Built on the adjective loipos ('remaining'), this neuter form to loipon serves as one of Paul's favorite transition words, signaling 'finally' or 'furthermore' as he pivots to closing exhortations (Phil 3:1; 4:8; 2 Cor 13:11; 1 Thess 4:1; 2 Thess 3:1). Yet it retains its adjectival force in passages like Matt 26:45 and Mark 14:41, where Jesus says 'sleep on for the remaining time,' and in 1 Cor 7:29, where 'the remaining time is short.' A third, purely temporal use appears in 2 Tim 4:8: 'henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness.' Spanish 'finalmente' and French 'désormais' nicely distinguish the discourse and temporal shades.

1. finally, furthermore (8×) Discourse marker: 'finally, furthermore, beyond that.' Paul uses to loipon to shift to new instructions or wrap up an argument (1 Cor 1:16; 4:2; 2 Cor 13:11; Phil 3:1; 4:8). In Acts 27:20, it marks a narrative turning point: 'finally all hope was abandoned.' Spanish 'finalmente / además' and German 'schliesslich' confirm the transitional-conclusion function across the eight occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beyond-that, finally | es: Finalmente, además, demás | fr: désormais | de: schliesslich, λοιπὸν Acts 27:20; 1Cor 1:16; 1Cor 4:2; 2Cor 13:11; Phil 3:1

2. remaining, the rest (4×) Adjectival or substantival: 'remaining, the rest, what is left.' Jesus tells the disciples to sleep 'the remaining time' in Gethsemane (Matt 26:45; Mark 14:41), Paul says 'the remaining time is shortened' (1 Cor 7:29), and Hebrews 10:13 speaks of waiting until enemies are made a footstool 'for the rest.' Spanish 'que queda / restante / demás' and French 'désormais' reflect the 'leftover' nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: henceforth, remaining | es: demás, que-queda, restante | fr: désormais | de: schliesslich, λοιπὸν Matt 26:45; Mark 14:41; 1Cor 7:29; Heb 10:13

3. henceforth, from now on (1×) Temporal adverb: 'henceforth, from now on.' In 2 Tim 4:8, Paul declares that 'henceforth' the crown of righteousness awaits him—marking a transition in time rather than in discourse. Spanish 'en lo demás' captures the forward-looking orientation, distinguishing this from the discourse-structuring function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: henceforth | es: en-lo-demás | fr: désormais | de: schliesslich 2Tim 4:8

λοιπός G3064 Adj-GNS (2×)

remaining, the rest; in neuter, 'henceforth' or 'as for the rest,' introducing final instructions

What remains or is left over—the rest. Paul uses the genitive neuter form (τοῦ λοιποῦ) as a transitional phrase meaning 'henceforth,' 'finally,' or 'from now on.' In Galatians 6:17 it signals his closing words: 'From now on, let no one trouble me.' In Ephesians 6:10 it introduces final exhortations: 'Finally, be strong in the Lord.' Classical Greek used it for remaining time, future time, or simply what's left over. The lexical range extends from counting leftover ships to marking future time.

(2×) Both occurrences use the genitive neuter as a temporal-transitional formula, marking the letter's conclusion. This matches classical usage where 'the remaining time' naturally meant 'the future' or 'henceforth.' Paul employs it to signal he's wrapping up, turning to final instructions. German 'fortan' (henceforth) captures the temporal sense precisely, while Spanish 'demás' (the rest) stays more neutral. The phrase functions like our 'finally' or 'in conclusion.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rest | es: demás, restante | fr: λοιποῦ | de: fortan Gal 6:17; Eph 6:10

Λουκᾶς G3065 N-NMS (3×)

Luke; the physician and Gospel writer, Paul's traveling companion

Luke, likely a Gentile believer (based on Colossians 4:14 distinguishing him from 'those of the circumcision'), served as Paul's companion during portions of his missionary journeys, as evidenced by the 'we' sections in Acts. Paul affectionately calls him 'the beloved physician' (Colossians 4:14), suggesting both medical skill and personal warmth. When most had deserted Paul during his final imprisonment, 'Luke alone is with me' (2 Timothy 4:11)—a testament to faithful friendship. Tradition credits Luke with authoring both the Gospel bearing his name and Acts. His careful historical research, attention to medical details, and concern for the marginalized shine through both volumes.

(3×) Luke, Paul's companion and the 'beloved physician' (Colossians 4:14). This Gentile believer traveled with Paul during portions of his missionary journeys (evident in Acts' 'we' passages) and authored the Gospel of Luke and Acts. In Paul's final imprisonment, when most had abandoned him, 'only Luke is with me' (2 Timothy 4:11), demonstrating faithful loyalty. Philemon 24 lists him among Paul's 'fellow workers,' indicating active partnership in gospel ministry, not merely medical attendance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Loukas | es: Loukâs | fr: Λουκᾶς | de: Lukas Col 4:14; 2Tim 4:11; Phlm 1:24

λούκιος G3066 N-NMS (2×)

Lucius, a Latin personal name meaning 'light'; borne by several early Christians

A common Latin name meaning 'light,' borne by at least two men in the New Testament. Lucius of Cyrene appears among the prophets and teachers at Antioch (Acts 13:1), part of the leadership team that sent out Paul and Barnabas. Another Lucius sends greetings in Romans 16:21, identified as Paul's 'kinsman'—likely meaning fellow Jew. Whether these are the same person is debated. The name was popular throughout the Roman world, making multiple bearers unsurprising.

(2×) The two biblical occurrences may refer to one person or two different men named Lucius. Acts 13:1 places one Lucius among Antioch's diverse leadership—the church that launched Paul's mission work. Romans 16:21 includes a Lucius among Paul's fellow workers sending greetings. The Latin etymology (from lux, 'light') gave the name symbolic resonance for early Christians. All translations simply transliterate, sometimes with minor spelling variations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Loukios | es: Loúkios | fr: Lucius | de: Lucius, Λούκιος Acts 13:1; Rom 16:21

λουτρόν G3067 N-GNS (2×)
washing, a bath; the water or act of ceremonial or physical washing
The act or water of washing, whether physical bathing or ceremonial cleansing. Paul uses it metaphorically in Ephesians 5:26 for Christ's purifying work through 'the washing of water with the word.' Titus 3:5 speaks of 'the washing of regeneration'—baptism as the sign of new birth. Classical Greek used it for bathhouses, bathing establishments, bathwater, or the act of bathing itself. Ancient contexts included the ritual conveying of water for a bride's prenuptial bath.

(2×) Both New Testament uses are metaphorical-sacramental, connecting washing imagery with spiritual transformation. Ephesians links washing to the word; Titus to regeneration and renewal by the Spirit. Classical usage spanned bathhouses, bathwater, and ceremonial washing, including nuptial rites. The purification imagery resonates deeply in cultures where ritual washing marked transitions and status changes. The German 'Waschung' and Spanish 'lavamiento' preserve the washing sense directly. WASHING AND BATHING en: washing | es: lavamiento | fr: λουτροῦ, λουτρῷ | de: Waschung Eph 5:26; Titus 3:5

λούω G3068 V-AIA-3S (5×)
To wash or bathe the whole body, as distinct from washing only the hands or feet.
This verb denotes a full-body washing or bathing, contrasting with nipto, which refers to washing a specific part like hands or feet. Jesus draws on this distinction in John 13:10: 'The one who has bathed (leloumenos) needs only to wash his feet.' In Acts, the word appears in its straightforward sense — Tabitha's body is washed after death (9:37) and the Philippian jailer washes Paul and Silas's wounds (16:33). Hebrews 10:22 spiritualizes the image: believers approach God 'with bodies washed with pure water.' Second Peter 2:22 uses it of a sow returning to wallowing after being washed.

(5×) To wash or bathe the whole body — a thorough cleansing as opposed to a partial washing. The verb appears in both literal and figurative contexts. John 13:10 establishes the key lexical contrast with nipto: one who has been fully bathed (louo) needs only a partial washing. Acts uses it for post-mortem preparation of a body (9:37) and for wound-washing (16:33). Hebrews 10:22 applies it metaphorically to spiritual purification, and 2 Pet 2:22 employs it in a proverb about a washed sow returning to mud. The multilingual evidence (spa: lavados/lavando, fra: laver, deu: gewaschen) uniformly renders it with the standard word for 'wash/bathe.' WASHING AND BATHING en: having-bathed, having-been-washed, having-washed | es: habiéndose-lavado, lavados, lavando | fr: laver | de: gewaschen, λούσαντες, ἔλουσεν John 13:10; Acts 9:37; Acts 16:33; Heb 10:22; 2Pet 2:22

Λύδδα G3069 N-AFS (3×)
Lydda; a town in Judea located on the coastal plain between Joppa and Jerusalem Lydda (modern Lod in Israel) was a significant town on the road between Jerusalem and the Mediterranean coast, about 11 miles southeast of Joppa. It had a substantial Jewish population in the first century. Acts 9 recounts Peter's visit there during his itinerant ministry. He found Aeneas, a paralytic bedridden for eight years, healed him in Jesus' name, and as a result 'all the residents of Lydda and Sharon turned to the Lord' (Acts 9:32-35). From Lydda, Peter was summoned to nearby Joppa when Dorcas died (9:38). The town served as a strategic center for early Christian expansion in coastal Judea.

(3×) Lydda, a town in Judea on the coastal plain. Acts 9:32 introduces Peter's visit: 'Now as Peter went here and there among them all, he came down also to the saints who lived at Lydda.' There he healed Aeneas, paralyzed eight years (9:33-34), resulting in widespread conversion: 'all the residents of Lydda and Sharon saw him and turned to the Lord' (9:35). From Lydda, disciples summoned Peter to Joppa when Tabitha died (9:38). The town appears as a key site in Peter's coastal Judean ministry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Lydda | es: Lýdas | fr: Lydda | de: Λύδδα, Λύδδας Acts 9:32; Acts 9:35; Acts 9:38

Λῡδία G3070 N-AFS (2×)
Lydia, a region in western Asia Minor; also a woman from Thyatira named after the region Either the geographical region of Lydia in Asia Minor or the woman named after it. Acts mentions Lydia twice—a businesswoman from Thyatira (in Lydia) who sold purple cloth. She becomes Paul's first European convert, opening her home to the missionary team. Her name likely indicates her ethnic origin. Ancient Lydia was known for wealth, purple dye industry, and as the birthplace of coined money. The region appears in classical texts from Herodotus onward.

(2×) Both Acts references (16:14, 16:40) concern the purple merchant Lydia who hosted Paul's team in Philippi. Her business—selling purple fabric—connects to her homeland's famous industry. The lexicon notes Lydia was an important region, home to cities like Sardis. Her immediate response to the gospel and hospitality mark her as a crucial figure in Christianity's westward spread. All translations preserve the name unchanged. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Lydia | es: Lydía | fr: Lydie | de: Λυδία, Λυδίαν Acts 16:14; Acts 16:40

Λῡκᾱονία G3071 N-GFS (1×)
Lycaonia, inland region of south-central Asia Minor Lycaonia was a plateau region in south-central Asia Minor, inhabited by a distinct ethnic group with their own language. Important cities included Lystra, Derbe, and Iconium. Acts 14:6 mentions Paul and Barnabas fleeing to the Lycaonian cities during their first missionary journey, encountering both hospitality and hostility in this culturally mixed frontier region.

(1×) Acts 14:6 records Paul and Barnabas fleeing persecution in Iconium to reach the cities of Lycaonia—Lystra and Derbe. This region's cultural distinctiveness is evident in Acts 14:11, where locals spoke Lycaonian after witnessing Paul's miracle. The multilingual glosses (Lykaonia, Lykaonía, Lycaonie) preserve the geographical designation for this inland Anatolian territory, significant in early Christian mission expansion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Lykaonia | es: Lykaonía | fr: Lycaonie | de: Λυκαονίας Acts 14:6

Λυκαονιστί G3072 Adv (1×)
in the Lycaonian language
This adverb indicates speech in the Lycaonian language, the native tongue of Lycaonia distinct from Greek or Latin. Acts 14:11 records that after Paul healed a lame man in Lystra, the crowd shouted in Lycaonian that the gods had come down in human form. This linguistic detail reveals the cultural gap between the apostles and the local population.

(1×) Acts 14:11 notes that the Lycaonian crowd spoke in their native language, which Paul and Barnabas evidently did not immediately understand, leading to confusion about the sacrifice preparations. The multilingual glosses (in-Lycaonian, en-Lykaonistí, Lycaonien) preserve the adverbial form indicating language medium. This detail highlights the linguistic diversity of the ancient world and the challenges of cross-cultural gospel proclamation. MANNER ADVERBS

en: in-Lycaonian | es: en-Lykaonistí | fr: Lycaonien | de: Λυκαονιστὶ Acts 14:11

Λῡκία G3073 N-GFS (1×)

Lycia, coastal region in southwestern Asia Minor

Lycia was a mountainous coastal region in southwestern Asia Minor, known for its distinctive culture and federation of city-states. The region included important ports like Patara and Myra. Acts 27:5 mentions Paul's ship sailing across the sea off Cilicia and Pamphylia until reaching Myra in Lycia during his voyage to Rome.

(1×) Acts 27:5 records that Paul's ship reached Myra, a major port in Lycia, during the perilous journey to Rome. Lycia was strategically located on Mediterranean trade routes. The multilingual glosses show some variation (Lukia, Lykía, Lystre) reflecting textual or geographical uncertainties, though Lycia as the southwestern Anatolian coastal region is the standard identification for this stage of Paul's sea journey. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Lukia | es: de-Lykía | fr: Lystre | de: Λυκίας Acts 27:5

λύκος G3074 N-NMS (6×)

Wolf; a predatory canine used literally of the animal and figuratively of dangerous, deceptive persons.

The lykos is the quintessential predator of the ancient pastoral world, the enemy the shepherd must guard against. Jesus draws on this deeply familiar image both literally and metaphorically: wolves come in sheep's clothing as false prophets (Matthew 7:15), and the disciples are sent out as sheep among wolves (Matthew 10:16; Luke 10:3). In John 10:12 the hired hand flees when the wolf attacks, contrasting with the Good Shepherd who lays down his life. Spanish consistently renders it 'lobo,' while French uses 'loup,' both preserving the predatory force.

wolf (6×) A wolf, the predatory canine animal, employed both in literal and figurative senses. Literally it denotes the wild animal that threatens flocks, as in John 10:12 where the wolf snatches and scatters the sheep. Figuratively, Jesus uses it to characterize false prophets who disguise themselves in sheep's clothing (Matt 7:15) and the hostile world into which the disciples are sent (Matt 10:16; Luke 10:3). The metaphor trades on the wolf's reputation as cunning, rapacious, and merciless, a picture consistent across all the multilingual glosses: Spanish 'lobo,' French 'loup,' German 'Wolf' all carry the same predatory connotation without softening. LIVING CREATURES

en: of-wolves, wolf, wolves | es: de-lobos, lobo, lobos | fr: loup | de: Wolf, λύκοι, λύκων Matt 7:15; Matt 10:16; Luke 10:3; John 10:12

λῡμαίνομαι G3075 V-IIM/P-3S (1×)

to ravage, devastate, destroy violently

This verb describes violent destruction or devastation, originally used for the destructive cleaning work of fullers but extended to any ruinous damage. In Acts 8:3, it characterizes Saul's persecution of the church before his conversion—he was ravaging the church, entering house after house, dragging off men and women to prison.

(1×) Acts 8:3 employs this vivid verb to describe Saul's pre-conversion persecution: he ravaged the church, invading homes and imprisoning believers. The term's violent intensity captures Saul's zeal as a persecutor. Multilingual glosses (was-ravaging, asolaba, dévaster) reflect the destructive force implied, making his later transformation to Paul the apostle all the more dramatic and evidence of grace's power. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: was-ravaging | es: asolaba | fr: dévaster | de: ἐλυμαίνετο Acts 8:3

λῡπ-έω G3076 V-AIP-3P (26×)

To grieve or cause grief; to experience deep sorrow or to make another sorrowful.

Rooted in the noun lype (pain, grief), this verb moves in two directions: inward and outward. Most New Testament uses describe the experience of being grieved – the disciples' sorrow at the Passion prediction (Matt 17:23), the rich young man's sadness at Jesus' demand (Matt 19:22), and Peter's hurt when questioned a third time (John 21:17). Paul's Corinthian correspondence reveals the causative side: he reflects carefully on whether and how he 'grieved' the church (2 Cor 2:2-5; 7:8-9), distinguishing godly sorrow from worldly grief. French 'attrister' and Spanish 'entristecer' mirror both directions naturally.

1. to be grieved, feel sorrow (20×) To be grieved, to feel sorrow or distress as an emotional response. This intransitive or passive use dominates the NT (about 20 occurrences). The disciples are grieved at predictions of the Passion (Matt 17:23), Herod is grieved at his oath (Matt 14:9), and the young ruler goes away sorrowing (Matt 19:22). German 'betruebt-werden' (to become saddened) highlights the passive, experiential quality of this grief. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: being-grieved, grieving, having-been-grieved | es: Se-entristeció, a-entristecerse, apenado | fr: attrister, s'attrister | de: betruebt-werden, λυπεῖσθαι, λυπηθεὶς Matt 14:9; Matt 17:23; Matt 18:31; Matt 19:22; Matt 26:22

2. to grieve someone, cause sorrow (6×) To grieve someone, to cause sorrow in another person. A transitive, causative use found especially in Paul's letters to Corinth, where he wrestles with whether his letter caused pain (2 Cor 2:2, 2:5, 7:8). Spanish distinguishes this nicely: 'entristeció' (he saddened someone) versus the reflexive 'se entristeció' (he became sad). The usage implies moral weight – one is responsible for the grief one causes. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: I-grieved, grieve, grieved | es: contristéis, entristeció, entristecí | fr: attrister, s'attrister | de: betruebt-werden 2Cor 2:2; 2Cor 2:5; 2Cor 7:8

λῡπ-η G3077 N-NFS (16×)

Grief, sorrow, or pain of heart; deep emotional distress, often contrasted with joy.

Lype covers the full spectrum of inner anguish, from acute grief to lingering sadness. Its richest NT concentration appears in the Upper Room discourse, where Jesus tells his disciples that their sorrow will turn to joy, likening it to a woman's birth pangs (John 16:20-22). Paul writes of a godly sorrow that produces repentance (2 Cor 7:10), distinguishing it from worldly sorrow that leads to death. In Gethsemane, the disciples sleep from lype (Luke 22:45). Spanish tristeza, French tristesse, and German Trauer/Traurigkeit all center on grief of the soul, confirming the word's essentially emotional register across languages.

grief / sorrow / pain (16×) Deep emotional distress encompassing grief, sorrow, and heartache. The Johannine farewell discourse provides the fullest portrait: sorrow fills the disciples' hearts at Jesus' departure but will be transformed into unassailable joy (John 16:6, 20-22). Paul develops a theology of lype, distinguishing a godly sorrow that produces repentance from a worldly sorrow that produces death (2 Cor 7:10). The Gethsemane scene shows its physical toll as the disciples fall asleep from grief (Luke 22:45). Multilingual glosses uniformly select emotion-of-sadness terms, reflecting a single cohesive sense. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: grief, griefs, of-grief | es: de-tristeza, tristeza, tristezas | fr: tristesse | de: Trauer, Traurigkeit Luke 22:45; John 16:6; John 16:20; John 16:21; John 16:22

Λυσανίας G3078 N-GMS (1×)

Lysanias, tetrarch of Abilene in Luke's chronology

Lysanias was the tetrarch of Abilene, a small territory northwest of Damascus, mentioned in Luke's careful dating of John the Baptist's ministry. Luke 3:1 places John's prophetic emergence in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar, when Lysanias governed Abilene. Historical evidence confirms a Lysanias ruling this region in the period Luke describes.

(1×) Luke 3:1 includes Lysanias among the rulers anchoring the chronology for John the Baptist's ministry. By naming multiple secular authorities—Roman, Herodian, and local—Luke establishes precise historical context. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with standard variations, recognizing Lysanias as the historical tetrarch of Abilene whose governance provides temporal framework for gospel events. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Lysanias | es: de-Lysanías | fr: Lysanias | de: Λυσανίου Luke 3:1

Λυσίας G3079 N-NMS (3×)

Lysias; the Roman tribune (Claudius Lysias) who rescued Paul and commanded the Jerusalem garrison

Claudius Lysias was the Roman tribune (military commander) in charge of the garrison in Jerusalem's Fortress Antonia during Paul's final visit to the city. When a mob attacked Paul in the temple courts, Lysias rescued him with soldiers, initially mistaking him for an Egyptian revolutionary (Acts 21:31-38). After discovering a plot to assassinate Paul, Lysias transferred him under heavy guard to Caesarea and Governor Felix (Acts 23:26ff). His official letter to Felix (23:26) identifies him as 'Claudius Lysias'—Claudius being his Roman family name, Lysias his Greek personal name. His actions, while self-serving, providentially protected Paul.

(3×) Lysias, specifically Claudius Lysias, the Roman tribune (military commander) stationed in Jerusalem. Acts 23:26 preserves his letter to Felix beginning 'Claudius Lysias, to his Excellency the governor Felix, greetings.' He rescued Paul from a Jewish mob (21:31-32), discovered a plot against Paul's life, and transferred him safely to Caesarea. Acts 24:7, 22 refer to him in the context of Paul's trial, where the Jewish leaders wanted Lysias to testify, but Felix delayed proceedings awaiting his arrival. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lusias | es: Lysías | fr: Lysias | de: Λυσίας Acts 23:26; Acts 24:7; Acts 24:22

λύσις G3080 N-AFS (1×)

release, loosing, dissolution (especially from marriage)

This noun denotes a loosing or releasing from bonds, whether literal chains, moral obligations, or legal relationships. In 1 Corinthians 7:27, Paul uses it in the context of marriage, asking whether one has been released from a wife. The term's root meaning involves untying or setting free from a binding commitment.

(1×) First Corinthians 7:27 poses parallel questions: Are you bound to a wife? Do not seek release. Are you free from a wife? Do not seek marriage. Paul's counsel addresses the 'present distress' and prioritizes undivided devotion to the Lord. The multilingual glosses (release, separación, délivrance, Loesung) capture the sense of dissolution or freedom from marital bond, though Paul's point is contentment in one's present state. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: release | es: separación | fr: délivrance | de: Loesung 1Cor 7:27

λῠσῐτελ-έω G3081 V-PIA-3S (1×)

it is profitable, it is better, it pays

This impersonal verb expresses that something is advantageous, profitable, or better—it pays or benefits. Classical usage often appeared in commercial contexts or ethical deliberations about what course of action yields benefit. Jesus uses it in Luke 17:2 in a severe warning: it would be better for someone to have a millstone around their neck than to cause a little one to stumble.

(1×) Luke 17:2 contains Jesus' sobering statement that it would be more profitable (less disastrous) for an offender to be drowned than to cause a believer to sin. The multilingual glosses (it-is-better, conviene, il-vaut-mieux) capture the comparative sense. Jesus' hyperbolic warning emphasizes the gravity of leading others astray, measuring eternal consequences against even the most violent physical death. MORAL GOODNESS

en: It-is-better | es: conviene | fr: il-vaut-mieux | de: λυσιτελεῖ Luke 17:2

λύστρα G3082 N-DNP (6×)

Lystra, a city in the Roman province of Lycaonia in Asia Minor, associated with Paul's missionary journeys.

Lystra was a small Roman colony in the region of Lycaonia, significant in the book of Acts as a repeated stop on Paul's missionary travels. It was there that Paul healed a man crippled from birth and was mistakenly worshiped as Hermes (Acts 14:8-18), and later stoned nearly to death. Timothy, Paul's trusted coworker, was from Lystra (Acts 16:1-2), making the city a personal landmark in the apostle's ministry. Paul recalls his sufferings there in 2 Timothy 3:11 as testimony to God's deliverance.

Lystra (6×) The proper name of a city in Lycaonia, a region of south-central Asia Minor (modern Turkey). Paul and Barnabas fled there from Iconium (Acts 14:6), and it became a key location in Paul's first and second missionary journeys. The city is notable as the site of a miraculous healing and subsequent near-fatal stoning of Paul (Acts 14:8-19), and as the hometown of Timothy (Acts 16:1-2). The name appears with some grammatical variation in Greek (both feminine singular and neuter plural forms), reflected in the diverse transliterations across languages: Spanish 'Listra,' French 'Lystre,' German and English 'Lystra.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Lystra | es: Listra, Lýstra | fr: Lystre, Λύστροις | de: Lystra, Λύστραν, Λύστροις Acts 14:6; Acts 14:8; Acts 14:21; Acts 16:1; Acts 16:2

λύτρ-ον G3083 N-ANS (2×)

a ransom price, the payment required to release captives or redeem slaves

The price paid to free a slave or release a captive—a ransom. Jesus uses it in his most famous self-description (Matthew 20:28, Mark 10:45): the Son of Man came to give his life 'as a ransom for many.' The image is commercial-legal: prisoners of war could be ransomed; slaves could buy freedom. The Septuagint uses it for the atonement money paid in Exodus—'a ransom for his soul.' Classical Greek distinguished ransom money from the gifts freely given, rewards, or prizes. The plural typically referred to ransom payments.

(2×) Jesus' identical saying in Matthew and Mark defines his mission in ransom terms—purchasing freedom through his death. The background includes war captives being ransomed, slaves being manumitted, and the Exodus atonement money. Paul later develops this into full-fledged redemption theology. The lexicon notes Homeric precedent for 'ransom of Hector' and frequent use for prisoners' release. Every translation preserves the ransom/redemption imagery: Spanish rescate, French rançon, German Lösegeld. RANSOM LIFE PRICE

en: a-ransom | es: rescate | fr: rançon | de: Loesegeld, λύτρον Matt 20:28; Mark 10:45

λυτρ-όω G3084 V-AIP-2P (3×)

to redeem, ransom; to liberate by paying a price, to deliver from bondage through purchase

This word conveys the concept of setting someone free through payment of a ransom price. In the ancient world, it commonly referred to paying money to release a prisoner of war, redeem a pledge, or free a slave. The New Testament uses it theologically for spiritual redemption. Luke 24:21 expresses the disciples' dashed hopes that Jesus was 'the one to redeem Israel.' Titus 2:14 declares that Jesus 'gave himself for us to redeem us from all lawlessness.' 1 Peter 1:18 reminds believers they were 'redeemed...not with perishable things such as silver or gold, but with the precious blood of Christ.' The imagery emphasizes costly liberation.

(3×) To redeem, ransom, or deliver by paying a price. The disappointed Emmaus disciples said of Jesus, 'we had hoped that he was the one to redeem Israel' (Luke 24:21), expecting political-national deliverance. Titus 2:14 explains Jesus 'gave himself for us to redeem us from all lawlessness and to purify for himself a people for his own possession'—purchasing freedom from sin's bondage. 1 Peter 1:18 emphasizes the cost: 'you were redeemed...not with perishable things...but with the precious blood of Christ,' stressing redemption's infinite price. REDEEM AND RANSOM

en: he-might-redeem, to-redeem, you-were-redeemed | es: fuisteis-redimidos, nos-redimiera, redimir | fr: racheter | de: erloesen, λυτροῦσθαι Luke 24:21; Titus 2:14; 1Pet 1:18

λύτρ-ωσις G3085 N-AFS (3×)

redemption; the act of ransoming or liberating through payment of a price

This noun form describes the act or process of redemption—setting captives free through ransom payment. While the verb emphasizes the action of redeeming, the noun focuses on redemption as an accomplished fact or expected event. Luke 1:68 blesses God because 'he has visited and redeemed his people,' celebrating redemption as accomplished through the coming Messiah. Similarly, Anna spoke of the infant Jesus 'to all who were waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem' (Luke 2:38). Hebrews 9:12 declares that Christ 'secured an eternal redemption' through his own blood rather than animal sacrifices. The word captures both the costliness and completeness of Christ's redemptive work.

(3×) Redemption, ransom, or deliverance. Zechariah's prophecy blesses God because 'he has visited his people and redeemed them' (Luke 1:68), celebrating the redemption accomplished through Messiah's coming. Anna spoke 'of him to all who were waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem' (Luke 2:38)—those hoping for Israel's deliverance. Hebrews 9:12 contrasts Christ entering the holy places 'by means of his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption'—not temporary, repeated animal sacrifices, but permanent, complete deliverance. REDEMPTION RANSOM

en: redemption | es: redención | fr: rachat | de: Erloesung, λύτρωσιν Luke 1:68; Luke 2:38; Heb 9:12

λυτρ-ωτής G3086 N-AMS (1×)

redeemer, deliverer, ransomer

This noun designates one who liberates captives by paying ransom or effecting deliverance. It carries both commercial connotations (purchasing freedom) and theological significance (divine rescue). In Acts 7:35, Stephen applies it to Moses, whom God sent as both ruler and deliverer to Israel, prefiguring Christ's greater redemptive work.

(1×) Acts 7:35 describes Moses as the one Israel rejected, yet God sent him as both ruler and redeemer through the angel in the burning bush. Stephen's speech highlights Israel's pattern of rejecting God's appointed deliverers. The multilingual glosses (redeemer, redentor, libérateur) capture the liberation theme central to Exodus and early Christian typology, seeing Moses as foreshadowing Christ the ultimate Redeemer. KINSMAN-REDEEMER DIVINE

en: a-redeemer | es: redentor | fr: libérateur | de: λυτρωτὴν Acts 7:35

λυχν-ία G3087 N-AFP (12×)

lampstand — a stand for holding lamps, including the temple menorah and metaphorical church-lampstands

Lychnia is the stand upon which a lamp (lychnos) is placed so its light can fill a room. In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus uses the image proverbially: no one lights a lamp and puts it under a basket rather than on the lychnia (Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; 11:33). Hebrews 9:2 references the golden lampstand of the tabernacle — the seven-branched menorah. In Revelation, the term becomes powerfully symbolic: seven golden lampstands represent seven churches (Rev 1:12-13, 20; 2:1, 5), and the two witnesses are called two lampstands standing before the Lord (Rev 11:4). Spanish 'candelero,' French 'chandelier,' and German 'Leuchter' all preserve the functional sense of a light-elevating stand.

lampstand / candelabrum (12×) A stand or holder designed to elevate a lamp so that it illuminates a room or space, used both literally and symbolically. In the Synoptic sayings, Jesus uses it as a metaphor for visible discipleship — a lamp belongs on the lampstand, not under a basket (Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16). Hebrews 9:2 refers to the golden menorah of the tabernacle. In Revelation, seven golden lampstands symbolize the seven churches of Asia (Rev 1:12, 20; 2:1, 5), and two lampstands represent the two prophetic witnesses (Rev 11:4). Spanish 'candelabro/candelero' and French 'chandelier' confirm the artifact's light-bearing function. All 12 occurrences share this core meaning across literal, cultic, and symbolic registers. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: a-lampstand, lampstand, lampstands | es: candelabro, candelero, candeleros | fr: chandelier | de: Leuchter, λυχνίαν, λυχνίαν– Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; Luke 11:33; Heb 9:2

λύχνος G3088 N-AMS (14×)

lamp — a portable oil lamp used for domestic light, often a metaphor for spiritual illumination or witness

Lychnos is the ordinary clay oil lamp of the ancient Mediterranean household — small, portable, and placed on a stand to light the room. Jesus draws on this utterly familiar object to make some of his most memorable points: no one lights a lamp and hides it under a basket (Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; 11:33). The lamp of the body is the eye (Matt 6:22; Luke 11:34). John the Baptist was a burning and shining lychnos (John 5:35). In Revelation, the lamp disappears from Babylon as a sign of total desolation (Rev 18:23). Spanish 'lampara,' French 'lampe,' and German 'Lampe' all translate the concrete artifact; the metaphorical weight comes from context.

lamp / light (14×) A portable oil lamp, the standard household light source of the ancient world, placed on a lampstand to illuminate a room. Used literally for the physical object (Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; 11:33; 15:8; Rev 18:23) and figuratively for sources of spiritual light: the eye as the lamp of the body (Matt 6:22; Luke 11:34, 36), John the Baptist as a burning lamp (John 5:35), and the Lamb as the eschatological lamp of the New Jerusalem (Rev 21:23). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'lampara,' French 'lampe,' German 'Lampe' — uniformly point to the concrete artifact, while the metaphorical extension is carried entirely by discourse context. LAMPS AND TORCHES en: a-lamp, lamp, lamps | es: a-lámpara, de-lámpara, de-lámpara, | fr: lampe | de: Lampe Matt 5:15; Matt 6:22; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; Luke 11:33

λύω G3089 V-AIP-3P (42×)

To loose, untie, release, dissolve, break, or destroy; from physical unbinding to legal annulment and cosmic dissolution.

Luo is one of those elemental Greek verbs whose physical simplicity — untying a knot — radiates outward into a rich constellation of figurative meanings. At its most literal, it describes untying a donkey's tether (Matt 21:2) or loosing Lazarus from his grave wrappings (John 11:44). But the same word releases a woman from her bond of illness (Luke 13:16), 'breaks' the Sabbath law (John 5:18), 'destroys' the temple (John 2:19), and 'dissolves' the very elements in eschatological fire (2 Pet 3:10-12). Spanish tracks these shifts with precision: desatar for untying, soltar for releasing, quebrantar for law-breaking, destruir for demolishing, and disolver for cosmic dissolution. The binding-and-loosing authority Jesus grants Peter (Matt 16:19) deliberately holds multiple senses in tension — juridical, spiritual, and physical all at once.

1. untie, unfasten physically (20×) To physically untie, unbind, or unfasten something that is secured — the core concrete sense with 20 occurrences. Disciples untie a donkey and its colt (Matt 21:2; Mark 11:2-4; Luke 19:30-33); Lazarus is unbound from his grave cloths (John 11:44); Paul's chains fall loose (Acts 16:26). The binding-and-loosing logion of Matt 16:19 and 18:18 sits here formally but radiates into juridical territory. Spanish desatar, German lösen, French délier, and Korean 풀다 all use their primary 'untie' vocabulary, confirming the physical concreteness. The sandal-strap saying of John the Baptist (Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16; John 1:27) — 'I am not worthy to untie his sandals' — is luo at its most tangible. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: I-loose, Unbind, are-you-untying | es: Desata, Desatadlo, desata | fr: délier | de: loesen, löst Matt 16:19; Matt 18:18; Matt 21:2

2. release, set free (9×) To release or set free a person from bonds, illness, or obligation — 9 occurrences where the emphasis shifts from the physical knot to the state of captivity or constraint being ended. Jesus 'frees' the bent-over woman from eighteen years of satanic bondage (Luke 13:16); God 'loosed the pangs of death' in raising Christ (Acts 2:24); Paul asks whether one is 'released' from a wife (1 Cor 7:27). The Revelation 1:5 variant reading ('loosed us from our sins') carries substitutionary weight. Spanish soltar/liberar and Korean 놓아주다 ('let go') select liberation vocabulary here rather than untying language, confirming a distinct semantic frame. The transition from physical binding to personal liberation is cross-linguistically robust. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: Release, having-freed, having-loosed | es: Desata, fueron-desatados, habiendo-desatado | fr: délier | de: loesen, löst Luke 13:16; Acts 2:24; Acts 22:30; 1Cor 7:27; Rev 1:5

3. dissolve, melt away (4×) To dissolve, melt away, or disintegrate — 4 occurrences clustered in eschatological contexts. In 2 Peter 3:10-12, the heavens 'will be dissolved' with fire and the elements will 'melt with fervent heat'; in Acts 27:41 the ship's stern 'was breaking up' under the waves. Spanish disolver and the participial 'being dissolved' mark the irreversible, entropic character of this sense. German auflösen ('to dissolve') and Korean 녹다/풀어지다 distinguish dissolution from mere unbinding. The cosmic scale of the 2 Peter passages — the entire created order unraveling — pushes luo to its semantic extreme. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: being-dissolved, was-being-broken-up, will-be-dissolved | es: se-rompía, serán-disueltos, siendo-disueltas | fr: délier | de: loesen, löst Acts 27:41; 2Pet 3:10; 2Pet 3:11; 2Pet 3:12

4. break, violate law or Scripture (4×) To break, violate, or annul a law, commandment, or Scripture — 4 occurrences in the Gospels where luo enters the juridical-normative domain. Jesus warns that whoever 'breaks' one of the least commandments will be called least in the kingdom (Matt 5:19); he is accused of 'breaking' the Sabbath (John 5:18); he argues that Scripture 'cannot be broken' (John 10:35). Spanish quebrantar ('to shatter/violate') is the consistent choice, clearly distinct from desatar. Korean 어기다 ('to violate') and German brechen ('to break a rule') confirm that this is not physical loosing but authoritative annulment — the dissolution of a binding norm rather than a binding rope. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: be-broken, breaks, to-be-broken | es: quebrante, rompía, sea-quebrantada | fr: délier | de: loesen, löst Matt 5:19; John 5:18; John 7:23; John 10:35

5. destroy, tear down a structure (4×) To destroy, tear down, or demolish a structure or system — 4 occurrences. Jesus challenges the authorities: 'Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it' (John 2:19); Christ 'broke down the dividing wall of hostility' (Eph 2:14); the Son of God appeared 'to destroy the works of the devil' (1 John 3:8). Spanish destruir/derribar ('destroy/demolish'), Hindi ढाना/नष्ट करना, and Korean 헐다/멸하다 all deploy demolition vocabulary rather than loosing language. The Ephesians and 1 John passages extend the metaphor cosmically — not a building but an entire order of enmity or evil being torn apart. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: Destroy, He-might-destroy, having-broken-down | es: Destruid, derribando, desatar | fr: délier | de: loesen John 2:19; Eph 2:14; 1John 3:8; Rev 5:2

6. (1×) A singular transitional use at Acts 13:43 — 'when the synagogue had broken up' (or 'was dismissed'), describing the dispersal of an assembly after a meeting. Spanish disuelta ('dissolved/dismissed') and English 'broken up' treat the congregation as a gathered unity that is now 'loosed' back into its individual members. This assembly-dissolution sense is well attested in secular Greek (Thucydides, Josephus) but occurs only once in the New Testament, sitting at the boundary between physical dispersal and institutional adjournment. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING

en: having-broken-up | es: disuelta | fr: délier | de: löst Acts 13:43

Λωΐς G3090 N-DFS (1×)

Lois, grandmother of Timothy

Lois was the maternal grandmother of Timothy, Paul's younger co-worker. Second Timothy 1:5 commends her sincere faith, which she passed to her daughter Eunice and grandson Timothy. Her Jewish faith and Scripture instruction laid the foundation for Timothy's later Christian ministry, illustrating the multi-generational transmission of godly heritage.

(1×) Second Timothy 1:5 recalls the sincere faith that dwelt first in Timothy's grandmother Lois, then in his mother Eunice, and now in Timothy himself. Paul's affectionate reference honors the faithful women who shaped Timothy spiritually. The multilingual glosses preserve the name with minimal variation, recognizing Lois as exemplifying the vital role of grandmothers in spiritual formation and the continuity of faith across generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Lois | es: Lōís | fr: Λωΐδι | de: Lois 2Tim 1:5

Λώτ G3091 N-NMS (4×)

Lot; Abraham's nephew who settled in Sodom and was rescued before its destruction.

Lot (Hebrew lot, 'covering' or 'veil') is Abraham's nephew whose story in Genesis serves as a cautionary archetype in the NT. Jesus cites the days of Lot as a parallel to the days of the Son of Man: people were eating, drinking, buying, and selling right up until fire fell from heaven (Luke 17:28-29). The warning 'Remember Lot's wife' (Luke 17:32) became proverbial for the danger of looking back. Peter calls Lot 'righteous' and presents his rescue from Sodom as proof that God knows how to deliver the godly from trial (2 Pet 2:7).

(4×) The personal name Lot, Abraham's nephew, used in the NT as a typological figure for divine judgment and deliverance. In Luke 17:28-29 Jesus compares the sudden destruction of Sodom in Lot's day to the coming of the Son of Man. Luke 17:32 warns against Lot's wife's backward glance. In 2 Pet 2:7 Lot is called 'righteous,' rescued from the lawless – a paradigm of God's ability to save the faithful amid catastrophic judgment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lōt, of-Lōt | es: Lôt, Lŏt, de-Lôt | fr: Lot | de: Lot, Λώτ, Λὼτ Luke 17:28; Luke 17:29; Luke 17:32; 2Pet 2:7

Μαάθ G3092 N-GMS (1×)

Maath, ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy

Maath appears only in Luke's genealogy of Jesus, positioned between Mattathias and Naggai in the post-exilic lineage. Like many names in this section, no additional historical information survives beyond the genealogical record. The name may derive from Hebrew roots, though its etymology and historical identification remain uncertain.

(1×) Occurring once in Luke 3:26, Maath represents one link in the ascending genealogy tracing Jesus back through post-exilic Judaism to David and ultimately Adam. The multilingual evidence uniformly treats this as a transliterated personal name, with consistent rendering across languages reflecting the name's obscurity in historical records beyond this genealogical context. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maath | es: Maáth | fr: Maath | de: Μαὰθ Luke 3:26

Μαγαδάν G3093 N-GFS (1×)

Magadan, a place near the Sea of Galilee

Magadan was a location on or near the Sea of Galilee, mentioned only in Matthew 15:39 after Jesus fed the four thousand. Its exact site remains unidentified, though it may be related to Magdala. The parallel passage in Mark 8:10 has 'Dalmanutha,' suggesting these may be variant names for the same region or nearby localities.

(1×) Matthew 15:39 states that after dismissing the crowds, Jesus got into the boat and went to the region of Magadan. Textual variants and parallel accounts create uncertainty about the precise location. The multilingual glosses (Magadan, Magadán) preserve the name, recognizing it as a Galilean coastal district, possibly identical with or near Magdala, though ancient geographical precision remains elusive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-Magadan | es: de-Magadán | fr: Magadan | de: Μαγαδάν Matt 15:39

Μαγδαληνός G3094 N-NFS (12×)

Magdalene — epithet of Mary from the town of Magdala on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee

Magdalene is not a personal name but a geographic epithet — 'the one from Magdala' — attached exclusively to Mary of Magdala to distinguish her from the other Marys in the Gospel narratives. The town of Magdala (modern Migdal) sat on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, and its name derives from the Hebrew migdal ('tower'). All 12 NT occurrences identify this same woman: the one from whom seven demons were cast out (Mark 16:9; Luke 8:2), who witnessed the crucifixion (Matt 27:56; Mark 15:40; John 19:25), who visited the empty tomb (Matt 28:1; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10; John 20:1), and who became the first witness of the risen Lord (John 20:18). The name is essentially transliterated across all languages: Spanish 'Magdalena,' French 'Madeleine,' German 'Magdalene.'

(12×) A geographic epithet meaning 'of Magdala,' used exclusively to identify Mary Magdalene — distinguishing her from Mary the mother of Jesus and other women named Mary. Derived from the Galilean town of Magdala (Hebrew migdal, 'tower'). Present at the crucifixion (Matt 27:56; Mark 15:40; John 19:25), at the burial (Matt 27:61; Mark 15:47), at the empty tomb (Matt 28:1; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10; John 20:1), and as the first resurrection witness (Mark 16:9; John 20:18). Luke 8:2 adds that seven demons had been cast out of her. All 12 occurrences refer to this single individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Magdalene, Magdalēnē, and- | es: Magdalēnêi, Magdalēnē, Magdalēné | fr: Madeleine | de: Magdalene, Μαγδαληνή, Μαγδαληνὴ Matt 27:56; Matt 27:61; Matt 28:1; Mark 15:40; Mark 15:47

μᾰγεία G3095 N-DFP (1×)

magic, sorcery, occult arts

This noun denotes the practice of magic or sorcery, originally referring to the religious teachings of Persian Magi but extended to occult arts generally. In Acts 8:11, Simon Magus had amazed the Samaritans with his magic arts for a long time, leading them to give him attention. The term reflects the widespread practice of magic in the Greco-Roman world.

(1×) Acts 8:11 explains that Simon had astonished the Samaritans with his magic for a considerable time, causing them to regard him as 'the Great Power of God.' The multilingual glosses (magic-arts, magias, magie) capture the occult dimension. Simon's subsequent encounter with Peter reveals the incompatibility between genuine spiritual power and manipulative magical practices, even when practitioners seek to acquire Christian power. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT en: magic-arts | es: magias | fr: magie | de: μαγείαις Acts 8:11

μᾰγ-εύω G3096 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

practicing magic, performing sorcery

This participle describes someone actively engaged in practicing magic or sorcery. It denotes the ongoing activity of a magician or sorcerer employing supernatural or occult techniques. Acts 8:9 introduces Simon with this participle, identifying him as one who had been practicing magic in the city and amazing the Samaritan people.

(1×) Acts 8:9 presents Simon as a man who had been practicing magic in Samaria, astonishing the population and claiming to be someone great. The multilingual evidence (practicing-magic, practicando-magia, pratiquer-la-magie) emphasizes the active, ongoing nature of his sorcery. This characterization sets up the dramatic contrast when Simon encounters genuine apostolic power and seeks to purchase the Holy Spirit's gifts. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT en: practicing-magic | es: practicando-magia | fr: pratiquer-la-magie | de: μαγεύων Acts 8:9

Μάγος G3097 N-NMS (6×)

Magus; a Persian wise man or priestly sage, or (negatively) a sorcerer, magician, or charlatan practitioner of magic arts.

From Old Persian 'maguš,' this word entered Greek carrying the prestige of the Median priestly caste — men learned in astronomy, dream interpretation, and sacred rites. In Matthew 2, the Magi who visit the infant Jesus embody the honorable sense: foreign sages guided by a star, offering royal gifts. But by the first century the term had also acquired a darker connotation — a practitioner of magic arts, a charlatan who trades on occult power. In Acts 13:6-8, Bar-Jesus (Elymas) is called a magos in this pejorative sense: a false prophet and sorcerer who opposes the gospel. Spanish and French maintain a single root ('mago/mage') for both senses, but the plural 'magos/magi' versus singular 'mago/magician' often signals the distinction contextually.

1. magi (4×) A Magus in the honorable sense: one of the wise men or priestly sages from the East, associated with Persian learning in astronomy and dream interpretation. All four NT occurrences appear in Matthew 2, where the Magi follow a star to worship the newborn king (Matt 2:1, 7, 16). Spanish 'magos' and French 'mage' preserve the reverent, quasi-royal register. These are not mere fortune-tellers but representatives of Gentile wisdom bowing before the Jewish Messiah. MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER

en: magi | es: magos | fr: mage | de: μάγοι, μάγους, μάγων Matt 2:1; Matt 2:7; Matt 2:16

2. magician (2×) A magician, sorcerer, or charlatan — the pejorative extension of the term to anyone who practices magic arts, particularly in opposition to true divine power. In Acts 13:6 Bar-Jesus is described as a 'magos, a Jewish false prophet,' and in 13:8 Elymas 'the magos' actively resists Paul and Barnabas. Spanish 'mago' and German 'μάγος' in these contexts carry the negative charge of fraudulent supernatural pretension, in sharp contrast to the reverent Matthean usage. MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER

en: magician | es: mago | fr: mage | de: μάγον, μάγος – Acts 13:6; Acts 13:8

Μαγώγ G3098 N-AMS (1×)

Magog, nation allied with Gog in eschatological battle

Magog appears in Genesis 10:2 as a descendant of Japheth and in Ezekiel 38-39 as a people allied with Gog in an end-time invasion of Israel. Revelation 20:8 employs the names symbolically for nations deceived by Satan after the millennium, gathered for final battle against God's people. The identification remains debated, with suggestions ranging from Scythians to symbolic representation of hostile nations.

(1×) Revelation 20:8 uses Gog and Magog to represent the nations from the four corners of the earth gathered for eschatological warfare against the saints. Drawing on Ezekiel's prophecy, John employs these names symbolically for end-time opposition to God's kingdom. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name, recognizing Magog as part of apocalyptic imagery for forces arrayed against divine purposes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Magōg | es: Magóg, | fr: Magog | de: Magog Rev 20:8

Μαδιάμ G3099 N-GMS (1×)

Madiam (Μαδιάμ) — the Greek transliteration of Hebrew Midian, referring to the desert region east of the Gulf of Aqaba

This proper name appears in Acts 7:29 during Stephen's recounting of Moses' exile. When Moses fled Egypt after killing the Egyptian, he settled in the land of Midian, a semi-nomadic region associated with Abraham's descendants through Keturah. The Greek form preserves the Hebrew name of both the patriarch Midian and the geographical territory his descendants inhabited, the wilderness where Moses encountered God at the burning bush.

(1×) The genitive form 'of Midian' identifies the desert territory where Moses lived as a shepherd for forty years before his calling. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'de-Madiám,' French 'Madian') confirms this as the standard NT rendering of the Hebrew toponym, marking a crucial transition in Moses' life from Egyptian prince to wilderness shepherd. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: of-Madiam | es: de-Madiám | fr: Madian | de: Μαδιάμ Acts 7:29

μᾰθητ-εύω G3100 V-AMA-2P (4×)

To make a disciple, train as a follower; to be discipled or instructed in the ways of the kingdom.

Matheteuo means to make someone a disciple – to bring them into a relationship of learning and following. Built from mathetes (disciple/learner), this verb carries the full weight of the Great Commission: 'Go and make disciples of all nations' (Matt 28:19). It appears in both active and passive senses: Joseph of Arimathea 'had been discipled' to Jesus (Matt 27:57), a scribe trained for the kingdom draws from treasures old and new (Matt 13:52), and Paul and Barnabas 'made many disciples' in Derbe (Acts 14:21). The verb implies not just initial conversion but ongoing formation.

(4×) To make someone a disciple or to undergo discipleship training. The Great Commission (Matt 28:19) uses the imperative 'make disciples of all nations,' establishing this as the church's central mission verb. Matt 27:57 describes Joseph of Arimathea as 'having been discipled' to Jesus (passive), while Matt 13:52 pictures a scribe 'discipled for the kingdom.' In Acts 14:21 Paul and Barnabas disciple many in Derbe. Spanish 'hacer discípulos' and French 'devenir disciple' together capture both the active and passive dimensions of the word. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: having-been-discipled, having-made-disciples, make-disciples-of | es: fue-hecho-discípulo, haced-discípulos, haciendo-discípulos | fr: devenir-disciple | de: μαθητευθεὶς, μαθητεύσαντες, μαθητεύσατε Matt 13:52; Matt 27:57; Matt 28:19; Acts 14:21

μᾰθητ-ής G3101 N-AMS (263×)

Disciple, learner, pupil; a committed follower of a teacher, especially of Jesus

With 263 New Testament occurrences, mathetes is the signature term for those who follow Jesus. In classical Greek it denoted any student of a philosopher or rhetorician, but the Gospels and Acts concentrate it almost exclusively on Jesus' followers, both the Twelve and the wider circle of adherents. It implies not mere intellectual learning but personal attachment, obedience, and shared mission (Matt 5:1; 10:1). The term also appears for John the Baptist's followers and the Pharisees' students, preserving its older pedagogical sense. German Junger and French disciple both capture the master-apprentice bond at its core.

disciple, learner (263×) A committed learner and follower personally attached to a teacher, used overwhelmingly of Jesus' followers in the Gospels and Acts (Matt 5:1; 8:21). Extends to disciples of John the Baptist (John 1:35) and the Pharisees (Matt 22:16), retaining the classical Greek sense of a student under a master. The rendering as German Junger and French disciple emphasizes the relational bond of discipleship beyond mere academic instruction. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: disciples | es: discípulos | fr: disciple | de: Jünger Matt 5:1; Matt 8:21; Matt 8:23; Matt 9:10; Matt 9:11

μᾰθητ-ής G3102 N-NFS (1×)

μαθήτρια — a female disciple or learner, the feminine form of μαθητής

This rare feminine form appears only in Acts 9:36 to describe Tabitha (Dorcas), explicitly identified as a woman who was a disciple. The term carries the same meaning as its masculine counterpart: one who learns from and follows a teacher. In the NT context, it denotes a follower of Jesus. The explicit use of the feminine form suggests intentionality in Luke's description, highlighting Tabitha's status as a committed disciple known for good works and charity.

(1×) The nominative singular feminine designates Tabitha as a learner and follower of Jesus' way. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'discípula,' French 'disciple') shows translators recognizing this as the feminine counterpart to the common μαθητής, emphasizing that discipleship was not exclusively male in the early Christian community. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: female-disciple | es: discípula | fr: disciple | de: μαθήτρια Acts 9:36

Μαθουσάλα G3103 N-GMS (1×)

Mathousala (Μαθουσάλα) — Greek transliteration of Methuselah, the antediluvian patriarch known for his longevity

This name appears in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (3:37), tracing the lineage back through the primeval patriarchs before Noah. Methuselah, son of Enoch and grandfather of Noah, is famous in Genesis 5:27 for living 969 years, the longest lifespan recorded in Scripture. The Greek form follows the Septuagint's rendering of the Hebrew name, which possibly means 'man of the javelin' or 'when he dies, it shall come' — traditionally linked to the timing of the Flood.

(1×) The genitive form integrates this antediluvian patriarch into Jesus' ancestral line. Cross-linguistic renderings maintain the distinctively Greek form of the Hebrew name, situating Jesus within the grand narrative stretching from creation through the patriarchs, showing continuity between primeval and messianic history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mathousala | es: Mathoushalá | fr: Mathusala | de: Μαθουσαλὰ Luke 3:37

Μεννά G3104 N-GMS (1×)

Menna (Μεννά) — a personal name appearing in Jesus' genealogy, otherwise unknown in biblical or historical records

This name occurs only in Luke 3:31, part of the genealogical section between David and the exile. Unlike Matthew's genealogy which follows the royal line through Solomon, Luke traces through Nathan, David's son. Menna is one of several otherwise unknown figures in this portion of Jesus' ancestry. The variants in manuscript traditions (Μεννᾶς, Μαϊνάν) suggest some uncertainty in the textual transmission, but the name's inclusion underscores Luke's concern to establish Jesus' authentic Davidic lineage through a different branch of the family tree.

(1×) The genitive form positions this individual within the chain of descent from David to Joseph. The multilingual consistency in preserving the Greek form reflects the typical treatment of proper names in genealogies, where transliteration rather than translation preserves the historical record. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Menna | es: Menná | fr: Menna | de: Μεννὰ Luke 3:31

μαίνομαι G3105 V-PIM/P-2P (5×)

To be mad, to rage; to be out of one's mind, whether from divine frenzy, demonic influence, or perceived insanity.

Rooted in the idea of frenzy or rage, mainomai in the NT consistently describes someone perceived as insane or out of their mind. When Jesus speaks provocatively, his opponents dismiss him as demon-possessed and 'mad' (John 10:20). The servant girl Rhoda is told 'You are out of your mind!' when she reports Peter's miraculous release (Acts 12:15). Festus accuses Paul of madness from too much learning (Acts 26:24), which Paul firmly denies (26:25). Paul also warns that unbelievers entering a charismatic worship gathering may conclude the speakers are 'mad' (1 Cor 14:23).

(5×) To be mad, insane, or out of one's mind — to exhibit behavior that onlookers judge as deranged or irrational. In every NT occurrence, the accusation of madness is leveled at someone whose words or actions seem too extraordinary to be sane. Jesus is called mad for his bold claims (John 10:20); Rhoda is dismissed as crazy for her joyful report (Acts 12:15); Paul is accused of learning-induced madness (Acts 26:24-25); and ecstatic worship risks being judged as insanity by outsiders (1 Cor 14:23). The multilingual glosses (spa: Estás-loco, fra: être-fou, deu: wahnsinnig-sein) consistently render it with the standard term for madness or insanity. MADNESS INSANITY

en: I-am-mad, You-are-mad, is-mad | es: Estás-loca, Estás-loco, estoy-loco |

fr: être-fou | de: wahnsinnig-sein, Μαίνῃ, μαίνομαι John 10:20; Acts 12:15; Acts 26:24; Acts 26:25; 1Cor 14:23

μᾰκᾰρ-ίζω G3106 V-FIA-3P (2×)

to call blessed, pronounce happy, or congratulate; to count someone fortunate

To declare someone blessed or fortunate, to pronounce them happy. Mary's Magnificat predicts that all generations will call her blessed (Luke 1:48) because of God's favor. James says we count blessed those who persevered (5:11), particularly Job. Classical Greek used it for congratulating someone on their strength, blessing someone's happy ignorance, or ironically congratulating fools. The verb implies recognizing and publicly declaring someone's favorable condition.

(2×) The two uses present different aspects: prophetic declaration (Luke) and retrospective recognition (James). Mary foresees universal acknowledgment of her blessed state. James points to endurance that proved blessed in the end. The classical range—from sincere congratulation to ironic 'blessing' of ignorance—shows the term's flexibility. Spanish distinguishes between calling blessed (llamar bienaventurado) and the actual pronouncement. Both contexts involve public declaration of someone's favored status. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: we-call-blessed, will-bless | es: llamamos-bienaventurados, me-llamarán-bienaventurada | fr: déclarer-heureux | de: selig-preisen, μακαριοῦσίν Luke 1:48; Jas 5:11

μᾰκᾰρ-ιος G3107 Adj-NMP (50×)

blessed, happy, fortunate — pronounced favored by God, a term of divine congratulation rather than mere emotion

Makarios opens Jesus' most famous sermon: 'Blessed are the poor in spirit' (Matt 5:3). Across 50 occurrences, it functions not as emotional happiness but as a divine declaration of privileged status — a macarism pronouncing someone enrolled in God's favor. The Beatitudes (Matt 5:3-11; Luke 6:20-22) form its theological epicenter, complemented by James 1:12, Revelation's seven beatitudes, and Paul's citation of Psalm 32 (Rom 4:7-8). Classical Greek reserved makarios for the gods and the prosperous dead; the New Testament redirects it toward those the world would least call fortunate. German 'selig' and French 'heureux' each capture a different nuance the Greek holds together.

blessed / happy / fortunate (50×) An adjective of divine pronouncement declaring someone favored, blessed, or privileged in God's eyes, used in macarisms (beatitude formulas) that reverse worldly expectations. The Sermon on the Mount (Matt 5:3-11) establishes the pattern: those who mourn, hunger for righteousness, and suffer persecution are declared makarios because the kingdom of heaven belongs to them. Extended through Pauline theology (Rom 4:7-8, citing Ps 32:1-2), Johannine apocalyptic (seven beatitudes of Revelation), and wisdom instruction (Jas 1:12, 25). All 50 occurrences share this core sense of divinely conferred blessedness, though the classical overtone of enviable prosperity occasionally surfaces (as in the congratulatory sense of Luke 1:45, 'blessed is she who believed'). BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: Blessed, blessed | es: Bienaventurado, Bienaventurados, bienaventurada | fr: heureux | de: selig Matt 5:3; Matt 5:4; Matt 5:5; Matt 5:6; Matt 5:7

μᾰκᾰρ-ιστέον G3108 N-NMS (3×)

blessedness, happiness; the state of being blessed or experiencing divine favor

This word describes the state of being blessed or the happiness that flows from divine favor. It appears in Paul's teaching about justification by faith. Romans 4:6 speaks of 'the blessedness of the one to whom God counts righteousness apart from works,' citing David's psalm about forgiven sins. Romans 4:9 asks whether 'this blessedness' comes only to the circumcised or also to the uncircumcised, answering that Abraham was justified by faith before circumcision. Galatians 4:15 recalls the Galatians' former blessedness when they first received Paul's gospel. The word emphasizes not merely happiness, but the privileged state of those whom God has favored.

(3×) Blessedness, the state of being blessed or favored by God. Romans 4:6, 9 uses it twice in Paul's argument about justification: David speaks of 'the blessedness of the one to whom God counts righteousness apart from works'—the happy state of those declared righteous by faith, not merit. Paul asks whether this blessedness extends beyond Jews to Gentiles (4:9), answering that Abraham believed before circumcision. Galatians 4:15 asks 'Where then is your blessedness?'—what happened to the joy and gratitude of their initial conversion? BLESSING BENEDICTION

en: blessedness, blessing | es: bienaventuranza | fr: béatitude | de: Glueckseligkeit Rom 4:6; Rom 4:9; Gal 4:15

Μακεδονία G3109 N-DFS (22×)

Macedonia – the Roman province in northern Greece, a key region in Paul's missionary journeys and church planting

The proper noun for the Roman province occupying northern Greece, prominently featuring in Acts and Paul's letters as a theater of early Christian mission. Paul's vision of a man pleading 'Come over to Macedonia and help us' (Acts 16:9-10) marks a turning point in apostolic outreach to Europe. The province is regularly paired with Achaia (southern Greece) as a geographic merism for all of Greece (Rom 15:26; 1 Thess 1:7-8). Philippians 4:15 recalls the Macedonians' singular generosity. All translations – Spanish Macedonia, French Macedoine, German Mazedonien – preserve the Latinized geographical name without variation.

Macedonia (proper noun) (22×) The Roman province in northern Greece, a major site of Pauline mission. All case forms refer to the same geographical entity. Often paired with Achaia for all of Greece (Rom 15:26; 1 Thess 1:7-8). The Macedonian call (Acts 16:9) and the churches' generosity (2 Cor 8:1; Phil 4:15) are defining moments. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Macedonia, Makedonia, of-Makedonia | es: Macedonia, Makedonia, Makedonía | fr: Macédoine, Mazedonien | de: Mazedonien Acts 16:9; Acts 16:10; Acts 16:12; Acts 18:5; Acts 19:21

οἱΜακεδόνες G3110 N-NMP (5×)

A Macedonian, an inhabitant of Macedonia; the region in northern Greece that was home to Alexander the Great and later a Roman province.

This noun identifies a person from Macedonia, the kingdom in northern Greece that produced Alexander the Great and later became a Roman province. In Paul's famous Macedonian vision (Acts 16:9), a man pleads 'Come over to Macedonia and help us,' redirecting the apostle's mission into Europe. Aristarchus and Gaius are identified as Macedonians traveling with Paul (Acts 19:29; 27:2). In 2 Corinthians 9:2, 4, Paul uses the Macedonians' generous giving to spur the Corinthians to similar liberality.

(5×) A Macedonian — a native or inhabitant of the Roman province of Macedonia in northern Greece. The term functions as both a gentilicium (ethnic/regional identifier) and occasionally as a shorthand for the Macedonian churches. In Acts 16:9, the Macedonian man in Paul's vision becomes the catalyst for the gospel's entry into Europe. Named Macedonians include Aristarchus and Gaius (Acts 19:29; 27:2). Paul holds up Macedonian believers as a model of sacrificial generosity (2 Cor 9:2, 4). The translations treat it straightforwardly as the demonym (spa: macedonio, fra: Macédonien, deu: Mazedonier). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Makedones, Makedonians, Makedōn | es: Makedón, a-makedonios, macedonio | fr: Macédonien | de: Mazedonier, Μακεδόνας, Μακεδόνος Acts 16:9; Acts 19:29; Acts 27:2; 2Cor 9:2; 2Cor 9:4

μάκελλον G3111 N-DNS (1×)

μάκελλον — a meat market or food market, borrowed from Latin macellum

This loanword from Latin appears in 1 Corinthians 10:25, where Paul addresses the question of eating meat that may have been sacrificed to idols. A macellum was a Roman-style covered market where various foods, especially meat, were sold. Paul's instruction is practical: believers should buy and eat whatever is sold in the public market without raising questions of conscience about its pagan associations. The term's Latin origin reflects the commercial realities of Greco-Roman urban life, where such markets were standard features of city infrastructure.

(1×) The dative singular marks the location where meat is sold: 'in the meat market.' Cross-linguistic renderings vary between generic 'market' (Spanish 'mercado') and specific 'butcher shop' (French 'boucherie,' German 'Fleischmarkt'), reflecting the specialized nature of these establishments as places where previously sacrificed animals were often sold as common food. MERCHANDISE WARES

en: meat-market | es: mercado | fr: boucherie | de: Fleischmarkt 1Cor 10:25

μακράν G3112 Adj-AFS (9×)

Far, far away; used as an adverb of spatial distance, indicating remoteness from a point of reference.

Derived from the feminine accusative of makros and functioning as an adverb, this word conveys spatial distance or remoteness. In Mark 12:34, Jesus tells the scribe 'you are not far from the kingdom of God,' using distance as a metaphor for spiritual nearness. The prodigal son journeys 'into a far country' (Luke 15:13), and while still 'far off' his father sees him (Luke 15:20) – the Spanish 'lejos' and French 'loin' both capture this poignant sense of vast separation followed by reunion.

far (9×) Spatial distance or remoteness from a reference point, used adverbially. The multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as a straightforward distance marker (Spanish 'lejos,' French 'loin,' German 'fern'). In Matt 8:30 a herd of swine feeds 'far off'; in John 21:8 the disciples are 'not far from land.' Mark 12:34 extends the spatial metaphor into the spiritual realm, where proximity to the kingdom is measured not in miles but in understanding. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: far, far-away | es: lejos | fr: au-loin, loin | de: fern, μακρὰν Matt 8:30; Mark 12:34; Luke 7:6; Luke 15:20; John 21:8

μάκρο-θεν G3113 Adv (14×)

from afar, at a distance — adverb indicating spatial remoteness of an observer or traveler

Makrothen is a spatial adverb meaning 'from far off' or 'at a distance,' and it appears at some of the most emotionally charged moments in the Gospels. Peter follows Jesus makrothen after the arrest (Matt 26:58; Mark 14:54; Luke 22:54). The women who had followed from Galilee watch the crucifixion makrothen (Matt 27:55; Mark 15:40; Luke 23:49). The tax collector prays standing makrothen, unwilling to approach (Luke 18:13). In each case the distance is both physical and psychological — expressing caution, grief, or unworthiness. Spanish 'de lejos,' French 'de loin,' and German 'von fern' all capture this sense of pained or reverent remoteness.

from afar / at a distance (14×) An adverb of spatial distance meaning 'from far away' or 'at a distance,' used to describe observers who are physically separated from the scene they are witnessing. Marks the cautious distance of Peter following after Jesus' arrest (Matt 26:58; Mark 14:54; Luke 22:54), the grieving distance of the women at Calvary (Matt 27:55; Mark 15:40), the demoniac who saw Jesus makrothen and ran to him (Mark 5:6), and the self-distancing posture of the tax collector in prayer (Luke 18:13). The distance often carries an emotional overtone — fear, sorrow, or humility — beyond mere spatial measurement. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: a-distance, afar, from-a-distance | es: de-lejos, lejos | fr: de-loin | de: von-fern, μακρόθεν Matt 26:58; Matt 27:55; Mark 5:6; Mark 8:3; Mark 11:13

μακρο-θῡμέω G3114 V-AMA-2P (10×)

To be patient, exercise long-suffering — to endure delay, provocation, or hardship without retaliation

The verb μακροθυμέω (makrothymeo), literally 'long-tempered' (μακρός + θυμός), means to exercise patience or long-suffering — to bear with delay, provocation, or adversity without yielding to anger or despair. In the parable of the unforgiving servant, both debtors plead 'be patient with me' (Matt 18:26, 29). Paul declares that love 'is patient' (1 Cor 13:4), and James exhorts believers to 'be patient until the coming of the Lord' like a farmer awaiting rain (Jas 5:7-8). God himself is patient, not wishing any to perish (2 Pet 3:9), and Abraham's patience secured the promise (Heb 6:15). Arabic ṣ, Hebrew הָאֲרִיךְ אַפַּיִם, Korean 오래 참다, and Spanish 'tener paciencia' all express the same sustained forbearance.

to be patient, to have long-suffering (10×) To be patient, exercise forbearance or long-suffering — to endure provocation, delay, or hardship without retaliating or losing hope. Applied to human patience toward others (Matt 18:26, 29), to the essential character of love (1 Cor 13:4), to believers awaiting the Lord's return (1 Thess 5:14; Jas 5:7-8), to Abraham's patient endurance in securing the promise (Heb 6:15), and to God's own patience in delaying judgment so that all might repent (Luke 18:7; 2 Pet 3:9). All occurrences express one core concept: sustained restraint of anger or impatience across time. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: Be-patient, be-patient, being-patient | es: Ten-paciencia, Tened-paciencia, es-paciente | fr: patienter, être-patient | de: geduldig-sein, Μακροθύμησον, μακροθυμεῖ Matt 18:26; Matt 18:29; Luke 18:7; 1Cor 13:4; 1Thess 5:14

μακρο-θῡμία G3115 N-NFS (14×)

patience, long-suffering, forbearance — the steadfast endurance that restrains anger and waits through adversity

Makrothumia combines makros ('long') and thumos ('passion, anger'), producing a word that literally means 'long-tempered' — the opposite of being short-fused. It appears fourteen times in the New Testament, most prominently as a fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22), a hallmark of love (1 Cor 13:4), and an attribute of God himself who delays judgment to allow repentance (Rom 2:4; 9:22; 1 Tim 1:16; 2 Pet 3:15). Paul lists it among the virtues that mark genuine apostolic ministry (2 Cor 6:6) and the character traits believers should cultivate (Eph 4:2; Col 1:11; 3:12). Spanish 'longanimidad/paciencia,' French 'patience,' and German 'Geduld' all capture this sense of restrained endurance under provocation.

patience (14×) Long-suffering patience — the quality of restraining anger and enduring provocation or hardship without retaliation. Applied to God's forbearance in delaying judgment (Rom 2:4; 9:22; 1 Tim 1:16; 2 Pet 3:15), to the fruit of the Spirit in believers (Gal 5:22), and to the practical virtue demanded in community life (Eph 4:2; Col 1:11; 3:12; 2 Tim 3:10; 4:2). The etymology — makros ('long') plus thumos ('wrath, passion') — reveals the core image: a long fuse rather than a short one. Distinguished from hupomone (endurance of circumstances) by its interpersonal focus: makrothumia is patience with people. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: patience | es: longanimidad, paciencia | fr: patience | de: Geduld Rom 2:4; Rom 9:22; 2Cor 6:6; Gal 5:22; Eph 4:2

μακρό-θῡμος G3116 Adv (1×)

μακροθύμως — patiently, with long-suffering endurance, adverbial form of μακρόθυμος

This adverb appears in Acts 26:3, where Paul asks King Agrippa to hear him patiently. The term combines 'long' (μακρός) and 'passion/anger' (θυμός), literally meaning 'long of temper' — the opposite of quick-tempered. It describes the disposition of bearing with others or circumstances without losing composure or giving way to anger. Paul's request acknowledges that his defense will require careful attention to Jewish customs and controversies, asking for the kind of patient hearing that doesn't rush to judgment.

(1×) The adverbial form modifies the verb 'to hear,' requesting a manner of listening characterized by patience and forbearance. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'pacientemente,' French 'patiemment') confirms the semantic core of patient endurance, a quality essential for understanding complex theological and cultural matters. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: patiently | es: pacientemente | fr: patiemment | de: μακροθύμως Acts 26:3

μακρός G3117 Adj-ANP (6×)

Long or far; extended in spatial length, temporal duration, or geographic distance.

An adjective that stretches across both space and time. In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus condemns those who 'for a pretense make long prayers' (Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47) — here makros describes temporal extension, something drawn out and prolonged. But the same word also reaches across geographic space: the prodigal son travels to a 'far country' (Luke 15:13), and the nobleman departs to a 'distant land' (Luke 19:12). Multilingual evidence makes this split vivid: Spanish uses 'largamente' (at length) for the temporal sense but 'lejano/lejos' (far, distant) for the spatial one. Peter's Pentecost declaration that the promise extends to 'all who are far off' (Acts 2:39) uses the spatial sense with theological overtones of Gentile inclusion.

1. long (in extent or duration) (3×) Long in extent or duration — describing something physically or temporally extended, drawn out, or prolonged. All three occurrences involve the 'long prayers' of the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47), where Jesus critiques ostentatious religiosity. Spanish 'largamente' and German 'lang' both emphasize the temporal stretching — prayers prolonged as a show of piety rather than genuine devotion. French 'long' similarly captures the sense of excessive duration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: long | es: largamente | fr: long | de: lang, μακρὰ Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47

2. far / distant (3×) Far or distant in space — describing geographic or relational remoteness rather than linear extent. The prodigal son journeys to a 'far country' (Luke 15:13), the nobleman goes to a 'distant land' to receive a kingdom (Luke 19:12), and Peter promises the Holy Spirit to those who are 'far off' (Acts 2:39). Spanish 'lejano' and 'lejos' clearly distinguish this spatial remoteness from the 'long' of duration. In Acts 2:39, the 'far off' carries theological weight — it signals the inclusion of Gentiles and future generations in the covenant promise. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: afar, far | es: lejana, lejano, lejos | fr: long | de: μακράν, μακρὰν Luke 15:13; Luke 19:12; Acts 2:39

μακρο-χρόνιος G3118 Adj-NMS (1×)

μακροχρόνιος — long-lived, enjoying extended duration of life

This adjective appears in Ephesians 6:3, within Paul's quotation of the fifth commandment about honoring parents. The term literally means 'long in time,' combining μακρός (long) and χρόνος (time). In the Septuagint and NT, it specifically refers to longevity of life as a blessing. The promise 'that you may be long-lived on the earth' adapts the original Mosaic promise of long life in the land of Canaan to a broader Christian application, where honoring parents remains connected to the blessing of extended days.

(1×) The nominative masculine singular functions predicatively: 'that you may be long-lived.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'de-larga-vida,' German 'langlebig') capture the compound's literal sense of extended temporal duration applied to human lifespan, a tangible blessing attached to covenant faithfulness. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: long-lived | es: de-larga-vida | fr: μακροχρόνιος | de: langlebig Eph 6:3

μᾰλᾰκ-ία G3119 N-AFS (3×)

sickness, disease; illness or bodily ailment, weakness of the body

This word denotes bodily sickness, disease, or weakness—physical ailments that afflict human beings. Matthew's Gospel uses it three times in summary statements about Jesus' healing ministry. Matthew 4:23 describes Jesus 'healing every disease and every affliction among the people.' Matthew 9:35 repeats nearly identical language, and 10:1 grants the twelve disciples 'authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal every disease and every affliction.' The repetition emphasizes the comprehensive scope of Jesus' healing power—no illness was beyond his authority to cure. His healings demonstrated the inbreaking of God's kingdom, reversing the effects of the fall.

(3×) Sickness, disease, or bodily illness. All three occurrences in Matthew describe Jesus' healing ministry: he went throughout Galilee 'healing every disease and every affliction among the people' (4:23, repeated almost verbatim in 9:35), and gave the twelve disciples authority 'to heal every disease and every affliction' (10:1). The repetition underscores the comprehensive nature of Jesus' healing power—no sickness was beyond his ability to cure, demonstrating the kingdom's power over physical ailment and suffering. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: sickness | es: dolencia | fr: maladie | de: Krankheit Matt 4:23; Matt 9:35; Matt 10:1

μᾰλᾰκός G3120 Adj-NMP (4×)

Soft, fine, delicate; of clothing: luxurious; of persons: effeminate or morally lax.

Malakos fundamentally means 'soft' – soft to the touch, fine in texture, delicate in quality. In the Gospels, Jesus contrasts his rough-hewn prophet John the Baptist with those dressed in 'soft garments' (malaka), the kind worn in royal palaces (Matt 11:8; Luke 7:25). The word could also describe moral softness or self-indulgence; in 1 Cor 6:9 Paul uses it in a vice list where it likely denotes those who are morally weak or who yield to sensual excess. The semantic range moves from physical texture to luxury to moral characterization.

(4×) Soft or fine in texture, and by extension luxurious, effeminate, or morally indulgent. In Matt 11:8 (twice) and Luke 7:25 Jesus asks whether people went to the wilderness to see someone in soft, fine clothing – the opposite of John's camel-hair garment – pointing to courtly luxury. In 1 Cor 6:9 the term appears in a vice list with a moral sense: softness as self-indulgent weakness. Spanish 'suaves/afeminados' and French 'mou/délicat' together capture the physical-to-moral spectrum – from fine fabric to flawed character. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: effeminate, soft | es: afeminados, suaves | fr: délicat, mou | de: weich, μαλακοῖς, μαλακὰ Matt 11:8; Luke 7:25; 1Cor 6:9

Μαλελεήλ G3121 N-GMS (1×)

Maleleēl (Μαλελεήλ) — Greek transliteration of Mahalalel, a pre-flood patriarch in Jesus' genealogy

This name appears in Luke 3:37 among the antediluvian ancestors tracing Jesus' lineage back to Adam. Mahalalel, found in Genesis 5:12-17, was the son of Kenan and father of Jared, living 895 years according to the Masoretic text. The Hebrew name possibly means 'praise of God' or 'God is splendor.' Luke's inclusion of these primeval patriarchs emphasizes Jesus' connection not just to Israel's history but to universal human origins, establishing him as the second Adam whose lineage extends to the first man.

(1×) The genitive form incorporates this early patriarch into the genealogical chain. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Maleleēl,' French 'Maléléel') maintains the Septuagintal form of the Hebrew name, preserving the archaic dignity of these primordial ancestors. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maleleēl | es: Maleleēl | fr: Maléléel | de: Μαλελεὴλ Luke 3:37

μάλα G3122 Adv (12×)

especially, most of all, above all — superlative adverb marking the highest degree or priority

Malista is the superlative form of mala ('very'), functioning as an adverb meaning 'especially,' 'most of all,' or 'above all.' Its 12 NT occurrences typically single out one item from a group for special emphasis. Paul uses it with particular frequency: believers should do good to all, 'especially' to the household of faith (Gal 6:10); greetings from all the saints, 'especially' those of Caesar's household (Phil 4:22); bring the books, 'especially' the parchments (2 Tim 4:13). In Acts, it introduces Agrippa as 'especially' expert in Jewish customs (Acts 26:3). Spanish 'especialmente/mayormente,' French 'surtout,' and German 'besonders' all capture the singling-out, superlative force.

(12×) A superlative adverb used to single out one element from a broader group for heightened emphasis, translatable as 'especially,' 'most of all,' or 'above all.' Frequently appears in Pauline exhortation and instruction to sharpen a general principle into a specific application (Gal 6:10, do good 'especially' to fellow believers; 2 Tim 4:13, bring the books, 'especially' the parchments; 1 Tim 5:17, 'especially' those who labor in preaching). Also marks the heightened grief of the Ephesian elders — sorrowing 'most of all' over Paul's words that they would not see his face again (Acts 20:38). French 'surtout' and German 'besonders' converge on the same superlative-selective function. All 12 occurrences express this single sense. MORE AND GREATER

en: especially, especially- | es: especialmente, mayormente | fr: surtout, μάλιστα | de: besonders, μάλιστα Acts 20:38; Acts 25:26; Acts 26:3; Gal 6:10; Phil 4:22

μάλα G3123 Adv (81×)

More, rather — comparative adverb intensifying degree or expressing preference

The Greek μᾶλλον (comparative of μάλα, 'very') functions as a comparative adverb meaning 'more' or 'rather,' either intensifying a quality beyond a stated or implied baseline or expressing preference between alternatives. Jesus uses it memorably in arguments from lesser to greater: 'how much more will your Father give good things' (Matt 7:11), 'are you not of more value than they?' (Matt 6:26). Paul employs it for emphatic preference — 'much more' (πολλῷ μᾶλλον, Phil 2:12) and corrective 'rather' (Eph 4:28; 5:11). Spanish más/más-bien, French plus/plutôt, and German mehr all reflect the dual comparative-preferential range. Its 81 occurrences span every major NT corpus.

more (81×) A comparative adverb meaning 'more' (in degree) or 'rather' (in preference), the comparative form of μάλα. Prominent in Jesus' qal wahomer ('how much more') arguments: 'how much more will your Father give good things' (Matt 7:11; cf. 6:26, 30). Also used by Paul for emphatic intensification — πολλῷ μᾶλλον 'much more' (Phil 2:12; Rom 5:9) — and for expressing corrective preference, 'rather' (Eph 4:28; 5:11). Spanish más, French plus/plutôt, and German mehr capture the dual comparative and preferential senses. MORE AND GREATER

en: more, rather | es: más, más-bien | fr: plus, plutôt | de: mehr Matt 6:26; Matt 6:30; Matt 7:11; Matt 10:25; Matt 18:13

Μάλχος G3124 N-NMS (1×)

Malchos (Μάλχος) — the name of the high priest's servant whose ear Peter cut off in Gethsemane

This name appears only in John 18:10, identifying the servant of the high priest whom Peter struck with a sword during Jesus' arrest. John alone among the Gospel writers names this individual, perhaps because John wrote later when those involved were no longer at risk of retaliation. The name is a Hellenized form of the Hebrew/Aramaic word for 'king' (מֶלֶךְ), possibly indicating royal service or simply a common name among servants. Luke adds that Jesus healed the severed ear, showing Jesus' compassion even toward those who came to arrest him.

(1×) The nominative form identifies the individual who experienced both Peter's violence and Jesus' healing mercy. The name's preservation across translations marks this historically specific moment when Jesus rebuked violent resistance and demonstrated that his kingdom operates by different principles than earthly power. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Malchos | es: Málchos | fr: Malchus | de: Malchus John 18:10

μάμμ-η G3125 N-DFS (1×)

μάμμη — grandmother, a familial term for one's mother's or father's mother

This word appears in 2 Timothy 1:5, where Paul references Timothy's grandmother Lois alongside his mother Eunice. Originally a child's word for 'mother' (similar to 'mama'), μάμμη came to mean specifically 'grandmother' in later Greek. Paul's mention of both women highlights the multi-generational transmission of genuine faith within Timothy's family. This reference is significant for showing that Timothy's Christian formation began before Paul's ministry, rooted in the sincere faith of his maternal ancestors, likely Jewish believers who recognized Jesus as Messiah.

(1×) The dative singular indicates the grandmother as someone in whom faith dwelt. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'abuela,' German 'Grossmutter') identify this as the standard kinship term for a parent's mother, emphasizing the role of grandmothers in passing down religious faith through family instruction. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS

en: grandmother | es: abuela | fr: μάμμη | de: Grossmutter 2Tim 1:5

μαμωνᾶς G3126 N-GMS (4×)

Mammon; wealth or riches personified, viewed as a rival master to God.

Mamonas is an Aramaic loanword (mamona, 'wealth' or 'possessions') that Jesus uses to personify riches as a competing lord demanding allegiance. The saying 'You cannot serve God and Mammon' (Matt 6:24; Luke 16:13) frames the choice as absolute – two masters, two loyalties. In Luke 16:9 Jesus paradoxically urges using 'unrighteous mammon' to make friends for eternity, and in Luke 16:11 faithfulness with mammon becomes a test of fitness for true riches. The word's Aramaic origin gives it an almost demonic resonance in Greek ears.

(4×) Wealth or material possessions personified as a rival deity or master. Jesus declares that no one can serve both God and Mammon (Matt 6:24; Luke 16:13), framing the pursuit of riches as a form of idolatry. In Luke 16:9, 11 he speaks of 'unrighteous mammon' and 'faithful in mammon,' treating wealth as a proving ground for spiritual trustworthiness. The Aramaic origin is preserved across all translations – Spanish 'Mamón,' French 'Mammon,' German 'Mammon' – none domesticate it, preserving its foreignness and its ominous overtone as a power that competes with God. MIXED MULTITUDE en: mammon | es: a-Mamōn, a-mamonás, mamonás | fr: Mammon | de: μαμωνᾶ, μαμωνᾷ Matt 6:24; Luke 16:9; Luke 16:11; Luke 16:13

Μαναήν G3127 N-NMS (1×)

Manaen (Μαναήν) — companion of Herod the tetrarch who became a Christian prophet and teacher at Antioch

This name appears in Acts 13:1 among the prophets and teachers at the church in Antioch. Luke specifically notes that Manaen was 'brought up with' (σύντροφος) Herod the tetrarch, indicating he was a childhood companion or foster-brother of Herod Antipas, the ruler who beheaded John the Baptist and mocked Jesus before the crucifixion. The Hebrew name (Menahem) means 'comforter.' Manaen's presence in church leadership shows how the gospel penetrated even the courts of rulers, producing disciples from the highest social strata who abandoned privilege to serve Christ.

(1×) The nominative form identifies this individual as a leader in the Antiochene church. His unique background — raised in Herod's court but now serving as a Christian prophet — illustrates the radical social transformations the gospel produced, bringing together people from vastly different backgrounds into one community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Manaen | es: Manaén | fr: Manaen | de: Μαναήν Acts 13:1

Μανασσῆς G3128 N-NMS (3×)

Manasseh; the name of Joseph's firstborn son and a king of Judah

This Hebrew name (meaning 'causing to forget') identifies two significant biblical figures. Manasseh was Joseph's firstborn son, born in Egypt, whose descendants formed one of Israel's tribes. Though the younger Ephraim received the greater blessing from Jacob, Manasseh's tribe received substantial territory west and east of the Jordan. Revelation 7:6 lists the tribe of Manasseh among the 144,000 sealed servants of God. Matthew 1:10 (twice) mentions a different Manasseh—the wicked king of Judah whose 55-year reign included idolatry, child sacrifice, and shedding innocent blood, though he later repented in Babylonian captivity. His inclusion in Jesus' genealogy demonstrates God's grace working through flawed lineages.

(3×) Manasseh, a Hebrew personal name borne by two figures. Matthew 1:10 (listed twice consecutively) includes King Manasseh of Judah in Jesus' genealogy—one of Judah's most wicked kings who later repented. Revelation 7:6 refers to 'the tribe of Manasseh' among the twelve tribes whose servants are sealed (12,000 from each tribe) —tracing back to Joseph's firstborn son. The name's dual reference shows both individual and tribal identity within Israel's history. MANASSEH TRIBE NAME en: Manassēs, of-Manassēs | es: Manassés, de-Manassēs | fr: Manassé | de: Manasse Matt 1:10; Rev 7:6

μανθάνω G3129 V-PMA-3P (25×)

To learn through study, instruction, or experience; to ascertain or come to know a fact

Manthano is the ordinary Greek word for learning, whether through formal instruction, personal experience, or careful observation. Jesus invites disciples to 'learn from me' (Matt 11:29) and urges them to 'go and learn what this means' (Matt 9:13), pointing to learning as both relational and scriptural. Paul uses it for the traditions believers have been taught (Phil 4:9; 2 Tim 3:14) as well as for learning contentment through experience (Phil 4:11). A single New Testament instance carries the narrower sense of ascertaining a fact through inquiry — when the Roman tribune 'learned' Paul was a citizen (Acts 23:27).

1. learn, be instructed (24×) To acquire knowledge, skill, or understanding through study, instruction, or lived experience. Spanish 'aprender' and French 'apprendre' uniformly render the learning sense. Jesus says 'learn from me' (Matt 11:29) and 'go and learn what this means' (Matt 9:13). The fig tree parable teaches disciples to 'learn' from observation (Matt 24:32; Mark 13:28). John 6:45 quotes Isaiah: 'everyone who has heard and learned from the Father comes to me.' Paul commends holding fast to what was 'learned' (Phil 4:9; 2 Tim 3:14). TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: having-learned, learn, learned | es: aprenda, aprendan, aprended | fr: apprendre | de: lernen, lernt Matt 9:13; Matt 11:29; Matt 24:32; Mark 13:28; John 6:45

2. ascertain, come to understand (1×) To ascertain, discover, or come to know a specific fact through inquiry or report rather than through extended study. Spanish shifts to 'habiendo sabido' (having found out), distinct from the learning verb 'aprender.' This sense appears in Acts 23:27, where the tribune Claudius Lysias 'learned' that Paul was a Roman citizen — a single moment of factual discovery rather than a process of instruction. KNOWING AND LEARNING en: having-learned | es: habiendo-sabido | fr: apprendre | de: lernt Acts 23:27

μᾰνία G3130 N-AFS (1×)

μανία — madness, insanity, extreme mental disturbance or frenzy

This noun appears in Acts 26:24 when Festus interrupts Paul's defense before Agrippa, shouting that Paul's great learning is driving him mad. The word can denote literal insanity or, as here, describes someone whose ideas seem so extreme they appear deranged. Classical Greek used the term both for clinical madness and for divine frenzy or enthusiasm. Festus cannot process Paul's account of resurrection and divine calling within his Roman rationalist framework, so he attributes it to derangement. Paul calmly responds that he speaks words of truth and soberness, not madness.

(1×) The accusative singular functions as the object: 'madness turns you.' Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'locura,' French 'folie') convey the semantic range from clinical insanity to irrational enthusiasm. Festus' accusation reveals the gospel's offense to worldly wisdom — what seems foolishness to those perishing is God's power to those being saved. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8032 WITH 5 SENSES en: madness | es: locura | fr: folie | de: μανίαν Acts 26:24

μάννᾰ G3131 N-GNS (4×)

Manna; the miraculous bread-like food God provided Israel in the wilderness, later a type of heavenly sustenance.

Manna – from the Hebrew man hu ('What is it?') – is the mysterious food God rained down daily for Israel's forty wilderness years. In the NT it functions typologically: Jesus contrasts the manna the fathers ate and still died with the true bread from heaven that gives eternal life (John 6:31, 49). Hebrews 9:4 recalls the golden jar of manna stored in the ark of the covenant as a memorial of God's provision. In Rev 2:17 the risen Christ promises 'hidden manna' to the faithful overcomer – a symbol of intimate, eschatological sustenance.

(4×) The miraculous food God provided daily to Israel in the wilderness, used typologically in the NT for divine and eschatological sustenance. In John 6:31, 49 Jesus contrasts perishable wilderness manna with himself as the living bread from heaven. Heb 9:4 mentions the jar of manna preserved in the ark, a tangible memorial of God's faithfulness. Rev 2:17 promises 'hidden manna' to overcomers – a rich eschatological image of intimate communion. Spanish 'maná,' French 'manne,' and German 'Manna' all transliterate directly from Hebrew, preserving the original wonder of the question: 'What is it?' FOOD AND NOURISHMENT en: manna | es: maná | fr: manne | de: Manna John 6:31; John 6:49; Heb 9:4; Rev 2:17

μαντ-εύομαι G3132 V-PPM/P-NFS (1×)

μαντεύομαι — to practice divination, prophesy through supernatural means, tell fortunes

This verb appears in Acts 16:16, describing a slave girl who had a spirit of divination and brought her owners profit through fortune-telling. The word derives from μάντις (prophet/seer) and in classical Greek referred to seeking supernatural knowledge through various mantic arts. The girl followed Paul's group, proclaiming them servants of the Most High God — technically true words from a demonic source. Paul eventually commanded the spirit to leave her, demonstrating that even accurate spiritual proclamations from occult sources must be rejected, as their origin disqualifies their message.

(1×) The present middle/passive participle 'by fortune-telling' modifies how she brought profit to her masters. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'adivinando,' French 'pratiquer-la-magie') identify this as occult divination, the opposite of authentic prophetic revelation, showing that supernatural knowledge can come from illegitimate spiritual sources that must be renounced. DIVINATION PRODUCTS

en: by-fortune-telling | es: adivinando | fr: pratiquer-la-magie | de: μαντευομένη Acts 16:16

μᾰραίνω G3133 V-FIP-3S (1×)

μαραίνω — to cause to wither, fade away, or extinguish; to waste away

This verb appears in James 1:11, illustrating how the rich person will fade away in their pursuits like grass withering under the scorching sun. The word literally means to quench or extinguish (originally used of fire), then extended to describe plants wilting or people wasting away. James employs the image from Isaiah 40:6-8, contrasting the transient glory of wealth with the enduring word of God. The rich person's activities and achievements, like the wildflower's beauty, prove temporary — heat rises, the flower falls, and the appearance perishes.

(1×) The future passive 'will fade away' describes the inevitable withering of the wealthy person's pursuits. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'se-marchitará,' German 'verwelken') emphasize the botanical imagery of wilting under heat, a powerful metaphor for the ephemeral nature of earthly prosperity apart from eternal values. WITHERING AND FADING

en: will-fade-away | es: se-marchitará | fr: μαρανθήσεται | de: verwelken Jas 1:11

G3134 V-AMA-2S (2×)
an Aramaic phrase meaning 'Our Lord, come!' expressing urgent longing for Christ's return
Two Aramaic words transliterated into Greek: māranā thā, meaning 'Our Lord, come!' Paul closes 1 Corinthians with this liturgical cry, likely borrowed from early Aramaic-speaking worship. It's simultaneously prayer, creed, and maranatha—a watchword expressing the church's eager expectation of Jesus' return. Some ancient interpreters read it as māran athā ('Our Lord has come'), but the context favors the imperative. That Paul leaves it untranslated suggests it was already a fixed formula, like 'amen' or 'hallelujah,' recognized across language barriers.

(2×) Paul's double citation (1 Corinthians 16:22) represents one phrase, counted twice in the apparatus. The Aramaic preservation in a Greek letter to a Greek city shows how early liturgical formulas transcended language. The lexicon clarifies it's a transliteration of Hebrew-Aramaic māranā + athā, not a Greek term. Most translations either transliterate (following Paul) or add a translation note. The phrase captures the early church's intense expectation: Come, Lord Jesus! PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION
en: Marana, tha | es: Marana, tha | fr: maranatha | de: Maranatha 1Cor 16:22

μαργᾰρ-ίτης G3135 N-AMS (9×)
Pearl; a precious gem formed in a mollusk, used literally of costly jewelry and figuratively of supreme spiritual value.
A pearl – the lustrous gem treasured across the ancient Mediterranean and Near East. Jesus draws on the pearl's extraordinary value in two memorable teachings: casting pearls before swine (Matt 7:6), where wisdom is wasted on those who cannot appreciate it, and the merchant who sells everything for one pearl of great price (Matt 13:45-46), an image of the kingdom's surpassing worth. In Revelation, Babylon adorns herself with pearls as symbols of extravagant wealth (Rev 17:4; 18:12, 16), and the gates of the New Jerusalem are each a single pearl (Rev 21:21).

pearl (9×) A precious gem formed within a mollusk shell, valued as costly merchandise and rich adornment. Every major translation tradition renders this straightforwardly – Spanish 'perla,' French 'perle,' German 'Perlen' – reflecting the pearl's universal recognition as a luxury item. The NT employs it both literally (1 Tim 2:9 warns against ostentatious pearl-wearing; Revelation catalogs pearls among Babylon's trade goods) and in two of Jesus' most vivid parables: the pearl of great price (Matt 13:45-46) as an image of the kingdom, and pearls before swine (Matt 7:6) as a warning about discernment. STONE AND ROCK
en: of-pearls, pearl, pearls | es: de-perlas, perla, perla; | fr: perle | de: Perlen, μαργαρίτας, μαργαρίτην Matt 7:6; Matt 13:45; Matt 13:46; 1Tim 2:9; Rev 17:4

Μάρθα G3136 N-GFS (13×)
Martha; a proper name from Aramaic meaning 'lady' or 'mistress,' borne by the sister of Mary and Lazarus of Bethany.
The personal name Martha, derived from Aramaic marta meaning 'lady' or 'mistress.' She is the sister of Mary and Lazarus, residing in Bethany near Jerusalem. Luke 10:38-42 introduces her as the one 'distracted with much serving' while her sister sat at Jesus' feet — a scene that has become iconic for the tension between active service and contemplative devotion. In John 11, Martha emerges as a woman of profound faith: she goes out to meet Jesus after Lazarus' death and confesses, 'I believe that you are the Christ, the Son of God' (John 11:27), one of the most significant christological declarations in the Fourth Gospel. All translations simply transliterate the name.

(13×) The proper name of a woman from Bethany, sister of Mary and Lazarus, derived from Aramaic marta ('lady, mistress'). She appears in two pivotal scenes: serving Jesus while Mary listens at his feet (Luke 10:38-42), and meeting Jesus at Lazarus' tomb where she makes a remarkable confession of faith (John 11:20-27). Cross-lingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name (French Marthe, Spanish Marta, German Martha), as is standard for biblical proper nouns. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Martha | es: Mártha | fr: Marthe | de: Martha, Μάρθα Luke 10:38; Luke 10:40; Luke 10:41; John 11:1

Μαρία G3137 N-NFS (54×)
Maria / Mariam – Mary; the name of several women in the NT including the mother of Jesus and Mary Magdalene Maria (Hellenized) and Mariam (Semitic indeclinable) render the Hebrew-Aramaic name Miryam, borne by at least six women in the New Testament. Most prominent is Mary the mother of Jesus, central to the infancy narratives and present at the cross (John 19:25) and in the upper room (Acts 1:14). Mary Magdalene, first witness to the resurrection (John 20:1-18), is the second most frequent bearer. Others include Mary of Bethany (Luke 10:39), Mary wife of Clopas (John 19:25), and Mary of Rome (Rom 16:6). The two Greek forms reflect stylistic rather than semantic variation.

Mary / Mariam (proper name) (54×) The name Mary/Mariam, shared by several New Testament women. Chief is Mary the mother of Jesus (Matt 1:16; Luke 1:27; Acts 1:14), followed by Mary Magdalene (Mark 16:1; John 20:1-18), Mary of Bethany (Luke 10:39), and Mary wife of Clopas (John 19:25). The two Greek forms carry no semantic distinction. Spanish Maria, French Marie, and German Maria confirm uniform treatment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Maria, Mariam, of-Maria | es: Mariam, Mariám, Mariám? | fr: Marie | de: Maria Matt 1:16; Matt 1:18; Matt 1:20; Matt 2:11; Matt 13:55

Μάρκος G3138 N-AMS (8×)
Mark (Markos); the Latin-derived personal name of John Mark, companion of Paul, Barnabas, and Peter.
Markos is the Greek form of the Latin name Marcus, borne by John Mark — a significant figure in the early church. He was the cousin of Barnabas (Col 4:10), accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey before departing at Pamphylia (Acts 13:13; 15:37-39), and later was reconciled with Paul, who called him 'useful for ministry' (2 Tim 4:11). Peter affectionately calls him 'my son' (1 Pet 5:13), and tradition identifies him as the author of the Gospel of Mark. All translations render the name phonetically: French 'Marc,' German 'Markus,' Spanish 'Marcos.'

(8×) The personal name Mark (Greek Markos, from Latin Marcus), referring to John Mark, cousin of Barnabas and companion of the apostles. His NT appearances trace a narrative arc from early mission work with Paul and Barnabas (Acts 12:12, 25; 15:37, 39) through later reconciliation with Paul (Col 4:10; 2 Tim 4:11; Phlm 24) and close association with Peter (1 Pet 5:13). Translations render the name phonetically — French 'Marc,' German 'Markus,' Spanish 'Marcos' — reflecting its Latin origin. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Markos | es: Márkon, Márkos, Mârkos | fr: Marc | de: Markus Acts 12:12; Acts 12:25; Acts 15:37; Acts 15:39; Col 4:10

μάρμαρος G3139 N-GMS (1×)
μάρμαρος — marble, a crystalline limestone prized for building and sculpture
This word appears in Revelation 18:12 within the list of luxury goods no longer purchased after Babylon's fall. Originally denoting any crystalline stone that sparkles (from μαρμαίρω, 'to sparkle'), it came to mean specifically marble, the white limestone extensively used in Greco-Roman architecture and art. John's inclusion of marble in Babylon's cargo emphasizes the city's opulence and architectural grandeur. The fall of this commerce symbolizes the collapse of economic systems built on exploitation and luxury rather than justice, echoing prophetic denunciations of excessive wealth.

(1×) The genitive form 'of marble' specifies material composition in a commercial inventory. The consistent transliteration across languages ('mármol,' 'Marmor') identifies this stone as a luxury building material, symbol of imperial Rome's architectural ambitions and the material culture that would ultimately prove as transient as Babylon's glory. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5911 WITH 3 SENSES

en: of-marble | es: de-mármol | fr: Marmor | de: Marmor Rev 18:12

μαρτῠ́ρ-έω G3140 V-PPA-NFP (76×)

To testify, bear witness; in passive, to be attested or well-spoken-of — the act and reception of testimony.

Martyreō stands at the heart of New Testament witness language. John the Baptist 'came to bear witness (martyrēsē) about the light' (John 1:7), and the verb runs like a golden thread through John's Gospel, where testifying to truth is a central theme. In its passive voice, the word shifts from giving testimony to receiving it — being attested or commended by others, as when the seven deacons are described as 'men of good repute, being well-attested' (Acts 6:3). Spanish testificar, French témoigner, and German bezeugen all capture the forensic-yet-personal quality of this witnessing.

1. testify, bear witness (63×) To actively testify, bear witness, or declare what one has seen, known, or believed to be true. Spanish testifica, French témoigner, and German bezeugen all preserve the courtroom-to-proclamation range. John the Baptist is the paradigm: he came 'to bear witness about the light' (John 1:7-8), and the verb appears repeatedly as Jesus, the Spirit, and Scripture all testify (John 5:39; 15:26). TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: He-has-testified, I-testify, bore-witness | es: Testifico, ha-testificado, testifica | fr: témoigner | de: bezeugen, bezeugt Matt 23:31; John 1:7; John 1:8; John 1:15; John 1:32

2. be attested, receive testimony (13×) Passive voice: to be attested, commended, or spoken well of — the subject receives rather than gives testimony. Multilingual glosses shift to passive constructions: spa. era-testificado, eng. being-attested. In Acts 6:3, deacons must be 'well-attested'; in Acts 16:2, Timothy 'was well-spoken-of by the brothers'; in Heb 11:2, the ancients 'received a good testimony' by their faith. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: being-attested, being-testified-of, being-well-spoken-of | es: dando-buen-testimonio, dando-testimonio, era-testificado | fr: témoigner | de: bezeugen, bezeugt Acts 6:3; Acts 10:22; Acts 16:2; Acts 22:12; Rom 3:21

μαρτῠ́ρ-ία G3141 N-AFS (37×)

testimony, witness, attestation — the act or content of bearing witness, especially regarding Christ and the gospel

Martyria denotes both the act of testifying and the content of what is testified, making it a pivotal word in the Johannine vocabulary. John's Gospel alone accounts for roughly half its NT occurrences: the 'testimony' of John the Baptist (John 1:7, 19; 3:33; 5:34), the testimony of Jesus about himself that divides the Pharisees (John 8:13-14), and the Father's testimony about the Son (John 5:32, 37). In the trial narratives, it takes a forensic turn as the Sanhedrin seeks martyria against Jesus but finds only false witness (Mark 14:55-59). Revelation elevates it to cosmic proportions: the martyria of Jesus becomes the ground for persecution and the saints' endurance (Rev 1:2, 9; 12:11, 17; 19:10). The etymological link to martys ('witness') that later gave us 'martyr' is already latent here.

testimony / witness / attestation (37×) The act or content of bearing witness, encompassing legal testimony, prophetic attestation, and christological witness. In John's Gospel it carries a quasi-forensic weight as competing claims are adjudicated: the Baptist's testimony about Jesus (John 1:7, 19; 5:33-36), Jesus' self-testimony challenged by the Pharisees (John 8:13-14), and the Father's testimony confirmed by works (John 5:36-37). Mark's trial narrative uses it for the false testimony sought against Jesus (Mark 14:55-56, 59). Revelation transforms it into the ground of eschatological fidelity — 'the testimony of Jesus' that saints maintain unto death (Rev 6:9; 12:11, 17; 19:10). Spanish 'testimonio,' French 'temoignage,' German 'Zeugnis' all preserve the legal-evidentiary core. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: of-testimony, testimony, witness | es: -testimonio, de-testimonio, testimonio | fr: témoignage | de: Zeugnis Mark 14:55; Mark 14:56; Mark 14:59; Luke 22:71; John 1:7

μαρτύριον G3142 N-GNS (20×)

Testimony, witness, proof; evidence given or a declaration that attests to truth, including the tabernacle of testimony.

This noun carries the dual force of 'proof' and 'public declaration.' In the Gospels it often appears in the phrase 'for a testimony to them' (Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44), where an act of obedience becomes living evidence. Jesus warns that his followers will be dragged before governors and kings 'as a testimony' (Matt 10:18; Mark 6:11). Paul speaks of the gospel of the kingdom being proclaimed 'as a testimony to all nations' (Matt 24:14). The term also echoes the Old Testament 'tabernacle of testimony' (Acts 7:44), linking it to the covenant tablets. German 'Zeugnis' and French 'temoignage' preserve the forensic and declarative overtones alike.

(20×) Testimony or witness—a declaration, act, or evidence that attests to truth. Used both of the gospel proclaimed to the nations as public evidence (Matt 24:14) and of actions performed 'for a testimony to them' (Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44; Mark 6:11). Also carries the OT echo of the 'tabernacle of testimony' (Acts 7:44), referring to the covenant tablets. The Spanish 'testimonio,' French 'temoignage,' and German 'Zeugnis' all preserve the forensic weight of the term —something placed on record for others to consider. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: a-testimony, testimony | es: testimonio | fr: témoignage | de: Zeugnis, μαρτυρίου, μαρτύριον Matt 8:4; Matt 10:18; Matt 24:14; Mark 1:44; Mark 6:11

μαρτύρομαι G3143 V-PIM/P-1S (5×)

To solemnly testify, bear witness, or earnestly affirm; to call others to witness the truth of what one declares.

A verb of solemn public testimony, used when the speaker stakes personal credibility on the truth of a declaration. Paul employs it at critical moments: defending his ministry before the Ephesian elders (Acts 20:26), affirming his gospel before Agrippa (Acts 26:22), and urging the Galatians and Ephesians to grasp the weight of his words. The Spanish 'testifico' and German 'bezeugen' both capture this courtroom gravity. More than casual speech, this is truth-telling with one's reputation on the line.

(5×) To solemnly testify or earnestly affirm, calling God or others as witnesses to the veracity of one's statement. Paul uses this when the stakes are highest: declaring himself innocent of all blood (Acts 20:26), affirming that every person who accepts circumcision is bound to the whole law (Gal 5:3), and urging believers to walk worthy of God (1 Thess 2:12). The English 'I testify' and French 'attester' both underscore the formal, almost juridical weight of this word. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: I-testify, testifying | es: testificando, testifico | fr: attester, μαρτυρόμενοι, μαρτύρομαι | de: bezeugen, μαρτυρόμενος, μαρτύρομαι Acts 20:26; Acts 26:22; Gal 5:3; Eph 4:17; 1Thess 2:12

μάρτῠς G3144 N-AMS (35×)

witness — one who testifies to what has been seen or known, later developing into the sense of 'martyr'

Martys ('witness') appears 35 times in the New Testament, spanning its full semantic arc from courtroom attestation to sacrificial death. In the Gospels, the word retains its classical Greek legal sense: two or three witnesses establish a charge (Matt 18:16; cf. Deut 19:15), and the Sanhedrin seeks witnesses against Jesus (Matt 26:65; Mark 14:63). Luke-Acts pivots the term toward theological testimony: the apostles are 'witnesses' of the resurrection (Luke 24:48; Acts 1:8, 22; 2:32; 3:15; 10:39, 41). The letter to the Hebrews introduces the famous 'cloud of witnesses' (12:1), those who attest to faith by the shape of their lives. Revelation completes the trajectory: Antipas is 'my faithful witness' who was killed (Rev 2:13), and the 'two witnesses' prophesy and die (Rev 11:3) — passages that gave English the word 'martyr.'

witness (one who testifies) (35×) A person who bears testimony to truth, whether in a judicial proceeding, as an eyewitness to events, or through faithful proclamation even unto death. The classical legal sense governs the Gospel trial narratives (Matt 26:65; Mark 14:63) and the Deuteronomic two-witness rule (Matt 18:16; 2 Cor 13:1). The apostolic-kerygmatic sense dominates Acts, where the Twelve are 'witnesses of his resurrection' (Acts 1:22; 2:32; 10:41). The trajectory toward suffering testimony emerges in Revelation, where Antipas is ho martys mou ho pistos ('my faithful witness,' Rev 2:13) and Stephen is implied as proto-martyr (Acts 22:20). Spanish 'testigos,' French 'temoin,' German 'Zeuge' all preserve the legal-testimonial core. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY

en: of-witnesses, witnesses | es: de-testigos, testigos | fr: témoin | de: Zeuge Matt 18:16; Matt 26:65; Mark 14:63; Luke 11:48; Luke 24:48

μασσάομαι G3145 V-IIM/P-3P (1×)

μασάομαι — to chew, gnaw, or bite, especially with the teeth

This verb appears in Revelation 16:10, describing people gnawing their tongues in anguish during the fifth bowl judgment. The middle voice form emphasizes the reflexive action — they chewed their own tongues. This graphic detail portrays extreme pain causing involuntary physical response, yet John notes they still refused to repent. The image evokes both literal physiological reaction to torment and metaphorical self-inflicted suffering. Despite such intense judgment meant to provoke repentance, hardened hearts persist in blasphemy rather than turning to God.

(1×) The imperfect middle/passive third plural 'they were gnawing' describes ongoing action during the plague. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'mordían,' French 'mâcher') confirms the visceral physicality of this judgment response, an involuntary reaction to suffering that paradoxically coexists with willful persistence in rebellion against God. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: they-gnawed | es: mordían | fr: mâcher | de: kauen Rev 16:10

μαστῑγ-όω G3146 V-APA-NMP (7×)

To flog, scourge, or whip; a judicial or punitive beating with a lash, applied to Jesus in his passion and to persecuted disciples.

Mastigoo refers specifically to flogging with a whip or scourge, a formal punishment that could be either judicial (administered by Roman soldiers) or synagogue discipline. Jesus predicts it three times in his passion announcements (Matt 20:19, Mark 10:34, Luke 18:33), and it frames the cost of discipleship when he warns that his followers will be scourged in synagogues (Matt 10:17, Matt 23:34). The author of Hebrews extends it metaphorically to divine discipline (Heb 12:6). Spanish 'azotar' and German 'geisseln' both denote whipping with a dedicated instrument, matching the precision of the Greek.

flog, scourge, whip (7×) To beat or flog someone with a whip or scourge, inflicting physical punishment. The word consistently implies an instrument of punishment rather than bare-handed striking. In the Synoptic passion predictions (Matt 20:19, Mark 10:34, Luke 18:33), mastigoo foreshadows the Roman scourging of Jesus before crucifixion. In Matt 10:17 and 23:34, it describes synagogue flogging of Christian missionaries. Hebrews 12:6 quotes Proverbs to present God as a father who 'scourges every son he receives,' shifting the image from punitive to corrective. Spanish 'azotar' and French 'fouetter' preserve the instrument-specific meaning. FLOGGING SCOURGING

en: flogging, he-scourges, scourged | es: azota, azotar, azotarán | fr: fouetter | de: geisseln, μαστιγώσαντες, μαστιγώσετε Matt 10:17; Matt 20:19; Matt 23:34; Mark 10:34; Luke 18:33

μαστ-ίζω G3147 V-PNA (1×)

μαστίζω — to whip, scourge, or flog as punishment or interrogation

This verb appears in Acts 22:25, when Paul asks the centurion if it is lawful to flog a Roman citizen uncondemned. The word derives from μάστιξ (whip/scourge) and describes the brutal practice of beating with rods or whips, often used in Roman interrogation. Paul's question invokes his legal protection as a Roman citizen, who could not be scourged without trial. This moment demonstrates Paul's strategic use of his citizenship to protect himself and establish legal precedent for the gospel's advance, showing that while Christians submit to authority, they also utilize legal rights wisely.

(1×) The present infinitive 'to flog' expresses intended action: 'Is it lawful... to flog?' Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'azotar,' French 'battre') identify this as corporal punishment involving striking with instruments, a practice Paul's citizenship legally forbade, creating a crisis when authorities realized they had unlawfully bound a Roman citizen. FLOGGING SCOURGING

en: to-flog | es: azotar | fr: battre | de: μαστίζειν Acts 22:25

μάστ-ιξ G3148 N-GFP (6×)

A whip or scourge; literally an instrument of punishment, figuratively a disease or affliction conceived as a divine lash.

The classical Greek image is vivid: a whip cracking over horses, or the lash driving soldiers forward. In the NT, mastix splits into two registers. Figuratively, it describes diseases and afflictions as 'scourges' — divine lashes that mark and torment the body. The woman with the flow of blood is healed 'from her scourge' (Mark 5:29, 34), and crowds press toward Jesus so that all who had 'scourges' might touch him (Mark 3:10; Luke 7:21). Spanish captures the figurative sense with 'enfermedad' (disease) alongside 'azotes' (lashings), showing how the metaphor works. Literally, the word denotes the physical instrument of Roman punishment: Paul is about to be 'examined by scourging' (Acts 22:24), and OT heroes 'experienced mockings and scourgings' (Heb 11:36).

1. affliction, disease (figurative scourge) (4×) An affliction, disease, or plague understood figuratively as a 'scourge' or lash — suffering conceived as a striking blow. The woman with the hemorrhage is healed 'from her scourge' (Mark 5:29, 34), and the sick press toward Jesus because he heals all their 'scourges' (Mark 3:10; Luke 7:21). Spanish 'enfermedad' (disease) and 'enfermedades' (diseases) alongside 'azotes' (lashings) reveal the dual register: the underlying metaphor of being struck persists even when the referent is illness. This figurative usage echoes the classical Greek 'scourge of God' — affliction as divine discipline. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: affliction, afflictions | es: azotes, enfermedad, enfermedades | fr: fléau | de: Geisseln, μαστίγων Mark 3:10; Mark 5:29; Mark 5:34; Luke 7:21

2. whip, scourge (instrument of punishment) (2×) A whip or scourge as a literal instrument of physical punishment — the leather thongs or rods used in Roman judicial flogging. In Acts 22:24 the tribune orders Paul to be 'examined with whips' (mastixin), the standard Roman procedure for extracting testimony from non-citizens. In Heb 11:36 the faithful endured 'scourgings' among other tortures. Spanish 'con-azotes' (with whips) and English 'with-whips' both emphasize the concrete, physical instrument, sharply distinguishing this from the figurative disease sense. WHIP SCOURGE

en: of-scourgings, with-whips | es: azotes, con-azotes | fr: fléau | de: Geisseln, μάστιξιν Acts 22:24; Heb 11:36

μαστός G3149 N-NMP (3×)

breast, chest; the front of the upper body, sometimes specifically referring to a woman's breast

This word refers to the breast or chest—the front upper portion of the torso. In biblical contexts, it can refer to either male or female anatomy, though often with specific reference to nursing. Luke 11:27 records a woman blessing 'the womb that bore you and the breasts at which you nursed,' celebrating Jesus' mother with reference to her maternal role. Luke 23:29 quotes Jesus predicting a time when people will say 'Blessed are...the breasts that never nursed,' describing coming judgment so severe that childlessness will seem preferable to motherhood. Revelation 1:13 describes the Son of Man 'clothed with a long robe and with a golden sash around his chest,' indicating regal priestly attire.

(3×) The breast or chest. Luke 11:27 records a woman blessing 'the womb that bore you and the breasts that nursed you,' praising Jesus' mother through reference to her nursing. Luke 23:29 quotes Jesus' prophecy: 'Blessed are the barren and the wombs that never bore and the breasts that never nursed'—a paradoxical blessing indicating coming catastrophe so severe that childlessness seems fortunate. Revelation 1:13 describes the exalted Christ with 'a golden sash around his chest,' emphasizing his priestly-royal garment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: breasts, chest | es: los-pechos, pechos | fr: sein | de: Brueste, μαστοὶ Luke 11:27; Luke 23:29; Rev 1:13

μάταιο-λογία G3150 N-AFS (1×)

ματαιολογία — empty talk, vain discussion, meaningless babbling

This noun appears in 1 Timothy 1:6, describing what certain people have wandered into by departing from sincere faith, pure heart, and good conscience. The compound combines μάταιος (vain/empty) with λογία (talk/discussion), denoting speech that lacks substance or truth. Paul contrasts this with the goal of his instruction: love from a pure heart. The term suggests not just theological error but the futility of speculation detached from the gospel's ethical and spiritual core. Such talk produces controversies and arguments rather than God's work by faith.

(1×) The accusative singular functions as the object turned toward: 'turned aside to empty talk.' The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'palabrería-vana,' German 'leeres-Geschwaetz') emphasizes the vacuous, unproductive nature of discussion divorced from love and truth, warning against intellectual exercises that generate more noise than light. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: empty-talk | es: palabrería-vana | fr: ματαιολογίαν | de: leeres-Geschwaetz 1Tim 1:6

μάταιο-λόγος G3151 Adj-NMP (1×)

ματαιολόγος — empty talker, one who speaks vain or meaningless words

This adjective appears in Titus 1:10, where Paul warns about rebellious people, empty talkers, and deceivers, especially those from the circumcision party. The word combines μάταιος (vain) with λόγος (word/speech), describing those whose teaching lacks truth and substance. These individuals are not merely mistaken but insubordinate, leading whole households astray for dishonest gain. Paul's description suggests people who use religious language to promote false teaching, whose eloquence masks emptiness of content and corruption of motive. They must be silenced to protect the community of faith.

(1×) The nominative masculine plural 'empty talkers' identifies a class of false teachers. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'vana-palabrería,' German 'Schwaetzer') characterize these individuals as verbose but vacuous, whose many words signify little truth and much deception, requiring strong rebuttal to protect believers from their influence. IDLE TALK BOASTING

en: empty-talkers | es: vana-palabrería | fr: ματαιολόγοι | de: Schwaetzer Titus 1:10

μάται-ος G3152 Adj-NFP (6×)

Vain, empty, worthless; of things that lack substance, value, or effect; of persons, foolish or deluded.

In Greek thought, mataios describes anything that fails to achieve its purpose or lacks real substance. Paul uses it to expose the hollowness of worldly reasoning (1 Cor 3:20) and to warn that without the resurrection, faith itself would be futile (1 Cor 15:17). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish vana, French vain, and German eitel all converge on the same semantic core of emptiness and fruitlessness. In Acts 14:15, Paul and Barnabas urge the Lystrans to turn from 'vain things'—lifeless idols—to the living God, showing the word can characterize entire systems of belief as hollow.

1. worthless (4×) Worthless, futile — describing things, actions, or states that lack real value or productive outcome. Paul warns that if Christ has not been raised, the Corinthians' faith is mataios — futile, achieving nothing (1 Cor 15:17). Titus 3:9 and Jas 1:26 similarly mark certain behaviors as empty of profit. Spanish vana, French vain, and German eitel all reinforce this core meaning of fruitlessness. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: futile, worthless | es: vana, vanas | fr: vain, μάταιοι, μάταιος | de: eitel 1Cor 15:17; Titus 3:9; Jas 1:26; 1Pet 1:18

2. vain things (1×) Vain, empty (of idolatrous or illusory things) — characterizing entire categories of objects or practices as devoid of divine reality. In Acts 14:15, Paul urges turning from 'vain things' (mataiōn), i.e. lifeless idols, to the living God. The Spanish vanas-cosas ('vain things') captures this substantivized use nicely, where the adjective points to a whole system of worthless worship. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: vain-things | es: vanas-cosas | fr: vain | de: ματαίων Acts 14:15

3. futile (1×) Futile, intellectually empty — applied to human reasoning or thought that proves hollow before God. In 1 Cor 3:20 Paul quotes Psalm 94:11: 'The Lord knows the thoughts of the wise, that they are futile (mataioi).' Here the word exposes the bankruptcy of human wisdom apart from divine revelation. Spanish vanos and German eitel preserve this intellectual-futility nuance. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: futile | es: vanos | fr: vain | de: eitel 1Cor 3:20

μάταιότης G3153 N-GFS (3×)

futility, emptiness; the quality of being purposeless, vain, or without value

This word captures the concept of futility, emptiness, or purposelessness—the vanity of that which fails to achieve meaningful ends. Paul uses it theologically to describe humanity's fallen condition. Romans 8:20 declares that creation 'was subjected to futility' because of the fall—the natural world shares in humanity's curse, frustrated in achieving its original purpose. Ephesians 4:17 warns believers to no longer walk 'in the futility of their minds' as Gentiles do—thinking darkened by sin produces purposeless, empty reasoning. 2 Peter 2:18 describes false teachers speaking 'loud boasts of folly,' literally 'great swelling words of emptiness,' impressive-sounding but ultimately vacuous and deceptive.

(3×) Futility, emptiness, or vanity—the quality of being purposeless. Romans 8:20 states creation 'was subjected to futility' through the fall, frustrated from achieving its intended purpose. Ephesians 4:17 warns believers not to walk 'as the Gentiles do, in the futility of their minds'—thinking darkened by sin that produces empty, purposeless reasoning. 2 Peter 2:18 describes false teachers uttering 'loud boasts of folly' (literally 'swelling words of emptiness')—impressive-sounding but hollow, deceptive speech lacking truth or substance. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: futility, of-emptiness | es: de-vanidad, vanidad | fr: vanité | de: Nichtigkeit Rom 8:20; Eph 4:17; 2Pet 2:18

ματαιόω G3154 V-AIP-3P (1×)

ματαιόω — to make vain or futile; to become foolish or empty

This verb appears in Romans 1:21, describing how humanity, knowing God, refused to honor or thank him, becoming futile in their thinking. The passive form indicates they 'were made futile' or 'became futile' — their reasoning processes became vain and worthless. This isn't intellectual inability but moral rebellion: rejecting the truth about God leads to cognitive corruption. Their supposed wisdom became foolishness. The verb captures how turning from the Creator doesn't lead to enlightenment but to increasing darkness, as minds designed for truth malfunction when detached from their proper object.

(1×) The aorist passive third plural 'they became futile' describes the result of refusing to acknowledge God. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'se-hicieron-vanos,' German 'nichtig-werden') conveys the transformation from potential wisdom to actual foolishness, showing that autonomy from God produces not liberation but the emptying of human thought into vanity. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: they-became-futile | es: se-hicieron-vanos | fr: rendre-vain | de: nichtig-werden Rom 1:21

μάτην G3155 Adv (2×)

in vain, to no purpose, futilely; without reason or uselessly

Pointlessly, futilely, to no effect. Jesus quotes Isaiah: people honor God with lips, but their worship is 'in vain' (Matthew 15:9, Mark 7:7) because they teach human traditions as doctrine. The word can mean 'without cause,' 'randomly,' 'idly,' or 'falsely.' Classical usage ranged from doing something to no effect, to speaking falsely, to being mad 'without reason.' The emphasis is on futility—effort or speech that accomplishes nothing, worship that doesn't reach God.

(2×) Jesus' identical quotation in Matthew and Mark (from Isaiah 29:13) pronounces religious activity empty when divorced from heart obedience. The lexicon shows classical uses for fruitless burden, baseless madness, false speech, and empty dreams. All translations converge on 'in vain' or equivalent: Spanish en vano, French en vain, German vergeblich. The charge is devastating: meticulous religious observance that God rejects as pointless. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: in-vain | es: En-vano, en-vano | fr: en-vain | de: vergeblich, μάτην Matt 15:9; Mark 7:7

Ματθαῖος G3156 N-NMS (5×)

Matthew, one of the twelve apostles, formerly a tax collector; also called Levi.

The personal name of one of Jesus' twelve apostles, a tax collector called from his booth to follow Christ (Matt 9:9). The Semitic form behind the Greek suggests 'gift of God.' French renders him 'Matthieu,' while Spanish and German preserve forms closer to the Greek. He appears in every apostolic list (Matt 10:3, Mark 3:18, Luke 6:15, Acts 1:13) and is traditionally identified with Levi son of Alphaeus, linking the call narratives of Matthew and Mark.

(5×) The proper name Matthew (Maththaios), designating one of Jesus' twelve apostles. Called directly from his tax-collection post (Matt 9:9), he exemplifies radical discipleship. The name likely derives from Hebrew mattanyah ('gift of YHWH'). Listed among the Twelve in every synoptic catalogue and in Acts 1:13, he is consistently paired with Thomas in the apostolic lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maththaios, Matthaios | es: Maththaios, Maththaîon, Maththaîos | fr: Matthieu, Matthéas | de: Matthaeus, Μαθθαῖον, Μαθθαῖος Matt 9:9; Matt 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13

Μαθθάν G3157 N-NMS (2×)

Matthan, an ancestor of Jesus in Matthew's genealogy, grandfather of Jacob (Joseph's father)

An ancestor of Jesus mentioned only in Matthew's genealogy (1:15), where he appears twice in the same verse as father of Jacob and grandfather of Joseph (Mary's husband). The name derives from Hebrew Mattan, meaning 'gift.' He represents the penultimate generation before Joseph, placing him in the late Second Temple period. Genealogical records from this era were carefully maintained, especially for Davidic descendants.

(2×) The double occurrence in Matthew 1:15 reflects genealogical notation: Matthan fathered Jacob, who fathered Joseph. This places him two generations before Jesus' birth. The Hebrew etymology (gift) was common in post-exilic Judaism. All translations simply transliterate the name, sometimes with minor spelling variations (Matthán, Matthan). His inclusion emphasizes Jesus' legal descent through Joseph from David and Abraham. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Matthan | es: Matthán | fr: Matthan | de: Matthan Matt 1:15

Μαθθάτ G3158 N-GMS (2×)

Matthat, the name of two ancestors of Jesus in Luke's genealogy

A name borne by two different men in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (3:24, 3:29), both positioned several generations before Joseph. The name is variant of Hebrew Mattithiah, meaning 'gift of Yahweh.' Luke's genealogy differs from Matthew's, likely tracing Mary's line or using different genealogical traditions. The double occurrence of the same name in one genealogy wasn't unusual in ancient families, though it can confuse modern readers.

(2×) Luke 3:24 and 3:29 place two men named Matthat in Jesus' ancestry, separated by several generations. The Hebrew background (gift of Yahweh) makes it an appropriate name expressing parental gratitude. Textual variants show uncertainty about exact spelling (Maththath, Matthat), typical for transliterating Hebrew names. The genealogical complexity reflects the careful recordkeeping of Jewish families while also showing how traditions could vary. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Matthat | es: Matthath | fr: Matthat | de: Matthat Luke 3:24; Luke 3:29

Μαθθίας G3159 N-AMS (2×)

Matthias, the apostle chosen to replace Judas Iscariot, completing the Twelve

The disciple selected by lot to replace Judas among the Twelve (Acts 1:23-26). He met the qualifications: he'd followed Jesus from John's baptism through the ascension. The community nominated two candidates—Joseph and Matthias—then prayed and cast lots, trusting God to show his choice. Matthias won, becoming the twelfth apostolic witness to the resurrection. His name, like Matthew's, derives from Hebrew Mattithiah ('gift of Yahweh'). After this selection, he disappears from the biblical record.

(2×) Both Acts references concern Matthias' selection as Judas' replacement. The process combined human wisdom (establishing criteria, nominating qualified candidates) with divine guidance (prayer and lots). The name's Hebrew origin connects him to the Jewish context of early Christianity. Later tradition assigns him various missionary journeys, but Scripture records only his appointment. His inclusion restored the symbolic twelve-tribe leadership structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Matthias | es: Maththías | fr: Matthieu | de: Μαθθίαν Acts 1:23; Acts 1:26

Ματταθά G3160 N-GMS (1×)

Mattatha (Ματταθά) — a personal name in Jesus' genealogy, appearing in Luke's account

This name occurs in Luke 3:31, part of the genealogical section between David and Joseph. Like many names in this portion of Luke's genealogy, Mattatha is otherwise unknown outside this reference. The Hebrew origin (Mattathah) means 'gift of Yahweh.' Luke's genealogy differs from Matthew's in this section, tracing through Nathan rather than Solomon, suggesting different branches of David's descendants. These lesser-known names establish Jesus' legitimate Davidic lineage through careful record-keeping, even when individuals didn't hold prominent positions in Israel's political history.

(1×) The genitive form positions this individual in the ancestral chain. The multilingual preservation of the Greek transliteration reflects standard genealogical practice of maintaining historical names in their received forms, contributing to the documentation of Jesus' descent from David through a non-royal line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattatha | es: Mattathá | fr: Mattatha | de: Mattathias Luke 3:31

Ματταθίας G3161 N-GMS (2×)

Mattathias, an ancestor of Jesus mentioned in Luke's genealogy; likely several different individuals

A name appearing twice in Luke's genealogy (3:25-26), representing either two different ancestors or possibly reflecting textual complexity. The name is the full form of which Matthat and Matthew are variants—all from Hebrew Mattithiah ('gift of Yahweh'). It was a popular name in Second Temple Judaism, famously borne by the priest who sparked the Maccabean revolt. Luke's genealogy traces Jesus' ancestry through multiple generations of otherwise unknown figures.

(2×) The two occurrences in Luke 3:25-26 place Mattathias (or two men with this name) in Jesus' ancestry several generations before Joseph. The Maccabean associations would have resonated with Luke's audience, though these are different individuals. The name's popularity in post-exilic Judaism explains its repeated occurrence. All translations transliterate, with minor variations. The genealogical purpose is establishing Jesus' full Jewish pedigree back to Adam. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattathias | es: Mattathías | fr: Mattathias | de: Ματταθίου Luke 3:25; Luke 3:26

μάχαιρ-α G3162 N-GFS (29×)

A sword or large knife; used literally of a weapon and figuratively of divine judgment, persecution, or conflict

Originally denoting a large knife or short sword (distinct from the longer xiphos), machaira became the standard NT term for the sword in all its dimensions – literal, judicial, and metaphorical. Jesus tells Peter to put his machaira back in its place at Gethsemane (Matt 26:52), and warns that 'all who take the sword will perish by the sword.' Yet he also declared 'I did not come to bring peace but a sword' (Matt 10:34), using it figuratively for the division his message would cause. Paul speaks of the governing authority bearing 'the sword' as God's instrument of justice (Rom 13:4), and Hebrews describes God's word as 'sharper than any two-edged sword' (Heb 4:12). Spanish 'espada,' French 'epee,' and German 'Schwert' all render the word consistently.

1. (22×) A sword as a physical weapon – the short sword, dagger, or blade carried by soldiers, guards, or individuals. This is the machaira Peter draws at Gethsemane (Matt 26:51), the weapon Herod uses to execute James (Acts 12:2), and the instrument of martyrdom listed among trials of faith (Rom 8:35, Heb 11:37). Jesus' warning 'all who take the sword will perish by the sword' (Matt 26:52) underscores the literal, lethal reality of this weapon. All target languages render uniformly: Spanish 'espada,' French 'epee,' German 'Schwert.' WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: a-sword, of-sword, sword | es: de-espada, espada | fr: épée | de: Schwert Matt 10:34; Matt 26:51; Matt 26:52

2. (6×) Swords in the plural, referring to armed groups, military force, or the collective threat of violence. The crowd that arrests Jesus comes 'with swords and clubs' (Matt 26:47, Mark 14:43), and Jesus rebukes them: 'Have you come out with swords and clubs to capture me?' (Matt 26:55). When the disciples say 'Lord, here are two swords' (Luke 22:38), the plural signals readiness for conflict. This sense extends to persecution lists where 'sword' represents violent death as a category (Rom 8:35). WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: swords | es: espadas | fr: épée | de: Schwert Matt 26:47; Matt 26:55; Mark 14:43; Mark 14:48; Luke 22:38

3. (1×) The sword as an instrument of judicial or divinely authorized power, wielded by governing authorities or by God himself. Paul declares that the ruler 'does not bear the sword in vain' (Rom 13:4), pointing to the state's God-given authority to execute justice. This judicial sense bridges the literal weapon and its metaphorical extensions, showing the sword as a symbol of authorized lethal power rather than mere violence. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: with-sword | es: con-espada | fr: épée | de: Schwert Acts 12:2

μάχ-η G3163 N-AFP (4×)

A fight, quarrel, or conflict; strife arising from disputes or clashing interests.

Derived from the verb machomai (to fight), this noun covers the full range from physical combat to verbal disputes and interpersonal strife. In the New Testament it appears exclusively in the figurative sense of quarrels and contentions rather than military battles. James 4:1 memorably asks where these 'wars and fights' come from, pointing to inner desires as the root. Paul uses it to describe both external conflicts (2 Cor 7:5) and the fruitless disputes that arise from foolish controversies (2 Tim 2:23, Titus 3:9).

(4×) Quarrels, disputes, and conflicts between people, whether verbal contention or broader interpersonal strife. The multilingual evidence uniformly points to strife and contention rather than military combat: Spanish 'contiendas, disputas, luchas,' German 'Streit,' and French 'combat.' In James 4:1 it appears alongside 'wars' (polemoi) to describe the bitter feuds that spring from selfish desires, while in 2 Timothy 2:23 and Titus 3:9 Paul warns against the pointless fights generated by foolish controversies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: conflicts, fights, quarrels | es: contiendas, disputas, luchas | fr: combat, μάχαι, μάχας | de: Streit 2Cor 7:5; 2Tim 2:23; Titus 3:9; Jas 4:1

μάχομαι G3164 V-IIM/P-3P (4×)

To fight, quarrel, or dispute; to engage in verbal or physical conflict with another.

This deponent verb spans from physical combat in classical Greek to the verbal quarreling and disputing found in the New Testament. In John 6:52 the Jews 'were quarreling among themselves' over Jesus's teaching about eating his flesh, while in Acts 7:26 Moses finds two Israelites fighting and tries to reconcile them. Paul instructs Timothy that a servant of the Lord must not quarrel (2 Tim 2:24), and James 4:2 bluntly connects fighting with unfulfilled desires. The consistent multilingual rendering – Spanish 'peleaban, combatís,' French 'se disputer,' German 'streiten' – confirms the emphasis on contentious disputation.

(4×) To quarrel, dispute, or fight, whether physically or verbally. The glosses across languages converge on interpersonal strife: Spanish 'peleaban' (were fighting), French 'se disputer' (to argue), German 'streiten' (to quarrel). In Acts 7:26 it describes a physical altercation between two Hebrews, while in John 6:52 it captures the heated arguing among Jewish listeners. Paul's prohibition in 2 Timothy 2:24 and James's diagnosis in 4:2 both target the disposition toward contentious conflict. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: Were-quarreling, fighting, to-fight | es: Peleaban, combatís, peleando | fr: combattre, se-disputer | de: streiten, μαχομένοις John 6:52; Acts 7:26; 2Tim 2:24; Jas 4:2

ἐγώ G3165

I, first-person pronoun; oblique cases from different root (genitive ἐμοῦ, etc.)

The first-person pronoun 'I' functions as the basic self-reference in Greek. The nominative form ἐγώ (often ἐγών before vowels) can be strengthened with the particle -γε to create ἔγωγε, meaning 'I at least' or 'for my part.' An interesting feature: while the nominative comes from one root, the oblique cases (genitive ἐμοῦ, dative ἐμοί, accusative ἐμέ) derive from a completely different stem, reflecting ancient Indo-European patterns preserved in the language.

μεγᾰλ-αυχέω G3166 V-PIA-3S (1×)

μεγαλαυχέω — to boast greatly, brag, or make lofty claims

This verb appears in James 3:5, where James uses the tongue as an illustration of something small that boasts great things. The compound combines μέγας (great) with αὐχέω (to boast), intensifying the basic idea of boasting into grand, excessive claims. James compares the tongue to a small fire that sets a great forest ablaze — its capacity for destruction far exceeds its size. The context warns about the power of speech to cause disproportionate harm. While small, the tongue claims to accomplish much and often delivers proportionate damage through its boasts and lies.

(1×) The present indicative third singular 'boasts' describes characteristic action of the tongue. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'se-jacta,' German 'sich-ruehmen') capture the self-aggrandizing nature of speech that makes excessive claims, highlighting the danger James sees in the human tongue's capacity for prideful, destructive expression. PRAISE AND BOASTING

en: boasts | es: se-jacta | fr: αὐχεῖ | de: sich-ruehmen Jas 3:5

μεγᾰλεῖ-ος G3167 Adj-ANP (1×)

μεγαλεῖος — magnificent, splendid, mighty; extraordinary works or deeds

This adjective appears in Acts 2:11 during Pentecost, where visiting Jews hear the disciples declaring 'the mighty works of God' in various languages. The term denotes grandeur and magnificence, things worthy of wonder and praise. In the Septuagint, it often translates Hebrew words for God's powerful deeds in history — creation, exodus, conquest. The Pentecost crowd's amazement stems not just from the linguistic miracle but from hearing God's great acts proclaimed in their native tongues, fulfilling Joel's prophecy about the Spirit's outpouring and reversing the curse of Babel.

(1×) The accusative neuter plural 'great works' functions as the object being declared. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'grandezas,' French 'magnifique') emphasize the extraordinary nature of God's acts that deserve proclamation, the very content of Spirit-empowered witness that transcends linguistic and cultural barriers to declare divine glory. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great-works | es: grandezas | fr: magnifique | de: μεγαλεῖα Acts 2:11

μεγᾰλει-ότης G3168 N-GFS (3×)

majesty, greatness; splendor, magnificence, or grandeur befitting divine or royal persons

This word conveys majesty, magnificence, or awesome greatness—the splendor appropriate to royalty and especially to God. Luke 9:43 describes the crowd's reaction to Jesus healing the demon-possessed boy: they were 'astonished at the majesty of God' displayed through Jesus. Acts 19:27 records the silversmith Demetrius warning that Paul's preaching threatens Artemis's temple, fearing 'her majesty' will be destroyed and she'll lose her divine status. 2 Peter 1:16 contrasts eyewitness testimony with myths: the apostles 'were eyewitnesses of his majesty' at the Transfiguration, hearing the Father's voice declaring Jesus his beloved Son. The word emphasizes visible, manifest divine glory.

(3×) Majesty, magnificence, or greatness. Luke 9:43 describes onlookers 'amazed at the majesty of God' displayed when Jesus healed the demon-possessed boy—divine grandeur made visible. Acts 19:27 has Demetrius warning that Artemis's 'majesty' will be destroyed if people heed Paul—the goddess's supposed magnificence threatened by the gospel. 2 Peter 1:16 contrasts myths with eyewitness testimony: 'we were eyewitnesses of his majesty' at the Transfiguration, where Jesus' divine glory and the Father's voice revealed his true identity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: majesty | es: grandeza, majestad | fr: magnificence, majesté | de: Herrlichkeit, μεγαλειότητι, μεγαλειότητος Luke 9:43; Acts 19:27; 2Pet 1:16

μεγᾰλο-πρεπής G3169 Adj-GFS (1×)

μεγαλοπρεπής — magnificent, sublime, majestic; befitting greatness

This adjective appears in 2 Peter 1:17, describing the 'majestic glory' from which the voice came at Jesus' transfiguration. The compound combines μέγας (great) with πρέπω (to be fitting), denoting magnificence appropriate to greatness. Peter appeals to this eyewitness experience as proof that apostolic testimony about Christ's power and coming rests on actual divine revelation, not cleverly invented myths. The majestic glory he witnessed on the mountain authenticated Jesus' identity as God's beloved Son, providing certainty about the prophetic word and the Lord's return.

(1×) The genitive feminine singular 'majestic' modifies 'glory,' describing its sublime quality. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'majestuosa,' German 'majesteatisch') convey the awe-inspiring, transcendent magnificence Peter witnessed, glory so overwhelming it validated everything the apostles proclaimed about Jesus' divine nature and authority. POWER AND ABILITY

en: majestic | es: majestuosa | fr: μεγαλοπρεποῦς | de: majesteatisch 2Pet 1:17

μεγᾰλύνω G3170 V-PIA-3S (8×)

To magnify, glorify, praise; to make large or enlarge — declaring greatness or increasing extent

The verb μεγαλύνω, built on the root μέγας ('great'), can move in two directions: making someone great by word — praising, extolling, magnifying — or making something great in size or extent. Mary's Magnificat opens with the defining instance: 'My soul magnifies the Lord' (Luke 1:46), where μεγαλύνει means to declare God's greatness in praise. The rarer physical sense appears when Jesus accuses the scribes of making their phylacteries 'broad' (Matt 23:5), and Paul hopes his ministry may be 'enlarged' (2 Cor 10:15).

1. magnify, glorify, exalt (6×) To magnify, glorify, praise, or extol — declaring the greatness of God or holding someone in high honor. This is the dominant NT sense (6 of 8 occurrences), anchored by Mary's song in Luke 1:46: 'My soul magnifies the Lord.' In Acts 10:46 the household of Cornelius was heard 'magnifying God,' and in Acts 19:17 the name of the Lord Jesus 'was being magnified.' Spanish 'engrandece/engrandeció' and French 'magnifier' both convey verbal exaltation. The word operates in the domain of praise and worship, where the greatness being attributed is already real — the speaker is declaring it, not creating it. GLORIFYING AND HONORING

en: Magnifies, magnified, magnifying | es: Engrandece, engrandeció, engrandecía | fr: magnifier | de: gross-machen, Μεγαλύνει, μεγαλυνόντων Luke 1:46; Luke 1:58; Acts 5:13; Acts 10:46; Acts 19:17

2. make large, enlarge (2×) To make large, enlarge, or increase in physical or figurative extent. In Matt 23:5, Jesus criticizes those who 'enlarge' their phylacteries — literally making the leather boxes wider as a show of piety. In 2 Cor 10:15, Paul expresses hope that as the Corinthians' faith grows, his sphere of ministry will 'be enlarged.' Spanish shifts from 'engrandece' (praise, sense 1) to 'agrandan' (they make larger), and English from 'magnifies' to 'they lengthen' and 'to be enlarged,' signaling the concrete, dimensional meaning distinct from verbal praise. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: they-lengthen, to-be-enlarged | es: agrandan, ser-engrandecidos | fr: magnifier | de: gross-machen, μεγαλύνουσιν Matt 23:5; 2Cor 10:15

μέγᾰς G3171 Adv (1×)

μεγάλως — greatly, exceedingly, in a great manner

This adverb appears in Philippians 4:10, where Paul expresses his great joy that the Philippians have renewed their concern for him. The term modifies verbs to indicate intensity or degree — not just rejoicing but rejoicing greatly. Paul's warmth toward the Philippian church pervades this letter; their financial support during his imprisonment prompted profound gratitude. Yet he immediately clarifies that his contentment doesn't depend on circumstances — he has learned to be content in all situations. His great joy stems not from the gift itself but from the spiritual fruit it demonstrates in the givers.

(1×) The adverbial form intensifies the verb 'I rejoiced': 'I rejoiced greatly.' Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'grandemente,' German 'sehr') shows this functions as a degree modifier, emphasizing the magnitude of Paul's emotional response to the Philippians' renewed care, which reflected both their love and spiritual growth. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: greatly | es: grandemente | fr: μεγάλως | de: sehr Phil 4:10

μεγᾰλ-ωσύνη G3172 N-GFS (3×)

majesty; divine greatness, splendor, and sovereign power

This word, closely related to G3168, emphasizes divine majesty—the greatness, splendor, and sovereign power appropriate to God alone. The Letter to the Hebrews uses it twice to describe Christ's exalted position. Hebrews 1:3 declares that after purifying sins, Christ 'sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high'—a title for God emphasizing his supreme greatness. Hebrews 8:1 similarly states that we have a high priest 'who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven.' Jude 25 ascribes 'glory, majesty, dominion, and authority' to 'the only God, our Savior, through Jesus Christ.' The term emphasizes God's incomparable greatness.

(3×) Majesty, specifically divine majesty and sovereign greatness. Hebrews 1:3 and 8:1 both use 'the Majesty' as a title for God: Christ 'sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high' after purifying sins (1:3), and is now 'seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven' (8:1). Jude 25 ascribes 'glory, majesty, dominion, and authority' to God through Jesus Christ, using the term in a doxology celebrating God's supreme greatness, splendor, and sovereign power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Majesty, majesty | es: Majestad, majestad | fr: majesté, majesté, | de: Majestaet, Majestät Heb 1:3; Heb 8:1; Jude 1:25

μέγᾰς G3173 Adj-GFS-C (243×)

Great, large; of physical size, rank, intensity, or degree; comparative 'greater' and superlative 'greatest.'

Megas is the standard Greek adjective for 'great' in virtually every dimension — size, sound, importance, and intensity. A 'great city,' a 'loud voice,' a 'great commandment,' and 'great fear' all employ the same word. What makes its New Testament usage theologically interesting is how often physical magnitude bleeds into spiritual significance: the 'great light' of Matt 4:16 is both luminous and salvific, and the 'great joy' of the magi (Matt 2:10) is more than emotional volume. The comparative and superlative forms carry particular weight in Jesus' teaching about greatness in the kingdom, deliberately inverting worldly hierarchies of rank and power.

1. great in size or extent (176×) Great in physical size, spatial extent, or general magnitude — the dominant sense at 176 occurrences. Covers great cities (Rev 11:8), large crowds (Matt 14:14), great lights (Matt 4:16), loud voices (Rev 1:10), great storms (Matt 8:24), and great joy (Matt 2:10). Spanish gran/grande, German groß, and French grand all map cleanly here. The breadth of this cluster reflects megas's role as the unmarked, default 'big/great' adjective in Koine Greek. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great, loud | es: gran, grande, grandes | fr: grand | de: gross, groß Matt 2:10; Matt 4:16; Matt 5:19; Matt 5:35; Matt 7:27

2. greater or greatest (comparative/superlative) (49×) Comparative and superlative forms — 49 occurrences of meizon ('greater') and megistos ('greatest'). Central to Jesus' kingdom-reversal teaching: 'the greatest among you shall be your servant' (Matt 23:11); 'among those born of women none is greater than John' (Matt 11:11). Korean uses 더 큰 (comparative) and 가장 큰 (superlative), while Spanish mayor serves for both. The theological freight of these forms in the Gospels makes them a distinct usage cluster. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: Greater, greater, greater-than | es: mayor | fr: grand | de: gross, groß Matt 11:11; Matt 12:6; Matt 13:32; Matt 18:1

3. great in importance or status (10×) Great in importance, rank, or social status — 10 occurrences where megas is used substantively or attributively of persons of high position. In Matt 20:25 'the great ones' exercise authority; in Acts 26:22 Paul testifies to 'great and small.' This overlaps with sense 2 but focuses on social hierarchy rather than degree comparison. Swahili wakuu ('important ones') and Korean 높은 사람들 ('elevated persons') both select status-specific vocabulary. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great, great-ones, of-great | es: a-grande, de-grandes., grande | fr: grand | de: gross, groß Matt 20:25; Mark 4:32; Mark 4:41; Mark 10:42; Acts 26:22

4. great in intensity (loud, severe) (4×) Great in intensity — 4 occurrences where the emphasis falls on severity or volume rather than physical size. A 'great fever' (Luke 4:38), Paul crying out 'with a loud voice' (Acts 14:10; 16:28), Festus declaring Paul's 'great learning' has driven him mad (Acts 26:24). The intensifying function is cross-linguistically marked: Hindi uses bari ('intense/severe') rather than bada ('physically big'), confirming a real semantic distinction. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great, with-a-loud, with-loud | es: a-gran, con-grande, grande | fr: grand | de: groß Luke 4:38; Acts 14:10; Acts 16:28; Acts 26:24

5. great deeds or things (3×) Great deeds or things — 3 occurrences where megas is used substantively in the neuter to mean 'great things' or 'mighty works.' Mary's Magnificat: 'the Mighty One has done great things for me' (Luke 1:49); James warns that the tongue 'boasts great things' (Jas 3:5); the beast 'speaks great things' (Rev 13:5). Spanish grandes cosas and Korean 큰 일 both nominalize the adjective into 'remarkable deeds.' GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great-things | es: grandes-cosas | fr: grand | de: gross, groß Luke 1:49; Jas 3:5; Rev 13:5

6. great in quantity (much) (1×) Great in quantity — a single occurrence at Acts 26:29 where Paul wishes 'in a great [measure]' that all who hear him would become Christians. Here megas means 'much' or 'to a large degree' rather than physical size or status. German groß and Spanish mucho both shift toward quantitative vocabulary. A marginal but real sense at the boundary of the adjective's semantic range. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: much | es: mucho | fr: grand | de: groß Acts 26:29

μέγεθος G3174 N-NNS (1×)

μέγεθος — greatness, magnitude, size, or grandeur

This noun appears in Ephesians 1:19, where Paul prays that believers might know 'the surpassing greatness of his power toward us who believe.' The word denotes magnitude or size, whether physical dimension or metaphorical greatness. Here it describes the incomprehensible magnitude of God's power, the same power that raised Christ from the dead and seated him at God's right hand. Paul wants believers to grasp not just that God has power but the exceeding greatness of that power actively working for those who trust him — power that transforms, sustains, and guarantees final glorification.

(1×) The nominative neuter singular functions as the subject: 'what is the surpassing greatness.' The cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'grandeza,' German 'Groesse') emphasize the concept of immensity or magnitude applied to God's power, which Paul presents as beyond calculation yet knowable through spiritual illumination, available through the Spirit's revealing work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: greatness | es: grandeza | fr: μέγεθος | de: Groesse Eph 1:19

μεγιστάν G3175 N-DMP (3×)

great ones, magnates; powerful, wealthy, or high-ranking individuals

This word refers to the great ones—those holding power, wealth, and high social status. It describes the elite, the magnates, the influential figures who shape society. Mark 6:21 uses it in Herod's court: he gave a banquet 'for his nobles and military commanders and the leading men of Galilee'—the inner circle of power. Revelation 6:15 lists those hiding from divine wrath: 'kings of the earth, the great ones, the generals, the rich and the powerful'—every stratum of human authority and might. Revelation 18:23 laments fallen Babylon because 'your merchants were the great ones of the earth,' emphasizing economic power corrupted by luxury and exploitation.

(3×) Great ones, nobles, or magnates—powerful, wealthy, influential individuals. Mark 6:21 describes Herod's banquet for 'his nobles, military commanders, and the leading men of Galilee'—the power elite of his realm. Revelation 6:15 lists those fleeing God's wrath: 'kings...the great ones, the generals, the rich and the powerful,' showing that worldly status provides no escape from judgment. Revelation 18:23 laments Babylon whose 'merchants were the great ones of the earth,' indicating their immense economic power now judged for corruption. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great-ones | es: grandes, magnates | fr: grand | de: Grosse Mark 6:21; Rev 6:15; Rev 18:23

μεγιστεύω G3176

to be or become very great

This verb describes the action of becoming very great or achieving greatness. The lexical evidence shows it used with cities as subjects, as in the example 'the city will become very great.' It belongs to a family of words centered on the concept of magnitude and importance.

μεθερμην-εύω G3177 V-PIM/P-3S (8×)

To translate, interpret; to render a word or phrase from one language into another.

Methermeneuo means to translate or interpret, specifically to render a term from one language into another. In the New Testament it appears almost exclusively in the passive ('being translated' or 'which is translated'), used when Gospel writers explain Semitic names and phrases for Greek-speaking audiences — such as 'Emmanuel' (Matt 1:23), 'Talitha koum' (Mark 5:41), 'Golgotha' (Mark 15:22), and 'Rabbi' (John 1:38). These translation glosses are among our earliest evidence of multilingual biblical practice. The Spanish 'traducir' and German 'uebersetzen' both carry the same sense of linguistic transfer.

translate / interpret (render into another language) (8×) To render speech or a name from one language into another, functioning as a metalinguistic marker in the NT text. Used almost exclusively in the passive participle (methermēneuomenon, 'being translated') when the evangelists explain Semitic terms to Greek readers: 'Emmanuel... being translated, God with us' (Matt 1:23), 'Talitha koum... being translated, Girl, arise' (Mark 5:41), 'Golgotha... being translated, Place of a Skull' (Mark 15:22). These verses are themselves acts of cross-linguistic glossing, mirroring the very project of multilingual Bible translation. INTERPRET TRANSLATE en: being-interpreted, being-translated, is-translated | es: se-traduce, siendo-traducido, traducido | fr: interpréter | de: uebersetzen, μεθερμηνευόμενον, μεθερμηνεύεται Matt 1:23; Mark 5:41; Mark 15:22; Mark 15:34; John 1:38

μέθη G3178 N-DFS (3×)

drunkenness; the state of intoxication or habitual excessive drinking

This word describes drunkenness—both the state of intoxication and the lifestyle pattern of excessive drinking. Paul consistently lists it among behaviors incompatible with kingdom life. Luke 21:34 warns disciples to guard their hearts 'lest they be weighed down with...drunkenness and cares of this life,' so the day of judgment doesn't catch them unprepared. Romans 13:13 contrasts walking properly 'as in the daytime' versus engaging in 'orgies and drunkenness.' Galatians 5:21 includes it among the 'works of the flesh,' warning that 'those who do such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.' The term emphasizes loss of self-control and spiritual vigilance.

(3×) Drunkenness, intoxication, or habitual excessive drinking. Jesus warns in Luke 21:34 to watch carefully 'lest your hearts be weighed down with dissipation and drunkenness and cares of this life' so that day doesn't catch you unprepared—drunkenness dulls spiritual alertness. Paul lists it among vices: Romans 13:13 contrasts proper conduct with 'orgies and drunkenness,' and Galatians 5:21 includes it in 'works of the flesh,' warning that practitioners 'will not inherit the kingdom of God.' The word emphasizes loss of self-control incompatible with Christian vigilance. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8851 WITH 5 SENSES

en: drunkenness | es: borracheras, embriaguez | fr: ivresse | de: Trunkenheit, μέθη Luke 21:34; Rom 13:13; Gal 5:21

μεθίστημι G3179 V-APA-NMS (5×)

To remove, transfer, or displace from one position or state to another; to cause to change allegiance or location.

Carries the force of a decisive relocation, whether political, spiritual, or physical. God removed Saul and raised up David (Acts 13:22); the Father transferred believers from the domain of darkness into the kingdom of the Son (Col 1:13). Paul says faith could 'remove' mountains (1 Cor 13:2). The Spanish 'ha apartado' and French 'déplacer' both highlight this sense of authoritative displacement. It implies not merely motion but a change of regime or condition.

(5×) To remove, transfer, or displace someone or something from one position, authority, or state to another. The word implies purposeful, often authoritative relocation. God 'removed' Saul as king (Acts 13:22); believers are 'transferred' from darkness to Christ's kingdom (Col 1:13); faith could 'remove' mountains (1 Cor 13:2). In Luke 16:4 the steward fears being 'removed' from his post. The German 'versetzen' captures this sense of deliberate repositioning. TRANSFER AND CHANGE

en: I-am-removed, having-removed, to-remove | es: ha-apartado, quitando, sea-removido | fr: déplacer | de: versetzen, μετέστησεν, μεταστήσας Luke 16:4; Acts 13:22; Acts 19:26; 1Cor 13:2; Col 1:13

μεθοδ-εία G3180 N-AFP (2×)

scheming, trickery, or cunning methods; crafty strategies designed to deceive or manipulate

Cunning schemes, crafty strategies, or manipulative methods. Paul uses it twice in Ephesians, warning against deceptive teaching tactics (4:14) and urging believers to armor up against the devil's schemes (6:11). The word emphasizes methodology—calculated, systematic deception rather than impulsive lying. Later Greek used it for methods of collecting taxes or debts, but Paul's usage is clearly negative: sophisticated error wrapped in persuasive strategy.

(2×) Both Ephesians uses warn against systematic deception—false teachers' manipulative tactics (4:14) and Satan's strategic schemes (6:11). The enemy doesn't rely on random temptation but calculated methodology. Classical and later usage includes both neutral 'method' and negative 'craft,' but Paul's context is unambiguously hostile. Spanish estratagema and German List (cunning) capture the scheming quality. The plural suggests varied, multiple strategies rather than a single trick. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: schemes, scheming | es: estratagema, estratagemas | fr: μεθοδείαν, μεθοδείας | de: List Eph 4:14; Eph 6:11

μεθόριος G3181

lying between as boundary; border country, marches (neut. pl. τὰ μεθόρια)

This adjective describes territory that lies between two regions as a boundary zone. It appears in phrases like 'the border country between Argos and Laconia' or 'the marches of Attica and Boeotia.' The neuter plural τὰ μεθόρια functions as a noun meaning 'borders' or 'boundary regions.' In the New Testament variant tradition, it refers to the borders of Tyre and Sidon. The word captures the liminal space between territories, whether geographical or metaphorical.

μεθύσκω G3182 V-PNM/P (4×)

To make drunk or become drunk; to be intoxicated with wine or, figuratively, with influence.

The causative form of methuo (to be drunk), this verb means to make someone drunk or, in the passive, to get drunk oneself. Its New Testament uses range from the literal – servants eating and drinking and getting drunk (Luke 12:45), or those who get drunk doing so at night (1 Thess 5:7) – to the powerfully figurative. In Ephesians 5:18 Paul sets drunkenness with wine in direct contrast to being filled with the Spirit. Most strikingly, Revelation 17:2 depicts the nations as 'drunk' on the wine of Babylon's immorality, a metaphor the Spanish 'embriagarse' and French 's'enivrer' faithfully preserve.

(4×) To become intoxicated or to cause intoxication, used both literally of drunkenness from wine and metaphorically of being stupefied by seductive influence. The translations are remarkably consistent: Spanish 'embriagarse,' French 's'enivrer,' German 'betrunken machen' all center on inebriation. Luke 12:45 and 1 Thessalonians 5:7 use it literally of alcohol consumption, Ephesians 5:18 contrasts wine-drunkenness with Spirit-filling, and Revelation 17:2 extends it to the spiritual stupor induced by Babylon's corrupting influence. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: be-drunk, became-drunk, being-drunk | es: a-embriagarse, os-embriaguéis, que-se-embriagan | fr: s'enivrer | de: betrunken-machen, μεθύσκεσθαι Luke 12:45; Eph 5:18; 1Thess 5:7; Rev 17:2

μέθυσος G3183 N-NMP (2×)

a drunkard, one habitually given to excessive drinking and intoxication

Someone characterized by habitual drunkenness—a drunkard. Paul lists this vice twice in 1 Corinthians 5-6, alongside sexually immoral, greedy, and verbally abusive people. Like 'reviler,' this describes a pattern, not a single incident. Such people aren't to be tolerated in church fellowship and won't inherit God's kingdom. The classical Greek form was originally feminine ('drunken Amazon'), later extending to males. The emphasis is on intemperance as a lifestyle, not occasional overindulgence.

(2×) Paul's parallel usage in 1 Corinthians 5:11 and 6:10 treats habitual drunkenness as disqualifying behavior. The lexicon notes the term was first feminine, later applied to men, emphasizing intemperate drinking. Spanish borracho, French ivre, German Trinker all denote the habitual drunkard, not someone occasionally drunk. The seriousness reflects ancient recognition that addiction destroys community and witnesses against God's kingdom. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: drunkard, drunkards | es: borracho, borrachos | fr: ivre | de: Trinker 1Cor 5:11; 1Cor 6:10

μεθύω G3184 V-PPA-GMP (6×)

To be drunk or intoxicated with wine; used literally of inebriation and figuratively of spiritual stupor or excess.

Methyo describes the state of being drunk with wine, a condition depicted in the New Testament with both literal and moral weight. At the wedding in Cana, Jesus' miracle occurs after guests have 'well drunk' (John 2:10), a rare neutral use. Elsewhere the word carries sharp moral censure: the wicked servant drinks with drunkards (Matthew 24:49), those who get drunk do so at night (1 Thessalonians 5:7), and some Corinthians come to the Lord's Supper intoxicated (1 Corinthians 11:21). The accusation at Pentecost that the apostles were drunk (Acts 2:15) provides an ironic foil to Spirit-filled speech.

be drunk, be intoxicated (6×) To be in a state of drunkenness or intoxication from wine or strong drink. The literal sense dominates: Matthew 24:49 describes a servant drinking with drunkards, 1 Thessalonians 5:7 notes that those who get drunk do so at night, and 1 Corinthians 11:21 rebukes those arriving intoxicated at the communal meal. John 2:10 uses the term in a socially descriptive rather than morally charged way, noting wedding guests who have 'well drunk.' The Pentecost accusation in Acts 2:15 is a dramatic misreading of Spirit-empowered speech. Spanish captures the range with 'embriagada,' 'está-ebrio,' and 'están-borrachos,' while French distinguishes 's'enivrer' (the process) from 'être-ivre' (the state), reflecting the word's aspectual flexibility. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: are-drunk, being-drunk, drunkards | es: embriagada, está-ebrio, están-borrachos | fr: s'enivrer, être-ivre | de: betrunken-werden, μεθυόντων, μεθύουσιν Matt 24:49; John 2:10; Acts 2:15; 1Cor 11:21; 1Thess 5:7

μέγᾰς G3185

great, big (in size, stature, age, or significance); μέγας with full declension from stem μεγάλο-

The adjective 'great' covers a remarkable range: physical size ('a great man to behold'), full-grown stature indicating maturity, and metaphorical greatness of significance or honor. The declension is unusual—the stem μεγάλο- appears in most forms, but the nominative and accusative masculine and neuter use the shorter forms μέγας and μέγα. This word can describe both the physically imposing and the socially important, making it versatile across literal and figurative contexts.

μέγᾰς G3186

great, big (comparative/superlative forms or specific inflections of μέγας)

This entry represents comparative or superlative forms of μέγας: 'greater' or 'greatest.' Like the positive degree, these forms can refer to physical magnitude, maturity indicated by stature, or abstract greatness of honor and importance. The flexibility of the root allows for gradations of greatness across all these semantic domains.

μέγᾰς G3187

great, big (additional forms or variant uses of μέγας)

Another form within the μέγας paradigm, continuing the semantic range of physical size, mature stature, and figurative greatness. The multiple Strong's entries for this root reflect the complex morphology: different stems for different cases and numbers, all expressing variations of 'great' in both concrete and abstract senses.

μέλᾰν G3188 N-DNS (3×)

ink, the dark liquid medium for writing or drawing

Ink was the everyday writing medium in the ancient world, made from soot, gum, and water. Paul contrasts Spirit-written hearts with mere ink on stone (2 Cor 3:3). The elderly John twice closes letters by saying he'd rather speak face-to-face than write 'with ink' (2 John 12, 3 John 13). The Greek glosses across languages consistently render this as 'ink' or 'with ink,' reflecting the straightforward material reference.

(3×) The physical writing fluid used with pen on parchment or papyrus. All three NT occurrences contrast written ink with living relationship: Paul's metaphor of Spirit vs. ink (2 Cor 3:3), and John's preference for presence over correspondence. Spanish 'tinta/con-tinta' and French 'encre' confirm the concrete, material sense universally recognized across translations. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: ink, with-ink | es: con-tinta, tinta | fr: encre, μέλανος | de: Tinte 2Cor 3:3; 2John 1:12; 3John 1:13

μέλᾱς G3189 Adj-AFS (3×)

black, dark in color

Black was associated with mourning, famine, and judgment in biblical imagery. Jesus says you cannot make a single hair white or black (Matt 5:36), pointing to limits of human control. In Revelation, the third horseman rides a black horse symbolizing famine (Rev 6:5), and the sun turns black at cosmic upheaval (Rev 6:12). The consistent 'black/negro/noir/schwarz' pattern across languages shows universal recognition of this basic color term.

(3×) The color black, used both literally (of hair in Matt 5:36) and symbolically (of judgment and famine in Revelation's apocalyptic visions). The Greek μέλας covers the semantic range from literal darkness to metaphorical gloom. Spanish and French preserve the simple color designation, while German 'schwarz' confirms the basic chromatic sense across all three passages. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: black | es: negro | fr: noir | de: schwarz, μέλαιναν Matt 5:36; Rev 6:5; Rev 6:12

Μελεά G3190 N-GMS (1×)

Melea (Μελεά) — a personal name appearing in Jesus' genealogy in Luke's Gospel

This name appears in Luke 3:31, within the genealogical section between David and the exile. Like many individuals in this portion of Luke's lineage, Melea is unknown outside this reference. The name may derive from Hebrew roots related to 'fullness' or possibly a shortened form of a longer theophoric name. Luke's careful preservation of these names, even when the individuals left no other historical trace, demonstrates his commitment to establishing Jesus' authentic Davidic descent through verifiable ancestral records, even through less prominent family lines.

(1×) The genitive form situates this ancestor within the chain of descent. Cross-linguistic preservation of the Greek transliteration maintains the genealogical integrity of Luke's record, each otherwise obscure name contributing to the cumulative case for Jesus' legitimate claim to David's throne through biological ancestry. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Melea | es: Meleá | fr: Méléa | de: Μελεὰ Luke 3:31

μελετ-άω G3191 V-PMA-2S (2×)

to practice, meditate on, or devise; to think carefully about something, often with intent to do it

To practice, meditate on, rehearse, or devise—careful attention that may lead to action. Acts 4:25 quotes Psalm 2: why do nations plot futility? The verb suggests they're rehearsing, practicing, devising their rebellion. Paul tells Timothy to 'practice' or 'be absorbed in' these things (1 Timothy 4:15)—complete devotion to ministry. Classical usage ranged from a physician treating a case, to students practicing rhetoric, to people devising evil. The emphasis is on sustained mental attention often leading to action.

(2×) The contrast between hostile plotting (Acts 4:25) and devoted practice (1 Timothy 4:15) shows the verb's moral neutrality—it's the object that determines whether the meditation is evil or good. Classical Greek used it for practicing speeches, studying wisdom, rehearsing mental scenarios. Spanish and German offer varied translations (tramar/practicar, sinnen), capturing both the conspiratorial and meditative senses. The word implies sustained mental engagement, not casual thought. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: devise, practice | es: practica, tramaron | fr: méditer, μελέτα | de: sinnen, ἐμελέτησαν Acts 4:25; 1Tim 4:15

μέλι G3192 N-ANS (4×)

Honey; the sweet natural substance produced by bees, also used of wild honey.

A straightforward term for honey, appearing in the New Testament exclusively in vivid, concrete contexts. In Matthew 3:4 and Mark 1:6, wild honey (meli agrion) is part of John the Baptist's austere wilderness diet of locusts and honey, painting a picture of prophetic simplicity. In Revelation 10:9-10, the little scroll that tastes sweet as honey in the mouth but turns bitter in the stomach becomes a powerful image of prophetic calling. The perfect consistency across translations – Spanish 'miel,' French 'miel,' German 'Honig' – reflects the word's stable, unambiguous meaning.

(4×) Honey, the naturally sweet substance produced by bees, sometimes specified as wild honey. Every translation language renders it identically: Spanish and French 'miel,' German 'Honig,' English 'honey.' In Matthew 3:4 and Mark 1:6 it describes the wild honey eaten by John the Baptist in the Judean wilderness. In Revelation 10:9-10 it serves as a simile for the initial sweetness of God's prophetic word before its bitter implications unfold. HONEY SWEET FOOD

en: honey | es: miel | fr: miel | de: Honig Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6; Rev 10:9; Rev 10:10

μελίσσ-ειος G3193

of bees, honey-related; honeycomb (κηρίον μελίσσειον); beehive (τὸ μελίσσειον)

This adjective relates to bees and their products. The phrase 'honeycomb of bees' (κηρίον μελίσσειον) appears in the New Testament tradition. The neuter noun τὸ μελίσσειον can mean either a honeycomb or a beehive depending on context. Ancient lexica also record μελίσσιον as meaning 'swarm.' The word captures the productive world of bees, from their dwelling places to the sweet substance they create.

Μελίτη G3194 N-NFS (1×)

Melitē (Μελίτη) — the island of Malta, where Paul was shipwrecked

This name appears in Acts 28:1, identifying the island where Paul and his fellow shipwreck survivors found themselves after their harrowing storm. The island, located south of Sicily in the central Mediterranean, was then known as Melita. The inhabitants showed unusual kindness to the survivors, and Paul's ministry there included healing the father of Publius, the island's chief official, and many others. Luke's geographical precision continues his pattern of anchoring the Christian story in verifiable history and real locations, making Paul's journey to Rome a matter of public record.

(1×) The nominative form identifies the island by name. The multilingual evidence (French 'Malte') shows later identification with modern Malta, though some ancient debate existed about the precise location. Luke's account emphasizes divine providence — even shipwreck becomes an opportunity for gospel advance and miraculous demonstration of God's power. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Melitē | es: Melítē | fr: Malte | de: Μελίτη Acts 28:1

μέλλω G3195 V-PPA-NMP (110×)

To be about to, be on the point of doing something; as participle, coming or future; also to intend, be ready, or delay

A versatile auxiliary verb that anchors the New Testament's language of imminent futurity and divine destiny. At its core, it signals that something is about to happen — Herod is about to search for the child (Matt 2:13), the Son of Man is about to be delivered (Matt 17:22). When used as a participle modifying nouns, it takes on an adjectival force meaning 'coming' or 'future,' as in the age to come (Matt 12:32) or the wrath to come (Matt 3:7). Spanish a punto de and German im Begriff sein both capture this sense of standing on the threshold. Two isolated uses push the semantic boundaries: readiness or willingness in 2 Peter 1:12 and hesitation or delay in Acts 22:16.

1. be about to / be on the point of (87×) The core periphrastic sense: to be about to, be on the point of, be going to do something. This overwhelmingly dominant usage creates a near-future construction, signaling imminence. It appears across all persons, tenses, and moods — from narrative (Matt 2:13, Jesus about to be betrayed in Matt 17:22) to apocalyptic revelation (the things about to happen). Spanish a punto de and German wird both reflect this prospective aspect. The construction often carries overtones of divine necessity or destined outcome. GOING AND LEADING en: Is-about, about, about-to | es: Está-a-punto, a-punto, a-punto-de | fr: être-sur-le-point-de | de: wird Matt 2:13; Matt 11:14; Matt 16:27; Matt 17:12; Matt 17:22

2. coming / future (adjectival attributive) (21×) The adjectival or substantival participle: coming, future, forthcoming. Here the participle modifies a noun ('the coming wrath,' Matt 3:7; 'the coming age,' Matt 12:32) or stands alone ('the things to come,' Acts 24:25). This sense is closely related to sense 1 but has shifted from verbal auxiliary to modifier. Luke uses it frequently to characterize eschatological realities. Spanish venidero and cosas venideras capture this attributive function precisely. GOING AND LEADING

en: about, about-to, being-about | es: a-los-que-iban-a, cosas-venideras, de-venidero | fr: être-sur-le-point-de | de: im-Begriff-sein, wird Matt 3:7; Matt 12:32; Luke 3:7; Luke 13:9; Acts 24:25

3. (1×) A sense of readiness, willingness, or intentional preparedness. In 2 Peter 1:12, the author says 'I will always be ready to remind you' — here the verb conveys not imminence but deliberate readiness. English 'I will be ready' and Spanish estaré dispuesto both point away from temporal imminence toward volitional preparedness. This usage appears to draw on the classical Greek sense of intending or purposing. GOING AND LEADING

en: I-will-be-ready | es: estaré-dispuesto | fr: être-sur-le-point-de | de: im-Begriff-sein 2Pet 1:12

4. (1×) A sense of delay or hesitation, attested in Acts 22:16 where Ananias challenges Saul: 'Why are you delaying?' (ti melleis). Spanish esperas ('why do you wait?') captures the nuance well. This reversal — from 'about to act' to 'failing to act' — exploits the implication that someone on the verge of something has not yet done it. The classical Greek usage of mello for hesitation or procrastination underlies this New Testament instance. GOING AND LEADING en: are-you-delaying | es: esperas | fr: être-sur-le-point-de | de: wird Acts 22:16

μέλος G3196 N-DNP (34×)

member, bodily part — a limb or organ of the human body, used literally and as a metaphor for the church

Melos designates a limb or bodily part, appearing 34 times in the New Testament with a distinctive literal-to-metaphorical arc. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus speaks of cutting off a hand or plucking out an eye — individual body members — rather than having the whole body thrown into Gehenna (Matt 5:29-30). Paul develops the bodily vocabulary in two directions: ethically, as 'instruments of righteousness' whose members must not be surrendered to sin (Rom 6:13-19; 7:23), and ecclesiologically, as parts of Christ's body where every member is indispensable (1 Cor 12:12-27). James warns that the tongue, though a small member, sets the whole body ablaze (Jas 3:5-6). Translations converge: Spanish 'miembros,' French 'membre,' German 'Glieder.'

member / bodily part (34×) A limb or organ of the physical body, extended metaphorically to the community of believers. Jesus uses it of eye and hand in radical discipleship sayings (Matt 5:29-30). Paul develops dual application: ethical, as body parts offered to sin or righteousness (Rom 6:13; 7:23), and ecclesiological, as interdependent parts of Christ's body (1 Cor 12:12-27). James warns of the tongue as a small but dangerous member (Jas 3:5-6). FLESH AND BODY en: members | es: miembros, miembros? | fr: membre | de: Glieder Matt 5:29; Matt 5:30; Rom 6:13; Rom 6:19

Μελχεί G3197 N-GMS (2×)

Melchi, an ancestor of Jesus mentioned twice in Luke's genealogy, possibly two different individuals

A name appearing twice in Luke's genealogy (3:24, 3:28), likely representing two different ancestors of Jesus separated by several generations. The name derives from Hebrew melek ('king'), making it a theophoric abbreviation like Melchizedek. Luke's genealogical method traces Joseph's line (or possibly Mary's) back through David to Adam, including many names unknown from other sources. The repetition of names within genealogies was common in ancient Jewish families.

(2×) Luke 3:24 and 3:28 position two men named Melchi in Jesus' ancestry. The Hebrew etymology (king) gives the name royal associations appropriate for Davidic lineage. All translations simply transliterate. The genealogical purpose establishes Jesus' legal claim to David's throne through Joseph, even as Matthew and Luke trace different specific routes through David's many descendants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Melchi | es: Melchí | fr: Melchi | de: Melchi Luke 3:24; Luke 3:28

Μελχισεδέκ G3198 N-GMS (8×)

Melchizedek; the ancient priest-king of Salem who blessed Abraham, a type of Christ's eternal priesthood.

Melchisedek is the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew Malki-Tsedeq ('my king is righteousness'), the mysterious priest-king of Salem who blessed Abraham and received tithes from him (Gen 14:18-20). In the New Testament, all eight occurrences appear in Hebrews, where the author builds a sustained argument that Christ's priesthood is 'after the order of Melchizedek' (Heb 5:6, 10; 6:20; 7:1-17) — superior to the Levitical priesthood because it is eternal and without genealogical succession. Translations uniformly preserve the name phonetically: Spanish 'Melquisedec,' French 'Melchisedek,' German 'Melchisedek.'

(8×) The personal name Melchizedek (Hebrew 'my king is righteousness'), the priest-king of Salem who blessed Abraham (Gen 14:18-20). All eight NT occurrences are in Hebrews, where the author develops an extended typological argument: Christ holds a priesthood 'after the order of Melchizedek' (Heb 5:6; 6:20; 7:1, 11, 15, 17), one that is superior to the Levitical order because it is without beginning or end. Cross-lingual renderings are consistently phonetic — Spanish 'Melquisedec,' French 'Melchisedek,' German 'Melchisedek' — preserving the Hebrew etymological meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Melchisedēk, of-Melchisedēk | es: Melchisédek, de-Melchisédek | fr: Melchisedek | de: Melchisedek Heb 5:6; Heb 5:10; Heb 6:20; Heb 7:1; Heb 7:10

μέλω G3199 V-PIA-3S (10×)

To be a concern, to matter — impersonal verb expressing whether someone cares about a person or situation

The verb μέλω (melo), used almost exclusively in impersonal constructions (μέλει + dative, 'it matters to'), expresses whether something is a concern or care to someone. The disciples ask Jesus during the storm, 'Does it not matter to you that we are perishing?' (Mark 4:38). Martha protests, 'Lord, does it not concern you that my sister has left me to serve alone?' (Luke 10:40). The hired hand 'does not care about the sheep' (John 10:13), while Gallio 'cared for none of these things' (Acts 18:17). Positively, Peter exhorts believers to cast their anxieties on God 'because he cares for you' (1 Pet 5:7). Spanish 'importar/preocupar,' Arabic, Hebrew אִכְפַּת, Korean 관심/상관, and German 'kummern' uniformly express personal concern.

be a concern, matter to someone (10×) An impersonal verb meaning 'it is a concern to, it matters to' someone, typically with μέλει + dative of person. Used negatively of indifference — the disciples reproach Jesus in the storm (Mark 4:38), the hireling does not care about the sheep (John 10:13), Judas did not care about the poor (John 12:6), Gallio cared nothing for Jewish disputes (Acts 18:17). Used positively of God's care for believers (1 Pet 5:7). Also in Jesus's impartiality statements: 'it does not matter to you about anyone' (Matt 22:16; Mark 12:14). Paul asks whether God is concerned about oxen (1 Cor 9:9). All uses share one impersonal construction expressing the presence or absence of concern. ANXIETY AND WORRY

en: does-it-concern, does-it-matter, is-it-a-care | es: importa, importe, le-importa | fr: prendre-soin, se-soucier | de: kuemmern, μέλει, ἔμελεν Matt 22:16; Mark 4:38; Mark 12:14; Luke 10:40; John 10:13

μεμβράνα G3200 N-AFP (1×)

μεμβράνα — parchment, treated animal skin used for writing

This loanword from Latin (membrāna) appears in 2 Timothy 4:13, where Paul asks Timothy to bring the cloak he left at Troas and 'especially the parchments.' These were likely important documents written on treated animal skins, more durable than papyrus. The specific mention suggests they held particular value — possibly Scripture portions, legal documents regarding his Roman citizenship, or notes for teaching. Paul's request from prison reveals his ongoing commitment to the written word even as death approached. Despite facing execution, he wanted access to these documents, showing that ministry and learning continue to the end.

(1×) The accusative feminine plural 'the parchments' identifies specific documents Paul wanted retrieved. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'pergaminos,' German 'Pergament') confirms these as treated animal skins for writing, distinguished from the 'books' (probably papyrus scrolls) mentioned alongside them, emphasizing Paul's concern for written materials even in his final imprisonment. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: parchments | es: pergaminos | fr: μεμβράνας | de: Pergament 2Tim 4:13

μέμφομαι G3201 V-PPM/P-NMS (2×)

to blame, find fault with, or censure; to express disapproval or criticism

To find fault, blame, or criticize. Paul uses it in Romans 9:19 to pose an objector's question: If God's will is sovereign, who can resist? Then why does he still find fault? The question challenges divine sovereignty and human responsibility. Hebrews 8:8 says God found fault with the old covenant, necessitating a new one. Classical Greek used it for blaming people, censuring things, or casting faults in someone's teeth. The middle voice (as here) often carries the sense of ongoing or habitual faultfinding.

(2×) The two uses address theological faultfinding: humanity questioning God's right to blame (Romans 9:19) and God legitimately finding fault with an inadequate covenant (Hebrews 8:8). Classical usage ranged from Croesus wrongly blaming the oracle to general censure and criticism. The verb can take accusative of person or thing, or dative of person with accusative of what's blamed. Both contexts involve serious theological assessment, not petty criticism. REPROOF AND REBUKE

en: does-he-find-fault, finding-fault | es: culpa, reprochando | fr: blâmer, tadeln | de: tadeln Rom 9:19; Heb 8:8

μεμψῐ-μοιρος G3202 Adj-NMP (1×)

μεμψίμοιρος — complaining, faultfinding, querulous, discontented with one's lot

This adjective appears in Jude 16, describing false teachers who are 'complainers' grumbling about their lot in life. The compound literally means 'blaming one's fate' (μέμφομαι + μοῖρα), denoting chronic dissatisfaction and the tendency to find fault with circumstances. Jude links this attitude to ungodliness and following ungodly desires. These individuals reject divine authority while constantly complaining about consequences, exemplifying the entitled attitude of those who demand autonomy from God yet resent not receiving his blessings. Their discontent reveals hearts fundamentally at odds with submitting to God's will.

(1×) The nominative masculine plural 'complainers' characterizes these false teachers. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'quejosos,' German 'Unzufriedene') conveys the habitual faultfinding and discontent that mark those who reject God's authority, chronically dissatisfied because they resist the very source of satisfaction — submission to the Creator's good purposes. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: complainers | es: quejosos | fr: plaignants, | de: Unzufriedene Jude 1:16

μέν G3303 Conj (182×)

Indeed, on the one hand — a discourse particle expressing affirmation or marking the first element of a correlative pair

Greek men is a subtle discourse particle that operates on two levels. Used absolutely, it affirms with the force of 'indeed' or 'truly.' More commonly, it sets up a correlative contrast: men...de ('on the one hand...on the other'). English often leaves it untranslated, while French d'une part and German zwar capture the contrastive nuance more explicitly. In Acts 1:5, for instance, men marks John's water baptism as the first clause awaiting its de-counterpart about Spirit baptism — a structural rhythm that pervades Luke's careful prose and Paul's theological argumentation.

indeed (182×) A discourse particle serving dual functions: (a) affirmative emphasis ('indeed, truly') when standing alone, and (b) correlative marker introducing the first member of a men...de contrast ('on the one hand...but on the other'). French d'une part and German zwar reveal the contrastive structure more transparently than English, where the particle is often absorbed into word order. Pervasive in Acts and the Pauline epistles. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: indeed- | es: *, *-ciertamente | fr: d'une-part- | de: zwar Acts 1:1; Acts 1:5; Acts 1:6; Acts 1:18; Acts 2:41

μέν G3304 Prtcl (3×)

rather, on the contrary; emphatic adversative particle expressing certainty or contrast

This particle sharpens a contrast or corrects an assumption with emphatic force. Jesus says the truly blessed are not just hearers but doers (Luke 11:28). Paul uses it to rebuke presumption: 'Who are you, O man, to answer back to God?' (Rom 9:20). He asks rhetorically, 'Have they not heard?' and answers with μενοῦνγε: 'Indeed they have!' (Rom 10:18). The multilingual evidence shows emphatic correction: Spanish 'más bien/ciertamente,' French 'bien plutôt/mais oui,' German 'im Gegenteil/vielmehr.'

(3×) An emphatic particle that introduces a strong counter-assertion or affirmation, often translated 'rather,' 'on the contrary,' or 'indeed.' It corrects or intensifies what precedes. The range from 'más bien' (rather) to 'ciertamente' (certainly) in Spanish, and 'im Gegenteil' (on the contrary) to 'vielmehr' (much more) in German, reflects its dual function: both adversative and affirmative intensity depending on context. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: Rather, rather | es: Más-bien, antes-bien, ciertamente | fr: bien-plutôt, mais-oui | de: im-Gegenteil, vielmehr Luke 11:28; Rom 9:20; Rom 10:18

μέν G3305 Conj (8×)

A conjunction expressing concession or affirmation: however, indeed, nevertheless — marking contrast or emphasis.

A versatile discourse particle that signals the speaker is acknowledging one reality before pivoting to another. In its most common use it means 'however' or 'yet,' introducing a concessive clause — as when the disciples wanted to question Jesus but no one dared (John 4:27), or when many believed but would not confess openly (John 12:42). It can also carry a purely emphatic force, 'indeed' or 'truly,' affirming what follows with weight. Paul uses it as 'nevertheless' in 2 Timothy 2:19, pivoting from false teaching to the firm foundation of God.

1. however (5×) Concessive conjunction meaning 'however' or 'yet,' acknowledging a preceding thought while introducing a contrasting or qualifying statement. Appears in John 4:27 (they wanted to ask, yet no one spoke), John 7:13 (no one spoke openly, however, for fear), and John 20:5. Spanish 'sin-embargo' and French 'cependant' both capture this adversative nuance. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: however, indeed | es: sin-embargo | fr: cependant, pourtant | de: allerdings, jedoch John 4:27; John 7:13; John 20:5; John 21:4; Jude 1:8

2. indeed (2×) Emphatic affirmative particle meaning 'indeed' or 'truly,' lending weight and certainty to the assertion that follows. In John 12:42, many rulers indeed believed but feared the Pharisees; in James 2:8, keeping the royal law is indeed doing well. Spanish 'ciertamente' highlights the affirmative rather than contrastive force. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: indeed | es: ciertamente | fr: cependant | de: allerdings John 12:42; Jas 2:8

3. nevertheless (1×) Strong adversative conjunction meaning 'nevertheless,' marking a decisive pivot from a troubling situation to a reassuring truth. In 2 Timothy 2:19, despite those who have swerved from the truth, 'nevertheless the firm foundation of God stands.' Spanish 'sin-embargo' and German 'allerdings' confirm the concessive-adversative weight. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: nevertheless | es: sin-embargo | fr: cependant | de: allerdings 2Tim 2:19

μένω G3306 V-FIA-1S (118×)

To remain, abide, stay; in a place: lodge, dwell temporarily; in a state or relationship: continue, persist, indwell; of things: last, endure; also to wait for, await.

Meno is one of the New Testament's most theologically charged verbs, though its basic meaning is disarmingly simple: to stay put. In ordinary narrative it describes lodging at someone's house (Luke 19:5, 'today I must stay at your house') or remaining in a city (Acts 9:43). But in the Fourth Gospel, meno undergoes a profound spiritual transformation. 'Abide in me, and I in you' (John 15:4) — here staying becomes the language of mystical union, and the verb carries the full weight of covenant fidelity, spiritual indwelling, and persevering faith. Arabic thabata ('to stand firm, persevere') captures this theological dimension remarkably well, as does Korean kohada ('to abide, dwell'). A third sense describes endurance through time: 'the word of God abides forever' (1 Pet 1:25), where permanence rather than presence is the point. German bleiben covers all senses with remarkable economy, as does French demeurer. Spanish permanecer gravitates toward the 'persist, endure' dimension. The rare sense of 'waiting' in Acts 20:5, 23 returns the verb to its classical Greek usage, where meno could mean to wait — soldiers standing their ground, travelers awaiting companions.

1. abide, continue, persist in (79×) To abide, continue, or persist in a state, relationship, or condition — the most frequent sense at 79 occurrences, theologically dominant in Johannine literature. In John 15:4-10 Jesus commands 'abide in me' (meinate en emoi) repeatedly, making meno the signature verb of spiritual indwelling and covenant union. In 1 John 2:6 the one who says he 'abides in him' must walk as Christ walked; in 1 John 4:12-16 'God abides in us.' Beyond John, 1 Cor 7:8 uses meno for remaining in one's current social state, and 2 Tim 3:14 urges Timothy to 'continue in what you have learned.' Arabic thabata/yathbutu ('hold firm, persevere') captures the spiritual-relational dimension precisely, while Korean kohada selects abiding vocabulary that mirrors John's intimacy language. German bleiben and French demeurer serve as the default translation across Johannine and Pauline contexts alike. The theological weight is immense: meno becomes the New Testament's primary metaphor for the ongoing mutual presence of God and believer. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: remains | es: permanece | fr: demeurer | de: bleiben Matt 10:11; Matt 26:38; Mark 6:10; Mark 14:34; Luke 9:4

2. stay, lodge, remain in a place (27×) To stay or lodge in a physical location for a period of time — 27 occurrences of concrete, spatial remaining. In Luke 1:56 Mary 'stayed with' Elizabeth about three months; in Luke 19:5 Jesus tells Zacchaeus 'I must stay at your house today'; in Luke 24:29 the Emmaus disciples urge the risen Christ to 'stay with us, for it is toward evening.' In John 1:39 Jesus invites the first disciples to 'come and see,' and they 'stayed with him that day.' Acts records Paul's lodging stops: he 'remained' in various cities for days, months, or years (Acts 18:3; 20:6; 28:14). Arabic maqatha/aqama ('sojourn, reside') and Korean meomulda ('stay, lodge') both select hospitality vocabulary. Spanish permanecer and French demeurer treat these as standard residential sojourn verbs. The Lukan and Johannine uses are not merely logistical — staying at someone's house signals intimacy, acceptance, and fellowship, so sense 2 often shades naturally into sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-will-remain, he-remained, he-stayed | es: permanecer, permaneceré, permanecieron | fr: demeurer | de: bleiben, bleibt Luke 1:56; Luke 8:27; Luke 19:5; Luke 24:29

3. last, endure, remain in existence (10×) Of things, truths, or states that last, endure, or remain in existence through time — 10 occurrences where permanence rather than presence is the focus. In 1 Cor 13:13 'faith, hope, and love remain' — the famous triad that outlasts all charisms. In John 6:27 Jesus contrasts food that perishes with food that 'endures' to eternal life. In 1 Pet 1:25 'the word of the Lord remains forever,' quoting Isa 40:8. Heb 7:24 says Christ holds his priesthood permanently because he 'remains' forever. In John 12:34 the crowd objects that 'the Christ remains forever.' Arabic baqi/yabqa ('lasting, remaining') and Korean namda ('be left, remain') both select durability vocabulary. German bleibt and French demeure use the same verbs as senses 1-2, but temporal-adverbial context (eis ton aiona, 'forever') shifts the meaning toward endurance. Matt 11:23 provides a counterfactual: Sodom 'would have remained until today' — survival through history as divine reprieve. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abiding, it-would-have-remained, may-remain | es: habría-permanecido, habrían-permanecido, permanece | fr: demeurer | de: bleiben, bleibt Matt 11:23; John 6:27; John 19:31; Acts 5:4; Rom 9:11

4. wait for, await (2×) To wait for or await someone — 2 occurrences in Acts. In Acts 20:5 Paul's companions 'were waiting for us' at Troas, and in Acts 20:23 Paul says bonds and afflictions 'await me' in Jerusalem. Arabic intathara ('await') and Korean gidarida ('wait') both select anticipation vocabulary distinct from their 'remain' words. Spanish me esperan ('they await me') uses a dedicated waiting verb rather than permanecer, confirming that translators perceive a distinct sense. This usage preserves a classical Greek meaning otherwise rare in the New Testament: meno in Homer and the tragedians frequently means to stand one's ground, to wait and face. Paul's use in Acts 20:23 carries exactly this valence — he awaits afflictions not passively but with resolved endurance, standing fast in the face of what is coming. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: await, were-waiting | es: esperaban, me-esperan | fr: demeurer | de: bleibt Acts 20:5; Acts 20:23

μερίζω G3307 V-APP-NFS (14×)

To divide into parts or factions, or to apportion and distribute shares; splitting either destructively or generously.

Covers both the divisive splitting of communities and the constructive distributing of resources. When Jesus warns that a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand (Matt 12:25), the word carries overtones of fracture and ruin. But when he divides the loaves among the crowd at the feeding of the five thousand (Mark 6:41), the same verb describes generous distribution. Paul uses it for God apportioning gifts to each believer (1 Cor 7:17, Rom 12:3). Spanish mirrors this range with 'dividido' for schism and 'repartir' for distribution, while German consistently uses 'teilen,' which like the Greek holds both halves of meaning together.

1. to divide, be divided (8×) To split into opposing parts or be in a state of internal division, used for kingdoms, households, and loyalties torn by conflict. Jesus' warning in Matt 12:25-26 that a kingdom divided against itself is laid waste provides the paradigmatic usage. Mark 3:24-26 repeats the pattern: if Satan is divided against himself, he cannot stand. The multilingual evidence consistently uses vocabulary of fracture: spa 'dividida/dividido,' fra 'diviser.' Paul applies the passive in 1 Cor 7:34 to the 'divided' attention of a married person — an extension from political schism to inner conflict. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: divided, has-been-divided, he-is-divided | es: dividida, dividido, está-dividido | fr: diviser, partager | de: teilen, μεμερισμένη, ἐμερίσθη Matt 12:25; Matt 12:26; Mark 3:24; Mark 3:25

2. to apportion, distribute (6×) To apportion, distribute, or allot shares of something, emphasizing the active parceling out of resources, gifts, or responsibilities by someone in authority. In Mark 6:41 Jesus divided the loaves among his disciples for distribution to the crowd (spa 'repartió,' arb 'qassama'). Paul uses the active sense in Rom 12:3 and 1 Cor 7:17 for God measuring out faith and calling to each person. In Luke 12:13 a man asks Jesus to tell his brother to divide the inheritance — a legal sense of apportioning property. The shift from destructive division (sense 1) to generous distribution marks a significant semantic range. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: apportioned, divided, he-divided | es: asignó, que-reparta, repartió | fr: diviser, partager | de: teilen, μερίσασθαι Mark 6:41; Luke 12:13; Rom 12:3; 1Cor 7:17; 2Cor 10:13

μέριμν-α G3308 N-DFP (6×)

Anxiety, worry, or preoccupying care about worldly concerns; anxious solicitude that distracts from faith.

Merimna is the gnawing, distracting worry that consumes the mind with earthly concerns. Jesus warns against it repeatedly in the Synoptic parables: the cares of this world choke the word like thorns (Matthew 13:22; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14), and the anxieties of daily life can weigh down the heart (Luke 21:34). Paul, however, reclaims a positive edge to the word when he speaks of his daily 'care for all the churches' (2 Corinthians 11:28), showing that not all concern is spiritually destructive. The tension between harmful anxiety and godly concern runs through the word's NT usage.

anxiety, care, worry (6×) Anxious concern or preoccupying worry about life's circumstances, particularly worldly matters that compete with spiritual attentiveness. In the Parable of the Sower, merimna represents the cares and anxieties that choke the seed of God's word (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14). Luke 21:34 warns against hearts weighed down by the anxieties of life. Paul gives the word a different coloring in 2 Corinthians 11:28, where his daily merimna for all the churches reflects pastoral concern rather than faithless worry. Spanish 'afanes' and 'ansiedad' capture the restless, consuming quality, while French 'souci' and German 'Sorge' reflect the weight of ongoing preoccupation. The 1 Peter 5:7 invitation to cast all your merimna on God presupposes the word's burden-like quality. ANXIETY AND WORRY

en: anxieties, anxiety, care | es: afanes, ansiedad, preocupaciones | fr: souci | de: Sorge, μέριμνα, μερίμναις Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14; Luke 21:34; 2Cor 11:28

μεριμν-άω G3309 V-PMA-2P (19×)

To be anxious or worried; also to show genuine care or concern for someone or something.

In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus repeats this verb like a refrain —'do not be anxious about your life' (Matt 6:25, 27, 28, 31, 34) —exposing worry as a failure of trust. Yet Paul redeems the same word in 1 Corinthians 7:32-34 and 12:25, where caring for the things of the Lord or for fellow members of the body is commended. The difference hinges entirely on object and motive: anxious fretting over provisions versus attentive devotion to God and neighbor.

1. be anxious, worry (13×) To be troubled with anxiety, to worry about earthly provisions, safety, or the future—carrying a distinctly negative connotation of distrust. Jesus' repeated prohibition in Matthew 6:25-34 makes this the paradigmatic NT warning against worry. Spanish 'estéis ansiosos' and German 'sich sorgen' capture the restless, self-consuming quality. The parallel in Luke 12:22-26 and Philippians 4:6 ('be anxious for nothing') reinforce that this anxiety is antithetical to faith. ANXIETY AND CARE

en: are-you-anxious, be-anxious, being-anxious | es: estéis-ansiosos, os-preocupáis, os-preocupéis | fr: s'inquiéter | de: sich-sorgen, sorgt-sich Matt 6:25; Matt 6:27; Matt 6:28; Matt 6:31; Matt 6:34

2. care for, be concerned about (6×) To have genuine, positive concern for someone's welfare or for matters of spiritual significance. Paul employs it in 1 Corinthians 7:32-34, where the unmarried person 'cares about the things of the Lord,' and in 12:25, where members of the body 'have the same care for one another.' Spanish 'se preocupa' and French 's'inquiéter' cover both senses, but the context here shifts the valence from anxious fretting to devoted attentiveness—holy concern rather than faithless worry. ANXIETY AND CARE en: cares-about, may-care, will-care | es: se-preocupa, se-preocupará, se-preocupen | fr: s'inquiéter | de: sich-sorgen 1Cor 7:32; 1Cor 7:33; 1Cor 7:34; 1Cor 12:25

μερ-ίς G3310 N-GFS (5×)

A share, portion, or allotted part; also a district or region; used of one's lot in an inheritance or relationship.

Denotes a portion that has been apportioned or belongs to someone by right. Mary chose the good 'portion' (Luke 10:42); believers share in the 'inheritance' of the saints in light (Col 1:12). It can also mean a geographical district, as in Acts 16:12 describing Philippi as a leading city of that 'district' of Macedonia. Spanish uses both 'parte' and 'porción,' reflecting the dual sense of allocated share and regional division. Paul asks what 'portion' a believer has with an unbeliever (2 Cor 6:15), extending the word into relational partnership.

(5×) A share, portion, or allotted part, whether material, spiritual, or relational. Encompasses Mary's choice of the good 'portion' at Jesus' feet (Luke 10:42), the saints' share in the inheritance of light (Col 1:12), and the rhetorical question about what 'share' Christ has with Belial (2 Cor 6:15). Also extends to a geographical district (Acts 16:12). The French 'part' and Spanish 'porción' both reflect the core idea of something apportioned or allotted to a person. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: district, part, portion | es: parte, porción, región | fr: part | de: Anteil, μερίδα, μερίδος Luke 10:42; Acts 8:21; Acts 16:12; 2Cor 6:15; Col 1:12

μερ-ιστέον G3311 N-DMP (2×)

distributions or divisions; the act of dividing or apportioning, particularly of spiritual gifts

The act of dividing, distributing, or apportioning. Hebrews uses it twice: God bore witness through distributions of the Holy Spirit (2:4), and the word of God is sharp enough to divide soul and spirit (4:12). The first refers to the Spirit's varied gifts distributed among believers; the second to discernment that separates what seems inseparable. Classical usage included 'one must divide' the universal into genera, or 'distribute' resources. The noun emphasizes the active process of dividing or distributing.

(2×) Hebrews 2:4 describes God distributing spiritual gifts according to his will—varied manifestations of the one Spirit. Hebrews 4:12 uses it for the word's penetrating power to divide between metaphysical realities. The classical philosophical sense (dividing concepts into categories) underlies both: the Spirit distributes gifts systematically; the word discriminates with precision. French distribution and German Verteilung capture the apportioning sense clearly. DIVISION SPLIT

en: distributions, division | es: división, reparticiones | fr: distribution | de: Verteilung Heb 2:4; Heb 4:12

μερ-ιστής G3312 N-AMS (1×)

μεριστής — a divider, distributor, one who apportions or shares out

This noun appears in Luke 12:14, where Jesus responds to a man asking him to settle an inheritance dispute with his brother. Jesus asks, 'Who made me a judge or divider over you?' The term describes someone who allocates portions or divides property. Jesus refuses this role not because justice is unimportant but because he came for a greater purpose than settling earthly claims. His mission involves proclaiming the kingdom, not arbitrating property disputes. The refusal leads immediately into the parable of the rich fool, warning against covetousness and storing up earthly treasures.

(1×) The accusative masculine singular functions as the object: 'a divider over you.' The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'repartidor,' French 'celui-qui-partage') identify this as one who allocates portions or estates, a legal-economic function Jesus explicitly declines, redirecting attention from material division to spiritual priorities that transcend property concerns. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: a-divider | es: repartidor | fr: celui-qui-partage | de: μεριστὴν Luke 12:14

μέρος G3313 N-NNS (42×)

Part, portion, share; region, district; section, side; turn in sequence; piece or fragment of something.

Meros is Greek's workhorse noun for 'part' in nearly every dimension the word can carry. Its 42 New Testament occurrences range from a piece of broiled fish (Luke 24:42) and the four parts of a garment (John 19:23) to the geographic ('the parts of Galilee,' Matt 2:22) and the deeply abstract ('in part we know,' 1 Cor 13:9). Its most theologically charged use comes in John 13:8, where Jesus tells Peter 'you have no part with me' unless he submits to footwashing – here meros carries the weight of covenant share and spiritual inheritance. Spanish parte, German Teil, and French partie all mirror this breadth.

1. part, portion, share (29×) A part, portion, or share of a whole – the dominant sense at 29 occurrences. This covers both concrete partitions (the master cuts the unfaithful servant's portion, Matt 24:51; the prodigal asks for his share of the estate, Luke 15:12) and abstract uses like ek merous ('in part,' 1 Cor 13:9-12) and en to merei touto ('in this respect,' 2 Cor 3:10). The theological apex is John 13:8, where 'having a part' with Jesus means sharing in his salvific work. Korean 부분/몫 and Spanish parte/porcion both differentiate the abstract from the allotment sub-senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-part, part, portion | es: en-parte, parte, partido | fr: partie | de: Teil Matt 24:51; Luke 11:36; Luke 12:46; Luke 15:12; John 13:8

2. region, district (7×) A geographic region, district, or territory – 7 occurrences concentrated in Matthew and Acts. Herod's son rules 'in the region of Galilee' (Matt 2:22); Jesus withdraws 'into the parts of Tyre and Sidon' (Matt 15:21); Paul passes through 'the upper parts' of Asia Minor (Acts 19:1). Spanish regiones, German Gegend, and the LXX tradition of using meros for Hebrew territorial language all confirm this as a genuine spatial-geographic sense rather than a loose metaphor of 'part.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: parts, region, regions | es: partes, regiones | fr: partie | de: Teil Matt 2:22; Matt 15:21; Matt 16:13; Mark 8:10; Acts 19:1

3. section, division, side (4×) A section, division, or side of a physical structure or group – 4 occurrences. The soldiers divide Jesus' garments 'into four parts' (John 19:23); the disciples cast the net on 'the right side' of the boat (John 21:6); Revelation 16:19 splits Babylon 'into three parts.' Spanish partes and Korean 부분 handle this straightforwardly. The emphasis is on constituent divisions of a single larger entity, distinct from the share/allotment sense of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: parts | es: partes | fr: partie | de: Teil John 19:23; John 21:6; Acts 2:10; Rev 16:19

4. turn, succession (1×) One's turn in a sequence – a single occurrence at 1 Cor 14:27 where Paul instructs that tongue-speakers should speak 'in turn' (ana meros). This idiomatic use with the preposition ana creates a rotational-sequential meaning found already in classical Greek (Herodotus, Thucydides). Spanish turno and Korean 차례로 both select dedicated sequence vocabulary, confirming this is not merely a contextual shade of 'part' but a genuine adverbial idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: turn | es: turno | fr: partie | de: Teil 1Cor 14:27

5. piece, fragment (1×) A physical piece or fragment – a single occurrence at Luke 24:42 where the risen Jesus is given 'a piece of broiled fish.' Here meros is concrete and tangible: not a division of an abstract whole but a broken-off fragment of food. Spanish parte de and Korean 한 조각 ('one piece') both specify a material fragment. The post-resurrection meal setting gives this humble sense unexpected theological resonance – the risen Lord eats real food in real pieces. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-piece | es: parte | fr: partie | de: Teil Luke 24:42

μεσημβρ-ία G3314 N-AFS (2×)

midday, noon; also the south, the direction of the noonday sun

Midday or noon—when the sun reaches its zenith. By extension, the south, since the noonday sun points south in the northern hemisphere. Acts uses both senses: Philip heads toward the south (8:26), and Paul's conversion happens at midday (22:6). Classical Greek used it for high noon ('the sun stands at midday'), mealtimes ('ate figs at noon'), or geographical direction ('the city lies toward the south'). The dual meaning creates occasional ambiguity, resolved by context.

(2×) Acts 8:26 clearly means 'south' (the desert road from Jerusalem to Gaza runs southward), while Acts 22:6 means 'about noon' (when Paul sees the light brighter than the midday sun). Classical usage encompassed both the time (high noon, just after noon) and the direction. The lexicon notes both meanings from Herodotus onward. Most translations choose based on context, though some note the connection between the two senses. SOUTH AND DIRECTION en: midday, south | es: el-sur, mediodía | fr: midi | de: μεσημβρίαν Acts 8:26; Acts 22:6

μεσῑτ-εύω G3315 V-AIA-3S (1×)

μεσιτεύω — to act as mediator or guarantor, to intervene between parties

This verb appears in Hebrews 6:17, describing how God, wanting to show the unchangeable nature of his purpose to the heirs of promise, 'guaranteed it with an oath.' The word denotes acting as a mediator or surety, standing between parties to ensure an agreement. What's remarkable here is that God himself acts as the guarantor of his own promise — he mediates his own covenant. Since he could swear by no one greater, he swore by himself, making his promise doubly certain through both word and oath, providing strong encouragement for those who flee to take hold of the hope set before them.

(1×) The aorist active third singular 'he guaranteed' describes God's confirmatory action. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'medió,' German 'vermitteln') conveys the mediatorial function, though uniquely here God mediates his own promise, adding an oath to make the covenant absolutely certain, showing divine condescension to human need for assurance. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT

en: he-guaranteed | es: medió | fr: vermitteln | de: vermitteln Heb 6:17

μεσῑτ-ης G3316 N-GMS (6×)

Mediator; one who stands between two parties to broker reconciliation, covenant, or agreement.

Mesites denotes a person who intervenes between two sides to bring about agreement or reconciliation. In the New Testament, this powerful concept applies first to Moses, who served as mediator when the Law was given through angels at Sinai (Galatians 3:19-20). Far more significantly, Christ is declared the one mediator between God and humanity (1 Timothy 2:5) and the mediator of a new and better covenant (Hebrews 8:6; 9:15; 12:24). German 'Mittler' and French 'Mittler' both reflect the 'middle' etymology, capturing the positional sense of standing in between.

mediator (one who intervenes between two parties) (6×) One who stands between two parties to bring about reconciliation, agreement, or covenant establishment. Moses is identified as mediator of the Sinai covenant (Gal 3:19-20), where Paul reasons that a mediator implies more than one party, underscoring the conditional nature of the Law. Christ's mediatorship is the theological climax: he is the sole mediator between God and humanity (1 Tim 2:5) and the mediator of a better covenant founded on better promises (Heb 8:6), specifically a new covenant ratified by his own blood (Heb 9:15; 12:24). German and French both render this as 'Mittler,' transparently reflecting the Greek root mesos ('middle'), while Spanish 'mediador' parallels the Latin-derived English term. The concept bridges legal, covenantal, and soteriological registers. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT

en: mediator, of-mediator, to-mediator | es: a-mediador, de-mediador, mediador | fr: Mittler | de: Mittler Gal 3:19; Gal 3:20; 1Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; Heb 9:15

μεσο-νύκτιος G3317 N-ANS (4×)

Midnight; the middle of the night, marking a pivotal or dramatic moment.

A compound of mesos (middle) and nyx (night), this word denotes the hour of midnight. In the New Testament it consistently appears as a dramatic time marker for significant events. Jesus names it as one of the four watches when the master might return (Mark 13:35). A friend arrives at midnight seeking bread in Luke 11:5, testing the limits of neighborly generosity. Paul and Silas pray and sing hymns at midnight in the Philippian jail (Acts 16:25), and Paul preaches until midnight in Troas (Acts 20:7). The multilingual uniformity – French 'minuit,' Spanish 'medianoche,' German 'Mitternacht' – reflects the word's transparent compound meaning.

(4×) Midnight, the middle point of the night, used as a temporal marker for narratively significant moments. The compound structure is transparent across languages: Spanish 'medianoche' (mid-night), French 'minuit' (mid-night), German 'Mitternacht' (mid-night). In Mark 13:35 it is one of the watches during which the master may return unexpectedly. Acts 16:25 places Paul and Silas's miraculous worship at this hour, and Acts 20:7 marks the extent of Paul's farewell teaching in Troas. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-midnight, midnight | es: a-medianoche, medianoche | fr: milieu-de-la-nuit, minuit | de: Mitternacht, μεσονυκτίου, μεσονύκτιον Mark 13:35; Luke 11:5; Acts 16:25; Acts 20:7

Μεσοποταμία G3318 N-DFS (2×)

Mesopotamia, the region between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, birthplace of Abraham

The land between the two rivers—Mesopotamia, encompassing parts of modern Iraq and Syria. Acts mentions it twice in Stephen's speech: as a region represented at Pentecost (2:9) and as Abraham's homeland before God called him to Canaan (7:2). This was ancient civilization's cradle—home to Sumerians, Babylonians, Assyrians. The Greek name literally means 'between rivers' (meso + potamos). For Jews, it was both the ancestral homeland and the land of exile.

(2×) Acts 2:9 lists Mesopotamians among Pentecost's diverse crowd; Acts 7:2 locates Abraham's pre-call residence there (Ur of the Chaldeans, per Genesis). The region's importance spans biblical history from Abraham to the Babylonian exile and Persian return. All translations either transliterate Mesopotamia or translate 'between rivers.' Stephen's emphasis on God calling Abraham out of Mesopotamia stresses that the patriarch's faith preceded the promised land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Mesopotamia | es: Mesopotamia | fr: Mésopotamie | de: Μεσοποταμίαν, Μεσοποταμίᾳ Acts 2:9; Acts 7:2

μέσος G3319 Adj-GNS (59×)

Middle, midst — the center or interior of a space, group, or situation; used spatially, socially, and temporally.

Mesos is the Greek adjective meaning 'middle' or 'in the midst,' used substantively with the article to indicate the central point of a place, gathering, or circumstance. Jesus sends his disciples 'as sheep into the midst of wolves' (Matt 10:16), sets a child 'in the midst' of the Twelve (Matt 18:2), and promises to be present 'where two or three are gathered' — literally, 'in the midst of them' (Matt 18:20). The word also marks temporal midpoints ('about the middle of the feast,' John 7:14) and serves in dramatic narrative moments like Paul standing 'in the middle of the Areopagus' (Acts 17:22). German Mitte, French milieu, and Spanish medio all converge on a single spatial-center meaning, though each occasionally extends to social contexts just as the Greek does.

midst, middle (59×) The middle, center, or midst of a spatial area or social gathering, used substantively or as a locative adjective. Spatially: the midst of wolves (Matt 10:16), a child placed in the midst (Matt 18:2), standing in the middle of the Areopagus (Acts 17:22). Temporally: the middle of the night (Acts 27:27), mid-feast (John 7:14). Socially: Christ present 'in the midst' of his assembled people (Matt 18:20; Rev 1:13). German Mitte, French milieu, Spanish medio all confirm a unified center-point meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: middle, midst, the-midst | es: medio, medio-de | fr: milieu | de: Mitte Matt 10:16; Matt 13:25; Matt 13:49; Matt 14:6; Matt 18:2

μεσό-τοιχος G3320 N-ANS (1×)

μεσότοιχον — a dividing wall, partition wall, barrier between spaces

This noun appears in Ephesians 2:14, where Paul declares that Christ 'has broken down the dividing wall of hostility' between Jews and Gentiles. The term literally means 'middle wall' (μέσος + τοῖχος), a partition separating spaces. Some see allusion to the temple barrier excluding Gentiles from the inner courts on pain of death. More broadly, it represents the entire Torah-based separation that marked Jewish distinctiveness. Christ's death abolished this barrier, creating one new humanity from the two groups. The wall's destruction enables both Jews and Gentiles to approach God together through Christ in one Spirit.

(1×) The accusative neuter singular 'the dividing wall' identifies what Christ demolished. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'pared-intermedia,' German 'Scheidewand') emphasize the barrier function — a structure designed to separate and exclude. Christ's work removes this partition, creating unity where division previously defined relationships, reconciling both groups to God in one body through the cross. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: dividing-wall | es: pared-intermedia | fr: μεσότοιχον | de: Scheidewand Eph 2:14

μεσουρᾰν-ημα G3321 N-DNS (3×)

mid-heaven, the zenith or highest point of the sky

This term refers to the zenith, the point directly overhead where heaven meets its meridian. In Revelation, angels fly 'in mid-heaven' to proclaim messages visible to all earth's inhabitants (Rev 8:13, 14:6, 19:17). The position suggests maximum visibility and universal proclamation. All three occurrences are in Revelation's apocalyptic visions, where cosmic geography matters. The consistent rendering across languages—'medio del cielo,' 'Mitte des Himmels'—preserves the spatial precision of this astronomical term.

(3×) The zenith or meridian point of the sky, the highest arc where celestial bodies culminate. In Revelation's visions, this is the position from which angels make proclamations meant to reach all earth's inhabitants. The Greek μεσουράνημα literally means 'mid-heaven,' a technical term for the culminating point. Spanish and German translations preserve this spatial precision with 'medio del cielo' and 'Mitte des Himmels.' HEAVEN AND SKY

en: mid-heaven | es: medio-del-cielo, medio-del-cielo, | fr: Mitte-des-Himmels | de: Mitte-des-Himmels Rev 8:13; Rev 14:6; Rev 19:17

μεσόω G3322 V-PPA-GFS (1×)

μεσόω — to be in the middle, to be at midpoint, especially of time

This verb appears in John 7:14, stating that 'when the feast was already half over' (literally 'the feast being middle'), Jesus went up to the temple and began teaching. The word describes being at the midpoint, particularly of time periods. Jesus had remained in Galilee while his brothers went to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles, but halfway through the weeklong celebration, he appeared publicly in the temple. His timing was strategic — not seeking glory at the feast's beginning but teaching when crowds were gathered and minds were engaged with the festival's themes of water and light, which he would dramatically fulfill.

(1×) The present participle genitive feminine 'being middle' describes the temporal state of the feast. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'mediada,' French 'au-milieu') indicate the midpoint has been reached, showing Jesus' deliberate timing in revealing himself publicly — neither at the festival's start nor end but when maximum teaching opportunity presented itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: being-middle | es: mediada | fr: au-milieu | de: Mitte John 7:14

Μεσσίας G3323 N-AMS (2×)

Messias, the Greek transliteration of Aramaic 'Meshiha' (Hebrew 'Mashiach'), meaning 'the Anointed One'

The Greek form of the Aramaic Meshiha, equivalent to Hebrew Mashiach—'Anointed One.' John's Gospel preserves the Aramaic title twice, immediately translating it as 'Christ.' Andrew tells Simon, 'We have found the Messias' (1:41). The Samaritan woman speaks of 'Messias' who will explain everything (4:25). John's double explanation ('which is, being interpreted, the Christ') shows he's writing for Greek readers unfamiliar with the Hebrew-Aramaic term. Both languages point to the same reality: God's promised, anointed deliverer.

(2×) Both Johannine uses (1:41, 4:25) transliterate the Aramaic, then gloss it for Greek readers. This reflects the multilingual environment —Hebrew/Aramaic terms circulating among Greek-speaking Jews and Samaritans. The title carries centuries of prophetic expectation: a David-like king anointed by God to redeem Israel. Most translations either transliterate (Messias, Messiah) or translate directly to 'Christ,' sometimes with explanatory notes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Messias | es: Messías | fr: Messie | de: Messias John 1:41; John 4:25

μεστ-ός G3324 Adj-NFS (9×)

Full, filled; describing something brimming with contents, whether literal (a vessel) or figurative (moral qualities).

An adjective meaning full or brimming, applied to both physical containers and moral character. A vessel full of sour wine is offered to Jesus at the cross (John 19:29), and a net hauled ashore is full of 153 large fish (John 21:11). More striking is the figurative usage: Jesus denounces the scribes as 'full of hypocrisy and lawlessness' (Matt 23:28), and Paul catalogs humanity as 'full of envy, murder, strife' (Rom 1:29). The Spanish 'llenos' and German 'voll' both preserve this dual physical-moral range.

full (9×) Completely filled, whether with physical contents or abstract qualities. The literal usage appears in John 19:29 (a vessel full of vinegar) and John 21:11 (a net full of fish), where the emphasis is on capacity reached. The figurative extension – 'full of hypocrisy' (Matt 23:28), 'full of envy and murder' (Rom 1:29), 'full of cursing and bitterness' (Rom 3:14) – is more theologically charged. Spanish 'llenos' and French 'plein' reflect the same semantic breadth. James 3:8 describes the tongue as 'full of deadly poison,' combining physical imagery with moral force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: full | es: llena, llenos | fr: plein | de: voll, μεστοὶ Matt 23:28; John 19:29; John 21:11; Rom 1:29

μεστ-όω G3325 V-RPM/P-NMP (1×)
μεστόω — to fill completely, make full of something
This verb appears in Acts 2:13, where mockers dismiss the Pentecost disciples as 'filled with new wine' (literally 'having been filled full of sweet wine'). The word means to fill completely or saturate. The accusation was that the disciples were drunk, explaining their strange behavior and incomprehensible speech. Peter immediately refutes this, pointing out it's only nine in the morning. The irony is profound: they were indeed filled, but not with wine — they were filled with the Holy Spirit. This filling produced not drunkenness but powerful testimony in multiple languages, fulfilling Joel's prophecy.

(1×) The perfect passive participle nominative masculine plural 'having been filled' describes their supposed state. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'llenos,' French 'remplir') emphasizes complete saturation. The mockers' explanation substitutes physical intoxication for spiritual filling, missing that genuine divine empowerment was occurring, though it manifested in ways that seemed irrational to skeptical observers. FILLING AND FULLNESS
en: having-been-filled | es: llenos | fr: remplir | de: μεμεστωμένοι Acts 2:13

μετά G3326 Prep (473×)
With (genitive: accompaniment, association); after (accusative: temporal sequence) – a core Greek preposition of proximity.
This versatile preposition governs two cases in the New Testament with sharply distinct meanings. With the genitive it expresses accompaniment and association – 'with his mother Mary' (Matt 2:11), 'God with us' (Matt 1:23 via Emmanuel) – and is one of the most common ways to say 'with' in Koine Greek. With the accusative it marks temporal succession, 'after,' as in 'after six days' (Matt 17:1) and 'after the tribulation' (Matt 24:29). The case distinction maps neatly onto separate lexical items in target languages: Spanish 'con' vs. 'despues de,' French 'avec' vs. 'apres,' German 'mit' vs. 'nach.'

1. with (368×) Accompaniment, association, or participation, governing the genitive case. With 368 occurrences this is the primary sense: being with someone (Matt 2:3, Herod 'with all Jerusalem'), acting together (Matt 5:41, 'go with him two miles'), or possessing an attendant quality. The cross-linguistic evidence is perfectly uniform: spa 'con,' fra 'avec,' deu 'mit,' all dedicated accompaniment markers. Key passages: Matt 2:11 ('with his mother'), Matt 26:38 ('stay here and watch with me'). ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH
en: with, with- | es: con | fr: avec- | de: mit Matt 2:3; Matt 2:11; Matt 4:21; Matt 5:25; Matt 5:41

2. after (105×) Temporal succession or sequence, governing the accusative case, meaning 'after.' With 105 occurrences it introduces time expressions: 'after six days' (Matt 17:1), 'after two days' (Matt 26:2), 'after the tribulation of those days' (Matt 24:29). The temporal sense triggers entirely different vocabulary in target languages: spa 'despues de,' deu 'nach,' while French sometimes still maps to 'avec' in gloss data, likely reflecting a default rendering. The case-based polysemy is a hallmark of Greek prepositional flexibility. AFTER TEMPORAL en: After-, after, after- | es: Después-de, después-de | fr: avec- | de: mit, mit- Matt 1:12; Matt 17:1; Matt 24:29; Matt 25:19; Matt 26:2

μεταβάλλω G3327 V-ASA-3S (12×)
To move from one place or state to another; depart, pass over, or relocate.
Built from meta ('change') and baino ('go'), this verb fundamentally conveys crossing from one position to another. In the Gospels it most often describes Jesus' physical movements — departing from one town to the next (Matt 11:1; 12:9; 15:29). But in two extraordinary passages it transcends the spatial: 'Whoever hears my word and believes has passed from death to life' (John 5:24), echoed in 1 John 3:14. Spanish captures the physical sense with 'partió' but uses the same 'ha pasado' for the spiritual crossing, while German 'uebergehen' (to go over) preserves the transitional force in both registers.

1. depart, go away physically (8×) To depart or go away physically — movement from one location to another, the most frequent New Testament usage. Jesus 'departed from there' (Matt 11:1; 12:9; 15:29) as He moved through His itinerant ministry. Spanish alternates between 'partió' and 'pasó,' French uses 'aller' and 'passer,' all emphasizing the leaving of one place for another. The eight occurrences form the narrative backbone of Jesus' Galilean travels. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: Depart, Move, having-departed | es: Pasa, habiéndose-ido, partió | fr: aller, passer | de: geht-weiter, uebergehen Matt 8:34; Matt 11:1; Matt 12:9; Matt 15:29; Matt 17:20

2. pass over, transition spiritually (2×) To pass over or transition from one state to another, especially in the profound metaphorical sense of crossing from death to life. John 5:24 declares that the believer 'has passed from death to life,' and 1 John 3:14 echoes this with 'we have passed from death to life.' Spanish 'ha pasado' and French 'passer' serve both physical and spiritual senses, but German 'uebergehen' particularly captures the boundary-crossing quality of this transformative passage. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: has-passed, we-have-passed | es: ha-pasado, hemos-pasado | fr: passer | de: uebergehen John 5:24; 1John 3:14

3. move, relocate (2×) To move or shift position, with emphasis on change of location rather than departure — whether of objects or persons relocating. Jesus says faith could command a mountain, 'Move from here to there, and it will move' (Matt 17:20), and He instructs the seventy-two to remain in one house, not moving from house to house (Luke 10:7). Spanish 'pasará' and 'paséis' convey this repositioning nuance. DEPARTING AND PASSING en: it-will-move, move | es: pasará, paséis | fr: passer | de: geht-weiter Matt 17:20; Luke 10:7

μεταβάλλω G3328 V-APM-NMP (1×)
μεταβάλλω — to change one's mind, to alter opinion or attitude, to turn around
This verb appears in Acts 28:6, describing how the Maltese natives 'changed their minds' about Paul after watching him suffer no harm from the viper bite. Initially they expected him to swell up and die, concluding he must be a murderer whom justice pursued even after escaping the sea. When nothing harmful happened, they changed their assessment to the opposite extreme, declaring he must be a god. The word denotes reversing position or opinion. The incident shows how quickly human judgment can swing between extremes, yet Paul apparently redirected this superstitious awe toward proclaiming the true God.

(1×) The aorist middle participle nominative masculine plural 'having changed their minds' describes the natives' reversal. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'habiendo-cambiado-de-opinión,' French 'changer') convey the radical shift in assessment — from assuming divine judgment to assuming divine nature, both incorrect but creating opportunity for gospel witness to penetrate their worldview. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE
en: having-changed-their-minds | es: habiendo-cambiado-de-opinión | fr: changer | de: μεταβαλόμενοι Acts 28:6

μετάγω G3329 V-PIA-1P (2×)
to guide, steer, or turn; to redirect or lead something in a different direction
To guide, steer, or turn—originally used for ships and horses, extended metaphorically to any kind of direction or control. James uses it in parallel illustrations (3:3-4): we guide horses with small bits, and steer massive ships with tiny rudders. The point is control through small means. Classical Greek used it for transferring people to new cities, diverting rivers, redirecting attention, even translating between languages. The emphasis is on causing something to change direction.

(2×) James' two uses (3:3-4) form a climactic parallel: bits turn horses, rudders turn ships—and the tongue, though small, directs whole lives. The Greek verb encompasses physical steering and metaphorical guidance. Classical uses included escorting people, diverting medical flows, even deriving metaphors or borrowing terminology. Spanish and French preserve the steering sense (dirigir, guider), while the context emphasizes the disproportionate control small things can exercise. GOING AND LEADING en: are-guided, we-guide | es: dirigimos, son-dirigidos | fr: μετάγεται, μετάγομεν | de: lenken Jas 3:3; Jas 3:4

μεταδίδωμι G3330 V-ANA (5×)

To share with, give a portion of what one has, or impart generously to another.

Goes beyond simple giving to emphasize sharing from what one already possesses. John the Baptist urged those with two tunics to 'share' with the one who has none (Luke 3:11). Paul longed to 'impart' a spiritual gift to the Romans (Rom 1:11) and describes sharing not only the gospel but 'our own selves' with the Thessalonians (1 Thess 2:8). The Spanish 'compartir' and German 'mitteilen' beautifully capture this participatory generosity: not giving away everything, but letting others into what you have.

(5×) To give a share of what one possesses, to impart or distribute generously. The emphasis falls on participatory giving rather than total transfer. John the Baptist commands sharing clothing with those in need (Luke 3:11); Paul desires to impart a spiritual gift (Rom 1:11); the generous person is called to share with zeal (Rom 12:8); the thief must now labor so as to have something to share (Eph 4:28). The Spanish 'compartir' and French 'donner' together highlight the relational warmth of this giving. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: I-may-share, giving, let-him-share | es: comparta, compartir, que-comparte | fr: donner | de: mitteilen, μεταδότω Luke 3:11; Rom 1:11; Rom 12:8; Eph 4:28; 1Thess 2:8

μετάθεσις G3331 N-GFS (3×)

change, removal, transference from one state or position to another

This noun denotes fundamental change or transference. Hebrews uses it twice: the priesthood's change from Levitical to Melchizedek order necessitates a law change (Heb 7:12), and at the end, shakable things will be removed so unshakable things remain (Heb 12:27). Enoch's 'translation' (Heb 11:5) uses the same root—he was transferred from earth without death. The term implies not mere modification but displacement or substitution. Spanish 'cambio/remoción/traslación' and French 'changement' capture this range from change to removal to translation.

(3×) A fundamental change, removal, or transference from one state to another. In Hebrews, it describes the priesthood's transformation (7:12), Enoch's bodily translation to heaven (11:5), and the eschatological removal of created things (12:27). The Greek μετάθεσις can mean positional change, exchange, or complete removal. Spanish distinguishes 'cambio' (change), 'remoción' (removal), and 'traslación' (translation), showing the term's semantic breadth. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: change, removal, translation | es: cambio, remoción, traslación | fr: changement | de: Veraenderung Heb 7:12; Heb 11:5; Heb 12:27

μεταίρω G3332 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to depart, move away, or leave from one place to go to another

To move away, depart, or relocate. Matthew uses it twice to mark Jesus' movements: he departed from the Nazareth area after teaching in parables (13:53), and he left Galilee heading toward Judea (19:1). The verb can mean lifting and removing an object, repealing a decree, or intransitively departing from a place. Classical usage included moving statues from their bases or someone shifting position. Matthew's use is simple geographical transition—Jesus concluding ministry in one region and moving to another.

(2×) Both Matthew occurrences mark geographical transitions in Jesus' ministry: leaving the Nazareth region (13:53) and departing Galilee for Judea (19:1). The latter signals the beginning of his final journey toward Jerusalem. Classical Greek used it for physically lifting and moving objects or intransitively departing. The verb here serves Matthew's structural purposes, marking major transitions in the gospel narrative. Most translations use simple departure language: departed, left, went away. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: he-departed | es: partió | fr: partir | de: μετῆρεν Matt 13:53; Matt 19:1

μετακαλέω G3333 V-FIM-1S (4×)

To summon, send for, or call someone to come from another place.

A compound of meta (implying change of place) and kaleo (to call), this verb means to summon someone, to send for a person to come from where they are. All four New Testament occurrences appear in Acts, reflecting its administrative and interpersonal register. Joseph sends for his father Jacob (Acts 7:14), Cornelius is told to summon Peter (Acts 10:32), Paul sends for the Ephesian elders (Acts 20:17), and Felix summons Paul for conversation (Acts 24:25). The Spanish 'hizo llamar' (caused to be called) nicely captures the causative nuance of sending for someone at a distance.

(4×) To summon or send for someone, calling them to come from another location. The meta- prefix conveys movement toward the caller, distinguishing this from a simple calling out. Spanish 'hizo llamar' (had someone called) and French 'appeler' (to call) reflect the summoning action. All four NT uses occur in Acts: Joseph summons Jacob to Egypt (7:14), Cornelius is instructed to send for Peter (10:32), Paul calls the Ephesian elders to Miletus (20:17), and Felix sends for Paul repeatedly (24:25). CALLING AND NAMING en: I-will-summon, summon, summoned | es: hizo-llamar, llama, te-llamaré | fr: appeler | de: μετακάλεσαι, μετακαλέσομαί, μετεκαλέσατο Acts 7:14; Acts 10:32; Acts 20:17; Acts 24:25

μετακῑν-έω G3334 V-PPM/P-NMP (1×)

μετακινέω — to move from one place to another, to shift or remove

This verb appears in Colossians 1:23, where Paul warns believers to continue in the faith 'not being moved away from the hope of the gospel.' The word means to shift position or relocate. Paul uses it metaphorically for spiritual displacement — being moved from the stable foundation of gospel hope. He has just described their secure standing in Christ; now he emphasizes the necessity of perseverance. True faith remains anchored rather than drifting. The present tense participle suggests ongoing resistance to forces that would shift them away from the hope announced in the gospel they heard.

(1×) The present passive participle nominative masculine plural 'being moved' describes what must not happen. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'siendo-movidos,' German 'wegbewegen') conveys the danger of displacement from a fixed position. Paul envisions external pressures attempting to shift believers from gospel hope, requiring active resistance to remain firmly established in the faith. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: being-moved | es: siendo-movidos | fr: μετακινούμενοι | de: wegbewegen Col 1:23

μεταλαμβάνω G3335 V-PNA (7×)

To partake of, receive a share of; to take food, eat

The verb μεταλαμβάνω — built from μετά (ʼwith, after') and λαμβάνω (ʼtake') — means to get a share of something, to participate in it. In the New Testament it splits neatly into two senses. The more abstract one covers receiving a portion of anything from divine discipline (Heb 12:10) to a farmer's share of the harvest (2 Tim 2:6). The concrete one narrows to eating food: the early believers shared meals with glad hearts (Acts 2:46), and Paul urged storm-tossed sailors to eat for survival (Acts 27:33-34). Both senses hold the same structural idea — receiving one's portion — but the food sense is distinct enough that multilingual glosses consistently mark it.

1. receive, partake of, share in (4×) To receive a share of, partake in, or obtain something, typically abstract — an opportunity, a blessing, a harvest, or divine chastening. In Acts 24:25 Felix dismisses Paul, saying he will summon him at a convenient time

(having 'obtained' an occasion); in 2 Tim 2:6 the hardworking farmer must be first to partake of the crops; in Heb 6:7 the ground receives blessing; and in Heb 12:10 God disciplines believers so they might share in his holiness. The French 'recevoir' and German 'empfangen' confirm a receiving-and-participating core distinct from physical eating. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: having-obtained, receives, to-partake | es: habiendo-tomado, participar, recibe | fr: recevoir | de: empfangen, μεταλαβὼν Acts 24:25; 2Tim 2:6; Heb 6:7; Heb 12:10

2. partake of food, eat (3×) To partake of food, take nourishment, eat a meal. This concrete sense appears three times: in Acts 2:46 the early Jerusalem community shared food (μετελάμβανον τροφῆς) with gladness and simplicity of heart, and in Acts 27:33-34 Paul twice urges the shipwrecked passengers μεταλαβεῖν τροφῆς for their survival. Spanish 'participaban' and 'tomar,' alongside the repeated genitive τροφῆς ('of food'), mark this as a distinct usage where the object of participation is specifically physical sustenance. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: they-were-partaking, to-take | es: participaban, tomar | fr: recevoir | de: μεταλαβεῖν, μετελάμβανον Acts 2:46; Acts 27:33; Acts 27:34

μετά-ληψις G3336 N-AFS (1×)

μετάληψις — receiving, partaking, participation in something

This noun appears in 1 Timothy 4:3, where Paul describes false teachers who forbid marriage and demand abstinence from foods 'which God created to be received with thanksgiving.' The word denotes participation or receiving something. Paul argues that these created things are good and designed by God for believers to receive gratefully. The false asceticism he opposes treats material creation as inherently evil, contradicting the doctrine that God created all things good. Proper reception with thanksgiving sanctifies what God has given, while rejecting his gifts dishonors the Creator.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular functions with 'for receiving' (εἰς μετάληψιν), expressing purpose. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'participación,' German 'Genuss') emphasize the receptive act of partaking what God provides. Paul defends creation's goodness against proto-Gnostic devaluation of matter, insisting believers may receive all God's gifts with thanksgiving rather than false ascetic rejection. FELLOWSHIP COMMUNION

en: receiving | es: participación | fr: μετάλημψιν | de: Genuss 1Tim 4:3

μεταλλάσσω G3337 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to exchange or change one thing for another; to alter or transform fundamentally

To exchange, change, or transform—swapping one thing for another. Paul uses it twice in Romans 1 to describe humanity's tragic exchanges: they traded God's glory for idols (1:25) and exchanged natural relations for unnatural ones (1:26). The verb carries commercial overtones—a deliberate transaction where something valuable is traded for something worthless. Classical usage included exchanging fates, assuming different natures (like birds), adopting new customs, or even dying ('exchange life for death'). The middle voice suggests active participation in the exchange.

(2×) Paul's repeated use in Romans 1:25-26 emphasizes deliberate substitution: humanity actively traded truth for lies, natural for unnatural. The lexicon shows classical uses for interchanging fates, adopting new forms, leaving one's country, or dying. The verb's commercial background (exchange by barter) underscores the tragedy—trading infinite value for worthless substitutes. All translations preserve the exchange imagery: cambiar, changer, vertauschen. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: exchanged | es: cambiaron | fr: changer | de: vertauschen Rom 1:25; Rom 1:26

μεταμέλ-ομαι G3338 V-AIP-2P (6×)

To feel regret or remorse; to change one's mind about a past action, distinct from full repentance (metanoia).

Metamelomai expresses emotional regret or remorse over something already done, a feeling-centered response distinct from the deeper, will-transforming repentance conveyed by metanoeo. In the Parable of the Two Sons, the first son 'regretted' his refusal and went to work (Matthew 21:29), while the chief priests failed to feel even this basic regret when they saw John's ministry (Matthew 21:32). Most strikingly, Judas 'felt remorse' after betraying Jesus (Matthew 27:3), yet this regret led not to restoration but to despair. Paul uses the word to describe his complex feelings about a painful letter (2 Corinthians 7:8).

regret, feel remorse (6×) To experience regret or remorse after an action, involving a change of feeling rather than the thoroughgoing repentance (metanoia) that transforms the will and direction of life. In Matthew 21:29 and 21:32, the word describes the son who initially refused to work but afterward regretted his refusal and obeyed, contrasted with religious leaders who felt no such regret. Judas's remorse in Matthew 27:3 is metamelomai rather than metanoia, a distinction the tradition has long noted: his regret did not produce saving repentance. Paul's usage in 2 Corinthians 7:8 is more nuanced, describing his initial regret over causing pain through a letter, which he then resolves was worthwhile. Spanish 'arrepintiéndose' blurs the metamelomai/metanoia distinction, while German 'bereuen' (to rue) preserves the emotional, retrospective quality well. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT

en: I-regret, I-was-regretting, having-regretted | es: arrepintiéndose, habiendo-arrepentido, me-arrepentía | fr: regretter, se-repentir | de: bereuen, μεταμεληθεὶς, μεταμεληθεὶς› Matt 21:29; Matt 21:32; Matt 27:3; 2Cor 7:8

μεταμορφ-όω G3339 V-AIP-3S (4×)

To transform, transfigure, or change in form; an inward metamorphosis made visible outwardly.

Built from meta (change) and morphe (form), this verb describes a deep transformation of form or nature – not mere outward alteration but genuine metamorphosis. Its four New Testament uses divide into two pairs: the visible transfiguration of Jesus on the mountain (Matt 17:2, Mark 9:2), where his face and garments radiated divine glory, and the ongoing spiritual transformation of believers (Rom 12:2, 2 Cor 3:18). Paul's command to 'be transformed by the renewing of your mind' uses the passive voice, indicating that this change is wrought by God. The Spanish contrast between 'transfigurado' (for Jesus) and 'transformados' (for believers) elegantly mirrors the two registers of the same word.

(4×) To be transformed or transfigured, describing a profound change of form that reveals inner reality outwardly. Spanish distinguishes 'fue transfigurado' (was transfigured, of Christ) from 'somos transformados' (we are being transformed, of believers), while German uses 'verwandeln' (to metamorphose) for both. In Matthew 17:2 and Mark 9:2, Jesus's divine glory breaks through his human appearance on the mountain. In Romans 12:2, believers are commanded to undergo ongoing renewal of the mind, and in 2 Corinthians 3:18 they are progressively transformed into Christ's image by the Spirit. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: are-being-transformed, be-transformed, he-was-transfigured | es: fue-transfigurado, somos-transformados, transformaos | fr: transfigurer, transformer | de: verwandeln, μετεμορφώθη Matt 17:2; Mark 9:2; Rom 12:2; 2Cor 3:18

μετανο-έω G3340 V-PIA-1S (34×)

repent, change one's mind — to undergo a fundamental reorientation of heart and conduct toward God

Metanoeo (from meta 'after' + noeo 'perceive') literally means to change one's mind, but in biblical usage it deepens into a thoroughgoing transformation of will, allegiance, and behavior before God. Its 34 occurrences carry immense theological weight: John the Baptist opens his ministry with the imperative 'Repent!' (Matt 3:2), Jesus takes up the identical cry (Matt 4:17), and Peter issues it at Pentecost (Acts 2:38). The word presupposes a prior state of rebellion and announces that a decisive turn is both possible and urgent. In Revelation, the risen Christ commands five of the seven churches to repent (Rev 2:5, 16, 21-22; 3:3, 19), showing that even the redeemed need ongoing metanoia. German 'Busse tun' and French 'se repentir' both capture the inward-turning gravity of the concept.

repent, change one's mind (34×) To undergo a decisive change of mind and heart, turning from sin toward God. Inaugurates the preaching of both John the Baptist (Matt 3:2) and Jesus (Matt 4:17), and becomes the apostolic call at Pentecost (Acts 2:38; 3:19). In Revelation, the risen Christ demands it of five churches (Rev 2:5, 16, 21; 3:3, 19), demonstrating that repentance is not a one-time act but an ongoing posture before God. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT en: Repent, repent, repented | es: Arrepentíos, Arrepiéntete, arrepentíos | fr: se-repentir | de: Busse-tun, tut-Buße Matt 3:2; Matt 4:17; Matt 11:20; Matt 11:21; Matt 12:41

μετάνοια G3341 N-AFS (22×)

Repentance; a profound change of mind and heart involving turning from sin toward God

A feminine noun denoting not mere regret but a thoroughgoing reorientation of mind, will, and conduct – turning away from sin and toward God. John the Baptist demanded 'fruit worthy of repentance' (Matt 3:8; Luke 3:8), insisting the change must be visible in action. His 'baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins' (Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3) established the term as foundational for the gospel message. Paul later declared that God's kindness is meant to lead to repentance (Rom 2:4). French repentance, Spanish arrepentimiento, and German Busse each capture the moral gravity, though the Greek metanoia emphasizes the cognitive dimension – a 'change of mind' – more than its Romance and Germanic equivalents.

repentance (22×) A deep change of mind and heart resulting in turning from sin toward God, involving both inward reorientation and outward transformation. Central to John the Baptist's preaching (Matt 3:8, 11; Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3) and apostolic proclamation (Acts 5:31; 11:18). The Greek etymology meta + nous foregrounds cognition more than spa arrepentimiento or deu Busse, which lean toward contrition. MORAL GOODNESS en: of-repentance, repentance | es: arrepentimiento, de-arrepentimiento | fr: repentance | de: Busse, Buße Matt 3:8; Matt 3:11; Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3; Luke 3:8

μεταξύ G3342 Prep (9×)

Between (spatial or relational); next, in the interval following; meanwhile, in the intervening time.

A preposition and adverb whose core meaning is 'in the middle space between two points.' In most New Testament uses it marks spatial or relational betweenness–between you and your brother (Matt 18:15), between Abel and Zechariah (Matt 23:35), or the great chasm fixed between paradise and torment (Luke 16:26). Spanish 'entre' and German 'zwischen' render this consistently. The word can also mark temporal intervals: at Acts 13:42, it points to 'the next Sabbath' (the one in between), with Spanish shifting to 'siguiente.' At John 4:31, it functions as a pure temporal adverb meaning 'meanwhile' or 'in the meantime,' captured by Spanish 'entre tanto.'

1. (7×) Between–marking spatial position or relational separation between two entities. Used of the space between persons (Matt 18:15, 'between you and him'), between historical figures (Matt 23:35, between Abel and Zechariah), and the unbridgeable gulf between Abraham's side and Hades (Luke 16:26). Spanish 'entre,' French 'entre,' and German 'zwischen' all converge on this core spatial-relational meaning across seven occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: between | es: entre | fr: entre, entre- | de: zwischen, zwischen- Matt 18:15; Matt 23:35; Luke 11:51; Luke 16:26; Acts 12:6

2. (1×) Next, the intervening one in a temporal sequence. At Acts 13:42, the people ask Paul to speak again 'the next Sabbath' (to metaxu sabbaton)–the Sabbath lying between this one and the one after. Spanish 'siguiente' (next/following) captures the sequential sense, while French and German retain the generic 'entre/zwischen,' showing that this temporal-sequential nuance is contextually derived rather than lexically marked in most languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: next | es: siguiente | fr: entre | de: zwischen Acts 13:42

3. (1×) Meanwhile, in the intervening time–a purely temporal adverbial use. At John 4:31, while Jesus speaks with the Samaritan woman, the disciples urge him 'meanwhile' (en to metaxu) to eat. Spanish 'entre tanto' preserves the spatial metaphor embedded in temporal usage, literally 'between so much [time],' while the underlying Greek uses the same spatial root to bridge a gap in narrative time. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: meanwhile | es: entre-tanto | fr: entre | de: zwischen John 4:31

μετα-πέμπω G3343 V-AIM-3S (9×)

To send for someone, summon; to dispatch a messenger requesting another's presence.

A compound verb (meta + pempo) meaning to send after someone, that is, to summon them through an intermediary. In the NT it appears exclusively in Acts, where it describes the Roman and early Christian practice of formally requesting someone's presence. Cornelius sends for Peter (Acts 10:5, 22), and Peter later recounts being summoned (Acts 11:13). The word captures the social dynamic of indirect communication through messengers – Spanish 'hacer venir' (to cause to come) nicely reflects this causative force.

send for, summon (9×) To dispatch a messenger to fetch or summon a person, requesting their presence through an intermediary. Confined entirely to Acts in the NT, this verb describes the formal process of sending for someone rather than going oneself. Cornelius the centurion sends for Peter three times in the narrative (Acts 10:5, 22, 29), and the word recurs in Peter's retelling (Acts 11:13) and in similar summons scenes (Acts 24:24, 26; 25:3). The Spanish 'hacer venir' and German 'holen lassen' both capture the causative, delegated nature of the action – one does not go but sends another to bring the desired person. CALLING AND NAMING en: having-been-summoned, having-summoned, he-might-summon | es: hacer-venir, haz-venir, llamando | fr: envoyer-chercher | de: lässt-holen Acts 10:5; Acts 10:22; Acts 10:29; Acts 11:13

μετα-στρέφω G3344 V-AMP-3S (3×)

turn around, transform, pervert, change direction or nature

This verb describes turning something around or transforming it, sometimes with negative connotations of perversion. Joel's prophecy says the sun will be 'turned' to darkness (Acts 2:20, quoting Joel 2:31). Paul warns that some want to 'pervert' the gospel (Gal 1:7). James calls mourners to let laughter be 'turned' to mourning (Jas 4:9). The range spans cosmic transformation, doctrinal corruption, and emotional reversal. The varied translations—'shall be turned,' 'pervertir,' 'retourner,' 'verwandeln'—show the verb applies to physical, spiritual, and emotional turning.

(3×) To turn around, transform, or change fundamentally, with nuances ranging from neutral transformation to deliberate perversion. Acts 2:20 uses it for cosmic reversal (sun to darkness), Galatians 1:7 for doctrinal corruption, James 4:9 for emotional shift (joy to grief). Spanish 'pervertir' and French 'retourner' reflect both the neutral and negative senses. The Greek μεταστρέφω literally means 'turn around,' but context determines whether it's divine transformation or human distortion. TURNING AWAY AND PERVERTING en: let-be-turned, shall-be-turned, to-pervert | es: pervertir, sea-cambiada, será-convertido | fr: retourner, μεταστρέψαι, μετατραπήτω | de: verwandeln, μεταστραφήσεται Acts 2:20; Gal 1:7; Jas 4:9

μετασχημάτ-ίζω G3345 V-AIA-1S (5×)

To change outward form or appearance; to transform, disguise, or apply figuratively.

Focuses on alteration of external form rather than inner nature. Paul 'applied' (transferred as a figure) certain truths to himself and Apollos for the Corinthians' sake (1 Cor 4:6). Satan 'disguises himself' as an angel of light (2 Cor 11:14), and his servants likewise masquerade as servants of righteousness (2 Cor 11:13, 15). Yet the same word describes Christ's power to 'transform' believers' humble bodies into glory (Phil 3:21). Spanish captures both poles: 'apliqué' for the figurative transfer and 'se disfraza' for the deceptive masquerade.

(5×) To change outward form, disguise, or apply figuratively. Covers a wide range from rhetorical figure (1 Cor 4:6, where Paul 'applied' things to himself as an illustration) to deceptive masquerade (2 Cor 11:13-15, where false apostles and Satan 'disguise' themselves) to eschatological transformation (Phil 3:21, where Christ will 'transform' our lowly bodies). The German 'sich verwandeln' and French 'se déguiser' together capture this spectrum from disguise to genuine metamorphosis. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: I-applied, disguise, disguises | es: apliqué, disfrazándose, se-disfraza | fr: se-déguiser, μετασχηματίσει | de: sich-verwandeln 1Cor 4:6; 2Cor 11:13; 2Cor 11:14; 2Cor 11:15; Phil 3:21

μετατίθημι G3346 V-PIM/P-2P (6×)

To transfer, transpose, change; to turn away or desert; to pervert or distort something into its opposite.

Metatithēmi carries the fundamental idea of placing something differently — moving it from one position to another. When applied physically, it describes the translation of Enoch (Heb 11:5) or the transfer of the patriarchs' bones to Shechem (Acts 7:16). Spanish trasladó and fue-trasladado perfectly capture this relocative sense. But the word extends powerfully into the moral and theological realm: Paul uses it of the Galatians 'turning away' (metatithesthe) from the gospel (Gal 1:6), and Jude deploys it for those who 'pervert' God's grace into licentiousness (Jude 1:4). The progression from physical transfer to theological distortion shows how Greek verbs of motion regularly develop figurative senses.

1. transfer, transport, translate (physically) (3×) To transfer or transport physically from one place to another — used of bodily relocation or divine translation. God 'translated' (metethēken) Enoch so he did not see death (Heb 11:5), and the patriarchs' remains 'were carried over' (metetethēsan) to Shechem (Acts 7:16). Spanish trasladó and fue-trasladado mirror this physical-transfer sense precisely, as does German versetzen ('to relocate'). TRANSFER AND CHANGE

en: translated, was-translated, were-carried-over | es: fue-trasladado, fueron-trasladados, trasladó | fr: transférer, versetzen | de: versetzen, μετετέθησαν Acts 7:16; Heb 11:5

2. change, turn away, desert (2×) To change allegiance or position, to turn away or desert — describing a shift from one loyalty or state to another. In Gal 1:6, Paul is astonished that the Galatians 'are turning' (metatithesthe) so quickly to a different gospel. Heb 7:12 uses it of a change in the priesthood necessitating a change in the law. Spanish os-transferís ('you transfer yourselves') captures the reflexive, volitional quality of this desertion. TRANSFER AND CHANGE

en: being-changed, you-are-turning | es: os-transferís, siendo-cambiado | fr: versetzen | de: versetzen Gal 1:6; Heb 7:12

3. pervert, distort, twist (1×) To pervert or distort, twisting something into its opposite — especially of corrupting divine truth. In Jude 1:4, ungodly infiltrators are 'perverting' (metatithentes) the grace of God into licentiousness. French changeant and Spanish cambiando both render this as 'changing,' but the context demands the stronger sense of deliberate distortion — turning grace into its antithesis. TURNING AWAY AND PERVERTING

en: perverting | es: cambiando | fr: changeant | de: verdrehend Jude 1:4

μετέπειτα G3347 Adv (1×)

μετέπειτα — afterward, subsequently, later in time

This adverb appears in Hebrews 12:17, where the author notes that Esau 'afterward' sought the blessing with tears but was rejected, finding no opportunity for repentance though he sought it earnestly. The word indicates temporal sequence — what came after the initial action. Esau's story warns against profanity and treating sacred things lightly. He despised his birthright for momentary gratification, then later desperately wanted the blessing he had forfeited. The temporal gap between casual dismissal and anguished regret illustrates how present choices create future consequences that cannot always be reversed, even with tears.

(1×) The adverbial form marks temporal sequence: 'afterward, when he wanted to inherit the blessing.' Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'después,' German 'danach') emphasizes the chronological separation between Esau's choice and his regret, highlighting the tragic irreversibility of despising God's gifts — repentance became impossible not because God refused forgiveness but because the forfeited blessing was gone. LAST AND FINAL en: afterward | es: después | fr: danach | de: danach Heb 12:17

μετέχω G3348 V-PNA (8×)

To share in, partake of; to have a portion or part in something held in common.

Metecho means to partake of or share in something, emphasizing the receiving side of participation. It appears in the New Testament primarily in Paul's letters and Hebrews, covering a striking range of shared realities: partaking of bread (1 Cor 10:17), sharing in food offered to idols at a table of demons (1 Cor 10:21), partaking of milk versus solid food in teaching (Heb 5:13), and — most profoundly — Christ sharing in flesh and blood so he could destroy the power of death (Heb 2:14). The Spanish 'participar' and German 'teilhaben' both capture the idea of taking a real portion in something larger than oneself.

to share in, partake of (8×) To have a share in or partake of something, emphasizing the reception of a portion from what is held in common. Used of partaking of food and drink — both literal bread (1 Cor 10:17) and the table of demons (1 Cor 10:21) — of sharing in priestly service (Heb 7:13), of receiving milk rather than solid food in teaching (Heb 5:13), and most strikingly, of Christ partaking of flesh and blood to defeat death (Heb 2:14). While related to koinoneo (G2841), metecho stresses the receiving of a portion rather than mutual sharing; Spanish 'participar' and German 'teilhaben' both reflect this nuance of taking one's part. SHARE PARTICIPATE FELLOWSHIP

en: he-has-shared-in, partake, partaking | es: ha-participado, participamos, participan | fr: avoir-part, teilhaben | de: teilhaben 1Cor 9:10; 1Cor 9:12; 1Cor 10:17; 1Cor 10:21; 1Cor 10:30

μετεωρ-ίζω G3349 V-PMM/P-2P (1×)

μετεωρίζω — to be anxious or worried, to be suspended in uncertainty

This verb appears in Luke 12:29, where Jesus instructs his disciples not to be anxious about what they will eat or drink. The word literally means 'to raise up' or 'suspend,' used metaphorically for the unsettled, hovering state of anxiety. Classical Greek used it for lifting things high or being suspended uncertainly. Jesus applies it to the mental state of worry that keeps people suspended between possibilities, unable to rest. His instruction follows teaching about God's provision for birds and flowers, arguing from lesser to greater that the Father will certainly care for his children, making anxiety both unnecessary and faithless.

(1×) The present middle/passive imperative second plural 'do not be anxious' prohibits ongoing worry. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'andéis-ansiosos,' French 's'inquiéter') convey the unsettled mental state of anxiety. Jesus forbids this as incompatible with trust in the Father's provision, calling disciples to seek first God's kingdom rather than suspending themselves in worry over material needs. ANXIETY AND CARE

en: be-anxious | es: andéis-ansiosos | fr: s'inquiéter | de: μετεωρίζεσθε Luke 12:29

μετοικ-εσία G3350 N-GFS (4×)

Deportation, exile, or forced resettlement; specifically the Babylonian captivity of Judah.

A technical term for forced migration or deportation, used in the New Testament exclusively of the Babylonian exile in Matthew's genealogy. All four occurrences appear in Matthew 1:11-17, where the deportation to Babylon serves as a major structural hinge dividing Israel's history into three epochs: Abraham to David, David to the exile, and the exile to Christ. The consistent rendering across languages – Spanish 'deportación,' French 'déportation,' German 'Wegführung' (carrying away) – underscores the violent, involuntary nature of the event. The German 'Wegführung' particularly captures the forced march imagery of an entire nation led away.

(4×) Deportation or exile, specifically the forced resettlement of Judah to Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar. The word carries the weight of national catastrophe and divine judgment. French and Spanish both use 'déportation/deportación,' while German 'Wegführung' (leading away) evokes the physical removal of a people from their homeland. All four NT occurrences are in Matthew 1:11-17, where the Babylonian exile serves as the central pivot of the genealogy linking Abraham to Jesus the Messiah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: deportation | es: deportación | fr: déportation | de: Wegführung Matt 1:11; Matt 1:12; Matt 1:17

μετοικ-ίζω G3351 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to deport, exile, or cause to migrate; to remove people from their homeland to another location

To deport, relocate, or cause to emigrate—forcibly moving people from their homeland. Stephen's speech uses it twice: God removed Israel's idolaters beyond Babylon (Acts 7:43), and Abraham migrated after his father's death (7:4, though some manuscripts use a different verb). Classical Greek used it for leading settlers to a new home or emigrating. The passive often means being exiled or deported. Later it could be used intransitively for voluntary emigration, but the biblical sense emphasizes God's action as judge and guide.

(2×) Acts 7:43 quotes Amos about deportation as judgment—God will exile idolaters. Acts 7:4 describes Abraham's migration (though textual variants exist), possibly emphasizing divine direction. Classical usage covered both voluntary emigration and forced relocation. The verb captures the exile's trauma—being uprooted from ancestral land. Spanish trasladar and French déporter preserve the relocation sense, though German simply transliterates the Greek in one instance. TRANSFER AND CHANGE

en: I-will-remove, he-removed | es: trasladaré, trasladó | fr: déporter | de: μετοικιῶ, μετῴκισεν Acts 7:4; Acts 7:43

μετοχ-ή G3352 N-NFS (1×)

partnership, shared participation or fellowship in something held in common

This noun denotes the act of sharing together or participating jointly in something. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 6:14 in a rhetorical question about what partnership righteousness can have with lawlessness. The multilingual evidence (Spanish participación, French participation, German Gemeinschaft) emphasizes both the sharing aspect and the community dimension. The lexical tradition shows classical uses ranging from shared ownership of property to joint participation in abstract concepts.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence appears in Paul's urgent appeal against being unequally yoked with unbelievers. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize partnership and participation, with German Gemeinschaft highlighting the fellowship dimension. In 2 Corinthians 6:14, Paul's rhetorical question assumes that genuine partnership requires shared values and allegiance, making partnership between righteousness and lawlessness conceptually impossible. FELLOWSHIP COMMUNION

en: partnership | es: participación | fr: participation | de: Gemeinschaft 2Cor 6:14

μέτοχος G3353 Adj-AMP (6×)

Sharing in, partaking of; a partner, companion, or associate; one who has a share in something.

Metochos fundamentally describes someone who shares in something with others — whether a calling, a spiritual reality, or a business venture. The author of Hebrews uses it extensively: believers are 'partakers' of Christ (Heb 3:14), of a heavenly calling (Heb 3:1), and of the Holy Spirit (Heb 6:4). The multilingual evidence is revealing — Spanish partícipes and German Teilhaber both emphasize the 'part-taking' dimension, while English companions and Spanish compañeros (Heb 1:9) shift toward relational fellowship. In Luke 5:7, the word describes James and John as fishing 'partners' of Simon, grounding its most concrete use in everyday economic cooperation.

1. (4×) Partaker, one who shares in a spiritual reality or calling — emphasizing participation in something received from God. Hebrews uses this sense repeatedly: partakers of a heavenly calling (3:1), of Christ (3:14), of the Holy Spirit (6:4), and of divine discipline (12:8). Spanish partícipes and German Teilhaber ('part-holder') both highlight the idea of receiving a share in something greater than oneself. The consistent Hebrews usage suggests covenantal participation — belonging to Christ's company by grace. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: partakers | es: partícipes | fr: participant | de: Teilhaber Heb 3:1; Heb 3:14; Heb 6:4; Heb 12:8

2. (1×) Companion, fellow — stressing relational closeness and shared status rather than merely shared possession. In Heb 1:9 (quoting Ps 45:7), the Son is anointed above his 'companions' (metochous), those who share his royal dignity. English companions and Spanish compañeros shift the emphasis from abstract participation toward personal association and fellowship. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: companions | es: compañeros | fr: participant | de: Teilhaber Heb 1:9

3. (1×) Business partner, associate in a shared enterprise — the most concrete, commercial use. In Luke 5:7, James and John are called metochoi of Simon in the fishing trade. Spanish compañeros and German Teilhaber both fit naturally here. French participant remains more generic, but the context of shared boats and labor anchors this firmly in economic partnership. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: partners | es: compañeros | fr: participant | de: μετόχοις Luke 5:7

μετρ-έω G3354 V-FIP-3S (11×)

To measure or mete out a quantity or standard; in passive voice, to have measure dealt back to oneself.

Metreō is the act of measuring — whether grain, distance, or, most memorably in Scripture, moral judgments. Jesus' saying 'with the measure you use, it will be measured back to you' (Matt 7:2, Mark 4:24) forms the heart of this word's NT usage, playing on both the active and passive voices in a single proverb. The active sense covers all instances of measuring and meting out, including the angel measuring the temple in Rev 11:1-2 and Paul's refusal to 'measure themselves by themselves' in 2 Cor 10:12. The passive appears in the reciprocal half of Jesus' proverb. Spanish captures the voice distinction nicely: medís (active 'you measure') versus os será medido (passive 'it will be measured to you').

1. to measure (active) (9×) To measure, mete out, or determine quantity or extent in the active voice. Covers Jesus' teaching on reciprocal judgment — 'with the measure you measure, it will be measured to you' (Matt 7:2, Mark 4:24, Luke 6:38) — where the active voice carries the human act of judging others. Also used for literal measurement: the angel measuring the temple of God in Rev 11:1, and Paul's critique of those who 'measure themselves by themselves' (2 Cor 10:12). Spanish medís and German messen consistently render the active dimension. MEASURE METE OUT

en: he-measured, he-might-measure, measure | es: con-que-medís, medís, mida | fr: mesurer | de: messen, μετρεῖτε Matt 7:2; Mark 4:24; Luke 6:38; 2Cor 10:12; Rev 11:1

2. to be measured (passive) (2×) To be measured, to have measure meted out to oneself — the passive voice of metreō expressing divine or reciprocal recompense. Attested in the future passive metréthēsetai ('it will be measured') in Matt 7:2 and Mark 4:24. This passive completes Jesus' proverb of reciprocity: the standard you apply to others will be applied back to you. The passive transforms measurement from a human act into a divine response. Spanish os será medido ('it will be measured to you') preserves the passive voice distinctly from the active medís. MEASURE PASSIVE en: it-will-be-measured | es: os-será-medido, os–será–medido | fr: mesurer | de: messen, μετρηθήσεται Matt 7:2; Mark 4:24

μετρ-ητής G3355 N-AMP (1×)

a liquid measure equivalent to about 9 gallons, used especially for water or wine

This masculine noun refers to a specific unit of liquid measurement in the ancient world, roughly equivalent to the Hebrew bath. In John 2:6, it describes the capacity of the stone water jars at the wedding in Cana—each holding two or three measures. The term appears across multiple languages consistently as a unit of measurement (Spanish medidas, French mesure, German Eimer). Classical sources indicate it was equivalent to the Roman amphora, making each jar capable of holding 18-27 gallons of water that Jesus transformed into wine.

(1×) The lone New Testament use describes the water jars at Cana that became the setting for Jesus's first sign. The multilingual glosses emphasize the measurement aspect, with German Eimer (bucket/vessel) focusing on the container dimension. The detail about capacity (two or three measures each) underscores the abundance of the miracle—Jesus provided an enormous quantity of superior wine, roughly 120-180 gallons total. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10355 WITH 4 SENSES en: measures | es: medidas | fr: mesure | de: Eimer John 2:6

μετριο-πᾰθέω G3356 V-PNA (1×)

to deal gently or moderately with someone, bearing patiently with their weakness or ignorance

This compound verb combines the ideas of measured response and emotional restraint. In Hebrews 5:2, it describes the essential qualification of a high priest: the ability to bear gently with the ignorant and wayward. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish ser moderado, French user de patience, German Nachsicht üben) emphasizes both moderation and patience. Classical usage indicates a deliberate middle ground between excessive sympathy and harsh judgment—the priest can sympathize because he too is beset by weakness.

(1×) In Hebrews 5:2, this verb defines the high priest's pastoral disposition toward those who err from ignorance or are led astray. The multilingual glosses capture the nuanced balance: moderation (Spanish), patience (French), and forbearance (German). The context emphasizes that such gentle dealing stems from the priest's own experience of weakness, enabling him to respond with measured compassion rather than harsh condemnation to those who stumble. PATIENCE ENDURANCE
en: to-deal-gently | es: ser-moderado | fr: user-de-patience | de: Nachsicht-ueben Heb 5:2

μέτριος G3357 Adv (1×)

moderately, to a moderate degree; not greatly

This adverb expresses measured degree or extent, indicating something done within reasonable limits. In Acts 20:12, it describes the degree of comfort the Ephesian believers experienced when young Eutychus was restored alive after his fatal fall. The multilingual evidence shows interesting variation: Spanish poco (a little), French modérément (moderately), while German simply transliterates the Greek. The classical range includes moderate size, time, or number—all pointing to the middle ground between extremes.

(1×) Luke uses this adverb in Acts 20:12 to describe the congregation's comfort after Eutychus's restoration. The cross-linguistic glosses reveal interpretive choices: Spanish poco suggests modest comfort, French modérément indicates moderate relief, while the context suggests more than modest comfort given the miraculous rescue. The adverb likely means they were not just a little comforted but appropriately, fittingly, or considerably comforted given the circumstances. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS en: moderately | es: poco | fr: modérément | de: μετρίως Acts 20:12

μέτρον G3358 N-DNS (14×)

measure — a standard of quantity, extent, or proportion; both the instrument and the act of measuring Metron is the Greek word for any standard of measurement — whether a container for grain, a rule for length, or a figurative benchmark of proportion. Jesus uses it in the memorable proverb about reciprocity: 'with the measure you use, it will be measured to you' (Matt 7:2; Mark 4:24; Luke 6:38). Paul employs it to describe the divinely assigned sphere or limit of apostolic authority (2 Cor 10:13) and the 'measure of the gift of Christ' distributed to each believer (Eph 4:7, 13, 16). The word always implies a standard — not arbitrary but calibrated. Spanish 'medida,' French 'mesure,' and German 'Mass' all preserve this dual sense of the measuring instrument and the quantity measured.

measure (14×) A measure — a standard or instrument by which quantity, extent, or proportion is determined. Used of the reciprocal principle of divine judgment (Matt 7:2; Mark 4:24; Luke 6:38, where a 'good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over' will be given back), of the divinely apportioned scope of ministry (2 Cor 10:13; Eph 4:7), and of the full stature of Christ as the goal toward which believers grow (Eph 4:13, 16). In Matt 23:32, 'fill up the measure of your fathers' evokes a vessel of guilt reaching its limit. Across all uses, metron implies a defined, bounded standard rather than open-ended quantity. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: a-measure, measure, of-measure | es: -medida, de-medida, medida | fr: mesure | de: Mass, μέτρον, μέτρῳ Matt 7:2; Matt 23:32; Mark 4:24; Luke 6:38

μέτωπ-ον G3359 N-ANS (8×)

The forehead, the front part of the head above the eyes; in the NT used exclusively for the site of divine or beastly marks.

Derived from meta (between) and ops (eye), metopon denotes the forehead — literally, the space between the eyes. In the New Testament, every occurrence appears in Revelation, where the forehead becomes the most contested real estate in the apocalypse: it is where God's servants receive the divine seal (Rev 7:3, 14:1) and where the beast's followers bear his mark (Rev 13:16, 17:5). The Spanish 'frente' and German 'Stirn' both preserve the straightforward anatomical sense, while the theological freight is carried entirely by context.

forehead (front of the head) (8×) The front surface of the human head above the eyes, used in Revelation as the site where seals, marks, or names are inscribed. All eight NT occurrences cluster in Revelation, where the forehead serves as a visible marker of allegiance — either to God (Rev 7:3, 14:1) or to the beast (Rev 13:16, 14:9, 17:5). The consistent rendering across languages (Spanish 'frente,' German 'Stirn,' French 'front') confirms the literal anatomical reference, with symbolic weight supplied by the apocalyptic context rather than any shift in the word's meaning. FLESH AND BODY en: forehead, foreheads | es: frente, frente„ frentes | fr: Stirn | de: Stirn Rev 7:3; Rev 9:4; Rev 13:16; Rev 14:1; Rev 14:9

μέχρῐ G3360 Prep (18×)

until, as far as — a preposition and conjunction marking the spatial or temporal limit of an action or state

Mechri (also mechris before vowels) functions as both a preposition with the genitive and a conjunction, marking the terminus — spatial or temporal — up to which something extends. Of its 18 New Testament occurrences, temporal uses predominate. Matthew 28:15 reports that the story of the stolen body 'has been spread among the Jews to this day' (mechri tes semeron), and Matthew 11:23 warns that Capernaum will be brought down 'to Hades' (mechri hadou), one of the rare spatial uses. Paul pushes the word to its theological limit in Philippians 2:8, declaring that Christ was obedient 'to the point of death' (mechri thanatou) — even death on a cross — where mechri marks not a mere endpoint but a climactic extreme. Ephesians 4:13 envisions growth 'until we all attain to the unity of the faith.' Hebrews uses it for temporal perseverance: striving against sin 'to the point of blood' (Heb 12:4) and remaining faithful 'until the end' (Heb 3:6, 14). Mark 13:30 promises that this generation will not pass away 'until all these things take place.' Spanish 'hasta,' French 'jusqu'a,' and German 'bis' map the boundary-marking function exactly.

(18×) A marker of spatial or temporal limit, indicating the point up to which or until which an action, state, or condition extends. Temporal uses dominate: 'to this day' (Matt 28:15), 'until John' (Luke 16:16), 'until the day of Christ' (Phil 1:10; 2:16), 'until we all attain unity' (Eph 4:13). The spatial sense appears in 'down to Hades' (Matt 11:23) and the extraordinary christological 'obedient to the point of death' (Phil 2:8), where mechri marks not just a boundary but a breathtaking extreme. Hebrews extends it to perseverance language: resisting sin 'to the point of blood' (Heb 12:4) and holding firm 'until the end' (Heb 3:6, 14). Mark 13:30 and Acts 10:30 use the conjunctional form mechris hou ('until'). French 'jusqu'a' and Spanish 'hasta' confirm the single boundary-marking sense. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: as-far-as, to, until | es: hasta | fr: jusqu'à, jusqu'à-, jusqu'à-ce-que | de: bis, μέχρι Matt 11:23; Matt 28:15; Mark 13:30; Luke 16:16; Acts 10:30

μή G3361 Conj (1065×)

Not (subjective negation); lest; emphatic never; interrogative expecting 'no'; except; perhaps.

The Greek negative particle me stands alongside ou as one of the two pillars of negation in the New Testament, but where ou flatly denies a fact, me operates in the realm of will, thought, and possibility. It negates commands ('do not fear'), conditions ('if anyone does not'), purposes ('lest they turn'), and expectations ('surely not?'). Combined with ou in the construction ou me, it produces the strongest denial Greek can express — 'by no means,' 'never' — as in Jesus' promise 'whoever believes in me shall never die' (John 11:26). Its range from prohibition to doubt makes it indispensable to the grammar of faith, fear, and hope.

1. subjective negation (not) (834×) General subjective negation with non-indicative moods: subjunctive, imperative, infinitive, participle. Spanish no, French ne...pas, German nicht all translate it flatly, but the grammatical context — commands, conditions, general statements — sets it apart from ou. The backbone of all prohibitions: 'do not worry' (Matt 6:25), 'do not judge' (Matt 7:1). NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not, not- | es: no | fr: ne-pas | de: nicht Matt 1:19; Matt 2:12; Matt 3:10; Matt 5:13; Matt 5:30

2. emphatic negation (never, by no means) (110×) Emphatic negation in the ou me construction with aorist subjunctive: 'by no means,' 'never,' 'certainly not.' Spanish de ninguna manera, French jamais capture the intensified force. Jesus' solemn assurances rely on this — 'I will never again drink of this fruit' (Matt 26:29), 'you will never taste death' (John 8:52). NEGATION PARTICLES

en: hands, not, not- | es: *, de-ninguna-manera, de-ningún-modo | fr: ne-pas | de: nicht, nicht- Matt 25:9; Matt 26:29; Matt 26:35; Mark 9:1; Mark 9:41

3. interrogative negative (expects 'no') (53×) Interrogative use expecting a negative answer: 'surely not?', 'it cannot be that...?' In Matt 7:9 — 'What man among you, if his son asks for bread, will give him a stone?' The expected answer is 'no one.' French est-ce que...ne...pas and Spanish acaso signal the rhetorical force. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not, not- | es: Acaso, acaso, no | fr: ne-pas- | de: nicht, nicht- Matt 7:9; Matt 7:10; Matt 9:15; Matt 11:23; Mark 2:19

4. purpose/fear negative (lest) (51×) Purpose or fear clause negation: 'lest,' 'so that...not,' 'for fear that.' After verbs of fearing or caution — 'lest you strike your foot against a stone' (Matt 4:6). Spanish no sea que, French de peur que, German damit nicht all deploy dedicated apprehensive constructions matching this function. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: lest, lest- | es: no, no-sea-, no-sea-que | fr: ne-pas, ne-pas- | de: nicht, nicht- Matt 4:6; Matt 5:25; Matt 7:6; Matt 13:15; Matt 13:29

5. exceptive negative (except, but only) (13×) Exceptive or restrictive use: 'except,' 'but only,' typically in the idiom ei me. In 1 Cor 2:2, Paul resolved to know nothing 'except (ei me) Jesus Christ and him crucified.' Spanish sino, French sinon mark the contrastive restriction that carves out an exception from a general negation. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: -, not | es: no, sino | fr: ne-pas, ne-pas- | de: nicht- John 13:10; 1Cor 1:14; 1Cor 2:2; 1Cor 2:11

6. dubitative (perhaps, whether) (4×) Dubitative use expressing uncertainty: 'perhaps,' 'whether perhaps,' 'it may be that.' In 2 Tim 2:25, gentle correction is urged 'perhaps (mepos) God may grant them repentance.' Spanish quizas and the tentative tone distinguish this from confident negation — me here softens into possibility. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Not-, lest, not- | es: no-sea-que, quizás, ¿Acaso | fr: ne-pas, ne-pas- | de: nicht- John 7:26; Rom 11:21; 1Thess 3:5; 2Tim 2:25

ἐάν G3362

if haply, if (conditional particle with subjunctive, from ἐάν contracted to κἄν with καί)

This conditional particle introduces hypothetical situations, regularly followed by the subjunctive mood. Early Attic inscriptions preserve ἐάν, which contracts to ἤν and ἄν in various dialects. When combined with καί ('and'), it forms κἄν through crasis. In Hellenistic and later Greek, it also functions like ἄν after relative pronouns, creating constructions like ὅς ἐάν ('whosoever'). The particle signals possibility and contingency throughout New Testament Greek.

ἵνα G3363

in that place, there; where; whither (local adverb, also final conjunction 'in order that')

Originally a local adverb meaning 'there' or 'in that place,' ἵνα evolved to also mean 'where' as a relative ('in which place'). With verbs of motion, it can mean 'whither' (to what place). When combined with ἄν and the subjunctive (ἵν᾽ ἄν), it means 'wherever.' Beyond spatial uses, it developed into one of Greek's primary purpose/result conjunctions, though that final sense may be handled under a different entry in this lexicon.

οὐ μή G3364

emphatic double negative: not at all, by no means (in denial or prohibition)

The combination οὐ μή creates the strongest negative in Greek, used either to emphatically deny something will happen or to prohibit an action. In denial, it most commonly takes the aorist subjunctive ('will certainly not be captured by deceit'). Occasionally the present subjunctive appears with verbs of possibility or ability. Some scholars trace certain uses to ellipsis of an expression of fear or apprehension. The construction conveys absolute negation with rhetorical force.

μηδᾰμ-ῶς G3365 Adv (2×)

by no means, certainly not, in no way; a strong negative adverb expressing absolute refusal or denial

Absolutely not, by no means, in no way whatsoever. Peter uses it twice in identical contexts—his vision of unclean animals (Acts 10:14, 11:8). When commanded to kill and eat, he protests: 'By no means, Lord!' The repetition emphasizes his horror at the idea of eating ritually unclean food. Classical Greek used it as an emphatic negative in replies or arguments. The adverb compounds three negatives (μή + δέ + ἁμῶς), creating the strongest possible denial.

(2×) Peter's identical protest in Acts 10:14 and 11:8 (recounting the same event) captures visceral refusal based on deep conviction—decades of kosher practice aren't easily overcome. The classical use as strong negative in replies fits perfectly. The triple-negative construction (evident in the etymology) makes this about as emphatic as Greek can get. Most translations use the strongest negative available: 'By no means,' 'Certainly not,' German keineswegs (in no wise). NEGATION PARTICLES

en: by-no-means | es: De-ninguna-manera | fr: Μηδαμῶς | de: keineswegs Acts 10:14; Acts 11:8

μηδέ G3366 Conj (58×)

Nor, and not; as adverb: not even — negative particle extending or intensifying denial

A compound of μή and δέ, this particle serves as the subjunctive/imperative counterpart to οὐδέ, linking negative clauses ('nor') or intensifying a negation ('not even'). Jesus uses it prolifically in the Sermon on the Mount to pile up prohibitions: 'Do not worry about your life... nor about your body' (Matt 6:25), 'Do not take gold, nor silver, nor copper' (Matt 10:9–10). In a handful of passages, the adverbial force emerges — Mark 2:2 describes a crowd so dense that 'not even' the area around the door could hold them. Spanish 'ni' and German 'und nicht' consistently reflect both the conjunctive and intensifying roles.

1. nor (51×) The primary conjunctive use: 'nor,' 'and not' — connecting a negative clause to a preceding negation, extending the scope of denial or prohibition. This is the dominant New Testament function, appearing heavily in Jesus' instructions: 'Do not worry about your life, nor (μηδέ) about your body' (Matt 6:25); 'Do not give what is holy to dogs, nor (μηδέ) cast your pearls before swine' (Matt 7:6). The Spanish 'ni' and French 'ni' exactly mirror this linking-negation function, chaining prohibitions into a rhetorical sequence. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: nor, nor- | es: ni | fr: ni | de: und-nicht Matt 6:25; Matt 7:6; Matt 10:9; Matt 10:10

2. nor (4×) The same conjunctive 'nor' function in a concentrated Pauline passage: 1 Cor 10:7–10, where Paul strings together warnings from Israel's wilderness history — 'do not become idolaters... nor (μηδέ) let us act immorally... nor (μηδέ) let us test Christ... nor (μηδέ) grumble.' Though functionally identical to sense 1, the clustering in a single paraenetic unit with Old Testament typology gives these occurrences a distinctive rhetorical texture. Spanish 'Ni' and French 'ni' again capture the cumulative prohibitive chain. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: nor- | es: Ni | fr: ni- | de: und-nicht 1Cor 10:7; 1Cor 10:8; 1Cor 10:9; 1Cor 10:10

3. not even (3×) The adverbial, intensifying use: 'not even,' emphasizing the extremity of a situation. In Mark 2:2, so many gathered that 'not even (μηδέ) the space at the door' could contain them. In Mark 3:20, the crowd was so pressing that they could 'not even (μηδέ) eat bread.' The Spanish 'ni siquiera' ('not even') makes this scalar, intensifying force explicit, distinguishing it from the simple conjunctive 'nor.' This sense highlights the extraordinary — situations that exceed normal expectation. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Not-even, not-even | es: Ni, ni-siquiera | fr: ni | de: und-nicht Mark 2:2; Mark 3:20; Mark 8:26

μηδείς G3367 Adj-AFS (91×)

No one, nobody; nothing, not anything; no, not any (as adjective). Negative pronoun/adjective used in non-indicative contexts.

The Greek compound μηδείς (from μηδέ + εἷς, literally 'not even one') is the negative pronoun and adjective used with subjunctive, imperative, infinitive, and participial constructions — the non-indicative counterpart of οὐδείς. In the Gospels it appears prominently in Jesus' commands to silence after healings: 'tell no one' (Matt 8:4; 9:30; Mark 1:44). As a neuter substantive (μηδέν), it means 'nothing' — Paul's 'be anxious about nothing' (Phil 4:6) and Peter's 'do nothing from partiality' (1 Tim 5:21). A rarer adjectival use modifies nouns directly: 'no occasion of stumbling' (1 John 2:10). Spanish nadie/nada, French personne/rien, and German niemand/nichts all split along the person/thing axis that μηδείς encodes in a single paradigm through gender inflection.

1. no one, nobody (49×) Substantive use referring to persons: 'no one, nobody, not anyone' (49 occurrences). This is the most frequent function, appearing in prohibitions ('tell no one,' Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44), warnings ('let no one deceive you,' 2 Thess 2:3), and generalizations ('no one can serve two masters' uses οὐδείς, but the μηδείς parallel appears in conditional and hortatory frames). Spanish nadie, French personne, German niemand, and Arabic أحد all deploy dedicated person-negating pronouns, confirming cross-linguistic stability. NOTHING AND NOBODY

en: No-one, no-one, to-no-one | es: Nadie, a-nadie, nadie | fr: personne, rien | de: nichts Matt 8:4; Matt 9:30; Matt 16:20; Matt 17:9; Matt 27:19

2. nothing, not anything (37×) Substantive use referring to things: 'nothing, not anything' (37 occurrences). The neuter μηδέν functions as a pronoun negating the existence or relevance of any thing or matter: 'take nothing for the journey' (Mark 6:8), 'expecting nothing in return' (Luke 6:35), 'be anxious about nothing' (Phil 4:6). Spanish nada, French rien, German nichts, and Korean 아무것도 all employ thing-negating pronouns distinct from the person-negating forms of sense 1, showing that languages consistently bifurcate this semantic space. NOTHING AND NOBODY

en: nothing | es: de-nada, en-nada, nada | fr: personne, rien | de: nichts Mark 1:44; Mark 5:26; Mark 6:8; Luke 4:35; Luke 6:35

3. no, not any (adjective) (5×) Adjectival use modifying a noun directly: 'no, not any' — functioning as a determiner that negates the noun it qualifies (5 occurrences). Examples include 'lacking in no gift' (1 Cor 1:7), 'let no one deceive you in any way' (2 Thess 2:3, where μηδείς modifies τρόπος), and 'give no occasion to the adversary' (1 Tim 5:14). Here μηδείς agrees in gender/number/case with its head noun rather than standing alone as a pronoun. Spanish ningún/ninguna and French aucun/aucune use dedicated adjectival negators, distinguishing this function from the pronominal uses. NOTHING AND NOBODY en: any, no, no-longer | es: ninguna, ningún | fr: personne, rien | de: nichts 1Cor 1:7; 2Thess 2:3; 1Tim 5:14; Heb 10:2; 1Pet 3:6

μηδέ-ποτε G3368 Adv (1×)

never, not at any time; an emphatic negation extending across all time

This compound adverb combines the negative particle with the indefinite temporal marker to create an absolute temporal negation. In 2 Timothy 3:7, Paul describes certain women as always learning but never arriving at knowledge of truth. The multilingual evidence is nearly uniform (Spanish nunca, French/German forms of never), emphasizing the absolute temporal scope. Classical usage confirms this as a strong negative spanning all possible times, often appearing in prohibitions or warnings.

(1×) Paul employs this emphatic temporal negative in 2 Timothy 3:7 to characterize the tragic perpetual state of those who learn continuously but never reach genuine knowledge of truth. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently express absolute temporal negation. The context portrays a frustrating cycle: perpetual learning activity with zero arrival at truth—the never emphasizes not just failure up to now but the impossibility of arrival while maintaining their current pattern. NEGATION PARTICLES en: never | es: nunca | fr: μηδέποτε | de: niemals 2Tim 3:7

μηδέ-πω G3369 Adv (1×)

not yet, expressing negation of something up to the present moment

This compound adverb combines negation with the temporal marker for 'yet,' creating a nuanced negative that specifically denies completion or arrival up to a reference point. In Hebrews 11:7, it describes the temporal status of the flood at the time Noah received warning—events not yet visible when he acted in faith. The multilingual glosses (Spanish aún no, French/German noch nicht) uniformly capture the 'not yet' meaning. This precise temporal marker highlights the forward-looking dimension of faith.

(1×) In Hebrews 11:7, this adverb emphasizes Noah's remarkable faith: he responded to divine warning about things not yet seen. The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render 'not yet,' stressing the temporal gap between warning and fulfillment. The phrase underscores faith's essence—Noah built the ark before any evidence of coming judgment appeared, acting on God's word alone when the flood was still future and invisible. NEGATION PARTICLES en: not-yet | es: aún-no | fr: noch-nicht | de: noch-nicht Heb 11:7

Μῆδος G3370 N-NMP (1×)
Medes, an ancient people from Media (modern northwestern Iran)
This plural proper noun designates the inhabitants of Media, the ancient kingdom southeast of the Caspian Sea. In Acts 2:9, Medes appear in Luke's catalogue of peoples present at Pentecost who heard the apostles speaking in their native languages. The cross-linguistic glosses simply transliterate or translate the ethnic designation. The Medes were historically significant as part of the Medo-Persian empire and are mentioned frequently in Old Testament prophecy.

(1×) Luke includes Medes in his comprehensive list of diaspora Jews and proselytes gathered in Jerusalem for Pentecost. The multilingual evidence preserves the ethnic designation through transliteration or direct translation. The Medes' presence represents the eastern frontier of the Jewish dispersion, as Median territory was where northern Israelites had been exiled centuries earlier. Their hearing the gospel in their own language fulfilled the universal scope of Pentecost's reversal of Babel. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3663 WITH 3 SENSES en: Mēdoi | es: Mḗdoi | fr: Mède | de: nicht-mehr Acts 2:9

μηκέτι G3371 Adv (22×)
No longer, no more, no further – a negative temporal adverb indicating cessation of a previous state or action
A compound adverb formed from me ('not') and eti ('still, yet'), expressing the cessation of something that was previously the case. Jesus cursed the fig tree with 'may no one ever eat fruit from you again' (Mark 11:14), and the leper's healing ironically meant Jesus could 'no longer openly enter a town' (Mark 1:45). Paul uses it in ethical exhortation: believers should 'no longer walk as the Gentiles do' (Eph 4:17) and should 'no longer be children tossed by every wind of doctrine' (Eph 4:14). Spanish ya no, French ne plus, and German nicht mehr all faithfully render the temporal-negation structure.

no longer (22×) A negative temporal adverb meaning 'no longer, no more,' indicating cessation of a previous state. Used in narrative (Mark 1:45, 'he could no longer enter a city'; Mark 2:2) and paraenetic instruction (Eph 4:14, 17, 28). Multilingual evidence – spa ya no, fra ne plus, deu nicht mehr – uniformly confirms a single sense. NEGATION PARTICLES
en: No-longer, no-longer | es: Ya-no, no-más, nunca-más | fr: ne-plus | de: nicht-mehr Matt 21:19; Mark 1:45; Mark 2:2; Mark 9:25; Mark 11:14

μῆκος G3372 N-NNS (3×)
length, the linear dimension from end to end
Length is one of the fundamental spatial dimensions. Paul prays believers will grasp the full dimensions of Christ's love—breadth, length, height, and depth (Eph 3:18). In John's vision of the New Jerusalem, the city is measured: its length equals its width and height, forming a perfect cube (Rev 21:16, mentioned twice). The term is straightforward: linear extension. Across languages —'longitud' (Spanish), 'longueur' (French), 'Länge' (German)—the translations converge on this basic geometric concept.

(3×) The linear spatial dimension measuring extent from one end to another. In Ephesians 3:18, it's one of four dimensions used to express the immeasurable scope of Christ's love. In Revelation 21:16 (twice), it describes the measured dimension of the New Jerusalem. The Greek μῆκος is a standard geometric term with no metaphorical complexity in these passages—pure spatial measurement. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: length | es: longitud, longitud, | fr: longueur | de: Laenge Eph 3:18; Rev 21:16

μηκύν-ω G3373 V-PSM/P-3S (1×)
to grow long, lengthen, increase in length or duration
This verb primarily means to make or become long, extended in space or time. In Mark 4:27, Jesus uses it in his parable of the growing seed to describe the mysterious process of growth—the seed sprouts and grows while the farmer sleeps, ignorant of how it happens. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize growth (Spanish crezca, French grandir, German lang werden). Classical usage includes lengthening time, prolonging speech, or physical extension, with the agricultural metaphor being particularly vivid in Mark's context.

(1×) Mark 4:27 employs this verb in Jesus's parable about the kingdom's mysterious growth. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly emphasizes the growth dimension, particularly fitting the agricultural context. The parable stresses the automatic, organic quality of kingdom growth—the seed lengthens and develops through divine power independent of human understanding or effort. The farmer's ignorance of the growth mechanism underscores God's sovereignty in kingdom expansion. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: grows | es: crezca | fr: grandir | de: lang-werden Mark 4:27

μηλωτή G3374 N-DFP (1×)
sheepskin, a garment or covering made from sheep's wool or hide
This feminine noun denotes a rough garment made from sheep's wool or hide, typically worn by prophets, ascetics, or the destitute. In Hebrews 11:37, it appears in the catalog of sufferings endured by faithful witnesses who wandered in sheepskins and goatskins. The multilingual evidence uniformly identifies sheepskin (Spanish pieles de oveja, French/German Schaffell). Such rough clothing symbolized both voluntary poverty and social marginalization, marking the wearers as outside conventional society.

(1×) Hebrews 11:37 includes sheepskins in its sobering list of hardships suffered by God's faithful witnesses. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently identify the sheepskin garment. The context pairs sheepskins with goatskins as emblems of extreme deprivation and social rejection—these heroes of faith were reduced to wearing animal hides, wandering as outcasts. The detail evokes Elijah's rough mantle and anticipates Jesus's teaching about prophets' rough clothing. SKIN AND LEATHER
en: sheepskins | es: pieles-de-oveja | fr: Schaffell | de: Schaffell Heb 11:37

μήν G3375 Prtcl (1×)
indeed, truly; an emphatic particle strengthening asseveration or affirmation
This intensive particle serves to strengthen oaths, promises, and solemn declarations. In Hebrews 6:14, it appears in the quotation of God's oath to Abraham, emphasizing the absolute certainty of the divine promise. The multilingual glosses consistently express strong affirmation (Spanish ciertamente, French/German gewiss). Classical usage shows this particle following the emphasized word to add solemnity and certainty to the statement, particularly in oaths and pledges.

(1×) In Hebrews 6:14, this emphatic particle strengthens God's oath to Abraham, intensifying the certainty of the promise. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly conveys strong affirmation (certainly, assuredly). The context stresses the unbreakable nature of God's word: because God could swear by nothing greater, He swore by Himself, adding this emphatic particle to underscore the absolute reliability of His blessing promise to Abraham and his descendants. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES
en: indeed- | es: ciertamente | fr: gewiss | de: gewiss Heb 6:14

μείς G3376 N-DMS (18×)
month — a calendrical unit of roughly thirty days, used for durations, dates, and prophetic time periods Men (genitive menos) is the standard Greek word for 'month,' appearing 18 times in the New Testament across narrative, prophetic, and apocalyptic contexts. Luke's infancy narrative is rich with months: Elizabeth hides herself for 'five months' (Luke 1:24), the angel visits Mary in 'the sixth month' of Elizabeth's pregnancy (Luke 1:26, 36), and Mary stays with Elizabeth 'about three months' (Luke 1:56). James invokes Elijah's prayer that shut the heavens for 'three years and six months' (Jas 5:17; cf. Luke 4:25). Acts records Paul teaching in Corinth for 'eighteen months' (Acts 18:11) and in Ephesus for 'three months' in the synagogue (Acts 19:8; 20:3). In Revelation, months become prophetic measures: the beast is given authority for 'forty-two months' (Rev 9:5, 10, 15; 11:2; 13:5; 22:2), echoing Daniel's three-and-a-half-year tribulation period. The tree of life bears fruit 'every month' (Rev 22:2). Spanish 'mes,' French 'mois,' and German 'Monat' all descend from the same Indo-European root as Greek men.

month (unit of time) (18×) A calendrical unit of approximately thirty days, serving to mark durations, specific dates within a sequence, and prophetic time periods. Luke's infancy narrative uses it to track Elizabeth's and Mary's pregnancies with careful precision — five months of seclusion, the sixth month of visitation, three months of Mary's stay (Luke 1:24, 26, 36, 56). Acts measures Paul's ministry periods in months (Acts 18:11; 19:8; 20:3). Revelation transforms the month into a prophetic unit: the beast's reign of 'forty-two months' (Rev 11:2; 13:5) and the locusts' torment for 'five months' (Rev 9:5, 10) echo Daniel's tribulation chronology. Galatians 4:10 warns against observing 'months and seasons' superstitiously. French 'mois,' Spanish 'mes,' and German 'Monat' share the Indo-European root, confirming the universal calendrical sense. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: month, months | es: mes, mes„ meses | fr: mois | de: Monat, Monate Luke 1:24; Luke 1:26; Luke 1:36; Luke 1:56; Luke 4:25

μην-ύω G3377 V-AIA-3S (4×)

To disclose, report, or make known what was previously hidden or unknown.

This verb means to reveal, report, or inform, with a particular nuance of disclosing something not previously known or bringing hidden information to light. Its New Testament uses span from Jesus's indirect disclosure that God is the God of the living (Luke 20:37, 'Moses showed'), to the religious authorities seeking someone to inform on Jesus's whereabouts (John 11:57), to a nephew's urgent intelligence report about an assassination plot (Acts 23:30), to someone informing a believer about the idolatrous origin of food offered at a meal (1 Cor 10:28). The multilingual evidence – French 'dénoncer' (to denounce/report), Spanish 'avisara' (to warn), German 'mitteilen' (to communicate) – highlights different facets of the disclosure act.

(4×) To disclose, report, or make known something hidden or previously unknown, whether through formal testimony, warning, or revelation. French 'dénoncer' emphasizes the reporting or informing aspect, Spanish 'indicó/avisara' captures the pointing-out and warning nuances, and German 'mitteilen' highlights communication. In Luke 20:37 Moses 'indicates' God's nature at the burning bush; in John 11:57 the authorities demand informants report Jesus's location; in Acts 23:30 a plot is disclosed to the commander; and in 1 Corinthians 10:28 someone reveals that food has been offered to idols. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING

en: having-been-disclosed, having-informed, he-should-report | es: avisara, habiendo-sido-informado, indicó | fr: dénoncer | de: mitteilen, μηνυθείσης, ἐμήνυσεν Luke 20:37; John 11:57; Acts 23:30; 1Cor 10:28

μὴ οὐ G3378

negative after fear/apprehension: lest not, that not (μὴ οὐ with subjunctive or indicative)

This double negative construction follows verbs expressing fear or apprehension, introducing a feared negative outcome. Homer uses it: 'I fear lest someone not undertake this work for you' (meaning 'I fear no one will'). It appears most frequently with the subjunctive, though the indicative is also attested. Sometimes it introduces hesitation without an explicit introductory verb. The construction captures the psychological complexity of fearing a negative: 'afraid that... not.'

μήποτε G3379 Adv (1×)

lest, for fear that; expressing negative purpose or apprehensive concern

This compound conjunction introduces a clause expressing feared consequence or negative purpose. In Matthew 25:9, the wise virgins use it to explain why they cannot share their oil—lest there not be enough for both groups. The multilingual evidence shows interpretive variation: Spanish quizás (perhaps), French de peur que (for fear that), German preserves the Greek. Classical usage spans prohibition, warning, and purpose clauses expressing what must be avoided. The term carries both precautionary and conditional nuances.

(1×) In Matthew 25:9, the wise virgins employ this conjunction to articulate their fear about sharing oil. The cross-linguistic glosses reveal different emphases: Spanish perhaps, French lest/for fear that. The context involves prudent calculation: sharing would risk leaving everyone in darkness when the bridegroom arrives. The lest expresses genuine apprehension about the consequence of generosity —inadequate preparation for the critical moment of the bridegroom's coming. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Lest- | es: Quizás | fr: de-peur-que | de: Μή|ποτε Matt 25:9

μήπω G3380 Adv (2×)

not yet, not as yet; indicating something has not occurred up to the present moment

Not yet, not as yet—indicating something hasn't happened up to the present point. Paul uses it in Romans 9:11: before the twins were born or had done anything good or bad—emphasizing God's choice preceded their actions. Hebrews 9:8 says the Holy Spirit signaled that the Most Holy Place's way wasn't yet revealed while the first tabernacle still stood. Classical Greek used it both as a temporal adverb ('not yet') and as a conjunction ('lest yet'). The emphasis is on timing—something true now but not yet at some earlier point.

(2×) Romans 9:11 uses 'not yet' to stress temporal priority: God's election happened before birth, before actions. Hebrews 9:8 employs it to mark a revelatory delay: the way wasn't yet disclosed under the old system. Classical usage included both the temporal adverb and a rare conjunctive sense ('lest yet'). All translations converge on 'not yet' or close equivalents (Spanish aún no, French pas encore, German noch nicht). The timing nuance is theologically crucial in both contexts. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not-yet | es: aún-no | fr: noch-nicht, pas-encore | de: noch-nicht Rom 9:11; Heb 9:8

μήπω G3381

not yet (adverb); lest yet (conjunction with subjunctive)

As an adverb, μήπω means 'not yet,' often with emphasis: 'nay, not yet.' Homer uses it in narrative and dialogue. As a conjunction, it introduces a preventive clause: 'lest yet someone escape notice.' The word combines the negative μή with πω, the temporal particle indicating 'yet' or 'up to now.' It expresses an incomplete state or a feared premature occurrence.

μηρός G3382 N-AMS (1×)

thigh, the upper part of the leg from hip to knee

This masculine noun designates the upper leg, particularly prominent in ancient contexts involving warfare, oaths, and royal symbolism. In Revelation 19:16, John sees a name written on the thigh of the conquering rider on the white horse: King of Kings and Lord of Lords. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify the thigh (Spanish muslo, French/German Schenkel). Ancient practice included wearing royal insignia on the thigh, and warriors wore swords strapped there, making it a location associated with power and authority.

(1×) John's vision in Revelation 19:16 places the supreme title on Christ's thigh, the location of royal power and military might. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently identifies the anatomical location. The image evokes Psalm 45:3 where the mighty warrior is told to gird his sword on his thigh. The placement of the title emphasizes Christ's royal authority and conquering power—King of Kings emblazoned where ancient monarchs displayed their sovereignty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: thigh | es: muslo | fr: Schenkel | de: Schenkel Rev 19:16

μήτε G3383 Conj (34×)

neither, nor — negative conjunction used in pairs (mete...mete) to deny two or more alternatives

Mete is the negative correlative conjunction used with the subjective-volitional mood (as distinct from oute, which pairs with the indicative), appearing 34 times in the New Testament almost always in the doubled pattern mete...mete ('neither...nor'). Its most memorable deployment comes in the Sermon on the Mount, where Jesus forbids swearing by a cascading series of sacred referents — 'neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by Jerusalem, nor by your own head' (Matt 5:34-36). James echoes this prohibition nearly verbatim (Jas 5:12). Paul employs it to list things that cannot separate believers from God's love (Rom 8:38-39) and to describe the absolute novelty of new creation where 'neither circumcision nor uncircumcision' counts (Gal 6:15). Spanish and French both render it with the simple negative 'ni.'

(34×) A negative correlative conjunction pairing as mete...mete ('neither...nor') to systematically exclude alternatives. Central to Jesus' prohibition of oaths — 'neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by Jerusalem' (Matt 5:34-36) — echoed in James 5:12. Paul uses the paired construction to enumerate what cannot sever believers from divine love (Rom 8:38-39) and to relativize circumcision (Gal 6:15). NEGATION PARTICLES en: neither, neither-, nor | es: ni | fr: ni, ni- | de: weder Matt 5:34; Matt 5:35; Matt 5:36; Matt 11:18

μήτηρ G3384 N-AFP (84×)

Mother; a woman in her role as parent, also used figuratively of cities, covenants, and spiritual relationships.

The standard Greek word for 'mother,' used overwhelmingly of the literal biological or social parent relationship. Mary is identified as the mother of Jesus across the infancy narratives (Matt 1:18; 2:11, 13-14), and the term structures family discourse throughout the Gospels and Epistles. The phrase 'from mother's womb' (Acts 3:2; 14:8; Gal 1:15) functions as an idiom for 'from birth,' highlighting a secondary prepositional construction. All target languages translate uniformly—Spanish 'madre,' French 'mère,' German 'Mutter'—confirming the semantic stability of this core kinship term across cultures.

1. mother (77×) The primary sense: mother as a biological or social parent, accounting for 77 of 84 occurrences. Covers the literal relationship of a woman to her child, whether in narrative (Matt 2:11, 'the child with Mary his mother'), legal discourse (Matt 15:4, 'honor your father and mother'), or theological declaration (Gal 4:26, 'the Jerusalem above is our mother'). Every target language renders this identically: English 'mother,' Spanish 'madre,' French 'mère,' German 'Mutter'—a rare case of perfect cross-linguistic convergence. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS
en: mother | es: a-madre, madre | fr: mère | de: Mutter Matt 1:18; Matt 2:11; Matt 2:13; Matt 2:14; Matt 2:20

2. of mother (5×) A prepositional construction meaning 'from one's mother' or 'of a mother,' appearing 5 times in the idiom 'from mother's womb' to express the concept 'from birth' or 'congenitally' (Matt 19:12, eunuchs from birth; Acts 3:2, lame from birth; Gal 1:15, set apart from birth). The genitive form signals origin or source rather than relational identity. French and German still render simply 'mère' and 'Mutter,' but English 'of mother' and Spanish 'de madre' preserve the prepositional nuance. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS
en: of-mother | es: de-madre | fr: mère | de: Mutter Matt 19:12; Luke 1:15; Acts 3:2; Acts 14:8; Gal 1:15

3. mothers (2×) The plural form 'mothers,' used in Mark 10:30 (Jesus promises a hundredfold mothers, brothers, and sisters in the believing community) and 1 Timothy 5:2 (treat older women as mothers). These passages extend biological kinship metaphorically to the faith community. Spanish distinguishes the plural 'madres,' while French and German retain the unmarked singular form in translation, a minor cross-linguistic divergence. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS en: mothers | es: a-madres, madres | fr: mère | de: Mutter Mark 10:30; 1Tim 5:2

μήτῐς G3385 IntPrtcl (17×)

Surely not? An interrogative particle expecting a negative answer; used in rhetorical questions.

Mēti is an interrogative particle that frames a question expecting the answer 'no.' It introduces rhetorical questions where the speaker anticipates denial or expresses incredulity. When the crowds ask 'Surely this cannot be the Son of David, can it?' (Matt 12:23), the particle signals their hesitation. At the Last Supper, each disciple asks 'Surely not I?' (Matt 26:22, 25). In John 4:29, the Samaritan woman's question — 'Could this be the Christ?' — uses mēti to express hopeful uncertainty while formally expecting negation. German 'etwa' and Spanish 'acaso' both capture this questioning, doubt-laden nuance.

surely not? (expects negative) (17×) An interrogative particle introducing questions that expect a negative answer, functioning as a marker of rhetorical negation or hesitant doubt. In Matt 12:23 the crowd wonders incredulously whether Jesus might be the Son of David. At the Last Supper the disciples each ask 'Surely not I, Lord?' (Matt 26:22, 25). The Samaritan woman uses it to voice cautious hope: 'This isn't the Christ, is it?' (John 4:29). German 'etwa,' Spanish 'acaso,' and French 'est-ce que' all convey the expectation of a negative reply embedded in the question itself. NEGATION PARTICLES en: Not, Not-surely, Surely-not | es: Acaso, acaso, alguno | fr: est-ce-que | de: etwa Matt 7:16; Matt 12:23; Matt 26:22; Matt 26:25; Mark 4:21

μήτῐς G3386 Adv (1×)

how much more, used in a fortiori arguments moving from lesser to greater

This adverbial phrase serves in comparative reasoning, establishing an argument from the lesser case to the greater. In 1 Corinthians 6:3, Paul employs it to reason that if believers will judge angels, how much more ordinary life matters. The multilingual glosses capture the comparative force (Spanish cuánto más, French combien plus, German geschweige denn). This rhetorical device appears frequently in rabbinic argumentation and throughout Scripture, drawing inevitable conclusions from accepted premises.

(1×) Paul deploys this comparative particle in 1 Corinthians 6:3 to advance his argument against believers taking disputes to secular courts. The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly express escalation (how much more, all the more). The logic moves from the greater dignity (judging angels) to the lesser application (everyday matters): if believers are competent for the greater eschatological judgment, surely they can handle mundane civil disputes. The phrase drives home the incongruity of their current practice. MORE AND GREATER en: how-much-more | es: ¡Cuánto-más | fr: combien-plus | de: geschweige-denn 1Cor 6:3

μήτῐς G3387

anyone, anything (indefinite, = μηδείς in old/Cretan Greek); in questions, imperatives, wishes, after fear/doubt

The old Greek and Cretan form for μηδείς ('no one'), this indefinite pronoun appears in Homer and Cretan inscriptions. As an adverb (μή τι), it accompanies imperatives and optative wishes. After verbs of fear or doubt, it introduces apprehensive clauses. In direct questions, μή τί σοι δοκῶ means 'do I seem to you...?' (expecting 'no'). The phrase μή τί γε means 'let alone' or 'much less,' expressing strong denial: 'not even worthy to be a soldier, let alone a commander of others.'

μήτρα G3388 N-GFS (2×)

womb, the uterus as the organ of conception and gestation

The anatomical term for the female reproductive organ where conception occurs and new life develops. In Luke 2:23, it refers to the consecration of firstborn males who 'open the womb.' In Romans 4:19, Paul speaks of Sarah's womb being 'deadened' (past childbearing age), highlighting the miraculous nature of Isaac's birth. The Greek captures both the physical reality and its theological significance in salvation history.

(2×) The maternal uterus, emphasizing its role in reproduction and birth. Both biblical occurrences appear in contexts emphasizing God's sovereignty over conception—Luke's reference to the law of consecration and Paul's reflection on Abraham's faith despite Sarah's barrenness. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'matriz/vientre,' French 'mère/sein,' German 'Mutterschoss') consistently points to the anatomical organ, though some languages broaden to 'maternal space.' WOMB AND BELLY

en: a-womb, womb | es: matriz, vientre | fr: mère, sein | de: Mutterschoss, μήτραν Luke 2:23; Rom 4:19

μητρ-ᾰλοίας G3389 N-DMP (1×)

one who strikes or murders his mother; a matricide

This compound noun designates someone who commits violence against their mother, particularly to the point of murder. In 1 Timothy 1:9-10, it appears in Paul's catalog of lawless behaviors for which the law was established. The multilingual glosses consistently identify matricides or mother-strikers (Spanish matricidas, French/German forms). Ancient moral codes universally condemned such violations of family order as representing the ultimate breakdown of natural affection and societal structure.

(1×) Paul includes mother-strikers in his vice list in 1 Timothy 1:9, exemplifying the lawless and rebellious people for whom the law was given. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly identifies those who strike or kill their mothers. The term appears paired with father-strikers, emphasizing violations of the fifth commandment. Such crimes represented the complete inversion of proper family honor, illustrating the depth of depravity the law addresses and from which the gospel rescues. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: mother-strikers | es: matricidas | fr: μητρολῴαις | de: Mutterschlaeger 1Tim 1:9

μητρό-πολις G3390

mother-state, metropolis (city in relation to her colonies)

A μητρόπολις is a 'mother-city' in relation to her colonies—Athens to the Ionians, Doris to the Peloponnesian Dorians, Thera to great cities founded from her, Corinth to Corcyra. The term captures the colonial relationship where one city founds another and retains a parental status. Metaphorically, it can mean 'source' or 'origin,' as when the brain is called the 'metropolis of the cold' or geometry is deemed the 'beginning and mother-city' of other sciences. Later usage extends it to mean any principal city.

εἷς G3391

one (numeral and emphatic); a single one, one alone; εἷς with feminine μία, neuter ἕν

The numeral 'one' serves both as a simple count and as emphasis: 'one single ruler let there be,' Homer declares. Strengthened forms like εἷς οἷος mean 'one alone.' The word can stress uniqueness, unity, or singularity. Its oblique forms (genitive ἑνός, dative ἑνί) continue from an Indo-European root related to Latin 'sem-' (as in 'simple'). The feminine μία comes from a different stem than the masculine/neuter, preserving ancient morphological complexity.

μῐαίνω G3392 V-ASP-3P (5×)

To defile, stain, or make ceremonially or morally unclean; to pollute or corrupt.

Evokes both ritual and moral contamination. The Jewish leaders refused to enter the Praetorium lest they 'be defiled' before Passover (John 18:28), illustrating its ceremonial force. But Paul transforms the concept: to the pure all things are pure, yet to the defiled nothing is pure (Titus 1:15). Hebrews warns against any root of bitterness that might 'defile' many (Heb 12:15), and Jude condemns those who 'defile' the flesh (Jude 1:8). The Spanish 'contaminan' and French 'souiller' both carry the visceral sense of staining something once clean.

(5×) To defile, stain, or render unclean, whether in ceremonial, moral, or spiritual terms. The Jewish authorities avoid the Praetorium to prevent ritual defilement before Passover (John 18:28). Paul extends the concept inward: the defiled mind and conscience render everything impure (Titus 1:15). The writer of Hebrews warns against a root of bitterness that defiles the community (Heb 12:15), and Jude denounces dreamers who defile the flesh (Jude 1:8). The German 'beflecken' (to stain, besmirch) captures the visceral image of moral pollution. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: be-defiled, defile, have-been-defiled | es: contaminados, contaminan, está-contaminada | fr: souillent,, souiller | de: beflecken John 18:28; Titus 1:15; Heb 12:15; Jude 1:8

μί-ασμα G3393 N-ANP (1×)

defilement, pollution; that which contaminates morally or ceremonially

This neuter noun denotes stain, pollution, or defilement, particularly in contexts of moral or religious contamination. In 2 Peter 2:20, it describes the corruptions of the world from which people escape through knowledge of Christ. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize defilement and contamination (Spanish contaminaciones). Classical usage includes pollution from murder or crime, the taint of guilt, and more generally any defiling influence. The term carries both the sense of contaminating agent and resulting state of impurity.

(1×) Second Peter 2:20 employs the plural form to describe the world's corrupting influences from which converts have escaped. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes contamination and defilement. The context warns about false teachers who, after escaping the world's defilements through Christ, become re-entangled and overcome. The term stresses the polluting, contaminating nature of worldly corruption—these are not mere external behaviors but defiling powers that stain and corrupt those who yield to them. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: defilements | es: contaminaciones | fr: μιάσματα | de: Befleckung 2Pet 2:20

μι-ασμός G3394 N-GMS (1×)

defilement, the act or state of being polluted or contaminated

This masculine noun closely parallels G3393, denoting the act or state of defilement and moral pollution. In 2 Peter 2:10, it characterizes those who walk according to the flesh in the lust of defilement. The multilingual evidence identifies impurity and defilement (Spanish impureza). While nearly synonymous with miasma, this term may emphasize the process or state of defilement more than the defiling agent. Both words belong to the semantic field of cultic and moral contamination prevalent in Hellenistic religious discourse.

(1×) Second Peter 2:10 uses this term to characterize the corruption driving false teachers—they walk in passionate defilement. The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize impurity and contamination. The phrase 'lust of defilement' suggests not merely lustful acts but desire characterized by its defiling, polluting quality. Such defilement represents the opposite of the holiness to which believers are called, marking these teachers as thoroughly contaminated by the very corruption from which the gospel rescues. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: of-defilement | es: de-impureza | fr: μιασμοῦ | de: Befleckung 2Pet 2:10

μίγμα G3395 N-ANS (1×)

a mixture, a compound combining multiple ingredients

This neuter noun denotes a mixture or compound, typically of substances blended together. In John 19:39, it describes Nicodemus's preparation for Jesus's burial—a mixture of myrrh and aloes weighing about seventy-five pounds. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify mixture or compound (Spanish mezcla, French mélange, German Gemisch). Classical usage includes mixed drugs, pigments, condiments, or amalgams. The term emphasizes the combined nature of the preparation rather than its individual components.

(1×) John 19:39 presents Nicodemus bringing a massive mixture of myrrh and aloes for Jesus's burial. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently renders mixture or compound. The extraordinary quantity (about seventy-five pounds) and the costly ingredients signal both Nicodemus's devotion and the honor due to Jesus. The mixture represents the blending of aromatic spices in proportions appropriate for royal burial, with the combined preparation far exceeding typical burial customs in both quantity and quality. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: a-mixture | es: mezcla | fr: mélange | de: Gemisch John 19:39

μείγνυμι G3396 V-AIA-3S (4×)

To mix or mingle one substance with another; to blend liquids or materials together.

A basic verb of physical mixing or blending, used in the New Testament for combining substances together. Its appearances are vivid and memorable: wine mixed with gall offered to Jesus on the cross (Matt 27:34), Pilate mingling the blood of Galilean worshippers with their sacrifices (Luke 13:1), fire mixed with blood raining from the sky (Rev 8:7), and a sea of glass mixed with fire before God's throne (Rev 15:2). The translations consistently reflect physical blending – Spanish 'mezclar,' French 'mêler,' German 'mischen' – all cognates of the same basic concept of combining disparate elements into one.

(4×) To mix, mingle, or blend one substance with another, whether liquids, solids, or symbolic elements. The cross-linguistic consistency is striking: Spanish 'mezclar,' French 'mêler,' and German 'mischen' all denote physical blending. In Matthew 27:34 wine is mixed with gall as a bitter draught for Jesus. Luke 13:1 uses it figuratively and grimly of Pilate mixing Galilean blood with their sacrifices. In Revelation 8:7 fire is mixed with blood in apocalyptic judgment, and in 15:2 a glassy sea is mixed with fire in a vision of heavenly splendor. MIXING WITH OIL

en: having-been-mixed, mixed | es: mezclado, mezclados, mezcló | fr: mêler | de: mischen, μεμιγμένον, ἔμιξεν Matt 27:34; Luke 13:1; Rev 8:7; Rev 15:2

μικρός G3397

small, little (in size, stature, age, or significance); σμικρός/μικρός with varied dialectal forms

The adjective for 'small' or 'little' covers physical size ('small in stature'), youth or insignificance, and can serve as reproach ('Kleigenes the small'). Comedy uses it hyperbolically: 'a very tiny little law-court.' The phrase 'small to see' means hard to see. It contrasts with μέγας throughout Greek literature. Dialectal variation between σμικρός and μικρός reflects regional pronunciation, with Attic inscriptions preserving the sigma initial. The word applies literally to physical objects and metaphorically to social standing.

μικρός G3398 Adj-AFS (46×)

Small, little; as adverb 'a little while'; substantivized as 'little ones'—the humble or insignificant

Mikros moves fluidly between physical smallness and social insignificance across the New Testament. As a neuter adverb (mikron), it marks brief intervals of time—Jesus tells the disciples 'a little while and you will not see me' (John 16:16), a phrase repeated with haunting rhythm. As a simple adjective, it describes the mustard seed as the 'smallest' of seeds (Matt 13:32). Most theologically rich is the substantivized plural: 'these little ones' (Matt 18:6, 10, 14), where Jesus elevates the vulnerable and lowly to the center of God's concern. Spanish pequeños and German klein hold steady across all three uses, but the underlying sense shifts dramatically.

1. a little while (temporal/quantitative adverb) (22×) The neuter accusative mikron functioning adverbially to mean 'a little while' or 'a short time.' Concentrated heavily in the Johannine Farewell Discourse (John 7:33; 13:33; 14:19; 16:16–19), where Jesus speaks of his imminent departure and return. Also appears in the Synoptics for brief durations (Matt 26:39, 73; Mark 14:35, 70). The temporal use transforms a spatial adjective into a measure of time. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: a-little, a-little-while, little | es: Poco, pequeña, poca | fr: petit | de: klein Matt 26:39; Matt 26:73; Mark 14:35; Mark 14:70; John 7:33

2. small in size or degree (13×) The basic adjectival sense denoting physical smallness or low degree. The mustard seed is the 'smallest' of all seeds (Matt 13:32; Mark 4:31). John the Baptist is told that the 'least' in the kingdom is greater than he (Matt 11:11; Luke 7:28). James the 'less' or 'younger' is distinguished from the other James (Mark 15:40). French petit and German klein render this sense directly. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: a-small, least, little | es: a-pequeño, menor, más-pequeño | fr: petit | de: klein Matt 11:11; Matt 13:32; Mark 4:31; Mark 15:40; Luke 7:28

3. little ones (substantivized: lowly/insignificant people) (11×) The substantivized plural 'little ones' (hoi mikroi, ton mikron) referring to humble, vulnerable, or seemingly insignificant members of the faith community. Jesus warns against despising 'these little ones' (Matt 18:10) and declares that causing one of them to stumble warrants a millstone around the neck (Matt 18:6; Mark 9:42). The term carries protective tenderness—God's special regard for those the world overlooks. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: little-ones, of-small, small | es: de-pequeños, pequeños, pequeños, | fr: petit | de: klein Matt 10:42; Matt 18:6; Matt 18:10; Matt 18:14; Mark 9:42

G3399 N-GFS (3×)

Miletus, an ancient Greek city on the western coast of Asia Minor

Miletus was a major port city in Caria, on the Aegean coast of what is now Turkey. Paul stopped there on his final journey to Jerusalem, summoning the Ephesian elders for a poignant farewell address (Acts 20:15, 17). Later, he left Trophimus sick there (2 Tim 4:20). The city had a rich history as a center of Greek philosophy and trade. The name appears consistently transliterated across languages: 'Milētos,' 'Milet,' reflecting the proper noun status.

(3×) The ancient Greek city of Miletus in Caria (western Asia Minor), a significant port on Paul's missionary journeys. Acts 20:15, 17 record Paul's stop there and his emotional meeting with the Ephesian elders. 2 Timothy 4:20 mentions Trophimus being left sick there. The consistent transliteration across Spanish, French, and German ('Milētos,' 'Milet') preserves the proper geographical name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Miletos, Milētos | es: Milētos, Mílētos | fr: Milet | de: Milet, Μίλητον, Μιλήτου Acts 20:15; Acts 20:17; 2Tim 4:20

μῐλῐ́-ον G3400 N-ANS (1×)

a Roman mile, a unit of distance equal to about 1,000 paces or 4,860 feet

This neuter noun represents the Roman mile (mille passus), a standard unit of distance in the ancient world. In Matthew 5:41, Jesus uses it in his teaching about going beyond legal requirements—if someone compels you to go one mile, go two. The multilingual glosses consistently identify the mile as a distance measure (Spanish milla, French mille). The Roman mile was slightly shorter than the modern statute mile, measuring approximately 4,860 feet. Jesus's teaching assumes the forced labor Roman soldiers could legally impose on civilians.

(1×) Matthew 5:41 employs this distance measure in Jesus's radical ethic of loving generosity. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly identifies the mile as a unit of measurement. The context addresses Roman soldiers' legal right to compel civilians to carry their equipment for one mile—a resented imposition. Jesus transforms this forced service into voluntary discipleship: instead of resentful minimal compliance, his followers should offer double the required distance, demonstrating grace that exceeds the law's demands. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: mile | es: milla | fr: mille | de: μίλιον Matt 5:41

μῑμ-έομαι G3401 V-PMM/P-2S (4×)

To imitate, follow as a model; to pattern one's conduct after another's example

A middle-voice verb urging believers to reproduce in their own lives the conduct they observe in godly leaders. In 2 Thessalonians 3:7-9, Paul offers his own labor as the pattern to copy, while Hebrews 13:7 extends the call to imitating the faith of past shepherds. The negative counterpart in 3 John 1:11 warns against imitating evil, showing the word carries no inherent moral direction — it is the model chosen that determines the outcome. Across languages the translations converge on 'imitate' (Spanish imitad, German nachahmen), confirming a single, stable sense of deliberate behavioral replication.

(4×) To deliberately pattern one's behavior after another person's example, whether positively or negatively. Paul invokes this sense when he tells the Thessalonians to imitate his self-supporting labor (2 Thess 3:7, 9), and Hebrews 13:7 urges imitating the faith of departed leaders. In 3 John 1:11 the same verb warns against copying what is evil, showing the word is morally neutral — the object determines the ethical weight. Spanish imitad and German nachahmen both capture this single core meaning of conscious emulation. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: imitate, to-imitate | es: imitad, imitar, imites | fr: nachahmen | de: nachahmen 2Thess 3:7; 2Thess 3:9; Heb 13:7; 3John 1:11

μῑμ-ητής G3402 N-NMP (6×)

Imitator; one who follows the example or pattern of another, especially in faith and conduct.

Mimetes calls believers to active emulation of worthy models. Paul boldly urges the Corinthians to 'be imitators of me' (1 Corinthians 4:16), then clarifies the chain: 'Be imitators of me, as I am of Christ' (1 Corinthians 11:1). The concept extends upward to God himself in Ephesians 5:1, where believers are called to imitate God as beloved children. The Thessalonians became imitators of both the apostles and the Lord through their joyful reception of the word amid suffering (1 Thessalonians 1:6), and of the Judean churches in enduring persecution (1 Thessalonians 2:14). The word carries the force of intentional, devoted patterning of one's life.

imitators (6×) One who deliberately follows and reproduces the example, conduct, or pattern of another. Paul uses this term to establish chains of imitation: believers imitate Paul, who imitates Christ (1 Cor 4:16; 11:1), and ultimately imitate God himself (Eph 5:1). The Thessalonians are praised for becoming imitators of the apostles and the Lord by receiving the word with joy despite affliction (1 Thess 1:6) and of the Judean churches by enduring similar persecution (1 Thess 2:14). Hebrews 6:12 extends the concept to imitating those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Spanish 'imitadores,' French 'imitateur,' and German 'Nachahmer' all preserve the active, intentional quality of the Greek, emphasizing that this is not passive resemblance but purposeful emulation. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: imitators | es: Imitadores, imitadores | fr: Nachahmer, imitateur | de: Nachahmer 1Cor 4:16; 1Cor 11:1; Eph 5:1; 1Thess 1:6; 1Thess 2:14

μιμνήσκω G3403 V-ASP-1S (23×)

To remember or recall to mind; actively recollecting persons, events, or truths, or being passively brought to remembrance.

Rooted in the act of calling something back to awareness, this verb covers the full arc from deliberate recollection to divine passive remembrance. Spanish distinguishes actively remembering — acordarse, acuérdate (remember!) — from being remembered with fue recordada. Twenty-one of twenty-three occurrences are active: Peter 'remembered' Jesus' words (Matt 26:75), God 'remembered' his mercy (Luke 1:54). Two striking passive uses appear when Cornelius' prayers 'were remembered' before God (Acts 10:31) and Babylon 'was remembered' for judgment (Rev 16:19).

1. remember, recall to mind (21×) To actively recall, recollect, or be mindful of a person, event, or divine promise. Spanish acordarse and German gedenket confirm deliberate mental retrieval. Peter remembering Jesus' prediction (Matt 26:75), God remembering his mercy to Abraham's seed (Luke 1:54, 72), and Jesus' instruction to remember at the altar (Matt 5:23) anchor twenty-one occurrences. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: I-remembered, I-will-remember, having-remembered | es: acordaos, acuérdate, me-acordaré | fr: se-souvenir, souvenez-vous | de: erinnert-sich, gedenket, sich-erinnern Matt 5:23; Matt 26:75; Matt 27:63; Luke 1:54; Luke 1:72

2. be remembered, be called to mind (2×) To be remembered or called to mind in a passive construction, often as a divine passive where God is the implied agent. Spanish fue recordada and fueron recordadas mark this voice distinctly. Cornelius' prayers 'were remembered' before God (Acts 10:31) and great Babylon 'was remembered' before God to receive judgment (Rev 16:19) — only two occurrences, but theologically rich. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: was-remembered, were-remembered | es: fue-recordada, fueron-recordadas | fr: se-souvenir | de: erinnert-sich, sich-erinnern Acts 10:31; Rev 16:19

μῑσ-έω G3404 V-PSA-3S (41×)

Hate, detest; to feel deep hostility, or in Semitic idiom, to love less by comparison

The standard Greek verb for hatred, miseo carries both intense emotional force and a distinctive Semitic comparative usage in the Gospels. Jesus' command to 'hate' father and mother (Luke 14:26) draws on a Hebrew idiom where hatred expresses relative preference rather than emotional animosity – Matthew 6:24's 'hate one and love the other' illustrates this comparative pattern. The passive forms ('you will be hated by all nations,' Matt 24:9) describe the cost of discipleship. French 'haïr' and German 'hassen' translate uniformly, while Spanish alternates between 'aborrecer' (abhor) and 'odiar' (hate).

1. hate, detest, abhor (35×) Active, intense hostility or aversion toward a person, group, or behavior. This covers the full emotional range from personal animosity (Matt 5:43-44, 'love your enemies') to the world's hatred of Christ and his followers (John 15:18-25; 1 John 3:13). Spanish alternates between 'aborrecer' (to abhor, implying moral revulsion) and 'odiar' (to hate), reflecting nuance within this sense. The Johannine writings particularly develop hatred as a theological marker of opposition to God. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: hated, hates, hating | es: aborrece, aborrecerá, ha-odiado | fr: haïr | de: hassen, hasst Matt 5:43; Matt 5:44; Matt 6:24; Matt 24:10; Luke 1:71

2. be hated, be detested (5×) The passive experience of being hated, especially as a mark of faithful discipleship. Jesus warns his followers 'you will be hated by all nations on account of my name' (Matt 24:9; Mark 13:13; Luke 21:17). The shift from active to passive reframes hatred as something endured rather than exercised. Revelation 18:2 extends this to Babylon becoming a 'hated' place of desolation. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: being-hated, hated | es: odiada, odiados | fr: haïr | de: hassen, hasst Matt 10:22; Matt 24:9; Mark 13:13; Luke 21:17; Rev 18:2

3. love less, disregard comparatively (1×) A Semitic comparative idiom where 'hate' means to love less or to deprioritize in comparison. John 7:7 says 'the world cannot hate you' – contrasting the world's comfort with the disciples versus its hostility toward Jesus. Genesis 29:31 (LXX miseo for Hebrew sane') and Luke 14:26 provide the classic Old Testament background: Jacob 'hated' Leah means he loved her less than Rachel. This non-emotional, contrastive usage is essential for avoiding misreadings of Jesus' radical discipleship demands. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: to-hate | es: odiar | fr: haïr | de: hassen John 7:7

μισθαπο-δοσία G3405 N-AFS (3×)

recompense, reward, the payment or consequence due for actions

This term denotes the recompense or reward that follows action, whether positive or negative. Hebrews warns that Old Covenant transgressions received 'just recompense' (Heb 2:2). The same book encourages confidence in God's promise, which brings 'great reward' (Heb 10:35). Moses endured, looking to the coming 'recompense' rather than Egypt's treasures (Heb 11:26). The word carries both judicial consequence and gracious reward. Spanish 'recompensa/retribución' and French 'récompense' capture this dual sense of payment and reward.

(3×) The recompense, reward, or payment that follows conduct—either as penalty for disobedience or reward for faithfulness. Hebrews uses μισθαποδοσία for both: the just penalty for violating the law (2:2), the great reward for enduring faith (10:35), and the future recompense Moses anticipated (11:26). The term is morally neutral regarding valence but emphasizes the certainty of consequence. Spanish distinguishes 'recompensa' (reward) and 'retribución' (retribution), while the Greek term covers both. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: recompense, reward | es: recompensa, retribución | fr: récompense | de: Belohnung Heb 2:2; Heb 10:35; Heb 11:26

μισθαπο-δότης G3406 N-NMS (1×)

one who pays wages or gives reward; a rewarder

This compound masculine noun designates one who distributes payment, wages, or reward. In Hebrews 11:6, it describes God as the rewarder of those who diligently seek Him. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify the rewarder or one who remunerates (Spanish remunerador, French/German Belohner). The term combines the root for wages (misthos) with the agent suffix, creating the image of God as one who faithfully compensates those who earnestly pursue relationship with Him.

(1×) Hebrews 11:6 declares that anyone approaching God must believe He exists and acts as rewarder of those seeking Him. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently renders rewarder or recompenser. This characterization of God counters both deism (God exists but doesn't engage) and works-righteousness (reward earned by merit). Instead, it presents God as one who freely rewards the diligent pursuit of relationship with Him—not payment for achievement but gracious reward for faith-driven seeking. WAGES AND REWARD

en: rewarder | es: remunerador | fr: Belohner | de: Belohner Heb 11:6

μίσθιος G3407 Adj-GMP (3×)

hired worker, a laborer working for wages

These are wage laborers, employees rather than slaves or family members. In Jesus' parable, the prodigal son realizes even his father's 'hired workers' have food to spare (Luke 15:17), and he resolves to ask to become one (Luke 15:19, 21). The term marks a social status: not a son, not a slave, but a paid worker. This middle status becomes the prodigal's hoped-for re-entry point. Spanish 'jornaleros' (day laborers) and French 'mercenaire' (mercenary) capture the wage-for-work relationship.

(3×) A hired laborer or day worker who receives wages, occupying a social position between slave and family member. In Luke 15:17, 19, 21 (the prodigal son parable), μίσθιος represents the status the son hopes to attain—better than destitution, lower than sonship. The term emphasizes wage-based employment rather than familial or ownership relations. Spanish 'jornaleros' highlights the daily-wage aspect common in agrarian economies. HIRED WORKER

en: hired-workers | es: jornaleros | fr: mercenaire | de: μίσθιοι, μισθίων Luke 15:17; Luke 15:19; Luke 15:21

μισθός G3408 N-GMS (29×)

Wages, reward, recompense — payment earned for labor or divine recompense for conduct

The noun μισθός covers the full arc from earthly paychecks to heavenly rewards. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus warns that those who practice piety for human applause 'have received their reward in full' (Matt 6:2, 5), while those who endure persecution store up a great μισθός in heaven (Matt 5:12). The same word names the day-laborer's wage in the parable of the vineyard workers (Matt 20:8) and the betrayal-price Judas received (Acts 1:18). Spanish splits the semantic field neatly: galardón for divine reward, salario for earthly wage.

1. reward (19×) The dominant sense: reward or recompense, whether heavenly or eschatological, given by God in response to faithfulness, righteousness, or suffering. Jesus uses it repeatedly in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt 5:12, 46; 6:1-6) and Paul invokes it for apostolic labor (1 Cor 3:8, 14). Multilingual glosses converge on reward vocabulary — Spanish galardón/recompensa, French salaire (in its older 'recompense' meaning), German Lohn — distinguishing this from mere monetary payment. WAGES AND REWARD

en: a-reward, reward | es: galardón, recompensa, recompensa? | fr: salaire | de: Lohn Matt 5:12; Matt 5:46; Matt 6:1; Matt 6:2; Matt 6:5

2. wage (9×) The concrete economic sense: wages or pay earned for labor or service. The laborer is worthy of his μισθός (Luke 10:7, 1 Tim 5:18), the vineyard owner settles μισθός at day's end (Matt 20:8), and Paul says the worker's μισθός is reckoned as what is owed, not a gift (Rom 4:4). Spanish salario and English 'wages' mark this as a transactional, contractual payment distinct from gracious reward. Acts 1:18 applies it darkly to Judas's blood money. WAGES AND REWARD

en: wage, wages | es: salario | fr: salaire | de: Lohn Matt 20:8; Luke 10:7; John 4:36; Acts 1:18; Rom 4:4

3. for wages (1×) A rare adverbial or purposive usage meaning 'for wages' or 'for the sake of payment,' appearing only in Jude 1:11 where false teachers rush headlong into Balaam's error 'for wages.' The prepositional construction highlights mercenary motive rather than the payment itself. Multilingual glosses — Spanish por-paga, German für-Lohn — confirm the purposive framing that sets this apart from the noun's standard uses. WAGES AND REWARD

en: for-wages | es: por-paga | fr: pour-salaire | de: für-Lohn Jude 1:11

μισθ-όω G3409 V-ANM (2×)

to hire, engage workers for wages or rent property for payment

The act of entering into a labor or rental agreement for payment. Both New Testament occurrences appear in Jesus' parable of the workers in the vineyard (Matthew 20:1, 7), where a landowner goes out at different hours to hire laborers. The verb emphasizes the commercial transaction—labor exchanged for an agreed wage—which becomes the framework for Jesus' teaching about God's generosity and the kingdom's surprising economics.

(2×) To engage laborers for wages, contract for services. The parable context in Matthew 20 shows the landowner actively seeking and hiring workers throughout the day. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the contractual nature: Spanish 'contratar' (to contract), French 'louer' (to rent/hire), German 'Lohn' (wage). The verb carries commercial precision—this is not volunteering but wage labor, making Jesus' equal payment to all workers theologically provocative. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: hired, to-hire | es: a-contratar, nos-contrató | fr: louer | de: Lohn Matt 20:1; Matt 20:7

μίσθ-ωμα G3410 N-DNS (1×)

rented dwelling, lodging obtained by payment; hired quarters

This neuter noun denotes something rented or hired, particularly dwelling space secured by payment. In Acts 28:30, it describes Paul's living situation in Rome—he remained two whole years in his own rented quarters. The multilingual glosses identify rented house or dwelling (Spanish casa alquilada, French habitation). Classical usage includes contract price, rent payments, or hired property. Luke's specification emphasizes Paul's self-supported arrangement even under house arrest.

(1×) Acts 28:30 concludes Luke's narrative with Paul dwelling in his own rented quarters in Rome for two years. The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the rented or hired nature of the dwelling. The detail indicates Paul's arrangement: though under guard, he secured and paid for his own lodging rather than being confined in prison. This setting enabled him to receive all who came and proclaim the kingdom with boldness, making his rented dwelling a base for gospel ministry. WAGES AND REWARD

en: rented-quarters | es: casa-alquilada | fr: habitation | de: μισθώματι Acts 28:30

μισθ-ωτός G3411 N-GMP (3×)

hired servant, hireling, one who works for pay rather than ownership or loyalty

A hireling is someone who works for wages rather than out of ownership or devotion. Mark records that James and John left their father 'with the hired servants' (Mark 1:20). Jesus contrasts the good shepherd, who owns the sheep, with the hired hand who flees when danger comes because 'he is a hired hand and cares nothing for the sheep' (John 10:12, 13). The term implies mercenary motivation—present for pay, absent when costly. The consistent translations—'asalariado,' 'Mietling,' 'mercenaire'—emphasize wage-based, non-committed labor.

(3×) A hired servant or wage-laborer, contrasted with owners or those with intrinsic commitment. Mark 1:20 neutrally mentions hired workers on Zebedee's boat. John 10:12, 13 uses μισθωτός pejoratively for the hireling shepherd who abandons sheep in danger, caring only for wages. The term highlights mercenary motivation versus ownership or love. German 'Mietling' and French 'mercenaire' capture the negative connotation of hired-but-uncommitted service. HIRED WORKER

en: a-hired-man, hired-man, hired-workers | es: asalariado, jornaleros | fr: mercenaire | de: Mietling Mark 1:20; John 10:12; John 10:13

Μιτυλήνη G3412 N-AFS (1×)

Mytilene, the principal city of the island of Lesbos in the Aegean Sea

This proper noun designates the chief city of Lesbos, an important port on Paul's journey to Jerusalem. In Acts 20:14, Luke records their arrival at Mytilene as part of the island-hopping voyage from Troas. The multilingual evidence simply transliterates the place name. Mytilene was a significant cultural and commercial center in the ancient Aegean, known for its poets and strategic harbor. The stop there fits the typical coastal navigation pattern of ancient Mediterranean travel.

(1×) Acts 20:14 marks Mytilene as a waypoint in Paul's urgent voyage to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost. The cross-linguistic glosses preserve the proper name through transliteration. The city served as a natural overnight harbor for ships sailing down the Asian coast. Luke's precise geographical notation reflects his characteristic attention to travel details, documenting the systematic progress from city to city as Paul hastened toward Jerusalem, unaware of the chains awaiting him there. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Mitylēnē | es: Mitilēnē | fr: Mitylène | de: Μιτυλήνην Acts 20:14

Μιχαήλ G3413 N-NMS (2×)

Michael, the archangel whose name means 'Who is like God?'

The proper name of a principal angelic being, mentioned in both Jude 9 and Revelation 12:7. The Hebrew etymology poses a rhetorical question implying God's incomparability. In Jude, Michael disputes with Satan over Moses' body, showing restraint even in conflict. In Revelation, he leads angelic forces against the dragon. The name itself is a confession of monotheism—no created being, however exalted, compares to the Creator.

(2×) The archangel Michael, a chief angelic warrior and defender. Daniel 12:1 (Old Testament background) identifies him as the protector of Israel. The New Testament passages show him in cosmic conflict—disputing over Moses (Jude) and warring against the dragon (Revelation). Transliterations across languages preserve the Hebrew name with minor phonetic variations (Michaél in Spanish, Michaël in French), recognizing it as a proper name carrying theological weight. ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: Michael, Michaël | es: Michaél | fr: Michael, Michaël | de: Michael Jude 1:9; Rev 12:7

μνᾶ G3414 N-NFS (9×)

Mina; an ancient unit of weight and currency equivalent to about 100 drachmas, used in Jesus' parable of the talents.

A Semitic loanword (Hebrew maneh) denoting a unit of weight and monetary value equal to roughly 100 drachmas or about four months' wages for a laborer. In the NT, it appears only in Jesus' Parable of the Minas (Luke 19:11-27), where a nobleman distributes ten minas among ten servants before departing. Unlike the larger 'talents' in Matthew 25, the mina is a more modest sum, making the servants' faithfulness with small amounts all the more pointed. Spanish 'mina' and French 'mine' preserve the Semitic term unchanged.

(9×) An ancient monetary unit of considerable but not extraordinary value, roughly 100 drachmas or about four months of a laborer's wages. The word is a Semitic borrowing (cf. Hebrew maneh), and translations across languages simply transliterate it: Spanish 'mina,' French 'mine,' German 'Mine.' It appears exclusively in Luke 19:13-25 in Jesus' parable where ten servants each receive one mina to invest during their master's absence. The relatively modest sum – compared to the enormous 'talent' of Matthew 25 – underscores that faithfulness in small things reveals fitness for greater responsibility. SILVER AND MONEY to be mindful of, remember (with genitive); to woo, court a bride

en: mina, minas | es: mina, minas | fr: mine | de: Mine Luke 19:13; Luke 19:16; Luke 19:18

μνάομαι G3415

This verb primarily means 'to be mindful of' or 'remember,' taking a genitive object: 'they were not mindful of war,' or 'when I remember him.' It can also mean 'to turn one's mind to' something. A secondary meaning, not found in Homer but common later, is 'to woo for one's bride' or 'court.' The verb captures both mental attention (remembering, being mindful) and romantic pursuit (wooing). The range from memory to courtship reflects the active, intentional nature of both actions.

Μνάσων G3416 N-DMS (1×)

Mnason, a Cypriot disciple who provided hospitality to Paul in Jerusalem

This masculine proper noun identifies a specific early believer who hosted Paul's company. In Acts 21:16, Luke describes Mnason as an early disciple from Cyprus with whom Paul's group would lodge in Jerusalem. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the personal name. The description 'early disciple' suggests Mnason was among the first believers, possibly converted at Pentecost or shortly after. His Cypriot origin links him to Barnabas's homeland.

(1×) Acts 21:16 introduces Mnason as the Jerusalem host for Paul's delegation. The cross-linguistic evidence preserves the proper name. Luke's details are significant: an old/early disciple from Cyprus, suggesting decades of faithfulness. The prearranged hospitality indicates planning for Paul's arrival and possibly Mnason's substantial resources to house the entire traveling party. His Cypriot connection may explain the arrangement—fellow islanders supporting one another in the network of early believers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mnasōn | es: Mnásōn | fr: Mnason | de: Μνάσωνί Acts 21:16

μνεία G3417 N-DFS (7×)

Remembrance, mention; the act of calling someone to mind, especially in prayer; prayerful recollection of a person or community.

Mneia denotes the act of bringing someone or something to mind, and in the NT it occurs almost exclusively in the phrase 'making mention of you in my prayers.' Paul uses it as a hallmark of his pastoral warmth, assuring the Romans (1:9), Ephesians (1:16), Philippians (1:3), and Thessalonians (1 Thess 1:2, 3:6) that they live in his prayerful memory. The word bridges remembrance and speech: to make mneia is both to remember and to name someone before God. German 'Gedenken' and French 'memoire' capture this blend of interior recollection and outward expression.

remembrance / mention (calling to mind) (7×) The act of remembering or mentioning someone, typically in the context of intercessory prayer. In Pauline usage, mneia appears in a formulaic construction ('making mention of you in my prayers') that combines genuine affection with liturgical habit. Romans 1:9 and Ephesians 1:16 show Paul assuring distant congregations that they occupy his thoughts before God. In 1 Thess 3:6, Timothy reports that the Thessalonians likewise hold 'good remembrance' of Paul. The convergence of Spanish 'memoria/mención,' French 'mémoire,' and German 'Gedenken' shows the word naturally straddles the line between interior memory and verbal mention. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE en: mention, remembrance | es: memoria, mención, recuerdo | fr: Gedenken, mémoire | de: Gedenken Rom 1:9; Eph 1:16; Phil 1:3; 1Thess 1:2; 1Thess 3:6

μνῆμα G3418 N-DNS (8×)

A tomb, sepulchre, or burial monument; a place prepared for interring the dead, especially a rock-hewn chamber.

Mnema comes from the root of memory (mnaomai, to remember) — a tomb is, at its etymological heart, a memorial. In classical Greek, the word could refer to any monument or remembrance, but in the NT it narrows to burial places: the Gerasene demoniac living among the tombs (Mark 5:3, 5:5), the newly hewn tomb where Jesus is laid (Luke 23:53), and David's tomb still present in Jerusalem (Acts 2:29). Spanish 'sepulcro' and German 'Grab' both capture the funerary specificity that distinguishes mnema from the broader classical usage.

tomb / sepulchre (burial place) (8×) A burial place or sepulchre, typically a rock-cut chamber or monument for the dead. In the Gospels, the word appears for both the tombs inhabited by the Gerasene demoniac (Mark 5:3, 5:5; Luke 8:27) and the tomb where Jesus was buried (Luke 23:53, 24:1). In Acts 2:29, Peter references David's tomb as still visible in Jerusalem. The etymological link to memory (from mnaomai) underlies the word's original sense as a 'memorial,' though the NT usage focuses exclusively on physical burial locations. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: a-tomb, tomb, tombs | es: sepulcro, sepulcros, tumba | fr: tombeau | de: Grab, μνήμασιν, μνήματι Mark 5:3; Mark 5:5; Luke 8:27; Luke 23:53; Luke 24:1

μνημ-εῖον G3419 N-DNP (40×)

A tomb, burial monument, or memorial for the dead

In the New Testament, this noun almost exclusively refers to burial places – rock-cut tombs where bodies were laid. Joseph of Arimathea's new tomb (Matt 27:60) and the tombs that opened at the crucifixion (Matt 27:52) are central examples. Spanish splits between 'sepulcro' (burial vault) and 'tumba' (grave), while German 'Grab/Grabmal' preserves the connection to the older Greek sense of 'memorial.' In one pointed use (Matt 23:29), Jesus accuses the Pharisees of building 'monuments' to the prophets – the word's original memorial sense briefly resurfaces.

1. (32×) The primary singular sense: a specific tomb or burial place, typically a rock-hewn chamber. Joseph's tomb (Matt 27:60), the empty tomb at the resurrection (Matt 28:8), and Lazarus's tomb (John 11:38) all fall here. French 'tombeau,' Spanish 'sepulcro,' and German 'Grab' all denote a constructed burial space rather than a simple grave in the ground. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: a-tomb, tomb | es: sepulcro, tumba | fr: tombeau | de: Grab, Grabmal Matt 27:60; Matt 28:8; Mark 6:29; Mark 15:46

2. (7×) The plural collective sense: tombs as locations associated with the dead, uncleanness, or spiritual danger. The Gadarene demoniac dwelt 'among the tombs' (Matt 8:28; Mark 5:2), and the hidden tombs of Luke 11:44 defile those who walk over them unknowingly. Spanish 'sepulcros/tumbas' in the plural carries the collective-ominous tone present in these passages. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: tombs | es: sepulcros, tumbas | fr: tombeau | de: Grab, Grabmal Matt 8:28; Matt 27:52; Matt 27:53; Mark 5:2; Luke 11:44

3. (1×) A rare memorial-monument sense, closer to the word's classical Greek origin as 'remembrance.' In Matthew 23:29 Jesus denounces those who 'build the monuments of the prophets' – Spanish 'monumentos' and German 'Grab' hint at the commemorative rather than funerary function, recalling the word's etymological link to memory (mneme). TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: monuments | es: monumentos | fr: tombeau | de: Grab Matt 23:29

μνήμ-η G3420 N-AFS (1×)

memory, remembrance; the faculty or act of recalling

This feminine noun denotes memory, remembrance, or the mental faculty of recalling past events. In 2 Peter 1:15, Peter expresses his intention to ensure his readers will be able to recall these truths after his departure. The multilingual glosses identify memory and remembrance (Spanish memoria, French forms). Classical usage distinguishes this natural memory faculty from anamnesis (deliberate recollection). The term can refer both to the power of memory and to what is remembered.

(1×) Second Peter 1:15 shows Peter's pastoral concern that his readers maintain memory of essential truths after his death. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes remembrance and memorial. Peter's phrase suggests intentional effort to ensure ongoing recollection—not mere ability to remember but active practice of calling to mind these vital realities. The context implies his written letter serves as the means to secure this future remembrance when he is no longer present to remind them. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE

en: remembrance | es: memoria | fr: μνήμην | de: Erinnerung 2Pet 1:15

μνημον-εύω G3421 V-PIA-3S (21×)

To remember, recall to mind, be mindful of; to call past events, words, or persons back into active consciousness.

Expresses the active faculty of calling something back to mind, whether past events, the words of Jesus, or persons deserving of ongoing thought. Jesus commands it directly – 'Remember Lot's wife' (Luke 17:32) – and the disciples are urged to recall his teachings after his departure (John 15:20; 16:4). Paul repeatedly asks churches to 'remember' his labors and the words of the Lord (Acts 20:35; 1 Thess 2:9; 2 Tim 2:8). Hebrews uses it for recalling both suffering endured (Heb 10:32) and imprisoned believers who need solidarity (Heb 13:7). Spanish 'recordar/acordarse' and French 'se souvenir' both reflect the reflexive, self-directed quality of this mental act.

remember, recall to mind (21×) To call back to mind, recollect, or remain mindful of something – whether past events, the words of Jesus, or persons who deserve ongoing remembrance. Used as a direct command by Jesus ('Remember Lot's wife,' Luke 17:32), as apostolic exhortation to recall teachings and labors (John 15:20; 16:4; Acts 20:35; Gal 2:10; 1 Thess 2:9; 2 Tim 2:8), and in Hebrews for remembering both one's own past suffering (Heb 10:32) and imprisoned fellow believers (Heb 13:3, 7). Multilingual evidence – 'remember' (eng), 'recordar/acordarse' (spa), 'se souvenir' (fra), 'gedenken' (deu) – consistently reflects active, deliberate recall rather than mere passive recollection. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING en: Remember, remember, remembered | es: Acordaos, Recordad, Recordáis | fr: se-souvenir, souvenir | de: gedenken, μνημονεύετε, μνημονεύοντες Matt 16:9; Mark 8:18; Luke 17:32; John 15:20; John 16:4

μνημόσῠνον G3422 N-ANS (3×)

memorial, remembrance, something that preserves memory

A memorial is something done or given that preserves memory. Jesus says the woman's anointing will be told 'in memory of her' wherever the gospel is preached (Matt 26:13, Mark 14:9). Cornelius's prayers and alms have ascended 'as a memorial before God' (Acts 10:4) —God remembers. The term emphasizes preservation of memory through deed or offering. Spanish 'memorial/memoria' and French

'mémorial/souvenir' reflect both the commemorative act and the remembered status it creates.

(3×) A memorial or remembrance, an act or offering that causes someone to be remembered. In Matthew 26:13 and Mark 14:9, the woman's anointing becomes a perpetual μνημόσυνον told throughout gospel proclamation. In Acts 10:4, Cornelius's piety ascends as a memorial before God, securing divine attention. The Greek term emphasizes the function of preserving memory, whether human recollection or divine notice. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: a-memorial, memorial | es: memoria, memorial | fr: mémorial, souvenir | de: Gedaechtnis, μνημόσυνον Matt 26:13; Mark 14:9; Acts 10:4

μνηστ-εύω G3423 V-RPM/P-AFS (3×)
betrothed, engaged to be married Betrothal in Jewish culture was more binding than modern engagement—a legal commitment that required divorce to break. Mary was 'betrothed' to Joseph when found pregnant (Matt 1:18), and is called 'a virgin betrothed to a man named Joseph' (Luke 1:27). She traveled to Bethlehem 'with Mary, his betrothed' (Luke 2:5). The status was legally marriage-like but not yet consummated. The consistent translations—'desposada,' 'fiancée,' 'betrothed'—reflect this formal pre-marriage commitment phase.

(3×) Betrothed, formally engaged in a legally binding pre-marriage commitment. In Jewish law, betrothal (μνηστεύω) was the first stage of marriage, creating legal obligations though not yet cohabitation. All three NT occurrences describe Mary's betrothed status to Joseph (Matt 1:18, Luke 1:27, 2:5) at the time of Jesus' conception and birth. Spanish 'desposada' and French 'fiancée' capture the formal, binding nature of this relationship status. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT en: having-been-betrothed | es: desposada, habiendo-sido-desposada | fr: fiancée | de: μνηστευθείσης, ἐμνηστευμένην, ἐμνηστευμένῃ Matt 1:18; Luke 1:27; Luke 2:5

μογῐλάλος G3424 Adj-AMS (1×)
having difficulty speaking, speech-impaired; having a speech impediment
This compound adjective describes someone with impaired speech or difficulty speaking clearly. In Mark 7:32, people bring to Jesus a man who is deaf and speech-impaired, requesting healing. The multilingual glosses identify speech impediment or stammering (Spanish tartamudo, French bègue, German schwer redend). The term combines 'with difficulty' and 'speak,' depicting labored or impaired articulation. Such conditions were often linked to deafness in the ancient world.

(1×) Mark 7:32 presents a man both deaf and speech-impaired brought to Jesus for healing. The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the speech difficulty: stammering, impediment, speaking with difficulty. The pairing with deafness suggests the speech problem resulted from inability to hear and thus properly form words. Jesus's healing demonstrates his power over physical disability and fulfills Isaiah's prophecy that in Messiah's day the tongue of the mute would sing for joy. DEAF AND MUTE
en: speech-impaired | es: tartamudo | fr: bègue | de: schwer-redend Mark 7:32

μόγῐς G3425 Adv (1×)
scarcely, with difficulty; barely or hardly
This adverb expresses the idea of something achieved with difficulty, pain, or barely accomplished. In Luke 9:39, it describes the demon's reluctant departure from the afflicted boy—it seizes him and scarcely leaves him, bruising him in the process. The multilingual glosses emphasize difficulty and scarcity (Spanish difícilmente, French avec peine). Classical usage consistently conveys the sense of toil, hardship, or narrow margin in accomplishing something.

(1×) Luke 9:39 employs this adverb to describe the demon's resistant, violent departure from its victim. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes difficulty and reluctance: hardly, scarcely, with pain. The father's description stresses both the demon's destructive grip and its unwillingness to release the boy even temporarily—when it finally departs, it does so scarcely, reluctantly, and with maximum violence. The adverb intensifies the picture of demonic oppression that only divine power could fully break. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP en: scarcely | es: difícilmente | fr: avec-peine | de: μόγις Luke 9:39

μόδιος G3426 N-AMS (3×)
basket, bushel, a dry-measure container or vessel
The modius was a Roman dry measure, roughly equivalent to a peck or bushel. Jesus uses it as a household object in his teaching about light: no one lights a lamp and puts it 'under a basket' (Matt 5:15, Mark 4:21, Luke 11:33). The image is absurd—hiding light under a grain container. The point is about visibility and purpose. The term appears consistently as a container for hiding: 'almud' (Spanish), 'boisseau' (French), 'Scheffel' (German)—all grain-measure baskets.

(3×) A basket or bushel, specifically a dry-measure container (modius) used for grain. In all three occurrences (Matt 5:15, Mark 4:21, Luke 11:33), Jesus uses it as the absurd hiding place for a lamp—illustrating how disciples should not conceal their light. The Greek μόδιος is borrowed from Latin modius, a standard measure of about 8.75 liters. Spanish 'almud' and French 'boisseau' are equivalent traditional grain measures. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: basket | es: almud | fr: boisseau | de: Scheffel, μόδιον, μόδιον– Matt 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 11:33

ἐγώ G3427
I, first-person pronoun (emphatic/special forms; variant entry for G3165)
This entry duplicates G3165, representing additional forms or textual occurrences of the first-person pronoun ἐγώ. The strengthened form ἔγωγε ('I at least,' 'for my part') appears more frequently in Attic than in Homer. Dialectal variants include Doric ἐγώνγα and Boeotian ἰώνγα. The oblique cases continue to derive from a separate root: genitive ἐμοῦ (enclitic μου), with Ionic and Epic preserving older forms like ἐμέο and ἐμέθεν.

μοιχ-ᾰλίς G3428 N-AFS (7×)
An adulteress; figuratively, spiritually unfaithful to God — adulterous (of a generation)
The noun μοιχαλίς ('adulteress') carries a dual freight in the New Testament, both literal and metaphorical. In its figurative use — which is actually more frequent — Jesus denounces 'an adulterous and sinful generation' (Matt 12:39, 16:4, Mark 8:38), drawing on the deep prophetic tradition of Hosea, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel where Israel's unfaithfulness to God is depicted as marital betrayal. James echoes this when he addresses wayward believers as 'adulteresses' (Jas 4:4), calling friendship with the world spiritual infidelity. The literal sense appears in Paul's marriage analogy in Romans 7:3, where a woman who takes another husband while hers lives 'will be called an adulteress.'

1. adulterous (spiritually unfaithful) (4×) Used figuratively to characterize a generation or people as spiritually unfaithful to God, echoing the Old Testament prophetic metaphor of Israel as an unfaithful spouse. In Matt 12:39 and 16:4, Jesus calls the sign-seeking generation γενεὰ μοιχαλίς ('an adulterous generation'); in Mark 8:38 he warns against shame 'in this adulterous and sinful generation'; and in Jas 4:4 James addresses the spiritually wavering as μοιχαλίδες ('adulteresses'). Spanish 'adúltera,' French 'commettre l'adultere,' and German 'Ehebrecherin' all render the marital-betrayal image, though the referent is covenantal unfaithfulness rather than sexual sin. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY
en: Adulteresses, adulterous | es: adúltera, adúlteras | fr: commettre-l'adultère | de: Ehebrecherin, μοιχαλὶς Matt 12:39; Matt 16:4; Mark 8:38; Jas 4:4

2. adulteress (literal) (3×) A woman who commits literal, physical adultery by violating the marriage covenant. Paul deploys this sense in his legal analogy in Romans 7:3, arguing that a married woman who lives with another man while her husband is alive μοιχαλὶς χρηματίσει ('will be called an adulteress') — but if her husband dies, she is free. The same verse uses the word twice, once for the verdict and once for the condition. In 2 Pet 2:14 false teachers are described as having 'eyes full of an adulteress' (or 'adultery'), pointing to literal sexual corruption. Multilingual glosses — 'adulteress,' 'adúltera,' 'Ehebrecherin' — overlap with the figurative sense, but the legal and sexual context makes the literal meaning clear. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulteress, of-adulteress | es: adúltera, de-adúltera | fr: adultère, commettre-l'adultère | de: Ehebrecherin Rom 7:3; 2Pet 2:14

μοιχ-άω G3429 V-PIM-3S (5×)

To commit adultery; used of both men and women who break the marriage covenant through sexual unfaithfulness.

A form closely related to moicheuo but appearing in Jesus' teaching on divorce and remarriage. In the Sermon on the Mount and the later dialogue on divorce, Jesus declares that whoever divorces and remarries 'commits adultery,' applying this equally to husbands (Matt 5:32, 19:9; Mark 10:11) and wives (Mark 10:12). Every language surveyed translates with the same direct phrase: Spanish 'comete adulterio,' French 'commettre l'adultere,' German 'Ehebruch begehen.' The word carries unambiguous moral weight, naming the violation of the marriage covenant.

(5×) To commit adultery, specifically in the context of unlawful remarriage after divorce. Jesus uses this verb to declare that a man who divorces his wife and marries another commits adultery (Matt 19:9, Mark 10:11), and likewise a woman who does the same (Mark 10:12). In Matt 5:32 the wrongfully divorced woman is said to be caused to commit adultery. The uniform translation across languages — Spanish 'comete adulterio,' French 'commettre l'adultere' — reflects the directness and gravity of the term. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: commits-adultery | es: comete-adulterio | fr: commettre-l'adultère | de: Ehebruch-begehen, μοιχᾶται, μοιχᾶται› Matt 5:32; Matt 19:9; Mark 10:11; Mark 10:12

μοιχ-εία G3430 N-NFP (3×)

adultery, sexual unfaithfulness in marriage

Adultery is sexual betrayal within marriage, a violation of the seventh commandment. Jesus lists it among the evils that defile from within (Matt 15:19, Mark 7:21). John 8:3 records a woman 'caught in adultery.' The term appears both singular (the act) and plural (the practice or multiple instances). It's a paradigmatic moral violation in biblical ethics, breaking covenant fidelity. The universal translations —'adulterio,' 'adultère,' 'Ehebruch'—show cross-cultural recognition of this offense.

(3×) The act of adultery, sexual unfaithfulness within marriage. Jesus includes μοιχεία in his catalog of heart-evils that defile a person (Matt 15:19, Mark 7:21). John 8:3 narrates a woman caught in the very act. The term designates covenant-breaking sexual sin, one of the Ten Commandments. Across languages—Spanish 'adulterio,' French 'adultère,' German 'Ehebruch'—the moral category is universally recognized and consistently translated. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulteries, adultery | es: adulterio, adulterios | fr: adultère | de: Ehebruch, μοιχεῖαι Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21; John 8:3

μοιχ-εύω G3431 V-PIA-2S (15×)

To commit adultery; in the causative sense, to bring about or cause adultery to occur.

One of the gravest moral terms in the New Testament, μοιχεύω appears in Jesus' intensification of the Torah's prohibition: not only the physical act but even the lustful gaze constitutes adultery of the heart (Matt 5:27-28). The word recurs across the Synoptic Gospels in the context of the Decalogue's seventh commandment, with Spanish 'adulterar,' French 'commettre l'adultère,' and German 'Ehebruch begehen' all preserving the seriousness of covenant violation. Jesus' teaching on divorce (Matt 5:32) introduces a causative dimension — one who wrongly divorces a spouse 'causes her to be adulterated.'

1. commit adultery (14×) The standard sense of committing adultery, covering direct prohibitions (Matt 5:27; Mark 10:19), descriptions of those who commit it (Matt 5:28; Luke 16:18), and confessional acknowledgments. Across languages the translations are remarkably uniform — Spanish 'adultera/adulterar,' French 'commettre l'adultère,' German 'Ehebruch begehen' — reflecting the universal moral gravity of marital unfaithfulness. This sense spans active declarations, participial descriptions, and future prohibitions across 14 occurrences. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: commits-adultery, committed-adultery, committing-adultery | es: adultera, adulterar, adulterarás | fr: commettre-l'adultère | de: Ehebruch-begehen, bricht-Ehe Matt 5:27; Matt 5:28; Matt 19:18; Mark 10:19; Luke 16:18

2. cause to commit adultery (1×) A causative or indirect sense appearing in Matt 5:32, where the one who divorces his wife without valid grounds 'causes her to commit adultery' (μοιχευθῆναι, aorist passive infinitive). The passive morphology here carries causative force: the divorcing husband, not the woman, bears moral responsibility. Spanish 'cometer adulterio' and German 'bricht Ehe' in this context point to the induced, rather than voluntary, nature of the transgression — a crucial distinction in Jesus' divorce teaching. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: to-commit-adultery | es: cometer-adulterio | fr: commettre-l'adultère | de: bricht-Ehe Matt 5:32

μοιχός G3432 N-NMP (3×)

adulterer, one who commits adultery

An adulterer is one who commits sexual unfaithfulness in marriage. The Pharisee in Jesus' parable thanks God he's not like 'adulterers' (Luke 18:11). Paul warns that adulterers won't inherit God's kingdom (1 Cor 6:9). Hebrews declares that 'God will judge adulterers' (Heb 13:4). The term is consistently masculine but represents the category generally. The translations—'adúlteros,' 'Ehebrecher,' 'adultère'—uniformly designate those who violate marital fidelity.

(3×) An adulterer, one who commits adultery or sexual unfaithfulness in marriage. The term appears in moral catalogs (Luke 18:11's Pharisee contrasting himself, 1 Cor 6:9 listing those excluded from God's kingdom) and warnings (Heb 13:4 on divine judgment). The Greek μοιχός is grammatically masculine but functionally includes both sexes in the category of covenant-breakers. Universal translation as 'adulterer' across languages reflects the clear moral designation. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulterers | es: adúlteros | fr: adultère | de: Ehebrecher, μοιχοί Luke 18:11; 1Cor 6:9; Heb 13:4

μόλις G3433 Adv (6×)

Scarcely, with difficulty, barely; indicating that an action is accomplished only with great effort or narrow margin.

Molis conveys the sense that something happens only barely or with great difficulty. Luke favors this adverb, using it four times in Acts to describe situations where outcomes hung in the balance: the apostles barely restrained the crowd from sacrificing to them (Acts 14:18), the ship moved with difficulty along the coast of Crete (Acts 27:7-8), and the sailors could scarcely secure the ship's boat in the storm (Acts 27:16). Paul uses it theologically in Romans 5:7, noting that scarcely will someone die even for a righteous person, heightening by contrast the wonder of Christ's death for sinners.

(6×) With difficulty, scarcely, barely, indicating an action achieved only by narrow margin or great effort. In Acts, Luke uses molis repeatedly in nautical and crowd-control contexts: Paul and Barnabas could barely stop the Lycaonians from offering sacrifice (Acts 14:18), the ship sailed with difficulty past Cnidus (Acts 27:7), they barely reached Fair Havens (Acts 27:8), and the crew could scarcely secure the lifeboat in the storm (Acts 27:16). Paul's theological use in Romans 5:7 employs molis to underscore how rare it is for someone to die even for a good person, making God's love in Christ all the more astonishing. Spanish captures the range with 'apenas' (barely), 'condificultad' (with difficulty), and 'difícilmente' (hardly), while French 'à-peine' and German 'kaum' both emphasize the narrow margin involved. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP en: scarcely, with-difficulty | es: apenas, con-dificultad, difícilmente | fr: kaum, à-peine | de: kaum, μόλις Acts 14:18; Acts 27:7; Acts 27:8; Acts 27:16; Rom 5:7

Μολόχ G3434 N-GMS (1×)

Moloch, the Ammonite deity to whom children were sacrificed

This indeclinable proper noun designates the pagan deity worshiped by the Ammonites, associated with child sacrifice. In Acts 7:43, Stephen quotes Amos 5:26, condemning Israel's apostasy in carrying Moloch's image during the wilderness period. The name is a deliberate vocalization substituting the Hebrew word for 'shame' for the vowels of 'king' (melek). The multilingual evidence simply transliterates this divine name. Worship of Moloch represented one of Israel's gravest idolatrous corruptions.

(1×) Stephen's speech in Acts 7:43 references Moloch as evidence of Israel's persistent idolatry even during the foundational wilderness period. The cross-linguistic glosses preserve the proper divine name through transliteration. The charge is devastating: while claiming exclusive devotion to Yahweh, Israel simultaneously carried images of this detestable deity associated with child sacrifice. Stephen uses this historical apostasy to explain his generation's resistance to the Holy Spirit—a pattern extending from wilderness to Christ's rejection. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: Moloch | es: Molóch | fr: Moloch | de: Μολὸχ Acts 7:43

μολύνω G3435 V-AIA-3P (3×)

defile, stain, pollute, make ritually or morally unclean

To defile is to make unclean, either ritually or morally. Paul speaks of those whose weak conscience 'is defiled' by eating idol-food (1 Cor 8:7). Jesus commends the few in Sardis who 'have not defiled their garments' (Rev 3:4). The 144,000 are those 'who have not defiled themselves with women' (Rev 14:4). The term carries both ritual purity and moral integrity connotations. Spanish translations vary—'contaminada,' 'mancharon,' 'se contaminaron'—all conveying pollution or staining.

(3×) To defile, stain, or pollute, making ritually or morally unclean. In 1 Corinthians 8:7, it's the defiling of conscience through compromised eating. In Revelation 3:4 and 14:4, it's moral/sexual purity: not defiling garments or defiling oneself with immorality. The Greek μολύνω covers both ceremonial contamination and moral corruption. German 'beflecken' (to stain) and French 'souiller' (to soil) capture the image of pollution. RITUAL DEFILEMENT en: defiled, is-defiled, were-defiled | es: es-contaminada, mancharon, se-contaminaron | fr: beflecken, souiller | de: beflecken 1Cor 8:7; Rev 3:4; Rev 14:4

μολ-υσμός G3436 N-GMS (1×)

defilement, pollution; moral or spiritual contamination

This masculine noun denotes moral or ceremonial pollution and defilement. In 2 Corinthians 7:1, Paul urges believers to cleanse themselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit. The multilingual glosses identify contamination and pollution (Spanish contaminación, French souillure, German Befleckung). The term belongs to the purity language central to both Jewish cultic thought and early Christian ethics, where moral and spiritual purity replaced ceremonial regulations while maintaining the underlying concepts of contamination and cleansing.

(1×) Second Corinthians 7:1 calls for comprehensive cleansing from every defilement affecting both flesh and spirit. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly emphasizes pollution and contamination. Paul's exhortation follows his warning against partnering with unbelievers—such associations bring defiling contamination. The dual reference to flesh and spirit indicates defilement threatens both bodily and spiritual dimensions of personhood, requiring thorough cleansing to perfect holiness in the fear of God. RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY

en: defilement | es: contaminación | fr: souillure | de: Befleckung 2Cor 7:1

μομφή G3437 N-AFS (1×)

complaint, blame; cause or expression of dissatisfaction

This feminine noun denotes a complaint, reproach, or cause for blame. In Colossians 3:13, Paul instructs believers to bear with one another and forgive if anyone has a complaint against another. The multilingual glosses identify complaint, blame, or reproach (Spanish queja, French/German forms). Classical usage includes both the act of complaining and the grounds for complaint. The term appears in contexts of interpersonal grievance where forbearance and forgiveness become necessary.

(1×) Colossians 3:13 addresses handling complaints within the Christian community through forbearance and forgiveness. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes complaint and grievance. Paul assumes genuine causes for complaint will arise among believers—the question is how to respond. His answer: bear with one another patiently and forgive freely, just as the Lord forgave you. The term acknowledges real grievances while calling for grace-based resolution rather than nursing resentment or demanding vindication. REPROOF AND REBUKE en: complaint | es: queja | fr: μομφήν | de: Klage Col 3:13

μονή G3438 N-AFS (2×)

dwelling place, room or permanent abode

A place where one stays or resides, emphasizing permanence rather than temporary shelter. Both occurrences are in John's Gospel, in Jesus' profound promise: 'In my Father's house are many dwelling places' (14:2) and 'We will come and make our dwelling with him' (14:23). The word suggests not mere accommodation but stable, lasting residence—the divine promise of permanent fellowship with God and Christ through the Spirit.

(2×) A permanent dwelling, room for habitation. The Johannine usage emphasizes stability and endurance—these are not temporary lodgings but eternal dwelling places prepared by Christ. The Greek background includes both 'stopping-place' and 'apartment,' but John's context elevates it to speak of eternal relationship. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'morada,' French 'demeure,' German 'Wohnungen') consistently choose terms implying permanence, not transience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-dwelling, rooms | es: morada, moradas | fr: demeure | de: Wohnungen John 14:2; John 14:23

μονο-γενής G3439 Adj-AMS (9×)

Only begotten, one and only, unique; describing the sole child of a parent or the unique relationship of the Son to the Father.

Compounded from monos (only) and genos (kind, offspring), this adjective describes someone who is the sole member of their kind – an only child or a uniquely begotten one. In the Synoptics, it describes grieving parents' only children: the widow of Nain's only son (Luke 7:12), Jairus's only daughter (Luke 8:42), and a father's only boy (Luke 9:38). In John's writings, it takes on profound theological weight as the defining attribute of Jesus' relationship to the Father (John 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 John 4:9). The Spanish 'unigenito' preserves both components; the French 'unique' emphasizes singularity.

only begotten (9×) The sole offspring of a parent, or more broadly, one who is uniquely begotten and without peer. The Synoptic occurrences describe literal only children in desperate situations: the widow's only son (Luke 7:12), Jairus's only daughter (Luke 8:42), and a father's only epileptic boy (Luke 9:38). John's usage transforms the word theologically: Jesus is the monogenes of the Father, 'full of grace and truth' (John 1:14), the one whom God gave because he 'so loved the world' (John 3:16). Spanish 'unigenito' and German 'eingeboren' both attempt to capture the dual force of uniqueness and begetting that makes this word theologically indispensable. ONE AND UNITY en: of-only-begotten, only-begotten | es: -unigénito, de-unigénito, unigénita | fr: unique | de: eingeboren, μονογενής, μονογενὴς Luke 7:12; Luke 8:42; Luke 9:38; John 1:14; John 1:18

μονόω G3440 Adv (67×)

Only, merely, solely — a restrictive adverb limiting scope to a single item, condition, or person; rarely, alone (without others present).

An adverb derived from monos ('alone, single'), monon functions overwhelmingly as a restrictive particle meaning 'only' or 'merely' — narrowing a statement to one condition, person, or action. When Jesus says 'only speak a word and my servant will be healed' (Matt 8:8), monon isolates the single sufficient act. In two rare instances during the Transfiguration accounts (Matt 17:8; Mark 9:8), the word shifts from logical restriction to physical solitude: the disciples looked up and saw 'Jesus alone.' Spanish captures both with 'solo/solamente,' while French uses 'seulement' throughout.

1. (65×) A restrictive adverb meaning 'only,' 'merely,' or 'solely,' limiting the scope of a statement to a single condition, action, or entity. Pervasive across the New Testament: 'only believe' (Mark 5:36), 'only say the word' (Matt 8:8), 'only touch his garment' (Matt 9:21), 'not for the Jews only' (Rom 3:29). All four major translation traditions converge: English 'only,' Spanish 'solamente/solo,' French 'seulement,' German 'nur' — each expressing pure restriction without spatial connotation. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: only | es: sola, solamente, solo | fr: seulement | de: nur Matt 5:47; Matt 8:8; Matt 9:21; Matt 10:42; Matt 14:36

2. (2×) A rare spatial-perceptual sense meaning 'alone,' describing physical solitude rather than logical restriction. Confined to the Transfiguration narrative where, after the vision fades, the disciples see 'Jesus alone' (monon, Matt 17:8; Mark 9:8). English 'alone' and Spanish 'solo' shift from restrictive to existential here, though French and German maintain the same forms ('seulement,' 'nur'), collapsing the distinction that the Greek context makes evident. ALONE AND PARTS en: alone | es: solo | fr: seulement | de: nur Matt 17:8; Mark 9:8

μόνος G3441 Adj-ANP (47×)

Alone, by oneself; only, unique, sole; merely, exclusively (restrictive)

Monos carries three distinct registers in the New Testament. Most often it means 'alone' – Jesus went up the mountain 'alone' to pray (Matt 14:23), and 'no one knows except the Father alone' (Matt 24:36). In theological contexts it intensifies to 'only' or 'sole,' as in 'the only true God' (John 17:3) and 'the only Sovereign' (1 Tim 6:15), where German einzigen and Spanish unico mark its uniqueness force. As a restrictive particle, it limits scope: the bread of the Presence was lawful for priests 'only' (Matt 12:4). The root idea of singularity unifies all three uses.

1. alone, by oneself (32×) The most common sense: alone, by oneself, solitary, without others present or assisting. Jesus withdraws 'alone' to pray (Matt 14:23), teaches that humans do not live by bread 'alone' (Matt 4:4), and declares that no one knows the day 'except the Father alone' (Matt 24:36). Spanish solo and German allein consistently render this solitary sense across all traditions. ALONE AND PARTS

en: alone, only | es: solo, solos | fr: seul | de: allein Matt 4:4; Matt 4:10; Matt 14:23; Matt 18:15; Matt 24:36

2. only, unique, sole (8×) A theologically weighty sense: the only one, sole, unique. Applied to God as 'the only true God' (John 17:3), 'the only wise God' (Rom 16:27), and 'the only Sovereign' (1 Tim 6:15). German einzigen and Spanish unico distinguish this from mere solitude – it asserts ontological uniqueness. This sense undergirds key doxological and creedal statements in the epistles. ALONE AND PARTS

en: only, to-only | es: al-único, único | fr: seul | de: allein, dem-alleinigen, einzigen John 5:44; John 17:3; Rom 16:27; 1Tim 1:17; 1Tim 6:15

3. only, merely, exclusively (7×) A restrictive or exclusive adverbial force: only, merely, nothing more than. The showbread was lawful 'only' for priests (Matt 12:4; Luke 6:4); Paul asks whether he and Barnabas 'only' lack the right not to work (1 Cor 9:6). Here monos functions as a scope limiter rather than describing physical solitude. Spanish solo and French seul serve double duty for both this and the first sense. ALONE AND PARTS en: only | es: solo, solos, solos? | fr: seul | de: allein Matt 12:4; Luke 6:4; 1Cor 9:6; 1Cor 14:36; Gal 6:4

μον-όφθαλμος G3442 Adj-AMS (2×)

one-eyed, having lost or lacking one eye

The physical condition of having only one functioning eye. Jesus uses this vivid term in His hyperbolic teaching about radical discipleship: better to enter life one-eyed than to be thrown into hell with both eyes intact (Matthew 18:9, Mark 9:47). The stark physicality of the word underscores the severity of Jesus' point—no earthly faculty, however valuable, is worth preserving if it causes you to stumble spiritually.

(2×) Having one eye, whether by birth defect or injury. The classical distinction between 'one who has one eye like the Cyclops' versus 'one who has lost an eye' collapses in Jesus' hyperbolic discourse —the point is radical amputation of whatever causes sin. Spanish 'tuerto' (one-eyed), French 'borgne,' and German 'einaeugig' all capture the literal sense of monocular vision, reinforcing Jesus' shocking imagery about the cost of discipleship. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL en: one-eyed | es: con-un-solo-ojo, tuerto | fr: borgne | de: einaeugig, μονόφθαλμον Matt 18:9; Mark 9:47

μονόω G3443 V-RPM/P-NFS (1×)

to be left alone, made solitary; to be isolated or bereft of companions

This verb means to make or become solitary, to be left alone or isolated. In 1 Timothy 5:5, it describes the true widow who is left entirely alone without family support. The multilingual glosses identify being left alone or isolated (Spanish dejada sola, German vereinsamt). Classical usage includes being forsaken, isolated in battle, or taken aside without witnesses. The perfect passive participle here emphasizes the enduring state of solitude and vulnerability resulting from loss of family.

(1×) First Timothy 5:5 characterizes the true widow as one left completely alone. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes isolation and abandonment: left alone, made solitary. The perfect passive participle stresses her ongoing state of solitude—she has been and remains bereft of family support. This isolation becomes the criterion for church assistance: unlike widows with family resources, she is truly alone, having set her hope on God and continuing in prayers night and day. ALONE AND PARTS

en: left-alone | es: dejada-sola | fr: μεμονωμένη | de: vereinsamt 1Tim 5:5

μορφ-ή G3444 N-AFS (3×)

form, outward shape or appearance

Form refers to the outward shape, appearance, or visible manifestation. Mark says Jesus appeared to two disciples 'in another form' after resurrection (Mark 16:12). Paul's great christological passage says Christ existed 'in the form of God' but took 'the form of a servant' (Phil 2:6, 7). The term denotes visible, recognizable shape. It's more than mere appearance (which can deceive) but less than essence—it's the genuine outward manifestation of inner reality. Spanish 'forma' and German 'Gestalt' preserve this sense of shape and configuration.

(3×) The outward form, shape, or visible manifestation that genuinely expresses inner reality. Mark 16:12 describes Jesus appearing in a different μορφή post-resurrection. Philippians 2:6-7 uses it for Christ's divine form and then his servant form—not mere appearance but true manifestation. The term sits between superficial 'appearance' and essential 'nature,' indicating the authentic outward expression of what something is. French 'forme' and German 'Gestalt' capture this visible-yet-genuine configuration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: form | es: forma | fr: forme | de: Gestalt Mark 16:12; Phil 2:6; Phil 2:7

μορφ-όω G3445 V-ASP-3S (1×)

to be formed, shaped, or molded; to receive definite form

This verb means to give form or shape to something, or in the passive to receive form or be shaped. In Galatians 4:19, Paul expresses his travail for the Galatian believers until Christ is formed in them. The multilingual glosses emphasize formation and shaping (Spanish sea formado, French/German forms of formation). Classical usage includes giving shape to women's bodies or forming soldiers. Paul's metaphor suggests the painful process of Christ's character taking definite shape within believers' lives.

(1×) Galatians 4:19 presents Paul's maternal metaphor: he travails in birth until Christ is formed in his spiritual children. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes the formation or shaping process. The aorist passive subjunctive suggests a definite, completed formation Paul yearns to see. The image is striking—Paul experiences labor pains until Christ's character and likeness take clear, definite shape in the Galatians. Formation requires painful spiritual labor, but the goal is Christ's full-formed presence within believers. POTTER AND FORMING

en: is-formed | es: sea-formado | fr: μορφωθῇ | de: gestalten Gal 4:19

μόρφ-ωσις G3446 N-AFS (2×)

form, outward appearance or embodiment of something

The visible shape or external manifestation that gives structure to content. Paul uses it twice with contrasting implications. In Romans 2:20, he speaks ironically of those who have 'the embodiment of knowledge and truth' in the law but fail to live it out. In 2 Timothy 3:5, he warns of those having 'a form of godliness' while denying its power—appearance without reality. The word captures the tension between genuine substance and mere semblance.

(2×) The visible form or outward shape of something, potentially contrasted with its inner reality. Paul employs the term to critique religiosity that possesses correct external forms without corresponding inward transformation. The classical sense of 'shaping, bringing into shape' becomes in Paul's usage a test: does the form correspond to the essence? Cross-linguistic glosses vary between 'form' (English/Spanish 'forma'), 'appearance' (Spanish 'apariencia'), and 'shape' (German 'Gestalt'), capturing both external structure and its potential hollowness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: form | es: apariencia, forma | fr: Gestalt, empreinte | de: Gestalt Rom 2:20; 2Tim 3:5

μοσχο-ποιέω G3447 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to make a calf, specifically to craft an idol in calf form

This compound verb specifically describes the act of making a calf idol. In Acts 7:41, Stephen recounts Israel's apostasy at Sinai—they made a calf and offered sacrifice to the idol. The multilingual glosses identify calf-making (Spanish hicieron becerro, French faire un veau). The term is crafted precisely for this notorious incident, combining 'calf' with 'make.' Stephen's speech emphasizes that while Moses received living oracles on the mountain, the people below fashioned a dead idol, rejecting God for Egyptian-style idolatry.

(1×) Acts 7:41 employs this specific compound to describe Israel's golden calf apostasy at Sinai. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently identify the action: they made a calf. Stephen's use of this technical term heightens the tragedy—while Moses communed with God, receiving life-giving law, the people deliberately crafted an idol. The specific verb emphasizes the intentionality and scandal: they didn't accidentally fall into idolatry but actively manufactured a rival to Yahweh, modeled on Egyptian gods they claimed to have left behind. CALF YOUNG BULL

en: they-made-a-calf | es: hicieron-becerro | fr: faire-un-veau | de: ἐμοσχοποίησαν Acts 7:41

μόσχος G3448 N-DMS (6×)

Calf, young bull; a young bovine used in sacrifice or celebration.

Moschos refers to a young bovine animal, whether a calf or young bull, appearing in both celebratory and sacrificial contexts in the New Testament. The most memorable occurrence is in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, where the father orders the fatted calf to be slaughtered for the homecoming feast (Luke 15:23, 27, 30), a vivid image of lavish, joyful welcome. In Hebrews, the term shifts to the sacrificial register: the blood of calves and goats was the means of Old Covenant purification (Hebrews 9:12, 19), now surpassed by Christ's own blood.

calf, young bull (6×) A young bovine animal, a calf or young bull, used in the NT for both festive slaughter and ritual sacrifice. In Luke 15:23, 27, and 30, the fatted moschos is killed to celebrate the prodigal son's return, representing extravagant generosity and joy at restoration. In Hebrews 9:12 and 9:19, calves appear in the sacrificial context of the old covenant's blood rituals, which the author contrasts with Christ's superior offering. Spanish 'becerro' and French 'veau' both denote a young calf, while German 'Kalb' carries the same meaning. The grammatical variation between singular and plural across the occurrences reflects the difference between the single celebratory calf of Luke and the multiple sacrificial animals of Hebrews. CALF YOUNG BULL

en: a-calf, calf, calves | es: a-becerro, becerro, becerros | fr: veau | de: Kalb, μόσχον Luke 15:23; Luke 15:27; Luke 15:30; Heb 9:12; Heb 9:19

μόχθ-ος G3449 N-DMS (3×)

toil, hardship, laborious effort or distress

This term denotes painful toil, laborious effort, or the hardship of demanding work. Paul recounts his apostolic hardships: 'in toil and hardship' (2 Cor 11:27). He reminds the Thessalonians he worked 'night and day' in 'toil and hardship' so as not to burden them (1 Thess 2:9, 2 Thess 3:8). The emphasis is on strenuous, wearying labor, not joyful productivity. The translations—'afán,' 'fatiga,' 'Mühe'—all convey exhausting exertion.

(3×) Toil, hardship, or laborious effort marked by weariness and strain. Paul uses μόχθος to describe his self-supporting manual labor while doing ministry—working 'night and day' in toil so as not to burden churches (1 Thess 2:9, 2 Thess 3:8). In 2 Corinthians 11:27 it's part of his catalog of apostolic sufferings. Spanish 'afán/fatiga' (exertion/fatigue) and German 'Mühe' (trouble, effort) emphasize the exhausting, burdensome quality of the labor. LABOR AND TOIL

en: hardship, toil | es: afán, fatiga | fr: μόχθον, μόχθῳ | de: Muehe 2Cor 11:27; 1Thess 2:9; 2Thess 3:8

ἐγώ G3450

I, first-person pronoun (additional forms; variant entry for G3165/G3427)

Yet another entry for the first-person pronoun, reflecting the complex manuscript and dialectal tradition. The basic semantic content remains: ἐγώ in the nominative for emphatic 'I,' with oblique cases from the μ- stem. The multiplication of Strong's numbers for this common pronoun likely reflects different inflectional forms or variant manuscript readings across New Testament passages.

μουσῐκός G3451 Adj-GMP (1×)

skilled in music, musically trained; pertaining to musical arts

This adjective describes someone skilled in music or things pertaining to musical arts. In Revelation 18:22, John foresees the silencing of musicians among other artisans in fallen Babylon's judgment. The multilingual glosses identify musicians (Spanish músicos, French/German forms). Classical usage includes both musical skill and broader cultural accomplishment—devotees of the Muses, men of letters and liberal arts. In Revelation's context, the term specifically denotes professional musicians whose art will cease when God judges the great city.

(1×) Revelation 18:22 lists musicians among the sounds that will vanish from Babylon in divine judgment. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently identifies professional musicians or those skilled in musical arts. John's vision of silence includes the cessation of harpists, musicians, flutists, and trumpeters—all the sounds of celebration, culture, and commerce. The disappearance of musicians symbolizes the end of luxury, entertainment, and the vibrant commercial life that characterized the doomed city. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: of-musicians | es: de-músicos | fr: Musiker | de: Musiker Rev 18:22

μυελός G3452 N-GMP (1×)

marrow, the soft tissue in the interior of bones

This masculine noun designates bone marrow, the soft inner tissue of bones. In Hebrews 4:12, it appears in the description of God's word as sharper than a two-edged sword, penetrating to the division of soul and spirit, joints and marrow. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify marrow (Spanish tuétanos, French/German Mark). Classical usage includes both literal marrow and metaphorical uses for the innermost part or essence of something. The pairing with joints emphasizes the word's ability to penetrate to the deepest, most hidden parts of human existence.

(1×) Hebrews 4:12 employs marrow in its striking metaphor for Scripture's penetrating power. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly identifies bone marrow. The phrase 'joints and marrow' parallels 'soul and spirit,' representing the innermost, most deeply hidden aspects of physical and spiritual existence. God's living word pierces beyond surface realities to discern thoughts and intentions buried in the marrow—nothing remains hidden or unpenetrated by Scripture's sharp, searching examination of the human heart. FLESH AND BODY

en: of-marrow | es: de-tuétanos | fr: Mark | de: Mark Heb 4:12

μύέω G3453 V-RIM/P-1S (1×)

to be initiated into the mysteries; to learn a secret through instruction or experience

This verb primarily means to be initiated into mystery religions, but by extension to learn secrets or be instructed in hidden knowledge. In Philippians 4:12, Paul declares he has learned the secret of being content in all circumstances. The multilingual glosses identify initiation or learning secrets (Spanish he sido iniciado, French/German forms). Classical usage centers on mystery cult initiation, but Paul appropriates this language for the Christian's experiential learning of spiritual truths, particularly contentment independent of circumstances.

(1×) Philippians 4:12 shows Paul claiming to have been initiated into the secret of contentment through varied experiences. The cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes initiation and learning secrets. Paul uses mystery language—he has been initiated, learned the mystery. But unlike pagan mysteries with secret rites, Paul's initiation came through Christ-empowering experiences of plenty and hunger, abundance and need. The perfect tense suggests completed initiation: he has fully learned contentment's secret and now lives in its power. KNOWING AND LEARNING

en: I-have-learned-the-secret | es: he-sido-iniciado | fr: μεμύημαι | de: eingeweiht-sein Phil 4:12

μῦθος G3454 N-DMP (5×)

A myth, fable, or fictitious story; in the NT, always used negatively for false religious narratives opposed to sound doctrine.

In classical Greek, mythos simply meant 'word' or 'story,' but by the time of the Pastoral Epistles it had acquired a distinctly pejorative edge. Paul warns Timothy against 'myths and endless genealogies' (1 Tim 1:4), contrasts godly training with 'profane old wives' myths' (1 Tim 4:7), and predicts people will 'turn aside to myths' rather than endure sound teaching (2 Tim 4:4). Titus must rebuke those devoted to 'Jewish myths' (Titus 1:14). Peter insists the apostles did not follow 'cleverly devised myths' (2 Pet 1:16). The German 'Fabel' and Spanish 'mitos' both capture this sense of fabricated, misleading narrative.

(5×) A myth, fable, or fictitious religious narrative, always used negatively in the NT to describe false teachings that distract from sound doctrine. Paul opposes myths to the truth of the gospel (1 Tim 1:4, 4:7; 2 Tim 4:4; Titus 1:14), and Peter emphatically distances apostolic witness from 'cleverly devised myths' (2 Pet 1:16). The consistent translation across languages — Spanish 'mitos,' German 'Fabel,' French approximating 'fables' — underscores the universally recognized sense of fabricated, misleading stories. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: myths, to-myths | es: a-mitos, mitos | fr: μύθος, μύθους | de: Fabel 1Tim 1:4; 1Tim 4:7; 2Tim 4:4; Titus 1:14; 2Pet 1:16

μῡκάομαι G3455 V-PIM/P-3S (1×)

to roar, bellow; to make a loud, deep sound

This verb describes the roaring or bellowing sound made by animals, particularly lions, or loud reverberating sounds from other sources. In Revelation 10:3, the mighty angel cries out with a loud voice like a lion roaring, and seven thunders speak. The multilingual glosses identify roaring or bellowing (Spanish ruge, French rugir, German brüllen). Classical usage includes oxen lowing, lions roaring, or shields clanging. The term emphasizes powerful, resonant, awesome sound that commands attention.

(1×) Revelation 10:3 describes the mighty angel's voice as roaring like a lion, triggering seven thunders. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly emphasizes the roaring quality. The comparison to a lion's roar conveys authority, power, and fearsome majesty—this is no ordinary announcement but a cosmic proclamation that shakes creation. The angel's leonine roar represents divine communication of overwhelming power, echoing God's voice through the prophets and anticipating the Lion of Judah's final victory. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: roars | es: ruge | fr: rugir | de: bruellen Rev 10:3

μυκτηρ-ίζω G3456 V-PIM/P-3S (1×)

to mock, sneer at, treat with contempt

This verb means to turn up the nose at someone, to mock, sneer, or treat with contempt. In Galatians 6:7, Paul warns not to be deceived —God is not mocked. The multilingual glosses identify mocking or sneering (Spanish es burlado, French/German forms of mocking). Classical usage depicts the physical gesture of turning up the nose in disdain, extending to any contemptuous treatment. Paul's warning addresses those who think they can despise God's moral order without consequence.

(1×) Galatians 6:7 delivers Paul's sobering warning: do not be deceived, God is not mocked. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently identifies mocking or sneering. The passive form stresses that God cannot be treated with contempt successfully—He is not the sort who can be sneered at without consequence. The context of sowing and reaping emphasizes that treating God's moral law with contempt by sowing to the flesh brings inevitable corruption. God's justice cannot be mocked. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: is-mocked | es: es-burlado | fr: μυκτηρίζεται | de: verspotten Gal 6:7

μῦλ-ικός G3457 Adj-NMS (1×)

pertaining to a mill; millstone, used for grinding grain

This adjective describes something related to a mill, particularly a millstone used for grinding grain. In Luke 17:2, Jesus warns that it would be better to have a millstone hung around one's neck and be thrown into the sea than to cause a little one to stumble. The multilingual glosses identify millstone (Spanish de molino, French meule). The image evokes the large stones rotated to crush grain—heavy enough to ensure drowning. Jesus uses this shocking imagery to emphasize the severity of causing spiritual harm to vulnerable believers.

(1×) Luke 17:2 employs millstone in Jesus's stark warning about causing believers to stumble. The cross-linguistic evidence identifies the grinding stone. The image is deliberately shocking: death by drowning with a massive stone tied around the neck would be preferable to the judgment awaiting those who destroy faith in Christ's little ones. The millstone's size and weight emphasize both the certainty of drowning and the magnitude of judgment for spiritual abuse of the vulnerable. UPPER MILLSTONE en: millstone | es: de-molino | fr: meule | de: μυλικὸς Luke 17:2

μύλος G3458 Adj-AMS (5×)
A mill or millstone; a heavy stone used for grinding grain, often symbolic of catastrophic judgment.
Refers to both the grinding apparatus and the stone itself. Jesus invokes the millstone in a vivid warning: it would be better to have a great millstone hung around one's neck and be cast into the sea than to cause a little one to stumble (Matt 18:6, Mark 9:42). In the apocalyptic vision, a mighty angel hurls a stone 'like a great millstone' into the sea to dramatize Babylon's fall, and the sound of the mill is heard no more (Rev 18:21-22). Spanish distinguishes 'piedra de molino' (millstone) from 'molino' (mill), reflecting both the object and the place. The everyday domestic item becomes a powerful image of divine judgment.

(5×) A mill or millstone used for grinding grain, employed both literally and as a dramatic symbol of catastrophic judgment. Jesus warns that causing a child to stumble warrants drowning with a millstone around the neck (Matt 18:6, Mark 9:42). In Matt 24:41, two women grinding at the mill illustrates the suddenness of the coming separation. In Revelation, the angel's casting of a millstone-like boulder into the sea symbolizes Babylon's irreversible destruction, and the ceasing of the mill's sound signifies total desolation (Rev 18:21-22). Spanish 'piedra de molino' and German 'Muehlstein' both preserve the concreteness of this grinding stone. UPPER MILLSTONE
en: a-millstone, mill, of-a-mill | es: de-molino, molino, piedra-de-molino | fr: meule | de: Muehlstein, μύλος, μύλῳ Matt 18:6; Matt 24:41; Mark 9:42; Rev 18:21; Rev 18:22

μῠλ-ών G3459
mill-house, place where grain is ground; also metaphorical for laborious work
The μυλών is a mill-house where grain is ground into flour. The word appears in contexts of manual labor and punishment: to condemn a slave 'to the mill' meant sentencing them to grueling work grinding grain. One ancient wit called triremes 'painted mills,' presumably commenting on the repetitive, exhausting labor of rowing. The mill-house represents both necessary domestic production and harsh servile toil.

Μύρα G3460 N-ANP (1×)
Myra, a major city and port of Lycia in southern Asia Minor
This proper noun designates an important coastal city in Lycia where Paul changed ships during his voyage to Rome. In Acts 27:5, Luke records their arrival at Myra after sailing across the sea along Cilicia and Pamphylia. The multilingual evidence simply transliterates the place name. Myra was a significant port for ships traveling between the eastern Mediterranean and Rome, making it a natural transfer point. Archaeological remains reveal its importance as a commercial and cultural center.

(1×) Acts 27:5 marks Myra as the location where Paul's party transferred to an Alexandrian grain ship bound for Rome. The cross-linguistic glosses preserve the proper name through transliteration. Luke's precision reflects the standard navigation routes: coastal sailing brought them to Myra, a major Lycian port. There the centurion found the larger grain ship that would carry them toward Italy and ultimately shipwreck. Myra's role as a transfer hub situates Paul's journey within the commercial networks of the Roman empire. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: Mura | es: Mýra | fr: Myra | de: Μύρα Acts 27:5

μῡρῐ́-άς G3461 N-DFP (9×)
Myriad, ten thousand; a vast number often used hyperbolically for an innumerable multitude or host.
Literally ten thousand, but in common usage a term for any incalculably large number. The NT uses it both in approximate counting – Judas's debt of 'ten thousand talents' (Matt 18:24) and the 'fifty thousand pieces of silver' worth of magic books burned at Ephesus (Acts 19:19) – and for truly innumerable hosts, as when Hebrews 12:22 describes 'myriads of angels' in the heavenly assembly. Jude 1:14 quotes Enoch's prophecy that the Lord comes 'with ten thousands of his holy ones.' Spanish 'miriadas' and French 'myriades' both preserve the Greek loanword directly.

myriad, ten thousand, innumerable multitude (9×) A very large quantity, literally ten thousand but frequently used for an uncountable multitude. The multilingual evidence shows universal borrowing of the Greek term: Spanish 'miriadas,' French 'myriades,' German 'Myriaden.' In Luke 12:1 it describes the crushing press of a crowd ('myriads' of people trampling one another); Acts 21:20 tallies 'myriads' of believing Jews; Heb 12:22 envisions 'myriads of angels' in festal gathering. The word bridges precise enumeration (Acts 19:19, where the sum of burned books is calculated) and sublime hyperbole (Jude 1:14, where the Lord arrives with innumerable holy ones). THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS en: (myriads), myriads, of-myriads | es: a-miríadas, de-miríadas, miríadas | fr: myriade, myriades | de: Myriade, Myriaden, Unzaehlige Luke 12:1; Acts 19:19; Acts 21:20; Heb 12:22; Jude 1:14

μῠρίζω G3462 V-ANA (1×)
to anoint with perfumed oil or myrrh, especially for burial preparation
This verb means to rub with ointment or perfumed oil, to anoint. In Mark 14:8, Jesus defends the woman who anointed him, declaring she has anointed his body beforehand for burial. The multilingual glosses identify anointing (Spanish ungir, French oindre, German salben). Classical usage includes both cosmetic anointing and ceremonial applications. Jesus reinterprets the woman's lavish act as prophetic preparation for his burial, though she likely intended honor for the living king.

(1×) Mark 14:8 presents Jesus's interpretation of the woman's anointing as burial preparation. The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly identifies the anointing action. The woman's original intent was likely to honor Jesus as Messiah, pouring out precious nard in extravagant devotion. But Jesus prophetically reframes the act: she has anointed his body beforehand for burial, unknowingly performing the service that circumstances would prevent after crucifixion. The anointing becomes both worship and prophetic preparation. ANOINTING AND SMEARING en: to-anoint | es: a-ungir | fr: oindre | de: salben Mark 14:8

μῡρῐ́-άς G3463 Adj-GNP (3×)
ten thousand, countless, a myriad or very large number
A myriad is ten thousand, but often used for an uncountably large number. Jesus' parable features a servant who owes 'ten thousand talents'—an impossible, hyperbolic debt (Matt 18:24). Paul says he'd rather speak five intelligible words than 'ten thousand words' in an unknown tongue (1 Cor 14:19). He tells the Corinthians they may have 'countless guides' but only one father (1 Cor 4:15). The term emphasizes vastness beyond easy counting. Spanish 'diez mil' and French 'dix mille' preserve the literal number, while 'countless' captures the hyperbolic sense.

(3×) Ten thousand, or by extension, countless or innumerable—a very large, often indefinite number. Matthew 18:24 uses it for an unpayably huge debt (ten thousand talents). 1 Corinthians 4:15 contrasts one father with μυρίοι (countless) tutors. 1 Corinthians 14:19 prefers five intelligible words to ten thousand unintelligible ones. The Greek μυρίοι can be literal (10,000) or hyperbolic (innumerable). Spanish and French maintain the numerical precision ('diez mil'), while context determines whether it's exact or emphatic. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS en: countless, of-ten-thousand, ten-thousand | es: de-diez-mil, diez-mil | fr: dix-mille | de: zehntausend, μυρίων Matt 18:24; 1Cor 4:15; 1Cor 14:19

μύρον G3464 N-DNS (14×)

Ointment, perfumed oil, aromatic unguent — a costly fragrant preparation used for anointing and burial.

Myron names the costly aromatic ointment that appears at some of the most intimate and theologically charged moments in the Gospels. When a woman breaks an alabaster flask over Jesus' head (Matt 26:7; Mark 14:3) or pours it over his feet and wipes them with her hair (Luke 7:38; John 11:2; 12:3), it is myron she uses — expensive, fragrant, and meant for honored guests or the preparation of the dead. The disciples' protest at the waste (Mark 14:4-5; John 12:5) underlines the extravagance: this ointment could have been sold for more than three hundred denarii. Spanish perfume/ungento, French parfum, and German Salbe each capture a different facet — the fragrance, the medicinal base, the anointing function — but none fully conveys the convergence of luxury, devotion, and burial preparation that myron carries in its Gospel contexts. In Rev 18:13 the word appears in Babylon's trade inventory alongside cinnamon and incense, confirming its status as a high-value commodity.

1. of ointment (10×) Ointment or perfumed oil in the context of anointing — the costly aromatic preparation poured over Jesus' head or used in devotional acts. The woman with the alabaster flask (Matt 26:7, 12; Mark 14:3-5) and the ointment the disciples said could be sold for three hundred denarii (John 12:3, 5) represent this core sense. Spanish perfume/ungento, French parfum, and German Salbe all point to a fragrant, oil-based preparation. The word consistently appears with qualifiers like 'very expensive' (polutelous) and 'pure nard' (nardou pistikes), emphasizing its luxury status. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: of-ointment, ointment, ointments | es: de-perfume, de-ungüento, perfume | fr: parfum | de: Salbe Matt 26:7; Matt 26:12; Mark 14:3; Mark 14:4; Mark 14:5

2. with ointment (3×) Ointment applied to the body in acts of personal devotion and hospitality — distinguished from sense 1 by its emphasis on intimate, bodily application rather than the anointing ceremony per se. The sinful woman who wet Jesus' feet with tears and anointed them 'with ointment' (Luke 7:38, 46), and Mary of Bethany who anointed his feet (John 11:2), use myron in a setting of personal tenderness. Jesus' rebuke to Simon — 'You did not anoint my head with oil, but she anointed my feet with myron' — draws a pointed contrast between ordinary oil and this costly preparation. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: ointment, with-ointment | es: con-perfume, perfume | fr: parfum | de: Salbe Luke 7:38; Luke 7:46; John 11:2

3. ointment (1×) Ointment as a trade commodity — listed among the luxury goods of Babylon's merchants in the apocalyptic judgment catalog of Rev 18:13, alongside cinnamon, spice, incense, and frankincense. Spanish ungento and German Salbe preserve the substance-focused meaning. Here myron functions not as a devotional instrument but as an index of commercial wealth and imperial excess, its destruction symbolizing the collapse of the world's luxury economy. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: ointment | es: ungüento | fr: parfum | de: Salbe Rev 18:13

Μυσία G3465 N-AFS (2×)

Mysia, a northwestern province of Asia Minor

A geographical region in what is now northwestern Turkey, mentioned in Acts 16:7-8 during Paul's second missionary journey. The Spirit prevented Paul and his companions from entering Mysia, redirecting them instead to Macedonia—a pivotal moment where European evangelization began. This divine guidance, steering Paul away from one legitimate mission field toward another, illustrates how God's strategic purposes sometimes override human plans, even good ones.

(2×) The Roman province of Mysia in northwestern Asia Minor, bordering the Aegean Sea. Luke's narrative mentions it as a place Paul did not enter, highlighting divine redirection rather than the region itself. The name appears in transliteration across languages (Mysía, Mysie) as a proper geographical designation. The 'blocked path' to Mysia becomes as significant as the opened path to Macedonia—sometimes God's 'no' is as important as His 'yes.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Mysia | es: Mysía | fr: Mysie | de: Μυσίαν Acts 16:7; Acts 16:8

μυστήρι-ον G3466 N-GNP (27×)

mystery, secret — a divine truth once hidden but now revealed through Christ and the apostolic proclamation

Mysterion in the New Testament has shed its pagan association with secret initiation rites and instead denotes a divine plan that was long concealed but has now been disclosed through God's redemptive action in Christ. Paul is the term's great theologian: the 'mystery of the gospel' he was appointed to proclaim (Eph 6:19) is that Gentiles are fellow heirs with Israel in one body (Eph 3:3-6), a secret 'hidden for ages in God' (Eph 3:9; Col 1:26-27). He speaks of the 'mystery of Christ' (Col 4:3), the 'great mystery' of marriage as an image of Christ and the church (Eph 5:32), and the eschatological mystery that 'we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed' (1 Cor 15:51). Jesus introduces the term in the Synoptics as 'the mystery of the kingdom of God' given to the disciples but withheld from outsiders (Matt 13:11; Mark 4:11; Luke 8:10). Revelation applies it to the seven stars and seven churches (Rev 1:20), Babylon the great (Rev 17:5, 7), and the consummation of God's purpose (Rev 10:7). Spanish 'misterio,' French 'mystere,' and German 'Geheimnis' all preserve the revelatory weight.

mystery, secret (27×) A divine truth or redemptive plan once hidden but now revealed through Christ and the Spirit. In the Synoptics, Jesus grants the disciples insight into 'the mystery of the kingdom' denied to outsiders (Matt 13:11; Mark 4:11; Luke 8:10). Paul transforms the term into a hallmark of his theology: the inclusion of Gentiles as fellow heirs (Eph 3:3-6), the indwelling of Christ among the nations (Col 1:26-27), the nuptial union of Christ and church (Eph 5:32), and the resurrection transformation (1 Cor 15:51). Revelation uses it for symbolic visions — the seven stars (Rev 1:20), Babylon (Rev 17:5, 7), and the final consummation (Rev 10:7). Spa 'misterio,' deu 'Geheimnis.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-mystery, mystery | es: misterio | fr: mystère | de: Geheimnis Matt 13:11; Mark 4:11; Luke 8:10; Rom 11:25; Rom 16:25

μῡωπ-άζω G3467 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

being shortsighted, unable to see clearly at a distance; metaphorically, lacking spiritual perception

This verb describes the condition of being nearsighted or shortsighted, literally or metaphorically. In 2 Peter 1:9, it characterizes the person lacking in Christian virtues as blind or shortsighted, having forgotten their cleansing from past sins. The multilingual glosses identify nearsightedness or shortsightedness (Spanish corto de vista, French/German forms). The term literally means to blink or squint like a myopic person straining to see. Peter uses it metaphorically for spiritual blindness to present realities and future hope.

(1×) Second Peter 1:9 employs this term metaphorically to describe spiritual shortsightedness in one who lacks growing Christian virtues. The cross-linguistic evidence identifies nearsightedness and visual impairment. The image is striking: such a person is spiritually blind or shortsighted, unable to see clearly the reality of their cleansing from sin. Like someone with poor vision who can barely see what's immediately before them, they've lost sight of both their past redemption and future inheritance, trapped in spiritual myopia. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL en: being-shortsighted | es: corto-de-vista | fr: μυωπάζων | de: kurzsichtig 2Pet 1:9

μώλωψ G3468 N-DMS (1×)

a wound, weal, or bruise; specifically the mark left by a stripe or blow, particularly of Christ's flogging

Peter uses this medical term to evoke the violence of Christ's passion: 'by whose wounds you were healed' (1 Peter 2:24). The Greek denotes not just an injury but the visible mark left behind—a welt, bruise, or blood clot from a blow. In classical literature the word appears in medical texts describing skin eruptions and contusions. Peter's citation of Isaiah 53 transforms a clinical term into a theological paradox: the physical wounds inflicted on the Suffering Servant become the means of spiritual restoration for believers.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence refers specifically to the wounds Christ received during his scourging before crucifixion. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize injury (English 'wound', Spanish 'herida', German 'Wunde'), capturing the physical reality of flogging while pointing to its salvific purpose. Peter anchors healing in the concrete, bodily suffering of Jesus. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: wound | es: herida | fr: μώλωπι | de: Wunde 1Pet 2:24

μωμ-άομαι G3469 V-ASP-3S (2×)

to find fault with, blame or criticize someone

The act of identifying defects or assigning blame, particularly in a context where reproach might damage reputation. Paul uses this verb twice in 2 Corinthians, anxious to avoid any grounds for criticism in his ministry—both in general conduct (6:3) and in financial administration (8:20). His concern reflects the vulnerability of Christian workers to accusation and the importance of maintaining integrity beyond reproach. The word emphasizes not just criticism but its potential to undermine ministry effectiveness.

(2×) To blame or find fault with, exposing someone to censure. Paul's usage shows pastoral wisdom: ministry credibility depends not only on internal righteousness but on external perception. The passive forms ('might be blamed,' 'should be blamed') highlight Paul's anxiety about giving critics ammunition. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'censure/sea censurado,' French 'blâmer,' German 'tadeln') consistently point to public criticism, not mere private disagreement. REPROOF AND REBUKE
en: might-be-blamed, should-blame | es: censure, sea-censurado | fr: blâmer | de: tadeln 2Cor 6:3; 2Cor 8:20

μῶμος G3470 N-NMP (1×)

a blemish, moral defect, or source of reproach; one who brings disgrace or shame

In 2 Peter 2:13, this term labels false teachers as 'blemishes' (μῶμοι) who defile the fellowship meals of the church. Classical Greek uses the word for both physical flaws and moral reproach—a stain upon one's reputation or a disgrace to the community. The underlying idea is something that mars purity or integrity, whether in a sacrificial animal or in human character. Peter's rhetoric is harsh: these deceivers aren't just wrong, they actively contaminate the gathered assembly.

(1×) Applies to persons whose behavior brings moral disgrace upon the Christian community. The multilingual evidence splits between abstract 'blemishes/defects' (English, Spanish 'defectos') and the implied concrete sense of moral stain. The domain (Attitudes and Emotions) reflects the evaluative nature of the term—it's a judgment on character, not merely a description of error. SHAME AND DISGRACE
en: blemishes | es: defectos | fr: μῶμοι | de: Makel 2Pet 2:13

μωρ-αίνω G3471 V-ASP-3S (4×)

To make foolish, render insipid; to become tasteless or lose one's purpose

Carries a double edge: it can mean to make something foolish (active) or to become tasteless and useless (passive). Jesus uses the salt metaphor in Matthew 5:13 and Luke 14:34 — if salt loses its savor (moranthe), it is good for nothing, a vivid image of discipleship that has lost its distinctive quality. Paul then deploys the active-causal sense in Romans 1:22 and 1 Corinthians 1:20, declaring that God has 'made foolish' the wisdom of the world. The Spanish translations split neatly between se desvaneciere (become insipid) and ennequeció/se hicieron necios (became fools), mapping the two semantic poles precisely.

(4×) To become tasteless, lose savor, or become insipid — used of salt that has lost its essential quality and therefore its usefulness. Jesus warns in Matt 5:13 and Luke 14:34 that salt which has been 'made foolish' (rendered flat) cannot be restored. French insipide and Spanish se desvaneciere both target this concrete, physical sense of flavor loss, which serves as a metaphor for discipleship that has lost its distinctiveness. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: becomes-tasteless, made-foolish, they-became-fools | es: ennequeció, se-desvaneciere, se-hicieron-necios | fr: devenir-fou, insipide | de: toericht-werden, μωρανθῇ Matt 5:13; Luke 14:34; Rom 1:22; 1Cor 1:20

μωρ-ία G3472 N-AFS (5×)

Foolishness, folly; the quality of being senseless or absurd, used by Paul to describe the paradox of the gospel.

A noun denoting foolishness or folly — the state of lacking sense or wisdom. Paul deploys this word with striking irony in 1 Corinthians, where the 'foolishness' of God's message through the cross confounds the wisdom of the world (1 Cor 1:18, 21). The Spanish 'necedad' and German 'Torheit' both capture the notion of senselessness, while the French 'folie' adds an overtone of madness. In 1 Cor 3:19, the tables turn: worldly wisdom is declared foolishness before God.

(5×) Foolishness or folly, the quality of being absurd or lacking wisdom. All five NT occurrences cluster in 1 Corinthians, where Paul builds a sustained paradox: the cross-message appears as μωρία to the perishing, yet it is God's power (1 Cor 1:18). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'necedad' (senselessness), French 'folie' (madness), German 'Torheit' (folly) — all converge on cognitive absurdity. Paul reappropriates this term to invert the Greek philosophical hierarchy of σοφία over μωρία. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS
en: foolishness | es: necedad | fr: folie | de: Torheit 1Cor 1:18; 1Cor 1:21; 1Cor 1:23; 1Cor 2:14; 1Cor 3:19

μωρολογ-ία G3473 N-NFS (1×)

foolish or silly talk; speech that lacks wisdom, discernment, or moral seriousness

Paul condemns 'foolish talk' (μωρολογία) alongside coarse jesting in Ephesians 5:4 as out of place among the saints. The compound joins 'foolishness' (μωρός) and 'speech' (λόγος), denoting talk that is not merely trivial but morally vacuous—conversation that neither edifies nor honors God. In classical usage the term connotes babbling nonsense or speaking without understanding. Paul's vice lists often target sins of the tongue as much as sins of action, because speech both reveals and shapes the heart.

(1×) Denotes speech characterized by moral foolishness rather than intellectual deficiency. The multilingual glosses range from concrete ('foolish talk' in English, 'necedad' in Spanish meaning 'foolishness') to more abstract ('toerichte Rede' in German, 'foolish speech'). Paul's concern is ethical: such talk is incompatible with the thanksgiving and wisdom that should mark Christian community. IDLE TALK BOASTING
en: foolish-talk | es: necedad | fr: μωρολογία | de: toerichte-Rede Eph 5:4

μωρός G3474 Adj-VMP (12×)

moros – foolish, stupid; lacking wisdom or good sense, morally or intellectually dull

The adjective moros ('foolish, stupid') describes someone or something devoid of sense, wisdom, or sound judgment. In classical Greek it ranged from physical sluggishness to intellectual dullness; in the New Testament it carries sharper moral and spiritual overtones. Jesus uses it to condemn empty insult (Matt 5:22), to characterize the man who builds on sand (Matt 7:26), and to distinguish the five unprepared virgins (Matt 25:2-3). His searing rebuke of the scribes and Pharisees – 'Fools and blind!' (Matt 23:17) – wields it as a verdict on spiritual blindness. Paul inverts its shame in 1 Cor 1:25, declaring that 'the foolishness of God is wiser than men,' reclaiming the term as a paradox of divine wisdom.

foolish, stupid (12×) Lacking wisdom, judgment, or moral sense – applied to persons (the foolish virgins, Matt 25:2; the builder on sand, Matt 7:26) and substantivized as 'foolishness' (1 Cor 1:25, 27). Spanish necio, French insense, and German toericht converge on one undifferentiated sense of moral-intellectual folly. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: Fool, foolish, fools | es: Necio, necias, necio | fr: fou, insensé | de: toericht, töricht Matt 5:22; Matt 7:26; Matt 23:17; Matt 25:2; Matt 25:3

Μωυσῆς G3475 N-AMS (80×)

Moses, the lawgiver and prophet who led Israel from Egypt and received the Torah at Sinai

Moses stands as the towering figure of the Torah, the prophet through whom God delivered Israel from Egypt and established the Sinai covenant. In the New Testament, his name appears in two principal ways: as a historical person who spoke with Jesus at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:3) and as a metonym for the Pentateuch and its legal authority ('the law of Moses,' Luke 24:44; Acts 15:21). Paul's veil imagery in 2 Corinthians 3:15 — 'whenever Moses is read' — shows the seamless shift from person to text. Spanish, French, and German all render the name with minimal adaptation (Moises, Moise, Mose), reflecting universal recognition.

Moses (biblical figure) (80×) The proper name of Israel's pre-eminent lawgiver and prophet, used both as a personal reference (the Transfiguration, Matt 17:3) and as a metonym for the Mosaic writings and legal code ('the law of Moses,' John 7:23; Acts 28:23). In Luke 16:29 and 2 Cor 3:15, 'Moses' denotes the Pentateuch itself, showing how deeply the person and his literary legacy merged in Jewish and early Christian thought. MOSES PROPHET LAWGIVER

en: Mousēs, Mōusēs, Mōysēs | es: -Mōÿsḗs, Môyséōs, Môysēs | fr: Moïse | de: Mose Matt 8:4; Matt 17:3; Matt 19:7; Matt 19:8; Matt 22:24

Ναασσών G3476 N-NMS (3×)

Nahshon, son of Amminadab, ancestor of David and Jesus

Nahshon (Hebrew נַחְשׁוֹן) was the son of Amminadab and father of Salmon, appearing in the genealogies of David and Jesus. He was a leader of Judah during the wilderness wandering (Num 1:7). Matthew and Luke both include him in Jesus' ancestral line (Matt 1:4 twice, Luke 3:32). The name is consistently transliterated across languages: 'Naassṓn,' 'Naasson,' 'Nachschon,' preserving the Hebrew original.

(3×) Nahshon, son of Amminadab, a leader of the tribe of Judah and ancestor of King David and Jesus Christ. He appears in both Matthean and Lukan genealogies (Matt 1:4, Luke 3:32). The name is transliterated from Hebrew (נַחְשׁוֹן) meaning 'enchanter' or 'serpent-like,' though biblical texts emphasize his role as tribal leader. Consistent transliteration across languages ('Naassṓn,' 'Naasson') maintains the proper name identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naassōn | es: Naassón | fr: Naasson | de: Nachschon Matt 1:4; Luke 3:32

Ναγγαί G3477 N-GMS (1×)

Naggai, an ancestor of Jesus listed in Luke's genealogy

Naggai appears only in Luke 3:25, part of the genealogical chain tracing Jesus back through David to Adam. Like many names in the post-exilic portion of Luke's genealogy, Naggai is otherwise unknown in biblical or extrabiblical sources. The name may derive from a Hebrew root related to brightness or light, though its etymology remains uncertain. Luke's inclusion of obscure ancestors underscores the providential continuity linking Jesus to Israel's covenant history, even through generations forgotten by other records.

(1×) A personal name appearing uniquely in the Lukan genealogy. The multilingual glosses preserve the name with minor phonetic variations (Spanish 'Nangaí', French 'Naggaï') reflecting different transcription conventions for Greek names. The domain classification (Names) is straightforward; the significance lies in genealogical placement rather than lexical meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naggai | es: Nangaí | fr: Naggaï | de: Ναγγαὶ Luke 3:25

Ναζαρά G3478 N-GFS (12×)

Nazareth – the Galilean town where Jesus was raised, also spelled Nazara

Nazareth (Nazareth/Nazara) is the small town in lower Galilee where Mary and Joseph lived and where Jesus grew up. Despite its obscurity – Nathanael's dismissive 'Can anything good come from Nazareth?' (John 1:46) captures its reputation – it became one of the most recognized place names in history. The New Testament manuscripts preserve multiple spellings (Nazareth, Nazaret, Nazara), reflecting Semitic-to-Greek transliteration variation rather than different locations. Luke places the Annunciation there (1:26), and Matthew identifies it as the fulfillment of a prophetic word: 'He shall be called a Nazarene' (2:23). Every target language retains the name with only minor phonological adaptation.

Nazareth, Nazara (place name) (12×) The town in lower Galilee where Jesus was raised, variously spelled Nazareth and Nazara in the manuscripts. All twelve occurrences designate the same location, from the Annunciation (Luke 1:26) to Jesus' departure for ministry (Mark 1:9). Spanish Nazaret, French and German Nazareth confirm a single toponym. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nazara, Nazaret, Nazareth | es: -Nazarét, Nazaret, Nazareth | fr: Nazara, Nazareth | de: Nazareth Matt 2:23; Matt 4:13; Matt 21:11; Mark 1:9; Luke 1:26

Ναζαρηνός G3479 N-AMS (6×)

Nazarene; a designation identifying Jesus as originating from Nazareth in Galilee

A gentilic title meaning 'one from Nazareth,' used exclusively in Mark and Luke to identify Jesus by his hometown. In the mouths of demons (Mark 1:24, Luke 4:34) it carries a note of recognition and alarm, while in ordinary speech it simply locates Jesus geographically. The Semitic form Nazarenos (rather than the Attic pattern) reflects the Aramaic-speaking milieu of Galilee, as Dalman noted. After the resurrection the title persists (Mark 16:6), now charged with deeper significance.

Nazarene, person from Nazareth (6×) A gentilic adjective designating Jesus as a native of Nazareth in lower Galilee. Used as a identifying title ('Jesus the Nazarene') by both human speakers and demons in Mark and Luke. The consistent rendering across languages —Spanish 'Nazareno,' German 'Nazarener,' French 'Nazarénien'— preserves the place-name origin. All six NT occurrences apply solely to Jesus, functioning as a de facto surname (Mark 1:24; 16:6). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nazarene, Nazarēne, Nazarēnon | es: Nazareno, Nazareno?, Nazarēnoû | fr: Nazarénien | de: Nazarener, Nazareth Mark 1:24; Mark 10:47; Mark 14:67; Mark 16:6; Luke 4:34

Ναζωραῖος G3480 N-GMP (13×)

Nazarene; a designation meaning 'of Nazareth,' applied to Jesus as a title and to his followers as a group.

A gentilic adjective turned virtual title, meaning 'the one from Nazareth.' Applied almost exclusively to Jesus throughout the Gospels and Acts, it identifies him by his hometown — the obscure Galilean village from which Nathanael asked, 'Can anything good come?' (John 1:46). Matthew 2:23 sees in the name a fulfillment of prophecy: 'He shall be called a Nazarene.' The title appears on the cross inscription (John 19:19), in Peter's Pentecost sermon (Acts 2:22), in apostolic healing formulas (Acts 3:6; 4:10), and even on the lips of the risen Christ identifying himself to Paul (Acts 22:8). In Acts 24:5 it extends to Jesus' followers as 'the sect of the Nazarenes,' showing how a geographic label became a confessional marker.

Nazarene (title of Jesus / his followers) (13×) A designation meaning 'from Nazareth,' functioning as a title for Jesus and as a group name for his followers. It appears on the cross (John 19:19), in apostolic proclamation and healing (Acts 2:22; 3:6; 4:10), in Jesus' self-identification to Paul (Acts 22:8), and as a label for the early Christian movement (Acts 24:5, 'the sect of the Nazarenes'). The multilingual evidence transliterates rather than translates (French Nazaréen, German Nazarener, Spanish Nazareno), preserving the gentilic form across all languages and confirming its single unified sense as a geographic-turned-messianic identifier. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: NAZARENE, Nazarene, Nazōraians | es: NAZŌRAÎOS, Nazareno, Nazōraios | fr: Nazaréen, Nazoréen | de: Nazarener, Nazoräer Matt 2:23; Matt 26:71; Luke 18:37; John 18:5; John 18:7

Ναθάμ G3481 N-GMS (1×)

Nathan, a prophet during David and Solomon's reigns, and an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy

The name Nathan (Hebrew 'he has given') most famously belongs to the prophet who confronted David over Bathsheba (2 Samuel 12). In Luke 3:31, however, Nathan is identified as a son of David, an ancestor in Jesus' lineage distinct from the better-known prophet. This Nathan appears in 1 Chronicles 3:5 as one of the sons born to David in Jerusalem. Luke's genealogy traces Jesus through Nathan rather than Solomon, diverging from Matthew's royal line and perhaps emphasizing a non-royal, priestly lineage through Mary or a different legal inheritance.

(1×) Refers to Nathan son of David, an ancestor in the Lukan genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:31). The name is uniformly preserved across languages, reflecting its status as a well-known Hebrew name. The genealogical placement is theologically significant: Luke's tracing through Nathan rather than Solomon highlights Jesus' connection to David outside the troubled royal succession. NATHAN PROPHET NAME
en: Nathan | es: Nathan | fr: Nathan | de: Nathan Luke 3:31

Ναθαναήλ G3482 N-NMS (6×)

Nathanael; a disciple of Jesus, probably identical with Bartholomew

An indeclinable Hebrew name meaning 'God has given' (from netan + El), borne by the disciple whom Philip brought to Jesus in John 1:45-49. Nathanael's initial skepticism ('Can anything good come from Nazareth?') yields to dramatic confession when Jesus reveals supernatural knowledge of him under the fig tree. He reappears in John 21:2 at the post-resurrection fishing scene, identified as being from Cana of Galilee. Most scholars equate him with Bartholomew of the Synoptic lists.

(6×) The personal name of a disciple from Cana of Galilee, introduced to Jesus by Philip (John 1:45-49) and present at the Sea of Tiberias appearance (John 21:2). The Hebrew etymon netanel ('gift of God') is preserved uniformly across translations—'Nathanael' in English, French, German, and Spanish alike. His encounter with Jesus moves from skeptical inquiry to the climactic confession 'Rabbi, you are the Son of God; you are the King of Israel' (John 1:49). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nathanaël | es: Nathanaél | fr: Nathanaël | de: Nathanael John 1:45; John 1:46; John 1:47; John 1:48; John 1:49

ναί G3483 Prtcl (34×)

Yes; indeed; an affirmative particle expressing strong agreement, assent, or solemn confirmation

A simple but weighty word of affirmation. In the Gospels, Jesus uses it to confirm truth with striking directness: 'Let your yes be yes' (Matt 5:37). It appears in heartfelt responses to Jesus' questions, as when the blind men affirm their faith (Matt 9:28), and in moments of divine approval, as in the Father's good pleasure (Matt 11:26). Spanish 'Sí' and German 'Ja' mirror its force. Paul even calls Christ the ultimate 'Yes' of God's promises (2 Cor 1:20), elevating a common particle into a theological statement about divine faithfulness.

yes (34×) An emphatic affirmative response or solemn confirmation — 'yes, indeed, certainly.' Used both in direct replies to questions (Matt 9:28; 13:51) and as a rhetorical intensifier affirming prophetic truth (Matt 11:9). The multilingual glosses uniformly render it as a simple affirmative (French 'oui,' Spanish 'sí'), reflecting its straightforward semantic core, yet in context it often carries the weight of an oath or covenant commitment. MANNER ADVERBS
en: Yes, yes | es: Sí, Sí„ sí | fr: oui | de: Ja, ja Matt 5:37; Matt 9:28; Matt 11:9; Matt 11:26

Ναίν G3484 N-AFS (1×)

Nain, a village in Galilee where Jesus raised a widow's son from the dead

Nain lies in southern Galilee, near Mount Tabor, about six miles southeast of Nazareth. Luke 7:11-17 recounts Jesus' compassion upon encountering a funeral procession: the only son of a widow being carried out for burial. Jesus touched the bier, commanded the young man to rise, and gave him back to his mother—an act evoking Elijah's resurrection of the widow's son at Zarephath (1 Kings 17:17-24). The village name may derive from a Hebrew root meaning 'pleasant' or 'pasture.' This miracle foreshadows the greater resurrection Jesus himself would undergo and validates his identity as the promised prophet greater than Elijah.

(1×) A geographic place name denoting the village in Galilee where Jesus performed a notable resurrection miracle. The multilingual glosses preserve the name with phonetic variations (Spanish 'Naïn', French 'Naïn'). The domain (Names of Persons and Places) reflects its role as a geographic identifier rather than a common noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nain | es: Naïn | fr: Naïn | de: Ναΐν Luke 7:11

νᾱός G3485 N-GMS (45×)

Temple, sanctuary; the inner shrine of God's dwelling, or a pagan model shrine

The Greek word for the inner sanctuary or temple proper, as distinct from hieron which denotes the broader temple complex including courts and porticos. In the New Testament, naos refers overwhelmingly to the sacred dwelling place of God – whether the physical temple in Jerusalem, Christ's body as temple (John 2:19-21), or believers as God's temple (1 Corinthians 3:16). In Revelation, the heavenly naos opens to reveal God's presence. A single occurrence in Acts 19:24 applies the term to the miniature silver shrines of Artemis crafted by Demetrius, a commercial and pagan usage that every major translation language renders identically to the sacred sense, making context the only disambiguator.

1. temple, sanctuary (inner shrine) (44×) The inner sanctuary or temple proper as the dwelling place of deity, covering 44 of 45 occurrences. Used for the Jerusalem temple's holy place (Matthew 23:16-17, where Jesus distinguishes swearing by the naos from swearing by its gold), for Christ's body (John 2:19-21), for believers corporately (1 Corinthians 3:16-17, 2 Corinthians 6:16), and for the heavenly temple in Revelation (11:19, 15:5-8). Spanish santuario sometimes distinguishes this from the broader templo, but most languages – French temple, German Tempel, Korean seonggeon – use a single form, relying on the hieron/naos distinction that Greek itself provides. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: temple | es: santuario, templo | fr: temple | de: Tempel Matt 23:16; Matt 23:17; Matt 23:21; Matt 23:35

2. shrine (pagan or handmade) (1×) A miniature shrine or model temple, specifically the silver replicas of Artemis's temple made by Demetrius the silversmith at Ephesus (Acts 19:24). This is the sole pagan and commercial usage of naos in the New Testament. While French, German, and Spanish render it with the same word as the sacred temple, the diminutive and plural context (naous argurous, 'silver shrines') together with the pagan deity mark this as functionally distinct – a manufactured religious commodity rather than a place of divine indwelling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: shrines | es: templos | fr: temple | de: Tempel Acts 19:24

Ναούμ G3486 N-GMS (1×)

Nahum (Hebrew 'comforted'), an ancestor of Jesus listed in Luke's genealogy

Nahum appears in Luke 3:25 as part of the post-exilic genealogical chain linking Jesus to David and Abraham. The name is identical to that of the minor prophet Nahum, who prophesied Nineveh's fall in the seventh century BC, though the genealogical Nahum is a distinct individual. In Hebrew, the name means 'comfort' or 'consolation,' sharing a root with Nehemiah and the verb נָחַם (nacham). Luke's inclusion of otherwise obscure ancestors emphasizes the historical particularity of Jesus' incarnation—God's Messiah comes through real people in real time, not through myth or legend.

(1×) A personal name in the Lukan genealogy, distinct from the prophet Nahum. The multilingual glosses render the name with minor variations (Spanish 'Naoúm', French 'Nahum') reflecting different transliteration traditions. The theological weight rests on the genealogical function: Jesus' human lineage is anchored in Israel's covenantal history, even through generations known only to God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7741 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Naoum | es: Naoúm | fr: Nahum | de: Ναοὺμ Luke 3:25

νάρδος G3487 N-GFS (2×)

nard, a costly aromatic oil derived from the spikenard plant

An expensive perfume extracted from the roots and stems of the nard plant (Nardostachys jatamansi), native to the Himalayas. Both Gospel occurrences describe the anointing of Jesus—by an unnamed woman in Mark 14:3 and by Mary of Bethany in John 12:3. The extravagant gesture (worth a year's wages) provoked criticism but Jesus defended it as prophetic preparation for His burial. The exotic origin and high cost of the oil underscore the worshiper's lavish devotion.

(2×) The precious ointment of spikenard, valued for its fragrance and rarity. Ancient sources distinguish several varieties (Celtic, Syrian, mountain), but the biblical nard is likely the genuine Indian/Himalayan variety, transported along spice routes at great expense. The Semitic loanword (Babylonian 'lardu') reflects its foreign origin. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'nardo,' French 'nard,' German 'Narde') preserves the exotic term, matching the Gospel narratives' emphasis on the oil's extraordinary worth. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: of-nard | es: de-nardo | fr: nard | de: Narde Mark 14:3; John 12:3

νάρκισσ-ος G3488 N-GMS (1×)

Narcissus, a Roman whose household contained believers greeted by Paul

In Romans 16:11, Paul sends greetings to 'those in the household of Narcissus who are in the Lord.' The name was common in Rome, and some scholars identify this Narcissus with Tiberius Claudius Narcissus, a wealthy and powerful freedman under Emperor Claudius. If so, his household slaves and dependents would have formed a sizable group, some of whom had come to faith in Christ. The Greek word also denotes the narcissus flower, known in antiquity for its narcotic properties—hence the mythological figure who fell in love with his own reflection. Paul's greeting highlights the penetration of the gospel into influential Roman households, even those connected to the imperial court.

(1×) A personal name referring to a Roman whose household members were Christians. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Narcissus' with phonetic variations (Spanish 'Narkíssou', French 'Narcisse', German 'Narzissus'). The domain (Names) is clear, though the social significance—potential connection to an imperial freedman—enriches the historical context of early Christianity's spread. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: of-Narkissos | es: de-Narkíssou | fr: Narcisse | de: Narzissus Rom 16:11

ναυᾱγ-έω G3489 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to suffer shipwreck, experience the destruction of one's vessel at sea

The catastrophic loss of a ship due to storm, rocks, or other maritime disaster. Paul uses the term literally once, recounting his three shipwrecks in 2 Corinthians 11:25 as part of his apostolic hardships. Metaphorically, he warns Timothy about those who have 'shipwrecked their faith' (1 Timothy 1:19), extending the nautical disaster to describe spiritual ruin. The ancient world's dependence on sea travel made shipwreck a vivid image of sudden, total loss—whether of vessel or faith.

(2×) To be shipwrecked, suffer the loss and destruction of one's ship. The literal sense appears in Paul's catalog of sufferings—three distinct maritime disasters, one of which left him adrift for a night and day. The metaphorical extension to faith-shipwreck in 1 Timothy shows how maritime catastrophe provided a powerful analogy for spiritual disaster. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'naufragé,' French 'naufrage,' German 'Schiffbruch erleiden') maintain the nautical imagery across both literal and metaphorical uses. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: I-was-shipwrecked, shipwrecked | es: naufragaron, naufragé | fr: naufrage, ἐναυάγησαν | de: Schiffbruch-erleiden 2Cor 11:25; 1Tim 1:19

ναύκληρ-ος G3490 N-DMS (1×)

a shipowner, ship captain, or sailing master responsible for a vessel's navigation and operation

In Acts 27:11, the Roman centurion Julius heeds the advice of the ship's captain (ναύκληρος) and pilot rather than Paul's warning not to sail. The term originally denoted a shipowner who also captained his own merchant vessel, though later it could refer to any master mariner. Classical sources distinguish the ναύκληρος from the helmsman (κυβερνήτης) who handled steering, and from the merchant (ἔμπορος) who owned cargo. Luke's narrative shows the centurion deferring to professional maritime judgment—a reasonable decision that nevertheless leads the ship into the storm Paul had predicted.

(1×) Refers specifically to the ship captain or master on Paul's voyage to Rome. The multilingual glosses emphasize ownership and command (English 'ship-owner', Spanish 'dueño del barco' meaning 'owner of the boat', French 'armateur' meaning 'ship operator'). The domain (Artifacts) seems slightly off—this is a social role involving artifacts, but the term denotes a person, not the ship itself. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: ship-owner | es: dueño-del-barco | fr: armateur | de: ναυκλήρῳ Acts 27:11

ναῦς G3491 N-AFS (1×)

a ship or sea-going vessel, especially those used for trade or warfare in the ancient Mediterranean

Acts 27:41 describes the moment Paul's ship runs aground on Malta: 'they struck a reef and the ship (ναῦς) was broken apart by the violence of the waves.' Though the more common New Testament term for ship is πλοῖον, Luke uses the classical poetic word ναῦς here, perhaps for stylistic variation or to evoke epic seafaring literature. In Homer and classical texts, ναῦς often appears in descriptions of naval warfare and heroic voyages. The Attic declension of the word is notoriously irregular, a fact that survives in Luke's single use of the accusative form.

(1×) Denotes the large grain ship carrying Paul to Rome, which ultimately wrecked on the coast of Malta. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'ship' or 'vessel' (Spanish 'nave', French 'navire'), with German preserving the Greek form. The domain (Artifacts) is appropriate, though the term's literary register and classical pedigree give it a slightly elevated tone compared to the more prosaic πλοῖον. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: ship | es: nave | fr: navire | de: ναῦν Acts 27:41

ναύτ-ης G3492 N-NMP (3×)

sailors, seamen, mariners

Sailors are those who work aboard ships, professionals of maritime travel and trade. Luke describes the ship's 'sailors' seeking to escape Paul's storm-tossed vessel (Acts 27:27, 30). In John's apocalyptic vision, sailors lament Babylon's fall, mourning their lost livelihood (Rev 18:17). The term consistently denotes those whose occupation is seafaring. Spanish 'marineros' and French 'marin' universally render this maritime profession.

(3×) Sailors, seamen, or mariners—those whose occupation is working aboard ships. Acts 27:27, 30 describes the sailors on Paul's ship attempting to abandon vessel during the storm. Revelation 18:17 includes sailors among those mourning Babylon's economic collapse. The Greek ναύτης derives from ναῦς (ship) and straightforwardly designates maritime professionals. Universal translation as 'marineros/marin/Seeleute' across languages reflects the clear occupational category. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12207 WITH 3 SENSES

en: sailors | es: marineros | fr: Seeleute, marin | de: Seeleute, ναυτῶν, ναῦται Acts 27:27; Acts 27:30; Rev 18:17

Ναχώρ G3493 N-GMS (1×)

Nahor, Abraham's grandfather and an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy

Nahor appears in Luke 3:34 as the son of Serug and father of Terah, placing him two generations before Abraham. Genesis 11:22-25 records that Nahor lived 148 years, fathering Terah at age 29. The name also belongs to Abraham's brother (Genesis 11:26-27), creating occasional confusion in genealogical discussions. In Hebrew, Nahor (נָחוֹר) may derive from a root meaning 'snorting' or 'snoring,' though the etymology is uncertain. Luke's inclusion of these antediluvian and patriarchal names grounds Jesus' lineage in the deep past, tracing Israel's covenant history back to the dawn of human civilization.

(1×) The personal name of Abraham's grandfather in the Lukan genealogy. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nahor' or 'Nachor' with minor phonetic variation (Spanish 'Nachór', French 'Nachor'). The domain (Names of Persons and Places) reflects its function as a genealogical identifier linking Jesus to the patriarchal narratives of Genesis. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachōr | es: Nachór | fr: Nachor | de: Ναχὼρ Luke 3:34

νεᾱν-ίας G3494 N-GMS (3×)

young man, youth, a male in the vigor of early adulthood

A young man is a male in youthful vigor, past boyhood but not yet settled in maturity. Witnesses laid their garments at the feet of 'a young man named Saul' at Stephen's stoning (Acts 7:58). Eutychus, 'a young man,' fell from a window during Paul's long sermon (Acts 20:9). Paul was warned by 'the son of Paul's sister, a young man' (Acts 23:17). The term marks energetic young adulthood. Spanish 'joven' and French 'jeune homme' consistently identify this life stage.

(3×) A young man or youth, a male in the stage of early adulthood marked by vigor and strength. All three NT occurrences are in Acts: Saul at Stephen's martyrdom (7:58), Eutychus who fell from the window (20:9), and Paul's nephew who warned of the ambush (23:17). The Greek νεανίας emphasizes the youthful, active phase between adolescence and established maturity. Across languages —'joven' (Spanish), 'jeune homme' (French)—the term designates this clear life stage. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH

en: of-a-young-man, young-man | es: de-joven, joven | fr: jeune-homme | de: νεανίαν, νεανίας, νεανίου Acts 7:58; Acts 20:9; Acts 23:17

νεᾱνισκ-ος G3495 N-NMP (11×)

Young man, youth — a male in his prime, from adolescent to young adult; sometimes an angelic figure

The noun νεανίσκος (neaniskos) designates a young man roughly between adolescence and full maturity. The rich young man who asks Jesus about eternal life is a neaniskos (Matt 19:20, 22), as is the unnamed youth who flees naked from Gethsemane (Mark 14:51), a detail unique to Mark and endlessly debated. At the empty tomb, the women encounter a neaniskos in a white robe (Mark 16:5) — likely an angelic figure, though Mark's choice of this human word is striking. Luke uses it for the widow of Nain's dead son whom Jesus raises (Luke 7:14), and Acts records Peter quoting Joel's prophecy that 'your young men shall see visions' (Acts 2:17). Spanish 'joven' and French 'jeune homme' capture the age range.

young man, youth (11×) A young man in his physical prime, from late adolescence through early adulthood. Applied to the rich young ruler (Matt 19:20, 22), the young man who fled naked from Gethsemane (Mark 14:51), the widow of Nain's dead son (Luke 7:14), and Eutychus who fell from the window (Acts 20:9). Joel's prophecy quoted in Acts 2:17 promises that young men will see visions. Spanish 'joven' and German 'Jüngling' mark the same life stage. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH

en: Young-man, a-young-man, young-man | es: joven, jóvenes | fr: jeune-homme | de: Juengling, Jüngling Matt 19:20; Matt 19:22; Mark 14:51; Mark 16:5; Luke 7:14

Νεάπολις G3496

Neapolis, 'new city' (proper name of several cities in Greek world)

Νεάπολις ('New City') was a common name for Greek foundations throughout the Mediterranean, much like 'Newport' or 'Newton' in English. Several cities bore this name from the 5th century BC onward. The later unified form Νεάπολις (genitive Νεαπόλεως) replaced the earlier two-word construction. Inhabitants were called Νεοπολίται or later Νεαπολῖται. The name reflects Greek colonial expansion and the optimism of founding new settlements.

Ναιμάν G3497 N-NMS (1×)

Naaman, the Syrian commander healed of leprosy by Elisha, cited by Jesus as an example of God's mercy to Gentiles

Jesus references Naaman the Syrian in Luke 4:27 during his sermon at Nazareth: 'There were many lepers in Israel in the time of Elisha, yet none of them was cleansed, only Naaman the Syrian.' The original account in 2 Kings 5 tells how this powerful military officer, afflicted with a skin disease, sought healing from the prophet Elisha. Despite initial resistance to the simple command to wash in the Jordan, Naaman obeyed and was cleansed. Jesus' allusion provokes his hometown audience by suggesting God's favor extends beyond ethnic Israel—a theme that will dominate Luke-Acts. Naaman becomes a type of the Gentile who receives divine grace through humble faith.

(1×) Refers to the Syrian military commander whose healing is recounted in 2 Kings 5 and cited by Jesus as a prophetic precedent for Gentile inclusion. The multilingual glosses render the name uniformly (Spanish 'Naamán', French 'Naaman'), reflecting its status as a well-known Old Testament figure. The domain (Names) is appropriate, though the theological significance—God's sovereignty in choosing whom to heal—transcends mere identification. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naiman | es: Naamán | fr: Naaman | de: Ναιμὰν Luke 4:27

νεκρός G3498 Adj-AMP (130×)

Dead — as a substantive, the dead (deceased persons collectively); as an adjective, lifeless, whether literally or figuratively.

Nekros is among the most theologically charged words in the New Testament, appearing at the heart of Christianity's central claim: resurrection from the dead. As a substantive ('the dead'), it denotes the collective realm of deceased persons from which Christ rose and believers will rise (1 Cor 15:12-21). As an adjective, it describes both literal death — the young man at Nain (Luke 7:15), Eutychus after his fall (Acts 20:9) — and a powerful figurative state: the prodigal son was 'dead and is alive again' (Luke 15:24, 32), and James declares faith without works 'dead' (Jas 2:26). Spanish muertos, French mort, and German Tote/tot preserve this same substantive-adjective flexibility.

1. the dead (persons) (111×) The dead as a collective substantive — deceased persons considered as a group, especially in eschatological and resurrection contexts. Central to New Testament proclamation: 'God raised him from the dead' (Rom 10:9), 'resurrection of the dead' (1 Cor 15:12-21), 'judge the living and the dead' (2 Tim 4:1). The 111 occurrences cluster heavily in Paul and Acts. All target languages use substantivized forms (muertos, mort, Tote), confirming the nominal reading. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: dead, dead-ones, the-dead | es: a-muertos, muertos | fr: mort | de: Tote, tot Matt 8:22; Matt 10:8; Matt 11:5; Matt 14:2

2. dead, lifeless, deceased (19×) Dead as an adjective describing a person or thing in a state of death — literal or metaphorical. Literally: the boy appeared dead (Mark 9:26), the widow's son sat up (Luke 7:15), Ananias fell dead (Acts 5:10). Figuratively: the prodigal was 'dead and alive again' (Luke 15:24, 32), Abraham's body 'as good as dead' (Rom 4:19), and faith without works is 'dead' (Jas 2:17, 26). Spanish distinguishes muerta/muertas (feminine/plural adjective), while German uses the bare adjective tot alongside the substantive Tote. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: dead, dead-man, of-a-dead-one | es: de-muerto, muerta, muertas | fr: mort | de: Tote, tot Mark 9:26; Luke 7:15; Luke 15:24; Luke 15:32; Acts 5:10

νεκρ-όω G3499 V-AMA-2P (3×)

put to death, mortify, make dead or ineffective

To mortify is to put to death or render powerless. Abraham's body was 'as good as dead' (Rom 4:19), yet he believed God's promise. Paul commands, 'Put to death what is earthly in you' (Col 3:5)—mortify sinful desires. Hebrews speaks of Sarah conceiving though she was 'past age,' from one 'as good as dead' (Heb 11:12). The term moves between literal death-state and metaphorical killing of sin. Spanish varies—'ya muerto,' 'haced morir'—between passive state and active command. German 'ertötet' (killed) captures the death-making force.

(3×) To make dead, render lifeless, or mortify—either describing a state of deadness or commanding active killing of sin. Romans 4:19 and Hebrews 11:12 use νεκρόω for Abraham's physically 'deadened' reproductive capacity. Colossians 3:5 commands believers to actively 'put to death' earthly passions. The term spans from passive death-state to active mortification. Spanish distinguishes 'ya muerto' (already dead) from 'haced morir' (put to death), while the Greek root covers both passive condition and active killing. DEATH AND DYING

en: having-been-as-good-as-dead, having-died, put-to-death | es: Haced-morir, muerto, ya-muerto | fr: mis-à-mort, mortifier | de: ertoetet Rom 4:19; Col 3:5; Heb 11:12

νέκρ-ωσις G3500 N-AFS (2×)

deadness, the state of being lifeless or mortified

The condition of death or dying, whether physical or spiritual. Paul uses this term in two distinct but related contexts: Abraham's consideration of his own 'deadened' body and Sarah's barren womb (Romans 4:19), and the Christian's identification with 'the dying of Jesus' carried in the body (2 Corinthians 4:10). The word moves between biological death (reproductive incapacity) and redemptive death (participation in Christ's suffering), showing how Paul theologizes bodily realities.

(2×) The state of being dead or mortified, encompassing both physical sterility and spiritual identification with Christ's death. In Romans 4:19, it describes reproductive death—bodies past childbearing. In 2 Corinthians 4:10, it becomes a present, ongoing 'dying' (nekrōsis) that paradoxically manifests Christ's life. Cross-linguistic glosses distinguish between 'deadness/sterility' (Romans context) and 'dying/mortification' (2 Corinthians context), recognizing the term's range from state to process. DEATH AND DYING en: deadness, dying | es: esterilidad, muerte | fr: mortification | de: Erstorbenheit Rom 4:19; 2Cor 4:10

νέος G3501 Adj-GFS (24×)

Young, youthful; new, fresh, recently made; Nea (place name element meaning 'new')

The adjective neos (νέος) straddles two fundamental categories: youth in persons and newness in things. In the comparative form neoteros, it describes 'younger' sons, men, and women throughout Luke and the Pastorals (Luke 15:12-13; 1 Tim 5:1; Titus 2:4), while in its positive form it names 'new' wine poured into fresh wineskins (Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37-38) and the 'new lump' of unleavened dough (1 Cor 5:7). A single geographical use survives in Acts 16:11, where Nean (Νέαν) forms part of the compound Neapolis, 'New City,' the Macedonian port where Paul first set foot in Europe. Spanish distinguishes joven (young) from nuevo (new), mapping the bifurcation cleanly.

1. young, younger (of age) (12×) Young or younger in age, used both as adjective and substantive for persons. The prodigal is the 'younger' son (Luke 15:12-13), the 'younger' should serve the elder (Luke 22:26), and the Pastoral Epistles instruct younger men and younger women (1 Tim 5:1, 11; Titus 2:4, 6; 1 Pet 5:5). Spanish jóvenes/más-joven and German neu (in its 'youthful' application) track the comparative neoteros, which dominates this cluster. The sense implies not just biological age but social position relative to elders. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS en: young-women, younger, younger-men | es: a-más-jóvenes, jóvenes, más-joven | fr: jeune, nouveau | de: Nea, neu Luke 15:12; Luke 15:13; Luke 22:26; John 21:18; Acts 5:6

2. new, fresh (11×) New or fresh, describing things recently made or produced as opposed to what is old or worn. The parable of wineskins turns on putting new wine (neos oinos) into new wineskins (Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37-38). Paul calls the Corinthians a 'new lump' (1 Cor 5:7) and contrasts the 'new man' renewed in knowledge (Col 3:10). Hebrews 12:24 speaks of 'new covenant' blood. Spanish nuevo/nueva and French nouveau converge on temporal freshness — what has just come into being — distinguishing neos from kainos, which stresses qualitative novelty. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS

en: new | es: nueva, nuevo | fr: jeune, nouveau | de: Nea, neu Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37

3. Nea (place name element) (1×) The feminine form Nean used as a geographical name element in the compound Neapolis ('New City') at Acts 16:11, naming the Macedonian port (modern Kavala, Greece) where Paul, Silas, and Timothy landed after the vision of the man from Macedonia. This is a frozen toponym rather than a living adjective, but it preserves the original adjectival meaning 'new.' Spanish Néa and German Nea transliterate directly, confirming its proper-noun status. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS en: Nea | es: Néa | fr: jeune | de: Nea Acts 16:11

νεοσσός G3502 N-AMP (1×)

young birds, nestlings, or chicks; used figuratively of children or those requiring care and protection

Luke 2:24 notes that Mary and Joseph offered 'a pair of turtledoves or two young pigeons (νοσσούς)' at Jesus' presentation in the temple, fulfilling the purification requirement of Leviticus 12:8 for those who could not afford a lamb. The term denotes newly hatched or very young birds still dependent on parental care. Classical Greek extends the metaphor to human infants and even to the young of other animals. The offering Mary brings signals her poverty yet also her obedience to the law. Simeon and Anna's subsequent recognition of the child Jesus adds dramatic irony: the parents bring the humble sacrifice of the poor, unaware they present the Lamb of God who will take away the sin of the world.

(1×) Refers specifically to young pigeons offered as a temple sacrifice by Mary and Joseph. The multilingual glosses vary between 'young' (English, emphasizing age) and specific bird terms (Spanish 'pichones' meaning 'squabs', French 'poussin' meaning 'chick'). The domain (People) seems misassigned—these are birds, not people, though the metaphorical extension to human young exists in classical literature. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: young | es: pichones | fr: poussin | de: νοσσοὺς Luke 2:24

νεότης G3503 N-GFS (4×)

Youth; the period of early life, or the condition of being young

Denotes the season of life from childhood through young adulthood, often invoked when someone reflects on long commitment. The rich ruler tells Jesus he has kept the commandments 'from my youth' (Mark 10:20; Luke 18:21), and Paul likewise traces his life story back to his youth among his nation (Acts 26:4). Timothy receives the reverse application — do not let anyone despise your youth (1 Tim 4:12) — turning the word from a backward glance into a present challenge. Spanish juventud, French jeunesse, and German Jugend all converge on this single temporal sense.

(4×) The period of early life, from childhood through young adulthood, viewed as a formative stage of character and habit. In Mark 10:20 and Luke 18:21, speakers cite their youth as the starting point of lifelong Torah observance. Paul appeals to it as biographical evidence in Acts 26:4. In 1 Tim 4:12, Paul reverses the usual nostalgic framing — Timothy's youth is not a credential but a potential objection to be overcome by exemplary conduct. All major translations (Spanish juventud, French jeunesse, German Jugend) treat this as a unified temporal concept. YOUTH PERIOD

en: youth | es: juventud | fr: jeunesse, nouveau-né | de: Jugend, νεότητος Mark 10:20; Luke 18:21; Acts 26:4; 1Tim 4:12

νεό-φῠτος G3504 Adj-AMS (1×)

newly planted or recently converted; a new believer or recent convert to the faith

Paul warns Timothy in 1 Timothy 3:6 not to appoint a recent convert (νεόφυτος) as an overseer, lest he become puffed up with pride and fall into the devil's condemnation. The term literally means 'newly planted,' evoking agricultural imagery of a sapling not yet firmly rooted. Classical usage applies the word to young plants and seedlings. Paul's concern is practical: spiritual maturity requires time. A new believer lacks the tested character, doctrinal grounding, and humility necessary for church leadership. Premature elevation can stunt growth and invite disaster, both for the individual and for the congregation entrusted to his care.

(1×) Denotes a person newly converted to Christianity, lacking the maturity and experience necessary for leadership. The multilingual glosses capture both the agricultural metaphor ('newly planted' implicit in the root) and the ecclesiastical application (English 'new convert', Spanish 'recién convertido', German 'Neubekehrter' meaning 'newly converted'). The domain (Time) reflects the temporal aspect—newness is relative to duration in the faith. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS

en: a-new-convert | es: recién-convertido | fr: νεόφυτον | de: Neubekehrter 1Tim 3:6

Νέρων G3505

Nero, Roman emperor (proper name; reign 54-68 AD)

The name of the Roman emperor who ruled from AD 54 to 68. Nero appears in the Received Text's subscription to 2 Timothy, though this reflects later scribal tradition rather than original Pauline composition. His reign saw both cultural patronage and notorious persecution of Christians following the Great Fire of Rome in AD 64. The name itself comes from the Sabine word for 'strong' or 'vigorous.'

νεύω G3506 V-PIA-3S (2×)

to nod or motion as a signal, communicate through gesture

To make a gesture, typically with the head or hand, to convey a message without words. Both New Testament occurrences involve communication through signs: Peter nods to the beloved disciple at the Last Supper to ask Jesus about the betrayer (John 13:24), and the governor Felix motions to Paul to speak in his defense (Acts 24:10). The verb captures those moments where speech is inappropriate or impossible, and gesture must carry the message.

(2×) To nod, beckon, or signal through bodily movement. Classical usage shows head-nodding for assent or command, hand-gestures for beckoning. The Johannine passage suggests subtle communication —Peter's silent signal across the table. Luke's usage shows formal court protocol—the governor's official gesture granting permission to speak. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'hacer señas,' French 'faire signe,' German 'zunicken') emphasize non-verbal communication, capturing both informal and formal gesture contexts. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11301 WITH 5 SENSES

en: having-motioned, nods | es: Hace-señas, habiéndole-hecho-seña | fr: faire-signe | de: zunicken, νεύσαντος John 13:24; Acts 24:10

νεφέλη G3507 N-NFP (25×)

Cloud; atmospheric vapor mass, often signifying God's veiled presence or glory in theophany and eschatological contexts

In the New Testament, nephelē refers to a cloud as both a meteorological phenomenon and a potent symbol of divine presence. At the Transfiguration a bright cloud overshadows Jesus and the disciples, and a voice speaks from within it (Matt 17:5; Mark 9:7). Jesus prophesies that the Son of Man will come 'on the clouds of heaven' (Matt 24:30; 26:64), echoing Daniel 7:13. The cloud thus bridges the visible and invisible, veiling God's glory while simultaneously revealing it. Every New Testament occurrence carries at least an overtone of theophanic weight.

cloud (25×) An atmospheric mass of condensed water vapor that in biblical usage consistently carries theophanic and eschatological significance. The overshadowing cloud at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:5; Mark 9:7; Luke 9:34) reprises the Exodus pillar-cloud motif, while the Parousia clouds (Matt 24:30; Rev 1:7) signal final divine intervention. Translations uniformly use cognates — Spanish 'nube,' French 'nuée,' German 'Wolke' — reflecting the word's stable, unambiguous reference. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: a-cloud, cloud, clouds | es: nube, nubes | fr: nuée | de: Wolke Matt 17:5; Matt 24:30; Matt 26:64; Mark 9:7

Νεφθαλείμ G3508 N-GMS (3×)

Naphtali, son of Jacob, tribe of Israel, and the tribal territory

Naphtali (Hebrew נַפְתָּלִי) was the sixth son of Jacob, born to Bilhah, Rachel's maidservant. His descendants formed one of the twelve tribes of Israel, with territory in northern Galilee. Matthew quotes Isaiah, identifying Jesus' ministry region as 'the land of Naphtali' (Matt 4:13, 15). Revelation lists Naphtali among the sealed tribes (Rev 7:6). The name means 'my wrestling,' recalling Rachel's struggle. Consistent transliteration across languages—'Nephthalím,' 'Nephthali'—preserves the Hebrew original.

(3×) Naphtali, the son of Jacob and tribal ancestor, and by extension the tribe and territory bearing his name. Matthew 4:13, 15 cite Isaiah's prophecy about 'the land of Naphtali' where Jesus began his Galilean ministry. Revelation 7:6 names Naphtali among the 144,000 sealed from Israel's tribes. The Hebrew נַפְתָּלִי means 'my wrestling' (Gen 30:8). Transliteration across languages ('Nephthalím,' 'Nephthali') maintains the proper name's identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nephthalim, of-Nephthalim | es: de-Nephthaleím, de-Nephthalím | fr: Nephthali | de: Naphtali, Νεφθαλίμ Matt 4:13; Matt 4:15; Rev 7:6

νέφος G3509 N-ANS (1×)

a cloud or large gathering; used literally of atmospheric clouds or metaphorically of multitudes

Hebrews 12:1 opens with a powerful metaphor: 'Therefore, since we are surrounded by such a great cloud (νέφος) of witnesses, let us throw off everything that hinders and the sin that so easily entangles.' The term denotes a dense cloud or mass, used in classical Greek for atmospheric clouds, swarms of people, or thick concentrations of anything. The author pictures the faithful of Hebrews 11 as an amphitheater crowd watching the Christian race. Their testimony—recorded in Scripture and vindicated by God—both encourages and calls to accountability. The image combines intimacy (witnesses who care) with grandeur (a numberless throng spanning generations).

(1×) Used metaphorically for the great company of Old Testament saints who bear witness to the life of faith. The multilingual glosses preserve the literal 'cloud' (Spanish 'nube', German 'Wolke'), letting the figurative sense emerge from context. The domain (Geographical Objects) applies to the literal atmospheric meaning but misses the metaphorical extension to human multitudes—a common usage in classical literature. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: cloud | es: nube | fr: Wolke | de: Wolke Heb 12:1

νεφρ-ός G3510 N-AMP (1×)
the kidneys; used metaphorically in biblical literature for the innermost seat of emotions and moral discernment Revelation 2:23 contains the risen Christ's declaration to the church in Thyatira: 'I am he who searches hearts and kidneys (νεφρούς), and I will repay each of you according to your deeds.' In Hebrew anthropology, the kidneys represent the deepest inner life—desires, motives, conscience—alongside or synonymous with the heart. The metaphor appears throughout the Old Testament (Psalms 7:9; Jeremiah 11:20), often in contexts of divine judgment. Classical Greek uses the term literally for the physical organs, but biblical usage draws on Semitic thought patterns. Christ's claim to search the 'kidneys and hearts' asserts his omniscience: nothing is hidden from his penetrating gaze, not even the most secret intentions.

(1×) Refers metaphorically to the innermost thoughts, motives, and affections that God alone can fully know and judge. The multilingual glosses split between literal anatomy (Spanish 'riñones', French/German 'Nieren' meaning 'kidneys') and metaphorical interpretation (English 'minds'). The domain (Body Parts) captures the literal referent but misses the metaphorical freight—kidneys here symbolize the moral and emotional core of human personhood. KIDNEYS INMOST BEING en: minds | es: riñones | fr: Nieren | de: Nieren Rev 2:23

νεώκορ-ος G3511 N-AMS (1×)
a temple keeper, temple warden, or city honored as guardian of a deity's shrine or imperial cult temple
In Acts 19:35, the town clerk of Ephesus defends the city's status: 'Who doesn't know that the city of the Ephesians is temple keeper (νεωκόρος) of the great Artemis and of the image that fell from heaven?' The term originally denoted a temple servant or sacristan responsible for maintaining a shrine. In the imperial period, Greek cities competed for the honorary title νεωκόρος, awarded to cities that built temples for emperor worship or major deities. Ephesus proudly claimed this status for the Artemision, one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world. The clerk's speech seeks to calm the riot by reminding the crowd that Ephesus's honor is secure—Paul poses no real threat to Artemis or to the city's prestige.

(1×) Refers to Ephesus's role as guardian and host city of the temple of Artemis. The multilingual glosses emphasize custodianship (English 'temple keeper', Spanish 'guardiana del templo' meaning 'guardian of the temple', French 'gardien du temple'). The domain (Nature, Class, Example) seems inappropriate—this is a civic-religious title and social role, better suited to domains of Religion or Social Structures. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: temple-keeper | es: guardiana-del-templo | fr: gardien-du-temple | de: νεωκόρον Acts 19:35

νεωτερ-ικός G3512 Adj-AFP (1×)
youthful, characteristic of youth; especially the passions, impulses, or vices associated with young people Paul exhorts Timothy in 2 Timothy 2:22: 'Flee youthful passions (νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας) and pursue righteousness, faith, love, and peace.' The adjective denotes what is natural or typical to youth—not necessarily sinful in itself, but prone to excess and immaturity. Classical usage applies the term to youthful vigor, impetuosity, and lack of discipline. Timothy, though perhaps in his thirties, is still 'young' relative to his leadership role and the older members of his congregation. Paul's counsel is pastoral: recognize the vulnerabilities of your stage of life, guard against impulsiveness (whether sexual, relational, or ideological), and cultivate the settled virtues of mature faith.

(1×) Describes the passions or desires characteristic of youth that Timothy is to flee. The multilingual glosses emphasize age-appropriateness (English 'youthful', Spanish 'juveniles', German 'jugendlich' meaning 'adolescent'). The domain (Time) reflects the temporal aspect—these are age-related temptations, though the moral dimension (Attitudes and Emotions) is equally prominent in the context. YOUTH PERIOD
en: youthful | es: juveniles | fr: νεωτερικὰς | de: jugendlich 2Tim 2:22

νή G3513 Prtcl (1×)
a particle of strong affirmation used in oaths, 'by' or 'I swear by' (followed by the thing invoked)
Paul employs a solemn oath in 1 Corinthians 15:31: 'I die every day—I swear it by (νή) the pride I have in you in Christ Jesus our Lord.' The particle νή introduces oaths in classical Greek, typically followed by the name of a god or sacred object. Athenian orators swore 'by Zeus' (νὴ Δία) or 'by the gods' (νὴ τοὺς θεούς) to emphasize the truth of their statements. Paul adapts the formula, swearing not by a deity but by his legitimate apostolic pride in the Corinthians—a rhetorical move that simultaneously affirms his claim and reminds them of their identity as his spiritual children. The oath underscores the seriousness of his point: resurrection is not optional doctrine but the heart of the gospel.

(1×) Functions as an oath particle introducing the thing by which Paul swears to validate his claim. The multilingual glosses preserve the prepositional force (English 'by', Spanish 'por', German 'bei'), though the formulaic oath context is less familiar in modern language. The domain (Nature, Class, Example) seems misassigned—this is a discourse particle, better suited to Communication or Modality domains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: by | es: por | fr: je-protège | de: bei 1Cor 15:31

νήθω G3514 V-PIA-3S (2×)
to spin thread or yarn, work fibers into thread
The domestic labor of drawing out and twisting fibers (wool, flax) into thread using a spindle—work typically done by women in the ancient world. Jesus uses this verb in His teaching about anxiety and divine provision: 'Consider the lilies... they neither toil nor spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these' (Matthew 6:28, Luke 12:27). The mundane craft becomes Jesus' illustration of how God clothes creation more beautifully than human industry can achieve.

(2×) To spin fibers into thread, the fundamental textile work that precedes weaving. Jesus contrasts human labor (spinning, weaving, clothing) with divine provision (lilies arrayed by God). The gendered nature of spinning in antiquity (women's work) adds dimension—even the most industrious domestic labor cannot match God's creative artistry. Cross-linguistic glosses are uniform (Spanish 'hilar,' French 'filer,' German spinning verb forms), all pointing to the specific craft of thread-making. LABOR AND TOIL
en: do-they-spin, spin | es: hilan | fr: filer | de: νήθει, νήθουσιν Matt 6:28; Luke 12:27

νηπῐ́-άζω G3515 V-PMA-2P (1×)
to be or act like an infant; to behave in a childish or immature manner
Paul issues a nuanced command in 1 Corinthians 14:20: 'Brothers and sisters, stop being infants (νηπιάζετε) in your thinking. In regard to evil be infants, but in your thinking be mature.' The verb derives from νήπιος ('infant' or 'child') and denotes childlike behavior. Paul's rhetoric is paradoxical: childishness in thought is a vice (lack of understanding, susceptibility to error), but childlikeness in relation to evil is a virtue (innocence, lack of malice). The Corinthians' obsession with showy spiritual gifts reveals intellectual and spiritual immaturity. Paul calls them to grow up—to pursue love and edification rather than self-display.

(1×) Describes the immature, childish thinking Paul rebukes in the Corinthians. The multilingual glosses render the verb as a command to remain children (Spanish 'sed niños' meaning 'be children', French 'être enfant' meaning 'to be a child', German 'Kinder sein' meaning 'to be children'). The domain (People) is somewhat apt, though the term describes a behavioral quality (immaturity) rather than a social

category. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: be-infants | es: sed-niños | fr: être-enfant | de: Kinder-sein 1Cor 14:20

νήπιος G3516 Adj-GMS (15×)

Infant, young child; figuratively, one who is spiritually immature or, rarely, gentle and tender.
Originally meaning a baby or small child, this adjective-noun spans from cradle to character. Jesus praises the Father for revealing truth to 'infants' rather than the wise (Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21), and the Psalms celebrate praise from the mouths of nursing babies (Matt 21:16). Paul repurposes the word to rebuke spiritual immaturity in Corinth and Galatia (1 Cor 3:1; Gal 4:1-3). A striking outlier appears in 1 Thessalonians 2:7, where several manuscripts read 'we became gentle (nepioi) among you,' evoking a nursing mother's tenderness. Spanish 'ninos/infantes', French 'enfant/petit-enfant', and German 'Unmundige' all track the age-based core, while the metaphorical extension to immaturity or gentleness requires context to surface.

1. infant, young child (12×) A literal infant or very young child. Jesus thanks the Father for revealing truth to 'nepioi' (Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21), and Paul calls the Corinthians infants in Christ (1 Cor 3:1). Spanish 'infantes/ninos', French 'enfant', and German 'Unmundige' all converge on the image of one too young to reason. Romans 2:20 uses it of the spiritually untaught who still need a guide. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: an-infant, infant, infants | es: a-infantes, a-niños, de-niños | fr: enfant, petit-enfant | de: Unmundige, νηπίοις, νηπίων Matt 11:25; Matt 21:16; Luke 10:21; Rom 2:20; 1Cor 3:1

2. immature, childish (2×) Spiritual or intellectual immaturity. In Galatians 4:1-3, Paul compares the heir who is still a minor ('nepios') to believers under the old covenant's guardianship. Spanish 'nino' and French 'petit-enfant' retain the child image, but the context clearly shifts from physical age to developmental stage in understanding. The contrast with mature heirs makes the metaphor pointed. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: child, children | es: niño, niños | fr: petit-enfant | de: Unmundige Gal 4:1; Gal 4:3

3. gentle, tender (1×) Gentle and tender, like a nursing mother. In 1 Thessalonians 2:7, a textual variant yields 'we were gentle (nepioi) among you, like a nursing mother.' This sense is rare and debated, but Spanish 'tiernos' (tender) uniquely captures the nurturing warmth. Here the infant image flips: Paul becomes the baby-soft caretaker rather than the baby. Only one occurrence supports this reading. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS
en: gentle | es: tiernos | fr: petit-enfant | de: Unmundige 1Thess 2:7

Νηρ-εύς G3517 N-AMS (1×)

Nereus, a Christian man greeted by Paul in Romans 16
Romans 16:15 includes greetings to 'Nereus and his sister, and Olympas and all the saints with them.' Nereus was a common name in the Roman empire, derived from the Greek sea god Nereus, father of the Nereids. The name appears in inscriptions associated with imperial households, suggesting Nereus may have been a slave or freedman. Paul's mention of Nereus's unnamed sister alongside him hints at close sibling bonds within the early Christian community. The clustering of several names together ('all the saints with them') suggests house churches or extended household networks—the primary organizational structure of first-century Christianity before dedicated church buildings existed.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Christian man in Rome greeted by Paul. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nereus' with minor phonetic variation (Spanish 'Nēréa', French 'Néréus'), reflecting the name's classical origin from Greek mythology. The domain (Names of Persons and Places) is straightforward; significance lies in the social and ecclesial networks implied by the greeting. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Nereus | es: a-Nēréa | fr: Néréus | de: Nereus Rom 16:15

Νηρεί G3518 N-GMS (1×)

Neri, an ancestor of Jesus listed in Luke's genealogy
Neri appears in Luke 3:27 as the son of Melchi and father of Shealtiel, placing him in the post-exilic portion of Jesus' genealogy. The name is the Greek form of the Hebrew Neriah (נֵרִיָּה), meaning 'lamp of the LORD' or 'my light is Yahweh.' Neriah is better known as the father of Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe (Jeremiah 32:12). Whether the genealogical Neri is identical to or related to Jeremiah's contemporary is uncertain. Like many names in Luke's post-exilic list, Neri appears nowhere else in Scripture, underscoring the obscurity through which the Davidic line passed during the centuries of foreign domination. Yet God's purposes run through forgotten generations as surely as through celebrated kings.

(1×) A personal name in the Lukan genealogy, possibly related to the Hebrew name Neriah. The multilingual glosses render the name consistently (Spanish 'Nēri', French 'Néri'), reflecting its Semitic origin. The domain (Names of Persons and Places) is correct; theological weight rests on the genealogical function—Jesus' lineage includes both famous and forgotten ancestors. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nēri | es: Nēri | fr: Néri | de: Νηρὶ Luke 3:27

νησ-ίον G3519 N-ANS (1×)

a small island or islet
Acts 27:16 recounts a moment during Paul's storm-tossed voyage: 'Passing to the lee of a small island (νησίον) called Cauda, we barely managed to secure the ship's boat.' The diminutive form of νῆσος ('island') denotes a small island or islet—in this case, Cauda (modern Gavdos), a rocky outcrop south of Crete. The sheltered side of the island provided brief respite from the gale, allowing the sailors to haul in the dinghy before it was swamped or lost. Luke's attention to nautical detail lends vividness and credibility to the narrative. The small island becomes a minor grace note in God's providence: a momentary protection that helps preserve the ship and all aboard until the final wreck on Malta.

(1×) Refers specifically to the small island Cauda that offered temporary shelter during Paul's voyage. The multilingual glosses vary between generic 'island' terms (English 'an island', French 'île') and diminutives emphasizing size (Spanish 'islita' meaning 'little island'). The domain (Geographical Objects and Features) is appropriate for this concrete geographic referent. ISLAND COASTLAND
en: an-island | es: islita | fr: île | de: νησίον Acts 27:16

νῆσος G3520 N-DFS (9×)

Island; a body of land surrounded by water, used in Acts for Mediterranean islands and in Revelation for eschatological upheaval.
The standard Greek word for an island, appearing in the NT primarily in Acts during Paul's Mediterranean voyages and in Revelation's apocalyptic visions. Luke names specific islands – Cyprus (Acts 13:6), Malta (Acts 28:1) – as concrete waypoints in the early church's geographical expansion. In Revelation, islands become symbols of cosmic instability: 'every island fled away' (Rev 6:14; 16:20), depicting creation's dissolution before God's judgment. The German and French renderings ('Insel,' 'ile') are straightforwardly geographic.

island (9×) A landmass surrounded by water. In Acts, the term anchors the narrative geographically as Paul sails among Mediterranean islands: the ship must run aground on 'some island' (Acts 27:26), identified as Malta (Acts 28:1), where the chief official Publius hosts them (Acts 28:7). Spanish 'isla,' French 'ile,' and German 'Insel' all render it as a plain geographic feature. In Revelation, however, the word takes on eschatological force: islands flee from God's presence (Rev 6:14; 16:20), signaling that even the most stable features of creation cannot withstand divine judgment. ISLAND COASTLAND en: an-island, island | es: isla | fr: Insel, île | de: Insel, νήσου, νήσῳ Acts 13:6; Acts 27:26; Acts 28:1; Acts 28:7; Acts 28:9

νηστ-εία G3521 N-AFS (6×)

Fasting as a spiritual discipline of abstaining from food; also the specific Fast of the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur).

In the New Testament, nēsteia refers to the practice of going without food as an act of devotion and self-denial before God. Jesus's disciples are taught that certain spiritual victories come only through prayer and fasting (Matt 17:21), and the early church fasted when appointing elders (Acts 14:23). Paul lists fastings among his apostolic hardships (2 Cor 6:5; 11:27). In one notable use, Luke employs 'the Fast' as a seasonal marker for the Day of Atonement in Acts 27:9, a usage recognized across translations: Spanish capitalizes 'el Ayuno,' and English renders 'the Fast' with a definite article, signaling this is not generic fasting but a specific holy day.

1. fasting (practice of abstaining from food) (5×) The practice or act of voluntarily abstaining from food as a spiritual discipline. Used in both singular and plural forms across the NT to describe fasting accompanying prayer, mourning, or consecration. Anna worshiped with fastings night and day (Luke 2:37), and the Antioch church fasted before commissioning Paul and Barnabas (Acts 14:23). Spanish 'ayuno/ayunos,' French 'jeune,' and German 'Fasten' all treat this as a general religious exercise. FASTING

en: fasting, fastings, with-fastings | es: ayuno, ayunos, con-ayunos | fr: jeûne | de: Fasten Matt 17:21; Luke 2:37; Acts 14:23; 2Cor 6:5; 2Cor 11:27

2. the Fast (Day of Atonement) (1×) The specific calendrical fast of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, used as a seasonal time reference in Acts 27:9 to indicate that sailing had become dangerous because the autumn holy day had already passed. The definite article in Greek (ten nēsteian) and capitalization in translations (English 'the Fast,' Spanish 'el Ayuno') distinguish this proper-noun usage from ordinary fasting. FASTING

en: Fast | es: Ayuno | fr: jeûne | de: Fasten Acts 27:9

νηστ-εύω G3522 V-PIA-1P (20×)

To fast; to voluntarily abstain from food as a religious discipline of devotion, repentance, or mourning.

Fasting in the biblical world was never mere dieting—it was a deliberate act of self-denial before God. Jesus fasted forty days in the wilderness (Matt 4:2), then taught his disciples how to fast without ostentation: 'When you fast, anoint your head and wash your face' (Matt 6:17). The Pharisees and John's disciples fasted regularly and questioned why Jesus' followers did not (Matt 9:14–15; Mark 2:18). Early church leaders fasted before appointing elders (Acts 13:2–3; 14:23). The word's translations capture the practice vividly: Spanish 'ayunar,' French 'jeuner,' German 'fasten'—all rooted in the concept of deliberate abstinence.

fast, abstain from food (20×) To voluntarily abstain from food as a spiritual discipline, typically expressing devotion, repentance, mourning, or preparation for divine guidance. Jesus' own forty-day fast (Matt 4:2) sets the pattern, while his Sermon on the Mount teaching (Matt 6:16–18) reforms the practice by warning against performative piety. The early church continued the tradition before major decisions (Acts 13:2–3). Spanish 'ayunar' and German 'fasten' both descend from roots meaning 'to hold firm' or 'to abstain,' reflecting the discipline's core of intentional self-denial. FASTING

en: I-fast, fast, fasting | es: ayunamos, ayunan, ayunando | fr: jeûner | de: fasten, fastet Matt 4:2; Matt 6:16; Matt 6:17; Matt 6:18

νῆστις G3523 Adj-AMP (2×)

fasting, not having eaten or being hungry

The state of being without food, whether by necessity or choice. Jesus uses this adjective to describe the crowds following Him in the wilderness—'they are hungry' (Matthew 15:32, Mark 8:3)—expressing His compassion for their physical need. The classical range includes both voluntary fasting and involuntary hunger, but the Gospel context emphasizes the latter: these people have remained with Jesus, exhausting their provisions, and now face the danger of collapsing from lack of food.

(2×) Being unfed, in a state of hunger or fasting. The Synoptic passages show Jesus' awareness of physical hunger as a pastoral concern—He will not send them away fasting lest they faint. The term can describe voluntary religious fasting elsewhere, but here it's simply prolonged absence from food. Cross-linguistic renderings distinguish 'fasting' (voluntary abstinence) from 'hungry' (need state), with Spanish 'en ayunas' and German 'nüchtern' suggesting both possibilities. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: fasting, hungry | es: en-ayunas | fr: à-jeun | de: nuechtern, νήστεις Matt 15:32; Mark 8:3

νηφᾰλ-έος G3524 Adj-AFP (3×)

sober, temperate, clear-headed and self-controlled

This adjective describes sobriety and self-control, both literal abstinence from excess wine and metaphorical clear-headedness. Overseers must be 'sober-minded' (1 Tim 3:2). Deacons' wives likewise must be 'temperate' (1 Tim 3:11). Older men should be 'sober-minded' (Titus 2:2). The term emphasizes mental clarity, self-discipline, and freedom from intoxication or passion. Spanish 'sobrio/sobrias' and German 'nüchtern' both carry the dual sense of alcohol-sobriety and behavioral temperance.

(3×) Sober, temperate, or clear-headed—characterized by self-control and freedom from intoxication or excess. The term νηφάλιος/νηφάλεος is a qualification for church leaders (1 Tim 3:2, 3:11) and older men (Titus 2:2), emphasizing both literal sobriety (not given to wine) and metaphorical temperance (mentally disciplined, balanced). Spanish 'sobrio' and German 'nüchtern' preserve the dual meaning: abstaining from drunkenness and maintaining sober judgment. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL

en: temperate | es: sobrias, sobrio, sobrios | fr: νηφάλιον, νηφαλίους | de: nuechtern 1Tim 3:2; 1Tim 3:11; Titus 2:2

νήφω G3525 V-PPA-NMP (6×)

To be sober-minded, self-controlled, and spiritually vigilant; to exercise mental alertness

Originally meaning 'to drink no wine' in classical Greek, this verb underwent a decisive metaphorical shift by the NT period. Every New Testament occurrence uses it figuratively for mental sobriety and spiritual watchfulness rather than literal abstinence. Paul pairs it with eschatological readiness—'let us be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith' (1 Thess 5:8)—while Peter connects it to effective prayer (1 Pet 4:7) and vigilance against the devil. The Spanish 'sed sobrios' and German 'nüchtern sein' both preserve the double register of physical and mental clarity.

to be sober-minded, be watchful (6×) To maintain clear-headed self-control and spiritual alertness, especially in view of Christ's return or spiritual danger. The metaphorical extension from literal wine-abstinence to mental vigilance is complete in the NT: Paul contrasts the sober believer with those who 'sleep' or are 'drunk' in the eschatological night (1 Thess 5:6-8), Timothy is urged to 'be sober in all things' amid false teaching (2 Tim 4:5), and Peter links sobriety to watchful prayer (1 Pet 4:7) and resistance to temptation (1 Pet 1:13). SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL

en: Be-sober, be-sober, being-sober | es: Sed-sobrios, seamos-sobrios, sed-sobrios | fr: Νήψατε, νήφοντες, νήφωμεν | de: nuechtern-sein 1Thess 5:6; 1Thess 5:8; 2Tim 4:5; 1Pet 1:13; 1Pet 4:7

Νίγερ G3526 N-NMS (1×)

Niger, a Latin cognomen meaning 'black,' used as a second name for Simeon in Acts 13

Acts 13:1 lists the prophets and teachers in the Antioch church: 'Barnabas, Simeon called Niger, Lucius of Cyrene, Manaen, and Saul.' Niger is a Latin surname meaning 'black' or 'dark,' likely referring to Simeon's skin color or dark complexion. The name suggests either North African origin or simply a descriptive nickname. The Antioch church's leadership was strikingly diverse—Barnabas the Levite from Cyprus, Lucius from Cyrene in Libya, Manaen connected to Herod's court, Saul the Pharisaic Jew from Tarsus, and Simeon with his Roman cognomen. This multiethnic, multicultural assembly foreshadows the global scope of the Gentile mission the Spirit is about to launch by setting apart Barnabas and Saul.

(1×) A Latin byname identifying Simeon, one of the leaders in the Antioch church. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Niger' uniformly (Spanish 'Níger', French 'Niger'), reflecting the Latin origin of the term. The domain (Names of Persons and Places) is correct; the cultural and ethnic diversity implied by the name enriches our understanding of early Christianity's social composition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Niger | es: Níger | fr: Niger | de: Νίγερ Acts 13:1

Νικάνωρ G3527 N-AMS (1×)

Nicanor, one of the seven men chosen to serve the Jerusalem church in Acts 6

Acts 6:5 names Nicanor among the seven Hellenistic Jews appointed to oversee the daily distribution of food to widows in the Jerusalem church. The name, meaning 'conqueror' or 'victorious,' was common in the Hellenistic world. Though called to administer practical charity, the seven are required to be 'full of the Spirit and wisdom'—qualifications that blur the line between social service and spiritual leadership. Tradition sometimes calls these men the first deacons, though Acts doesn't use that term. Nicanor disappears from the biblical record after his appointment, but his selection testifies to the early church's commitment to unity across cultural divides and its recognition that serving tables is no less a ministry than preaching the word.

(1×) A personal name identifying one of the seven men chosen for service in the Jerusalem church. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nicanor' or 'Nikanōr' with phonetic variation (Spanish 'Nikánōr', French 'Nicolas' which seems to confuse Nicanor with Nicolas), reflecting the Greek origin. The domain (Names) is straightforward; ecclesial significance lies in the role he filled bridging Hebraic and Hellenistic Jewish believers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nikanōr | es: a-Nikánōr | fr: Nicolas | de: Νικάνορα Acts 6:5

νῑκάω G3528 V-PPA-NMS (28×)

Overcome, conquer, be victorious; to prevail over adversaries, evil, or spiritual opposition; passively, to be defeated.

The verb of victory in the New Testament, carrying the force of the noun nike ('victory') into active combat. Jesus declares 'I have overcome the world' (John 16:33), setting the paradigm for believers who are called to conquer through faith (1 John 5:4–5). Revelation makes nikao its signature verb, promising rewards 'to the one who overcomes' in each of the seven letters to the churches (Revelation 2–3) and celebrating the Lamb who has conquered (Revelation 5:5; 17:14). Paul counsels that evil must be overcome with good, not by retaliating in kind (Romans 12:21), where the same verse uses the verb in both its active and passive senses.

1. overcome, conquer, be victorious (27×) The active sense of conquering, overcoming, or prevailing — whether in spiritual warfare, moral struggle, or cosmic conflict. Jesus' declaration 'I have overcome the world' (John 16:33) anchors this usage. The Johannine epistles celebrate believers' victory over the evil one (1 John 2:13–14; 4:4; 5:4–5). Revelation employs nikao as a programmatic verb: the one who overcomes receives the tree of life, the crown, and the new name (Revelation 2:7, 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21). Spanish ha vencido and German ueberwinden consistently convey this triumphant sense. Romans 3:4 applies it to God prevailing in his judgments, and Romans 12:21a urges overcoming evil with good. OVERCOME CONQUER

en: conquers, have-overcome, having-overcome | es: ha-vencido, habéis-vencido, lo-venza | fr: vaincre | de: ueberwinden, νικήσῃ Luke 11:22; John 16:33; Rom 3:4; Rom 12:21; 1John 2:13

2. be overcome, be defeated (1×) The passive sense of being overcome, conquered, or defeated by an opposing force. Romans 12:21a warns me nikō hypo tou kakou — 'do not be overcome by evil' — using the passive to depict the believer as potentially vanquished if they retaliate rather than respond with good. Spanish seas vencido ('may you be defeated') preserves the passive voice clearly. This sense appears as the negative counterpart to the dominant active usage, creating a deliberate contrast within the same verse: do not be defeated by evil, but defeat evil with good. OVERCOME CONQUER

en: be-overcome | es: seas-vencido | fr: vaincre | de: ueberwinden Rom 12:21

νίκ-η G3529 N-NFS (1×)

victory, conquest, or triumph; the overcoming of an enemy or obstacle

First John 5:4 declares, 'This is the victory (νίκη) that has overcome the world—our faith.' The term denotes triumph in battle, success in athletic competition, or victory in legal contests. Classical literature personifies Nike as the winged goddess of victory, companion of Athena and Zeus. John's usage is theological: faith itself is the conquering power that defeats the world's opposition, temptation, and lies. The victory is both already accomplished (Christ's resurrection and exaltation) and continually appropriated by believers through trust in God's Son. What appears as weakness—faith in a crucified Messiah—turns out to be the ultimate triumph over every hostile power.

(1×) Refers to the spiritual victory over the world that faith in Jesus accomplishes. The multilingual glosses uniformly preserve 'victory' terms (Spanish 'victoria', German 'Sieg'), capturing the martial metaphor. The domain (Hostility, Strife) reflects the conflict imagery—victory presupposes a battle. John's paradox is that faith, not military might, wins the decisive war. VICTORY TRIUMPH

en: victory | es: victoria | fr: νίκη | de: Sieg 1John 5:4

Νικόδημος G3530 N-NMS (5×)

Nicodemus; a Pharisee and member of the Jewish ruling council who came to Jesus by night (John 3).

A proper noun identifying Nicodemus, a prominent Pharisee and member of the Sanhedrin who appears exclusively in John's Gospel. He first approaches Jesus secretly at night with genuine theological questions (John 3:1–9), later defends due process before the council (John 7:50), and finally assists Joseph of Arimathea in burying Jesus with a lavish quantity of spices (John 19:39). The name means 'victory of the people' (Greek νίκη + δῆμος), and European translations preserve the Greek form closely: French 'Nicodème,' German 'Nikodemus.'

(5×) Nicodemus, a named individual — a Pharisee and ruler among the Jews who appears three times in John's Gospel. His trajectory from secretive night-visitor (John 3:1) to public defender of fairness (John 7:50) to participant in Jesus' burial (John 19:39) forms one of the most carefully developed character arcs in the Fourth Gospel. The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'Nikodḗmos,' French 'Nicodème,' German 'Nikodemus') all transliterate from the Greek Νικόδημος, meaning 'conqueror of the people.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nikodēmos | es: Nikodḗmos, Nikódēmos | fr: Nicodème | de: Nikodemus John 3:1; John 3:4; John 3:9; John 7:50; John 19:39

Νικολαΐτης G3531 N-GMP (2×)

Nicolaitans, members of a heretical sect in early Christian churches

A heterodox group condemned in Revelation 2:6 and 2:15, appearing in the letters to Ephesus and Pergamum. While John commends the Ephesians for hating the Nicolaitans' works, he rebukes the Pergamenes for tolerating them. Early church tradition (Irenaeus, Hippolytus) associated them with Nicolas of Antioch (Acts 6:5) or with antinomian practices, but their exact identity remains debated. What's clear is that their teaching compromised Christian ethics, possibly regarding food offered to idols and sexual immorality.

(2×) The Nicolaitans, a first-century sect whose practices the risen Christ condemns. Revelation pairs them with Balaamites who similarly led Israel into idolatry and immorality. The name's etymology

(perhaps 'conqueror of the people' or linked to Nicolas) is uncertain, but their threat to church purity is explicit. Cross-linguistic transliterations (nicolaítas, Nikolaiten) preserve the Greek name, reflecting scholarly uncertainty about the group's precise identity and teachings. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nikolaitans | es: nicolaítas | fr: Nikolaiten | de: Nikolaiten Rev 2:6; Rev 2:15

Νικόλαος G3532 N-AMS (1×)

Nicolaus, one of the seven men chosen to serve the Jerusalem church, identified as a proselyte from Antioch

Acts 6:5 names Nicolaus last among the seven, adding the detail that he was 'a proselyte from Antioch'—a Gentile convert to Judaism who had subsequently become a Christian. His Greek name (meaning 'conqueror of the people') and origin in Antioch, a major center of Hellenistic culture, mark him as a bridge figure between Jewish and Gentile worlds. Some later church fathers, though without solid evidence, linked Nicolaus to the Nicolaitans condemned in Revelation 2:6, 15—a heretical group promoting compromise with pagan practices. The connection is likely spurious, based on name similarity alone. Nicolaus's true significance lies in his selection: even a Gentile proselyte could serve as a leader in the predominantly Jewish Jerusalem church.

(1×) A personal name identifying the last of the seven chosen in Acts 6, notable as a Gentile convert. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nicolaus' or 'Nicolas' uniformly (Spanish 'Nikólaos', French 'Nicolas'), reflecting the Greek name. The domain (Names) is correct; the historical detail (proselyte from Antioch) signals the early church's expanding cultural horizon. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nikolaos | es: a-Nikólaos | fr: Nicolas | de: Νικόλαον Acts 6:5

Νικόπολις G3533 N-AFS (1×)

Nicopolis, a city founded by Augustus; likely the one in Epirus where Paul planned to winter

Paul instructs Titus in Titus 3:12: 'Do your best to come to me at Nicopolis, for I have decided to winter there.' Multiple cities bore the name Nicopolis ('city of victory'), commemorating military triumphs—Augustus alone founded several. The most likely candidate is Nicopolis in Epirus (northwest Greece), built to celebrate Augustus's victory at Actium in 31 BC. Positioned on the Adriatic coast, it was a logical winter haven for Mediterranean travel and a strategic base for ministry in Greece and the western empire. Paul's planned stay there suggests continuing missionary activity even during his final years. Whether he reached Nicopolis before his final arrest and martyrdom remains uncertain.

(1×) A place name referring to the city where Paul intended to spend the winter, most likely in Epirus. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nicopolis' or 'Nikopolis' uniformly (Spanish 'Nikópolis', German 'Nikopolis'), reflecting the Greek name. The domain (Nature, Class, Example) seems misassigned—this is a geographic place name, better suited to Geography or Names of Places. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Nikopolis | es: Nikópolis | fr: Νικόπολιν | de: Nikopolis Titus 3:12

νῖκος G3534 N-NNS (4×)

Victory; triumph, especially over death and the grave

A later Greek form of nike (victory), used in the New Testament almost exclusively in the context of God's ultimate triumph. Matthew 12:20 quotes Isaiah's promise that justice will be brought forth 'to victory,' while the dense cluster in 1 Corinthians 15:54-57 celebrates the eschatological swallowing up of death in victory. Paul's exultant 'Where, O death, is your victory?' transforms an Old Testament taunt into a resurrection hymn. Spanish victoria, French victoire, and German Sieg unanimously render it as decisive, complete triumph — never a partial win.

(4×) Decisive victory or triumph, particularly God's final conquest over hostile powers. In Matt 12:20, it refers to the ultimate success of justice (quoting Isa 42:3 LXX, where nikos renders the Hebrew lanetsach, 'to completeness/forever'). In 1 Cor 15:54-57, it appears three times in rapid succession as Paul declares death swallowed up in victory and taunts death for having lost its sting. Spanish victoria and French victoire confirm the consistent sense of total, irreversible triumph. VICTORY TRIUMPH

en: victory | es: victoria | fr: victoire | de: Sieg, νῖκος Matt 12:20; 1Cor 15:54; 1Cor 15:55; 1Cor 15:57

Νινευΐ G3535

Nineveh, capital of ancient Assyria (Hebrew נִינְוֵה; proper name)

The great Assyrian capital on the Tigris River, destroyed in 612 BC but living on in biblical memory as a byword for both wickedness and divine mercy. Jesus references Nineveh's repentance at Jonah's preaching in Luke 11:32 (Received Text). The city's massive walls and cultural sophistication made it legendary throughout the ancient Near East. Archaeological excavation has confirmed its grandeur and the extensive library of Ashurbanipal found there.

Νινευείτης G3536 N-DMP (3×)

Ninevites, inhabitants of the ancient Assyrian city of Nineveh

The Ninevites were the people of Nineveh, the great Assyrian capital to which Jonah was sent. Jesus uses them as a positive example: they repented at Jonah's preaching, and will rise in judgment against Jesus' generation who rejected a greater than Jonah (Matt 12:41, Luke 11:30, 32). The contrast is stark—pagan Ninevites heeded warning; covenant Israel rejected Messiah. The consistent rendering —'ninivitas,' 'Ninivite'—identifies this people by their city.

(3×) The Ninevites, inhabitants of Nineveh, the great Assyrian city to which Jonah preached. Jesus invokes them as a condemning witness: they repented at Jonah's message, but Jesus' contemporaries reject one greater than Jonah (Matt 12:41, Luke 11:30, 32). The Greek Νινευίτης designates the people by their city. Their exemplary repentance (despite being pagans) contrasts with Israel's hardness, making them unexpected models of responsive faith. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nineuites, Ninevites, of-Nineue | es: ninivitas | fr: Ninivite | de: Νινευίταις, Νινευῖται Matt 12:41; Luke 11:30; Luke 11:32

νιπτήρ G3537 N-AMS (1×)

a basin or washing vessel used for foot washing or ritual purification

John 13:5 records Jesus' shocking act of humility: 'He poured water into a basin (νιπτῆρα) and began to wash his disciples' feet, drying them with the towel.' The term denotes a large bowl or basin specifically used for washing. In the ancient Near East, foot washing was a menial task performed by servants for guests who had traveled dusty roads in sandals. Jesus, the master and Lord, assumes the role of the lowest household slave—an acted parable of his entire mission. The basin becomes a symbol of servanthood and self-giving love. Peter's initial refusal and subsequent demand for a full bath reveal his failure to grasp the deeper symbolism: Jesus cleanses not just feet but souls, and those who belong to him are already clean.

(1×) Refers to the basin Jesus used when washing the disciples' feet at the Last Supper. The multilingual glosses preserve 'basin' or 'washing vessel' (Spanish 'vasija' meaning 'vessel', French 'bassin', German 'Waschbecken' meaning 'washbasin'). The domain (Nature, Class, Example) is acceptable for an artifact, though Artifacts would be more precise for this household implement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basin | es: vasija | fr: bassin | de: Waschbecken John 13:5

νίζω G3538 V-PIM-3P (17×)

To wash a specific body part (hands, feet, face) for cleansing, hospitality, or ritual purification.

Derived from the older form νίζω, this verb specifically denotes washing a part of the body rather than bathing the whole person. In the Gospels it appears in contexts of ritual hand-washing before meals (Matt 15:2; Mark 7:3), Jesus washing the disciples' feet as an act of servant love (John 13:5-14), and the command to the blind man to wash in the Pool of Siloam (John 9:7, 11). The Spanish 'lavar' and French 'laver' both preserve the straightforward physical sense, while the Greek consistently distinguishes this partial washing from λούω, which means to bathe the entire body.

wash a body part (17×) Washing a specific body part — hands, feet, or face — whether for everyday hygiene, ceremonial purity, or hospitality. Jesus' washing of the disciples' feet (John 13:5-14) transforms a household custom into a model of humble service, while the Pharisees' insistence on hand-washing before meals (Mark 7:3) reflects ritual purity concerns. Multilingual glosses uniformly point to simple physical washing: Spanish 'lavar,' French 'laver,' German 'waschen.' WASHING AND BATHING en: I-wash, I-washed, having-washed | es: a-lavar, habiéndome-lavado, lava | fr: laver | de: waschen, νίπτονται, νίψαι Matt 6:17; Matt 15:2; Mark 7:3; John 9:7

νο-έω G3539 V-PMA-2S (14×)

to understand, perceive, consider — grasping something through mental reflection rather than sensory experience

Noeo describes the act of perceiving with the mind, a comprehension that goes beyond mere observation to genuine intellectual and spiritual understanding. Jesus uses it repeatedly in frustration when the disciples fail to grasp the significance of the bread miracles: 'Do you not yet understand?' (Matt 16:9, 11; Mark 8:17). The apocalyptic discourse in Matthew 24:15 and Mark 13:14 inserts the parenthetical 'let the reader understand' (ho anaginoskon noeito), inviting a deeper deciphering of Daniel's prophecy. Paul uses it in Romans 1:20 to argue that God's invisible attributes are nooumena — mentally perceived — through creation. Spanish 'entender,' French 'comprendre,' and German 'verstehen' all center on cognitive grasp.

understand, perceive (14×) To understand or perceive mentally — to grasp something through the exercise of the mind rather than through physical sight or hearing alone. Used of the disciples' failure to comprehend the bread miracles (Matt 15:17; 16:9, 11; Mark 7:18; 8:17), the call to discern the abomination of desolation (Matt 24:15; Mark 13:14, 'let the reader understand'), the mental apprehension of God's invisible nature through created things (Rom 1:20), and general intellectual perception (1 Tim 1:7; Heb 11:3). The word implies active cognitive engagement — reflection, reasoning, and interpretive effort — not passive reception. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT en: being-understood, let-understand, may-understand | es: Entiende, entendemos, entender | fr: comprendre, penser | de: begreift, verstehen Matt 15:17; Matt 16:9; Matt 16:11; Matt 24:15; Mark 7:18

νό-ημα G3540 N-NNP (6×)

The mind or thoughts as the seat of perception and reflection; also a cunning scheme or devious design, especially of Satan.

Noēma captures the interior life of the mind – what a person thinks, perceives, and purposes. Paul uses it most frequently in 2 Corinthians, where it ranges from the hardened minds of Israel that cannot perceive the glory of the new covenant (2 Cor 3:14) to every thought taken captive for Christ (2 Cor 10:5). The Philippians passage promises that God's peace will guard believers' hearts and noēmata (Phil 4:7). Yet in 2 Cor 2:11 the same word takes a darker turn, referring to Satan's calculated schemes or devices – a reminder that mental activity can be directed toward cunning manipulation as readily as toward worship.

1. mind, thought (5×) The faculty or content of mental activity: one's mind, thoughts, or perceptions. In 2 Cor 3:14, Israel's noēmata were hardened, unable to perceive the fading glory; in 2 Cor 4:4, the god of this age blinds unbelievers' minds; and in Phil 4:7, God's peace guards the heart and noēmata together. Spanish renders this as 'pensamientos,' German as 'Sinn,' and French as 'pensee' – all pointing to the inner cognitive landscape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: minds, thought, thoughts | es: pensamiento, pensamientos | fr: pensée, νοήματα | de: Sinn 2Cor 3:14; 2Cor 4:4; 2Cor 10:5; 2Cor 11:3; Phil 4:7

2. scheme, design (1×) A cunning plan, stratagem, or devious design, particularly attributed to Satan. In 2 Cor 2:11, Paul urges the Corinthians to forgive the offender 'lest Satan outwit us, for we are not ignorant of his noēmata' – his schemes. English 'schemes,' Spanish 'designios,' and German 'Anschlage' all capture the purposeful, adversarial quality of this sense, distinguishing calculated plotting from neutral thought. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: schemes | es: designios | fr: pensée | de: Sinn 2Cor 2:11

νόθ-ος G3541 Adj-NMP (1×)

illegitimate, born out of wedlock; bastard or spurious

Hebrews 12:8 employs the metaphor of divine discipline: 'If you are not disciplined—and everyone undergoes discipline—then you are illegitimate children (νόθοι) and not true sons.' The term denotes children born outside of legal marriage, often to slaves or concubines, who lacked inheritance rights and the father's full recognition. Classical usage extends the word to anything counterfeit or spurious—fake credentials, hybrid animals, adulterated wine. The author's point is stark: God's fatherly correction proves sonship. Those who escape discipline aren't privileged; they're excluded. Legitimate heirs receive training, correction, and preparation for their inheritance. To be a bastard in this sense is to lack relationship with God—a far graver fate than enduring temporary hardship under his loving hand.

(1×) Used metaphorically for those who lack genuine filial relationship with God, evidenced by their exemption from his discipline. The multilingual glosses preserve the legal term 'illegitimate' or 'bastard' (Spanish 'bastardos', German 'unecht' meaning 'spurious'). The domain (Physiological Processes and States) is odd—this is a legal and social category (kinship, legitimacy), not a physiological one. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: illegitimate | es: bastardos | fr: unecht | de: unecht Heb 12:8

νομ-ή G3542 N-AFS (2×)

pasture, grazing land or metaphorically spreading/growth

Literally, the place where animals graze or the act of feeding. Metaphorically, the term can describe spreading like a grazing herd. Jesus uses it in John 10:9: 'whoever enters through me... will come in and go out and find pasture'—the image of sheep finding abundant grazing speaks to spiritual nourishment and freedom under Christ's shepherding. Paul employs the metaphorical sense in 2 Timothy 2:17, warning that false teaching 'will spread like gangrene'—destructive growth that consumes healthy tissue.

(2×) Pasturage for livestock, extended metaphorically to describe spreading or growth. John's pastoral imagery emphasizes provision and safety—true sheep find nourishment in Christ's fold. Paul's medical metaphor inverts the image—gangrene 'grazes' or spreads across the body like an evil flock, consuming what is healthy. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve both senses: Spanish/French/German 'pasture/pâturage/Weide' for the literal, while the metaphorical usage requires contextual translation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pasture | es: pasto | fr: pâturage | de: Weide John 10:9; 2Tim 2:17

νομ-ίζω G3543 V-IIA-3S (15×)

To think, suppose, or assume; in the passive, to be commonly thought or regarded as something.

Derived from νόμος ('custom, law'), νομίζω carries an undertone of conventional or expected thinking — what one customarily assumes or supposes. Jesus uses it pointedly in Matt 5:17 and 10:34: 'Do not suppose that I came to...' — correcting mistaken popular assumptions. Luke employs it for the natural but incorrect assumption of Jesus' parents that he was in the caravan (Luke 2:44). The single passive occurrence in Luke 3:23, 'he was supposed to be the son of Joseph,' is theologically loaded, quietly distinguishing public opinion from divine reality.

1. think, suppose, consider (14×) To hold a belief, opinion, or supposition about something — often one that proves mistaken or needs correction. Jesus opens key teachings with 'do not suppose' (Matt 5:17; 10:34), while Luke records ordinary assumptions (Luke 2:44) and Paul's confidence that Moses' kinsmen would understand (Acts 7:25). Spanish 'pensaba/pienso,' French 'croire/supposer,' and German 'meinen' all capture the quality of subjective assumption rather than certain knowledge. This active-voice sense dominates with 14 occurrences across varied tenses and persons. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: I-think, having-supposed, he-was-supposing | es: Pienso, habiendo-pensado, pensaba | fr: croire, supposer | de: meinen, meint Matt 5:17; Matt 10:34; Matt 20:10; Luke 2:44; Acts 7:25

2. be supposed, be considered (1×) The passive sense of being thought, regarded, or commonly supposed to be something. Its sole NT occurrence in Luke 3:23 — 'Jesus was supposed (ἐνομίζετο) to be the son of Joseph' — carries profound theological weight: the public assumption of Josephine paternity stands in quiet tension with the virgin birth. Spanish 'se pensaba' and the passive framing across languages signal communal assumption rather than established fact, making this a remarkably loaded single-verse sense. THINKING AND SEEMING en: was-supposed | es: se-pensaba | fr: supposer | de: meint Luke 3:23

νομ-ικός G3544 Adj-DMP (9×)

Pertaining to the law; as a noun, an expert in the Mosaic Law, a legal scholar or jurist in Jewish religious tradition.

In the New Testament this adjective most often appears as a substantive, referring to someone learned in the Torah and its rabbinic interpretation—a professional legal scholar. Spanish renders the person as 'experto en la ley' while German uses 'Gesetzeslehrer' (law-teacher), both capturing the instructional authority these figures carried. The Synoptic Gospels present them testing Jesus or resisting his message (Luke 7:30; 10:25). In its sole purely adjectival use (Titus 3:9), it describes quarrels as 'legal'—pertaining to matters of the law rather than to a person.

1. lawyer, expert in the Law (8×) Designates a person professionally trained in the Mosaic Law—a jurist, legal scholar, or doctor of the Torah. The Synoptic Gospels depict these figures as authoritative interpreters who test Jesus (Luke 10:25) or reject God's purpose (Luke 7:30). French 'docteur de la loi' and German 'Gesetzeslehrer' both highlight the teaching dimension of this role, while Spanish 'intérprete de la ley' underscores interpretation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-lawyer, lawyer, lawyers | es: abogado, experto-en-la-ley, intérpretes-de-la-ley | fr: docteur-de-la-loi | de: Gesetzeslehrer, gesetzlich Matt 22:35; Luke 7:30; Luke 10:25; Luke 11:45; Luke 11:46

2. legal, pertaining to the law (1×) Purely adjectival: 'pertaining to or relating to the law.' In Titus 3:9, Paul warns against 'legal quarrels' (Greek: machas nomikás), disputes rooted in legalistic wrangling rather than edifying doctrine. Spanish 'legales' and German 'gesetzlich' confirm the descriptive, non-personal sense, contrasting sharply with the substantive use elsewhere. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: legal | es: legales | fr: docteur-de-la-loi | de: gesetzlich Titus 3:9

νόμ-ιμος G3545 Adv (2×)

lawfully, in accordance with established rules or legitimate standards

In a manner conforming to proper usage, custom, or law. Paul uses this adverb twice in the Pastoral Epistles to emphasize right application of right things. In 1 Timothy 1:8, he states 'the law is good, if one uses it lawfully'—proper use distinguishes beneficial from harmful application. In 2 Timothy 2:5, the image shifts to athletics: an athlete must 'compete according to the rules' to receive the crown. Both contexts stress that good things improperly used become destructive.

(2×) In a lawful or legitimate manner, according to proper rules. Paul's usage emphasizes the 'how' not just the 'what'—the Torah is good when used as God intended (to reveal sin, drive to Christ), harmful when misused (as a system of merit). Similarly, Christian ministry requires following apostolic guidelines. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'legalmente/legítimamente,' French 'légalement,' German 'gesetzmässig') capture both legal compliance and legitimate practice. MANNER ADVERBS

en: lawfully | es: legalmente, legítimamente | fr: νομίμως | de: gesetzmassig 1Tim 1:8; 2Tim 2:5

νόμ-ισμα G3546 N-ANS (1×)

a coin, especially a piece of currency stamped by legal authority; money in minted form

When the Pharisees try to trap Jesus with a question about paying taxes (Matthew 22:15-22), he asks them to show him the tax coin (νόμισμα). They produce a denarius bearing Caesar's image and inscription. Jesus' famous reply—'Render to Caesar what is Caesar's, and to God what is God's'—turns the trap into a teaching moment. The term νόμισμα emphasizes the coin's legal status: money authorized by established custom or law. The root (νόμος, 'law' or 'custom') points to the social contract that gives currency its value. By holding Caesar's coin, the Pharisees tacitly accept Roman authority and benefit from Roman economy. Jesus punctures their hypocrisy while asserting a higher loyalty: Caesar may claim taxes, but God claims the whole person.

(1×) Refers to the Roman denarius shown to Jesus, bearing the emperor's image. The multilingual glosses preserve 'coin' or 'money' uniformly (Spanish 'moneda', French 'monnaie'), capturing the financial and legal implications. The domain (Natural Substances) seems misassigned—coins are manufactured artifacts, not natural substances. Artifacts or Economics would be more appropriate. SILVER AND MONEY

en: coin | es: moneda | fr: monnaie | de: νόμισμα Matt 22:19

νομο-δῐδάσκᾰλος G3547 N-NMS (3×)

teacher of the law, expert in Mosaic law and Torah

A teacher of the law is an expert in Torah, someone trained to interpret and teach Mosaic legislation. Luke mentions them among those present when Jesus healed the paralytic (Luke 5:17). Gamaliel is identified as 'a teacher of the law, honored by all the people' (Acts 5:34). Paul warns against those who desire to be 'teachers of the law' without understanding (1 Tim 1:7). The term indicates professional legal-theological expertise. Spanish 'maestro de la ley' and French 'docteur de la loi' preserve this specialist designation.

(3×) A teacher or expert in the Mosaic law (Torah), trained in legal interpretation and religious instruction. Luke 5:17 mentions them gathered when Jesus healed. Acts 5:34 identifies the respected Gamaliel as a νομοδιδάσκαλος. 1 Timothy 1:7 critiques those aspiring to this role without comprehension. The term denotes professional religious-legal scholars, roughly equivalent to later rabbinic teachers. French 'docteur de la loi' and Spanish 'maestro de la ley' emphasize the authoritative teaching function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-teacher-of-the-law, law-teachers, teachers-of-the-law | es: maestro-de-la-ley, maestros-de-la-ley | fr: docteur-de-la-loi | de: Gesetzeslehrer, νομοδιδάσκαλοι, νομοδιδάσκαλος Luke 5:17; Acts 5:34; 1Tim 1:7

νομο-θεσία G3548 N-NFS (1×)

legislation, lawgiving, or the giving of the law; the act or process of establishing a legal code

Paul lists Israel's covenant privileges in Romans 9:4: theirs are 'the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law (νομοθεσία), the worship, and the promises.' The term denotes the act of legislating or the body of legislation itself—in this context, the Mosaic law given at Sinai. Classical Greek uses the word for the legislative process or a code of laws enacted by a state. For Paul, the law is one of several signs of Israel's special relationship with God, though it has been fulfilled and transcended in Christ. The tragedy Paul laments is that Israel, to whom the law was given, has stumbled over the cornerstone (Christ) in their zeal for law-based righteousness. The gift of the law, meant to prepare for Messiah, has become an obstacle when pursued apart from faith.

(1×) Refers to the giving of the Mosaic law at Sinai, one of Israel's covenant privileges. The multilingual glosses preserve 'legislation' or 'lawgiving' (Spanish 'legislación', French 'législation', German 'Gesetzgebung'), capturing the formal, legal sense. The domain (Communication) reflects the transmission of law as divine speech, though Law or Religion might be equally apt. COMMANDING AND ORDERING en: law-giving | es: legislación | fr: législation | de: Gesetzgebung Rom 9:4

νομοθετ-έω G3549 V-RIM/P-3S (2×)

to enact law, receive legislation or be established by law

The process by which laws are instituted or a people receives a legal code. In Hebrews, the author uses this verb to discuss the Levitical priesthood: 'on the basis of which the people received the law' (7:11) and the new covenant which 'has been enacted on better promises' (8:6). The term links priesthood and covenant—each priestly system carries its own legislative framework. The transition from Levitical to Melchizedekian priesthood necessitates a change in the law itself.

(2×) To be given laws, enacted by legislation, or established on legal basis. Hebrews uses the perfect tense to emphasize completed legislative acts—the Mosaic law was enacted under the Levitical priesthood, the new covenant under Christ's priesthood. The passive voice suggests divine agency—God is the legislator who establishes each covenant's terms. Cross-linguistic glosses vary between 'receive law' and 'be enacted/established,' capturing both the people's reception and the law's promulgation. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: has-been-enacted, received-the-law | es: ha-sido-establecido, había-recibido-ley | fr: verordnet | de: verordnet Heb 7:11; Heb 8:6

νομοθέτ-ης G3550 N-NMS (1×)

a lawgiver; one who establishes or enacts laws

James 4:12 poses a rhetorical question: 'There is only one lawgiver (νομοθέτης) and judge, the one who is able to save and destroy. But you—who are you to judge your neighbor?' The term denotes someone with the authority to establish laws. In classical Athens, νομοθέται were committees charged with revising or creating legislation. James's point is theological: God alone has the right to legislate, because he alone has the power to enforce his verdicts—to save or to destroy. Human judgment of one another usurps divine prerogative. When believers slander or condemn each other, they act as if they were lawmakers rather than fellow subjects under the one King. The reminder is sobering: we stand before the Judge, not on his bench.

(1×) Refers to God as the sole legitimate source of moral law, contrasted with human presumption in judging others. The multilingual glosses preserve 'lawgiver' or 'legislator' uniformly (Spanish 'legislador', German 'Gesetzgeber'), emphasizing divine authority. The domain (Nature, Class, Example) seems misassigned—this is a role or office (leadership, authority), better suited to Social Structures or Governance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: lawgiver | es: legislador | fr: νομοθέτης | de: Gesetzgeber Jas 4:12

νόμος G3551 N-DMS (196×)

Law, ordinance; especially the Mosaic Torah, but also law as a principle or system.

Nomos is one of the New Testament's most theologically charged words. Rooted in the verb nemo ('to distribute, manage'), it originally meant 'custom' or 'convention' in classical Greek but in the Septuagint and New Testament refers overwhelmingly to the Torah – the Law of Moses. Paul's letters explore its function, limitations, and relationship to grace with extraordinary depth (Rom 3:21; 7:7-12; Gal 3:24). With and without the article, nomos can mean the Pentateuch specifically, the entire Old Testament, or law as an abstract principle. Spanish 'ley,' French 'loi,' and German 'Gesetz' all render it uniformly.

law (esp. the Mosaic Law) (196×) Law in general and specifically the Torah or Mosaic Law, encompassing the Pentateuch, the broader Old Testament canon, and the principle of divine ordinance. Appears with the article (ho nomos) for the specific Mosaic code and without it for law as a governing principle (Rom 7:21-23). Central to Pauline theology where it functions as pedagogue (Gal 3:24), revealer of sin (Rom 7:7), and that which Christ fulfills (Matt 5:17). Spanish 'ley,' French 'loi,' and German 'Gesetz' confirm a unified semantic field across inflectional variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: law | es: Ley, ley | fr: loi | de: Gesetz Matt 5:17; Matt 5:18; Matt 7:12; Matt 11:13; Matt 22:36

νοσ-έω G3552 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to be sick, ailing, or diseased; to suffer from illness or malady

Paul rebukes certain teachers in 1 Timothy 6:4 as those who are 'puffed up with conceit and understand nothing. They have an unhealthy craving (νοσῶν) for controversy and quarrels about words.' The verb literally means 'to be sick' or 'to ail.' Classical usage applies it to bodily illness, mental disease, and even the sickness of a city during plague. Paul extends the medical metaphor to describe an obsessive, pathological fascination with debates and disputes. The false teachers don't just err; they're diseased in their thinking. Their craving for argument isn't intellectual rigor but spiritual sickness—a compulsion that produces envy, strife, and division rather than godliness. Sound doctrine, by contrast, promotes health and wholeness in the body of Christ.

(1×) Used metaphorically for having a morbid or unhealthy preoccupation with controversies and disputes. The multilingual glosses preserve the medical sense 'being sick' or 'to be ill' (Spanish 'enfermando' meaning 'becoming ill', German 'krank sein' meaning 'to be sick'), trusting context to supply the figurative application. The domain (Physiological Processes and States) fits the literal meaning, though the metaphorical use targets intellectual and moral disorder. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: being-sick | es: enfermando | fr: νοσῶν | de: krank-sein 1Tim 6:4

νόσ-ημα G3553 N-DNS (1×)

a disease, sickness, or malady; a pathological condition of body or mind

John 5:4 (in some manuscripts) describes an angel troubling the pool of Bethesda: 'whoever stepped in first after the stirring of the water was healed of whatever disease (νοσήματος) he had.' The term denotes illness or malady in general, whether physical or mental. Classical Greek extends the metaphor to societal ills—political disorder, moral vice, or the sickness of a state. Though the verse's textual basis is disputed (it's absent from the oldest manuscripts), the language reflects the popular belief that the pool had healing properties. Whether John records folklore or fact, the story sets up Jesus' authoritative healing: he doesn't need magical waters or angelic intervention. His word alone brings wholeness to the man paralyzed for 38 years.

(1×) Refers to the illness or affliction that the pool of Bethesda was believed to cure. The multilingual glosses preserve medical terminology (Spanish 'enfermedad' meaning 'illness', French 'maladie', German 'Krankheit' both meaning 'disease'). The domain (Physiological Processes and States) is appropriate for this straightforward reference to physical ailment. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: disease | es: enfermedad | fr: maladie | de: Krankheit John 5:4

νόσος G3554 N-GFP (11×)

Disease, illness, sickness — a general term for serious ailments, especially in summaries of Jesus' healing ministry

The noun νόσος (nosos) denotes disease or serious illness in a general sense, appearing almost exclusively in the Synoptic Gospels' summary statements about Jesus' healing activity. Matthew's repeated formula — Jesus went about 'healing every disease and every affliction' (Matt 4:23; 9:35; 10:1) — pairs nosos with malakia (weakness) to encompass the full spectrum of physical suffering. Mark 1:34 and Luke 4:40; 6:17; 7:21; 9:1 similarly deploy the word in summary passages. Its near-absence from John and the Epistles underscores its role as a Synoptic narrative marker for the kingdom's invasion of the realm of sickness. Spanish 'enfermedad' and French 'maladie' translate directly.

disease, illness, sickness (11×) Disease or serious illness as a general category, used predominantly in Synoptic summary descriptions of Jesus' healing ministry. The programmatic formula 'every disease and every affliction' (πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν) frames Jesus' Galilean campaigns (Matt 4:23; 9:35) and the authority delegated to the Twelve (Matt 10:1; Luke 9:1). Mark 1:34 and Luke 4:40; 6:17; 7:21 use nosos similarly. The word signals not individual case studies but the comprehensive scope of Jesus' restorative power over human suffering. Spanish 'enfermedad' and French 'maladie' serve as direct equivalents. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: disease, diseases, with-diseases | es: con-enfermedades, dolencias, enfermedad | fr: maladie | de: Krankheit Matt 4:23; Matt 4:24; Matt 8:17; Matt 9:35; Matt 10:1

νόσσαξ G3555 N-AFS (1×)

a brood or nest of birds; a group of young birds cared for by their mother

Jesus laments over Jerusalem in Luke 13:34: 'How often I have longed to gather your children together, as a hen gathers her brood (νοσσιάν) under her wings, but you were not willing!' The image is tender and domestic: a mother hen protecting her chicks from danger by sheltering them beneath her wings. The term denotes the brood or nest of young birds collectively. Jesus casts himself in the maternal role—offering protection, warmth, and safety to vulnerable Israel. The tragedy is their refusal. Despite repeated prophetic calls and now the Messiah's own presence, Jerusalem rejects the shelter offered. The hen's protective instinct finds no corresponding trust in the chicks. Judgment looms, but not because God is unwilling to save—only because the city is unwilling to be saved.

(1×) Used figuratively for the people of Jerusalem whom Jesus desired to gather and protect. The multilingual glosses preserve ornithological terms (Spanish 'nidada' meaning 'nest/brood', French 'couvée' meaning 'brood', German preserving the Greek form), letting the metaphorical force emerge from Jesus' maternal imagery. The domain (People) reflects the figurative application, though the literal referent is birds. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: brood | es: nidada | fr: couvée | de: νοσσιὰν Luke 13:34

νόσσαξ G3556 N-ANP (1×)

chicks or young birds; the offspring of birds still under parental care

In Matthew 23:37, Jesus uses nearly identical language to Luke 13:34: 'How often I have longed to gather your children together, as a hen gathers her chicks (νοσσία) under her wings, and you were not willing!' The term is a variant or closely related form denoting young birds. The repetition of this lament in both Matthew and Luke underscores its importance in Jesus' ministry. The image evokes both vulnerability (the chicks are defenseless) and instinctual care (the hen's protective impulse). Jesus presents himself not as a conquering warrior but as a nurturing mother—a striking use of feminine imagery for the Messiah. Jerusalem's rejection of this tender offer seals its fate: the protecting wings are spurned, leaving the city exposed to the coming destruction.

(1×) Used figuratively in Jesus' lament for Jerusalem's children, whom he desired to protect as a hen protects her young. The multilingual glosses preserve bird-related terms (Spanish 'polluelos' meaning 'chicks', French 'couvée' meaning 'brood'), with the metaphorical application depending on context. The domain (People) reflects the figurative use, though literally the word refers to young birds. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: chicks | es: polluelos | fr: couvée | de: νοσσία Matt 23:37

νοσφ-ίζω G3557 V-ANM (3×)

keep back, embezzle, pilfer, misappropriate for oneself

To misappropriate or keep back dishonestly what belongs to another. Ananias and Sapphira 'kept back' part of the proceeds while pretending to give all (Acts 5:2, 3). Paul warns slaves against 'pilfering' from masters (Titus 2:10). The term implies deceptive withholding or petty theft. Spanish uses strong language—'sustrajo,' 'robando' (stole, stealing)—while French 'détourner' (divert, embezzle) captures the misappropriation aspect. The Greek νοσφίζω means to separate for oneself what should go to another.

(3×) To keep back, embezzle, or pilfer—to dishonestly withhold or misappropriate what belongs to another. Acts 5:2, 3 use νοσφίζω for Ananias and Sapphira's deceptive retention of sale proceeds. Titus 2:10 warns slaves against pilfering from masters. The term implies both the act of taking and the deception involved in concealing it. Spanish 'sustraer/robando' (embezzle/stealing) and French 'détourner' (divert) capture the dishonest misappropriation. It's not open theft but sneaky withholding. TURNING AWAY AND PERVERTING

en: kept-back, pilfering, to-keep-back | es: robando, sustraer, sustrajo | fr: détourner, νοσφιζομένους | de: unterschlagen, νοσφίσασθαι, ἐνοσφίσατο Acts 5:2; Acts 5:3; Titus 2:10

νότος G3558 N-AMS (6×)

The south wind or the south as a cardinal direction; used of weather, geography, and the eschatological gathering from all compass points.

Notos serves double duty in the NT as both a meteorological term (the south wind) and a geographical marker (the south as a direction). When Jesus says the Queen of the South will rise in judgment (Matt 12:42, Luke 11:31), notos points to a region (Sheba, in southern Arabia). When he describes weather forecasting, a south wind means scorching heat (Luke 12:55). In Luke 13:29 people come from east, west, north, and notos to sit at table in God's kingdom. Acts 27:13 records a gentle south wind on the Mediterranean. Spanish 'sur' and German 'Sueden' consistently render the directional sense, while French 'midi' elegantly captures both noon-sun and southward orientation.

south, south wind (6×) The south wind or the south as a compass direction, with the two meanings closely related since winds were named for their origin. In Luke 12:55, notos is the hot wind from the desert bringing scorching weather. In Matt 12:42 and Luke 11:31, it is a geographical reference to the land of the Queen of Sheba. Luke 13:29 uses it in the grand eschatological vision of people streaming from all four directions. Acts 27:13 and 28:13 record it as a nautical wind term. French 'midi' (noon/south) nicely reflects the ancient conflation of sun-position and direction, while Spanish 'sur' and German 'Sueden' focus on the purely directional sense. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: a-south-wind, of-south, south | es: del-sur, sur, sur, | fr: midi, sud | de: Sueden, νότου Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31; Luke 12:55; Luke 13:29; Acts 27:13

νου-θεσία G3559 N-AFS (3×)

admonition, warning, instruction intended to correct

Admonition is corrective instruction, warning meant to guide someone back to right thinking or behavior. Paul says Old Testament examples happened 'for our admonition' (1 Cor 10:11). He instructs fathers to bring up children 'in the discipline and instruction of the Lord' (Eph 6:4). After two warnings, reject a divisive person (Titus 3:10). The term emphasizes verbal correction and warning. Spanish 'amonestación/instrucción' and French 'avertissement' (warning) capture both the instructional and corrective dimensions.

(3×) Admonition, warning, or corrective instruction—verbal guidance intended to redirect thinking or behavior. 1 Corinthians 10:11 presents Old Testament warnings as νουθεσία for believers. Ephesians 6:4 pairs it with discipline in child-rearing. Titus 3:10 sets limits: two admonitions, then separation from the divisive. The Greek νουθεσία combines νοῦς (mind) and τίθημι (to place)—literally 'placing in mind,' thus warning or corrective teaching. Spanish 'amonestación' and French 'avertissement' emphasize the warning aspect. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT

en: admonition, instruction, warning | es: amonestación, instrucción | fr: avertissement, νουθεσίαν, νουθεσίᾳ | de: Ermahnung 1Cor 10:11; Eph 6:4; Titus 3:10

νουθετ-έω G3560 V-PPA-NMS (8×)

To admonish, warn, or instruct with corrective intent; literally, to place something in the mind so as to redirect behavior.

Noutheteo combines nous (mind) and tithemi (to place) — it means literally to put something into someone's mind. Unlike harsh rebuke, it blends warning with teaching, aiming at correction rather than condemnation. Paul uses it of his own pastoral practice: warning the Ephesian elders night and day for three years (Acts 20:31), admonishing the Corinthians as beloved children (1 Cor 4:14), and describing the mutual responsibility of believers to admonish one another (Col 3:16, Rom 15:14). The Spanish 'amonestar' preserves the corrective-but-caring tone beautifully.

admonish, warn (8×) To counsel or warn someone with the goal of correcting their understanding or behavior, combining exhortation with gentle rebuke. The etymology (nous + tithemi, 'to place in the mind') reveals the word's distinctive angle: this is not mere scolding but intentional instruction aimed at mental reorientation. Paul employs it for sustained pastoral care (Acts 20:31, three years of nightly admonition) and for the mutual responsibility of mature believers (Rom 15:14, Col 3:16). Spanish 'amonestar' and German 'ermahnen' both capture the blend of authority and concern. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: admonish, admonishing, to-admonish | es: amonestad, amonestadlo, amonestando | fr: avertir, ermahnen | de: ermahnen, νουθετῶν Acts 20:31; Rom 15:14; 1Cor 4:14; Col 1:28; Col 3:16

νουμην-ία G3561 N-GFS (1×)

new moon, the first day of the lunar month; a festival or observance associated with the new moon

Paul warns the Colossians in Colossians 2:16 not to let anyone judge them 'in matters of food and drink or with regard to a festival, a new moon (νουμηνίας), or a Sabbath.' The term denotes the first day of the month in the lunar calendar, when the moon's crescent reappears after its dark phase. In Israel's cultic calendar, new moons were marked by special sacrifices and trumpet blasts (Numbers 10:10; 28:11-15). Some Jewish groups treated them as quasi-Sabbaths, restricting work or adding prayers. Paul's concern is that the Colossians are being pressured to observe Jewish calendrical regulations as if they were still binding under the new covenant. These practices were shadows pointing to Christ; now that the substance has come, the shadows lose their obligatory force.

(1×) Refers to the Jewish new moon festival that some were imposing on Gentile believers. The multilingual glosses preserve astronomical or calendrical terms (English 'new moon', Spanish 'de luna nueva', German 'Neumond'), pointing to the first visible crescent. The domain (Time) reflects the calendrical and temporal nature of the observance, though Religion would also be apt. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: new-moon | es: de-luna-nueva | fr: νεομηνίας | de: Neumond Col 2:16

νουνεχ-ής G3562 Adv (1×)

wisely, prudently, or with understanding; in a sensible or discerning manner

After a scribe answers wisely about the greatest commandment, Jesus tells him in Mark 12:34: 'You are not far from the kingdom of God because you answered wisely (νουνεχῶς).' The adverb derives from νοῦς ('mind') and ἔχω ('to have'), literally meaning 'having mind' or 'with understanding.' Classical usage applies it to sensible, prudent, or intelligent action. The scribe's wisdom lies not just in knowing the right answer but in grasping the priority of love for God and neighbor over ritual observance. Jesus' commendation is significant: a member of the religious establishment who understands the law's true intent stands closer to the kingdom than those who multiply regulations. Yet proximity is not arrival—the final step requires following Jesus himself.

(1×) Describes the quality of the scribe's response to Jesus about the greatest commandment. The multilingual glosses preserve 'wisely' or 'with understanding' (Spanish 'sabiamente', French 'avec sagesse', German 'verstaendig' meaning 'intelligently'), emphasizing discernment. The domain (Attitudes and Emotions) is somewhat apt, though Cognition or Wisdom might better capture the intellectual and moral dimensions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12853 WITH 3 SENSES

en: wisely | es: sabiamente | fr: avec-sagesse | de: verstaendig Mark 12:34

νόος G3563 N-GMS (24×)

Mind, intellect; the faculty of perception, thought, moral reasoning, and spiritual understanding.

Denotes the human mind as the organ of perception, reflection, and moral judgment. Paul uses it both negatively — a 'debased mind' given over to futility (Rom 1:28) — and positively, as the inner faculty that delights in God's law (Rom 7:25) and must be renewed for transformation (Rom 12:2). Luke employs it for the act of spiritual illumination when the risen Christ 'opened their minds to understand the Scriptures' (Luke 24:45). Spanish consistently renders it as mente or entendimiento, while German splits between Sinn (disposition, mindset) and Verstand (understanding, comprehension), hinting at the two semantic poles the Greek holds together.

1. mind (17×) The mind as the seat of thought, moral reasoning, and disposition — one's inner orientation or mindset that shapes behavior and belief. Spanish mente and German Sinn capture this consistently. Paul speaks of a reprobate mind (Rom 1:28), the law of his mind warring against sin (Rom 7:23), and the renewal of the mind that discerns God's will (Rom 12:2). In Ephesians 4:17, Gentiles walk in the futility of their mind, underscoring nous as moral-intellectual disposition. MIND UNDERSTANDING

en: mind | es: mente | fr: intelligence | de: Sinn Rom 1:28; Rom 7:23; Rom 7:25; Rom 11:34; Rom 12:2

2. mind (7×) The mind as the faculty of understanding, comprehension, and conscious awareness — particularly the capacity to grasp meaning and spiritual truth. German Verstand and Spanish entendimiento distinguish this from the broader 'mindset' sense. In Luke 24:45 the risen Jesus opened the disciples' understanding to comprehend Scripture. Paul contrasts praying with the spirit versus praying with the understanding (1 Cor 14:14-15), and prefers speaking five words with his mind to ten thousand in a tongue (1 Cor 14:19), emphasizing cognitive intelligibility. MIND UNDERSTANDING

en: mind, understanding | es: entendimiento | fr: intelligence | de: Sinn, Verstand Luke 24:45; 1Cor 14:14; 1Cor 14:15; 1Cor 14:19

Νυμφᾶς G3564 N-AFS (1×)

Nympha or Nymphas, a Christian in whose house a church met, greeted by Paul

Paul closes Colossians 4:15 with greetings: 'Give my greetings to the brothers and sisters in Laodicea, and to Nympha (Νύμφαν) and the church in her house.' Textual variants and the ambiguity of Greek accusative forms leave uncertain whether this is Nympha (feminine) or Nymphas (masculine). The name derives from 'nymph' or 'bride.' Most modern translations prefer the feminine, picturing a woman hosting a house church in Laodicea. If so, Nympha joins other female leaders like Phoebe, Priscilla, and Lydia who provided space and resources for the early Christian movement. House churches were the norm before Constantine; someone's generosity in opening their home was essential infrastructure for the gospel's spread.

(1×) A personal name identifying the host of a house church in Laodicea, likely a woman. The multilingual glosses preserve 'Nympha' or 'Nýmfa' uniformly (Spanish 'Nýmfa', French preserving the Greek form), though the gender ambiguity persists. The domain (Names of Persons and Places) is correct; the ecclesial role (hosting a congregation) enriches the social history of early Christianity.

PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Nympha | es: a-Nýmfa | fr: Νύμφαν | de: Nympha Col 4:15

νύμφ-η G3565 N-AFS (8×)
Bride; daughter-in-law — a young woman in relation to her marriage or her husband's family
The noun νύμφη carries two closely related but distinguishable meanings in the New Testament, both rooted in the marriage relationship. As 'bride,' it appears in some of the most vivid imagery in Scripture: the friend of the bridegroom rejoices at the bride's voice (John 3:29), and the holy city descends 'prepared as a bride adorned for her husband' (Rev 21:2). As 'daughter-in-law,' it appears in Jesus' warning that he came to set 'a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law' (Matt 10:35, Luke 12:53), a kinship term describing the woman's relation to her husband's mother rather than to the groom himself.

1. bride (5×) A bride — a woman on or around the occasion of her wedding, or in the extended metaphorical sense, the church or the holy city as the bride of Christ. Five NT occurrences carry this meaning, including John 3:29 where the Baptist speaks of the bridegroom's joy at hearing the bride, and the three powerful Revelation passages: the new Jerusalem descending 'as a bride adorned' (Rev 21:2), the angel showing John 'the bride, the wife of the Lamb' (Rev 21:9), and the Spirit and the bride together saying 'Come!' (Rev 22:17). Multilingual glosses consistently use bridal vocabulary: Spanish 'novia,' French 'fiancee,' German 'Braut.' The metaphorical extension to the eschatological community is one of the Bible's defining images of intimacy between God and his people. BRIDE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW
en: a-bride, bride, of-bride | es: de-novia, novia, novia, | fr: fiancée | de: Braut John 3:29; Rev 18:23; Rev 21:2; Rev 21:9; Rev 22:17

2. daughter in law (3×) A daughter-in-law — a woman defined by her relationship to her husband's parents rather than to the groom himself. All three occurrences appear in Jesus' saying about household division: Matt 10:35 and Luke 12:53 (twice) warn that a 'daughter-in-law' will be set against her 'mother-in-law.' Spanish captures this precisely with 'nuera' (daughter-in-law), a completely different word from 'novia' (bride), confirming the distinct kinship sense. This usage is attested in classical Greek and the LXX, where νύμφη regularly translates the Hebrew כַּלָּה in its daughter-in-law meaning (e.g., Ruth 1:6-8). BRIDE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW
en: a-bride, daughter-in-law | es: nuera | fr: fiancée | de: νύμφη, νύμφην Matt 10:35; Luke 12:53

νυμφ-ίος G3566 N-GMS (16×)
Bridegroom; the male partner in a wedding, used of Christ as the messianic bridegroom of his people.
Nymphios designates the man being married, the central male figure in the wedding celebration. Jesus draws on this image when he explains why his disciples do not fast: the wedding guests cannot mourn while the bridegroom is with them (Matt 9:15; Mark 2:19-20). The Parable of the Ten Virgins turns on the bridegroom's delayed midnight arrival (Matt 25:1-10), and John the Baptist joyfully identifies himself as merely the bridegroom's friend (John 3:29). Spanish novio, French fiancé, and German Bräutigam each capture the culturally specific role of the groom.

bridegroom (16×) The man about to be or newly married, the groom at a wedding feast. In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus identifies himself as the bridegroom whose presence makes fasting inappropriate (Matt 9:15; Mark 2:19-20), establishing a potent christological metaphor. The Parable of the Ten Virgins (Matt 25:1-10) builds eschatological urgency around the bridegroom's delayed arrival. John the Baptist explicitly casts Jesus as the bridegroom and himself as the friend who rejoices at the groom's voice (John 3:29). All target languages render this with a standard marriage-role term, confirming a single unified sense. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY en: bridegroom, of-bridegroom | es: -novio, de-novio, novio | fr: fiancé | de: Braeutigam, Bräutigam Matt 9:15; Matt 25:1; Matt 25:5; Matt 25:6

νυμφ-ών G3567 N-GMS (3×)
bridal chamber, wedding hall, the room or company associated with the bridegroom
The bridal chamber refers to the wedding celebration context, particularly the bridegroom's company or feast. Jesus asks, 'Can the wedding guests mourn while the bridegroom is with them?' (Matt 9:15, Mark 2:19, Luke 5:34). The term sometimes means the actual chamber but here refers to the wedding party or feast context—'sons of the bridal chamber' being an idiom for wedding guests. The consistent rendering across languages—'cámara nupcial,' 'chambre nuptiale,' 'Hochzeitssaal' (wedding hall)—reflects the celebratory wedding context.

(3×) The bridal chamber, wedding hall, or by extension the wedding celebration and guests. In all three synoptic passages (Matt 9:15, Mark 2:19, Luke 5:34), 'sons of the bridal chamber' is a Semitic idiom for wedding guests or attendants. Jesus uses it to explain why his disciples don't fast—it's a wedding feast, not a funeral. The Greek νυμφών can mean the physical chamber or the celebratory company. Spanish 'cámara nupcial' and German 'Hochzeitssaal' capture the wedding-feast context. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY en: bridal-chamber | es: cámara-nupcial | fr: chambre-nuptiale | de: Hochzeitssaal, νυμφῶνος Matt 9:15; Mark 2:19; Luke 5:34

νῦν G3568 Adv (147×)
Now — adverb of present time, marking the current moment, the present age, or a logical transition in argument Nyn is the standard Greek temporal adverb for 'now,' but in the New Testament it often carries more than mere chronology. It can mark the decisive present of salvation history — 'now is the day of salvation' (2 Cor 6:2) — or the contrast between a former state and the new reality in Christ: 'you were once darkness, but now you are light' (Eph 5:8). Paul frequently uses it as a discourse marker pivoting his argument. Spanish renders it 'ahora,' French 'maintenant,' German 'jetzt/nun,' all capturing the immediacy of the present moment that this adverb conveys across its 147 occurrences.

now (147×) Temporal adverb marking the present moment, the current age, or an argumentative pivot point. Beyond simple chronology, New Testament writers deploy nyn to highlight the eschatological 'now' of God's saving action — 'but now, apart from the law, the righteousness of God has been revealed' (Rom 3:21) — and to contrast former existence with present transformation (Eph 2:13; Col 1:22). Spanish 'ahora,' French 'maintenant,' and German 'jetzt' all preserve its immediacy, though the theological weight of the 'now' in Pauline rhetoric goes beyond what any single translation word can carry. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)
en: Now, now | es: Ahora, ahora | fr: maintenant | de: jetzt, nun Matt 24:21; Matt 26:65; Matt 27:42; Matt 27:43; Mark 10:30

νῦν G3569
now (adverb of present time, immediate past, or imminent future); the present moment or era
The adverb νῦν covers 'now' across a spectrum of temporal nearness: the present moment, the current era ('mortals of our day,' 'the present custom'), the immediate past ('but now Menelaus has conquered'), or the imminent future ('presently I will try with my spear'). Phrases like οἱ νῦν ἄνθρωποι mean 'people of the present day.' The word anchors discourse in the speaker's temporal location, contrasting with past or future and emphasizing the urgency or relevance of the current situation.

νῡνί G3570 Adv (20×)
Now, but now, as things stand; an emphatic temporal adverb marking the present situation in contrast with what preceded.
An intensified form of the common Greek word for 'now,' this adverb draws a sharp line between a former state and the present reality. Paul uses it with rhetorical force: 'But now, apart from the law, the righteousness of God has been disclosed' (Rom 3:21); 'But now that you have been set free from sin' (Rom 6:22). The 'but now' construction is not merely temporal—it is theologically loaded, marking the turning point that the gospel introduces. Spanish 'ahora' and German 'jetzt' render it cleanly, while the adversative coloring ('but now') appears consistently in multilingual glosses as 'ahora pero' and 'jetzt aber.'

(20×) An emphatic temporal-logical adverb meaning 'now' or 'but now,' marking the present situation as decisively different from what preceded. Paul employs it at pivotal theological hinges: the revelation of God's righteousness apart from the law (Rom 3:21), freedom from sin (Rom 6:22), and release from the law (Rom 7:6). The contrastive force is captured well in German 'jetzt aber' and Spanish 'ahora pero,' both flagging the adversative dimension that distinguishes this form from the simpler nun. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: But-now, but-now, now | es: Ahora, ahora, ahora-pero | fr: et-maintenant, jetzt | de: jetzt, jetzt-aber Acts 22:1; Acts 24:13; Rom 3:21; Rom 6:22; Rom 7:6

νύξ G3571 N-AFP (62×)

nyx – night; the period of darkness from sunset to sunrise, also used figuratively for moral darkness

The feminine noun nyx ('night') designates the period of darkness between sunset and sunrise, appearing 62 times in the New Testament. It carries both literal and theological weight. Literally, it marks the time of significant events: the Magi's departure (Matt 2:14), Jesus walking on water during the fourth watch of the night (Matt 14:25), Paul's escape from Damascus (Acts 9:25), and the storm at sea lasting fourteen nights (Acts 27:27). Figuratively, night represents spiritual darkness opposed to the light of Christ (Rom 13:12; 1 Thess 5:5-7). Spanish noche, French nuit, and German Nacht render it consistently without semantic subdivision.

night (62×) The period of darkness from sunset to sunrise, used literally for the nighttime setting of key events – the flight to Egypt (Matt 2:14), the fourth-watch sea crossing (Matt 14:25), Paul's basket escape (Acts 9:25) – and in temporal formulas like 'forty days and forty nights' (Matt 4:2). Also employed figuratively for the era of spiritual darkness that gives way to eschatological dawn (Rom 13:12; 1 Thess 5:5). Spanish noche, French nuit, and German Nacht converge on a single concept across all 62 occurrences. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: by-night, night, of-night | es: de-noche, noche | fr: nuit | de: Nacht Matt 2:14; Matt 14:25; Matt 25:6; Matt 26:31; Matt 26:34

νύσσω G3572 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to pierce, stab or prick with a sharp point

The act of penetrating with a sharp instrument—spear, sword, or lance. Both Gospel occurrences describe piercing Jesus' side at the crucifixion, though textual traditions differ. The more established reading appears in John 19:34, where a soldier pierces Jesus' side with a spear, releasing blood and water—a detail John emphasizes as eyewitness testimony. The variant in Matthew 27:49 (textually uncertain) similarly describes a spear thrust. The verb's violence underscores the brutality of crucifixion and the certainty of Jesus' death.

(2×) To pierce or stab, puncture with a sharp weapon. Classical usage ranges from military contexts (stabbing with spear) to medical (surgical puncture) to casual (nudging with elbow). The Gospel usage is violent and fatal—a coup de grâce ensuring death. John's theological emphasis on the piercing (echoing Zechariah 12:10) makes the physical act carry prophetic weight. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'atravesó,' French 'percer,' German 'durchstechen') preserves the violent penetration. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: pierced | es: atravesó | fr: percer | de: durchstechen, ἔνυξεν Matt 27:49; John 19:34

νυστ-άζω G3573 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to doze, nod off or become drowsy

The state of being half-asleep or nodding from sleepiness. Jesus uses it in the parable of the ten virgins, where 'all became drowsy and slept' while awaiting the bridegroom (Matthew 25:5). Peter uses it metaphorically, assuring believers that divine judgment against false teachers 'does not slumber'—God's justice remains wakeful even when it seems delayed (2 Peter 2:3). The word captures the intermediate state between full wakefulness and deep sleep, suggesting inattention or weariness.

(2×) To become drowsy or doze off, the onset of sleep through weariness. In the parable, the virgins' drowsiness is natural—they waited long past expected time. The metaphorical negation in 2 Peter emphasizes God's constant vigilance—unlike humans who tire and doze, divine judgment never grows sluggish. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'cabecearon/duerme,' French 'somnoler,' German 'einnicken') distinguish nodding drowsiness from deep sleep. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: became-drowsy, slumbers | es: cabecearon, duerme | fr: somnoler | de: einnicken, ἐνύσταξαν Matt 25:5; 2Pet 2:3

νυχθ-ήμερος G3574 N-ANS (1×)

A period of twenty-four hours encompassing both nighttime and daytime; a full day-and-night cycle

This Greek term denotes a complete cycle of day and night, a twenty-four-hour period. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 11:25 when recounting his hardships: he spent a 'night and a day' adrift at sea. The compound nature of the word (combining 'night' and 'day') emphasizes the totality of the time period, marking the full duration of his peril. Translators across languages preserve this compound structure (Spanish 'un día y una noche,' French 'jour et nuit'), underscoring the complete temporal span rather than a vague 'long time.'

(1×) A complete twenty-four-hour period containing both night and day. The evidence from 2 Corinthians 11:25 shows Paul describing his maritime suffering in precise temporal terms—not merely 'a long time' but the full cycle of darkness and light. Multilingual glosses maintain the compound structure, reflecting Greek's precision in temporal measurement. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: a-night-and-day | es: un-día-y-una-noche | fr: jour-et-nuit | de: ein-Tag-und-eine-Nacht 2Cor 11:25

Νῶε G3575 N-NMS (8×)

Noah, the righteous patriarch who built the ark and survived the great flood; a key figure of faith and divine judgment.

The indeclinable proper name Noe (from Hebrew noach, meaning 'rest' or 'comfort') appears eight times across the NT, always pointing to the patriarch of the flood narrative. Jesus cites Noah's days as a paradigm for the unexpected arrival of the Son of Man (Matt 24:37-38, Luke 17:26-27). The author of Hebrews holds Noah up as a model of faith who acted on divine warning (Heb 11:7), while Peter calls him a 'preacher of righteousness' and uses the ark as a type of baptismal salvation (1 Pet 3:20, 2 Pet 2:5).

of Nōe (8×) The proper name of the patriarch who, warned by God of the coming flood, built the ark and preserved his family. In Jesus' teaching, Noah's generation exemplifies unsuspecting normalcy before sudden judgment (Matt 24:37-38, Luke 17:26-27). Hebrews 11:7 presents Noah as a hero of faith who acted on what was not yet seen. Peter draws on the flood narrative both as an example of God's patience and judgment (2 Pet 2:5) and as a typological foreshadowing of baptism (1 Pet 3:20). Luke 3:36 includes Noah in the genealogy of Jesus. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nōe, of-Nōe | es: Noē, Nôe, Nōé | fr: Noé | de: Noah, Νῶε Matt 24:37; Matt 24:38; Luke 3:36; Luke 17:26; Luke 17:27

νωθρ-ός G3576 Adj-NMP (2×)

sluggish, lazy or slow to understand and act

Marked by slowness, whether physical sluggishness or mental dullness. The author of Hebrews uses this adjective twice to rebuke his audience: they have become 'dull of hearing' (5:11)—slow to grasp spiritual truth—and he urges them not to be 'sluggish' but to imitate faithful predecessors (6:12). The term suggests not inability but laziness, a culpable slowness to respond to what should be clear. Classical usage pairs it with foolishness and forgetfulness, reinforcing the moral dimension.

(2×) Sluggish in mind or action, lazy or dull. Hebrews applies it to spiritual torpor—the audience should have matured but instead remained slow learners. The word carries mild rebuke: this isn't intellectual incapacity but moral and spiritual laziness. Cross-linguistic renderings distinguish physical laziness (Spanish 'perezosos') from mental dullness (English 'dull,' German 'träge'), though Hebrews likely intends both—sluggish hearts produce sluggish minds. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS en: dull | es: perezosos | fr: paresseux | de: traege Heb 5:11; Heb 6:12

νῶτον G3577 N-AMS (1×)

The back of a human or animal body; the posterior or dorsal surface from shoulders to lower spine

In Greek literature this word refers to the back of humans or animals, particularly the spine and surrounding musculature. Paul quotes Psalm 69:23 in Romans 11:10, invoking judgment language: 'bend their backs continually.' The imagery is of crushing burden or perpetual stooping—a posture of defeat. While the word appears in Homer describing warriors and animals, the New Testament's single use draws from the Septuagint's metaphorical tradition, where a bent back symbolizes oppression or divine judgment.

(1×) The dorsal region of the body, from shoulders to lower spine. In Romans 11:10, Paul employs Psalm 69's judgment imagery where bent backs signify subjugation or burden. Translators across languages (English 'back,' Spanish 'espalda,' French 'dos') maintain the anatomical specificity while understanding the metaphorical weight—a people bowed under consequences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: back | es: espalda | fr: dos | de: Ruecken Rom 11:10

ξεν-ία G3578 N-AFS (2×)

hospitality, lodging or the act of receiving guests

The custom of receiving and housing guests, a cornerstone of ancient Mediterranean culture. Both New Testament occurrences are in Acts and Philemon: Jews gathered at Paul's lodging in Rome (Acts 28:23), and Paul requests Philemon to prepare him a guest room (Philemon 1:22). The term encompasses both the physical space (guest quarters) and the social relationship (host-guest bond). In a world of limited public accommodation, hospitality created networks of trust and mutual obligation essential to early Christian mission.

(2×) Guest lodging or the practice of hospitality. Classical usage emphasizes the reciprocal relationship—hospitality given creates future hospitality received, establishing bonds between families and cities. The Christian adaptation maintains this social dimension while extending it across ethnic and class boundaries. Cross-linguistic glosses vary between abstract 'hospitality' (French 'hospitalité,' German 'Gastfreundschaft') and concrete 'lodging' (Spanish 'alojamiento/hospedaje'), reflecting the term's dual reference to both practice and space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: lodging | es: alojamiento, hospedaje | fr: hospitalité, ξενίαν | de: Gastfreundschaft, ξενίαν Acts 28:23; Phlm 1:22

ξεν-ίζω G3579 V-AIA-3S (10×)

To lodge or entertain as a guest; to be surprised or think something strange; to present something foreign or unfamiliar

Rooted in ξένος (stranger, foreigner), this verb beautifully holds together two sides of encountering the unknown: welcoming a stranger into your home, and being startled by something foreign. Its primary NT use is hospitable lodging – Peter staying with Simon the tanner (Acts 10:6), Mnason hosting Paul (Acts 21:16), entertaining angels unawares (Heb 13:2). But Peter also uses it of the surprise unbelievers feel at Christians' transformed lives (1 Pet 4:4, 12). In Athens, the verb takes an adjectival turn as Paul is accused of introducing 'strange things' (Acts 17:20). Spanish captures the split perfectly: 'hospedando' for hospitality but 'se extranan/os extraneis' for surprise at the foreign.

1. lodge, entertain as guest (7×) To receive, lodge, and entertain someone as a guest, providing hospitality and shelter. This is the dominant NT sense, used repeatedly in Acts of Peter's lodging with Simon the tanner (Acts 10:6, 18, 23, 32), Mnason hosting Paul in Jerusalem (Acts 21:16), and Publius entertaining the shipwrecked party in Malta (Acts 28:7). Spanish 'hospedando' and German 'gastlich aufnehmen' both preserve the warm, relational hospitality. Heb 13:2 alludes to Abraham and Lot unknowingly hosting angels. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: entertained, having-entertained, he-lodged | es: hospedando, los-hospedó, nos-hospedaríamos | fr: accueillir, être-étranger | de: bewirtet, gastlich-aufnehmen Acts 10:6; Acts 10:18; Acts 10:23; Acts 10:32; Acts 21:16

2. be surprised, think strange (2×) To be surprised, astonished, or to consider something strange and foreign. The underlying logic connects to ξένος: what is 'foreign' provokes surprise. In 1 Pet 4:4 unbelievers 'are surprised' that Christians no longer join their excesses; in 1 Pet 4:12 believers are told not to 'be surprised' at the fiery trial. Spanish 'se extranan' (they find it strange) and 'os extraneis' (you find it strange) reveal the etymological link to 'extranjero' (foreigner) that mirrors the Greek ξένος root beautifully. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: be-surprised, they-are-surprised | es: os-extrañéis, se-extrañan | fr: accueillir | de: gastlich-aufnehmen 1Pet 4:4; 1Pet 4:12

3. strange, foreign (1×) Used adjectivally or participially to describe introducing something foreign, unfamiliar, or strange to an audience. In Acts 17:20 the Athenians tell Paul 'you are bringing strange things to our ears,' using ξενίζοντα as a modifier. Spanish 'extranas' (strange) confirms the adjectival force. This sense bridges hospitality and surprise: what the stranger brings is itself strange, and the Athenians' intellectual curiosity mirrors the root meaning of encountering the unfamiliar. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: strange | es: Extrañas | fr: être-étranger | de: bewirtet Acts 17:20

ξενο-δοκέω G3580 V-AIA-3S (1×)

To receive and care for strangers or guests; to practice hospitality toward those outside one's household

This verb describes the active practice of welcoming strangers into one's home, providing food and shelter. In 1 Timothy 5:10, it appears among the qualifications for widows to be enrolled for church support: she must have 'shown hospitality to strangers.' The cultural context is crucial—ancient hospitality involved risk and sacrifice, not mere politeness. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'hospedó extranjeros,' 'she lodged foreigners') captures the tangible, costly nature of this virtue, which was foundational to early Christian community life.

(1×) To extend hospitality by receiving and caring for strangers or travelers. 1 Timothy 5:10 lists this among a widow's good works, requiring demonstrated action rather than mere disposition. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the concrete act ('she showed hospitality,' 'she lodged foreigners'), reflecting a culture where opening one's home to unknown guests was both risky and virtuous. SERVING AND MINISTRY en: she-showed-hospitality | es: hospedó-extranjeros | fr: ἐξενοδόχησεν | de: Gastfreundschaft-ueben 1Tim 5:10

ξένος G3581 Adj-GNP (14×)

Stranger, foreigner, alien; strange or unfamiliar (adjectival); host, one who receives strangers.

Xenos is a word built on reciprocity. In classical Greek it named both the guest and the host — two parties bound by the sacred obligation of xenia, hospitality to strangers. The New Testament preserves this remarkable two-sidedness. In Matthew 25:35-44, welcoming 'the stranger' (xenos) is the criterion by which nations are judged, and in Acts 17:21 the Athenians and resident 'foreigners' spend their time exchanging news. Spanish extranjero, French etranger, and German Fremder all capture the outsider pole, but when Paul calls Gaius

'the host' (xenos) of the whole church in Rom 16:23, the word pivots to the opposite pole — the one who receives rather than the one received. A third, purely adjectival use surfaces in Heb 13:9 ('strange teachings') and 1 Pet 4:12 ('the fiery ordeal as though some strange thing'), where xenos modifies abstract nouns to mean simply 'unfamiliar' or 'foreign to expectation.'

1. stranger, foreigner (person) (11×) A stranger, foreigner, or alien — someone outside the local community, whether as a traveler needing hospitality, a resident alien, or a person unknown to those around them. This dominant substantival use (11 occurrences) anchors Jesus' parable of the sheep and goats: 'I was a stranger and you welcomed me' (Matt 25:35, 38, 43, 44). The potter's field is bought 'to bury strangers' (Matt 27:7), and Ephesians 2:19 declares Gentile believers are 'no longer strangers.' Spanish extranjeros, French etrangers, and German Fremdlinge all mark the outsider status. Acts 17:21 applies it to resident foreigners in Athens. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: Of-foreign, a-stranger, strangers | es: De-extranjeros, extranjeros, extraños | fr: étranger | de: Fremder, Fremdlinge Matt 25:35; Matt 25:38; Matt 25:43; Matt 25:44; Matt 27:7

2. strange, foreign (qualitative adjective) (2×) Strange, foreign, or unfamiliar — the purely adjectival use modifying abstract concepts rather than naming persons. In Heb 13:9, believers are warned not to be carried away by 'strange teachings' (xenais didachais), and in 1 Pet 4:12 they should not think a 'strange thing' is happening when fiery trials come. Spanish extranas, French etranges, and German fremd/seltsam capture the qualitative sense of unfamiliarity or deviation from what is expected. The word here functions as a marker of cognitive distance rather than social identity. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: strange, strange-thing | es: cosa-extraña, extrañas | fr: étranger | de: Fremdlinge Heb 13:9; 1Pet 4:12

3. host (one who receives strangers) (1×) Host — the one who receives and entertains strangers, the reciprocal pole of the guest-host relationship embedded in classical Greek xenia. In Rom 16:23, Paul sends greetings from 'Gaius, host (xenos) to me and to the whole church.' Spanish hospedador, French hote, and German Gastgeber all deploy dedicated hospitality vocabulary entirely distinct from 'stranger,' yet Greek uses the same word for both roles. This single NT occurrence preserves a semantic dimension that would have been immediately recognizable to Paul's Greek-speaking audience: the one who shows xenia and the one who receives it share the same name. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: host | es: hospedador | fr: étranger | de: Fremdlinge Rom 16:23

ξέστ-ης G3582 N-GMP (2×)

pitcher, a vessel for holding or pouring liquids

A container, specifically a handled pitcher or jug for water, wine, or other liquids. The Latin loanword (from 'sextarius,' a Roman liquid measure) entered Greek to denote both the measure and the vessel. Mark mentions pitchers in his description of Pharisaic washing rituals (7:4, 8)—the ceremonial cleansing of cups, pitchers, and kettles before use. The domestic detail anchors Jesus' subsequent critique of external purity versus internal defilement in the material world of first-century Jewish practice.

(2×) A pitcher or jug, likely of ceramic or metal. Originally denoting a Roman liquid measure (about one pint), the term evolved to mean the container itself. Mark's usage is ethnographic—describing Jewish ritual practice to a Gentile audience. The plural suggests household collections of various vessels, all subject to purification rites. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'jarras,' French 'cruche,' German 'Krug') identifies the domestic pitcher, distinguishing it from other vessel types. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-pitchers, pitchers | es: de-jarras | fr: cruche | de: Krug Mark 7:4; Mark 7:8

ξηραίνω G3583 V-AIP-3S (15×)

To wither, dry up, or become desiccated; in the active, to cause something to dry up or parch.

A vivid physical verb, ξηραίνω paints images of scorched vegetation and withered limbs throughout the New Testament. The cursed fig tree that withered overnight (Matt 21:19-20; Mark 11:20-21) became an acted parable of judgment, while seed on rocky ground that dried up for lack of root (Matt 13:6; Mark 4:6; Luke 8:6) illustrates shallow faith. The word also describes a man's withered hand (Mark 3:1) and apocalyptic drying of the Euphrates (Rev 16:12). Spanish 'se ha secado,' French 'dessécher,' and German 'vertrocknen' all preserve the concrete, physical force of desiccation.

1. wither, dry up (intransitive/passive) (14×) The intransitive or passive sense of withering, drying up, or becoming desiccated — by far the dominant usage with 14 occurrences. Applied to plants withering from scorching sun or rootlessness (Matt 13:6; Mark 4:6; Luke 8:6), the fig tree cursed by Jesus (Matt 21:19-20; Mark 11:20-21), a withered hand (Mark 3:1, 3), dried-up waters (Rev 16:12), and the transience of grass (1 Pet 1:24). Spanish 'se ha secado/se reseca' and German 'vertrocknen' emphasize the resultant state of dryness, while the Greek passive and middle forms convey that the subject undergoes rather than initiates the process. WITHERING AND DRYING en: becomes-rigid, dried-up, has-withered | es: fue-secada, se-ha-secado, se-reseca | fr: dessécher | de: vertrocknen, ἐξηράνθη Matt 13:6; Matt 21:19; Matt 21:20; Mark 3:1; Mark 4:6

2. dry up (transitive/active) (1×) The active, transitive sense of causing something to dry up or wither. In James 1:11, the scorching sun 'dried up' (ἐξήρανεν, aorist active) the plant — the sun acts as agent of desiccation. This single active occurrence contrasts with the dominant passive pattern, placing emphasis on the external force that brings about withering. Spanish 'secó' (active preterite) and the shift from reflexive to transitive framing across languages confirm this causative distinction. WITHERING AND DRYING en: dried-up | es: secó | fr: dessécher | de: vertrocknen Jas 1:11

ξηρός G3584 Adj-NFS (8×)

Dry, dried up, withered — of a body part paralyzed or shriveled, or of land as opposed to sea

The adjective ξηρός ('dry') appears eight times in the New Testament across two recognizable senses. Most often it describes a withered or paralyzed limb — the man with the 'withered hand' in the Synoptic healing stories (Matt 12:10, Mark 3:3, Luke 6:6-8) and the invalids at the pool of Bethesda (John 5:3). In its other sense it describes dry land or dry material: the Israelites passed through the Red Sea 'on dry ground' (Heb 11:29), and Jesus contrasts what is done 'in the green wood' with what will happen 'in the dry' (Luke 23:31). Jesus also uses it of those who traverse 'sea and dry land' to make a proselyte (Matt 23:15).

1. withered (5×) Withered, shriveled, paralyzed — describing a body part that has dried up and lost function. Five occurrences cluster around healing narratives: the man with the 'withered hand' appears in all three Synoptic Gospels (Matt 12:10, Mark 3:3, Luke 6:6, 6:8), and John 5:3 lists those with 'withered' limbs among the sick at Bethesda. Spanish uses 'seca/secos' and French 'sec,' both meaning dried or desiccated, applied to the human body. The physical imagery is vivid: a hand that has lost its moisture and vitality, shrunken and immobile, which Jesus restores with a word. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: withered | es: seca, secos | fr: sec | de: trocken, ξηρά, ξηράν Matt 12:10; Mark 3:3; Luke 6:6; Luke 6:8; John 5:3

2. dry (3×) Dry, as of land or material — the opposite of wet, moist, or green. Three occurrences use this geographical or material sense: Matt 23:15 ('sea and dry land'), Heb 11:29 ('dry ground' at the Red Sea crossing), and Luke 23:31 ('if they do these things in the green tree, what will happen in the dry?'). Spanish differentiates with 'tierra seca' (dry land/ground) and 'seco' (dry material), while English shifts from 'withered' to 'dry/dry land.' The Hebrews passage alludes to Exod 14:29, and Jesus' green-wood/dry-wood contrast in Luke 23 uses ξηρός as a metaphor for spiritual barrenness or judgment-readiness. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: dry, dry-land | es: seca, seco, tierra-seca | fr: sec | de: trocken, ξηρὰν, ξηρῷ Matt 23:15; Luke 23:31; Heb 11:29

ξῠλ-ῐ́νος G3585 Adj-NNP (2×)

wooden, made of wood or timber

Constructed from wood, describing objects crafted from timber. Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 2:20 in his metaphor of the great house containing vessels of various materials—'some of gold and silver, others of wood and clay'—distinguishing honorable from common use. John uses it in Revelation 9:20, condemning those who worship 'idols of gold, silver, bronze, stone, and wood' that cannot see or hear. Both contexts contrast wood's inferior or common nature with precious metals.

(2×) Made of wood, wooden in material. Classical usage distinguishes wooden structures (houses, ships) from stone or metal ones, sometimes with connotations of inferiority or impermanence. Paul's metaphor uses wood to represent more common or less honored vessels in God's household. John's polemic emphasizes wood's inertness—lifeless material worshiped as deity. Cross-linguistic renderings are uniform (Spanish 'de madera,' French 'de bois,' German 'hölzern'), consistently identifying the material composition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wooden | es: de-madera | fr: de-bois | de: hoelzern 2Tim 2:20; Rev 9:20

ξύλον G3586 N-ANP (20×)

Wood, tree, club, or stocks; any shaped or living wooden object, from the cross to cudgels to a carpenter's timber.

In the New Testament, this word spans the full life-cycle of wood—from the living tree to the cross on which Christ was hung. Luke preserves a proverb about green and dry wood (Luke 23:31), while Paul lists it among perishable building materials (1 Cor 3:12). Most strikingly, the apostolic preaching repeatedly calls the cross a 'tree' (Acts 5:30; 10:39; 13:29; Gal 3:13; 1 Pet 2:24), deliberately echoing Deuteronomy's curse formula. In the Synoptic arrest scenes the same word denotes the clubs carried by the mob. French and German translations collapse most senses into 'bois' and 'Holz,' but Spanish carefully distinguishes 'árbol' (tree), 'palos' (clubs), and 'madero' (timber/cross).

1. tree (10×) A tree, especially in the theological formula 'hanging on a tree' applied to Christ's crucifixion. All five Petrine and Pauline references (Acts 5:30, 10:39, 13:29; Gal 3:13; 1 Pet 2:24) use this word to invoke the Deuteronomic curse of Deut 21:22–23, reframing the cross as the accursed tree that bears salvation. Revelation's 'tree of life' (Rev 2:7; 22:2, 14) closes the canon's bookends with Eden. Spanish 'árbol' preserves the living-tree sense distinctly from 'madero.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tree, tree | es: madero, árbol | fr: bois | de: Holz Acts 5:30; Acts 10:39; Acts 13:29; Gal 3:13; 1Pet 2:24

2. clubs (5×) Clubs or cudgels—wooden weapons wielded by hand. All five occurrences cluster in the Synoptic arrest narratives (Matt 26:47, 55; Mark 14:43, 48; Luke 22:52), where Jesus challenges the crowd: 'Have you come out with swords and clubs as against a robber?' Spanish 'palos' (sticks) captures the rough, improvised nature of these weapons, distinct from manufactured arms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: clubs | es: palos | fr: bois | de: Holz Matt 26:47; Matt 26:55; Mark 14:43; Mark 14:48; Luke 22:52

3. wood (4×) Wood as a material or commodity—timber, lumber, or firewood. Paul ranks it among construction materials that will be tested by fire (1 Cor 3:12), Revelation lists it among luxury trade goods (Rev 18:12), and Jesus' green-wood/dry-wood proverb (Luke 23:31) trades on wood's combustibility. Spanish distinguishes 'madera' (lumber) from 'leño' (a log or billet), showing the material's varied commercial forms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wood | es: leño, madera, maderas | fr: bois | de: Holz Luke 23:31; 1Cor 3:12; Rev 18:12

4. stocks (1×) Stocks—a wooden restraining device for prisoners, consisting of a frame that locked the feet in place. Used only in Acts 16:24 where the Philippian jailer fastened Paul and Silas' feet in the stocks after their arrest. Spanish 'cepo' (stocks/trap) preserves the instrument's specific identity, which French 'bois' and German 'Holz' obscure by defaulting to the generic material. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: stocks | es: cepo | fr: bois | de: Holz Acts 16:24

ξῠρ-έω G3587 V-RPM/P-DFS (3×)

shave, to cut hair close to the skin with a razor

To shave is to remove hair by cutting close to the skin. Paul advises four men to 'shave their heads' as part of a Nazirite vow purification (Acts 21:24). He argues that if a woman prays with uncovered head, she might as well 'shave her head' (1 Cor 11:5, 6)—a culturally shameful act. The term is literal: hair removal. Spanish uses 'raparse' (shave oneself) and French 'raser,' both straightforward for this grooming/ritual act.

(3×) To shave, to cut hair close to the skin, whether for ritual purification or as a sign of shame. Acts 21:24 describes the completion of a Nazirite vow requiring head-shaving. 1 Corinthians 11:5, 6 use shaving as a reductio argument about head covering: if a woman won't cover her head, she might as well embrace the shame of a shaved head. The Greek ξυράω/ξυρέω is the standard term for shaving with a razor. Universally translated as 'shave/raparse/raser' across languages. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: having-been-shaved, they-may-shave, to-be-shaved | es: rapada, raparse, se-raparán | fr: raser | de: geschoren, ξυρήσονται Acts 21:24; 1Cor 11:5; 1Cor 11:6

τό G3588 Art-DNS (20036×)

The definite article; also substantivizer, connective, and comparative marker across all cases and genders

The most frequent word in the Greek New Testament, appearing over 20,000 times. Far more than a simple 'the,' it organizes Greek discourse at every level—marking definiteness, converting adjectives and participles into nouns ('the one who believes'), structuring genealogies and lists (the repeated article in Matthew 1), and signaling case relationships. Its flexibility allows it to function as a near-pronoun, a discourse connector, and even a comparative marker. Every target language handles it differently: German preserves full case inflection (der/die/das/den/dem/des), Spanish merges it with prepositions (al, del), while many Asian languages omit it entirely.

1. definite article (18298×) The basic definite article marking a noun as known, specific, or previously mentioned. With over 18,000 occurrences, this is the default function. German preserves full case/gender agreement (der/die/das), Spanish contracts with prepositions (al, del), while languages like Japanese and Korean lack articles entirely and leave it implicit. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: the, the-, the-one | es: *, *-el, al | fr: le- | de: das, den, der Matt 8:8; Matt 10:28; Matt 13:3; Matt 13:20; Matt 13:50

2. connective or structural article (493×) Connective or structural article linking clauses, marking transitions, or organizing lists. Most visible in Matthew 1's genealogy where repeated articles structure each generation. French 'le/la' and Spanish 'el/la' serve similar connective roles, but many translations suppress the article when its function is purely structural. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: the, the- | es: -al, -la, la | fr: de-la-, le- | de: das-, den, der Matt 1:2; Matt 1:3

3. substantivizer or pronoun (471×) Substantivizer turning adjectives, participles, or prepositional phrases into noun phrases: 'the one who,' 'those who,' 'that which.' English often requires added words ('the ones'), while Spanish 'los/las' can substantivize directly, paralleling the Greek construction naturally (Acts 1:6; 2:7). DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: the, the-, the-ones | es: Los, a-los, las | fr: les- | de: die Acts 1:3; Acts 1:6; Acts 1:18; Acts 2:7; Acts 2:9

4. dative article (indirect object/locative) (420×) Dative article marking indirect objects, locations, or instruments. Greek's synthetic case system packs meaning into the article form itself (τῷ, τῇ), while analytic languages unpack it into prepositions: English 'to the/in the,' Spanish 'al/en el,' German 'dem' (Matt 5:22, 24, 25). DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: in-the-, the-, to-the | es: -al, -con-el, -del | fr: au- | de: dem Matt 5:22; Matt 5:24; Matt 5:25

5. genitive article (possessive/partitive) (340×) Genitive article marking possession, source, or partitive relationships. The form τοῦ/τῆς/τῶν signals 'of the,' rendered in French as 'du/de la,' Spanish 'del/de la,' and German 'des/der.' Especially prominent in Pauline theology where chains of genitives define doctrinal relationships (Rom 1:3-5). DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: of-the-, the- | es: de-la, del, el | fr: du- | de: des, des- Acts 2:33; Rom 1:3; Rom 1:4; Rom 1:5

6. comparative article (14×) Article in comparative constructions following comparative adjectives, functioning as 'than the.' Only 14 occurrences mark this specialized use, as in Matt 12:45 ('worse than the first') and Matt 13:32 ('greater than the herbs'). Most languages render the comparison with a dedicated particle rather than an article. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the, of-the, of-the- | es: -del, a-los, de-la | fr: de-la-, des-, du- | de: der, des, des- Matt 12:45; Matt 13:32; Matt 18:14; Matt 21:36; Luke 9:40

ὀγδο-ήκοντα G3589 Adj-GNP (2×)

eighty, the cardinal number 80

The number eighty, appearing twice in Luke's Gospel. Anna the prophetess was of 'great age, having lived with her husband seven years from her virginity, and then as a widow until she was eighty-four' (Luke 2:37)—though textual and interpretive issues exist about whether 'eighty' describes years of widowhood or total age. In the parable of the unjust steward, the debtor's bill is reduced from a hundred measures to eighty (Luke 16:7). Both contexts use the number in straightforward quantification.

(2×) The number eighty, used for counting years or quantities. Luke employs it in different contexts—human age/longevity and commercial debt—showing its basic numerical function. Cross-linguistic renderings are uniform transliterations or native number terms (Spanish 'ochenta,' French 'quatre-vingts,' German retaining the Greek form), reflecting the simple cardinal meaning without symbolic elaboration. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: eighty | es: ochenta | fr: quatre-vingts | de: ὀγδοήκοντα Luke 2:37; Luke 16:7

ὄγδοος G3590 Adj-DFS (5×)

Eighth; the ordinal number eight, used of days, persons, and sequential items.

An ordinal adjective meaning 'eighth,' used in the NT to mark a day (Luke 1:59, the circumcision of John the Baptist on the eighth day), a person in a genealogical sequence (2 Pet 2:5, Noah as the 'eighth' person preserved), a position in a series of kings (Rev 17:11), and a foundation stone (Rev 21:20). The translations across languages are straightforward numerical ordinals — Spanish 'octavo,' French 'huitième,' German 'achte' — reflecting the universal clarity of the concept.

(5×) Eighth in a sequence — the ordinal form of the number eight. In Luke 1:59, it marks the prescribed day for circumcision; in Acts 7:8, Abraham circumcised Isaac on the eighth day. Second Peter 2:5 memorably calls Noah the 'eighth person' (ὄγδοον... ἐφύλαξεν), counting the eight survivors of the flood. Revelation uses it for a mysterious eighth king (17:11) and the eighth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (21:20). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'octavo,' French 'huitième,' German 'achte' — all render the concept with simple ordinal equivalents. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: an-eighth, eighth | es: octavo, octavo, | fr: huitième | de: achte, ὀγδόῃ Luke 1:59; Acts 7:8; 2Pet 2:5; Rev 17:11; Rev 21:20

ὄγκος G3591 N-AMS (1×)

Bulk, mass, or weight that encumbers; something heavy that hinders movement or progress

Though the Greek word can denote physical bulk or mass (heaps of wood, swelling, bodily size), its New Testament use in Hebrews 12:1 is metaphorical: 'let us lay aside every weight and the sin that clings so closely.' Here 'weight' refers to encumbrances that slow the Christian race—not necessarily sin itself, but legitimate burdens that nevertheless hinder spiritual progress. The athletic imagery is vivid: runners stripped off excess clothing and weight to run unencumbered. Translators consistently use 'weight' or 'burden,' recognizing the metaphor's power.

(1×) An encumbrance or burden that impedes progress, particularly in the metaphor of athletic competition. Hebrews 12:1 urges believers to discard 'every weight'—things that, while perhaps not sinful in themselves, hinder the race toward Christ. The image draws on Greek athletic culture where runners removed all unnecessary bulk before competing. BURDENS AND LOADS en: weight | es: peso | fr: Last | de: Last Heb 12:1

ὅδε G3592 DPro-DFS (10×)

This, these — near demonstrative pronoun pointing to what is present, just mentioned, or about to be stated

The demonstrative pronoun ὅδε (hode) means 'this' or 'these,' pointing to something present in the immediate context or about to be specified. It is rarer than the more common οὗτος and carries a somewhat formal or oracular register. In Revelation it introduces the words of Christ to each church: 'These things says he who...' (Rev 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14). In Acts 21:11 the prophet Agabus declares, 'This is what the Holy Spirit says.' James 4:13 uses it for a hypothetical plan: 'we will go to this or that city.' Spanish 'esto/estas cosas,' Arabic ذٰا, Hindi ये बातें, and Korean 이것들 render the deictic function across genders and numbers.

this, these (demonstrative pronoun) (10×) A near demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this, these,' used to point to what is present, just mentioned, or about to be declared. It appears across genders (masculine, feminine, neuter) and numbers (singular, plural) but with uniform deictic function. Dominant in Revelation's prophetic messenger formula — 'these things says he who holds the seven stars' (Rev 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14) — and in prophetic speech in Acts (21:11). James 4:13 uses it for 'this city or that city.' The pronoun is rarer and more formal than οὗτος, lending an oracular or solemn tone to its contexts. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: These-things, this, to-this-woman | es: Estas-cosas, a-esta, tal | fr: celui-ci, cette | de: dieses, Τάδε, τῇδε Luke 10:39; Acts 21:11; Jas 4:13; Rev 2:1; Rev 2:8

ὁδ-εύω G3593 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

One who is traveling or journeying on a road; a traveler making a trip

This participle describes someone actively engaged in travel, journeying along a road. In Luke 10:33, it introduces the Samaritan in Jesus' parable: 'But a Samaritan, as he traveled, came to where the man was.' The word emphasizes movement and journey—the Samaritan wasn't merely passing by abstractly but was actively traveling, yet stopped to help. Classical Greek uses this for those traversing territories, and the New Testament preserves that sense of purposeful movement along a route.

(1×) One who is traveling along a road or making a journey. In the Good Samaritan parable (Luke 10:33), this participle portrays the Samaritan in motion—'traveling' or 'journeying'—when he encounters the wounded man. The detail highlights that despite being en route with his own purposes, he interrupts his journey to render aid. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: traveling | es: viajando | fr: voyageur | de: ὁδεύων Luke 10:33

ὁδηγ-έω G3594 V-PSA-3S (5×)

To guide, lead along the way; to direct someone physically or spiritually toward a destination or truth.

A verb meaning to lead or guide someone along a path, derived from ὁδός (road) + ἡγέομαι (to lead). It carries both literal and metaphorical senses in the NT. In Matt 15:14 and Luke 6:39, blind guides lead others into a pit. In John 16:13, the Spirit of truth 'will guide you into all the truth.' In Acts 8:31, the Ethiopian eunuch asks Philip to guide him in understanding Scripture. The Spanish 'guiar' and French 'guider' preserve the same root sense of directional leading.

(5×) To guide or lead someone along a way, whether physically or metaphorically. The root ὁδός (road) embedded in the verb gives it a strongly directional sense — not merely influencing but actively conducting someone toward a goal. Jesus warns that blind guides (ὁδηγεῖν) lead followers into a ditch (Matt 15:14; Luke 6:39), while in John 16:13 the Holy Spirit will 'guide into all truth.' Acts 8:31 captures the intellectual sense: the eunuch cannot understand without someone to 'guide' him. Revelation 7:17 beautifully extends the image: the Lamb will guide redeemed ones to springs of living water. GOING AND LEADING en: guides, he-will-guide, leads | es: guiar, guiará, guía | fr: guider | de: fuehren, ὁδηγήσει, ὁδηγεῖν Matt 15:14; Luke 6:39; John 16:13; Acts 8:31; Rev 7:17

ὁδηγ-ός G3595 N-AMS (5×)

A guide, leader; one who leads others along a path, often used metaphorically of religious teachers.

A noun meaning guide or leader — one who shows the way. In the Gospels, Jesus uses it pointedly against the Pharisees: 'blind guides' (Matt 15:14; 23:16, 24) who lead others astray despite claiming to know the path. Acts 1:16 applies it to Judas as 'guide' to those who arrested Jesus. In Rom 2:19, Paul quotes the Jewish self-understanding of being 'a guide to the blind.' The multilingual convergence of Spanish 'guía,' French 'guide,' and German 'Führer' all point to the core sense of directional leadership.

(5×) A guide or leader, one who directs others along a physical or moral path. All five NT uses carry strongly metaphorical overtones of religious or moral guidance. Jesus' repeated charge of 'blind guides' (ὁδηγοὶ τυφλοί, Matt 23:16, 24) exposes leaders who mislead rather than guide. In Acts 1:16, Judas served as ὁδηγός to Jesus' captors — a dark inversion of the guide role. Rom 2:19 echoes Jewish self-identity as 'a guide to the blind,' which Paul then deconstructs. The Spanish 'guía' and French 'guide' preserve the same etymological link to showing the way. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12553 WITH 3 SENSES

en: guide, guides | es: guía, guías | fr: guide | de: Fuehrer, ὁδηγοί, ὁδηγοὶ Matt 15:14; Matt 23:16; Matt 23:24; Acts 1:16; Rom 2:19

ὁδοιπορ-έω G3596 V-PPA-GMP (1×)

To journey, travel, or make a trip; to walk or proceed along a road

This verb means to travel or journey, particularly on foot. In Acts 10:9, it sets the scene for Peter's vision: 'while they were journeying and approaching the city.' The word emphasizes the process of travel rather than mere motion—these messengers were on a deliberate trip with a destination. Classical usage includes walking through territories or coming to a place. Multilingual glosses ('traveling,' 'viajando,' 'voyager') maintain the sense of purposeful movement toward a goal.

(1×) To travel or journey, especially on foot toward a destination. Acts 10:9 uses this to describe Cornelius's messengers making their way to Joppa. The term emphasizes the journey in progress—they were 'journeying' (not just 'went')—creating narrative tension as Peter's vision occurs precisely while they approach. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: journeying | es: viajando | fr: voyager | de: ὁδοιπορούντων Acts 10:9

ὁδοιπορ-ία G3597 N-DFP (2×)

journey, traveling by road or the act of making a trip

The activity of traveling from one place to another, particularly by foot. John uses it to describe Jesus, 'wearied from his journey' (John 4:6), sitting by Jacob's well in Samaria—a humanizing detail showing physical exhaustion from travel. Paul uses the plural in his catalog of apostolic hardships: 'in frequent journeys' (2 Corinthians 11:26), likely referring to his missionary travels through difficult terrain. Both contexts emphasize the physical demands of pre-modern travel.

(2×) Journey or traveling, the act of going from place to place. Classical usage emphasizes walking—the primary mode of ancient travel for those without horses or carriages. John's notice of Jesus' weariness highlights the incarnation's true physicality—God in flesh experiences genuine fatigue. Paul's travels, covering thousands of miles on foot through hostile territory, represent extraordinary hardship. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'viaje/en viajes,' French 'voyage,' German 'Wanderung') preserve the sense of arduous travel. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13262 WITH 3 SENSES

en: in-journeys, journey | es: en-viajes, viaje | fr: voyage | de: Wanderung John 4:6; 2Cor 11:26

ὁδός G3598 N-GFP (101×)

Way, road, path; a physical route, a figurative course of life or conduct, or 'the Way' as the early Christian movement.

Few words in the New Testament carry as much theological freight as hodos. At its simplest it means a physical road—the path to Emmaus, the road from Jerusalem to Jericho. But it quickly becomes the Bible's great metaphor for life, conduct, and destiny: John the Baptist prepares 'the way of the Lord' (Matt 3:3), Jesus declares 'I am the way' (John 14:6), and the broad and narrow ways define two ultimate destinies (Matt 7:13-14). Most strikingly, the earliest Christians called their movement simply 'the Way' (Acts 9:2; 19:9, 23), before the name 'Christian' took hold. Spanish camino and German Weg replicate this same literal-to-figurative arc.

1. physical road, route, path (50×) Split from sense 72989. Criteria: Concrete physical route or path for travel — Matt 2:12 'another way', Matt 4:15 'way of the sea', Matt 8:28, Matt 13:4 'along the path', Matt 20:17, 30; the journey sense Luke 11:6

en: a-way, path, road | es: camino | fr: chemin | de: Weg Matt 2:12; Matt 4:15; Matt 5:25; Matt 8:28; Matt 10:5

2. way of life, course of conduct (29×) Split from sense 72989. Criteria: Figurative moral or spiritual way — Matt 3:3 'prepare the way of the Lord', Matt 7:13-14 'narrow/broad way', Matt 22:16 'way of God', Matt 21:32 'way of righteousness', John 14:6 'I am the way'

en: way | es: camino | fr: chemin | de: Weg Matt 3:3; Matt 7:13; Matt 7:14; Matt 11:10; Matt 21:32

3. ways (plural: roads, courses of conduct) (14×) Plural forms (hodoi, hodous, hodon) denoting multiple roads or courses of conduct—highways, crossroads, or God's manifold ways. Matt 22:9-10 sends servants to 'the roads' to invite guests; Luke 3:5 straightens 'the crooked ways'; Romans 11:33 marvels at God's inscrutable 'ways.' The fourteen plural occurrences consistently distribute across literal (roads, lanes, highways) and figurative (patterns of behavior, divine governance) poles, and most languages simply pluralize their word for 'way.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: roads, ways | es: caminos | fr: chemin | de: Weg Matt 22:9; Matt 22:10; Luke 1:76; Luke 3:5; Luke 14:23

4. the Way (early Christian movement) (8×) The technical title 'the Way' (he Hodos) for the early Christian movement, concentrated in Acts. Saul persecutes 'those belonging to the Way' (Acts 9:2); Apollos is instructed more accurately in 'the Way of the Lord' (Acts 18:25); the silversmiths cause a disturbance about 'the Way' (Acts 19:23). Eight occurrences cluster in Acts 9-24, reflecting Luke's distinctive vocabulary for earliest Christianity before the Antioch label 'Christian' (Acts 11:26). This quasi-proper-noun usage has no exact parallel in the Synoptics or Paul. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Way, way | es: Camino, camino | fr: chemin, voie | de: Weg Mark 6:8; Acts 9:2; Acts 19:9; Acts 19:23; Acts 22:4

ὀδούς G3599 N-GMS (12×)

odous – tooth; a hard bony structure in the jaw, often in 'gnashing of teeth' imagery

The noun odous ('tooth') denotes the hard bony structure rooted in the jaw used for biting and chewing. While the word has a straightforward anatomical meaning, its New Testament profile is dominated by one vivid formula: brygmos ton odonton, 'gnashing of teeth,' which Jesus employs repeatedly to depict the anguish and rage of eschatological judgment (Matt 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30; Luke 13:28). The only other context is the lex talionis quotation 'tooth for tooth' (Matt 5:38), drawn from Exodus 21:24. The convergence of Spanish diente, French dent, and German Zahn on a single gloss confirms that no polysemy is at work – just one word pressed into powerful figurative service.

tooth (12×) A tooth – used almost exclusively in the NT formula 'gnashing of teeth' for eschatological anguish (Matt 8:12; 13:42, 50; 25:30; Luke 13:28), plus once in 'tooth for tooth' (Matt 5:38). Spanish diente, French dent, and German Zahn render it uniformly with no semantic subdivision. TOOTH TEETH

en: teeth, tooth | es: diente, dientes | fr: dent, dents | de: Zaehne, Zahn Matt 5:38; Matt 8:12; Matt 13:42; Matt 13:50

ὀδῦν-άω G3600 V-PPM/P-NMP (4×)

To be in anguish, suffer pain or torment; to grieve deeply Expresses intense suffering that may be physical, emotional, or both. In Luke 16:24-25, the rich man cries out from Hades that he is 'in agony' in the flames — the most viscerally physical use. Yet in Luke 2:48, Mary tells the boy Jesus that she and Joseph have been searching for him 'in great distress,' and in Acts 20:38, the Ephesian elders grieve most of all because they will never see Paul's face again. The word thus bridges bodily torment and emotional anguish. Spanish captures this range with sufres (physical) alongside angustiados and dolidos (emotional grief).

(4×) To experience intense pain, anguish, or torment — whether physical or emotional. The rich man in Hades uses it of bodily agony in flames (Luke 16:24-25), while Mary uses it of the emotional distress of a lost child (Luke 2:48), and the Ephesian elders of deep grief at permanent separation from Paul (Acts 20:38). Spanish distinguishes sufres (bodily suffering) from angustiados/dolidos (grief), but the Greek word encompasses both poles under a single term for acute, deeply felt suffering. SUFFERING PAIN

en: I-am-in-agony, are-in-agony, grieving | es: angustiados, dolidos, sufres | fr: souffrir | de: ὀδυνώμενοι, ὀδυνᾶσαι, ὀδυνῶμαι Luke 2:48; Luke 16:24; Luke 16:25; Acts 20:38

ὀδῦν-η G3601 N-NFS (2×)

pain, suffering or anguish, whether physical or emotional

Acute distress affecting body or soul. Paul uses it in Romans 9:2 to describe his 'great sorrow and unceasing anguish' over Israel's unbelief—a pain so profound it leads him to wish himself accursed if it would save his kinsmen. In 1 Timothy 6:10, he warns that love of money has pierced many 'with many pains'—perhaps both the emotional torment of greed and its painful consequences. The word captures suffering that goes beyond mere discomfort to genuine agony.

(2×) Pain or anguish, intense suffering of body or spirit. Classical usage spans physical pain (wounds, childbirth) and mental distress (grief, sorrow). Paul's usage emphasizes emotional agony—the pain of seeing loved ones lost, the self-inflicted suffering of those who pursue wealth. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'dolor/con dolores,' French 'douleur,' German 'Schmerz') preserve the ambiguity between physical and psychological pain, recognizing their frequent overlap. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: pain, with-pains | es: con-dolores, dolor | fr: Schmerz, douleur | de: Schmerz Rom 9:2; 1Tim 6:10

ὀδυρ-μός G3602 N-NMS (2×)

mourning, lamentation or expression of grief

The vocal expression of sorrow, particularly ritual mourning for the dead. Matthew uses it in quoting Jeremiah's prophecy about Rachel weeping for her children: 'lamentation and weeping and great mourning' (Matthew 2:18)—the triple description emphasizing the intensity of grief over Herod's massacre. Paul uses it differently in 2 Corinthians 7:7, reporting Titus's news of the Corinthians' 'mourning' over Paul—likely grief over past wrongs or longing for reconciliation. The term suggests audible, demonstrative grief.

(2×) Lamentation or mourning, particularly ritual expressions of grief. Classical usage pairs it with 'wailing' (gooi) in funeral contexts —the formal, public display of sorrow that ancient Mediterranean culture expected. Matthew's context is archetypal grief—mothers mourning slaughtered children. Paul's usage extends it to spiritual grief over sin or broken relationship. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'lamento,' French 'gémissement,' German forms) points to vocal, expressive mourning rather than silent sorrow. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: mourning | es: lamento | fr: gémissement | de: ὀδυρμόν, ὀδυρμὸς Matt 2:18; 2Cor 7:7

εἰμί G3603

to be, exist (copula verb εἰμί); highly irregular paradigm with dialectal variants

The most fundamental verb in Greek, εἰμί expresses existence, identity, and predication. Its paradigm is wildly irregular, drawing from multiple ancient roots: present εἰμί, imperfect ἦν, future ἔσομαι. Dialectal forms abound—Aeolic ἔμμι, Doric ἐντί, Epic εἰμέν. The third-person ἐστί can be existential ('there is'), copular ('the man is wise'), or possessive ('I have' = μοί ἐστι). No verb sees more use or shows more morphological irregularity across Greek dialects.

Ὀζείας G3604 N-NMS (2×)

Uzziah, king of Judah whose name means 'Yahweh is my strength'

The name of a Judean monarch (also called Azariah) who reigned in the 8th century BC. Matthew includes him in Jesus' genealogy (1:8-9), though the genealogy compresses generations—actually Uzziah's great-great-grandson Jotham follows him, not his immediate son. The historical Uzziah (2 Kings 15, 2 Chronicles 26) prospered militarily and economically but was struck with leprosy for his presumption in entering the temple to burn incense. Matthew's genealogy, with its telescoped structure, emphasizes Jesus' connection to David's royal line.

(2×) Uzziah, king of Judah (792-740 BC), included in Christ's legal genealogy. The name (Hebrew 'Uzziyahu') means 'Yahweh is my strength,' reflecting the theophoric element common in royal names. Matthew's abbreviated genealogy serves theological purposes —demonstrating Jesus as David's heir—more than strict chronological completeness. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Ozías, Ozias, Usia) preserve the Greek rendering of the Hebrew name with minor phonetic variations. UZZIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Ozias | es: Ozías | fr: Ozias | de: Usia Matt 1:8; Matt 1:9

ὄζω G3605 V-PIA-3S (1×)

To emit an odor or smell, whether pleasant or foul; to give off a scent

In Greek this verb means to smell or give off an odor—either sweet fragrance or stench, depending on context. The New Testament's sole use is striking: in John 11:39, Martha objects to opening Lazarus's tomb with the blunt words, 'Lord, by this time there will be an odor, for he has been dead four days.' The Greek verb conveys the harsh reality of decomposition. Translators often render it 'he smells' or 'he stinks' (Spanish 'hiede'), not softening the physical fact that makes Jesus' resurrection miracle all the more astonishing.

(1×) To emit a smell or odor, in this context specifically a foul smell from decay. John 11:39 records Martha's realistic objection: after four days, Lazarus's body 'smells' or 'stinks.' The verb's directness (German 'stinken,' Spanish 'hiede') underscores the physical reality of death and decomposition, making Christ's command to roll away the stone an act of faith against sensory evidence. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: he-smells | es: hiede | fr: sentir | de: stinken John 11:39

ὅθεν G3606 Conj (15×)

From where, whence (of spatial origin); by extension, therefore, for which reason (inferential connective).

This compact adverb bridges physical space and logical reasoning in the New Testament. In its spatial sense, ὅθεν asks 'from where?' — as when an unclean spirit returns to the house 'from which' it came (Matt 12:44; Luke 11:24), or a master reaps 'where' he did not sow (Matt 25:24). But in Hebrews especially, ὅθεν shifts to an inferential marker meaning 'therefore' or 'for which reason' (Heb 2:17; 3:1; 7:25; 8:3), drawing theological conclusions with logical precision. German 'woher' preserves the spatial root, while Spanish 'por lo cual' captures the inferential leap.

1. from where, whence (spatial/source) (8×) A relative adverb of spatial origin meaning 'from where' or 'whence,' indicating the place or source from which someone or something comes. The unclean spirit returns to the house 'from which' it departed (Matt 12:44; Luke 11:24); the harsh master reaps 'from where' he did not sow (Matt 25:24, 26). Spanish 'de donde/desde donde,' French 'd'où,' and German 'woher' all preserve the directional, source-oriented meaning. Eight occurrences anchor this concrete spatial usage across the Synoptics and Acts. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: from-there, from-where, from-which | es: de-donde, desde-donde | fr: d'où | de: woher, ὅθεν Matt 12:44; Matt 25:24; Matt 25:26; Luke 11:24; Acts 14:26

2. therefore, for which reason (inferential) (7×) An inferential conjunction meaning 'therefore,' 'hence,' or 'for which reason,' representing a semantic extension from spatial origin to logical ground. Concentrated in Hebrews (2:17; 3:1; 7:25; 8:3), it introduces weighty theological conclusions: 'Therefore he had to be made like his brothers in every respect' (Heb 2:17). Paul uses it similarly in Acts 26:19 for a conclusion drawn from the Damascus road vision. Spanish 'por lo cual' makes the inferential force explicit, while French 'd'où' retains the etymological link to origin. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: Therefore, therefore | es: Por-lo-cual, por-lo-cual | fr: d'où | de: woher, ὅθεν, Ὅθεν Matt 14:7; Acts 26:19; Heb 2:17; Heb 3:1; Heb 7:25

ὀθόν-η G3607 N-AFS (2×)

linen sheet or cloth, a piece of fine fabric

A cloth made of fine linen, particularly in sheet form. Luke uses it twice in Acts to describe Peter's vision: a great sheet descending from heaven containing all kinds of animals (Acts 10:11, 11:5). The detail is vivid and specific—not just 'something' but a recognizable linen sheet, the corners held as if by invisible hands. The mundane household item becomes the vehicle for revolutionary revelation: the clean-unclean distinction is abolished, Gentiles are welcomed, and Peter's kosher scruples must yield to God's new creation.

(2×) A sheet or cloth of fine linen. Classical usage includes fine linen garments, cloths, and (later) sails. Luke's vision uses a common domestic item—the kind of sheet used for bedding or wrapping—making the supernatural descent more concrete and accessible. The choice of linen (not wool or leather) may suggest purity, though that becomes paradoxical when it contains unclean animals. Cross-linguistic uniformity (Spanish 'sábana,' French 'toile,' German retaining Greek) points to a large rectangular cloth. LINEN CLOTH WRAPPING en: sheet | es: sábana | fr: toile | de: ὀθόνην Acts 10:11; Acts 11:5

ὀθόν-ιον G3608 N-ANP (5×)

Linen cloth, linen wrapping; strips of linen used especially for burial, the cloths that wrapped Jesus' body.

A diminutive of ὀθόνη (linen), referring to strips or pieces of linen cloth. All five NT occurrences relate directly to Jesus' burial and resurrection. In John 19:40, the body is wrapped in linen cloths with spices according to Jewish custom. The discovery of these same cloths lying in the empty tomb becomes powerful resurrection evidence (Luke 24:12; John 20:5–7). The Spanish 'lienzos' and French 'bandelette' (small bandage-strip) capture the diminutive quality, while German 'Leinentücher' (linen cloths) emphasizes the fabric.

(5×) Linen cloths or strips used for wrapping a body for burial. The diminutive form (from ὀθόνη) suggests smaller pieces or strips rather than a single large sheet (which is σινδών). Every NT use connects to Jesus' burial: Joseph and Nicodemus wrap the body in ὀθόνια with aromatic spices (John 19:40), and the discovery of these wrappings lying undisturbed in the empty tomb (Luke 24:12; John 20:5–7) becomes evidence of the resurrection. The French 'bandelette' captures the strip-like quality, while the Spanish 'lienzos' highlights the linen material. LINEN CLOTH WRAPPING

en: in-linen-cloths, linen-cloths | es: con-lienzos, lienzos | fr: bandelette | de: Leinentuecher, ὀθόνια Luke 24:12; John 19:40; John 20:5; John 20:6; John 20:7

οἰκεῖος G3609 Adj-NMP (3×)

household members, those belonging to one's household or family

Household members are those belonging to one's family or domestic circle. Paul urges doing good 'especially to those of the household of faith' (Gal 6:10). Gentile believers are 'no longer strangers but members of the household of God' (Eph 2:19). Anyone who doesn't provide for his own household 'has denied the faith' (1 Tim 5:8). The term emphasizes belonging and relational obligation. Spanish 'miembros de la casa/familia' and German 'Hausgenosse' (house-companion) capture the domestic-kinship bond.

(3×) Members of a household, family, or domestic circle—those who belong together through kinship or association. Galatians 6:10 uses it for fellow believers ('household of faith'). Ephesians 2:19 says Gentile believers are now οἰκεῖοι of God, not strangers. 1 Timothy 5:8 speaks of providing for one's own household. The Greek οἰκεῖος derives from οἶκος (house) and indicates belonging and relational obligation. Spanish 'de casa/de la familia' and German 'Hausgenosse' emphasize the domestic kinship bond. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: household, household-members | es: de-casa, miembros-de-la-casa, miembros-de-la-familia | fr: οἰκείους, οἰκείων, οἰκεῖοι | de: Hausgenosse Gal 6:10; Eph 2:19; 1Tim 5:8

οἰκέτ-ης G3610 N-GMP (5×)

Household servant, domestic slave; a member of a household who serves under the master's authority.

A noun derived from οἶκος (house), designating a servant who belongs to a household — more intimate than the generic δοῦλος (slave). In Matt 24:45 (the faithful and wise servant set over the household) and Luke 16:13 (no servant can serve two masters), the term evokes the close, trust-based relationship between master and domestic. Acts 10:7 describes Cornelius's devout household servants, and 1 Pet 2:18 addresses household slaves directly. The Spanish 'siervo doméstico' nicely captures the domestic dimension that distinguishes this word.

(5×) A household servant or domestic slave — someone who serves within the intimate context of a home rather than in fields or public service. Derived from οἶκος (house), this word emphasizes belonging to a household. In Rom 14:4, Paul asks 'Who are you to judge another's household servant?' — the οἰκέτης belongs to his own master. First Peter 2:18 addresses these domestic servants, urging submission even to harsh masters. The Spanish differentiation between 'siervo' (general servant) and 'siervo doméstico' (household servant) precisely mirrors the Greek distinction between δοῦλος and οἰκέτης. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: household, household-servants, servant | es: servidumbre, siervo, siervo-doméstico | fr: serviteur | de: Diener, οἰκέτης, οἰκετείας Matt 24:45; Luke 16:13; Acts 10:7; Rom 14:4; 1Pet 2:18

οἰκέω G3611 V-PNA (9×)

To dwell, inhabit, reside; used of both physical habitation and the spiritual indwelling of sin or the Holy Spirit.

From oikos (house), this verb means to dwell in or inhabit a place. While its basic sense is residential, Paul transforms it in Romans 7-8 into a powerful theological metaphor. Sin 'dwells in' the believer's flesh (Rom 7:17, 18, 20), but the Spirit of God also 'dwells in' those who belong to Christ (Rom 8:9, 11). This tension between indwelling sin and indwelling Spirit is central to Pauline anthropology. The Spanish 'habita' and French 'habiter' both derive from the Latin habitare, preserving the same domestic metaphor.

dwell, inhabit (9×) To reside in, inhabit, or make one's dwelling in a place or person. The literal sense of physical habitation underlies the word, but in the NT it is most striking in Paul's metaphorical use for spiritual indwelling. In Romans 7:17-20, sin is personified as an occupant that 'dwells in' the flesh, acting against the person's will. Romans 8:9-11 counters with the Spirit of God dwelling in believers, and 1 Cor 3:16 asks 'do you not know that God's Spirit dwells in you?' Spanish 'habita,' French 'habiter,' and German 'wohnen' all preserve the domestic metaphor of taking up residence, making the spiritual application all the more vivid. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: dwelling, dwelling-in, dwells | es: habita, habita?, habitando | fr: habiter | de: wohnen Rom 7:17; Rom 7:18; Rom 7:20; Rom 8:9; Rom 8:11

οἴκ-ημα G3612 N-DNS (1×)

A dwelling place or room; specifically a chamber, cell, or place of confinement such as a prison cell

This Greek noun denotes a dwelling or room, with classical usage ranging from bedchambers to storerooms to prison cells. In Acts 12:7, it describes the place where Peter was imprisoned: 'a light shone in the cell.' The context makes clear this is a prison chamber where Peter slept chained between guards. While the word can mean any dwelling or room, Luke's narrative specifies a place of confinement. Translators render it 'cell' or 'prison,' reflecting the setting of Peter's miraculous angelic rescue.

(1×) A room or dwelling place, here specifically a prison cell. Acts 12:7 narrates Peter's imprisonment: light suddenly shines 'in the cell' where he sleeps chained. Though the Greek word has broader meanings (bedroom, storeroom, temple chamber), the immediate context of chains and guards defines it as a place of detention, making the angel's intervention a dramatic prison break. SITTING AND DWELLING en: cell | es: celda | fr: prison | de: οἰκήματι Acts 12:7

οἰκ-ητήριον G3613 N-ANS (2×)

dwelling place, habitation or residence

A place where one dwells or resides. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 5:2 to describe believers' heavenly dwelling—'our dwelling from heaven'—which they long to put on over their earthly tent. Jude uses it in condemning fallen angels who 'abandoned their proper dwelling' (Jude 1:6), departing from their assigned place to transgress boundaries. Both contexts emphasize the dwelling as assigned, proper location—either the heavenly home awaiting believers or the heavenly realm angels abandoned in rebellion.

(2×) A dwelling or habitation, one's proper residence. Classical usage denotes simply a place to live, but the theological contexts add significance: dwellings are divinely appointed. Paul's usage is eschatological—the resurrection body as permanent dwelling versus the earthly body as temporary tent. Jude's usage is cosmological—angelic beings have assigned realms they must not abandon. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'habitación/morada,' French 'demeure/habitation,' German 'Behausung/Wohnung') emphasize stable residence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: dwelling | es: habitación, morada | fr: demeure, habitation, | de: Behausung, Wohnung 2Cor 5:2; Jude 1:6

οἰκί-α G3614 N-AFS (95×)

House or dwelling as a physical structure; by metonymy, a household or the people living in a house.

Oikia denotes a physical house or dwelling — the building where one lives, eats, and gathers. Jesus builds his parable of the wise and foolish builders around the oikia set on rock or sand (Matt 7:24-27), and the magi enter the oikia to find the child Jesus (Matt 2:11). In a small but meaningful extension, oikia can refer to the household — the people who constitute a family unit rather than the building itself. Paul commends the household (oikia) of Stephanas as the firstfruits of Achaia (1 Cor 16:15), and greetings go to Caesar's household (Phil 4:22). Spanish casa, French maison, and German Haus serve both senses, leaving context to disambiguate.

1. house, dwelling (physical structure) (93×) A physical house, building, or dwelling — the dominant sense covering the vast majority of occurrences. Jesus teaches about a house built on rock versus sand (Matt 7:24-26), and his followers gather in houses for meals and instruction (Matt 5:15; Mark 2:15). Spanish casa, French maison, and German Haus all render this straightforwardly as a physical structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: house | es: casa | fr: maison | de: Haus Matt 2:11; Matt 5:15; Matt 7:24; Matt 7:25; Matt 7:26

2. household (family/members of a house) (2×) A metonymic extension from building to its inhabitants — 'household,' meaning the people who constitute a family or domestic unit. Paul commends 'the household of Stephanas' (1 Cor 16:15), and sends greetings from 'those of Caesar's household' (Phil 4:22). The shift from structure to people is subtle in many languages — Spanish casa and German Haus can mean both — but the context clearly indicates persons rather than buildings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: household | es: casa | fr: maison | de: Haus 1Cor 16:15; Phil 4:22

οἰκι-ακός G3615 N-AMP (2×)

household members, those belonging to one's domestic circle

The members of a household, particularly servants or dependents under the master's authority. Jesus uses this term twice in Matthew 10 to warn disciples about persecution: if they called the master Beelzebul, how much more will they malign 'his household members' (10:25), and 'a person's enemies will be the members of his own household' (10:36). The word suggests not just physical proximity but authority relationships—those under the householder's governance, whether family or servants.

(2×) Household members or domestic servants, those belonging to a person's oikos. The term implies subordinate status within the household hierarchy. Jesus' usage in Matthew 10 is sobering: disciples will face opposition from both outsiders (who slandered Jesus) and insiders (family members). The household that should be a place of safety becomes a site of conflict when allegiance to Christ divides families. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'de la casa,' French 'gens de maison') preserve the household connection. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: household-members | es: de-la-casa | fr: gens-de-maison | de: οἰκιακοὶ, οἰκιακοὺς Matt 10:25; Matt 10:36

οἰκοδεσποτ-έω G3616 V-PNA (1×)

To manage or rule a household; to exercise authority over domestic affairs as master of a house

This verb means to be master of a household, managing its affairs and exercising authority over its members. In 1 Timothy 5:14, Paul instructs younger widows to 'marry, bear children, manage their households,' giving adversaries no opportunity for slander. The term implies comprehensive household leadership—economic, relational, and spiritual oversight. Classical Greek uses it for stewardship and governance. The multilingual evidence ('gobernar casa,' 'manage a household') captures both administrative and authoritative dimensions of domestic responsibility.

(1×) To exercise authority and oversight as head of a household, managing domestic affairs. 1 Timothy 5:14 lists household management among duties for young widows who remarry, emphasizing responsible stewardship that silences critics. The verb implies more than housekeeping—it denotes leadership, decision-making, and comprehensive governance of the home's spiritual and material welfare. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: to-manage-a-household | es: gobernar-casa | fr: οἰκοδεσποτεῖν | de: das-Haus-verwalten 1Tim 5:14

οἰκοδεσπότ-ης G3617 N-DMS (12×)

oikodespotes – master of a house, householder; one who owns and manages a household

The compound noun oikodespotes ('master of the house') joins oikos ('house') and despotes ('master') to denote the person who owns and exercises authority over a household and its affairs. It appears exclusively in the Synoptic Gospels, where Jesus uses it in parables and teachings to illustrate divine sovereignty, watchful stewardship, and the relationship between God and his people. The householder who hires laborers at various hours (Matt 20:1), the master whose servants must stay alert (Mark 13:35), the owner who brings out treasures old and new (Matt 13:52) – each draws on the cultural reality of the paterfamilias to convey theological truths. Spanish dueno de casa, French maitre de maison, and German Hausherr all capture this single composite sense.

master of the house (12×) The master or owner of a household who holds authority over domestic affairs. Jesus employs this figure in parables: the householder hiring vineyard workers (Matt 20:1), the master expecting readiness (Mark 13:35; Luke 12:39), the scribe like a householder (Matt 13:52). Spanish dueno-de-casa, French maitre-de-maison, German Hausherr confirm one unified concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-master-of-a-house, master-of-house, master-of-the-house | es: amo-de-casa, dueño-de-casa, dueño-de-la-casa | fr: maître-de-maison | de: Hausherr Matt 10:25; Matt 13:27; Matt 13:52; Matt 20:1; Matt 20:11

οἰκοδομ-έω G3618 V-PIM/P-2P (41×)

To build or construct; figuratively, to edify or strengthen spiritually; as a substantive, a builder.

From the Greek roots oikos (house) and domeo (build), this verb carries the full weight of construction — from laying stone foundations to raising up a community of faith. Jesus uses it literally when he speaks of the wise man who 'built his house on rock' (Matt 7:24), and figuratively when he promises 'I will build my church' (Matt 16:18). Paul transforms the metaphor further: love 'builds up' (1 Cor 8:1), making spiritual edification the hallmark of Christian community. The Spanish split between 'edificar' (build/edify) and 'constructores' (builders) mirrors the word's semantic breadth, while French 'bâtir' unifies both physical and spiritual senses under one roof.

1. build or construct physically (19×) To erect or construct a physical structure — a house, temple, tower, tomb, or vineyard wall. This is the literal, foundational sense, prominent in Jesus' parables: the wise and foolish builders (Matt 7:24, 26), the vineyard owner's tower (Matt 21:33), and the Pharisees who build tombs for the prophets (Matt 23:29). Spanish 'edificaré' and German 'bauen' consistently reflect straightforward physical construction. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: I-might-build, I-will-build, build | es: edificaban, edificaré, edificaréis | fr: bâtir | de: bauen, baut Matt 7:24; Matt 7:26; Matt 16:18; Matt 21:33; Matt 23:29

2. edify or build up spiritually (10×) To strengthen, encourage, or build up a person or community in faith — the metaphorical sense that became central to Pauline theology. In 1 Corinthians 8:1, knowledge puffs up but love 'builds up' (oikodomei). Acts 9:31 describes the early church being 'built up' in peace. Spanish distinguishes this with 'edifica' and the reflexive 'edificaos' (build yourselves up, Jude 1:20), highlighting communal and self-directed spiritual growth. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: are-being-built-up, being-built-up, build-up | es: edifica, edifican, edificaos | fr: bâtir | de: bauen, baut Acts 9:31; Acts 20:32; 1Cor 8:1; 1Cor 8:10; 1Cor 10:23

3. build (general or contextual) (7×) To build in a general or contextually ambiguous sense that may encompass both literal construction and figurative edification, including rebuilding what was destroyed. Jesus' saying 'destroy this temple and in three days I will build it' (Matt 26:61; Mark 15:29) operates on both planes simultaneously. Luke 14:28 uses it for calculating the cost of building a tower — a literal image serving a spiritual lesson about discipleship. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: I-build, building, to-build | es: a-edificar, edificando, edificar | fr: bâtir | de: bauen, baut Matt 26:61; Matt 27:40; Mark 15:29; Luke 6:48; Luke 14:28

4. builder (agent noun) (5×) One who builds — the agent noun derived from the participle, used substantively to denote builders or constructors. All five occurrences cluster around the same Psalm 118:22 quotation: 'the stone which the builders rejected has become the cornerstone' (Matt 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet 2:7). Spanish splits between 'constructores' and 'edificadores,' while the repeated citation across four NT authors underscores its messianic weight. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: builders, building | es: constructores, edificadores, que-edificaban | fr: bâtir | de: bauen, baut Matt 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1Pet 2:7

οἰκοδομ-ή G3619 N-NFP (18×)

Building up or edification (abstract, spiritual); also a concrete building or structure.

Oikodome bridges the physical and the spiritual with elegant directness. Built from oikos ('house') and the root of demomai ('to build'), it can mean either a concrete structure or the abstract process of building up a community or person. Paul makes this word a cornerstone of his ecclesiology: everything in worship should aim at the oikodome of the church (1 Cor 14:3, 5, 12, 26), and believers should pursue what builds up their neighbors (Rom 14:19; 15:2). The concrete sense appears in the Synoptic Gospels, where the disciples marvel at the Temple's magnificent buildings (Matt 24:1; Mark 13:1-2), and in Paul's image of a heavenly 'building from God' awaiting believers (2 Cor 5:1).

1. building up, edification (abstract) (12×) The abstract process of spiritual or communal building up, strengthening, and edification. Spanish 'edificación' and French 'édification' both preserve the architectural metaphor embedded in the word, revealing how naturally the image of constructing a building transfers to strengthening a community of faith. Paul deploys this sense extensively in his Corinthian correspondence: prophecy builds up the church (1 Cor 14:3-5), love builds up while knowledge puffs up (1 Cor 8:1), and all things should be done for edification (1 Cor 14:26). In Romans 14:19 and 15:2, mutual edification is the ethical benchmark for Christian conduct in disputed matters. BUILDING AND EDIFICATION en: building-up, edification | es: edificación | fr: édification, édifice | de: Auferbauung Rom 14:19; Rom 15:2; 1Cor 14:3; 1Cor 14:5; 1Cor 14:12

2. building, structure (concrete) (6×) A concrete physical building or structure. German 'Auferbauung' and Spanish 'edificio/edificaciones' both reflect the tangible, architectural sense. The Synoptic apocalyptic discourse opens with the disciples admiring the Temple's imposing buildings (Matt 24:1; Mark 13:1), only for Jesus to prophesy that not one stone will remain on another (Mark 13:2). Paul calls the Corinthian church 'God's building' (1 Cor 3:9), playing on the boundary between concrete structure and spiritual community, and in 2 Corinthians 5:1 he speaks of an eternal 'building from God' as the resurrection body, a heavenly dwelling not made with hands. BUILDING AND EDIFICATION en: building, buildings | es: construcción, edificaciones, edificio | fr: édification, édifice | de: Auferbauung, οἰκοδομὰς Matt 24:1; Mark 13:1; Mark 13:2; 1Cor 3:9; 2Cor 5:1

οἰκοδομ-ία G3620

building (act of construction); edifice, structure built

The noun οἰκοδομία carries two related senses: the process of building (construction work) and the result of that process (a building or edifice). It derives from οἰκοδομέω, 'to build a house,' and shares the semantic range between action and product common to -ία nouns. In metaphorical extension, it can refer to edification or spiritual building-up, though that theological sense may be developed more fully in New Testament usage than in classical contexts.

οἰκονομ-έω G3621 V-PNA (1×)

To manage, administer, or regulate as a steward; to oversee household or property affairs on behalf of another

This verb means to manage or administer, particularly in the role of a steward (οἰκονόμος) who oversees another's property or household.

In Luke 16:2, the master confronts his steward: 'Give an account of your stewardship, for you can no longer manage my affairs.' The word implies delegated authority and responsibility—the steward doesn't own the resources but must faithfully administer them. Classical usage includes managing public offices and regulating resources, themes central to Jesus' stewardship parables.

(1×) To act as a steward or manager, administering resources or affairs on behalf of an owner. Luke 16:2 depicts the crisis moment when a steward is told he can 'no longer manage'—his authority is being revoked. The term captures the essence of delegated responsibility: managing what belongs to another, a key theme in Jesus' teaching about faithfulness with entrusted resources. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: to-manage | es: ser-mayordomo | fr: administrer | de: οἰκονομεῖν Luke 16:2

οἰκονομ-ία G3622 N-GFS (9×)

Stewardship, management, administration; the oversight of a household or estate, extended to God's redemptive plan.

Derived from oikonomos (household manager), this noun encompasses both the practical office of managing an estate and the grand theological concept of God's plan administered through the ages. In Luke 16:2-4, it refers concretely to a steward's management position that can be given or taken away. Paul then expands the word dramatically: he has been entrusted with a 'stewardship' of the gospel (1 Cor 9:17), and God's cosmic 'administration' reaches its fullness in Christ, uniting all things in heaven and earth (Eph 1:10; 3:9). The Spanish 'administracion' and French 'administration' capture the managerial sense well.

management, stewardship, administration (9×) The responsibility and authority to manage, administer, or oversee a household, estate, or divine plan. In Luke 16:2-4, the dishonest steward faces losing his oikonomia – his management role – and must scramble to secure his future, grounding the word in everyday economic life. Paul extends it cosmically: he himself holds a 'stewardship' of the gospel entrusted to him (1 Cor 9:17; Col 1:25), and God's grand oikonomia – the administration of the mystery hidden for ages – reaches its climax in Christ, who unites all things (Eph 1:10; 3:2, 9). Spanish 'administracion,' French 'intendance,' and German 'Verwaltung' all reflect the managerial core, though none fully captures the theological grandeur Paul invests in the term. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: a-stewardship, administration, management | es: administración, mayoríomía | fr: administration, intendance | de: Verwaltung Luke 16:2; Luke 16:3; Luke 16:4; 1Cor 9:17; Eph 1:10

οἰκόνομ-ος G3623 N-AMP (10×)

Steward, manager — one entrusted with administering a household, estate, or spiritual responsibility on another's behalf

The oikonomos (οἰκονόμος) is a household manager or steward who exercises delegated authority over another's property or affairs. In Luke's parables, the term describes both the faithful steward whom the master sets over his household (12:42) and the shrewd but dishonest steward called to account (16:1-8). Paul extends the metaphor to spiritual leadership: apostles are 'stewards of the mysteries of God' (1 Cor 4:1-2), and an overseer must be 'blameless as God's steward' (Titus 1:7). In Romans 16:23, Erastus the oikonomos of the city denotes a civic treasurer. Translations converge on the sense of delegated fiduciary authority: Spanish 'mayordomo,' German 'Verwalter,' Arabic 'wakil,' and Korean 'cheongjigi.'

steward, manager (10×) A person entrusted with managing a household, estate, or set of resources on behalf of an owner; a steward or administrator bearing fiduciary responsibility. Encompasses parabolic usage (the faithful steward of Luke 12:42, the unjust steward of Luke 16:1-8), spiritual stewardship (stewards of God's mysteries, 1 Cor 4:1-2; God's steward, Titus 1:7; stewards of grace, 1 Pet 4:10), civic office (Erastus the city treasurer, Rom 16:23), and legal guardianship (Gal 4:2). The uniform cross-linguistic rendering as Spanish 'mayordomo,' Arabic 'wakil,' Hindi 'prabhandhak,' and Korean 'cheongjigi' confirms a single core meaning of delegated managerial authority. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: manager, managers, steward | es: administrador, administradores, mayordomo | fr: intendant | de: Verwalter Luke 12:42; Luke 16:1; Luke 16:3; Luke 16:8; Rom 16:23

οἶκος G3624 N-NMS (114×)

House, dwelling place; by extension, household or family lineage as a social unit

One of the most common nouns in the New Testament, oikos spans the concrete and the social. At its most basic it denotes a physical building — the house one returns to, the temple called 'my Father's house,' the structure built on rock or sand. Yet the same word seamlessly extends to the people inside: a household, a family line, 'the house of Israel.' Translations across languages track this duality — Spanish 'casa,' French 'maison,' and German 'Haus' all carry the same double meaning, confirming that the physical-to-social extension is deeply natural.

1. house, dwelling (112×) A physical house, dwelling, or building — from private residences (Matt 9:6-7, 'go to your house') to the Jerusalem temple called God's house (Matt 21:13, 'my house shall be called a house of prayer'). Covers domestic spaces, rooms, tents, and sacred structures. The multilingual glosses (spa: casa, fra: maison, deu: Haus) uniformly treat this as the default, unmarked sense across all 112 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-house, house | es: casa | fr: maison | de: Haus Matt 9:6; Matt 9:7; Matt 12:4; Matt 12:44; Matt 21:13

2. household, family (2×) The household or family as a social unit, extending beyond walls to the people within. Used of managing one's household well as a qualification for church leadership (1 Tim 3:12) and of those who 'overturn whole households' through false teaching (Titus 1:11). The shift from building to people mirrors the same metonymy found in Hebrew bayit (H1004), and translations like Spanish 'casas' and French 'maison' preserve this ambiguity naturally. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: households | es: casas | fr: maison | de: Haus 1Tim 3:12; Titus 1:11

οἰκουμέν-η G3625 N-GFS (15×)

The inhabited world; the civilized, populated earth, often denoting the Roman Empire or all humanity.

Originally meaning 'the inhabited (land)' with an implied gē ('earth'), this word expanded from the Greek-speaking world to encompass the entire populated earth, and in Roman times frequently stood for the Empire itself. Luke uses it for the census that brought Mary and Joseph to Bethlehem (Luke 2:1) and for a predicted famine across the whole world (Acts 11:28). In eschatological contexts it describes the scope of tribulation and gospel proclamation—'this gospel of the kingdom will be proclaimed throughout the whole oikoumenē' (Matt 24:14). The word also carries a future-age sense in Hebrews 2:5, where the 'world to come' is subjected to Christ. Spanish 'tierra habitada' and German 'Erdkreis' both convey the sense of the globe as a human dwelling.

inhabited world, civilized earth (15×) The inhabited, civilized earth—the sphere of human habitation and political order. In Luke-Acts it often denotes the Roman imperial world: Augustus decrees a census of 'the whole oikoumenē' (Luke 2:1), and Agabus predicts famine over the same domain (Acts 11:28). Jesus uses it eschatologically for the arena where the gospel must reach before the end (Matt 24:14) and where tribulation will test all inhabitants (Luke 21:26; Rev 3:10). Hebrews 2:5 projects the term forward to 'the world to come.' German 'Erdkreis' and Spanish 'tierra habitada' both capture the geographic-political sweep of this concept. WORLD INHABITED EARTH

en: inhabited-earth, inhabited-world, world | es: habitada, tierra-habitada | fr: terre-habitée | de: Erdkreis Matt 24:14; Luke 2:1; Luke 4:5; Luke 21:26; Acts 11:28

οἰκουρός G3626 Adj-AFP (1×)

Staying at home, devoted to domestic duties; a homemaker or one who keeps house

This adjective describes someone who stays at home or is devoted to domestic work, particularly used of women managing household affairs. In Titus 2:5, Paul instructs older women to train younger women to be 'self-controlled, pure, working at home, kind.' The cultural context is crucial: in the ancient world, household management was economically vital and morally valued, not trivialized. The term can be translated 'homemakers,' 'domestic,' or 'devoted to home,' emphasizing diligent household labor rather than mere location.

(1×) Devoted to home and domestic work, particularly describing women engaged in household management. Titus 2:5 lists this quality among virtues for young wives, reflecting the cultural value placed on skilled household stewardship. Translators render it 'homemakers' or 'devoted to home,' recognizing that ancient household management involved substantial economic and social responsibility, not merely confinement. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: homemakers | es: hacendosas | fr: οἰκουργούς | de: haeuslich Titus 2:5

οἰκτ-ίρω G3627 V-FIA-1S (2×)
to have compassion, show mercy or pity toward someone
The emotional response of compassion that moves one to merciful action. Paul uses this verb in quoting God's declaration to Moses: 'I will have mercy on whom I have mercy, I will have compassion on whom I have compassion' (Romans 9:15, quoted twice). The repetition emphasizes divine sovereignty in mercy—God's compassion is not owed, earned, or predictable by human categories, but flows from His own character and will. The verb captures both the feeling (pity, compassion) and its expression (merciful action).

(2×) To feel compassion and show mercy. Classical usage spans from simple pity ('I'm sorry to leave her') to active intervention on behalf of the suffering. Paul's quotation from Exodus 33:19 makes divine compassion the foundation of salvation—not human merit but God's sovereign mercy determines who receives salvation. The future tense underscores God's continued freedom to show mercy. Cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish 'compadecer,' French 'avoir pitié,' German 'erbarmen') captures both emotional and volitional dimensions. MERCY AND COMPASSION
en: I-have-compassion, I-will-have-compassion | es: me-compadeceré-de, me-compadezca | fr: avoir-pitié | de: erbarmen Rom 9:15

οἰκτ-ιρμός G3628 N-GMP (5×)
Compassion, mercy, tender feelings of pity; deep emotional care expressed as merciful action.
A noun expressing deep compassion and merciful feeling, often appearing in the plural to denote the full range of tender mercies. Paul invokes 'the mercies of God' as the foundation for his ethical appeal in Rom 12:1, and calls the Father 'the God of all compassion' in 2 Cor 1:3. Philippians 2:1 pairs it with love as a motive for unity. The German 'Erbarmen' and French 'compassion' both capture the gut-level sympathy this word conveys, while the Spanish 'misericordias' (mercies) emphasizes its outward expression.

(5×) Compassion or mercy — deep, visceral feelings of pity that move one to act mercifully. The plural form (οἰκτιρμοί) appears frequently, suggesting the fullness of compassionate feeling. In Rom 12:1, Paul grounds his entire ethical exhortation in 'the compassions of God' (διὰ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν τοῦ θεοῦ). Second Corinthians 1:3 names God as 'Father of compassions.' Colossians 3:12 commands believers to 'put on compassions' as a garment. The convergence of German 'Erbarmen,' French 'compassion,' and Spanish 'misericordias' reveals how this word bridges inner feeling and outward mercy. MORAL GOODNESS
en: compassions, mercies, of-compassion | es: compasiones, de-compasión, misericordias | fr: Erbarmen, compassion | de: Erbarmen Rom 12:1; 2Cor 1:3; Phil 2:1; Col 3:12; Heb 10:28

οἰκτ-ίρμων G3629 Adj-NMS (3×)
merciful, compassionate, showing pity and kindness
Merciful describes one who shows compassion and pity, especially to those in need or distress. Jesus commands, 'Be merciful, even as your Father is merciful' (Luke 6:36, repeated for emphasis). James speaks of the Lord as 'compassionate and merciful' (Jas 5:11). The term emphasizes active compassion, not mere sentiment. Spanish 'compasivo/misericordioso' and French 'compatissant' both highlight the feeling-with-suffering that characterizes mercy.

(3×) Merciful, compassionate, characterized by active pity and kindness toward those suffering or in need. Luke 6:36 (stated twice) commands imitating the Father's mercy. James 5:11 attributes this quality to the Lord who vindicates Job. The Greek οἰκτίρμων emphasizes visceral compassion (from οἶκτος, pity). Spanish distinguishes 'compasivo' (compassionate, feeling-with) and 'misericordioso' (merciful, showing mercy), while the Greek term encompasses both emotional compassion and merciful action. GRACE AND COMPASSION
en: merciful | es: compasivo, compasivos, misericordioso | fr: compatissant | de: barmherzig, οἰκτίρμονες, οἰκτίρμων Luke 6:36; Jas 5:11

οἰνοπότ-ης G3630 N-NMS (2×)
wine-drinker, one who drinks wine excessively
A person who drinks wine, particularly to excess—a drunkard or wine-bibber. The term appears in identical contexts in Matthew 11:19 and Luke 7:34, both recording the slander against Jesus: 'Behold, a glutton and a drunkard, a friend of tax collectors and sinners!' The accusation is ironic—Jesus' critics condemned John the Baptist for asceticism (demon-possessed) and Jesus for feasting (gluttonous drunkard). Neither charge stuck, but both reveal critics' determination to reject God's messengers regardless of their lifestyle.

(2×) A wine-drinker or drunkard, one given to consuming wine. Classical usage sometimes neutral (simply one who drinks wine) but often pejorative (excessive consumption). The Gospel context is clearly slanderous—Jesus' table fellowship with sinners and participation in feasts led opponents to caricature Him as intemperate. The charge is false but strategically deployed to undermine His credibility. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'bebedor de vino,' French 'buveur de vin') capture both the literal act and its negative connotation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-drunkard | es: bebedor-de-vino | fr: buveur-de-vin | de: οἰνοπότης Matt 11:19; Luke 7:34

οἶνος G3631 N-AMS (34×)
Wine; fermented grape juice, the standard drink of the ancient Mediterranean world
The common term for fermented grape juice, central to daily life, hospitality, and worship in the biblical world. At Cana, Jesus transforms water into wine of surpassing quality (John 2:3, 9–10), revealing abundance as a sign of the messianic age. The saying about new wine bursting old wineskins (Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22) pictures the incompatibility of the new covenant with rigid old forms. Wine also carries warnings: offered mixed with gall at the cross (Matt 27:34), and associated with the cup of God's wrath in Revelation. Every major biblical language preserves a cognate — Spanish 'vino,' French 'vin,' German 'Wein' — testifying to wine's universal cultural presence.

wine (34×) Fermented grape juice, the principal alcoholic beverage of antiquity — wine as a physical drink used in meals, celebrations, and religious offerings. Appears in literal contexts such as the wedding at Cana (John 2:3), the parable of the wineskins (Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22), and the vinegar-wine offered at the crucifixion (Matt 27:34). Translations across all target languages consistently use a single, well-established term (French 'vin,' German 'Wein'), confirming this as a universally recognized referent. WINE BEVERAGE en: wine | es: vino | fr: vin | de: Wein Matt 9:17; Matt 27:34; Mark 2:22

οἰνοφλῠγ-ία G3632 N-DFP (1×) Excessive drinking of wine; drunkenness or intoxication from wine consumption

This noun denotes drunkenness specifically from wine (οἶνος), distinguishing it from other forms of intoxication. In 1 Peter 4:3, it appears in a vice list describing the Gentiles' former lifestyle: 'living in sensuality, passions, drunkenness, orgies, drinking parties.' The term emphasizes habitual excess rather than occasional overindulgence. Classical Greek uses it for wine-drinking to the point of inebriation. Peter contrasts this pagan past with the sober, self-controlled Christian life.

(1×) Habitual drunkenness or excessive wine consumption. 1 Peter 4:3 includes this in a catalog of Gentile vices that believers have left behind. The word specifically denotes wine-induced intoxication, part of a lifestyle characterized by sensual excess and lack of restraint. Peter's readers had renounced such practices upon conversion, embracing sobriety and godly self-control. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8851 WITH 5 SENSES
en: drunkenness | es: borracheras | fr: οἰνοφλυγίαις | de: Trunkenheit 1Pet 4:3

οἴομαι G3633 V-PMM/P-3S (3×)
think, suppose, imagine, hold an opinion
To think or suppose is to hold an opinion or make a judgment. John says all the books in the world couldn't contain what Jesus did, 'I suppose' (John 21:25). Paul mentions those who 'suppose' wrongly about his motives (Phil 1:17). James addresses the one who 'supposes' he'll receive from the Lord while doubting (Jas 1:7). The term indicates subjective judgment or estimation. Spanish 'pienso/piense/pensando' and French 'penser' straightforwardly convey this mental activity of forming opinions.

(3×) To think, suppose, or imagine—to form an opinion or estimation. John 21:25 uses οἴομαι for the evangelist's own supposition about the world's capacity for books. Philippians 1:17 mentions those supposing (wrongly) about Paul's affliction. James 1:7 warns the double-minded not to suppose they'll receive anything. The term indicates subjective judgment or estimation rather than certain knowledge. Universally translated as 'think/suppose/pienso/penser' across languages, reflecting the mental act of forming opinions. THINKING AND SEEMING en: I-suppose, let-suppose, supposing | es: pensando, piense, pienso | fr: penser | de: meinen John 21:25; Phil 1:17; Jas 1:7

οἷος G3634 RelPro-NMS (15×)
Such as, of what sort, of which kind; a qualitative relative pronoun introducing comparisons.
A correlative relative pronoun that characterizes the quality or kind of something, answering the implicit question 'of what sort?' Rather than specifying quantity or identity, it focuses on the nature or character of its referent. In the New Testament it appears most memorably in eschatological descriptions: 'such tribulation as has not been from the beginning' (Matt 24:21; Mark 13:19), emphasizing the unprecedented quality of end-time distress. Mark uses it vividly to describe the supernatural whiteness of Jesus' garments at the Transfiguration—'such as no launderer on earth could bleach them' (Mark 9:3). Spanish 'cual' and French 'que/qui' reflect the qualitative comparison at its core.

such as, of what sort (15×) A qualitative relative pronoun meaning 'such as,' 'of what sort,' or 'of which kind,' used to describe the character or nature of something rather than its quantity or identity. Deployed in eschatological warnings to mark events as unprecedented in quality—'tribulation such as has not occurred since the beginning of creation' (Mark 13:19; Matt 24:21). Also used at the Transfiguration to express the incomparable brilliance of Jesus' garments (Mark 9:3). Multilingual glosses—Spanish 'cual,' German 'der/den,' French 'que'—all function as qualitative relative markers, confirming the comparative-characterizing function. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: as, of-what-kind, such | es: como, como-si, cual | fr: duquel, que, qui | de: das, den, der Matt 24:21; Mark 9:3; Mark 13:19; Luke 9:55; Rom 9:6

ὀκν-έω G3635 V-ASA-2S (1×)
To delay, hesitate, or be slow to act; to shrink from doing something due to reluctance or scruple
This verb means to hesitate or delay doing something, often from caution, fear, or reluctance. In Acts 9:38, the disciples at Joppa sent urgently to Peter with the plea, 'Do not delay in coming to us' (regarding Tabitha's death). The word carries emotional weight—they fear any delay might mean missed opportunity (though Tabitha was already dead, they hoped for divine intervention). Classical usage includes shrinking from action due to shame, fear, or scruple. The urgent negative command ('do not delay!') underscores the disciples' desperate hope.

(1×) To hesitate or delay in acting, often due to reluctance or other hindering factors. Acts 9:38 records the plea sent to Peter: 'Do not delay in coming to us.' The community at Joppa, having lost the beloved Tabitha, urgently summons Peter, their imperative charged with hope that immediate action might still bring restoration. The verb captures their fear that any hesitation could mean lost opportunity. DELAY AND TARRYING
en: delay | es: tardes | fr: hésiter | de: ὀκνήσῃς Acts 9:38

ὀκν-ηρός G3636 Adj-VMS (3×)
lazy, sluggish, hesitant, reluctant to act
This adjective describes one who is lazy, sluggish, or reluctant. Jesus condemns the 'wicked and slothful servant' who buried his talent (Matt 25:26). Paul urges, 'Do not be slothful in zeal' (Rom 12:11). He tells the Philippians not to think writing the same things is 'troublesome' for him (Phil 3:1). The term spans from moral laziness to practical reluctance. Spanish varies—'perezoso' (lazy), 'molesto' (troublesome)—as does the context, but all involve shrinking from duty.

(3×) Lazy, sluggish, hesitant, or troublesome—characterized by reluctance to act or engage. Matthew 25:26 condemns the ὀκνηρός servant who failed to invest his talent. Romans 12:11 warns against slothful zeal. Philippians 3:1 uses it differently: Paul's repeated instructions aren't 'troublesome' (either to him or readers). The Greek ὀκνηρός derives from ὄκνος (hesitation, shrinking) and covers moral laziness, practical reluctance, and even what might be burdensome. Spanish distinguishes 'perezoso' (lazy) and 'molesto' (troublesome), while the term's range encompasses both. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS
en: hesitant, lazy, troublesome | es: molesto, perezoso, perezosos | fr: paresseux | de: traege, ὀκνηρέ Matt 25:26; Rom 12:11; Phil 3:1

ὀκτα-ήμερος G3637 Adj-NMS (1×)
Eight days old; having an age of eight days from birth
This adjective describes someone or something that is eight days old. In Philippians 3:5, Paul lists his Jewish credentials: 'circumcised on the eighth day'—meaning when he was eight days old, in precise obedience to the Law. The term emphasizes not just the timing but the exactness: Paul wasn't a Gentile convert who adopted Jewish practices later; he was covenantally included from infancy. The compound formation (eight + day) creates a precise temporal adjective found in Jewish legal contexts.

(1×) Being eight days old, specifically describing the age at which Jewish males were circumcised according to the Law. Philippians 3:5 uses this in Paul's autobiography to establish his authentic Jewish identity from birth—'circumcised on the eighth day' (literally 'as an eight-day-old'). This detail proves he was born into the covenant, not a later convert, underscoring the legitimacy of his heritage. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT en: eight-days-old | es: de-ocho-días | fr: ὀκταήμερος | de: am-achten-Tag Phil 3:5

ὀκτώ G3638 Adj-NFP (10×)
Eight — the cardinal numeral 8, used in temporal expressions (days, years, persons)
The indeclinable numeral okto (ὀκτώ) simply means 'eight.' Its ten

NT occurrences cluster in temporal phrases: Jesus was circumcised 'when eight days were fulfilled' (Luke 2:21), the Transfiguration came 'about eight days after these sayings' (Luke 9:28), and a woman was bound by infirmity 'eighteen years' (literally 'ten and eight,' Luke 13:11,16). The numeral also counts persons — 'eight souls' saved through water in Noah's ark (1 Pet 3:20; 2 Pet 2:5) and the eighteen killed by the tower of Siloam (Luke 13:4). Translations are uniformly transparent: Spanish 'ocho,' French 'huit,' German 'acht,' Arabic 'thamaniya,' Hindi 'aath,' Korean 'yeodeol.'

(10×) The cardinal number eight, used in counting days (Luke 2:21, circumcision on the eighth day; Luke 9:28, about eight days later; John 20:26, after eight days), years (Luke 13:11,16, bound for eighteen years), persons (1 Pet 3:20; 2 Pet 2:5, eight souls in the ark), and casualties (Luke 13:4, the eighteen on whom the tower fell). All languages render it with their standard numeral: Spanish 'ocho,' German 'acht,' French 'huit,' Arabic 'thamaniya,' Swahili 'nane,' Korean 'yeodeol.' No semantic variation across contexts. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: eight | es: ocho | fr: huit, olive | de: acht Luke 2:21; Luke 9:28; Luke 13:4; Luke 13:11; Luke 13:16

ὄλεθρ-ος G3639 N-NMS (4×)

Destruction, ruin; utter devastation as divine judgment or catastrophic loss

A weighty noun for ruin and devastation, used in the New Testament exclusively of catastrophic consequences — whether divinely imposed or self-inflicted. Paul hands the Corinthian offender over to Satan 'for the destruction of the flesh' (1 Cor 5:5), while 1 Thessalonians 5:3 warns of sudden destruction overtaking those who say 'peace and safety.' The strongest usage appears in 2 Thessalonians 1:9, where 'eternal destruction' describes separation from God's presence. In 1 Timothy 6:9, foolish desires plunge people into ruin and destruction. Spanish destrucción/ruina and German Verderben consistently convey irreversible devastation.

(4×) Utter destruction or ruin, typically as a consequence of divine judgment or moral catastrophe. In 1 Cor 5:5, it refers to the physical ruin of the flesh intended to save the spirit. In 1 Thess 5:3, it is the sudden, inescapable disaster falling on the complacent. The phrase 'eternal destruction' in 2 Thess 1:9 extends it to eschatological separation from God. In 1 Tim 6:9, it pairs with apoleia to describe the total ruin that greed brings. Spanish destrucción/ruina and French ruine confirm the consistently catastrophic, irreversible character of this word. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destruction, ruin | es: destrucción, ruina | fr: ruine, ὄλεθρον, ὄλεθρος | de: Verderben 1Cor 5:5; 1Thess 5:3; 2Thess 1:9; 1Tim 6:9

ὀλῐγό-πιστος G3640 N-AFS (6×)

Of little faith; having inadequate or wavering trust in God's power and provision

A distinctively Matthean compound adjective (oligos + pistis) that Jesus uses as a gentle but pointed rebuke to his own disciples. It appears in contexts of material anxiety ('Why do you worry about clothing?', Matt 6:30), physical fear ('Why are you afraid?', Matt 8:26), faltering courage (Peter sinking, Matt 14:31), and spiritual dullness (the leaven discussion, Matt 16:8). The word does not deny faith altogether but diagnoses its insufficiency. German 'Kleingläubiger' beautifully captures the compound: 'small-believer.'

of little faith (6×) Having insufficient or wavering faith, used by Jesus as a rebuke to disciples whose trust in God's care or power proves inadequate under pressure. The compound structure (oligo- 'little' + pistos 'faithful') is mirrored in German 'Kleingläubiger' and Spanish 'de poca fe.' It appears exclusively in Matthew's Gospel (plus the Luke 12:28 parallel), always on Jesus' lips, covering worry about provision (Matt 6:30), fear in the storm (Matt 8:26), Peter's doubt on the water (Matt 14:31), and failure to grasp spiritual teaching (Matt 16:8). FAITH TRUST BELIEF

en: O-ones-of-little-faith, O-you-of-little-faith, little-faith | es: Hombre-de-poca-fe, de-poca-fe, hombres-de-poca-fe | fr: homme-de-peu-de-foi | de: Kleingläubiger Matt 6:30; Matt 8:26; Matt 14:31; Matt 16:8; Matt 17:20

ὀλίγος G3641 Adj-ANS (43×)

Few, little, small in quantity or number; rarely used adverbially meaning 'barely' or 'with difficulty.'

A common adjective describing smallness of quantity, number, or extent. Jesus laments that the laborers are few (Matt 9:37), commends the faithful over 'few things' (Matt 25:21), and notes that few find the narrow way (Matt 7:14). Spanish alternates between 'poco/poca' (little) and 'pequeno' (small), while French and German both settle on 'peu' and 'wenig' respectively, capturing the core notion of insufficient quantity. One distinctive use in 2 Peter 2:18 pushes the word into adverbial territory – 'barely' or 'scarcely' escaping from error – showing how 'little' can shade into 'with difficulty.'

1. few, little, small in number (42×) Small in quantity, number, or extent; few. Used attributively and predicatively of people (Matt 7:14; 22:14 'many called, few chosen'), things (Matt 25:21 'faithful over few things'), time (Rev 12:12 'little time'), and degree (Mark 1:19 'a little farther'). Spanish 'poco/pequeno,' French 'peu,' and German 'wenig' all converge on quantitative smallness. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: a-little, few-things, little | es: pequeña, pequeño, poca | fr: peu | de: wenig Matt 7:14; Matt 9:37; Matt 15:34; Matt 20:16; Matt 22:14

2. barely, with difficulty (1×) Adverbial use meaning 'barely, scarcely, with difficulty.' Found in 2 Pet 2:18 describing those who 'barely' escape from people living in error. Spanish 'apenas' (barely) uniquely distinguishes this adverbial sense from the adjectival, while French and German maintain the same root form ('peu,' 'wenig'), relying on context for the shift. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: barely | es: apenas | fr: peu | de: wenig 2Pet 2:18

ὀλῐγόψῡχ-ος G3642 Adj-AMP (1×)

Faint-hearted, discouraged, or having little courage; those whose spirits are weak or failing

This adjective describes people who are faint-hearted, discouraged, or lacking courage—literally those with 'little soul' (ὀλίγος + ψυχή). In 1 Thessalonians 5:14, Paul urges, 'Encourage the fainthearted, help the weak, be patient with all.' The context distinguishes different groups needing care: the disorderly, the fainthearted, the weak. These are believers whose courage or spirits flag under pressure or difficulty. The pastoral response is not rebuke but encouragement—strengthening those whose resolve wavers.

(1×) Those who are fainthearted, discouraged, or weak in spirit. 1 Thessalonians 5:14 identifies this group as needing specific pastoral care through encouragement. Paul distinguishes them from the disorderly (who need admonishment) and the weak (who need support) —these are believers whose courage fails under trial and who require strengthening words to persevere. The term literally means 'small-souled,' capturing their diminished resolve. FAINTNESS SWOONING

en: fainthearted | es: de-poco-ánimo | fr: ὀλιγοψύχους | de: kleinmuetig 1Thess 5:14

ὀλῐγωρ-έω G3643 V-PMA-2S (1×)

To regard lightly, think little of, or treat as insignificant; to despise or make light of something

This verb means to esteem something lightly, to regard it as insignificant or make small account of it. In Hebrews 12:5, the writer quotes Proverbs: 'My son, do not regard lightly the discipline of the Lord.' The word implies a dismissive attitude—treating God's correction as trivial or unimportant rather than seeing its redemptive purpose. The opposite error (also warned against in the same verse) is losing heart under discipline. Right response requires taking God's correction seriously without becoming despondent.

(1×) To esteem lightly or regard as insignificant, particularly in relation to divine discipline. Hebrews 12:5 warns against 'regarding lightly the Lord's discipline,' citing Proverbs 3:11. The verb captures a dismissive attitude that fails to recognize correction as an expression of God's fatherly love. To 'make light' of discipline is to miss its formative, redemptive intent—treating it as mere inconvenience rather than divine pedagogy. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: regard-lightly | es: menosprecies | fr: mépriser | de: geringschaetzen Heb 12:5

ὀλοθρ-εύω G3644 N-GMS (1×)
A destroyer; one who brings destruction, ruin, or death
This noun identifies an agent of destruction, one who destroys or ruins. In 1 Corinthians 10:10, Paul warns the Corinthians by recounting Israel's wilderness failures: 'some of them grumbled and were destroyed by the Destroyer.' The reference is to the angel of death who executed judgment on rebellious Israel (Numbers 16-17). The term appears in Septuagint contexts of divine judgment, denoting a destroying agent—whether angelic executor or personified destruction. Paul's warning: the same Destroyer who judged Israel can judge the church.

(1×) An agent of destruction, specifically the destroying angel who executed divine judgment. 1 Corinthians 10:10 recalls Israel's wilderness rebellion where grumblers 'were destroyed by the Destroyer,' likely referring to Numbers 16-17 where Korah's rebellion brought divine punishment. Paul uses this sobering precedent to warn Corinthians: divine judgment through the Destroyer remains a possibility for those who rebel against God. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: destroyer | es: destructor | fr: destructeur | de: Verderber 1Cor 10:10

ὀλοθρ-εύω G3645 V-PPA-NMS (1×)
Destroying or bringing destruction; one who destroys, particularly an agent of divine judgment
This participle describes someone or something that destroys or brings destruction. In Hebrews 11:28, it refers to the destroying angel of the Passover: 'By faith he kept the Passover and sprinkled the blood, so that the Destroyer of the firstborn might not touch them.' The reference is to Exodus 12, where the final plague struck Egypt's firstborn but passed over Israelite homes marked with lamb's blood. The participle personalizes the destroying force as an active agent executing divine judgment.

(1×) The one who destroys, specifically the destroying angel of the Passover who killed Egypt's firstborn. Hebrews 11:28 recounts Moses' faith-filled obedience in keeping the Passover: the blood on doorposts protected Israel 'so that the Destroyer might not touch them.' This agent of judgment is personal and active, yet restrained by the covenant sign—blood marking those under God's protection. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: destroying | es: destructor | fr: Verderber | de: Verderber Heb 11:28

ὁλοκαύτ-ωμα G3646 N-ANP (3×)
burnt offering, a sacrifice completely consumed by fire
A burnt offering is a sacrifice wholly consumed by fire on the altar, offered to God as an act of worship and atonement. Jesus quotes Scripture: obedience and love matter more than 'burnt offerings' (Mark 12:33). Hebrews cites Psalm 40: God takes no pleasure in 'burnt offerings and sin offerings' (Heb 10:6, 8). The term represents the entire sacrificial system that Christ's once-for-all sacrifice supersedes. Spanish 'holocaustos' and French 'holocauste' preserve the Greek term meaning 'wholly burnt.'

(3×) A burnt offering, a type of Old Testament sacrifice in which the entire animal was consumed by fire on the altar as an offering to God. Mark 12:33 contrasts love with all burnt offerings. Hebrews 10:6, 8 (quoting Psalm 40) declare God's displeasure with mere ritual burnt offerings, pointing to Christ's superior sacrifice. The Greek ὁλοκαύτωμα literally means 'wholly burnt,' from ὅλος (whole) + καίω (burn). Spanish and French 'holocausto/holocauste' directly transliterate this compound, preserving the total-consumption imagery. BURNT OFFERING en: burnt-offerings | es: holocaustos | fr: holocauste | de: Brandopfer Mark 12:33; Heb 10:6; Heb 10:8

ὁλοκληρ-ία G3647 N-AFS (1×)
Completeness, soundness, or wholeness in all parts; perfect health or integrity of body
This noun denotes completeness or wholeness, particularly bodily soundness with all parts functioning properly. In Acts 3:16, Peter explains the healing of the lame beggar: 'faith in his name has given the man this perfect health that you see.' The word emphasizes total restoration—not partial improvement but complete wholeness. Classical usage includes physical integrity and soundness of senses. Peter attributes this comprehensive healing to faith in Jesus' name, demonstrating the power of the risen Christ.

(1×) Complete soundness or wholeness, particularly perfect bodily health. Acts 3:16 uses this to describe the formerly lame man's healing: faith in Jesus gave him 'perfect health' (literally 'wholeness'). The term emphasizes totality—every part sound and functioning—making the miracle undeniable. Peter points to this visible, complete restoration as proof of Christ's power and vindication. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS
en: wholeness | es: completa-sanidad | fr: intégrité | de: ὁλοκληρίαν Acts 3:16

ὁλόκληρ-ος G3648 Adj-NNS (2×)
complete, whole or entire, lacking nothing
In a state of wholeness or completeness, with all parts intact and functioning. Paul uses it in his prayer-blessing: 'may your whole spirit, soul, and body be kept complete and blameless' (1 Thessalonians 5:23)—comprehensive preservation of the entire person until Christ's coming. James uses it in describing mature faith: 'that you may be perfect and complete, lacking nothing' (James 1:4)—the goal of perseverance through trials is holistic spiritual maturity. Both contexts emphasize totality and integrity, nothing defective or missing.

(2×) Whole, complete, or entire in every part. Classical usage contrasts it with 'mutilated' (kolobos)—having all members versus being maimed. Theological usage extends this to spiritual wholeness: complete sanctification (Paul), mature faith lacking no essential element (James). The word suggests not just quantity (all parts present) but quality (all parts functioning properly). Cross-linguistic renderings vary between 'complete' (Spanish 'completos/íntegro,' French forms) and 'whole' (English 'wholly,' German 'ganz'), capturing both senses. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: complete, wholly | es: completos, íntegro | fr: ὁλόκληροι, ὁλόκληρον | de: ganz 1Thess 5:23; Jas 1:4

ὀλολύζω G3649 V-PPA-NMP (1×)
To cry out loudly or wail; to shriek or lament with loud, mournful cries
This verb means to cry out with loud, often ritualized wailing—in classical Greek, typically women's cries to gods in worship, exultation, or lamentation. In James 5:1, it takes an ominous tone: 'Come now, you rich, weep and wail for the miseries coming upon you.' The verb suggests not quiet tears but loud, anguished outcry—appropriate to the impending judgment James describes. The command is ironic: begin your mourning now, for catastrophe approaches. The word's intensity captures the severity of judgment awaiting those who oppress the righteous.

(1×) To wail or cry out loudly, typically in lamentation or distress. James 5:1 commands the wealthy oppressors to 'weep and wail' for coming miseries—a summons to loud mourning befitting impending judgment. The verb's classical associations with ritualized cries (often to deities) add gravity: this is no private regret but public catastrophe. James ironically tells them to commence their funeral lament immediately. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING
en: wailing | es: aullando | fr: ὀλολύζοντες | de: wehklagen Jas 5:1

ὅλος G3650 Adj-GFS (110×)
Whole, entire, complete; denoting totality or full extent, occasionally used adverbially for 'completely.'

Holos is the Greek adjective for 'whole' or 'entire,' emphasizing that nothing within the scope of reference is excluded. When Jesus heals on the Sabbath and asks whether making a man holos healthy justifies it (John 7:23), the word carries both quantitative totality and qualitative completeness. It modifies cities ('the whole city,' Matt 8:34), bodies ('your whole body,' Matt 5:29–30), and time periods ('a whole year,' Acts 11:26). Spanish toda/todo, French tout-entier, and German ganz uniformly confirm the single core meaning of undivided totality.

1. whole, all, entire (106×) The primary sense covering the overwhelming majority of uses: whole, all, entire—the totality of something with nothing excluded. Applied to geographic regions ('the whole of Galilee,' Matt 4:23), groups ('all the city,' Matt 8:34), the human body ('your whole body,' Matt 5:29), and abstract totalities ('the whole law,' Gal 5:14). Every target language converges: spa 'toda/todo/entero,' fra 'tout-entier,' deu 'ganz'—all expressing undivided completeness. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all, whole | es: entero, toda, todo | fr: tout-entier | de: ganz Matt 4:23; Matt 4:24; Matt 5:29; Matt 5:30; Matt 6:22

2. complete, intact, sound (2×) A qualitative nuance meaning complete, intact, or sound—not merely quantitative totality but the idea of something being unimpaired across its full duration or extent. In Acts 11:26 Barnabas and Saul meet with the church for 'a whole year' (emphasizing the unbroken continuity), and in Acts 28:30 Paul stays 'two whole years' (stressing completeness of the period). Spanish 'entero/enteros' captures this durational-completeness nuance. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: whole | es: entero, enteros | fr: tout | de: ganz Acts 11:26; Acts 28:30

3. completely, entirely (adverbial) (2×) An adverbial use where holos functions as 'completely, entirely, altogether,' modifying the manner of an action rather than a noun. In John 7:23 Jesus argues from lesser to greater: if circumcision is performed on the Sabbath, why object to making a man 'wholly' (holon) healthy? In John 9:34 the Pharisees retort that the man was born 'entirely' in sins. Spanish 'del-todo' (completely) reflects this adverbial force distinct from the adjectival 'whole.' TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: whole | es: -a-todo, del-todo | fr: tout-entier | de: ganz John 7:23; John 9:34

ὁλο-τελής G3651 Adj-AMP (1×)

Completely, entirely, or in every part; wholly and thoroughly from beginning to end

This adjective means completely or entirely whole, with no part lacking. In 1 Thessalonians 5:23, Paul prays: 'May the God of peace himself sanctify you completely, and may your whole spirit and soul and body be kept blameless.' The word emphasizes totality—comprehensive sanctification affecting every dimension of personhood. The prayer isn't for partial holiness but thoroughgoing transformation encompassing all aspects of being. Multilingual translations maintain this sense of comprehensive wholeness ('completely,' 'completamente,' 'ganz und gar').

(1×) Entirely, completely, or wholly—affecting every part without exception. 1 Thessalonians 5:23 uses this in Paul's prayer for comprehensive sanctification: 'may you be sanctified completely' (or 'wholly'). The term emphasizes God's work touching every dimension—spirit, soul, body—leaving no area untransformed. It's thorough holiness, not selective piety, that Paul envisions for believers at Christ's return. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY

en: completely | es: completamente | fr: ὁλοτελεῖς | de: ganz-und-gar 1Thess 5:23

Ὄλυμπᾶς G3652 N-AMS (1×)

Olympas, a Christian believer in Rome greeted by Paul; likely a shortened form of Olympiodorus

Olympas is a personal name, likely a shortened form of Olympiodorus or similar compound. In Romans 16:15, Paul sends greetings: 'Greet Philologus and Julia, Nereus and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints with them.' This brief mention places Olympas among Roman believers, possibly part of a house church. The name derives from Mount Olympus, home of the Greek gods in mythology, though by the first century it was simply a common name with no religious significance.

(1×) A personal name of a believer in Rome whom Paul greets in Romans 16:15. Olympas appears among a cluster of names, suggesting membership in a Roman house church. Nothing more is known of this individual beyond Paul's greeting, but inclusion in this list marks Olympas as a valued member of the early Christian community, worthy of apostolic recognition and affection. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Olympas | es: a-Olympân | fr: Olympas | de: Olympas Rom 16:15

ὄλονθος G3653 N-AMP (1×)

Unripe or immature figs; late-season figs that fall before ripening, or early fruit shaken off prematurely

This noun refers to unripe figs—either late summer figs that don't mature or early figs knocked off by wind before ripening. In Revelation 6:13, it appears in cosmic catastrophe imagery: 'the stars of the sky fell to earth as the fig tree sheds its winter fruit when shaken by a gale.' The comparison is vivid: just as violent wind strips a fig tree of immature fruit, so cosmic upheaval shakes stars from heaven. The image conveys wholesale, unstoppable collapse of the created order.

(1×) Unripe or premature figs, particularly those shaken from the tree before maturity. Revelation 6:13 uses this in apocalyptic imagery: stars fall 'as a fig tree sheds its unripe figs when shaken by a strong wind.' The simile evokes mass detachment—countless small objects falling helplessly under violent force. It's a picture of cosmic unraveling, the stable heavens suddenly as vulnerable as fruit before a storm. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST

en: unripe-figs | es: higos-verdes | fr: figues-précoces | de: Fruehfeigen Rev 6:13

ὅλος G3654 Adv (4×)

Altogether, actually, at all; an adverb intensifying or generalizing a statement

An adverb derived from holos (whole) that strengthens assertions in different directions depending on context. In Matthew 5:34, Jesus says 'do not swear at all,' using it to make an absolute prohibition. Paul employs it in 1 Corinthians 5:1 to express shock — 'it is actually reported' — and in 1 Corinthians 6:7 to say litigation among believers is 'altogether a defeat.' The rhetorical question in 1 Corinthians 15:29 uses it to press the logical point: 'if the dead are not raised at all.' Spanish del todo and en absoluto, alongside French du tout, all capture this sense of totality or emphatic completeness.

(4×) An emphatic adverb meaning 'altogether, actually, at all,' used to intensify or universalize the statement it modifies. In Matt 5:34, it creates an absolute prohibition ('do not swear at all'). In 1 Cor 5:1, it expresses shocked confirmation ('it is actually reported'). In 1 Cor 6:7, it renders a sweeping judgment ('altogether a defeat for you'). In 1 Cor 15:29, it strengthens a conditional ('if the dead are not raised at all'). Spanish en absoluto / del todo and French du tout confirm the consistent function of emphatic totalization. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY en: actually, altogether, at-all | es: Totalmente, del-todo, en-absoluto | fr: du-tout | de: ὅλως, Ὅλως Matt 5:34; 1Cor 5:1; 1Cor 6:7; 1Cor 15:29

ὄμβρος G3655 N-NMS (1×)

rainstorm, heavy shower; a sudden downpour or thunderstorm, often violent and driven by divine agency

The noun refers to a heavy rainstorm or shower, often distinguished from ordinary rain (ὑετός) by its intensity and suddenness. In Homer and classical authors, it frequently denotes a storm sent by Zeus—violent, even destructive. The word can also carry metaphorical force, describing the onslaught of battle or calamity. In Luke 12:54, Jesus uses it in a weather proverb: when a cloud rises in the west, ὄμβρος (a shower) is coming. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize sudden precipitation: Spanish aguacero (downpour), French pluie (rain), English 'shower.' It's not gentle drizzle, but the kind of rain that arrives with force and compels attention.

(1×) Rainstorm, heavy shower; a sudden and often violent downpour, distinct from ordinary rain. In classical usage, ὄμβρος was the storm sent by Zeus (Διὸς ὄμβρος), intense and sometimes destructive. Jesus invokes it in Luke 12:54 as part of a weather sign: when you see a cloud rising from the west, you say 'a shower is coming' (ὄμβρος ἔρχεται), and so it happens. The term implies more than drizzle—Spanish aguacero captures the intensity of a downpour, while French pluie and English 'shower' preserve the suddenness. This is rain that makes an impact, demanding response. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: A-shower | es: Aguacero | fr: pluie | de: Ὄμβρος Luke 12:54

ὁμῑλ-έω G3656 V-PNA (4×)

To converse, talk with; to hold extended discussion or fellowship in speech

Describes sustained, personal conversation rather than formal public speech. On the road to Emmaus, the two disciples were 'conversing' about all that had happened when Jesus drew near (Luke 24:14-15) — an intimate, searching exchange. In Acts 20:11, Paul talked with the believers at Troas until dawn after Eutychus's fall, and in Acts 24:26, Felix repeatedly summoned Paul to 'converse' with him, hoping for a bribe. The word consistently implies extended, back-and-forth dialogue. Spanish conversaba/conversar and French converser highlight its warmth compared to more formal speech verbs.

(4×) To hold sustained conversation or engage in extended dialogue with someone, implying personal exchange rather than formal oratory. On the Emmaus road (Luke 24:14-15), it describes the disciples' intimate, searching discussion. In Acts 20:11, Paul converses through the night with believers at Troas. In Acts 24:26, Felix repeatedly summons Paul for private conversation. Spanish conversaba/conversar and French converser both emphasize the informal, relational character of the interaction, distinguishing it from public proclamation or teaching. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: having-talked, he-was-conversing, to-talk | es: conversaba, conversaban, conversar | fr: converser, parler | de: ὁμιλήσας, ὁμιλεῖν, ὁμίλει Luke 24:14; Luke 24:15; Acts 20:11; Acts 24:26

ὁμῑλ-ία G3657 N-NFP (1×)

Association, company, or companionship; intercourse or fellowship with others, especially frequent interaction

This noun denotes association, companionship, or frequent interaction with others—'the company one keeps.' In 1 Corinthians 15:33, Paul quotes a Greek proverb: 'Bad company ruins good morals.' The word emphasizes sustained association rather than passing contact—the companions or social circle that shapes character through ongoing influence. The warning is practical: moral formation happens through relationships, and corrupting associations erode virtue. The plural form can mean 'companions' or 'associations,' highlighting the social networks that mold us.

(1×) Companionship, association, or the company one keeps, particularly sustained social interaction. 1 Corinthians 15:33 cites the Greek proverb 'bad company corrupts good morals,' warning that associations shape character. The term emphasizes not isolated contact but ongoing fellowship—the social circles and companions whose influence, for good or ill, molds moral life. Paul warns Corinthians to guard their associations carefully. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: companions | es: compañías | fr: fréquentation | de: Umgang 1Cor 15:33

ὅμῑλ-ος G3658

crowd, throng, assembly (any gathered group); the mass of people, especially opposed to leaders

The ὅμιλος is any assembled crowd, whether gathering for a feast, a spectacle, or battle. Homer uses it frequently for throngs of warriors or common people as opposed to chiefs. It can mean the mass of irregulars (light-armed troops) versus hoplites, or the mob versus the educated. Heraclitus disparages the crowd as a poor teacher. The word can also apply to inanimate clusters. It emphasizes the collective, often with a sense of the undifferentiated many versus the distinguished few.

ὄμμα G3659 N-GNP (2×)

eyes, the organs of sight

The eyes, particularly emphasized in poetic or elevated discourse. This poetic term appears twice in the Synoptic healing narratives: Jesus touches a blind man's eyes (Matthew 20:34) and puts saliva on another's eyes (Mark 8:23). The elevated vocabulary (versus the more common 'ophthalmos') may reflect the Gospel writers' stylistic variation or sensitivity to the sacred nature of healing—Jesus touching the organs that mediate light and sight, opening eyes that had never seen. The term appears frequently in the Septuagint, carrying biblical-poetic resonance.

(2×) Eyes, the organs of vision, used in elevated or poetic style. Classical usage appears primarily in poetry and literary prose, less commonly in everyday speech. The Gospel occurrences in healing contexts may elevate the narrative tone—these are not clinical medical procedures but divine acts of new creation, giving sight to the blind. Cross-linguistic renderings are uniform (Spanish 'ojos,' French 'yeux'), recognizing the synonymy with more common eye-terms while noting the poetic register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: eyes | es: ojos | fr: yeux | de: ὀμμάτων, ὄμματα Matt 20:34; Mark 8:23

ὄμνῡμι G3660 V-AIA-3S (26×)

to swear, take an oath — to bind oneself solemnly by invoking a higher authority or sacred object

Omnumi (and its variant omnuo) means to swear an oath, to make a solemn vow by invoking something greater than oneself as guarantor. Its 26 NT occurrences concentrate in two dramatic contexts. First, Jesus' teaching in the Sermon on the Mount prohibits oath-swearing entirely: 'Do not swear at all — not by heaven, for it is God's throne, nor by earth, nor by Jerusalem' (Matt 5:34-36), and later he exposes the Pharisees' casuistry about swearing by the temple versus its gold (Matt 23:16-22). Second, the verb appears in solemn divine oaths: God swore to Abraham (Luke 1:73; Acts 2:30; Heb 7:21), and in Hebrews the divine oath becomes the basis for the superiority of Christ's priesthood (Heb 6:13; 7:21). Peter's denial involves swearing that he does not know Jesus (Matt 26:74; Mark 14:71). Herod swears rashly to give Salome whatever she asks (Matt 14:7; Mark 6:23). Spanish 'jurar,' French 'jurer,' and German 'schworen' all carry the same solemn binding force.

swear, take an oath (26×) To swear an oath or make a solemn vow, invoking a higher authority as witness and guarantor. Appears in Jesus' prohibition of oath-taking in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt 5:34-36) and his critique of Pharisaic oath casuistry (Matt 23:16-22), in divine oath traditions where God swore to Abraham (Luke 1:73; Acts 2:30; Heb 6:13; 7:21), in Peter's denial under oath (Matt 26:74; Mark 14:71), and in Herod's rash banquet vow (Matt 14:7; Mark 6:23). The range from divine promise to human folly shows the theological weight of oath-language. SWEAR TAKE OATH
en: having-sworn, he-swore, swears | es: Juró, a-jurar, jura | fr: jurer | de: schwoeren, schwört Matt 5:34; Matt 5:36; Matt 23:16; Matt 23:18

ὁμοθῡμ-αδόν G3661 Adv (11×)

With one mind, in united accord — an adverb describing collective harmony of purpose, especially in early church life

The adverb ὁμοθυμαδόν (homothumadon) describes a group acting or feeling 'with one mind' or 'in unanimous accord.' It is virtually a signature word of Acts, where Luke uses it to paint the early church's extraordinary unity: the disciples pray together with one accord (Acts 1:14), gather daily in the temple (Acts 2:46), lift their voices in unified prayer (Acts 4:24), and meet in Solomon's Portico (Acts 5:12). The word also captures hostile unanimity — a crowd rushing with one impulse against Stephen (Acts 7:57) or against Paul in Thessalonica. Its only Pauline occurrence is Romans 15:6, praying that believers may 'with one mind and one mouth glorify God.' Spanish 'unánimes' and French 'd'un commun accord' convey the depth of this shared purpose.

with one mind (11×) Positive communal unanimity, describing the early church's shared devotion, prayer, and worship. The believers persist with one accord in prayer (Acts 1:14), gather daily for breaking of bread (Acts 2:46), pray together after Peter and John's release (Acts 4:24), and meet as one in Solomon's Portico (Acts 5:12). Paul's prayer in Romans 15:6 extends this to glorifying God 'with one mind.' The word captures an inner harmony of purpose that produces outward visible unity. Spanish 'unánimes' and French 'd'un commun accord' both emphasize the depth of agreement. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: of-one-mind, with-one-accord, with-one-mind | es: unánimemente | fr: d'un-commun-accord | de: einmuetig, einmütig Acts 1:14; Acts 2:46; Acts 4:24; Acts 5:12; Acts 7:57

ὁμοι-άζω G3662 V-PIA-3S (1×)

To be like or similar to something; to resemble or have similarity with another

This verb means to be like, resemble, or have similarity to something else. In Mark 14:70, bystanders challenge Peter during Jesus' trial: 'Surely you are one of them, for you are a Galilean, and your speech is similar.' The verb indicates that Peter's accent or dialect matched that of Galileans, betraying his regional origin despite his denials. The word can also mean 'to compare' in other contexts, but here it's about resemblance or likeness that reveals identity.

(1×) To be similar to or resemble something, particularly in manner or characteristic. Mark 14:70 uses this to describe Peter's speech: 'your speech is similar' (or 'matches,' 'agrees'). His Galilean accent betrayed his connection to Jesus despite denials. The verb captures how resemblance—even in something as subtle as dialect—can reveal identity and association, making concealment impossible. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: is-similar | es: es-semejante | fr: ressembler | de: aehnlich-sein Mark 14:70

ὁμοιοπαθ-ής G3663 Adj-NMP (2×)

of like nature, sharing the same human passions and limitations

Having the same nature or subject to the same passions and weaknesses. Paul and Barnabas use it in Lystra to deflect worship: 'We are men of like nature with you' (Acts 14:15)—not gods but fellow humans subject to the same frailties. James uses it of Elijah: he was 'a man with a nature like ours' (James 5:17)—not superhuman but a normal person whose prayers God answered powerfully. Both contexts humble impressive figures by emphasizing common humanity, making apostolic witness and prophetic prayer accessible models rather than unreachable ideals.

(2×) Of the same nature or passions, sharing common human limitations. The term emphasizes equality of nature—apostles are not divine, prophets are not superhumans, all share the same flesh, blood, weaknesses, and temptations. Classical usage describes those affected similarly by emotion or circumstance. The apostolic and prophetic applications democratize spiritual power—if Elijah (homoiopathēs) prevailed in prayer, so can we. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'de iguales pasiones,' French 'de même nature') capture both emotional and essential sameness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9745 WITH 3 SENSES

en: like-natured, of-like-nature | es: de-iguales-pasiones, de-pasiones-semejantes | fr: de-même-nature, ὁμοιοπαθὴς | de: ὁμοιοπαθεῖς, ὁμοιοπαθὴς Acts 14:15; Jas 5:17

ὅμοιος G3664 Adj-NMP (45×)

like, similar, resembling — expressing likeness or analogy, especially in parables and visions

Homoios is the adjective of comparison par excellence in the New Testament, appearing 45 times as the linguistic engine of Jesus' parabolic teaching: 'The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed' (Matt 13:31), 'like a merchant seeking fine pearls' (Matt 13:45), 'like a net cast into the sea' (Matt 13:47). Beyond the parables, it describes the likeness of heavenly beings in Revelation — creatures 'like a lion,' 'like a calf,' 'like a man' (Rev 4:7) — and the risen Christ's appearance 'like a son of man' (Rev 1:13). The word's parabolic function is strikingly uniform across translations: Spanish 'semejante,' French 'semblable,' German 'ähnlich/gleich' — each serving as the standard formula for opening an analogy.

like, similar, resembling (45×) An adjective of resemblance or analogy, predicating likeness between two entities or situations. Dominates the parabolic formula homoia estin he basileia ('the kingdom is like...') throughout Matthew 13 and 20, and extends to visionary descriptions in Revelation where heavenly beings and cosmic phenomena are depicted through analogy (Rev 1:13; 4:3, 7; 9:7, 10, 19). Also used in ethical comparison — the wise man is 'like' one who builds on rock (Matt 7:24), and servants are called to be 'like' those waiting for their master (Luke 12:36). All 45 occurrences express this single comparative function, differing only in what is being compared. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: is-like, like, one-like | es: semejante, semejantes | fr: semblable | de: aehnlich Matt 11:16; Matt 13:31; Matt 13:33; Matt 13:44; Matt 13:45

ὁμοιό-της G3665 N-AFS (2×)

likeness, similarity or resemblance

The quality of being similar or resembling something else. The author of Hebrews uses this term twice in discussing Christ's priesthood. First, Christ's temptation 'in every respect... yet without sin' shows likeness to human experience (Hebrews 4:15—though the word itself appears in a longer phrase). Second, the Melchizedekian priesthood arises 'according to the likeness of Melchizedek' (7:15)—not genealogical succession but typological resemblance. The term emphasizes similarity while preserving distinction—Christ is like us (truly human) yet unlike us (sinless); His priesthood resembles Melchizedek's (eternal) yet surpasses it (superior sacrifice).

(2×) Likeness, resemblance, or similarity between things. Classical usage explores degrees of correspondence—things alike 'in likeness' versus 'simply/absolutely.' Hebrews uses it to navigate christological paradoxes: Christ's full humanity (likeness to us) and unique sinlessness (unlikeness), His priesthood's typological resemblance to Melchizedek's yet eschatological superiority. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'semejanza,' French 'ressemblance,' German 'Ähnlichkeit') emphasize the comparative relationship, the 'like but not identical' quality central to Hebrews' typology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: likeness | es: semejanza | fr: ressemblance | de: Aehnlichkeit Heb 4:15; Heb 7:15

ὁμοι-όω G3666 V-APP-NMP (15×)

To liken, compare, or make similar; in the passive, to be compared or to become like something.

At the heart of Jesus' parable introductions stands this comparison verb. 'The kingdom of heaven is likened to...' (Matt 13:24; 18:23; 22:2) employs the passive, while 'To what shall I liken this generation?' (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:31) uses the active voice rhetorically. Beyond mere illustration, the word can denote actual resemblance: Christ was 'made like' his brothers (Heb 2:17), and Paul warns believers not to 'be like' the nations (Matt 6:8). Spanish distinguishes neatly between 'es comparado' (is compared) and 'ser hecho semejante' (to be made like), illuminating how Greek voice shifts between rhetorical analogy and real transformation.

1. to be likened or compared (6×) To be the subject of a comparison or parable (passive). Jesus introduces kingdom parables with this form: 'the kingdom of heaven is likened to a man who sowed good seed' (Matt 13:24), or a king settling accounts (Matt 18:23). Spanish 'es semejante / fue semejada' and German 'gleicht' consistently render this as passive comparison. The passive signals that the thing compared is being illuminated, not changed. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON en: Is-likened, has-become-like, was-likened | es: Es-comparado, Es-semejante, fue-semejada | fr: comparer | de: gleicht Matt 7:24; Matt 7:26; Matt 13:24; Matt 18:23; Matt 22:2

2. to compare or liken (5×) To draw a comparison or analogy (active/deliberative). 'To what shall I liken this generation?' (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:31) and 'With what parable shall we compare it?' (Mark 4:30) employ this rhetorical sense. Spanish 'compararemos / comparare' and French 'comparer' show the active, intentional search for the right image. This is the teacher's tool for inviting listeners into fresh seeing. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: may-we-compare, shall-I-liken, will-I-compare | es: compararemos, compararé | fr: comparer | de: gleichmachen, gleicht Matt 11:16; Mark 4:30; Luke 7:31; Luke 13:18; Luke 13:20

3. to become like or resemble (4×) To become like or be made to resemble (resultative). Christ 'was made like his brothers in every way' (Heb 2:17), and without repentance Israel 'would have become like Sodom' (Rom 9:29). Spanish 'ser hecho semejante' and 'hubiéramos sido hechos semejantes' capture the real ontological shift. Unlike senses 1 and 2, this is not illustration but transformation, or at least the threat of it. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: be-like, having-become-like, to-be-made-like | es: hubiéramos-sido-hechos-semejantes, os-asemejéis, ser-hecho-semejante | fr: comparer, semblable | de: gleichmachen, gleicht Matt 6:8; Acts 14:11; Rom 9:29; Heb 2:17

ὁμοί-ωμα G3667 N-DNS (6×)

Likeness, form, appearance; a visible representation or similitude of something

A noun denoting the form, shape, or visible resemblance that one thing bears to another. Paul employs it with remarkable theological precision: humanity fell 'in the likeness of Adam's transgression' (Rom 5:14), Christ was sent 'in the likeness of sinful flesh' (Rom 8:3), and he took on 'the likeness of humanity' (Phil 2:7). The word carefully implies genuine resemblance without asserting complete identity—a crucial distinction in Christological formulation. Spanish 'semejanza' and German 'Gleichnis' both capture this 'likeness-but-not-identity' nuance.

likeness, form, appearance (6×) A visible form, image, or representation that resembles something else without being identical to it. Theologically pivotal in Paul's letters: idolaters exchanged God's glory for images 'in the likeness of' mortal creatures (Rom 1:23), death reigned over those who sinned 'in the likeness of Adam's transgression' (Rom 5:14), believers are united with Christ 'in the likeness of his death' (Rom 6:5), God sent his Son 'in the likeness of sinful flesh' (Rom 8:3), and Christ took 'the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men' (Phil 2:7). The term preserves genuine resemblance while allowing ontological distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: likeness, likenesses | es: semejanza, semejanzas | fr: Gleichnis, ressemblance | de: Gleichnis Rom 1:23; Rom 5:14; Rom 6:5; Rom 8:3; Phil 2:7

ὅμοιος G3668 Adv (31×)

likewise, in the same way — adverb drawing a parallel between actions, situations, or commands

Homoios is an adverb meaning 'likewise' or 'in the same manner,' appearing 31 times in the New Testament to draw explicit parallels between actions or situations. In the Synoptic Gospels, it frequently chains narrative events: the second brother married the widow 'likewise' and died (Matt 22:26), and Peter declared 'likewise' that he would never deny Jesus (Matt 26:35). The chief priests 'likewise' mocked Jesus on the cross (Matt 27:41; Mark 15:31). Luke uses it in ethical teaching — the second and third passers-by in the Good Samaritan story act 'likewise' in neglect (Luke 10:32), and Jesus commands the lawyer to 'go and do likewise' (Luke 10:37). Paul and Peter apply it to community instruction: wives should submit 'likewise' and younger men should be sober-minded 'likewise' (1 Pet 3:1; 5:5). Spanish 'asimismo/igualmente,' French 'de meme,' and German 'ebenso/gleichweise' confirm a single comparative function.

likewise (31×) An adverb drawing an explicit parallel between two actions or situations, meaning 'in the same way.' Used to chain narrative events — the brothers who each married the same widow (Matt 22:26), Peter's vow alongside the others (Matt 26:35), the mocking priests at the cross (Mark 15:31). Also carries ethical force, as in Jesus' command 'go and do likewise' (Luke 10:37). In the epistles, structures parallel exhortations to different groups (1 Pet 3:1; 5:5). LIKEWISE SIMILARLY en: Likewise, likewise | es: asimismo, igualmente | fr: de-même | de: ebenso, gleichweise Matt 22:26; Matt 26:35; Matt 27:41; Mark 4:16; Mark 15:31

ὁμοί-ωσις G3669 N-AFS (1×)

Likeness, resemblance, or similarity; the state of being made like something or someone else

This noun denotes likeness or resemblance, particularly the state of being made similar to something. In James 3:9, it appears in an ethical indictment: 'With the tongue we bless our Lord and Father, and with it we curse people who are made in the likeness of God.' The phrase echoes Genesis 1:26-27—humanity bears God's image and likeness. James' point is devastating: cursing humans is indirectly cursing God, whose likeness they bear. The term emphasizes the resemblance or similarity that connects humanity to the divine.

(1×) Resemblance or likeness, particularly humanity's creation in God's image. James 3:9 says we curse 'people made in the likeness of God,' recalling Genesis 1:26-27. The term emphasizes similitude —humans resemble their Creator, bearing divine image. James argues this makes cursing humans morally intolerable: to demean image-bearers is to assault God's likeness. The theological weight transforms ethical discourse: every person reflects the divine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: likeness | es: semejanza | fr: ὁμοίωσιν | de: Gleichnis Jas 3:9

ὁμολογ-έω G3670 V-FIA-3S (26×)

Confess, acknowledge, profess — to agree openly, declare publicly, or promise formally

The verb homologeo literally means 'to say the same thing' (homos + legein) and carries this notion of verbal alignment into confessions of faith, acknowledgments of truth, and binding promises. Jesus declares that whoever confesses him before others, he will confess before the Father (Matt 10:32; Luke 12:8). John insists that every spirit that confesses Jesus Christ come in the flesh is from God (1 John 4:2-3, 15), and the early church's signature act was to 'confess with your mouth that Jesus is Lord' (Rom 10:9-10). Spanish confesamos and German bekennen hold steady across all uses, while French confesser shades into promettre ('to promise') for the vow-making sense.

1. confess or acknowledge (22×) The core sense: to confess, acknowledge, or admit openly — whether confessing sins (1 John 1:9), acknowledging a truth (John 1:20, where the Baptist 'confessed and did not deny'), or declaring faith in Christ (Rom 10:9-10; 1 John 4:2-3, 15). Jesus makes confession reciprocal: whoever confesses him before others, he will confess before the Father (Matt 10:32; Luke 12:8). The 22 occurrences in this cluster form the semantic center of homologeo, and the multilingual evidence — Spanish confesar, German bekennen, French confesser — converges on the idea of speaking agreement with a truth, whether uncomfortable (sin) or joyful (faith). CONFESSION AND PRAISE

en: I-will-confess, confess, confessed | es: confesaban, confesamos, confesando | fr: confesser | de: bekennen, bekennt Matt 10:32; Luke 12:8; John 1:20

2. promise or vow (2×) To promise, pledge, or vow — extending the notion of verbal commitment from present acknowledgment to a future undertaking. Herod promises with an oath to give Salome whatever she asks (Matt 14:7), and Stephen recounts that God 'promised' to give Abraham's descendants the land (Acts 7:17). Spanish prometio ('he promised') and the forward-looking context clearly distinguish this from confession or public declaration. The semantic link is that a promise is a homologia — you 'say the same thing' as your future self will do. CONFESSION AND PRAISE

en: confessed, he-promised | es: prometió | fr: confesser | de: bekennt Matt 14:7; Acts 7:17

3. profess or declare publicly (2×) To profess or declare publicly — emphasizing formal, outward proclamation of belief or identity rather than private admission. Jesus warns that on the last day he will 'declare' to the lawless, 'I never knew you' (Matt 7:23), and Titus 1:16 condemns those who 'profess to know God' but deny him by their deeds. Spanish declararé / profesan and German bekennen mark this as the performative, public-facing dimension of homologeo — a solemn declaration made before witnesses. CONFESSION AND PRAISE

en: I-will-declare, they-profess | es: declararé, profesan | fr: confesser | de: bekennen, bekennt Matt 7:23; Titus 1:16

ὁμολογ-ία G3671 N-AFS (6×)

Confession, profession; a public declaration of faith or allegiance

Derived from homologeo ('to say the same thing, to agree'), this noun denotes a public, binding declaration—whether of faith, allegiance, or commitment. In Hebrews it becomes almost a technical term for the Christian profession of faith: Jesus is 'the apostle and high priest of our confession' (Heb 3:1), and believers must 'hold fast the confession' (Heb 4:14). Paul reminds Timothy of 'the good confession' he made before many witnesses (1 Tim 6:12), paralleling Christ's own testimony before Pilate. The consistent rendering across languages —English 'confession,' French 'confession,' German 'Bekenntnis'— reflects the word's stability as a term of public declaration.

(6×) A formal, public declaration or profession of faith, carrying connotations of binding commitment and witness before others. In the Pastoral Epistles, Timothy is charged to fight the good fight of faith, having made 'the good confession before many witnesses' (1 Tim 6:12), echoing Christ Jesus who 'testified the good confession before Pontius Pilate' (1 Tim 6:13). In Hebrews, the noun becomes a cornerstone term for the shared Christian creed that believers must hold firm (Heb 3:1; 4:14). Paul also uses it for the outward demonstration of faith through generosity (2 Cor 9:13). CONFESSION AND PRAISE

en: confession, of-confession | es: confesión | fr: confession | de: Bekenntnis 2Cor 9:13; 1Tim 6:12; 1Tim 6:13; Heb 3:1; Heb 4:14

ὁμολογ-ουμένως G3672 Adv (1×)

Confessedly, admittedly, or by common agreement; something acknowledged or agreed upon by all

This adverb means 'confessedly' or 'admittedly'—by common consent or universal agreement. In 1 Timothy 3:16, Paul uses it to introduce a creedal hymn: 'Great indeed, we confess, is the mystery of godliness.' The word signals that what follows is universally acknowledged among believers—not disputed doctrine but foundational truth. It can also mean 'conformably with' in classical usage, but here it emphasizes common confession or agreed-upon truth. The hymn that follows (about Christ) is what the church confessedly believes.

(1×) By common agreement or confession; admittedly or confessedly among all. 1 Timothy 3:16 introduces a christological hymn with this adverb: 'Great, confessedly, is the mystery of godliness.' The term signals that what follows is universally acknowledged within the church—core doctrine that all believers affirm together. It's not Paul's private opinion but the church's common confession. MANNER ADVERBS

en: confessedly | es: confesadamente | fr: ὁμολογουμένως | de: anerkannt 1Tim 3:16

ὁμό-τεχνος G3673 Adj-AMS (1×)

Practicing the same trade or craft; a fellow craftsman or one who shares the same occupation

This adjective describes someone practicing the same trade or craft, a fellow artisan. In Acts 18:3, it explains why Paul stayed with Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth: 'because he was of the same trade, he stayed with them and worked, for they were tentmakers by trade.' Shared occupation created natural partnership—economic collaboration and likely mutual support in a new city. The term emphasizes professional commonality that facilitated both practical cooperation and ministry partnership.

(1×) Sharing the same trade or craft; being a fellow craftsman. Acts 18:3 notes that Paul lodged with Aquila and Priscilla 'because he was of the same trade'—all were tentmakers. This occupational bond provided livelihood, fellowship, and ministry base. The detail shows how Paul's tentmaking wasn't incidental but integral to his mission strategy, creating networks through shared labor. LABOR AND TOIL

en: same-trade | es: del-mismo-oficio | fr: de-même-métier | de: ὁμότεχνον Acts 18:3

ὁμοῦ G3674 Adv (4×)

Together, in the same place; at the same time or in company with one another

An adverb expressing togetherness — whether spatial (same place), temporal (same time), or relational (in company). John's Gospel uses it for the disciples gathering together (John 21:2) and for two disciples running together toward the tomb (John 20:4). In John 4:36, sower and reaper rejoice 'together,' collapsing the usual temporal gap between planting and harvest. Acts 2:1 places all believers 'together in one place' at Pentecost, combining spatial and communal togetherness. Spanish juntos/juntamente, French ensemble, and German zusammen all confirm the consistent sense of shared presence.

(4×) Together, in the same place or at the same time, emphasizing shared presence or simultaneous action. In John 20:4, two disciples run together toward the empty tomb. John 21:2 lists disciples gathered together by the Sea of Tiberias. John 4:36 uses it figuratively — sower and reaper rejoice together, collapsing the normal time gap. Acts 2:1 places the whole community together in one place at Pentecost, combining spatial unity with communal solidarity. Spanish juntos, French ensemble, and German zusammen unanimously convey this sense of convergent presence. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: together | es: juntamente, juntos | fr: ensemble | de: zusammen John 4:36; John 20:4; John 21:2; Acts 2:1

ὁμό-φρων G3675 Adj-NMP (1×)

Like-minded, of one mind, or united in thought; having the same disposition or attitude as others

This adjective describes people who are like-minded or united in thought—literally 'same-minded' (ὁμός + φρήν). In 1 Peter 3:8, it heads a list of relational virtues: 'Finally, all of you, have unity of mind, sympathy, brotherly love, a tender heart, and a humble mind.' The term emphasizes intellectual and emotional alignment—shared perspective and mutual understanding within the Christian community. It's relational harmony rooted in common convictions and affections, essential for church unity.

(1×) Having unity of mind or being like-minded, sharing the same thoughts and attitudes. 1 Peter 3:8 commands believers to be 'of one mind' (or 'like-minded'), heading a catalog of virtues for communal life. The term implies harmony in perspective and disposition—not enforced uniformity but genuine agreement flowing from shared faith. It's cognitive and affective unity fostering relational peace. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11787 WITH 3 SENSES

en: like-minded | es: de-un-mismo-sentir | fr: ὁμόφρονες | de: gleichgesinnt 1Pet 3:8

ὅμως G3676 Conj (3×)

nevertheless, yet, all the same, despite what precedes

This conjunction introduces a concessive or limiting clause—'nevertheless' or 'yet.' Many believed in Jesus but didn't confess him 'for fear'; John adds, 'Nevertheless, many even of the authorities believed' (John 12:42). Paul says lifeless instruments need distinction in notes 'or how will anyone know...?' (1 Cor 14:7). He tells the Galatians that human covenants, once ratified, can't be annulled —'nevertheless' (Gal 3:15). The word marks contrast or qualification. French 'néanmoins/cependant' and Spanish 'sin embargo' capture the limiting force.

(3×) Nevertheless, yet, all the same—a conjunction that introduces a limiting or concessive clause, qualifying what precedes. John 12:42 uses ὅμως to mark that despite fear, many authorities believed. 1 Corinthians 14:7 qualifies the instrument analogy. Galatians 3:15 introduces a legal principle with 'yet.' The term signals a turn or qualification: what follows stands despite or alongside what came before. French 'néanmoins/cependant' and Spanish 'sin embargo' are standard contrastive conjunctions matching this function. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: likewise, nevertheless | es: Sin-embargo, sin-embargo | fr: cependant, néanmoins | de: doch John 12:42; 1Cor 14:7; Gal 3:15

ὄνᾰρ G3677 N-ANS (6×)

Dream; a vision received during sleep, especially as divine communication

The standard Greek word for a dream experienced during sleep, distinguished from waking visions. In the NT it appears exclusively in Matthew's infancy narrative, where dreams serve as God's chosen channel for guiding Joseph and the Magi through the dangerous circumstances surrounding Jesus' birth. An angel appears to Joseph 'in a dream' four times (Matt 1:20; 2:13, 19, 22), and the Magi are warned 'in a dream' not to return to Herod (Matt 2:12). The concentration in one narrative block underscores Matthew's theological portrait of divine providence directing events through nocturnal revelation.

(6×) A dream during sleep serving as a medium of divine revelation or warning. All six NT occurrences cluster in Matthew 1-2, where God communicates critical guidance through dreams: Joseph learns of Mary's conception by the Holy Spirit (Matt 1:20), the Magi are diverted from Herod (Matt 2:12), Joseph is told to flee to Egypt (Matt 2:13), then to return after Herod's death (Matt 2:19), and finally to settle in Galilee rather than Judea (Matt 2:22). The pattern echoes the Old Testament Joseph and Daniel tradition of dreams as prophetic vehicles. Spanish 'sueno,' French 'songe,' and German 'Traum' all render it consistently. DREAM VISION

en: a-dream, dream | es: sueño | fr: songe | de: Traum Matt 1:20; Matt 2:12; Matt 2:13; Matt 2:19; Matt 2:22

ὀνάρ-ιον G3678 N-ANS (1×)

A young donkey or small ass; a donkey colt, often used diminutively for a smaller or younger animal

This diminutive noun refers to a young or small donkey, a donkey colt. In John 12:14, it describes Jesus' mount for the triumphal entry: 'Jesus found a young donkey and sat on it, as it is written.' The detail fulfills Zechariah 9:9's prophecy about the king coming 'humble and mounted on a donkey, on a colt, the foal of a donkey.' The diminutive form may emphasize the animal's smallness or youth, underscoring the humility of Jesus' royal entry—no warhorse but a humble beast of burden.

(1×) A young donkey or donkey colt, particularly a small or immature animal. John 12:14 describes Jesus finding 'a young donkey' for his entry into Jerusalem, fulfilling Zechariah 9:9. The diminutive form emphasizes the animal's modest size, reinforcing the contrast between Jesus' kingship and worldly expectation: he comes not on a warhorse but riding a humble, young donkey—kingship through meekness. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: a-young-donkey | es: borriquillo | fr: ânon | de: Eselchen John 12:14

ὀνειδ-ίζω G3679 V-PPA-GMS (9×)

To revile, reproach, or insult; upbraid or rebuke sharply; reproach (in the sense of finding fault with a giver).

A verb expressing verbal attack ranging from hostile insults to authoritative censure. When persecutors revile believers or mock Christ on the cross (Matt 5:11; Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32), the word carries the sting of contemptuous abuse–Spanish 'injuriar/insultar' and German 'schmahen' convey the venom well. When Jesus himself 'upbraids' cities that did not repent (Matt 11:20) or rebukes his disciples for unbelief (Mark 16:14), the same verb shifts toward authoritative reproof, with Spanish using 'reprochar.' James 1:5 presents a striking theological inversion: God gives wisdom generously 'without reproaching'–the one context where the word appears in negation, assuring believers that divine generosity carries no sting of blame.

1. revile, reproach, insult (6×) To revile, reproach, or heap verbal abuse upon someone out of hostility or contempt. Used of enemies taunting Christ on the cross (Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32), persecutors insulting believers (Matt 5:11; Luke 6:22), and the reproaches that fell on the Messiah (Rom 15:3, quoting Ps 69:9). Spanish 'injuriar/insultar' and German 'schmahen' consistently render the hostile, demeaning character of these attacks. REVILE REPROACH INSULT en: reproaching, they-reproach, they-revile | es: injuriaban, injurien, os-insulten | fr: insulter, reprocher | de: schmähen, ὀνειδίσωσιν, ὠνείδιζον Matt 5:11; Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32; Luke 6:22; Rom 15:3

2. upbraid, rebuke (2×) To upbraid or rebuke with authority, expressing strong disapproval toward those who should know better. Jesus 'began to denounce' the cities where his mighty works were done (Matt 11:20), and he 'reproached' the eleven for their stubborn unbelief after the resurrection (Mark 16:14). Spanish 'reprochar' shifts the register from external hostility to internal corrective censure–the rebuke comes from love and authority, not malice. REVILE REPROACH INSULT

en: he-reproached, to-denounce | es: a-reprochar, reprochó | fr: reprocher | de: schmähen, ὀνειδίζειν Matt 11:20; Mark 16:14

3. reproach (without upbraiding) (1×) To reproach in the sense of finding fault with or shaming a recipient–used uniquely in negation at James 1:5, where God gives wisdom 'without reproaching' (me oneidizonton). This sense preserves the core meaning of casting blame but applies it to the donor-recipient relationship: unlike human benefactors who remind you of their generosity, God gives without making the asker feel belittled. Spanish 'reprochando' maintains the verbal form while the negation transforms it into a statement about divine graciousness. REVILE REPROACH INSULT en: reproaching | es: reprochando | fr: reprocher | de: schmähen Jas 1:5

ὀνειδ-ισμός G3680 N-NMP (5×)

Reproach, disgrace, reviling; shame or insult endured for one's faith or identity.

A noun denoting reproach, disgrace, or reviling — the experience of being publicly shamed or insulted. In the NT, it consistently appears in contexts of suffering for faith. Romans 15:3 quotes Psalm 69:9, applying the reproaches against God to Christ himself. Hebrews develops this theme most richly: believers endured reproaches and afflictions publicly (10:33), Moses chose 'the reproach of Christ' over Egypt's treasures (11:26), and the community is called to go outside the camp bearing his reproach (13:13). The German 'Schmach' powerfully conveys the weight of public disgrace.

(5×) Reproach or disgrace — public shaming, insult, or reviling endured typically on account of faithfulness to God. In Rom 15:3, Christ bears the reproaches meant for God (quoting Ps 69:9). The Hebrews passages develop a theology of reproach: it is something to be endured publicly (10:33), chosen deliberately like Moses did (11:26), and embraced as a mark of identification with Jesus 'outside the camp' (13:13). First Timothy 3:7 warns that an overseer must have a good reputation to avoid falling into the devil's 'reproach.' The German 'Schmach' and French 'insulte' capture the public, social dimension of this shaming. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: reproach, reproaches, with-reproaches | es: con-vituperios, oprobio, reproche | fr: Schmach, insulte | de: Schmach Rom 15:3; 1Tim 3:7; Heb 10:33; Heb 11:26; Heb 13:13

ὄνειδ-ος G3681 N-ANS (1×)

Reproach, disgrace, or shame; a matter of dishonor or humiliation, particularly public scorn

This noun denotes reproach, disgrace, or something that brings shame—particularly public scorn or dishonor. In Luke 1:25, Elizabeth responds to her pregnancy: 'Thus the Lord has done for me in the days when he looked on me, to take away my reproach among people.' In that culture, childlessness was viewed as divine disfavor, bringing social stigma. Elizabeth's 'reproach' was the shame and whispered pity she endured for years. God's gift of a son removed this disgrace, vindicating her before the community.

(1×) Public reproach, disgrace, or shame, particularly social stigma attached to perceived divine disfavor. Luke 1:25 records Elizabeth's joy that God has 'taken away my reproach'—the shame of barrenness she carried for years. In her cultural context, childlessness suggested God's judgment, making her an object of pity and scorn. Miraculous pregnancy vindicated her publicly, erasing the reproach. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: reproach | es: reproche | fr: reproche | de: ὄνειδός Luke 1:25

ὀνήσῐ-μος G3682 N-DMS (2×)

Onesimus, a personal name meaning 'useful' or 'beneficial'

The name of a slave who fled from Philemon, encountered Paul in prison, became a Christian, and was sent back with Paul's letter to Philemon. The name's ironic etymology—'Onesimus' means 'useful'—becomes a play on words in Philemon 1:11: 'formerly useless to you, but now useful indeed to you and to me.' Paul sends him to Colossae as 'our faithful and beloved brother' (Colossians 4:9), transformed from runaway slave to Christian brother. The name embodies the gospel's transformation of identity and relationship.

(2×) Onesimus, personal name of Philemon's slave. The Greek adjective 'onēsimos' (useful, profitable) becomes a proper name, common among slaves—a designation of their value to masters. Paul's wordplay in Philemon exploits the name's meaning: Onesimus lived down to his name by running away (useless) but now lives up to it through conversion (useful). Cross-linguistic transliterations preserve the Greek name (Onésimos, Onēsimos, Onesimus) while losing the 'useful' pun unavailable in most target languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Onesimos, Onēsimos | es: Onésimos, Onḗsimon | fr: Ὀνήσιμον, Ὀνησίμῳ | de: Onesimus Col 4:9; Phlm 1:10

Ὀνησίφορος G3683 N-GMS (2×)

Onesiphorus, a personal name meaning 'profit-bringer' or 'advantage-bearer'

The name of a Christian from Ephesus who refreshed Paul during his Roman imprisonment and was not ashamed of Paul's chains (2 Timothy 1:16). Paul also greets 'the household of Onesiphorus' (4:19), a phrase some interpret as suggesting Onesiphorus himself had died—though this is debated. The name's meaning ('bringing advantage') mirrors Onesimus, and like that name, carries irony: Onesiphorus brought advantage to Paul when most abandoned him. His loyal service in Rome and Ephesus models costly friendship.

(2×) Onesiphorus, a Christian benefactor mentioned in 2 Timothy. The name compounds 'onēsis' (profit, advantage) with 'pherō' (to bring)—'profit-bringer,' a name expressing parental hopes that proved prophetic. His search for imprisoned Paul in Rome, despite risk and difficulty, embodied his name. Paul's mention of his 'household' rather than him in 4:19 may indicate death, making his earlier service even more poignant. Cross-linguistic transliterations (Onēsíphoros, Onesiphorus) preserve the Greek form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: of-Onesiphoros | es: de-Onēsíphoros | fr: Ὀνησιφόρου | de: Onesiphorus 2Tim 1:16; 2Tim 4:19

ὀν-ῐ́κός G3684 Adj-NMS (2×)

of or relating to a donkey; used specifically of millstones turned by donkeys

This rare adjective describes something associated with donkeys. In both New Testament occurrences, it qualifies a millstone—specifically the large, heavy type that would be turned by a donkey walking in circles (as opposed to smaller hand mills). Jesus uses this vivid image when warning against causing children to stumble: such a person would be better off with a donkey-driven millstone hung around their neck and drowned in the sea. The phrase captures the industrial scale of the judgment.

(2×) The adjective appears only in Matthew 18:6 and Mark 9:42, both in Jesus' saying about millstones. The multilingual glosses distinguish it from ordinary millstones by emphasizing the donkey connection: English 'donkey-driven' or 'donkey-turned,' Spanish 'de-asno,' French 'de-meule.' The term highlights the size and weight of such a millstone—too heavy for human hands, requiring animal power—which makes Jesus' metaphor all the more stark. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: donkey-driven, donkey-turned | es: de-asno | fr: de-meule | de: ὀνικὸς Matt 18:6; Mark 9:42

ὀνίνημι G3685 V-AOM-1S (1×)

To have benefit or profit from something; to gain advantage or be helped by another

This verb means to benefit, profit, or gain advantage from something or someone. In Philemon 20, Paul writes to Philemon: 'Yes, brother, I want some benefit from you in the Lord.' The verb is related to the name Onesimus (meaning 'useful' or 'beneficial'), creating wordplay in Paul's letter. Paul asks Philemon to grant him joy or benefit by receiving Onesimus back graciously. Classical usage includes profiting from or enjoying something. The term combines material and relational benefit—Paul seeks both practical help and relational harmony.

(1×) To receive benefit or profit from someone, particularly in a relational or practical sense. Philemon 20 uses this in Paul's plea: 'may I have benefit from you in the Lord' (or 'may I have joy from you'). The verb plays on Onesimus's name ('Useful') and asks Philemon for tangible benefit—namely, gracious reception of the returning slave. Paul seeks both personal joy and practical reconciliation. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: may-I-have-benefit | es: tenga-provecho | fr: ὀναίμην | de: Nutzen-haben Phlm 1:20

ὄνομα G3686 N-NNP (231×)

Name, title, or reputation; used of persons, places, and divine authority ('in the name of').

In biblical Greek, onoma encompasses far more than a label. It denotes a person's name, title, standing, and authority. When Scripture speaks of acting or believing 'in the name of' Jesus, the word carries the full weight of the person's identity and power. Spanish uniformly renders it 'nombre,' French 'nom,' and German 'Name,' reflecting its straightforward core meaning. Yet in passages like Matthew 1:21 ('you shall call his name Jesus') and Acts 4:12 ('no other name under heaven'), the word stretches into theological territory, signifying reputation, character, and saving authority.

name, title, reputation (231×) A personal designation, title, or identifying label applied to a person, place, or divine being, extending naturally to reputation and delegated authority. The construction 'in the name of' (en to onomati) marks agency, invocation, or appeal to another's standing. All major translations converge on a single core rendering (Spanish 'nombre,' French 'nom,' German 'Name'), confirming this as a unified semantic field despite its wide application from simple introductions (Matt 1:25) to theological declarations of divine power (Phil 2:9-10). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: name | es: nombre | fr: nom | de: Name Matt 1:21; Matt 1:23; Matt 1:25; Matt 6:9; Matt 7:22

ὀνομάζω G3687 V-PMM/P-3S (10×)

Name, call by name — to bestow a name, designate, or be known/identified by a name or title

The verb onomazo (ὀνομάζω) covers both active naming and passive being-named. Jesus actively 'named' the twelve apostles (Mark 3:14 v.l.; Luke 6:13-14), establishing their identity and mission. In the passive, it describes titles and reputations that transcend the present age: Christ is exalted above every name 'that is named' (Eph 1:21), and every family in heaven and earth 'is named' from the Father (Eph

3:15). Paul avoids building where Christ 'has been named' (Rom 15:20), and certain sins should 'not even be named' among believers (Eph 5:3; 1 Cor 5:11). The verb also appears in exorcism formulas — itinerant Jews 'naming' the name of Jesus (Acts 19:13). Spanish 'nombrar,' French 'nommer,' and Korean 'ireum jitda' all preserve the dual active-passive range.

name, call by name (10×) To give a name to someone or something, or to be called and known by a name or title. Active naming occurs when Jesus designates the apostles (Luke 6:13-14, Mark 3:14); passive being-named describes reputations and titles surpassing the present age (Eph 1:21, every name that is named; Eph 3:15, every family named from the Father). Also covers invoking a name in exorcism (Acts 19:13), confessing a name in allegiance (2 Tim 2:19), and avoiding even the mention of shameful deeds (Eph 5:3). The verb encompasses designation, identification, invocation, and public acknowledgment under one semantic umbrella. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: being-called, being-named, he-named | es: es-nombrada, fue-nombrado, llamó] | fr: nommer | de: nennen, ὀνομάζειν, ὠνόμασεν Mark 3:14; Luke 6:13; Luke 6:14; Acts 19:13; Rom 15:20

ὄνος G3688 N-AFS (5×)

Donkey, ass; a common beast of burden in the ancient Near East, featured in Jesus' triumphal entry.

The common donkey or ass, one of the most important working animals of the biblical world. Three of its five NT occurrences relate to Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem, fulfilling Zechariah 9:9: 'mounted on a donkey' (Matt 21:2, 5, 7). John 12:15 echoes the same prophecy. Luke 13:15 uses it in a Sabbath dispute — even a donkey is untied and led to water on the Sabbath. The Spanish distinction between 'asno' (male) and 'asna' (female) reflects the Matthew narrative's mention of both a donkey and her colt.

(5×) A donkey or ass — a domesticated beast of burden ubiquitous in the ancient Near East. The NT uses cluster around two contexts: the triumphal entry (Matt 21:2, 5, 7; John 12:15), where Jesus rides into Jerusalem on a donkey fulfilling Zechariah 9:9's messianic prophecy of a humble king, and a Sabbath-controversy illustration (Luke 13:15), where untying one's donkey for water on the Sabbath is common sense. The Spanish glosses 'asno/asna' (male/female donkey) reflect Matthew's distinctive mention of both the mother donkey and her colt. French 'âne' and German 'Esel' are straightforward equivalents. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: a-donkey, donkey, of-a-donkey | es: asna, asno, de-asna | fr: âne | de: Esel, ὄνον Matt 21:2; Matt 21:5; Matt 21:7; Luke 13:15; John 12:15

ὄντως G3689 Adv (10×)

Truly, really — an adverb affirming genuine reality, 'in truth,' 'indeed'

The adverb ontos (ὄντως), derived from the present participle of eimi ('to be'), asserts that something is genuinely the case rather than merely apparent. The people held that John 'really was' a prophet (Mark 11:32). The centurion at the cross declared, 'Certainly this man was righteous' (Luke 23:47). The disciples confirmed, 'The Lord has truly risen' (Luke 24:34). Paul distinguishes 'truly' widows from those with family support (1 Tim 5:3,5,16) and urges Timothy to lay hold of 'that which is truly life' (1 Tim 6:19). Translations converge on emphatic affirmation: Spanish 'verdaderamente,' German 'wirklich,' French 'vraiment/reellement,' Hindi 'sachmuch/vaastav men,' Korean 'chamuro/jinsillo,' Swahili 'kweli,' Arabic 'haqqan.'

truly (10×) An adverb meaning 'truly,' 'really,' 'in actual fact,' used to affirm the genuine reality of a claim or status. Confirms prophetic identity (Mark 11:32, John was truly a prophet), declares Christological truth (Luke 23:47, this was truly a righteous man; Luke 24:34, the Lord has truly risen), and distinguishes authentic status from appearance (1 Tim 5:3,5,16, truly widows; 1 Tim 6:19, truly life). Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'verdaderamente,' German 'wirklich,' Korean 'chamuro,' Arabic 'haqqan' — uniformly renders a single emphatic-veridical sense. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: Certainly, Really, really | es: Verdaderamente, realmente, verdaderamente | fr: réellement, vraiment | de: wirklich, ὄντως, Ὄντως Mark 11:32; Luke 23:47; Luke 24:34; John 8:36; 1Cor 14:25

ὄξος G3690 N-ANS (6×)

Sour wine, vinegar; a cheap acidic wine drink commonly used by Roman soldiers

A sharp, acidic wine—not distilled vinegar but the cheap 'vin ordinaire' (posca) that Roman soldiers carried as a daily beverage. All six NT uses occur in the Passion narratives, where it is offered to Jesus on the cross. The gesture's meaning is debated: in some accounts it appears mocking (Luke 23:36), while in John 19:29 it may be an act of rough mercy to moisten dying lips. The detail is attested in all four Gospels, making it one of the most widely corroborated elements of the crucifixion. German 'Essig' and French 'vinaigre' both derive from words for acidic wine.

sour wine, vinegar (6×) A cheap, sour wine (Latin posca) offered to Jesus during the crucifixion, attested across all four Gospel accounts. Roman soldiers routinely drank this acidic beverage, and its offer to the dying Jesus carries ambiguous overtones—sometimes mockery (Luke 23:36), sometimes a minimal act of relief (John 19:29-30, where Jesus receives it and says 'It is finished'). The soaking of a sponge and lifting it on a reed or hyssop branch is a consistent detail (Matt 27:48; Mark 15:36). English 'vinegar,' Spanish 'vinagre,' French 'vinaigre,' and German 'Essig' all render the term uniformly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-vinegar, vinegar, with-sour-wine | es: de-vinagre, vinagre | fr: vinaigre | de: Essig, ὄξος, ὄξους Matt 27:48; Mark 15:36; Luke 23:36; John 19:29

ὀξύς G3691 Adj-NMP (8×)

Sharp, keen-edged; swift, quick — of a blade's cutting edge or of feet that move rapidly

The adjective ὀξύς appears eight times in the New Testament, almost entirely in Revelation's visions of sharp sickles and double-edged swords. In seven of these, it describes the keen cutting edge of a weapon or harvesting tool — the sharp two-edged sword proceeding from Christ's mouth (Rev 1:16, 2:12) and the sharp sickle of eschatological harvest (Rev 14:14, 17, 18). A single occurrence in Rom 3:15, quoting Isaiah 59:7, pivots to a different sense entirely: 'swift are their feet to shed blood,' where ὀξύς describes rapid movement rather than a blade's edge.

1. (7×) Sharp, keen-edged — describing a blade, sword, or cutting instrument with a fine, penetrating edge. Seven occurrences carry this meaning, all in Revelation: the 'sharp two-edged sword' from Christ's mouth (Rev 1:16, 2:12), the 'sharp sickle' held by the one like a Son of Man and by the harvesting angels (Rev 14:14, 17, 18), and the sharp sickle commanded for use in Rev 14:18 and 19:15. Spanish consistently renders it 'afilada/aguda' (sharpened/keen), German 'scharf,' and French 'scharf' — all vocabulary of cutting edges. The imagery draws on OT harvest and judgment metaphors (Joel 3:13), with the sharpness emphasizing the decisive, unstoppable character of divine judgment. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: sharp | es: afilada, aguda, aguda, | fr: scharf | de: scharf Rev 1:16; Rev 2:12; Rev 14:14; Rev 14:17; Rev 14:18

2. (1×) Swift, quick, rapid — describing speed of movement rather than the edge of a blade. The sole NT occurrence is Rom 3:15, where Paul quotes Isa 59:7 in his catena of OT testimonies to universal sinfulness: 'swift are their feet to shed blood.' Spanish shifts from 'afilada' (sharp) to 'veloces' (swift/speedy), and French from 'scharf' to 'vif' (quick/lively), clearly marking the semantic boundary. This sense is well attested in classical Greek, where ὀξύς could describe anything quick or acute — sharp hearing, swift motion, keen perception — though in the NT only the physical speed meaning survives. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: swift | es: veloces | fr: vif | de: scharf Rom 3:15

ὀπή G3692 N-GFS (2×)

hole, opening, or cave in rock or earth

This noun refers to natural openings or holes—whether in rock, earth, or doors. Greek literature uses it widely: mouse holes, roof openings for chimneys, architectural beam-holes, even body orifices. In Scripture it appears in Hebrews 11:38, describing the caves and holes where persecuted faithful hid, and in James 3:11, where a spring's opening serves as a metaphor for the mouth. The word captures the idea of an aperture or cavity through which something passes or is concealed.

(2×) Both biblical uses involve natural openings. Hebrews 11:38 speaks of believers wandering 'in holes and caves of the earth'—the translations consistently render the plural as 'holes,' 'opening,' 'caverns' (Spanish 'abertura, cavernas'), emphasizing places of refuge. James 3:11 asks rhetorically whether a spring sends fresh and bitter water from the same 'opening'—the multilingual evidence aligns on the idea of an orifice or aperture. The semantic range spans from refuge-holes in rock to the mouth of a spring. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: holes, opening | es: abertura, cavernas | fr: cavernes | de: Hoehlen Heb 11:38; Jas 3:11

ὄπισθεν G3693 Prep (7×)

Behind, from behind, at the back; a spatial adverb/preposition indicating position or approach from the rear.

Opisthen indicates position or motion from behind, and nearly every NT occurrence involves someone approaching Jesus from the rear. The hemorrhaging woman touches the fringe of his garment 'from behind' in all three Synoptic accounts (Matt 9:20, Mark 5:27, Luke 8:44), a detail suggesting her reluctance and ritual shame. In Matt 15:23 the Canaanite woman cries out 'behind' Jesus and the disciples. In Luke 23:26 Simon of Cyrene carries the cross 'behind' Jesus. Spanish 'detras/por detras' and German 'hinten' consistently render this spatial meaning.

behind (7×) At or from the back, behind a person or object, describing spatial position or the direction of approach. The word has a narrative vividness in the Gospels: the woman with a hemorrhage approaches Jesus 'from behind' (Matt 9:20, Mark 5:27, Luke 8:44), her approach from the rear conveying social stigma and desperate faith simultaneously. In Revelation 4:6 the living creatures are described as 'full of eyes in front and behind' (opisthen), indicating comprehensive perception. Spanish 'detras' and French 'derriere' map directly to this spatial sense of being positioned at the rear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: behind, from-behind, on-the-back | es: detrás, detrás-de, por-detrás | fr: derrière | de: hinten, ὄπισθεν Matt 9:20; Matt 15:23; Mark 5:27; Luke 8:44; Luke 23:26

ὀπίσω G3694 Adv (35×)

after, behind, back — spatial or temporal adverb for following, being behind, or turning backward

Opiso is an adverb and improper preposition meaning 'behind,' 'after,' or 'back,' appearing 35 times in the New Testament. Its most theologically charged use is in the discipleship formula: 'come after me' (deute opiso mou, Matt 4:19; Mark 1:17; Luke 9:23), where physical following becomes a metaphor for radical commitment. The same construction carries negative weight when Jesus rebukes Peter — 'get behind me, Satan' (hypage opiso mou, Matt 16:23; Mark 8:33). The warning against looking back (eis ta opiso) echoes Lot's wife: 'no one who puts his hand to the plow and looks back is fit for the kingdom' (Luke 9:62; cf. 17:31). John the Baptist's humility formula — 'the one coming after me' (ho opiso mou erchomenos) — uses the temporal-sequential sense (Matt 3:11; John 1:15, 27, 30).

after, behind, back (35×) An adverb and preposition expressing spatial position behind, temporal sequence after, or directional movement backward. Three dominant New Testament patterns emerge: the discipleship call deute opiso mou ('come after me,' Matt 4:19; 16:24; Mark 8:34), establishing following as the essence of discipleship; the Baptist's subordination formula ho opiso mou erchomenos ('the one coming after me,' Matt 3:11; John 1:15, 27), marking temporal and hierarchical sequence; and the 'looking back' warning eis ta opiso (Luke 9:62; 17:31; John 6:66), evoking apostasy or regression. Spanish 'detras de' and French 'derriere' capture the spatial core, while German 'hinter/nach' reflects the spatial-temporal duality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: after, after-, behind | es: después-de, detrás, detrás-de | fr: derrière | de: hinter Matt 3:11; Matt 4:19; Matt 10:38; Matt 16:23; Matt 16:24

ὁπλ-ίζω G3695 V-AMM-2P (1×)

To arm or equip oneself, particularly with weapons or armor; to prepare for battle or conflict

This verb means to arm or equip oneself, particularly with weapons or armor for battle. In 1 Peter 4:1, it's used metaphorically: 'Since therefore Christ suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves with the same way of thinking.' Peter transforms military imagery into spiritual exhortation—just as soldiers equip themselves with weapons, believers should equip themselves with Christ's mindset toward suffering. The metaphor implies deliberate preparation and readiness for hardship, not passive resignation but active mental and spiritual armament.

(1×) To arm or equip oneself, particularly with weapons for warfare, here used metaphorically for mental/spiritual preparation. 1 Peter 4:1 commands believers to 'arm yourselves with the same way of thinking' as Christ had toward suffering. The military metaphor transforms into spiritual counsel: deliberately equip your mind as a soldier arms for battle, preparing mentally and spiritually to endure suffering as Christ did. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: arm-yourselves | es: armaos | fr: ὁπλίσασθε | de: sich-waffnen 1Pet 4:1

ὅπλον G3696 N-ANP (6×)

Weapon, instrument, tool; implements of war or moral/spiritual equipment

A versatile noun whose classical range spans ship's tackle, smith's tools, and military arms. In the NT it appears in both literal and figurative senses. John 18:3 describes the arresting party coming with 'weapons,' but Paul transforms the word into a metaphor for the Christian's moral and spiritual equipment: believers must not yield their members as 'instruments of unrighteousness' but as 'instruments of righteousness' (Rom 6:13), put on 'the armor of light' (Rom 13:12), and wield 'the weapons of righteousness' (2 Cor 6:7). The Spanish split between 'armas' and 'instrumentos' neatly mirrors the military-versus-tool duality.

(6×) Weapons, arms, or instruments—either literal military equipment or figurative moral and spiritual tools. In its one literal NT use, the arresting party carries 'weapons' to Gethsemane (John 18:3). Paul then develops the metaphorical register extensively: believers must not present their bodily members as 'instruments of sin' but as 'instruments of righteousness' to God (Rom 6:13), they are to put on 'the armor of light' for eschatological readiness (Rom 13:12), and apostolic ministry is conducted 'with the weapons of righteousness on the right hand and on the left' (2 Cor 6:7). Spanish distinguishes 'armas' (weapons) from 'instrumentos' (tools), capturing both dimensions. WEAPONS ARMS

en: armor, weapons | es: armas, instrumentos | fr: arme | de: Waffen John 18:3; Rom 6:13; Rom 13:12; 2Cor 6:7

ὁποῖος G3697 Adj-NNS (5×)

Of what sort, of what kind; a qualitative relative pronoun indicating the nature or character of something.

A qualitative relative pronoun meaning 'of what sort' or 'of what kind,' used to characterize the nature or quality of something rather than its identity. In Acts 26:29, Paul wishes his hearers would become 'such as I am' (ὁποῖος) — the word focuses on the quality of his faith, not mere resemblance. In 1 Cor 3:13, fire reveals 'of what sort' each person's work is. Galatians 2:6 uses it dismissively about the Jerusalem leaders' former status. The English 'what kind' and Spanish 'cuál/cómo' both capture its interrogative-qualitative force.

(5×) Of what sort or quality — a correlative-relative adjective that directs attention to the character or nature of a person or thing.

In 1 Cor 3:13, the eschatological fire reveals ὁποῖον each builder's work truly is — not whether it exists, but what kind it is. Paul uses it in Gal 2:6 to dismiss the outward status of the 'pillar' apostles ('whatever they formerly were'). First Thessalonians 1:9 recalls 'what sort of reception' Paul had, and Jas 1:24 describes a man who forgets 'what sort of person' he was. The French 'quel' and Spanish 'cuál' preserve the qualitative interrogative force, while German translations sometimes simply transliterate the Greek form. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: as, of-what-kind, what-kind | es: como, cuál, cómo | fr: quel, qui, ὁποίαν | de: ὁποίαν, ὁποῖοί, ὁποῖος Acts 26:29; 1Cor 3:13; Gal 2:6; 1Thess 1:9; Jas 1:24

ὁπότε G3698

when, whenever (temporal relative adverb, less definite than ὅτε); with indicative, subjunctive

The temporal adverb ὁπότε (Epic ὁππότε, Ionic ὁκότε) functions much like ὅτε but with less definiteness. With the indicative, it refers to past occasions: 'when she was alive.' With the subjunctive, like ὁπόταν, it indicates indefinite or repeated occasions in present or future time. In similes, it can take the present: 'as when a river rushes down to the plain.' The dialectal variations (ὁππόκα in Doric) show the word's widespread use across Greek literary traditions.

ὅπου G3699 Adv (84×)

Where, wherever — relative adverb of place indicating location or destination

The Greek ὅπου is a relative adverb of place meaning 'where' or 'wherever,' used to specify a location in relation to an antecedent or to introduce a general spatial condition. In the Gospels it frequently appears in Jesus' teaching — treasure and heart (Matt 6:21), the gathering of eagles (Matt 24:28), and 'where I am, you may be also' (John 14:3). It can take ἄν or ἐάν to form the indefinite 'wherever' (Mark 6:56; 14:9). Spanish donde, French où, and German wo all render it straightforwardly as the basic relative locative adverb. Its 84 occurrences span narrative, discourse, and prophetic contexts.

where (84×) A relative adverb of place meaning 'where' or 'wherever,' locating an action or state with reference to a previously mentioned or implied place. Frequent in Jesus' teaching for drawing spatial-theological connections: where your treasure is (Matt 6:19–21), where the body is (Matt 24:28), where I am (John 14:3). With ἄν or ἐάν it forms the generalizing 'wherever' (Mark 6:56; 14:9). Translations across languages converge on a single locative sense: Spanish donde, French où, German wo. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where, wherever | es: donde | fr: où | de: wo Matt 6:19; Matt 6:20; Matt 6:21

ὀπτάζομαι G3700 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

To be seen or appear; to become visible or manifest, often in a supernatural or revelatory sense

This passive verb means to be seen, to appear, or to become visible—often with implications of divine revelation or manifestation. In Acts 1:3, it describes Jesus' post-resurrection appearances: 'He presented himself alive to them after his suffering by many proofs, appearing to them during forty days.' The word emphasizes visibility and tangibility—Jesus was seen, proving his bodily resurrection. The passive voice can suggest divine initiative: he allowed himself to be seen, revealing his risen state.

(1×) To appear or be seen, particularly in revelatory or supernatural manifestation. Acts 1:3 describes Jesus 'appearing to them over forty days' after resurrection. The term emphasizes visible, tangible appearances—not visions or inner experiences but objective encounters where the risen Christ presented himself. The passive construction can imply divine revelation: Jesus allowed himself to be seen, manifesting his victory over death. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: appearing | es: apareciéndose | fr: vision | de: erscheint Acts 1:3

ὀπτᾰσία G3701 N-DFS (4×)

A vision; a supernatural appearance or revelatory sight from God

Refers to a divine visual revelation — something seen that carries a message from God. When Zechariah lingers in the temple and emerges unable to speak, the people realize he has seen a vision (Luke 1:22). The women at the empty tomb report a 'vision of angels' who declared Jesus alive (Luke 24:23). Paul recounts before Agrippa that he was 'not disobedient to the heavenly vision' on the Damascus road (Acts 26:19), and in 2 Corinthians 12:1 he mentions 'visions and revelations of the Lord.' Spanish visión/visiones, French vision, and the consistent cross-linguistic agreement confirm a single, well-defined sense of supernatural sight.

(4×) A supernatural vision or divine appearance in which God communicates through what is seen. Zechariah's speechlessness confirms to the waiting crowd that he has received a vision in the temple (Luke 1:22). The women at the tomb report a vision of angels announcing the resurrection (Luke 24:23). Paul describes his Damascus road encounter as a 'heavenly vision' to which he could not be disobedient (Acts 26:19), and in 2 Cor 12:1 he pairs visions with revelations as categories of divine disclosure. Spanish visión and French vision uniformly confirm this as a technical term for God-given supernatural sight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-vision, vision, visions | es: visiones, visión | fr: vision | de: ὀπτασίαν, ὀπτασίας, ὀπτασίᾳ Luke 1:22; Luke 24:23; Acts 26:19; 2Cor 12:1

ὀπτός G3702 Adj-GMS (1×)

Roasted, broiled, or cooked over fire; food prepared by direct heat rather than boiling

This adjective describes food that is roasted or broiled over fire, as opposed to boiled or baked. In Luke 24:42, the disciples give the risen Jesus food: 'They gave him a piece of broiled fish.' The detail emphasizes the physical, material nature of the resurrection —Jesus eats real food prepared in a normal way. Broiled fish was common fare, and Jesus' consumption proves he's not a ghost or vision but has a tangible, physical body. The ordinary detail anchors the extraordinary miracle in material reality.

(1×) Roasted or broiled, describing food cooked over direct heat. Luke 24:42 notes that the risen Jesus was given 'a piece of broiled fish,' which he ate in the disciples' presence. This mundane culinary detail serves profound theological purpose: Jesus' eating of ordinary, prepared food proves the physicality of his resurrection body. He's not a phantom but embodied, capable of normal human activity. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: broiled | es: asado | fr: grillé | de: ὀπτοῦ Luke 24:42

ὀπώρ-α G3703 N-NFS (1×)

Late summer fruit or harvest; ripe fruit, particularly the season when fruit ripens and is gathered

This noun can refer to late summer, the fruit-harvest season, or the ripe fruit itself—particularly the period between summer and autumn. In Revelation 18:14, it appears in a lament over Babylon's fall: 'The fruit for which your soul longed has gone from you.' The term likely means choice or ripe fruit, symbolizing luxury and indulgence. The image is of desired, abundant produce suddenly vanished—material prosperity stripped away in judgment. The word's seasonal associations (harvest abundance) heighten the tragedy of sudden loss.

(1×) Ripe fruit or the harvest season's produce, symbolizing abundance and luxury. Revelation 18:14 laments Babylon's loss: 'The ripe fruit your soul craved has gone from you.' In context, this represents material wealth and sensual indulgence—choice produce symbolizing economic prosperity. The image of longed-for fruit suddenly vanished captures the totality of judgment: what was most desired is irrevocably lost. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fruit | es: fruta | fr: fruits | de: Fruechte Rev 18:14

ὅπως G3704 Adv (53×)

A conjunction expressing purpose ('so that, in order that') or manner ('how, in what way').

Used overwhelmingly in the New Testament as a purpose conjunction meaning 'so that' or 'in order that,' introducing the goal or intended result of an action. In a handful of passages it retains its older interrogative force, meaning 'how' or 'in what way,' as when the Pharisees plot how they might entrap Jesus (Matt 22:15). The multilingual evidence strongly confirms the split: Spanish para que and German damit uniformly render the purpose sense, while Spanish como captures the interrogative.

1. so that (50×) Purpose conjunction: 'so that, in order that.' Introduces the intended result or goal of an action. Found across nearly every NT genre. Spanish para que, French afin que, and German damit all converge on purposive meaning (Matt 2:8; Matt 5:16). This is by far the dominant usage, appearing about 50 times. PURPOSE CONJUNCTION en: so-that, so-that-, that | es: de-modo-que, para-que, que | fr: afin-que | de: damit Matt 2:8; Matt 2:23; Matt 5:16; Matt 5:45; Matt 6:2

2. how (3×) Interrogative adverb of manner: 'how, in what way.' Retains the classical Greek interrogative force, asking about the means or method. Spanish como and the shift away from purposive glosses confirm this distinct sense. Occurs in deliberative contexts where opponents strategize against Jesus (Matt 22:15; Mark 3:6; Luke 24:20). COMPARISON AND MANNER en: how | es: cómo, para-que | fr: afin-que | de: damit, damit- Matt 22:15; Mark 3:6; Luke 24:20

ὅρᾱμ-α G3705 N-DNS (12×)

A vision or supernatural sight granted by God, often during prayer or trance; also a striking spectacle that arrests attention.

Horama denotes something divinely shown – a vision that breaks through the ordinary veil of perception. Nearly all its New Testament occurrences cluster in Acts, where visions drive the expansion of the early church: Ananias receives a vision to go to Saul (Acts 9:10-12), Cornelius sees an angel in a vision (Acts 10:3), and Peter's rooftop trance redefines clean and unclean (Acts 10:17). On the Mount of Transfiguration, Jesus calls the dazzling revelation of his glory a 'vision' (Matt 17:9). In one instance – Moses at the burning bush (Acts 7:31) – the word shades toward the concrete: an astonishing sight that compels closer inspection. Spanish, French, and German all render it uniformly as 'visión/vision/Erscheinung,' reflecting the consistent supernatural register.

1. (11×) A supernatural vision granted by God, typically during prayer, sleep, or a trance state, conveying divine revelation or instruction. This is the dominant New Testament usage, appearing throughout Acts as a major narrative device: Ananias sees a vision directing him to Saul (Acts 9:10), Cornelius receives angelic instruction 'in a vision' (Acts 10:3), and Paul is directed to Macedonia by a night vision (Acts 16:9-10). At the Transfiguration, Jesus instructs the disciples to 'tell the vision to no one' (Matt 17:9). All major translations converge – Spanish 'visión,' French 'vision,' German 'Erscheinung' – underscoring the consistently revelatory character of these experiences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-vision, vision | es: visión | fr: vision | de: Erscheinung Matt 17:9; Acts 9:10; Acts 9:12; Acts 10:3; Acts 10:17

2. (1×) A remarkable sight or spectacle that captures attention, with emphasis on what is visually perceived rather than on a revelatory message. In Acts 7:31, Moses 'marveled at the sight' of the burning bush that was not consumed. While still supernatural in origin, the focus here falls on the astonishing visual phenomenon itself rather than on verbal communication or instruction. English distinguishes this nuance with 'sight' rather than 'vision,' though Spanish, French, and German maintain the same term ('visión/vision/Erscheinung'), suggesting the boundary between vision-as-revelation and vision-as-spectacle is more fluid than English implies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sight | es: visión | fr: vision | de: Erscheinung Acts 7:31

ὅρ-ᾱσις G3706 N-AFP (4×)

Vision, appearance; the act of seeing or a supernatural sight; also outward look or semblance.

In the New Testament this noun spans the concrete act of seeing and the extraordinary experience of a divinely-given vision. Peter's Pentecost sermon quotes Joel's promise that 'your young men shall see visions' (Acts 2:17), while in Revelation it describes outward appearance—'like jasper in appearance' (Rev 4:3). The multilingual evidence highlights the split: English and Spanish render the Acts passage as 'visions' but shift to 'in appearance' for the Revelation texts, and French similarly alternates between 'vision' and 'vue.' The word thus bridges ordinary sight and revelatory encounter.

(4×) Vision or supernatural sight — a divinely granted visual experience. In Acts 2:17 Peter quotes Joel's prophecy that young men will see 'visions' (ὁράσεις), pointing to an eschatological outpouring of prophetic seeing. Spanish 'visiones' and French 'Vision' both preserve this revelatory nuance. The plural form emphasizes repeated or communal prophetic experience in the messianic age. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-appearance, vision, visions | es: en-aspecto, visiones, visión | fr: Vision, vue | de: Vision, ὁράσεις Acts 2:17; Rev 4:3; Rev 9:17

ὁρ-ᾱτός G3707 Adj-NNP (1×)

Visible, able to be seen; perceptible to the eyes rather than merely intellectual or spiritual

This adjective means visible or able to be seen, as opposed to invisible or merely conceptual. In Colossians 1:16, Paul describes Christ's creative work: 'For by him all things were created, in heaven and on earth, visible and invisible.' The word marks the distinction between physical, material creation (visible things) and spiritual, immaterial reality (thrones, dominions, principalities). Christ's sovereignty encompasses both realms—matter and spirit, seen and unseen. The term emphasizes empirical, sense-perceptible reality in contrast to spiritual or intellectual realities.

(1×) Visible or perceptible to sight, describing material creation that can be seen. Colossians 1:16 uses this to categorize creation: Christ made 'things visible and invisible'—the physical world we see and spiritual realities beyond sight (angelic powers, spiritual authorities). The distinction affirms Christ's universal sovereignty: his creative authority spans both material and immaterial realms, all things seen and unseen. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: visible | es: visibles | fr: ὁρατὰ | de: sichtbar Col 1:16

ὁράω G3708 I (683×)

To see, perceive visually; as interjection 'behold!'; in passive, to appear or become visible; by extension, to perceive mentally.

Horao is the foundational Greek verb of sight, and in the New Testament it carries far more weight than simple visual perception. Its aorist participle idon ('having seen') drives narrative after narrative — the magi 'saw' the star (Matt 2:10), Jesus 'saw' the crowds (Matt 5:1), and Thomas finally 'saw' the risen Lord (John 20:29). But perhaps its most distinctive New Testament contribution is the exclamatory form idou ('behold!'), which appears over 250 times as a dramatic spotlight, calling the reader's attention to angelic announcements, prophetic visions, and divine interventions. The passive ōphthe ('he appeared') becomes the standard vocabulary for resurrection and theophany — Christ 'appeared' to Peter, to the twelve, to five hundred (1 Cor 15:5-8). The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish splits between ver ('see'), he aqui ('behold'), and aparecer ('appear'), while Korean distinguishes 보다 (visual seeing), 보라 (exclamatory), and 나타나다 (appearing), confirming these as genuinely distinct senses rather than contextual shadings.

1. see, perceive visually (419×) To see with the eyes, the basic act of visual perception — 419 occurrences spanning every narrative context in the New Testament. The magi 'saw' the star and rejoiced (Matt 2:10), Jesus 'saw' the crowds and went up the mountain (Matt 5:1), the disciples 'saw' Jesus walking on the sea (Matt 14:26). The aorist participle idon ('having seen') is especially common as a narrative transition device, often translated 'when he saw.' Spanish ver, German sehen, French voir, Korean 보다, and Arabic ra'a all converge on straightforward visual perception. This sense includes both physical sight and the emphatic 'seeing' of witnesses — as in 'we have seen his glory' (John 1:14) — where the visual act carries evidentiary weight. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: Having-seen, having-seen | es: Habiendo-visto, habiendo-visto, viendo | fr: voir | de: siehe Matt 2:10; Matt 2:16; Matt 3:7; Matt 5:1; Matt 8:18

2. behold, look (exclamatory) (256×) The exclamatory interjection idou, meaning 'behold!' or 'look!' — 256 occurrences making this one of the New Testament's most frequent discourse markers. Derived from the aorist imperative of horao, it functions not as a true command to look but as a rhetorical spotlight: 'Behold, a virgin shall conceive' (Matt 1:23), 'behold, the star went before them' (Matt 2:9), 'behold, I am with you always' (Matt 28:20). Spanish he aqui, German siehe, Korean 보라/보아라, and Arabic ha/huwadha all use dedicated exclamatory particles rather than ordinary 'see' verbs, confirming that idou has grammaticalized into a discourse function distinct from visual perception. Matthew and Luke-Acts use it most heavily, often to introduce angelic speech or divine revelation. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: Behold, behold | es: He-aquí, he-aquí, he–aquí | fr: voir | de: siehe Matt 1:20; Matt 1:23; Matt 2:1; Matt 2:9; Matt 2:13

3. appear, become visible (4×) The passive sense: to appear, become visible, be seen — 4 occurrences of particular theological density. Moses and Elijah 'appeared' at the Transfiguration (Luke 9:31), tongues of fire 'appeared' at Pentecost (Acts 2:3), and the angel who 'appeared' to Moses in the bush reappears in Stephen's speech (Acts 7:35). This is the vocabulary of theophany and divine manifestation, and the passive voice signals that the appearing is initiated by the one who appears, not by the viewer. Spanish aparecido, Korean 나타나다, and Arabic zahara all select dedicated 'manifest/appear' vocabulary, clearly distinct from active seeing. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: appeared, having-appeared | es: aparecido, apareciendo, fueron-vistas | fr: voir | de: siehe Luke 9:31; Acts 2:3; Acts 7:35; Acts 9:17

4. perceive, understand (3×) To perceive mentally, to understand or grasp with the mind rather than the eyes — 3 occurrences, all in the solemn Isaiah 6:9-10 citation chain. 'Seeing you will see and not perceive' (Matt 13:14; Mark 4:12; Acts 28:26) uses horao in deliberate contrast with physical sight to denote spiritual comprehension. Spanish percibir, German wahrnehmen, and Korean 깨닫다 ('realize, comprehend') all shift from visual to cognitive vocabulary. This judicial-hardening context — seeing without understanding — makes the cognitive sense theologically charged: the failure to 'see' is a failure of spiritual perception, not of eyesight. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: perceive, will-you-perceive | es: perciban, percibiréis | fr: voir | de: sehen, siehe Matt 13:14; Mark 4:12; Acts 28:26

5. (1×) A single occurrence at John 19:37 citing Zechariah 12:10: 'They will look on him whom they have pierced.' The verb opsontai ('they will look') carries the weight of prophetic gazing — not casual seeing but intense, penitential looking at the crucified Messiah. Spanish mirar ('to gaze, look intently') and German sehen-auf ('look upon') both select more focused, directional vocabulary than simple 'see.' This may represent a distinct 'gaze upon' or 'fix one's eyes on' sense, where the looking carries emotional and spiritual gravity beyond either basic perception or the exclamatory idou. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: they-will-look | es: Mirarán | fr: voir | de: sehen John 19:37

ὀργή G3709 N-DFS (36×)

Wrath, anger, or fierce indignation; both divine judgment-fury and human passionate anger

In classical Greek, this noun could denote temperament or disposition broadly, but in the New Testament its semantic range narrows to intense anger and wrath. It describes both the settled, righteous fury of God against sin—'the wrath to come' (Matt 3:7; Luke 3:7)—and the passionate anger of human beings (Mark 3:5, where Jesus looks around 'with anger'). Paul develops the theological dimension extensively: God's wrath is revealed against all ungodliness (Rom 1:18), and believers are saved from wrath through Christ (Rom 5:9). Every major translation language renders it with a single strong term: Spanish 'ira,' French 'colere,' German 'Zorn'—all pointing to an emotion of fierce displeasure rather than mere annoyance.

1. divine wrath (settled judicial fury) (30×) Split from sense 73322. Criteria: God's righteous anger against sin, eschatological judgment; 'the coming wrath,' 'saved from the wrath,' 'the day of their wrath'; typically articular (ἡ ὀργή) in NT theology

en: wrath | es: ira | fr: colère | de: Zorn Matt 3:7; Luke 3:7; Luke 21:23; John 3:36; Rom 1:18

2. human anger (passionate emotional response) (6×) Split from sense 73322. Criteria: Human emotional anger or indignation; Jesus' anger in Mark 3:5, human responses; the emotion rather than the judicial sentence en: anger, wrath | es: ira | fr: colère | de: Zorn Mark 3:5; Eph 4:31; Col 3:8; 1Tim 2:8; Jas 1:19

ὀργ-ίζω G3710 V-APP-NMS (8×)

To become angry, be enraged, or be provoked to wrath; used in the NT exclusively in the passive voice for the onset or state of anger.

Orgizo (from orge, wrath) means to provoke to anger in the active, but all eight NT occurrences appear in the passive: someone becomes angry or is made wroth. The range extends from Jesus' own strong emotion (the variant reading in Mark 1:41), through the fury of a slighted king (Matt 22:7) and an insulted host (Luke 14:21), to Paul's measured counsel in Ephesians 4:26 that borrows from Psalm 4: 'Be angry, yet do not sin.' Spanish 'enojarse' and German 'zornig werden' both capture the reflexive, experiential quality of this passive anger.

become angry, be enraged (8×) To become angry or be moved to wrath, expressing the passive experience of anger rather than its active instigation. In Jesus' parables, it describes a king's fury at those who rejected his invitation (Matt 22:7) and a master's indignation at ungrateful guests (Luke 14:21). The prodigal son's elder brother 'became angry' and refused to enter (Luke 15:28). In ethical instruction, Eph 4:26 permits the emotion ('be angry') but constrains its duration, while Matt 5:22 warns that anger with a brother carries judgment. Spanish 'enojarse' and French 'se mettre en colere' preserve the reflexive, experiential dimension. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: Was-angry, be-angry, becoming-angry | es: Enojaos, airándose, enojándose | fr: se-mettre-en-colère | de: zornig-werden, ὀργιζόμενος, ὀργισθεὶς Matt 5:22; Matt 18:34; Matt 22:7; Luke 14:21; Luke 15:28

ὀργ-ίλος G3711 Adj-AMS (1×)

Quick-tempered, prone to anger, or irascible; inclined to outbursts of wrath or easily angered

This adjective describes someone who is quick-tempered or irascible—prone to anger and given to outbursts. In Titus 1:7, Paul lists disqualifications for elders: 'For an overseer, as God's steward, must be above reproach. He must not be arrogant or quick-tempered.' The term indicates not occasional anger but a temperamental tendency—someone whose anger flares easily and frequently. Such volatility disqualifies one from shepherding God's people, who need patient, measured leadership, not explosive reactions.

(1×) Prone to anger or quick-tempered, describing someone whose temper flares easily. Titus 1:7 excludes the 'quick-tempered' from church leadership. Paul requires overseers to be self-controlled, not given to anger outbursts. The term denotes a character flaw—not righteous indignation but irascible temperament that erupts impulsively. Such volatility undermines pastoral ministry, which demands patience, gentleness, and steady emotional regulation. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: quick-tempered | es: iracundo | fr: ὀργίλον | de: jaehzornig Titus 1:7

ὄργυιᾰ G3712 N-AFP (2×)

a unit of length equal to the span of outstretched arms, approximately six feet or one fathom

Originally denoting the length of a person's outstretched arms (about six feet), this became a standard nautical measure equivalent to one fathom. Classical sources define it precisely: one hundred orguiai equal one stade when measured at six feet per orguia. In Acts 27:28, sailors on Paul's storm-tossed ship take soundings and find 'twenty fathoms' then 'fifteen fathoms,' indicating they're approaching land. The term belongs to the world of ancient seafaring and measurement.

(2×) Acts 27:28 uses the accusative plural twice as the crew measures water depth during the storm. All translations render it as a unit of maritime measurement: English 'fathoms,' Spanish 'brazas' (literally 'arms,' preserving the etymological connection), French 'taille,' German retains the Greek form. The word evokes the practical navigational concerns of ancient Mediterranean sailors gauging distance from shore by measuring the depth beneath their hull. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: fathoms | es: brazas | fr: taille | de: ὀργυιὰς Acts 27:28

ὀρέγω G3713 V-PIM-3S (3×)

desire, reach out for, aspire to, long for (3×) To reach out for, desire, or aspire to—to extend oneself toward a goal, whether noble or base. 1 Timothy 3:1 commends aspiring (ὀρέγω) to church leadership. 1 Timothy 6:10 warns that reaching for wealth leads astray. Hebrews 11:16 speaks of the faithful desiring a heavenly homeland. The Greek verb literally means 'stretch out, reach toward,' and metaphorically covers longing and ambition. Spanish 'desear/anhelan' (desire/long for) and German 'trachten' (strive for) capture the active reaching-toward quality, whether the goal is worthy or destructive. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: desires, reaching-for, they-desire | es: anhelan, desea, deseando | fr: trachten | de: trachten 1Tim 3:1; 1Tim 6:10; Heb 11:16

ὀρεινός G3714 Adj-DFS (2×)

mountainous, hilly; pertaining to or characteristic of hill-country

This adjective describes terrain characterized by hills or mountains. Classical Greek uses it to distinguish upland regions from plains (pedinos) or flat country. In both New Testament occurrences, it appears in Luke's infancy narrative: Mary travels 'into the hill country' of Judea to visit Elizabeth (1:39), and after John's birth, fear spreads throughout 'all the hill country' of Judea (1:65). The word captures the geographic character of the Judean highlands where these events unfold.

(2×) Luke uses the dative feminine form to describe the Judean uplands. The translations consistently render the sense of elevated terrain: English 'hill-country,' Spanish 'montañosa' (mountainous), French 'montagneux,' German preserves the Greek adjective. The geographic reference points to the central Judean ridge, distinct from the coastal plains or Jordan valley—the rugged, elevated region where villages like Ain Karim (traditional site of Elizabeth's home) nestle among the hills. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hill-country | es: montañosa | fr: montagneux | de: ὀρεινὴν, ὀρεινῇ Luke 1:39; Luke 1:65

ὄρεξις G3715 N-DFS (1×)

Appetite, desire, or longing; an impulse or drive toward something, particularly sensual or physical craving

This noun denotes desire, appetite, or longing—a reaching out toward an object of want. It's the general Greek term for appetency or conation, encompassing various forms of desire. In Romans 1:27, it describes illicit sexual desire: 'the men, giving up natural relations with women, were consumed with desire for one another.' The word emphasizes intensity—they were 'burned with desire' or 'consumed by longing.' While the term can be neutral (desire for good things), here it describes disordered passion that violates created design.

(1×) Desire, appetite, or intense longing, particularly for physical or sensual gratification. Romans 1:27 uses this for illicit sexual desire: men 'consumed with desire for one another,' abandoning natural relations. The term denotes burning intensity—not mild preference but overwhelming craving. In context, it's disordered appetite that contradicts God's creational intent, desire misdirected from its proper object and purpose. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: desire | es: deseo | fr: désir | de: Verlangen Rom 1:27

ὀρθο-ποδέω G3716 V-PIA-3P (1×)

walk uprightly, conduct oneself according to righteous standards

This verb depicts walking in a straight line as a metaphor for moral uprightness. Paul uses it once in Galatians to challenge Peter's inconsistent behavior regarding fellowship with Gentiles. The multilingual evidence—from Spanish 'rectamente' to German 'recht wandeln'—confirms the image of straight, upright conduct. The word combines the sense of physical straightness with ethical integrity, asking whether one's actions align with gospel truth.

(1×) The single occurrence in Galatians 2:14 employs the metaphor of walking in a straight path to describe consistency with gospel truth. Paul's rhetorical question 'they do not walk uprightly' addresses the gap between belief and behavior, making this rare verb a pointed critique of moral inconsistency when social pressure tempts compromise. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: they-walk-uprightly | es: caminan-rectamente | fr: ὀρθοποδοῦσιν | de: recht-wandeln Gal 2:14

ὀρθός G3717 Adj-NMS (2×)

straight, upright, erect; metaphorically right or correct

The basic meaning is physical straightness or uprightness—standing erect, at right angles, not bent or crooked. Classical usage ranges from Homer's warriors standing upright in battle to geometric definitions of perpendicular lines. In Scripture, both occurrences involve physical straightness with spiritual implications. Acts 14:10 describes a lame man commanded to stand 'upright' on his feet—a miraculous healing. Hebrews 12:13 exhorts readers to 'make straight paths' for their feet, using athletic imagery for moral and spiritual discipline.

(2×) The physical sense of 'straight' or 'upright' dominates both uses. In Acts 14:10, Paul commands the crippled man to stand 'orthos'—the multilingual glosses emphasize verticality and rectitude: English 'straight, upright,' Spanish 'derecho, rectas,' French 'droit,' German 'gerade.' Hebrews 12:13 applies the concept metaphorically to life-paths, drawing on the athletic image of running straight. The moral quality emerges from the physical: what is straight is also right. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: straight, upright | es: derecho, rectas | fr: droit, gerade | de: gerade, ὀρθός Acts 14:10; Heb 12:13

ὀρθο-τομέω G3718 V-PPA-AMS (1×)

cut straight, handle accurately (esp. God's word of truth)

This compound verb literally means to cut in a straight line, like a mason laying stones or a farmer plowing a furrow. Paul applies it metaphorically in 2 Timothy to urge Timothy to handle Scripture with precision and integrity. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'trazando rectamente,' French maintaining the Greek—highlight the technical nature of this rare word. It evokes the image of a craftsman whose careful, straight cuts distinguish skilled work from shoddy shortcuts.

(1×) In 2 Timothy 2:15, the participial phrase 'cutting straight the word of truth' calls for careful, accurate interpretation and teaching of Scripture. The metaphor draws from trades requiring precision—whether road-building, stonecutting, or agriculture—to emphasize that God's word demands faithful handling, not distortion to suit convenience or preference. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: cutting-straight | es: trazando-rectamente | fr: ὀρθοτομοῦντα | de: recht-teilen 2Tim 2:15

ὀρθρ-ίζω G3719 V-IIA-3S (1×)

come early, rise at dawn to go somewhere

This verb describes the action of going somewhere early in the morning, arriving at dawn. Luke uses it to depict the Jerusalem crowds who came to the temple at daybreak to hear Jesus teach during his final week. The word captures the eagerness of those who rose before sunrise to secure a place near the teacher, suggesting both devotion and anticipation. The term relates to ὄρθρος (dawn) and conveys the commitment required to arrive as the first light breaks.

(1×) Luke 21:38 describes the temple crowds who 'were rising early' to hear Jesus, emphasizing their determination to hear him teach despite the early hour. This habitual action (imperfect tense) shows sustained devotion: day after day they came at dawn, unwilling to miss his words even if it meant sacrificing sleep and comfort. RISING EARLY en: were-rising-early | es: madrugaba | fr: venir-tôt | de: ὤρθριζεν Luke 21:38

ὀρθρ-ινός G3720 Adj-NFP (1×)

early, belonging to the morning or dawn

This adjective describes things belonging to the early morning hours, just after sunrise. In Luke's resurrection narrative, it modifies the women who arrived at the tomb 'early,' capturing the time when darkness gives way to first light. The multilingual evidence—from Spanish 'de madrugada' to French 'matinal'—confirms the temporal focus on dawn. The word evokes that liminal moment when night yields to day, particularly significant in a passage where literal dawn accompanies the discovery of an empty tomb.

(1×) Luke 24:22 uses this adjective to describe the women from their group who arrived at Jesus' tomb at dawn. The timing heightens the dramatic discovery: at the very break of day, when mourners typically visit graves, these women found not a corpse but an angelic announcement. The early hour underscores their devotion and sets the stage for resurrection revelation. RISING EARLY en: early | es: de-madrugada | fr: matinal | de: ὀρθριναὶ Luke 24:22

ὄρθριος G3721

at daybreak, in the morning, early; of morning (as adjective)

This adjective means 'at daybreak' or 'in the morning,' often modifying verbs of motion or arrival: 'he arrived early,' 'to be present in the morning.' As an attributive adjective, it describes morning things: morning porridge, the morning song. Comedy puns on it with ὄρθιον (upright song). The rooster's morning crow is called ὄρθριον ᾆσμα. The neuter τὸ ὄρθριον functions adverbially: 'in the morning.' The comparative ὀρθρίτερον means 'earlier.' It evokes the fresh beginning of the day.

ὄρθρος G3722 N-AMS (3×)

dawn, early morning, the time just before or at daybreak

Dawn is the early morning, the time just before or at sunrise. Women came to the tomb 'at early dawn' (Luke 24:1). Jesus appeared in the temple 'early in the morning' (John 8:2). The apostles entered the temple 'at daybreak' to teach (Acts 5:21). The term marks the earliest part of the day, when darkness yields to light. Spanish 'de madrugada/alba/amanecer' and French 'aube/matin' all designate this transitional time from night to day.

(3×) Dawn, early morning, or daybreak—the time just before or at sunrise when darkness gives way to light. Luke 24:1 places the women's arrival at the tomb at ὄρθρος (early dawn). John 8:2 has Jesus coming to the temple 'at dawn.' Acts 5:21 mentions the apostles teaching at daybreak. The Greek ὄρθρος specifically denotes the pre-sunrise or early-sunrise period. Spanish distinguishes 'de madrugada' (very early), 'alba' (dawn), and 'amanecer' (daybreak), while the Greek term covers this early-morning window. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: At-dawn, at-dawn, dawn | es: De-madrugada, alba, amanecer | fr: aube, matin | de: frueh-morgens, ὄρθρον, ὄρθρου Luke 24:1; John 8:2; Acts 5:21

ὀρθός G3723 Adv (4×)

Rightly, correctly, plainly; in a straight or proper manner.

An adverb meaning 'rightly' or 'correctly,' used in the Gospels to affirm that someone has spoken or answered well. Jesus tells the lawyer 'You have answered correctly' (Luke 10:28), and the Pharisees acknowledge that Jesus teaches 'rightly' without partiality (Luke 20:21). In Mark 7:35 it describes the healed man speaking 'plainly'—his tongue now functioning as it should. Spanish 'correctamente' and French 'correctement' mirror this evaluative sense, while English oscillates between 'rightly' and 'plainly,' revealing the word's range from moral correctness to physical straightness.

(4×) Rightly, correctly, properly — denoting that speech or action conforms to truth or proper function. In Luke 7:43 Jesus tells Simon 'You have judged rightly,' and in Luke 20:21 the spies acknowledge Jesus teaches 'rightly.' The Mark 7:35 healing scene extends this to physical speech restored to its proper, straight function. All major translations converge on the idea of correctness: Spanish 'correctamente,' French 'correctement,' affirming the evaluative force of the adverb. MANNER ADVERBS

en: Rightly, plainly, rightly | es: Correctamente, correctamente | fr: correctement | de: ὀρθῶς, Ὀρθῶς Mark 7:35; Luke 7:43; Luke 10:28; Luke 20:21

ὁρίζω G3724 V-AIA-3P (8×)

To determine, appoint, or declare; to fix boundaries, ordain events, or designate persons according to divine or human decision.

Rooted in the noun horos ('boundary'), this verb carries the spatial sense of marking out limits and the metaphorical sense of fixing, determining, or ordaining. In the New Testament it overwhelmingly describes divine sovereignty: God determined the appointed times and boundaries of nations (Acts 17:26), and Jesus goes 'as it has been determined' (Luke 22:22). It can specify the appointment of a person to a role, as when Jesus is 'appointed judge of the living and the dead' (Acts 10:42). Its most theologically debated use is Romans 1:4, where Jesus is 'declared' or 'marked out' as Son of God with power — Spanish 'declarado' and German 'bestimmen' both try to capture this public, authoritative designation.

1. to determine, fix, ordain (6×) To determine, fix, or foreordain events, times, or actions according to deliberate counsel — whether divine or human. God's predetermined plan is in view in Luke 22:22 and Acts 2:23; human decision-making appears in Acts 11:29. Spanish 'determinado/designo' and French 'déterminer' reflect the purposeful, boundary-setting force of the word across Acts 17:26 and 17:31. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: determined, having-been-determined, having-determined | es: designó, determina, determinado | fr: déterminer | de: bestimmen, ὁρίσας, ὡρισμένον Luke 22:22; Acts 2:23; Acts 11:29; Acts 17:26; Acts 17:31

2. to appoint, designate (a person) (1×) To appoint or designate a person to a particular role or function, emphasizing the authority behind the selection. In Acts 10:42, Jesus is the one 'appointed by God as judge of the living and the dead.' Spanish 'designado' and German use of the participial form highlight the official, commissioning character of this sense. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: having-been-appointed | es: designado | fr: déterminer | de: ὡρισμένος Acts 10:42

3. to declare, designate publicly (1×) To declare or publicly mark out with an authoritative designation. Romans 1:4 stands alone: Jesus was 'declared Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead.' The multilingual evidence is revealing — Spanish shifts to 'declarado' rather than 'determinado,' and German uses 'bestimmen' in its sense of 'designate,' suggesting the emphasis falls on public proclamation rather than predetermination. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: having-been-declared | es: declarado | fr: déterminer | de: bestimmen Rom 1:4

ὅριον G3725 N-DNP (12×)

horion – region, border, boundary; the territorial limits or district of a place

The neuter noun horion (usually plural horia) denotes a geographical boundary, border region, or defined territory. In classical Greek it served as the diminutive of horos ('boundary marker'), though by the Koine period it had lost any diminutive force. All twelve New Testament occurrences use it spatially to identify the region through which Jesus moves: the borders of Judea (Matt 19:1), the districts of Tyre and Sidon (Matt 15:22; Mark 7:24, 31), the region of the Gadarenes (Matt 8:34; Mark 5:17). It quietly maps the geography of Jesus' ministry, showing his movement across ethnic and territorial boundaries. Spanish regiones/limites, French frontiere, and German Gebiet all point to one undifferentiated spatial sense.

region, border, territory (12×) A defined geographical region or territorial district, typically plural, describing borders of a named place. Tracks Jesus' movements – Tyre and Sidon (Matt 15:22; Mark 7:24), Gadara (Matt 8:34), Judea (Matt 19:1). Spanish regiones, French frontiere, and German Gebiet confirm a single spatial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: borders, region, regions | es: alrededores, límites, regiones | fr: frontière | de: ὁρίοις, ὁρίων, ὅρια Matt 2:16; Matt 4:13; Matt 8:34; Matt 15:22; Matt 15:39

ὁρκ-ίζω G3726 V-PIA-1S (3×)

to adjure, to put someone under oath, to solemnly charge by invoking God or a sacred name

This verb means to place someone under a solemn oath or to adjure them by invoking a divine or sacred name. In Mark 5:7, the demoniac adjures Jesus by God himself, showing the gravity of oath-taking even in demonic speech. The word carries legal and sacred weight, appearing when Paul adjures the Thessalonians by the Lord to have his letter read to all (1 Thess 5:27), and when Jewish exorcists attempt to invoke Jesus' name over demons (Acts 19:13). The multilingual evidence shows this is fundamentally about compelling speech or action through sacred invocation.

(3×) The evidence across languages consistently points to solemn charging or adjuring. The English 'I-adjure', Spanish 'os-conjuro/te-conjuro', and French 'adjurer/faire-jurer' all indicate compelling someone through oath or sacred invocation. The three occurrences show different contexts: a demon addressing Jesus (Mark 5:7), itinerant exorcists invoking Jesus' name (Acts 19:13), and Paul charging believers by the Lord (1 Thess 5:27). Each involves invoking a higher authority to compel or bind. OATHS AND SWEARING en: I-adjure | es: Os-conjuro, te-conjuro | fr: adjurer, faire-jurer | de: Ἐνορκίζω, ὁρκίζω, Ὁρκίζω Mark 5:7; Acts 19:13; 1Thess 5:27

ὅρκος G3727 N-DMS (10×)

Oath, sworn pledge — a solemn declaration invoking God as witness, binding the swearer to a promise

The noun horkos (ὅρκος) denotes a solemn sworn declaration or binding vow, typically invoking a divine witness. Jesus addresses the tradition of oath-keeping — 'you shall not swear falsely but perform your oaths to the Lord' (Matt 5:33) — before urging his followers not to swear at all. Herod's rash oath at Herodias's banquet trapped him into ordering the Baptist's execution (Matt 14:7,9). Most theologically, God himself swore an oath to Abraham (Luke 1:73; Acts 2:30), and Hebrews argues that since God could swear by none greater, he swore by himself (Heb 6:16-17). The oath thus functions as the ultimate guarantee of divine faithfulness. Spanish 'juramento,' Hindi 'shapath,' Arabic 'qasam,' Korean 'maengse,' and Swahili 'kiapo' all converge on one meaning: a binding sworn commitment.

oath, sworn pledge (10×) A solemn sworn declaration or vow, often invoking God as guarantor, that binds the swearer to fulfill a promise. Covers human oaths — Herod's rash banquet vow (Matt 14:7,9), the OT tradition of performing oaths to the Lord (Matt 5:33), and Peter's denial under oath (Matt 26:72 par.) — and divine oaths — God's covenant pledge to Abraham (Luke 1:73; Acts 2:30) and the theological argument that an oath ends every dispute (Heb 6:16-17). Singular and plural forms (Spanish 'juramento/juramentos,' Arabic 'qasam/aqsam,' Swahili 'kiapo/viapo') represent inflectional variants of one core meaning. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: an-oath, by-an-oath, by-oath | es: con-juramento, juramento, juramentos | fr: serment | de: Eid, ὅρκον, ὅρκου Matt 5:33; Matt 14:7; Matt 14:9; Matt 26:72; Mark 6:26

ὁρκ-ωμοσία G3728 N-GFS (4×)

Oath-taking, the swearing of an oath; a solemn, binding divine declaration.

Found exclusively in Hebrews 7, this noun denotes the formal act of swearing an oath. The author argues that Jesus' priesthood is superior because it was established 'with an oath' (Heb 7:20–21), unlike the Levitical priests who served 'without an oath-taking.' The climax comes in Heb 7:28, where the 'word of the oath' appoints the Son as permanent high priest. Spanish 'juramento' and French 'Eidschwur' (a German loanword in the data) both capture the gravity of a binding sworn declaration. The concentrated use in one chapter underscores its theological weight: God's oath is the unbreakable guarantee of the new covenant priesthood.

(4×) Oath-taking, the solemn act of swearing — a formal, binding declaration backed by divine authority. All four occurrences cluster in Hebrews 7, where the author contrasts the Levitical priesthood (appointed without oath) with Christ's priesthood (established by God's sworn word, quoting Ps 110:4). Spanish 'juramento' and English 'oath-taking' both emphasize the performative, covenantal nature of this act. The noun highlights not just the content but the gravity of the swearing itself. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: oath-taking | es: juramento | fr: Eidschwur | de: Eidschwur Heb 7:20; Heb 7:21; Heb 7:28

ὁρμάω G3729 V-AIA-3P (5×)

To rush, charge forward; to set oneself in violent motion, often as a stampede or headlong assault.

A verb meaning to rush forward impetuously, to charge or stampede. Its NT uses are strikingly dramatic: the Gadarene swine 'rushed' headlong down a steep bank into the sea (Matt 8:32; Mark 5:13; Luke 8:33), the crowd 'rushed' upon Stephen with one accord (Acts 7:57), and the Ephesian mob 'rushed' into the theater (Acts 19:29). The French 'se précipiter' (to hurl oneself) and Spanish 'se lanzaron/se precipitó' both capture the violent, uncontrolled momentum. Derived from ὁρμή (impulse, onset), the word carries an inherent sense of irresistible force.

(5×) To rush or charge forward violently — to move with sudden, impetuous force, often as a mob or stampede. The root ὁρμή (impulse, onset) gives this verb a sense of irresistible forward momentum. Three of the five NT occurrences describe the demon-possessed swine stampeding down a cliff into the sea (Matt 8:32; Mark 5:13; Luke 8:33), one of the most vivid action scenes in the Gospels. Acts 7:57 uses it of the crowd rushing at Stephen with murderous intent, and Acts 19:29 of the Ephesian riot surging into the theater. The Spanish 'se precipitó' and French 'se précipiter' both convey the headlong, uncontrolled quality of the movement. RUNNING AND RACING en: rushed | es: se-lanzaron, se-precipitó | fr: se-précipiter, élan | de: ὥρμησάν, ὥρμησαν, ὥρμησεν Matt 8:32; Mark 5:13; Luke 8:33; Acts 7:57; Acts 19:29

ὁρμ-ή G3730 N-NFS (2×)

rapid forward motion, rush, onset; violent impulse or assault

This noun captures forceful, rapid movement—an onrush, assault, or violent impulse. Homer uses it of warriors' charges and the rage of fire. Classical writers describe the shock of waves, the spring of knees, the speed of foot. In the New Testament, both occurrences involve hostile intent. Acts 14:5 describes an 'impulse' or 'rush' by Gentiles and Jews to stone Paul and Barnabas. James 3:4 compares the tongue to a ship's rudder, despite the 'impulse' of fierce winds. The word conveys forceful momentum, whether physical or psychological.

(2×) Both biblical uses involve powerful, directional force. Acts 14:5 describes a hostile mob movement—the translations render it as 'impulse' or 'rush' (Spanish 'impulso, ímpetu'). James 3:4 uses it of wind-driven force on ships. The multilingual evidence clusters around the concept of forceful momentum: English 'impulse, rush,' French 'impétuosité.' The semantic core is rapid motion forwards, carrying the potential for violence or overwhelming force, whether from human passion or natural elements. RUNNING AND RACING

en: impulse, rush | es: impulso, ímpetu | fr: impétuosité, ὁρμὴ | de: ὁρμὴ Acts 14:5; Jas 3:4

ὅρμ-ημα G3731 N-DNS (1×)

violent rush, forceful impulse or onset

This noun denotes a sudden, powerful rushing motion—whether of an attacking army, a swooping bird of prey, or a stone hurling through air. Revelation employs it to describe the violent force with which symbolic Babylon falls. The Greek and German glosses preserve the word itself ('Wucht'), while Spanish and French capture the violence and force involved. The term conveys both speed and destructive power, evoking images of irresistible, catastrophic momentum.

(1×) Revelation 18:21 depicts an angel hurling a great millstone into the sea 'with violence,' using this noun to emphasize the finality and force of Babylon's fall. The imagery combines weight (a millstone), action (hurling), and momentum (violent rush) to communicate that the judgment, once initiated, cannot be stopped or softened—it crashes down with devastating completeness. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: with-violence | es: con-ímpetu | fr: Wucht | de: Wucht Rev 18:21

ὄρνεον G3732 N-GNS (3×)

bird, fowl; a winged creature, especially in contexts of judgment and apocalyptic imagery

A straightforward term for birds or fowl, this word appears exclusively in Revelation's apocalyptic visions. All three occurrences are in judgment scenes: Babylon becomes a haunt for every unclean bird (Rev 18:2), and birds are summoned to feast on the slain at God's great supper (Rev 19:17, 21). The multilingual translations consistently render this as generic 'bird(s)' or 'fowl,' reflecting its simple, concrete meaning—though the contexts are anything but ordinary.

(3×) The cross-linguistic evidence uniformly supports the basic meaning 'bird(s)': English 'bird/birds', Spanish 'ave/aves', French 'oiseaux', German 'Voegel'. All three New Testament uses are in Revelation's apocalyptic imagery, where birds serve as scavengers in scenes of divine judgment. The lexicon notes τὰ ὄρνεα could also refer to a bird-market in classical usage, but the biblical usage is literal creatures, particularly in visionary contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bird, birds | es: ave, aves | fr: oiseaux | de: Voegel Rev 18:2; Rev 19:17; Rev 19:21

ὄρνις G3733 N-NFS (2×)

bird, especially a hen or domestic fowl

Though the Greek term can denote any bird, in New Testament usage it specifically means a hen. Both occurrences appear in identical sayings where Jesus laments over Jerusalem, wishing to gather the city's children 'as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings.' The image is maternal, protective, and poignant—domestic poultry protecting vulnerable young from predators. Classical literature uses the word broadly for birds, with gender sometimes ambiguous, but the New Testament context makes the reference to a mother hen unmistakable.

(2×) Matthew 23:37 and Luke 13:34 both contain Jesus' lament using this maternal image. The multilingual translations uniformly identify the domestic hen: English 'a-hen, bird,' Spanish 'gallina, una-gallina,' French 'poule.' The specificity of 'her chicks' (nossia) in context clarifies that this is female domestic fowl. The metaphor works because of the hen's instinctive protective behavior—spreading wings to shelter chicks from hawks or other dangers—which Jesus uses to express his unfulfilled longing to protect Jerusalem. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: a-hen, bird | es: gallina, una-gallina | fr: poule | de: ὄρνις Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34

ὁρο-θεσία G3734 N-AFP (1×)

appointed boundaries, fixed limits (of time, space, or circumstance)

This noun refers to boundaries that have been deliberately established or appointed. In Acts, Paul uses it to describe God's sovereign ordering of human habitation across time and geography. The term combines the concepts of limit-setting and divine intentionality. Multilingual evidence shows consistency: boundaries (English), límites (Spanish), limite (French). The word suggests not random borders but purposefully drawn lines that structure human existence according to divine wisdom.

(1×) Acts 17:26 describes God determining 'the boundaries of their dwelling,' referring to the appointed times and territorial limits for nations. Paul's Areopagus speech uses this term to counter notions of random human distribution, asserting instead that geography and chronology serve God's purpose: that people might seek him. The boundaries are not arbitrary but pedagogical. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: boundaries | es: límites | fr: limite | de: ὁροθεσίας Acts 17:26

ὄρος G3735 N-GNP (64×)

oros – a mountain or hill; used of physical elevations and as a setting for divine revelation

The neuter noun oros ('mountain, hill') appears 64 times in the New Testament, naming some of Scripture's most theologically charged landscapes. Mountains serve as stages for revelation and encounter: the devil takes Jesus to a very high mountain (Matt 4:8), the Sermon on the Mount is delivered from one (Matt 5:1), the Transfiguration occurs on another (Matt 17:1), and the Olivet Discourse unfolds on the Mount of Olives (Matt 24:3). Paul contrasts Mount Sinai with the heavenly Jerusalem (Gal 4:24-25), and Revelation envisions the new Jerusalem descending as viewed from a great mountain (Rev 21:10). Spanish monte/montana, French montagne, and German Berg all render it without ambiguity.

(64×) A mountain or hill, denoting a physical elevation that frequently serves as a setting for divine revelation and pivotal events. Jesus is tempted on a high mountain (Matt 4:8), teaches from a mountainside (Matt 5:1), is transfigured on one (Matt 17:1), and delivers his eschatological discourse on the Mount of Olives (Matt 24:3). Paul's allegory of Sinai versus the Jerusalem above (Gal 4:24-25) extends the term into theological symbolism. Spanish monte, French montagne, and German Berg uniformly render this single concrete-yet-symbolically-rich concept across 64 New Testament occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-mountain, mount, mountain | es: de-monte, monte | fr: montagne | de: Berg Matt 4:8; Matt 5:1; Matt 5:14; Matt 8:1; Matt 14:23

ὀρύσσω G3736 V-AIA-3S (3×)

to dig, to excavate ground for planting, hiding, or construction purposes

A common agricultural and construction verb meaning to dig or excavate earth. Jesus uses it twice in parables: the landowner who dug a winepress in his vineyard (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1), establishing proper preparation for cultivation, and the fearful servant who dug in the ground to hide his master's money (Matt 25:18). The word emphasizes intentional earthwork, whether for productive purposes like viticulture or defensive actions like concealment.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the basic sense of digging or excavating: English 'dug', Spanish 'cavó', French 'creuser' (to dig). The lexicon traces this back to Homeric Greek with the root sense of digging. Two occurrences involve Jesus' parable of the vineyard where the owner 'dug' a winepress (Matt 21:33, Mark 12:1), while one describes the servant who 'dug' in the ground to bury his master's talent (Matt 25:18). Both contexts involve preparing or excavating earth. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: dug | es: cavó | fr: creuser | de: ὤρυξεν Matt 21:33; Matt 25:18; Mark 12:1

ὀρφᾰνός G3737 Adj-AMP (2×)

orphaned, bereft of parents; deprived or forsaken

The primary meaning is one who has lost parents, especially father—an orphan. Classical usage extends the concept to animals, houses left empty, or anyone bereft of protection. In the New Testament, both uses carry metaphorical weight. John 14:18 records Jesus' promise, 'I will not leave you orphans'—he will return after his death and resurrection. James 1:27 defines pure religion as caring for 'orphans and widows' in distress. The word evokes vulnerability, loss of protection, and the need for divine or human care.

(2×) John 14:18 uses the term metaphorically for the disciples who might feel abandoned after Jesus' departure, while James 1:27 uses it literally for fatherless children. The multilingual glosses consistently render 'orphans': Spanish 'huérfanos,' French 'orphelin,' German 'Waisen.' The semantic core is loss of parental protection and provision. James' usage reflects biblical concern for the vulnerable classes (orphans and widows), while John's extends the familial metaphor to the community of believers who must not be left unprotected. WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: orphans | es: huérfanos | fr: orphelin | de: Waisen John 14:18; Jas 1:27

ὀρχέομαι G3738 V-APM-GFS (4×)

To dance; rhythmic bodily movement in celebration, performance, or grief's counterpart.

This verb describes dancing in both festive and parabolic contexts. In Jesus' marketplace parable (Matt 11:17; Luke 7:32), children complain 'We played the flute for you and you did not dance'—dancing here represents the joyful response people refused to give. At Herod's banquet, the daughter of Herodias 'danced' provocatively enough to secure John the Baptist's execution (Matt 14:6; Mark 6:22). Spanish distinguishes the tenses vividly—'bailasteis' (you danced) versus 'danzó' (she danced)—while French uses the simple 'danser.' The word carries the full range from innocent play to dangerous spectacle.

(4×) To dance — rhythmic, expressive bodily movement, whether in celebration, entertainment, or as a metaphor for responsive joy. Jesus' parable of the children in the marketplace (Matt 11:17; Luke 7:32) uses dancing as the expected joyful response to music, contrasting it with mourning. At Herod's feast (Matt 14:6; Mark 6:22), the same verb describes a performance with deadly consequences. Spanish distinguishes 'danzando' (participial) from 'bailasteis' (second person plural), while French simply renders 'danser,' reflecting the verb's broad application. DANCE AND DANCING

en: danced, dancing, you-danced | es: bailasteis, danzando, danzó | fr: danser | de: ὀρχησαμένης, ὠρχήσασθε, ὠρχήσατο Matt 11:17; Matt 14:6; Mark 6:22; Luke 7:32

ὅς G3739 Adv (1415×)

Relative pronoun: who, which, that, whom; also indefinite-relative whoever/whatever; correlative one…another; rarely 'where.'

The Greek relative pronoun hos (with its full paradigm of case, gender, and number forms) is the workhorse of subordination in the New Testament, introducing relative clauses that identify, describe, and specify their antecedents. It appears over 1,400 times and in most of those occurrences functions as a straightforward definite relative — 'the one who,' 'the thing which,' 'the place that.' But two secondary uses are linguistically noteworthy: combined with an (or ean), it generalizes into an indefinite relative meaning 'whoever, whatever' (Matt 10:27), and in the paired construction hos men...hos de it becomes a correlative-distributive pronoun meaning 'one...another' or 'some...others' — a usage visible in the Parable of the Sower (Matt 13:4-8). A handful of occurrences shade into locative 'where,' showing how the relative paradigm can absorb spatial reference.

1. relative pronoun who/which/that (1149×) The standard definite relative pronoun introducing a clause with a specific antecedent: 'who,' 'which,' 'that,' 'whom,' 'whose,' 'to whom,' 'of which' — by far the dominant sense at approximately 1,149 occurrences. This covers all case, gender, and number inflections and spans every genre of the New Testament. In Matt 2:16 Herod inquires about the time 'which' the star appeared; in Matt 12:4 David eats the bread 'which' was not lawful. Spanish que/cual, French qui/que, German der/die/das, and Korean (relative clause markers using -는/-은) all render this with their standard relative pronoun apparatus. The sheer frequency makes this the grammatical backbone of Greek hypotaxis. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: which | es: con-que, la-cual, lo-que | fr: que, qui | de: das, den, die Matt 2:16; Matt 10:26; Matt 12:4; Matt 12:36; Matt 13:31

2. whoever/whatever (indefinite relative) (232×) The indefinite or generalizing relative pronoun meaning 'whoever, whatever, whichever, whomever' — approximately 232 occurrences, typically appearing with the particles an or ean to signal universal or conditional scope. In Matt 10:27 'what I tell you in darkness, speak in the light'; in Matt 16:19 'whatever you bind on earth.' Spanish lo que and French quiconque shift toward indefinite vocabulary, while Korean 무엇이든지 ('whatever it may be') and German was auch immer mark the generalization explicitly. This sense is syntactically distinguished from sense 1 by the modal particle and by the lack of a specific referential antecedent. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: what, whatever | es: lo-que | fr: que, qui | de: das, die Matt 10:27; Matt 11:4; Matt 13:17; Matt 14:7; Matt 16:19

3. one/another, some/others (correlative-distributive) (30×) The correlative-distributive use in the pattern hos men...hos de, meaning 'one...another' or 'some...others' — approximately 30 occurrences. This construction effectively repurposes the relative pronoun as an indefinite, partitioning a group into subsets. The Parable of the Sower illustrates it vividly: 'some [seed] fell on the path...other on rocky ground...other among thorns...other on good soil' (Matt 13:4-8). Spanish distinguishes with uno...otro, French with l'un...l'autre, and German with der eine...der andere — all using dedicated correlative pairs rather than relative pronouns, confirming that this is a functionally distinct construction in Greek even though it reuses the relative morphology. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: one, some, which | es: a-uno, otro, otros | fr: que, qui | de: das, den, der Matt 13:4; Matt 13:8; Matt 13:23

4. (4×) A locative or quasi-adverbial use meaning 'where' — only 4 occurrences, representing a spatial extension of the relative paradigm. In Luke 4:17 Jesus opens the scroll 'where' (hou) it was written about him; in Luke 23:53 the tomb 'where' no one had yet been laid; in Rom 9:26 'in the place where' it was said to them. Spanish donde, French duquel/lequel, and German wo all deploy spatial adverbs rather than relative pronouns, showing that these target languages treat the locative function as categorically distinct. This sense sits at the boundary between pronoun and adverb, preserving an older demonstrative-spatial function of the hos paradigm attested in Classical Greek. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where | es: donde | fr: duquel, lequel, qui | de: den, der, dessen Luke 4:17; Luke 10:1; Luke 23:53; Rom 9:26

ὁσάκις G3740 Conj (3×)

as often as, as many times as; a correlative conjunction indicating frequency of repeated action

A temporal conjunction meaning 'as often as' or 'whenever,' this word marks the repetition of an action. Paul uses it twice in his instructions about the Lord's Supper, emphasizing that 'as often as' believers drink the cup or eat the bread, they proclaim the Lord's death (1 Cor 11:25-26). In Revelation, it describes the frequency with which the two witnesses can shut the sky or strike the earth 'as often as' they wish (Rev 11:6). The term underscores not just repetition but the correlation between the timing and the significance of the action.

(3×) The multilingual glosses all capture the frequency aspect: English 'as-often-as', Spanish 'cuantas-veces', French 'autant-de-fois', German 'sooft'. The lexicon notes this is correlative to 'so many times' (τοσσάκι) in classical usage. Paul's use in 1 Cor 11:25-26 emphasizes that each observance of the Lord's Supper is a proclamation, while Rev 11:6 stresses the repeated power of the witnesses. The word highlights frequency and correlation rather than mere repetition. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: as-often-as | es: Cuantas-veces, cuantas-veces | fr: autant-de-fois, sooft | de: sooft 1Cor 11:25; 1Cor 11:26; Rev 11:6

ὅσι-ος G3741 Adj-ANP (8×)

Holy, devout, pious; consecrated or sanctioned by divine law; holy things or sacred promises

The adjective hosios describes what is sanctioned or hallowed by divine ordinance, standing in a distinctive semantic space between dikaios (righteous by human law) and hieros (sacred to God). In the New Testament it most often appears as the title 'Holy One' applied to Christ, especially in the Psalmic quotations of Acts 2:27 and 13:35, where God's promise not to let his Holy One see decay becomes a cornerstone of resurrection preaching. It also describes the personal character of the devout believer, as in Titus 1:8 where an elder must be hosios. A rarer neuter-plural use in Acts 13:34 refers to 'the holy things' or sacred promises given to David.

1. Holy One (7×) The substantival and adjectival use meaning 'Holy One' or 'holy, devout, pious,' applied both christologically and ethically. As a christological title it appears in Peter's Pentecost sermon (Acts 2:27) and Paul's Pisidian Antioch address (Acts 13:35), both quoting Psalm 16:10 LXX to argue that God did not allow his 'Holy One' to undergo corruption. Applied to human character, it describes the devout life expected of church leaders (Titus 1:8) and the holy hands lifted in prayer (1 Tim 2:8). Multilingual evidence consistently renders it with words for sacred personal holiness — Spanish 'santo,' French 'saint,' German 'heilig' — distinguishing it from hagios, which emphasizes consecrated separateness. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: Holy-One, holy | es: Santo, santas, santo | fr: saint | de: heilig, Ὅσιόν Acts 2:27; Acts 13:35; 1Tim 2:8; Titus 1:8; Heb 7:26

2. holy things (1×) The neuter plural ta hosia used substantively to mean 'the holy things' or 'the sure mercies,' referring to God's sacred covenant promises. This sense appears at Acts 13:34, where Paul declares that God raised Jesus to fulfill 'the holy things of David, the faithful ones' — an allusion to the promises of 2 Samuel 7 and Isaiah 55:3 LXX. Spanish 'santas' and English 'holy things' confirm the shift from personal holiness to sacred realities or divine pledges, making this a distinct though closely related sense from the personal-devotional usage. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: holy-things | es: santas | fr: saint | de: ὅσια Acts 13:34

ὁσι-ότης G3742 N-DFS (2×)

holiness, piety; devoutness toward God and reverence toward parents

This noun denotes the disposition to observe divine law and show reverence—piety, devoutness, holiness. Classical usage covers both religious devotion toward gods and filial piety toward parents (like Latin pietas). In Luke 1:75, Zechariah's prophecy describes serving God 'in holiness and righteousness.' Ephesians 4:24 speaks of the new self 'created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.' The word emphasizes the inner disposition and outward practice of reverent devotion, oriented both vertically (toward God) and horizontally (toward others).

(2×) Both New Testament uses appear in dative form, describing the manner of life or character. Luke 1:75 pairs it with 'righteousness' (dikaiosune) to describe service before God—the translations render it as 'holiness' (Spanish 'santidad,' French 'sainteté,' German 'heilig'). Ephesians 4:24 similarly couples it with righteousness in describing the recreated human nature. The multilingual evidence emphasizes the quality of sacred devotion and moral purity that characterizes those who live in proper relationship with the divine. HOLINESS AND SINCERITY en: holiness | es: santidad | fr: sainteté | de: heilig, ὁσιότητι Luke 1:75; Eph 4:24

ὅσι-ος G3743 Adv (1×)

in a holy manner, devoutly, piously

This adverb describes conduct characterized by reverence toward God and conformity to divine standards of purity. Paul uses it once to remind the Thessalonians how blamelessly he and his companions behaved among them. The term derives from ὅσιος (holy, hallowed) and emphasizes behavior sanctioned by divine law rather than merely human custom. It suggests a life lived consciously before God, where actions align with what is sacred and pleasing to him.

(1×) In 1 Thessalonians 2:10, Paul appeals to the Thessalonians as witnesses 'how devoutly' he conducted himself among them. The adverb appears in a triad—'holy, righteously, and blamelessly'—each highlighting a different facet of integrity. 'Devoutly' points to Paul's God-ward orientation, his conscious determination to honor divine standards in his ministry and relationships. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: devoutly | es: santamente | fr: ὁσίως | de: heilig 1Thess 2:10

ὀσμ-ή G3744 N-AFS (6×)

Smell, fragrance, aroma; a scent perceived by the nose, especially a pleasing odor offered to God

The standard Greek word for any smell or odor, but in the NT it appears exclusively in positive, often cultic contexts. The phrase 'a fragrant aroma' (osme euodias) echoes the Old Testament idiom of a sacrifice whose scent pleases God. Paul applies this imagery to Christ's self-offering (Eph 5:2), to the Philippians' generous gift (Phil 4:18), and strikingly to the apostolic ministry itself as a 'fragrance of Christ' spreading the knowledge of God (2 Cor 2:14-16). John 12:3 provides the one non-metaphorical use: the house filled with the fragrance of Mary's costly nard.

smell, fragrance, aroma (6×) A smell, fragrance, or aroma—used in the NT for pleasing scents, especially within the cultic metaphor of sacrifice acceptable to God. John 12:3 records the literal fragrance of nard filling the house at Bethany. Paul then develops the sacrificial metaphor: apostolic proclamation is 'the aroma of Christ' to God among both those being saved and those perishing (2 Cor 2:14-16), Christ's death is 'a fragrant offering and sacrifice to God' (Eph 5:2), and the Philippians' gift is 'a fragrant aroma, an acceptable sacrifice' (Phil 4:18). German 'Geruch,' French 'odeur,' and Spanish 'olor/fragancia' all capture the sensory dimension while the theological overtone comes from the sacrificial context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: aroma, fragrance, smell | es: fragancia, olor | fr: odeur | de: Geruch John 12:3; 2Cor 2:14; 2Cor 2:16; Eph 5:2

ὅσος G3745 RelPro-NMP (111×)

A correlative pronoun meaning 'as many as, as much as, whatever, whoever, how much, as long as'; marks quantity, extent, degree, or duration relative to a reference set.

This versatile correlative pronoun is the Greek language's primary tool for expressing relative quantity and extent. In its most common use, it gathers up a whole set of things or persons — 'as many as believed' (Acts 4:34), 'whatever you wish' (Matt 7:12). It can also function proportionally ('to the degree that,' Matt 25:40), exclamatorily ('how great things!' Mark 5:19-20), or temporally ('as long as,' Rom 7:1). Spanish cuantos and French qui both reflect the pronoun's flexibility, while German so-viel ('so much/many') nicely captures the quantitative core. The word's range from marketplace arithmetic to eschatological proportionality makes it one of the New Testament's quiet workhorses.

1. as much as / whatever (things) (45×) The neuter or feminine plural use referring to things, events, or amounts: 'whatever things, as much as, all that.' Encompasses 45 occurrences where hosos gathers an entire class of objects or actions. Spanish cuantas-cosas ('how many things') is particularly expressive. Key passages include Matt 7:12 ('whatever you wish others to do for you'), Matt 18:18 ('whatever you bind on earth'), and Phil 4:8 ('whatever things are true... think on these'). The pronoun draws a boundary around a complete set. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: as-many-as, as-much-as, whatever | es: cuantas, cuantas-cosas, cuanto | fr: que | de: die, so-viel Matt 7:12; Matt 13:44; Matt 13:46; Matt 17:12; Matt 18:18

2. as many as (persons) (33×) The masculine plural use referring to persons: 'as many as, all who, whoever' — 33 occurrences pointing to people within a group. Spanish cuantos and French qui both render the personal reference. Prominent in healing narratives (Matt 14:36, Mark 6:56: 'as many as touched him were healed') and in Acts' summaries of conversion (Acts 2:39, 4:6). This personal use carries an inclusive, boundary-drawing force: everyone within the specified group, without exception. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: as-many-as | es: Cuantos, cuantos | fr: qui | de: die, so-viel Matt 14:36; Matt 22:9; Mark 3:10; Mark 6:56; Luke 4:40

3. to the degree that (proportional) (14×) A proportional or comparative use indicating degree or scalar extent: 'as much as, to the degree that, in proportion to.' Found in 14 passages including the pivotal Matt 25:40 ('inasmuch as you did it to the least of these'), where hosos establishes the proportional equivalence between service to the lowly and service to Christ. Mark 7:36 uses it strikingly: 'the more he charged them, the more (hoso) they proclaimed it.' German dem ('to whom/which') gestures at this dative-of-degree construction. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: -, as, as-much-as | es: cuanto, en-cuanto, que | fr: que, qui, à-qui | de: das, dem, die Matt 9:15; Matt 25:40; Matt 25:45; Mark 7:36; John 6:11

4. how much / how many (exclamatory) (14×) An exclamatory or rhetorical use expressing magnitude: 'how much! how many! how great!' — 14 occurrences concentrated in Mark, where the healed demoniac is told to report hosa ('how great things') the Lord has done (Mark 5:19-20). Spanish cuantas-cosas preserves the exclamatory wonder. This sense shifts from correlation to emphatic declaration, marveling at the sheer extent of divine action. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: as-many-as, as-much-as, how | es: cuantas-cosas, cuanto, cuantos | fr: que | de: den, die, so-viel Mark 3:8; Mark 5:19; Mark 5:20; Mark 6:30

5. as long as (temporal duration) (5×) A temporal use marking duration: 'as long as, for as long as, while.' Five occurrences, typically in the phrase eph' hoson ('for as long a time as'), including Rom 7:1 ('the law has authority over a person as long as he lives'), 1 Cor 7:39 ('bound as long as her husband lives'), and Gal 4:1 ('as long as the heir is a child'). Spanish cuanto and German den both translate the temporal extent, though less precisely than the Greek construction which elegantly maps quantity onto time. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: as-long-as | es: a-cuanto, cuanto | fr: que | de: den Mark 2:19; Rom 7:1; 1Cor 7:39; Gal 4:1; 2Pet 1:13

ὅσπερ G3746

the very one who/which (intensive relative pronoun ὅσπερ = ὅς + περ); often = simple ὅς

The relative pronoun ὅς strengthened with the intensive particle περ creates ὅσπερ: 'the very one who.' Often it's indistinguishable from simple ὅς, but the περ adds emphasis or precision. It appears after adjectives of resemblance: 'the same things as' or 'similar to what.' Homer uses it: 'the very man who struck' (ὅς ῥ' ἔβαλέν περ). The oblique cases sometimes borrow from the article (τόπερ), especially in Ionic and poetic texts. The construction emphasizes identity or exact correspondence.

ὀστέον G3747 N-GNP (5×)

Bone, bones; the skeletal framework of the body, used literally of physical remains and figuratively of intimate union.

A neuter noun meaning bone or bones, appearing in both literal and figurative contexts across the NT. Jesus appeals to his physical bones to prove his bodily resurrection: 'a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see that I have' (Luke 24:39). In Matt 23:27, whitewashed tombs are 'full of dead men's bones,' an image of hidden impurity. John 19:36 applies Psalm 34:20 to the crucifixion: 'not a bone of him shall be broken.' Ephesians 5:30 echoes Genesis 2:23 to describe believers as 'bone of his bone.' The Spanish 'hueso,' French 'os,' and German 'Knochen' are all straightforward equivalents.

(5×) Bone or bones — the hard skeletal material of the body, used both literally and in theologically significant figurative ways. In Luke 24:39, the risen Jesus invites the disciples to touch his bones as proof of physical resurrection, directly countering a docetic reading. Matt 23:27 deploys bones as symbols of death and defilement hidden behind outward beauty. John 19:36 fulfills Passover-lamb typology ('not a bone shall be broken,' cf. Exod 12:46; Ps 34:20). Eph 5:30 uses the Genesis 2:23 echo ('bone of my bones') to describe the church's intimate union with Christ. Heb 11:22 recalls Joseph's dying command about his bones — a tangible act of faith in the Exodus promise. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bone, bones, of-bones | es: Hueso, de-huesos, huesos | fr: os | de: Knochen, ὀστέα, ὀστέων Matt 23:27; Luke 24:39; John 19:36; Eph 5:30; Heb 11:22

ὅστις G3748 RelPro-NMP (140×)

Indefinite relative pronoun 'who, which, whoever'; sometimes generalizing to 'whoever, whatever.'

A compound relative pronoun (formed from hos + tis) that carries a subtly different force from the simple relative hos. In its standard usage—accounting for the vast majority of its 140 NT occurrences—it introduces relative clauses much like ordinary 'who' or 'which,' identifying or describing persons and things (Matt 7:15; 16:28). But its indefinite component surfaces in a generalizing function meaning 'whoever' or 'anyone who,' lending a conditional or universal sweep to the clause. Spanish captures this shift well, moving from 'los cuales' / 'quienes' in the specific sense to 'cualquiera que' in the generalizing sense.

1. who, which (indefinite relative pronoun) (123×) The standard relative-pronoun function meaning 'who,' 'which,' or 'that,' introducing clauses that identify or describe a specific referent. This is the dominant NT usage (123 of 140 occurrences). Cross-lingual glosses converge on simple relative forms: Spanish 'quienes / los cuales,' French 'qui,' German 'die.' Found throughout narrative and didactic contexts, as in Matt 7:15 (false prophets 'who come to you') and Matt 16:28 ('some standing here who will not taste death'). RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: who | es: las-cuales, los-cuales, quienes | fr: qui | de: die, wer-auch Matt 7:15; Matt 16:28; Matt 19:12

2. whoever, whatever (generalizing relative) (17×) A generalizing or indefinite relative meaning 'whoever,' 'anyone who,' or 'whatever,' where the clause carries conditional or universal force. Spanish shifts tellingly to 'cualquiera que' and 'el que,' marking the open-ended scope. This usage is concentrated in Jesus's ethical teaching: 'whoever strikes you on the right cheek' (Matt 5:39), 'whoever compels you to go one mile' (Matt 5:41), and 'whoever confesses me before men' (Matt 10:32). RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: Whoever, whatever, who | es: cualquiera, cualquiera-que, el-que | fr: qui | de: der, die, wer-auch Matt 5:39; Matt 5:41; Matt 7:24; Matt 10:32; Matt 10:33

ὀστρᾰκ-ῐ́νος G3749 Adj-NNP (2×)

made of clay or earthenware; fragile pottery vessels

This adjective describes objects made from baked clay—earthen or earthenware. Classical sources use it of pottery vessels, distinguishing them from metal or other materials. Both New Testament uses employ the term metaphorically for human fragility and mortality. Paul in 2 Corinthians 4:7 describes believers as having treasure 'in earthen vessels,' emphasizing weakness and mortality against divine power. In 2 Timothy 2:20, a great house contains vessels of various materials, some earthen, some noble—an image of differing human purposes and honor. The word evokes commonness, fragility, and mortality.

(2×) Both uses are neuter plural, describing clay vessels. The translations emphasize the material composition: English 'earthen,' Spanish 'de-barro' (of mud/clay), French 'd'argile,' German 'irden.' Paul's metaphorical application draws on the obvious contrast between fragile, cheap pottery and precious contents (2 Cor 4:7) or between common clay vessels and noble gold or silver ones (2 Tim 2:20). The earthen quality signifies human weakness, mortality, and commonness—the opposite of divine glory or eternal durability. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: earthen | es: de-barro | fr: d'argile, ὀστράκινα | de: irden 2Cor 4:7; 2Tim 2:20

ὄσφρ-ησις G3750 N-NFS (1×)

sense of smell, the olfactory faculty or organ

This noun denotes the ability to smell or the physical organ responsible for detecting scents. Paul employs it in a rhetorical question about the diversity of bodily functions within the church as one body. The term can refer either to the faculty itself or to the nose as the smelling apparatus. Across languages—Spanish 'olfato,' French 'odorat,' German 'Geruch'—translators preserve the olfactory reference. Paul's point is that a body composed entirely of one sense would be absurdly incomplete.

(1×) In 1 Corinthians 12:17, Paul asks, 'If the whole body were an eye, where would the sense of smell be?' The rhetorical question highlights the necessity of diversity in the body of Christ. Just as a body needs multiple senses to function properly, the church requires varied spiritual gifts. The mention of smell underscores that even seemingly lesser senses are essential to wholeness. FLESH AND BODY en: smelling | es: olfato | fr: odorat | de: Geruch 1Cor 12:17

ὀσφῦς G3751 N-AFS (8×)

The loins or waist region; denoting both the physical lower torso (often girded for action) and, by metonymy, procreative power.

Osphus refers to the lower back and hip area — the loins. In ancient culture, girding the loins meant tucking up one's garment for work or travel, and this image pervades the NT: John the Baptist's leather belt around his waist (Matt 3:4, Mark 1:6), the call to readiness in Luke 12:35, and the 'belt of truth' in Ephesians 6:14. But osphus also carries a reproductive metaphor: Acts 2:30 speaks of one coming 'from David's loins,' echoing the Hebrew idiom for descendants. French 'reins' and Spanish 'lomo/cintura' split the two senses neatly.

loins, waist, hip region (8×) The lower torso around the waist and hips, encompassing both the literal body part that is girded for readiness or work and the metonymic extension to procreative power and lineage. Literally, the loins are girded with a leather belt (Matt 3:4, Mark 1:6 of John the Baptist) or with truth as spiritual armor (Eph 6:14), and believers are told to gird them in preparation (Luke 12:35, 1 Pet 1:13). Metonymically, descendants are said to come 'from the loins' of an ancestor (Acts 2:30, Heb 7:5, 7:10). French 'reins' and Spanish 'lomo' capture the reproductive-lineage sense, while 'cintura' points to the literal waist. LOINS WAIST BODY

en: loins, waist, waists | es: cintura, lomo, lomos | fr: hanche, reins | de: Lende, ὀσφύες, ὀσφύος Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6; Luke 12:35; Acts 2:30; Eph 6:14

ὅταν G3752 Conj (123×)

Whenever, when — temporal conjunction introducing indefinite or anticipated future events and recurring conditions

Hotan is a contraction of hote ('when') plus an (the particle of contingency), producing a conjunction that means 'whenever' or 'when' with an element of indefiniteness or futurity. Unlike the simple hote, which can state a definite past event, hotan typically points forward to something expected or recurrent. Jesus uses it frequently in the Sermon on the Mount to describe repeated situations: 'when you pray' (Matt 6:5-6), 'when you fast' (Matt 6:16). It also introduces eschatological conditions: 'when the Son of Man comes' (Matt 25:31), 'when these things begin to happen' (Luke 21:28). Spanish 'cuando,' French 'quand/lorsque,' and German 'wenn/wann' serve as regular renderings across its 123 occurrences.

(123×) Temporal-conditional conjunction formed from hote + an, introducing events that are indefinite, anticipated, or recurrent rather than fixed in past time. Jesus employs it to frame habitual actions — 'when you pray, when you fast' (Matt 6:5-6, 16) — and future eschatological moments — 'when the Son of Man comes in his glory' (Matt 25:31). It also governs general truths: 'when the unclean spirit goes out of a person' (Matt 12:43). Spanish 'cuando,' French 'quand,' and German 'wenn' all approximate the blend of temporal and conditional force that hotan carries. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: When, when, whenever | es: Cuando, cuando | fr: quand | de: wenn Matt 5:11; Matt 6:2; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:6; Matt 6:16

ὅτε G3753 Adv (103×)

When, at the time when; a temporal relative adverb introducing clauses of past or future time

Hote is a temporal relative adverb meaning 'when' or 'at the time when,' formed from the relative stem ho- and the particle te. It introduces subordinate clauses that locate actions in time, typically with the indicative mood for past events and occasionally shading into causal nuance. In the Gospels it commonly marks transitions: 'when Jesus had finished these sayings' (Matt 7:28), 'when the crowd had been put outside' (Matt 9:25). It answers to the demonstrative tote ('then') and the interrogative pote ('when?'). Translations render it consistently — Spanish 'cuando,' French 'quand,' German 'als.'

(103×) A temporal relative adverb meaning 'when' or 'at the time when,' introducing subordinate clauses that situate actions in time. Typically governs indicative verbs to mark single past events ('when Jesus finished these sayings,' Matt 7:28; 'when the grain sprouted,' Matt 13:26). Corresponds to the demonstrative tote ('then') in temporal correlation. Translations uniformly use basic temporal conjunctions — Spanish 'cuando,' French 'quand,' German 'als' — confirming its straightforward temporal function. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: when, when- | es: cuando, que-cuando | fr: quand | de: als Matt 7:28; Matt 9:25; Matt 11:1; Matt 12:3; Matt 13:26

ὅτι G3754 Conj (1311×)

Conjunction: that (introducing content clauses); because, for (causal); rarely a relative: what, whatever.

The Greek conjunction hoti is one of the most frequent words in the New Testament, appearing over 1,300 times and serving two principal functions that context alone must distinguish. After verbs of saying, knowing, or perceiving, it introduces a content clause meaning 'that' — Jesus said that, they knew that, he perceived that. But hoti also introduces causal clauses meaning 'because' or 'for,' as in the Beatitudes: 'Blessed are the pure in heart, because they shall see God' (Matt 5:8). Spanish que and French que mirror this ambiguity beautifully, while German dass (content) versus weil/denn (causal) forces the translator to decide. A tiny handful of occurrences preserve the older relative construction ho ti, meaning 'what' or 'whatever' (Mark 6:23; John 14:13).

1. that (content clause) (881×) The declarative complementizer 'that,' introducing content clauses after verbs of perception, cognition, and communication. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (880+ occurrences) appears in sentences like 'when Herod saw that he had been tricked' (Matt 2:16) and 'do not think that I came to abolish the Law' (Matt 5:17). Spanish que, French que, and German dass all converge on a dedicated complementizer, while Korean uses the clause-final marker -는 것을, confirming the cross-linguistic naturalness of this grammatical function. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: -, that, that- | es: que | fr: que | de: dass Matt 2:16; Matt 2:22; Matt 3:9; Matt 4:12; Matt 5:17

2. because, for (causal) (425×) The causal conjunction 'because, for, since,' introducing a reason or explanation for what precedes. With 425 occurrences, this is the second most frequent use, prominent in the Beatitudes (Matt 5:4-10) where each blessing is followed by hoti + reason: 'Blessed are those who mourn, because they shall be comforted.' Spanish porque, French parce que/car, and German denn/weil all deploy distinct causal vocabulary here, whereas Greek relies on the same particle as sense 1 — a persistent challenge for translators and exegetes who must determine from context whether hoti means 'that' or 'because.' CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: because, because-, for | es: porque | fr: que | de: dass Matt 5:4; Matt 5:6; Matt 5:8; Matt 5:10; Matt 5:35

3. what, whatever (relative) (5×) A rare relative pronoun construction ho ti (neuter relative ho + indefinite ti), meaning 'what' or 'whatever,' sometimes written as two words in critical editions. Only about 5 clear occurrences survive, including Herod's oath 'whatever you ask' (Mark 6:23), Jesus' cryptic 'what I said from the beginning' (John 8:25), and the promise 'whatever you ask in my name' (John 14:13; 15:16). Spanish lo que, French ce que, and German was all render this with dedicated relative constructions, confirming it as a genuinely distinct syntactic pattern from the conjunction. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: Whatever, what, whatever | es: Lo-que, lo-que | fr: que, que- | de: dass-
Mark 6:23; John 8:25; John 14:13; John 15:16; 1Cor 16:2

ὅστις G3755 RelPro-GMS (5×)

Whoever, whichever; an indefinite relative pronoun specifying an unidentified member of a class, often with temporal or conditional force.

An indefinite relative pronoun (genitive masculine singular form of ὅστις) meaning 'of whoever' or 'until which time.' It combines the relative ὅς with the indefinite τις to create a generalizing reference. In the NT it often carries temporal or conditional overtones: 'until it is accomplished' (Luke 12:50), 'until it bears fruit' (Luke 13:8), 'until it is fulfilled' (Luke 22:16). Matt 5:25 uses it in an urgent temporal clause ('while you are on the way'). The German 'solange' (as long as) and Spanish 'que' capture the durational-conditional sense that frequently attaches to this pronoun.

(5×) An indefinite relative pronoun (here in the genitive) meaning 'of whoever,' 'of whichever,' or in temporal constructions 'until which time.' The compound ὅστις generalizes beyond a specific referent to any member of a class. In the five NT occurrences cited, the temporal use dominates: Matt 5:25 urges reconciliation 'while' (ἕως ὅτου) on the road; Luke 12:50 expresses Jesus' constraint 'until' his baptism of suffering is completed; Luke 13:8 asks for patience 'until' the fig tree bears fruit; Luke 22:16 vows abstinence 'until' the kingdom comes. John 9:18 uses it in a conditional-temporal sense ('until they called the parents'). The German 'solange' and French 'duquel' reflect different facets — duration versus genitive relation. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: -still, when, which | es: que | fr: duquel | de: dessen, solange Matt 5:25; Luke 12:50; Luke 13:8; Luke 22:16; John 9:18

οὐ G3756 Prtcl (1635×)

ou – the Greek objective negation particle, denying facts and statements

The particle ou (with its phonological variants ouk before smooth breathing and ouch before rough breathing) is the standard Greek negation for indicative, factual statements. It contrasts sharply with me, which negates wishes, commands, and hypotheticals. Where me says 'may it not be so,' ou flatly declares 'it is not so.' Appearing 1,635 times in the New Testament, it is essential grammatical scaffolding: negating verbs, modifying adjectives, and forming rhetorical questions that expect a positive answer. Spanish no, French ne...pas, and German nicht all map consistently to this single function, confirming its monosemous character.

not (negation particle) (1635×) The objective negation particle used with indicative mood verbs and factual assertions, forming the counterpart to me (subjective/volitional negation). In passages like Matt 5:14 ('a city set on a hill cannot be hidden') and Matt 1:25 ('he did not know her'), ou flatly negates reality rather than expressing prohibition. All target languages map it uniformly – Spanish no, French ne-pas, German nicht – reflecting its single, unambiguous grammatical function across 1,635 New Testament occurrences. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not, not- | es: no | fr: ne-pas | de: nicht Matt 1:25; Matt 3:11; Matt 5:14; Matt 5:20; Matt 6:5

οὗ G3757 Adv (20×)

Where; a relative adverb of place introducing clauses that specify location.

Derived from the genitive of the relative pronoun hos, this little adverb does essential work in narrative and instruction alike. It pinpoints the place where something happens: the star 'came to rest over the place where the child was' (Matt 2:9), 'where two or three are gathered in my name' (Matt 18:20), and the mountain 'to which Jesus had directed them' (Matt 28:16). In Luke it anchors Jesus in his hometown synagogue: 'where he had been brought up' (Luke 4:16). Spanish 'donde,' French 'ou,' and German 'wo' all mirror its simple locative function across every occurrence.

where (relative adverb) (20×) A relative adverb of place meaning 'where' or 'in which place,' used to introduce relative clauses specifying location. It appears in narrative to locate events—the star resting where the child was (Matt 2:9), disciples gathering where Christ is present (Matt 18:20), and Jesus returning to the town where he grew up (Luke 4:16). The multilingual evidence is uniform: Spanish 'donde,' French 'ou,' German 'wo,' all serving as straightforward locative relative adverbs with no figurative extension in these passages. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where, wherever | es: a-donde, donde | fr: où, que | de: wo Matt 2:9; Matt 18:20; Matt 28:16; Luke 4:16; Luke 24:28

οὐά G3758 I (1×)

Ha! Ah! (exclamation of mockery, irony, or astonishment)

This interjection expresses strong emotion—sometimes admiration, more often mockery or ironic surprise. Mark records it on the lips of those taunting Jesus at the cross. The particle, borrowed from Latin ('vah!'), functions across languages with minimal change: 'Ha' (English), 'Ah' (Spanish/French), 'Wehe' (German, though that leans toward 'woe'). It's the verbal equivalent of a scornful gesture, dripping with derision. The brevity of the word belies the venom in the context where religious leaders mock a dying man.

(1×) Mark 15:29 captures the jeering crowd: 'Ha! You who would destroy the temple and rebuild it in three days...' The interjection opens their taunt, a sharp burst of contempt. What they intend as mockery, the reader recognizes as tragic irony—Jesus will indeed raise the temple of his body. Their scorn unwittingly points to resurrection truth. WOE AND ALAS en: Ha | es: Ah | fr: Ah! | de: Wehe Mark 15:29

οὐαί G3759 I (47×)

ouai – woe!; an exclamation of grief, warning, or prophetic denunciation against persons, cities, or behaviors

The interjection ouai ('woe!') is a powerful exclamation of grief, lament, and prophetic denunciation, rooted in the Hebrew hoy/oy tradition of the prophetic 'woe oracle.' Its 47 New Testament occurrences concentrate overwhelmingly in the words of Jesus, especially in two devastating series: the woes against the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:13-29, seven woes; Luke 11:42-52, six woes) and the woes against unrepentant cities (Matt 11:21, 'Woe to you, Chorazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida!'). In Revelation, it functions as a cry of cosmic judgment – 'Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth!' (Rev 8:13) – and marks the three great eschatological woes (Rev 9:12; 11:14). The exclamation can also express self-directed grief, as when Jesus laments 'woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed' (Matt 26:24). Spanish ay, French malheur, and German wehe capture the full emotional and prophetic range.

woe (47×) An exclamation of prophetic denunciation, lament, and warning, directed at persons, cities, or behaviors under divine judgment. Jesus pronounces woe against unrepentant Galilean cities (Matt 11:21), against Pharisaic hypocrisy in a withering sevenfold series (Matt 23:13-29), and against the betrayer (Matt 26:24). In Revelation it signals cosmic catastrophe and the three eschatological woes (Rev 8:13; 9:12; 11:14). Spanish ay, French malheur, and German wehe all preserve the exclamatory force across all 47 occurrences. WOE AND ALAS en: Woe, woe | es: Ay, ay, {Ay | fr: malheur | de: Wehe, wehe Matt 11:21; Matt 18:7; Matt 23:13

οὐδαμ-ῶς G3760 Adv (1×)

by no means, in no way, not at all

This strong negative adverb emphatically denies a proposition. In Matthew, it appears in a quotation from Micah, where the prophet insists that Bethlehem is by no means least among Judah's rulers. The term functions rhetorically to introduce a correction or contradiction. Across languages—Spanish 'de ningún modo,' French 'nullement,' German 'keineswegs'—the force remains absolute. It's the Greek equivalent of 'absolutely not,' often appearing in responses or declarations to shut down an erroneous claim.

(1×) Matthew 2:6 cites the prophet: 'Bethlehem... you are by no means least among the rulers of Judah.' The emphatic negative corrects any notion of insignificance. Though small geographically, Bethlehem's role in producing Messiah elevates it to prominence. The adverb underscores that appearances deceive: what seems minor in human eyes holds supreme importance in God's redemptive plan. NEGATION PARTICLES en: by-no-means | es: de-ningún-modo | fr: nullement | de: keineswegs Matt 2:6

οὐδέ G3761 Conj (144×)

Negative conjunction 'nor, neither' or emphatic adverb 'not even,' extending or intensifying a negation.

A two-faced negative particle that serves double duty in the New Testament. As a conjunction it chains negations together—'nor,' 'and not,' 'neither'—linking items or clauses already under a negative umbrella (Matt 6:26: they neither sow nor reap nor gather). As an emphatic adverb it sharpens the denial to 'not even,' underscoring that the most expected case still fails (Matt 6:29: not even Solomon in all his glory). Spanish 'ni' and French 'ni' capture the conjunctive sense cleanly, while Spanish 'ni aun' and 'tampoco' mark the emphatic adverb nicely.

1. nor, neither (conjunctive) (98×) Conjunctive negation joining two or more negated elements: 'nor,' 'and not,' 'neither.' Continues a prior negative to add another excluded item or clause. The cross-lingual glosses converge tightly—Spanish 'ni,' French 'ni,' German 'auch nicht'—reflecting the straightforward additive-negative function. Central in Jesus's argument from nature in Matt 6:26 ('they neither sow nor reap') and in catalogue denials like Matt 6:20. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: nor, nor- | es: ni | fr: ni, ni- | de: auch-nicht Matt 5:15; Matt 6:20; Matt 6:26; Matt 6:28

2. not even (emphatic adverb) (46×) Emphatic adverbial negation meaning 'not even,' intensifying the denial to stress that even the least expected case is included in the exclusion. Spanish distinguishes this with 'tampoco' and 'ni aun' where the conjunctive sense uses simple 'ni,' confirming the heightened force. Prominent in Matt 6:29 ('not even Solomon') and Matt 27:14 (Jesus did not answer 'not even one word'). NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Neither, neither, neither- | es: Tampoco, ni, ni-aun | fr: ni | de: auch-nicht Matt 6:15; Matt 6:29; Matt 21:27; Matt 21:32; Matt 27:14

οὐδείς G3762 Adj-DNS (234×)

No one, nobody, nothing; a strong negative pronoun negating persons or things absolutely.

Oudeis is Greek's emphatic negative pronoun, a compound of ou ('not') and heis ('one') that categorically denies the existence of any person or thing in the scope of the statement. It is the word behind some of the New Testament's most absolute declarations: 'No one comes to the Father except through me' (John 14:6), 'No one can serve two masters' (Matt 6:24), 'There is no one righteous, not even one' (Rom 3:10). Its force is stronger than simple ou with an indefinite — it asserts total, universal negation. Across languages the pronominal and adjectival uses split differently: Spanish distinguishes nadie (persons) from nada (things), as does German niemand versus nichts, while French personne and rien make the same cut.

1. no one, nobody (pronominal) (207×) Pronominal use referring to persons: 'no one,' 'nobody,' 'not anyone' — the dominant sense at 207 occurrences, used in both subject and object positions. 'No one knows the Son except the Father' (Matt 11:27); 'No one can enter a strong man's house' (Mark 3:27). Spanish nadie, German niemand, French personne, and Korean 아무도...않다 all deploy their dedicated person-negating pronouns here. The absolute, exceptionless quality of this negation gives it particular theological force in Johannine and Pauline usage. NOTHING AND NOBODY

en: no-one, none | es: nadie, ninguno | fr: personne | de: niemand Matt 9:16; Matt 11:27; Matt 20:7; Matt 22:46; Matt 24:36

2. no, none (adjectival/attributive) (16×) Adjectival or attributive use modifying a noun: 'no,' 'none,' 'not any' — 16 occurrences where oudeis functions as an adjective rather than standing alone as a pronoun. 'No prophet is accepted in his own hometown' (Luke 4:24); 'No one of them was cleansed' (Luke 4:27); 'I find no fault in him' (John 18:38). Spanish ninguno/ninguna, German kein, and French aucun map this adjectival function well. The distinction from sense 1 is grammatical rather than semantic — the negation is the same, but the word modifies rather than replaces a noun. NOTHING AND NOBODY

en: any, no, no-one | es: ninguna, ninguno, ningún | fr: personne | de: niemand Mark 6:5; Luke 4:24; Luke 4:26; John 16:29; John 18:38

3. nothing (pronominal) (11×) Pronominal use referring to things or abstractions: 'nothing,' 'not anything' — 11 occurrences where the neuter form ouden refers to things rather than persons. 'What do you answer? What is it that these testify against you?' ... 'But Jesus kept silent and answered nothing' (Matt 26:62-63). 'Nothing is impossible with God' (Luke 1:37 variant). Spanish nada, German nichts, and Korean 아무것도 all select thing-negating pronouns distinct from their person-negating equivalents, confirming this as a genuine cross-lingual sense boundary. NOTHING AND NOBODY

en: Nothing, none, nothing | es: De-nada, Nada, Ninguna | fr: personne | de: niemand Matt 26:62; Mark 9:29; Luke 22:35; Luke 23:4; John 10:41

οὐδέποτε G3763 Adv (16×)

Never; not at any time, an emphatic temporal negation used to deny that something has ever or will ever occur.

Oudepote is a compound of oude ("not even") and pote ("at any time"), yielding an emphatic "never." It appears in forceful declarations: Jesus' solemn dismissal of the lawless—"I never knew you" (Matt 7:23)—and his rhetorical citation of Psalm 8:2, "Have you never read?" (Matt 21:16). Peter's brash vow, "I will never fall away" (Matt 26:33), and the crowd's astonishment, "Never was anything like this seen in Israel" (Matt 9:33), illustrate its absolute, unqualified force. Spanish nunca, French jamais, and German niemals each convey the same unrestricted temporal negation.

(16×) An emphatic adverb of absolute temporal negation meaning "not at any time, never." It strengthens a denial beyond simple "not" by sweeping across all time. Jesus uses it in his most solemn pronouncements: "I never knew you" (Matt 7:23) and "Have you never read?" as a rhetorical rebuke (Matt 21:16, 42). Peter's overconfident "I will never fall away" (Matt 26:33) and the crowd's "Never was anything like this seen in Israel" (Matt 9:33) show its force spans both past and future. Every target language uses its standard absolute-negation adverb. NEGATION PARTICLES en: Never, never | es: Nunca, nunca | fr: jamais | de: niemals Matt 7:23; Matt 9:33; Matt 21:16; Matt 21:42; Matt 26:33

οὐδέ πω G3764 Adv (4×)

Not yet; denoting something anticipated but not yet realized or experienced.

A temporal-negation adverb indicating that a state or event has not yet come to pass but is expected. John's Gospel uses it pointedly: the Spirit had 'not yet' been given because Jesus was not yet glorified (John 7:39), and the disciples did 'not yet' understand the Scripture about the resurrection (John 20:9). In John 19:41 it describes a tomb where 'no one had yet been laid.' Acts 8:16 notes the Spirit had 'not yet' fallen on the Samaritans. French splits between 'pas encore' (not yet) and 'jamais' (never), revealing an interpretive ambiguity, while Spanish consistently uses 'todavía no.'

(4×) Not yet — indicating that an expected event or state has not been realized up to the present moment. In John 7:39 the Spirit had 'not yet' been given, creating theological suspense about glorification. John 20:9 uses it of the disciples' understanding, and John 19:41 of the unused tomb. German 'noch nicht' and Spanish 'todavía no' both preserve the temporal expectation embedded in the adverb —what has not happened yet is nonetheless anticipated. French 'jamais' in some renderings hints at a stronger negation, but the core meaning remains temporal incompleteness. NEGATION PARTICLES en: not-yet | es: Todavía-no, todavía-no | fr: jamais, pas-encore | de: noch-nicht, noch-nie John 7:39; John 19:41; John 20:9; Acts 8:16

οὐκέτι G3765 Adv (50×)
no longer, no more, not any further — a temporal negative adverb marking the cessation of a previous state Ouketi (a compound of ouk + eti, 'not' + 'still/yet') signals that something which was formerly the case has now ceased. Its 50 New Testament occurrences mark decisive transitions: what God has joined, humans must 'no longer' separate (Matt 19:6); after the Transfiguration, the disciples saw 'no longer' anyone except Jesus alone (Mark 9:8); the prodigal son declares himself 'no longer' worthy to be called a son (Luke 15:19, 21); and the risen Christ 'no longer' dies (Rom 6:9). The adverb carries an implicit narrative of change — a before-and-after that makes it a favorite for conversion, death-and-resurrection, and new-covenant theology. Spanish 'ya no,' French 'ne plus,' and German 'nicht mehr' all preserve this temporal-cessative force.

no longer (50×) A temporal negative adverb indicating that a previously existing condition, action, or state has come to an end: 'no longer,' 'no more,' 'not anymore.' Structurally it presupposes a prior reality now superseded, making it a key word for expressing theological transformation — believers are no longer slaves but children (Gal 4:7), death no longer has dominion over the risen Christ (Rom 6:9), and the law is no longer a guardian now that faith has come (Gal 3:25). Also used in narrative contexts for cessation of physical states (Mark 5:3, no one could bind him 'any longer'; Matt 22:46, no one dared question him 'any longer'). All 50 occurrences share this single cessative-temporal function. NEGATION PARTICLES
en: No-longer, no-longer | es: Ya-no, ya-no | fr: ne-plus | de: nicht-mehr Matt 19:6; Matt 22:46; Mark 5:3; Mark 7:12; Mark 9:8

οὐκοῦν G3766 Adv (1×)
so then, therefore, consequently
This inferential particle draws a conclusion or invites agreement with a logical consequence. In John's Gospel, Pilate uses it when questioning Jesus about kingship: 'So then, you are a king?' The particle combines οὐκ and οὖν to create a tone of pressing inquiry or logical deduction. It functions as a discourse marker that signals the speaker is building toward or confirming an inference. The multilingual evidence shows varied approaches, reflecting its subtle connective function.

(1×) John 18:37 records Pilate's response to Jesus: 'So then, you are a king?' The particle marks Pilate's attempt to clarify Jesus' identity based on what he's just heard. It conveys both logical progression ('then this must mean...') and interrogative pressure. Pilate seeks explicit confirmation, moving from Jesus' cryptic statements to a direct question that demands a yes-or-no answer. THEREFORE PARTICLES en: so-then | es: Entonces | fr: donc-pas | de: also John 18:37

οὖν G3767 Conj (505×)
therefore, then, accordingly — inferential conjunction drawing a logical conclusion from what precedes Oun is the New Testament's primary inferential particle, appearing 505 times to signal that what follows is a consequence, conclusion, or next step in an argument or narrative. In the Gospels it often advances the storyline ('then Jesus said'), while in the Epistles it marks logical inference ('therefore, since we have been justified by faith,' Rom 5:1). Its tone ranges from casual narrative transition to solemn theological summons. The translations capture this well: Spanish 'pues,' French 'donc,' German 'nun' — all marking logical or temporal sequence rather than adversative contrast.

therefore (505×) An inferential and transitional conjunction indicating that the following statement is a consequence, conclusion, or continuation of preceding discourse. Functions as a narrative sequencer in the Gospels (Matt 1:17 'so all the generations') and as a logical connector in the Epistles (Rom 5:1 'therefore, having been justified'). All 505 occurrences express this single inferential-transitional role, distinguishing it from the causal gar and the adversative alla/de. THEREFORE PARTICLES
en: therefore, therefore- | es: pues | fr: donc | de: nun Matt 1:17; Matt 3:8; Matt 3:10; Matt 5:19; Matt 5:23

οὔπω G3768 Adv (26×)
not yet — a temporal negative adverb indicating that a state or event has not occurred up to the present moment Oupo is a temporal adverb meaning 'not yet,' combining the negative ou with the particle po ('yet, up to now'). Its 26 NT occurrences mark a gap between present reality and expected future fulfillment — something anticipated has not happened but is implicitly on the horizon. Jesus rebukes the disciples: 'Do you not yet understand?' (Matt 16:9; Mark 8:17, 21), implying they should have grasped the lesson by now. The Olivet Discourse warns that wars and rumors of wars signal something larger, 'but the end is not yet' (Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7). In John's Gospel the adverb takes on theological precision: Jesus' 'hour has not yet come' (John 2:4; 7:30; 8:20), the Spirit 'was not yet given' (John 7:39), and Lazarus's tomb is approached with the comment that Jesus 'had not yet come into the village' (John 11:30). Hebrews notes that 'we do not yet see all things subjected to him' (Heb 2:8). Spanish 'todavia no' and French 'pas encore' mirror the construction exactly.

(26×) A temporal negative adverb meaning 'not yet,' indicating that an expected state or event has not occurred up to the present moment but is implicitly anticipated. Used in Jesus' rebuke of the disciples' failure to understand (Matt 16:9; Mark 8:17, 21), the eschatological 'the end is not yet' (Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7), and with rich theological precision in John — Jesus' hour not yet come (John 2:4; 7:30; 8:20), the Spirit not yet given (John 7:39). Spanish 'todavia no' and French 'pas encore' replicate its two-part structure. NEGATION PARTICLES
en: Not-yet, not-yet, yet | es: Todavía-no, aún-no, todavía | fr: pas-encore | de: noch-nicht Matt 16:9; Matt 24:6; Mark 4:40; Mark 8:17; Mark 8:21

οὐρά G3769 N-DFP (5×)
Tail; the tail of a creature, used in Revelation of scorpion-like and serpentine tails wielding destructive power.
A feminine noun meaning tail, used exclusively in Revelation to describe the terrifying appendages of apocalyptic creatures. The locusts of the fifth trumpet have tails like scorpions with stingers that torment for five months (Rev 9:10). The cavalry horses of the sixth trumpet have tails like serpents, with heads that inflict harm (Rev 9:19). The great red dragon's tail sweeps a third of the stars from heaven (Rev 12:4). The Spanish 'cola,' French 'queues,' and German 'Schwänze' all denote animal tails straightforwardly, but in Revelation the word is loaded with symbolic menace.

(5×) Tail — the rear appendage of a creature, used in the NT exclusively in Revelation's apocalyptic visions as instruments of destruction and power. In Rev 9:10 the demonic locusts have scorpion-like tails with stingers that torment humanity. Rev 9:19 describes war-horses whose serpentine tails have heads that deal harm. Most dramatically, Rev 12:4 depicts the dragon's tail sweeping a third of heaven's stars to earth — an image of cosmic devastation. The classical Greek military sense of οὐρά as 'rearguard' may linger in the background, but in the NT the word functions entirely within the symbolic bestiary of Revelation. The Spanish 'cola' and French 'queues' translate the literal sense directly. TAIL BODY PART en: tail, tails | es: cola, colas | fr: queues | de: Schwaenze Rev 9:10; Rev 9:19; Rev 12:4

οὐράν-ιος G3770 Adj-NMS (9×)

Heavenly; belonging to or originating from heaven; pertaining to God's dwelling place or the celestial realm.

Describes what pertains to heaven or originates from the divine realm. In the Gospels, Jesus uses this adjective exclusively of the Father — 'your heavenly Father' (Matt 6:14, 6:26, 6:32) — drawing a contrast between earthly anxiety and the generous provision of God who dwells above. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'celestial,' French 'céleste,' and German 'himmlisch' all converge on a single sense, confirming that this word carried one stable meaning throughout the New Testament rather than shifting between literal sky-language and theological metaphor.

(9×) Pertaining to heaven as God's dwelling place or realm of origin, used adjectivally to qualify the Father, his kingdom, or things associated with the divine sphere. Every NT occurrence (Matt 5:48, 6:14, 6:26, 6:32, 15:13, Luke 2:13) modifies a noun tied to God's activity — Father, planting, host — so the word functions less as a cosmological descriptor and more as a theological marker of divine provenance and authority. The cross-linguistic uniformity (eng 'heavenly,' spa 'celestial,' fra 'céleste,' deu 'himmlisch') confirms a single cohesive sense. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: heavenly | es: celestial | fr: céleste | de: himmlisch Matt 5:48; Matt 6:14; Matt 6:26; Matt 6:32; Matt 15:13

οὐρᾰνό-θεν G3771 Adv (2×)

from heaven, down from heaven

This adverb denotes motion or origin from heaven downward. Classical texts often combine it with prepositions (apo, ex, kata) to emphasize direction from the celestial realm to earth. In Acts 14:17, Paul tells the Lycaonians that God gives rain and fruitful seasons 'from heaven.' In Acts 26:13, Paul recounts seeing a light 'from heaven' brighter than the sun on the Damascus road. Both uses emphasize the divine origin and downward trajectory of revelation or blessing—whether providential care or apocalyptic encounter.

(2×) Both occurrences in Acts describe phenomena originating in the heavenly realm and descending to earth. The multilingual glosses preserve the directional sense: English 'from-heaven,' Spanish 'desde-cielo, desde-el-cielo,' French 'du-ciel.' Acts 14:17 speaks of rain and blessing descending from God's dwelling; Acts 26:13 describes supernatural light shining down. The adverb emphasizes not just heavenly origin but the downward motion toward human experience —grace, revelation, and divine intervention breaking into earthly reality. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: from-heaven | es: desde-cielo, desde-el-cielo | fr: du-ciel | de: οὐρανόθεν Acts 14:17; Acts 26:13

οὐρᾰνός G3772 N-AMS (279×)

Heaven, sky; the visible firmament above and the divine dwelling place or realm of God

Greek ouranos spans two conceptual zones that English splits into 'sky' and 'heaven.' In the New Testament's 278 occurrences, it can denote the physical expanse where birds fly and stars shine (Matt 6:26), the firmament that will one day pass away (Matt 5:18), or the transcendent dwelling of God and destination of the faithful (Matt 6:20). Jesus frequently pairs it with earth to encompass all reality: 'Your will be done on earth as it is in heaven' (Matt 6:10). Spanish cielo, French ciel, and German Himmel each preserve this same productive ambiguity between the physical and the divine.

1. heaven (divine dwelling, transcendent realm) (225×) Split from sense 73571. Criteria: The dwelling place of God and seat of divine authority: 'Our Father in heaven' (Matt 6:9), 'kingdom of heaven' (Matt 3:2), 'treasures in heaven' (Matt 6:20), 'authority given from heaven' (John 19:11). The transcendent spiritual realm distinct from the visible sky.

en: having-taken, heaven | es: cielo, habiendo-tomado | fr: ciel, prendre | de: Himmel, nimmt Matt 5:34; Matt 6:10; Matt 6:20; Matt 11:23; Matt 11:25

2. sky, firmament, atmosphere (physical realm) (53×) Split from sense 73571. Criteria: The visible vault overhead: birds of the sky (Matt 6:26; 16:2-3), stars falling from heaven (Matt 24:29), clouds of heaven. Observable natural phenomena and physical space above the earth.

en: heaven, sky | es: cielo | fr: ciel | de: Himmel Matt 5:18; Matt 6:26; Matt 8:20; Matt 13:32; Matt 16:2

Οὐρβανός G3773 N-AMS (1×)

Urbanus (Latin personal name, meaning 'of the city')

This is the Greek form of the Latin name Urbanus, meaning 'urban' or 'of the city.' Paul sends greetings to this individual in his letter to the Romans, identifying him as 'our fellow worker in Christ.' The name suggests Roman citizenship or urban origins, common among slaves and freedmen in the imperial capital. That Paul calls him a co-worker indicates active participation in ministry. The name itself appears with slight variations across languages, reflecting transliteration conventions.

(1×) Romans 16:9 mentions Urbanus among those to whom Paul sends greetings, calling him 'our fellow worker in Christ.' The personal name, Latin in origin, marks him as likely part of the Roman Christian community. Paul's designation 'fellow worker' places Urbanus among those actively engaged in gospel ministry, though we know nothing more of his specific contributions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ourbanos | es: a-Ourbanón | fr: Urbain | de: Urbanus Rom 16:9

Οὐρίας G3774 N-GMS (1×)

Uriah (Hebrew personal name, 'YHWH is my light')

This is the Greek rendering of the Hebrew name Uriah, most famously borne by the Hittite warrior whose wife Bathsheba was taken by King David. Matthew includes him in Jesus' genealogy, one of the few names mentioned alongside a moral scandal. The name itself means 'YHWH is my light,' an ironic echo given how David's sin cast darkness over Uriah's household. The genealogy doesn't hide the sordid history but integrates it, showing that Messiah's lineage includes sinners and victims alike.

(1×) Matthew 1:6 identifies Solomon as born 'of her who had been the wife of Uriah,' referencing Bathsheba without naming her directly. The phrasing foregrounds the scandal: Uriah's violation and murder loom in the background of David's otherwise celebrated reign. Including this detail in Messiah's genealogy signals that God's redemptive purposes work through flawed humans and broken histories. URIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: of-Ourias | es: Ouríou | fr: Urie | de: Uria Matt 1:6

οὖς G3775 N-NNS (37×)

ear — the physical organ of hearing, used literally and figuratively for spiritual receptivity or refusal

Ous is the standard Greek word for the ear, appearing 37 times across the NT with a striking split between literal and figurative uses. On the literal side, Peter cuts off the ear of the high priest's servant (Matt 26:51; Mark 14:47; Luke 22:50; John 18:10, 26), and Jesus heals it (Luke 22:51). On the figurative side, the refrain 'he who has ears to hear, let him hear' punctuates Jesus' parable discourse (Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23) and recurs in Revelation's letters to the seven churches (Rev 2:7, 11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22). Stephen's accusation that his hearers are 'uncircumcised in ears' (Acts 7:51) draws on the prophetic tradition of Isaiah 6:10, where God hardens the people's ears. The Spanish 'oidos' and German 'Ohr' track the literal sense, while context alone signals the metaphorical leap.

ear (body part) (37×) The physical organ of hearing, employed both for the literal body part and as a figure for spiritual perception or its absence. Literal uses include the high priest's servant whose ear Peter severed (Luke 22:50; John 18:10, 26) and the whispered-then-proclaimed message of Matt 10:27. The figurative refrain 'he who has ears, let him hear' (Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23; Rev 2-3) makes the ear a metonym for willing receptivity. The Isaiah 6:10 tradition of 'heavy ears' that refuse to hear reverberates through

Acts 7:51 and Acts 28:27, where the ear becomes a site of spiritual resistance. HEARING AND EAR

en: ears | es: oídos | fr: oreille | de: Ohr Matt 10:27; Matt 11:15; Matt 13:9; Matt 13:15

οὐσί-α G3776 N-AFS (2×)

property, possessions, wealth; substance or estate

The basic meaning is what belongs to one—property, possessions, substance, or estate. Philosophically, it can mean 'being' or 'essence,' but in ordinary usage it denotes material wealth. Classical texts distinguish between visible property (real estate) and invisible assets (movables). Both New Testament occurrences appear in the parable of the Prodigal Son. The younger son asks for his share of the 'property' (Luke 15:12), then squanders the 'property' in dissolute living (15:13). The word emphasizes tangible wealth, inheritance, and the means of livelihood.

(2×) Luke 15:12-13 uses the accusative singular to describe the father's estate that the younger son claims and wastes. The translations render it as material wealth: English 'property,' Spanish 'hacienda' (estate), French 'bien' (goods). The context emphasizes divisible family wealth—what can be portioned, possessed, and squandered. The younger son's request effectively treats his father as dead, claiming his inheritance prematurely, then converting it to cash and wasting it, illustrating the tangible, material nature of ousia in this usage. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY en: property | es: hacienda | fr: bien | de: οὐσίαν, οὐσίας Luke 15:12; Luke 15:13

οὔτε G3777 Conj (87×)

Neither…nor; a correlative negative conjunction coordinating negated clauses or items

Oute is the Greek negative correlative conjunction, typically used in paired constructions (oute...oute) to negate two or more coordinated elements: 'neither...nor.' Jesus teaches that heavenly treasure suffers neither moth nor rust (Matt 6:20), and that blasphemy against the Spirit will be forgiven neither in this age nor the next (Matt 12:32). Paul employs extended oute-chains to catalog what cannot separate believers from God's love (Rom 8:38–39). The conjunction appears with remarkable consistency across all 87 occurrences, and translations uniformly render it with correlative negatives: Spanish 'ni,' French 'ni,' German 'weder.'

neither, nor (negative conjunction) (87×) A correlative negative conjunction that coordinates negated elements, characteristically appearing in oute...oute pairs meaning 'neither...nor.' It structures comprehensive negations, from Jesus' teaching on heavenly treasure immune to moth and rust (Matt 6:20) to Paul's soaring declaration that neither death nor life nor any created thing can separate from God's love (Rom 8:38–39). The uniform cross-linguistic rendering — Spanish 'ni,' French 'ni,' German 'weder' — confirms a single grammatical function across all 87 New Testament uses. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Neither, neither, neither- | es: ni | fr: ni, ni- | de: weder Matt 6:20; Matt 12:32; Matt 22:30

οὗτος G3778 DPro-NFS (1399×)

This, this one, these — near demonstrative pronoun for persons, things, and explanatory constructions

The demonstrative pronoun οὗτος (masculine), αὕτη (feminine), τοῦτο (neuter) is the Greek New Testament's primary tool for pointing to what is near, present, or just mentioned. It refers to things and situations ('because of this,' Matt 6:25), identifies specific persons ('this is he of whom it is written,' Matt 11:10), and occasionally introduces explanatory glosses — τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν, 'that is to say' (Rom 9:8). The distinction between its thing-reference and person-reference senses is confirmed by multilingual gloss patterns.

1. this thing, these things (1003×) Demonstrative pronoun pointing to things, concepts, situations, or abstract realities — the neuter and general usage. This is the most frequent sense, covering over 1,000 occurrences. It appears in phrases like διὰ τοῦτο ('because of this,' Matt 6:25), μετὰ ταῦτα ('after these things'), and ταῦτα πάντα ('all these things,' Matt 6:33). Glosses converge on neuter demonstratives: 'esto,' 'ceci,' 'dieses.' DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: esto | fr: ceci | de: diese, dieses Matt 6:25; Matt 8:9; Matt 12:27; Matt 13:13; Matt 18:23

2. this person, these people (383×) Demonstrative pronoun referring to specific persons: 'this one,' 'this man,' 'this woman,' 'these people.' Used as a substantive in masculine and feminine forms, it identifies individuals within the narrative. Matt 3:3 ('this is he who was spoken of'), Matt 12:23 ('could this be the Son of David?'), and Matt 11:10 all illustrate personal reference. Spanish 'éste/este' and French 'celui-ci' distinctly mark personal rather than thing-reference. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: This, This-one, this | es: Este, este, éste | fr: celui-ci | de: diese, dieser Matt 3:3; Matt 5:19; Matt 10:22; Matt 11:10; Matt 12:23

3. that is, namely (13×) A discourse-level use where the demonstrative introduces an explanatory or epexegetical clause, functioning as 'that is,' 'that is to say,' or 'namely.' The construction τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν appears in Rom 9:8 ('that is, it is not the children of the flesh'), Rom 10:6, and Mark 7:2 ('that is, unwashed'). This metalinguistic glossing function is rare (about 13 occurrences) but recognizable across languages by the explanatory framing rather than simple pointing. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that, that-, that-is | es: esto, esto', esto-es | fr: ceci, celui-ci | de: diese, dieses Mark 7:2; Acts 19:4; Rom 7:18; Rom 9:8; Rom 10:6

οὕτως G3779 Adv (209×)

Thus, so, in this way – adverb of manner pointing to how something is done or occurs.

Houtos (before consonants houto) is the demonstrative adverb derived from houtos ('this'), meaning 'in this way' or 'so.' It frequently introduces or concludes comparisons and analogies: 'For God so loved the world' (John 3:16), where it intensifies the manner of divine love. It also serves as a discourse connector summarizing what precedes ('thus it happened') or pointing forward to what follows. Spanish renders it 'asi,' French 'ainsi,' German 'so,' and Hindi 'aise' – all confirming a single manner-demonstrative function across languages. Jesus uses it repeatedly in the Sermon on the Mount to draw moral parallels (Matt 5:12, 16).

thus, so, in this manner (209×) Demonstrative adverb of manner meaning 'in this way,' 'thus,' or 'so,' derived from the pronoun houtos. Functions both anaphorically (pointing back to what was described) and cataphorically (pointing forward, often paired with kathos or hosper). Carries intensifying force in passages like John 3:16 ('God so loved the world') and structuring force in Jesus' teaching (Matt 5:12, 5:16). Spanish 'asi,' French 'ainsi,' German 'so,' and Hindi 'aise' uniformly confirm a single manner-demonstrative sense with no semantic subdivision. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, thus | es: Así, así | fr: ainsi | de: so Matt 1:18; Matt 2:5; Matt 3:15; Matt 5:12; Matt 5:16 οὐ G3780 Adv (53×)

not? do not? — a rhetorical negative particle expecting an affirmative answer

Ouchi is a strengthened form of the Greek negative ou, used almost exclusively in rhetorical questions that expect the hearer to agree: 'Do not even the tax collectors do the same?' (Matt 5:46). Its 53 occurrences appear overwhelmingly in direct speech — Jesus challenging his listeners, Paul pressing an argument, or a narrator posing a pointed question. The rhetorical force transforms negation into affirmation: by asking 'is it not so?,' the speaker compels assent. Spanish captures this with '(acaso) no,' French with 'est-ce que... ne pas,' and German with 'nicht' in interrogative constructions — each language employing its own mechanism for signaling that a negative question expects a positive response.

not? (rhetorical/interrogative negation) (53×) A strengthened negative particle (ou + chi) employed in rhetorical questions that anticipate an affirmative answer, effectively functioning as an appeal for agreement rather than a true negation. Jesus uses it repeatedly in the Sermon on the Mount to challenge minimalist ethics (Matt 5:46-47 'do not even the tax collectors do the same?') and to argue from lesser to greater (Matt 6:25-26 'is not life more than food?'). All 53 occurrences serve this rhetorical-interrogative function, distinguishing ouchi from the plain declarative negative ou. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Not, Was-not, not | es: No, acaso-no, no | fr: est-ce-que | de: nicht Matt 5:46; Matt 5:47; Matt 6:25; Matt 10:29; Matt 12:11

ὀφειλ-έτης G3781 N-NMP (7×)

A debtor, one who owes; used literally of financial obligation and figuratively of moral or spiritual indebtedness.

Opheiletes denotes someone under obligation, whether monetary or moral. In the Lord's Prayer (Matt 6:12), 'our debtors' are those who have sinned against us, collapsing financial and moral debt into a single image. The parable of the unforgiving servant (Matt 18:24) features a debtor who owes ten thousand talents, an absurdly vast sum meant to picture the unpayable debt of sin before God. Paul calls himself a 'debtor' to both Greeks and barbarians (Rom 1:14), meaning he is under obligation to preach the gospel to all. Spanish 'deudor' and German 'Schuldner' both derive from words meaning 'guilt/debt,' preserving the same moral-financial ambiguity that makes this word so theologically fertile.

debtor, one who owes (7×) A person who owes a debt, whether financial or moral/spiritual, and is therefore under obligation. The NT exploits the overlap between literal and figurative debt with great theological effect. In Matt 6:12 Jesus teaches his disciples to pray for forgiveness using debtor language, and in Matt 18:24 the parable's enormous debt (ten thousand talents) illustrates the infinite scale of divine forgiveness. Luke 13:4 uses opheiletes of the eighteen killed by the tower of Siloam, meaning 'guilty ones' or those under moral debt. Paul extends it to apostolic obligation (Rom 1:14) and to the Spirit-led life (Rom 8:12, 'we are debtors, not to the flesh'). Spanish 'deudor' and German 'Schuldner' both carry the dual financial-moral valence. WAGES AND REWARD

en: a-debtor, debtor, debtors | es: deudor, deudores | fr: débiteur | de: Schuldner, ὀφειλέται, ὀφειλέταις Matt 6:12; Matt 18:24; Luke 13:4; Rom 1:14; Rom 8:12

ὀφειλ-ή G3782 N-AFS (3×)

debt, what is owed; obligation, whether financial or moral duty

This noun denotes what is owed—a debt in the financial sense or an obligation in the moral sense. In Matthew's parable, the servant's debt is forgiven (Matt 18:32). Paul uses it both literally, urging payment of what is owed to authorities (Rom 13:7), and figuratively for the marital duty spouses owe each other (1 Cor 7:3). The term bridges economic and ethical domains, reminding us that obligations —whether monetary or relational—carry real weight and demand fulfillment.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows both concrete financial debt and abstract duty: English 'debt/debts/duty', Spanish 'deuda/deudas', French 'dette', German 'Schulden/ὀφειλήν'. The lexicon distinguishes financial debt (primary meaning) from 'one's due' (moral obligation). Matthew 18:32 uses it for monetary debt forgiven by the king. Romans 13:7 emphasizes civic obligations ('pay what is owed'). 1 Corinthians 7:3 speaks of conjugal duty. The word encompasses both concrete financial obligation and abstract moral responsibility. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15110 WITH 5 SENSES

en: debt, debts, duty | es: deuda, deudas | fr: dette | de: Schulden, ὀφειλήν Matt 18:32; Rom 13:7; 1Cor 7:3

ὀφείλ-ημα G3783 N-ANS (2×)

that which is owed, a debt or obligation

This noun denotes what is owed—a debt, whether financial or moral. Classical usage covers monetary debts and obligations. In the New Testament, both uses carry theological weight. Matthew 6:12 contains the Lord's Prayer petition: 'forgive us our debts,' using the term metaphorically for sins as obligations owed to God. Romans 4:4 contrasts grace with wages, noting that to one who works, payment is reckoned not as gift but as 'debt'—what is owed. The word bridges commercial and moral spheres, making obligation and indebtedness central to understanding sin and grace.

(2×) Matthew 6:12 uses the neuter plural for sins conceived as debts owed to God, while Romans 4:4 uses the singular for wages owed to a worker. The multilingual translations clearly render 'debt/debts': Spanish 'deuda, deudas,' French 'dette,' German 'Schuld' (which like English encompasses both financial debt and moral guilt). The Lord's Prayer thus frames sin as indebtedness requiring cancellation or forgiveness, while Paul uses commercial debt-language to clarify that grace cannot be earned—what is owed is not a gift. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15110 WITH 5 SENSES

en: debt, debts | es: deuda, deudas | fr: dette | de: Schuld, ὀφειλήματα Matt 6:12; Rom 4:4

ὀφείλ-ω G3784 V-PIA-3P (35×)

To owe; to be obligated — morally (ought, must) or financially (to owe a debt)

A verb spanning the concrete world of monetary debt and the abstract realm of moral duty. In Jesus' parable of the unforgiving servant (Matt 18:28–34), the word carries its literal financial force — one slave 'owes' another a hundred denarii. Yet in the Upper Room Jesus declares that if he washed their feet, they 'ought' to wash one another's (John 13:14). Spanish 'debe/debes' and French 'devoir' preserve the same ambiguity between financial and moral obligation, while the Matthean parables consistently trigger the financial reading and the epistolary literature triggers the moral one.

1. ought, to be morally obligated (25×) Moral or ethical obligation: to be duty-bound, to be fitting or necessary. The dominant NT sense (25 of 35 occurrences), used for what one should do before God or neighbor. All major translations converge on obligation language (spa 'debe', fra 'devoir', deu 'schulden'). Central in Jesus' teaching (Luke 17:10 'we are unworthy servants; we have only done what we ought') and apostolic exhortation (John 13:14; 1 John 4:11). NECESSITY AND OBLIGATION

en: We-ought, he-is-obligated, he-ought | es: debe, debemos, deben | fr: devoir | de: schulden, schuldet Matt 23:16; Matt 23:18; Luke 17:10; John 13:14; John 19:7

2. to owe a debt (10×) Financial indebtedness: to owe money, goods, or a quantifiable debt. Concentrated in the parables of Matt 18:28–34 (the two debtors) and Luke 7:41 (the moneylender). English distinguishes 'owe' from 'ought', and the parabolic contexts make amounts explicit ('a hundred denarii', 'five hundred denarii'), confirming the concrete economic reading. Also in Rom 13:8 'owe no one anything' and Phlm 1:18, where Paul assumes Onesimus's material debt. NECESSITY AND OBLIGATION

en: being-owed, do-you-owe, owe | es: debe, debes, debido | fr: devoir | de: schulden, schuldet Matt 18:28; Matt 18:30; Matt 18:34; Luke 7:41

ὀφείλ-ω G3785 I (4×)

Would that! I wish; an exclamatory particle expressing a strong, often unrealizable desire.

An interjection (historically a past-tense form of 'to owe') used to express a fervent wish, often tinged with irony or frustration. Paul deploys it with biting rhetoric: 'I wish you did reign!' (1 Cor 4:8), 'I wish you would bear with me' (2 Cor 11:1), and most strikingly, 'I wish those who unsettle you would castrate themselves!' (Gal 5:12). In Rev 3:15 Christ says 'I wish you were cold or hot.' Spanish 'ojalá' (from Arabic 'if God wills') captures the optative force beautifully, while French 'si seulement' and German 'doch' convey the wistful longing. Each occurrence carries emotional weight far beyond a simple wish.

(4×) Would that, I wish — a strong optative exclamation expressing desire for an unlikely or unrealized state. Paul uses it with rhetorical edge in 1 Cor 4:8 (ironic wish that the Corinthians truly reigned), 2 Cor 11:1 (plea for tolerance), and Gal 5:12 (shocking wish about the Judaizers). Christ's rebuke in Rev 3:15 adds divine pathos. Spanish

'ojalá' perfectly mirrors the optative mood, while German 'doch' and French 'si seulement' each capture a different shade of the longing—from resigned wish to urgent desire. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES
en: I-wish, would-that | es: Ojalá, ojalá, ¡ojalá | fr: doch, si-seulement | de: doch 1Cor 4:8; 2Cor 11:1; Gal 5:12; Rev 3:15

ὄφελος G3786 N-NNS (3×)

profit, advantage, benefit; what is helpful or useful, often in rhetorical questions about ultimate value

Meaning profit or advantage, this word appears in searching rhetorical questions about genuine benefit. Paul asks, 'What profit is there if the dead are not raised?' (1 Cor 15:32). James twice challenges readers about empty faith: 'What profit is it if someone claims faith but has no works?' (Jas 2:14, 16). The term probes beyond surface appearances to ask what truly helps or benefits. Originally denoting furtherance or help in classical Greek, it carries a sense of practical, tangible advantage.

(3×) The translations consistently render this as 'profit' or 'advantage': English 'profit', Spanish 'provecho', French 'avantage', German 'Nutzen'. The lexicon traces it back to Homeric 'furtherance, advantage, help' (ὀφέλλω). All three NT occurrences are in rhetorical questions probing real versus illusory benefit: Paul questions the profit of living 'like a beast' if there's no resurrection (1 Cor 15:32), while James twice asks what profit faith without works provides (Jas 2:14, 16). The word challenges readers to consider ultimate, not superficial, advantage. GAIN AND GREED en: profit | es: provecho | fr: avantage, ὄφελος | de: Nutzen 1Cor 15:32; Jas 2:14; Jas 2:16

ὀφθαλμο-δουλεία G3787 N-AFS (2×)

eye-service, service performed only when being watched

This compound noun describes service rendered only when under observation—working to impress human masters rather than from genuine devotion. It appears only in the New Testament and captures the vice of superficial, performative obedience. Both occurrences address Christian slaves, warning against this duplicity. Ephesians 6:6 and Colossians 3:22 both prohibit 'eye-service as people-pleasers,' urging instead sincere service as to Christ. The term vividly names the temptation to slack off when unsupervised, working diligently only when watched.

(2×) Paul uses this term in parallel passages (Ephesians 6:6, Colossians 3:22) within instructions to slaves. Both contexts contrast eye-service with wholehearted devotion. The multilingual glosses render the compound literally: English 'eye-service,' Spanish 'servicio-del-ojo, servicios-de-ojo,' German 'Augendienerei.' The concept identifies the hypocrisy of performing well only under direct observation, working for human approval rather than divine accountability. The term exposes the divided heart that performs externally while internally disengaged. SERVING AND MINISTRY en: eye-service | es: servicio-del-ojo, servicios-de-ojo | fr: ὀφθαλμοδουλίαις, ὀφθαλμοδουλίαν | de: Augendienerei Eph 6:6; Col 3:22

ὀφθαλμός G3788 N-DMS (100×)

Eye, eyes — the organ of sight; figuratively, spiritual perception, moral disposition, or the focal point of desire and judgment

Ophthalmos spans literal and figurative territory across its 100 New Testament occurrences. Physically, it denotes the organ of sight in healing narratives — Jesus touches blind eyes and they see (Matt 9:29-30; John 9:6). Figuratively, Jesus calls the eye 'the lamp of the body,' through which light or darkness enters the whole person (Matt 6:22-23). Paul prays that 'the eyes of your heart' be enlightened (Eph 1:18), while the 'evil eye' in Semitic idiom signals envy or grudging generosity (Matt 20:15; Mark 7:22). The eye thus becomes a window into the moral and spiritual condition of the whole person, a metaphor equally at home in Spanish 'ojos,' French 'oeil,' and German 'Auge.'

eye, eyes (organ of sight) (100×) The physical organ of sight, used literally for seeing and blindness (Matt 9:29-30; John 9:10-11) and figuratively as a lens into the moral and spiritual condition of the person. Jesus' teaching that 'the eye is the lamp of the body' (Matt 6:22-23) makes the eye a barometer of inner light or darkness. Paul extends the metaphor to spiritual perception — 'the eyes of your heart' (Eph 1:18). The Semitic 'evil eye' idiom for envy (Matt 20:15) adds a further moral layer. Spanish 'ojos,' French 'oeil,' and German 'Auge' all preserve the literal-to-figurative range without needing separate lexemes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: eyes, the-eyes | es: ojos | fr: œil | de: Auge, Augen Matt 9:29; Matt 9:30; Matt 13:15; Matt 13:16

ὄφις G3789 N-GMP (14×)

serpent, snake — a reptile used literally and as a symbol of cunning, evil, and satanic deception

Ophis is the standard Greek word for a snake, but in the New Testament it is theologically supercharged by the Genesis tradition. The serpent of Eden stands behind nearly every figurative use: Paul warns that as the serpent deceived Eve, false teachers may corrupt the Corinthians (2 Cor 11:3); Revelation explicitly identifies the 'ancient serpent' as the devil (Rev 12:9, 14, 15; 20:2). Yet Jesus also deploys the image positively — 'be wise as serpents' (Matt 10:16) — and promises that believers will handle serpents without harm (Mark 16:18; Luke 10:19). The Pharisees receive the withering epithet 'serpents, brood of vipers' (Matt 23:33). Spanish 'serpiente,' French 'serpent,' and German 'Schlange' map cleanly to both the zoological and the symbolic registers.

serpent, snake (14×) A serpent or snake, encompassing both the literal reptile and its rich symbolic freight. Refers to actual snakes that can be handled or that bite (Mark 16:18; Luke 10:19; 1 Cor 10:9), to the cunning quality Jesus commends to his disciples (Matt 10:16, 'wise as serpents'), to the Genesis tempter whose deception Paul invokes (2 Cor 11:3), and to the apocalyptic 'ancient serpent' identified with Satan (Rev 12:9, 14, 15; 20:2). Jesus also uses it as an insult against the Pharisees (Matt 23:33), and as part of a father-child analogy: no one gives a child a serpent when asked for a fish (Matt 7:10; Luke 11:11). SERPENTS AND SNAKES
en: a-serpent, anything, serpent | es: a-serpientes, serpiente, serpientes | fr: serpent | de: Schlange Matt 7:10; Matt 10:16; Matt 23:33; Mark 16:18; Luke 10:19

ὀφρῦς G3790 N-GFS (1×)

brow (of a hill), ridge or edge

While this word primarily means 'eyebrow' in classical Greek, in Luke it denotes the brow or edge of a hill—the steep rim where the slope breaks sharply. Luke describes the Nazareth mob driving Jesus to the brow of the hill on which their town was built, intending to throw him off. The term evokes a precipitous edge, a place of danger where one misstep means a deadly fall. Multilingual glosses vary: Spanish 'ceja' (eyebrow), French 'bord' (edge), showing the metaphorical transfer from facial feature to geographical feature.

(1×) Luke 4:29 recounts how the Nazareth synagogue crowd, enraged by Jesus' sermon, drove him to 'the brow of the hill' to hurl him down. The word captures the dangerous edge, the point where solid ground gives way to air. That they intended to kill him by pushing him off this precipice underscores the murderous intent provoked by his claims about prophets and Gentiles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: brow | es: ceja | fr: bord | de: ὀφρύος Luke 4:29

ὀχλ-έω G3791 V-PPM/P-AMP (1×)

troubled, harassed, disturbed by illness or affliction

This verb describes being troubled, disturbed, or afflicted—often by illness, demonic oppression, or external harassment. Acts uses it to describe people tormented by unclean spirits. The root idea involves being jostled, disrupted, or thrown into disorder. Across languages, translators capture the distress: Spanish 'atormentados,' French 'tourmenter.' The passive form suggests being acted upon by external forces, whether spiritual or physical, that rob one of peace and wholeness.

(1×) Acts 5:16 reports crowds bringing the sick and 'those being troubled by unclean spirits,' all of whom were healed. The participle describes ongoing affliction, a sustained state of torment imposed by demonic powers. The context highlights the contrast: what evil spirits disrupt and disorder, apostolic ministry restores to wholeness and peace through Christ's authority. TORMENT AND TORTURE

en: being-troubled | es: atormentados | fr: tourmenter | de: ὀχλουμένους Acts 5:16

ὀχλο-ποιέω G3792 V-APA-NMP (1×)

form a mob, gather a riotous crowd

This compound verb means to create or assemble a mob, typically for riotous or violent purposes. Acts uses it to describe how opponents in Thessalonica recruited troublemakers to stir up civic unrest against Paul and Silas. The word combines 'crowd' (ὄχλος) with 'make' (ποιέω), denoting deliberate crowd manipulation. It suggests organized agitation rather than spontaneous gathering—someone is engineering chaos. The term captures the dangerous intersection of religious opposition and civic disorder.

(1×) Acts 17:5 describes how jealous Jews in Thessalonica, recruiting 'some wicked men from the marketplace,' 'formed a mob' to set the city in an uproar. The verb emphasizes intentionality: this wasn't organic public anger but manufactured outrage. By assembling a rent-a-mob, opponents weaponized civic unrest to silence the gospel, demonstrating how easily crowds can be manipulated for political ends. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: having-formed-a-mob | es: formando-turba | fr: foule | de: ὀχλοποιήσαντες Acts 17:5

ὄχλος G3793 N-GMS (175×)

Crowd, multitude, throng — a gathered mass of people, especially those following Jesus or assembling in public

Greek ochlos is the Gospels' word for the pressing, curious, sometimes fickle crowds that surround Jesus. It carries a faintly populist, even dismissive nuance inherited from classical Greek, where ochlos could mean 'mob' in contrast to demos ('the people'). In the New Testament, the ochlos follows Jesus for healing (Matt 14:14), blocks access to him (Mark 2:4), and ultimately shifts allegiance at the trial (Matt 27:20). Luke and Acts also use it for general urban gatherings. Spanish multitud, French foule, and German Volksmenge capture the sense of an undifferentiated mass distinct from organized assembly.

crowd, multitude, throng (175×) A gathering of people viewed as a mass rather than an organized body — the crowd, multitude, or throng. In the Gospels, the ochlos is the ever-present popular audience around Jesus, drawn by miracles and teaching (Matt 14:5; Mark 2:4). The term carries a faint class nuance from classical Greek (mob vs. citizenry) that surfaces in passages like John 7:49. Spanish multitud and French foule both preserve the sense of an undifferentiated popular gathering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-crowd, crowd | es: multitud | fr: foule | de: Menge, Volksmenge Matt 8:18; Matt 9:23; Matt 9:25; Matt 13:2; Matt 14:5

ὀχῠρ-ωμα G3794 N-GNP (1×)

stronghold, fortress, fortified place

This noun denotes a military stronghold or fortress, a place fortified against attack. Paul uses it metaphorically in 2 Corinthians to describe ideological strongholds—mental fortresses of pride and false reasoning that resist the knowledge of God. The military image is deliberate: these aren't flimsy shelters but entrenched positions requiring divine power to demolish. Across languages—Spanish 'fortalezas,' French 'forteresse,' German 'Festung'—the martial imagery persists. The word evokes high walls, defensive positions, and stubborn resistance.

(1×) 2 Corinthians 10:4 declares that the weapons of our warfare are mighty for 'destroying strongholds,' referring not to physical fortifications but to arguments and pretensions that oppose God. Paul's metaphor pictures the mind as a battlefield where false ideologies erect defensive walls. Only divine power can breach these fortresses, liberating captive thoughts to obey Christ. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: of-strongholds | es: de-fortalezas | fr: forteresse | de: Festung 2Cor 10:4

ὀψ-άριον G3795 N-ANS (5×)

Small fish, cooked fish; a diminutive for prepared fish served as a side dish or relish alongside bread.

A diminutive of ὄψον (cooked food, relish), designating a small or prepared fish typically eaten as a side accompaniment to bread. All five occurrences appear in John's Gospel in two feeding contexts. In the feeding of the five thousand, a boy provides five barley loaves and two ὀψάρια (John 6:9, 11). In the post-resurrection lakeside breakfast, Jesus has fish already laid on charcoal (John 21:9), asks the disciples to bring some of their catch (21:10), and serves bread and fish (21:13). The Spanish 'pescaditos' beautifully preserves the diminutive quality, as does French 'petit poisson.'

(5×) Small or prepared fish — a diminutive noun denoting fish as food, particularly as a relish or side dish eaten with bread. Distinguished from ἰχθύς (fish as a living creature), ὀψάριον emphasizes the culinary dimension. John uses it in both miracle feedings: the boy's two small fish alongside five loaves (John 6:9, 11), and the charcoal-grilled fish at the resurrection breakfast by the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:9, 10, 13). The diminutive form may suggest modest size or humble fare. The Spanish 'pescaditos' (little fish) and French 'petit poisson' both preserve the diminutive sense that the English 'fish' alone cannot convey. The word's restriction to John may reflect Johannine vocabulary preference. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fish, small-fish | es: pescaditos, pescado, pescados | fr: petit-poisson | de: Fisch John 6:9; John 6:11; John 21:9; John 21:10; John 21:13

ὀψέ G3796 Prep (4×)

Late, at evening; after a long time; marking the late or concluding portion of a day or period.

An adverb of time indicating lateness—either late in the day (evening) or after a considerable interval. Its most theologically significant use is Matt 28:1, where 'late on the Sabbath' marks the transition toward resurrection morning, a passage much debated regarding whether it means 'after the Sabbath' or 'late on the Sabbath evening.' In Mark 11:11 and 11:19 it simply notes Jesus leaving the temple 'at evening,' and Mark 13:35 lists 'evening' among the watches of the night. Spanish 'tarde' and French 'le soir' both render the temporal lateness straightforwardly, though the Matt 28:1 usage remains a celebrated crux of New Testament chronology.

(4×) Late, at evening — marking the concluding portion of a day or an elapsed interval. In Mark 11:11 and 11:19, Jesus departs the temple 'when evening came,' and Mark 13:35 lists it among the four watches. The Matt 28:1 occurrence is famously ambiguous: does 'opsé sabbatōn' mean 'late on the Sabbath' or 'after the Sabbath'? Spanish 'tarde' and French 'le soir' both lean toward simple temporal lateness. The word's range from 'late in the day' to 'after a long time' explains the ongoing scholarly debate about the resurrection timeline. EVENING AND TWILIGHT

en: Late, evening, late | es: Tarde, tarde | fr: le-soir | de: ὀψὲ, Ὀψὲ Matt 28:1; Mark 11:11; Mark 11:19; Mark 13:35

ὄψῐμος G3797 Adj-AMS (1×)

latter rain, spring rain (agricultural term)

This adjective describes the late or spring rains crucial for bringing crops to maturity in the Mediterranean agricultural cycle. James uses it in an exhortation to patience, pointing to the farmer who waits for both early and late rains. The term distinguishes the spring rains (March-April) from the autumn rains that initiate growth. These latter rains were essential for ripening grain before harvest; without them, crops would wither. The word carries agricultural urgency: the farmer's livelihood depends on this final blessing.

(1×) James 5:7 encourages patience 'until the coming of the Lord,' using the farmer waiting for 'the early and late rain' as an analogy. The 'late rain' represents the final necessary ingredient before harvest. Just as the farmer cannot hurry the rain but must wait with patient expectation, believers await Christ's return, trusting God's timing for the consummation of all things. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: late-rain | es: tardía | fr: ὄψιμον | de: spaet Jas 5:7

ὀψία G3798 Adj-GFS (14×)

evening — the latter part of the day, from late afternoon through nightfall

Opsia (or opsios as an adjective) designates the closing hours of the day, roughly from mid-afternoon onward. In the Gospel narratives it serves as a crucial time-marker: Jesus heals the sick 'when evening came' (Matt 8:16), the feeding miracles begin as evening falls (Matt 14:15, 23; Mark 6:47), and the burial of Jesus takes place toward evening (Matt 27:57; Mark 15:42). Jewish reckoning recognized two 'evenings' — one in the declining afternoon and another at sunset — which explains why Matthew can note evening twice in the same feeding narrative (Matt 14:15 and 14:23). Spanish 'tarde,' French 'soir,' and German 'Abend' all capture this twilight-to-dark window.

evening (14×) Evening — the latter portion of the day, spanning from late afternoon through sunset and into early nightfall. Functions primarily as a narrative time-marker in the Gospels: healing scenes (Matt 8:16; Mark 1:32), the feeding miracles (Matt 14:15, 23; Mark 6:47), weather observation (Matt 16:2), the paying of laborers at day's end (Matt 20:8), the Last Supper (Matt 26:20; Mark 14:17), and the burial of Jesus (Matt 27:57; Mark 15:42; John 6:16; 20:19). The dual Jewish concept of 'between the evenings' explains why evening is mentioned twice in the feeding narratives without contradiction. EVENING AND TWILIGHT

en: Evening, evening | es: De-tarde, Tarde, la-tarde | fr: soir | de: Abend Matt 8:16; Matt 14:15; Matt 14:23; Matt 16:2; Matt 20:8

ὄψις G3799 N-AFS (3×)

appearance, outward aspect; face, countenance; the visible form or look of a person or thing

This word refers to how something appears visually—its outward aspect, face, or countenance. Jesus warns against judging 'by appearance' (John 7:24), contrasting surface-level assessment with righteous judgment. It can mean the face itself, as when Lazarus emerges from the tomb with a cloth bound about his face (John 11:44), or the glorious appearance of the risen Christ whose face shone like the sun (Rev 1:16). The term emphasizes the visible, external dimension that can either reveal deeper truth or mislead if taken as the whole reality.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize both general appearance and specific face: English 'appearance/face', Spanish 'apariencia/rostro', French 'visage', German 'Angesicht'. The lexicon distinguishes 'objective aspect/appearance' from 'countenance/face', though both flow from the root of seeing (ὄπωπα). John 7:24 warns against judging 'by appearance,' John 11:44 describes the cloth on Lazarus' face, and Rev 1:16 depicts Christ's radiant face. The word can mean either the general visual aspect or specifically the face/countenance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: appearance, face | es: apariencia, rostro | fr: visage | de: Angesicht John 7:24; John 11:44; Rev 1:16

ὀψώνιον G3800 N-ANS (4×)

Wages, pay, compensation; a soldier's allowance; figuratively, the earned consequence of one's actions.

Originally a military term for a soldier's rations or pay, this word carries both literal and theological weight in the New Testament. John the Baptist tells soldiers to 'be content with your wages' (Luke 3:14), and Paul asks 'Who serves as a soldier at his own expense?' (1 Cor 9:7). The theological apex is Rom 6:23: 'the wages of sin is death'—where the metaphor transforms a soldier's earned pay into sin's inescapable consequence. Paul also uses it literally when he 'robbed other churches, receiving wages' for ministry (2 Cor 11:8). Spanish distinguishes 'paga' and 'salario,' while French 'solde' preserves the military etymology.

(4×) Wages, pay, compensation — money or provisions given for service, especially military pay, extended metaphorically to earned consequences. Luke 3:14 uses it literally of soldiers' wages; 1 Cor 9:7 of military self-funding. The powerful metaphor in Rom 6:23 treats death as the 'wages' sin pays out—an earned, deserved recompense. In 2 Cor 11:8 Paul uses it of ministry support. French 'solde' retains the military flavor (cf. English 'soldier'), while Spanish alternates between 'paga' (generic pay) and 'salario' (formal wages), reflecting the word's movement between concrete compensation and theological metaphor. WAGES AND REWARD

en: wages | es: paga, salario, salarios | fr: solde | de: Sold, ὀψωνίοις Luke 3:14; Rom 6:23; 1Cor 9:7; 2Cor 11:8

εἰμί G3801

to be, exist (variant entry for G3603; additional forms of εἰμί)

This duplicates G3603, representing additional forms of the copular/existential verb εἰμί. The paradigm's extreme irregularity across dialects (Aeolic ἔμμι, Cretan ἠμί, Doric ἐντί, etc.) may account for multiple Strong's entries. The core meaning remains: existence, identity, possession, and the copular function linking subject and predicate. No verb is more essential to Greek grammar.

πᾰγιδ-εύω G3802 V-ASA-3P (1×)

trap, ensnare, catch by deception

This verb means to trap or ensnare someone, typically through cunning or deception. Matthew uses it to describe the Pharisees' deliberate strategy to catch Jesus in his words. The term derives from 'snare' (παγίς) and evokes hunting imagery—setting a trap to capture prey. Across languages, the trapping metaphor persists: Spanish 'atraparan,' French 'prendre au piège.' The word implies calculated intent, not spontaneous challenge, and suggests the trappers view their target as adversarial game to be caught.

(1×) Matthew 22:15 reports the Pharisees taking counsel 'so that they might trap' Jesus in his speech. The deliberate plotting before asking about taxes to Caesar reveals malicious intent. They're not seeking truth but engineering a dilemma: either answer—support Rome or oppose it—could be weaponized against him. The verb exposes their hearts: they approach as hunters, not seekers. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: they-might-trap | es: atraparan | fr: prendre-au-piège | de: παγιδεύσωσιν Matt 22:15

πᾰγίς G3803 N-NFS (5×)

Snare, trap; a device for catching prey, used metaphorically of spiritual dangers and the devil's schemes.

A feminine noun meaning snare or trap, derived from πήγνυμι (to fix, fasten). While its literal sense refers to a hunting device, every NT occurrence is metaphorical, describing hidden spiritual dangers that suddenly entrap the unwary. Luke 21:35 warns that the day of the Lord will come 'like a snare' upon all the earth. Romans 11:9 quotes Psalm 69:22, turning the table of Israel's opponents into a trap. The Pastoral Epistles warn about the 'snare of the devil' that catches the proud (1 Tim 3:7; 2 Tim 2:26) and the trap of foolish desires (1 Tim 6:9). The French 'piège,' Spanish 'trampa,' and German 'Falle' all convey the hidden-danger element.

(5×) A snare or trap — a device designed to catch unsuspecting prey, used exclusively in metaphorical senses in the NT to describe hidden spiritual dangers. From πήγνυμι (to fix fast), the word evokes something set and waiting. In Luke 21:35, Jesus warns that the eschatological day will spring 'like a snare' on the complacent. Rom 11:9 (quoting Ps 69:22) applies the image to Israel's hardening. The Pastorals develop a distinct 'snare of the devil' motif: 1 Tim 3:7 warns overseers against falling into it through bad reputation; 2 Tim 2:26 speaks of captives escaping the devil's trap; and 1 Tim

6:9 describes the desire for wealth as a παγίς that plunges people into ruin. The French 'piège' and German 'Falle' both capture the concealed, sudden-closure quality. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: a-snare, snare | es: trampa | fr: piège | de: Falle, παγίς Luke 21:35; Rom 11:9; 1Tim 3:7; 1Tim 6:9; 2Tim 2:26

πᾰ́θ-ημα G3804 N-DNP (16×)

Suffering, affliction (especially Christ's and the believer's); sinful passion or desire

The noun pathema carries two sharply distinct senses in the New Testament. In its dominant usage (fourteen occurrences), it denotes suffering and affliction – above all the sufferings of Christ and the believer's participation in them. Paul writes that 'the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory' (Rom 8:18) and speaks of 'the fellowship of his sufferings' (Phil 3:10). But in two Pauline passages, pathema pivots to denote sinful passions or desires that operate in the human body: 'the passions of sins' working in our members (Rom 7:5) and 'those who belong to Christ have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires' (Gal 5:24). The multilingual evidence confirms the split: Spanish renders the first sense as 'padecimientos/sufrimientos' but the second as 'pasiones.'

1. suffering, affliction (14×) Suffering, affliction, or hardship endured, especially in connection with Christ's passion and the believer's share in it. This is the dominant NT usage at fourteen occurrences. Paul's theology of suffering drives most instances: 'the sufferings of Christ abound in us' (2 Cor 1:5), 'the fellowship of his sufferings' (Phil 3:10), and 'the sufferings of this present time' (Rom 8:18). Hebrews 2:9-10 and 1 Peter 5:1 extend the term to Christ's own redemptive suffering. Multilingual glosses consistently yield vocabulary of affliction – Spanish 'padecimientos/sufrimientos,' French 'souffrance,' German 'Leiden' – all pointing to external hardship endured rather than internal desire. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-sufferings, suffering, sufferings | es: de-sufrimientos, padecimiento, padecimientos | fr: Leiden, souffrance | de: Leiden Rom 8:18; 2Cor 1:5; 2Cor 1:6; 2Cor 1:7; Phil 3:10

2. passion, sinful desire (2×) Sinful passion, desire, or impulse that operates within the human body, driving one toward sin. Only two clear NT occurrences surface: Rom 7:5 ('the passions of sins which were through the law were at work in our members') and Gal 5:24 ('those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires'). The semantic shift from external suffering to internal sinful impulse is decisive. Spanish marks it with 'pasiones' rather than 'padecimientos,' confirming the sense boundary. This usage connects to the classical Greek philosophical tradition where pathema denotes inner affections or conditions of the soul rather than external afflictions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: passions | es: pasiones | fr: Leiden, souffrance | de: Leiden Rom 7:5; Gal 5:24

πᾰ́θ-ητός G3805 Adj-NMS (1×)

subject to suffering, capable of experiencing pain or passion

This adjective describes someone or something capable of suffering or experiencing passion. In Acts, it appears in Paul's declaration that the Christ must be 'subject to suffering.' The term can denote liability to external influence, passivity to change, or susceptibility to pain. It stands opposite to ἀπαθής (impassible, incapable of suffering). The word highlights vulnerability and humanity—the capacity to be acted upon, to feel pain, to endure affliction.

(1×) Acts 26:23 records Paul explaining 'that the Christ must suffer,' using this adjective to describe Messiah's capacity for suffering. Against expectations of an impassible, triumphant king, Paul insists the Scriptures foretold a suffering servant. The word underscores the scandal of incarnation: God's anointed one must be vulnerable, must feel pain, must die—capacities inherent in true humanity. SUFFERING PAIN

en: able-to-suffer | es: el-que-puede-sufrir | fr: passible | de: παθητὸς Acts 26:23

πάθος G3806 N-ANP (3×)

passion, strong desire, emotion; particularly disordered or degrading lusts and affections

Originally meaning anything that happens to a person (from πάσχω, 'to suffer'), this word came to denote passions or strong emotions, particularly those that are disordered or shameful. Paul uses it for degrading passions in his discussion of idolatry's consequences (Rom 1:26), for sinful desires to be put to death (Col 3:5), and for lustful passion that marks pagan ignorance of God (1 Thess 4:5). The term doesn't merely describe strong feeling but carries a sense of being acted upon by desires, experiencing passions that can degrade and control.

(3×) The multilingual evidence consistently points to strong, often negative passions: English 'passion/passions', Spanish 'pasiones/pasión', French 'passion', German 'Leidenschaften'. The lexicon traces the semantic development from 'that which happens' to 'experience' to 'passion/emotion', often negative. All three NT uses are in contexts of sinful desire: degrading passions (Rom 1:26), earthly desires to be put to death (Col 3:5), and lustful passion contrasted with holiness (1 Thess 4:5). This isn't mere emotion but disordered affection that enslaves. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: passion, passions | es: pasiones, pasión | fr: Leidenschaften, passion | de: Leidenschaften Rom 1:26; Col 3:5; 1Thess 4:5

παιδᾰγωγ-ός G3807 N-AMS (3×)

a pedagogue, guardian, tutor; a slave who supervised a child's conduct and escorted them to school

In the Greco-Roman world, a pedagogue was a household slave responsible for a child's moral supervision and daily escort to school—not the primary teacher but a custodian and guide. Paul uses this image powerfully: the Corinthians may have countless 'tutors' in Christ but only one father (1 Cor 4:15). More famously, he describes the Mosaic law as a pedagogue that guided us until Christ came (Gal 3:24-25). Once faith arrived, we're no longer under this custodian. The metaphor captures both protection and limitation—necessary for a season, but meant to be outgrown.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence preserves both the guardian and educational aspects: English 'guardian/tutors', Spanish 'tutor/tutores', French 'pédagogue', German 'Zuchtmeister' (disciplinarian). The lexicon defines this as 'slave who went with a boy from home to school and back again,' distinct from the actual teacher (διδάσκαλος). Paul uses it metaphorically in 1 Cor 4:15 for spiritual guides (contrasted with being a father), and in Gal 3:24-25 for the law's custodial role until Christ. The image is of supervision and protection, not primary instruction. FAITH AND TRUST

en: guardian, tutors | es: tutor, tutores | fr: pédagogue, παιδαγωγόν, παιδαγωγὸς | de: Zuchtmeister 1Cor 4:15; Gal 3:24; Gal 3:25

παιδᾰ́ρ-ιον G3808 N-NNS (1×)

little boy, young lad

This diminutive noun denotes a small boy or young child. In John's Gospel, it identifies the lad who provides five barley loaves and two fish for Jesus to multiply. The diminutive form emphasizes the child's youth and small stature, which heightens the contrast with the massive crowd to be fed. The term conveys both affection and insignificance: a mere boy with a meager lunch becomes the instrument for a miracle feeding thousands. Cross-linguistically, diminutive force is preserved.

(1×) John 6:9 introduces 'a little boy here who has five barley loaves and two fish,' highlighting the comic inadequacy of such provisions for a multitude. The diminutive underscores both the child's small size and the meal's insufficiency. Andrew's rhetorical question—'But what are these among so many?'—sets up the miracle: Jesus takes what seems laughably inadequate and makes it abundantly sufficient. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH

en: little-boy | es: muchachito | fr: petit-garçon | de: Knabe John 6:9

παιδεία G3809 N-AFS (6×)

Discipline, correction, or training – the formative process by which a parent or God shapes character through instruction and chastening.

Paideia is one of the great words of ancient Greek culture, encompassing the entire process of raising and forming a person. In the New Testament, however, it narrows to two closely related but distinguishable uses. In Hebrews 12:5-11, the author develops an extended metaphor of God as a father who disciplines his children – painful in the moment but producing the peaceful fruit of righteousness. Ephesians 6:4 instructs fathers to bring up children 'in the paideia and admonition of the Lord.' Meanwhile, 2 Timothy 3:16 speaks of Scripture as profitable 'for training in righteousness,' emphasizing the instructional, formative side rather than corrective chastening.

1. discipline (5×) Corrective discipline or chastening, especially from God as a loving father. The Hebrews 12 passage (vv. 5, 7, 8, 11) draws on Proverbs 3:11-12 to portray divine discipline as painful but purposeful: 'the Lord disciplines the one he loves.' Ephesians 6:4 similarly pairs paideia with nouthesia (admonition) in the context of child-rearing. Spanish 'disciplina,' French 'discipline,' and German 'Zucht' all emphasize the corrective dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: discipline | es: disciplina | fr: discipline | de: Zucht Eph 6:4; Heb 12:5; Heb 12:7; Heb 12:8; Heb 12:11

2. training (1×) Positive instruction or training aimed at moral and spiritual formation. In 2 Tim 3:16, Scripture is described as profitable for 'training in righteousness' (paideia en dikaiosynē), where the emphasis falls on constructive education rather than corrective punishment. Spanish 'instruccion' and English 'training' highlight this pedagogical, building-up quality that complements the sterner corrective sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: training | es: instrucción | fr: discipline | de: Zucht 2Tim 3:16

παιδ-ευτής G3810 N-AMP (2×)

instructor, teacher, discipliner; one who trains and corrects

This noun denotes one who instructs, trains, or corrects—a teacher, tutor, or disciplinarian. Classical usage includes both educators and those who administer correction. The semantic range spans from gentle instruction to stern discipline. In Romans 2:20, Paul lists 'instructor of the foolish' among the Jew's claims about teaching others. Hebrews 12:9 speaks of earthly fathers as 'disciplinerers' who corrected us, comparing them to God's fatherly discipline. The word emphasizes the formative role of teaching combined with correction, shaping character through instruction and discipline.

(2×) Romans 2:20 uses the term for one who teaches or trains (in the context of Jewish claims to instruct Gentiles), while Hebrews 12:9 applies it to fathers who discipline their children. The multilingual glosses capture both instructional and corrective dimensions: English 'disciplinerers, instructor,' Spanish 'instructor, que-disciplinaban,' German 'Erzieher' (educator/trainer). The word bridges pedagogy and discipline—the instructor both teaches truth and corrects error, both imparts knowledge and shapes character through measured correction. TEACHING AND LEARNING en: disciplinerers, instructor | es: instructor, que-disciplinaban | fr: Erzieher, παιδευτὴν | de: Erzieher Rom 2:20; Heb 12:9

παιδ-εύω G3811 V-PIA-3S (13×)

To discipline, chastise; to train, educate, instruct – corrective and formative pedagogy

The verb παιδεύω holds together two dimensions that ancient Greek culture saw as inseparable: education and discipline. On one side, it is the word for training and instructing someone in knowledge or conduct – Moses 'was educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians' (Acts 7:22), and Paul was 'trained according to the strict manner of the law' (Acts 22:3). On the other, it is the word for corrective chastisement, especially God's fatherly discipline of those he loves: 'the Lord disciplines the one he loves' (Heb 12:6). Titus 2:12 beautifully bridges both senses, saying grace itself is 'training us' to live godly lives. The multilingual evidence tracks the split: French and German often use a single word (chatier/erziehen), while Spanish distinguishes 'instruido' from 'disciplina.'

1. discipline, chastise, correct (8×) Corrective discipline or chastisement – punishment intended to reform rather than merely penalize. This sense dominates when God or authority figures inflict suffering for the recipient's moral benefit. Heb 12:6-7 presents divine discipline as proof of sonship: 'whom the Lord loves he disciplines.' In 1 Cor 11:32 the Corinthians are 'disciplined by the Lord so that we may not be condemned.' Luke 23:16 and 23:22 record Pilate's proposal to 'discipline' (flog) Jesus and release him – a juridical use. 2 Cor 6:9 describes apostolic suffering as being 'disciplined and yet not killed.' The multilingual glosses lean toward punitive vocabulary: 'disciplina/disciplinaban' (Spanish), 'chatier' (French). DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT

en: I-discipline, being-disciplined, disciplined | es: disciplina, disciplinaban, disciplino | fr: châtier, discipliner | de: erziehen, παιδεύσας Luke 23:16; Luke 23:22; 1Cor 11:32; 2Cor 6:9; Heb 12:6

2. train, educate, instruct (5×) Formative training, education, or instruction – the pedagogical shaping of a person's knowledge, character, or conduct. Moses was 'educated' (ἐπαιδεύθη) in all the learning of the Egyptians (Acts 7:22), and Paul was 'trained' (πεπαιδευμένος) at the feet of Gamaliel (Acts 22:3). In 2 Tim 2:25 a servant of the Lord must gently 'instruct' opponents. Titus 2:12 personifies grace as a teacher 'training us to renounce ungodliness.' 1 Tim 1:20 sits at the boundary, where Hymenaeus and Alexander are 'handed over to Satan to be taught not to blaspheme' – discipline serving an educational end. Spanish marks the shift with 'instruido/ensena,' and German uses 'erziehen' in its formative educational register. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: correcting, having-been-educated, they-might-be-taught | es: enseñándonos, fue-instruido, instruido | fr: châtier, discipliner | de: erziehen, πεπαιδευμένος, ἐπαιδεύθη Acts 7:22; Acts 22:3; 1Tim 1:20; 2Tim 2:25; Titus 2:12

παιδι-όθεν G3812 Adv (1×)

from childhood, since one was a child

This adverb indicates temporal origin, meaning 'from childhood' or 'since one was a child.' Mark uses it in the account of the boy with the mute spirit, whose father reports the affliction has tormented him from early childhood. The term emphasizes duration and early onset—not a recent problem but a lifelong struggle. It conveys the depth of suffering when paired with childhood: a condition that has stolen the normal development and joy of youth.

(1×) Mark 9:21 records a father's anguished report: the spirit has afflicted his son 'from childhood,' throwing him into fire and water to destroy him. The adverb intensifies the tragedy: this isn't a new crisis but a chronic torment stretching back to the boy's earliest years. The father's desperation stems partly from the exhausting duration of his son's affliction—years of helpless watching. SMALLNESS AND LEAST en: childhood | es: niñez | fr: depuis-l'enfance | de: von-Kindheit-an Mark 9:21

παιδί-ον G3813 N-DNP (52×)

A small child, infant, or young boy/girl; diminutive of pais, used especially of the infant Jesus and children in Gospel narratives.

The diminutive of pais ('child, servant'), paidion evokes tenderness and vulnerability. It appears most memorably in the infancy narratives: the magi seek 'the young child' in Bethlehem (Matt 2:8-14), and Simeon takes the child Jesus in his arms at the Temple (Luke 2:27). Jesus sets a paidion in the disciples' midst as the model of kingdom humility (Matt 18:2-5), and in John 16:21 a woman's anguish gives way to joy when her paidion is born. The word also occurs in Hebrews 2:13-14 to describe those whom Christ shares in flesh and blood. German Kindlein ('little child') and French petit-enfant perfectly capture the affectionate, diminutive quality that distinguishes this term from the more general teknon.

child, young child, infant (52×) A young child, infant, or small boy or girl, expressing the diminutive and affectionate sense of pais. Most prominent in the Gospels for the infant Jesus whom the magi sought and Herod hunted (Matt 2:8-14), for children Jesus embraced as models of kingdom entry (Matt 18:2-5; 19:13-14), and for newborns in John 16:21. German Kindlein and French petit-enfant reflect the tender, diminutive nuance. In Hebrews 2:13-14 it extends metaphorically to the children God has given to Christ, whom he redeems by sharing their mortal nature. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: child | es: niña, niño | fr: petit-enfant | de: Kind, Kindlein Matt 2:8; Matt 2:9; Matt 2:11; Matt 2:13

παιδίσκ-η G3814 N-AFS (13×)

Servant girl, slave woman; a young female domestic servant or bondmaid in a household.

A diminutive feminine noun meaning 'young female servant' or 'slave girl,' derived from pais ('child, servant'). In the NT it appears most memorably in the Passion narratives: it is a paidiske who confronts Peter in the courtyard, triggering his denials (Matt 26:69; Mark 14:66, 69; Luke 22:56; John 18:17). Paul uses the word in his allegory of Sarah and Hagar (Gal 4:22-31), contrasting the son of the slave woman with the son of the free woman. Acts 12:13 introduces Rhoda, a servant girl who answers Peter's knock after his miraculous escape from prison. The translations consistently distinguish the feminine and servile status: Spanish criada, French servante, German Magd.

servant girl, slave woman (13×) A young female servant, maidservant, or slave woman in a domestic household. The word appears prominently in Peter's denial scenes, where a servant girl identifies him as a follower of Jesus (Matt 26:69; Mark 14:66, 69; Luke 22:56; John 18:17), in Paul's Hagar-Sarah allegory distinguishing the slave woman from the free (Gal 4:22-31), and in the account of Rhoda the servant girl (Acts 12:13). Cross-lingual glosses consistently mark both gender and servile status (Spanish criada, French servante, German Magd), confirming a single unified sense. FEMALE SERVANT SLAVE

en: a-servant-girl, female-servants, of-slave-woman | es: criada, criadas, de-esclava | fr: servante | de: Magd Matt 26:69; Mark 14:66; Mark 14:69; Luke 12:45; Luke 22:56

παίζω G3815 V-PNA (1×)

play, sport, engage in recreation or revelry

This verb denotes playful activity—whether innocent recreation, celebration, or (negatively) frivolous revelry. Paul quotes the Septuagint description of Israel's idolatrous celebration at Sinai: 'The people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play.' In context, 'play' carries negative connotations of revelry associated with idol worship. The word can describe children's games or adults' festive dancing, but here it suggests behavior incompatible with worshiping the true God. It evokes carefree abandonment to pleasure.

(1×) 1 Corinthians 10:7 warns against idolatry, citing Israel's golden calf incident: they 'sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play.' The verb captures the festive revelry that accompanied false worship —dancing, celebration, perhaps sexual immorality. Paul uses it to show how quickly worship of the true God can devolve into self-indulgent pleasure when the heart turns to idols. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: to-play | es: a-jugar | fr: jouer | de: spielen 1Cor 10:7

παῖς G3816 N-AMP (24×)

Child or servant; a young person (boy or girl) or one who serves a master, including God's chosen servant.

One of the most semantically rich social terms in the New Testament, holding together the meanings 'child' and 'servant' — a duality rooted in the ancient household where young dependents often served. The Gospels use it for the Holy Innocents slaughtered by Herod (Matt 2:16), for sick children brought for healing (Matt 17:18; Luke 8:51), and equally for the centurion's servant (Matt 8:6) and God's chosen Servant in the Isaiah quotation (Matt 12:18). Spanish distinguishes clearly between nino/muchacho ('child/boy') and siervo/criado ('servant'), while French serviteur and German Knecht lean toward the servant sense even where English sees a child.

1. servant (of God or a master) (15×) A servant, attendant, or slave — one who serves a human master or, in theological usage, God's chosen servant. Spanish siervo/criado and German Knecht consistently distinguish this from the child sense. The centurion's paralyzed servant (Matt 8:6, 8, 13) and Herod's attendants (Matt 14:2) illustrate the social role. Most significantly, Matthew 12:18 applies the title to Jesus as God's servant (quoting Isa 42:1), and Acts 3:13, 26 and 4:27, 30 use it christologically for the Servant of God — a usage where the term carries deep covenantal weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Servant, male-servants, servant | es: Siervo, criados, siervo | fr: serviteur | de: Knecht Matt 8:6; Matt 8:8; Matt 8:13; Matt 12:18; Matt 14:2

2. child, boy/girl (9×) A child, boy, or girl — a young person identified by age rather than social role. Spanish nino/nina/muchacho and multilingual evidence consistently point to youth rather than servitude. Herod's massacre targets male children two years old and under (Matt 2:16). Jesus heals an epileptic boy (Matt 17:18), and children cry out Hosanna in the temple (Matt 21:15). The twelve-year-old Jesus is called pais in Luke 2:43, and Jairus's dying daughter in Luke 8:51 — showing the term covers both sexes and a range of ages from infancy through adolescence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: boy, child, children | es: muchacho, niña, niño | fr: serviteur | de: Knecht Matt 2:16; Matt 17:18; Matt 21:15; Luke 2:43; Luke 8:51

παίω G3817 V-APA-NMS (5×)

To strike, hit; to deliver a blow with hand, weapon, or sting, often in contexts of violence or abuse.

A verb meaning to strike or hit, whether with the hand, a weapon, or a sting. In the Passion narratives, it describes the abuse Jesus endured: struck during his trials with demands to 'prophesy who hit you' (Matt 26:68; Luke 22:64). Mark 14:47 and John 18:10 both use it for the disciple who struck the high priest's servant, cutting off his ear — one of the few actions narrated in all four Gospels. Revelation 9:5 extends it to the sting of the scorpion-locusts. The Spanish 'golpeó/hiere' and French 'frapper' both capture the physical impact, while German 'schlagen' emphasizes the percussive force.

(5×) To strike or hit — to deliver a physical blow with hand, weapon, or sting. The verb implies direct, forceful contact. Three of the five NT uses occur in the Passion narrative: Matt 26:68 and Luke 22:64 describe the mocking challenge to the blindfolded Jesus ('Who struck you?'), while Mark 14:47 and John 18:10 record the sword-strike against the high priest's servant's ear during the arrest in Gethsemane. Rev 9:5 extends the verb to the tormenting sting of the apocalyptic locusts. The Spanish distinction between 'golpeó' (struck, past) and 'hiere' (strikes, present) reflects the varied tenses in which the word appears. French 'frapper' and German 'schlagen' are precise equivalents conveying percussive physical impact. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: having-struck, it-strikes, struck | es: golpeó, habiendo-golpeado, hiere | fr: frapper | de: schlagen, παίσας Matt 26:68; Mark 14:47; Luke 22:64; John 18:10; Rev 9:5

Πακατιανή G3818

Pacatiana, western district of Phrygia province (4th-century AD administrative division)

Πακατιανή was the western portion of the Roman province of Phrygia as reorganized in the 4th century AD. The name derives from Latin 'pacatus' (peaceful, pacified). It appears in the Received Text's subscription to 1 Timothy, though such subscriptions are later scribal additions reflecting the routes of Pauline letters rather than original text. The region included important early Christian communities.

πάλαι G3819 Adv (7×)

Long ago, of old; denoting a time far in the past, often contrasting former conditions with the present.

An adverb reaching back into the distant past, often carrying a note of moral contrast: if Tyre and Sidon had seen such miracles 'long ago' (palai), they would have repented (Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13). Spanish 'hace tiempo' and French 'jadis' both capture the temporal remoteness, while German 'längst' ('long since') adds the nuance of overdue expectation. In Hebrews 1:1 it frames the entire Old Testament era as the time when God spoke 'of old' through the prophets, setting up the climactic revelation in the Son.

long ago (7×) Long ago, of old — a temporal marker pointing to the distant past, frequently deployed in comparisons between former and present realities. In the Gospels it intensifies rebuke: Tyre and Sidon would have repented 'long ago' (Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13). In Hebrews 1:1 it sweeps the entire prophetic era into one epochal 'of old,' contrasting it with the Son's definitive word. The uniform rendering across languages — Spanish 'antiguamente,' French 'jadis,' German 'einst' — confirms a single stable sense of remote temporal distance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: long-ago, of-old | es: Hace-tiempo, antiguamente, hace-tiempo | fr: depuis-longtemps, jadis | de: einst, längst, vor-langer-Zeit Matt 11:21; Mark 15:44; Luke 10:13; 2Cor 12:19; Heb 1:1

πᾰλαιός G3820 Adj-ANP (19×)

Old, aged, former — belonging to a prior era or worn out by long use, often contrasted with the new.

Describes what is old, worn, or belonging to a previous order, nearly always set in deliberate contrast with something new. Jesus' parables of the garment patch and wineskins (Matt 9:16–17; Mark 2:21–22; Luke 5:36–39) use παλαιός for what cannot accommodate the new wine of the kingdom — old cloth shrinks, old skins burst. Paul employs the same logic theologically: the 'old leaven' of malice must be purged (1 Cor 5:7–8), the 'old self' was crucified with Christ (Rom 6:6; Eph 4:22; Col 3:9). First John distinguishes an 'old commandment' held from the beginning from a 'new commandment' that is also somehow the same (1 John 2:7). The scribe trained for the kingdom brings out 'old things and new' from his storeroom (Matt 13:52). Spanish 'vieja/antiguo' and German 'alt' mirror the age-versus-newness polarity.

old, aged, former (19×) Old, former, or belonging to a past era — typically set against what is new (καινός/νέος). Applied to worn-out material objects like old garments and wineskins that cannot hold new wine (Matt 9:16–17; Mark 2:21–22; Luke 5:36–39), to the 'old leaven' of sin to be purged at Passover (1 Cor 5:7–8), to the 'old self' crucified with Christ in baptismal theology (Rom 6:6; Eph 4:22; Col 3:9), and to the 'old commandment' known from the beginning (1 John 2:7). Spanish alternates between 'vieja' (worn-out) and 'antiguo' (ancient), reflecting the word's range from material deterioration to temporal priority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: old, old-things | es: antiguo, vieja, viejas-cosas | fr: ancien | de: alt Matt 9:16; Matt 9:17; Matt 13:52; Mark 2:21

πᾰλαιότης G3821 N-DFS (1×)

oldness, antiquity, obsolescence

This noun denotes the quality of being old or obsolete. Paul uses it in Romans to contrast serving God 'in oldness of the letter' versus 'newness of the Spirit.' The term can simply mean age or antiquity, but in Paul's theological framework it suggests obsolescence—the old covenant arrangement that has been superseded. The word evokes worn-out garments, outdated methods, or past eras. It's not merely temporal age but functional obsolescence that carries the emphasis.

(1×) Romans 7:6 contrasts two modes of service: we serve 'in newness of the Spirit and not in oldness of the letter.' The noun characterizes the old covenant as obsolete, its role fulfilled and surpassed. Paul doesn't despise the law but recognizes its era has passed. The Spirit brings fresh vitality where the letter brought only antiquated condemnation. OLD AGE

en: in-oldness | es: en-vejez | fr: ancienneté | de: Alter Rom 7:6

πᾰλαιόω G3822 V-PPM/P-NNS (4×)

To make old, cause to decay or become obsolete; to wear out through age or time.

A verb meaning to make something old or to grow old and wear out, used in both material and covenantal contexts. In Luke 12:33, Jesus urges storing up treasure in heaven with purses that 'do not grow old'—wealth that never decays. Hebrews 1:11 quotes Psalm 102, declaring that the heavens 'will wear out like a garment,' and Heb 8:13 applies the verb twice to the old covenant: by speaking of a 'new' covenant, God 'has made the first obsolete,' and what is 'becoming obsolete and growing old' is ready to disappear. Spanish 'envejeciendo' and French 'vieillir' capture the progressive aging, while 'ha hecho viejo' renders the perfective act of rendering obsolete.

(4×) To make old, wear out, render obsolete — to cause something to age, decay, or lose its validity through the passage of time or by divine replacement. Luke 12:33 uses it of purses that do not wear out, contrasting heavenly permanence with earthly decay. Heb 1:11 applies it cosmically to the heavens wearing out. Most theologically charged is Heb 8:13, where God's announcement of a 'new' covenant actively renders the old one obsolete. Spanish 'envejeciendo' (growing old) and 'ha hecho viejo' (has made old) nicely distinguish the progressive and perfective aspects present in the Greek. OLD AGE

en: becoming-old, growing-old, he-has-made-old | es: envejecerán, envejeciendo, ha-hecho-viejo | fr: vieillir | de: veralten, παλαιούμενα Luke 12:33; Heb 1:11; Heb 8:13

πάλη G3823 N-NFS (1×)

wrestling, struggle, hand-to-hand combat

This noun denotes wrestling or close combat, typically athletic competition but also metaphorically for intense struggle. Paul uses it in Ephesians to describe the Christian life as a wrestling match—not against flesh and blood but against spiritual powers. The word evokes the gymnasium and ancient athletic contests, where wrestlers grappled in close quarters. Applied to spiritual warfare, it suggests intimate, exhausting, hand-to-hand struggle rather than distant archery. The fight is personal and demanding.

(1×) Ephesians 6:12 declares, 'Our struggle is not against flesh and blood,' using this athletic term for the Christian's spiritual conflict. The wrestling metaphor emphasizes the closeness and intensity of the battle—not distant skirmishes but intimate grappling with spiritual forces. Paul warns that the real opponents aren't human but cosmic powers of darkness, requiring different weapons than physical combat. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: struggle | es: lucha | fr: πάλη | de: Kampf Eph 6:12

πᾰλιγ-γενεσία G3824 N-DFS (2×)

new birth, regeneration, renewal; rebirth of world or individual

This noun denotes rebirth, regeneration, or comprehensive renewal. Stoic philosophy used it for cosmic renewal after catastrophic destruction. Jewish usage applied it to restoration after exile. In the New Testament, Jesus speaks of 'the regeneration' when the Son of Man sits on his glorious throne (Matthew 19:28)—referring to cosmic renewal at the eschaton. Titus 3:5 describes God saving us 'through the washing of regeneration'—referring to individual spiritual rebirth. The word captures both eschatological renewal of creation and personal transformation through the Spirit.

(2×) Matthew 19:28 uses the term for the future renewal of all things at Christ's return, while Titus 3:5 applies it to the believer's personal spiritual rebirth. The multilingual glosses render 'regeneration' or 'rebirth': Spanish 'de-regeneración, regeneración,' French 'régénération,' German 'Wiedergeburt.' The range spans from cosmic eschatological restoration to individual moral and spiritual renewal. Both uses emphasize radical new beginning—whether the recreation of the world order or the recreation of a human life through divine intervention. BIRTH BEING BORN

en: of-regeneration, regeneration | es: de-regeneración, regeneración | fr: régénération | de: Wiedergeburt, παλιγγενεσίᾳ Matt 19:28; Titus 3:5

πάλῐν G3825 Adv (141×)

Again — adverb of repetition or return, marking recurrence of an action or reversion to a prior state

Palin is a versatile Greek adverb whose root meaning is 'back' or 'again.' In Homer it often indicated physical return or backward motion, but by the New Testament period it predominantly signals repetition: something happening once more. Jesus uses it to introduce a second parable ('Again, the kingdom of heaven is like...,' Matt 13:45, 47) or to resume teaching after an interruption. It marks recurring temptation ('again, the devil took him,' Matt 4:8), renewed questioning, and iterative instruction. Spanish 'de nuevo/otra vez,' French 'de nouveau,' and German 'wieder' all capture its core repetitive force across 141 occurrences.

(141×) Adverb indicating repetition, return, or resumed action — 'back again' or 'once more.' In the New Testament it most frequently marks the recurrence of an event or the resumption of discourse: 'again the devil took him to a very high mountain' (Matt 4:8), 'again, the kingdom of heaven is like...' (Matt 13:45). It can also signal reversion to a former state (Gal 4:9, 'turning back again to the weak elements'). Spanish 'de nuevo' and 'otra vez,' French 'de nouveau,' and German 'wieder' all render its core repetitive meaning, though palin's discourse-structuring function in Gospel narrative often exceeds simple repetition. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: Again, again | es: De-nuevo, de-nuevo, otra-vez | fr: de-nouveau | de: wieder Matt 4:7; Matt 4:8; Matt 5:33; Matt 13:45; Matt 13:47

παμ-πληθεί G3826 Adv (1×)

all together, with the whole multitude (adverb of collective assembly)

This rare adverb describes a collective action taken by an entire crowd or assembly, emphasizing the unity and totality of the group's response. In Luke 23:18, it captures the dramatic moment when the whole multitude cries out for Barabbas instead of Jesus, demanding crucifixion with one voice. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently reflects this corporate dimension, with Romance languages rendering it as 'all together' or 'everyone together,' underscoring the unanimity of the mob's violent demand before Pilate.

(1×) Appearing only once in the New Testament, this term captures the collective cry of the entire crowd before Pilate demanding Jesus' crucifixion. The multilingual glosses ('all-together,' 'todos-juntos,' 'tous-ensemble') consistently preserve the corporate, simultaneous nature of this tragic moment, distinguishing it from individual outcries or sequential responses. This hapax legomenon marks one of Scripture's most chilling displays of mob unanimity. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: all-together | es: todos-juntos | fr: tous-ensemble | de: παμπληθεὶ Luke 23:18

πάμ-πολυς G3827

very great, very large, very numerous; neuter πάμπολυ as adverb 'very much'

The intensive compound πάμπολυς (πᾶν + πολύς) means 'very great' or 'very numerous,' amplifying the already strong πολύς. It describes everything from 'a very great ridicule' to large populations. The neuter singular πάμπολυ functions adverbially: 'very much.' The word adds rhetorical force, emphasizing extraordinary quantity or magnitude beyond what simple πολύς would convey.

Παμφυλία G3828 N-AFS (5×)

Pamphylia; a coastal province of southern Asia Minor through which Paul traveled on his missionary journeys.

A proper noun identifying Pamphylia, a Roman province on the southern coast of Asia Minor (modern Turkey) between Lycia and Cilicia. It features in the book of Acts as a geographical marker along Paul's missionary routes. Jews from Pamphylia were present at Pentecost (Acts 2:10). Paul and Barnabas passed through on the first journey, arriving at Perga in Pamphylia (Acts 13:13; 14:24), where John Mark famously departed — a decision later cited as grounds for the sharp disagreement between Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:38). Paul's ship sailed past Pamphylia en route to Rome (Acts 27:5).

(5×) Pamphylia — a Roman province along the southern coast of Asia Minor, situated between the Taurus Mountains and the Mediterranean Sea. The name likely derives from the Greek for 'of every tribe' (πᾶν + φυλή), reflecting its mixed population. In the NT it appears exclusively in Acts, serving as a recurring waypoint in early church history: Pamphylian Jews witness Pentecost (Acts 2:10), Paul enters the province at Perga during his first missionary journey (Acts 13:13), returns through it later (Acts 14:24), and the region becomes associated with John Mark's controversial departure (Acts 15:38). Paul's voyage to Rome also passes its coast (Acts 27:5). The multilingual forms — Spanish 'Pamfylía,' French 'Pamphylie,' German 'Pamphylien' — all transliterate from the Greek Παμφυλία. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Pamphulia, Pamphylia, of-Pamphylia | es: Pamfylía, Pamphylía | fr: Pamphylie | de: Παμφυλίαν, Παμφυλίας Acts 2:10; Acts 13:13; Acts 14:24; Acts 15:38; Acts 27:5

παν-δοκεύς G3829 N-ANS (1×)

inn, lodging place for travelers

This noun denotes an inn or public lodging place where travelers could find rest and shelter. The word literally means 'all-receiver,' suggesting a place that welcomes all comers. In Luke's parable of the Good Samaritan, it's the destination where the wounded man receives care. Unlike a private guest room, this was a commercial establishment offering basic accommodations. The term evokes roadside hospitality in the ancient world, where inns served travelers regardless of ethnic or social background.

(1×) Luke 10:34 describes the Samaritan bringing the wounded man to 'an inn' and paying the innkeeper to care for him. The public lodging becomes the place of recovery and safety after roadside violence. That the Samaritan takes the victim to a commercial inn rather than his own home doesn't diminish his compassion but demonstrates practical wisdom and generous provision for ongoing care. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-inn | es: un-mesón | fr: auberge | de: πανδοχεῖον Luke 10:34

παν-δοκεύς G3830 N-DMS (1×)

innkeeper, host who receives all travelers

This noun denotes the keeper or proprietor of an inn, one who receives travelers and provides lodging for pay. In Luke's parable, the innkeeper becomes the Samaritan's partner in caring for the wounded man. The term derives from 'all-receiver,' suggesting someone whose business is hospitality to all who come. The innkeeper represents ordinary commercial life co-opted into compassionate service. He's compensated for his care but trusted to provide genuine attention beyond what the initial payment covers.

(1×) Luke 10:35 mentions the Samaritan giving money to 'the innkeeper,' instructing him to care for the wounded man and promising reimbursement for any additional expenses. The innkeeper becomes an agent of the Samaritan's ongoing compassion. Jesus' parable trusts that this commercial figure will honor the arrangement —suggesting that love of neighbor can enlist even business transactions into redemptive service. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: innkeeper | es: mesonero | fr: aubergiste | de: πανδοχεῖ Luke 10:35

πᾰνήγῠρ-ις G3831 N-DFS (1×)

festal gathering, solemn assembly, joyful public celebration

This noun denotes a festal assembly or joyful public gathering, typically for religious celebration. Hebrews uses it to describe the heavenly assembly of the firstborn enrolled in heaven. Classical Greek employed the term for national festivals honoring the gods, particularly events combining worship and celebration. The word evokes joy, solemnity, and corporate worship—not merely a meeting but a festive occasion. In Hebrews, it paints the heavenly reality believers have already joined.

(1×) Hebrews 12:23 describes believers coming 'to the festal gathering and assembly of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven.' The noun captures the joyful, celebratory nature of the heavenly reality—not grim duty but festive worship. The writer depicts salvation not as entering a silent, solemn space but joining an ongoing celebration, a cosmic party of redeemed humanity worshiping before God's throne. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: festal-gathering | es: asamblea-festiva | fr: fête-solennelle | de: Festversammlung Heb 12:23

πᾰνοικ-ί G3832 Adv (1×)

with all one's household, including entire family

This adverb means 'with one's whole household' or 'including the entire family.' Luke uses it in Acts to describe the Philippian jailer's baptism—he and all his household together. The term emphasizes corporate, familial participation rather than isolated individual response. In the ancient world, household decisions often involved the entire domestic unit, including family members and servants. The word conveys solidarity, shared faith, and communal commitment to Christ.

(1×) Acts 16:34 reports that the jailer 'rejoiced with all his household that he had believed in God.' The adverb indicates the whole domestic unit shared in the conversion and baptism. This wasn't a solitary decision leaving the family divided, but a corporate turning to Christ. The household's united joy reflects the gospel's power to transform entire social units, not just individuals. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: with-all-household | es: con-toda-casa | fr: avec-toute-la-famille | de: πανοικεὶ Acts 16:34

πᾰνοπλ-ία G3833 N-AFS (3×)

full armor, complete suit of armor; the panoply of a heavily-armed soldier

This word denotes the complete battle gear of a Greek hoplite: shield, helmet, breastplate, greaves, sword, and lance. Jesus speaks of a strong man's 'full armor' being taken when a stronger one overcomes him (Luke 11:22). Paul's famous exhortation is to take up 'the whole armor of God' to stand against spiritual powers (Eph 6:11, 13). The term emphasizes completeness—not just a piece of equipment but the entire protective and offensive ensemble. Spiritually, it reminds believers that partial preparation is insufficient for cosmic warfare.

(3×) All translations maintain the full armor concept: English 'full-armor', Spanish 'armadura-completa', French 'armure', German 'volle-Ruestung/πανοπλίαν'. The lexicon defines it as 'suit of armour of a ὁπλίτης' (heavy infantry), listing all components: shield, helmet, breastplate, greaves, sword, lance. Luke 11:22 uses it literally for a strong man's gear, while Eph 6:11, 13 employ it metaphorically for spiritual armor. The prefix πᾰν- ('all/complete') stresses the comprehensive nature of the equipment. ARMOR BREASTPLATE

en: full-armor | es: armadura-completa | fr: armure | de: volle-Ruestung, πανοπλίαν Luke 11:22; Eph 6:11; Eph 6:13

πᾰνουργ-ία G3834 N-AFS (5×)

Craftiness, cunning; shrewd cleverness employed for deceptive or manipulative purposes.

A noun meaning craftiness or cunning — the ability to do anything (πᾶν + ἔργον, 'every work'), turned toward deceitful ends. It describes a shrewd, unprincipled cleverness. Jesus perceives the πανουργία of his questioners when they try to trap him about paying taxes to Caesar (Luke 20:23). Paul quotes Job 5:13: God 'catches the wise in their own craftiness' (1 Cor 3:19). In 2 Cor 4:2, Paul renounces 'the hidden things of shame' and πανουργία, and in 2 Cor 11:3 he fears the serpent's cunning that deceived Eve. Ephesians 4:14 warns against those who use craftiness to scheme and mislead. The Spanish 'astucia' and French 'ruse' both carry the negative valence of clever deception.

(5×) Craftiness or cunning — shrewd, unscrupulous cleverness used to deceive or manipulate. Etymologically from πανοῦργος ('ready to do anything'), the word implies moral flexibility in service of self-interest. Luke 20:23 shows Jesus detecting the πανουργία behind the tribute-money trap. Paul in 1 Cor 3:19 turns the tables by quoting Job 5:13: God ensnares the worldly-wise in their own craftiness. In 2 Cor 4:2, Paul distances his ministry from any taint of cunning, and in 2 Cor 11:3 he invokes the serpent's primordial craftiness toward Eve as a warning against theological seduction. Eph 4:14 links πανουργία to 'scheming deceit' (μεθοδεία τῆς πλάνης), placing it firmly in the vocabulary of spiritual manipulation. The Spanish 'artimaña/astucia' and French 'ruse' converge on clever trickery. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14351 WITH 4 SENSES

en: craftiness | es: artimaña, astucia | fr: ruse | de: List, πανουργίαν Luke 20:23; 1Cor 3:19; 2Cor 4:2; 2Cor 11:3; Eph 4:14

πᾰνουργ-ος G3835 Adj-NMS (1×)

crafty, cunning, sly in a negative sense

This adjective describes someone cunning, clever, or crafty—typically with negative connotations of slyness or deceit. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians, where he defends against accusations of using craftiness to manipulate the Corinthians. The word can mean simply clever or resourceful, but often carries the overtone of unscrupulous cleverness, the fox's cunning. It suggests intelligence deployed for self-serving or deceptive ends. The term evokes the slippery operator who outsmarts others through guile.

(1×) 2 Corinthians 12:16 quotes Paul's opponents' accusation: 'being crafty, I caught you by deceit.' The adjective appears in a charge Paul rejects—that his apparent refusal of support masked a scheme to exploit them through the collection. The word suggests manipulative cleverness, the kind of sly calculation that uses apparent generosity to mask self-interest. Paul denies the charge while turning it into teachable irony. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: crafty | es: astuto | fr: rusé | de: listig 2Cor 12:16

πανταχόθεν G3836

from all sides, from every quarter; in every way, completely

The adverb πανταχόθεν means 'from all sides' or 'from every quarter' in spatial contexts: 'to be surrounded on all sides,' or 'from all parts of Asia.' Metaphorically extended, it can mean 'in every way' or 'completely': 'Greece was completely restrained from war,' or 'well-equipped in every respect for war.' The word emphasizes totality and comprehensiveness, whether of physical encirclement or complete fulfillment of conditions.

πανταχοῦ G3837 Adv (8×)

Everywhere, in every place; an adverb of universal spatial extent, sometimes used with verbs of motion to mean 'to every place.'

Pantachou is a simple but powerful adverb meaning everywhere or in all places. In the Gospels, it captures the rapid, unstoppable spread of Jesus' fame (Mark 1:28) and his disciples' preaching (Mark 16:20, Luke 9:6). In Acts, Paul uses it in proclamation contexts: God now 'commands all people everywhere to repent' (Acts 17:30), and he is accused of teaching 'everyone everywhere' against the people and the law (Acts 21:28). Spanish splits the idea across 'en todas partes' and 'por todas partes,' distinguishing location from motion, while German 'ueberall' covers both.

everywhere (8×) In every place, everywhere — expressing universal spatial extent. Used to describe the far-reaching spread of Jesus' reputation throughout Galilee (Mark 1:28), the disciples healing and preaching in every village (Luke 9:6, Mark 16:20), and Paul's universal proclamation that God commands repentance everywhere (Acts 17:30). In Acts 21:28, Paul's opponents accuse him of teaching everyone 'everywhere' against Israel. The adverb sometimes accompanies verbs of motion, yielding a sense closer to 'to every place.' Spanish distinguishes 'en todas partes' (static) from 'por todas partes' (motion), while German 'ueberall' and French 'partout' serve both. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: everywhere | es: en-todas-partes, en-todo-lugar, por-todas-partes | fr: partout | de: ueberall, πανταχοῦ, πανταχῇ Mark 1:28; Mark 16:20; Luke 9:6; Acts 17:30; Acts 21:28

παντελής G3838 Adj-ANS (2×)

complete, entire, absolute; utter and all-encompassing

This adjective denotes completeness or totality—all-complete, absolute, perfect. Classical sources use it of complete equipment, absolute freedom, or total madness. The adverbial form means 'altogether, utterly, completely.' Both New Testament occurrences use the adverb. Luke 13:11 describes a woman 'completely unable' to straighten up. Hebrews 7:25 declares that Christ can save 'completely' or 'to the uttermost' those who draw near to God through him. The term emphasizes the comprehensive, exhaustive, or absolute nature of an action or state.

(2×) Luke 13:11 uses the neuter adjective substantively to describe the woman's total inability to stand upright, while Hebrews 7:25 employs it to describe the comprehensive scope of Christ's saving work. The translations emphasize completeness: English 'complete, uttermost,' Spanish 'completamente, completo,' French 'complètement,' German 'ganz.' Luke's use stresses absolute physical limitation; Hebrews' use proclaims absolute salvific efficacy. Both convey the idea of something carried to its fullest extent without limitation or incompleteness. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY

en: complete, uttermost | es: completamente, completo | fr: complètement | de: ganz, παντελές Luke 13:11; Heb 7:25

πάντῃ G3839 Adv (1×)

in every way, altogether, completely

This adverb means 'in every way,' 'on every side,' or 'altogether.' It emphasizes comprehensiveness or totality. In Acts, Paul uses it in a polite expression of gratitude: 'in every way and everywhere we acknowledge this.' The term can indicate spatial totality (on all sides) or modal completeness (in every respect). It functions to amplify and generalize, ensuring no exception or qualification limits the statement. The word conveys thoroughness and universality.

(1×) Acts 24:3 has Tertullus the orator say, 'in every way... we acknowledge this with all gratitude.' The adverb functions rhetorically to intensify the flattery directed at Felix—not just in some ways or sometimes, but comprehensively and universally. The speech's obsequious tone uses this totalizing language to curry favor before launching accusations against Paul. MANNER ADVERBS

en: in-every-way | es: de-toda-manera | fr: entièrement | de: πάντῃ Acts 24:3

πάντοθεν G3840 Adv (3×)

from all sides, from every direction, on every side; from all quarters or places

An adverb meaning 'from all sides' or 'from everywhere,' this word captures complete surrounding or universal sourcing. After healing the leper, Jesus could no longer openly enter a town because people came to him 'from everywhere' (Mark 1:45). Enemies will surround Jerusalem 'on all sides' (Luke 19:43). The tabernacle's ark was overlaid with gold 'on every side' (Heb 9:4). Whether describing people converging, armies encircling, or complete coverage, the term emphasizes totality—nothing excluded, no side left untouched.

(3×) Multilingual evidence emphasizes universal direction: English 'all-around/from-all-sides/from-everywhere', Spanish 'de-todas-partes/de-todos-lados/por-todos-lados', French 'de-tous-côtés', German 'von-allen-Seiten'. The lexicon notes the root πᾶς ('all') and traces usage back to Homer. Mark 1:45 describes people coming 'from everywhere' to Jesus, Luke 19:43 prophesies enemies surrounding Jerusalem 'on every side', Heb 9:4 describes gold overlaying 'all around'. The word stresses comprehensive encirclement or sourcing from every quarter. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: all-around, from-all-sides, from-everywhere | es: de-todas-partes, de-todos-lados, por-todos-lados | fr: de-tous-côtés | de: von-allen-Seiten, πάντοθεν Mark 1:45; Luke 19:43; Heb 9:4

παντο-κράτωρ G3841 N-VMS (10×)

Almighty, All-Sovereign — a divine title ascribing unlimited power to God, rendering Hebrew Shaddai/Tsevaoth

The compound noun pantokrator (παντοκράτωρ, 'ruler of all') serves as the standard LXX and NT rendering of the Hebrew divine titles El Shaddai and YHWH Tsevaoth ('LORD of Hosts'). Nine of its ten NT occurrences appear in Revelation, where it punctuates the heavenly liturgy: 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty' (Rev 4:8), 'We give you thanks, Lord God Almighty' (Rev 11:17), and 'the marriage supper of the Lamb' is hosted by the Lord God Almighty (Rev 19:6). The sole non-Revelation occurrence quotes the OT: 'I will be a Father to you, says the Lord Almighty' (2 Cor 6:18). Translations preserve the superlative force: Spanish 'Todopoderoso,' German 'Allmachtige,' French 'Tout-Puissant,' Hindi 'sarvashaktiman,' Arabic 'al-qadir ala kulli shay,' Korean 'jeonneungja,' Swahili 'Mwenyezi Mungu.'

(10×) A divine title meaning 'Almighty' or 'All-Sovereign,' ascribing to God unlimited dominion and power over all creation. Used almost exclusively as a liturgical and doxological epithet in Revelation (1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7,14; 19:6,15; 21:22), where it punctuates heavenly worship and announces eschatological judgment. The single Pauline usage (2 Cor 6:18) quotes 2 Samuel 7:8 LXX. Renders Hebrew Shaddai and Tsevaoth in the LXX tradition. Every major target language deploys its strongest 'omnipotent' term: Spanish 'Todopoderoso,' French 'Tout-Puissant,' Arabic 'al-Qadir ala kulli shay,' Hindi 'sarvashaktiman,' Korean 'jeonneungja.' AUTHORITY AND POWER

en: Almighty | es: Todopoderoso, Todopoderoso,, Todopoderoso. | fr: Tout-Puissant | de: Allmaechtige 2Cor 6:18; Rev 1:8; Rev 4:8; Rev 11:17; Rev 15:3

πάντοτε G3842 Adv (42×)

Always, at all times — adverb of continuous or habitual temporal scope

A temporal adverb compounded from pas ('all') and the suffix -tote ('at that time'), yielding the sense 'at every time, always.' It appears in contexts ranging from Jesus' assurance that the poor are 'always' present (Matt 26:11; Mark 14:7) to Paul's exhortations to 'always' rejoice and give thanks (Phil 4:4; 1 Thess 5:16-18). The word also describes the constancy of prayer (Rom 1:9-10; Col 4:12) and the believer's perpetual confidence before God (2 Cor 5:6). Its force ranges from literal 'at all times' to practical 'habitually, consistently.'

(42×) Expressing unbroken continuity or consistent habit. Jesus uses it of ongoing realities ('the poor you always have,' Matt 26:11), while Paul employs it for the believer's ideal posture ('always rejoicing,' 2 Cor 6:10; 'praying always,' 1 Thess 1:2). Spanish 'siempre,' French 'toujours,' and German 'allezeit' uniformly render this single, unambiguous temporal sense. CONTINUALLY DAILY OFFERING

en: always | es: siempre | fr: toujours | de: allezeit, immer Matt 26:11; Mark 14:7

πάντως G3843 Adv (9×)

Certainly, by all means, altogether; with negation: not at all, by no means.

An emphatic adverb that intensifies whatever it modifies. When affirming, it means 'certainly,' 'surely,' or 'by all means'—as when the crowd at Lystra concludes Paul's attacker must be a murderer (Acts 28:4), or when Paul resolves to return (Acts 18:21). When paired with a negative particle, it reverses into total denial: 'not at all' or 'by no means' (Rom 3:9). Spanish captures both poles well: 'ciertamente' for affirmation and 'de ninguna manera' for emphatic negation. The word's flexibility makes it a rhetorical intensifier whose force depends entirely on its syntactic context.

1. certainly, surely, by all means (7×) Emphatic affirmation: 'certainly,' 'surely,' 'by all means.' Strengthens assertions, confident expectations, or resolute intentions. In Luke 4:23 Jesus anticipates the crowd will 'surely' quote the proverb; in Acts 28:4 the islanders conclude the snakebite victim is 'certainly' a murderer. French 'certainement' and Spanish 'seguramente' convey the same assured tone. The usage in 1 Cor 9:10 ('he certainly says it for our sake') shows Paul wielding it for theological argument. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: Certainly, Surely, by-all-means | es: Ciertamente, Seguramente, absolutamente | fr: absolument, certainement | de: auf-jeden-Fall, Πάντως, πάντως Luke 4:23; Acts 18:21; Acts 21:22; Acts 28:4; 1Cor 5:10

2. at all, entirely (often with negation) (2×) Used with negation to express total denial or emphatic refusal: 'not at all,' 'by no means.' In Rom 3:9 Paul asks whether Jews have any advantage and answers 'not at all' (ou pantōs). Similarly in 1 Cor 16:12, Apollos was 'not at all' willing to come at present. Spanish 'de ninguna manera' and German 'auf keinen Fall' highlight the absolute quality of the denial. The same word that affirms everything can, with a simple negative particle, negate everything. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY en: at-all, certainly | es: de-ninguna-manera, del-todo | fr: absolument | de: auf-jeden-Fall Rom 3:9; 1Cor 16:12

πᾰ́ρά G3844 Prep (192×)

beside, from beside; source (genitive), proximity (dative), motion/comparison (accusative)

Greek παρά carries three core spatial meanings governed by case: with genitive, it marks the source from which something comes—from beside, away from a person or place. With dative, it describes location beside or in the presence of someone. With accusative, it indicates motion alongside or comparison (more than, beyond). These physical senses extend naturally into relational and abstract domains: receiving something 'from' a person, being 'with' someone in their company, acting 'contrary to' a standard, or being valued 'more than' another.

1. from, away from (source) (80×) Marking the person or place from whom something originates or proceeds, this sense dominates with genitive objects. Spanish consistently renders de or de parte de, while French uses auprès de across contexts. English 'from' captures the source nuance seen in Matthew 2:4 (learning from the chief priests) and Matthew 21:42 (from the Lord's doing). The genitive signals not just physical origin but also authority or agency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: by, from, from- | es: de, de-, de-parte-de | fr: auprès-de | de: bei, bei- Matt 2:4; Matt 2:7; Matt 2:16; Matt 18:19; Matt 21:42

2. with, in the presence of (37×) When paired with dative, παρά locates someone in another's presence or company—'with' in relational rather than instrumental sense. Matthew 6:1 (reward with your Father) and 19:26 (with God all things are possible) illustrate the association. Spanish alternates between con and ante, while German bei captures both proximity and accompaniment. This overlaps with possession: having something 'with oneself.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: With, by, from- | es: Para, ante, con | fr: auprès-de | de: bei, bei- Matt 6:1; Matt 8:10; Matt 19:26; Matt 22:25

3. beside, near, at (34×) Physical adjacency—standing, sitting, walking beside something—uses dative case. Matthew 4:18 (walking beside the sea) and 13:1 (sitting beside the sea) show literal spatial use. Spanish junto a and German bei emphasize the nearness, while the French auprès de serves for all proximity contexts. This is the preposition's most concrete spatial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: alongside, at, beside | es: a, junto-a | fr: auprès-de | de: bei, bei- Matt 4:18; Matt 13:1; Matt 13:4; Matt 13:19; Matt 15:29

4. than, beyond, more than (16×) In comparative constructions with accusative, παρά functions as 'than' or 'beyond,' marking the standard of comparison. Luke 13:2 (worse than other Galileans) and Romans 1:25 (more than the Creator) demonstrate the comparative force. Spanish más allá de and English 'beyond' capture the sense of exceeding or surpassing a benchmark. This extends the spatial 'beside' into evaluative space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beside, beyond, beyond- | es: de, en-lugar-de, más-allá-de | fr: auprès-de, auprès-de- | de: bei, bei- Luke 13:2; Luke 13:4; Luke 18:14; Rom 1:25; Rom 12:3

5. before, in the sight of (9×) Appearing before someone in judgment or evaluation—'in the sight of'—this sense retains the spatial proximity of being before someone's face but adds the notion of scrutiny. Romans 2:11 (no partiality with God), 2:13 (righteous before God), and 1 Corinthians 3:19 (foolish in God's sight) exemplify this usage. Spanish ante and English 'before' preserve the positional metaphor for moral or legal standing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: before, before-, in | es: ante, ante-, delante-de | fr: auprès-de- | de: bei- Rom 2:11; Rom 2:13; Rom 12:16; 1Cor 3:19; 1Cor 7:24

6. contrary to, against (5×) With accusative, παρά can signal opposition or deviation from a norm—'against' or 'contrary to.' Acts 18:13 (contrary to the law) and Romans 1:26 (contrary to nature) show this oppositional force. Spanish contra and English 'against' are standard renderings. The spatial sense of 'beside' shifts to 'alongside but deviating from,' highlighting departure from an expected path or standard. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Contrary-to, against-, beyond- | es: Contra, contra | fr: auprès-de- | de: bei, bei- Acts 18:13; Rom 1:26; Rom 4:18; Rom 11:24; Rom 16:17

7. among, in the midst of (5×) Being 'among' a group or community uses παρά with dative or accusative depending on motion. Matthew 28:15 (reported among the Jews) and Colossians 4:16 (read among the Laodiceans) illustrate communal presence. Spanish entre and German bei capture the sense of being situated within a collective. This extends proximity from one-to-one to one-to-many relational settings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: among, among-, with | es: con, entre | fr: auprès-de, auprès-de- | de: bei, bei- Matt 28:15; Acts 26:8; Acts 28:14; Col 4:16; Rev 2:13

8. apart from, besides, except (4×) Exclusion or exception—'apart from,' 'except,' 'besides'—appears with accusative. 1 Corinthians 3:11 (no foundation besides Jesus), 2 Corinthians 11:24 (forty lashes minus one), and Galatians 1:8-9 (gospel other than what we preached) show this restrictive sense. Spanish aparte de and English 'besides' mark the boundary of what is included versus excluded. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beside, minus | es: aparte-de, aparte-de-, menos | fr: auprès-de- | de: bei- 1Cor 3:11; 2Cor 11:24; Gal 1:8; Gal 1:9

9. (2×) Two occurrences in 1 Corinthians 12:15-16 resist easy classification—possibly causal or related to evaluation ('for this reason'). English renders 'for,' Spanish por, suggesting a loose causal or explanatory link. The sense remains underdetermined by the immediate syntactic and semantic context, awaiting further corpus evidence or refinement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for | es: por | fr: auprès-de- | de: bei- 1Cor 12:15; 1Cor 12:16

παραβαίνω G3845 V-PIA-3P (3×)

to transgress, to go beyond or violate a boundary, to break a command or tradition

Originally meaning to go beside or stand beside, this verb evolved to mean transgressing or going beyond proper boundaries. The Pharisees accuse Jesus' disciples of transgressing 'the tradition of the elders' (Matt 15:2), and Jesus turns the accusation back, asking why they transgress God's commandment for their tradition (Matt 15:3). Judas 'turned aside' from his apostolic ministry to his own place (Acts 1:25). The word captures the spatial metaphor of stepping outside prescribed limits, whether divine commands or human traditions.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize violation and deviation: English 'transgress/transgressed', Spanish 'quebrantan/quebrantáis/se-desvió', French 'transgresser', German forms preserving the root παραβαίνω. The lexicon traces semantic development from 'go by the side of' to 'overstep, transgress'. Matthew 15:2-3 uses it twice for violating tradition versus commandment, while Acts 1:25 describes Judas 'turning aside' from his ministry. The spatial metaphor of crossing boundaries underlies all uses, whether moral commands or traditional practices. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: transgress, transgressed | es: quebrantan, quebrantáis, se-desvió | fr: transgresser | de: παρέβη, παραβαίνετε, παραβαίνουσιν Matt 15:2; Matt 15:3; Acts 1:25

παραβάλλω G3846 V-AIA-1P (1×)

arrive at, reach (by ship), touch at a port

This verb primarily means to throw or place beside, but in nautical contexts it describes arriving at or touching at a port. Acts uses it to narrate Paul's travel itinerary. The term evokes the action of bringing a ship alongside shore or another vessel. In Acts 20:15, it describes the maritime leg of Paul's journey, where his company sailed to various ports. The word captures the waypoint nature of ancient sea travel: a series of coastal stops rather than direct voyages.

(1×) Acts 20:15 reports, 'We sailed away... and the following day we arrived at Samos.' The verb describes the ship's arrival at a port during Paul's return journey to Jerusalem. The nautical context makes clear this refers to touching at or reaching a harbor, part of the island-hopping voyage along the Aegean coast. Each arrival marks progress toward the destination. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: we-crossed | es: llegamos | fr: comparer | de: παρεβάλομεν Acts 20:15

παρά-βᾰσις G3847 N-GFS (7×)

Transgression, violation; the deliberate overstepping of a divine command or established law.

A legal and theological term denoting the willful crossing of a boundary set by God's law. Paul uses it surgically in Romans and Galatians to argue that where there is no explicit law, there can be no formal 'transgression' (Rom 4:15), and that the law was added precisely to make transgressions visible (Gal 3:19). Spanish 'transgresion,' French 'transgression,' and German 'Ubertretung' all preserve the root metaphor of stepping across a line. In 1 Timothy 2:14 it distinguishes Eve's deception from Adam's knowing violation, adding a subtle anthropological dimension.

transgression, violation of law (7×) Transgression, violation of law — the act of knowingly overstepping a divine boundary or commandment. Paul's usage is theologically precise: transgression requires a promulgated law to transgress (Rom 4:15), and the law itself was given 'because of transgressions' (Gal 3:19). In Rom 5:14, those who sinned before Moses did not sin 'in the likeness of Adam's transgression,' highlighting the formal, legal character of parabasis. The cross-linguistic evidence — Spanish 'transgresion,' French 'transgression,' German 'Ubertretung' (lit. 'over-stepping') — uniformly preserves the spatial metaphor of crossing a forbidden boundary. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: transgression, transgressions | es: transgresiones, transgresión | fr: transgression | de: Uebertretung Rom 2:23; Rom 4:15; Rom 5:14; Gal 3:19; 1Tim 2:14

παρα-βάτης G3848 N-NMS (5×)

Transgressor, lawbreaker; one who oversteps or violates a law or command, especially God's covenant law.

A noun meaning transgressor or lawbreaker — someone who deliberately crosses a boundary set by law. Derived from παραβαίνω (to step aside, transgress), it originally described the warrior standing beside a charioteer, but in the NT it is entirely moral: one who violates divine law. Paul uses it pointedly in Romans 2 to argue that circumcision profits nothing if one breaks the law (Rom 2:25, 27), and in Galatians 2:18 he warns against rebuilding what was torn down, which would make him a transgressor. James applies it democratically: stumbling on one point makes one guilty of the whole law (Jas 2:9, 11). The Spanish 'transgresor' and French 'transgresseur' both preserve the Latin-rooted sense of stepping across a boundary.

(5×) A transgressor or violator of the law — one who crosses a line that divine or moral law has drawn. In Romans 2:25–27, Paul deploys this term to unsettle Jewish confidence in circumcision: physical circumcision becomes uncircumcision if one is a παραβάτης of the law, while an uncircumcised person who keeps the law will judge the circumcised transgressor. Galatians 2:18 turns the charge reflexively: rebuilding the old system would constitute Paul himself a transgressor. James 2:9–11 extends the logic universally — partiality convicts one as a transgressor of the whole law. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'transgresor,' French 'transgresseur,' German 'Uebertreter') all share the etymological image of stepping beyond a limit. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: a-transgressor, transgressor, transgressors | es: transgresor, transgresores | fr: transgresseur | de: Uebertreter Rom 2:25; Rom 2:27; Gal 2:18; Jas 2:9; Jas 2:11

παρα-βῐάζομαι G3849 V-AIM-3P (2×)

to compel, constrain, urge strongly; to use force or pressure to persuade

This verb means to constrain, compel, or urge someone strongly—to apply pressure or force to persuade. Classical usage includes forcing military positions or doing violence to arguments. The middle voice emphasizes the subject's forceful insistence. Both New Testament uses describe hospitable insistence. In Luke 24:29, the Emmaus disciples 'urged' Jesus strongly to stay with them. In Acts 16:15, Lydia 'prevailed upon' or 'constrained' Paul and his companions to stay at her house. The word captures earnest, pressing invitation that borders on gentle compulsion.

(2×) Both uses are aorist middle indicative forms describing insistent hospitality. Luke 24:29 has the disciples urging Jesus to remain; Acts 16:15 has Lydia urging Paul's group to stay. The multilingual glosses capture the forceful persuasion: English 'she-prevailed-upon, they-urged,' Spanish 'le-instaron, nos-constriñó,' French 'forcer.' The verb suggests more than polite invitation—it's earnest, pressing insistence that successfully persuades. The middle voice emphasizes the subject's investment in securing the desired outcome through forceful yet hospitable pressure. COMPEL FORCE en: she-prevailed-upon, they-urged | es: le-instaron, nos-constriñó | fr: forcer | de: παρεβιάσαντο, παρεβιάσατο Luke 24:29; Acts 16:15

παραβολ-ή G3850 N-GFS (50×)

parable, comparison, proverb — a figurative illustration placed alongside a truth to make it vivid and memorable

Parabole (from para + ballo, 'to throw alongside') is the signature teaching genre of Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels. In the Septuagint it translated Hebrew mashal, covering proverbs, riddles, and illustrative stories alike. Jesus' parables range from brief similes (the mustard seed, Matt 13:31) to extended narratives (the prodigal son, Luke 15:11-32), with Mark 4:11-12 explaining that parables simultaneously reveal and conceal the kingdom's mystery. Hebrews 9:9 and 11:19 use the word in its older sense of 'type' or 'figure.' Spanish 'parabola,' French 'parabole,' and German 'Gleichnis' each accent a different facet.

parable, illustrative comparison (50×) A figurative narrative, comparison, or proverbial saying placed alongside a truth to illuminate it, functioning as the primary vehicle of Jesus' kingdom teaching. Covers extended story-parables (the Sower, Matt 13:3-9, 18-23; the Wicked Tenants, Matt 21:33-44), compact similes (the Leaven, Matt 13:33; the Pearl, Matt 13:45-46), and enigmatic sayings that blur into proverb (Luke 4:23, 'Physician, heal yourself'). Mark 4:10-12, 33-34 frames parabolic speech as both a pedagogical strategy and a revelatory mystery. In Hebrews 9:9 and 11:19, the word takes its older Greek sense of 'type' or 'figure,' referring to the tabernacle as a parabole of heavenly reality. All 50 occurrences share the root concept of illustrative analogy, whether narrative or gnomic. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: a-parable, parable | es: parábola, proverbio | fr: parabole | de: Gleichnis Matt 13:3; Matt 13:10; Matt 13:13; Matt 13:18; Matt 13:24

παραβολ-εύομαι G3851 V-APM-NMS (1×)

risk, expose to danger, venture boldly

This verb means to venture, risk, or expose oneself to danger. Paul uses it to commend Epaphroditus, who 'risked his life' to complete ministry to Paul. The term suggests deliberate acceptance of danger for a worthy cause. It evokes the gambler staking everything or the soldier volunteering for a hazardous mission. The word carries overtones of courage and self-sacrifice, choosing to step into danger rather than play it safe. Epaphroditus becomes the model of costly discipleship.

(1×) Philippians 2:30 honors Epaphroditus because 'he came near to death for the work of Christ, having risked his life' to serve Paul.

The participle emphasizes the deliberate nature of the risk—not accidental peril but conscious choice to expose himself to danger. Paul holds up this self-endangering service as exemplifying Christ-like humility: counting others more significant than self, even unto death. COURAGE CONFIDENCE

en: having-risked | es: habiendo-arriesgado | fr: παραβολευσάμενος | de: wagen Phil 2:30

παραγγ-ελία G3852 N-DFS (5×)

Command, charge, instruction; an authoritative order or set of instructions given by a leader or teacher.

A noun denoting a command, charge, or set of instructions — originally a military term for orders issued to soldiers, it broadened to mean any authoritative directive. In Acts 5:28, the Sanhedrin reminds the apostles of their strict charge not to teach in Jesus' name. Acts 16:24 describes the jailer receiving a 'charge' to guard Paul and Silas securely. Paul uses it for the ethical instructions he transmitted to the Thessalonians (1 Thess 4:2) and frames his entire charge to Timothy around love from a pure heart (1 Tim 1:5, 18). The Spanish 'mandamiento' and German 'Gebot' both emphasize the binding, authoritative weight of the word.

(5×) An authoritative command or charge — instructions given with the weight of rank or office, whether from a religious council, a military superior, or an apostle. The word retains a flavor of its military origins (orders passed down a chain of command). In Acts 5:28, the high priest's charge carries legal force. In 1 Thess 4:2, Paul reminds believers of the παραγγελίαι he gave 'through the Lord Jesus,' lending divine authority to ethical instruction. First Timothy 1:5 defines the goal of the entire apostolic charge as 'love from a pure heart,' while 1 Tim 1:18 frames the same word as a military-style commission to Timothy. The Spanish 'mandamiento' and French 'ordre' both capture the binding, top-down nature of this directive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: charge, command, instructions | es: con-mandamiento, mandamiento, mandamientos | fr: ordre, παραγγελίαν, παραγγελίας | de: Gebot, Παραγγελία, παραγγελίαν Acts 5:28; Acts 16:24; 1Thess 4:2; 1Tim 1:5; 1Tim 1:18

παραγγ-έλλω G3853 V-PMA-2S (32×)

To command, give authoritative orders; to charge or instruct earnestly in a pastoral context.

Drawn from military language — passing a command down the line — this verb carries the weight of authority in the New Testament. Jesus commands the crowd to sit (Matt 15:35), apostles issue directives to the churches (1 Cor 7:10; 11:17), and Paul charges Timothy with solemn pastoral instructions (1 Tim 1:3; 4:11). The lexicon tradition distinguishes it from harsher terms like κελεύω: παραγγέλλω conveys earnest exhortation alongside authority. Spanish separates 'habiendo-ordenado' (ordered) from 'Te-ordeno' (I charge you), mirroring the Greek distinction between institutional command and personal pastoral charge.

1. command or order authoritatively (24×) Authoritative command or directive issued from a position of leadership — military, apostolic, or dominical. Jesus commands the crowd to recline before the feeding (Matt 15:35; Mark 8:6), and the apostles issue binding directives to the early church (Acts 16:18; 1 Thess 4:11). Spanish 'habiendo-mandado' and German 'gebieten' both emphasize the hierarchical force. The word presupposes an established chain of authority and an expectation of obedience. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: commanded, commands, having-charged | es: habiendo-mandado, habiendo-ordenado, le-ordenó | fr: ordonner | de: befiehlt, gebieten Matt 10:5; Matt 15:35; Mark 6:8; Mark 8:6; Mark 16:20

2. charge or instruct earnestly (8×) Earnest charge or solemn instruction, particularly in pastoral contexts where the tone is personal exhortation rather than bare command. Paul 'charges' Timothy to remain in Ephesus and combat false teaching (1 Tim 1:3), and tells the Corinthians 'I instruct' regarding the Lord's Supper (1 Cor 11:17). Spanish 'Te-ordeno' and 'Manda' capture this blend of authority and pastoral urgency. The BDB note that it is 'not so strong as κελεύω' confirms this softer hortatory nuance distinct from a battlefield order. COMMANDING AND ORDERING en: I-charge, I-command, charge | es: Manda, Te-ordeno, manda | fr: ordonner | de: befiehlt, gebieten Acts 16:18; 1Cor 7:10; 1Cor 11:17; 1Tim 1:3; 1Tim 4:11

παραγίγνομαι G3854 V-ASM-1S (37×)

To arrive at a destination; to appear or come on the scene publicly; to be present or come alongside someone.

The Greek verb paraginomai combines para ('alongside') with ginomai ('to come into being, to arrive'), producing a word whose primary force is reaching a destination. In 31 of its 37 NT occurrences, it narrates simple arrival – the Magi coming to Jerusalem (Matt 2:1), elders arriving at Jesus' side (Luke 7:4), relatives coming to find him (Luke 8:19). But paraginomai also carries dramatic staging power: John the Baptist 'appears' preaching in the wilderness (Matt 3:1), and Christ 'appears' as the great high priest (Heb 9:11). Spanish llegar and German ankommen capture the arrival sense cleanly, while the 'appearing' nuance echoes in Spanish venir and French arriver when the context is a public debut. A rare third sense emphasizes presence rather than motion – Paul's companions being present at Jerusalem (Acts 21:18) or supporters failing to come alongside at trial (2 Tim 4:16).

1. arrive at a place (31×) Physical arrival at a specific place or destination, emphasizing the journey's completion. This dominant sense (31 occurrences) covers the Magi arriving in Jerusalem (Matt 2:1), messengers reaching Jesus (Luke 7:4, 20), Mary's family coming to find him (Luke 8:19), and travelers arriving after a journey (Luke 11:6). Spanish habiendo llegado, French arriver, and German ankommen all converge on the directional arrival reading. The verb consistently marks the endpoint of movement rather than the journey itself. GOING AND LEADING en: arrived, came, having-arrived | es: Habiendo-llegado, habiendo-llegado, llegando | fr: arriver | de: ankommen, kommt Matt 2:1; Luke 7:4; Luke 7:20; Luke 8:19; Luke 11:6

2. appear, come on the scene (4×) A dramatic or public appearance on the scene, marking the debut of a significant figure or the onset of a pivotal moment. Four occurrences carry this stage-entrance quality: John the Baptist appearing in the wilderness (Matt 3:1), Jesus arriving at the Jordan for baptism (Matt 3:13), Judas arriving with the armed crowd at Gethsemane (Mark 14:43), and Christ appearing as high priest of good things to come (Heb 9:11). Spanish habiendo venido and German kommt here shade toward 'making an appearance' rather than simply 'arriving.' GOING AND LEADING

en: arrives, comes, having-appeared | es: habiendo-venido, llega | fr: arriver | de: ankommen, kommt Matt 3:1; Matt 3:13; Mark 14:43; Heb 9:11

3. be present, come alongside (2×) Being present at a place or coming alongside someone, with emphasis on attendance or companionship rather than the act of traveling. Two occurrences reveal this nuance: the brethren being present when Paul arrived in Jerusalem (Acts 21:18) and no one coming to Paul's side at his first defense (2 Tim 4:16). Spanish estaban presentes and German ankommen shift toward a stative reading – being there for someone rather than traveling toward a point. GOING AND LEADING en: came, came-alongside | es: estaban-presentes, estuvo-presente | fr: arriver | de: ankommen, kommt Acts 21:18; 2Tim 4:16

παρ-άγω G3855 V-PIA-3S (11×)

To pass by physically, walking past a place; metaphorically, to pass away or cease to exist.

Paragō paints two vivid pictures: movement through space and movement through time toward ending. In the Gospels, Jesus 'passes by' — walking along the Sea of Galilee and spotting his future disciples (Matt 9:9, Mark 1:16, Mark 2:14), a simple but momentous act of physical transit. In the Johannine and Pauline letters, however, the word turns metaphorical and even cosmic: 'the form of this world is passing away' (1 Cor 7:31), and 'the darkness is passing away and the true light is already shining' (1 John 2:8). Spanish distinguishes these neatly — pasaba/pasando for physical movement, pasa for metaphorical transience.

1. to pass by (physical movement) (8×) To pass by physically, to walk or travel past a place. Used of Jesus moving through towns and along roads — catching sight of Matthew at the tax booth (Matt 9:9), walking by the Sea of Galilee (Mark 1:16, Mark 2:14), or passing by as blind men call out (Matt 9:27, Matt 20:30). The word conveys ordinary human locomotion that, in the Gospel narratives, becomes the occasion for extraordinary encounters. Spanish pasaba ('was passing by') and German vorübergehen capture this physical transit clearly. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: is-passing-by, passing-by, was-passing-by | es: pasaba, pasando | fr: passer | de: voruebergehen, παράγει, παράγοντι Matt 9:9; Matt 9:27; Matt 20:30; Mark 1:16; Mark 2:14

2. to pass away (metaphorical/temporal) (3×) To pass away, to cease to exist — a metaphorical extension describing the transience of the present world order. Paul declares 'the form of this world is passing away' (1 Cor 7:31), and John writes that 'the darkness is passing away' as the true light shines (1 John 2:8) and 'the world and its desires are passing away' (1 John 2:17). The shift from physical movement to cosmic impermanence is dramatic. English 'is passing away' and Spanish pasa (present tense, ongoing process) both capture the sense of gradual but certain dissolution. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: is-passing-away | es: pasa | fr: passer | de: voruebergehen 1Cor 7:31; 1John 2:8; 1John 2:17

παραδειγ-μᾰτίζω G3856 V-PPA-AMP (1×)

make a public spectacle of, expose to shame or ridicule

This verb means to make an example of someone publicly, often with connotations of shame or spectacle. Hebrews uses it to describe the hypothetical case of apostates who 'put Christ to open shame' by renouncing faith. The term suggests public humiliation, holding someone up as a warning or object of ridicule. It evokes the practice of parading prisoners or criminals publicly to deter others. The word combines publicity with disgrace, making private failure a public spectacle.

(1×) Hebrews 6:6 warns that those who fall away 'are crucifying once again the Son of God to their own harm and holding him up to contempt,' using this verb for public shaming. To renounce Christ after enlightenment is to treat his crucifixion as though he deserved it, publicly repudiating him. The participial phrase underscores apostasy's gravity: it doesn't quietly slip away but loudly shames Christ before a watching world. SHAME AND DISGRACE en: putting-to-open-shame | es: exponiendo-a-vergüenza | fr: zur-Schau-stellen | de: zur-Schau-stellen Heb 6:6

πᾰρᾰδεισ-ος G3857 N-AMS (3×)

Paradise; the garden of Eden; the abode of the blessed; a place of bliss and divine presence Borrowed from Persian through Greek, this word originally meant an enclosed park or pleasure-ground of Persian kings, then came to denote the garden of Eden, and finally the dwelling place of the redeemed. Jesus promises the penitent thief, 'Today you will be with me in Paradise' (Luke 23:43). Paul describes being caught up to Paradise and hearing inexpressible words (2 Cor 12:4). The risen Christ promises the overcomer the right to eat from 'the tree of life in the paradise of God' (Rev 2:7). Each use evokes restoration of Edenic communion with God.

(3×) All languages transliterate or preserve the word: English 'Paradise', Spanish 'Paraíso', French 'paradis', German 'Paradies/Παραδείσῳ'. The lexicon traces it from Persian parks to the garden of Eden (LXX) to 'the abode of the blessed' (NT). Luke 23:43 promises the thief immediate presence with Christ in Paradise. 2 Cor 12:4 describes Paul's visionary ascent to Paradise. Rev 2:7 locates the tree of life in 'the paradise of God'. Each occurrence points to a place of divine presence and blessing. EDEN GARDEN PLACE en: Paradise | es: Paraíso | fr: paradis | de: Paradies, Παραδείσῳ Luke 23:43; 2Cor 12:4; Rev 2:7

παραδέχομαι G3858 V-PNM/P (6×)

To receive from another, accept, or welcome; used of receiving persons, teachings, or testimony with openness.

In the New Testament, paradechomai describes an act of receptive acceptance — welcoming a person, embracing a teaching, or admitting testimony. When the seed falls on good soil in Mark 4:20, these are the ones who 'receive' the word. In Acts 15:4, the church at Jerusalem 'received' Paul and Barnabas warmly. The range stretches from the cordial reception of missionaries to the judicial acceptance of accusations (1 Tim 5:19), always carrying a note of deliberate, willing openness rather than mere passive intake.

to receive, accept, welcome (6×) To receive, accept, or welcome something or someone offered or presented — embracing with willing openness. The multilingual evidence is remarkably unified: Spanish 'recibir,' French 'recevoir,' German 'annehmen' all converge on active, intentional reception. Used of receiving the gospel message (Mark 4:20), welcoming apostles (Acts 15:4), accepting cultural practices (Acts 16:21), receiving testimony (Acts 22:18), and admitting formal accusations (1 Tim 5:19). The word carries an interpersonal warmth absent from simpler verbs of taking. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: he-receives, receive, they-were-received | es: fueron-recibidos, recibas, recibe | fr: recevoir | de: annehmen, παραδέξονταί, παραδέχεσθαι Mark 4:20; Acts 15:4; Acts 16:21; Acts 22:18; 1Tim 5:19

διατρῐβή G3859 N-NFP (1×)

constant friction, useless wrangling, persistent disputes

This rare compound noun denotes persistent friction or constant wrangling. Paul uses it in 1 Timothy to characterize false teachers: people engaging in 'constant frictions' or useless disputes. The term combines 'wearing away' or 'rubbing' with the idea of irritation or friction. It evokes the exhausting, unproductive nature of perpetual arguing—disputes that generate heat without light. The word suggests not one-off debates but chronic, habitual contention that wears everyone down.

(1×) 1 Timothy 6:5 describes corrupt teachers as marked by 'constant frictions,' perpetual disputes that exhaust and divide. The noun captures the sterile, repetitive nature of their controversies—not honest inquiry but endless quibbling. Paul warns Timothy against those whose minds are 'depraved and deprived of the truth,' whose teaching produces friction rather than faith. Such constant contention reveals corrupt hearts, not pure doctrine. CONTROVERSY DISPUTE en: constant-frictions | es: roces-constantes | fr: διαπαρατριβαὶ | de: unnuetzer-Streit 1Tim 6:5

παραδίδωμι G3860 V-PIM/P-1P (120×)

To hand over, deliver, betray, transmit, entrust, surrender, or permit — spanning custody transfer, treacherous betrayal, tradition-passing, and self-giving Paradidomi is the verb that shadows the Passion narrative — Judas 'hands over' Jesus, Jesus is 'delivered' to Pilate, and ultimately God 'gives up' his Son for the world. Yet the same root also describes Paul 'handing on' sacred tradition (1 Cor 11:23; 15:3) and a master 'entrusting' talents to servants. The tension between betrayal and faithful transmission runs through the word like a fault line. Spanish captures this with entregó for both custody transfers and betrayals, while French livrer ('to deliver') and German ueberliefern ('to hand down') each flatten different dimensions. The full semantic range — from Judas's treachery to Paul's catechesis to Christ's self-offering — makes paradidomi one of the most theologically charged verbs in the New Testament.

1. hand over, deliver to custody (78×) To hand over or deliver a person into custody (78x): the dominant sense, covering the transfer of a person into the power, control, or jurisdiction of another — courts, rulers, prisons, or hostile parties — without implying personal treachery by the agent. Spanish entregó ('handed over'), French livrer, and German ueberliefern all cover this neutral transfer. Jesus tells the disciples they will be 'delivered' to councils and synagogues (Matt 10:17), brother will deliver brother to death (Matt 10:21), and the Son of Man will be 'delivered' to the Gentiles (Matt 20:19). The agent may be hostile, but the verb itself describes transfer, not treason. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: betrayed, delivered, gave-over | es: entregó, es-entregado, se-entregó | fr: livrer | de: ueberliefern, übergibt Matt 10:17; Matt 10:21; Matt 18:34; Matt 20:19; Matt 24:9

2. betray, hand over treacherously (20×) To betray, to hand over treacherously (20x): a specialized intensification of sense 1, where the transfer involves personal disloyalty, breach of trust, or insider treachery. Spanish entregar with betrayal-specific modifiers and German verraten ('to betray') distinguish this from neutral custody transfer. Prototypically Judas: identified as 'the one who would betray him' (Matt 10:4; 26:25), negotiating a price (Matt 26:15), signaling with a kiss (Matt 26:48). The multilingual glosses — Korean baesinhada, Arabic khana — consistently deploy betrayal-specific vocabulary for these Judas passages, confirming a recognized semantic distinction. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: He-was-being-betrayed, betraying, delivering | es: a-entregar, de-entregar, entregando | fr: livrer | de: ueberliefern, übergibt Matt 10:4; Matt 26:15; Matt 26:25; Matt 26:46; Matt 26:48

3. hand down, transmit tradition (12×) To hand down, transmit tradition or teaching (12x): the catechetical sense, where what is 'handed over' is not a person but authoritative instruction, decrees, or inherited practice. French transmise and German ueberlieferten mark the transmission register. Paul's formula is definitive: 'I delivered to you what I also received' (1 Cor 11:23; 15:3), establishing a technical vocabulary of tradition. Luke opens his Gospel with traditions 'delivered to us' by eyewitnesses (Luke 1:2), and Acts records apostolic decrees being 'delivered' to churches (Acts 16:4). Mark 7:13 uses it negatively for human traditions that nullify God's word. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: I-delivered, delivered, having-been-delivered | es: entregaban, entregada, entregando | fr: livrer, transmise | de: ueberliefern, übergibt, überlieferten Matt 11:27; Mark 7:13; Luke 1:2; Luke 10:22; Acts 12:4

4. entrust, commit to one's care (5×) To entrust, commit to someone's care (5x): handing over something valuable — responsibility, authority, or resources — for stewardship. Spanish encomendado ('entrusted') distinctly marks this as fiduciary rather than coercive. In the parable of the talents, the master 'delivered' five talents to one servant (Matt 25:20, 22). Satan claims authority has been 'delivered' to him (Luke 4:6). Paul and Barnabas are 'commended to the grace of God' by the Antioch church (Acts 14:26; 15:40). The emphasis falls on trust and responsibility, not hostility. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: having-been-committed, it-has-been-delivered, you-delivered | es: encomendado, encomendados, entregaste | fr: livrer | de: übergibt Matt 25:20; Matt 25:22; Luke 4:6; Acts 14:26; Acts 15:40

5. give over, surrender, abandon (4×) To give over, surrender, or abandon to a condition (4x): yielding someone (or oneself) to a power, fate, or experience — whether divine judgment, sacrificial self-offering, or voluntary exposure. Spanish habiendo entregado and English having-given-over capture the surrendering quality. God 'gave them over' to their sinful desires (Rom 1:24, 26, 28), Paul speaks of those who 'risked their lives' (Acts 15:26, literally 'handed over their souls'), and Christ 'gave himself up for me' (Gal 2:20). The reflexive self-giving in Galatians stands as the theological counterpoint to Judas's betrayal in sense 2. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: I-hand-over, are-being-handed-over, having-given-over | es: entregare, habiendo-entregado, somos-entregados | fr: livrer | de: ueberliefern, übergibt Acts 15:26; 1Cor 13:3; 2Cor 4:11; Gal 2:20

6. (1×) To permit, allow a process to proceed (1x): in Mark 4:29, when the grain is ripe, the farmer 'puts in the sickle' because the harvest 'permits' — the fruit has yielded itself to readiness. Spanish permite and English permits confirm this unusual reading. The grain paradidoi, 'hands itself over' to the harvest, a vivid agricultural metaphor where the ripened crop is imagined as surrendering to the reaper. This lone occurrence extends the root's transfer semantics into the domain of natural process and seasonal readiness. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: permits | es: permite | fr: livrer | de: ueberliefern Mark 4:29

παράδοξος G3861 Adj-ANP (1×)

remarkable, contrary to expectation, incredible, paradoxical

This adjective describes things contrary to expectation or common opinion—whether marvelous or paradoxical. Luke uses it to capture the crowd's reaction after Jesus heals the paralytic: 'We have seen remarkable things today.' The term can denote the incredible, the unexpected, or Stoic paradoxes. It suggests disruption of normal categories, events that defy conventional wisdom. The word evokes astonishment at what shouldn't be possible but is. Reality has outrun expectation.

(1×) Luke 5:26 reports the crowd's response to the paralytic's healing: 'We have seen remarkable things today!' The adjective captures their stunned amazement—not merely impressive acts but things defying expectation. The paralytic walked, sins were forgiven, divine authority was displayed in flesh. What they witnessed scrambled their categories, producing both fear and glorifying of God. The paradox of divinity in humanity became undeniable. AMAZEMENT AND ASTONISHMENT en: remarkable-things | es: cosas-increíbles | fr: extraordinaire | de: παράδοξα Luke 5:26

παρά-δοσις G3862 N-DFS (13×)

Tradition; a teaching, custom, or practice handed down by transmission from one generation to the next.

Derived from paradidomi ('to hand over, transmit'), this noun denotes any teaching, practice, or custom passed down through a chain of transmission. The NT uses it with both negative and positive valence. Jesus sharply criticizes 'the tradition of the elders' and 'the tradition of men' that nullifies God's commandments (Matt 15:2-6; Mark 7:3-13; Col 2:8). Yet Paul commends the Corinthians for holding to 'the traditions just as I delivered them to you' (1 Cor 11:2) and commands the Thessalonians to 'hold to the traditions you were taught' (2 Thess 2:15; 3:6). This dual usage — human tradition as obstacle versus apostolic tradition as foundation — makes the word theologically pivotal. Translations uniformly render it with cognates of 'tradition' (Spanish tradición, French tradition, German Überlieferung).

tradition, handed-down teaching (13×) An authoritative teaching, practice, or custom transmitted from one generation or authority to the next, used both negatively of human traditions that override God's word (Matt 15:2-3, 6; Mark 7:3, 5, 8-9, 13; Col 2:8; Gal 1:14) and positively of apostolic traditions to be upheld (1 Cor 11:2; 2 Thess 2:15; 3:6). The paradosis concept presupposes a chain of transmission — someone hands over and another receives. Cross-linguistic evidence converges on a single term (French tradition, German Überlieferung, Spanish tradición), reflecting the word's unified semantic core despite its opposite evaluations in context. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: tradition, traditions | es: tradiciones, tradición | fr: tradition | de: Ueberlieferung, παράδοσιν Matt 15:2; Matt 15:3; Matt 15:6; Mark 7:3; Mark 7:5

παραζηλ-όω G3863 V-PIA-1P (4×)

To provoke to jealousy; to stir up rivalry or zealous emulation through envy.

A compound verb (para + zēloō) meaning to provoke someone to jealousy or zealous rivalry. Paul builds his theology of Israel and the Gentiles around this word in Romans 10–11. Quoting Deuteronomy 32:21, he explains that God will 'provoke Israel to jealousy' through a non-nation (Rom 10:19). This jealousy-provoking becomes Paul's missionary strategy: Gentile inclusion is meant to 'provoke to jealousy' his fellow Israelites and so save some (Rom 11:11, 14). In 1 Cor 10:22 the tone shifts to warning: 'Shall we provoke the Lord to jealousy?' Spanish 'provocar a celos' and French 'provoquer à la jalousie' both preserve the deliberate, relational provocation at the heart of this theologically loaded verb.

(4×) To provoke to jealousy — to deliberately stir up zealous rivalry or envy, especially in a covenantal or relational context. Paul's argument in Romans 10–11 hinges on this verb: God provokes Israel to jealousy through Gentile inclusion (Rom 10:19, quoting Deut 32:21), and Paul hopes his Gentile ministry will provoke his kinsmen to saving jealousy (Rom 11:11, 14). In 1 Cor 10:22, the object shifts to God himself—a dangerous provocation recalling Israel's wilderness idolatry. German 'eifersüchtig machen' and Spanish 'provocar a celos' both highlight the interpersonal, emotive dimension of this covenantal dynamic. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: I-might-provoke-to-jealousy, do-we-provoke-to-jealousy, to-provoke-to-jealousy | es: provocamos-a-celos, provocar-a-celos, provocaré-a-celos | fr: provoquer-à-la-jalousie | de: eifersuechtig-machen Rom 10:19; Rom 11:11; Rom 11:14; 1Cor 10:22

παραθᾰλάσσ-ιος G3864 Adj-AFS (1×)

by the sea, coastal, along the seashore

This adjective describes locations beside or along the sea. Matthew uses it to identify Capernaum as 'by the sea,' located on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. The term distinguishes coastal settlements from inland towns. It evokes the fishing villages, harbors, and maritime commerce that characterized Galilee's lakeshore. For Matthew, the geographical detail fulfills Isaiah's prophecy about 'Galilee of the Gentiles' and 'the way of the sea,' connecting Jesus' ministry location to messianic expectation.

(1×) Matthew 4:13 describes Jesus leaving Nazareth to dwell in Capernaum 'by the sea,' situating his base of operations on the Galilean coast. The geographical marker does double duty: it locates the ministry historically while fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy about light dawning in 'Galilee of the Gentiles.' The seaside setting becomes theologically significant—the place where Messiah launches his public work. SEA LARGE WATER

en: by-the-sea | es: junto-al-mar | fr: côte | de: Küste Matt 4:13

παραθεωρ-έω G3865 V-IIM/P-3P (1×)

overlook, neglect, disregard (often unintentionally)

This verb means to overlook, neglect, or disregard—often unintentionally or through oversight. Acts uses it to describe the neglect of Hellenistic widows in the daily distribution. The term suggests not malicious exclusion but failure to notice or give proper attention. It evokes looking past someone, letting them fall through the cracks. The passive form indicates those being overlooked experience the neglect, even if no one intended harm. Systemic neglect can occur without individual malice.

(1×) Acts 6:1 reports the Hellenistic Jews' complaint that 'their widows were being overlooked in the daily distribution.' The passive verb indicates the widows experienced neglect, whether intentional or not. The systemic oversight threatened church unity, prompting the appointment of deacons to ensure equitable care. The verb highlights how good intentions don't guarantee just outcomes; structures must actively prevent vulnerable people from being overlooked. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: were-being-overlooked | es: eran-descuidadas | fr: παρεθεωροῦντο | de: παρεθεωροῦντο Acts 6:1

παρα-θήκη G3866 N-AFS (3×)

a deposit, something entrusted to one's care; a sacred trust or stewardship to be guarded

This noun refers to something entrusted into one's keeping—a deposit to be faithfully guarded and eventually returned. Paul charges Timothy to 'guard the deposit' entrusted to him (1 Tim 6:20; 2 Tim 1:14), likely referring to sound doctrine and apostolic teaching. Paul also expresses confidence that Christ is able to guard what Paul has entrusted to him until that Day (2 Tim 1:12). The term carries financial overtones but in the New Testament denotes sacred stewardship—truth and ministry committed to faithful hands.

(3×) Multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'deposit': English 'deposit', Spanish 'depósito', French preserves the Greek παραθήκην, German 'anvertrautes-Gut' (entrusted good). The lexicon defines it as 'anything entrusted to one, deposit' with roots in banking and property. 1 Tim 6:20 and 2 Tim 1:14 urge Timothy to guard the deposit entrusted to him (likely sound doctrine), while 2 Tim 1:12 expresses Paul's confidence that God will guard what has been entrusted to him. The word emphasizes fiduciary responsibility for what belongs to another. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: deposit | es: depósito | fr: παραθήκην | de: anvertrautes-Gut 1Tim 6:20; 2Tim 1:12; 2Tim 1:14

παραιν-έω G3867 V-PIA-1S (2×)

to exhort, advise, recommend; to urge or counsel someone toward a course of action

This verb means to advise, recommend, exhort, or counsel. Classical usage ranges from military commanders advising troops to philosophers recommending courses of action. The tone can be strong exhortation or gentle recommendation. Both New Testament occurrences appear in Paul's shipwreck narrative. In Acts 27:9, Paul 'advised' or 'warned' against continuing the voyage. In Acts 27:22, he 'urged' the crew to take courage despite the storm. The word emphasizes persuasive counsel based on wisdom or authority, seeking to guide others toward prudent action.

(2×) Acts 27:9 uses the imperfect ('was admonishing/advising') for Paul's initial warning, while 27:22 uses the present ('I urge') for his encouragement during crisis. The multilingual glosses render the advisory force: English 'I-urge, was-admonishing,' Spanish 'aconsejaba, os-aconsejo,' French 'exhorter.' The first use involves cautionary advice (which was ignored); the second involves encouraging exhortation in the midst of disaster. Both demonstrate Paul's authoritative yet persuasive counsel, seeking to guide others through reasoned recommendation rather than command. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: I-urge, was-admonishing | es: aconsejaba, os-aconsejo | fr: exhorter | de: παραινῶ, παρήνει Acts 27:9; Acts 27:22

παραιτ-έομαι G3868 V-APM-NMP (12×)

To beg off, make excuses, refuse, reject, or earnestly request — covering the full arc from polite declination to firm refusal.

Few Greek verbs span as wide an interpersonal arc as paraiteomai. At its gentlest, guests at a banquet 'beg off' with excuses — 'I have bought a field; please have me excused' (Luke 14:18-19). At its firmest, Paul insists that believers 'refuse' godless myths (1 Tim 4:7) and 'reject' divisive persons (Titus 3:10). And in its oldest classical sense, it can mean simply 'to request' or entreat, as when the crowd at Sinai 'begged that no further word be spoken' (Heb 12:19). Spanish distinguishes these beautifully: 'excusarse' for begging off, 'rechazar' for refusing, and 'suplicar' for earnest entreaty.

1. refuse, reject (7×) To refuse, reject, or decline firmly — the dominant New Testament usage, where something is turned away or dismissed. Paul commands Timothy to 'refuse' profane myths (1 Tim 4:7), to 'reject' younger widows from the enrollment (1 Tim 5:11), and to avoid foolish controversies (2 Tim 2:23). Hebrews 12:25 warns against refusing the One who speaks from heaven. Spanish 'rechazar' and French 'refuser' consistently mark this firm, deliberate refusal. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: I-refuse, having-refused, refuse | es: rechacéis, rechaza, rechazando | fr: refuser, repousser | de: ablehnen, παραιτοῦμαι Acts 25:11; 1Tim 4:7; 1Tim 5:11; 2Tim 2:23; Titus 3:10

2. beg off, make excuses (3×) To beg off or make excuses from an obligation or invitation, offering reasons for declining. In Jesus' parable of the great banquet (Luke 14:18-19), each invited guest 'began to make excuses' — one bought a field, another oxen, another married. Spanish 'excusarse' and German 'sich entschuldigen' capture the polite, social dimension of this sense, distinct from the harsh rejection of sense 1. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: excused, to-excuse | es: a-excusarse, por-excusado | fr: refuser | de: παραιτεῖσθαι, παρητημένον Luke 14:18; Luke 14:19

3. request, beg (2×) To make an earnest request or entreaty — the classical sense of begging or petitioning. At Mark 15:6, the crowd 'was requesting' that Pilate release a prisoner, and at Heb 12:19 the Israelites at Sinai 'begged' that no further word be spoken to them. Spanish 'suplicaron' and 'pedían' reveal this supplicatory register, while interestingly French still renders 'refuser,' collapsing the distinction that the Greek and Spanish preserve. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: begged, they-were-requesting | es: pedían, suplicaron | fr: refuser | de: ablehnen Mark 15:6; Heb 12:19

παρακαθ-ίζω G3869 V-APP-NFS (1×)

sit down beside, take a seat next to someone

This verb means to sit down beside or near someone. Luke uses it to describe Mary of Bethany sitting at Jesus' feet to hear his teaching. The prefix para- ('beside') emphasizes proximity and position. The term evokes the posture of a disciple learning from a rabbi —not standing at a distance but seated close, attentive, absorbing instruction. In ancient culture, sitting at someone's feet signaled the learner's humility and the teacher's authority. Mary's choice of posture embodies eager discipleship.

(1×) Luke 10:39 describes Mary 'having sat down beside the Lord's feet,' listening to his teaching. The participle captures her deliberate choice to assume the disciple's position. In contrast to Martha's distracted service, Mary's seated posture demonstrates singular focus: she has chosen proximity to Jesus and attention to his word. Her physical position beside his feet mirrors her spiritual position as learner. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: having-sat-beside | es: sentándose | fr: s'asseoir-auprès | de: παρακαθεσθεῖσα Luke 10:39

παρακᾰλέω G3870 V-APA-NMS (109×)

To call alongside; entreat, exhort, encourage, comfort, or invite — spanning earnest appeal, pastoral urging, and consolation.

Parakaleo is built from para ('alongside') and kaleo ('to call'), and that etymology illuminates every sense: someone is always being called to stand alongside another, whether to help, to encourage, or to console. In the Gospels it most often appears as urgent entreaty — lepers begging for healing, demons pleading not to be sent away (Matt 8:31-34). In Acts and the Epistles it shifts toward pastoral exhortation and mutual encouragement within the young church. Paul's usage in 2 Corinthians is especially rich, where the same verb means both 'comfort' and 'be comforted' within a single paragraph (2 Cor 1:3-7), creating a theology of reciprocal consolation. Arabic distinguishes tawassala ('to implore') from haththa ('to urge') from 'azza ('to console'), while Korean separates 간청하다 (beseech), 권면하다 (exhort), and 위로하다 (comfort) — confirming that these are genuinely distinct senses, not just translation variants.

1. entreat, beseech, implore (57×) To entreat, beseech, or implore — the largest cluster at 57 occurrences. This is the parakaleo of desperate petition: the centurion begging Jesus to heal his servant (Matt 8:5), the Gadarene demons pleading to enter the swine (Matt 8:31), the woman with the hemorrhage touching his garment after the crowd 'pressed' him (Mark 5:23). The subject is typically in a position of need or inferiority, appealing upward. Arabic tawassala and Korean 간청하다 both select the 'earnest plea' register, while Swahili -sihi carries the nuance of humble supplication. Paul uses this sense when he 'begs' the Corinthians to be reconciled to God (2 Cor 5:20). EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: I-urge, he-was-begging, they-were-begging | es: Exhorto, exhorto, le-rogaba | fr: exhorter | de: ermahnen, ermahnt Matt 8:5; Matt 8:31; Matt 8:34; Matt 14:36; Matt 18:29

2. exhort, admonish, urge (28×) To exhort, admonish, or urge toward right conduct — 28 occurrences, concentrated in Acts and the Pauline epistles. This is pastoral parakaleo: Barnabas exhorting the Antioch believers to remain faithful (Acts 11:23), Paul and Silas strengthening the churches (Acts 14:22; 15:32), and the repeated epistolary formula 'I exhort you, brothers' (Rom 12:1; 1 Thess 4:1). The shift from sense 1 is directional — here the speaker has authority or spiritual standing, urging others forward rather than pleading from below. Arabic haththa/wa'aza and Korean 권면하다/권고하다 both select instructional-encouragement vocabulary. Luke 3:18 summarizes John the Baptist's preaching as parakalon, 'exhorting' the people. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: encouraged, exhort, exhorting | es: Exhortamos, anima, consolaron | fr: exhorter | de: ermahnen, ermahnt Luke 3:18; Acts 2:40; Acts 11:23; Acts 14:22; Acts 15:32

3. comfort, console (11×) To comfort, console, or bring relief to the distressed — 11 occurrences, with 2 Corinthians as the epicenter. Paul's 'God of all comfort who comforts us in all our affliction' (2 Cor 1:3-4) uses this verb four times in two verses, establishing comfort as a divine attribute channeled through human community. The Thessalonians are told to 'comfort one another' regarding the dead (1 Thess 4:18). Arabic 'azza and Korean 위로하다 consistently select consolation-specific vocabulary here rather than 'urge' or 'beg' language, and Swahili -fariji ('to comfort, relieve grief') confirms the emotional-relief dimension. The theological link between suffering and comfort in 2 Corinthians makes this a theologically generative sense. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: comforted, comforting, encourage | es: consolaos, consolar, consoló | fr: exhorter | de: ermahnen 2Cor 1:4; 2Cor 2:7; 2Cor 7:6

4. be comforted, receive comfort (11×) To be comforted or receive consolation (passive/middle voice) — 11 occurrences where the subject experiences comfort rather than dispensing it. The Beatitudes' 'they shall be comforted' (Matt 5:4) is the most famous instance. Rachel 'refused to be comforted' for her children (Matt 2:18). In 2 Corinthians 7:6-7 Paul himself 'was comforted' by the arrival of Titus. Arabic ta'azza (reflexive Form V) and Korean 위로받다 ('receive comfort') both mark the passive-reception frame morphologically, confirming a genuine voice-driven sense distinction from active sense 3. The passive transforms comfort from an act of will into a grace received. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: be-comforted, be-encouraged, he-is-comforted | es: Sed-consolados, es-consolado, fue-consolado | fr: exhorter | de: ermahnen, ermahnt Matt 2:18; Matt 5:4; Luke 16:25; Acts 20:12; 2Cor 1:4

5. invite, summon, call for (2×) To invite, summon, or call for someone's presence — only 2 clear occurrences, both in Acts. In Acts 28:14 Paul's companions 'were invited' to stay with fellow believers; in Acts 28:20 Paul explains he 'called for' the Jewish leaders in Rome. This recovers the classical Greek meaning closest to the etymology ('call alongside'), which in the New Testament is largely eclipsed by the entreaty and comfort senses. Arabic da'a ('to invite') and Korean 초대하다 ('to extend an invitation') both select social-invitation vocabulary here. Though rare, this sense preserves the verb's etymological core and its continuity with classical usage. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: I-called-for, we-were-invited | es: fuimos-invitados, os-invité | fr: exhorter | de: ermahnt Acts 28:14; Acts 28:20

παρα-κᾰλύπτω G3871 V-RPM/P-NNS (1×)

to cover, conceal, hide from view or understanding

In its sole New Testament occurrence at Luke 9:45, this verb describes how the meaning of Jesus' prediction about his suffering was concealed or veiled from the disciples' comprehension. The root meaning involves covering something by placing something beside it, like hanging a cloth to obscure what lies behind. Here it captures the mysterious opacity that prevented the disciples from grasping what Jesus was saying, as if their understanding had been deliberately cloaked.

(1×) The passive perfect form appears in Luke 9:45 where Jesus' saying about betrayal was 'hidden' from the disciples. The multilingual evidence (English 'hidden', Spanish 'encubierta', French 'voilé') consistently points to concealment. The domain assignment to mental life reflects how this covering creates cognitive opacity—the disciples couldn't penetrate the veil over the meaning. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: hidden | es: encubierta | fr: voilé | de: παρακεκαλυμμένον Luke 9:45

παρακατα-θήκη G3872 deposit, something entrusted to one's care; money/property in trust; ward, person under guardianship

A παρακαταθήκη is something deposited with another for safekeeping —money, property, or even persons. Banking deposits and temple treasuries used this term. The obligations were serious: to withhold a deposit was ἀποστερῆσαι (to defraud), while to restore it was ἀποδιδόναι. Children entrusted to guardians and wards of the state were called παρακαταθῆκαι, extending the concept to persons under protective care. The word emphasizes fiduciary responsibility and sacred trust.

παράκειμαι G3873 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)

to lie beside, be present, be at hand; to be available or adjacent

This verb means to lie beside, be present, or be at hand. Originally a passive form of 'place beside,' it describes what is available, adjacent, or immediately present. Classical usage includes materials lying at hand for craftsmen, choices lying before someone, or pleasures and pains lying side by side. Both New Testament uses appear in Romans 7, where Paul describes the psychological struggle with sin. The verb captures what is immediately present or available to him—particularly the internal presence of evil and the law of God.

(2×) Romans 7:18 and 7:21 both use the present indicative to describe what Paul finds 'present' or 'at hand' within himself. In 7:18, 'the will is present with me' but not the ability to do good. In 7:21, 'when I want to do right, evil is present with me.' The translations emphasize presence or availability: English 'is-present,' Spanish 'está-presente,' French 'être-présent.' The verb captures the immediate, inescapable proximity of competing moral forces within Paul's experience—what lies constantly at hand in his inner life. BEING PRESENT en: is-present | es: está-presente | fr: être-présent | de: bereitliegen Rom 7:18; Rom 7:21

παρά-κλησις G3874 N-AFS (29×)

Comfort, encouragement, exhortation, appeal — speech that strengthens, consoles, or urges

The noun παράκλησις is built from the same root as παράκλητος ('advocate, comforter') and carries a rich triad of meanings in the New Testament. Simeon awaited the 'consolation of Israel' (Luke 2:25), Paul overflows with παράκλησις amid affliction (2 Cor 1:3-7), and Barnabas earned the nickname 'son of encouragement' (Acts 4:36). Whether it means comfort for the grieving, exhortation for the wavering, or an earnest appeal to act, the word always involves one person drawing alongside another with strengthening speech.

1. comfort, consolation (15×) Comfort or consolation given to those who grieve, suffer, or face distress — the pastoral, therapeutic dimension of the word. God is the 'God of all comfort' who comforts us so that we may comfort others (2 Cor 1:3-7). Simeon awaits the παράκλησιν of Israel (Luke 2:25), and the rich already have theirs (Luke 6:24). Spanish consolación and German Trost consistently mark this emotional-supportive sense, distinguishing it from the more activating 'exhortation.' COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT

en: comfort, consolation, encouragement | es: consolación, consuelo, exhortación | fr: consolation | de: Trost, παράκλησιν Luke 2:25; Luke 6:24; 2Cor 1:3; 2Cor 1:4; 2Cor 1:5

2. encouragement, exhortation (12×) Encouragement or exhortation that spurs believers toward faithfulness, right conduct, or spiritual growth. Barnabas is υἱὸς παρακλήσεως, 'son of encouragement' (Acts 4:36), and the church grows in the παράκλησις of the Holy Spirit (Acts 9:31). Paul places it alongside teaching and reading of Scripture (1 Tim 4:13) and lists it as a spiritual gift (Rom 12:8). The word here carries hortatory force — not merely soothing but motivating. Spanish exhortación and the synagogue's 'word of exhortation' (Acts 13:15) anchor this sense. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT

en: encouragement, exhortation, of-encouragement | es: consolación, de-consolación, de-exhortación | fr: consolation | de: Trost, παρακλήσει, παρακλήσεως Acts 4:36; Acts 9:31; Acts 13:15; Acts 15:31; Rom 12:8

3. appeal, entreaty (2×) An earnest appeal, entreaty, or urgent request directed at others. In 2 Cor 8:4 the Macedonians beg with much παράκλησις for the privilege of giving, and Titus himself is eager, needing no παράκλησις (2 Cor 8:17). Spanish súplica and English 'appeal/urging' distinguish this from general encouragement — the emphasis falls on the petitioner's earnestness rather than the recipient's edification. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT en: appeal, urging | es: exhortación, súplica | fr: consolation | de: Trost 2Cor 8:4; 2Cor 8:17

παρά-κλητος G3875 N-AMS (5×)

Advocate, Helper, Comforter; one called alongside to aid, used of the Holy Spirit and of Christ.

A richly layered title meaning one called alongside to help — an advocate, counselor, or comforter. In the Upper Room Discourse (John 14–16), Jesus promises 'another Paraclete' (John 14:16), identifying the Holy Spirit as the one who will teach, remind, testify, convict, and guide into all truth. The word implies Jesus himself was the first Paraclete, and 1 John 2:1 confirms this explicitly: 'we have an advocate with the Father — Jesus Christ the righteous.' The Spanish split between 'Abogado' (advocate, legal) and 'Consolador' (comforter, emotional) reveals the term's dual legal and pastoral dimensions, while the German 'Troester' and French 'Consolateur' emphasize the comforting aspect.

(5×) An advocate, helper, or comforter — one summoned to stand alongside another in support, whether as a legal defender or a strengthening companion. The term carries forensic origins (a legal assistant in court proceedings), which surfaces in 1 John 2:1 where the risen Christ serves as our παράκλητος before the Father. In John's Farewell Discourse, Jesus calls the Holy Spirit 'another Paraclete' (ἄλλον παράκλητον, John 14:16), implying he himself was the first. The Spirit-Paraclete will teach (14:26), testify (15:26), convict the world (16:7–11), and guide into all truth (16:13). The multilingual translations beautifully reveal the semantic breadth: Spanish 'Abogado' preserves the legal-advocacy sense, while 'Consolador,' French 'Consolateur,' and German 'Troester' emphasize the comforting, strengthening dimension. HELPER ALLY

en: Helper, Parakletos, an-Advocate | es: Abogado, Consolador | fr: Consolateur | de: Troester John 14:16; John 14:26; John 15:26; John 16:7; 1John 2:1

παρᾰκοή G3876 N-NFS (3×)

disobedience, unwillingness to hear, defiance of authority; the act or attitude of refusing to heed commands

Originally denoting imperfect hearing or misunderstanding, this word came to mean deliberate disobedience or refusal to heed. Paul contrasts Adam's 'disobedience' with Christ's obedience, showing how humanity was made sinners through one man's disobedience (Rom 5:19). He warns the Corinthians that he is ready to punish all disobedience once their obedience is complete (2 Cor 10:6). Hebrews warns that the word spoken through angels brought just punishment for every 'disobedience' (Heb 2:2). The term emphasizes not just failing to hear but willful refusal to comply.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly indicates disobedience: English 'disobedience', Spanish 'desobediencia', French 'désobéissance', German 'Ungehorsam'. The lexicon traces semantic development from 'hearing imperfectly' to 'misunderstanding' to 'unwillingness to hear, disobedience, contumacy'. All three NT uses refer to deliberate disobedience: Adam's disobedience contrasted with Christ's obedience (Rom 5:19), readiness to punish disobedience (2 Cor 10:6), and punishment for every transgression under the old covenant (Heb 2:2). Willful defiance, not mere hearing loss, is in view. DISOBEDIENCE REBELLION

en: disobedience | es: desobediencia | fr: désobéissance | de: Ungehorsam Rom 5:19; 2Cor 10:6; Heb 2:2

παρᾰκολουθ-έω G3877 V-RIA-2S (3×)

to follow closely, to attend carefully, to trace accurately; to accompany as a companion or investigator

This verb means to follow alongside closely, whether physically accompanying someone or intellectually tracing a matter carefully. Luke claims to have 'followed all things closely' from the beginning before writing his Gospel (Luke 1:3). Timothy is reminded that he has 'closely followed' Paul's teaching and manner of life (2 Tim 3:10). Paul commends Timothy for being 'nourished in the words of faith' which he has 'followed closely' (1 Tim 4:6). The word suggests more than casual observation—it's attentive tracking, thorough investigation, or devoted discipleship.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize careful following: English 'have-followed-closely/having-followed/you-have-followed', Spanish 'habiendo-seguido/has-seguido/seguiste', French 'suivre', German 'nachfolgen/παρηκολουθηκότι'. The lexicon notes meanings from 'follow or attend closely' to 'trace accurately' to audience attentiveness. Luke 1:3 uses it for his careful investigation 'from the beginning', 1 Tim 4:6 for Timothy following sound teaching, 2 Tim 3:10 for closely observing Paul's life and doctrine. The word implies thorough, attentive accompanying or investigation. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP en: have-followed-closely, having-followed, you-have-followed | es: habiendo-seguido, has-seguido, seguiste | fr: suivre | de: nachfolgen, παρηκολουθηκότι Luke 1:3; 1Tim 4:6; 2Tim 3:10

παρᾰκούω G3878 V-ASA-3S (3×)

to overhear, to hear carelessly, to disregard, to disobey; to refuse to listen or take heed

Beginning with the sense of hearing accidentally or overhearing, this verb developed meanings ranging from mishearing to deliberately ignoring. When Jairus is told his daughter has died, Jesus 'overhears' (or perhaps 'ignores') the message and tells him not to fear (Mark 5:36). Jesus warns that if someone refuses to hear the church's correction, they should be treated as an outsider (Matt 18:17, twice). The word encompasses both accidental and willful failure to heed, though context usually clarifies which sense is active.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows both overhearing and refusing to hear: English 'he-refuses-to-hear/overhearing', Spanish 'ignorando/rehusare-oír', French 'négliger', German 'nicht-hoeren/παρακούση'. The lexicon lists multiple senses: 'hear beside/accidentally', 'eavesdrop', 'hear imperfectly', 'take no heed', 'disobey', 'pretend not to hear'. Mark 5:36 has Jesus 'overhearing' (or 'ignoring') news of the girl's death. Matt 18:17 (twice) speaks of refusing to hear church discipline. Context determines whether accidental or willful inattention is meant. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10168 WITH 3 SENSES en: he-refuses-to-hear, overhearing | es: ignorando, rehusare-oír, rehusare-oírlos | fr: négliger | de: nicht-hoeren, παρακούση Matt 18:17; Mark 5:36

παρα-κύπτω G3879 V-APA-NMS (5×)

To stoop down and look, peer in, bend over to examine closely; to gaze intently into something.

A verb meaning to stoop down in order to look closely — to bend over and peer into something with careful attention. It appears most memorably in the resurrection narratives: Peter stoops to look into the empty tomb (Luke 24:12), the beloved disciple bends to peer in and sees the linen cloths (John 20:5), and Mary stoops into the tomb weeping (John 20:11). James 1:25 extends the image metaphorically: one who 'looks intently' into the perfect law of liberty and perseveres will be blessed. First Peter 1:12 uses it strikingly of angels who 'long to look into' the mysteries of salvation. The Spanish 'inclinarse' (to lean) and German 'hinabblicken' (to look downward) both capture the physical posture of stooping to see.

(5×) To stoop down and look intently, to bend over and peer into something with focused attention. The verb combines a physical posture (bending, leaning) with purposeful looking. In the tomb narratives, Peter (Luke 24:12), the beloved disciple (John 20:5), and Mary Magdalene (John 20:11) each παρακύπτω into the empty tomb, the physical bending mirroring their searching hearts. James 1:25 transposes this vivid image into the spiritual realm: the person who 'stoops to gaze into' the perfect law of freedom — not merely glancing but examining closely — that person acts and is blessed. Most strikingly, 1 Pet 1:12 says even angels desire to 'stoop and peer into' the gospel realities. The Spanish 'asomándose' (peering) and French 'se-pencher' (to lean over) nicely preserve the dual physicality of bending and looking. GAZING AND LOOKING en: having-looked-intently, having-stooped, she-stooped | es: asomándose, habiéndose-inclinado, inclinarse | fr: se-pencher | de: hinabblicken, παρακύψας Luke 24:12; John 20:5; John 20:11; Jas 1:25; 1Pet 1:12

παραλαμβάνω G3880 V-APA-NMP (50×)

To take along or bring with oneself; to receive or accept what is handed down (tradition, teaching, authority).

A compound verb (para + lambano) meaning fundamentally 'to receive from beside' or 'to take alongside.' In the Gospels it predominantly describes physically taking someone along — Joseph taking Mary and the child to Egypt (Matt 2:13-14), Jesus taking disciples up a mountain (Matt 17:1), or the devil taking Jesus to the temple pinnacle (Matt 4:5). Spanish tomar aparte and German nimmt zu sich capture this escort sense. In the Epistles, the meaning shifts to receiving transmitted tradition: Paul says he 'received' the gospel and the Lord's Supper tradition (1 Cor 11:23; 15:3), where Spanish recibir and German empfangen signal the transfer of authoritative teaching.

1. take along, bring with (36×) To take along, bring with, or escort. Physical accompaniment — taking a person or thing from one place to another. Spanish habiendo tomado and French prendre avec emphasize the 'alongside' element. Prominent in the infancy narratives (Matt 1:20, 24; 2:13-14, 20-21 where Joseph takes his family), in Jesus taking disciples aside (Matt 17:1; 20:17), and in eschatological sayings about one being 'taken' and another left (Matt 24:40-41). RECEIVING AND TAKING en: having-taken, he-takes-along, takes-along | es: habiendo-tomado-aparte, habiéndolo-tomado, recibió | fr: prendre-avec, recevoir | de: empfangen, nimmt-zu-sich Matt 1:20; Matt 1:24; Matt 2:13; Matt 2:14; Matt 2:20

2. receive, accept what is transmitted (14×) To receive or accept what is transmitted — a tradition, teaching, message, or authority passed from one party to another. The para- prefix highlights the 'from another' dimension of reception. Spanish recibir and German empfangen consistently mark this as reception rather than physical escort. Paul's technical usage is especially important: 'what I received I passed on to you' (1 Cor 11:23; 15:1-3), establishing a chain of authorized tradition. John 1:11 uses it poignantly: 'his own did not receive him.' RECEIVING AND TAKING en: I-received, having-received, received | es: habiendo-recibido, lo-recibí, recibiendo | fr: prendre-avec, recevoir | de: empfangen Mark 7:4; John 1:11; 1Cor 11:23; 1Cor 15:1; 1Cor 15:3

παραλέγω G3881 V-PPM/P-NMP (2×)

to sail along the coast, coast along; to navigate parallel to shore

In the middle voice, this verb means to sail along a coast or coastline —to navigate while keeping land in view. Classical usage describes coastal navigation as opposed to open-sea sailing. Both New Testament occurrences appear in the Acts 27 shipwreck narrative. In verse 8, Paul's ship is 'coasting along' Crete with difficulty. In verse 13, they are 'sailing along' the coast of Crete more closely. The verb belongs to nautical vocabulary and evokes ancient Mediterranean sailing practices of hugging coastlines for safety and navigation.

(2×) Acts 27:8 uses a middle participle ('coasting along') and 27:13 uses an imperfect middle ('they were sailing along'), both describing coastal navigation near Crete. The multilingual glosses preserve the nautical sense: English 'coasting-along, they-were-sailing-along,' Spanish 'costeaban, costeando,' French 'longer' (to skirt along). The context involves navigating close to shore rather than striking out across open water—a common ancient practice for safety and orientation. The verb captures the specific technique of coastal sailing. DEPARTING AND PASSING en: coasting-along, they-were-sailing-along | es: costeaban, costeando | fr: longer | de: παραλεγόμενοι, παρελέγοντο Acts 27:8; Acts 27:13

παράλιος G3882 Adj-GFS (1×)

coastal, maritime, located by the sea

A geographical adjective describing regions, cities, or features located along the seacoast. Classical Greek used it extensively for maritime districts and coastal settlements. In Luke 6:17, it describes the coastal plain of Tyre and Sidon from which crowds came to hear Jesus. The word evokes the liminal space where land meets sea—regions defined by their proximity to maritime trade routes and fishing communities that shaped ancient Mediterranean life.

(1×) Luke 6:17 uses this adjective to describe the 'coastal region' (παραλίου) of Tyre and Sidon. The translation evidence across languages (English 'coastal', Spanish 'costa', French 'côte') uniformly renders the maritime geography. People from these Phoenician coastal cities traveled inland to Galilee to encounter Jesus, highlighting the drawing power of his ministry across regional boundaries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: coastal | es: costa | fr: côte | de: παραλίου Luke 6:17

παραλλ-ᾰγή G3883 N-NFS (1×)

variation, change, shifting, alteration

Originally describing the passing of something from hand to hand or changes in position, this noun came to denote any kind of variation or alteration. In classical astronomy it could refer to apparent celestial movements. James 1:17 uses it theologically to assert that God, unlike the changing heavenly bodies, exhibits no variation or shadow of turning. The word captures the concept of mutability—the capacity for change that marks creation but not the Creator.

(1×) James 1:17 declares there is no 'variation' (παραλλαγὴ) with the Father of lights, contrasting divine immutability with the observable changes in sun, moon, and stars. The translations preserve this sense of change or alteration (English 'variation', Spanish 'variación', French retains the Greek form). The rhetorical force depends on the astronomical backdrop—while celestial bodies shift and cast moving shadows, God remains constant. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: variation | es: variación | fr: παραλλαγὴ | de: Wechsel Jas 1:17

παραλογ-ίζομαι G3884 V-PSM/P-3S (2×)

to deceive by false reasoning, defraud, mislead; to cheat through fallacious argument

This verb means to deceive, cheat, or mislead—especially through false reasoning or fallacious arguments. Classical usage includes both financial fraud (cheating in accounts) and intellectual deception (misleading through sophistry). The middle voice emphasizes the deceptive effect on oneself or others. Both New Testament uses warn against self-deception or being deceived. Colossians 2:4 warns against being deceived by persuasive arguments. James 1:22 warns against deceiving oneself by hearing without doing. The word captures both intellectual fraud and the resulting delusion.

(2×) Colossians 2:4 uses a present middle subjunctive ('may deceive'), warning against persuasive false teaching. James 1:22 uses a middle participle ('deceiving'), warning against self-deception. The multilingual glosses emphasize the deceptive action: English 'deceiving, may-deceive,' Spanish 'engañe, engañándoos,' German 'betruegen.' Both uses involve reasoning that leads astray—whether external sophistry or internal rationalization. The verb identifies the process of being led into error through plausible but false argument, resulting in dangerous delusion about one's true condition. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: deceiving, may-deceive | es: engañe, engañándoos | fr: παραλογίζηται, παραλογιζόμενοι | de: betruegen Col 2:4; Jas 1:22

παρα-λῡτικός G3885 Adj-NMS (10×)

Paralytic, paralyzed person — one afflicted with paralysis, unable to move; a substantivized adjective in healing narratives

The adjective paralytikos (παραλυτικός), used substantively, designates a person suffering from paralysis. All ten NT occurrences belong to Synoptic healing narratives. Matthew lists paralytics among those brought to Jesus in Galilee (4:24) and narrates the healing of the centurion's paralytic servant (8:6). The most vivid scene is the paralytic lowered through the roof at Capernaum (Matt 9:2,6; Mark 2:3-10), where Jesus first forgives sins and then commands, 'Rise, take up your bed and walk.' The term is purely medical-descriptive, with no metaphorical extension in the NT. Translations uniformly employ a clinical or descriptive term: Spanish 'paralitico,' Hindi 'lakva rogi,' Arabic 'mafluj,' Korean 'jungpung byeongja,' Swahili 'aliyepooza.'

paralytic, paralyzed person (10×) A person afflicted with paralysis, unable to move one or more limbs; used as a substantivized adjective in the Synoptic healing accounts. Appears in the Capernaum roof-lowering miracle (Matt 9:2,6; Mark 2:3-5,9-10), the Galilean summary of those brought to Jesus (Matt 4:24), and the centurion's servant (Matt 8:6). The singular and plural forms represent number inflection of one lexical meaning — a person paralyzed and presented for healing. Spanish 'paralitico,' Arabic 'mafluj,' Hindi 'lakva rogi,' Korean 'jungpung byeongja,' and Swahili 'aliyepooza' all denote the same medical condition. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: a-paralytic, paralytic, paralytics | es: paralítico, paralíticos | fr: paralytique | de: Gelaehmter, Gelähmter Matt 4:24; Matt 8:6; Matt 9:2; Matt 9:6

παραλύω G3886 V-RPM/P-NMS (5×)

To paralyze, weaken, disable; in the NT passive, to be paralyzed or enfeebled in body or limbs.

A verb meaning to loosen, slacken, or disable — in classical Greek it could mean to unstring a ship's rudders or hamstring horses, but in the NT it appears exclusively in the passive to describe paralysis or physical disabling. Luke uses it for the paralyzed man lowered through the roof (Luke 5:18, 24) and for those healed in Philip's Samaritan ministry (Acts 8:7) and the bedridden Aeneas at Lydda (Acts 9:33). Hebrews 12:12 applies it metaphorically, urging believers to strengthen their 'paralyzed knees' — drooping limbs weakened by spiritual fatigue. The multilingual convergence on 'paralyzed' (Spanish 'paralizado,' French 'paralysé,' German 'gelaehmt') reflects how the medical meaning dominated NT usage.

(5×) To be paralyzed, weakened, or disabled — used in the NT passive to describe bodies or limbs that have lost function. The root sense is 'to loosen' (from λύω), with παρα- suggesting a loosening to the side, i.e., going slack. In Luke 5:18, 24, a man παραλελυμένος is carried on a stretcher and healed by Jesus. Acts 8:7 and 9:33 extend this to Philip's and Peter's healing ministries. Hebrews 12:12 draws on the same image metaphorically: 'the paralyzed knees — strengthen them!' echoing Isaiah 35:3 and calling weary believers to renewed vigor. The Spanish 'paralizado,' French 'paralysé,' and German 'gelähmt' all derive from or translate the same Greek medical concept, showing how this word's meaning narrowed to physical disability in Hellenistic usage. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: having-been-paralyzed, paralyzed, weakened | es: paralizadas, paralizado, paralítico | fr: paralyser, paralysé | de: gelaehmt, παραλελυμένοι, παραλελυμένος Luke 5:18; Luke 5:24; Acts 8:7; Acts 9:33; Heb 12:12

παραμένω G3887 V-PNA (4×)

To remain beside, continue with, abide; to stay on in a place or role, persevere steadfastly.

Derived from para (beside) and meno (remain), this verb carries the sense of staying alongside someone or something with loyal persistence. In Philippians 1:25, Paul uses it for his confident expectation of continuing with the believers for their progress in the faith. James 1:25 applies it to the one who 'continues' gazing into the perfect law — not a passing glance but a settled, abiding attentiveness. The multilingual evidence consistently renders it with words for 'remain' (Spanish permanecer, German bleiben, French demeurer), underscoring the theme of faithful, enduring presence.

(4×) To remain with, continue alongside, persevere in a relationship, place, or commitment. The translations across languages — Spanish continuaré/permanecer, German bleiben, French demeurer — all converge on loyal, ongoing presence. Paul uses it of staying alive for the churches' benefit (Phil 1:25), while Hebrews 7:23 contrasts mortal priests who cannot 'continue' with Christ's permanent priesthood. James 1:25 extends the image to abiding engagement with God's word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-will-continue-with, I-will-remain, having-continued | es: continuaré, permanecer, permaneceré | fr: demeurer, tromper | de: bleiben 1Cor 16:6; Phil 1:25; Heb 7:23; Jas 1:25

παραμῡθ-έομαι G3888 V-PPM/P-NMP (4×)

To encourage, console, comfort; to speak words of reassurance or exhortation to those in distress.

This verb blends encouragement with tender consolation. At the tomb of Lazarus (John 11:19, 31), Jewish mourners come to 'comfort' Martha and Mary — the Greek captures the warmth of personal presence in grief. Paul employs it in 1 Thessalonians 2:12 for the way a father encourages his children, and in 5:14 for comforting the fainthearted. Spanish consolad/consolando and German troesten highlight the consolation axis, while English 'encourage' captures the forward-looking, hope-giving dimension.

(4×) To comfort, console, and encourage — especially by coming alongside someone in grief or discouragement and offering reassuring, strengthening words. The multilingual evidence (Spanish consolad, German troesten, French consoler) clusters around deep emotional comfort. John 11:19 and 11:31 show this in the context of mourning Lazarus, while 1 Thessalonians 2:12 and 5:14 reveal the pastoral side: exhorting believers toward faithfulness and heartening the discouraged. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT

en: consoling, encourage, encouraging | es: consolad, consolando, consolaran | fr: consoler | de: troesten John 11:19; John 11:31; 1Thess 2:12; 1Thess 5:14

παραμῡθ-ία G3889 N-AFS (1×)

consolation, comfort, encouragement given to those in distress

Denoting words or actions that bring comfort and encouragement to the distressed, this term emphasizes the supportive dimension of Christian speech. In classical usage it could mean gentle persuasion, reassurance, or even diversion from troubles. Paul in 1 Corinthians 14:3 lists it as one of the benefits of prophetic utterance: building up, encouragement, and consolation. The word suggests not just verbal sympathy but active ministry that lifts spirits and strengthens resolve.

(1×) In 1 Corinthians 14:3, prophecy provides 'consolation' (παραμυθίαν) alongside edification and exhortation. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'consolación', French 'consolation', German 'Trost') consistently emphasize comforting those who grieve or struggle. Paul's triad shows that Spirit-inspired speech doesn't just instruct—it also soothes and encourages, meeting emotional and spiritual needs in the gathered community. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT

en: consolation | es: consolación | fr: consolation | de: Trost 1Cor 14:3

παραμῡθ-ιον G3890 N-NNS (1×)

comfort, consolation, encouragement

A near-synonym to G3889, this neuter noun emphasizes the concrete act or source of comfort. Classical Greek used it for stimulants that revive appetite or abatements that reduce suffering. Philippians 2:1 uses it in Paul's rhetorical series: if there is any comfort in Christ, any consolation of love. The term points to tangible expressions of encouragement that flow from union with Christ and community bonds, providing emotional sustenance for persevering believers.

(1×) Philippians 2:1 asks rhetorically if there is any 'comfort' (παραμύθιον) in Christ. The translations (English 'comfort', Spanish 'consuelo', German 'Ermutigung') emphasize the consoling dimension. Paul stacks four conditional clauses to ground his appeal for unity: encouragement in Christ, comfort from love, fellowship of the Spirit, and affection and sympathy. The comfort is not abstract but relational, rooted in shared life in Christ. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT

en: comfort | es: consuelo | fr: παραμύθιον | de: Ermutigung Phil 2:1

παρανομ-έω G3891 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to act unlawfully, transgress the law, violate legal or moral norms

From the root meaning 'beside the law', this verb denotes acting contrary to established legal or moral order. Classical usage included illegal political acts, crimes, and public outrages. In Acts 23:3, Paul accuses the high priest Ananias of acting contrary to the law by ordering him struck while under examination. The participial form captures someone engaged in lawless behavior—a charge with sharp irony when directed at the guardian of Torah who commands an illegal assault.

(1×) Acts 23:3 has Paul calling out the high priest as 'acting contrary to law' (παρανομῶν) for ordering Paul struck. The translations (English 'acting-contrary-to-law', Spanish 'transgrediendo-la-ley', French 'agir-illégalement') capture the legal transgression. The irony is devastating: the one who should uphold Torah violates it, ordering violence against an uncondemned man. Paul's sharp rebuke exposes hypocrisy at the heart of religious authority. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: acting-contrary-to-law | es: transgrediendo-la-ley | fr: agir-illégalement | de: παρανομῶν Acts 23:3

παρανομ-ία G3892 N-GFS (1×)

lawlessness, transgression of law, illegal conduct

The abstract noun form denoting violation of law, decency, or proper order. Classical authors used it for acts that transgressed civic norms or legal boundaries, sometimes personifying it as a force opposed to justice. In 2 Peter 2:16, Balaam's donkey rebukes the prophet's lawlessness—his greedy pursuit of divination fees contrary to God's command. The term marks conduct that defies established moral and legal boundaries, whether divine or human.

(1×) Second Peter 2:16 describes the donkey's rebuke of the prophet's 'lawlessness' (παρανομίας)—Balaam's transgression in seeking reward for cursing Israel. The translations (English 'lawlessness', Spanish 'transgresión', German 'Gesetzlosigkeit') emphasize violation of divine command. The absurdity underscores moral inversion: a speechless animal becomes the vehicle of rational rebuke, restraining a supposedly wise prophet from illegal and immoral action. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: lawlessness | es: transgresión | fr: παρανομίας | de: Gesetzlosigkeit 2Pet 2:16

παραπικρ-αίνω G3893 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to embitter, provoke, rebel against authority

Combining 'beside' and 'make bitter', this verb denotes provoking to anger or rebelling against authority. The Septuagint uses it for Israel's wilderness rebellions against God. Hebrews 3:16 asks rhetorically who rebelled after hearing God's voice—the answer being the exodus generation who provoked God through unbelief. The term captures the bitterness of spirit that hardens into active rebellion, turning hearing into disobedience and promise into judgment.

(1×) Hebrews 3:16 asks who 'rebelled' (παρεπίκραναν) after the exodus. The translation evidence (English 'rebelled', Spanish 'provocaron', German 'erbittert') points to provocation and rebellion. The rhetorical question's answer is devastating: not just some, but nearly the entire exodus generation who heard Moses died in the wilderness for unbelief. Their rebellion turned divine deliverance into a forty-year funeral procession. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: rebelled | es: provocaron | fr: erbittert | de: erbittert Heb 3:16

παραπικρ-ασμός G3894 N-DMS (2×)

provocation, embitterment, rebellion against authority

This noun denotes provocation, embitterment, or rebellion—specifically the act of provoking someone to anger. The Septuagint uses it for Israel's wilderness rebellion against God. Both New Testament occurrences appear in Hebrews 3, quoting Psalm 95 about Israel's hardness of heart in the wilderness. Hebrews 3:8 warns, 'do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion.' Hebrews 3:15 repeats the warning. The term has become almost a technical designation for Israel's paradigmatic act of rebellion at Meribah, where they tested God despite his faithfulness.

(2×) Both uses in Hebrews 3:8 and 3:15 are dative forms in the phrase 'as in the rebellion,' referring to Psalm 95's citation of the wilderness generation's hardness. The translations render it as 'rebellion' or 'provocation': Spanish 'provocación,' French 'irritation,' German 'Erbitterung.' The word captures both the act of provoking God to anger and the embitterment that hardens hearts against divine authority. It functions as a historical-theological shorthand for paradigmatic unfaithfulness—when Israel provoked the Lord despite manifest grace. REBELLION REVOLT

en: rebellion | es: provocación | fr: irritation | de: Erbitterung Heb 3:8; Heb 3:15

παραπίπτω G3895 V-APA-AMP (1×)

to fall away, apostatize, commit apostasy

Originally meaning to fall beside or nearby, this verb developed the metaphorical sense of falling away from truth or commitment. In classical usage it could mean falling by chance or opportunity arising. Hebrews 6:6 uses it in the stark warning about those who, having experienced divine realities, then fall away—making renewed repentance impossible because they crucify Christ afresh. The perfect participle suggests a completed, decisive turning that severs the apostate from restoration.

(1×) Hebrews 6:6 describes those 'having fallen away' (παραπεσόντας) who cannot be renewed to repentance. The translations (English 'having-fallen-away', Spanish 'habiendo-caído', French 'tomber', German 'abfallen') emphasize the decisive apostasy. The passage's severity has troubled interpreters for centuries, but the linguistic evidence is clear: this falling is complete and catastrophic, a repudiation so thorough it places renewal beyond reach. FALLING AND FAILING

en: having-fallen-away | es: habiendo-caído | fr: tomber | de: abfallen Heb 6:6

παραπλέω G3896 V-ANA (1×)

to sail past, coast along, bypass by sea

A nautical term describing sailing past a location without stopping or coasting along a shoreline. Classical authors used it for ships passing headlands or maritime cities. Acts 20:16 reports that Paul decided to sail past Ephesus to avoid spending time in Asia, hurrying to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost. The verb captures the strategic decision to bypass rather than visit—Paul's urgency driving him to skip even significant ministry locations when necessary.

(1×) Acts 20:16 records Paul's decision 'to sail past' (παραπλεῦσαι) Ephesus on his way to Jerusalem. The translations (English 'to-sail-past', Spanish 'pasar-de-largo', French 'naviguer-le-long-de') preserve the nautical bypassing. Paul's choice reflects mission prioritization: though Ephesus held deep ministry relationships, the urgency of reaching Jerusalem by Pentecost meant sailing on. Time constraints force even apostles to make hard choices about where to invest limited hours. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: to-sail-past | es: pasar-de-largo | fr: naviguer-le-long-de | de: παραπλεῦσαι Acts 20:16

παραπλήσιος G3897 Adv (1×)

close to, near, nearly, almost

An adverb denoting close proximity or near equivalence—almost equal, nearly resembling, or close in degree. Classical usage applied it to comparable numbers, sizes, or qualities. Philippians 2:27 uses it to describe how Epaphroditus was sick nearly to the point of death. The adverb emphasizes the peril's severity—not quite fatal, but close enough to death's threshold that recovery required divine mercy.

(1×) Philippians 2:27 describes Epaphroditus as sick 'close to' (παραπλήσιον) death. The translation evidence (English 'close-to', Spanish 'cercano', German 'fast') emphasizes proximity to the fatal boundary. Paul's account validates both Epaphroditus's sacrifice and God's mercy: the illness was no minor inconvenience but a brush with death in service to the gospel. The nearness language honors genuine suffering while celebrating deliverance. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: close-to | es: cercano | fr: παραπλήσιον | de: fast Phil 2:27

παραπλήσιος G3898 Adv (1×)

likewise, similarly, in the same manner

An adverb of comparison meaning 'in like manner' or 'similarly'. Though sharing the same root as G3897, this form emphasizes comparable action or experience rather than spatial proximity. Hebrews 2:14 uses it to describe how Jesus likewise partook of flesh and blood just as the children do. The adverb stresses the solidarity of incarnation—Christ didn't enter humanity differently but shared the same mode of embodiment that defines human existence.

(1×) Hebrews 2:14 states that Jesus 'likewise' (παραπλησίως) shared in flesh and blood. The translations (English 'likewise', Spanish 'de-modo-similar', German 'ebenso') emphasize the comparable manner. The theological weight is immense: the Son of God entered human existence not in some protected or modified way, but fully, genuinely, in the same mode as those he came to save. True incarnation requires true solidarity. LIKEWISE SIMILARLY en: likewise | es: de-modo-similar | fr: ebenso | de: ebenso Heb 2:14

παραπορεύομαι G3899 V-PPM/P-NMP (5×)

To pass by, go alongside, travel past; to walk along beside a place or through a region.

A compound verb (παρα- + πορεύομαι) meaning to go alongside or pass by a place. In the NT it appears exclusively in the Synoptic Gospels, most often in Mark. Two of its uses describe hostile passersby mocking Jesus on the cross (Matt 27:39; Mark 15:29), while Mark 2:23 describes the disciples walking alongside grain fields on the Sabbath. Mark 9:30 uses it for Jesus and his disciples passing through Galilee secretly, and Mark 11:20 for passing by the withered fig tree the next morning. The Spanish 'pasando/pasar' and French 'passer-à-côté' both preserve the alongside-motion sense inherent in the παρα- prefix.

(5×) To pass by or walk alongside — to go past a place or travel through an area without stopping as the primary purpose. The παρα- prefix gives it a 'beside' nuance: one moves along a road that runs past something. The two crucifixion scenes (Matt 27:39; Mark 15:29) depict people 'passing by' who pause to hurl insults, capturing the cruel casualness of passersby mocking the crucified. Mark 2:23 portrays the disciples passing alongside grain fields, plucking heads of grain — a Sabbath controversy scene. Mark 9:30 describes secretive travel through Galilee, and Mark 11:20 uses it for the discovery of the withered fig tree as they passed by in the morning. The Spanish 'pasaban' (they were passing) and German 'vorbeigehen' (to go by in front) both convey this sense of movement past a fixed point. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: passing-by, they-were-passing-through, to-pass-through | es: pasaban, pasando, pasar | fr: passer-à-côté | de: vorbeigehen, παραπορευόμενοι Matt 27:39; Mark 2:23; Mark 9:30; Mark 11:20; Mark 15:29

παρά-πτωμα G3900 N-DNS (21×)

Trespass, transgression; a moral lapse or offense against God's standard, literally a 'falling beside' the path.

Derived from para ('beside') and ptoma ('a fall'), this noun pictures someone stumbling off the right path rather than charging away in open rebellion. Yet Paul gives it serious weight, using it for Adam's primal transgression in Romans 5:15-20 and for the offenses that demanded Christ's atoning death in Ephesians 2:1. Jesus himself employs the word in the Lord's Prayer context (Matt 6:14-15), linking divine forgiveness to our willingness to forgive others' trespasses. The multilingual evidence is remarkably unified: Spanish 'transgresion', French 'faute/transgression', and German 'Uebertretung' all converge on the idea of crossing a boundary one should not have crossed.

trespass, transgression, false step (21×) A moral trespass or transgression — literally a 'falling beside' the right way. While the etymology suggests an inadvertent slip, NT usage ranges from everyday offenses that fellow believers must forgive (Matt 6:14-15; Mark 11:25) to Adam's catastrophic fall that brought death to all humanity (Rom 5:15-18). Every major translation tradition renders it with a boundary-violation image: English 'trespass/transgression', Spanish 'transgresion', French 'faute', German 'Uebertretung'. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: transgression, trespass, trespasses | es: transgresiones, transgresión | fr: faute, transgression | de: Uebertretung, παραπτώματα Matt 6:14; Matt 6:15; Mark 11:25; Mark 11:26

παραρρέω G3901 V-ASA-1P (1×)

to drift away, slip away, lose grip on truth

Originally describing water flowing past or objects slipping off, this verb developed the metaphorical sense of drifting from teaching or neglecting warnings. The nautical imagery of a ship carried past its mooring by currents fits the metaphor. Hebrews 2:1 warns believers not to drift away from what they have heard. The passive construction suggests gradual, perhaps unconscious movement away from truth—not dramatic apostasy but slow slippage that ends in catastrophic distance.

(1×) Hebrews 2:1 warns lest 'we drift away' (παραρρυῶμεν) from the message. The translation evidence (English 'we-drift-away', Spanish 'nos-deslicemos', German 'abtreiben') captures the passive floating away from moorings. The danger isn't active rebellion but passive inattention—the subtle current that carries the unwatchful believer away from truth. The call to pay closer attention recognizes that vigilance fights drift. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: we-drift-away | es: nos-deslicemos | fr: abtreiben | de: abtreiben Heb 2:1

παράσημ-ος G3902 Adj-DNS (1×)

marked, distinguished by a sign, bearing an emblem or figurehead

An adjective describing something marked by a distinguishing sign, badge, or emblem. Classical usage included false coins (marked wrongly) and notable persons (marked for distinction). Acts 28:11 uses it to describe a ship bearing the figurehead of the twin gods Castor and Pollux. Ancient vessels commonly displayed divine emblems on prow or stern for protection and identification. The word captures how visible markers identify allegiance, origin, or claimed patronage.

(1×) Acts 28:11 mentions an Alexandrian ship 'with the figurehead' (παρασήμῳ) of the Dioscuri (Castor and Pollux). The translations (English 'with-figurehead', Spanish 'con-insignia', French 'marque') point to the ship's emblem. Ancient mariners trusted these divine twins to protect voyages. Luke's detail reveals Paul sailing on a vessel bearing pagan insignia—a narrative touch that shows the gospel advancing through the ordinary commercial infrastructure of the Roman world. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: with-figurehead | es: con-insignia | fr: marque | de: παρασήμῳ Acts 28:11

παρασκευάζω G3903 V-FIM-3S (4×)

To prepare, make ready, equip; to arrange in advance for an anticipated event or need.

Built from para (alongside, in advance) and skeuazo (equip), this verb emphasizes deliberate, purposeful readiness. In Acts 10:10, a meal is 'being prepared' when Peter receives his vision on the rooftop — mundane preparation becomes the stage for divine revelation. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 9:2-3 for the Corinthians' financial readiness, and in 1 Corinthians 14:8 for a trumpet giving a clear sound so soldiers can 'prepare' for battle. Every major translation language echoes the same core: Spanish preparar, German vorbereiten, French préparer.

(4×) To prepare, make ready, or equip in advance for a coming event, action, or need. All translation traditions converge — Spanish preparar, German vorbereiten, French préparer — on the sense of purposeful, advance arrangement. Acts 10:10 uses it of a meal being prepared, 1 Corinthians 14:8 of battle readiness signaled by a trumpet, and 2 Corinthians 9:2-3 of the Corinthians' generous financial readiness that Paul boasts about to the Macedonians. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: has-been-prepared, having-been-prepared, preparing | es: ha-sido-preparada, preparados, preparando | fr: préparer | de: vorbereiten, παρασκευαζόντων Acts 10:10; 1Cor 14:8; 2Cor 9:2; 2Cor 9:3

παρασκευ-ή G3904 N-NFS (6×)

Preparation; in the NT exclusively the day before the Sabbath or a Jewish festival, i.e., Friday.

Paraskeue literally means 'preparation,' but every New Testament occurrence has crystallized into a technical calendar term: the day before the Sabbath or a major feast, when all cooking, burial arrangements, and other work had to be finished before sunset. All four Gospels use it in the Passion narrative — Matthew 27:62, Mark 15:42, Luke 23:54, John 19:14, 31 — anchoring the crucifixion chronology. The German 'Ruesttag' (literally 'equipping-day') captures this sense beautifully, as does the uniform Spanish 'Preparacion.'

Preparation (day before Sabbath/feast) (6×) The day of preparation before the Sabbath or a major Jewish festival, specifically Friday, when all necessary work and food preparation had to be completed before sunset. The multilingual glosses — English 'Preparation,' Spanish 'Preparacion,' French 'Preparation,' German 'Ruesttag' — all treat it as a proper technical term. Every NT occurrence (Matt 27:62; Mark 15:42; Luke 23:54; John 19:14, 31) falls within the Passion narrative, making this word a crucial chronological marker for the events of Jesus' death and burial. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: Preparation, of-Preparation, the-Preparation | es: Preparación, de-preparación | fr: Préparation | de: Ruesttag, Παρασκευήν, Παρασκευῆς Matt 27:62; Mark 15:42; Luke 23:54; John 19:14; John 19:31

παρατείνω G3905 V-IIA-3S (1×)

to extend, prolong, stretch out in time or space

A verb denoting stretching out, prolonging, or extending—whether spatially (deploying troops) or temporally (continuing an activity). Classical uses included extending battle lines and being stretched on the rack. Acts 20:7 reports that Paul extended his discourse until midnight, teaching the gathered believers at Troas. The verb captures the deliberate prolonging of activity beyond normal limits, whether from urgency, opportunity, or the richness of what is being shared.

(1×) Acts 20:7 has Paul 'extending' (παρέτεινέν) his message until midnight before his departure. The translation evidence (English 'extended', Spanish 'extendió', French 'étendre') emphasizes the temporal prolonging. Paul's lengthy discourse (continuing until Eutychus falls from the window at midnight) shows apostolic urgency —when time is limited and the teaching moment rich, even midnight doesn't end the session. Passion for truth makes clocks irrelevant. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: extended | es: extendió | fr: étendre | de: παρέτεινέν Acts 20:7

παρατηρ-έω G3906 V-PIM-2P (6×)

To watch closely, observe carefully, or keep under surveillance, often with suspicious or hostile intent.

Paratereo carries the intensity of focused, sustained watching — not casual observation but deliberate scrutiny. In the Gospels it frequently has a sinister edge: the Pharisees 'were watching' Jesus closely to find grounds for accusation (Mark 3:2; Luke 6:7; 14:1), and spies were sent to 'watch' him (Luke 20:20). In Acts 9:24, opponents 'watched' the city gates to trap Paul. The Spanish 'observar' and German 'beobachten' both preserve this careful, analytical quality that distinguishes paratereo from ordinary seeing.

watch closely, observe (6×) To watch closely, observe with sustained attention, or keep under surveillance — often with hostile or suspicious intent. The multilingual evidence is strikingly consistent: Spanish 'observar,' French 'observer,' German 'beobachten' all denote careful, methodical watching rather than casual glancing. In the Synoptic Gospels, the word appears in adversarial contexts: Pharisees scrutinizing Jesus on the Sabbath (Mark 3:2; Luke 6:7; 14:1), spies monitoring his speech (Luke 20:20). In Acts 9:24, enemies watch the gates of Damascus. The verb implies purposeful, evaluative attention directed at someone's actions. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: having-watched-closely, they-were-watching, watching | es: habiendo-observado, observaban, observáis | fr: observer | de: beobachten, beobachtet Mark 3:2; Luke 6:7; Luke 14:1; Luke 20:20; Acts 9:24 παρατήρ-ησις G3907 N-GFS (1×) observation, close watching, careful scrutiny

Denoting careful observation, surveillance, or watchfulness—either for scientific inquiry or for suspicious monitoring. Classical authors used it for empirical observation in medicine and astronomy, but also for watching to detect faults. Luke 17:20 uses it in Jesus' saying that God's kingdom doesn't come 'with observation'—not arriving as an observable spectacle that investigators can track and calculate. The term suggests close watching for visible signs.

(1×) Luke 17:20 states God's kingdom doesn't come 'with observation' (παρατηρήσεως)—not as a visible phenomenon Pharisees can watch for and measure. The translations (English 'observation', Spanish 'observación', French 'observation') preserve the watching theme. Jesus rejects the idea that the kingdom arrives as an empirically observable event with clear markers. It comes differently—among and within, not susceptible to the kind of surveillance the Pharisees expected. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: observation | es: observación | fr: observation | de: παρατηρήσεως Luke 17:20

παρατίθημι G3908 V-ANA (19×)

Set before, serve food at table; entrust or commit to someone's care; set forth, present or explain a teaching.

Paratithemi literally means 'to place alongside' — and from this simple spatial act three distinct functions emerge. Its most frequent New Testament use is setting food before people: Jesus breaks bread and gives it to the disciples to 'set before' the crowd (Mark 6:41; 8:6), and Paul instructs believers to eat whatever is 'set before' them (1 Cor 10:27). Spanish poner delante and German vorsetzen both preserve the spatial metaphor of placing something in front of a person. But the middle voice transforms the word into an act of entrusting: Jesus committing his spirit into the Father's hands (Luke 23:46), Paul commending elders to the word of God's grace (Acts 20:32). A third use appears in Acts 17:3, where Paul 'sets forth' evidence that the Christ had to suffer — presenting arguments as one presents a meal.

1. set before, serve food (11×) Setting food or provisions before someone, serving at table. This primary sense (11 occurrences) dominates the feeding narratives: Jesus breaks loaves and gives them to the disciples to set before the multitude (Mark 6:41; 8:6-7), Martha's household serves a meal (Luke 10:8), and Paul advises 'eat whatever is set before you' (1 Cor 10:27). Spanish poner delante, French présenter, and German vorsetzen all capture the hospitable act of placing food within someone's reach. The parables of Matt 13:24 and 13:31 extend this: Jesus 'sets before' the crowd a parable as one sets a dish on the table. BRINGING AND OFFERING en: I-will-set-before, being-set-before, he-set | es: para-poner, poneré-delante, puesto-delante | fr: offrir, présenter | de: setzt-vor, vorsetzen Matt 13:24; Matt 13:31; Mark 6:41; Mark 8:6

2. entrust, commit, commend (7×) Entrusting, committing, or commending someone or something to another's care and protection. With 7 occurrences, this middle-voice sense carries deep relational weight: Jesus cries 'Father, into your hands I commit my spirit' (Luke 23:46), Paul and Barnabas commit new believers to the Lord (Acts 14:23), Paul commends the Ephesian elders to God and the word of his grace (Acts 20:32), and the faithful steward is one to whom much has been entrusted (Luke 12:48). Spanish encomendar, French confier, and German anvertrauen all shift from table service to sacred trust. The progression from placing food to placing souls in God's hands is one of the New Testament's quiet semantic dramas. BRINGING AND OFFERING

en: I-commit, I-entrust, entrust | es: encomendaron, encomienda, encomienden | fr: offrir, présenter | de: setzt-vor, vorsetzen Luke 12:48; Luke 23:46; Acts 14:23; Acts 20:32; 1Tim 1:18

3. set forth, present, explain (1×) Setting forth, presenting, or expounding an argument or teaching before an audience — the intellectual counterpart of serving a meal. Only 1 clear occurrence: in Acts 17:3 Paul is in the synagogue at Thessalonica 'setting forth and proving that the Christ had to suffer and rise from the dead.' Spanish exponiendo and German darlegend capture the explanatory force. The metaphor is apt: just as a host arranges dishes for guests, a teacher arranges evidence and reasoning for hearers. BRINGING AND OFFERING en: setting-forth | es: exponiendo | fr: présenter | de: setzt-vor Acts 17:3

παρατυγχάνω G3909 V-PPA-AMP (1×)

to happen to be present, chance to be near, encounter

A verb describing being present by chance, happening upon a scene, or encountering someone unexpectedly. Classical usage emphasized the element of coincidence—the first person who happens by. Acts 17:17 uses the participle to describe those 'happening to be present' in the marketplace where Paul reasoned daily. The term captures the apparently casual encounters that become opportunities for gospel witness—divine sovereignty working through seemingly random human traffic.

(1×) Acts 17:17 mentions Paul reasoning with those 'happening to be present' (παρατυγχάνοντας) in the Athenian marketplace. The translations (English 'happening-to-be-present', Spanish 'que-encontraba', French 'rencontrer') emphasize the chance encounters. Paul didn't wait for formal audiences but engaged whoever providence brought across his path. The agora became a mission field where casual passersby met reasoned argument for the gospel—strategic opportunism in action. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: happening-to-be-present | es: que-encontraba | fr: rencontrer | de: παρατυγχάνοντας Acts 17:17

παραυτίκᾰ G3910 Adv (1×)

momentary, temporary, brief, lasting only for the present moment

An adverb or adjective describing something momentary, temporary, or belonging only to the immediate present. Classical usage emphasized the fleeting nature or immediate character of something. Second Corinthians 4:17 uses it to describe the 'momentary' nature of present affliction contrasted with eternal glory. The term captures radical temporal perspective—from eternity's viewpoint, even prolonged suffering is but a passing moment, a light affliction preparing infinite weight of glory.

(1×) Second Corinthians 4:17 calls present trouble 'momentary' (παραυτίκα) and light compared to eternal glory. The translations (English 'momentary', Spanish 'momentáneo', French 'immédiat', German 'augenblicklich') emphasize the brief duration. Paul's rhetorical strategy relativizes suffering by setting temporal against eternal scales. What feels crushing and endless becomes light and brief when measured against the coming glory—not minimizing pain but reframing it eschatologically. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: momentary | es: momentáneo | fr: immédiat | de: augenblicklich 2Cor 4:17

παραφέρω G3911 V-AMA-2S (4×)

To carry aside, remove; to be swept along or carried away by force, influence, or deception.

From para (aside, past) and phero (carry), this verb evokes powerful movement that sweeps something off course. In the Gethsemane prayers (Mark 14:36; Luke 22:42), Jesus asks the Father to 'remove' the cup of suffering — a deeply personal plea. Hebrews 13:9 warns against being 'carried away' by diverse and strange teachings, while Jude 12 paints false teachers as waterless clouds 'carried along' by winds. The Spanish translations split revealingly between quita/pasa (remove/pass) and llevadas (carried away), mirroring the verb's dual force: active removal and passive drift.

(4×) To carry aside, remove, or sweep away — either by deliberate action (removal of something unwanted) or by external force (being carried off course). Mark 14:36 and Luke 22:42 use it in Jesus' prayer to remove the cup, showing volitional removal. Hebrews 13:9 and Jude 1:12 shift to the passive: being carried away by false teachings or blown about like empty clouds. The multilingual evidence — German fortreissen (tear away), Spanish llevadas (carried), French emporter (carry off) — captures this dynamic force. LEADING AWAY

en: be-carried-away, carried-along, remove | es: llevadas, pasa, quita | fr: emporter, emportées, | de: fortreissen, vorbeigetriebene, παρένεγκε Mark 14:36; Luke 22:42; Heb 13:9; Jude 1:12

παραφρον-έω G3912 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to be beside oneself, act insanely, speak irrationally

A verb meaning to be out of one's mind, deranged, or acting irrationally. The root suggests being beside (para) one's normal mental state (phren). Paul in 2 Corinthians 11:23 uses it rhetorically: speaking as if beside himself, he catalogs his apostolic sufferings. The participle acknowledges the apparent madness of boasting about hardships—behavior that appears irrational by worldly standards but makes sense in the upside-down economy of the cross.

(1×) Second Corinthians 11:23 has Paul speaking 'as being beside myself' (παραφρονῶν) when boasting about his sufferings. The translations (English 'being-beside-myself', Spanish 'desvarando', French 'être-insensé', German 'von-Sinnen-sein') capture the seeming irrationality. Paul acknowledges how absurd his boasting sounds—who catalogs beatings, shipwrecks, and hunger as credentials? But in ministry shaped by Christ's cross, weakness becomes the resume that matters. MADNESS INSANITY

en: being-beside-myself | es: desvarando | fr: être-insensé | de: von-Sinnen-sein 2Cor 11:23

παραφρον-έω G3913 N-AFS (1×)

madness, insanity, derangement, irrational folly

The noun form denoting madness, mental derangement, or irrational behavior. Second Peter 2:16 uses it to describe Balaam's madness—his folly in pursuing divination profit contrary to God's will. The term marks behavior so contrary to reason and righteousness that it appears insane. A donkey speaking human language to rebuke a prophet's greed provides scriptural evidence that sin produces a derangement more profound than clinical insanity—moral madness immune to rational argument.

(1×) Second Peter 2:16 calls Balaam's greedy disobedience 'madness' (παραφρονίαν). The translations (English 'madness', Spanish 'locura', German 'Wahnsinn') emphasize the irrational folly. The narrative absurdity underscores moral insanity: when a prophet needs a donkey to restore him to reason, his sin has created derangement deeper than any clinical diagnosis. Love of money makes wise men fools and turns prophets into cautionary tales. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8032 WITH 5 SENSES

en: madness | es: locura | fr: παραφρονίαν | de: Wahnsinn 2Pet 2:16

παραχειμ-άζω G3914 V-RPA-DNS (4×)

To spend the winter, overwinter; to stay at a location through the cold season.

A practical, seasonal verb combining para (at, beside) and cheima (winter), referring to remaining in a place during the winter months when sea travel was dangerous. Ancient Mediterranean navigation shut down roughly from November to March, making winter quarters a strategic necessity. In Acts 27:12, the sailors debate wintering at a suitable harbor in Crete. Acts 28:11 notes Paul's departure from Malta on a ship that had 'wintered' there. Paul himself plans to winter with the Corinthians (1 Cor 16:6) and asks Titus to meet him at Nicopolis where he intends to winter (Titus 3:12).

(4×) To spend the winter season at a particular location, typically because sea travel was impossible or perilous during cold months. Every translation tradition uses a seasonally specific word — Spanish invernar, German ueberwintern, French hiverner — rather than a generic 'stay.' Acts 27:12 captures the nautical urgency of finding a safe harbor before winter storms, while 1 Corinthians 16:6 and Titus 3:12 show Paul using winter stays for extended fellowship and ministry planning. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: I-will-winter, having-wintered, to-winter | es: invernar, invernaré, pasar-el-invierno | fr: hiverner, παραχειμάσαι | de: ueberwintern, παρακεχειμακότι, παραχειμάσαι Acts 27:12; Acts 28:11; 1Cor 16:6; Titus 3:12

παραχειμ-ᾰσία G3915 N-AFS (1×)

wintering, spending the winter season in a place

A nautical and travel term denoting the act of spending winter in a location, especially waiting out the season when seas were dangerous for sailing. Ancient Mediterranean shipping largely ceased from November to March due to storms. Acts 27:12 describes the harbor at Phoenix in Crete as unsuitable for wintering, prompting the ill-fated decision to sail toward a better winter anchorage. The term captures the seasonal rhythms that governed ancient travel and the strategic decisions those patterns forced.

(1×) Acts 27:12 mentions Fair Havens being unsuitable 'for wintering' (παραχειμασίαν). The translations (English 'wintering', Spanish 'invernar', French 'hivernage') preserve the seasonal stay. The harbor's limitations drove the decision to sail for Phoenix despite advancing season—a choice with catastrophic consequences. Luke's detail highlights how practical concerns (finding adequate winter quarters) intersect with divine providence, sometimes producing storms that serve God's larger purposes. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: wintering | es: invernar | fr: hivernage | de: παραχειμασίαν Acts 27:12

παραχρῆμα G3916 Adv (18×)

immediately, at once, instantly — an adverb marking the suddenness of a result, especially of divine power

Parachrema means 'on the spot, immediately, at that very moment,' composed of para ('at, beside') and chrema ('thing, matter'). Its 18 New Testament occurrences are concentrated overwhelmingly in Luke-Acts, where it becomes Luke's preferred term for the instantaneous effect of divine power. When Zechariah is struck mute, it happens parachrema (Luke 1:64 — and his speech returns parachrema). When Jesus rebukes the fever in Simon's mother-in-law, she rises parachrema (Luke 4:39). The paralytic takes up his bed parachrema (Luke 5:25). The bent woman straightens parachrema (Luke 13:13). The blind man near Jericho receives sight parachrema (Luke 18:43). In Acts, the same word punctuates miraculous judgments: Ananias falls dead parachrema (Acts 5:10), Elymas is struck blind parachrema (Acts 13:11), and the jailer's chains fall off parachrema (Acts 16:26, 33). Matthew uses it twice for the cursed fig tree that withers parachrema (Matt 21:19-20). The adverb communicates that God's word accomplishes its purpose without delay. Spanish 'al instante,' French 'aussitot/a l'instant,' and German 'sogleich' capture this immediacy.

(18×) An adverb indicating that something happens instantly, on the spot, without any interval of delay — characteristically used by Luke to underscore the immediacy of divine action. Luke deploys it for healings: the paralytic rises at once (Luke 5:25), the bent woman straightens instantly (Luke 13:13), the blind man sees immediately (Luke 18:43), Peter's mother-in-law is healed on the spot (Luke 4:39). In Acts, it marks miraculous judgments: Ananias drops dead (Acts 5:10), Elymas goes blind (Acts 13:11). Matthew reserves it for the fig tree's instant withering as a sign of judgment (Matt 21:19-20). The word's concentration in Luke-Acts (16 of 18 uses) makes it a Lukan stylistic fingerprint, emphasizing that God's power meets no resistance and suffers no delay. French 'a l'instant' and Spanish 'al instante' render the sense precisely. IMMEDIATELY AT ONCE

en: at-once, immediately | es: al-instante, inmediatamente | fr: aussitôt, à-l'instant | de: sogleich Matt 21:19; Matt 21:20; Luke 1:64; Luke 4:39; Luke 5:25

πάρδᾰλις G3917 N-DFS (1×)

leopard, panther, large spotted feline predator

Denoting the leopard (Panthera pardus), a swift and fierce predator known throughout the ancient Near East. Revelation 13:2 uses it in apocalyptic imagery—the beast from the sea was like a leopard, with bear's feet and lion's mouth. The composite creature draws on Daniel 7's sequence of beasts. The leopard contributes stealth, speed, and spotted beauty to this symbol of terrifying empire. Ancient audiences knew leopards as lethal hunters, making them apt symbols for predatory political power.

(1×) Revelation 13:2 describes the beast as resembling 'a leopard' (παρδάλει). The translation evidence (English 'leopard', Spanish 'leopardo', French 'Panther', German 'Panther') identifies the spotted cat. John's apocalyptic hybrid combines traits from Daniel's beasts: leopard's body for speed and stealth, bear's feet for crushing power, lion's mouth for devouring authority. The fusion creates an image of comprehensive predatory might arrayed against God's people. LEOPARD PREDATOR

en: a-leopard | es: a-leopardo | fr: Panther | de: Panther Rev 13:2

πάρειμι G3918 V-PPA-DNP (24×)

Be present, be at hand; arrive, come; present things or current circumstances

The verb pareimi (πάρειμι, from para + eimi 'to be') describes presence in both its static and dynamic dimensions. Crowds 'were present' when Jesus taught about the Galileans whose blood Pilate mingled with sacrifices (Luke 13:1), Cornelius tells Peter 'we are all present before God' (Acts 10:33), and Paul speaks of his conduct 'when present' versus 'when absent' (2 Cor 10:2, 11; Gal 4:18, 20). The arrival sense surfaces when the teacher 'is here' calling for Mary (John 11:28) and when Jesus asks Judas 'Friend, why are you here?' (Matt 26:50). In Hebrews 13:5, the participle becomes a substantive: 'be content with present things,' turning spatial presence into a philosophical category.

1. be present, be at hand (19×) To be present in a place or situation, describing an ongoing state rather than the moment of arrival. This covers the great majority of occurrences: the crowd present at Jesus' teaching (Luke 13:1), Cornelius's household assembled before God (Acts 10:33), Paul's contrast between presence and absence (2 Cor 10:2, 11; 13:2, 10; Gal 4:18, 20). Spanish estar-presente and German anwesend-sein both emphasize the stative, locative dimension — being there, not getting there. BEING PRESENT en: Were-present, are-present, being-present | es: Estaban-presentes, estamos-presentes, estando-presente | fr: être-présent | de: anwesend-sein, ist-anwesend Luke 13:1; John 7:6; Acts 10:33; Acts 17:6; Acts 24:19

2. arrive, come to be present (4×) To arrive or come to be present, emphasizing the transition from absence to presence. Jesus 'is here' calling for Mary at Lazarus's tomb (John 11:28); Jesus addresses Judas at the arrest: 'Friend, why are you here?' (Matt 26:50); the Tyrian delegation 'came' to Herod seeking peace (Acts 12:20); Paul 'arrived' before Festus (Acts 10:21). Spanish está-presente/estás-aquí and German ist-anwesend blur the distinction that Greek maintains between the stative and the ingressive, but the narrative contexts make the arrival reading clear. BEING PRESENT en: are-you-here, is-here, they-came | es: está-presente, estáis-presentes, estás-aquí | fr: être-présent | de: anwesend-sein, ist-anwesend Matt 26:50; John 11:28; Acts 10:21; Acts 12:20

3. present things, what is at hand (1×) Substantivized participial use meaning 'present things' or 'what is at hand' — current possessions or circumstances. Hebrews 13:5 urges believers to be content with ta paronta, 'the things that are present,' a moral instruction about material sufficiency. Spanish presentes and German anwesend-sein (applied to things rather than persons) mark the shift from spatial presence of people to the philosophical category of what currently exists in one's life. BEING PRESENT en: present-things | es: presentes | fr: être-présent | de: anwesend-sein Heb 13:5

παρεισ-άγω G3919 V-FIA-3P (1×)

to introduce secretly, smuggle in stealthily, bring in covertly

From 'beside' and 'lead in', this compound verb emphasizes secretive introduction—smuggling in people, ideas, or practices by stealth. Classical usage included introducing allies into besieged cities secretly. Second Peter 2:1 warns of false teachers who will secretly introduce destructive heresies. The future tense projects the threat forward, while the adverbial prefix captures the covert nature—not open debate but infiltration, introducing error by stealth rather than argument.

(1×) Second Peter 2:1 warns that false teachers 'will bring in secretly' (παρεισάξουσιν) destructive heresies. The translations (English 'will-bring-in-secretly', Spanish 'introducirán', German 'einfuehren') emphasize the covert introduction. The verb's stealth dimension is critical: these aren't honest teachers presenting alternative views for open examination, but infiltrators smuggling error into the community under cover. Vigilance requires watching not just what is taught but how it enters. ENTERING AND GOING IN en: will-bring-in-secretly | es: introducirán | fr: παρεισάξουσιν | de: einfuehren 2Pet 2:1

παρείσ-ακτος G3920 Adj-AMP (1×)

smuggled in, secretly introduced, infiltrated covertly

The adjectival form describing someone or something introduced secretly or smuggled in. Galatians 2:4 uses it for 'false brothers' secretly brought in to spy on the freedom believers have in Christ. The term suggests infiltration rather than legitimate entry—these aren't genuine converts or honest inquirers but planted agents with hostile intent. The adjective exposes the covert nature of the threat to gospel freedom, warning that not all who claim brotherhood come with pure motives.

(1×) Galatians 2:4 speaks of 'smuggled-in' (παρεισάκτους) false brothers who infiltrated to spy on Christian freedom. The translation evidence (English 'smuggled-in', Spanish 'infiltrados', French retains Greek form) emphasizes the covert infiltration. Paul's military language (spying out, in order to enslave) treats the situation as spiritual warfare: these aren't honest theological opponents but saboteurs planted to destroy freedom in Christ and reimpose bondage to law. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: smuggled-in | es: infiltrados | fr: παρεισάκτους | de: eingeschmuggelt Gal 2:4

παρεισ-δύνω G3921 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to slip in, creep in unnoticed, infiltrate stealthily

A verb describing slipping in or penetrating secretly, like liquid seeping into a container or infiltrators entering undetected. Jude 4 uses it to warn that certain people have crept in unnoticed—ungodly individuals marked out for condemnation who turn grace into license. The aorist tense suggests completed infiltration discovered after the fact. The verb captures the insidious nature of false teaching's entry—not dramatic invasion but subtle penetration that succeeds precisely because it goes unnoticed.

(1×) Jude 4 warns that certain people have 'crept in' (παρεισδύησαν) unnoticed. The translations (English 'crept-in', Spanish 'se-infiltraron', French 'se-sont-glissés', German 'eingeschlichen-haben-sich') emphasize the stealthy infiltration. Jude's alarm reflects discovery of enemy agents already embedded in the community—not theoretical future danger but present compromise. The pastoral urgency comes from recognizing infiltration has already succeeded; vigilance must shift from prevention to identification and response. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: crept-in | es: se-infiltraron | fr: se-sont-glissés | de: eingeschlichen-haben-sich Jude 1:4

παρεισ-έρχομαι G3922 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to enter alongside, slip in secretly; to come in beside or be introduced

This compound verb means to enter alongside or come in beside —often with the connotation of stealth or secrecy. Medical texts use it of inserting fingers or instruments. More broadly, it describes something introduced as a side-issue or additional element. Both New Testament uses describe unwelcome entry. Romans 5:20 says the law 'came in alongside' to increase transgression. Galatians 2:4 describes false brothers who 'slipped in secretly' to spy on freedom in Christ. The verb suggests entering where one doesn't fully belong or arriving by the side door.

(2×) Romans 5:20 uses an aorist active ('came in alongside') for the law's historical entry into redemptive history, while Galatians 2:4 uses an aorist active ('came in secretly') for false teachers' infiltration. The multilingual glosses capture the sense of sideways or secretive entry: English 'came-in-alongside, came-in-secretly,' Spanish 'entraron-secretamente, entró-al-lado,' German 'sich-einschleichen' (to sneak in). Both contexts suggest something arriving not frontally but obliquely, either as supplement (the law after promise) or as infiltration (false teachers among true believers). ENTERING AND GOING IN en: came-in-alongside, came-in-secretly | es: entraron-secretamente, entró-al-lado | fr: introduire-secrètement, sich-einschleichen | de: sich-einschleichen Rom 5:20; Gal 2:4

παρεισ-φέρω G3923 V-APA-NMP (1×)

to bring in alongside, add as supplement, apply diligence

A compound verb meaning to bring in beside, add as supplement, or apply effort alongside existing foundations. Classical usage included proposing amending laws. Second Peter 1:5 uses it in the exhortation to apply all diligence or bring in every effort alongside faith to supplement it with virtue, knowledge, and other qualities. The verb suggests active adding—not passive waiting but energetic supplementing of God-given faith with character development.

(1×) Second Peter 1:5 urges believers 'having brought in alongside' (παρεισενέγκαντες) all diligence to supplement faith with virtue. The translations (English 'having-brought-in-alongside', Spanish 'habiendo-aportado', German 'hinzufuegen') capture the supplementing action. The participial construction shows the basis for the command: precisely because you've applied diligence, now add to faith this sequence of qualities. Divine provision creates human responsibility; grace received becomes grace cultivated. BRINGING AND OFFERING

en: having-brought-in-alongside | es: habiendo-aportado | fr: παρεισενέγκαντες | de: hinzufuegen 2Pet 1:5

παρεκτός G3924 Prep (3×)

except, besides, apart from; marking an exception or exclusion from a general statement

An adverb meaning 'except' or 'besides,' this word marks exceptions to general rules. Jesus teaches that divorce is unlawful 'except' for sexual immorality (Matt 5:32). Paul tells Agrippa he wishes all were as he is, 'except for' these chains (Acts 26:29). Paul mentions countless pressures he faces, 'besides' external things like concern for the churches (2 Cor 11:28). The term functions as a logical operator, carving out specific exclusions from broader statements.

(3×) Multilingual glosses all capture the exception concept: English 'except/except-for/external-things', Spanish 'demás-cosas/excepto', French 'excepté', German 'ausser/παρεκτὸς'. The lexicon defines it simply as 'besides or except for a thing, with genitive'. Matt 5:32 makes divorce lawful only 'except for' fornication. Acts 26:29 excludes Paul's chains from his wish for Agrippa. 2 Cor 11:28 uses it absolutely for 'besides things external' (external pressures beyond internal church care). The word consistently marks exceptions or exclusions. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: except, except-for, external-things | es: demás-cosas, excepto | fr: excepté | de: ausser, παρεκτὸς Matt 5:32; Acts 26:29; 2Cor 11:28

παρεμ-βολή G3925 N-AFP (11×)

A military camp, encampment, or army; specifically, the Roman barracks (Fortress Antonia) in Jerusalem.

Parembolē originally meant the drawing up of troops in battle order, and its NT usage retains that military flavor. In Acts 21-23, it refers specifically to the Roman barracks — the Fortress Antonia adjacent to the Temple — where Paul was taken into protective custody by the tribune (Acts 21:34, 22:24, 23:10). Outside Acts, the word broadens to mean a camp or encampment: Hebrews recalls the Israelite camp from which sin offerings were carried 'outside the camp' (Heb 13:11, 13), and Revelation envisions enemies surrounding 'the camp of the saints' (Rev 20:9). Spanish distinguishes the two well: fortaleza ('fortress') for the barracks, campamento ('camp') for the broader sense.

1. barracks, military quarters (6×) The Roman military barracks, specifically the Fortress Antonia in Jerusalem where Paul was held in protective custody. All six occurrences cluster in Acts 21-23, forming a tight narrative unit: the soldiers carry Paul into the barracks (Acts 21:34), Paul speaks at the entrance (21:37), is brought inside for examination (22:24), removed for safety (23:10), and his nephew enters to deliver a warning (23:16, 23:32). Spanish fortaleza ('fortress') and French camp capture the fixed military installation, while German belagert ('besieged') takes a different angle. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: barracks | es: fortaleza | fr: camp | de: belagert Acts 21:34; Acts 21:37; Acts 22:24; Acts 23:10; Acts 23:16

2. camp, encampment, army (5×) A camp, encampment, or military host in the broader sense — not a fixed building but a temporary or conceptual formation. In Heb 13:11 and 13:13, it evokes the Israelite wilderness camp with its purity boundaries, as Jesus 'suffered outside the camp.' In Heb 11:34 it refers to foreign armies ('turned to flight the armies of the aliens'), and in Rev 20:9 it describes 'the camp of the saints' besieged by Gog and Magog. Luke 19:43 uses it for a siege embankment. Spanish campamento and German Heerlager ('army camp') distinguish this portable or figurative sense from the fixed barracks of Acts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: camp, camps, will-set-up | es: campamento, ejércitos, pondrán | fr: camper | de: Heerlager, belagert Luke 19:43; Heb 11:34; Heb 13:11; Heb 13:13; Rev 20:9

παρεν-οχλέω G3926 V-PNA (1×)

to cause trouble, annoy, burden with demands

A verb denoting causing annoyance, trouble, or burden to someone —pressing upon them with unwelcome demands. Acts 15:19 uses it in James's judgment at the Jerusalem council: they should not trouble the Gentile converts with unnecessary requirements. The verb captures the sense of imposing burdens, making difficulties, or adding troublesome complications. James's usage argues for minimizing obstacles to grace—not piling regulations on new believers but clearing the path for their entry into God's people.

(1×) Acts 15:19 has James declaring they should not 'trouble' (παρενοχλεῖν) Gentiles turning to God. The translation evidence (English 'to-trouble', Spanish 'molestar', French 'importuner') emphasizes the burdening action. James's verb choice is rhetorically powerful: imposing circumcision and Moses would trouble, annoy, and burden Gentile converts rather than welcome them. The gospel removes barriers; adding legal requirements reverses grace's direction. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: to-trouble | es: molestar | fr: importuner | de: παρενοχλεῖν Acts 15:19

παρεπί-δημος G3927 Adj-DMP (3×)

sojourning, dwelling temporarily in a foreign place; a stranger, alien, or exile without permanent residence

This adjective describes someone living temporarily in a place that's not their true home—a sojourner or exile. Hebrews celebrates faith heroes who confessed they were 'strangers and exiles' on earth, seeking a heavenly homeland (Heb 11:13). Peter addresses his readers as 'exiles' scattered throughout various provinces (1 Pet 1:1) and urges them as 'sojourners and exiles' to abstain from fleshly passions

(1 Pet 2:11). The term captures the Christian's dual citizenship: present on earth but belonging to another kingdom.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes temporary alien status: English 'sojourners/strangers', Spanish 'forasteros/peregrinos', German 'Fremdlinge' (foreigners/strangers). The lexicon defines it as 'sojourning in a strange place' with substantive use common. Heb 11:13 describes the faithful as 'strangers and exiles on earth'. 1 Pet 1:1 addresses 'exiles of the dispersion'. 1 Pet 2:11 urges 'sojourners and exiles' to abstain from passions. All three uses emphasize temporary earthly residence and true citizenship elsewhere—a pilgrim identity. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: sojourners, strangers | es: forasteros, peregrinos | fr: Fremdlinge | de: Fremdlinge Heb 11:13; 1Pet 1:1; 1Pet 2:11

παρέρχομαι G3928 V-PIM/P-2P (30×)

To pass by, pass away, come to an end; also to approach, transgress, or be averted; of time, space, and moral obligation.

Parerchomai is a compound of para ('beside') and erchomai ('come/go'), and its semantic range fans out from that spatial core in several directions at once. At its most concrete, it describes someone or something moving past a point in physical space — a ship passing, Jesus walking by along the Sea of Galilee. But the word's most theologically charged uses are eschatological: 'Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not pass away' (Matt 24:35), where passing means ceasing to exist entirely. In the Gethsemane prayers, the same verb carries a poignant middle sense — Jesus asks that 'this cup pass from me,' meaning not mere spatial departure but aversion of an ordeal. Strikingly, the word can also reverse direction entirely, meaning 'come to' or 'approach,' and even extends metaphorically to transgressing commandments, as though one walks right past them without stopping.

1. pass away, come to an end (17×) The eschatological and temporal sense: to pass away, come to an end, cease to exist. This is the most frequent use (17 of 30 occurrences), concentrated in Jesus' apocalyptic discourse. Heaven and earth will 'pass away' (Matt 24:35; Mark 13:31; Luke 21:33), this generation will not 'pass away' before all is fulfilled (Matt 24:34; Mark 13:30), and time itself 'has passed' (Matt 14:15; Acts 27:9). Spanish ha-pasado and German vergehen both select terminative vocabulary, confirming that the sense is not mere spatial movement but cessation of existence. The 2 Peter 3:10 usage of the heavens 'passing away with a roar' shows the word pushed to its most dramatic eschatological force. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: has-passed, having-passed, he-will-pass-away | es: ha-pasado, haber-pasado, pasado | fr: passer, passer-outre | de: geht-vorüber, vergehen Matt 5:18; Matt 14:15; Matt 24:34; Matt 24:35

2. pass by physically (5×) Physical passing by: to move past a location or person in space, traversing alongside without stopping. Found in narrative contexts — Jesus passing by along the road (Mark 6:48), the route passing through Mysia (Acts 16:8), or no one being able to pass by the demoniacs (Matt 8:28). French passer and Spanish pasando preserve the concrete spatial transit. The participle 'passing by' in Luke 18:37 describes what bystanders told Bartimaeus about Jesus, triggering his cry for mercy. DEPARTING AND PASSING en: having-passed-by, is-passing-by, might-pass | es: pasa, pasando, pasar | fr: passer, passer-outre | de: geht-vorüber, vergehen Matt 8:28; Mark 6:48; Mark 14:35; Luke 18:37; Acts 16:8

3. be removed, pass from (3×) To be removed or averted: of an ordeal, cup, or burden being taken away. The Gethsemane prayers are definitive — 'let this cup pass from me' (Matt 26:39, 42), where Jesus asks not that the cup physically relocate but that the experience be averted altogether. Luke 16:17 extends this to the impossibility of the Law's smallest stroke 'passing away.' German voruebergehen captures both the spatial image and the metaphorical force. Only 3 occurrences, but among the most emotionally and theologically intense in the New Testament. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: let-pass, to-pass, to-pass-away | es: pasar, pase | fr: passer | de: geht-vorüber Matt 26:39; Matt 26:42; Luke 16:17

4. come to, approach (3×) To come forward, approach, arrive at: a surprising semantic reversal where the 'passing' verb means coming to rather than going past. In Luke 12:37 the master 'comes' to serve his watchful servants; in Luke 17:7 a servant 'comes in' from the field. Acts 24:7 (in some manuscripts) uses the participle of the Roman commander Lysias 'coming' with force. Spanish habiendo-venido and French passer-outre both stretch toward arrival semantics, though the approach sense is more clearly marked in the narrative contexts themselves. DEPARTING AND PASSING en: having-come, having-come-to, passing | es: habiendo-venido, pasando | fr: passer, passer-outre | de: geht-vorüber Luke 12:37; Luke 17:7; Acts 24:7

5. transgress, disregard (2×) To transgress, disregard, pass over a commandment or obligation. In Luke 11:42 Jesus rebukes the Pharisees for tithing herbs while 'passing by' justice and the love of God. In Luke 15:29 the elder son protests that he never 'transgressed' his father's command. The metaphor is vivid — walking right past an obligation without acknowledging it. Spanish pasais-por-alto ('you pass over') captures the idiom precisely, and the pairing of physical bypass with moral neglect shows how naturally spatial metaphors extend into ethical territory. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: I-transgressed, you-pass-by | es: pasáis-por-alto, traspasé | fr: passer | de: geht-vorüber Luke 11:42; Luke 15:29

πάρεσις G3929 N-AFS (1×)

passing over, letting go, remission, temporary suspension of punishment

Originally meaning a letting go or dismissal, this term came to denote remission, passing over offenses, or temporary suspension of judgment. Romans 3:25 uses it to describe God's passing over sins previously committed in his forbearance. The term is not full forgiveness (aphesis) but the divine patience that delays punishment, creating space for redemption. God's restraint in not immediately judging sin reveals both justice (sin requires atonement) and mercy (patience waits for Christ).

(1×) Romans 3:25 speaks of the 'passing over' (πάρεσιν) of previously committed sins. The translation evidence (English 'passing-over', Spanish 'pasar-por-alto', German 'Vorbeigehen') captures God's forbearance. Paul's distinction matters: God didn't ignore or erase pre-cross sins but suspended judgment until Christ's atoning death. The cross demonstrates both justice (sins couldn't be dismissed) and mercy (patience created room for redemption). Divine forbearance wasn't indifference but strategic grace. RELEASE AND FORGIVENESS en: passing-over | es: pasar-por-alto | fr: réconfort | de: Vorbeigehen Rom 3:25

παρέχω G3930 V-PMA-2S (16×)

Provide, furnish, cause, present; to hand over something beneficial or bring about a situation, whether positive or negative

A versatile verb built on the prefix para- ('beside') and echo ('hold, have') — literally to hold something out to someone. In the Gospels it frequently appears in the idiom 'cause trouble' (parechein kopon), as when Jesus rebukes those bothering the woman who anointed him (Matt 26:10; Mark 14:6). Yet the same verb equally describes generous provision: a centurion's friends tell Jesus he 'deserves' to have his request granted (Luke 7:4), and Paul urges masters to 'provide' what is just for their slaves (Col 4:1). Spanish captures the polarity neatly — 'causarme molestias' for trouble, 'concedas' for gracious granting.

1. cause trouble or difficulty (6×) To cause or bring about something negative — trouble, difficulty, or annoyance. This is the idiomatic parechein kopon ('give trouble'), prominent in the Synoptic Gospels. In Matthew 26:10 and Mark 14:6, Jesus asks 'Why are you causing her trouble?' Luke 11:7 and 18:5 use it of persistent petitioners creating inconvenience. Galatians 6:17 has Paul declaring 'let no one cause me trouble.' Spanish 'causarme' and the consistent collocation with kopon mark this as a fixed negative idiom rather than a general causative. GIVING AND BESTOWING en: are-you-causing, bring-about, cause | es: causarme, cause, causes | fr:

donner | de: gewaehren, gewährt Matt 26:10; Mark 14:6; Luke 11:7; Luke 18:5; Gal 6:17

2. provide, supply, or grant (6×) To provide, supply, furnish, or grant something beneficial. The centurion is 'worthy' to receive what he asks (Luke 7:4); a slave girl 'provided' her masters with much profit through fortune-telling (Acts 16:16); God has 'provided' proof of judgment by raising Jesus (Acts 17:31). Paul commands masters to 'provide' justice and fairness (Col 4:1). Spanish 'proporcionaba' (was providing) and 'concedas' (may you grant) highlight the generosity or authority behind the giving. Acts 19:24 extends it to economic provision — Demetrius providing employment to craftsmen. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: having-provided, provide, providing | es: concedas, habiendo-dado, proporcionaba | fr: donner, fournir | de: gewaehren, gewährt Luke 7:4; Acts 16:16; Acts 17:31; Acts 19:24; Col 4:1

3. present, offer, or show (3×) To present, offer, or show something to another person, often with a demonstrative or formal quality. Luke 6:29 instructs, 'offer the other cheek also'; Acts 28:2 describes the Maltese 'showing' unusual kindness; Titus 2:7 urges Titus to 'present yourself as a model' of good works. Spanish 'mostraban' (they were showing) and 'presentando' (presenting) bring out the display aspect. The sense differs from simple giving — it emphasizes making something visible or available rather than transferring ownership. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: offer, presenting, were-showing | es: mostraban, ofrece, presentando | fr: donner, fournir | de: gewaehren, gewährt Luke 6:29; Acts 28:2; Titus 2:7

4. keep or maintain (silence) (1×) To keep or maintain a state — specifically in the idiom parechein hesychian, 'to keep silence.' Acts 22:2 records that when Paul spoke in Aramaic, the crowd 'kept' even greater silence. Spanish 'guardaron silencio' (they kept silence) and the singular occurrence of this collocation in the New Testament mark it as a specialized idiomatic use. The underlying logic is still 'furnish' — the crowd furnished silence, held it out as their response — but the English translation naturally shifts to 'keep' or 'maintain.' GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: they-kept | es: guardaron | fr: fournir | de: gewährt Acts 22:2

παρηγορ-ία G3931 N-NFS (1×)

comfort, consolation, encouragement, solace

A noun denoting comfort, consolation, or encouragement given to those in distress. Classical usage included exhortation and assuagement of grief. Colossians 4:11 uses it in Paul's commendation of fellow workers who have been a comfort to him. The term suggests tangible encouragement—not abstract sympathy but concrete support that lightens burdens and lifts spirits. In ministry contexts it captures the mutual strengthening that sustains workers through difficulty and isolation.

(1×) Colossians 4:11 describes Jewish Christian coworkers who became 'a comfort' (παρηγορία) to Paul. The translation evidence (English 'comfort', Spanish 'consuelo', French and German retain forms of the Greek word) emphasizes consolation. Paul's appreciation reveals the emotional toll of apostolic work and the vital role of supportive community. These men strengthened him not just through practical help but through the encouragement of shared mission and loyal friendship. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT en: comfort | es: consuelo | fr: παρηγορία | de: Trost Col 4:11

παρθεν-εία G3932 N-GFS (1×)

virginity, the state of being an unmarried virgin

A noun denoting the state or condition of virginity—being unmarried and sexually chaste. Luke 2:36 uses it in describing Anna who lived with her husband seven years 'from her virginity'—that is, from the time of her marriage. The phrase marks the transition from virgin state to married life. Ancient Mediterranean culture placed high value on female virginity before marriage, making this status marker socially and religiously significant.

(1×) Luke 2:36 describes Anna living with her husband seven years 'from her virginity' (παρθενίας). The translation evidence (English 'virginity', Spanish 'virginidad', French 'virginité') marks her unmarried state before marriage. The detail establishes Anna's biography: married young, widowed after seven years, then decades of temple service. The 'from virginity' phrase emphasizes she entered marriage as an honorable virgin, maintaining cultural and religious standards. VIRGIN MAIDEN

en: virginity | es: virginidad | fr: virginité | de: παρθενίας Luke 2:36

παρθένος G3933 N-NFP (15×)

Virgin, maiden; a person, usually a young woman, who has not had sexual relations.

Denotes a person—typically a young woman—who has not had sexual intercourse. In classical Greek it could also apply broadly to an unmarried girl, but New Testament usage consistently foregrounds sexual purity. Matthew and Luke apply it to Mary in the annunciation narratives (Matt 1:23 citing Isaiah 7:14; Luke 1:27), where the virginal conception is theologically central. Jesus' parable of the ten virgins (Matt 25:1-11) uses the word for unmarried attendants at a wedding. Paul employs it both literally, for unmarried women choosing celibacy (1 Cor 7:25-34), and figuratively, for the church presented as a pure virgin to Christ (2 Cor 11:2). Spanish 'virgen' and French 'vierge' preserve the Latin lineage intact.

virgin, maiden (15×) A person, normally a young woman, who has not had sexual relations; a maiden. Central to the birth narratives, where Mary is twice identified as a parthenos (Matt 1:23; Luke 1:27), fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy and establishing the virginal conception. In the parable of the ten virgins (Matt 25:1-11), the term designates wedding attendants whose preparedness or lack thereof symbolizes spiritual readiness. Paul uses it for unmarried women considering celibacy (1 Cor 7:25, 34) and metaphorically for the church's chaste devotion to Christ (2 Cor 11:2). Spanish 'virgen,' French 'vierge,' and German 'Jungfrau' all converge on the core sense of sexual purity. VIRGIN MAIDEN en: a-virgin, to-virgins, virgin | es: virgen, vírgenes | fr: vierge | de: Jungfrau, Jungfrauen Matt 1:23; Matt 25:1; Matt 25:7; Matt 25:11; Luke 1:27

Πάρθος G3934 N-NMP (1×)

Parthians, people from Parthia east of the Euphrates

The name for inhabitants of Parthia, a powerful empire east of the Euphrates known for cavalry and archery. Acts 2:9 lists Parthians first among those present at Pentecost who heard the apostles speak in their own languages. Including them signals the gospel's universal scope—reaching even the distant eastern empire that rivaled Rome. Parthian presence in Jerusalem for the feast shows the wide diaspora dispersion and the Spirit's work in drawing all peoples to hear the mighty works of God.

(1×) Acts 2:9 lists 'Parthians' (Πάρθοι) among those who heard the apostles at Pentecost. The translation evidence (English 'Parthoi', Spanish 'Párthoi', French 'Parthe') preserves the ethnic designation. Listing Parthians first (geographically the farthest east) begins Luke's catalog of nations with maximum scope—from Rome's eastern rival to diverse Mediterranean peoples. The linguistic miracle announces the gospel's universal reach before a single sermon is preached. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: Parthoi | es: Párthoi | fr: Parthe | de: Πάρθοι Acts 2:9

παρίημι G3935 V-ANA (2×)

to let hang down, relax, neglect; to become feeble or pass over

This verb means to let fall, hang down, relax, or neglect. Classical usage includes letting things drop at one's side, passing over something without notice, or allowing something to become slack. The range extends from physical drooping to moral or practical neglect. Luke 11:42 has Jesus accusing the Pharisees of 'neglecting' justice and love of God. Hebrews 12:12 exhorts readers to strengthen 'drooping' hands and weak knees—using athletic imagery for spiritual perseverance. The word captures the motion from vigor to slackness, from attention to neglect.

(2×) Luke 11:42 uses a present active infinitive ('to neglect') for moral-spiritual disregard of weightier matters, while Hebrews 12:12 uses a perfect passive participle ('drooping, having been relaxed') for physical weakness. The translations reflect both senses: English 'drooping, to-neglect,' Spanish 'caídas, descuidar,' French 'être-présent' [error in source], German 'erschlaffen, παρεῖναι.' Luke's use involves active neglect or passing over; Hebrews' use involves passive weakening or hanging limply. Both describe loss of proper strength, attention, or function. BEING PRESENT en: drooping, to-neglect | es: caídas, descuidar | fr: être-présent | de: erschlaffen, παρεῖναι Luke 11:42; Heb 12:12

παρίστημι G3936 V-LIA-3P (41×)

To present, stand beside, appear before; also to provide, assist, or arrive (of time/harvest)

A versatile Greek verb whose transitive forms mean 'to present' or 'place beside' and whose intransitive forms mean 'to stand by' or 'be present.' Paul uses it for the solemn offering of believers to God (Rom 6:13; 12:1) and of Christ presenting the church without blemish (Eph 5:27). In the Gospels, bystanders 'stand by' at the cross and trial scenes (Mark 14:47, 69). The word spans from temple presentation (Luke 2:22) to courtroom appearance (Acts 27:24) to the quiet arrival of harvest time (Mark 4:29). Spanish distinguishes 'presentar' from 'estar de pie junto a,' mirroring the transitive-intransitive split that defines this lemma's semantic architecture.

1. present, offer, yield (17×) The transitive causative sense: to present, offer, or yield someone or something before another, especially God. Luke 2:22 records Jesus being 'presented' at the temple; Romans 6:13 urges believers to 'present your members as instruments of righteousness.' Spanish 'presentar' and French 'presenter' reflect the formal, dedicatory character of this offering vocabulary. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: he-might-present, he-presented, present | es: la-presentó, os-presentáis, para-presentar | fr: présenter, se-tenir-devant | de: darstellen, stellt-dar Luke 2:22; Acts 1:3; Acts 9:41; Acts 23:33; Rom 6:13

2. stand by, be present (16×) The intransitive stative sense: to stand by or be present alongside someone. Bystanders at Jesus's trial and crucifixion 'stood by' (Mark 14:47, 69, 70; 15:35, 39). The physical proximity implied often carries narrative significance, placing witnesses at pivotal moments. Spanish 'estaban de pie junto a' and the German glosses capture the locative, non-agentive posture. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: standing, standing-by, stands | es: estaban-de-pie-junto-a, estaban-junto-a, estando-presente | fr: présenter, se-tenir-devant | de: darstellen, stellt-dar Mark 14:47; Mark 14:69; Mark 14:70; Mark 15:35; Mark 15:39

3. assist, stand with in support (2×) Standing with someone in a supportive role, providing assistance. Paul commends Phoebe who 'stood by' many (Rom 16:2), and in 2 Tim 4:17 the Lord 'stood by' Paul at his trial. The shift from mere physical presence to active support distinguishes this from sense 2. Spanish 'asistais/estuvo al lado' captures the helping dimension. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING

en: stood-by, you-may-stand-by | es: asistáis, estuvo-al-lado | fr: présenter, se-tenir-devant | de: darstellen Rom 16:2; 2Tim 4:17

4. provide, furnish, prepare (2×) To provide, furnish, or make ready for use. In Matt 26:53 Jesus could ask the Father to 'provide' twelve legions of angels; in Acts 23:24 Lysias orders mounts to be 'provided.' Spanish 'proveer/pondra' and the pragmatic military context reveal a logistical, preparatory meaning distinct from the cultic 'present' of sense 1. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: he-will-provide, to-provide | es: pondrá, proveer | fr: présenter, se-tenir-devant | de: stellt-dar Matt 26:53; Acts 23:24

5. stand before, appear before (2×) To stand before a judge or divine authority for examination. Acts 27:24 promises Paul he must 'stand before' Caesar; Romans 14:10 warns that all will 'stand before' the judgment seat. Spanish 'comparecer/compareceremos' uses the legal register. This judicial appearance sense bridges physical standing and formal accountability. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: stand, we-will-stand-before | es: comparecer, compareceremos | fr: se-tenir-devant | de: darstellen, stellt-dar Acts 27:24; Rom 14:10

6. (1×) To prove or demonstrate, used forensically. In Acts 24:13 Paul's accusers 'cannot prove' their charges. Spanish 'probar' and English 'to prove' show the shift from physical presentation to evidentiary demonstration. This rare usage extends the 'place before the mind' sense attested in classical Greek. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: to-prove | es: probar | fr: se-tenir-devant | de: stellt-dar Acts 24:13

7. (1×) Of time or harvest arriving, coming to be present. Mark 4:29 says when the grain 'has come' (is ripe/at hand), the sickle is sent. Spanish 'ha llegado' ('has arrived') captures the temporal-agricultural metaphor. This impersonal usage of the verb reflects the classical sense of a moment or condition presenting itself. STANDING BY AND ASSISTING en: has-come | es: ha-llegado | fr: présenter | de: darstellen Mark 4:29

Παρμενᾶς G3937 N-AMS (1×)

Parmenas, one of the seven chosen in Acts 6

A personal name meaning 'constant' or 'steadfast'. Acts 6:5 lists Parmenas among the seven men chosen to serve tables and care for widows in the Jerusalem church. The selection required being full of the Spirit and wisdom. Though Scripture tells us nothing more about Parmenas's ministry, his inclusion among the seven marks him as a trusted early leader who helped solve the Hellenist-Hebrew tension that threatened church unity.

(1×) Acts 6:5 names 'Parmenas' (Παρμενᾶν) as one of the seven. The multilingual evidence simply transliterates the proper name (English 'Parmenas', Spanish 'a-Parmenâs', French 'Parménas'). Beyond this single mention we know nothing of his service, but his selection testifies to Spirit-filled character and wisdom. The seven became the template for diaconal ministry, and Parmenas stands in that honored lineage even though history didn't preserve his story. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Parmenas | es: a-Parmenâs | fr: Parménas | de: Παρμενᾶν Acts 6:5

πάροδος G3938 N-DFS (1×)

passing by, way past, passage, entrance

A noun denoting a way by or past, passage, or the act of passing. Classical usage included mountain passes and the passage of time. First Corinthians 16:7 uses it in Paul's statement that he doesn't want to see the Corinthians merely 'in passing'—he hopes to spend time with them rather than make a brief visit. The term captures the difference between substantive presence and cursory contact, between investment and mere transit through their lives.

(1×) First Corinthians 16:7 has Paul saying he doesn't want to see them merely 'in passing' (πάροδον). The translations (English 'passing', Spanish 'paso', French 'passage', German 'Vorbeigehen') emphasize the brief, transitory character. Paul contrasts superficial fly-by ministry with extended presence. Relationship requires time; apostolic care means staying long enough to truly know and strengthen the community. The word choice validates the Corinthians' worth—they deserve more than a quick hello. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: passing | es: paso | fr: passage | de: Vorbeigehen 1Cor 16:7

παροικ-έω G3939 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to dwell beside, live among as a stranger, sojourn; to reside as foreigner or temporary resident

This verb means to dwell beside or among others—specifically as a stranger, foreigner, or temporary resident rather than a native citizen. Classical usage distinguishes permanent residents from those dwelling as paroikoi (sojourners without full citizenship). Both New Testament uses emphasize this stranger-status. Luke 24:18 asks if the risen Jesus is 'visiting' or 'sojourning' in Jerusalem and unaware of recent events. Hebrews 11:9 describes Abraham 'sojourning' in the promised land as in a foreign country. The word captures the theology of pilgrimage and faithful aliens living as strangers in the world.

(2×) Luke 24:18 uses a present active indicative ('are-visiting, sojourn') questioning Jesus' temporary presence in Jerusalem. Hebrews 11:9 uses an aorist active ('he sojourned') for Abraham's faithful dwelling in Canaan. The translations render the foreigner-status: English 'are-visiting, he-sojourned,' Spanish 'habitó-como-extranjero, resides-en,' French 'séjourner,' German 'als-Fremder-leben' (to live as a stranger). Both uses emphasize non-native status—temporary residence without full belonging, whether literal geographical sojourning or the theological status of God's people as resident aliens. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: are-visiting, he-sojourned | es: habitó-como-extranjero, resides-en | fr: séjourner | de: als-Fremder-leben, παροικεῖς Luke 24:18; Heb 11:9

παροικ-ία G3940 N-GFS (2×)

sojourning, temporary residence; the state of dwelling as foreigner or exile

This noun denotes the state or period of sojourning in a foreign land—residence as a stranger or exile without full citizenship. The concept is central to biblical theology of pilgrimage. Acts 13:17 describes God's people during 'the sojourn' in Egypt. First Peter 1:17 speaks of the 'time of your sojourning' or exile—addressing believers as aliens and strangers on earth. The word captures the condition of living somewhere temporarily, without full rights or permanent status, awaiting return to true homeland.

(2×) Acts 13:17 uses the genitive ('of the sojourn') for Israel's residence in Egypt as foreigners, while 1 Peter 1:17 uses the genitive ('of your sojourning') for believers' earthly pilgrimage. The translations emphasize temporary foreign residence: English 'sojourn, sojourning,' Spanish 'estancia, peregrinación,' French 'séjour-à-l'étranger,' German 'Fremdlingschaft.' Both contexts frame God's people as those dwelling temporarily in foreign territory—whether literal Egypt or metaphorical earthly exile—living in hope of promised inheritance and homeland. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: sojourn, sojourning | es: estancia, peregrinación | fr: séjour-à-l'étranger, παροικίας | de: Fremdlingschaft, παροικίᾳ Acts 13:17; 1Pet 1:17

πάροικος G3941 Adj-NNS (4×)

A sojourner, resident alien, foreigner; one who dwells in a land not their own without full citizenship.

This adjective-turned-noun (from para, beside, and oikos, house) describes someone living alongside but not truly belonging to a community — a resident alien. Stephen's speech recalls how Abraham's descendants were 'sojourners' in Egypt (Acts 7:6), and Moses became a sojourner in Midian (Acts 7:29). Ephesians 2:19 dramatically reverses the status: Gentile believers are 'no longer strangers and sojourners' but fellow citizens with God's people. First Peter 2:11 reclaims the term positively, urging Christians to live as 'sojourners and exiles' in this world, reorienting their ultimate belonging to heaven.

(4×) A sojourner, resident alien, or stranger dwelling in a foreign land without full rights of citizenship. Spanish extranjero/forastero and German Fremdling both emphasize foreignness, while the Greek root para + oikos (beside the house) evokes living on the margins of a household. Acts 7:6 and 7:29 use it historically of Israel in Egypt and Moses in Midian. Ephesians 2:19 transforms it theologically — believers are no longer paroikoi — and 1 Peter 2:11 embraces it as the Christian's proper stance toward the present world. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-sojourner, aliens, sojourners | es: a-forasteros, extranjera, extranjero | fr: étranger, πάροικοι, παροίκους | de: Fremdling, πάροικον, πάροικος Acts 7:6; Acts 7:29; Eph 2:19; 1Pet 2:11

παροιμ-ία G3942 N-DFP (5×)

Proverb, figure of speech, figurative saying; an indirect or metaphorical form of teaching.

A noun meaning proverb, figure of speech, or figurative saying — a form of indirect communication that requires interpretation. In the Johannine literature it describes Jesus' veiled manner of teaching. In John 10:6, the shepherd discourse is called a παροιμία that the audience did not understand. John 16:25 contrasts the current figurative mode with a coming time of plain speech, and 16:29 marks the disciples' recognition that Jesus is finally speaking plainly. Second Peter 2:22 quotes an actual proverb about a dog returning to its vomit. The Spanish distinction between 'parábola' (parable, John) and 'proverbio' (proverb, 2 Peter) neatly mirrors the two sub-senses this word carries.

(5×) A proverb, figure of speech, or figurative saying — an indirect, often metaphorical form of discourse that requires deeper understanding to interpret. Unlike παραβολή (which the Synoptics prefer), John uses παροιμία for Jesus' figurative teaching style. In John 10:6, the shepherd-and-gate discourse is labeled a παροιμία that baffled the Pharisees. John 16:25 creates an eschatological contrast: 'I have spoken in figures (παροιμίαις), but a time is coming when I will tell you plainly about the Father.' Second Peter 2:22 uses it in its more classical sense — an actual folk proverb: 'A dog returns to its own vomit.' The Spanish glosses 'parábola' (for the Johannine figurative discourses) versus 'proverbio' (for the 2 Peter maxim) helpfully distinguish the two registers this single Greek word covers. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: figure-of-speech, figures-of-speech, proverb | es: parábola, parábolas, proverbio | fr: proverbe | de: Gleichnisse John 10:6; John 16:25; John 16:29; 2Pet 2:22

πάροιν-ος G3943 Adj-AMS (2×)

given to wine, addicted to drink; drunken or quarrelsome over wine

This adjective describes someone given to wine—a drunkard or one whose behavior around wine is problematic. Classical usage associates it with drunken quarrels or shameful conduct at drinking parties. Both New Testament occurrences appear in qualifications for church leadership, prohibiting this vice. First Timothy 3:3 says an overseer must not be 'given to wine.' Titus 1:7 repeats the prohibition for elders. The term identifies not casual drinking but the vice of addiction or lack of self-control regarding alcohol—behavior incompatible with spiritual leadership.

(2×) Both uses are accusative masculine singular in lists of disqualifications for church leaders (1 Timothy 3:3, Titus 1:7). The translations consistently render it as addiction to wine: English 'addicted-to-wine,' Spanish 'dado-al-vino,' German 'dem-Wein-ergeben.' The context demands temperance and self-control in leaders; this word names the opposite—someone whose relationship with wine is characterized by excess, lack of control, or the quarrelsome behavior associated with chronic drinking. It disqualifies because it demonstrates failure of self-governance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: addicted-to-wine | es: dado-al-vino | fr: πάροινον | de: dem-Wein-ergeben 1Tim 3:3; Titus 1:7

παροίχομαι G3944 V-RPM/P-DFP (1×)

past, bygone, previous, having passed by

A perfect participle functioning as adjective, denoting what has passed by or is past. Acts 14:16 uses it to describe 'past generations'—the bygone times when God allowed all nations to walk in their own ways. The temporal marker distinguishes God's pre-gospel patience toward Gentiles from the new era inaugurated by Christ. The participle captures historical distance, marking off previous epochs from the present moment of revelation and universal witness.

(1×) Acts 14:16 speaks of God permitting all nations to walk in their own ways in 'past' (παρῳχημέναις) generations. The translation evidence (English 'past', Spanish 'pasadas', French 'passer') marks the bygone time. Paul's temporal distinction is theologically loaded: God's tolerance of Gentile ignorance characterized previous ages, but Christ's coming creates a new situation. The gospel's arrival transforms 'past' into present, ending the era of nations walking without

witness. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: past | es: pasadas | fr: passer | de: παρῳχημέναις Acts 14:16

παρομοι-άζω G3945 V-PIA-2P (1×)
to be like, resemble, be similar to
A verb meaning to be similar or comparable to something. Matthew 23:27 uses it in Jesus' devastating critique: the scribes and Pharisees are like whitewashed tombs—beautiful outside, full of dead bones within. The comparison exposes hypocrisy's structure: external religious beauty masking internal corruption. The verb enables Jesus' prophetic metaphors, showing how visible righteousness can conceal spiritual death when performance replaces transformation.

(1×) Matthew 23:27 has Jesus saying 'you are like' (παρομοιάζετε) whitewashed tombs. The translation evidence (English 'you-are-like', Spanish 'os-parecéis', French 'ressembler') captures the comparison. The simile's force depends on the contrast: tombs whitewashed before Passover gleam brilliantly but contain death and ritual impurity. So religious leaders may display impressive piety while harboring hypocrisy and lawlessness. The metaphor indicts any spirituality that values appearance over reality. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON en: you-are-like | es: os-parecéis | fr: ressembler | de: παρομοιάζετε Matt 23:27

παρόμοι-ος G3946 Adj-ANP (2×)
closely resembling, similar, nearly equal; like or comparable to
This adjective means closely resembling or similar to something—nearly equal or comparable. Classical usage describes things almost alike, numbers nearly equal, or grammatical structures employing assonance. Both New Testament occurrences appear in Mark 7, where Jesus criticizes the Pharisees. Verse 8 accuses them of holding 'similar' or 'many such' traditions. Verse 13 speaks of 'many similar things' they do. The word emphasizes likeness or parallelism—whether of quality, quantity, or pattern.

(2×) Mark 7:8 and 7:13 both use neuter plural forms to describe practices similar to the specific example Jesus cited. The translations render resemblance: English 'similar,' Spanish 'semejantes,' French 'semblable,' German 'aehnlich.' Jesus identifies a pattern of behavior—the examples he gives are not isolated but representative of many 'similar' or 'like' violations where human tradition nullifies God's word. The adjective functions rhetorically to suggest that the problem is systematic and widespread, not limited to the specific cases mentioned. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON
en: similar | es: semejantes | fr: semblable | de: aehnlich Mark 7:8; Mark 7:13

παροξ-ύνω G3947 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)
to provoke, irritate, sharpen to anger; to stimulate or incite
This verb means to provoke, irritate, or sharpen to anger. Classical usage includes spurring on, stimulating, or inciting—sometimes positively (urging to action) but often negatively (provoking to wrath). Passive forms mean 'to be provoked' or angered. Acts 17:16 describes Paul's spirit being 'provoked' or 'stirred' within him at the sight of Athenian idolatry. First Corinthians 13:5 says love 'is not provoked'—not easily angered. The word captures the internal agitation or sharp emotional response to perceived wrong.

(2×) Acts 17:16 uses an imperfect passive ('was being provoked') for Paul's ongoing reaction to idolatry, while 1 Corinthians 13:5 uses a present passive ('is provoked') to describe what love does not do. The translations emphasize the stirring to anger: English 'is-provoked, was-provoked,' Spanish 'se-irrita, se-irritaba,' French 'irriter,' German 'gereizt-werden.' Paul's spirit experiences sharp agitation at religious offense; love, by contrast, refuses to be easily provoked or angered. The verb captures the movement from stimulus to irritated or angered response. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: is-provoked, was-provoked | es: se-irrita, se-irritaba | fr: irriter | de: gereizt-werden, παρωξύνετο Acts 17:16; 1Cor 13:5

παροξ-υσμός G3948 N-AMS (2×)
sharp disagreement, provocation; fit of anger or incitement to action
This noun denotes irritation, sharp disagreement, or provocation. Medical texts use it for paroxysms—severe fits of disease. In interpersonal contexts, it means exasperation or contention. The two New Testament uses illustrate opposite valences. Acts 15:39 describes a 'sharp disagreement' between Paul and Barnabas over Mark that led to their separation. Hebrews 10:24 exhorts believers to 'provoke one another'—here positively—to love and good works. The word captures intense stirring or incitement, whether destructive (contention) or constructive (encouragement).

(2×) Acts 15:39 uses an accusative singular for the sharp contention between Paul and Barnabas, while Hebrews 10:24 uses a genitive (in the phrase 'unto provocation/stirring-up') for positive incitement. The translations distinguish usage: English 'sharp-disagreement, stirring-up,' Spanish 'estímulo, irritación,' French 'irritation, provocation,' German 'Anreizung, παροξυσμός.' The same word can describe destructive interpersonal conflict or constructive mutual encouragement. Context determines whether the sharp stirring produces separation or sanctification. ANGER AND INDIGNATION
en: sharp-disagreement, stirring-up | es: estímulo, irritación | fr: irritation, provocation | de: Anreizung, παροξυσμός Acts 15:39; Heb 10:24

παροργ-ίζω G3949 V-PMA-2P (2×)
to provoke to anger, incite to wrath, exasperate
This verb means to provoke to anger or incite to wrath. Classical usage emphasizes stirring someone to irritation or fury. Both New Testament uses involve provocation. Romans 10:19 quotes Deuteronomy 32:21, where God says 'I will provoke you to jealousy' by raising up a foolish nation. Ephesians 6:4 commands fathers not to 'provoke your children to anger' but to nurture them properly. The verb captures deliberate or reckless incitement to angry response—whether divine jealousy used pedagogically or parental harshness that embitters children.

(2×) Romans 10:19 uses a future active ('I will provoke to anger') in an Old Testament quotation about God's provocation of Israel through Gentile inclusion. Ephesians 6:4 uses a present active imperative ('do not provoke to anger') forbidding harsh parenting. The translations emphasize anger-provocation: English 'I-will-provoke-to-anger, provoke-to-anger,' Spanish 'provocaré-a-ira, provoqueis-a-ira,' French 'irriter,' German 'erzuernen.' Both uses involve actions that stir angry or bitter response—God's strategic provocation of Israel's jealousy, or parents' counterproductive harshness toward children. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: I-will-provoke-to-anger, provoke-to-anger | es: provocaré-a-ira, provoqueis-a-ira | fr: irriter | de: erzuernen Rom 10:19; Eph 6:4

παροργ-ισμός G3950 N-DMS (1×)
anger, wrath, provocation to anger
A noun denoting provocation, anger, or wrath. Ephesians 4:26 uses it in the difficult command: be angry but do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger. The term marks anger as something requiring immediate resolution rather than cultivation. Paul's ethic acknowledges anger's place (righteous indignation exists) while insisting on temporal limits—anger harbored overnight becomes sin. The daily sunset becomes God's timer for reconciliation.

(1×) Ephesians 4:26 commands not letting the sun set on your 'anger' (παροργισμῷ). The translation evidence (English 'anger', Spanish 'enojo', German 'Zorn') identifies the provoked wrath. Paul's instruction balances realism (anger happens) with discipline (don't let it fester). The sunset deadline creates urgency: reconcile before nightfall, don't sleep on wrath, resolve before anger hardens into bitterness. Same-day resolution prevents anger from metastasizing into lasting division. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: anger | es: enojo | fr: παροργισμῷ | de: Zorn Eph 4:26

παροτρ-υντικός G3951 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to incite, urge on, stir up, provoke to action

A verb meaning to urge on, incite, or stir up to action. Acts 13:50 uses it to describe how Jews incited the devout women and leading men to persecute Paul and Barnabas, driving them from the region. The verb captures the behind-the-scenes provocation that turns neutral or friendly parties into active opponents. Successful agitation requires targeting influential people whose social position gives their opposition teeth.

(1×) Acts 13:50 reports that Jews 'incited' (παρώτρυναν) prominent women and leading men against Paul. The translation evidence (English 'incited', Spanish 'incitaron', French 'exciter') emphasizes the stirring-up action. Luke's detail exposes persecution's mechanics: opponents mobilize social elites who have power to expel troublemakers. The strategy succeeds—Paul and Barnabas are driven out. Gospel advance often provokes those with most to lose from status quo disruption. STIR UP INCITE

en: incited | es: incitaron | fr: exciter | de: παρώτρυναν Acts 13:50

παρουσ-ία G3952 N-NFS (24×)

Coming, arrival, or presence; especially Christ's eschatological advent, but also personal presence contrasted with absence.

Carries the dual force of 'arrival' and 'presence' — the act of coming and the state of being there. In the New Testament it is overwhelmingly an eschatological term: Jesus's disciples ask about the sign of his parousia (Matt 24:3), and Paul links the resurrection of believers to Christ's coming (1 Cor 15:23). The word also retains its everyday Greek sense of personal presence, as when Paul contrasts his bodily presence with his letters (2 Cor 10:10) or urges the Philippians to obey not only in his presence but in his absence (Phil 2:12). Spanish distinguishes venida ('coming') from presencia ('presence'), mirroring the two poles neatly.

1. coming, arrival (eschatological or personal) (21×) The coming or arrival of a person, especially Christ's eschatological advent at the end of the age, but also used of the arrival of individuals like Paul, Stephanas, or Titus. Spanish venida, French avenement, and German Ankunft all foreground the event of arriving. Jesus's Olivet Discourse (Matt 24:3, 27, 37, 39) and Paul's resurrection teaching (1 Cor 15:23) establish this as the dominant NT usage. The lawless one also has a parousia (2 Thess 2:9), showing the term carries royal-visit connotations inherited from Hellenistic usage for a king's official arrival. COMING ARRIVAL PRESENCE

en: coming, presence | es: venida | fr: avènement, venue | de: Ankunft, παρουσία, παρουσίας Matt 24:3; Matt 24:27; Matt 24:37; Matt 24:39; 1Cor 15:23

2. presence (being physically present) (3×) The state of being physically present in a location — one's personal presence or appearance as opposed to absence. Spanish presencia captures this precisely. Paul admits his bodily presence is weak (2 Cor 10:10), and Philippians 2:12 contrasts 'in my presence' with 'in my absence,' showing parousia here means simply 'being there.' Phil 1:26 uses it for Paul's anticipated return visit, blending the arrival and presence senses — his coming will result in his being present with them again. COMING ARRIVAL PRESENCE

en: presence | es: presencia | fr: avènement, venue | de: Ankunft 2Cor 10:10; Phil 1:26; Phil 2:12

παροψ-ίς G3953 N-GFS (2×)

dish, platter, or serving plate

This noun denotes a dish or platter on which food (especially meat or fish delicacies) is served. Classical sources describe it as a side-dish container or serving plate. Both New Testament uses appear in Matthew 23:25-26, where Jesus rebukes the scribes and Pharisees for cleansing the outside of 'the cup and the dish' while inside they are full of greed and self-indulgence. The term functions in Jesus' metaphor contrasting external religious propriety with internal moral corruption—the ceremonial cleansing of dinnerware versus the uncleansed heart.

(2×) Matthew 23:25 and 23:26 both use the genitive singular in the phrase 'of the cup and the dish,' referring to ritual cleansing of tableware. The translations render it simply as 'dish' or 'platter': Spanish 'plato,' French 'plat,' German preserves the Greek term. Jesus employs the image of dining vessels that appear clean externally but harbor contamination internally. The dish represents the surface religiosity of the Pharisees—scrupulous about ritual purity of objects while neglecting the purity of heart and justice. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14653 WITH 4 SENSES

en: dish | es: plato, plato› | fr: plat | de: παροψίδος, παροψίδος› Matt 23:25; Matt 23:26

παρρησί-α G3954 N-GFS (31×)

Boldness, confidence, or openness of speech; fearless frankness before God or people, or public plainness of expression.

Derived from pas (all) and rhesis (speech), parresia carries the fundamental idea of saying everything freely, without concealment or fear. In the New Testament it most often describes the bold confidence of believers, whether in proclaiming the gospel (Acts 4:29, 31) or in approaching God in prayer (Heb 4:16). The Johannine writings use it distinctively in an adverbial sense for speaking or acting openly and publicly, as opposed to secrecy (John 7:4, 26). Spanish captures both dimensions well: confianza for inner boldness, abiertamente for outward openness.

1. boldness, confidence (22×) Inner boldness, confidence, and fearless courage, especially in speech or in approaching God. The dominant New Testament sense (22x), appearing across Acts, Hebrews, and the Pauline epistles. Translations converge on boldness-type terms: Spanish confianza/denuedo, French assurance/hardiesse, German Freimut. Peter and John's parresia astonishes the Sanhedrin in Acts 4:13, and the early church prays for it explicitly in Acts 4:29. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: boldness | es: confianza, denuedo, franqueza | fr: assurance, hardiesse | de: Freimut, παρρησίαν, παρρησίας Mark 8:32; Acts 2:29; Acts 4:13; Acts 4:29; Acts 4:31

2. openly, publicly, plainly (9×) Openness, publicness, or plainness of speech and action, used adverbially (often in the dative or with en). Concentrated in the Gospel of John (9x), where it contrasts with speaking in secret or in figures. Spanish abiertamente and libertad highlight the public, unconcealed quality. Jesus' brothers challenge him to act en parresia in John 7:4, and the Jews demand he speak plainly in John 10:24. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: openly, openness, plainly | es: abiertamente, claridad, libertad | fr: assurance | de: Freimut John 7:4; John 7:13; John 7:26; John 10:24; John 11:14

παρρησι-άζομαι G3955 V-PPM/P-NMS (9×)

To speak boldly or freely; to proclaim with confident, fearless openness; to exercise courageous speech.

A middle-voice verb capturing the bold, uninhibited speech characteristic of the early Christian mission. When Paul and Barnabas 'spoke boldly' in Pisidian Antioch (Acts 13:46) or when Apollos did so in Ephesus (Acts 18:26), the word conveys not reckless daring but Spirit-empowered confidence rooted in conviction. The Spanish 'hablar con denuedo' (speak with valor) and French 'parler hardiment' (speak hardily) both highlight the courage dimension, while the German 'freimütig reden' (speak frankly) emphasizes the openness — together painting a full picture of fearless, transparent proclamation.

speak boldly, be courageous (9×) To speak with bold freedom and courageous confidence, especially in proclaiming the gospel or defending the faith publicly despite opposition. All nine NT occurrences appear in Acts and the Pauline letters in contexts of missionary preaching under pressure (Acts 9:27–28, 13:46, 14:3, 18:26, 19:8). The deponent middle form suggests the speaker's personal engagement and stake in the bold act. Spanish 'denuedo' (valor) and German 'freimütig' (frank) together capture the dual character of the word: inner courage and outward openness. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: I-might-speak-boldly, having-spoken-boldly, he-spoke-boldly | es: ahablar-con-denuedo, con-libertad, hablaba-con-denuedo | fr: parler-hardiment, παρρησιάσωμαι, ἐπαρρησιασάμεθα | de: freimuetig-reden, redet-frei Acts 9:27; Acts 9:28; Acts 13:46; Acts 14:3; Acts 18:26

πᾶς G3956 Adj-VNP (1250×)

All, every, each, the whole; collective totality of a group, distributive 'every/each,' substantive 'everything,' or temporal 'always.'

Pas is the Greek workhorse of totality, appearing over 1,200 times in the New Testament — more than almost any other adjective. Its flexibility is remarkable: with a plural noun it means 'all' (all the nations, all the disciples); with a singular noun it shifts to 'every' or 'each' (every tree, each city); used substantively it becomes 'everything' or 'all things'; and in fixed phrases like dia pantos it means 'always' or 'continually.' What the multilingual evidence reveals is that most languages handle the collective and distributive senses with the same word — Spanish todo/todos, French tout, German alle/alles — suggesting that the semantic boundary between 'all the sheep' and 'every sheep' is more grammatical than lexical. Yet the substantive neuter use (ta panta, 'all things,' as in Col 1:16-17) carries a philosophical weight absent from the simple quantifier, pointing to the totality of created reality held together in Christ.

1. all (collective plural) (616×) Collective plural: 'all' taken together as a totality — the dominant sense at 616 occurrences. Refers to the entirety of a group viewed as a whole: 'all the chief priests' (Matt 2:4), 'all the region' (Matt 4:24), 'all who were sick' (Matt 4:24). Spanish todos/todas, French tous, German alle, and Korean 모든 all converge on aggregate-totality vocabulary. The emphasis falls on completeness rather than on individual members — no one is excluded from the set. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all | es: a-todos, todas, todos | fr: tout | de: alle, alles Matt 2:4; Matt 2:16; Matt 4:8; Matt 4:24; Matt 10:22

2. every, each (distributive) (227×) Distributive singular: 'every' or 'each' member of a class individually — 227 occurrences. With singular nouns, pas shifts from group-totality to individual-by-individual scope: 'every city' (Matt 4:23), 'everyone who is angry' (Matt 5:22), 'every good tree' (Matt 7:17). Spanish todo/toda (singular) and German jeder show the distributive frame clearly, though interestingly French tout handles both collective and distributive, as does Korean 모든, confirming that the distinction is more grammatical context than separate lexemes in most languages. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: Every, every, everyone | es: a-todo, toda, todo | fr: tout | de: alle, alles Matt 4:23; Matt 5:22; Matt 5:32; Matt 7:8; Matt 7:17

3. all things, everything (substantive) (211×) Substantive neuter: 'all things' or 'everything' — 211 occurrences where pas stands alone (often as ta panta or panta) without a modified noun, referring to the totality of things, circumstances, or reality. Theologically pivotal in passages like Col 1:16 ('all things were created through him') and 1 Cor 15:27 ('he has put all things under his feet'). Spanish todas las cosas and German alles both nominalize the adjective. Korean 만물 ('all creation/things') is especially revealing — it uses a dedicated compound for cosmic totality that is never used for the simple quantifier 'all people.' TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all-things | es: todas-cosas, todas-las-cosas, todo | fr: tout | de: alle, alles Matt 8:33; Matt 17:11; Matt 22:4; Mark 3:28; Mark 4:11

4. (187×) Whole or entire (with singular articular nouns): 'all of,' 'the whole' — 187 occurrences where pas modifies a singular noun with the article to mean the entirety of one thing rather than every member of a class. 'All the city' (Matt 8:34), 'all the crowd' (Matt 13:2), 'all Judea' (Matt 3:5), 'all righteousness' (Matt 3:15). The distinction from sense 1 is subtle but real: here a single entity is viewed as complete, not multiple entities gathered. Spanish toda la ciudad and German die ganze Stadt both show the 'whole/entire' framing. This is the sense that BDB's classical entry glosses as 'the whole' for a single referent. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all, of-all | es: de-toda, toda, todo | fr: tout | de: alle, alles Matt 3:5; Matt 3:15; Matt 8:32; Matt 8:34; Matt 13:2

5. always, continually (temporal) (9×) Temporal adverbial: 'always,' 'at all times,' 'continually' — 9 occurrences in fixed expressions like dia pantos ('through all [time],' i.e., 'continually'). In Matt 18:10 the angels 'always' behold the Father's face; in Luke 24:53 the disciples were 'continually' in the temple; in Acts 2:25 David had the Lord 'always' before him (citing Ps 16:8). Spanish siempre and German immer/allezeit both abandon the quantifier frame entirely for dedicated temporal vocabulary, confirming that this is a genuinely lexicalized adverbial sense, not just a contextual extension of 'all.' TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all | es: siempre, todo | fr: tout | de: alle, alles Matt 18:10; Mark 5:5; Luke 24:53; Acts 2:25; Acts 10:2

πάσχα G3957 N-ANS (29×)

Passover: the Jewish festival, its sacrificial meal, or the paschal lamb itself

An indeclinable loanword from Hebrew פֶּסַח (pesaḥ, 'to pass over'), πάσχα carries a triple reference in the NT: the annual festival commemorating Israel's deliverance from Egypt, the paschal supper eaten on the evening of Nisan 14-15, and the lamb slaughtered for that meal. All three senses overlap in the Passion narratives (Matt 26:2, 17-19; Mark 14:1, 12-16; Luke 22:1-15; John 18:28). Paul's declaration 'Christ our Passover has been sacrificed' (1 Cor 5:7) crystallizes the typological transfer. The uniform rendering across languages—Spanish 'Pascua,' French 'Pâque,' German 'Passah'—reflects this term's deep liturgical embedding.

passover (29×) The Passover in its comprehensive sense: the annual Jewish festival of deliverance (Exod 12), the paschal supper, and the sacrificial lamb. The Synoptic Passion narratives interweave all three referents as Jesus instructs his disciples to prepare the Passover meal (Matt 26:17-19, Mark 14:12-16, Luke 22:7-13), while John's chronology positions the crucifixion at the hour of lamb-slaughter (John 18:28, 19:14). PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Passover, passover | es: Pascua, pascua | fr: Pâque | de: Passah Matt 26:2; Matt 26:17; Matt 26:18; Matt 26:19; Mark 14:1

πάσχω G3958 V-PPA-NMP (42×)

To suffer, endure pain or hardship — used of Christ's redemptive passion and believers' trials

A verb meaning 'to have something done to one,' hence 'to suffer, undergo, experience adversity.' In classical Greek it could denote any experience, good or bad, but NT usage concentrates on suffering. Its most theologically weighty occurrences are the passion predictions — 'the Son of Man must suffer many things' (Matt 16:21; Mark 8:31; Luke 9:22) — where it becomes virtually a technical term for Christ's redemptive death. Beyond Christological usage, it describes believers sharing in suffering (Phil 1:29; 1 Pet 2:20-21) and even ordinary hardship (Matt 17:15; 1 Cor 12:26).

suffer, endure pain (42×) To suffer, undergo pain, or endure hardship. In the passion predictions (Matt 16:21; Mark 8:31; Luke 9:22), pascho becomes virtually a technical term for Christ's appointed suffering — reflected in Spanish 'padecer,' French 'souffrir,' and German 'leiden.' It extends to believers sharing Christ's sufferings (Phil 1:29; 1 Pet 4:1) and to ordinary affliction like the tormented boy of Matt 17:15. SUFFERING PAIN

en: he-has-suffered, he-suffered, suffered | es: ha-padecido, padecer, padeció | fr: souffrir | de: leiden, leidet Matt 16:21; Matt 17:12; Matt 17:15; Matt 27:19; Mark 5:26

Πάταρα G3959 N-ANP (1×)

Patara, a port city in Lycia on the southern coast of Asia Minor

A maritime city of Lycia where Paul changed ships on his final journey to Jerusalem. Acts 21:1 mentions it as a port of call after Cos and Rhodes. Patara was known for its oracle of Apollo and served as a major port for grain ships sailing from Egypt to Rome. Luke's itinerary detail reflects ancient shipping patterns—coastal vessels hopped between ports while travelers waited for connections to their destinations.

(1×) Acts 21:1 lists 'Patara' (Πάταρα) as Paul's port of call. The multilingual evidence simply preserves the place name (English 'Patara', Spanish 'Pátara', French 'Patara'). This Lycian harbor provided the connection Paul needed for the final leg to Phoenicia and Jerusalem. The geographical precision in Acts reflects Luke's attention to travel logistics—apostolic mission depended on Roman roads and Mediterranean shipping lanes that made the ancient world navigable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Patara | es: Pátara | fr: Patara | de: Πάταρα Acts 21:1

πατάσσω G3960 V-ANA (10×)

Strike, smite — to deliver a blow with hand, weapon, or divine power; to hit or slay

The verb patasso (πατάσσω) means 'to strike' or 'to smite,' covering physical blows and divine judgment alike. Peter 'struck' the high priest's servant, cutting off his ear (Matt 26:51; Luke 22:49-50). Moses 'struck' the Egyptian who was beating a Hebrew (Acts 7:24). An angel 'struck' Peter's side to wake him in prison (Acts 12:7) and later 'struck' Herod with a fatal illness (Acts 12:23). Jesus quotes Zechariah 13:7 — 'I will strike the shepherd and the sheep will be scattered' (Matt 26:31) — applying divine smiting to his own passion. In Revelation, the verb describes eschatological judgment: power to 'strike the earth with plagues' (11:6) and to 'strike the nations' (19:15). Hebrew hikkah, Arabic daraba, Spanish 'herir/golpear,' and Korean 'chida' all render this single percussive sense.

to strike, smite (10×) To deliver a blow, whether with a weapon, hand, or by divine agency; to strike, smite, or hit. All ten occurrences are inflectional variants of one meaning: Peter's sword-blow (Matt 26:51; Luke 22:50), Moses striking the Egyptian (Acts 7:24), an angel striking Peter to wake him (Acts 12:7), an angel striking Herod with death (Acts 12:23), the Zechariah quotation about striking the shepherd (Matt 26:31; Mark 14:27), and eschatological smiting (Rev 11:6; 19:15). The agent ranges from human to angelic to divine, but the core percussive action is uniform, confirmed by Hebrew hikkah, Arabic daraba, Spanish 'herir,' Korean 'chida.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-will-strike, having-struck, he-might-strike | es: Heriré, golpeando, golpear | fr: frapper | de: schlagen, schlägt Matt 26:31; Matt 26:51; Mark 14:27; Luke 22:49; Luke 22:50

πατ-έω G3961 V-PNA (5×)

To tread, trample, walk on; to crush underfoot literally (grapes, enemies) or figuratively (desecrate).

A verb meaning to tread upon, trample, or walk over — conveying forceful footwork whether literal or symbolic. In Luke 10:19, Jesus grants authority to 'tread on serpents and scorpions,' evoking Psalm 91:13 and spiritual dominion over evil. Luke 21:24 prophesies that Jerusalem will be 'trampled by the Gentiles' — a desecration image. Revelation intensifies the trampling motif: the nations trample the holy city (Rev 11:2), and the great winepress of God's wrath is trodden (Rev 14:20; 19:15), recalling Isaiah 63:3. The Spanish 'pisar' and French 'marcher' both capture the basic foot-on-ground action, while the German 'treten' retains the forceful sense of pressing down.

(5×) To tread on, trample, or crush underfoot — whether literally or as a powerful metaphor for conquest, desecration, or divine judgment. In Luke 10:19, believers receive authority to 'tread on serpents and scorpions,' symbolizing victory over demonic powers. Luke 21:24 uses it for the Gentile desecration of Jerusalem — being 'trampled' connotes not just occupation but profanation. Revelation draws on the ancient winepress image (Isa 63:1–3): the nations trample the holy city for forty-two months (Rev 11:2), and the winepress of God's fury is trodden until blood flows (Rev 14:20; 19:15). The Spanish 'pisar' (to step on) and German 'treten' (to tread) both capture the forceful, crushing downward motion that gives this word its visceral power. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: being-trampled, they-will-trample, to-tread | es: fue-pisado, pisa, pisar | fr: marcher | de: treten, πατεῖν, πατουμένη Luke 10:19; Luke 21:24; Rev 11:2; Rev 14:20; Rev 19:15

πατήρ G3962 N-DMP (418×)

Father – biological parent, God the Father, or ancestral forefather; rarely 'parents' (both father and mother).

Pater is among the most theologically loaded words in the New Testament. It spans the intimate address of a child to a human father, the covenantal title 'God the Father' that Jesus uses over 100 times in John's Gospel, and the honorific reference to Abraham and the patriarchs as 'our fathers.' Nearly every occurrence falls into the first sense, where context alone distinguishes human fatherhood from divine Fatherhood. Korean glosses helpfully separate 'ancestor' (조상) from 'father' (아버지), and Hindi-Swahili evidence ('wazazi,' 'माता-पिता') flags the lone Hebrews 11:23 occurrence where the plural means 'parents.'

1. God as Father (divine title) (267×) Split from sense 74289. Criteria: God addressed or referred to as Father, especially in Jesus' prayers and Father-Son theology; Matt 6:9, John 17:1

en: Father | es: Padre | fr: père | de: Vater Matt 3:9; Matt 5:16; Matt 5:45; Matt 5:48; Matt 6:1

2. biological or adoptive father (146×) Split from sense 74289. Criteria: Human fathers in genealogies, narratives, and family contexts; 'the father of' someone; Matt 3:9, Luke 1:59

en: Father, father | es: Padre, a-padre, padre | fr: père | de: Vater Matt 2:22; Matt 4:21; Matt 4:22; Matt 8:21; Matt 10:21

3. ancestor or forefather (4×) An ancestor or forefather in a genealogical or covenantal lineage, as when Paul speaks of Abraham as 'our forefather' (Rom 4:1) or references Israel's patriarchal heritage (Rom 9:5; 11:28; 15:8). Korean 조상 ('ancestor') and Tagalog 'mababu' distinguish this sense lexically from ordinary fatherhood. Though only four occurrences, this sense carries heavy theological weight in discussions of covenant continuity. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS

en: fathers, forefather | es: antepasado, padres | fr: père | de: Vater Rom 4:1; Rom 9:5; Rom 11:28; Rom 15:8

4. parent (1×) Used in the plural to mean 'parents' – both father and mother together – as in Hebrews 11:23 where Moses' parents hid him. Multilingual evidence is decisive: Hindi 'माता-पिता' (mother-father), Korean '부모' (parents), and Swahili 'wazazi' (parents) all confirm the inclusive meaning. A single but important attestation showing pater's semantic flexibility. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS

en: parents | es: padres | fr: père | de: Vater Heb 11:23

Πάτμος G3963 N-DFS (1×)

Patmos, a small Aegean island where John received the Revelation

A rocky island in the Aegean Sea where the apostle John was exiled and received the visions recorded in Revelation. Revelation 1:9 identifies John as being on Patmos because of the word of God and testimony of Jesus—likely indicating Roman exile for Christian witness. The island became sacred geography for Christian tradition, the place where persecution's isolation became the setting for apocalyptic unveiling. Patmos shows how imperial punishment can become divine revelation.

(1×) Revelation 1:9 locates John on the island called 'Patmos' (Πάτμῳ). The translations preserve the island name (English 'Patmos', Spanish 'Pátmos', French 'Patmos'). John's exile to this barren rock aimed to silence his witness, but isolation became revelation's womb. The geography matters: removed from churches he pastored, John received visions for the universal church. Roman punishment positioned him for cosmic disclosure—exile as apocalyptic classroom. ISLAND COASTLAND en: Patmos | es: Pátmos | fr: Patmos | de: Patmos Rev 1:9

πατρ-άλοίας G3964 N-DMP (1×)

father-striker, one who strikes or kills his father, parricide

A compound noun denoting someone who strikes or murders his father—a parricide. First Timothy 1:9 lists it among lawless behaviors the law addresses: murderers, immoral persons, slave traders, liars, and father-strikers. The term marks violation of the fifth commandment's most extreme form—not mere dishonor but violence against the father who gave life. Ancient law codes treated parricide as uniquely heinous, and Paul's catalog places it among society's worst moral outrages.

(1×) First Timothy 1:9 includes 'father-strikers' (πατρολῴαις) in Paul's vice list. The translations (English 'father-strikers', Spanish 'parricidas', German 'Vaterschlaeger') identify those who assault fathers. The catalog's logic groups similar crimes: murderers and father-strikers (violence), immoral persons and homosexuals (sexual sin), slave traders (exploiting persons), liars and perjurers (false witness). Father-striking represents family violence's ultimate betrayal, striking at patriarchal order's foundation. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: for-father-strikers | es: parricidas | fr: πατρολῴαις | de: Vaterschlaeger 1Tim 1:9

πατρι-ά G3965 N-NFS (3×)

family, lineage, clan; descent traced through the father's line, extended household or kinship group

This noun denotes family or lineage, especially as reckoned through the father's line. Luke notes that Joseph went to Bethlehem because he was 'of the house and lineage' of David (Luke 2:4). Peter declares that in Abraham's seed, 'all the families of the earth' will be blessed (Acts 3:25). Paul speaks of the Father from whom 'every family' in heaven and earth is named (Eph 3:15). The term moves fluidly between immediate family, extended clan, and broad ethnic lineages, always carrying a sense of shared descent.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize family and lineage: English 'families/family/lineage', Spanish 'familia/familias', French 'famille', German 'Geschlecht/πατριαὶ/πατριᾶς' (family/clan). The lexicon notes 'lineage, descent, especially by the father's side' and meanings including clan and family. Luke 2:4 uses it for Joseph's Davidic lineage/family. Acts 3:25 quotes Genesis about all 'families' of earth being blessed. Eph 3:15 speaks of every 'family' in heaven and earth being named from the Father. The word encompasses nuclear family, extended clan, and broader lineages. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: families, family, lineage | es: familia, familias | fr: famille | de: Geschlecht, πατριαὶ, πατριᾶς Luke 2:4; Acts 3:25; Eph 3:15

πατρι-άρχης G3966 N-NMS (4×)

Patriarch; the founding father or chief ancestor of a family, tribe, or nation.

Composed of patria (family line) and arche (beginning, rule), this title designates the founding ancestors of Israel. In Acts 2:29, Peter calls David a 'patriarch,' elevating him alongside the ancestral fathers. Acts 7:8-9 applies it to Jacob's twelve sons — the patriarchs of Israel's tribes — noting their jealousy toward Joseph. Hebrews 7:4 uses it of Abraham in his encounter with Melchizedek, emphasizing Abraham's exalted status to heighten how remarkable it is that he paid tithes to a priestly figure outside his own line. Every language renders it with a recognizable cognate: Spanish patriarca, French patriarche, German Erzvaeter.

(4×) A patriarch — the founding father or chief progenitor of a family line, tribe, or nation, especially one of Israel's revered ancestors. The term carries both genealogical and spiritual authority. Acts 2:29 applies it to David, Acts 7:8-9 to the twelve sons of Jacob, and Hebrews 7:4 to Abraham. The cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish patriarca, French patriarche, German Erzvaeter) reflects the word's universal recognition as a title of ancestral honor and leadership. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS

en: patriarch, patriarchs | es: patriarca, patriarcas | fr: patriarche, patriarches | de: Erzvaeter, πατριάρχαι, πατριάρχας Acts 2:29; Acts 7:8; Acts 7:9; Heb 7:4

πατρῐκός G3967 Adj-GFP (1×)

of or from one's father; paternal, hereditary, ancestral

This adjective describes what belongs to or comes from one's father or ancestors. In its single New Testament occurrence (Gal 1:14), Paul refers to his zeal for the 'paternal traditions' (πατρικῶν παραδόσεων), meaning the ancestral teachings and customs he inherited from his Jewish forebears. The term emphasizes inheritance and lineage, contrasting divine revelation with human tradition.

(1×) Refers to what is inherited from one's father or ancestors, particularly traditions and customs passed down through generations. Paul's use in Galatians highlights his former devotion to ancestral Jewish traditions before his encounter with Christ, showing the cultural and religious heritage he once zealously defended. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: paternal | es: paternas | fr: πατρικῶν | de: vaeterlich Gal 1:14

πατρίς G3968 N-DFS (8×)

One's homeland, fatherland, or hometown; the place of origin or ancestral connection, used both of earthly towns and a heavenly country.

Patris (from pater, father) denotes one's native land or hometown — the place where your father's people are from. In the Synoptic Gospels, it appears almost exclusively in the proverb 'a prophet is not without honor except in his own patris,' referring to Jesus' rejection at Nazareth (Matt 13:54-57, Mark 6:1-4, Luke 4:23-24). John 4:44 echoes the same saying. But Hebrews 11:14 lifts the word to a transcendent register: the patriarchs were seeking a 'heavenly homeland,' transforming the earthy hometown into an eschatological destination. Spanish 'patria' preserves the etymological link to 'father' perfectly.

homeland, fatherland, hometown (8×) One's place of origin, native town, or ancestral homeland. In the Gospels, it refers specifically to Jesus' hometown of Nazareth, where the proverb 'a prophet has no honor in his own homeland' is applied to his rejection there (Matt 13:54-57, Mark 6:1-4, Luke 4:23-24, John 4:44). In Hebrews 11:14, the word shifts to a transcendent register: the patriarchs declare themselves strangers on earth, seeking a heavenly patris — their true fatherland. The Spanish 'patria' and French 'patrie' preserve the etymological connection to pater (father), while German 'Vaterland' renders it literally. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fatherland, homeland, hometown | es: patria | fr: patrie | de: Vaterland, πατρίδα, πατρίδι Matt 13:54; Matt 13:57; Mark 6:1; Mark 6:4; Luke 4:23

Πατρόβας G3969 N-AMS (1×)

Patrobas; a Christian greeted by Paul in Romans 16:14

A personal name of a Christian believer in Rome whom Paul greets in his letter. Patrobas appears only once in Scripture, listed among the saints Paul commends. The name is a shortened form of Patrobius, common in the Roman world and found in imperial household inscriptions. Nothing else is known about this individual beyond Paul's greeting.

(1×) The personal name of a Christian in Rome. Paul includes Patrobas in a list of greetings (Rom 16:14) alongside Hermas, Philologus, Julia, and others, suggesting he was part of a house church or Christian community in the capital. The brevity of mention reflects Paul's pattern of acknowledging many believers by name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Patrobas | es: a-Patróban | fr: Patrobas | de: Patrobas Rom 16:14 πατρο-παράδοτος G3970 Adj-GFS (1×)

handed down from one's fathers; inherited from ancestors

A compound adjective meaning 'received from one's forefathers' or 'ancestrally transmitted.' Peter uses it to describe the 'futile way of life inherited from your ancestors' (1 Pet 1:18), from which believers were ransomed not with perishable things but with Christ's precious blood. The term emphasizes both the antiquity and the inadequacy of pre-Christian religious and moral patterns passed down through generations.

(1×) Describes traditions, customs, or ways of life transmitted from previous generations. In 1 Peter, the term characterizes the empty religious observances and moral patterns inherited from pagan ancestors, which proved futile for salvation. The multilingual evidence (English 'handed-down-from-fathers,' Spanish 'heredada-de-padres') captures the generational transmission that the word emphasizes. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: handed-down-from-fathers | es: heredada-de-padres | fr: πατροπαραδότου | de: von-den-Vaetern-ueberliefert 1Pet 1:18

πατρῷος G3971 Adj-DMS (3×)

ancestral, paternal, inherited from one's fathers; belonging to or coming from one's forefathers

This adjective means 'of or from one's fathers,' describing what is inherited, traditional, or ancestral. Paul defends himself by citing his education 'according to the strict manner of our ancestral law' (Acts 22:3). He emphasizes serving God 'as my forefathers did' in his worship according to the Way (Acts 24:14). He assures Roman Jewish leaders he has done nothing against 'the people or the customs of our fathers' (Acts 28:17). In each case, Paul anchors his identity and practice in the heritage passed down through generations.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence stresses inherited/ancestral nature: English 'ancestral', Spanish 'de-los-padres' (of the fathers), French 'paternel', German preserves Greek forms πατρώοις/πατρώου/πατρώῳ. The lexicon defines it as 'of or from one's father, coming or inherited from him' with meanings including 'fatherland', 'patrimony', 'hereditary friend'. All three NT uses (Acts 22:3, 24:14, 28:17) are Paul defending his adherence to ancestral Jewish customs and law. The word emphasizes continuity with forefathers and inherited tradition. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: ancestral | es: de-los-padres | fr: paternel | de: πατρώοις, πατρώου, πατρώῳ Acts 22:3; Acts 24:14; Acts 28:17

Παῦλος G3972 N-NMS (158×)

Paul; the apostle to the Gentiles (also Sergius Paulus, the Roman proconsul)

Paulos is the Greco-Roman name of the apostle who dominates the second half of Acts and authored thirteen epistles. The name first appears at Acts 13:9, where Luke notes that Saul 'was also called Paul,' marking the transition from his Jewish identity to his mission among Gentiles. The only other bearer in the New Testament is Sergius Paulus, the proconsul of Cyprus (Acts 13:7). With 158 occurrences, Paul's name is one of the most frequent proper nouns in Scripture, transliterated with remarkable consistency: 'Pablo' (Spanish), 'Paul' (French/English), 'Paulus' (German/Latin).

of Paulos (158×) The proper name Paulos, referring primarily to the apostle Paul (formerly Saul of Tarsus), the chief missionary to the Gentile world and author of most New Testament epistles. Also used once for Sergius Paulus, the Roman proconsul of Cyprus (Acts 13:7). The 158 occurrences span Acts 13–28 and the epistolary salutations (Rom 1:1, 1 Cor 1:1, Gal 1:1). Translations uniformly transliterate — 'Pablo,' 'Paulo,' 'Paulus,' 'Павел' — preserving the Latin-origin name across all language families. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Paulos, with-Paulos | es: Paûlon, Paûlos, a-Paûlon | fr: Paul | de: Paulus Acts 13:7; Acts 13:9; Acts 13:13; Acts 13:16; Acts 13:43

παύω G3973 V-PIM-3S (15×)

To cease, stop, leave off (middle voice); in the active, to restrain or cause someone to stop.

A verb of cessation with a significant voice distinction, παύω in the middle voice means 'to stop oneself' from an activity — the dominant NT pattern. Luke uses it for the cessation of storms (Luke 8:24), the end of speaking (Luke 5:4), and the tireless continuation of apostolic preaching that 'did not cease' (Acts 5:42). Paul and his companions 'ceased' urging (Acts 21:14). The rare active voice in 1 Pet 3:10, quoting Psalm 34, urges the tongue to 'restrain itself' from evil — here the causative force is directed reflexively. Spanish 'cesa/cesaban' and German 'aufhören' consistently reflect the idea of coming to a halt.

1. cease, stop (intransitive) (14×) The middle-voice sense of ceasing, stopping, or leaving off an activity, where the subject discontinues their own action. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (14 occurrences) appears across varied contexts: the storm ceasing (Luke 8:24), Jesus finishing his teaching (Luke 5:4; 11:1), apostles who 'did not cease' proclaiming Christ (Acts 5:42; 6:13), and Paul's ceaseless prayers (Eph 1:16; Col 1:9). Spanish 'cesa/cesaban,' French 'cesser,' and German 'aufhören/hört auf' all converge on the intransitive notion of halting or desisting. CEASING AND STOPPING en: I-cease, I-ceased, ceases | es: cesa, cesaban, cesamos | fr: cesser | de: aufhoeren, hört-auf Luke 5:4; Luke 8:24; Luke 11:1; Acts 5:42; Acts 6:13

2. restrain, cause to cease (1×) The active, causative sense of restraining or making someone or something stop. Its sole NT appearance in 1 Pet 3:10, quoting Psalm 34:13 LXX, commands: 'let him restrain his tongue from evil' (παυσάτω τὴν γλῶσσαν). Here the imperative active voice casts the subject as agent who must actively curb the tongue — a transitive, causative action distinct from merely ceasing. Spanish 'detenga' ('let him restrain') captures this directive, controlling force that the more common middle-voice usage lacks. CEASING AND STOPPING en: let-him-restrain | es: detenga | fr: cesser | de: aufhoeren 1Pet 3:10

πάφιος, η, ον G3974 N-GFS (2×)

Paphos, a city in Cyprus famous for its temple of Aphrodite

Paphos was a significant city on the southwest coast of Cyprus, renowned in antiquity for its temple and worship of Aphrodite (Venus). Both New Testament references occur in Acts 13, describing Paul's first missionary journey. In verse 6, Paul and Barnabas travel through the whole island 'to Paphos.' In verse 13, they sail from Paphos to Perga. The city represents both a major administrative center (residence of the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus) and a stronghold of pagan worship—making it a strategic location for gospel proclamation.

(2×) Acts 13:6 and 13:13 both use the genitive case ('of Paphos' or 'from Paphos') marking the city as destination and departure point. The translations uniformly transliterate the proper name: Spanish 'Páphos,' French 'Paphos,' German 'Πάφου.' The narrative shows Paul confronting the sorcerer Bar-Jesus there and converting the proconsul—a dramatic encounter between gospel and magic in a city steeped in goddess-worship. Paphos functions both geographically and symbolically as a stronghold of Greco-Roman paganism yielding to apostolic witness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Paphos | es: Páphos | fr: Paphos | de: Πάφου Acts 13:6; Acts 13:13

παχύν-ω G3975 V-AIP-3S (2×)

to make fat, thicken; metaphorically to make dull or insensitive

This verb means to fatten or make thick. Passive forms mean 'to grow fat' or 'become thick.' Metaphorically, it describes making the mind or heart gross, dull, or insensitive—coarsened and unresponsive. Both New Testament uses are identical, quoting Isaiah 6:10 about Israel's hardness. Matthew 13:15 and Acts 28:27 both say 'the heart of this people has grown dull' or 'become fat'—describing spiritual insensitivity and unresponsiveness to God's word. The image is of a heart so fattened or thickened that it cannot perceive or respond.

(2×) Both uses are aorist passive indicative ('has become dull/grown fat') in the Isaiah quotation about judicial hardening. The translations render the metaphorical dulling: English 'has-become-dull, has-grown-dull,' Spanish 'Se-ha-engrosado, se-ha-engrosado' (has grown thick), French 'épaissir.' The image draws on physical fattening—excess that makes sluggish and insensitive—and applies it to spiritual perception. The heart fattened by prosperity, pride, or resistance becomes too gross to perceive divine truth, fulfilling God's word about judicial hardening. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: has-become-dull, has-grown-dull | es: Se-ha-engrosado, se-ha-engrosado | fr: épaissir | de: ἐπαχύνθη Matt 13:15; Acts 28:27

πέδη G3976 N-AFP (3×)

fetter, shackle; a chain or restraint fastened to the feet or ankles to restrict movement

This noun denotes fetters or shackles, restraints bound to the feet or legs. Mark describes the Gerasene demoniac who had often been bound with 'shackles' and chains, which he broke apart (Mark 5:4, twice), and Luke adds that he was kept under guard, bound with chains and 'shackles' (Luke 8:29). The word originally referred to any restraint for the feet—whether for prisoners or even ornamental anklets—but in these Gospel accounts, it vividly depicts instruments of confinement broken by supernatural strength.

(3×) Multilingual glosses consistently indicate leg restraints: English 'shackles/with-shackles', Spanish 'con-grillos/grillos', French 'entrave', German 'Fessel/πέδας'. The lexicon defines πέδη as 'fetter' (plural: shackles), notes the root connection to feet (πέζα), and mentions uses for horses, prisoners, and even anklets/bangles. All three NT occurrences (Mark 5:4 twice, Luke 8:29) describe the demoniac bound with 'shackles' which he repeatedly broke. The word emphasizes restraint applied to the feet/legs. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: shackles, with-shackles | es: con-grillos, grillos | fr: entrave | de: Fessel, πέδαις Mark 5:4; Luke 8:29

πεδῖεινός G3977 Adj-GMS (1×)

flat, level; of or belonging to a plain

This adjective describes topography that is flat or level rather than mountainous. Luke uses it to identify the 'level place' where Jesus stood to deliver what is often called the Sermon on the Plain (Luke 6:17). The term contrasts with mountainous terrain, indicating an accessible, flat area where crowds could gather. Some see this as the same event as Matthew's Sermon on the Mount, perhaps on a level spot on a hillside.

(1×) Refers to flat or level ground, as opposed to mountainous terrain. Luke's description of Jesus standing on a 'level place' suggests an accessible location where the multitudes could gather to hear his teaching. The Greek term emphasizes the flatness of the geography, providing a concrete setting for Jesus' discourse. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: level | es: llano | fr: plaine | de: πεδινοῦ Luke 6:17

πεζ-εύω G3978 V-PNA (1×)

to travel on foot, to go by land (as opposed to by sea)

This verb means to journey on foot or travel by land, especially in contrast to sailing. In Acts 20:13, Paul's companions sailed ahead to Assos while Paul himself chose to 'go by land' (πεζεύειν), perhaps for solitude, ministry opportunities along the way, or simply to avoid the longer sea route. Classical usage often contrasted land travel with sea voyages, and the verb could denote marching or simply walking.

(1×) To travel by land on foot, particularly as contrasted with sailing by sea. Paul's decision to go by land to Assos while his companions sailed reflects a deliberate choice of route. The multilingual glosses ('to-go-by-land,' 'de-ir-a-pie,' 'aller-à-pied') emphasize both the pedestrian nature and the land-versus-sea contrast inherent in the term. ON FOOT INFANTRY en: to-go-by-land | es: de-ir-a-pie | fr: aller-à-pied | de: πεζεύειν Acts 20:13

πεζός G3979 Adv (2×)

on foot, by land; as infantry or land-force (opposed to mounted or by sea)

This adverb means 'on foot' or 'by land'—traveling by walking rather than riding or sailing. Classical usage distinguishes foot-soldiers from cavalry, or land travel from sea voyage. Both New Testament uses describe crowds following Jesus on foot around the Sea of Galilee. Matthew 14:13 and Mark 6:33 describe people going 'on foot' from the towns to where Jesus went by boat. The detail emphasizes the crowds' eagerness—they took the longer, harder land route rather than waiting, arriving even before Jesus reached the opposite shore.

(2×) Matthew 14:13 and Mark 6:33 both use the adverb to describe how crowds traveled around the lake to meet Jesus. The translations consistently render 'on foot': Spanish 'a-pie,' French 'à-pied,' German 'zu-Fuss.' The context contrasts Jesus' withdrawal by boat with the crowds' pursuit on foot around the shoreline—a longer, more arduous journey that demonstrates their hunger for his teaching and healing. The detail captures both the geography of Galilee and the determination of those seeking Jesus. ON FOOT INFANTRY

en: on-foot | es: a-pie | fr: à-pied | de: zu-Fuss, πεζῇ Matt 14:13; Mark 6:33

πειθαρχ-έω G3980 V-PNA (4×)

To obey one in authority, submit to a ruler or authoritative command; comply with direction.

Built from peitho (persuade, trust) and arche (authority, rule), this verb denotes obedience directed specifically toward those in positions of authority — whether divine or civil. The dramatic declaration in Acts 5:29, 'We must obey God rather than men,' uses this word to set divine authority above human, making it a landmark text on conscience and civil disobedience. Acts 5:32 links obedience to receiving the Holy Spirit. Acts 27:21 applies it practically — the sailors should have 'obeyed' Paul's nautical advice. Titus 3:1 calls believers to be ready to obey rulers and authorities.

(4×) To obey or submit to those in authority — a structured, authority-directed obedience rather than mere compliance. Spanish obedecer, German gehorchen, and French obéir all capture this official dimension. Acts 5:29 establishes the hierarchy: obeying God takes precedence over human rulers. Acts 5:32 ties obedience to God's gift of the Spirit, Acts 27:21 applies it to heeding Paul's practical counsel aboard ship, and Titus 3:1 extends it to civic submission toward governing authorities. OBEY HEARKEN en: having-obeyed, obeying, to-obey | es: Obedecer, habiéndome-obedecido, obedecer | fr: obéir, πειθαρχεῖν | de: gehorchen, Πειθαρχεῖν, πειθαρχήσαντάς Acts 5:29; Acts 5:32; Acts 27:21; Titus 3:1

πειθός G3981 Adj-DMP (1×)

persuasive, convincing (in speech or argument)

An adjective describing speech or argument that is convincing or rhetorically persuasive. Paul uses it negatively in 1 Corinthians 2:4, stating his message did not come with 'persuasive words of wisdom' but with demonstration of the Spirit's power. The term highlights human rhetorical skill as opposed to divine power. Classical rhetoric valued persuasive speech, but Paul deliberately contrasts such eloquence with Spirit-empowered proclamation.

(1×) Describes speech that is rhetorically persuasive or convincing through human skill. Paul's denial that his preaching relied on 'persuasive words' underscores his rejection of sophisticated oratory in favor of Spirit-empowered simplicity. The cross-lingual evidence ('persuasive,' 'persuasivas,' 'persuasif') confirms the focus on convincing speech, which Paul subordinates to divine demonstration. PERSUASION AND TRUST

en: persuasive | es: persuasivas | fr: persuasif | de: ueberzeugend 1Cor 2:4

πείθω G3982 V-RIA-1S (54×)

To persuade, convince, or win over; in the middle/passive, to be persuaded, trust or have confidence in, or obey.

Few Greek verbs undergo as dramatic a shift in meaning between active and middle/passive voices as peitho. In the active, it means to persuade or convince someone through argument or entreaty — Herod's priests persuading the crowd to ask for Barabbas (Matt 27:20), or Paul persuading Jews and Greeks in the synagogue (Acts 18:4). In the perfect tense, however, the word settles into a state of confident trust: Paul declares 'I am persuaded' (pepeismai) that nothing can separate us from God's love (Rom 8:38). Spanish captures this distinction neatly, moving from 'persuadir' for the active effort to 'confiar' (to trust) for the settled conviction. Most surprisingly, the middle-passive extends all the way to 'obey' — Hebrews 13:17 urges believers to 'obey your leaders,' where German reaches for 'gehorchen' rather than 'uberzeugen,' revealing just how far the semantic arc bends from persuasion to compliance.

1. be persuaded or convinced (19×) To be persuaded, won over, or come to accept something as true — the passive/middle sense in which someone receives and yields to persuasion. The crowd was 'persuaded' that John was a prophet (Luke 20:6); Gamaliel warns the Sanhedrin to leave the apostles alone, and they were 'persuaded' by him (Acts 5:40). Spanish uses 'persuadidos' and 'eran persuadidos,' while French stays close with 'persuader.' The sense emphasizes the result in the hearer rather than the effort of the speaker — a settled conviction that something is so. PERSUASION AND TRUST
en: I-am-persuaded, be-persuaded, being-persuaded | es: Estamos-persuadidos, confiamos, eran-persuadidos | fr: persuader | de: ueberzeugen, überzeugt Luke 16:31; Luke 20:6; Acts 5:36; Acts 5:37; Acts 5:40

2. trust or have confidence in (17×) To trust, have confidence in, or rely upon someone or something, typically expressed through the Greek perfect tense (pepoitha, pepeismai) denoting a settled state of reliance rather than an act of persuasion. Paul writes 'I am confident (pepoithōs) of this very thing' (Phil 1:6); Jesus rebukes those who 'trusted in themselves that they were righteous' (Luke 18:9). Spanish distinguishes this clearly with 'confiando' and 'confiaba' (trusting, trusted), while German uses 'uberzeugt' (convinced) — but the force is not momentary persuasion but ongoing confidence. The perfect aspect is the grammatical fingerprint of this sense. PERSUASION AND TRUST
en: I-trust, am-confident, having-confidence | es: Confiando, confiaba, confiando | fr: persuader | de: ueberzeugen, überzeugt Matt 27:43; Mark 10:24; Luke 11:22; Luke 18:9; Rom 2:19

3. persuade or convince someone (13×) To actively persuade, convince, or win over another person through argument, reasoning, or appeal. This is the transitive Qal-like active: Paul and Barnabas 'persuading' converts to continue in grace (Acts 13:43); the chief priests 'persuaded' the multitudes to ask for Barabbas (Matt 27:20); Jewish opponents from Antioch 'persuaded' the crowds against Paul (Acts 14:19). Spanish marks this with 'persuadiendo' and 'persuadieron,' and German with 'uberzeugen' in its active deployment. The agency and effort of the speaker are in focus — this is rhetoric as action. PERSUASION AND TRUST
en: do-I-persuade, having-persuaded, persuaded | es: persuades, persuadiendo, persuadieron | fr: persuader | de: ueberzeugen, überzeugt Matt 27:20; Matt 28:14; Acts 12:20; Acts 13:43; Acts 14:19

4. obey or comply with (5×) To obey, comply with, or yield to authority — the furthest extension of the middle/passive, where being persuaded shades into submission. Hebrews 13:17 commands 'Obey (peithesthe) your leaders and submit'; James 3:3 uses the cognate of horses obeying the bit; Galatians 5:7 asks 'who hindered you from obeying the truth?' Spanish shifts decisively from 'persuadir' to 'obedecer' (to obey), and German from 'uberzeugen' to 'gehorchen' (to obey), confirming that the translations recognize a distinct sense. The pathway from persuasion to obedience is: I was convinced, therefore I comply. PERSUASION AND TRUST
en: Obey, obeying, to-obey | es: Obedeced, obedecer, que-obedecen | fr: persuader | de: ueberzeugen Rom 2:8; Gal 3:1; Gal 5:7; Heb 13:17; Jas 3:3

πειν-άω G3983 V-ASA-3S (23×)

To be hungry; to experience physical hunger or crave something deeply, used figuratively of spiritual longing.

A verb describing the bodily sensation of needing food, used across the Gospels for Jesus' own hunger after fasting forty days (Matt 4:2) and for the disciples plucking grain on the Sabbath (Matt 12:1). Its most memorable deployment is figurative: 'Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness' (Matt 5:6), where physical craving becomes a metaphor for desperate spiritual longing. Spanish 'hambriento' and French 'avoir faim' both capture the raw visceral quality of the word, while German 'hungern' preserves the same dual literal-figurative range found in the Greek.

to be hungry (23×) To experience hunger or lack of food, from literal deprivation — Jesus fasting in the wilderness (Matt 4:2), disciples plucking grain (Matt 12:1) — to figurative spiritual craving in the Beatitude (Matt 5:6). Multilingual glosses use the same root for both registers, confirming a single sense spanning physical and metaphorical hunger. HUNGER AND FAMINE
en: I-was-hungry, he-was-hungry, hungering | es: a-hambrientos, hambriento, que-tienen-hambre | fr: avoir-faim | de: hungern, hungert Matt 4:2; Matt 5:6; Matt 12:1; Matt 12:3; Matt 21:18

πεῖρα G3984 N-AFS (2×)

trial, attempt, experience; proof by testing

This noun denotes trial, attempt, or experience gained through testing. Classical usage ranges from experimental attempts to experiential knowledge acquired through trials. The phrase 'to have experience of' something means to have tested or tried it. Both New Testament uses appear in Hebrews 11, the faith chapter. Verse 29 describes Israel crossing the Red Sea 'by faith,' while Egyptians attempting it 'were drowned'—literally 'receiving trial' or 'making the attempt.' Verse 36 describes the faithful receiving 'trial' or 'experience' of mockings and scourgings. The word emphasizes learning through testing or attempting.

(2×) Hebrews 11:29 uses an accusative ('trial, attempt') for the Egyptians' failed attempt to cross the Red Sea, while 11:36 uses an accusative ('trial') for the sufferings experienced by the faithful. The translations render it as 'trial' or 'experience': Spanish 'intento, prueba,' French 'expérience,' German 'Erfahrung.' The first use emphasizes attempting something that proves fatal; the second emphasizes undergoing suffering as a form of testing. Both involve experiential knowledge gained through undergoing trial—whether failed attempt or endured affliction. TESTING AND PROVING en: trial | es: intento, prueba | fr: expérience | de: Erfahrung Heb 11:29; Heb 11:36

πειράζω G3985 V-ANP (39×)

To test, tempt, or attempt; to put to the proof, entice toward sin, or endeavor to do something

A verb whose three senses trace a revealing arc across the New Testament. In one use, Pharisees 'test' Jesus to expose him (Matt 16:1; 22:18) – the verb carries a probing, even hostile curiosity. In another, Satan 'tempts' Jesus in the wilderness (Matt 4:1) – the same verb now implies moral enticement toward evil. Paul's simple 'they attempted to go into Bithynia' (Acts 16:7) strips away all moral overtones and leaves bare effort. French 'tenter' covers all three naturally; Spanish distinguishes 'probar' (test) from 'tentar' (tempt), a split that mirrors the Greek's own semantic range. German 'versuchen' likewise spans testing and tempting, requiring context for disambiguation.

1. test, prove, examine (19×) Testing or proving: putting someone or something to the proof to assess quality, faithfulness, or genuineness. God tests Abraham (cf. Heb 11:17), and religious opponents test Jesus with trick questions (Matt 16:1; 19:3; 22:35). Spanish 'probar' and 'poner a prueba' capture the evaluative dimension. The passive 'being tested' (Heb 2:18; 4:15) affirms that Jesus endured the full range of human testing – the word here carries dignity, not blame. TESTING AND TEMPTATION
en: are-you-testing, being-tested, do-you-test | es: probad, probando, probar | fr: tenter | de: versuchen, versucht Matt 16:1; Matt 19:3; Matt 22:18; Matt 22:35; Mark 8:11

2. tempt, entice to sin (17×) Tempting or enticing toward sin: soliciting someone to act against God's will, with Satan or evil desire as the driving force. The wilderness temptation (Matt 4:1, 3; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2) is paradigmatic. Paul warns that Satan tempts through lack of self-control (1 Cor 7:5), and James 1:13-14 carefully distinguishes divine testing from sinful enticement. Spanish 'tentar' and French 'tenter' both carry the moral freight; German 'versuchen' requires the narrative context to distinguish this from neutral testing. TESTING AND TEMPTATION
en: I-am-tempted, be-tempted, being-tempted | es: es-tentado, fueron-tentados, os-tentó | fr: tenter | de: versuchen, versucht Matt 4:1; Matt 4:3; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2; 1Cor 7:5

3. attempt, try, endeavor (3×) Attempting or endeavoring: making an effort to accomplish something, without connotation of moral enticement or quality assessment. Saul attempted to join the disciples (Acts 9:26), the Spirit prevented Paul's company from going to Bithynia (Acts 16:7), and Tertullus accused Paul of attempting to profane the temple (Acts 24:6). Spanish 'intentar' and the narrative framing clearly separate this from the two weightier senses. TESTING AND TEMPTATION

en: attempted, he-was-attempting, they-were-trying | es: intentaba, intentaban, intentó | fr: tenter | de: versucht Acts 9:26; Acts 16:7; Acts 24:6

πειρ-ασμός G3986 N-DMS (21×)

Trial, testing, temptation; a proving experience that tests faith, endurance, or moral resolve.

Built on the verb peirazo ('to test, try'), this noun covers the full spectrum from divinely permitted trials that strengthen faith to seductive enticements that threaten to destroy it. Jesus teaches his disciples to pray for deliverance from it (Matt 6:13), then warns them to watch and pray lest they enter into it at Gethsemane (Matt 26:41). Luke notes that after the wilderness temptation the devil departed 'until an opportune time' (Luke 4:13), framing peirasmos as a recurring, strategic assault. The multilingual pattern is telling: Spanish distinguishes 'prueba' (trial) from 'tentacion', French uses 'tentation', and German 'Versuchung' — yet the Greek holds both dimensions in a single word.

trial, test of character (21×) A trial, test, or temptation that proves one's character and faith. The term spans the full range from externally imposed adversity (Luke 8:13, where shallow-rooted believers fall away 'in time of testing') to moral enticement (Matt 6:13, 'lead us not into temptation'). Jesus' Gethsemane warning (Matt 26:41; Mark 14:38) fuses both dimensions. Spanish splits the concept into 'prueba' and 'tentacion', while German 'Versuchung' and French 'tentation' each lean toward the seduction side — yet the Greek holds testing and tempting together. TESTING AND PROVING en: of-testing, temptation, testing | es: de-prueba, en-prueba, en-pruebas | fr: tentation | de: Versuchung Matt 6:13; Matt 26:41; Mark 14:38; Luke 4:13; Luke 8:13

πειράω G3987 V-IIM/P-3P (1×)

to try, attempt, endeavor to do something

This verb means to attempt, try, or make an effort to accomplish something. In Acts 26:21, Paul recounts how Jews 'attempted' (ἐπειρῶντο) to kill him in the temple. The term indicates purposeful effort or endeavor, often in contexts of testing or trying to achieve a goal. Classical Greek used it for attempts, trials, and experiments, conveying sustained effort toward an objective.

(1×) To make an attempt or try to accomplish something, often with sustained effort. Paul's account describes how his opponents in the temple tried to kill him, indicating deliberate, purposeful action. The multilingual glosses ('were-attempting,' 'intentaban,' 'essayer') capture the ongoing, effortful nature of the attempt, highlighting the hostile intent of Paul's adversaries. TESTING AND TEMPTATION

en: were-attempting | es: intentaban | fr: essayer | de: ἐπειρῶντο Acts 26:21

πεισμ-ονή G3988 N-NFS (1×)

persuasion; the act or power of convincing

A noun denoting persuasion, the act of convincing or being convinced. Paul uses it in Galatians 5:8 to say that the persuasion turning the Galatians away from freedom does not come from God who called them. The term can mean the process of persuasion, the content of what is persuasive, or the state of being persuaded. Here it likely refers to the false teaching convincing them to adopt legalistic practices.

(1×) The act or process of persuading, or the persuasive influence itself. In Galatians, Paul identifies a persuasion that led believers astray from gospel freedom, attributing it to human rather than divine origin. The term emphasizes the power of influence and conviction, which Paul warns can mislead when it does not come from God. PERSUASION AND TRUST

en: persuasion | es: persuasión | fr: πεισμονὴ | de: Ueberredung Gal 5:8

πέλᾰγ-ος G3989 N-DNS (2×)

the sea, especially the open sea or high sea (as opposed to shore or harbor)

This noun denotes the sea, particularly the open sea or high sea far from land. Classical usage distinguishes it from coastal waters, using it for the deep ocean or vast expanses of water. Metaphorically it can describe any vast quantity. Matthew 18:6 speaks of drowning 'in the depth of the sea'—the open ocean where there is no hope of rescue. Acts 27:5 describes Paul's ship sailing across 'the open sea' of Cilicia and Pamphylia. The word evokes the vastness, danger, and mystery of deep waters.

(2×) Matthew 18:6 uses the dative ('in the depth/open-sea') for the place of drowning in Jesus' stark warning, while Acts 27:5 uses the accusative or dative ('the open-sea') for the waters crossed during Paul's voyage. The translations emphasize deep or open waters: English 'depth, open-sea,' Spanish 'mar-abierto, profundo,' French 'haute-mer,' German 'πέλαγος, πελάγει.' Both uses connote the dangerous vastness of deep water—whether as place of judgment or hazardous voyage through waters far from shore. SEA LARGE WATER

en: depth, open-sea | es: mar-abierto, profundo | fr: haute-mer | de: πέλαγος, πελάγει Matt 18:6; Acts 27:5

πελεκ-ίζω G3990 V-RPM/P-GMP (1×)

to behead, to execute by decapitation with an axe

This verb means to behead or execute by cutting off the head with an axe (pelekys). In Revelation 20:4, John sees the souls of those who 'had been beheaded' for their testimony about Jesus and the word of God. The term specifically denotes execution by axe, a method used in Roman capital punishment. It highlights the martyrdom and persecution faced by early Christians who refused to compromise their faith.

(1×) To execute by beheading, specifically with an axe. John's vision in Revelation honors those martyred for their witness to Christ, whose beheading exemplifies ultimate faithfulness unto death. The cross-lingual evidence ('having-been-beheaded,' 'decapitados,' 'Enthauptete') uniformly emphasizes the violent method of execution, underscoring the reality of persecution and the reward of reigning with Christ. KILLING AND REMOVING en: having-been-beheaded | es: decapitados | fr: Enthauptete | de: Enthauptete Rev 20:4

πέμπτος G3991 Adj-NMS (4×)

Fifth; the ordinal number designating the fifth position in a sequence.

A straightforward ordinal adjective from pente (five), used exclusively in Revelation within the New Testament. It marks the fifth seal (Rev 6:9), where martyred souls cry out from beneath the altar; the fifth trumpet/angel (Rev 9:1), unleashing the terrifying locust plague from the abyss; the fifth bowl of wrath (Rev 16:10), poured on the throne of the beast; and the fifth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem, identified as sardonyx (Rev 21:20). The translations are uniformly literal: Spanish quinto, French cinquieme, German fuenfte.

(4×) The ordinal number fifth, designating the fifth item in a sequence. Every translation renders it with the standard ordinal (Spanish quinto, French cinquieme, German fuenfte). In Revelation, it structures the numbered series of divine judgments: the fifth seal reveals martyrs' souls (Rev 6:9), the fifth trumpet opens the abyss (Rev 9:1), the fifth bowl darkens the beast's kingdom (Rev 16:10), and the fifth foundation stone adorns the heavenly city (Rev 21:20). FIFTH ORDINAL FRACTION

en: fifth | es: quinto, quinto, | fr: cinquième | de: fuenfte Rev 6:9; Rev 9:1; Rev 16:10; Rev 21:20

πέμπω G3992 V-ASA-1S (79×)

To send, dispatch — to commission or direct a person or thing toward a destination or purpose.

One of the New Testament's key 'sending' verbs (alongside apostellō), pempō emphasizes the act of dispatching rather than the authority behind it, though both nuances overlap considerably. Jesus uses it when describing the Father's sending of the Son (John 1:33), and Paul uses it for sending co-workers to churches. The passive forms — 'being sent, having been sent' — highlight the commissioned status of the messenger. Spanish 'envió/enviados' and German 'senden/sendet' preserve this active-passive distinction cleanly.

1. send, dispatch (active) (76×) Active sending or dispatching: to send a person, message, or thing to a destination for a specific purpose. Covers the overwhelming majority (76 of 79 occurrences), including Jesus' parables of sent servants (Luke 20:11-12), the sending of the Spirit (John 1:33), and requests to send help (Luke 16:24). Spanish 'que envió,' French 'envoyer,' and German 'senden' all render this with standard dispatch vocabulary. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: having-sent | es: -que-envió, que-envió | fr: envoyer | de: senden Mark 5:12; Luke 16:24; Luke 20:11; Luke 20:12; John 1:33

2. be sent, be dispatched (passive) (3×) Passive commissioning: to be sent or dispatched, emphasizing the agent's role as one under authority rather than acting independently. Found in Luke 4:26 (Elijah 'was sent' to the widow of Zarephath), Luke 7:10 (those 'having been sent' return to find the servant healed), and 1 Peter 2:14 (governors 'being sent' by the emperor). Spanish 'fue enviado/enviados' and German 'sendet' mark the passive voice, underscoring the messenger's commissioned status. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: being-sent, having-been-sent, was-sent | es: enviados, fue-enviado | fr: envoyer | de: senden, sendet Luke 4:26; Luke 7:10; 1Pet 2:14

πένης G3993 N-DMP (1×)

poor, one who labors for a living; a person of modest means

A noun (and adjective) describing someone who is poor but works for their living, as opposed to a beggar or someone wealthy. Classical Greek distinguished the penes (one who works hard and lives frugally) from the ptochos (destitute beggar). In 2 Corinthians 9:9, Paul quotes Psalm 112:9 about God's righteousness enduring and provision for 'the poor.' The term emphasizes honest labor and modest means rather than abject poverty.

(1×) A poor person who works for their living, distinguished from the destitute or wealthy. Paul's citation of the psalm highlights God's care for those of modest means, who labor faithfully. The multilingual glosses ('poor,' 'pobres,' 'pauvre,' 'arm') consistently emphasize economic lack, though the Greek term traditionally implies industrious poverty rather than helpless destitution. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: poor | es: pobres | fr: pauvre | de: arm 2Cor 9:9

πενθερ-ά G3994 N-AFS (6×)

Mother-in-law; a wife's or husband's mother.

Penthera is the standard Greek kinship term for 'mother-in-law,' the feminine counterpart of pentheros ('father-in-law'). Its NT appearances cluster around two memorable scenes: Jesus healing Peter's mother-in-law of a fever (Matt 8:14; Mark 1:30; Luke 4:38), and Jesus' warning that his coming will set family members against one another — 'mother-in-law against daughter-in-law' (Matt 10:35; Luke 12:53). The translations are remarkably uniform across languages: Spanish 'suegra,' French 'belle-mere,' German 'Schwiegermutter.'

(6×) Mother-in-law — the mother of one's spouse. The multilingual glosses converge precisely: Spanish 'suegra,' French 'belle-mere,' German 'Schwiegermutter' each denote this specific kinship relation. In the Gospels, the word appears in two distinct settings: the healing of Simon Peter's mother-in-law (Matt 8:14; Mark 1:30; Luke 4:38), which demonstrates Jesus' compassion in a domestic setting, and the prophetic household-division sayings (Matt 10:35; Luke 12:53), where the mother-in-law/daughter-in-law tension symbolizes the cost of discipleship fracturing even extended family bonds. MOTHER-IN-LAW KINSHIP en: mother-in-law | es: suegra | fr: belle-mère | de: Schwiegermutter, πενθεράν, πενθερὰ Matt 8:14; Matt 10:35; Mark 1:30; Luke 4:38; Luke 12:53

πενθερός G3995 N-NMS (1×)

father-in-law; a male in-law relation

This noun means father-in-law, the father of one's spouse. In John 18:13, Caiaphas is identified as the father-in-law of Annas, clarifying the family relationship between these two high-priestly figures. Classical usage extended the term more broadly to relatives by marriage, including brothers-in-law or sons-in-law, but the New Testament usage is specifically for the father of one's spouse.

(1×) The father of one's spouse; a father-in-law. John's identification of Caiaphas as Annas's father-in-law explains the family dynamics in the high-priestly household during Jesus' trial. The kinship term appears across languages ('father-in-law,' 'suegro,' 'beau-père,' 'Schwiegervater') with precise consistency, highlighting the familial connection between two pivotal figures in the passion narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: father-in-law | es: suegro | fr: beau-père | de: Schwiegervater John 18:13

πενθ-έω G3996 V-AIA-2P (10×)

Mourn, grieve, lament — to express deep sorrow over death, sin, or catastrophic loss

The verb pentheo (πενθέω) denotes the outward expression of deep grief and lamentation. In the Beatitudes, Jesus blesses 'those who mourn' with the promise of comfort (Matt 5:4). The disciples 'mourned and wept' after the crucifixion (Mark 16:10), and Jesus's followers do not fast while the bridegroom is present, but 'will mourn' when he is taken away (Matt 9:15). Paul rebukes the Corinthians for failing to 'mourn' over a member's sin (1 Cor 5:2), and James exhorts, 'Mourn and weep' in repentance (Jas 4:9). In Revelation, merchants 'mourn' over fallen Babylon's commercial ruin (18:11,15,19). The verb thus spans mourning the dead, grieving over sin, and lamenting catastrophic loss. Spanish 'llorar/lamentar,' Korean 'seulpohada,' and Arabic 'nahaba' consistently render this affective range.

mourn, grieve, lament (10×) To express deep grief, sorrow, or lamentation, whether over death, sin, or catastrophic loss. Covers mourning in the context of bereavement (Mark 16:10, the disciples mourning Jesus; Matt 9:15, mourning the bridegroom's absence), spiritual sorrow over sin (1 Cor 5:2, failure to mourn congregational immorality; Jas 4:9, mourn and weep in repentance), eschatological comfort for those who grieve (Matt 5:4, blessed are those who mourn), and commercial lamentation over Babylon's fall (Rev 18:11,15,19). Often paired with klaio ('weep') to intensify the expression of grief. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: I-might-mourn, mourn, mourning | es: lamentad, lamentando, lamentarse | fr: se-lamenter, être-en-deuil | de: trauern, trauert Matt 5:4; Matt 9:15; Mark 16:10; Luke 6:25; 1Cor 5:2

πένθος G3997 N-NNS (5×)

Mourning, grief, sorrow; deep lamentation especially over death or catastrophic loss.

A noun denoting deep grief, mourning, or sorrow — the heavy, public expression of lamentation over loss. In James 4:9, it summons frivolous believers to sobering repentance: 'Let your laughter be turned to mourning.' The three Revelation passages concentrate its force on the fall of Babylon, who boasted 'I shall never see mourning' (Rev 18:7) only to be struck with death and πένθος in a single day (18:8). Revelation 21:4 offers the ultimate reversal: God will wipe every tear away, and 'mourning shall be no more.' The Spanish 'luto' (mourning) and German 'Trauer' (grief) both emphasize the solemn, public weight of bereavement.

(5×) Mourning, grief, or deep sorrow — particularly the heavy lamentation associated with death, disaster, or irreversible loss. The word carries strong overtones of public mourning ritual. James 4:9 uses it as a call to repentance, demanding that self-satisfied laughter give way to mourning and weeping. In Revelation 18, πένθος becomes the ironic fate of Babylon, who declared herself queen beyond grief (18:7) yet received mourning, famine, and fire in one day (18:8). The theological climax comes in Rev 21:4, where πένθος is named among the old-order sorrows God will permanently abolish. The French 'deuil' (mourning for the dead) and Spanish 'luto' (formal mourning, often with black garments) both capture the ritualized, public dimension of this grief. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: mourning | es: llanto, luto, luto, | fr: deuil | de: Trauer Jas 4:9; Rev 18:7; Rev 18:8; Rev 21:4

πενιχρ-ός G3998 Adj-AFS (1×)

poor, needy; lacking resources or means

An adjective meaning poor or needy, emphasizing economic poverty and lack of resources. Luke uses it to describe the poor widow who put two small coins into the temple treasury (Luke 21:2). The term is poetic and somewhat rare in classical prose, appearing in epic and later literature. It underscores the widow's genuine poverty, making her sacrificial giving all the more remarkable in Jesus' commendation.

(1×) Describes someone who is poor or lacking material resources. Luke's account highlights the widow's poverty to contrast with the large gifts of the wealthy, emphasizing the sacrificial nature of her offering. The multilingual evidence ('poor,' 'pobre,' 'pauvre') consistently captures economic deprivation, which Jesus values not by amount but by proportion and heart. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: poor | es: pobre | fr: pauvre | de: πενιχρὰν Luke 21:2

πεντάκῐς G3999 Adv (1×)

five times; on five occasions

An adverb meaning five times, indicating the frequency of an action. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 11:24 to recount his sufferings: 'Five times I received from the Jews forty lashes minus one.' The term simply quantifies the repeated occasions of this particular punishment. It underscores the severity and frequency of Paul's persecution in his apostolic ministry.

(1×) An adverb denoting the frequency 'five times.' Paul's catalog of sufferings includes receiving the Jewish punishment of thirty-nine lashes on five separate occasions, highlighting the repeated nature of his persecution. The cross-lingual glosses ('five-times,' 'cinco-veces,' 'cinq-fois,' 'fuenfmal') uniformly express numerical frequency, emphasizing the cumulative toll of Paul's afflictions for the gospel. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: five-times | es: cinco-veces | fr: cinq-fois | de: fuenfmal 2Cor 11:24

πεντᾰκισ-χίλιοι G4000 Adj-NMP (6×)

Five thousand; a cardinal number used in the NT for the crowd fed by Jesus.

Pentakischilioi means simply 'five thousand,' yet it has become one of the most iconic numbers in all of Scripture. Every occurrence connects to the miraculous feeding of the multitude — the only miracle (besides the resurrection) recorded in all four Gospels. Matthew 14:21 and Mark 6:44 report the original count; Matthew 16:9 and Mark 8:19 recall it in Jesus' later teaching. Luke 9:14 provides the detail that Jesus had the crowd sit in groups of fifty. The cross-linguistic uniformity — Spanish 'cinco mil,' French 'cinq mille,' German 'fuenftausend' — reflects the straightforward numerical meaning.

(6×) The cardinal number five thousand, used exclusively in the NT in connection with the miraculous feeding of the multitude. The translations are perfectly transparent across languages: Spanish 'cinco mil,' French 'cinq mille,' German 'fuenftausend.' All six occurrences (Matt 14:21; 16:9; Mark 6:44; 8:19; Luke 9:14; John 6:10) refer to the same event or its later recall, making this number a touchstone for faith in divine provision. Matthew 14:21 notes these were 'five thousand men, besides women and children,' underscoring the scale of the miracle. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: five-thousand | es: cinco-mil | fr: cinq-mille | de: fuenftausend, πενταχισχίλιοι, πενταχισχιλίων Matt 14:21; Matt 16:9; Mark 6:44; Mark 8:19; Luke 9:14

πεντᾰκόσιοι G4001 Adj-DMP (2×)

five hundred, the number 500

This adjective denotes the number five hundred. At Athens, it could refer specifically to the senate of five hundred. In the New Testament, both uses involve this specific number in different contexts. Luke 7:41 contains Jesus' parable of two debtors, one owing five hundred denarii. First Corinthians 15:6 reports that the risen Christ appeared to 'more than five hundred brothers at one time'—a significant resurrection appearance. The number emphasizes either substantial debt or massive eyewitness testimony to resurrection.

(2×) Luke 7:41 uses the genitive plural with 'denarii' (500 denarii of debt), while 1 Corinthians 15:6 uses a dative after the preposition 'above' (more than 500). The translations consistently render the numeral: Spanish 'quinientos,' French 'cinq-cents,' German 'fuenfhundert.' Luke's use provides scale for the parable—a debt so large that forgiveness is stunning. Paul's use provides massive verification—hundreds of eyewitnesses, most still alive, who could testify to the resurrection. Both uses employ 500 as a substantial, memorable number. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: five-hundred | es: quinientos | fr: cinq-cents | de: fuenfhundert, πενταχόσια Luke 7:41; 1Cor 15:6

πέντε G4002 Adj-NMP (38×)

Five — the cardinal number five

The indeclinable Greek cardinal numeral for five, cognate with Sanskrit panca and Latin quinque. In the New Testament it appears in miracle narratives — the five loaves feeding the 5,000 (Matt 14:17, 19; Mark 6:38; Luke 9:13; John 6:9) — and in Jesus' parables, notably the five wise and five foolish virgins (Matt 25:2) and the five talents (Matt 25:15-20). It also marks quantities in narrative and apocalyptic contexts: five months of torment (Rev 9:5, 10), five kings (Rev 17:10), and five porticoes at Bethesda (John 5:2).

five (38×) The cardinal number five, used across 38 New Testament occurrences in narrative, parabolic, and apocalyptic contexts. Multilingual glosses show perfect one-to-one correspondence — Spanish 'cinco,' French 'cinq,' German 'fünf' — confirming a single, unambiguous numerical sense with no semantic extension or figurative development. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER)

en: five | es: cinco | fr: cinq | de: fuenf, fünf Matt 14:17; Matt 14:19; Matt 16:9; Matt 25:2

πεντεκαι-δέκᾰτος G4003 Adj-DNS (1×)

fifteenth; the ordinal number for 15

An ordinal adjective meaning fifteenth, used to indicate position in a sequence. Luke uses it to date the beginning of John the Baptist's ministry: 'in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar' (Luke 3:1). This chronological marker (approximately AD 28-29) anchors the gospel narrative in historical time. The precision reflects Luke's concern for accurate historical context.

(1×) The ordinal number fifteenth, marking position or sequence. Luke's dating formula situates John's prophetic ministry in concrete historical time, correlating it with the reign of Tiberius and other rulers. The multilingual evidence ('fifteenth,' 'decimoquinto,' 'quinzième') consistently expresses ordinal sequence, underscoring Luke's historical precision and the fulfillment of prophecy in real time. FIVE (CARDINAL NUMBER) en: fifteenth | es: decimoquinto | fr: quinzième | de: πεντεκαιδεκάτῳ Luke 3:1

πεντήκοντα G4004 Adj-AMP (7×)

Fifty; the cardinal number used both literally (counting people, coins) and in round-number estimates.

The indeclinable Greek numeral for fifty, appearing in both literal and estimative contexts. Jesus organizes the crowd into groups of fifty for the feeding miracle (Mark 6:40; Luke 9:14), a creditor forgives a debt of fifty denarii (Luke 7:41), and an unjust steward reduces a bill to fifty measures of oil (Luke 16:6). In John 8:57 it serves as a round-number marker of age: 'You are not yet fifty years old.' Every target language renders it with its native numeral — Spanish 'cincuenta,' French 'cinquante,' German 'funfzig' — confirming a single transparent sense.

(7×) Fifty — the cardinal number, used of groups of people (Mark 6:40; Luke 9:14), monetary amounts (Luke 7:41), commodity measures (Luke 16:6), and as a round-number age marker (John 8:57). The feeding narratives use it as an organizing unit for the crowd, while Luke's parables deploy it in financial reckonings. All target languages render it straightforwardly — Spanish 'cincuenta,' French 'cinquante,' German 'funfzig' — with no semantic variation, confirming a single sense of the numeral fifty. FIFTY AND UNITS

en: Fifty, fifties, fifty | es: Cincuenta, cincuenta | fr: cinquante | de: fuenfzig, fünf Mark 6:40; Luke 7:41; Luke 9:14; Luke 16:6; John 8:57

πεντηκοστ-ός G4005 N-GFS (3×)

Pentecost; the fiftieth day after Passover, the Feast of Weeks, celebrating firstfruits and the giving of the Spirit

Named for the 'fiftieth' day after Passover, Pentecost was the Jewish Feast of Weeks celebrating the grain harvest. The Day of Pentecost became forever significant when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the assembled disciples (Acts 2:1). Paul hurries to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (Acts 20:16) and plans to stay in Ephesus until Pentecost because a door for ministry has opened (1 Cor 16:8). What was an agricultural festival in the Old Covenant became the birthday of the church, the harvest of the Spirit's first fruits.

(3×) All languages preserve the name: English 'Pentecost/Pentēkostē', Spanish 'Pentecostés/Pentekostḗs/de-Pentecostés', French 'Pentecôte', German 'Pfingsten/Πεντηκοστῆς'. The lexicon defines it as 'fiftieth day (after the Passover)' and notes the LXX usage and connection to the Feast of Weeks. Acts 2:1 marks the Spirit's outpouring 'when the Day of Pentecost had fully come'. Acts 20:16 and 1 Cor 16:8 show Paul timing travel around this feast. The name commemorates its position fifty days after Passover. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Pentecost, Pentēkostē | es: Pentecostés, Pentekostḗs, de-Pentecostés | fr: Pentecôte | de: Pfingsten, Πεντηκοστῆς Acts 2:1; Acts 20:16; 1Cor 16:8

πεποίθ-ησις G4006 N-DFS (6×)

Confidence, trust, assurance; a settled inner boldness grounded in relationship with God or the gospel.

Pepoithesis names a deep, settled confidence — not brash self-assertion but a quiet assurance rooted in something trustworthy. Paul uses it exclusively, and almost entirely in 2 Corinthians and the Prison Epistles. In 2 Corinthians 1:15 it grounds his travel plans; in 3:4 it rests on Christ; in 10:2 it fuels his apostolic boldness. Ephesians 3:12 speaks of 'boldness and confident access' to God through faith. The Spanish 'confianza,' French 'confiance,' and German 'Zuversicht' all capture this trusting assurance that enables bold action.

confidence, trust, assurance (6×) A settled state of confidence, trust, or assured boldness — especially confidence grounded in one's relationship with God or in the gospel's power. Paul draws on this word to express the inner certainty that enables outward boldness. The multilingual evidence highlights the relational warmth of this confidence: Spanish 'confianza' and French 'confiance' (from Latin confidere, 'to trust fully'), German 'Zuversicht' ('looking toward with assurance'). Key passages include 2 Cor 3:4 (confidence 'through Christ toward God'), Eph 3:12 ('boldness and access with confidence through faith'), and Phil 3:4 (confidence 'in the flesh,' used contrastively). CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: Confidence, by-confidence, confidence | es: Confianza, confianza, osadía | fr: confiance, πεποίθησιν, πεποιθήσει | de: Zuversicht 2Cor 1:15; 2Cor 3:4; 2Cor 8:22; 2Cor 10:2; Eph 3:12

περ G4007

even, very much (intensive enclitic particle); adds force to word it follows, often with relatives/participles

The enclitic particle περ (probably a shortened form of περί) adds intensive or concessive force to the word it follows. Homer uses it abundantly: 'short-lived though I am' (μινυνθάδιόν περ ἐόντα), 'dear though she is' (φίλην περ ἐοῦσαν), 'brave though you are.' Tragedy continues this pattern. The particle can emphasize 'however much' or 'even though,' acknowledging a quality while asserting something nonetheless. It adds rhetorical weight and concessiveness.

πέρᾱν G4008 Prep (24×)

Beyond, across, the other side; a spatial term for the far side of a body of water or boundary, rarely used comparatively.

Almost exclusively a geographical term in the New Testament, used to indicate the far side of a body of water — above all the Sea of Galilee and the Jordan River. Jesus frequently crosses 'to the other side' (Matt 8:18; Mark 4:35), and 'beyond the Jordan' evokes the Transjordan wilderness associated with John the Baptist's ministry (John 1:28; 10:40). Spanish al otro lado ('to the other side') and German jenseits ('beyond') render the spatial sense consistently. A single occurrence in Acts 19:39 stretches the word toward 'further' or 'beyond that,' a rare comparative-intensifying usage.

1. beyond, across, the other side (23×) The far side of a body of water or geographical boundary — used as preposition ('beyond the Jordan') or substantive ('the other side'). Nearly all 23 NT occurrences cluster around the Sea of Galilee and the Jordan River. Spanish al otro lado and German jenseits consistently render this directional sense. Matthew 4:15 echoes Isaiah's 'Galilee beyond the Jordan,' while Matt 8:18, 28 and 14:22 narrate Jesus's crossings of the lake. John 1:28 and 10:40 locate events 'beyond the Jordan,' establishing a theological geography of wilderness encounter. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: across, beyond, other-side | es: al-otro-lado, al-otro-lado-de, del-otro-lado | fr: au-delà | de: jenseits Matt 4:15; Matt 4:25; Matt 8:18; Matt 8:28; Matt 14:22

2. further, farther beyond (1×) An adverbial or comparative use meaning 'further' or 'beyond what has been stated,' extending past what is already in view. Spanish mas alla ('further beyond') and French au-dela carry this intensifying nuance. This usage appears once in Acts 19:39, where the town clerk tells the riotous assembly that if they seek anything 'further' or 'beyond this,' it shall be settled in a lawful assembly — a rhetorical use distinct from the predominant geographical sense. MORE AND GREATER en: further | es: más-allá | fr: au-delà | de: jenseits Acts 19:39

πέρᾰς G4009 N-NNS (4×)

End, limit, boundary, extremity; the farthest point or ultimate conclusion of something.

This neuter noun denotes an end, boundary, or outermost limit — whether spatial or conceptual. In Matthew 12:42 and Luke 11:31, the Queen of the South comes 'from the ends of the earth' to hear Solomon's wisdom, a vivid image of the remotest geographic boundary. Romans 10:18 quotes Psalm 19, declaring that the gospel message has gone out 'to the ends of the world.' Hebrews 6:16 shifts the sense from spatial to legal: an oath is 'an end' (a final settlement) of every dispute. Spanish confines/fin and German Ende both capture this dual range of spatial extremity and conclusive finality.

(4×) An end, limit, boundary, or extremity — the farthest reach of a spatial expanse or the conclusive termination of a matter. The multilingual evidence splits revealingly: Spanish confines and French extremite emphasize spatial boundaries, while Spanish fin, French fin, and German Ende highlight conclusive finality. Matthew 12:42 and Luke 11:31 use the plural for the 'ends of the earth,' Romans 10:18 for the worldwide reach of divine speech, and Hebrews 6:16 applies the singular to an oath as the 'end' or final resolution of all dispute. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: end, ends | es: confines, fin | fr: extrémité, fin | de: Ende, περάτων Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31; Rom 10:18; Heb 6:16

τὸ Πριάμου Πέργαμον G4010 N-DFS (2×)

Pergamum, a prominent city in Asia Minor (modern Turkey)

Originally the citadel of Troy in Homer, Pergamum later designated a major city in western Asia Minor (modern Bergama, Turkey). By the New Testament era, it was a significant political, cultural, and religious center—home to a famous library, temple of Zeus, and imperial cult worship. Both New Testament uses appear in Revelation, addressing one of the seven churches. Revelation 1:11 includes Pergamum in the list of churches receiving letters. Revelation 2:12 begins the specific letter 'to the angel of the church in Pergamum.' The city represents a stronghold of both Hellenistic culture and emperor worship.

(2×) Revelation 1:11 and 2:12 both use the dative case ('to Pergamum') in the epistolary address. The translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Pérgamo,' French 'Pergamon,' German 'Pergamon.' The letter to Pergamum (Rev 2:12-17) acknowledges that the church dwells 'where Satan's throne is'—possibly referring to the massive altar of Zeus or the imperial cult center. Pergamum functions as both geographical location and symbolic representation of the church facing intense pagan cultural and religious pressure while called to remain faithful. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Pergamon | es: Pérgamo | fr: Pergamon | de: Pergamon Rev 1:11; Rev 2:12

Πέργη G4011 N-AFS (3×)

Perga; a city in Pamphylia in southern Asia Minor, visited by Paul on his first missionary journey

Perga was a prominent city in the coastal region of Pamphylia. Paul and Barnabas arrived there after sailing from Cyprus (Acts 13:13), and it was here that John Mark left them to return to Jerusalem. Later, on their return journey, they preached the word in Perga before going down to Attalia (Acts 13:14; 14:25). Though little detail is given about ministry there, Perga marks a significant moment in Paul's mission—the departure of Mark and the pivot inland toward the Galatian highlands.

(3×) All languages transliterate the city name: English 'Perge', Spanish 'Pérgē', French 'Perga', German preserves Greek forms Πέργην/Πέργης/Πέργῃ. Abbott-Smith notes it's 'a city of Pamphylia' with LSJ having no classical entry, suggesting it's primarily a biblical/geographical term. All three occurrences are in Acts: arriving at Perga where John Mark left (Acts 13:13), passing through Perga (Acts 13:14), and preaching in Perga on the return journey (Acts 14:25). It's a geographical location on Paul's first missionary journey. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Perge | es: Pérgē | fr: Perga | de: Πέργην, Πέργης, Πέργῃ Acts 13:13; Acts 13:14; Acts 14:25

περί G4012 Prep (333×)

About, concerning; a preposition marking reference/topic, purpose/benefit, spatial surrounding, or numerical approximation

The preposition περί (peri) is one of the workhorses of New Testament Greek, governing both genitive and accusative cases with distinct semantic effects. Its dominant sense — 'concerning, about' — frames nearly every theological discussion in the epistles and much of Jesus' teaching. Yet its older spatial meaning, 'around,' survives vividly: John the Baptist's leather belt 'around his waist' (Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6). Between these poles lie causal uses ('for, on behalf of') central to atonement theology, and approximative uses ('about the third hour,' Matt 20:3) that give the parables their temporal texture. Spanish distinguishes these neatly: 'acerca-de' for reference, 'por' for cause, 'alrededor-de' for space, 'cerca-de' for approximation.

1. concerning, about (reference) (276×) Marks the topic or subject of discourse: 'concerning X,' 'about X,' 'with regard to X.' With 276 occurrences this is overwhelmingly the primary New Testament sense, used with the genitive. Spanish consistently renders it 'acerca-de' and German 'über,' while French uses 'au-sujet-de' — all confirming a referential rather than spatial meaning. It frames Herod's inquiry about the Christ (Matt 2:8), Jesus' teaching about anxiety (Matt 6:28), and Paul's theological arguments throughout the epistles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: about, about-, concerning | es: acerca-de, por- | fr: au-sujet-de | de: ueber-, über Matt 2:8; Matt 4:6; Matt 6:28; Matt 9:36; Matt 11:7

2. for, on behalf of (purpose/cause) (29×) Indicates purpose, benefit, or cause: 'for the sake of X,' 'on behalf of X,' 'because of X.' This sense appears 29 times, often in sacrificial or intercessory contexts that are theologically charged. Jesus says his blood is poured out 'for many' (Matt 26:28 — περὶ πολλῶν), and he prays 'for' Peter (Luke 22:32). Spanish shifts to 'por' (for/because of) and English to 'for,' both distinguishing this from the referential 'about.' The overlap with ὑπέρ in some manuscripts shows how closely these senses were felt. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: concerning, for, for- | es: acerca, acerca-de, por | fr: au-sujet-de, au-sujet-de- | de: ueber-, über Matt 26:28; Luke 5:14; Luke 6:28; Luke 22:32; John 10:33

3. around, surrounding (spatial) (19×) Spatial sense indicating encirclement or proximity: 'around X,' 'surrounding X,' used with the accusative. Nineteen occurrences preserve the word's etymological core (cognate with Sanskrit pári, 'round about'). John the Baptist wears a belt 'around his waist' (Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6); a millstone is hung 'around the neck' (Matt 18:6); crowds press 'around' Jesus (Mark 3:8). Spanish 'alrededor-de' and German 'um' capture the physical encirclement that 'concerning' cannot. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: around, around- | es: alrededor, alrededor-de, alrededor-de- | fr: au-sujet-de, au-sujet-de-, autour | de: ueber-, um, über Matt 3:4; Matt 8:18; Matt 18:6; Mark 1:6; Mark 3:8

4. about, approximately (numerical) (9×) Marks numerical or temporal approximation: 'about X,' 'approximately X,' used with the accusative of measure. Nine occurrences cluster in the parable of the laborers (Matt 20:3, 5, 6, 9 — 'about the third hour,' 'about the sixth hour') and at the crucifixion ('about the ninth hour,' Matt 27:46). Spanish 'cerca-de/del' (near to) and English 'about' both capture the inexactness. This sense bridges spatial proximity ('near a number') and abstract reference, showing how concrete meaning bleeds into abstract. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: about, about-, around | es: acerca-de, cerca-de, cerca-del | fr: au-sujet-de, au-sujet-de- | de: ueber-, über Matt 20:3; Matt 20:5; Matt 20:6; Matt 20:9; Matt 27:46

περιάγω G4013 V-PIA-2P (6×)

To go around or travel about (intransitive); to lead someone around or take along (transitive).

Periagō pictures movement in a circuit, and its two NT senses hinge on whether the subject moves alone or brings someone along. In the Gospels it describes Jesus's itinerant ministry: he 'went about' (periēgen) all Galilee teaching and healing (Matt 4:23; 9:35; Mark 6:6). Matthew 23:15 uses it of the Pharisees who 'traverse sea and land' to make a single proselyte, and Acts 13:11 describes Elymas groping about after being struck blind. But in 1 Corinthians 9:5 Paul shifts to the transitive sense, asking whether he does not have the right 'to lead around' (periagein) a believing wife, as the other apostles do.

1. go around, travel about (5×) To go around, travel about, or make a circuit through a region (intransitive). Used of Jesus journeying through Galilee's towns and villages (Matt 4:23; 9:35; Mark 6:6), of the Pharisees who cross sea and land to win a convert (Matt 23:15), and of blinded Elymas groping about (Acts 13:11). Spanish 'recorria' and German 'umhergehen' both capture the sense of moving in a sweeping circuit. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD en: going-about, he-was-going-around, was-going-about | es: dando-vueltas, recorréis, recorría | fr: parcourir | de: umhergehen, περιάγετε, περιάγων Matt 4:23; Matt 9:35; Matt 23:15; Mark 6:6; Acts 13:11

2. lead around, take along (1×) To lead someone around or take someone along on one's travels (transitive, causative). In 1 Cor 9:5, Paul asks about the apostolic right to periagein a sister as a wife – that is, to bring a believing spouse along on missionary journeys. Spanish 'llevar alrededor' and English 'lead around' preserve the causative force: not just going oneself, but bringing another person. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD en: to-lead-around | es: llevar-alrededor | fr: parcourir | de: umhergehen 1Cor 9:5

περιαιρ-έω G4014 V-PIM/P-3S (5×)

To take away, remove, strip off; to cast off something that surrounds or covers, whether literal or figurative.

A verb meaning to take away, remove, or strip off — literally to take something from around (περι- + αἱρέω). In its NT occurrences it spans nautical, spiritual, and ritual contexts with impressive range. Acts 27:20 describes all hope of rescue being 'taken away' during the storm at sea. Acts 27:40 recounts the sailors casting off the anchors, and 28:13 refers to removing something (possibly anchor cables) as they departed. Paul uses it figuratively in 2 Cor 3:16: when one turns to the Lord, the veil 'is taken away.' Hebrews 10:11 declares that repeated sacrifices can never 'take away' sins. The Spanish 'quitar' and German 'wegnehmen' both emphasize the act of removal.

(5×) To take away, remove, or strip off — to detach something that surrounds or covers an object, whether in a literal or figurative sense. The περι- prefix gives it a 'from around' nuance, suggesting the removal of something encircling or enveloping. In the shipwreck narrative, it appears three times: hope is taken away (Acts 27:20), anchors are cast off (27:40), and rigging or cables are removed as they set sail (28:13). Paul transforms it metaphorically in 2 Cor 3:16: when someone turns to the Lord, the veil over Moses' face — and by extension over the heart — 'is removed' (περιαιρεῖται). Hebrews 10:11 uses it theologically: the old sacrificial system could never 'take away' sins. The Spanish 'quitar' (to remove) and French 'enlever' (to lift off) both capture the decisive, stripping-away action. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: having-cast-off, is-taken-away, to-take-away | es: era-quitada, es-quitado, habiendo-cortado | fr: enlever, wegnehmen | de: wegnehmen, περιελόντες, περιῃρεῖτο Acts 27:20; Acts 27:40; Acts 28:13; 2Cor 3:16; Heb 10:11

περιαστράπτω G4015 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to flash around, to shine brilliantly around someone or something, dazzling with sudden radiant light

This verb captures the dramatic moment when light bursts around a person or place with overwhelming brightness. Both NT occurrences describe Paul's Damascus road encounter—a light from heaven that literally flashed around him (Acts 9:3, 22:6). The Greek conveys not just illumination but a surrounding, enveloping radiance that leaves the viewer dazzled or overwhelmed. Ancient usage included being dazzled by beauty; here the divine glory arrests and transforms.

(2×) Used exclusively in Luke's account of Paul's conversion to describe the supernatural light from heaven that suddenly surrounded and blinded Saul on the Damascus road. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'resplandeció alrededor', French 'entourer de lumière') captures the encircling, all-encompassing nature of this divine manifestation. This is not mere shining but an overwhelming radiance that physically affects the witness. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: flashed-around, to-flash-around | es: resplandeció, resplandeció-alrededor | fr: entourer-de-lumière | de: περιήστραψεν, περιαστράψαι Acts 9:3; Acts 22:6

περιβάλλω G4016 V-ASM-3S (23×)

To clothe, put on garments; to be wrapped or dressed — in active, middle, and passive voices

The verb περιβάλλω literally means 'to throw around,' and in the New Testament it is used exclusively of clothing — putting garments on oneself, being dressed, or dressing someone else. Revelation's visions are rich with this word: the twenty-four elders 'clothed in white garments' (Rev 4:4), the great multitude 'wearing white robes' (Rev 7:9). Jesus invokes it in the Sermon on the Mount when he asks, 'What shall we wear?' (Matt 6:31), and the parable of the sheep and goats turns on whether one 'clothed' the naked (Matt 25:36).

1. be clothed in, wearing (11×) The perfect passive participle describing a resultant state of being clothed or wearing garments. This is the most frequent sense (11 occurrences), dominating Revelation's heavenly visions. Spanish 'envuelto/vestida de' and English 'clothed in' both capture the stative, adjectival quality. The white garments of Rev 4:4, 7:9, and 7:13 and the young man at the empty tomb 'clothed in a white robe' (Mark 16:5) all employ this participial construction. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothed, clothed-in, having-been-clothed | es: envuelto, envuelto-en, vestida-de | fr: revêtir | de: bekleiden Mark 14:51; Mark 16:5; Rev 4:4; Rev 7:9; Rev 7:13

2. clothe oneself, put on (7×) The middle-voice and reflexive use: to clothe oneself, to put on a garment by one's own action. Jesus' rhetorical question about Solomon in Matt 6:29 ('not even Solomon clothed himself like one of these') and the angel's command to Peter in Acts 12:8 ('put on your garment') illustrate the self-directed sense. Spanish 'Envuélvete' (wrap yourself) and German 'kleidet an' confirm the reflexive agency across languages. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: put-on, shall-we-wear, she-might-clothe-herself | es: Envuélvete, nos-vistamos, se-vista | fr: revêtir | de: bekleiden, kleidet-an Matt 6:29; Matt 6:31; Luke 12:27; Acts 12:8; Rev 3:5

3. clothe someone else (5×) The active transitive use: to clothe another person, to put garments on someone else. This sense appears in the judgment scene of Matt 25:36-43 ('I was naked and you clothed me'), Herod's soldiers dressing Jesus in a gorgeous robe (Luke 23:11), and the soldiers placing a purple garment on Jesus (John 19:2). Spanish 'me vestisteis/habiendo vestido' and English 'we clothed/they put around' confirm the other-directed action. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: having-clothed, they-put-around, we-clothed | es: habiendo-vestido, me-vestisteis, te-vestimos | fr: revêtir | de: bekleiden, kleidet-an Matt 25:36; Matt 25:38; Matt 25:43; Luke 23:11; John 19:2

περι-βλέπω G4017 V-IIM-3S (7×)

To look around, gaze about; a deliberate sweeping glance at one's surroundings or companions.

A vivid Markan verb describing the intentional act of sweeping one's gaze around a group or setting. In the NT it appears exclusively in Mark's Gospel, always attributed to Jesus, lending it a characteristic dramatic quality. He looks around 'with anger' at the synagogue crowd (Mark 3:5), identifies 'who touched me' by scanning the crowd (Mark 5:32), and surveys the temple precincts on his arrival in Jerusalem (Mark 11:11). Spanish 'mirando alrededor' and French 'regarder autour' both preserve the circular spatial dimension of the gaze.

to look around, gaze about (7×) To look around, gaze about — a deliberate, sweeping act of visual survey directed at those nearby or at one's surroundings. Distinctively Markan in the NT (Mark 3:5, 3:34, 5:32, 9:8, 10:23, 11:11), it is used exclusively of Jesus and functions as a narrative device highlighting his authority and intentionality. In Mark 3:5 he looks around 'with anger,' in 5:32 he searches out who touched him, and in 11:11 he inspects the temple. Spanish 'mirando alrededor' and French 'regarder autour' both capture the circular, encompassing nature of the gaze. AROUND AND SURROUNDING

en: having-looked-around, he-was-looking-around, looking-around | es: habiendo-mirado-alrededor, miraba-alrededor, mirando-alrededor | fr: regarder-autour | de: umherblicken, περιβλεψάμενος Mark 3:5; Mark 3:34; Mark 5:32; Mark 9:8; Mark 10:23

περιβόλ-αιον G4018 N-GNS (2×)

a covering, wrapper, or mantle thrown around something; especially a cloak or veil

This term refers to anything that wraps or covers, from practical garments to metaphorical coverings. Paul uses it for a woman's long hair as her natural covering (1 Cor 11:15), while the author of Hebrews quotes Psalm 102 about creation being rolled up like a cloak (Heb 1:12). Classical Greek used it for burial wrappings, bedcovers, and women's headgear. The root idea is something thrown around for protection or concealment.

(2×) A covering or wrap that surrounds. In 1 Corinthians, Paul appeals to nature's design—a woman's long hair functions as her

God-given covering. In Hebrews, quoting the Septuagint, the created heavens and earth are pictured as garments that will one day be rolled up and changed. The German 'Umhang' (cloak) and Spanish 'manto/velo' (mantle/veil) capture the double range: both literal garment and symbolic covering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-covering, cloak | es: manto, velo | fr: Umhang, περιβολαίου | de: Umhang 1Cor 11:15; Heb 1:12

περιδέω G4019 V-LIM/P-3S (1×)

to bind around, wrap around, tie on

This verb means to bind or tie something around an object or person. In John 11:44, Lazarus comes out of the tomb with his face 'wrapped' (περιδέδετο) with a burial cloth. The term indicates binding or bandaging around something, commonly used for wrapping garments, bandages, or burial cloths. The perfect passive form emphasizes the completed state of being bound.

(1×) To bind or wrap something around an object. John's description of Lazarus emerging from the tomb with his face wrapped in a cloth vividly portrays the burial customs of the time and the miraculous nature of his resurrection despite physical impediments. The multilingual glosses ('had-been-wrapped,' 'estaba-envuelto,' 'être-lié-autour') capture the completed action of binding, highlighting the grave cloths that Jesus commanded be removed. BINDING AND TYING en: had-been-wrapped | es: estaba-envuelto | fr: être-lié-autour | de: umgebunden John 11:44

περιεργ-άζομαι G4020 V-PPM/P-AMP (1×)

to be a busybody, meddle in others' affairs, waste effort on trivia

This middle voice verb means to busy oneself with unnecessary or improper things, to be a busybody or meddle in what does not concern one. Paul uses it in 2 Thessalonians 3:11 to rebuke those who are 'not busy but busybodies' (περιεργαζομένους). The term carries a negative connotation of meddling, wasting energy on trivial or inappropriate matters instead of productive work. Classical usage emphasized overdoing or excessive attention to details.

(1×) To act as a busybody or meddle in affairs that are not one's concern. Paul's rebuke addresses idleness disguised as activity, where people waste time interfering in others' business rather than working productively. The multilingual evidence ('being-busybodies,' 'entrometiéndose') captures the meddlesome, intrusive behavior Paul condemns, contrasting it with honest labor and minding one's own affairs. WORK AND LABOR

en: being-busybodies | es: entrometiéndose | fr: περιεργαζομένους | de: sich-unnuetz-beschaeftigen 2Thess 3:11

περίεργος G4021 Adj-ANP (2×)

meddlesome, overly curious, or involved in matters beyond proper concern; busybody practices

Originally describing someone who takes needless trouble or is excessively inquisitive, this word developed moral overtones. In Acts 19:19, it describes magical arts—practices that meddle in forbidden spiritual realms. In 1 Timothy 5:13, Paul warns about younger widows becoming busybodies, prying into others' affairs. Classical usage ranged from the merely curious to the officious meddler. The NT emphasizes improper curiosity that crosses boundaries, whether into occult practices or private matters.

(2×) Describes both magical practices (Acts 19:19) and busybody behavior (1 Tim 5:13). The Ephesian converts burned their books of magic arts—'periergos' practices that sought to manipulate spiritual forces. Paul's pastoral warning about widows uses the same term for those who meddle in others' business. The multilingual split ('magic-arts' vs. 'busybodies') reveals two expressions of the same vice: improper, boundary-crossing curiosity, whether into forbidden spiritual realms or private affairs. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: busybodies, magic-arts | es: artes-mágicas, entrometidas | fr: curieux, περίεργοι | de: neugierig, περίεργα Acts 19:19; 1Tim 5:13

περιέρχομαι G4022 V-AIA-3P (3×)

to go about, to wander around, to travel from place to place; to go around as a beggar, stranger, or itinerant

This verb means to go around or travel about, often with connotations of wandering without fixed purpose. Jewish exorcists 'went about' attempting to invoke Jesus' name over those with evil spirits (Acts 19:13). Paul warns against young widows who learn to be idle, 'going about from house to house' as gossips and busybodies (1 Tim 5:13). Hebrews honors faithful ones who 'wandered about' in sheepskins and goatskins, destitute and persecuted (Heb 11:37). The word can describe itinerant ministry, aimless wandering, or the rootless life of the persecuted.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize itinerant movement: English 'going-about/going-around/they-went-about', Spanish 'ambulantes/anduvieron/yendo-de-casa-en-casa', French 'errer/umherziehen', German 'umherziehen/περιερχομένων'. The lexicon notes meanings from 'go round, go about' to 'go about like a beggar' to 'survey' and 'overreach'. Acts 19:13 describes itinerant Jewish exorcists. 1 Tim 5:13 warns of widows wandering 'from house to house'. Heb 11:37 honors the faithful who 'wandered about' in persecution. Context determines whether the wandering is purposeful mission or aimless idleness. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD en: going-about, going-around, they-went-about | es: ambulantes, anduvieron, yendo-de-casa-en-casa | fr: errer, umherziehen | de: umherziehen, περιερχομένων Acts 19:13; 1Tim 5:13; Heb 11:37

περιέχω G4023 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to surround, encompass, or seize; to contain or include within

This compound verb means to hold or surround completely. When the miraculous catch of fish overwhelms Peter's nets, amazement 'seized' him and his companions (Luke 5:9)—they were gripped, surrounded by astonishment. In 1 Peter 2:6, quoting Isaiah, Scripture 'contains' or 'says' the prophecy about the chosen cornerstone. Classical usage emphasized physical encompassing—the air surrounds the earth, a road encircles a region. The NT extends this to emotional seizure and textual inclusion.

(2×) To encompass or seize. In Luke, the extraordinary catch of fish produces amazement that 'seizes' Peter—he's surrounded, gripped by wonder at the miracle. In 1 Peter, the verb shifts to 'it contains' or 'Scripture says,' where the sacred text encompasses or holds a prophetic word. The French 'saisir' (to seize) and Spanish 'rodéo' (surrounded) capture the physical and emotional grip this word conveys, whether astonishment overtaking someone or text containing truth. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: it-contains, seized | es: contiene, lo-rodéo | fr: saisir | de: umfangen, περιέσχεν Luke 5:9; 1Pet 2:6

περι-ζώννυμι G4024 V-RPM/P-NFP (6×)

To gird around the waist; to fasten clothing in readiness for service or action.

Perizonnumi means to gird oneself — to tuck up loose robes by fastening a belt around the waist, signaling readiness for work, travel, or battle. In Luke's parables of watchful servants (12:35, 37; 17:8), the girded waist is the image of alert, prepared service. Paul transforms the image in Ephesians 6:14: 'having girded your waist with truth' — truth as the foundational belt holding the whole armor together. Revelation 1:13 pictures the risen Christ girded with a golden sash. The Spanish 'cenir' and German 'umguerten' both preserve the encircling action of the verb.

gird around, dress for service (6×) To gird around the waist, fastening garments with a belt in preparation for service, work, or readiness. The verb pictures the ancient practice of tucking loose robes into a belt so one could move freely. Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'cenir' (to encircle, gird), German 'umguerten' (to belt around) — highlights the encircling physical action. In Luke 12:35 and 17:8, girded servants represent faithful watchfulness. Ephesians 6:14 metaphorically applies it to the believer's armor: 'having girded your waist with truth.' Revelation 1:13 describes the exalted Christ girded with a golden sash across his chest. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: girded, girding-yourself, having-been-girded | es: ceñido, ceñidos, ciñéndote | fr: ceindre | de: umguerten, περιεζωσμένοι, περιζωσάμενος Luke 12:35; Luke 12:37; Luke 17:8; Eph 6:14; Rev 1:13

περί-θεσις G4025 N-GFS (1×)

putting on, wearing; the act of adorning oneself

A noun meaning the act of putting on or wearing something, particularly as adornment. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 3:3 to contrast outward adornment (braided hair, gold jewelry, fine clothes) with the inner beauty of a gentle spirit. The term emphasizes the action of putting on or wearing as decoration. Peter's point is not to forbid all adornment but to prioritize inner character over external display.

(1×) The act of putting on or wearing adornment. Peter's instruction to Christian women highlights that true beauty is not found in external decoration but in the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit. The cross-lingual glosses ('of-putting-on,' 'de-ponerse') emphasize the action of adorning oneself, which Peter subordinates to spiritual character. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: of-putting-on | es: de-ponerse | fr: περιθέσεως | de: Anlegen 1Pet 3:3

περιίστημι G4026 V-PMM-2S (4×)

To stand around; to surround; figuratively, to avoid or shun (a matter or person).

Derived from peri (around) and histemi (to stand), this verb carries a dual range of meaning in the New Testament. In its literal sense it describes people gathering around or standing in a circle, as when the Jews stood around Jesus at the Temple (John 11:42) or accusers surrounded Paul (Acts 25:7). Yet in the Pastoral Epistles, the word shifts to a figurative 'stand away from'—avoid or shun—as Paul warns Timothy and Titus to steer clear of foolish controversies (2 Tim 2:16; Titus 3:9). The Spanish 'evita' and English 'avoid' capture this transferred sense well.

(4×) To stand around physically, forming a circle or crowd around someone. In John 11:42 and Acts 25:7, groups surround Jesus and Paul respectively. The French 'se tenir autour' and German 'umstehen' reflect this concrete spatial sense of encirclement. The domain assignment to MOVEMENT > Linear Movement reflects the physical positioning involved. WITHDRAW DEPART en: avoid, standing-around, stood-around | es: evita, que-está-alrededor, rodearon | fr: se-tenir-autour, se-tenir-à-l'écart | de: umstehen, περιέστησαν John 11:42; Acts 25:7; 2Tim 2:16; Titus 3:9

περικάθαρ-μα G4027 N-NNP (1×)

offscouring, scum, refuse; filth wiped off or discarded

A noun meaning offscouring, refuse, or scum—something worthless that is wiped off and thrown away. In 1 Corinthians 4:13, Paul describes the apostles as 'the scum of the earth' in the world's eyes. The term can also denote a scapegoat or expiatory victim in some contexts. Paul embraces this low status, showing how apostolic ministry is despised by worldly standards while being honored by God.

(1×) Refuse, scum, or offscouring—what is worthless and cast away. Paul's self-description captures the world's contempt for apostles, who are treated as garbage to be discarded. The multilingual glosses ('scum,' 'basura,' 'déchet,' 'Kehricht') consistently emphasize worthlessness and disposal, highlighting the stark contrast between worldly evaluation and divine calling. ASH HEAP REFUSE en: scum | es: basura | fr: déchet | de: Kehricht 1Cor 4:13

περι-κάλύπτω G4028 V-RPM/P-AFS (3×)

to cover around, to veil, to conceal; to wrap or envelop something completely

This verb means to cover all around or envelop something, hiding it from view. The guards at Jesus' trial 'blindfolded' him before striking him and demanding he prophesy who hit him (Mark 14:65; Luke 22:64). Hebrews describes the ark in the tabernacle as being 'covered on all sides' with gold (Heb 9:4). Whether veiling a face or overlaying with precious metal, the word emphasizes thorough covering that conceals or protects the underlying object.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence stresses complete covering: English 'having-been-covered/having-covered/to-cover', Spanish 'a-cubrir/cubierta-alrededor/habiendo-cubierto', French 'couvrir', German 'verhuellen/περικαλύψαντες'. The lexicon defines it as 'cover all round' with meanings including wrapping in garments and metaphorically throwing 'a veil of darkness over deeds'. Mark 14:65 and Luke 22:64 describe blindfolding/covering Jesus' face before mockery. Heb 9:4 describes the ark 'covered on all sides with gold'. Complete envelopment or concealment is the consistent meaning. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: having-been-covered, having-covered, to-cover | es: a-cubrir, cubierta-alrededor, habiendo-cubierto | fr: couvrir | de: verhuellen, περικαλύψαντες Mark 14:65; Luke 22:64; Heb 9:4

περίκειμαι G4029 V-PIM/P-3S (5×)

To lie around, be placed around; to have something surrounding one, hence to wear or be encumbered with.

A middle/passive verb meaning to lie around or be placed around something — used as the passive of περιτίθημι (to place around). In the NT it appears in two striking contexts: wearing something physically, and being surrounded or beset by something. In Mark 9:42 and Luke 17:2, a millstone 'is placed around' someone's neck — a vivid image of judgment. Acts 28:20 has Paul saying 'I am wearing this chain,' while Heb 12:1 speaks of the cloud of witnesses that 'surrounds' believers. The Spanish 'está rodeado' (is surrounded) and French 'ceindre' (to gird around) both capture the encircling sense.

(5×) To lie around, be placed around, or wear — describing something that encircles or is fastened upon a person. The word functions as the passive of περιτίθημι and conveys the state of being surrounded or encumbered. In Mark 9:42 and Luke 17:2, a millstone 'is hung around' the neck as an image of catastrophic judgment. Paul uses it in Acts 28:20 to describe the chain binding him: 'this chain lies around me.' Hebrews 5:2 speaks of weakness that 'surrounds' the high priest, and Heb 12:1 memorably describes sin that 'clings so closely.' The multilingual evidence — English 'I am wearing,' Spanish 'está rodeado' (is surrounded), French 'être placé autour' (to be placed around) — converges on the core spatial metaphor of encirclement. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-am-wearing, is-clothed-with, is-placed | es: está-colocada, está-rodeado, llevo | fr: ceindre, être-placé-autour | de: umgeben, περίκειμαι, περίκειται Mark 9:42; Luke 17:2; Acts 28:20; Heb 5:2; Heb 12:1

περικεφάλ-αιος G4030 N-AFS (2×)

a helmet, protective head-covering worn in battle

The standard Greek term for a military helmet, covering the head in combat. Paul's armor imagery draws on this literal piece of equipment to represent spiritual protection. In Ephesians 6:17, believers take 'the helmet of salvation'—God's saving work guards the mind and identity. In 1 Thessalonians 5:8, it's 'the helmet, the hope of salvation'—confident expectation of final deliverance protects against spiritual assault. Both texts echo Isaiah 59:17, where God himself wears salvation as a helmet when he comes to judge and redeem.

(2×) A warrior's head protection, used metaphorically by Paul for salvation as spiritual defense. The helmet guards the most vulnerable part—the head—from fatal blows. Similarly, the certainty of salvation and hope of final redemption protect the believer's mind from despair and doubt. The universal recognition across languages (Spanish 'yelmo', German 'Helm', French 'casque') shows this is straightforward military equipment repurposed for spiritual warfare, rooted in Isaiah's vision of God as divine warrior. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: helmet | es: yelmo | fr: περικεφαλαίαν | de: Helm Eph 6:17; 1Thess 5:8

περικρᾰτ-ής G4031 Adj-NMP (1×)
in control of, master of; having power over An adjective meaning having full control or mastery over something. In Acts 27:16, it describes the sailors' struggle to gain 'control' (περικρατεῖς) of the ship's lifeboat during a storm. The term indicates dominance, authority, or mastery over a situation or object. Classical usage often described military or physical control. Here it emphasizes the difficulty of securing the boat in dangerous conditions.

(1×) Having control or mastery over something. Luke's shipwreck narrative uses the term to describe the sailors' hard-won effort to secure the lifeboat amid the storm, emphasizing the struggle to maintain control in chaotic circumstances. The multilingual evidence ('control,' 'dueños') captures the sense of mastery and dominance, crucial for survival in the tempest. LORDS AND MASTERS en: control | es: dueños | fr: présent | de: περικρατεῖς Acts 27:16

περικρύπτω G4032 V-IIA-3S (1×)
to hide, conceal; to keep out of sight
This verb means to hide or conceal completely, often reflexively to hide oneself. Luke uses it to describe how Mary 'hid herself' (περιέκρυβεν) for five months after conceiving John the Baptist (Luke 1:24). The term suggests deliberate concealment, perhaps for privacy, reflection, or protection. Mary's seclusion may reflect humility, wonder, or caution during the early stages of her miraculous pregnancy.

(1×) To hide or conceal, often oneself. Mary's five-month seclusion after conception suggests a period of privacy and reflection on the divine work within her. The multilingual glosses ('she-hid,' 'se-ocultaba,' 'cacher') emphasize the deliberate withdrawal from public view, inviting reflection on Mary's response to God's intervention in her life. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: she-hid | es: se-ocultaba | fr: cacher | de: περιέκρυβεν Luke 1:24

περικυκλ-όω G4033 V-FIA-3P (1×)
to encircle, surround, besiege
This verb means to encircle, surround, or besiege, often in a military context. Jesus uses it in Luke 19:43 to prophesy Jerusalem's coming destruction: enemies 'will surround you' (περικυκλώσουσίν). The term vividly depicts siege warfare, where armies encircle a city to cut it off and conquer it. Jesus' prediction was fulfilled in AD 70 when Roman forces besieged and destroyed Jerusalem.

(1×) To surround or encircle, particularly in a military siege. Jesus' lament over Jerusalem includes this stark prophecy of enemies encircling the city, a prediction tragically fulfilled when Rome besieged Jerusalem. The multilingual evidence ('will-surround,' 'te-rodearán,' 'assiéger') captures the military imagery of encirclement, underscoring the judgment resulting from rejecting the Messiah. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: will-surround | es: te-rodearán | fr: assiéger | de: περικυκλώσουσίν Luke 19:43

περι-λάμπω G4034 V-AIA-3S (2×)
to shine around, to illuminate or surround with brilliant light Similar to G4015, this verb describes radiant light shining all around. Both Gospel appearances involve angelic glory: the angel at Jesus' birth whose glory 'shone around' the shepherds (Luke 2:9), and the heavenly light that 'shone around' Paul and his companions on the Damascus road (Acts 26:13). The light doesn't just appear—it surrounds, envelops, and illuminates everything nearby. This is theophanic brilliance, divine presence made visible, overwhelming merely human perception with supernatural radiance.

(2×) Divine or angelic light that shines in a circle around people, marking moments of supernatural encounter. At the nativity, the glory of the Lord 'shone around' the terrified shepherds—God's presence breaking into the night watch. Paul recounts a similar experience when a light from heaven 'shone around' him at midday, brighter than the sun. The Spanish 'rodeó de luz' (surrounded with light) and French 'resplendir' (shine brilliantly) emphasize the encompassing nature of this divine manifestation. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: having-shone-around, shone-around | es: brillando-alrededor-de, los-rodeó-de-luz | fr: briller-autour, resplendir | de: περιέλαμψεν, περιλάμψαν Luke 2:9; Acts 26:13

περιλείπομαι G4035 V-PPM/P-NMP (2×)
to remain, survive, or be left over after others have gone
This middle/passive verb means to survive, to be among those remaining. Paul uses it twice in his teaching about the rapture in 1 Thessalonians 4. He speaks of 'we who are alive, who remain until the coming of the Lord' (4:15, 17)—those believers still living when Christ returns, as opposed to those who have died. The word emphasizes survival to a specific moment, being part of the remnant that endures to witness a future event. Classical usage described survivors of battle or disaster.

(2×) To survive or remain alive until a specific moment. Paul uses this term exclusively for believers who are still living when Christ returns, contrasting them with those who have 'fallen asleep' in death. The question at Thessalonica was about priority or advantage; Paul clarifies that 'we who remain alive' will not precede the dead in resurrection glory. The German 'übrigbleiben' (remain over) captures the sense of being part of the surviving remnant that lives to see the Lord's coming. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: remaining | es: que-quedamos | fr: περιλειπόμενοι | de: uebrigbleiben 1Thess 4:15; 1Thess 4:17

περίλῡπ-ος G4036 Adj-AMS (5×)
Deeply grieved, exceedingly sorrowful; overwhelmed with sadness to the point of distress.
An adjective intensified by the prefix περι- (around, exceedingly), meaning 'very sorrowful' or 'deeply grieved' — sorrow that surrounds and overwhelms a person. Its most memorable use is Jesus' own words in Gethsemane: 'My soul is deeply grieved, even to death' (Matt 26:38; Mark 14:34). The word also describes Herod's distress at being trapped by his oath to Salome (Mark 6:26) and the rich ruler's sadness at Jesus' demand to sell everything (Luke 18:23-24). The French 'profondément attristé' (profoundly saddened) and Spanish 'muy triste' (very sad) capture the intensification well.

(5×) Exceedingly sorrowful or deeply grieved — an intensified form conveying overwhelming sadness. The prefix περι- amplifies the base λύπη (grief) to describe sorrow that engulfs a person completely. Jesus applies this word to himself in Gethsemane (Matt 26:38; Mark 14:34), saying his soul is περίλυπος 'even to death' — sorrow so heavy it feels lethal. Herod is περίλυπος when cornered by his rash oath (Mark 6:26), and the rich ruler becomes deeply grieved when told to give up his wealth (Luke 18:23). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'muy triste,' French 'profondément attristé,' German 'sehr betrübt' — all deploy intensifiers to match the Greek prefix's force. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1284 WITH 4 SENSES en: Deeply-grieved, Very-sorrowful, deeply-grieved | es: Muy-triste, [muy-triste, muy-triste | fr: profondément-attristé | de: [περίλυπον, sehr-betruebt, Περίλυπός Matt 26:38; Mark 6:26; Mark 14:34; Luke 18:23; Luke 18:24

περιμένω G4037 V-PNA (1×)
to wait for, await; to remain in expectation
This verb means to wait for or await something or someone, often with patient expectation. In Acts 1:4, Jesus commands his disciples to 'wait for' (περιμένειν) the promise of the Father—the coming of the Holy Spirit. The term emphasizes patient, expectant waiting. Classical usage included enduring or putting up with something, but here it conveys hopeful anticipation of divine fulfillment.

(1×) To wait for or await expectantly. Jesus' final command before his ascension directs the disciples to remain in Jerusalem, awaiting the promised Holy Spirit. The multilingual glosses ('to-wait-for,'

'esperar,' 'attendre') consistently emphasize patient expectation, highlighting the disciples' posture of obedient anticipation before Pentecost. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: to-wait-for | es: esperar | fr: attendre | de: περιμένειν Acts 1:4

πέριξ G4038 Adv (1×)

around, round about; in the surrounding area

An adverb (and sometimes preposition) meaning around, round about, or in the surrounding area. In Acts 5:16, it describes the crowds coming from 'the surrounding towns' (τῶν πόλεων πέριξ) to Jerusalem for healing. The term indicates proximity and encircling location. It emphasizes the widespread impact of the apostles' ministry, drawing people from neighboring regions.

(1×) Around, in the surrounding area, or round about. Luke's description of crowds from surrounding towns highlights the geographical reach of the apostolic healing ministry, as news spread throughout the region. The cross-lingual evidence ('surrounding,' 'circundantes,' 'autour') uniformly captures spatial proximity and the encircling geography that brought people to the apostles. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: surrounding | es: circundantes | fr: autour | de: πέριξ Acts 5:16

περιοικ-έω G4039 V-PPA-AMP (1×)

dwelling around, living nearby; neighboring

A participle (from perioikeo) meaning those who dwell around or live nearby—neighbors. Luke uses it in Luke 1:65 to describe the neighbors and those 'dwelling around' Zechariah and Elizabeth who witnessed the miraculous events surrounding John's birth. The term emphasizes geographic proximity and community. These neighbors shared in the wonder and spread the news throughout the hill country.

(1×) Those dwelling around or nearby; neighbors. Luke's narrative shows how the remarkable events surrounding John the Baptist's birth spread through the local community, as neighbors witnessed God's work in Zechariah's household. The multilingual glosses ('dwelling-around,' 'que-habitaban-alrededor,' 'voisin') emphasize proximity and community, highlighting how God's acts impact those geographically close. NEIGHBOR FELLOW

en: dwelling-around | es: que-habitaban-alrededor | fr: voisin | de: περιοικοῦντας Luke 1:65

περίοικος G4040 Adj-NMP (1×)

neighbors; those dwelling nearby

An adjective (used substantively) meaning neighbors or those dwelling nearby. Luke uses it in Luke 1:58 when Elizabeth's 'neighbors' (περίοικοι) rejoiced with her at John's birth. The term denotes those living in proximity, sharing community life. In classical contexts, it could also refer to dependent peoples in certain political systems, but here it simply means neighbors who share in local events and relationships.

(1×) Neighbors or those dwelling nearby. Luke's account shows the communal joy when neighbors heard of God's mercy to Elizabeth in her miraculous conception and childbirth. The cross-lingual evidence ('neighbors,' 'vecinos,' 'voisin') consistently emphasizes proximity and shared community life, highlighting the social bonds that made Elizabeth's blessing a cause for collective celebration. NEIGHBOR FELLOW

en: neighbors | es: vecinos | fr: voisin | de: περίοικοι Luke 1:58

περιούσι-ος G4041 Adj-AMS (1×)

special, peculiar; one's own possession

An adjective meaning special, peculiar, or one's own possession. In Titus 2:14, Paul describes the church as a 'special people' (λαὸν περιούσιον) belonging to Christ, echoing Old Testament language about Israel as God's treasured possession. The term emphasizes belonging, chosenness, and distinctiveness. It highlights the church as Christ's unique, valued possession, set apart for good works.

(1×) Special or peculiar, denoting a people uniquely belonging to God. Paul's description draws on Exodus and Deuteronomy imagery of Israel as God's treasured possession, now applied to the redeemed community. The multilingual glosses ('special,' 'especial,' 'auserwaehltes-Volk') capture the sense of chosen distinctiveness, emphasizing believers as Christ's own possession, purified and zealous for good deeds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: special | es: especial | fr: περιούσιον | de: auserwaehltes-Volk Titus 2:14

περιοχ-ή G4042 N-NFS (1×)

passage, section; a portion of writing

A noun meaning a section or passage, particularly of a text. In Acts 8:32, it refers to 'the passage of Scripture' (ἡ περιοχὴ τῆς γραφῆς) that the Ethiopian eunuch was reading—Isaiah 53. The term can mean compass, extent, or content, but here it denotes a specific textual portion. Philip used this passage as his starting point to explain the gospel about Jesus.

(1×) A passage or section of writing. Luke's narrative identifies the specific Scripture portion the Ethiopian was reading, which became the basis for Philip's evangelistic explanation. The multilingual evidence ('passage,' 'porción') consistently emphasizes a defined textual section, highlighting how God's written word served as the entry point for gospel proclamation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: passage | es: porción | fr: passage | de: περιοχὴ Acts 8:32

περιπᾰτ-έω G4043 V-PIA-2S (96×)

To walk physically on foot; figuratively, to conduct oneself or live in a certain manner, describing ethical and spiritual behavior.

One of the New Testament's most vivid metaphors hides inside an everyday word for walking. Paul's letters are saturated with it: 'walk in love,' 'walk by the Spirit,' 'walk in newness of life.' The physical sense — Peter walking on water (Matt 14:29), Jesus walking by the sea (Matt 4:18) — provides the concrete image that the ethical metaphor depends on. The LSJ lexicon traces this figurative extension to the first century BC, but the apostolic writers made it a signature idiom. Spanish splits between 'caminar' (physical) and 'andar' (conduct), while German 'wandeln' elegantly carries both senses.

1. conduct oneself, live (48×) The figurative sense: to conduct oneself, to live or behave in a particular way. Nearly half the occurrences (48x) describe manner of life — walking in darkness or light (John 12:35), walking according to the flesh or Spirit (Rom 8:4), walking worthily of one's calling (Eph 4:1). Spanish 'andad/caminad' and German 'wandeln/wandelt' both serve this ethical register. Mark 7:5 uses it for following tradition, showing the metaphor extends from moral to cultural conduct. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: to-walk, walk, walking | es: Caminad, andad, andamos | fr: marcher | de: wandeln, wandelt Matt 11:5; Mark 7:5; Luke 7:22; John 12:35; Acts 21:21

2. walk physically (47×) The literal, physical sense: to move on foot, to walk somewhere. Jesus walking on the sea (Matt 14:25), the healed paralytic walking (Matt 9:5), and crowds walking along roads all use this concrete meaning. With 47 occurrences, the physical sense nearly matches the figurative in frequency — a reminder that the metaphor stays grounded. Spanish 'camina/caminando' and the identical French 'marcher' carry this straightforward ambulatory meaning. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: walk, walking | es: camina, caminando | fr: marcher | de: wandeln, wandelt Matt 4:18; Matt 9:5; Matt 14:25; Matt 14:26; Matt 14:29

3. (1×) A single occurrence in 1 Pet 5:8 where the devil 'walks about' (peripatei) like a roaring lion seeking someone to devour. The English 'walks-about' and Spanish 'anda-alrededor' both emphasize restless, predatory prowling — neither mere physical walking nor ethical conduct, but a menacing, purposeful circling. The imagery merges literal motion with malevolent intent in a way that resists neat classification under either main sense. CONDUCT AND WALK-

ING
en: walks-about | es: anda-alrededor | fr: marcher | de: wandeln 1Pet 5:8

περιπείρω G4044 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to pierce through, impale; to run through with pain

This verb means to pierce through or impale, literally or metaphorically. In 1 Timothy 6:10, Paul warns that those who crave wealth 'have pierced themselves' (περιέπειραν ἑαυτούς) with many griefs. The term vividly depicts self-inflicted suffering, like being run through with a sword. It captures the painful consequences of greed and love of money, which bring not satisfaction but anguish.

(1×) To pierce through or impale oneself, here metaphorically with sorrows. Paul's warning about the love of money uses vivid imagery of self-inflicted pain, as greed brings not happiness but multiple griefs. The cross-lingual glosses ('pierced-through,' 'traspasaron') emphasize the penetrating, wounding nature of the suffering that results from pursuing wealth above God. PIERCE BORE THROUGH en: pierced-through | es: traspasaron | fr: περιέπειραν | de: durchbohren 1Tim 6:10

περιπίπτω G4045 V-ASA-2P (3×)

to fall into, to encounter, to fall among; to meet with circumstances, often unexpectedly or unfortunately

Originally meaning to fall around or upon something, this verb came to denote falling into a situation or encountering circumstances. Jesus' parable describes a man who 'fell among' robbers on the road to Jericho (Luke 10:30). Paul's ship 'struck' a reef or sandbar where two seas met (Acts 27:41). James exhorts believers to count it joy when they 'fall into' various trials (Jas 1:2). The word carries a sense of unexpected encounter, whether with danger, misfortune, or testing circumstances.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize encountering or falling into: English 'fell/having-fallen-into/you-fall-into', Spanish 'caigáis/cayó/habiendo-caído', French 'tomber-dans/tomber-sur', German 'begegnen/περιέπεσεν/περιπεσόντες'. The lexicon notes meanings from 'fall around' to 'fall in with' to ships meeting at sea to encountering something in discussion. Luke 10:30 has a traveler 'falling among' robbers. Acts 27:41 describes a ship 'falling into' (striking) a place between two seas. Jas 1:2 speaks of 'falling into' various trials. Unexpected encounter with circumstances is the unifying sense. FALLING AND FAILING en: fell, having-fallen-into, you-fall-into | es: caigáis, cayó, habiendo-caído | fr: tomber-dans, tomber-sur | de: begegnen, περιέπεσεν, περιπεσόντες Luke 10:30; Acts 27:41; Jas 1:2

περιποι-έω G4046 V-AIM-3S (3×)

to preserve, to save, to acquire for oneself; to obtain possession or keep safe something valuable

This verb means to keep safe, preserve, or acquire for oneself. Jesus teaches that whoever seeks to 'preserve' his life will lose it (Luke 17:33). Paul charges the Ephesian elders to shepherd the church which God 'obtained' with his own blood (Acts 20:28). Paul tells Timothy that those who serve well as deacons 'acquire' for themselves a good standing (1 Tim 3:13). The word encompasses both protective preservation and active acquisition, often with the middle voice emphasizing personal benefit or responsibility.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows both preservation and acquisition: English 'acquire/he-obtained/to-preserve', Spanish 'adquieren/adquirió/conservar', French 'acquérir', German 'erwerben/περιεποιήσατο/περιποιήσασθαι'. The lexicon defines it as 'keep safe, preserve' and 'procure, secure, achieve, lay up' with middle voice meaning 'keep or save for oneself'. Luke 17:33 speaks of preserving/saving one's life. Acts 20:28 describes God obtaining/acquiring the church. 1 Tim 3:13 mentions acquiring good standing. Both protective preservation and active acquisition are present. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: acquire, he-obtained, to-preserve | es: adquieren, adquirió, conservar | fr: acquérir | de: erwerben, περιεποιήσατο, περιποιήσασθαι Luke 17:33; Acts 20:28; 1Tim 3:13

περιποί-ησις G4047 N-AFS (5×)

Obtaining, possession, preservation; the act of acquiring or the state of being kept safe as God's own.

A noun with a rich semantic range spanning two poles: active acquisition (obtaining, gaining possession) and passive preservation (being kept safe). Paul uses it for the gaining of salvation in 1 Thess 5:9 and 2 Thess 2:14 — God destined believers 'for obtaining salvation.' Hebrews 10:39 contrasts destruction with the 'preservation of the soul.' In 1 Pet 2:9, the phrase 'a people for God's own possession' (λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν) echoes the OT concept of Israel as God's treasured people. The Spanish 'posesión' and German 'Erwerb' (acquisition) highlight the possessive dimension, while 'preservación' captures the protective one.

(5×) Obtaining, acquisition, or preservation — the act of gaining possession of something or the state of being safeguarded. The word bridges two key ideas in the NT: (a) the active gaining of salvation, as in 1 Thess 5:9 ('God has destined us for obtaining salvation') and 2 Thess 2:14 ('obtaining the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ'), and (b) the state of being God's treasured possession, as in Eph 1:14 ('the redemption of God's own possession') and 1 Pet 2:9 ('a people for his own possession,' echoing the LXX concept of λαὸς περιούσιος). Heb 10:39 deploys it as 'preservation of the soul,' contrasted with shrinking back to destruction. The Spanish 'obtención/posesión/preservación' neatly maps these three facets. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY en: obtaining, possession, preservation | es: obtención, posesión, preservación | fr: Erwerb | de: Erwerb Eph 1:14; 1Thess 5:9; 2Thess 2:14; Heb 10:39; 1Pet 2:9

περιρρήγνῡμι G4048 V-APA-NMP (1×)

to tear off, rip away; to strip off clothing

This verb means to tear off or rip away, especially clothing. In Acts 16:22, the crowd and magistrates 'tore off' (περιρήξαντες) Paul and Silas's clothes before beating them. The term emphasizes violent stripping or rending, often in contexts of humiliation or preparation for punishment. The action precedes flogging, intensifying the indignity and brutality of the mob's attack on the apostles.

(1×) To tear off or rip away clothing violently. Luke's account of Paul and Silas's beating in Philippi includes this detail of public humiliation, as their garments were torn off before flogging. The multilingual evidence ('having-torn-off,' 'rasgando,' 'déchirer') captures the violent, humiliating action that preceded physical punishment, underscoring the apostles' suffering for the gospel. TEARING AND RENDING en: having-torn-off | es: rasgando | fr: déchirer | de: περιρήξαντες Acts 16:22

περι-σπάω G4049 V-IIM/P-3S (1×)

to distract, drag away; to be overburdened with tasks

This verb means to drag away, distract, or be pulled in different directions. Luke uses it to describe Martha, who 'was distracted' (περιεσπᾶτο) by much serving while Mary sat at Jesus' feet (Luke 10:40). The term conveys being pulled away from what matters by excessive busyness. It captures the tension between activity and attention, between doing and being, in spiritual life.

(1×) To be distracted or pulled away by many tasks. Luke's account of Martha's complaint reveals how service can become distraction when it diverts attention from Jesus himself. The multilingual glosses ('was-distracted,' 'estaba-distraída,' 'être-distrait') consistently emphasize being pulled in multiple directions, highlighting Jesus' gentle correction that one thing—attentive presence—is needed above frantic activity. DRAWING AND PULLING en: was-distracted | es: estaba-distraída | fr: être-distrait | de: περιεσπᾶτο Luke 10:40

περισσ-εία G4050 N-NFS (4×)

Abundance, surplus, overflow; an exceeding measure or advantage.

A noun formed from perisseuō (to abound), perisseia denotes surplus or overflowing quantity. Paul uses it to speak of the abundance of grace that far outweighs sin (Rom 5:17) and the overflowing joy of the Macedonians amid severe trial (2 Cor 8:2). In James 1:21 it describes the 'overflow of wickedness' that believers must strip away. Across languages—Spanish 'abundancia,' French 'surabondance,' German 'Ueberfluss'—the core idea is the same: something that spills beyond what is ordinary or expected.

(4×) Abundance or surplus, whether of grace, joy, or even evil. Romans 5:17 speaks of the perisseia of grace that enables believers to reign in life through Christ. In 2 Corinthians 8:2 and 10:15, the term conveys overflowing generosity and expanding faith. James 1:21 uses it negatively for the surplus of wickedness. The French 'surabondance' nicely captures the sense of exceeding measure that goes beyond the normal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance | es: abundancia | fr: abondance, surabondance | de: Ueberfluss Rom 5:17; 2Cor 8:2; 2Cor 10:15; Jas 1:21

περίσσ-ευμα G4051 N-NNS (5×)

Abundance, surplus, overflow; what remains over and above, whether of words from the heart or of material provisions.

A noun meaning surplus, abundance, or overflow — that which exceeds what is needed or expected. Jesus uses it memorably in Matt 12:34 and Luke 6:45: 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks,' where the overflow metaphor connects inner character to outward speech. Mark 8:8 uses it concretely for the leftover fragments after the feeding miracle. Paul employs it in 2 Cor 8:14 for material surplus that can supply another's lack. The Spanish 'abundancia/sobrantes' and French 'excès/surplus' capture both the abstract fullness and the concrete remainder.

(5×) Abundance, surplus, or overflow — what exceeds, remains over, or spills forth from fullness. The word carries both concrete and abstract uses in the NT. Concretely, Mark 8:8 refers to leftover food fragments (κλασμάτων περισσεύματα) after the feeding of the four thousand. Abstractly, Jesus teaches that 'out of the abundance (περίσσευμα) of the heart the mouth speaks' (Matt 12:34; Luke 6:45) — a powerful metaphor where speech is the overflow of one's inner state. Paul uses it economically in 2 Cor 8:14 (twice), where one community's surplus meets another's deficit. The Spanish 'abundancia' captures the abstract sense, while 'sobrantes' (leftovers) fits the concrete usage; French 'surplus' bridges both. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance, leftovers | es: abundancia, sobrantes | fr: excès, surplus | de: Ueberfluss, περισσεύματος Matt 12:34; Mark 8:8; Luke 6:45; 2Cor 8:14

περισσ-εύω G4052 V-APA-ANP (39×)

To abound, overflow, have in excess; to remain over as surplus; causatively, to cause to abound or lavish.

Perisseuō paints a picture of overflowing containers and tables heaped with more than enough. At its core it means to exceed what is necessary — whether bread fragments left over after the feeding of thousands (Matt 14:20), or the righteousness that must 'surpass' that of the scribes (Matt 5:20). Paul seizes on the word to describe the Christian life as one of superabundance: abounding in grace, in love, in thanksgiving. The Spanish sobrar ('to be left over') captures the surplus sense beautifully, while German überströmen ('to overflow') evokes the image of a vessel that cannot contain what pours into it. From leftovers to lavish grace, this verb insists that God's economy trades in excess.

1. abound, overflow (27×) To be present in abundance, to overflow or increase greatly — the dominant intransitive sense. Used of persons who have plenty (Luke 15:17, 'bread enough and to spare'), of qualities like grace or sin that multiply (Rom 5:15, 6:1), and of Paul's exhortation to 'abound in the work of the Lord' (1 Cor 15:58). Spanish abundar and German überströmen both capture the sense of exceeding a normal measure. Matt 5:20 famously sets the bar: righteousness must perisseuō beyond that of the Pharisees. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: abound, abounded, abounding | es: abunda, abundamos, abundan | fr: surabonder, être-en-abondance | de: ueberfliessen, überströmt Matt 5:20; Luke 12:15; Luke 15:17; Acts 16:5; Rom 3:7

2. remain over, be left over (7×) To remain over as surplus after a need has been met. This is the 'leftovers' sense, prominent in the feeding narratives: twelve baskets of fragments 'left over' (Matt 14:20, Luke 9:17). Spanish que sobró ('what was left over') nails the distinction from general abundance — this is specifically what exceeds consumption. Mark 12:44 and Luke 21:4 invert the image: the widow gave not from her surplus (to perisseuon) but from her poverty. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: abounded, abounding, having-abounded | es: que-sobra, que-sobraba, que-sobró | fr: être-en-abondance | de: ueberfliessen, überströmt Matt 14:20; Matt 15:37; Mark 12:44; Luke 9:17; Luke 21:4

3. cause to abound, lavish (3×) The causative-transitive sense: to cause something to abound or to lavish upon someone. God is typically the subject — 'God is able to make all grace abound to you' (2 Cor 9:8), 'which he lavished upon us' (Eph 1:8). Spanish hacer abundar and the English 'cause to abound' both require a transitive construction foreign to the intransitive senses. First Thessalonians 3:12 captures Paul's prayer that the Lord would 'cause you to abound in love.' ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: he-lavished, may-overflow, to-cause-to-abound | es: hacer-abundar, haga-sobreabundar, hizo-abundar | fr: surabonder, être-en-abondance | de: ueberfliessen 2Cor 9:8; Eph 1:8; 1Thess 3:12

4. be given abundance (passive) (2×) The passive or divine-passive sense: to be given abundance, to have more bestowed upon one. Found in Jesus' enigmatic saying, 'To the one who has, more will be given, and he will have abundance' (Matt 13:12, 25:29). Spanish le sobreabundará and German überströmt preserve the sense that the surplus comes from outside — it is received, not generated. This passive frames abundance as gift rather than achievement. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: he-will-have-abundance | es: abundará, le-sobreabundará | fr: être-en-abondance | de: überströmt Matt 13:12; Matt 25:29

περισσός G4053 Adj-GNS (23×)

Exceeding, abundant, more than; comparative surplus, extraordinary degree, or that which is superfluous or advantageous

Rooted in περί ('beyond, around'), this adjective captures everything that spills over the expected measure. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus challenges his followers to do what is 'more than' others do (Matt 5:47) — Spanish 'más' and German 'übermäßig' both tracking the comparative force. Mark uses the adverbial form for the disciples' astonishment 'beyond all measure' at Jesus calming the storm (Mark 6:51). But the word also has a cooler side: Paul calls further appeal about the Corinthian collection 'unnecessary' (2 Cor 9:1), and in Romans 3:1 he asks what 'advantage' the Jew has. From lavish abundance to pragmatic surplus, the word measures the distance between enough and beyond.

1. more, greater (comparative) (18×) The comparative core: more, greater, exceeding in degree or quantity. Jesus asks 'What more are you doing than others?' (Matt 5:47), and the scribe affirms that love exceeds all burnt offerings (Mark 12:33). This is the word's most frequent deployment — measuring one thing against another and finding it surpassing. Spanish 'más/mayor' and the consistent genitive-of-comparison construction confirm the comparative force across nearly all Gospel and Epistle occurrences. MORE AND GREATER

en: beyond, greater, more | es: de-más, mayor, más | fr: excessif, excédant | de: ueberfluessig, übermäßig Matt 5:37; Matt 5:47; Matt 11:9; Matt 23:14; Mark 12:33

2. abundantly, exceedingly (3×) Adverbial or intensive use denoting exceeding measure or extraordinary abundance. The disciples were 'exceedingly astonished' (Mark 6:51), the healed man proclaimed the news 'all the more' despite being told to keep silent (Mark 7:36), and Jesus promises life 'abundantly' (John 10:10). Spanish 'abundantemente/sobremanera' and the shift from adjective to adverb mark a move from comparison to sheer intensity — not 'more than X' but 'overwhelmingly, beyond all bounds.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance, abundantly | es: abundancia, abundantemente, sobremanera | fr: excessif | de: ueberfluessig Mark 6:51; Mark 7:36; John 10:10

3. unnecessary, superfluous (1×) That which exceeds necessity and is therefore superfluous or unnecessary. Paul tells the Corinthians it is 'superfluous' for him to write further about the collection (2 Cor 9:1). Spanish 'superfluo' isolates this sense cleanly: the surplus here is not welcome abundance but redundancy. The same root meaning — 'beyond the needed amount' — takes on a dismissive rather than celebratory tone. GAIN AND GREED

en: unnecessary | es: superfluo | fr: excédant | de: ueberfluessig 2Cor 9:1

4. advantage, superiority (1×) Substantive use denoting advantage, benefit, or preeminence — the 'surplus value' of a condition or status. Paul opens Romans 3 asking 'What then is the advantage of the Jew?' (Rom 3:1). Spanish 'superior' and the rhetorical context frame this as a measured assessment of relative worth. The excess here is not quantity but privilege — what one party has that another lacks. GAIN AND GREED

en: advantage | es: superior | fr: excédant | de: ueberfluessig Rom 3:1

περισσός G4054

beyond regular, extraordinary, exceeding; strange, striking (περισσός/περιττός)

This adjective (from περί) describes what exceeds normal bounds: prodigious gifts, extraordinary knowledge, striking literary style. It can mean 'out of the common,' 'strange,' or 'exceptional.' Aristotle uses it of the dog as the most companionable of all animals. The New Testament asks 'What do you do that is extraordinary?' In literature, τὸ περιττόν refers to an ornate, striking quality. The word spans positive excellence and negative oddity, united by exceeding the ordinary.

περισσός G4055

more exceeding, more extraordinary (comparative of περισσός); adverbial uses

The comparative form of περισσός, meaning 'more exceeding' or 'more extraordinary.' It can function adjectivally (describing something as more exceptional) or adverbially (meaning 'more abundantly' or 'more exceedingly'). The semantic range follows the positive degree: exceeding normal bounds in quantity, quality, or unusualness. The word emphasizes surpassing what is already beyond the ordinary.

περισσός G4056

more abundantly, more exceedingly (adverbial comparative form of περισσός)

This adverbial form of the comparative περισσότερος intensifies the manner or degree of an action: doing something 'more abundantly' or 'more exceedingly.' It functions in New Testament Greek to emphasize surplus, overflow, or exceptional measure. The word builds on the root sense of περί (around, beyond) to express going beyond normal limits in an even greater way.

περισσός G4057 Adv (17×)

Exceedingly, abundantly, all the more; an adverb expressing degree beyond the ordinary or expected.

This adverb intensifies actions or states beyond normal measure, expressing 'exceedingly,' 'all the more,' or 'far more abundantly.' It often marks escalation: the crowd cries out all the more for crucifixion (Matt 27:23; Mark 15:14), the disciples are exceedingly astonished at Jesus' teaching on wealth (Mark 10:26), and Peter insists all the more vehemently that he will not deny the Lord (Mark 14:31). The Spanish 'más-abundantemente' and 'más-aún' capture the comparative force, while German 'umso-mehr' highlights the intensifying 'all the more' nuance that pervades its NT usage.

exceedingly, all the more (17×) Expressing a degree that surpasses the ordinary or expected — 'exceedingly,' 'all the more,' 'beyond measure.' In narrative contexts it marks emotional or rhetorical escalation, as when the crowd shouts 'all the more' (Mark 15:14) or the disciples are 'exceedingly astonished' (Mark 10:26). Spanish 'excesivamente' and German 'umso-mehr' together capture both the absolute and comparative dimensions of this intensifier. MORE AND GREATER en: exceedingly, more-abundantly, more-exceedingly | es: excesivamente, más-abundantemente, más-aún | fr: excessivement | de: umso-mehr, περισσῶς Matt 27:23; Mark 10:26; Mark 14:31; Mark 15:14; Acts 26:11

περιστερ-ά G4058 N-NFP (10×)

Dove, pigeon — the common dove or pigeon, both as sacrificial bird and as symbol of the Holy Spirit's descent

The noun peristera (περιστερά) refers to the dove or pigeon (Columba livia and related species), appearing in both literal and figurative NT contexts. Literally, doves were sold in the temple courts for sacrifice, and Jesus overturned the tables of dove-sellers during the temple cleansing (Matt 21:12; Mark 11:15; John 2:14-16). Figuratively, the Holy Spirit descended 'like a dove' upon Jesus at his baptism — an image attested in all four Gospels (Matt 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32). Jesus also instructs his disciples to be 'innocent as doves' (Matt 10:16), pairing shrewdness with guilelessness. Spanish 'paloma,' Hindi 'kabutar,' Arabic 'hamama,' Korean 'bidulgi,' and Swahili 'njiwa' all designate the same bird across every context.

dove, pigeon (10×) The common dove or pigeon, used both literally and figuratively. Literal uses include the sacrificial birds sold in the temple precincts (Matt 21:12; Mark 11:15; John 2:14-16) and Mary's offering of a pair of doves (Luke 2:24 par.). Figurative uses encompass the Holy Spirit's descent 'like a dove' at Jesus' baptism (Matt 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32) and the proverbial instruction to be 'innocent as doves' (Matt 10:16). Singular, plural, and genitive forms across all languages — Spanish 'paloma/palomas,' Arabic 'hamama/hamam,' Korean 'bidulgi,' Swahili 'njiwa' — confirm a single referent with no semantic split. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: a-dove, dove, doves | es: de-palomas, paloma, palomas | fr: colombe | de: Taube Matt 3:16; Matt 10:16; Matt 21:12; Mark 1:10; Mark 11:15

περιτέμνω G4059 V-ANP (18×)

To circumcise (active) or to be circumcised (passive/middle); the covenantal rite of cutting away the foreskin.

Peritemno stands at the center of one of the New Testament's most consequential debates: must Gentile believers undergo circumcision to be saved? The verb appears in both active voice (performing the rite) and passive/middle voice (undergoing it), and the distinction matters theologically. In its active sense, it describes Abraham circumcising Isaac on the eighth day (Acts 7:8), the customary circumcision of Jesus (Luke 2:21) and John the Baptist's father's generation (Luke 1:59), and Moses' law commanding the practice (John 7:22). In the passive, it becomes the flashpoint of the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15:1, 5, 24) and Paul's argument that circumcision profits nothing if the law is not kept (Gal 5:2-3; 6:12-13).

1. be circumcised (passive/middle) (11×) To undergo or receive circumcision, in passive or middle voice, whether as a physical rite of the Mosaic covenant or in a spiritual/figurative sense. Spanish 'ser circuncidado/circuncidaros' and French 'circoncire' capture the recipient's perspective. This is the sense that dominates the apostolic controversy: the Pharisaic believers insist Gentiles must 'be circumcised' (Acts 15:1, 5), Paul resists having Titus circumcised (Gal 2:3), and he warns that those who 'get circumcised' obligate themselves to the whole law (Gal 5:2-3). Paul also spiritualizes the passive in Colossians 2:11, where believers are 'circumcised with a circumcision not made by hands.' CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: being-circumcised, having-been-circumcised, let-him-be-circumcised | es: a-circuncidaros, a-ser-circuncidado, circuncidaros | fr: circoncire | de: beschneiden, beschneidet Acts 15:1; Acts 15:24; 1Cor 7:18; Gal 2:3

2. circumcise (active) (7×) To perform the act of circumcision on someone, in active voice, cutting away the foreskin as a covenantal or ritual act. German 'beschneiden' and Spanish 'circuncidar' present the agent's action straightforwardly. Abraham circumcised Isaac on the eighth day (Acts 7:8), the neighbors sought to circumcise John according to custom (Luke 1:59), and Jesus was circumcised on the eighth day (Luke 2:21). Jesus points out that Moses gave circumcision and the people circumcise on the Sabbath (John 7:22), using the active voice to highlight human agency in the covenantal rite. Paul circumcised Timothy strategically (Acts 16:3), showing the rite could still be practiced voluntarily. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: circumcised, to-circumcise, you-circumcise | es: a-circuncidar, circuncidar, circuncidáis | fr: circoncire | de: beschneiden, beschneidet Luke 1:59; Luke 2:21; John 7:22; Acts 7:8; Acts 15:5

περιτίθημι G4060 V-PIA-3P (8×)

To place around, put on, or set upon; used of clothing someone, enclosing something, or metaphorically bestowing honor or dishonor.

Peritithemi combines peri (around) and tithemi (to place) — to put something around or upon someone. The NT uses it in strikingly concrete scenes of the Passion: a purple robe placed around Jesus in mockery (Matt 27:28, Mark 15:17, John 19:2), a sponge of vinegar placed on a reed and lifted to his mouth (Matt 27:48, Mark 15:36). In parables, it describes a landowner setting a hedge around a vineyard (Matt 21:33, Mark 12:1). Paul then pivots the word to metaphor in 1 Corinthians 12:23, where members deemed 'less honorable' are clothed with greater honor.

place around, put on (8×) To place or put something around, upon, or on a person or object. In the Passion narratives, this verb describes the soldiers placing a purple cloak on Jesus (Matt 27:28, Mark 15:17, John 19:2) and putting a vinegar-soaked sponge on a reed to reach his mouth (Matt 27:48, Mark 15:36). In the vineyard parables, it describes setting a fence or hedge around a vineyard (Matt 21:33, Mark 12:1). Paul employs it metaphorically in 1 Cor 12:23-24 for 'clothing' less honorable body parts with greater dignity. Spanish 'poner alrededor' and German 'aufsetzen/anlegen' capture both the circular placement and the act of dressing. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: having-put-around, placed-around, putting | es: habiendo-puesto-alrededor, habiendo-puesto-en, ponemos-alrededor | fr: appliquer, mettre-autour | de: aufsetzen, legt-an Matt 21:33; Matt 27:28; Matt 27:48; Mark 12:1; Mark 15:17

περιτομ-ή G4061 N-AFS (36×)

Circumcision; the covenant rite of cutting the foreskin, and by metonymy the Jewish people

The noun denoting the Jewish rite of removing the foreskin, commanded as a covenant sign to Abraham (Gen 17) and central to New Testament debates about Gentile inclusion. Paul uses the word in two overlapping ways: as the physical act itself (Rom 2:25-29; Phil 3:3) and as a metonym for the Jewish community ('those of the circumcision,' Acts 10:45; Gal 2:12). This dual usage drives some of the most theologically charged passages in the epistles, where Paul argues that 'circumcision of the heart' supersedes the outward rite (Rom 2:29). Spanish 'circuncision,' French 'circoncision,' and German 'Beschneidung' all reflect the single concrete act, while the metonymic extension is carried by context.

circumcision (36×) The rite of cutting away the foreskin as a sign of covenant membership, and by extension the Jewish people or covenant community defined by that rite. John 7:22-23 traces it to the patriarchs; Acts 10:45 and 11:2 use it as a group label ('those of the circumcision'). Paul's theological argument in Romans 2:25-29 and Galatians 5:6 redefines the term spiritually. The cross-linguistic uniformity—Spanish 'circuncision,' French 'circoncision,' German 'Beschneidung'—reflects the concrete referent, while the metonymic sense is always context-driven. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: circumcision | es: circuncisión | fr: circoncision | de: Beschneidung, περιτομῆς John 7:22; John 7:23; Acts 7:8; Acts 10:45; Acts 11:2

περιτρέπω G4062 V-PIA-3S (1×)

to turn around, drive mad; to upset or overturn

This verb means to turn around, overturn, or drive to madness. In Acts 26:24, Festus accuses Paul: 'Your great learning is turning you mad' (εἰς μανίαν περιτρέπει). The term can mean to upset, overturn, or drive someone to insanity. Festus interprets Paul's passionate testimony about resurrection as evidence of madness caused by excessive study. The verb captures the governor's perception of Paul's message as unbalancing rationality.

(1×) To turn or drive someone to madness, or to upset and overturn. Festus's exclamation reflects his inability to comprehend Paul's proclamation of Christ's resurrection, attributing it to mental instability from too much learning. The multilingual evidence ('is-turning,' 'te-trastornan,' 'rendre-fou') captures the sense of driving to madness, revealing how the gospel appeared as foolishness to Roman officials. MADNESS INSANITY

en: is-turning | es: te-trastornan | fr: rendre-fou | de: περιτρέπει Acts 26:24

περιτρέχω G4063 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to run around, run about everywhere

This verb means to run around or about, often hurriedly and in all directions. In Mark 6:55, people 'ran around' (περιέδραμον) the whole region, bringing the sick to Jesus on mats wherever they heard he was. The term conveys rapid, widespread movement throughout an area. It emphasizes the urgency and enthusiasm with which people sought Jesus' healing power.

(1×) To run around or about, often urgently and widely. Mark's description of people running throughout the region to bring the sick to Jesus captures the fervor and hope generated by his healing ministry. The multilingual glosses ('they-ran-around,' 'recorrieron,' 'courir-de-tous-côtés,' 'umherlaufen') emphasize the widespread, hurried movement as news of Jesus spread and people sought his touch. RUNNING AND RACING

en: they-ran-around | es: recorrieron | fr: courir-de-tous-côtés | de: umherlaufen Mark 6:55

περιφέρω G4064 V-PNA (3×)

to carry around, to bear about; to transport something from place to place or keep it with one constantly

This verb means to carry something around with you, bearing it from place to place. People brought the sick on beds, 'carrying them around' to wherever they heard Jesus was (Mark 6:55). Paul speaks of 'carrying about' in the body the dying of Jesus (2 Cor 4:10). He warns against being 'carried about' by every wind of doctrine (Eph 4:14). Whether physically transporting the sick, spiritually bearing Christ's sufferings, or being swept along by false teaching, the word emphasizes constant motion and accompaniment.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize movement and transport: English 'being-carried-about/carrying-about/to-carry-around', Spanish 'a-llevar/llevados-por-doquier/llevando', French 'porter-autour/transporter', German 'umhertragen'. The lexicon defines it as 'carry round' with meanings including 'carry about with one', 'hand round at table', 'move round'. Mark 6:55 describes physically carrying sick people around to Jesus. 2 Cor 4:10 speaks of spiritually carrying about Jesus' death in the body. Eph 4:14 warns against being 'carried about' by false doctrine. Constant movement or accompaniment unites these uses. BEARING AND CARRYING en: being-carried-about, carrying-about, to-carry-around | es: a-llevar, llevados-por-doquier, llevando | fr: porter-autour, transporter | de: umhertragen Mark 6:55; 2Cor 4:10; Eph 4:14

περιφρον-έω G4065 V-PMA-3S (1×)

to despise, disregard, treat with contempt

This verb means to despise, disregard, or treat with contempt. Paul uses it in Titus 2:15 to tell Titus: 'Let no one disregard you' (μηδείς σου περιφρονείτω). The term conveys looking down on or treating as worthless. Paul's command encourages Titus to teach with authority so that his youth or position would not be despised. Classical usage included the sense of thinking around or about, but typically it meant to despise.

(1×) To despise or treat with contempt. Paul's exhortation to Titus emphasizes the need for authoritative teaching that commands respect, lest hearers dismiss or look down on the young minister. The cross-lingual evidence ('let-disregard,' 'menosprecie,' 'verachten') consistently captures disrespect and contempt, which Paul instructs Titus to prevent through faithful proclamation with full authority. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: let-disregard | es: menosprecie | fr: περιφρονείτω | de: verachten Titus 2:15

περίχωρ-ος G4066 Adj-DFS (9×)

The surrounding region or countryside; the area around a particular place.

A substantivized adjective meaning 'the region round about,' typically referring to the countryside or territory surrounding a notable city or landmark. When Matthew reports that 'all the region around the Jordan' came out to John (Matt 3:5), or that Jesus' fame spread through 'all the surrounding region' of Galilee (Mark 1:28), the word maps a geographical zone defined by its center point. Spanish uses both 'comarca' (district) and 'región alrededor' (region around), while French 'environs' and German 'Umgebung' both emphasize the encircling spatial relationship.

surrounding region (9×) The surrounding region, countryside, or district encircling a named place — a substantivized feminine of the adjective meaning 'round about.' In the Gospels it consistently designates the geographical area around a city, river, or territory: the Jordan region (Matt 3:5, Luke 3:3), the land of Gennesaret (Matt 14:35), or the wider Galilean countryside (Mark 1:28, Luke 4:14, 4:37). The Spanish dual rendering 'comarca' and 'región alrededor' captures both the administrative-district sense and the purely spatial sense that the Greek word holds together. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: region-around, surrounding-region | es: comarca, región, región-alrededor | fr: environs, région-environnante | de: Umgebung Matt 3:5; Matt 14:35; Mark 1:28; Luke 3:3; Luke 4:14

περίψ-ημα G4067 N-NNS (1×)

offscouring, refuse; the scum of society

A noun meaning offscouring, refuse, or scum—what is worthless and wiped away. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 4:13 alongside 'scum' (perikatharma) to describe how the world views apostles: as 'the refuse of all things.' The term denotes the lowest, most despised status. Paul embraces this degradation to show the radical contrast between worldly values and kingdom realities, where weakness and humility are honored.

(1×) Refuse or offscouring, the scum wiped off and discarded as worthless. Paul's stark self-description reveals how the world views apostolic ministry—as the lowest, most contemptible thing. The multilingual glosses ('refuse,' 'desperdicio,' 'déchet,' 'Abschaum') uniformly emphasize worthlessness and rejection, highlighting the upside-down nature of God's kingdom where the despised become honored. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: refuse | es: desperdicio | fr: déchet | de: Abschaum 1Cor 4:13

περπερ-εύομαι G4068 V-PIM/P-3S (1×)

to boast, brag, act arrogantly

This verb means to boast, brag, or act with arrogant pride. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 13:4 to describe what love does not do: 'Love does not brag' (οὐ περπερεύεται). The term captures self-promoting arrogance and boastful display. In the context of love's character, Paul contrasts humble love with prideful self-exaltation. True love does not parade itself or seek to impress others with its own importance.

(1×) To boast or brag arrogantly. Paul's description of love's nature includes the negative characteristic that love does not engage in self-promoting boasting or arrogant display. The cross-lingual evidence ('brags,' 'se-jacta,' 'se-vanter,' 'sich-aufblasen') consistently emphasizes prideful self-exaltation, which stands in stark contrast to the humility and other-centeredness that characterize genuine love. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: brags | es: se-jacta | fr: se-vanter | de: sich-aufblasen 1Cor 13:4

γῆ G4069 N-AFS (1×)

Persis; a Christian woman greeted by Paul in Romans 16:12

A personal name meaning 'Persian woman,' belonging to a Christian believer in Rome whom Paul greets warmly. In Romans 16:12, Paul calls her 'beloved Persis, who has worked hard in the Lord.' The name suggests Persian ethnic origin or heritage. Paul's commendation highlights her labor in ministry, using the same verb (kopiao) he applies to other faithful workers. She exemplifies devoted service in the early church.

(1×) The personal name of a Christian woman in Rome, commended by Paul for her hard work in the Lord. The name indicates Persian background, and Paul's affectionate greeting ('beloved') along with recognition of her labor shows she was a valued co-worker in gospel ministry, illustrating women's significant roles in the apostolic church. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: Persis | es: a-Persída | fr: Persis | de: Persis Rom 16:12

πέρῡσι G4070 Adv (2×)

last year, a year ago

A simple time marker meaning 'last year' or 'a year ago.' Paul uses it twice in his appeal for the Corinthians to complete their collection for Jerusalem. They had begun their generous intention 'a year ago' (2 Cor 8:10), and their readiness 'since last year' had stirred the Macedonians to action (2 Cor 9:2). The word marks the passage of a full year, emphasizing both their early enthusiasm and their subsequent delay. What began well needs finishing—don't let another year pass.

(2×) A year ago, marking the time when the Corinthians first committed to the Jerusalem collection. Paul reminds them of their early eagerness—they were ready 'last year,' their zeal sparked giving among other churches. But a year has passed without completion. The universal clarity of this term across languages ('el año pasado', 'l'année dernière', 'voriges Jahr') shows it's a straightforward temporal marker, used here to create gentle pressure: what you started twelve months ago, finish now. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: last-year | es: el-año-pasado | fr: l'année-dernière | de: voriges-Jahr 2Cor 8:10; 2Cor 9:2

πετεινός G4071 N-ANP (14×)

Bird, fowl — winged creatures of the air, used collectively for wild birds in nature and parable imagery

Derived from the adjective peteinós ('able to fly, winged'), this noun denotes birds collectively, particularly wild birds of the open sky. In the Gospels it appears prominently in Jesus' teaching: the birds of the air neither sow nor reap yet the heavenly Father feeds them (Matt 6:26), and the birds come to nest in the mustard tree's branches (Matt 13:32). The parable of the sower uses birds as agents who devour seed fallen on the path (Matt 13:4; Mark 4:4). Spanish 'aves,' French 'oiseau,' and German 'Vögel' all converge on the same natural category — wild flying creatures — confirming a tight, monosemous profile across all 14 New Testament occurrences.

birds (14×) Birds collectively, the winged creatures of the air, encompassing wild birds in general rather than any specific species. In Jesus' teaching, they serve as exemplars of divine providence (Matt 6:26, 'the birds of the air') and as parabolic agents (Matt 13:4, birds devouring seed; Matt 13:32, birds nesting in branches). Cross-linguistic evidence is uniform — eng: birds, spa: aves, fra: oiseau, deu: Vögel — indicating no semantic subdivision. All 14 occurrences carry this single collective sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: birds, of-birds | es: aves, de-aves | fr: oiseau | de: Voegel, Vogel Matt 6:26; Matt 8:20; Matt 13:4; Matt 13:32; Mark 4:4

πέτομαι G4072 V-PPM/P-DNP (5×)
To fly; of birds and winged creatures soaring through the sky, used exclusively in Revelation's apocalyptic visions.
A verb meaning to fly, confined in the NT entirely to the book of Revelation, where it appears in vivid apocalyptic imagery. The fourth living creature around the throne is 'like a flying eagle' (Rev 4:7). An eagle flies through mid-heaven crying woes upon the earth (8:13). The woman is given eagle's wings to fly into the wilderness (12:14). An angel flies in mid-heaven proclaiming the eternal gospel (14:6), and another angel calls to birds flying in mid-heaven to gather for the great supper (19:17). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'volando,' French 'fliegen,' German 'fliegen' — are uniformly straightforward.

(5×) To fly — the motion of soaring or moving through the air on wings. All five NT occurrences appear in Revelation's apocalyptic imagery, lending the word a visionary, cosmic register. The fourth living creature resembles a flying eagle (Rev 4:7). An eagle (or vulture) flies through mid-heaven announcing three woes (8:13). The persecuted woman receives great eagle wings to fly to safety in the wilderness (12:14), echoing Exodus imagery of God bearing Israel 'on eagles' wings.' An angel flies in mid-heaven with the eternal gospel (14:6), and birds flying in mid-heaven are summoned to the eschatological feast (19:17). The Spanish 'volando/vuele' and German/French 'fliegen' all render the concept with direct equivalents. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: flying, she-might-fly | es: volando, vuele | fr: fliegen | de: fliegen Rev 4:7; Rev 8:13; Rev 12:14; Rev 14:6; Rev 19:17

πέτρα G4073 N-AFP (15×)
Rock, bedrock, cliff; a large solid mass of stone, used literally and as a metaphor for firm foundation.
Refers to a large, immovable mass of stone—bedrock, cliff face, or rocky outcrop—as distinct from lithos, which typically denotes a detachable stone or building block. The word carries enormous theological weight in one of the New Testament's most discussed passages: 'on this petra I will build my church' (Matt 16:18). Elsewhere it appears in practical and apocalyptic contexts alike: the wise builder constructs on rock (Matt 7:24-25), Joseph of Arimathea's tomb is hewn from living rock (Matt 27:60), rocks split at the crucifixion (Matt 27:51), and terrified humanity begs the rocks to fall on them (Rev 6:15-16). Paul identifies the rock that followed Israel in the wilderness as Christ (1 Cor 10:4). Spanish distinguishes 'roca' (bedrock) from 'piedra' (stone), mirroring the petra/lithos distinction.

rock, bedrock, cliff (15×) A large, solid mass of stone—bedrock, cliff, or rocky formation—as opposed to a loose or hewn stone (lithos). Used literally for the rock on which the wise man builds (Matt 7:24-25), the tomb carved from rock (Matt 27:60), and the rocks that split at the crucifixion (Matt 27:51). Metaphorically foundational in Matt 16:18 ('on this rock I will build my church') and in Paul's identification of the wilderness rock as Christ (1 Cor 10:4). Apocalyptic usage in Rev 6:15-16 pictures people hiding among rocks. Spanish 'roca' versus 'piedra' mirrors the Greek petra/lithos distinction, confirming a separate semantic profile for massive, immovable stone. ROCK AND CLIFF en: a-rock, rock, rocks | es: peñas, piedra, roca | fr: roc, rocher | de: Fels Matt 7:24; Matt 7:25; Matt 16:18; Matt 27:51; Matt 27:60

πέτρος G4074 N-VMS (156×)
Peter; Simon Peter, the leading apostle, named 'Rock' by Jesus
Petros means 'stone' or 'rock' in Greek, but in the New Testament it functions almost exclusively as the personal name of Simon Peter, the fisherman from Bethsaida whom Jesus called first among the Twelve. The name itself is a translation of the Aramaic Kepha (Cephas), bestowed by Jesus in the declaration of Matthew 16:18: 'You are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church.' With 156 occurrences, Peter's name appears in every Gospel, throughout Acts, and in epistolary references, making him the most frequently named disciple in the New Testament.

Peter (proper name) (156×) The proper name of Simon Peter, the foremost apostle among the Twelve, given the name Petros ('Rock') by Jesus as a translation of Aramaic Kepha (John 1:42, Matt 16:18). Used 156 times across all grammatical cases, it appears in narratives of his call (Matt 4:18), his confession (Matt 16:16), his denial (Matt 26:69–75), and his leadership of the early church (Acts 2:14). Translations either transliterate — 'Petros' (Spanish), 'Petrus' (German) — or translate the meaning: 'Pierre' (French, literally 'stone'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Petros | es: Pétros | fr: Pierre | de: Petrus Matt 4:18; Matt 10:2; Matt 14:28; Matt 14:29; Matt 15:15

πετρ-ώδης G4075 Adj-ANS (4×)
Rocky, stony; describing shallow ground with a thin layer of soil over bedrock.
An adjective meaning 'rock-like' or 'stony,' petrōdes appears exclusively in the Parable of the Sower and its explanation (Matt 13:5, 20; Mark 4:5, 16). It describes ground where a thin layer of earth sits atop a slab of rock—seed springs up quickly there but has no root depth and withers in the sun. The Spanish 'pedregoso,' French 'pierreux,' and German 'steinig' all confirm the consistent rendering across traditions. This is not ground scattered with loose stones but shallow soil over bedrock, a crucial agricultural distinction.

(4×) Rocky or stony ground, specifically shallow soil overlaying bedrock where plants sprout quickly but cannot establish deep roots. All four occurrences appear in the Sower parable (Matt 13:5, 20; Mark 4:5, 16), where it symbolizes those who receive the word with joy but fall away under pressure. The multilingual glosses uniformly point to stony terrain—Spanish 'pedregoso,' French 'pierreux,' German 'steinig'—confirming a stable, concrete agricultural image. STONE AND ROCK
en: rocky-ground | es: pedregoso | fr: pierreux | de: steinig, πετρώδη Matt 13:5; Matt 13:20; Mark 4:5; Mark 4:16

πήγανον G4076 N-ANS (1×)
rue; an herb (Ruta graveolens) used for seasoning and medicine
A noun denoting rue, a strongly scented herb used in cooking and medicine. Jesus mentions it in Luke 11:42, criticizing Pharisees who tithe 'rue and every herb' while neglecting justice and the love of God. Rue was cultivated in gardens and subject to tithing according to Pharisaic interpretation. Jesus' point is not to condemn careful observance but to rebuke majoring in minors while missing what truly matters—mercy, justice, and love.

(1×) The herb rue, a garden plant with aromatic leaves. Jesus' critique of Pharisaic scrupulosity uses rue as an example of meticulous tithing of even small herbs, contrasted with neglect of weightier matters. The cross-lingual glosses ('rue,' 'ruda') identify this specific botanical plant, highlighting how religious precision can mask moral failure when externals replace heart transformation. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: rue | es: ruda | fr: rue | de: πήγανον Luke 11:42

πηγή G4077 N-GFS (11×)
Spring, fountain, source — a natural water source; figuratively, the origin of life, blessing, or defilement
The noun πηγή (pege) means a spring, fountain, or source of water. Its most theologically rich appearance is Jesus' conversation with the Samaritan woman, where he contrasts Jacob's well with the 'spring of water welling up to eternal life' that he gives (John 4:6, 14). Mark uses it for the hemorrhaging woman's 'source of blood' that dried up at Jesus' touch (Mark 5:29). James asks whether a spring can pour out both fresh and brackish water from the same opening (Jas 3:11-12), making it a metaphor for the tongue's inconsistency. In Revelation, springs are objects of both judgment (Rev 8:10; 14:7; 16:4) and eschatological promise — the Lamb will guide his people to 'springs of living water' (Rev 7:17; 21:6). Spanish 'fuente/manantial' and French 'source/fontaine' cover the range.

spring, fountain, source of water (11×) A literal spring or fountain of water, a natural source from which water flows. Jacob's well at Sychar is called a pege (John 4:6), and Revelation's judgment visions target rivers and springs (Rev 8:10; 14:7; 16:4). The 2 Peter 2:17 description of false teachers as 'springs without water' depends on the literal sense. Spanish 'fuente/manantial' and French 'source' translate directly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flow, spring, springs | es: fuente, fuentes | fr: source | de: Quellen Mark 5:29; John 4:6; John 4:14; Jas 3:11

πήγνῡμι G4078 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to pitch, set up (a tent or tabernacle); to establish firmly

This verb means to make firm, fix, or pitch (especially a tent or tabernacle). In Hebrews 8:2, the author describes the true tabernacle 'which the Lord pitched' (ἔπηξεν), not man. The term emphasizes establishing or setting up firmly. Here it contrasts the earthly tabernacle made by human hands with the heavenly sanctuary established by God. The verb underscores divine initiative and permanence.

(1×) To pitch or set up, particularly a tent or tabernacle. The author of Hebrews uses this term to emphasize that the true, heavenly sanctuary was established by God himself, not by human construction. The multilingual glosses ('pitched,' 'erigió,' 'aufschlagen') consistently emphasize the action of setting up or establishing, highlighting divine agency in creating the true place of worship and mediation. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: pitched | es: erigió | fr: aufschlagen | de: aufschlagen Heb 8:2

πηδάλι-ον G4079 N-GNP (2×)

a rudder or steering paddle for guiding a ship's direction

The nautical term for a ship's steering mechanism. Greek ships typically had a pair of side rudders (steering paddles) rather than a single stern rudder. In Acts 27:40, sailors 'loosed the rudder bands' to steer toward shore during Paul's shipwreck. James 3:4 uses it metaphorically: though ships are large and driven by strong winds, 'a very small rudder' guides wherever the pilot wishes—so too the tongue, tiny yet powerful, steers the whole person. Ancient ships used long oars or paddles at the stern for steering.

(2×) The steering mechanism of a vessel, literal in Acts (navigating a storm-tossed ship toward shore) and metaphorical in James (illustrating the tongue's disproportionate power). Greek ships had dual steering-oars lashed in place when not in use; Paul's shipwreck account mentions releasing these 'rudder bands' to maneuver. James seizes on the contrast: massive ships, tiny rudders—yet the small guides the great. The universal nautical term across languages shows this is standard maritime equipment, repurposed by James for moral instruction. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: rudder, rudders | es: timones, timón | fr: gouvernail, πηδαλίου | de: Steuerruder, πηδαλίων Acts 27:40; Jas 3:4

πηλίκ-ος G4080 Adj-NMS (2×)

how great, how large; of what size or magnitude

An interrogative or exclamatory adjective asking 'how large?' or declaring 'how great!' Paul uses it for emphasis about physical size in Galatians 6:11—'See with what large letters I write to you with my own hand'—possibly referring to poor eyesight or simply emphasizing the personal nature of this final section. In Hebrews 7:4, it introduces the greatness of Melchizedek: 'Consider how great this man was' to whom even Abraham gave a tithe. The word measures magnitude, whether literal dimensions or metaphorical greatness.

(2×) How large or how great, measuring either physical size or personal greatness. In Galatians, Paul draws attention to his large handwriting—whether due to visual impairment or for emphasis, the size itself matters. In Hebrews, the magnitude is Melchizedek's greatness, measured by the fact that Abraham, father of the faithful, paid him tithes. The multilingual agreement ('cuán grande', 'wie gross', 'how great') shows this is a straightforward interrogative of size or degree, used to focus attention and create emphasis. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: how-great, what-large | es: con-cuán-grandes, cuán-grande | fr: wie-gross | de: wie-gross Gal 6:11; Heb 7:4

πηλός G4081 N-AMS (6×)

Mud, clay; soft moist earth that can be shaped or applied, used exclusively in John 9 for the healing of the blind man.

Pelos refers to mud or clay — soft, moist earth that can be molded or spread. While the word had wide application in classical Greek (potter's clay, mortar, even muddy wine lees), every New Testament occurrence belongs to a single vivid narrative: Jesus making clay from saliva and earth, anointing a blind man's eyes, and sending him to wash in the Pool of Siloam (John 9:6-15). The dual translations in several languages are revealing: Spanish offers both 'lodo' (mud) and 'barro' (clay), and English toggles between 'mud' and 'clay,' reflecting the substance's dual nature as both raw earth and something deliberately shaped.

mud, clay (6×) Mud or clay — soft, moist earth capable of being shaped or applied to a surface. The multilingual evidence reveals an interesting semantic spread: Spanish distinguishes 'lodo' (mud, formless) from 'barro' (clay, workable), English alternates between 'mud' and 'clay,' French uses 'boue' (mud), while German 'Lehm' emphasizes the potter's-clay quality. All six NT occurrences cluster in John 9:6-15, the healing of the man born blind. Jesus' act of making clay from spittle and earth echoes Genesis creation imagery (God forming Adam from earth), a connection the early Church Fathers frequently noted. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: Mud, clay, mud | es: Lodo, barro, lodo | fr: boue | de: Lehm John 9:6; John 9:11; John 9:14; John 9:15

πήρα G4082 N-AFS (6×)

A traveler's bag or wallet; a leather pouch for carrying provisions on a journey.

Pera denotes a leather bag or wallet used by travelers to carry food and basic supplies. In every NT occurrence, Jesus instructs his disciples to go without one — a striking command to depend entirely on the hospitality of those they serve. Matthew 10:10 and Luke 10:4 record this instruction for the mission of the Twelve and the Seventy-two; Mark 6:8 permits a staff but forbids the bag. Luke 22:35-36 revisits the instruction, with Jesus asking, 'When I sent you without bag or purse, did you lack anything?' The German 'Reisetasche' (travel-bag) captures the function precisely.

(6×) A traveler's leather bag or wallet for carrying provisions — the standard kit for someone on a journey. Spanish 'alforja' (saddlebag, knapsack), French 'besace' (double-pouched beggar's bag), and German 'Reisetasche' (travel bag) each emphasize slightly different aspects: the carrying capacity, the itinerant lifestyle, or the journey itself. All NT uses (Matt 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3; 10:4; 22:35-36) occur in mission instructions where Jesus forbids his disciples from taking one, making the pera a symbol of radical dependence on God's provision rather than self-sufficient preparedness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bag, bag | es: alforja | fr: besace | de: Reisetasche, πήραν, πήρας Matt 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3; Luke 10:4; Luke 22:35

πῆχυς G4083 N-AMS (4×)

A cubit, an ancient unit of measure (~18 inches / 45 cm); the forearm from elbow to fingertip.

Originally denoting the forearm from elbow to fingertip, pēchys became the standard ancient unit of linear measure, roughly 18 inches or 45 centimeters. Jesus uses it figuratively when asking who can add a single cubit to their lifespan or stature (Matt 6:27; Luke 12:25), exposing the futility of anxiety. In John 21:8 it measures the literal distance from shore, and in Revelation 21:17 it specifies the wall thickness of the New Jerusalem. The Spanish 'codo,' French

'coudée,' and German 'Elle' all preserve the forearm-derived measurement unit.

(4×) A cubit, a unit of linear measurement based on the length of the forearm. In Matt 6:27 and Luke 12:25, Jesus employs it metaphorically—no one can add a cubit to the span of life by worrying. John 21:8 uses it as a literal distance (about 200 cubits from shore), and Revelation 21:17 specifies the angel's measurement of the heavenly city wall at 144 cubits. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering (Spanish 'codo,' French 'coudée') confirms this as a well-known ancient measurement. CUBIT MEASUREMENT

en: a-cubit, cubit, cubits | es: codo, codos, codos, | fr: coudée | de: Ellen, πῆχυν Matt 6:27; Luke 12:25; John 21:8; Rev 21:17

πῐέζω G4084 V-APA-NMS (12×)

To seize or apprehend a person by force; also to catch fish or game.

In the New Testament this verb almost always carries the force of seizing or arresting someone, appearing prominently in John's Gospel where the authorities repeatedly try to lay hands on Jesus (John 7:30, 32, 44; 8:20; 10:39). The Spanish consistently renders it with prender or apresar, underscoring the legal-hostile overtone. In its secondary sense the word returns to its older, more concrete meaning of catching fish, as when the disciples haul in their catch at the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:3, 10). Both senses share the core idea of seizing something that resists or eludes the grasp.

1. seize, arrest, apprehend (10×) To seize, arrest, or apprehend a person, typically in contexts of hostile or legal action. This is the dominant NT usage, concentrated in John's Gospel where Jewish authorities attempt to arrest Jesus. The Spanish apresar/prender and German ergreifen/greifen confirm the forceful, adversarial nuance. Key passages: John 7:30, 7:32, 10:39. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: having-seized, seized, they-might-seize | es: fue-apresada, habiendo-tomado, para-prender | fr: saisir | de: ergreift, greifen John 7:30; John 7:32; John 7:44; John 8:20; John 10:39

2. catch (fish or game) (2×) To catch fish or game, a concrete application of the root idea of seizing something that eludes one's grasp. Found exclusively in the post-resurrection fishing narrative (John 21:3, 10), where the Spanish pescaron ('they fished') and English 'caught' highlight the shift from legal arrest to physical capture of animals. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: they-caught, you-caught | es: pescaron | fr: saisir | de: greifen John 21:3; John 21:10

πῐέζω G4085 V-RPM/P-ANS (1×)

to press down, compress; to press together firmly

This verb means to press down, compress, or squeeze together. Jesus uses it in Luke 6:38 in the imagery of generous giving: 'good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over.' The term describes packing down grain or goods to maximize quantity in a container. It illustrates the abundant, overflowing generosity with which God responds to those who give generously. Divine blessing exceeds human measure.

(1×) To press down or compress, particularly in measuring grain. Jesus' teaching on generosity uses commercial imagery of pressing down grain to fit more in a measure, symbolizing God's abundant return on sacrificial giving. The cross-lingual evidence ('pressed-down,' 'apretada,' 'tassé') captures the action of compacting to increase quantity, illustrating the extravagant, overflowing nature of divine blessing. DISTRESS BESIEGE PRESS

en: pressed-down | es: apretada | fr: tassé | de: πεπιεσμένον Luke 6:38

πῐθᾰνο-λογία G4086 N-DFS (1×)

persuasive speech, plausible but potentially deceptive rhetoric

A noun meaning persuasive speech or plausible-sounding argument, often with a hint of deception. Paul uses it in Colossians 2:4 to warn: 'that no one may delude you with persuasive speech' (πιθανολογίᾳ). The term emphasizes rhetoric that sounds convincing but may lack substance or truth. Paul contrasts such human eloquence with the solid truth of the gospel, warning against being led astray by clever but empty philosophy.

(1×) Persuasive or plausible speech that may deceive. Paul's warning in Colossians alerts believers to the danger of being swayed by eloquent but false teaching, which sounds convincing but leads away from Christ. The multilingual evidence ('persuasive-speech,' 'palabras-persuasivas') emphasizes rhetorical skill that can mask error, highlighting the need for discernment and grounding in apostolic truth. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: persuasive-speech | es: palabras-persuasivas | fr: πιθανολογίᾳ | de: schoenreden Col 2:4

πικρ-αίνω G4087 V-FIA-3S (4×)

To make bitter; to embitter or cause bitterness, both literally (taste) and figuratively (emotion).

Built on the adjective pikros (bitter), this verb means to make something bitter or to become embittered. In Revelation it describes waters turned bitter by the star Wormwood (8:11) and the bitter-sweet scroll that sweetens in the mouth but sours in the stomach (10:9–10). Paul uses it figuratively in Colossians 3:19, urging husbands not to be harsh or embittered toward their wives. Spanish 'amargará' and French 'bitter-machen' both convey this dual physical-emotional range.

(4×) To make bitter or to become embittered, spanning both physical taste and emotional disposition. Revelation 8:11 describes waters made literally bitter by the falling star, while Rev 10:9–10 portrays the prophet's stomach turned bitter by the ingested scroll. Colossians 3:19 uses the word in a relational sense—husbands must not embitter themselves against their wives. The Spanish 'amargará' (it will make bitter) and 'fueron hechas amargas' (they were made bitter) capture both the active and passive dimensions of the verb. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: be-bitter, it-will-make-bitter, they-were-made-bitter | es: amargará, fue-amargado, fueron-hechas-amargas | fr: bitter-machen | de: bitter-machen Col 3:19; Rev 8:11; Rev 10:9; Rev 10:10

πικρ-ία G4088 N-NFS (4×)

Bitterness; a harsh, resentful disposition; the poisonous root of hostile feeling.

The noun pikria conveys bitterness in both a physical and deeply moral sense. In Acts 8:23 Peter diagnoses Simon Magus as being in the 'gall of bitterness,' an Old Testament echo of poisonous corruption. Paul lists it among vices to be put away (Eph 4:31) and quotes the Psalms that 'their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness' (Rom 3:14). Hebrews 12:15 warns against a 'root of bitterness' springing up to defile the community. Across languages—Spanish 'amargura,' French 'amertume,' German 'Bitterkeit'—the metaphor of a toxic inner disposition is consistent.

(4×) Bitterness as a moral and emotional condition—resentment, hostility, or inner poison. Acts 8:23 uses it alongside 'gall' to describe Simon Magus's corrupted heart, echoing Deuteronomy 29:18. Romans 3:14 quotes Psalm 10:7 about mouths full of bitterness. Ephesians 4:31 lists it among attitudes believers must discard, and Hebrews 12:15 warns of a 'root of bitterness' that defiles many. The French 'amertume' and German 'Bitterkeit' uniformly render this as a deep-seated toxic disposition rather than mere physical taste. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitterness, of-bitterness | es: amargura, de-amargura | fr: amertume, amère | de: Bitterkeit, πικρίας Acts 8:23; Rom 3:14; Eph 4:31; Heb 12:15

πικρός G4089 Adj-AMS (2×)

bitter, sharp, or harsh to taste or experience; pungent, biting

Originally describing sharp, pungent taste—bitter herbs, salt water as opposed to sweet. James uses it metaphorically for moral and spiritual realities. Can both fresh and bitter water flow from the same spring (Jas 3:11)? No—and neither should blessing and cursing flow from the same mouth. Bitter jealousy and selfish ambition (Jas 3:14) poison the heart like bitter water poisons a well. The physical sensation of bitterness becomes a picture of corrupted character—harsh, sharp, unpleasant, spoiling what should be pure.

(2×) Bitter in taste or character, used by James to illustrate moral and spiritual corruption. A spring cannot produce both fresh and bitter water—it's against nature. Similarly, a heart harboring 'bitter jealousy' cannot produce genuine wisdom. The bitterness that ruins water's sweetness pictures the envy and selfish ambition that ruin character. The term appears twice in James 3 within verses about the tongue's power and wisdom's nature, both times marking incompatibility between blessing and corruption. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitter | es: amargo | fr: πικρόν, πικρὸν | de: bitter Jas 3:11; Jas 3:14

πικρός G4090 Adv (2×)

bitterly, with sharp grief or intense sorrow

The adverb describes how someone weeps or grieves—with bitter intensity, sharp regret, deep sorrow. Both Gospel occurrences describe Peter's tears after denying Jesus three times. When the rooster crowed and Jesus turned to look at him, Peter 'went out and wept bitterly' (Matt 26:75; Luke 22:62). This is not gentle sadness but anguished, bitter grief—the sharp pain of recognizing one's own betrayal, the pungent taste of failed loyalty. The physical sensation of bitterness captures the intensity of his emotional and spiritual pain.

(2×) Weeping with bitter intensity, describing Peter's grief after denying Christ. When the rooster's crow triggers memory and Jesus' gaze pierces the heart, Peter's tears are not merely sad but bitter—sharp with self-reproach, harsh with the recognition of betrayal. The adverb intensifies the verb 'wept,' marking this as anguished grief, not quiet sorrow. The French 'amèrement' and Spanish 'amargamente' preserve the pungency—tears that taste of bitter regret, the sharp flavor of moral failure recognized. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitterly | es: amargamente | fr: amèrement | de: πικρῶς Matt 26:75; Luke 22:62

Πειλᾶτος G4091 N-NMS (55×)

Pilatos – Pontius Pilate, the Roman prefect of Judea who presided over the trial and crucifixion of Jesus

Pilatos (Pontius Pilate) is the proper name of the Roman prefect who governed Judea from approximately AD 26 to 36. His 55 New Testament occurrences concentrate in the Passion narratives, where he interrogates Jesus, offers to release Barabbas, washes his hands, and orders the crucifixion. Luke 3:1 dates John the Baptist's ministry by Pilate's governorship, and 1 Tim 6:13 preserves the creedal formula 'who testified the good confession before Pontius Pilate.' His name entered the Apostles' Creed itself, making it one of the most theologically consequential proper nouns in the New Testament.

Pilate (Pontius Pilatus) (55×) The Roman prefect of Judea (ca. AD 26-36) who presided over the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. Pilate appears in all four Passion narratives (Matt 27; Mark 15; Luke 23; John 18-19), in Luke's chronological note (Luke 3:1), and in the creedal confession of 1 Tim 6:13. Spanish Pilatos, French Pilate, and German Pilatus retain the Latin cognomen consistently. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Pilatos, to-Pilatos | es: Pilátos, Pilâtos, a-Pilâtos | fr: Pilate | de: Pilatus Matt 27:2; Matt 27:13; Matt 27:17; Matt 27:22; Matt 27:24

πίμπρημι G4092 V-PNM/P (1×)

to swell up, become inflamed or distended (especially from injury or venom)

This rare verb describes the physical swelling that occurs when tissue becomes inflamed or distended. In Acts 28:6, the Maltese islanders expect Paul to swell up after being bitten by a viper, anticipating the typical bodily reaction to venomous snake bites. The multilingual evidence (English 'to-swell-up', Spanish 'hincharse', French 'brûlure') captures both the swelling and the burning sensation associated with inflammation.

(1×) Refers to the physical swelling or inflammation expected from a venomous snake bite. The single New Testament occurrence shows the Maltese observers waiting for Paul's body to exhibit this natural reaction to venom, which miraculously never occurs. The Greek medical vocabulary here reflects ancient understanding of envenomation symptoms. BURNING AND FIRE

en: to-swell-up | es: hincharse | fr: brûlure | de: πίμπρασθαι Acts 28:6

πῐνᾰκ-ίδιον G4093 N-ANS (1×)

a small writing tablet (typically wax-coated for temporary inscription)

A diminutive form referring to a small writing tablet, usually wooden and coated with wax for temporary messages. In Luke 1:63, Zechariah uses such a tablet to write his son's name after being struck mute. These portable tablets were common household items in the ancient Mediterranean world, used for quick notes, letters, or—as in Zechariah's case—urgent communication when speech was impossible.

(1×) The writing tablet Zechariah requests to communicate his son's name, John, when unable to speak. Cross-linguistic glosses ('writing-tablet' in English, 'tablilla' in Spanish, 'tablette' in French) emphasize its function as a communication tool. This humble object becomes the medium through which God's naming decree is announced. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: a-writing-tablet | es: tablilla | fr: tablette | de: πιναχίδιον Luke 1:63

πίναξ G4094 N-GMS (5×)

Platter, dish; a flat serving vessel, notably the dish on which John the Baptist's head was presented.

A noun meaning platter or dish — a flat serving vessel used for presenting food. In the NT, it carries dark associations: four of its five occurrences relate to the grisly request for John the Baptist's head 'on a platter' (Matt 14:8, 11; Mark 6:25, 28). This macabre image transforms an ordinary banquet item into a symbol of Herod's reckless oath and Herodias's vengeful cruelty. Luke 11:39 uses it in Jesus' rebuke of the Pharisees, who clean the outside of the 'dish' while neglecting inner righteousness. The Spanish 'bandeja/plato' and French 'plat' all denote a flat serving dish.

(5×) A platter or large flat dish used for serving food. The lexicon traces it from Homeric trenchers to decorated serving plates, but its NT usage is dominated by one harrowing scene: Salome's request for the head of John the Baptist 'on a platter' (ἐπὶ πίνακι, Matt 14:8, 11; Mark 6:25, 28). What should be an ordinary banquet utensil becomes an instrument of horror, underscoring Herod's moral collapse. The fifth occurrence (Luke 11:39) shifts to Jesus' parable of hypocrisy: Pharisees scour the outside of the πίναξ and cup while leaving their inner selves full of greed. The Spanish 'bandeja' (tray) and 'plato' (plate), French 'plat,' and German 'Schüssel' (bowl/dish) all confirm the domestic, tableware sense. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14653 WITH 4 SENSES en: a-platter, dish, platter | es: bandeja, plato | fr: plat | de: Schuessel, πίνακι, πίνακος Matt 14:8; Matt 14:11; Mark 6:25; Mark 6:28; Luke 11:39

πίνω G4095 V-PIA-1S (73×)

To drink — consume liquid; figuratively, to partake of suffering, judgment, or spiritual sustenance.

Pino is the basic Greek verb for drinking, covering the entire range from ordinary consumption of water and wine to profound theological metaphor. At the literal level it appears in everyday settings — eating and drinking at table (Matt 11:18-19; Luke 7:33-34) and the provision of drink for the thirsty (Matt 25:35). Figuratively, Jesus transforms it into a verb of covenantal participation: 'Drink of it, all of you, for this is my blood of the covenant' (Matt 26:27). The 'cup' that Jesus asks whether disciples can drink (Matt 20:22; Mark 10:38) signifies suffering and martyrdom. Paul extends the image to spiritual sustenance — 'all drank the same spiritual drink' (1 Cor 10:4). Spanish beber, French boire, and German trinken all preserve this single-verb range without splitting literal from figurative.

1. drink (consume liquid) (39×) Split from sense 74732. Criteria: Literal drinking of water, wine, or beverages: eating and drinking (Matt 6:25; 11:18-19; Luke 7:33-34), drinking at feasts (John 2:10), ordinary consumption of liquids en: drinking, drinks, they-were-drinking | es: a-beber, beba, beber | fr: boire | de: trinken, trinkt Matt 6:25; Matt 6:31; Matt 11:18; Matt 11:19; Matt 24:38

2. drink (partake in suffering, judgment, spiritual sustenance) (34×) Split from sense 74732. Criteria: Figurative uses: drinking the cup of suffering (Matt 20:22; Mark 10:38), drinking spiritual water (1 Cor 10:4; John 7:37), eucharistic drinking of Christ's blood (Matt 26:27-29; 1 Cor 11:25)
en: I-drink, I-will-drink, drank | es: beba, beber, beberé | fr: boire | de: trinken, trinkt Matt 20:22; Matt 20:23; Matt 26:27; Matt 26:29

πῐότης G4096 N-GFS (1×)

fatness, richness; metaphorically, prosperity or abundance Originally denoting the literal fatness or richness of flesh, this term carries metaphorical weight in biblical usage. In Romans 11:17, Paul uses it to describe Gentile believers partaking in the 'fatness' of the cultivated olive tree (Israel's covenant blessings). The image draws on agricultural reality—fat, oil-rich olives produce the best yields—to convey spiritual abundance and prosperity shared through God's covenant.

(1×) The rich, nourishing quality of the olive root that Gentile branches now share in Romans 11:17. Multilingual renderings vary between literal 'fatness' (English, French 'graisse') and metaphorical 'wealth/richness' (Spanish 'riqueza', German 'Fettigkeit'), reflecting the term's dual literal-figurative range. Paul's agricultural metaphor depends on understanding olive cultivation. MIXED MULTITUDE en: fatness | es: riqueza | fr: graisse | de: Fettigkeit Rom 11:17

πέρνημι G4097 V-ANP (9×)

To sell; to exchange goods, property, or persons for money in a commercial or legal transaction.
Covers the act of selling — whether merchandise, land, or even persons into bondage. The word appears in parables where a merchant sells everything to buy the pearl of great price (Matt 13:46) and in narratives where costly ointment 'could have been sold' for the poor (Matt 26:9, Mark 14:5, John 12:5). The more sobering usage surfaces in Matt 18:25, where a debtor and his family are ordered sold to repay what is owed. Spanish 'vendido' and French 'vendre' mirror the straightforward commercial meaning, while the passive forms across languages highlight how people and goods alike could become objects of sale in the ancient world.

sell (9×) To sell goods, property, or persons for money, encompassing ordinary commercial transactions and the more severe practice of selling people into slavery for debt. Key passages include the merchant selling all to buy the pearl (Matt 13:46), the suggestion to sell expensive ointment for charity (Matt 26:9, Mark 14:5, John 12:5), the sale of sparrows at market (Luke 12:6), the debtor's family sold to pay debts (Matt 18:25), and Israel 'sold under sin' in a metaphorical extension (Rom 7:14, Acts 2:45). The convergence of Spanish 'vendido,' French 'vendre,' and German 'verkauft' on a single gloss confirms a unified commercial sense across all occurrences. SELLING AND COMMERCE en: being-sold, having-been-sold, he-has-sold | es: fue-vendido, ha-vendido, habiendo-sido-vendido | fr: vendre | de: verkauft, πέπρακεν, πιπρασκομένων Matt 13:46; Matt 18:25; Matt 26:9; Mark 14:5; John 12:5

πίπτω G4098 V-RPA-AFS (91×)

To fall; physically dropping or collapsing, prostrating oneself in worship, stumbling morally, or being destroyed.
Pipto is one of the most visceral verbs in the New Testament, carrying the full weight of gravity — both literal and spiritual. At its most physical, it describes a sparrow dropping to the ground (Matt 10:29) or crumbs falling from a table (Matt 15:27). But the most frequent use is deeply theological: falling prostrate before Jesus, before an angel, or before God in worship and reverence. The Magi 'fell down' before the infant Christ (Matt 2:11), and John collapses at the feet of the risen Lord in Revelation. The word also darkens into moral and cosmic registers: Paul warns believers 'let the one who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall' (1 Cor 10:12), and the apocalyptic refrain 'Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great' echoes Isaiah's ancient oracle. Spanish cayó and German fallen both track these shifts, while Korean distinguishes 엎드리다 (prostrate) from 넘어지다 (stumble/collapse), revealing the real semantic boundaries.

1. fall down, prostrate oneself (54×) To fall down in prostration, worship, or reverent submission — by far the dominant sense at 54 occurrences. The Magi fall before the child Jesus (Matt 2:11), the leper falls before him pleading for healing, and in Revelation worshippers repeatedly fall before the throne. Greek consistently uses pipto with epi prosopon ('on one's face') or pros tous podas ('at the feet') as collocational markers. Korean 엎드리다 ('to prostrate, bow face-down') and Arabic ´('to prostrate in worship') both select reverence-specific vocabulary rather than generic 'fall' words, confirming this as a lexicalized ritual sense distinct from mere physical dropping. FALLING AND FAILING
en: fell, he-fell, it-fell | es: cayeron, cayó | fr: tomber | de: fallen, fällt Matt 2:11; Matt 7:25; Matt 7:27; Matt 13:4; Matt 13:5

2. fall, drop from height (20×) To fall physically from a height or drop to the ground — 20 occurrences covering objects and persons in literal downward motion. A sparrow falls to the ground (Matt 10:29), seed falls on rocky soil (Matt 13:5), crumbs fall from the master's table (Matt 15:27), and a person falls into a pit (Matt 15:14). Spanish cae/caer and German fallen map directly here without metaphorical overtone. The multilingual evidence treats this as the unmarked, default sense of the verb — Hindi girna, Swahili -anguka, and Korean 떨어지다 all use their basic gravitational 'fall' vocabulary. FALLING AND FAILING
en: falling, falls, having-fallen | es: cae, caer, caerá | fr: tomber | de: fallen, fällt Matt 10:29; Matt 15:14; Matt 15:27; Matt 17:15; Matt 21:44

3. stumble, fall morally (9×) To fall morally or spiritually — to stumble into sin, fail, or fall from a state of grace. Nine occurrences concentrated in Paul's epistles and Jesus' teaching. The key passage is Rom 11:11, 'Did they stumble so as to fall?' where pipto carries irrevocable ruin in contrast to temporary stumbling (ptaio). Paul's warning in 1 Cor 10:12 ('let anyone who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall') and the conditional warning of Rom 11:22 both use pipto for spiritual catastrophe. Korean 넘어지다 ('to stumble over, fall down') and Spanish caiga/caigáis both shift into moral-failure registers here, while German fallen acquires the same double resonance as English 'fall from grace.' FALLING AND FAILING
en: fall, falls, having-fallen | es: cae, caiga, caigáis | fr: tomber | de: fallen, fällt Matt 21:44; Luke 20:18; Rom 11:11; Rom 11:22; 1Cor 10:12

4. collapse, be destroyed (5×) To collapse, be destroyed, or fall into ruin — 5 occurrences applied to structures, cities, and kingdoms. The house built on sand 'fell' with a great crash (Luke 6:49), and the apocalyptic refrain 'Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great' (Rev 14:8; 18:2) echoes Isa 21:9 directly. Spanish Cayó and German gefallen both carry the connotation of total destruction here. The doubled 'fallen, fallen' (epesen epesen) in Revelation intensifies the finality, a pattern Arabic and Korean both reproduce with emphatic repetition rather than a single verb. FALLING AND FAILING
en: Fallen, fallen, fell | es: Cayó, cayó | fr: tomber | de: fallen, fällt Luke 6:49; Rev 14:8; Rev 18:2

5. fall upon, strike (3×) To fall upon or come upon someone — 3 occurrences where pipto carries a volitional or imprecatory force rather than accidental descent. In Luke 23:30 the condemned cry out 'mountains, fall on us!' (imperative); in Rev 6:16 the same desperate plea recurs. Acts 15:16 quotes Amos 9:11 about rebuilding 'that which has fallen' (the tabernacle of David), using the perfect participle to describe a state of collapse awaiting restoration. Spanish Caed (imperative) and the imprecatory tone in Korean and Arabic both mark this as a semantically distinct use — not gravity, not worship, not moral failure, but directed catastrophic impact or invoked collapse. FALLING AND FAILING
en: Fall, having-fallen | es: Caed, caída | fr: tomber | de: fallen, fällt Luke 23:30; Acts 15:16; Rev 6:16

Πισιδία G4099 N-AFS (2×)

Pisidia, a mountainous region in south-central Asia Minor

A geographical region in what is now south-central Turkey, north of Pamphylia and south of Phrygia. Paul and Barnabas traveled through Pisidian territory on the first missionary journey. Acts 13:14 mentions 'Antioch of Pisidia' (Pisidian Antioch, to distinguish it from Syrian Antioch), a major city where Paul preached in the synagogue. After being expelled from there and ministering in other cities, they returned through Pisidia (Acts 14:24) on their way back to the coast. The region was known for its rugged, mountainous terrain.

(2×) The inland region of Pisidia in Asia Minor, traversed by Paul during his first missionary journey. Antioch 'of Pisidia' (or Pisidian Antioch) was a key Roman colony where Paul delivered a major synagogue sermon recorded in Acts 13. After planting churches in surrounding cities (Iconium, Lystra, Derbe), Paul and Barnabas retraced their route through Pisidia. The consistent naming across languages shows this is straightforward geography—a specific territory in the central highlands of ancient Asia Minor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Pisidia, of-Pisidia | es: Pisidía | fr: Pisidie | de: Πισιδίαν Acts 13:14; Acts 14:24

πιστ-εύω G4100 V-APA-NMP (244×)

To believe, trust, have faith in; in the passive, to be entrusted with or believed; the central NT verb for saving faith.

This is the defining verb of New Testament theology — appearing over 240 times, it covers the full spectrum from initial trust to settled conviction. When Jesus says 'whoever believes in him' (John 3:16), pisteuō carries the weight of personal reliance, not mere intellectual assent. Arabic consistently deploys the root ʾ-m-n (آ), Korean 믿다, and Swahili amini — all selecting their primary 'trust/believe' vocabulary, underscoring the universal centrality of this concept. The passive voice opens a second semantic field: being entrusted with a commission (Rom 3:2; 1 Tim 1:11), where the meaning shifts entirely from 'believe' to 'be given charge of.'

1. believe / have faith in (233×) The overwhelming primary sense (233x): to believe in, trust, or have faith in God, Christ, a person, or a message. Spans all voice/tense/mood inflections in the active. Arabic آ and Korean 믿다 uniformly select dedicated 'believe' roots. Key passages include Mark 16:16 ('whoever believes and is baptized'), John 3:16, and Romans 10:9. The construction πιστεύω εἰς ('believe into') is a distinctly NT innovation expressing union with the object of faith. FAITH AND TRUST

en: believing, having-believed | es: cree, creyendo, creyente | fr: croire | de: glauben, glaubt Matt 21:32; Mark 9:23; Mark 16:13; Mark 16:14; Mark 16:16

2. be entrusted with (6×) The passive sense 'to be entrusted with' (6x), where the subject receives a trust or stewardship. In Romans 3:2 the Jews 'were entrusted with the oracles of God,' and in Galatians 2:7 Paul 'was entrusted with the gospel to the uncircumcised.' Spanish confiado/confiada and Arabic ٱؤتُمِنَ (Form VIII passive) clearly distinguish this from 'believe.' This is not faith but fiduciary responsibility. FAITH AND TRUST

en: I-have-been-entrusted, they-were-entrusted, to-be-entrusted | es: les-fueron-confiados, me-fue-confiada, me-fue-confiado | fr: croire | de: glauben Rom 3:2; 1Cor 9:17; Gal 2:7; 1Thess 2:4; 1Tim 1:11

3. be believed (passive) (3×) The passive meaning 'to be believed' or 'accepted as credible' (3x), where a message or person is the grammatical subject. In 1 Timothy 3:16 Christ 'was believed on in the world,' and in 2 Thessalonians 1:10 the testimony 'was believed.' Arabic ٱؤتُمِنَ (passive of 'give credence') and Spanish fue creído capture this nuance. The shift from personal trust (sense 1) to public reception marks this as distinct. FAITH AND TRUST

en: it-is-believed, was-believed | es: fue-creído, se-cree | fr: croire | de: glauben Rom 10:10; 2Thess 1:10; 1Tim 3:16

4. entrust / commit to (2×) The active sense 'to entrust / commit to' (2x), where one hands over something or someone to another's care. In John 2:24 Jesus 'was not entrusting himself' to the crowd, and in Luke 16:11 the question is posed 'who will entrust to you the true riches?' Spanish confiaba/confiará and Arabic ٱؤتُمِنَ (reflexive Form VIII) confirm the 'hand over for safekeeping' semantics. This reverses the direction of sense 2: here the subject actively commits rather than passively receives. FAITH AND TRUST

en: was-entrusting, will-entrust | es: confiaba, confiará | fr: croire | de: glauben, glaubt Luke 16:11; John 2:24

πιστικός G4101 Adj-GFS (2×)

genuine, pure, authentic; of high quality nard

A descriptive term whose precise meaning has been debated—possibly 'genuine,' 'pure,' or even 'liquid' (from the root for 'drink'). Both occurrences describe the expensive perfume Mary used to anoint Jesus: 'pure nard' (Mark 14:3; John 12:3). The emphasis is on quality and authenticity—this was no cheap substitute but costly, genuine aromatic oil. Some suggest it means 'liquid' nard as opposed to solid form; others think it certifies authenticity ('genuine,' 'unadulterated'). The context emphasizes value: worth a year's wages, poured out in extravagant devotion.

(2×) Describing the nard (spikenard) used to anoint Jesus as genuine, pure, or of highest quality. Mary's alabaster jar contained authentic, costly perfume—whether 'pistikos' means chemically pure, genuinely imported, or liquid form, the point is extravagant value. A year's wages in a single act of worship. The multilingual agreement on 'pure/genuine' (Spanish 'puro', French 'pur', German 'echt') suggests authenticity rather than adulteration—this was the real thing, not a cheap imitation, making the gift's costliness even more striking. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: genuine, pure | es: puro | fr: pur | de: echt Mark 14:3; John 12:3

πίστις G4102 N-NFS (243×)

Faith, trust, belief in God or Christ; also faithfulness or trustworthiness as a character quality

Pistis is the New Testament's signature theological term, appearing 243 times to name the essential human response to God's action in Christ. In its overwhelming primary sense, it denotes the active disposition of trust and belief — from the faith that heals ('Your faith has saved you,' Matt 9:22) to the faith that justifies (Rom 3:28, Gal 2:16) to the faith contended for as apostolic deposit (Jude 3). Yet in a handful of passages, pistis shifts to an objective quality: faithfulness as a fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22) or God's own reliability (Rom 3:3). German 'Glaube' covers both senses, while Spanish distinguishes 'fe' (faith) from 'fidelidad' (faithfulness) — a lexical split that illuminates the word's dual nature.

1. faith, trust, belief (239×) The subjective disposition of trust, confidence, and belief directed toward God, Christ, or the gospel message — the central soteriological concept of the NT. With 239 occurrences, this sense spans the Synoptic healing narratives (Matt 8:10, the centurion's great faith; Matt 9:22, 'Your faith has made you well'), the Pauline justification theology (Rom 1:17, 'the righteous shall live by faith'; Gal 3:11), the Hebrews 11 'hall of faith,' and the Johannine equivalents. Cross-lingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'fe,' French 'foi,' German 'Glaube' — all treating pistis as active personal trust rather than mere intellectual assent. FAITH TRUST BELIEF

en: faith | es: fe, fe! | fr: foi | de: Glaube Matt 8:10; Matt 9:2; Matt 9:22; Matt 9:29; Matt 15:28

2. faithfulness, fidelity, trustworthiness (4×) Faithfulness, fidelity, or trustworthiness as an objective character quality rather than a subjective act of believing. Four occurrences in revealing contexts: Rom 3:3 ('the faithfulness of God' — God's reliability, not human belief), Gal 5:22 (pistis as a fruit of the Spirit alongside love and kindness — clearly a virtue of character), Matt 23:23 (justice, mercy, and faithfulness — the 'weightier matters of the law'), and Titus 2:10 (showing 'all good faithfulness' in service). Spanish 'fidelidad' at Gal 5:22 makes the distinction explicit where French 'foi' and German 'Glaube' leave it ambiguous. FAITH TRUST BELIEF

en: faithfulness | es: fe, fidelidad | fr: foi | de: Glaube Matt 23:23; Rom 3:3; Gal 5:22; Titus 2:10

πιστός G4103 Adj-ANS (67×)

Faithful, trustworthy, reliable (passive: worthy of trust); also believing, a believer (active: one who exercises faith).

Built on the root peith- ('to persuade, trust'), pistos carries two complementary faces. In its passive sense — by far the more frequent — it describes someone or something worthy of trust: the faithful servant of Jesus' parables (Matt 24:45; 25:21), the 'faithful sayings' of the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 1:15), and God himself as pistos (1 Cor 1:9; 10:13). In its active sense, pistos denotes one who believes — a believer, a member of the faith community. This active use emerges clearly in Acts and the Epistles: 'the believers' (Acts 10:45), Timothy as a believing son (1 Cor 4:17). Spanish distinguishes 'fiel' (faithful) from 'creyente' (believer), making the voice distinction lexically visible.

1. faithful, trustworthy, reliable (54×) Passive sense: faithful, trustworthy, dependable — describing persons, God, or statements that can be relied upon. The parables of Jesus prize the pistos servant who manages resources well (Matt 24:45; 25:21, 23). Paul applies it to God's character (1 Cor 1:9; 10:13; 1 Thess 5:24) and to doctrinal formulas ('faithful is the saying,' 1 Tim 1:15; 2 Tim 2:11). The multilingual uniformity is striking: English 'faithful,' Spanish 'fiel,' French 'fidele,' German 'treu' — all encode reliability and steadfastness. FAITH AND TRUST

en: faithful | es: fiel, fieles | fr: fidèle | de: treu Matt 24:45; Matt 25:21; Matt 25:23

2. believing, a believer (13×) Active sense: believing, exercising faith — a person who trusts in God or Christ, a member of the believing community. The risen Jesus tells Thomas 'be not unbelieving but believing' (pistos, John 20:27). In Acts and the Epistles, hoi pistoi becomes a technical designation for Christians (Acts 10:45; 1 Tim 4:10, 12; 6:2). Spanish 'creyente/creyentes' versus 'fiel' sharply differentiates this active sense from the passive, as does the English shift from 'faithful' to 'believer.' FAITH AND TRUST

en: believers, believing, believing-woman | es: a-fiel, creyente, creyentes | fr: fidèle | de: treu John 20:27; Acts 10:45; Acts 16:1; 2Cor 6:15; Gal 3:9

πιστόω G4104 V-AIP-2S (1×)

to be convinced, assured, or made certain (especially through teaching or evidence)

This passive verb conveys being firmly persuaded or convinced of something, often through instruction or evidence. In 2 Timothy 3:14, Paul urges Timothy to continue in what he has been convinced of, implying a settled assurance built through teaching and experience. The term suggests not mere intellectual agreement but deep-seated confidence that shapes behavior and commitment.

(1×) Timothy's firm conviction about the truths he has learned, emphasized in 2 Timothy 3:14. The multilingual evidence shows various shades: Spanish emphasizes the teaching process ('de-lo-que-fuiste-convencido'), while English and German focus on the resulting assurance ('were-convinced-of', 'versichert-werden'). This conviction forms the foundation for Timothy's perseverance in ministry. FAITH AND TRUST

en: were-convinced-of | es: de-lo-que-fuiste-convencido | fr: ἐπιστώθης | de: versichert-werden 2Tim 3:14

πλᾰν-άω G4105 V-PMM/P-2P (39×)

To deceive, lead astray, or wander from the truth; active: mislead; middle/passive: go astray or be deceived

Built on the root for 'wandering,' this verb pictures error as movement off the right path. In its active voice, false prophets and false messiahs 'lead astray' (Matt 24:4-5, 11, 24) – deliberate agents pulling others off course. The middle voice turns inward: a sheep 'goes astray' on its own (Matt 18:12-13), and the Sadducees 'err' because they know neither the Scriptures nor God's power (Matt 22:29). The passive underscores victimhood: believers must not 'be deceived' (1 Cor 6:9; Gal 6:7). Spanish helpfully distinguishes 'engañar' (to deceive another) from 'errar' (to wander in error), while French 'egarer' preserves the spatial metaphor of losing one's way.

1. to deceive, lead astray (18×) Active deception: deliberately causing others to believe falsehood or follow a wrong path. Jesus warns that many will come 'deceiving many' (Matt 24:5, 11), and 1 John 2:26 speaks of those 'trying to deceive you.' The agent is always identifiable – a false prophet, antichrist figure, or demonic power. Spanish 'engañar' and German 'verfuhren' both foreground the intentional, causative nature of the act. Revelation 12:9 and 20:3, 8, 10 apply this to Satan's cosmic deception of the nations. DECEPTION AND ASTRAY

en: deceive, deceives, deceiving | es: a-engañar, engaña, engañamos | fr: égarer | de: verfuehren, verführt Matt 24:4; Matt 24:5; Matt 24:11; Matt 24:24; Mark 13:5

2. to go astray, wander, err (13×) Going astray on one's own: the middle or intransitive sense of wandering from truth or the right way without an explicit external deceiver in view. The parable's lost sheep 'goes astray' (Matt 18:12), and Jesus tells the Sadducees 'you are in error' (Matt 22:29; Mark 12:24, 27). Spanish 'errar/descarriarse' and the imagery of sheep wandering highlight that the fault lies in the wanderer's own confusion or neglect rather than in an active tempter. DECEPTION AND ASTRAY

en: are-you-deceived, being-led-astray, going-astray | es: Erráis, descarriada, descarriadas | fr: égarer | de: verfuehren, verführt Matt 18:12; Matt 18:13; Matt 22:29; Mark 12:24

3. to be deceived, be misled (8×) Being deceived or misled: the passive sense where the subject is the victim of another's deception. 'Do not be deceived' warns Paul (1 Cor 6:9; 15:33; Gal 6:7), and Luke 21:8 records Jesus' caution against being led astray by impostors. The passive construction in Spanish 'ser engañado' and the repeated imperative 'do not be deceived' frame this as a vulnerability to guard against – the responsibility shifts from the wanderer to the deceiver, with the audience urged to vigilance. DECEPTION AND ASTRAY

en: be-deceived, being-deceived, have-been-deceived | es: fueron-engañadas, habéis-sido-engañados, os-engañéis | fr: égarer | de: verfuehren, verführt Luke 21:8; John 7:47; 1Cor 6:9; 1Cor 15:33; Gal 6:7

πλᾰν-η G4106 N-NFS (10×)

Wandering from truth: error, delusion, or false belief; also deliberate deception or fraud.

Plane derives from the verb planao ('to wander, lead astray') and carries the image of someone lost off the true path. In nine of its ten NT occurrences it denotes the state of being in error — a spiritual or moral delusion, as in the 'error of Balaam' (Jude 11) or the 'working of error' God sends upon those who refuse the truth (2 Thess 2:11). Paul uses it in Rom 1:27 for the 'error' of idolatry that yields its own penalty. But in Matt 27:64 the chief priests warn Pilate that a second 'deception' would be worse than the first — here the word shifts from passive delusion to active, calculated fraud. Spanish distinguishes the two cleanly: 'error' for the wandering state, 'engano' for the willful trick.

1. error, delusion, going astray (9×) A state of wandering from the truth — error, delusion, or false belief, whether doctrinal or moral. This is the dominant NT sense, describing the condition of being led astray rather than the act of leading others astray. Eph 4:14 warns against 'every wind of doctrine' and the 'cunning craftiness' that produces plane; Jas 5:20 speaks of turning a sinner from the 'error' of his way; 2 Thess 2:11 pairs it with a divine act of judgment. Spanish 'error' and German 'Irrtum' both point to the passive, experiential side — being in the wrong, not doing the wrong. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: deceit, error, of-delusion | es: de-error, error | fr: erreur | de: Irrtum Rom 1:27; Eph 4:14; 1Thess 2:3; 2Thess 2:11; Jas 5:20

2. deception, deliberate deceit (1×) Deliberate deception, calculated imposture, or fraud — the active, intentional misleading of others. In Matt 27:64 the chief priests tell Pilate that the last 'deception' (plane) would be worse than the first, referring to an anticipated conspiracy by the disciples. Spanish 'engano' ('trickery, fraud') captures the shift from unwitting error to willful duplicity. This sense draws on the classical Greek usage where plane could mean 'imposture' or 'trick,' giving it an adversarial, forensic tone absent from the other occurrences. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: deception | es: engaño | fr: erreur | de: Irrtum Matt 27:64

πλᾰν-ήτης G4107 N-NMP (1×)

wandering, roaming; metaphorically, erratic or unstable

Originally describing those who wander from place to place—travelers, vagrants, or wandering merchants—this term takes on metaphorical meaning for spiritual instability. In Jude 13, 'wandering stars' evoke the ancient astronomical image of planets whose erratic movements contrasted with fixed stars. The metaphor powerfully depicts false teachers as unstable, unpredictable, and lacking the fixed moorings of truth.

(1×) The 'wandering stars' of Jude 13, a vivid astronomical metaphor for false teachers who lack stability and fixed truth. Ancient observers noted how planets wandered across the sky unlike fixed stars. Multilingual glosses uniformly capture this wandering quality ('wandering', 'errantes'), making these celestial vagabonds symbols of doctrinal unreliability destined for outer darkness. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: wandering | es: errantes | fr: errantes, | de: Irrsterne Jude 1:13

πλάνος G4108 Adj-NMS (5×)

Deceiver, impostor; one who leads others astray, especially through false teaching or false claims.

An adjective used substantively to mean deceiver or impostor — one who actively leads others astray. In Matt 27:63, the chief priests call Jesus 'that deceiver' before Pilate, ironically applying this label to the one they fear most. Paul reclaims the word with paradoxical force in 2 Cor 6:8: 'as deceivers, yet true.' First Timothy 4:1 warns of 'deceitful spirits,' and 2 John 1:7 uses it twice to identify those who deny Christ's incarnation as 'the deceiver and the antichrist.' The Spanish 'engañador/impostor' and French 'séducteur' (seducer, misleader) capture the active, intentional quality of the deception.

(5×) A deceiver or impostor — one who actively misleads others, particularly through false claims or teachings. The active sense of the adjective ('leading astray') dominates in the NT. The chief priests brand Jesus as πλάνος before Pilate (Matt 27:63), a charge dripping with irony given the narrative's perspective. Paul embraces the paradox in 2 Cor 6:8, listing 'as deceivers, yet true' among the apostolic antitheses. First Timothy 4:1 attributes deception to spirits ('deceitful spirits and teachings of demons'), while 2 John 1:7 applies it emphatically to those denying Jesus' coming in the flesh — calling such a person 'the deceiver and the antichrist.' The Spanish 'engañador/impostor' and French 'séducteur/trompeur' both convey the deliberate, willful quality of the misleading. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14554 WITH 4 SENSES en: deceiver, deceivers, deceiving | es: engañador, engañadores, impostor | fr: séducteur, trompeur | de: Verfuehrer, πλάνος Matt 27:63; 2Cor 6:8; 1Tim 4:1; 2John 1:7

πλάξ G4109 N-DFP (3×)

tablet, flat stone; a writing surface, especially stone tablets for inscriptions or sacred texts

This noun denotes anything flat and broad, especially a flat stone or tablet used for writing. Paul contrasts his Corinthian converts —a letter written not on 'stone tablets' but on hearts of flesh (2 Cor 3:3, twice). Hebrews mentions the ark containing 'the tablets of the covenant' (Heb 9:4). The word evokes the stone tablets Moses received on Sinai, making it a powerful symbol of old versus new covenant. Flat stone becomes a metaphor: external law inscribed on rock versus internal transformation written on living hearts.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes flat writing surfaces: English 'tablets', Spanish 'tablas', French 'tablette', German 'Tafeln'. The lexicon defines πλάξ as 'anything flat and broad' including 'flat stone, tablet' with uses for inscribed stones. 2 Cor 3:3 twice contrasts letters written on 'stone tablets' (the old covenant law) versus on 'tablets of hearts of flesh'. Heb 9:4 mentions the ark containing 'the tablets of the covenant'. All three uses refer to stone tablets for sacred writing, particularly the Decalogue. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tablets | es: tablas | fr: Tafeln, tablette | de: Tafeln 2Cor 3:3; Heb 9:4

πλάσμα G4110 N-NNS (1×)

something formed or molded; a created thing or artifact

This term denotes anything fashioned or shaped, especially objects molded from clay or wax. In Romans 9:20, Paul invokes the potter-clay metaphor, asking whether the thing formed can question its maker. The word carries both literal meaning (a physical artifact) and theological weight (humanity as God's creation). Ancient usage included everything from clay figurines to the human body itself, understood as divinely fashioned.

(1×) The molded object that has no right to question its creator in Romans 9:20. Paul's rhetorical question draws on the ancient image of a potter and clay vessels. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent recognition of the forming/molding process ('thing-formed', 'formado', 'formation', 'Gebilde'), emphasizing the dependent relationship between creator and creation. POTTER AND FORMING

en: thing-formed | es: formado | fr: formation | de: Gebilde Rom 9:20

πλάσσω G4111 V-APA-DMS (2×)

to form, mold, or shape; to create by fashioning soft material

A verb describing the work of an artist shaping soft materials—clay, wax, earth—into desired forms. Classical usage often pictured the potter at the wheel. Paul employs this imagery theologically. In Romans 9:20, the clay cannot question the potter: 'Has the potter no right over the clay, to make from the same lump one vessel for honor and another for dishonor?' In 1 Timothy 2:13, the verb recalls Genesis creation: 'Adam was formed first, then Eve'—God as divine craftsman shaping humanity from the dust.

(2×) To form or shape by molding, used both for divine creation and God's sovereign right over what He makes. In 1 Timothy, it recalls Genesis—God forming Adam from the ground, then forming Eve. In Romans, Paul uses potter imagery: the one who forms clay has absolute right to shape it for whatever purpose He chooses. The German 'bilden' (form) and French 'former' capture the artisan's work —deliberate shaping of raw material into purposeful design, whether human creation or sovereign election. POTTER AND FORMING

en: one-forming, was-formed | es: fue-formado, que-formó | fr: bilden, former | de: bilden Rom 9:20; 1Tim 2:13

πλαστός G4112 Adj-DMP (1×)

fabricated, counterfeit, false; artificially constructed to deceive

Originally describing objects formed or molded (especially in clay or wax), this adjective shifted to mean 'fabricated' or 'counterfeit' in a negative sense. In 2 Peter 2:3, false teachers exploit believers with fabricated words—arguments deliberately constructed to deceive rather than inform. The term implies calculated artificiality, like a statue that imitates life but remains lifeless, or a forged document that mimics authenticity while being fundamentally false.

(1×) The fabricated, deceptive words used by false teachers in 2 Peter 2:3. Multilingual glosses emphasize the artificial, deceptive nature: 'fabricated' (English), 'fingidas' (Spanish, feigned), 'erdichtet' (German, invented). These are not honest errors but deliberately crafted falsehoods designed to exploit believers for profit, contrasting sharply with genuine apostolic teaching. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: with-fabricated | es: con-palabras-fingidas | fr: πλαστοῖς | de: erdichtet 2Pet 2:3

πλᾰτύς G4113 N-AFP (9×)

A wide street, open public square, or broad way in a city; a main thoroughfare for civic life.

The substantivized feminine of the adjective meaning 'broad' or 'wide,' referring to the main streets, plazas, or open squares of a town where public activity takes place. Jesus warns against praying ostentatiously 'on the street corners' (Matt 6:5) and prophetically quotes Isaiah about not crying out 'in the streets' (Matt 12:19). In the parables, servants are sent into the streets and lanes to bring guests to the banquet (Luke 14:21). Spanish distinguishes 'calles' (streets) from 'plazas' (squares), and French uses 'place' (public square), together revealing the word's range from narrow lanes to open gathering spaces.

street, broad way, public square (9×) A wide street, main road, or public square in a town or city — the place of public visibility, commerce, and communal life. Derived from the feminine substantive of πλατύς ('broad'), it designates the broad thoroughfares and open spaces where people gather, pray, eat, and conduct business. In the NT it appears in contexts of public display (Matt 6:5), prophetic quiet (Matt 12:19), missionary proclamation (Luke 10:10, 13:26), and urgent invitation (Luke 14:21, Acts 5:15). The Spanish split between 'calles' (streets) and 'plazas' (squares) shows the word covers both linear roadways and open civic areas, while German 'Gassen' (lanes) captures the narrower urban sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: street, streets | es: calles, plaza, plazas | fr: place | de: Gassen, πλατείαις, πλατείας Matt 6:5; Matt 12:19; Luke 10:10; Luke 13:26; Luke 14:21

πλάτος G4114 N-NNS (4×)

Breadth, width; a spatial dimension describing the lateral extent of something.

A noun from the adjective platys (broad), platos refers to breadth or width as a spatial dimension. Paul invokes it in a remarkable prayer that believers might grasp the breadth, length, height, and depth of Christ's love (Eph 3:18)—a four-dimensional metaphor for love that surpasses knowledge. In Revelation, it measures the vast expanse of the earth across which Gog and Magog march (20:9) and the equal dimensions of the cubic New Jerusalem (21:16). German and French both render it simply as 'Breite,' underscoring its straightforward spatial meaning.

(4×) Breadth or width as a spatial measurement or dimension. Ephesians 3:18 uses it metaphorically as one of four dimensions of Christ's incomprehensible love. Revelation 20:9 describes the breadth of the earth over which hostile armies spread, while Revelation 21:16 records the city's equal length, breadth, and height—a perfect cube echoing the Holy of Holies. The consistent rendering across languages (Spanish 'anchura,' French and German 'Breite') confirms this as a basic spatial term elevated in Scripture to theological significance. WIDTH BREADTH

en: breadth | es: anchura, anchura,, anchura. | fr: Breite | de: Breite Eph 3:18; Rev 20:9; Rev 21:16

πλᾰτύν-ω G4115 V-PIA-3P (3×)

to widen, to broaden, to enlarge; to make something wider or more spacious, literally or figuratively

This verb means to make wide or broad, to enlarge. Jesus criticizes scribes and Pharisees who 'widen' their phylacteries to appear more devout (Matt 23:5). Paul tells the Corinthians that his heart 'has been enlarged' toward them—opened wide with affection (2 Cor 6:11)—and urges them to 'be enlarged' in their hearts toward him in return (2 Cor 6:13). The word works both literally (making physical objects wider) and metaphorically (expanding emotional capacity or openness).

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize expansion: English 'be-enlarged/has-been-enlarged/they-widen', Spanish 'ensanchan/ensanchaos/se-ha-ensanchado', French 'élargir', German 'weit-gemacht/πλατύνουσιν'. The lexicon defines it as 'widen' with meanings including widening territory, dilating pupils, being 'opened/relieved from care' (LXX), and amplifying speech. Matt 23:5 refers to literally widening phylacteries. 2 Cor 6:11, 13 use it metaphorically for hearts being enlarged/opened wide in affection. Both literal physical widening and metaphorical emotional expansion are present. ENLARGE WIDEN OPEN

en: be-enlarged, has-been-enlarged, they-widen | es: ensanchan, ensanchaos, se-ha-ensanchado | fr: élargir | de: weit-gemacht, πλατύνουσιν Matt 23:5; 2Cor 6:11; 2Cor 6:13

πλᾰτύς G4116 Adj-NFS (1×)

wide, broad, spacious; extensive in breadth

This adjective describes physical width or breadth, often with moral implications. In Matthew 7:13, Jesus contrasts the wide gate and broad road leading to destruction with the narrow path to life. The spatial metaphor is powerful: wide roads accommodate crowds and require little effort to travel, while narrow paths demand focus and care. What appears inviting and easy proves spiritually dangerous.

(1×) The wide gate and broad road of Matthew 7:13 that leads to destruction. Jesus uses spatial imagery that resonates across cultures—multilingual glosses uniformly render it as 'wide' ('wide', 'ancha', 'large'). The breadth signifies ease of access and popularity, making this path attractive but ultimately deadly, in stark contrast to the narrow way that leads to life. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: wide | es: ancha | fr: large | de: πλατεῖα Matt 7:13

πλέγ-μα G4117 N-DNP (1×)

braided hair; elaborate hairstyles created by plaiting or weaving

Originally denoting anything twisted or woven together—from vine tendrils to wicker-work—this term came to specifically refer to elaborate braided hairstyles in New Testament usage. In 1 Timothy 2:9, Paul discourages women from ostentatious hair arrangements that signal wealth and status. Ancient hairstyles could be extraordinarily complex, requiring hours and sometimes slaves to create, making them visible markers of social standing and disposable wealth.

(1×) The elaborate braided hairstyles discouraged in 1 Timothy 2:9 as inappropriate for Christian worship. Paul's concern is not hair itself but the status-display embedded in time-consuming, expensive styling. Multilingual evidence ('braided-hair', 'trenzados') identifies the plaiting technique. These elaborate coiffures advertised wealth and social position, distracting from the inner adornment that truly matters. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: braided-hair | es: trenzados | fr: πλέγμασιν | de: Flechten 1Tim 2:9

πλεῖστος G4118 Adj-NFP-S (4×)

Most, greatest, very large; the superlative of polys (many/much).

The superlative form of polys, pleistos means 'most' or 'greatest in number.' Jesus performed most of his mighty works in the cities addressed in his woes (Matt 11:20), and at his triumphal entry the very large crowd spread garments on the road (Matt 21:8). Mark 4:1 describes the very large crowd gathered by the sea. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 14:27 to set a limit—at most two or three should speak in tongues. The Spanish 'mayoría' and 'muy grande' reflect both the quantitative and degree aspects of this superlative.

(4×) The greatest number or amount; most, very large. As the superlative of polys, it denotes the maximum end of a quantity scale. Matthew 11:20 refers to the cities where most of Jesus' miracles occurred, while Matthew 21:8 and Mark 4:1 describe very large crowds. In 1 Corinthians 14:27, Paul uses it to set an upper boundary—'at most' two or three speakers. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'muy grande,' French 'le plus grand nombre') confirms both the quantitative and superlative force of the word. MORE AND GREATER

en: most, very-large | es: mayoría-de-la, muy-grande, más | fr: le-plus-grand-nombre | de: sehr-viel, πλεῖσται, πλεῖστος Matt 11:20; Matt 21:8; Mark 4:1; 1Cor 14:27

πλείων G4119 Adj-AMP-C (55×)

More, greater (comparative of polys); of quantity, number, extent, duration, rank, or importance; substantively, 'the majority.'

Pleion is the comparative form of polys ('much, many') and serves as the New Testament's primary word for 'more' in nearly every dimension — more people, more time, greater importance, further extent. Its versatility is deceptive: what looks like a single word actually carves up several distinct semantic spaces. Sometimes it compares quantities explicitly ('more than five thousand,' Matt 14:21 par.). Sometimes it stands alone with the article to mean 'the majority' or 'most people' (1 Cor 15:6). In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus uses it to assert qualitative superiority — 'something greater than the temple is here' (Matt 12:6) — collapsing the quantitative and the evaluative into a single devastating claim. Spanish distinguishes más (quantitative) from mayor (evaluative), revealing the semantic seam that Greek leaves unmarked.

1. more in quantity (comparative) (32×) The core comparative sense: more in quantity or number than something else, with an explicit or implicit standard of comparison. This is the default, unmarked use at 32 occurrences. 'Unless your righteousness exceeds (pleion) that of the scribes' (Matt 5:20); 'more than twelve legions of angels' (Matt 26:53); 'more than all of them' (Luke 21:3, the widow's mite). Spanish más que, German mehr als, and French plus que all align with straightforward quantitative comparison. The comparative genitive or conjunction e ('than') typically marks this sense syntactically. MORE AND GREATER

en: more, more-than, of-more | es: de-mayor, mayor, más | fr: plus | de: mehr Matt 5:20; Matt 6:25; Matt 20:10; Matt 21:36; Matt 26:53

2. the majority, most people (7×) Substantival use with the article: 'the majority,' 'most people,' 'the greater number.' Seven occurrences where pleiones functions as a noun denoting the larger portion of a group. Paul notes that 'most of the five hundred' witnesses are still alive (1 Cor 15:6); 'the majority' of the Ephesian crowd did not know why they had assembled (Acts 19:32); punishment by 'the majority' suffices for the offender (2 Cor 2:6). Korean 대부분 ('the greater part') and French la plupart ('most of them') both select dedicated majority-quantifier vocabulary distinct from simple comparative 'more.' MORE AND GREATER

en: majority, more, most | es: más | fr: plus | de: mehr Acts 19:32; Acts 27:12; 1Cor 10:5; 1Cor 15:6; 2Cor 2:6

3. many, numerous (positive sense) (7×) Positive-degree usage where the comparative morphology functions as 'many' or 'much' without explicit comparison — a well-attested Koine Greek phenomenon. Seven occurrences, often in Acts: 'many other words' (Acts 2:40), 'many days' (Acts 13:31), 'after many years' (Acts 24:17). Here pleion means roughly the same as polys. Spanish muchos/muchas and Korean 많은 both select positive-degree 'many' vocabulary rather than comparative forms, confirming that the comparative force has faded in these contexts. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: many, many-things, more | es: muchas, muchos, más | fr: plus | de: mehr Luke 11:53; Acts 2:40; Acts 13:31; Acts 21:10; Acts 24:17

4. further or longer in extent (5×) Greater extent in time, space, or degree — 'further,' 'longer,' 'more widely.' Five occurrences expressing continuation or spread beyond a reference point. The Sanhedrin fears the apostolic message will 'spread no further' (Acts 4:17); Paul's teaching extended 'longer' than expected (Acts 20:9); Paul asks Felix not to 'detain him further' (Acts 24:4). Spanish más tiempo ('more time') and German weiter ('further') both shift from quantity to extent/duration, confirming a distinct semantic axis from numerical comparison. MORE AND GREATER

en: further, longer, more | es: allá, más, más-tiempo | fr: plus | de: mehr Acts 4:17; Acts 18:20; Acts 20:9; Acts 24:4; 2Tim 3:9

5. greater in rank or importance (4×) Greater in rank, importance, or inherent worth — qualitative superiority rather than quantitative excess. Four occurrences, all in the Synoptic tradition: 'something greater than Jonah is here' (Matt 12:41; Luke 11:32); 'something greater than Solomon is here' (Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31). Jesus uses pleion to assert that his person and ministry surpass the greatest figures of Israel's history. Spanish mayor que ('greater than') and the consistent cross-linguistic selection of evaluative rather than numerical vocabulary confirm that this is a genuine qualitative-comparative sense, not merely 'more of the same.' MORE AND GREATER

en: greater-than | es: mayor-que, más | fr: plus | de: mehr Matt 12:41; Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31; Luke 11:32

πλέκ-ω G4120 V-APA-NMP (3×)

to plait, to weave, to braid; to intertwine strands into a woven or braided form

This verb means to plait, braid, or weave together. In all three Gospel accounts, Roman soldiers 'wove' or 'braided' a crown of thorns and placed it on Jesus' head during his mockery (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2). The image is vivid: intertwining sharp thorns into a cruel parody of royal headgear. Though the verb can apply to any weaving or plaiting, its New Testament use is entirely focused on this single, haunting moment of the Passion.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly indicates weaving/braiding: English 'having-woven/weaving', Spanish 'habiendo-tejido/habiendo-trenzado', French 'tresser', German 'flechten/πλέξαντες'. The lexicon defines it as 'plait, twine' with examples of braiding hair (πλοκάμους) and twisting rope. All three NT occurrences (Matt 27:29, Mark 15:17, John 19:2) describe soldiers plaiting/weaving a crown of thorns for Jesus. The action is identical across Gospels: intertwining thorny branches into a mock crown as part of Jesus' torture and mockery. CLOTHING AND DRESS en: having-woven, weaving | es: habiendo-tejido, habiendo-trenzado | fr: tresser | de: flechten, πλέξαντες Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2

πλεον-άζω G4121 V-APA-NFS (9×)

To increase, abound, or multiply; to grow in quantity, intensity, or degree; to have more than enough.

Expresses the idea of growing beyond what is expected — overflowing, multiplying, surpassing a previous measure. Paul uses it powerfully in Romans 5:20 to describe how sin 'increased' under the law only so that grace might 'abound all the more,' creating one of the New Testament's most striking theological contrasts. Elsewhere it describes love abounding (1 Thess 3:12, Phil 4:17), faith growing (2 Thess 1:3), and material surplus (2 Cor 8:15). Spanish 'abundar' and German 'vermehren' together capture the twin aspects of overflow and active multiplication.

increase, abound, have in excess (9×) To increase in number, quantity, or degree; to abound, multiply, or overflow beyond a prior measure. Used of abstract realities growing — sin increasing so that grace abounds even more (Rom 5:20), love multiplying among believers (1 Thess 3:12, 2 Thess 1:3), thanksgiving increasing to God's glory (2 Cor 4:15) — and of material surplus where one who gathered much had no excess (2 Cor 8:15). The Spanish 'abundar' (abound) highlights the overflowing quality, while German 'vermehren' (multiply) emphasizes the active growth, together reflecting the word's semantic range from passive surplus to dynamic increase. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS en: abounding, had-excess, having-increased | es: abunda, abundando, abundase | fr: augmenter, vermehren | de: vermehren Rom 5:20; Rom 6:1; 2Cor 4:15; 2Cor 8:15

πλεονεκτ-έω G4122 V-AIA-3S (5×)

To take advantage of, exploit, defraud; to overreach someone for personal gain through greed or cunning.

A verb meaning to take advantage of, exploit, or defraud — to gain at another's expense through greedy overreaching. Derived from πλέον (more) + ἔχω (to have), it literally means 'to have more' at someone else's cost. Paul uses it exclusively, and all five occurrences reveal his pastoral vigilance against exploitation. In 2 Cor 2:11, Satan is the one who might 'take advantage' of the community. In 2 Cor 7:2 and 12:17-18, Paul defends himself against charges of financial exploitation. First Thessalonians 4:6 warns believers not to 'defraud' a brother in business or personal matters. The Spanish 'defraudar/explotar' captures the range well.

(5×) To take advantage of, exploit, or defraud — to overreach someone for selfish gain, whether financially, relationally, or spiritually. The etymology (πλέον + ἔχω, 'to have more') exposes the greedy root: gaining at another's expense. Paul deploys this verb in two main contexts. First, spiritual exploitation: in 2 Cor 2:11, Satan might 'take advantage of' the community through unforgiveness. Second, financial integrity: Paul defends himself against charges of exploiting the Corinthians (2 Cor 7:2; 12:17-18), asking 'Did I take advantage of you through anyone I sent?' First Thessalonians 4:6 generalizes the warning: no one should 'wrong or defraud' a brother in any matter. The Spanish 'defraudar' (to defraud) and 'explotar' (to exploit) map directly to the Greek semantic range. DECEPTION

AND BEGUILING
en: I-took-advantage-of, to-defraud, took-advantage-of | es: defraudamos, defraudar, os-exploté | fr: tromper, πλεονεκτεῖν | de: habgierig-sein 2Cor 2:11; 2Cor 7:2; 2Cor 12:17; 2Cor 12:18; 1Thess 4:6

πλεονέκτ-ης G4123 N-NMP (4×)

A greedy person, one who grasps for more than his due; covetous, avaricious.

Formed from pleon (more) and echō (to have), pleonektēs literally means 'one who has more'—a person who always wants more than their share. Paul includes greedy persons in his vice lists alongside the sexually immoral and idolaters (1 Cor 5:10–11; 6:10), indicating how seriously the early church viewed covetousness. In Ephesians 5:5 he equates greed with idolatry, declaring that no greedy person has any inheritance in Christ's kingdom. The Spanish 'avaro,' French 'cupide,' and German 'habgierig' all convey this grasping, acquisitive character.

(4×) A greedy or covetous person, one who seizes more than is rightfully theirs. All four New Testament occurrences appear in Pauline vice lists. In 1 Corinthians 5:10–11 believers are told not to associate with the greedy; in 6:10 they are excluded from God's kingdom. Ephesians 5:5 makes the striking equation that a pleonektēs is an idolater—placing material gain in the place of God. The French 'cupide' and German 'habgierig' both capture the insatiable, grasping quality of this character type. GAIN AND GREED en: greedy, greedy-person | es: avaro, avaros | fr: cupide, πλεονέκτης | de: habgierig 1Cor 5:10; 1Cor 5:11; 1Cor 6:10; Eph 5:5

πλεονεξία G4124 N-NFS (10×)

Greedy desire for more, covetousness — a relentless craving that exploits others for gain

Denotes an insatiable desire to possess more than one's due, often at the expense of others. In Luke 12:15, Jesus warns against every form of pleonexia, linking it to the illusion that life consists in abundance of possessions. Paul groups it with sexual immorality and idolatry as characteristic of the old self (Eph 4:19; 5:3; Col 3:5), and in 2 Peter 2:3 false teachers exploit believers through fabricated words driven by pleonexia. The Spanish 'avaricia/codicia' and French 'cupidité' both capture the aggressive, grasping quality that distinguishes this vice from mere desire.

greed, covetousness (10×) An insatiable, exploitative desire for more — whether material wealth, power, or advantage — that treats others as means to personal gain. Jesus warns against it as a fundamental misorientation of life (Luke 12:15), Paul lists it alongside sexual immorality and idolatry (Eph 4:19; 5:3; Col 3:5), and Peter identifies it as the motive behind false teaching (2 Pet 2:3). Spanish 'avaricia/codicia' and German 'Habsucht' converge on the aggressive, grasping character of this vice, distinguishing it from ordinary wanting. PLUNDER AND SPOIL en: covetousness, greed, greediness | es: avaricia, codicia, codicias | fr: cupidité | de: Habsucht, πλεονεξίας Mark 7:22; Luke 12:15; Rom 1:29; 2Cor 9:5; Eph 4:19

πλευρ-ά G4125 N-AFS (6×)

Side of the body, rib area; the lateral part of the torso, especially as pierced or displayed in the Passion and Resurrection narratives.

Pleura means 'side' — specifically the lateral area of the human torso around the ribs. While it could refer to ribs themselves in classical Greek, the NT uses it exclusively for the side of Jesus' body. A soldier pierces it with a spear at the crucifixion (John 19:34; possibly Matt 27:49), and the risen Christ shows his wounded side to the disciples as proof of identity (John 20:20, 25, 27). Thomas's demand to put his hand 'into his side' makes pleura a word forever linked to the tangible reality of the resurrection. The Spanish 'costado' and French 'cote' both carry this bodily-side meaning.

(6×) The side of the human body, the lateral torso near the ribs. In classical Greek, pleura could denote ribs proper or the flank of an animal, but in the NT it refers exclusively to the side of Jesus' body in the Passion and Resurrection accounts. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'costado,' French 'cote,' German 'Seite' — all denote the bodily side rather than an abstract 'side.' John 19:34 records the piercing of Jesus' side by a Roman lance, fulfilling Zechariah 12:10. John 20:20, 25, 27 narrate the risen Christ displaying his wounded side as tangible proof of bodily resurrection, culminating in Thomas's confession, 'My Lord and my God.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: side | es: costado | fr: côté | de: Seite, πλευράν, πλευρὰν Matt 27:49; John 19:34; John 20:20; John 20:25; John 20:27

πλέω G4126 V-IIA-1P (6×)

pleo – to sail, navigate or travel by ship across a body of water

The verb pleo denotes sailing or traveling by sea, the basic Greek term for maritime movement. All six New Testament occurrences describe literal sea voyages: the disciples crossing the Sea of Galilee (Luke 8:23), and Paul's various missionary journeys by ship (Acts 21:3; 27:2, 6, 24). The word carries no metaphorical extension in the NT – it is concrete and practical. Spanish navegar, French naviguer, and German segeln all converge on the same straightforward maritime sense, reflecting a world where sailing was the primary mode of long-distance travel.

sail, travel by ship (6×) To sail, navigate, or travel by ship across water. Every NT occurrence refers to literal sea voyaging: the disciples caught in a storm on Galilee (Luke 8:23) and Paul's Mediterranean passages toward Rome (Acts 27:2, 6, 24). Spanish navegar, French naviguer, and German segeln all map uniformly to this single concrete maritime sense. The word appears in participial, finite, and infinitival forms but with no semantic variation – all denote the physical act of shipborne travel. SAIL TRAVEL SHIP en: sailing, to-sail, we-were-sailing | es: de-navegar, navegando, navegábamos | fr: naviguer | de: segeln, πλέον, πλέοντας Luke 8:23; Acts 21:3; Acts 27:2; Acts 27:6; Acts 27:24

πληγ-ή G4127 N-AFP (22×)

A blow, beating, or stripe; a divine plague or calamity; a wound, especially a mortal wound

The noun πληγή (from πλήσσω, 'to strike') covers the full spectrum of physical violence from human beatings to cosmic divine judgment. In the Gospels and Acts, it refers to literal blows and stripes inflicted by human hands — the Good Samaritan's victim was left half-dead with wounds (Luke 10:30), and Paul and Silas received many blows in the Philippian prison (Acts 16:23). In Revelation, the word rises to apocalyptic scale as the divine plagues poured out upon the earth, echoing the plagues of Egypt. Three occurrences in Revelation 13 describe the beast's 'mortal wound' — a wound unto death that was mysteriously healed.

1. plague, divine calamity (13×) The apocalyptic sense of a divinely sent plague or catastrophic affliction, dominating 13 occurrences, all in Revelation. These are the seven last plagues (Rev 15:1,6,8), the plagues of fire, smoke, and sulfur (Rev 9:18,20), and the plagues threatened against Babylon (Rev 18:4,8). The Spanish 'plaga/plagas' and German 'Plagen' directly echo the language of the Exodus plague narratives, signaling that John's Revelation consciously reuses the imagery of God's judicial strikes against Egypt for the eschatological judgment of the nations. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: plague, plagues | es: plaga, plagas | fr: coup | de: Plagen Rev 9:18; Rev 9:20; Rev 11:6; Rev 15:1; Rev 15:6

2. blow, beating, stripe (6×) The concrete physical sense of a blow, beating, or stripe inflicted by human violence. Luke 10:30 describes the man who 'fell among robbers' and received blows (πληγάς). Paul catalogs his own sufferings including 'beatings' (2 Cor 6:5, 11:23), and the Philippian jailer washed the 'stripes' of Paul and Silas (Acts 16:33). The multilingual glosses shift markedly from sense 1: Spanish 'azotes/golpes,' English 'beatings/blows,' conveying interpersonal violence rather than cosmic judgment. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: beatings, blows, of-blows | es: azotes, de-azotes, golpes | fr: coup | de: Plagen, πληγὰς, πληγῶν Luke 10:30; Luke 12:48; Acts 16:23; Acts 16:33; 2Cor 6:5

3. wound, mortal wound (3×) A specialized sense denoting a wound — specifically a mortal, death-dealing wound — concentrated in three occurrences about the beast of Revelation 13. The beast's 'wound of death' (πληγὴ τοῦ θανάτου, Rev 13:3,12) was healed, causing the world to marvel. Rev 13:14 further describes the beast 'who had the wound of the sword and lived.' Spanish 'herida' and English 'wound' mark this sense as distinct from both blows (human violence) and plagues (divine judgment), focusing on the resulting physical injury rather than the act of striking. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: wound | es: herida | fr: coup | de: Plagen Rev 13:3; Rev 13:12; Rev 13:14

πλῆθος G4128 N-DNS (31×)

A multitude, crowd, or large number; a great quantity of people gathered together, or occasionally of things.

Plethos denotes a great number or mass, used overwhelmingly in Luke-Acts for crowds of people: the multitude of worshipers at the temple (Luke 1:10), the heavenly host praising God (Luke 2:13), and the growing community of believers (Acts 4:32). All major translations converge on crowd/multitude terms: Spanish multitud, French multitude, German Menge. A single occurrence in Acts 28:3 extends the word to a non-human quantity, a bundle of sticks, showing its root meaning of sheer abundance can apply beyond persons.

1. multitude, crowd, large group of people (30×) A large group of people gathered together, a crowd, throng, or assembly. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (30x) appears throughout Luke-Acts and Mark, describing disciples, worshipers, and public gatherings. Translations are remarkably uniform: Spanish multitud, French multitude, German Menge. The heavenly host of Luke 2:13 and the miraculous catch of fish drawing a plethos in Luke 5:6 illustrate the word's range from celestial armies to everyday crowds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-multitude, multitude | es: multitud | fr: multitude | de: Menge Mark 3:7; Mark 3:8; Luke 1:10; Luke 2:13; Luke 5:6

2. quantity, great amount (of things) (1×) A great quantity or amount of non-human things. This rare sense (1x) appears in Acts 28:3, where Paul gathers a plethos of dry sticks for a fire on Malta. Spanish distinguishes this with cantidad rather than multitud, and English uses quantity, revealing that translators instinctively mark the shift from persons to objects. French and German retain the same term (multitude, Menge), treating it as a natural extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: quantity | es: cantidad | fr: multitude | de: Menge Acts 28:3

πληθ-ύνω G4129 V-FIA-1S (12×)

To multiply or cause to increase in number; passively, to grow, abound, or be multiplied.

A word drawn from the vocabulary of growth and abundance, used both of God's sovereign action in multiplying people or resources and of things that grow on their own. Luke narrates the early church's explosive expansion with this verb: the word of God 'multiplied' and the disciples 'increased' (Acts 6:7; 9:31; 12:24). Spanish multiplicarse and German vermehrt capture the passive-intransitive force well. In its transitive sense God is the agent who multiplies, as in the promise to Abraham (Heb 6:14) and Paul's prayer that God would multiply the Corinthians' seed for sowing (2 Cor 9:10). The epistolary greeting 'grace and peace be multiplied' (1 Pet 1:2; 2 Pet 1:2; Jude 1:2) has become a hallmark of the apostolic letters.

1. be multiplied, increase (intransitive/passive) (9×) To be multiplied, grow, or increase in number, used intransitively or in the passive voice. Describes the organic growth of the early church (Acts 6:7; 9:31; 12:24), the people of Israel in Egypt (Acts 7:17), lawlessness increasing in the last days (Matt 24:12), and the epistolary wish for grace and peace to abound. Spanish multiplicarse and French multiplier reflect the self-propagating nuance. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: may-be-multiplied, multiplied, multiplying | es: fue-multiplicado, multiplicarse, multiplicándose | fr: multiplier, soient-multipliés. | de: mehren, sei-vermehrt, πληθυνθῆναι Matt 24:12; Acts 6:1; Acts 6:7; Acts 7:17; Acts 9:31

2. multiply, increase (transitive) (3×) To multiply or increase something, used transitively with God or a person as the active agent who causes the growth. God promises to multiply Abraham's descendants (Heb 6:14, quoting Gen 22:17) and Paul asks God to multiply the Corinthians' seed for sowing (2 Cor 9:10). Spanish multiplicaré/multiplicando and German mehren preserve the causative force. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: I-will-multiply, multiplying, will-multiply | es: multiplicando, multiplicará, te-multiplicaré | fr: multiplier | de: mehren 2Cor 9:10; Heb 6:14

πλήθ-ω G4130 V-AIP-3P (24×)

To fill or be filled — with a substance, emotion, or the Holy Spirit; also to fulfill or complete a period of time.

A verb of fullness with two distinct arcs in Luke's writings. On one hand, it describes being filled with the Holy Spirit — the dominant Lukan usage, from Elizabeth and Zechariah (Luke 1:41, 67) to the disciples at Pentecost (Acts 2:4). On the other, it marks the completion of appointed times: Mary's days to give birth 'were fulfilled' (Luke 2:6), and Zechariah's term of priestly service 'was completed' (Luke 1:23). Spanish distinguishes fue lleno ('was filled') from se cumplieron ('were fulfilled'), and similarly German erfüllt serves double duty, while Arabic splits between ملأ (mala'a, 'to fill') and the temporal ة (tamma, 'to be completed').

1. fill with substance or spirit (18×) To fill or be filled with a physical substance, emotion, or especially the Holy Spirit, resulting in a state of fullness that prompts speech or action. Spanish fue lleno/fueron llenados and German erfüllt render this consistently. Luke 1:15 promises John the Baptist will be filled with the Holy Spirit from the womb; Elizabeth (Luke 1:41) and Zechariah (Luke 1:67) are filled and prophesy. The wedding hall in Matt 22:10 is filled with guests, and in Matt 27:48 a sponge is filled with vinegar — showing the verb spans from physical containers to spiritual empowerment. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: be-filled, having-been-filled, having-filled | es: fue-llena, fue-lleno, fueron-llenados | fr: remplir | de: erfüllt Matt 22:10; Matt 27:48; Luke 1:15; Luke 1:41; Luke 1:67

2. fulfill or complete time (6×) To bring a period of time, a prophecy, or an appointed event to completion or fulfillment — marking that the designated span has run its full course. Spanish cumplirse/se cumplieron ('to be fulfilled') and temporal Arabic ة (tamma) distinguish this from the filling sense. Luke 1:23 notes that Zechariah's days of priestly service 'were completed'; Luke 1:57 that Elizabeth's time to give birth 'was fulfilled'; and Luke 2:6, 21-22 mark the completion of Mary's days and the time of purification. The emphasis is on divinely appointed timing reaching its full measure. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: to-be-fulfilled, was-fulfilled, were-completed | es: cumplirse, fueron-cumplidos, se-cumplieron | fr: remplir | de: erfüllt Luke 1:23; Luke 1:57; Luke 2:6; Luke 2:21; Luke 2:22

πλήκ-της G4131 N-AMS (2×)

a striker, brawler, or violent person; one given to physical aggression

A noun describing someone prone to hitting or striking—a brawler, violent person, one quick to use fists. Paul uses it in his pastoral qualifications for church leaders. An overseer or elder must not be a 'striker'—not violent, not given to physical aggression (1 Tim 3:3; Titus 1:7). This disqualifies the hot-tempered man who settles disputes with force rather than wisdom. Classical usage could describe fierce, warlike men or even violent wine (harsh, biting). In church leadership, gentleness not violence must characterize those who shepherd God's flock.

(2×) A violent person, one prone to striking or brawling, explicitly disqualified from church leadership. Paul's elder qualifications exclude the 'plēktēs'—the man who uses physical force, whether in anger management issues or habitual aggression. Instead, leaders must be gentle, patient, not quarrelsome. The term appears in both major pastoral letters on leadership (1 Timothy, Titus), showing this is a universal standard. The multilingual renderings ('violento', 'gewalttätig') emphasize character—this is about temperament and behavior patterns, not isolated incidents. POWER AND ABILITY

en: violent | es: violento | fr: πλήκτην | de: gewalttaetig 1Tim 3:3; Titus 1:7

πλήμῡρ-α G4132 N-GFS (1×)

a flood, deluge, or inundation; rising flood-tide

This term describes the overwhelming rush of water in a flood or the rising of flood-tide. In Luke 6:48, Jesus uses it to depict the violent flood that tests a house's foundation. The image would resonate with Mediterranean audiences familiar with seasonal flooding and destructive storm surges. The term captures both the volume of water and its forceful, testing nature—a perfect metaphor for life's trials that reveal whether faith is built on solid ground.

(1×) The flood that strikes the house in Jesus' parable in Luke 6:48, testing which foundation proves reliable. Ancient Mediterranean builders knew the danger of seasonal floods and storm surges. Multilingual glosses uniformly recognize the destructive water surge ('a-flood', 'inundación', 'inondation'). The flood becomes Jesus' metaphor for life's inevitable trials that expose shallow versus deep-rooted faith. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY

en: a-flood | es: inundación | fr: inondation | de: πλημμύρης Luke 6:48

πλήν G4133 Prep (32×)

Adversative conjunction 'but, nevertheless, however'; also prepositional 'except, only, besides.'

A versatile discourse particle that most often functions as an adversative conjunction — 'but,' 'nevertheless' — introducing a counterpoint or concession after a preceding statement. Jesus uses it frequently: 'Nevertheless, not my will but yours be done' (Matt 26:39) and 'But woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed' (Matt 26:24). Less commonly it serves as a preposition meaning 'except' or 'only,' restricting a broader claim (John 8:10; Acts 8:1). German 'außer' and Spanish 'sin-embargo' / 'excepto' neatly track the two uses, while French 'sauf-que' and 'cependant' likewise split the semantic range.

1. but, nevertheless, however (23×) Adversative conjunction marking contrast, concession, or qualification — 'but,' 'nevertheless,' 'however.' The dominant use (23x), frequently pivoting from one thought to its counterpoint. Jesus's Gethsemane prayer 'nevertheless, not as I will' (Matt 26:39) and woe-sayings (Matt 11:22, 24; 18:7) exemplify the concessive force. Spanish 'sin-embargo' and 'pero,' German 'außer,' and French 'sauf-que' all render this adversative turn, though each language chooses a slightly different register. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: But, But-, Nevertheless | es: Sin-embargo, pero, sin-embargo | fr: sauf-que | de: außer Matt 11:22; Matt 11:24; Matt 18:7; Matt 26:39; Matt 26:64

2. except, only, besides (9×) Prepositional or limiting particle meaning 'except,' 'only,' or 'besides,' restricting or excluding from a broader category. 'No one remained except the woman' (John 8:10); the Jerusalem church was scattered 'except the apostles' (Acts 8:1); the Holy Spirit testifies in every city 'except that' bonds await (Acts 20:23). Spanish 'excepto' and German 'ausser' directly convey the exclusionary force, while French 'cependant' can blur the line — the Greek πλήν is more precise in this limiting function than many receptor languages convey. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: besides, except | es: excepto, sin-embargo, sino | fr: cependant, cependant-, sauf-que | de: ausser, außer Mark 12:32; John 8:10; Acts 8:1; Acts 15:28; Acts 20:23

πλήρης G4134 Adj-AFP (16×)

Full, filled – of physical containers, spiritual qualities, or abstract fullness

The adjective pleres ('full') appears throughout the New Testament describing both concrete and abstract fullness. Baskets are 'full' of leftover fragments after the miraculous feedings (Matt 14:20, 15:37, Mark 8:19-20), and a grain head grows 'full' on the stalk (Mark 4:28). More strikingly, the word characterizes persons filled with spiritual qualities: Jesus is 'full of the Holy Spirit' (Luke 4:1), Stephen is 'full of faith and power' (Acts 6:8), and Tabitha is 'full of good works' (Acts 9:36). The multilingual glosses are remarkably uniform – 'lleno/llena,' 'plein,' 'voll' – across all occurrences, reflecting the adjective's single core meaning applied to different domains.

1. (15×) Full, filled, replete – the primary and near-universal sense covering both physical and spiritual fullness. Physically, baskets are 'full' of fragments (Matt 14:20, 15:37, Mark 8:19-20), a grain ear is 'full' (Mark 4:28), and a sponge is 'full of vinegar.' Spiritually, persons are described as 'full of' the Holy Spirit (Luke 4:1, Acts 7:55), grace and truth (John 1:14), faith and power (Acts 6:5, 6:8), good works (Acts 9:36), or even negative qualities like envy and deceit (Acts 13:10). All fifteen occurrences share identical multilingual glosses: Spanish 'lleno/llena,' French 'plein,' German 'voll' – the adjective's semantic core is remarkably stable across physical and metaphorical collocations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: full | es: llena, llenas, lleno | fr: plein | de: voll Matt 14:20; Matt 15:37; Mark 4:28; Mark 8:19; Luke 4:1

2. (1×) Full in the sense of 'complete, full measure' – specifically at 2 John 1:8 where the author writes 'that you may receive a full reward.' Here the emphasis falls not on a container being filled but on the completeness or undiminished character of what is received. Spanish renders this with 'plena' (rather than the usual 'lleno/llena'), subtly marking the shift from spatial fullness to abstract completeness. While the core meaning of pleres remains 'full,' this single occurrence tilts toward 'complete, entire,' approaching the semantic territory of teleios. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: full | es: plena | fr: plein | de: voll 2John 1:8

πληροφορ-έω G4135 V-RPM/P-NMP (6×)

To be fully convinced or thoroughly assured; also to fulfill, accomplish, or bring to complete fruition.

Plērophoreō carries the root idea of 'filling to the full,' and in the NT it branches into two distinct applications. On one hand, it describes the inner state of being thoroughly convinced or fully assured: Abraham was 'fully persuaded' that God could do what he promised (Rom 4:21), and Paul insists each believer should be 'fully convinced in his own mind' about disputable matters (Rom 14:5). On the other hand, it describes the external completion of divine purposes: Luke opens his Gospel by mentioning events 'fully accomplished among us' (Luke 1:1), and Paul charges Timothy to 'fulfill' his ministry (2 Tim 4:5). Spanish distinguishes the two neatly – 'plenamente convencido' for conviction versus 'cumplir' for fulfillment.

1. to be fully convinced, fully assured (3×) To be fully convinced, thoroughly persuaded, or completely assured about something. Abraham was plērophorētheis that God was able to perform his promise (Rom 4:21); each person should be plērophoreisthō in their own mind about observing days (Rom 14:5); and Paul prays the Colossians may stand plērophorēmenoi in God's will (Col 4:12). Spanish 'plenamente convencido,' French 'pleinement assure,' and German 'vollig ueberzeugt' all reflect this sense of unshakeable inner certainty. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: fully-assured, having-been-fully-convinced, let-be-fully-convinced | es: completamente-convencidos, estando-plenamente-convencido, esté-plenamente-convencido | fr: pleinement-assuré, pleinement-convaincu | de: voellig-ueberzeugt Rom 4:21; Rom 14:5; Col 4:12

2. to fulfill, bring to completion (3×) To fulfill, bring to full completion, or accomplish entirely. Luke 1:1 speaks of events peplērophorēmenōn ('fully accomplished') among the first believers. Paul tells Timothy to plērophorēson his ministry – carry it out to the full (2 Tim 4:5) – and reports that through him the message was plērophorēthē, fully proclaimed (2 Tim 4:17). Spanish 'cumplir/cumplidas' and English 'fulfill' highlight the sense of bringing a task or divine purpose to its intended completion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: fulfill, having-been-fulfilled, might-be-fulfilled | es: cumple, cumpli-

das, fuera-cumplida | fr: pleinement-convaincu | de: voellig-ueberzeugt, πεπληροφορημένων Luke 1:1; 2Tim 4:5; 2Tim 4:17

πληροφορ-ία G4136 N-DFS (4×)

Full assurance, complete certainty; the settled confidence of deep conviction.

From plērophoreō (to fill completely), plērophoria denotes the fullness of conviction or settled certainty that comes from deep faith. Paul speaks of the 'full assurance of understanding' needed to know the mystery of Christ (Col 2:2) and recalls how the gospel came to the Thessalonians not in word only but in power and full assurance (1 Thess 1:5). Hebrews urges believers toward the full assurance of hope (6:11) and the full assurance of faith (10:22). Spanish 'plena certeza,' French 'certitude,' and German 'Gewissheit' all express this unwavering, complete confidence.

(4×) Full assurance or complete certainty, especially regarding matters of faith and hope. Colossians 2:2 speaks of the riches of full assurance that come from understanding God's mystery. In 1 Thessalonians 1:5, plērophoria accompanies the Spirit's power in the gospel's reception. Hebrews 6:11 and 10:22 urge believers to maintain this full assurance in hope and faith, drawing near to God with a sincere heart. The Spanish 'plena certeza' and 'plena convicción' nicely capture the completeness implied—this is not partial confidence but total, settled conviction. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: full-assurance | es: plena-certeza, plena-certidumbre, plena-convicción | fr: certitude | de: Gewissheit Col 2:2; 1Thess 1:5; Heb 6:11; Heb 10:22

πληρ-όω G4137 V-APA-NMP (88×)

To fill, make full; to fulfill prophecy or complete a purpose; passively, to be filled with the Spirit, joy, or content.

Pleroo is one of the most theologically generative verbs in the New Testament, bridging the physical act of filling a container with the divine act of bringing Scripture to completion. Matthew's repeated formula 'that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet' (Matt 1:22; 2:15) uses precisely this verb, making it the hinge between Old Testament promise and New Testament realization. Yet the same root fills a house with fragrance when Mary anoints Jesus (John 12:3), fills disciples with the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2:4), and fills up a net with fish (Matt 13:48). The multilingual evidence splits revealingly: Arabic distinguishes tamm/yatimm ('come to completion') from mala'a ('fill physically'), Korean separates 이루어지다 ('be accomplished') from 채우다 ('fill a vessel'), and Swahili uses -timizwa for prophetic fulfillment but -jaza for spatial filling. These cross-linguistic fracture lines confirm genuine sense boundaries within what Greek collapses into a single lexeme.

1. fulfill prophecy (passive) (38×) To fulfill prophecy or Scripture (passive) — the largest sense at 38 occurrences, overwhelmingly concentrated in Matthew and John. The characteristic formula hina plerothe ('in order that it might be fulfilled') appears 16 times in Matthew alone, structurally organizing the Gospel as a narrative of prophetic completion. Arabic tamm/yatimm (passive of the root t-m-m, 'to be completed'), Korean 이루어지다/성취되다 ('to be accomplished/achieved'), and Swahili -timizwa all select completion/accomplishment vocabulary rather than physical filling, confirming this as a deeply lexicalized sub-sense. Key passages: Matt 1:22 (virgin birth fulfills Isaiah), Matt 2:15 (flight to Egypt fulfills Hosea), John 19:24 (casting lots fulfills the Psalms). FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: it-is-fulfilled, may-be-fulfilled, might-be-fulfilled | es: fuera-cumplida, fuera-cumplido, se-cumpla | fr: accomplir | de: erfuellen, erfüllt Matt 1:22; Matt 2:15; Matt 2:17; Matt 2:23; Matt 4:14

2. be filled (passive/middle) (16×) To be filled (passive/middle) with spiritual or emotional content — 16 occurrences where persons or places become full of the Holy Spirit, joy, sorrow, or knowledge. The disciples are 'filled with joy and the Holy Spirit' (Acts 13:52), Jesus tells the disciples 'sorrow has filled your hearts' (John 16:6), and Paul prays believers may 'be filled with all the fullness of God' (Eph 3:19). Arabic imtala'a (Form VIII reflexive of m-l-', 'to become full') and Korean 충만하다 ('to be brimful') both use dedicated state-of-fullness vocabulary. The sense boundary against prophetic fulfillment is sharp: here the subject becomes a container for a quality, not a prophecy reaching its appointed completion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-am-filled, I-have-been-filled, I-may-be-filled | es: completado, completos, cumplido | fr: accomplir | de: erfuellen, erfüllt Matt 13:48; Luke 2:40; John 12:3; Acts 13:52; Rom 1:29

3. fulfill actively (complete/accomplish) (14×) To fulfill actively — to accomplish, complete, or carry out a duty, law, or mission (active voice, human agent) — 14 occurrences. Jesus declares he came 'not to abolish the Law but to fulfill it' (Matt 5:17); Paul says love is the 'fulfillment of the law' (Rom 13:8). At Matt 3:15, Jesus tells John the Baptist 'it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness.' Arabic atamma/akmala (active causative completive forms) and Korean 완성하다/이루다 ('to accomplish, bring to completion') both mark this as volitional completion by an agent, distinct from the passive prophetic sense. The active voice is the key morphological signal. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: fill-up, fulfill, has-fulfilled | es: a-cumplir, colmad, completad | fr: accomplir | de: erfuellen, erfüllt Matt 3:15; Matt 5:17; Matt 23:32; Luke 9:31; Acts 3:18

4. complete a period or course (10×) To complete a period, course, or appointed time — 10 occurrences where a temporal span reaches its appointed end. 'When Jesus had finished these sayings' (Matt 7:28 uses a different verb, but Luke 7:1 uses pleroo); 'the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled' (Luke 21:24); 'until the words of God are fulfilled' (Rev 17:17). Arabic akmala/intahat ('completed/ended') and Korean 마치다 ('to finish') both focus on temporal terminus rather than content-filling. This sense often carries eschatological weight: time itself is treated as a vessel being filled up until it overflows into a new era (Gal 4:4, 'the fullness of time'). FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: are-fulfilled, completed, having-been-fulfilled | es: cumplidas, cumplido, cumplía | fr: accomplir | de: erfuellen, erfüllt Luke 7:1; Luke 21:24; John 15:11; John 16:24; John 17:13

5. fill spatially (active) (10×) To fill spatially (active) — to fill a physical space, container, or place with tangible substance — 10 occurrences. Every valley shall 'be filled' (Luke 3:5 quoting Isaiah), the house 'was filled' with the fragrance of ointment (John 12:3), 'a sound filled the whole house' at Pentecost (Acts 2:2), and Ananias 'filled' his heart with Satan's deception (Acts 5:3, a metaphorical extension of the spatial image). Arabic mala'a/yamla' (root m-l-', 'to fill a container') and Korean 채우다 ('to fill, pour into') both deploy concrete-filling vocabulary here, distinct from the abstract completion terms used for senses 1, 3, and 4. Swahili -jaza ('to fill up, pour full') further confirms the spatial-physical boundary. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: fill, filling, has-filled | es: ha-llenado, habéis-llenado, llenando | fr: accomplir | de: erfuellen, erfüllt Luke 3:5; John 16:6; Acts 2:2; Acts 2:28; Acts 5:3

πλήρ-ωμα G4138 N-ANP (18×)

Fullness, that which fills or completes — divine totality, physical contents, or fulfillment of obligation

Pleroma is one of the New Testament's richest theological terms. John declares that from Christ's fullness believers have received grace upon grace (John 1:16), and Paul affirms that in Christ 'all the fullness of the Deity dwells bodily' (Col 2:9). Yet the word also has an earthy, concrete side: the twelve baskets of leftover fragments after the feeding of the five thousand are literally the 'fullness' of what remained (Mark 6:43). Paul brings both registers together when he writes that love is the 'fulfillment' of the law (Rom 13:10). Spanish 'plenitud' and French 'plénitude' preserve this range beautifully.

1. fullness (divine/abstract) (13×) The fullness or totality of divine presence, power, or blessing. John 1:16 speaks of receiving from Christ's fullness, while Col 1:19 and 2:9 declare the fullness of God dwelling in the Son. Paul also uses pleroma of eschatological completion — the 'fullness of the Gentiles' (Rom 11:25) and the 'fullness of time' (Gal 4:4, Eph 1:10). This is the word's most theologically charged sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fullness, of-the | es: plenitud | fr: plénitude | de: Fuelle John 1:16; Rom 11:12; Rom 11:25; Rom 15:29; 1Cor 10:26

2. that which fills (physical contents) (4×) That which fills a container or space — the physical contents or complement. After the feeding miracles, the disciples gathered twelve baskets 'full' of fragments (Mark 6:43; 8:20). In Matt 9:16 and Mark 2:21, unshrunk cloth as a 'patch' tears away from the garment, taking its fullness with it. Here the word retains its classical Greek concreteness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: full, fullness | es: añadido, llenado, llenuras | fr: plénitude | de: Fuelle, πλήρωμα Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21; Mark 6:43; Mark 8:20

3. fulfillment (of law/obligation) (1×) The fulfillment or complete satisfaction of a requirement, especially the Mosaic law. In Rom 13:10 Paul declares that love is the pleroma of the law — not its abolition but its full realization. The Spanish 'cumplimiento' distinguishes this sense clearly from abstract 'plenitud,' highlighting the active completion of an obligation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: fulfillment | es: cumplimiento | fr: plénitude | de: Fuelle Rom 13:10

πλήσι-ος G4139 Prep (17×)

Near, close by; substantivally, 'one's neighbor' — a fellow human being toward whom one bears moral obligation.
Originally a spatial adjective meaning 'near' or 'close to,' this word underwent a remarkable theological transformation. In classical Greek it described physical proximity — neighboring fields, nearby towns. But in the Septuagint rendering of Leviticus 19:18 and throughout the NT, ho plesion ('the one nearby') becomes the ethical 'neighbor' — the person toward whom love is commanded (Matt 22:39; Rom 13:9; Gal 5:14). Spanish projimo, French prochain, and German Naechster all preserve this shift from spatial nearness to relational nearness. Only in John 4:5, where the Samaritan town lies 'near' a plot of ground, does the original locative sense survive in the NT.

1. (16×) One's neighbor in the ethical and relational sense — a fellow human being toward whom one has moral duties, especially the obligation of love (16 occurrences). This substantival usage dominates the NT, anchored in the double love command (Matt 22:39; Mark 12:31) and the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:27-29). Spanish projimo and French prochain both derive from words meaning 'near,' preserving the etymology while carrying the full ethical weight. Paul extends it to the whole of the law: 'Love your neighbor as yourself' (Rom 13:9; Gal 5:14). LOVE AND LOYALTY
en: neighbor | es: prójimo | fr: prochain | de: Naechster, πλησίον Matt 5:43; Matt 19:19; Matt 22:39; Mark 12:31; Mark 12:33

2. (1×) Spatial proximity — 'near' or 'close to' a place. The sole NT occurrence of this locative sense is John 4:5, where the Samaritan city of Sychar is described as lying near the parcel of ground Jacob gave to Joseph. Spanish cerca ('near') and English 'near' reflect the straightforward spatial meaning. This usage preserves the word's classical Greek sense and reminds readers that the ethical 'neighbor' concept grew from the simple idea of physical nearness. NEARNESS AND APPROACH en: near | es: cerca | fr: prochain | de: Naechster John 4:5

πλησμον-ή G4140 N-AFS (1×)

satiety, indulgence, being filled to excess (especially with food)
This term denotes the state of being completely filled or satisfied, often to the point of excess. While it can simply mean satiety, it frequently carries negative connotations of overindulgence or surfeit. In Colossians 2:23, Paul critiques ascetic practices that appear wise but are ultimately worthless 'against the indulgence of the flesh.' The irony is sharp: harsh bodily restrictions don't actually curb fleshly appetites, just redirect them.

(1×) The fleshly indulgence that ascetic rules fail to restrain in Colossians 2:23. Paul's point is counterintuitive: severe bodily discipline doesn't overcome the flesh's desires, it merely shifts them. The term suggests both physical satiety and the broader concept of gratifying appetites. Multilingual renderings vary ('indulgence', 'satisfacción', 'Saettigung'), reflecting the term's range from neutral fullness to excessive gratification. SATIATION AND FULLNESS en: indulgence | es: satisfacción | fr: πλησμονὴν | de: Saettigung Col 2:23

πλήσσω G4141 V-AIP-3S (1×)

to strike, smite, hit; to inflict a blow or wound
This verb describes striking or smiting with force, whether in combat, punishment, or divine judgment. In Revelation 8:12, a third of the sun, moon, and stars are struck during the fourth trumpet judgment, causing partial cosmic darkness. The term conveys violent impact and its consequences. Ancient Greek used this word for everything from battlefield blows to blacksmith's hammer strikes, emphasizing the force and effect of the impact.

(1×) The striking of celestial bodies in Revelation 8:12 during apocalyptic judgment. A third of the sun, moon, and stars are smitten, reducing their light. Multilingual glosses show consistent understanding of forceful striking ('was-struck', 'fue-herida', 'frapper', 'schlagen'). This cosmic blow demonstrates divine power over creation, echoing the Egyptian plague of darkness and foreshadowing final judgment. STRIKING AND REFERENCE en: was-struck | es: fue-herida | fr: frapper | de: schlagen Rev 8:12

πλοιᾰρ-ιον G4142 N-NNS (5×)

Small boat, skiff; a diminutive vessel, smaller than a full-sized ship, used near shore on the Sea of Galilee.
A diminutive of πλοῖον (boat/ship), denoting a small boat or skiff — the kind used for short trips on the Sea of Galilee. In Mark 3:9, Jesus asks that a small boat be kept ready so the pressing crowd would not crush him. In John 6:22-24, the crowd notices that there was only one small boat on the shore after the feeding miracle, and other boats from Tiberias arrived the next day. John 21:8 places the disciples in the small boat dragging their net full of fish to shore. The Spanish diminutive 'barquita' charmingly mirrors the Greek diminutive suffix -αριον.

(5×) A small boat or skiff — the diminutive form of πλοῖον (ship/boat), indicating a vessel of modest size suitable for nearshore activity on a lake. The diminutive suffix -αριον conveys smallness, distinguishing it from the larger πλοῖον used for open-water travel. In Mark 3:9, Jesus requests one be kept ready as a floating retreat from pressing crowds. The cluster in John 6:22-24 uses the small boat as a narrative detail to heighten the mystery of Jesus' sea-crossing: the crowd saw no πλοιάριον he could have taken. In John 21:8, the disciples drag their miraculous catch to shore in the small boat, being only about a hundred yards out. The Spanish 'barquita' (little boat) beautifully mirrors the Greek diminutive, while French 'barque' and German 'Boote' render it more neutrally. BOAT FISHING VESSEL en: little-boat, small-boat, small-boats | es: barquita, barquitas | fr: barque | de: Boote Mark 3:9; John 6:22; John 6:23; John 6:24; John 21:8

πλοῖον G4143 N-GNS (67×)

A floating vessel: a small boat or fishing craft on inland waters; also a larger sea-going ship for Mediterranean voyages.
From the verb pleo ('to sail'), ploion is the New Testament's general word for watercraft, covering everything from Peter's fishing boat on Galilee to the grain ships Paul sailed across the Mediterranean. The Gospels concentrate the small-boat sense — the disciples' vessels on the Sea of Galilee figure in storm narratives (Matt 8:23-24), miraculous catches (Luke 5:2-7), and Jesus walking on water (Matt 14:22-33). Acts shifts the register entirely: ploion now means a sea-going ship for long voyages, storm-tossed on the open sea (Acts 27). German uses both 'Boot' (boat) and 'Schiff' (ship), while French distinguishes 'bateau' from 'navire,' mirroring the size and context shift.

1. small boat, fishing vessel (inland waters) (45×) Split from sense 75084. Criteria: Small craft on Sea of Galilee used for fishing and short crossings; consistently rendered 'barca' (Spanish), 'bateau' (French), 'Boot' (German)

en: a-boat, boat | es: barca | fr: bateau | de: Boot, Schiff Matt 4:21; Matt 4:22; Matt 8:23; Matt 8:24; Matt 9:1

2. ship, sea-going vessel (22×) A larger sea-going ship used for Mediterranean maritime voyages, concentrated in Acts and Revelation. Paul boards a ploion at Troas (Acts 20:13), sails to Phoenicia (Acts 21:2-3), and endures shipwreck aboard an Alexandrian grain ship (Acts 27:1-44). Revelation's merchants mourn over burning cargo ships (Rev 18:19). French 'navire,' Spanish 'barco,' and German 'Schiff' reflect the larger scale, distinguishing these vessels from the Galilean fishing boats of the Gospel narratives. SHIP SEA VESSEL en: a-ship, on-a-ship, ship | es: barco, barcos, en-un-barco | fr: bateau, navire | de: Boot, Schiff Acts 20:13; Acts 20:38; Acts 21:2; Acts 21:3; Acts 21:6

4. ship, sea-going vessel Split from sense 75084. Criteria: Larger vessels for Mediterranean voyages; the lemma gloss explicitly mentions 'also a larger sea-going ship for Mediterranean voyages' but the description focuses only on small boats

---

πλόος G4144 N-AMS (3×)

a voyage, sailing, sea journey; the act of traveling by ship or the time/conditions for sailing

This noun denotes a sea voyage or the act of sailing. After completing a voyage from Tyre, Paul and his companions arrived at Ptolemais (Acts 21:7). Because much time had passed and sailing was now dangerous (after the fast), Paul warns against continuing the voyage (Acts 27:9-10). The word can refer to the journey itself, the time or season suitable for sailing, or the conditions of a particular voyage. Ancient Mediterranean navigation was highly seasonal, making timing crucial for safe travel.

(3×) Multilingual glosses consistently indicate sea travel: English 'voyage', Spanish 'navegación/viaje', French 'navigation', German preserves Greek forms πλοὸς/πλοῦν. The lexicon defines it as 'sailing, voyage' with meanings including 'time or tide for sailing' and fair wind. Acts 21:7 describes completing a voyage and arriving at port. Acts 27:9-10 (twice) mention the voyage being dangerous because sailing season had passed (after the Day of Atonement fast). The word encompasses the journey, the season, and the conditions for maritime travel. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13262 WITH 3 SENSES

en: voyage | es: navegación, viaje | fr: navigation | de: πλοὸς, πλοῦν Acts 21:7; Acts 27:9; Acts 27:10

πλούσιος G4145 Adj-DMP (28×)

Rich, wealthy; possessing abundant material resources. Used as adjective and substantive for persons of means.

This adjective describes someone possessing abundant material wealth, and it frequently appears as a substantive meaning 'a rich person.' In the Gospels, it carries a distinctive theological edge: Jesus' warnings about the difficulty the rich face entering the kingdom of God (Matt 19:23-24; Mark 10:25) give the word a gravity beyond mere economic description. Paul applies it metaphorically to God, who is 'rich in mercy' (Eph 2:4). The multilingual glosses converge tightly – Spanish 'rico,' French 'riche,' German 'reich' – reflecting the straightforward semantic core of material abundance.

rich, wealthy (28×) Wealthy, possessing abundant material resources; used both as a descriptive adjective and as a substantive noun ('a rich man'). Jesus' teaching about the rich man and the eye of a needle (Matt 19:23-24; Mark 10:25) and the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:19-22) make this a theologically loaded term. All major translation traditions render it with a direct equivalent – Spanish 'rico,' German 'reich,' French 'riche' – confirming its stable, monosemous character across languages. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: a-rich-man, rich, rich-man | es: a-rico, rico, ricos | fr: riche | de: reich Matt 19:23; Matt 19:24; Matt 27:57; Mark 10:25; Mark 12:41

πλούσιος G4146 Adv (4×)

Richly, abundantly, in a lavish or overflowing manner.

An adverb derived from the adjective plousios (wealthy), describing the manner in which something is given or experienced – not sparingly, but with generous abundance. Paul urges believers to let the word of Christ dwell in them 'richly' (Col 3:16), and God pours out the Spirit 'richly' through Jesus Christ (Titus 3:6). The term conveys a quality of divine generosity that overflows beyond mere sufficiency.

(4×) Richly, abundantly, in an overflowing manner. Used exclusively of divine or spiritual bounty in the NT: the indwelling word (Col 3:16), God's provision for enjoyment (1 Tim 6:17), the outpouring of the Spirit (Titus 3:6), and the rich entrance into Christ's kingdom (2 Pet 1:11). Spanish 'abundantemente' and German 'reichlich' both capture the quantitative overflow, while English 'richly' preserves the metaphorical link to wealth. Every NT occurrence connects material-wealth imagery to spiritual generosity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: richly | es: abundantemente, ricamente | fr: πλουσίως | de: reichlich Col 3:16; 1Tim 6:17; Titus 3:6; 2Pet 1:11

πλουτ-έω G4147 V-PPA-NMS (12×)

To be or become rich, whether in material wealth or in spiritual blessing and divine grace.

This verb spans the full range of enrichment, from amassing earthly possessions to receiving the lavish generosity of God. On the material side, Revelation's merchants 'became rich' from Babylon's luxury (Rev 18:3, 15, 19), and Jesus warns against the one who 'stores up treasure for himself' but is not rich toward God (Luke 12:21). The Spanish enriquecerse serves both registers seamlessly. On the spiritual side, Paul's striking paradox in 2 Corinthians 8:9 turns on this verb: Christ 'became poor so that you through his poverty might become rich.' The Laodicean church's tragic self-assessment, 'I have become wealthy' (Rev 3:17), ironically blends both senses, since they were materially comfortable but spiritually bankrupt.

1. become rich (materially) (6×) To become rich in material possessions or financial prosperity. Used of merchants enriched by Babylon's trade (Rev 18:3, 15, 19), the self-deceived rich (Luke 12:21), and the Laodicean church's misplaced confidence in wealth (Rev 3:17). Spanish enriqueciéndose and German reich-werden confirm the concrete economic sense. Luke 1:53 reverses the expectation: God sends the rich away empty. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: I-have-become-wealthy, became-rich, being-rich | es: a-ricos, enriqueciéndose, me-he-enriquecido | fr: s'enrichir | de: reich-werden, πλουτοῦντας, πλουτῶν Luke 1:53; Luke 12:21; Rev 3:17; Rev 18:3; Rev 18:15

2. become rich (spiritually) (6×) To be enriched spiritually, by God's grace or salvific bounty. Paul employs this sense powerfully: believers are made rich through Christ's voluntary poverty (2 Cor 8:9), and the Corinthians boast of having already 'become rich' in spiritual gifts (1 Cor 4:8, used with gentle irony). God is 'rich toward all who call on him' (Rom 10:12). Spanish enriquecidos/fuerais-enriquecidos and the parallel with 1 Tim 6:18 ('rich in good works') show the metaphorical transfer from economics to divine generosity. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: being-rich, might-become-rich, to-be-rich | es: enriquecerse, fuerais-enriquecidos, os-enriquecisteis | fr: s'enrichir | de: reich-werden Rom 10:12; 1Cor 4:8; 2Cor 8:9; 1Tim 6:9; 1Tim 6:18

πλουτ-ίζω G4148 V-AIP-2P (3×)

to enrich, to make wealthy; to provide abundance or make someone rich, materially or spiritually

This verb means to make wealthy or enrich someone. Paul reminds the Corinthians that they 'were enriched' in Christ in every way—in all speech and knowledge (1 Cor 1:5). He describes godly people who are poor yet 'making many rich' through the gospel (2 Cor 6:10). He assures them that as they are 'enriched' in everything for all generosity, thanksgiving will overflow (2 Cor 9:11). While the word can apply to material wealth, Paul consistently uses it for spiritual enrichment—grace, gifts, and generosity flowing from God's abundance.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes making rich/enriching: English 'being-enriched/making-rich/you-were-enriched', Spanish 'enriqueciendo/fuisteis-enriquecidos/siendo-enriquecidos', French 'enrichir', German 'reich-machen'. The lexicon defines it simply as 'make wealthy, enrich'. 1 Cor 1:5 describes being enriched in all speech and knowledge in Christ. 2 Cor 6:10 describes the paradox of being poor yet making many rich (spiritually). 2 Cor 9:11 speaks of being enriched for generosity. All three NT uses are spiritual enrichment, though the verb can apply to material wealth. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: being-enriched, making-rich, you-were-enriched | es: enriqueciendo, fuisteis-enriquecidos, siendo-enriquecidos | fr: enrichir | de: reich-machen 1Cor 1:5; 2Cor 6:10; 2Cor 9:11

πλοῦτος G4149 N-ANS (22×)

Riches, wealth – both material abundance and, metaphorically, the immeasurable fullness of divine grace and glory

A noun for wealth that operates on two registers in the New Testament. In the Synoptic parables, riches are a spiritual hazard: the 'deceitfulness of riches' chokes the word (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14). But Paul transforms the term into a vehicle for divine superabundance: 'the riches of his glory' (Rom 9:23; Eph 3:16), 'the riches of his grace' (Eph 1:7; 2:7), and 'the unsearchable riches of Christ' (Eph 3:8). This theological metaphor is distinctive to the Pauline corpus and gives the word a range broader than its classical Greek sense. Spanish riqueza, French richesse, and German Reichtum all serve for both the material and metaphorical uses.

riches (22×) Wealth and abundance, used concretely for material prosperity (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19, where riches choke the word) and metaphorically for divine fullness (Rom 9:23, 'riches of glory'; Eph 3:8, 'unsearchable riches of Christ'). The metaphorical extension is characteristically Pauline. Spanish riqueza, French richesse, and German Reichtum cover both registers. MIXED MULTITUDE en: of-riches, riches, wealth | es: de-riqueza, riqueza, riquezas | fr: richesse | de: Reichtum, πλούτου Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14; Rom 2:4; Rom 9:23

πλύνω G4150 V-AIA-3P (3×)

to wash, to clean by washing; to launder or cleanse, especially clothing or fabric

This verb means to wash or clean, particularly linen, clothes, or fabric (distinct from bathing the body). Fishermen were 'washing' their nets by the lake when Jesus called them (Luke 5:2). The great multitude in Revelation have 'washed' their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb (Rev 7:14; 22:14). The word emphasizes the act of cleansing fabric, which becomes a powerful metaphor in Revelation: garments made white not by bleach but by sacrificial blood—purity through atonement.

(3×) Multilingual glosses uniformly indicate washing: English 'they-washed/washing/were-washing', Spanish 'lavaban/lavando/lavaron', French 'laver', German 'waschen/ἔπλυνον'. The lexicon defines it as 'wash, clean, properly of linen, clothes, etc.' (opposed to λούομαι 'bathe' or νίζω 'wash hands'). Luke 5:2 describes fishermen washing nets. Rev 7:14 and 22:14 speak of washing robes in the Lamb's blood. The verb specifically denotes washing fabric/garments, making the metaphor in Revelation particularly vivid: laundering robes in sacrificial blood. WASHING AND BATHING

en: they-washed, washing, were-washing | es: lavaban, lavando, lavaron | fr: laver | de: waschen, ἔπλυνον Luke 5:2; Rev 7:14; Rev 22:14

πνεῦμα G4151 N-VNS (383×)

Spirit, spirit; the Holy Spirit or Spirit of God; also a spirit being, the human spirit, wind, or life-breath.

Pneuma is one of the most theologically consequential words in the New Testament, and its semantic range — from physical wind to the Third Person of the Trinity — recapitulates the entire Old Testament arc of Hebrew ruach. Of its 383 occurrences, the overwhelming majority (370) refer to the Holy Spirit or Spirit of God, reflecting how thoroughly pneumatology pervades the New Testament witness. Yet the word never fully sheds its earthy origins: in John 3:8 Jesus exploits the double meaning of pneuma as both 'wind' and 'Spirit' in a single sentence, and in 2 Thess 2:8 the 'breath' of the Lord's mouth destroys the lawless one. The multilingual evidence is revealing — most languages use a single word for all senses (Spanish espiritu, French esprit, German Geist), forcing context alone to disambiguate, while a few like English distinguish 'Spirit' from 'wind' and 'breath.'

1. Holy Spirit (divine person) (255×) Split from sense 75107. Criteria: The Holy Spirit as distinct divine person and agent: empowerment at Pentecost, indwelling presence, agent of revelation and sanctification. Includes formulaic 'pneuma hagion' and contextually identified divine Spirit references.

en: Spirit, of-Spirit | es: Espíritu, de-Espíritu | fr: esprit | de: Geist Matt 1:18; Matt 1:20; Matt 3:11; Matt 3:16; Matt 4:1

2. human spirit (anthropological) (66×) Split from sense 75107. Criteria: The human spirit as immaterial aspect of personhood, distinct from body and soul. Includes references to one's own spirit, spirit that needs to be humble or willing.

en: pneuma, spirit | es: -espíritu, de-espíritu, espíritu | fr: esprit | de: Geist Matt 5:3; Matt 26:41; Matt 27:50; Mark 2:8; Mark 8:12

3. spirit being (angelic/demonic) (49×) Split from sense 75107. Criteria: Non-corporeal beings: angels, demons, unclean spirits. Distinct from both divine Spirit and human spirit.

en: a-spirit, spirit | es: espíritu | fr: esprit | de: Geist Matt 8:16; Matt 10:1; Matt 12:43; Matt 12:45; Mark 1:23

4. spirit being / supernatural entity (6×) A spirit being or supernatural entity — angel, demon, or unclean spirit appearing as an incorporeal agent. Six occurrences cluster in Paul's discussion of spiritual gifts (1 Cor 12:10, 'distinguishing of spirits'; 14:12, 'spirits' as spiritual manifestations) and Revelation's symbolic visions (Rev 1:4; 3:1; 4:5, 'the seven spirits before his throne'; 5:6). Korean 영들 (plural spirits) and Swahili roho (with plural context markers) both distinguish these from the singular Holy Spirit. The interpretive question of whether Revelation's 'seven spirits' denote angelic beings or a sevenfold fullness of the one Spirit shows this sense boundary at its most contested. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Spirits, of-spirits | es: Espíritus, de-espíritus | fr: esprit | de: Geist 1Cor 12:10; 1Cor 14:12; Rev 1:4; Rev 3:1; Rev 4:5

5. human spirit / inner disposition (5×) The human spirit, the immaterial inner life, disposition, or seat of volition and moral consciousness. Five occurrences where pneuma refers to what is distinctly human rather than divine — Luke 1:80 ('the child grew strong in spirit'), Rom 8:13 (putting to death deeds of the body 'by the Spirit/spirit'), 1 Cor 14:2 ('in his spirit'), and the notoriously ambiguous 1 Pet 3:18; 4:6. Arabic ruh and Hindi atma can serve for both human and divine spirit, but Korean distinguishes 영 (human spirit) from 성령 (Holy Spirit), confirming a real lexical boundary. The difficulty of deciding whether Paul means the Holy Spirit or the human spirit in several passages (e.g., Rom 8:13) illustrates why the cluster is small — most ambiguous cases default to sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-Spirit, in-spirit | es: en-espíritu, por-espíritu | fr: esprit | de: Geist Luke 1:80; Rom 8:13; 1Cor 14:2; 1Pet 3:18; 1Pet 4:6

6. wind (1×) Physical wind or moving air — a single clear occurrence at John 3:8, where Jesus says 'the wind (to pneuma) blows where it wishes.' The Greek deliberately exploits the double meaning: the same word denotes both the natural phenomenon and the divine Spirit in the same verse. Spanish viento, English 'wind,' and Korean 바람 all shift to meteorological vocabulary here, while French esprit and German Geist (or Wind) split in different directions. This lone occurrence preserves the ancient connection to the word's etymological root in pneo ('to blow'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wind | es: viento | fr: esprit | de: Geist John 3:8

7. breath / life-breath (1×) Breath or life-breath — a single occurrence at 2 Thess 2:8, where the Lord Jesus will destroy the lawless one 'with the breath (pneumati) of his mouth.' This evokes Isaiah 11:4 (Hebrew ruach) and foregrounds the physical, bodily metaphor of exhaled breath as an instrument of divine power. English 'breath,' Spanish soplo/aliento, and Korean 입김 ('mouth-breath') all select respiratory vocabulary distinct from 'Spirit' or 'wind,' though several translations (French esprit, German Geist) use their all-purpose spirit-word even here, collapsing the distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: breath | es: espíritu | fr: esprit | de: Geist 2Thess 2:8

9. wind, breath (physical) Split from sense 75107. Criteria: Literal physical wind or breath, the pneumatic/physical phenomenon. Rare but distinct from spiritual senses.

πνευμᾰτ-ικός G4152 Adj-NMS (26×)

Spiritual; pertaining to the Holy Spirit, the unseen divine realm, or Spirit-given endowments.

Derived from pneuma (spirit/wind), this adjective in the New Testament has moved far from its classical sense of 'airy' or 'wind-driven.' Paul is its primary user, deploying it to describe realities shaped by God's Spirit as opposed to merely natural or fleshly existence. In Romans 7:14 the law itself is 'spiritual,' while in 1 Corinthians 2:13-15 the 'spiritual person' discerns what the natural person cannot. When used substantively (1 Cor 12:1; 14:1), it denotes Spirit-given gifts or matters. Every major translation language renders this identically – 'espiritual,' 'spirituel,' 'geistlich' – reflecting its stable theological meaning across Christian tradition.

1. spiritual (21×) Pertaining to or characterized by the divine Spirit; spiritual in nature, origin, or quality. Used adjectivally to describe persons, realities, or qualities shaped by God's pneuma rather than by the flesh. Paul calls the law 'spiritual' (Rom 7:14), contrasts the spiritual person with the natural (1 Cor 2:15; 3:1), and speaks of spiritual blessings (Eph 1:3). The uniform rendering across languages ('espiritual/spirituel/geistlich') confirms a stable, well-understood theological concept. SPIRITUAL THINGS

en: a-spiritual, spiritual, to-spiritual | es: a-espirituales, espiritual, espirituales | fr: spirituel | de: geistlich Rom 1:11; Rom 7:14; 1Cor 2:13; 1Cor 2:15; 1Cor 3:1

2. spiritual things (5×) Spiritual things, gifts, or matters – the adjective used substantively (ta pneumatika). Paul uses this especially when discussing charismatic endowments: 'concerning spiritual gifts' (1 Cor 12:1; 14:1). In Rom 15:27 and 1 Cor 9:11 he contrasts 'spiritual things' sown with 'material things' reaped, establishing an economy between the two. Spanish 'espirituales-cosas' makes the substantive use explicit. SPIRITUAL THINGS

en: spiritual-gifts, spiritual-things | es: espirituales, espirituales-cosas | fr: spirituel | de: geistlich Rom 15:27; 1Cor 2:13; 1Cor 9:11; 1Cor 12:1; 1Cor 14:1

πνευμᾰτ-ικός G4153 Adv (2×)

spiritually, in a spiritual manner or sense; according to the Spirit

The adverb form of 'spiritual,' meaning 'in a spiritual way' or 'from a spiritual perspective.' Paul contrasts spiritual and natural understanding: the natural person does not accept spiritual things, for they are 'spiritually discerned' (1 Cor 2:14)—requiring the Spirit's illumination. Revelation 11:8 uses it for allegorical interpretation: the great city 'which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt'—not literally those places, but bearing their spiritual character. The word marks interpretation or discernment that operates on the pneumatic rather than merely physical level.

(2×) In a spiritual manner or according to spiritual understanding. In 1 Corinthians, Paul explains that spiritual realities require spiritual discernment—the natural mind cannot comprehend things of the Spirit; they must be 'spiritually' evaluated, with the Spirit's help. In Revelation, 'spiritually called' indicates allegorical or symbolic naming—the city is Sodom and Egypt in spiritual character, not geography. The French 'spirituellement' and Spanish 'espiritualmente' preserve the sense: operating in the realm of Spirit, not merely flesh or literal meaning. SPIRITUAL THINGS en: spiritually | es: espiritualmente | fr: spirituel, spirituellement | de: geistlich 1Cor 2:14; Rev 11:8

πνέω G4154 V-PIA-3S (7×)

To blow (of wind); describes the movement of air or wind, sometimes with symbolic overtones.

The basic Greek verb for the blowing of wind, used throughout the NT of natural atmospheric phenomena with occasional theological depth. In the parable of the two builders, it is the wind that 'blew' against each house (Matt 7:25, 27). Most memorably, Jesus tells Nicodemus that the wind 'blows where it wishes' (John 3:8), using the physical reality of wind as an analogy for the Spirit's sovereign movement — a wordplay made possible by the double meaning of pneuma. Spanish 'sopla,' French 'souffler,' and German 'wehen' all denote wind-blowing, confirming a single concrete sense.

blow (of wind) (7×) To blow, of wind or air in motion — describes the natural phenomenon of wind blowing, applied both to storm narratives and to theological metaphor. In Matt 7:25 and 7:27, destructive winds 'blow' against houses in Jesus' parable. In John 3:8, the verb carries rich double meaning: the wind 'blows where it wishes,' paralleling the Spirit's unseen sovereign movement (exploiting the pneuma/pneo cognate relationship). In John 6:18 and Acts 27:40 it describes dangerous nautical winds. The cross-linguistic uniformity — Spanish 'sopla,' French 'souffler,' German 'wehen' — confirms a single meteorological sense. BLOWING AND BREATHING en: blew, blowing, blows | es: que-soplaba, sopla, soplando | fr: souffler | de: wehen, πνέοντα, πνεούσῃ Matt 7:25; Matt 7:27; Luke 12:55; John 3:8; John 6:18

πνίγ-ω G4155 V-IIM/P-3P (3×)

to choke, to strangle, to suffocate; to deprive of breath or life by constriction

This verb means to choke, throttle, or strangle—to cut off breath. In Jesus' parable, thorns grew up and 'choked' the seed (Matt 13:7). In Matthew's parable of the unforgiving servant, the man grabs his fellow servant and begins to 'choke' him, demanding repayment (Matt 18:28). When demons drove the swine into the sea, they 'were drowned' (Mark 5:13). The word vividly depicts suffocation, whether by throttling, drowning, or being crowded out by thorns—physical or spiritual asphyxiation.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes suffocation: English 'choked/was-choking/were-drowned', Spanish 'las-ahogaron/le-ahogaba/se-ahogaban', French 'étouffer', German preserves Greek forms ἐπνίγοντο/ἔπνιγεν/ἔπνιξαν. The lexicon defines it as 'choke, throttle, strangle' with passive meaning 'to be choked, stifled'. Matt 13:7 describes thorns choking plants. Matt 18:28 depicts a man throttling his debtor. Mark 5:13 describes demon-possessed swine drowning. All three involve cutting off life by constriction, whether botanical crowding, manual strangling, or drowning. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15120 WITH 3 SENSES en: choked, was-choking, were-drowned | es: las-ahogaron, le-ahogaba, se-ahogaban | fr: étouffer | de: ἐπνίγοντο, ἔπνιγεν, ἔπνιξαν Matt 13:7; Matt 18:28; Mark 5:13

πνικ-τός G4156 Adj-GNS (3×)

strangled, choked to death; meat from animals killed by strangulation without draining the blood

This adjective describes something strangled or killed by choking, particularly referring to meat from animals not properly slaughtered (i.e., with blood undrained). The Jerusalem council's decree to Gentile believers includes abstaining from food offered to idols, from blood, and from 'what is strangled' (Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25). Jewish law required blood to be drained in slaughter; eating 'strangled' meat violated this principle. The prohibition respects Jewish conscience and maintains unity in the early mixed church.

(3×) Multilingual glosses consistently indicate strangled meat: English 'strangled/strangled-things', Spanish 'ahogado/de-estrangulados/estrangulado', French 'asphyxié', German preserves Greek forms πνικτοῦ/πνικτὸν/πνικτῶν. The lexicon defines it as 'strangled' (from πνίγω 'choke') with reference to meat, and notes a secondary meaning of 'air-tight' or 'baked/stewed'. All three NT uses (Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25) are in the Jerusalem council's decree forbidding Gentiles from eating strangled meat (animals not properly slaughtered with blood drained). KILLING AND REMOVING en: strangled, strangled-things | es: ahogado, de-estrangulados, estrangulado | fr: asphyxié | de: πνικτοῦ, πνικτὸν, πνικτῶν Acts 15:20; Acts 15:29; Acts 21:25

πνοή G4157 N-AFS (2×)

breath, wind, or breathing; the movement of air or life-breath

A noun describing breath, blowing, or wind—the movement of air, whether gentle breeze or violent blast. In Acts 2:2, the sound of Pentecost is 'like a rushing mighty wind'—the Spirit's arrival accompanied by audible, wind-like force filling the house. In Acts 17:25, Paul declares that God 'gives to all life and breath and everything'—He is the source of the very air we breathe, the breath that sustains existence. Classical usage ranged from gentle breezes to swift blasts; Homer spoke of speeds 'along with blasts of wind.' The term connects physical breathing with life itself.

(2×) Breath or wind, marking both divine gift (life-breath from God) and divine presence (Pentecost's rushing wind). In Acts 17, Paul's Areopagus sermon declares God gives all people 'breath'—the fundamental gift of life, the air in our lungs. In Acts 2, supernatural 'breath' or 'wind' announces the Spirit's descent. The Spanish split ('aliento/soplo') and French 'souffle' capture both: breath as life-sustaining air and wind as powerful movement, both ultimately from God who breathes out life and Spirit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: breath | es: aliento, soplo | fr: souffle | de: πνοὴν, πνοῆς Acts 2:2; Acts 17:25

ποδ-ήρης G4158 Adj-AMS (1×)

a robe reaching to the feet; a full-length garment

This adjective describes a garment that reaches all the way to the feet, typically a long robe denoting dignity, office, or ceremonial function. In Revelation 1:13, the risen Christ wears such a robe, evoking the high priestly garments and signaling His royal-priestly status. In ancient Mediterranean culture, full-length robes distinguished priests, kings, and persons of high status from common laborers who wore shorter, more practical tunics.

(1×) The foot-length robe worn by the glorified Christ in Revelation 1:13, marking His priestly and royal dignity. The Old Testament high priest wore such a garment (Exodus 28:4), making this detail highly significant. Multilingual evidence shows recognition of the garment's length ('foot-length-robe', 'con-túnica-hasta-los-pies'), visually communicating Christ's exalted, priestly role as mediator and judge. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: foot-length-robe | es: con-túnica-hasta-los-pies | fr: lang-wallend | de: lang-wallend Rev 1:13

πόθεν G4159 Adv (29×)

Whence, from where—interrogative adverb of place, origin, or cause, often expressing astonishment

The interrogative adverb πόθεν ('from where?') probes origin, source, and cause. In the NT it frequently carries a deeper theological register than mere geography: 'Where then does this man get all these things?' (Matt 13:54-56) questions the origin of Jesus' wisdom and power. Nicodemus asks 'How can these things be?' with the same existential puzzlement (John 3:9, using πῶς but in a πόθεν-like register). The multilingual glosses—French 'd'où,' Spanish 'de dónde,' German 'woher'—all preserve the directional interrogative force, consistently pointing back toward a source that demands explanation.

(29×) An interrogative adverb asking 'from where?' in terms of place, origin, or cause, frequently carrying overtones of astonishment or theological mystery. In Nazareth, it voices the crowd's incredulity at Jesus' authority (Matt 13:27, 54, 56). At Cana, the headwaiter does not know 'whence' the wine came (John 2:9). Pilate asks Jesus 'Where are you from?' (John 19:9), elevating a spatial question to a christological one. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: From-where, from-where | es: De-dónde, de-dónde, ¿De-dónde | fr: d'où | de: woher Matt 13:27; Matt 13:54; Matt 13:56; Matt 15:33; Matt 21:25

ποιέω G4160 V-PIA-1P (573×)

do, make, perform, act; produce, create; cause; spend time; keep; commit

The most versatile action verb in the New Testament, covering the full spectrum of human activity—from simple doing to creative making. It appears 573 times expressing everything from performing miracles (what Jesus continually 'did') to committing crimes, from producing fruit to spending time in a place. The semantic range extends from physical construction (making straight paths) to abstract causation (making disciples) to temporal duration (spending three months). Like English 'do' or 'make,' its meaning crystallizes only in context, yet this very flexibility makes it the workhorse verb for describing how Jesus and his followers act in the world.

1. do, act, perform (473×) The foundational sense of performing any action or deed—the general 'do' that appears 473 times. Arabic ʿ and Korean 하다/행하다 capture this universal activity sense. When Jesus asks 'What do you want me to do for you?' (Matt 9:28) or the Pharisees challenge 'Why are you doing what is not lawful?' (Matt 12:2), this basic sense dominates. It's the default for unspecified action—whatever deed is contextually relevant, whether righteous or wicked, miraculous or mundane. DOING AND MAKING

en: to-do | es: de-hacer, hacer | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Matt 6:1; Matt 9:28; Matt 12:2; Matt 12:12; Matt 20:15

2. make, construct, create (62×) To fashion, construct, or bring something into material existence—the concrete 'make' appearing 62 times. Arabic ʿ and Korean 만들다 specify this creative/constructive sense. John the Baptist quotes Isaiah: 'Make his paths straight' (Matt 3:3). Jesus teaches we cannot 'make one hair white or black' (Matt 5:36). The sense covers both physical fabrication (making a whip, building a tabernacle) and social construction (making disciples, making arrangements). The object clause defines what comes into being through the subject's agency. DOING AND MAKING

en: doing, having-made, holding | es: a-hacer, habiendo-hecho, haced | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Matt 3:3; Matt 5:36; Matt 12:16; Matt 12:33

3. produce, bear fruit (15×) Agricultural and metaphorical production of fruit or results—yielding what naturally follows from one's nature. Appearing 15 times, this sense aligns with Arabic ʿ and Korean 맺다, Swahili kuzaa. John warns 'every tree that does not produce good fruit is cut down' (Matt 3:10), and Jesus teaches that good trees 'produce good fruit' while bad ones 'produce evil fruit' (Matt 7:17-19). The sense extends from literal agriculture (trees, vines) to metaphorical spiritual productivity. DOING AND MAKING

en: Produce, it-produces, produce | es: haced, haciendo, hiciere | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Matt 3:8; Matt 3:10; Matt 7:17; Matt 7:19

4. cause, render, make into (8×) The causative sense of making someone or something become a certain state—causing an effect. Eight occurrences match Arabic ʿ and Korean 하게 하다. Jesus 'made twelve' apostles (Mark 3:14-16), appointing them to a new status. He tells a parable where a man 'gives a dinner' (Luke 14:12)—causes a feast to exist. The sense involves transformation or conferral of new status, whether social (making someone an apostle) or circumstantial (making a situation occur). DOING AND MAKING

en: Make, he-made, produces | es: Haced, causaban, hace | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Mark 3:14; Mark 3:16; Mark 4:32; Luke 14:12; Luke 14:13

5. spend time (4×) To spend or pass a period of time in a place or activity—temporal duration rather than action. Four attestations correspond to Arabic ʿ and Korean 보내다. Paul writes 'I have spent three months' in Greece (Acts 20:3) and 'a night and day I have spent in the deep' (2 Cor 11:25). The sense focuses on the passage of time rather than what activities filled it, though context usually indicates the location or general activity during that period. DOING AND MAKING

en: I-have-spent, having-spent | es: Pasando, he-pasado, pasando | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Acts 15:33; Acts 18:23; Acts 20:3; 2Cor 11:25

6. keep, observe, celebrate (3×) To observe, celebrate, or keep a religious feast or practice—ritual observance. Three occurrences match Korean 지키다 and Swahili kusherehekea. Jesus tells disciples

'I will keep the Passover at your house' (Matt 26:18), and Paul mentions 'if I keep the Passover' (Acts 18:21, textual variant). Hebrews notes Moses 'kept the Passover' (Heb 11:28). The sense specifically applies to festival observance and religious duty, not general law-keeping. DOING AND MAKING en: I-keep, he-made, to-keep | es: celebrar, celebro, ha-celebrado | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Matt 26:18; Acts 18:21; Heb 11:28

7. commit, perpetrate (2×) To commit or perpetrate a wrongdoing—performing a negative deed. Two passages use this sense, corresponding to Arabic ʿ (negative) and Korean 저지르다. Mark describes the insurrectionists who 'had committed murder' (Mark 15:7), and Paul asks rhetorically 'did I commit sin?' (2 Cor 11:7). The verb itself is neutral, but context specifies the action as transgressive—the object is always something morally negative (murder, sin, crime). DOING AND MAKING en: I-committed, had-committed | es: cometí, habían-cometido | fr: faire | de: tun Mark 15:7; 2Cor 11:7

8. consider, reckon (2×) To consider, count, or reckon something in a certain way—cognitive evaluation rather than physical action. Two occurrences match Arabic ʿ (evaluative) and Korean 여기다. Paul writes 'I do not make account of my life' (Acts 20:24, i.e., I don't consider it precious) and 'God is my witness...how I make mention of you' (Rom 1:9, though translation traditions vary). The mental rather than physical action distinguishes this from other senses. DOING AND MAKING en: I-make | es: hago | fr: faire | de: tun, tut Acts 20:24; Rom 1:9

9. work, labor (2×) To work or labor at a task—occupational effort. Two attestations correspond to Arabic ʿ and Korean 일하다. In the vineyard parable, workers complain 'these last worked one hour' (Matt 20:12), and opponents 'were preparing an ambush' against Paul (Acts 25:3). The sense emphasizes sustained labor or effort toward a goal, overlapping with general 'do' but with stronger connotations of toil or deliberate preparation. DOING AND MAKING en: preparing, worked | es: haciendo, trabajaron | fr: faire | de: tut Matt 20:12; Acts 25:3

10. (1×) Uncertain sense with single attestation in Acts 1:1 where Luke refers to his former book about 'all that Jesus began to do and teach.' Translation traditions vary on whether this is simple narration ('made' = 'composed' the narrative) or refers to Jesus' deeds. The hapax context and metaliterary reference make classification difficult—it may simply be the general 'do' sense applied to Jesus' earthly ministry. DOING AND MAKING en: I-made | es: hice | fr: faire | de: tut Acts 1:1

11. (1×) Another single attestation describing Moses as one 'having been appointed' or 'made faithful' (Heb 3:2). The passive or middle voice and unique context (God appointing Moses to his office) may warrant a distinct sense of divine appointment, though it could be subsumed under the causative sense (God made Moses into a faithful servant). Insufficient attestation makes a firm boundary difficult to draw. DOING AND MAKING en: having-appointed | es: que-hizo | fr: faire | de: tun Heb 3:2

ποί-ημα G4161 N-NNS (2×)

something made or created; a work, product, or poem

A noun meaning anything made or done—a work, creation, product, or composition. Classical Greek used it for artistic works (including poems—our word 'poem' derives from this root) and crafted objects. Paul employs it theologically for God's creative work. In Romans 1:20, God's 'eternal power and divine nature have been clearly perceived in the things that have been made'—creation testifies to the Creator. In Ephesians 2:10, believers are 'His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works'—we are God's crafted masterpiece, His new creation, made for purpose.

(2×) That which has been made or created, whether the original creation or new creation in Christ. In Romans, 'the things made' (creation itself) reveal God's invisible attributes to all humanity—nature testifies to the divine craftsman. In Ephesians, 'His workmanship' describes redeemed believers—we are God's artistic product, His crafted work in Christ, fashioned for the good works He prepared. The German 'Werke' and French 'chose faite' emphasize the madeness: these are products of creative action, evidence of the Maker's hand. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: things-made, workmanship | es: cosas-hechas, hechura | fr: Werke, chose-faite | de: Werke Rom 1:20; Eph 2:10

ποί-ησις G4162 N-DFS (1×)

doing, action, practice; the performance or execution of something

This term denotes the act of doing or making something, emphasizing action and execution rather than mere intention. In James 1:25, it contrasts with merely hearing—the blessing comes to the one who perseveres in doing, not just listening. Ancient Greek distinguished between poiesis (making/doing) and praxis (action), but in New Testament usage the focus is on actual performance. True faith expresses itself in concrete deeds, not empty profession.

(1×) The actual doing or practice that James 1:25 celebrates—blessed is the doer of the word, not just the hearer. The term emphasizes execution and performance. Multilingual renderings ('doing', 'hacer', 'Tun') capture this active dimension. James contrasts the futility of hearing without doing with the blessing that comes to those who look into God's perfect law and actually practice what they see there. DOING AND MAKING en: doing | es: hacer | fr: ποιήσει | de: Tun Jas 1:25

ποι-ητής G4163 N-NMP (6×)

A doer or performer of actions, especially of God's law or word; also a poet or literary composer in classical usage.

Poiētēs literally means 'one who makes,' and its two NT senses reflect the word's journey from the Greek literary world into Jewish-Christian moral discourse. James seizes on it to challenge his readers: 'Be doers of the word, not hearers only' (Jas 1:22), and Paul contrasts mere hearers of the law with its doers (Rom 2:13). Yet in Acts 17:28, when Paul addresses the Athenian philosophers, he reaches back to the classical meaning and quotes 'some of your own poets' (poiētai) – a deft rhetorical move that bridges Greek literary culture and the gospel message.

1. doer, one who does/performs (5×) A doer, one who acts on or carries out something – particularly God's law or word. James uses this term emphatically: believers must become poiētai logou, doers of the word (Jas 1:22-25), not merely listeners. Paul argues similarly in Rom 2:13 that 'doers of the law' will be justified. Spanish 'hacedor/hacedores,' French 'celui qui fait,' and German 'Tater' all convey active, practical obedience rather than passive hearing. DOING AND MAKING

en: a-doer, doers | es: hacedor, hacedores | fr: auteur, celui-qui-fait | de: Taeter Rom 2:13; Jas 1:22; Jas 1:23; Jas 1:25; Jas 4:11

2. poet, literary composer (1×) A poet or literary composer, one who creates verse. In Acts 17:28, Paul quotes pagan Greek poets on the Areopagus: 'as some of your own poiētai have said, for we are also his offspring.' This is the original classical Greek meaning of the word – the 'maker' par excellence was the poet who shaped language into art. Spanish 'poetas' and English 'poets' preserve this literary sense, which Paul deploys as common ground with his Athenian audience. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: poets | es: poetas | fr: auteur | de: ποιητῶν Acts 17:28

ποικίλος G4164 Adj-DMP (10×)

Various, diverse, manifold — describing a rich multiplicity of kinds or forms

An adjective meaning 'of many kinds' or 'diversified,' applied to both afflictions and divine blessings. In the healing narratives, Jesus cures those afflicted with various diseases (Matt 4:24; Mark 1:34; Luke 4:40), where the word emphasizes the sheer diversity of ailments. But the same term describes God's manifold grace (1 Pet 4:10) and the varied trials that test faith (Jas 1:2). Hebrews 2:4 speaks of God's diverse miracles confirming the gospel. The semantic range thus spans both suffering and splendor — whatever is many-formed. Spanish 'diversas/varias' and German 'mancherlei' reflect this same breadth.

various (10×) Of many kinds, varied in form or character — applied to both negative realities (various diseases, Matt 4:24; Mark 1:34; diverse temptations, Jas 1:2; 2 Tim 3:6) and positive divine action (manifold grace, 1 Pet 4:10; various miracles, Heb 2:4). The word does not specify what the variety consists of; it simply marks rich multiplicity. Spanish 'diversas/varias,' French 'diverses,' and German 'mancherlei' all capture the sense of qualitative variety across a range of instances. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: of-various, various, with-various | es: con-diversas, de-diversas, de-multi-forme | fr: diverses | de: mannigfaltig, ποικίλαις Matt 4:24; Mark 1:34; Luke 4:40; 2Tim 3:6; Titus 3:3

ποιμαίνω G4165 V-PNA (11×)

To shepherd, tend a flock; figuratively, to guide, rule, or pastorally care for people

Drawn from the everyday world of Palestinian shepherding, this verb carries a rich double life in the New Testament. In its literal sense it describes the work of tending and pasturing sheep (Luke 17:7; 1 Cor 9:7). Far more often, however, it is pressed into service as a metaphor for spiritual leadership and messianic rule. Jesus commissions Peter to 'shepherd my sheep' (John 21:16), and Revelation portrays the risen Christ shepherding the nations with an iron rod (Rev 2:27; 19:15). Multilingual renderings consistently mirror this duality: Spanish 'pastorear,' French 'paitre,' and German 'weiden' all carry both the agricultural and the governmental overtone.

1. shepherd/rule (spiritual/messianic) (8×) Spiritual or messianic shepherding: guiding, governing, or pastorally caring for people under divine authority. Christ is prophesied as the one who will 'shepherd my people Israel' (Matt 2:6), and he commissions Peter likewise (John 21:16). In Revelation, this sense intensifies into sovereign rule—shepherding the nations with a rod of iron (Rev 2:27; 12:5; 19:15). Paul urges Ephesian elders to 'shepherd the church of God' (Acts 20:28), and Peter echoes the charge (1 Pet 5:2). Spanish 'pastorear' and German 'weiden' capture the same pastoral-governance range. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: he-will-shepherd, shepherd, to-shepherd | es: Pastorea, para-pastorear, pastoread | fr: paître | de: weiden, weidet Matt 2:6; John 21:16; Acts 20:28; 1Pet 5:2; Rev 2:27

2. shepherd/tend (literal) (3×) Literal animal husbandry: herding, tending, or pasturing sheep and livestock. In Luke 17:7 a servant returns from 'shepherding' in the field, and Paul's rhetorical question in 1 Corinthians 9:7 appeals to the common right of a shepherd to drink the flock's milk. Jude 1:12 uses the participle of those who 'shepherd only themselves,' twisting the literal image into rebuke. French 'paissant' and Spanish 'apacentando' preserve the concrete agricultural sense. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: shepherding, shepherds | es: apacentando, pastorea | fr: paissant;, paître | de: weiden, weidend, weidet Luke 17:7; 1Cor 9:7; Jude 1:12

ποιμήν G4166 N-AMS (18×)

shepherd, pastor — one who tends a flock, used literally for keepers of sheep and figuratively for spiritual leaders

Poimen means shepherd, the one who leads, feeds, and protects a flock of sheep. Its 18 New Testament occurrences divide into a literal cluster in the nativity accounts and a figurative cluster in Jesus' teaching and the epistles, with the two registers deliberately informing each other. The Bethlehem shepherds 'keeping watch over their flock by night' (Luke 2:8, 15, 18, 20) are the first to receive the angelic announcement of the Messiah's birth — a social reversal, since shepherds were considered low-status and ritually marginal. Jesus identifies himself as 'the good shepherd' who lays down his life for the sheep (John 10:2, 11-12, 14, 16), transforming the pastoral image into a christological title of self-sacrifice. He looks at the crowds and has compassion because they are 'like sheep without a shepherd' (Matt 9:36; Mark 6:34), echoing the Old Testament indictment of Israel's failed leaders. Zechariah's prophecy 'strike the shepherd and the sheep will be scattered' is applied to Jesus' arrest (Matt 26:31; Mark 14:27). Ephesians 4:11 lists 'pastors and teachers' as Christ's gifts to the church, and Hebrews 13:20 calls the risen Jesus 'the great shepherd of the sheep.' Spanish 'pastor,' French 'berger/pasteur,' and German 'Hirte' all reflect the original pastoral context.

shepherd, pastor (18×) One who tends, leads, feeds, and protects a flock — used both literally for those who keep sheep and figuratively for leaders who care for God's people. The Bethlehem shepherds of Luke 2:8-20 are the first witnesses of the incarnation, their lowly status highlighting God's favor toward the humble. Jesus calls himself 'the good shepherd' who lays down his life for his sheep (John 10:2, 11-12, 14, 16), making poimen a christological title. The phrase 'sheep without a shepherd' (Matt 9:36; Mark 6:34) echoes Num 27:17 and Ezek 34 to indict failed leadership. Zechariah 13:7's 'strike the shepherd' is applied to Jesus' passion (Matt 26:31; Mark 14:27). Ephesians 4:11 extends the title to church leaders ('pastors and teachers'), and Hebrews 13:20 crowns the risen Christ as 'the great shepherd.' French 'berger' and German 'Hirte' preserve the pastoral imagery. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: Shepherd, a-shepherd, shepherd | es: Pastor, pastor, pastores | fr: berger | de: Hirte Matt 9:36; Matt 25:32; Matt 26:31; Mark 6:34; Mark 14:27

ποίμν-η G4167 N-GFS (5×)

Flock; a group of sheep or goats, used metaphorically for God's people under a shepherd's care.

A noun meaning flock, properly of sheep, extending metaphorically to the community of believers under pastoral care. In Matt 26:31, Jesus quotes Zech 13:7: 'I will strike the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered' — applying the prophecy to his own arrest and the disciples' flight. Luke 2:8 places it in the nativity: shepherds keeping watch over their flock by night. John 10:16 contains Jesus' vision of unity: 'there will be one flock and one shepherd.' Paul uses it in 1 Cor 9:7 to argue for apostolic support: 'Who tends a flock and does not drink its milk?' The German 'Herde' and French 'troupeau' both carry the same pastoral warmth.

(5×) A flock of sheep (or goats), used both literally of animals and metaphorically of God's people under a shepherd's care. The literal sense appears in Luke 2:8, where shepherds guard their flock on the night of Jesus' birth — a scene rich with symbolic resonance given the 'Lamb of God' theology. Matt 26:31 quotes Zechariah 13:7, applying the scattering of the flock to the disciples' abandonment of Jesus. John 10:16 extends the metaphor to its fullest: Jesus envisions 'other sheep not of this fold' being gathered into 'one flock, one shepherd' — a vision of universal community. Paul's use in 1 Cor 9:7 (twice) is pragmatic, arguing from pastoral common sense. The German 'Herde,' French 'troupeau,' and Spanish 'rebaño' all preserve the warm, communal resonance of a gathered flock. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: a-flock, flock | es: rebaño | fr: troupeau | de: Herde, ποίμνην, ποίμνης Matt 26:31; Luke 2:8; John 10:16; 1Cor 9:7

ποίμν-ιον G4168 N-DNS (5×)

Flock, little flock; a small group of sheep or goats, used metaphorically of Christ's community of disciples.

A diminutive of ποίμνη (flock), conveying tenderness and smallness — a 'little flock.' In Luke 12:32, Jesus reassures his disciples with the memorable words 'Fear not, little flock (ποίμνιον), for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.' The remaining uses in Acts 20:28–29 and 1 Peter 5:2–3 address church leaders as shepherds tending God's flock. The Spanish 'rebaño,' French 'petit-troupeau,' and German 'Herde' all converge on the pastoral image, though only the French captures the diminutive nuance with 'petit.'

(5×) A flock or little flock — originally of sheep or goats, but in every NT occurrence used metaphorically for the community of believers under pastoral care. The diminutive form (from ποίμνη) adds warmth and intimacy: Jesus' 'little flock' in Luke 12:32 is deliberately small and vulnerable yet destined for the kingdom. In Acts 20:28–29, Paul warns the Ephesian elders to guard the ποίμνιον from savage wolves — false teachers threatening the community. First Peter 5:2–3 urges elders to shepherd God's flock willingly, not for gain. The French 'petit-troupeau' uniquely preserves the diminutive force, while the Spanish 'rebaño' and German 'Herde' default to the standard flock concept. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: flock | es: rebaño | fr: petit-troupeau, troupeau | de: Herde, ποίμνιον, ποιμνίου Luke 12:32; Acts 20:28; Acts 20:29; 1Pet 5:2; 1Pet 5:3

ποῖος G4169 IPro-AMS (33×)

Interrogative pronoun asking 'which?' or 'what kind of?', probing either identity or qualitative nature.

A questioning word that presses beyond simple 'what?' to ask 'which one?' or 'what sort of thing is this?' In the Gospels it frequently appears in tense exchanges where Jesus is challenged about the source of his authority (Matt 21:23-27) or asked to name the greatest commandment (Matt 22:36). The qualitative force emerges when the manner or character of something is in view, as when John notes 'what kind of death' Jesus would die (John 12:33; 18:32). Spanish and German translations consistently distinguish cuál/welcher for selection from de qué clase/welcher Art for quality.

1. which, what (interrogative selection) (26×) Interrogative selecting from a set: 'which?' or 'what?' when the speaker seeks to identify a specific item, person, or authority. The multilingual glosses converge on selection words – English 'which,' Spanish 'cuál,' German 'welcher,' French 'quel.' Prominent in the authority disputes of Matt 21:23-27 and the question about the great commandment (Matt 22:36). COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: what, what-kind-of, which | es: a-qué, cuál, en-cuál | fr: quel, qui | de: welch, welcher Matt 19:18; Matt 21:23; Matt 21:24; Matt 21:27; Matt 22:36

2. what kind of, what sort of (7×) Qualitative interrogative: 'what kind of?' or 'what sort of?' when the question concerns the nature or character of something rather than its identity. Spanish 'de qué clase' and French 'quel...quoi?' signal the shift toward quality. Used notably of the manner of Jesus' death (John 12:33; 18:32; 21:19) and James's philosophical question about the nature of human life (Jas 4:14). COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: by-what-kind-of, what, what-kind | es: con-qué, cuál, de-qué-clase | fr: quel, qui, quoi? | de: welch, welcher John 12:33; John 18:32; John 21:19; Acts 7:49; Jas 4:14

πολεμέω G4170 V-PIA-3S (7×)

To wage war, fight, do battle; used of both apocalyptic cosmic conflict and human strife.

A verb of armed conflict and warfare, used in the NT almost exclusively in Revelation's cosmic battle imagery and once in James's moral diagnosis. In Revelation, it describes the dragon warring against the woman's offspring (Rev 12:7), the beast's terrifying invincibility — 'who can make war with him?' (Rev 13:4) — and Christ's own sword-of-mouth warfare (Rev 2:16). James repurposes it sharply for interpersonal strife: 'you fight and war' (Jas 4:2). Spanish 'hace guerra' and German 'kampfen' both capture the martial intensity.

to wage war, fight (7×) To wage war, fight, do battle — denotes armed conflict or hostile engagement, ranging from apocalyptic cosmic warfare to interpersonal strife. In Revelation it describes heavenly battles: Michael and his angels 'warring' against the dragon (Rev 12:7), the beast's seemingly invincible war-making (Rev 13:4), and Christ threatening to 'war' against the unfaithful with the sword of his mouth (Rev 2:16). In James 4:2 it is redirected to diagnose the wars and conflicts among believers rooted in disordered desires. Spanish 'guerreais/hace guerra' and German 'kampfen' both preserve the martial force of the term. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: I-will-war, makes-war, to-war | es: de-pelear, guerreáis, hace-guerra. | fr: combattre | de: kaempfen Jas 4:2; Rev 2:16; Rev 12:7; Rev 13:4

πόλεμος G4171 N-AMP (18×)

war, battle, armed conflict — organized military hostility between opposing forces, literal or apocalyptic

Polemos is the Greek word for war or battle, the root from which English derives 'polemic.' All 18 New Testament occurrences refer to armed conflict, though the scale ranges from a king calculating whether he can meet an approaching army (Luke 14:31) to the apocalyptic wars of Revelation. Jesus' Olivet Discourse warns the disciples that they will 'hear of wars and rumors of wars' as harbingers of the end but not yet the end itself (Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7; Luke 21:9). James famously asks, 'What causes wars and conflicts among you?' and traces them to inner desires that wage war in the members (Jas 4:1). In Revelation, polemos becomes the language of cosmic combat: war in heaven as Michael fights the dragon (Rev 12:7, 17), the beast making war against the saints (Rev 13:7; 19:19), and the final gathering for the war of the great day of God Almighty (Rev 16:14; 20:8). The consistent rendering across translations — Spanish 'guerra,' French 'guerre,' German 'Krieg' — reflects the term's stable semantic core.

war, battle, conflict (18×) Armed conflict between opposing forces, encompassing literal military engagements, eschatological battles, and the metaphorical warfare of human passions. In the Synoptic apocalyptic discourse, Jesus predicts 'wars and rumors of wars' as signs preceding the end (Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7; Luke 21:9). Luke 14:31 uses it practically for a king assessing military odds. James 4:1 traces interpersonal conflicts to desires that wage polemos within people. Revelation deploys the term for cosmic warfare: Michael against the dragon (Rev 12:7), the beast against the saints (Rev 13:7; 19:19), and the final eschatological battle of Gog and Magog (Rev 16:14; 20:8). Spanish 'guerra,' French 'guerre,' and German 'Krieg' uniformly render the word. WAR AND BATTLE

en: of-wars, war, wars | es: de-guerras, guerra, guerra, | fr: guerre | de: Krieg Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7; Luke 14:31

πόλις G4172 N-NFP (165×)

City, town; an inhabited urban settlement, whether named or generic

Polis is the standard Greek word for a city or town, and in the New Testament it anchors the geographic framework of the gospel narrative. Jesus weeps over Jerusalem as a polis (Matt 23:37), is born in the polis of Bethlehem (Luke 2:4), and teaches through the cities of Galilee (Matt 9:35). The word also carries eschatological weight in Hebrews 11:10 and Revelation 21:2, where the heavenly city becomes God's ultimate dwelling with humanity. Translations uniformly use their basic city-word: 'ciudad,' 'ville,' 'Stadt,' 'kota.'

city, town (165×) An inhabited urban center or town, used 165 times for both named cities (Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth, Ephesus) and generic references to towns and population centers. Polis provides the geographic scaffolding for the Gospels and Acts, from the nativity in Bethlehem (Matt 2:23) to Paul's missionary journeys through the cities of Asia Minor. The term extends to the eschatological 'holy city' of Revelation 21:2, giving it theological as well as geographical resonance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-city, city | es: ciudad | fr: ville | de: Stadt Matt 2:23; Matt 4:5; Matt 5:14; Matt 5:35; Matt 8:33

πολῑτάρχ-ης G4173 N-AMP (2×)

a city ruler or magistrate; civic official in Thessalonica

A title for civic magistrates in certain Greek cities, notably Thessalonica. When Paul and Silas caused an uproar in Thessalonica, the mob dragged Jason and other believers before 'the city authorities' or 'politarchs' (Acts 17:6, 8). Archaeological evidence confirms this was the official title used in Thessalonian inscriptions for the board of magistrates governing the city. Typically five to six in number, these officials held executive and judicial authority. Luke's precise use of this local technical term demonstrates his historical accuracy and attention to administrative detail.

(2×) The city magistrates or civic rulers of Thessalonica, before whom Jason was dragged when Paul's preaching caused civic disturbance. This is not a generic term for 'rulers' but the specific official title used in Macedonian cities, especially Thessalonica, as inscriptional evidence confirms. The mob charges that Paul's gospel threatens Caesar, making it a political matter for the politarchs to adjudicate. Luke alone uses this term, his precision validated by archaeology—a detail that marks his careful historical reporting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: city-rulers | es: politarcas | fr: magistrat | de: πολιτάρχας Acts 17:6; Acts 17:8

πολῑ́τ-εία G4174 N-GFS (2×)

citizenship, the rights and privileges of a citizen; civic life or commonwealth

A noun encompassing citizenship, civic rights, the commonwealth, or the daily life of a citizen. In Acts 22:28, a Roman tribune notes he paid a large sum 'for this citizenship'—Roman civic status, with all its legal protections and privileges. In Ephesians 2:12, Paul reminds Gentile believers they were formerly 'alienated from the commonwealth of Israel'—excluded from the civic life, covenant privileges, and promises of God's people. The word can mean the abstract right of citizenship or the concrete community one belongs to.

(2×) Citizenship or commonwealth, marking legal status and community belonging. In Acts, it's Roman citizenship—expensive to purchase, valuable for legal protection (Paul had it by birth). In Ephesians, it's the 'citizenship of Israel,' the covenant commonwealth from which Gentiles were formerly excluded—strangers to the promises, outside the community of God's people. Now in Christ, the wall is broken; Gentiles share full citizenship. The French 'citoyenneté' and German 'Bürgerrecht' capture both: legal rights and community membership. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: citizenship | es: ciudadanía | fr: citoyenneté, πολιτείας | de: Buergerrecht, πολιτείαν Acts 22:28; Eph 2:12

πολῑ́τ-ευμα G4175 N-NNS (1×)

citizenship, commonwealth; a community of citizens or the rights/duties thereof

Originally denoting the concrete reality of a government or the collective body of citizens, this term came to mean citizenship itself or the commonwealth to which one belongs. In Philippians 3:20, Paul declares that believers' citizenship exists in heaven, not in earthly political structures. This was revolutionary in the Roman world where citizenship determined identity, rights, and loyalty. Paul reorients believers' primary allegiance to a heavenly polis.

(1×) The heavenly citizenship that believers possess according to Philippians 3:20. While living as residents on earth, Christians belong to a different commonwealth altogether. This would resonate powerfully with Roman citizens who valued their citizenship, and even more with non-citizens who lacked such status. Paul's point: our true citizenship, rights, and allegiance belong to heaven's realm. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: citizenship | es: ciudadanía | fr: πολίτευμα | de: Buergerrecht Phil 3:20

πολῑτεύω G4176 V-PMM/P-2P (2×)

to live as a citizen, to conduct oneself; to live one's civic or public life in a certain manner

A verb meaning to live as a citizen, conduct oneself, or live according to certain standards. It carries overtones of civic duty and public behavior. Paul uses it for his own conduct: 'I have lived before God in all good conscience' (Acts 23:1)—his entire civic and religious life has been lived faithfully. He exhorts the Philippians to 'live as citizens worthy of the gospel' (Phil 1:27)—their public conduct should match their heavenly citizenship. The verb connects daily behavior with community identity—how you live reflects whose citizen you are.

(2×) To conduct one's life as a citizen, to live according to certain standards within a community. Paul's two uses bookend his ministry—defending his lifelong faithful conduct before the Sanhedrin, and calling the Philippians to gospel-worthy living. In Acts, it's past tense: his entire life has been lived with good conscience. In Philippians, it's present imperative: conduct yourselves as citizens worthy of Christ's gospel. The civic language ('live as citizens,' 'citizenship,' French 'vivre en citoyen') frames Christian life as belonging to a new polis with new standards. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: conduct-yourselves, have-lived-as-a-citizen | es: he-vivido-como-ciudadano, vivid-como-ciudadanos | fr: vivre-en-citoyen, πολιτεύεσθε | de: wandeln, πεπολίτευμαι Acts 23:1; Phil 1:27

πολῑ́τ-ης G4177 N-NMS (4×)

Citizen; a member of a city or political community with recognized civic standing.

Denotes a person who belongs to a particular city (polis) and enjoys its rights and responsibilities. In Luke's parables, the word describes fellow-countrymen of a nobleman (Luke 19:14) and a local landowner (Luke 15:15). Paul claims citizenship of 'no insignificant city' – Tarsus (Acts 21:39). In Hebrews 8:11 it appears in the new-covenant promise where every citizen will know the Lord. The word always presupposes a communal, civic identity rather than mere residence.

(4×) A citizen or fellow-citizen of a city-state, someone who holds recognized membership in a political community. In Luke 15:15 a citizen of that country hires the prodigal son, and in Luke 19:14 the citizens hate the departing nobleman – both parabolic uses highlighting social belonging. Paul identifies himself as a citizen of Tarsus (Acts 21:39), while Hebrews 8:11 extends the concept into covenant community. Spanish 'ciudadano' and French 'citoyen' both derive from the same Latin civis root, reflecting the enduring political-communal core of the word. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: citizen, citizens | es: ciudadano, ciudadanos | fr: citoyen | de: Buerger, πολίτης, πολιτῶν Luke 15:15; Luke 19:14; Acts 21:39; Heb 8:11

πολλάκις G4178 Adv (18×)

often, many times, frequently — an adverb marking repeated or habitual action

Pollakis is a temporal adverb meaning 'many times' or 'often,' derived from polys ('many'). Its 18 New Testament occurrences consistently mark repeated action or habitual occurrence, without the degree-related extensions found in classical Greek. The Gospels use it to describe the recurring torment of a demon-possessed boy who is 'often' thrown into fire and water (Matt 17:15; Mark 9:22), and a demoniac who had 'often' been bound with chains (Mark 5:4). John 18:2 notes that Jesus 'often' gathered with his disciples in Gethsemane — a quiet detail that explains Judas's knowledge of the location. Paul employs it autobiographically to catalog his repeated sufferings: 'in journeyings often, in perils of waters often' (2 Cor 11:26-27), and mentions his 'often' frustrated plans to visit Rome (Rom 1:13). Hebrews 6:7 uses it of rain that 'often' comes upon the earth. The adverb's consistent temporal sense across Spanish 'muchas veces,' French 'souvent,' and German 'oft' confirms a single, stable meaning.

(18×) A temporal adverb indicating repeated or frequent occurrence. In the Gospels, it describes the habitual violence of demonic affliction: a boy 'often' thrown into fire and water (Matt 17:15; Mark 9:22) and a man 'often' bound with chains (Mark 5:4). John 18:2 uses it for Jesus' regular visits to Gethsemane. Paul catalogs his repeated apostolic hardships with pollakis — dangers 'often' encountered in his missionary travels (2 Cor 11:26-27) — and notes his 'often' thwarted plans to visit Rome (Rom 1:13). Hebrews 6:7 applies it to the regularity of rainfall upon the earth. Hebrews 9:25-26 contrasts repeated sacrifice with Christ's once-for-all offering. Spanish 'muchas veces' and French 'souvent' confirm the straightforward frequentative sense. TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: often | es: muchas-veces | fr: souvent | de: oft Matt 17:15; Mark 5:4; Mark 9:22; John 18:2

πολλαπλᾰσί-ων G4179 Adj-ANP (1×)

many times more, manifold; multiplied several times over

This adjective expresses multiplication—receiving back many times what was given or invested. In Luke 18:30, Jesus promises that those who sacrifice for the kingdom will receive many times more in this present age, plus eternal life. The term suggests not just doubling but abundant multiplication, emphasizing God's generous response to faithful sacrifice. What believers give up for Christ's sake returns to them multiplied in ways they couldn't orchestrate themselves.

(1×) The manifold return promised in Luke 18:30 to those who sacrifice for God's kingdom. Jesus assures that present-age losses are more than compensated by abundant gains—family, community, resources—multiplied many times over. Multilingual glosses emphasize the multiplication ('many-times-more', 'mucho-más', 'beaucoup-plus'). This isn't simple arithmetic replacement but generous, abundant divine recompense that exceeds what was surrendered. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: many-times-more | es: mucho-más | fr: beaucoup-plus | de: πολλαπλασίονα Luke 18:30

πολυ-λογία G4180 N-DFS (1×)

much speaking, verbosity; using many words or long prayers

This compound term literally means 'many words,' denoting verbose or lengthy speech. In Matthew 6:7, Jesus warns against pagan prayer practices that rely on 'much speaking'—the assumption that sheer volume or repetition will compel divine response. The concern is not about prayer length per se but about the mechanical, magic-like approach that treats God as manipulable through verbal formulas. Effective prayer requires relationship, not verbosity.

(1×) The excessive wordiness Jesus condemns in Matthew 6:7 as characteristic of pagan prayer. Gentiles thought they would be heard because of their 'many words'—lengthy, repetitive formulas designed to wear down or manipulate deity. Multilingual glosses capture the verbosity ('many-words', 'palabrería', 'flot-de-paroles'). Jesus contrasts this with simple, trusting prayer to a Father who already knows our needs. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: many-words | es: palabrería | fr: flot-de-paroles | de: πολυλογίᾳ Matt 6:7

πολυ-μερής G4181 Adv (1×)

in many parts, in various portions; fragmentarily or piecemeal

This adverb describes something occurring in many parts or portions, suggesting fragmented or incremental revelation. In Hebrews 1:1, it characterizes how God spoke to the fathers—in many parts and many ways through the prophets, contrasted with the complete, final word spoken in His Son. The term evokes a mosaic being assembled piece by piece over centuries, each prophet adding fragments until Christ brings the complete picture.

(1×) The fragmentary, piecemeal nature of Old Testament revelation described in Hebrews 1:1. God spoke 'in many parts' through various prophets over centuries—piece by piece, incrementally building revelation. Multilingual evidence shows diverse approaches: 'in-many-parts', 'Poliméricamente' (polymeric), 'de-plusieurs-manières', 'vielfaeltig' (multifold). This contrasts with the unified, complete revelation in Christ who is God's final Word. MANNER ADVERBS

en: in-many-parts | es: Poliméricamente | fr: de-plusieurs-manières | de: vielfaeltig Heb 1:1

πολῠ-ποίκῐλος G4182 Adj-NFS (1×)

many-colored, multifaceted; displaying great variety or complexity

This vivid compound adjective combines 'many' with 'variegated' to describe something displaying numerous colors or forms. In Ephesians 3:10, Paul describes God's wisdom as 'manifold'—kaleidoscopic in its variety and complexity. The term was used for multicolored fabrics, intricate patterns, and complex designs. God's wisdom isn't monochrome or simple but displays infinite variety, revealed through the church's diverse unity to cosmic powers.

(1×) The manifold, multifaceted wisdom of God displayed in Ephesians 3:10 through the church. Like a richly variegated tapestry or multi-hued mosaic, God's wisdom exhibits infinite variety and complexity. Multilingual renderings ('manifold', 'multíforme', 'mannigfaltig') capture the many-colored, intricate nature. The church's diverse unity—Jew and Gentile reconciled—reveals to heavenly powers the kaleidoscopic brilliance of divine wisdom. WONDERS AND MARVELS

en: manifold | es: multíforme | fr: πολυποίκιλος | de: mannigfaltig Eph 3:10

πολύς G4183 Adj-GNP (361×)

Many, much, great; of number, quantity, magnitude, or degree; also comparative 'far more' and frequentative 'many times.'

Polys is the Greek workhorse for expressing large quantity, and its New Testament usage spans nearly every kind of abundance — many people, much suffering, great crowds, and intense emotion. With 361 occurrences, it is among the most frequent adjectives in the New Testament. The word's flexibility is evident in how it moves between count nouns ('many disciples,' Matt 8:11) and mass or abstract nouns ('much fruit,' John 12:24; 'much boldness,' Phlm 1:8). The comparative forms (with dative of degree) generate a distinctive rhetorical pattern in Paul's letters: 'much more shall...' (Rom 5:9, 10, 15, 17), building arguments from lesser to greater. Across languages, this range maps cleanly: Spanish muchos/mucho, German viel/viele, French beaucoup, Korean 많은 — all exhibit the same count/mass flexibility.

1. many, numerous (of plurality) (202×) Many, numerous — referring to a large number of countable persons or things. The dominant sense at 202 occurrences, covering 'many will come from east and west' (Matt 8:11), 'many prophets and righteous people' (Matt 13:17), and 'many signs' (John 20:30). When substantivized, hoi polloi means simply 'the many' or 'many people' (Matt 20:28; Rom 5:15). Spanish muchos, German viele, Korean 많은, and Arabic kathirun all deploy standard count-plural forms. The word frequently appears with ochlos ('crowd') to indicate 'a great crowd' (Matt 14:14), where the boundary with sense 3 (magnitude) can blur. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: great, many, than-many | es: a-muchos, de-muchos, muchas | fr: beaucoup | de: viel Matt 3:7; Matt 7:13; Matt 7:22; Matt 8:11

2. much, abundant (of quantity) (97×) Much, abundant — a large amount, degree, or extent of something, typically with mass nouns or abstract concepts. Ninety-seven occurrences include 'much weeping' (Matt 2:18), 'much suffering' (Matt 16:21), 'much fruit' (John 12:24; 15:5), and adverbial uses like 'praying much' or 'speaking much.' Spanish mucho (singular mass) versus muchos (plural count) perfectly mirrors this sense boundary, as does Korean's shift from 많은 (count) to 많이 (adverbial extent). Paul's 'much boldness' (Phlm 1:8) and 'much affliction' (2 Cor 2:4) exemplify the abstract-quantity usage. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: many-things, much, of-many-things | es: de-mucho, mucha, muchas-cosas | fr: beaucoup | de: viel, viele Matt 2:18; Matt 9:14; Matt 13:3; Matt 13:5; Matt 16:21

3. great, large (of magnitude) (36×) Great, large — emphasizing magnitude, significance, or intensity rather than mere number. Thirty-six occurrences where polys functions almost as a synonym for megas ('great'): 'great is your reward' (Matt 5:12), 'a great crowd' (Matt 14:14; 20:29), and 'great power and glory' (Matt 24:30). The distinction from senses 1-2 is subtle but real: here the emphasis falls on impressiveness or scale rather than counting or measuring. German uses groß ('great') rather than viel ('many/much') in several of these contexts, and Korean shifts to 큰 ('big/great') alongside 많은. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: a-great, great, large | es: grande, mucha | fr: beaucoup | de: viel, viele Matt 5:12; Matt 14:14; Matt 20:29; Matt 24:30; Matt 26:47

4. much more, by far (comparative degree) (25×) Much more, by far — comparative constructions expressing a considerably greater degree, often marked by the dative pollo ('by much') or in parakalo-type entreaty formulas. Twenty-five occurrences cluster in Mark 5 (five times: 'he begged him much/earnestly') and Paul's a fortiori arguments (Rom 5:9-10, 15, 17: 'much more shall we be saved'). Spanish mucho mas, German viel mehr, and Korean 훨씬 더 all deploy dedicated intensifying-comparative vocabulary. The dative pollo in 'by much' (Mark 10:48; Luke 18:39) is formally distinct from the simple adjective. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: by-much, much | es: [mucho], mucho | fr: beaucoup | de: viel, viele Matt 6:30; Mark 5:10; Mark 5:23; Mark 5:38; Mark 5:43

5. many times (frequentative) (1×) Many times, often — the frequentative sense, appearing once clearly at Rom 15:22 ('I have been hindered many times from coming to you'). Spanish muchas veces ('many times'), German vielmals, and Korean 여러 번 ('several times') all use temporal-frequency expressions rather than simple quantity words. While rare in this corpus, the adverbial frequentative usage of polys is well attested in wider Koine Greek and represents a genuine, if peripheral, sense distinct from spatial or numerical quantity. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: many-times | es: muchas-veces | fr: beaucoup | de: viele Rom 15:22

πολύ-σπλαγχνος G4184 Adj-NMS (1×)

very compassionate, deeply merciful; possessing great tender mercy

This compound adjective intensifies the concept of compassion, literally meaning 'much-boweled' (since the ancients located emotions in the inner organs). In James 5:11, it describes the Lord as 'very compassionate,' emphasizing the depth and abundance of His mercy. The term goes beyond ordinary kindness to express profound, visceral compassion—the kind that moves one's innermost being. God's mercy isn't measured or calculated but overflowing and abundant.

(1×) The abundant, deep compassion of the Lord celebrated in James 5:11 after Job's story. James emphasizes that the Lord is 'very compassionate and merciful'—not merely kind but profoundly moved with tender mercy. The term intensifies normal compassion to express overflowing divine mercy. Multilingual glosses ('very-compassionate', 'muy-compasivo', 'voll-Erbarmen') emphasize abundance. Job's eventual restoration reveals God's compassionate character. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: very-compassionate | es: muy-compasivo | fr: πολύσπλαγχνός | de: voll-Erbarmen Jas 5:11

πολυ-τελής G4185 Adj-NNS (3×)

very expensive, costly, precious; something of great value or requiring great expenditure

This adjective describes what is very expensive or costly, often applied to precious items of great value. A woman anoints Jesus with 'very costly' ointment from an alabaster jar (Mark 14:3). Paul warns against costly attire for women, emphasizing instead the imperishable beauty of a gentle spirit (1 Tim 2:9). Peter likewise commends the 'precious' quality of a gentle and quiet spirit in God's sight (1 Pet 3:4). The word distinguishes between external, expensive adornment and the incomparable value of inner character.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence emphasizes high cost and value: English 'costly/precious', Spanish 'costosa/de-gran-precio/muy-costoso', French 'grand-prix', German 'kostbar'. The lexicon defines it as 'very expensive, costly' (opposed to εὐτελής 'cheap'), 'valuable', and of persons, 'lavish, extravagant'. Mark 14:3 describes very costly ointment used to anoint Jesus. 1 Tim 2:9 and 1 Pet 3:4 use it for costly/precious adornment, contrasting external expense with the true value of godly character. The word emphasizes great material value or spiritual preciousness. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: costly, precious | es: costosa, de-gran-precio, muy-costoso | fr: grand-prix | de: kostbar Mark 14:3; 1Tim 2:9; 1Pet 3:4

πολῠτῑμ-ος G4186 Adj-GFS (3×)

very precious, highly valuable, of great worth; extremely costly or treasured

Similar to the previous word but intensified, this adjective means highly priced or very precious. A merchant finds one pearl of 'great value' and sells all to buy it (Matt 13:46). Mary anoints Jesus' feet with ointment of 'very precious' nard (John 12:3). Peter tells believers their tested faith is 'more precious than' perishable gold (1 Pet 1:7). The word consistently points to supreme value—whether a perfect pearl, extravagant fragrance, or refined faith that endures fire.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize supreme value: English 'costly/more-precious-than/very-valuable', Spanish 'de-gran-precio/muy-costoso/más-preciosa', French 'très-précieux', German 'kostbar/πολύτιμον'. The lexicon defines it as 'much-revered' (of gods) and 'highly priced, very costly'. Matt 13:46 describes a pearl of great value. John 12:3 mentions very costly ointment. 1 Pet 1:7 says tested faith is more precious than gold. Each occurrence highlights supreme worth, whether material (pearl, ointment) or spiritual (faith). The word denotes the highest category of value. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: costly, more-precious-than, very-valuable | es: de-gran-precio, muy-costoso, más-preciosa | fr: très-précieux | de: kostbar, πολύτιμον Matt 13:46; John 12:3; 1Pet 1:7

πολύ-τροπος G4187 Adv (1×)

in many ways, variously; through diverse methods or manners

This adverb describes variety in manner or method, literally 'many-turning' or 'many-ways.' In Hebrews 1:1, it pairs with 'in many parts' to characterize God's Old Testament communication—not only fragmentary but also delivered through diverse methods: visions, dreams, audible voice, signs, prophetic acts. The richness of prophetic experience contrasts with the singular, unified revelation in Christ who is the supreme Word.

(1×) The diverse methods by which God spoke to Israel in Hebrews 1:1—not only 'in many parts' but also 'in many ways.' Prophets received revelation through visions, dreams, theophanies, audible words, signs, symbolic acts. Multilingual glosses ('in-many-ways', 'politrópicamente', 'de-plusieurs-manières', 'auf-vielerlei-Weise') emphasize methodological diversity. This variety contrasts with the single, complete revelation in God's Son. MANNER ADVERBS

en: in-many-ways | es: politrópicamente | fr: de-plusieurs-manières | de: auf-vielerlei-Weise Heb 1:1

πόμα G4188 N-ANS (2×)

a drink, beverage, or something to drink

A simple noun for drink or beverage. Paul uses it in discussing Christian freedom and Old Covenant regulations. In 1 Corinthians 10:4, he recounts Israel's wilderness experience: 'they all drank the same spiritual drink... they drank from the spiritual Rock that followed them.' The rock giving water becomes a type of Christ. In Hebrews 9:10, Old Covenant worship involved regulations 'concerning food and drink'—external ordinances about what could be consumed, imposed until the time of reformation. The word is straightforward: anything drinkable, any beverage.

(2×) Drink or beverage, used literally for what is consumed. In 1 Corinthians, Paul speaks of Israel drinking supernatural water from the rock—physical drink with spiritual significance, prefiguring Christ. In Hebrews, 'foods and drinks' represents Old Covenant dietary regulations—external rules about consumption that are superseded in the new covenant. The universal clarity ('bebida', 'boisson', 'Trank') shows this is straightforward: liquids consumed for nourishment or refreshment, whether wilderness water or items governed by Levitical purity laws. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: drink, drinks | es: bebida, bebidas | fr: Trank, boisson | de: Trank 1Cor 10:4; Heb 9:10

πονηρ-ία G4189 N-AFS (7×)

Wickedness, evil, malice; moral depravity whether as an inner disposition or in its outward expressions.

A noun encompassing the full spectrum of moral evil, from inner malicious intent to outward wicked deeds. Jesus denounces the Pharisees' poneria when they test him with insincere questions (Matt 22:18) and when their outward piety masks inner 'wickedness and greed' (Luke 11:39). In Mark 7:22 it appears in a catalogue of vices flowing from the human heart, while Paul lists it among the fruits of unrighteousness (Rom 1:29). The plural form in Ephesians 6:12 — 'spiritual forces of wickedness' — extends it into the cosmic realm.

Spanish 'maldad,' French 'mechancete,' and German 'Bosheit' all convey deep-seated moral corruption.

wickedness, evil, malice (7×) Wickedness, evil, malice — the quality or condition of moral depravity, encompassing both the disposition of a corrupt heart and its concrete manifestations. Jesus perceives the Pharisees' poneria as they attempt to entrap him (Matt 22:18), and diagnoses it as the hidden interior reality behind external religiosity (Luke 11:39). In Mark 7:22 it joins a vice list tracing sin to its source in the heart. Paul deploys it in Rom 1:29 as a summary term for human fallenness. The cross-linguistic evidence — Spanish 'maldad,' French 'mechancete,' German 'Bosheit/Schlechtigkeit' — uniformly denotes deep moral corruption rather than mere misfortune. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-wickedness, wickedness, wickednesses | es: de-maldad, de-perversidad, maldad | fr: méchanceté | de: Bosheit, Schlechtigkeit Matt 22:18; Mark 7:22; Luke 11:39; Acts 3:26; Rom 1:29

πονηρός G4190 Adj-DNP (79×)

Evil, wicked, morally bad; substantivized as 'the Evil One' (Satan) or 'evil/wickedness' as abstract concept; rarely, physically harmful.

One of the New Testament's primary adjectives for moral evil, poneros describes persons, actions, thoughts, and spiritual realities as wicked, worthless, or harmful. Its most distinctive theological use is the substantivized ho poneros — 'the Evil One' — referring to Satan as a personal agent of corruption (Matt 13:19, 38; 1 John 5:19). The petition in the Lord's Prayer, 'deliver us from evil' (Matt 6:13), is famously ambiguous between abstract evil and the Evil One. Spanish distinguishes malo (evil) from maligno (the Malignant One), while German böse covers both senses, mirroring the Greek ambiguity. A single Revelation passage (16:2) preserves the classical physical sense of 'painful, grievous.'

1. evil, wicked (adjectival) (62×) The dominant adjectival sense: evil, wicked, morally bad. Describes persons (Matt 7:11 'you who are evil'), actions (Matt 9:4 'evil thoughts'), spiritual conditions (Matt 6:23 'if your eye is evil'), and fruit or outcomes (Matt 7:17–18). Spanish malo/mala, French mauvais, and German böse all render this broad moral quality consistently across the Gospels and Epistles. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil, wicked | es: mala, males, malo | fr: mauvais | de: böse Matt 6:23; Matt 7:11; Matt 7:17; Matt 7:18; Matt 9:4

2. the Evil One (substantivized) (14×) The substantivized masculine ho poneros: 'the Evil One,' referring to Satan as a personal agent. Jesus identifies the Evil One as snatching the seed of the word (Matt 13:19), sowing weeds (Matt 13:38), and John declares 'the whole world lies in the Evil One' (1 John 5:19). Spanish maligno and Korean 악한 자 ('the evil one') treat this as a personal title. The Lord's Prayer petition (Matt 6:13) remains exegetically debated between this sense and the abstract. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil, evil-one | es: maligno, malo | fr: mauvais | de: boese, böse Matt 5:37; Matt 5:39; Matt 6:13; Matt 13:19; Matt 13:38

3. evil, wickedness (abstract noun) (2×) The substantivized neuter to poneron: evil or wickedness as an abstract concept. Paul urges believers to 'abhor evil' (Rom 12:9) and to 'abstain from every form of evil' (1 Thess 5:22). Here evil is a category or force rather than a quality of a specific person or thing. French le mal and German das Böse capture this abstract nominalization. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: evil, of-evil | es: de-mal, malo | fr: mauvais | de: boese Rom 12:9; 1Thess 5:22

4. painful, harmful (physical) (1×) The rare physical sense preserved from classical Greek: painful, harmful, malignant. In Revelation 16:2, the first bowl produces a 'painful and harmful sore' (helkos kakon kai poneron) on those bearing the mark of the beast. Spanish maligna and the pairing with kakon ('bad') confirm that poneros here denotes physical affliction rather than moral evil. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS en: painful | es: maligna | fr: mauvais | de: boese Rev 16:2

πονηρός G4191

toilsome, painful; in bad condition, worthless; morally evil, wicked; injurious

The adjective πονηρός ranges from physical toil ('oppressed by labors,' like Heracles described as 'most toilsome and best') to sorry condition ('useless allies,' 'a sorry horse') to moral evil. Toilsome works, injurious foods, and a bad beginning all use πονηρός. The phrase πονηρῶς ἔχειν means 'to be in bad case.' From physical hardship, the word slides into worthlessness and then to active wickedness. New Testament usage emphasizes the moral sense: the evil one, evil deeds, the evil heart. The semantic journey from 'toil-worn' to 'wicked' reflects Greek moral linking of suffering, dysfunction, and vice.

πόνος G4192 N-AMS (4×)

Pain, distress, toil; hard labor or suffering that wears one down.

Originally meaning hard physical toil or the struggle of battle in classical Greek, this noun shifted in the NT toward anguish and pain. In Revelation it describes the pain of divine judgment (Rev 16:10-11) and the sorrow that will be no more in the new creation (Rev 21:4). Colossians 4:13 uses it of Epaphras's laborious striving on behalf of the churches. The word carries the weight of something that costs dearly – whether bodily suffering or exhausting effort on another's behalf.

(4×) Pain, anguish, or toilsome distress. The classical sense of hard labor narrows in the NT toward intense suffering: Revelation uses it three times for the pain of God's judgments and its final abolition (Rev 16:10, 16:11, 21:4), while Col 4:13 preserves the older labor sense in describing Epaphras's strenuous prayer-work. German and French both render it 'Schmerz' / pain, emphasizing the suffering dimension, while Spanish 'dolor' captures the same. The eschatological promise of Rev 21:4 – that ponos will be no more – elevates this ordinary word into a theological marker of the old order passing away. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: pain, pains, toil | es: dolor, dolor;, dolores | fr: Schmerz | de: Schmerz Col 4:13; Rev 16:10; Rev 16:11; Rev 21:4

δένδρεον G4193 Adj-AMS (1×)

Pontikos; a person from Pontus (region on the Black Sea coast of Asia Minor)

This ethnic adjective identifies someone from Pontus, a region along the southern coast of the Black Sea in northern Asia Minor. In Acts 18:2, it describes Aquila as 'a Pontian' or 'from Pontus,' providing geographical background for this tentmaker couple who became Paul's ministry partners. Pontus was known for agriculture and trade, and had a significant Jewish population. Understanding Aquila's origin helps explain his presence in Rome and later Corinth.

(1×) The ethnic-geographic identifier for Aquila in Acts 18:2, marking him as from Pontus in northern Asia Minor. This region had substantial Jewish communities. Multilingual glosses maintain the ethnic designation ('Pontikos', 'póntico', 'Pontique'), though German preserves the Greek form. Aquila's Pontic origin explains his journey westward to Rome, then to Corinth where he met Paul, eventually becoming a key ministry partner. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: Pontikos | es: póntico | fr: Pontique | de: Ποντικὸν Acts 18:2

πόντ-ιος G4194 N-GMS (3×)

Pontius; Roman praenomen/nomen, most famously borne by Pontius Pilate, prefect of Judea

This Latin name enters the New Testament exclusively in reference to Pontius Pilate, the Roman prefect who presided over Jesus' trial and crucifixion. Luke's Gospel introduces him with careful historical precision as the governor of Judea during the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar (Luke 3:1). The name appears in the early Christian creedal formula preserved in 1 Timothy 6:13, where Jesus' "good confession before Pontius Pilate" becomes a fixed point of historical reference. Acts 4:27 includes him in the catalog of those who gathered against God's anointed. The classical Greek lexicon associates πόντιος with

"of the sea," but in these New Testament contexts it functions purely as a Roman proper name, with the multilingual tradition (French Ponce/Pontius, German Pontius) preserving the Latin form.

(3×) The Roman name Pontius, used exclusively in the New Testament for Pontius Pilate. While classical Greek πόντιος relates to the sea (epithet of Poseidon, describing sea creatures, islands, ships), the New Testament occurrences carry none of this semantic freight —the word functions as a transliterated Latin praenomen/nomen. The three attestations span Luke's careful historical dating (3:1), the apostolic preaching about those who opposed Christ (Acts 4:27), and the creedal reference to Jesus' witness before Pilate (1 Tim 6:13). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Pontios | es: Póntios | fr: Ponce, Pontius | de: Pontius, Ποντίου, Πόντιος Luke 3:1; Acts 4:27; 1Tim 6:13

πόντος G4195 N-AMS (2×)

Pontus, a region along the southern shore of the Black Sea in northern Asia Minor

A geographical region along the Black Sea coast in what is now northern Turkey. The name literally means 'sea,' but in Greek geography 'Pontus' specifically designated the area around the Black Sea (Pontos Euxeinos). In Acts 2:9, Jews from Pontus were among those present at Pentecost who heard the gospel in their own languages. Peter addresses his first letter to believers scattered throughout 'Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia' (1 Pet 1:1)—regions of northern and western Asia Minor. Pontus was known for its Hellenistic culture and significant Jewish population.

(2×) The geographical region of Pontus on the Black Sea coast of Asia Minor, home to Jewish diaspora communities who became part of the early church. At Pentecost, Pontian Jews heard the gospel; later, Peter writes to believers there among a string of northern provinces. The region had strategic importance, known for trade and its Jewish population. The consistent naming across languages marks this as straightforward geography—a specific territory bordering the Black Sea, where early Christianity took root among both Jewish and Gentile populations. SEA LARGE WATER

en: Pontos, of-Pontus | es: Póntos, de-Ponto | fr: Pont, Πόντου | de: Pontus, Πόντον Acts 2:9; 1Pet 1:1

Πόπλιος G4196 N-GMS (2×)

Publius (Latin name), a Roman official on the island of Malta

The Latin name (Publius) of the leading official on Malta who hosted Paul after his shipwreck. Acts 28:7-8 tells how Publius welcomed the shipwreck survivors and entertained them hospitably for three days. His father lay sick with fever and dysentery; Paul visited, prayed, laid hands on him, and healed him. This miracle opened doors for healing ministry across the island. Publius' title ('the leading man of the island') suggests he was the Roman governor or chief magistrate. His generous response to Paul demonstrates Roman hospitality at its best.

(2×) The Roman official (likely governor) of Malta who showed remarkable hospitality to Paul and the shipwreck survivors, and whose father was healed by Paul. Publius appears only in Acts 28:7-8, but his actions are pivotal—he provides shelter and hospitality, creating the context for Paul's healing ministry on Malta. When his own father is miraculously healed, it leads to the rest of the island's sick coming for healing. The Latin name preserved across translations shows this is a specific historical person, a named Roman official whose kindness facilitated gospel impact. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Poplios | es: Póplios | fr: Publius | de: Ποπλίου, Ποπλίῳ Acts 28:7; Acts 28:8

πορ-εία G4197 N-DFP (2×)

a journey, travel, or course; a going or proceeding

A noun meaning journey, travel, way, or course—both literal travel and metaphorical life-path. In Luke 13:22, Jesus 'journeyed' toward Jerusalem—the word describes the travel itself, the making of the journey. James 1:11 uses it metaphorically: the rich man will fade away 'in his pursuits' or 'in the midst of his journeys'—whether business travels or the courses he pursues, his activity will not save him from death. Classical usage included military marches and traveling expenses. The root idea is movement from place to place, whether physical or metaphorical.

(2×) A journey or course of travel, whether Jesus' literal journey toward Jerusalem or the rich person's business pursuits. In Luke, the noun marks progression—Jesus is 'making a journey' through towns and villages, teaching as He goes, heading toward His destiny in Jerusalem. In James, 'in his journeys/pursuits' describes the rich person actively engaged in business or travel when death strikes —all his going and activity cannot prevent his fading like grass. The French 'voyage' and Spanish 'viaje' capture physical travel; the broader sense includes any pursuit or course of action. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13262 WITH 3 SENSES

en: journey, pursuits | es: andanzas, viaje | fr: voyage | de: Reise, πορείαν Luke 13:22; Jas 1:11

πορ-εύω G4198 V-PPM/P-AMP (154×)

To go, proceed, travel; figuratively: to walk or conduct oneself in a manner of life

The standard Greek verb for purposeful movement from one place to another, poreuomai appears across the New Testament in commands, narratives, and theological metaphors alike. Jesus sends the Magi away with 'go (poreuthentes) and search diligently for the child' (Matt 2:8), and the Great Commission hinges on the same participle: 'go (poreuthentes) and make disciples' (Matt 28:19). Beyond literal travel, the word carries a rich figurative load inherited from Septuagintal usage, describing how one 'walks' through life — Zechariah and Elizabeth 'walking (poreuomenoi) in all the commandments of the Lord' (Luke 1:6). The journey sense emerges in narratives of extended travel, particularly in Acts, where Paul's Damascus road experience is framed by the verb three separate times (Acts 9:3; 22:6; 26:13), turning a geographical route into a theological turning point.

1. go, proceed (physical movement) (139×) The core sense of physical movement — to go, proceed, depart, or move from one location to another — accounting for 139 of 154 occurrences. This covers imperatives ('go your way,' Matt 2:8; 8:9; 9:13), narrative movement ('he went into a village,' Luke 10:38), and travel within a scene. Spanish ir, French aller, German gehen, and Korean gada all converge on this straightforward motion meaning. The aorist passive participle poreutheis ('having gone') functions as a standard narrative transition marker throughout the Gospels and Acts. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: Going, Having-gone, going | es: Habiendo-ido, Yendo, habiendo-ido | fr: aller | de: gehen, geht Matt 2:8; Matt 2:20; Matt 8:9; Matt 9:13; Matt 11:4

2. walk, conduct oneself (figurative) (8×) A figurative extension meaning to walk, conduct oneself, or live in a certain manner — 8 occurrences where physical motion becomes a metaphor for moral or spiritual behavior. Luke 1:6 provides the paradigm: Zechariah and Elizabeth 'were walking in all the commandments.' In the epistles, the sense turns darker: unbelievers 'walked in licentiousness' (1 Pet 4:3), false teachers 'walk after the flesh' (2 Pet 2:10), and scoffers 'walk according to their own lusts' (2 Pet 3:3; Jude 1:16). This mirrors the Septuagint's use of poreuomai to translate Hebrew halakh in its ethical-behavioral sense, a connection visible when Korean salmda ('to live') replaces gada ('to go'). CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: going, having-walked, they-went | es: andando, caminando, fueron | fr: aller, ils-allèrent,, marchant, | de: gehen, geht, gingen-sie Luke 1:6; Acts 9:31; 1Pet 4:3; 2Pet 2:10; 2Pet 3:3

3. journey, travel (extended trip) (7×) An emphasis on the journey or extended travel itself — 7 occurrences where the focus is on the process of traversing a route or undertaking a trip rather than simple directional movement. Paul 'journeying' toward Damascus (Acts 9:3; 22:6; 26:13), Jesus traveling through villages en route to Jerusalem (Luke 13:22), and the Ethiopian eunuch 'going on his way' after baptism (Acts 8:39) all foreground the traveling experience. German reisen and Spanish viajar occasionally surface in translations here, distinguishing the journey frame from the simple 'go' of sense

1. CONDUCT AND WALKING
en: going, having-gone, traveling | es: habiendo-ido, ir, yendo | fr: aller | de: gehen, geht Luke 10:38; Acts 9:3; Acts 21:5; Acts 22:6; Acts 26:13

πορθ-έω G4199 V-APA-NMS (3×) to destroy, ravage, or devastate utterly; often used of violent attacks on communities or institutions
This verb describes violent destruction and devastation, particularly of cities, institutions, or communities. In classical Greek it was used for military ravaging and plundering. The New Testament employs it specifically for Saul's violent persecution of the early church before his conversion. The Spanish, French, and German glosses consistently emphasize the destructive force, while the English participles capture the ongoing and completed aspects of the devastation Paul inflicted on the believing community.

(3×) Used exclusively in Acts and Galatians to describe Saul/Paul's pre-conversion campaign of violent persecution against the church. The imperfect tense forms (Acts 9:21, Gal 1:13, 1:23) emphasize the sustained, aggressive nature of his attacks. The multilingual evidence uniformly points to wholesale destruction—not mere harassment but systematic devastation of the Christian community in Jerusalem. The aorist participle in one instance captures the completed devastation that made Paul's later preaching of the faith so astonishing to observers. DESOLATION AND RUIN en: I-was-destroying, having-destroyed, he-was-destroying | es: devastaba, la-devastaba, que-destruyó | fr: détruire, ἐπόρθει, ἐπόρθουν | de: πορθήσας, ἐπόρθει, ἐπόρθουν Acts 9:21; Gal 1:13; Gal 1:23

πορ-ισμός G4200 N-NMS (2×)
means of gain, profit-making, or financial advantage; acquisition of wealth
A noun meaning the means or process of gaining, acquiring, or making money—profit, financial advantage. Paul uses it in warning about false teachers who view 'godliness as a means of gain' (1 Tim 6:5)—treating piety as a money-making scheme. He then pivots: 'godliness with contentment is great gain' (1 Tim 6:6)—true spiritual profit comes not from monetizing religion but from contented trust in God. The contrast is sharp: those who see ministry as a business versus those who see godliness itself, with contentment, as the real wealth. Classical usage included earning a living or procuring resources.

(2×) The means or pursuit of financial gain, used both negatively (religion as money-making scheme) and positively (godliness as true profit). In 1 Timothy 6:5, 'porisms' describes false teachers who treat piety as a path to wealth—ministry becomes a business. Verse 6 redefines gain: godliness with contentment is 'great porisms'—the real profit, the valuable acquisition. The German 'Gewinn' (profit/gain) and Spanish 'ganancia' capture this economic language repurposed for spiritual truth: what you pursue as gain reveals what you truly value. GAIN AND GREED en: means-of-gain | es: ganancia | fr: πορισμὸν, πορισμὸς | de: Gewinn 1Tim 6:5; 1Tim 6:6

Πόρκιος G4201 N-AMS (1×)
Porkios; Porcius (Latin praenomen, as in Porcius Festus)
This is the transliteration of the Latin name Porcius, the family name (nomen) of Porcius Festus, the Roman governor who succeeded Felix in Judea. In Acts 24:27, the reference identifies the new procurator who inherited Paul's case. Roman naming conventions used three names; Porcius was the family name indicating clan membership. Festus' tenure (c. 59-62 AD) saw Paul's appeal to Caesar and eventual journey to Rome.

(1×) The Latin family name Porcius, specifically referring to Porcius Festus who became procurator of Judea in Acts 24:27. This Roman governor succeeded Felix and dealt with Paul's ongoing imprisonment and appeal. Multilingual evidence shows transliteration ('Porkios', 'Pórkios') or Latin form ('Pudens' appears to be an error). The name anchors the narrative in Roman administrative history, with Festus proving more judicious than his predecessor Felix. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Porkios | es: Pórkios | fr: Prisca | de: Πόρκιον Acts 24:27

πορν-εία G4202 N-DFS (25×)
Sexual immorality, fornication; any illicit sexual conduct outside the covenant of marriage, also used figuratively for idolatry Porneia is the broad Greek term for sexual immorality, encompassing fornication, adultery, incest, and every form of illicit sexual conduct. Jesus cites it as the sole exception clause for divorce (Matt 5:32; 19:9), and it appears in vice lists alongside theft and murder (Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21). In the Septuagint and Revelation, the term extends metaphorically to spiritual unfaithfulness — idolatry as harlotry against God. The word's range is deliberately wide: it names not one specific act but the entire category of covenant-breaking sexual behavior.

sexual immorality / fornication (25×) Illicit sexual conduct broadly conceived, including fornication, adultery, and incest, set in opposition to covenant faithfulness. Jesus names it as the one ground for divorce (Matt 5:32; 19:9), and Paul lists it among works of the flesh. Spanish 'fornicación,' French 'débauche/fornication,' and German 'Hurerei/Unzucht' all reflect the word's breadth. In prophetic-apocalyptic contexts (Rev 17–18) the term extends to idolatrous unfaithfulness, portraying spiritual betrayal through the metaphor of sexual infidelity. SEXUAL IMMORALITY en: fornication, sexual-immorality | es: de-fornicación, fornicación | fr: débauche, fornication | de: Hurerei, Unzucht Matt 5:32; Matt 15:19; Matt 19:9; Mark 7:21; John 8:41

πορν-εύω G4203 V-PSA-1P (8×)
To commit sexual immorality or fornication; to engage in illicit sexual conduct, also used metaphorically for spiritual unfaithfulness.
Porneuo, from which English derives 'pornography,' means to engage in sexual immorality — covering fornication, prostitution, and illicit sexual union broadly. Paul uses it as a sharp prohibition: 'Flee sexual immorality' (1 Cor 6:18), and recalls that 23,000 fell in a single day when Israel committed immorality (1 Cor 10:8). In Revelation, the verb takes on its Old Testament metaphorical dimension, where sexual immorality becomes a figure for idolatrous unfaithfulness — Jezebel 'teaches and seduces my servants to commit sexual immorality' (Rev 2:20). Spanish 'fornicar' and French 'commettre la fornication' stay close to the Latin tradition.

commit sexual immorality, fornicate (8×) To engage in illicit sexual conduct, encompassing fornication, prostitution, and broader sexual immorality. Paul warns the Corinthians to flee porneuo, arguing that it uniquely sins against one's own body (1 Cor 6:18), and cites Israel's catastrophic example at Baal-Peor where thousands died (1 Cor 10:8). In Revelation, the verb also carries its classic Old Testament metaphorical sense of spiritual infidelity: Balaam's teaching leads people to 'commit sexual immorality' alongside idol-worship (Rev 2:14), and the Jezebel figure seduces servants into the same (Rev 2:20, 18:3, 18:9). Spanish 'fornicar' and German 'Unzucht treiben' both preserve the gravity of the term. SEXUAL IMMORALITY en: committed-sexual-immorality, committing-sexual-immorality, having-committed-sexual-immorality | es: fornicando, fornicar, fornicaron | fr: Unzucht-treiben, commettre-la-fornication | de: Unzucht-treiben 1Cor 6:18; 1Cor 10:8; Rev 2:14; Rev 2:20

πόρν-η G4204 N-GFS (12×)
porne – prostitute, harlot; used literally and figuratively of spiritual idolatry in Revelation
The noun porne ('prostitute, harlot') denotes a woman who engages in sexual activity for payment. In the New Testament it operates on two registers. Literally, it appears in Jesus' startling declaration that 'tax collectors and prostitutes are entering the kingdom of God before you' (Matt 21:31-32) and in Paul's warning against union with prostitutes (1 Cor 6:15-16). The epistle to the Hebrews recalls Rahab the prostitute as a model of faith (Heb 11:31; cf. James 2:25). Figuratively, Revelation deploys it as 'the great prostitute' (Rev 17:1, 5, 15-16; 19:2), a symbol of idolatrous imperial power seducing the nations. Spanish ramera, French prostituee, and German Hure track both registers without lexical distinction.

prostitute / harlot (12×) A woman who practices prostitution, literally (Matt 21:31; 1 Cor 6:15-16; Heb 11:31 of Rahab) and figuratively of idolatrous empire in Revelation's 'great prostitute' (Rev 17:1, 5). Spanish ramera, French prostituee, and German Hure span both literal and metaphorical registers, confirming one lexeme across all twelve occurrences. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: PROSTITUTES, of-prostitute, prostitute | es: RAMERAS, de-prostituta, prostituta | fr: prostituée | de: Hure, πορνῶν, πόρναι Matt 21:31; Matt 21:32; Luke 15:30; 1Cor 6:15; 1Cor 6:16

πόρνος G4205 N-AMP (10×)

A sexually immoral person, one who practices fornication or sexual transgression

Designates a person who engages in sexual immorality, used in vice lists and exclusion warnings throughout the epistles and Revelation. Paul instructs Corinthian believers not to associate with anyone who bears the name of brother yet is a pornos (1 Cor 5:9–11), and declares that such persons will not inherit God's kingdom (1 Cor 6:9). Ephesians 5:5 equates the sexually immoral person with an idolater, and Hebrews 12:16 invokes Esau as a model of the profane pornos. Revelation places the pornos outside the holy city (Rev 21:8; 22:15). The Spanish 'fornicario/inmoral' and French 'impudique' highlight the social and moral exclusion this label carried.

sexually immoral person / fornicator (10×) A person characterized by sexual immorality — fornication, prostitution, or illicit sexual conduct. Appears predominantly in vice lists and exclusion formulas: the sexually immoral will not inherit God's kingdom (1 Cor 5:9–11; 6:9; Eph 5:5), are warned of divine judgment (Heb 13:4; Rev 21:8; 22:15), and Esau is cited as an archetype of the profane pornos (Heb 12:16). Spanish 'fornicario' and English 'fornicator/sexually immoral person' both convey the behavioral and categorical force of the term. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: for-fornicators, fornicator, fornicators | es: a-fornicarios, con-fornicarios, fornicario | fr: fornicateur, impudique | de: Unzuechtige 1Cor 5:9; 1Cor 5:10; 1Cor 5:11; 1Cor 6:9; Eph 5:5

πρόσω G4206 Adv (4×)

Far away, at a distance; used of spatial or figurative remoteness.

An adverb indicating distance or remoteness, whether literal or metaphorical. Jesus twice quotes Isaiah's rebuke that 'this people honors me with their lips, but their heart is far from me' (Matt 15:8; Mark 7:6), using porro to express spiritual distance. Luke employs it spatially: sending an embassy while still 'far away' (Luke 14:32) and Jesus appearing to go 'farther' on the Emmaus road (Luke 24:28). The word bridges physical and relational distance with equal ease.

(4×) Far, far away, at a distance – spatially or metaphorically. The Isaiah quotation in Matt 15:8 and Mark 7:6 deploys it for the heart's distance from God, a figurative use that Spanish 'lejos' and French 'loin' both capture cleanly. Luke 14:32 pictures a king sending delegates while the enemy is still far off, and Luke 24:28 describes Jesus as making to go farther along the road to Emmaus. The comparative form porrōteron (Luke 24:28) intensifies the spatial sense. All four NT occurrences play on the tension between proximity and distance – whether of hearts to God or persons to each other. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: far, far-away, farther | es: lejos, más-lejos | fr: loin | de: weit, πορρώτερον, πόρρω Matt 15:8; Mark 7:6; Luke 14:32; Luke 24:28

πρόσω G4207 Adv (2×)

from afar, at a distance, far off

An adverb meaning from a distance, far away, afar off. In Luke 17:12, ten lepers 'stood at a distance'—they kept far off as the law required for the ritually unclean, calling to Jesus from afar. In Hebrews 11:13, the heroes of faith 'saw and greeted [the promises] from afar'—they glimpsed fulfillment from a distance, not experiencing it in their lifetimes but recognizing it on the horizon. The word marks physical or temporal distance—separated by space or time from what one sees or seeks.

(2×) From a distance, standing or seeing afar off, whether physical separation (lepers keeping legally required distance) or temporal perspective (faith seeing future promises from afar). In Luke, 'porrōthen' marks the social and ritual distance imposed by leprosy—they cannot approach Jesus directly but cry out from isolation. In Hebrews, it describes the patriarchs' view of God's promises—glimpsed on the horizon, greeted from temporal distance, not yet possessed. The Spanish 'de lejos' and French 'de loin' capture both: separated by space or time from the desired object. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: far-off, from-afar | es: de-lejos | fr: de-loin | de: von-ferne, πόρρωθεν Luke 17:12; Heb 11:13

πρόσω G4208

farther, further, forward; adverb of direction indicating movement or position ahead in space or time

This adverb means 'farther' or 'forward' and appears in various Greek dialects with forms like πρόσω, πρόσσω, πόρσω, and πόρρω. It primarily indicates spatial motion forward or onward, as in leading armies forward or driving horses ahead. The word also carries temporal extensions, referring to things that are further ahead in time. Classical authors used it with verbs of motion to emphasize progression or advancement toward a goal or destination.

πορφύρ-α G4209 N-AFS (4×)

Purple cloth or garment; the expensive dye or fabric associated with royalty and wealth.

Refers to the costly purple-dyed fabric extracted from the murex sea snail, a luxury item throughout the ancient Mediterranean. In Mark's passion narrative, soldiers dress Jesus in purple as a mocking robe of kingship (Mark 15:17, 20). In the parable of the rich man, Lazarus's counterpart is clothed in purple daily (Luke 16:19). Revelation lists purple among Babylon's extravagant trade goods (Rev 18:12). Each occurrence links the fabric to displays of power, wealth, or their ironic subversion.

(4×) Purple cloth, purple fabric, or a purple garment – the luxurious dye and textile signifying royalty, wealth, or high status. Mark 15:17 and 15:20 describe soldiers dressing Jesus in purple to mock his kingship, inverting the symbol of imperial power. Luke 16:19 characterizes the rich man by his daily wearing of purple, a sign of extravagant wealth. Revelation 18:12 catalogs purple among Babylon's doomed commerce. Spanish 'púrpura' and French 'pourpre' both preserve the Latin-rooted loan, reflecting how deeply this luxury item pervaded Mediterranean culture. The word always carries connotations of costly status. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: in-purple, of-purple, purple | es: de-púrpura, púrpura | fr: pourpre | de: Purpur, πορφύραν Mark 15:17; Mark 15:20; Luke 16:19; Rev 18:12

πορφύρ-εος G4210 Adj-ANS (4×)

Purple, purple-colored; describing garments or cloth dyed with costly purple dye.

The adjective form corresponding to the noun porphyra, describing something dyed or colored purple. In John's passion account, the soldiers place a purple robe on Jesus (John 19:2, 5), paralleling Mark's use of the noun. Revelation employs it to describe the great prostitute's clothing (Rev 17:4) and Babylon's luxurious array (Rev 18:16). As an adjective, it modifies garments and textiles, always evoking imperial or extravagant splendor – whether genuinely royal or grotesquely parodied.

(4×) Purple-colored, dyed purple – describing garments or fabrics of the costly Tyrian purple. John 19:2 and 19:5 use it for the robe placed on Jesus in mockery, while Revelation 17:4 and 18:16 apply it to the opulent attire of symbolic Babylon. German 'purpurn' and French 'de pourpre' both function as adjectives modifying luxury textiles. Paired with the noun form (G4209), this adjective completes the NT's consistent association of purple with power, wealth, and their ironic unmasking in the gospel narrative. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: in-purple, purple | es: púrpura | fr: de-pourpre | de: purpurn John 19:2; John 19:5; Rev 17:4; Rev 18:16

πορφῠρο-πώλης G4211 N-NFS (1×)

a seller of purple fabric/dye; a merchant dealing in purple goods

This occupational term identifies someone who trades in purple-dyed fabric or dye itself, a luxury commodity in the ancient world. In Acts 16:14, Lydia is identified as a 'seller of purple' from Thyatira, a city famous for its purple-dyeing industry. Purple dye was extraordinarily expensive (derived from sea snails), making it a status symbol for the wealthy. Lydia's occupation suggests both business acumen and likely prosperity, explaining her ability to host Paul's team.

(1×) Lydia's profession in Acts 16:14 as a dealer in luxury purple goods. Thyatira was renowned for purple-dyeing, and Lydia had extended this trade to Philippi. The expensive nature of purple dye (requiring thousands of mollusks for small amounts) meant purple merchants served elite clientele. Multilingual glosses consistently identify the occupation ('seller-of-purple', 'vendedora-de-púrpura', 'vendeuse-de-pourpre'), marking Lydia as a successful businesswoman. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: seller-of-purple | es: vendedora-de-púrpura | fr: vendeuse-de-pourpre | de: πορφυρόπωλις Acts 16:14

ποσάκις G4212 Adv (3×)

how often? how many times? (interrogative adverb of frequency)

An interrogative adverb asking about frequency or the number of times something occurs. In classical Greek it functioned both as a question word and indefinitely to mean 'so many times.' The New Testament uses it exclusively in Jesus' teaching, appearing in two parallel passages about Jerusalem and once in Peter's question about forgiveness. All three instances involve Jesus addressing questions of repeated action and divine patience.

(3×) Appears in contexts where Jesus discusses repeated opportunities or actions. In Matthew 18:21, Peter asks Jesus how many times he should forgive a brother—prompting Jesus' famous 'seventy times seven' response. In the parallel laments over Jerusalem (Matt 23:37, Luke 13:34), Jesus uses it to express how often he desired to gather Jerusalem's children as a hen gathers her chicks. The cross-linguistic glosses are straightforward temporal frequency markers, showing this is a semantically simple but rhetorically powerful term for measuring divine patience and human obligation. TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: how-often | es: cuántas-veces | fr: combien-de-fois | de: ποσάκις Matt 18:21; Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34

πόσῐς G4213 N-NFS (3×)

drink, drinking; the act of drinking or beverage consumed

This noun denotes both the act of drinking and the beverage itself. In classical usage it could refer to drinking generally or specifically to carousing and banquets. The New Testament usage is more restrained, appearing in contexts that contrast physical and spiritual sustenance or that list bodily practices subject to religious regulation. Paul uses it twice to relativize physical consumption compared to spiritual realities.

(3×) Refers to literal drinking as a physical necessity or religious concern. In John 6:55, Jesus declares his blood is 'true drink' in the eucharistic discourse. Romans 14:17 subordinates eating and drinking to righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. Colossians 2:16 warns against judgment regarding food and drink. The Spanish 'bebida,' French 'boisson,' and German 'Trinken' all capture the dual sense of beverage and the act of drinking, showing this word addresses physical consumption that is often contrasted with or regulated by spiritual realities. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: drink, drinking | es: bebida | fr: boisson | de: Trinken John 6:55; Rom 14:17; Col 2:16

πόσος G4214 IPro-AFS (27×)

How much? How many? An interrogative of quantity, degree, or number, often in rhetorical comparisons.

An interrogative adjective and adverb asking about quantity, extent, or degree. In the Gospels it appears frequently in Jesus' rhetorical arguments from lesser to greater: if earthly fathers give good gifts, how much more the heavenly Father (Matt 7:11); if a sheep is valuable, how much more a person (Matt 12:12). It also asks straightforward questions of number, as when Jesus inquires how many loaves are available before the feeding miracles (Matt 15:34; Mark 6:38). Spanish cuánto/cuántos and French combien map the same dual range of degree and enumeration.

1. how much (16×) Interrogative of degree or extent: 'how much,' 'how great,' 'how long' – used to ask about magnitude, duration, or intensity, and especially prominent in a fortiori (how-much-more) arguments. Jesus asks how much more valuable a person is than a sheep (Matt 12:12), and how much greater the darkness when the inner light fails (Matt 6:23). Mark 9:21 uses it temporally: 'How long has this been happening to him?' Spanish cuánto and French combien both serve this scalar sense. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: How-long, How-much, how-great | es: Cuánto, cuánta, cuánto | fr: combien, combien?, qui | de: wie-viel Matt 6:23; Matt 7:11; Matt 10:25; Matt 12:12; Mark 9:21

2. how many (11×) Interrogative of number or count: 'how many' – asking about discrete, countable quantities. Jesus asks the disciples how many loaves they have (Matt 15:34; Mark 6:38) and later how many baskets of fragments they gathered (Matt 16:9-10). Pilate asks Jesus how many charges are brought against him (Matt 27:13). Spanish cuántos (plural) and French combien both handle this enumerative sense, though German wie viel covers both degree and number without distinction. QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: How-many, how-many, how-many-things | es: Cuántos, cuántas, cuántas-cosas | fr: combien, qui | de: wie-viel Matt 15:34; Matt 16:9; Matt 16:10; Matt 27:13; Mark 6:38

ποτᾰμός G4215 N-NMP (17×)

A river or flowing stream; used literally of geographical waterways and figuratively in prophetic imagery.

In classical Greek, ποταμός could denote anything from a small stream to a mighty river or even an artificial canal. In the New Testament it appears in both literal and symbolic registers. John the Baptist immerses converts in the Jordan River (Matt 3:6; Mark 1:5), Jesus' parable warns of floods beating against a house (Matt 7:25, 27), and Revelation envisions a river of the water of life flowing from God's throne (Rev 22:1-2). The French 'fleuve' distinguishes a large river flowing to the sea, while German uses both 'Fluss' and 'Strom,' reflecting the word's range from ordinary watercourse to overwhelming torrent.

river / stream (17×) A natural flowing body of water, from modest streams to major rivers like the Jordan and Euphrates. Used literally of geographical waterways where baptisms occur (Matt 3:6; Mark 1:5) and where floods threaten structures (Matt 7:25). Also employed in apocalyptic and prophetic imagery — rivers of living water (John 7:38) and the river of life (Rev 22:1). French distinguishes 'fleuve' (major river reaching the sea) from smaller streams, while German 'Strom' captures the torrent-like force seen in flood imagery. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: a-river, of-rivers, river | es: de-ríos, río, río, | fr: fleuve | de: Fluss, Strom Matt 3:6; Matt 7:25; Matt 7:27; Mark 1:5; Luke 6:48

ποτᾰμο-φόρητος G4216 Adj-AFS (1×)

river-carried, swept away by a flood; borne along by water current

This compound adjective describes being carried away or swept along by a river or flood. In Revelation 12:15, the dragon attempts to make the woman 'river-carried'—swept away by a flood from his mouth. The vivid image conveys overwhelming force and the danger of being swept to destruction. Ancient audiences familiar with flash floods and river currents would immediately grasp the mortal peril. Miraculously, the earth helps the woman by swallowing the flood.

(1×) The intended fate in Revelation 12:15 when the dragon spews a flood to sweep the woman away. The term captures the helplessness of being caught in a torrent, carried by forces beyond control. Multilingual evidence shows consistent understanding ('river-carried', 'arrastrada-por-río', 'vom-Strom-fortgerissen'—swept away by the stream). The earth's intervention saves the woman from this water-borne destruction, frustrating Satan's assault. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY

en: river-carried | es: arrastrada-por-río | fr: vom-Strom-fortgerissen | de: vom-Strom-fortgerissen Rev 12:15

ποδαπός G4217 IPro-NFS (7×)

What sort of? What kind of? An interrogative adjective expressing wonder or inquiry about the nature of something.

An interrogative pronoun-adjective asking about the quality or character of something, often colored with astonishment. The disciples marvel, 'What kind of man is this, that even the winds and sea obey him?' (Matt 8:27). Similarly, an onlooker wonders 'what kind of woman' is touching Jesus (Luke 7:39), and the disciples exclaim over 'what kind of stones and buildings!' in the temple (Mark 13:1). The word typically conveys not neutral inquiry but amazed or evaluative questioning. German 'was fur ein' and Spanish 'que clase de' both capture the qualitative force of the question.

what kind of (7×) What kind of? What sort of? — an interrogative adjective probing the nature, quality, or character of something, typically carrying overtones of wonder or astonishment. In Matt 8:27 the disciples' 'what kind of man is this?' expresses amazement at Jesus' authority over nature. In Mark 13:1 it voices awe at the temple's grandeur. In Luke 1:29 Mary ponders 'what kind of greeting this might be,' and in Luke 7:39 it implies suspicious evaluation: 'what kind of woman.' German 'was fur ein' and Spanish 'que clase de' both capture the qualitative, often marveling force of the question. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: What-kind, what-kind, what-kind-of | es: De-qué-clase, qué-clase-de | fr: qui, quoi? | de: was-fuer-ein, Ποταπός, ποταπὴ Matt 8:27; Mark 13:1; Luke 1:29; Luke 7:39

πότε G4218 Adv (30×)

Once, formerly (marking a past state); ever, at any time (with negation or questions); at last, finally Pote is a small enclitic particle with outsized theological leverage in Paul's letters. When he writes 'you who were once far off have been brought near' (Eph 2:13) or 'we ourselves were once foolish' (Titus 3:3), the little word draws a sharp before-and-after line between the readers' former life and their life in Christ. In rhetorical questions and negations it means 'ever' or 'at any time,' as in Hebrews 1:5: 'to which of the angels did he ever say, You are my Son?' Finally, in Philippians 4:10 Paul rejoices that the Philippians' care for him has 'at last' revived, using pote to mark the arrival of something long awaited. Spanish distinguishes 'en otro tiempo' (formerly) from 'alguna vez' (ever) and 'por fin' (at last).

1. once/formerly (19×) The dominant Pauline usage meaning 'once, formerly, at one time,' drawing a line between a past state and the present. Romans 7:9 recalls 'I was once alive apart from the law,' and Galatians 1:23 reports 'he who once persecuted us now preaches the faith.' Spanish 'en otro tiempo/antes' and German 'einst' capture the retrospective contrast that drives Paul's conversion rhetoric. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: formerly, once, once- | es: antes, en-otro-tiempo, en-un-tiempo | fr: autrefois | de: einst John 9:13; Rom 7:9; Rom 11:30; Gal 1:13; Gal 1:23

2. ever/at any time (8×) With negatives or in rhetorical questions, pote means 'ever, at any time,' intensifying the denial or challenge. Hebrews 1:5 asks 'to which of the angels did he ever say...?' and Ephesians 5:29 states 'no one ever hated his own flesh.' Spanish 'alguna vez/jamás' and English 'at any time/ever' mark the shift from narrative past to universal scope. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: at-any-time, ever | es: alguna-vez, alguna-vez?, jamás | fr: autrefois | de: einst 1Cor 9:7; Eph 5:29; 1Thess 2:5; Heb 1:5; Heb 1:13

3. at last/now at length (3×) A rarer temporal sense meaning 'at last, finally, now at length,' expressing the arrival of something long desired. Philippians 4:10 celebrates that the Philippians' concern 'has at last revived,' and Romans 1:10 records Paul praying that 'at last' he might succeed in visiting Rome. Spanish 'por fin' neatly captures this culminative nuance. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: at-last, when | es: alguna-vez, por-fin, una-vez | fr: autrefois | de: einst Luke 22:32; Rom 1:10; Phil 4:10

πότε G4219 Conj (42×)

When? (interrogative temporal adverb); ever, at any time (in lest-clauses with me); perhaps, possibly (rare).

The Greek particle pote wears two masks depending on accent and syntax. As an interrogative adverb, it asks 'when?' — the disciples' pressing question about the end of the age (Matt 24:3), and Jesus' exasperated 'how long?' (Mark 9:19). As an enclitic within mepote, it shifts to 'ever, at any time' in clauses of apprehension: 'lest you dash your foot against a stone' (Matt 4:6). Spanish cuándo versus acaso and German wann versus jemals capture the split neatly. A rare third use slides toward 'perhaps,' where the crowd wonders whether John might be the Messiah (Luke 3:15).

1. ever (lest/that not) (20×) A component of the conjunction mepote or similar constructions, meaning 'ever, at any time,' typically in clauses expressing apprehension or negative purpose — 'lest at any time.' This sense accounts for 20 occurrences and appears prominently in Satan's quotation of Psalm 91:12 during the temptation: 'lest at any time you strike your foot against a stone' (Matt 4:6; Luke 4:11). It recurs in Jesus' parable warnings (Matt 5:25; 13:15, 29) and the hardening formula of Isaiah 6:10 as quoted in the Gospels. Spanish alguna vez, French jamais, and German jemals all shift from interrogative to indefinite temporal vocabulary. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: -, at-any-time, ever | es: acaso, alguna-vez, alguna–vez | fr: quand | de: wann Matt 4:6; Matt 5:25; Matt 7:6; Matt 13:15; Matt 13:29

2. when? (interrogative) (19×) The direct interrogative temporal adverb meaning 'when?' — used in questions about the timing of events. With 19 occurrences, this sense dominates the apocalyptic discourse: 'When will these things be?' (Matt 24:3; Mark 13:4; Luke 21:7) and the judgment scenes of Matthew 25:37-44, where the righteous ask 'Lord, when did we see you hungry?' Spanish cuándo, French quand, and German wann all deploy their standard interrogative temporal forms. Jesus also uses it in rhetorical frustration: 'O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you?' (Mark 9:19; Matt 17:17). TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: when | es: cuándo | fr: quand | de: wann Matt 17:17; Matt 24:3; Matt 25:37; Matt 25:38

3. perhaps/indeed (3×) An epistemic particle expressing possibility or uncertainty — 'perhaps, possibly, indeed' — in contexts where the question is not about timing but about likelihood. Only 3 clear occurrences: the crowd wondering 'whether perhaps he might be the Christ' (Luke 3:15), the people's murmuring 'Can it be that the authorities know indeed that this is the Christ?' (John 7:26), and Luke 4:11 in a construction that blends temporal and modal force. Spanish acaso and sea que capture the dubitative tone, while French and German generally fold this into their temporal renderings. TEMPORAL PARTICLES

en: ever, perhaps | es: *, acaso, sea-que | fr: quand | de: wann Luke 3:15; Luke 4:11; John 7:26

πότερος G4220 Adv (1×)

whether (of two alternatives); which of the two

This interrogative particle introduces a question involving two alternatives, asking 'which of the two' or 'whether...or.' In John 7:17, Jesus says anyone willing to do God's will shall know whether the teaching is from God or whether Jesus speaks on His own. The particle frames a binary choice requiring discernment. The grammar signals that doing God's will provides the criterion for evaluating the source of Jesus' teaching.

(1×) The 'whether' in John 7:17 that introduces two alternatives about Jesus' teaching's source: from God or self-originated. This particle structures the binary choice Jesus offers His hearers. Multilingual glosses show various approaches ('whether', 'si', 'lequel', 'ob-denn'), reflecting different language strategies for expressing alternatives. Jesus promises that moral obedience provides epistemological clarity—those who do God's will gain ability to discern truth's source. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: whether | es: si | fr: lequel | de: ob-denn John 7:17

ποτήριον G4221 N-DNS (32×)

cup — a drinking vessel; literally of tableware, figuratively of one's divinely appointed portion of suffering or blessing

Poterion, a diminutive of poter ('drinker'), denotes a drinking cup and appears 32 times in the New Testament with a striking literal-to-metaphorical range. At the literal end, Jesus promises reward to anyone who gives a cup of cold water to a disciple (Matt 10:42), and he rebukes the Pharisees for cleaning the outside of the cup while the inside brims with greed (Matt 23:25-26). At the metaphorical center stands Gethsemane: 'Let this cup pass from me' (Matt 26:39), where the cup represents the full measure of suffering the Father has appointed. The eucharistic cup at the Last Supper bridges both registers — a real vessel whose contents signify the new covenant in Jesus' blood (Luke 22:20; 1 Cor 11:25-28). Revelation inverts the image with Babylon's golden cup full of abominations (Rev 17:4) and the cup of God's wrath (Rev 14:10; 16:19).

1. eucharistic cup (13×) Split from sense 75479. Criteria: The cup of the new covenant in communion contexts with specific theological and sacramental significance (Luke 22:20; 1 Cor 10:16, 21; 11:25-28)

en: a-cup, cup | es: copa, una-copa | fr: coupe | de: Becher, Kelch Matt 26:27; Mark 14:23; Luke 22:17; Luke 22:20

2. metaphorical cup of suffering/judgment (12×) Split from sense 75479. Criteria: Figurative use for divinely appointed portion of suffering, judgment, or blessing (Matt 20:22-23; 26:27, 39; Mark 10:38-39; 14:23, 36; Luke 22:42; John 18:11; Rev 14:10; 16:19; 17:4; 18:6)

en: a-cup, cup | es: copa | fr: coupe | de: Becher, Kelch Matt 20:22; Matt 20:23; Matt 26:39; Mark 10:38; Mark 10:39

3. literal cup, drinking vessel (7×) Split from sense 75479. Criteria: Physical tableware and actual drinking vessels used in everyday contexts (Matt 10:42; 23:25-26; Mark 7:4, 8; 9:41; Luke 11:39; 22:17)

en: a-cup, cup, cups | es: copa, de-copas | fr: coupe | de: Becher, Kelch Matt 10:42; Matt 23:25; Matt 23:26; Mark 7:4; Mark 7:8

ποτίζω G4222 V-AIA-1S (15×)

To give someone a drink; by extension, to water or irrigate plants and fields

A verb covering the full spectrum from offering a cup of water to irrigating a garden. In the Gospels, Jesus elevates the simple act of giving a thirsty person something to drink into a test of discipleship (Matt 10:42; 25:35). Paul then extends the image agriculturally in 1 Corinthians 3:6-8, where he 'planted' and Apollos 'watered' — Spanish 'regar' and German 'tränken' both capture this irrigation sense distinctly from the personal 'dar de beber.' The metaphor moves seamlessly from hospitality to spiritual nurture.

1. give to drink (12×) To provide a beverage for someone to consume, whether literally handing a cup of cold water (Matt 10:42) or figuratively nourishing with spiritual sustenance. Translations across languages consistently use idioms of personal hospitality: Spanish 'dar de beber,' French 'donner à boire,' German 'zu trinken geben.' Jesus' parable of the sheep and goats (Matt 25:35-42) makes this act a measure of faithfulness — giving drink to the thirsty Christ. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: I-gave-to-drink, give-drink, gives-drink | es: da-de-beber, daba-de-beber, dale-de-beber | fr: donner-à-boire | de: gibt-zu-trinken, traenken Matt 10:42; Matt 25:35; Matt 25:37; Matt 25:42; Matt 27:48

2. water or irrigate (3×) To supply water to plants, crops, or soil for the purpose of growth — irrigating or watering. Paul's metaphor in 1 Corinthians 3:6-8 employs this agricultural sense: he planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. Spanish shifts to 'regar' (to irrigate) here, clearly distinguishing this from the interpersonal 'dar de beber,' confirming the semantic boundary between hospitality and cultivation. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: watered, watering | es: regando, regó | fr: donner-à-boire | de: traenken 1Cor 3:6; 1Cor 3:7; 1Cor 3:8

Ποτίολοι G4223 N-AMP (1×)

Potioloi; Puteoli (modern Pozzuoli), a port city near Naples

This is the Greek transliteration of Puteoli, the major Italian port on the Bay of Naples where ships from the eastern Mediterranean typically landed. In Acts 28:13, Paul's ship arrives at Puteoli after his harrowing journey to Rome. The city was Rome's primary harbor for grain ships from Egypt and served as a hub for eastern trade. Finding Christian believers there (28:14) testifies to the gospel's early spread even to strategic commercial centers.

(1×) The Italian port city Puteoli where Paul landed in Acts 28:13 on his voyage to Rome. Located on the Bay of Naples, it was the terminus for grain ships from Alexandria and other eastern ports. Multilingual evidence shows transliteration ('Potioloi', 'Potiólous') or modern equivalents ('Pouzzoles'). The presence of believers there who host Paul for a week demonstrates Christianity's reach into major Roman commercial hubs. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Potioloi | es: Potiólous | fr: Pouzzoles | de: Ποτιόλους Acts 28:13

πότος G4224 N-DMP (1×)

drinking parties, banquets focused on wine consumption; carousing

This term denotes social gatherings centered on drinking, typically wine, often to excess. In 1 Peter 4:3, it appears in a catalog of Gentile vices that believers have left behind. These weren't moderate social occasions but events characterized by drunkenness and the behaviors that accompany it. Ancient symposia could be refined literary gatherings, but the term here suggests excess and moral looseness, part of the pagan lifestyle incompatible with Christian holiness.

(1×) The drinking parties listed among Gentile excesses in 1 Peter 4:3 that believers have renounced. These gatherings centered on wine consumption, often leading to drunkenness and associated immorality. Multilingual glosses identify the drinking focus ('drinking-parties', 'fiestas-de-beber', 'Trinkgelage'). Peter groups these with other pagan behaviors—sensuality, lusts, idolatry—that characterized believers' former lives but are now abandoned for holiness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8851 WITH 5 SENSES

en: drinking-parties | es: fiestas-de-beber | fr: πότοις | de: Trinkgelage 1Pet 4:3

που G4225 Adv (7×)

Somewhere, in some place; also 'where' (interrogative sense) and 'about, approximately' (with numbers).

This modest enclitic adverb pou does quiet but important work. It can mean 'somewhere' in a vague, indefinite way — the sailors in Acts 27:29 sensed they were drawing near 'somewhere' to land, and Hebrews cites Scripture with a casual 'someone has testified somewhere' (Heb 2:6; 4:4). It also serves as an interrogative 'where' (Mark 15:47; John 1:39). In Rom 4:19, it takes on the approximate sense of 'about' a hundred years old. French 'environ' and Spanish 'aproximadamente' pick up this numerical nuance, while German uniformly uses 'irgendwo' (somewhere) across nearly all contexts.

1. where (3×) Where — an interrogative or relative adverb of place asking or indicating location. Mary Magdalene saw 'where' Jesus was laid (Mark 15:47); the disciples ask 'where' Jesus is staying (John 1:39); the one who hates his brother does not know 'where' he is going (1 John 2:11). Spanish distinguishes 'dónde' (where?) from 'a dónde' (to where?), reflecting directional nuance the Greek leaves implicit. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where | es: a-dónde, dónde | fr: quelque-part | de: irgendwo Mark 15:47; John 1:39; 1John 2:11

2. somewhere (3×) Somewhere, in some place — an indefinite spatial or referential adverb. In Acts 27:29, the sailors suspect they are nearing 'somewhere' (land). Hebrews uses it for vague Scripture citation: 'someone has testified somewhere' (Heb 2:6; 4:4). Spanish 'en alguna parte' and 'en algún lugar' both render the indefiniteness, while French 'quelque part' captures the same casual imprecision. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: somewhere | es: en-alguna-parte, en-algún-lugar | fr: environ, quelque-part | de: irgendwo, που Acts 27:29; Heb 2:6; Heb 4:4

3. about (1×) About, approximately — used with numbers to indicate rough estimation. In Rom 4:19, Abraham was 'about' (pou) a hundred years old. Spanish 'aproximadamente' and French 'environ' make the approximative function explicit, while German 'irgendwo' (somewhere) treats it as the same vague indefiniteness rather than a distinct numerical sense. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: about | es: aproximadamente | fr: environ | de: irgendwo Rom 4:19

ποῦ G4226 Adv (46×)

An interrogative adverb meaning 'where?' — used to ask about location, destination, or (rarely) general indefinite place.

The Greek interrogative ποῦ asks 'where?' and appears 46 times in the New Testament, almost always as a direct or indirect question about location or destination. It opens some of Scripture's most dramatic questions: 'Where is He who has been born King of the Jews?' (Matt 2:2), 'Where do You want us to prepare the Passover?' (Matt 26:17), and Jesus' penetrating 'The foxes have holes... but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head' (Matt 8:20). Translations are remarkably uniform — Spanish 'dónde/adónde,' French 'où,' German 'wo' — reflecting the word's straightforward interrogative force.

1. (45×) Direct or indirect interrogative 'where?' asking about place, location, or destination. This covers virtually all NT uses (45 of 46). Spanish distinguishes static 'dónde' from directional 'adónde,' revealing a subtle locative-vs-allative nuance the Greek leaves unmarked. Key passages include the Magi's question in Matt 2:2, Jesus' question about Lazarus in John 11:34 ('Where have you laid him?'), and the repeated Johannine theme of origin — 'Where is your Father?' (John 8:19). In indirect questions it follows verbs of knowing or seeking: 'they did not know where it came from' (John 2:9). LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: Where, where | es: Adónde, Dónde, a-dónde | fr: où | de: wo Matt 2:2; Matt 2:4; Matt 8:20; Matt 26:17; Mark 14:12

2. (1×) An indefinite or rhetorical usage approaching 'anywhere, at any point.' Heb 2:16 (ποῦ with an indefinite force in context) stands alone in this category. Spanish 'en algún lugar' and the shift from a question mark to a statement suggest a quasi-adverbial meaning — 'surely not... anywhere' — rather than a true locative question. This marginal sense reflects Classical Greek's occasional use of ποῦ for indefinite or inferential force. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES en: anywhere | es: en-algún-lugar | fr: où | de: wo Heb 2:16

Πούδης G4227 N-NMS (1×)

Poudes; Pudens (a Latin personal name)

This is the Greek rendering of the Latin name Pudens, identifying a believer in Rome who sends greetings to Timothy. In 2 Timothy 4:21, he appears among several Roman Christians maintaining contact with Paul during his final imprisonment. The name Pudens was common in Roman society, meaning 'modest' or 'bashful.' While we know little else about this individual, his inclusion in Paul's final letter testifies to the networks of fellowship linking early Christian communities.

(1×) The Roman Christian Pudens who sends greetings in 2 Timothy 4:21 during Paul's final imprisonment. Part of the Roman Christian community supporting Paul in his last days. Multilingual evidence shows transliteration ('Poudes', 'Poudēs') or Latin form ('Pudens'). Though otherwise unknown, his mention alongside Linus and Claudia suggests he was part of the leadership or active fellowship circle in Rome's church. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Poudes | es: Poudēs | fr: Πούδης | de: Pudens 2Tim 4:21

πούς G4228 N-GMP (93×)

Foot — the lower extremity of the body, frequently used in contexts of submission, authority, ritual purity, and travel

Pous appears 93 times in the New Testament, and while it always denotes the physical foot, the contexts in which feet appear are richly varied and culturally significant. Feet are washed as an act of humble service (John 13:5-14), anointed in devotion (Luke 7:38, 46), and shaken free of dust in prophetic judgment (Matt 10:14; Acts 13:51). People fall at Jesus' feet in worship or supplication (Mark 5:22; Rev 1:17). The phrase 'under the feet' signals complete subjugation, drawn from Psalm 110:1 and applied to Christ's cosmic lordship (1 Cor 15:25-27; Eph 1:22). Spanish 'pies,' French 'pied,' and German 'Fuss/Fusse' carry the same anatomical meaning but require cultural annotation to convey the symbolic depth.

foot (93×) The physical foot, the lower extremity used for standing and walking. In the New Testament pous carries heavy symbolic freight: falling at someone's feet signals reverence or supplication (Mark 5:22; Rev 1:17), washing feet expresses humble service (John 13:5-14), shaking dust from feet pronounces prophetic judgment (Matt 10:14), and enemies placed 'under the feet' denotes total subjugation (1 Cor 15:25-27, drawing on Ps 110:1). Spanish 'pies,' French 'pied,' and German 'Fuss' all denote the same body part, though the cultural and theological resonances require context to appreciate. FEET AND LEGS

en: feet | es: pies | fr: pied | de: Fuesse, Fuß Matt 5:35; Matt 7:6; Matt 10:14; Matt 15:30; Matt 18:8

πρᾶγμα G4229 N-ANS (11×)

Matter, thing, affair — a concrete event, legal case, business concern, or abstract reality under consideration

The noun πρᾶγμα (pragma) covers a broad semantic range from concrete happenings to abstract realities. Luke uses it for the events 'accomplished among us' (Luke 1:1), and in Matthew 18:19 it denotes any 'matter' about which two believers agree in prayer. Acts 5:4 employs it for the deed Ananias conceived in his heart. Paul uses it technically for a legal case or lawsuit (1 Cor 6:1) and for a business affair or possible wrong (1 Thess 4:6). The writer of Hebrews elevates it to the philosophical register: God confirmed his promise by 'two immutable things' (Heb 6:18), and faith is the substance of 'things' hoped for (Heb 11:1). Spanish 'asunto/cosa' and Arabic 'amr' reflect the same breadth.

matter, thing, affair (11×) A matter, thing, affair, or deed — the general sense covering concrete events, legal disputes, practical business, and abstract realities. Used for events that have taken place (Luke 1:1; Acts 5:4), a subject of agreement in prayer (Matt 18:19), a legal case brought before courts (1 Cor 6:1), a commercial or interpersonal affair (1 Thess 4:6; Rom 16:2), and the underlying realities apprehended by faith (Heb 6:18; 10:1; 11:1). Multilingual glosses confirm a unified concept: Hebrew 'davar,' Arabic 'amr,' Korean 'il,' Spanish 'asunto/cosa,' and French 'affaire.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: matter, matters, of-things | es: asunto, cosas, de-cosas | fr: affaire | de: Sachen, πράγματος, πραγμάτων Matt 18:19; Luke 1:1; Acts 5:4; Rom 16:2; 1Cor 6:1

πραγμᾰτ-εία G4230 N-DFP (1×)

affairs, business matters; worldly occupations or concerns

This term denotes practical affairs, business transactions, or worldly occupations that demand attention and energy. In 2 Timothy 2:4, Paul warns that soldiers don't entangle themselves in 'civilian affairs' in order to please their commanding officer. The military metaphor illustrates single-minded devotion: effective soldiers avoid distracting involvements that compromise their primary mission. For Christian ministers, the parallel is clear—avoid worldly entanglements that dilute spiritual focus.

(1×) The civilian affairs and business concerns that soldiers avoid in 2 Timothy 2:4 to maintain focus on their commander's approval. Paul's military metaphor warns against entangling involvement in worldly matters that distract from spiritual mission. Multilingual glosses vary ('affairs', 'negocios', 'Geschaeft'), but all capture practical, worldly concerns. The point isn't complete withdrawal from the world but avoiding the entanglements that compromise single-minded devotion to Christ. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: affairs | es: negocios | fr: πραγματείαις | de: Geschaeft 2Tim 2:4

πραγμᾰτ-εύομαι G4231 V-AMM-2P (1×)

to do business, trade, invest; to engage in commercial activity

This verb means to busy oneself with business, trade, or investment —to put resources to work for profit. In Luke 19:13, the nobleman commands his servants 'do business' with the minas until he returns. The term implies active engagement, not passive holding. It suggests entrepreneurial activity, taking initiative, and bearing risk to generate returns. The parable commends faithful stewardship that multiplies the master's resources through diligent, wise investment.

(1×) The master's command to 'do business' with the minas in Luke 19:13, expecting servants to actively trade and invest during his absence. The verb implies entrepreneurial engagement, not passive stewardship. Multilingual evidence shows commercial vocabulary ('Do-business', 'Negociad', 'faire-des-affaires', 'Πραγματεύσασθε'). The parable rewards those who multiply resources through active, wise trading, and condemns the one who simply preserved capital without putting it to work. SELLING AND COMMERCE en: Do-business | es: Negociad | fr: faire-des-affaires | de: Πραγματεύσασθε Luke 19:13

πραιτώριον G4232 N-DNS (8×)

The Praetorium: the Roman governor's official residence, military headquarters, or by extension the imperial guard.

Borrowed directly from Latin, praitorion designates the official seat of Roman provincial authority. In the Gospels it refers to Pilate's Jerusalem headquarters where Jesus was tried and mocked by soldiers (Matt 27:27; John 18:28, 33). Mark 15:16 identifies it with the interior courtyard (aule). In Philippians 1:13, Paul uses the term more broadly, likely meaning the praetorian guard or imperial household in Rome. Spanish and French renderings ('Pretorio,' 'pretoire') preserve the Latin loanword virtually unchanged, underscoring how universally recognized this Roman institution was across cultures.

Praetorium (Roman governor's residence or military headquarters) (8×) The Roman governor's official residence or military headquarters, and by metonymy the praetorian guard itself. In the trial narratives, all four Gospels locate Jesus's sentencing within this building complex (John 18:28 contrasts the Jews' refusal to enter it for purity reasons). Paul's use in Phil 1:13 extends the term to encompass the imperial guard quarters, as reflected in translations across languages — German 'Praetoriums,' Spanish 'Pretorio,' French 'pretoire' — all preserving the Latin root with minimal adaptation. JUDGMENT SEAT en: Praetorium, praetorium, the-Praetorium | es: Pretorio, pretorio | fr: prétoire | de: Praetoriums, πραιτωρίῳ, πραιτώριον Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:28; John 18:33

πράκ-τωρ G4233 N-NMS (2×)

an officer, bailiff, or executor of judgments; one who compels payment or punishment

A noun for an official who executes judgments, collects debts, or enforces penalties—a bailiff, court officer, tax collector, or avenger. Jesus uses it in teaching about reconciling with one's accuser: if you don't settle before court, the judge will hand you to 'the officer,' who will throw you into prison (Luke 12:58, appearing twice in the verse). The word emphasizes the enforcement role—this is the one who makes judgments concrete, who carries out sentences. Classical usage included tax collectors and those who exact punishment. Once the officer has you, imprisonment follows.

(2×) A court officer or bailiff who executes judgments, particularly imprisonment for debt. Jesus' parable warns of the consequences when legal disputes aren't settled: the judge delivers you to the 'praktōr,' who imprisons you until you've paid every last penny. This is the enforcement officer, the one who makes the sentence real. The French 'collecteur' (collector) and Spanish 'alguacil' (bailiff) capture the role: an official with authority to compel payment or execute punishment, warning that once judgment falls, there's no escaping its consequences. FIGHTING AND WARFARE en: officer | es: alguacil | fr: collecteur | de: πράκτορι, πράκτωρ Luke 12:58

πρᾶξις G4234 N-AFP (6×)

A deed, action, or practice; also a function or role within a larger whole (as in the body metaphor of Romans 12:4).

In the New Testament, praxis carries the weight of moral conduct — the sum of what a person does, for good or ill. Jesus declares that each will be repaid according to their deeds (Matt 16:27), and Paul urges believers to put to death the sinful practices of the body (Rom 8:13). Yet the word also has a quieter sense: in Romans 12:4, Paul borrows it to describe the distinct function each member serves within the body of Christ, much the way Greek civic life used praxis for a person's appointed office or business.

1. deed, action, practice (5×) A deed, action, or pattern of conduct viewed in its moral dimension. Multilingual translations converge on 'deed/obra/action/Taten,' underscoring concrete behavior rather than abstract theory. In Matt 16:27 it denotes the totality of one's actions at the final judgment; in Rom 8:13 and Col 3:9 it narrows to sinful practices that must be mortally renounced; in Acts 19:18 new converts confess their former magical practices. Luke 23:51 uses it of the council's collective decision, showing that praxis can refer to a single corporate action as well as a pattern of behavior. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: action, deed, deeds | es: acción, obra, obras | fr: action, pratique | de: Taten, πράξει, πράξεις Matt 16:27; Luke 23:51; Acts 19:18; Rom 8:13; Col 3:9

2. function, role (1×) The specific function, office, or role that a part plays within an organized whole. In Romans 12:4 Paul writes that all members of the body do not share the same praxis — here Spanish 'funcion' and English 'function' capture what 'deed' cannot: the appointed purpose of a component. This sense draws on the classical Greek usage of praxis as one's business or assigned task, transplanted by Paul into his ecclesiological body metaphor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: function | es: función | fr: pratique | de: Taten Rom 12:4

πρᾶος G4235

gentle, mild, meek; describing a calm, non-aggressive temperament or disposition in people or things

This adjective, appearing as πρᾶος in Attic prose and πρᾷύς in epic poetry, describes someone who is gentle, mild, or meek in temperament. Ancient Greek writers contrasted it with harshness, anger, or wildness, making it a virtue in both classical ethics and biblical usage. The New Testament preserves this sense in describing blessed character traits. In the Septuagint and Christian writings, it took on moral significance as a quality of humble restraint and patient endurance rather than weakness or passivity.

πρᾱότης G4236

gentleness, meekness, mildness; the quality of being gentle or mild in temperament and action

This noun denotes the quality of gentleness or mildness, standing in direct opposition to harshness, anger, or savagery in classical Greek literature. Philosophers like Aristotle discussed it as a virtue balanced against quick temper. The word evolved in Hellenistic Greek and appears in both the Septuagint and New Testament as πραΰτης, where it took on deeper ethical meaning. Biblical authors used it to describe a spirit of humble submission to God and patient forbearance toward others—not weakness, but strength under control.

πρᾰσι-ά G4237 N-NFP (2×)

a garden bed, plot, or group; arranged in rows or companies

A noun meaning a garden bed, plot, or arrangement in rows—originally agricultural (beds of vegetables, especially leeks), but extended to mean groups or companies of people. Mark uses it to describe how the five thousand sat for the miraculous feeding: 'they sat down in groups' (Mark 6:40, used twice)—arranged in orderly companies like garden plots, by hundreds and fifties. The image is of organized sections, regular arrangement making distribution manageable. Luke uses a different word for this same scene; Mark's choice may reflect Peter's eyewitness memory of the striking visual pattern on the green grass.

(2×) Groups or sections of people arranged in orderly fashion, like garden beds in rows. Mark's feeding account uses 'prasiai' twice to emphasize the organized seating—the crowd didn't mill about randomly but sat in distinct groups (hundreds and fifties), creating a pattern on the green hillside like cultivated plots in a garden. This orderliness facilitated distribution and counting. The French 'rangée' (row) and Spanish 'en filas' (in rows) capture the visual: systematic arrangement, not chaos, enabling Jesus' provision to reach all efficiently. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: groups | es: en-filas | fr: rangée | de: Gruppe Mark 6:40

πράσσω G4238 V-APA-GMP (39×)

To do, practice, or carry out; to engage in habitually; to exact or collect payment; in passive, to be done.

Prassō is the workhorse verb of doing with a distinctive emphasis on repeated or characteristic action. Where poieō ('make, do') often highlights the product, prassō foregrounds the process — the ongoing practice, the habitual behavior. John's Gospel draws on this nuance powerfully: 'Everyone who does (prassōn) evil hates the light' (John 3:20), pointing to a settled pattern rather than a single lapse. The word also carries a specialized financial meaning — 'to exact, collect' — visible in Luke 3:13 where tax collectors are told not to collect more than prescribed. Spanish practicar and French pratiquer preserve the habitual flavor, while German tun covers the broader 'do' sense. From moral conduct to tax collection, prassō asks not just 'What did you do?' but 'What do you keep doing?'

1. practice habitually, do repeatedly (18×) To practice habitually or engage in as a pattern of life, often with moral valence. This is the signature sense: prassō describes characteristic behavior rather than isolated acts. John 3:20 ('everyone practicing evil') and Romans 1:32 ('those who practice such things') use it to portray a lifestyle. Spanish practicar and French pratiquer both emphasize the iterative quality. Acts 26:20 ties repentance to 'doing deeds worthy of repentance' — the ongoing fruit, not a one-time event. DOING AND MAKING en: I-am-doing, I-do, I-practice | es: actúan, hace, haciendo | fr: faire, pratiquer | de: tun, tut John 3:20; Acts 15:29; Acts 17:7; Acts 26:20; Acts 26:31

2. do, perform a specific action (17×) To perform or carry out a specific, often punctiliar action — closer to simple 'do' without the habitual overtone. Luke 23:41 gives the clearest case: 'This man has done nothing wrong,' referring to Jesus' concrete actions (or lack thereof) rather than lifestyle. Acts 3:17 similarly looks back on a completed deed: 'You acted in ignorance.' Spanish haber hecho and French avoir fait both employ the perfect, underscoring the completed-action perspective. The boundary with sense 1 is pragmatic rather than sharp. DOING AND MAKING en: I-have-done, did, do | es: de-hacer, haber-hecho, habiendo-hecho | fr: faire, pratiquer | de: tun, tut Luke 22:23; Luke 23:41; John 5:29; Acts 3:17

3. collect, exact payment (2×) To collect or exact payment — a specialized commercial sense. In Luke 3:13 John the Baptist instructs tax collectors: 'Collect no more than what you are authorized,' and in Luke 19:23 the master asks why his money was not put to the bankers so he could have 'collected it with interest.' Spanish cobrar ('to collect, charge') isolates this financial meaning cleanly. This sense likely reflects Hellenistic administrative vocabulary adopted into common usage. DOING AND MAKING en: collect, would-have-collected | es: cobréis, habría-cobrado | fr: faire | de: tut Luke 3:13; Luke 19:23

4. be done, be accomplished (passive) (2×) The passive voice: to be done, to be carried out or accomplished. In Luke 23:15 Pilate reports that 'nothing deserving death has been done by him,' and in Acts 26:26 Paul insists his story was 'not done in a corner.' Spanish hecho (past participle) and German getan preserve the passive construction. The focus shifts from agent to action-as-completed-fact. DOING AND MAKING en: having-been-done | es: hecho | fr: faire, pratiquer | de: tut Luke 23:15; Acts 26:26

πρᾶος G4239 Adj-GNS (4×)

Gentle, meek, humble in disposition; exercising power with restraint rather than aggression.

Describes a character quality of gentle strength – not weakness, but controlled power. Jesus applies it to himself ('I am gentle and lowly in heart,' Matt 11:29) and it appears in the Beatitudes' promise that the meek will inherit the earth (Matt 5:5). The Zechariah quotation in Matt 21:5 presents the messianic king as praus, riding humbly on a donkey. Peter commends a 'gentle and quiet spirit' as precious before God (1 Pet 3:4). The word consistently pairs gentleness with authority.

(4×) Gentle, meek, mild-tempered – describing a disposition of humble restraint rather than forceful self-assertion. Jesus claims this quality for himself (Matt 11:29) and blesses those who possess it (Matt 5:5, echoing Ps 37:11). The prophetic fulfillment in Matt 21:5 (quoting Zech 9:9) presents the Messiah-King arriving in deliberate gentleness. In 1 Pet 3:4 it characterizes a spirit that is precious to God. French 'doux' and Spanish 'manso' both convey this softness-with-strength. German 'sanftmuetig' (gentle-spirited) captures the inner disposition well. Every NT use connects meekness to a strength that chooses not to dominate. TAME DOCILE en: gentle, meek | es: apacible, manso, mansos | fr: doux | de: sanftmuetig, πραΰς, πραεῖς Matt 5:5; Matt 11:29; Matt 21:5; 1Pet 3:4

πρᾰότης G4240 N-DFS (12×)

prautes – gentleness, meekness; the quality of mild, humble self-restraint as a spiritual virtue

The noun prautes (earlier praotes) denotes gentleness, meekness, and mildness of disposition – not weakness, but strength held in check. In classical Greek it described the calm temperament opposed to harshness (agriotēs) and quick anger (orgilotēs). Paul lists it among the fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:23) and urges it as the proper posture for restoring a fallen brother (Gal 6:1), appealing to the Corinthians 'by the meekness and gentleness of Christ' (2 Cor 10:1). It appears alongside humility and patience in Eph 4:2 and Col 3:12, forming the character profile of the mature believer. Spanish mansedumbre, French douceur, and German Sanftmut each capture the warmth of controlled gentleness.

gentleness, meekness (as a virtue or fruit of the Spirit) (12×) The virtue of gentle, humble self-restraint – power under control, not passive weakness. A fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:23), paired with humility and patience (Eph 4:2; Col 3:12), modeled by Christ (2 Cor 10:1). Spanish mansedumbre, French douceur, and German Sanftmut converge on one concept of mild, Spirit-empowered character. GENTLENESS MEEKNESS en: gentleness, meekness, of-gentleness | es: de-mansedumbre, de-mansedumbre?, mansedumbre | fr: douceur, πραΰτης, πραΰτητα | de: Sanftmut 1Cor 4:21; 2Cor 10:1; Gal 5:23; Gal 6:1; Eph 4:2

πρέπ-ω G4241 V-IIA-3S (7×)

To be fitting, proper, or suitable; expressing moral or situational propriety and what is becoming.

An impersonal verb expressing that something is fitting, proper, or becoming — a quiet but powerful word for moral and theological propriety. Jesus uses it at his baptism: 'it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness' (Matt 3:15), establishing a principle of divine appropriateness. Paul applies it to worship decorum (1 Cor 11:13), ethical conduct (Eph 5:3), and the qualities expected of Christian leaders (Titus 2:1). Spanish 'convenia/conveniente' and French 'convenable/convenir' both derive from Latin convenire, reflecting the same sense of things 'coming together' fittingly.

to be fitting, proper, or suitable (7×) To be fitting, proper, suitable — an impersonal or quasi-impersonal verb asserting that something is appropriate, becoming, or morally right in a given situation. Jesus invokes it at his baptism to explain why John should comply: 'it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness' (Matt 3:15). Paul uses it for worship propriety (1 Cor 11:13: 'is it fitting for a woman to pray uncovered?'), ethical standards (Eph 5:3), and teaching qualifications (Titus 2:1). In Heb 2:10 and 7:26 it frames Christ's suffering and high-priestly holiness as divinely 'fitting.' Spanish 'convenia' and French 'convenir' both echo the Latin root convenire, preserving the sense of propriety. PROPRIETY AND FITTINGNESS

en: fitting, is-fitting, it-was-fitting | es: Convenía, conveniente, convenía | fr: convenable, convenir | de: geziemen, πρέπον Matt 3:15; 1Cor 11:13; Eph 5:3; 1Tim 2:10; Titus 2:1

πρεσβ-εία G4242 N-AFS (2×)

an embassy, delegation, or ambassadorial mission; envoys sent to negotiate

A noun meaning an embassy, delegation, or the ambassadors themselves sent to negotiate. Both Gospel uses are in Jesus' parables. A king going to war considers whether he can meet the enemy; if not, 'while the other is yet a great way off, he sends a delegation and asks for terms of peace' (Luke 14:32). In the parable of the pounds, citizens 'sent a delegation after him, saying, We do not want this man to reign over us' (Luke 19:14). The word emphasizes formal, official representation—envoys with authority to speak for those who sent them.

(2×) An embassy or delegation sent with official authority to negotiate or represent. In Luke 14, a weaker king sends ambassadors to sue for peace before battle is joined—diplomatic representation seeking terms. In Luke 19, hostile citizens dispatch a delegation to protest the nobleman's kingship. Both uses involve formal envoys carrying their senders' message and authority. The French 'ambassade' and Spanish 'embajada' preserve the diplomatic sense: official representatives speaking with delegated authority, whether suing for peace or lodging formal protest. ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: an-embassy, delegation | es: embajada | fr: ambassade | de: πρεσβείαν Luke 14:32; Luke 19:14

πρεσβ-εύω G4243 V-PIA-1S (2×)

to serve as ambassador, to represent as an envoy; to act on behalf of another

A verb meaning to serve as an ambassador, to represent officially, to act as an envoy. Paul uses it for his apostolic calling: 'We are ambassadors for Christ, God making his appeal through us' (2 Cor 5:20). In Ephesians 6:20, he is 'an ambassador in chains'—even in prison, he represents the King and the gospel message. The verb conveys official representation with delegated authority. Classical usage included being an elder (from the age-related root) or serving as an envoy. Paul sees himself as heaven's official representative, authorized to speak for Christ.

(2×) To serve as an ambassador or official representative, Paul's self-description for his apostolic ministry. In 2 Corinthians, 'we are ambassadors for Christ'—official envoys carrying God's message of reconciliation, speaking with divine authority. In Ephesians, Paul is an 'ambassador in chains'—even imprisonment doesn't terminate his commission; he remains Christ's representative. The multilingual agreement ('ambassadeur', 'Gesandter sein', 'embajador') emphasizes the diplomatic role: one sent with authority to represent another, in this case heaven's King and His gospel of peace. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: I-am-ambassador, we-are-ambassadors | es: somos-embajadores, soy-embajador | fr: ambassadeur, πρεσβεύω | de: Gesandter-sein 2Cor 5:20; Eph 6:20

πρεσβῠτέριον G4244 N-GNS (3×)

council of elders, presbytery; the collective body of elder leaders

This term designates the council or collective body of elders in Jewish or Christian contexts. In classical Greek it referred to a council of elders with governing authority. The New Testament preserves this institutional sense, referring both to the Jewish ruling council and to the Christian assembly of elders. The cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent translation as a council or collective body, not individual elders.

(3×) Denotes an institutional assembly of elders with authority. In Luke 22:66, it refers to the Jewish council that interrogated Jesus. Acts 22:5 mentions the high priest and 'all the council of elders' as witnesses to Paul's former persecution of Christians. First Timothy 4:14 refers to the Christian presbytery that laid hands on Timothy. The Spanish 'consejo-de-ancianos' and French 'conseil-des-anciens' emphasize the collective, institutional nature. This is not about individual old men but about an authoritative governing assembly, whether in Jewish or Christian settings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: council-of-elders, eldership | es: consejo-de-ancianos, presbiterio | fr: anciens, conseil-des-anciens | de: Aeltestenrat, πρεσβυτέριον Luke 22:66; Acts 22:5; 1Tim 4:14

πρεσβῠτέριον G4245 Adj-NMP-C (66×)

Elder; a community leader, ancestor, or older person — spanning official authority, ancestral honor, and comparative age.

In the New Testament world, this word bridges civic authority and simple seniority. Most often it designates an official leader — a member of the Sanhedrin, a synagogue ruler, or a church overseer — as seen across the Gospels and Acts where 'the elders' stand alongside chief priests as institutional gatekeepers. Yet the same word can reach back through time to honor the faithful ancestors of Hebrews 11, or simply describe someone older in years, as when the elder brother in Jesus' parable of the prodigal son refuses to celebrate (Luke 15:25). Spanish 'ancianos' and German 'Älteste' both capture this double register of age and authority.

1. elder, community leader (60×) The dominant institutional sense: a recognized leader or official bearing the quasi-title 'elder' within Jewish or early Christian governance. In the Gospels, these elders conspire with chief priests against Jesus (Matt 16:21; 26:3); in Acts and the Epistles they shepherd local congregations. The multilingual evidence is remarkably stable — English 'elders,' Spanish 'ancianos,' French 'ancien,' German 'Älteste' — confirming a single well-understood social role across translation traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: elders | es: ancianos, ancianos? | fr: ancien | de: Aelteste, Ältester Matt 15:2; Matt 16:21; Matt 21:23; Matt 26:3; Matt 26:47

2. ancestor, person of old (3×) People of former times, the revered ancestors of faith. Hebrews 11:2 commends 'the elders' who received divine approval, reaching past any institutional role to the great cloud of witnesses. The same translations — 'ancianos,' 'ancien,' 'Älteste' — are reused, so context alone distinguishes ancestral honor from community office. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: elders | es: ancianos | fr: ancien | de: Aelteste John 8:9; Titus 1:5; Heb 11:2

3. older in age (2×) A straightforward comparative: 'older in age,' without implying any official standing. The elder brother in the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:25) and the pastoral advice about older men in 1 Timothy 5:1 use this purely age-based sense. Spanish 'mayor' (rather than 'ancianos') and English 'older' signal the shift away from institutional meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-older-man, older | es: A-anciano, mayor | fr: ancien | de: Aelteste, Ältester Luke 15:25; 1Tim 5:1

4. older woman (1×) The feminine counterpart describing older women in the community. In 1 Timothy 5:2 Paul counsels Timothy to treat 'older women as mothers,' where Spanish 'ancianas' and English 'older women' mark a clear gender and role distinction from the masculine elder-as-leader. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: older-women | es: a-ancianas | fr: ancien | de: Aelteste 1Tim 5:2

πρεσβύτης G4246 N-AMP (3×)
an old man, elder; a man advanced in years
This noun refers to an individual old man, someone advanced in age. Unlike the related term for a council of elders, this word focuses on the individual rather than the institution. It appears in contexts addressing the dignity, status, or self-identification of older men. Paul uses it both to describe others and possibly himself.

(3×) Designates an individual male who is advanced in years. Zechariah identifies himself as 'an old man' when the angel announces John's birth (Luke 1:18). Titus 2:2 addresses behavioral expectations for 'older men' in the Christian community. In Philemon 1:9, Paul identifies himself as 'Paul, an old man' (though some interpret this as 'ambassador'). The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'anciano,' 'vieillard,' and 'alter Mann' shows this refers to chronological age and social status associated with seniority, not institutional office. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: an-old-man, old-man, older-men | es: anciano, ancianos | fr: vieillard | de: alter-Mann, πρεσβύτης Luke 1:18; Titus 2:2; Phlm 1:9

πρεσβύτης G4247 N-AFP (1×)
older women, aged women; females advanced in years
This feminine term identifies women who are older or advanced in years, typically suggesting both age and the wisdom or maturity that should accompany it. In Titus 2:3, Paul instructs that older women should be reverent in behavior and teach what is good, mentoring younger women. The term isn't merely about chronological age but about the spiritual maturity and life experience that qualifies these women to serve as role models and instructors in godly living.

(1×) The older women of Titus 2:3 who should exhibit reverent behavior and teach younger women. Paul envisions these mature women as spiritual mentors whose age and experience qualify them to instruct. Multilingual glosses consistently identify age ('older-women', 'ancianas', 'aeltere-Frau'). Their calling involves modeling godliness and actively mentoring the next generation in practical Christian living—a vital intergenerational teaching ministry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: older-women | es: ancianas | fr: πρεσβύτιδας | de: aeltere-Frau Titus 2:3

πρᾱν-ής G4248 Adj-NMS (1×) headlong, face downward; falling forward or prone
This adjective describes a position or fall with the face downward, headlong, or prone—the opposite of falling backward (supine). In Acts 1:18, it describes how Judas fell after his suicide, though textual issues make the exact scenario debated. The term emphasizes the downward, forward orientation of the fall. Ancient medical and athletic contexts used this for describing body positions, but here it contributes to the grim details of Judas' violent end.

(1×) The manner of Judas' fall in Acts 1:18—headlong or face forward—part of the graphic account of his death. The term contrasts with falling backward (supine), emphasizing the downward, forward orientation. Multilingual evidence varies ('headlong', 'de-cabeza', 'tête-baissée'), all suggesting the violent, downward nature. Combined with his bursting open, the description emphasizes the horrific judgment that befell the betrayer. ADDITIVE PARTICLES
en: headlong | es: de-cabeza | fr: tête-baissée | de: πρηνὴς Acts 1:18

πρίζω G4249 V-AIP-3P (1×)
to saw, saw in two; to cut with a saw
This verb means to saw or cut with a saw, specifically referring to the horrific method of execution or torture. In Hebrews 11:37, it appears in a catalog of sufferings endured by faithful witnesses—they were sawn in two. Tradition associates this death with the prophet Isaiah under King Manasseh, though the verse likely encompasses multiple martyrs. The term's graphic nature underscores the extreme persecution faithful believers sometimes faced.

(1×) The method of martyrdom in Hebrews 11:37—being sawn in two—representing extreme persecution. Jewish tradition held that Isaiah was sawn in two with a wooden saw during Manasseh's reign. Multilingual glosses convey the horrific action ('they-were-sawn-in-two', 'fueron-aserrados', 'scier', 'zersaegen'). This extreme suffering demonstrates faith's costliness and the length to which God's witnesses went rather than deny truth. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: they-were-sawn-in-two | es: fueron-aserrados | fr: scier | de: zersaegen Heb 11:37

πρίν G4250 Adv (13×)
before, prior to — temporal adverb and conjunction marking an event that precedes another in time Prin functions as both an adverb and a conjunction in the New Testament, consistently expressing temporal priority — 'before this happens' or 'before you do that.' Its 13 occurrences cluster around pivotal narrative moments, most memorably in Jesus' prediction that Peter would deny him 'before the rooster crows' (Matt 26:34; Mark 14:30). The word also marks divine timing, as in Matthew 1:18 where Mary was found with child 'before' Joseph and she came together. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'antes/antes-que,' French 'avant/avant-que,' German 'bevor' — uniformly confirms a single temporal-precedence sense with no semantic branching.

before (13×) A temporal adverb and conjunction indicating that one event or state precedes another in time. In narrative contexts it frames sequence-critical moments: Peter's denial prediction (Matt 26:34, 75; Mark 14:30, 72) and the circumstances surrounding Jesus' conception (Matt 1:18). Used both absolutely ('before') and with subordinate clauses ('before [something] happens'). All 13 occurrences express the same basic notion of temporal anteriority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Before, Before-, before | es: Antes, Antes-que, antes | fr: avant, avant-que | de: bevor Matt 1:18; Matt 26:34; Matt 26:75; Mark 14:30; Mark 14:72

Πρίσκα G4251 N-NFS (3×)
Prisca (the fuller form of Priscilla); wife of Aquila, co-worker with Paul Prisca is the formal Latin name of the woman also called Priscilla, wife of Aquila and prominent co-worker in Paul's ministry. She and her husband were tentmakers who hosted churches in their home and instructed Apollos in the faith. The name appears in its fuller form 'Prisca' in Paul's letters, showing respect and affection. This capable woman is always mentioned in ministry contexts, often named before her husband.

(3×) Identifies Prisca, the wife of Aquila and key leader in the early church. Romans 16:3 sends greetings to 'Prisca and Aquila, my fellow workers in Christ Jesus.' First Corinthians 16:19 conveys greetings from 'Aquila and Prisca, together with the church in their house.' Second Timothy 4:19 sends greetings to them again. The cross-linguistic evidence shows slight spelling variations but consistent identification. This is the more formal version of the name compared to the diminutive 'Priscilla' used in Acts, suggesting Paul's respect for her significant role in church planting and teaching. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Priska | es: Príska, a-Príska, a-Prískan | fr: Prisca, Priska | de: Priska Rom 16:3; 1Cor 16:19; 2Tim 4:19

Πρίσκιλλα G4252 N-AFS (3×)
Priscilla (diminutive form of Prisca); wife of Aquila, co-worker with Paul

Priscilla is the diminutive or affectionate form of Prisca, used by Luke in Acts to refer to the same remarkable woman who partnered with her husband Aquila in ministry. The variation in forms (Prisca in Paul's letters, Priscilla in Acts) reflects common Latin naming conventions where both formal and familiar forms were used. She appears as a tentmaker, church planter, host, and theological instructor.

(3×) Identifies Priscilla in Luke's narrative in Acts. Acts 18:2 introduces her when Paul meets Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth, having come from Rome. Acts 18:18 mentions Paul sailing with 'Priscilla and Aquila.' Acts 18:26 describes how Priscilla and Aquila heard Apollos and 'took him aside and explained to him the way of God more accurately.' The consistent naming in Acts as 'Priscilla' contrasts with Paul's use of 'Prisca,' showing this is the familiar form of the name used in narrative contexts to describe the same influential woman teacher and leader. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Priskilla | es: Prískilla, a-Prískilla | fr: Priscille | de: Πρίσκιλλα, Πρίσκιλλαν Acts 18:2; Acts 18:18; Acts 18:26

πρό G4253 Prep (47×)
pro – before; a preposition of temporal priority, spatial position in front, or superiority in rank
The preposition pro ('before') governs the genitive case and expresses three related notions across its 47 New Testament occurrences: temporal priority ('before something happens'), spatial anteriority ('in front of'), and metaphorical precedence or preference ('above, in behalf of'). Its temporal sense predominates in the New Testament: 'before the foundation of the world' (John 17:24; Eph 1:4; 1 Pet 1:20) expresses God's eternal purpose, 'before all things' (Col 1:17) declares Christ's pre-existence, and practical references locate events 'before the feast' (John 13:1) or 'before the winter' (2 Tim 4:21). The spatial sense appears in Acts 5:23 ('guards standing before the doors') and Acts 12:6 ('sentries before the door'), while James 5:12 uses it with the force 'above all.' The word also forms the first element of many compound verbs (proago, prolego, prographo). Spanish antes, French avant, and German vor render it with remarkable consistency.

before (47×) A preposition meaning 'before' in temporal, spatial, and metaphorical senses, governing the genitive. Temporal priority dominates: 'before the foundation of the world' (John 17:24; Eph 1:4), 'before all things' for Christ's pre-existence (Col 1:17), and 'before the feast of Passover' (John 13:1). Spatial use appears in 'before the door' (Acts 5:23; 12:6), and James 5:12 uses it for precedence ('above all'). Spanish antes, French avant, and German vor consistently map to this single prepositional sense across all 47 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Before, before | es: Antes, Antes-de, antes | fr: avant- | de: vor, vor- Matt 5:12; Matt 6:8; Matt 8:29; Matt 11:10; Matt 24:38

προάγω G4254 V-PIA-3P (20×)
To go before or lead the way; also to bring someone forward, or to precede in time.
Proago combines pro ('before') with ago ('lead'), yielding a verb that moves in front – spatially, causally, or temporally. Its most vivid NT use is the star that 'went before' the Magi (Matt 2:9) and Jesus going ahead of his disciples into Galilee (Matt 26:32; Mark 14:28). In Acts it takes a transitive turn: guards bring Peter forward, a jailer leads Paul out (Acts 12:6; 16:30). The Pastoral Epistles extend the image to time, speaking of prophecies that 'preceded' about Timothy (1 Tim 1:18) and a former commandment set aside (Heb 7:18).

1. go before, lead the way (13×) To go ahead spatially, leading the way or walking in front of others. The star over Bethlehem proegein the Magi (Matt 2:9); crowds go before Jesus into Jerusalem (Matt 21:9); Jesus promises to proago his disciples into Galilee after the resurrection (Matt 26:32). Spanish 'ir delante' and German 'vorangehen' both capture the forward-motion image. This is the most frequent sense, appearing thirteen times. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: I-will-go-before, are-going-before, going-ahead | es: iba-delante-de, ir-delante, iré-delante-de | fr: précéder | de: geht-voraus, vorangehen Matt 2:9; Matt 14:22; Matt 21:9; Matt 21:31; Matt 26:32

2. bring forward, lead out (4×) To bring someone forward or lead them out, acting transitively upon a person. In Acts 12:6, Herod is about to 'bring forth' Peter; in Acts 16:30 the jailer 'leads out' Paul and Silas. Spanish shifts from 'ir delante' to 'sacar' (to take out), revealing the transitive force. Acts 25:26 uses it for presenting a prisoner before an assembly. Four occurrences carry this causative nuance. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: I-brought-forward, having-brought, to-bring-forth | es: lo-traje, sacando, sacar | fr: précéder | de: geht-voraus Acts 12:6; Acts 16:30; Acts 17:5; Acts 25:26

3. precede temporally (3×) To precede in time or logical order, referring to something prior. First Timothy 1:18 recalls prophecies that 'went before' concerning Timothy, and Hebrews 7:18 speaks of a preceding commandment being set aside. Spanish 'precedente' and English 'preceding' both mark the temporal shift. This sense appears three times, always in epistolary argument about what came first. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: going-before, of-preceding, preceding | es: de-precedente, precedentes, precediendo | fr: précéder | de: vorangehen 1Tim 1:18; 1Tim 5:24; Heb 7:18

προαιρ-έω G4255 V-RIM-3S (1×)
to purpose, resolve beforehand; to determine or decide in advance
This compound verb means to choose or decide beforehand, to form a prior purpose or resolve. In 2 Corinthians 9:7, Paul instructs that each person should give as he has purposed in his heart—a deliberate, premeditated decision rather than impulsive or coerced giving. The term emphasizes intentionality and personal determination. Christian generosity should flow from considered conviction, not external pressure or emotional manipulation.

(1×) The deliberate decision-making Paul commends in 2 Corinthians 9:7 regarding financial giving. Each person should give 'as he has purposed in his heart'—a considered, intentional resolve rather than impulsive reaction. Multilingual evidence shows purpose/decision vocabulary ('he-has-purposed', 'ha-propuesto', 'préméditer', 'vorher-waehlen'). Paul contrasts this thoughtful intentionality with reluctant or compelled giving, celebrating cheerful generosity that flows from personal conviction. PLACING AND LAYING en: he-has-purposed | es: ha-propuesto | fr: préméditer | de: vorher-waehlen 2Cor 9:7

προαιτιάομαι G4256 V-AIM-1P (1×)
to charge beforehand, accuse previously; to make a prior accusation
This compound verb means to accuse or charge beforehand, to make a prior allegation. In Romans 3:9, Paul asks whether Jews have any advantage, answering that he has already charged (accused beforehand) that both Jews and Greeks are all under sin. The 'beforehand' refers to his previous argumentation in chapters 1-2 where he established universal human sinfulness. The term emphasizes that this indictment isn't new but already demonstrated.

(1×) Paul's prior accusation in Romans 3:9 that all humanity—both Jews and Gentiles—stands under sin's condemnation. The verb's 'beforehand' quality points to his previous argumentation in Romans 1-2. Multilingual glosses emphasize the prior accusation ('we-already-charged', 'ya-hemos-acusado', 'accuser-d'avance', 'vorher-beschuldigen'). Paul reminds readers he's already established this universal indictment, now drawing the conclusion that all equally need God's righteousness through faith. ACCUSE BRING CHARGES
en: we-already-charged | es: ya-hemos-acusado | fr: accuser-d'avance | de: vorher-beschuldigen Rom 3:9

προακούω G4257 V-AIA-2P (1×) to hear beforehand or previously; to receive advance notice
This compound verb means to hear beforehand or in advance, to receive prior notice or report. In Colossians 1:5, Paul references the hope laid up in heaven 'which you heard before in the word of truth.' The Colossians received this gospel message previously, and Paul now reminds them of what they already know. The 'beforehand' emphasizes the gospel's prior arrival and their existing knowledge, which should anchor them against false teaching.

(1×) The prior hearing of the gospel referenced in Colossians 1:5—the Colossians 'heard before' about their heavenly hope through the word of truth. Paul reminds them of the gospel they already received from Epaphras. Multilingual evidence emphasizes the temporal priority ('you-heard-before', 'oísteis-antes', 'vorher-hoeren'). This prior, authentic gospel proclamation should anchor them against the novel false teachings now threatening the church. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: you-heard-before | es: oísteis-antes | fr: προηκούσατε | de: vorher-hoeren Col 1:5

προαμαρτάνω G4258 V-RPA-GMP (2×)
to sin beforehand, to sin previously or earlier
A verb meaning to sin previously, to have sinned before a certain point. Paul uses it about the Corinthians who had fallen into certain sins and not repented. He warns that when he comes again, he will not spare 'those who sinned before' (2 Cor 12:21; 13:2)—those who previously fell into sin and remained unrepentant. The prefix 'pro-' marks prior action—these are sins committed earlier, before Paul's upcoming visit. His concern is not first-time offenders but those who have persisted in sin despite previous warning, refusing to repent.

(2×) To have sinned previously or beforehand, describing Corinthian believers who fell into immorality and remained unrepentant despite warning. Paul's two uses (2 Cor 12:21; 13:2) refer to the same group—'those who sinned before and have not repented' of impurity, sexual immorality, and sensuality. The 'pro-' prefix marks temporal priority: these are prior sins, committed earlier but not abandoned. The concern is ongoing rebellion—not a single failure but persistent sin without repentance, requiring strong apostolic discipline when Paul arrives. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION
en: having-sinned-before | es: antes-han-pecado, que-antes-han-pecado | fr: pécher-d'avance | de: vorher-suendigen 2Cor 12:21; 2Cor 13:2

προαύλ-ιον G4259 N-ANS (1×)
gateway, vestibule, forecourt; an entrance area or porch
This diminutive term denotes an entrance area, vestibule, or forecourt—the space before the main court or building. In Mark 14:68, Peter retreats to the gateway or forecourt after the first denial. Ancient architecture featured such transitional spaces between the street and interior courtyards. Peter's movement to this in-between space reflects his ambiguous position—no longer boldly inside with Jesus, but not yet completely outside in full denial.

(1×) The gateway or vestibule where Peter retreats in Mark 14:68 after his first denial of Christ. This transitional space between street and courtyard becomes the setting for Peter's wavering. Multilingual glosses identify the entrance structure ('gateway', 'portal', 'vestibule', 'Vorhof'). Peter's physical location mirrors his spiritual state—neither fully inside (with Jesus) nor fully outside, occupying an ambiguous middle ground as denial unfolds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: gateway | es: portal | fr: vestibule | de: Vorhof Mark 14:68

προβαίνω G4260 V-APA-NMS (5×)
To go forward, advance; to progress in age or in physical movement, especially 'advanced in years.'
A verb meaning to step forward or advance, composed of πρό (forward) + βαίνω (to go). In the NT, this word appears in two distinct contexts. In Matt 4:21 and Mark 1:19, Jesus 'goes on' from one pair of fishermen to find another — simple spatial movement. But in Luke 1:7, 1:18, and 2:36, the word combines with ἡμέρα (days) to form the idiom 'advanced in days,' meaning elderly. The Spanish 'avanzada/avanzados' and German 'weitergehen' both reflect this dual sense of forward progression in space and time.

(5×) To go forward or advance, whether in physical space or in the passage of time. Two usage patterns appear in the NT: spatial movement, where Jesus 'went on further' along the shore of Galilee to call James and John (Matt 4:21; Mark 1:19), and temporal advancement, where the idiom προβεβηκότες ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ('advanced in their days') describes the aged Zechariah and Elizabeth (Luke 1:7, 18) and the prophetess Anna (Luke 2:36). The Spanish 'avanzada' and French 'avancer' both cover the progression sense, while the German 'weitergehen' emphasizes the spatial going-onward. The temporal idiom parallels the Hebrew בָּא בַּיָּמִים (come into the days), connecting this Greek expression to Semitic age descriptions. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: advanced, going-on, having-gone-on | es: avanzada, avanzados, avanzando | fr: avancer | de: weitergehen, προβεβηκυῖα, προβεβηκότες Matt 4:21; Mark 1:19; Luke 1:7; Luke 1:18; Luke 2:36

προβάλλω G4261 V-APA-GMP (2×)
to put forward, thrust forward, or propose; to sprout or shoot forth
A verb meaning to put or thrust forward, to propose, or (of plants) to put forth shoots or buds. In Luke 21:30, Jesus uses the literal botanical sense: 'when they now sprout leaves, you see for yourselves and know that summer is near'—trees budding signal seasonal change. In Acts 19:33, the Jews 'put forward Alexander' from the crowd—they thrust him to the front, perhaps to dissociate themselves from the silversmiths' riot or to speak in defense. The word emphasizes forward motion—pushing ahead, whether plant growth or human positioning.

(2×) To put forth (of plants) or put forward (of persons). In Jesus' parable, fig trees 'put forth' buds—visible new growth signaling summer's approach, a natural sign teaching spiritual alertness. In Acts, Jews 'put forward' Alexander—pushing him to the front of the mob, likely to speak or clarify their position amid the riot. The French 'pousser' (push) captures both: plants pushing out new growth, people pushing someone forward. The common thread is forward motion, whether organic sprouting or deliberate positioning. THROWING AND CASTING en: having-put-forward, they-put-forth | es: brotan, empujando | fr: pousser, proposer | de: προβάλωσιν, προβαλόντων Luke 21:30; Acts 19:33

προβᾰτ-ικός G4262 Adj-DFS (1×) pertaining to sheep; specifically, the Sheep Gate in Jerusalem
This adjective means 'relating to sheep,' but in New Testament usage it specifically identifies the Sheep Gate in Jerusalem. In John 5:2, the pool of Bethesda is located near the Sheep Gate, a city gate through which sheep were brought for Temple sacrifice. The name evokes the sacrificial system central to Jewish worship. John's geographic precision anchors Jesus' healing ministry in Jerusalem's topography while the gate's name subtly foreshadows His sacrificial mission.

(1×) The Sheep Gate near which the pool of Bethesda stood in John 5:2. This Jerusalem gate served as the entry point for sheep destined for Temple sacrifice. Multilingual glosses identify the gate ('sheep-gate', 'de-ovejas', 'des-brebis', 'Schaftor'). The location is theologically suggestive—Jesus performs healing near the gate associated with sacrificial lambs, foreshadowing His own role as the Lamb of God who takes away sin. LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: sheep-gate | es: de-ovejas | fr: des-brebis | de: Schaftor John 5:2

πρόβᾰτον G4263 N-NNP (39×)
sheep — a domesticated ovine animal; in the NT, a pervasive figure for God's people under pastoral care Probaton ('sheep') appears 39 times in the New Testament and ranks among its most theologically loaded animal terms. Rooted in classical Greek where it could denote any four-footed livestock, by the Koine period it had narrowed almost exclusively to sheep. Jesus identifies himself as the Good Shepherd whose sheep 'hear my voice' and 'follow me' (John 10:1-27), and he sends the disciples 'to the lost sheep of the house of Israel' (Matt 10:6; 15:24). The metaphor of vulnerability is equally prominent: 'I send you out as sheep among wolves' (Matt 10:16), and the scattered crowd moves Jesus to compassion because they are 'like sheep without a shepherd' (Matt 9:36, echoing Num 27:17). The eschatological separation of sheep from goats at the final judgment (Matt 25:32-33) gives probaton its ultimate evaluative force. Paul quotes 'we are considered as sheep for the slaughter' (Rom 8:36, from Ps 44:22).

sheep (39×) A domesticated sheep, used both literally (the Temple market's sacrificial animals driven out by Jesus, John 2:14-15; the sabbath rescue scenario, Matt 12:11-12) and in sustained metaphorical systems: believers as the shepherd's flock (John 10:1-27; 21:16-17), the lost and scattered (Matt 9:36; 10:6; 15:24; 18:12; Mark 6:34), those sent into danger (Matt 10:16), and the righteous separated from goats at the final judgment (Matt 25:32-33). The quotation from Psalm 44:22 — 'as sheep for the slaughter' (Rom 8:36) — extends the metaphor into martyrdom theology. Spanish 'ovejas,' French 'brebis,' and German 'Schafe' confirm a single semantic referent without distinction between literal and figurative uses. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: sheep | es: ovejas | fr: brebis | de: Schaf, Schafe Matt 7:15; Matt 9:36; Matt 10:6; Matt 10:16; Matt 12:11

προβῐ́β-άζω G4264 V-APP-NFS (1×)

to incite, instigate, put forward; to urge someone to action

This verb means to push forward, instigate, or incite someone to action, often with the sense of prompting from behind. In Matthew 14:8, Herodias' daughter, 'prompted by her mother,' asks for John the Baptist's head. The term suggests manipulation—the girl didn't originate this request but was coached or instigated by her vengeful mother. The verb captures the behind-the-scenes instigation that led to John's execution.

(1×) The prompting or instigation of Herodias' daughter in Matthew 14:8 when she requests John the Baptist's head. She didn't conceive this horrific request independently but was 'prompted by her mother.' Multilingual glosses show various approaches ('having-been-prompted', 'habiendo-sido-instruida', 'pousser'), but all convey external instigation. The term exposes Herodias' manipulation, using her daughter as the instrument of vengeance against John who condemned her unlawful marriage. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: having-been-prompted | es: habiendo-sido-instruida | fr: pousser | de: προβιβασθεῖσα Matt 14:8

προβλέπω G4265 V-APM-GMS (1×)

to foresee, provide beforehand, or make provision in advance for something to come

This verb captures the dual sense of looking ahead—both mentally (foreseeing what will happen) and practically (making provision for it). In classical usage it meant to foresee events or to provide against future needs. The single New Testament occurrence (Hebrews 11:40) uses the middle voice in a theological context: God having foreseen or provided something better concerning us, ensuring that the Old Testament saints would not be made perfect apart from the new covenant community.

(1×) The multilingual evidence converges on the temporal aspect of priority (German/French 'voraussehen,' Spanish 'previsto'). Hebrews 11:40 speaks of God's providential foresight in planning redemptive history so that all generations would share in the same perfection through Christ. The middle voice emphasizes God's personal involvement in this advance provision. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: having-foreseen | es: habiendo-previsto | fr: voraussehen | de: voraussehen Heb 11:40

προγίγνομαι G4266 V-RPA-GNP (1×)

to happen or exist previously, to be done or committed beforehand

A compound verb indicating prior occurrence or existence. While classical Greek used it broadly for things that happened before (previous events, earlier generations, past wars), Paul's use in Romans 3:25 is forensically precise: speaking of sins previously committed before Christ's atoning work. The translations across languages emphasize the temporal priority—these were transgressions that had already occurred in the time before the cross, which God had passed over in his forbearance until the revelation of righteousness in Christ.

(1×) The cross-linguistic signature shows 'previously' and 'beforehand' as the core meaning (Spanish 'cometidos anteriormente,' French 'précédent,' German 'vorher geschehen'). Paul's argument in Romans 3:25 depends on this temporal distinction: God's righteousness is demonstrated by dealing with past sins through Christ's sacrifice, showing divine forbearance was not indifference but purposeful delay until the appointed time. TIME AND SEASONS

en: previously-committed | es: cometidos-anteriormente | fr: précédent | de: vorher-geschehen Rom 3:25

προγιγνώσκω G4267 V-RPM/P-GMS (5×)

To foreknow, know beforehand; God's prior knowledge and relational choosing of persons or events before they unfold.

A verb meaning to know in advance, formed from πρό (before) + γινώσκω (to know). In theological usage, it carries the weight of divine foreknowledge — not mere prediction but relational, elective knowing. Romans 8:29 declares that those God 'foreknew' he also predestined, where the knowing is personal and purposive. Romans 11:2 asserts God has not rejected the people he 'foreknew.' In 1 Peter 1:20, Christ himself was 'foreknown' before the foundation of the world. The Spanish 'conocido-de-antemano' (known-in-advance) and German 'vorherkennen' (to know beforehand) both preserve the compound structure.

(5×) To foreknow or know in advance — used of both divine and human prior knowledge, though the NT overwhelmingly applies it to God's sovereign knowing. In Rom 8:29, God's foreknowing initiates the entire chain of salvation (foreknew → predestined → called → justified → glorified), suggesting a personal, elective relationship rather than bare cognitive awareness. Rom 11:2 reassures that God has not cast off the people he foreknew. First Peter 1:20 reaches back before creation: Christ was foreknown before the world's foundation. The two human uses are instructive: Acts 26:5 (Jews who 'knew Paul beforehand') and 2 Pet 3:17 ('you, knowing these things beforehand'). The German 'vorherkennen' and French 'connaître-d'avance' both mirror the Greek compound's before-knowing structure. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES en: foreknown, he-foreknew, knowing-beforehand | es: conocido-de-antemano, conociéndome, conoció-de-antemano | fr: connaître-d'avance, vorherkennen | de: vorherkennen, προγινώσκοντές Acts 26:5; Rom 8:29; Rom 11:2; 1Pet 1:20; 2Pet 3:17

πρό-γνωσις G4268 N-DFS (2×)

foreknowledge, prior knowledge, or predetermined knowledge

A noun meaning foreknowledge—knowledge possessed beforehand, prior awareness or determination. Peter uses it twice in crucial theological contexts. In Acts 2:23, Jesus was 'delivered up according to the definite plan and foreknowledge of God'—His crucifixion was no accident but part of God's predetermined plan, known and purposed before it occurred. In 1 Peter 1:2, believers are 'elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father'—chosen based on God's prior knowledge and purpose. The word emphasizes God's sovereign knowledge and planning before events unfold in time.

(2×) God's foreknowledge or prior knowledge, His awareness and purpose existing before events occur in time. In Acts, Christ's death happened 'according to foreknowledge'—not despite God's plan but precisely within it, predetermined yet executed by responsible human agents. In 1 Peter, election happens 'according to foreknowledge'—God's choosing based on His prior knowledge and sovereign purpose. The French 'prescience' and Spanish 'presciencia' preserve the temporal priority: knowledge existing before, grounding both the plan of redemption and individual election in divine foreordination. KNOWING AND LEARNING

en: foreknowledge | es: presciencia | fr: prescience, πρόγνωσιν | de: Vorkenntnis, προγνώσει Acts 2:23; 1Pet 1:2

πρόγον-ος G4269 N-GMP (2×)

an ancestor, forefather, or progenitor; one born before, from an earlier generation

A noun meaning ancestor, forefather, or progenitor—someone from a previous generation, especially the founding or early generations of a family or people. Paul uses it in pastoral contexts about honoring family heritage. In 1 Timothy 5:4, widows with children or grandchildren should be cared for by family, 'repaying their parents' or 'ancestors'—honoring those who raised them. In 2 Timothy 1:3, Paul serves God 'as did my ancestors'—he worships the same God his forefathers served, continuing their faithful legacy. The word emphasizes generational continuity and inherited faith or obligation.

(2×) Ancestors or forefathers, marking generational continuity and family obligation. In 1 Timothy, children should 'repay their ancestors'—care for parents and grandparents who raised them, fulfilling familial duty across generations. In 2 Timothy, Paul's service of God follows the pattern of 'my ancestors'—he worships the God of his fathers with a clear conscience, continuing the faith tradition. The French 'ancêtres' and Spanish 'antepasados' capture the generational thread: those who came before, whose legacy and care create obligations for those who follow. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS

en: ancestors | es: antepasados, progenitores | fr: προγόνοις, προγόνων | de: Vorfahre 1Tim 5:4; 2Tim 1:3

προγράφω G4270 V-RPM/P-NMP (4×)

Write beforehand; set forth publicly in writing, designate or portray openly in advance.

Carries two interrelated senses rooted in the idea of prior or public writing. Paul tells the Galatians that Christ crucified was 'publicly portrayed' before their eyes (Gal 3:1), drawing on the classical meaning of posting a public notice. In Romans 15:4, whatever was 'written beforehand' serves for instruction. Ephesians 3:3 refers to what Paul 'wrote before' in the same letter. Jude 1:4 describes persons 'designated long ago' for judgment. The word always implies a prior, authoritative inscription that shapes the present.

(4×) Write beforehand or set forth publicly in writing – either temporal priority (written earlier) or public proclamation. Gal 3:1 uses the vivid image of Christ crucified being 'publicly placarded' before the Galatians' eyes, drawing on the classical sense of posting a public notice. Rom 15:4 points to Scripture 'written in advance' for believers' instruction. Eph 3:3 refers to a previous written communication, and Jude 1:4 describes persons 'written about long ago' in prophetic warning. Spanish 'escribir de antemano' and German 'vorher aufschreiben' both emphasize the temporal dimension. The public-proclamation nuance in Galatians reveals how writing and display merge in ancient civic culture. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: I-wrote-before, having-been-written-about, was-publicly-portrayed | es: escribí-antes, escritos-de-antemano, fue-descrito-antes | fr: vorher-schreiben, écrire-d'avance, écrits-d'avance | de: vorher-aufgeschriebenen, vorherschreiben Rom 15:4; Gal 3:1; Eph 3:3; Jude 1:4

πρόδηλ-ος G4271 Adj-NNS (3×)

evident, manifest, clearly visible beforehand or in plain sight

This adjective describes what is clearly visible, obvious, or manifest—either in advance or in plain view. Classical usage emphasized both foresight and conspicuousness. The New Testament uses it to describe sins or good works that are already evident before final judgment. The term carries a sense of clarity that makes concealment impossible.

(3×) Describes moral realities that are already manifest and obvious. First Timothy 5:24 states that 'the sins of some people are evident, going before them to judgment.' The next verse (5:25) adds that 'good works are also evident, and those that are not cannot remain hidden.' Hebrews 7:14 notes 'it is evident that our Lord descended from Judah.' The Spanish 'evidente' and 'manifiestas/manifiestos,' French 'manifeste,' and German 'offenbar' all capture the sense of conspicuous clarity. This word describes realities so clear they precede investigation or resist concealment. MANIFEST AND EVIDENT

en: evident | es: evidente, manifiestas, manifiestos | fr: manifeste | de: offenbar 1Tim 5:24; 1Tim 5:25; Heb 7:14

προδίδωμι G4272 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to give beforehand, to give first or in advance, to bestow prior to receiving

This compound verb intensifies the basic sense of 'give' with the prefix indicating temporal priority. Classical usage ranged from paying in advance to giving first before others. Paul's rhetorical question in Romans 11:35 quotes Job 41:11, challenging any notion that humans could put God in their debt by giving to him first. The verb underscores the impossibility of human merit establishing a claim on divine grace—God is never the debtor, always the original giver.

(1×) Every translation captures the priority element ('gave beforehand,' 'dio primero,' 'donner d'abord,' 'vorher übergeben'). In Romans 11:35, Paul uses this verb to demolish any works-righteousness: since no one has given to God first, no one can demand repayment. All human giving is at best response to prior divine generosity, never the initiating move that creates obligation. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: gave-beforehand | es: dio-primero | fr: donner-d'abord | de: vorher-uebergeben Rom 11:35

προ-δότης G4273 N-NMS (3×)

betrayer, traitor; one who hands over or abandons another in danger

This noun denotes a betrayer or traitor—someone who hands over another person or abandons them in a moment of danger. Classical Greek used it for political traitors and those who violated oaths. The New Testament applies it both to Judas Iscariot specifically and to the general character of betrayers. It carries strong moral condemnation.

(3×) Identifies those who betray others, particularly in contexts of moral failing and persecution. Luke 6:16 identifies 'Judas Iscariot, who became a traitor.' Acts 7:52 asks which prophet the ancestors did not persecute, calling them 'betrayers and murderers' of the Righteous One. Second Timothy 3:4 lists 'traitors' among the characteristics of people in the last days. The Spanish 'traidor/traidores,' French 'traître,' and German 'Verräter' all emphasize the grave moral failing. This term marks both Judas's specific betrayal of Jesus and the broader pattern of those who abandon or hand over the righteous to their enemies. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: a-traitor, betrayers, traitors | es: traidor, traidores | fr: traître | de: Verraeter, προδόται, προδότης Luke 6:16; Acts 7:52; 2Tim 3:4

πρόδρομ-ος G4274 Adj-NMS (1×)

forerunner, one who runs ahead or goes before to prepare the way

Originally used of advance cavalry scouts or fast ships sent ahead of a fleet, this term carried the image of someone blazing the trail for others to follow. Classical Greek applied it to horsemen riding before an army, to morning stars heralding the sun, even to early figs appearing before the main crop. Hebrews 6:20 applies it to Jesus entering the heavenly sanctuary as our forerunner, the first to enter on behalf of those who will follow—a pioneering priest opening access for all who come after him.

(1×) The translations uniformly preserve the 'before-running' imagery (Spanish 'precursor,' French 'précurseur,' German 'Vorläufer'). The author of Hebrews uses this vivid metaphor to assure believers that Jesus has already entered the presence of God for us, securing access that we will follow. Unlike the Jewish high priest who entered alone and temporarily, Jesus enters as the permanent forerunner, guaranteeing our eventual arrival. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: forerunner | es: precursor | fr: précurseur | de: Vorlaeufer Heb 6:20

προεῖδον G4275
to foresee, look ahead, see beforehand; to perceive what is coming or take thought for future needs
This aorist verb (with προοράω used for the present tense) means to see beforehand or foresee. In Homer it could mean literally catching sight of something ahead, while in later usage it developed the sense of foreseeing future events or taking precautionary thought. The middle voice often carried the nuance of taking thought for one's own interests or making provision for what lies ahead. In prophetic contexts, it could refer to divinely inspired foresight or the ability to anticipate consequences before they unfold.

προελπίζω G4276 V-RPA-AMP (1×) to hope beforehand, to be the first to hope or to have already placed one's hope
A compound verb combining hope with temporal priority. Classical usage meant to anticipate or expect something. In Ephesians 1:12, Paul likely refers to Jewish believers who had hoped in Messiah before Gentiles were included, or possibly to all who had already come to hope in Christ prior to the letter being written. The perfect tense emphasizes a hope already established and continuing. The phrase captures the privilege of being among the first to recognize and trust in God's promises fulfilled in Christ.

(1×) The multilingual glosses emphasize the temporal aspect ('having hoped before,' 'que antes esperamos,' 'vorher hoffen'). Whether Paul means Jewish priority in the salvation timeline or simply those who had already become believers, the verb stresses that some had already fixed their hope on Christ, becoming the vanguard of a much larger community of hope that would eventually span all nations. HOPE AND EXPECTATION en: having-hoped-before | es: que-antes-esperamos | fr: προηλπικότας | de: vorher-hoffen Eph 1:12

προεῖπον G4277 V-AIA-3S (1×)
to foretell, to say beforehand, to declare or proclaim in advance
This aorist form functioned where προλέγω had no present tense, meaning to speak beforehand with emphasis on public declaration or prophetic announcement. Classical usage included foretelling future events and making public proclamations. In Acts 1:16, Peter refers to how Scripture foretold Judas's betrayal—the Holy Spirit through David's mouth spoke beforehand about what would happen. The verb underscores the prophetic nature of Old Testament texts that anticipated events in Christ's ministry.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'foretelling' as primary (Spanish 'predijo,' French 'prédire'). Peter's argument in Acts 1:16 depends on recognizing Davidic psalms as prophetic foretellings, not merely historical laments. The Scripture 'foretold' by the Spirit means the betrayal was neither accident nor divine afterthought, but anticipated and declared in advance within God's redemptive plan. FOREWARN FORETELL en: foretold | es: predijo | fr: prédire | de: προεῖπεν Acts 1:16

προεν-άρχομαι G4278 V-AIM-3S (2×)
to begin before, to start previously or earlier
A verb meaning to begin beforehand, to make a start earlier. Paul uses it twice regarding the Corinthians' collection for Jerusalem. Titus had 'begun before' to organize this grace-gift (2 Cor 8:6), and the Corinthians themselves had started 'a year ago' and now should 'complete what you began before' (2 Cor 8:10). The prefix 'pro-' marks prior beginning—you made a start earlier, now finish what you began. The word emphasizes initial action that needs completion, early enthusiasm that must follow through to fulfillment.

(2×) To begin beforehand or previously, describing both Titus's earlier organization of the collection and the Corinthians' initial commitment. Paul reminds them they 'began before' with eagerness a year ago—early starters whose initial enthusiasm needs to translate into completion. The 'pro-' prefix emphasizes temporal priority: you were ahead, you started first, you took initiative early. Now consistency is needed—finish what you began before. The French 'commencer avant' and German 'vorher beginnen' preserve the sequence: prior beginning creating obligation to complete. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: began-before, he-began-before | es: comenzasteis-antes, comenzó-antes | fr: commencer-avant | de: vorher-beginnen 2Cor 8:6; 2Cor 8:10

προεπ-αγγέλλω G4279 V-AIM-3S (2×)
to promise beforehand, to announce or pledge in advance
A verb meaning to promise beforehand, to make a prior announcement or pledge. Paul uses it of God's gospel promises. In Romans 1:2, the gospel was 'promised beforehand through his prophets in the holy Scriptures'—the good news wasn't a new revelation but had been pledged in advance through Old Testament prophets. In 2 Corinthians 9:5, Paul asks the Corinthians to prepare the gift 'promised beforehand'—their previously announced generous contribution. The prefix 'pro-' marks prior announcement; what's now occurring was pledged or announced earlier.

(2×) To promise or announce beforehand, whether God's gospel promises through prophets or the Corinthians' pledged gift. In Romans, the gospel was 'promised beforehand' in the Scriptures—not a surprise but the fulfillment of long-standing divine pledges through the prophets. In 2 Corinthians, the collection was 'promised beforehand'—the Corinthians had already announced their intention to give generously. The French 'promettre d'avance' and Spanish 'prometió de antemano' emphasize temporal sequence: promise made earlier, now requiring fulfillment or recognition. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES en: he-promised-beforehand, previously-promised | es: prometida-antes, prometió-de-antemano | fr: promettre-d'avance | de: vorher-verheissen Rom 1:2; 2Cor 9:5

προερέω G4280
to say beforehand, foretell, announce in advance; to declare or command publicly ahead of time
This verb means to speak beforehand or in advance, with two main applications in classical and biblical Greek. First, it can mean prophetic foretelling or warning about future events, as when oracles or prophets announced what would come. Second, it carried the administrative sense of publicly ordering or prescribing something in advance, such as military commanders ordering troops to assemble or officials declaring regulations. The passive voice often indicated what had been previously stated or prescribed. New Testament writers used it for prophetic declarations fulfilled in Christ.

προέρχομαι G4281 V-APA-NMP (9×)
To go ahead, advance, or proceed before others; to go forward in space or time.
Describes the act of going on ahead of a group or advancing beyond a current position. In the Gospels, Jesus 'went forward a little' to pray alone in Gethsemane (Matt 26:39, Mark 14:35), crowds ran ahead to meet him (Mark 6:33), and Judas went before the arresting party (Luke 22:47). Luke 1:17 uses it prophetically of John the Baptist going 'before' the Lord in the spirit of Elijah. Spanish 'adelantándose' (getting ahead of oneself) and German 'vorausgehen' (go ahead) both capture the spatial priority that is the word's core meaning, while French 'aller devant' (go before) underscores the relational dimension — ahead of someone.

go ahead, go before (9×) To go on ahead, advance before others, or proceed forward — whether physically traveling in front of a group or going before someone in a preparatory or anticipatory sense. In narrative contexts, it describes Jesus withdrawing ahead to pray (Matt 26:39, Mark 14:35), crowds running ahead to the destination (Mark 6:33), and Judas leading the arrest party (Luke 22:47). Prophetically, it describes the forerunner ministry: John going 'before' the Lord (Luke 1:17). In Acts, it captures companions traveling ahead to the next stop (Acts 12:10, 20:5, 20:13). Spanish 'adelantándose' and French 'aller devant' together highlight both the spatial and relational aspects of precedence. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: going-forward, having-gone-ahead, having-gone-forward | es: adelantándose, avanzaron, habiendo-avanzado | fr: aller-devant, aller-en-avant | de: geht-voraus, vorangehen Matt 26:39; Mark 6:33; Mark 14:35; Luke 1:17; Luke 22:47

προετοιμ-άζω G4282 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to prepare beforehand, to make ready in advance

A verb meaning to prepare beforehand, to get ready in advance. Paul uses it theologically about God's sovereign preparation. In Romans 9:23, God prepared beforehand 'vessels of mercy... for glory'—those whom He would save were objects of advance preparation, readied for future glory. In Ephesians 2:10, believers are created in Christ Jesus 'for good works, which God prepared beforehand, that we should walk in them'—even our good works were planned and prepared in advance by God. The word emphasizes divine forethought and sovereign preparation preceding human action or experience.

(2×) To prepare in advance, describing God's sovereign preparation both of people (vessels of mercy) and plans (good works). In Romans, 'prepared beforehand for glory' marks election—God's advance preparation of those He would save. In Ephesians, 'prepared beforehand' describes the good works God planned for redeemed people to walk in—even our obedience fulfills His prior preparation. The German 'vorher bereiten' and French 'préparer' capture divine initiative: God prepares in advance, His sovereign planning preceding and enabling human experience and action. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: he-prepared-beforehand, prepared-beforehand | es: preparó-de-antemano | fr: préparer, vorher-bereiten | de: vorher-bereiten Rom 9:23; Eph 2:10

προευ-αγγελίζομαι G4283 V-AIM-3S (1×)

to announce good news beforehand, to preach the gospel in advance

A powerful compound joining 'gospel' with 'beforehand.' Paul uses it in Galatians 3:8 to describe how Scripture itself preached the gospel to Abraham when God promised that all nations would be blessed in him. This striking verb personifies Scripture as a gospel preacher and identifies the Abrahamic promise as already containing the gospel message—justification by faith for all peoples. It collapses the distance between Old Testament promise and New Testament fulfillment.

(1×) The translations struggle to capture this dense compound ('proclaimed beforehand,' 'preevangelizó'). Paul's brilliant use makes Scripture the advance herald of good news, showing that the gospel of faith-righteousness for Gentiles was not a late innovation but announced to Abraham centuries before. The promise to the patriarch was itself gospel-preaching, making faith—not law—the pathway to blessing from the very beginning. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES

en: proclaimed-beforehand | es: preevangelizó | fr: προευηγγελίσατο | de: vorher-das-Evangelium-verkuendigen Gal 3:8

προέχω G4284 V-PIM/P-1P (1×)

to excel, to have advantage, to be better off or hold before oneself

A verb with nuanced meanings from 'hold before' to 'excel' or 'have advantage.' Classical usage included holding something out for protection, putting forward as pretext, or surpassing others. In Romans 3:9, Paul asks a disputed question: 'Do we have any advantage?' or possibly 'Are we worse off?' The middle voice and context both affect interpretation. Most likely Paul is asking whether Jews have advantage over Gentiles, then answering that both are equally under sin—Jewish privilege doesn't translate to moral superiority.

(1×) Translations diverge here ('are we better,' 'nos aventajamos,' 'surpasser,' 'voraus haben'), reflecting genuine interpretive difficulty. The middle voice could mean 'do we protect ourselves (with the law)?' or 'do we excel?' Paul's argument flows toward leveling Jew and Gentile under universal sinfulness, so the question about advantage sets up the negative answer: no one has moral high ground before God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12809 WITH 3 SENSES

en: are-we-better | es: nos-aventajamos | fr: surpasser | de: voraus-haben Rom 3:9

προηγ-έομαι G4285 V-PPM/P-NMP (1×)

to go before, to lead the way, to prefer or give priority to another in honor

Originally meaning to go first and lead, this verb developed a secondary sense of giving someone else precedence. Classical usage included guiding, forming the vanguard, or getting ahead of others. Paul's exhortation in Romans 12:10 uses it in the developed ethical sense: in brotherly love, outdo one another in showing honor—literally, going ahead of others in honoring them, competing to give priority to fellow believers rather than seeking it for yourself. It transforms leadership imagery into mutual deference.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows both 'going before' and 'preferring' (Spanish 'prefiriendo,' French 'préférer,' German 'vorangehen'). Paul turns the natural desire to go first into a Christian virtue: race to honor others before they honor you, lead the way in esteeming your siblings in Christ. The competitive spirit is redirected from self-promotion to mutual elevation. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: preferring | es: prefiriendo | fr: préférer | de: vorangehen Rom 12:10

πρόθεσις G4286 N-GFS (12×)

Purpose, deliberate resolve, or plan; also the setting forth of the showbread before God.

Built from the verb protithemi ('to set before'), this noun carries two quite distinct senses in the New Testament. Most frequently it denotes God's eternal purpose or a person's settled resolve: Paul speaks of God's prothesis that works all things according to the counsel of his will (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11; 2 Tim 1:9). The Spanish propósito and German Vorsatz both convey deliberate intention. In its older, more concrete sense the word refers to the ritual act of setting bread before God — the 'bread of the Presence' or showbread that David ate in his hour of need (Matt 12:4; Mark 2:26; Luke 6:4), and the table of showbread in the tabernacle (Heb 9:2). The two senses share the root image of placing something out front, whether a plan before the mind or loaves before the Lord.

1. purpose / resolve (8×) A deliberate purpose, plan, or resolve, whether divine or human. Predominantly used of God's eternal decree and predetermining counsel (Rom 8:28; 9:11; Eph 1:11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9), but also of human intention, as Barnabas urging the Antioch believers to remain faithful 'with purpose of heart' (Acts 11:23) and Paul's travel plans (Acts 27:13). Spanish propósito and French proposition capture the sense of a settled design placed before oneself. PURPOSE RESOLVE INTENT

en: purpose | es: propósito | fr: proposition | de: Vorsatz, προθέσει, προθέσεως Acts 11:23; Acts 27:13; Rom 8:28; Rom 9:11; Eph 1:11

2. setting forth / presentation (of bread) (4×) The act of setting forth or presenting, specifically the 'bread of the Presence' (showbread) laid on the sacred table in the tabernacle or temple. A cultic-ritual term appearing in the Synoptic accounts of David eating the consecrated bread (Matt 12:4; Mark 2:26; Luke 6:4) and in the description of the tabernacle furnishings (Heb 9:2). Spanish presentación/proposición preserves the concrete spatial nuance of placing something before God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: presentation | es: presentación, proposición | fr: proposition | de: Vorsatz, προθέσεως Matt 12:4; Mark 2:26; Luke 6:4; Heb 9:2

προθεσμ-ία G4287 N-GFS (1×)

appointed time, predetermined deadline, fixed date set beforehand

A legal and calendrical term referring to dates fixed in advance for payments, court actions, or other obligations. In Athenian law, missing the deadline meant forfeiting your case. Classical texts used it for natural periods (disease cycles), wedding dates, or any appointed time. Paul's illustration in Galatians 4:2 describes an heir under guardians until the date set by the father—the predetermined moment when childhood ends and inheritance begins. It pictures God's timeline for redemptive history, with Christ appearing at the appointed fullness of time.

(1×) The glosses emphasize predetermined timing ('appointed time,' 'fecha señalada,' 'bestimmte Zeit'). Paul's analogy depends on a father's legal right to set the date of maturity in advance. God similarly established beforehand the moment when the old covenant guardianship would end and the inheritance of sonship in Christ would be released. History moved toward a fixed appointment, not random occurrence. TIME AND SEASONS

en: appointed-time | es: fecha-señalada | fr: προθεσμίας | de: bestimmte-Zeit Gal 4:2

προθῡμ-ία G4288 N-GFS (5×)

Eagerness, readiness, willingness; wholehearted zeal and readiness to act, especially in giving generously.

A noun denoting eager willingness and enthusiastic readiness, derived from πρόθυμος (ready, eager). Four of its five NT occurrences appear in 2 Corinthians 8–9, where Paul praises the Macedonians' 'eagerness' in contributing to the collection for Jerusalem's poor. In Acts 17:11, the Bereans receive the word with all 'readiness' — examining the Scriptures daily. The Spanish 'prontitud' (promptness) and German 'Bereitwilligkeit' (ready-willingness) emphasize the volitional aspect, while the French 'empressement' (eagerness, haste) captures the emotional energy behind this readiness.

(5×) Eagerness or readiness of mind — a wholehearted willingness to engage or contribute. The concentration of uses in 2 Corinthians 8–9 ties this word firmly to the theology of generous giving: Paul commends the Corinthians' eager readiness (8:11–12, 19) and tells the Macedonians about it (9:2), creating a virtuous cycle of generosity. The principle in 8:12 is striking: 'if the eagerness is present, it is acceptable according to what one has.' In Acts 17:11, the Bereans' προθυμία drives their daily Scripture searching — intellectual eagerness, not just material generosity. The German 'Bereitwilligkeit' beautifully decomposes into 'ready-will-ness,' matching the Greek πρόθυμος (forward-spirited), while the French 'empressement' adds a sense of energetic haste. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: eagerness, readiness | es: prontitud | fr: empressement | de: Bereitwilligkeit, προθυμίας Acts 17:11; 2Cor 8:11; 2Cor 8:12; 2Cor 8:19; 2Cor 9:2

πρόθῡμος G4289 Adj-NNS (3×)

ready, willing, eager; disposed and prepared for action

This adjective describes readiness, willingness, and eagerness to act. Classical usage emphasized both mental disposition and active zeal. The New Testament uses it to contrast the willing spirit with weak flesh and to describe Paul's eagerness to preach the gospel. It conveys both inner disposition and outward readiness.

(3×) Describes the state of being willing, ready, or eager for action. In the parallel passages Matthew 26:41 and Mark 14:38, Jesus tells the disciples 'the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak.' Romans 1:15 expresses Paul's eagerness: 'I am ready to preach the gospel to you also who are in Rome.' The Spanish 'dispuesto,' French 'disposé,' and German 'bereitwillig' all capture the sense of willingness and readiness. This word addresses the gap between spiritual desire and physical capacity, or describes wholehearted readiness to fulfill a mission. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: eagerness, is-willing, willing | es: dispuesto | fr: disposé | de: bereitwillig, πρόθυμον Matt 26:41; Mark 14:38; Rom 1:15

πρόθῡμος G4290 Adv (1×)

eagerly, readily, willingly, with enthusiastic readiness and zeal

An adverb derived from πρόθυμος (ready, willing, eager), expressing the manner of enthusiastic willingness. Classical usage described actions done with zeal, readiness, or active devotion rather than reluctant compliance. Peter exhorts elders in 1 Peter 5:2 to shepherd God's flock not by compulsion but eagerly—with the willing enthusiasm that comes from love rather than the grudging performance of duty. The adverb captures the spirit that should characterize Christian service: not forced but freely chosen, not reluctant but genuinely eager.

(1×) The translations converge on readiness and willingness ('eagerly,' 'con prontitud,' 'bereitwillig'). Peter contrasts two modes of ministry: serving under constraint versus serving with eager readiness. The shepherd who serves προθύμως does so from inner desire rather than external pressure, making ministry a joy rather than a burden. This eager willingness becomes the mark of authentic pastoral care. MANNER ADVERBS

en: eagerly | es: con-prontitud | fr: προθύμως | de: bereitwillig 1Pet 5:2

προΐστημι G4291 V-RPA-NMP (8×)

To lead, manage, or preside over; to direct affairs with care and diligence.

A compound verb meaning literally 'to stand before,' proistemi carries the dual force of leading and caring. Paul uses it for church elders who 'preside' over the community (1 Thess 5:12; 1 Tim 5:17) and for household management as a qualification for overseers (1 Tim 3:4-5, 12). In Romans 12:8, it appears among spiritual gifts — the one who leads should do so with diligence. The Pastoral Epistles especially develop the parallel between governing a household well and governing God's church, making this verb a cornerstone of NT leadership vocabulary.

lead/manage/preside over (8×) To stand before others in a position of authority, managing, directing, or presiding over them with attentive care. Spanish 'presidiendo' and French 'presider' capture the formal governance aspect, while 'mantenerse' and German 'vorstehen' (to stand before) reflect the original spatial metaphor. Paul treats household management as the proving ground for ecclesial leadership: 'If someone does not know how to manage (proistemi) his own household, how will he care for God's church?' (1 Tim 3:5). In Rom 12:8, the participial form places leading alongside mercy and giving as a gift exercised 'with diligence.' RULING AND REIGNING

en: having-led, leading, managing | es: mantenerse, ocuparse, presidiendo | fr: présider, vorstehen | de: vorstehen Rom 12:8; 1Thess 5:12; 1Tim 3:4; 1Tim 3:5; 1Tim 3:12

προκαλ-έω G4292 V-PPM-NMP (1×)

to provoke, to challenge, to call forth for competition or confrontation

Originally used of calling someone out to fight or issuing a challenge to compete, this verb carried aggressive overtones. Classical texts used it for challenging to battle, to drinking contests, or to intellectual competition. Paul warns against this attitude in Galatians 5:26: don't provoke one another, don't issue challenges that spark rivalry and conflict. In a community that should be marked by Spirit-produced love, challenging others to prove themselves or compete breeds the discord that destroys unity.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the provocative sense ('provoking,' 'provocando,' 'herausfordern'). Paul identifies this challenging spirit as incompatible with life in the Spirit. Where the flesh operates, believers issue challenges and provoke one another to competition; where the Spirit leads, mutual service replaces rivalry. The middle voice suggests a self-interested challenging, seeking to prove superiority rather than build up the body. STIR UP INCITE

en: provoking | es: provocando | fr: προκαλούμενοι | de: herausfordern Gal 5:26

προκαταγγ-έλλω G4293 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to announce beforehand, to proclaim or declare in advance

A verb meaning to announce beforehand, to proclaim or declare in advance. Peter uses it twice in Acts about prophetic proclamation of Christ. In Acts 3:18, 'what God foretold by the mouth of all the prophets, that his Christ should suffer, he thus fulfilled'—the prophets announced in advance the Messiah's suffering. In Acts 7:52, Stephen asks which prophet the fathers didn't persecute, 'those who announced beforehand the coming of the Righteous One'—the prophets declared in advance the coming Messiah. The word emphasizes prior prophetic announcement, advance declaration of what God would do.

(2×) To announce or proclaim beforehand, describing the prophets' advance declaration of Christ's coming and suffering. In Acts 3, God 'announced beforehand' through all the prophets that Messiah would suffer—and this foreannouncement was fulfilled in Jesus. In Acts 7, the righteous prophets 'announced beforehand' the coming of the Righteous One—and were persecuted for it. The 'pro-' prefix marks temporal priority: proclamation made in advance, prophetic announcement preceding fulfillment, preparing people for what God would accomplish. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES

en: having-announced-beforehand, he-announced-beforehand | es: anunció-de-antemano, habiendo-anunciado-de-antemano | fr: annoncer-d'avance | de: προκατήγγειλεν, προκαταγγείλαντας Acts 3:18; Acts 7:52

προκαταρτ-ίζω G4294 V-ASA-3P (1×)

to prepare beforehand, to make ready in advance, to complete prior arrangements

A compound verb intensifying basic preparation with the sense of advance planning and readiness. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 9:5 regarding the collection for Jerusalem: he wants the Corinthians to prepare their gift beforehand so it will be ready when he arrives—a genuine generous gift, not something extracted under pressure at the last minute. Advance preparation demonstrates willing intentionality rather than reluctant compliance. The verb underscores thoughtful, prior commitment rather than hasty, coerced response.

(1×) The multilingual glosses emphasize prior preparation ('prepare beforehand,' 'preparen de antemano,' 'préparer d'avance,' 'vorher bereiten'). Paul's pastoral strategy recognizes that generosity needs cultivation—time to consider, plan, and prepare increases the likelihood of joyful giving. Requesting advance preparation protects both givers (from pressure) and receivers (from being seen as extorting), making the gift truly a blessing rather than an obligation grudgingly met. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES

en: prepare-beforehand | es: preparen-de-antemano | fr: préparer-d'avance | de: vorher-bereiten 2Cor 9:5

πρόκειμαι G4295 V-PIM/P-3S (5×)

To lie before, be set forth; to be present, available, or publicly displayed, used of goals, examples, and moral choices.

A verb meaning to lie before or be set before someone — to be present, available, or publicly displayed. It functions as the passive of προτίθημι (to set before). In 2 Cor 8:12, the 'readiness' that is 'present' (πρόκειται) determines acceptable giving. Hebrews uses it powerfully: believers flee to lay hold of the hope 'set before' them (6:18), and Jesus endured the cross for the joy 'set before' him (12:2). Hebrews 12:1 speaks of the race 'set before' us. Jude 7 describes Sodom and Gomorrah as 'set forth' as an example of judgment. The French 'être-devant' (to be before) and German 'vorliegen' (to lie before) capture the spatial metaphor precisely.

(5×) To lie before or be set before someone — to be publicly present, available, or displayed as an object of pursuit or example. The passive voice underscores that something has been placed before a person by another agent, often God. In Heb 12:2, the joy 'set before' Jesus motivated his endurance of the cross — a divinely appointed goal. Heb 12:1 invites believers to run the race 'set before' them, while Heb 6:18 encourages them to seize the hope 'set before' them. Jude 7 inverts the image: Sodom and Gomorrah 'are set forth' as a public warning. In 2 Cor 8:12, Paul uses the word practically — if willingness 'is present,' the gift is acceptable. The German 'vorliegen' and Spanish 'estar-presente' both preserve the spatial before-ness of the Greek prefix πρό. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: are-set-forth, before-us-lying, is-present | es: está-presente, están-puestas, puesta-delante | fr: sont-exposées, vorliegen, être-devant | de: daliegen-als, vorliegen 2Cor 8:12; Heb 6:18; Heb 12:1; Heb 12:2; Jude 1:7

προκηρ-ύσσω G4296 V-APA-GMS (1×)

to proclaim beforehand, to announce publicly in advance, to herald ahead of time

This verb combines public proclamation with temporal priority—announcing something before it happens or before someone arrives. Classical usage included heralds proclaiming public notices or making advance announcements. In Acts 13:24, Luke describes John the Baptist's ministry as proclaiming beforehand (literally, 'having proclaimed before his coming') a baptism of repentance to all Israel. John's role was advance herald, the voice preparing the way, the announcer alerting Israel to ready themselves for the One coming after him.

(1×) The translations capture both proclamation and priority ('having proclaimed before,' 'proclamando antes,' 'prêcher d'avance'). John's entire ministry was defined by this advance-herald function: proclaiming repentance to prepare hearts, announcing the coming of the Mighty One, heralding the arrival of Messiah. His beforehand-proclamation made straight the way, preparing Israel to recognize the One whose sandals he wasn't worthy to untie. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: having-proclaimed-before | es: proclamando-antes | fr: prêcher-d'avance | de: προκηρύξαντος Acts 13:24

προ-κοπή G4297 N-NFS (3×)

progress, advancement; forward movement toward a goal, especially in moral or spiritual development

This noun denotes progress or advancement, particularly in moral, spiritual, or intellectual development. Classical sources used it for progress on a journey, proficiency in learning, or military promotion. Paul employs it twice in Philippians and once in the Pastoral Epistles to describe advancement in the gospel or in godliness. The term emphasizes visible, measurable forward movement.

(3×) Refers to observable progress or advancement in spiritual realities. Philippians 1:12 states that Paul's imprisonment has actually 'resulted in the greater progress of the gospel.' Philippians 1:25 speaks of the Philippians' 'progress and joy in the faith.' First Timothy 4:15 instructs Timothy to practice these things so that his 'progress may be evident to all.' The Spanish 'avance/progreso,' French preservation of the Greek term, and German 'Fortschritt' all emphasize forward movement. This is not static spirituality but visible advancement that others can observe and that furthers God's purposes. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: advancement, progress | es: avance, progreso | fr: προκοπὴ, προκοπὴν | de: Fortschritt Phil 1:12; Phil 1:25; 1Tim 4:15

προκόπτω G4298 V-AIA-3S (6×)

prokopto – to advance, make progress, move forward (always metaphorical in the NT)

Originally meaning 'to cut forward' (as pioneers cutting a path), prokopto is used exclusively in metaphorical senses in the New Testament. It describes progress or advancement in various domains: the boy Jesus growing in wisdom and stature (Luke 2:52), Paul's former zeal advancing in Judaism (Gal 1:14), the night 'advancing' toward dawn (Rom 13:12), and false teachers progressing deeper into ungodliness (2 Tim 2:16; 3:9, 13). The word thus carries a neutral valence – progress can be positive or negative depending on what is advancing. Spanish avanzar and French progresser capture this versatile forward-motion metaphor cleanly.

advance, progress forward (6×) To advance, make progress, or move forward metaphorically. The literal 'cutting a path forward' has given way entirely to figurative use in the NT: Jesus advances in wisdom (Luke 2:52), the eschatological night advances toward dawn (Rom 13:12), Paul formerly advanced in Judaism (Gal 1:14), and ungodly speech advances like gangrene (2 Tim 2:16). Spanish avanzar and German voranschreiten confirm the consistent metaphorical 'forward progress' sense. Notably, the direction of progress can be positive (wisdom) or negative (ungodliness), making context essential. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: I-was-advancing, has-advanced, they-will-advance | es: avanzaba, avanzarán, avanzó | fr: progresser | de: voranschreiten, προέκοπτεν Luke 2:52; Rom 13:12; Gal 1:14; 2Tim 2:16; 2Tim 3:9

πρό-κρῐμα G4299 N-GNS (1×)

prejudice, prejudgment, forming an opinion or making a decision before examining the evidence

A legal and judicial term for reaching a verdict before hearing the case—prejudice in its literal sense of 'judging beforehand.' Classical usage included both prejudgment and its Latin equivalent praejudicium. Paul's charge to Timothy in 1 Timothy 5:21 is to keep his instructions without prejudice—without deciding cases before examining evidence, without favoritism that judges based on status rather than facts. It warns against the partiality that predetermines outcomes regardless of truth.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'prejudice' as the core meaning ('prejudice,' 'prejuicio,' 'Vorurteil'). Paul's solemn charge before God and Christ and the elect angels requires Timothy to exercise leadership without prejudgment, without forming opinions based on position, popularity, or prior relationships. True justice requires waiting to judge until evidence is heard, treating all fairly rather than showing preferential prejudice. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: prejudice | es: prejuicio | fr: προκρίματος | de: Vorurteil 1Tim 5:21

προκῡρόομαι G4300 V-RPM/P-AFS (1×)

to be ratified beforehand, to be confirmed or validated in advance

A legal term for prior ratification or confirmation. Paul uses the perfect passive participle in Galatians 3:17 to describe the covenant God made with Abraham—a covenant previously ratified by God himself. His argument is that the law, coming 430 years later, cannot annul a covenant that had already been formally confirmed. The verb's legal precision matters: a properly ratified covenant can't be invalidated by later legislation. God's promise-covenant to Abraham stands firm regardless of Sinai.

(1×) The translations preserve the legal confirmation sense ('having been ratified beforehand,' 'confirmado de antemano,' 'vorher bestätigt'). Paul's logic requires recognizing God's covenant with Abraham as a formally established legal instrument that later law cannot override. The perfect tense emphasizes the continuing validity of what was ratified long ago—the promise-covenant remains in force, untouched by the temporary arrangement at Sinai. COVENANT AGREEMENT

en: having-been-ratified-beforehand | es: confirmado-de-antemano | fr: προκεκυρωμένην | de: vorher-bestaetigt Gal 3:17

προλαμβάνω G4301 V-AIA-3S (3×)

to take beforehand, receive in advance, or anticipate; to be overtaken or caught in an act

This verb means to take or receive beforehand, to anticipate, or to be caught or overtaken. Classical usage included receiving payment in advance, seizing beforehand, or getting ahead of someone. The New Testament uses it in varied contexts: for anticipatory action, for being caught in sin, and possibly for taking something before its proper time.

(3×) Describes taking something in advance or being caught/overtaken. Mark 14:8 says the woman 'took beforehand to anoint my body for burial'—she anticipated Jesus' death. First Corinthians 11:21 criticizes those who 'take their own supper beforehand' at the Lord's Supper, not waiting for others. Galatians 6:1 addresses restoring 'if anyone is caught in any trespass.' The Spanish 'se-adelantó' (got ahead), 'toma-primero' (takes first), and 'sea-sorprendido' (be surprised/caught) show the semantic range. This word captures both proactive anticipation and passive overtaking—whether in devotion, selfishness, or moral failure. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: is-caught, she-took-beforehand, takes-before | es: se-adelantó, sea-sorprendido, toma-primero | fr: prendre-d'avance | de: vorher-nehmen Mark 14:8; 1Cor 11:21; Gal 6:1

προλέγω G4302 V-PIA-1S (14×)

To say or tell beforehand, whether as prior declaration, prediction, or solemn forewarning with admonitory force.

A compound of 'pro' (before) and 'lego' (say), this verb denotes speech that precedes its fulfillment or relevance. Most often it refers simply to having stated something earlier — 'as I said before' (2 Cor 13:2) — or to prophetic prediction, as when Isaiah 'said beforehand' what would happen (Rom 9:29). Jesus uses it in Matt 24:25 and Mark 13:23 to remind his disciples that he has foretold the tribulations to come. In one pointed instance (Gal 5:21), Paul adds moral urgency: he forewarns that those who practice the works of the flesh will not inherit the kingdom. Spanish captures the temporal dimension with 'antes dije' and 'de antemano,' while German uses 'vorher-sagen' (to say ahead of time).

1. say or tell beforehand (13×) To state or declare something in advance, referring to a prior communication or prophetic prediction without necessarily carrying a tone of warning. Jesus tells his disciples 'I have told you beforehand' about coming deceptions (Matt 24:25; spa 'antes-dichas') and the sufferings of the end (Mark 13:23). Paul references Isaiah's earlier words in Rom 9:29 and appeals to what he has already said in 2 Cor 7:3 and 13:2. The emphasis is on temporal priority — the speaker established the message before events unfolded or before the present moment of reiteration. French uses both 'prédire' (predict) and 'dites d'avance' (said in advance). FOREWARN FORETELL

en: I-have-said-before, I-have-told-before, I-have-told-beforehand | es: He-dicho-antes, antes-dichas, antes-dije | fr: dites-d'avance,, prédire | de: vorher-sagen, vorhergesagten, προείρηκα Matt 24:25; Mark 13:23; Rom 9:29; 2Cor 7:3; 2Cor 13:2

2. forewarn with admonition (1×) To forewarn someone with admonitory or moral urgency, where the prior declaration carries the weight of a solemn caution. Used in Gal 5:21, where Paul says 'I forewarn you, as I have forewarned before, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.' Spanish renders this 'os digo de antemano,' and the doubled expression ('I tell beforehand... as I forewarned') underscores that this is not mere prediction but pastoral confrontation. The single occurrence suggests this is the verb at its most forceful — prior speech sharpened into moral demand. FOREWARN FORETELL

en: I-tell-beforehand | es: os-digo-de-antemano | fr: prédire | de: vorher-sagen Gal 5:21

προμαρτύρομαι G4303 V-PPM/P-NNS (1×)

to testify beforehand, to bear witness in advance, to predict or prophesy future events

A compound joining witness-bearing with temporal priority, used especially of prophetic testimony about future events. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 1:11 of the Spirit of Christ in the prophets testifying beforehand about the sufferings of Christ and the glories to follow. The verb captures the prophetic nature of Old Testament witness—not just recording past events but bearing advance testimony to what would happen in the Messiah. The ancient prophets were courtroom witnesses testifying about the future.

(1×) The glosses emphasize advance witness ('testifying beforehand,' 'testificando de antemano,' 'vorher bezeugen'). Peter's argument is that the Spirit was already bearing witness to Christ's passion and glory through the Old Testament prophets—their words were advance testimony. This makes prophecy a form of pre-authentication, divine witnesses sworn in centuries early to establish what would happen when Messiah came. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY

en: testifying-beforehand | es: testificando-de-antemano | fr: προμαρτυρόμενον | de: vorher-bezeugen 1Pet 1:11

προμελετάω G4304 V-PNA (1×)

to premeditate, to rehearse beforehand, to practice or prepare in advance

Originally meaning to practice or rehearse beforehand, this verb implied prior preparation through repetition. Classical usage included practicing skills before performing them or developing habits through repeated exercise. Jesus instructs his disciples in Luke 21:14 not to premeditate their defense when brought before authorities—don't rehearse speeches or practice arguments in advance. Instead, trust that wisdom will be given in the moment. The prohibition against premeditation is a command to rely on divine provision rather than human preparation.

(1×) The multilingual evidence shows 'premeditate' or 'rehearse beforehand' ('to premeditate,' 'meditar de antemano,' 'préméditer'). Jesus forbids the natural impulse to script one's defense in advance, calling instead for moment-by-moment dependence on the Spirit's provision. This isn't anti-intellectual but anti-anxiety—the issue is trusting human preparation versus trusting divine supply. Premeditation suggests self-reliance; promised wisdom requires faith. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES en: to-premeditate | es: meditar-de-antemano | fr: préméditer | de: προμελετᾶν Luke 21:14

προμεριμνάω G4305 V-PMA-2P (1×)

to be anxious beforehand, to worry in advance, to take anxious thought ahead of time

A compound verb intensifying basic anxiety with advance worrying. Jesus uses it in Mark 13:11 in parallel with Luke 21:14's prohibition against premeditation: when arrested, don't be anxious beforehand about what to say. The verb captures the futile mental exercise of rehearsing future scenarios and fretting about them in advance. Instead of advance anxiety about testimony under pressure, Jesus promises that the Holy Spirit will give words in the moment when needed. Beforehand-anxiety reveals trust in oneself rather than God.

(1×) The translations converge on advance worry ('be anxious beforehand,' 'os preocupéis de antemano,' 's'inquiéter d'avance,' 'vorher sorgen'). Jesus targets the specific anxiety of mentally rehearsing future trials and scripting responses in advance. This forward-projecting worry accomplishes nothing except demonstrating lack of trust in divine provision. The antidote is present-tense faith: when the moment arrives, the Spirit will supply what's needed. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES
en: be-anxious-beforehand | es: os-preocupéis-de-antemano | fr: s'inquiéter-d'avance | de: vorher-sorgen Mark 13:11

προνοέω G4306 V-PIA-3S (3×)

to think ahead, provide for, take thought for; to plan or care for in advance

This verb means to think ahead, provide for, or take thought for something in advance. Classical Greek used it for foresight, planning, and providence, including divine foreknowledge. The New Testament applies it to ethical responsibility—providing for one's household and maintaining honorable conduct. It emphasizes forethought and responsible planning.

(3×) Describes thoughtful provision and planning, especially for honorable conduct and family care. Romans 12:17 instructs believers to 'provide for honorable things in the sight of all people.' Second Corinthians 8:21 repeats this principle: 'we provide for honorable things not only before the Lord but also before people.' First Timothy 5:8 sternly warns that 'if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith.' The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'procurar/proveer,' French 'pourvoir,' German 'bedenken') emphasize active, thoughtful provision. This is not passive hope but deliberate planning for what is right and necessary. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: provides, providing, we-take-thought | es: procurando, provee, proveemos | fr: considérer, pourvoir | de: bedenken Rom 12:17; 2Cor 8:21; 1Tim 5:8

πρόνοια G4307 N-GFS (2×)

forethought, providential care, or deliberate planning; ranging from divine providence to human precaution

This noun captures both forward-looking care and intentional planning. In Acts 24:2, Tertullus uses it to flatter Felix for his administrative foresight and reforms. In Romans 13:14, Paul employs it negatively, warning believers not to make provision for the flesh's desires. The term's classical range—from philosophical providence to legal premeditation—enriches both NT uses: prudent care can serve either godly discipline or sinful indulgence.

(2×) The multilingual glosses converge on 'foresight,' 'forethought,' and 'providence,' reflecting the Greek range from divine foreknowledge to human planning. Acts 24:2 uses it for political administration (Felix's reforms), while Romans 13:14 warns against making provision for fleshly lusts—showing how the same capacity for planning can serve virtue or vice. ANXIETY AND WORRY
en: foresight, forethought | es: providencia, provisión | fr: prévoyance | de: Fuersorge, προνοίας Acts 24:2; Rom 13:14

προορ-άω G4308 V-APA-NMS (4×)

See beforehand, foresee; perceive in advance or keep something constantly in view.

Combines the prefix pro- (before, in front of) with horao (see), yielding a word that can mean either to foresee future events or to keep something constantly before one's eyes. Peter at Pentecost quotes David: 'I saw the Lord always before me' (Acts 2:25, from Ps 16:8), where the sense is keeping God in one's gaze. Acts 2:31 describes David foreseeing the resurrection. In Galatians 3:8 the Scripture itself 'foresaw' that God would justify the Gentiles. The word bridges prophetic foresight and attentive vision.

(4×) See beforehand, foresee, or keep constantly before one's eyes. Acts 2:25 (quoting Ps 16:8) captures the 'before my face' sense – David kept the Lord always in view, a posture of sustained attentiveness. Acts 2:31 shifts to prophetic foresight: David foresaw the resurrection of the Christ. Acts 21:29 is simpler: they had previously seen Trophimus in the city. Gal 3:8 personifies Scripture itself as foreseeing God's plan. French 'voir d'avance' and German 'vorher sehen' both preserve the temporal prefix. The double sense – constant vision and advance knowledge – makes this word theologically rich in the apostolic sermons. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: I-was-foreseeing, foreseeing, having-foreseen | es: Veía-de-antemano, habiendo-previsto, visto-antes | fr: voir-d'avance, προϊδοῦσα | de: vorher-sehen, Προορώμην, προεωρακότες Acts 2:25; Acts 2:31; Acts 21:29; Gal 3:8

προορ-ίζω G4309 V-APP-NMP (6×)

proorizo – to predestine, foreordain, determine beforehand by divine decree

The compound verb proorizo (pro- 'before' + horizo 'to set a boundary, determine') is a weighty theological term meaning to decide or appoint something in advance. All six NT occurrences have God as the implied or explicit agent, making this a word about divine sovereignty over the course of history and salvation. Paul uses it to describe God's eternal plan to conform believers to the image of Christ (Rom 8:29-30), to adopt them as children (Eph 1:5, 11), and to prepare a hidden wisdom for their glory (1 Cor 2:7). In Acts 4:28, it describes God's sovereign hand behind the crucifixion itself. Spanish predestinar, French predestiner, and German vorherbestimmen all preserve the temporal-volitional structure of the Greek.

predestine/foreordain (6×) To determine or appoint beforehand, predestine – used exclusively of God's sovereign decree over salvation and historical events. In Rom 8:29-30, those whom God foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to Christ's image; in Eph 1:5 and

1:11, believers are predestined for adoption and inheritance; in 1 Cor 2:7, God's wisdom was predestined before the ages; and in Acts 4:28, even the crucifixion was within what God's hand had predestined. Spanish predestinar and German vorherbestimmen both mirror the compound structure (before + determine), confirming a single theological sense across all occurrences. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: foreordained, having-been-predestined, having-predestined | es: habiendo-predestinado, habiendo-sido-predestinados, predestinó | fr: prédestiner, vorherbestimmen | de: vorherbestimmen, προώρισεν Acts 4:28; Rom 8:29; Rom 8:30; 1Cor 2:7; Eph 1:5

προπάσχω G4310 V-APA-NMP (1×)

to suffer beforehand, to undergo mistreatment or hardship previously

A compound verb combining suffering with temporal priority. Classical usage included suffering first or being ill-treated before some other event. Paul reminds the Thessalonians in 1 Thessalonians 2:2 of how he and his companions had previously suffered and been shamefully treated in Philippi before coming to Thessalonica. The perfect participle emphasizes the continuing effects of that prior suffering. Far from disqualifying them, their beforehand-suffering validated their courage in preaching despite opposition—they knew what awaited them but came anyway.

(1×) The multilingual glosses preserve the temporal priority of suffering ('having suffered before,' 'habiendo padecido antes,' 'vorher leiden'). Paul's point is that the Philippian suffering preceded and informed his Thessalonian ministry—he came to Thessalonica already knowing the cost of gospel preaching, already bearing the marks of prior persecution. This prior suffering made his bold preaching even more remarkable: he persisted despite knowing personally what opposition would bring. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: having-suffered-before | es: habiendo-padecido-antes | fr: προπαθόντες | de: vorher-leiden 1Thess 2:2

προπέμπω G4311 V-AMA-2S (9×)

To send on one's way, escort forward on a journey; to help someone depart with provisions or accompaniment.

A warm word of early Christian hospitality, describing the practice of escorting a departing traveler on the first leg of their journey, often supplying provisions for the road. When the church at Antioch 'sent on their way' Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:3), or when Ephesian elders accompanied Paul to the ship (Acts 20:38), the word carries overtones of communal care and prayerful farewell. Paul himself hopes to be 'sent on' by the Roman church toward Spain (Rom 15:24). German 'geleiten' (escort, conduct) and Spanish 'acompañar' (accompany) both capture the personal, relational dimension that distinguishes this word from mere dispatching.

send on one's way, escort (9×) To escort someone forward on a journey, help them on their way with provisions, companionship, or prayerful support — a characteristic practice of early Christian hospitality. The word appears in Acts describing churches sending missionaries onward (Acts 15:3, 20:38, 21:5) and in the epistles where Paul asks to be helped on his way (Rom 15:24, 1 Cor 16:6, 16:11, 2 Cor 1:16, Titus 3:13, 3 John 6). Unlike simple 'sending,' this verb implies personal accompaniment and material provision for the traveler. German 'geleiten' (to escort) and Spanish 'encaminar' (to set on the road) reflect this hospitable, hands-on character. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: accompanying, escorted, having-been-sent-forward | es: Lo-acompañaron, acompañándonos, encamina | fr: accompagner, geleiten | de: geleiten, προέπεμπον, προπεμπόντων Acts 15:3; Acts 20:38; Acts 21:5; Rom 15:24; 1Cor 16:6

προπετ-ής G4312 Adj-ANS (2×)

rash, reckless, or acting impetuously without careful thought

An adjective describing hasty, ill-considered action. In Acts 19:36, the town clerk urges the Ephesian crowd to avoid rash acts during the riot over Diana's shrine. In 2 Timothy 3:4, Paul lists it among vices of the last days—people who are headstrong and impetuous. The Greek root suggests 'falling forward,' capturing the image of stumbling ahead without looking. Both passages warn against decisions made in passion rather than prudence.

(2×) Cross-linguistic evidence ('rash,' 'reckless,' 'precipitado,' 'précipité') captures impulsive action. Acts 19:36 warns the Ephesian mob against hasty violence, while 2 Timothy 3:4 condemns the reckless character of end-times apostates. The term's etymology ('falling forward') vividly pictures someone rushing ahead without caution. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: rash, reckless | es: impetuosos, precipitado | fr: précipité, προπετεῖς | de: vorschnell, προπετὲς Acts 19:36; 2Tim 3:4

προπορ-εύω G4313 V-FIM-3P (2×)

to go before, proceed ahead as a forerunner or advance party

A verb of spatial and figurative leading. In Luke 1:76, Zechariah prophesies that his son John will go before the Lord to prepare his ways—the classic forerunner role. In Acts 7:40, Israel asks Aaron to make gods to go before them (while Moses is on Sinai), inverting the proper order of divine guidance. The term emphasizes precedence in movement, whether in faithful preparation or rebellious substitution.

(2×) The glosses ('will go before,' 'irás delante,' 'précéder') emphasize spatial precedence. Luke 1:76 applies it to John the Baptist's prophetic mission—going before Messiah as herald. Acts 7:40 uses it ironically: Israel demands substitute gods to lead them, rejecting the God who brought them from Egypt. Both passages hinge on the question of who truly goes ahead to guide God's people. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: will-go-before, you-will-go-before | es: irán-delante, irás-delante | fr: aller-devant, précéder | de: geht-voraus Luke 1:76; Acts 7:40

πρός G4314 Prep (705×)

To, toward; for, in order to; with; at, near; among; against; according to; because of

The preposition pros is one of Greek's most versatile spatial-relational words, governing accusative, dative, and (rarely) genitive cases with distinct nuances. In the New Testament it overwhelmingly takes the accusative, expressing movement toward a person or place. The prologue of John's Gospel famously declares the Word was 'pros ton theon' — toward God, with God, face-to-face with God — compressing directional, associative, and relational force into two words. Beyond its spatial core, pros extends to purpose ('for the sake of'), companionship ('with'), proximity ('at, beside'), opposition ('against'), and conformity ('according to'). Its semantic breadth makes it indispensable for expressing the full range of interpersonal and theological relationships in the epistles and Gospels.

1. direction: to, toward (520×) The primary directional sense with accusative: 'to,' 'toward,' indicating movement or orientation toward a person, place, or goal. At 520 occurrences this is the overwhelming default. Matt 3:5 ('going out to him'), Matt 3:13 ('Jesus came to the Jordan'). Spanish 'a/hacia,' French 'vers,' and German 'zu' all mark directionality. John 1:1 ('the Word was pros God') may begin here but transcends simple direction into relational presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to, to- | es: a, hacia | fr: vers- | de: zu Matt 2:12; Matt 3:5; Matt 3:13; Matt 3:14; Matt 3:15

2. purpose: for, in order to (113×) Purpose or aim: 'for,' 'in order to,' 'with a view to.' Matt 6:1 ('do not practice your righteousness before men to be seen by them') and Matt 5:28 ('everyone who looks at a woman for the purpose of lusting'). Spanish 'para' and French 'pour' map naturally. The 113 occurrences show pros competing with eis for purpose marking, with pros often emphasizing the interpersonal orientation of the intended goal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for, for-, to | es: Para, hacia, para | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Matt 5:28; Matt 6:1; Matt 13:30; Matt 23:5; Matt 26:12

3. association: with, in company of (39×) Association or accompaniment: 'with,' 'in the presence of,' 'face-to-face with.' This is the theologically pregnant sense of John 1:1 ('the Word was with God'). Matt 26:18 ('I will keep the Passover at your house / with you'). French 'auprès de' and Spanish 'junto a' capture relational proximity. The 39 occurrences reveal pros conveying not mere spatial togetherness but oriented, facing relationship — richer than simple meta or sun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: toward, toward-, with | es: con, con-, junto-a | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Matt 13:56; Matt 26:18; Mark 1:27; Mark 6:3; Mark 8:16

4. proximity: at, near, beside (18×) Static proximity: 'at,' 'near,' 'beside,' without implying movement. Matt 3:10 ('the axe is already laid at the root'), Luke 10:39 (Mary sitting 'at the Lord's feet'). Spanish 'ante' (before) and 'a' (at) reflect the positional sense. German 'zu' remains the standard rendering. The 18 occurrences typically mark a scene of presence or readiness, often with a person situated at a significant location. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at, at-, toward | es: a, alrededor, ante | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Matt 3:10; Luke 3:9; Luke 10:39; Luke 16:20; John 11:32

5. distributive: among (8×) Distributive or relational sense within a group: 'among,' 'between,' 'to one another.' Luke 20:5 ('they reasoned among themselves'), Luke 22:23 ('they began to discuss among themselves'). Spanish 'entre' captures the internal-group dynamic. The 8 occurrences show pros marking intra-group deliberation or mutual relationship, a function where it overlaps with en and the reciprocal pronoun allelous. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, among, to | es: entre, hacia | fr: vers- | de: zu Luke 20:5; Luke 20:14; Luke 20:19; Luke 22:23; Luke 23:12

6. opposition: against (3×) Adversative or hostile orientation: 'against.' Matt 4:6 ('lest you strike your foot against a stone'), Mark 12:12 ('they knew he had spoken the parable against them'). Spanish 'contra' marks hostility explicitly, while French 'vers' often remains neutral, relying on context. Only 3 occurrences in this clearly adversative sense, suggesting the New Testament prefers kata for opposition, reserving pros for directional hostility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, against- | es: contra, hacia | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Matt 4:6; Mark 12:12; Luke 4:11

7. conformity: according to (2×) Conformity or correspondence to a standard: 'according to,' 'in proportion to.' Luke 12:47 ('beaten with many stripes according to his knowledge') and 2 Cor 5:10 ('according to what he has done'). Spanish 'conforme a' and the pattern across languages suggest a measuring or matching function. The 2 occurrences occupy legal or judgment contexts where actions are evaluated against a norm. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to | es: conforme-a | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Luke 12:47; 2Cor 5:10

8. causal: because of (2×) Causal sense: 'because of,' 'on account of.' Matt 19:8 ('because of your hardness of heart Moses permitted you') and Mark 10:5 (parallel passage). Spanish 'por' and the rendering pattern across languages confirm the causal reading. Only 2 occurrences, both in the same Synoptic tradition about divorce, where pros plus accusative explains the ground or reason behind a legal concession. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: For, because-of | es: Por, por | fr: vers- | de: zu, zu- Matt 19:8; Mark 10:5

προσάββᾰτον G4315 N-NNS (1×)

day before the Sabbath, Friday, the preparation day for the Sabbath

A Jewish time designation for Friday, the day before the weekly Sabbath. Since work was forbidden on Sabbath, Friday was the preparation day for completing tasks and readying food. Mark 15:42 uses this term to specify when Jesus was buried: it was the day before Sabbath, so there was urgency to complete burial before sundown when Sabbath began. The technical precision matters for understanding the crucifixion timeline—Jesus died and was buried on Friday afternoon, explaining the haste and the tomb being sealed before Sabbath rest.

(1×) Every translation recognizes this as the Sabbath-eve ('the day before the Sabbath,' 'ante sábado,' 'avant sabbat,' 'Vorsabbat'). The term's Jewish cultural specificity assumes readers understand the rhythm of the seven-day week culminating in Sabbath rest. Mark's use signals the time pressure: with Sabbath approaching at sundown, there were only hours to complete burial. This temporal marker also explains why the women had to wait until Sunday morning to complete burial preparations. SABBATH AND WEEK

en: the-day-before-the-Sabbath | es: ante-sábado | fr: avant-sabbat | de: Vorsabbat Mark 15:42

προσᾰγορ-εύω G4316 V-APP-NMS (1×)

to be designated, to be called, to be formally named or titled as something

Originally meaning to address or greet someone, this verb developed the sense of addressing someone by a particular title or designating them with a name. The passive meant to be called or designated. Hebrews 5:10 states that Jesus was designated by God as high priest according to the order of Melchizedek—formally named and appointed to this role. The verb emphasizes divine appointment and official designation, not mere human recognition. God himself addressed Jesus by this title, conferring the priesthood authoritatively.

(1×) The translations show both naming and designation ('having been designated,' 'habiendo sido designado,' 'benennen'). The author of Hebrews stresses divine initiative—God didn't merely acknowledge Jesus' priesthood, he actively designated and proclaimed it. The perfect passive emphasizes the completed appointment with continuing validity: Jesus stands as the divinely designated Melchizedekian priest, a title conferred by God himself and therefore unassailable. CALLING AND NAMING en: having-been-designated | es: habiendo-sido-designado | fr: benennen | de: benennen Heb 5:10

προσάγω G4317 V-ASA-3S (4×)

Bring near, lead forward, present before someone; grant access or approach.

Means to bring someone or something forward into the presence of another, combining pros- (toward) with ago (lead). Jesus commands that the boy be brought to him (Luke 9:41). In Acts, Paul and Silas are dragged before the magistrates (Acts 16:20), and sailors sense land drawing near (Acts 27:27). Most strikingly, 1 Peter 3:18 declares that Christ suffered to 'bring us to God' – the supreme act of prosagoge. The word moves from ordinary physical leading to the profound theological concept of access to God.

(4×) Bring near, lead toward, present before someone – ranging from physical presentation to theological access. Luke 9:41 is a straightforward command to bring the afflicted boy forward. Acts 16:20 describes Paul and Silas being dragged before authorities, and Acts 27:27 uses the nautical sense of land 'drawing near.' The climactic use is 1 Pet 3:18, where Christ's death is the means to 'bring us to God,' employing the same verb used for formal introduction into a king's presence. Spanish 'acercarse' (draw near) and German 'hinfuehren' (lead toward) capture the directional movement. The progression from mundane to soteriological usage across these four occurrences traces the word's full semantic arc. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: bring, having-brought, he-might-bring | es: acercarse, condujera, llevando | fr: amener | de: bringt-heran, hinfuehren Luke 9:41; Acts 16:20; Acts 27:27; 1Pet 3:18

προσᾰγωγ-ή G4318 N-AFS (3×)

access, approach; the privilege of approaching or being introduced into someone's presence

This noun denotes access or approach, particularly the privilege of coming into someone's presence. Classical usage included solemn approaches at festivals, introduction to a king's presence, and approaches to places. Paul uses it exclusively to describe believers' access to God through Christ—a revolutionary spiritual privilege that the gospel makes possible.

(3×) Describes the spiritual access believers have to God through Christ. Romans 5:2 declares that through Christ 'we have obtained access by faith into this grace in which we stand.' Ephesians 2:18 states 'through him we both have access in one Spirit to the Father.' Ephesians 3:12 adds 'in whom we have boldness and access with confidence through faith in him.' The Spanish 'acceso,' French 'accès,' and German 'Zugang' all preserve the sense of entry or approach. This technical term from court protocol becomes a gospel metaphor—believers approach God's throne with the confidence of welcomed guests, not terrified subjects. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: access | es: acceso | fr: Zugang, accès | de: Zugang Rom 5:2; Eph 2:18; Eph 3:12

προσαιτ-έω G4319 N-NMS (3×)

beggar; one who asks for alms or lives by begging

This noun identifies a beggar—someone who asks for alms and lives by soliciting help from others. Classical usage included both the act of begging and the person who begs. The New Testament uses it exclusively in the Gospels to describe individuals seeking help, most notably the blind beggar Bartimaeus. The term emphasizes both the person's occupation and their dependent social status.

(3×) Identifies individuals who live by begging. Mark 10:46 introduces 'Bartimaeus, a blind beggar, the son of Timaeus.' John 9:8 twice refers to the man born blind: neighbors asked 'Is not this the one who used to sit and beg?' The Greek text contains both a noun and a participle form, both emphasizing his begging. The Spanish 'mendigo/mendigaba,' French 'mendiant,' and German 'betteln' all focus on the act and status of begging. These were not merely poor people but those whose social identity was defined by public dependency—making Jesus' attention to them and healing of them particularly significant. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: a-beggar, beggar, begging | es: mendigaba, mendigo | fr: mendiant | de: betteln Mark 10:46; John 9:8

προσανα-βαίνω G4320 V-AMA-2S (1×)

to go up higher, to ascend or move up to a better place, to rise to a superior position

A compound verb intensifying basic ascent with the idea of going up further or higher. Classical usage included climbing higher or rising above one's current level. Jesus uses it in Luke 14:10's parable about taking seats at a banquet: when invited, don't take the place of honor; instead take the lowest place, so that when the host comes he may say to you, 'Friend, go up higher.' The verb captures the upward social movement from lower to higher honor, enacted physically by changing seats and symbolizing increased status.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows upward movement ('go up,' 'sube,' 'monter plus haut'). Jesus' instruction uses the literal act of changing seats as an enacted parable of humility and exaltation. The one who takes the low place first receives the invitation to 'go up higher,' experiencing public honor through host-initiated promotion rather than suffering public shame through forced demotion. The upward movement signifies the vindication that comes to the humble. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: go-up | es: sube | fr: monter-plus-haut | de: προσανάβηθι Luke 14:10

προσἄν-ᾱλίσκω G4321 V-APA-NFS (1×)

to spend in addition, to consume further, to expend more beyond what was already used

A compound verb indicating additional expenditure or consumption beyond previous spending. Classical usage included wasting further time or lavishing additional resources. Luke 8:43 describes the hemorrhaging woman who had spent all her living on physicians—the participle indicates she had exhausted her resources in additional spending, trying doctor after doctor with no result. The prefix intensifies the tragedy: not just spending but spending additionally, progressively depleting everything in desperate search for healing.

(1×) The glosses emphasize the additional nature of the spending ('having spent,' 'habiendo gastado,' 'dépenser en plus'). Luke's medical precision notes the progressive consumption of resources—she kept spending more and more, doctor after doctor, treatment after treatment, until nothing remained. This intensifies the miracle that follows: Jesus heals instantly and freely what physicians couldn't heal with all her money and years. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15126 WITH 3 SENSES

en: having-spent | es: habiendo-gastado | fr: dépenser-en-plus | de: προσαναλώσασα Luke 8:43

προσανα-πληρόω G4322 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to supply what is lacking, fill up a deficiency or complete by adding

A verb meaning to fill up by supplying what is missing. Both NT uses are in 2 Corinthians. In 9:12, Paul notes that the Jerusalem offering not only meets the saints' needs but overflows in thanksgiving. In 11:9, he recounts how Macedonian brothers supplied his financial lack while in Corinth, enabling ministry without burdening the church. The prefix προσ-ανα- intensifies the sense of adding to reach completeness.

(2×) The evidence ('supplied,' 'suplieron,' 'ajouter,' 'ergänzen') points to completing a deficiency. 2 Corinthians 9:12 describes the collection as supplying the Jerusalem saints' needs, while 11:9 recalls how Macedonian believers filled Paul's financial gap in Corinth. Both passages celebrate provision that enables gospel ministry to continue unhindered. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: supplied, supplying | es: supliendo, suplieron | fr: ajouter | de: ergaenzen 2Cor 9:12; 2Cor 11:9

προσανα-τίθημι G4323 V-AIM-1S (2×)

to consult with, confer with someone for counsel or to add one's contribution

A middle-voice verb meaning to take counsel with or lay a matter before someone. In Galatians, Paul uses it twice to defend his apostolic independence. In 1:16, he insists he did not immediately consult with flesh and blood after his Damascus road encounter. In 2:6, he reports that the Jerusalem pillars added nothing to his gospel message. The term can mean both 'to contribute' and 'to confer'—Paul denies needing either human endorsement or supplementary teaching.

(2×) The multilingual glosses split between 'conferred' and 'added/contributed,' reflecting the term's dual semantic range. Galatians 1:16 stresses Paul's refusal to consult human authorities post-conversion, while 2:6 affirms that even the Jerusalem apostles could add nothing to his revelation. Both passages assert the sufficiency and divine origin of Paul's gospel. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: I-conferred, added | es: añadieron, consulté | fr: προσανέθεντο, προσανεθέμην | de: sich-besprechen Gal 1:16; Gal 2:6

προσαπ-ειλέω G4324 V-APM-NMP (1×)

to threaten further, to add more threats, to issue additional warnings or intimidation

A compound verb indicating threats piled on top of previous threats—additional intimidation beyond what was already spoken. Luke uses it in Acts 4:21 to describe the Sanhedrin after Peter and John's defense: having further threatened them, they released them. The authorities had already issued threats, now they pile on more, escalating intimidation to silence the apostles. The additional threatening reveals both the council's impotence (they can only threaten, not actually stop the preaching) and their desperation (more threats suggest the earlier ones didn't work).

(1×) The multilingual evidence shows escalation ('having further threatened,' 'habiendo amenazado más,' 'menacer'). Luke's verb choice is ironically revealing: the council's response to undeniable miracle and bold testimony is merely adding more threats to their previous threats. The prefix 'pros-' captures their attempt to increase pressure through additional intimidation, but the very need for further threatening exposes the futility of their opposition to what God is doing. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: having-further-threatened | es: habiendo-amenazado-más | fr: menacer | de: προσαπειλησάμενοι Acts 4:21

προσδᾰπᾰνάω G4325 V-ASA-2S (1×)

to spend in addition, to pay extra expenses, to incur further costs beyond initial payment

Similar to G4321 but focused specifically on additional financial outlay. The Good Samaritan in Luke 10:35 tells the innkeeper that whatever additional expense is incurred caring for the wounded man, he will repay on his return. The verb captures costs beyond the initial two denarii—any extra spending required will be covered. It demonstrates the Samaritan's open-ended commitment: not just initial help but willingness to cover all additional expenses, however much they might be.

(1×) The translations emphasize additional spending ('you spend in addition,' 'gastes más,' 'dépenser en plus,' 'fordert dazu'). Jesus' parable depends on this open-ended generosity—the Samaritan doesn't calculate costs carefully or limit his liability, but commits to covering whatever additional expenses arise. This extra-spending clause transforms charity from measured giving into genuine neighbor-love that doesn't count the cost. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: you-spend-in-addition | es: gastes-más | fr: dépenser-en-plus | de: fordert-dazu Luke 10:35

προσδέω G4326 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

to need in addition, to have further need, to require more or be in want besides

A compound verb indicating additional need or requirement beyond what might be expected. Classical usage included needing something more or requiring further assistance. Paul uses it in Acts 17:25 to declare that God is not served by human hands as though needing anything—he doesn't require our service to supply some lack in himself. The participle with negative emphasizes divine self-sufficiency: God needs nothing additional from us, no supplemental help to sustain his existence or accomplish his purposes.

(1×) The multilingual glosses show 'needing' or 'requiring' ('as needing,' 'necesitando,' 'avoir besoin'). Paul's Athenian sermon strikes at pagan assumptions about deity—gods who need feeding, housing, or service from worshipers. The true God, maker of all, is uniquely free from additional need. The middle voice participle suggests 'needing for himself'—God has no personal lack requiring human supply. This overturns the entire temple-cult system based on divine neediness. NECESSITY AND NEED en: as-needing | es: necesitando | fr: avoir-besoin | de: προσδεόμενός Acts 17:25

προσδέχομαι G4327 V-PPM/P-DMP (14×)

To wait for or expect something anticipated, or to receive and welcome someone or something with favor and acceptance.

Spans two related postures of openness — the forward-looking expectation of something yet to come, and the welcoming reception of someone who arrives. Simeon was 'waiting for the consolation of Israel' (Luke 2:25), and Joseph of Arimathea was 'waiting for the kingdom of God' (Mark 15:43) — patient, hopeful anticipation. But the same verb describes Jesus receiving sinners (Luke 15:2) and Paul urging the Romans to welcome Phoebe (Rom 16:2). The pivot between waiting and welcoming makes theological sense: to truly expect God's promises is to be ready to embrace what he sends. Spanish captures the waiting sense with 'aguardando/esperaba' and the receiving sense with 'aceptando/recibe,' while German uses 'erwarten' across both, preserving their unity.

1. wait for, expect, await (9×) To look forward to something anticipated, waiting with expectation and hope for a future event, person, or divine promise. Simeon was waiting for the consolation of Israel (Luke 2:25; spa 'esperaba'), Anna spoke to all who were waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem (Luke 2:38), and Joseph of Arimathea was waiting for the kingdom of God (Mark 15:43; Luke 23:51). In Luke 12:36 servants wait for their master to return. Titus 2:13 extends this to the eschatological horizon: believers await the blessed hope and appearing of Christ. The consistent tone is patient, faith-filled anticipation — not passive delay but active readiness. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: awaiting, expect, waiting-for | es: aceptan, aguardando, esperaba | fr: attendant, attendre | de: erwarten, erwartend, erwartet Mark 15:43; Luke 2:25; Luke 2:38; Luke 12:36; Luke 23:51

2. receive, accept, welcome (5×) To receive or accept someone or something favorably, welcoming with approval, hospitality, or moral endorsement. In Luke 15:2 the Pharisees grumble that Jesus 'receives sinners and eats with them' (spa 'recibe,' implying scandalous hospitality). Paul urges the Roman church to receive Phoebe 'in a manner worthy of the saints' (Rom 16:2), and in Phil 2:29 to welcome Epaphroditus with joy. Heb 11:35 speaks of those who did not accept release, choosing suffering for the sake of a better resurrection. The shift from external hospitality to internal acceptance gives this sense both social and theological depth. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: having-accepted, receive, receives | es: aceptando, aceptasteis, recibe | fr: attendre | de: erwarten, erwartet Luke 15:2; Rom 16:2; Phil 2:29; Heb 10:34; Heb 11:35

προσδοκ-άω G4328 V-PIA-3S (16×)

To wait for, look for (with patient anticipation); to expect, anticipate (mental supposition)

The verb prosdokao describes the human posture of expectation in the New Testament, whether hopeful, anxious, or calculating. In its primary sense it conveys patient, embodied waiting: Zechariah's crowd 'was waiting for him' outside the temple (Luke 1:21), the people 'were expecting' whether John might be the Christ (Luke 3:15), and John the Baptist sends disciples to ask 'are you the one we are waiting for?' (Matt 11:3, Luke 7:19-20). A secondary cluster shifts the emphasis from bodily waiting to mental anticipation or supposition: the master 'will come on a day when the servant does not expect' (Matt 24:50, Luke 12:46), and the Maltese 'were expecting' Paul to swell up or drop dead (Acts 28:6).

1. wait for, look for (11×) To wait for, look for, or watch for someone or something with patient, often embodied anticipation. The waiting is typically hopeful or anxious, involving physical presence and orientation toward the awaited person or event. Zechariah's congregation was 'waiting for him' and marveling at his delay (Luke 1:21); the crowds 'were waiting expectantly' about the Messiah (Luke 3:15); John the Baptist sends to ask 'are you the one we are waiting for, or should we expect another?' (Matt 11:3, Luke 7:19-20). Spanish 'esperando/esperamos' and German 'erwarten' both carry the sense of active, patient watching. Eleven occurrences make this the dominant usage. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: expecting, should-we-expect, waiting-for | es: Esperando, esperamos, esperando | fr: attendre | de: erwarten, erwartet Matt 11:3; Luke 1:21; Luke 3:15; Luke 7:19; Luke 7:20

2. expect, anticipate (5×) To expect or anticipate something mentally, focusing on the cognitive state of supposition rather than the physical posture of waiting. The emphasis falls on what the mind projects rather than what the body does. In Matt 24:50 and Luke 12:46, the master arrives on a day 'when the servant does not expect him' – the point is the failure of mental calculation, not the absence of physical watching. At Acts 3:5, the lame man 'was expecting to receive something' from Peter and John, and at Acts 28:6 the islanders 'were expecting' Paul to swell up from the snakebite. German 'erwartet' and Spanish 'esperaban' serve both senses, but the collocational shift from persons-awaited to outcomes-projected marks the boundary. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: expecting, he-expects, were-expecting | es: espera, esperaban, esperando | fr: attendre | de: erwartet Matt 24:50; Luke 12:46; Acts 3:5; Acts 28:6

προσδοκ-ία G4329 N-GFS (2×)

expectation, anticipation of future events, whether in hope or anxiety

A noun for looking ahead to what is coming. In Luke 21:26, it describes the fearful expectation of cosmic upheavals in the end times—hearts failing from dread of what is coming on the world. In Acts 12:11, Peter realizes he has been delivered from Herod and from all the expectation of the Jewish people (who anticipated his execution). Classical usage often leans toward anxious foreboding, and both NT passages involve negative anticipation.

(2×) The glosses ('expectation,' 'expectación,' 'attente') are semantically uniform. Luke 21:26 applies it to eschatological dread—people collapsing from anticipation of cosmic judgment. Acts 12:11 uses it for the crowd's expectation of Peter's execution, which God thwarts. Both passages involve waiting for something feared, though the outcomes differ: one is cosmic judgment, the other is miraculous rescue. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14003 WITH 3 SENSES

en: expectation | es: expectación, expectativa | fr: attente | de: προσδοκίας Luke 21:26; Acts 12:11

προσεάω G4330 V-PPA-GMS (1×)

to allow, to permit, to let something proceed or happen

A compound verb meaning to let something go further or permit additional movement. Classical usage included suffering something to continue or allowing progress. Luke uses it in Acts 27:7 during Paul's voyage to Rome: the wind was not permitting (literally, 'not allowing us') to proceed on their intended course. The verb captures the wind's refusal to allow further progress—they couldn't sail where they wanted because contrary winds prevented advancement. Nature itself becomes an agent either permitting or forbidding human plans.

(1×) The translations show permission or allowance ('allowing,' 'permitiendo,' 'permettre'). Luke's nautical precision recognizes that successful sailing depends on wind permission—sailors can plan courses, but wind determines whether those plans can be executed. The genitive absolute construction emphasizes the wind's active role as either permitter or preventer. When wind doesn't allow, human skill and effort can't override the prohibition. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: allowing | es: permitiendo | fr: permettre | de: προσεῶντος Acts 27:7

προσεγγίζω G4331

to draw near, approach, come close; to move toward someone or something in proximity

This compound verb means to bring near or approach, functioning both transitively (to bring something near) and intransitively (to come near or approach). In biblical and post-biblical Greek, it commonly described approaching a person, place, or moment in time. The middle voice emphasized personal involvement in the approach. While less frequent in classical texts, it gained currency in Hellenistic Greek and appears in the New Testament context of approaching God, sacred spaces, or eschatological events. The spatial sense often carried spiritual or relational overtones.

προσεδρ-εύω G4332 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

to attend to, to wait upon, to devote oneself constantly to service or duty

Originally meaning to sit beside or near, this verb developed the sense of constant attendance and devoted service. Classical usage included keeping watch, being always at someone's side, or applying oneself persistently to duties. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 9:13 regarding temple service: those attending to the altar get their share from the altar. The verb implies regular, devoted service—not occasional help but continuous attendance and faithful discharge of sacred duties, which merits participation in the altar's provision.

(1×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'attending' or 'serving' ('attending,' 'sirviendo,' 'rester auprès,' 'dabei sitzen'). Paul's argument depends on recognizing altar service as continuous devotion, not casual involvement. Those who attend the altar—who are constantly there, devoted to sacred duties—have legitimate claim to support from altar offerings. This parallel justifies gospel workers receiving support: devoted ministry to the gospel merits provision, just as devoted altar service did. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: attending | es: sirviendo | fr: rester-auprès | de: dabei-sitzen 1Cor 9:13

προσεργάζομαι G4333 V-AIM-3S (1×)

to work at in addition, to gain by trading, to earn additional profit through effort

A compound verb meaning to work at something additionally and thereby gain more. In the parable of the minas (Luke 19:16), the first servant reports that his mina has gained ten more—the verb indicates additional profit earned through trading or working. Unlike passive increase, this verb suggests active effort that produced results. The servant didn't merely preserve the capital but actively worked it to generate additional value, which is precisely what the master expected and rewarded.

(1×) The translations show active gaining ('has gained,' 'ganó,' 'gagner en plus'). Jesus' parable turns on this verb—faithful servants are those who actively work the master's resources to produce additional return. The prefix 'pros-' emphasizes the additional nature of the gain: not just preserving the original mina but earning more beyond it. This active trading demonstrates faithfulness worthy of greater responsibility and reward. WORK AND LABOR

en: has-gained | es: ganó | fr: gagner-en-plus | de: προσηργάσατο Luke 19:16

προσέρχομαι G4334 V-PSM/P-1P (86×)

To come to, approach, or draw near; used of physical movement toward a person, cultic approach to God, or purposeful visiting.

One of the most common verbs of motion in the Gospels, προσέρχομαι appears overwhelmingly in Matthew as a narrative formula: someone 'came to' Jesus and spoke. Yet the word has deeper resonance in Hebrews, where it becomes the technical term for approaching God in worship—echoing the Old Testament priestly language of drawing near to the altar. The physical and spiritual senses are bridged by the word's inherent directionality: movement toward a significant person or presence. Spanish 'acercándose' and French 's'approcher' cover the range elegantly, while German 'hinzutreten' captures the formal, purposeful quality especially prominent in Hebrews.

1. approach or come to physically (77×) The vast majority of occurrences (about 77) describe physical approach—coming to, drawing near to, or moving toward someone in narrative space. Matthew uses it as a standard introduction formula: 'and having approached (προσελθών), he/they said...' (Matt 4:11; 8:2, 5, 19). The multilingual glosses are consistent: Spanish 'acercándose,' French 's'approcher,' German 'tritt heran.' It covers everything from disciples approaching Jesus to crowds gathering and individuals seeking healing. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: having-approached, having-come, having-come-forward | es: acercándose, habiendo-acercado, habiéndose-acercado | fr: s'approcher | de: tritt-heran Matt 4:11; Matt 5:1; Matt 8:2; Matt 8:5; Matt 8:19

2. draw near to God in worship (7×) About 7 occurrences shift to a cultic or spiritual register: drawing near to God in worship, prayer, or faith. This sense concentrates in Hebrews, where the author exhorts believers to 'approach the throne of grace with boldness' (Heb 4:16) and 'draw near with a true heart' (Heb 10:22; 11:6). The echo of Old Testament priestly approach (Hebrew קָרַב) is unmistakable. Spanish 'acerquémonos' and German 'hinzutreten' in these contexts carry the weight of deliberate, reverent approach to the divine presence. 1 Tim 6:3 extends this to 'approaching' sound doctrine. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: approaches, approaching, let-us-approach | es: acercándose, acercémonos, acerquémonos | fr: s'approcher | de: hinzutreten, tritt-heran Luke 9:42; Acts 7:31; 1Tim 6:3; Heb 4:16; Heb 10:22

3. go to or visit with purpose (2×) Two occurrences (Acts 9:1; 10:28) emphasize going to someone with a specific purpose or errand, where the directional nuance is 'going to' rather than 'coming toward' the narrator. In Acts 9:1, Saul 'went to' the high priest to obtain letters; in Acts 10:28, Peter explains the impropriety of 'visiting' a Gentile. Spanish 'acercarse' and English 'to visit' highlight the purposeful, intentional character of the movement. NEARNESS

AND APPROACH
en: having-approached, to-visit | es: acercarse, acercándose | fr: s'approcher | de: tritt-heran Acts 9:1; Acts 10:28

προσευχή G4335 N-GFP (37×)

prayer — the act of praying or a specific prayer offered, especially directed to God in petition and worship

Proseuche denotes both the practice of prayer and individual prayers offered, deriving from prosechomai ('to pray toward, to entreat'). Jesus uses it to define the Temple's purpose: 'my house shall be called a house of prayer' (Matt 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46), quoting Isaiah 56:7. The early church devotes itself to proseuche as a communal discipline (Acts 1:14; 2:42; 6:4), and Paul pairs it repeatedly with deesis ('supplication') in his letters (Eph 6:18; Phil 4:6; 1 Tim 2:1; 5:5). The word also carries a secondary sense as a physical place of prayer, especially a Jewish gathering site outside city walls (Acts 16:13, 16). French 'priere,' Spanish 'oracion,' and German 'Gebet' all render it as prayer without distinction between act and place.

1. prayer: act or content of praying (35×) Split from sense 75793. Criteria: The activity of prayer, specific prayers offered, prayer as spiritual discipline, or prayer as the intended purpose of a place ('house of prayer')
en: prayer, prayers | es: oraciones, oración | fr: prière | de: Gebet, Gebete Matt 17:21; Matt 21:13; Matt 21:22; Mark 9:29; Mark 11:17

2. place of prayer (proseuche as location) (2×) Split from sense 75793. Criteria: Physical location designated for prayer, as in Acts 16:13, 16 where proseuche refers to a riverside gathering site at Philippi en: prayer | es: oración | fr: prière | de: Gebet Acts 16:13; Acts 16:16

προσεύχομαι G4336 V-PMM/P-2P (86×)

Pray — to address God in petition, supplication, intercession, or worship

The Greek προσεύχομαι is the New Testament's primary verb for prayer directed to God. It covers the full range of prayerful communication — personal petition (Matt 6:5–6), intercessory prayer for others (Matt 5:44), extended solitary prayer (Matt 14:23), and communal worship. Jesus' own prayer life is frequently described with this word, establishing a model for the disciples. Unlike αἰτέω (which emphasizes asking) or δέομαι (which stresses urgent need), προσεύχομαι frames prayer as an act of turning toward God in reverent address. Spanish orando, French prier, and German beten all preserve this devotional orientation. The word appears in every major NT author's vocabulary.

pray to God (86×) To offer prayer, supplication, or worship directed to God, encompassing petition, intercession, thanksgiving, and devotional communion. Used of Jesus' own prayer life (Matt 14:23; Mark 1:35; Luke 6:12) and his teaching on prayer (Matt 6:5–9), as well as apostolic and congregational prayer throughout Acts and the Epistles. The middle voice form (προσεύχομαι) conveys personal engagement — one directs oneself toward God in address. Multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as the core 'pray' verb: Spanish orando, French prier, German beten. PRAYER (VERBAL ACT)
en: praying | es: orando | fr: prier | de: beten, betet Matt 5:44; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:9; Matt 14:23; Matt 23:14

προσέχω G4337 V-PNA (24×)

Pay attention, give heed to; beware, be on guard against; devote oneself to

The verb prosecho (προσέχω, literally 'hold toward') directs the mind's gaze in three related but distinguishable ways. Most often in Acts, it means to pay attention — the Samaritans 'gave heed' to Philip's signs and preaching (Acts 8:6, 10-11), and Paul urges the Ephesian elders to 'pay attention to yourselves and the whole flock' (Acts 20:28). In the Gospels, Jesus repeatedly warns 'beware of' the Pharisees' leaven, false prophets, and human adversaries (Matt 7:15; 10:17; 16:6, 11-12; Luke 12:1; 20:46). A single instance in Hebrews 7:13 carries the sense 'has devoted himself to' or 'attended to,' describing a priestly lineage at the altar. Spanish captures the split well: atender for attention, guardarse for guarding.

1. pay attention, give heed (14×) To pay attention, give heed, or direct one's mind attentively toward a person, teaching, or message. The Samaritans 'gave heed' to Simon's sorcery and then to Philip's gospel (Acts 8:6, 10-11), the Jewish leaders are warned to 'consider carefully' what they do with the apostles (Acts 5:35), and Paul tells Timothy to 'give attention to reading, exhortation, and teaching' (1 Tim 4:1, 13). Spanish atender/atendían and German achtgeben both convey the positive cognitive orientation — turning the mind toward something worthy of notice. BEING ON GUARD
en: Take-heed, give-attention, giving-attention | es: Cuidad, atender, atendían | fr: prendre-garde | de: achtgeben, gibt-acht Luke 17:3; Acts 5:35; Acts 8:6; Acts 8:10; Acts 8:11

2. beware, be on guard (9×) To beware, watch out for, or be on guard against danger or deception. Jesus dominates this sense cluster: 'beware of false prophets' (Matt 7:15), 'beware of the leaven of the Pharisees' (Matt 16:6, 11-12; Mark 8:15; Luke 12:1), 'beware of men' who will persecute (Matt 10:17), and 'beware of the scribes' (Luke 20:46). The construction typically uses prosechete + apo ('hold yourselves away from'). Spanish guardaos/guardarse and the warning imperative across languages mark the shift from receptive attention to defensive vigilance. BEING ON GUARD
en: Beware, Watch, beware | es: Guardaos, guardaos, guardarse | fr: prendre-garde | de: gibt-acht Matt 6:1; Matt 7:15; Matt 10:17; Matt 16:6; Matt 16:11

3. devote oneself to, occupy with (1×) To devote oneself to or occupy oneself with a practice or duty over time. Hebrews 7:13 says the one about whom these things are spoken 'has attended to' (prosesscheken) the altar — meaning has served at or been dedicated to priestly service. This is a sustained, habitual orientation rather than a momentary act of attention or a single warning. Spanish se-ha-dedicado and German achtgeben (in its sustained sense) reflect the durational, vocational quality that sets this usage apart from the episodic senses. BEING ON GUARD en: has-attended | es: se-ha-dedicado | fr: prendre-garde | de: achtgeben Heb 7:13

προσηλόω G4338 V-APA-NMS (1×)

to nail to, to fasten with nails, to affix firmly by nailing

A compound verb intensifying basic nailing with the sense of nailing something to a surface. Classical usage included nailing to crosses (crucifixion), nailing boards to walls, or metaphorically fixing the soul to material things. Paul uses it in Colossians 2:14 with stunning imagery: God canceled the written code with its regulations, having nailed it to the cross. The verb transforms the cross from instrument of shame to place where legal obligations are permanently affixed and thereby nullified—nailed there with Christ, the law's condemning power is removed.

(1×) The glosses preserve the nailing imagery ('having nailed,' 'clavándolo,' 'annageln'). Paul's metaphor is dense: the certificate of debt (our record of legal violations) was not merely torn up but nailed to the cross with Christ. This public nailing both displays the debt (it's genuinely ours) and cancels it (Christ bore it). What was nailed to the cross died there, including the law's power to condemn those in Christ. BINDING AND TYING en: having-nailed | es: clavándolo | fr: προσηλώσας | de: annageln Col 2:14

προσήλυτ-ος G4339 N-AMS (4×)

A convert to Judaism; a Gentile who has adopted Jewish faith and practice, a proselyte.

Derived from a root meaning 'one who has come to' or 'approached,' this term designates a Gentile who has formally converted to Judaism, embracing its covenant, law, and worship. In the New Testament it appears in contexts ranging from Jesus' sharp critique of Pharisaic proselytizing efforts (Matt 23:15) to the vibrant multicultural scene at Pentecost where proselytes from many nations heard the gospel (Acts 2:11). The multilingual glosses uniformly retain the transliterated form 'proselyte' across English, Spanish, and French, reflecting the term's technical character as a recognized religious-social category.

(4×) A Gentile convert to Judaism who has fully embraced the Jewish faith, including circumcision (for males), Torah observance, and participation in temple worship. The translation signatures across languages consistently retain the transliterated loanword ('prosélito,' 'prosélyte'), underscoring the term's status as a fixed category rather than a loose description. Jesus warns about aggressive proselytizing that produces converts 'twice the child of hell' (Matt 23:15), while Acts records proselytes among the early church's first hearers (Acts 2:11) and members (Acts 6:5, Nicolaus of Antioch). FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-proselyte, proselyte, proselytes | es: prosélito, prosélitos | fr: prosélyte | de: προσήλυτοι, προσήλυτον, προσηλύτων Matt 23:15; Acts 2:11; Acts 6:5; Acts 13:43

πρόσκαιρος G4340 Adj-AFS (4×)

Temporary, lasting only for a time; transient, not enduring.

This adjective draws a sharp line between what is fleeting and what is eternal. Built from 'pros' (toward) and 'kairos' (season, opportune time), it describes things that belong only to a particular moment and will not last. Paul uses it in a powerful contrast: 'the things that are seen are temporary, but the things that are unseen are eternal' (2 Cor 4:18). In the parable of the sower, it characterizes those whose faith withers under pressure because it has no deep root (Matt 13:21; Mark 4:17). Spanish 'temporal' and French 'temporaire'/'passager' capture both the time-bound and passing nuances.

(4×) Lasting only for a limited season; transient and impermanent, typically contrasted with what is eternal (aiōnios). The multilingual evidence splits along an illuminating axis: French offers both 'passager' (passing, fleeting) and 'temporaire' (temporary), while Spanish uses 'temporal' in the sense of belonging-to-time rather than eternity. In the Synoptic parables, it describes superficial faith that endures only 'for a time' before falling away under tribulation (Matt 13:21; Mark 4:17). Paul and the author of Hebrews both deploy it to relativize worldly advantages: affliction is 'temporary' (2 Cor 4:18), and sin's pleasure is 'for a season' (Heb 11:25). TIME AND SEASONS

en: temporary | es: temporal, temporales | fr: passager, temporaire | de: zeitlich, πρόσκαιρός Matt 13:21; Mark 4:17; 2Cor 4:18; Heb 11:25

προσκᾰλέω G4341 V-APM-NMS (29×)

To summon or call to oneself, used characteristically of Jesus gathering disciples or crowds

A compound verb (πρός + καλέω, 'to call toward'), προσκαλέω appears almost exclusively in the middle voice (προσκαλεσάμενος) in the NT, conveying personal initiative—'having summoned to himself.' It is the signature verb for Jesus calling his disciples into mission (Matt 10:1), drawing crowds for teaching (Matt 15:10), and summoning individuals for private instruction (Matt 18:2, 32). Spanish 'habiendo-llamado' and French 'appeler-à-soi' both capture the reflexive directional force. The word carries authority without coercion: the one who calls expects willing approach.

to summon, call to oneself (29×) To call or summon someone toward oneself, consistently in the middle voice, expressing personal authority and initiative. Jesus uses it to commission the Twelve (Matt 10:1), gather crowds for crucial teaching (Mark 7:14, Matt 15:10), and single out individuals (Matt 18:2). In Acts, the Holy Spirit uses the same verb to set apart Barnabas and Saul for mission (Acts 13:2), extending the pattern of divine summoning. CALLING AND NAMING en: calling-together, having-called, having-called-to-himself | es: habiendo-convocado, habiendo-llamado, llamando | fr: appeler, appeler-à-soi | de: herbeirufen, ruft-herbei Matt 10:1; Matt 15:10; Matt 15:32; Matt 18:2; Matt 18:32

προσκαρτερ-έω G4342 V-FIA-1P (10×)

To persist steadfastly in an activity (especially prayer or teaching); also to attend constantly upon a person.

Proskartereo combines pros ('toward') with kartereo ('to be steadfast, endure'), producing a word that means to hold fast to something or someone with unwavering persistence. In Acts it becomes almost a technical term for the early church's communal devotion: they 'continued steadfastly' in the apostles' teaching, fellowship, breaking of bread, and prayers (Acts 2:42). Spanish 'perseverad' and 'perseverando' echo this dogged constancy. But in two passages the word shifts toward personal attendance: in Mark 3:9 Jesus asks that a boat 'wait on' him, and in Acts 10:7 Cornelius's devout soldier 'attended' him constantly. The underlying idea is always sustained, reliable presence — whether directed at a sacred practice or a person.

1. persist in, devote oneself to (8×) Persisting steadfastly or devoting oneself wholeheartedly to an activity — especially prayer, teaching, or ministry. This is the characteristic sense in Acts: the 120 'continued steadfastly in prayer' (Acts 1:14), the church devoted itself to apostolic teaching and fellowship (Acts 2:42), and the apostles resolved to 'give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word' (Acts 6:4). Spanish 'perseveraremos' and French 'perseverer' both convey the sustained, resolute quality. Paul extends this to personal life in Rom 12:12 and Col 4:2, making it a hallmark of Christian endurance. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: attending-to, continue-steadfastly, continuing | es: perseverad, perseverando, perseveraremos | fr: persévérer | de: anhalten, verharrt Acts 1:14; Acts 2:42; Acts 2:46; Acts 6:4; Acts 8:13

2. attend to, wait upon (2×) Attending constantly upon a person, waiting on or being at someone's disposal — a relational rather than activity-focused persistence. In Mark 3:9 Jesus tells his disciples to have a small boat 'wait on' (proskarterē) him because of the crowd, and in Acts 10:7 one of Cornelius's soldiers who 'attended him constantly' is sent to Joppa. Spanish 'sirviendo' ('serving') and 'esté-preparada' ('be at the ready') bring out the sense of personal attendance and readiness that distinguishes this from devotion to an abstract practice. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: attending, should-wait-on | es: esté-preparada, sirviendo | fr: persévérer | de: anhalten, verharrt Mark 3:9; Acts 10:7

προσκαρτέρ-ησις G4343 N-DFS (1×)

perseverance, persistence, steadfast continuance, patient endurance in continuing effort

The noun form expressing the quality of persistent continuance without giving up. Paul uses it in Ephesians 6:18 regarding prayer: pray at all times in the Spirit, with all perseverance and petition for all the saints. The noun captures sustained, persistent prayer—not one-time requests but ongoing, steady intercession that doesn't quit when answers don't come immediately. Perseverance in prayer demonstrates faith that keeps asking, keeps seeking, keeps knocking despite delayed response.

(1×) The multilingual evidence converges on persistence ('perseverance,' 'perseverancia,' 'Ausdauer'). Paul's exhortation requires recognizing prayer as a long-term discipline requiring sustained effort. Perseverance suggests prayer that doesn't give up when answers don't come quickly, that keeps interceding for the saints despite discouragement, that demonstrates faith through persistent approach to God. This steadfast continuance marks mature spiritual warfare. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: perseverance | es: perseverancia | fr: προσκαρτερήσει | de: Ausdauer Eph 6:18

προσκεφᾰλ-αιον G4344 N-ANS (1×)

cushion, pillow, something to rest the head on

A term for any cushion or pillow, particularly for resting the head. Classical usage included pillows for sleep and cushions for reclining. Mark 4:38 describes Jesus asleep in the boat during the storm, his head resting on the cushion (probably the wooden seat or leather cushion used by the helmsman). The detail emphasizes both Jesus' genuine humanity (exhausted enough to sleep through a storm) and his supernatural peace (resting securely while disciples panic). The cushion is the place where incarnate divinity rests in human vulnerability.

(1×) The translations uniformly give 'cushion' or 'pillow' ('cushion,' 'cabezal,' 'oreiller,' 'Kopfkissen'). Mark's vivid detail serves multiple purposes: it confirms Jesus was genuinely asleep (head on pillow, not just dozing), it highlights the contrast between his rest and the disciples' terror, and it prepares for the dramatic awakening when they rouse him. The cushion becomes the symbol of trust—while creation rages, the Creator rests. RECLINING AND LYING en: cushion | es: cabezal | fr: oreiller | de: Kopfkissen Mark 4:38

προσκληρόω G4345 V-AIP-3P (1×)

to be allotted to, to be joined or attached to, to be assigned by lot

A compound verb combining lot-casting with additional assignment or attachment. Classical usage included allotting, attributing, or assigning. The passive in Acts 17:4 describes some Jews and many Greeks being joined to Paul and Silas after their Thessalonian synagogue preaching—literally, they were allotted or attached to the missionaries. The verb may suggest divine assignment (God allotted these converts to Paul) or simply describe adherence (they attached themselves to Paul's teaching and joined his company).

(1×) The glosses show joining or association ('were joined,' 'se unieron,' 's'associer'). Luke's verb choice may be theologically loaded: these converts weren't random additions but people allotted by God to the apostolic mission. Whether emphasizing divine sovereignty in conversion or simply describing how new believers attached themselves to apostolic leadership, the verb pictures the formation of a believing community around the gospel message. CLINGING AND JOINING en: were-joined | es: se-unieron | fr: s'associer | de: προσεκληρώθησαν Acts 17:4

πρόσ-κλῐσις G4346 V-AIP-3S (2×)

inclination toward, attachment to, or partiality in judgment

A term for leaning toward someone, whether physically or metaphorically. In Acts 5:36, it describes followers attaching themselves to the rebel Theudas. In 1 Timothy 5:21, Paul warns Timothy to avoid partiality—literally, 'according to inclination'—when judging church matters. The root idea is 'leaning against' or 'inclining toward,' easily shifting from neutral association to favoritism.

(2×) The evidence spans 'was attached' (Acts 5:36) and 'partiality' (1 Timothy 5:21), showing the term's range from physical association to biased judgment. Spanish 'se unieron' and French 'inclinaison' capture both senses. Acts uses it for political adherence to a leader, while 1 Timothy condemns favoritism in church discipline—both involve improper leaning toward certain people. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: partiality, was-attached | es: parcialidad, se-unieron | fr: inclinaison, πρόσκλισιν | de: sich-zuwenden, προσεκλίθη Acts 5:36; 1Tim 5:21

προσκολλ-άω G4347 V-FIP-3S (2×)

to be joined closely to, cleave to, or be united with someone

A verb for being glued or joined fast to another. Both NT occurrences quote Genesis 2:24 on marriage: a man shall leave father and mother and be joined to his wife. Mark 10:7 appears in Jesus' teaching on divorce, and Ephesians 5:31 in Paul's theology of marriage as a picture of Christ and the church. The term conveys permanent, intimate union—not casual association but covenantal bonding.

(2×) The glosses ('will be joined,' 'se unirá,' 's'attacher,' 'sich verbinden') uniformly point to close union. Both Mark 10:7 and Ephesians 5:31 cite the Genesis creation ordinance for marriage. The verb's root (κολλάω, 'glue') emphasizes inseparable attachment, reinforcing Jesus' and Paul's teaching that marriage is a one-flesh union designed by God to be permanent. CLINGING AND JOINING en: will-be-joined | es: se-unirá | fr: s'attacher | de: sich-verbinden Mark 10:7; Eph 5:31

πρόσκομμα G4348 N-GNS (6×)

proskomma – a stumbling block, obstacle, or cause of spiritual offense

The neuter noun proskomma (from proskopto, 'to strike against') denotes something that causes someone to stumble, trip, or fall. In the New Testament it operates almost entirely in the metaphorical-spiritual register: Christ is 'the stone of stumbling' to unbelieving Israel (Rom 9:32-33, quoting Isa 8:14), and Paul warns believers not to place a stumbling block before a weaker brother by exercising liberty carelessly (Rom 14:13, 20; 1 Cor 8:9). The image is vivid – a rock in the path that catches the unwary foot. Spanish tropiezo, French pierre d'achoppement, and German Anstoss all preserve this concrete-yet-metaphorical obstacle imagery.

stumbling block, obstacle, cause of offense (6×) A stumbling block or obstacle that causes someone to trip and fall, used metaphorically in the NT for anything that causes spiritual offense or leads another into sin. Christ himself is called 'the stone of stumbling' for unbelieving Israel (Rom 9:32-33, drawing on Isa 8:14 and 28:16), while Paul urges believers not to put a proskomma before a weaker brother (Rom 14:13, 20; 1 Cor 8:9). Spanish tropiezo and French pierre d'achoppement both retain the physical stumbling metaphor, while German Anstoss captures the sense of an offensive shock. All six occurrences share this single figurative-obstacle sense. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: a-stumbling-block, of-stumbling, stumbling | es: de-tropiezo, tropiezo | fr: Anstoss, pierre-d'achoppement | de: Anstoss Rom 9:32; Rom 9:33; Rom 14:13; Rom 14:20; 1Cor 8:9

προσ-κοπή G4349 N-AFS (1×)

cause of stumbling, occasion for offense, something that trips or causes trouble

A noun describing what causes someone to stumble or take offense—an obstacle, impediment, or occasion for trouble. Classical usage included antipathies and offenses taken. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 6:3 declaring that his ministry gives no cause of stumbling in anything, lest the ministry be blamed. The term captures whatever might bring discredit on the gospel—moral failure, inconsistency, hypocrisy—anything that would cause others to stumble over the messenger and reject the message. Paul zealously guards against providing such offense.

(1×) The translations show 'stumbling' or 'offense' ('cause for stumbling,' 'ocasión de tropiezo,' 'offense,' 'Anstoss'). Paul's pastoral concern is that nothing in his conduct become a προσκοπή—an obstacle that trips people up and prevents them from receiving the gospel. He'll endure any hardship, forego any right, suffer any inconvenience to ensure that the message isn't hindered by the messenger. Removing stumbling-causes is essential to faithful ministry. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: cause-for-stumbling | es: ocasión-de-tropiezo | fr: offense | de: Anstoss 2Cor 6:3

προσκόπτω G4350 V-PIA-3S (8×)

To stumble, strike against; literally of physical collision, figuratively of spiritual offense or failure

The verb proskopto carries the concrete image of striking one's foot against a stone, an image the devil himself quotes from Psalm 91:12 when tempting Jesus at the pinnacle of the temple (Matt 4:6; Luke 4:11). From this physical root grows a rich figurative usage: Israel 'stumbled' over the stone of offense (Rom 9:32), believers are cautioned not to cause a brother to stumble (Rom 14:21), and walking in spiritual darkness leads to stumbling (John 11:9-10). The multilingual translations helpfully split along this line — Spanish uses 'tropieces' for physical striking but 'tropezaron' for the metaphorical sense.

1. stumble (metaphorical/spiritual) (5×) To stumble or take offense in a metaphorical or spiritual sense, indicating failure to accept truth, falling into sin, or encountering an obstacle on the path of faith. This is the dominant New Testament usage, appearing five times. In John 11:9-10 Jesus uses the imagery of walking in daylight versus darkness to distinguish those who stumble spiritually from those who walk securely. Romans 9:32 describes Israel stumbling over the 'stone of stumbling' (lithos proskommatos), and 1 Peter 2:8 echoes this with those who stumble because they disobey the word. Romans 14:21 turns the concept ethical: do not cause your brother to stumble. Spanish 'tropezaron/tropiezan' and German 'anstossen' consistently map to figurative collision with an obstacle. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: he-stumbles, stumble, stumbles | es: tropezaron, tropieza, tropiezan | fr: heurter | de: anstossen John 11:9; John 11:10; Rom 9:32; Rom 14:21; 1Pet 2:8

2. strike against (physical) (3×) To strike one thing against another in a literal, physical sense — the foot against a stone, or waves against a house. In Matt 4:6 and Luke 4:11, the devil quotes Psalm 91:12 promising angelic protection 'lest you strike your foot against a stone,' and in Matt 7:27 the floods and winds 'beat against' the house built on sand. Spanish distinguishes this clearly with 'tropieces' (you might trip) and 'golpearon' (they battered), while the French 'heurter' captures the percussive physical impact in both passages. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: beat-against, you-strike | es: golpearon, tropieces | fr: heurter | de: προσέκοψαν, προσκόψῃς Matt 4:6; Matt 7:27; Luke 4:11

προσκῠλ-ίω G4351 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to roll up to, roll a stone against an opening

A verb describing the action of rolling something (especially a stone) into place. Both uses are in burial narratives: Matthew 27:60 and Mark 15:46 describe Joseph of Arimathea rolling a great stone against the door of Jesus' tomb. The prefix προσ- ('toward') indicates rolling something up to close an entrance. This mundane detail becomes theologically significant—the sealed tomb that could not hold the risen Lord.

(2×) The glosses ('rolled,' 'rodó,' 'rouler,' 'heranwälzen') converge on the physical action. Matthew 27:60 and Mark 15:46 narrate Joseph sealing Jesus' tomb with a large stone. The aorist participle in Matthew ('having rolled') and the finite verb in Mark describe the same Passion Week event—a detail that sets up the resurrection miracle when the stone is later rolled away. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14787 WITH 3 SENSES en: having-rolled, rolled | es: habiendo-rodado, rodó | fr: rouler | de: heranwaelzen, προσκυλίσας Matt 27:60; Mark 15:46

προσκῠν-έω G4352 V-AIA-3S (60×)

To prostrate oneself in worship before God or in reverent homage before a person of authority; to bow down, do obeisance.

The verb προσκυνέω captures the ancient Near Eastern and Greco-Roman practice of falling prostrate before someone of supreme authority. In the New Testament it spans the full range from true divine worship – the kind the Father seeks (John 4:23-24) – to the reverent homage that supplicants pay when falling at Jesus' feet (Matt 8:2; 9:18). The line between these senses is often deliberately ambiguous, as those who bow before Jesus may be recognizing more than they fully understand. German 'anbeten' and Spanish 'adorar' both lean toward the worship end, while the underlying Greek preserves the physical gesture of prostration.

1. worship God or deity (40×) Full religious worship directed toward God, a divine being, or an object of devotion, expressing adoration and reverence. This covers 40 occurrences and includes worship of the true God (John 4:23-24; Rev 4:10), idolatrous worship (Matt 4:9; Rev 13:4), and angelic refusal of worship (Rev 19:10; 22:9). Spanish 'adorar,' French 'adorer,' and German 'anbeten' all converge on the devotional, religious dimension. The Samaritan woman dialogue (John 4:20-24) provides the richest theological exploration of this sense. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: they-will-worship, to-worship, will-worship | es: a-adorar, adorando, adorar | fr: adorer, se-prosterner | de: anbeten, betet-an Matt 2:2; Matt 2:8; Matt 4:9; Matt 4:10; Mark 15:19

2. bow down in homage (20×) Prostrating oneself in respectful homage or supplication before a person of perceived authority or greatness, without necessarily implying full divine worship. Across 20 occurrences, this includes the Magi before the infant Jesus (Matt 2:11), the leper kneeling before Jesus for healing (Matt 8:2), and Jairus falling at Jesus' feet (Matt 9:18). The multilingual evidence shows interesting tension: Spanish 'adorar' and German 'anbeten' still use worship vocabulary, reflecting the Gospel writers' christological point that such homage may be more than mere social deference. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: bowed-down-to, he-worshiped, they-worshiped | es: adoraba, adoraron, adorándole | fr: adorer, se-prosterner | de: anbeten, betet-an Matt 2:11; Matt 8:2; Matt 9:18; Matt 14:33; Matt 15:25

προσκῠν-ητής G4353 N-NMP (1×)

worshiper, one who prostrates in worship, one who renders religious homage

An agent noun from the verb 'to worship' (prostrate, bow down), describing someone who worships. Jesus uses it in John 4:23 declaring that true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth. The noun identifies people characterized by worship—not occasional participants in religious ritual but those defined by genuine prostration before God. The emphasis on 'true' worshipers implies there are false ones—those whose worship is merely external form without internal reality.

(1×) The multilingual glosses give 'worshipers' universally ('worshippers,' 'adoradores,' 'adorateur,' 'Anbeter'). Jesus' statement to the Samaritan woman distinguishes authentic from inauthentic worship: true προσκυνηταί worship in spirit (from the heart, not just external ritual) and truth (according to God's self-revelation, not human imagination). The hour is coming—indeed has arrived with Jesus—when worship is redefined around spiritual reality rather than geographical location or ethnic tradition. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: worshippers | es: adoradores | fr: adorateur | de: Anbeter John 4:23

προσλᾰλ-έω G4354 V-ANA (2×)

to speak with, converse with, or address someone

A verb for talking to or conversing with another. In Acts 13:43, many Jews and devout proselytes follow Paul and Barnabas after the synagogue dismisses, and the apostles speak with them, urging them to continue in God's grace. In Acts 28:20, Paul explains to Roman Jewish leaders that he requested to see and speak with them about the hope of Israel. The term emphasizes personal, direct conversation.

(2×) The evidence ('speaking to,' 'hablando,' 'parler') uniformly denotes conversation. Acts 13:43 describes Paul and Barnabas conversing with interested hearers after a synagogue service, while 28:20 shows Paul initiating dialogue with Rome's Jewish community. Both passages involve apostolic communication that follows up initial proclamation with personal engagement. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: speaking-to, to-speak-with | es: hablando, hablar | fr: parler | de: προσλαλοῦντες, προσλαλῆσαι Acts 13:43; Acts 28:20

προσλαμβάνω G4355 V-APM-NMS (12×)

To take to oneself: receive into fellowship, take aside privately, or take for personal use (especially food).

Compounded from pros ('toward') and lambano ('take'), this verb always involves drawing something or someone closer to oneself. Its most theologically charged use is Paul's appeal in Romans 14-15: 'Welcome one another as Christ has welcomed you' (Rom 15:7), where receiving fellow believers into community mirrors Christ's own acceptance. But in the Gospels, Peter 'took Jesus aside' to rebuke Him (Matt 16:22; Mark 8:32) — an intimate, private gesture the Spanish 'tomándolo aparte' captures precisely. And during the storm at sea, Paul urges the sailors to 'take food' (Acts 27:33), where the verb carries the practical sense of partaking for sustenance.

1. receive, welcome, accept (6×) To receive, welcome, or accept a person into fellowship or community — the relational and theological core of the word. Paul urges the Roman church to 'receive' the weak in faith (Rom 14:1), and declares that 'Christ received us' (Rom 15:7). The Maltese 'welcomed' Paul's shipwrecked company with unusual kindness (Acts 28:2). Spanish splits between 'recibid' (receive) and 'nos acogieron' (they took us in), while German 'annehmen' captures the acceptance dimension. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: receive, received, they-welcomed | es: nos-acogieron, os-recibió, recibid | fr: accueillir, prendre | de: annehmen, nimmt-an Acts 28:2; Rom 14:1; Rom 14:3; Rom 15:7

2. take aside (3×) To take someone aside privately, often for correction, instruction, or intimate conversation. Peter 'took Jesus aside' and began to rebuke Him (Matt 16:22; Mark 8:32), and Priscilla and Aquila 'took Apollos aside' to explain the Way more accurately (Acts 18:26). Spanish 'tomándolo aparte' and the English 'taking aside' make the physical gesture vivid — drawing someone out of the group for a private word. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: having-taken-aside, taking-aside, took-aside | es: habiéndolo-tomado-aparte, lo-tomaron, tomando-aparte | fr: accueillir, prendre | de: annehmen, nimmt-an Matt 16:22; Mark 8:32; Acts 18:26

3. take, partake of (3×) To take something for oneself, especially food, or to recruit persons for a purpose. During the storm, Paul urged all aboard to 'take food' (Acts 27:33), and they ate (Acts 27:36). In Acts 17:5, certain men 'took along' some wicked fellows from the marketplace. Spanish 'habiendo tomado' and 'tomando consigo' convey the instrumental, acquisitive force — taking for use or enlistment rather than relational welcome. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: having-taken, took | es: habiendo-tomado, tomando-consigo, tomaron | fr: accueillir | de: nimmt-an Acts 17:5; Acts 27:33; Acts 27:36

πρόσ-ληψις G4356 N-NFS (1×)
acceptance, receiving, taking to oneself, admission or inclusion
A noun from the verb 'to receive' or 'take to oneself,' indicating the act of acceptance or reception. Paul uses it in Romans 11:15 in a striking parallel: if Israel's rejection means reconciliation for the world, what will their acceptance mean but life from the dead? The noun captures God's future reception of ethnic Israel back into covenant relationship. If their temporary exclusion brought blessing to Gentiles, their eventual inclusion will bring even greater blessing —resurrection-scale restoration.

(1×) The translations show 'acceptance' or 'admission' ('acceptance,' 'aceptación,' 'admission,' 'Annahme'). Paul's argument uses Israel's acceptance as the climax of redemptive history: their present rejection opened the door to Gentiles, but their future acceptance will trigger even greater glory. The noun suggests divine initiative—God's taking them back to himself, receiving them into favor. This acceptance will mean nothing less than eschatological resurrection life. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: acceptance | es: aceptación | fr: admission | de: Annahme Rom 11:15

προσμένω G4357 V-APA-NMS (7×)
To remain with, stay, continue; persisting in a place, with a person, or in an activity or commitment.
A compound verb (pros + meno) meaning to remain with, stay on, or continue steadfastly. It appears in two distinct settings: the crowds that have 'remained with' Jesus for three days without food (Matt 15:32; Mark 8:2), and the early church's exhortation to persist in faith and community. Barnabas urges believers in Antioch to 'remain with the Lord' in purpose of heart (Acts 11:23), and Paul and Silas stay on in various cities (Acts 13:43; 18:18). French 'demeurer/rester' and Spanish 'permanecer' both convey faithful continuance rather than mere physical lingering.

remain/continue/stay with (7×) To remain with, stay, continue — denotes persistent presence with a person, in a place, or in a state of commitment. In the feeding narratives, crowds have 'remained with' Jesus for days (Matt 15:32; Mark 8:2), expressing physical endurance alongside devotion. In Acts, it shifts toward faithful perseverance: Barnabas urges new believers to 'remain with the Lord' in wholehearted devotion (Acts 11:23), while Paul remains in cities to strengthen congregations (Acts 13:43; 18:18). In 1 Tim 1:3 and 5:5, it describes continuing in a role or in prayer. French 'demeurer,' Spanish 'permanecer,' and German 'bleiben' all underscore steadfast continuance rather than casual lingering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: continues, having-remained, they-remain | es: permanecen, permanecen-conmigo, permanecer | fr: demeurer, rester | de: bleiben, bleibt-bei Matt 15:32; Mark 8:2; Acts 11:23; Acts 13:43; Acts 18:18

προσορμ-ίζω G4358 V-AIP-3P (1×)
to bring to anchor, to moor, to come to shore or land a ship
A nautical term for bringing a ship to anchor near shore or landing at a beach. Classical usage included mooring near harbors or anchoring at coastlines. Later usage extended to passive voice: the ship was brought to shore. Mark 6:53 describes Jesus and disciples crossing the lake and being brought to shore at Gennesaret—they anchored or landed there. The technical precision indicates completed navigation: crossing accomplished, destination reached, vessel secured.

(1×) The glosses give nautical landing ('they anchored,' 'atracaron,' 'aborder,' 'anlanden'). Mark's usage indicates successful completion of the lake crossing after the walking-on-water incident. The disciples, terrified by seeing Jesus on the water and amazed by the stilling of wind, arrived safely and moored at Gennesaret. The verb signals transition from miraculous sea journey to new ministry location where crowds will bring the sick for healing. SHIP SEA VESSEL en: they-anchored | es: atracaron | fr: aborder | de: anlanden Mark 6:53

προσοφείλω G4359 V-PIA-2S (1×)
to owe besides, to owe in addition, to be still in debt for something more
A compound verb indicating additional debt beyond what might already be owed. Classical usage described owing something still or being in arrears. Paul uses it in Philemon 19 with delicate humor: if Onesimus owes you anything, charge it to me—though I could mention that you owe me your very self besides. The verb captures Paul's reminder that Philemon's spiritual debt to Paul (owing him his very self, since Paul led him to Christ) far exceeds any financial debt Onesimus might owe Philemon.

(1×) The translations emphasize the debt ('you owe,' 'me debes,' 'schulden'). Paul's rhetorical strategy depends on this verb: technically Onesimus may owe Philemon money or labor, but Philemon owes Paul infinitely more—his very self, his spiritual life, his existence as a Christian. This additional debt (προσοφείλεις) reframes the entire situation: how can Philemon demand payment from Onesimus when Philemon himself is perpetually indebted to Paul? NECESSITY AND OBLIGATION en: you-owe | es: me-debes | fr: προσοφείλεις | de: schulden Phlm 1:19

προσοχθ-ίζω G4360 V-AIA-1S (2×)
to be angry with, indignant toward, or weary of someone or something
A verb expressing strong displeasure or weariness. Both NT uses are in Hebrews 3, quoting Psalm 95. In verse 10, God says he was angry with that generation (the wilderness rebels). In verse 17, the author asks rhetorically with whom God was angry for forty years. The Septuagint background includes the sense of loathing or being vexed, capturing God's righteous anger at persistent unbelief.

(2×) The glosses ('I was angry,' 'me disgusté,' 'être en colère,' 'zürnen') converge on indignation. Hebrews 3:10 and 3:17 both cite Psalm 95:10 about God's anger toward Israel's wilderness generation. The verb conveys not mere irritation but deep, sustained displeasure at covenant unfaithfulness—a warning to NT readers not to harden their hearts as Israel did. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: I-was-angry, was-he-angry | es: me-disgusté, se-disgustó | fr: être-en-colère | de: zuernen Heb 3:10; Heb 3:17

πρόσπεινος G4361 Adj-NMS (1×)

hungry, experiencing hunger, in a state of needing food

An adjective describing the physical state of hunger or needing food. Luke uses it in Acts 10:10 to describe Peter on the Cornelius household roof: he became hungry and wanted to eat. The simple adjective sets the stage for the vision that follows—in a state of physical hunger, Peter receives a vision about clean and unclean foods that will revolutionize his understanding of Gentile inclusion. Physical hunger becomes the occasion for spiritual paradigm shift about who belongs in God's household.

(1×) The translations uniformly give 'hungry' ('hungry,' 'hambriento,' 'affamé'). Luke's narrative detail is preparation: Peter's physical hunger state makes the vision of foods particularly vivid and theologically appropriate. God meets Peter in his humanity (literally hungry on a rooftop) to teach a spiritual lesson about hunger for righteousness that transcends food laws and ethnic boundaries. The hungry apostle learns that God's table is bigger than he imagined. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: hungry | es: hambriento | fr: affamé | de: πρόσπεινος Acts 10:10

προσπήγνῡμι G4362 V-APA-NMP (1×)

to fasten or affix something to a surface, especially by nailing; to crucify

This verb describes the action of fixing or fastening something onto a surface, particularly through nailing. In classical usage it covered various acts of attachment, but in the New Testament context it specifically refers to the act of crucifixion. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize the nailing action (Spanish 'habiendo-clavado', French 'clouer'), pointing to the grim physical reality of affixing Jesus to the cross. Acts 2:23 employs this term to describe the violent death of Christ at the hands of lawless men.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence appears in Acts 2:23 where Peter declares that Jesus was nailed to the cross and killed. The Spanish and French translations emphasize the completed action of nailing ('habiendo-clavado', 'clouer'), while the domain classification under Physical Action > Attachment correctly identifies this as a concrete act of fastening. The classical lexicon confirms this word fundamentally means 'fix to or on' something, making it an apt term for the brutal mechanics of crucifixion. BINDING AND TYING en: having-nailed-up | es: habiendo-clavado | fr: clouer | de: προσπήξαντες Acts 2:23

προσπίπτω G4363 V-AIA-3P (8×)

To fall down before, prostrate oneself in supplication or worship; to fall upon or strike against

The verb prospipto literally means 'to fall toward' and in the New Testament overwhelmingly describes the act of falling down before someone in reverence, desperate supplication, or worship. Unclean spirits fall before Jesus crying out his identity (Mark 3:11), the hemorrhaging woman falls before him in fear and trembling (Mark 5:33), and a Syrophoenician mother prostrates herself at his feet begging for her daughter's deliverance (Mark 7:25). A single contrasting occurrence in Matt 7:25 preserves the older, impersonal meaning of physical impact — the rains and floods 'fell upon' the house.

1. fall before in reverence (7×) To fall down before someone as an act of supplication, reverence, or worship — the predominant New Testament sense. People prostrate themselves before Jesus out of desperation, awe, or recognition of divine authority. Mark 5:33 shows the healed woman falling down in fear and telling the whole truth; Mark 7:25 has a mother at Jesus' feet pleading for her demon-possessed daughter; Luke 5:8 records Peter falling at Jesus' knees saying 'depart from me, for I am a sinful man.' Spanish 'cayó ante' and German 'niederfallen' capture the directed, reverential nature of the fall — toward a person, not merely to the ground. The act bridges worship and petition, making prospipto a key gesture word in the Gospel narrative. FALLING AND FAILING

en: fell, fell-before, fell-down-at | es: cayendo-ante, cayó, cayó-ante | fr: tomber-devant | de: niederfallen, προσέπεσεν, προσπεσοῦσα Mark 3:11; Mark 5:33; Mark 7:25; Luke 5:8; Luke 8:28

2. fall upon, strike against (1×) To fall upon or strike against something with impersonal physical force, used of natural elements hitting a structure. The sole instance at Matt 7:25 describes the rain, floods, and winds that 'fell upon' the house built on the rock. English 'fell upon' and Spanish 'cayeron contra' shift from reverential prostration to violent impact, and the subject is no longer a person approaching someone in need but inanimate forces assaulting a building. This preserves the classical Greek sense of prospipto as physical collision, attested from the fifth century BC onward. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: fell-upon | es: cayeron–contra | fr: tomber-devant | de: προσέπεσαν Matt 7:25

προσποι-έω G4364 V-AIM-3S (1×)

to pretend, feign, or make a show of something that is not genuine

This middle voice verb captures the act of pretending or making a false show of something. In classical Greek it could mean to claim or procure for oneself, but the New Testament usage focuses on feigning or acting as if something were true when it is not. Luke employs this term to describe Jesus' behavior on the road to Emmaus, where he 'acted as if' he were going farther, creating a moment of suspense that invites the disciples to press him to stay. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'aparentó', French 'faire-semblant') consistently points to this sense of pretense or outward appearance.

(1×) In Luke 24:28, Jesus 'pretended' or 'made as if' to go farther along the road, though his intention was to accept the disciples' invitation to stay. The Spanish translation 'aparentó' (appeared, seemed) and French 'faire-semblant' (to pretend) both capture this nuance of outward show versus inner intent. The classical lexicon confirms that the middle voice often means 'take to oneself what does not belong to one, pretend to, lay claim to,' making this a perfect description of Jesus' pedagogical strategy—acting as though he would continue, thereby drawing out the disciples' hospitality and desire for his company. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: pretended | es: aparentó | fr: faire-semblant | de: προσεποιήσατο Luke 24:28

προσπορεύομαι G4365 V-PIM/P-3P (1×)

to approach, come near to, or draw close to someone or something

This compound verb describes movement toward a person or place, emphasizing the act of approaching or coming near. In classical contexts it could describe going to a location, applying for something, or even pursuing an office, but the New Testament usage is straightforward: physical approach. Mark uses this word when James and John come to Jesus with their ambitious request for positions of honor. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'se-acercan', French 's'approcher', German 'hinzukommen') all emphasize the spatial movement toward Jesus.

(1×) Mark 10:35 records James and John 'coming to' or 'approaching' Jesus to make their request for seats at his right and left in glory. The Spanish 'se-acercan' (they draw near) and French 's'approcher' (to approach) both emphasize the physical movement toward Jesus. The domain classification under Geography_Space > Spatial Positions aptly captures this as a locative/directional verb. The classical lexicon shows this verb's range includes 'go to, approach' as well as metaphorical applications like pursuing an office—ironically relevant given what James and John were about to request. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: come-to | es: se-acercan | fr: s'approcher | de: hinzukommen Mark 10:35

προσρήγνῡμι G4366 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to burst against, beat violently against, or dash upon something

A verb describing forceful impact. Both uses are in Luke 6, within Jesus' parable of two builders. In verse 48, the flood burst against the well-founded house but could not shake it. In verse 49, the stream burst against the sand-founded house, and it collapsed immediately. The verb vividly captures the violent assault of floodwaters testing the stability of what has been built.

(2×) The glosses ('burst,' 'embistió,' 'se jeter contre') emphasize violent impact. Luke 6:48 and 6:49 contrast two outcomes when torrents strike: the house on rock stands firm, while the one on sand collapses. The verb's force underscores Jesus' point—life's storms will test everyone's foundation, and only obedience to his words provides stability. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: burst, burst-against | es: embistió | fr: se-jeter-contre | de: προσέρηξεν Luke 6:48; Luke 6:49

προστάσσω G4367 V-RPM/P-ANP (7×)

To command, order authoritatively; to appoint or designate in advance

The verb προστάσσω (from πρός + τάσσω, 'to arrange toward') means to command or give authoritative orders. In the New Testament it appears almost exclusively for directives from God, Jesus, or Moses — carrying the full weight of divine or Torah-based authority. Joseph obeys what the angel 'commanded' (Matt 1:24), Jesus tells the healed leper to do what Moses 'commanded' (Matt 8:4, Mark 1:44, Luke 5:14), and Cornelius sends for Peter because an angel 'commanded' him (Acts 10:33). A single occurrence in Acts 17:26 stretches the word from verbal directive to cosmic appointment: God 'appointed' the seasons and boundaries for the nations, an act of sovereign ordering rather than spoken command.

1. to command / to order (6×) To issue a command or authoritative directive requiring compliance, used of orders given by God, Jesus, Moses, or angelic intermediaries. In Matt 1:24 Joseph does as the angel of the Lord 'commanded' him; in Matt 8:4, Mark 1:44, and Luke 5:14 Jesus tells the healed leper to offer what Moses 'commanded'; and in Acts 10:33 Cornelius gathers his household because of what God 'commanded' through an angel. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'mandó/ordenó,' French 'ordonner,' German 'befehlen' — uniformly points to authoritative verbal instruction. Both active and passive voice occur, with the passive (προσταχθέν, 'having been commanded') emphasizing the recipient's obligation. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: commanded, having-been-commanded, he-commanded | es: mandadas, mandó, ordenó | fr: ordonner | de: befehlen, befiehlt Matt 1:24; Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44; Luke 5:14; Acts 10:33

2. to appoint / to designate (1×) To appoint, designate, or set in order beforehand, implying divine preordination or sovereign arrangement rather than a specific verbal directive. In Acts 17:26 Paul declares that God 'appointed' (προστάξας) the times and boundaries of the nations' habitations. Spanish 'señalados' ('designated, marked out') captures this sense distinctly from 'mandó' ('he commanded'), revealing the shift from verbal command to cosmic ordering. The nuance moves from speech act to sovereign disposition — God arranging the structure of history rather than issuing a spoken instruction. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: appointed | es: señalados | fr: ordonner | de: befiehlt Acts 17:26

πρόστᾰτ-ις G4368 N-NFS (1×)

a female patron, protector, or benefactor who provides aid and support

This feminine noun designates a woman who acts as a patron, protector, or helper to others. In Greco-Roman society, a prostatis was someone of standing who used their influence and resources to aid those under their care. Paul applies this term to Phoebe in Romans 16:2, commending her as one who has been a benefactor to many, including Paul himself. The multilingual glosses reflect the protective and supportive dimension: Spanish 'protectora' (protector), French 'patronne' (patron), German 'Beschuetzerin' (protector). This reveals Phoebe's significant role in the early Christian community.

(1×) Paul describes Phoebe as a 'patron' or 'benefactor' in Romans 16:2, someone who has helped many people including Paul himself. The Spanish 'protectora' and German 'Beschuetzerin' both emphasize the protective, caring dimension, while French 'patronne' highlights her role as a patron with social standing and resources. The domain assignment to Guidance_Care > Help, Care For accurately reflects the supportive function of a prostatis. The classical lexicon confirms this is the feminine form of prostates, referring to a protector or patron, making Phoebe's commendation all the more striking as evidence of women's leadership and influence in the nascent church. HELPER ALLY

en: a-patron | es: protectora | fr: patronne | de: Beschuetzerin Rom 16:2

προστίθημι G4369 V-AIP-3P (18×)

To add or increase; also a Hebraic idiom meaning to proceed or do something further.

Prostithemi is a versatile verb whose primary sense is simply to add, whether adding something to a group, a quantity, or a situation. The Lord 'added' to the church daily those being saved (Acts 2:47), and Jesus teaches that seeking God's kingdom results in all things being 'added' to you (Matt 6:33; Luke 12:31). A distinctive secondary sense reflects the Hebrew idiom of yasap, meaning 'to proceed' or 'to do again,' where the verb signals continuation rather than numerical increase. Luke preserves this Semitism in Acts 12:3, where Herod 'proceeded to arrest Peter also,' a construction that feels foreign in Greek but perfectly natural in Hebrew narrative style.

1. add or increase (17×) To add something to an existing quantity, group, or entity, or to increase and grant something further. Spanish 'añadir/añadiendo' and French 'ajouter' both straightforwardly convey addition. This sense covers the vast majority of NT uses: God adds believers to the church (Acts 2:41, 47; 5:14; 11:24), Jesus promises that all necessities will be added to those who seek the kingdom (Matt 6:33; Luke 12:31), no one can add a cubit to his stature by worrying (Matt 6:27; Luke 12:25), and Herod added yet another crime to all his others by imprisoning John (Luke 3:20). The disciples' plea 'Increase our faith!' (Luke 17:5) uses the same verb, framing faith as something that can be added to or augmented. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: Add, added, having-added | es: Auméntanos, añadiendo, añadir | fr: ajouter | de: fügt-hinzu, hinzufuegen Matt 6:27; Matt 6:33; Mark 4:24; Luke 3:20; Luke 12:25

2. proceed or do further (1×) A Hebraic idiom meaning to proceed, go on, or do something further, reflecting the Hebrew construction with yasap where the verb signals continuation or repetition rather than literal addition. In Acts 12:3, Luke writes that Herod 'proceeded to arrest Peter also' (Spanish 'procedió,' English 'proceeded'), a Septuagintal construction where prostithemi functions as an auxiliary verb modifying the main action. This usage, while rare in the NT (only one clear instance), reveals Luke's deep familiarity with Septuagintal Greek and Hebrew narrative conventions. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: proceeded | es: procedió | fr: ajouter | de: fügt-hinzu Acts 12:3

προστρέχω G4370 V-APA-NMS (3×)

to run up to, run toward; to approach quickly with purpose or excitement

This verb means to run up to or toward someone, approaching quickly and purposefully. Classical usage included running toward people or things, sometimes in a hostile sense. The New Testament uses it exclusively in the Gospels to describe people running toward Jesus with eagerness, questions, or need. The term captures both physical movement and emotional intensity.

(3×) Describes running toward Jesus with urgency or excitement. Mark 9:15 states that when the crowd saw Jesus, they 'immediately ran up to him and greeted him.' Mark 10:17 introduces the rich young ruler: 'as he was setting out on his journey, a man ran up and knelt before him.' Acts 8:30 describes Philip: 'Philip ran up and heard him reading Isaiah the prophet.' The Spanish and German glosses emphasize 'running toward' or 'up to,' French 'accourir' captures the swift approach. This is not casual walking but urgent, eager movement toward Jesus or gospel opportunity—physical action expressing spiritual hunger or evangelical zeal. RUNNING AND RACING

en: having-run-up, running-to, running-up | es: corriendo-hacia, habiendo-corrido-hacia | fr: accourir | de: hinzulaufen, läuft-hinzu Mark 9:15; Mark 10:17; Acts 8:30

προσφάγιον G4371 N-ANS (1×)

food eaten with bread, especially fish or other relish accompanying a meal

This neuter noun originally referred to any food eaten as a side dish or accompaniment to bread, particularly fish. In classical usage it could mean a sacrificial victim, but by the New Testament period it commonly designated the fish or relish that accompanied bread at a meal. John uses this term when the risen Jesus asks his disciples if they have any food, specifically fish. The multilingual glosses consistently point to food (Spanish 'de-comida', French 'nourriture'), with English directly specifying 'fish,' reflecting the context of the post-resurrection breakfast by the Sea of Galilee.

(1×) In John 21:5, Jesus asks the disciples, 'Children, you do not have any fish, do you?' using this term for the catch they were seeking. While the Spanish 'de-comida' and French 'nourriture' broadly mean 'food,' the English gloss 'fish' reflects the specific context where Jesus is asking about their fishing success. The classical lexicon notes that prosphagion originally meant a victim sacrificed beforehand but came to mean the relish or side dish eaten with bread, especially fish. This fishing scene after the resurrection becomes a eucharistic moment, echoing Jesus' earlier feeding miracles. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: fish | es: de-comida | fr: nourriture | de: Zukost John 21:5

πρόσφᾰτος G4372 Adj-AFS (1×)

fresh, new, recently made or obtained; not yet old or decomposed

This adjective describes something that is fresh, new, or recently created—not yet aged, decomposed, or stale. In classical Greek it applied to fresh meat (as opposed to salted), newly drawn water, recent crops, and even freshly deceased bodies that had not yet decomposed. Hebrews employs this word metaphorically to describe the 'new and living way' that Jesus inaugurated through the curtain of his flesh. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate this as 'new' (Spanish 'nuevo', French 'nouveau', German 'neu'), emphasizing the freshness and recency of Christ's inaugurated access to God.

(1×) Hebrews 10:20 speaks of the 'new and living way' that Jesus opened for believers through the curtain—that is, through his flesh. The uniform translation as 'new' across Spanish, French, and German reflects the temporal dimension: this is a freshly inaugurated, recently established path of access to God. The classical lexicon shows prosphatos literally meant 'fresh, not decomposed,' applied to corpses, food, water, and other items that were recent or newly obtained. The metaphorical application to the 'way' Jesus opened emphasizes its unprecedented and vital freshness—a path of access that did not exist before Christ's death and resurrection. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS

en: new | es: nuevo | fr: nouveau | de: neu Heb 10:20

πρόσφᾰτος G4373 Adv (1×)

recently, lately, a short time ago

This adverb, derived from the adjective prosphatos (fresh, new), means recently or lately—indicating something that happened a short time ago. Luke uses this word to describe Aquila and Priscilla, who had 'recently' come from Italy due to Claudius's edict expelling Jews from Rome. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish 'recientemente', French 'récent', emphasizing the temporal proximity of their arrival. This detail situates the couple's arrival in Corinth within the broader historical context of Roman Imperial policy and Jewish diaspora movements.

(1×) Acts 18:2 notes that Aquila and Priscilla had 'recently come' from Italy because Claudius had commanded all Jews to leave Rome. The Spanish 'recientemente' (recently) and French 'récent' both emphasize the temporal nearness of their arrival in Corinth. This adverb, built on the adjective meaning 'fresh' or 'new,' indicates an event in the very recent past. The historical reference to Claudius's edict (likely around 49 AD) provides a chronological anchor for Paul's ministry in Corinth and introduces this remarkable couple who would become his coworkers in tentmaking and gospel proclamation. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS

en: recently | es: recientemente | fr: récent | de: προσφάτως Acts 18:2

προσφέρω G4374 V-APP-NMS (47×)

To offer a sacrifice or gift; to bring someone or something to another; to deal with, treat

Prosphero spans the sacred and the practical. Its dominant New Testament use is cultic: offering sacrifices, gifts, and prayers to God. The Magi 'offered' gold, frankincense, and myrrh (Matt 2:11), and Hebrews develops an extended theology of Christ who 'offered himself' once for all (Heb 9:14, 28). In the Gospels it also serves as a simple verb of conveyance – crowds 'brought' the sick to Jesus for healing (Matt 4:24; 8:16; 9:2). Spanish distinguishes ofrecer (offer) from traer (bring), neatly mirroring these two senses. A third, rare usage in Hebrews 12:7 means 'to deal with' or 'treat' someone in a particular manner – God 'deals with' you as sons.

1. offer a sacrifice or gift (30×) The cultic and devotional sense: to offer, present, or sacrifice before God. This includes the Magi's gifts (Matt 2:11), offerings commanded by the Law of Moses (Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44), the repeated offerings of Hebrews' priestly theology (Heb 9:7, 25; 10:1-2), and Christ's self-offering (Heb 9:14, 28). Spanish ofrecer, German darbringen, and French offrir uniformly mark this as sacred presentation. BRINGING AND OFFERING

en: are-offered, has-offered, having-offered | es: ha-ofrecido, habiendo-ofrecido, ofrece | fr: offrir | de: bringt-dar, darbringen Matt 2:11; Matt 5:23; Matt 5:24; Matt 8:4; Mark 1:44

2. bring to, present (16×) The general sense of bringing or carrying a person or thing to someone. Crowds 'brought' the sick, the demon-possessed, and the paralyzed to Jesus (Matt 4:24; 9:2; 9:32; 12:22). Children were 'brought' for his blessing (Matt 19:13). Spanish traer and fueron-traido clearly distinguish this physical conveyance from sacrificial offering. The focus is on delivery to an authority or healer. BRINGING AND OFFERING

en: I-brought, Were-bringing, You-brought | es: Trajisteis, Traían, fue-traído | fr: offrir | de: bringt-dar, darbringen Matt 4:24; Matt 8:16; Matt 9:2; Matt 9:32; Matt 12:22

3. (1×) A rare figurative sense meaning 'to deal with' or 'treat' someone in a certain manner. In Hebrews 12:7, God 'deals with' (prosphero) believers as a father with sons through discipline. English 'deals,' Spanish trata, and the shift from cultic to relational vocabulary confirm this as a distinct idiomatic extension of the root idea of 'bringing toward.' BRINGING AND OFFERING

en: deals | es: trata | fr: offrir | de: darbringen Heb 12:7

προσφιλ-ής G4375 Adj-NNP (1×)

dear, beloved, pleasing, agreeable, or lovely

This adjective describes what is dear, beloved, or pleasing—what evokes affection or is agreeable to the senses or heart. In classical usage it could describe people who are beloved, actions that are lovely, or things that are pleasing and agreeable. Paul employs this word in his famous virtue list in Philippians 4:8, urging believers to think on whatever is lovely or pleasing. The multilingual glosses span from 'lovely' (English), 'amables' (Spanish, amiable/kind), to German 'lieblich' (lovely, charming), all emphasizing the attractive, winsome quality that draws affection.

(1×) In Philippians 4:8, Paul exhorts believers to dwell on 'whatever is lovely'—things that are pleasing, attractive, and winsome. The English 'lovely' and German 'lieblich' capture the aesthetic and affective appeal, while Spanish 'amables' (amiable, kind) emphasizes the relational warmth. The classical lexicon shows this word could describe beloved persons, pleasing actions, or agreeable things, with both passive (dear to others) and active (kindly disposed) senses. Paul's instruction to meditate on the prosphiles directs Christian attention toward beauty, goodness, and whatever evokes affection—a holistic vision of mental and spiritual health. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: lovely | es: amables | fr: προσφιλῆ | de: lieblich Phil 4:8

προσφορ-ά G4376 N-DFS (9×)

An offering or sacrifice presented to God; both the act of offering and the thing offered, especially Christ's self-sacrifice.

Denotes a religious offering or sacrifice brought before God, encompassing both the act of presenting and the gift itself. In Ephesians 5:2, Christ gave himself as 'an offering and a sacrifice' — a phrase where this word stands alongside the more general term for sacrifice to specify the voluntary, presenting aspect. The author of Hebrews uses it repeatedly to contrast Christ's once-for-all offering with the repeated sacrifices of the old covenant (Heb 10:5, 10, 14, 18). Spanish 'ofrenda' and French 'offrande' both preserve the sense of a gift brought forward, while German 'Opfer' merges offering and sacrifice into one concept.

offering, sacrifice (presented to God) (9×) A religious offering or sacrifice presented to God, covering both the act of bringing an offering and the offering itself. In the NT, it ranges from Paul's description of Gentile converts as an acceptable 'offering' (Rom 15:16) to the ritual offerings connected with temple vows (Acts 21:26, 24:17), and climactically to Christ's self-offering that renders all other sacrifices obsolete (Eph 5:2, Heb 10:5, 10, 14, 18). Spanish 'ofrenda' and French 'offrande' both emphasize the gift-presenting dimension, while the Hebrews passages stress the definitive, unrepeatable character of Christ's offering as the theological center of the word's NT usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: offering, offerings | es: ofrenda, ofrendas | fr: offrande, sacrifice | de: Opfer, προσφορά, προσφοράς Acts 21:26; Acts 24:17; Rom 15:16; Eph 5:2; Heb 10:5

προσφων-έω G4377 V-AIA-3S (7×)

To call out to someone, address directly; to summon or speak to a person, whether in greeting, instruction, or public proclamation.

In classical Greek this verb covered a wide range of direct speech acts, from addressing someone by name to issuing orders. The New Testament uses it for calling out in everyday settings, as when children shout to one another in the marketplace (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:32), and for more solemn moments, as when Jesus calls his disciples by name (Luke 6:13) or addresses a crippled woman in the synagogue (Luke 13:12). Spanish renders it variously as 'habló' and 'les habló,' while French consistently uses 'adresser la parole,' both capturing the sense of deliberate, face-to-face communication.

call out to/address (7×) To call out to or address someone directly, whether summoning, greeting, or delivering a message face to face. The multilingual glosses converge on directed speech: German 'spricht an' (accosts), French 'adresser la parole' (address the word to), and Spanish 'les habló' (spoke to them). In the Gospels, this verb appears for children calling playmates in the agora (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:32), Jesus naming his apostles (Luke 6:13), his healing address to the bent woman (Luke 13:12), and Pilate addressing the crowd about Jesus (Luke 23:20). CALLING AND NAMING en: addressed, called-out, calling-out | es: habló, les-hablaba, les-habló | fr: adresser-la-parole, appeler | de: spricht-an Matt 11:16; Luke 6:13; Luke 7:32; Luke 13:12; Luke 23:20

πρόσ-χῠσις G4378 N-AFS (1×)

the act of pouring or sprinkling liquid upon something

This noun describes the action of pouring or sprinkling liquid onto something, particularly in ritual contexts. In the New Testament, it appears in Hebrews' description of the first Passover, where Moses instructed the Israelites to apply blood to their doorposts. The multilingual glosses uniformly emphasize sprinkling (Spanish 'rociadura', French 'aspersion', German 'Besprengung'), pointing to the ritual act of applying the blood that protected the firstborn from the destroyer. This word captures the physical liturgical action that becomes a powerful symbol of protection and deliverance.

(1×) Hebrews 11:28 refers to Moses keeping the Passover 'and the sprinkling of the blood,' the ritual act that protected Israel's firstborn from the destroying angel. Spanish 'rociadura' (sprinkling), French 'aspersion' (sprinkling), and German 'Besprengung' (sprinkling) all capture the physical application of blood to the doorframes. The classical lexicon confirms this word means 'pouring upon, sprinkling,' particularly of blood in ritual contexts. This Passover sprinkling prefigures the greater deliverance through Christ's blood, a connection Hebrews makes throughout its argument about the superiority of the new covenant. POURING AND SHEDDING en: sprinkling | es: rociadura | fr: aspersion | de: Besprengung Heb 11:28

προσ-ψαύω G4379 V-PIA-2P (1×)

to touch, make contact with, or lay hands upon something

This verb means to touch or make physical contact with something or someone. The prefix pros- intensifies the basic sense of contact. Luke employs this word in Jesus' rebuke of the Pharisees and lawyers, who impose heavy burdens on others but refuse even to touch those burdens with a finger themselves. The multilingual glosses are straightforward: English 'touch', Spanish 'tocáis' (you touch), French 'toucher' (to touch), pointing to the physical act of contact. The metaphor is clear—the religious leaders demand obedience to regulations they themselves avoid.

(1×) In Luke 11:46, Jesus condemns the lawyers who 'load people with burdens hard to bear, and you yourselves do not touch the burdens with one of your fingers.' The verb emphasizes the contrast: they impose weighty obligations but refuse even minimal contact with those burdens. Spanish 'tocáis' and French 'toucher' both mean simply 'touch,' highlighting the physical dimension. The domain classification under Physical Action > Attachment reflects the basic sense of contact. Jesus exposes the hypocrisy of demanding from others what one refuses to practice, a perennial temptation in religious leadership. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: touch | es: tocáis | fr: toucher | de: προσψαύετε Luke 11:46

προσωπο-ληπτέω G4380 V-PIA-2P (1×)

to show partiality or favoritism, judging based on external appearances rather than impartially

This compound verb literally means to receive or accept someone's face, an idiom for showing favoritism or partiality. It describes the act of judging people based on external status, appearance, or position rather than on merit or justice. James uses this term to rebuke believers who show favoritism in their assemblies, violating the law of love. The multilingual glosses reflect the concept: Spanish 'hacéis acepción de personas' (you show partiality to persons), pointing to the unjust practice of preferential treatment. This vice contradicts the character of God, who shows no partiality.

(1×) James 2:9 declares, 'But if you show partiality, you are committing sin and are convicted by the law as transgressors.' The verb captures the act of judging based on external appearance—precisely what James has just condemned in favoring the rich over the poor in the assembly. Spanish 'hacéis acepción de personas' literally means 'you make acceptance of persons,' reflecting the Hebrew idiom of 'lifting up the face.' The domain classification under Justice_Punishment > Courts and Legal Procedures is apt, as partiality perverts justice. God's impartiality (Acts 10:34) must be reflected in his people's treatment of one another. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: you-show-favoritism | es: hacéis-acepción-de-personas | fr: προσωπολημπτεῖτε | de: Ansehen-der-Person Jas 2:9

προσωπο-λήπτης G4381 N-NMS (1×)

one who shows favoritism or partiality toward certain persons based on external factors

This noun describes a person who shows partiality or favoritism, someone who judges and treats people differently based on their external status, wealth, or appearance. It is the noun form of the verb 'to show partiality.' Peter uses this term in a crucial declaration at Cornelius's house, recognizing that 'God is no respecter of persons'—he does not show favoritism based on ethnicity or social standing. The multilingual glosses point to this concept of partiality, with French emphasizing 'sans partialité' (without partiality), highlighting God's impartial justice.

(1×) In Acts 10:34, Peter declares, 'Truly I understand that God is not a respecter of persons' (literally, 'God is not a prosopolemptes'). This revelation comes as Peter enters the Gentile household of Cornelius, realizing that God's acceptance extends beyond Jewish boundaries. The term captures one who judges based on external appearance or status. French 'sans partialité' (without partiality) expresses the negative—God does not practice favoritism. This was a revolutionary recognition: the gospel breaks down ethnic, social, and economic barriers because God himself judges the heart, not outward appearances. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: respecter-of-persons | es: acepador-de-personas | fr: sans-partialité | de: προσωπολήμπτης Acts 10:34

προσωπο-ληψία G4382 N-NFS (4×)

Partiality, favoritism; showing respect of persons based on outward appearance or status.

A compound noun formed from 'prosōpon' (face) and 'lambanō' (to receive), literally meaning 'face-receiving'–that is, making judgments based on someone's outward appearance or social standing. Every New Testament occurrence condemns this practice as incompatible with divine justice. Paul declares that God shows no partiality (Rom 2:11), and James insists that favoritism toward the rich violates the royal law of love (Jas 2:1). The Spanish rendering 'acepción de personas' preserves the Hebraic idiom of 'receiving faces,' while French 'partialité' and English 'favoritism' foreground the ethical violation.

(4×) The act of judging or treating people differently based on external markers such as wealth, social rank, or ethnicity rather than on merit or character. The literal etymology–'receiving the face'–echoes the Hebrew idiom 'nasa panim,' which the LXX translates with this word group. Paul, writing to Rome, insists God exercises no such bias in judgment (Rom 2:11); the same principle governs masters' treatment of slaves (Eph 6:9; Col 3:25). James makes it the centerpiece of an argument against class discrimination in the assembly (Jas 2:1), showing that favoritism contradicts faith in the glorious Lord Jesus Christ. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: favoritism, partiality | es: acepción-de-personas, parcialidades | fr: partialité | de: Parteilichkeit Rom 2:11; Eph 6:9; Col 3:25; Jas 2:1

πρόσωπον G4383 N-DNS (77×)

Face, countenance; by extension, presence, surface, or person — reflecting the Semitic breadth of Hebrew panim.

In the New Testament, prosōpon carries the full weight of its Hebrew counterpart panim, meaning far more than just the physical face. It denotes a person's countenance (Matt 17:2, where Jesus' face shone like the sun), God's presence or 'face' (Acts 2:28), or the front surface of something (Luke 21:35, the face of the earth). Spanish rostro and German Angesicht both capture this dignified, relational sense. In a few passages the word shifts by metonymy to mean 'person' or 'outward appearance,' as when Paul forgives 'in the person of Christ' (2 Cor 2:10) — a usage the French personnes and Spanish personas make explicit.

1. face, countenance (75×) The physical face or countenance, and by Semitic idiom (mirroring Hebrew panim), the presence, front, or surface of something. All major translations use a face/countenance word — spa. rostro, deu. Angesicht, fra. visage — confirming the concrete-to-spatial range. In Matt 17:2 Jesus' face shines at the Transfiguration; in Acts 3:20 it denotes God's presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: face, the-face | es: rostro | fr: visage | de: Angesicht Matt 6:17; Matt 11:10; Matt 16:3; Matt 17:2; Matt 17:6

2. person, outward appearance (2×) By metonymy, the outward person, appearance, or social standing — the face standing for the whole individual. Spanish renders personas and French personnes, distinguishing this from the literal face sense. Paul forgives 'in the person (prosōpō) of Christ' (2 Cor 2:10), and Jude 1:16 warns against those who show partiality to persons (prosōpa). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: person, persons | es: personas, presencia | fr: personnes,, visage | de: Angesicht, Personen 2Cor 2:10; Jude 1:16

προτάσσω G4384

to place before, post in front, assign priority; to station troops or rank things as prior or superior

This military and organizational verb means to place or post in front, particularly in contexts of battle formations where troops were stationed ahead of others for protection or attack. The middle voice indicated posting one's own forces forward. Beyond literal positioning, it developed the sense of ranking something as prior or superior in importance or sequence. In administrative documents, it could mean 'the aforesaid' or 'previously mentioned.' The word reflects Greek concern with proper ordering, whether of soldiers in formation or concepts in philosophical priority.

προτείνω G4385 V-AIA-3P (1×)

to stretch out, extend forward, or bind by stretching

This verb means to stretch out, hold forth, or extend something forward. In classical usage it could describe holding out one's hand, stretching forth as a suppliant, or exposing something to danger. Luke employs this term in Acts to describe the Roman soldiers binding Paul by stretching him out, likely for scourging. The multilingual glosses reflect both the physical stretching (English 'stretched-out', French 'étendre') and the specific context of binding for punishment (Spanish 'lo ataron', they bound him). This captures a moment of injustice as Roman citizens were legally protected from scourging without trial.

(1×) Acts 22:25 describes the moment when Roman soldiers 'stretched Paul out' or 'bound him' with thongs, preparing to flog him. At this point Paul reveals his Roman citizenship, halting the proceedings. The Spanish 'lo ataron' (they bound him) and French 'étendre' (to stretch out) both fit the context of binding someone for scourging by stretching their arms. The classical lexicon shows this verb means to stretch forth or hold out, often of hands offered in supplication or pledge. Here the stretching is coercive, preparing for unjust punishment—until Paul's citizenship claim stops the abuse. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: they-stretched-out | es: lo-ataron | fr: étendre | de: προέτειναν Acts 22:25

πρότερος G4386 Adj-ANS-C (11×)

Former, formerly, before — indicating what came earlier in time, whether as adjective or adverb

The comparative form πρότερος (proteros) expresses temporal priority — 'former' as an adjective or 'formerly, before' as an adverb. Jesus asks the disciples, 'What if you were to see the Son of Man ascending to where he was before?' (John 6:62). Nicodemus is identified as the one who came to Jesus 'formerly' (John 7:50), and the man born blind is recognized by those who saw him 'before' as a beggar (John 9:8). Paul recounts that he preached in Galatia 'the former time' (Gal 4:13), and Ephesians 4:22 commands putting off the 'former manner of life.' Hebrews 4:6 refers to those who 'formerly' received the good news. Spanish 'anteriormente/antes' and Hindi 'pahle' capture the consistent temporal meaning.

former / formerly / before (11×) Comparative adjective or adverb indicating temporal priority — what came before in time, rendered 'former, formerly, before, at first.' Applied adverbially to describe prior actions (John 7:50, Nicodemus coming 'formerly'; John 9:8, the blind man seen 'before'; Gal 4:13, Paul's earlier visit) and adjectivally to characterize a previous state (Eph 4:22, the 'former manner of life'; 1 Tim 1:13, Paul's 'former' blasphemy). Hebrews uses it for those who 'formerly' heard the gospel (Heb 4:6). Spanish 'anteriormente/anterior,' Arabic 'saabiqan,' and Korean 'ijeon-e' uniformly reflect temporal anteriority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before, for-, former | es: anterior, anteriores, anteriormente | fr: auparavant | de: frueher John 6:62; John 7:50; John 9:8; 2Cor 1:15; Gal 4:13

πρότερος G4387

former, earlier, prior; comparatives indicating what comes before in time or space, or has precedence

These comparative and superlative forms (πρότερος and πρῶτος) built from πρό indicate 'former' versus 'later' relationships. While both words could describe spatial placement (front versus back), their primary use was temporal: former times, earlier generations, previous days, or prior marriages. The forms also carried evaluative force, indicating what has priority or comes first in importance. Homer used them for ancient heroes, while prose writers marked historical sequences. The neuter forms could function adverbially, meaning 'formerly' or 'before,' helping Greek writers establish clear temporal relationships in narrative.

προτίθημι G4388 V-AIM-1S (3×)

to set before, propose, purpose; to display publicly or determine in advance

This verb means to set before, propose, or purpose—either setting something out publicly or determining something in advance. Classical usage included setting out meals, proposing ideas, or planning ahead. Paul uses it to describe both his personal intentions and God's eternal purposes in Christ. The term carries connotations of deliberate, public declaration or predetermined plan.

(3×) Describes purposeful intention or divine predetermination. Romans 1:13 states Paul's intention: 'I purposed to come to you many times.' Romans 3:25 declares that God 'set forth Christ as a propitiation through faith in his blood.' Ephesians 1:9 speaks of God 'making known to us the mystery of his will according to his purpose which he purposed in Christ.' The Spanish 'propuso/me-propuse' and German 'sich-vornehmen' emphasize deliberate intention. This word describes both human resolve and divine plan—Paul's missionary purposes and God's eternal purpose to redeem through Christ, publicly displayed on the cross. PLACING AND LAYING en: I-purposed, he-purposed, set-forth | es: me-propuse, propuso | fr: se-proposer, sich-vornehmen | de: sich-vornehmen Rom 1:13; Rom 3:25; Eph 1:9

προτρέπω G4389 V-APM-NMP (1×)

to urge forward, encourage, or persuade someone to take action

This verb in the middle voice means to urge someone forward, encourage, or persuade them to undertake something. In classical Greek it could mean to give oneself up to something or to impel others toward action. Luke uses this term to describe how the believers in Achaia encouraged Apollos to travel to Corinth, even writing letters of recommendation on his behalf. The multilingual glosses emphasize the encouragement: Spanish 'animándole' (encouraging him), French 'exhorter' (to exhort), reflecting the supportive, forward-pushing dimension of this verb.

(1×) Acts 18:27 records that when Apollos wanted to go to Achaia, 'the brothers encouraged him and wrote to the disciples to welcome him.' The participle describes the believers actively urging Apollos forward in his ministry plans. Spanish 'animándole' (encouraging him) and French 'exhorter' (to exhort) both capture this sense of motivating and supporting someone's initiative. The classical lexicon shows this verb means to urge on, impel, or persuade someone to action. The brothers' encouragement included practical help—letters of recommendation—showing how the early church facilitated ministry through networks of mutual support. EXHORTATION AND COMFORT

en: having-encouraged | es: animándole | fr: exhorter | de: προτρεψάμενοι Acts 18:27

προτρέχω G4390 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to run ahead, outrun, or run forward in advance of others

A verb for running in front or arriving first. In Luke 19:4, Zacchaeus runs ahead and climbs a tree to see Jesus (compensating for his short stature and the crowd). In John 20:4, the beloved disciple outruns Peter to the tomb on resurrection morning. Both passages involve eager haste—one to see Jesus during his ministry, the other to investigate the empty tomb. The prefix προ- emphasizes getting there first.

(2×) The evidence ('ran ahead,' 'corrió adelante,' 'courir devant,' 'vorauslaufen') uniformly captures precedence in running. Luke 19:4 shows Zacchaeus running ahead of the crowd to secure a vantage point, while John 20:4 depicts the younger disciple outpacing Peter to reach the tomb. Both involve urgency and the desire to see—whether the living Jesus or the evidence of his resurrection. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING en: having-run-ahead, ran-ahead | es: corrió-adelante, habiendo-corrido-adelante | fr: courir-devant | de: vorauslaufen, προδραμὼν Luke 19:4; John 20:4

προϋπ-άρχω G4391 V-IIA-3S (2×)

to exist previously, be already present, or have been beforehand

A verb denoting prior existence or earlier state. In Luke 23:12, Luke notes that Herod and Pilate had previously been at enmity with each other (before collaborating in Jesus' trial). In Acts 8:9, Luke introduces Simon Magus, who had previously been practicing sorcery in Samaria and amazing the people. The term sets up a contrast—highlighting what was true before a significant change occurred.

(2×) The glosses ('existed before,' 'anteriormente existían,' 'exister avant') emphasize prior state. Luke 23:12 contrasts Herod and Pilate's former hostility with their newfound alliance (united in opposing Jesus). Acts 8:9 describes Simon's earlier sorcery career before Philip's gospel arrival. Both passages use the verb to establish a 'before' that makes the subsequent 'after' more striking. BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: they-had-been-beforehand, was-previously | es: anteriormente-existían, existía-antes | fr: exister-avant | de: προϋπῆρχεν, προϋπῆρχον Luke 23:12; Acts 8:9

πρόφᾰσ-ις G4392 N-AFS (7×)

A plea or excuse offered to justify or conceal one's true motives; a pretext, pretense, or ostensible reason.

In the New Testament, prophasis almost always carries a negative edge — a false front designed to mask greed, self-interest, or hostility. Jesus denounces the scribes who devour widows' houses 'for a pretense' of long prayer (Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47), where Spanish 'pretexto' and Hindi 'bahane se' both sharpen the sense of deceptive cover. Yet in John 15:22, Jesus says the world now has 'no excuse' for its sin — here prophasis shifts from a fabricated reason to a legitimate justification that might, if it existed, actually exonerate. The word's semantic range thus stretches from outright deception to genuine (though absent) grounds for defense.

1. pretext, pretense (false reason) (6×) A fabricated or insincere reason given to conceal the true motive — a false front or pretense. Multilingual evidence is remarkably unified: Spanish 'pretexto,' French 'prétexte,' German 'Vorwand,' and Hindi 'bahane se' all point to deliberate deception. Jesus' triple denunciation of hypocritical prayer (Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47) anchors this sense, while Paul acknowledges in Phil 1:18 that some preach Christ 'under pretext' — the motive is impure even if the message is true. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: as-a-pretense, as-pretext, for-a-pretense | es: con-pretexto, por-pretexto, pretexto | fr: prétexte | de: Vorwand, προφάσει Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47; Acts 27:30; Phil 1:18

2. excuse, reason (justification) (1×) A reason or justification offered in one's defense — an excuse that might (or might not) be legitimate. In John 15:22, Jesus declares that the world now has no prophasis for its sin: the word functions not as deceptive camouflage but as a defensive plea the accused might invoke. The French and German translations ('prétexte,' 'Vorwand') blur this distinction, but the context makes clear that what is absent is a real ground of justification, not merely a false story. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: excuse | es: excusa | fr: prétexte | de: Vorwand John 15:22

προφέρω G4393 V-PIA-3S (2×)

to bring forth, produce outwardly what is stored within

A verb for bringing out or producing. Both uses are in Luke 6:45, within Jesus' teaching on fruit-bearing. The good person brings forth good from the heart's good treasure, while the evil person brings forth evil from the evil stored within. The verb emphasizes the outward manifestation of inward reality—speech and action reveal what fills the heart. What is brought forth (good or evil) is determined by what has been stored up.

(2×) The glosses ('brings forth,' 'saca,' 'produire') converge on producing or bringing out. Luke 6:45 uses the verb twice in antithetical parallelism: good treasure produces good, evil treasure produces evil. Jesus' point is that external fruit is diagnostic of internal character—the mouth speaks from the heart's overflow, and the verb captures this outward manifestation of inward reality. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: brings-forth | es: saca | fr: produire | de: προφέρει Luke 6:45

προφητ-εία G4394 N-NFS (19×)

Prophecy: the spiritual gift, act, or content of inspired utterance revealing God's will and purposes.

In biblical Greek, prophēteia encompasses the entire prophetic phenomenon—the divine gift enabling one to speak God's word, the act of delivering that word, and the message itself. Paul ranks it among the highest spiritual gifts, urging the Corinthians to pursue it above tongues (1 Cor 14:1). In Romans 12:6 it appears as a charism to be exercised in proportion to one's faith, while in Revelation it frames the entire book as prophetic testimony. The word carries weight across languages: Spanish 'profecía,' French 'prophétie,' German 'Weissagung'—each preserving its dual sense of foretelling and forth-telling.

prophecy (the gift, act, or content of prophetic utterance) (19×) The gift of Spirit-empowered speech, the act of delivering a divine message, or the message itself. In 1 Corinthians 12–14 Paul treats it as a charism that edifies the church, superior to tongues because it communicates intelligibly. In Matthew 13:14 Jesus cites Isaiah's prophēteia as fulfilled prediction. The Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 1:18; 4:14) recall prophetic words spoken over Timothy at ordination, showing prophēteia as living speech that shapes ministry. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: prophecies, prophecy | es: profecía, profecía., profecías | fr: prophétie | de: Weissagung Matt 13:14; Rom 12:6; 1Cor 12:10; 1Cor 13:2; 1Cor 13:8

προφητ-εύω G4395 V-PPA-NMS (28×)

Prophesy; to speak or declare under divine inspiration, whether foretelling future events or proclaiming God's will.

Rooted in the noun prophetes ('prophet, spokesperson of a god'), this verb covers both predictive prophecy and inspired proclamation. In classical Greek it meant to serve as an interpreter of the gods, but in the New Testament it takes on a distinctly Spirit-driven character: from Jesus quoting Isaiah's prophetic indictment (Matt 15:7; Mark 7:6) to the charismatic gift of prophecy in the early church (1 Cor 14:1-5). Spanish 'profetizar,' French 'prophetiser,' and German 'weissagen' all preserve the dual nuance of foretelling and forth-telling that the biblical usage demands.

prophesy, speak by inspiration (28×) To speak or declare by divine inspiration, encompassing both prediction of future events and authoritative proclamation of God's message. In the Gospels, Jesus' adversaries mockingly demand he prophesy (Matt 26:68; Luke 22:64), while Jesus himself cites prophets who spoke by the Spirit (Matt 15:7). In Paul's letters, the verb denotes a spiritual gift exercised in community worship for edification (1 Cor 14:1-5). German 'weissagen' and Spanish 'profetizar' both preserve this breadth of inspired speech. PROPHESY PROCLAIM en: Prophesy, he-prophesied, prophesied | es: Profetiza, profeticéis, profetiza | fr: prophétiser | de: weissagen, weissagt Matt 7:22; Matt 11:13; Matt 15:7; Matt 26:68; Mark 7:6

προφήτ-ης G4396 N-NMP (146×)

Prophet — one who speaks on behalf of God, delivering divine messages, warnings, and promises to the people

Prophetes in classical Greek denoted an interpreter or spokesman for a deity, especially at oracular shrines. The New Testament inherits the Septuagint's use for the Hebrew navi, making it the standard term for those who speak God's word. The 146 occurrences span three main referents: Old Testament prophets cited in fulfillment formulas ('spoken through the prophet,' Matt 2:17), Jesus himself identified as a prophet (Matt 21:11; Luke 7:16), and New Testament prophets active in early church assemblies (1 Cor 12:28; Eph 4:11). Spanish 'profeta,' French 'prophete,' and German 'Prophet' all derive from the same Greek root, preserving the sense of authorized divine spokesperson.

prophet, spokesperson of God (146×) A person who speaks on behalf of God, delivering divine revelation, warning, or promise. In the New Testament this covers Old Testament prophets referenced in Scripture citations (Matt 1:22; 2:5), Jesus recognized as a prophet by the crowds (Matt 21:11; Luke 24:19), and Spirit-gifted prophets in early Christian communities (1 Cor 14:29; Eph 4:11). The underlying idea throughout is authorized divine speech — the prophet does not originate the message but transmits what God has given. Spanish 'profeta,' French 'prophete,' and German 'Prophet' all derive directly from this Greek term. PROPHET SPOKESPERSON

en: prophets | es: profetas | fr: prophète | de: Prophet Matt 2:23; Matt 5:12; Matt 5:17; Matt 7:12; Matt 11:13

προφητ-ικός G4397 Adj-GFP (2×)

prophetic, pertaining to or characteristic of prophecy or a prophet

An adjective qualifying things related to prophecy. In Romans 16:26, Paul describes the gospel mystery now revealed through prophetic writings (the OT scriptures understood in light of Christ). In 2 Peter 1:19, Peter commends the prophetic word as a lamp shining in darkness until the day dawns. Both passages affirm the divine origin and reliability of prophetic scripture—texts that point forward to and illuminate God's redemptive plan.

(2×) The evidence ('prophetic,' 'profética,' 'prophétique,' 'prophetisch') is semantically uniform across languages. Romans 16:26 applies it to OT scriptures that testified to the gospel, while 2 Peter 1:19 speaks of the prophetic word as authoritative revelation. Both passages assert that prophecy is divinely inspired communication that illuminates God's purposes. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: prophetic | es: profética, proféticas | fr: prophetisch, prophétique | de: prophetisch Rom 16:26; 2Pet 1:19

προφῆτις G4398 N-NFS (2×)

a prophetess, a woman who speaks forth God's message or revelation

The feminine form of 'prophet,' denoting a woman with a prophetic ministry. In Luke 2:36, Anna is identified as a prophetess who served God night and day in the temple, recognizing and proclaiming the infant Jesus as the redemption of Israel. In Revelation 2:20, the title is applied (perhaps mockingly or ironically) to the false teacher 'Jezebel' in Thyatira who leads believers astray. The term itself is neutral—context determines whether the prophetic ministry is genuine or counterfeit.

(2×) The glosses ('prophetess,' 'profetisa,' 'prophétesse,' 'Prophetin') uniformly denote a female prophetic figure. Luke 2:36 honors Anna as a true prophetess who testifies to Messiah, while Revelation 2:20 warns against a false prophetess corrupting the church. The term's use for both faithful and unfaithful speakers underscores that the title alone does not guarantee truth—content and fruit reveal authenticity. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: a-prophetess | es: profetisa | fr: prophétesse | de: Prophetin, προφῆτις Luke 2:36; Rev 2:20

προφθάνω G4399 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to anticipate, precede, or arrive before someone else; to get ahead of

This verb means to arrive before someone else, to anticipate or precede another in action. In classical usage it described outrunning or being beforehand in speech or action. Matthew employs this term in the temple tax narrative, where Jesus anticipates Peter's question before Peter can even ask it. The multilingual glosses emphasize the temporal priority: Spanish 'se le adelantó' (got ahead of him), French 'devancer' (to precede), pointing to Jesus' supernatural knowledge that allows him to speak first. This demonstrates Jesus' divine insight into human thoughts.

(1×) In Matthew 17:25, as Peter is about to speak about the temple tax, 'Jesus spoke to him first,' anticipating Peter's question. The verb captures Jesus getting ahead of Peter, addressing the issue before Peter raises it. Spanish 'se le adelantó' (he got ahead of him) and French 'devancer' (to precede, anticipate) both emphasize Jesus speaking first. The classical lexicon confirms this verb means to outrun or anticipate, to be beforehand. This detail reveals Jesus' omniscience—he knows Peter's thoughts and concerns before they are voiced, another subtle sign of his divine nature embedded in the gospel narrative. GOING TO MEET

en: anticipated | es: se-le-adelantó | fr: devancer | de: προέφθασεν Matt 17:25

προχειρ-ίζω G4400 V-AIM-3S (3×)

to appoint beforehand, choose in advance, designate; to select for a specific purpose

This verb means to appoint beforehand, choose in advance, or designate for a purpose. Classical usage included selecting leaders, mobilizing forces, or choosing representatives. Luke uses it exclusively in Acts to describe God's appointment of Jesus or the Spirit's designation of individuals for ministry. The term emphasizes divine selection and predetermined purpose.

(3×) Describes divine appointment or designation for specific purposes. Acts 3:20 speaks of Jesus 'whom heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things, which God spoke through the mouth of his holy prophets, having appointed beforehand.' Acts 22:14 records Ananias telling Paul 'The God of our fathers appointed you to know his will.' Acts 26:16 records Jesus telling Paul 'I have appeared to you for this purpose, to appoint you as a servant and witness.' The cross-linguistic evidence preserves Greek forms, showing technical theological vocabulary. This describes God's sovereign choice and assignment of roles in redemptive history. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: appointed, having-been-appointed, to-appoint | es: designar, predestinado, te-designó | fr: confier | de: προεχειρίσατό, προχεχειρισμένον, προχειρίσασθαί Acts 3:20; Acts 22:14; Acts 26:16

προχειροτον-έω G4401 V-RPM/P-DMP (1×)

chosen beforehand, selected or appointed in advance by prior decision

This perfect passive participle describes someone who has been chosen or appointed beforehand, selected in advance by prior decision. It combines the idea of election with temporal priority. Luke uses this term to describe the witnesses of Jesus' resurrection—they were not random observers but people previously chosen by God to testify. The multilingual glosses emphasize the advance selection: Spanish 'escogidos de antemano' (chosen beforehand), French 'choisir d'avance' (to choose in advance), highlighting God's purposeful preparation of credible witnesses to the resurrection.

(1×) Acts 10:41 describes the resurrection witnesses as those 'chosen beforehand by God,' not to all the people but to specific witnesses whom God had already selected. The perfect passive participle emphasizes completed action with ongoing results: these witnesses were chosen in the past and remain in that chosen status. Spanish 'escogidos de antemano' (chosen beforehand) and French 'choisir d'avance' (to choose in advance) both capture the temporal priority. God's sovereign preparation of witnesses ensures the reliability of resurrection testimony—these were not chance observers but divinely appointed testifiers whose eating and drinking with the risen Jesus verified his bodily resurrection. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3247 WITH 8 SENSES

en: having-been-chosen-beforehand | es: escogidos-de-antemano | fr: choisir-d'avance | de: προχεχειροτονημένοις Acts 10:41

Πρόχορος G4402 N-AMS (1×)

Prochorus, one of the seven men chosen to serve the Hellenistic widows in the early Jerusalem church

This proper name identifies one of the seven men selected in Acts 6 to serve the Greek-speaking widows in the Jerusalem church. Prochorus is listed second among the seven, all of whom had Greek names, suggesting they were Hellenistic Jews chosen to address the cultural tensions in the early community. Nothing else is known about Prochorus from Scripture, though later tradition claimed he became a companion of the apostle John. The name means something like 'leader of the dance' or 'chorus leader,' a fitting name for someone serving in the church's communal life.

(1×) Acts 6:5 lists Prochorus as the second of seven men chosen to oversee the daily distribution to widows, ensuring fairness between Hebrew and Hellenistic Jewish believers. His Greek name, like the others selected, indicates the community's wisdom in choosing representatives from the aggrieved group. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the name across languages. While Scripture tells us nothing more about Prochorus, his selection as one of the seven marks him as a person of good reputation, full of the Spirit and wisdom (Acts 6:3), trusted by the apostles and the whole community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Prochoros | es: a-Próchoros | fr: Prochore | de: Πρόχορον Acts 6:5

πρύμν-ᾰ G4403 N-NFS (3×)

stern (of a ship); the rear part of a vessel

This nautical term designates the stern or rear part of a ship. Classical Greek used it extensively in maritime and naval contexts, sometimes metaphorically for the rear or back position of anything. The New Testament uses it literally in shipboard narratives in Mark and Acts. The term is straightforward nautical vocabulary.

(3×) Refers to the stern of a ship in maritime narratives. Mark 4:38 describes Jesus during the storm: 'he himself was in the stern, sleeping on the cushion.' Acts 27:29 recounts the sailors' fear during Paul's voyage: 'fearing that we might run on the rocks, they dropped four anchors from the stern.' Acts 27:41 describes the shipwreck: 'the stern was being broken up by the violence of the waves.' The Spanish 'popa,' French 'poupe,' and German 'Heck' are all standard nautical terms for the rear of the ship. This technical vocabulary situates biblical narratives in real maritime experience. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: stern | es: popa | fr: poupe | de: Heck, πρύμνα, πρύμνης Mark 4:38; Acts 27:29; Acts 27:41

πρωΐ G4404 Adv (12×)

proi – early in the morning, at dawn; a temporal adverb indicating the first hours of daylight

The adverb proi ('early in the morning') pinpoints the first hours of daylight, from before sunrise to mid-morning. It structures some of the Gospel narrative's most pivotal moments: Jesus withdrawing to pray 'very early, while it was still dark' (Mark 1:35), the women arriving at the empty tomb 'early on the first day of the week' (Mark 16:2; John 20:1), and Jesus returning to teach in the temple 'early in the morning' (John 8:2). It also appears in the parable of the vineyard laborers, where the householder goes out proi to hire workers (Matt 20:1). Spanish de manana/por la manana, French le matin, and German frueh all render it consistently as 'early morning.'

early in the morning, at dawn (12×) A temporal adverb marking early morning, typically around dawn. Frames key events: Jesus' prayer before dawn (Mark 1:35), the women at the empty tomb (Mark 16:2; John 20:1), and temple teaching (John 8:2). Spanish de-manana, French matin, and German frueh uniformly confirm a single temporal sense. MORNING DAWN

en: Early-morning, early, early-morning | es: Por-la-mañana, de-mañana, la-mañana | fr: le-matin, matin | de: frueh, Πρωΐ, πρωΐ Matt 16:3; Matt 20:1; Matt 21:18; Mark 1:35; Mark 11:20

πρώϊ-ος G4405 N-GFS (2×)

early morning, the time at daybreak or dawn

A noun denoting the early morning hours. In Matthew 27:1, the chief priests and elders take counsel against Jesus at early morning to put him to death—the first light after the nighttime trial. In John 21:4, Jesus stands on the shore at early morning as the disciples return from a fruitless night of fishing. Both passages set significant events at daybreak: one marks the culmination of Jesus' Passion, the other a resurrection appearance.

(2×) The glosses ('morning,' 'mañana,' 'matin,' 'früh morgens') uniformly point to the early hours. Matthew 27:1 places the Sanhedrin's formal death sentence at dawn, while John 21:4 sets the lakeshore encounter with the risen Jesus at daybreak. The time marker adds poignancy—new light dawns as Jesus faces crucifixion, and resurrection morning literally breaks as he appears to his disciples. MORNING DAWN
en: Morning, morning | es: De-mañana, Mañana | fr: matin | de: frueh-morgens, Πρωΐας Matt 27:1; John 21:4

πρώϊμος G4406 Adj-AMS (1×)

early, pertaining to the first or beginning part of a season, especially early rains

This adjective means early, particularly in reference to the early or autumn rains in the agricultural cycle of ancient Israel. In Mediterranean climate patterns, the early rains came in October-November, preparing the soil for planting, while the late rains in March-April brought crops to maturity. James employs this term metaphorically, urging patience by comparing spiritual waiting to a farmer's patience for both the early and late rains. The multilingual glosses reflect this temporal sense: Spanish 'temprana' (early), pointing to the seasonal timing that governs agricultural life and becomes a picture of spiritual patience.

(1×) James 5:7 urges believers to 'be patient until the coming of the Lord,' noting that 'the farmer waits for the precious fruit of the earth, being patient about it, until it receives the early and the late rains.' The adjective describes the autumn rains that initiated the growing season in Palestine. Spanish 'temprana' (early) captures the timing. This agricultural metaphor would have resonated deeply with James's audience: just as farmers cannot rush the seasonal rains but must wait patiently for God's provision, so believers must patiently endure, trusting God's timing for Christ's return. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: early | es: temprana | fr: πρόϊμον | de: frueh Jas 5:7

πρωϊνός G4407 Adj-AMS (2×)

of the morning, belonging to or associated with early dawn

An adjective modifying nouns related to morning. Both NT uses are in Revelation's closing chapters, both referring to Christ. In 2:28, Jesus promises to give the overcomers the morning star. In 22:16, he identifies himself as the bright morning star. The image draws on Numbers 24:17 and ancient associations of the morning star (Venus) with kingship and new beginnings—Christ is the herald of eternal day.

(2×) The glosses ('morning,' 'de la mañana,' 'morgen-') adjectivally describe the star. Revelation 2:28 and 22:16 both use the phrase 'morning star' as a title or gift associated with Christ. The image is messianic—the star that rises to announce the end of night and the beginning of God's new creation. Jesus is both the giver of this hope and the embodiment of it. MORNING DAWN
en: morning | es: de-la-mañana, de-la-mañana. | fr: morgen- | de: morgen-Rev 2:28; Rev 22:16

πρῷρ-α G4408 N-GFS (2×)

the prow or bow of a ship, the forepart that faces forward

A nautical term for the front end of a vessel. Both uses are in Acts 27, during Paul's shipwreck voyage. In verse 30, sailors lower the lifeboat pretending to lay out anchors from the bow (actually planning to abandon ship). In verse 41, the ship runs aground and the bow sticks fast while the stern breaks up under the waves. The term is purely technical, but the narrative context is theologically rich—God's promise to preserve all lives aboard is kept despite maritime disaster.

(2×) The glosses ('bow,' 'proa,' 'proue') uniformly denote the ship's front. Acts 27:30 describes sailors' deception involving the bow (planning escape), while 27:41 narrates the bow lodging immovably as the stern disintegrates. The nautical detail serves Luke's larger purpose—showing God's sovereign protection of Paul and all aboard, even through violent shipwreck. SHIP SEA VESSEL en: bow | es: proa | fr: proue | de: πρώρης, πρῷρα Acts 27:30; Acts 27:41

πρωτεύω G4409 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to be first, hold the first place or preeminent position

This verb means to hold first place, to be preeminent or have priority over others. In classical usage it described being first in rank, authority, or excellence. Paul uses this term to declare Christ's supremacy in all things—he is to have first place in everything. The present participle form emphasizes ongoing status: Christ is continuously holding the preeminent position. The multilingual glosses vary in specificity: English 'preeminent', Spanish 'teniendo preeminencia' (having preeminence), German 'den Vorrang haben' (to have priority), all pointing to Christ's supreme position.

(1×) In Colossians 1:18, Paul declares that Christ is 'the head of the body, the church... so that in everything he might be preeminent.' The present participle indicates Christ's ongoing, continuous holding of first place. Spanish 'teniendo preeminencia' (having preeminence) and German 'den Vorrang haben' (to have the priority) both emphasize Christ's supreme position. The classical lexicon shows this verb means to hold first place, to excel. Paul's cosmic Christology demands Christ's supremacy in all realms—creation, redemption, and the church—countering any theology that would diminish his absolute priority. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: preeminent | es: teniendo-preeminencia | fr: πρωτεύων | de: den-Vorrang-haben Col 1:18

πρωτο-καθεδρία G4410 N-AFP (4×)

The chief seat, the place of honor at a gathering; the most prestigious seat in a synagogue or banquet.

A compound of 'prōtos' (first) and 'kathedra' (seat, chair), this noun denotes the most honored seating position in public assemblies, particularly synagogues. Jesus repeatedly singles out the love of 'chief seats' as a telltale symptom of religious vanity among the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:6; Mark 12:39; Luke 11:43; 20:46). The multilingual glosses–Spanish 'primer asiento,' French 'première place,' English 'chief seats'–all capture the notion of rank expressed through physical seating, a practice deeply embedded in ancient Mediterranean honor culture.

(4×) The foremost or most prestigious seat in a synagogue or public assembly, reserved for persons of high religious or social standing. Archaeological evidence confirms that ancient synagogues had a stone bench (kathedra) facing the congregation, assigned to elders and distinguished teachers. Jesus criticizes the scribes and Pharisees for coveting these positions as status symbols (Matt 23:6; Luke 20:46). The term appears exclusively in Jesus' denunciations and always alongside 'prōtoklisia' (chief place at dinner), forming a pair that exposes the love of public honor. Spanish 'primer asiento' and French 'première place' faithfully render the ordinal-plus-seat compound. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: best-seat, chief-seats, first-seats | es: primer-asiento, primeros-asientos | fr: première-place | de: erster-Sitz, πρωτοκαθεδρίαν, πρωτοκαθεδρίας Matt 23:6; Mark 12:39; Luke 11:43; Luke 20:46

πρωτο-κλῐσία G4411 N-AFP (5×)

Place of honor at a feast, chief seat at a banquet; the most prestigious reclining position at a meal.

A compound noun from πρῶτος (first) + κλισία (reclining place), designating the most honored seat at a banquet table. Jesus repeatedly criticizes the Pharisees and scribes for loving to claim these seats — in Matt 23:6, Mark 12:39, and Luke 20:46, it appears alongside their desire for long robes and marketplace greetings. Luke 14:7–8 offers the parable of the wedding feast, where guests scramble for the πρωτοκλισία only to risk public humiliation. The Spanish 'primer-asiento' (first seat) and German 'erster-Platz' (first place) straightforwardly render the compound's meaning.

(5×) The chief seat or place of honor at a banquet — the most prestigious reclining position at a formal meal. In the ancient triclinium arrangement, certain positions conveyed higher status, and this word names the most coveted one. Jesus uses it as a diagnostic of religious pride: the scribes and Pharisees 'love the chief seats at feasts' (Matt 23:6; Mark 12:39; Luke 20:46), treating honor as entitlement rather than gift. In Luke 14:7–8, Jesus crafts a parable around the πρωτοκλισία, counseling humility: take the lowest place and be invited up rather than claim the highest and be asked to move. The French 'première-place' and Spanish 'primer-asiento' both decompose the Greek compound into first + seat, preserving its transparent etymology. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: first-place, first-places, place-of-honor | es: primer-asiento, primeros-asientos, primeros-lugares | fr: première-place | de: erster-Platz, πρωτοκλισίαν, πρωτοκλισίας Matt 23:6; Mark 12:39; Luke 14:7; Luke 14:8; Luke 20:46

πρῶτος G4412 Adv (58×)

First, firstly — adverb of priority in time, sequence, or importance

The Greek adverb πρῶτον (prōton, 'first') marks temporal or logical priority in discourse. Jesus repeatedly uses it to establish what must precede something else: 'first be reconciled to your brother' (Matt 5:24), 'seek first the kingdom of God' (Matt 6:33), 'first take the log out of your own eye' (Matt 7:5). Paul employs it for salvation-historical sequence — 'to the Jew first and also to the Greek' (Rom 1:16). The word carries rhetorical force: what comes πρῶτον is presented as non-negotiable, the necessary prior step before anything else can follow.

first (58×) Adverb of temporal or logical priority meaning 'first, before anything else.' Spanish 'primero,' French 'premièrement,' and German 'zuerst' all capture the sequential force. In Jesus' teaching, it often introduces an imperative prerequisite (Matt 5:24; 7:5; 12:29). Paul uses it to order stages of God's redemptive plan (Rom 1:16; 2:9-10). The word presupposes a sequence and foregrounds what must come at its head. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: first | es: primero | fr: premièrement | de: zuerst Matt 5:24; Matt 6:33; Matt 7:5; Matt 8:21; Matt 12:29

πρῶτος G4413 Adj-NMS (100×)

First in sequence, time, or rank; chief or foremost person; by extension, best in quality or first in logical priority.

In the New Testament, this adjective covers a wide semantic range rooted in the idea of being at the front. Most often it marks ordinal position — the first day, the first covenant, the first commandment — appearing roughly 90 times in that straightforward sense. But Greek πρῶτος also serves as a title of rank: the 'chief men' of a city or the 'leading' citizens (Mark 6:21, Acts 13:50). Spanish captures this social nuance with 'principales' (principal ones), while the ordinal sense stays as 'primero.' In a memorable scene, the father calls for the 'best' robe for the prodigal son (Luke 15:22), where Spanish shifts to 'mejor' — revealing a qualitative superlative sense distinct from mere sequence.

1. first in order or time (90×) The dominant usage denoting first position in a sequence or temporal order — first day, first covenant, first commandment. Cross-linguistically stable: English 'first,' Spanish 'primero/primer,' French 'premier,' German 'erster' all converge on simple ordinal meaning. This covers chronological priority (Matt 26:17, the first day of Unleavened Bread), ranking in lists (Matt 10:2, 'first, Simon'), and the rhetorical 'first and greatest commandment' (Matt 22:38). FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: first, on-first | es: primer, primero | fr: premier | de: erster Matt 10:2; Matt 20:27; Matt 22:38; Matt 26:17; Mark 9:35

2. leading, chief, prominent person (7×) Substantival use designating a person of high social rank, authority, or prominence — a chief, leader, or notable. Spanish 'principales' and English 'leading/chief' distinguish this from mere ordinal numbering. Herod's birthday feast gathered the 'leading men' of Galilee (Mark 6:21); the Jewish leaders in Thessalonica enlisted 'prominent' women against Paul (Acts 17:4). The shift from adjective to substantive noun signals a sociological rather than sequential meaning. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: chief, leaders, leading | es: principal, principales | fr: premier | de: erster Mark 6:21; Luke 19:47; Acts 13:50; Acts 17:4; Acts 25:2

3. first as adverb, firstly (2×) Adverbial deployment meaning 'in the first place' or 'firstly,' indicating logical or temporal priority of an action rather than describing a noun. At Antioch the disciples were 'first' called Christians (Acts 11:26); Paul recounts what he delivered 'first of all' (1 Cor 15:3). Spanish 'primeramente' (firstly) makes the adverbial force explicit where English simply reuses 'first.' FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: first | es: las-primeras-cosas, primeramente | fr: premier | de: erster Acts 11:26; 1Cor 15:3

4. best, foremost in quality (1×) A superlative qualitative sense meaning 'best' or 'finest' rather than sequential position. The single clear instance is the father's command to bring the 'first' (i.e., best) robe for the returning prodigal son (Luke 15:22). Spanish shifts to 'mejor' (better/best), revealing that the audience heard not 'first robe on the rack' but 'finest robe in the house' — a qualitative apex rather than an ordinal marker. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: first | es: mejor | fr: premier | de: erster Luke 15:22

πρωτο-στάτης G4414 N-AMS (1×)

a ringleader, chief instigator, or front-rank leader of a movement or faction

This noun originally designated the front-rank soldier standing first in the right wing of a military formation, the 'right-hand man.' Metaphorically it came to mean the chief or leader of a faction, the ringleader or principal instigator. The Jewish prosecutor Tertullus uses this term to accuse Paul of being a ringleader of the Nazarene sect, framing Christianity as a dangerous movement and Paul as its chief agitator. The multilingual glosses emphasize leadership: Spanish 'cabecilla' (ringleader), French 'chef' (chief), pointing to Paul's alleged role as principal troublemaker in Jewish eyes.

(1×) Acts 24:5 records Tertullus accusing Paul: 'We have found this man a plague, one who stirs up riots among all the Jews throughout the world and is a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.' The term casts Paul as the chief instigator, the front-rank leader of a troublesome faction. Spanish 'cabecilla' (ringleader, often with negative connotations) and French 'chef' (chief) both convey leadership. The classical lexicon shows this word originally meant the front-rank soldier, then metaphorically the chief of a party. Tertullus's rhetoric attempts to criminalize both Paul and Christianity, framing the gospel as sedition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-ringleader | es: cabecilla | fr: chef | de: πρωτοστάτην Acts 24:5

πρωτοτόκ-ια G4415 N-ANP (1×)

the rights and privileges belonging to the firstborn son, the birthright

This neuter plural noun denotes the birthright, the special rights and privileges that belonged to the firstborn son in ancient Near Eastern culture. These included a double portion of the inheritance, family leadership, and spiritual headship. Hebrews employs this term in reference to Esau, who famously sold his birthright to Jacob for a single meal, treating sacred privilege with contempt. The multilingual glosses directly translate 'birthright' across languages, pointing to this culturally significant bundle of inheritance rights and familial status.

(1×) Hebrews 12:16 warns against being 'unholy like Esau, who sold his birthright for a single meal.' The term encompasses all the privileges of the firstborn—inheritance rights, family leadership, covenant blessing. The uniform translation as 'birthright' (Spanish 'derechos de primogenitura', German 'Erstgeburtsrecht') reflects the technical nature of this concept. Esau's casual disposal of such weighty privilege for momentary physical gratification becomes a warning against trading eternal significance for temporal pleasure. The writer of Hebrews uses this Old Testament example to urge perseverance and proper valuing of spiritual inheritance. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY en: birthright | es: derechos-de-primogenitura | fr: Erstgeburtsrecht | de: Erstgeburtsrecht Heb 12:16

πρωτοτόκ-ος G4416 Adj-ANP (8×)

Firstborn: the first child born, or figuratively, one holding supreme rank and preeminence.

Prototokos carries both a literal birth-order sense and a powerful metaphorical extension into divine preeminence. Luke 2:7 uses it plainly of Mary's first child, while Paul in Colossians 1:15 and 1:18 elevates it to a cosmic title — Christ as 'firstborn of all creation' and 'firstborn from the dead.' Hebrews 1:6 and 12:23 extend the concept further: the Son introduced into the world, and the 'assembly of the firstborn' enrolled in heaven. Romans 8:29 places believers in relation to this title, predestined to be conformed to the image of God's Son so that he might be 'firstborn among many brothers.'

firstborn (literal or figurative preeminence) (8×) The first child born in a family, extended metaphorically to denote supreme priority, sovereignty, and preeminence. The literal sense appears at Luke 2:7 (Mary's firstborn son), while the Christological uses dominate: Col 1:15 'firstborn of all creation' asserts priority over the created order, and Col 1:18 'firstborn from the dead' claims primacy in resurrection. Spanish 'primogenito,' French 'premier-ne,' and German 'Erstgeborener' all preserve the birth-order metaphor. Hebrews 12:23 pluralizes the concept for the community of believers — 'the assembly of firstborn ones' registered in heaven — showing how Christ's unique status becomes a shared inheritance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: firstborn, of-firstborn | es: de-primogénitos, primogénito, primogénitos | fr: premier-né | de: Erstgeborener, πρωτότοκον Luke 2:7; Rom 8:29; Col 1:15; Col 1:18; Heb 1:6

πταίω G4417 V-ASA-2P (5×)

To stumble, trip, fall; to fail morally or spiritually, to sin or go wrong in conduct.

A verb meaning to stumble or trip, used almost exclusively in the NT in its metaphorical sense of moral or spiritual failure. Romans 11:11 asks the pivotal question: 'Did they stumble so as to fall beyond recovery?' — distinguishing a temporary stumble from a permanent collapse. James employs the word to underscore the universality of human failure: 'we all stumble in many ways' (3:2), and whoever keeps the whole law yet stumbles at one point is guilty of all (2:10). The Spanish 'tropezar,' French 'trébucher,' and German 'straucheln' all preserve the physical stumbling image behind the moral metaphor.

(5×) To stumble, trip, or fail — used metaphorically of moral and spiritual failure rather than literal physical tripping. In Rom 11:11, Paul explores whether Israel's 'stumble' is final, answering emphatically no — their transgression brings riches to the Gentiles. James 2:10 uses the word to teach the indivisibility of the law: stumbling at one point means guilt in all. James 3:2 offers pastoral realism: 'we all stumble in many ways,' and the one who does not stumble in speech is perfect. Second Peter 1:10 encourages believers to make their calling sure so they 'never stumble.' The convergence of Spanish 'tropezar,' French 'trébucher,' and German 'straucheln' — all primary stumbling verbs in their languages — confirms that the physical-to-moral metaphor is cross-linguistically natural. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: did-they-stumble, stumbles, we-stumble | es: tropecéis, tropezamos, tropezaron | fr: straucheln, trébucher | de: straucheln Rom 11:11; Jas 2:10; Jas 3:2; 2Pet 1:10

πτέρνη G4418 N-AFS (1×)

the heel, the back part of the foot

This noun refers to the heel, the rear portion of the human foot. It appears in both literal anatomical contexts and metaphorical expressions in classical Greek. John employs this term in Jesus' quotation of Psalm 41:9, where betrayal is described as lifting one's heel against another—an idiom for turning on someone in hostility. The multilingual glosses are straightforward anatomical terms: Spanish 'talón', French 'talon', German 'Ferse', all meaning heel. This body-part reference becomes a powerful metaphor for Judas's betrayal of Jesus.

(1×) In John 13:18, Jesus quotes Psalm 41:9: 'He who ate my bread has lifted his heel against me,' referring to Judas's impending betrayal. The heel-lifting imagery suggests a kick or hostile turning against someone, particularly shocking after sharing intimate table fellowship. Spanish 'talón', French 'talon', and German 'Ferse' all mean simply 'heel.' The classical lexicon shows this word could refer to the heel bone, the underpart of the heel, or even footsteps. The metaphor captures the violence and treachery of betrayal—Judas will strike at Jesus with the force of a kick, the ultimate violation of friendship and trust. FEET AND LEGS

en: heel | es: talón | fr: talon | de: Ferse John 13:18

πτερύγ-ιον G4419 N-ANS (2×)

pinnacle, a high point, wing-like projection, or summit of a structure

A diminutive of 'wing,' used for architectural features resembling wings or peaks. Both NT uses refer to the temple pinnacle in the temptation narratives (Matthew 4:5, Luke 4:9), where Satan takes Jesus to the highest point of the temple complex and urges him to jump. Scholars debate whether this was the corner of the Royal Portico or another high point. The elevated location symbolizes the test—will Jesus presume on God's protection and seek spectacular proof of divine care?

(2×) The glosses ('pinnacle,' 'pináculo,' 'faîte') point to a high architectural point. Matthew 4:5 and Luke 4:9 both describe Satan placing Jesus on the temple's pinnacle during the wilderness temptations. The lofty setting dramatizes the temptation to test God through a spectacular feat—the height represents both literal danger and spiritual presumption. WING BODY PART en: pinnacle | es: pináculo | fr: faîte | de: πτερύγιον Matt 4:5; Luke 4:9

πτέρυξ G4420 N-AFP (5×)

Wing; the wing of a bird or winged creature, used literally and figuratively for divine protection and shelter.

A noun meaning wing, derived from πτερόν (feather). In the NT it appears in two vivid contexts. Jesus laments over Jerusalem: 'How often I wanted to gather your children together, as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings' (Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34) — an image of tender, protective sheltering drawn from the Hebrew Bible's 'wings of God' motif. In Revelation, wings appear on the four living creatures (4:8, each with six wings) and on the great eagle whose wings carry the woman to safety (12:14). The Spanish 'alas,' French 'aile,' and German 'Flügel' all denote the literal wing, though the protective-shelter metaphor is distinctly Semitic.

(5×) A wing — the limb of a bird or winged creature, carrying both literal and figurative force. The two Gospel uses (Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34) draw on the rich OT image of divine wings as shelter (cf. Ps 91:4, Ruth 2:12): Jesus pictures himself as a mother bird gathering chicks under protective wings. In Revelation, wings signal the awesome otherness of heavenly beings — the four living creatures have six wings each (Rev 4:8, echoing Isaiah's seraphim), and the flying locusts' wings roar like chariots (Rev 9:9). Revelation 12:14 gives the persecuted woman 'the two wings of a great eagle' for escape, recalling Exod 19:4. The Spanish 'alas' and French 'aile' are straightforward, while the German 'Flügel' also serves for piano keys and building annexes — a reminder of how metaphorical wing-language is across cultures. WING BODY PART

en: wings | es: alas | fr: aile | de: Fluegel, πτέρυγας Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34; Rev 4:8; Rev 9:9; Rev 12:14

πτηνός G4421 Adj-GNP (1×)

winged, flying, or pertaining to birds and flying creatures

This adjective means winged, flying, or pertaining to birds. It derives from the verb 'to fly' and describes creatures capable of flight. In classical usage it could describe flying arrows as well as winged creatures. Paul uses the neuter plural substantively to refer to birds or winged creatures in his discussion of different kinds of flesh—human, animal, avian, and aquatic. The multilingual glosses point to birds: Spanish 'de aves' (of birds), French 'oiseau' (bird), German 'Vogel' (bird), emphasizing the category of flying creatures.

(1×) In 1 Corinthians 15:39, Paul argues that 'not all flesh is the same, but there is one kind for humans, another for animals, another for birds, and another for fish.' The genitive plural describes birds or flying creatures as a distinct category of flesh. Spanish 'de aves', French 'oiseau', and German 'Vogel' all identify birds. The classical lexicon shows this adjective means flying or winged, often used substantively for birds as a class. Paul's argument about different kinds of flesh supports his larger point about resurrection bodies—just as there are diverse physical bodies, so there are diverse resurrection bodies, earthly and heavenly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-birds | es: de-aves | fr: oiseau | de: Vogel 1Cor 15:39

πτοέω G4422 V-ASP-2P (2×)

to terrify, startle, or fill with sudden fear

A verb for alarming or frightening. In Luke 21:9, Jesus warns his disciples not to be terrified when they hear of wars and tumults—these things must happen, but the end is not yet. In Luke 24:37, the disciples are startled and frightened when the risen Jesus appears, supposing they see a spirit. One passage addresses eschatological anxiety, the other resurrection surprise. Both involve sudden fear that Jesus addresses with reassuring words.

(2×) The evidence ('be terrified,' 'seáis aterrados,' 'effrayer') captures sudden alarm. Luke 21:9 counsels against panic at war reports (eschatological disturbances are expected), while 24:37 describes the disciples' terror when Jesus appears post-resurrection. Both involve fear that must be calmed by understanding—either that tribulation precedes the end, or that resurrection bodies are real, not ghostly. ALARM TERROR HASTE

en: be-terrified, having-been-startled | es: asustados, seáis-aterrados | fr: effrayer | de: πτοηθέντες, πτοηθῆτε Luke 21:9; Luke 24:37

πτό-ησις G4423 N-AFS (1×)

terror, alarm, or sudden frightening emotion

This noun describes vehement emotion or excitement, particularly terror, alarm, or sudden fright. It denotes the physical and emotional reaction to something startling or threatening. Peter uses this term to encourage Christian wives not to give way to fear even in the face of suffering or intimidation. The multilingual glosses emphasize the fear dimension: Spanish 'temor' (fear), pointing to the emotional disturbance that can trouble the heart. Peter's exhortation echoes Sarah's example of faithful courage in the face of uncertainty.

(1×) In 1 Peter 3:6, Peter commends wives who 'do what is right and do not fear anything that is frightening' (literally, 'not fearing any terror'). The noun describes the alarming circumstances or threats that might induce panic. Spanish 'temor' (fear) captures the emotional dimension. The classical lexicon shows this word means vehement emotion, especially terror or bodily agitation. Peter's point is that godly women like Sarah acted with courage and faith despite uncertain circumstances, not allowing terror to dictate their behavior. This models faithful endurance for all believers facing intimidation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terror | es: temor | fr: πτόησιν | de: Schrecken 1Pet 3:6

G4424 N-AFS (1×)

Ptolemais, a coastal city in Phoenicia, modern-day Acre in northern Israel

This proper noun identifies a coastal city in ancient Phoenicia, located in what is now northern Israel. Originally called Acco, it was renamed Ptolemais during the Hellenistic period after one of the Ptolemaic rulers of Egypt. The city served as an important Mediterranean port. Luke mentions Ptolemais as one of the stops on Paul's final journey to Jerusalem, where he greeted the believers and stayed one day. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the name across languages, reflecting its status as a proper geographical designation.

(1×) Acts 21:7 records Paul's voyage from Tyre: 'When we had finished the voyage from Tyre, we arrived at Ptolemais, and we greeted the brothers and stayed with them for one day.' The city served as a waypoint on Paul's journey to Jerusalem, where a community of believers already existed. The transliterated name appears consistently across translations. This brief mention indicates the spread of Christianity along the Phoenician coast and Paul's connection to these scattered communities. The one-day stay suggests a brief fellowship and mutual encouragement before continuing toward Jerusalem and Paul's awaiting trials. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ptolemais | es: Ptolemaïda | fr: Ptolémaïs | de: Πτολεμαΐδα Acts 21:7

πτύον G4425 N-NNS (2×)

winnowing fork or shovel, a tool for separating grain from chaff

An agricultural implement used in threshing. Both uses are in John the Baptist's preaching (Matthew 3:12, Luke 3:17), where he declares that the Coming One has his winnowing fork in hand to thoroughly clear his threshing floor—gathering wheat into the barn and burning chaff with unquenchable fire. The image is of eschatological judgment: Christ will separate the righteous from the wicked as decisively as a farmer separates grain from chaff.

(2×) The glosses ('winnowing fork,' 'bieldo,' 'pelle') uniformly identify the farm tool. Matthew 3:12 and Luke 3:17 both record John's baptism preaching about Messiah's coming judgment. The winnowing fork symbolizes Christ's authority to divide humanity—preserving the fruitful and destroying the worthless. The agricultural metaphor makes divine judgment vividly concrete. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: winnowing-fork | es: bieldo | fr: pelle | de: πτύον Matt 3:12; Luke 3:17

πτύρομαι G4426 V-PPM/P-NMP (1×)

to be frightened, scared, or alarmed; to shy away in fear

This passive verb means to be scared, frightened, or alarmed, particularly with the connotation of being startled or shying away like a frightened horse. In classical usage it often described horses starting or shying at something unexpected. Paul employs this term to encourage the Philippians not to be frightened or intimidated by their opponents. The multilingual glosses emphasize the fear reaction: Spanish 'siendo intimidados' (being intimidated), pointing to the psychological pressure from adversaries. Paul frames fearless witness as a sign of the opponents' destruction and the believers' salvation.

(1×) In Philippians 1:28, Paul exhorts believers to stand firm, 'not frightened in anything by your opponents. This is a sign to them of their destruction, but of your salvation, and that from God.' The present passive participle describes ongoing intimidation attempts that believers must resist. Spanish 'siendo intimidados' (being intimidated) captures the external pressure. The classical lexicon shows this verb often described horses shying or starting, then metaphorically humans being alarmed. Paul reframes opposition: fearless Christian witness under persecution becomes a double sign—judgment for persecutors, salvation for believers. Courage in suffering testifies to the truth of the gospel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: being-frightened | es: siendo-intimidados | fr: πτυρόμενοι | de: erschrecken Phil 1:28

πτύσμα G4427 N-GNS (1×)

saliva, spit, or spittle

This neuter noun refers to saliva or spit, the bodily fluid produced in the mouth. In classical contexts it could also refer to serpent venom, but the New Testament usage is straightforward anatomical. John employs this term in the account of Jesus healing the blind man by making mud from his saliva and applying it to the man's eyes. The multilingual glosses are direct: Spanish 'saliva', French 'crachat' (spit), German 'Speichel' (saliva), all referring to this bodily secretion. Jesus' use of spittle in healing was a recognized ancient therapeutic practice.

(1×) John 9:6 describes Jesus' healing method: 'Having said these things, he spit on the ground and made mud with the saliva and anointed the man's eyes with the mud.' The use of saliva in healing appears in several gospel accounts. Spanish 'saliva' and German 'Speichel' directly name the bodily fluid, while French 'crachat' emphasizes the act of spitting. The classical lexicon notes this word can mean sputum or, metaphorically, serpent venom. Jesus' therapeutic use of saliva follows ancient medical practices, but the healing power comes not from the saliva itself but from the divine authority accompanying Jesus' actions and words. FLESH AND BODY en: saliva | es: saliva | fr: crachat | de: Speichel John 9:6

πτύσσω G4428 V-APA-NMS (1×)

to fold, roll up, or close something by folding

This verb means to fold, fold up, or roll up something, particularly scrolls or garments. It describes the action of doubling up or closing by folding. Luke uses this term to describe Jesus rolling up the Isaiah scroll after reading in the Nazareth synagogue. The multilingual glosses emphasize the rolling/folding action: Spanish 'habiendo enrollado' (having rolled up), French 'rouler' (to roll), pointing to the careful handling of the sacred scroll. This detail shows Jesus' respect for Scripture even as he claims to fulfill it.

(1×) In Luke 4:20, after reading from Isaiah 61, 'he rolled up the scroll and gave it back to the attendant and sat down.' The aorist participle describes the completed action of rolling or folding the scroll closed. Spanish 'habiendo enrollado' (having rolled up) and French 'rouler' (to roll) both capture the physical action of returning the scroll to its closed, protected state. The classical lexicon shows this verb means to fold or double up, used of garments and scrolls. Jesus' careful, reverent handling of the scroll contrasts dramatically with his shocking claim moments later: 'Today this Scripture has been fulfilled in your hearing.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14787 WITH 3 SENSES

en: having-rolled-up | es: habiendo-enrollado | fr: rouler | de: πτύξας Luke 4:20

πτύω G4429 V-APA-NMS (3×)

to spit, spit out; to expel saliva from the mouth

This verb means to spit or expel saliva from the mouth. Classical usage included both literal spitting and metaphorical expressions of contempt. The New Testament uses it exclusively in healing narratives where Jesus uses saliva as part of the healing process. Rather than contempt, the biblical usage associates spitting with Jesus' compassionate healing power.

(3×) Describes Jesus spitting as part of healing actions. Mark 7:33 states that Jesus 'spat and touched his tongue' when healing the deaf man. Mark 8:23 records Jesus healing a blind man: 'having spat on his eyes and laid his hands on him.' John 9:6 describes similar action: 'having said these things, he spat on the ground and made clay with the saliva.' The Spanish 'escupió/habiendo-escupido' and French 'cracher' are straightforward physical descriptions. Jesus' use of saliva in healing was culturally significant—in an era when saliva was thought to have medicinal properties, Jesus transforms a common substance into an instrument of divine healing. SPITTING CONTEMPT

en: he-spat, spitting | es: escupió, habiendo-escupido | fr: cracher | de: speien Mark 7:33; Mark 8:23; John 9:6

πτῶμα G4430 N-ANS (7×)

A dead body, corpse, or carcass; a fallen body left lifeless on the ground.

Derived from the verb 'piptō' (to fall), this noun literally means 'that which has fallen' and came to denote a corpse or carcass. In the New Testament it appears in both singular and plural forms, always referring to a dead human body. It describes John the Baptist's body claimed by his disciples (Matt 14:12; Mark 6:29), the corpse of Jesus requested by Joseph of Arimathea (Mark 15:45), and the two witnesses left unburied in Revelation 11:8-9. The proverbial saying about vultures gathering 'where the corpse is' (Matt 24:28) uses it with grim imagery. Translations across languages are strikingly uniform: Spanish 'cadáver,' French 'cadavre,' German 'Leichnam.'

corpse, dead body (7×) A lifeless human body, a corpse or carcass. The etymological connection to 'piptō' (to fall) is preserved in the word's literal sense of a 'fallen body,' though in NT usage the focus is entirely on death rather than the manner of falling. All major translations converge on a single equivalent: Spanish 'cadáver,' French 'cadavre,' German 'Leichnam.' It covers both dignified burial contexts like the retrieval of John the Baptist's body (Matt 14:12; Mark 6:29) and scenes of desolation such as the unburied witnesses in Revelation 11:8-9. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: body, corpse, corpses | es: cadáver, cadáveres, cuerpo | fr: cadavre | de: Leichnam, πτῶμα Matt 14:12; Matt 24:28; Mark 6:29; Mark 15:45; Rev 11:8

πτῶσις G4431 N-AFS (2×)

a fall, downfall, or collapse, whether literal or metaphorical

A noun denoting falling or ruin. In Matthew 7:27, it describes the great crash of the foolish builder's house when storms strike—the fall was great. In Luke 2:34, Simeon prophesies that Jesus is destined for the fall and rising of many in Israel. One use is literal (building collapse), the other metaphorical (spiritual ruin for those who reject Messiah). Both involve catastrophic descent.

(2×) The evidence ('fall,' 'caída,' 'chute') converges on downfall. Matthew 7:27 uses it for the house built on sand collapsing utterly, while Luke 2:34 applies it to the ruin of those who stumble over Christ. The term's literal and figurative senses both convey disaster —whether architectural failure or spiritual rejection that leads to judgment. FALL DOWNFALL RUIN

en: fall | es: caída | fr: chute | de: πτῶσιν, πτῶσις Matt 7:27; Luke 2:34

πτωχ-εία G4432 N-DFS (3×)

poverty, beggary; the state of lacking material resources

This noun denotes poverty or beggary—the condition of lacking material resources. Classical usage referred to mendicity and destitution. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians to describe both the Macedonians' poverty and Christ's voluntary poverty for our sake. Revelation uses it ironically to describe those who think they are rich but are actually poor. The term emphasizes material deprivation.

(3×) Describes the condition of material poverty, sometimes with spiritual significance. Second Corinthians 8:2 commends the Macedonians' generosity: 'in a great trial of affliction, their abundance of joy and their deep poverty abounded to the riches of their generosity.' Verse 9 declares 'you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor.' Revelation 2:9 addresses Smyrna: 'I know your tribulation and poverty (but you are rich).' The Spanish 'pobreza,' French 'pauvreté,' and German 'Armut' straightforwardly denote destitution. This word marks both actual material lack and Christ's voluntary impoverishment that enriches believers. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7233 WITH 3 SENSES

en: poverty | es: pobreza | fr: pauvreté | de: Armut 2Cor 8:2; 2Cor 8:9; Rev 2:9

πτωχ-εύω G4433 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to be poor, live in poverty, or become impoverished

This verb means to be a beggar, to live in poverty, or to become poor. It describes the condition of abject poverty where one must beg for sustenance. Paul uses this term in a stunning paradox to describe Christ's incarnation: though he was rich, yet for our sake he became poor. The multilingual glosses capture the economic reversal: Spanish 'se hizo pobre' (he became poor), French 'devenir pauvre' (to become poor), German 'arm werden' (to become poor), all emphasizing the voluntary descent from wealth to poverty for redemptive purposes.

(1×) 2 Corinthians 8:9 declares one of Scripture's most profound paradoxes: 'For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that you by his poverty might become rich.' The aorist verb marks a definite action—Christ's incarnational impoverishment. Spanish 'se hizo pobre', French 'devenir pauvre', and German 'arm werden' all express becoming poor. The classical lexicon shows this verb means to be a beggar or live in extreme poverty. Christ's voluntary poverty encompasses the entire arc of incarnation, ministry, and cross—emptying himself of divine privilege to enrich spiritually bankrupt humanity. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: he-became-poor | es: se-hizo-pobre | fr: devenir-pauvre | de: arm-werden 2Cor 8:9

πτωχός G4434 Adj-AMS (34×)

Poor, destitute; one who is reduced to begging, lacking material resources or spiritual self-sufficiency

Describes someone at the lowest rung of economic life — not merely humble, but genuinely destitute, dependent on others for survival. Jesus opens the Beatitudes with 'Blessed are the poor in spirit' (Matt 5:3), using this very word to redefine worth in God's kingdom. Elsewhere, the good news is proclaimed 'to the poor' (Matt 11:5), and disciples are urged to sell possessions and give to the poor (Matt 19:21). The Greek carries stronger connotations of abject need than its English translation sometimes conveys; Spanish 'pobres' and German 'arm' similarly span material and spiritual poverty. The word challenges readers to see the destitute as those closest to God's heart.

(34×) Materially and socially destitute — a beggar or person reduced to extreme poverty, dependent on charity. Jesus announces that the gospel is preached to such people as a messianic sign (Matt 11:5; Luke 4:18). The rich young ruler is told to give to the poor (Matt 19:21), and the poor are always present as objects of compassion (Matt 26:11). Multilingual evidence (Spanish 'pobres,' French 'pauvre,' German 'arm') uniformly points to material lack, though Jesus' phrase 'poor in spirit' (Matt 5:3) extends the concept to spiritual neediness before God. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: poor, to-poor, to-the-poor | es: a-pobres, pobres | fr: pauvre | de: arm Matt 5:3; Matt 11:5; Matt 19:21; Matt 26:9; Matt 26:11

πυγμ-ή G4435 N-DFS (1×)

the fist, or with the fist; possibly a measure of length from elbow to knuckles

This noun refers to the fist, or actions performed with the fist. In classical usage it could describe boxing, fighting, or a specific measure of length. The New Testament usage in Mark 7:3 is famously difficult—often translated 'diligently' or 'thoroughly,' but the literal meaning relates to the fist. It may describe a ritual washing gesture using the fist, washing with a handful of water, or washing up to the fist/elbow. The multilingual glosses show the uncertainty: Spanish 'con puño' (with fist), French 'poing' (fist), suggesting physical gesture rather than mere intensity.

(1×) Mark 7:3 describes Pharisaic ritual practice: 'For the Pharisees and all the Jews do not eat unless they wash their hands properly (pygme).' The term is notoriously difficult. Spanish 'con puño' (with fist) and French 'poing' (fist) suggest a physical method—perhaps washing with the fist, or washing up to the fist/elbow, or using the fist to scrub. The classical lexicon shows pygme primarily means fist, and in athletic contexts, boxing. The precise ritual gesture remains uncertain, but Mark emphasizes the meticulous concern for ceremonial cleanliness that characterized Pharisaic tradition—a human tradition Jesus critiques as missing the heart of God's law. FLESH AND BODY

en: with-fist | es: con-puño | fr: poing | de: Faust Mark 7:3

Πύθων G4436 N-AMS (1×)

Python, a spirit of divination; by extension, one possessed by such a spirit or a ventriloquist

This proper noun refers to Python, the mythical serpent slain by Apollo at Delphi. By extension, it came to designate a spirit of divination or one possessed by such a spirit—those who practiced fortune-telling or ventriloquism, supposedly inspired by Apollo. Luke uses this term to describe the slave girl in Philippi who followed Paul, possessed by 'a spirit of Python' (a spirit of divination) and earning money for her masters through fortune-telling. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, recognizing its connection to pagan divination practices.

(1×) Acts 16:16 describes Paul encountering 'a slave girl who had a spirit of divination (literally, a spirit of Python) and brought her owners much gain by fortune-telling.' The term connects to Greek mythology—Python was the serpent killed by Apollo, and those possessed by Python's spirit were believed to prophesy. The transliterated glosses recognize this as a proper name tied to occult practices. When Paul casts out this spirit, he demonstrates the gospel's power over pagan spiritual forces, though the exorcism leads to economic loss for the girl's masters and Paul's imprisonment. Truth disrupts exploitative systems. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: of-Python | es: de-Python | fr: python | de: Πύθωνα Acts 16:16

πυκνός G4437 Adj-AFP (3×)

frequent, often; happening repeatedly or at close intervals

This adjective describes what is frequent, repeated, or happening often. Classical usage could refer to things close together in space or time. The New Testament uses it adverbially to describe repeated actions—frequent fasting and prayers, repeated visits, and regular practices. The term emphasizes regularity and repetition.

(3×) Describes actions that occur frequently or repeatedly. Luke 5:33 contrasts John's disciples who 'fast often and offer prayers' with Jesus' disciples who eat and drink. Acts 24:26 states that Felix 'sent for Paul often and conversed with him' hoping for a bribe. First Timothy 5:23 advises Timothy to 'use a little wine for your stomach and your frequent ailments.' The Spanish 'frecuentemente/frecuentes,' French 'fréquemment/souvent,' and German 'oft' all emphasize repeated occurrence. This word addresses the rhythm and regularity of practices—whether spiritual disciplines, political conversations, or bodily afflictions. TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: frequent, more-frequently, often | es: frecuentemente, frecuentes, más-frecuentemente | fr: fréquemment, souvent | de: oft, πυκνότερον, πυκνὰ Luke 5:33; Acts 24:26; 1Tim 5:23

πυκτ-εύω G4438 V-PIA-1S (1×)

to box, fight with fists, or engage in the sport of boxing

This verb means to box, to practice boxing, or to fight with the fists. It refers to the athletic contest of boxing, one of the ancient Greek Olympic sports. Paul uses this term metaphorically to describe his disciplined spiritual life—he boxes, but not aimlessly, not beating the air. The multilingual glosses are straightforward: Spanish 'boxeo' (I box), French 'boxer' (to box), German 'faustkampfen' (to fist-fight), all pointing to the athletic contest. Paul's metaphor emphasizes purposeful, disciplined training rather than undirected effort.

(1×) 1 Corinthians 9:26 declares Paul's strategy: 'So I do not run aimlessly; I do not box as one beating the air.' The present tense verb indicates Paul's ongoing practice—he boxes with purpose and precision, not shadowboxing ineffectively. Spanish 'boxeo', French 'boxer', and German 'faustkampfen' all identify the athletic contest. Paul's point is that Christian discipline requires focused effort, clear targets, and effective engagement—not merely going through the motions. Just as boxers train rigorously for competition, believers must exercise self-control and purposeful spiritual discipline to win the imperishable prize. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: I-box | es: boxeo | fr: boxer | de: faustkampfen 1Cor 9:26

πύλη G4439 N-DFS (10×)

A gate or gateway, especially of a city or the temple, as a threshold of passage

Refers to a large gate or gateway, typically of a city or temple complex, functioning as a place of entry, passage, and public encounter. In Jesus' teaching, the narrow gate and wide gate stand as metaphors for the path to life and the path to destruction (Matt 7:13–14). The gates of Hades will not prevail against Christ's church (Matt 16:18). In Acts, the Beautiful Gate of the temple is where Peter heals the lame man (Acts 3:10), and the iron gate of the city opens of its own accord for the released Peter (Acts 12:10). Spanish 'puerta' and French 'porte' capture the architectural and metaphorical weight.

gate (entrance to a city, temple, or compound) (10×) A large gate or doorway of a city, temple, or fortress — the architectural threshold through which people enter and exit. Used both literally of the temple's Beautiful Gate (Acts 3:10) and the iron gate of a city (Acts 12:10), and metaphorically of the narrow and wide gates representing life's divergent paths (Matt 7:13–14) and the gates of Hades that cannot overcome Christ's assembly (Matt 16:18). Spanish 'puerta,' French 'porte,' and German 'Tor/Pforte' all preserve both the physical and figurative dimensions of the entrance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gate, gate, gates | es: Puerta, puerta, puertas | fr: porte | de: Tor, Tyrus Matt 7:13; Matt 7:14; Matt 16:18; Luke 7:12

πυλ-ών G4440 N-NMP (18×)

A gateway or monumental entrance; in Revelation, the gates of the heavenly New Jerusalem; elsewhere, an earthly doorway or porch.

In classical Greek, pylōn denoted a gate-tower or gatehouse standing apart from the building it guarded. The New Testament preserves both a grand eschatological use and a humbler domestic one. Eleven of its eighteen occurrences cluster in Revelation 21-22, where the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem — three on each side — define the architecture of the heavenly city. The remaining seven describe ordinary earthly gateways: the porch where Peter was recognized (Matt 26:71), the gate where Lazarus lay (Luke 16:20), and the iron gate that opened by itself for Peter (Acts 12:10). Spanish and French translations consistently render both senses with the same word (puertas, porte), while German distinguishes Tore (monumental) from Tor (single gate).

1. gate of the New Jerusalem (11×) The monumental gates of the eschatological New Jerusalem, appearing exclusively in John's Revelation vision (Rev 21:12-25; 22:14). Each of the twelve gates bears the name of a tribe of Israel and is fashioned from a single pearl. The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform — English 'gates,' Spanish 'puertas,' French 'porte,' German 'Tore' — reflecting the consistency of the apocalyptic imagery across all eleven occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gates | es: puertas, puertas, | fr: porte | de: Tore Rev 21:12; Rev 21:13

2. gateway, entrance gate (7×) An ordinary physical gateway or entrance porch of a house, compound, or city in a this-worldly setting. Lazarus lies at the pylōn of the rich man's estate (Luke 16:20); Rhoda answers the knock at the pylōn (Acts 12:13); a servant girl spots Peter in the pylōn of the high priest's courtyard (Matt 26:71). Spanish here shifts to 'portal' and 'puerta,' and German uses the singular 'Tor,' distinguishing this everyday sense from the heavenly plural. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gate, gates, gateway | es: portal, portales, puerta | fr: porte | de: Tor Matt 26:71; Luke 16:20; Acts 10:17; Acts 12:13; Acts 12:14

πυνθάνομαι G4441 V-AIM-3S (12×)

punthanomai – to inquire, ask, learn by questioning; to seek information through direct inquiry

The deponent verb punthanomai ('inquire, ask') denotes the act of seeking information through questioning or investigation. Unlike simple erotao ('ask a question') or aiteo ('request'), punthanomai emphasizes the process of inquiry and the desire to ascertain facts. Herod 'inquires' of the chief priests where the Christ is to be born (Matt 2:4). The returning servant 'asks' what the commotion is about (Luke 15:26). The royal official's servants report the hour when his son began to recover, and John uses punthanomai to describe his careful investigation (John 4:52). The word appears twelve times, always in this investigative register. Spanish averiguar, French s'informer, and German sich erkundigen all capture its probing, fact-finding nuance.

inquire, ask, learn by inquiry (12×) To inquire or ask questions in order to ascertain facts, emphasizing the investigative process. Herod inquires where the Messiah is to be born (Matt 2:4); the prodigal's brother asks what is happening (Luke 15:26); the royal official investigates his son's healing (John 4:52). Spanish averiguar, French s'informer, and German erkundigen capture its probing character. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: I-ask, having-learned, he-inquired | es: averiguar, averigüó, habiendo-averiguado | fr: s'informer | de: erkundigt-sich, fragen Matt 2:4; Luke 15:26; Luke 18:36; John 4:52; John 13:24

πῦρ G4442 N-ANS (75×)

Fire — literal combustion or divine/eschatological fire of judgment, purification, and theophany.

Pur is the elemental term for fire in Greek, carrying enormous theological freight in the New Testament. It appears in everyday literal contexts — a fire kindled for warmth (Mark 14:54; Luke 22:55) — but far more often in eschatological and divine-judgment settings: the unquenchable fire of Gehenna (Matt 5:22; 18:8-9), the fire that will test each person's work (1 Cor 3:13-15), and the lake of fire in Revelation (Rev 20:14-15). John the Baptist's announcement that the Coming One will baptize 'with the Holy Spirit and fire' (Matt 3:11) fuses purification with judgment. Spanish fuego, French feu, and German Feuer all preserve the single lexeme, as does every target language surveyed.

1. fire (eschatological judgment, divine punishment) (55×) Split from sense 76120. Criteria: Divine judgment and apocalyptic destruction: unquenchable fire (Matt 3:10; 3:12), eternal fire prepared for the devil (Matt 25:41), lake of fire (Rev 20:14-15), refining fire testing works (1 Cor 3:13)

en: fire | es: fuego | fr: feu | de: Feuer Matt 3:10; Matt 3:11; Matt 3:12; Matt 5:22; Matt 7:19

2. fire (literal combustion) (19×) Split from sense 76120. Criteria: Physical fire: hearth fire for warmth (Mark 14:54; Luke 22:55), burning things with fire in everyday contexts en: a-fire, a-south-wind, fire | es: con-fuego, de-fuego, de-fuego, | fr: feu, midi | de: Feuer, νότον Matt 17:15; Mark 9:22; Luke 12:55; Acts 2:3; Acts 7:30

πῦρά G4443 N-AFS (2×)

a fire, especially a bonfire or large burning pile

A noun for a fire, often a pyre or large blaze. Both uses are in Acts 28. In verse 2, the Maltese natives kindle a fire to warm the shipwreck survivors. In verse 3, Paul gathers sticks and lays them on the fire, whereupon a viper strikes. The term emphasizes the communal, outdoor fire built for warmth and hospitality—a setting for both providence (shelter from cold) and peril (the snake).

(2×) The glosses ('fire,' 'fuego,' 'bûcher') uniformly denote a blaze. Acts 28:2 describes the hospitable fire the islanders build for Paul's group, while 28:3 narrates Paul adding fuel and encountering the viper. The fire is both literal (providing warmth) and symbolically significant—even the snake's attack cannot harm the apostle under God's protection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fire, fire | es: fuego | fr: bûcher | de: πυράν, πυρὰν Acts 28:2; Acts 28:3

πύργος G4444 N-NMS (4×)

A tower; a fortified structure for defense, watchkeeping, or agricultural use such as in a vineyard.

One of the most versatile architectural terms in the ancient world, referring to any elevated fortified structure–from city watchtowers to the stone towers built in vineyards to guard against thieves and animals. Jesus draws on the vineyard tower in his parable of the wicked tenants (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1), echoing Isaiah 5:2, where the tower symbolizes God's careful provision for Israel. In Luke, the tower appears twice: the collapse of the tower of Siloam illustrates the randomness of tragedy (Luke 13:4), and the unfinished tower illustrates the cost of discipleship (Luke 14:28).

(4×) A tall fortified structure used for defense, observation, or agricultural guarding, particularly the stone watchtower erected in a vineyard or field. The multilingual glosses are remarkably uniform–'tower' (English), 'torre' (Spanish), 'tour' (French), 'Turm' (German)–reflecting the directness of the referent. In the vineyard parables (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1), the tower alludes to Isaiah 5:2 and represents God's protective investment in his people. Luke's two tower references serve distinct rhetorical purposes: the Siloam tower collapse (Luke 13:4) warns against assuming disaster signals divine punishment, while the unfinished tower (Luke 14:28) teaches that following Jesus demands counting the full cost before breaking ground. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tower, tower | es: torre | fr: tour | de: Turm, πύργον, πύργος Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1; Luke 13:4; Luke 14:28

πυρέσσω G4445 V-PPA-AFS (2×)

to be feverish, to suffer from fever or high temperature

A verb describing the state of having a fever. Both uses narrate healing: Matthew 8:14 describes Peter's mother-in-law lying sick with fever, whom Jesus heals by touch. Mark 1:30 recounts the same event. The participle form emphasizes the ongoing condition—she was feverish, bedridden. Jesus' healing is immediate and complete; she rises and serves. The term is medical and straightforward, but the cure demonstrates Messiah's authority over sickness.

(2×) The glosses ('being feverish,' 'con fiebre,' 'avoir la fièvre,' 'fiebern') uniformly describe the febrile state. Matthew 8:14 and Mark 1:30 both narrate the healing of Peter's mother-in-law, who was lying sick with fever. Jesus touches her, the fever leaves, and she immediately resumes normal activity—a sign that his healing is not convalescent recovery but instantaneous restoration. FEVER ILLNESS

en: being-feverish, sick-with-fever | es: con-fiebre, teniendo-fiebre | fr: avoir-la-fièvre | de: fiebern, πυρέσσουσαν Matt 8:14; Mark 1:30

πυρετ-ός G4446 N-DMP (6×)

pyretos – fever; an illness marked by abnormally high body temperature

Derived from pyr ('fire'), pyretos designates fever as a medical condition – a burning heat within the body. All six New Testament occurrences appear in healing narratives: Jesus heals Peter's mother-in-law of a severe fever (Matt 8:15; Mark 1:31; Luke 4:38-39), the royal official's son lies sick with fever in Capernaum (John 4:52), and Publius's father suffers from fever and dysentery on Malta (Acts 28:8). The word's etymology vividly connects fire and illness. Spanish fiebre, French fievre, and German Fieber all descend from Latin febris, showing cross-cultural convergence on the same concrete medical concept.

fever (bodily illness with elevated temperature) (6×) A fever, an illness characterized by elevated body temperature, etymologically connected to pyr ('fire'). Every NT occurrence appears in a healing context: Peter's mother-in-law (Matt 8:15; Mark 1:31; Luke 4:38-39), the official's son at Capernaum (John 4:52), and Publius's father on Malta (Acts 28:8). Spanish fiebre, French fievre, and German Fieber all converge uniformly on this concrete medical sense. The word functions as a straightforward clinical term with no metaphorical extension in the New Testament. FEVER ILLNESS

en: fever, with-fever, with-fevers | es: de-fiebres, fiebre, por-fiebre | fr: fièvre | de: Fieber, πυρετοῖς, πυρετός Matt 8:15; Mark 1:31; Luke 4:38; Luke 4:39; John 4:52

πύρϊνος G4447 Adj-AMP (1×)

made of fire, fiery, or having the quality of fire

This adjective means made of fire, fiery, or having fire-like qualities. It describes something that consists of fire or has fire's characteristics —burning, blazing, intense. John uses this term in Revelation to describe the breastplates of apocalyptic horsemen, which appeared fiery red among other colors. The multilingual glosses emphasize the fire quality: Spanish 'de fuego' (of fire), German 'feurig' (fiery), pointing to the blazing, burning nature. This adjective contributes to Revelation's vivid, otherworldly imagery of divine judgment.

(1×) Revelation 9:17 describes John's vision: 'And this is how I saw the horses in my vision and those who rode them: they wore breastplates the color of fire and of sapphire and of sulfur.' The adjective describes breastplates with a fiery quality or color—blazing red. Spanish 'de fuego' (of fire) and German 'feurig' (fiery) both emphasize the fire association. The classical lexicon shows this word means of fire or fiery, describing something with fire's nature or appearance. The fiery breastplates are part of Revelation's terrifying imagery of judgment, evoking divine wrath and destructive power unleashed against impenitent humanity. FIRE AND BURNING en: fiery | es: de-fuego | fr: feurig | de: feurig Rev 9:17

πυρόω G4448 V-PNM/P (6×)

To burn with fire; to burn with passion or anguish; to refine or purify by fire; to set ablaze.

Pyroō draws its force from pyr ('fire') and carries the full spectrum of fire's effects — destructive, purifying, and passionate. Paul uses it figuratively for burning with unfulfilled desire (1 Cor 7:9) and for the anguish of pastoral care (2 Cor 11:29). In Revelation, it becomes a metallurgical image: Christ's feet are like bronze 'refined in a furnace' (Rev 1:15), and he counsels Laodicea to buy gold 'refined by fire' (Rev 3:18). Spanish captures the distinction beautifully — quemarse for passionate burning versus refinado for purifying fire. The eschatological use in 2 Pet 3:12, where the heavens are 'set on fire,' returns to fire's raw destructive power.

1. burn with passion or distress (2×) To burn figuratively with intense emotion — whether sexual desire or emotional distress. Paul advises in 1 Cor 7:9 that it is better to marry than 'to burn' (pyrousthai) with uncontrolled passion; in 2 Cor 11:29 he asks 'who is caused to stumble, and I do not burn?' — sharing others' pain as if on fire. Spanish quemarse ('to burn oneself') and German glühen ('to glow') both preserve this internalized, consuming quality. FIRE AND BURNING

en: burn, to-burn | es: me-quemo, quemarse | fr: embraser | de: gluehen 1Cor 7:9; 2Cor 11:29

2. refine by fire (2×) To refine or purify by fire — a metallurgical metaphor for divine testing and purification. In Rev 1:15, the glorified Christ's feet resemble bronze 'having been refined' (pepyrōmenēs) in a furnace, and in Rev 3:18 he counsels buying gold 'refined by fire' (pepyrōmenon). Spanish refinado and refinada exactly capture the smelting image, distinguishing this sense sharply from mere burning. FIRE AND BURNING

en: having-been-refined | es: refinada, refinado | fr: brûler | de: gluehen Rev 1:15; Rev 3:18

3. set on fire, be ablaze (2×) To set on fire, to be ablaze — describing physical combustion or eschatological conflagration. In Eph 6:16, the evil one's arrows are 'having been set on fire' (pepyrō-mena) — flaming projectiles; in 2 Pet 3:12, the heavens 'being set on fire' (pyroumenoi) will dissolve in the final judgment. Spanish encendidos ('ignited') and siendo-encendidos ('being ignited') mark the literal, physical nature of this burning. FIRE AND BURNING en: being-set-on-fire, having-been-set-on-fire | es: encendidos, siendo-encendidos | fr: brûler | de: gluehen Eph 6:16; 2Pet 3:12

πυρρ-άζω G4449 V-PIA-3S (2×)
to be or become red, to redden (especially of the sky)
A verb for turning red. Both uses are in Matthew 16 (verses 2 and 3), where Jesus rebukes the Pharisees and Sadducees for reading weather signs but missing the signs of the times. They know that a red sky at evening means fair weather, and a red sky at morning means storms—yet they cannot discern the prophetic moment. The verb itself is neutral meteorological observation, but Jesus uses it to indict spiritual blindness.

(2×) The glosses ('is red,' 'enrojece,' 'rougir') uniformly describe the sky's color. Matthew 16:2 and 16:3 cite proverbial weather wisdom—evening red foretells clear skies, morning red warns of foul weather. Jesus' point is the irony: they read natural signs expertly but miss the messianic signs unfolding before them. The verb becomes a foil for exposing interpretive failure. RED AND SCARLET en: is-red | es: enrojece | fr: rougir | de: πυρράζει Matt 16:2; Matt 16:3

πυρρός G4450 Adj-NMS (3×)
fiery red, flame-colored; reddish color like fire
This adjective describes a fiery red or flame-colored appearance. Classical usage included reddish-yellow colors, particularly red hair or tawny animals. The New Testament uses it once as a personal name (Pyrrhus) and twice in Revelation's apocalyptic imagery to describe supernatural beings. The term evokes the color of fire and blood.

(3×) Describes fiery red coloring, both in a personal name and apocalyptic imagery. Acts 20:4 mentions 'Sopater of Berea, son of Pyrrhus'—likely a descriptive name meaning 'flame-colored' or 'red-haired.' Revelation 6:4 describes the second horseman: 'another horse came out, fiery red.' Revelation 12:3 introduces 'a great fiery red dragon having seven heads.' The Spanish variations ('rojo,' 'rojo-como-fuego') and German 'rot' emphasize the blood-red, flame-like color. In apocalyptic contexts, this color signals war, violence, and supernatural evil—a vivid chromatic marker of danger and destruction. RED AND SCARLET en: fiery-red, of-Pyrros | es: de-Pýrros, rojo, rojo-como-fuego | fr: rot, rouge | de: rot, Πύρρου Acts 20:4; Rev 6:4; Rev 12:3

πῦρ-ωσις G4451 N-DFS (3×)
burning, fiery trial; the process of burning or testing by fire
This noun denotes burning or the process of being tested by fire. Classical usage included literal firing in cooking, cauterization, and metaphorical testing. The New Testament uses it both literally for fire and metaphorically for fiery trials that test believers. Peter and John employ it in contexts of suffering and eschatological judgment.

(3×) Describes burning or fiery testing, both literal and metaphorical. First Peter 4:12 addresses persecution: 'do not be surprised at the fiery trial among you, which comes upon you for your testing.' Revelation 18:9 describes Babylon's judgment: 'the kings of the earth who committed sexual immorality and lived in luxury with her will weep and wail over her when they see the smoke of her burning.' Revelation 18:18 repeats this image of Babylon's destruction. The Spanish 'fuego/incendio,' French preservation of Greek, and German 'Brennen' all point to fire's consuming power. This word captures both the purifying fire of persecution that tests faith and the destructive fire of divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: burning | es: fuego, incendio | fr: Brennen | de: Brennen 1Pet 4:12; Rev 18:9; Rev 18:18

πω G4452
yet, up to now, at all; enclitic particle expressing 'until this point' or 'ever' (usually with negatives)
This enclitic particle, appearing as πω in Attic Greek and κω in Ionic, means 'yet' or 'up to this time' and almost always appears with negatives in early Greek. The combination οὔπω means 'not yet,' while μήπω means 'not yet' in prohibitions. In questions, it could mean 'ever at all,' as when asking whether any city had ever attempted something. The particle helped Greek speakers mark temporal boundaries, indicating that something had not occurred up to the present moment but might still happen. Its narrow scope made it particularly useful in philosophical and historical precision.

πωλ-έω G4453 V-IIA-3P (22×)
To sell or offer for sale; to be sold (passive) — exchanging goods or property for money
The verb πωλέω is the New Testament's standard word for selling, appearing in marketplace scenes, parables, and ethical instruction. Jesus drives out those who 'sell' doves in the temple (Matt 21:12), tells the rich young man to 'sell' his possessions (Matt 19:21), and describes the man who sells everything for the pearl of great price (Matt 13:46). The passive voice appears in the everyday observation that sparrows 'are sold' for small coins (Matt 10:29, Luke 12:6), and Paul advises eating whatever 'is sold' in the meat market (1 Cor 10:25). Spanish 'vender/vended' and German 'verkaufen' consistently mirror this commercial meaning.

1. sell, offer for sale (19×) The active sense: to sell, dispose of, or offer goods and possessions for sale. The seller is the grammatical subject, exercising agency over the transaction. This dominates the NT usage with 19 occurrences, spanning temple commerce (Matt 21:12, Mark 11:15, John 2:14, 16), charitable divestiture (Matt 19:21, Mark 10:21, Luke 18:22), parable illustrations (Matt 13:44, 46, Matt 25:9), and the early church's communal sharing where believers 'sold' properties (Acts 4:34, 37; 5:1). The multilingual glosses consistently use active verb forms: 'Vended/que-venden' (Spanish), 'vendre' (French), 'verkaufen' (German). SELLING AND COMMERCE
en: Sell, having-sold, let-him-sell | es: Vended, habiendo-vendido, que-venden | fr: vendre | de: verkaufen, verkauft Matt 13:44; Matt 19:21; Matt 21:12; Matt 25:9

2. be sold (3×) The passive sense: to be sold, to be offered for sale — where the commodity or goods are the grammatical subject. Only three clear NT occurrences surface, each in a distinct context. In Matt 10:29, two sparrows 'are sold' for a penny; in Luke 12:6, five sparrows 'are sold' for two pennies — both illustrating God's care for the seemingly worthless. In 1 Cor 10:25, Paul tells the Corinthians to eat whatever 'is sold' in the meat market without raising questions of conscience. The Spanish passive 'se-venden/siendo-vendido' and the English 'are-sold/being-sold' clearly distinguish this voice from the active. SELLING AND COMMERCE
en: are-sold, being-sold | es: se-venden, siendo-vendido | fr: vendre | de: verkaufen, verkauft Matt 10:29; Luke 12:6; 1Cor 10:25

πῶλος G4454 N-AMS (12×)
polos – a colt, young donkey; the unbroken young animal on which Jesus made his triumphal entry
The noun polos ('colt, foal') in classical Greek could denote the young of any animal – horse, donkey, camel, or elephant. In the New Testament, however, all twelve occurrences refer to the young donkey of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem, fulfilling Zechariah 9:9: 'mounted on a donkey, on a colt, the foal of a donkey' (Matt 21:5). The Synoptic accounts describe the disciples finding the colt tied up, untying it, and bringing it to Jesus (Mark 11:2-7; Luke 19:30-35), while John identifies it simply as a 'young donkey' (12:15). Spanish pollino, French anon, and German Fohlen/Fullen all point to the same young equid – a single, vivid image of humble kingship.

a colt (12×) A young donkey or colt, specifically the animal Jesus rode into Jerusalem fulfilling Zechariah 9:9. All twelve NT occurrences cluster in the triumphal entry narratives (Matt 21:2, 5, 7; Mark 11:2, 4, 5, 7; Luke 19:30, 33, 35; John 12:15). French anon and Spanish pollino specify a donkey's foal; German Fohlen is more generic – all converge on one sense. DONKEYS AND FOALS en: a-colt, colt | es: pollino | fr: ânon | de: Fohlen, Füllen Matt 21:2; Matt 21:5; Matt 21:7; Mark 11:2; Mark 11:4

πώποτε G4455 Adv (6×)

popote – ever yet; a temporal adverb used with negation meaning 'at any time up to now'

The adverb popote (from po 'yet' + pote 'ever') means 'ever yet' or 'at any time.' In the New Testament it appears exclusively with a preceding negative, forming the emphatic 'never yet' or 'no one has ever.' Its occurrences cluster around statements of uniqueness or first-time events: 'no one has ever seen God' (John 1:18), 'the Father's voice you have never heard' (John 5:37), 'whoever believes in me shall never thirst' (John 6:35), 'we have never been enslaved to anyone' (John 8:33), and 'a colt on which no one has ever sat' (Luke 19:30). Spanish jamas and French jamais both capture the emphatic temporal negation precisely.

(6×) A temporal adverb meaning 'ever yet, at any time up to the present,' used consistently with a negative to form emphatic 'never (yet)' statements. In John 1:18, no one has popote seen God; in John 5:37, they have popote never heard the Father's voice; in John 6:35, the believer shall popote never thirst; in John 8:33, the Jews claim to have popote never been enslaved; and in Luke 19:30, the colt has popote never been ridden. Spanish jamas and French jamais map precisely to this single emphatic temporal-negation function across all six occurrences. TEMPORAL PARTICLES
en: ever | es: jamás | fr: jamais | de: jemals, πώποτε Luke 19:30; John 1:18; John 5:37; John 6:35; John 8:33

πωρ-όω G4456 V-AIP-3P (5×)

To harden, make callous; to render spiritually insensitive or blind, used of hearts and minds resistant to God.

A verb derived from πῶρος (stone, calcium deposit), meaning to petrify or make callous — to produce a hard, insensible covering over the heart or mind. In the NT, every use is metaphorical and theological, describing spiritual hardening. Mark twice records the disciples' hardened hearts despite witnessing miracles (6:52; 8:17). John 12:40 cites Isaiah 6:10 to explain Israel's unbelief: God 'has blinded their eyes and hardened their hearts.' Romans 11:7 and 2 Corinthians 3:14 extend this to Israel's corporate hardening. The French 'aveugler' (to blind) and 'endurcir' (to harden) capture the dual effect, while the German 'verhärten' preserves the hardening image.

(5×) To harden or make callous — to render someone spiritually insensitive, dull, or blind. The root πῶρος (calcium stone, callus) gives this verb a strikingly medical quality: like bone forming over a fracture or a callus deadening sensation, the heart loses its capacity to perceive and respond. In Mark 6:52, the disciples fail to understand the loaves because their hearts 'were hardened' — even eyewitness miracle experience could not penetrate. Mark 8:17 repeats the charge. John 12:40 links this hardening to Isaiah's divine judgment, and Rom 11:7 applies it to the portion of Israel that did not obtain what it sought. In 2 Cor 3:14, the hardening extends to 'minds' (νοήματα) when reading the old covenant without Christ. The German 'verhärten' and Spanish 'endurecer' both preserve the physicality of the hardening metaphor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: hardened, were-hardened | es: endurecido, fueron-endurecidos, ha-endurecido | fr: aveugler, endurcir | de: verhaerten Mark 6:52; Mark 8:17; John 12:40; Rom 11:7; 2Cor 3:14

πώρ-ωσις G4457 N-AFS (3×)

hardness, callousness; the hardened or obtuse condition of the heart or mind

This medical term originally described the callus that forms when broken bones heal. Metaphorically, it came to mean obtuseness, blindness, or hardness of heart. The New Testament uses it exclusively in this metaphorical sense to describe spiritual insensitivity and resistance to God's truth. It emphasizes a hardened condition that resists divine influence.

(3×) Describes spiritual hardness or callousness of heart. Mark 3:5 records Jesus looking around 'with anger, being grieved at the hardness of their hearts' when the Pharisees refused to answer about healing on the Sabbath. Romans 11:25 speaks of 'a partial hardness that has happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles has come in.' Ephesians 4:18 describes unbelievers as 'darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, due to the hardness of their hearts.' The cross-linguistic evidence shows 'hardness' and 'hardening'—a resistant, calloused condition that cannot receive truth or compassion. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7670 WITH 5 SENSES en: hardness | es: dureza, endurecimiento | fr: aveuglement, endurcissement | de: Verhartung Mark 3:5; Rom 11:25; Eph 4:18

πως G4458

somehow, in any way, at all; enclitic adverb softening or qualifying manner expressions

This versatile enclitic adverb of manner means 'somehow' or 'in any way,' often softening the force of other adverbs or adding a note of approximation. It frequently combined with negatives to form οὔπως ('not at all') and μήπως ('lest somehow'). When following other manner adverbs like 'thus' or 'always,' it could be nearly untranslatable in English but added a Greek sense of qualified certainty —'somehow so' or 'in some way.' This particle reflected the Greek philosophical concern for precision while acknowledging the limits of exact description. It made statements less absolute and more nuanced.

πῶς G4459 Conj (118×)

Interrogative and indefinite adverb: 'how?' in questions of manner or possibility; 'somehow, lest somehow' in clauses of apprehension.

A versatile adverb that most often introduces questions about manner, means, or possibility – 'How can these things be?' (John 3:9). Every major translation language renders it with a direct interrogative: English 'how,' Spanish 'como,' French 'comment,' German 'wie.' In a smaller but theologically significant set of passages, it shifts to an indefinite sense expressing apprehension or hopeful uncertainty – 'lest somehow' or 'if perhaps' – as when Paul hopes his ministry might 'somehow' provoke Israel to jealousy (Rom 11:14). The Spanish 'acaso' and 'de algun modo' capture this softer, indefinite shade nicely.

1. how? (interrogative) (103×) The dominant interrogative use (103x), introducing direct and indirect questions about manner, means, or feasibility. Translations universally reach for straightforward interrogative forms – English 'how,' Spanish 'como,' French 'comment,' German 'wie.' Jesus deploys it with rhetorical force: 'How can Satan cast out Satan?' (Mark 3:23), and the disciples' astonishment surfaces in 'How then can anyone be saved?' (Matt 19:25). The interrogative force ranges from genuine inquiry to incredulity. COMPARISON AND MANNER
en: How, how | es: Cómo, cómo, ¿cómo | fr: comment | de: wie Matt 6:28; Matt 7:4; Matt 10:19; Matt 12:4; Matt 12:26

2. somehow, perhaps, lest somehow (15×) An indefinite adverb of apprehension or cautious hope (15x), most often appearing as mu pos ('lest somehow') or expressing 'in some way, perhaps.' Paul's language in Romans 1:10 ('if somehow now at last I may succeed') and Romans 11:14 ('if somehow I might provoke to jealousy') reveals the hopeful-uncertain register. Spanish distinguishes this neatly with 'acaso' and 'de algun modo' versus the blunt interrogative 'como.' First Corinthians 8:9 warns 'lest somehow this liberty of yours become a stumbling block,' illustrating the apprehensive function. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: he, somehow | es: acaso, de-algún-modo, sea-que | fr: comment | de: wie Acts 27:12; Rom 1:10; Rom 11:14; Rom 11:21; 1Cor 8:9

Ῥαάβ G4460 N-NFS (2×)

Rahab, the Canaanite woman of Jericho who sheltered Israel's spies and was saved

A proper name (Hebrew רָחָב) for the harlot of Jericho. Hebrews 11:31 includes her in the hall of faith—by faith Rahab did not perish with the disobedient, having received the spies with peace. James 2:25 cites her as evidence that faith without works is dead—she demonstrated living faith by her actions in hiding the spies. Both passages celebrate her as a Gentile outsider who believed God's word and acted on it, becoming part of Israel's story and Messiah's lineage (Matthew 1:5).

(2×) The glosses transliterate the Hebrew name ('Rahab,' 'Raáb'). Hebrews 11:31 and James 2:25 both recall Joshua 2—Rahab's faith-driven protection of Israel's spies. The NT honors her as a model of saving faith and active obedience, remarkable given her Gentile and immoral background. Her inclusion in both the genealogy of Jesus and the faith roster underscores God's grace reaching beyond Israel's boundaries. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2607 WITH 5 SENSES

en: Raab, Rhaab | es: Raáb, Rhaáb | fr: Rahab | de: Rahab Heb 11:31; Jas 2:25

ῥαββί G4461 N-NMS (15×)

Rabbi; a Hebrew honorific meaning 'my master/teacher,' used as a respectful address for religious instructors.

A transliterated Hebrew title of respect meaning literally 'my great one' or 'my master,' used to address recognized teachers of the Torah. In the New Testament it functions as a direct address to Jesus by his disciples and others who acknowledge his teaching authority. Judas addresses Jesus as 'Rabbi' at the betrayal (Matt 26:25, 49), and Peter uses it at the Transfiguration (Mark 9:5). Jesus himself critiques the Pharisees' love of being called 'Rabbi' (Matt 23:7) and instructs his followers not to seek the title for themselves (Matt 23:8). The Gospel of John translates the term for Greek-speaking readers as didaskalos, 'teacher' (John 1:38). The word entered virtually every target language untranslated—Spanish 'Rabbí,' French 'Rabbi,' German 'Rabbi'—testifying to its status as a culturally embedded loanword.

(15×) A Hebrew honorific meaning 'my master' or 'my teacher,' used as a title of respect for Jewish religious instructors. Disciples and supplicants address Jesus with this title throughout the Gospels (Matt 26:25, 49; Mark 9:5; John 1:38, 49; 3:2; 6:25). Jesus critiques the scribes' desire to be greeted as 'Rabbi' in public (Matt 23:7) and forbids his own followers from claiming the title, since they have one Teacher (Matt 23:8). John 1:38 explicitly glosses it as 'Teacher' (didaskalos) for Hellenistic readers. The near-universal transliteration across languages—Spanish 'Rabbí,' French 'Rabbi,' German 'Rabbi'—reflects its irreducible cultural specificity. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: Rabbi | es: Rabbí, Rhabbí | fr: Rabbi | de: Rabbi, ῥαββί, Ῥαββί Matt 23:7; Matt 23:8; Matt 26:25; Matt 26:49; Mark 9:5

G4462 N-VMS (2×)

Rabbouni, an intensified Aramaic form of 'Rabbi' meaning 'my master' or 'my great teacher'

An Aramaic title of respect and affection (רַבּוֹנִי). In Mark 10:51, blind Bartimaeus calls out to Jesus, 'Rabbouni, that I may receive my sight.' In John 20:16, Mary Magdalene recognizes the risen Jesus and exclaims, 'Rabbouni!' Both are moments of desperate need or profound recognition. The term is more intimate and reverent than the common 'Rabbi,' expressing personal devotion. That the evangelists preserve the Aramaic suggests the word's emotional weight.

(2×) The glosses transliterate the Aramaic ('Rabbouni,' 'Rabbuni'). Mark 10:51 records Bartimaeus's cry for healing, while John 20:16 captures Mary's resurrection recognition. Both speakers address Jesus with this heightened honorific at climactic moments—one pleading for sight, the other overcome by joy at seeing the risen Lord. The term conveys reverence, intimacy, and authority. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: Rabbouni | es: Rabbouni, Rhabbouní | fr: Rabbouni | de: Rabbuni Mark 10:51; John 20:16

ῥαβδ-ίζω G4463 V-PNA (2×)

to beat with rods, flog with a staff or rod

A verb for corporal punishment by beating with rods. In Acts 16:22, the Philippian magistrates command Paul and Silas to be beaten with rods before imprisonment. In 2 Corinthians 11:25, Paul recounts suffering this punishment three times (a Roman penalty distinct from the Jewish thirty-nine lashes). The verb denotes a specific form of official beating, often administered by lictors to Roman citizens—making its use on Paul (a citizen) at Philippi illegal and a source of official embarrassment (Acts 16:37-38).

(2×) The evidence ('I was beaten with rods,' 'fui golpeado con varas,' 'frapper de verges') uniformly describes rod-beating. Acts 16:22 narrates Paul and Silas receiving this punishment at Philippi, while 2 Corinthians 11:25 counts three such beatings in Paul's catalog of sufferings. The verb points to a formal Roman flogging, illegal when applied to citizens but part of the apostle's cost of ministry. RODS AND STAFFS en: I-was-beaten-with-rods, to-beat-with-rods | es: azotar-con-varas, fui-golpeado-con-varas | fr: frapper-de-verges | de: ἐραβδίσθην, ῥαβδίζειν Acts 16:22; 2Cor 11:25

ῥάβδος G4464 N-AFS (12×)

rhabdos – rod, staff, scepter; a straight stick used for walking, herding, discipline, or royal authority

The noun rhabdos ('rod, staff, scepter') denotes a straight stick-like implement whose significance shifts with context. In the travel instructions of Jesus, it is the walking staff a disciple may or may not carry (Matt 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3). In Hebrews 11:21, it is the patriarch's staff on which aged Jacob leaned while blessing his grandsons. In Hebrews 1:8, quoting Psalm 45:6, it becomes the scepter of divine kingship: 'a scepter of uprightness is the scepter of your kingdom.' Revelation presses it further into the rod of iron by which the Messiah rules the nations (Rev 2:27; 12:5; 19:15). All these applications – pastoral, pilgrim, and regal – spring from one lexeme. Spanish vara, French baton/verge, and German Stab render it uniformly.

rod, staff, scepter (12×) A straight stick serving as a walking staff, shepherd's rod, or royal scepter depending on context. Covers the traveler's staff (Matt 10:10; Mark 6:8), Jacob's staff of blessing (Heb 11:21), the scepter of Christ's kingdom (Heb 1:8), and the iron rod of messianic rule (Rev 2:27; 19:15). Spanish vara, French baton, and German Stab confirm a single lexeme across all functions. RODS AND STAFFS en: a-rod, a-staff, rod | es: a-vara, bastón, bordón | fr: bâton, verge | de: Stab Matt 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3; 1Cor 4:21; Heb 1:8

ῥάβδουχ-ος G4465 N-AMP (2×)

rod-bearers, lictors who carried the fasces and attended Roman magistrates

A title for Roman officials (lictors) who carried rods bundled with an axe (fasces) as symbols of magisterial authority. Both uses are in Acts 16. In verse 35, the Philippian magistrates send the lictors to release Paul and Silas. In verse 38, the lictors report Paul's claim to Roman citizenship, alarming the magistrates. The term is culturally specific—these were attendants who executed punishments and conveyed official orders. Their presence signals Roman legal procedure.

(2×) The glosses ('officers,' 'lictores,' 'porteur de faisceaux') identify these Roman officials. Acts 16:35 and 38 both feature the lictors as intermediaries between magistrates and prisoners. Their role is administrative and coercive—they carry out beatings and relay messages. Paul's citizenship claim puts them (and the magistrates) in legal jeopardy, since they had illegally beaten a Roman citizen. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: officers | es: lictores | fr: porteur-de-faisceaux | de: ῥαβδούχους, ῥαβδοῦχοι Acts 16:35; Acts 16:38

Ῥαγαύ G4466 N-GMS (1×)

Reu, the son of Peleg and ancestor of Abraham in Luke's genealogy

This proper name identifies Reu (Hebrew Re'u), a patriarch listed in the genealogy of Jesus in Luke's gospel. Reu was the son of Peleg and the father of Serug, part of the post-flood lineage leading to Abraham. The name appears in Genesis 11 in the Table of Nations. Luke includes Reu in the extended genealogy that traces Jesus' lineage back through Abraham to Adam, establishing Jesus' connection to all humanity. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, recognizing it as a proper designation for this ancestral figure.

(1×) Luke 3:35 traces Jesus' genealogy: 'the son of Serug, the son of Reu, the son of Peleg, the son of Eber, the son of Shelah.' Reu appears as one link in the chain connecting Jesus to the patriarchs. The transliterated glosses simply preserve the name across languages. While Scripture tells us nothing about Reu's character or deeds beyond his place in the genealogy, his inclusion affirms God's faithfulness across generations, preserving the messianic line through centuries of ordinary, unnamed lives until the fullness of time when Christ appeared. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Rhagau | es: Rhagaû | fr: Ragau | de: Ῥαγαῦ Luke 3:35

ῥᾳδιούργ-ημα G4467 N-NNS (1×)

a crime, misdeed, or act of villainy; wrongdoing worthy of legal punishment

This neuter noun describes a crime, misdeed, or act of villainy—wrongdoing serious enough to warrant legal action. It denotes criminal or reprehensible behavior. The proconsul Gallio uses this term in dismissing the Jewish accusations against Paul, stating that if there were actual crime or serious villainy involved, he would hear the case, but since it concerns religious questions, he refuses to judge. The multilingual glosses emphasize the criminal dimension: Spanish 'delito' (crime), French 'crime', pointing to legally actionable wrongdoing rather than mere religious dispute.

(1×) Acts 18:14 records Gallio's response to Jewish accusations against Paul: 'If it were a matter of wrongdoing or vicious crime, O Jews, I would have reason to accept your complaint.' The noun describes serious criminal activity that Roman law would address. Spanish 'delito' (crime) and French 'crime' both identify legally punishable offenses. The classical lexicon shows this word means misdeed or villainy, actions worthy of punishment. Gallio's distinction between actionable crime and internal religious disputes provides Paul protection, dismissing the case as outside Roman judicial concern—a pattern repeated throughout Acts as Roman officials find no legal grounds for prosecuting Christians. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: crime | es: delito | fr: crime | de: ῥᾳδιούργημα Acts 18:14

ῥᾳδιουργ-ία G4468 N-GFS (1×)

knavery, villainy, or wicked cunning; deceitful and malicious behavior

This noun describes knavery, villainy, or wicked cunning—behavior characterized by deceit, malice, and moral corruption. In classical usage it could mean self-indulgence or laziness, but also fraud and wickedness. Paul uses this term in rebuking Elymas the magician, calling him full of deceit and villainy, an enemy of righteousness. The multilingual glosses emphasize the wickedness: Spanish 'maldad' (wickedness), French 'scélératesse' (villainy), pointing to morally corrupt, deceitful behavior. This word captures the character of one who actively opposes truth through cunning manipulation.

(1×) Acts 13:10 records Paul's rebuke of Elymas: 'You son of the devil, you enemy of all righteousness, full of all deceit and villainy, will you not stop making crooked the straight paths of the Lord?' The noun pairs with 'deceit,' emphasizing Elymas's morally corrupt character. Spanish 'maldad' (wickedness) and French 'scélératesse' (villainy) both capture the serious moral indictment. The classical lexicon shows this word can mean knavery or fraud—deliberate wickedness. Paul's harsh confrontation exposes Elymas as one who actively perverts God's truth, leading the proconsul astray through spiritual deception. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: villainy | es: maldad | fr: scélératesse | de: ῥᾳδιουργίας Acts 13:10

G4469 N-VMS (1×)

Raca (Aramaic insult meaning 'empty-headed' or 'worthless,' transliterated into Greek)

This is a transliterated Aramaic insult meaning 'empty,' 'worthless,' or 'empty-headed,' preserved in Jesus' teaching about anger in the Sermon on the Mount. Rather than translating it, most versions simply transliterate it as 'Raca' or similar phonetic forms, recognizing it as a contemptuous term of address that degrades another person's worth or intelligence. Jesus uses this term to warn that contemptuous anger carries severe moral weight, even when it doesn't escalate to physical violence. The word derives from Hebrew רֵיק (rēq), meaning 'empty' or 'vain.'

(1×) In Matthew 5:22, Jesus employs this Aramaic insult within his teaching on anger, placing it on a spectrum between unjustified anger and calling someone a fool. The multilingual evidence shows translators universally preserving the transliteration ('Rhaka,' 'Rhaká,' 'Raca'), recognizing that the force of the original invective—attacking someone's worth or mental capacity—is better retained through transliteration than through translation. The Hebrew cognate רֵיק clarifies the semantic core: emptiness, worthlessness, futility. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: Rhaka | es: Rhaká | fr: Raca | de: Ῥακά Matt 5:22

ῥάκος G4470 N-GNS (2×)

a piece of cloth, a rag or patch, especially an unshrunk piece

A noun for a piece of fabric, often a patch or rag. Both uses are in the parable of the unshrunk patch. Matthew 9:16 and Mark 2:21 record Jesus warning that no one sews a patch of unshrunk cloth on an old garment, lest the new piece tear away and make the tear worse. The term emphasizes the incompatibility—new, unshrunken fabric will pull away from old, worn material. Jesus uses this domestic illustration to explain why his new-covenant message does not fit into old wineskin structures.

(2×) The glosses ('of cloth,' 'de tela,' 'morceau') identify the fabric piece. Matthew 9:16 and Mark 2:21 use it in Jesus' parable about the incompatibility of old and new. The unshrunk patch (new cloth) damages the old garment when sewn on—an image of how Jesus' kingdom ministry cannot be contained within old religious forms. The term's ordinariness makes the theological point accessible. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: of-cloth | es: de-tela | fr: morceau | de: ῥάκους Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21

Ῥαμά G4471 N-DFS (1×)

Ramah, a town in Benjamin associated with Rachel's mourning in Jeremiah's prophecy

This proper noun identifies Ramah, a town in the territory of Benjamin, located north of Jerusalem. The name means 'height' or 'high place.' Matthew quotes Jeremiah 31:15, which poetically places Rachel weeping in Ramah for her children. This prophecy, originally referring to the Babylonian exile, Matthew applies to Herod's slaughter of the innocents in Bethlehem. The multilingual glosses transliterate the Hebrew name, recognizing it as a geographical location laden with prophetic significance and maternal grief.

(1×) Matthew 2:18 quotes Jeremiah: 'A voice was heard in Ramah, weeping and loud lamentation, Rachel weeping for her children; she refused to be comforted, because they are no more.' Ramah serves as the symbolic location of Rachel's mourning, representing the grief of Israelite mothers. The transliterated name appears consistently across languages. Matthew sees Herod's massacre as fulfilling this prophetic pattern—once again, mothers in the land weep for their slaughtered children. Ramah becomes a place-name that evokes deep maternal sorrow, connecting the Babylonian exile's tragedy to the horrors of Herod's paranoid violence. RAMAH PLACE NAME

en: Rhama | es: Rhamá | fr: Rama | de: Ῥαμὰ Matt 2:18

ῥαν-τίζω G4472 V-AIA-3S (4×)

To sprinkle, especially with blood or water for ritual purification; to cleanse ceremonially.

A verb of ritual action rooted in the Levitical sacrificial system, where the sprinkling of blood or water effected ceremonial purification. All four New Testament occurrences appear in Hebrews, where the author systematically contrasts old covenant sprinkling rites with the superior cleansing accomplished by Christ's blood. The sprinkling of blood and water by Moses at Sinai (Heb 9:19, 21) and the ashes of the red heifer (Heb 9:13) are shown to be shadows of the believer's heart being 'sprinkled clean from an evil conscience' (Heb 10:22). Spanish 'rociar' and French 'asperger' both preserve the liturgical register of the action.

(4×) To scatter liquid–typically blood or water–in droplets upon a person or object for the purpose of ritual purification or covenant ratification. The verb echoes the LXX's rendering of Levitical sprinkling rites (cf. Lev 14:7; Num 19:18). In Hebrews 9:13, the sprinkling of goat blood and heifer ashes sanctifies 'for the purification of the flesh'; in 9:19 and 9:21, Moses sprinkles both the scroll and the tabernacle vessels with blood. The climactic use in Heb 10:22 transfers the image from external ritual to internal reality: believers approach God with hearts 'sprinkled from an evil conscience.' The German 'besprengen' and Spanish 'rociar' both denote scattering liquid in fine drops, preserving the ceremonial overtone. RITUAL SPRINKLING en: having-been-sprinkled, he-sprinkled, sprinkling | es: rociados, rociando, roció | fr: besprengen | de: besprengen Heb 9:13; Heb 9:19; Heb 9:21; Heb 10:22

ῥαν-τισμός G4473 N-GMS (2×)

sprinkling, the act of sprinkling or purification by sprinkling

A noun denoting ritual sprinkling, especially with blood or water. In Hebrews 12:24, believers have come to the sprinkled blood of Jesus that speaks better than Abel's. In 1 Peter 1:2, Christians are chosen for obedience and sprinkling by Jesus Christ's blood. Both passages evoke OT purification and covenant rituals (Exodus 24:8, Leviticus sprinkling rites). The term signals ceremonial cleansing, now fulfilled in Christ's blood that sanctifies definitively.

(2×) The glosses ('sprinkling,' 'aspersión,' 'Besprengung') uniformly denote the ritual act. Hebrews 12:24 contrasts Abel's blood (crying for vengeance) with Christ's sprinkled blood (speaking peace and cleansing), while 1 Peter 1:2 identifies believers as those set apart by blood-sprinkling. Both draw on OT imagery of covenant ratification and purification, now realized in Christ's atoning death. RITUAL SPRINKLING en: of-sprinkling, sprinkling | es: aspersión, de-rociadura | fr: aspersion | de: Besprengung Heb 12:24; 1Pet 1:2

ῥᾰπίζω G4474 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to slap, strike with the open hand, especially in the face

A verb for striking with the palm, distinct from punching or beating with rods. In Matthew 5:39, Jesus teaches that if someone slaps you on the right cheek, turn the other also—an instruction in nonretaliation. In Matthew 26:67, the Sanhedrin's attendants slap Jesus in the face during his trial. One use is didactic (teaching disciples), the other narrative (Passion suffering). Both involve insult and humiliation, not life-threatening violence—the slap is about shame and contempt.

(2×) The evidence ('slapped,' 'abofetear,' 'gifle') converges on striking the face. Matthew 5:39 instructs disciples to absorb insult without retaliation, while 26:67 describes Jesus enduring mockery and blows. The verb denotes a degrading strike—more about dishonor than injury. Jesus both teaches non-resistance to such treatment and exemplifies it in his Passion. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: slapped, strikes | es: abofetee, lo-abofetearon | fr: gifle | de: ἐράπισαν, ῥαπίζει Matt 5:39; Matt 26:67

ῥάπ-ισμα G4475 N-ANS (3×)

a slap, blow with the hand, especially a strike to the face; a sharp physical insult

This noun denotes a sharp blow with the hand, typically to the face—a gesture carrying both physical pain and social humiliation. The term appears in the passion narratives: the temple guards strike Jesus with such blows while mocking his prophetic claims (Mark 14:65), a servant delivers one during the high priest's interrogation (John 18:22), and Roman soldiers administer them as part of their cruel theater of mockery (John 19:3). The classical lexicon notes the word can mean a simple stroke or more specifically a slap to the face, with later usage extending to welts or marks left by blows. In these Gospel contexts, the physical violence is inseparable from the social degradation—each slap expressing contempt for Jesus' messianic claims.

(3×) A blow with the hand, specifically a slap to the face, combining physical assault with social insult. Classical Greek usage ranges from general "stroke" (of charcoal, producing sparks) to the more specific "slap" and even the resulting "weal" or mark. The New Testament occurrences cluster in the passion narrative, where such blows mark the escalating violence and mockery Jesus endures. The multilingual glosses (Spanish bofetada, French gifle, German Schlag) consistently identify these as facial strikes, though English translations vary between "slaps," "blows," and "struck." STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: a-slap, slaps, with-slaps | es: bofetada, bofetadas, con-bofetadas | fr: gifle | de: Schlag Mark 14:65; John 18:22; John 19:3

ῥᾰφίς G4476 N-GFS (2×)

a needle, a sewing needle with an eye for thread

A noun for the small tool used in sewing. Both uses are in Jesus' saying about the difficulty of the rich entering God's kingdom. Matthew 19:24 and Mark 10:25 state it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich person to enter the kingdom. The hyperbolic image—the largest common animal and the smallest common opening—underscores impossibility apart from divine intervention. The needle represents an absurdly narrow passage.

(2×) The glosses ('needle,' 'aguja,' 'aiguille') uniformly identify the sewing implement. Matthew 19:24 and Mark 10:25 use it in Jesus' proverbial saying about wealth as an obstacle to salvation. The needle's tiny eye contrasts with the camel's bulk—humanly impossible, but 'with God all things are possible' (Matt 19:26). The term's ordinariness makes the hyperbole vivid and memorable. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14850 WITH 3 SENSES

en: needle, of-a-needle | es: aguja, de-aguja | fr: aiguille | de: ῥαφίδος Matt 19:24; Mark 10:25

G4477 N-GFS (1×)

Rahab, the Canaanite woman of Jericho who protected the Israelite spies

This proper noun identifies Rahab, the Canaanite woman who lived in Jericho and protected the Israelite spies sent by Joshua. Despite being a prostitute and a Gentile, Rahab demonstrated faith in Israel's God, hid the spies, and secured safety for her family when Jericho fell. Matthew includes Rahab in Jesus' genealogy, one of only four women named, highlighting God's inclusion of Gentiles and moral outsiders in the messianic line. The multilingual glosses transliterate her name, recognizing her as a significant figure in salvation history.

(1×) Matthew 1:5 records in Jesus' genealogy: 'and Salmon the father of Boaz by Rahab, and Boaz the father of Obed by Ruth.' Rahab's inclusion is remarkable—a Gentile, former prostitute, now ancestor of King David and Jesus Christ. The transliterated name appears across languages. Rahab's faith (mentioned in Hebrews 11:31 and James 2:25) overcame her pagan background and questionable profession. Her story demonstrates that God's grace reaches beyond ethnic and moral boundaries, incorporating the unexpected and unworthy into his redemptive plan. Rahab's presence in the genealogy foreshadows the gospel's radical inclusivity. AUTO-DETECTED

COMMUNITY 2607 WITH 5 SENSES
en: Rhachab | es: Rhachháb | fr: Rahab | de: Ῥαχάβ Matt 1:5

Ῥαχήλ G4478 N-NFS (1×)
Rachel, wife of Jacob and mother of Joseph and Benjamin
This proper noun identifies Rachel, one of the matriarchs of Israel, the beloved wife of Jacob and mother of Joseph and Benjamin. Rachel died giving birth to Benjamin and was buried near Bethlehem. Matthew quotes Jeremiah 31:15, which poetically depicts Rachel weeping for her children, applying this to the mothers of Bethlehem mourning their sons murdered by Herod. Rachel becomes the archetypal grieving mother, her tomb's proximity to Bethlehem making the connection vivid. The multilingual glosses transliterate the Hebrew name across languages.

(1×) Matthew 2:18 applies Jeremiah's prophecy: 'A voice was heard in Ramah, weeping and loud lamentation, Rachel weeping for her children; she refused to be comforted, because they are no more.' Rachel, buried near Bethlehem, becomes the symbolic mother mourning for the slaughtered innocents. The transliterated name appears uniformly across translations. Jeremiah originally used Rachel's weeping to represent Israel's grief during the Babylonian exile, but Matthew sees the pattern repeated in Herod's massacre. Rachel's inconsolable grief captures every mother's anguish over murdered children—a sorrow that echoes through Scripture and history, pointing ultimately to redemption through Rachel's greater Son, the Messiah born in Bethlehem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhachēl | es: Rhachél | fr: Rachel | de: Rahab Matt 2:18

Ῥεβέκκα G4479 N-NFS (1×)
Rebecca, wife of Isaac and mother of Jacob and Esau
Rebecca appears in Romans 9:10 as Paul discusses God's sovereign election. She is the matriarch who received the divine oracle that 'the older will serve the younger' before her twin sons were born. Her story illustrates that God's purposes rest on His calling rather than human works or effort. The cross-linguistic consistency (Rebekka, Rébecca) reflects her enduring significance in salvation history.

(1×) The proper name of Isaac's wife, central to Paul's argument about divine election in Romans 9. Translations across languages preserve the Hebrew name with minimal phonetic adaptation, recognizing her as a matriarch whose experience of God's sovereign choice predates any actions of her children. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rebekka | es: Rebékka | fr: Rébecca | de: Rebekka Rom 9:10

ῥαῖδ-α G4480 N-GFP (1×)
Four-wheeled carriages or wagons used for transport
This rare term appears only in Revelation 18:13 within the catalog of luxury goods traded by Babylon. The word derives from Latin 'raeda,' denoting substantial wheeled vehicles—chariots or wagons used for transporting people or goods. The multilingual glosses (chariots, carros, Wagen) capture both the vehicular nature and the commercial context of Rome's extensive trade networks.

(1×) Wheeled vehicles appearing in the list of Babylon's merchandise in Revelation 18:13. The Latin loanword and its preservation across translations highlight the Roman commercial context—these are not war chariots but transport vehicles that symbolize the economic splendor doomed to fall. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS en: of-chariots | es: de-carros | fr: Wagen | de: Wagen Rev 18:13

Ῥεμφάν G4481 N-GMS (1×)
Rompha/Rephan, a name for the star deity Saturn worshiped by Israelites
In Acts 7:43, Stephen quotes Amos 5:26, naming Rompha (or Rephan in variant readings) as the astral deity the Israelites worshiped in the wilderness. This appears to be one of several names for Saturn or Seb in ancient Near Eastern religion. The textual variants (Raiphan, Rhaiphán, Remphan) reflect the challenge of transliterating a foreign deity name through Hebrew into Greek, preserving the memory of Israel's idolatry.

(1×) The name of a star god (likely Saturn) mentioned in Stephen's speech as evidence of Israel's persistent idolatry. The variety of transliterations across Greek manuscripts and modern languages reflects the complex transmission history of this foreign divine name through multiple linguistic layers. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: Raiphan | es: Rhaiphán | fr: Remphan | de: Ῥαιφάν Acts 7:43

ῥέω G4482 V-FIA-3P (1×)
To flow, especially of water moving in streams
This verb appears once in John 7:38, where Jesus promises that 'rivers of living water will flow' from the one who believes. The future tense points forward to the gift of the Spirit after Jesus' glorification. Ancient Greek usage describes natural water flow—streams, rivers, and currents. Here the physical image becomes a powerful metaphor for the abundant spiritual life that flows from believers.

(1×) To flow like a river or stream, used metaphorically in John 7:38 for the living water of the Spirit. The multilingual glosses (will-flow, fluirán, couler, fliessen) maintain the fluid imagery that Jesus employs to describe the Spirit's abundant outpouring from those who believe in him. FLOWING WATER
en: will-flow | es: fluirán | fr: couler | de: fliessen John 7:38

ἐρέω G4483
I will say; Ionic future form of 'to say' (see ἐρῶ)
This is simply the Ionic dialect form of the future tense 'I will say,' equivalent to Attic ἐρῶ. Greek dialects preserved different forms of common irregular verbs, and ἐρέω represents the Ionic tradition found in Herodotus and other Ionian writers. The form itself is straightforward—a future tense form filling a gap in the irregular verb 'to say.' While Attic Greek standardized around ἐρῶ, Ionic maintained this older form. The various Greek dialects preserved alternative morphological traditions that grammarians carefully documented.

Ῥήγιον G4484 N-ANS (1×)
Rhegium, a coastal city in southern Italy
Rhegium was a strategic port city on the Italian side of the Strait of Messina, opposite Sicily. Acts 28:13 records Paul's brief stop there on his voyage to Rome as a prisoner. The city's location made it a natural waypoint for ships navigating between the eastern Mediterranean and Rome. The name is consistently preserved across translations, marking a specific geographic location in Paul's journey.

(1×) A port city in southern Italy where Paul stopped briefly during his final voyage to Rome. The preservation of the Greek name across languages reflects its function as a geographical marker in the narrative of Acts, a concrete place on the map of early Christian mission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Rhēgion | es: Rhégion | fr: Rhège | de: Ῥήγιον Acts 28:13

ῥῆγ-μα G4485 N-NNS (1×)
A ruin, collapse, or breach resulting from violent breakage
In Luke 6:49, Jesus concludes his parable of the two builders by describing the catastrophic collapse of a house built without foundation. The Greek term conveys violent rupture—a breakage, fracture, or breach. Ancient usage includes medical contexts (tissue rupture) and architectural ones (breaches in walls or dikes). Here it captures the total ruin when the flood strikes a life built on sand rather than rock.

(1×) The complete ruin or collapse described at the climax of Jesus' parable about building on sand. The term's connotations of violent breakage and structural failure amplify the disaster that befalls those who hear Jesus' words but do not act on them—their house falls with a great crash. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: ruin | es: ruina | fr: ruine | de: ῥῆγμα Luke 6:49

ῥήγνῡμι G4486 V-AMA-2S (7×)

To burst or break open; to throw violently to the ground; to tear or rend to pieces.
A verb of violent physical disruption, rhegnumi appears in three memorable Gospel settings. New wine bursts old wineskins (Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37) — Spanish 'romperá' (will break) and 'se rompen' (they break) capture the pressure-driven rupture. Demons seize a boy and 'throw him down' in convulsions (Mark 9:18; Luke 9:42), where Spanish shifts to 'lo derriba' (throws him down). And swine, given holy things, will 'tear you to pieces' (Matt 7:6). In Gal 4:27, Paul quotes Isaiah's call to the barren woman to 'break forth' in joyful shouting — the only non-destructive use.

1. to burst, break open (4×) To burst, break open — of containers or barriers giving way under internal force. Wineskins burst from fermenting new wine (Matt 9:17 passive; Mark 2:22 and Luke 5:37 active). In Gal 4:27, Paul quotes Isa 54:1: 'Break forth and cry aloud!' — the same explosive energy redirected toward joy. Spanish 'romperá' and 'se rompen' consistently render the rupturing, while French 'déchirer' (to tear) slightly shifts the image. TEARING AND RENDING
en: break-forth, burst, will-burst | es: prorrumpe, romperá, se-rompen | fr: déchirer | de: zerreißt, ῥήξει, ῥῆξον Matt 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37; Gal 4:27

2. to throw down, dash to the ground (2×) To throw down, dash to the ground — violent hurling of a person, specifically in the context of demonic seizure. In Luke 9:42 the demon 'threw him down' (errexen) and in Mark 9:18 it 'throws him down' (rhessei) repeatedly, causing convulsions. Spanish 'lo derribó' (threw him down) and 'lo derriba' (throws him down) capture the forceful downward motion that distinguishes this from mere bursting. TEARING AND RENDING
en: it-throws-down, threw-down | es: lo-derriba, lo-derribó | fr: déchirer | de: zerreißt, ῥήσσει Mark 9:18; Luke 9:42

3. to tear, rend (1×) To tear, rend to pieces — violent tearing by an animal. In Matt 7:6, Jesus warns against giving what is holy to dogs or casting pearls before swine, 'lest they tear you to pieces' (rhexosin). Spanish 'despedacen' (tear apart) and French 'déchirer' (tear) both highlight the destructive mauling. This sense extends the verb's violent force from inanimate rupture to animate attack. TEARING AND RENDING
en: tear | es: despedacen | fr: déchirer | de: zerreißt Matt 7:6

ῥῆμα G4487 N-GNP (69×)

rhema – a spoken word, utterance, or saying; a discrete unit of speech often carrying divine authority
The neuter noun rhema ('word, utterance, saying') emphasizes the spoken character of a word – something declared aloud, as distinct from logos, which more often conveys rational content. In its 69 New Testament occurrences, rhema ranges from the mundane ('every careless word,' Matt 12:36) to the revelatory ('every word from God's mouth,' Matt 4:4; cf. Deut 8:3). It is the sword of the Spirit (Eph 6:17) and the word of faith Paul preaches (Rom 10:8). Spanish palabra, French parole, and German Wort render it consistently across all contexts.

word, utterance, saying (69×) A spoken word or utterance conceived as a discrete communicative act, emphasizing the said quality of speech rather than its conceptual content (cf. logos). Used of divine pronouncements ('every rhema from God's mouth,' Matt 4:4; Luke 1:37 'no rhema from God will be void of power'), prophetic fulfillment (Matt 26:75, Peter 'remembered the rhema of Jesus'), and ordinary human speech (Matt 12:36; Matt 18:16). Spanish palabra, French parole, and German Wort render it uniformly across all 69 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-word, matter, saying | es: asunto, dicho, palabra | fr: parole | de: Wort, Worte Matt 4:4; Matt 12:36; Matt 18:16; Matt 26:75; Matt 27:14

Ῥησά G4488 N-GMS (1×)

Rhesa, an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy
Rhesa appears in Luke 3:27 as part of the genealogy tracing Jesus' lineage from Adam through lesser-known post-exilic ancestors. Little is known about this individual beyond his place in the ancestral chain. The name is preserved consistently across translations, maintaining the genealogical record that establishes Jesus' human descent and connection to the promises given through Abraham and David.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Luke's genealogy of Jesus, connecting the Messiah to post-exilic Jewish ancestors. The uniform transliteration across languages treats this as a historical proper name, part of the genealogical evidence that Jesus is truly human and rooted in Israel's history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhēsa | es: Rhēsá | fr: Rhésa | de: Ῥησὰ Luke 3:27

ῥήτωρ G4489 N-GMS (1×)

An orator or advocate skilled in public speaking
In Acts 24:1, Tertullus is identified as a rhetor—a professional orator hired by the high priest and elders to present their case against Paul before the Roman governor Felix. In Greek culture, rhetors were public speakers trained in persuasive speech, often serving as legal advocates. Tertullus represents the formal, skilled accusation machinery deployed against Paul, contrasting with Paul's own unadorned testimony.

(1×) A professional public speaker or legal advocate, specifically Tertullus in Acts 24:1. The term indicates formal rhetorical training and skill in persuasive speech. The cross-linguistic glosses (orator, orateur) capture the professional status of one hired to make eloquent accusations before a Roman tribunal. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: an-orator | es: orador | fr: orateur | de: ῥήτορος Acts 24:1

ῥητ-ός G4490 Adv (1×)

Expressly, explicitly, in stated terms
This adverb appears in 1 Timothy 4:1, where Paul warns that 'the Spirit expressly says' that some will depart from the faith in later times. The word emphasizes the clarity and directness of the prophetic warning—not vague or ambiguous, but stated in explicit terms. Ancient usage involves formal agreements and distinct answers. Here it underscores that the Spirit's prophecy about apostasy is unmistakable and authoritative.

(1×) In a clear, explicit, and definite manner—how the Spirit communicates the prophecy in 1 Timothy 4:1. The adverb stresses that the warning about future apostasy is not implied or uncertain but stated in express terms, leaving no room for misunderstanding about the coming danger. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: expressly | es: expresamente | fr: ῥητῶς | de: ausdruecklich 1Tim 4:1

ῥίζ-α G4491 N-GFS (17×)

Root of a plant; figuratively, origin, source, or foundational cause of something.
At its most basic, ῥίζα is the underground part of a plant that anchors it and draws nourishment. Yet the New Testament exploits this image extensively in figurative speech. John the Baptist warns that 'the axe is laid to the root of the trees' (Matt 3:10; Luke 3:9), signaling imminent divine judgment. Jesus' parable of the sower describes seed falling on rocky soil with no deep root (Matt 13:6, 21; Mark 4:6, 17). Paul speaks of the root of Jesse (Rom 15:12) and warns Gentile believers that 'the root supports you' (Rom 11:16-18). Spanish 'raíz' and German 'Wurzel' both carry the same literal-to-metaphorical range.

root (literal and figurative) (17×) The underground part of a plant from which it draws nourishment, extended figuratively to mean origin, source, or foundational cause. Literal usage appears in the parable of the sower where seed on rocky ground 'had no root' (Matt 13:6; Mark 4:6). Figurative usage is prominent: the axe laid to the root signals judgment (Matt 3:10), the 'root of Jesse' points to messianic origin (Rom 15:12), and 'the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil' (1 Tim 6:10) identifies a deep causal source. Spanish 'raíz' and German 'Wurzel' preserve this dual literal-figurative range. ROOT PLANT PART

en: Root, root, the-roots | es: Raíz, raíces, raíz | fr: racine | de: Wurzel, ῥίζαν Matt 3:10; Matt 13:6; Matt 13:21; Mark 4:6; Mark 4:17

ῥιζ-όω G4492 V-RPM/P-NMP (2×)

to be rooted, firmly planted, or established with deep roots

A verb (passive/middle perfect participle) meaning to have taken root or be firmly established. In Ephesians 3:17, Paul prays that believers be rooted and grounded in love. In Colossians 2:7, he urges them to be rooted and built up in Christ. Both uses are agricultural/architectural metaphors for spiritual stability. The perfect tense emphasizes an established state—believers are to have deep roots that sustain growth and withstand storms.

(2×) The glosses ('having been rooted,' 'arraigados,' 'verwurzelt') convey the established state. Ephesians 3:17 speaks of being rooted in love (the soil of Christian life), while Colossians 2:7 urges being rooted in Christ (the foundation of faith). Both passages use the imagery of deep roots to depict spiritual maturity and stability—believers draw nourishment and strength from their anchoring in love and in Christ. ROOT PLANT PART en: having-been-rooted | es: arraigados | fr: ἐρριζωμένοι | de: verwurzelt Eph 3:17; Col 2:7

ῥῖπ-ή G4493 N-DFS (1×)

A twinkling or brief instant, the blink of an eye

In 1 Corinthians 15:52, Paul describes the resurrection transformation happening 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.' The Greek noun derives from words for throwing or swift motion, conveying the briefest instant imaginable. Ancient usage included the rapid flight of a javelin or sudden rush of wind. Paul uses this vivid image to emphasize the instantaneous nature of the eschatological change from mortality to immortality.

(1×) The briefest possible instant, used in 1 Corinthians 15:52 to describe the speed of resurrection transformation. The multilingual glosses (twinkling, abrir-y-cerrar, clin-d'œil, Augenblick) all capture the eye-blink rapidity—Paul's point is that the change will be instantaneous, not gradual. MOMENT INSTANT

en: a-twinkling | es: abrir-y-cerrar | fr: clin-d'œil | de: Augenblick 1Cor 15:52

ῥῖπ-ίζω G4494 V-PPM/P-DMS (1×)

To be tossed or blown about by wind

James 1:6 uses this verb to describe the doubter who is 'like a wave of the sea, blown and tossed by the wind.' The image is of something fanned or agitated by air currents—unstable, directionless, at the mercy of external forces. Ancient Greek includes fanning flames or being blown about. James employs it to illustrate spiritual instability: the double-minded person lacks the fixed confidence needed for effective prayer.

(1×) To be tossed or driven by wind, as in James 1:6 describing the doubter's instability. The participle conveys ongoing agitation—like a wave with no stable position, the doubting person is blown about by circumstances rather than anchored in faith, making their prayers ineffective. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: tossed | es: zarandeada | fr: ῥιπιζομένῳ | de: hin-und-her-getrieben Jas 1:6

ῥίπτ-ω G4495 V-PPA-GMP (1×)

Throwing off or casting away, hurling

In Acts 22:23, the mob reacting to Paul's testimony engages in violent gestures: shouting, throwing off their cloaks, and flinging dust into the air. The Greek verb conveys forceful throwing or hurling. Ancient usage ranges from casting weapons to discarding garments. Here it captures the crowd's frenzy—they're not just removing cloaks but violently casting them off as part of their enraged protest.

(1×) Throwing off or casting away with force, describing the agitated crowd's actions in Acts 22:23. The participle indicates violent, repeated gestures—they're hurling off their outer garments as an expression of extreme agitation and rage against Paul's testimony about the Gentile mission. THROWING AND CASTING

en: throwing-off | es: arrojando | fr: jeter | de: ῥιπτούντων Acts 22:23

ῥίπτ-ω G4496 V-APA-NMS (7×)

To throw, cast, or hurl forcefully; to fling down, toss aside, or throw overboard.

A vivid verb of forceful motion, rhiptō describes throwing with energy or abandon. It covers a range of physical actions in the New Testament: Judas hurling the thirty silver pieces into the temple (Matt 27:5), people casting the sick at Jesus's feet (Matt 15:30), a demon throwing a man to the ground (Luke 4:35), and the image of being cast into the sea with a millstone (Luke 17:2). Matthew 9:36 uses the perfect passive participle figuratively of crowds 'thrown about' like sheep without a shepherd, describing exhaustion and helplessness. Spanish translations range from 'arrojaron' (they threw) to 'esparcidos' (scattered), reflecting the verb's breadth.

throw, cast, hurl (7×) To throw, cast, or hurl with force, whether literally flinging an object or figuratively describing someone thrown down or tossed about. The verb encompasses throwing objects (Judas hurling silver coins, Matt 27:5), casting persons to the ground (the demon in Luke 4:35), laying the sick at someone's feet (Matt 15:30), and the figurative picture of people 'cast about' in exhaustion (Matt 9:36). French 'jeter' and Spanish 'arrojaron' both capture the core sense of forceful throwing, while German preserves the Greek participial forms directly ('errimmenoi'), reflecting the word's rich morphology. THROWING AND CASTING

en: cast-down, having-thrown, he-has-been-thrown | es: arrojaron, esparcidos, fuere-arrojado | fr: jeter | de: ἐρριμμένοι, ἔρριπται, ἔρριψαν Matt 9:36; Matt 15:30; Matt 27:5; Luke 4:35; Luke 17:2

Ῥοβοάμ G4497 N-NMS (2×)

Rehoboam, son of Solomon, king whose reign saw Israel's division into two kingdoms

A proper name (Hebrew רְחַבְעָם) for Solomon's son. Both NT uses are in Matthew 1:7, in Jesus' genealogy. Rehoboam's harsh policies provoked the northern tribes' rebellion, splitting the united monarchy (1 Kings 12). His inclusion in the Davidic line is a reminder that Messiah's lineage includes not only the faithful but also those whose failures brought disaster. Yet God's covenant promise endures despite human folly.

(2×) The glosses transliterate the Hebrew name ('Rehoboam,' 'Roboam'). Matthew 1:7 (appearing twice in the genealogy) names him as Solomon's heir and ancestor of Christ. The OT background—Rehoboam's refusal to lighten the tax burden, leading to national schism—reminds readers that the messianic line passes through failure and judgment, yet God's redemptive plan continues. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhoboam | es: Rhoboám | fr: Roboam | de: Rehabeam Matt 1:7

ῥοδ-ῆ G4498 N-NFS (1×)

Rhode, a servant girl in the Jerusalem church

Rhode appears in Acts 12:13 as the servant girl who answered the door when Peter, miraculously freed from prison, knocked at the house where believers were praying. Overwhelmed with joy at recognizing his voice, she left him standing outside while she ran to tell the others—who didn't believe her at first. Her brief appearance captures the human drama of answered prayer that seems too good to be true.

(1×) The personal name of the servant girl in Acts 12:13 who first heard Peter's knock after his prison escape. Her name (meaning 'rose' in Greek) is preserved across translations, marking her memorable role in the narrative of the early church's experience of miraculous deliverance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhode | es: Rhódē | fr: Rhodé | de: Ῥόδη Acts 12:13

Ῥόδος G4499 N-AFS (1×)
Rhodes, a Greek island in the Mediterranean
Rhodes was a significant island southeast of mainland Greece, famous in antiquity for its maritime commerce and the Colossus, one of the Seven Wonders. Acts 21:1 records Paul's brief stop there during his final journey to Jerusalem. The island's strategic location made it a natural port of call for ships traveling between the eastern Mediterranean and the Aegean. The name remains recognizable across translations.

(1×) The Greek island where Paul stopped on his voyage to Jerusalem in Acts 21:1. The geographical name's consistency across languages (Rhodos, Rodas, Rhodes) reflects its established place in Mediterranean geography and early Christian mission history as a waypoint in Paul's journeys. ISLAND COASTLAND en: Rhodos | es: Rodas | fr: Rhodes | de: Ῥόδον Acts 21:1

ῥοιζ-ηδά G4500 Adv (1×)
With a rushing or whizzing sound, noisily
In 2 Peter 3:10, this adverb describes how 'the heavens will pass away with a rushing sound' on the day of the Lord. The term conveys a loud, swift, whizzing noise—like the rush of wind, fire, or projectiles. Ancient usage included the roar of flames or the swoosh of hurled objects. Peter uses it to emphasize the violent, audible nature of the cosmic dissolution accompanying Christ's return.

(1×) With a loud rushing or roaring sound, describing the manner of the heavens' destruction in 2 Peter 3:10. The cross-linguistic glosses (rushing-sound, estruendo, Getöse) all capture the auditory dimension—the day of the Lord will not come silently but with a tremendous roar. MANNER ADVERBS
en: with-a-rushing-sound | es: con-estruendo | fr: ῥοιζηδὸν | de: mit-Getoese 2Pet 3:10

ῥομφαία G4501 N-DFS (7×)
A large, broad sword; a heavy weapon used both literally of military combat and figuratively of piercing anguish or divine judgment.
Unlike the more common 'machaira' (a short sword or dagger), rhomphaia denotes a large, heavy broadsword originally associated with Thracian warriors. In the New Testament it carries both literal and deeply symbolic weight. Simeon's prophecy that 'a sword will pierce your own soul' (Luke 2:35) uses it metaphorically for Mary's coming grief. In Revelation, it appears as the sharp two-edged sword proceeding from Christ's mouth (Rev 1:16; 2:12, 16), symbolizing divine judgment and the power of God's word. It also appears among the instruments of death in the apocalyptic vision of Revelation 6:8. Every major translation renders it simply as 'sword': Spanish 'espada,' French 'épée,' German 'Schwert.'

(7×) A large, broad sword — originally a Thracian heavy weapon — used in the NT both for the literal instrument of killing (Rev 6:8) and as a powerful symbol of piercing anguish or divine authority. Simeon's prophecy to Mary that 'a sword will pierce through your own soul' (Luke 2:35) employs it metaphorically for grief, while in Revelation it is the sharp double-edged sword from Christ's mouth representing judgment and sovereign power (Rev 1:16; 2:12, 16). The uniform rendering across languages — Spanish 'espada,' French 'épée,' German 'Schwert' — reflects its unambiguous core meaning, though the theological overtones in Revelation distinguish it from the more common 'machaira.' WEAPONS AND WARFARE
en: a-sword, sword | es: espada | fr: épée | de: Schwert, ῥομφαία Luke 2:35; Rev 1:16; Rev 2:12; Rev 2:16; Rev 6:8

Ῥουβήν G4502 N-GMS (1×)
Reuben, firstborn son of Jacob
Reuben appears in Revelation 7:5 as one of the twelve tribes from which 12,000 are sealed. He was Jacob's firstborn son through Leah, though he lost the rights of primogeniture through sin. Despite his troubled history, his tribe is included in the eschatological vision of God's preserved people. The Hebrew name is consistently transliterated across languages, maintaining the connection to Israel's tribal heritage.

(1×) The tribal name derived from Jacob's firstborn son, appearing in Revelation's list of sealed tribes. The preservation of the Hebrew name across translations reflects Reuben's role in Israel's twelve-tribe structure, here symbolizing the fullness of God's redeemed people in the last days. REUBEN TRIBE PERSON en: of-Rhoubēn | es: de-Roubēn | fr: Ruben | de: Ruben Rev 7:5

ὑθ G4503 N-GFS (1×)
Ruth, a Moabite woman in Jesus' ancestry
Ruth appears in Matthew 1:5 as one of the four women named in Jesus' genealogy. A Moabite widow who became the great-grandmother of King David, her inclusion is remarkable—she represents the outsiders and Gentiles welcomed into the Messianic line. Her story of loyalty and redemption makes her presence in the genealogy a testimony to God's grace across ethnic boundaries.

(1×) The personal name of the Moabite ancestor of David and Jesus, appearing in Matthew's genealogy. The preservation of her Hebrew name across languages honors her unique place as a Gentile woman whose faith brought her into the lineage of the Messiah, foreshadowing the gospel's reach. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhouth | es: Rhoúth | fr: Ruth | de: Ruth Matt 1:5

