

blight, smut; a crop disease that withers and blackens grain before harvest

Shiddafon refers to blight or smut, a devastating crop disease that attacks grain in the field, consistently paired with yeraqon

(mildew/yellowing). It appears in covenant curses (Deut 28:22) and in descriptions of divine agricultural judgment (Amos 4:9; Hag 2:17). Solomon's temple prayer lists it among national calamities warranting intercession (1 Kgs 8:37; 2 Chr 6:28). The Spanish 'tizon' (firebrand, blight) and 'anublo' (mildew) vividly convey the scorching destruction this disease inflicts on standing grain.

(5×) Blight or smut, a fungal crop disease that scorches and blackens grain before harvest, always paired with yeraqon (mildew). It appears as a covenant curse instrument (Deut 28:22) and a sign of divine agricultural discipline (Amos 4:9; Hag 2:17). Solomon includes it among calamities requiring national prayer (1 Kgs 8:37; 2 Chr 6:28). Spanish 'tizon' (scorching blight) captures the burning destruction, while English 'blight' and 'smut' reflect the fungal crop damage. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-with-blight, blight, with-blight | es: con-tizón, tizón, y-con-añublo | fr: [בשדפון], [שדפון], blight | de: [בשדפון], [שדפון], blight Deut 28:22; 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 6:28; Amos 4:9; Hag 2:17

שְׁדַר H7712 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

strive, struggle, make earnest effort (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb means to strive, struggle, or make earnest effort toward accomplishing something. It appears in Daniel 6:14 describing King Darius's intense efforts to rescue Daniel from the lions' den decree. The word conveys determined exertion, wrestling with a difficult situation, trying hard to find a solution. Related forms in Targumic Aramaic and Syriac carry meanings of wrestling, being recalcitrant, or striving. The context shows Darius laboring mentally and emotionally until sunset to find some legal loophole that would save Daniel, but being unable to reverse the irrevocable decree he had signed.

(1×) To strive earnestly, struggle, or exert oneself vigorously to accomplish something. Daniel 6:14 describes King Darius 'striving' to deliver Daniel—he labored hard until sunset seeking a way to save him from the lions' den. The Spanish 'esforzándose' (exerting himself) and the concept of striving both emphasize the king's determined effort. The Aramaic participle suggests ongoing, sustained struggle rather than a momentary attempt, highlighting Darius's genuine distress and persistent attempts to rescue his faithful official. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: striving | es: esforzándose | fr: se-coucher | de: [משתדר] Dan 6:14

שִׁדְרָה H7713 Prep-l (4×)

rows, ranks (of soldiers or architectural beams)

This noun denotes rows or ranks, whether of soldiers in battle formation or (in an obscure architectural context) beams or planks in construction. The term appears in military contexts describing protective formations and in Solomon's temple description where its precise meaning remains uncertain. The root suggests arrangement or ordering.

(4×) Designates rows or ranks in military and possibly architectural contexts. In 2 Kings 11:8, 15 (= 2 Chronicles 23:14), guards are commanded to keep ranks or stay 'within the rows' (בַּשְּׁדֵרוֹת), with anyone breaching formation to be killed. The term indicates military formation or protective lines. In 1 Kings 6:9, the phrase גְּבִים וּשְׁדֹרֹת בָּאֲרָזִים describes part of the temple's ceiling construction—meaning uncertain, possibly 'beams and rows/planks of cedar.' The probable original form is סְדָרָה (from סדר 'arrange'), with שׁ for ס. Multilingual glosses reflect uncertainty: Spanish 'filas/tablones,' French 'rangs/planks,' German 'ranks/planks'—military ranks being clearer than the architectural term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-planks, the-ranks, the-rows | es: las-filas, y-tablones | fr: [השדרות], et-planks, le-rangs | de: [השדרות], der-ranks, und-planks 1Kgs 6:9; 2Kgs 11:8; 2Kgs 11:15; 2Chr 23:14

שַׁדְרַךְ H7714 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shadrach (Babylonian name given to Hananiah, one of Daniel's companions)

This is the Babylonian name given to Hananiah, one of Daniel's three companions taken into Babylonian exile and royal service. The name replaced his Hebrew name when he entered Nebuchadnezzar's court, part of the cultural assimilation process for promising young captives. The etymology remains uncertain—proposals include derivation from Akkadian divine names or Persian royal terminology. Despite receiving a pagan name, Shadrach (along with Meshach and Abednego) remained faithful to the God of Israel, famously refusing to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image and surviving the fiery furnace. The name became synonymous with faithful witness under pressure.

(1×) The Babylonian name assigned to Hananiah in Daniel 1:7 when he entered royal service in Babylon. Along with Daniel (Belteshazzar), Mishael (Meshach), and Azariah (Abednego), Hananiah received this new name as part of his re-education in Babylonian culture. Despite uncertain etymology (possibly from Akkadian 'Šudur-Aku' meaning 'command of Aku'), the name identifies the faithful Hebrew who, with his companions, defied idolatry and was delivered from Nebuchadnezzar's furnace in Daniel 3. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shadrakh | es: Shadrak | fr: Schadrak | de: Schadrach Dan 1:7

שַׁדְרַךְ H7715 N-proper-ms (14×)

Shadrach; the Babylonian name given to Hananiah, one of Daniel's three companions in the fiery furnace.

The Babylonian court name assigned to Hananiah, one of the four Judean youths deported to Babylon and trained in Chaldean learning (Dan 1:7). Shadrach appears alongside Meshach and Abednego throughout Daniel 3, where the three refuse to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image and are cast into a fiery furnace — only to emerge unharmed, prompting the king's decree honoring their God. Daniel 2:49 notes that Shadrach was appointed over the affairs of the province of Babylon at Daniel's request. The name's etymology remains debated; some connect it to Shudur-Aku ('command of Aku,' a moon deity), though this is uncertain. French 'Schadrac' and German 'Schadrach' preserve the Aramaic form closely.

(14×) The proper name Shadrach (שַׁדְרַךְ), the Babylonian name given to the Judean exile Hananiah. All 14 occurrences fall within Daniel 2–3, concentrated in the fiery furnace narrative (Dan 3:12–30). Cross-linguistic transliterations — English 'Shadrach,' Spanish 'Shadrak,' French 'Schadrac,' German 'Schadrach' — show minimal variation, reflecting direct borrowing of the Aramaic form. The name always appears in the fixed triad Shadrach-Meshach-Abednego, functioning as a unit of faithful resistance to imperial idolatry. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shadrakh, [dir.obj]-Shadrakh | es: Shadrak, a-Shadrak | fr: Schadrac | de: Schadrach, zu-Schadrach Dan 2:49; Dan 3:12; Dan 3:13; Dan 3:14; Dan 3:16

שֶׂה H7716 Prep-l / N-ms (47×)

A single head of small livestock — sheep or goat — from the flock; often specifically a lamb in sacrificial and figurative contexts.

The Hebrew שֶׂה is the unit-noun corresponding to the collective צֹאן (flock), designating one animal from among sheep and goats. It appears prominently in two registers: as ordinary livestock in property laws (Exod 22:1, 4) and as the sacrificial or symbolic lamb — most memorably the Passover lamb of Exodus 12 and the lamb led to slaughter of Isaiah 53:7. Multilingual evidence reflects this split: Spanish uses 'oveja' (sheep) for the generic sense but 'cordero' (lamb) for the sacrificial; French shifts between 'brebis' and 'agneau' along the same lines. Arabic cognate ḍaʾn preserves the same generic range.

1. sheep, head of small cattle (27×) A single animal from the flock, referring generically to a sheep or goat as a unit of small livestock, without emphasis on age or sacrificial purpose. Property laws in Exodus (22:1, 4, 9) list שֶׂה alongside שׁוֹר (ox) and חֲמוֹר (donkey) as standard livestock. Spanish 'oveja,' French 'brebis,' and German 'Schaf' all point to the adult, generic animal. Gen 30:32 uses it in the context of Laban's and Jacob's flock-sorting agreement. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: a-lamb-of, a-sheep, and-sheep | es: ni-oveja, oveja, su-oveja | fr: [שֶׂה], brebis, et-brebis | de: Schaf, Schaf-, Schafe Gen 30:32; Exod 22:1; Exod 22:4

2. lamb, young of the flock (20×) A young animal of the flock — a lamb or kid — foregrounded by sacrificial, Passover, or figurative contexts. The Passover שֶׂה of Exod 12:3-5 must be a year-old male; Isa 53:7 likens the Servant to a שֶׂה led to slaughter. Spanish 'cordero,' French 'agneau,' and German 'Lamm' consistently render this younger, sacrificial reading. Gen 22:7-8, where Isaac asks 'where is the lamb?', pivots on precisely this sense. LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: a-lamb, and-lamb-, and-young-of | es: Cordero, Y-cordero, como-cordero | fr: [הַשֶּׂה], [כְּשֶׂה], agneau | de: Lamm, Schaf, [הַשֶּׂה] Gen 22:7; Gen 22:8; Exod 12:3; Exod 12:4

שָׂהֵד H7717 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (1×)
witness, advocate (Aramaic loan-word)
This is an Aramaic loan-word meaning witness or advocate, appearing in Job's passionate declaration of his heavenly witness. In Job 16:19, he declares 'even now my witness is in heaven; my advocate is on high,' using two parallel terms (this Aramaic word and the standard Hebrew word for witness). The Aramaic term may have been chosen for poetic variation or emphasis. It conveys someone who testifies on another's behalf, an advocate who speaks for the accused. Job, protesting his innocence while his friends accuse him, appeals to God himself as his ultimate witness and defender—a remarkable claim of vindication.

(1×) A witness or advocate who testifies on someone's behalf. Job 16:19 uses this Aramaic word in parallel with the Hebrew word for witness, declaring 'my witness is in heaven and my advocate on high.' The Spanish 'defensor' (defender/advocate) emphasizes the supportive, testifying role. Job claims a heavenly witness who knows his innocence despite earthly accusations—a bold assertion that God himself will vindicate him. The legal imagery reflects ancient Near Eastern court proceedings where witnesses spoke for the accused. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY
en: and-my-advocate | es: y-mi-defensor | fr: et-mon-שָׂהֲדִי-moi | de: [וְשָׂהֲדִי] Job 16:19

שֹׁהַם H7718 Art / N-ms (11×)
Onyx or a precious banded stone, used in the high priest's vestments and among Eden's treasures
A prized gemstone featured in some of Scripture's most symbolically charged settings. It appears among the treasures of Eden's land of Havilah (Gen 2:12), is prescribed for the ephod's shoulder-pieces where the names of Israel's twelve tribes are engraved (Exod 25:7; 28:9, 20), and is counted among the offerings David gathered for the temple (1 Chr 29:2). Job declares that wisdom's value surpasses even gold and shoham stone (Job 28:16). The precise mineralogical identification remains debated — ancient versions vary between onyx, beryl, and sardonyx — but the consistent context is one of beauty, rarity, and sacred purpose.

onyx (precious stone) (11×) A precious stone, traditionally identified as onyx, used in the high priest's ephod and breastplate (Exod 25:7; 28:9, 20; 35:9, 27; 39:6, 13), among Eden's riches (Gen 2:12), in David's temple provisions (1 Chr 29:2), and as a measure of wisdom's incomparable worth (Job 28:16). The exact identification is debated across ancient traditions, but translations converge on a banded gemstone: Spanish 'ónice,' Arabic عقيق (jaz', onyx), Korean 호마노 (homano), and Hindi सुलेमानी (sulemani). German 'Onyx' and English 'onyx' reflect the Septuagint's rendering. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH
en: and-onyx, in-onyx, onyx | es: con-ónice, el-ónice, shoham | fr: [שֹׁהַם], corail, dans-בְּשֹׁהַם | de: Onyx, [בְּשֹׁהַם], [שֹׁהַם] Gen 2:12; Exod 25:7; Exod 28:9; Exod 28:20; Exod 35:9

שֹׁהָם H7719 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Shoham (personal name of a Levite)
This is a Levitical personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 24:27 in the division of Levitical families. The name is identical in form to the Hebrew word for onyx or beryl, one of the precious stones, suggesting it may carry symbolic meaning related to value or beauty. As with many personal names in genealogies, it marks this individual's place within the Levitical orders organized during David's reign. The name's connection to precious stones might reflect parental aspirations or circumstances of birth, though the text provides no explanation beyond identifying this Levite's lineage.

(1×) A Levite's name in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 24:27. The name shares its form with the Hebrew word for onyx or precious stone, though whether this meaning was significant to the individual's identity is unstated. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German versions shows standard treatment of personal names. The context places Shoham within the carefully organized Levitical divisions, establishing his role in temple service during David's administrative structuring of Israel's worship. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shoham | es: y-Shoham | fr: [וְשֹׁהַם] | de: [וְשֹׁהַם] 1Chr 24:27

שַׁהֲרוֹן H7720 Art / N-mp (3×)
crescents, moon ornaments—crescent-shaped jewelry or decorative pieces
This plural noun refers to crescent-shaped ornaments, likely jewelry fashioned after the moon's curved form. They appear as decorations on camels (Judges 8:21, 26) and as women's finery in Isaiah's catalog of luxury items (3:18). These moon-shaped pieces may have had apotropaic or decorative functions, common in ancient Near Eastern cultures where lunar symbols held significance. The term reveals both the aesthetic appeal and possible religious associations of crescent imagery.

(3×) The three occurrences describe crescents on Midianite camels (Judges 8:21, 26) and among women's ornaments (Isaiah 3:18). Spanish 'lunetas' (little moons) and similar terms capture the lunar shape. The Judges passages show these as prestigious items worn by enemy kings and their camels, plundered by Gideon. Isaiah lists them among luxury goods destined for removal in judgment, suggesting their value and association with vanity or foreign customs. MOON CELESTIAL BODY
en: the-crescents | es: las-lunetas, y-las-lunetas | fr: [וְהַשַּׁהֲרֹנִים], le-crescents | de: [וְהַשַּׁהֲרֹנִים], der-crescents Judg 8:21; Judg 8:26; Isa 3:18

נָשְׂא H7721 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (1×)
when rising up, at the rising (of waves)
This infinitive form describes the action of rising up, appearing in Psalm 89:9 in a maritime context about God's sovereignty over the sea. The phrase describes God ruling over the surging of the sea and stilling its waves 'when they rise up.' The image portrays divine control over chaotic, threatening forces—when storm waves rise to destructive heights, God calms them. This participates in the broader biblical theme of God's mastery over chaos waters, establishing order and safety. The rising of waves represents both natural danger and symbolic cosmic rebellion that God alone can subdue.

(1×) The rising or surging upward, specifically of ocean waves in Psalm 89:9. The verse declares God's rule over the raging sea and his stilling of its waves 'when they rise up.' The Spanish 'al levantarse' (when rising up) and similar renderings across languages capture the temporal aspect—at the moment waves surge upward threateningly, God calms them. This imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern chaos-combat motifs, where the deity demonstrates sovereignty by subduing unruly waters, establishing cosmic order and security. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: when-rise-up | es: al-levantarse | fr: dans-vanité | de: wann-aufstehen-hinauf Ps 89:9

שׁוֹא H7722a Prep-m / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)
ravages, devastating destruction (uncertain reading)
This extremely rare and textually uncertain word appears in Psalm

35:17, where the psalmist asks God to rescue him from 'their ravages' or destructive attacks. The Hebrew is difficult, and ancient versions show uncertainty. Some scholars propose emending the text to read 'their roaring' (from a different root), which would parallel the lion imagery in the surrounding verses. The context clearly involves violent threat from enemies, whether the specific word means 'ravages,' 'destruction,' or should be corrected to 'roaring.' The psalmist's plea is for deliverance from those who seek to devour and destroy him.

(1×) Devastating destruction or ravages inflicted by enemies, though the text is uncertain. Psalm 35:17 asks 'rescue me from their ravages'—from those attacking like lions. The Spanish 'devastaciones' (devastations) interprets this as destructive assaults. However, the Hebrew presents difficulties; some scholars suggest reading 'their roaring' instead, which would fit the predatory imagery better. Whether ravages or roaring, the verse depicts violent enemies from whom the psalmist seeks divine rescue, emphasizing threat and danger. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-their-ravages | es: de-sus-devastaciones | fr: de-tempête | de: von-ihr-ravages Ps 35:17

שׁוֹאָה H7722b Prep-b / N-fs (12×)

Devastation, ruin; desolation brought by judgment or calamity; a violent storm used figuratively

The noun שׁוֹאָה (also spelled שֹׁאָה) names catastrophic destruction — the kind of ruin that renders a place desolate or leaves a person utterly ruined. It describes divine judgment crashing down on the wicked (Ps 35:8; Prov 3:25), Babylon's sudden devastation (Isa 47:11), and the wasteland that Job haunts (Job 30:3, 14). In two vivid similes it takes the specific form of a storm or tempest: Proverbs 1:27 warns that calamity will come 'like a storm' (כְּשׁוֹאָה), and Ezekiel 38:9 describes Gog ascending 'like a storm.' Spanish captures the dual registers with 'destruccion/desolacion' for ruin and 'tempestad/tormenta' for the storm image.

1. ruin, devastation, desolation (10×) Devastation, ruin, or desolation — catastrophic destruction viewed as a state or event. Used of divine judgment upon the wicked (Ps 35:8; 63:10), of sudden ruin threatening the complacent (Prov 3:25; Isa 10:3), of Babylon's overthrow (Isa 47:11), and of the desolate wastes where Job wanders (Job 30:3, 14; 38:27). Zephaniah 1:15 pairs שׁוֹאָה with מְשׁוֹאָה in describing the Day of the LORD. Spanish 'destruccion,' 'desolacion,' and 'devastacion,' along with French 'devaStation,' consistently render the abstract destructive force without specifying a meteorological vehicle. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-for-devastation, crash, destruction | es: desolación, destrucción, devastación | fr: [ולשואה], [שואה], dans-dévastation | de: [ולשואה], [ומשאת], [שאה] Job 30:3; Job 30:14; Job 38:27; Ps 35:8

2. storm, tempest (2×) A violent storm or tempest — the word deployed in explicit similes to evoke the sudden, overwhelming force of calamity. Proverbs 1:27 warns that dread will come 'like a storm' (כְּשׁוֹאָה, parallel to סוּפָה 'whirlwind'), and Ezekiel 38:9 describes Gog's invasion ascending 'like a storm' (כַּשֹּׁאָה, parallel to עָנָן 'cloud'). Spanish 'como tempestad' and 'como tormenta' confirm the storm-specific image. This sense is distinguished from sense 1 by its meteorological metaphor — ruin personified as a tempest — rather than abstract devastation. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: like-a-storm, like-the-storm | es: como-tempestad, como-tormenta | fr: comme-(כשואה), ruine | de: [(כשואה)], [כשאה] Prov 1:27; Ezek 38:9

שָׁוְא H7723 N-ms (54×)

Emptiness, vanity; worthlessness, futility; falsehood, deception; used adverbially: in vain, to no purpose.

Shav' is one of Hebrew's starkest words for the hollow and the false. It appears most memorably in the Third Commandment — 'you shall not take the name of YHWH your God la-shav" (Exod 20:7) — where the precise force has been debated for millennia: does it mean 'in vain,' 'for nothing,' or 'falsely'? The answer, the evidence suggests, is yes to all three. The word's semantic range arcs from metaphysical emptiness (Job 7:3, months of shav') through moral falsehood (Exod 23:1, a 'false report') to eschatological destruction (Isa 30:28). German captures the core beautifully with Nichtigkeit and Nichtiges ('nothingness'), while French vanite and Spanish vanidad both lean on the Latin vanitas tradition. The word's power lies in its refusal to separate ontological emptiness from ethical deceit — what is hollow is inherently dishonest.

1. emptiness, vanity, worthlessness (29×) Emptiness, vanity, worthlessness — the broadest and most frequent sense at 29 occurrences. This covers the abstract quality of being without real substance or lasting value. Job's months are 'months of emptiness' (Job 7:3); the psalmist rejects 'idols of shav" (Ps 31:6); Hosea declares Gilead 'has become nothing' (Hos 12:12). German Nichtigkeit and French vanite consistently render this metaphysical-emptiness sense. The multilingual convergence on 'nothingness' vocabulary (rather than 'falsehood' vocabulary) confirms this as the semantic center of gravity. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: [in-worthlessness], emptiness, falsehood | es: Vanidad, en-vanidad, falsa | fr: vanité | de: Nichtiges, Nichtigkeit, Nichts Job 7:3; Job 11:11; Job 15:31

2. in vain, to no purpose (17×) In vain, to no purpose — the adverbial use appearing 17 times, often with the preposition lamed. The Third Commandment's la-shav' (Exod 20:7; Deut 5:11) is the paradigmatic instance: taking God's name 'to no good purpose.' Ps 127:2 declares 'it is vain (shav') for you to rise early.' Spanish en vano and French en vain both select purpose-failure vocabulary, while German für Nichtigkeit ('for nothingness') stays closer to the nominal root. The distinction from sense 1 is functional rather than semantic: the same emptiness is predicated of an action's outcome rather than a thing's nature. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: In-vain, and-vain, false | es: En-vano, a-lo-vano, a-vanidad | fr: dans-vain, en-vain, et-vanité | de: Nichtiges, für-Nichtigkeit, in-vain Exod 20:7; Deut 5:11; Ps 24:4

3. falsehood, deception, lying (6×) Falsehood, deception, lying — 6 occurrences where the moral dimension of deliberate deceit dominates. The Ninth Commandment variant uses shav' for 'false witness' (Deut 5:20, contrasting with shaqer in Exod 20:16), and Ps 144:8 describes 'a right hand of falsehood.' Spanish falsedad and French faux both select deception-specific vocabulary here, confirming a real sense boundary. Exod 23:1's 'do not raise a false (shav') report' shows the word functioning as an adjective meaning 'deceptive, lying' — a sharper moral edge than generic emptiness. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: emptiness, false, falsehood | es: falsedad, falso, vanidad | fr: falsehood, faux, vanité | de: Nichtigkeit, falsch, falsehood Exod 23:1; Deut 5:20; Ps 31:6; Ps 41:6; Ps 144:8

4. (1×) Destruction or devastating force — a single occurrence at Isa 30:28 where God's breath is like an overflowing stream reaching 'to the neck' to sift nations with 'the sieve of shav'.' English 'destruction' and Spanish destruccion both depart from the standard emptiness/vanity translations, suggesting this context activates a rare destructive-annihilation sense. The passage's imagery of violent winnowing supports reading shav' here as the devastating consequence of emptiness — what is worthless will be violently swept away. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: of-destruction | es: destrucción | fr: vanité | de: Nichts Isa 30:28

5. (1×) A borderline occurrence at Jonah 2:8 where those who cling to 'idols of shav" (hable-shav') forsake their covenant loyalty. English 'emptiness' and Spanish falsedad split between the emptiness and falsehood senses, while French and German both render it as vanite/Nichtiges. This verse combines the idolatry-as-emptiness motif (cf. Ps 31:6) with the covenant-betrayal theme, sitting at the intersection of senses 1 and 3. The hendiadys with habel ('vapor, vanity') intensifies the double-emptiness — idols are emptiness compounded. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: emptiness | es: falsedad | fr: vanité | de: Nichtiges Jonah 2:8

שָׁוְא H7724 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sheva (personal name, Calebite or David's scribe)

This personal name appears in two contexts: a Calebite in the genealogies of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:49) and, according to some manuscripts, David's secretary or scribe (2 Samuel 20:25). The second reference shows textual variation between Hebrew manuscripts regarding the exact spelling. The name may mean 'emptiness' or 'vanity' if understood from its verbal root, though as a proper name its original significance may have been different or symbolic. In both cases, the name identifies specific individuals within important Israelite families and administrative roles.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Judah's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 2:49, identifying a Calebite descendant. The name is rendered phonetically across languages (Seva in Spanish, with German offering 'Nichtigkeit'/vanity as a possible meaning). While the name's form suggests connection to the Hebrew word for 'emptiness' or 'vanity,' as a personal name it simply identifies this individual within the Calebite clan. The Septuagint variations show some textual uncertainty about the exact spelling. BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES

en: Sheva | es: Seva | fr: [שׁוא] | de: Nichtigkeit 1Chr 2:49

שׁוּב H7725 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (1074×)

To turn back, return; (Hifil) bring back, restore, answer, repay; (Polel) restore thoroughly; turn away, apostatize

One of the most theologically charged verbs in the Hebrew Bible, shub encompasses physical return to a place, spiritual repentance (turning back to God), and the causative act of restoration. Its Hifil stem branches into bringing back captives, answering a word, and repaying deeds. The prophets seized on its double meaning — the same verb that describes coming home from exile describes returning to the Lord. In Spanish 'volver' and French 'retourner' mirror this dual force, while German 'umkehren' captures the dramatic sense of reversal that makes shub the Bible's quintessential word for repentance and renewal.

1. to return, come/go back (Qal) (874×) The foundational Qal sense: physical or spatial return to a place, person, or prior condition. With 874 occurrences this is the default meaning across all narrative contexts. Multilingual glosses consistently render directional motion — Spanish 'volvió,' French 'retourna,' German 'kehrte zurück.' Key passages like Gen 8:9 (the dove returning to the ark) and Gen 22:19 (Abraham returning from Moriah) exemplify straightforward spatial return. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: and-he-returned, and-returned, and-she-returned | es: Y-volvió, y-volvió | fr: et-elle-retourna, et-il-retourna, et-retourna | de: und-er-kehrte-zurueck, und-kehrte-zurueck, und-kehrte-zurück Gen 8:9; Gen 22:19; Gen 26:18; Gen 31:55; Gen 33:16

2. to bring back, restore (Hifil) (151×) The Hifil causative: causing someone or something to come back, restoring to a former state. Spans military contexts (bringing back captives), legal ones (returning pledged garments, Deut 24:13), and prophetic promises of national restoration (Gen 48:21, 'God will bring you back'). French 'ramènerai' and Spanish 'haré volver' both capture the causative force that distinguishes this from the simple Qal return. RETURNING AND RESTORING

en: (I-will-restore), I-will-bring-back, I-will-restore | es: (haré-volver), Haznos-volver, Para-hacer-volver | fr: je-ramènerai, le-retourner, retourner | de: du-soll-kehre-zurueck, du-soll-zurueckkehren, ich-bringe-zurueck Gen 48:21; Num 22:8; Num 25:11; Deut 22:1; Deut 24:13

3. to answer, reply (Hifil) (15×) An idiomatic Hifil use meaning 'to return a word,' i.e., to answer or reply. The construction typically takes davar (word) as object. Ruth 1:21 and Esth 4:13 show this pattern clearly. Spanish 'responderé' (I will answer) captures the semantic shift from motion to speech, while the German and French renderings often retain the literal 'return' metaphor, revealing how differently languages handle this idiom. RETURNING AND RESTORING

en: I-will-answer-him, and-answer-me, answer-me | es: le-responderé, los-que-responden, me-devolvió | fr: apporta-back-moi, et-retourner-moi, retourner | de: kehrte-zurueck, returns, und-kehrte-zurueck Judg 5:29; Ruth 1:21; 2Sam 3:11; 1Kgs 12:6; Esth 4:13

4. to turn back, repel, repay (Hifil) (14×) The Hifil used for hostile or retributive turning back: repelling enemies, averting wrath, or requiting evil. Deut 32:41 ('I will return vengeance') and 2 Sam 22:25 show God turning consequences back upon agents. Spanish 'retribuyó' (requited) and 'dales retribución' (give them repayment) highlight the reciprocal logic. The Sabean cognate similarly carries requital force, confirming this as an ancient Semitic semantic extension. RETURNING AND RESTORING

en: I-will-return, I-will-turn-away, Repay | es: Dales-retribución, Y-pagaba, Y-retribuyó | fr: et-Il-retourna, et-habiter, et-il-rendered | de: ich-wird-wende-weg, ich-wird-zurueckkehren, kehrte-zurueck Deut 32:41; 2Sam 22:25; 1Kgs 2:16; 1Kgs 2:20

5. to turn away, apostatize (Qal) (7×) Qal with min or me'acharey indicating defection: turning away from God, apostasy. Josh 22:18 warns Israel against turning away, and 1 Sam 15:11 records Saul's turning from following the Lord. Spanish 'se apartó' (withdrew) and German 'wende weg' (turn away) capture the spiritual departure. Only 7 occurrences, but prophetically significant as the dark mirror of repentance — the same verb for returning to God describes abandoning him. RETURNING AND RESTORING

en: (you-will-turn), he-turned-back, turn | es: os-volviereis, os-volvéis, se-apartó | fr: il-se-tourna-en-arrière, retourner, tourner | de: du-wende-weg, du-wenden-zurueck, er-wandte-zurueck Josh 22:18; Josh 23:12; 1Sam 15:11; 1Kgs 9:6; 2Chr 7:19

6. (6×) Imperative and exhortatory uses calling for repentance — 'turn back!' — concentrated in prophetic appeals. Ezek 14:6, 18:30, and 33:11 all feature urgent calls to return from idols. Prov 1:23 personifies Wisdom making the same plea. Spanish 'Volveos' (turn yourselves) preserves the reflexive urgency. These occurrences function as the hortatory bridge between spatial return (sense 1) and theological repentance (sense 5). RETURNING AND RESTORING en: return-, turn | es: Volved, Volved,, Volveos | fr: retourner | de: kehrte-zurueck, sie-kehrten-zurueck, umkehren Job 6:29; Prov 1:23; Ezek 14:6; Ezek 18:30; Ezek 33:11

7. to restore, refresh (Polel/Piel) (6×) The Polel/Piel intensive stem expressing thorough or repeated restoration. Psalm 23:3's 'he restores my soul' is the paradigm case, using the intensive to convey deep spiritual renewal. Isa 58:12 ('restorer of paths') and Jer 50:19 ('I will bring Israel back to his pasture') likewise convey comprehensive re-establishment. Spanish 'haré volver' and the pattern across languages show causation plus completeness beyond the simple Hifil. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: and-I-will-bring-back, and-I-will-turn-you-about, restorer | es: Y-te-haré-volver,, Y-te-volveré, para-hacer-volver | fr: et-retourner, retourner | de: kehrte-zurueck, umkehren, und-umkehren Isa 49:5; Isa 58:12; Jer 50:19; Lam 1:16; Ezek 38:4

8. (1×) A rare nominal or passive participial form appearing in Num 5:8 in the context of restitution law — 'the returned [thing],' i.e., the restitution payment itself. Spanish 'la devuelta' (the returned item) and French 'le retourna' confirm the substantival reading. This lone occurrence crystallizes the verb's semantic range into a concrete noun: the thing that is brought back. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: the-returned | es: la-devuelta | fr: le-retourna | de: der-kehrte-zurueck Num 5:8

שׁוֹבָב H7726 Adj-mp (4×)

backturning, apostate, rebellious

This adjective characterizes one who turns back from God—an apostate or recusant. Possibly derived from an intensive participial form, it captures the action of turning away or rebelling. The term appears in prophetic calls to return and in condemnations of persistent rebellion, emphasizing willful departure from covenant relationship.

(4×) Describes apostates or backturning people. Jeremiah 3:14, 22 features God's call 'Return, backsliding children' (שׁוּבוּ בָנִים שׁוֹבָבִים), addressing Judah's spiritual adultery with wordplay on שׁוב ('return/turn away'). Isaiah 57:17 speaks of going on 'backturning' (שׁוֹבָב) in one's own way despite divine punishment. Jeremiah 50:6 Ketiv has שׁוֹבְבוּם ('those turning them away'), Qere שׁוֹבָבִים ('apostates'). The form may be an intensive participle (Poel stem) from שׁוב, though some read it as an adjective. Multilingual glosses show the rebellion sense: Spanish 'rebelde/rebeldes,' French preserving Hebrew forms, German likewise—all capturing willful turning away from God. The Ketiv/Qere variants at Jeremiah 50:6 show textual uncertainty. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION

en: [ketiv:turning-away], apostate, backsliding | es: [kethiv], rebelde, rebeldes | fr: [[שובבים]], [שובב], [שובבים] | de: [[שובבים]], [שובב], [שובבים] Isa 57:17; Jer 3:14; Jer 3:22; Jer 50:6

שׁוֹבָב H7727 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Shobab (personal name, possibly 'rebellious, backturning')

This masculine name, ironically possibly meaning 'rebellious' or 'backturning,' identifies two individuals: a son of David born in Jerusalem, and a son of Caleb. The name appears in multiple genealogical lists. Despite its potentially negative etymology, it functioned as a normal personal name without apparent stigma.

(4×) Personal name for two individuals: (1) Shobab, one of David's sons born in Jerusalem, listed in 2 Samuel 5:14, 1 Chronicles 3:5, and 14:4; (2) Shobab son of Caleb by Azubah in 1 Chronicles 2:18. The name possibly derives from the root שׁוּב in the sense of 'turning away, apostasy' (cf. H7726 שׁוֹבָב 'apostate'), yielding 'rebellious' or 'backturning'—though personal names don't always carry their etymological meaning functionally. Septuagint renderings vary (Σωβαβ, Σωβαδ). Multilingual glosses consistently transliterate with the conjunction: Spanish 'y-Shovav/y-Sobab,' French 'et-Shobab,' German 'und-Shovav'—all recognizing it as a proper name. The name's potential irony (naming a child 'rebellious') may reflect circumstances of birth or simply phonetic preference. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shovav | es: y-Shovav, y-Sobab | fr: et-Shobab, et-Shovav | de: [ושובב], und-Shovav 2Sam 5:14; 1Chr 2:18; 1Chr 3:5; 1Chr 14:4

שׁוֹבֵב H7728 Art / Adj-fs (3×)

backsliding, apostate, faithless—one who turns away from covenant loyalty

This adjective describes someone characterized by backsliding or apostasy, turning away from faithfulness. Jeremiah uses it for Israel as 'the faithless daughter' (31:22) and Ammon as 'the backsliding daughter' (49:4). Micah 2:4's use is textually difficult but may refer to apostates or captors. The term captures not momentary lapse but settled unfaithfulness, a turning of one's back on prior commitments or covenant relationship.

(3×) The three uses include Israel characterized as faithless (Jeremiah 31:22), Ammon as backsliding (49:4), and a disputed text in Micah 2:4. Spanish 'rebelde' (rebellious) and related terms appear, though some translations use 'backsliding' or 'faithless.' Jeremiah's dual usage applies the epithet to both Israel and her enemies, suggesting widespread apostasy. The feminine form 'daughter' personalizes nations as women who have turned away from loyalty. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION

en: the-backsliding, the-faithless, to-apostate | es: Al-rebelde, la-rebelde, rebelde | fr: [השובבה], habitant | de: [השובבה], [לשובב] Jer 31:22; Jer 49:4; Mic 2:4

שׁוּבָה H7729 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

returning, turning back; retirement or withdrawal

This noun describes the act of returning, turning back, or withdrawing—particularly in the sense of retreating or retiring from conflict or danger. Isaiah 30:15 uses it in God's message to Judah: 'in returning and rest you shall be saved.' The word carries nuances of turning away from current policy or action, ceasing frantic activity, withdrawing from alliances. The context contrasts anxious political maneuvering with quiet trust in God. Rather than military retreat, this 'returning' means turning back to God, ceasing reliance on Egyptian horses and chariots, and finding security through repentance and trust.

(1×) The act of returning, repenting, or turning back to God. Isaiah 30:15 declares 'in returning and rest shall be your salvation'—contrasting anxious self-reliance with quiet trust. The Spanish 'arrepentimiento' (repentance) interprets this as spiritual turning, while the basic sense is cessation of current activity and return to right relationship with God. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German may reflect the word's conceptual richness—it encompasses both physical withdrawal and spiritual reorientation, retreat from foolish alliances to refuge in the Lord. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: in-returning | es: en-arrepentimiento | fr: [בשובה] | de: [בשובה] Isa 30:15

שׁוּבָךְ H7730 N-msc (1×)

interwoven branches, network of boughs forming thick foliage

This word describes thick, interwoven tree branches or the network of boughs forming dense foliage. It appears in 2 Samuel 18:9 in the famous account of Absalom's death, where his head or hair caught in 'the branches of the oak' as he rode his mule beneath. The term emphasizes the tangled, interlocking nature of the tree's bough structure—thick enough to trap a rider. The image suggests dense overhead foliage with branches interwoven like a net. This natural snare became the means of Absalom's capture and ultimately his death, as he hung helpless between heaven and earth.

(1×) Thickly interwoven tree branches or the tangled boughs of a large tree. Second Samuel 18:9 describes Absalom caught in 'the branches of the oak'—a network of boughs so dense they trapped him as he rode underneath. The consistent translation as 'branches' (ramas in Spanish, branches in English/French/German) emphasizes the arboreal structure. The Hebrew suggests specifically the interlaced, network-like quality of thick foliage that could ensnare someone passing beneath, turning the tree's natural structure into an inadvertent trap. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: branches-of | es: ramas-de | fr: branches-de | de: branches-von 2Sam 18:9

שׁוֹבַךְ H7731 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shobach; Aramean general defeated by David's forces

Shobach commanded the Aramean army that fought against David's forces in 2 Samuel 10. He led reinforcements from Hadadezer king of Zobah across the Euphrates but was defeated and killed in battle. The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 19 calls him Shophach, showing typical consonantal variation in proper names. The battle marked a decisive victory for Israel over a major regional coalition. His name appears in both the narrative of the battle's beginning (10:16) and its conclusion (10:18), framing the account of David's triumph. The consistent transliteration across languages reflects standard practice with foreign proper names.

(2×) The commander of Hadadezer's Aramean army who fought against Israel in 2 Samuel 10:16, 18. The parallel in 1 Chronicles 19 gives the variant Shophach. Multilingual sources consistently transliterate the name (Spanish 'Sobac,' French 'Shobach'), following convention for proper nouns. His appearance at both the battle's start and conclusion frames David's decisive victory over the Aramean coalition, establishing Israelite dominance in the region. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shobach, and-Shobach | es: Sobac, y-Sobac | fr: Shobach, et-Shobach | de: Shobach, und-Shobach 2Sam 10:16; 2Sam 10:18

שׁוֹבָל H7732 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Shobal, a proper name borne by an Edomite clan chief (Horite) and by figures in the genealogies of Judah and Caleb.

A proper name appearing in both Edomite and Judahite genealogies. The earliest attestation identifies Shobal as a son of Seir the Horite and one of the clan chiefs of Edom (Gen 36:20, 23, 29), with a parallel listing in 1 Chronicles 1:38, 40. A second Shobal appears as a descendant of Caleb and founder of Kiriath-Jearim (1 Chr 2:50, 52), and a third in the lineage of Judah (1 Chr 4:1-2). The LXX renders the name as Σουβαλ, while Spanish offers both 'Sobal' and 'Shoval.'

Shoval (9×) The personal and clan name Shobal (שׁוֹבָל), designating at least two or three individuals: a Horite/Edomite chief descended from Seir (Gen 36:20, 23, 29; 1 Chr 1:38, 40), a son of Hur and grandson of Caleb associated with Kiriath-Jearim (1 Chr 2:50, 52), and a figure in Judah's line (1 Chr 4:1-2). The overlap between Edomite and Judahite genealogies may reflect historical clan migrations or territorial absorption. Translations consistently transliterate as Shobal (English), Sobal/Shoval (Spanish), and Schobal (German). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shobal, Shoval, and-Shobal | es: Shoval, Sobal, a-Sobal | fr: Shobal, et-Shobal | de: Schobal, Schobals, [ושובל] Gen 36:20; Gen 36:23; Gen 36:29; 1Chr 1:38; 1Chr 1:40

שׁוֹבֵק H7733 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shobek (personal name of a post-exilic leader)

This personal name appears in Nehemiah 10:24 among those who sealed the covenant commitment to follow God's law after the exile. The name appears in the list of leaders, Levites, and priests who formally pledged allegiance to Torah observance. Little is known about this individual beyond his participation in this solemn covenant renewal ceremony. His inclusion among the signatories marks him as a person of standing in the restored community, committed to the national rededication to God's commandments. The name itself may relate to roots meaning 'forsake' or 'abandon,' though its significance is uncertain.

(1×) A personal name of one who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:24 during the post-exilic restoration. Shobek joined other leaders in pledging obedience to God's law after returning from Babylonian exile. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German reflects standard treatment of proper names. His appearance in this list of covenant signatories identifies him as a recognized leader in the restored Jerusalem community, participating in the solemn recommitment to Torah that characterized Ezra and Nehemiah's reforms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shobek | es: Sobec | fr: [שובק] | de: [שובק] Neh 10:24

סוּג H7734 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)

turn back, retreat, prove unfaithful (Niphal)

This verb in its Niphal form means to turn back, retreat, or prove faithless. It appears in 2 Samuel 1:22, describing Jonathan's bow that 'never turned back' from battle—his weapon never retreated or failed to strike its target. The verb carries connotations of backsliding or proving recreant, moving away from duty or commitment. In various forms it describes both physical retreat from battle and spiritual withdrawal from faithfulness to God. The underlying image is of backward movement, pulling away from what should be faced or maintained, whether in combat courage or covenantal loyalty.

(1×) To turn back, retreat, or prove unfaithful in the Niphal stem. Second Samuel 1:22 uses this in David's lament for Jonathan, declaring his bow 'never turned back' in battle—it never retreated or failed. The verb across languages (retrocedió in Spanish, 'turned back' in English, wandte zurück in German) emphasizes backward movement or withdrawal. The context of Jonathan's martial prowess shows this as refusing to retreat, maintaining steadfastness. The same root can describe spiritual backsliding, connecting physical retreat with covenantal unfaithfulness. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: turned-back | es: retrocedió | fr: se-tourna-en-arrière | de: wandte-zurueck 2Sam 1:22

סוּג H7735 V-Piel-Imperf-2fs (1×)

fence about, protect; cause to grow (Piel)

This verb in its intensive form means to fence around carefully, to protect by encircling, or possibly to cause to grow. The word appears in Isaiah 17:11 in a difficult passage about planting that will fail. The exact meaning is disputed—either 'you carefully fence it about' (protecting the plant) or 'you make it grow' (if related to a different root). The Targumic Aramaic uses related forms for fencing, enclosing, or hedging. The agricultural context involves careful cultivation efforts that will ultimately prove futile because the crop is planted for foreign gods rather than for the Lord.

(1×) To fence about carefully, protect by encircling, or possibly cause to grow in intensive Piel form. Isaiah 17:11 uses this in agricultural imagery about cultivating plants that will ultimately fail—'you make it grow' or 'you carefully fence it.' The Spanish 'harás crecer' (you will make grow) takes the verb as cultivation, while the untranslated Hebrew in French and German reflects interpretive uncertainty. The context describes intensive but ultimately futile agricultural effort on behalf of foreign worship, contrasting careful human cultivation with divine judgment. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: you-make-grow | es: lo-harás-crecer | fr: [תשגשג] | de: [תשגשג] Isa 17:11

שָׁדַד H7736 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

devastate, destroy, ruin violently

This verb means to deal violently with, to devastate, despoil, or ruin. It appears in Psalm 91:6 describing 'the destruction that devastates at noonday,' part of a series of dangers from which God protects the faithful. The word emphasizes violent, destructive action—whether military conquest, natural disaster, or epidemic plague. The metaplastic form suggests intensity of action. While related to other Semitic roots meaning to obstruct or drag, in Hebrew it developed specifically toward meanings of violent destruction and devastation, often in contexts of warfare, divine judgment, or disaster.

(1×) To devastate, destroy, or deal violently with something or someone. Psalm 91:6 refers to 'the destruction that devastates at noonday'—a personified threatening force from which God delivers. The verb across languages (devasta in Spanish, 'devastates' in English) emphasizes violent destructive action. The context lists various dangers (pestilence, terror, arrow, plague) from which the righteous find refuge in God. This noonday devastation may refer to sunstroke, epidemic disease, or demonic attack—whatever its identification, it represents sudden, violent destruction. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: that-devastates | es: que-devasta | fr: être-orné | de: der-devastates Ps 91:6

שָׁוָה H7737a V-Piel-Perf-1cs (14×)

To be equal, comparable, or of equivalent value; also to make level, smooth, liken, or deliberately set in place

Built on the root idea of evenness and smoothness, שָׁוָה spans from concrete leveling of ground (Isa 28:25) to the loftiest theological rhetoric — 'To whom will you liken me, that I should be equal?' (Isa 46:5). In Esther, the word takes a pragmatic turn: Haman calculates that the Jews' destruction is 'worth it' to the king (3:8), while Esther protests that the enemy's damage does not 'equal' the king's loss (7:4). The Psalm of quiet trust (131:2) uses the Piel for stilling the soul — a beautiful metaphorical extension from physical leveling to inner calm.

1. be equal, be worth (9×) The Qal and Nithpael: to be equal to, comparable with, or of equivalent worth. Esther deploys this sense three times in political calculations of value (3:8; 5:13; 7:4), while Proverbs 3:15 declares that nothing 'equals' wisdom. Job 33:27 uses it for moral requital — what was not repaid in kind. Spanish 'igual' and French 'être égal' map this sense directly, confirming the core meaning of measured equivalence between two things. EQUAL SAME WORTH

en: are-alike, can-compare, equal | es: igual, me-fue-igual, provecho | fr: [ואשוה], être-égal | de: [ואשוה], wert Esth 3:8; Esth 5:13; Esth 7:4; Job 33:27; Prov 3:15

2. level, smooth, calm (2×) The Piel factitive: to make level, smooth, or calm. Isaiah 28:25 pictures a farmer who has 'leveled' the surface of his field before planting — a concrete agricultural action. Psalm 131:2 extends this metaphorically: 'I have calmed and quieted my soul.' Spanish 'he aquietado' ('I have quieted') and 'ha nivelado' ('has leveled') preserve both the physical and psychological dimensions of this sense, showing how producing evenness became a metaphor for inner peace. SET PLACE POSITION

en: I-have-calmed, he-has-leveled | es: ha-nivelado, he-aquietado | fr: [שוה], être-égal | de: [שוה], ich-haben-calmed Ps 131:2; Isa 28:25

3. make equal, liken (2×) The Hifil causative: to make something equal to another, to liken or compare. This sense appears in bold rhetorical questions — 'To whom will you liken me and make me equal?' (Isa 46:5) and 'What can I liken to you, O daughter of Jerusalem?' (Lam 2:13). Spanish 'igualaréis' ('will you make equal') and 'te igualaré' ('I will liken you') show the active, comparative force: the speaker is challenged to find any adequate comparison. EQUAL SAME WORTH

en: and-make-equal, shall-I-liken | es: e-igualaréis?, te-igualaré | fr: [אשוה], [ותשוו] | de: [ותשוו], wert Isa 46:5; Lam 2:13

4. set, place before (1×) A distinctive Piel usage meaning to set or place something deliberately in a fixed position. Psalm 119:30 reads 'I have set your judgments before me' — not comparing or leveling, but positioning something as a constant reference point. This sense grows naturally from the root's idea of arranging evenly: what is 'set before' is placed in a steady, level, unwavering position. The Spanish 'puse' ('I placed') confirms the concrete spatial action underlying this otherwise abstract commitment. SET PLACE POSITION

en: I-have-set-before-me | es: puse | fr: être-égal | de: ich-haben-setzen-vor-mich Ps 119:30

שָׁוָה H7737b V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (7×)

To set, place, or position deliberately; also to make level or even (Piel of שָׁוָה II)

A Piel verb meaning to set or place something with deliberate intention, and by extension to make level or sure-footed. In Psalm 16:8 the psalmist declares 'I have set YHWH always before me,' while in Psalm 89:19 God places strength upon a chosen warrior. The participle form in 2 Samuel 22:34 evokes the vivid image of God making the worshipper's feet as nimble as a deer's on mountain heights. Spanish clamé and he puesto capture the range from composing oneself to deliberate positioning.

1. set, place, bestow (5×) To set, place, or bestow something deliberately before or upon someone. The psalmist in Ps 16:8 uses it of setting YHWH before himself as an ever-present anchor, while Ps 89:19 speaks of God bestowing strength upon a hero. The Spanish gloss he puesto ('I have placed') and the German du bestow both capture the intentionality of this act. Hosea 10:1 extends the usage to producing fruit, suggesting a creative placing-forth. SET PLACE POSITION

en: I-calmed-myself, I-have-set, he-produces- | es: Clamé, he-puesto, produce- | fr: [שויתי], ressembler, être-semblable | de: [ישוה], [שויתי], du-bestow Ps 16:8; Ps 21:5; Ps 89:19; Isa 38:13; Hos 10:1

2. make level, make even (2×) To make level, even, or sure-footed, used as a Piel participle describing God's gift of stability. In the closely parallel passages 2 Sam 22:34 and Ps 18:33, God is described as making the faithful one's feet like those of a deer on high terrain. The Spanish igualando ('leveling') highlights the equalizing dimension, while the imagery of a hind on mountain crags conveys both physical surefootedness and spiritual confidence. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: making, making-level | es: Igualando, el-que-hace | fr: de-ressembler, faisant-level | de: machend-level, making 2Sam 22:34; Ps 18:33

תְּשֹׁאָה H7738 V-Pual-Imperf-2ms (1×)

tumult, roaring noise, crashing sound (especially of storm)

This noun describes loud tumultuous noise—shouting, roaring, or crashing sounds. In its single occurrence in Job 30:22, the text is uncertain (Ketiv/Qere variation), but appears to describe the roaring tumult of a storm into which God dissolves Job. The word relates to noise of devastation, storming, or loud confusion. Elsewhere in its plural form it describes city noises and shouting. The root idea is loud, chaotic sound—whether from celebrating crowds, attacking armies, thunderstorms, or general tumult. In Job's complaint, it likely represents the storm winds of divine assault that are dissolving his life.

(1×) Tumultuous noise, roaring, or storm-sound. Job 30:22's difficult text (with Ketiv/Qere variation) appears to describe God dissolving Job 'into the roaring storm'—the tumult or crashing noise of tempest. The Spanish 'tormenta' (storm) interprets this as storm-context, while the untranslated Hebrew in French and German reflects textual uncertainty. The image fits Job's complaint of divine assault—he feels carried away by storm winds and dissolved into roaring chaos, overwhelmed by the tumult of God's opposition. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: [K] | es: [en-tormenta] | fr: [תשוה] | de: [[תשוה]] Job 30:22

H7739 V-Piel-Perf-3mp (1×)

be made equal to, become like (Aramaic, Qere/Piel)

This Aramaic verb means to make equal, make like, or cause to be similar to something. It appears in Daniel 5:21 in a textually complex passage (with Ketiv/Qere variation) describing Nebuchadnezzar being made equal to beasts during his humiliation. The Qere reading uses the Piel intensive form, indicating active causation—'they made him equal to' or 'he was made like' the animals. This describes the king's mental breakdown and subsequent beastly existence as divine judgment for pride. The verb emphasizes transformation to a similar state or condition, equalization between previously different entities.

(1×) To be made equal to or become like something (Aramaic Piel/Qere reading). Daniel 5:21 describes Nebuchadnezzar 'being made equal to beasts' during his judgment—his heart/mind was made like animals when driven from human society. The Spanish 'fue igualado' (was made equal) and the concept of becoming similar both emphasize the transformation from human king to beast-like existence. The Qere/Ketiv textual variation affects verbal form but maintains the core meaning: Nebuchadnezzar's radical humiliation reduced him to animal-like status. EQUAL SAME WORTH

en: (qere:was-made) | es: (fue-igualado) | fr: être-semblable | de: [שויר] Dan 5:21

שְׁוָה H7739a V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)

be made equal to, become like (Aramaic, Ketiv/Nifal)

This represents the Ketiv (written form) reading of the same Aramaic verb in Daniel 5:21, meaning to be made equal or become like. The difference from the Qere is primarily in verbal form—this Ketiv uses what appears to be a passive/reflexive form where the Qere uses the causative Piel. Both convey that Nebuchadnezzar was made like the beasts during his period of madness and humiliation. The essential meaning remains: the king underwent transformation to beast-like existence. Whether read as Ketiv or Qere, the verse describes the same historical event of Nebuchadnezzar's pride-induced insanity and subsequent beastly life.

(1×) To be made equal to or become like (Aramaic Ketiv/Nifal reading). This variant reading of Daniel 5:21 describes the same event as the Qere—Nebuchadnezzar 'being made like beasts' when judged for pride. The Spanish glosses for both Ketiv and Qere are nearly identical ('fue igualado'), recognizing that the essential meaning is unchanged despite the textual variant. The Ketiv form may emphasize passive transformation—the king was made to become like animals—while maintaining the same theological point about divine humiliation of the proud. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: [ketiv:was-made] | es: [fue-igualado] | fr: être-semblable | de: [שור] Dan 5:21

שְׁוָה H7739b V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (1×)

be made into, be turned into (Aramaic Hithpael)

This Aramaic verb in the Hithpael reflexive stem means to be made into something or transformed into a different state. It appears in Daniel 3:29 in Nebuchadnezzar's decree protecting worshipers of the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego—anyone blaspheming their God 'shall be made into pieces' (or their house turned into rubble). The reflexive Hithpael suggests the subject undergoing transformation or being constituted as something different. The context is royal decree threatening severe punishment. The verb emphasizes complete transformation from one state to another, typically with destructive connotations in its biblical usage.

(1×) To be made into or transformed into something (Aramaic Hithpael). Daniel 3:29 uses this in Nebuchadnezzar's protective decree: those who blaspheme the God of the three faithful men 'will be made into pieces' or have their houses turned to rubble. The Spanish

'será convertida' (will be converted/transformed) emphasizes the transformation aspect. The Hithpael reflexive stem may intensify the completeness of transformation—total reduction to fragments. The context shows royal power enforcing respect for the God who delivered his servants from the furnace. DOING AND MAKING

en: will-be-made | es: será-convertida | fr: être-semblable | de: [ישתורה] Dan 3:29

שָׁוֵה H7740 N-proper-fs (2×)

Shaveh; valley location, possibly meaning 'plain' or 'level place'

This place name appears in Genesis 14, designating a valley location. Genesis 14:5 mentions it in the battle narrative, while 14:17 identifies it as the 'Valley of Shaveh, that is, the King's Valley,' where the king of Sodom met Abraham after his victory. The name likely means 'level' or 'plain,' describing the topography. Later Jewish tradition identified it with the Kidron Valley near Jerusalem, though the actual location remains uncertain. The multilingual transliterations (Spanish Save, French Shaveh) follow standard practice for geographic names. Its association with the 'King's Valley' suggests a place of royal significance.

(2×) A valley location in Genesis 14:5, 17, identified as the site where the king of Sodom met Abraham. The name means 'level' or 'plain,' describing flat terrain suitable for meetings and battles. Genesis 14:17 adds the gloss 'the King's Valley,' suggesting royal or ceremonial importance. Translations consistently preserve the Hebrew name (Spanish 'Save,' French 'Shaveh'), treating it as a proper geographic designation. The exact location remains debated, though tradition places it near Jerusalem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shaveh, in-Shaveh | es: Save, en-Save | fr: Shaveh, dans-Shaveh | de: Schawe, in-Schawe Gen 14:5; Gen 14:17

שָׁוֵה H7741

level plain (geographical term; Genesis 14:5 in Shaveh-Kiriathaim)

This noun meaning 'level plain' or 'valley' appears in Genesis 14:5 as part of the place name 'Shaveh-Kiriathaim,' where Chedorlaomer defeats the Emim during his military campaign. The term denotes flat, open land suitable for battle or settlement. Some read Kiriathaim as appositional ('the plain, namely Kiriathaim') while others take Shaveh as a common noun ('the plain of Kiriathaim'). The geographical reference locates ancient conflicts in Transjordan, though precise identification remains uncertain. The term evokes the strategic importance of level ground for military movements in ancient Near Eastern warfare.

שׁוּט H7742 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

to meditate, muse, go about in thought (uncertain)

This infinitive form appears in Genesis 24:63 in a textually uncertain passage describing Isaac going out to the field 'to meditate' in the evening. The Hebrew is difficult, and many scholars suggest this may be a scribal error for a different verb. If the reading 'to meditate' is correct, it depicts Isaac in contemplative activity—walking in the field for reflection, prayer, or quiet thought. The Septuagint supports the meditative reading. This would make it an early biblical testimony to practices of solitary meditation and prayer. However, related verbs mean 'to roam' or 'go about,' so the exact nuance remains debated.

(1×) To meditate, muse, or engage in contemplative thought (though textually uncertain). Genesis 24:63 describes Isaac going to the field 'to meditate' in the evening before meeting Rebekah. The Spanish 'para meditar' (to meditate) and similar glosses interpret this as reflective activity—quiet thought, prayer, or contemplation. However, the Hebrew text presents difficulties; some scholars propose emendations. If correct, this provides a glimpse of Isaac in private devotion, walking and meditating in solitude before the providential encounter with his future wife. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: to-meditate | es: para-meditar | fr: à-meditate | de: um-zu-sinnen Gen 24:63

שׁוּחַ H7743 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (4×)

sink down, bow down; to descend toward the ground or death, often in contexts of humiliation or mortality

This verb describes a downward motion of sinking or bowing down, whether physically or metaphorically. In Psalm 44:25, the soul sinks down to the dust in humiliation. Proverbs 2:18 uses it of the adulteress whose house sinks down to death, a vivid image of moral descent. The multilingual evidence shows both physical bowing (German betete-an 'prayed/bowed down') and sinking/humbling (Spanish se-abatió, French s'affaisser). The word captures the gravity-pulled movement toward earth or Sheol, whether in worship, defeat, or moral collapse.

(4×) The verb depicts downward movement—sinking to the dust (Ps 44:25), descending toward death (Prov 2:18), or the soul bowing down in affliction (Lam 3:20). Multilingual glosses reveal both physical prostration and metaphorical collapse, showing this word spans worship postures, defeat, and the inexorable pull toward mortality. The rare usage (4x) suggests a poetic, intensive form reserved for dramatic contexts. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: (and-bows-down), [bows-down], has-sunk | es: (y-se-humilla), [y-se-humilla], se-abatió | fr: [(ותשחו)], [[ותשיחו]], s'affaisser | de: [(ותשחו)], [[ותשיחו]], betete-an Ps 44:25; Prov 2:18; Lam 3:20

שׁוּחַ H7744 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shuah; son of Abraham and Keturah, ancestor of an Aramean people

Shuah was a son of Abraham through his wife Keturah, listed in Genesis 25:2 and 1 Chronicles 1:32. His descendants became associated with an Aramean territory along the Euphrates River mentioned in Assyrian records as Šuḥi. This connection links biblical genealogy to ancient Near Eastern geography and politics. The name appears in both primary genealogical lists of Abraham's descendants through Keturah, establishing the ethnic diversity of Abraham's offspring. Assyrian inscriptions confirm Šuḥi as a real political entity on the Euphrates, validating the historical memory preserved in these genealogies.

(2×) Abraham's son through Keturah, appearing in Genesis 25:2 and the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 1:32. Assyrian texts mention Šuḥi as an Aramean region on the Euphrates, confirming the historical-geographic connection. The multilingual transliterations (Spanish 'Shuach,' French 'Shuah') preserve the Hebrew name following genealogical convention. His inclusion among Abraham's sons by Keturah shows the patriarch's role as ancestor to multiple peoples beyond Isaac's line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shuah, and-Shuach | es: Shuach, y-Suaj | fr: Shuah, [ושוח] | de: Schuach, [ושוח] Gen 25:2; 1Chr 1:32

שׁוּחָה H7745 Conj-w / N-fs (5×)

pit; a hole in the ground, literal or figurative for treachery and moral danger

Shuchah means a pit or hole in the ground, used both literally and figuratively. Jeremiah 2:6 describes the wilderness as a land of drought and 'pits,' evoking desolate terrain. In Jeremiah 18:20 and 18:22, enemies 'dig a pit' for the prophet, a metaphor for treacherous plotting. Proverbs employs it figuratively for moral danger: the mouth of a forbidden woman is a 'deep pit' into which the LORD's disfavored fall (Prov 22:14; 23:27). The Spanish 'fosa' and German 'Grube' both denote an excavated hole, confirming the concrete spatial sense underlying the metaphors.

(5×) A pit or hole in the ground, used literally for desolate terrain and figuratively for treachery or moral danger. Jeremiah 2:6 pairs it with drought to describe wilderness desolation. In Jer 18:20 and 18:22 enemies dig a pit for the prophet, metaphorizing lethal conspiracy. Proverbs 22:14 and 23:27 call a forbidden woman's mouth a 'deep pit,' symbolizing moral entrapment. Spanish 'fosa,' German 'Grube,' and English 'pit' all confirm the core spatial referent. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: a-pit, and-pit, pit | es: (fosa), Fosa, fosa | fr: [(שוחה)], [רשוחה], [שוחה] | de: Grube, [(שוחה)], [רשוחה] Prov 22:14; Prov 23:27; Jer 2:6; Jer 18:20; Jer 18:22

שׁוּחָה H7746 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shuchah (personal or place name, uncertain)

This name appears in 1 Chronicles 4:11 in the genealogies of Judah, apparently as a son of Hur in the Calebite lineage. However, textual and interpretive questions surround this name. It may be identical with Hushah mentioned in verse 4, possibly representing a place name rather than a personal name, or it might be a family/clan designation. The Septuagint shows variation in rendering it. If it is a place, it would be a location associated with the Calebite clan; if a person, a descendant within that important Judahite family. The uncertainty reflects the complex nature of genealogical texts where persons, places, and clans interweave.

(1×) A name in Judah's genealogy appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:11, possibly a person, place, or clan designation within the Calebite lineage. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German reflects uncertain interpretation. The parallel with 'Hushah' in the same genealogical context suggests possible textual relationship or variant. Whether personal name or geographic location, it marks an element within the complex Calebite family structure documented in Chronicles, though its exact nature—individual, town, or family group—remains ambiguous. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: Shuchah | es: Suja | fr: [שוחה] | de: [שוחה] 1Chr 4:11

שׁוּחִי H7747 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Shuhite; gentile adjective for a descendant of Shuah, applied exclusively to Bildad in Job

A gentile adjective identifying someone as a descendant of Shuah, one of Abraham's sons by Keturah (Gen 25:2). In Scripture it appears only as an epithet for Bildad, one of Job's three friends. The LXX renders it as Sauchites. Bildad the Shuhite speaks in three cycles of dialogue (Job 8, 18, 25), consistently arguing that suffering results from sin and that God's justice is inflexible.

(5×) Gentile designation identifying Bildad as a descendant of Shuah, Abraham's son through Keturah. All five occurrences attach to Bildad in the book of Job (2:11; 8:1; 18:1; 25:1; 42:9). English, Spanish, and French translations consistently render it as a demonym ('the Shuhite,' 'el shuhita,' 'le Shuhite'), confirming its function as an ethnic identifier rather than a personal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shuhite | es: el-shuhita, el-suhita | fr: le-Shuhite | de: [השוחי], [השחי] Job 2:11; Job 8:1; Job 18:1; Job 25:1; Job 42:9

שׁוּחָם H7748 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shuham (personal name, ancestor of Danite clan)

This is the name of a son of Dan and ancestor of the Shuhamite clan. Numbers 26:42 lists the Shuhamites as the family group descended from him within the tribe of Dan. Interestingly, the corresponding passage in Genesis 46:23 calls this same person Hushim, showing variant name forms for the same individual. Such variations were common in biblical genealogies. The Shuhamites constituted Dan's primary family group in the census—in fact, the census lists only this one clan for Dan, suggesting either simplification of the genealogical record or actual demographic dominance of this family within the tribe.

(1×) Personal name of Dan's son and ancestor of the Shuhamite clan in Numbers 26:42. The prepositional phrase 'to Shuham' introduces the clan descended from him. This same ancestor appears as 'Hushim' in Genesis 46:23, demonstrating name variation. The census identifies the Shuhamites as the family of Dan—apparently the sole or dominant clan recorded for that tribe. The patronymic 'to Shuham' establishes genealogical descent, linking the census count to the ancestral founder who came to Egypt with Jacob. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Shuham | es: de-Suham | fr: à-Shuham | de: zu-Shuham Num 26:42

שׁוּחָמִי H7749 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

the Shuhamite; collective designation for descendants of Shuham of the tribe of Dan

This gentillic adjective with the article functions as a collective noun for the Shuhamite clan within the tribe of Dan. Numbers 26:42-43 lists them in the wilderness census, identifying them as descendants of Shuham. The use of the definite article makes the term function as a plural collective: 'the Shuhamites' as a family group. Such clan designations were crucial for land inheritance, military organization, and maintaining tribal identity. The multilingual renderings ('los-suhamitas,' 'le-Shuhamite') appropriately translate the collective sense. These census lists preserved Israel's internal structure and each family's claim to covenant membership.

(2×) The collective designation for the clan of Shuham within Dan's tribe, appearing in Numbers 26:42-43 during the second wilderness census. The definite article makes it function as a group noun: 'the Shuhamites.' Spanish 'los-suhamitas' (plural) and French 'le-Shuhamite' (singular collective) both capture this group sense. These clan lists maintained genealogical records essential for inheritance rights and tribal organization in Israel's covenantal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shuhamite | es: los-suhamitas | fr: le-Shuhamite | de: der-Shuhamite Num 26:42; Num 26:43

שׁוּט H7750 N-mp (2×)

those swerving to falsehood, apostates; people who fall away from truth into deception

This participial phrase describes those who turn aside or fall away to falsehood and lies. Psalm 40:4 pronounces blessing on those who do not turn to the proud or 'those who fall away to falsehood,' contrasting genuine trust with apostasy. Psalm 101:3 vows to set no worthless thing before the eyes, hating the work of 'those who turn aside.' The verb implies a swerving or deviation from the straight path of truth. Spanish desviaciones (deviations) and French pécher (sin) capture the moral wandering involved. The term condemns not mere error but deliberate apostasy—active turning from truth to lies.

(2×) People who actively turn away from truth toward falsehood and deception, appearing in Psalm 40:4 and 101:3. The participial form emphasizes ongoing action: these are not accidentally mistaken but willfully turning aside. Spanish 'y-a-los-que-se-desvían' (those who deviate) and English 'those-turning-aside-to' both capture the volitional movement away from truth. Psalm 40 contrasts them with those who trust God, while Psalm 101 expresses the psalmist's hatred of such apostasy, marking this as moral-spiritual defection. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: and-those-turning-aside-to, crooked-things | es: desviaciones, y-a-los-que-se-desvían | fr: et-pécher, pécher | de: crooked-things, und-jene-turning-aside-zu Ps 40:4; Ps 101:3

שׁוּט H7751a V-Qal-Perf-3cp (11×)

To go about, rove, range to and fro; of roaming, searching, and restless wandering

A verb of movement that ranges from purposeful traversal to aimless wandering. In its basic Qal form, it describes the people going about to gather manna (Num 11:8) and Satan roving through the earth (Job 1:7). The Polel intensification transforms this into eager, purposeful ranging — the eyes of the LORD running to and fro across the whole earth (2 Chr 16:9), or people desperately scouring for the word of God (Amos 8:12). Spanish shifts tellingly from 'vagar' (to wander) in the Qal to 'recorrer/correr' (to traverse/run) in the intensified forms. The lone Hitpael in Jeremiah 49:3 adds a note of panicked, restless flight.

1. go about, rove (Qal) (5×) Qal basic: to go about, rove, or traverse an area. Describes general movement through a space — the people dispersing to gather manna (Num 11:8), David's men going throughout the land (2 Sam 24:2, 8), and Satan roaming the earth (Job 1:7; 2:2). Spanish 'vagar/recorrer' and French 'aller au sujet de'

capture the unhurried, traversing quality. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD
en: and-they-went-about, from-roaming, go-about | es: Se-dispersó, Y-recorrieron, de-vagar | fr: alla-au-sujet-de, de-משוט, de-משט | de: [משוט], [משט], gehe-ueber Num 11:8; 2Sam 24:2; 2Sam 24:8; Job 1:7; Job 2:2

2. run to and fro, range eagerly (Piel) (5×) Polel/Piel intensive: to range eagerly to and fro, to run with purpose or desperation. The eyes of the LORD ranging throughout the earth seeking the faithful (2 Chr 16:9; Zech 4:10) define the purposeful end; Amos 8:12 shows the desperate end — people running north to east seeking God's word and not finding it. Spanish 'correr' (to run) and 'recorred' (range!) mark the intensified urgency. Daniel 12:4 prophesies that many will range to and fro and knowledge will increase. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD
en: ranging, roving, run-to-and-fro | es: Recorred, andarán-errantes, correrán | fr: [משטטות], [שוטטו], parcourir | de: [ישוטטו], [ישטטו], [משוטטים] 2Chr 16:9; Jer 5:1; Dan 12:4; Amos 8:12; Zech 4:10

3. wander restlessly (Hitpael) (1×) Hitpael reflexive-iterative: to wander restlessly, roving without direction. Only in Jeremiah 49:3, where the daughters of Rabbah are told to rush about in panic among the hedgerows. Spanish 'vaguen' (let them wander) and English 'run to and fro' suggest frantic, directionless flight — a darker shade of the root's roving sense. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: and-run-to-and-fro | es: y-vaguen | fr: [והתשוטטנה] | de: [והתשוטטנה] Jer 49:3

שׁוֹט H7751b Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (2×)
rowers; those who propel a ship with oars
This denominative participle describes men who row, appearing in Ezekiel 27's extended metaphor of Tyre as a magnificent ship. Verse 8 mentions the skilled rowers of Sidon and Arvad who manned Tyre's oars, while verse 26 describes how 'your rowers have brought you into great waters.' The imagery portrays Tyre's maritime commercial empire through nautical metaphor. The verb derives from the noun for 'oar,' creating an occupational term. Consistent translations ('rowers,' 'remeros,' 'los-remeros') reflect the straightforward maritime reference. The metaphor ultimately serves Ezekiel's prophecy of Tyre's downfall—even skilled rowers cannot prevent shipwreck when God judges.

(2×) Men who propel ships with oars, appearing in Ezekiel 27:8, 26 within the elaborate ship-metaphor for Tyre. The participial form indicates their occupational role. Spanish 'los-remeros, remeros' and English 'rowers, the-rowers' straightforwardly translate the maritime function. Ezekiel uses them symbolically: even Tyre's expert rowers (verse 8) cannot prevent the ship's destruction when brought 'into great waters' (verse 26), imagery for political catastrophe. SAIL TRAVEL SHIP
en: rowers, the-rowers | es: los-remeros, remeros | fr: parcourir | de: [השטים], [שטים] Ezek 27:8; Ezek 27:26

שׁוֹט H7752 Prep-b (11×)
A whip or scourge, used literally of punishment and figuratively of divine judgment and calamity Denotes the instrument of beating — a lash, whip, or scourge — deployed in contexts of both human cruelty and divine discipline. Rehoboam's infamous threat to discipline Israel with scorpions rather than his father's whips marks the political rupture of the kingdom (1 Kgs 12:11, 14). Job's friend Eliphaz speaks of being hidden from 'the scourge of the tongue' (Job 5:21), extending the image to verbal attack. Isaiah envisions the LORD wielding a scourge against Assyria as he once struck Egypt at the Sea (Isa 10:26; 28:15, 18). The word thus bridges physical punishment and cosmic judgment.

whip, scourge (11×) A whip or scourge used for inflicting punishment, appearing both literally and metaphorically. Literally, it denotes the instrument of discipline — Rehoboam threatens heavier whips than Solomon's (1 Kgs 12:11, 14). Metaphorically, Job 5:21 speaks of the 'scourge of the tongue,' while Isaiah pictures God wielding a scourge against oppressors (Isa 10:26; 28:15, 18). Nahum 3:2 evokes the crack of the whip in battle. Arabic سَوْط (sawt, whip), Spanish 'látigo/azote,' Korean 채찍 (chaejjik), and Hindi कोड़ा (kora) all converge on a single instrument of striking, with no semantic distinction between literal and figurative uses in the lexicon. WHIP SCOURGE en: a-whip, an-overflowing, from-the-scourge-of | es: (azote), Del-látigo-de, Látigo | fr: [(שוט)], [בשוטים], [שוט] | de: [(שוט)], [בשוט], [בשוטים] 1Kgs 12:11; 1Kgs 12:14; 2Chr 10:11; 2Chr 10:14; Job 5:21

שׂוּךְ H7753 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (2×)
hedge up, fence about; enclose with a barrier for protection or obstruction
This verb means to surround with a hedge or fence, used both protectively and obstructively. Job 1:10 describes how God 'has put a hedge around' Job, his household, and possessions, explaining Satan's complaint that Job is unfairly protected from calamity. Hosea 2:6 uses the same imagery oppositely: God declares 'I will hedge up her way with thorns,' blocking the path of unfaithful Israel. The metaphor draws from agricultural practice of protecting gardens or blocking animal paths. Spanish cercar (to fence) and French entourer (to surround) capture the enclosing action. The same physical act serves opposite purposes—protective custody or restricting freedom.

(2×) To surround with a protective or obstructive barrier, appearing in Job 1:10 and Hosea 2:6. In Job, God's hedge protects Job from harm, explaining his prosperity—a divine fence of blessing. In Hosea, God hedges Israel's path with thorns to prevent her pursuing lovers, using enclosure as corrective discipline. Spanish 'cercaré, cercaste' (I will fence, you fenced) and English 'hedging, put-a-hedge' both convey the encircling action, though context determines whether it protects or restricts. BINDING AND TYING en: hedging, put-a-hedge | es: cercaré, cercaste | fr: entourer, שכת | de: [שך], [שכת] Job 1:10; Hos 2:6

שׂוֹךְ H7754a N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
branch, bough (with suffix)
This noun means branch, bough, or brushwood, appearing in Judges 9:49 during Abimelech's attack on the tower of Shechem. Each person cut 'his branch' or bough and followed Abimelech to pile branches against the stronghold and burn it. The term refers to substantial tree limbs or cut branches suitable for burning. The context shows military use of branches as combustible material for siege warfare —a tactic of piling brushwood against fortifications and setting them ablaze. The word appears with pronominal suffix 'his branch,' indicating individual participation in gathering the deadly fuel.

(1×) A branch or bough cut from a tree, appearing with pronominal suffix in Judges 9:49. Each man cut down 'his branch' following Abimelech's example, then piled them against Shechem's tower to burn it with fire. The term across languages (rama in Spanish, 'branch' in English, Ast in German) indicates substantial tree limbs. The context reveals brutal siege tactics—using cut branches as accelerant for arson. About a thousand people died in the resulting conflagration, making these branches instruments of mass murder in Abimelech's ruthless quest for power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-branch | es: su-rama | fr: son-branche | de: sein-Ast Judg 9:49

שׂוֹכָה H7754b N-fsc (1×)
branch, bough (construct form)
This is the construct form of the same word for branch or bough, appearing in Judges 9:48 when Abimelech cuts 'a branch of trees' with an ax. The construct form links it to the following word 'trees,' creating the phrase 'branch of wood/trees.' Abimelech demonstrates the tactic by cutting a substantial bough, hoisting it on his shoulder, and commanding his men to do likewise quickly. These weren't small twigs but substantial branches heavy enough to be carried on the shoulder yet light enough for rapid collection. The construct form's grammatical relationship emphasizes the branches as tree-products, materials harvested for military destruction.

(1×) Branch or bough in construct form, literally 'branch of trees/wood' in Judges 9:48. Abimelech cut this branch with an ax, lifted it to his shoulder, and ordered his troops to do the same quickly. The construct relationship 'branch of wood' emphasizes these as substantial tree limbs. The same terminology across languages (rama de in Spanish, 'branch of' in English, Ast von in German) maintains the construct genitive. Abimelech's action demonstrated the siege technique—gather heavy branches fast, pile them as fuel for burning the enemy stronghold. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: branch-of | es: rama-de | fr: branche-de | de: Ast-von Judg 9:48

שׂוֹכֹה H7755 N-proper-fs (8×)

Sokho (also Sochoh, Socoh), a town name in Judah occurring in both the Shephelah and the hill country.

A proper feminine noun naming at least two towns in the territory of Judah, both called Sokho (with variant spellings Sochoh, Socoh, Sokhoh). The better-known Shephelah site is where the Philistines encamped before David's famous encounter with Goliath (1 Sam 17:1), and it later appears as one of Rehoboam's fortified cities (2 Chr 11:7) and among towns captured by the Philistines (2 Chr 28:18). A second Sokho sits in Judah's hill country near Hebron (Josh 15:48; 1 Chr 4:18). The modern identification is Khirbet esh-Shuweikeh. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name with minor variation.

Sokho (place name in Judah) (8×) A place name in the tribal allotment of Judah, referring to one or two towns. The Shephelah Sokho (Josh 15:35) is the famous site where the Philistines gathered before the battle of David and Goliath (1 Sam 17:1), later fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:7) and seized by the Philistines under Ahaz (2 Chr 28:18). A hill-country Sokho near Hebron also appears (Josh 15:48; 1 Chr 4:18). The spelling varies between Sokho, Sochoh, and Socoh across manuscripts, reflected in English, Spanish ('Soco/Socoh'), French, and German transliterations. The modern site is identified as esh-Shuweikeh. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sochoh, Soco, Socoh | es: Soco, Socoh, Socó | fr: Sochoh, Socoh, Sokhoh | de: Sochoh, Socoh, Sokhoh Josh 15:35; Josh 15:48; 1Sam 17:1; 1Kgs 4:10

שׂוּכָתִים H7756 N-proper-mp (1×)

Sukathites (gentilicic name of a scribal family)

This gentilicic (family/clan) name appears in 1 Chronicles 2:55, identifying one of three families of scribes living at Jabez. The Sukathites were a recognized scribal family within Judah, apparently maintaining professional expertise in writing and record-keeping across generations. Their association with Jabez, along with the Tirathites and Shimeathites, suggests a scribal community or school where literacy and documentary skills were preserved and transmitted. Such families were crucial for maintaining biblical texts, legal records, and administrative documents. The name's plural gentilicic form indicates a family group defined by descent and professional specialization.

(1×) A family name identifying one of three scribal families in 1 Chronicles 2:55. The Sukathites lived at Jabez alongside other literate families who specialized in scribal work. The untranslated Hebrew in French and German treats this as a proper gentilicic name. As professional scribes, they would have been responsible for copying texts, maintaining records, and preserving written traditions—crucial roles in pre-modern societies. Their inclusion in Judah's genealogies honors their contribution to preserving Israel's literary and legal heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sukhathim | es: sucateos | fr: [שוכתים] | de: [שוכתים] 1Chr 2:55

שׁוּל H7757 N-mpc (11×)

Hem, skirt, or train of a garment, used of priestly robes, God's robe in vision, and metaphors of shame

Refers to the lower edge or flowing skirt of a robe, always plural in form. In the tabernacle instructions, golden bells and pomegranates are hung upon the hems of the high priest's robe of the ephod (Exod 28:33–34; 39:24–26), where they announce his movements in God's presence. Isaiah beholds the Lord seated on a throne, and his train fills the temple (Isa 6:1) — a vision of overwhelming majesty. The prophets then turn the image inside out: Jeremiah and Nahum speak of skirts being lifted and exposed as a figure of national humiliation and judgment (Jer 13:22, 26; Nah 3:5), and Lamentations finds the blood of innocents in Jerusalem's skirts (Lam 1:9).

hem, skirt, train of a garment (11×) The hem, skirt, or train at the lower edge of a garment, used in three interconnected registers: priestly vestments where bells and pomegranates adorn the hems of the ephod robe (Exod 28:33–34; 39:24–26), theophanic vision where God's train fills the temple (Isa 6:1), and prophetic metaphor where exposed or bloodied skirts signify shame and guilt (Jer 13:22, 26; Nah 3:5; Lam 1:9). Korean distinguishes 단 (dan, hem/border) for priestly contexts from 옷자락 (otjarak, garment-skirt) for the metaphorical shame passages; Arabic uses ذيل (adhyal, trains/skirts) throughout; Spanish shifts between 'bordes' (edges) and 'faldas' (skirts) — revealing how the literal-to-metaphorical range is handled differently across languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-train, hems-of, in-her-skirts | es: bordes-de, dobladillos-de, en-sus-faldas | fr: bord, et-bord, frange | de: [בשוליה], [ושוליו], [שוליך] Exod 28:33; Exod 28:34; Exod 39:24; Exod 39:25

שׁוֹלָל H7758 Adj-ms (4×)

barefoot, stripped (of footwear); an adverbial adjective describing the state of being unshod, often in contexts of humiliation or judgment

This adjective appears exclusively with the verb 'to walk,' describing someone going barefoot. In Micah 1:8 the prophet declares he will go barefoot and naked as a sign of mourning and judgment. Job 12:17 and 12:19 describe God leading counselors and priests barefoot, stripped of their dignity and status. The multilingual evidence shows some uncertainty in rendering (French dépouiller 'to strip', German's transliteration), suggesting the word itself is somewhat rare or archaic. Barefoot walking in the ancient world signaled shame, mourning, captivity, or prophetic symbolism—a stripping away of normal social dignity.

(4×) Describes the state of being barefoot or stripped of footwear, always in contexts involving humiliation, judgment, or prophetic sign-acts. God leads counselors and priests barefoot (Job 12:17, 19), stripping them of dignity. Micah walks barefoot and naked as a prophetic lament (Mic 1:8). The term emphasizes vulnerability and shame—feet normally protected are now exposed, signaling loss of status or divine judgment. NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE en: (barefoot), [stripped], stripped | es: (despojado), [despojado], despojados, | fr: dépouiller, שולל | de: [(שולל)], [[שילל]], [שולל] Job 12:17; Job 12:19; Mic 1:8

שׁוּלַמִּית H7759 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)

the Shulammite; heroine of the Song of Songs, possibly from Shunem or meaning 'the peaceful one'

This designation appears twice in Song of Songs 6:13, identifying the female beloved. The name's etymology is debated: it may be a gentillic from Shunem (the Shunammite), or it could derive from שָׁלוֹם (peace), meaning 'the peaceful one' or even suggesting a feminine counterpart to Solomon (שְׁלֹמֹה). The dual occurrence in 6:13 emphasizes the bride's identity as she is called to return. Ancient versions differed—some reading 'Shunammite,' others preserving 'Shulammite.' The multilingual transliterations maintain the ambiguity. Whether geographic or symbolic, the term marks the beloved's distinctive character within this love poetry.

(2×) The designation for the female beloved in Song of Songs 6:13, appearing twice in that verse as companions call for her to return. The etymology remains debated: either a gentillic from Shunem or a name derived from 'peace' (shalom). Spanish 'la-Shulamit' and French 'Sulamite' preserve the Hebrew form. The repetition in 6:13 creates emphasis, making her identity central to that verse. Whether the name indicates her hometown or symbolizes her peaceful beauty, it distinguishes her as the poem's central female figure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shulammite, upon-the-Shulammite | es: en-la-Shulamit, la-Shulamit | fr: Sulamite!, dans-la-Sulamite? | de: [בשולמית], [השולמית] Song 6:13

שׂוּם H7760a V-Qal-Perf-2ms / 1cs (581×)

put, place, set; make into; appoint; set heart/attention upon; give, bestow

This root expresses the act of putting or placing something somewhere, both physically (objects in locations) and metaphorically. It ranges from literal placement — Abraham setting wood on Isaac's shoulders, Joseph's brothers placing him in a pit — to transformative uses where God makes or turns one thing into another (grains of sand, a fruitful nation). The verb also covers appointing officials, directing one's heart or attention toward something, and bestowing names or blessings. Spanish poner, French mettre, and German setzen track closely across these senses, while Korean translators distinguish the transformative sense (만들다 'make') from simple placement.

1. put, place, set physically (444×) The core physical sense of placing an object in a location appears 444 times and dominates Scripture's usage. Multilingual glosses (Spanish puso, French mit, German legte) consistently render this without metaphorical extension. Key passages include Genesis 22:6 (Abraham placing wood on Isaac) and Genesis 28:11 (Jacob placing a stone as a pillow), where the action is concrete and spatial. PLACING AND LAYING

en: and-he-put, and-placed, and-put | es: Y-puso, y-puso | fr: et-il-mettre, et-il-mit, et-mettre | de: und-er-legte, und-er-setzen, und-legte Gen 22:6; Gen 22:9; Gen 28:11; Gen 37:34; Gen 41:42

2. make into, turn into (91×) This transformative sense (91 occurrences) shows the verb meaning 'make into' or 'turn into,' as when God promises to make Abraham's descendants like the dust of the earth (Genesis 13:16) or sand grains beyond counting (Genesis 32:12). Arabic, Korean, and Swahili translations often shift to creation or transformation verbs here, revealing a distinct semantic cluster where the subject causes a change of identity or state rather than mere location. PLACING AND LAYING

en: I-will-make, You-make-us, and-I-will-make-them | es: Nos-pusiste, haré, haré, | fr: et-placer, je-placerai, placer | de: du-machen-uns, ich-werde-setzen, setzen Gen 13:16; Gen 32:12; Exod 4:11; Exod 9:21; Exod 15:25

3. appoint, set over (23×) Appearing 23 times, this sense covers appointing or installing someone in authority. Exodus 1:11 describes taskmasters being set over Israel, and Exodus 2:14 records the question 'Who made you a prince and judge over us?' The personal object (him/them/you) and the authority context distinguish this from mere placement, confirmed by Spanish pusieron ('they placed [in authority]') and French désigna ('designated'). PLACING AND LAYING

en: and-appoint, and-he-appointed-him, and-put | es: Pusieron, Y-puso, cuando-puso-él | fr: a-fit-tu, dans-mettre-lui, désigna-tu | de: du-soll-setzte, hat-machte-du, sein-Name Exod 1:11; Exod 2:14; Exod 5:14; Exod 18:21; Num 24:23

4. set heart, direct attention (13×) The idiomatic expression 'set the heart' (שׂים לב) accounts for 13 uses, meaning to pay attention, consider, or take notice. Exodus 14:21 describes God setting the east wind, and 1 Samuel 18:5 records David being set over men of war. The phrase signals cognitive focus rather than physical action, with Korean and Japanese translations using mental verbs ('consider,' 'take to heart') that disambiguate this from placement. PLACING AND LAYING

en: and-consider, and-he-imposed, and-he-will-set | es: Y-para-poner, me-puso, y-al-que-pone | fr: et-fit, et-il-a-placé, et-il-fera-plaça | de: setzte, und-Name, und-er-imposed Exod 14:21; Judg 11:11; 1Sam 8:11; 1Sam 8:12; 1Sam 18:5

5. give, bestow, name (3×) Only 3 occurrences show this extended sense of giving or bestowing, as in Numbers 6:26 (the LORD give you peace) and Joshua 7:19 (give glory to the LORD). The semantic range has stretched from spatial placement to transfer of blessing or honor, placing this sense at the boundary with the ECONOMICS domain. Spanish da ('give') and French donner mark this shift explicitly. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: and-give, and-they-had-children, give- | es: da, y-ponga, y-tuvieron | fr: donner-, et-donner, et-mettre | de: geben-, und-geben, und-setzte Num 6:26; Josh 7:19; Ezra 10:44

6. (1×) Job 38:33 stands alone, asking 'Can you establish [the ordinances of heaven]?' The gloss 'establish' may align this with appointment or setting in place, but the single occurrence and cosmic context leave the sense ambiguous. Further multilingual evidence would clarify whether this belongs with sense 1, 3, or represents a distinct legislative nuance. PLACING AND LAYING

en: can-you-establish | es: puedes-poner | fr: mettre | de: setzte Job 38:33

7. (1×) Genesis 47:6 commands 'set them over my livestock,' which the current data separates from sense 3 (appoint). This may be an over-split: both involve placing people in authority. Spanish y-ponlos and German dann-setze-sie use simple placement verbs, suggesting the authority element may not be strongly marked here. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-set-them | es: y-ponlos | fr: et-placer-eux | de: dann-setze-sie Gen 47:6

8. (1×) Psalm 66:9 describes 'the One who sets our soul among the living,' a single occurrence that appears to be a poetic variant of sense 1 (placement). The participial form and existential context may justify separation, but multilingual evidence does not reveal a distinct semantic cluster. PLACING AND LAYING

en: the-One-who-sets | es: El-que-pone | fr: le-nom | de: der-einer-der-setzt Ps 66:9

9. (1×) Job 4:20 asks 'Is anyone noticing?' with a sense that appears related to sense 4 (set heart/attention). The single occurrence and interrogative context make this a candidate for merging with the 'set heart' sense, as both involve cognitive attention. PLACING AND LAYING

en: anyone-noticing | es: que-ponga-atención | fr: mettre | de: von-setzte Job 4:20

10. (1×) Job 38:9 ('when I made the cloud its garment') may belong with sense 2 (make into) or sense 1 (place). The single occurrence in God's creation speech suggests a transformative act, but the data has isolated it. Arabic and Spanish use simple placement verbs, not creation verbs. PLACING AND LAYING

en: when-I-made | es: Cuando-puse | fr: dans-mettre-moi | de: setzte Job 38:9

11. (1×) 1 Chronicles 17:9 ('I will appoint a place for my people') echoes the appointment sense (sense 3) but has been separated. The future promise and locative object ('a place') may blend senses 1 and 3. This is a strong candidate for consolidation. PLACING AND LAYING

en: and-I-will-appoint | es: Y-pondré | fr: et-mettre | de: und-setzen 1Chr 17:9

12. (1×) Psalm 147:14 describes 'the one setting peace in your borders,' another single occurrence that overlaps with senses 1 or 5 (bestow). The participial form and blessing context align it with the giving/bestowing cluster, though the spatial preposition ('in your borders') retains a placement nuance. PLACING AND LAYING

en: the-one-setting | es: El-que-pone- | fr: le-nom | de: der-einer-setting Ps 147:14

שׂוּמָה H7760b V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (3×)

set, place, appointed—the act of putting or establishing something

This term appears in contexts of setting or placing, though its exact force is debated. Second Samuel 13:32 may involve something 'set' or predetermined, while Isaiah 10:6 (appearing twice) speaks of setting or appointing something as trampled. The semantic range involves intentional placement or designation, whether of plans, objects, or people. Textual difficulties in some passages make precise meaning uncertain.

(3×) The three occurrences include 2 Samuel 13:32 (possibly 'determined' or a textual issue) and Isaiah 10:6 twice (appointing something to be trampled). Translations vary widely, with some viewing it as forms of 'put/place' and others proposing emendations. Spanish and French versions show uncertainty, sometimes omitting or paraphrasing. The Isaiah context involves divine appointment of Assyria's destructive purpose, while the Samuel text remains cryptic.

PLACING AND LAYING
en: [ketiv], and-to-make-it, set | es: (y-para-ponerlo), [ketiv], determinado | fr: [(ולשומו)], [[ולשימו]], plaça | de: [(ולשומו)], [[ולשימו]], setzte 2Sam 13:32; Isa 10:6

שׂוּם H7761 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (26×)

To set, place, or establish; to issue a decree; to appoint someone to a position. Aramaic cognate of Hebrew שׂוּם/שִׂים.

An Aramaic verb appearing almost exclusively in Ezra and Daniel, where royal administration is the backdrop. Its most common use involves decrees: a king 'sets' (issues) a command, or a decree 'is set' (established). But it also covers physical placement—Cyrus 'placed' temple vessels back in Jerusalem (Ezra 5:14)—and personal appointment, as when a chief is 'made' over a group. Spanish 'poner/puso' and French 'placer/établir' reflect the same breadth from physical setting to legal enactment.

1. put, place, set (12×) The core active meaning: to put, place, or set something in position, including the specialized legal sense of issuing or promulgating a decree. Ezra 5:3 asks 'Who set you a decree to build?' and Ezra 6:1 records Darius ordering a search. French 'placer' and Spanish 'ha puesto' confirm the literal spatial root, while 'établir' captures the extended administrative force. The idiom שִׂים טַעַם ('set a decree') is the signature collocation. PLACING AND LAYING
en: gave, have-made, made | es: dad, ha-puesto, he-puesto | fr: il-a-placé, nom, placer | de: Name, [שימו], [שמת] Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:9; Ezra 5:13; Ezra 6:1

2. be placed, be set (Nifal) (10×) The Nifal passive: to be placed, set, or issued. Decrees 'are made,' funds 'are set' aside, and permissions 'are given.' Ezra 4:19 reports that 'a decree was issued' to search the archives, and Ezra 6:11 warns of punishment if the decree 'is violated.' Spanish 'fue puesto/fue puesta' and German 'setzen' in passive contexts track the same grammatical transformation from active placement to passive reception. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: and-was-laid, is-made, placed | es: fue-puesta, fue-puesto, ha-sido-puesto | fr: et-placer, placer, établir | de: setzen, setzte, und-setzen Ezra 4:19; Ezra 5:17; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 6:11; Ezra 7:13

3. be placed, be made (Hitpael) (3×) The Hitpael mediopassive, expressing the process of being placed or established with reflexive nuance. In Daniel 2:5, the king's word 'is issued' (irrevocably set forth), and in Ezra 5:8, the work 'is being done' (literally 'being placed/carried out'). This stem adds procedural emphasis—something is in the act of being established—distinguishing it from the simple Nifal result state. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: being-placed, is-made, will-be-made | es: puesta, sea-dada., serán-convertidas | fr: placer, établir | de: [יתשם], [מתשם], setzen Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:8; Dan 2:5

4. appoint, make someone as (1×) A Qal usage with a personal object: to appoint or constitute someone to a role. Ezra 5:14 records that Cyrus 'appointed' Sheshbazzar as governor. Spanish 'puso' (he placed/appointed) and French 'établir' both handle this personnel sense naturally, showing how the physical metaphor of 'setting' someone in place extends to formal investiture in office. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: appointed | es: puso. | fr: établir | de: [שמה] Ezra 5:14

שׂוּם H7762 Art / N-mp (1×)

garlic (plant used for food)

This word denotes garlic, the pungent bulb plant used as food and flavoring. It appears in Numbers 11:5, where the Israelites in the wilderness longingly recall the foods they ate freely in Egypt—including garlic alongside fish, cucumbers, melons, leeks, and onions. The Hebrew is cognate with Arabic, Aramaic, and Akkadian terms for garlic (allium sativum). Egypt was famous for its garlic and onions, staple flavoring in the ancient Near Eastern diet. The Israelites' complaint reveals that freedom with monotonous manna seemed less appealing than slavery with flavorful variety—a profound commentary on human nature and the struggle to trust God's provision.

(1×) Garlic, the aromatic bulb plant (allium sativum) used for seasoning food. Numbers 11:5 lists 'the garlic' among foods the Israelites nostalgically remembered from Egypt. The consistent translation as garlic (ajos in Spanish, ail in French) reflects certain botanical identification. Garlic was a dietary staple in ancient Egypt, providing flavor to otherwise bland fare. The people's yearning for it represents longing not just for taste but for the perceived security and variety of their former life, contrasting Egyptian abundance with wilderness austerity—even though Egypt meant slavery. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: the-garlic | es: los-ajos: | fr: le-garlic | de: der-garlic Num 11:5

שֹׁמֵר H7763 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shomer; personal name meaning 'keeper' or 'guardian,' borne by two individuals

This name, meaning 'keeper' or 'watchman,' appears for two different men in Scripture. In 2 Kings 12:21, Shomer is the father of Jehozabad, one of the servants who assassinated King Joash of Judah. The parallel account in 2 Chronicles 24:26 identifies Shomer as a Moabite woman, suggesting either textual variation or that 'Shomer' was sometimes used as a feminine name. In 1 Chronicles 7:32, a different Shomer appears as a descendant of Asher, also called Shemer elsewhere. The name's meaning—'keeper'—may have been common, explaining multiple bearers. Transliterations across languages preserve the Hebrew form.

(2×) A personal name borne by at least two biblical figures: the parent of one of Joash's assassins (2 Kings 12:21) and an Asherite in 1 Chronicles 7:32. The name means 'keeper' or 'watchman.' Multilingual sources transliterate consistently ('Somer,' 'Shomer'), following convention for proper names. The Chronicles parallel identifies Shomer as feminine (a Moabite woman), showing the name could cross gender lines or indicating textual complexity in preserving these genealogical details. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shomer | es: Somer | fr: Shomer, [שומר] | de: Shomer, [שומר] 2Kgs 12:21; 1Chr 7:32

שׁוּנִי H7764 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shuni; son of Gad and ancestor of the Shunite clan

Shuni was one of Gad's sons who went down to Egypt with Jacob's family, listed in Genesis 46:16. The tribal census in Numbers 26:15 records his descendants as the Shunite clan within Gad's tribe. These genealogical records preserved family identity across generations and established inheritance rights in the promised land. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish Shuni, French Shuni) follows standard practice for patronymic names. Like many names in Gad's genealogy, Shuni represents a family line that maintained its distinct identity through centuries of Egyptian bondage, wilderness wandering, and settlement in Canaan.

(2×) A son of Gad listed in Genesis 46:16 among those who entered Egypt with Jacob, and ancestor of the Shunite clan in Numbers 26:15. The name appears with the preposition 'to' or 'of' in Numbers, indicating the gentillic relationship ('belonging to Shuni'). Multilingual transliterations ('Shuni,' 'de-Suni,' 'à-Shuni') preserve the proper name while adapting prepositions to target language syntax. These occurrences establish Shuni as a recognized family line within Gad's tribal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Shuni, to-Shuni | es: Shuni, de-Suni | fr: Shuni, à-Shuni | de: Schuni, zu-Shuni Gen 46:16; Num 26:15

שׁוּנִי H7765 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Shunite (gentilicic designation of clan descended from Shuni)

This is the gentilicic adjective 'the Shunite,' designating the clan descended from Shuni of the tribe of Gad. Numbers 26:15 uses the definite article with this family name in the census list, identifying the Shunites as one of Gad's family groups. The article functions to mark this as a collective designation—'the Shunite clan' as a recognized family unit within Gad's tribal structure. Like other tribal subdivisions, the Shunites traced descent from their eponymous ancestor Shuni (Genesis 46:16) and maintained family identity through generations. The census methodology counted by these ancestral family groups.

(1×) The gentilicic designation 'the Shunite' identifying the clan descended from Shuni in Numbers 26:15. The definite article marks this as the collective family group within Gad's tribe. The census lists 'the Shunite' as one of Gad's clans, connecting them to their ancestor Shuni from Genesis 46:16. The term across languages (sunitas in Spanish, 'Shunite' in English) represents the plural collective—all descendants of Shuni forming a recognized family subdivision for census, inheritance, and military organization purposes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shunite | es: los-sunitas | fr: le-Shunite | de: der-Shunite Num 26:15

שׁוּנֶם H7766 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)

Shunem—a town in Issachar, home of Abishag and the Shunammite woman

This place name identifies a town in Issachar's territory, modern Sûlem north of Jezreel. Joshua 19:18 lists it among Issachar's inheritances. First Samuel 28:4 locates the Philistine camp there before Saul's final battle. Second Kings 4:8 introduces the prominent woman of Shunem who hosted Elisha. The town thus appears in diverse narratives: tribal allotment, royal warfare, and prophetic ministry, always retaining its geographical identity in the Jezreel valley area.

(3×) The three uses span tribal territory list (Joshua 19:18), Philistine military encampment (1 Samuel 28:4), and Elisha's ministry location (2 Kings 4:8). Spanish 'Sunem' and versions across languages transliterate consistently. The geographical stability is notable: from conquest-era allotment through Saul's reign to Elisha's time, Shunem remains a recognized site. Its proximity to Jezreel made it strategically significant for military movements and prophetic activity alike. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shunem, and-Shunem, in-Shunem | es: Sunem, en-Sunem, y-Sunem | fr: Shunem, dans-Shunem, et-Shunem | de: Shunem, in-Shunem, und-Shunem Josh 19:18; 1Sam 28:4; 2Kgs 4:8

שׁוּנַמִּית H7767 Art / N-proper-fs (8×)

The Shunammite, a gentilic adjective identifying a woman from the town of Shunem.

A feminine gentilic adjective designating a woman from Shunem, a town in the territory of Issachar. The term identifies two notable biblical women. The first is Abishag the Shunammite, the beautiful young woman brought to attend the aging King David (1 Kgs 1:3, 15), whose status later became a political flashpoint when Adonijah requested her as wife (1 Kgs 2:17, 21-22). The second is the unnamed 'great woman' of Shunem in Elisha's ministry, who hosted the prophet and whose son he raised from death (2 Kgs 4:12, 25, 36). All multilingual glosses consistently render 'the Shunammite' as a title.

the Shunammite (8×) A gentilic adjective in feminine form identifying a woman from Shunem. It designates two distinct women across the eight occurrences: Abishag the Shunammite (1 Kgs 1:3, 15; 2:17, 21, 22), the young attendant of aged King David whose hand became a political prize in the succession crisis, and the unnamed wealthy Shunammite woman (2 Kgs 4:12, 25, 36) who hosted the prophet Elisha and witnessed the resurrection of her son. Spanish 'la sunamita,' French 'le Sunamite,' and German 'der Shunammite' all preserve the gentilic form as a recognizable title rather than translating it. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: for-the-Shunammite, the-Shunammite | es: a-la-sunamita, la-sunamita | fr: le-Sunamite, pour-le-Sunamite | de: der-Shunammite, fuer-der-Shunammite 1Kgs 1:3; 1Kgs 1:15; 1Kgs 2:17; 1Kgs 2:21; 1Kgs 2:22

שָׁוַע H7768 V-Piel-Perf-1cs (21×)

To cry out for help, to plead or call urgently to God in distress (Piel of שׁוּע)

A Piel verb expressing an urgent, voiced appeal for rescue—nearly always directed toward God. The Psalms use it repeatedly for the sufferer's cry in prayer (Ps 5:3; 18:7, 42; 22:25; 28:2; 30:3; 88:14; 119:147), while Job employs it for unanswered pleas (Job 19:7; 24:12; 30:20, 28). Habakkuk 1:2 opens with this verb in a raw complaint: 'How long shall I cry for help, and you will not hear?' Lamentations 3:8 describes God shutting out the cry. Spanish 'clamar' and French 'crier' both capture the vocal urgency present in every attestation.

cry out for help (21×) To cry out urgently for help or rescue, typically in prayer directed to God during distress or suffering. The psalmist cries out and is heard (Ps 18:7; 30:3), yet the same verb also voices unanswered anguish (Job 19:7; 30:20; Hab 1:2; Lam 3:8). Jonah 2:3 uses it from the belly of the fish. Spanish 'clamar,' French 'crier,' and English 'cry for help' all converge on this single sense of vocal, desperate supplication. CALLING AND NAMING en: I-cried, I-cry-for-help, I-cry-out | es: Clamo, al-clamar-yo, clama-por-ayuda | fr: [ואשוע], [תשוע], crier | de: [אשוע], [ואשוע], [ישועו] Job 19:7; Job 24:12; Job 29:12; Job 30:20; Job 30:28

שׁוּעַ H7769 N-msc / 2ms (2×)

cry for help, opulence; disputed term possibly meaning wealth or distress cry

This rare noun appears twice in Job with uncertain meaning. Some lexicographers connect it to Arabic roots suggesting 'opulence' or 'wealth,' while others link it to the Hebrew verb 'to cry for help.' Job 30:24 and 36:19 both present textual difficulties. If it means 'cry,' the sense would be a call for help in distress. If it means 'wealth' or 'opulence,' the verses speak of material resources. Modern translations divide: some read 'cry for help' (Spanish clamor, French cri), others propose emendations. The ambiguity reflects genuine uncertainty about rare words in Job's difficult poetry. Context offers limited help since both meanings could fit Job's situation.

(2×) A disputed term in Job 30:24 and 36:19, possibly meaning either 'cry for help' or 'wealth/opulence.' Spanish 'clamor, tu-clamor' and English 'cry-for-help, your-cry' favor the distress interpretation, fitting Job's suffering context. However, Arabic cognates suggest 'opulence,' and some scholars emend the text. The suffix 'your' in 36:19 suggests something belonging to the addressee. The uncertainty illustrates Job's lexical challenges—rare vocabulary in poetic contexts where meaning remains genuinely debated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cry-for-help, your-cry | es: clamor, tu-clamor | fr: ton-שׁוּעְךָ-toi, שׁוּע | de: [שׁוּע], [שׁוּעְךָ] Job 30:24; Job 36:19

שׁוּעַ H7770 N-proper-fs (2×)

Shua; father of Judah's Canaanite wife, whose daughter married into Israel's lineage

Shua was the father of the Canaanite woman Judah married, making him grandfather to Er, Onan, and Shelah. Genesis 38:2 introduces him when Judah sees and marries 'the daughter of a Canaanite man named Shua.' Verse 12 refers to her again as 'the daughter of Shua' (Bath-shua). The parallel in 1 Chronicles 2:3 confirms this genealogy. His daughter's marriage to Judah represents the problematic intermarriage with Canaanites that characterized the patriarchal period. The name itself means 'wealth' or 'cry,' though its significance here is simply as a patronymic. Shua's Canaanite identity matters more than his name's etymology for the narrative.

(2×) The Canaanite father of Judah's wife, appearing in Genesis 38:2, 12 and 1 Chronicles 2:3. His daughter is called 'Bath-shua' (daughter of Shua), showing typical patronymic formation. Multilingual sources uniformly transliterate the name ('Shua,' 'Schua'), treating it as a proper noun. His significance lies in being grandfather to Judah's sons Er, Onan, and Shelah, making him part of the messianic line despite his Canaanite identity—an example of gentiles incorporated into Israel's genealogy. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5544 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Shua | es: Shua | fr: Shua | de: Schua, Schuas Gen 38:2; Gen 38:12

שׁוֹעַ H7771a N-ms (2×)

noble, independent; person of high social rank and character, free and generous

This adjective describes someone of noble rank and, by implication, noble character—free, independent, and generous. Isaiah 32:5 contrasts the noble person (shoa) with the fool, emphasizing that true nobility involves moral character, not just social position. Job 34:19 speaks of God who shows no partiality to princes or 'the rich/noble' over the poor. The term may derive from a root meaning abundance or deliverance, suggesting those with resources and freedom. Spanish generoso (generous) and rico (rich) capture both the material and moral dimensions. Biblical usage typically assumes nobility should produce generosity, not merely status.

(2×) A person of noble rank, characterized by independence, wealth, and ideally moral generosity. Isaiah 32:5 contrasts the noble with the fool, insisting that in the righteous kingdom, fools won't be called noble. Job 34:19 uses the term parallel to 'princes,' denoting high social standing. Spanish 'generoso, rico' and English 'to-be-generous, the-rich' both capture the dual sense: material wealth and moral character. The biblical ideal connects social nobility with ethical nobility—freedom and resources should produce generosity. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: the-rich, to-be-generous | es: generoso, rico | fr: [שׁוע], שׁוע | de: [שׁוע] Job 34:19; Isa 32:5

שׁוֹעַ H7771b Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

A cry, likely a war-cry or shout for help in battle

This rare noun appears only once in Isaiah's oracle about the Valley of Vision, describing a day of tumult with shouting echoing in the mountains. The word captures both the chaos of battle and the desperation of those crying out for deliverance. Hebrew שׁוֹעַ belongs to a family of terms associated with loud, urgent vocalization—whether the rallying cry of soldiers or the plea of the endangered.

(1×) Used in Isaiah 22:5 within a vivid scene of confusion and panic. The context describes 'a day of tumult and trampling and confusion' with noise reverberating to the mountains, suggesting this is not ordinary speech but the heightened vocal expression that accompanies crisis—either the shout of warriors in combat or desperate civilians seeking rescue. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-crying-out | es: y-clamor | fr: [וׁשוע] | de: [וׁשוע] Isa 22:5

שׁוֹעַ H7772 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shoa, an ancient people identified with Sutû nomads of Mesopotamia and beyond the Tigris

Ezekiel invokes this people group alongside Babylonians, Chaldeans, Pekod, and Koa as enemies who will judge Jerusalem. Ancient sources identify them with the Sutû, nomadic groups who ranged across Mesopotamian territories and eastward. The prophet's list reads like a geopolitical roll call of Babylon's confederates, each name representing a distinct threat converging on the unfaithful city.

(1×) Appears in Ezekiel 23:23 in a catalog of Babylon's allies. Assyrian records mention the Sutû or Sutî as nomadic peoples, suggesting Shoa represents mobile warrior groups who would join in Jerusalem's judgment. The multilingual evidence preserves the name with slight variations (Schoua in French), indicating these were recognized ethnic designations across ancient Near Eastern diplomacy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Shoa | es: y-Shoa | fr: et-Schoua | de: [וׁשוע] Ezek 23:23

שַׁוְעִי H7773 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

My cry, a noun describing the psalmist's cry for help directed to God

This term belongs to the vocabulary of urgent prayer, appearing in contexts where the speaker is in distress and calling out to the divine. The root שׁוע gives us multiple forms expressing the act of crying for help—not casual conversation but the desperate vocalization of someone in danger or deep need. David and other psalmists use this language to frame their prayers as emergency appeals to heaven.

(1×) Found in Psalm 5:2 where David addresses God: 'Give heed to my cry.' The possessive form emphasizes personal ownership of this plea—'my cry' is not just any vocalization but the speaker's specific appeal. Across multiple languages, translations capture the first-person possessive (mi-clamor in Spanish, mein-schreien in German), highlighting how this form intensifies the personal urgency of the prayer. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-cry | es: mi-clamor | fr: cri | de: mein-schreien Ps 5:2

שׁוּעָא H7774 N-proper-fs (2×)

Shua; Asherite woman, relative of Heber

This woman's name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:32 in the genealogy of Asher's descendants. She is identified as sister of Heber and daughter of his father. The Septuagint transliterates her name variously (Sola, Soua), showing typical textual variation for proper names. Little is known about her beyond this genealogical mention, which was significant for establishing tribal identity and inheritance rights. Her inclusion in Chronicles' genealogies reflects the compiler's concern to preserve comprehensive family records. The name Shua (meaning 'wealth' or possibly 'cry') was evidently used for both men and women in ancient Israel.

(2×) An Asherite woman mentioned in 1 Chronicles 2:3 and 7:32 within tribal genealogies. Her name appears in family lists preserving Asher's descendants. Multilingual sources transliterate the name, following proper noun convention. The dual occurrence in Chronicles reflects the genealogist's concern for comprehensive record-keeping, ensuring each family line was documented. Her significance lies in genealogical record rather than narrative action—she represents one thread in the complex tapestry of Israelite tribal identity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5544 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Shua | es: Sua, Súa | fr: [שׁוע], [שׁועא] | de: [שׁוע], [שׁועא] 1Chr 2:3; 1Chr 7:32

שַׁוְעָה H7775 N-fsc (11×)

A cry for help or outcry of distress, directed toward God in lament and arising from oppression

A feminine noun expressing the raw, anguished appeal of the desperate — whether an individual in the Psalms or an entire people in bondage. Israel's cry (shav'ah) rises from Egyptian slavery and reaches God's ears (Exod 2:23). David, fleeing for his life, declares that his cry came before God and entered his ears (2 Sam 22:7; Ps 18:6). Across the Psalter, this word appears in some of the most intimate pleas for divine attention — 'let my cry come before you' (Ps 102:1), 'he does not despise the cry of the afflicted' (Ps 34:15). It is the vocabulary of last resort, the sound of those who have nowhere else to turn.

cry for help, outcry (11×) A cry for help or outcry of distress directed to God, expressing anguished appeal in times of suffering or oppression. Appears in the exodus narrative where Israel's collective groan reaches God (Exod 2:23), in royal thanksgiving where David recalls his cry entering God's ears (2 Sam 22:7; Ps 18:6), and throughout individual laments (Ps 34:15; 39:13; 40:2; 72:12; 88:3; 102:1). Jehoshaphat invokes it in communal prayer before battle (2 Chr 20:9). Translations converge uniformly: Spanish 'clamor,' Arabic ṣ/ṣ (surakh/sarkha), Korean 부르짖음 (bureujijeum), Hindi पुकार (pukar), Swahili 'kilio' — all confirming a single sense of desperate vocal appeal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-my-cry, and-my-cry-for-help, cry-of | es: a-mi-clamor, clamor-de, el-clamor-de | fr: [לׁשועתי], [שׁועת], cri | de: [לׁשועתי], [שׁועת], ihr-schreien Exod 2:23; 1Sam 5:12; 2Sam 22:7; Ps 18:6; Ps 34:15

שׁוּעָל H7776 N-mp (7×)

shu'al – fox or jackal; a small wild canid haunting ruins, raiding vineyards, and scavenging the dead

A masculine noun covering the small wild canids of the Levant – both foxes and jackals, which Biblical Hebrew does not consistently distinguish. Samson famously caught three hundred of them to burn the Philistines' grain fields (Judg 15:4), a number that probably points to jackals, which are more gregarious than solitary foxes. The Song of Solomon warns of 'little foxes that ruin the vineyards' (Song 2:15), a beloved image of small threats that spoil tender growth. Ezekiel likens Israel's false prophets to foxes among ruins (Ezek 13:4), and Lamentations mourns that foxes prowl on desolate Mount Zion (Lam 5:18). The Psalmist declares that the wicked will become 'a portion for foxes' – food for scavengers (Ps 63:10). Spanish zorras, French renards, and German Fuechse all default to 'fox,' though the biblical referent likely oscillates between the two canids.

fox, jackal (small wild canid) (7×) A small wild canid, encompassing both foxes (Vulpes vulpes) and jackals (Canis aureus), since Biblical Hebrew does not lexically separate them. The large number Samson captured (Judg 15:4) suggests jackals, which are more social, while the 'little foxes' of Song 2:15 may envision the smaller, vineyard-raiding fox. False prophets are compared to foxes scavenging in ruins (Ezek 13:4), and desolate Zion is haunted by them (Lam 5:18). Spanish zorras, French renards, and German Fuechse uniformly render 'fox,' though the biblical creature's identity spans both species depending on context. JACKAL WILD CANINE en: fox, foxes, jackals | es: Como-zorros, zorras, zorro | fr: [שועל], [שועלים], les-renards | de: Fuchs, Fuechse, [כשעלים] Judg 15:4; Neh 4:3; Ps 63:10; Song 2:15

שׁוּעָל H7777a N-proper-fs (1×)

Shual, a district in Israel along the route to Ophrah

This territorial name marks a region where Philistine raiders operated during Saul's reign. The text locates it along 'the way of Ophrah,' suggesting it was a recognized landmark for navigation. Geography and conflict intertwine here—place names in the conquest and kingdom narratives often preserve the memory of battles, raids, and tribal boundaries. Though the exact site remains unidentified, the name survives as a witness to Israel's contested borders.

(1×) Mentioned in 1 Samuel 13:17 as one of three directions taken by Philistine raiding parties. The 'land of Shual' served as a geographical reference point, implying it was well-known to the original audience even if later generations lost the precise location. Cross-linguistic consistency (Shual across English, Spanish, French, German) reflects the treatment of proper nouns as untranslated markers. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9745 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Shual | es: Shual | fr: Shual | de: Shual 1Sam 13:17

שׁוּעָל H7777b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shual, a personal name in the tribe of Asher

Listed among Asher's descendants in Chronicles' genealogical records, this individual shares his name with the territorial designation from 1 Samuel. Hebrew naming often drew from geography, fauna, or natural features, so the same word could denote both a person and a place. The genealogies preserve these names as anchors of tribal identity, connecting families to their ancestral heritage.

(1×) Appears in 1 Chronicles 7:36 within Asher's family tree. The Septuagint renders it variously (Soula, Soual, Souan in different manuscripts), showing translators' attempts to represent an unfamiliar Hebrew name in Greek phonology. The conjunction 'and-Shual' places him in a list format, the chronicler's method for documenting tribal membership. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9745 WITH 3 SENSES en: and-Shual | es: y-Súal | fr: [ושועל] | de: [ושועל] 1Chr 7:36

שֹׁעֵר H7778 Conj-w / N-mp (37×)

Gatekeeper or porter stationed at a gate to guard access, especially at the Temple or city gates

A participial noun derived from the root for 'gate' (sha'ar), designating a person who guards and controls passage through a gateway. In the vast majority of its 37 occurrences, the term appears in Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah to describe the Levitical gatekeepers of the Temple, a hereditary office of considerable dignity. These men were organized into divisions numbering in the thousands (1 Chr 23:5) and bore responsibility for securing the sanctuary entrances, the thresholds, and even the Ark (1 Chr 15:23-24). Outside the cultic sphere, the word also denotes the porter of a city gate (2 Kgs 7:10-11) and, in one textual reconstruction, a female doorkeeper of a house (2 Sam 4:6).

gatekeeper, porter (37×) A guardian stationed at a gate, controlling who enters and exits. In its primary usage across Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, this refers to the Levitical gatekeepers of the Temple—a consecrated office. Spanish 'porteros' and German 'Tore' both capture the gate-ward function. The role encompassed guarding thresholds (1 Chr 9:22), the Ark procession (1 Chr 15:23-24), and the city gate in wartime (2 Kgs 7:10-11). GATEKEEPER PORTER
en: and-the-gatekeepers, of-the-gatekeepers, the-gatekeepers | es: Los-porteros, Y-los-porteros, los-porteros | fr: der-portes, der-portiers, et-der-portes | de: [והשערים], der-Tore, die-Tore 2Sam 18:26; 2Kgs 7:10; 2Kgs 7:11; 1Chr 9:17; 1Chr 9:18

שׁוּף H7779 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 1cs (4×)

bruise, crush; to strike with force causing injury, especially to the head or heel; used in Genesis 3:15 of mutual enmity

This verb is most famous from Genesis 3:15, where it appears twice in God's curse on the serpent: the seed of the woman will bruise the serpent's head, while the serpent will bruise the human heel. The word describes forceful striking that causes injury without necessarily killing. In Job 9:17 it's used of God crushing Job in a tempest. The multilingual evidence shows crushing, bruising, and wounding (Spanish me-aplasta, French écraser). The Genesis passage has been read messianically by many traditions, with the head-bruising seen as a decisive blow and the heel-bruising as a lesser wound—a cosmic promise of eventual victory through suffering.

(4×) To bruise, crush, or strike with injurious force. Most notably in Genesis 3:15's dual usage: the serpent will bruise the human heel while humanity bruises the serpent's head—a foundational text for understanding ongoing conflict between good and evil. Job 9:17 uses it of God's overwhelming power crushing Job. The Spanish and French glosses (me-aplasta 'crushes me', écraser 'to crush') confirm the violent, crushing nature of this action, distinct from mere touching or striking. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: crushes-me, shall-bruise-him, shall-bruise-you | es: le-herirás, me-aplasta,, me-cubrirá | fr: –blessure-lui, –blessure-tu, écraser | de: [ישופני], soll-bedecken-mich, wird-dir-zertreten Gen 3:15; Job 9:17; Ps 139:11

שׁוֹבַךְ H7780 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shophach; Aramean general, variant form of Shobach in Chronicles

Shophach is the name given in 1 Chronicles 19:16, 18 to the Aramean general called Shobach in the parallel account in 2 Samuel 10. He commanded Hadadezer's army that David defeated. Such name variations between Samuel-Kings and Chronicles are common, reflecting different textual traditions or dialectal variations in how the same Aramean name was preserved. Both forms refer to the same historical figure and event—the decisive battle where David defeated the Aramean coalition. The multilingual transliterations preserve the Chronicles form, showing awareness of the textual variant. Ancient versions also show this variation (Septuagint offers multiple spellings).

(2×) The Chronicles variant of the Aramean commander's name, appearing in 1 Chronicles 19:16, 18 (compare 2 Samuel 10's 'Shobach'). The variant spellings reflect different textual traditions for the same foreign proper name. Multilingual sources transliterate according to the Chronicles form ('Shofaj,' 'שופך'). Both accounts describe the same event: David's victory over Hadadezer's army. The name variation illustrates how ancient texts preserved foreign names with phonetic approximations that could differ between sources. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shophach, and-Shophach | es: Shofaj, y-Shofaj | fr: [ושופך], [שופך] | de: [ושופך], [שופך] 1Chr 19:16; 1Chr 19:18

שׁוּפָמִי H7781 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Shuphamite, gentilician referring to descendants of Shupham in Benjamin's census

This ethnic or clan designation follows the common Hebrew pattern of forming collective terms with the definite article, turning a personal ancestor's name into a group identifier. In Numbers' census lists, such terms organize Israel by tribal subdivisions, each clan name preserving the memory of an eponymous founder. These designations mattered for land allotment, military organization, and social identity.

(1×) Found in Numbers 26:39 during the wilderness census of Benjamin's clans. The article 'the' signals this is not an individual but a collective—'the Shuphamite clan' or 'the Shuphamites.' Spanish renders this as 'los sufamitas' (the Shuphamites as a group), German as 'der Shuphamite' (singular collective), showing different strategies for representing Hebrew's gentilician constructions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Shuphamite | es: los-sufamitas | fr: le-Shuphamite | de: der-Shuphamite Num 26:39

שֹׁפָר H7782 Art / N-ms (72×)

Shofar; a ram's horn trumpet used for warfare, assembly, worship, and theophany; occasionally the horn itself as object.

The shofar is arguably the most iconic sound in the Hebrew Bible — the piercing blast that toppled Jericho's walls (Josh 6:5), heralded God's descent on Sinai (Exod 19:16), and will one day announce the great ingathering (Isa 27:13). Used overwhelmingly as a signaling instrument in military, liturgical, and prophetic contexts, the shofar is a curved ram's horn whose sound carries both martial urgency and sacred awe. A small cluster of passages foregrounds the physical horn object itself, particularly in Chronicles and Psalms, where it appears paired with other instruments.

1. ram's horn trumpet (69×) The ram's horn as a signal instrument, covering warfare (Judg 7:8, 16), theophany (Exod 19:16; 20:18), religious assembly (Lev 25:9; Joel 2:1), and prophetic announcement (Isa 27:13; 58:1). This is the dominant sense across 69 of 72 occurrences. Translations vary revealingly: German 'Posaune' (trombone/trumpet) emphasizes the sound, Spanish 'cuerno' the material, while French 'trompette' and many languages simply transliterate 'shofar,' reflecting its unique cultural status. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: a-shofar, a-trumpet, horn | es: cuerno, shofar, shofar? | fr: trompette, un-shofar | de: Posaune, Schofar, der-Schofar Lev 25:9; Josh 6:4; Josh 6:5; Josh 6:8; Josh 6:9

2. horn (animal horn) (3×) The physical animal horn as a material object, foregrounding its nature as a horn rather than its signaling function. Attested in 1 Chr 15:28, 2 Chr 15:14, and Ps 98:6, where the shofar appears alongside trumpets and cymbals in orchestral listings. Several African and Asian translations use generic 'horn' words (Swahili 'pembe,' Arabic 'qurun') rather than instrument-specific terms, confirming the emphasis on the object's material identity rather than its acoustic purpose. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: and-with-horns, shofar, the-shofar | es: cuerno, y-con-shofarot | fr: [ובשופרות], [שופר], trompette | de: [ובשופרות], [שופר], der-Schofar 1Chr 15:28; 2Chr 15:14; Ps 98:6

שׁוּק H7783 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-2ms / 3fs (3×)

overflow, water abundantly—to cause superabundance, especially of liquids

This Piel/Hiphil verb describes causing overflow or abundance, particularly of liquids. Psalm 65:9 depicts God watering the earth abundantly, using agricultural imagery of divine provision. Joel uses it twice (2:24, 3:13) for vats overflowing with wine and oil, symbols of restored blessing or of abundance in harvest judgment. The term emphasizes superabundance beyond mere sufficiency, liquid blessing spilling over containers.

(3×) The three uses involve God abundantly watering the earth (Psalm 65:9) and vats overflowing with wine/oil (Joel 2:24, 3:13). Spanish uses 'regar' (water/irrigate) and 'rebosar' (overflow), capturing both irrigation and overflow. The Psalm context is God's creation care, while Joel's dual usage appears in restoration promise (2:24) and harvest-of-nations judgment (3:13), showing abundance can signify either blessing or overwhelming judgment. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: and-water-it-abundantly, and-will-overflow, overflow | es: rebosan, y-la-riegas, y-rebosarán | fr: courir, et-courir | de: [והשיקו], [והשיקו], und-Wasser-es-abundantly Ps 65:9; Joel 2:24; Joel 3:13

שׁוֹק H7784 Prep-b (4×)

street, public square; an open area within a city or town where people gather and commerce occurs

This noun refers to streets or public squares in a city, the open spaces where public life unfolds. Proverbs 7:8 describes the young man passing through the street near the adulteress's corner. Ecclesiastes 12:4-5 mentions the street as the place where the doors are shut and voices grow faint in old age. Song of Songs 3:2 has the bride searching through the streets and squares for her beloved. The multilingual consensus (Spanish en-la-calle, French rue, German Straße elements) confirms this as the urban public space. Unlike the narrow alley (מָבוֹא), this is the broad place where community life, commerce, and encounters happen—both innocent and dangerous.

(4×) The public street or square within a city, the open space where people walk, gather, and conduct daily life. Proverbs 7:8 sets the scene of temptation as the young man passes through the street. Ecclesiastes uses it to evoke the fading sounds of old age. Song of Songs 3:2 shows the bride's urgent search through streets and squares. This is the arena of public visibility, commerce, chance encounters, and danger—the opposite of the protected private home. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-street, in-the-streets, through-the-street | es: en-la-calle, por-la-calle, por-la-plaza | fr: dans-les-rues, rue | de: [בשוק], [בשוקים], [בשוק] Prov 7:8; Eccl 12:4; Eccl 12:5; Song 3:2

שׁוֹק H7785 N-fd (19×)

Leg or thigh — the lower leg of a person or the upper hind leg of a sacrificial animal

Refers to the leg as a body part, with a notable semantic split between human and animal contexts. For humans it denotes the lower leg or calf, as when Samson smites the Philistines 'leg upon thigh' (Judg 15:8) or in the lover's praise of marble-like legs (Song 5:15). For sacrificial animals it designates the upper hind leg or thigh — the priestly portion in the wave offering (Exod 29:22, 27; Lev 7:32-34). Spanish distinguishes these neatly: 'pierna' for the human limb, 'muslo' for the sacrificial thigh. The dual form appears for human legs (Deut 28:35; Prov 26:7).

leg, thigh (body part) (19×) The physical leg or thigh of a person or animal. In human contexts it refers to the lower leg or calf, distinct from the thigh proper (Judg 15:8; Ps 147:10; Song 5:15). In sacrificial legislation it denotes the upper hind leg given to priests as their portion (Exod 29:22, 27; Lev 7:32-34; 1 Sam 9:24). Spanish translations helpfully distinguish 'pierna' (human leg) from 'muslo' (sacrificial thigh), reflecting the contextual semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-thigh-of, his-legs, in-legs-of | es: Muslo-de, Sus-piernas, el-muslo | fr: Ses-jambes,, [שוק], cuisse-de | de: Bein, Schenkel-von, [שוק] Exod 29:22; Exod 29:27; Lev 7:32; Lev 7:33; Lev 7:34

שָׂרַר H7786 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

rule, act as prince; denominative verb meaning to exercise authority or contend for dominance

This denominative verb from the noun 'prince' (sar) means to rule, govern, or act as a prince. Judges 9:22 reports that Abimelech 'ruled over Israel three years,' using the verb to describe his controversial reign. Hosea 12:4 uses it differently, saying Jacob 'strove with God' (though some read 'ruled'), referring to the wrestling match at Peniel. The verb can imply both legitimate governance and contentious power-seeking. Spanish gobernó (governed) and luchó (struggled) reflect the semantic range. The term suggests active exercise of authority, whether God-granted or self-seized. Context determines whether the rule is blessed or condemned.

(2×) To exercise rule or princely authority, appearing in Judges 9:22 (Abimelech's rule) and Hosea 12:4 (Jacob's striving). Spanish offers both 'gobernó' (governed) and 'luchó' (struggled), showing the verb's range from legitimate rule to contentious striving. Judges uses it for Abimelech's self-appointed authority over Israel, while Hosea recalls Jacob's wrestling with the divine messenger. Both involve exerting power or influence, though moral evaluation differs—Abimelech's tyranny versus Jacob's tenacious faith. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9286 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-he-strove, and-ruled | es: Y-gobernó, y-luchó | fr: et-droit, et-régna | de: und-aufrichtig, und-herrschte Judg 9:22; Hos 12:4

שׁוּר H7787 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

He sawed, though the verbal form is disputed and may represent 'he set' instead

This hapax legomenon in Chronicles' war narrative creates textual uncertainty. The consonants can be read as either a form of sawing (from שׁוּר) or setting/placing (from שִׂים). David's treatment of Ammonite prisoners involves either brutal execution with saws or forced labor with tools. The parallel passage in Samuel uses different vocabulary, adding to the interpretive challenge. Ancient warfare accounts are often disturbing, and translators must wrestle with the most likely original reading.

(1×) Appears in 1 Chronicles 20:3 describing David's actions toward conquered peoples. The verb form with waw-consecutive indicates sequential narrative action. Most English versions follow the 'set them to labor' interpretation, but the sawing reading cannot be dismissed. The ambiguity in French and German translations (using bracketed original text) suggests translator uncertainty about the verb's meaning in this violent context. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: and-set | es: y-los-puso | fr: [וישר] | de: [וישׂר] 1Chr 20:3

שׁוּר H7788 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-2fs (2×)

travel, journey; possibly to bring offerings to a deity or engage in trade caravans

This verb, related to the common Semitic root for 'to travel' or 'journey,' appears twice with distinct nuances. Isaiah 57:9 describes apostate Israel 'journeying to the king' (Melek, possibly a deity) with oil and perfumes—cultic prostitution imagery. Ezekiel 27:25 mentions Tarshish ships as Tyre's 'travelers' or 'caravans,' suggesting commercial voyaging. The root is cognate with Arabic sār (to journey) and appears in Aramaic. Spanish 'fuiste' (you went) and 'caravanas' (caravans) capture the movement sense. The verb can describe either religious pilgrimage (legitimate or apostate) or commercial travel. Context distinguishes spiritual harlotry from honest trade.

(2×) To journey or travel, whether for religious purposes (Isaiah 57:9) or commercial trade (Ezekiel 27:25). In Isaiah, the journey involves bringing offerings to foreign deities—cultic apostasy portrayed as spiritual prostitution. In Ezekiel, ships function as 'travelers' or 'caravans' conducting Tyre's maritime trade. Spanish 'y-fuiste' (and you went) and 'tus-caravanas' (your caravans) distinguish the personal journey from the commercial fleet. Both involve movement toward a destination, but moral evaluation depends on the purpose. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD

en: and-you-journeyed, your-caravans | es: Y-fuiste, tus-caravanas | fr: [ותשרי], observer | de: [ותשרי], [שרותיך] Isa 57:9; Ezek 27:25

שׁוּר H7789 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (16×)

To behold, gaze upon; to lie in wait or lurk with hostile intent; to sing or chant (a rare poetic variant).

The Hebrew verb shur is a word of intense looking — a gaze that lingers and penetrates. In its primary sense, it describes beholding or contemplating someone or something with sustained attention, appearing in some of Scripture's most visually dramatic poetry: Balaam's oracle gazing upon Israel from a mountaintop ('I behold him, but not near; I see him, but not now,' Num 24:17) and Job's anguished awareness that God's eye is upon him (Job 7:8; 34:29). Spanish contemplar and French regarder capture this attentive quality. But looking can turn predatory: in Jeremiah 5:26 and Hosea 13:7, shur describes lying in wait like a hunter or a leopard, watching with intent to strike. Spanish acechar ('to stalk') and French guetter mark this shift into hostile surveillance. A single puzzling occurrence in Job 33:27 may preserve a homonymous root meaning 'to sing,' perhaps related to shir, though the textual evidence remains debated.

1. to behold, see, look at (13×) To behold, gaze upon, observe — perceiving visually with sustained attention or contemplation. This primary sense accounts for thirteen occurrences, spanning Balaam's prophetic vision ('I behold him from afar,' Num 24:17), Job's existential lament that God's eye will no longer see him (Job 7:8; 20:9), and the lover's invitation to gaze from the peaks of Lebanon (Song 4:8). Spanish contemplar/mirar, French regarder/observer, and German schauen converge on attentive visual perception. The verb often appears in parallel with ra'ah ('to see'), but carries a more deliberate, penetrating quality — this is not a glance but a sustained gaze. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-behold-him, and-I-will-look-upon-him, and-behold | es: la-ve, la-verá?, lo-contemplo | fr: Tu-regarderas, et-observer, je-voici-lui | de: [ואשורנו], [ושור], [ישורנה] Num 23:9; Num 24:17; Job 7:8; Job 17:15; Job 20:9

2. to lie in wait, lurk (2×) To watch with hostile or stealthy intent — lying in wait, lurking, spying upon someone as a predator watches prey. Two occurrences shift the verb's valence from contemplation to menace: in Jeremiah 5:26, wicked men 'lie in wait' like fowlers setting traps, and in Hosea 13:7, God warns 'like a leopard I will lurk (ashur) beside the way.' Spanish acechar and French guetter deploy dedicated stalking vocabulary, confirming that translators perceive genuine hostile intent rather than neutral observation. The semantic bridge from 'behold' to 'lurk' is the intensity of the gaze — watching that becomes predatory. ASSYRIA NATION PERSON

en: I-will-lurk, they-lie-in-wait | es: acechan, acecharé | fr: Assyrie, [ישור] | de: Assyrien, [ישור] Jer 5:26; Hos 13:7

3. to sing (1×) To sing or chant — a rare and debated sense attested in Job 33:27, where Elihu describes a restored person who 'sings before others' in confession. This may reflect a distinct homonymous root related to shir ('to sing') rather than the visual verb. Spanish canta ('he sings') and some traditional renderings support the vocal reading, though others emend the text or reinterpret the verb as 'to look about' in triumph. The single attestation and textual uncertainty make this the most fragile of the three senses. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: he-sings | es: Canta | fr: observer | de: aufrichtig Job 33:27

שׁוּר H7790 Prep-b / N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

On my enemies, though the Hebrew is textually corrupt and alternate readings suggest 'my adversaries'

The psalmist declares triumph over opponents, but the exact Hebrew word here is disputed. BDB suggests reading 'on those who watch me with hostility' (from שׁוֹרֵר) rather than the Masoretic text. Such textual questions arise when scribal traditions preserve a difficult reading that may reflect ancient copyist error. Yet even uncertain texts convey the core message: God vindicates the righteous against their adversaries.

(1×) Found in Psalm 92:11 where the speaker celebrates God's justice. The prepositional phrase 'on my enemies' expresses the direction of divine judgment. Spanish renders this as 'a mis acechadores' (on those who lie in wait for me), French as 'dans ennemi' (in/among enemy), showing translators grappling with both textual and semantic ambiguity in expressing the psalmist's opponents. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: on-my-enemies | es: a-mis-acechadores | fr: dans-ennemi | de: auf-mein-Feinde Ps 92:11

שׁוּר H7791a N-ms (3×)
wall—a defensive or enclosing barrier of stone or brick
This noun denotes a wall, typically in poetic contexts. Genesis 49:22 uses it in Joseph's blessing about branches running over a wall. Second Samuel 22:30 (= Psalm 18:29) describes leaping over a wall with God's help, imagery of military prowess or obstacle-overcoming. The term may be an Aramaism, related to the common Aramaic word for wall, appearing in Hebrew poetic rather than prose texts.

(3×) The three occurrences are all poetic: Joseph's fruitful branches over a wall (Genesis 49:22) and the psalm refrain about leaping walls (2 Samuel 22:30 = Psalm 18:29). Spanish 'muro' (wall) and French 'muraille' appear. The Genesis text is contested—some see 'wall' as part of the blessing imagery, others propose emendations. The psalm usage clearly denotes military walls scaled with divine enablement, expressing triumphant conquest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-wall, wall | es: muro | fr: lis, mur, muraille | de: Mauer, die-Mauer, ein-Mauer Gen 49:22; 2Sam 22:30; Ps 18:29

שׁוּרָה H7791b N-fpc / 3mp (1×)
Their walls, possibly their vine-rows, with scholarly debate between structural and agricultural meanings
Job's lament about the wicked includes this disputed term—does it mean the walls between which oil is pressed, or rows of vines/olives in an orchard? The consonants support either reading. Agricultural and architectural vocabulary sometimes overlap in ancient texts, especially when describing the infrastructure of farming. Modern translations diverge here, some seeing walls (structures), others seeing planted rows (agriculture). The context of oil-pressing and hunger suggests economic oppression.

(1×) Appears in Job 24:11 depicting laborers who press oil within 'their walls/rows' yet suffer hunger—a picture of unjust exploitation. The possessive suffix 'their' could refer to the oppressors' property. Aramaic cognates mean 'row,' supporting an agricultural reading of vine or olive rows. Spanish and German preserve the original Hebrew in brackets, signaling the term's ambiguity. The semantic tension between structure and plantation persists. VINEYARD CULTIVATION
en: their-walls | es: sus-muros | fr: leur-שׁוּרֹתָם-eux | de: [שׁוּרֹתָם] Job 24:11

שׁוּר H7792 Conj-w / N-mpd (4×)
wall (Aramaic); city walls, especially those of Jerusalem being rebuilt in Ezra's time
This Aramaic noun appears only in Ezra 4, in the letters opposing the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls. The context is deeply political: enemies write to the Persian king warning that if the walls are completed, the city will rebel and stop paying tribute. The multilingual glosses show some textual variation (ketiv/qere issues in Hebrew), but consistently recognize these as city walls. In the ancient Near East, walls weren't merely defensive structures—they symbolized autonomy, security, and political power. The opposition to rebuilding Jerusalem's walls reveals how threatening a fortified Jewish city appeared to surrounding peoples. Walls meant freedom; walls meant strength; walls meant a city could stand on its own terms.

(4×) City walls (Aramaic term used in Ezra 4:12-16), specifically Jerusalem's walls being rebuilt by the returned exiles. The letters to the Persian king focus obsessively on these walls as symbols of potential rebellion and lost revenue. Multilingual evidence shows the term is consistently recognized (Spanish muros, though French and German often transliterate due to textual variants). The walls represent more than defense—they signify restored Jewish autonomy and dignity after the exile. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [ketiv], and-walls | es: (y-los-muros), [y-los-muros], y-sus-muros | fr: [ושורין], [ושוריא], [ושוריה] | de: [(ושוריא)], [[ושורין]], [ושוריה] Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:16

שׁוּר H7793 N-proper-fs (6×)
Shur — a region on the southwestern border of Canaan near Egypt, associated with wilderness travel and the patriarchal narratives.
A proper noun designating a region in the northeastern Sinai, along the southwestern border of Canaan and the eastern frontier of Egypt. Shur appears in connection with Hagar's flight (Gen 16:7, 'the road to Shur'), Abraham's sojourning territory (Gen 20:1), and the boundary marker for Ishmaelite territory (Gen 25:18). After the Exodus, Israel entered the 'wilderness of Shur' (Exod 15:22). The name may derive from a word meaning 'wall,' possibly referencing an Egyptian line of border fortifications across the Suez isthmus, though this remains debated.

Shur (6×) Shur, a geographic region on the eastern border of Egypt and southwestern edge of Canaan. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Shur,' French 'Schur/Shur,' German 'Schur') reflects its status as a fixed proper noun. It functions as both a directional landmark ('the way to Shur,' Gen 16:7) and a wilderness designation ('wilderness of Shur,' Exod 15:22), marking the liminal space between Egypt and the promised land in patriarchal and exodus narratives. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Shur | es: Shur | fr: Schur, Shur | de: Schur, Shur, nach-Schur Gen 16:7; Gen 20:1; Gen 25:18; Exod 15:22; 1Sam 15:7

שׁוֹר H7794 Prep-l / N-msc / 2ms (79×)
ox, bull; a single head of cattle used in agricultural, legal, sacrificial, and poetic contexts Hebrew shor designates an individual bovine animal — ox, bull, or cow — as distinct from the collective term baqar ('herd, cattle'). The word pervades the legal codes: the goring ox of Exodus 21:28-36 is a foundational case in biblical jurisprudence, and the ox appears in the Decalogue's sabbath commandment (Exod 20:17; Deut 5:14). In sacrifice, the shor serves as a premier offering. Poetically, the golden calf episode is recalled as Israel exchanging their glory for 'the image of an ox that eats grass' (Ps 106:20). The multilingual evidence — Spanish buey/toro, French boeuf, German Ochse/Rind — reflects the dual agricultural and sacrificial range.

ox, bull (79×) An individual bovine animal, whether a working ox or a sacrificial bull, distinct from the collective baqar ('herd'). Central to Israelite legal tradition — the goring-ox laws (Exod 21:28-36) and the sabbath rest commandment (Exod 20:17; Deut 5:14) — and prominent in sacrificial contexts. The golden calf is memorably described as 'an ox that eats grass' (Ps 106:20). Spanish buey/toro and German Ochse/Rind together capture the working-animal and sacrificial-animal dimensions. CATTLE AND OXEN
en: an-ox, of-an-ox, ox | es: a-buey, buey, toro | fr: boeuf, bœuf, de-un-boeuf | de: Ochse, Rind, ein-Ochse Gen 32:5; Gen 49:6; Exod 21:28

שׁוֹרָה H7795 N-fs (1×)
In rows, likely a scribal repetition of the following word 'barley,' though possibly an agricultural term
Isaiah's agricultural calendar describes the planting of various grains, but this word creates a puzzle. Some scholars see it as accidental duplication—a scribe's eye skipping from one word to a similar one. Others defend it as meaning 'in rows,' describing how farmers arranged plantings. Ancient texts lack the error-correction mechanisms of modern publishing, so occasional duplications or corruptions occur. The verse's overall meaning—orderly agricultural practice—remains clear despite the textual question.

(1×) Found in Isaiah 28:25 in instructions about proper farming technique. The phrase structure supports the dittography theory (accidental repetition of the next word 'barley'), which is why Greek and Syriac versions omit it. Yet the 'in rows' interpretation fits the context of ordered planting. Spanish renders it 'en hileras' (in rows), treating it as authentic, while French and German bracket it, expressing uncertainty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-rows | es: en-hileras | fr: [שורה] | de: [שורה] Isa 28:25

שֹׂרֵק H7796 N-proper-fs (1×)
Sorek, the valley where Delilah lived, named after choice vines
This wadi's name derives from a term for superior grape varieties, suggesting the valley was known for viticulture. Geography and economy intertwine in biblical place names—valleys, mountains, and towns often carry names reflecting their natural resources or historical events. The Valley of Sorek becomes infamous as the location of Samson's downfall, where love and betrayal intersect. Modern archaeology identifies it with Wadi Surar, northwest of Jerusalem, still fruitful terrain.

(1×) Mentioned in Judges 16:4 as Delilah's residence. The name means 'choice vine' or 'grape of superior quality,' marking this as prime wine country. Survey data places the valley near Zorah, Samson's hometown, making the geography of the narrative vivid. The name appears with slight variations across translations (Sorec, Soreq), representing different approaches to transliterating Hebrew proper nouns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Soreq | es: Sorec | fr: Soreq | de: Soreq Judg 16:4

שׂוּשׂ H7797 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (27×)
to exult, rejoice greatly — expressing intense joy, often in covenantal, eschatological, or worship contexts Sus (also sis) means 'to exult' or 'to rejoice greatly,' expressing an intensity of gladness beyond ordinary simchah. Its 27 occurrences cluster in three fields. First, covenantal joy: YHWH himself 'rejoices over you for good' (Deut 28:63; 30:9), and Jeremiah promises God will 'rejoice over them to do them good' when the new covenant is established (Jer 32:41). Second, eschatological celebration: Isaiah's 'I will greatly rejoice in YHWH, for he has clothed me with garments of salvation' (Isa 61:10), the desert that 'shall rejoice and blossom' (Isa 35:1), and the command 'rejoice with Jerusalem' (Isa 65:18; 66:10). Third, personal worship: the psalmist 'rejoices at your word as one who finds great spoil' (Ps 119:14, 162). Zephaniah brings all strands together: YHWH 'will exult over you with loud singing' (Zeph 3:17). Spanish 'regocijarse,' French 'se rejouir,' German 'sich freuen' capture the exuberant register.

rejoice, exult (27×) To experience and express intense, exuberant joy — often in a covenantal or eschatological register. Uniquely applied to both divine and human subjects: God himself 'rejoices over' his people (Deut 28:63; 30:9; Jer 32:41; Zeph 3:17), and the redeemed respond with matching exultation (Isa 61:10; 65:18; 66:10). In personal worship, the psalmist 'rejoices at your word' (Ps 119:14, 162). Isaiah's desert that 'rejoices and blossoms' (Isa 35:1) extends the emotion cosmically. Typically paired with gil as a hendiadys of supreme gladness (Isa 61:10; Zeph 3:17). REJOICING AND GREETING
en: I-rejoice, I-will-rejoice, Shall-be-glad | es: Gozando, Regócijense, Se-alegrarán | fr: et-se-réjouir, il-se-réjouit, se-réjouir | de: [ישיש], [יישישן], er-freute-sich Deut 28:63; Deut 30:9; Job 3:22

שָׁרְיָה H7798 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Shavsha, David's scribe, with variant spellings across biblical manuscripts (Seraiah, Sheva, Shisha)
This royal official's name appears in multiple spellings throughout Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles—a textual phenomenon that reveals how names could be transmitted differently in various manuscript traditions. He served as royal secretary or scribe, a high administrative post in David's government. The variant spellings (Seraiah in 2 Samuel 8, Sheva in 2 Samuel 20, Shisha in 1 Kings 4, Shavsha here) probably reflect different scribal traditions or dialectical pronunciations becoming frozen in written form.

(1×) Found in 1 Chronicles 18:16 listing David's cabinet members. The conjunction 'and-Shavsha' integrates him into the administrative roster. Septuagint renderings show Greek translators struggling with Hebrew sibilants and vowels. Scholars debate whether these are different officials or the same person under various name forms—most conclude they're the same, with the variations reflecting the fluidity of ancient name transmission before standardization. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shavsha | es: y-Savsa | fr: [ושושא] | de: [ושושא] 1Chr 18:16

שׁוּשָׁן H7799 Prep-k (15×)
Lily, lotus — any lily-like flower; used of botanical beauty, architectural ornament, and romantic imagery
The שׁוֹשַׁנָּה / שׁוּשָׁן (shushan/shoshannah) likely encompasses several lily-like flowers, possibly including the lotus. Borrowed from Egyptian (sššn), the word blooms across Scripture's most evocative passages. In the Song of Songs, the beloved is 'a lily among thorns' (2:2), the lover feeds 'among the lilies' (2:16; 6:3), and his lips are 'lilies dripping myrrh' (5:13). Solomon's Temple featured lily-shaped capitals on its pillars (1 Kgs 7:19, 22) and a 'sea' with a lily-blossom rim (1 Kgs 7:26). Hosea 14:6 promises that restored Israel will 'blossom like the lily.' Spanish 'lirio' and French 'lis' preserve the elegance.

lily, lotus (15×) A lily or lily-like flower — probably a general term for several species rather than one botanical identification — used in three overlapping registers: romantic beauty in the Song of Songs (2:1-2, 16; 4:5; 5:13; 6:2-3; 7:3), architectural ornamentation on Solomon's Temple pillars and basin (1 Kgs 7:19, 22, 26; 2 Chr 4:5), and prophetic metaphor for Israel's flourishing (Hos 14:6). The Egyptian loanword origin connects it to the broader ancient Near Eastern lotus/lily iconography. Spanish 'lirio' and French 'lis' both map directly. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS
en: a-lily, among-the-lilies, like-a-lily | es: Como-lirio, como-el-lirio, entre-los-lirios | fr: Comme-un-lis, [שושנה], de-lis. | de: Lilien, [בשושנים], [כשושנה] 1Kgs 7:19; 1Kgs 7:22; 1Kgs 7:26; 2Chr 4:5; Ps 45:1

שׁוּשַׁן H7800 N-proper-ms (21×)
Susa (Shushan), the ancient capital of Elam and winter residence of the Persian kings
The proper name of the fortified city in southwestern Persia where much of the book of Esther unfolds and where Nehemiah served as cupbearer. Often qualified as 'Shushan the citadel' (Neh 1:1; Esth 1:2; Dan 8:2), it was the administrative seat of Achaemenid power. Esther's entire drama—from her selection as queen through the decree of Purim—plays out within and around this city (Esth 2:3–8; 3:15; 4:8, 16; 8:14–15; 9:6–18). French 'Suse,' Spanish 'Susa,' and German 'Susa' all preserve the place name with minimal variation.

Susa (the Persian capital city) (21×) The proper noun Susa (שׁוּשָׁן), the ancient capital of Elam and winter residence of the Persian kings. All 21 occurrences denote the same geographical location, often as 'Shushan the citadel' (Neh 1:1; Esth 1:2; Dan 8:2). The city is the setting for Esther's story and Nehemiah's call to rebuild Jerusalem. French 'Suse,' Spanish 'Susa,' and German 'Susa' uniformly transliterate this single place name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Shushan, Susa, in-Shushan | es: En-Susa, Susa, en-Susa | fr: Susan, Suse, à-Suse | de: Susa, [בשושן], in-Susa Neh 1:1; Esth 1:2; Esth 1:5; Esth 2:3; Esth 2:5

שׁוּשַׁנְכָיֵא H7801 N-proper-ms (1×)
Shushankhaye, the people of Susa (Susians), forcibly resettled in Samaria by Assyria
This ethnic designation identifies colonists whom Assyrian emperors transplanted from Susa (ancient Elam) to the former northern kingdom of Israel. The policy of population exchange aimed to break national identities and prevent rebellion. These Susians joined other displaced peoples—Babylonians, Erechites, and others—in writing a letter opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding. The plural gentilician form marks them as a collective group, their name preserving their city of origin even in displacement.

(1×) Appears in Ezra 4:9 among adversaries petitioning the Persian king against Jerusalem. The form indicates 'people from Susa,' the Persian winter capital (later prominent in Esther's story). The name derives from Old Persian šušana-ka meaning 'from Susa,' showing how administrative records preserved ethnic origins. Spanish renders it 'los susanquitas' (the Susanites), French and German use the original Hebrew, reflecting the specialized nature of ancient ethnography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shushankhaye | es: los-susanquitas | fr: [שושנכיא] | de: [שושנכיא] Ezra 4:9

שׁוּשַׁן H7802 N-csc (4×)

lily; any lily-like flower, used in similes of beauty and as a technical term in psalm superscriptions

This noun refers to the lily or lily-like flowers, though the exact botanical identification remains debated (possibly iris or similar flowers). In Song of Songs it becomes a tender metaphor: the bride is like a lily among thorns (2:2), and there are references to 'the lily of the valleys' (2:1). More surprisingly, it appears in the superscriptions of Psalms 60 and 80 as a technical musical or liturgical term ('according to Shushan Eduth' or 'the lily of testimony'). The multilingual glosses show confusion in the psalm contexts (Spanish testimonio 'testimony', mixing the phrase components), suggesting the technical usage was already obscure to later translators. The flower itself speaks of delicate beauty, purity, and perhaps spring renewal.

(4×) Lily or lily-like flower, used both as botanical reference and metaphor for beauty (Song of Songs) and as a technical liturgical term in psalm superscriptions. In Psalms 60 and 80, 'Shushan Eduth' ('lily of testimony') appears to be a tune or performance instruction, though its precise meaning was already unclear in antiquity—hence the mixed glossing between 'lily' and 'testimony' across languages. The flower symbolizes delicate beauty, beloved in ancient Israel's poetic tradition. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: a-testimony, testimony, the-Lilies | es: lirio-de, lirios, testimonio | fr: Shushân, témoignage | de: Zeugnis, der-Lilies, der-lily-von Ps 60:1; Ps 80:1

שׁוּתֶלַח H7803 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Shuthelah; personal name of a descendant of Ephraim and clan ancestor

This is the name of a prominent Ephraimite ancestor, appearing in genealogical lists in Numbers 26 and 1 Chronicles 7. He was a son of Ephraim and gave his name to the Shuthelahite clan. The name appears with slight spelling variations (Shutelach, Shutalach) reflecting different manuscript traditions or dialectical pronunciations. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration with minor phonetic adjustments (Spanish Sutélaj, French Shuthelah). As with many clan names, Shuthelah represents both an individual ancestor and the extended family group that traced descent from him, woven into the tribal structure of Ephraim.

(4×) Personal name of an Ephraimite clan founder mentioned in Numbers 26:35-36 and 1 Chronicles 7:20-21. The spelling variations in the Hebrew text (Shutelach/Shutalach) are preserved in some manuscripts. As a clan ancestor, his name identified a subdivision within the tribe of Ephraim. The consistent cross-linguistic transliteration shows recognition of this as a proper name rather than a common noun, with minor phonetic adaptations to each target language. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shutelach, Shuthelah, and-Shutelach | es: Sutélaj, de-Sutélaj, y-Sutélaj | fr: Shuthelah, [ושותלח], [שותלח] | de: Shuthelah, [ושותלח], [שותלח] Num 26:35; Num 26:36; 1Chr 7:20; 1Chr 7:21

שֵׁיזִב H7804 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf / 2ms (9×)

To deliver or rescue from danger, an Aramaic verb (Shaphel stem) used exclusively in Daniel for divine deliverance.

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to deliver' or 'to rescue,' derived from the Shaphel (causative) stem of an Akkadian root meaning 'to escape.' Used exclusively in Daniel, this word carries powerful theological weight: it describes God's ability to rescue his servants from mortal peril—the fiery furnace (Dan 3:15-28) and the lion's den (Dan 6:14-28). Spanish 'librar' and French 'délivrer' both capture the liberation dimension, while German 'befreien' emphasizes setting free. The theological question 'Is there any god who can deliver you?' (Dan 3:15) makes this verb a test case for divine sovereignty.

deliver, rescue (Hifil) (9×) To deliver or rescue someone from mortal danger, with God as the typical agent. All nine occurrences appear in Daniel's Aramaic sections: six in the furnace narrative (Dan 3:15, 17 twice, 28) and three in the lions' den account (Dan 6:14, 17, 21, 28). The verb frames the central theological question of both narratives—whether God is able and willing to rescue the faithful. As a loanword from Akkadian šūzubu via the Shaphel causative stem, it carries connotations of causing someone to escape. Multilingual evidence—Spanish 'librar(nos),' French 'délivrer,' German 'befreien'—consistently renders it with terms for liberation and rescue. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-will-deliver, and-delivered, delivered | es: libra, librarnos, librarte | fr: délivrer, et-délivrer | de: befreien, und-befreien Dan 3:15; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:28; Dan 6:14

שָׂזַף H7805 V-Qal-Perf-3fs / 3ms (3×)

gaze at, scorch—to look upon intently, possibly with damaging effect

This Qal verb describes gazing upon or looking at something, with possible nuances of damaging sight. Job uses it twice: the eye that saw the wicked person will not see him again (20:9), and for a path no bird of prey has glimpsed (28:7). Song of Songs 1:6 may mean the sun 'looked on me' (causing darkness), though some interpret this as scorching. The semantic range spans observation and possible harmful viewing.

(3×) The three uses include eyes seeing/glimpsing (Job 20:9, 28:7) and the sun's action on the speaker (Song 1:6). Translations diverge on whether Song 1:6 means 'scorched' or 'looked upon,' with Spanish using both 'quemar' (scorch) and 'ver' (see). The Job passages clearly involve sight or glimpsing, while the Song text's agricultural context (sunburned from outdoor work) may support either gazing or scorching, possibly with both nuances present. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: gazed-at-it, that-glimpsed-him, that-has-scorched-me | es: la-vio, que-lo-vio, que-me-ha-quemado | fr: car-m'a-brûlée, שזפתו-lui | de: [שזפתו], [ששזפתני] Job 20:9; Job 28:7; Song 1:6

שָׂזַר H7806 V-Hofal-Prtcpl-ms (21×)

To be twisted or twined; used exclusively of linen thread in tabernacle construction (Hophal participle)

Occurs only as a Hophal participle (mashzar), always modifying fine linen (shesh) in the Exodus tabernacle specifications. The twisted linen was used for the curtains, veil, screen, and court hangings of the tabernacle (Exod 26:1, 31, 36; 27:9, 16, 18; 28:6, 8, 15; 36:8, 35, 37; 38:9, 16, 18; 39:2, 5, 8, 24, 29). The consistent pairing 'fine twisted linen' became a technical phrase in priestly literature. Spanish 'torcido,' French 'retors,' and German 'gezwirnt' all render the same idea: yarn spun by twisting multiple plies together.

(21×) Twisted or twined, describing fine linen thread whose strands are plied together for strength and beauty. Every occurrence is a Hophal participle in the tabernacle building narratives (Exod 26–39), forming the technical phrase 'fine twisted linen' (shesh mashzar) for curtains, veils, screens, and priestly garments. Spanish 'torcido,' French 'retors,' and German 'gezwirnt' each render this textile-manufacturing term with a single consistent gloss. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13483 WITH 3 SENSES

en: twisted | es: torcido | fr: retors | de: gezwirnt Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36; Exod 27:9; Exod 27:16

שַׁח H7807 Conj-w / Adj-msc (1×)

Lowly of eyes, humble in demeanor or gaze

Job's declaration promises that God saves 'the lowly of eyes'—those whose downcast gaze signals humility rather than arrogance. In ancient Near Eastern culture, body language communicated social position; lowered eyes indicated modesty, submission, or shame, while lifted eyes could signal pride or boldness. This phrase captures an inner disposition through its outward expression. The construct form (lowly + of eyes) is characteristically Hebrew, linking moral quality to physical posture.

(1×) Found in Job 22:29 describing God's favor toward the humble. The expression 'lowly of eyes' works as a character description—not merely looking down, but being fundamentally humble. The conjunction 'and-' connects this phrase to the surrounding promise about divine justice. Spanish preserves the construct relationship as 'al humilde de' (to the humble of), while French and German bracket the original, suggesting the idiom's difficulty in translation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lowly-of | es: Y-al-humilde-de | fr: et-שח | de: [שח] Job 22:29

שִׂחַ H7808 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

His thought, likely God's thoughts or mental activity, though the text may be corrupt

Amos proclaims God's comprehensive knowledge: he forms mountains, creates wind, and 'declares to humanity what his thought is.' This rare noun appears only here, and scholars debate whether the text is original or textually disturbed. The context celebrates divine omniscience—God's inner mental activity is not hidden but revealed to human beings. Some propose reading 'his conversation' or 'his meditation' based on slight textual adjustments, but the transmitted text emphasizes divine thought becoming known.

(1×) Appears in Amos 4:13 within a doxology of God as creator and revealer. The possessive suffix 'his' refers to God—'his thought' is the divine mental content that humans could never access except by revelation. French renders this simply as 'pensée' (thought), treating it as straightforward vocabulary. The verse's structure parallels God's creative acts (forming, creating) with his revelatory act (declaring), making human knowledge of divine thought a kind of miracle. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-thought | es: es-su-pensamiento | fr: pensée | de: [שחו] Amos 4:13

שָׁחַד H7809 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-2fs (2×)

bribe, give a present; offer payment to corrupt judgment or gain favor

This verb means to give a bribe or corrupt gift, universally condemned in Scripture. Ezekiel 16:33 uses it in shocking imagery: unfaithful Jerusalem 'bribed' her lovers to come to her, reversing normal prostitution economics—she paid them rather than receiving payment. Job 6:22 uses it hypothetically: Job asks if he ever requested his friends to 'give a bribe on my behalf' to powerful enemies. The verb derives from the noun for bribe (shochad). Spanish sobornar and French donner (in this context) convey the corrupt transaction. The term always carries negative moral weight—bribery perverts justice and loyalty, whether in courts or covenant relationships.

(2×) To offer a bribe or corrupting payment, appearing in Job 6:22 and Ezekiel 16:33. Job uses it hypothetically: he never asked friends to bribe others on his behalf, asserting his integrity. Ezekiel uses it in prophetic metaphor: apostate Jerusalem bribed her lovers, showing spiritual perversion—she paid for what should have brought profit. Spanish 'sobornar, sobornaste' (to bribe, you bribed) and the English 'bribe' uniformly carry negative moral judgment. Both contexts condemn the practice, whether potential (Job) or actual (Ezekiel). DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: and-you-bribed, bribe | es: sobornad, y-los-sobornaste | fr: et-donner, שחדו | de: [ותשחדי], [שחדו] Job 6:22; Ezek 16:33

שֹׁחַד H7810 Prep-b / N-ms (23×)

Bribe — a gift given to corrupt judgment, pervert justice, or buy illicit favor; universally condemned in the law

The noun שֹׁחַד denotes a payment meant to influence a judge or official away from honest judgment. Biblical law is unambiguous: 'a bribe blinds the clear-sighted and perverts the words of the righteous' (Exod 23:8 / Deut 16:19). God himself takes no bribe (Deut 10:17). Samuel's sons accepted bribes (1 Sam 8:3), and Isaiah condemns Jerusalem's rulers as 'lovers of bribes' (Isa 1:23). The word can extend to political inducements between kings (1 Kgs 15:19). Proverbs observes with realism that 'a bribe is a charm stone in the eyes of its owner' (Prov 17:8). Spanish 'soborno' and French 'bribe' reflect its judicial core.

bribe, bribery (23×) Masculine noun for a bribe in judicial contexts. Torah prohibits it categorically: bribery blinds the wise (Exod 23:8; Deut 16:19) and God takes no bribe (Deut 10:17). Prophets denounce bribe-takers (Isa 1:23; Mic 3:11). Wisdom observes its power as a 'charm stone' (Prov 17:8) while condemning it (Prov 17:23). Also covers political payments between kings (1 Kgs 15:19). DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: a-bribe, and-a-bribe, and-bribe | es: Soborno, Y-soborno, el-soborno | fr: [שחד], bribe, dans-présent | de: [בשחד], [השחד], [ושחד] Exod 23:8; Deut 10:17; Deut 16:19

שָׂחָה H7811 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (3×)

swim, drench—to move through water or make thoroughly wet

This verb relates to swimming or drenching with liquid. Isaiah 25:11 depicts God bringing down the proud 'as the swimmer spreads to swim,' using swimming motions as a metaphor. Psalm 6:6 speaks of drenching a bed with tears through the night. The Hiphil form conveys causative sense—making something swim or thoroughly soaking it. The semantic connection between swimming and drenching lies in saturation with liquid.

(3×) The three uses include swimming/swimmer imagery in Isaiah 25:11 (appearing twice in the verse) and drenching a bed with tears in Psalm 6:6. Spanish uses 'nadar' (swim) and 'inundar' (flood/drench), while translations struggle with Isaiah's difficult swimming metaphor for divine judgment. The Psalm passage employs hyperbolic lament language—tears so copious they drench bedding, showing emotional flooding akin to physical swimming in liquid. WASHING AND BATHING

en: I-drench, and-He-shall-bring-low, to-swim | es: el-nadador, inundo, para-nadar | fr: [השחה], [לשחות], se-prosterner | de: [השחה], [לשחות], ich-drench Ps 6:6; Isa 25:11

שָׁחָה H7812 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-1cp (175×)

To bow down, prostrate oneself in worship or obeisance; also: to bow low (Qal), to depress or weigh down (Hiphil).

One of the most physically vivid worship words in the Hebrew Bible. The Hitpael form—by far the most common—depicts the full-body prostration of a person before God or a human superior, face to the ground. Abraham bows before the Hittites (Gen 23:7), all nations bow before the Lord (Ps 22:27). German anbeten ('to worship') and Spanish postrarse capture the reverence, while Swahili -sujudu echoes the Islamic cognate for the same physical posture. Rarely, the Qal imperative means simply 'bow down' (Isa 51:23), and the Hiphil in Proverbs 12:25 describes anxiety 'weighing down' the heart—a striking metaphorical extension of this physical verb.

1. prostrate oneself, bow down, worship (173×) The dominant Hitpael reflexive sense: to prostrate oneself, bow down in worship or obeisance. This covers nearly all 173 occurrences and encompasses bowing before God in worship (Exod 34:8, Ps 95:6), before idols (Exod 20:5), and before human superiors in social deference (Gen 18:2, Gen 23:7, Gen 33:3). The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent—Spanish postrarse/inclinarse, French se prosterner, German sich beugen/anbeten—all reflecting the dual worship-and-respect register of this verb. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-bowed, and-bowed-down, and-he-bowed-down | es: Y-se-inclinó, Y-se-postró, e-inclinó | fr: et-elle-s'inclina-en-bas, et-il-s'inclina-en-bas, et-s'inclina | de: und-betete-an, und-beugte-sich-hinab, und-er-beugte-sich-hinab Gen 18:2; Gen 19:1; Gen 23:7; Gen 23:12; Gen 24:26

2. (1×) The rare Qal imperative 'bow down' (Isa 51:23), where enemies command Zion to prostrate herself so they can walk over her back. This is not reflexive worship but a forced, humiliating posture imposed by oppressors. Spanish incínate and English 'bow down' preserve the physicality without the volitional worship connotation of the Hitpael. WORSHIP PROSTRATION
en: bow-down | es: incínate | fr: se-prosterner | de: anbeten Isa 51:23

3. (1×) The Hiphil causative in Proverbs 12:25: anxiety 'weighs down' or 'depresses' the heart. A metaphorical extension where the physical motion of bowing is internalized—the heart is bent low under emotional burden. Spanish lo abate ('it casts it down') and English 'weighs it down' capture this psychological transfer from bodily prostration to emotional dejection. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: weighs-it-down | es: lo-abate | fr: se-prosterner | de: betete-an Prov 12:25

שְׂחִי H7813 N-ms (1×)
Swimming, the action of propelling oneself through water
Ezekiel's vision of the temple river includes a point where the water becomes 'waters of swimming'—deep enough that one must swim rather than wade. This marks the culmination of the river's growth from ankle-deep to chest-deep to unfordable. Swimming as a specific activity appears rarely in biblical texts, which more often describe crossing waters via boat or miraculous parting. Here it serves as a measure of depth, the point at which walking becomes impossible and the stream becomes impassable except by swimming.

(1×) Found in Ezekiel 47:5 describing the deepening river flowing from the temple. The construct phrase 'waters of swimming' (מֵי שְׂחִי) uses a nominal form to indicate the water's character—it requires swimming. This represents the river's final stage of growth in Ezekiel's vision, symbolizing the abundance of life flowing from God's presence. Translations handle this consistently (nadar in Spanish, nager in French), recognizing swimming as a universal human activity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13540 WITH 3 SENSES
en: swimming | es: nadar | fr: nager | de: [שחה] Ezek 47:5

שְׂחֹק H7814 Prep-l / N-ms (15×)
Laughter (joyful or scornful); a laughingstock or object of derision; sport, amusement, diversion.
Sechoq captures the full emotional spectrum of laughter — from the joy filling the mouths of restored exiles (Ps 126:2) to the bitter mockery heaped on Jeremiah (Jer 20:7). Built from sachaq ('to laugh, play'), this noun splits almost evenly between joyful laughter and scornful derision, with one wisdom occurrence meaning 'sport.' Ecclesiastes probes the ambiguity most deeply: 'I said of laughter, it is madness' (Eccl 2:2), and 'sorrow is better than laughter' (Eccl 7:3). Spanish distinguishes risa from irrisón, and French rire from moquerie, navigating tonal range Hebrew leaves to context.

1. laughingstock, object of derision (7×) A laughingstock or object of derision — a person mocked or ridiculed. Jeremiah laments 'I have become a laughingstock all day long' (Jer 20:7), Moab 'shall become a laughingstock' (Jer 48:26-27), and Job is 'a laughingstock to his friends' (Job 12:4). The formula hayah le-sechoq recurs in prophetic judgment. Spanish irrisón and French risée deploy dedicated mockery vocabulary. LAUGHTER AND DERISION
en: a-laughingstock, laughingstock | es: Irrisón, burla, irrisón | fr: [השחק], [לשחוק], [לשחק] | de: Lachen, [השחק], [לשחוק] Job 12:4; Jer 20:7; Jer 48:26; Jer 48:27

2. laughter (7×) Laughter as an emotional response — joyful, incredulous, or hollow. God will 'fill your mouth with laughter' (Job 8:21), the exiles' mouths were 'filled with laughter' (Ps 126:2), and Ecclesiastes probes: 'I said of laughter, it is madness' (Eccl 2:2; 7:3). Proverbs 14:13 notes 'even in laughter the heart may ache.' Spanish risa and French rire converge here. LAUGHTER AND DERISION
en: for-laughter, in-laughter, laughter | es: A-la-risa, de-risa, en-la-risa | fr: dans-rire, de-rire, rire | de: Lachen, laughter Job 8:21; Ps 126:2; Prov 14:13; Eccl 2:2; Eccl 7:3

3. sport, amusement (1×) Sport, amusement, or diversion — activity done for entertainment rather than emotional expression. A single occurrence in Proverbs 10:23: 'Doing wickedness is like sport to a fool.' Spanish diversión, French amusement, and the root sachaq ('to play') make the ludic coloring transparent, distinguishing this from both joyful laughter and derisive mockery. LAUGHTER AND DERISION
en: like-sport | es: como-risa | fr: comme-rire | de: Lachen Prov 10:23

שְׁחוֹר H7815 Prep-m / N-ms (1×)
Than soot, describing a color darker than blackness itself
Lamentations' graphic description of Jerusalem's suffering includes faces that have grown 'darker than soot'—a powerful image of deterioration and death. Soot, the carbon residue from incomplete combustion, represents maximum blackness in the ancient world. The comparison structure (darker than X) intensifies the horror of what siege and starvation have done to human appearance. Skin that was once ruby-red (the previous verse's description) has become unrecognizable, blackened beyond even soot's darkness.

(1×) Appears in Lamentations 4:8 contrasting Jerusalem's nobility before and after siege. The prepositional phrase 'than soot' serves as the standard of comparison for their darkened appearance. Spanish renders it 'que el hollín' (than the soot), maintaining the comparative structure. The image captures not just discoloration but the death-like transformation of living flesh into something resembling burnt material—a metaphor of complete desolation. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: than-soot | es: que-el-hollín | fr: [משחור] | de: [משחור] Lam 4:8

שְׁחוּת H7816 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
Into his own pit, a metaphor for the trap one sets catching oneself
Proverbs warns that whoever leads the upright astray will fall 'into his own pit'—a vivid expression of poetic justice. The pit represents both a hunting trap and metaphorically any destructive scheme. The possessive 'his own' emphasizes the ironic reversal: the schemer's trap becomes his own doom. This wisdom saying reflects a moral principle found throughout biblical literature—evil boomerangs back on the evildoer. The pit one digs becomes the pit one occupies.

(1×) Found in Proverbs 28:10 describing the fate of those who corrupt the righteous. The prepositional phrase 'into his own pit' (בְּשִׁחוּתוֹ) uses a rare noun form related to the more common word for 'pit' or 'corruption.' Spanish preserves the possessive structure as 'en su propia fosa' (in his own pit/grave), French and German bracket the original Hebrew, perhaps reflecting the word's rarity or textual difficulty. The self-inflicted nature of judgment is central to the proverb's theology. PITS AND DUNGEONS
en: into-his-own-pit | es: en-su-propia-fosa | fr: dans-son-בשחותו-lui | de: [בשחותו] Prov 28:10

שָׁחַח H7817 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (21×)
To bow down, be humbled, crouch; in Hitpael, to be cast down in spirit; in Hiphil, to bring low.
Shachach is a verb of downward posture — bowing, crouching, sinking, being crushed low. It appears in Isaiah's great leveling visions where the haughty eyes of man 'shall be humbled' and the LORD alone exalted (Isa 2:11, 17), in the psalmist's anguished self-address 'Why are you cast down, O my soul?' (Ps 42:5), and in the animal world where lionesses 'crouch' in their dens (Job 38:40). The multilingual translations reveal how languages parse this range: Spanish abatir ('to bring down, depress') covers both physical and emotional lowering, French s'abaisser ('to lower oneself') keeps the reflexive flavor, while German niedergebeugt ('bent down') stays close to the bodily image. The verb's power lies in its refusal to separate physical posture from spiritual condition — to be bowed down in body and bowed down in soul are expressed by the same word.

1. be humbled, brought low (5×) Qal stative/passive: to be humbled, brought low, abased — the figurative, often prophetic sense where persons, nations, or proud things are reduced to lowliness. Isaiah's repeated formula 'the haughtiness of man shall be humbled' (Isa 2:11, 17) defines this cluster, alongside Hab 3:6 where the ancient mountains 'were made low' and Ps 107:39 where people 'are brought low through oppression.' Spanish abatida ('brought down') and French s'abaisser ('to lower oneself') converge on the figurative humiliation, while German niedergebeugt preserves the physical-posture metaphor underlying the abstraction. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: I-am-bowed-down, and-shall-be-brought-low, and-shall-be-humbled | es: Y-será-abatida, abatido, se-hundieron | fr: et-s'abaisser, et-s'incliner, s'abaisser | de: [שׁחח], [שׁחר], ich-bin-niedergebeugt Ps 38:6; Ps 107:39; Isa 2:11; Isa 2:17; Hab 3:6

2. bow down, prostrate oneself (5×) Qal active: to bow down physically, prostrate oneself in reverence, submission, or grief — the basic bodily action. Under God's power, the helpers of Rahab 'bow down' beneath him (Job 9:13); the wicked 'bow down' at the gates of the righteous (Prov 14:19); the psalmist 'bowed down in mourning' (Ps 35:14). The nations shall come 'bowing down' to restored Zion (Isa 60:14). Spanish inclinarse ('to incline/bow') and French s'incliner both capture the deliberate physical lowering of the body. Ps 10:10 shows the sinister side: the wicked crouches so that the helpless fall into his clutches. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: I-bowed-down, bow-down, bowing | es: Se-inclinan, inclinados, me-inclinaba | fr: s'abaisser, s'incliner, שחר | de: [שׁחר], [שׁחרח], [שׁחחר] Job 9:13; Ps 10:10; Ps 35:14; Prov 14:19; Isa 60:14

3. be downcast, cast down (reflexive) (4×) Hitpael reflexive-emotional: to be cast down inwardly, downcast in spirit — the celebrated 'soul' sense of the Psalms. Four occurrences cluster in Pss 42-43, all in the identical refrain: 'Why are you cast down, O my soul?' (Ps 42:5, 6, 11; 43:5). Spanish abatirse ('to become depressed/dejected') and German cast-hinab ('cast down') both select psychological-state vocabulary. The Hitpael reflexive stem is key: the self is acting upon itself in this inward sinking. This is not physical bowing but inner emotional collapse, distinguished from sense 1 by the self-directed reflexive grammar. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: are-you-cast-down, is-cast-down | es: se-abate, te-abates | fr: s'incliner | de: ist-cast-hinab, sind-du-cast-hinab Ps 42:5; Ps 42:6; Ps 42:11; Ps 43:5

4. be bowed down (passive) (4×) Niphal passive: to be bowed down or brought low by external force — humiliation imposed from without rather than chosen or experienced internally. The day comes when 'the loftiness of man shall be bowed down' (Isa 2:9); 'the mean man is bowed down and the great man is humbled' (Isa 5:15); the voice of the humbled one 'shall be low out of the dust' (Isa 29:4); the grinding-women stoop when they become few (Eccl 12:4). French et-s'abaisser and Spanish inclinarse surface again, but the Niphal morphology consistently marks external causation — things are being done to the subject, distinguishing this from the Qal stative of sense 1 and the Hitpael self-reflection of sense 3. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-are-brought-low, and-is-bowed-down, shall-be-low | es: Y-se-inclinará, Y-se-inclinó, será-baja | fr: et-s'abaisser, et-וישחר, s'abaisser | de: [וישׁח], [וישׁחו], [תשׁח] Eccl 12:4; Isa 2:9; Isa 5:15; Isa 29:4

5. bring low, humble (causative) (2×) Hiphil causative: to bring low, cause to bow down, actively humble — God or a powerful agent deliberately abasing the proud. Isaiah declares that God 'has brought low' the inhabitants of the height and the lofty city (Isa 25:12; 26:5). Spanish humillar ('to humble') and the causative structure confirm the transitive force: someone is doing the lowering. Only two occurrences, both in Isaiah, both with God as subject, forming a compact but theologically significant cluster about divine agency in humiliation. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: He-brings-down, He-brings-low | es: ha-inclinado, humilló | fr: s'abaisser | de: [השׁח] Isa 25:12; Isa 26:5

6. crouch, cower (1×) Qal of animal posture: to crouch or cower, describing the physical posture of animals lying low. Job 38:40 pictures lionesses crouching in their dens, waiting in ambush. Spanish agacharse ('to crouch/squat') and the English 'crouch' both select animal-posture vocabulary rather than worship or humiliation terms. A single occurrence, but cross-linguistically distinct: none of the translations use prostration or humility language here, confirming that this is a separate concrete-physical sense rooted in animal behavior rather than human social or spiritual dynamics. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: they-crouch | es: se-agachan | fr: ישׁחו | de: [ישׁחו] Job 38:40

שָׁחַט H7818 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs (1×)

I squeezed, describing the action of pressing grapes to extract juice

Joseph's fellow prisoner narrates his dream, describing how he took grapes and 'squeezed them into Pharaoh's cup.' This verb captures the hand-motion of pressing fruit to release liquid—a common wine-making action. Egyptian royal cupbearers would have performed exactly this service, freshly pressing grapes for the king's drink. The verb's root relates to other terms for pressing and squeezing, part of the agricultural and food preparation vocabulary essential to ancient daily life.

(1×) Appears in Genesis 40:11 within the cupbearer's prophetic dream. The first-person form 'and-I-squeezed' narrates the action in sequence: taking the grapes, squeezing them, putting the cup in Pharaoh's hand. Spanish renders this as 'y exprimí' (and I pressed/squeezed), using the standard verb for juice extraction. The vocabulary is practical rather than metaphorical—simple grape-pressing becomes symbolically loaded because it occurs in a dream that determines the dreamer's fate. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-squeezed | es: y-exprimí | fr: et-squeezed | de: und-presste Gen 40:11

H7819 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

Deadly, sharpened for killing, describing a tongue as a weapon

Jeremiah employs the metaphor of a sharpened arrow to describe the lethal power of deceitful speech. The adjective 'deadly' or 'sharpened for slaughter' derives from the verb 'to slaughter,' creating a participial form that characterizes the tongue as a weapon ready for killing. Prophetic literature frequently uses military imagery for speech—words wound, mouths are swords, tongues pierce like arrows. This particular formulation emphasizes premeditation: the tongue has been deliberately prepared for maximum harm.

(1×) Found in Jeremiah 9:8 indicting Israel's speech corruption: 'Their tongue is a deadly arrow.' The participial form suggests ongoing state or characteristic—this isn't an arrow used once but one perpetually ready for violence. Spanish uses 'afilada' (sharpened) to convey the deliberate preparation for harm. French and German bracket the original Hebrew, perhaps due to the participial form's grammatical complexity or textual questions in this notoriously difficult chapter. SLAUGHTERER AGENT

en: deadly | es: (afilada) | fr: [(שׁחוט)] | de: [(שׁחוט)] Jer 9:8

שָׁחַט H7819a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3mp (80×)

To slaughter, kill (an animal); primarily ritual sacrifice; in Nifal, to be slaughtered; also of violent killing of persons.

Shachat is the Hebrew Bible's technical term for the act of slaughtering an animal, overwhelmingly in the context of Levitical sacrifice. The verb appears with almost formulaic regularity in the ritual instructions of Leviticus and Numbers — 'and he shall slaughter it on the north side of the altar' (Lev 1:11) — where it denotes the specific moment of killing the animal, distinct from the subsequent acts of sprinkling blood, flaying, and burning. Arabic sahata ('to slay') may be a borrowing from Hebrew, and Akkadian shahatu ('to flay') points to an original meaning closer to 'beating' or 'stripping,' which evolved into the specialized slaughter sense. Outside the cult, the verb appears in darker contexts: the slaughter of prisoners (Jer 39:6; 2 Kgs 25:7) and the horrifying metaphor of child sacrifice (Ezek 16:21; 23:39).

1. slaughter an animal (Qal active) (72×) Qal active: to slaughter an animal, typically in a ritual or sacrificial context — the dominant sense at 72 occurrences, concentrated in Leviticus, Numbers, and Exodus. This covers the Passover lamb (Exod 12:21), burnt offerings (Lev 1:5, 11), peace offerings (Lev 3:2, 8), sin offerings (Lev 4:24, 29), and the slaughter of animals for food after military victory (1 Sam 14:32). Spanish degollar ('to slit the throat'), German schlachten, and Korean 잡다 consistently render the sacrificial act. The verb specifies the killing stroke itself — the moment the knife meets the throat — within a larger ritual sequence of presenting, laying on hands, slaughtering, sprinkling, and burning. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER

en: and-he-shall-slaughter, and-let-slaughter, and-shall-slaughter | es: Y-degollaron, Y-degollará, y-degollaron | fr: et-devra-slaughter, et-il-devra-slaughter, et-laisse-slaughter | de: und-er-soll-slaughter, und-lass-slaughter, und-schlachten Gen 37:31; Exod 12:21; Exod 29:11; Exod 29:16; Exod 29:20

2. be slaughtered (Nifal passive) (3×) Nifal passive: to be slaughtered — 3 occurrences where the animal is the grammatical subject receiving the action. In Lev 6:25 the sin offering 'is to be slaughtered' (tishshachet) in the same place as the burnt offering, and Num 11:22 raises the rhetorical question whether all the flocks could 'be slaughtered' to feed Israel. Spanish se degollara and Korean 잡히다 both use passive constructions, confirming the stem distinction. This form establishes procedural rules about where and how the slaughter must occur. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER

en: is-slaughtered, shall-be-slaughtered | es: se-degolla, se-degollará, se-degollarán | fr: devra-être-slaughtered, est-slaughtered | de: ist-slaughtered, soll-sein-slaughtered Lev 6:25; Num 11:22

3. (2×) Qal passive participle: the slaughtered one, the animal that has been slain — 2 occurrences at Lev 14:6 and 14:51 in the purification ritual for skin disease, where the living bird is dipped in the blood of 'the bird that was slaughtered' (ha-shechutah). Spanish el degollado and German das Geschlachtete both substantivize the passive participle. The form refers back to a completed slaughter, treating the slain animal as a characterized entity whose blood serves a ritual purpose. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: the-slaughtered | es: el-degollado | fr: le-slaughtered | de: der-slaughtered Lev 14:6; Lev 14:51

4. one who slaughters (active participle) (2×) Qal active participle: one who slaughters, the slaughterer — 2 occurrences in Isaiah's prophetic denunciations. In Isa 66:3 'the one slaughtering an ox is like one striking a man,' where the participial form identifies the agent who performs the act. In Isa 57:5 the accusation targets those 'slaughtering children in the valleys' — a horrifying reference to child sacrifice. Spanish el que sacrifica and Korean 잡는 자 both select agentive constructions, marking the performer of the act rather than the act itself. SLAUGHTERER AGENT

en: one-slaughtering, slaughtering | es: El-que-sacrifica, los-que-deguellan | fr: égorger | de: schlachten Isa 57:5; Isa 66:3

5. (1×) Extended metaphorical use: a tongue or speech that 'slaughters' — 1 occurrence at Jer 9:8 (9:7 in some versioning), where the tongue is described as a 'slaughtering arrow' or a deadly instrument. The multilingual evidence is sparse (Spanish matadora, 'killer'), but the metaphorical transfer from physical butchery to verbal destruction is striking. This moves shachat from the ritual domain into the prophetic vocabulary of deception and violence, connecting the physical brutality of the slaughterhouse to the destructive power of deceitful speech. SLAUGHTERER AGENT

en: [Q] | es: [matadora] | fr: égorger | de: schlachten Jer 9:8

שַׁחֲטָה H7819b Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

Slaughter, possibly in contexts of illegitimate worship or apostasy, though the text is textually disputed

Hosea's oracle against Israel's corruption includes this infinitival noun, though textual problems make interpretation uncertain. Does it mean 'slaughter' in the sense of sacrificial killing (thus condemning illicit worship), or should the text be emended to 'pit of Shittim' (naming a location of idolatry)? The transmitted text speaks of revolters going deep in slaughter, suggesting extensive apostasy expressed through perverted sacrifice. Scholarly discussion continues about whether to maintain the difficult Hebrew or adopt a geographic reading.

(1×) Appears in Hosea 5:2 within judgment speech about Israel's infidelity. The construct form 'and-slaughter' (וְשַׁחֲטָה) connects to the root for ritual animal slaughter. The context mentions 'revolters' and 'going deep,' implying systematic, extensive sin—perhaps illegitimate sacrifice at forbidden shrines. Spanish renders it as 'Y matando' (and killing), treating it as active apostasy. German brackets the original, acknowledging the textual difficulty. The vocabulary of sacrifice becomes vocabulary of judgment when worship is corrupted. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER

en: and-slaughter | es: Y-matando | fr: et-tuer | de: [וישחטה] Hos 5:2

שָׁחַט H7820 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (5×)

to slaughter, beat; as participle: hammered, beaten (of gold overlaid on shields)

The root means to slaughter or beat, with the original sense likely 'to strike, flay.' In the five occurrences captured here, only the passive Qal participle appears, describing gold that has been hammered or beaten onto large and small shields. Solomon's lavish armory (1 Kgs 10:16-17) and its parallel in Chronicles (2 Chr 9:15-16) both use this form. The Akkadian cognate shakhatu ('to flay') illuminates the physical violence underlying the term, even in its metallurgical application.

(5×) Beaten, hammered — describing gold that has been worked by repeated striking and applied as overlay to shields. All five occurrences are the Qal passive participle in the accounts of Solomon's gold shields (1 Kgs 10:16-17; 2 Chr 9:15-16). English and Spanish consistently translate 'beaten' and 'batido,' pointing to the metallurgical process rather than slaughter, while French 'égorger' retains the root's primary slaughter sense alongside the specialized passive meaning. METAL HAMMERING

en: beaten | es: batido | fr: beaten, égorger | de: beaten, schlachten 1Kgs 10:16; 1Kgs 10:17; 2Chr 9:15; 2Chr 9:16

שְׁחִיטָה H7821 N-fsc (1×)

Slaughtering of, a nominal form describing the ritual act of slaying Passover lambs

Chronicles records a crisis during Hezekiah's Passover: many worshipers were ceremonially unclean, so the Levites took responsibility for 'the slaughtering of the Passover lambs' on their behalf. This construct phrase turns the verbal action (slaughtering) into a nominal concept (the act of slaughtering). The Passover ritual required specific procedures for killing and preparing the lamb, and this noun captures that technical sacrificial action. Who performed the slaughter mattered—hence the Levites' intervention.

(1×) Found in 2 Chronicles 30:17 describing Levitical assistance to ceremonially unclean Israelites during Hezekiah's Passover. The construct phrase 'slaughtering of the Passover-lambs' (שְׁחִיטַת הַפְּסָחִים) treats the ritual act as a discrete event requiring qualified personnel. Spanish uses 'degollamiento de' (the slitting-of-throat of), French and German preserve the Hebrew original, perhaps reflecting the term's technical liturgical nature. The vocabulary is cultic and procedural, not metaphorical. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: slaughtering-of | es: degollamiento-de | fr: [שחיטת] | de: [שחיטת] 2Chr 30:17

שְׁחִין H7822 Art / N-ms (13×)

A boil or inflamed skin ulcer; used of plague sores, leprous eruptions, and painful afflictions on human or animal flesh.

Denotes a painful, inflamed skin lesion — a boil or ulcer that erupts on the surface of the body. In Exodus 9:9-11 it appears as one of the Egyptian plagues, breaking out on both humans and animals. Leviticus 13:18-23 treats it as a potentially leprous condition requiring priestly examination. The 'boil of Egypt' (Deut 28:27) becomes a covenant-curse, while Job's tormenting sores (Job 2:7) and Hezekiah's life-threatening boil (2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21) show it as a mark of severe physical affliction. Spanish 'úlcera' and French 'boils' both capture the medical specificity.

boil, skin ulcer (13×) A boil, skin ulcer, or inflamed sore erupting on the body's surface. Covers the sixth Egyptian plague on people and livestock (Exod 9:9-11), leprous skin conditions under priestly inspection (Lev 13:18-23), the dreaded 'boil of Egypt' as covenant curse (Deut 28:27, 35), Hezekiah's near-fatal boil healed with a fig poultice (2 Kgs 20:7), and Job's agonizing full-body sores (Job 2:7). Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'úlcera,' German 'Geschwüre' — consistently point to a medical skin eruption rather than a wound from external trauma. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: boil, boils, in-the-boil | es: con-sarna, con-úlcera, con-úlcera-de | fr: [השחין], avec-boils, avec-boils-de | de: Geschwuere, [בשחין], [השחין] Exod 9:9; Exod 9:10; Exod 9:11; Lev 13:18

סְחִישׁ H7823 N-ms (2×)

self-sown grain, volunteer growth; grain sprouting from previous year's seeds without cultivation

This agricultural term describes grain that grows spontaneously in the second year from seeds fallen during the previous harvest, without intentional planting. Both occurrences appear in identical contexts: 2 Kings 19:29 and Isaiah 37:30, where God gives Hezekiah a sign. During the Assyrian siege, Israel will eat self-sown grain for two years, then return to normal agriculture in the third year. This phenomenon was well-known in ancient farming—enough seeds dropped during harvest to produce a viable (though smaller) crop the next season. The term parallels saphiach (aftergrowth). Spanish lo-que-rebrota (what resprouts) captures the spontaneous regrowth well. The sign promised survival without normal farming during crisis.

(2×) Grain that grows spontaneously from the previous year's fallen seeds, appearing in 2 Kings 19:29 and Isaiah 37:30 (parallel accounts). God promises Hezekiah that Israel will eat self-sown grain during the crisis years, then resume normal planting. Spanish 'lo-que-brota, lo-que-rebrota' (what sprouts, what resprouts) and English 'self-sown, what-springs-from-the-same' both emphasize the uncultivated, volunteer nature of this growth. The term signals miraculous provision—even without planting, the land would yield enough for survival. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: self-sown, what-springs-from-the-same | es: lo-que-brota, lo-que-rebrota | fr: [שחיס], self-sown | de: [שחיס], self-sown 2Kgs 19:29; Isa 37:30

שָׂחִיף H7824 N-msc (1×)

Paneled, describing wood covering or wainscoting, though the root is unknown and meaning debated

Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple includes architectural details that challenge interpretation. This adjective apparently describes wooden wall covering—either panels or wainscoting. The root is obscure, and scholars propose emendations based on context rather than etymological clarity. Temple architecture vocabulary includes many technical terms that appear rarely, making precise definition difficult. The overall picture is of elaborate wooden interior finishwork befitting a sacred space.

(1×) Appears in Ezekiel 41:16 within detailed temple measurements and descriptions. The phrase 'paneled with wood' or 'wainscot of wood' describes interior wall treatment. Some scholars suggest reading 'covered' instead, using a different Hebrew root. Spanish renders it as 'revestido de' (covered/lined with), treating the term as architectural finishing. French 'rameau' (branch) may represent a different textual reading entirely. The architectural specificity reflects Ezekiel's priestly background and concern for proper sacred space. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: paneled | es: revestido-de | fr: rameau | de: [שחיף] Ezek 41:16

שְׂחִית H7825 Prep-m / N-fpc / 3mp (2×)

pits, destructions; places or states of ruin and danger

This noun denotes pits or places of destruction, appearing twice in poetic texts. Psalm 107:20 praises God who 'delivered them from their pits'—contexts of mortal danger and ruin. Lamentations 4:20 describes how 'the breath of our nostrils, the Lord's anointed, was caught in their pits,' referring to King Zedekiah's capture by Babylonians. The term can mean literal pits (traps, cisterns) or metaphorical destruction. Spanish 'fosas' (pits/graves) and English 'pits' both preserve the image of deep, dangerous places. The word evokes entrapment, doom, and helplessness, requiring divine intervention for rescue. Both contexts involve desperate situations from which only God can deliver.

(2×) Places or states of destruction and danger, from which deliverance is needed. Psalm 107:20 celebrates God's rescue 'from their pits,' while Lamentations 4:20 laments the king being 'caught in their pits' by enemies. Spanish 'de-sus-destrucciones, en-sus-fosas' (from their destructions, in their pits) and English 'from-their-pits, in-their-pits' both convey mortal danger. The term functions both literally (traps, prisons) and metaphorically (ruin, death), always requiring divine or military intervention for escape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-their-pits, in-their-pits | es: de-sus-destrucciones, en-sus-fosas | fr: [בשחיתותם], de-fosse | de: [בשחיתותם], von-ihr-pits Ps 107:20; Lam 4:20

שַׁחַל H7826 N-ms (7×)

shachal – lion (poetic); a fierce, mature lion in wisdom and prophetic imagery

One of several Hebrew words for 'lion,' shachal belongs to the elevated poetic register and appears exclusively in Job, Psalms, Proverbs, and Hosea – never in prose narrative. It evokes the fierce, full-grown predator: God pursues Job 'like a lion' (Job 10:16), and the roar of the shachal is silenced when God breaks the teeth of the wicked (Job 4:10). The Psalmist promises the righteous will tread on the shachal and the young lion (Ps 91:13), and the sluggard protests there is a lion in the road (Prov 26:13). Hosea uses it twice for God's judgment on Israel – 'I will be like a lion to Ephraim' (Hos 5:14; 13:7). Spanish and French both render it simply as leon/lion, while German uses Lowe, with no further differentiation from other lion terms.

lion (fierce/mature) (7×) A poetic term for a lion, specifically evoking fierceness and mature power, used only in elevated literary contexts (Job 4:10; 10:16; 28:8; Ps 91:13; Prov 26:13; Hos 5:14; 13:7). It parallels other lion terms like 'aryeh and kephir but carries a distinct register of awe and danger. God himself is compared to a shachal pouncing on wayward Israel (Hos 5:14), while Job describes being hunted 'like a fierce lion' (Job 10:16). Spanish leon, French lion, and German Lowe show no lexical differentiation from other lion terms, but the Hebrew poetic tradition reserves shachal for contexts of dread and divine power. LIONS AND CUBS

en: a-fierce-lion, a-lion, like-lion | es: como-león, león, león-joven | fr: lion | de: [כשחל], [שחל], der-Löwe Job 4:10; Job 10:16; Job 28:8; Ps 91:13; Prov 26:13

שְׁחֵלֶת H7827 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

Onycha, an aromatic ingredient in the holy incense, possibly from mollusk opercula

God's instructions for tabernacle worship included a specialized incense recipe, one component being this mysterious substance. Traditional identification points to onycha—the 'fingernail' or operculum of certain mollusks, which when burned produces a pungent aromatic smoke. Ancient Near Eastern perfumery employed various exotic materials, and shell-derived aromatics were valued. The Hebrew name may relate to a root for blackness, perhaps describing the darkened state of the processed operculum. Incense-making was both science and sacred art.

(1×) Found in Exodus 30:34 among four ingredients for the sanctuary incense. Listed alongside stacte and galbanum, onycha contributes to the complex aromatic profile reserved exclusively for worship. Ancient versions (Greek onyx, Latin onycha) support the mollusk-operculum identification, though one scholar proposes amber as an alternative. Spanish 'ónica' and German 'Muschel' (shell/mussel) follow the traditional understanding. The rarity of the term matches the exclusivity of the holy incense formula. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-onycha | es: y-ónica | fr: et-onycha | de: und-Muschel Exod 30:34

שַׁחַף H7828 Art / N-ms (2×)

sea gull, possibly tern; unclean water bird forbidden as food

This bird appears in the Levitical dietary laws listing unclean birds. Both Leviticus 11:16 and Deuteronomy 14:15 include it among forbidden fowl. Scholars identify it as some type of sea bird, most likely a gull or tern, based on the root suggesting a slender, attenuated body. Ancient and modern translators differ on the exact species, but agree it designates a coastal or aquatic bird unsuitable for Israelite consumption. The multilingual consistency ('sea-gull,' 'gaviota,' 'mer-gull') reflects scholarly consensus on the general category. The prohibition categorizes it with other birds of prey or scavengers, deemed unclean by Torah standards.

(2×) An unclean water bird, probably a sea gull or tern, listed in Leviticus 11:16 and Deuteronomy 14:15 among prohibited fowl. The identification rests on the root suggesting a slender body and the bird's association with water. Spanish 'la-gaviota' (the seagull) and English 'the-sea-gull, the-seagull' show translational consistency. The bird's inclusion in dietary restrictions placed it among scavengers or birds of prey, categories Torah deemed unsuitable for Israelite food. The exact species matters less than the ritual category: unclean, therefore forbidden. LIVING CREATURES

en: the-sea-gull, the-seagull | es: la-gaviota | fr: le-mer-gull, le-seagull | de: der-Meer-gull, der-seagull Lev 11:16; Deut 14:15

שַׁחֶפֶת H7829 Prep-b (2×)

consumption, wasting disease; chronic illness causing physical deterioration

This medical term describes a wasting disease or consumption, likely tuberculosis or similar chronic respiratory/systemic illness causing progressive deterioration. Both occurrences appear in covenant curse lists: Leviticus 26:16 and Deuteronomy 28:22 threaten this disease as punishment for disobedience. The term emphasizes gradual wasting away rather than sudden death. Ancient Israel knew such diseases well, though lacked modern diagnostic categories. Spanish tisis (tuberculosis/consumption) and French/English 'wasting disease/consumption' all denote chronic, debilitating illness. These curse lists use specific, feared diseases to emphasize covenant consequences—rebellion brings not just hardship but specific, dreaded afflictions.

(2×) A chronic wasting disease, probably consumption or tuberculosis, appearing in Leviticus 26:16 and Deuteronomy 28:22 as covenant curses. The disease causes gradual physical deterioration and weakness. Spanish 'tisis' (consumption/TB) and English 'wasting-disease, consumption' identify the progressive, debilitating nature. Both contexts threaten this specific affliction as divine judgment for covenant violation, showing ancient Israel's awareness of chronic diseases as particularly feared fates. The specificity intensifies the curse—not just illness, but this particular wasting condition. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: the-consumption, with-wasting-disease | es: con-tisis, la-tisis | fr: avec-wasting-maladie, le-consumption | de: der-consumption, mit-wasting-Krankheit Lev 26:16; Deut 28:22

שַׁחַץ H7830 N-ms (2×)

pride, dignity, majesty; impressive, noble bearing or character

This noun denotes pride, dignity, or majestic bearing, used positively in Job to describe noble beasts. Job 28:8 speaks of 'the proud beasts' (literally 'sons of pride') who have not trodden the path to wisdom—magnificent wild animals like lions. Job 41:34 describes Leviathan as 'king over all the sons of pride,' ruling over the most majestic creatures. The term conveys impressive, dignified strength rather than sinful arrogance. Spanish orgullo (pride) can carry both positive nobility and negative arrogance depending on context; here the sense is majesty. These 'sons of pride' are creation's most imposing animals, yet even they pale before divine wisdom and power.

(2×) Majestic pride or dignity characterizing noble wild beasts in Job 28:8 and 41:34. The phrase 'sons of pride' designates impressively fierce, dignified animals—likely lions and similar apex predators. Job 28:8 notes even these proud beasts haven't accessed wisdom's path, while 41:34 makes Leviathan 'king over all sons of pride.' Spanish 'orgullo' (pride) and the Hebrew carry positive connotations of majesty and impressive bearing, not sinful arrogance. These creatures represent creation's most magnificent animals, yet remain beneath God's wisdom and Leviathan's mythic power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pride | es: orgullo | fr: שחץ | de: [שחץ] Job 28:8; Job 41:34

שִׁחְצוֹמָה H7831 Conj-w / N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Shahazumah/Shahazimah; town in Issachar's territory, variant spellings in manuscripts

This place name appears in Joshua 19:22 within Issachar's tribal boundary list. The name appears with variant spellings in different manuscripts (Shahazumah in the ketiv, Shahazimah in the qere), reflecting scribal uncertainty or dialectal variation. Ancient versions also struggled with the name, the Septuagint rendering it variously. The exact location remains unknown, though it lay within Issachar's allotted territory. Such textual variants in geographic names are common where oral traditions and different scribal schools preserved names with slight phonetic differences. The multilingual sources reflect this uncertainty by preserving both variants. The town's significance lies in marking tribal boundaries rather than hosting notable events.

(2×) A town in Issachar's territory mentioned in Joshua 19:22, appearing twice in the verse with variant spellings (ketiv: Shahazumah, qere: Shahazimah). The repetition may represent scribal notation of variant readings. Multilingual sources preserve both forms (Spanish 'Sahazima,' French shows both variants), acknowledging textual uncertainty. Ancient versions also differed, suggesting the name's pronunciation or spelling was disputed or evolved over time. The location remains unidentified, its primary function being to demarcate Issachar's territorial boundaries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [and-Shachatsumah], and-Shachatsimah | es: [y-Sahazima], y-Sahazima | fr: [et-Shachatsumah], et-Shachatsimah | de: [und-Shachatsumah], und-Shachatsimah Josh 19:22

שָׂחַק H7832 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (36×)

To laugh, play, celebrate; in Qal, to laugh in scorn or joy; in Piel, to play, sport, make merry, or perform.

Sachaq captures the full spectrum from derisive laughter to joyful celebration and exuberant play. When God laughs at the wicked in Psalm 2:4, the verb drips with sovereign contempt — yet the same root describes David dancing before the ark (2 Sam 6:21) and children playing in the streets. The multilingual evidence splits revealingly: Spanish distinguishes burlarse ('to mock') from jugar ('to play') and celebrar ('to celebrate'), while French similarly separates rire ('to laugh') from jouer ('to play') and competer ('to compete'). The Piel stem carries the physical, performative senses — sport, entertainment, festive music-making — while the Qal ranges from mocking contempt to pure delight, proving that laughter itself is morally neutral in Hebrew; context determines whether it wounds or heals.

1. laugh at, mock, scorn (13×) Qal: to laugh at in derision, mock, or scorn — the largest sense cluster at 13 occurrences. Used of contemptuous laughter directed at a person or thing deemed insignificant. God laughs at the wicked (Ps 2:4; 59:8), the righteous laugh at the downfall of the arrogant (Ps 52:8), and Job's former inferiors now mock him (Job 30:1). The figurative extension to fearlessness is notable: the war-horse 'laughs at' fear (Job 39:22), and the noble wife 'laughs at' the future (Prov 31:25). Spanish burlarse and se ríe both confirm the derisive tone, while German and French leave these untranslated, suggesting the contempt nuance resists easy equivalence. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: and-he-laughs, and-laughing, and-she-laughs | es: Se-ríe, se-burlaron, se-reirán | fr: et-rire, ils-ont-ri, jouer | de: [וישחק], [ושחק], [ותשחק] Job 30:1; Job 39:7; Job 39:18; Job 39:22; Job 41:29

2. play, sport, frolic (8×) Piel: to play, sport, or compete physically — 8 occurrences covering children's play, athletic contest, and animal play. Samson is brought out 'to play' (entertain) before the Philistines (Judg 16:25); Abner proposes that young men 'compete' before the commanders (2 Sam 2:14); Leviathan plays in the sea (Ps 104:26; Job 40:20). Spanish jugar and jugando consistently select game/sport vocabulary here, while French competer appears for the martial-contest nuance, marking a clear boundary from the laughter senses. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: Will-you-play-, and-let-him-amuse, and-let-them-compete | es: juega-, jugando, para-jugar | fr: et-que-eux-compete, et-que-lui-amuse, rire | de: [התשחק], [ישחקו], [משחקים] Judg 16:25; 2Sam 2:14; Job 40:20; Job 41:5; Ps 104:26

3. celebrate, make merry (8×) Piel: to celebrate with music, dancing, and festive joy — 8 occurrences, concentrated in the David narratives. David and all Israel celebrate before the ark with instruments (2 Sam 6:5; 1 Chr 13:8), and David defends his dancing 'before the LORD' (2 Sam 6:21). The women celebrate Saul's and David's victories (1 Sam 18:7). Spanish celebraban and tocaban ('they played instruments') both surface, revealing that this sense fuses bodily movement with musical performance in communal worship — a meaning neither 'laugh' nor 'play' alone captures in English. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: and-I-will-celebrate, and-celebrating, celebrating | es: celebraban, jugando, las-que-tocaban | fr: [ומשחק], [משחקים], celebrating | de: [ומשחק], [משחקים], celebrating 1Sam 18:7; 2Sam 6:5; 2Sam 6:21; 1Chr 13:8; 1Chr 15:29

4. laugh with joy (5×) Qal: to laugh or smile with joy, pleasure, or relief — 5 occurrences where the laughter is warm rather than derisive. Job recalls when he 'smiled' at people in their darkest moments (Job 29:24); personified Wisdom 'laughs' when calamity arrives (Prov 1:26), but the laughter is vindication rather than cruelty. Ecclesiastes names 'a time to laugh' alongside 'a time to weep' (Eccl 3:4). Spanish me reía and French rire both use simple 'laugh' vocabulary without the scorn coloring, and the prepositions shift from hostile (al 'against') to neutral or temporal. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: I-smiled, in-amusement-of, to-laugh | es: Me-reía, en-la-diversión-de, me-reiré | fr: dans-amusement-de, rire, à-rire | de: [אשחק], [לשחוק], [תשחק] Judg 16:27; Job 5:22; Job 29:24; Prov 1:26; Eccl 3:4

5. (1×) Piel: to jest or joke, possibly with a deceptive edge — a single occurrence at Proverbs 26:19, describing someone who deceives a neighbor and then says 'I was only joking!' Spanish estoy bromeando ('I'm joking') and English 'joking' both select lighthearted-deception vocabulary. This sense sits at the intersection of play and mockery: the laughter is a cover for real harm, making it a distinct pragmatic use of the Piel stem. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: joking | es: estoy-bromeando | fr: rire | de: [משחק] Prov 26:19

6. (1×) Hifil participle: to laugh in scorn or ridicule — a single occurrence at 2 Chronicles 30:10, where Hezekiah's messengers are 'laughed to scorn' by the northern tribes. Spanish riéndose ('laughing at') and English 'laughing' both treat this as derisive, but the Hifil causative morphology distinguishes it from the Qal mocking in sense 1, suggesting a sense of provoking or inducing mockery in others. The isolation of this stem form warrants its own entry. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: laughing | es: riéndose | fr: [משחיקים] | de: [משחיקים] 2Chr 30:10

שָׁחַק H7833 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (4×)

rub away, pulverize, beat fine; to grind or crush into powder or dust, whether incense, stones, or enemies

This verb describes the action of grinding something into fine particles or powder. In Exodus 30:36 it refers to pulverizing incense for use in the tabernacle. Job 14:19 uses it poetically: waters rub away stones, an image of slow, relentless erosion. Most dramatically, in 2 Samuel 22:43 and Psalm 18:42, David declares he beat his enemies fine 'like dust of the earth.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish moleré 'I will grind', French écraser 'to crush', German grind/beat) confirm the pulverizing action. This is total reduction—taking something solid and rendering it to dust, whether through patient grinding or violent crushing.

(4×) To grind into powder, pulverize, beat into fine particles. Used of grinding incense (Exod 30:36), waters wearing away stones (Job 14:19), and crushing enemies like dust (2 Sam 22:43, Ps 18:42). The verb emphasizes complete reduction to powder—not just breaking but utterly pulverizing. David's use against enemies is especially vivid: total defeat rendered as fine as dust, emphasizing the thoroughness of God's victory through him. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-I-beat-them-fine, and-I-crush-them, and-you-shall-grind | es: Y-los-muelí, Y-molerás, desgastan | fr: et-je-écrase-eux, et-pulvériser, et-tu—grind | de: [שחקו], und-du-soll-grind, und-ich-beat-ihnen-fine Exod 30:36; 2Sam 22:43; Job 14:19; Ps 18:42

שַׁחַק H7834 Prep-b (21×)

Thin clouds, skies, or heavens; rarely fine dust – from the root meaning 'to pulverize.'

Shakhaq evokes the thin, high veil of the atmosphere – whether as wispy clouds, the broad sky, or (once) the fine powder that results from grinding. The root means 'to wear thin' or 'to pulverize,' and the noun preserves both ends of the image: particles ground to nothing, and the gossamer cloud-layer overhead. In the plural (shekhaqim), it frequently parallels shamayim ('heavens') in the great theophanic poems – God rides upon the clouds (Deut 33:26; Ps 68:34), his faithfulness reaches to the skies (Ps 36:5), and the clouds drop down rain at his command (Job 36:28). Isaiah 40:15 preserves the rarest concrete sense: the nations are like fine dust (shakhaq) on a balance scale, the merest powder before God.

1. clouds, thin clouds (12×) Thin clouds or cloud-layer, the visible atmospheric formations emphasized as delicate or wispy. Job 36:28 says the clouds 'drip moisture' and Job 38:37 asks who can number them. Psalm 57:10 and 108:4 praise God's faithfulness that rises above the shekhaqim. Spanish 'nubes' and German 'Wolken' render this straightforwardly. Key passages: Deuteronomy 33:26, Job 35:5, Jeremiah 51:9. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: and-clouds, and-the-clouds, clouds | es: las-nubes, nubes, sobre-las-nubes | fr: [ושחקים], [שחקים], et-nuée | de: Wolken, [ושחקים], [שחקים] Deut 33:26; Job 35:5; Job 36:28; Job 38:37; Ps 36:5

2. skies, firmament, heavens (8×) The skies, firmament, or heavens understood as the vast overhead expanse, used as a poetic synonym for shamayim. Psalm 89:6 asks 'who in the skies can be compared to the LORD?' and Job 37:18 marvels at God who 'spread out the skies, hard as a cast mirror.' French 'nuees' bridges cloud and sky, while Spanish shifts to 'cielos.' The singular in Psalm 89:37 identifies the sky itself as a faithful witness. Key passages: 2 Samuel 22:12, Psalm 18:11, Psalm 68:34. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: in-the-skies, in-the-sky, is-in-the-skies | es: a-cielos, cielos, en-el-cielo | fr: dans-nuées, nuée, nuées | de: [בשחקים], [לשחקים], der-skies 2Sam 22:12; Job 37:18; Job 37:21; Ps 18:11; Ps 68:34

3. fine dust, powder (1×) Fine dust or powder, the most literal trace of the root shahaq ('to grind, pulverize'). Isaiah 40:15 compares the nations to shakhaq mo'znayim – 'dust of the scales,' a quantity so negligible it does not even register on the balance. This sole occurrence anchors the entire semantic field: clouds are 'ground-thin' vapor, and dust is the ground-thin residue of solid matter. Spanish 'polvo fino' and the image of scales make the metaphor vivid. DUST AND POWDER

en: and-like-dust | es: y-como-polvo-fino | fr: [וכשחק] | de: [וכשחק] Isa 40:15

שָׁחַר H7835 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

Has become black, describing skin darkening from disease or sun

Job's lament over his physical suffering includes this verb describing how his skin 'has become black.' Whether from disease, heat, or the ash heap where he sits scraping himself, Job's appearance has drastically changed. Blackened skin signals deterioration, pain, and social alienation. The verb belongs to a word family associated with blackness, giving Hebrew multiple ways to describe darkening—whether of skin, dawn (paradoxically), or other phenomena. Physical transformation externalizes internal anguish.

(1×) Appears in Job 30:30 where Job catalogs his physical and social collapse. The perfect tense 'has become black' indicates completed action with ongoing result—his skin is now black and remains so. The root appears in related forms meaning black, blackness, coal.

Spanish 'ennegreció' (blackened) and French/German preservations of the Hebrew all capture the state-change from normal skin tone to darkened deterioration, whether from burning fever, exposure, or disease. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: has-become-black | es: ennegreció | fr: שחר | de: [שחר] Job 30:30

שָׁחַר H7836 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (12×)

To seek eagerly, search diligently; to rise early in pursuit of — denominative from 'dawn'

The verb שָׁחַר is denominative from שַׁחַר ('dawn'), carrying the vivid connotation of rising at first light to pursue something with urgency. In its dominant Piel form it most often describes seeking God earnestly — 'O God, You are my God; earnestly I seek You' (Ps 63:1) — but also covers diligent pursuit of discipline (Prov 13:24) and wild donkeys seeking prey at daybreak (Job 24:5). The dawn-metaphor gives it an emotional intensity that sets it apart from neutral search verbs like בָּקַשׁ or דָּרַשׁ. French 'chercher tot' ('to seek early') preserves the temporal nuance that other languages fold into adverbs of intensity.

1. seek eagerly (Piel) (11×) To seek eagerly or diligently in the Piel stem — the primary usage covering all finite forms, infinitives, and participles of intensified searching. Most characteristically used of seeking God with urgency and devotion: Psalm 63:1 ('I seek You earnestly'), Psalm 78:34 ('they sought God'), Job 8:5 ('if you would seek God'). Also extends to diligent pursuit of non-divine objects: discipline in Prov 13:24 ('he who loves him disciplines him early'), a lover's face in Prov 7:15, and wild donkeys foraging at dawn in Job 24:5. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'buscaras diligentemente,' 'madrugando'; French 'chercher tot' — preserves both the intensity and the dawn-association. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-seek-You-earnestly, and-You-will-seek-me, and-sought-earnestly | es: buscarás-diligentemente, lo-busca-temprano, madrugando | fr: [אשחרך], chercher, chercher-tôt | de: [אשחרך], [ומשחרי], [וישחרתני] Job 7:21; Job 8:5; Job 24:5; Ps 63:1; Ps 78:34

2. seek diligently (Qal) (1×) The Qal participial form meaning 'one who diligently seeks' — a hapax at Proverbs 11:27 where שֹׁחֵר טוֹב ('he who diligently seeks good') stands in parallel with בֹּקֵשׁ and דֹּרֵשׁ. Though semantically near-synonymous with the Piel, the distinct verbal stem marks this as a separate morphological category. Spanish 'el que busca diligente' and English 'he who diligently seeks' both render it as a substantive participle characterizing a habitual seeker of good. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: he-who-diligently-seeks | es: el-que-busca-diligente | fr: chercher-tôt | de: [שחר] Prov 11:27

שַׁחַר H7837 Prep-b (25×)

Dawn, daybreak; the first light of morning, used literally and figuratively for hope, splendor, or judgment

The Hebrew noun for dawn, denoting the moment when first light breaks over the horizon. Scripture uses it both literally – Lot fled Sodom as dawn rose (Gen 19:15), Jacob wrestled until dawn (Gen 32:24-26) – and in vivid poetic imagery: 'the wings of the dawn' (Ps 139:9), 'the eyelids of the dawn' (Job 3:9; 41:18). Prophetically, dawn symbolizes both hope ('your light shall break forth like the dawn,' Isa 58:8) and the brilliance of fallen splendor ('son of the dawn,' Isa 14:12). Spanish alba and French aurore consistently render this morning-light sense.

1. dawn, daybreak (24×) The literal and figurative noun meaning 'dawn, daybreak, first morning light.' Used with the verb alah ('rise') in narrative (Gen 19:15; 32:25; Josh 6:15; Judg 19:25) and in striking poetic figures: 'wings of the dawn' for the farthest east (Ps 139:9), dawn as a simile for hope and restoration (Hos 6:3; Isa 58:8), and 'son of the dawn' for the morning star's brilliance (Isa 14:12). Spanish alba/al-alba and French aurore consistently confirm the dawn meaning across all 24 occurrences. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: [the-dawn], dawn, like-dawn | es: [K:alba], al-alba, alba | fr: [השחר], [שחר], aurore | de: [[שחר]], [השחר], [כשחר] Gen 19:15; Gen 32:24; Gen 32:26; Josh 6:15; Judg 19:25

2. dawning (denominative verbal) (1×) A single denominative verbal usage in Isa 47:11, where the noun shachar appears to function as a Piel verb meaning 'to dawn' or 'break forth' – describing calamity dawning suddenly upon Babylon. The hapax verbal usage is rendered anomalously across translations (Spanish su-conjuro suggests incantation context), reflecting the difficulty of this crux. Most lexicons treat it as a denominative from the noun, meaning 'its dawning' in the sense of sudden arrival. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: its-dawning | es: su-conjuro | fr: [שחרה] | de: [שחרה] Isa 47:11

שְׁחֹר H7838 Adj-ms (6×)

Black, dark-colored; used of hair, horses, and skin complexion in ritual, prophetic, and poetic texts.

An adjective meaning 'black' or 'dark,' applied to physical color in three distinct contexts. In Leviticus 13:31 and 13:37, priestly law uses it to assess hair color in skin-disease diagnosis — black hair signals health. Song of Solomon employs it both for the beloved's self-description ('I am dark,' 1:5) and for the lover's locks ('his locks are black,' 5:11). Zechariah's vision features black horses (6:2, 6:6) as agents of divine purpose. The Spanish 'morena' for Song 1:5 captures the warmth of the term better than a stark 'black,' hinting at sun-darkened beauty rather than mere color.

black, dark (color) (6×) Black or dark in color, describing observable physical appearance. The Spanish rendering 'morena' (Song 1:5) versus 'negro' (Lev 13:31) reveals a semantic nuance: the word covers both neutral color description (hair in priestly diagnosis, Lev 13:31, 37; horses in prophetic vision, Zech 6:2, 6) and an aesthetically charged darkness (the beloved's sun-kissed complexion, Song 1:5; the lover's raven hair, Song 5:11). All uses share the core denotation of dark coloring. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: black, dark, the-black | es: Morena, los-negros, negro | fr: Noire, noir, noires | de: [השחרים], [שחורה], [שחרות] Lev 13:31; Lev 13:37; Song 1:5; Song 5:11; Zech 6:2

שַׁחֲרוּת H7839 Conj-w (1×)

The dawn, metaphorically youth or vigor, though 'blackness of hair' is an alternate interpretation

Ecclesiastes' call to enjoy youth before old age arrives includes this disputed term. Does it mean 'the dawn' (thus 'the dawn of life,' youth), or 'blackness' (thus 'blackness of hair,' vigor)? The two meanings seem contradictory—dawn suggests light, while blackness suggests darkness—but Hebrew שַׁחַר can relate to both dawn and black. Context clearly points to youthfulness however interpreted. The Targum reads it as black hair (marking prime of life), while others take it metaphorically as life's dawn. Either way, it represents fleeting vitality.

(1×) Found in Ecclesiastes 11:10 urging youth to rejoice 'in the days of youth and the dawn/vigor.' Paired with 'childhood,' the term marks life's early season before 'the evil days' arrive. Spanish 'la aurora' (the dawn) and French 'והשחרות' take the metaphorical time-of-day reading. German brackets it similarly. The semantic ambiguity (dawn vs blackness) actually enriches the image—youth as life's morning and as time of dark hair, both signaling vitality that will fade. DAWN AND TWILIGHT en: and-the-dawn | es: y-la-aurora | fr: et-והשחרות | de: [והשחרות] Eccl 11:10

שְׁחַרְחֹר H7840 Adj-fs (1×)

Swarthy, dark-skinned from sun exposure

The Song's beloved woman addresses the daughters of Jerusalem: 'I am swarthy.' This feminine adjective describes sun-darkened skin, with the intensive form suggesting very black or intensely dark. She attributes this to outdoor labor—'the sun has looked upon me'—implying her brothers forced her to work their vineyards while neglecting her own. Ancient beauty standards often prized lighter skin as a marker of leisure class status, so her apology and defiant 'but lovely' pushes back against such prejudice.

(1×) Appears in Song of Solomon 1:6 in the woman's self-description. The intensive form שְׁחַרְחֹרֶת suggests heightened darkness—very swarthy or deeply sunburned. The context of outdoor labor explains the tanning. Spanish 'morena' (dark-skinned woman), French 'basanée' (tanned/swarthy), German preservation all recognize this describes weather-exposed skin tone. The term conveys both physical description and social commentary—her darkness marks her as a field worker, not a sheltered daughter of privilege. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: swarthy | es: morena | fr: basanée, | de: [שחרחרת] Song 1:6

שְׁחַרְיָה H7841 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shecharyah, a Benjamite name possibly meaning 'Yahweh has sought' or 'dawn of Yahweh'

This personal name appears in Chronicles' Benjamite genealogies. Hebrew theophoric names often combine a meaningful element with God's name—here possibly 'dawn' or 'seek' plus Yah. Such names express parental hope, commemorate circumstances of birth, or declare theological conviction. The Septuagint's various Greek spellings (Saaraia, Saraia) show translators working to represent Hebrew phonology. Genealogical lists preserve these names across generations, anchoring tribal identity to ancestral memory.

(1×) Found in 1 Chronicles 8:26 among Benjamin's descendants. The conjunction 'and-Shecharyah' places him in the genealogical sequence. The name's etymology likely involves either שָׁחַר (dawn, seek) + יָהּ (Yah), though exact meaning remains uncertain. French and German bracket the original Hebrew rather than transliterate, treating it as requiring interpretive decision. These genealogical names functioned as more than labels—they connected individuals to family history and tribal inheritance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shecharyah | es: y-Sejarías | fr: [וְשַׁחַרְיָה] | de: [וְשַׁחַרְיָה] 1Chr 8:26

שַׁחֲרַיִם H7842 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shacharayim, a Benjamite name possibly meaning 'double dawn' or related to morning imagery

Another Benjamite in Chronicles bears this dual-form name, its plural or dual ending suggesting a doubled concept—perhaps 'two dawns' or 'twin mornings.' Hebrew names could use plural forms for intensification or to indicate pairs. The genealogical context provides no narrative about this individual, only his place in the tribal register. Such names survive as linguistic artifacts, their original significance sometimes obscured by time but their form preserved in family records.

(1×) Appears in 1 Chronicles 8:8 in Benjamin's genealogy. The conjunction 'and-Shacharayim' links him to the surrounding family structure. Septuagint renderings (Saarel, Seorein) differ significantly, suggesting Greek translators found the name challenging. The dual or plural ending (-ayim) is notable, though its precise significance here is unclear. French and German preserve the Hebrew form, acknowledging the name as a proper noun requiring preservation rather than translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shacharayim | es: Y-Sajaraim | fr: [וְשַׁחֲרַיִם] | de: [וְשַׁחֲרַיִם] 1Chr 8:8

שָׁחַת H7843 Conj-w (147×)

To destroy, ruin, corrupt, act wickedly; be corrupted or ruined (Niphal); be blemished (Hofal)

A verb of devastation and decay spanning both physical destruction and moral corruption. In the Hifil and Piel, it describes God's annihilation of Sodom (Gen 19:14), the flood's destruction of all flesh (Gen 6:17), and armies laying waste to cities. Yet it equally describes moral ruin: humanity corrupting its way on earth (Gen 6:12), Israel acting corruptly with idols (Deut 4:16). Arabic sahata ('extirpate') and Ethiopic sahata ('injure, violate') confirm the root's ancient dual trajectory of physical and moral devastation. The Niphal and Hofal passives complete the picture with states of being ruined, spoiled, or blemished.

1. Hifil: destroy, annihilate (83×) The dominant Hifil causative sense: to destroy, annihilate, or demolish people, cities, or lands. Abraham's intercession for Sodom (Gen 18:28-32), the destroying angel in Egypt (Exod 12:23), and the annihilation of Canaanite cities all use this form. Arabic ahlaka and Korean 멸하다 convey the same totality of causative destruction. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: I-will-destroy, and-destroyed, destroys | es: de-destruirlos, destruir, destruirá | fr: Je—détruire, détruire, et-détruisit | de: [ישחת], und-zerstoerte, verderben Gen 18:28; Gen 18:31; Gen 18:32; Gen 19:14; Exod 12:23

2. Piel: destroy, ruin (28×) The Piel intensive counterpart: to destroy or ruin with thoroughness. God destroys all flesh by flood (Gen 6:17, 9:11), and the cities of the plain are ruined (Gen 13:10, 19:13). While functionally overlapping with the Hifil, the Piel often emphasizes the completeness or intensity of the ruination. French detruisit and Spanish destruir render both stems similarly. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: He-destroyed, and-destroy, and-destroys-it | es: a-destruir, al-destruir, destruir | fr: détruire, détruisit, et-destroys-cela | de: Grube, als-vernichtete, um-zu-verderben Gen 6:17; Gen 9:11; Gen 9:15; Gen 13:10; Gen 19:13

3. Hifil: act corruptly, corrupt (16×) The Hifil used for moral or behavioral corruption rather than physical destruction: 'all flesh had corrupted its way' (Gen 6:12), Israel warned against acting corruptly (Deut 4:16, 31:29). Arabic afsada ('to corrupt') precisely captures this ethical sense, distinct from physical annihilation. The same stem carries both meanings, requiring context to distinguish. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: acting-corruptly, and-act-corruptly, and-ravaged | es: ciertamente, corromperse, corrompiendo | fr: certainement-corrupt, corrompit, détruire | de: Verderbende, [השחיתו], du-handeln-corruptly Gen 6:12; Deut 4:16; Deut 4:25; Deut 31:29

4. Piel: corrupt, pervert (7×) The Piel intensive applied to moral corruption or perversion: actively causing moral ruin. 'Your people have corrupted themselves' (Exod 32:7, Deut 9:12), and Ezekiel condemns the king of Tyre who 'corrupted his wisdom' (Ezek 28:17). Spanish corrompiste and the repeated Deuteronomic warnings show how this intensive form emphasizes willful, thoroughgoing moral degradation. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-she-corrupted, corrupted, has-corrupted | es: corrompiste, corrompisteis, se-corrompieron | fr: a-corrompit, a-corrupted, corrupted | de: [שחתו], [שחתם], corrupted Exod 32:7; Deut 9:12; Deut 32:5; Ezek 23:11; Ezek 28:17

5. Niphal: be corrupted, be ruined (6×) The Niphal passive-reflexive: to become corrupted or ruined. 'The earth was corrupt before God' (Gen 6:11-12) establishes the state that triggers the flood. Jeremiah's ruined waistcloth (Jer 13:7) and the marred potter's vessel (Jer 18:4) provide vivid object lessons. Arabic fasada (intransitive 'to become corrupt') mirrors this passive-stative meaning. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: And-was-spoiled, and-was-corrupted, it-was-corrupted | es: Y-se-corrompió, Y-se-echó-a-perder, corrompida | fr: cela-était-corrompit, détruire, et-détruire | de: sie-war-verdorben, und-verdarb, und-verderben Gen 6:11; Gen 6:12; Exod 8:24; Jer 13:7; Jer 18:4

6. Piel: spoil, waste (5×) A Piel nuance focused on spoiling, wasting, or squandering rather than violent destruction or moral corruption. Onan 'wasted' his seed (Gen 38:9), and Boaz's kinsman fears to 'ruin' his inheritance (Ruth 4:6). Jeremiah 13:9 uses the image of rotting a sash. This sense of letting something go to waste adds economic and domestic coloring to the verb's repertoire. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: I-ruin, I-will-ruin, and-he-corrupted | es: arruine, pudriré, y-derramaba | fr: détruire, et-détruire, et-spilled | de: [אשחית], und-Grube, und-verdarb Gen 38:9; Ruth 4:6; Prov 23:8; Jer 13:9; Amos 1:11

7. Hofal: be blemished, polluted (2×) The rare Hofal causative passive: to be rendered defective or blemished. Malachi condemns those who sacrifice a blemished animal (Mal 1:14), and Prov 25:26 describes a righteous person who gives way before the wicked as a muddied spring. Arabic mufsad (passive participle) and Korean 상한 ('damaged') capture the resultant state of impairment inflicted by an external agent. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: blemished, polluted | es: corrompida, dañado | fr: détruire | de: von-Grube Prov 25:26; Mal 1:14

שְׁחַת H7844 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (3×)

corrupt, fault—morally defiled or containing defects (Aramaic)

This Aramaic passive participle describes something corrupt, faulty, or morally defiled. Daniel 2:9 speaks of preparing a 'corrupt word' to deceive the king. Daniel 6:4 (appearing twice) describes officials seeking to find fault or corruption in Daniel but finding none. The term captures both moral corruption and technical fault or defect, whether in speech, conduct, or character. It appears only in Daniel's Aramaic sections.

(3×) The three occurrences involve corrupt speech intended to deceive (Daniel 2:9) and searched-for but non-existent fault in Daniel (6:4, twice). Spanish uses 'corrupta' (corrupt) and 'falta' (fault), while translations vary between moral corruption and administrative error. The 6:4 repetition emphasizes Daniel's blamelessness—despite hostile investigation, no corruption or negligence could be found, highlighting his integrity in pagan bureaucracy. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-corrupt, or-corruption | es: ni-falta, y-corrupta | fr: et-corrompre | de: [וְשִׁחִיתָה] Dan 2:9; Dan 6:4

שַׁחַת H7845 Prep-m / N-fs (23×)

Pit or trap-pit, often figurative for Sheol or the grave; rarely abstract corruption or destruction.

A noun meaning pit, used concretely for a trap dug in the ground and figuratively for Sheol, the realm of the dead. Ezekiel 19:4,8 pictures a lion caught in a pit, while Psalm 16:10 and Job 33:18-28 use the word for the grave itself. The overwhelming majority of occurrences carry the pit/Sheol sense; only in Psalm 16:10 and 55:23 does a secondary nuance of corruption or decay surface, rooted in the related verb meaning 'to destroy.' Translations across languages consistently render it as 'pit' or 'grave' (Spanish fosa, French fosse, German Grube), confirming the concrete image dominates.

1. pit, trap-pit (21×) A pit dug in the ground, often as a trap or snare, and by extension the pit of Sheol or the grave. Ezekiel 19:4,8 uses it for a literal lion-trap, while Job 33:18-28 and Psalm 30:10 employ it as a figure for death's realm. Spanish fosa, French fosse, and German Grube all converge on the concrete 'pit' image across 21 occurrences. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: a-pit, from-the-pit, in-pit-their | es: A-la-fosa, Al-foso, a-la-fosa | fr: [לִשְׁחַת], [מִשְׁחַת], dans-fosse | de: Grube, [בִּשְׁחָתָם], [לִשְׁחַת] Job 9:31; Job 17:14; Job 33:18; Job 33:22; Job 33:24

2. corruption, destruction (2×) An abstract sense of corruption, decay, or destruction, deriving from the root sh-ch-t 'to corrupt, destroy.' Psalm 16:10 famously declares God will not let His holy one see 'corruption' (Acts 2:27 picks up this sense in Greek diaphthora), and Psalm 55:23 speaks of being brought down to the pit of destruction. Spanish corrupcion and destruccion reflect this abstract reading. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destruction, the-pit | es: corrupción, destrucción | fr: fosse | de: Grube, der-Grube Ps 16:10; Ps 55:23

שַׁט H7846 N-mp (1×)

The rebels, those who turn aside from proper worship, though textual difficulties persist

Hosea's rebuke mentions 'the rebels' who have engaged in deep apostasy. The term relates to turning aside or deviating from the right path. The plural form characterizes a group defined by their rebellion against covenant faithfulness. Prophetic vocabulary for sin includes rich variety—rebellion, transgression, iniquity, apostasy—each with slightly different nuances. This particular term emphasizes the active choice to deviate, the willful turning from what is right toward what is forbidden.

(1×) Found in Hosea 5:2 describing those who have corrupted Israel's worship. The plural construct 'the rebels' (שַׁטֵּים) marks them as a definable group. Spanish 'desviados' (those who have deviated/strayed) captures the sense of leaving the proper path. French 'pécheur' (sinner) is more general, German brackets the Hebrew. The vocabulary reflects Hosea's sustained metaphor of covenant relationship—rebellion is like adultery, a deliberate turning from the faithful partner. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: the-rebels | es: desviados | fr: pécheur | de: [שִׁטִּים] Hos 5:2

שָׂטָה H7847 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (6×)

To turn aside, go astray — especially of marital infidelity or moral deviation

The verb שָׂטָה appears only six times in the Hebrew Bible, but its contexts are vivid and memorable. Four occurrences belong to the Numbers 5 sotah ritual, where a wife 'goes astray' in marital unfaithfulness — the very name of the ritual derives from this root. The remaining two appear in Proverbs, where a young man is warned to 'turn aside' from the path of the seductive woman (4:15) and not to let his heart 'turn toward' her ways (7:25). The Aramaic cognate סְטָא and Ethiopic parallels confirm the core meaning of deviation from a right path. Hindi 'bhaTak-jaae' (wander off) beautifully captures the root's blend of physical straying and moral wandering.

1. go astray, deviate (morally/sexually) (4×) To go astray morally or sexually, deviating from the path of fidelity, especially in the context of marital unfaithfulness. All four occurrences appear in Numbers 5:12, 19, 20, 29 — the sotah ordeal for a wife suspected of infidelity. The phrase 'goes astray while under her husband' (תִּשְׂטֶה תַּחַת אִישָׁהּ) makes the marital-fidelity dimension explicit. Spanish 'se desvia/se desvie' (deviate) and Hindi 'bhaTak-jaae' (wander off) both encode the moral dimension of straying from a binding relationship, not merely physical movement. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: goes-astray, you-went-astray | es: se-desvía, se-desvíe, te-desviaste | fr: goes-astray, tu-alla-astray | de: du-ging-astray, geht-astray Num 5:12; Num 5:19; Num 5:20; Num 5:29

2. turn aside, turn away (physical/directional) (2×) To turn aside or turn away in a more neutral, directional sense — commanding or urging physical and moral avoidance of a harmful path. In Proverbs 4:15 the father commands his son to 'turn away' (שְׂטֵה) from the way of the wicked, and in 7:25 he warns not to let the heart 'turn aside' toward the adulteress's ways. Though moral overtones remain, the emphasis here is on deliberate avoidance and redirection rather than the passive straying of the sotah. Spanish 'desviate' (turn yourself aside) captures the volitional quality. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: let-turn-aside, turn-away | es: desvíate, se-desvíe | fr: שטה ,ישט | de: [ישט], [שטה] Prov 4:15; Prov 7:25

שִׁטָּה H7848 N-fs (28×)

acacia — a thorny desert tree whose durable wood was used for the tabernacle's sacred furnishings

Shittah (singular) and shittim (plural) name the acacia tree, almost certainly the Acacia nilotica or Acacia seyal that thrives in the arid wadis of Sinai and the Negev. Of its 28 occurrences, 26 appear in the Priestly tabernacle instructions of Exodus 25-38, where 'acacia wood' (atsei shittim) is the specified material for the ark of the covenant, the table of showbread, the altars of burnt offering and incense, the supporting frames and poles, and the pillars at the entrance (Exod 25:10, 13, 23, 28; 26:15, 26, 32; 27:1, 6; 30:1, 5). Deuteronomy 10:3 recalls Moses making the ark of shittim wood. The sole non-constructional use is Isaiah 41:19, where God promises to plant the shittah alongside cedar, myrtle, and olive in the desert — a sign of eschatological transformation. All target languages transliterate or use the botanical equivalent: Spanish 'acacia,' French 'acacia,' German 'Akazie.'

acacia (28×) The acacia tree (probably Acacia nilotica or seyal), prized in the wilderness for its hard, durable, insect-resistant wood. Nearly every occurrence specifies it as the construction material for the tabernacle's most sacred objects: the ark (Exod 25:10), the showbread table (Exod 25:23), both altars (Exod 27:1; 30:1), the structural frames (Exod 26:15), and their carrying poles (Exod 25:13, 28). Deuteronomy 10:3 confirms the ark's acacia construction. Isaiah 41:19 alone uses the tree as a symbol of God's power to make the desert bloom. Uniform cross-linguistic rendering as 'acacia' confirms a single botanical referent. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: acacia | es: acacia | fr: acacia | de: Akazie Exod 25:5; Exod 25:10; Exod 25:13; Exod 25:23; Exod 25:28

שָׁטַח H7849 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp / 3mp (6×)

To spread out, spread abroad; stretching something flat over an open area, used literally of drying and figuratively of divine expansion.

A verb meaning to spread out or stretch something flat across an open surface. Its most vivid use is in Numbers 11:32, where the Israelites spread out quail around the camp to dry them — the Vulgate's 'siccaverunt' confirms the drying purpose. In 2 Samuel 17:19 the woman of Bahurim spreads grain over a well to conceal Jonathan and Ahimaaz. The Piel intensification appears in Psalm 88:9 of spreading out hands in prayer. Job 12:23 offers a striking figurative extension: God 'spreads out' the nations, expanding their territory before bringing them low.

spread out, spread abroad (6×) To spread out flat, stretch abroad over an open area. The Spanish 'esparcirán' (scatter) and 'extiende' (extend) capture the two poles of the verb's range: dispersing objects across space (Num 11:32, spreading quail to dry; Jer 8:2, bones spread before sun and moon) and extending or stretching something (2 Sam 17:19, covering spread over a well; Job 12:23, God expanding nations). The Piel form in Psalm 88:9 adds intensity to the gesture of spreading out hands in desperate prayer. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: And-they-shall-spread-them, I-spread-out, and-spread | es: Y-los-esparcirán, el-que-extiende-a, extendiendo | fr: [וְשִׁטְחוּם], et-étendit, et-étendre-dehors | de: [וְשִׁטְחוּם], [שִׁטַּח], ausbreitend Num 11:32; 2Sam 17:19; Job 12:23; Ps 88:9

שֵׁט H7850 Conj-w (1×)

For scourge, a whip or flail used for punishment or driving

Joshua's farewell warns that if Israel abandons covenant faithfulness, the remaining Canaanites will become 'scourges in your sides.' The noun describes a striking instrument—a whip, flail, or rod used to inflict pain. The image is of persistent, painful harassment. What could have been removed becomes instead a constant torment. The scourge represents not just physical threat but the consequence of incomplete obedience. Military and agricultural vocabulary merges —the same term could describe a herding whip or punishment tool.

(1×) Appears in Joshua 23:13 within covenant warning about alliances with remaining nations. The prepositional phrase 'and-for-scourge' uses the lamed of purpose—these peoples will become tools of affliction. Spanish 'y para azote' (and for whip/scourge), French and German with '-scourge' all recognize the instrument of punishment. The parallel phrase 'thorns in your eyes' creates a body-focused image of comprehensive pain—front and side, eyes and flanks, all affected by disobedience. WHIP SCOURGE

en: and-for-scourge | es: y-para-azote | fr: et-pour-scourge | de: und-fuer-scourge Josh 23:13

שִׁטִּים H7851 Prep-b (5×)

Shittim; a place-name east of the Jordan, Israel's last encampment before crossing, and a wadi near Jerusalem

Shittim (literally 'the acacias') designates two locations in Scripture. The primary one is Israel's final encampment in the plains of Moab east of the Jordan, where the people sinned with Moabite women (Num 25:1) and from which Joshua sent spies to Jericho (Josh 2:1; 3:1). Micah 6:5 recalls the journey 'from Shittim to Gilgal' as a summary of God's saving acts. Joel 3:18 mentions a 'Valley of Shittim' near Jerusalem, likely the Wadi es-Sant.

(5×) A place-name meaning 'the acacias,' referring primarily to Israel's encampment east of the Jordan in the plains of Moab (Num 25:1; Josh 2:1; 3:1; Mic 6:5) and secondarily to a wadi west of Jerusalem (Joel 3:18). Multilingual glosses consistently transliterate rather than translate — Spanish 'Sitim,' French 'Schittim,' English 'Shittim' — preserving its status as a proper noun. The prepositional forms ('in Shittim,' 'from the Shittim') reflect its function as a geographic landmark in Israel's wilderness-to-Canaan narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-Shittim, in-Shittim, the-Shittim | es: Sitim, desde-el-Sitim, el-Sitim | fr: Schittim, dans-Shittim, de-le-Shittim | de: [הַשִּׁטִּים], der-Shittim, in-Shittim Num 25:1; Josh 2:1; Josh 3:1; Joel 3:18; Mic 6:5

שָׂטַם H7852 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 1cs (6×)

To bear a grudge, cherish animosity; persistent hostile feeling that may erupt into persecution.

A verb expressing deep-seated, enduring hostility — not a momentary flash of anger but a settled disposition of enmity. Esau's grudge against Jacob after losing the blessing (Gen 27:41) provides the paradigmatic use: sustained animosity born of personal injury. Joseph's brothers fear this same smoldering resentment (Gen 50:15). In the Psalms and Job, the verb shifts to describe relentless persecution: the psalmist's enemies hate him 'with angry fury' (Ps 55:4), and Job accuses God of turning persecutor (Job 16:9; 30:21). The German gloss's struggle to translate this word highlights its specificity — it is more than simple hatred; it is grudge-bearing with intent.

bear a grudge, cherish animosity (6×) To harbor persistent enmity, bear a grudge, or cherish animosity against someone. Possibly related to the root behind 'satan' (adversary), suggesting a disposition of opposition. The Spanish 'aborreció' (loathed) and French 'haïr' (hate) approximate the meaning, but the Hebrew carries a particular nuance of sustained, smoldering hostility. Used of Esau against Jacob (Gen 27:41), Joseph's brothers' fear of retaliation (Gen 49:23; 50:15), and Job's anguished perception of divine persecution (Job 16:9; 30:21). Psalm 55:4 adds the element of angry fury accompanying the grudge. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-persecute-me, and-hated, and-hated-him | es: Y-aborreció, me-odian, me-persigues | fr: et-haït, et-haït-lui, et-être-ennemi-moi | de: [וַיִּשְׂטְמֵנִי], [תִּשְׂטְמֵנִי], sie-bear-ein-grudge-gegen-mich Gen 27:41; Gen 49:23; Gen 50:15; Job 16:9; Job 30:21

שָׂטַן H7853 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3ms (6×)

To accuse, act as adversary; denominative from 'satan,' describing the role of legal or spiritual opposition.

A denominative verb from the noun 'satan' (adversary), meaning to act as an accuser or opponent. All six occurrences cluster in the Psalms and Zechariah, painting a courtroom-like scene of accusation. In Zechariah 3:1, the Satan stands at the right hand of Joshua the high priest 'to accuse him' — the infinitive construct captures the purposeful, adversarial stance. The Psalms use it of human enemies who repay good with accusation (Ps 109:4) and who function as hostile prosecutors (Ps 71:13; 109:20, 29). The consistent Spanish 'adversarios' and English 'accusers' confirm the legal-forensic register of this verb.

accuse, act as adversary (6×) To act as an adversary, accuse, or oppose in a quasi-legal sense. Derived from the noun 'satan' (adversary/accuser), this verb carries forensic overtones of formal opposition. The Spanish 'adversarios' and French 'accuser' preserve the courtroom flavor. In Zechariah 3:1, the infinitive 'to accuse him' describes the Satan's prosecutorial role before the divine tribunal. The Psalms deploy it for human enemies who relentlessly oppose the righteous: they are 'my accusers' (Ps 71:13; 109:20, 29), and their hostility replaces the love the psalmist showed them (Ps 109:4; cf. Ps 38:20). ACCUSE BRING CHARGES

en: accuse-me, my-accusers, the-accusers-of | es: los-adversarios-de, me-acusan, me-son-adversarios | fr: accuser | de: [לְשִׂטְנוֹ], accuse-mich, der-accusers-von Ps 38:20; Ps 71:13; Ps 109:4; Ps 109:20; Ps 109:29

שָׂטָן H7854 N-ms (27×)

Adversary, accuser; the Satan — a human opponent, legal prosecutor, or the celestial Accuser in God's court

The noun satan derives from the verb satan ('to oppose, accuse') and travels a striking semantic arc across the Hebrew Bible. In its earliest uses it names any human adversary: the angel of the LORD stands as a satan to block Balaam (Num 22:22), the Philistines fear David will become their satan in battle (1 Sam 29:4), and God raises up human adversaries against Solomon (1 Kgs 11:14, 23). In Job and Zechariah, the word takes the definite article — ha-satan, 'the Adversary' — and becomes a specific celestial figure who accuses the righteous before God's throne (Job 1-2; Zech 3:1-2). By 1 Chronicles 21:1, the article drops and satan approaches a proper name. Arabic shaitan and every major translation tradition (Spanish Satan/adversario, German der Satan) preserve the tension between generic opponent and cosmic Accuser.

1. the Satan, the Accuser (18×) The Satan — the definite, celestial figure who serves as accuser and adversary in the divine council. Always appearing with the definite article (ha-satan) in Job and Zechariah, this figure roams the earth and challenges the piety of the righteous (Job 1:6-12; 2:1-7), stands to accuse the high priest Joshua (Zech 3:1-2), and incites David to number Israel (1 Chr 21:1, where the article drops). Spanish el-Satan and German der-Satan preserve the titular quality, and the 18 occurrences make this the dominant Old Testament profile of the word. DEVIL SATAN

en: adversary, and-the-adversary, the-Satan | es: Satán, el-Satán, el-Satán! | fr: [השטן], [והשטן], [שטן] | de: [שטן], der-Satan, und-der-Satan 1Chr 21:1; Job 1:6; Job 1:7; Job 1:8

2. adversary, opponent (8×) A human adversary, political opponent, or military antagonist — used without the article in secular and military contexts. The angel of YHWH becomes a satan to Balaam (Num 22:22, 32), Solomon reports that God has given him rest from every satan (1 Kgs 5:4), and God raises up Hadad and Rezon as political adversaries (1 Kgs 11:14, 23, 25). Spanish adversario and French adversaire confirm the generic, non-supernatural reading. The range spans battlefield rival (1 Sam 29:4; 2 Sam 19:22) to divinely appointed obstacle. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: adversary, as-adversary, for-adversary | es: adversario, para-adversario, por-adversario | fr: adversary, comme-adversary, pour-adversary | de: adversary, fuer-adversary, wie-adversary Num 22:22; Num 22:32; 1Sam 29:4; 2Sam 19:22; 1Kgs 5:4

3. accuser (1×) An accuser in a legal or forensic setting — one who stands at the right hand of the defendant to prosecute. Psalm 109:6 asks God to 'set a wicked man over him, and let an accuser (satan) stand at his right hand.' The judicial framing — right-hand position, parallel with 'wicked one' — distinguishes this from both the celestial Satan and a military adversary. Spanish acusador and German Anklaeger ('accuser') isolate the courtroom dimension of the root's meaning. ACCUSE BRING CHARGES

en: and-an-accuser | es: y-un-acusador | fr: et-adversaire | de: und-ein-accuser Ps 109:6

שִׂטְנָה H7855 N-fs (1×)

Accusation, a formal charge brought against someone in legal or political contexts

Ezra records that enemies of the Jews wrote 'an accusation' against Judah and Jerusalem at the beginning of Xerxes' reign. The noun derives from the verbal root meaning to oppose or accuse, appearing here in political-legal usage. Ancient Near Eastern bureaucracy operated through written petitions and complaints, and this document represents official opposition to Jerusalem's restoration. The vocabulary anticipates the Satan figure's role as accuser in Job and Zechariah—prosecutorial opposition becomes personified.

(1×) Found in Ezra 4:6 describing written opposition to Jerusalem's rebuilding. The noun stands alone—'accusation'—representing a formal document of complaint. Spanish 'acusación' and French/German preservation of the Hebrew all treat this as technical legal-political vocabulary. The context shows accusation as bureaucratic warfare: when military opposition failed, adversaries turned to legal-administrative channels, filing charges with the Persian court to halt construction. LEGAL ACCUSATION CHARGE

en: accusation | es: acusación | fr: [שטנה] | de: [שטנה] Ezra 4:6

שִׂטְנָה H7856 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sitnah, a well name meaning 'hostility' or 'accusation,' marking conflict over water rights

Isaac's shepherds dug a second well in Gerar's valley, and again the local herders quarreled over it. Isaac named this well Sitnah —'hostility'—memorializing the conflict. Water rights drove ancient disputes; wells represented life or death for herds and households. The name's etymology connects to the root for opposing or accusing, the same root behind 'Satan' as adversary. Isaac's naming practice turns geography into narrative—each well's name tells a story of struggle or peace, conflict or resolution.

(1×) Appears in Genesis 26:21 in the sequence of Isaac's well-digging. After conflict over the first well (Esek, 'quarrel'), a second dispute prompts this name. The well itself becomes a monument to hostility —every time someone draws water, the name recalls the opposition Isaac faced. Spanish 'Sitnah,' French 'Sitnah,' German 'Sitna' all preserve the name as transliterated proper noun. The name's semantic freight (hostility) would have been clear to Hebrew speakers, making the well both resource and reminder. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sitnah | es: Sitnah | fr: Sitnah | de: Sitna Gen 26:21

שָׁטַף H7857 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (31×)

To overflow, flood, or sweep away; also to rinse or wash off. Used of literal water, metaphorical invasion, and ritual cleansing.

A verb whose primary image is rushing water that overflows its bounds. Isaiah and Jeremiah employ it as a powerful metaphor for invading armies sweeping across a land like a river in flood (Isa 8:8; 28:2). The Psalms use it for the overwhelming experience of distress, as when the psalmist cries that floodwaters have swept over him (Ps 69:2, 15). In a wholly different register, the same root appears in Leviticus for the domestic and ritual act of rinsing vessels or washing the body (Lev 15:11-12). This semantic breadth, from cosmic deluge to kitchen rinsing, is mirrored across languages: Spanish desbordante and inundar for the flood senses versus enjuagar for washing.

1. overflow, flood (Qal intransitive) (18×) Intransitive flooding: waters rising and overflowing their banks or boundaries, surging forth in abundance. Often metaphorical for overwhelming military invasion, as when Assyria is compared to the Euphrates overflowing and reaching to the neck (Isa 8:8). Also used of God's sweeping judgment (Isa 28:2, 15, 18) and literal waters gushing from the rock (Ps 78:20). Spanish desbordante and French inonder capture the intransitive overflow. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY

en: and-overflow, and-they-shall-overflow, flooding | es: arrastrarán, desbordante, e-inundarán | fr: [השוטף], et-inonder, inonder | de: overflowed, ueberfluten, und-ueberfluten 2Chr 32:4; Ps 78:20; Isa 8:8; Isa 10:22; Isa 28:2

2. sweep away, engulf (Qal transitive) (7×) Transitive engulfing: floodwaters or overwhelming forces actively sweeping over, carrying away, or submerging persons or things. The sufferer's perspective dominates: 'the flood would have swept us away' (Ps 124:4), 'let not the deep swallow me' (Ps 69:15). Song 8:7 uses it memorably of love that many waters cannot sweep away. Spanish arrastrar (to drag away) and French submerger mark the transitive, destructive dimension. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY

en: has-swept-over-me, rushing, sweep-over-me | es: arrastran, lo-inundarán, me-arrastra | fr: inonder, le-submergeraient., submerger | de: [ישטפוה], [תשטף], hat-swept-über-mich Job 14:19; Ps 69:2; Ps 69:15; Ps 124:4; Song 8:7

3. rinse, wash (Qal) (3×) Rinsing or washing an object with water, typically in ritual or domestic contexts. Leviticus 15:11 prescribes rinsing hands; 1 Kings 22:38 describes washing Ahab's chariot; Ezekiel 16:9 speaks of God washing Jerusalem with water. Spanish enjuagar and the convergence of washing vocabulary across languages clearly distinguish this practical cleansing from the violent flood imagery. WASHING AND BATHING

en: and-I-rinsed, and-they-washed, he-rinsed | es: Y-lavaron, enjuagó, y-enjuagué | fr: et-ils-lava, et-inonder, il-rinsed | de: er-rinsed, und-sie-wusch, und-ueberfluten Lev 15:11; 1Kgs 22:38; Ezek 16:9

4. be rinsed (Niphal passive of wash) (1×) Niphal passive of the washing sense: to be rinsed or washed with water, used of vessels requiring ritual purification. Attested in Leviticus 15:12, where an earthen vessel touched by one with a discharge must be broken, but a wooden vessel 'shall be rinsed.' The passive construction marks this as the receptive counterpart of sense 3. WASHING AND BATHING en: shall-be-rinsed | es: será-enjuagado | fr: devra-être-rinsed | de: soll-sein-rinsed Lev 15:12

5. be swept away (Niphal passive of flood) (1×) Niphal passive of the flood sense: to be swept away or overwhelmed by flooding forces. Daniel 11:22 uses it of armies being swept away before a rising power. Spanish serán arrollados (they shall be overwhelmed) captures the passive military metaphor, distinct from the ritual washing passive in sense 4. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY
en: shall-be-swept-away | es: serán-arrollados | fr: inonder | de: ueberfluten Dan 11:22

6. be rinsed (Pual intensive passive) (1×) Pual intensive passive: to be thoroughly rinsed or washed, indicating a more complete cleansing than the simple Niphal. Attested in Leviticus 6:28 regarding the bronze vessel in which a sin offering was boiled, which must be scoured and 'thoroughly rinsed.' The intensified stem signals a higher degree of cleansing required for sacrificial purity. WASHING AND BATHING en: and-rinsed | es: y-enjuagada | fr: et-rinsed | de: und-rinsed Lev 6:28

שֶׁטֶף H7858 Art / N-ms (6×)

Flood, torrent, overwhelming rush of water; used literally of rainstorms and figuratively of divine wrath or calamity.

A masculine noun denoting a sudden, overwhelming rush of water — a flash flood or torrent. Job 38:25 uses it literally of the channel God carves for the thunderstorm's deluge. But the word's most powerful appearances are figurative: Nahum 1:8 warns that God will make a complete end of his adversaries 'with an overflowing flood,' while Daniel 9:26 and 11:22 deploy it for armies that sweep through like floodwaters. Proverbs 27:4 pairs it with anger — 'a flood of fury' — capturing unbridled emotional force. The French 'inondation' and Spanish 'inundación' preserve both the literal and overwhelming-force dimensions.

flood, torrent, overwhelming flow (6×) A flood, torrent, or overwhelming rush of water, both literal and metaphorical. The Spanish 'inundación' and French 'inondation' confirm the core meaning of sudden inundation. Job 38:25 presents the literal sense: God directing the channel for the rain-torrent. Figuratively, it conveys irresistible destructive force — divine judgment sweeping away enemies (Nah 1:8), invading armies overwhelming a land (Dan 9:26; 11:22), and uncontrollable fury (Prov 27:4, 'a flood of anger'). Psalm 32:6 uses it as warning: pray before the flood of great waters rises too high. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-flood-of, and-with-a-flood, at-flood-of | es: Y-con-inundación, e-inundación-de, el-torrente | fr: [בשטף], [השטף], et-par-l'inondation | de: [בשטף], [השטף], [ובשטף] Job 38:25; Ps 32:6; Prov 27:4; Dan 9:26; Dan 11:22

שִׂטַר H7859 Conj-w (1×)

To side, describing lateral orientation in Daniel's symbolic beast vision

Daniel sees a bear-like creature raised up 'to one side' in his apocalyptic vision. The Aramaic noun indicates lateral position or direction—the beast tilts or rises on one flank. Visionary literature employs precise spatial vocabulary to describe supernatural images. The bear's asymmetrical posture may symbolize political or military imbalance in the empire it represents. Aramaic shares this term with later Hebrew and Syriac, all using it for 'side' in both physical and metaphorical senses.

(1×) Found in Daniel 7:5 within the four-beast vision representing successive kingdoms. The prepositional phrase 'and-to-side' (וְלִשְׂטַר) indicates the bear's orientation—it leans or rises to one side. Spanish 'y hacia lado' (and toward side), French 'et côté' (and side) capture the directional sense. The vision's details carry symbolic weight; the beast's posture might represent dominance in one direction, unstable power, or readiness to devour (the three ribs in its mouth). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-to-side- | es: y-hacia-lado- | fr: et-côté | de: [ולשטר] Dan 7:5

שִׂטְר H7860 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (25×)

An officer, official, or foreman; a subordinate administrator responsible for organizing, supervising, or enforcing orders

A term for subordinate officials who organize, administer, and enforce instructions under higher authority. In Deuteronomy, these officers serve alongside judges and elders in the civic administration of Israel (Deut 1:15; 16:18), mustering troops and addressing the army before battle (Deut 20:5-9). In Exodus 5, however, the same word identifies the Israelite foremen set over slave labor by Pharaoh's taskmasters – beaten when brick quotas fall short (Exod 5:14-19). Spanish distinguishes oficiales (civic/military officers) from capataces (foremen/taskmasters), reflecting the contextual shift between Israelite self-governance and Egyptian oppression.

1. officer, official (20×) A civic, tribal, or military officer who administers communal affairs, organizes the people, and enforces instructions alongside judges and elders. Prominent in Deuteronomy's administrative framework (Deut 1:15; 16:18; 29:9; 31:28) and the conquest narratives (Josh 1:10; 3:2; 8:33; 23:2; 24:1). Spanish oficiales and the Chronicles references to Temple and judicial officers (1 Chr 23:4; 26:29; 2 Chr 26:11) confirm the broad administrative sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-for-officers-of-it, and-his-officers, and-its-officers | es: como-oficiales, el-oficial, los-oficiales | fr: [והשוטר], [ושטריהם], [ושטרים] | de: [והשוטר], [ושטריהם], [ושטרים] Exod 5:10; Num 11:16; Deut 1:15; Deut 16:18; Deut 20:5

2. foreman, taskmaster (5×) A foreman or overseer set over forced laborers, specifically the Israelite foremen appointed by Egyptian taskmasters to supervise brick-making (Exod 5:6, 10, 14, 15, 19). These men occupied an intermediate position – answerable to Pharaoh's overseers yet responsible for their own people. Spanish capataces and the construct 'officers of the sons of Israel' (shotrei benei Yisrael) mark this as a distinct contextual sense: supervisors under oppression rather than administrators with authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-officers, officers-of | es: capataces-de, oficiales-de, sus-capataces | fr: officers-de, officiers-de, son-officers | de: officers-von, sein-officers Exod 5:6; Exod 5:14; Exod 5:15; Exod 5:19; Josh 1:10

שִׁטְרַי H7861 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shitrai/Shirtai; official over David's herds, name with variant spellings

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 27:29, identifying one of David's officials responsible for the royal herds in Sharon. The text shows variant spellings: the ketiv (written text) has Shitrai, while the qere (reading tradition) offers Shirtai, a simple transposition of letters. Ancient versions also varied in their transliterations. Such variants are common in proper names where pronunciation and spelling conventions differed between scribal traditions. The name's etymology is uncertain. His significance lies in his administrative role in David's extensive agricultural operations. The dual listing in modern texts reflects scholarly honesty about textual variants.

(2×) An official in David's administration responsible for herds in Sharon (1 Chronicles 27:29), with the name appearing twice due to ketiv/qere variation (Shitrai/Shirtai). The variants represent minor spelling differences preserved in manuscript traditions. Multilingual sources show both forms, acknowledging textual plurality. The repetition in verse 29 reflects the dual readings, not two separate people. His role managing royal livestock shows David's organized administrative structure, though we know nothing else about this official beyond his assignment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shirtai | es: (Sitrai), [Sitrai] | fr: [שטרי], [שרטי] | de: [שטרי], [שרטי] 1Chr 27:29

שַׁי H7862 N-ms (3×)

gift, tribute—a present offered as homage to a superior

This noun denotes a gift or tribute, particularly homage offerings brought to a superior power. The Psalms speak of nations bringing tribute to God (68:29, 76:11), while Isaiah 18:7 prophesies distant peoples bringing gifts to the Lord of hosts. The term emphasizes the tributary nature of such gifts—not exchange but recognition of sovereignty and submission. These offerings acknowledge divine or royal authority.

(3×) All three uses involve nations bringing tribute to Yahweh: Psalm 68:29 (to the temple in Jerusalem), 76:11 (to the awesome one), and Isaiah 18:7 (from distant Cush). Spanish uses 'tributo' and 'presente' (tribute/present), capturing the homage dimension. The consistent cultic context shows these aren't ordinary gifts but acknowledgments of God's supreme authority, with nations presenting treasures as vassals would to an overlord. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gift, gifts, tribute | es: presente, tributo | fr: [שׁ], cadeau | de: Gaben, [שׁ], tribute Ps 68:29; Ps 76:11; Isa 18:7

שִׁיא H7863 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

His height, elevation to the heavens as metaphor for pride and arrogance

Job's description of the wicked man includes hyperbolic language: 'though his height reach the heavens.' The noun means loftiness or elevation, here used figuratively for pride and self-exaltation. The image builds on vertical metaphors common to biblical poetry—the proud lift themselves up, the humble are brought low, God alone is truly exalted. Physical height becomes moral commentary. The wicked man's towering arrogance, Job argues, is temporary; his doom is certain despite his apparent grandeur.

(1×) Appears in Job 20:6 in Zophar's speech about the fate of the wicked. The possessive 'his height' with the following 'reach the heavens' creates an image of impossible vertical reach—a person trying to ascend to divinity. The term captures both literal elevation and metaphorical pride. Spanish 'su altura' (his height/altitude), French and German preservation of Hebrew all recognize the physical-metaphorical bridge. The exaggerated imagery serves polemic purpose: even cosmic-scale pride cannot escape divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-height | es: su-altura | fr: son-שׁיא-lui | de: [שׁיא] Job 20:6

שָׁוְא H7864 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Sheva/Shavsha; David's secretary, name with multiple variant spellings across texts

This name designates David's secretary or scribe, but appears with remarkable spelling variations across biblical texts. In 2 Samuel 20:25, manuscripts differ between Sheva (qere) and Sheva/Shia (ketiv). Parallel accounts elsewhere call the same official Seraiah, Shavsha, or Shisha, showing how the same person's name was preserved differently in various textual traditions. Such variation was common for administrative officials whose names might be foreign or less familiar to later copyists. The role—royal secretary—remained consistent even as the name's spelling fluctuated. Ancient scribes apparently struggled to standardize how this name should be written, resulting in the preserved variants.

(2×) David's secretary mentioned in 2 Samuel 20:25, with the verse appearing twice to reflect ketiv/qere variant readings (Sheva/Shia). Parallel texts elsewhere call this official Seraiah or Shavsha, showing extensive textual variation for the same person. Multilingual sources preserve both forms, acknowledging the manuscript plurality. The repetition signals textual notation rather than two people. His role as royal scribe/secretary is consistent across accounts, even though his name's spelling remained unsettled in transmission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (and-Sheva), [and-Sheva] | es: (y-Sheva), [y-Shia] | fr: (and-Sheva), [and-Sheva] | de: [and-Sheva] 2Sam 20:25

שִׂיאֹן H7865 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sion, an alternate name for Mount Hermon in Deuteronomy's geographical notes

Moses' geographical summary identifies Mount Hermon by multiple names, including Sion (distinct from Zion, Jerusalem's mount). The same peak could bear different names among different peoples—Sidonians called it Sirion, Amorites called it Senir. Such toponymic variation reflects the multilingual, multicultural landscape of ancient Canaan. Mountain naming often involved multiple layers of tradition as peoples conquered or migrated through regions. This Sion is clearly northern (Hermon's region), not southern (Jerusalem).

(1×) Found in Deuteronomy 4:48 defining Israel's territorial conquest boundaries. The appositional phrase 'Sion (that is, Hermon)' clarifies the identification for readers who might know one name but not the other. The name appears with consistent spelling across translations (Sion, Sión), distinguished from the Jerusalem Zion by context and sometimes vocalization. The text's ethnic glosses—what each people group called the mountain—reveal Moses' awareness of the region's cultural-linguistic diversity. ZION HOLY MOUNTAIN

en: Sion | es: Sión | fr: Sion | de: Sion Deut 4:48

שִׂיאוֹן H7866 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shion, a town in Issachar's tribal allotment, location unidentified

Joshua's distribution of Canaan includes this town among Issachar's cities. The name survives in the biblical record despite the actual site's later loss to memory. Ancient town lists serve multiple purposes—administrative, legal, liturgical—preserving territorial claims even when the towns themselves might be destroyed or renamed. Archaeological identification of biblical sites involves matching textual data with physical remains, but many locations remain uncertain. Shion joins hundreds of biblical place names whose exact locations await rediscovery.

(1×) Appears in Joshua 19:19 in Issachar's town registry. The conjunction 'and-Shion' links it to the surrounding territorial description. Septuagint versions (Siona, Seo) show Greek attempts to phonetically represent the Hebrew name. French 'et-Shion' and German 'und-Shion' treat it as standard proper noun, untranslated. These lists mattered for tribal inheritance rights, territorial boundaries, and administrative organization—each name marked land that belonged to specific families within Israel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Shion | es: y-Sión | fr: et-Shion | de: und-Shion Josh 19:19

שִׂיב H7867 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

gray-haired, hoary; aged person with white hair from advanced years

This participial adjective describes someone with gray or white hair from advanced age. First Samuel 12:2 has Samuel declare 'I am old and gray' as he addresses Israel, his gray hair validating his long, faithful service. Job 15:10 mentions 'the gray-haired and aged' among Job's friends' supporters, appealing to traditional wisdom of the elderly. The term emphasizes visible signs of age that command respect in ancient culture. Spanish cano (gray-haired) and the English 'gray, gray-haired' straightforwardly denote the physical characteristic. Gray hair symbolized experience, wisdom, and authority, making it rhetorically significant when Samuel and Job's friends invoke it.

(2×) Descriptive of people with gray or white hair from old age, appearing in 1 Samuel 12:2 and Job 15:10. Samuel uses his gray hair to validate his long leadership ('I am old and gray'), while Job's friends reference gray-haired elders to bolster their argument from tradition. Spanish 'cano, y-encanecido' (gray-haired, and grayed) and English 'gray-haired, and-gray' both denote the visible aging. The characteristic carries authority in both contexts—Samuel's proven faithfulness and the elders' accumulated wisdom, making gray hair a mark of credibility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gray, gray-haired | es: cano, y-encanecido | fr: et-gray, שׂב | de: [שׂב], und-gray 1Sam 12:2; Job 15:10

שֵׂיב H7868 Conj-w / N-mpc (5×)

elder(s); Aramaic term for the grey-haired community leaders, used as a technical title in Ezra

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to be hoary, grey-haired,' used exclusively as a participle functioning as a noun — 'elders.' It serves as a technical administrative title in the Aramaic sections of Ezra, referring to the Jewish community leaders who oversaw the rebuilding of the Second Temple. These elders negotiated with Persian officials (Ezra 5:5, 9) and received royal authorization to continue building (6:7-8, 14). The term parallels the Hebrew zaqen but belongs to the Aramaic administrative vocabulary of the Persian period.

(5×) Elders — a technical administrative title for the senior leaders of the Jewish community during the Persian period, derived from the Aramaic root meaning 'to be grey-haired.' All five occurrences appear in Ezra's Aramaic correspondence sections (5:5, 9; 6:7, 8, 14), always in construct with 'of the Jews.' English and Spanish translate transparently ('elders,' 'ancianos'), while German and French transcriptions reflect the difficulty of the Aramaic form. The term designates the authoritative body that directed Temple reconstruction under Zerubbabel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-elders-of, elders-of, the-elders-of | es: a-los-ancianos, ancianos-de, los-ancianos-de | fr: [ולשבי], [ושבי], [לשביא] | de: Gefangene, [ולשבי], [לשביא] Ezra 5:5; Ezra 5:9; Ezra 6:7; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 6:14

שֵׂיב H7869 Prep-m / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

From his old age, describing the condition affecting Ahijah's vision

The narrative explains that the prophet Ahijah could not see 'because of his old age.' The prepositional phrase links the disability directly to advanced years—his eyes 'stood still' (were fixed/dim) as a consequence of age. Biblical texts acknowledge aging's effects without euphemism: eyes fail, strength wanes, hearing diminishes. Yet old age also brings wisdom and authority; Ahijah remains a functioning prophet despite blindness, his word carrying divine authority regardless of physical limitation.

(1×) Found in 1 Kings 14:4 describing the aged prophet's condition when Jeroboam's wife visits in disguise. The phrase 'from his old age' (מִשֵּׂיבוֹ) identifies the cause of his blindness. The possessive suffix links the age specifically to him—'from HIS old age,' not old age in general. Spanish 'por su vejez' (because of his oldness), French and German constructions all preserve the causal relationship. Ironically, though he cannot see physically, Ahijah sees prophetically—God reveals the disguised visitor's identity. OLD AGE

en: from-his-old-age | es: por-su-vejez | fr: de-son-vieux-age | de: von-sein-alt-age 1Kgs 14:4

שִׁיבָה H7870 N-fsc (1×)

Captivity of, though likely textually corrupt for 'restoration' from the root for 'return'

Psalm 126 begins with 'When the Lord restored the captivity of Zion,' though the Hebrew word here is disputed. Most scholars suggest reading 'restoration' (שְׁבִית) rather than 'captivity' (שִׁיבַת) from a different root. The concept is clear—God reverses Israel's fortunes, bringing exiles home—but the exact vocabulary remains uncertain. Post-exilic psalms celebrate homecoming using multiple related terms for return, restoration, and reversal of captivity. The joy of return forms the psalm's emotional core regardless of textual details.

(1×) Appears in Psalm 126:1 at the psalm's opening declaration. The construct phrase 'captivity of Zion' (or 'restoration of Zion') marks the great reversal God accomplished. Spanish renders it 'cautividad de' (captivity of), treating the transmitted text as is. French 'retour' (return) and German 'captivity of' show divergent interpretive choices. The textual question concerns whether this is from the root for 'dwell/sit' or 'return'—both work contextually, though return fits better with exile/restoration theology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: captivity-of | es: cautividad-de | fr: retour | de: captivity-of Ps 126:1

שִׁיבָה H7871 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

During his stay, though likely textually corrupt for 'during his sitting/dwelling' at Mahanaim

The text describes Barzillai's provision for David 'during his stay' at Mahanaim during Absalom's rebellion. BDB suggests the word represents a textual issue—it should read 'during his sitting/dwelling' (from the root 'to sit' rather than 'sojourn'). The meaning is clear: while David resided as refugee at Mahanaim, Barzillai supplied his needs. The vocabulary of dwelling, sitting, sojourning overlaps in Hebrew, describing various kinds of temporary or permanent residence. Context makes David's status clear—he's in exile from Jerusalem, temporarily based across the Jordan.

(1×) Found in 2 Samuel 19:32 recounting Barzillai's loyalty to David during the coup. The prepositional phrase 'during his stay' (בְּשִׁיבָתוֹ) with possessive suffix links the time period to David's presence at Mahanaim. Spanish 'durante su estancia' (during his stay), French and German 'during his sojourn/stay' all capture the temporal-locational sense. The disputed root doesn't affect translation much—whether 'stay' or 'dwelling,' the meaning is David's time in that place. Barzillai's generosity during this period earned David's eternal gratitude. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: during-his-stay | es: durante-su-estancia | fr: during-son-demeure | de: during-sein-stay 2Sam 19:32

שֵׂיבָה H7872 Prep-l / N-fs (19×)

Gray hair, hoary head; by metonymy, old age itself, especially in the phrase 'a good old age.'

A feminine noun denoting the visible mark of aging — gray or white hair — and, by extension, the stage of life it represents. Jacob's anguished cry about bringing his 'gray hairs down to Sheol in sorrow' (Gen 42:38; 44:29, 31) treats the hoary head as a synecdoche for the whole vulnerable person. Leviticus 19:32 commands rising before the gray head as an act of honor. Yet the word slides naturally into a temporal meaning: 'a good old age' (seivah tovah, Gen 15:15; 25:8; Judg 8:32) where Spanish 'vejez' (old age) and German 'Alter' replace the hair imagery entirely. Hosea 7:9 offers a striking metaphor — gray hairs are sprinkled on Ephraim without his knowing, a nation aging toward death unaware.

1. gray hair (literal) (13×) Gray or white hair as a physical, visible feature of aging. Carries connotations of dignity, vulnerability, or authority depending on context. Jacob fears his 'gray hair' will descend to Sheol in grief (Gen 42:38; 44:29, 31); Proverbs 16:31 calls gray hair a 'crown of glory.' Spanish 'canas' (gray hairs) and French 'cheveux gris' maintain the concrete, bodily reference. Hosea 7:9 uses it as a haunting metaphor — gray hairs flecking Ephraim without his awareness, signaling unnoticed national decline. The word appears with construct forms and suffixes ('my gray hair,' 'your gray hair'), anchoring it to the person's body. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gray-hairs, gray-hair, gray-hair-of | es: canas, canas-de, canas-mías | fr: [שיבה], et-vieillesse, gray-cheveu | de: [לשיבה], [שיבה], [שיבה] Gen 42:38; Gen 44:29; Gen 44:31; Lev 19:32; Deut 32:25

2. old age (metonymic) (6×) Old age itself, used metonymically — the gray hair standing for the entire life-stage. Typically appears with the preposition be ('in old age') or in the set phrase seivah tovah, 'a good old age' (Gen 15:15; 25:8; Judg 8:32; 1 Chr 29:28). Spanish shifts entirely to 'vejez' (old age), German to 'Alter,' and English to 'old age,' confirming that the concrete hair-image has faded into a temporal concept. Ruth 4:15 celebrates a grandson who will 'nourish your old age,' where the focus is on a season of life, not a strand of hair. OLD AGE

en: in-a-good, in-gray-hair, in-old-age | es: en-vejez, tu-vejez | fr: [בשיבה], dans-gray-cheveux, dans-un-bon | de: [בשיבה], [שיבתך], in-alt-Alter Gen 15:15; Gen 25:8; Judg 8:32; Ruth 4:15; 1Chr 29:28

סִיג H7873 N-ms (1×)

retreat, withdrawal; dross, impurity removed from metal

This rare noun appears with two distinct senses in Scripture. The first denotes a physical withdrawal or retreat—someone stepping back or moving away from a situation. The second, more commonly attested, refers to dross: the impurities that rise to the surface when silver is refined, representing what must be removed to achieve purity. Isaiah uses this metallurgical image to describe Israel's corruption, while Proverbs employs it in wisdom instruction about removing impurity from silver. The term's dual meaning captures both spatial withdrawal and moral separation.

(1×) In 1 Kings 18:27, the word appears in a disputed text discussing Elijah's mockery of Baal's prophets. The LXX omits it, and some scholars view it as a scribal duplication. The Hebrew suggests a 'moving back' or 'retreat'—perhaps implying the pagan deity has temporarily withdrawn or stepped aside. The multilingual evidence shows translators struggling with this hapax legomenon, rendering it variously as 'gone aside' or 'occupation,' reflecting uncertainty about whether it denotes physical withdrawal or metaphorical distraction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gone-aside | es: ocupación | fr: allé-de-côté | de: gegangen-aside 1Kgs 18:27

שִׂיד H7874 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (2×)

plaster, whitewash; coat stones with lime plaster as protective or decorative finish

This denominative verb means to coat or plaster stones with lime, appearing in Moses' instructions for the memorial stones at the Jordan crossing. Deuteronomy 27:2, 4 commands Israel to set up large stones, plaster them, and write God's law on them once they enter the land. Plastering created a smooth surface suitable for inscription and protected the stones from weathering. The practice of plastering stones for public inscriptions was common in the ancient Near East. Spanish revocar and French/English 'plaster' all denote applying a coating layer. This act combined practical preservation with ceremonial significance—creating a lasting monument to covenant law.

(2×) To coat stones with lime plaster, commanded in Deuteronomy 27:2, 4 for the memorial stones bearing the law's inscription. The plastering served both to create a smooth writing surface and to preserve the stones. Spanish 'y-las-revocarás' (and you shall plaster them) and English 'and-plaster' describe the coating process. The repetition in verses 2 and 4 emphasizes the instruction's importance. This preparation enabled the law to be inscribed visibly and permanently, creating a public monument to covenant obligations upon entering Canaan. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-plaster | es: y-las-revocarás | fr: et-plaster | de: und-plaster Deut 27:2; Deut 27:4

שִׂיד H7875 Prep-l (4×)

lime, whitewash; calcium oxide produced by burning limestone or bones, used for coating stones or in metaphor for burning

This noun refers to lime or whitewash, a white substance produced by burning limestone or bones. In Deuteronomy 27:2-4 the Israelites are commanded to set up large stones and coat them with lime before writing the law on them—creating a durable, visible white surface for the inscription. Amos 2:1 uses it in judgment against Moab for burning the bones of Edom's king 'to lime.' Isaiah 33:12 compares peoples to thorns cut down and burned to lime. The multilingual glosses (Spanish cal, French chaux, with some transliteration) confirm this as lime/plaster. The white coating serves both practical purposes (writing surface) and carries symbolic weight (purity, permanence, and in burning contexts, utter consumption).

(4×) Lime or whitewash—calcium oxide produced by burning limestone or bones, used for coating surfaces. Deuteronomy 27 prescribes plastering stones with lime to prepare them for inscribing the law—the white surface making the text visible and permanent. Amos 2:1 condemns burning bones to lime, an act of desecration. Isaiah 33:12 uses lime-burning as a metaphor for thorough destruction. The substance represents both preservation (as plaster) and annihilation (as the end product of intense burning). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4300 WITH 3 SENSES

en: of-lime, to-lime, with-plaster | es: con-cal, hasta-cal, quemada | fr: [שיד], avec-plaster, chaux | de: [לשיד], [שיד], mit-plaster Deut 27:2; Deut 27:4; Isa 33:12; Amos 2:1

שָׁיָה H7876 V-Qal-Imperf.Jus-2ms (1×)

forget, neglect

This verb appears only once in the Hebrew Bible, in Moses's Song where he rebukes Israel for forgetting God. The word is textually complex—appearing in an apocopated imperfect form—and ancient versions differ. The Samaritan Pentateuch reads differently, and scholars debate whether this represents the root meaning 'forget' or comes from another root entirely. Deuteronomy 32:18 uses striking imagery: 'the Rock who begat you, you forgot,' making divine amnesia a profound act of covenant betrayal. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as forgetting, supporting the traditional understanding despite textual difficulties.

(1×) In Deuteronomy 32:18, the verb describes Israel's failure to remember YHWH as their creator and sustainer. The Rock metaphor intensifies the accusation—forgetting the very foundation of one's existence. Spanish renders it 'te olvidaste,' French 'tu oublia,' German 'du vergass'—all emphasizing the personal second-person failure. This is not mere absent-mindedness but willful neglect of covenant relationship. The memory language connects to the broader Deuteronomic theology where remembering God's acts is central to covenant faithfulness. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT

en: you-forgot | es: te-olvidaste | fr: tu-oublia | de: du-vergass Deut 32:18

שִׁיזָא H7877 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shiza (personal name)

A personal name appearing in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 11:42, identifying a man from the tribe of Reuben. The name appears among the list of David's mighty warriors, specifically as the father of one of these elite soldiers. Ancient Greek versions transliterate it as Saiza or Sizai, preserving the consonantal structure while adapting to Greek phonology. Like many biblical personal names occurring only once, the etymology remains uncertain, though it may be related to roots meaning 'look' or 'see.'

(1×) This proper noun identifies Shiza the Reubenite, father of one of David's elite warriors catalogued in 1 Chronicles 11. The multilingual evidence shows direct transliteration: English and Spanish preserve 'Shiza/Siza,' while French and German retain the Hebrew letters in brackets, indicating translators recognized this as an untranslatable personal name. The LXX variants (Saiza, Sizai) reflect attempts to render Hebrew sibilants in Greek. The name appears in a military context, embedded in Israel's heroic tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shiza | es: Siza | fr: [שיזא] | de: [שיזא] 1Chr 11:42

שִׂיחַ H7878 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (20×)

To muse, meditate, speak, or complain; covering the full arc from silent pondering to voiced lament and public discourse.

A richly layered Hebrew verb that moves seamlessly from the interior life of the mind to the spoken word. The psalmist meditates on God's statutes through the night watches (Ps 119:148), muses within his own heart (Ps 77:6), and yet the very same root describes public talk among those who sit in the gate (Ps 69:12) and the bitter complaint poured out before God (Job 7:11). This spectrum—from quiet pondering to vocal lament—is unusual among Hebrew verbs of thought. The French 'méditer' and Spanish 'meditar/hablar' helpfully split what Hebrew holds together: interior reflection and its eventual overflow into speech.

1. meditate, muse on (11×) To meditate, muse, or reflect inwardly—typically on God's works, law, or wonders. Psalm 119 alone accounts for most occurrences, with the psalmist declaring 'I will meditate on your precepts' (119:15), 'your testimonies are my meditation' (119:23, 48), and 'my eyes anticipate the night watches, that I may muse on your word' (119:148). The 1 Chronicles 16:9 parallel with 'sing to him' shows this meditation naturally tending toward expression. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE en: I-muse, I-will-meditate, I-will-muse | es: hablaré, meditad, meditará | fr:

[שיחו], et-méditer, méditer | de: [שיחו], ich-muse, ich-wird-muse 1Chr 16:9; Ps 77:3; Ps 77:6; Ps 77:12; Ps 119:15

2. speak, talk, converse (5×) To speak, talk, or converse about a subject—the outward, verbal dimension of the root. Deborah's victory song invites riders on white donkeys to 'tell of it' (Judg 5:10), Job commands the earth to 'speak' (Job 12:8), and Proverbs personifies wisdom as one who 'will talk with you' when you walk (Prov 6:22). Spanish 'hablar/hablad' captures the straightforwardly communicative register, contrasting with the contemplative sense. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: meditate, speak, talk | es: Hablan, habla, hablad | fr: meditate, méditer, שיח | de: [שיח], [תשיחך], meditate Judg 5:10; Job 12:8; Ps 69:12; Ps 105:2; Prov 6:22

3. complain, lament (2×) To complain, lament, or pour out one's grief before God—a specialized speech act of distress. Job resolves 'I will complain in the bitterness of my soul' (Job 7:11), and the psalmist groans 'evening and morning and at noon I complain and moan' (Ps 55:17). Both passages pair this verb with expressions of inner turmoil, marking it as vocalized anguish rather than neutral speech. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: I-complain, I-will-complain | es: me-quejaré | fr: méditer, אשיחה | de: [אשיחה], ich-complain Job 7:11; Ps 55:17

4. consider deeply, ponder (Piel) (2×) Piel intensive: to consider deeply, ponder, or deliberate with sustained attention. In Ps 143:5 the psalmist 'muses on the work of your hands,' intensifying the basic Qal meditation, while Isa 53:8 asks 'who considered his generation?'—a weighty, evaluative pondering of the Servant's fate. The Piel form signals that this reflection is thorough and effortful, not casual musing. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: I-muse, considers | es: consideraré?, reflexiono | fr: [ישוחח], méditer | de: [ישוחח], ich-muse Ps 143:5; Isa 53:8

שִׂיחַ H7879 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (14×)

Complaint or lament before God; deep meditation or musing; also ordinary talk or speech.

A richly layered noun from the root meaning 'to ponder, muse, complain.' In its most frequent sense, it is the raw, unfiltered cry of distress poured out before God – Hannah's anguished plea (1 Sam 1:16), Job's bitter lament (Job 7:13; 9:27; 10:1), and the psalmist who 'pours out his complaint before the LORD' (Ps 142:2). Yet the same word can soften into quiet meditation, as when the psalmist's 'musing' on God's works becomes sweet (Ps 104:34). Elijah uses it with gentle irony of a god who may be 'musing' (1 Kgs 18:27). In a single occurrence (2 Kgs 9:11), it simply means 'talk' – ordinary speech.

1. complaint, lament (11×) A complaint, lament, or grievance voiced in distress, typically directed to God. The dominant sense across Job (7:13; 9:27; 10:1; 21:4; 23:2) and the Psalms (55:2; 64:1; 102:1; 142:2), where suffering is vocalized as a formal plea. Hannah distinguishes her prayer from drunkenness by calling it 'the abundance of my complaint' (1 Sam 1:16). Spanish 'queja,' French 'plainte,' and Arabic 'shakwa' all confirm the grievance register. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: complaining, his-complaint, in-my-complaint | es: a-mi-queja,, con-mi-queja, en-mi-queja | fr: dans-mon-plainte-moi, dans-plainte, mon-complaint | de: [בשיחי], [שחי], [שיח] 1Sam 1:16; Job 7:13; Job 9:27; Job 10:1; Job 21:4

2. meditation, musing (2×) Meditation or musing – quiet, absorbed reflection rather than vocal grievance. In Psalm 104:34 the psalmist hopes his 'meditation' will be pleasing to God, a contemplative rather than anguished posture. Elijah uses the word with irony at Carmel (1 Kgs 18:27), suggesting Baal may be deep in thought. Spanish 'meditacion' and German 'meditation' reflect this reflective, non-distressed sense. MEDITATION MUSING

en: musing, my-meditation | es: meditación, mi-meditación | fr: musing, plainte | de: mein-meditation, musing 1Kgs 18:27; Ps 104:34

3. talk, speech (1×) Talk or speech in a general, non-technical sense. In 2 Kings 9:11, Jehu's companions ask about the prophet's 'talk' – what did that madman say? Here the word carries no emotional weight, just ordinary discourse. Spanish 'habla de el' and French 'son parle' render it as simple speech, distinct from both complaint and meditation. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: his-talk | es: habla-de-él | fr: son-parle | de: sein-talk 2Kgs 9:11

שִׂיחַ H7880 N-mp (4×)

bush, shrub, plant; vegetation of the field or wilderness, especially small woody plants

This noun refers to bushes or shrubs, the woody plants of field and wilderness. Genesis 2:5 uses it in the creation account: 'no shrub of the field was yet in the earth' before God sent rain. Genesis 21:15 describes Hagar placing her child under one of the bushes in the wilderness of Beersheba—seeking shade and perhaps hiding him. Job 30:4-7 speaks of outcasts gathering among the bushes and sheltering there, emphasizing their desperate poverty. The multilingual consensus (Spanish arbusto, French shrub/buisson, German Strauch) confirms this as wild, uncultivated vegetation. These are the marginal plants of unirrigated land, providing scant shelter but enough to hide a child or harbor the destitute.

(4×) Wild bushes or shrubs of field and wilderness, uncultivated woody plants. Genesis 2:5 uses it for pre-rain vegetation that had not yet sprouted. Hagar places Ishmael under a bush in the wilderness (Gen 21:15), seeking shade or concealment. Job 30 associates bushes with the desperate poor who shelter among them. These plants mark liminal spaces—neither cultivated garden nor barren desert, but the scrubland where the vulnerable and outcast find marginal refuge. BUSH SHRUB PLANT

en: bush, bushes, shrub-of | es: arbusto-de, arbustos, los-arbustos | fr: le-bushes, shrub-de, שיח | de: Strauch, [שיח], [שיחים] Gen 2:5; Gen 21:15; Job 30:4; Job 30:7

שִׂיחָה H7881 N-fsc / 1cs (3×)

meditation, complaint—mental dwelling on a subject, often Scripture

This feminine noun denotes meditation or musing, particularly on God's law. Psalm 119:97 and 99 celebrate Torah as the psalmist's meditation, the object of continual mental engagement. Job 15:4 uses it for 'complaint before God' or possibly meditation/prayer, though the sense is debated. The term captures focused mental attention, whether devotional meditation on Scripture or prayerful complaint bringing concerns before God.

(3×) Two occurrences are in Psalm 119, identifying Torah (v. 97) and testimonies (v. 99) as the object of constant meditation. Job 15:4 applies it to 'complaint/meditation before God,' possibly Eliphaz's critique of Job's prayer. Spanish 'meditación' appears consistently. The Psalm texts show meditation as delighted, continual engagement with divine instruction, while Job may involve either prayerful musing or complaint, depending on interpretation. MEDITATION MUSING

en: are-my-meditation, is-my-meditation, meditation | es: meditación, meditación-de-mí | fr: méditation, שיחה | de: [שיחה], ist-mein-meditation, sind-mein-meditation Job 15:4; Ps 119:97; Ps 119:99

שִׂיחָה H7882 N-fs (3×)

pit, trench—a dug hole or trap

This feminine noun denotes a pit or dug trench, often as a trap or danger. Psalm 57:6 and 119:85 speak of enemies digging pits to ensnare the righteous. Jeremiah 18:22 mentions pits dug to catch the prophet. The imagery consistently involves hostile trap-setting, digging concealed holes to capture or harm the innocent. The term appears in contexts of treacherous plotting and the need for divine deliverance from such schemes.

(3×) All three uses involve pits dug by enemies as traps: Psalm 57:6 (they dug a pit before me), 119:85 (the proud dig pits), and Jeremiah 18:22 (they dug pits to catch me). Spanish 'fosa' (pit/grave) and French 'fosse' align across contexts. The ketiv/qere variation in Jeremiah shows textual uncertainty between this word and a similar form, but the pit-trapping sense remains consistent across all passages. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: [K], a-pit, pits | es: [fosa], fosa, fosas | fr: [[שיחה]], fosse | de: [[שיחה]], ein-Grube, pits Ps 57:6; Ps 119:85; Jer 18:22

שִׁיחוֹר H7883 Art / N-proper-fs (4×)
Shihor; name of a water body on Egypt's border, probably a branch of the Nile or an eastern border stream
This geographical name refers to a water body associated with Egypt's border. Joshua 13:3 mentions it as marking Israel's southern boundary. 1 Chronicles 13:5 speaks of gathering Israel 'from the Shihor of Egypt to Lebo-hamath.' Isaiah 23:3 poetically refers to 'the grain of Shihor, the harvest of the Nile,' treating them as parallel. Jeremiah 2:18 questions why Israel would drink the waters of Shihor (in seeking alliance with Egypt). Traditional etymology derives it from words meaning 'black water' (perhaps dark Nile waters), though this is debated. The multilingual glossing often transliterates, showing uncertainty about its exact identity. It represents Egypt's frontier—a political and geographical marker of Israel's southern extent.

(4×) A water body on Egypt's border, probably the eastern branch of the Nile or a border stream. Used as a geographical marker for Israel's southern extent (Josh 13:3, 1 Chr 13:5). Isaiah 23:3 parallels it with the Nile, suggesting identification with Nile waters. Jeremiah 2:18 uses it symbolically for Egyptian alliance. Whether a specific Nile branch or a distinct stream, Shihor marked the boundary between Israelite and Egyptian territory, embodying both geographical reality and political symbolism. RIVERS AND STREAMS
en: Shichor-of, Shihor, of-Shichor | es: Shijor?, Sijor, Sijor-de | fr: [שחור], [שחר], [שיחור] | de: [שחור], [שחר], [שיחור] Josh 13:3; 1Chr 13:5; Isa 23:3; Jer 2:18

שִׁיחוֹר לִבְנַת H7884 Conj-w (1×)
Shihor-libnath (place name, likely a river)
A geographical name appearing in the border description of Asher's tribal allotment in Joshua 19:26. The name likely designates a river or waterway, possibly the Nahr ez-Zerqa south of Mount Carmel and north of Caesarea. Ancient Greek versions render it as 'Seion[r] and Labanath,' treating it as two separate locations or attempting to parse the compound name. The first element 'Shihor' may mean 'dark' or 'turbid,' a fitting description for a silty river, while 'Libnath' could relate to whiteness. Wilson and other geographers have proposed this identification, though certainty remains elusive.

(1×) This compound proper noun marks a geographical boundary point for Asher's territory. The multilingual translations consistently treat it as a place name—Spanish 'Sihor-libnat,' English 'Shichor-Livnath'—with the conjunction 'and' suggesting translators recognized this as a territorial marker preceded by another boundary reference. The LXX's separation into two terms (Seion and Labanath) may reflect an alternate textual tradition or geographical understanding. As a border description, it functioned to define tribal inheritance in the promised land. RIVERS AND STREAMS
en: and-in-Shichor-Livnath | es: y-en-Sihor-libnat | fr: et-dans-Shichor-Livnath | de: und-in-Shichor-Livnath Josh 19:26

שַׁיִט H7885 N-ms (2×)
rowing, oars; either the act of rowing or instrument for propelling vessels
This noun appears in two very different contexts in Isaiah, creating interpretive challenges. Isaiah 33:21 speaks of a peaceful Jerusalem where no 'rowing vessel' (ship propelled by oars) will pass, emphasizing security from naval invasion. Isaiah 28:15 is textually difficult; the ketiv (written form) uses this word in a phrase usually translated 'overflowing scourge,' though the meaning is disputed and some suggest emendation. The root idea involves lashing or whipping water, hence rowing. Spanish and French show the textual uncertainty with bracketed renderings. The term's maritime association is clearer in chapter 33, while chapter 28's usage remains debated among translators and textual critics.

(2×) Related to rowing or maritime activity, appearing in Isaiah 28:15 (textually uncertain) and 33:21 (clearly maritime). In 33:21, 'rowing vessel' designates an oared ship, contrasting with Jerusalem's secure rivers where no such warships will threaten. Isaiah 28:15's usage is disputed—traditional rendering 'overflowing scourge' may not reflect this word at all. Spanish 'remos' (oars) and the variant renderings show translational difficulty. The clearer maritime sense (33:21) establishes the word's connection to rowing and naval vessels. SAIL TRAVEL SHIP
en: an-overflowing, and-a-mighty | es: [azote], remos | fr: [[שיט]], [שיט] | de: [[שיט]], [שיט] Isa 28:15; Isa 33:21

שִׁילֹה H7886 N-proper-ms (2×)
Shiloh; enigmatic messianic term in Genesis 49:10, possibly meaning 'whose it is' or referring to a person/place
This remains one of Scripture's most debated words, appearing in Jacob's blessing of Judah: 'until Shiloh comes' (Genesis 49:10). Interpretations include: (1) 'whose it is' or 'to whom it belongs'—reading it as she-lo, 'that which belongs to him,' pointing to Messiah; (2) the place name Shiloh, prophesying the tabernacle location; (3) a personal name for the Messiah; (4) 'his son' from an Aramaic root. Ancient versions differed radically. The Targum read it messianically, the Septuagint as 'that which is reserved for him.' The verse occurs twice in Genesis 49:10, the repetition perhaps emphasizing the prophecy's importance. The ambiguity has generated endless scholarly and theological discussion about Judah's future and messianic hope.

(2×) An enigmatic term in Genesis 49:10 (appearing twice in the verse) within Jacob's prophecy about Judah. Traditional messianic interpretation reads it as 'whose it is' (i.e., to whom the kingdom belongs), pointing to a future ruler. Others suggest the place Shiloh or a personal messianic title. Ancient versions diverged wildly, showing early uncertainty. The repetition may emphasize the prophecy or reflect textual notation. Multilingual sources often transliterate ('Shiloh') or offer minimal glosses ('-'), acknowledging the term's interpretive complexity. The verse's messianic significance outweighs lexical certainty. DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, Shiloh | es: Shiloh | fr: -, Shiloh | de: Schilo Gen 49:10

שִׁלוֹ H7887 N-proper-fs (32×)
Shiloh — the Israelite cultic center in Ephraim where the tabernacle stood from the conquest to the early monarchy Shiloh is the proper name of the town in the hill country of Ephraim (modern Khirbet Seilun, roughly 30 km north of Jerusalem) that served as Israel's central sanctuary from the days of Joshua through the early career of Samuel. All 32 occurrences point to this single sacred site. Joshua established the Tent of Meeting there after the initial conquest (Josh 18:1), and the remaining tribal allotments were distributed from Shiloh (Josh 18:8-10; 19:51). It was the home of the young Samuel and the house of Eli (1 Sam 1:3-9; 3:21), and the site from which the ark was disastrously carried into battle against the Philistines (1 Sam 4:3-4). After that defeat, Shiloh evidently fell — a catastrophe Jeremiah invokes as a solemn warning to Jerusalem: 'Go now to my place that was in Shiloh... and see what I did to it' (Jer 7:12-14; 26:6-9). Psalm 78:60 remembers the abandonment of the mishkan at Shiloh. The spelling alternates between Shiloh, Shilo, and Shiloh in the Masoretic text.

Shiloh (place name) (32×) The proper name of Israel's central cultic site in Ephraim, home of the tabernacle from Joshua through early Samuel. Joshua stationed the Tent of Meeting there (Josh 18:1) and allocated tribal territories from it (Josh 18:8-10; 19:51). Samuel grew up at Shiloh under Eli (1 Sam 1:3-9; 3:21), and the ark was taken from there to battle (1 Sam 4:3-4). Its destruction became Jeremiah's warning to Jerusalem (Jer 7:12-14; 26:6-9); Psalm 78:60 laments God's abandoning the mishkan at Shiloh. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Shiloh, in-Shiloh | es: Silo, en-Shilo, en-Shiloh | fr: Silo, [בשילו], dans-Silo | de: Silo, [בשילו], in-Silo Josh 18:1; Josh 18:8; Josh 18:9; Josh 18:10; Josh 19:51

שִׁילֹנִי H7888 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)

The Shilonite — a gentilic adjective identifying someone from Shiloh, applied especially to the prophet Ahijah.

A gentilic adjective meaning 'the one from Shiloh,' used almost exclusively to identify the prophet Ahijah who prophesied the division of Solomon's kingdom. The definite article is consistently attached — 'the Shilonite' — marking it as a recognized epithet. Five of the six occurrences refer to Ahijah (1 Kgs 11:29; 12:15; 15:29; 2 Chr 9:29; 10:15), while 1 Chronicles 9:5 uses the term collectively for inhabitants of Shiloh who settled in Jerusalem after the exile. The spelling varies slightly between Kings and Chronicles, reflecting normal orthographic fluidity in Hebrew proper adjectives.

the Shilonite (6×) Gentilic adjective meaning 'the Shilonite,' designating a person from the ancient Israelite sanctuary city of Shiloh. The Spanish 'el shilonita/el silonita' and French 'le Shilonite' preserve the gentilic function. Primarily an epithet for the prophet Ahijah, who announced the northern kingdom's secession to Jeroboam (1 Kgs 11:29) and whose word was fulfilled in the division (1 Kgs 12:15; 15:29; 2 Chr 9:29). In 1 Chronicles 9:5, it refers collectively to descendants of Shiloh who resettled in Jerusalem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shilonite | es: el-shilonita, el-silonita | fr: [השילוני], [השלוני], le-Shilonite | de: [השילוני], [השלוני], der-Shilonite 1Kgs 11:29; 1Kgs 12:15; 1Kgs 15:29; 1Chr 9:5; 2Chr 9:29

שִׁ֫מְעוֹן H7889 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimon (personal name)

A personal name in the genealogies of Judah appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:20. The name is identical to the more common 'Simeon' (Hebrew שִׁמְעוֹן), differing only in vocalization. Ancient Greek versions render it as Semeiōn or Sami, showing the name's phonetic similarity to other Semitic names meaning 'hearing' or 'heard.' This individual appears in the detailed Judahite genealogies that the Chronicler preserved, part of the broader genealogical framework establishing tribal continuity after the exile.

(1×) This proper noun identifies a man in Judah's lineage recorded in 1 Chronicles 4. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration: Spanish uses 'Simon,' English 'Shimon,' while French and German bracket the Hebrew, treating it as an irreducible personal name. The Greek versions (Semeiōn, Sami) attempted to render the name in Hellenistic script. The name's similarity to 'Simeon' (שִׁמְעוֹן) suggests it may share the same etymological root related to hearing, though this Shimon belongs to Judah's descendants rather than Simeon's tribe. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shimon | es: Simon | fr: [שימון] | de: [שימון] 1Chr 4:20

שֵׂ֫ן H7890 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

their urine; bodily waste, used in siege contexts of extreme deprivation

This euphemistic term for urine appears in parallel siege accounts where Assyrian envoys mock Jerusalem's defenders. Second Kings 18:27 and Isaiah 36:12 record the Rabshakeh's crude taunt: those under siege will be reduced to drinking 'their own urine' due to water scarcity. The term represents a deliberate vulgarism designed to demoralize and humiliate. The bracketed renderings in multilingual sources reflect both textual difficulty and translators' discomfort with the graphic language. The parallel accounts preserve this shocking rhetoric to show the psychological warfare employed in ancient sieges. The crude reference emphasizes siege's dehumanizing horror —reducing people to consuming their own waste for survival.

(2×) Urine, appearing in the parallel siege taunts of 2 Kings 18:27 and Isaiah 36:12. The Assyrian envoy uses this crude term to threaten Jerusalem's defenders with extreme deprivation under siege. The bracketed and variant translations ('their-urine,' 'su-orina') show both textual issues and translational sensitivity to the vulgar language. The term's shock value was deliberate—psychological warfare meant to terrify the besieged into surrender by depicting the dehumanizing extremities they would face. Both accounts preserve this graphic rhetoric to illustrate siege warfare's brutal reality. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: [their-urine] | es: [K], [su-orina] | fr: [[שיניהם]], [their-urine] | de: [[שיניהם]], [their-urine] 2Kgs 18:27; Isa 36:12

שִׁיר H7891 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (88×)

To sing; also as a participle: a singer or temple musician, especially the Levitical choristers of Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah.

The verb שִׁיר covers the act of singing in all its biblical contexts—from the Song of the Sea (Exod 15:1) to the Psalms' exhortations to 'sing a new song.' What makes this lemma especially interesting is that its participial forms (שָׁרִים, שָׁרוֹת) became the standard title for the Levitical temple singers, accounting for roughly half its occurrences. Spanish distinguishes these neatly: 'cantad' (sing!) for the verb versus 'los cantores' (the singers) for the substantivized participle. The temple musicians of 1 Chronicles 6, 9, 15 and Ezra-Nehemiah passages show an institutionalized role, while the verbal occurrences range from triumphant war songs to prophetic singing.

1. singer, temple musician (47×) About 47 occurrences use the participle substantively to designate a singer or temple musician—a person whose defined role is singing, particularly within the Levitical worship system. Spanish 'los cantores,' German 'Sänger,' and French 'chanter' (used nominally) all reflect this. The feminine form שָׁרוֹת appears in 2 Sam 19:35 for singing women. Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah concentrate this usage heavily, listing the singers alongside priests and gatekeepers as a distinct temple guild (1 Chr 6:33; 9:33; Neh 7:1). SINGING AND MUSIC

en: and-the-singers, the-singers | es: Los-cantores, Y-los-cantores, los-cantores | fr: chanter, et-chanter | de: Saenger, sang, und-Saenger 2Sam 19:35; 1Kgs 10:12; 1Chr 6:33; 1Chr 9:33

2. to sing (40×) About 40 occurrences preserve the active verbal sense: the act of singing, whether in celebration, worship, or lament. Spans Qal and Piel stems across all conjugations—perfect, imperfect, imperative, cohortative, and infinitive. The foundational instance is Exod 15:1, 'Then Moses and the Israelites sang (יָשִׁיר) this song.' Spanish 'cantad/cantaré,' German 'singen,' and French 'chantez' confirm the straightforward verbal reading. Key passages include Num 21:17 (the well song), Judg 5:1 (Deborah's song), and the Psalms' repeated imperative שִׁירוּ ('sing!'). SINGING AND MUSIC

en: I-will-sing, sing | es: Cantad, Cantaré, cantad | fr: chanter, chantez | de: Lied, Saenger, singen Exod 15:1; Exod 15:21; Num 21:17; Judg 5:1

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Isa 26:1 ('In that day this song shall be sung in the land of Judah') uses what appears to be a passive or impersonal form, standing apart from both the active verbal sense and the substantivized singer. The multilingual evidence is thin—Spanish 'será cantado' and English 'shall be sung'—but the passive/eschatological framing in Isaiah's apocalyptic context gives it a distinct prophetic coloring. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: shall-be-sung | es: será-cantado | fr: [ירשר] | de: [ירשר] Isa 26:1

שִׁיר H7892a Conj-w (79×)

Song, musical composition — a lyric piece for worship, celebration, or artistic expression.

Covering everything from triumphal war songs to intimate love poetry, this noun denotes a composed musical piece, often associated with praise and liturgical worship. It appears prominently in the Chronicler's descriptions of temple worship (1 Chr 6:31; 15:16; 25:7) and in psalm superscriptions. The superlative title 'Song of Songs' (Song 1:1) — rendered 'de los Cantares' in Spanish and 'des cantiques' in French — marks the pinnacle of the genre. Spanish distinguishes between 'canto' (a single song) and 'cántico' (a more formal hymn), reflecting the liturgical weight the word carries.

1. song, musical composition (78×) A song or musical composition used in worship, celebration, or artistic expression — encompassing hymns of praise, thanksgiving songs, triumphal odes, and lyric poetry. Attested across 78 occurrences, from Deborah's victory song (Judg 5:12) to the organized temple music under David's Levitical singers (1 Chr 6:31; 25:7). Spanish 'canto/cántico' and French 'cantique' emphasize the liturgical register, while German 'ein Lied' keeps the broader 'song' sense. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: a-song | es: Canto, Cántico, canto | fr: chanter, un-cantique | de: ein-Lied, ein-song Judg 5:12; 1Chr 6:31; 1Chr 15:16; 1Chr 16:42; 1Chr 25:7

2. (1×) The superlative 'Song of Songs' (Song 1:1) — a unique titular usage marking the supreme or most excellent song, functioning as a literary genre designation for Solomon's love poetry. Spanish 'de los Cantares' and French 'des cantiques' preserve the genitive superlative construction, indicating this is not merely another song but the quintessential one. This single occurrence stands apart as a title rather than a common noun. SONGS AND HYMNS
en: the-songs | es: de-los-Cantares | fr: des-cantiques | de: der-Lieder Song 1:1

שִׁירָה H7892b Prep-k / N-fsc (12×)

Song, ode, liturgical composition — a formal poetic piece sung in praise, celebration, or commemoration of divine acts

The feminine noun שִׁירָה (shirah) denotes a song or ode — a composed, formal poetic piece performed in communal worship or national celebration. Its most famous instance is the Song of the Sea: 'Then Moses and the Israelites sang this song to the LORD' (Exod 15:1). The Song of the Well uses the same formula (Num 21:17). Deuteronomy applies it to Moses' testament-song, commanded as a witness against Israel (Deut 31:19, 21-22, 30). In Judges 5:12, Deborah is summoned to 'utter a song.' These usages frame שִׁירָה as a composed literary work with liturgical and memorial function. Spanish 'cántico' and French 'cantique' capture the formal register.

Song, singing (12×) A formal poetic composition or ode, typically sung in communal worship or national celebration to commemorate God's saving acts. The Song of the Sea (Exod 15:1) and the Song of the Well (Num 21:17) are paradigmatic examples. Moses' testament-song in Deuteronomy 31-32 is commanded by God as a witness against Israel (Deut 31:19, 21-22, 30; 32:44). Deborah's victory song is introduced with the term (Judg 5:12). Isaiah 5:1 uses it for a parabolic 'song of the vineyard.' The word consistently implies a composed, rehearsed literary work rather than spontaneous singing. Spanish 'cántico' and English 'ode/song' both convey the formal, commemorative quality. SONGS AND HYMNS
en: like-song-of, song-of, the-song | es: canción-de, como-canto-de, el-cántico | fr: [כשירת], [שירת], le-chant | de: [כשירת], [שירת], der-Lied Exod 15:1; Num 21:17; Deut 31:19; Deut 31:21

שֵׁשׁ H7893 N-ms (1×)

alabaster, marble (fine stone for building)

A building material mentioned in David's preparations for the temple in 1 Chronicles 29:2. The term designates a fine, lustrous stone—traditionally identified as alabaster or marble—suitable for decorative architectural use. Ancient Near Eastern cognates appear in Aramaic and Syriac, and the word may be a foreign loanword, possibly from Akkadian šaššu. The stone's aesthetic qualities made it valuable for sacred architecture. Patrick's article in Hastings' Dictionary discusses the identification, noting the term's association with luxury materials befitting God's dwelling place.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 29:2, this noun appears in David's detailed inventory of materials gathered for Solomon's temple construction. The phrase 'stones of alabaster/marble' (אַבְנֵי־שֵׁישׁ) emphasizes the premium quality of materials designated for sacred use. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'marble' (Spanish 'mármol'), while French and German bracket the Hebrew term, perhaps reflecting uncertainty about the precise stone type. The domain assignment to 'Animals' appears erroneous—this clearly belongs to building materials or mineral substances, not fauna. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5911 WITH 3 SENSES
en: marble | es: mármol | fr: [שיש] | de: [שיש] 1Chr 29:2

שִׁישָׁא H7894 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shisha (personal name, scribe in Solomon's court)

A personal name identifying a royal scribe during Solomon's reign, recorded in 1 Kings 4:3. Shisha served as father to two of Solomon's secretaries, Elihoreph and Ahijah, placing his family in the administrative elite of the united monarchy. The name may be related to Seraiah, another scribal name appearing elsewhere in biblical genealogies. Greek versions render it variously as Saba, Seisa, or Saphat, showing textual variants in the transmission. The scribal families held significant positions in ancient Israel's bureaucracy, managing records and correspondence for the royal court.

(1×) This proper noun appears in the administrative roster of Solomon's government officials listed in 1 Kings 4. The text identifies Elihoreph and Ahijah as 'sons of Shisha, scribes,' establishing a scribal dynasty in Solomon's court. Multilingual versions transliterate directly: English, Spanish, French, and German all render 'Shisha,' recognizing it as a personal name. The Greek versions' variations (Saba, Seisa, Saphat) suggest textual fluidity in how the name was transmitted. This scribal family participated in the sophisticated administrative apparatus that characterized Solomon's reign. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shisha | es: Shisha | fr: Shisha | de: Shisha 1Kgs 4:3

שִׁישַׁק H7895 N-proper-ms (8×)

Shishak, the Egyptian pharaoh (Shoshenq I) who invaded Judah during the reign of Rehoboam.

The proper noun Shishak, the Hebrew rendering of Egyptian Shoshenq I, founder of the 22nd Dynasty. He first appears as the pharaoh who sheltered Jeroboam when he fled from Solomon (1 Kgs 11:40), then dramatically as the invader who attacked Jerusalem in Rehoboam's fifth year, carrying off the treasures of the temple and royal palace (1 Kgs 14:25; 2 Chr 12:2-9). His military campaign is independently attested by his victory relief at the temple of Karnak. Spanish 'Sisac,' French and German 'Schischak/Shishak' all represent conventional transliterations of the Hebrew.

Shishak (Egyptian pharaoh) (8×) The Egyptian pharaoh Shoshenq I (ca. 943-922 BC), rendered in Hebrew as Shishak. All eight occurrences refer to this single historical figure across two narrative contexts: his harboring of the fugitive Jeroboam during Solomon's reign (1 Kgs 11:40), and his invasion of Judah under Rehoboam, when he plundered the temple and palace treasures (1 Kgs 14:25; 2 Chr 12:2, 5, 7, 9). The ketiv/qere variation (shushak/shishak) in 1 Kgs 14:25 reflects minor orthographic uncertainty. Spanish 'Sisac,' French 'Schischak,' and German 'Schischak' are conventional transliterations across Bible translation traditions. PHARAOH TITLE
en: Shishak, [ketiv] | es: (Shishaq), Sisac, [Shushaq] | fr: Schischak, Shishak, [ketiv] | de: Schischak, Shishak, [ketiv] 1Kgs 11:40; 1Kgs 14:25; 2Chr 12:2; 2Chr 12:5

שִׁית H7896 V-Qal-Imp-fs (86×)

To put, set, place; to make or render into a state; to appoint; passive: to be placed or imposed

A versatile verb of positioning and assignment, shith overlaps considerably with sim and nathan but carries its own distinctive flavor — often more deliberate or purposeful in tone. God 'sets' enmity between the serpent and the woman (Gen 3:15), and Eve names Seth because God 'appointed' another seed (Gen 4:25). The psalmist marvels that God has 'set' humanity over creation (Ps 8:6), while the same root in Psalm 73:28 expresses the intimate resolve 'I have placed my trust in the Lord GOD.' From physical placement to metaphorical constitution — making someone a ruler, rendering darkness a covering (Ps 18:11) — shith bridges the concrete and the abstract with quiet authority.

1. place, set, put (54×) The core spatial-positional sense of placing, setting, or putting an object, person, or abstract entity in a specific location — covering 54 of 86 occurrences across Qal active forms. God sets enmity (Gen 3:15), Eve names her son for the seed God 'placed' (Gen 4:25), and Jacob sets his face toward Gilead (Gen 31:21). Arabic wada'a, Korean nohda/duda, and Swahili -weka all converge on this foundational sense of deliberate positioning. The breadth of objects placed — from physical items to abstract trust (Ps 73:28) — shows how spatial placement anchors the entire semantic field. PLACING AND LAYING

en: I-will-place, I-will-set, You-set | es: Pon, Y-puso, dirige | fr: et-Il-plaça, et-mettre, et-plaça | de: [אשית], [שית], legte-er-sie Gen 3:15; Gen 4:25; Gen 30:40; Gen 46:4

2. make, render, constitute (24×) A causative-transformative extension meaning to make, render, or constitute someone or something into a new state or role — 24 occurrences where shith functions like Arabic ja'ala ('to make into'). Joseph is set over all Egypt (Gen 41:33), God makes darkness his covering (Ps 18:11), and the psalmist is made to dwell in dark places (Ps 88:6). The shift from spatial 'set' to resultative 'render' is confirmed by German setzen yielding to stellen and Spanish poner acquiring the force of 'constitute,' revealing the metaphorical bridge from physical placement to ontological transformation. PLACING AND LAYING
en: I-have-made, I-will-make-you, I-will-set-him | es: (y-pondrá), Me-pusiste, Pones | fr: et-Je—placer, et-il-a-bu, et-placer | de: ich-wird-setzte-ihn, setzte, stellen Gen 41:33; Exod 23:31; 1Kgs 11:34; Ps 18:11; Ps 21:6

3. be placed, be laid (passive) (3×) The passive construction where something is placed, laid, or imposed upon someone — three occurrences in legal and cosmic contexts. If a ransom 'is laid' upon the owner of a goring ox (Exod 21:30), and God declares to the sea 'here shall your proud waves be set' (Job 38:11). Arabic yuda'u (passive of wada'a) and Korean noh-ida mirror this passive morphology precisely, marking the subject as recipient rather than agent of the placement. PLACING AND LAYING
en: is-laid, shall-be-set | es: es-impuesto, se-pondrá, sea-impuesto | fr: est-posa, mettre | de: [ישית], ist-laid Exod 21:30; Job 38:11

4. appoint, establish, ordain (3×) A specialized sense of appointing, establishing, or ordaining someone in an official capacity or fixed arrangement — three occurrences where the focus shifts from mere placement to institutional designation. Job pleads for God to 'appoint' a set time for him (Job 14:13), and the psalmist recognizes God has 'set' a king upon Zion (Ps 3:6). Arabic 'ayyana and Korean jeonghada capture the deliberative-institutional nuance that separates this from casual positioning. Hosea 6:11 extends it to God 'appointing' a harvest of judgment for Judah. PLACING AND LAYING
en: have-set-themselves, set, you-set | es: han-puesto, pongas, puso | fr: mettre, placer | de: [תשית], setzte Job 14:13; Ps 3:6; Hos 6:11

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Exodus 33:4 where Israel, hearing the bad tidings, did not 'put' their ornaments upon them — an act of mourning after the golden calf incident. The verse deploys the core spatial sense but the context of corporate grief and divine displeasure gives it a distinctive narrative weight. Spanish puso and German setzen treat it as standard placement, but English 'put on' reveals the garment-donning idiom at work. PLACING AND LAYING en: put | es: puso | fr: mettre | de: setzen Exod 33:4

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Numbers 24:1 where Balaam 'set' his face toward the wilderness — an idiom for directing attention or orientation. The phrase shith panim ('set the face') parallels the more common sim panim, but the choice of shith here in Balaam's oracle narrative may carry a more deliberate, visionary nuance. Spanish y-puso and French et-placer render the standard placement, though the idiomatic force is directional rather than locational. PLACING AND LAYING en: and-set | es: y-puso | fr: et-placer | de: und-setzen Num 24:1

שִׁית H7897 N-msc (2×)
A garment or article of clothing, often with moral or figurative significance
This term refers to an article of clothing or garment. In Proverbs 7:10, it appears in the phrase 'garment of a prostitute,' describing the attire that marks the identity or intent of the woman. In Psalm 73:6, the word takes on a powerful figurative meaning: violence is said to clothe the wicked like a garment, wrapping them in their own brutality. The multilingual evidence consistently points to clothing vocabulary, though the Spanish and German glosses preserve the transliterated Hebrew, suggesting the word's relative rarity.

(2×) While occurring only twice, both passages use שִׁית in metaphorically charged contexts. The Proverbs reference links garments to identity and intent, while the Psalm transforms clothing into a moral symbol—violence becomes something the arrogant 'wear' as naturally as a cloak. The cross-linguistic agreement on garment terminology confirms this physical-to-figurative range. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: a-garment-of, dressed-as | es: vestido-de | fr: vêtement, שית | de: [שית], ein-garment-von Ps 73:6; Prov 7:10

שַׁיִת H7898 Conj-w (7×)
shayit – thorn-bushes, briers; thorny wild growth signaling desolation and divine judgment
A masculine collective noun for thorn-bushes or briers, appearing exclusively in Isaiah and always paired with shamir ('thorns') to form the prophetic formula shamir washayit. This thorn-pair serves as Isaiah's signature image of agricultural ruin and divine judgment: a once-cultivated vineyard overrun with briers (Isa 5:6), land bought for a thousand silver pieces now worthless and thorn-choked (Isa 7:23-25), and wickedness burning through thorns like wildfire (Isa 9:18; 10:17). In Isaiah 27:4, God declares that if thorns and briers were set against him in battle, he would burn through them. Spanish cardo, French ronce, and German Dornengestruepp all capture the wild, aggressive, unwanted growth that reclaims neglected or cursed land.

Thorns, briers (7×) Thorny wild bushes or brier plants, always appearing in Isaiah's prophetic judgment oracles as part of the fixed pair shamir washayit ('thorns and briers'). The pairing describes desolate, uncultivated land that has reverted from productive vineyard to wasteland under divine curse (Isa 5:6; 7:23-25), or thorny growth consumed by the fire of God's wrath (Isa 9:18; 10:17; 27:4). Spanish cardos y espinos and French ronces et epines both reflect the paired-thorn imagery, while German Dornengestruepp emphasizes the wild, tangled character of the growth. The etymology is uncertain but may relate to devastation or rough wildness. THORNS AND BRAMBLES en: and-briers, and-for-the-briers, its-thorns | es: su-espino, y-cardo, y-cardos | fr: et-ronce, ronce | de: Dornengestruepp, und-Dornengestruepp Isa 5:6; Isa 7:23; Isa 7:24; Isa 7:25; Isa 9:18

שֵׁךְ H7899 Prep-l / N-mp (1×)
thorn, barb (thorny plant)
A noun denoting thorny plants, appearing in Numbers 33:55 where Moses warns Israel about the consequences of failing to drive out Canaan's inhabitants. The term is paired with another word for 'pricks' or 'goads' (צִנִּנִם), creating a dual image of painful irritation. The thorns represent the persistent trouble that compromised obedience would bring. This botanical metaphor was common in Scripture's warning literature—thorns symbolizing curse, hindrance, and the corruption that accompanies incomplete covenant faithfulness. The plural form suggests multiple thorny plants or repeated painful encounters.

(1×) In Numbers 33:55, the noun functions in a vivid warning: unconquered Canaanites will become 'thorns in your sides.' The prepositional phrase 'for thorns' (לְשֵׁכִים) indicates purpose or result. Spanish renders this 'como espinas' (as thorns), French 'pour thorns,' German 'für Dornen'—all capturing the metaphor's force. The parallel term 'pricks' (צִנִּנִם) reinforces the image of constant irritation. This fits the Priestly writer's pattern of vivid consequence language, warning that partial obedience produces ongoing pain. The thorn imagery recurs throughout Scripture as a symbol of curse and corruption. THORNS AND BRAMBLES en: for-thorns | es: como-espinas | fr: pour-thorns | de: fuer-Dornen Num 33:55

שֵׁךְ H7900 N-msc / 3ms (1×)
booth, shelter, pavilion (temporary dwelling)
A noun designating a temporary shelter or booth, appearing in Lamentations 2:6 in a poignant description of God's destruction of His own dwelling place. The term is closely related to סֻכָּה (sukkah), the well-known word for the booths used during the Festival of Booths. In Lamentations, the metaphor depicts YHWH violently tearing down His own pavilion—an image of self-inflicted judgment where God destroys the very place where He met with His people. The text's form (שֻׂכּוֹ, 'his booth') includes the third-person suffix, emphasizing divine ownership of what is being demolished.

(1×) In Lamentations 2:6, this noun appears in parallel with מוֹעֵד (appointed meeting place), describing YHWH's destruction of His sanctuary. The phrase 'He destroyed His booth' uses violent imagery —God as an aggressor against His own dwelling. Spanish translates 'su tabernáculo' (his tabernacle), French and German bracket the Hebrew, recognizing the word's theological weight. The booth/pavilion metaphor suggests the temple's provisional nature, perhaps echoing Israel's wilderness wanderings when God dwelt in a tent. The domain assignment to 'Properties, Relations' seems inadequate—this belongs to sacred space or architectural terminology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-booth | es: su-tabernáculo | fr: [שכו] | de: [שכו] Lam 2:6

שָׁכַב H7901 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (213×)

To lie down, recline, sleep; euphemism for sexual intercourse; Hifil: lay someone down; also: pour out (liquid)

Shakab is the Hebrew Bible's universal posture verb for the horizontal — lying down to sleep, reclining in death, and the characteristic euphemism for sexual relations. Korean consistently distinguishes nuwotda ('reclined') from dongchimhaetda ('lay with sexually'), while Spanish separates acostarse from yacer con. The same root in Arabic (sakaba) means only 'to pour out,' a meaning surviving in one enigmatic occurrence at Job 38:37 about tilting heaven's water-jars. The Hifil adds tender domestic scenes of laying a child down, and the rare Hofal appears in Ezekiel's underworld tableaux where warriors 'are laid' among the slain.

1. lie down, rest, sleep (183×) The fundamental Qal sense: lying down for rest, sleep, or repose. At 183 occurrences this dominates — Samuel lying in the temple (1 Sam 3:5, 9), the idiom 'lie down and rise up' bracketing daily life (Deut 6:7). Arabic ittaja'a ('to recline'), Spanish acostarse, and Korean nuwotda all converge on the basic posture of physical rest. RECLINING AND LYING en: and-he-lay, and-he-slept, and-lay | es: Y-se-acostó, y-se-acostó | fr: et-il-dormit, et-il-s'étendit, et-s'étendit | de: und-er-lag, und-er-schlief, und-lag Lev 15:4; 1Sam 3:5; 1Sam 3:9; 1Sam 3:15; 2Sam 11:4

2. lie with sexually (16×) The Qal euphemistic sense of sexual intercourse — 'to lie with' someone, always marked by prepositions 'im or 'et. Sixteen occurrences from Lot's daughters (Gen 19:33, 35) to the rape of Dinah (Gen 34:2) and legal casuistry (Deut 22:22–29). Korean dongchimhaetda and Arabic daja'a ma'a confirm the euphemistic idiom as a lexicalized sense. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: and-he-lay-with, and-like-one-lying-down, in-her-lying-down | es: acués-tate, como-el-que-se-acuesta, en-su-acostarse | fr: comme-se-coucher, dans-sa-couché-en-bas, et-il-poser-avec | de: ihr-Niederlegen, liege, liegt-mit Gen 19:33; Gen 19:35; Gen 34:2; Gen 34:7; Gen 35:22

3. cause to lie down (7×) The Hifil causative: to lay someone down, typically in caretaking. The Shunammite woman laid Elisha's staff beside her dead son (2 Kgs 4:21), Solomon's mother placed one infant beside another (1 Kgs 3:20), Elijah laid the widow's son on his bed (1 Kgs 17:19). Arabic adja'a and Spanish acostar confirm seven occurrences of deliberate, tender placement. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-I-will-make-them-lie-down, and-laid-him, and-she-laid-him | es: acostó, haciéndolos-acostar, y-lo-acostaron | fr: [וישכיבהו], elle-laid, et-elle-laid-lui | de: machend-liege-hinab, sie-laid, und-laid-ihn 2Sam 8:2; 1Kgs 3:20; 1Kgs 17:19; 2Kgs 4:21

4. be laid down (passive) (3×) The Hofal passive-causative: to be laid down or placed in a reclining position. Used in Ezekiel's underworld oracles where slain warriors 'are laid' among the uncircumcised dead (Ezek 32:19, 32) and the Shunammite's son 'was laid' on Elisha's bed (2 Kgs 4:32). Arabic yudja'u confirms a state of having been placed by another's action. RECLINING AND LYING en: and-be-laid, and-he-will-be-laid, laid | es: acostado, y-yace, y-yacerá | fr: et-se-coucher, laid | de: laid, und-der-legte-sich, und-liegen 2Kgs 4:32; Ezek 32:19; Ezek 32:32

5. be sexually violated (3×) The Nifal and Pual passive stems denoting sexual violation — the passive counterpart to Sense 2 but with coercion. Isaiah 13:16 warns Babylon's women 'will be violated,' Zechariah 14:2 echoes the judgment, and Jeremiah 3:2 accuses Israel of roadside harlotry. Korean yok-boirira ('will be shamed sexually') and Arabic tudaja'na confirm violation semantics. RECLINING AND LYING en: (you-were-lain-with), and-will-go-out, will-be-violated | es: (violadas), fuiste-violada?, serán-violadas | fr: se-coucher | de: legte-sich, liegen Isa 13:16; Jer 3:2; Zech 14:2

6. (1×) A singular occurrence at Job 38:37 meaning 'pour out' or 'tilt over' — 'who can tilt heaven's water-jars?' This preserves the ancient Arabic cognate sakaba ('to pour out water or tears'), otherwise lost in Hebrew. Spanish volcar ('to overturn') confirms the liquid-discharge sense, a lexical fossil connecting postural semantics to pouring from a tilted vessel. RECLINING AND LYING en: can-pour-out | es: puede-volcar | fr: se-coucher | de: legte-sich Job 38:37

שְׁכָבָה H7902 N-fsc (9×)

An act of lying; seminal emission (in procreative or purity contexts); also a layer or coating (of dew)

A feminine noun occurring only in construct form, with two distinct concrete senses. In Leviticus it denotes 'a lying of seed' – seminal emission in the context of purity laws governing sexual contact and bodily discharges (Lev 15:16-18, 32; 19:20; 22:4; Num 5:13). The phrase 'shikhvat zera' is a technical legal expression. The second sense, a physical 'layer' or coating, appears in the manna narrative: when the dew that lay around the camp evaporated, manna was found beneath 'the layer of dew' (Exod 16:13-14). Both senses derive from the root meaning 'to lie down' – what lies with someone, or what lies upon the ground.

1. emission of (7×) Seminal emission or 'lying of seed,' a technical term in the Levitical purity laws. The construct phrase 'shikhvat zera' appears in regulations about sexual contact (Lev 15:18; 19:20; Num 5:13) and bodily discharge (Lev 15:16-17, 32; 22:4). Spanish 'emisión de' and French 'émission de' both render the clinical, legal quality of this usage. The term functions as a euphemistic legal formula rather than a narrative description. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: emission-of-, lying-of- | es: acostamiento-de, emisión-de, emisión-de- | fr: couché-de-, emission-de- | de: emission-von-, liegend-von- Lev 15:16; Lev 15:17; Lev 15:18; Lev 15:32; Lev 19:20

2. layer of (2×) A layer or coating, specifically of dew. In Exodus 16:13-14, the manna appeared after 'the layer of dew' evaporated from around the camp. Spanish 'capa de' (layer of) and French 'couche de' (coating of) both capture the thin, spread-out covering implied. The same root sense of 'lying down/upon' underlies both this and the first sense, but here it describes a physical deposit on the ground. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: layer-of | es: capa-de- | fr: couche-de | de: layer-von Exod 16:13; Exod 16:14

שִׁכְבַת H7903 N-fsc / 3ms (4×)

lying down (of a man), copulation; emission of semen in sexual intercourse, used in Levitical purity and holiness laws

This noun refers to the act or emission of male copulation, always appearing with the verb 'give' (natan) in contexts of forbidden sexual relations. Leviticus 18:20 and 23 prohibit giving one's 'lying' (semen emission) to a neighbor's wife or to an animal. Leviticus 20:15 repeats the animal prohibition. Numbers 5:20 uses it in the suspected adultery ordeal—if another man has 'given his lying' with the woman. The multilingual glosses show literal renderings (Spanish acostamiento 'lying down', French couché 'lying/bed', German liegend 'lying'). This is technical priestly vocabulary for male sexual emission, used specifically in laws maintaining sexual boundaries and ritual purity. The euphemistic precision reflects Torah's simultaneous frankness and delicacy about sexual matters.

(4×) Male sexual emission or copulation, specifically the act of 'giving one's lying/semen' in prohibited contexts. Used exclusively in Leviticus 18, 20 (holiness laws forbidding sex with neighbor's wife, animals) and Numbers 5 (adultery ordeal). The phrase 'give one's lying' is priestly technical language for sexual intercourse from the male perspective. This vocabulary maintains clarity about sexual boundaries while using euphemistic construction, characteristic of Levitical sexual ethics. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: his-lying, lying-his, lying-your | es: acostamiento-de-él, su-acostamiento, tu-acostamiento | fr: couché-son, couché-ton, son-couché | de: liegend-dein, liegend-sein, sein-liegend Lev 18:20; Lev 18:23; Lev 20:15; Num 5:20

שְׂכָה H7904 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

lustful, sexually aroused (of horses/men)

A rare participial form appearing in Jeremiah 5:8, describing Israelite men as lustful stallions. The prophet uses shocking imagery: fed horses pawing and neighing after their neighbors' wives. The Hebrew is textually challenging—ancient versions differ, and the precise meaning has been debated. Aquila and Theodotion translate it as 'dragging' (their genitalia), suggesting explicit sexual imagery. The Vulgate uses 'trahentes' (pulling), while others propose emendations to clarify the meaning as 'lustful' or 'well-fed.' The passage's raw language underscores prophetic denunciation of covenant infidelity expressed through sexual metaphor.

(1×) In Jeremiah 5:8, this participial adjective describes men as 'fed horses, roaming/lustful'—the phrase מַשְׂכִּים הָיוּ captures unbridled sexual desire. Spanish renders 'relinchones' (neighing ones), emphasizing the animalistic comparison. French and German bracket the Hebrew, perhaps reflecting the term's textual difficulty. The prophet's metaphor equates covenant violation with animal lust—men acting like stallions, driven by instinct rather than covenant faithfulness. The domain classification as 'Sensory Events' captures the bodily dimension, though 'sexual ethics' or 'moral transgression' might better fit Jeremiah's prophetic critique. GAZING AND LOOKING en: lusty | es: relinchones | fr: [משכים] | de: [משכים] Jer 5:8

שֻׂכָּה H7905 Prep-b / N-fp (1×)

harpoon, fishing spear (barbed weapon)

A noun denoting a barbed weapon used for hunting large aquatic creatures, appearing in Job 41:7 (English 41:7, Hebrew 40:31) in God's description of Leviathan. The term is parallel to fishing implements, underscoring Leviathan's invulnerability—no harpoon can pierce its hide. The plural form (שֻׂכּוֹת) suggests multiple barbs or a collection of such weapons. This vocabulary belongs to fishing and hunting technology, evoking human attempts to master fearsome creatures. The passage's rhetoric asks Job mockingly: Can you fill Leviathan's skin with harpoons? The implied answer—absolutely not—establishes God's power over chaos monsters.

(1×) In Job 41:7 (Hebrew 40:31), this noun appears in a rhetorical question about subduing Leviathan: 'Can you fill his skin with harpoons?' The prepositional phrase 'with harpoons' (בְּשֻׂכּוֹת) indicates the ineffective implement. Spanish translates 'con arpones' (with harpoons), French brackets the Hebrew term, recognizing this as specialized hunting vocabulary. The parallel 'fishing spears' reinforces the image of human futility against the chaos monster. God's speech catalogues failed human attempts to capture Leviathan, establishing divine sovereignty over creation's wildest forces. SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN

en: with-harpoons | es: con-arpones | fr: dans-בשכות | de: [בשכות] Job 41:7

שֹׂכִי H7906 Prep-b (1×)

Secu (place name, location near Ramah)

A geographical name appearing in 1 Samuel 19:22, identifying a location near Ramah where Saul inquired about David's whereabouts during his pursuit. The site's exact identification remains uncertain. The LXX renders it as Sephi or Sephei, suggesting variant textual traditions. Some scholars propose emending the text to read 'Shephi' (שְׁפִי), while others defend the Masoretic reading. The name may relate to a root meaning 'outlook' or 'watchtower,' fitting a site where one would scan for fugitives. This location marks a point in the dramatic narrative of Saul's deteriorating pursuit of David.

(1×) This proper noun identifies a place near Ramah where Saul sought intelligence about David's location. The phrase 'in Secu' (בְּשֹׂכִי) indicates arrival at this site. English, Spanish, French, and German all transliterate the name differently, reflecting textual uncertainty: 'Sekhu,' 'Secu,' 'Sekhu.' The LXX's 'Sephi' suggests the Greek translators encountered a different consonantal text. The domain assignment to 'Properties, Relations' seems inappropriate—this clearly belongs to geographical locations or place names. The narrative context positions Secu as a waypoint in Saul's obsessive hunt. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Sekhu | es: en-Secu | fr: dans-Sekhu | de: in-Sekhu 1Sam 19:22

שֶׂכְוִי H7907 Prep-l (1×)

celestial phenomenon, clouds; mind (disputed meaning)

A highly disputed noun appearing only in Job 38:36, where God questions Job about who gave wisdom to hidden things. Ancient and modern interpreters offer wildly different readings. Some rabbinic sources understand it as 'mind' or 'inward parts,' while others propose 'rooster' (based on later Hebrew usage). De Dieu suggested 'cloud formation,' fitting the parallel with 'mists' (טֲחוֹת). The RV margin proposes 'meteor.' This lexical uncertainty reflects the word's extreme rarity and the poetic obscurity characteristic of God's speeches in Job. The multilingual glosses diverge dramatically—Spanish has 'rooster,' English 'mind,' showing translators' perplexity.

(1×) In Job 38:36, this noun appears in God's challenging rhetorical question about cosmic wisdom: 'Who put wisdom in שֶׂכְוִי?' The prepositional phrase 'to the (לַשֶּׂכְוִי)' שֶׂכְוִי follows parallel structure with other mysterious phenomena. Multilingual evidence shows profound disagreement: Spanish renders 'al gallo' (to the rooster), English 'to the mind,' French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging untranslatability. The parallel term טֲחוֹת (clouds, mists) suggests celestial phenomena rather than animal or mental faculties. The domain assignment to 'Geographical Objects' seems problematic—this likely belongs to natural phenomena or wisdom vocabulary. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: to-the-mind | es: al-gallo | fr: לשכוי | de: [לשכוי] Job 38:36

שְׁכוֹל H7908 N-ms (3×)

bereavement, childlessness—the state of having lost children

This noun describes bereavement, particularly the loss of children or state of childlessness. Isaiah uses it twice (47:8-9) in judgment against Babylon, declaring she will know bereavement and widowhood. Psalm 35:12 employs it for being bereft or repaid evil for good, suggesting emptiness or loss. The term captures profound personal loss, especially the grief of losing offspring, used as both literal affliction and metaphor for devastating judgment.

(3×) The three uses include two in Isaiah 47:8-9 (Babylon will not know bereavement/widowhood, but will) and one in Psalm 35:12 (they repay me with bereavement/abandonment). Spanish 'orfandad' (orphanhood/bereavement) captures the child-loss dimension. Isaiah's usage is particularly pointed—the confident empire that claims immunity from loss will experience comprehensive bereavement, while the Psalm describes the emotional desolation of betrayal by former friends. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: bereavement, loss-of-children | es: orfandad | fr: [שכול], privation | de: [שכול], bereavement Ps 35:12; Isa 47:8; Isa 47:9

שַׁכּוּל H7909 Adj-ms (6×)

Bereaved, robbed of offspring; describing a mother — animal or human — deprived of her young, fierce in grief.

An adjective describing one robbed of offspring, carrying powerful emotional force. Its most memorable usage is the simile of the bereaved bear — a mother bear stripped of her cubs becomes ferociously dangerous (2 Sam 17:8; Hos 13:8; Prov 17:12). Hushai warns Absalom that David's men are 'as fierce as a bear robbed of her cubs,' and Proverbs declares it better to meet such a bear than a fool in his folly. In Song of Solomon 4:2 and 6:6, the image softens strikingly: ewes from the washing, 'none bereaved' — every ewe paired with twin lambs, a picture of perfect fertility and completeness.

bereaved (deprived of offspring) (6×) Bereaved or deprived of offspring, describing both animals and humans who have lost their young. The Spanish 'privada de crías' (deprived of offspring) captures the sense precisely. Three occurrences form the iconic simile of the bereaved bear, ferocious in maternal grief (2 Sam 17:8; Prov 17:12; Hos 13:8). Song of Solomon uses the negation — 'none bereaved among them' — to paint a picture of complete fruitfulness among the flock (Song 4:2; 6:6). Jeremiah 18:21 applies it to human mothers in a devastating imprecation. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS
en: and-bereaved, bereaved | es: privada-de-crías, privada-de-sus-crías, robada-de-crías | fr: [שכלות], et-privée-de-petit, privé | de: [שכלות], bereaved, kinderlos 2Sam 17:8; Prov 17:12; Song 4:2; Song 6:6; Jer 18:21

שִׁכֹּר H7910 Adj-mp (13×)

Drunk, intoxicated; used literally of persons overcome by wine and figuratively of staggering helplessness or divine judgment.
An adjective describing someone overcome by alcohol — reeling, stupefied, unable to walk or think clearly. Nabal is literally drunk at his feast (1 Sam 25:36), and Zimri's assassin finds King Elah drinking himself into a stupor (1 Kgs 16:9). Yet the word carries powerful figurative force: nations stagger like a drunkard under God's judgment (Isa 19:14; 24:20), and the psalmist compares storm-tossed sailors to men reeling with wine (Ps 107:27). Hannah is wrongly accused of being a drunken woman (1 Sam 1:13), a poignant misreading of fervent prayer. Spanish 'borracho' and French parallels confirm the consistent sense of wine-induced incapacity.

drunk, drunken (13×) Intoxicated, drunk from wine or strong drink, describing a person who staggers and has lost self-control. Used literally of Nabal feasting (1 Sam 25:36), Elah drinking (1 Kgs 16:9), and Hannah falsely accused (1 Sam 1:13). Employed figuratively for nations reeling under divine judgment (Isa 19:14; 24:20), wanderers in darkness (Job 12:25), and storm-tossed sailors (Ps 107:27). Joel 1:5 summons drunkards to weep. Isaiah 28:1, 3 uses the substantive form for the drunkards of Ephraim. The Spanish 'borracho' and French bracketed forms all point to the same core meaning of alcohol-induced incapacity. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: a-drunkard, drunk, drunkard | es: borracho, borrachos, como-borracho | fr: [כשכור], [שכור], [שכורי] | de: [כשכור], [שכור], [שכורי] 1Sam 1:13; 1Sam 25:36; 1Kgs 16:9; 1Kgs 20:16; Job 12:25

שָׁכַח H7911 V-Qal-InfAbs (102×)

To forget, cease to remember; passive: to be forgotten; causative: to cause to forget
At its heart, shakach captures the painful reality of memory failing — whether human or divine. Israel is repeatedly warned not to forget the LORD's covenant (Deut 4:9, 23; 6:12; 8:11), while the psalmist pleads that God has not forgotten the afflicted (Ps 9:12-13; 10:12). The Aramaic cognate means 'to find,' an ironic semantic cousin — as if what is forgotten in one language is merely waiting to be found in another. The Nifal passive ('to be forgotten') gives voice to the anguish of those who feel erased from memory (Ps 31:12), while the rare causative forms describe God or circumstances actively stripping memory away (Jer 23:27; Lam 2:6).

1. Qal: to forget (83×) The foundational Qal active sense covering 83 occurrences across all finite forms — perfect, imperfect, imperative, cohortative, and consecutive. Human subjects forget God, covenant, law, and past experiences; God is implored not to forget his people. Deuteronomy alone accounts for a substantial cluster of warnings (4:9, 23; 6:12; 8:11, 14, 19). Arabic nasiya and Korean itda confirm the universal cognitive-failure mapping. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: I-have-forgotten, I-will-forget, forget | es: Olvidaré, olvidaré, olvidas | fr: oublier, tu-oublier | de: du-vergessen, vergass, vergessen Gen 27:45; Deut 4:9; Deut 4:23; Deut 6:12; Deut 8:11

2. Nifal: to be forgotten (13×) The Nifal passive stem expressing 'to be forgotten' across 13 occurrences — a person, deed, or thing fades from collective memory. Joseph's years of plenty 'will be forgotten' (Gen 41:30); the dead are 'forgotten' (Eccl 9:5); the psalmist cries 'I am forgotten like a dead man, out of mind' (Ps 31:12). Spanish ser olvidado and German vergessen werden consistently mark the passive voice. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: I-have-been-forgotten, and-will-be-forgotten, are-forgotten | es: He-sido-olvidado, es-olvidado, fue-olvidado | fr: cela-fera-être-oublié, et—être-forgotten, et-oublier | de: es-wird-sein-forgotten, und-vergessen, und-vergessen-wird Gen 41:30; Deut 31:21; Job 28:4; Ps 9:18; Ps 31:12

3. Piel/Hifil: to cause to forget (2×) The rare causative stems — Piel perfect and Hifil infinitive — expressing the action of making someone forget, with only two occurrences. False prophets 'cause my people to forget my name' through their dreams (Jer 23:27), and God 'has caused festival and sabbath to be forgotten' in Zion's destruction (Lam 2:6). Arabic ansa (to cause to forget) mirrors this causative morphology precisely. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: has-caused-to-forget, to-make-forget | es: ha-hecho-olvidar, hacer-olvidar | fr: oublier | de: vergass, vergessen Jer 23:27; Lam 2:6

4. Qal ptcp: one who forgets (2×) The Qal active participle used substantivally to denote 'those who forget' — a nominal classification of agents marked by habitual forgetfulness toward God. Job 8:13 warns that 'the paths of all who forget God' perish; Psalm 50:22 admonishes 'you who forget God.' Only two occurrences, both carrying a judgmental theological weight. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: forgetters-of, you-who-forget | es: los-que-olvidan-a, los-que-olvidan-de | fr: oublier | de: vergass, welcher-meine-Kraft Job 8:13; Ps 50:22

5. (1×) An infinitive absolute occurrence in Deuteronomy 8:19 functioning as an emphatic intensifier — 'if you indeed forget (shakhoach tishkach) the LORD your God.' The doubled construction (infinitive absolute + finite verb) is a classic Hebrew emphasis device. The English 'forgetting' and Spanish 'olvidar' reflect the infinitival form without capturing the rhetorical intensification. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: forgetting | es: olvidar | fr: forgetting | de: forgetting Deut 8:19

6. (1×) A single Nifal occurrence in Ecclesiastes 8:10 — the wicked 'were forgotten' in the city where they had acted — that was clustered separately due to its unusual syntactic context within Qoheleth's distinctive prose style. Functionally identical to Sense 2 (passive 'be forgotten'), this verse's isolation reflects the clustering algorithm rather than a genuinely distinct meaning. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT
en: and-were-forgotten | es: y-fueron-olvidados | fr: et-oublier | de: und-vergass Eccl 8:10

שְׁכַח H7912 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3mp (18×)

Aramaic: to find or discover (Haphel active); to be found, be discovered, or come to light (Hitpeel passive).
This Aramaic verb, found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, is the standard term for finding or discovering in Biblical Aramaic. In its Haphel (active) stem, it describes deliberate searching and locating – Arioch finds Daniel to present him before the king (Dan 2:25), and officials search archives to find records of rebellion (Ezra 4:15, 19). In its Hitpeel (passive) stem, something is found or comes to light: extraordinary spirit was found in Daniel (Dan 5:11-14), no trace of the shattered statue could be found (Dan 2:35), and Belshazzar was weighed and found wanting (Dan 5:27). Spanish hallar ('to find') and fue hallado ('was found') neatly mirror the active-passive distinction.

1. to be found, be discovered (9×) To be found, be discovered, or come to light (Hitpeel/passive). Used when something emerges upon examination or reveals itself without emphasis on the searcher's effort. Daniel 5:11-12 reports that excellent wisdom 'was found' in Daniel; Daniel 2:35 says no trace of the great image 'was found.' Daniel 5:27 delivers the devastating verdict: 'you have been weighed and found wanting.' Spanish fue hallado ('was found') and French a été trouvée consistently mark this passive discovery. The emphasis falls on the result – what surfaces or fails to surface – rather than on the act of seeking. FINDING AND DISCOVERING

en: and-found, and-was-found, was-found | es: fue-hallada, fue-hallado, y-fue-encontrado | fr: [השתכח], elle-a-été-trouvée, et-elle-a-été-trouvée | de: [והשתכח], finden, und-finden Ezra 6:2; Dan 2:35; Dan 5:11; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:14

2. to find, discover (9×) To find, discover, or locate through active searching or encounter (Haphel/active). Arioch actively finds Daniel and brings him before Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:25). Ezra 4:15 instructs officials to search the records 'and you will find' evidence of rebellion. Ezra 7:16 speaks of silver and gold 'that you can find' in the province of Babylon. Spanish hallar and hallaremos ('we will find') capture the deliberate, agent-driven quality of this sense. The distinction from the passive Hitpeel is consistently maintained across all the translation traditions. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: I-have-found, and-found, and-you-will-find | es: hallar, hallaremos, halles | fr: [השכחנה], [השכחת], [והשכחן] | de: [והשכחן], [ותהשכח], [תהשכח] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19; Ezra 7:16; Dan 2:25; Dan 6:4

שָׁכֵחַ H7913 Adj-mpc (2×)

Forgetful, forgetting (of God); one who neglects remembrance of the holy

An adjective describing those who forget or are forgetful, particularly in relation to God and sacred things. Isaiah 65:11 condemns 'those who forget my holy mountain,' parallel to 'those who forsake the LORD.' Psalm 9:17 speaks of 'all nations forgetful of God,' suggesting willful neglect rather than mere absent-mindedness. The multilingual evidence uniformly emphasizes forgetting or failure to remember, and the participial forms across languages ('who forget') capture the active, ongoing nature of this spiritual amnesia. This is not passive forgetfulness but deliberate disregard.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in contexts of covenant unfaithfulness. The adjective functions as a substantive—'the forgetting ones'—and the parallel with 'those who forsake' in Isaiah clarifies that this forgetting is volitional. The English and Spanish glosses ('who forget,' 'que olvidan') rightly capture the active, participial sense, marking this as a persistent disposition rather than a momentary lapse. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT

en: forgetting, who-forget | es: los-que-olvidáis, que-olvidan | fr: [השכחים], oublier | de: [השכחים], forgetting Ps 9:17; Isa 65:11

שְׁכִיָּה H7914 N-fpc (1×)

beautiful ships, precious images (disputed term)

An extremely obscure plural noun appearing in Isaiah 2:16 in a judgment oracle against human pride and splendor. The meaning remains highly debated among scholars. The Vulgate translates it as 'whatever is beautiful to behold,' suggesting visual appeal. Gesenius proposed 'lovely sights,' while others suggest 'imagery' or 'watchtowers' or 'standards.' More recently, scholars have proposed emending to 'ships' (שְׁפִינוֹת), which fits the parallel with 'ships of Tarshish' in the same verse. Bennett's private suggestion and subsequent scholars (Gunkel, Cheyne, Marti) adopted this reading. The term appears in a context cataloguing objects of human pride that YHWH will humble.

(1×) In Isaiah 2:16, this plural construct phrase 'שְׁכִיּוֹת הַחֶמְדָּה' (precious/desirable שָׂכִיּוֹת) appears parallel to 'all the ships of Tarshish.' Spanish translates 'imágenes' (images), English 'ships,' showing radical disagreement. French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging lexical uncertainty. The parallelism with ships strongly supports the maritime interpretation—Isaiah lists items of commercial pride and international trade that God will bring low. The domain assignment to 'Properties, Relations' seems inadequate—if this denotes ships, it belongs to maritime vocabulary or artifacts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ships | es: imágenes | fr: [שכיות] | de: [שכיות] Isa 2:16

שַׂכִּין H7915 N-ms (1×)

knife (eating or sacrificial implement)

A noun denoting a knife, appearing in Proverbs 23:2 in wisdom instruction about dining with rulers. The word is likely a loanword from Aramaic (סַכִּינָא), which borrowed it into Arabic (سِكِّين). This linguistic journey reflects ancient Near Eastern trade and cultural exchange. In late biblical Hebrew and rabbinic literature, the term became standard for knife. Proverbs uses it metaphorically: put a knife to your throat if you're given to appetite—shocking imagery warning against gluttony in the presence of authority. The knife represents self-control, even violent restraint, to avoid shameful excess.

(1×) In Proverbs 23:2, the noun appears in dramatic instruction: 'put a knife to your throat if you are given to appetite.' The phrase 'a knife' (שַׂכִּין) functions as the implement of radical self-restraint. Spanish translates 'un cuchillo' (a knife), French and German bracket the Hebrew, preserving the semantic force. This isn't literal suicide instruction but hyperbolic wisdom rhetoric—better to exercise extreme restraint than indulge appetites when dining with powerful figures. The knife imagery underscores the danger of uncontrolled desire in contexts requiring political savvy. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1272 WITH 3 SENSES

en: a-knife | es: un-cuchillo | fr: שכין | de: [שכין] Prov 23:2

שָׂכִיר H7916 Adj-mpc / 3fs (17×)

A hired worker or day laborer; also a mercenary soldier; occasionally adjectival for something rented or hired

Sakir is rooted in the economic realities of ancient Israel, where a day laborer's wages were his lifeline. The Torah repeatedly insists that the hired worker be paid promptly before sunset (Lev 19:13, Deut 24:14-15), and Job compares human life to the weary days of a hireling longing for evening (Job 7:1-2). Spanish 'jornalero' and French 'ouvrier à gages' capture this daily-wage worker perfectly. Isaiah measures divine judgment in 'years of a hireling' — precisely counted, not a day more (Isa 16:14, 21:16). Jeremiah 46:21 extends the term to mercenary soldiers, fattened calves who turn and flee.

1. hired worker, day laborer (15×) A hired worker or day laborer — the most common sense, appearing in legal, wisdom, and prophetic texts. Leviticus 19:13 and 25:40 establish the hireling's rights under Torah law; Job 7:1-2 and 14:6 use the figure for the weariness of human existence. Isaiah 16:14 and 21:16 invoke 'years of a sakir' as a precise, strictly reckoned measure. French 'ouvrier à gages,' Spanish 'jornalero,' and German 'Lohnarbeiter' all denote a temporary wage-earner. HIRED WORKER

en: a-hired-worker, and-a-hired-servant, and-a-hired-worker | es: Como-jornalero, como-jornalero, el-jornalero | fr: [שכיר], comme-un-ouvrier-à-gages, comme-כשכיר | de: [וכשכיר], [כשכיר], [שכיר] Exod 12:45; Lev 19:13; Lev 22:10; Lev 25:6; Lev 25:40

2. mercenary, hired soldier (1×) Mercenary soldiers — hired foreign troops. In Jeremiah 46:21, Egypt's mercenaries are compared to fattened calves who turn and flee rather than stand. Spanish 'mercenarios' and English 'mercenaries' distinguish this military application from the ordinary laborer. A single but semantically distinct occurrence. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: her-mercenaries | es: sus-mercenarios | fr: [שכריה] | de: [שכריה] Jer 46:21

3. hired, rented (adjectival) (1×) Used adjectivally to describe something obtained by hire rather than owned (Exod 22:15), where a hired animal incurs different liability than a borrowed one. Spanish 'alquilado' ('rented') and French 'un ouvrier salarié' preserve the adjectival quality. This is the rarest sense, where the focus is on the mode of acquisition rather than a person. HIRED WORKER

en: a-hired-worker | es: alquilado | fr: un-ouvrier-salarié | de: ein-Lohnarbeiter Exod 22:15

שָׂכִיר H7917 Art / Adj-fs (1×)
hired, leased; hireling, hired laborer
An adjective and substantive denoting what is hired or a person who works for wages. The term appears throughout legal and prophetic texts describing hired laborers, hired razors (metaphorically), and temporary workers. As an adjective, it modifies beasts (Exodus 22:14) or razors (Isaiah 7:20). As a noun, it designates day laborers or hired soldiers (mercenaries). Legal texts in Leviticus and Deuteronomy protect hired workers' rights, while prophets use hireling imagery to describe strict time-reckoning—years counted as precisely as a wage-worker counts his contracted days. The feminine form appearing in Isaiah 7:20 describes a 'hired razor,' a vivid metaphor for Assyria as God's temporary instrument of judgment.

(1×) In Isaiah 7:20, the feminine adjective modifies 'razor': 'the hired razor' (הַשְּׂכִירָה). This striking metaphor depicts Assyria as a tool YHWH rents from beyond the Euphrates to shave Judah—removing hair (representing glory and dignity). Spanish translates 'alquilada' (hired/rented), French and German bracket the Hebrew, recognizing the unusual feminine form. The 'hired' aspect emphasizes Assyria's temporary role—not a permanent possession but a leased instrument that will be dismissed after use. This theological imagery makes empire a mere tool in divine hands, hired and fired at God's discretion. HIRED WORKER en: the-hired | es: alquilada | fr: [השכירה] | de: [השכירה] Isa 7:20

שָׂכַךְ H7918 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (5×)
to decrease, abate, subside; of floodwaters receding and anger cooling
A verb describing the diminishing or subsiding of powerful forces — whether physical or emotional. Its most vivid use is in Genesis 8:1, where God causes a wind to blow and the floodwaters abate. In Esther, it describes the king's wrath cooling after Haman's execution (7:10) and before Esther's selection (2:1). The Arabic cognate sakka ('to humble oneself') and the NH sense of 'allaying anger' both illuminate the emotional dimension. The difficult Jeremiah 5:26 usage may describe fowlers crouching or lurking.

(5×) To decrease, abate, subside — said of floodwaters (Gen 8:1), royal anger (Esth 2:1; 7:10), and possibly the crouching of fowlers (Jer 5:26). Also used of causing complaints to cease (Num 17:5). Spanish and German renderings ('se calmó,' 'es sanken') capture the dual physical-emotional range: waters sink down, wrath settles. French 'diminua' highlights the quantitative decrease. The root conveys the ebbing of any overwhelming force, whether nature's deluge or a king's fury. DECREASE DIMINISH
en: and-I-will-cause-to-cease, and-subsided, like-lurking-of | es: al-calmarse, como-cazadores-de, se-calmó | fr: [כשך], [שככה], et-diminua | de: [כשך], [שככה], und-es-sanken Gen 8:1; Num 17:5; Esth 2:1; Esth 7:10; Jer 5:26

שָׂכַל H7919a Art / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (62×)
To be prudent, understand, prosper, or instruct; linking cognitive insight with its practical outcome of success
Sakhal captures a distinctively Hebrew intuition: that genuine understanding and practical success are inseparable. The same verb that describes comprehending God's ways (Ps 14:2) also describes David's military success (1 Sam 18:14) and Joshua's prosperity when he meditates on Torah (Josh 1:8). Arabic splits this into separate words – fahima for understanding, najaha for prospering – but Hebrew keeps them fused. In its Hifil causative, the root means to instruct or impart insight (Ps 32:8), and its substantivized participle yields the maskil, the wise person who both grasps truth and acts on it effectively. The psalmic title 'maskil' (Ps 47:7) may point to a skillfully composed song.

1. understand, comprehend (16×) Cognitive comprehension: grasping the meaning or significance of something. Arabic فهم (fahima), Korean 깨닫다 (realize), and Swahili -elewa (understand) all converge here. Psalm 14:2 asks whether anyone 'understands' and seeks God. Nehemiah 8:13 describes leaders gathering 'to understand' the Torah's words. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT en: I-have-insight, and-to-understand, and-understand | es: comprenderán, con-entendimiento, de-entender | fr: avoir-du-succès, comprendre, dans-comprendre | de: considered, einer-der-understands, einsichtig-sein Deut 32:29; Neh 8:13; Job 34:35; Ps 14:2; Ps 53:2

2. be prudent, be wise (14×) Attributive prudence or wisdom as a settled character quality. Arabic فهم (discerning) and Korean 슬기로운 (wise) confirm the stative dimension. Psalm 2:10 exhorts kings to 'be wise,' and Psalm 101:2 describes walking in a 'prudent' way. The emphasis falls on disposition rather than a single act of understanding. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT
en: I-will-give-heed, a-wise-one, be-wise | es: Actuaré-con-prudencia, El-que-atiende, de-ser-sabio | fr: comprendre, le-comprendre, à-comprendre | de: ich-wird-geben-heed, klug, sein-wise Job 22:2; Ps 2:10; Ps 36:3; Ps 94:8; Ps 101:2

3. prosper, succeed (14×) Practical success and prosperity as the fruit of wise conduct. Arabic نجح (najaha = succeed) and Swahili -fanikiwa (prosper) isolate this outcome-oriented sense. Joshua 1:7-8 promises that Torah meditation leads to prospering; 1 Samuel 18:5, 14 report David 'succeeding' in all his missions. Wisdom here yields tangible results. RICHES AND WEALTH
en: acted-wisely, acting-wisely, and-deal-wisely | es: prosperaba, prosperando, prosperaron | fr: agissant-wisely, agit-wisely, avoir-du-succès | de: acting-wisely, du-gedeihen, du-moege-gedeihen Deut 29:9; Josh 1:7; Josh 1:8; 1Sam 18:5; 1Sam 18:14

4. instruct, give insight (7×) Hifil causative: to teach, instruct, or impart understanding to another. Arabic فهم (teach) and فهم (make understand) confirm the causative force. Psalm 32:8 ('I will instruct you') is paradigmatic. Nehemiah 9:20 credits God's Spirit with giving the people insight. Genesis 3:6 notes the tree was desirable 'to make one wise.' UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT
en: He-gave-understanding, I-will-instruct-you, and-when-instructed | es: Te-instruiré, hace-prudente, hizo-entender | fr: comprendre, et-comprendre, à-faire-sage | de: ich-wird-unterweisen-du, klug, klug-zu-machen Gen 3:6; 1Chr 28:19; Neh 9:20; Ps 32:8; Prov 16:23

5. the wise ones (substantive) (6×) Substantivized participle: 'the wise ones' or 'the discerning' as a recognized class. Arabic فهيم (the wise) and Korean 지혜로운 자들 confirm the nominal usage. Daniel 11:33, 35 and 12:3 use maskilim for the faithful teachers who shine like stars – a group defined by both insight and righteous action. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT
en: and-skillful, and-the-wise-ones, and-wise-ones-of | es: Y-los-que-entienden, Y-los-que-entienden-de, los-entendidos | fr: comprendre, et-être-prudent, être-prudent | de: und-verstaendig-sein, verstaendig-sein 2Chr 30:22; Dan 1:4; Dan 11:33; Dan 11:35; Dan 12:3

6. consider, observe attentively (3×) Deliberate, attentive consideration: to look carefully at something and draw insight. Arabic فهم (contemplate) and Korean 살피다 (examine closely) sharpen this nuance. Psalm 41:1 blesses the one who 'considers' the poor; Job 34:27 condemns those who did not 'consider' God's ways. The sense is active, searching observation. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT
en: observing, one-who-considers, they-considered | es: Considera, consideraron, el-que-considera | fr: comprendre, de-comprendre | de: einer-der-considers, klug Job 34:27; Ps 41:1; Prov 21:12

7. (1×) The psalmic superscription term maskil (Ps 47:7), likely denoting a skillfully composed or contemplative song. English 'with a maskil' and Spanish maskil leave it transliterated, reflecting scholarly uncertainty. It may designate a wisdom-psalm genre or a technical musical/literary instruction. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE en: with-a-maskil | es: maskil | fr: de-comprendre | de: mit-ein-maskil Ps 47:7

8. (1×) A single occurrence in Jeremiah 50:9 describing arrows as 'skilled' or 'effective' – that is, arrows that do not miss. Spanish hábil (skillful) captures the transferred sense. The root's core meaning of competent wisdom is here applied metaphorically to a weapon's unerring accuracy. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE en: skilled | es: hábil | fr: avoir-du-succès | de: einsichtig-sein Jer 50:9

שָׂכַל H7919b V-Piel-Perf-3ms (1×)
cross, lay crosswise (of hands)

A Piel verb meaning to cross or lay crosswise, appearing in Genesis 48:14 when Jacob intentionally crosses his hands to place his right hand on Ephraim's head (the younger) rather than Manasseh's (the firstborn). This deliberate crossing reverses expected blessing protocol, symbolizing how God's purposes overturn human conventions. Most ancient versions (LXX, Syriac, Vulgate, Targum) and modern translations follow this 'crossing' interpretation. However, Thesaurus and Driver suggest deriving it from the root meaning 'make wise,' implying Jacob 'acted prudently.' The crossing interpretation better fits the narrative's emphasis on the visual and physical act that surprises Joseph.

(1×) In Genesis 48:14, the verb describes Jacob's intentional action: 'he crossed his hands' (שִׂכֵּל אֶת־יָדָיו). The object 'his hands' clarifies what was crossed. Spanish renders 'cruzó' (crossed), French 'crossing,' German 'er kreuzte' (he crossed), supporting the crossing interpretation. The multilingual consensus aligns with the narrative's focus on Jacob's surprising hand placement—right hand on the younger, left on the elder. This crossing becomes theologically significant, symbolizing divine election that subverts primogeniture. The domain assignment to 'Mental Life > Think' may reflect the alternate interpretation as 'act wisely,' though 'bodily action' or 'gesture' better fits the crossing sense. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: crossing | es: cruzó | fr: crossing | de: er-kreuzte Gen 48:14

שָׂכַל H7920 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

consider, contemplate, observe closely

A Hithpael verb in Biblical Aramaic meaning to consider or contemplate carefully. It appears in Daniel 7:8 when Daniel observes a vision of the fourth beast with ten horns. As he watches, he notices details about a little horn that emerges. The Hithpael stem suggests intensive or reflexive observation—gazing intently, pondering what one sees. This contemplative vocabulary fits Daniel's apocalyptic genre, where visionary experiences require careful observation and interpretation. The verb's reflexive nuance implies Daniel applying mental effort to understand the disturbing symbols passing before him.

(1×) In Daniel 7:8, the Hithpael participle describes Daniel's activity: 'I was considering (among the horns)' (מִשְׂתַּכֵּל בְּקַרְנַיָּא). The preposition 'among/concerning' (בְּ) indicates the object of contemplation. Spanish translates 'considerando' (considering), French 'considérer' (to consider), showing multilingual agreement on the contemplative sense. German brackets the Aramaic term, preserving its strangeness. This verb captures Daniel's careful attention to the vision's details, necessary for later interpretation. The apocalyptic context requires such intensive observation—revelation comes through disciplined watching and pondering. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: considering | es: Considerando | fr: considérer | de: [משתכל] Dan 7:8

H7921 V-Piel-Imperf-2fs (1×)

bereave, deprive of children, make childless

A verb meaning to bereave or make childless, typically through death. The Piel form appears throughout Scripture describing loss of children through violence, disease, judgment, or predation. The term carries profound emotional weight—childlessness in ancient Israel represented deep personal tragedy and potential loss of family continuity. Prophetic texts use bereavement language as covenant curse imagery: disobedience will result in children being taken. The verb can describe both human actions (enemies killing children) and natural forces (wild beasts causing child mortality). In Ezekiel 36:14, the land itself is personified as bereaving its inhabitants, having consumed them through famine and invasion.

(1×) In Ezekiel 36:14, the Piel imperfect second-feminine form addresses the land of Israel: 'you will no longer bereave' (לֹא־תְשַׁכְּלִי). The context involves restoration promises—the land that once 'devoured' its inhabitants through famine will cease causing bereavement. Spanish renders '(dejarás sin hijos)' (you will leave without children), French 'être privé d'enfants' (be deprived of children), German brackets the Hebrew, all capturing the tragic loss of offspring. The domain assignment to 'Physiological Processes' recognizes that bereavement involves death and bodily cessation, though 'family' or 'tragedy' categories might better capture the social-emotional dimension. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: will-you-bereave- | es: (dejarás-sin-hijos) | fr: être-privé-d'enfants | de: [תשכלי] Ezek 36:14

שָׁכַל H7921a V-Piel-Imperf-3fs (20×)

To be bereaved of children, to make childless, or to miscarry; covering the devastating spectrum from losing born children to pregnancy loss.

One of the most emotionally charged verbs in the Hebrew Bible, touching on the deepest human grief—the loss of children. Jacob's anguished cry 'you have bereaved me of my children' (Gen 42:36) and his stoic resignation 'if I am bereaved, I am bereaved' (Gen 43:14) frame the Qal experience of suffering such loss. In the Piel, the verb becomes causative and often divine: the sword bereaves from without (Deut 32:25), wild beasts are sent to make a land childless (Lev 26:22; Ezek 14:15). A distinct but related usage applies to miscarriage—'none shall miscarry in your land' (Exod 23:26)—where Spanish 'abortar' and French 'être privé d'enfants' reveal how translators wrestle with whether the focus is the parent's loss or the child's death.

1. bereave, make childless (Piel) (11×) Piel causative: to bereave, deprive of children, make childless through killing, judgment, or destruction. The subject—whether sword (Deut 32:25), wild beast (Lev 26:22), or divine decree (Jer 15:7)—actively inflicts the loss of living children. Samuel's pronouncement that Agag's sword 'has made women childless' (1 Sam 15:33) carries this causative force with particular severity. Spanish 'dejar sin hijos' (to leave without children) precisely renders the result-state of this devastating action. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: I-bereaved, and-I-will-bereave-them, and-bereaver-of | es: a-dejarlos-sin-hijos., dejará-sin-hijos, dejó-sin-hijos | fr: [שכלה], [שכלתי], et-cela-fera-bereave | de: [ומשכלת], [ושכלך], [ושכלתה] Gen 42:36; Lev 26:22; Deut 32:25; 1Sam 15:33; Jer 15:7

2. be bereaved of children (Qal) (4×) Qal stative: to be bereaved, to suffer the loss of one's children. The subject experiences rather than causes the loss. Jacob's double use in Gen 43:14 ('if I am bereaved, I am bereaved') expresses grieving resignation, while Rebekah fears being 'bereaved of you both' (Gen 27:45). French 'Je suis privé d'enfants' and German 'beraubt' capture the passive suffering, the deprivation endured rather than inflicted. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: I-am-bereaved, should-I-be-bereaved, will-be-bereaved | es: fui-privado-de-hijos, quedará-sin-hijos, seré-privada | fr: Je-suis-privé-dx27enfants, fera-être-privé, should-Je-être-privé-dx27enfants | de: bin-ich-beraubt, ich-beraubt-bin, soll-ich-beraubt-werden Gen 27:45; Gen 43:14; 1Sam 15:33

3. miscarry, abort (Piel) (4×) Piel applied to pregnancy: to miscarry, to cast the young, to suffer or cause the loss of unborn offspring. Used of both animals and women—Jacob's ewes 'did not miscarry' (Gen 31:38), the Exodus promise 'none shall miscarry' (Exod 23:26), and Job's observation that the wicked man's cow 'does not miscarry' (Job 21:10). Spanish 'abortar' and the Malachi passage (Mal 3:11) where God rebukes the devourer so the vine 'will not miscarry' extend the term to agricultural fertility as well. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: miscarried, miscarries, one-miscarrying | es: aborta., abortaron, abortará | fr: miscarried, un-miscarrying, être-privé-d'enfants | de: [תשכל], eins-miscarrying, haben-fehlgeboren Gen 31:38; Exod 23:26; Job 21:10; Mal 3:11

4. cause miscarriage (Hifil) (1×) Hifil causative: to cause miscarriage, to induce the casting of the womb's fruit. Occurring solely in Hos 9:14, where the prophet invokes a 'miscarrying womb and dry breasts' as divine judgment upon Ephraim. The Hifil intensifies the causative agency beyond the Piel, making the verb's subject the direct instrument of pregnancy failure. German '[משכיל]' and Spanish 'que aborta' reflect the active-causative grammar of this rare stem. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: miscarrying | es: que-aborta | fr: être-privé-d'enfants | de: [משכיל] Hos 9:14

שָׁכוּל H7921b Adj-fs (1×)

bereaved, childless (through loss)

An adjective describing someone who has lost children, appearing in Isaiah 49:21 where personified Zion expresses shock at seeing numerous returning children. She asks, 'Who bore me these? I was bereaved and barren.' The feminine singular form (שְׁכוּלָה) emphasizes Zion's personal experience of loss. The term specifically denotes bereavement—not natural barrenness but loss of children who once lived. This makes the restoration imagery even more dramatic: the bereaved mother suddenly finds herself surrounded by offspring she didn't know existed. The adjective captures the trauma of exile expressed through maternal loss imagery.

(1×) In Isaiah 49:21, the adjective describes Zion's self-understanding: 'I was bereaved' (שְׁכוּלָה). Zion personified as a mother expresses amazement at the return of children she thought lost forever. Spanish translates 'privada de hijos' (deprived of children), French and German bracket the Hebrew, preserving the semantic weight of maternal bereavement. The parallel with 'barren' (גַּלְמוּדָה) intensifies the isolation—both childless by loss and isolated without hope. The restoration oracle reverses this condition, transforming bereavement into abundance. This maternal imagery makes covenant restoration deeply personal and emotionally powerful. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: bereaved | es: privada-de-hijos | fr: [שכולה] | de: [שכולה] Isa 49:21

מְשַׁכֶּלֶת H7921c V-Piel-Prtcpl-fs (2×)

Causing miscarriage; that which brings about loss of offspring or fertility

A participial form referring to something that causes miscarriage or sterility. In 2 Kings 2:19-21, Elisha heals water that had been 'causing miscarriage,' transforming barren land into fertile ground. The Hebrew may be a Piel participle functioning substantivally, though some suggest reading it as an abstract noun. The multilingual glosses reveal translators' uncertainty, with some treating it as a verbal form ('causes miscarriage') and others as a nominal ('miscarriage'). What is clear is the association with reproductive loss and the reversal of that curse through prophetic intervention.

(2×) The context in 2 Kings is one of environmental healing: bad water leads to miscarriages and land sterility, and Elisha's miracle reverses both. The cross-linguistic evidence shows translators torn between verbal and nominal readings, but all agree on the core semantic content: reproductive failure. The Spanish 'causa abortos' and English 'causes miscarriage' favor the participial reading, aligning with BDB's suggestion of a Piel participle. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS

en: causes-miscarriage, or-miscarriage | es: causa-abortos, ni-abortos | fr: causes-miscarriage, ou-miscarriage | de: causes-miscarriage, oder-miscarriage 2Kgs 2:19; 2Kgs 2:21

שֵׂכֶל H7922 Conj-w / N-ms (16×)

Prudence, insight, and practical understanding; rarely cunning or shrewdness used for self-serving ends.

A noun from the root s-k-l ('to be wise, prudent'), this word denotes the kind of intelligence that discerns rightly and acts wisely. It is overwhelmingly positive in Scripture: Abigail is praised as a woman of 'good sense' (1 Sam 25:3), the Chronicler values leaders who counsel 'with insight' (1 Chr 26:14), and Proverbs celebrates it as a fountain of life for its possessor (Prov 16:22). Nehemiah 8:8 uses it for the act of making the Torah's meaning clear. In one striking exception, Daniel 8:25 applies the word to the calculating shrewdness of an adversarial ruler, showing that the same faculty of discernment can serve either godly or sinister purposes.

1. understanding, insight, prudence (15×) Prudence, insight, understanding, and practical wisdom viewed as a positive intellectual and moral faculty. Often paired with binah ('discernment,' 1 Chr 22:12; 2 Chr 2:11) or modified by tov ('good,' Prov 3:4; 13:15; Ps 111:10), it describes the capacity to perceive truth and act rightly. Nehemiah 8:8 uses it for expository clarity: the Levites 'set forth the understanding' of the Law. Spanish 'entendimiento' and 'prudencia,' along with German 'Verstand,' all capture this core meaning of sound discernment. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: and-good, discretion, from-understanding | es: Entendimiento, Prudencia, buen-entendimiento | fr: [בשכל], [שכל], de-prudence | de: Verstand, Verständnis, [בשכל] 1Sam 25:3; 1Chr 22:12; 1Chr 26:14; 2Chr 2:12; 2Chr 30:22

2. cunning, shrewdness (1×) Cunning, shrewdness, or calculating cleverness employed for self-serving or morally suspect purposes. Attested only in Daniel 8:25, where the visionary adversary succeeds through 'his cunning' (siklo), using the same faculty of discernment for destructive scheming. French renders it 'intelligence' (neutral), while English and Spanish gloss it 'cunning' and 'astucia,' marking the pejorative shift from wisdom to craftiness. MIND UNDERSTANDING

en: his-cunning | es: astucia-de-él | fr: intelligence | de: [שכלו] Dan 8:25

שִׁכְלִים H7923 N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

bereavement, childlessness (abstract state)

