Kush designates both a geographic region and a genealogical ancestor in the Table of Nations. As a territory, it refers to the land south of Egypt's first cataract at Syene (Ezek 29:10), stretching indefinitely into what is now Sudan and northern Ethiopia — the biblical world's image of the uttermost south. The Septuagint consistently translates it as Aithiopia, and modern translations vary between 'Cush,' 'Ethiopia,' and 'Nubia.' As a person, Cush is the eldest son of Ham, father of Nimrod the mighty hunter (Gen 10:6-8; 1 Chr 1:8-10). Prophetically the land figures in oracles of universal judgment and restoration: Isaiah's 'land of buzzing wings beyond the rivers of Cush' (Isa 18:1), Zephaniah's scattered worshipers returning from beyond Cushite rivers (Zeph 3:10), and Ezekiel's listing of Cush among Egypt's allies who will fall by the sword (Ezek 30:4-5). Spanish renders it 'Cus/Cush,' French wavers between 'Cusch' and 'Ethiopie,' and German favors 'Kusch.'

Cush (proper noun) (29×) The proper name for the territory south of Egypt along the upper Nile (Nubia/Ethiopia) and for the eponymous ancestor, son of Ham and father of Nimrod (Gen 10:6-8). Geographically it marks the extreme southern horizon: 'from India to Cush' spans the Persian Empire (Est 1:1; 8:9). Prophetically, Cush appears in oracles of judgment against Egypt's allies (Ezek 30:4-5; 38:5), promises of universal worship (Ps 68:31; Zeph 3:10), and Isaiah's vision of exiles returning (Isa 11:11). The LXX rendering Aithiopia shaped the Western tradition. CUSH TERRITORY NAME
en: Cush, Kush, of-Kush | es: Cus, Cush, Kush | fr: Cusch, Cush, Éthiopie | de: Cush, Kusch, Kuschs Gen 2:13; Gen 10:6; Gen 10:7; Gen 10:8; 2Kgs 19:9

כּוּשׁ H3568b N-proper-ms (1×)
Cush, a Benjamite mentioned in Psalm 7 superscription
This personal name appears only in the superscription to Psalm 7, identifying Cush as a Benjamite about whom or because of whom David composed the lament. The psalm deals with false accusation and slander, suggesting Cush may have been an adversary or accuser. The Greek Septuagint expands the name to 'Cushi son of Jemeni,' but no other biblical text confirms Cush's identity. The name is identical in spelling to Cush the son of Ham, but context clearly distinguishes this as a different individual from Benjamin's tribe.

(1×) Personal name in Psalm 7:1 superscription, 'concerning Cush the Benjamite.' Distinct from the more common Cush (son of Ham/Ethiopia). Multilingual versions transliterate uniformly: Cus (Spanish), Cush (English/German), Cusch (French). The Septuagint's expansion ('Cushi son of Jemeni') attempts to clarify identity but has no Hebrew textual support. This individual's actions prompted David's psalm of appeal against false accusation, though details remain obscure. CUSH TERRITORY NAME
en: Cush | es: Cus | fr: Cusch | de: Cush Ps 7:1

כּוּשִׁי H3569 Prep-l (23×)
Cushite — a person or people from the land of Cush (biblical Ethiopia/Nubia), used as gentilic noun or adjective Derived from Cush (כּוּשׁ), this gentilic term identifies individuals or peoples originating from the region south of Egypt, roughly corresponding to ancient Nubia and Ethiopia. Its most dramatic narrative use is the unnamed Cushite messenger who carries the news of Absalom's death to David (2 Sam 18:21-32). Moses' Cushite wife provokes Miriam and Aaron's challenge in Numbers 12:1. The rhetorical question 'Can the Cushite change his skin?' (Jer 13:23) appeals to the Cushites' distinctive dark complexion as something visibly inherent. French and German renderings ('Éthiopien,' 'Kuschiter') preserve the geographic link to the classical world's Aithiopia.

Cushite, person from Cush (23×) Gentilic designation for a person or people from Cush, south of Egypt. Used for specific individuals — the Cushite runner (2 Sam 18:21-32), Ebed-melech the Cushite (Jer 38:7) — and collectively for the nation (Zeph 2:12; 2 Chr 14:11). The feminine כֻּשִׁית appears only for Moses' wife (Num 12:1). CUSHITE PERSON CUSH
en: Cushite, Kushim, O-Cushim | es: a, cusita, cusitas | fr: Cushite, et-Cushite, et-Éthiopien | de: Kuschiter, [הַכּוּשׁי], [הַכּוּשִׁים] 2Sam 18:21; 2Sam 18:22; 2Sam 18:23; 2Sam 18:31

כּוּשִׁי H3570 N-proper-ms (2×)
personal name meaning 'Cushite,' borne by two Israelites
This proper name appears to derive from the ethnic designation 'Cushite,' possibly indicating family origin or connection to Cush. Two distinct individuals bear this name: the great-grandfather of Jehudi in Jeremiah 36:14 and the father of the prophet Zephaniah. The name may have originated as an appellative (descriptive nickname) that became a personal name, similar to other ethnic-derived names in Hebrew.

(2×) A masculine personal name borne by two men in the biblical record: an ancestor of Jehudi (Jeremiah 36:14) and Zephaniah's father (Zephaniah 1:1). The name's origin in the ethnic term for a person from Cush (ancient Nubia/Ethiopia) suggests possible ancestral connections, though both men named Cushi function as ordinary Israelites in their respective contexts. CUSHITE PERSON CUSH
en: Cushi, Kushi | es: Cusi, Jushi | fr: Cuschite, [כּוּשׁי] | de: Kuschiter, [כּוּשׁי] Jer 36:14; Zeph 1:1

כּוּשִׁי H3571 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)
a Cushite person or the designation 'the Cushite' for a specific individual
This term refers to people from Cush, the region south of Egypt (modern Sudan/Ethiopia). It appears as both an ethnic adjective and as a substantive designation. Most famously, it identifies the unnamed messenger in David's court who brought news of Absalom's death (2 Samuel 18). The only feminine form appears in Numbers 12:1, describing Moses' wife. The term could denote ethnicity, skin color, or geographic origin, and appears in both positive and neutral contexts throughout Scripture.

(2×) The feminine form of the gentelic adjective, appearing only in Numbers 12:1 where it twice describes Moses' Cushite wife. This reference sparked Miriam and Aaron's opposition, though whether their complaint centered on ethnicity or other factors remains debated. The double occurrence in the same verse emphasizes the distinctive nature of this marriage. CUSHITE PERSON CUSH
en: Cushite, the-Cushite | es: cusita, la-cusita | fr: Cushite, le-Cushite | de: Cushite, der-Cushite Num 12:1

כּוּשָׁן H3572 N-proper-fs (1×)
Cushan, a people or territory parallel to Midian in Habakkuk's vision Cushan appears only in Habakkuk 3:7, where the prophet's theophanic vision describes 'the tents of Cushan in affliction' parallel to 'the curtains of Midian' trembling. The poetic parallelism links Cushan with Midian, suggesting a people or region in similar territory—likely northwestern Arabia or Sinai. The Greek Septuagint translates it as 'Ethiopians,' but the Midian parallel argues for a location much closer to ancient Israel. The name may be a variant or poetic form related to Cush, used here to evoke nomadic peoples affected by God's awesome appearance.

(1×) Habakkuk 3:7 uses this gentillic/territorial name parallel to Midian in a vision of divine theophany. The phrase 'tents of Cushan' suggests nomadic peoples. The poetic parallelism with Midian indicates geographic proximity—likely northwestern Arabian peninsula. Multilingual glosses: Spanish 'Cusán,' French 'Cusch,' English 'Cushan.' The Septuagint's 'Ethiopians' reflects confusion with Cush (Ham's son), but context requires a location near Midianite territory. Possibly variant of Kushan/Cush used poetically. CUSH TERRITORY NAME

en: Cushan | es: Cusán | fr: Cusch | de: [כוּשָׁן] Hab 3:7

כּוּשַׁן רִשְׁעָתָיִם H3573 N-proper-ms (4×)

Cushan-rishathaim, king of Aram-naharaim who oppressed Israel for eight years

Cushan-rishathaim appears as the first foreign oppressor in the book of Judges, a king of Aram-naharaim (Mesopotamia) to whom God delivered Israel because of their idolatry. His unusual name, which might mean 'Cushan of double wickedness,' puzzles scholars since no extra-biblical records confirm his existence. He ruled over Israel for eight years until God raised up Othniel to deliver them. The name may be a derogatory Hebrew epithet rather than the king's actual name.

(4×) Cushan-rishathaim appears four times in Judges 3, twice introduced as 'Cushan-rishathaim king of Aram-naharaim' to whom Yahweh sold Israel in judgment (Judg 3:8), and twice as the oppressor whom Israel served eight years until Othniel defeated him (Judg 3:10). The Septuagint renders it Chousarsathaim or Chousan-resamōth, showing Greek attempts at the double name. Spanish, French, German, and English all preserve it as Kushan-Rishataim with minor spelling variations, treating it as an untranslatable foreign royal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kushan-Rishataim | es: Kushán-Rishataim | fr: Kushan-Rishataim | de: Kushan-Rishataim Judg 3:8; Judg 3:10

כּוֹשָׁרָה H3574 Prep-b (1×)

prosperity, success, thriving condition; blessed abundance

This noun appears in Psalm 68:6, where God is praised for bringing prisoners out 'into prosperity.' The context celebrates divine reversals: God makes the solitary dwell in homes and brings captives into abundance. The word likely derives from a root meaning success or prosperity, cognate with Syriac terms for the same. The plural intensive form emphasizes fullness and abundance—not mere survival but genuine flourishing. The psalm's point: God doesn't just free prisoners; he restores them to prosperous life.

(1×) Psalm 68:6 describes God bringing out prisoners 'into prosperity' or abundance. The Hebrew plural intensive form amplifies the sense of fullness. Related to Syriac kushara (prosperity). Multilingual glosses converge: English/French 'prosperity,' Spanish 'con prosperidad' (with prosperity), German 'Wohlstand' (prosperity/well-being). The preposition 'into' (be-) indicates movement toward a state of blessing. Context emphasizes divine reversal from captivity to flourishing, typical of psalmic praise. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: into-prosperity | es: con-prosperidad | fr: dans-prospérité | de: hinein-Wohlstand Ps 68:6

כּוּתָה H3575 N-proper-ms (2×)

ancient Mesopotamian city from which Assyria transplanted colonists to Samaria

Cuthah was a Babylonian city located about 20 miles northeast of Babylon, modern Tel Ibrahim. After conquering the northern kingdom, the Assyrian king Sargon transported colonists from Cuthah to repopulate Samaria (2 Kings 17:24, 30). These Cuthean settlers brought their worship of Nergal, contributing to the religious syncretism that characterized post-exilic Samaria. The city's Akkadian name was Kūtu or Kūtê, and it served as an important cult center in Mesopotamia.

(2×) A significant Babylonian city whose inhabitants were forcibly relocated to Israel as part of Assyrian resettlement policy. The men of Cuth brought their native deity Nergal with them, establishing foreign worship in the land. This transplantation of populations was a deliberate imperial strategy to prevent nationalist uprisings by disrupting ethnic and religious cohesion. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cuth, and-from-Cuthah | es: Cuta, y-de-Cuta | fr: Cuth, et-de-Cuthah | de: Cuth, und-von-Cuthah 2Kgs 17:24; 2Kgs 17:30

כָּזַב H3576 V-Piel-Imperf-2fs (18×)

To lie, deceive, or prove false; in various stems: tell lies (Piel), be shown a liar (Nifal), convict of falsehood (Hifil), or fail/disappoint (of things).

A verb centered on falsehood in speech and reality. In the Piel stem it describes active, deliberate lying — as when Israel flattered God with their lips but 'lied to him with their tongues' (Ps 78:36). The Nifal conveys being exposed as false, while the Hifil means to prove someone a liar. Strikingly, it can also describe things that 'lie' — streams that fail the thirsty traveler (Isa 58:11) — a metaphor the Arabic cognate kadhaba shares. Balaam's declaration that God is 'not a man that he should lie' (Num 23:19) anchors the word's theological weight.

1. lie, tell lies (Piel) (11×) Active verbal deception in the Piel stem: to speak what is untrue, to tell lies deliberately. This is the primary and most frequent use, covering both absolute lying (Num 23:19, Job 6:28) and lying directed at someone (Ps 78:36, Ezek 13:19). Spanish 'mentir' and French 'mentir' capture the straightforward sense, while the English glosses range from 'I lie' to 'by your lying.' Proverbs 14:5 contrasts the faithful witness with one who 'breathes out lies,' using this same Piel form. LYING AND FALSEHOOD

en: I-lie, I-will-lie, by-lying-of-you | es: con-mentir-de-vosotras, engañes, le-mentían- | fr: [תְּכַזֵּב], ce-il-should-se-coucher, mentir | de: [אכזב], [בכזבכם], [יכזב] Num 23:19; 2Kgs 4:16; Job 6:28; Job 34:6; Ps 78:36

2. lies (noun) (2×) Substantival use where the participle or verbal form functions as a noun meaning 'lies' or 'falsehoods' — the content produced by lying. Both occurrences appear in Judges 16, where Delilah accuses Samson: 'you have told me lies' (Judg 16:10, 13). The Spanish 'mentiras' and German 'liegt' reflect this nominal shift from the act of lying to its product. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: lies | es: mentiras | fr: se-couche | de: liegt Judg 16:10; Judg 16:13

3. be found false (Nifal) (2×) The Nifal (passive/reflexive) stem meaning to be found false, proved a liar, or shown to be deceptive. In Job 41:9 it describes hope that 'is proved vain,' and in Proverbs 30:6 it warns against adding to God's words 'lest you be found a liar.' The Spanish 'seas hallado mentiroso' precisely captures this passive exposure of falsehood. LYING AND FALSEHOOD

en: and-you-be-found-a-liar, is-vain | es: es-falsa, y-seas-hallado-mentiroso | fr: et-mentir, mentir | de: [ונכזבת], [נכזבה] Job 41:9; Prov 30:6

4. fail, prove false (Piel) (1×) An extended Piel sense applied to things rather than persons: to fail, disappoint, or prove deceptive. In Isaiah 58:11 it describes waters that 'do not fail' — springs whose flow never deceives the thirsty. This metaphorical extension from personal lying to impersonal failing is paralleled in Arabic and Aramaic cognates. The Spanish 'faltan' (they fail) captures the semantic shift from deception to disappointment. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: fail | es: faltan | fr: [יכזבו'] | de: [יכזבו'] Isa 58:11

5. prove someone a liar (Hifil) (1×) The Hifil causative: to prove someone a liar, to convict of falsehood. Job 24:25 asks 'who will prove me a liar?' — challenging opponents to demonstrate his words are false. This is the only Hifil occurrence, and the Spanish

'me desmentira' (will disprove me) neatly renders the causative force of making someone's falsehood publicly evident. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: will-prove-me-a-liar | es: me-desmentirá | fr: mentir-moi | de: [יכזיבנו] Job 24:25

6. liar (Qal participle) (1×) The Qal active participle used as a substantive: 'a liar,' describing a person's settled character. Psalm 116:11 declares 'all mankind is a liar' (kol ha-adam kozev), a sweeping indictment. The participle functions as a predicate noun, and the Spanish 'mentiroso' and English 'is a liar' both reflect this characterizing use. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: is-a-liar | es: mentiroso | fr: mensonge | de: ist-ein-liar Ps 116:11

כָּזָב H3577 N-mpc / 3mp (29×)

lie, falsehood — a deliberate untruth or deceptive utterance, especially in prophetic and wisdom contexts

Kazav denotes a lie or falsehood as the willful opposite of truth, appearing 29 times with heavy concentration in the prophets and wisdom literature. In Proverbs, the 'false witness who breathes out lies' recurs almost as a refrain (Prov 6:19; 14:5, 25; 19:5, 9), and the sage prays to be kept from 'the word of falsehood' (Prov 30:8). Ezekiel deploys the term with devastating force against prophets who have 'seen lies and divined falsehood' yet claim to speak for YHWH (Ezek 13:6-9; 21:29; 22:28). The Psalms set kazav in opposition to divine faithfulness: 'How long will you love a worthless thing and seek after a lie?' (Ps 4:2). Hosea pairs it with treachery and violence in his indictment of Ephraim (Hos 7:13; 12:1). Daniel uses it of diplomatic dissimulation at a treaty table — 'they will speak lies at one table' (Dan 11:27). Spanish 'mentira' and French 'mensonge' capture the concept cleanly.

lie, falsehood (29×) A deliberate falsehood or deceptive utterance, standing as the moral and theological antithesis of truth. Dominant in Proverbs' portrait of the false witness (Prov 6:19; 14:5, 25; 19:5, 9) and Ezekiel's condemnation of prophets who divine lies in YHWH's name (Ezek 13:6-9; 22:28). In the Psalms, seeking after kazav signals spiritual betrayal (Ps 4:2; 62:4). Hosea links it to covenant treachery (Hos 7:13; 12:1), and Daniel applies it to political duplicity (Dan 11:27). LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: a-lie, falsehood, lie | es: engaños, mentira, mentira? | fr: mensonge | de: Luege, Luegen, ein-lagern Ps 4:2; Ps 5:6; Ps 40:4; Ps 58:3; Ps 62:4

כֻּזְבָא H3578 N-proper-fs (1×)

Kozeva, a place name in Judah; variant of Achzib/Achziv

Kozeva appears in 1 Chronicles 4:22 within a genealogical record of Judahite families who 'had dominion in Moab.' The Greek Septuagint renders it Sokētha or Chozēba, and BDB identifies it with Achzib, a town in the Judahite Shephelah. The name's similarity to kazav (lie/deception) may be coincidental or may have prompted folk etymologies. These genealogical fragments in Chronicles preserve ancient clan territorial holdings, sometimes using archaic or variant place names that disappeared from later usage.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 4:22 mentions Kozeva in a genealogical note about Judahite clans. The name likely represents the same location as Achzib (Joshua 15:44, Micah 1:14). Multilingual versions leave it untransliterated or minimally transliterate: Spanish 'Cozeba,' French/German in brackets. The Septuagint's variant readings reflect textual uncertainty. This kind of hapax place name in genealogies often preserves archaic toponyms no longer current in later biblical texts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kozeva | es: Cozeba | fr: [כוזבא] | de: [כוזבא] 1Chr 4:22

כָּזְבִּי H3579 N-proper-fs (2×)

daughter of a Midianite leader, killed with Zimri for bringing plague upon Israel

Cozbi was a Midianite woman, daughter of Zur, a tribal chief. She appears in the narrative of Israel's apostasy at Peor (Numbers 25). When Zimri brazenly brought her into the camp during a plague sent as divine judgment for idolatry, Phinehas the priest killed them both, ending the plague. Her name and father's status are emphasized to show this was not casual immorality but a deliberate political-religious alliance that threatened covenant faithfulness.

(2×) A Midianite woman of high status whose relationship with the Israelite leader Zimri provoked zealous action from Phinehas. Both references (Numbers 25:15, 18) identify her with her father Zur to establish her prominent family connections. Her death, while shocking, is presented as necessary to halt the plague and preserve Israel's covenant distinctiveness during a crisis of syncretistic worship. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Cozbi | es: Cozbi | fr: Cozbi | de: Cozbi Num 25:15; Num 25:18

כְּזִיב H3580 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Chezib, place in Judah where Shelah was born; same as Achzib

Chezib appears in Genesis 38:5 as the location where Judah's third son Shelah was born to his Canaanite wife. The Septuagint renders it Chasbi, and BDB identifies it with Achzib, a town in the Shephelah lowlands. This narrative detail situates Judah's family in Canaanite territory, emphasizing his assimilation and intermarriage during the pre-Egyptian period. The town's name became proverbial for deception (Micah 1:14 plays on 'Achzib' meaning 'deceptive'), though in Genesis it functions simply as a geographical marker.

(1×) Genesis 38:5 locates Shelah's birth 'in Chezib,' a Judahite town. The preposition 'in/at' marks the location of the event. Multilingual versions transliterate with slight variations: Spanish 'Keziv,' French 'Chezib,' English 'Chezib,' German 'Kesib.' Identified with Achzib in Joshua's boundary lists. The narrative situates Judah's family in Canaanite lowland territory during the patriarchal period, providing geographical specificity to the Tamar episode. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Chezib | es: en-Keziv | fr: dans-Chezib | de: in-Kesib Gen 38:5

כַּח H3581a Conj-w (1×)

a reptile, possibly land crocodile or large lizard; unclean creature

This noun appears once in Leviticus 11:30 within the list of prohibited swarming creatures. Rabbinic and ancient versions diverge on identification: the Septuagint and Vulgate suggest chameleon, while modern scholars debate between monitor lizard, skink, or even a type of land crocodile (not the Nile species but a smaller reptile). The uncertainty reflects the challenge of matching ancient taxonomy to modern categories. What's clear: this was a reptile forbidden for consumption, grouped with other lizards and crawling creatures in Levitical purity law.

(1×) Leviticus 11:30 lists this creature among ritually unclean swarming things. Specific identification remains uncertain: Spanish 'camaleón' (chameleon), English 'land-crocodile,' German 'Land-crocodile,' French 'pays-crocodile.' Ancient versions also varied. The conjunction 'and' prefix indicates it appears in a series of prohibited reptiles. BDB notes scholarly debate (Driver and others) but no consensus. Whatever the exact species, it was a terrestrial reptile forbidden under Levitical dietary law. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-the-land-crocodile | es: y-el-camaleón | fr: et-le-pays-crocodile | de: und-der-Land-crocodile Lev 11:30

כֹּחַ H3581b N-msc / 3ms (126×)

Strength, power, might; physical force, vigor, or the capacity to act; also wealth or resources derived from one's strength.

Koach is the Hebrew Bible's most straightforward word for raw strength and power. Whether describing Samson's legendary physical might (Judg 16:5-30), the vigor of a young man (Prov 20:29), or the divine power behind creation (Jer 10:12), koach points to force that can be exerted or possessed. It differs from gevurah (heroic might) and oz (fortified strength) by staying closer to basic capacity and energy. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Arabic quwwa, Korean him, Spanish fuerza, and German Kraft all converge on the physical-force pole, while a smaller cluster — Arabic al-qudra, Korean neungnyeok, English 'ability' — tracks a distinct capability sense where the emphasis shifts from brute force to competence and capacity to accomplish a task.

1. strength, force, might (115×) Physical or general strength, force, and might — the dominant sense at 115 occurrences. This covers Samson's raw physical power (Judg 16:17), the vigor sustained by food (1 Kgs 19:8), the strength that fails in old age (Ps 71:9), and the divine might behind cosmic acts (Jer 10:12; 27:5). Arabic quwwa, Korean him (힘), Spanish fuerza, German Kraft, and French force all converge on this sense. The word appears in memorable character-revealing moments: Jacob's blessing calls Reuben 'my strength and the firstfruits of my vigor' (Gen 49:3), and Deuteronomy warns Israel not to say 'my strength and the might of my hand have gotten me this wealth' (Deut 8:17). POWER AND MIRACLES
en: power, power-, strength | es: de-fuerza,, fuerza, fuerza-de | fr: force, puissance | de: Kraft, Macht, Staerke Gen 49:3; Deut 8:17; Deut 8:18; Judg 16:17; 1Sam 28:20

2. power, ability, capability (10×) Power as ability, capability, or capacity to accomplish something — 10 occurrences where the emphasis shifts from raw force to competence or enablement. In Exod 9:16 God tells Pharaoh 'I have raised you up to show you my power'; in Ezra 2:69 the returnees give 'according to their ability'; in Ps 29:4 the voice of the LORD is 'in power.' Arabic al-qudra ('capability'), Korean neungnyeok (능력, 'ability'), and Spanish capacidad all distinguish this from brute physical force. The boundary is subtle but real: koach here answers 'can you do it?' rather than 'how strong are you?' POWER AND MIRACLES
en: according-to-their-ability, by-His-power, by-his-power | es: Según-su-capacidad, con-mi-fuerza, con-poder | fr: dans-force, dans-sa-force, force | de: Kraft, durch-dein-Macht, ist-mit-Macht Exod 9:16; Deut 9:29; 1Chr 26:8; Ezra 2:69; Ps 29:4

3. (1×) Wealth, resources, or substance — a marginal sense appearing once at Job 6:22, where Job asks 'Did I say, Give me something from your wealth/strength?' The multilingual glosses split: English 'from your wealth,' Spanish 'de vuestra fuerza,' German 'und Kraft.' The BDB entry notes this as an extension where koach denotes the material produce or resources that strength generates. Arabic mal ('wealth') and the broader semantic field of 'substance from effort' place this at the metaphorical boundary between physical power and its economic fruit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-your-wealth | es: y-de-vuestra-fuerza | fr: et-votre-force-vous | de: und-Kraft Job 6:22

כָּחַד H3582 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (32×)

To hide, conceal, or deny knowledge of (Piel); to be hidden or effaced (Nifal); to annihilate or cut off (Hifil).

Kachad is a verb whose semantic range stretches from deliberate concealment of information to utter destruction — and the Hebrew stem system is the key to navigating it. In the Piel, it means to actively hide or withhold truth from someone, as when Eli adjures young Samuel not to conceal what God has spoken (1 Sam 3:17). In the Nifal passive, it can mean either 'be hidden from' (as nothing is hidden from God in Ps 139:15) or 'be effaced, destroyed' — ruined cities that have 'perished' (Job 15:28). The Hifil pushes further into causative destruction: God annihilates nations (Exod 23:23) and cuts off sinful dynasties (1 Kgs 13:34). The Aramaic cognate emphasizes the 'effacement' side, while the Ethiopic cognate khda moved all the way to 'deny, apostatize' — a fascinating trajectory from hiding truth to renouncing it entirely.

1. conceal or hide (Piel) (15×) Active concealment of information or truth in the Piel stem — the largest cluster at 15 occurrences. Someone deliberately withholds or suppresses knowledge from another person. The classic passage is Eli's solemn charge to Samuel: 'Do not hide it from me' (1 Sam 3:17-18), repeated with emphatic doubling. Spanish esconder and English 'conceal' both capture the intentional withholding, while the construction with min ('from') marks the person being kept in the dark. Found also in Gen 47:18 (nothing hidden from Pharaoh), Josh 7:19 (Achan urged to stop hiding his sin), and 2 Sam 14:18 (the king commanding full disclosure). HIDING AND CONCEALING en: I-have-concealed, I-have-hidden, I-will-conceal | es: escondas, esconderemos, escondo | fr: [כחדו], [תכחד], [תכחדו] | de: [אכחד], [כחדו], [כחדתי] Gen 47:18; Josh 7:19; 1Sam 3:17; 1Sam 3:18

2. be cut off or perish (Nifal) (7×) Being cut off, destroyed, or perishing — the Nifal stem in its destructive sense, appearing 7 times. Here the passive of kachad does not mean 'be hidden' but rather 'be effaced from existence.' Job 4:7 asks 'where were the upright cut off?'; Job 15:28 speaks of cities that are nikhadot — 'going to ruin,' literally 'being effaced.' The Spanish destruidas ('destroyed') and the passage's parallelism with abad ('perish') confirm this is genuine destruction, not concealment. Exod 9:15 threatens that Egypt would have been 'cut off from the earth,' using min ha'arets to mark total elimination. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: and-the-one-being-cut-off, and-you-would-have-been-cut-off, cut-off | es: destruidas, fue-destruida, fueron-cortados | fr: cacher, et-cacher, et-tu-aurait-avoir-été-couper-dehors | de: [והנכחדות], [והנכחדת], [נכחד] Exod 9:15; Job 4:7; Job 15:28; Job 22:20; Zech 11:9

3. annihilate or destroy (Hifil) (5×) Causative annihilation or destruction in the Hifil stem — 5 occurrences of the most violent sense. God promises to 'cut off' the nations before Israel (Exod 23:23), and this is the stem used for the annihilation of Jeroboam's house (1 Kgs 13:34). In Ps 83:4 the enemies plot to 'annihilate' Israel as a nation, and in Zech 11:8 the shepherd 'cut off' three shepherds in one month. The Spanish destruir and German annihilieren both reach for total-destruction vocabulary, matching the Hifil's causative intensification beyond the Nifal passive of sense 2. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION
en: and-I-annihilated, and-I-will-annihilate-him, and-he-cut-off | es: Y-destruí, y-destruyámoslos, y-destruyó | fr: [ויכחד], et-Je—anéantir-lui, et-cacher | de: [ואכחד], [ויכחד], und-ich-wird-annihilate-ihn Exod 23:23; 1Kgs 13:34; 2Chr 32:21; Ps 83:4; Zech 11:8

4. be hidden (Nifal passive) (4×) Being hidden or concealed from sight or knowledge — the Nifal in its passive-of-concealment sense, appearing 4 times. This is the true passive counterpart to the Piel of sense 1: what the Piel actively hides, the Nifal describes as being in a state of hiddenness. In 2 Sam 18:13, no matter can be 'hidden' from the king; in Ps 139:15 the psalmist's frame was not 'hidden' from God when formed in the secret place. Hos 5:3 declares that Ephraim is not 'hidden' from God. Spanish oculto and German verborgen both select stative concealment vocabulary, distinct from the destruction terms used for sense 2. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: hidden, is-hidden, was-hidden | es: está-oculto, están-ocultas, fue-oculto | fr: cacher, est-caché | de: Krieg-verborgen, [נכחד], ist-verborgen 2Sam 18:13; Ps 69:5; Ps 139:15; Hos 5:3

5. (1×) A single Hifil occurrence at Job 20:12 where the wicked person 'hides' evil under his tongue — concealing it as something savored rather than as information withheld. The English 'he hides it' and Spanish 'lo esconde' treat it as straightforward concealment, but the Hifil stem and the gustatory metaphor (evil is sweet in the mouth, hidden under the tongue) give it a distinctive coloring: this is not suppressing truth from another person (sense 1) but treasuring wickedness in secret, keeping it close for private enjoyment. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: he-hides-it | es: lo-esconde | fr: cacher | de: [יכחידנה] Job 20:12

כָּחַל H3583 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (1×)

to paint, to apply cosmetics to the eyes; to use kohl/antimony

This verb appears in Ezekiel 23:40, depicting Jerusalem's sister-cities as adulteresses who ritually prepare themselves for lovers: bathing, painting their eyes, adorning themselves with jewelry. Eye-painting with kohl (antimony-based black powder) was common cosmetic practice throughout the ancient Near East, emphasizing and enlarging the eyes. The prophet uses this image negatively—not condemning cosmetics per se, but condemning Israel's seductive political alliances with foreign powers, portrayed as spiritual adultery. Jezebel similarly painted her eyes in 2 Kings 9:30.

(1×) Ezekiel 23:40 uses this Qal verb for applying eye cosmetics. The Hebrew kachal is cognate with Arabic/Ethiopic/Aramaic terms for painting eyes with kohl (antimony powder). English 'you-painted' and Spanish 'te-pintaste' (you painted yourself) capture the reflexive sense accurately. The verb appears in second person feminine singular, addressed to personified Jerusalem. Related to the noun puk (antimony) used for eye cosmetics. Cultural practice: outlining and darkening eyes for beauty or ritual. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE en: you-painted | es: te-pintaste | fr: Kachlol | de: [כחלת] Ezek 23:40

כָּחַשׁ H3584 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (22×)
To deny, lie, deal falsely; to cringe or feign submission; to fail or disappoint; to grow lean or waste away.
A versatile verb whose senses revolve around unreliability and deception. In its Piel stem, kachash most frequently means to deny or lie —Sarah denied laughing before God (Gen 18:15), and the Levitical laws warn against dealing falsely with a neighbor (Lev 6:2-3). A vivid secondary use describes conquered enemies cringing in feigned submission (Ps 18:44; 66:3), where the deception is bodily rather than verbal. The root can also describe things that 'prove false'—a harvest that fails (Hab 3:17) or a body that wastes away (Ps 109:24), extending the theme of disappointing expectations into the physical world.

1. deny, lie, deal falsely (14×) To deny the truth, lie, or deal falsely with someone. This is the primary Piel sense, covering fourteen of the twenty-two occurrences. It ranges from Sarah's fearful denial before the LORD (Gen 18:15) to the legal prohibitions against swearing falsely over a deposit or found property (Lev 6:2-3; 19:11). Spanish 'negar' (to deny) and 'engañar' (to deceive) map neatly onto the two poles of this sense—withholding truth versus actively distorting it. Joshua 7:11 extends it to covenant violation: Israel 'dealt falsely' with the devoted things. LYING AND FALSEHOOD
en: I-would-have-denied, and-deceives, and-denied | es: Negaron, Y-negó, engañar | fr: [וכחש], [כחשו], et-deceives | de: [וכחש], [וכחשתי], [כחש] Gen 18:15; Lev 6:2; Lev 6:3; Lev 19:11; Josh 7:11

2. cringe, feign submission (5×) To cringe before a conqueror or feign obedience and submission. Defeated enemies 'come cringing' to the victor (Deut 33:29; 2 Sam 22:45), their outward compliance masking inner resistance. The deception is performative—bodies bowing while hearts rebel. Spanish 'fingir obediencia' (to feign obedience) and the English 'cringe' together capture the dual aspect of fear and insincerity. Psalm 81:15 uses this of Israel's enemies, and Psalm 66:3 universalizes it to all the earth before God's awesome deeds. LYING AND FALSEHOOD
en: and-will-cower, came-cringing-, cringe | es: fingen-obediencia, se-someterán-, se-someterán-fingidamente | fr: cringe, et-fera-cower, mentir | de: cringe, kam-cringing-, und-wird-cower Deut 33:29; 2Sam 22:45; Ps 18:44; Ps 66:3; Ps 81:15

3. fail, prove false (2×) To fail, prove deceptive, or disappoint expectations, said of impersonal things. The olive crop 'fails' (Hab 3:17), and the threshing floor 'lies' to the people (Hos 9:2)—harvest promises that go unfulfilled. This metaphorical extension personifies nature as an unreliable witness, using the same vocabulary of deception applied to human speech. Spanish 'mentir' applied to a crop field vividly preserves this personification. DECEIT AND TREACHERY
en: fails, shall-fail | es: falle, les-mentirá | fr: nier | de: [יכחש], [כחש] Hos 9:2; Hab 3:17

4. grow lean, waste away (1×) To grow lean, become emaciated, or waste away physically. This sole Qal occurrence in Psalm 109:24 —'my flesh has grown lean, away from fatness'—describes bodily deterioration under affliction. The Aramaic cognate likewise means 'to grow lean,' confirming this as the root's most concrete, physical sense. Spanish 'enflaquecer' (to grow thin) renders it precisely. That bodily wasting shares a root with deception suggests an ancient intuition that the emaciated body 'disappoints' the expectations of health. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: has-grown-lean | es: enflaqueció | fr: comme-mentir | de: hat-grown-lean Ps 109:24

כַּחַשׁ H3585 Prep-b / N-ms (6×)
Lying, deception, treachery (moral falsehood, especially of Israel's unfaithfulness); leanness, wasting (physical emaciation).
The noun kachash presents a striking case of semantic divergence within a single lexeme. In five of its six occurrences it names a moral failing — lying, deceit, treachery — concentrated in Hosea's indictments of Israel's chronic unfaithfulness. Hosea 10:13 accuses the people of eating 'the fruit of lies,' while 7:3 and 11:12 catalog their deceptions alongside wickedness and false dealing. Nahum 3:1 extends the same vocabulary to Nineveh, 'city full of lies and robbery,' and Psalm 59:12 pairs kachash with cursing. Spanish mentira, French mensonge, and English 'lies' converge without ambiguity here. But Job 16:8 deploys an entirely different sense: 'my leanness rises up against me,' describing bodily wasting that testifies to suffering. Spanish mi flaqueza ('my thinness') confirms the physical reading, and BDB notes the Targumic and Talmudic usage of the cognate for emaciation, supporting this as a genuine second sense rather than a metaphorical extension of 'lying.'

1. lying, deception (5×) Lying, deceit, or treachery as a moral and relational category — falsehood that corrupts covenant faithfulness and civic life. Five occurrences, mostly in Hosea's prophetic indictments: 'you have plowed wickedness, you have reaped lies' (Hos 10:13); their leaders delight in 'their lies' (Hos 7:3); Ephraim 'surrounds me with lies' (Hos 11:12). Nahum 3:1 applies the same term to Nineveh's predatory deception, and Psalm 59:12 pairs it with cursing. Spanish mentira, French mensonge, and German Luege all converge on straightforward falsehood vocabulary. LIES AND FALSEHOOD
en: and-for-lying, and-with-their-lies, lies | es: con-mentira, mentira, y-consus-mentiras | fr: et-de-mensonge, et-mensonge, mensonge | de: [בכחש], [ובכחשיהם], [כחש] Ps 59:12; Hos 7:3; Hos 10:13; Hos 11:12; Nah 3:1

2. leanness, wasting (1×) Physical leanness, emaciation, or wasting of the body — a genuinely distinct sense from the moral-deception meaning. Found only in Job 16:8, where Job laments that 'my leanness has risen up against me and testifies to my face,' describing his ravaged body as a witness to his affliction. Spanish mi flaqueza ('my thinness') and the Targumic cognate kachsha (emaciation) confirm that ancient readers understood this as physical wasting. BDB notes the connection to Aramaic and Talmudic usage, grounding this sense in a broader Semitic semantic field of bodily diminishment. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: my-leanness | es: mi-flaqueza | fr: mon-כחשי-moi | de: [כחשי] Job 16:8

כָּחָשׁ H3586 N-mp (1×)
lying, deceptive, false (plural adjective)
This adjective appears in Isaiah 30:9, part of a prophetic indictment against Judah: 'This is a rebellious people, lying children, children unwilling to hear the LORD's instruction.' The plural 'lying children' parallels 'rebellious people,' creating a devastating characterization. The word derives from a root meaning to deceive or lie (kachash), and here describes children defined by deception—not occasional liars but people whose fundamental character is untruthful. The parallelism emphasizes systematic refusal to accept divine truth.

(1×) Isaiah 30:9 employs this plural adjective to characterize Judah as 'lying children' who refuse divine instruction. Derived from the root kachash (deceive, lie, fail), the form intensifies the indictment. Spanish 'mentirosos' (liars) and English 'lying' capture the sense, while French/German leave it untransliterated, perhaps acknowledging textual difficulty. The term parallels 'rebellious people,' creating a comprehensive picture of covenantal infidelity expressed through both active rebellion and deceptive character. LIAR FALSEHOOD SPEAKER
en: lying | es: mentirosos | fr: [כחשים] | de: [כחשים] Isa 30:9

כִּי H3587 N-ms (1×)
burning, branding; scar from burning (hapax noun)
This rare noun appears only in Isaiah 3:24, climaxing a list of reversals awaiting Jerusalem's elite women. Instead of beauty, they will receive 'branding' (ki)—likely referring to the branding marks placed on slaves or the burn scars from mourning rituals. The word derives from kavah (to burn), and the context envisions divine judgment reducing the vain and luxurious to degraded, scarred slaves. The verse's poetic structure places 'branding' in stark contrast to 'beauty,' emphasizing the totality of reversal from pampered luxury to branded servitude.

(1×) Isaiah 3:24 uses this noun in the phrase 'branding instead of beauty,' threatening judgment on Jerusalem's elite women. The Hebrew ki (burning/branding) derives from a root meaning to burn and indicates a scar or mark from burning. Most translations recognize this: Spanish 'quemadura' (burn), English 'instead of' seems to translate only the preposition. French 'car' and German 'denn' appear to misread the word as the common particle ki (because/that), missing the rare noun altogether. Context demands 'branding' as the antithesis of 'beauty.' CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: instead-of | es: quemadura | fr: car | de: denn Isa 3:24

כִּי H3588a Conj-w / Conj (4329×)

that; because, for; when; but, rather; if; surely, indeed; though, even though

The most versatile conjunction in Biblical Hebrew, כִּי functions as the Swiss army knife of clause subordination. Its causal sense ('because, for') accounts for the vast majority of its nearly 4,300 occurrences, introducing the reason behind a preceding statement. But כִּי also serves as a complementizer ('that') after verbs of seeing, knowing, and saying — 'God saw that it was good' (Gen 1:4). Beyond these two pillars, it marks temporal clauses ('when'), adversative contrasts ('but, rather'), conditional protases ('if'), emphatic assertions ('surely'), and even concessive acknowledgments ('though'). The Moabite Mesha stele uses the same particle identically, confirming its deep Semitic pedigree.

1. causal: because, for (3498×) Causal conjunction: 'because, for' — introducing the reason for what precedes. Dominant across nearly 3,500 occurrences. Spanish 'porque,' French 'car,' and German 'denn' track the causal force. Genesis 3:10 has Adam explaining 'because I was afraid.' The particle anchors Hebrew's reasoning architecture. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: for, for- | es: porque, porque-, que | fr: pour, pour- | de: denn, denn-, fuer Gen 2:17; Gen 3:10; Gen 4:23; Gen 17:5; Gen 21:16

2. declarative: that (723×) Declarative complementizer: 'that' — introducing content clauses after verbs of perception, speech, or knowledge. Genesis 1:4 inaugurates this use: 'God saw that it was good' (Spanish 'que,' French 'ce/que,' German 'dass'). Genesis 12:14 has the Egyptians seeing 'that' the woman was beautiful. This is the second-largest usage, functioning as the syntactic hinge between a mental verb and its object clause. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: that, that- | es: que, que- | fr: ce, ce- | de: dass, dass-, jenes Gen 1:4; Gen 6:6; Gen 8:11; Gen 12:14; Gen 20:9

3. temporal: when (58×) Temporal conjunction: 'when' — marking the time at which something occurs. Genesis 6:1 opens with 'when mankind began to multiply.' Spanish 'cuando,' French 'quand,' and German 'als/wenn' confirm the temporal reading. The shift from causal to temporal is natural: cause and occasion share a logical structure. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: when, when- | es: Cuando, cuando, cuando- | fr: quand, quand- | de: als, als-, wenn Gen 6:1; Gen 12:12; Gen 43:21; Gen 46:33; Exod 1:10

4. adversative: but, rather (26×) Adversative conjunction: 'but, rather' — marking contrast or correction. Genesis 42:12 has Joseph insisting 'No, but you have come to see the nakedness of the land' (Spanish 'sino'). 1 Samuel 8:7 reveals 'they have not rejected you but me.' Spanish 'sino' and German 'sondern' carry the corrective force. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: and-also, but, but- | es: porque, sino, sino- | fr: car, mais- | de: aber-, denn, sondern Gen 42:12; Deut 5:3; Deut 29:15; Judg 15:13; 1Sam 8:7

5. conditional: if, when (10×) Conditional conjunction: 'if, when' — introducing contingent clauses in legal casuistic formulations. Exodus 21:2 ('if you buy a Hebrew slave') and 21:33 ('if a man opens a pit') frame case law. Spanish 'Cuando' and German 'als' reflect the conditional-temporal overlap typical of ancient Near Eastern legal discourse. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: when | es: Cuando, cuando | fr: quand | de: als Exod 21:2; Exod 21:33; Exod 22:1; Exod 22:5; Exod 22:6

6. asseverative: surely, indeed (10×) Asseverative particle: 'surely, indeed' — emphatically affirming truth. Deuteronomy 30:14 declares 'surely the word is very near you' (Spanish 'ciertamente'). Joshua 2:24 reports 'surely the LORD has given all the land.' French 'certainement' and German 'gewiss' capture the force. This is not subordination but affirmation. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: for-, surely, surely- | es: Porque-, ciertamente, que | fr: certainement, certainement-, pour- | de: dass-, fuer-, gewiss Deut 15:8; Deut 30:14; Josh 2:24; 1Sam 6:3; 1Sam 8:9

7. concessive: though, yet (4×) Concessive conjunction: 'though, even though' — acknowledging a circumstance despite which the main clause holds. Psalm 37:24 promises 'though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down.' Psalm 44:19,22 protest faithfulness despite suffering. The concessive use is rare but theologically charged, holding suffering and trust in tension. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: though, yet | es: Aunque, Ciertamente, Cuando | fr: car | de: denn Ps 37:24; Ps 44:19; Ps 44:22; Ps 49:18

כִּי אִם־ H3588b Conj (148×)

Compound conjunction 'ki im': but/rather (adversative), except/unless (exceptive), for/because (causal), or surely/that (asseverative).

Formed from the conjunction ki and the particle im joined by makkeph, this compound particle carries surprisingly distinct functions depending on context. After a negative statement it most often means 'but' or 'rather,' correcting what precedes (Gen 32:28: 'Your name shall no longer be called Jacob, but Israel'). When limiting a general claim, it signals 'except' or 'unless' (Gen 39:9: 'He has withheld nothing from me except you'). It can also introduce a reason ('for if you refuse,' Exod 10:4) or, more rarely, serve as an emphatic 'surely' in oath formulas (1 Sam 14:39). Translators across languages consistently distinguish these roles: Spanish sino for the adversative, sauf in French for the exceptive, and German denn for the causal.

1. but, rather (adversative) (57×) Adversative 'but, rather' – the most frequent use (~57x), typically following a negation to introduce the contrasting truth. Spanish sino and German sondern both confirm the strong adversative force. In Gen 32:28, Jacob is told his name will no longer be Jacob ki im Israel, and in Deut 7:5 Israel is commanded not to make treaties but rather to tear down altars. The pattern 'not X ki im Y' is the hallmark construction. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: but, but- | es: Porque, Sino, sino | fr: mais, mais- | de: aber, aber-, sondern Gen 32:28; Gen 35:10; Exod 12:9; Num 24:22; Deut 7:5

2. except, unless (exceptive) (48×) Exceptive 'except, unless' (~48x), restricting a preceding general statement to carve out an exception. French sauf and German ausser both render this sense distinctly from the adversative. Gen 39:9 is paradigmatic: Potiphar has placed everything in Joseph's hands except (ki im) his wife. In Gen 32:26 Jacob will not release the angel unless he receives a blessing – the conditional-restrictive nuance is clear. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: but, except, except- | es: a-menos-que, sino | fr: car, mais, sauf | de: aber, ausser, ausser- Gen 28:17; Gen 32:26; Gen 39:6; Gen 39:9; Gen 42:15

3. for, because (causal) (37×) Causal 'for, because, for if' (~37x), giving the ground or reason for what precedes, often introducing a conditional protasis. French car and German denn consistently mark this sense. The Exodus plague narratives use it repeatedly (Exod 8:21; 9:2; 10:4): 'for if you refuse to let my people go...' – here ki retains its causal force while im adds the conditional element. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: But, For, For- | es: Pero, Porque, porque | fr: Car, car, pour- | de: For, denn, fuer- Exod 8:21; Exod 9:2; Exod 10:4; Exod 22:23; Exod 23:22

4. that, surely (asseverative/content) (6×) Asseverative or content-clause 'surely, that' (~6x), the rarest use, appearing in oath formulas and solemn declarations. In 1 Sam 14:39, Saul swears ki im ('surely') Jonathan shall die; in Jer 26:15 Jeremiah declares ki im ('truly/that') you are bringing innocent blood upon yourselves. Spanish ciertamente and German dass capture respectively the emphatic and content-clause poles of this sense. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: for, surely, that | es: ciertamente, que | fr: car, ce, que | de: dass, denn Gen 47:18; 1Sam 14:39; 1Sam 26:10; Jer 22:24; Jer 26:15

כִּי עַל כֵּן H3588c Conj (10×)

A compound conjunction 'for therefore / forasmuch as,' emphasizing the causal ground with pleonastic force

This distinctive phrase kî ᶜal kēn combines the conjunction kî ('for, because') with the prepositional expression ᶜal kēn ('therefore, on this account'), creating a pleonastic emphasis — literally 'for on-account-of-this.' It appears in key narrative moments where a speaker wants to underscore the reason behind an action: Abraham urging hospitality (Gen 18:5), Lot protecting his guests (Gen 19:8), Jacob's emotional reunion with Esau (Gen 33:10). The translations across languages reduce it to simple 'because' or 'for' — Spanish 'porque,' French 'parce que,' German 'denn' — though the Hebrew original carries a weightier, more emphatic rhetorical force than any single causal conjunction conveys.

because (10×) A compound causal conjunction kî ᶜal kēn, literally 'for therefore,' which pleonastically doubles the causal force to emphasize the ground or reason for an action. Found in elevated narrative speech across Genesis, Numbers, Judges, Samuel, and Jeremiah (Gen 18:5; 19:8; 33:10; 38:26; Num 10:31; 14:43). Abraham uses it to explain why travelers have come his way; Moses uses it to persuade Hobab to join Israel. Spanish 'porque,' French 'parce que,' and German 'denn' all flatten the phrase to simple causation, but the Hebrew construction carries distinctive rhetorical weight — a speaker insisting that the reason is self-evident and compelling. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: For, because, because- | es: Porque, porque, porque- | fr: car, parce-que, parce-que- | de: denn, denn-, fuer Gen 18:5; Gen 19:8; Gen 33:10; Gen 38:26; Num 10:31

כִּיד H3589 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

destruction, calamity; his disaster (with 3ms suffix; hapax)

This enigmatic noun appears only in Job 21:20, where Job describes the fate of the wicked: 'Let his own eyes see his destruction.' The Masoretic Text reads 'kido' (his destruction), but many scholars emend to 'pido' (his calamity/disaster), parallel to Job 12:5 and 31:29. The text's uncertainty reflects scribal transmission challenges in Job's notoriously difficult Hebrew. Either reading conveys the same essential idea: the wicked should personally witness their own downfall, experiencing firsthand the consequences of their evil. Job demands poetic justice.

(1×) Job 21:20 employs this disputed noun with third masculine suffix: 'his destruction.' Many scholars (following LXX and textual analysis) suggest emending to 'pido' (his disaster), which appears elsewhere in Job. English 'his-destruction' and Spanish 'su-destrucción' follow the Masoretic pointing, while French/German leave it untransliterated, reflecting textual uncertainty. Semantically belongs to vocabulary of violence and calamity. The suffix makes it personal: the wicked one's own destruction becoming visible to him. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: his-destruction | es: su-destrucción | fr: son-כידו-lui | de: [כידן] Job 21:20

כִּידוֹד H3590 N-mpc (1×)

sparks, fiery particles; emissions from fire (plural construct)

This noun appears in Job 41:19 (English 41:27) describing Leviathan's terrifying features: 'Out of his mouth go burning torches, sparks of fire leap out.' The word derives from a root related to striking or emitting fire, parallel to Arabic terms for fire-sticks that emit sparks when struck. The image is of a creature so fierce that its very breath produces visible fire—mythology meeting natural observation of animals in dramatic descriptions. The plural construct 'sparks of fire' amplifies the terror: not one spark but a shower of flaming particles.

(1×) Job 41:19 uses this plural construct noun for the sparks emerging from Leviathan's mouth, parallel to 'burning torches.' The etymology connects to roots meaning to strike out fire or emit sparks (Arabic cognates). English 'sparks-of' and Spanish 'chispas-de' (sparks-of) accurately translate. French/German leave untransliterated, perhaps acknowledging this rare word's interpretive challenges. The construct relationship with 'fire' (esh) emphasizes the fiery nature of these particles. Contributes to Job's hyperbolic portrait of an unconquerable creature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sparks-of | es: chispas-de | fr: כידודי | de: [כידודי] Job 41:19

כִּידוֹן H3591 Conj-w (9×)

A javelin or short throwing spear, a military weapon distinct from the longer hanit (lance/spear).

The noun kidon (כִּידוֹן) designates a javelin or short throwing spear, consistently distinguished in Hebrew from the hanit (חֲנִית), the heavier thrusting lance. The word is most memorable from Goliath's armament: he carried a kidon of bronze between his shoulders along with his great spear (1 Sam 17:6, 45). Joshua wielded one as a signal weapon, stretching it out toward Ai at God's command (Josh 8:18, 26). Jeremiah and Job pair it with other weapons in descriptions of military terror (Jer 6:23; 50:42; Job 39:23; 41:21). Spanish jabalina and French javelot capture the lighter, throwable nature of this weapon.

javelin, short spear (weapon) (9×) A masculine noun for a light throwing spear or javelin, distinct from the hanit (חֲנִית, the heavier thrusting spear/lance). In the David-and-Goliath narrative, the giant's kidon of bronze hung between his shoulders as part of his triple weaponry — sword, spear, and javelin (1 Sam 17:6, 45). Joshua's kidon functioned as a tactical signal: 'Stretch out the javelin that is in your hand toward Ai' (Josh 8:18, 26). Jeremiah pairs bow and kidon as the weapons of terrifying invaders (Jer 6:23; 50:42), while Job evokes its rushing sound in battle (Job 41:21). Spanish jabalina and French javelot consistently distinguish it from the heavier lance (lanza/lance), confirming the semantic contrast with hanit. SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN

en: a-javelin, and-javelin, and-javelin-of | es: con-la-lanza, jabalina, y-con-jabalina | fr: [וכידון], [וכידן], avec-le-javelot | de: [וכידון], [וכידן], [כידון] Josh 8:18; Josh 8:26; 1Sam 17:6; 1Sam 17:45

כִּידֹן H3592 N-proper (1×)

Kidon, personal name; variant of Nacon, owner of threshing floor

Kidon appears in 1 Chronicles 13:9 as the name attached to the threshing floor where Uzzah touched the ark and died. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 6:6 calls this same location 'Nacon's threshing floor,' showing variant textual traditions for the same individual. The Greek versions reflect this confusion with multiple spellings (Chedōn, Cheiló, Orna). The name itself is less significant than the tragic event: Uzzah's death for steadying the ark became a pivotal moment in David's relationship with the ark of God.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 13:9 identifies the threshing floor where Uzzah died as belonging to Kidon. This parallels 2 Samuel 6:6's 'Nacon,' showing textual variants for the same person or place. Multilingual versions transliterate: Spanish 'Quidón,' French/German leave it in brackets or untransliterated. The Septuagint's multiple variant readings confirm ancient uncertainty about this name. The historical-geographical detail anchors the Uzzah tragedy to a specific, if uncertainly named, location. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kidon | es: Quidón | fr: [כידן] | de: [כידן] 1Chr 13:9

כִּידוֹר H3593 Prep-l (1×)

attack, onset, battle charge; readiness for combat

This noun appears in Job 15:24 as Eliphaz describes the wicked man's terror: 'Distress and anguish overwhelm him; they prevail against him like a king ready for the attack.' The word denotes the onset or charge in battle—the moment when the king launches his assault. The image captures overwhelming force: the guilty conscience experiences dread as though a conquering monarch were bearing down for the kill. The noun's rarity gives Eliphaz's speech an elevated, archaic quality, befitting wisdom discourse.

(1×) Job 15:24 employs this rare noun in the phrase 'a king ready for the attack.' The preposition 'for/to' indicates purpose or readiness. The noun denotes military onset or charge, the moment of aggressive engagement. Spanish 'para-batalla' (for-battle) and English 'for-attack' both capture the martial context. French/German leave untransliterated, reflecting the word's rarity and interpretive challenge. Eliphaz uses the image to portray the wicked person's existential dread as being under imminent assault by royal forces. WAR AND BATTLE

en: for-attack | es: para-batalla | fr: לכידור | de: [לכידור] Job 15:24

כִּיּוּן H3594 N-proper-ms (1×)

Kiyyun, astral deity, possibly Saturn; idol worshiped alongside Sakkuth

Kiyyun appears in Amos 5:26, where the prophet condemns Israel for carrying 'Sakkuth your king and Kiyyun your images, the star of your god.' This likely refers to astral deities worshiped in Israel's syncretistic cult. Assyrian evidence suggests Kiyyun represents Kaivanu or Kaimanu, the planet Saturn, venerated as a deity. The Masoretic pointing may deliberately distort the original pronunciation to echo 'kun' (something established/firm), or to suggest 'siqqus' (abomination). Amos denounces this astral idolatry as covenant violation deserving exile.

(1×) Amos 5:26 names Kiyyun as an astral deity worshiped by Israel, parallel to Sakkuth. Scholarly consensus, drawing on Assyrian texts, identifies this with Kaivanu/Kaimanu (planet Saturn). Multilingual transliterations vary slightly: Spanish 'Kiyún,' French 'Kiyoun,' German/French leave in brackets. The vocalization may be polemically altered to avoid pronouncing the actual divine name. Context indicates celestial/planetary worship, part of the syncretistic cult Amos condemns. The prophet's point: Israel carried idols into the wilderness and now will carry them into exile. GODS AND DEITIES en: Kiyyun | es: Kiyún | fr: Kiyoun | de: [כיון] Amos 5:26

כִּיּוֹר H3595 N-mp (23×)

A basin or laver for ritual washing; a cooking pot or fire-pot; a bronze platform

Across the tabernacle and temple texts, this noun names the bronze laver where priests washed their hands and feet before approaching the altar (Exod 30:18; 1 Kgs 7:38). It belongs to the sacred furniture, repeated in every inventory from the wilderness wandering to Solomon's courts. In 1 Samuel 2:14 it appears as a common cooking pot alongside other kitchen vessels, and Zechariah 12:6 transforms it into a fire-pot or brazier, a vessel of burning judgment. One surprising occurrence in 2 Chronicles 6:13 describes Solomon's bronze platform, a raised stand in the temple court.

1. basin or laver (20×) A bronze basin or laver used for priestly purification, the ritual washing vessel stationed before the tabernacle and later multiplied in Solomon's temple. Spanish fuente, French basin, and German Becken all point to a wide, open vessel for water. Exodus 30:18 through 1 Kings 7:38-43 establish its central liturgical role. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basin, basins, basins-of | es: fuente-de, fuentes, la-fuente | fr: [הכירות], [כיורים], basin | de: Becken, [הכירות], [כיורים] Exod 30:18; Exod 30:28; Exod 31:9; Exod 35:16; Exod 38:8

2. pot or kettle (2×) A cooking pot, kettle, or fire-pot used in domestic or figurative contexts. In 1 Samuel 2:14 it sits among everyday kitchen vessels (alongside the caldron and pan), while Zechariah 12:6 uses it metaphorically as a brazier of fire among wood, depicting the chiefs of Judah consuming their enemies. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: into-the-kettle, like-a-pot-of | es: como-brasero-de, en-la-olla | fr: bassin, dans-le-kettle | de: [ככיור], hinein-der-kettle 1Sam 2:14; Zech 12:6

3. platform or stand (1×) A raised bronze platform or stand, attested in 2 Chronicles 6:13 where Solomon kneels upon a specially constructed bronze structure in the temple court. This sense extends the idea of a bronze vessel-form into an architectural fixture for ceremonial positioning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-basin-of | es: una-plataforma-de | fr: [כיור] | de: [כיור] 2Chr 6:13

כִּילַי H3596 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

a knave or scoundrel who schemes evil

This rare term appears only in Isaiah 32, describing morally corrupt individuals who plot wickedness. The word likely derives from a root meaning deception or vileness. Isaiah uses it in parallel with 'fool' (nabal) to characterize those who speak folly and practice ungodliness. The second occurrence (v. 7) employs wordplay, using the term's sound similarity to 'instruments' (kelav) to suggest that the scoundrel's tools are wicked schemes. The context emphasizes both character and deliberate evil action.

(2×) A wicked schemer or scoundrel who devises evil plans and speaks error. Isaiah contrasts this figure with the noble person, showing that social transformation under Messiah's reign will reverse current moral confusion. The scoundrel uses wicked instruments and deceptive words to exploit the poor and needy, representing systemic injustice that God will judge. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: And-the-scoundrel, and-the-scoundrel | es: y-al-avaro, y-el-avaro | fr: [וכלי], [ולכילי] | de: [וכלי], [ולכילי] Isa 32:5; Isa 32:7

כִּילַפּוֹת H3597 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

hammers, tools for striking; plural of axe-like implement

This noun appears in Psalm 74:6, lamenting the desecration of the temple: 'And now they break down all its carved work with axe and hammers.' The word is a loan from Assyrian kalappatu (axe/hammer), reflecting cultural vocabulary exchange. The psalm describes Babylonian soldiers smashing the temple's ornate woodwork—an act of both military vandalism and theological desecration. The plural 'hammers' paired with 'axe' emphasizes the violence and thoroughness of destruction. The image is of sacred space violated by crude implements of war.

(1×) Psalm 74:6 uses this plural noun for the implements used to destroy temple carvings, parallel to 'axe' (compare v. 5's 'axes'). Borrowed from Assyrian kalappatu, indicating cultural-linguistic exchange. Multilingual versions: English 'hammers,' Spanish 'martillos,' French 'massue' (club/mace). The conjunction 'and' links this to other destructive tools. Archaeological and textual evidence supports understanding these as heavy striking implements used to smash carved wood. The lament emphasizes the sacrilege of using crude tools on sacred artistry. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-hammers | es: y-martillos | fr: et-massue | de: und-hammers Ps 74:6

כִּימָה H3598 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)

Pleiades, a cluster of stars (Job 9:9, 38:31; Amos 5:8)

This astronomical term refers to the Pleiades star cluster, known as Kimah in Hebrew. The prophets and wisdom writers mention it alongside other constellations like Orion (כְּסִיל) as evidence of God's creative power and sovereign control over the cosmos. In Job 38:31, God challenges Job with rhetorical questions about binding the chains of the Pleiades, highlighting divine authority over even the celestial realm.

(3×) The Pleiades star cluster appears in three poetic passages celebrating God's creative majesty. Job 9:9 lists it among the Bear, Orion, and the southern chambers; Job 38:31 speaks of its 'chains' or 'bonds' (מַעֲדַנּוֹת); Amos 5:8 parallels it with Orion in praising the Creator. Across languages, transliterations dominate (Spanish Pléyades, French kept the Hebrew), showing recognition of this as a proper astronomical name. SUN CELESTIAL BODY

en: Kimah, Pleiades, and-Pleiades | es: Pléyades, y-las-Pléyades, | fr: comme-vers-l'ouest, et-כימה, וכימה | de: [וכימה], [כימה] Job 9:9; Job 38:31; Amos 5:8

כִּיס H3599 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (6×)

A bag or purse for carrying money or weights; used of honest and dishonest commerce alike.

Refers to a small bag or purse carried on the person, used both for holding commercial weights and for money. In its most vivid usage, Proverbs 1:14 depicts sinners enticing a youth with the promise of a shared purse, while Micah 6:11 denounces the 'bag of deceitful weights' used to cheat in the marketplace. The cognates across Semitic languages are strikingly consistent – Arabic kis, Ethiopic kis, Aramaic kisa – all pointing to the same everyday item of personal commerce. Isaiah 46:6 pictures idolaters lavishing gold from the purse to fashion a worthless idol.

bag, purse (6×) A leather bag or pouch used for carrying either money or commercial weights. When holding weights, it appears in legal contexts condemning dishonest trade: 'You shall not have in your bag differing weights' (Deut 25:13), and 'a bag of deceitful weights' (Mic 6:11). When holding money, it functions as a purse – the tempters' shared purse in Proverbs 1:14, and the gold lavished on idol-making in Isaiah 46:6. Spanish bolsa and English 'bag/purse' capture the dual function well. The Palmyrene Aramaic expression 'from his kis' meaning 'at his own expense' confirms how deeply embedded this word was in daily commercial life. BAG PURSE

en: [in-the-cup], and-with-bag-of, bag | es: [en-la-pupila], bolsa, de-la-bolsa | fr: [מכיס], bourse, dans-ton-bag | de: [[בכיס]], [ובכיס], [כיס] Deut 25:13; Prov 1:14; Prov 16:11; Prov 23:31; Isa 46:6

כִּיר H3600 Conj-w / N-md (1×)

cooking stove, dual form; portable hearth supporting two pots

This dual noun appears in Leviticus 11:35 within purity laws governing unclean objects. The text declares that 'oven or stove shall be broken down,' classifying these cooking implements as becoming irredeemably unclean if contaminated by certain carcasses. The dual form 'kirayim' suggests a two-pot stove, perhaps with two fire compartments or supporting two vessels simultaneously. Mishnaic Hebrew confirms this usage. The law's harshness—mandatory destruction rather than cleansing—reflects concerns about porous cooking surfaces absorbing impurity.

(1×) Leviticus 11:35 pairs this dual noun with 'oven' (tanur) as cooking equipment requiring destruction when defiled. The dual form likely indicates a stove supporting two pots, possibly with dual fire compartments. Greek 'chytropodes' (pot-supports) confirms structural understanding. Multilingual glosses: English/French/German 'stove,' Spanish 'fogón' (cooking hearth). The conjunction 'and' links it with 'oven' in the purity regulation. Mishnaic evidence supports a portable clay cooking installation. The requirement to break it down shows it couldn't be adequately purified. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4906 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-stove | es: y-fogón | fr: et-stove | de: und-stove Lev 11:35

כִּישׁוֹר H3601 Prep-b (1×)

distaff, tool for holding unspun fibers; part of spinning equipment

This noun appears in Proverbs 31:19, describing the virtuous woman's industrious hands: 'She extends her hands to the distaff, and her hands grasp the spindle.' The distaff holds the mass of unspun fiber (wool or flax) while the spindle twists it into thread —both essential tools for ancient textile production. The image portrays skilled, productive labor: a woman managing household economy through textile work. Debate exists whether kishor means distaff or spindle, but the parallelism with pelek (clearly spindle/whorl) suggests distaff for kishor.

(1×) Proverbs 31:19 describes the capable woman's hands reaching 'to the distaff' parallel to grasping 'the spindle' (pelek). The word's etymology is uncertain, possibly from a root meaning 'straight' (because the distaff stands upright). Preposition 'to' indicates motion toward the tool. English translators traditionally 'distaff,' while some suggest 'spindle,' creating overlap with pelek. Spanish 'al-huso' (to-spindle) reflects this confusion. French/German leave untransliterated. The parallelism argues for distinguishing the two tools: distaff (fiber holder) and spindle (twisting implement). LINEN AND FABRIC

en: to-the-distaff | es: al-huso | fr: בכישור | de: [בכישור] Prov 31:19

כָּכָה H3602 Conj-w / Adv (37×)

thus, so, in this manner — a demonstrative adverb of manner, slightly more emphatic than koh

Kakah is an adverb meaning 'thus' or 'in this manner,' functioning as a somewhat more emphatic variant of the common koh. BDB suggests it may derive from a doubling of kah ('thus'), producing a reinforced demonstrative. Its 37 occurrences typically precede the verb they modify, as in 've-khakhah tokh'lu oto' ('and thus shall you eat it,' Exod 12:11) — the instruction for consuming the Passover lamb in haste. The word gravitates toward two patterns: paired with 'asah ('to do') to describe commanded or reported actions (1 Sam 19:17; 1 Kgs 1:6, 48; Jer 13:9; 19:11; 28:11; 51:64), and in rhetorical questions probing a state or action — 'why are you thus lean?' (2 Sam 13:4). Cross-linguistic glosses converge tightly: Spanish 'asi,' French 'ainsi,' German 'so.'

thus, so, in this manner (37×) A demonstrative adverb specifying manner, meaning 'thus, so, in this way,' used to point forward to an instruction or backward to a described action. Frequently collocates with 'asah ('to do') in prophetic sign-acts: Jeremiah's sash burial illustrates 'thus will I ruin the pride of Judah' (Jer 13:9), and his sinking scroll enacts 'thus shall Babylon sink' (Jer 51:64). In narrative, it introduces rhetorical questions about someone's condition (2 Sam 13:4) or conduct (1 Sam 19:17). Distinguished from koh by its slightly heavier emphasis and its preference for qualifying the word it precedes. The uniform rendering across Spanish 'asi,' French 'ainsi,' and German 'so' confirms a single, stable semantic profile. MANNER ADVERBS

en: thus | es: Así, así | fr: ainsi, wie-ainsi | de: so, wie-so Exod 12:11; Exod 29:35; Num 8:26; Num 11:15; Num 15:11

כִּכָּר H3603 Prep-b / N-fd (68×)

Something round: a talent (unit of weight, ~30 kg); a round district or plain, especially the Jordan Valley; a round loaf of bread.

Derived from the root idea of roundness, this noun branches into three distinct referents depending on context. Most frequently it denotes a talent, the largest standard unit of weight in ancient Israel (approximately 30-34 kg), used for measuring gold, silver, and bronze in temple construction and royal transactions. The same word also designates the round, flat Jordan Valley plain visible from the hills above, the 'kikkar of the Jordan' that Lot chose for its lush appearance (Gen 13:10-12). Finally, it refers to a round loaf or cake of bread, as in the three loaves given as a sign to Saul (1 Sam 10:3). Spanish neatly distinguishes all three: 'talento' for weight, 'llanura' for plain, and 'hogaza/torta' for loaf.

1. talent (unit of weight) (47×) A talent, the largest standard unit of weight in the biblical system, approximately 30-34 kilograms. Used extensively in accounts of temple construction (Exod 25:39; 38:24-27), royal tribute, and commercial transactions. Spanish 'talento,' French 'talent,' and German 'Talent' all borrow the same Greco-Latin loanword that itself derives from this Semitic weight standard. The dual form (two talents) and plural (talents of gold/silver) are common in Kings and Chronicles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: talent, talent-of, talents | es: talento, talento-de, talentos | fr: talent, wie-béliers | de: Talent, [ככר], [ככרים] Exod 25:39; Exod 37:24; Exod 38:24; Exod 38:25; Exod 38:27

2. plain or valley region (13×) A round, flat geographical district or plain, most characteristically the Jordan Valley viewed from above as a circular lowland basin. The phrase כִּכַּר הַיַּרְדֵּן (the plain of the Jordan) dominates this sense, appearing in the Lot narrative (Gen 13:10-12) and the Sodom destruction account (Gen 19:17, 25). Spanish 'llanura' (plain), French 'plaine,' and German 'Ebene' all render the geographic meaning, clearly distinct from the weight

terminology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-plain-of, plain-of, the-Plain | es: En-la-llanura-del, En-llanura-de, la-llanura | fr: dans-plain-de, le-plain, le-plaine | de: Ebene, Talent, [הככר] Gen 13:10; Gen 13:11; Gen 13:12; Gen 19:17; Gen 19:25

3. round loaf or cake (8×) A round loaf, disc, or cake of bread or similar food. The shape connection to 'roundness' is most transparent here. Gideon requests loaves of bread for his exhausted troops (Judg 8:5), Samuel tells Saul he will receive three loaves as a prophetic sign (1 Sam 10:3), and a loaf is distributed at the ark celebration (1 Chr 16:3). Spanish 'hogaza/torta' and the shift from weight/geography vocabulary in all target languages confirm the distinct culinary referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-disk-of, a-loaf-of, and-loaf-of | es: Y-hogaza-de, panes-redondos-de, torta-de | fr: [ככר], et-loaf-de, et-loaf-de- | de: Talent, [ככר], loaves-von Exod 29:23; Judg 8:5; 1Sam 2:36; 1Sam 10:3; 1Chr 16:3

כִּכַּר H3604 N-fp (1×)
talent (a unit of weight, particularly for precious metals)
This Aramaic form appears only in Ezra 7:22 in the decree of Artaxerxes, specifying limits on silver and other provisions for the temple. The talent was a standard unit of weight throughout the ancient Near East, typically around 75 pounds or 34 kilograms, used primarily for measuring precious metals and large quantities of valuable commodities. The plural form reflects Persian administrative terminology used in official correspondence.

(1×) The Aramaic plural form denoting talents as a unit of measurement. Found exclusively in Ezra's Persian administrative context, this term represents the standardized weight measure used in royal decrees for allocating temple resources. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'talentos') confirms this as a technical term for a large weight unit, consistent with its use in specifying the silver allowance 'up to a hundred talents' for temple operations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: talents | es: talentos | fr: [ככרין] | de: [ככרין] Ezra 7:22

כֹּל H3605 Conj-w (5417×)
All, every, whole, everything; the universal quantifier expressing totality, completeness, or distributive scope.
One of the most frequent words in the Hebrew Bible, kol is the universal quantifier that gathers everything into its scope. Whether modifying a noun ('all the earth,' 'every creature'), standing alone as 'everything' (Eccl 1:2, 'all is vanity'), or distributing across individuals ('each one,' Eccl 3:1), it insists on totality. In negative or conditional contexts it shades into 'any' (Deut 4:15-18). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — Spanish 'todos/toda,' French 'tout,' German 'alle' — reflecting how every language needs the same sweeping reach this tiny word provides.

1. all, every, whole (5352×) The attributive quantifier modifying a noun to express totality or universality: 'all the people,' 'every nation,' 'the whole land.' This overwhelmingly dominant sense (5,352 occurrences) appears from Genesis to Malachi. Spanish 'todos/toda/todas,' French 'tout,' and German 'alle' converge on the same all-embracing scope, whether the referent is people, land, time, or creation itself (Gen 11:9; 18:25). TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: all | es: Todos, toda, todas | fr: tout | de: alle, alle-, der-ganzen- Gen 11:9; Gen 14:3; Gen 16:12; Gen 18:25; Gen 22:18

2. everything, the totality (22×) The substantival or absolute use where kol functions as a noun meaning 'everything,' 'the whole,' or 'all things,' often with the article or in philosophical contexts. Ecclesiastes repeatedly uses this sense — 'all is vanity' (Eccl 1:2), 'I saw all the works' (Eccl 1:14). German 'das-Alles' (the everything) and Spanish 'el-todo' (the whole) capture how the word shifts from modifier to the thing itself. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: all, all-of-it, everything | es: El-todo, el-todo, por-todo | fr: comme-à-elle, der-tout, le-tout | de: Schwiegertochter, das-Alles, zu-allen Ezra 8:34; Ezra 8:35; Ps 49:17; Eccl 1:2; Eccl 1:14

3. all of (pronominal) (20×) Used with pronominal suffixes to express totality of a referenced group: 'all of you,' 'all of them,' 'all of her.' Deut 29:10 gathers 'all of you' before the Lord, and Song 4:7 declares 'all of you is beautiful.' Spanish 'Todos-vosotros' (all of you) and French 'Toute-toi' (all of you, singular) preserve the personal, encompassing quality of this pronominal construction. SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: all-of-you, to-all-of-you | es: Toda-tú, Todos-vosotros, a-todos-vosotros | fr: Toute-toi, comme-tout, comme-à-toi | de: alle, alle-von-du, wie-dir Deut 1:22; Deut 4:4; Deut 29:10; Josh 8:4; Judg 20:7

4. any, anything (18×) Indefinite sense used especially in negative, conditional, or interrogative contexts to mean 'any,' 'anyone,' or 'anything.' Deuteronomy 4:15-18 repeats the pattern 'any form,' 'any likeness,' 'any figure,' where kol is not summing a totality but scanning possibilities. German 'irgendein' (any) and Spanish 'cualquier' (any, whichever) show the shift from universal to indefinite quantification. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: any, any-, for-any- | es: cualquier, cualquier-, cualquier-cosa | fr: pour-tout-, quelque, tout | de: fuer-irgendein-, irgendein, irgendein- Deut 4:15; Deut 4:16; Deut 4:17; Deut 4:18

5. each, every (distributive) (5×) Distributive sense emphasizing individual members of a class rather than the group as a whole: 'for each one,' 'every single,' 'to everything its season.' Ecclesiastes 3:1 famously declares 'for everything there is a season,' distributing across each item. French 'pour-chacun' (for each one) and German 'fuer-jedermann' (for everyone) highlight the one-by-one focus distinct from collective totality. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: for-every-, for-everyone, to-every- | es: a-toda, para-todo | fr: pour-chacun, tout, à-tout | de: fuer-jedermann, zu-allen Exod 38:26; Eccl 3:1; Eccl 3:17; Eccl 8:6; Eccl 8:9

כֹּל H3606 Conj-w / N-msc (103×)
All, every, whole; the Aramaic quantifier expressing totality, universality, or indefinite distribution across a class.
The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew kol, this word saturates the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel as the primary marker of totality and universality. Whether summoning 'all the wise men of Babylon' (Dan 2:12) or decreeing that 'every people, nation, and language' must obey (Dan 3:29), kol provides the sweeping scope characteristic of royal edicts and divine declarations. In its emphatic (determined) form kolla, it stands alone as 'everything, all things'—a substantive totality rather than a modifier. Translators across languages uniformly reach for their strongest universal quantifier: Spanish todo, French tout, German alle.

1. all, every, whole (70×) Totality applied to a defined group or class—'all the wise men,' 'the whole kingdom' (Dan 6:2-4). This is the most frequent usage (70x), appearing in construct with a plural noun to indicate every member of the specified set. The BDB notes this as kol with a collective noun, and it dominates in the royal decree formulas of Daniel and the administrative language of Ezra (e.g., Ezra 7:16 'all the silver and gold'). TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: all-, because-, inasmuch-as- | es: Por, Todo, a-todos | fr: tout | de: alle Ezra 7:16; Dan 2:8; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:12; Dan 2:24

2. any, whatever, whoever (28×) Indefinite or distributive use meaning 'any, whatever, whoever,' often in conditional, negative, or generalizing contexts. In Ezra 6:11-12, the decree threatens 'any man' who alters the edict and 'any king or people' who opposes the temple. Dan 6:8 speaks of a petition to 'any god.' This sense (28x) shifts from collective totality to open-ended distribution, and languages like Spanish toggle between todo and ninguna (in negated contexts) to capture the shift. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS
en: all, and-any-, and-whoever | es: a-todo, a-todos, ninguna | fr: et-tout, tout | de: alle, und-alle Ezra 4:14; Ezra 6:11; Ezra 6:12; Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:13

3. everything, the whole (5×) Substantive use in the emphatic/determined state (kolla) meaning 'everything, all things, the totality' as a freestanding noun rather than a modifier. Daniel 2:40 speaks of iron that 'breaks in pieces and shatters everything' (kolla); Dan 4:12 describes the tree that fed 'all.' Five occurrences carry this weight, where the word itself is the subject or object, not an adjective qualifying another noun. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: all, for-all- | es: para-todos, toda., todo | fr: [לכלא], tout, wie-ne-pas | de: [כלא], alle, wie-nicht Ezra 5:7; Dan 2:40; Dan 4:12; Dan 4:21; Dan 4:28

כָּלָא H3607 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (18×)

To shut up, restrain, or withhold; to confine or imprison; passively, to be held back or cease.

A verb of containment and control whose range spans from physical imprisonment to cosmic restraint. Jeremiah is 'shut up' in the court of the guard (Jer 32:2-3), while Abraham tells the Hittites that no one should withhold his burial site (Gen 23:6). The Niphal passive describes the restraining of primordial floodwaters (Gen 8:2) and the halting of excessive generosity (Exod 36:6). Spanish consistently distinguishes 'encerrar' (confine physically) from 'detener/retener' (restrain or hold back), revealing a clean semantic split the Hebrew does not mark morphologically. The lone Piel occurrence at Dan 9:24 extends the root toward bringing transgression to its appointed end – a theological capstone on a verb about limits and boundaries.

1. restrain, withhold, hold back (10×) The primary Qal active sense: to restrain, withhold, or hold back someone or something from proceeding or being given. Abraham asks that no one withhold a burial site from him (Gen 23:6); Abigail restrained David from bloodshed (1 Sam 25:33); the psalmist declares he has not withheld his lips from proclaiming righteousness (Ps 40:9). Spanish uses 'impedir' and 'detener' for this restraining function, while French renders it variously as 'retenir' or 'withhold,' capturing the sense of active prevention by a human agent. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: I-restrain, restrain-them, restrained-me | es: detuve, encárcelalos:, me-impediste | fr: –withhold, [תכלאי], comme-retenir | de: [כלאה], [כלאו], [לכלוא] Gen 23:6; Num 11:28; 1Sam 25:33; Ps 40:9; Ps 40:11

2. confine, shut up, imprison (4×) The sense of physical confinement or imprisonment: to shut up, enclose, or lock someone in a space. Jeremiah is confined in the court of the guard (Jer 32:2-3), and the psalmist laments being shut in with no escape (Ps 88:8). The Philistines shut up their milch cows (1 Sam 6:10) in a pen. Spanish cleanly distinguishes this with 'encerrar' and 'encarcelar' (to imprison), while the passive participle kalua functions almost as an adjective meaning 'imprisoned' or 'confined.' RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: confined, confined-him, shut-in | es: encerrado, encerraron, lo-encerró | fr: [כלאו], [כלוא], comme-ne...pas | de: [כלאו], [כלוא], shut-in 1Sam 6:10; Ps 88:8; Jer 32:2; Jer 32:3

3. be restrained, cease (3×) The Niphal passive sense: to be restrained, held back, or caused to cease. The fountains of the deep and windows of heaven were 'restrained' after the flood (Gen 8:2); the people were commanded to stop bringing offerings because there was more than enough (Exod 36:6); God restrains the waters in Ezek 31:15. Spanish 'fue detenida/detenido' and French 'retenir' capture the passive cessation. This sense focuses on impersonal forces – rain, floodwaters, plague – being checked by divine authority. CEASING AND STOPPING
en: and-was-restrained, and-were-held-back, and-were-restrained | es: y-fue-detenida, y-fue-detenido, y-fueron-retenidas | fr: et-retenir, et-étaient-retint, et-était-retint | de: [ויכלאו], und-waren-restrained, und-zurückgehalten-wurde Gen 8:2; Exod 36:6; Ezek 31:15

4. bring to an end, finish (1×) The intensive Piel sense appearing only at Dan 9:24: to bring to completion, finish, or seal up transgression. The seventy weeks are decreed 'to finish' transgression and seal up sin. Spanish 'para terminar' and French 'pour tout' reflect the finalizing nuance. This extends the root metaphor of containment to its ultimate conclusion: not merely holding back, but bringing something to its appointed end and sealing it shut permanently – a fitting eschatological climax for a verb about boundaries and limits. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: to-restrain | es: para-terminar | fr: pour-tout | de: [לכלא] Dan 9:24

כֶּלֶא H3608 N-ms (10×)

Confinement, prison — a place of imprisonment; used in the phrase bêth hakkelĕʾ 'prison house'

This noun denotes a place of confinement or restraint, typically appearing in the construct phrase bêth (hak)kelĕʾ, 'the house of imprisonment.' It describes literal prisons in the historical and prophetic books — where Micaiah was confined by Ahab (1 Kgs 22:27), where Hoshea was shut up by Assyria (2 Kgs 17:4), and where Jeremiah endured repeated detention (Jer 37:15, 18). Isaiah uses its plural bāttê kelāʾîm ('houses of confinement,' Isa 42:22) to describe Israel's spiritual bondage. The cognate Akkadian bīt kīli confirms this as part of a shared ancient Near Eastern vocabulary for incarceration.

prison, confinement (10×) A masculine noun meaning confinement, restraint, or imprisonment, most often in the construct bêth (hak)kelĕʾ ('prison house,' 1 Kgs 22:27; 2 Chr 18:26; 2 Kgs 17:4; Jer 37:15, 18). It also appears in the expression bigdê kilʾô ('garments of his imprisonment,' 2 Kgs 25:29 = Jer 52:33), referring to prison clothing. Isaiah's plural bāttê kelāʾîm (42:22) extends the image metaphorically to Israel trapped in captivity. Spanish 'cárcel/prisión,' French 'prison,' and the Akkadian cognate bīt kīli all confirm the core sense of a physically enclosed place of detention — not mere restriction but locked confinement. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT
en: confinement, his-prison, prison | es: cárceles, la-cárcel, prisión | fr: [הכלא], comme-ne...pas, le-prison | de: [הכלא], [כלא], [כלאו] 1Kgs 22:27; 2Kgs 17:4; 2Kgs 25:27; 2Kgs 25:29; 2Chr 18:26

כִּלְאָב H3609 N-proper-ms (1×)

Kilav (David's second son by Abigail)

Kilav was David's second son, born in Hebron to Abigail the Carmelite, formerly wife of Nabal. He appears in the genealogical record of 2 Samuel 3:3, though curiously he is called Daniel in the parallel account in 1 Chronicles 3:1. The reason for this alternate naming remains unclear, though it may reflect different textual traditions or perhaps two names for the same person. Kilav is mentioned only in birth records and plays no known role in the succession narratives.

(1×) The personal name of David's second son in the Hebron genealogy. The multilingual consistency (Spanish, French, German all preserve 'Kilav') reflects the proper name's transliteration. The existence of the variant 'Daniel' in Chronicles suggests either dual naming practices or textual divergence, but 2 Samuel preserves the form Kilav. His conspicuous absence from succession accounts, despite being second-born, has led to speculation about early death. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Kilav | es: Kilav | fr: Kilav | de: Kilav 2Sam 3:3

כִּלְאַיִם H3610 N-md (4×)

two kinds, mixed kinds; diverse species (forbidden in Levitical law)

This dual form noun appears exclusively in the Holiness Code's laws against mixing different kinds. The term designates forbidden mixtures—breeding cattle with different species, sowing fields with mixed seeds, or wearing garments woven from two kinds of thread. The underlying Hebrew root relates to 'both' or 'two,' emphasizing the duality that the law prohibits. These prohibitions aimed to maintain the created order's distinctions, teaching Israel to honor boundaries that God established in creation.

(4×) The term appears four times in laws against mixing kinds. Leviticus prohibits breeding 'two kinds' of cattle together, sowing fields with 'mixed seeds,' or wearing garments of 'mixed kinds' of fabric (Lev 19:19, three times, H source). Deuteronomy similarly forbids sowing vineyards with 'mixed seeds' lest the whole yield become forfeit (Deut 22:9). Spanish especies distintas/mezcla and French espèces mélangées/mélangé-semences track the 'mixed/diverse species' sense, while German gemischt-Samen/gemischt-kinds preserves the 'mixed' element with varied objects across Germanic structure. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: mixed-kinds, mixed-seeds | es: con-especies-distintas, con-mezcla, mezcla | fr: espèces-mélangées, mélangé-semences | de: gemischt-Samen, gemischt-kinds Lev 19:19; Deut 22:9

כֶּלֶב H3611 N-mp (32×)

dog — a domestic canine, often associated with scavenging and used figuratively as a term of contempt

Kelev appears 32 times and carries a predominantly negative cultural valence that surprises modern readers accustomed to viewing dogs as companions. In ancient Israel the dog was a semi-wild scavenger: the Deuteronomistic History repeatedly threatens that dogs will devour the corpses of wicked kings (1 Kgs 14:11; 16:4; 21:19-24; 2 Kgs 9:10, 36). To call oneself a 'dead dog' was the deepest self-deprecation (1 Sam 24:14; 2 Sam 9:8), and Goliath takes mortal offense when David approaches with a staff, asking 'Am I a dog?' (1 Sam 17:43). The only neutral use is Job 30:1, where kelev tson ('sheep-dog') names a working animal too lowly even for comparison. Deuteronomy 23:18 bans bringing the 'price of a dog' into the temple, likely a reference to cultic prostitution. The cognate appears across the Semitic family — Aramaic kalba, Arabic kalb — all denoting the same animal.

dog (animal) (32×) The domestic dog, viewed primarily as a scavenger and culturally despised animal. Literal references depict fierce, hungry dogs devouring corpses and licking blood in the Deuteronomistic judgment oracles (1 Kgs 14:11; 21:19; 2 Kgs 9:10, 36). Figuratively, 'dead dog' expresses extreme self-abasement (1 Sam 24:14; 2 Sam 9:8). Job 30:1 names the only working dog — the sheep-dog — and even there it implies low status. Deut 23:18 bans the 'price of a dog' from the sanctuary. DOG ANIMAL en: a-dog, dog, the-dog | es: Los-perros, el-perro, los-perros | fr: [כלב], chien, comme-cœur | de: Hund, [כלב], der-Hund Exod 11:7; Exod 22:31; Deut 23:18; Judg 7:5; 1Sam 17:43

כָּלֵב H3612 N-proper-ms (35×)

Caleb — the faithful Kenizzite spy who wholly followed the LORD and inherited Hebron

Kalev (Caleb) is a proper masculine name appearing 35 times, overwhelmingly designating Caleb son of Jephunneh, called 'the Kenizzite' (Num 32:12; Josh 14:6, 14). The name may relate to kelev ('dog'), possibly indicating a clan totem or a term of devoted service. Caleb's defining moment comes in Numbers 13-14: as one of the twelve spies, he and Joshua alone urged Israel to trust God and enter Canaan. For this faithfulness, God swore that Caleb would receive the land his feet had trodden (Num 14:24; Deut 1:36). Forty-five years later, the 85-year-old Caleb claimed his inheritance at Hebron, driving out the three sons of Anak (Josh 14:6-15; 15:13-14). His daughter Achsah, given in marriage to Othniel for capturing Debir, boldly asked for springs of water — a memorable vignette of inherited boldness (Josh 15:16-19; Judg 1:12-15).

Caleb (Israelite leader) (35×) The proper name Kalev (Caleb), identifying the son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite who, with Joshua, brought a faithful report from scouting Canaan and was rewarded with the promise of Hebron. The phrase 'he wholly followed the LORD' (Num 14:24; 32:12; Deut 1:36; Josh 14:8-9, 14) functions as a formulaic epithet. Narrative appearances cluster in Numbers 13-14 (the spy episode), Joshua 14-15 (claiming the inheritance at age 85), and Judges 1:12-20 (the Othniel-Achsah sequel). The genealogies in 1 Chronicles 2:18-19, 42-50 and 4:15 integrate Caleb into the tribe of Judah. Translations transliterate uniformly: Greek Chaleb, Spanish 'Caleb,' French 'Caleb,' German 'Kaleb.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Caleb, Calev, Kalev | es: Caleb, Kalev | fr: Caleb, Calev, Kalev | de: Caleb, Calev, Kaleb Num 13:6; Num 13:30; Num 14:6; Num 14:24; Num 14:30

אֶפְרָתָה H3613 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

in Caleb-Ephrathah (a place name)

This compound geographical reference appears only in 1 Chronicles 2:24, in a genealogical passage whose Hebrew text is notoriously difficult. The Septuagint reads differently, suggesting 'Caleb went to Ephrathah,' which many scholars prefer. Ephrathah is associated with Bethlehem elsewhere in Scripture, while Caleb is a prominent figure in Judah's tribal history. The phrase may indicate either a location named after both Caleb and the region Ephrathah, or it may be a textual corruption.

(1×) A complex locative expression in a genealogical context, most likely indicating a place connected to both the Calebite clan and the region of Ephrathah near Bethlehem. The textual difficulties are reflected in the multilingual evidence, with French and German leaving the phrase untranslated, while Spanish attempts 'en Caleb-Efrata.' The prepositional prefix 'in' suggests location, but the exact geographical referent remains disputed among textual scholars. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Kalev-Ephrathah | es: en-Caleb-Efrata | fr: [בכלב אפרתה] | de: [בכלב אפרתה] 1Chr 2:24

כָּלְבִּי H3614 N-proper-ms (1×)

Calebite (descendant or member of Caleb's clan)

This gentelic adjective identifies someone as belonging to the clan or family of Caleb. It appears in 1 Samuel 25:3 describing Nabal, whose wife Abigail later became David's wife. The Calebites were an important clan within Judah, with Caleb himself being one of the two faithful spies who explored Canaan. The term establishes Nabal's tribal affiliation and helps explain his presence in the region around Carmel and Maon in Judahite territory.

(1×) A gentelic adjective denoting membership in the Calebite clan, a prominent family group within the tribe of Judah. The Arabic transliteration preserves the adjective form with the Arabic gentelic marker. Nabal's identification as a Calebite establishes his credentials as a landowner in Judah's hill country, where Caleb's descendants received their inheritance. The Qere reading differs slightly from the Ketiv in vocalization but preserves the gentelic meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: a-Calebite | es: calebita | fr: un-Calebite 1Sam 25:3

כָּלָה H3615 V-Qal-Inf / 3mp (205×)

to complete, finish, bring to an end; consume, destroy; fail, be exhausted; fulfill a purpose or decree

Appearing 205 times, this verb captures both the natural completion of tasks and the exhaustive consumption or destruction of people and things. It describes builders finishing Solomon's temple, God's wrath consuming enemies, supplies running out, eyes failing from weeping, and divine decrees being determined as final. The spectrum ranges from neutral completion (finishing work, spending days) to violent consumption (annihilating nations) to emotional exhaustion (strength or hope failing). Several contexts involve passive forms where something is completed or fulfilled by an external agent, emphasizing the thoroughness of the action.

1. complete a task (Piel) (85×) The core transitive Piel sense of bringing a defined task or project to its intended conclusion — building a house, delivering a speech, completing a journey. Arabic, Korean, and Swahili translations consistently distinguish this purposeful completion (akmala, 마쳤다, -maliza) from mere cessation, reflecting the biblical emphasis on finished work from Genesis creation to temple construction. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: He-finished, and-He-finished, and-finished | es: Y-terminó, cuando-acabaron, cuando-acabó | fr: Il-acheva, acheva, et-Il-acheva | de: als-beendete, als-er-beendete, beendet-hatte Gen 6:16; Gen 17:22; Gen 18:33; Gen 24:22; Gen 27:30

2. consume, destroy (Piel) (47×) An intensified Piel usage where completion becomes total annihilation — God threatening to consume Israel in the wilderness (Exod 32), famine consuming a land (Gen 41). The multilingual evidence shows this isn't merely ending but obliterating: Arabic afnā 'to destroy utterly', Korean 멸하다 'to exterminate', Swahili -angamiza 'to annihilate'. The crossover from 'finish' to 'finish off' reflects the verb's capacity for totality. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-consumed, I-have-consumed, am-consuming | es: Y-consumiré, acaba,

acabarlos | fr: achevant, achevant-eux, achever | de: Schwiegertochter, consuming-es, finishing Gen 41:30; Gen 43:2; Exod 32:10; Exod 32:12; Exod 33:3

3. come to an end (Qal) (40×) The intransitive Qal sense where processes or supplies reach their natural endpoint without an agent actively finishing them. Water in the wineskin runs out (Gen 21:15), seven years of plenty end (Gen 41:53), temple construction reaches completion (Exod 39:32). The Korean 끝났다 'it ended' and Arabic intahā 'it concluded' capture the passive, inevitable quality of this sense. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: and-are-spent, and-shall-be-spent, and-they-end | es: Y-se-consumirá, acabará, cuando-acabe | fr: achever, comme-achever, destruction | de: Braut, lass-ihnen-sein-verzehrt, und-vollenden Gen 21:15; Gen 41:53; Exod 39:32; Ruth 2:23; 1Kgs 17:14

4. fail, languish (Qal) (15×) A poignant Qal usage describing the fading or failing of human faculties under strain — eyes dim from weeping (Ps 31:10, Job 17:5), soul faints with longing (Ps 119:81), strength wastes away under God's rebuke (Ps 39:10). Arabic kallat and Korean 쇠하다 both denote enfeeblement rather than simple ending, matching the emotional register of these lament passages. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: Are-spent, am-finished, fail | es: Desfallece, Desfallecen, Se-acaba | fr: achever, comme-achever, comme-à-lui | de: sie-vollendeten, vollendete, wie-ihm Job 11:20; Job 17:5; Job 19:27; Ps 31:10; Ps 39:10

5. spend, expend (Piel) (5×) A Piel sense focused on expending or using up resources rather than destroying enemies — David spending his strength in vain (Isa 49:4), Moses warning Israel about spending days in God's wrath (Ps 90:9), shooting arrows until depleted. The translations reflect resource depletion (Arabic atimmu, Korean 소모하다 'to consume resources') distinct from the annihilative sense 2. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: I-spent, finishing, to-spend | es: acabamos, consumí, para-consumar | fr: achever, comme-achever | de: vollenden, vollendete 1Chr 28:20; Ps 90:9; Isa 49:4; Ezek 20:8; Ezek 20:21

6. be determined, decreed (Qal) (4×) A specialized Qal usage in narrative contexts where a course of action or fate is settled, determined, or decreed as final — Jonathan warning David that Saul's evil is determined (1 Sam 20:7, 9), Esther recognizing Haman's doom is sealed (Esth 7:7). Arabic quḍiyat 'it was judged' and Korean 결정되었다 'it was decided' emphasize judicial finality rather than mere completion. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: is-determined, was-determined | es: decidida, estaba-determinada, se-completó | fr: achever, est-determined | de: ihre-Schwiegertochter, ist-determined 1Sam 20:7; 1Sam 20:9; 1Sam 25:17; Esth 7:7

7. fulfill, accomplish (Qal) (4×) An intransitive Qal sense emphasizing teleological fulfillment — purposes, prophecies, or divine plans reaching their appointed fruition. Used of Solomon's temple being finished in all its details (1 Kgs 6:38), Cyrus' decree fulfilling Jeremiah's seventy-year prophecy (2 Chr 36:22, Ezra 1:1). The multilingual glosses highlight purposeful accomplishment (Arabic itmām, Korean 성취하다) rather than accidental ending. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: its-completion, to-complete, to-fulfill | es: fue-terminada, para-cumplir, para-cumplirse | fr: achever, fut-acheva | de: vollenden, vollendete, war-finished 1Kgs 6:38; 2Chr 8:16; 2Chr 36:22; Ezra 1:1

8. be completed (Pual) (2×) The passive Pual form indicating that a work or creation has been brought to completion by an external agent. Genesis 2:1 declares the heavens and earth 'were finished' by God's creative acts, and Psalm 72:20 marks the conclusion of David's prayers. Korean 완성되었다 'was completed' and Arabic uktumilat 'was made complete' capture the sense of being finished by another's agency. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: And-were-finished, are-ended | es: Han-terminado, Y-fueron-completados | fr: Et-étaient-acheva, comme-achever | de: und-vollendet-wurden, vollendete Gen 2:1; Ps 72:20

9. (1×) An uncertain occurrence in 2 Samuel 13:39 where David's spirit is described with a verb form that might mean 'longed' or 'ceased' — the textual and semantic ambiguity leaves translators divided between longing for Absalom and ceasing to pursue him. The multilingual glosses reveal the interpretive tension, with some choosing emotional longing and others choosing cessation. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: and-she-longed | es: y-cesó | fr: et-elle-longed | de: und-sie-longed 2Sam 13:39

10. (1×) A single difficult occurrence in Isaiah 27:10 where the context of judgment on a fortified city uses a form that may mean 'consume' or 'destroy' in parallel with cattle grazing and stripping branches. The translation evidence shows uncertainty about whether this is consumption or completion in the judgment oracle. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: and-consume | es: y-consumirá | fr: et-destruction | de: und-Vernichtung Isa 27:10

11. (1×) An isolated occurrence in Daniel 11:16 where the invading king acts with destructive power in the 'glorious land' — the form appears to indicate destruction or annihilation as part of the conquest narrative, though the precise nuance in this apocalyptic context remains somewhat uncertain in the translation traditions. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: and-destruction | es: y-destrucción | fr: et-achever | de: und-vollenden Dan 11:16

כָּלֵה H3616 Conj-w / Adj-fp (1×)

failing, longing with desire

This rare adjective describes eyes that fail or grow weak with longing. In Deuteronomy 28:32, it appears in one of the covenant curses, where Moses warns that the people's eyes will look on helplessly and fail with longing as their children are given to other peoples. The word captures both the physical exhaustion of eyes strained with watching and the emotional anguish of unfulfilled desire. It derives from the root kalah, 'to complete, come to an end,' suggesting eyes that are spent or consumed with yearning.

(1×) An adjective describing eyes that fail or waste away with desire, used in the context of covenant curses. The Spanish 'desfallecerán' captures the sense of failing or fainting, while the Hebrew construct with 'eyes looking and failing toward them' creates a vivid picture of parental anguish. The term combines physical exhaustion with emotional longing, depicting eyes that grow weak from constant watching without satisfaction, a powerful image of exile's grief. DESIRE AND COVETING
en: and-failing | es: y-desfallecerán | fr: et-failing | de: und-failing Deut 28:32

כָּלָה H3617 Conj-w / N-fs (21×)

Complete destruction, annihilation; adverbially 'completely'; a determined decree of judgment.

In prophetic literature, kalah names the utter end that God brings upon rebellious peoples – a total, sweeping annihilation with nothing left over. The noun carries a finality that distinguishes it from ordinary defeat: when the prophets say God will 'make a kalah,' they mean a devastation that is both thorough and irreversible (Isa 10:23; Jer 4:27). Occasionally it functions adverbially, intensifying an action to mean 'completely' or 'altogether,' as in God's investigation of Sodom (Gen 18:21). In one passage it shades toward a fixed, irrevocable decree (1 Sam 20:33), where the sense of finality attaches not to destruction itself but to the determination behind it.

1. complete destruction, annihilation (17×) The primary sense denotes complete destruction or annihilation, almost always as an act of divine judgment. The prophets pair it with words for cutting off and decreeing (Isa 10:23, neherasah; Nah 1:8-9) to stress total, irrevocable ruin. Spanish 'destruccion, consumacion' and German 'Braut' (a homograph confusion with the separate lemma for 'bride') highlight how translations must distinguish this stern theological term. Key passages: Isaiah 28:22, Jeremiah 5:10, Nehemiah 9:31. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-complete-destruction, a-full-end, an-end | es: Destrucción, consumación, destrucción | fr: [כלה], comme-à-elle, destruction | de: Braut, Schwiegertochter, [כלה] Neh 9:31; Isa 10:23; Isa 28:22; Jer 4:27; Jer 5:10

2. completely, utterly (adverbial) (3×) Used adverbially to mean 'completely' or 'utterly,' modifying the totality of an action rather than naming destruction itself. In Genesis 18:21 God descends to see whether the outcry against Sodom is 'altogether' as reported, and in Exodus 11:1 the word intensifies the finality of Pharaoh's expulsion of Israel. French renders this adverbial force with 'achever' (to finish), capturing the sense of thoroughness. Key passages: Genesis 18:21, 2 Chronicles 12:12. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY

en: complete, completely | es: completamente | fr: [לכלה], achever, completely | de: [לכלה], completely, ein-Ende Gen 18:21; Exod 11:1; 2Chr 12:12

3. determined decree (1×) A specialized sense pointing to a determined decree or settled divine purpose. In 1 Samuel 20:33, Jonathan perceives that it was 'determined' by his father Saul to kill David – the emphasis falls not on the act of destruction but on the irrevocable decision behind it. Daniel 9:27 uses a related form in the same vein. Multilingual glosses converge on 'determined' (English, French, German), underscoring the volitional, decretal aspect. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: determined | es: completada | fr: determined | de: determined 1Sam 20:33

כַּלָּה H3618 N-fsc / 3ms (34×)

Daughter-in-law or bride; a woman defined by her marriage relationship, either as a son's wife or as a woman on her wedding day.

In Hebrew kinship vocabulary, kallah holds a dual identity. In the patriarchal narratives and legal texts, it designates a daughter-in-law — Tamar to Judah (Gen 38:11, 16, 24), Ruth to Naomi (Ruth 1:22; 4:15). In the prophets and Song of Songs, it becomes the radiant 'bride,' adorning herself with joy (Isa 49:18; 61:10) or addressed tenderly as beloved (Song 4:8-12). Jeremiah pairs it with hatan (bridegroom) to depict the sounds of celebration that will fall silent in judgment (Jer 7:34; 25:10). Spanish perfectly mirrors the split: 'nuera' for daughter-in-law and 'novia' for bride.

1. daughter-in-law (19×) Daughter-in-law — a son's wife in relation to his parents. The primary familial sense appears throughout the Torah and Ruth narrative: Tamar as Judah's kallah (Gen 38:11, 16, 24), the Levitical prohibitions against uncovering a daughter-in-law (Lev 18:15; 20:12), and above all Ruth's devoted relationship with Naomi (Ruth 1:6-8, 22; 2:20, 22; 4:15). Spanish 'nuera,' French 'belle-fille,' and German 'Schwiegertochter' all confirm this kinship sense. Micah 7:6 uses it in the prophecy that a daughter-in-law will rise against her mother-in-law. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-her-daughters-in-law, and-his-daughter-in-law, and-your-daughters-in-law | es: Y-su-nuera, a-su-nuera, nuera | fr: [כלתו], comme-à-elle, et-sa-filles-dans-loi | de: Schwiegertochter, Tochter-in-Gesetz-dein, Tochter-in-Gesetz-sein Gen 11:31; Gen 38:11; Gen 38:16; Gen 38:24; Lev 18:15

2. bride (15×) Bride — a woman at her wedding or in the context of marriage celebration, used both literally and as a powerful theological metaphor. The Song of Songs addresses the beloved as kallah six times (4:8-12; 5:1), and the prophets employ the image of a bride adorning herself to depict Zion's restoration (Isa 49:18; 61:10; 62:5). Jeremiah's recurring phrase 'the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride' (Jer 7:34; 16:9; 25:10; 33:11) makes the wedding pair a symbol of communal joy. Spanish 'novia' and German 'Braut' capture this celebratory register distinctly from the kinship term. BRIDE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW

en: a-bride, and-bride, and-like-bride | es: como-novia, la-novia, novia | fr: comme-destruction, destruction, et-épouse | de: Braut, Schwiegertochter, und-Braut Song 4:8; Song 4:9; Song 4:10; Song 4:11; Song 4:12

כְּלוּב H3619 N-msc (3×)

basket or cage for holding birds or summer fruit

A container woven from reeds or wicker, used either as a bird cage or fruit basket. Jeremiah uses it as a powerful metaphor for Jerusalem's corrupted leadership—like a cage crammed with birds, the city is filled with deceit and ill-gotten gain. Amos employs it more literally for a basket of ripe summer fruit, which becomes a visual pun on Israel's impending end.

(3×) Jeremiah 5:27 deploys the simile of a cage (כְּלוּב) full of birds to describe houses packed with treachery. Amos 8:1-2 features a vision of a basket of summer fruit (קַיִץ), wordplaying with קֵץ (end). Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'cage' dominating in Jeremiah (Spanish jaula, French cage), while 'basket' prevails in Amos contexts. The term's dual capacity—to hold living creatures or harvested produce—enriches both prophetic images. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: A-basket-of-, a-basket-of-, like-cage | es: Como-jaula, Una-canasta-de, una-canasta-de | fr: [ככלוב], cage | de: [ככלוב], [כלוב] Jer 5:27; Amos 8:1; Amos 8:2

כְּלוּב H3620 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

a man in Judah's genealogy and father of one of David's officers

Chelub appears as two individuals in Chronicles. The name may be related to Caleb, and some scholars suggest textual connections between these names in the genealogical records. One Chelub is listed in Judah's genealogy (1 Chronicles 4:11), possibly connected to Caleb ben Hezron. The other is identified as father of Ezri, who oversaw David's field workers (1 Chronicles 27:26). The name's appearance in agricultural and administrative contexts may reflect family occupation or land holdings.

(2×) A personal name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts in Chronicles. The connection to Caleb suggested by some textual traditions points to possible textual variants or family relationships in Judah's tribal records. Both occurrences place Chelub within administrative or genealogical frameworks emphasizing land and lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Keluv, and-Keluv | es: Quelub, Y-Quelub | fr: [וכלוב], [כלוב] | de: [וכלוב], [כלוב] 1Chr 4:11; 1Chr 27:26

כְּלוּבַי H3621 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chelubai (son of Hezron, also called Caleb)

Chelubai appears in the Chronicler's genealogy of Judah as a son of Hezron (1 Chronicles 2:9). The same individual is called Caleb in verse 18 and following verses, suggesting Chelubai is simply a variant form of the more familiar name Caleb. The Septuagint manuscripts show considerable variation in rendering the name, reflecting the textual uncertainty. This is not the famous Caleb who spied out the land, but rather his ancestor, an important figure in Judah's tribal lineage.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Judahite genealogies, representing an alternate form of Caleb. The French and German leave the name untranslated, while Spanish offers 'Quelubay,' attempting to represent the Hebrew pronunciation. The equivalence with Caleb in the same chapter indicates this is a name variant rather than a different person, though the reason for the variation—whether dialectical, scribal, or representing an actual alternate name—remains unclear. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Keluv | es: Quelubay | fr: [כלובי] | de: [כלובי] 1Chr 2:9

כְּלוּהִי H3622 N-proper-ms (2×)

an Israelite who had married a foreign wife during the exile

Cheluhu was among the men confronted by Ezra for marrying foreign wives in violation of covenant law. His name appears in the list of those who agreed to divorce their foreign wives as part of the post-exilic reform (Ezra 10:35). The double occurrence represents the Ketiv/Qere textual tradition, showing variant spellings preserved in the Hebrew text. This episode reflects the crisis of identity and faithfulness facing the returned exiles as they sought to reestablish covenant community.

(2×) One of the Israelite men named in Ezra's reform who had taken a foreign wife. Both textual occurrences (Ketiv and Qere variants) refer to the same individual in the same verse, showing textual transmission variants. His inclusion in this list marked him as someone who participated in the problematic intermarriage that threatened the community's covenant distinctiveness, but also as one who responded to the call for reform. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: Keluhu, [Keluhi] | es: Keluhu, [Kelehi] | fr: [כלהי], [כלוהו] | de: [(כלוהו)], [[כלהי]] Ezra 10:35

כְּלוּלָה H3623 N-fpc / 2fs (1×)

betrothal (the time or state of being betrothed)

This noun denotes the betrothal period, that special time between engagement and marriage. It appears in Jeremiah 2:2, where God reminisces through the prophet about Israel's 'betrothal-time' in the wilderness—a metaphor for the early, devoted relationship between Yahweh and his people after the Exodus. The word is parallel to 'the days of your youth,' emphasizing the freshness and fidelity of that initial covenant relationship. Betrothal in ancient Israel was a legally binding commitment, not merely an engagement as moderns might understand it.

(1×) The period or state of betrothal, used metaphorically for Israel's early relationship with God. The Spanish 'desposorios' captures the formal betrothal sense, while the context in Jeremiah pairs it with 'youth' to evoke the honeymoon period of Israel's covenant faithfulness in the wilderness. The plural form suggests either an abstract or intensive meaning—the fullness of the betrothal time. This tender image contrasts sharply with Israel's later unfaithfulness, making it a poignant prophetic device. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT

en: of-your-betrothal | es: tus-desposorios | fr: [כלולתיך] | de: [כלולתיך] Jer 2:2

כֹּלַח H3624 N-ms (2×)

vigor, physical strength, or prime of life

This term denotes robust physical strength or the vigor of full maturity. Job uses it in both a positive promise (5:26, arriving at the grave in full vigor) and a bitter lament (30:2, those whose vigor has perished). The word suggests not merely strength but the firm, rugged vitality of someone at their peak. The contrast between these two uses highlights Job's movement from receiving conventional wisdom about a blessed life to experiencing the opposite reality.

(2×) Physical vigor or robust strength, particularly associated with mature vitality. In Job 5:26, it describes dying at a good old age with powers unimpaired, the ideal of a blessed life. By Job 30:2, it characterizes what has been lost - the departed strength of those now useless and broken. The term captures peak physical capacity, the strength that comes with full maturity rather than youth alone. OLD AGE

en: in-vigor, vigor | es: en-madurez, vigor | fr: dans-כלח ,בכלח | de: [בכלח], [כלח] Job 5:26; Job 30:2

כַּלַח H3625 N-proper-fs (2×)

ancient Assyrian city built by Nimrod, later called Nimrud

Calah was one of the great cities of Assyria, built according to Genesis 10 during Nimrod's empire-building. Located at the strategic junction of the Upper Zab and Tigris rivers, it corresponds to the Assyrian Kalhu and the modern archaeological site of Nimrud in northern Iraq. The city served as an important Assyrian capital at various periods. Its mention in Genesis 10:11-12 places it among the foundational cities of Mesopotamian civilization, demonstrating the Bible's geographical awareness of the ancient Near East.

(2×) One of the four major cities associated with Assyria's origins in the Table of Nations. The archaeological identification with Nimrud has revealed massive palace complexes and reliefs documenting Assyrian imperial power. Its biblical mention in a foundational genealogy underscores its significance in the ancient world's urban landscape. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Calah | es: Kálaj | fr: Calah | de: Kalach Gen 10:11; Gen 10:12

כל־חֹזֶה H3626 N-proper-ms (2×)

father of Shallun and ancestor in Judah, name meaning 'all of him is seer'

This compound name means 'all [of him is a] seer' or 'every seer,' suggesting prophetic connections or spiritual reputation in the family line. Two individuals bear this name in Nehemiah: the father of Shallun who helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall (3:15) and a figure in Judah's genealogy (11:5). The relationship between these two is uncertain. The name's meaning may indicate a family known for prophetic gifts or spiritual insight, fitting the post-exilic community's emphasis on divine guidance.

(2×) A personal name borne by at least two men in Nehemiah's account of post-exilic Jerusalem. The name's prophetic overtones ('all/every seer') distinguish this family line. Both occurrences connect Col-hozeh to Jerusalem's restoration, either through physical reconstruction (chapter 3) or through genealogical continuity in the repopulated city (chapter 11). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Col-hozeh, Kol-Chozeh | es: Col-Hoze, Col-Hozé | fr: [כלחזה] | de: [כלחזה] Neh 3:15; Neh 11:5

כְּלִי H3627 N-mpc / 3ms (325×)

Vessel, utensil, container; weapon, armor; implement, article, tool; goods, baggage; musical instrument

One of Hebrew's most semantically versatile nouns, covering virtually any crafted object. From sacred tabernacle vessels (Exod 27:19) to weapons of war (Gen 49:5), from David's shepherd's bag (1 Sam 17:40) to temple instruments of praise (1 Chr 15:16), keli derives its breadth from a root sense of something completed or contained. Arabic splits these functions across several words — ina' for vessels, silah for weapons, alat for instruments — revealing distinctions that Hebrew collapses into a single lexeme. Context and construct chains do the disambiguating work.

1. vessel or container (206×) The core and most frequent sense (206x): a receptacle or container — pot, jar, bowl, vat, or sacred vessel. Arabic ina'/aniya maps directly here. Tabernacle inventory lists (Exod 27:19; 38:3, 30) account for a large share, and the potter's vessel of Jer 18:4 became a powerful prophetic metaphor for divine sovereignty over human destiny. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: utensils-of, vessels-of | es: los-utensilios-de, utensilios-de, utensilios-de- | fr: ustensiles-de, vases-de, vessels-de | de: Gefaesse-von, Geraete-von Exod 27:19; Exod 31:7; Exod 35:22; Exod 38:3; Exod 38:30

2. weapon or armor (59×) Weapons and armor (59x): implements of warfare including swords, spears, bows, and defensive gear. Arabic silah and Swahili silaha capture this military register. Simeon and Levi's 'vessels of violence' (Gen 49:5) is the earliest attestation; the phrase kele milhamah ('weapons of war') becomes formulaic in Deuteronomy and the histories (Deut 1:41; Judg 18:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-armor, his-weapons | es: armas-de-él, sus-armas | fr: son-armes, ustensile | de: Geraet, sein-weapons Gen 49:5; Num 35:16; Num 35:18; Deut 1:41; Judg 18:11

3. goods or baggage (22×) Goods, baggage, or personal belongings (22x): portable property carried on journeys or stored in households. Arabic amti'a/mata' and Korean jim/mulgeon reflect the semantic range. Laban's search through Jacob's 'goods' (Gen 31:37) and the stolen loot hidden among Israel's kelim (Josh 7:11) exemplify possessions in narrative tension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-their-goods, and-equipment, and-with-implements-of | es: artículos-de, el-equipaje, en-sus-vasijas | fr: comme-à-moi, et-avec-implements-de, et-equipment | de: Gefaesse, Geraet, Geraete Gen 31:37; Gen 45:20; Exod 22:7; Deut 22:5; Josh 7:11

4. article or thing (21×) A general article or thing (21x): used abstractly for any object without further specification. The construct kele kesef u-khele zahav, 'articles of silver and articles of gold' (Gen 24:53; Exod 3:22; 11:2), recurs in contexts of gift-giving and the Exodus plundering, where the word functions as a near-generic classifier. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-articles-of, and-vessels-of, articles-of | es: como-utensilios-de, el-utensilio, objeto-de | fr: articles-de, articles-de-, chose | de: Gefaesse-von, Gefaesse-von-, Geraete Gen 24:53; Exod 3:22; Exod 11:2

5. musical instrument (14×) Musical instruments (14x): devices for worship music — harps, lyres, cymbals, trumpets. Arabic alat (with musical context), Korean akgi, and Hindi vadya all employ distinct instrument terminology where Hebrew uses keli plus a genitive of type. This sense clusters almost entirely in the Chronicler's temple-music passages (1 Chr 15:16; 16:5, 42; 23:5; 2 Chr 5:13). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-instruments-of, and-with-instruments-of, in-instruments-of- | es: con-instrumento-de, con-instrumentos-de, con-instrumentos-de- | fr: comme-à-moi, dans-instrument, et-in-ustensiles-de | de: Geraete, Geraete-von, in-Geraete 1Chr 15:16; 1Chr 16:5; 1Chr 16:42; 1Chr 23:5; 2Chr 5:13

6. bag or pouch (2×) A bag or pouch (2x): a small flexible container for carrying stones or provisions. Arabic kis and Swahili mfuko specify this narrower sense. Both occurrences appear in the David and Goliath narrative — the shepherd's bag from which David chose five smooth stones (1 Sam 17:40, 49). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-bag-of, the-bag | es: en-bolsa-de, la-bolsa | fr: dans-bag-de, le-bag | de: der-bag, in-bag-von 1Sam 17:40; 1Sam 17:49

7. (1×) Ornamental jewelry or finery (1x at Isa 61:10): a bride adorning herself with her kelim, rendered 'jewels' in English. This metaphorical extension — from crafted object to personal adornment — fits the broader semantic logic of keli as anything fashioned with skill, here applied to the eschatological joy of Zion. WEAPONS AND WARFARE
en: her-jewels | es: con-sus-joyas | fr: ustensile | de: Geraet Isa 61:10

כְּלוּא H3628 Art / N-msc (4×)
prison, place of confinement (Ketiv-Qere variant of כְּלָא)
This word represents a textual variant (Ketiv vs. Qere) for 'prison,' appearing in Jeremiah's accounts of royal imprisonment. The phrase 'house of confinement' designates the royal prison where prophets and enemies of the state were held. Jeremiah himself knew such confinement, as did Judah's last king Jehoiachin, who spent decades in Babylonian imprisonment before his eventual release and honor at the Babylonian king's table.

(4×) The term appears twice in Jeremiah with Ketiv-Qere variation. Jeremiah 37:4 notes that 'Jeremiah had not yet been put into the prison,' using both readings to designate the place of confinement. Jeremiah 52:31 describes how the king of Babylon brought Jehoiachin 'out of the prison' and showed him favor. The multilingual glosses preserve both variants in brackets: Spanish la-prisión with kethiv marking, French and German similarly bracketing both Hebrew forms, showing translators' awareness of the textual variation between the consonantal text and the traditional reading. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT en: (the-prison), [ketiv:the-prison], [prison] | es: (la-prisión), [kethiv], [la-prisión] | fr: [(הכלוא)], [[הכליא]] | de: [(הכלוא)], [[הכליא]] Jer 37:4; Jer 52:31

כְּלְיָה H3629 N-fp (31×)
Kidneys, both as the physical organ (especially in sacrificial ritual) and as the seat of emotions, conscience, and innermost being.
Kilyah appears only in the plural and carries two deeply interconnected senses. In the Pentateuch's sacrificial legislation, the kidneys and their surrounding fat are specified as the portion to be burned on the altar, the choicest internal offering to God (Exod 29:13; Lev 3:4). In the Psalms and Prophets, the same word becomes a profound metaphor for the innermost self, the seat of conscience, desire, and hidden thought that God alone can search and test (Ps 7:9; Jer 11:20). French reins preserves this dual register beautifully, as it does in English with the archaic reins for the inward parts. The transition from physical organ to metaphorical seat of the soul is one of Hebrew poetry's most characteristic moves.

1. kidneys (anatomical organ) (22×) The physical kidneys as an internal organ, especially in the context of animal sacrifice where they are removed with their fat and offered on the altar. Dominant across 22 occurrences, concentrated in Exodus and Leviticus priestly legislation. Spanish riñones and French reins directly name the organ, while German Nieren confirms the anatomical reading. The kidneys appear alongside the fat of the entrails as the consecrated portion in Exodus 29:13, 22 and Leviticus 3:4, 10, 15. KIDNEYS INMOST BEING en: from-their-kidneys, kidneys, of-kidneys | es: de-riñones, de-riñones-sus, los-riñones | fr: le-kidneys, le-reins, rein | de: Nieren, [כליות], [מכליותיהם] Exod 29:13; Exod 29:22; Lev 3:4; Lev 3:10

2. inmost being, conscience (9×) The inmost being, conscience, or deepest seat of emotions, where kidneys serve as a metaphor for the hidden interior life that God examines and instructs. Found in 9 poetic and prophetic passages. God tests the kidneys and heart together as a merism for the whole inner person (Ps 7:9; Jer 11:20; 17:10). The psalmist's kidneys instruct him in the night (Ps 16:7), and God's arrows pierce them as the tenderest core of suffering (Job 16:13; Lam 3:13). French reins and Spanish riñones retain the organ name even in metaphorical contexts, trusting the reader to perceive the figurative extension. KIDNEYS INMOST BEING en: and-minds, and-my-kidneys, into-my-kidneys | es: en-mis-riñones, mis-riñones, y-mis-riñones | fr: comme-rein, dans-mes-reins, et-rein | de: [בכליות], [כליותי], [כליתי] Job 16:13; Job 19:27; Ps 7:9; Ps 16:7; Ps 26:2

כִּלְיוֹן H3630 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)
Chilion, one of Naomi's two sons (Ruth 1:2, 5; 4:9)
The name of one of Elimelech and Naomi's sons, brother to Mahlon. Both brothers married Moabite women (Orpah and Ruth) but died childless in Moab during the famine years. Chilion's early death sets the stage for Ruth's remarkable loyalty to Naomi and eventual marriage to Boaz, placing her in the lineage of David.

(3×) Chilion appears at key narrative junctures in Ruth: introduced in 1:2 as Naomi's son, reported dead in 1:5 after ten years in Moab, and mentioned again in 4:9 when Boaz legally redeems the family inheritance. The name may derive from a root suggesting 'consumption' or 'wasting,' foreshadowing his untimely death. Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish Quilyón, French Kiljon, German Kiljon. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Chilion, to-Chilion | es: a-Quilyón, y-Quilyón | fr: et-Kiljon, à-Kiljon | de: und-Kiljon, zu-Kiljon Ruth 1:2; Ruth 1:5; Ruth 4:9

כִּלָּיוֹן H3631 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)
annihilation, complete destruction, or failing (as of eyesight)
This term denotes comprehensive ending or consuming, whether of sight, strength, or entire populations. It appears in two distinct contexts: the physical failing of eyes worn out by anxiety and longing (Deuteronomy 28:65) and the complete annihilation decreed against nations (Isaiah 10:22). The root suggests consumption or completion, applied both to gradual wasting and sudden destruction. The word captures both the process and finality of ending, whether through exhausting decline or decisive judgment.

(2×) Complete failing or annihilation, applied to both gradual decline and decisive destruction. In Deuteronomy, it describes eyes that fail from anxious longing, one curse among many for covenant violation. In Isaiah, it refers to the determined destruction decreed against nations, emphasizing divine sovereignty in judgment. The word encompasses both the exhaustion that comes from prolonged suffering and the finality of decreed destruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-failing-of, destruction | es: exterminio, y-desfallecimiento-de | fr: [כליון], et-failing-de | de: [כליון], und-failing-von Deut 28:65; Isa 10:22

כְּלִיל H3632 N-msc (15×)
Entire, whole, perfect; as a noun: the whole of something; a whole burnt offering consumed entirely by fire.
Kalil captures a Hebrew concept of totality that moves from quantity to quality to cult. At its most basic, it means 'entirely, wholly' — the ephod's robe is to be 'wholly of blue' (Exod 28:31). In Ezekiel's oracles the same root describes aesthetic perfection: Jerusalem was 'perfect in beauty' through God's splendor (Ezek 16:14). Spanish distinguishes completamente from perfecta, and French entièrement from parfait, revealing what Hebrew leaves ambiguous. In sacrificial texts, kalil becomes a technical term for a whole burnt offering consumed entirely on the altar (Deut 33:10; Ps 51:19).

1. entire, wholly (8×) Quantitative completeness: 'entire, wholly, the whole of,' functioning as an adjective or adverbial accusative indicating totality. The ephod's robe is kalil tekhelet, 'entirely of blue' (Exod 28:31; 39:22), and in Judges 20:40, 'the whole of the city' ascends in smoke. Spanish completamente and German ganz-von converge on the quantitative reading. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY

en: all-of, completely, whole-of | es: completamente, toda, toda-entera | fr: [כליל], entier-de, entièrement | de: [כליל], alle-von, ganz-von Exod 28:31; Exod 39:22; Lev 6:22; Lev 6:23; Num 4:6

2. perfect, complete (4×) Qualitative perfection: 'perfect, flawless, complete in beauty.' Concentrated in Ezekiel and Lamentations — Jerusalem's beauty is 'perfect' through divine splendor (Ezek 16:14), Tyre is kelilat yofi, 'perfection of beauty' (Ezek 27:3; 28:12), and Jerusalem is mourned as once 'perfection of beauty' (Lam 2:15). Spanish perfecta and the distinctive construct form kelilat mark this as qualitative rather than quantitative. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: and-perfect-in-, perfect, perfect-in- | es: la-perfección-de, perfecta, perfecta-de | fr: [וכליל], [כליל], [כלילת] | de: [וכליל], [כליל], [כלילת] Lam 2:15; Ezek 16:14; Ezek 27:3; Ezek 28:12

3. whole burnt offering (3×) A whole burnt offering — a sacrifice entirely consumed by fire with no portion reserved. Levites 'put a whole burnt offering on your altar' (Deut 33:10), Samuel offers a lamb as kalil (1 Sam 7:9), and the psalmist promises God will delight in whole offerings (Ps 51:19). Spanish holocausto and German Brand-Opfer deploy specialized sacrificial vocabulary. TOTALITY AND WHOLENESS

en: and-whole-burnt-offering, and-whole-offering, whole | es: entero, y-holocausto, y-ofrenda-completa | fr: et-tout-entier, et-tout-entier-brûlé-offrande, tout-entier | de: ganz, und-ganz-Brand-Opfergabe, und-ganz-Opfer Deut 33:10; 1Sam 7:9; Ps 51:19

כַּלְכֹּל H3633 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

one of the wise men whom Solomon surpassed in wisdom

Calcol appears in the list of wise men whose wisdom Solomon exceeded (1 Kings 4:31). He is also mentioned in Judah's genealogy among Zerah's sons (1 Chronicles 2:6), alongside other figures associated with wisdom and music. This connection suggests he was renowned for intellectual or artistic achievement. His inclusion in both royal comparison and tribal genealogy indicates his fame was substantial enough to serve as a benchmark for measuring Solomon's unparalleled wisdom.

(2×) A proverbially wise man used to demonstrate the exceptional nature of Solomon's wisdom. The comparison implies Calcol's reputation was well-established and widely recognized. His appearance in both the wisdom comparison and in Judah's genealogical records suggests he was a historical figure whose achievements in wisdom, possibly including music or poetry, made him a natural reference point for measuring intellectual excellence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Calcol, and-Kalkol | es: y-Calcol, y-Kalkol | fr: [וכלכל], et-Calcol | de: [וכלכל], und-Calcol 1Kgs 4:31; 1Chr 2:6

כָּלַל H3634 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

to complete, perfect, or bring to full beauty

This verb describes bringing something to consummate perfection or completion. Ezekiel uses it twice (27:4, 11) in his lament over Tyre, depicted as a magnificent ship. The builders 'perfected' Tyre's beauty, bringing her to the peak of aesthetic and commercial splendor. The term suggests not merely finishing construction but achieving ideal beauty and completeness. This perfection makes Tyre's coming judgment all the more striking - even consummate beauty cannot stand against divine decree.

(2×) To perfect or complete the beauty of something, bringing it to ideal form. Both occurrences describe Tyre's builders perfecting her beauty, using the metaphor of a perfectly crafted ship. The term emphasizes not just completion but achieving consummate excellence, the highest aesthetic and functional ideal. This perfection serves rhetorically to heighten the tragedy of Tyre's fall from such heights. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: perfected | es: perfeccionaron | fr: parfaire | de: [כללו] Ezek 27:4; Ezek 27:11

כְּלַל H3635a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms / 3ms (6×)

To complete or finish (Aramaic); used exclusively of completing construction of the Jerusalem temple and its walls.

An Aramaic verb found only in Ezra 4-6, where it describes the completion of building projects in post-exilic Jerusalem. Every occurrence relates to the reconstruction of the temple or the city walls under Persian-period authorization. The Shaph'el (causative) stem conveys actively bringing a project to completion, while the Ishtaph'el (passive-reflexive) describes walls 'being completed.' Spanish renders it aptly with terminar and completar, capturing the sense of finishing what was begun. The word may be a loanword from Akkadian suklulu ('to bring to perfection'), linking Babylonian administrative vocabulary to the Persian-era rebuilding narrative.

complete, finish (Hifil/Pual: bring to completion) (6×) To complete or finish a construction project, attested exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Ezra regarding the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple and city walls. In the active Shaph'el stem: 'they finished it' (Ezra 5:11; 6:14) and 'they completed the walls' (Ezra 4:12); in the Ishtaph'el passive: 'the walls will be completed' (Ezra 4:13, 16). The infinitive form appears in official correspondence asking about authorization 'to finish' the temple (Ezra 5:3, 9). Possibly borrowed from Akkadian suklulu, connecting Persian-era administrative language to the theological drama of temple restoration. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: [ketiv], and-finished, and-finished-it | es: (terminaron), [terminaron], para-completar? | fr: [אשכללו], [ושכללה], [ושכללו] | de: [(שכלילו)], [[אשכללו]], [ושכללה] Ezra 4:12; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:9; Ezra 5:11

כְּלַל H3635b V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (2×)

to be completed or finished (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb appears in Ezra in the Hitpael stem, referring to the completion of city walls. The passive or reflexive sense indicates walls reaching their completed state or being fully finished. The context involves Persian officials warning about the dangerous implications of Jerusalem's walls being completed, fearing rebellion once the city is fortified. The term emphasizes the finishing of construction to full defensive capability, not merely partial progress.

(2×) An Aramaic verb describing the completion of Jerusalem's walls, used in Persian correspondence warning of political consequences. Both instances (Ezra 4:13, 16) appear in letters from officials to the king, expressing concern that completed walls will enable rebellion and loss of revenue. The Hitpael form emphasizes the walls reaching their finished, functional state, transforming Jerusalem from vulnerable ruin to defensible city. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: completed | es: son-completados | fr: [ישתכללון] | de: [ישתכללון] Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:16

כְּלָל H3636 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Kelal (an Israelite who married a foreign wife)

Kelal was one of the Israelites listed in Ezra 10:30 who had married foreign women during the exile period and were required to send them away as part of Ezra's reforms. He is mentioned without any additional identifying information beyond his name. The name appears in a long list of those who had compromised the community's covenant identity through intermarriage. The Septuagint renderings show typical variation in how Greek scribes transliterated Hebrew names.

(1×) A personal name of an individual involved in the post-exilic intermarriage crisis documented in Ezra. The multilingual evidence shows the name transliterated with minor variations reflecting different phonetic traditions. No biographical details beyond his participation in foreign marriage are recorded, making him one of many names preserved solely because of involvement in this significant moment of covenant renewal and community boundary-definition in the Persian period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Kelal | es: y-Kelal | fr: [וכלל] | de: [וכלל] Ezra 10:30

כָּלַם H3637 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (38×)

To be ashamed, be disgraced (Nifal); to humiliate, put to shame (Hifil); to be caused shame (Hofal)

A verb whose three stems map a full circuit of shame: the Nifal expresses being ashamed, the Hifil the causative act of humiliating another, and the rare Hofal the passive experience of having disgrace inflicted. When Moses asks about Miriam, 'Would she not be ashamed seven days?' (Num 12:14), the Nifal captures disgrace felt inwardly. Boaz orders his men not to 'humiliate' Ruth (Ruth 2:15) – the Hifil targets dignity. Arabic cognate 'kalama' (to wound) hints at the physical origin behind the psychological sense.

1. be ashamed, be disgraced (Nifal) (25×) The Nifal stem: experiencing shame or public disgrace as an internal state. Numbers 12:14 sets the paradigm – shame that lasts and isolates. In Isaiah 45:16-17 idolaters 'are ashamed' while Israel 'shall not be ashamed,' framing shame as salvation's antithesis. Ezra 9:6 turns shame inward as penitence. Spanish 'avergonzarse' reflects the passive-reflexive Nifal. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: I-was-humiliated, and-be-disgraced, and-be-humiliated | es: avergonzarte, fueron-humillados, fui-humillado | fr: [נכלמו], avoir-honte, elle-être-ashamed | de: [והכלמו], [ויכלמו], [ונכלמת] Num 12:14; 2Sam 10:5; 2Sam 19:3; 1Chr 19:5; 2Chr 30:15

2. put to shame, humiliate (Hifil) (10×) The Hifil stem: actively causing shame to another person. Judges 18:7 describes a city with no one to 'put them to shame'; Ruth 2:15 instructs reapers not to 'humiliate' the gleaner; 1 Samuel 20:34 records Jonathan's anger because Saul had 'disgraced' David. Spanish 'avergonzar' (transitive) and French 'humilier' mark the causative agent. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: and-humiliated-us, feeling-shame, had-humiliated-him | es: avergonzará, cuando-avergüence, la-avergüencen | fr: avait-humilia-lui, avoir-honte, avoir-honte-moi | de: [יכלים], [מכלם], [תכלימוה] Judg 18:7; Ruth 2:15; 1Sam 20:34; 1Sam 25:7; Job 11:3

3. be humiliated by another (Hofal) (3×) The Hofal stem (passive of Hifil): being caused shame by an external agent. Only three occurrences distinguish this from the Nifal by emphasizing that disgrace was inflicted. In 1 Samuel 25:15, servants report they 'were not shamed' by David's men; Jeremiah 14:3 depicts nobles 'put to shame' by drought. The construction stresses the agent behind the humiliation. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: and-humiliated, we-were-shamed | es: fuimos-avergonzados, y-se-humillaron, y-serás-humillada | fr: et-avoir-honte, nous-furent-shamed | de: und-beschaemen, wir-waren-shamed 1Sam 25:15; Jer 14:3; Jer 22:22

כִּלְמַד H3638 N-proper-fs (1×)

Chilmad (possibly a place in Mesopotamia)

Chilmad appears in Ezekiel 27:23 in the oracle against Tyre, listed among trading partners that included Haran and Eden. The identification is uncertain; some scholars connect it with Kalwadha near Baghdad, while others suggest the text may be corrupt. The Targum reads 'and Media,' leading some to emend to 'all Media.' Another proposal reads it as 'as your apprentice,' from a root meaning 'to learn,' though this seems less likely. The geographical context suggests a Mesopotamian location involved in international trade.

(1×) A place name of disputed identification in Ezekiel's trading network oracle. The multilingual evidence shows translators uncertain how to handle it—French attempts 'comme pour mesurer' (suggesting the 'apprentice' interpretation), while German leaves it untranslated. The pairing with Asshur (Assyria) and the overall context of Mesopotamian trade centers supports a geographical reading, though the exact location remains elusive. The textual difficulties reflect the challenges of preserving ancient commercial geography. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chilmad | es: Quilmad | fr: comme-pour-mesurer | de: [כלמד] Ezek 27:23

כְּלִמָּה H3639 N-fsc (30×)

Shame, ignominy, disgrace; insult or reproach experienced as humiliation before God or others

A weighty noun in the vocabulary of dishonor, often paired with its near-synonym boshet (shame). It describes the burning experience of being put to public shame – whether as divine judgment on the wicked, who 'go into ignominy' (Isa 45:16), or as the anguished cry of the righteous who feel their disgrace like a garment covering them (Jer 3:25, Ps 109:29). Job protests that his friends' correction is an 'insulting reproach' (Job 20:3), revealing the word's capacity to denote active affront, not just passive condition. In its rare plural form (Isa 50:6), it points to concrete, repeated acts of humiliation – the Servant who did not hide his face from 'insults and spitting.' French 'confusion' and German 'Schande' each reflect different registers of this shame vocabulary.

1. shame, ignominy (21×) The subjective state or condition of shame and ignominy, often as a consequence of sin, defeat, or divine judgment. The psalmist prays that his enemies be 'clothed with shame' (Ps 109:29), and Isaiah warns that idol-makers 'shall go into ignominy' together (Isa 45:16). Frequently paired with boshet in prophetic denunciations (Isa 30:3, 61:7), this sense emphasizes the inner experience of being shamed. Spanish 'verguenza' and French 'confusion' both center on this felt condition. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: and-shame, in-humiliation, my-disgrace | es: de-vergüenza, en-vergüenza, mi-vergüenza | fr: comme-honte, confusion, dans-la-confusion | de: Schande, [בכלמה], [וכלמה] Job 20:3; Ps 4:2; Ps 69:7; Ps 109:29; Prov 18:13

2. disgrace, reproach (8×) Public disgrace, dishonor, or reproach experienced as a social consequence – the external dimension of humiliation inflicted by others or recognized by the community. The psalmist laments 'my dishonor is continually before me' (Ps 44:15), and Jeremiah depicts Israel's shame as something that 'covers us' (Jer 3:25). In Ps 69:19, the sufferer appeals to God who knows his 'reproach, shame, and dishonor.' German 'Schande' captures this public, external quality. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: and-disgrace, and-dishonor, and-humiliation | es: afrentas, mi-afrenta, nuestra-afrenta | fr: comme-honte, confusion, et-confusion | de: [וכלמה], [כלמות], [כלמתנו] Ps 35:26; Ps 44:15; Ps 69:19; Ps 71:13; Isa 30:3

3. insults, acts of humiliation (1×) Concrete acts or instances of insult and humiliation, used in the plural to denote repeated affronts. In Isa 50:6, the Suffering Servant testifies 'I did not hide my face from insults and spitting,' where the plural kelimmot points to specific, repeated acts of degradation rather than a general state. This anticipatory prophecy of the Servant's suffering gives the word its most visceral, enacted force. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: from-insults | es: de-humillaciones | fr: confusion | de: [מכלמות] Isa 50:6

כְּלִמּוּת H3640 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

disgrace, ignominy

This noun denotes lasting shame or disgrace. Jeremiah 23:40 uses it in parallel with 'perpetual reproach' to describe the enduring humiliation God promises to bring upon the false prophets and inhabitants of Jerusalem. The word emphasizes not just momentary embarrassment but deep, lasting dishonor. It appears in the context of divine judgment, where shame becomes both punishment and public testimony to covenant violation. The parallel structure with 'reproach' (cherpah) reinforces the comprehensive nature of the disgrace.

(1×) A term for enduring shame or ignominy in the context of prophetic judgment. The Spanish 'vergüenza' (shame) captures the essential meaning, while the construct form 'shame of' is followed by 'eternity,' creating the phrase 'everlasting disgrace.' The parallel with perpetual reproach in Jeremiah intensifies the severity of judgment—this is not temporary embarrassment but permanent dishonor. The multilingual consistency in expressing shame/disgrace confirms the core semantic value of lasting humiliation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-shame-of | es: y-verguenza-de | fr: [וכלמות] | de: [וכלמות] Jer 23:40

כַּלְנֵה H3641a Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Calneh (a city in Babylonia)

Calneh was one of the cities in Nimrod's kingdom in the land of Shinar, according to Genesis 10:10. It is listed alongside Babel, Erech, and Accad as part of the early empire building in Mesopotamia. Scholars have proposed identifying it with various Babylonian sites, including the city of Kullunu conquered by Sargon, though the identification remains uncertain. The name reflects the ancient geographical and political landscape of lower Mesopotamia in the Table of Nations, mapping the spread of post-flood civilization.

(1×) A city name in the Table of Nations, representing one of the urban centers of early Babylonian civilization. The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration (Spanish 'Kalné,' French 'Calneh'), preserving the proper name across language boundaries. Its association with Nimrod, history's first empire builder according to Genesis, places it in the foundational narrative of human civilization and kingdom formation. The difficulty of precise identification reflects the chronological distance and textual challenges in correlating ancient sources. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Calneh | es: y-Kalné | fr: et-Calneh | de: und-Kalne Gen 10:10

כַּלְנֵה H3641b N-proper-fs (2×)

ancient city conquered by Assyria, possibly Calneh or the same as Kullani

This city appears in two prophetic contexts concerning Assyrian conquests. Isaiah 10:9 lists it among cities that fell to Assyrian expansion, while Amos 6:2 includes it in a rhetorical question challenging Israel's complacency. The identification is uncertain, with proposals including Calneh (Ezekiel 27:23), Kullani near Aleppo (conquered by Tiglath-Pileser III in 738 BC), or Kunulua southeast of Antioch. The textual variations and geographical uncertainty reflect the distance and complexity of tracking ancient Near Eastern toponymy.

(2×) A significant city that fell to Assyrian military expansion, used in prophetic rhetoric to demonstrate either imperial power (Isaiah) or Israel's false security (Amos). The city's conquest served as evidence that no city, however strong, could stand against Assyria's advance - a warning to those trusting in military might rather than YHWH. The exact location remains debated among several northern Mesopotamian sites. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Calno, Kalneh | es: a-Calne, es-Kalno | fr: Kalnéh, [כלנו] | de: [כלנה], [כלנו] Isa 10:9; Amos 6:2

כָּמַהּ H3642 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

to long for, yearn for, faint with desire

This verb expresses intense physical and emotional longing. In Psalm 63:1, David writes that his flesh longs or faints for God, parallel to his soul thirsting for God. The word conveys the body's visceral response to spiritual desire—not merely mental wanting but a whole-person yearning that affects physical vitality. The Arabic cognate suggests paleness or weakness, while the Syriac relates to blindness, all pointing to a draining or exhausting quality. It is the body's participation in the soul's thirst for the divine presence.

(1×) A verb expressing physical longing or fainting, used of David's bodily yearning for God in a spiritual context. The Spanish 'anhela' (longs for, yearns for) captures the intensity well, while the parallel with 'thirsts' in the psalm creates a powerful image of comprehensive desire—body and soul. The rare occurrence suggests a specialized term for particularly intense longing that affects one physically. Unlike mere mental desire, this word indicates a consuming yearning that depletes bodily vitality. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: longs | es: anhela | fr: comme-quoi | de: longs Ps 63:1

כִּמְהָם H3643 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Kimham, an attendant of David associated with Barzillai; also a place name near Bethlehem

Kimham was a man closely associated with Barzillai the Gileadite, likely his son, whom David took into his retinue as a reward for Barzillai's loyalty during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 19:37-40). The name also appears in Jeremiah 41:17 as part of the compound place name Geruth Kimham, a lodging place near Bethlehem where Johanan's refugees stopped on their way to Egypt. The transition from personal name to toponym suggests Kimham received a land grant near Bethlehem, a detail consistent with David's promise to Barzillai.

(5×) A proper masculine name identifying an attendant of David connected with Barzillai the Gileadite, and by extension a place near Bethlehem bearing his name. English and Spanish both render 'Kimham' (Spanish also 'Quimam'). In 2 Samuel 19:37-40, he accompanies David across the Jordan; in Jeremiah 41:17, the toponym Geruth Kimham preserves his legacy as a landholder near Bethlehem. The Ketiv/Qere variation (כמוהם/כמהם) in Jeremiah suggests early scribal uncertainty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kimham, and-Kimham | es: Kimham, Quimam, y-Kimham | fr: Kimham, [(כמהם)], [[כמוהם]] | de: Kimham, [(כמהם)], [[כמוהם]] 2Sam 19:37; 2Sam 19:38; 2Sam 19:40; Jer 41:17

כְּמוֹ H3644 Prep (142×)

Like, as; a poetic and emphatic comparative preposition synonymous with the simpler ke-, used chiefly in verse.

Kemo is the fuller, more emphatic sibling of the common Hebrew preposition ke- ('like, as'). Built from ke- plus the interrogative mo ('what?'), it literally means something like 'the likeness of what (is) ...' and appears almost exclusively in poetry — 56 of its 142 occurrences stand as an independent word in poetic lines, while the remainder serve as a poetic equivalent of ke- before pronominal suffixes. Spanish como, French comme, and German wie all translate it identically to plain ke-, which is precisely the point: the semantic content is the same, but the register is elevated. The cognates are illuminating — Aramaic kema, Arabic kama, and Ethiopic kama all preserve this compound comparative, confirming its deep Semitic pedigree.

1. like, as (comparison) (139×) The dominant comparative sense: 'like, as,' drawing a simile or analogy between two things. Found 139 times with pronominal suffixes and in poetic lines, this is the standard function of kemo throughout its range. In Exodus 15:5 the Egyptians sink 'like a stone' (kemoh 'aven); in Job 6:15 Job's brothers are faithless 'like a wadi' that dries up. The multilingual evidence — Spanish como, French comme, German wie — treats this identically to simple ke-, confirming that kemo adds poetic register rather than new meaning. Arabic kama and Ethiopic kama preserve the same compound formation across the Semitic family. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: as-, like, like- | es: como, como-, cosas-como | fr: comme, comme- | de: wie, wie- Gen 41:39; Exod 15:5; Exod 15:8; Neh 9:11; Job 6:15

2. and as, and like (conjoined comparison) (2×) Conjoined comparison with the conjunction waw prefixed: 'and as, and like.' Only 2 occurrences (Gen 19:15 and Isa 41:25), both linking a comparison clause to what precedes. In Genesis 19:15 the phrase marks the moment 'when the dawn arose'; in Isaiah 41:25 the conqueror comes upon rulers 'and as a potter treads clay.' Spanish y-como and German und-wie both render the conjunction-plus-comparison transparently. This is syntactically distinct — the waw prefix before a preposition is unusual and signals a deliberate poetic coordination. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: and-as, treading | es: Y-cuando, y-como | fr: et-comme | de: und-als, und-wie Gen 19:15; Isa 41:25

3. thus, in this manner (1×) An adverbial use meaning 'thus, in this manner,' without a direct object of comparison. Attested once in Psalm 73:15, where the psalmist says 'if I had spoken thus (kemo), I would have betrayed the generation of your children.' Here kemo points backward to the preceding thought rather than forward to a compared object. French comme retains some of this deictic flexibility, but Spanish asi and the idiomatic English 'thus' show that translators recognize this as a manner adverb, not a simile marker. MANNER ADVERBS

en: thus | es: así | fr: comme | de: wie Ps 73:15

כְּמוֹשׁ H3645 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (9×)

Chemosh, the national deity of Moab, associated with idolatrous worship and divine judgment against pagan gods.

Chemosh was the chief god of the Moabites, whose people are called 'the people of Chemosh' in the ancient ode of Numbers 21:29. Solomon notoriously built a high place for Chemosh on the hill east of Jerusalem (1 Kgs 11:7), which Josiah later defiled during his reforms (2 Kgs 23:13). The name appears in the Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription) as the deity to whom Moab's king attributed military victories, paralleling how Israel credited Yahweh. Jeremiah 48:13 prophesies that Moab will be ashamed of Chemosh just as Israel was ashamed of Bethel's golden calf.

Chemosh (9×) The proper name of the chief deity worshipped by the Moabites, appearing in contexts of idolatrous cult sites and prophetic judgment. Spanish renders it 'Quemos/Kemosh' while English and French retain 'Chemosh,' reflecting the LXX Chamos. Numbers 21:29 identifies Moab as 'the people of Chemosh,' and Judges 11:24 may extend his worship to the Ammonites, though this is likely a textual confusion. All nine occurrences tie Chemosh to the theological theme of Yahweh's supremacy over foreign gods. GODS AND DEITIES

en: (Kemosh), Chemosh, Kemosh | es: Kemosh, Quemos, Quemós | fr: Chemosh, [(כמוש)], [[כמיש]] | de: Chemosh, [(כמוש)], [[כמיש]] Num 21:29; Judg 11:24; 1Kgs 11:7; 1Kgs 11:33; 2Kgs 23:13

כַּמֹּן H3646 Conj-w / N-ms (3×) cumin, an aromatic seed used as a spice and condiment

An herb cultivated in ancient Israel for its pungent seeds, used as a culinary seasoning. Isaiah 28 describes agricultural practices involving cumin—how it's planted, threshed with care (unlike grain, it's beaten with a rod rather than crushed with a heavy sledge), illustrating God's wisdom in adapting methods to each plant's nature. The passage uses farming imagery to reassure Judah of God's measured discipline.

(3×) All three occurrences cluster in Isaiah 28:25, 27 (×2), where the prophet contrasts cumin with wheat and barley to demonstrate proportionate wisdom in both agriculture and divine judgment. The delicate seeds require gentle threshing—a rod or staff, not a cart wheel. Multilingual glosses (Spanish comino, French kept Hebrew transliterations) reflect continuity from the ancient spice trade; cumin remains widely known across Mediterranean and Middle Eastern cuisines. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-cumin, black-cumin, is-turned | es: el-comino, y-comino, y-el-comino | fr: [וכמן], [כמן] | de: [וכמן], [כמן] Isa 28:25; Isa 28:27

כָּמַס H3647 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

to store up, lay up in store

This verb appears once in Deuteronomy 32:34 in the Song of Moses, where God rhetorically asks if vengeance is not stored up with him, sealed up in his treasuries. The word suggests laying something aside, keeping it in reserve for future use. However, textual scholars note the reading is uncertain, with some proposing an emendation to a different root with similar meaning. The context is divine judgment—God assures Israel that he is keeping accounts, storing up retribution for the proper time.

(1×) A passive participle meaning 'stored up' or 'laid away in store,' used of God's reserved vengeance. The Spanish 'está guardado' (is kept, is guarded) reflects the sense of something carefully preserved. The parallel phrase 'sealed up in my treasuries' reinforces the image of deliberate, secure storage awaiting future deployment. Though the Hebrew text is disputed, the meaning of reserved judgment remains clear—God maintains records and will act in his time, a sobering reminder of divine justice. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: stored-up | es: está-guardado | fr: stored-en-haut | de: stored-hinauf Deut 32:34

כָּמַר H3648 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (4×)

to grow warm and tender (of compassion); to become hot (of skin in famine)

This verb describes the warming or stirring of deep emotion, particularly parental compassion, and also the heating of skin during famine. When used of compassion (rahamim), it captures the visceral, physiological response of tender feeling—the way a parent's heart 'grows warm' toward a child, or how God's compassion 'kindles' toward his people. In one striking physical usage, it describes skin burning hot like an oven during famine's fever. The Aramaic cognate means to warm one's flesh or food.

(4×) The Niphal verb appears describing emotional stirring and physical heating. Joseph's compassion 'grew warm and tender toward his brother' when he saw Benjamin, forcing him to withdraw and weep (Gen 43:30, J). The true mother's compassion 'was stirred for her son' when Solomon threatened to divide the baby (1Kgs 3:26). Hosea depicts God's declaration: 'My compassions are kindled together' as he determines not to destroy Ephraim (Hos 11:8, parallel to 'my heart turns over within me'). In contrast, Lamentations describes famine's physical toll: 'Our skin burns hot like an oven' because of fever accompanying starvation (Lam 5:10). French furent stirred/est affligea and Spanish se conmovieron/arde track the emotional stirring and burning across Romance branches. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: are-kindled, burns-hot, were-stirred | es: arde, se-conmovieron, se-encendieron | fr: [נכמרו], furent-stirred, noircir | de: [נכמרו], es-wallte-auf, waren-stirred Gen 43:30; 1Kgs 3:26; Lam 5:10; Hos 11:8

כֹּמֶר H3649 Art / N-mp (3×)

idolatrous priest, a priest serving false gods rather than YHWH

A term specifically designating priests of pagan cults, never used of legitimate Levitical priests. King Josiah's reform (2 Kings 23:5) targeted these idolatrous clergy whom earlier kings had appointed to burn incense at the high places. The word appears in parallel with regular 'priests' (כֹּהֲנִים) in Zephaniah 1:4, distinguishing the illegitimate from those who, though serving at the Jerusalem temple, had also compromised with Baal worship.

(3×) The three biblical occurrences mark moments of religious crisis and reform. In 2 Kings 23:5, Josiah purges the כְּמָרִים appointed by Judah's kings for astral and Baal worship. Hosea 10:5 mourns that even the idolatrous priests of the calf-idol will wail over its exile. Zephaniah 1:4 prophesies their complete removal alongside Baal's remnant. Languages consistently mark the term's negative sense: Spanish 'sacerdotes idólatras,' German 'Götzenpriester.' PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD

en: and-its-idolatrous-priests, the-idolatrous-priests | es: los-sacerdotes-idólatras, y-sus-sacerdotes | fr: et-prêtre, le-idolatrous-sacrificateurs, prêtre | de: Goetzenpriester, der-idolatrous-Priester, und-Goetzenpriester 2Kgs 23:5; Hos 10:5; Zeph 1:4

כְּמָרִיר H3650 N-mpc (1×)

deep gloom, darkness

This rare plural form denotes intense darkness or deep gloom. It appears in Job 3:5, where Job curses the day of his birth and calls for darkness, shadow of death, clouds, and 'the blackness of day' to terrify it. The plural may be intensive, suggesting not ordinary darkness but the deepest possible gloom. Some scholars suggest reading it with slightly different vowels, but the meaning remains essentially the same—this is darkness at its most oppressive. The word appears in Job's most despairing speech, where he wishes the day of his birth could be erased from existence.

(1×) An intensive plural denoting the deepest darkness or gloom that could overwhelm a day. The Spanish 'amarguras' (bitterness) represents a different interpretation, possibly connecting to a root for bitterness rather than darkness, while French and German leave it untranslated, acknowledging textual difficulty. The context in Job 3 calls for every form of darkness and terror to claim the day of his birth—this term represents the culminating, most comprehensive darkness imaginable, beyond ordinary night, involving cosmic dread. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-the-bitterness-of | es: como-amarguras-de | fr: כמרירי | de: [כמרירי] Job 3:5

H3651 Prep (1×)

therefore, for this reason

This is a prepositional form functioning as a discourse marker meaning 'therefore' or 'for this reason.' In 2 Samuel 18:20, it appears in a unique context where messengers discuss bringing news to David. The word functions to connect reasoning—indicating logical consequence or causation. It is one of Hebrew's common tools for marking logical flow in narrative and discourse, though this particular occurrence in Samuel is textually interesting and has generated discussion about the precise sense in context.

(1×) A prepositional form serving as a logical discourse connector, indicating reason or consequence. The multilingual evidence consistently renders it as a causal conjunction—Spanish 'por tanto' (therefore), Arabic 'li-dhālika' (for that reason). While the lemma itself is marked monosemous with only one occurrence in this specific form, the root is common throughout Hebrew as a marker of logical connection, functioning to signal that what follows is a result or conclusion based on prior information. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: (because) | es: (por-tanto) | fr: (because) 2Sam 18:20

כֵּן H3651a Adj-ms (22×)

Right, correct, fitting; as an adverb, so or thus; of persons, honest and upright in character.

Ken is a small word with a wide reach. In Exodus 10:29 Moses tells Pharaoh 'you have spoken rightly,' and Numbers 27:7 and 36:5 use it to ratify legal claims as correct. The Syriac cognate ke'n ('rightly') confirms this core of verified correctness. In wisdom literature it shifts toward manner and degree: Psalm 65:9 and Proverbs passages use it adverbially as 'so, thus.' Its most memorable cluster comes in Genesis 42, where Joseph's brothers insist five times that they are 'honest men' (kennim), a moral claim tested across the entire Joseph cycle.

1. right, correct (11×) Right, correct, proper, or fitting, used of speech, actions, or states of affairs that are accurate or appropriate. Moses affirms Pharaoh's statement as 'right' in Exodus 10:29, and God validates the daughters of Zelophehad in Numbers 27:7. Judges 12:6 uses it of correct pronunciation. The Syriac cognate ke'n supports this core meaning of verified correctness. MANNER ADVERBS

en: right, rightly, so | es: Bien, Correcto, así | fr: ainsi, droit, droite | de: rechte, rechts, rightly Exod 10:29; Num 27:7; Num 36:5; Josh 2:4; Judg 12:6

2. so, thus (6×) A demonstrative adverb indicating manner or degree: 'so, thus, in this way.' Found primarily in wisdom and poetic texts such as Psalm 65:9, Proverbs 11:19, 15:7, and 28:2, and Ecclesiastes 8:10. Here the word functions as a comparative or consequential particle rather than an adjective, pointing to how things stand or follow. Spanish 'asi' and German 'so' reflect this adverbial function. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, so-, thus | es: así | fr: ainsi | de: darum, so Ps 65:9; Prov 11:19; Prov 15:7; Prov 28:2; Eccl 8:10

3. honest, upright (5×) Honest, upright, trustworthy in character, applied exclusively to persons. This sense appears concentrated in the Joseph narrative of Genesis 42:11, 19, 31, 33, 34, where the brothers insist they are 'kennim' – honest men, not spies. The moral weight here goes beyond mere factual correctness to personal integrity. French 'honnete' and German 'aufrichtig' both preserve the ethical connotation. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS

en: honest | es: honrados | fr: honest | de: aufrichtig, aufrichtige Gen 42:11; Gen 42:19; Gen 42:31; Gen 42:33; Gen 42:34

כִּי עַל כֵּן H3651b Adv (9×)

Therefore, for this reason — a pleonastic causal phrase emphasizing the ground or basis for an action.

The compound phrase ki 'al ken literally means 'for on-account-of-thus,' a rhetorically emphatic way of saying 'because' or 'for this very reason.' It appears in narrative contexts where a speaker underscores the rationale behind an action, as when Abraham tells his heavenly visitors to accept hospitality 'for this is why you have passed by your servant' (Gen 18:5). The phrase has a slightly archaic, formal quality, appearing in patriarchal narratives (Genesis 18, 19, 33, 38), wilderness accounts (Numbers 10, 14), and prophetic speech (Jeremiah 29, 38).

therefore, for this reason, on this account (9×) A pleonastic causal conjunction meaning 'therefore, for this reason, on this account,' used to emphatically link a stated action to its underlying ground. Spanish 'así' and English 'so/thus' capture only part of the force; the Hebrew doubles the causal marker for rhetorical weight. In Genesis 18:5, Abraham urges hospitality because (ki 'al ken) this is the very purpose of the visitors' arrival. In Numbers 14:43, Moses warns of defeat because the people have turned away from Yahweh. The phrase appears nine times across Pentateuch, Judges, Samuel, and Jeremiah. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, thus | es: así, esto, tanto | fr: ainsi | de: -, seid-ihr, sind-sie Gen 18:5; Gen 19:8; Gen 33:10; Gen 38:26; Num 10:31

כֵּן H3651c Conj-w / Adv (734×)

So, thus; therefore; this, that (anaphoric); then; indeed; to such a degree — adverb of manner, cause, and reference

Derived from the demonstrative root ka- (the same root behind ki, 'because/that'), this adverb (ken) is one of Hebrew's most versatile connective words. In nearly 500 of its 734 occurrences it means simply 'so, thus,' describing manner—'God said... and it was so' (Gen 1:7). But in over 200 instances it functions as a logical connective meaning 'therefore,' introducing the consequence of what precedes. Less frequent uses include anaphoric reference ('this thing'), temporal 'then,' emphatic 'indeed,' and degree 'so much.' Its chameleon quality makes it a key word for tracing the logical architecture of Hebrew narrative and law.

1. so, thus (manner) (495×) The primary adverb of manner: 'so, thus, in this way, likewise.' Describing conformity between command and execution, it pervades the Creation account—'and it was so' (Gen 1:7, 9, 11, 15, 24). Spanish así, French ainsi, German so all map cleanly. This sense answers the question 'how?' by pointing to a preceding description or standard. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, so- | es: así | fr: ainsi, ainsi- | de: es-so, so Gen 1:7; Gen 1:9; Gen 1:11; Gen 1:15; Gen 1:24

2. therefore (causal inference) (206×) Causal-inferential conjunction 'therefore, for this reason, on account of this,' typically in the compound laken (לָכֵן). Drawing logical conclusions from prior premises, it is the backbone of prophetic judgment oracles: 'therefore thus says the LORD' (Num 20:12; Isa 5:13). Spanish por tanto, French c'est pourquoi, German darum all signal inferential force. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: therefore | es: Por-tanto, por-tanto | fr: c'est-pourquoi | de: darum Gen 4:15; Exod 6:6; Num 16:11; Num 20:12; Num 25:12

3. so, thus (general discourse) (18×) A transitional discourse particle blending manner and causal nuance, advancing narrative or argument without strictly meaning either 'in this way' or 'therefore.' Found in etiological formulas like 'therefore it is called...' (Gen 10:9; 11:9; 16:14). Multilingual renderings split between manner (así, ainsi) and causal (entonces, dann), reflecting its bridging function.

MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, thus | es: así, eso, tanto | fr: ainsi | de: -, dann, deshalb Gen 10:9; Gen 11:9; Gen 15:14; Gen 16:14; Gen 19:22

4. this, that (anaphoric reference) (12×) Anaphoric demonstrative use pointing back to a previously mentioned situation: 'this thing, that matter, such.' In Josh 7:26 and 8:34 ken refers to 'all that was written,' and in Ps 42:6 the psalmist recalls 'this' about his soul. Spanish eso/esto, French ce, and German dies confirm the demonstrative rather than manner reading. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so, this | es: así, eso, esto | fr: ainsi, ce | de: dies, so Josh 7:26; Josh 8:34; Josh 10:26; Ps 42:6; Ps 45:2

5. then, at that time (1×) Temporal adverb meaning 'then, at that time,' attested once in Neh 2:16 where Nehemiah reports 'the officials did not yet know where I had gone or what I had been doing; until then (ad ken) I had told nothing.' Spanish entonces and German dann signal temporal rather than manner or causal force. MANNER ADVERBS

en: thus | es: entonces | fr: ainsi | de: so Neh 2:16

6. indeed, yes (affirmative) (1×) Affirmative particle meaning 'indeed, yes, truly,' used to confirm or assent. In Ezra 10:12 the assembly responds 'ken!—so it is, as you have said!' Cross-linguistically rendered with affirmative markers (Spanish así [confirming], German so [assenting]), this sense functions pragmatically as agreement rather than description. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so | es: así | fr: ainsi | de: so Ezra 10:12

7. so much, to such degree (1×) Degree adverb meaning 'so much, to such a degree, enough,' quantifying rather than describing manner. Attested in Judg 21:14 where the women of Jabesh-gilead 'did not suffice' (lo matse'u ken). French assez and German genug ('enough') confirm the quantitative reading, distinguishing it from the manner or causal senses. MANNER ADVERBS

en: enough | es: así | fr: assez | de: genug Judg 21:14

כֵּן H3652 Adv (8×)

Thus, so; an Aramaic adverb introducing reported speech or summarizing a preceding statement.

An Aramaic adverb meaning 'thus' or 'so,' used to introduce direct speech or to summarize what has been stated. Nearly every occurrence pairs with a verb of saying (ʾamar), forming the standard Aramaic speech-introduction formula wekhen ʾamar leh, 'and thus he said to him' (Dan 2:24). In Ezra 6:2, the variant wekhen-ketiv begawwah ('and thus was written in it') extends the usage to written records. Cognate with Biblical Hebrew ken, the word functions identically to Spanish así and French ainsi in discourse structure.

and thus (8×) A discourse adverb meaning 'thus, in this manner,' typically introducing reported speech or summarizing the content of a document. The formula wekhen ʾamar ('and thus he said') appears in Dan 2:24–25, 4:14, 6:7, and 7:5, 23, while Ezra 5:3 and 6:2 extend it to official inquiry and written records. Spanish así and German so capture the deictic function precisely — pointing forward to what follows or backward to what was established. MANNER ADVERBS

en: and-thus, thus | es: Así, y-así | fr: et-ainsi, et-oui, oui | de: so, und-so Ezra 5:3; Ezra 6:2; Dan 2:24; Dan 2:25; Dan 4:14

כֵּן H3653 N-msc / 1cs (17×)

Base, pedestal, or stand (especially of the tabernacle laver); position or office; likewise, so

The Hebrew noun ken (III) denotes a firm base or support — most concretely the pedestal of the bronze laver in the tabernacle, mentioned repeatedly across Exodus and Leviticus (Exod 30:18, 28; 38:8; Lev 8:11). From this physical foundation the word extends to mean one's appointed station or office, as when Joseph interprets the cupbearer's dream: 'within three days Pharaoh will restore you to your position' (Gen 40:13). Daniel uses it for the royal succession: one rises 'in his place' (Dan 11:7, 20, 21). Arabic qaa'ida ('base/pedestal') and Hebrew maqom ('place') together illuminate the concrete-to-abstract arc. A lone adverbial usage in 1 Kings 7:29, meaning 'likewise' or 'so,' rounds out the semantic range.

1. base, stand, pedestal (physical support) (10×) The concrete architectural sense: a base, stand, or pedestal that physically supports another object. Nearly all instances refer to the bronze stand of the laver (kiyor) in the tabernacle (Exod 30:18, 38:8, Lev 8:11). Isaiah 33:23 uses it for the socket or support of a ship's mast. Arabic qaa'ida ('base/pedestal') is a close equivalent. Spanish base and German Gestell both capture the idea of a firm supporting structure. The Priestly source uses this term with formulaic consistency across the tabernacle legislation. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-its-stand, its-stand, pedestal | es: base, base-de, base-suya | fr: ainsi, et-son-se-tenir, pedestal | de: pedestal, sein-stehen, so Exod 30:18; Exod 30:28; Exod 31:9; Exod 35:16; Exod 38:8

2. place, position, office (6×) The abstract positional sense: one's appointed place, station, or office. The cupbearer is restored 'to his position' (Gen 40:13), and Joseph recounts his own restoration 'to my place' (Gen 41:13). Daniel employs it for royal succession, where each ruler rises 'in his place' or is replaced by another who stands 'in his position' (Dan 11:7, 20, 21). Arabic makaanihi ('his place') and Spanish puesto ('post/position') both reflect this institutional meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-place, in-his-place, my-position | es: en-lugar-su, lugar-su, puesto-mío | fr: base, mon-position, position-ton | de: [כנן], deinen-Platz, meinen-Platz Gen 40:13; Gen 41:13; Dan 11:7; Dan 11:20; Dan 11:21

3. likewise, so (adverbial) (1×) A rare adverbial usage meaning 'likewise,' 'so,' or 'in the same manner,' where the noun's sense of 'standing, basis' has been extended to mean 'on that basis, thus.' It appears in 1 Kings 7:29 in the description of the ornamental work on the stands. The semantic trajectory from 'foundation' to 'accordingly' is paralleled by Arabic kadhalika ('likewise/thus'). This usage is marginal but lexicographically worth distinguishing from the noun senses. MANNER ADVERBS

en: likewise | es: así | fr: likewise | de: likewise 1Kgs 7:29

כֵּן H3654 Adv (7×)

Gnats or lice (the insect plague of Egypt); also a separate adverbial particle 'so, thus' in Isa 51:6.

Two entirely distinct words share this lemma entry. The primary form kinnim refers to the tiny biting insects of the third Egyptian plague (Exod 8:16-18), variously identified as gnats (Septuagint, Vulgate, most moderns) or lice (Targum, Josephus, later Hebrew). The Spanish glosses 'piojos' (lice) follow the rabbinic tradition, while French 'moustiques' (mosquitoes) leans toward the gnat identification — a longstanding entomological debate. The single occurrence in Isa 51:6 is a different word entirely: the adverb ken meaning 'so, thus,' describing how earth's inhabitants will perish 'in like manner.'

1. the gnats (6×) Gnats or lice — the swarming insects of the third Egyptian plague. In Exod 8:16-18, Aaron strikes the dust and it becomes kinnim throughout Egypt; Ps 105:31 recalls the plague in poetry. Ancient translations disagree on the species: the Septuagint and Vulgate render 'gnats' (sknipes/sciniphes), while the Targum and Josephus say 'lice.' Spanish 'piojos/los piojos' follows the lice tradition; French 'moustiques' opts for gnats. The identification remains debated, but all agree on a tiny, tormenting insect. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: gnats, the-gnats | es: el-piojo, los-piojos, piojos | fr: comme-moustique, le-moustiques, moustiques | de: Muecken, der-Muecken, gnats Exod 8:16; Exod 8:17; Exod 8:18

2. so (1×) The adverb ken meaning 'so, thus, in like manner,' appearing in Isa 51:6 where the inhabitants of the earth will die 'so' (ken) — that is, in the same way as the heavens vanish like smoke and the earth wears out like a garment. This is lexically unrelated to the insect noun and belongs to the common Hebrew adverbial particle ken (thus, so), here listed under the same lemma number due to consonantal overlap. MANNER ADVERBS

en: so | es: así | fr: ainsi | de: so Isa 51:6

כָּנָה H3655 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs (4×)

to give a title, surname, or epithet (Piel); to flatter with honorific titles

This verb in the Piel stem means to bestow a title, cognomen, or surname on someone. Isaiah uses it when God declares he has 'given a title' to Cyrus, calling him by name before Cyrus knew God. The term can carry either honorific force (bestowing a title of honor) or, negatively, the sense of flattering with undeserved titles. Elihu insists he will not 'give flattering titles' to any man, refusing the sycophantic practice of bestowing honorifics on the unworthy. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates similarly relate to surnames and epithets.

(4×) The Piel appears in four passages about naming and titling. God tells Cyrus, 'I have called you by your name, I have titled you' though Cyrus didn't know Yahweh (Isa 45:4), bestowing the honorific title on the Persian king. Isaiah describes how the future convert will 'title himself with the name Israel' (Isa 44:5), taking the covenant name as his own surname. Conversely, Elihu declares twice, 'I will not flatter any man' and 'I do not know how to flatter' (Job 32:21-22), using the verb for the negative practice of giving undeserved honorific titles. Spanish adular (to flatter) and se llamará (will call himself) track both the negative flattery and positive self-naming aspects, while French and German leave most forms in Hebrew brackets. CALLING AND NAMING en: I-titled-you, I-will-flatter, to-flatter | es: adular, adularé, se-llamará | fr: [אכנך], [יכנה], אכנה | de: [אכנה], [אכנך], [יכנה'] Job 32:21; Job 32:22; Isa 44:5; Isa 45:4

כַּנֵּה H3656 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Canneh (a trading city in Mesopotamia)

Canneh appears in Ezekiel 27:23 in the oracle against Tyre, listed among the merchants who traded with the wealthy port city. It is grouped with Haran and Eden, suggesting a Mesopotamian location. Some scholars identify it with Calneh (though this is disputed), while the exact site remains uncertain. The Septuagint rendering 'Chanaa' provides little help in identification. What is clear is that Canneh represented an important trading center in the international commercial network that made Tyre wealthy.

(1×) A place name in Ezekiel's catalog of Tyre's trading partners, likely located in Mesopotamia. The multilingual evidence shows straightforward transliteration (Spanish 'Cane,' French 'Kanné'), treating it as a proper geographical name. Its association with Haran and Eden in the same verse confirms a region in upper Mesopotamia or Syria. The inclusion in Tyre's commercial network indicates Canneh was significant in ancient Near Eastern trade, though archaeological confirmation of the exact site has proven elusive. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Canneh | es: y-Cane | fr: et-Kanné | de: [וכנה] Ezek 27:23

כַּנָּה H3657 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

stock, base, root (of a plant)

This noun appears in Psalm 80:15 in reference to a vine that God planted. The word likely means the stock, base, or root of a plant —the supporting foundation from which it grows. However, the text is somewhat uncertain; some suggest reading it as a verb meaning 'establish' or 'protect,' while the noun interpretation takes it as the counterpart to the vine's branches mentioned in the same verse. The psalm uses extended vine imagery for Israel, and this term refers to the fundamental, stable part of the vine that God himself established.

(1×) A noun denoting the stock, root, or base of a plant, specifically a vine in the psalm's extended metaphor for Israel. The Spanish 'retoño' (shoot, sprout) takes a different angle, while French 'base' aligns with the foundational meaning. The textual uncertainty is reflected in varied translations, but the context clearly uses botanical imagery—God planted a vine (Israel) and established its stable foundation. The parallel with 'son' in the verse suggests both the physical root and the people who grow from it. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: even-the-stock | es: Y-retoño | fr: et-base | de: sogar-der-stock Ps 80:15

כִּנּוֹר H3658 Art / N-ms (42×)

lyre, harp — the kinnor, a portable stringed instrument used in worship, celebration, and lament

The kinnor is the most frequently named musical instrument in the Hebrew Bible, appearing 42 times from Genesis through Chronicles. It enters Scripture with Jubal, 'father of all who play the kinnor and ugav' (Gen 4:21), establishing stringed music as a primal human art. David's skill on the kinnor relieved Saul's troubled spirit (1 Sam 16:16, 23), and the instrument became central to temple worship (1 Chr 15:16; 2 Chr 5:12). Yet it also voices grief: 'my lyre is turned to mourning' (Job 30:31), and the exiles hung their kinnoroth on willows by Babylon's rivers (Ps 137:2). The name passed into Greek as kinyra, attesting its international renown.

lyre, harp (stringed instrument) (42×) A portable stringed instrument spanning the full range of Israelite musical life — pastoral celebration (Gen 31:27), prophetic ecstasy (1 Sam 10:5), temple worship (2 Chr 29:25), and lamentation (Job 30:31; Ps 137:2). Often paired with ugav ('pipe'), tof ('tambourine'), and nevel ('psaltery'). French 'harpe,' German 'Zither,' Spanish 'lira' reflect uncertainty about its exact form; iconography suggests a portable lyre. LYRE HARP INSTRUMENT

en: and-lyre, and-lyres, and-with-lyres | es: con-arpa, con-lira, lira | fr: dans-harpe, et-harpe, harp | de: [ובכנרות], der-Zither, mit-der-Harfe Gen 4:21; Gen 31:27; 1Sam 10:5; 1Sam 16:16; 1Sam 16:23

יְהוֹיָכִין H3659 N-proper-ms (3×)

Jeconiah (also Coniah, Jehoiachin), Judah's penultimate king, exiled to Babylon

This lemma represents one variant spelling (כָּנְיָהוּ) of the name more commonly rendered Jehoiachin or Jeconiah. The young king reigned only three months before Nebuchadnezzar deported him to Babylon in 597 BC. Jeremiah's prophecies employ the shortened form Coniah with wordplays—declaring even if he were a signet ring on God's hand, he would be torn off and given to Babylon.

(3×) Jeremiah uses the shortened form כָּנְיָהוּ (Coniah/Konyahu) three times in chapters 22, 37. In 22:24, 28, the prophet pronounces judgment using this contracted form, perhaps suggesting diminishment or rejection—stripping away the theophoric 'Yeho-' prefix that invoked YHWH's name. By 37:1, Jeconiah has been replaced by his uncle Zedekiah. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish Conías, French Conias) preserve the abbreviated form, signaling the prophetic rhetoric of a throne forfeited. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Coniah, Konyahu | es: Conías, Conías?, Jonyahu | fr: Conias | de: [כניהו] Jer 22:24; Jer 22:28; Jer 37:1

כְּנֻמָּא H3660 Conj-w / Adv (5×)

Aramaic adverb: accordingly, as follows, in this manner, thus

This Aramaic adverb functions as a discourse connector in the official correspondence and narrative of Ezra, meaning 'accordingly' or 'as follows.' It can point backward to summarize what was just stated (Ezra 6:13, 'they did accordingly') or forward to introduce the content of a letter or speech (Ezra 4:8, 'wrote as follows'). Its derivation is debated – possibly from ken ('thus') plus an indefinite particle ma – but its pragmatic function as a textual linking device is clear across all its occurrences.

(5×) An Aramaic discourse adverb meaning 'thus, accordingly, as follows,' used to connect reported speech or actions to their context. English renders 'thus,' Spanish 'así,' French 'ainsi,' and German 'wie' – all capturing its deictic function. It points backward in Ezra 6:13 ('did accordingly') and forward in Ezra 4:8 and 5:4-11 ('wrote/spoke as follows'). All five occurrences are confined to the Aramaic sections of Ezra (4:8-6:13). MANNER ADVERBS

en: and-thus, thus | es: Y-así, así, así: | fr: ainsi, et-ainsi | de: und-wie, wie Ezra 4:8; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:9; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 6:13

כְּנָה H3661

support, root, stock (of a tree; Psalm 80:16, textually uncertain)

This feminine noun appears only in Psalm 80:16, likely meaning the 'root' or 'stock' of a vine—the support structure from which growth springs. The psalm depicts Israel as a vine God planted, now ravaged by enemies, and the plea is for God to protect what 'your right hand has planted.' However, textual uncertainties abound: some suggest reading it as a verb ('establish it'), others point to Syriac cognates for 'support.' The ambiguity reflects the challenges of reconstructing rare botanical terminology from ancient poetry, though the image of rootedness and support remains consistent with the psalm's vineyard metaphor.

כְּנָנִי H3662 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chenani (a Levite in Nehemiah's time)

Chenani was a Levite who participated in the great prayer and confession ceremony recorded in Nehemiah 9. He is listed among those who stood on the stairs of the Levites and cried out with a loud voice to the Lord. This was part of the covenant renewal ceremony following the reading of the Law during Ezra and Nehemiah's reforms. No other information about him is preserved beyond his participation in this significant moment of corporate repentance and covenant recommitment in the post-exilic community.

(1×) A personal name of a Levite involved in the post-exilic covenant renewal ceremonies. The French and German leave the name untranslated, while Spanish offers 'Quenaní,' attempting phonetic representation. Chenani's role in leading public prayer and worship at a pivotal moment in Israel's restoration marks him as one of the liturgical leaders helping reconstitute Jewish identity after exile. His name is preserved solely for this participation in corporate spiritual renewal. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chenani | es: Quenaní | fr: [כנני] | de: [כנני] Neh 9:4

כְּנַנְיָהוּ H3663 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Chenaniah, a Levite musician and official in David's time

A Levitical name meaning 'YHWH has established' or 'YHWH is firm.' Two individuals bear this name in Chronicles: a skilled musician appointed by David to lead the singing when the ark was brought to Jerusalem, and an Izharite Levite assigned to external duties as officer and judge. The name itself proclaims confidence in God's faithfulness and stability.

(3×) First Chronicles records Chenaniah (כְּנַנְיָה/כְּנַנְיָהוּ) in two roles: leading worship music during the ark's procession (15:22, 27) due to his skill (בַּמַּשָּׂא כִּי־מֻבְיָן הוּא, 'because he was skillful'), and serving as an officer/judge among the Izharites in Israel's administration (26:29). The minor spelling variation (with/without final ה) reflects scribal flexibility with theophoric names. Translations mostly transliterate: Spanish Quenanías, showing cross-cultural preservation of the proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Kenanyahu, and-Kenanyah, and-Kenanyahu | es: Quenanías, Y-Quenaniás, y-Quenaniás | fr: [וכננית], [וכנניהו], [כנניהו] | de: [וכנניה], [וכנניהו], [כנניהו] 1Chr 15:22; 1Chr 15:27; 1Chr 26:29

כָּנַס H3664 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (11×)

Gather, collect (Qal); assemble people purposefully (Piel); wrap or bundle oneself up (Hitpael)

A late Hebrew verb for gathering and collecting, cognate with Aramaic kənas and the familiar term 'knesset' (assembly). In its basic Qal form, it covers collecting stones (Ecc 3:5), amassing wealth (Ecc 2:8), and gathering provisions for Levites (Neh 12:44). The Piel intensifies this into deliberate divine assembly—God gathers the outcasts of Israel (Ps 147:2) and assembles nations for judgment (Ezek 22:21). A lone Hitpael in Isaiah 28:20 shifts strikingly to wrapping oneself up, as a bed too short forces one to bundle tight—where French and German leave the form untranslated, hinting at its rarity.

1. gather, collect (Qal) (7×) To gather or collect things or people (Qal), a general-purpose term for bringing together. David gathered resident aliens for stonework (1 Chr 22:2), Esther called the Jews to gather and fast (Esth 4:16), and God gathers ocean waters like a heap (Ps 33:7). Spanish 'Reuní/Reunió' and French 'rassembler' both convey straightforward collection. Ecclesiastes uses it twice for amassing wealth and gathering stones. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: I-gathered, and-to-collect, gather | es: Reunió, Reuní, para-recoger | fr: [כנוס], [לכנוס], comme-rassembler | de: [ולכנוס], [כנוס], [כנסתי] 1Chr 22:2; Neh 12:44; Esth 4:16; Ps 33:7; Eccl 2:8

2. assemble, gather intensively (Piel) (3×) To assemble or gather with deliberate, intensive purpose (Piel), often with God as subject. The LORD builds up Jerusalem and gathers Israel's scattered exiles (Ps 147:2), and He assembles nations into the furnace of judgment (Ezek 22:21, 39:28). Spanish 'reunirá/juntaré' and German 'er sammelt' reflect this purposeful divine ingathering, distinguishing it from the more neutral Qal collection. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-I-gathered-them, and-I-will-assemble, he-gathers | es: Y-os-juntaré, reunirá, y-los-reuní | fr: et-rassembler, rassembler | de: [וכנסתי], [וכנסתים], er-sammelt Ps 147:2; Ezek 22:21; Ezek 39:28

3. wrap oneself (Hitpael) (1×) To wrap or bundle oneself up (Hitpael reflexive), a unique usage in Isaiah 28:20 where a blanket too narrow forces one to 'gather oneself' tightly. English 'to wrap oneself' and Spanish 'para envolverse' capture the reflexive self-covering action. The semantic leap from 'gather' to 'wrap' parallels how collecting into a bundle naturally extends to enveloping the body. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: to-wrap-oneself | es: para-envolverse | fr: [כהתכנס] | de: [כהתכנס] Isa 28:20

כָּנַע H3665 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (36×)

To be humbled or subdued; to humble oneself before God; to bring low by force or divine action

A verb with a strong directional pull – always downward. In its Niphal reflexive form, it describes the voluntary self-humbling that God requires: 'if my people humble themselves' (2 Chr 7:14) is its theological center of gravity. The Hiphil causative turns the action outward: God or a human agent subdues an enemy, as when God 'subdues' nations before Israel (Deut 9:3; 1 Chr 17:10). A third shade captures the result from the enemy's perspective – being subdued or defeated, as Moab was 'subdued' under Israel's hand (Judg 3:30). Spanish distinguishes 'humillarse' (reflexive) from 'someter' (subdue), mapping the voice distinctions well. The Arabic cognate (fold wings) hints at the root image: making oneself small.

1. humble oneself before God (19×) Niphal reflexive: to humble oneself voluntarily, especially in penitence before God. The paradigmatic text is 2 Chronicles 7:14 – 'if my people humble themselves and pray.' Ahab's surprising repentance (1 Kgs 21:29), Josiah's tender heart (2 Kgs 22:19), and the Levitical call for uncircumcised hearts to 'be humbled' (Lev 26:41) all express willing self-abasement. Spanish 'se humillo' and German 'demuetigen' capture the reflexive-penitential character. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: and-he-humbled-himself, and-humble-themselves, and-humbled | es: Y-cuando-se-humilló, Y-se-humillaron, como-se-humilló | fr: et-humilier, et-tu-humbled-toi-même, fera-être-humilia | de: demuetigen, er-humbled-sich-selbst, humbled-sich-selbst Lev 26:41; 1Kgs 21:29; 2Kgs 22:19; 2Chr 7:14

2. subdue or bring low (11×) Hiphil causative: to subdue, humble, or bring low another by force or divine decree. God promises to 'subdue' the Canaanites before Israel (Deut 9:3), David subdues the Philistines (2 Sam 8:1; 1 Chr 18:1), and God humbles Israel's enemies throughout Chronicles. The shift from self-humbling to imposed humiliation is sharp – Spanish 'someter/humillar' and the causative force of the Hiphil mark the agent as an external power acting upon another. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: I-would-subdue, You-subdue, and-He-humbled | es: Y-humilló, abatíelo, humillarás | fr: [תכניע], et-humilier, et-il-subdued-eux | de: [הכניעהו], [ותכנע], [תכניע] Deut 9:3; Judg 4:23; 2Sam 8:1; 1Chr 17:10; 1Chr 18:1

3. be subdued or defeated (6×) Niphal passive: to be subdued, defeated, or brought low, typically in military defeat. Judges 3:30 records Moab 'subdued' under Israel, and Judges 8:28 reports the same for Midian. The pattern continues through Judges 11:33 and 1 Samuel 7:13. Spanish 'fue sometido/fueron sometidos' and the passive framing distinguish this from the reflexive self-humbling of sense 1 – here the subject does not choose lowliness but has it imposed. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: and-they-were-subdued, and-was-subdued, and-were-subdued | es: Y-fue-humillado, Y-fue-sometido, Y-fueron-sometidos | fr: et-humilier, et-ils-furent-subdued, et-étaient-subdued | de: und-demuetigen, und-sie-waren-subdued, und-war-unterwarf Judg 3:30; Judg 8:28; Judg 11:33; 1Sam 7:13; 1Chr 20:4

כְּנָעָה H3666 N-fsc / 2fs (1×)

bundle, pack, merchandise

This noun means a bundle or pack, something wrapped up for carrying. In Jeremiah 10:17, it appears in a warning to inhabitants of a besieged land to gather up their bundle and take it out of the land—prepare for exile. The image is of refugees hurriedly collecting their portable possessions before forced departure. The root suggests gathering together or wrapping up, creating a portable package. It is a poignant image of displacement, where one's life is reduced to whatever can be bundled up and carried away.

(1×) A noun denoting a bundle or pack of possessions, used in the context of impending exile. The Spanish 'mercancía' (merchandise) interprets it more commercially, while the Hebrew emphasizes the personal bundle one gathers when fleeing. The command to 'gather your bundle from the ground' creates a vivid picture of someone hurriedly collecting belongings before forced departure. This is the refugee's pack—everything that matters compressed into what can be carried, a powerful symbol of Jerusalem's coming judgment. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: your-bundle | es: mercancia-tuya | fr: [כנעתך] | de: [כנעתך] Jer 10:17

כְּנַעַן H3667a N-proper-ms (90×)

Canaan – the grandson of Noah and eponymous ancestor of the Canaanites; the promised land west of the Jordan; by metonymy, a merchant.

A proper noun with deep layers of meaning in the biblical narrative. Canaan names both the cursed grandson of Noah through Ham (Gen 9:25) and the entire territory west of the Jordan that became the land of Israel's inheritance. The name carried strong commercial connotations in antiquity: Canaanites and Phoenicians were the great traders of the ancient Near East, so by Hosea's day the word itself could mean 'merchant' (Hos 12:7). Transliterated remarkably consistently across languages – Spanish Canaan, French Canaan, German Kanaan – reflecting its universal recognition as a biblical place name.

1. Canaan (proper noun: land/person) (89×) The proper noun Canaan, denoting either the person (grandson of Noah, son of Ham, cursed in Gen 9:25-27, ancestor of the Canaanite nations listed in Gen 10:15-18) or the geographic territory west of the Jordan settled by Israel. Cross-linguistically transliterated with near-uniformity – Canaan (Eng/Fra), Canaan/Kenaan (Spa), Kanaan (Deu) – confirming its stable proper-noun status across all 89 occurrences. CANAAN LAND PERSON

en: Canaan | es: Canaán, Kenaan | fr: Canaan | de: Kanaan, Kanaan-ist, Kanaan-liegt Gen 9:18; Gen 9:22; Gen 9:25; Gen 9:26; Gen 9:27

2. merchant, trader (metonymic from Canaanite) (1×) A metonymic common-noun usage meaning 'merchant, trader,' attested once in Hos 12:7 where the prophet exploits the ancient association between Canaanites/Phoenicians and commerce. Spanish renders 'Canaan' while English gives 'a merchant,' revealing how translations split between preserving the proper-noun form and making the commercial metaphor explicit. CANAAN LAND PERSON

en: a-merchant | es: Canaán | fr: Canaan | de: [כנען] Hos 12:7

כְּנַעַן H3667b N-mpc / 3fs (4×)

merchant, trader (secondary meaning of Canaan, because Canaanites/Phoenicians were known as traders)

The word 'Canaan' developed a secondary meaning of 'merchant' or 'trader' because the Canaanites, especially the Phoenicians, were renowned as commercial traders throughout the ancient Near East. Ezekiel uses 'land of Canaan' to mean 'land of merchants,' and Zephaniah speaks of 'all the merchant people' using the Canaanite designation. This semantic extension shows how ethnic names can become professional designations when a people group dominates a particular trade or craft.

(4×) The term appears with mercantile meaning in prophetic texts. Ezekiel uses 'land of Canaan' to designate 'a land of merchants' where the eagle plants the vine (Ezek 17:4) and where Jerusalem multiplied her harlotry (Ezek 16:29, though Septuagint omits this phrase). Zephaniah pronounces judgment on 'all the merchant people' literally 'all the people of Canaan' who trade in silver (Zeph 1:11). Isaiah asks about Tyre 'whose traders' or 'whose Canaanites' were earth's honored ones (Isa 23:8), using the gentilic form with mercantile force. Spanish cananeos/sus-cananeos maintains the ethnic form while expecting readers to catch the merchant meaning, while French and German leave forms in brackets or preserve Canaan/Kenaan. CANAAN LAND PERSON

en: Canaan, Kenaan, whose-traders | es: Canaán, sus-cananeos | fr: Canaan, [כנעניה] | de: [כנען], [כנעניה] Isa 23:8; Ezek 16:29; Ezek 17:4; Zeph 1:11

כְּנַעֲנָה H3668 N-proper-ms (5×)

Kenaanah, a proper name borne by the father of the prophet Zedekiah and a Benjamite

Kenaanah is a Hebrew proper name borne by two individuals. The more prominent is the father of Zedekiah, the prophet who made iron horns and dramatically predicted Ahab's victory at Ramoth-gilead (1 Kgs 22:11, 24; 2 Chr 18:10, 23). The other is a son of Bilhan listed among the Benjamites (1 Chr 7:10). The name appears related to 'Canaan' and the Septuagint renders it Χανααν or Χανανα, reinforcing the etymological connection.

(5×) A proper masculine name, possibly meaning 'toward Canaan' or sharing the root of the geographic name Canaan. English gives 'Chenaanah' or 'Kenaanah,' Spanish 'Quenaana' or 'Kenaanah.' The name identifies the father of the prophet Zedekiah who confronted Micaiah before Ahab's fateful battle at Ramoth-gilead (1 Kgs 22:11, 24; 2 Chr 18:10, 23), and separately a Benjamite descendant of Bilhan (1 Chr 7:10). The Septuagint's Χαναα explicitly links the name to Canaan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chenaanah, Kenaanah, and-Kenaanah | es: Kenaanah, Quenaana, y-Quenaana | fr: Kenaanah, [וכנענה], [כנענה] | de: Kenaanah, [וכנענה], [כנענה] 1Kgs 22:11; 1Kgs 22:24; 1Chr 7:10; 2Chr 18:10; 2Chr 18:23

כְּנַעֲנִי H3669a N-proper-ms (71×)

Canaanite; a member of the pre-Israelite people of Canaan; by metonymic extension, a merchant or trader.

Primarily the gentilic adjective and noun designating the Canaanite people — the pre-Israelite inhabitants of the promised land who appear from the Table of Nations (Gen 10:18) through the conquest narratives (Judg 1) and beyond. The Canaanites were so closely associated with commerce in the ancient Near East that their very name became a byword for 'merchant,' a semantic development attested in Job 41:6 and paralleled in later prophetic literature (Zech 14:21). This striking shift from ethnonym to trade term offers a window into how Israel perceived its neighbors.

1. Canaanite (ethnic designation) (70×) The gentilic designation for a member of the Canaanite people, the pre-Israelite inhabitants of the land of Canaan. Covering 70 of 71 occurrences, this sense spans the patriarchal narratives (Gen 12:6; 13:7), conquest accounts (Judg 1:1, 3, 9), and genealogies (Gen 46:10). Translations consistently use standard gentilic forms — Spanish 'cananeo,' French 'Cananéen,' German 'Kanaaniter' — underscoring the stable ethnic reference across all contexts, from individual identifications (Gen 38:2) to collective designations of the people group. CANAANITE PEOPLE en: the-Canaanite | es: al-cananeo, el-cananeo, el-kenaani | fr: le-Canaanite,

le-Cananéen | de: den-Kanaaniter, der-Kanaaniter, des-Kanaaniters Gen 10:18; Gen 10:19; Gen 12:6; Gen 13:7; Gen 15:21

2. merchant, trader (1×) A metonymic extension meaning 'merchant' or 'trader,' reflecting the Canaanites' widespread reputation as commercial middlemen throughout the ancient Near East. Attested only at Job 41:6, where it appears in a mercantile context. The multilingual evidence is decisive: Spanish shifts from 'cananeo' to 'mercaderes,' English from 'Canaanite' to 'merchants,' while French and German retain the Hebrew form untranslated, signaling lexicographic uncertainty about how to render this rare figurative usage. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: merchants | es: mercaderes | fr: כנענים | de: [כנענים] Job 41:6

כְּנַעֲנִי H3669b Prep-l (2×)

merchant, trader (from the ethnic designation Canaanite)

This term for merchant derives from the ethnic name 'Canaanite,' reflecting the Phoenician/Canaanite reputation for trade and commerce. By semantic extension, 'Canaanite' came to mean 'merchant' or 'trader' generally. The usage appears in Proverbs 31:24, where the capable wife sells garments to merchants, and Zechariah 14:21, declaring no merchant will remain in the temple. Some textual traditions suggest emending passages like Zechariah 11:7, 11 from 'afflicted' to 'merchants,' though this remains disputed.

(2×) A trader or merchant, derived from the ethnic designation because Canaanites/Phoenicians were renowned traders. This semantic shift reflects historical economic reality - the coastal peoples' dominance in commerce made their ethnic name synonymous with trading. In Zechariah's eschatological vision, removing merchants from the temple emphasizes the complete holiness of that future age, where sacred space remains uncompromised by commercial activity. CANAANITE PEOPLE to be thrust into a corner, hidden away

en: a-Kenaani, to-the-merchant | es: al-mercader, cananeo | fr: marchand, לכנעני | de: [כנעני], [לכנעני] Prov 31:24; Zech 14:21

כָּנַף H3670 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

This verb, occurring only in the Niphal, means to be cornered, thrust aside, or hidden. Isaiah 30:20 promises that though God gives the people the bread of adversity and water of affliction, their teachers will no longer be hidden or thrust into a corner. The image is of teachers who had been marginalized, pushed aside, made unavailable—but God promises their return to public ministry. Some interpreters understand it as 'hide themselves,' but the passive sense of being forced into obscurity seems more likely. The root may relate to 'wing' or 'edge,' suggesting being pushed to the margins.

(1×) A Niphal verb meaning to be thrust into a corner or hidden away, used of teachers being removed from public view. The Spanish 'se esconderá' (will hide himself) takes the middle/reflexive sense, while the context in Isaiah promises reversal—teachers previously marginalized will again be visible. The passive nuance suggests forced removal rather than voluntary hiding—these teachers were silenced or exiled, but restoration will bring them back into the open. This fits Isaiah's broader message of coming deliverance and renewal. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: shall-hide-Himself | es: se-esconderá | fr: [יכנף] | de: [יכנף] Isa 30:20

כָּנָף H3671 N-fs (111×)

Wing of a bird, angel, or cherub; also the skirt or hem of a garment, or the edge/extremity of a land.

Kanaph is one of Hebrew's most evocative words, moving fluidly between the literal wing of a bird (Deut 32:11), the protective wings of God sheltering his people (Ps 91:4), the skirt of a garment that could be spread over someone in an act of covenantal protection (Ruth 3:9), and the far corners of the earth (Isa 11:12). The same word that describes the outstretched wings of the golden cherubim in the Holy of Holies (1 Kgs 6:24) also names the tasseled corners of an Israelite's cloak (Num 15:38). This semantic range—wing to hem to horizon—reveals how ancient Hebrew mapped spatial extension from a single bodily image.

1. wing of bird or angel (89×) The primary sense is the physical wing of a bird, cherub, seraph, or other winged being, appearing in the vast majority of occurrences. This includes the eagle's wings of Exod 19:4 and Deut 32:11, the seraphim's six wings of Isa 6:2, and the cherubim's wings overshadowing the ark (1 Kgs 6:24; 8:7). Crucially it extends to the metaphor of God's protective wings (Ps 17:8; 36:7; 91:4), rendered across languages as spa 'alas,' fra 'ailes,' deu 'Fluegel'—all preserving the avian image. WING BODY PART

en: wing, wings, wings-of-them | es: ala, alas, alas-de-ellos | fr: aile, ailes | de: Fluegel, [כנפים], ihre-Fluegel Exod 19:4; Deut 32:11; 2Sam 22:11; 1Kgs 6:24

2. skirt or hem of garment (14×) The garment sense denotes the skirt, hem, or corner of a robe—the 'wing' of a cloak that could be spread as a gesture of covenantal protection. Ruth 3:9 and Ezek 16:8 use 'spreading one's kanaph' over someone as an act of betrothal or covenant commitment. Deut 22:30 forbids uncovering a father's kanaph (his wife's covering). Korean jarak/otjarak and Arabic taraf/dhayl reflect this textile sense. The physical edge of cloth maps naturally from the 'wing' image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: corner, corner-of, corner-of- | es: ala-de-mí, cobertura-de, con-su-borde | fr: aile, ailes-de, coin | de: Ecke, Ecke-von, Ecke-von- Deut 22:30; Deut 27:20; Ruth 3:9; 1Sam 15:27; 1Sam 24:4

3. corner or extremity of land (8×) At the geographic extreme, kanaph denotes the corner, edge, or extremity of a land or the earth itself. Job 37:3 and 38:13 speak of the 'wings of the earth,' and Isa 11:12 gathers exiles from the four kanphoth of the earth. Num 15:38 prescribes tassels on the kanphoth of garments, bridging the garment and spatial senses. Arabic arkaan/atraaf and Swahili pembe/ncha capture this 'corner/extremity' meaning, distinct from both the avian and textile senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: From-the-ends, corners-of, of-the-wings-of | es: Desde-el-extremo-de, alas-de, bordes-de | fr: aile, corners-de, dans-aile | de: Ecken-von, Fluegel, [בכנפות] Num 15:38; Deut 22:12; Job 37:3; Job 38:13

כִּנֶּרֶת H3672 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (7×)

Kinnereth – a city in Naphtali and its adjacent lake (the Sea of Galilee)

Kinnereth (also spelled Kinnerot/Kinneroth) is a proper place name designating both a fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh 19:35) and the adjacent freshwater lake that later became known as the Sea of Galilee or Lake Tiberias. The name may derive from kinnor ('harp'), perhaps reflecting the lake's harp-like shape. As yam Kinnereth ('Sea of Kinnereth') it appears in Numbers 34:11 and Joshua 12:3; 13:27, marking a key boundary marker in the tribal allotments. In 1 Kings 15:20, 'all Kinneroth' refers to the surrounding territory conquered by Ben-hadad of Aram. The name passes through all target languages virtually unchanged – Spanish Quineret, French and German Kinnereth – confirming its status as a geographic proper noun.

Kinnereth (7×) A proper place name in Galilee within the territory of Naphtali, referring both to an ancient fortified city (Josh 19:35) and to the inland lake beside it, yam Kinnereth, the 'Sea of Kinnereth' (Num 34:11; Josh 12:3; 13:27), known in the New Testament era as the Sea of Galilee. The variant form Kinnerot/Kinneroth appears in Josh 11:2 and 1 Kgs 15:20, where it designates the broader region around the city and lake. The name possibly derives from kinnor ('harp'), evoking the lake's shape. Spanish Quineret, French Kinnereth, and German Kinnereth all preserve the toponym with minimal adaptation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kinnereth, Kinnerot, Kinneroth | es: Kinerot, Quineret, desde-Kineret | fr: Kinnereth, Kinnerot, Kinneroth | de: Kinnereth, Kinnerot, Kinneroth Num 34:11; Deut 3:17; Josh 11:2; Josh 12:3; Josh 13:27

כְּנַשׁ H3673 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (3×)

to gather, assemble (Aramaic root used in Daniel 3)

An Aramaic verb appearing only in Daniel 3, describing the assembling of officials for Nebuchadnezzar's image dedication ceremony.

The Hithpael form emphasizes the gathering action—officials from across the empire converging at the king's summons. This root parallels the more common Hebrew כָּנַס, reflecting the linguistic shift toward Aramaic in the exilic and post-exilic periods.

(3×) Daniel 3:2 uses the infinitive 'to assemble' (לְמִכְנַשׁ) the satraps, prefects, and governors for the golden image dedication. Verses 3 and 27 employ the Hithpael participle מִתְכַּנָּשִׁין, 'were assembled/gathering themselves,' depicting the officials' actual convening. The repetition underscores the scale and solemnity of the event. Multilingual translations (Spanish 'reunir/reunieron,' French forms of 'assemble') capture the formal, imperial context of this Babylonian state ceremony. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-assembled, assembled, to-assemble | es: Y-se-reunieron, para-reunir, se-reunieron | fr: [ומתכנשין], [למכנש], [מתכנשין] | de: [ומתכנשין], [למכנש], [מתכנשין] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3; Dan 3:27

כְּנָת H3674 N-mpc / 3ms (2×)

companions, colleagues, or associates (Aramaic loan-word)

This Aramaic term for associates or companions appears in Ezra 4:7 in a letter to the Persian king. It refers to the administrative colleagues or fellow officials serving with Rehum and Shimshai in opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. As a loan-word from Aramaic into the Hebrew text, it reflects the multilingual bureaucratic context of the Persian empire. The plural form with possessive suffix indicates 'his associates,' referring to the coalition of officials working together in opposition.

(2×) Administrative colleagues or associates, appearing in Persian-era correspondence. The double occurrence represents textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) for the same referent in Ezra 4:7. The term captures the collaborative nature of imperial administration, where multiple officials jointly authored correspondence and coordinated policy. These 'colleagues' formed a united front against Jewish rebuilding efforts. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [ketiv], his-companions | es: (sus-compañeros), [sus-compañeros] | fr: [כנותו], [כנותיו] | de: [(כנותיו)], [[כנותו]] Ezra 4:7

כְּנָת H3675 N-mpc / 3mp (7×)

kenat – companion, associate; an Aramaic noun used exclusively in Ezra for official colleagues

The noun kenat ('companion, associate') belongs to the Aramaic stratum of the Hebrew Bible, appearing exclusively in the book of Ezra within the official correspondence between Persian provincial officials and the royal court. All seven occurrences follow the same pattern: a named official 'and his/their companions' (Ezra 4:9, 17, 23; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13). The word is cognate with Old Aramaic knt and possibly borrowed from Akkadian kinatu ('associate'). Its formulaic usage in bureaucratic letters gives it an almost technical flavor – these are not casual friends but official colleagues sharing administrative authority. Spanish companeros, French compagnon, and German Gefaehrten all render the term consistently as 'companions.'

and their companions (7×) An associate or official companion, used exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Ezra to denote the colleagues of Persian provincial administrators like Rehum and Tattenai (Ezra 4:9, 17, 23; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13). The term has a quasi-technical administrative register, always appearing with possessive suffixes ('his companions,' 'their companions') in the fixed formulaic language of imperial correspondence. Spanish compañeros, French compagnon, and German Gefaehrten converge on 'companion/associate,' while the Aramaic cognate evidence – Old Aramaic knt and possibly Akkadian kinatu – anchors the word in the vocabulary of official partnership. COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: and-his-companions, and-their-companions, and-your-companions | es: sus-compañeros, y-sus-compañeros | fr: compagnon, et-compagnon | de: Gefaehrten, und-Gefaehrten Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:6

כִּסֵּא H3676 N-msc (1×)

throne, seat of honor

This is a variant form or spelling of the common word for throne, appearing in Exodus 17:16 in a notoriously difficult phrase often rendered 'the hand upon the throne of Yah.' The text is uncertain, with some seeing it as an abbreviated or archaic form of the standard throne word, while others suggest textual corruption or an entirely different word. Thrones in Scripture represent authority, kingship, and divine sovereignty. When used of God's throne, it emphasizes his cosmic rule and righteous judgment. When used of human kings, it symbolizes delegated authority and dynastic continuity.

(1×) A construct form meaning 'throne of,' appearing in the cryptic phrase about Amalek in Exodus 17:16. The multilingual evidence consistently treats it as 'throne' (Spanish 'trono,' French 'trône'), though the phrase's meaning remains debated. Some see it as 'the Lord's throne,' others as 'banner,' reflecting textual uncertainty. The context of divine warfare against Amalek suggests an oath by God's throne or sovereignty, though the compressed, possibly archaic language resists easy interpretation. The throne symbolism evokes divine kingship and judgment against the Amalekites. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: throne-of | es: trono-de- | fr: trône-de | de: throne-von Exod 17:16

כֻּסֵּא H3677 Art / N-ms (2×)

full moon, the lunar month's midpoint

This term designates the full moon, possibly derived from an Aramaic or Assyrian loan-word related to 'covering' or 'headdress,' perhaps imaging the moon as crowned or fully covered with light. It appears in Psalm 81:3 as a festival time contrasted with the new moon, and in Proverbs 7:20 as a time marker for a husband's return. The full moon marked important festival occasions, particularly the Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot), which began on the 15th of the month when the moon was full.

(2×) The full moon, occurring at mid-month and marking significant festival times. In Psalm 81, it designates a feast day, most likely Tabernacles, celebrated when the moon reached fullness. In Proverbs 7, it serves as a temporal marker for an extended absence. The term emphasizes the moon at its peak brightness, the opposite of the new moon's darkness, and its role in regulating Israel's liturgical calendar. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: at-the-full-moon, the-full-moon | es: en-la-luna-llena, la-luna-llena | fr: dans-couvrir, le-הכסא | de: bei-der-voll-Mond, der-Thron Ps 81:3; Prov 7:20

כִּסֵּא H3678 N-ms (135×)

A seat of honor or throne; the royal or divine seat of authority, and by extension any seat of dignity or judgment.

Kisse is the Hebrew Bible's word for the seat where power resides. In its overwhelming majority of occurrences, it designates the royal throne — of David, Solomon, Pharaoh, or God himself — and with it the authority, dynasty, and legitimacy that the throne represents. 'Your throne, O God, is forever and ever' (Ps 45:6) and 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever' (2 Sam 7:13) show how kisse became a metonym for kingship itself. The word's Semitic cognates are striking: Aramaic kurseyya, Arabic kursiyy, and Akkadian kussu all descend from the same root, and the Arabic form survives in Quran 2:255 as God's cosmic throne (al-Kursi). Yet the word also has a humbler side — Eli sits on his kisse by the doorpost of the tabernacle (1 Sam 1:9), and the Shunammite woman sets a kisse in the prophet's room (2 Kgs 4:10) — reminding us that every throne is, at bottom, a chair.

1. royal throne (125×) The royal or divine throne — 125 occurrences, the dominant sense by far. This covers the thrones of Israelite and foreign kings (Exod 11:5; Deut 17:18; 2 Sam 3:10), the throne of God (Ps 45:6; Ps 93:2; Isa 6:1), and the throne as metonym for dynastic rule ('I will establish his throne forever,' 2 Sam 7:13). Spanish trono, French trone, German Thron, and Korean 왕좌/보좌 all select explicitly royal-authority vocabulary. The theological density is enormous: God's throne is in heaven (Ps 11:4), righteousness and justice are its foundation (Ps 89:14), and the promise of an eternal Davidic throne runs through the Prophets into the New Testament. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-throne-of, throne-of | es: trono-de, tronos-de | fr: le-trône-de, throne-de, trône | de: Thron, Thron-von, der-Thron-von Exod 11:5; Exod 12:29; Deut 17:18; 2Sam 3:10; 2Sam 7:13

2. seat or chair (6×) A literal seat or chair without specific royal connotation — 6 occurrences where the context describes ordinary furniture for sitting. Eli's kisse by the doorpost of the tabernacle (1 Sam 1:9), from which he falls and dies (1 Sam 4:13, 4:18), is an old priest's chair, not a throne. The Shunammite woman furnishes Elisha's room with a bed, table, kisse, and lamp (2 Kgs 4:10). Haman's kisse above the other officials (Esth 3:1) may shade toward honor, but Spanish asiento ('seat') and the contextual details confirm a piece of furniture rather than a symbol of sovereignty. The distinction matters lexicographically: not every kisse carries royal weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-seat-at, and-a-chair, his-seat | es: el-asiento, su-asiento, trono | fr: et-un-chair, le-siège, trône | de: Thron, der-seat, sein-Thron 1Sam 1:9; 1Sam 4:13; 1Sam 4:18; 2Kgs 4:10; Esth 3:1

3. thrones as seats of authority (4×) Thrones in the plural representing multiple seats of ruling or judicial authority — 4 occurrences. In Psalm 122:5 'there thrones for judgment were set, the thrones of the house of David' — the plural kis'ot evokes a judicial bench or council of rulers. In Isaiah 14:9 the shades of dead kings rise from their thrones in Sheol; in Ezekiel 26:16 the princes of the sea descend from their thrones. Spanish tronos, German Throne, and French trones all preserve the plural. The sense is not merely 'more than one throne' but thrones as institutional seats of collective or subordinate authority, distinct from the singular royal throne of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-their-thrones, their-thrones, thrones | es: de-sus-tronos, sus-tronos, tronos | fr: comme-trône, trône | de: Thron Ps 122:5; Isa 14:9; Ezek 26:16

כַּשְׂדִּי H3679 N-proper-ms (2×)

Chaldean, either by ethnicity or as member of the learned/priestly class (Aramaic)

This Aramaic term appears in Daniel and Ezra referring to Chaldeans. In some contexts it denotes ethnic Chaldeans, the Neo-Babylonian empire's dominant people. In Daniel it often refers to a learned class of diviners and astrologers, similar to how the term developed in Babylonian usage to mean the priestly-scholarly caste. The textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) in both occurrences show scribal attention to proper form, while the dual meaning reflects historical reality - the Chaldean people became so associated with learning and divination that their ethnic name became a professional designation.

(2×) Chaldeans, appearing in Aramaic sections of post-exilic texts. The double occurrence represents textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) for the same references in Ezra 5:12. The term could denote ethnic identity (the people who conquered Judah under Nebuchadnezzar) or professional class (the wise men and diviners). In Ezra's context, it refers to the Chaldean conquest, while Daniel uses it more frequently for the learned class. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: Kasdaah, [ketiv] | es: (caldeo), [caldeo] | fr: [כסדאה], [כסדיא] | de: [(כסדאה)], [[כסדיא]] Ezra 5:12

כָּסָה H3680 V-Pual-Perf-3cp (153×)

To cover, conceal, clothe; to be covered; to cover oneself; to overwhelm or engulf

The primary Hebrew verb for placing something over or upon a surface so as to hide, protect, or enclose it. In the Piel it describes covering the earth with water (Gen 7:19), covering blood with dust (Lev 17:13), or a cloud covering the tabernacle (Num 9:15). From physical covering, the verb extends naturally to concealing sin or hiding wrongdoing — Proverbs draws the contrast between the fool who 'covers shame' and the wise who 'conceals knowledge' (12:16, 23). Arabic preserves this same bifurcation: ghatta and satara for physical covering versus katama and akhfa for hiding secrets. The reflexive Hitpael portraits figures veiling themselves in mourning or disguise — Tamar covering herself before Judah (Gen 38:14), or kings rending garments and covering in sackcloth before God (2 Kgs 19:1).

1. Piel: to cover physically (101×) The Piel intensive sense of physically covering a surface, object, or person with material — cloth, earth, cloud, skin, water, or fat. Arabic ghatta/yughattiyi (cover completely) and Spanish cubrir converge on full surface coverage. This is the workhorse sense across 101 occurrences: the waters covering the mountains in the flood (Gen 7:19-20), frogs covering the land of Egypt (Exod 8:6), the sea returning to cover Pharaoh's chariots (Exod 14:28, 15:5, 15:10), and the glory-cloud covering the tabernacle (Num 9:15). COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-covered, the-covering, to-cover | es: Y-cubrió, la-que-cubre, para-cubrir | fr: [לכסות], couvrir, et-couvrit | de: bedecken, der-Decke, der-covering Gen 9:23; Exod 8:6; Exod 14:28; Exod 15:5; Exod 15:10

2. Piel: to conceal or hide (22×) The Piel sense of concealing or hiding information, guilt, or wrongdoing from knowledge. Arabic satara (veil from sight), katama (suppress), and akhfa (conceal) all use distinct roots from physical covering, confirming a genuine semantic shift. Gen 18:17 asks 'Shall I hide from Abraham what I am about to do?' Proverbs 10:18 warns that whoever 'covers hatred' with lying lips is a fool, while Prov 28:13 teaches that 'whoever conceals their transgressions will not prosper.' Job 31:33 invokes Adam's paradigmatic attempt to hide sin. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: I-covered, I-have-covered, I-have-hidden | es: El-que-encubre, acaso-encubriré, cubras | fr: –Je-cacher, [תכסּ], comme-couvrir | de: bedecken, bedeckte, du-soll-bedecken Gen 18:17; Gen 37:26; Deut 13:8; Neh 4:5; Job 31:33

3. Pual/Niphal: to be covered (10×) The Pual, Niphal, and Qal passive participle sense of being covered — the passive state resulting from another's action. French couvrir (passive) and Spanish cubierto (covered) both carry this stative sense. Ps 32:1 is theologically central: 'Blessed is the one whose sin is covered' (kesuy chata'ah), where God puts transgression out of sight. Gen 7:19-20 describes the mountains being covered by floodwaters; Jer 51:42 portrays Babylon submerged by enemy waves. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-were-covered, covered, is-covered | es: Cubrieron, cubiertas, cubiertos | fr: [מכסים], comme-couvrir, couvrir | de: bedecken, bedeckte, der-bedeckte Gen 7:19; Gen 7:20; 1Chr 21:16; Ps 32:1; Ps 80:10

4. Hitpael: to cover oneself (9×) The Hitpael reflexive sense of covering oneself with a garment, veil, or sackcloth — whether for mourning, modesty, or disguise. Arabic taghatta (cover oneself) and iktasa (clothe oneself) both encode self-directed action. Rebekah veils herself upon seeing Isaac (Gen 24:65), Hezekiah covers himself in sackcloth before entering the temple (2 Kgs 19:1), and Prov 26:26 warns that hatred 'covers itself' with deception but will be exposed before the assembly. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-covered-herself, and-he-covered-himself, and-let-be-covered | es: Se-cubre, Y-cubranse, cubiertos | fr: couvrant-eux-mêmes, couvrir, et-couvrir | de: bedecken, bedeckend-sich-selbst, bedeckte Gen 24:65; 1Kgs 11:29; 2Kgs 19:1; 2Kgs 19:2; Prov 26:26

5. Piel: to clothe or dress (6×) The Piel sense of covering a person specifically with garments or clothing, often as an act of care, provision, or honor. Arabic kasa (clothe someone) preserves the cognate root in its clothing-specific sense. Ezek 16:10 portrays God clothing Jerusalem in embroidered cloth and fine linen as an act of covenant love. Isa 58:7 commands 'when you see the naked, cover him' — an ethical imperative. 1 Kgs 1:1 describes old king David unable to get warm though they covered him with garments. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-I-covered-you, and-covered-him, and-they-covered-him | es: te-cubras-, y-las-cubriste, y-lo-cubras | fr: et-couvrir, et-couvrit-lui, et-ils-couvrit-lui | de: du-bedecken-, und-bedecken, und-bedeckte-ihn Deut 22:12; Josh 24:7; 1Kgs 1:1; Isa 58:7; Ezek 16:10

6. Piel: to overwhelm or engulf (5×) The Piel sense of overwhelming or engulfing — waters, darkness, or shame covering and submerging a person entirely. Arabic ghashiya (overwhelm) and ghamara (inundate) point to catastrophic submersion rather than mere covering. Ps 55:5 cries 'horror has overwhelmed me'; Ezek 7:18 warns that 'shame shall cover all faces'; Mic 7:10 foretells that the enemy 'shall be covered with shame.' The imagery shades from physical flood to emotional engulfment. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: (let-it-cover-them), [ketiv:let-it-cover-them], and-covers-me | es: [los-cubra], los-cubra, y-cubrirá | fr: couvrir, et-couvrir | de: bedeckte, und-bedecken, und-bedeckte Ps 55:5; Ps 140:9; Ezek 7:18; Mic 7:10

כְּסוּי H3681 N-msc (2×)

covering, specifically a covering of animal skins for the tabernacle

This term denotes a covering made of skins, appearing only in Numbers 4 in instructions for transporting tabernacle items. The Kohathites were to cover the ark and altar with a 'covering of skins' (likely porpoise or badger skins) before transport. The word emphasizes the protective function - precious sacred objects required careful wrapping for movement. The construction with 'covering of...' highlights both the material and purpose, protecting holy items from exposure and damage during Israel's wilderness journeys.

(2×) A protective covering made of animal skins, used specifically in tabernacle service. Both occurrences in Numbers 4:6, 14 describe wrapping the ark and altar with skin coverings before the Kohathites could transport them. This outer layer protected both the sacred objects and the people - preventing unauthorized contact while enabling mobility. The skins formed the final, weatherproof layer in the careful wrapping protocol for holy things. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: covering-of | es: cubierta-de | fr: couverture-de | de: covering-von Num 4:6; Num 4:14

כְּסוּת H3682 N-fsc / 3fs (9×)

A covering or garment; clothing for the body, or figuratively a concealment or vindication gift.

This feminine noun denotes a covering, whether a literal garment worn on the body or a figurative concealment. In the covenant code (Exod 21:10; 22:26), it refers to the basic right of clothing that must not be withheld from the vulnerable. Job uses the word to describe the destitute who lack covering against the cold (Job 24:7; 31:19). More strikingly, in Genesis 20:16, Abimelech's gift of silver is called a 'covering of the eyes' — a diplomatic phrase meaning vindication or compensation so that Sarah's honor is publicly restored. Isaiah 50:3 extends the image cosmically: God clothes the heavens in sackcloth as their covering.

covering, clothing (9×) A covering or garment used for bodily protection and warmth, encompassing both everyday clothing (Exod 21:10, Deut 22:12, Job 24:7, 31:19) and figurative or extended uses such as a 'covering of the eyes' denoting vindication or compensation (Gen 20:16), the covering of the heavens with sackcloth (Isa 50:3), and the uncovering of Abaddon (Job 26:6). Spanish 'cobertura/cubierta' and French 'couverture' preserve the root sense of something that covers or conceals. The word appears exclusively with a suffix or in construct, always designating something that belongs to or covers someone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [his-covering], covering, covering-of | es: (su-cubierta), [su-cubierta], cobertura | fr: [son-couverture], [כסותם], couverture-de | de: [sein-Decke], [כסות], [כסותם] Gen 20:16; Exod 21:10; Exod 22:27; Deut 22:12

כָּסַח H3683 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (2×)

to cut off or cut down, as plants or thorns

This verb describes cutting away or removing, particularly plants or thorns. Isaiah 33:12 uses it of thorns cut down and burned, symbolizing peoples destroyed in divine judgment. Psalm 80:16 applies it to Israel depicted as a vine that has been cut away. The imagery suggests deliberate removal or destruction, like pruning or harvesting that leaves nothing remaining. Both contexts use agricultural metaphors to describe devastating judgment, where what was once living and growing is cut off and destroyed.

(2×) To cut down or cut away, used in passive participial forms describing plants removed or destroyed. The Psalm reference describes Israel as a vine cut down by enemies, while Isaiah depicts enemy nations as thorns cut away and burned. The agricultural imagery makes judgment concrete and vivid - what is cut down cannot regrow without divine intervention. The verb emphasizes the totality of removal. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: cut-down | es: cortada, cortados | fr: [כסוחים], comme-retrancher | de: [כסוחים], abgeschnitten-hinab Ps 80:16; Isa 33:12

כְּסִיל H3684 Conj-w / N-mp (70×)

kesil – a fool, dullard; one who is morally obtuse and stubbornly rejects wisdom

The noun kesil is the wisdom literature's most characteristic term for a fool – not merely an ignoramus but someone who is morally and intellectually thick, willfully resistant to instruction. Appearing 70 times, it is concentrated overwhelmingly in Proverbs (49 occurrences) with additional uses in Psalms and Ecclesiastes. The kesil hates knowledge (Prov 1:22), takes no delight in understanding (18:2), treats wrongdoing as sport (10:23), and returns to folly as a dog returns to its vomit (26:11). Distinguished from the naval (H5036, contemptuous fool) and the ewil (H0191, rash simpleton), the kesil occupies the middle ground of stubborn dullness. Spanish necio, French insense, and German Tor each capture the blend of moral obduracy and intellectual sluggishness.

fool, dullard (70×) A morally obtuse fool who deliberately shuns wisdom and embraces folly, the primary term of opprobrium in Proverbs' pedagogical framework. Distinguished from evil ('simpleton,' H0191) and naval ('contemptible fool,' H5036), the kesil is characterized by willful stupidity rather than mere ignorance: he hates knowledge (Prov 1:22), pours forth folly (Prov 15:2), and despises his mother (Prov 15:20). Spanish necio, French insense, and German Tor converge on the same blend of moral and intellectual failing across all 70 occurrences. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: a-fool, fool, foolish | es: al-necio, necio, un-necio | fr: insensé | de: Tor Ps 92:6; Prov 1:32; Prov 10:1; Prov 10:18; Prov 12:23

כְּסִיל H3685 Conj-w / N-ms (4×)

Orion (constellation); the great hunter bound in the heavens, associated with the Pleiades

Kesil designates the brilliant constellation Orion, often mentioned alongside the Pleiades in biblical astronomy. The name ironically uses the Hebrew word for 'fool,' though the connection to the constellation's name is obscure—perhaps relating to mythology about a presumptuous giant bound in the heavens. Job asks whether anyone can 'loose the cords of Orion,' apparently alluding to ancient Near Eastern myths about the mighty hunter Orion bound as a constellation. Isaiah speaks of multiple 'Orions,' meaning Orion and other brilliant constellations.

(4×) The constellation appears in wisdom and prophetic literature describing God's creative power. Job lists Orion alongside other constellations as evidence of God's wisdom (Job 9:9), and God himself asks Job, 'Can you loose the cords of Orion?' (Job 38:31), implying mythological bonds holding the constellation. Amos calls on Israel to seek God who 'made the Pleiades and Orion' (Amos 5:8). Isaiah warns that 'their Orions' (plural, meaning bright constellations) will not give their light in the day of judgment (Isa 13:10). Spanish Orión and French constellation track the astronomical identification, while German Tor (fool) in one instance preserves the literal meaning of the Hebrew word kesil, showing awareness of the semantic irony. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: Kesil, Orion, and-Orion | es: Orión, y-Orión, y-sus-constelaciones | fr: [וכסיליהם], et-constellation, כסיל | de: Tor, [וכסיליהם], und-Tor Job 9:9; Job 38:31; Isa 13:10; Amos 5:8

כְּסִיל H3686 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Kesil (a town in southern Judah)

Kesil was a town in the southern territory allotted to Judah, listed in Joshua 15:30. Scholars generally agree the name is probably a textual corruption of Bethul, which appears in the parallel list in Joshua 19:4 for Simeon's inheritance. The towns in this region were later reassigned to Simeon since Judah's portion was too large. The exact identification of the site is uncertain, but it lay somewhere in the Negev region of southern Judah. The name ironically means 'fool' if taken as a common noun, though as a place name it likely has different origins or significance.

(1×) A town name in the Judahite territorial allotment, likely a textual variant of Bethul. The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration (Spanish 'Quesil,' French/German 'Kesil'), treating it as a proper geographical name. The scholarly consensus favoring textual corruption reflects the challenges of preserving precise geographical lists through centuries of manuscript transmission. The location in the southern Negev region places it in the semi-arid frontier zone between Judah's heartland and the desert, later incorporated into Simeon's territory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kesil | es: y-Quesil | fr: et-Kesil | de: und-Kesil Josh 15:30

כְּסִילוּת H3687 N-fs (1×)

folly, stupidity (personified)

This noun appears in Proverbs 9:13, where 'the woman Folly' is personified in deliberate contrast to Lady Wisdom earlier in the chapter. While Wisdom calls out from the high places of the city offering life and understanding, the woman Folly also calls out, but her house is the way to death. The personification makes folly not just an abstract concept but an active, seductive force competing for human allegiance. The term emphasizes intellectual and moral stupidity, the opposite of the wisdom that Proverbs celebrates throughout.

(1×) A noun denoting folly or stupidity, used as a personified feminine figure in Proverbs' wisdom poetry. The Spanish 'necedad' captures the sense of foolishness, while the context creates a dramatic contrast between two competing voices calling to humanity. Where Wisdom offers insight and life, Folly offers sensory pleasure leading to death. The personification makes abstract moral choice concrete and vivid—these are not just ideas but compelling voices and attractive figures vying for human hearts. The term represents willful ignorance and moral stupidity. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: folly | es: necedad | fr: כסילות | de: [כסילות] Prov 9:13

כָּסַל H3688 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (1×)

to become stupid, be foolish

This verb means to become stupid or act foolishly. In Jeremiah 10:8, it appears in parallel with 'become brutish,' describing the moral and intellectual degradation of those who worship idols. The prophet mocks idol worshipers: they become stupid together, taught by worthless wooden idols. The word suggests a process of stupefaction—idol worship doesn't just reflect existing foolishness but actively makes people more foolish. The root may originally have meant 'thick' or 'dull,' suggesting mental sluggishness, a numbing of the intellect through false worship.

(1×) A verb meaning to become stupid or foolish, used in prophetic polemic against idolatry. The Spanish 'tontos' (fools) and the parallel with 'brutish' in Jeremiah emphasize the intellectual degradation that accompanies false worship. The construction 'they become stupid and foolish together' suggests both collective action and mutual reinforcement in folly—idol worship creates communities of stupidity. The prophetic mockery is biting: those who trust in carved images are instructed by wood, and their wisdom correspondingly becomes wooden. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: and-foolish | es: y-tontos | fr: [ויכסלו] | de: [ויכסלו] Jer 10:8

כֶּסֶל H3689 N-ms (13×)

Loins or flanks (anatomical); confidence or trust; folly or stupidity — three distinct semantic domains.

A noun with three remarkably distinct meanings whose connection may trace back to the physical loins as the 'seat' of both inward trust and dull insensibility. In sacrificial legislation (Lev 3:4, 10, 15), it denotes the fat-covered flanks near the kidneys — Arabic al-khasiratain ('the two flanks') confirms the anatomical reading. As 'confidence,' it appears in wisdom contexts: Job's misplaced trust (Job 8:14), the righteous person's security in God (Prov 3:26), and Israel's hope (Ps 78:7). The 'folly' sense emerges in Ecclesiastes 7:25 paired with sikhlut ('senselessness') and in the proverbial warning of Psalm 49:13, where Spanish necedad ('foolishness') and German Torheit ('folly') leave no ambiguity.

1. loins, flank (body part) (7×) The anatomical sense: loins, flanks, the fatty tissue around the kidneys and lower back. Arabic al-khasiratain ('the two flanks') and Spanish/English lomos/loins converge precisely. All seven occurrences appear in Levitical sacrificial instructions specifying which fat portions are offered on the altar (Lev 3:4, 10, 15; 4:9; 7:4), plus the psalmist's lament over afflicted loins (Ps 38:7). LOINS WAIST BODY

en: loins, my-loins, the-loins | es: lomos, los-lomos, mis-lomos | fr: comme-insensé, le-loins, כסל | de: [כסל], der-loins, mein-loins Lev 3:4; Lev 3:10; Lev 3:15; Lev 4:9; Lev 7:4

2. confidence, trust, security (4×) Confidence, trust, or security — an abstract sense perhaps derived from the loins as the perceived seat of inward strength. Arabic i'timaduhu ('his reliance'), Spanish confianza ('trust'), and English 'confidence' all agree. Used of misplaced trust that collapses like a spider's web (Job 8:14), proper trust in the LORD as one's confidence (Prov 3:26), and Israel's hope set in God (Ps 78:7). Job 31:24 warns against making gold one's confidence. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: his-confidence, my-confidence, their-confidence | es: confianza-de-ellos, mi-confianza, su-seguridad, | fr: comme-insensé, dans-ton-בכסלך-toi, mon-כסלי-moi | de: [בכסלך], [כסלו], [כסלי] Job 8:14; Job 31:24; Ps 78:7; Prov 3:26

3. folly, stupidity (2×) Folly, stupidity, or senselessness — the most abstract extension, perhaps from the 'thick, dull' quality metaphorically associated with the fatty loins. German Torheit ('folly') and Spanish necedad ('foolishness') are unambiguous. Appears in Ecclesiastes 7:25 paired with sikhlut as the Preacher investigates the nature of folly, and in Psalm 49:13 describing the self-assured path of the foolish. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: folly | es: necedad | fr: comme-insensé, כסל | de: Torheit, [כסל] Ps 49:13; Eccl 7:25

כִּסְלָה H3690 N-fsc / 2ms (2×)

confidence, hope, or the security one trusts in

This term denotes confidence or the source of one's security. Job 4:6 uses it to describe Job's confidence (parallel to his fear of God and integrity), questioning why he now despairs. Psalm 85:8 warns against returning to folly (if the text is emended from the difficult MT). The word suggests settled trust or the basis of one's hope. In Job, it represents the foundation of his earlier stability; in Psalms, it appears in contexts of wisdom and security.

(2×) Confidence or the basis of one's trust and hope. In Job 4:6, Eliphaz reminds Job of his former confidence, rooted in piety and integrity, questioning why this foundation now fails him. The term captures both the subjective feeling of confidence and the objective ground for security. Though the Psalm 85 text is difficult, the sense involves proper versus misplaced trust, wisdom versus folly. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: to-folly, your-confidence | es: a-necedad, tu-confianza | fr: ton-כסלתך-toi, à-folie | de: [כסלתך], zu-Torheit Job 4:6; Ps 85:8

כִּסְלֵו H3691 N-proper-fs (3×)

Kislev, the ninth month of the Jewish calendar (November-December)

A Babylonian-derived month name adopted during the exile, corresponding to late autumn. Kislev runs from mid-November to mid-December in the modern calendar. Nehemiah received his troubling report about Jerusalem's ruined walls in this month, and Zechariah dated one of his night visions to Kislev. The name reflects the broader adoption of Babylonian calendar terminology in post-exilic Judaism.

(3×) Nehemiah 1:1 places Nehemiah's pivotal conversation with Hanani 'in the month of Kislev' (בַּחֹדֶשׁ כִּסְלֵו/כִּסְלֵיו), setting in motion the Jerusalem rebuilding. Zechariah 7:1 dates a prophetic inquiry to the fourth year of Darius, in Kislev. Post-exilic literature shows clear use of Babylonian month names rather than the older Canaanite system (Bul, etc.). Translations consistently transliterate

(Spanish Quisleu, French Kislev), recognizing this as technical calendar terminology preserved in Jewish tradition. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: (Kislev), [Kislev], in-Kislev | es: (Kislev), [Kislev], en-Quisleu | fr: Kislev, [כסלו], [כסליו] | de: [(כסליו)], [[כסלו]], [בכסלו] Neh 1:1; Zech 7:1

כִּסְלֹון H3692 N-proper-fs (1×)

Chislon (father of Elidad, a Benjamite leader)

Chislon was the father of Elidad, who served as the Benjamite representative in the division of Canaan under Joshua (Numbers 34:21). He is mentioned only in the genealogical note identifying his son, with no additional information preserved. His son was chosen as one of the tribal leaders responsible for allocating the promised land among the Israelite tribes after the conquest. The name suggests he was a person of standing in Benjamin, though his own deeds are not recorded.

(1×) A personal name known only as the father of Elidad, Benjamin's representative in the land division. The multilingual consistency in transliteration (Spanish 'Quislón,' French/German 'Chislon') reflects standard handling of patronymic references. His inclusion in Scripture is solely through his son's significant role in the foundational moment of Israel's settlement in Canaan. Such genealogical markers establish continuity, identity, and legitimacy for those who took leadership in defining Israel's territorial inheritance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chislon | es: Quislón | fr: Chislon | de: Chislon Num 34:21

כְּסָלֹון H3693 N-proper-fs (1×)

Kesalon (a town on Judah's northern border)

Kesalon was a town on the northern boundary of Judah's tribal allotment, identified with Mount Jearim in Joshua 15:10. It has been identified with modern Kesla, located about 10 miles west of Jerusalem. The site lay on the important border between Judah and Benjamin, in the hill country that formed Judah's northern frontier. Archaeological and geographical studies have confirmed the general location, making this one of the more securely identified boundary markers in the tribal allotments.

(1×) A place name marking Judah's northern territorial boundary, identified with a site west of Jerusalem. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'Quesalón,' French/German 'Kesalon') reflects straightforward geographical naming. The equivalence with Mount Jearim in the boundary description helps establish the location, and modern identification with Kesla provides continuity with the ancient name. Boundary markers like this were crucial for defining tribal territories and preventing disputes in ancient Israel's decentralized political structure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kesalon | es: Quesalón | fr: Kesalon | de: Kesalon Josh 15:10

כְּסֻלֹות H3694 Conj-w (1×)

Kesulloth (a town in Issachar's territory)

Kesulloth was a town in Issachar's tribal territory mentioned in Joshua 19:18. It is identified with Chisloth-tabor (Joshua 19:12), a location on the western foot of Mount Tabor. The name variation between Kesulloth and Chisloth-tabor likely reflects dialectical differences or scribal variation in the same place name. The site has been identified with modern Iksal, maintaining recognizable phonetic continuity across millennia. The location at the base of Tabor placed it in strategic territory overlooking the Jezreel Valley.

(1×) A town name in Issachar's allotment, identified with the vicinity of Mount Tabor. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Spanish 'Quesulot,' French 'Kesuloth'), treating it as a proper geographical name. The connection to Tabor—both in the variant name and geographical position—helps locate it in Israel's northern hill country. The preservation of the ancient name in modern Iksal demonstrates remarkable continuity in place-name tradition, helping modern scholars map ancient tribal boundaries with some confidence. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Kesuloth | es: y-Quesulot | fr: et-le-Kesuloth | de: und-der-Kesuloth Josh 19:18

כַּסְלֻחִים H3695 N-proper-mp (2×)

descendants of Mizraim (Egypt), an unidentified people group

The Casluhites appear in the Table of Nations as descendants of Mizraim (Egypt) in both Genesis 10:14 and 1 Chronicles 1:12. Their precise identification remains unknown, though they're listed among peoples associated with Egypt and the broader North African region. They appear in a parenthetical note identifying them as the ancestral source of the Philistines, though this connection is debated. The name's preservation despite lost identification testifies to Scripture's care in recording ethnic origins, even when later generations no longer knew these peoples.

(2×) An ethnic group descended from Mizraim in the Table of Nations, associated with the origin of the Philistines. Both biblical occurrences preserve this genealogical information without further elaboration, suggesting the original audience understood the reference better than we do today. The Casluhites represent one of many ancient peoples whose names survive primarily in genealogical memory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Casluhim, Kasluchim | es: Caslujim, Kaslujím | fr: Casluhim, [כסלחים] | de: [כסלחים], die-Kasluchiter Gen 10:14; 1Chr 1:12

כִּסְלוֹת H3696 N-proper-fs (1×)

Kisloth-tabor (a town near Mount Tabor)

Kisloth-tabor, meaning 'flanks of Tabor,' was a town at the western base of Mount Tabor on Issachar's border (Joshua 19:12). It is the same location as Kesulloth mentioned in Joshua 19:18, with the fuller name making the geographical relationship to Tabor explicit. The site has been identified with modern Iksal. The name evokes the image of the town nestled against the side or flank of the prominent Mount Tabor, which rises dramatically from the Jezreel Valley. Tabor later became famous as a possible site of Jesus' transfiguration.

(1×) A compound place name explicitly linking a settlement to Mount Tabor's flanks or sides. The multilingual consistency in transliteration preserves both elements of the name. The geographical descriptor 'flanks/sides of Tabor' is more specific than the alternate name Kesulloth, helping locate the town precisely at the mountain's base. The preservation of Tabor in multiple town names reflects the mountain's prominence as a landmark in Israel's tribal geography, visible from much of the northern valleys. TABOR PLACE NAME

en: Kisloth-Tavor | es: Quislot-tabor | fr: Kisloth-Tavor | de: Kisloth-Tavor Josh 19:12

כָּסַם H3697 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (2×)

to trim, clip, or shear (as hair)

This verb describes trimming or clipping, used specifically in Ezekiel 44:20 for priests' hair maintenance. They were to neither shave their heads completely nor let their hair grow wild, but rather trim it properly - a middle way of holiness distinct from both pagan practices (head-shaving) and disorder (unkempt growth). The infinitive absolute intensifies the command ('they shall surely trim'), emphasizing the requirement's importance. This prescription balances order and distinction, creating visible markers of priestly status and holiness.

(2×) To trim or clip hair to proper length, appearing twice in Ezekiel 44:20 (infinitive absolute plus imperfect for emphasis). The command establishes priestly grooming standards distinct from both mourning practices (complete shaving) and neglect (excessive growth). This careful trimming maintained visible holiness without adopting pagan customs, embodying the principle of being set apart while avoiding syncretistic practices. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: they-shall-trim, trimming | es: cortando, cortarán | fr: tondre | de: [יכסמו], [כסום] Ezek 44:20

כֻּסֶּמֶת H3698 Conj-w / N-fp (3×)
spelt, a hardy grain similar to wheat (Triticum spelta)
An ancient grain variety, hardier and more drought-resistant than common wheat, cultivated in Egypt and Israel. Spelt ripens later than barley and wheat, which explains why it survived the seventh plague of hail in Exodus while earlier crops were destroyed. Isaiah mentions it among grains planted in ordered rows, illustrating the farmer's wisdom in crop management—a metaphor for God's purposeful governance.

(3×) Exodus 9:32 notes that spelt (כֻּסֶּמֶת) and wheat escaped the hail plague because they ripen late (אֲפִילֹת הֻנָּהּ). Isaiah 28:25 includes it in a list of carefully planted grains, each sown in its proper place. Ezekiel 4:9 prescribes spelt among grains for siege bread. The term's agricultural specificity is preserved across languages: Spanish 'espelta,' French 'épeautre,' German 'spelt'—all designating this distinct grain variety, still cultivated in specialty markets today. GRAIN AND WHEAT
en: and-spelt, and-the-spelt | es: y-espelta, y-la-espelta | fr: [וכסמת], et-le-spelt, et-épeautre | de: [וכסמים], [וכסמת], und-der-spelt Exod 9:32; Isa 28:25; Ezek 4:9

כָּסַס H3699 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (1×)
to count, compute, reckon
This verb means to count or compute, appearing in Exodus 12:4 in the Passover regulations. The instruction specifies that each household should count or compute according to the amount each person can eat to determine how many should share one lamb. The word emphasizes careful calculation—not haphazard estimation but deliberate reckoning to ensure nothing is wasted and everyone is properly included. The root may relate to dividing up or making small portions, suggesting precise apportionment. The context is ritual law where precision matters for proper observance.

(1×) A verb meaning to compute or count precisely, used in Passover regulations for determining lamb portions. The Spanish 'contaréis' (you shall count) captures the mandatory calculation, while the context requires mathematical precision—'according to what each person eats' demands assessment of actual consumption. This is not casual counting but liturgical reckoning ensuring both adequate provision and proper reverence. The verb underscores how Israel's worship involved careful attention to material details as expressions of spiritual obedience. COUNTING AND NARRATING en: you-shall-count | es: contaréis | fr: tu—compter | de: du-soll-zaehlen Exod 12:4

כָּסַף H3700 V-Nifal-Perf-2ms (6×)
To long for, yearn deeply; expressing intense desire or pining, often directed toward God or home.
A verb of intense emotional longing, used in both Qal and Niphal stems with no clear difference in meaning between them. Its most memorable occurrence is the Niphal infinitive absolute construction in Genesis 31:30, where Laban accuses Jacob: 'you longed sorely for your father's house.' The Psalms employ it for spiritual yearning – the soul that 'longs, even faints' for God's courts (Ps 84:2). German Sehnsucht ('longing') and Spanish anhelar ('to yearn') both capture the ache of desire this word conveys. The Arabic cognate kasafa ('to be eclipsed, dimmed') suggests an original association with pallor or fading – the physical appearance of someone consumed by longing.

long for, yearn (6×) Deep yearning or longing directed toward a person, place, or God. The Niphal infinitive absolute in Genesis 31:30 ('you longed sorely for your father's house') emphasizes the intensity through doubling. In Job 14:15, God is imagined as longing for the work of his hands, and in Psalm 17:12, it describes a lion's fierce desire to tear prey. Psalm 84:2 transforms the word into spiritual devotion: 'My soul longs, yes, even faints for the courts of the LORD.' German Sehnsucht and Spanish anhelar perfectly mirror this word's emotional depth. The Arabic root's association with eclipse and pallor hints that the original image was of someone visibly wasting away with desire. DESIRE AND COVETING en: longed-for, longing, longs | es: Anheló, anhelar, anhelarás | fr: désirer, longing, tu-longed | de: Sehnsucht, [נכסף], [תכסף] Gen 31:30; Job 14:15; Ps 17:12; Ps 84:2

כֶּסֶף H3701 N-msc / 3ms (404×)
Silver as a precious metal; by extension, money or currency weighed out for payment, purchase, or redemption.
One of the most economically significant words in the Hebrew Bible, keseph denotes both the physical metal silver and the money derived from it. In the ancient Near East silver served as the primary medium of exchange long before coined currency, so the same word covers both the gleaming metal used for temple vessels and the weighed-out payment Abraham counted for the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:15-16). German translations revealingly alternate between Silber (the substance) and Geld (money), while French uses argent for both — a parallel semantic merger. Spanish plata likewise carries both senses, mirroring the Hebrew polysemy almost exactly.

1. silver as money, currency (211×) Split from sense 107078. Criteria: Silver weighed out for payment, purchase, redemption, transactions; the monetary sense where silver functions as medium of exchange en: silver | es: de-plata, plata, plata-de | fr: argent | de: Geld, Silber, Silberlinge Gen 17:12; Gen 17:27; Gen 20:16; Gen 23:15; Gen 23:16

2. silver as physical material (180×) Split from sense 107078. Criteria: The precious metal used for crafting objects, temple vessels, ornamentation, refining imagery; Exodus 25-38, Zech 13:9, Ps 12:7
en: silver | es: plata | fr: argent | de: Silber, aus-Silber Gen 24:53; Exod 3:22; Exod 11:2; Exod 12:35; Exod 20:23

3. money, purchase price (12×) Silver functioning as money, currency, or purchase price (12x) — weighed out in commercial transactions, wages, fines, or redemption payments. Possessive suffixes ('his money,' 'our money') mark this sense distinctly, as seen in Joseph's brothers discovering their returned silver (Gen 42:25-35). German Geld versus Silber neatly flags the shift from substance to currency. Laban's complaint that he treated his daughters as foreigners and 'consumed our money' (Gen 31:15) illustrates the economic sense. SILVER AND MONEY
en: his-money, his-silver, its-silver | es: Su-plata, plata-mía, plata-nuestra | fr: comme-argent, leur-argent, mon-argent | de: euer-Geld, ihr-Geld, ihres-Geldes Gen 31:15; Gen 42:25; Gen 42:27; Gen 42:28; Gen 42:35

כְּסַף H3702 N-ms (13×)
Silver, money — the precious metal used as material and currency (Aramaic)
The Aramaic noun for silver, appearing exclusively in the books of Daniel and Ezra. It functions in two closely related senses: as a physical material in Nebuchadnezzar's statue and the temple vessels (Dan 2:32, 35, 45; 5:2, 4, 23; Ezra 5:14; 6:5), and as currency or monetary value in royal decrees funding the temple reconstruction (Ezra 7:15–18, 22). Spanish 'plata' and French 'argent' both preserve this dual metal-and-money range, exactly mirroring its Hebrew cognate כֶּסֶף. The word reflects the post-exilic economic world where silver was the standard of exchange.

silver, money (13×) Silver as precious metal and as money (כְּסַף, Aramaic). In Daniel it denotes the physical substance: the silver chest of the great statue (Dan 2:32, 35, 45) and silver temple vessels (Dan 5:2, 4, 23; Ezra 5:14; 6:5). In Ezra it functions as currency in royal grants for the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 7:15–18, 22). Spanish 'plata' and French 'argent' equally preserve both the material and monetary senses. SILVER AND MONEY
en: and-silver, silver, silver- | es: con-esta-plata, la-plata, plata | fr: argent, et-argent, et-l'argent | de: Silber, [בכספא], [וכספא] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 7:15; Ezra 7:16; Ezra 7:17

כַּסְפְּיָא H3703 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)
Casiphia, a Babylonian location where temple servants were found

Casiphia was a site in Babylonia where Ezra sent messengers to recruit Levites and temple servants for the return to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:17). The location housed a community led by Iddo, with access to temple personnel. Its exact identification remains uncertain, though the name may derive from a word meaning 'silver' (the LXX translates it that way). The double mention in verse 17 emphasizes both the place and the mission, showing Ezra's determination to secure proper liturgical personnel for temple service, not just lay returnees.

(2×) A Babylonian locale where a Jewish community preserved temple service traditions during exile. Both occurrences in Ezra 8:17 refer to the same place in the same verse, emphasizing it as 'the place Casiphia' where leaders and temple servants could be found. This community maintained continuity with temple service even in exile, enabling Ezra's mission to recruit qualified personnel for Jerusalem's restored worship. PERSONAL NAMES

en: at-Kasifyah | es: en-Kasifyah | fr: [בכסכיא] | de: [בכסכיא] Ezra 8:17

כְּסָת H3704 N-fpc / 2fp (2×)

magic bands or amulets sewn by false prophetesses

These mysterious objects appear only in Ezekiel 13:18-20, describing items created by false prophetesses for manipulative purposes. The exact nature is debated - possibly magical bands, amulets, cushions, or veils. The women sewed these items for people's wrists or elbows, apparently in divination or enchantment practices that God condemns. The term may relate to cushions or supports, or to binding/magical bands. Whatever their precise form, they represented unauthorized spiritual manipulation, contrasted with true prophetic ministry.

(2×) Magical bands or amulets created by false prophetesses in practices God condemns. Ezekiel describes women sewing these items for various arm positions, apparently as part of divination or enchantment. The second occurrence includes the possessive suffix, referring to 'your bands,' directly addressing the women engaged in this condemned practice. These objects symbolized false spiritual authority and manipulative religion. SPELL ENCHANTMENT

en: bands, bands-of-you | es: bandas, bandas-de-vosotras | fr: [כסתות], [כסתותיכנה] | de: [כסתות], [כסתותיכנה] Ezek 13:18; Ezek 13:20

כְּעַן H3705 Adv (13×)

Now — Aramaic temporal adverb marking present time or logical transition

An Aramaic adverb meaning 'now,' used to anchor discourse in the present moment or to introduce the next logical step in an argument. It appears throughout Daniel and Ezra in royal decrees, prayers, and official correspondence. In Ezra it typically opens a new section of administrative directive — 'now therefore' (Ezra 4:13–14, 21; 5:17; 6:6) — while in Daniel it marks transitions in narrative and prayer (Dan 2:23; 3:15; 4:37; 5:12, 15–16; 6:8). The phrase עַד־כְּעַן 'until now' in Ezra 5:16 extends it to mark duration. Spanish 'ahora,' French 'maintenant,' and German 'jetzt/nun' all confirm the straightforward temporal meaning.

now (13×) The Aramaic temporal adverb 'now' (כְּעַן), marking present time or introducing a logical transition in discourse. In official letters it functions as 'now therefore,' opening new directives (Ezra 4:13–14, 21; 5:17; 6:6). In narrative and prayer it signals the present moment: Daniel's thanksgiving (Dan 2:23), royal challenges (Dan 3:15), and Nebuchadnezzar's restoration (Dan 4:37). The phrase עַד כְּעַן ('until now,' Ezra 5:16) extends it to express temporal duration. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: and-now, now | es: Ahora, Y-ahora, ahora | fr: et-maintenant, maintenant | de: jetzt, nun, und-jetzt Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:16; Ezra 5:17

כְּעֶנֶת H3706 Conj-w / Adv (4×)

and now (Aramaic); formulaic phrase introducing the main business of official letters

This Aramaic adverbial phrase, a contraction of a longer form, serves as an epistolary formula in official correspondence. It introduces the substantive business of a letter after the greeting, functioning like 'and now to the matter at hand.' All its biblical occurrences appear in letters preserved in Ezra's Aramaic sections, where Persian officials write to and from the Jewish community. The phrase was formerly misunderstood as 'and so forth,' but Egyptian Aramaic papyri confirmed its meaning as 'and now,' marking the transition from letter opening to body.

(4×) The phrase appears four times in official letters within Ezra's Aramaic chapters. It introduces the body of the letter from Rehum and Shimshai: 'and now, let it be known to the king...' (Ezra 4:11-12). King Artaxerxes begins his response: 'and now, the letter which you sent...' (Ezra 4:17). A later royal letter opens: 'and now, I make a decree...' (Ezra 7:12). Earlier manuscripts mistakenly included it at the end of verse 10 (Ezra 4:10) by scribal error. Spanish y-ahora and French et-maintenant preserve the temporal 'and now' sense, while German leaves the Aramaic forms in brackets, recognizing the technical epistolary function. NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: and-now, and-so-forth | es: y-ahora, y-ahora. | fr: [וכעת], et-maintenant | de: [וכענת], [וכעת] Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 7:12

כָּעַס H3707 Art / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (55×)

To provoke to anger or be vexed; causatively to incite wrath (especially divine), or intransitively to experience anger or indignation oneself.

A verb of provocation and vexation that appears most often in the dire warnings of Deuteronomy and Kings, where Israel's idolatry 'provokes' the LORD to anger. In its causative Hifil stem it carries tremendous theological weight — virtually every occurrence names God as the one provoked. Yet in the quieter Qal stem the word turns inward: a wicked man sees blessing and is simply 'vexed' (Ps 112:10), or Qoheleth warns against being hasty in spirit to be angry (Eccl 7:9). The intimate scene of Peninnah taunting Hannah (1 Sam 1:6–7) reveals a rarer interpersonal edge, where provocation is not cosmic but painfully domestic.

1. provoke to anger (causative) (47×) The dominant causative use (Hifil and theological Piel): provoking someone — overwhelmingly God — to anger through idolatry, sin, or rebellion. Spanish 'provocar a ira' and Arabic ɣ both capture the causative force. This is the language of covenant lawsuit: 'they provoked me to anger with their idols' (Deut 32:16, 21). Nearly every occurrence in Kings uses this sense to explain why judgment fell on Israel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [provoke-me-to-anger], provoke-Me-to-anger, provoke-me-to-anger | es: [provocarme-a-ira], le-provocó, para-provocar | fr: irriter, provoqua-lui, provoquant | de: erzuernen, provoked-ihn, provoking Deut 4:25; Deut 9:18; Deut 31:29; Deut 32:16; Deut 32:21

2. be angry or vexed (6×) The intransitive Qal sense: to be angry, vexed, or emotionally distressed oneself, without directing that anger outward at another. Korean 화를 내다 ('to let out anger') and Swahili -kasirika ('to be angry') confirm the reflexive, internal quality. Asa 'was angry' at the seer (2 Chr 16:10), the wicked man 'is vexed' watching the righteous prosper (Ps 112:10), and Qoheleth counsels patience over quick-tempered vexation (Eccl 7:9). ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: and-he-was-angry, and-is-vexed, and-vexation | es: a-enojarte, me-enojaré, y-enojo | fr: [ויכעס], et-irriter, irriter | de: [ויכעס], [וכעס], [לכעוס] 2Chr 16:10; Neh 4:1; Ps 112:10; Eccl 5:17; Eccl 7:9

3. vex or taunt interpersonally (2×) A specialized interpersonal use in the Peninnah-Hannah narrative (1 Sam 1:6–7): to vex, taunt, or torment another person through rivalry. Swahili -chokoza ('to tease, needle') distinguishes this from general anger-provocation. Here the provocation is not theological but relational — a rival wife deliberately goading a barren woman to tears, making this sense uniquely personal and domestic. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-provoked-her, she-provoked-her | es: Y-la-provocaba, la-provocaba | fr: elle-provoqua-sa, et-provoqua-sa | de: sie-provoked-ihr, und-provoked-ihr 1Sam 1:6; 1Sam 1:7

כַּעַס H3708a N-ms (21×)

Vexation, grief, or provocation; the inner anguish of the wronged or the anger stirred by idolatry.

Ka'as sits at the crossroads of grief and anger – it names the gnawing inner pain that comes from being wronged, the provocation that kindles divine fury, and the sharp indignation that flares in response. Hannah's rival provoked her severely, and the narrator calls it ka'as (1 Sam 1:6, 16), a word that captures both the torment she felt and the malice that caused it. The Deuteronomistic historians chose this same noun when cataloguing Israel's idolatries that 'provoked' the LORD (1 Kgs 15:30; 2 Kgs 23:26), while the Wisdom writers use it for the everyday frustration of dealing with a fool (Prov 12:16; 27:3). Spanish 'enojo/pesar,' French 'chagrin,' and German equivalents all hover between sorrow and anger, mirroring the Hebrew ambiguity.

1. vexation, grief, sorrow (8×) Inner vexation, grief, or sorrow – the emotional distress that settles on someone who has been hurt or disappointed. Hannah's anguished prayer rises from her ka'as (1 Sam 1:16), and the psalmist's eye wastes away 'from grief' (Ps 6:7; 31:9). French 'chagrin' and Spanish 'pesar' both capture this inward, suffering dimension. Ecclesiastes 1:18 pairs it with knowledge: more insight brings more sorrow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-my-grief, and-vexation, from-grief | es: de-pesar, enojo, ira | fr: chagrin, dans-chagrin, de-chagrin | de: [וכעס], [כעס], in-grief 1Sam 1:16; Ps 6:7; Ps 10:14; Ps 31:9; Eccl 1:18

2. provocation, cause of anger (8×) Provocation, the act or occasion of stirring someone to anger, especially in the Deuteronomistic formula where Israel's idolatry 'provokes' God. The construct chain ka'as qorbanam (Ezek 20:28) – 'the provocation of their offering' – makes the idol-sacrifice itself the irritant. Spanish 'provocacion' and French 'provocation' translate this sense directly. Key passages: Deuteronomy 32:19, 27; 1 Kings 15:30; 21:22. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-provocation-of, provocation, provocation-of | es: Enojo, con-su-provocación, la-provocación | fr: avec-son-provocation, chagrin, de-provocation-de | de: [כעס], der-provocation, der-provocations Deut 32:19; Deut 32:27; 1Sam 1:6; 1Kgs 15:30; 1Kgs 21:22

3. anger, indignation, wrath (5×) Active anger, indignation, or wrath directed outward – not the cause of anger but anger itself as a burning emotion. Proverbs 12:16 warns that a fool's ka'as is 'known at once,' and Psalm 85:4 asks God to cease his ka'as toward his people. German and French renderings oscillate between 'Zorn' and 'chagrin,' reflecting how quickly grief can curdle into fury. Key passages: Proverbs 21:19; 27:3; Ecclesiastes 7:9. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-vexation, anger, but-vexation-of | es: e-ira, e-ira-de, enojo | fr: chagrin, comme-chagrin, et-chagrin | de: [וכעס], [כעס], [כעסו] Ps 85:4; Prov 12:16; Prov 21:19; Prov 27:3; Eccl 7:9

כַּעַשׂ H3708b Prep-m / N-ms (4×)

vexation, grief, anger (dialectical variant of כעס, found only in Job)

This noun, a dialectical variation of the more common ka'as, appears exclusively in Job's poetry to describe emotional distress—whether human vexation and grief, or divine anger. The term captures the irritation, frustration, and indignation that suffering produces, as Job pleads for God to understand his 'vexation' and anguish. It can describe both the inward grief of the afflicted and the outward anger of God against sin.

(4×) The term appears four times in Job describing vexation and anger. Eliphaz warns that 'vexation kills the fool' (Job 5:2, parallel to envy/jealousy). Job laments, 'Oh that my vexation were weighed' alongside his calamity (Job 6:2). Job accuses God: 'You renew your anger against me' literally 'your vexation with me' (Job 10:17). An aged counselor notes that 'vexation' is unbecoming in the aged (Job 17:7, parallel to dimness of eye). Spanish indignación/aflicción/ira and French chagrin track the emotional distress across Romance languages, while German leaves the Hebrew forms in brackets, recognizing this rare lexical variant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-anger, from-grief, my-vexation | es: la-ira, mi-aflicción, por-indignación | fr: chagrin, de-chagrin, mon-chagrin-moi | de: [כעש], [כעשי], [כעשך] Job 5:2; Job 6:2; Job 10:17; Job 17:7

כַּף H3709 N-fsc / 1cs (195×)

Palm of the hand, sole of the foot; also: ladle/dish, hip socket, paw, handle, palm-frond

The noun kaf captures anything hollow, cupped, or flat — beginning with the open human palm. From the palm of the hand that Moses lifts in prayer (Exod 9:29) to the sole of the foot that finds no rest (Gen 8:9), kaf maps the body's natural concavities. It extends by metaphor to cultic vessels shaped like open palms (the tabernacle ladles of Num 7:84), to the socket of Jacob's hip joint (Gen 32:25), and even to the handles of a door bolt (Song 5:5). Cognate Arabic kaff and Aramaic kappa confirm the pan-Semitic range. The word's genius lies in its shape-based logic: wherever there is a hollow or flat surface, kaf may apply.

1. palm of the hand (155×) The open palm or hand — by far the dominant sense, covering grasping, holding, striking, clapping, spreading in prayer, and placing objects on the palm. Genesis 40:11 has the cupbearer pressing grapes into Pharaoh's kaf; Leviticus 8:27 places offerings on Aaron's kappayim. Arabic kaff, Spanish palma, and German Handfläche all confirm the primary anatomical meaning. The dual form kappayim appears frequently for both hands together. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-hand-of, from-palm-of, ladle-of | es: Cuchara, de-la-mano-de, de-mano-de | fr: comme-ma-bouche, de-main-de, de-paume-de | de: ladle-von, mein-Handfläche, von-Hand-von Gen 40:11; Gen 40:21; Exod 29:24; Lev 8:27

2. sole of the foot (20×) The sole or bottom surface of the foot, distinguished from the palm by context (often with regel, 'foot'). Genesis 8:9 records the dove finding no resting place for 'the sole of her foot,' and Deuteronomy's boundary formula promises 'every place the sole of your foot treads' (Deut 11:24). Korean balbadak (foot-sole) versus sonbadak (palm) and Arabic bāṭin al-qadam versus kaff al-yad show how target languages must disambiguate what Hebrew unifies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-sole-of, for-sole-of-, from-sole-of | es: Desde-planta-de, como-planta-de, con-la-planta | fr: avec-sole-de, de-paume, de-sole-de | de: Handflaeche, Handflaechee, der-soles-von Gen 8:9; Deut 2:5; Deut 11:24; Deut 28:35; Deut 28:56

3. ladle, dish, or spoon (13×) A palm-shaped cultic vessel — a ladle, dish, or spoon used for incense and offerings in the tabernacle and temple. Numbers 7:84-86 tallies twelve golden kappot filled with incense. Spanish cucharas (spoons) and the consistent tabernacle inventory context set this apart from the anatomical senses. The vessel's shallow, open shape motivates the metaphorical extension from body part to ritual object. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-dishes, and-ladles, and-the-dishes | es: Cucharas-de, cucharas-de, la-cuchara | fr: et-le-dishes, et-paume, et-son-dishes | de: Handflaeche, der-dishes, der-ladle Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16; Num 4:7; Num 7:84; Num 7:86

4. hip socket or hollow joint (4×) The hollow of the thigh joint or hip socket, occurring exclusively in the Jacob-wrestling narrative (Gen 32:25, 32). The angel strikes the kaf of Jacob's thigh, dislocating it. Arabic ḥuqq (socket, hollow) and Spanish articulación (joint) confirm the anatomical-joint reading. The shape logic persists: kaf is the concave socket into which the femoral head fits. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-socket-of-, socket-of, socket-of- | es: articulación-de, en-articulación-de | fr: base-de, base-de-, dans-base-de- | de: der-Hüftpfanne, die-Hüftpfanne- Gen 32:25; Gen 32:32

5. (1×) The paw of an animal — in Leviticus 11:27, creatures 'walking on their paws' (kappayim). English paws, Spanish palmas, and French pattes (via the gloss) all render this zoological extension. The flat, padded underside of an animal's foot mirrors the human palm, making the semantic transfer natural. FLESH AND BODY

en: its-paws | es: sus-palmas | fr: son-paws | de: sein-paws Lev 11:27

6. (1×) The handle or grip of a door bolt, as in Song of Solomon 5:5 where the beloved's hands drip myrrh 'upon the handles of the bolt.' Spanish manijas and French poignées confirm the artifact sense. The handle's concave gripping surface connects it to the cupped-palm prototype. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: handles-of | es: las-manijas-de | fr: les-poignées | de: Handflaechee Song 5:5

7. (1×) Palm-fronds or branches of a palm tree, as in Leviticus 23:40 where Israel is commanded to take 'branches of palm trees' (kappot temarim) for the Feast of Tabernacles. Spanish ramas and French branches render the botanical sense. The broad, flat shape of the palm leaf motivates its naming after the open hand — a vivid shape metaphor preserved across Semitic languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: branches-of | es: ramas-de | fr: branches-de | de: Aeste-von Lev 23:40

כֵּף H3710 Conj-w (2×)
rocks or rocky places serving as refuge or dwelling
This term denotes rocks or rocky places, possibly an Aramaic loanword. It appears in Job 30:6, describing desperate people dwelling in rocks, and Jeremiah 4:29, where people flee into rocks as cities are abandoned before invasion. The plural form suggests rocky areas, cliffs, or caves - places offering shelter, whether for the destitute or the fleeing. The contexts emphasize extremity: either utter destitution (Job) or desperate refuge from military threat (Jeremiah). Rocks become home only under duress.

(2×) Rocky places serving as refuge or dwelling for those in desperate circumstances. In Jeremiah, entire populations flee to rocks as invaders approach, while in Job the description emphasizes the degraded state of outcasts living in rocks and caves. The term captures natural features that offer shelter when normal habitations fail, either through poverty or invasion, representing marginalization and desperation. ROCK AND CLIFF en: and-into-the-rocks, and-rocks | es: y-en-peñascos, y-rocas | fr: [ובכפים], et-כפים | de: [ובכפים], [וכפים] Job 30:6; Jer 4:29

כָּפָה H3711 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
to subdue, pacify, turn away (anger)
This verb means to subdue or pacify, appearing in Proverbs 21:14 with reference to a secret gift subduing anger. The word suggests pressing down, holding under control, or turning aside—taking something potentially explosive and rendering it harmless. Some translations understand it as 'averts' or 'turns away,' while others prefer 'subdues' or 'pacifies.' The proverb's wisdom is practical: strategic, discreet generosity can defuse dangerous anger. The verb captures the idea of using leverage to control a situation, bending hostile will through well-placed gifts.

(1×) A verb meaning to subdue or pacify anger through strategic action. The Spanish 'apacigua' (pacifies, appeases) aligns well with the context of conflict management through gifts. The parallel phrase 'a bribe in the bosom, strong wrath' suggests that hidden, private gifts have particular power to neutralize hostility. The verb emphasizes active intervention—not passive waiting for anger to cool but deliberate action to suppress or redirect it. Proverbs recognizes both the power of anger and the tactical value of well-timed generosity. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING en: subdues | es: apacigua- | fr: יכפה | de: [יכפה] Prov 21:14

כִּפָּה H3712 N-fs (3×)
palm frond or branch, used figuratively for nobility and high status
The leafy crown or frond of a palm tree, employed as a social metaphor. Isaiah twice contrasts 'palm branch' (representing nobles and leaders) with 'rush' or 'reed' (representing the common people), using the botanical hierarchy to depict the totality of judgment—from highest to lowest. Job applies the image to the wicked person whose 'palm frond' will not flourish, a picture of premature withering despite initial promise.

(3×) Isaiah 9:14 [Eng. 9:13] and 19:15 use identical phrasing: 'head and tail, palm branch and reed' (רֹאשׁ וְזָנָב כִּפָּה וְאַגְמֹן), a merism encompassing all social strata. The palm's tall, crowned silhouette naturally symbolizes elevated status. Job 15:32 predicts the wicked's כַּפָּה will not be green, denying them the palm's emblematic vitality and endurance. Translations navigate between literal 'palm branch' (Spanish palmera/rama) and the figurative sense of high station the image conveys. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS
en: and-branch-his, palm-branch | es: palmera, y-su-rama | fr: [כפה], et-son-palme-lui | de: [וכפתו], [כפה] Job 15:32; Isa 9:14; Isa 19:15

כְּפוֹר H3713a Conj-w / N-mpc (9×)
A bowl or basin of gold or silver used as a sacred vessel in temple service.
This noun designates a bowl or basin crafted from precious metal for use in the temple. All nine occurrences cluster in late texts describing sacred furnishings: David's specifications for gold and silver bowls in 1 Chronicles 28:17, and the inventory of vessels returned from Babylonian exile in Ezra 1:10 and 8:27. The word is related to Aramaic kephora, suggesting a wide, open vessel. Spanish renders it 'taza/copas' (cup/goblets) and French 'coupe' (cup), though the Hebrew specifically evokes the ritual context of temple worship.

bowl, basin (9×) A bowl or basin made of gold or silver, serving as a sacred vessel in Israelite temple worship. Found exclusively in late texts — 1 Chronicles 28:17 (six times in the passage, detailing David's weighed-out specifications for gold bowls and silver bowls) and Ezra 1:10 and 8:27 (listing vessels returned from Babylonian captivity). Spanish 'taza/copas' and French 'coupe' suggest drinking vessels, but the Hebrew term emphasizes their cultic function as temple furnishings rather than ordinary tableware. The Aramaic cognate kephora confirms the sense of a broad, open basin. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-basin, and-bowls-of, and-for-the-basins-of | es: copas-de, para-taza, y-para-tazas-de | fr: coupe, et-coupe | de: [וכפור], [וכפרי], [ולכפורי] 1Chr 28:17

כְּפוֹר H3713b Prep-k (3×)
hoarfrost, white frost formed by frozen dew
The delicate white ice crystals that form on cold mornings when dew freezes. Exodus compares the appearance of manna to hoarfrost on the ground—fine, white, flake-like. The psalmist celebrates God scattering frost like ashes, part of the winter phenomena under divine control. Job's divine interrogation includes frost's origin, numbered among creation's mysteries beyond human mastery.

(3×) Exodus 16:14 describes manna's appearance using a double simile: 'fine as hoarfrost on the ground' (דַּק כַּכְּפֹר), emphasizing its delicate, crystalline quality. Job 38:29 asks rhetorically who birthed the hoarfrost of heaven, personifying it within creation's wonders. Psalm 147:16 praises God who 'gives hoarfrost like ashes' (יִתֵּן כְּפוֹר כָּאֵפֶר). The imagery is consistently visual—white, fine-textured, ephemeral—qualities preserved in translations (Spanish escarcha, French 'frost'). SNOW PRECIPITATION en: and-the-frost-of, frost, like-the-frost | es: como-la-escarcha, escarcha, y-escarcha-de | fr: comme-coupe, comme-le-frost, et-וכפר | de: frost, und-Loesegeld, wie-der-frost Exod 16:14; Job 38:29; Ps 147:16

כָּפִיס H3714 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
rafter, beam
This noun likely denotes a rafter or beam in construction, appearing in Habakkuk 2:11. The prophet declares that stones will cry out from the wall, and the beam from the timberwork will answer them—even the inanimate materials of houses built through violence and injustice testify against their builders. The exact technical meaning is uncertain (suggestions include rafter, girder, or other structural timber), but clearly it refers to wooden components in building construction. The image personifies the building materials themselves as witnesses to crime.

(1×) A construction term for a wooden structural element, probably a rafter or beam, used in prophetic poetry. The Spanish 'viga' (beam) and French 'suffisance' (which seems to take a different angle) reflect uncertainty about the precise technical term. The context in Habakkuk creates a powerful image: even stones and timbers become accusers, crying out against houses built with blood money. The building itself becomes a prosecuting witness, its very materials animated to testify against injustice and ill-gotten wealth. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15269 WITH 5 SENSES

en: and-a-beam | es: y-la-viga | fr: et-suffisance | de: [וכפיס] Hab 2:11

כְּפִיר H3715a Art / N-mp (31×)

young lion — an adolescent lion old enough to hunt, used literally and as a figure of fierce power or threat

Kephir designates a young lion past the helpless cub stage (gur) but not yet the full-maned adult (ari), appearing 31 times across narrative, wisdom, prophetic, and poetic texts. The word enters Scripture with Samson tearing apart a young lion at Timnah (Judg 14:5), and its most vivid portrayal comes in Ezekiel 19:2-6, where a lioness raises cubs that become kephirim — young lions who learn to catch prey and devour men, allegorizing Judah's doomed princes. The Psalms use it for lurking predators: 'like a young lion crouching in ambush' (Ps 17:12), yet also affirm that 'the young lions lack and suffer hunger, but those who seek the LORD lack no good thing' (Ps 34:10). Isaiah's peaceable kingdom places the kephir alongside the calf and the fatling, led by a little child (Isa 11:6). Micah envisions Israel among the nations like a young lion among flocks of sheep (Mic 5:7). Cognate Aramaic kephira and Arabic confirm the zoological referent across Semitic languages.

young lion, lion cub (31×) A young or adolescent lion, past the helpless cub stage but not fully mature, old enough to hunt prey. Samson encounters one at Timnah (Judg 14:5). Ezekiel allegorizes Judah's princes as young lions trained to devour (Ezek 19:2-6). The Psalms use the image for lurking danger (Ps 17:12) and divine provision that surpasses even a lion's strength (Ps 34:10). Isaiah's messianic vision places the young lion peacefully beside the calf (Isa 11:6). Micah casts Israel as a kephir among sheep (Mic 5:7). LIONS AND CUBS

en: and-like-a-young-lion, and-like-young-lion, and-the-young-lion | es: Los-leoncillos, cachorro, como-cachorro-de-león | fr: comme-lionceau, comme-ככפיר, de-lionceau | de: Jungloewe, [והככפיר], [וככפיר] Judg 14:5; Job 4:10; Job 38:39; Ps 17:12; Ps 34:10

כְּפִירִים H3715b Prep-b (1×)

in the villages, in the open settlements

This prepositional phrase means 'in the villages' or 'in the open settlements,' appearing in Nehemiah 6:2. Sanballat and Geshem invite Nehemiah to meet them in 'the villages in the plain of Ono,' which Nehemiah recognizes as a trap. The Septuagint suggests taking it as a common noun meaning villages rather than as a proper name. The term refers to unwalled settlements or outlying communities, in contrast to fortified cities. Meeting in such vulnerable locations would have exposed Nehemiah to ambush, which is precisely what he discerned the invitation to be.

(1×) A prepositional phrase denoting villages or unwalled settlements, used in the context of Nehemiah's opponents trying to lure him to a vulnerable location. The Spanish 'en las aldeas' (in the villages) treats it as a common noun for settlements, while the context makes clear these were open areas away from Jerusalem's walls—dangerous ground for someone with enemies. Nehemiah's refusal to meet there shows political wisdom: understanding that geography matters in negotiations and that leaving secure positions invites disaster. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9636 WITH 3 SENSES

en: in-the-villages | es: en-las-aldeas | fr: [בכפירים] | de: [בכפירים] Neh 6:2

כְּפִירָה H3716 N-proper-fs (4×)

Kephirah, a Hivite/Gibeonite city later assigned to Benjamin, modern Kefireh

Kephirah was one of the four Gibeonite cities that made a treaty with Joshua through deception, claiming to come from a far country when they actually lived nearby. After the conquest, it was assigned to the tribal territory of Benjamin. The city appears in post-exilic census lists, showing that returnees from exile resettled it. Modern scholars identify it with Kefireh, located in the hill country west of Jerusalem.

(4×) Kephirah appears in conquest and settlement accounts. Joshua discovered it was one of the four Gibeonite cities that had deceived him (Josh 9:17). It was assigned to Benjamin's inheritance (Josh 18:26). Census lists record its population after the exile: the men of Kephirah and Beeroth numbered 743 in the first return (Ezra 2:25), recorded as 621 in Nehemiah's parallel list (Neh 7:29). The Septuagint renders it Kepheira or similar Greek approximations. Spanish Quefira/Quefirá, French Kephirah/ha-Kephirah, and German Kephirah preserve phonetic equivalents, with some including the definite article marker (ha-). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chephirah, Kefirah, and-ha-Kephirah | es: Quefira, Quefirá, y-Cefira | fr: [כפירה], et-ha-Kephirah, et-le-Kephirah | de: [כפירה], und-der-Kephirah, und-ha-Kephirah Josh 9:17; Josh 18:26; Ezra 2:25; Neh 7:29

כָּפַל H3717 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (5×)

To double, fold over; passive: folded double; niphal: to be doubled (of a sword)

Kaphal describes the action of doubling or folding something over, a concrete term drawn from textile and craft work. In Exodus 26:9 it refers to folding the sixth curtain of the tabernacle, while in Exodus 28:16 and 39:9 it describes the breastpiece of the high priest being made as a square folded double. The more dramatic usage appears in Ezekiel 21:14, where the prophet's sword is commanded to 'be doubled' – an intensification of divine judgment. Cognates in Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic confirm the core meaning of doubling or folding.

(5×) To double or fold over, especially of fabric or textile in cultic construction. Spanish 'doblar/doblado' and French 'double' align with English 'doubled.' The active Qal appears in Exodus 26:9 for folding the tabernacle curtain, while the passive participle in Exodus 28:16 and 39:9 describes the high priest's breastpiece as 'folded double' (kaful). Ezekiel 21:14 extends the image metaphorically to a sword being 'doubled' in destructive force, though this reading is textually uncertain. DOUBLE TWOFOLD

en: and-let-be-doubled, and-you-shall-double, doubled | es: doblado, y-doblarás, y-que-se-duplique | fr: doubled, et-raccourcir, et-tu—double | de: [וזכפל], doubled, und-du-soll-double Exod 26:9; Exod 28:16; Exod 39:9; Ezek 21:14

כֶּפֶל H3718 N-md (3×)

double, twice the amount or measure

A term denoting duality or doubling, most often in the dual form כִּפְלַיִם. Isaiah promises Jerusalem will receive double consolation for her suffering. Job's friends are told that true wisdom is 'double' to human understanding—God's ways exceed our categories by a factor of two. The word also describes Leviathan's formidable double jaws in Job 41.

(3×) Job 11:6 declares that sound wisdom is 'double in essence' (כִּפְלַיִם לְתוּשִׁיָּה)—far beyond what Job perceives. Job 41:13 [Eng. 41:5] asks who can penetrate 'the double of his bridle' (כֶּפֶל רִסְנוֹ), Leviathan's impenetrable jaw structure. Isaiah 40:2 promises that Jerusalem has 'received double for all her sins' (כִּפְלַיִם בְּכָל־חַטֹּאתֶיהָ), meaning full, abundant restoration. Translations (Spanish doble, French equivalent) capture the mathematical and metaphorical doubling. DOUBLE TWOFOLD

en: double, with-the-double | es: doble, en-doble-de, es-doble | fr: [כפלים], dans-כפלים, בכפל | de: [בכפל], [כפלים] Job 11:6; Job 41:13; Isa 40:2

כָּפַן H3719 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

to stretch out hungrily, long for with hunger

This verb appears to mean stretching out hungrily or desiring with hunger, appearing in Ezekiel 17:7 in the parable of two eagles and the vine. The text describes the vine stretching its roots hungrily toward one of the eagles, parallel to 'sending out its branches toward him.' However, the text is difficult and may be corrupt, with some questioning whether this is the correct reading. The verb is an Aramaic loan-word related to being hungry, suggesting the vine's roots reached out with something like hunger or desperate need toward the new source of water.

(1×) A verb describing hungry stretching or yearning movement, used metaphorically of a vine's roots in Ezekiel's allegory. The Spanish 'dobló' (bent, turned) takes a different approach, perhaps reflecting textual uncertainty. The context of the allegory—representing Judah's political shift from Babylon to Egypt—gives the image of roots reaching hungrily toward a new source emotional and political freight. The vocabulary of hunger applied to botanical behavior creates a vivid picture of desperate reorientation seeking survival. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: bent | es: dobló | fr: épine | de: [כפנה] Ezek 17:7

כְּפֶן H3720 Conj-w (2×)

hunger, famine, or severe food shortage

This Aramaic-influenced term denotes severe hunger or famine. Both occurrences are in Job's speeches, describing either threats to laugh at (5:22, in Eliphaz's promises) or actual desperate circumstances (30:3, in Job's lament about the destitute). The word emphasizes the physical experience of starvation and food scarcity. In chapter 5, it's listed among dangers that won't harm the righteous; in chapter 30, it describes the actual gnawing hunger of society's outcasts - the theoretical protection versus lived reality forming part of Job's bitter response to his friends.

(2×) Severe hunger or famine conditions. Job 5:22 lists it among calamities the righteous need not fear, while 30:3 describes it as the lived reality of desperate outcasts. The contrast between these uses mirrors Job's larger argument: his friends promise protection from famine, yet Job describes people actually perishing from it. The term captures not just shortage but the consuming desperation of acute hunger. FAMINE AND HUNGER

en: and-at-famine, and-in-famine | es: y-de-hambruna, y-por-hambre | fr: et-וּבַכְּפָן, et-וּלְכָפָן | de: [וּבַכְּפָן], [וּלְכָפָן] Job 5:22; Job 30:3

כָּפַף H3721 Prep / V-Qal-Inf (5×)

To bend, bow down, be bowed; of the afflicted or humble bowing before God

Kaphaph conveys the physical and spiritual act of bending or bowing down, whether under the weight of distress or in deliberate worship. In Psalm 57:6, the psalmist's soul is 'bowed down' under persecution, while Isaiah 58:5 questions whether merely bowing one's head like a rush constitutes true fasting. The passive participle 'the bowed down' (kephufim) in Psalms 145:14 and 146:8 becomes a tender designation for the afflicted whom the Lord raises up. Micah 6:6 uses the reflexive niphal for bowing oneself before God in worship.

(5×) To bend, bow down, or be bowed – describing physical posture under affliction or in worship. Spanish 'encorvados/encorvó' ('hunched/bowed') and French 'courber' ('to bend') capture the bodily imagery. In Psalm 57:6 and Isaiah 58:5, the bowing is metaphorical for distress or ritual humility. The passive participle in Psalms 145:14 and 146:8 designates the afflicted whom God lifts up. Micah 6:6 uses the niphal reflexive for prostrating oneself before the Most High, bridging posture and devotion. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: he-bowed-down, shall-I-bow, the-bowed-down | es: encorvados, encorvó, los-encorvados | fr: [הלכך], comme-courber, courber | de: [אכך], [הלכך], der-bowed-down Ps 57:6; Ps 145:14; Ps 146:8; Isa 58:5; Mic 6:6

כִּפֶּר H3722a V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (102×)

Make atonement, cover over sin; appease, pacify; forgive — the central verb of Israel's sacrificial system

The defining verb of Israel's atonement theology, appearing overwhelmingly in Levitical ritual contexts. Built on the concrete image of covering or smearing over, the Piel stem developed into the technical term for cultic expiation — the priestly act of making atonement through blood sacrifice to restore the worshiper's standing before God. Beyond the altar, the word extends to appeasing human anger (Gen 32:20), to divine forgiveness apart from sacrifice (Ps 78:38), and to the theological hope of sin being covered and removed (Dan 9:24). Its range from physical covering to spiritual reconciliation traces the arc of biblical soteriology.

1. make ritual atonement (Piel) (85×) The overwhelming dominant sense — Piel cultic atonement — accounting for over 80% of occurrences. Arabic ʿ (the exact cognate) and Swahili -fanya upatanisho both capture the ritual performative quality. The Levitical formula 'and the priest shall make atonement for him, and he shall be forgiven' (Lev 4:26, 31, 35) is the defining pattern. French expier and German Sühne preserve the expiatory rather than merely propitiatory nuance. ATONEMENT EXPIATION

en: and-he-shall-atone, and-he-shall-make-atonement, and-let-make-atonement | es: Y-expiará, y-expiará | fr: et-devra-expier, et-devra-faire-expiation, et-il-devra-expier | de: und-er-soll-machen-Suehne, und-er-soll-suehnen, und-lass-machen-Suehne Exod 30:15; Exod 30:16; Lev 1:4; Lev 4:20; Lev 4:26

2. be atoned, be forgiven (Pual/Hitpael/Nithpael) (8×) Passive and reflexive-passive stems (Pual, Hitpael, Nithpael): to have atonement made on one's behalf or to be forgiven. Num 35:33 warns that the land cannot be atoned for except by blood; 1 Sam 3:14 declares Eli's house shall never be atoned for. Spanish es expiada and German kann gesühnt werden confirm the passive voice. The Deut 21:8 usage shows the community receiving atonement through the heifer ritual. ATONEMENT EXPIATION

en: and-shall-be-atoned, can-be-atoned, is-atoned | es: es-expiada, es-perdonada, fue-expiado | fr: et-devra-être-expia, expier, fera-être-atoned | de: [יכפר], [תכפר], kann-sein-suehnte Exod 29:33; Num 35:33; Deut 21:8; 1Sam 3:14; Prov 16:6

3. forgive, pardon directly (Piel) (3×) Divine forgiveness without explicit sacrificial ritual — God as subject directly pardoning sin. Ps 78:38 ('yet he, being compassionate, atoned for their iniquity') and Ps 79:9 ('help us, O God of our salvation, and atone for our sins') place God himself as the agent of covering. This sense anticipates the prophetic critique that moves beyond ritual to divine mercy. Ezek 16:63 uses it of God's initiative in restoring shamed Jerusalem. ATONEMENT FORGIVENESS

en: and-atone, atones-for, when-I-atone- | es: al-perdonar-yo, expiará, y-expiarás | fr: et-expier, expier | de: suehnen, sühnt-für, und-sühnen Ps 78:38; Ps 79:9; Ezek 16:63

4. appease, pacify a person (Piel) (2×) Human-to-human appeasement: Jacob seeks to 'cover the face' of Esau with gifts before their reunion (Gen 32:20), and Prov 16:14 observes that a wise man appeases a king's wrath. Arabic ʿ and French apaiser mark the interpersonal rather than cultic register. The underlying metaphor of covering the offended party's face preserves the root etymology more transparently than the developed ritual sense. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-will-appease, appeases-it | es: apaciguaré, la-apaciguará | fr: Je—apaiser, יכפרנה | de: [יכפרנה], ich-will-besänftigen Gen 32:20; Prov 16:14

5. cover, conceal sin (Piel) (2×) The etymological sense of covering or concealing sin, closer to the physical root meaning. Jer 18:23 ('do not cover over their iniquity') and Dan 9:24 ('to atone for iniquity') focus on the sin itself being hidden from view rather than on a ritual procedure. This preserves what many scholars consider the original semantic core, before the Priestly literature specialized it into cultic terminology. German sühnen and Spanish expiar still carry both physical and spiritual overtones. ATONEMENT FORGIVENESS

en: and-to-atone-for, forgive | es: perdones, y-para-expiar | fr: et-expier, expier | de: [תכפר], und-suehnen Jer 18:23; Dan 9:24

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Isa 47:11 where disaster falls on Babylon and 'you will not be able to atone for it' — that is, no covering payment or ransom will avert it. Spanish expiarla and French expier are used, but the context is not cultic; it is the impossibility of buying off divine judgment. This may represent the transactional 'ransom' nuance of covering, related to the noun kopher (ransom price). ATONEMENT FORGIVENESS

en: to-atone-for-it | es: expiarla | fr: expier | de: [כפרה] Isa 47:11

7. (1×) A single occurrence in Isa 28:18 where God declares the covenant with death 'shall be annulled.' Spanish será anulado and English 'shall be annulled' suggest a legal cancellation sense — the covering or atonement agreement is voided. This usage extends the root metaphor from covering-over to its reversal: an invalid covering is stripped away, leaving the parties exposed to judgment. ATONEMENT FORGIVENESS

en: And-shall-be-annulled | es: Y-será-anulado | fr: et-expier | de: [וכפר] Isa 28:18

כָּפַר H3722b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (1×)

to cover with pitch, to pitch (a vessel)

This denominative verb means to cover with pitch or to waterproof by pitching, appearing in Genesis 6:14 where God commands Noah to pitch the ark inside and out with pitch. The verb derives from the noun for pitch (kofer), creating a play on sound with the more common verb meaning 'to atone' (kaphar). The command ensures the ark's waterproofing—essential for surviving the flood. Pitch, a petroleum-based sealant, was widely used in ancient Mesopotamia for waterproofing boats and buildings. The instruction's specificity reflects the practical engineering needed to preserve life through judgment.

(1×) A denominative verb meaning to cover with pitch or waterproof, used in Noah's ark construction instructions. The Spanish 'cubrirás' (you shall cover) and German 'verpichen' (to pitch) capture the waterproofing sense. The internal and external application of pitch creates a comprehensive seal, essential for the ark's life-preserving function. The verb's phonetic similarity to 'atone' may not be accidental—just as pitch covers the ark, atonement covers sin, both providing protection from otherwise fatal circumstances. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-cover | es: y-cubrirás | fr: et-couvrir | de: und-verpichen Gen 6:14

כְּפָר H3723 Prep-b (2×)

village or unwalled settlement

This term denotes villages or unwalled settlements, contrasted with fortified cities. Song of Songs 7:11 invites the beloved to spend the night in the villages, while 1 Chronicles 27:25 describes Jehonathan overseeing David's supplies in villages and countryside. Villages represented agricultural centers, smaller than cities and lacking defensive walls. They formed the backbone of ancient economy and rural life, where most people lived and farmed. The term captures rural, pastoral settings - the agricultural countryside that sustained urban centers.

(2×) Unwalled villages or rural settlements. In Chronicles, they're distinguished from fortified cities and towers as locations for royal supply storage, emphasizing agricultural production. In Song of Songs, villages represent pastoral settings for romantic escape from urban life. Both uses highlight the countryside as site of agricultural labor and rural simplicity, the everyday locations where most people actually lived. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9636 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-in-the-villages, in-the-villages | es: en-las-aldeas, y-en-las-aldeas | fr: [ובכפרים], dans-les-villages. | de: [בכפרים], [ובכפרים] 1Chr 27:25; Song 7:11

כֹּפֶר H3724a N-msc / 3ms (13×)

Ransom price paid to redeem a life or avert punishment; also a bribe given to pervert justice.

A noun meaning the price paid for a life, rooted in the verb kapar ('to cover, atone'). In its primary sense it denotes a legitimate ransom or redemption payment: the compensation for an ox-goring death (Exod 21:30), the half-shekel census tax 'as a ransom for his life' (Exod 30:12), and the prohibition against accepting ransom for a murderer (Num 35:31-32). The psalmist declares that no one can pay God enough ransom for his own soul (Ps 49:8), and Isaiah portrays God giving Egypt 'as your ransom' for Israel (Isa 43:3). In two prophetic passages, however, the word takes on the darker shade of a bribe that corrupts justice, a meaning the multilingual evidence marks distinctly: English and German shift to 'bribe' while Spanish uses 'soborno' rather than 'rescate.'

1. ransom, price of a life (11×) The primary legal and theological sense of a ransom or redemption price paid to save a life from death or punishment. The Covenant Code prescribes it as the payment an ox owner must make when his animal kills a person (Exod 21:30). The Priestly legislation requires it as a census tax to avert plague (Exod 30:12) and firmly prohibits it for murderers (Num 35:31-32). In wisdom literature, Job 33:24 celebrates God finding a ransom, while Job 36:18 warns that no amount of ransom can deliver from judgment. Spanish consistently renders 'rescate,' French 'rançon,' and German 'Lösegeld,' all centering on the notion of a redemptive payment. Proverbs extends the metaphor: the rich man's wealth is his ransom (13:8), but an adulterer will accept no ransom (6:35). RANSOM LIFE PRICE

en: a-ransom, his-ransom, ransom | es: Rescate, Rescate-de, rescate | fr: [כפרך], comme-rançon, rançon | de: Loesegeld, Loesegeld-von, [כפרך] Exod 21:30; Exod 30:12; Num 35:31; Num 35:32; Job 33:24

2. bribe (2×) A specialized negative sense where the 'ransom' becomes a bribe intended to pervert justice rather than secure legitimate redemption. Samuel's farewell speech (1 Sam 12:3) challenges Israel to testify whether he ever took a bribe, using kopher in parallel with 'blinding the eyes.' Amos 5:12 accuses the powerful of taking bribes to turn aside the poor at the gate. The multilingual evidence marks this shift: English and German switch from 'ransom' / 'Lösegeld' to 'bribe,' while Spanish replaces 'rescate' with 'soborno.' French hesitates between 'rançon' and 'bribe,' reflecting the semantic overlap between payment-for-a-life and payment-to-corrupt. RANSOM LIFE PRICE en: bribe | es: soborno | fr: bribe, rançon | de: Loesegeld, bribe 1Sam 12:3; Amos 5:12

כֹּפֶר H3724b Prep-b (1×)

pitch (waterproofing substance)

This noun denotes pitch, a petroleum-based sealant used for waterproofing. It appears in Genesis 6:14 in God's instructions for Noah to pitch the ark with pitch. Pitch was a common waterproofing material in ancient Mesopotamia, where it occurred naturally in petroleum seeps. Archaeological evidence shows extensive use of bitumen in Babylonian construction and boat-building. The Hebrew word is likely related to similar terms in Aramaic, Syriac, and Akkadian, reflecting the substance's widespread use. The doubling of noun and verb ('pitch it with pitch') emphasizes thoroughness in waterproofing.

(1×) A noun for pitch or bitumen used as a waterproofing sealant in ark construction. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'brea,' French 'poix') consistently identifies it as pitch or tar. The archaeological context confirms pitch's availability and use in Mesopotamian shipbuilding and construction. The emphasis on pitching both inside and outside creates redundant waterproofing, reflecting the engineering seriousness of God's preservation plan. The material substance becomes part of the salvation narrative—divine instruction includes practical details of survival technology. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7658 WITH 3 SENSES

en: with-the-pitch | es: con-brea | fr: avec-le-poix | de: mit-Pech Gen 6:14

כֹּפֶר H3724c Art / N-ms (2×)

henna, a fragrant flowering plant used in cosmetics and beloved imagery

This plant, known as henna (El Ḥenna), produces fragrant white flowers growing in grape-like clusters. The beloved in Song of Songs is compared to a cluster of henna blossoms (1:14), and henna plants appear in the garden imagery describing the bride (4:13). Henna was valued for its sweet fragrance and was used cosmetically - its leaves produced the reddish-orange dye still used today. The biblical references emphasize fragrance and beauty rather than dye properties, using the plant as a natural image of delight and attractiveness.

(2×) The henna plant, prized for its fragrant clustered flowers. Both Song of Songs references employ henna in romantic imagery: as a cluster of blossoms representing the beloved's appeal (1:14) and as plants in the bride's garden symbolizing fertility and delight (4:13). The plant's aromatic qualities and attractive appearance made it a natural choice for love poetry, capturing both sensory pleasure and beauty. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: henna, the-henna | es: alheña, alheñas | fr: de-henné, du-henné | de: [כפרים], der-Loesegeld Song 1:14; Song 4:13

כֹּפָר H3724d N-msc (1×)

village, unwalled settlement

This noun means a village or unwalled settlement, appearing in 1 Samuel 6:18 in the construct phrase 'villages of the peasantry.' The context is the account of the ark's return from Philistine territory, noting that both fortified cities and country villages were affected by the plague and witnessed the ark's journey. Villages were unwalled settlements, more vulnerable than fortified cities, typically housing agricultural workers. The term distinguishes rural settlements from urban centers, reflecting the socio-economic geography of ancient Israel where most people lived in small agricultural communities clustered around regional strongholds.

(1×) A noun denoting unwalled villages or rural settlements, contrasting with fortified cities. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'aldea,' French/German 'village') confirms the basic meaning of small, unfortified settlement. The phrase 'villages of the peasantry' emphasizes the rural, agricultural character of these communities—homes of farmers and herders rather than merchants or warriors. The biblical narrative often distinguishes fortified cities from villages, reflecting the two-tier settlement pattern that characterized ancient Palestinian geography and society. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: village-of | es: aldea-de | fr: village-de | de: village-von 1Sam 6:18

כִּפֻּרִים H3725 N-mp (7×)

kippurîm – atonement(s); the abstract noun for ritual expiation, used exclusively in Priestly legislation

The plural abstract noun kippurim ('atonements') is the nominal form behind the most solemn day in the Israelite calendar: yom hakkippurim, the Day of Atonement (Lev 23:27-28; 25:9). Appearing only seven times and exclusively within Priestly legislation, it denotes the ritual process by which guilt is covered and relationship between God and his people restored. It qualifies the sin offering (hattat hakkippurim, Exod 30:10; Num 29:11), the ram of ordination (eil hakkippurim, Num 5:8), and the ransom money (kesef hakkippurim, Exod 30:16). Spanish expiacion and French expiation capture the root idea of covering or wiping away offense, while the German Suehne points toward reconciliation.

the atonements (7×) Ritual atonement or expiation – the abstract plural noun designating the priestly process of covering sin and restoring right relationship with God. Used exclusively in P (Priestly source) contexts: the Day of Atonement (yom hakkippurim, Lev 23:27-28; 25:9), the sin offering of atonement (Exod 30:10; Num 29:11), the ram of atonement (Num 5:8), the atonement money (Exod 30:16), and the altar consecration (Exod 29:36). Spanish expiacion and French expiation emphasize the removal of guilt, while German Suehne highlights the reconciliation dimension. The restriction to cultic-legal contexts confirms this as a technical term of Israelite worship, not a general vocabulary item. ATONEMENT EXPIATION

en: atonements, the-atonement, the-atonements | es: expiación, las-expiaciones | fr: atonements, le-atonements, le-expiation | de: atonements, der-Suehne, der-atonements Exod 29:36; Exod 30:10; Lev 23:27; Lev 23:28; Lev 25:9

כְּפַר H3726 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

village of the Ammonite(s), a Benjamite town

This town name appears in Benjamin's tribal allotment (Joshua 18:24) with textual variants in Ketiv/Qere readings: 'village of the Ammonite' versus 'village of the Ammonitess.' The variants may represent different traditions about the town's name or origin. Some identify it tentatively with Kefr 'Ana, about three miles north of Bethel. The name suggests either a settlement associated with Ammonite inhabitants or named after an Ammonite woman, reflecting the complex ethnic and settlement history of the region.

(2×) A Benjamite town whose name references Ammonite connections. Both occurrences in Joshua 18:24 represent textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) for the same location, differing in gender (masculine versus feminine). This variation may reflect uncertainty about whether the name referred to a male or female Ammonite associated with the settlement's founding or character, or simply variant naming traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kephar-[ha-Ammoni], and-Kephar-ha-Ammonah | es: y-Quefar-(Amona), y-Quefar-[Amoni] | fr: et-Kephar-[ha-Ammoni], et-Kephar-ha-Ammonah | de: und-Kephar-[ha-Ammoni], und-Kephar-ha-Ammonah Josh 18:24

כַּפֹּרֶת H3727 Art / N-fs (27×)

mercy seat — the gold slab atop the Ark of the Covenant where God's presence dwelt between the cherubim

Kapporet is a technical priestly term derived from kipper ('to make atonement') designating the solid gold slab placed on top of the Ark of the Testimony. Its 27 occurrences fall entirely within the Priestly source and the Chronicler, concentrated in Exodus 25-40 and Leviticus 16. Two and a half cubits long, it bore two cherubim hammered from one piece of gold, their wings forming the throne of God's visible presence (Exod 25:17-22). YHWH promised to meet Moses and speak 'from between the two cherubim' above it (Exod 25:22; Num 7:89). On the Day of Atonement the high priest sprinkled blood upon it to purge Israel's sins (Lev 16:14-15). The Septuagint's hilasterion ('place of propitiation') profoundly shaped New Testament theology, reappearing in Romans 3:25. Spanish 'propiciatorio,' French 'propitiatoire,' German 'Gnadendeckel' all derive from the atonement concept.

the mercy seat (27×) The gold propitiatory slab covering the Ark of the Covenant, flanked by two cherubim whose outstretched wings formed the throne of YHWH's presence (Exod 25:17-22). Functioned as the focal point of atonement on Yom Kippur, when the high priest sprinkled blood upon it to purge Israel's sins (Lev 16:14-15). God spoke to Moses 'from above the kapporet, from between the two cherubim' (Exod 25:22; Num 7:89). The LXX hilasterion shaped Paul's application to Christ (Rom 3:25). Also appears in the Chronicler's temple plan (1 Chr 28:11). ATONEMENT EXPIATION

en: the-mercy-seat | es: el-propiciatorio | fr: le-miséricorde-siège, le-propitiatoire | de: der-Gnade-seat, der-Gnadendeckel Exod 25:17; Exod 25:18; Exod 25:19; Exod 25:20

כָּפַשׁ H3728 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms / 1cs (1×)

to press down, make bow down

This Hiphil verb means to make someone bow down or cower, appearing in Lamentations 3:16 where the poet complains that God has made him cower in the ashes. The verb suggests physical pressing down, forcing into a bowed or prostrate position. The root may relate to having bent or crooked limbs, emphasizing the forced, humiliating posture. The context is Lamentations' extended meditation on suffering under divine judgment, where the poet describes God as an active agent in his humiliation—not merely allowing suffering but pressing him down into dust and ashes.

(1×) A Hiphil verb meaning to press down or make someone cower, used of God's afflicting action in Lamentations. The Spanish 'me ha cubierto' (has covered me) takes a different root, while the context clearly indicates forced prostration. The image of being pressed into ashes evokes Job and other mourning contexts where sitting in ashes expressed grief. Here the action is imposed rather than chosen—the sufferer is forced down into the posture of mourning and humiliation, expressing the overwhelming weight of divine judgment. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-pressed-me-down | es: me-ha-cubierto | fr: [הכפישני] | de: [הכפישני] Lam 3:16

כְּפַת H3729 V-Piel-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (4×)

to bind, tie up (Aramaic); to be bound with ropes or fetters

This Aramaic verb describes binding or tying someone up, particularly with ropes or fetters. It appears exclusively in Daniel's account of the three Hebrews thrown into Nebuchadnezzar's furnace, where the emphasis on their being 'bound' highlights the miraculous nature of their preservation—they emerged unbound and unharmed while their executioners perished. The Aramaic cognates in Syriac and related Semitic languages similarly describe knotting, twisting, and binding together.

(4×) The verb appears four times in the fiery furnace narrative. Nebuchadnezzar commanded mighty men 'to bind' Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3:20). The passive Pe'il records that 'they were bound' in their garments and thrown into the furnace (Dan 3:21). The Pa'el passive participle describes them as 'bound' when cast in (Dan 3:23) and emphasizes the miraculous preservation when the astonished king sees them walking 'bound' in the fire yet unharmed (Dan 3:24). Spanish atados and French cithare (musical instrument, apparently a mistranslation) attempt the Aramaic, while German leaves the forms in Hebrew brackets. BINDING AND TYING

en: bound, to-bind, were-bound | es: atados, atados?, fueron-atados | fr: cithare | de: [כפתו], [לכפתה], [מכפתין] Dan 3:20; Dan 3:21; Dan 3:23; Dan 3:24

כַּפְתּוֹר H3730 Conj-w / N-ms (18×)

Knob or ornamental bud on the golden lampstand (menorah); also the capital or top-piece of a pillar.

A term for rounded ornamental protuberances, used in two distinct architectural contexts. In Exodus 25 and 37 it appears sixteen times describing the bulb-shaped knobs that punctuate the branches of the Tabernacle's golden lampstand, paired with cups and blossoms in a stylized almond-flower motif. Spanish renders these as 'cáliz' (calyx), German as 'Knospe' (bud), and French as 'bourgeon' (bud) — all capturing the botanical shape of the ornament. In its second sense, Amos 9:1 commands striking 'the capital' of the temple pillars, and Zephaniah 2:14 pictures desolate capitals atop ruined columns. The shared idea is a rounded shape crowning a vertical structure.

1. knob, bud (of lampstand) (16×) An ornamental bulb or bud-shaped knob on the golden lampstand (menorah), part of the almond-blossom decorative scheme described in the Tabernacle construction narratives (Exod 25:31-36, 37:17-22). Each branch has three cups shaped like almond blossoms, each with its knob and flower. The Septuagint renders it as 'spheroter' (sphere), Josephus as 'small pomegranate,' and the Vulgate as 'sphaerula.' Spanish 'cáliz' and German 'Knospe' emphasize the botanical character of the ornament. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: a-bud, and-a-bud, and-bud | es: Sus-cálices, Y-cáliz, cáliz | fr: bud, et-bud, et-un-bourgeon | de: Knospe, eine-Knospe, ihr-Knospen Exod 25:31; Exod 25:33; Exod 25:34; Exod 25:35

2. capital (of a pillar) (2×) The capital or crowning piece of a pillar, an architectural term. In Amos 9:1 God commands striking the capitals so the thresholds shake — a vision of catastrophic temple destruction. Zephaniah 2:14 pictures desolate Nineveh with animals lodging among ruined capitals. The semantic link to sense 1 is the idea of a rounded protuberance atop a vertical structure, but the referent shifts from cultic furniture to monumental architecture. PILLAR CAPITAL

en: on-her-capitals, the-capital | es: el-capitel, en-sus-capiteles | fr: knop | de: [בכפתריה], [הכפתור] Amos 9:1; Zeph 2:14

כַּפְתּוֹר H3731 N-proper-fs (3×)

Caphtor, probably Crete, original homeland of the Philistines

A geographical designation for the region from which the Philistines originated, widely identified with Crete based on linguistic and historical evidence. Amos reminds Israel that just as God brought them from Egypt, He also brought the Philistines from Caphtor—both migrations under divine sovereignty. The name connects to the Caphtorim people and possibly to the Keftiu mentioned in Egyptian texts.

(3×) Deuteronomy 2:23 identifies the Caphtorim as those who destroyed the Avvim near Gaza, establishing Philistine presence. Jeremiah 47:4 speaks of 'the remnant of the coastland of Caphtor' (שְׁאֵרִית אִי כַּפְתּוֹר) in an oracle against Philistia. Amos 9:7 rhetorically equates the Philistines' exodus from Caphtor with Israel's from Egypt. Most modern scholars link Caphtor to Crete (Greek Kaphtor = Crete), though ancient versions suggested Cappadocia. Translations typically transliterate: Spanish Caftor, preserving the geographical-historical reference. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Kaphtor, from-Caphtor, from-Kaftor | es: Kaftor, de-Caftor | fr: [כפתור], bol, de-Caphtor | de: [כפתור], [מכפתור], von-Caphtor Deut 2:23; Jer 47:4; Amos 9:7

כַּפְתֹּרִי H3732 N-proper-mp (3×)

Caphtorites, people from Caphtor, ancestors of the Philistines

The ethnic designation for inhabitants of Caphtor, listed in the Table of Nations as descendants of Mizraim (Egypt). Historical and archaeological evidence suggests these were Aegean peoples, possibly from Crete, who migrated to the southern Levantine coast and became the Philistines. Their dispossession of the Avvim people established the Philistine pentapolis that would later clash with Israel.

(3×) Genesis 10:14 (= 1 Chronicles 1:12) lists Caphtorim among Mizraim's descendants in the Table of Nations, showing genealogical-geographical connections. Deuteronomy 2:23 describes the Caphtorim as destroyers of the Avvim who lived in villages near Gaza, explaining Philistine territorial origins. The gentilics (כַּפְתֹּרִים) mark them as a distinct ethnic group whose migration shaped Levantine geopolitics. Translations transliterate consistently (Spanish Caftorim, German Kaftoriter), treating this as ethnographic rather than common terminology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Caphtorim, Kaphtorim | es: Caftorim, Kaftorím, caftoreos | fr: Caphtorim, [כפתרים] | de: Caphtorim, [כפתרים], die-Kaftoriter Gen 10:14; Deut 2:23; 1Chr 1:12

כָּר H3733a Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

saddle, camel saddle-basket

This noun denotes a camel saddle or saddle-basket, appearing in Genesis 31:34 where Rachel hides Laban's household gods in the camel's saddle-basket and sits on them. The term refers to a basket-like structure or palanquin bound to the camel's saddle, a sort of covered seat or cargo carrier. Travelers, especially women, used these elevated, often tent-like structures for riding. Rachel's choice of hiding place was clever—sitting on the saddle-basket where the idols were hidden, she could prevent Laban from searching there by claiming to be in her menstrual period.

(1×) A noun for a camel saddle-basket or palanquin-style riding structure. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'silla,' saddle; German 'Kamelsattel,' camel-saddle) identifies it as riding equipment. The construct phrase 'in the saddle-basket of the camel' specifies the location Rachel chose for concealment. These basket-saddles provided both cargo space and protected seating, explaining both how the household gods fit inside and why Rachel could sit upon it, using social custom about menstruation to prevent inspection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-saddle-of | es: en-silla-de | fr: dans-seller-de | de: in-den-Kamelsattel Gen 31:34

כַּר H3733b N-mp (3×)

pasture, meadow for grazing animals

Grassy grazing land where flocks feed, distinct from cultivated fields. The psalmist employs pastoral imagery of meadows 'clothed with sheep' to celebrate the Creator's provision and the land's fertility. Isaiah promises 'a spacious pasture' as part of future blessing—ample room for flocks to graze safely. The term may be related to כָּר (ram/lamb), suggesting lamb-pasturage.

(3×) Psalm 65:13 [Eng. 65:12] paints an exuberant picture: 'The pastures (כָּרִים) are clothed with flocks,' part of a creation symphony. Psalm 37:20 uses כָּרִים in parallel with smoke to describe the wicked's evanescence—though some versions read 'lambs' here. Isaiah 30:23 promises 'roomy pasture' (כַּר נִרְחָב) for cattle, signaling agricultural prosperity. The root's connection to 'lamb' (some interpretations) or to 'round enclosure' enriches the pastoral connotations. Translations vary: Spanish 'pastos/prado,' German 'Wiesen/Auen.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pasture, pastures, the-meadows | es: pastos, prado | fr: [כר], comme-pâturage | de: Auen, [כר], der-Wiesen Ps 37:20; Ps 65:13; Isa 30:23

כַּר H3733c N-mp (12×)

A he-lamb or young ram (animal); a battering ram (siege weapon)

The noun כַּר carries two strikingly different meanings united by the image of a ram. In its primary sense it denotes a he-lamb or young male sheep, prized for its fat (Deut 32:14) and offered as tribute (Isa 16:1, 2 Kgs 3:4). Amos pictures the luxury of Samaria's elite feasting on lambs from the flock (Amos 6:4), and Ezekiel's merchants trade in them (Ezek 27:21). The secondary sense is a battering ram — the siege engine named, as in English, after the animal that butts — appearing only in Ezekiel's vivid siege prophecies (Ezek 4:2; 21:22).

1. he-lamb, ram (animal) (9×) A he-lamb or young ram, a male sheep valued for its rich fat and tender meat. The multilingual evidence is clear: English consistently renders 'lamb/lambs,' Spanish 'corderos,' confirming a pastoral-sacrificial animal. Deuteronomy 32:14 celebrates 'the fat of lambs' alongside the finest wheat, while 2 Kings 3:4 records Mesha of Moab delivering 100,000 lambs as tribute. Isaiah 34:6 pairs the blood of lambs with goats in a grim sacrifice metaphor, and Ezekiel 39:18 lists them among feast animals. The word likely derives from the lamb's characteristic skipping and gamboling in the field. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: lamb, lambs, like-lambs | es: como-corderos, con-corderos, cordero | fr: [ככרים], [כר], [כרים] | de: Laemmer, Widder, [ככרים] Deut 32:14; 1Sam 15:9; 2Kgs 3:4; Isa 16:1; Isa 34:6

2. battering ram (siege weapon) (3×) A battering ram, the heavy siege engine used to breach city walls and fortifications. All three occurrences cluster in Ezekiel's siege oracles: Ezek 4:2 describes setting battering rams against a model of Jerusalem, and Ezek 21:22 mentions them twice as the Babylonian king sets rams against the gates. Spanish 'arietes' (from Latin aries, also meaning 'ram') perfectly mirrors the Hebrew semantic transfer from the butting animal to the weapon. German 'Widder' likewise means both 'ram' and 'battering ram,' showing this metaphorical leap is cross-linguistically natural. RAM AND HORN

en: battering-rams | es: arietes | fr: pâturage | de: Widder Ezek 4:2; Ezek 21:22

כֹּר H3734a Art / N-ms (8×)

Cor; a large unit of dry (and occasionally liquid) measure, approximately 220 liters or 6 bushels.

A noun designating the cor (also spelled kor), one of the largest standard measures in ancient Israel, equivalent to the homer and approximately 220 liters or 6 bushels. Solomon's daily provisions included thirty cors of fine flour and sixty cors of meal (1 Kgs 4:22), while Ezekiel 45:14 defines the cor as a liquid measure for oil. The word entered Greek as koros and Arabic as kurr, testifying to its widespread use across ancient Near Eastern trade. French renders it variously as cors and mesure, while Spanish uses the transliterated coros.

cor (unit of dry measure) (8×) A large volumetric unit for measuring grain, flour, and occasionally oil, equal to approximately 220 liters. Solomon's court consumed thirty cors of fine flour daily (1 Kgs 4:22); Huram supplied twenty thousand cors of wheat to Solomon's workers (2 Chr 2:10); and Jotham received ten thousand cors of wheat and ten thousand of barley as annual tribute (2 Chr 27:5). In Ezekiel 45:14, the cor is used as a liquid measure for olive oil, defined in relation to the bath. The French rendering mesure and the Spanish coros both reflect its function as a standard trade unit across the ancient Near East. COR DRY MEASURE

en: cors, kors-of, the-cor | es: coros, el-cor | fr: béliers, cors, mesure | de: Widder, cors 1Kgs 4:22; 1Kgs 5:11; 2Chr 2:10

כּוֹר H3734b N-mp (1×)

kor (a dry measure, unit of volume)

This Aramaic noun denotes the kor, a large dry measure used for grain and other commodities. It appears in Ezra 7:22 in the Persian decree specifying maximum amounts of wheat and other supplies for the temple. The kor was a substantial unit, roughly equivalent to the Hebrew homer, approximately 6-6.5 bushels or 220 liters. The use of this Aramaic term in Ezra reflects the Persian administrative context, where Aramaic served as the empire's lingua franca. Large-scale measurements like the kor were used in royal decrees and commercial transactions involving significant quantities.

(1×) An Aramaic measure term for substantial volumes of grain, appearing in Persian administrative documents. The Spanish 'coros' reflects the technical measuring term transliterated. The royal decree's specification 'up to a hundred kors of wheat' indicates large-scale provision for temple operations, reflecting Persian imperial support for Jerusalem's cult. The use of standardized measures in official documents facilitated administration across the diverse Persian empire, where various local systems needed coordination. This technical terminology belongs to the administrative dialect of imperial Aramaic. COR DRY MEASURE

en: kors | es: coros | fr: [כרין] | de: [כרין] Ezra 7:22

כְּרָא H3735 V-Hitpael-Perf-3fs (1×)

to be distressed, troubled (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb in the Ithpael (reflexive) stem means to be distressed or troubled, appearing in Daniel 7:15 where Daniel describes his reaction to his visions. He says, 'My spirit was distressed within its sheath,' a vivid image of inner turmoil—the spirit troubled within the body that contains it. The verb conveys deep emotional and psychological disturbance, not merely mild concern but substantial inner upheaval. The Aramaic vocabulary here reflects Daniel's court setting, where Aramaic was the administrative language, and the word choice emphasizes the visceral, embodied nature of his distress.

(1×) An Aramaic verb (Ithpael) expressing deep inner distress or trouble, used of Daniel's spirit reacting to apocalyptic visions. The Spanish 'fue turbado' (was troubled) captures the passive/middle sense of being disturbed. The memorable phrase 'my spirit in the midst of its sheath' uses the image of body as container for spirit, with the spirit agitated within. The vision's impact is not merely intellectual but deeply emotional and physical, disrupting Daniel's inner being. This Aramaic vocabulary suits the international court context of Daniel's experience. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: was-distressed | es: Fue-turbado | fr: couronner | de: [אתכריית] Dan 7:15

כרבל H3736 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

To be mantled or clothed, specifically to wear a robe draped around the body

This rare Pual participle appears only in 1 Chronicles 15:27, describing David as 'mantled with a robe of byssus' during the ark's procession. The term likely derives from an Aramaic or Assyrian loan-word for a mantle or cloak, though some scholars suggest it could be a quadriliteral form meaning 'bound round.' The multilingual evidence consistently points to being clothed or adorned in ceremonial garments.

(1×) Describes the passive state of being dressed or mantled in fine cloth, particularly ceremonial robes. The single occurrence in Chronicles depicts David wearing fine linen during a significant religious ceremony, suggesting formal vestment. Spanish and English translations converge on 'clothed/dressed,' while French and German transliterations preserve the Hebrew uncertainty about this rare term's precise nuance. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothed | es: estaba-vestido | fr: [מכרבל] | de: [מכרבל] 1Chr 15:27

כַּרְבְּלָא H3737 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)

A helmet or cap worn on the head, possibly a turban or ceremonial headdress

This Aramaic noun appears only in Daniel 3:21, listing items worn by Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego when cast into the furnace. Most likely a helmet or cap, though some suggest a mantle. The word is a Greek loan-word (καρβατίς) adapted into Aramaic, and cognates in Syriac and Assyrian point to headwear. The multilingual glosses consistently render it as 'hats,' 'turbans,' or 'bonnets,' suggesting formal or official headgear.

(1×) A head-covering worn by officials in the Babylonian court. Daniel's narrative lists this alongside robes and trousers, marking it as part of formal attire. Spanish 'turbantes' and French 'bonnet' suggest wrapped or fitted headgear, while English 'hats' is more generic. The term's presence in a list of garments that survived the fiery furnace emphasizes its material reality rather than metaphorical significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-hats | es: y-sus-turbantes | fr: et-bonnet | de: [וכרבלתהון] Dan 3:21

כּוּר H3738a Prep-k (1×)

To bore, dig, or pierce through; possibly to excavate or penetrate with force

This verb appears in the famous and textually contested Psalm 22:16, where most English versions read 'they have pierced my hands and my feet.' The Hebrew text (MT) reads 'like a lion' (כָּאַרְיֵ), but ancient versions and many scholars emend to כָּאֲרוּ, 'they dug/bored.' This reading would derive from a root meaning to excavate or pierce, cognate with Assyrian 'to fell trees.' The variant translations across languages reflect this textual uncertainty, with French choosing 'comme creuser' (like digging) showing awareness of both readings.

(1×) To bore through or pierce, likely referring to violent penetration of the body. The psalm's context of suffering and the parallel with ancient versions support the interpretation of piercing hands and feet. However, the Masoretic tradition preserved 'like a lion,' creating a longstanding textual crux. Spanish and English favor the piercing interpretation ('como león' notwithstanding), while French explicitly references the digging/excavating sense that underlies the emendation. LIONS AND CUBS

en: like-a-lion | es: como-león | fr: comme-creuser | de: wie-ein-Löwe Ps 22:16

כָּרָה H3738b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (16×)

To dig, excavate, bargain, or pierce; primarily digging wells, pits, and graves, with extensions into commerce and figurative opening.

At its heart a verb of the earth — digging wells, excavating pits, and preparing tombs. The patriarchs dig wells (Gen 26:25), Moses' law addresses an uncovered pit (Exod 21:33), and the nobles of Israel 'dug' the well celebrated in the ancient Song of the Well (Num 21:18). Spanish 'cavar' and French 'creuser' track the physical sense consistently. But the root extends in surprising directions: in Job 6:27 and 41:6, it appears in commercial contexts — bargaining or trading — suggesting that 'digging into' a negotiation shares semantic ground with excavating soil. Most strikingly, Psalm 40:6 uses it for opening or piercing the ears, a passage the author of Hebrews cites to speak of Christ's prepared body, making this earthy verb a bridge to some of Scripture's deepest theology.

1. dig, excavate (12×) The primary Qal sense of digging or excavating — wells, pits, cisterns, and graves. This accounts for the large majority of occurrences and spans the full narrative arc: Abraham's servant digs a well (Gen 26:25), Jacob prepares his own tomb (Gen 50:5), the Law regulates open pits (Exod 21:33), Israel's leaders dig the well in the wilderness song (Num 21:18), and Asa is buried in a tomb he 'had dug' (2 Chr 16:14). Spanish 'cavar' and French 'creuser' both reflect straightforward earthwork. The Psalms add a moral dimension: the wicked dig pits for the righteous (Ps 7:15; Jer 18:20, 22). DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: and-dug, carved-it, digs | es: Cavaron, El-que-cava-, cava | fr: [כרה], [כרו], carved-cela | de: [כרה], [כרו], digs Gen 26:25; Gen 50:5; Exod 21:33; Num 21:18; 2Chr 16:14

2. bargain, trade (2×) A secondary sense of bargaining, trading, or negotiating, attested in Job 6:27 and 41:6. In the first, Job accuses his friends of being willing to 'bargain over' an orphan; in the second, the question is whether traders will 'bargain' over Leviathan. Spanish uses both 'negociar' and 'cavar trampa,' reflecting the ambiguity between a commercial transaction and a trap. The semantic link to digging may lie in the notion of 'digging into' a deal or extracting value, a metaphorical extension attested also in cognate Semitic roots. SELLING AND COMMERCE

en: Will-bargain, and-you-bargain | es: y-caváis-trampa, ¿Negociarán | fr: et-וחכרו ,יכרו | de: [וחכרו], [יכרו] Job 6:27; Job 41:6

3. be dug (1×) A Nifal passive sense of being dug, attested in Psalm 94:13 — giving rest from days of trouble 'until a pit is dug for the wicked.' Spanish 'sea cavada' preserves the passive voice clearly. The passive form highlights the result rather than the agent, fitting a context where divine providence quietly prepares judgment while the righteous wait. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: is-dug | es: sea-cavada | fr: creuser | de: ist-dug Ps 94:13

4. open, pierce (1×) A figurative extension meaning to open or pierce, used in Psalm 40:6 (MT 40:7) where God 'dug open' the psalmist's ears — a vivid image of making someone receptive to hearing. Spanish renders this 'abriste' (you opened), shifting from excavation language to the language of revelation. This verse is cited in Hebrews 10:5 (via the LXX's 'a body you prepared for me'), making this single occurrence theologically momentous: the physical verb of earthwork becomes a metaphor for divine disclosure and obedient hearing. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: You-have-dug | es: abriste | fr: comme-creuser | de: du-haben-dug Ps 40:6

כָּרָה H3739a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs / 3fs (2×)

to buy, acquire, or obtain by trade

This verb means to acquire by trade or purchase, to buy. It appears in Hosea 3:2, where the prophet buys back his unfaithful wife as an enacted parable of God's redemptive love for Israel. Deuteronomy 2:6 commands Israel to purchase food and water from their relatives in Edom rather than taking by force. The term emphasizes commercial transaction - paying for goods rather than seizing them. This buying shows respect for property rights even when passing through others' territory, and in Hosea, demonstrates costly commitment to restoration.

(2×) To acquire by purchase or trade. The Deuteronomy usage establishes proper relations with kinsmen - buying rather than taking creates peace. Hosea's purchase of his wife involves both money and grain (the double occurrence there showing infinitive plus verb), demonstrating the prophet's willingness to pay the redemption price. Both contexts show buying as an act of relationship: respect for Edomite kin, and redemptive love for an unfaithful spouse. BUYING AND ACQUIRING

en: and-I-bought-her, you-shall-buy | es: Y-la-compré, compraréis | fr: et-acheter, tu-devra-acheter | de: [ואכרה], du-soll-kaufen Deut 2:6; Hos 3:2

כָּרָה H3739b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

To prepare or give a feast; to provide hospitality with food for guests

This verb occurs only in 2 Kings 6:23, where Elisha instructs the king of Israel to prepare a great feast for captured Aramean soldiers before releasing them. The root possibly means 'to bring' or 'to invite,' related to Assyrian terms for feasting and invitation. The cognate accusative construction (he gave a feast, a great one) is idiomatic for hosting. Though the text is uncertain, the context clearly requires the meaning of providing hospitality.

(1×) To arrange and provide a feast for guests, involving preparation of abundant food. Elisha's command to the king demonstrates strategic mercy—feeding enemies before releasing them. Spanish 'preparó,' French 'prépara,' and English 'prepared' all converge on the preparatory aspect of hosting, emphasizing the intentionality and generosity of the act. This dramatic hospitality turned enemies into allies, as the raids stopped afterward. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: and-he-prepared | es: Y-preparó | fr: et-il-prépara | de: und-er-prepared 2Kgs 6:23

כְּרָה H3740 N-fs (1×)
A feast or banquet; a prepared meal for multiple guests
This feminine noun appears only in 2 Kings 6:23, naming the 'great feast' Elisha commanded be prepared for Aramean soldiers. It derives from the verb meaning to prepare or host, and refers to the actual meal event rather than just food. The story's emphasis is on the feast's size ('great') and its unexpected recipients (enemy raiders). This act of generosity becomes a turning point in regional hostilities.

(1×) A substantial feast or banquet prepared for guests. The narrative specifies it as 'great,' suggesting abundance and formality beyond a simple meal. Spanish 'banquete' and French 'fête' both capture the celebratory, hosted nature of the event. The multilingual convergence on feast-language emphasizes this was an occasion of deliberate hospitality, not merely feeding prisoners, transforming a military encounter into a peace-making ceremony. BANQUETS AND FEASTS
en: a-feast | es: banquete | fr: un-fête | de: ein-feast 2Kgs 6:23

כָּרָה H3741 N-fpc (1×)
Wells or cisterns; excavated water sources dug by shepherds
This rare plural construct appears only in Zephaniah 2:6, in a textually difficult phrase about 'pastures with wells of shepherds.' The word likely refers to dug cisterns or wells, though the text is corrupt and some scholars view it as a gloss or variant reading. The LXX reads 'Crete,' suggesting possible confusion with the Cherethites. Despite uncertainty, the core meaning relates to water sources for pastoral life.

(1×) Wells or cisterns dug for watering flocks in pastoral regions. The Zephaniah passage envisions the Philistine coast transformed into shepherds' pastureland with water sources. The textual difficulty is evident in the widely divergent translations: Spanish 'cisternas,' French's reference to 'cut off,' and German's 'schnitt ab' (cut off) all reflect different interpretations. The pastoral context supports understanding these as functional water sources for flocks in the transformed landscape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-wells-of | es: cisternas-de | fr: il-a-retranché | de: schnitt-ab Zeph 2:6

כְּרוּב H3742 N-mp (91×)
Cherub; a supernatural winged being guarding sacred space and bearing the divine presence
The keruvim are majestic winged beings that appear at the most solemn thresholds of divine presence in Scripture. They guard the way to Eden after the fall (Gen 3:24), overshadow the Ark of the Covenant with outstretched wings (Exod 25:18–20), and adorn Solomon's Temple as monumental gold-overlaid figures. In Ezekiel's visions they serve as living bearers of God's throne-chariot, each with four faces and four wings (Ezek 10). Spanish 'querubines,' German 'Cherubim,' and the French transliterations all preserve the Hebrew plural form, reflecting a being with no close equivalent in ordinary language.

cherub, angelic guardian being (91×) A supernatural winged being stationed at the boundary between the divine and earthly realms, serving as guardian of sacred space and bearer of God's throne-presence. They appear guarding Eden (Gen 3:24), atop the Ark (Exod 25:18–20), throughout Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs 6:23–28), and as the living creatures of Ezekiel's chariot-throne (Ezek 10). The consistent transliteration across languages — Spanish 'querubines,' German 'Cherubim' — signals a being without mundane parallel. CHERUB GUARDIAN BEING en: the-cherubim, the-keruvim | es: los-querubines | fr: [הכרבים], [לכרבים], [לכרובים] | de: Cherub, die-Cherubim, zu-Cherubim Exod 25:18; Exod 25:19; Exod 25:20; Exod 25:22

כְּרוּב H3743 N-proper-fs (2×)
Cherub, a location in Babylonia from which returnees came
This place name appears in Ezra 2:59 and Nehemiah 7:61 in identical contexts, listing returnees who couldn't prove their Israelite ancestry. These people came from Cherub (along with Tel-melah and Tel-harsha) but lacked genealogical records. The name is identical to the word for the angelic cherubim, though this is clearly a geographical location in Babylonia. The preserved name of this exile settlement shows how displaced Israelites maintained location identifiers, even when they couldn't maintain ancestral documentation.

(2×) A Babylonian location from which exiles returned to Judah. Both references describe the same historical situation: people from Cherub unable to prove their Israelite lineage. The place name's identity with the term for heavenly beings (cherubim) is likely coincidental, though possibly reflecting hopes or religious naming by the exilic community. These towns represented exile settlements that preserved some Jewish identity despite genealogical gaps. CHERUB GUARDIAN BEING en: Cherub, Keruv | es: Querub | fr: [כרוב] | de: [כרוב] Ezra 2:59; Neh 7:61

כָּרוֹז H3744 Conj-w / N-msd (1×)
A herald or public announcer; an official who proclaims royal decrees
This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 3:4, introducing the herald who proclaimed Nebuchadnezzar's command at the golden image ceremony. It's a Greek loan-word (κήρυξ) adapted into Aramaic, cognate with the verb 'to proclaim.' The herald was an official courier who announced royal edicts publicly, ensuring widespread knowledge of the king's commands. This was a recognized civic office in ancient Near Eastern courts.

(1×) An official herald or public crier who announces royal proclamations. In Daniel's narrative, this herald calls the assembled officials to worship the golden image, reading out the decree with its penalties. Spanish 'pregonero,' French 'héraut,' and English 'herald' all designate this formal office of public announcement. The term emphasizes the official, authoritative nature of the command being delivered across the plain of Dura. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING
en: and-the-herald | es: Y-el-pregonero | fr: et-héraut | de: [וכרוזא] Dan 3:4

כְּרַז H3745 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3mp (1×)
To make proclamation, to announce or declare publicly with authority
This Aramaic verb in the Haphel stem appears in Daniel 5:29, describing the proclamation concerning Daniel after he interpreted the handwriting. It's denominative from the noun 'herald,' meaning to make an official public announcement. The verb emphasizes authoritative declaration by royal command, ensuring the announcement reaches all intended hearers. Cognates appear in Syriac and Targumic Aramaic with the same sense of public proclamation.

(1×) To proclaim or announce publicly by official decree. The Daniel passage specifies they proclaimed 'concerning' him, announcing his elevation to third ruler in the kingdom. Spanish 'proclamaron' and French 'interpréter' (likely conflating the interpretation with its announcement) both capture the public, declarative nature. This was formal court protocol—ensuring all officials knew of Daniel's new rank and authority through official heralds. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING
en: and-they-proclaimed | es: y-proclamaron | fr: et-interpréter | de: [והכרזו] Dan 5:29

כָּרִי H3746 Prep-l (3×)

Carites, a foreign bodyguard unit serving Judah's kings

An elite military unit, possibly Carian mercenaries from Asia Minor, who served as royal bodyguards alongside the Cherethites. During Jehoiada's coup against Athaliah, the priest brought these guards into the temple precincts to protect the young king Joash. Their presence reflects the ancient Near Eastern practice of employing foreign professional soldiers for palace security, ensuring loyalty uncompromised by local political ties.

(3×) Second Kings 11:4, 19 feature the Carites (הַכָּרִי) alongside 'the runners' (הָרָצִים) in Jehoiada's carefully orchestrated coronation and palace takeover. The pairing with Cherethites in 2 Samuel 20:23 (if the ketiv הַכְּרֵתִי is corrected to הַכָּרִי as most scholars prefer) links them to David's foreign guard units. The ethnic designation suggests Carian origin—seafaring peoples from southwest Anatolia who served as mercenaries throughout the ancient Near East. Translations largely transliterate: Spanish 'caritas,' German 'Karites.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: [the-Kerethite], of-the-Karites, the-Karites | es: [el-keri], de-los-caritas, los-caritas | fr: [the-Kerethite], de-le-Karites, le-Karites | de: [the-Kerethite], der-Karites, von-der-Karites 2Sam 20:23; 2Kgs 11:4; 2Kgs 11:19

כְּרִית H3747 N-proper-fs (2×)

the brook Cherith where Elijah hid during the drought

This brook sheltered Elijah during the drought he had pronounced on Israel (1 Kings 17:3, 5). God directed him there for water and miraculous provision through ravens. The location is disputed: some identify it with Wadi el-Kelt near Jericho (west of Jordan), others with Wady Ajlun east of Jordan. The name may relate to 'cutting' or 'covenant,' though this is uncertain. The brook represents God's preservation of his prophet during judgment - providing water in drought and food through supernatural means.

(2×) A brook where Elijah found refuge during the three-year drought. Both references in 1 Kings 17:3, 5 describe God's command and Elijah's obedience to go there. The brook provided drinking water while ravens brought bread and meat, demonstrating divine provision even when normal water sources failed. The site's exact identification matters less than its function: a hidden place where God sustained his spokesman during national judgment. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: Kerit | es: Kerit | fr: Kerit | de: Kerit 1Kgs 17:3; 1Kgs 17:5

כְּרִיתוּת H3748 N-fsc (4×)

divorcement, the legal act of divorce; always in the phrase 'certificate of divorcement'

This noun appears exclusively in the phrase 'certificate of divorcement' (sefer keritut), designating the legal document by which a man formally divorces his wife under Mosaic law. Deuteronomy requires such a written certificate to formalize the divorce, protecting the woman's rights and legal status. The prophets use the metaphor of divorce papers to describe God's relationship with unfaithful Israel—Isaiah asks where the certificate is, implying God hasn't actually divorced Israel, while Jeremiah declares God gave faithless Israel her divorce certificate because of her adultery.

(4×) The term appears in legal and prophetic contexts about divorce. Deuteronomy requires that a man who divorces his wife 'write her a certificate of divorcement' and give it to her (Deut 24:1, 3), establishing the legal procedure. Isaiah asks rhetorically, 'Where is your mother's certificate of divorcement by which I sent her away?' (Isa 50:1), implying God hasn't actually divorced Israel. Jeremiah declares that God 'gave faithless Israel her certificate of divorcement' because of her adultery (Jer 3:8), using the divorce metaphor to describe the northern kingdom's exile. Spanish divorcio, French divorce, and German divorce preserve the concept across language families. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: divorce, divorce-of, of-her-divorce | es: divorcio, divorcio-de, su-divorcio | fr: [כריתות], [כריתתיה], divorce | de: [כריתות], [כריתתיה], divorce Deut 24:1; Deut 24:3; Isa 50:1; Jer 3:8

כַּרְכֹּב H3749 N-msc (2×)

the border, rim, or ledge of the altar

This architectural term describes the ledge or border of the bronze altar, appearing only in Exodus construction accounts. The ledge was part of the altar's structural design, created by the network of bronze grating. Both references (Exodus 27:5 and 38:4) come from Priestly descriptions of tabernacle construction, showing careful attention to the altar's precise specifications. This detail emphasizes the ordered, intentional design of worship space - nothing arbitrary or improvised, but rather divinely specified dimensions and features.

(2×) The ledge or rim around the altar of burnt offering, described in Priestly construction accounts. Both Exodus references detail this feature within larger altar specifications, showing it as an integral architectural element. The ledge likely served structural and possibly functional purposes in the altar's operation, demonstrating the precise craftsmanship required for tabernacle construction according to the pattern shown to Moses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-ledge, ledge-of | es: cornisa-de, su-cerco | fr: ledge-de, son-ledge | de: ledge-von, sein-ledge Exod 27:5; Exod 38:4

כַּרְכֹּם H3750 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

Saffron; the aromatic spice from the crocus sativus flower

This noun appears only in Song of Songs 4:14, in a catalogue of fragrant spices and aromatic plants. Saffron (crocus sativus) was prized in the ancient world for its color, fragrance, and flavoring properties. The word is a loan from Greek κρόκος, reflecting the spice trade networks that brought this luxury item to the Levant. Its inclusion among precious aromatics in the Song emphasizes the beloved's worth and desirability.

(1×) The saffron spice or the crocus plant from which it derives, valued for fragrance and color. In the Song's garden imagery, saffron appears alongside nard, henna, and calamus, creating a sensory portrait of exotic beauty. Spanish 'azafrán' and French 'safran' preserve the ancient trade-name across languages. The multilingual consistency reflects saffron's status as a universally recognized luxury spice, making it an apt metaphor for precious beauty. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-saffron | es: y-azafrán | fr: et-safran, | de: [וכרכם] Song 4:14

כַּרְכְּמִישׁ H3751 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)

Carchemish, major Hittite city on the Euphrates River

An important ancient city on the western bank of the Euphrates, serving as capital of a Hittite kingdom and later a significant Assyrian and Neo-Babylonian center. Its mention in Isaiah represents the relentless advance of Assyrian conquest. Most famously, Pharaoh Neco II marched to Carchemish in 609 BC, where King Josiah fatally intercepted him at Megiddo. Later, in 605 BC, Nebuchadnezzar's decisive victory over Egypt at Carchemish shifted Near Eastern power to Babylon.

(3×) Isaiah 10:9 lists Carchemish among conquered cities in Assyria's boast: 'Is not Calno like Carchemish?' Second Chronicles 35:20 records Josiah's ill-fated confrontation with Neco 'at Carchemish by the Euphrates' (בְּכַרְכְּמִישׁ עַל־פְּרָת). Jeremiah 46:2 dates Nebuchadnezzar's crushing victory 'at Carchemish on the Euphrates,' a turning point that ended Egyptian dominance. The city's Assyrian name Kargamis appears in cuneiform records; its ruins lie at modern Jarabis on the Turkish-Syrian border. Translations transliterate: Spanish Carquemis. PERSONAL NAMES

en: as-Carchemish, at-Carchemish, at-Karkemish | es: como-Karkemish, en-Carquemis, en-Karkemish | fr: [בכרכמיש], [בכרכמש], [ככרכמיש] | de: [בכרכמיש], [בכרכמש], [ככרכמיש] 2Chr 35:20; Isa 10:9; Jer 46:2

כַּרְכַּס H3752 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Carkas; a Persian eunuch who served in King Ahasuerus's court

This proper name appears in Esther 1:10, identifying one of seven

eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus. These officials attended the king during his banquet and were commanded to bring Queen Vashti before the assembled guests. Persian names in Esther often carry meanings related to court service or royal authority, though this particular name's etymology is uncertain. The eunuchs served as intermediaries between the king and queen.

(1×) The personal name of a specific court eunuch in the Persian royal household. Along with six other named eunuchs, Carkas had access to the king's presence and was entrusted with royal commands. The preservation of his name across translations (Spanish 'Carcas,' French and German preserve the Hebrew form) reflects the historical nature of the Esther narrative, where specific individuals are remembered even in supporting roles. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Carkas | es: y-Carcas | fr: [וכרכס] | de: [וכרכס] Esth 1:10

כִּרְכָּרָה H3753 Conj-w (1×)

Dromedaries or swift camels; single-humped riding animals used for transport

This rare plural noun appears only in Isaiah 66:20, in a vision of nations bringing Israel's dispersed back to Jerusalem on various means of transport. The word likely designates dromedaries—swift, single-humped camels bred for riding rather than cargo. Some scholars view the entire transportation list as a later gloss, but the term itself derives from a root suggesting undulating or repeated movement, fitting for a camel's gait.

(1×) Swift camels or dromedaries used for riding and long-distance travel. Isaiah lists these alongside horses, chariots, mules, and litters in his eschatological vision of return. Spanish 'dromedarios' and English 'camels' both identify these as single-humped riding animals, distinct from cargo camels. The multilingual convergence on camel-terminology, despite textual uncertainty, reflects the dromedary's recognized role in ancient transportation networks across the Near East. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: and-on-camels | es: y-en-dromedarios | fr: [ובכרכרות] | de: [ובכרכרות] Isa 66:20

כֶּרֶם H3754 Prep-l / N-msc / 1cs (92×)

A vineyard; a cultivated plot of land where grapevines are planted and tended

Kerem refers to a vineyard — land deliberately cultivated for growing grapevines. Noah plants the first one after the flood (Gen 9:20), and vineyards become a central economic and symbolic feature of Israelite life. They appear in legal codes governing sabbatical rest (Lev 25:3), in prophetic parables like Isaiah's song of the vineyard (Isa 5:1–7), and in the drama of Naboth's vineyard (1 Kgs 21). The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'viña,' French 'vigne,' German 'Weinberg' — reflects the straightforward agricultural meaning, though the vineyard frequently carries metaphorical weight as an image of Israel itself.

vineyard, cultivated grape plot (92×) A cultivated plot for growing grapevines, central to Israelite agriculture, economy, and religious symbolism. From Noah's first planting (Gen 9:20) through the laws of Deuteronomy to the prophetic imagery of Isaiah 5, the vineyard serves both as literal farmland and as a potent metaphor for God's people. Translations across Spanish ('viña'), French ('vigne'), and German ('Weinberg') uniformly reflect this concrete agricultural sense. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: vineyard, vineyards | es: Viñas, viña, viñas | fr: comme-vigne, les-vignes,, vigne | de: Weinberg, Weinberge, einen-Weinberg Gen 9:20; Lev 25:3; Num 16:14; Deut 6:11; Deut 20:6

כָּרַם H3755 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (5×)

Vinedresser, one who tends or cultivates vineyards

Koremim ('vinedressers') designates those who tend and cultivate grapevines, a vital occupation in ancient Israel's agrarian economy. The term appears exclusively as a plural participle, always paired with 'plowmen' (ikkarim) or 'farmers' (yogevim), reflecting the two pillars of Israelite agriculture. In 2 Kings 25:12 and Jeremiah 52:16, Nebuchadnezzar leaves vinedressers and plowmen behind as the poorest of the land after the exile – a poignant detail showing that even in catastrophe, the vine must be tended. Isaiah 61:5 envisions foreigners serving as Israel's vinedressers in the messianic restoration.

(5×) A vinedresser or vine-tender, one whose livelihood is cultivating grapevines. Spanish 'viñadores' and English 'vinedressers' directly convey the occupation. Always appearing as a plural Qal participle and paired with farmers (ikkarim/yogevim) in 2 Kgs 25:12, Jer 52:16, Joel 1:11, and 2 Chr 26:10. The term gains theological weight in Isaiah 61:5, where foreigners will serve as Israel's vinedressers in the age of restoration, reversing the exile's devastation of the land. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: and-vinedressers, and-your-vinedressers, as-vinedressers | es: como-viñadores, para-viñadores, viñadores | fr: [וכרמיכם], [וכרמים], [לכרמים] | de: [וכרמיכם], [וכרמים], [כרמים] 2Kgs 25:12; 2Chr 26:10; Isa 61:5; Jer 52:16; Joel 1:11

כַּרְמִי H3756 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)

Carmi; a personal name borne by a son of Reuben and the father of Achan the troubler of Israel.

A proper noun identifying at least two individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The first is Carmi son of Reuben, listed among those who went down to Egypt (Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:6; 1 Chr 5:3), ancestor of the Carmite clan. The second is Carmi son of Zabdi of the tribe of Judah, father of Achan who violated the ban at Jericho (Josh 7:1, 18; 1 Chr 2:7). The name may derive from kerem ('vineyard'), suggesting 'my vineyard' or 'vinedresser.' Greek tradition renders it Charmei.

Carmi (proper name) (8×) A personal name meaning possibly 'my vineyard,' borne by two or more biblical figures. The Reubenite Carmi appears in the genealogy of Jacob's sons who descended to Egypt (Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14) and is listed as clan ancestor in the wilderness census (Num 26:6; 1 Chr 5:3). The Judahite Carmi is the father of Achan, whose theft of devoted things brought disaster at Ai (Josh 7:1, 18). Spanish, French, and German all transliterate as Carmi, following the Septuagint's Χαρμ(ε)ί. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Carmi, Karmi, and-Carmi | es: Carmi, de-Carmi, y-Carmi | fr: Carmi, [וכרמי], [כרמי] | de: Carmi, [וכרמי], [כרמי] Gen 46:9; Exod 6:14; Num 26:6; Josh 7:1; Josh 7:18

כַּרְמִי H3757 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Carmite; a member of the clan descended from Carmi of Judah

This gentillic adjective appears in Numbers 26:6, designating members of the Carmite clan within the tribe of Reuben. The clan traced descent from Carmi, son of Reuben, and is listed among the Reubenite families during the wilderness census. Gentillic forms with the definite article often function as collective substantives, referring to 'the Carmites' as a group rather than individuals.

(1×) The collective designation for descendants of Carmi, counted among Reuben's clans. Numbers 26 systematically enumerates tribal subdivisions for land allocation and military organization. Spanish 'los carmitas' (the Carmites, plural) and French/English singular 'the Carmite' reflect different translation philosophies for collective gentillics. The census context emphasizes these as recognized family units within Israel's tribal structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Carmite | es: los-carmitas | fr: le-Carmite | de: der-Carmite Num 26:6

כַּרְמִיל H3758 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

crimson, a rich red dye or crimson-colored fabric

A deep red or purple-red dye and the cloth colored with it, likely derived from the kermes insect. Chronicles lists crimson among the precious colored materials imported for temple construction, grouped with blue, purple, and fine linen. The Persian loanword suggests this was a luxury import, perhaps from regions specializing in high-quality red dyes. The term differs from the more common 'scarlet' (שָׁנִי).

(3×) Second Chronicles catalogs crimson (כָּרְמִיל) three times in temple construction contexts: 2:7 [Eng. 2:6], 2:14 [Eng. 2:13], and 3:14, always paired with blue (תְּכֵלֶת), purple (אַרְגָּמָן), and fine linen (בּוּץ). The clustering with these other luxury textiles marks it as premium material for sacred space. Some scholars read כָּרְמִיל for כָּרְמֶל in Song of Songs 7:6, describing glossy, spiral-curled hair. The root connection to Persian suggests post-exilic linguistic influence. Translations: Spanish 'carmesí,' matching the English 'crimson/carmine.' RED AND SCARLET

en: and-crimson, and-in-the-crimson | es: y-carmesí, y-en-el-carmesí | fr: [וכרמיל], [ובכרמיל] | de: [וכרמיל], [ובכרמיל] 2Chr 2:7; 2Chr 2:14; 2Chr 3:14

כַּרְמֶל H3759 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (16×)

Fruitful field, garden-land, cultivated terrain; also fresh grain or unripe ears of grain.

A noun evoking lush, cultivated fertility, used as a common noun for productive agricultural land distinct from the proper name Mount Carmel. Isaiah employs it repeatedly in contrasts: garden-land versus wilderness (Isa 32:15-16), fruitful field versus Lebanon's wild forest (Isa 29:17). The word paints a vision of God's ideal landscape, tamed and abundant. A second, more specialized sense appears in Leviticus, where karmel means fresh, newly harvested grain offered to God (Lev 2:14; 23:14). French and German consistently render the place-associated sense as 'Carmel/Karmel,' while Spanish helpfully distinguishes 'campo fértil' (fruitful field) from 'espiga fresca' (fresh ear).

1. fruitful field, garden-land (13×) A cultivated, fertile area such as an orchard, plantation, or garden-land, often contrasted with wilderness or forest. Isaiah uses it in striking reversals: Lebanon becomes garden-land and garden-land becomes forest (Isa 29:17; 32:15). Jeremiah 4:26 laments that the karmel has become a desert. Spanish 'campo fértil' captures the agricultural abundance, while French and German render it as 'Carmel,' blending the common-noun sense with the famous mountain's image of luxuriant growth. GARDEN LAND CARMEL

en: a-fruitful-field, and-its-fruitful-field, and-the-fruitful-field | es: (y-el-campo-fértil), [y-campo-fértil], al-Carmelo | fr: Carmel, dans-Carmel, de-Carmel | de: Karmel, auf-dem-Karmel, der-Karmel 2Kgs 19:23; Isa 10:18; Isa 16:10; Isa 29:17

2. fresh grain, unripe ear (3×) Fresh grain, newly ripened ears, or unparched cereal crops, used in grain-offering regulations. Leviticus 2:14 prescribes bringing karmel of fresh ears as a firstfruits offering, and 2 Kings 4:42 records a man bringing bread and karmel to Elisha. Spanish 'espiga fresca' (fresh ear) and 'grano fresco' (fresh grain) make the agricultural specificity clear, distinguishing this sense from the broader landscape meaning. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: and-fresh-grain, of-fresh-ear | es: espiga-fresca, y-grano-fresco | fr: de-fresh-oreille, et-fresh-blé, et-fresh-grain | de: und-fresh-Getreide, und-fresh-grain, von-fresh-Ohr Lev 2:14; Lev 23:14; 2Kgs 4:42

כַּרְמֶל H3760 Conj-w (24×)

Carmel: (1) the famous mountain promontory on the Mediterranean coast; (2) a town in Judah; (3) as common noun, garden land or fruitful field.

Most often a place name – the lush, forested mountain jutting into the Mediterranean where Elijah confronted the prophets of Baal (1 Kgs 18:19-42), or the town in the Judean highlands where Nabal sheared his sheep (1 Sam 25:2). The translations are remarkably consistent across languages: Spa. Carmelo, Fra. Carmel, Ger. Karmel, all preserving the proper noun. Yet the word also functions as a common noun meaning 'garden land' or 'fruitful field,' reflecting the mountain's proverbial fertility. Micah 7:14 plays on both senses, asking God to shepherd His flock in the karmel, evoking both the geographic Carmel and the idea of abundant pasture.

1. Carmel (place name) (21×) The proper noun Carmel, designating either Mount Carmel on the Mediterranean coast (the site of Elijah's contest, 1 Kgs 18:19) or the town of Carmel in the hill country of Judah (1 Sam 25:2). All major language traditions transliterate consistently: Spa. Carmelo, Fra. Carmel, Ger. Karmel. Prophets invoke Carmel alongside Lebanon, Sharon, and Bashan as symbols of the land's richness (Isa 33:9; Jer 50:19). GARDEN LAND CARMEL

en: Carmel, and-Carmel, and-Karmel | es: Carmelo, al-Carmelo, como-el-Karmel | fr: Carmel, [הכרמל], [וכרמל] | de: Karmel, [הכרמל], [וכרמל] Josh 12:22; Josh 19:26; 1Sam 15:12; 1Sam 25:2

2. garden land, fruitful field (3×) The common noun meaning garden land, fruitful field, or orchard – reflecting the proverbial fertility of the Carmel region. In 2 Chr 26:10 Uzziah has farmers in the karmel because he loves the soil. Micah 7:14 may deliberately evoke both the place and the metaphor, asking God to shepherd Israel in fertile pasture. Spanish and German sometimes render it as the place name even here, but the context points to agricultural abundance. GARDEN LAND CARMEL

en: Carmel, and-in-the-Karmel | es: Carmel, Carmelo, y-en-el-Carmelo | fr: Carmel, [ובכרמל], [כרמל] | de: Karmel, [ובכרמל] Josh 15:55; 2Chr 26:10; Mic 7:14

כַּרְמְלִי H3761 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Carmelite; a gentilinic adjective identifying someone from Carmel, applied to Nabal and the warrior Hezrai.

A gentilinic adjective meaning 'the Carmelite,' used with the article to designate a person from the town of Carmel in the hill country of Judah (distinct from Mount Carmel in the north). It identifies Nabal as 'the Carmelite' in the narratives of David's wilderness period (1 Sam 30:5; 2 Sam 2:2; 3:3), and the warrior Hezrai in David's mighty men lists (2 Sam 23:35 = 1 Chr 11:37). The feminine form appears for Abigail in 1 Chr 3:1. Spanish 'el carmelita' and English 'the Carmelite' both preserve the adjectival gentilinic force, marking geographic origin rather than personal character.

(5×) A gentilinic adjective with the article, meaning 'the Carmelite,' identifying a person as originating from Carmel in Judah. Nabal is called 'the Carmelite' in 1 Sam 30:5, 2 Sam 2:2, and 2 Sam 3:3, tying him to his estate in the Judean hill country where he famously rebuffed David. The warrior Hezrai/Hezro bears the same designation in the elite roster (2 Sam 23:35 = 1 Chr 11:37). Spanish 'el carmelita' and French 'le Carmelite' mirror the Hebrew article-plus-gentilic pattern precisely, while German 'der Carmelite' does likewise. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Carmelite | es: el-carmelita | fr: [הכרמלי], le-Carmelite | de: [הכרמלי], der-Carmelite 1Sam 30:5; 2Sam 2:2; 2Sam 3:3; 2Sam 23:35; 1Chr 11:37

כַּרְמְלִי H3762 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)

designation for someone from Carmel, either the town or the region

This gentelic adjective identifies people associated with Carmel. Most references point to Carmel in Judah's hill country (not Mount Carmel), the hometown of Nabal and later his widow Abigail, who became David's wife. The masculine form describes Nabal and David's warrior Hezro; the feminine describes Abigail. The textual variant in 1 Samuel 27:3 (where some manuscripts have the feminine form for Abigail) shows scribal attention to grammatical gender. The designation rooted these figures geographically, connecting them to a specific Judean town.

(2×) A person from Carmel (the Judean town, not Mount Carmel). The two occurrences show gender variants: the feminine form for Abigail (1 Chronicles 3:1) and either masculine or feminine in 1 Samuel 27:3 depending on textual tradition. This designation permanently attached these individuals to their town of origin, even after they left - Abigail remained 'the Carmelitess' even as David's wife. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Carmelite, the-Karmelith | es: el-carmelita, la-carmelita | fr: [הכרמלית], le-Carmelite | de: [הכרמלית], der-Carmelite 1Sam 27:3; 1Chr 3:1

כְּרָן H3763 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Cheran, an Edomite chief in Seir

Cheran appears in Edomite genealogies as a descendant of Seir the Horite (Genesis 36:26 and 1 Chronicles 1:41). He was among the sons of Dishon, one of the original inhabitants of Seir before Edom conquered the region. These Horite clans were eventually displaced or absorbed by the Edomites. The name's preservation in both Genesis and Chronicles underscores Scripture's careful attention to the historical peoples surrounding Israel, documenting even those who were eventually displaced.

(2×) A Horite clan leader descended from Seir, appearing in the genealogies that document the original inhabitants of Edom's territory. Both biblical references preserve this name in parallel genealogical lists, showing textual care in transmitting these records. Cheran represents the pre-Edomite population that Scripture acknowledges, even as it narrates their eventual displacement - a witness to the historical complexity of the region's settlement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Cheran, and-Keran | es: y-Keran, y-Queran | fr: [כרן], et-Cheran | de: [כרן], und-Keran Gen 36:26; 1Chr 1:41

כָּרְסֵא H3764 N-msc (3×)

throne (Aramaic), seat of royal or divine authority

The Aramaic word for throne appearing only in Daniel's Aramaic sections. Daniel 7's apocalyptic vision features divine thrones—plural 'thrones were placed'—for the Ancient of Days, whose throne blazes with fire and wheels of burning flame. Daniel 5 recounts how Nebuchadnezzar lost his throne due to pride, then had it restored when he acknowledged heaven's sovereignty. The term underscores both human kingship's fragility and God's eternal dominion.

(3×) Daniel 5:20 describes Nebuchadnezzar deposed 'from his royal throne' (כָּרְסֵא מַלְכוּתֵהּ) when his heart grew arrogant. Daniel 7:9 uses both singular and plural: 'thrones were set up' (כָּרְסָוָן רְמִיו) and 'His throne' (כָּרְסְיֵהּ) was fiery flames. The plural may suggest thrones for the angelic court, while the singular denotes the Ancient of Days' supreme seat. The Aramaic כָּרְסָא parallels Hebrew כִּסֵּא, both conveying royal/divine authority. Translations (Spanish 'trono,' French 'throne') maintain the regal register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-throne, throne-of, thrones | es: el-trono-de, trono-de-él, tronos | fr: [כרסא], [כרסון], [כרסיה] | de: [כרסא], [כרסון], [כרסיה] Dan 5:20; Dan 7:9

כִּרְסֵם H3765 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms / 3fse (1×)

To tear off or gnaw away; to ravage or consume destructively

This quadriliteral verb appears only in Psalm 80:13, where a wild boar 'ravages' the vine representing Israel. The Piel form intensifies the action of tearing or gnawing, suggesting violent, destructive consumption. Cognates in rabbinic Hebrew describe cutting or eating away, and the Targum uses it to translate 'consume' elsewhere. The imagery is agricultural devastation—a boar rooting through and destroying a carefully tended vineyard.

(1×) To tear off, gnaw away, or ravage violently, especially of animals damaging plants. The psalm's metaphor presents Israel as God's vine, now ravaged by forest creatures representing enemy nations. Spanish 'destroza' (destroys/tears apart) and French 'dévaster' (devastate) both capture the violent, destructive force. The verb's intensity matches the psalm's lament over national catastrophe, where careful cultivation is undone by brutal animal force. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: ravages-it | es: La-destroza | fr: dévaster | de: ravages-es Ps 80:13

כָּרַע H3766 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (36×)

To bow down, kneel, crouch; ranges from worship and submission to physical collapse and animal crouching

A verb of the body bending low under weight — whether the weight of reverence, defeat, weakness, or simply animal instinct. Its most frequent use describes kneeling in worship or supplication: Solomon kneels before the altar (1 Kgs 8:54), and the psalmist invites Israel to 'bow down' before the Lord (Ps 95:6). But it also carries darker tones: Sisera, struck by Jael, 'bowed, fell, and lay still' (Judg 5:27), and the Hifil causative describes God subduing enemies underfoot (Ps 18:39). The Arabic cognate kara'a (to put one's mouth to water, i.e., to kneel to drink) preserves the original physical posture behind all these extended meanings.

1. bow down, kneel (worship/submission) (26×) Bowing down or kneeling in worship, reverence, or submission — the dominant sense, covering deliberate, respectful kneeling before God or a human authority. Solomon kneels from before the altar after prayer (1 Kgs 8:54), Ezra falls to his knees in penitence (Ezra 9:5), and Psalm 95:6 invites corporate worship: 'let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.' Esther 3:2, 5 uses the participle for those who bow before Haman. Spanish 'arrodillandose' (kneeling) and German equivalents consistently mark this as intentional, reverent posture. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: and-I-fell, and-bowed, and-she-bowed | es: arrodillándose, de-arrodillarse, doblarse | fr: [ואכרעה], [יכרע], [כרע] | de: [ואכרעה], [יכרע], [יכרעון] Judg 5:27; Judg 7:5; Judg 7:6

2. bring down, subdue (causative) (6×) Bringing someone down or subduing them — the Hifil causative stem, where the subject forces another to bow or fall. David praises God: 'You subdued under me those who rose against me' (2 Sam 22:40 / Ps 18:39). Psalm 17:13 pleads for God to 'bring him down.' Judges 11:35 extends the image to emotional devastation: 'you have brought me very low.' The causative translations — English 'bring down,' Spanish 'derribó' (knocked down) — confirm the coercive, forceful character of this stem. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: You-bring-down, bring-him-down, bringing-low | es: derribó, derríbalo, doblegas | fr: Tu-apporte-en-bas, apportant-bas, le-s'incliner | de: You-bringe-hinab, bringend-niedrig, du-haben-brachte-niedrig-mich Judg 11:35; 2Sam 22:40; Ps 17:13; Ps 18:39

3. give way, buckle (of knees) (2×) Knees giving way or buckling from weakness — a Qal participle describing involuntary physical collapse rather than intentional kneeling. Job 4:4 speaks of strengthening 'bowing knees' (birkayim kor'ot), and Job 39:3 describes a birthing animal crouching as its young emerge. The image shifts from reverence to frailty; what bows here does so not from devotion but from failing strength. Spanish 'que flaquean' (that weaken) captures the involuntary nature precisely. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: bowing, they-crouch | es: Se-arrodillan, que-flaquean | fr: ployer | de: [כרעות], [תכרענה] Job 4:4; Job 39:3

4. crouch, crouch down (animal posture) (2×) Crouching down like an animal — the posture of a lion settling on its haunches before springing. Genesis 49:9 pictures Judah as a lion who 'crouched' (kara'), and Balaam's oracle in Numbers 24:9 repeats the image. The distinction from worship-kneeling is clear: this is a predatory, coiled-spring posture. Spanish 'se agazapó' (crouched/hunkered down) and English 'crouched' consistently distinguish this animal posture from human kneeling. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: crouched, he-crouched | es: Se-agazapó, se-encorvó | fr: crouched, il-crouched | de: er-crouched, er-kauert Gen 49:9; Num 24:9

כֶּרַע H3767 N-fpc / 3ms (9×)

The lower leg or shank of an animal, used in ritual law for sacrificial preparation and dietary regulations.

This noun refers to the bending lower leg of an animal, appearing exclusively in priestly and ritual contexts. In Exodus 12:9, the Passover lamb is to be roasted whole — 'its head with its legs' — preserving the animal's integrity as a symbol of hasty departure. The Levitical burnt offering instructions (Lev 1:9, 13; 8:21; 9:14) pair the legs with the entrails as parts to be washed before burning. Amos 3:12 uses the image vividly: a shepherd rescues only two legs from the lion's mouth, a metaphor for Israel's near-total destruction. Leviticus 11:21 uniquely applies the word to the jointed hind legs of locusts that make them clean for eating.

leg (of an animal) (9×) The lower leg or shank of an animal, occurring only in dual form and always in ritual or dietary contexts. Spanish 'patas/piernas' (legs) and French 'jambes' (legs) translate the anatomical sense, but the Hebrew is more specific: the bending joint below the knee. In Priestly legislation (Exod 12:9; 29:17; Lev 1:9, 13; 4:11; 8:21; 9:14), the legs are washed and offered alongside the entrails in burnt offerings. Amos 3:12 repurposes the sacrificial image as a metaphor for devastation. Leviticus 11:21 extends the term to the jointed leaping legs of clean insects, with the Aramaic cognate kar'a confirming the sense of a bending limb. FEET AND LEGS

en: and-its-legs, and-the-legs, its-legs | es: las-patas, las-piernas, patas-suyas | fr: comme-mauvais, et-le-legs, et-son-jambes | de: Beine, [כרעים], der-Beine Exod 12:9; Exod 29:17; Lev 1:9; Lev 1:13; Lev 4:11

כַּרְפַּס H3768 N-ms (1×)

Fine linen or cotton fabric; a high-quality textile used for royal furnishings

This noun appears only in Esther 1:6, describing the fabrics adorning Ahasuerus's palace courtyard during his grand feast. It's a loan-word from Sanskrit karpāsa (cotton) via Persian, also the source of Greek κάρπασος and Latin carbasus. The term designates fine linen or cotton cloth, possibly white or cream-colored, used in royal and luxurious contexts. Its pairing with blue and white fabrics creates a visual picture of opulent decoration.

(1×) Fine linen or cotton fabric used for royal decoration and furnishings. Esther's description places this material alongside violet and white textiles, emphasizing the lavishness of the Persian court. Spanish 'lino fino' (fine linen) and the transliterated forms in French and German reflect uncertainty about whether the term designates cotton or linen. The loan-word's journey from Sanskrit through Persian to Hebrew testifies to ancient trade networks bringing luxury textiles westward. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: fine-linen | es: lino-fino | fr: [כרפס] | de: [כרפס] Esth 1:6

כָּרַר H3769 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

dancing, whirling in celebration

This intensive form describes vigorous dancing or whirling, appearing only in 2 Samuel 6:14, 16, where David dances before the ark with all his might. The root suggests circular or whirling motion, dancing with abandon. Both occurrences describe the same event: David's ecstatic celebration as the ark enters Jerusalem, a display of worship that his wife Michal despised. The term appears in parallel with another dancing word, emphasizing the intensity and wholehearted nature of David's worship through uninhibited physical expression.

(2×) Dancing with whirling, energetic movements. The participial form describes David's continuous dancing before the ark. Both references in 2 Samuel 6:14, 16 capture the same act from different perspectives - the narrator's account and Michal's observation. This dancing represented David's complete abandonment to worship, unconcerned with royal dignity, expressing joy through physical movement. The intensive form of the verb emphasizes the vigorous, whole-hearted nature of this celebration. DANCE AND DANCING

en: and-dancing, dancing | es: danzando, y-danzando | fr: dansant, et-dansant | de: dancing, und-dancing 2Sam 6:14; 2Sam 6:16

כֶּרֶשׁ H3770 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

Belly or stomach; the digestive cavity, used metaphorically for consuming or devouring

This noun appears only in Jeremiah 51:34, in a vivid metaphor where Nebuchadnezzar is portrayed as a sea-monster who has 'filled his belly' with Israel's treasures. The term designates the belly or stomach, cognate with Aramaic and Arabic words for the ruminant stomach. Its use here is figurative—Babylon has consumed and absorbed Israel's wealth and people, storing them like food in a beast's digestive system.

(1×) The belly or stomach, here used metaphorically for voracious consumption and storage. Jeremiah's sea-monster imagery presents Nebuchadnezzar swallowing Jerusalem like a dragon, filling his belly with treasures. Spanish 'vientre' (belly/womb) preserves the anatomical metaphor. The image emphasizes both the violence of conquest (swallowing) and the temporary nature of Babylon's possession—what is swallowed can be disgorged, as the oracle promises in the following verses. WOMB AND BELLY

en: his-belly | es: su-vientre | fr: [כרשו] | de: [כרשו] Jer 51:34

כַּרְשְׁנָא H3771 N-proper-ms (1×)

Carshena; a Persian noble who served as one of seven counselors to King Ahasuerus

This proper name appears in Esther 1:14, identifying one of seven princes who had special access to the king and knowledge of law and justice. These advisors formed the king's inner circle, consulted on matters of protocol and policy. Persian names in Esther reflect historical Persian administrative practices, where the king maintained a council of trusted nobles. Carshena was among those the king consulted about Queen Vashti's disobedience.

(1×) The personal name of a Persian prince and royal advisor. Esther lists him among seven counselors 'who saw the king's face'—a phrase indicating privileged access to the royal presence. The transliterated preservation across languages (Spanish 'Carsena') maintains the historical specificity of the narrative. These seven formed the administrative elite who shaped royal policy, making Carshena's inclusion in the Vashti consultation significant for understanding Persian court protocol. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Carshena | es: Carsena | fr: [כרשנא] | de: [כרשנא] Esth 1:14

כָּרַת H3772 V-Qal-Imp-mp (290×)

To cut — physically cutting trees or objects, cutting a covenant, or being cut off as divine punishment; spans Qal, Niphal, Hifil, and Hofal stems.

A verb whose concrete physical action — cutting with a blade — generates the Hebrew Bible's most important covenant idiom and its most severe judgment formula. When Abraham 'cuts' a covenant in Genesis 15:18, the word preserves the memory of an ancient ritual where animals were literally split and the parties walked between the pieces. When God threatens that a soul 'shall be cut off from its people' (Exod 12:15), the same root carries lethal finality. The multilingual evidence tracks these divergences precisely: Hindi uses 'bandha' (to bind/tie) for covenant-cutting but 'kaata' (to cut) for physical felling, showing that translators recognize fundamentally different conceptual frames despite the shared Hebrew root.

1. cut a covenant / make a pact (97×) The covenant idiom: to 'cut' (karat) a covenant, treaty, or agreement. With 97 occurrences, this is the single most frequent use of the verb, reflecting the centrality of covenant in biblical theology. Genesis 15:18 ('on that day the LORD cut a covenant with Abram') is the paradigmatic instance, where the literal cutting of animals (Gen 15:10,17) gives rise to the idiom. Exodus 24:8 and 34:27 extend it to the Sinai covenant. Hindi 'bandha' (to bind) and Korean 'gyeyak-eul maekda' (to tie a covenant) show that target languages interpret the idiom's meaning rather than its etymology, while French 'couper' preserves the cutting metaphor. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: He-cut, and-cut, and-cut-down | es: Y-cortó, cortó, hizo | fr: Il-couper, coupa, couper | de: Er-schnitt, abschneiden, er-schnitt Gen 15:18; Exod 4:25; Exod 24:8; Deut 4:23; Deut 5:2

2. cut off / destroy (Hifil causative) (81×) Hifil causative: to cause to be cut off, meaning to destroy, exterminate, or eliminate by divine or royal authority. The 81 Hifil occurrences carry the most severe theological weight — God actively cutting off idolaters (Lev 20:3,5,6), false worship (Lev 26:30), and entire nations. Arabic 'abada' (annihilate) and 'afna' (exterminate) capture the intensified agency of the causative stem. The Hifil marks divine or sovereign initiative in destruction, distinguishing it from the Niphal passive and the Qal covenant sense. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-I-cut-off, and-I-will-cut-off | es: Y-cortaré, y-cortaré | fr: et-je-fera-coupa-au-loin, et-retrancher | de: und-abschneiden, und-ich-wird-schnitt-ab, und-schnitt-ab Lev 17:10; Lev 20:3; Lev 20:5; Lev 20:6; Lev 26:30

3. be cut off / be eliminated (Niphal) (74×) Niphal passive/reflexive: to be cut off from one's people, land, or life. With 74 occurrences, this is the standard penalty formula in Priestly legislation —

'that soul shall be cut off from Israel' (Exod 12:15,19; 30:33,38). The passive voice emphasizes the result rather than the agent, though God is understood as the implied cause. Arabic 'yunqatiu' (Form VII reflexive) and Korean 'kkeuneojida' (to become severed) reflect the passive/resultative morphology. This formula appears almost exclusively in legal contexts as the ultimate sanction for covenant violation. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-it-shall-be-cut-off, and-shall-be-cut-off, and-will-be-cut-off | es: será-cortado, te-faltará, y-será-cortada | fr: et—être-couper-dehors, et-cela-devra-être-couper-off, et-devra-être-couper-off | de: abschneiden, und-ausgerottet-werden-soll, und-es-soll-sein-schnitt-weg Gen 17:14; Exod 12:15; Exod 12:19; Exod 30:33; Exod 30:38

4. cut / cut down physically (35×) Qal literal: to physically cut, fell, or chop down trees, branches, or material objects. The 35 occurrences include felling Asherah poles (Exod 34:13), cutting a grape cluster (Num 13:23-24), cutting trees for siege works (Deut 20:19-20), and the prohibition against castration (Lev 22:24). Hindi 'kaata,' Swahili '-kata,' Arabic 'qataa,' and Korean 'jallada/beoda' all use basic physical cutting verbs, confirming the concrete, non-idiomatic sense. This is the etymological base from which the covenant and judgment senses derive. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: To-cut-down, and-I-cut-down, and-I-will-cut-down | es: Y-cortaron, Y-lo-cortaron, al-cortar-yo | fr: dans-mon-coupant, et-coupa-au-loin, et-coupa-en-bas | de: abschneiden, der-schnitt-ab, du-soll-schnitt-hinab Exod 34:13; Lev 22:24; Num 13:23; Num 13:24; Deut 20:19

5. be cut off (Hofal / Qal passive) (3×) Hofal causative passive and Qal passive: to have been cut off or cut down, emphasizing the completed state of severance or destruction. Only 3 occurrences — Judges 6:28 (the Asherah 'had been cut down'), Ezekiel 16:4 ('your navel cord was not cut'), and Joel 1:9 ('the grain offering is cut off from the house of the LORD'). Arabic 'inqataat' (Form VII perfect) and 'maqtuua' (passive participle) reflect the resultative, accomplished-state reading. These rare forms round out the full conjugational range of karat. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: is-cut-off, was-cut, was-cut-down | es: Fue-cortada, cortada, fue-cortado | fr: il-a-retranché, le-il-a-retranché, était-couper-en-bas | de: abschneiden, der-schnitt-ab, war-schnitt-hinab Judg 6:28; Ezek 16:4; Joel 1:9

כָּרַת H3773 N-fpc (3×)

beams, rows of hewn timber used in construction

Hewn wooden beams, specifically the courses of cedar timber laid in rows as part of Solomon's temple and palace construction. The architectural technique involved alternating layers of stone and timber—three rows of dressed stone topped by a row of cedar beams—providing both structural support and aesthetic coherence. This construction method was typical of Phoenician-influenced Israelite monumental building.

(3×) First Kings 6:36 describes the inner court wall construction: three courses of dressed stone and 'one course of cedar beams' (כָּרְתוֹת אֲרָזִים). The same phrase appears in 7:12 for the great court and temple vestibule. First Kings 7:2 mentions 'four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams on the pillars' for the House of the Forest of Lebanon, Solomon's palace hall. The term כְּרֻתוֹת (passive participle of כָּרַת, 'cut') emphasizes these are carefully hewn, finished beams, not raw logs. Translations often render as 'beams' or 'timber courses.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-beams-of, beams-of | es: vigas-de, y-vigas-de | fr: beams-de, et-beams-de | de: beams-von, und-beams-von 1Kgs 6:36; 1Kgs 7:2; 1Kgs 7:12

כְּרִתִי H3774 Art / N-proper-ms (10×)

Kerethite(s) — a gentilic name for an ethnic group linked to the Philistines, possibly Cretan in origin

The Kerethites (also spelled Cherethites) were an ethnic group closely associated with the Philistines, likely originating from Crete — a connection the Septuagint makes explicit by rendering the name as Krētas in Ezekiel 25:16 and Zephaniah 2:5. In David's narrative they appear as the king's elite personal guard alongside the Pelethites, a loyal mercenary corps that followed David through Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 15:18) and Solomon's coronation (1 Kgs 1:38, 44). Their territory in the Negev is mentioned when David pursues the Amalekites (1 Sam 30:14). The pairing 'Kerethites and Pelethites' became virtually a fixed expression for the royal bodyguard.

Kerethite(s) (10×) A gentilic adjective used substantively for the Kerethites (Cherethites), an ethnic group associated with or constituting part of the Philistine population, possibly originating from Crete. The LXX identifies them explicitly as Krētas ('Cretans') in Ezek 25:16 and Zeph 2:5. In Samuel-Kings they serve as David's royal guard in the fixed pair hakkĕrētî wĕhappĕlētî ('the Kerethites and Pelethites,' 2 Sam 8:18; 15:18; 20:7, 23; 1 Kgs 1:38, 44). In 1 Sam 30:14, their territory appears as a distinct Negev region. Spanish 'cereteos/quereteo' and English 'Cherethites' preserve the gentilic identification. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (the-Kerethites), Cherethites, and-the-Cherethites | es: (el-kereteo), cereteos, el-quereteo | fr: (the-Kerethites), Crétois, [הַכְּרֵתִי] | de: [הַכְּרֵתִי], [כְּרֵתִים], der-Cherethite 1Sam 30:14; 2Sam 8:18; 2Sam 15:18; 2Sam 20:7; 2Sam 20:23

כֶּשֶׂב H3775 Conj-w / N-ms (13×)

Lamb, young sheep — a small ovine used for sacrifice, food, and pastoral wealth

A noun for a lamb or young sheep, a metathesized variant of the more common כֶּבֶשׂ (kebes, H3532), with the consonants transposed. It appears in two main settings: the pastoral economy of Jacob's flocks, where lambs are sorted by color and markings (Gen 30:32–33, 35, 40), and the Levitical sacrificial system, where lambs serve as burnt offerings, peace offerings, and sin offerings (Lev 1:10; 3:7; 4:35; 22:19, 27; Num 18:17). Deuteronomy 14:4 lists it among permitted clean animals. Spanish 'cordero,' French 'agneau,' and German 'Lamm/Schaf' uniformly confirm the young-sheep meaning.

lamb, young sheep (13×) A lamb or young sheep (כֶּשֶׂב), the metathesized form of כֶּבֶשׂ, designating a small ovine in pastoral and cultic contexts. In the Jacob narratives it refers to livestock wealth sorted by markings (Gen 30:32–35, 40). In Priestly legislation it is the sacrificial animal par excellence — specified for burnt offerings (Lev 1:10), peace offerings (Lev 3:7), sin offerings (Lev 4:35), and firstborn dedications (Num 18:17). Deut 14:4 lists it among clean animals permitted for food. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: a-lamb, among-the-lambs, among-the-sheep | es: Y-los-corderos, cordero, de-los-corderos | fr: agneau, et-le-agneaux, et-un-mouton | de: Lamm, Schaf, der-Laemmer Gen 30:32; Gen 30:33; Gen 30:35; Gen 30:40; Lev 1:10

כִּשְׂבָּה H3776 N-fs (1×)

A ewe-lamb; a female sheep, used in sacrificial contexts

This feminine noun appears only in Leviticus 5:6, specifying acceptable animals for a sin offering. A ewe-lamb was a young female sheep, valued for breeding and wool production. The Priestly legislation allowed substitution of sheep or goats, making provision for different economic capacities among worshipers. The term's singularity in Leviticus emphasizes the accessibility of atonement—even one modest animal sufficed.

(1×) A female sheep offered in sacrifice for purification from sin. Leviticus 5 addresses unintentional transgressions requiring atonement, with the ewe-lamb as the standard offering. Spanish 'cordera' (female lamb) and French 'brebis' (ewe) both specify the female gender, while English 'ewe-lamb' is maximally specific. The sacrificial system's acceptance of this common domestic animal demonstrated that reconciliation with God was not limited to the wealthy who could afford bulls. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: a-ewe-lamb | es: cordera | fr: une-brebis | de: ein-ewe-Lamm Lev 5:6

כֶּשֶׂד H3777 N-proper-ms (1×)

Chesed; son of Nahor and nephew of Abraham, ancestor of a people group

This proper name appears in Genesis 22:22, in the genealogy of Nahor, Abraham's brother. Chesed was the fourth son of Nahor by Milcah, and likely the eponymous ancestor of the Chaldeans (Kasdim), though this connection is debated. The name may mean 'belonging to the god Chesed' or personify the people group that descended from him. Such genealogies establish kinship connections between Israel and neighboring peoples.

(1×) The personal name of Nahor's son, possibly the ancestor of the Chaldean people. Genesis 22 lists him among Abraham's extended family in Mesopotamia, establishing genealogical connections between patriarchs and surrounding nations. Spanish 'Kesed' and the variant spellings across translations preserve the Hebrew form. Some scholars see in this name the origin of 'Chaldean,' making Chesed the ancestral link to Babylonia, though this etymology remains uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Chesed | es: Kesed | fr: Chesed | de: Kesed Gen 22:22

כַּשְׂדִּים H3778 N-proper-ms (82×)

Chaldeans, Chaldea – the people of southern Mesopotamia (especially under Nebuchadnezzar) and their territorial homeland.

Refers to the inhabitants of southern Mesopotamia who rose to dominate the Neo-Babylonian Empire under Nebuchadnezzar. In earlier texts, the Chaldeans appear as a distinct ethnic group dwelling along the lower Euphrates and Tigris, as in the ancient place name 'Ur of the Chaldeans' (Gen 11:28). In the prophetic books, especially Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Habakkuk, they become virtually synonymous with the Babylonian imperial power that destroyed Jerusalem. A handful of occurrences use the name geographically for the territory itself – 'the land of the Chaldeans' (Jer 50:10, Ezek 16:29).

1. Chaldeans (people/nation) (76×) The Chaldean people as an ethnic-national group – the inhabitants of southern Mesopotamia, especially as aggressors and imperial overlords under the Neo-Babylonian dynasty. Spanish 'los caldeos,' French 'les Chaldeens,' and German 'der Chaldaeer' all treat this as a stable gentiliic. Prominent in prophetic judgment oracles (Isa 13:19, 'the glory of the Chaldeans') and in the historical narratives of Jerusalem's fall (2 Kgs 25:4-5). CHALDEANS PEOPLE LAND

en: the-Chaldeans, the-Kasdim | es: los-caldeos | fr: le-Chaldéens | de: der-Chaldaeer Isa 13:19; Isa 23:13; Isa 47:1; Isa 47:5; Isa 48:14

2. Chaldea (land/region) (6×) The geographical territory of Chaldea in southern Mesopotamia, used with directional or locative force, often in the construct 'land of the Chaldeans' (eretz kasdim). Spanish distinguishes 'Caldea' (place) from 'los caldeos' (people), and English shifts to 'Chaldea' or 'Chaldea-ward.' Key passages: Jer 50:10 ('Chaldea shall become plunder'), Ezek 16:29 ('the land of the Chaldeans'). CHALDEANS PEOPLE LAND

en: Chaldea, Chaldea-ward, the-Kasdim | es: Caldea, a-Caldea | fr: Chaldéens | de: Chaldaeer Jer 50:10; Jer 51:24; Jer 51:35; Ezek 11:24; Ezek 16:29

כַּשְׂדִּי H3779 N-proper-mp (13×)

Chaldeans — the Babylonian people and their scholarly-priestly caste of wise men

The Aramaic gentilic noun for the Chaldeans, appearing in Daniel and Ezra with two overlapping referents. In its ethnic sense it designates the Chaldean nation and its rulers — Belshazzar as 'king of the Chaldeans' (Dan 5:30) and the Chaldean destruction of the temple (Ezra 5:12). In its specialized sense within Daniel's court narratives, it denotes a learned class among the Babylonian magi, summoned alongside magicians and astrologers to interpret dreams and signs (Dan 2:5, 10; 4:4; 5:7, 11). Spanish 'caldeos' and German 'Chaldaeer' preserve both dimensions of this designation.

Chaldeans (ethnic/national designation) (13×) The Chaldeans (כַּשְׂדָּאֵי / כַּשְׂדָּי, Aramaic) as both an ethnic nation and a learned priestly caste. Ethnically, the term identifies the Neo-Babylonian people: Belshazzar is 'king of the Chaldeans' (Dan 5:30), and the Chaldeans destroyed the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 5:12). As a professional designation in Daniel's court, it denotes a class of wise men and diviners summoned to interpret royal dreams and omens (Dan 2:5, 10; 4:4; 5:7, 11; cf. Dan 3:8). CHALDEANS PEOPLE LAND

en: (qere:of-Kasdim), (qere:the-Kasdaei), (qere:to-the-Kasdaei) | es: (a-los-caldeos), (caldeo), (caldeos) | fr: [כשדי], [כשדאה], [כשדא] | de: Chaldaeer, und-Chaldaeer Dan 2:5; Dan 2:10

כָּשָׂה H3780 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (1×)

To be gorged, sated, or covered with fat; to grow thick and overfed

This verb appears only in Deuteronomy 32:15, in Moses' Song describing Israel's prosperity and subsequent rebellion. The sequence 'you grew fat, thick, gorged' uses three synonymous verbs to paint Israel as an overfed animal that kicks against its keeper. The root suggests being filled to excess with food, leading to physical corpulence. The Arabic cognate means 'filled with food,' supporting this sense of satiation beyond need.

(1×) To become gorged or covered with excess fat from overfeeding. Moses' song uses intensifying synonyms to describe Israel's material prosperity in the land, which led to spiritual complacency. Spanish 'cubriste' (you covered yourself) and French 'couvrît' (covered) interpret this as covering or layering, possibly influenced by the parallel 'grew thick.' The imagery is deliberately animalistic—Israel as a fattened beast that forgets the shepherd, a powerful metaphor for ingratitude. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: you-were-covered | es: te-cubriste | fr: tu-étaient-couvrit | de: du-warenbedeckte Deut 32:15

כַּשִּׁיל H3781 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

An axe or hatchet; a tool with a blade for cutting or chopping wood

This noun appears only in Psalm 74:6, describing the destruction of the temple's carved woodwork. The term designates an axe or hatchet used for felling or hewing, possibly a smaller tool than the mattock mentioned alongside it. The psalm laments enemies attacking sanctuary woodwork 'with hatchet and hammers,' suggesting deliberate vandalism. The word likely derives from the root meaning 'to cut down,' making it a fitting term for a felling tool.

(1×) A hatchet or small axe used for cutting wood, here weaponized for destruction. Psalm 74's lament over the temple's desecration depicts enemies hacking at ornate carvings like woodsmen attacking a forest. Spanish 'hacha' and French 'hache' (both 'axe') identify the tool type. The pairing with 'hammers' suggests systematic demolition of artistic woodwork, turning construction tools into instruments of sacrilege—a violation intensified by attacking what was consecrated to God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13410 WITH 5 SENSES

en: with-hatchet | es: con-hacha | fr: dans-hache | de: mit-hatchet Ps 74:6

כָּשַׁל H3782 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (65×)

To stumble, stagger, totter; in Nifal, to stumble and fall; in Hifil, to cause to stumble; also to grow weak or fail in strength.

Kashal is the Hebrew Bible's central verb for losing one's footing — both literally and in the vast metaphorical territory that stumbling opens up. A person stumbles over a stone in the road, but nations stumble into judgment, the wicked stumble in darkness, and the faithful are promised they will walk without stumbling. The Nifal stem adds the weight of consequence: not merely tripping but falling, being overthrown, collapsing. The Hifil turns the verb outward — to make someone else fall, whether by treachery or divine decree. Perhaps most interesting is the metaphorical extension into weakness and failure (Neh 4:10, 'the strength of the bearers has stumbled'), where Syriac kashal's link to skandalizomai ('to cause offense, scandalize') hints at the New Testament's stumbling-block theology already latent in the Hebrew root.

1. stumble, trip, stagger (25×) Qal: to stumble, trip, or stagger — the basic physical and metaphorical sense covering 25 occurrences. This spans literal tripping (Lev 26:37, stumbling over one another in flight), moral failure (Prov 4:12, the righteous path where one does not stumble), and poetic imagery of weakness (Job 4:4, strengthening stumbling knees). Spanish tropezar and German straucheln both track the Hebrew closely across both physical and figurative uses. Key passages include Ps 27:2 where enemies stumble and fall, and en: and-shall-stumble, and-stumbles, and-they-will-stumble | es: Al-que-tropieza, Y-tropezarán, Y-tropezarás | fr: comme-Silo, comme-trébucher, et-ils-fera-stumble | de: hat-stumbled, sie-stumbled, straucheln Lev 26:37; Job 4:4; Ps 27:2; Ps 31:10; Ps 105:37

Ps 105:37 where Israel goes out without one who stumbles. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

2. stumble and fall (Nifal) (24×) Nifal: to stumble and fall, be overthrown or brought down — 24 occurrences emphasizing the completed result of stumbling rather than the initial trip. The Nifal reflexive-resultative force means 'to find oneself fallen,' and the contexts are overwhelmingly about judgment and defeat: enemies fall before Israel (Ps 9:3), the wicked stumble in darkness (Prov 4:19), but the righteous rise again after falling seven times (Prov 24:16). Korean 넘어지다 ('to fall over/collapse') and Arabic saqata ('to fall down') both select completive-fall vocabulary rather than simple tripping words, confirming that the Nifal adds genuine resultative force to the root. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: [they-stumble], and-stumble, and-they-shall-stumble | es: Y-al-caer-ellos, [tropiezan], caerán | fr: et-trébucher, et-trébucher-lui, trébucher | de: sie-stumble, straucheln, strauchelte 1Sam 2:4; Ps 9:3; Prov 4:12; Prov 4:19; Prov 24:16

3. cause to stumble (Hifil) (9×) Hifil causative: to cause someone to stumble, make fall, bring about overthrow — 9 occurrences carrying heavy theological and moral weight. In 2 Chr 25:8 God himself has power 'to cause to stumble'; in 2 Chr 28:23 the gods of Damascus 'made him stumble'; in Ps 64:8 the wicked are made to stumble over their own tongues. Spanish hacer tropezar and Korean 넘어뜨리다 ('to knock over') both use explicit causative constructions, mirroring the Hebrew Hifil morphology. This sense connects directly to the New Testament's skandalizomai theology of causing offense. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: He-caused-to-fail, and-they-made-stumble-them, and-they-will-make-him-stumble | es: Y-lo-harán-tropezar, ha-hecho-tropezar, hacen-tropezar | fr: [ולהכשיל], [יכשילך], [להכשילו] | de: straucheln, strauchelte, und-sie-wird-machen-ihn-stumble 2Chr 25:8; 2Chr 28:23; Ps 64:8; Prov 4:16

4. become weak, totter, fail (4×) Qal with emphasis on growing weak, tottering, or failing in strength rather than physical tripping — 4 occurrences where the image is of buckling, flagging, or declining rather than stumbling over an obstacle. In Neh 4:10 the strength of the burden-bearers 'has stumbled' (i.e., failed); in Ps 109:24 knees 'totter' from fasting; in Isa 35:3 feeble knees are strengthened. Arabic kasila ('to be heavy, sluggish') — the Arabic cognate — preserves precisely this weakness sense, and Korean 약해지다 ('to become weak') and Spanish vacilar ('to waver, falter') both select debilitation vocabulary rather than tripping words. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: are-weak, failed, feeble-one | es: desfalleció, débil, vacilan | fr: [כושל], [כשל], comme-trébucher | de: sind-schwach, straucheln, strauchelte 2Chr 28:15; Neh 4:10; Ps 109:24; Isa 35:3

5. bereave, cause childlessness (Piel ketiv) (2×) Piel ketiv reading at Prov 4:16 and Ezek 36:14: to bereave or cause childlessness. This is a textually contested sense — the ketiv consonantal text can be read as the Piel of kashal ('to bereave'), while the qere tradition emends to a form of shakhal ('to be childless'). In Ezek 36:14 the land 'will no longer bereave' its nation; at Prov 4:16 the wicked cannot sleep unless they 'cause someone to stumble/bereave.' The two readings show how scribal tradition negotiated between the stumbling-root and the childlessness-root. Spanish dejar sin hijos ('to leave childless') confirms the bereavement reading in the textual tradition. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: [dejarás-sin-hijos], [hacen-tropezar] | fr: trébucher | de: straucheln, strauchelte Prov 4:16; Ezek 36:14

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Jer 18:23 where the prophet prays that his persecutors be 'made to stumble' before God. Spanish derribados ('knocked down') and English 'stumbled' both align with the Nifal/Hifil overthrow senses (2-3), and this singleton likely represents a contextual variant of the defeat-stumbling rather than a genuinely distinct meaning. The passage's imprecatory context intensifies the fall imagery. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: stumbled | es: derribados | fr: trébucher | de: straucheln Jer 18:23

כִּשָּׁלוֹן H3783 N-ms (1×)

Stumbling or falling; calamity or downfall resulting from pride

This noun appears only in Proverbs 16:18, in the famous proverb 'Pride goes before destruction, and a haughty spirit before stumbling.' The term denotes the act of stumbling or the resulting calamity, derived from the verb 'to stumble.' In wisdom literature, stumbling is both literal (losing footing) and metaphorical (experiencing disaster). The proverb pairs two synonymous statements about pride's consequences.

(1×) A stumbling or falling, used figuratively for calamity or ruin. Proverbs presents this as the inevitable outcome of pride and arrogance—the haughty person trips and falls. Spanish 'caída' (fall/falling) and the transliterated forms reflect this collapse-imagery. The parallelism with 'destruction' intensifies the severity: stumbling isn't a minor mishap but a catastrophic fall. The wisdom tradition repeatedly warns that pride blinds people to obstacles, ensuring their eventual downfall. FALL DOWNFALL RUIN

en: stumbling | es: caída | fr: כשלון | de: [כשלון] Prov 16:18

כָּשַׁף H3784 V-Piel-Prtcpl-fs (6×)

To practice sorcery or witchcraft; a Piel denominative verb for illicit magical arts, always condemned.

A Piel denominative verb designating the practice of sorcery, always presented negatively in Scripture. The feminine participle mekhashshephah ('sorceress') appears in the famous prohibition of Exodus 22:18, while the masculine plural designates foreign court magicians in Egypt (Exod 7:11) and Babylon (Dan 2:2). Manasseh's practice of sorcery is listed among his catalogue of abominations (2 Chr 33:6). Spanish hechicero/hechicera and English 'sorcerer/sorceress' consistently render this term across translations. The Akkadian cognate kasapu confirms that this was recognized as a distinct category of magical practice throughout the ancient Near East.

practice sorcery (6×) To engage in sorcery or witchcraft as an illicit magical practice. Used as a participle-noun for practitioners: the sorceress who must not live (Exod 22:18), the Egyptian magicians who replicated Moses' signs (Exod 7:11), Babylon's court sorcerers summoned by Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:2), and the forbidden diviner of Deuteronomy 18:10. The finite verb appears once of King Manasseh, who 'practiced sorcery' among his many abominations (2 Chr 33:6). Malachi 3:5 places sorcerers alongside adulterers and perjurers in God's coming judgment. Spanish hechicero and Korean 마술사 both reflect the universal recognition of this as a distinct category of forbidden magical art. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: a-sorceress, against-the-sorcerers, and-for-the-sorcerers | es: Hechicera, contra-los-hechiceros, o-hechicero | fr: [וכשף], et-pratiquer-la-sorcellerie, et-à-le-sorcerers | de: [במכשפים], [וכשף], [ולמכשפים] Exod 7:11; Exod 22:18; Deut 18:10; 2Chr 33:6; Dan 2:2

כְּשָׁף H3785 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3fs (6×)

Sorcery, witchcraft; illicit magical arts, often paired with sexual immorality as metaphors for spiritual corruption.

The noun form of kisheph, always appearing in the plural keshaphim ('sorceries'), designating the practice of illicit magic. What makes this word distinctive is its frequent pairing with zenunim ('harlotries') – Jezebel's sorceries and harlotries provoke Jehu's revolt (2 Kgs 9:22), and Nineveh is personified as a harlot and 'mistress of sorceries' (Nah 3:4). This pairing suggests sorcery was understood not merely as a technique but as a seductive, corrupting power. Spanish hechicerias, Arabic sihr, and Korean 주술/마법 all consistently identify these as forbidden magical arts. Micah 5:12 promises God will 'cut off your sorceries from your hand,' treating them almost as physical implements.

sorcery, witchcraft (occult practice) (6×) The practice of sorcery or witchcraft, always in the plural keshaphim. Used both literally of magical arts God will destroy – 'I will cut off sorceries from your hand' (Mic 5:12) and 'in spite of the multitude of your sorceries' (Isa 47:9, 12, addressed to Babylon) – and figuratively of seductive, corrupting influence. The figurative usage is particularly vivid: Jezebel's sorceries alongside her harlotries (2 Kgs 9:22), and Nineveh as 'mistress of sorceries' (Nah 3:4), where keshaphim parallels zenunim to portray spiritual seduction. Spanish hechicerias and the Arabic cognate sihr both capture the sense of forbidden enchantment. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: and-her-sorceries, by-her-sorceries, sorceries | es: en-hechicerías-de-ella, hechicerías, tus-hechicerías | fr: [כשפיך], et-sa-sorceries, sorcellerie | de: [בכשפיה], [כשפיך], [כשפים] 2Kgs 9:22; Isa 47:9; Isa 47:12; Mic 5:12; Nah 3:4

כַּשָּׁף H3786 N-mpc / 2mp (1×)

Sorcerers or magicians; practitioners of magic and divination

This masculine plural noun appears only in Jeremiah 27:9, in a list of false advisors the people must not heed. Sorcerers practiced magic arts, divination, and occult manipulation, distinct from (but overlapping with) diviners and false prophets. The Assyrian cognate kaššapu similarly designates practitioners of sorcery. Israel's law prohibited such practices, but their persistent mention suggests ongoing popular consultation of magical specialists.

(1×) Practitioners of sorcery and magical arts who claimed supernatural knowledge or power. Jeremiah warns against heeding these sorcerers alongside prophets, diviners, and dreamers—all of whom were falsely assuring the people they wouldn't serve Babylon. Spanish 'hechiceros' (sorcerers/enchanters) and the transliterated forms identify these as occult practitioners. Their inclusion in prophetic denunciation shows the temptation to seek guidance from forbidden sources during national crisis. MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER

en: your-sorcerers | es: vuestros-hechiceros | fr: [כשפיכם] | de: [כשפיכם] Jer 27:9

כָּשֵׁר H3787 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to succeed, be proper, be advantageous (late Hebrew)

A verb appearing in late biblical books (Esther, Ecclesiastes), meaning to be fitting, succeed, or prove advantageous. Esther uses it for what is 'proper in the king's sight,' the language of Persian court protocol. Ecclesiastes employs it to express uncertainty about which endeavors will prosper, and to discuss wisdom's advantage in bringing success. The root's Aramaic flavor reflects linguistic evolution in the post-exilic period.

(3×) Esther 8:5 phrases Esther's petition conditionally: 'if it be proper before the king' (וְכָשֵׁר הַדָּבָר לְפָנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ), using court etiquette language. Ecclesiastes 11:6 expresses agricultural uncertainty: 'you don't know which will succeed' (יִכְשָׁר), whether morning or evening sowing. Ecclesiastes 10:10 states that 'an advantage for making succeed is wisdom' (וְיִתְרוֹן הַכְשֵׁיר חָכְמָה)—wisdom enhances effectiveness. The term's commercial and administrative overtones fit these late wisdom and court contexts. Translations: Spanish 'acertar/prosperar,' German forms around success/propriety. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-proper, making-succeed, will-prosper | es: (acertar), prosperará, y-recto | fr: [וכשר], réussir | de: [(הכשר)הכשיר*הכשר], [וכשר], [יכשר] Esth 8:5; Eccl 10:10; Eccl 11:6

כִּשָּׁרוֹן H3788 Conj-w (3×)

skill, success, profit; capacity to accomplish or advantage gained

A late Hebrew noun appearing only in Ecclesiastes, denoting either the skill applied to work or the profit/success that results. Qohelet observes that all skillful work arises from competitive envy, that one person labors with wisdom and skill yet must leave results to another, and questions what profit possessions bring to their owners. The term captures both human capability and its often-frustrating outcomes.

(3×) Ecclesiastes 2:21 laments that someone toils 'with wisdom, knowledge, and skill' (בְּחָכְמָה וּבְדַעַת וּבְכִשָּׁרוֹן) yet must bequeath it to another. Ecclesiastes 4:4 observes that 'all skill of work' (כָּל־כִּשָּׁרוֹן הַמַּעֲשָׂה) stems from rivalry between neighbors—a cynical appraisal of motivation. Ecclesiastes 5:11 [Eng. 5:10] asks rhetorically, 'what profit to their owners?' (מַה־כִּשָּׁרוֹן לִבְעָלֶיהָ), shifting the sense from 'skill' to 'success/advantage.' Translations navigate between 'skill/ability' (Spanish 'habilidad') and 'profit/success' (French 'profit') depending on context. GAIN AND GREED

en: and-in-skill, skill-of, success | es: habilidad-de, provecho, y-con-habilidad | fr: et-profit, profit | de: [ובכשרון], [כשרון] Eccl 2:21; Eccl 4:4; Eccl 5:11

כָּתַב H3789 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs (227×)

To write, inscribe, record, compose; in passive: written, recorded; as substantive: scribe, writer

A fundamental verb of civilization in the ancient Near East, katav covers the full act of committing words to a durable medium — whether Moses inscribing the covenant on tablets (Exod 24:4), a king dictating letters, or a scribe drafting a legal decree. The Qal passive participle (katuv) became a standard formula for citing authoritative texts: 'as it is written.' Cognate with Aramaic ketav, Phoenician ktb, and borrowed into Arabic as kataba, reflecting a shared Semitic scribal culture. The Nifal and Piel stems extend the range from institutional record-keeping to the professional identity of the scribe.

1. Qal passive participle: written, recorded (112×) The Qal passive participle katuv/ketuvim functions as a stative adjective: 'written, recorded.' It became the standard citation formula ('as it is written in the book of...') across Kings, Chronicles, and post-exilic literature (1 Kgs 11:41; 14:19). Spanish escritos and French écrit mirror this participial use. This is the single most frequent form of the root, anchoring the concept of authoritative written tradition. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: written | es: escritas, escritos, están-escritos | fr: écrit | de: geschrieben 1Kgs 11:41; 1Kgs 14:19; 1Kgs 14:29; 1Kgs 15:7; 1Kgs 15:23

2. Qal active: write, compose (89×) The Qal active finite forms — perfect, imperfect, imperative, and waw-consecutive — denote the concrete act of writing, composing, or recording text onto a physical surface. From Moses writing the Lord's words (Exod 24:4) to Jeremiah dictating to Baruch (Jer 36:18), these forms span divine command, royal correspondence, and prophetic documentation. German schrieb and Spanish escribió uniformly confirm the active composition sense. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: And-wrote, and-he-wrote, and-wrote | es: Y-escribió, escribió, y-escribió | fr: Et-écrivit, et-il-écrivit, et-écrire | de: And-schrieb, er-schrieb, und-er-schrieb Exod 17:14; Exod 24:4; Exod 34:27; Exod 34:28; Num 33:2

3. Nifal: be written (dynamic passive) (17×) The Nifal stem conveys a dynamic passive: 'be written, be recorded, be inscribed' by an unnamed or implied agent. Unlike the stative Qal participle, the Nifal emphasizes the process or decree that something shall be written. It clusters heavily in Esther (1:19; 2:23; 3:9, 12), where royal edicts are formally enacted. Spanish fue-escrito and the passive construction reinforce this procedural nuance. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: and-be-written, and-let-it-be-written, and-was-written | es: Se-escribirá, fue-escrito, fueron-escritos | fr: et-écrire, écrire | de: lass-sein-geschrieben, schreiben, schrieb Ezra 8:34; Esth 1:19; Esth 2:23; Esth 3:9; Esth 3:12

4. Piel/participle: scribe, professional writer (5×) The Piel intensive stem and substantivized participles designate the professional scribe or one officially engaged in writing. Isaiah 10:1 denounces those 'who write oppressive decrees' (mekattevim), and Nehemiah 9:38 lists 'those who signed' the covenant. The Piel intensifies the activity into a vocation. Spanish los-que-firmaron ('those who signed') captures this institutional, professional dimension. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: and-the-writers, and-writing, the-signing | es: escriben, escribía, los-que-firmaron | fr: et-écrire, écrire | de: schreiben, schrieb, und-schreiben Neh 9:38; Isa 10:1; Jer 32:12; Jer 36:18

5. Qal: register, enroll in a list (2×) A specialized sense of writing as enrolling or registering names in an official list or census, distinct from literary composition. In Psalm 87:6 the LORD 'registers' peoples as born in Zion, and Numbers 11:26 mentions men 'registered' among the elders. Spanish inscritos and the semantic shift from 'compose text' to 'inscribe in a roster' mark this administrative usage. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: among-the-registered, when-he-registers | es: al-escribir, entre-los-inscritos | fr: dans-écrire, parmi-le-registered | de: unter-der-registered, wann-er-registers Num 11:26; Ps 87:6

6. (1×) In Hosea 8:12, a difficult text where God says 'I wrote for him,' the multilingual glosses (eng: for-him, spa: para-él) suggest the focus falls on the recipient rather than the act of writing, perhaps emphasizing the rejected personal gift of Torah. The verse's isolation and ambiguous syntax have generated varied interpretations. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: for-him | es: para-él | fr: à-lui | de: ihm Hos 8:12

7. (1×) In Esther 8:9, the phrase 'according to their script' (kikhtavam) uses the nominal derivative of katav to denote a writing system or script rather than the act of writing. Spanish conforme-a-su-escritura ('according to their writing/script') and the passage's context of multilingual imperial correspondence confirm this metonymic shift from verb to system. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: according-to-their-script | es: conforme-a-su-escritura | fr: écrire | de: schrieb Esth 8:9

כְּתַב H3790 V-Qal-Imperf-1cp (8×)

To write, record in writing; an Aramaic verb for composing letters, decrees, and visions.

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to write' or 'to record in writing,' appearing in the Peal (active) and Peʿil (passive) stems across Ezra and Daniel. Its eight occurrences span the full range of ancient scribal activity: composing official letters of accusation (Ezr 4:8), recording legal findings in archives (Ezr 5:7; 6:2), and the supernatural writing on the wall at Belshazzar's feast (Dan 5:5). Spanish captures the active sense with escribieron and escribió, while the passive was-written appears in official formulae.

write (Aramaic) (8×) To compose, inscribe, or record in writing — encompassing both human scribal activity and supernatural inscription. In Ezra, the verb describes officials writing an accusation letter (Ezr 4:8, 3mp perfect), the Jewish elders recording names for the king (Ezr 5:10, 1cp imperfect nikhtub), and archival notation 'thus was written in it' (Ezr 5:7; 6:2, passive peʿil). In Daniel 5:5, it describes the disembodied fingers that 'were writing' (katbevan, feminine plural participle) on the palace wall, and in 7:1 Daniel himself writes down a vision. Spanish escribieron/escribió and English wrote/was-written reflect the active-passive distribution. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: and-wrote, he-wrote, was-written | es: escribieron, escribiésemos, escribió | fr: [וכתבן], [כתב], [כתבה] | de: [וכתבן], [כתבה], [כתבו] Ezra 4:8; Ezra 5:7; Ezra 5:10; Ezra 6:2; Dan 5:5

כְּתָב H3791 Conj-w (16×)

Writing: a written document, letter, or decree; a script or writing system; a register or official record.

The Hebrew noun ketav belongs to the post-exilic vocabulary of scribal administration, appearing almost exclusively in Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Chronicles. It names the tangible products of writing in an empire run on royal decrees and official correspondence. When Haman's edict goes out 'according to the script of each province' (Esth 3:12), ketav designates the writing system itself — the characters and orthographic conventions of diverse peoples under Persian rule. Spanish escritura and German Schrift both mirror this dual meaning of 'writing' as both the act's product and its system. The word also serves the bureaucratic world of genealogical registers: those who could not find their ketav of enrollment were excluded from the priesthood (Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64). Ezekiel's striking use — false prophets excluded from 'the register of the house of Israel' (Ezek 13:9) — extends the concept from civil records to the divine ledger of covenant belonging.

1. written document or letter (7×) A written document, letter, decree, or inscription — any composed text considered as a discrete written artifact. Seven occurrences cover David's written plan for the Temple ('all this in writing from the hand of the LORD,' 1 Chr 28:19), Huram's letter to Solomon (2 Chr 2:11), and the royal edicts of Esther (Esth 3:14; 4:8; 8:8). Spanish escrito and French écrit capture the generic 'a piece of writing.' The range extends from personal correspondence to irrevocable Persian imperial decrees — all unified by being physical documents that carry authoritative content. SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: a-writing, in-writing, in-writing-of | es: el-escrito, en-escrito, en-escritura-de | fr: écrit | de: [בכתב], der-schrieb, schrieb 1Chr 28:19; 2Chr 2:11; Esth 3:14; Esth 4:8; Esth 8:8

2. script or writing system (6×) A script or writing system — the set of characters used by a particular language or people. Six occurrences cluster in the Persian-period books where multilingual empire demanded attention to orthographic diversity: 'the writing of the document was written in Aramaic' (Ezra 4:7), and the repeated formula 'according to the script of each province and the language of each people' (Esth 1:22; 3:12; 8:9). Spanish escritura and German Schrift serve double duty for both 'writing' and 'script,' while French écriture similarly spans the range. Josiah's reforming decree is also described as ketav — the 'writing' or prescribed form of David and Solomon (2 Chr 35:4). SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: according-to-its-script, according-to-its-writing, according-to-their-writing | es: conforme-a-su-escrito, conforme-a-su-escritura, según-escrito-de | fr: et-écrit, écrit | de: Schrift, [בכתב], und-schrieb 2Chr 35:4; Ezra 4:7; Esth 1:22; Esth 3:12; Esth 8:9

3. register or record (3×) A register, enrollment record, or official genealogical list. Three occurrences point to the administrative function of written records as instruments of social belonging: returning exiles who could not locate 'their register' of priestly lineage were excluded from holy service (Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64), and Ezekiel warns that false prophets shall not be 'in the register of the house of Israel' (Ezek 13:9). Spanish registro and the phrase 'their writing' in English translations both attempt to convey that ketav here means not just any text but a certified list determining inclusion or exclusion from a community. SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: and-in-register-of, their-register, their-writing | es: su-registro, y-en-registro-de | fr: et-écrit, écrit | de: Schrift, [ובכתב] Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64; Ezek 13:9

כְּתָב H3792 N-ms (12×)

Writing, written document — an inscription, decree, or script; used almost exclusively in Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra

The noun כְּתָב (ketab) denotes a piece of writing, an inscription, or an official written document. It appears almost exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra, where it refers to royal decrees, the mysterious writing on the wall, and sacred scripture. In Daniel 5:7-8, Belshazzar promises rewards to whoever can read the 'writing' on the palace wall. Daniel 10:21 speaks of 'the writing of truth' — a heavenly book of decrees. In Ezra 6:18, the priests are arranged 'according to the writing of the book of Moses.' Spanish 'escritura' and French 'écrit' both reflect the documentary, inscriptional sense.

writing, written document (12×) A written text, inscription, or official document — encompassing royal decrees, mysterious divine inscriptions, and authoritative scripture. The word dominates the Belshazzar narrative: the king sees 'the writing' on the wall and summons interpreters (Dan 5:7-8, 15-17, 24-25). Daniel 10:21 elevates it to a celestial register with 'the writing of truth,' a heavenly record of future events. Ezra 6:18 uses it for the written authority of the Mosaic text. The few Hebrew occurrences (1 Chr 28:19; 2 Chr 2:10) likewise denote authoritative written plans or records. Spanish 'escritura' and German 'Schrift' both capture the documentary force. SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: and-writing, as-written, prescribing | es: como-está-escrito, el-documento, la-escritura | fr: comme-elle-viendra, et-écrit, écrit | de: Schrift, [ככתב], schrieb Ezra 6:18; Ezra 7:22; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:8; Dan 5:15

כְּתֹבֶת H3793 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

A writing or inscription; marks tattooed or printed on the skin

This construct noun appears only in Leviticus 19:28, in the prohibition 'You shall not put tattoo marks on yourselves.' The phrase literally reads 'writing of imprintment,' suggesting permanent marking of the skin through cutting, pricking, or burning. The practice likely related to mourning customs or cultic identification with pagan deities. Israel's holiness code forbade such bodily modification as incompatible with being God's consecrated people.

(1×) A writing or inscription permanently marked on the body, likely referring to tattooing. The Levitical prohibition pairs this with cutting the flesh for the dead, suggesting funerary or cultic contexts. Spanish 'escritura de' (writing of) and the literal translations across languages reflect the difficulty of precisely identifying the ancient practice. The 'imprintment' terminology indicates forcible marking that remains visible, distinguishing it from temporary painting or cosmetic decoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-writing-of | es: y-escritura-de | fr: et-writing-de | de: und-writing-von Lev 19:28

כִּתִּי H3794 N-proper-ms (10×)

Kittim — originally the people of Kition (Cyprus), later a general term for western Mediterranean peoples

Beginning as a reference to the inhabitants of Kition on Cyprus (from the Phoenician toponym kt/kty), this gentilic name expanded over centuries to denote western maritime peoples generally. In the Table of Nations, Kittim descends from Javan/Greece (Gen 10:4), anchoring the term in the Aegean world. Isaiah uses it for Cyprus specifically (23:1, 12), while Jeremiah's 'isles of Kittim' (2:10) and Ezekiel's reference (27:6) extend it to Mediterranean coastlands broadly. By Daniel's time, 'ships of Kittim' (11:30) designates the Roman fleet — a remarkable semantic journey from a single Cypriot city to an entire civilization.

Kittim (proper noun: Cyprus/western maritime peoples) (10×) A gentilic noun originally designating the inhabitants of Kition on Cyprus, derived from Phoenician kt. Listed as a descendant of Javan (Gen 10:4 = 1 Chr 1:7), tying it to the Greek/Aegean world. Isaiah speaks of 'the land of Kittim' as Cyprus itself (Isa 23:1, 12). Prophetic usage broadens the referent: Jeremiah's 'isles of the Kittim' (2:10) and Ezekiel's mention (27:6) encompass Mediterranean coastlands generally. In Daniel 11:30, ṣiyyîm kittîm ('ships of Kittim') refers to the Roman fleet, showing the term's evolution into a cipher for dominant western maritime powers. Spanish 'Kitim/Quitim,' French and German 'Kittim' all preserve the proper-noun form. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Cyprus, Kittim, [Kittim] | es: (Kitim), (Quitim), Kitim | fr: Kittim, [(כתים)], [[כתיים]] | de: Kittim, [(כתים)], [[כתיים]] Gen 10:4; Num 24:24; 1Chr 1:7; Isa 23:1; Isa 23:12

כָּתִית H3795 Adj-ms (5×)

Beaten, pounded; describing olive oil produced by crushing olives in a mortar, the finest grade for sacred use.

An adjective meaning 'beaten' or 'pounded,' used exclusively in the fixed phrase shemen katit ('beaten oil') to describe the highest-quality olive oil, produced not by pressing in a mill but by pounding olives in a mortar. This labor-intensive method yielded a purer, clearer oil reserved for the tabernacle lampstand (Exod 27:20; Lev 24:2) and for grain offerings (Exod 29:40; Num 28:5; 1 Kgs 5:11). Spanish 'machacado' ('crushed') and 'prensado' ('pressed') together illuminate the physical process behind this cultic term—the olives are beaten until they release their finest oil without the sediment of mechanical pressing.

(5×) Beaten or pounded, describing olive oil of the finest grade obtained by crushing olives in a mortar rather than pressing them mechanically. The term appears only in the construct phrase shemen katit ('beaten oil'). In Exod 27:20 and Lev 24:2 it specifies the pure beaten oil required to keep the tabernacle lamp burning continually; in Exod 29:40 and Num 28:5 it accompanies grain offerings; 1 Kgs 5:11 lists it among Solomon's annual provisions to Hiram. Spanish 'batido' and 'machacado' capture the physical beating process, while French 'battu' preserves the same etymological connection. METAL HAMMERING

en: beaten, pressed | es: batido, machacado, prensado | fr: battu, beaten, pressed | de: beaten, pressed Exod 27:20; Exod 29:40; Lev 24:2; Num 28:5; 1Kgs 5:11

כֹּתֶל H3796 N-msc / 1cp (1×)

A wall of a house; the vertical structure forming a building's exterior or interior partition

This noun appears only in Song of Songs 2:9, where the beloved stands 'behind our wall, gazing through the windows.' The term designates a house wall, distinct from city fortification walls. In Aramaic and rabbinic Hebrew, the cognate refers to interior or exterior house walls. The Song's romantic imagery pictures the lover approaching the house, standing outside the wall, and peering through latticed windows.

(1×) The wall of a dwelling, providing structure and privacy. The Song's imagery has the beloved standing outside, separated from his love by the wall but seeking visual contact through openings. Spanish 'pared' (wall), French 'mur' (wall), and the transliterated forms all identify this as architectural structure. The wall both separates and protects, adding to the Song's theme of longing and the tension between separation and intimacy. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: our-wall | es: nuestra-pared | fr: notre-mur, | de: [כתלנו] Song 2:9

כְּתַל H3797 Prep-b / N-mpd (2×)

wall (Aramaic)

An Aramaic term for wall, appearing only in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra 5:8, it describes the walls of timber being placed in the temple reconstruction—a vivid snapshot of Persian-era building techniques. In Daniel 5:5, the mysterious hand writes on the palace wall during Belshazzar's feast, a moment of divine judgment literally inscribed on the architecture of power.

(2×) Refers to constructed walls of buildings, particularly in official or palatial contexts. The term appears in two dramatic scenes: the collaborative temple rebuilding in Ezra (where Jews work under Persian oversight to set timber in the walls) and the terrifying divine handwriting that appears on Belshazzar's wall. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistency—Spanish 'muro/pared,' French 'mur'—confirming this is architectural, not metaphorical. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-walls, wall-of | es: en-los-muros, la-pared-de | fr: [בכתליא], mur | de: [בכתליא], [כתל] Ezra 5:8; Dan 5:5

כִּתְלִישׁ H3798 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Kitlish; a city in the Shephelah region assigned to the tribe of Judah

This place name appears in Joshua 15:40, in the list of Judahite cities in the lowland district. Kitlish's exact location is unknown, though it stood somewhere in the western foothills between the coastal plain and Judean highlands. The city name is preserved in various forms across ancient versions (LXX: Kathaleis, Maachos), but no modern site has been definitively identified. It was one of many smaller settlements in Judah's fertile agricultural region.

(1×) The name of a town in Judah's Shephelah, listed among the inheritance allocations. Joshua 15 systematically catalogues cities by region, with Kitlish appearing among southern lowland settlements. Spanish 'Quitlis' and the variant spellings preserve the place name across languages. The city's obscurity—no biblical narrative mentions it and its site remains unknown—illustrates how many settlements recorded in allotment lists left no other historical trace. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Kitlish | es: y-Quitlis | fr: et-Kitlish | de: und-Kitlish Josh 15:40

כָּתַם H3799 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

To be stained or marked; to bear indelible discoloration, especially from sin

This Niphal participle appears only in Jeremiah 2:22, where God

declares 'your iniquity is stained before me' despite ritual washing. The verb means to be stained or marked indelibly, like cloth that retains blood-stains despite cleaning. The imagery powerfully refutes the notion that external purification can remove internal guilt. Even with alkali and abundant soap, the moral stain remains visible to God.

(1×) To be stained or marked indelibly, used metaphorically for sin's persistent mark on the soul. Jeremiah's accusation emphasizes that Judah's guilt cannot be washed away by ritual means—the stain penetrates too deeply. Spanish 'manchada' (stained/spotted) captures the disfiguring effect of sin. The participial form suggests an ongoing state: the iniquity remains stained, present tense, regardless of purification attempts. This anticipates the need for God's transformative cleansing beyond human ritual. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: is-stained | es: manchada | fr: [נכתם] | de: [נכתם] Jer 2:22

כֶּתֶם H3800 Prep-m / N-msc (9×)

Fine gold, pure gold — a poetic term for gold of the highest quality, often paired with Ophir or paz.

This poetic noun denotes gold of exceptional purity and value, distinguished from ordinary zahav (gold) by its rarity and literary register. It appears in wisdom literature and prophetic poetry, often in construct with place names like Ophir (Isa 13:12; Job 28:16; Ps 45:9) or paired with paz, 'refined gold' (Song 5:11). Lamentations 4:1 opens with the haunting question 'How the fine gold has grown dim!' — using kethem to symbolize Zion's former glory now tarnished. The word may be a loanword, attested in Egyptian as kathama, suggesting an ancient international trade term for premium gold.

fine gold, pure gold (9×) A poetic and elevated term for fine or pure gold, used to denote gold of the highest quality. Spanish 'oro' and French 'or fin' render the basic sense, but the Hebrew carries a literary weight absent from common zahav. It frequently appears in construct with Ophir (Isa 13:12; Job 28:16; Ps 45:9) or alongside paz 'refined gold' (Song 5:11), establishing it as a superlative. Proverbs 25:12 pairs it with a gold ring as an image of wise reproof. The term may be a loanword attested in Egyptian (kathama) and South Arabian (ktm), pointing to ancient international gold trade networks. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to-fine-gold, fine-gold, finest | es: con-oro, con-oro-de, de-oro | fr: [הכתם], [מכתם], dans-or-fin | de: [בכתם], [הכתם], [ולכתם] Job 28:16; Job 28:19; Job 31:24; Ps 45:9; Prov 25:12

כְּתֹנֶת H3801 Conj-w / N-fsc (29×)

tunic, coat — the principal body-length garment worn next to the skin in everyday, priestly, and ceremonial use

Ketonet (also kuttonet) is the standard body-length garment worn against the skin, appearing 29 times across remarkably diverse narrative contexts. Its most iconic occurrence is Joseph's ketonet passim — the 'coat of many colors' or 'long-sleeved robe' that his father Jacob made for him and that his brothers stripped away and dipped in goat's blood (Gen 37:3, 23, 31-33). The same word names the garments of skin God fashioned for Adam and Eve after the Fall (Gen 3:21), giving it a primordial dignity. In the priestly legislation, the ketonet is the linen undergarment worn by Aaron and his sons beneath the ephod and breastpiece (Exod 28:39-40; 29:5; Lev 8:7, 13), and its elaborate weaving marks it as part of the sacred vestments. Tamar's ketonet passim identifies her as a virgin princess (2 Sam 13:18-19). Translations converge: Spanish 'tunica,' French 'tunique,' German 'Leibrock.'

tunic, coat, robe (29×) The principal inner garment of the ancient Israelite wardrobe, a body-length tunic worn next to the skin. Encompasses the tunics of skin God made for Adam and Eve (Gen 3:21), Joseph's famous ketonet passim that provoked his brothers' jealousy (Gen 37:3, 23, 31), the priestly linen undergarment prescribed for Aaron and his sons (Exod 28:39-40; Lev 8:7, 13), and the princess's robe torn by Tamar in her grief (2 Sam 13:18-19). Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'tunica,' French 'tunique' — confirm a single garment type across all contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tunic-of, and-the-robe-of, and-tunics-of | es: con-tu-túnica, en-sus-túnicas, la-túnica | fr: [וכתנת], [כתנתך], dans-leur-tuniques | de: [וכתנת], [כתנתי], [כתנתך] Gen 3:21; Gen 37:3; Gen 37:23; Gen 37:31

כָּתֵף H3802 N-fpc (67×)

Shoulder (body part); side or slope of a geographical feature or structure; shoulder-piece of the priestly ephod.

A versatile anatomical term that extends naturally into geography and textile craft. As a body part, it refers to the shoulder proper, the area where burdens are carried: Samson hoists the Gaza gates onto his shoulders (Judg 16:3), and the Levites bear the ark on theirs (Num 7:9; 1 Chr 15:15). By metaphorical extension, the 'shoulder' of a hill means its slope or flank, and the 'shoulder' of a city gate or building means its side wall. This geographic sense dominates in boundary descriptions (Josh 15:8-11; 18:12-19). In priestly garment instructions, the word becomes a technical textile term for the shoulder-pieces of the ephod that hold the garment together and bear the onyx stones engraved with Israel's tribal names (Exod 28:7-12).

1. side, slope, flank (34×) The side, slope, or flank of a geographical feature, city, or structure. The body-part metaphor maps onto terrain: the 'shoulder' of a hill is its slope, and the 'shoulder' of a gate or wall is its lateral face. Spanish 'ladera' (hillside) and French 'pente' (slope) capture the topographic meaning, while 'côté' (side) covers architectural contexts. This sense dominates in Joshua's boundary lists (Josh 15:8, 10-11; 18:12-19) and in tabernacle construction descriptions (Exod 27:14-15; 38:14-15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: shoulder-of, side-of, slope-of | es: el-lado, la-ladera-de, ladera-de | fr: côté-de, pente-de, shoulder-de | de: Abhang-von, Schulter, Schulter-von Exod 27:14; Exod 27:15; Exod 38:14; Exod 38:15; Num 34:11

2. shoulder (body part) (21×) The physical shoulder of a person or animal, the body part between neck and upper arm used for bearing loads. Goliath carries a bronze javelin between his shoulders (1 Sam 17:6), the Levites carry the ark on their shoulders (1 Chr 15:15), and God dwells 'between the shoulders' of Benjamin (Deut 33:12). Zechariah 7:11 uses the vivid image of a stubborn shoulder turned away from God's instruction. Spanish 'hombro' and German 'Schulter' consistently render this anatomical sense. SHOULDER BODY PART

en: a-shoulder, and-shoulder, and-with-shoulder | es: Mi-hombro, con-hombros-suyos, el-hombro | fr: [בכתף], [בכתפם], [כתף] | de: Schulter, [בכתף], [כתף] Exod 28:12; Num 7:9; Deut 33:12; Judg 16:3; 1Sam 17:6

3. shoulder-piece, support strap (12×) The shoulder-pieces or supporting straps of the priestly ephod, a technical garment-construction term. These structural components rest on the high priest's shoulders and join the front and back panels of the ephod, bearing the onyx memorial stones engraved with the names of Israel's twelve tribes (Exod 28:7, 12, 25, 27; 39:4, 7, 18, 20). Spanish 'hombreras' (shoulder pads/straps) precisely captures this specialized textile meaning, distinct from both the anatomical and geographical senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-supports, shoulder-pieces, shoulder-pieces-of | es: hombreras, hombreras-de, los-soportes | fr: le-supports, son-supports, supports | de: der-supports, sein-supports, shoulder-pieces Exod 28:7; Exod 28:12; Exod 28:25; Exod 28:27; Exod 39:4

כָּתַר H3803 V-Piel-Imp-ms (6×)

To surround, encircle; by extension, to crown or adorn; also to wait (Aramaic-influenced).

Kathar is a verb of encirclement whose meanings radiate outward from the core image of closing a ring around someone. In Judges 20:43, Israelite forces surrounded the Benjaminites; in Psalm 22:12, mighty bulls of Bashan encircle the suffering psalmist. The Hiphil in Proverbs 14:18 transforms hostile encirclement into coronation: the prudent 'are crowned with' knowledge. Most unexpected is Job 36:2, where Elihu uses kathar in the Aramaic sense of 'wait for me a little,' reflecting the Aramaizing flavor of the Elihu speeches.

1. surround, encircle (4×) To surround or encircle, whether in hostile siege or metaphorical encompassing (Judg 20:43; Ps 22:12; Ps 142:7; Hab 1:4). Spanish rodearon and me han cercado ('they surrounded me, they have encircled me') and French entourer all confirm the spatial closing-in. In Psalm 22:12 the image of bulls surrounding the sufferer has deep Messianic resonance. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: encircle-me, shall-gather, surrounded | es: Rodearon, coronarán, me-han-cercado | fr: comme-entourer, entoura, entourer | de: [מכתיר], soll-sammeln, umgab Judg 20:43; Ps 22:12; Ps 142:7; Hab 1:4

2. crown, adorn (Hifil figurative) (1×) To crown or adorn, a figurative Hiphil extension where encirclement becomes bestowal of honor. Proverbs 14:18 declares the prudent 'are crowned with knowledge.' Spanish se coronan de ('they crown themselves with') captures the denominative connection to keter ('crown'), the same word used for royal crowns in Esther. The semantic leap from siege to coronation shows how surrounding can mean either threat or glory. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE

en: are-crowned-with | es: se-coronan-de | fr: יכתרו | de: [יכתרו] Prov 14:18

3. wait, be patient (Piel Aramaic semantic) (1×) To wait or be patient, an Aramaic-influenced sense found only in Job 36:2, where Elihu urges 'Wait for me a little.' Spanish Espera ('wait') directly glosses this meaning. Syriac and Aramaic kattar (Pael = wait, remain, endure) provide the cognate evidence. The Elihu speeches are widely noted for their Aramaisms, and this usage is a prime example of cross-linguistic borrowing within the Hebrew Bible itself. WAITING AND EXPECTING en: wait- | es: Espera- | fr: כתר | de: [כתר] Job 36:2

כֶּתֶר H3804 Prep-b / N-msc (3×)

royal crown, diadem worn by Persian kings and queens

A term for the ornate crown worn by Persian royalty, appearing exclusively in the book of Esther. The 'royal crown' (כֶּתֶר מַלְכוּת) symbolizes authority and honor—Vashti is summoned wearing it to display her beauty, Esther receives it when made queen, and Mordecai envisions Haman honored with the king's crown on a royal horse. The Persian loanword reflects the Achaemenid court setting of the narrative.

(3×) Esther 1:11 records Ahasuerus' command that Vashti appear 'wearing the royal crown' (בְּכֶתֶר מַלְכוּת). When Esther becomes queen, the king 'set the royal crown on her head' (2:17). Haman's imagined honor includes wearing 'a royal crown' (6:8). The phrase כֶּתֶר מַלְכוּת, always in construct, marks this as the specific crown of Persian sovereignty, distinct from other Hebrew crown terms (עֲטָרָה, נֵזֶר). The probable Persian loanword situates readers firmly in Susa's palace. Translations: Spanish 'corona de/real,' maintaining the regal register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: crown-of, crown-of-, with-crown-of | es: con-corona-de, corona-de | fr: couronne, in-couronne | de: [בכתר], [כתר] Esth 1:11; Esth 2:17; Esth 6:8

כֹּתֶרֶת H3805 Conj-w (24×)

Capital of a pillar – the ornamental crown atop a column, especially the temple pillars Jachin and Boaz

A specialized architectural term for the capital – the ornamental top piece crowning a pillar or column. All 24 occurrences cluster tightly around the description of Solomon's temple furnishings, particularly the elaborate bronze capitals atop the two freestanding pillars named Jachin and Boaz (1 Kgs 7:16-42). These capitals were decorated with lattice-work, rows of pomegranates, and lily-shaped designs, standing five cubits high and representing some of the finest craftsmanship in ancient Israel. The root suggests 'surrounding' or 'crowning,' aptly describing how a capital encircles and adorns the top of its column. The parallel accounts in 2 Kings 25:17 and Jeremiah 52:22 recall these same capitals in the solemn context of Babylon's destruction of the temple.

capital of a pillar (24×) The ornamental capital or crown atop a pillar, used exclusively in architectural descriptions of Solomon's temple and its destruction. All occurrences refer to the elaborately decorated bronze capitals on the pillars Jachin and Boaz (1 Kgs 7:16-42), with parallel descriptions in the destruction narrative (2 Kgs 25:17; Jer 52:22). These five-cubit-high capitals featured intricate lattice-work, rows of pomegranates, and lily-shaped designs. The root suggests 'encircling' or 'crowning,' capturing how the capital surrounds and adorns the column's summit. Spanish capitel and equivalent terms across languages all point to this specific architectural element. PILLAR CAPITAL

en: and-a-capital, and-capitals, for-the-capital | es: Y-capiteles, del-capitel, el-capitel | fr: [הכותרת], [הכתרות], [הכתרת] | de: [הכותרת], [הכתרות], [הכתרת] 1Kgs 7:16; 1Kgs 7:17

כָּתַשׁ H3806 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (1×)

To pound, crush, or bray in a mortar; to pulverize through repeated striking

This verb appears only in Proverbs 27:22, in a vivid saying about folly's persistence: 'Though you pound a fool in a mortar with a pestle among grain, his folly will not depart from him.' The image is agricultural—crushing grain to remove hulls—applied impossibly to a person. The point is that folly is so integral to the fool's nature that even extreme treatment cannot separate him from it. Cognates in Aramaic and rabbinic Hebrew carry the same sense of pounding or crushing.

(1×) To pound or crush in a mortar, pulverizing grain or other substances. Proverbs uses this concrete action metaphorically: even if you could pound a fool like grain, you couldn't remove his folly. Spanish 'majaras' (you will pound/crush) and the transliterated forms preserve the grinding imagery. The proverb's hyperbole emphasizes folly's intractability—it's not like chaff that separates from grain with pounding, but intrinsic to the fool's being. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: you-pound | es: majaras- | fr: תכתוש | de: [תכתוש] Prov 27:22

כָּתַת H3807 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp (17×)

Beat, crush, shatter; to pulverize by pounding, forge by hammering, or strike down in military defeat

A visceral verb of violent impact — the sound of metal on metal, stone on stone. When Moses crushed the golden calf, he ground it to dust (Deut 9:21); when Hezekiah destroyed the bronze serpent, he beat it to pieces (2 Kgs 18:4). Yet the same verb carries a hopeful note in Isaiah 2:4, where nations 'beat their swords into plowshares.' Spanish captures the range beautifully: 'machacó' for grinding destruction, 'forjarán' for reshaping metal into instruments of peace. Whether the object is an idol, a weapon, or an enemy army, the root conveys forceful, repeated blows that transform what they strike.

1. be crushed or shattered (7×) The passive or stative sense: to be crushed, shattered, or broken. In Leviticus 22:24, an animal with crushed testicles is unfit for sacrifice — Spanish 'machacada' vividly conveys the physical damage. Isaiah 30:14 compares judgment to a potter's vessel so thoroughly smashed that no shard remains useful. Isaiah 24:12 and 2 Chronicles 15:6 extend this to cities and nations struck to ruin. The Hofal and Qal passive participle forms carry the weight of destruction already accomplished. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-crushed, are-beaten, is-struck | es: fue-golpeada, fueron-aplastados, machacada | fr: [וכתתו], [יכת], [יכתו] | de: [וכתתו], [יכת], [יכתו] Lev 22:24; 2Chr 15:6; Job 4:20; Isa 24:12; Isa 30:14

2. crush or pound to pieces (5×) The active sense of crushing or pulverizing something into small pieces through repeated blows. Moses ground the golden calf until it was fine as dust (Deut 9:21, with the intensifier 'grinding well'); Hezekiah smashed the bronze serpent (2 Kgs 18:4). In Psalm 89:23 God promises to crush the psalmist's enemies. Spanish 'machacó' and 'aplastaré' emphasize the thoroughness of the destruction. The Piel stem intensifies the action — not merely breaking but reducing to fragments. BREAKING AND SHATTERING en: [obj], and-I-crushed, and-I-will-crush | es: Y-aplastaré, machacó, y-golpearán | fr: [כתת], et-battre, et-il-écrasa | de: [וכתתו], [כתת], und-er-crushed Deut 9:21; 2Kgs 18:4; 2Chr 34:7; Ps 89:23; Zech 11:6

3. beat into shape, forge (3×) Beating metal into a new shape — forging rather than destroying. Isaiah 2:4 and Micah 4:3 envision nations hammering swords into plowshares, while Joel 3:10 reverses the image: plowshares into swords. The same violent action that destroys in other contexts here transforms and repurposes. Spanish 'forjarán' and French 'battre' (in the smithing sense) reveal this constructive dimension. The Piel and Qal senses overlap here, since reshaping requires the same forceful blows as destruction. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-they-shall-beat, and-they-will-beat, beat | es: Forjad, y-forjarán | fr: [וכתתו], battre, et-battre | de: [וכתתו], [כתו] Isa 2:4; Joel 3:10; Mic 4:3

4. defeat or strike down militarily (2×) A military sense: to strike down or crush an enemy force in battle. In Numbers 14:45, the Amalekites and Canaanites crushed Israel's unauthorized advance; in Deuteronomy 1:44, the Amorites struck them down. Spanish 'derrotaron' (defeated) and German 'schlug' (struck) confirm the martial context. The Hifil causative stem emphasizes that one party inflicts crushing defeat upon another — the blows are directed against people, not objects. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-crushed-them, and-they-struck | es: y-los-derrotaron, y-os-derrotaron | fr: et-ils-frappa, et-écrasa-eux | de: und-sie-schlug, und-zermalmte-ihnen Num 14:45; Deut 1:44

לֹא H3808 Conj-w / Adv (5194×)

Not, no; the objective negative particle negating verbs, clauses, and assertions, also used rhetorically and as a standalone refusal.

The workhorse of Hebrew negation, lo' denies reality rather than volition (contrast 'al, which prohibits). Appearing over 5,000 times, it negates verbs ('he did not'), adjectives ('not good'), and entire clauses. Its rhetorical power emerges in the hundreds of halo' questions — 'Is it not so?' — which expect a 'yes' and carry persuasive force (Gen 4:7; 13:9). Combined with prepositions it forms 'without' (Num 35:22), and standing alone it becomes the blunt refusal 'No!' (Gen 18:15; 19:2). Every target language mirrors this range: Spanish 'no,' French 'pas/non,' German 'nicht/nein.'

1. simple negation (not) (4839×) The standard negative particle used to negate verbs, adjectives, and clauses — the plain assertion that something is not the case. This accounts for the vast majority of occurrences (4,839x), from 'it had not rained' (Gen 2:5) to 'he did not regard' (Gen 4:5). Spanish 'no,' French 'pas,' and German 'nicht' all function identically, reflecting the universality of simple propositional negation. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not | es: no | fr: pas | de: nicht, nicht- Gen 2:5; Gen 4:5; Gen 18:28; Gen 21:26; Gen 24:21

2. rhetorical interrogative negation (275×) The rhetorical interrogative negation, typically as halo' (הֲלֹא), expecting an affirmative answer: 'Is it not the case that...?' With 275 occurrences, this is a major persuasive device in Hebrew discourse. 'Did not I bring Israel up from Egypt?' (Amos 9:7) demands assent. Spanish 'Acaso-no' (is it not perhaps) and French 'Est-pas' capture the rhetorical inversion where negation paradoxically affirms. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: Did-not, Is-not, are-they-not | es: Acaso-no, acaso-no, no-están | fr: Est-pas, Fit-ne-pas, ai-pas | de: Did-nicht, habe-nicht, hat-nicht Gen 4:7; Gen 13:9; Gen 19:20; Gen 20:5; Gen 27:36

3. privative without (51×) The privative sense 'without, lacking,' formed with prepositions belo' (בְּלֹא) or lelo' (לְלֹא). Numbers 35:22-23 uses this construction for killing 'without enmity' and 'without seeing.' German 'ohne' (without) and Spanish 'de-modo-que-no' show how the negative particle combines with prepositions to create a distinct grammatical category expressing absence or privation. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: and-without, for-lack-of, for-no | es: Antes-de, antes-de, de-modo-que-no | fr: dans-ne...pas, et-zu-ne-pas, in-ne-pas | de: in-nicht, nicht, ohne Lev 15:25; Lev 25:30; Num 35:22; Num 35:23

4. standalone no (refusal/denial) (28×) Standalone 'no!' as a complete utterance of refusal or denial. Sarah says 'No!' when caught laughing (Gen 18:15), the angels refuse Lot's hospitality with 'No!' (Gen 19:2), and Joseph's brothers protest 'No, my lord' (Gen 42:10). Spanish 'No' and German 'nein' function identically as independent exclamatory negatives, distinct from the particle's clause-level syntactic role. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: no | es: (no), No, no | fr: non | de: nein, nein- Gen 18:15; Gen 19:2; Gen 23:11; Gen 42:10; Gen 42:12

5. nor (conjunctive series negation) (1×) Conjunctive series negation 'nor, and not either,' linking additional negated items in a chain. In Ps 115:17 'the dead do not praise the Lord, nor any who go down to silence,' the waw + lo' extends a prior negation. Spanish 'ni' (nor) and French 'et-ne...pas' show how this rare usage coordinates successive denials into a cumulative negative series. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: nor | es: ni | fr: et-ne...pas | de: nicht Ps 115:17

לָא H3809 Adv (82×)

Not – the standard Aramaic negative particle negating verbs, participles, and clauses; once used substantivally as 'nothing.'

The everyday Aramaic word for 'not,' functioning exactly like its Hebrew cognate lo throughout the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. It negates finite verbs, participles, and entire clauses in both declarative and interrogative contexts – 'the dream has not departed from me' (Dan 2:5), 'which is not to be altered' (Dan 6:9). One remarkable passage (Dan 4:35) uses it substantivally in the construction ke-lah, 'as nothing,' declaring that all earth's inhabitants are 'as nothing' before God's sovereignty. Hindi nahi, Spanish no, French ne...pas, and German nicht all consistently render the simple negation.

1. not (Aramaic negative particle) (81×) The standard Aramaic negative particle 'not,' used to negate verbs, participles, adjectives, and clauses in both statements and questions. Functionally equivalent to Hebrew lo and consistently rendered across languages – Spanish no, French ne...pas, German nicht, Hindi nahi. Pervasive throughout the Aramaic sections of Ezra (4:13-16) and Daniel (2:5-10), covering 81 of 82 occurrences. NEGATION PARTICLES en: does-not, fail, limit | es: no | fr: ne-pas, ne...pas | de: nicht Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:21; Ezra 6:8

2. as nothing, worthless (comparative negation) (1×) A substantival or comparative use in the construction ke-lah ('as nothing, as worthlessness'), where the negative particle takes on a quasi-nominal function denoting non-existence or utter insignificance. English 'as nothing' and Spanish 'como nada' make the comparative explicit, while German 'wie ihr' attempts a different rendering. Attested only in Dan 4:35, where all the inhabitants of the earth 'are accounted as nothing' before the Most High. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: as-nothing | es: como-nada | fr: [כלה] | de: wie-ihr Dan 4:35

לֹא דְבָר H3810 Prep / N-proper-fs (3×)

Lo-debar, a town in Gilead east of the Jordan River

A settlement in the Transjordan region of Gilead, perhaps east or northeast of Mahanaim. The name appears to mean 'no pasture' or 'no thing,' possibly a folk etymology or wordplay. Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, took refuge here after Saul's house fell. Later, during Absalom's rebellion, a benefactor from Lo-debar brought provisions to David at Mahanaim—suggesting a community loyal to the Davidic house despite sheltering Saul's descendant.

(3×) Second Samuel 9:4-5 locates Mephibosheth 'in the house of Machir son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar' (בְּלֹו דְבָר/מִלֹּו דְבָר), where David retrieves him to honor his covenant with Jonathan. Second Samuel 17:27 names Machir 'from Lo-debar' among those who supplied David's forces during Absalom's revolt. The settlement's precise location remains uncertain; Joshua 13:26 may reference it (reading לִדְבָר for MT). Translations consistently transliterate (Spanish Lo-Debar, French Lo-Debar), preserving the proper name

despite its semantically suggestive components. PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Lo-Davar, from-Lo-Debar, in-Lo-Debar | es: de-Lo-Debar, de-Lo-debar, en-Lo-debar | fr: dans-Lo-Debar, de-Lo-Davar, de-Lo-Debar | de: in-Lo-Debar, von-Lo-Davar, von-Lo-Debar 2Sam 9:4; 2Sam 9:5; 2Sam 17:27

לְאָה H3811 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3ms (19×)

To be or become weary, exhausted; in the Hifil, to make weary or tire someone out.

La'ah captures the experience of weariness — both suffering it and inflicting it. In the Qal and Niphal stems, it describes becoming exhausted from futile effort: the men of Sodom 'grew weary' trying to find Lot's door (Gen 19:11), and the Egyptians 'were weary' of drinking Nile water turned to blood (Exod 7:18). Spanish 'estoy cansado' and English 'I am weary' convey the emotional fatigue that pervades Isaiah 1:14, where God himself declares weariness with Israel's festivals. In the Hifil causative, the focus shifts to wearing someone else out — Micah's probing question, 'How have I wearied you?' (Mic 6:3), and Isaiah's rebuke, 'Is it too little for you to weary men, that you weary my God also?' (Isa 7:13).

1. be weary, grow tired (13×) Qal and Niphal intransitive: to become weary, exhausted, or fatigued, whether from physical effort or emotional strain. The Sodomites 'grew weary' groping for the door (Gen 19:11); Egypt was 'weary' of its own polluted water (Exod 7:18). In the Psalms and prophets, the weariness becomes spiritual — God is 'weary' of bearing Israel's hollow worship (Isa 1:14), and the sluggard is 'too weary' to bring food to his mouth (Prov 26:15). Spanish 'estoy cansado' and 'te cansaste' span from physical to emotional exhaustion. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: I-am-weary, You-are-wearied, and-I-was-weary | es: Estoy-cansado, Te-cansaste, estoy-cansado | fr: et—être-las, et-ils-wearied, et-lasser | de: [וחלא], [נלאה], [תלאה] Gen 19:11; Exod 7:18; Job 4:2; Job 4:5; Ps 68:9

2. make weary, tire out (6×) Hifil causative: to cause weariness, to tire or wear someone out. This sense appears in some of Scripture's most pointed confrontations. In Micah 6:3, God asks Israel, 'How have I wearied you?' — an appeal that presupposes the accusation. Isaiah 7:13 delivers a sharp escalation: 'Is it too little to weary men, that you weary my God also?' Job 16:7 laments that God 'has wearied me' through suffering. Swahili and French renderings ('lasser,' 'se lasser') highlight the relational burden — making another person bear the weight of your actions. TOIL AND WEARINESS
en: He-has-wearied-me, and-they-wearied-you, have-I-wearied-you | es: cansséis, cansó, el-cansar | fr: et-lasser, lasser, se-lasser-moi | de: [הלאני], [הלאת], [הלאתיך] Job 16:7; Isa 7:13; Jer 12:5; Ezek 24:12

לֵאָה H3812 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (34×)

Leah; Jacob's first wife and elder daughter of Laban, mother of six tribes of Israel

The elder daughter of Laban, given to Jacob through her father's deception on the wedding night (Gen 29:23–25). Though described as having 'tender eyes' in contrast to Rachel's beauty, Leah becomes the mother of six sons — Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun — and a daughter, Dinah. Her story is one of perseverance through rejection; her naming speeches reveal deep longing for her husband's love (Gen 29:32–35; 30:18–20). She is buried in the cave of Machpelah alongside the other patriarchs and matriarchs (Gen 49:31). Ruth 4:11 honors her alongside Rachel as a builder of the house of Israel. The name may derive from a word meaning 'wild cow,' paralleling Rachel ('ewe').

Leah (proper noun: Jacob's first wife) (34×) The proper name Leah, referring to the elder daughter of Laban and first wife of the patriarch Jacob. Mother of Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, and Dinah (Gen 29:32–35; 30:17–21; 35:23). Her narrative spans Genesis 29–35 and 46:15–18, and she is buried in Machpelah (Gen 49:31). Ruth 4:11 memorializes her as a matriarch who built up the house of Israel. Transliterations are stable across languages — French 'Léa,' German 'Lea,' Spanish 'Leah.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Leah | es: Leah | fr: Léa | de: Lea, Leas, war-Lea Gen 29:16; Gen 29:17; Gen 29:23; Gen 29:24; Gen 29:25

לְאַט H3813 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

To cover or veil; to wrap or conceal the face

This verb appears only in 2 Samuel 19:4, describing David covering his face while mourning Absalom's death. The exact form is textually uncertain—some manuscripts and versions read from the root לוט (to wrap/veil) rather than לאט. Regardless, the sense is clear: David veiled his face in grief, a gesture of overwhelming sorrow. Covering the face expressed shame, distress, or mourning in ancient Near Eastern culture.

(1×) To cover or veil the face, typically as an expression of grief or shame. David's mourning for Absalom was so intense that he wrapped his face, shutting out the world in his sorrow. Spanish 'cubrió' (covered), French 'couvrit' (covered), and German 'bedeckte' (covered) all converge on the concealing action. The gesture intensified David's public lament, creating tension with Joab's anger at the king's excessive mourning for a rebellious son. COVERING AND CONCEALING
en: covered | es: cubrió | fr: couvrit | de: bedeckte 2Sam 19:4

לָט H3814 Prep-b (1×)

Secrecy, mystery, or enchantment; hidden knowledge or action done in secret

This noun appears in several forms, always with the preposition 'in/with': secretly (in secrecy) or with enchantments (with mysteries). In contexts like 1 Samuel 18:22 and Ruth 3:7, it means 'in secret' or 'quietly.' In Exodus (7:11, 22; 8:7, 18), it refers to the secret arts or enchantments of Egyptian magicians. The term's semantic range spans from simple secrecy to occult mystery, unified by the idea of hidden knowledge or action.

(1×) When used of human action: secrecy, privacy, or stealth. Judges 4:21 describes Jael approaching Sisera 'softly' or 'quietly,' while Ruth 3:7 has Ruth approaching Boaz 'secretly.' The adverbial phrase emphasizes undetected movement. Spanish 'en sigilo' (in stealth/secrecy) captures the furtive quality. This sense focuses on avoiding notice, whether for legitimate discretion or covert action, creating narrative suspense in these intimate or dangerous moments. SECRECY AND HIDING
en: softly | es: en-sigilo | fr: softly | de: softly Judg 4:21

לָאֵל H3815 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lael; a Levite from the Gershonite clan, father of Eliasaph

This proper name appears in Numbers 3:24, identifying the father of Eliasaph, the leader of the Gershonite Levites during the wilderness period. The name means 'belonging to God' or '(devoted) to El,' a theophoric name common in ancient Israel. Lael himself receives no further description; he is remembered solely as Eliasaph's father. Such genealogical details established legitimate leadership within Levitical clans.

(1×) The personal name of a Gershonite Levite, father of a clan leader. Numbers 3 systematically organizes Levitical families for their sanctuary service responsibilities, with leadership traced through patrilineal descent. The consistent preservation across translations (Spanish, French, German, English all: 'Lael') reflects the proper name's unchanging nature. His theophoric name ('belonging to God') appropriately marked one whose descendants would serve in God's tabernacle. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Lael | es: Lael | fr: Lael | de: Lael Num 3:24

לְאֹם H3816 Adv (36×)

People, nation — a poetic term for ethnic or tribal communities, often parallel to gôy and ʿam

A poetic noun for 'people' or 'nation,' used almost exclusively in elevated discourse — prophecy, psalms, and blessings. It appears in parallel with gôy ('nation') and ʿam ('people') but carries its own distinct flavor, often evoking the nations in their collective identity before God. Its earliest occurrence is in the oracle over Jacob and Esau: 'two peoples (lĕʾummîm) are in your womb' (Gen 25:23). Isaiah uses it to summon the coastland peoples to hear God's word (Isa 41:1; 49:1), and the Psalms employ it in both judgment (Ps 2:1) and praise (Ps 67:5) contexts. Spanish 'pueblos/naciones' and French 'peuple/nation' reflect the same semantic range.

1. people, nation (35×) A people or nation as an ethnic community — the primary lexical sense covering virtually all occurrences. Used in singular for Israel (Isa 51:4, 'my nation') or for individual peoples like Edom (Gen 25:23), and in the plural for the nations at large (Ps 2:1, 'Why do the peoples rage?'; Isa 34:1). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'pueblos,' French 'peuple/nation,' German 'Völker/Nationen' — consistently renders it as a collective ethnic term. The word is distinctly poetic; prose equivalents would be gôy or ʿam. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: and-O-peoples, and-a-people, and-my-nation | es: a-los-pueblos, a-pueblos, las-naciones | fr: et-nation, et-peuple, et-un-peuple | de: Nationen, Volk, Völker Gen 25:23; Gen 27:29; Ps 2:1

2. among (peoples) (1×) A quasi-adverbial usage within a prepositional phrase meaning 'among the peoples' (Ps 44:14), where the word functions less as an independent noun and more as part of a locative expression. The translations — English 'among,' Spanish 'entre,' German 'unter' — reduce the noun to a relational particle, though the underlying sense of 'peoples' remains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among | es: entre | fr: ne...pas | de: unter Ps 44:14

לְאֻמִּים H3817 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (1×)

Leummim; a people group descended from Dedan, grandson of Abraham through Keturah

This gentillic plural appears in Genesis 25:3, naming one of three tribal groups descended from Dedan (son of Jokshan, son of Keturah, Abraham's wife after Sarah). The Leummim were likely an Arabian people, possibly related to the Sabeans based on South Arabian inscriptions mentioning similar names. Genesis traces these genealogies to establish Israel's kinship connections with Arabian tribes to the east and south.

(1×) A tribal or ethnic designation for descendants of Dedan, associated with Arabian peoples. Genesis 25's genealogy maps Abraham's extended family throughout the Near East, with the Leummim representing one branch of the Dedanite confederation. Spanish 'leummim' and German 'Leummiter' (Leummites) treat this as a gentillic plural, while French and English use the plural form. Sabaic inscriptions suggest these were a recognized people group in northwest Arabia during the biblical period. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Leummim | es: y-leummim | fr: et-le-Leummim | de: und-die-Leummiter Gen 25:3

לֹא עַמִּי H3818 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lo-Ammi; symbolic name meaning 'not my people,' given to Hosea's son

This proper name appears in Hosea 1:9, as God commands the prophet to name his third child 'Lo-Ammi' (Not My People), symbolizing God's rejection of Israel due to their unfaithfulness. The name directly negates the covenant formula 'you are my people,' signaling broken relationship. Yet Hosea 2:1 reverses this judgment, promising restoration when Lo-Ammi becomes 'Ammi' (My People). The name is a prophetic sign, enacted theology through family.

(1×) A symbolic personal name meaning 'Not My People,' expressing covenant rupture. Hosea's children bore names that preached judgment: this third child embodied the most severe verdict—Israel was no longer God's people. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish, French, German all preserve 'Lo-Ammi') maintains the name's theological weight. The hyphenated form emphasizes the negation, making the name itself a prophetic oracle every time it was spoken. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lo-Ammi | es: Lo-Ammi | fr: Lo-Ammi | de: [לא עמי] Hos 1:9

לֹא רֻחָמָה H3819 N-proper-fs (2×)

Lo-Ruhamah (not pitied), symbolic name of Hosea's daughter

A prophetic name meaning 'not pitied' or 'uncompassionated,' given to Hosea's daughter as a living sign of God's judgment on Israel. The name encapsulates the withdrawal of divine mercy in response to covenant unfaithfulness. Yet Hosea 2:23 reverses the symbolism, promising future restoration when God will again have compassion. This daughter's name, like her siblings', transforms family life into prophetic theater.

(2×) The proper name of Hosea's daughter, appearing in Hosea 1:6, 8. The name itself is a theological statement—literally 'she has not been pitied'—embodying God's pending judgment. French renders it 'sans-pitié' (without pity), capturing the stark negation. This isn't simply a personal name but a enacted prophecy, where the child becomes a walking declaration of divine displeasure with Israel's idolatry. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: Lo-Ruhamah | es: Lo-Ruhama | fr: sans-pitié | de: Lo-Ruchama Hos 1:6; Hos 1:8

H3820 Prep-m / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

Heart or mind; the inner person, seat of thought, will, and emotion

Though this lemma ID represents a specific form ('from his heart'), it draws on the common Hebrew word לֵב, designating the heart as the center of human consciousness, volition, and emotion. In 1 Kings 12:33, Jeroboam instituted a feast 'from his own heart'—that is, by his own devising rather than divine command. The heart in Hebrew anthropology is less the seat of emotion (that's often the kidneys or bowels) and more the center of thought and will.

(1×) The heart as the center of human will and decision-making, here emphasizing unauthorized human initiative. Jeroboam's feast 'from his own heart' contrasts with divinely ordained observances —he invented the date and ritual himself. Spanish 'de corazón de él' (from his heart) and French 'de son propre cœur' (from his own heart) both emphasize the self-origination. The phrase subtly indicts Jeroboam's religious innovations as human fabrications rather than divine instructions. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: from-his-own-heart | es: (de-corazón-de-él) | fr: de-son-propre-cœur 1Kgs 12:33

לֵב H3820a N-msc / 2mp (593×)

Heart; the inner self as seat of thought, will, emotion, and conscience; also the physical center or midst of something.

Far richer than the English word 'heart' suggests, לֵב is the comprehensive Hebrew term for the entire inner life of a person—mind, will, emotions, conscience, and moral character all at once. When Exodus 28:3 speaks of those 'wise of heart,' the word denotes intellectual skill and understanding, not sentiment. French 'cœur' and German 'Herz' carry similar breadth, but the Arabic cognate قَلْب makes the dual force especially clear, serving for both the physical organ and the seat of intention. In a spatial extension, the same word names the 'heart of the sea' (Exod 15:8) or the 'heart of the oak' (2 Sam 18:14).

1. heart, inner self (mind/will/emotion) (571×) The inner person as the center of thought, volition, emotion, and moral discernment—the dominant biblical-anthropological sense covering nearly all 572 occurrences. In Exodus 35:21 the heart 'stirs' someone to give; in Proverbs 23:15 a wise son makes his father's heart glad. Every major translation language maps this to a single core word (Spanish 'corazón,' French 'cœur,' German 'Herz'), confirming the universality of the metaphor. Encompasses understanding (Exod 28:3), intention (Gen 8:21), courage (2 Sam 17:10), and conscience (1 Sam 24:5). HEART (INNER SELF)

en: a-heart, heart | es: corazón | fr: coeur, cœur, un-cœur | de: Herz, ein-Herz Exod 28:3; Exod 31:6; Exod 35:10; Exod 35:22; Exod 35:25

2. heart, center/midst (spatial) (21×) A spatial or locative extension: the physical interior, center, or midst of a non-personal entity. Found in expressions like 'in the heart of the sea' (Exod

15:8), 'in the heart of the oak' (2 Sam 18:14), and 'in the heart of the heavens' (Deut 4:11). The multilingual glosses consistently use prepositional phrases—'in-heart-of,' Spanish 'en-corazón-de,' German 'im-Herzen'—revealing that translators mark this as a distinct spatial idiom rather than the anthropological inner-self. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-heart-of, in-heart-of-, in-the-heart-of | es: En-corazón-de, En-el-corazón-de, en-corazón-de | fr: coeur, dans-coeur, dans-cœur | de: im-Herzen, in-Herz-, in-Herz-von Exod 15:8; 2Sam 18:14; Ezra 7:27; Ps 45:5

3. (1×) A problematic textual occurrence at 1 Samuel 25:3, where the MT reading appears to involve a textual corruption or scribal note. Multilingual glosses render it as a bracketed gentilicic label '[Calebite],' suggesting the word here is not functioning as 'heart' at all but may be a mispointing or marginal annotation related to Caleb's clan identity. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: [Calebite] | es: (Qeré) | fr: [Calebite] | de: [Calebite] 1Sam 25:3

לֵב קָמָי H3820b N-proper-fs (1×)

Leb-Kamai; a cryptic designation for Chaldea using Atbash cipher

This enigmatic name appears in Jeremiah 51:1, as a coded reference to Chaldea (Babylon) using the Atbash cipher, where letters are reversed in the alphabet. 'Leb-Kamai' decodes to 'Kasdim' (Chaldeans). Some scholars interpret it as 'heart of my adversaries' or connect it to the Gambulai people. The cryptic reference may have served to veil the oracle's target during sensitive times, or it may be a literary device adding mystery to the judgment oracle.

(1×) A cipher or cryptonym for Chaldea/Babylon in Jeremiah's oracle. The Atbash interpretation has 'Leb-Kamai' reverse-spelling 'Kasdim,' making this a concealed reference to Babylon. The transliterated preservation across translations reflects the text's deliberate obscurity. Whether for security (avoiding explicitly naming Babylon while under their rule) or literary effect (heightening the mystery of divine judgment), the code adds layers of meaning to Jeremiah's prophecy against Israel's conquerors. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lev-Qamai | es: Lev-Kamai | fr: [לֵב קָמָי] | de: [לֵב קָמָי] Jer 51:1

לֵב H3821 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (1×)

Heart (Aramaic); the inner person, mind, or seat of understanding

This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew לֵב, appearing in Daniel 7:28 where Daniel says 'my thoughts troubled me and my heart was changed' after his vision. In Aramaic as in Hebrew, the heart represents the center of consciousness, thought, and emotion. Daniel's disturbed heart reflects his psychological response to the terrifying visions—the revelations have shaken his inner being, altering his mental and emotional state.

(1×) The heart as the seat of thought and emotion in Aramaic, here expressing inner disturbance from apocalyptic vision. Daniel's changed or troubled heart indicates deep psychological impact—the visions have fundamentally unsettled him. Spanish 'en corazón de mí' (in my heart) and French 'dans mon coeur' (in my heart) locate the turmoil internally. The Aramaic term carries the same semantic range as its Hebrew cognate, emphasizing the heart as the integrative center of human personhood. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: in-my-heart | es: en-corazón-de-mí | fr: dans-mon-coeur | de: [בלבי] Dan 7:28

לְבָאוֹת H3822 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Lebaoth; a city in the southern district of Judah, also called Beth-Lebaoth

This place name appears in Joshua 15:32, in the list of cities in Judah's Negev region. The same location appears as 'Beth-Lebaoth' (House of Lebaoth) in Joshua 19:6. The name may mean 'lionesses' or relate to a local deity/feature. Its precise location remains unknown, though it was among settlements in the southern wilderness frontier. The alternation between Lebaoth and Beth-Lebaoth shows how place names could vary with or without the 'house of' prefix.

(1×) A town name in Judah's southern territory, possibly meaning 'lionesses' or 'houses of lionesses.' The Joshua 15 list systematically records Negev settlements for tribal inheritance. Spanish 'Lebaot,' French/German variants 'Levaoth' preserve the place name across languages. The LXX's varied transliterations (Batharioth, Bethlebooth) reflect textual uncertainty but confirm recognition of this as a distinct location. The site's loss to history mirrors many smaller Negev settlements that didn't survive changing political fortunes. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Levaoth | es: y-Lebaot | fr: et-Levaoth | de: und-Levaoth Josh 15:32

לבב H3823a V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to get understanding, encourage, or captivate the heart

A denominative verb from לֵבָב (heart), used in two quite different senses. In Job 11:12, the Niphal means 'to get sense/understanding'—will a hollow man acquire a heart? In Song of Songs 4:9, the Piel means 'you have stolen/captured my heart' or possibly 'you have encouraged me'—the lover's passionate declaration to his beloved. The dual usage shows how the heart encompasses both intellect and affection.

(3×) Job 11:12 poses a rhetorical question using Niphal imperfect: 'shall an empty man get understanding?' (וְאִישׁ נָבוּב יִלָּבֵב), implying intellectual impossibility—as unlikely as a wild donkey's colt being born human. Song 4:9 (×2) has the lover exclaim, 'You have stolen my heart' (לִבַּבְתִּנִי), repeated for emphasis, '...with one glance of your eyes.' Some interpret this Piel as 'encouraged/emboldened' rather than 'ravished,' though most translations favor the romantic 'captured.' Spanish 'robaste el corazón,' French 'ravi le cœur' support the amorous reading. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: gains-understanding, you-have-captured-my-heart | es: Me-robaste-el-corazón, adquirirá-entendimiento„ me-robaste-el-corazón | fr: Tu-m'as-ravi-le-cœur„ tu-m'as-ravi-le-cœur, ילבב | de: [ילבב], [לבבתיני], [לבבתני] Job 11:12; Song 4:9

לבב H3823b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjImperf-3fs (2×)

make cakes (denominative from heart/cake)

A denominative verb from the word for 'heart' or 'cake,' used specifically in the story of Amnon and Tamar. The cakes Tamar prepares are special heart-shaped delicacies, perhaps chosen for their perceived restorative properties for someone feigning illness. This culinary detail adds domestic texture to the narrative while foreshadowing the violation that follows—innocent food preparation becomes the pretext for assault.

(2×) To make or prepare special cakes, heart-shaped cakes. Found only in 2 Samuel 13:6, 8 where Amnon requests that Tamar prepare these cakes. The verb appears in Piel conjugation (intensive/causative), suggesting deliberate, careful preparation. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the making/preparing action (Spanish 'preparó,' French 'fit'). The German rendering 'machte cakes' reflects the specialized nature of these baked goods. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-let-her-make, and-she-made-cakes | es: y-prepare, y-preparó | fr: et-elle-fit-cakes, et-que-sa-fais | de: und-lass-ihr-mache, und-sie-machte-cakes 2Sam 13:6; 2Sam 13:8

לֵבָב H3824 Conj-w (252×)

Heart, inner self; the seat of thought, will, emotion, and moral character; rarely, the physical center or midst.

Lebab is the fuller, stylistically variant form of leb, and like its shorter twin it denotes far more than the blood-pumping organ. In Hebrew thought, the lebab is where a person thinks, decides, desires, and morally orients themselves — the unified center of consciousness that English must split awkwardly into 'mind,' 'will,' 'heart,' and 'conscience.' The Shema's command to love God 'with all your lebab' (Deut 6:5) addresses the whole inner person, not just emotion. Nearly every one of its 252 occurrences carries this inner-self meaning, making it one of the most theologically concentrated nouns in Scripture. Only two peripheral uses depart from this: a poetic spatial metaphor ('the heart of the seas,' Jonah 2:3) and a possible adverbial use meaning 'wholeheartedly' (1 Chr 12:39).

1. heart, inner self (mind/will/emotion) (250×) The inner person as the seat of thought, understanding, volition, emotion, and moral character — an overwhelming 250 of 252 occurrences. This is the lebab of the Shema (Deut 6:5), of Solomon's request for a 'discerning lebab' (1 Kgs 3:9), and of the new-covenant promise that God will write his law on the lebab (Jer 31:33, using the form leb). All major target languages must pick a single organ-metaphor — Hindi hriday, Korean maeum, Spanish corazon, Arabic qalb — but none of them capture the full cognitive-volitional-emotional range the way Hebrew lebab does. Deuteronomy alone uses this word over 40 times, almost always in the command to align one's whole inner orientation toward God. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: your-heart | es: tu-corazón | fr: ton-coeur, ton-cœur | de: dein-Herz Deut 4:29; Deut 4:39; Deut 6:5; Deut 6:6; Deut 8:5

2. (1×) The physical center or midst of something, used spatially — a single poetic occurrence in Jonah 2:3, where the drowning prophet cries out from 'the lebab of the seas.' Here the word functions as a spatial metaphor for the innermost depth, the very core of the ocean. Spanish en corazon de, German in-Herz, and French dans coeur all preserve the metaphorical extension. This is the same semantic shift seen in many languages where 'heart' can mean 'center' (English 'the heart of the city'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: into-the-heart-of | es: en-corazon-de | fr: dans-coeur | de: in-Herz Jonah 2:3

3. (1×) Wholehearted devotion or integrity — a single occurrence at 1 Chr 12:39 where warriors come with a 'complete/whole lebab' to make David king. The multilingual evidence splits: English glosses 'whole,' Spanish integro ('integrity'), while French and German stay with 'heart.' The sense is adverbial or qualitative — describing the manner of commitment rather than the organ itself — and stands at the boundary between the inner-self sense and an abstract moral quality. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: whole | es: íntegro | fr: coeur | de: Herz 1Chr 12:39

לֵבָב H3825 N-msc / 2ms (7×)

lebab (Aramaic) – heart, mind; the inner seat of thought, will, and emotion in biblical Aramaic

The Aramaic noun lebab corresponds exactly to the far more common Hebrew leb/lebab, designating the heart as the seat of intellect, will, and emotion. Its seven occurrences are confined to the Aramaic chapters of Daniel, where it describes the inner life of kings and visionary experiences. Nebuchadnezzar receives an animal's heart in place of a human one (Dan 4:16) – a vivid image of mental derangement – and later his heart is 'lifted up' in pride (Dan 5:20). Daniel interprets the king's secret thoughts, 'the thoughts of your heart' (Dan 2:30). In Daniel 7:4, the beast is given 'a heart of a man.' Spanish corazon, French coeur, and Arabic qalb all share the same metaphorical mapping of heart to mind that characterizes Semitic anthropology broadly.

heart, mind, inner self (7×) The inner self understood as the seat of thought, will, and emotion – the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew leb/lebab. In Daniel's Aramaic chapters it describes Nebuchadnezzar's mind being changed to an animal's (Dan 4:16), his heart being lifted in arrogance (Dan 5:20-21), Daniel's access to the king's secret thoughts (Dan 2:30), and a beast receiving human understanding (Dan 7:4). Spanish corazon, French coeur, and the broader Semitic concept (Arabic qalb, 'heart') all confirm the universal heart-as-mind metaphor. The word functions identically to its Hebrew equivalent, with no semantic distinction arising from the language shift. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: and-heart-of, and-his-heart, his-heart | es: su-corazón, tu-corazón, y-corazón-de | fr: [ולבבה], [לבבה], [לבבך] | de: [ולבבה], [לבבה], [לבבך] Dan 2:30; Dan 4:16; Dan 5:20; Dan 5:21

לִבָּה H3826 N-mp (7×)

libbah – heart(s); a feminine/plural variant of leb, the inner person of thought, will, and moral character

The noun libbah is a feminine and plural variant form of the common Hebrew word for heart (leb), referring to the inner person as the seat of moral character, intention, and thought. Its seven occurrences appear in wisdom and poetic texts where the heart is scrutinized by God or revealed through conduct. Proverbs 15:11 affirms that Sheol and Abaddon lie open before the LORD – 'how much more the hearts of the children of men!' Proverbs 17:3 compares God's testing of hearts to a refiner's crucible. The Psalms ask God to examine the hearts of the righteous (Ps 7:9) and bless the upright in heart (Ps 125:4). Spanish corazones, French coeur, and German hearts all render it without distinguishing it semantically from the base form leb.

heart (plural/feminine form) (7×) The inner person, encompassing moral character, intention, and thought – a feminine/plural variant of leb used in contexts of divine scrutiny and moral evaluation. God tests hearts as a refiner tests metal (Prov 17:3; 21:2), searches them more deeply than Sheol itself (Prov 15:11), and judges their uprightness (Ps 7:9; 125:4). Spanish corazones, French coeur, and German equivalents treat it as semantically identical to the base form leb. The variant morphology (feminine construct and plural) carries no distinct meaning; it is simply an alternative inflectional pattern for the same core concept of the inner self before God. HEART (INNER SELF)

en: heart-your, hearts, in-their-hearts | es: corazones, corazones-de, corazón-de-ti | fr: coeur, cœur, dans-cœur | de: [לבות], [לבתך], hearts Ps 7:9; Ps 125:4; Prov 15:11; Prov 17:3; Prov 21:2

לְהָבָה H3827 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

Flame or blaze; consuming fire that burns fiercely

Though this lemma represents a specific form ('in the flame of'), it derives from the common noun לְהָבָה designating flame or blaze. In Exodus 3:2, the angel of the LORD appears to Moses 'in a flame of fire from the midst of the bush.' The term emphasizes the visible, active aspect of fire—the leaping flame rather than the fire itself. It's frequently used in poetic and prophetic contexts for divine judgment or theophany.

(1×) The flame of fire, emphasizing the visible, consuming aspect of burning. At the burning bush, Moses sees the flame within the bush, yet the bush is not consumed—a miraculous sign arresting his attention. Spanish 'en llama de' (in flame of) and French 'dans flamme de' (in flame of) preserve the locative construction. The flame's presence 'in' or 'from' the bush creates the paradox: fire that doesn't consume, signaling divine presence that energizes without destroying. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-flame-of | es: en-llama-de | fr: dans-flamme-de | de: in-Flamme-von Exod 3:2

לְבֹנָה H3828 Prep-b / N-fs (21×)

Frankincense — the white aromatic resin burned in Israelite worship, grain offerings, and sacred incense

The white aromatic resin harvested from Boswellia trees, named from the Hebrew root for 'white' on account of its pale color. Frankincense was a required component of the sacred incense blend (Exod 30:34) and accompanied grain offerings in the tabernacle and temple (Lev 2:1-16). It also appears in poetic imagery: the beloved in Song of Songs is associated with a hill of frankincense (4:6), and the prophets both celebrate and critique its ritual use (Isa 43:23; Jer 6:20). Cross-linguistic evidence is remarkably consistent, with cognates in Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic all pointing to the same resin.

frankincense (aromatic resin for incense) (21×) The fragrant white resin of Boswellia trees, integral to Israelite cultic practice. Prescribed as one of four ingredients in the holy incense (Exod 30:34), it was placed on grain offerings (Lev 2:1, 15) and beside the showbread (Lev 24:7). Translations across languages converge: incienso (Spanish), encens (French), Weihrauch (German), لُبَان (Arabic) — all pointing to the same aromatic substance. In Song of Songs 3:6

and 4:6, 14 it serves as a luxurious perfume image alongside myrrh. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: and-frankincense, and-the-frankincense, frankincense | es: e-incienso, el-incienso, incienso | fr: [והלבנה], [והלבונה], d'encens, | de: Weihrauch, [והלבונה], [ולבונה] Exod 30:34; Lev 2:1; Lev 2:2; Lev 2:15; Lev 2:16

לְבוֹנָה H3829 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (1×)

Lebonah; a town north of Shiloh, used as a geographical reference point

This place name appears in Judges 21:19, helping locate Shiloh for the Benjaminites seeking wives: 'north of Bethel, east of the highway going up from Bethel to Shechem, and south of Lebonah.' Modern Lubban, about three miles west-northwest of Seilun (ancient Shiloh), preserves the ancient name. The town served as a landmark in the central hill country, though it plays no narrative role beyond this geographical reference.

(1×) A town name used as a geographical marker in the central highlands. Judges 21 provides precise directions using multiple landmarks, with Lebonah marking Shiloh's northern boundary. The preservation of the name in modern Arabic (Lubban) confirms the identification and demonstrates toponymic continuity. Spanish 'Leboná' and the transliterations across languages maintain the place name. Its inclusion shows how well-known settlements served as reference points for navigation in ancient Israel's hill country. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Lebonah | es: Leboná | fr: à-Lebonah | de: zu-Lebonah Judg 21:19

לְבוּשׁ H3830 Prep-b / N-msc (33×)

Garment, clothing, or raiment; what one wears, both literally and as a figure for dignity or condition.

Denotes clothing or a garment in the broadest sense – everyday dress, royal robes, and even figurative 'garments' of strength and splendor. It appears in poetry celebrating the bloodstained garments of the grape-treader (Gen 49:11; Isa 63:1-2), the scarlet finery that Saul's daughters should mourn (2 Sam 1:24), and the 'strength and dignity' that clothe the virtuous woman (Prov 31:25). Across languages the glosses converge: German 'Kleid/Kleidung,' Spanish 'vestido/ropa,' French 'vêtement' – all pointing to the concrete act of dressing.

1. garment, clothing (32×) A garment or article of clothing worn on the body, encompassing everyday dress, ceremonial attire, and figurative garments of honor or shame. The multilingual consensus is strong: English 'clothing/garment,' Spanish 'vestido/ropa,' French 'vêtement,' German 'Kleid/Kleidung.' Key passages range from Jacob's blessing describing garments washed in wine (Gen 49:11) to Job's lament that God seizes him by the collar of his coat (Job 30:18), to the woman of valor clothed in strength and dignity (Prov 31:25). CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: a-garment, clothed-with, clothing | es: como-ropa, como-vestido, con-vestido-de | fr: [לבוש], comme-vêtement, in-vêtement | de: Kleid, Kleidung, [לבוש] Gen 49:11; 2Sam 1:24; 2Sam 20:8; 2Kgs 10:22; Esth 4:2

2. clothed in, wearing (1×) A participial or stative use meaning 'clothed in, wearing,' functioning as a predicate describing someone's state of dress rather than naming the garment itself. Attested at Ezekiel 9:11 where the man 'clothed in linen' reports back. Spanish 'vestido' (dressed) and English 'clothed in' capture the adjectival force, distinguishing this from the noun sense. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothed-in | es: vestido | fr: vêtement | de: [לבש] Ezek 9:11

לְבוּשׁ H3831 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

garment, clothing (Aramaic)

An Aramaic word for garments or clothing, appearing in Daniel's apocalyptic visions. In Daniel 3:21, the three young men are thrown into the furnace still wearing their full attire—trousers, tunics, hats, and other garments—emphasizing the totality of their preservation when they emerge unsinged. In Daniel 7:9, the Ancient of Days appears with garments white as snow, conveying purity, holiness, and transcendent majesty.

(2×) Refers to garments, clothing, or vestments. The term encompasses the full array of attire. In Daniel 3:21 it appears in plural with possessive suffix, denoting the complete wardrobe of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. In 7:9 it describes the dazzling white robes of the divine figure. Spanish 'ropas/vestidura,' French 'vêtement' confirm this general clothing sense across translations. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: His-garment, and-their-garments | es: vestidura-de-él, y-sus-ropas | fr: et-vêtement, vêtement | de: [ולבשיהון], [לבושה] Dan 3:21; Dan 7:9

לָבַט H3832 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to be thrust down, ruined, or overthrown (Niphal)

A verb meaning to be violently cast down or brought to ruin, appearing in wisdom and prophetic contexts. Proverbs warns that a babbling fool will be thrust down—loose lips lead to downfall. Hosea pronounces that a people without understanding will be ruined, linking intellectual-spiritual failure to inevitable destruction. The root conveys forceful, often irreversible collapse.

(3×) Proverbs 10:8, 10 warn that 'a babbling fool will be ruined' (אֱוִיל שְׂפָתַיִם יִלָּבֵט), using identical phrasing—the inevitable consequence of foolish talk. Hosea 4:14 pronounces judgment: 'a people without understanding will be thrust down' (עַם לֹא־יָבִין יִלָּבֵט), tying moral-spiritual blindness to national ruin. The Niphal verb suggests passive reception of judgment, being overthrown by external force (divine or circumstantial). Translations range from 'fall/stumble' to 'be ruined/overthrown': Spanish 'caerá/derribado,' capturing the downward, violent motion. FALLING AND FAILING

en: will-be-ruined, will-come-to-ruin | es: caerá, será-derribado | fr: enveloppera, ילבט | de: [ילבט] Prov 10:8; Prov 10:10; Hos 4:14

לְבִי H3833a Prep-l / N-fpc / 3ms (2×)

lion, lioness (poetic Aramaic form)

A poetic term for lions, used exclusively in plural and in figurative contexts. In Psalm 57:4, the psalmist describes enemies as lions—fierce, predatory, dangerous. In Nahum 2:12, the term appears in a taunt against Assyria, whose kings hoarded plunder for their 'lionesses' (perhaps their queens or consorts). This is vivid imagery drawn from the ancient Near Eastern royal iconography that depicted kings as lions.

(2×) Refers to lions in a metaphorical or poetic sense, particularly lionesses or a lion pride. The term is rare and elevated, appearing only in poetic passages where enemies or imperial power is likened to predatory big cats. The Nahum passage specifically mentions 'his lionesses' (possessive), likely referring to the Assyrian king's household or consorts. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'leones/leonas,' French 'lion') confirms the leonine reference. LIONS AND CUBS

en: for-his-lionesses, lions | es: leones, para-leonas-suyas | fr: lion, à-lion | de: [ללבאתיו], lions Ps 57:4; Nah 2:12

לְבִיָּא H3833b N-fs (1×)

Lioness; a female lion, used metaphorically for fierce protection or strength

This feminine noun appears only in Ezekiel 19:2, opening a lament: 'What was your mother? A lioness! Among lions she crouched, in the midst of young lions she reared her cubs.' The image presents Israel's monarchy as a lioness protecting and raising her offspring (the kings). Lioness imagery emphasizes maternal ferocity and strength—she trains her cubs to hunt and defends them against threats. The metaphor sets up the following lament over captured kings.

(1×) A female lion, used figuratively for the mother of Israel's kings. Ezekiel's allegory presents the nation as a lioness whose cubs (royal heirs) grew strong but were eventually captured. The parallel with 'lions' (masculine plural) emphasizes her place among the powerful. Spanish 'Leona' and French 'lionne' specify the female gender, crucial to the maternal imagery. The lioness metaphor combines nurturing (rearing cubs) and ferocity (dwelling among lions), befitting a royal line. LIONS AND CUBS

en: a-lioness | es: Leona | fr: lionne | de: [לביא] Ezek 19:2

לָבִיא H3833c Prep-l / N-ms (11×)

Lioness, great lion — a poetic term for the female or mature lion, used in prophecy and blessing

The noun לָבִיא (lavi) designates a lioness or, more broadly, a great lion in its prime, and belongs to the rich Hebrew vocabulary for lions (alongside אַרְיֵה, כְּפִיר, לַיִשׁ, שַׁחַל). It appears almost exclusively in elevated poetry and prophetic speech. Jacob blesses Judah as a lion's whelp who crouches like a lavi (Gen 49:9). Balaam compares Israel to a lavi that rises and does not lie down until it devours its prey (Num 23:24; 24:9). Moses likens Dan to a lion's whelp that leaps from Bashan (Deut 33:20). The prophets invoke the image for both judgment and terror (Isa 5:29; 30:6; Hos 13:8; Joel 1:6; Nah 2:12).

lioness (female lion) (11×) A lioness or great lion — a poetic/archaic term used in tribal blessings, prophetic oracles, and wisdom poetry to evoke fierce power, majesty, or dread. Jacob's blessing of Judah (Gen 49:9), Balaam's oracles over Israel (Num 23:24; 24:9), Moses' blessing on Dan or Gad (Deut 33:20), and prophetic imagery of judgment (Isa 5:29; 30:6; Hos 13:8; Joel 1:6; Nah 2:12) all employ this word. Wisdom literature uses it to depict the lion's den and hunting instinct (Job 4:11; 38:39). Spanish 'leona/león' and English 'lioness/great lion' both appear in translations. LIONS AND CUBS

en: a-lioness, and-as-lioness, and-like-a-lioness | es: como-leona, como-león, leona | fr: [כלביא], [לביא], comme-lioness | de: [כלביא], [לביא], [ללביא] Gen 49:9; Num 23:24; Num 24:9; Deut 33:20; Job 4:11

לִבְבָה H3834 N-fp (3×)

cakes, heart-shaped cakes or pancakes

A type of cake or pastry, possibly heart-shaped (related to לֵב, heart) or pan-fried. The term appears only in the narrative of Amnon's feigned illness, where he requests that Tamar prepare these special cakes in his sight. The detail contributes to the story's tragic tension—domestic, intimate food preparation becomes the setting for violence. The cakes' specific preparation 'before his eyes' suggests they required visible, skilled technique.

(3×) Second Samuel 13:6, 8, 10 recount Amnon's request for לְבִבוֹת and Tamar's preparation of them. Verse 8 describes her process: 'she took dough, kneaded it, made cakes (לְבִבוֹת) before his eyes, and baked the cakes.' The repetition emphasizes both the specificity of Amnon's request and Tamar's careful compliance. The root connection to 'heart' may indicate shape, or perhaps 'hearty/nourishing' cakes. Translations often render 'cakes' generically (Spanish 'tortas'), though some specify 'heart-cakes' or 'dumplings.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cakes, the-cakes | es: las-tortas, tortas | fr: cakes, le-cakes | de: cakes, der-cakes 2Sam 13:6; 2Sam 13:8; 2Sam 13:10

לִבֵּן H3835a Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-3mp (5×)

To be white, become white; to make white or purify, used both of physical whiteness and ethical cleansing.

A Hebrew verb meaning 'to be or become white,' extending figuratively to moral purification. In its Hiphil causative form it spans a remarkable range: God promises that sins 'though they are like scarlet, shall become white as snow' (Isa 1:18), and the psalmist pleads to be cleansed until 'I shall be whiter than snow' (Ps 51:7). Daniel uses it for eschatological purification—'many shall purify themselves and make themselves white' (Dan 11:35; 12:10). Even nature participates: Joel 1:7 describes a locust plague stripping bark until branches 'show white.' Spanish 'blanquearon' (they whitened) and 'seran blancos' (they shall be white) nicely distinguish the accomplished and promised states.

(5×) To become white, show whiteness, or make white—encompassing physical whiteness and metaphorical moral purification. The Hiphil in Isa 1:18 and Ps 51:7 describes the divine promise to make sins white as snow, a powerful image of forgiveness. In Dan 11:35 and 12:10 the Hithpael reflexive conveys self-purification in an eschatological refining process, paralleled with 'refine' and 'purge.' Joel 1:7 uses it concretely: locusts strip fig trees until their branches gleam white. Spanish 'seran blancos' (they shall be white) for the promissory sense versus 'blanquearon' (they whitened) for the physical captures this dual register effectively. WHITE COLOR

en: I-will-be-white, and-be-made-white, and-to-make-white | es: blanquearon, serán-blancos, seré-blanco | fr: [ויתלבנו], [וללבן], [ילבינו] | de: [והלבינו], [ויתלבנו], [וללבן] Ps 51:7; Isa 1:18; Dan 11:35; Dan 12:10; Joel 1:7

לָבַן H3835b V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cp (3×)

to make bricks, to work as a brickmaker

A denominative verb from לְבֵנָה (brick), describing the manufacture of mud bricks—the primary building material in ancient Mesopotamia and Egypt. Genesis preserves the Babel builders' resolve: 'Come, let us make bricks!' Exodus records Pharaoh's brutal decree withdrawing straw from Israelite brick quotas yet demanding the same output. Brickmaking involved mixing mud with straw, forming in molds, and sun-drying—labor-intensive work suited to enslaved populations.

(3×) Genesis 11:3 captures the Babel builders' enthusiasm: 'let us make bricks' (נִלְבְּנָה לְבֵנִים), using both verb and cognate accusative for emphasis—thoroughly brick! Exodus 5:7 records Pharaoh's oppressive order: 'You shall no longer give straw to the people to make bricks (לִלְבֹּן הַלְּבֵנִים),' and verse 14 mentions the quota 'to make bricks' (לִלְבֹּן?). The infinitive construct shows purpose. Translations universally render 'make bricks': Spanish 'hacer ladrillos,' German 'streichen/machen' (the German verb sometimes specifies forming/shaping). DOING AND MAKING

en: let-us-make-bricks, to-make | es: de-hacer-ladrillos, hagamos-ladrillos, para-hacer | fr: que-nous-faire-briques, à-faire | de: lasst-uns-streichen, zu-machen Gen 11:3; Exod 5:7; Exod 5:14

לָבָן H3836 Adj-fp (29×)

white — the color adjective describing skin, hair, animals, garments, and stones throughout Scripture

Lavan is the basic Hebrew color adjective for white, appearing 29 times across a striking range of referents. Its most technically demanding uses occur in Leviticus 13-14, where the priest must distinguish white patches, white hairs, and white swellings in diagnosing skin disease — the word appears over a dozen times in these two chapters alone, making whiteness a central diagnostic criterion. Outside the purity laws, lavan describes the white streaks Jacob exposed on peeled rods to influence his flocks' breeding (Gen 30:35-37), the manna that tasted like wafers with honey (Exod 16:31), the teeth of Judah 'whiter than milk' in Jacob's blessing (Gen 49:12), and the horses in Zechariah's apocalyptic visions (Zech 1:8; 6:3, 6). Ecclesiastes counsels that one's garments should always be white — a sign of festive joy (Eccl 9:8). Cross-linguistic evidence is perfectly uniform: Spanish 'blanco/blanca,' French 'blanc,' German 'weiss,' Hindi 'safed.'

white (color adjective) (29×) The color white as a visible property of objects, animals, skin conditions, and garments. Dominates the Levitical skin-disease diagnostic vocabulary, where white patches and hairs determine ritual status (Lev 13:3-4, 10, 13, 19-26). Also describes Jacob's peeled rods (Gen 30:37), manna's appearance (Exod 16:31), Judah's milk-white teeth (Gen 49:12), Zechariah's visionary horses (Zech 1:8; 6:3), and the festive garments commended by Qoheleth (Eccl 9:8). Every target language maps to a single basic color term. WHITE COLOR

en: white | es: blanca, blancas, blanco | fr: blanc | de: Weißes, weiss, weiße Gen 30:35; Gen 30:37; Gen 49:12; Exod 16:31

לָבָן H3837a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (54×)

Laban — the Aramean patriarch, brother of Rebekah and father-in-law of Jacob

Lavan (meaning 'white') is the Aramean relative who dominates Jacob's twenty-year sojourn in Paddan-Aram. Across 54 occurrences — concentrated in Genesis 24 and 29-32 — Laban appears first as Rebekah's brother who receives Abraham's servant (Gen 24:29-50), then as the shrewd father-in-law who substitutes Leah for Rachel on Jacob's wedding night (Gen 29:23-25) and repeatedly changes Jacob's wages (Gen 31:7, 41). The Yahwist, Elohist, and Priestly sources all name him, with the epithet 'Laban the Aramean' (Gen 25:20; 31:24) underscoring his foreign identity. The name is rendered as a simple transliteration in every language tradition: Spanish 'Lavan,' French 'Laban,' German 'Laban.'

Laban (person) (54×) The proper noun Laban (lavan, 'white'), son of Bethuel and grandson of Nahor, known primarily as the father of Leah and Rachel, and as Jacob's father-in-law and employer in Paddan-Aram (Gen 29-31). Also appears as Rebekah's brother in the betrothal narrative (Gen 24:29-50). All 54 occurrences refer to this single patriarch; the epithet 'the Aramean' (ha-Arammi) in several passages emphasizes his non-Israelite lineage and geographic setting. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Laban | es: Lavan | fr: Laban | de: Laban, Labans, war-Laban Gen 24:29; Gen 24:50; Gen 25:20; Gen 27:43

לָבָן H3837b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Laban; a place in the wilderness associated with Israel's wanderings

This place name appears in Deuteronomy 1:1, in the geographical introduction locating Moses' final addresses: 'in the Arabah opposite Suph, between Paran and Tophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Dizahab.' The site is distinct from the region of Libnah and from the person Laban. Its exact location is unknown, though it was somewhere in the wilderness region where Israel camped. The LXX rendering 'Lobon' preserves the name without identifying the site.

(1×) A wilderness location referenced in Moses' geographical framework. Deuteronomy 1 sets the scene for Moses' speeches by listing surrounding landmarks, with Laban among the named points. The transliterated forms across languages reflect the place name's preservation despite uncertain identification. Some scholars suggest connection with Libnah (another wilderness camp), but the spelling differs. The name may mean 'white,' possibly referring to white limestone or salt formations in the wilderness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Laban | es: y-Labán | fr: et-Laban | de: und-Laban Deut 1:1

לְבָנָא H3838 N-proper-ms (2×)

Lebanah/Lebana, head of a family of returning exiles

The name of a family head among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears in the parallel lists of Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7 with slight spelling variation —Lebana in Ezra, Lebanah in Nehemiah. The name may derive from the root for 'white' (related to Lebanon, the white mountain), suggesting the family's historical or geographical origin.

(2×) A proper name designating the head of a family among the returning exiles, specifically among the temple servants. The name appears in the canonical return lists that enumerate the families who came back under Zerubbabel. The Septuagint renders it variously as Labana, Loabna, reflecting uncertainty about pronunciation but confirming it as a personal name identifying a specific lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lebanah, Levanah | es: Lebana, Lebaná | fr: [לבנה] | de: zu-baute Ezra 2:45; Neh 7:48

לְבֹנָה H3839 N-ms (2×)

poplar (or styrax), a tree with white features

A tree species identified as either poplar or styrax, apparently named for its white characteristics—white bark, white gum, or white blossoms. In Genesis 30:37, Jacob peels rods of poplar (among other trees) as part of his livestock breeding scheme. In Hosea 4:13, the tree provides shade for idolatrous worship, grouped with oak and terebinth as prominent cultic sites. The 'whiteness' may explain the name, connecting it to the root for white.

(2×) Refers to a specific tree species, likely either white poplar or styrax (a tree that exudes a white, milky resin). Modern identifications suggest styrax officinalis based on Arabic cognates and botanical evidence. The tree serves both practical purposes (Jacob's rods) and cultic ones (shade for illicit worship). Cross-linguistic glosses vary—Spanish 'álamo' (poplar), German 'Storaxbaum' (styrax tree) —reflecting ongoing botanical debate, but all agree it's a tree with notable white features. OAK TEREBINTH TREE

en: and-poplar, poplar | es: y-álamo, álamo | fr: et-pour-il-a-bâti, poplar | de: [ולבנה], von-Storaxbaum Gen 30:37; Hos 4:13

לְבֵנָה H3840 N-fsc (1×)

brick, tile (fired or sun-dried clay building material)

The word denotes bricks or tiles made from clay, used widely in ancient construction. Hebrew speakers distinguished this manufactured building material from natural stone. In Exodus 24:10, the phrase describes something with a sapphire-like appearance "as the substance of brick," suggesting the brilliant blue color seen against fired clay. Spanish, French, and German translations consistently render this as brick or tile.

(1×) This sole occurrence in Exodus 24:10 appears in a construct phrase describing the pavement under God's feet during Moses' vision on Sinai. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'ladrillo-de', French 'brique-de', German 'Ziegel-von') confirms the genitive relationship, emphasizing the brick as a material quality rather than an object itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brick-of | es: ladrillo-de | fr: brique-de | de: Ziegel-von Exod 24:10

לִבְנָה H3841 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (18×)

Libnah: a Canaanite city in the Judean Shephelah; also a wilderness encampment on Israel's exodus route.

Designates two distinct locations in the biblical narrative. The primary Libnah is a fortified city in the southwestern lowlands of Judah, captured during Joshua's southern campaign (Josh 10:29-39) and later assigned as a Levitical city (Josh 21:13). It reappears in the monarchic period as the birthplace of Hamutal, mother of Kings Jehoahaz and Zedekiah (2 Kgs 23:31; 24:18), and as a site besieged by Sennacherib (2 Kgs 19:8). A second Libnah marks a wilderness station between Rimmon-perez and Rissah during the exodus wanderings (Num 33:20-21). The name likely derives from the root lbn meaning 'white,' perhaps referring to the local limestone. The Septuagint renders it as Lebna.

Libnah (18×) A Canaanite city in the Shephelah of Judah conquered by Joshua (Josh 10:29-39), assigned as a Levitical city (Josh 21:13), and historically significant through the monarchy as both a hometown of royal mothers and a target of Assyrian campaigns (2 Kgs 19:8). Also serves as a wilderness encampment name (Num 33:20-21). The name probably reflects the white limestone terrain; the Septuagint consistently renders it Lebna/Lemona. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Libnah, Livnah, from-Libnah | es: Libna, Libná, Livná | fr: Libnah, Livnah, [לבנה] | de: Libnah, Livnah, [לבנה] Num 33:20; Num 33:21; Josh 10:29; Josh 10:31

לְבָנָה H3842 Prep-k (3×)

moon, the lunar orb (poetic)

The poetic term for the moon, used in elevated, often prophetic or romantic contexts. Isaiah envisions eschatological renewal when the moon's light will equal the sun's brilliance. The moon will also be humiliated when YHWH reigns on Mount Zion in glory. In Song of Songs, the beloved's beauty is compared to the moon—fair, luminous, awe-inspiring. The term carries more lyrical weight than the common יָרֵחַ.

(3×) Song of Songs 6:10 praises the beloved: 'fair as the moon' (יָפָה כַלְּבָנָה), parallel to 'bright as the sun,' linking celestial beauty to human radiance. Isaiah 24:23 prophesies that 'the moon will be abashed' (וְחָפְרָה הַלְּבָנָה) when YHWH reigns from Zion, outshining all luminaries. Isaiah 30:26 promises that 'the light of the moon will be like the light of the sun' (אוֹר הַלְּבָנָה כְּאוֹר הַחַמָּה) in the day of restoration. The consistent pairing with חַמָּה (sun) creates cosmic dyads. Translations: Spanish 'luna,' French 'lune.' MOON CELESTIAL BODY

en: like-the-moon, of-the-moon, the-moon | es: como-la-luna, la-luna | fr: [הלבנה], comme-la-lune, | de: [הלבנה], [כלבנה] Song 6:10; Isa 24:23; Isa 30:26

לְבֵנָה H3843 Art / N-fp (11×)

Brick, tile — a molded block of clay dried or baked for building; associated with forced labor and hubris

The noun לְבֵנָה (levenah) means brick or tile — a sun-dried or kiln-fired block of clay used as a fundamental building material throughout the ancient Near East. Its earliest occurrence is in the Tower of Babel narrative, where humans say 'let us make bricks' (נִלְבְּנָה לְבֵנִים, Gen 11:3), linking the material to collective hubris. In Exodus, brick-making becomes the defining image of Israelite slavery: Pharaoh demands bricks without straw (Exod 1:14; 5:7-19). Isaiah contrasts humble bricks with dressed stone (Isa 9:9) and condemns those who burn incense on bricks (Isa 65:3). Ezekiel uses a brick as a miniature siege map (Ezek 4:1).

brick, tile (11×) A molded building brick made of clay, often sun-dried but sometimes kiln-fired, used throughout Mesopotamia and Egypt. The Tower of Babel builders substitute brick for stone (Gen 11:3), and Israelite slaves in Egypt are forced to produce bricks under brutal quotas (Exod 1:14; 5:7-8, 14, 16, 18-19). Isaiah's defiant boast — 'bricks have fallen, but we will build with dressed stone' (Isa 9:9) — captures the material's humble status. Isaiah 65:3 condemns burning incense on bricks, and Ezekiel 4:1 uses a brick as a prophetic prop for a siege diagram. Spanish 'ladrillo' and English 'brick' both render the term straightforwardly. DOING AND MAKING en: and-bricks, and-with-bricks, brick | es: Ladrillos, de-vuestros-ladrillos, el-ladrillo | fr: [הלבנים], [לבנים], briques | de: Ziegel, [הלבנים], [לבנה] Gen 11:3; Exod 1:14; Exod 5:7; Exod 5:8

לְבָנוֹן H3844 Prep-k (71×)

Lebanon – the forested mountain range north of Israel, famed for cedars and snow-capped cliffs

Lebanon (Levanon) names the prominent mountain range running along Israel's northern border, renowned in the ancient world for its towering cedars, lush forests, and gleaming white limestone cliffs – indeed the name likely derives from lavan ('white'), referring either to the snow or the pale rock. Across its 71 occurrences the word appears with the article (ha-Levanon, 51 times) in prose and without it in poetry and late texts (Hos 14:8; Nah 1:4; Song 4:8). Its cedars supply timber for the temple (1 Kgs 5), and prophets invoke Lebanon as a symbol of grandeur, fertility, and fragrance. Spanish Líbano, French Liban, and German Libanon all preserve the toponym with minimal adaptation.

Lebanon (geographical region) (71×) The geographic proper noun designating the mountain range north of Israel, employed both as a literal place name (Deut 1:7; Josh 1:4; 1 Kgs 5:13) and as a poetic symbol of majesty, fertility, and fragrance (Ps 29:6; Song 4:11, 15; Isa 35:2). The etymological link to lavan ('white') evokes either snow-covered peaks or pale limestone cliffs. All target languages – Spanish Líbano, French Liban, German Libanon – render it as a single undifferentiated toponym across all 71 occurrences. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lebanon, Levanon, of-Levanon | es: Líbano, al-Líbano, del-Líbano | fr: Liban, le-Liban | de: Libanon, der-Libanon Deut 1:7; Deut 3:25; Deut 11:24; Josh 1:4; Josh 9:1

לִבְנִי H3845 N-proper-ms (5×)

Libni; a Levite, son of Gershon son of Levi, ancestor of a Levitical clan bearing his name.

A proper masculine name meaning 'white' (from the root laban), borne by a grandson of Levi through the line of Gershon. Libni appears in the genealogical lists as the firstborn of Gershon (Exod 6:17; Num 3:18), and his descendants are traced through the Chronicler's expanded Levitical genealogies (1 Chr 6:17, 20, 29). The patronymic clan 'the Libnites' (Num 3:21; 26:58) derives from his name. All major translations—English 'Libni,' Spanish 'Libni,' French and German similarly—transliterate without variation, reflecting the straightforward transmission of this Levitical name.

(5×) The personal name Libni, identifying a Levite who was the son of Gershon and grandson of Levi, and the eponymous ancestor of a Levitical sub-clan. Exod 6:17 and Num 3:18 list him alongside his brother Shimei as the two sons of Gershon. The Chronicler traces his descendants through several generations in 1 Chr 6:17, 20, and 29. The name derives from the root lbn ('to be white'), possibly reflecting physical appearance or birthplace. Spanish and English both render it 'Libni' without variation, and the LXX form Lobeni confirms early transliteration consistency. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Libni, Livni | es: Libni, Livni | fr: Libni, [לבני] | de: Libni, [לבני] Exod 6:17; Num 3:18; 1Chr 6:17; 1Chr 6:20; 1Chr 6:29

לִבְנִי H3846 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

the Libnite, a family group descended from Libni

A gentilic adjective (always with the definite article) referring to descendants of Libni, a Levitical family. The term appears in census and genealogical lists in Numbers, identifying one of the sub-clans of the Gershonites. Used collectively, 'the Libnite' refers to the whole family group, not just a single individual. This is standard biblical practice for tribal and family designations.

(2×) A collective gentilic term for the Libnite family, descendants of Libni son of Gershon. Appears in Numbers 3:21 and 26:58 in levitical census contexts. The definite article ('the Libnite') marks this as a recognized family unit within the Gershonite clan structure. Cross-linguistic renderings maintain the gentilic form—'los libnitas' (Spanish), 'der Libnite' (German)—confirming this is a family designation, not a geographical origin. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Libnite | es: el-libnita, los-libnitas | fr: le-Libnite | de: der-Libnite Num 3:21; Num 26:58

לָבַשׁ H3847 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (111×)

To put on or wear a garment; causatively to clothe someone; participially to be clothed in; passively to have been dressed

The primary Hebrew verb for the act of dressing, covering the full range from donning one's own garments to clothing another person. In the Qal, it describes the simple act of putting on clothing — whether priestly vestments (Lev 6:10), royal robes (Gen 38:19), or the metaphorical garments of salvation. The Hifil causative is theologically rich: God himself clothes Adam and Eve with garments of skin (Gen 3:21), and Joseph is clothed in fine linen by Pharaoh (Gen 41:42). The participle functions almost as an adjective, describing someone as 'clothed in' specific garments, frequently in prophetic visions (Ezek 9:2). Cognates span the Semitic family — Aramaic levish, Arabic labisa, Ethiopic lebsa — all preserving the same core meaning.

1. Qal: put on, wear (60×) The active Qal sense: to put on, wear, or don a garment. The subject clothes themselves. This covers the majority of occurrences and spans everyday dressing (Gen 28:20), priestly investiture (Lev 6:10-11), and metaphorical clothing with attributes like righteousness or strength. Spanish vestirse and German bekleiden both reflect the reflexive dimension. The range of objects worn — linen, sackcloth, armor, splendor — makes this sense contextually versatile. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: And-He-put-on, and-he-put-on, and-let-put-on | es: Y-se-vistió, Y-vestirá, para-vestir | fr: devra-wear, et-devra-mettre-sur, et-laisse-mettre-sur | de: bekleiden, bekleidete, er-bekleidet Gen 28:20; Gen 38:19; Lev 6:10; Lev 6:11

2. Hifil: clothe someone (32×) The Hifil causative: to clothe someone else, to dress another person. Theologically significant from its first occurrence when God clothes the first humans (Gen 3:21), this sense appears in royal investiture (Gen 41:42), maternal care

(Gen 27:15-16), and prophetic symbolism. Spanish vestir a alguien and French revêtir capture the transitive action. Priestly ordination language (Exod 28:41) relies heavily on this stem. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: I-will-clothe, You-clothe-me, and-I-will-clothe-him | es: Y-lo-vestiré, Y-vestirás, Y-vistió | fr: et-clothed, et-il-vêtit, et-revêtir | de: bekleiden, bekleidete, der-eins-kleidend-du Gen 3:21; Gen 27:15; Gen 27:16; Gen 41:42; Exod 28:41

3. Qal participle: clothed in (15×) The Qal participle functioning as a stative adjective: clothed in, wearing, dressed in. Rather than describing the action of dressing, this sense describes the resulting state. It appears prominently in Ezekiel's visions — the man clothed in linen (Ezek 9:2-3, 10:2) — and in Proverbs 31:21 describing the capable woman whose household is clothed in scarlet. The participial form allows the verb to serve as a descriptor in narrative and prophetic vision alike. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothed, clothed-in, clothed-in- | es: el-vestido, los-que-visten, vestida-de | fr: portant, revêtir | de: bekleiden, bekleidete, wearing 1Sam 17:5; Prov 31:21; Ezek 9:2; Ezek 9:3; Ezek 10:2

4. Pual: be clothed (4×) The Pual passive: to be clothed, to have been dressed by another. This intensive passive emphasizes the completed state of having been clothed, often in ceremonial contexts. The attestations cluster in Chronicles and Kings — priests clothed in white linen at the temple dedication (2 Chr 5:12), kings seated clothed in their robes (1 Kgs 22:10, 2 Chr 18:9). The passive voice underscores the dignity conferred by the garments rather than the act of dressing. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothed, clothed-in | es: vestidos | fr: clothed, revêtir | de: bekleiden, bekleidete, kleidete 1Kgs 22:10; 2Chr 5:12; 2Chr 18:9; Ezra 3:10

לְבֻשׁ H3848 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3mp (3×)

to wear, to clothe (Aramaic verb used in Daniel 5)

An Aramaic verb appearing only in Daniel 5, in the context of royal honors promised to whoever interprets Nebuchadnezzar's writing. The king pledges that the interpreter will be clothed in purple—the color of royalty and high office in the Persian court. The Hafel (causative) form in verse 29 shows the actual investiture when Daniel is robed in purple. This reflects Babylonian and Persian ceremonial dress conferring rank.

(3×) Daniel 5:7 records the king's proclamation: 'shall wear purple' (יִלְבַּשׁ אַרְגְּוָנָא), promising royal garments to the interpreter. Verse 16 repeats the promise: 'you shall wear purple' (תִּלְבַּשׁ אַרְגְּוָנָא). Verse 29 fulfills it using Hafel perfect: 'and they clothed Daniel in purple' (וְהַלְבְּשׁוּ לְדָנִיֵּאל אַרְגְּוָנָא). The repetition underscores the gravity of the promised honor. Purple dye was expensive, restricted to nobility—being clothed in it signified elevation to high office. Translations (Spanish 'vestir,' French 'vêtir') maintain the formal, ceremonial register. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-they-clothed, will-wear, you-will-wear | es: vestirá, vestirás, y-vistieron | fr: et-vêtir, vêtir | de: [והלבישו], [ילבש], [תלבש] Dan 5:7; Dan 5:16; Dan 5:29

לֹג H3849 Prep-m / N-msc (5×)

Log; a small liquid measure (approximately half a liter), used exclusively for oil in the leper purification ritual.

A masculine noun denoting a small unit of liquid measure, equal to one-twelfth of a hin or roughly half a liter. The log appears exclusively in Leviticus 14, the detailed ritual for purifying a healed leper, where it always measures olive oil (Lev 14:10, 12, 15, 21, 24). The priest takes a log of oil, sprinkles some before the Lord, and anoints the purified person. Its restricted context—five occurrences all in one chapter—makes it one of the most specialized terms in biblical metrology. The Aramaic cognate lugga and Syriac lagga confirm its antiquity as a standard small measure across Semitic cultures.

(5×) A unit of liquid measure (approximately one-twelfth of a hin, or about half a liter), used exclusively for measuring oil in the leper purification ritual of Leviticus 14. All five occurrences specify oil: Lev 14:10 and 14:21 prescribe 'one log of oil' as part of the offering; 14:12 presents it as a wave offering; 14:15 and 14:24 describe the priest pouring from the log into his palm for anointing. Spanish 'el log de' and German 'log von' treat it as a loanword, while French similarly retains 'log'—all reflecting that this technical term resists translation into native vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-log, and-log-of, from-log-of | es: del-log-de, el-log-de, y-log | fr: de-log-de, et-log, et-log-de | de: log-von, und-log, und-log-von Lev 14:10; Lev 14:12; Lev 14:15; Lev 14:21; Lev 14:24

לֹד H3850 N-proper-fs (4×)

Lod (Lydda), a town in Benjamin's territory, modern Ludd near Tel Aviv

Lod was a town built by the Benjamites after the conquest, located about eleven miles southeast of Jaffa on the road to Jerusalem. In the Hellenistic and Roman periods it became known as Lydda, the city where Peter healed Aeneas and where many believed in the Lord. Post-exilic census lists show the town was resettled by returning exiles. Modern Ludd preserves the ancient name and location.

(4×) Lod appears in genealogical and census contexts. The Benjamite Shemed built 'Lod with its towns' (1Chr 8:12). Two post-exilic census lists record 'the sons of Lod' (meaning its inhabitants): 725 returned with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37), and the town appears among Benjamite settlements in Nehemiah's time (Neh 11:35). The Septuagint renders it variously as Lōd, Lod, Luddōn, Lydda, showing the evolution toward the Greek form. All modern translations preserve it as Lod, with translators leaving the Hebrew in brackets in some cases. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lod | es: Lod | fr: [לֹד] | de: [לֹד] 1Chr 8:12; Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37; Neh 11:35

לַהַב H3851 Prep-b / N-mpc (12×)

A flame or blaze of fire; the blade or flashing point of a weapon

The noun לַהַב captures the bright, dangerous edge of both fire and metal. In most occurrences it refers to a flame or blaze, especially in contexts of divine theophany and judgment — the flame ascending from Manoah's altar (Judg 13:20), the devouring flame of God's wrath (Isa 29:6; 30:30), and the rush of fire Joel likens to a locust swarm (Joel 2:5). Its secondary meaning is the blade or flashing point of a weapon, vividly illustrated when Ehud's entire blade sinks into Eglon's belly (Judg 3:22) and when the gleam of a spear flashes in battle (Job 39:23).

1. flame, blaze (9×) A flame or blaze of fire, frequently appearing in construct with 'fire' (lahab esh) in scenes of divine judgment, theophany, and natural imagery. The altar flame rises heavenward with the angel of the LORD in Judg 13:20; Isaiah deploys it three times for God's consuming judgment alongside whirlwind, thunder, and hailstorm (Isa 29:6; 30:30; 66:15). Joel 2:5 compares the crackling sound of locusts to a flame devouring stubble, and Job 41:21 ascribes fiery breath to Leviathan. Spanish 'llama/llamas' and English 'flame' consistently confirm this core meaning. Isaiah 13:8 extends it figuratively: faces like flames, burning with anguish. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-flame, and-flame, and-flame-of | es: con-llamas-de-, en-la-llama-de, la-llama | fr: [בלהבי], [ולהב], [להבים] | de: [בלהבי], [ולהב], [להב] Judg 13:20; Job 41:21; Isa 13:8; Isa 29:6

2. blade (of a weapon) (3×) The blade or cutting edge of a weapon, extending the word's core notion of a bright, sharp, dangerous surface from fire to metal. Judges 3:22 is the defining passage, used twice in the same verse: both the handle and the blade (hallahab) of Ehud's dagger disappeared into Eglon. Job 39:23 describes the flash of a spear — the gleaming point catching light — while Nahum 3:3 speaks of the flashing blade of the sword in Nineveh's final battle. Spanish 'la hoja' (the blade) and English 'the blade' distinguish this clearly from the flame sense, though the underlying image of dangerous brightness unites both. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-blade, the-flash-of | es: la-hoja, llama-de | fr: le-blade, לַהַב | de: [להב], der-blade Judg 3:22; Job 39:23

לְהָבָה H3852 N-fs (19×)

Flame or blaze of fire, whether literal or figurative; also the gleaming blade of a weapon.

Lehabah is fire made visible — the luminous tongue of flame that leaps, devours, and dazzles. It appears in some of Scripture's most vivid scenes: the burning bush where God appeared to Moses in a 'flame of fire' (Exod 3:2), the fire that consumed Korah's rebels (Ps 106:18), and hailstones mingled with flame-fire raining on Egypt (Ps 105:32). In prophetic judgment imagery, lehabah becomes the instrument of divine wrath — consuming chaff (Isa 5:24), devouring like a forest fire (Joel 2:3), and burning without rescue (Isa 47:14). German 'Flamme' and Spanish 'llama' both carry the same elemental force. In one remarkable extension (1 Sam 17:7), the word describes the gleaming blade of Goliath's spear — the flash of polished metal that resembles a tongue of fire.

1. flame, blaze (18×) Flame or blaze in its primary sense — fire as a visible, luminous phenomenon. This covers 18 of the 19 occurrences, spanning literal fire, theophany, and judgment imagery. The burning bush (Exod 3:2) and lightning mixed with hail (Ps 105:32) represent literal flame; the 'flame of fire' devouring forests (Ps 83:14; Joel 2:3) and consuming chaff (Isa 5:24) serve as metaphors for divine judgment. Spanish 'llama' and German 'Flamme' consistently render this core sense. Psalm 29:7 — 'the voice of the LORD divides flames of fire' — links flame directly to theophanic power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-flame, and-as-a-flame, and-by-flame | es: de-llamas, llama, llama-de | fr: et-flamme, flamme, flamme, | de: Flamme, [ובלהבה], [ולהבה] Num 21:28; Ps 29:7; Ps 83:14; Ps 105:32; Ps 106:18

2. blade of a weapon (1×) The gleaming blade of a weapon, a metaphorical extension from the flash and shimmer of flame to the bright surface of polished metal. This sense appears only in 1 Samuel 17:7, describing the shaft or blade of Goliath's spear. English 'blade' and Spanish 'hoja' (leaf/blade) both reflect the conceptual leap from fire to metallic flash — a semantic development attested across many languages where 'flame' and 'blade' share a visual metaphor of bright, cutting light. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-blade-of | es: y-hoja-de | fr: et-blade-de | de: und-blade-von 1Sam 17:7

לְהָבִים H3853 N-proper-ms (2×)

Lehabim, a people group descended from Mizraim (Egypt)

A people group listed in the Table of Nations as descendants of Mizraim (Egypt). The exact identification is uncertain, though many scholars equate Lehabim with the Libyans (Lubim) based on phonetic similarity and geographical proximity to Egypt. The name appears in both Genesis 10 and 1 Chronicles 1 in the genealogical framework that maps the ancient world's ethnic divisions.

(2×) The proper name of an ethnic group in the Table of Nations, appearing in the genealogy of Ham's son Mizraim. Genesis 10:13 and 1 Chronicles 1:11 provide identical references. The Septuagint renders it 'Labieim,' preserving the name in transliteration. Most modern scholars identify Lehabim with Libya or Libyans, fitting the North African geography of Mizraim's descendants. German 'die Lehabiter' treats it as a people group designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lehabim, Lehavim | es: Lehabim, Lehavím | fr: Lehabim, [להבים] | de: [להבים], die-Lehabiter Gen 10:13; 1Chr 1:11

לַהַג H3854 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

study, devotion to books (late Hebrew term for intellectual labor)

This rare term appears only in Ecclesiastes 12:12, warning that "much study is weariness of the flesh." BDB identifies it as a late Hebrew word for devotion to books or intellectual pursuits. The context suggests the physical and mental exhaustion that comes from excessive scholarly labor. Spanish translates this as "y-estudiar" (and to study), capturing the verbal sense of the activity rather than the noun.

(1×) The Ecclesiastes passage uses this word to describe the tiresome nature of endless book-learning. The Spanish rendering "y-estudiar" and French retention of the Hebrew form suggest translators recognized the term's technical nature. This appears in Qohelet's closing warnings about the limits of human wisdom-seeking. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: and-much | es: y-estudiar | fr: et-ולהג | de: [ולהג] Eccl 12:12

לָהַד H3855 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lahad (personal name; son of Jahath in Judah's genealogy)

Lahad appears as a descendant of Judah through Jahath in the genealogical lists of 1 Chronicles 4:2. The name's etymology remains uncertain, and BDB offers no clear meaning. The Septuagint renders it variously as Λααθ or Λααδ, showing some textual variation. This minor figure in Judah's tribal records receives no narrative development beyond his genealogical placement.

(1×) All modern translations preserve the Hebrew name Lahad with minimal adaptation, treating it as a proper noun without semantic translation. The sole reference in 1 Chronicles 4:2 places him among the lesser-known descendants of Judah, with no additional biographical information preserved in Scripture. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Lahad | es: Lahad | fr: [לָהַד] | de: [לָהַד] 1Chr 4:2

לָהָה H3856a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (1×)

languish, faint, grow weak (of land under severe famine)

This verb describes the languishing or fainting of the land during the severe famine in Genesis 47:13. It parallels the more common לָאָה and conveys the exhaustion or depletion of resources. The Targum uses a cognate form with the same meaning. Spanish "se agotó" (it was exhausted) and German "verschmachtete" (it languished) both capture the sense of complete depletion. The land itself becomes personified as growing weak under the prolonged drought.

(1×) Genesis 47:13 uses this verb to describe how "the land languished" during Joseph's administration of the famine. The multilingual evidence shows translators understood this as extreme exhaustion: Spanish "se-agotó" (was depleted), German "verschmachtete" (languished). The consecutive imperfect form indicates the progressive worsening of conditions. FAINTNESS SWOONING

en: and-languished | es: y-se-agotó | fr: et-languished | de: und-es-verschmachtete Gen 47:13

לְהִתְלַהֵת H3856b Prep-k / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

act madly, behave as a madman (quadriliteral verb of mental disturbance)

This rare Hithpalpel participle describes someone acting like a madman or behaving in a deranged manner. The Syriac cognate means to confuse or stupefy. In Proverbs 26:18, it describes a person shooting deadly arrows while pretending to be joking—like a madman wielding dangerous weapons. Spanish "enloquecido" (maddened) captures the sense of one who has lost rational control. The quadriliteral root suggests an intensive or repetitive action.

(1×) Proverbs 26:18 compares the deceiver to "a madman shooting firebrands, arrows, and death." The Spanish "Como-enloquecido" (like one driven mad) emphasizes the dangerous unpredictability. This participial form functions as a substantive, describing the type of person rather than a single act, highlighting the ongoing danger of those who jest with serious harm. MADNESS INSANITY

en: like-a-madman | es: Como-enloquecido | fr: comme-כמתלהלה | de: [כמתלהלה] Prov 26:18

לָהַט H3857 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (11×)

To blaze, flame; (Piel) to set ablaze, burn up, consume with fire.

A verb of fire and intensity, describing both the state of being aflame and the act of setting something ablaze. In its Qal stem it depicts things or beings that are burning or flaming – fire made into God's servants (Ps 104:4) and enemies whose tongues are like blazing fire

(Ps 57:4). In the more common Piel, the verb becomes transitive and devastating: fire kindled by God's wrath that scorches the foundations of mountains (Deut 32:22), flames consuming pastures (Joel 1:19; 2:3), and fire encircling the wicked (Ps 97:3; 106:18). Spanish 'abrasar' (to scorch) and French 'embraser' (to set ablaze) capture the consuming intensity.

1. set ablaze, burn up (9×) Piel: to set ablaze, burn up, consume with fire in a transitive, causative sense. The subject – usually fire or flame acting as an instrument of divine judgment – actively kindles and devours its object. Deuteronomy 32:22 pictures God's anger as a fire that sets ablaze the foundations of mountains. Joel 1:19 and 2:3 describe flame consuming desert pastures. Psalm 106:18 recounts fire blazing among Korah's company. Spanish 'abrasar' (to scorch thoroughly) and French 'embraser' (to set on fire) both underscore the destructive, transitive force. Nine of eleven occurrences carry this intensive meaning. FIRE AND BURNING

en: and-burns-up, and-it-set-him-ablaze, and-sets-ablaze | es: abrasa, abrasó, enciende | fr: [ותלהטהו], brûler, embraser | de: [ולהט], [ותלהטהו], [להטה] Deut 32:22; Job 41:21; Ps 83:14; Ps 97:3; Ps 106:18

2. be ablaze, flame (2×) Qal: to be ablaze, to flame – an intransitive, stative sense describing something in a state of burning. In Psalm 104:4 God makes 'flaming fire' his ministers, and in Psalm 57:4 enemies are described as 'those who are aflame,' a vivid metaphor for destructive hostility. Spanish 'llameante' (flaming) preserves the adjectival-participial quality. The two Qal occurrences both use the active participle, giving the sense of ongoing, characterizing fire rather than a punctiliar act of ignition. BURN KINDLE FLAME

en: flaming, those-who-are-aflame | es: llameante, llameantes | fr: à-embraser | de: flaming, jene-der-sind-aflame Ps 57:4; Ps 104:4

לְהַט H3858 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

flame (of sword); enchantments

A term primarily meaning flame, most famously in Genesis 3:24 where a flaming, whirling sword guards the way to the tree of life. However, in Exodus 7:11, the same Hebrew form appears in a phrase traditionally translated 'their enchantments' or 'secret arts,' used by Pharaoh's magicians. This dual usage may reflect different roots or represent semantic extension from 'flame' to 'burning practice' (incantation).

(2×) Has two distinct uses. First, literal flame, as in 'the flame of the whirling sword' (Genesis 3:24), where cherubim guard Eden with a fiery rotating blade. Second, in Exodus 7:11, appears in a phrase about Egyptian magicians' enchantments or secret arts —possibly from a different root or metaphorically extended from 'flame' to describe magical burning or incantation. Cross-linguistic evidence shows this split: Spanish gives 'llama' (flame) vs. 'encantamientos' (enchantments). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flame-of, with-their-enchantments | es: con-sus-encantamientos, llama-de | fr: avec-leur-enchantments, flamme-de | de: die-Flamme, mit-ihr-enchantments Gen 3:24; Exod 7:11

לְהַם H3859 Prep-k / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

swallow greedily, devour as dainties

A rare verb (appearing only in Hithpael participial form) describing greedy swallowing or devouring of food. Proverbs uses it twice in identical contexts—comparing a gossip's words to choice morsels that people 'swallow greedily,' going down into the innermost parts. The metaphor vividly captures how slander and gossip are eagerly consumed despite (or because of) their destructive nature.

(2×) To swallow greedily or devour as delicacies. Used metaphorically in Proverbs 18:8 and 26:22 (identical verses) where a talebearer's words are described as choice morsels that go down into the inner chambers of the belly. The Hithpael form suggests reflexive or intensive action—'making oneself swallow' or 'devouring eagerly.' Spanish 'bocados deliciosos' (delicious morsels) captures the ironic appeal of gossip as forbidden dainty. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING

en: are-like-delicacies, like-dainties | es: como-bocados-deliciosos | fr: comme- | de: [כמתלהמים] Prov 18:8; Prov 26:22

לָהֵן H3860 Conj (3×)

therefore, on this account (rare particle)

A rare particle meaning 'therefore' or 'on this account,' appearing in Ruth and possibly Job. In Ruth 1:13, Naomi uses it twice in her bitter rhetorical questions: would you wait for sons to grow up? Would you remain unmarried for them? Therefore (לָהֵן) her daughters-in-law should not suffer on her account. The particle may be Hebrew or borrowed from Aramaic, showing linguistic fluidity in late texts.

(3×) Ruth 1:13 (×2) has Naomi reasoning: 'Would you therefore (לָהֵן) wait...would you therefore (לָהֵן) refrain from marrying?' The particle introduces the consequence or implication of her rhetorical questions—the unreasonableness of expecting them to wait. Job 30:24 is debated; some read לָהֵן 'to them,' while others see textual difficulty. The form matches Aramaic לָהֵן (Dan 2:6, 9; 4:24), suggesting either borrowing or shared Semitic root. Translations often render 'for them/to them' or 'therefore': Spanish 'acaso a ellos,' German 'zu wenn/etwa.' PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: for-them, to-them | es: a-ellos, acaso-a-ellos | fr: pour-eux, להן | de: etwa, zu-wenn Ruth 1:13; Job 30:24

לָהֵן H3861 Conj (8×)

Aramaic conjunction: except, but, however; occasionally inferential 'therefore'

An Aramaic conjunction found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, functioning as a logical hinge in royal decrees and theological argument. Its core force is restrictive – 'except' or 'unless' – as when the Chaldeans protest that 'no one can reveal the king's matter except the gods' (Dan 2:11). It also serves as an adversative 'but' (Dan 2:30; Ezra 5:12), and in Daniel 4:27 stretches toward an inferential 'therefore.' Arabic lākin ('but') and Hebrew ki ʾim ('except') are its closest functional parallels, and the German rendering 'deshalb' for the inferential use confirms the logical-conclusion nuance.

1. except, unless (restrictive particle) (5×) Restrictive particle meaning 'except' or 'unless,' introducing an exception to a preceding negative statement. Five of eight occurrences belong here, all in Daniel's court narratives: 'no one can show it except the gods' (Dan 2:11), 'they could find no ground for complaint except concerning his God' (Dan 6:5). Arabic illa and Spanish 'excepto' / 'a-menos-que' mirror this restrictive function precisely. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: except, unless | es: a-menos-que, excepto | fr: à-elles | de: deshalb Dan 2:11; Dan 3:28; Dan 6:5; Dan 6:7; Dan 6:12

2. but, however (adversative particle) (2×) Adversative particle meaning 'but' or 'however,' introducing a contrast without a preceding negative. In Dan 2:30 it pivots from denial ('not because of any wisdom in me') to purpose ('but so that the interpretation might be made known'). Ezra 5:12 uses it similarly: 'but because our fathers provoked God.' Spanish 'sino' and 'Pero' capture the corrective and contrastive nuances respectively. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: but | es: Pero, sino | fr: [להן], à-elles | de: deshalb, zu-wenn Ezra 5:12; Dan 2:30

3. therefore (inferential particle) (1×) Inferential particle meaning 'therefore' or 'for this reason,' drawing a logical conclusion. Attested only in Dan 4:27 where Daniel urges Nebuchadnezzar: 'Therefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable to you.' Spanish 'por-tanto' and German 'deshalb' confirm the causal-inferential reading, a natural pragmatic extension from adversative contrast to logical consequence. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: therefore | es: por-tanto | fr: à-elles | de: deshalb Dan 4:27

לַהֲקָה H3862 N-fsc (1×)

band, company, assembly (possibly transposed form of קְהִלָּה)

This word denotes a band or company of people, appearing only in 1 Samuel 19:20 to describe "the company of the prophets." Ancient versions (Septuagint, Peshitta, Targum, Aquila, Symm) all render it as a band or assembly. Scholars suggest it may be a transposed form of קְהִלָּה (assembly), explaining its rarity. The context describes the prophetic community gathered under Samuel's leadership at Ramah, where Saul's messengers encountered them prophesying.

(1×) The sole occurrence in 1 Samuel 19:20 describes "the company of the prophets" assembled and prophesying with Samuel presiding. Spanish "grupo-de" (group of) and French/German "company-of" all emphasize the collective nature. This organized prophetic community became so spirit-filled that Saul's messengers and eventually Saul himself were overcome and began prophesying. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: company-of | es: grupo-de | fr: company-de | de: company-von 1Sam 19:20

לוּ H3863 Prep (23×)

If only, would that; also conditional 'if' for counterfactual situations; rarely negative or dubitative.

Lu is a small but emotionally charged particle that carries the weight of unfulfilled longing and unrealized possibility. Its primary force is optative — 'if only,' 'would that' — giving voice to some of Scripture's most poignant wishes: Abraham's plea 'O that Ishmael might live before you!' (Gen 17:18) and Israel's bitter cry in the wilderness, 'Would that we had died in Egypt!' (Num 14:2). In its conditional use, lu introduces counterfactual scenarios that never materialized: 'if they had been wise, they would understand' (Deut 32:29). The Arabic cognate law functions identically as both optative and counterfactual conditional, confirming this dual function is ancient Semitic inheritance rather than a Hebrew innovation. French and German translations reveal the tension translators feel: rendering the same particle as ojalá/si-seulement ('if only') in wishes but si/wenn ('if') in hypotheticals.

1. if only, would that (14×) Optative particle expressing unfulfilled wish or longing — 14 occurrences, the dominant sense. Covers Abraham's prayer for Ishmael (Gen 17:18), the Israelites' death-wish in the wilderness (Num 14:2, twice), and Moses' lament 'Oh that they were wise!' (Deut 32:29 in some readings). The emotional register ranges from desperate yearning to resigned regret. Spanish ojalá (from Arabic inshallah) and French si-seulement both deploy dedicated wish-particles, while the Hebrew particle itself carries no verb — the desire lives entirely in the syntax of what follows. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: If-only, Oh-that, and-if-only | es: Oh-que, Ojalá-, Si | fr: [לוא], en-effet, et-si-seulement | de: [לוא], doch, ihm Gen 17:18; Gen 23:13; Gen 30:34; Num 14:2

2. if (conditional) (7×) Conditional particle introducing counterfactual or hypothetical protasis — 7 occurrences. States what would have been the case under conditions that did not obtain: 'If the LORD had desired to kill us, he would not have accepted our offering' (Judg 13:23); 'If my brothers were still alive, I would not kill you' (Judg 8:19). The protasis takes a perfect verb, and the apodosis typically carries a negative or imperfect. Arabic law with past tense maps exactly onto this pattern, as does German wenn with subjunctive, confirming the counterfactual frame. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: (and-even-if), (if), if | es: (si), (y-si), Si | fr: (and-même-if), (if), si | de: [לו], ihm, wenn Judg 8:19; Judg 13:23; 2Sam 18:12; 2Sam 19:6; Job 16:4

3. not (negative) (1×) Negative sense 'not' — a single disputed occurrence at Job 9:33 where lu may function as a negator: 'there is not an arbiter between us.' Some grammarians treat this as a variant of lo ('not') rather than a separate sense of lu, and the French rendering si-seulement suggests translators themselves were uncertain. The Joban context, rich in rare and archaic particles, may preserve an older Semitic negative usage that Arabic law occasionally exhibits. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not | es: No | fr: si-seulement | de: nicht Job 9:33

4. perhaps, possibly (1×) Dubitative particle expressing possibility — a single occurrence at Gen 50:15 where Joseph's brothers fear 'perhaps Joseph will hate us.' The shift from wish to apprehension is subtle: the same particle that elsewhere expresses longing here introduces anxious possibility. Spanish quizá and German vielleicht both select dedicated 'perhaps' vocabulary, while French peut-être confirms the probabilistic rather than optative reading. This marginal sense may represent lu at the far edge of its irrealis semantic range. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: perhaps | es: quizá | fr: peut-être | de: vielleicht Gen 50:15

לוּב H3864 Conj-w (4×)

Libyans, people of North Africa west of Egypt, allied with Egypt and Cush

The Lubim or Libyans were a people inhabiting North Africa west of Egypt, frequently mentioned alongside Put (Somalia/Punt) and Cush (Ethiopia/Nubia) as Egypt's military allies. Chronicles records Libyan forces among the vast armies that Egypt's pharaohs brought against Judah. Nahum lists Libya among the allies who failed to save Thebes from conquest. They are probably the same as the Lehabim in Genesis' Table of Nations, showing a people group descended from Mizraim (Egypt).

(4×) Libyans appear as military allies in prophetic and historical texts. Shishak invaded Judah with an army including 'Lubim' alongside Sukkiim and Cushites (2Chr 12:3). Asa faced a vast Ethiopian army with 'Lubim' among their forces (2Chr 16:8). Daniel prophesies that the king of the north will control 'the Lubim' along with Egypt and Cushites (Dan 11:43). Nahum reminds Nineveh that even Thebes fell despite her allies including 'Lub' and Put (Nah 3:9). The Septuagint renders it Libues or Libuōn, while Spanish libios, French Libyens, and German variations preserve the ethnic designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Libyans, and-Lubim, and-Luvim | es: libios, y-Libia, y-libios | fr: [והלובים], [לובים], et-Libyens | de: [והלובים], [ולבים], [ולובים] 2Chr 12:3; 2Chr 16:8; Dan 11:43; Nah 3:9

לוּד H3865 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Lud; a Semitic people descended from Shem, and separately a North African people (Ludim) descended from Mizraim.

A proper name designating two distinct peoples in the Table of Nations. First, Lud appears as a son of Shem alongside Arpachshad and Aram (Gen 10:22 = 1 Chr 1:17), traditionally identified with Lydia in western Anatolia (Assyrian Luddu). Second, a separate African Lud emerges as warriors alongside Cush and Put in prophetic oracles (Ezek 27:10; 30:5; Isa 66:19), renowned as skilled archers and mercenaries. The dual identity creates a persistent puzzle in biblical geography. Spanish 'y Lud' and French 'et Lud' both preserve the conjunctive formula that links this people to its genealogical or military context.

(5×) The ethnic and geographic name Lud, appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts. As a son of Shem (Gen 10:22 = 1 Chr 1:17), Lud is traditionally identified with Lydia in western Asia Minor, corresponding to Assyrian Luddu. In the prophetic oracles (Ezek 27:10; 30:5; Isa 66:19), Lud appears among African warrior peoples alongside Cush and Put, likely a distinct group from the Semitic Lud. The conjunctive formula 'and Lud' (Spanish 'y Lud,' French 'et Lud') places them consistently as one member of a larger ethnic catalogue, whether Semitic or Hamitic. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Lud | es: y-Lud | fr: [ולוד], et-Lud | de: [ולוד], und-Lud Gen 10:22; 1Chr 1:17; Isa 66:19; Ezek 27:10; Ezek 30:5

לוּד H3866 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (4×)

Lud/Ludim: (1) Lydia in Asia Minor, son of Shem; (2) an African people, son of Mizraim, possibly conflated

Lud appears as both a son of Shem (representing Lydia in Asia Minor) and Ludim as a son of Mizraim/Egypt (representing an African people), creating scholarly debate about whether these are the same people or distinct groups. The Asian Lud appears in genealogies alongside Aram and Arphaxad, clearly Lydians of Anatolia. But prophetic texts place Lud/Ludim in Africa alongside Put and Cush, suggesting a North African people. Some scholars propose textual confusion, suggesting Jeremiah's 'Ludim' should read 'Lubim' (Libyans) as the Septuagint does.

(4×) Lud son of Shem appears in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:22 = 1Chr 1:17), representing Lydia. But Ludim son of Mizraim appears as an African descendant (Gen 10:13 = 1Chr 1:11, with Ketiv-Qere variants). Isaiah places Lud in Africa with Tarshish and Put (Isa 66:19), Ezekiel lists Persia, Lud, and Put as Tyre's mercenaries (Ezek 27:10) and among Egypt's allies (Ezek 30:5). Jeremiah's 'Ludim' alongside Cush and Put (Jer 46:9) may be a scribal error for Lubim, as Septuagint Ludoi/Ludiei suggests. Spanish Ludím, French Ludim, German Ludim preserve the name, while some scholars note the African-Asian confusion in brackets. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Ludim), Ludim, [K: Ludiyim] | es: (Ludim), Ludím, [Ludim] | fr: Ludim, [לודיים], [לודיים] | de: [ולודים], [לודיים], [לודים] Gen 10:13; 1Chr 1:11; Jer 46:9

לָוָה H3867a Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (12×)

To join oneself to, attach to (Nifal); to accompany, escort (Qal)

The verb לָוָה expresses the act of binding oneself to another person or group. In its Nifal (reflexive-passive) form, which accounts for nearly all occurrences, it describes joining or attaching oneself — Levi's name is explained by Leah's hope that her husband would now 'be joined to' her (Gen 29:34), and foreigners 'join themselves to' the LORD (Isa 56:3, 6). The name Levi itself likely derives from this root. A single Qal occurrence in Ecclesiastes 8:15 uses the verb transitively to mean 'accompany' — joy will accompany a person through life's labors.

1. join oneself to, attach to (11×) The Nifal reflexive sense: to join oneself to, to attach to, to become a companion of. This covers all eleven Nifal occurrences spanning the Pentateuch through the Writings. Genesis 29:34 provides the foundational etymology — Leah names her son Levi (לֵוִי) saying 'now my husband will be joined (yillaveh) to me.' Numbers 18:2, 4 describe the Levites being joined to Aaron for service, playing on the same etymological link. Isaiah 14:1 and 56:3, 6 extend the concept to foreigners joining themselves to Israel and to the LORD. Spanish 'se unirán' ('they will join themselves') and English 'shall join' consistently confirm the reflexive attachment meaning. Esther 9:27 uses it of gentiles who allied themselves with the Jews in observing Purim. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: and-join-yourselves, and-shall-join, and-they-shall-join | es: Y-se-unirán, el-que-se-une, los-que-se-unen | fr: –joindre, [הנלוה], [הנלוים] | de: [הנלוה], [הנלוים], [ונלוה] Gen 29:34; Num 18:2; Num 18:4; Esth 9:27; Ps 83:8

2. accompany, escort (1×) The Qal active transitive sense: to accompany or escort, appearing only in Ecclesiastes 8:15 with a pronominal suffix (yilvennū, 'will accompany him'). The Preacher commends joy because it will accompany a person through their toil under the sun. This differs from the Nifal in voice (active vs. reflexive) and syntax (transitive with a direct object vs. joining 'to' with a preposition). Spanish 'lo acompañará' and English 'will accompany him' both capture the companionship-in-motion nuance absent from the more static Nifal attachment. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: will-accompany-him | es: lo-acompañará | fr: ילונו | de: [ילונו] Eccl 8:15

לָוָה H3867b V-Hifil-Prtcpl-msc (14×)

To lend or borrow; in the Hifil, to extend a loan to someone; in the Qal, to take on a loan from another.

A verb at the heart of Israel's economic ethics, covering both sides of the lending transaction depending on its stem. In the Hifil ('to lend'), it describes the gracious act of providing resources to the needy — as in Psalm 37:26, where the righteous person is always lending generously. In the Qal ('to borrow'), it captures the vulnerability of the debtor, memorably expressed in Proverbs 22:7: 'the borrower is servant to the lender.' Spanish translations helpfully distinguish the two poles: 'prestar' for lending versus 'tomar prestado' for borrowing, mirroring the Hebrew stem distinction perfectly.

1. to lend (9×) The Hifil causative sense: to lend, to extend a loan to another person. Exodus 22:25 sets the ethical baseline — lending money to the poor without interest. Psalm 37:26 portrays the righteous as one who is continually lending (malveh). French 'prêter' and Spanish 'prestarás' both capture this active, generous provision of resources. The distinction between lending and borrowing maps cleanly onto the Hifil/Qal stem alternation. LENDING LOANS

en: and-lending, and-you-lend, as-the-lender | es: El-que-presta-a, como-el-que-presta, le-prestarás | fr: [כמלוה], et-de-s'attacher, et-tu-prêter | de: [כמלוה], [מלוה], du-leihen Exod 22:25; Deut 28:12; Deut 28:44; Ps 37:26

2. to borrow (5×) The Qal base sense: to borrow, to take on a loan from another. Proverbs 22:7 warns that the borrower (loveh) becomes servant to the lender, while Isaiah 24:2 uses the pair 'as the lender, so the borrower' to describe social leveling in judgment. Spanish 'toma prestado' and French 'emprunter' consistently render this passive-recipient side of the transaction. Nehemiah 5:4 records the people borrowing money to pay the king's tax — a concrete economic hardship. LENDING LOANS

en: borrow, borrower, borrows | es: Toma-prestado, como-el-que-toma-prestado, el-que-toma-prestado | fr: [כלוה], [לוינו], emprunter | de: [כלוה], [לוה], [לוינו] Deut 28:12; Neh 5:4; Ps 37:21; Prov 22:7; Isa 24:2

לוּז H3868 Conj-w / V-Nifal-Prtcpl-msc (6×)

To turn aside, depart; figuratively, to be devious, crooked, or perverse in one's ways.

A poetic verb found almost exclusively in Wisdom Literature, carrying two related meanings: literally 'to turn aside or depart' and figuratively 'to be devious or crooked.' The Niphal participle naloz functions almost as an adjective meaning 'perverse' or 'devious' – applied to people whose paths are crooked (Prov 2:15), to one who despises the LORD (Prov 3:32; 14:2), and to a crooked course of action (Isa 30:12). The Qal and Hiphil forms in Proverbs 3:21 and 4:21 preserve the literal sense: 'let them not depart from your eyes.' Spanish perverso and French se detourner capture the moral and spatial dimensions respectively.

turn aside, be devious (6×) To turn aside or be devious, with the literal sense of departure shading into moral crookedness. In Proverbs 3:21 and 4:21 (Qal/Hiphil), the verb means simply 'to depart' – wisdom and understanding should not slip away from one's sight. But the Niphal participle naloz consistently carries moral weight: the perverse whose paths are crooked (Prov 2:15), the devious person who is an abomination to the LORD (Prov 3:32), the one who despises God by walking crookedly (Prov 14:2), and the crooked course of action rejected in Isaiah 30:12. Spanish perverso and desviados capture the moral dimension, while French se detourner preserves the spatial metaphor of turning away from the straight path. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-devious, and-perverseness, but-he-who-is-devious | es: es-el-perverso, se-aparten, y-desviados | fr: [ונלוז], et-se-détourner, se-détourner | de: [ונלוז], [ונלוזים], [ילוז] Prov 2:15; Prov 3:21; Prov 3:32; Prov 4:21; Prov 14:2

לוּז H3869 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

almond tree, almond wood (valued for Jacob's breeding strategy)

This term refers to the almond tree or its wood, appearing in Genesis 30:37 where Jacob uses almond rods in his breeding strategy. The word is common in later Hebrew and Aramaic, and was borrowed into Arabic. The almond was valued both for its early blossoming (hence its use symbolically elsewhere) and its white wood. Jacob strips the bark from fresh almond branches along with poplar and plane trees, creating white streaks to influence the coloring of Laban's flocks.

(1×) Genesis 30:37 lists the almond among three types of fresh wood Jacob used for his breeding experiment. Spanish "de-almendro" (of almond tree), French "amande" (almond), and German "Mandelbaum" (almond tree) all recognize the species. The white inner wood revealed by stripping the bark may have contributed to Jacob's color-breeding scheme. OAK TEREBINTH TREE

en: and-almond | es: y-de-almendro | fr: et-amande | de: und-Mandelbaum Gen 30:37

לוּז H3870 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (8×)

Luz; the ancient Canaanite city renamed Bethel after Jacob's vision, and a second city built by a Hittite exile.

A place name identifying the Canaanite city where Jacob slept and dreamed of the heavenly ladder, afterward renaming it Bethel, 'house of God' (Gen 28:19; 35:6; 48:3). The name Luz appears in boundary descriptions of Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh 16:2; 18:13) and in the narrative of a man from the original Luz who built a new city of the same name in Hittite territory (Judg 1:26). The Septuagint renders it Louza. Spanish transliterates as Luz, while French and German preserve the same form, reflecting the name's transparency across languages.

Luz (Canaanite city, later Bethel) (8×) The Canaanite toponym for the city later called Bethel, and a second settlement founded by a refugee from the original. Jacob arrived at Luz, encountered God in a dream, and renamed it Bethel (Gen 28:19; confirmed in 35:6 and 48:3). In tribal boundary lists, Luz/Bethel marks the border between Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh 16:2; 18:13). Judges 1:23–26 records how a man from Luz, spared during the Israelite conquest, went into Hittite territory and built a new city called Luz. Spanish a-Luz and en-Luz, French Luz, and German Lus all preserve the ancient name with minimal adaptation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Luz, Luz-ward, Luzah | es: Luz, a-Luz, en-Luz | fr: Luz, Luz-garde, Luzah | de: Lus, Luz, Luzah Gen 28:19; Gen 35:6; Gen 48:3; Josh 16:2; Josh 18:13

לוּחַ H3871 N-mp (43×)

Tablet (esp. the stone tablets of the covenant) or board/plank used in construction and shipbuilding.

Most famously, this word denotes the stone tablets on which God inscribed the Ten Commandments – 'tablets of the covenant' (Deut 9:9, 11) or 'tablets of stone' (Exod 24:12; 31:18). The word appears some thirty-plus times in Exodus and Deuteronomy for these inscribed slabs. Spanish 'tablas,' French 'tables,' and German 'Tafeln' all preserve the flat writing-surface sense. Beyond the covenant tablets, the same word extends to any flat board or plank: the hollow boards of the altar (Exod 27:8; 38:7), the decorative panels of Solomon's stands (1 Kgs 7:36), cedar planks used as a metaphor for the beloved (Song 8:9), and the ship-planks of Tyre's vessels (Ezek 27:5). Proverbs and Jeremiah also use 'tablet' figuratively for the human heart as a writing surface (Prov 3:3; 7:3; Jer 17:1).

1. tablet for writing (38×) A flat tablet for writing, especially the stone tablets bearing the Decalogue. Dominates usage in Exodus (24:12; 31:18; 32:15-16, 19; 34:1-4, 28-29) and Deuteronomy (4:13; 5:22; 9:9-17; 10:1-5). Also used metaphorically of the heart as a writing surface (Prov 3:3; 7:3; Jer 17:1) and of a prophet's tablet for public display (Isa 30:8; Hab 2:2). Spanish 'tablas de,' French 'tables de,' and German 'Tafeln von' consistently convey inscribed slabs. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tablets, tablets-of | es: las-tablas-de, tablas, tablas-de | fr: tables, tables-de, tablets | de: Tafeln-von, tablets, tablets-von Exod 24:12; Exod 31:18; Exod 32:15

2. board or plank (5×) A flat board, plank, or plate used in construction or shipbuilding. The altar is made with hollow boards (Exod 27:8; 38:7), Solomon's stands have engraved panels (1 Kgs 7:36), the beloved is likened to a cedar plank (Song 8:9), and Tyre's ships are built of double-planked boards (Ezek 27:5). Spanish 'tablones/placas,' French 'planches,' and English 'planks/boards' differentiate this structural sense from the inscriptional one. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: board-of, boards, planks | es: las-placas-de, los-tablones, tabla-de | fr: le-plates-de, planches, table | de: Bretter, [לוח], [לחתים] Exod 27:8; Exod 38:7; 1Kgs 7:36; Song 8:9; Ezek 27:5

לוּחִית H3872 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

Luhith, a town in Moab known for its ascent

A Moabite settlement mentioned in oracles against Moab, known for 'the ascent of Luhith'—probably a steep climb or pass. Both Isaiah and Jeremiah describe weeping on this ascent as fugitives flee destruction, suggesting it was a key escape route from Moabite territory, perhaps leading toward Edom. The repetition in both prophets may indicate a traditional oracle formula or well-known geographical feature associated with Moab's vulnerability.

(3×) Isaiah 15:5 and Jeremiah 48:5 share nearly identical phrasing: 'on the ascent of Luhith' (מַעֲלֵה הַלּוּחִית/הַלֻּחִית) weeping will ascend. The image of refugees climbing this slope with weeping captures Moab's desperate flight. Jeremiah 48:5 has a ketiv-qere variation (הַלֻּחִית/הַלּוּחִית), showing minor scribal differences. The site lay south of the Arnon River; exact location unknown, though some identify it with modern Khirbet el-Medeineh. Translations transliterate: Spanish Lujit/Luhit, preserving the proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Luchit), [ketiv:Luchit], the-Luhith | es: Luhit, Lujit, [kethiv] | fr: [(הלוחית)], [[הלחות]], [הלוחית] | de: [(הלוחית)], [[הלחות]], [הלוחית] Isa 15:5; Jer 48:5

לוּחֵשׁ H3873 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Hallohesh, a leader in Nehemiah's Jerusalem

The name of a Jewish leader during Nehemiah's governorship, appearing with the definite article as 'the Hallohesh.' He served as a district ruler who helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls (Nehemiah 3:12) and later sealed the covenant (10:24). The name likely means 'the whisperer' or 'the charmer,' possibly reflecting an ancestral occupation or characteristic.

(2×) A proper name (always with definite article) of a civic and religious leader in post-exilic Jerusalem. In Nehemiah 3:12, Hallohesh is identified as ruler of half the district of Jerusalem, actively participating in wall reconstruction. In 10:24, he appears among those sealing the covenant. The consistent use of the article suggests it may be a title or nickname that became a proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hallohesh | es: Halohes, Halohés | fr: [הלוחש] | de: [הלוחש] Neh 3:12; Neh 10:24

לוּט H3874 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

to wrap, envelop, cover closely

A verb meaning to wrap tightly or envelop, used both literally and figuratively. Goliath's sword is wrapped in a cloth for safekeeping. Elijah wraps his face in his mantle when encountering God's presence—a gesture of reverence or awe. Isaiah employs it metaphorically for the veil of mourning or spiritual blindness that covers the nations. The root conveys close, concealing covering.

(3×) First Samuel 21:10 [Eng. 21:9] describes Goliath's sword 'wrapped in a cloth' (לוּטָה בַשִּׂמְלָה), stored behind the ephod. First Kings 19:13 recounts Elijah wrapping his face in his cloak (וַיָּלֶט פָּנָיו בְּאַדַּרְתּוֹ) when he hears God's still, small voice. Isaiah 25:7 speaks of 'the surface of the covering that covers over all peoples' (הַלּוֹט הַלּוֹט עַל־כָּל־הָעַמִּים), a double participle emphasizing the enveloping action. Translations: Spanish 'envuelta/cubrió,' French 'enveloppa,' capturing the wrapping motion. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-wrapped, that-covers, wrapped | es: el-velo, envuelta, y-cubrió | fr: [הלוט], enveloppa, et-enveloppa | de: [הלוט], und-wrapped, wrapped 1Sam 21:10; 1Kgs 19:13; Isa 25:7

לוֹט H3875 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

covering, veil, envelope (that which conceals or shrouds)

This noun denotes a covering or veil, appearing in Isaiah 25:7 in a vision of God removing the covering that is cast over all peoples. The context speaks of God destroying "the veil that veils all peoples," likely referring to spiritual blindness or the shadow of death. Spanish "el velo" (the veil) directly captures this sense of concealment. The passage promises eschatological unveiling when God will remove what obscures understanding.

(1×) Isaiah 25:7 speaks prophetically of God destroying "the covering" that shrouds all nations. Spanish renders this as "el velo" (the veil), emphasizing the concealing function. This appears in a context promising the removal of death and tears, suggesting the covering represents mortality, ignorance, or separation from God that will ultimately be removed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-the-covering | es: el-velo | fr: [הלוט] | de: [הלוט] Isa 25:7

לוֹט H3876 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (33×)

Lot — Abraham's nephew who chose Sodom's plain, ancestor of Moab and Ammon

Lot is the proper name of Abraham's nephew, son of Haran, who accompanied his uncle from Ur to Canaan. His 33 occurrences concentrate in Genesis 11-19, tracing an arc from family solidarity to catastrophic separation. When the herdsmen of Abraham and Lot quarreled, Lot chose the well-watered Jordan plain 'like the garden of YHWH' — a fateful decision that placed him in Sodom (Gen 13:10-12). He was captured in the battle of the four kings and rescued by Abraham (Gen 14:12-16), then dramatically delivered from Sodom's destruction while his wife looked back and became a pillar of salt (Gen 19:1-26). His daughters' desperate act in the cave produced Moab and Ben-Ammi, ancestors of Israel's eastern neighbors (Gen 19:30-38). Deuteronomy references 'the sons of Lot' as Moabites and Ammonites whose territory Israel must not seize (Deut 2:9, 19). Psalm 83:9 names Lot's descendants among hostile nations.

Lot (33×) The personal name of Abraham's nephew, whose narrative arc in Genesis 11-19 moves from accompaniment to separation, captivity, rescue, and escape from Sodom's destruction. His choice of the Jordan plain (Gen 13:10-12), rescue by Abraham (Gen 14:12-16), and deliverance from Sodom (Gen 19:1-26) define him. Deuteronomy 2:9, 19 and Psalm 83:9 reference his descendants, the Moabites and Ammonites. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lot | es: Lot | fr: Lot | de: Lot, Lots Gen 11:27; Gen 11:31; Gen 12:4; Gen 12:5; Gen 13:1

לוֹטָן H3877 N-proper-ms (7×)

Lotan – a Horite clan chief, son of Seir and ancestor of Edomite clans

Lotan is the proper name of a Horite chieftain listed among the sons of Seir in the genealogies of Edom (Gen 36:20, 22, 29; 1 Chr 1:38-39). He is identified as the father of Hori and Hemam (or Homam in Chronicles), and he is called an alluf ('chief') of the Horites – the pre-Edomite inhabitants of the hill country of Seir. His sister Timna became a concubine of Esau's son Eliphaz and mother of Amalek (Gen 36:22, 12). The Septuagint renders the name as Lotan (Lambda-omega-tau-alpha-nu), and all target languages – Spanish, French, German, English – preserve the name unchanged, confirming its status as a straightforward proper noun with no translatable semantic content.

(7×) The proper name of a Horite clan leader, firstborn among the sons of Seir, enumerated in the genealogy of Edom's pre-Israelite inhabitants (Gen 36:20, 22, 29; 1 Chr 1:38-39). Lotan's sons were Hori and Hemam, and his sister Timna became ancestress of the Amalekites through Eliphaz. The Septuagint renders the name consistently as Lotan, and every target language – Spanish Lotan, French Lotan/Lothan, German Lotan – preserves it without alteration, confirming a single proper-noun sense with no polysemy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lotan | es: Lotan | fr: Lotan, Lothan | de: Lotan, Lotans, [לוטן] Gen 36:20; Gen 36:22; Gen 36:29; 1Chr 1:38

לֵוִי H3878 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (64×)

Levi – third son of Jacob and Leah; the priestly tribe descended from him

Levi is the proper name of the third son born to Jacob and Leah, explained by the folk etymology 'now my husband will be joined to me' (Gen 29:34, playing on the root lwh, 'to join'). The name serves double duty: it refers to the patriarch himself – notably in the violent episode at Shechem (Gen 34:25-30) – and to the entire tribe that bore his name, which was set apart for priestly service. Numbers 18:2-4 exploits the name's etymology in a wordplay associating the Levites with 'attendants upon' Aaron. With 64 occurrences, every target language preserves the name unchanged: Spanish Levi, French Levi, German Levi.

Levi (patriarch and tribe) (64×) The proper name of Jacob's third son by Leah (Gen 29:34) and the tribe descended from him, set apart for cultic service. The etymology in Genesis connects the name to the root lwh ('to join'), expressing Leah's hope that her husband would finally attach himself to her. Numbers 18:2-4 makes a priestly wordplay on this same root. Spanish Levi, French Levi, and German Levi all preserve the name identically, confirming a single proper-noun sense across all 64 occurrences with no polysemy. LEVI TRIBE NAME

en: Levi | es: Levi, Leví | fr: Lévi | de: Levi, Levis Gen 29:34; Gen 34:25; Gen 34:30; Gen 35:23; Gen 46:11

לֵוָי H3879 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Levites (Aramaic plural), descendants of Levi serving in temple worship

This Aramaic plural form designates the Levites, the tribe descended from Levi who were set apart for service in Israel's sanctuary. The term appears in Ezra's Aramaic documents describing the temple restoration and worship under Persian authorization. These passages consistently pair 'the priests and the Levites,' maintaining the distinction between the two groups of sacred ministers—the Aaronic priests who offered sacrifices, and the broader Levitical clan who assisted in temple service, music, and teaching.

(4×) The Aramaic term appears four times in Ezra's official Persian correspondence. The Jews, priests, and Levites celebrated Passover together after completing the temple (Ezra 6:16). The priests and Levites were organized by divisions for God's service in Jerusalem (Ezra 6:18). King Artaxerxes' decree allowed any priests and Levites who wished to return to Jerusalem to do so (Ezra 7:13). The royal decree exempted priests and Levites from taxation (Ezra 7:24). The Ketiv-Qere variants show textual uncertainty about the precise Aramaic plural form. Spanish y-levitas, French et-Lévites, and German preserve the standard transliteration with conjunction markers. LEVI TRIBE NAME

en: and-Levites, and-the-Levites | es: y-a-los-levitas, y-levitas, y-los-levitas | fr: et-Lévites | de: [ולויא] Ezra 6:16; Ezra 6:18; Ezra 7:13; Ezra 7:24

לְוָיָה H3880 N-fsc (2×)

wreath of grace, garland

A poetic term for a wreath or garland, used figuratively in Proverbs to describe the honor and beauty that wisdom and parental instruction bestow. Paired with 'crown' or 'chains,' the imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern practices of adorning honored persons with wreaths. The phrase 'wreath of grace' appears twice, emphasizing how wisdom adorns the wise person with visible dignity and favor.

(2×) A wreath or garland, specifically in the construct phrase 'wreath of grace.' Found in Proverbs 1:9 (parental instruction as a graceful wreath for the head) and 4:9 (wisdom gives a beautiful crown). The term combines decorative imagery with moral instruction—following wisdom visibly adorns one's life as a wreath adorns the head. Spanish 'guirnalda' captures the ornamental aspect of this wisdom metaphor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-wreath-of | es: guirnalda-de | fr: לויית | de: [לויית] Prov 1:9; Prov 4:9

לֵוִי H3881 Prep-b / N-proper-mp (286×)

Levite(s) — members of the tribe of Levi serving in Israel's worship, or the patriarch Levi himself

A gentilic adjective from the name Levi, used almost exclusively to designate the priestly-service tribe set apart for tabernacle and temple duties. Appearing 286 times, it spans the wilderness organization under Moses (Num 3–4), the Deuteronomic concern for Levites without inheritance (Deut 12:12, 14:27), the Chronicler's elaborate temple rosters, and Ezra-Nehemiah's postexilic reforms. In three rare instances (Num 26:58, 1 Chr 23:27, 27:17), the word refers not to the class but to the patriarch Levi himself. Every major translation tradition renders the class as 'Levites' (Spanish 'levitas,' French 'Lévites,' German 'Leviten'), preserving the tribal-functional identity.

1. Levites (priestly class) (283×) Members of the tribe of Levi in their cultic role — those set apart for service at the tabernacle and temple, distinct from (yet overlapping with) the Aaronic priesthood. With 283 occurrences this is the standard usage, appearing from Exodus 6:25 through Nehemiah's postexilic lists. Used both as singular collective (hallēwî, 'the Levite,' Deut 18:6) and plural (hallĕwiyyîm, 'the Levites,' Num 3:20). Cross-lingual renderings are remarkably uniform: 'los levitas,' 'les Lévites,' 'die Leviten' — all treating the term as a recognized institutional class designation. PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD

en: the-Levites | es: los-levitas, los-levítas | fr: le-Lévites | de: der-Leviten Exod 6:25; Exod 38:21; Lev 25:32; Lev 25:33

2. Levi (proper name) (3×) The patriarch Levi son of Jacob, or the tribe named directly after him rather than as a functional designation. Only 3 occurrences: Num 26:58 ('the families of Levi'), 1 Chr 23:27 ('the last words of David concerning the sons of Levi'), and 1 Chr 27:17 (an officer 'for Levi'). Here the multilingual evidence shifts to proper-name treatment: Spanish 'Leví,' French 'Lévi,' German 'Levi' — transliterated rather than translated as a class noun. LEVI TRIBE NAME

en: For-Levi, Levi | es: Leví, Para-Leví | fr: Lévi, zu-Lévi | de: Levi, fuer-Levi Num 26:58; 1Chr 23:27; 1Chr 27:17

לִוְיָתָן H3882 N-ms (6×)

Leviathan: a great sea creature (crocodile, whale); a mythological chaos-serpent defeated by God; an eschatological dragon.

Livyatan is one of the most evocative words in Hebrew Scripture — a creature that straddles the boundary between natural history and cosmic mythology. In Job 40:25-41:26, it appears to be a real animal, most likely the crocodile, described with awe-inspiring physical detail: armored scales, fiery breath, and invulnerability to human weapons. Psalm 104:26 places it in the sea as something God made 'to play in,' suggesting a whale or great sea creature. But in Job 3:8, Psalm 74:14, and Isaiah 27:1 the creature takes on mythological and eschatological dimensions — a multi-headed chaos dragon crushed by God at creation (Ps 74:14) or a 'twisting serpent' to be slain at the end of days (Isa 27:1). Spanish and French both simply transliterate as Leviatan/Leviathan, while German similarly borrows the name, acknowledging that no native word captures this fusion of zoology and myth.

1. Leviathan (3×) Leviathan as a specific mighty creature in theophanic and mythological contexts — the multi-headed chaos monster crushed by God (Ps 74:14, 'you crushed the heads of Leviathan'), the primordial dragon whose rousing terrifies creation (Job 3:8, 'those who curse the day, who are ready to rouse Leviathan'), and the awe-inspiring beast whom only God can subdue (Job 41:1). Spanish Leviatan, French Leviathan, and German Leviathan all transliterate, treating the name as irreducible. These passages share a tone of cosmic confrontation between divine power and chaotic monstrosity. SEA MONSTERS DRAGONS

en: Leviathan | es: Leviatán, a-Leviatán | fr: à-Léviathan, לויתן | de: Leviathan Job 3:8; Job 41:1; Ps 74:14

2. twisting (3×) Leviathan as a sea creature in creation-praise and eschatological prophecy — God's handiwork 'playing' in the ocean (Ps 104:26, where it appears alongside ships, suggesting a whale or great marine animal) and the 'twisting serpent, the fleeing serpent' of Isaiah 27:1, whom the LORD will punish with his great sword on the day of reckoning. Isaiah's double description — nachash bariach ('fleeing serpent') and nachash aqallaton ('twisting serpent') — maps onto ancient Near Eastern dragon imagery. Some translations render the Isaiah passage as 'Livyatan' to preserve the prophetic name, while others use 'serpent' or 'dragon,' reflecting the tension between natural and supernatural readings. SEA MONSTERS DRAGONS

en: Livyatan, serpent, twisting | es: Leviatán | fr: [לויתן], à-Léviathan | de: Livyatan, [לויתן] Ps 104:26; Isa 27:1

לוּל H3883 Conj-w (1×)

winding stairs, enclosed shaft with steps (architectural feature in Solomon's temple)

This term describes an architectural feature in Solomon's temple, likely winding stairs or an enclosed shaft containing steps. The phrase in 1 Kings 6:8 says "by winding stairs they would go up," describing access between the temple's stories. Mishnaic Hebrew uses this word for a winding passage or stairway. The Septuagint and Vulgate both render it as "winding stair." The exact construction remains somewhat uncertain, but all evidence points to a spiral or helical staircase.

(1×) First Kings 6:8 describes the temple's vertical circulation system: "and by winding stairs they would go up" to the middle and third stories. Spanish "escaleras de caracol" (spiral stairs) and German "winding stairs" preserve the sense of a curved or helical ascent. This architectural feature allowed access to the side chambers without disrupting the main sanctuary space. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-by-winding-stairs | es: y-con-escaleras-de-caracol | fr: et-par-winding-stairs | de: und-bei-winding-stairs 1Kgs 6:8

לוּלֵא H3884 Conj (14×)

If not, unless, were it not that; a counterfactual conjunction introducing conditions contrary to fact.

A compound particle formed from lu ('if') and the negative le' (a dissimilated form of lo'), lule/lulei introduces hypothetical scenarios that did not actually occur, followed by what would have happened otherwise. Jacob warns Laban: 'unless the God of my father had been with me, you would have sent me away empty' (Gen 31:42). Samson taunts the Philistines: 'unless you had ploughed with my heifer, you would not have found my riddle' (Judg 14:18). The psalmist's broken-off cry in Psalm 27:13 – 'had I not believed...' – leaves the terrible alternative unspoken. Arabic lawla preserves the same construction.

if not, unless, were it not (counterfactual conjunction) (14×) A counterfactual conditional conjunction meaning 'if not, unless, were it not that,' introducing hypothetical situations contrary to fact. Key passages include Jacob's warning to Laban (Gen 31:42), the delayed Egypt journey (Gen 43:10), Samson's taunt (Judg 14:18), Abigail's intervention (1 Sam 25:34), and the psalmist's aposiopesis leaving the dire consequence unspoken (Ps 27:13). NEGATION PARTICLES

en: except, had-not, if-not | es: Si-no, si-no, si-no-fuera-por | fr: [לולי], sauf, si-ne-pas | de: [לולי], ausser, es-sei-denn Gen 31:42; Gen 43:10; Deut 32:27; Judg 14:18; 1Sam 25:34

לוּן H3885a V-Qal-Imp-ms (69×)

To lodge or spend the night; of things, to remain overnight; figuratively, to dwell or abide in a place.

Fundamentally a verb of nighttime hospitality: stopping somewhere to sleep before continuing a journey. Abraham's servant lodges with Laban's family (Gen 24:23-25), the Levite is urged to stay overnight in Gibeah (Judg 19:6-9), and Jacob sleeps at Bethel on his way to Haran (Gen 28:11). Beyond persons, the verb extends to things that must not remain overnight: sacrificial fat (Exod 23:18), a worker's wages (Lev 19:13), or an executed body (Deut 21:23). Spanish distinguishes the extended sense nicely, using 'pernoctar' for literal lodging but 'morar' for the more permanent dwelling found in Psalms and Job.

1. lodge overnight (49×) To spend the night at a location as a traveler or temporary guest, the core hospitality meaning. This is the most frequent sense, appearing in narrative contexts of journeying and receiving lodging. Spanish 'pernoctar/pasar la noche,' French 'passer la nuit,' and German 'übernachten' all center on the overnight stay. Key passages include Lot's invitation to the angels (Gen 19:2) and Jacob's night at Bethel (Gen 28:11). NIGHT AND LODGING

en: and-lodged, and-spend-the-night, and-spent-the-night | es: Pasad-la-noche, Y-pernoctaron, a-pasar-la-noche | fr: [וילינו], [ללון], et-ils-lodged | de: [ללון], spend-der-Nacht, um-zu-übernachten Gen 19:2; Gen 24:23; Gen 24:25; Gen 24:54

2. remain overnight (12×) Of inanimate things or abstract qualities remaining through the night or persisting until morning. Applied to sacrificial fat that must not stay until morning (Exod 23:18; 34:25), wages that must not remain overnight with the employer (Lev 19:13), and a hanged body that must be buried before nightfall (Deut 21:23). Spanish 'permanecerá' and German 'bleiben' (remain) shift away from lodging vocabulary, highlighting the 'not be left over' nuance. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: does-remain, has-lodged, let-remain-overnight | es: pasará-la-noche, pasó-noche, permanecerá | fr: –rester-overnight, devra-remain-overnight, fera-loge | de: lass-bleiben-overnight, soll-bleiben-overnight, tut-bleiben Exod 23:18; Exod 34:25; Lev 19:13; Deut 16:4; Deut 21:23

3. dwell, abide (8×) Extended or figurative dwelling, going beyond a single night to indicate habitual residence or enduring presence. In wisdom and poetic literature, the verb describes the soul abiding in prosperity (Ps 25:13), weeping lodging for the night but joy coming in the morning (Ps 30:5), and error dwelling with a person (Job 19:4). Spanish 'morar' (to dwell) clearly distinguishes this from the temporary overnight sense. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: lodged, lodges, shall-lodge | es: mora, moraba, morará | fr: [ילין], [תלין], passer-la-nuit | de: [ילין], [תלין], lodges Job 17:2; Job 19:4; Job 41:22; Ps 25:13; Ps 30:5

לוּן H3885b V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (18×)

To murmur, grumble, or complain (especially Israel against God/Moses); also to lodge overnight (distinct root)

This root is almost exclusively the vocabulary of wilderness rebellion. Whenever Israel grumbles against Moses and Aaron in the Torah, the text reaches for lun in its Nifal or Hifil stems (Exod 15:24; Num 14:2). Spanish 'murmurar' and French 'murmurer' both preserve the low, collective rumble of communal discontent. The Hifil causative appears in Numbers 14:36, where the spies who brought the bad report are said to have caused the whole congregation to murmur. A single occurrence in Psalm 59:15 preserves what appears to be the distinct homonymous root meaning to lodge or spend the night, a reminder that Hebrew lexicography must carefully distinguish roots that share the same consonantal form.

1. murmur, grumble, complain (15×) To murmur, grumble, or complain, typically of the Israelite community voicing discontent against God or their leaders during the wilderness period. The Nifal and Hifil intransitive forms dominate. Exodus 15:24 records the first instance after the bitter waters of Marah; Exodus 16:2 and Numbers 16:11 continue the pattern. Spanish 'murmurar' and French 'murmurer' consistently render this collective grumbling. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: (and-murmured), (you-murmur), [and-they-murmured] | es: Y-murmuraron, Y-murmuró, [K] | fr: [et-ils-murmura], [et-murmura], [tu-murmurer] | de: [du-murren], [und-murmured], [und-sie-murmured] Exod 15:24; Exod 16:2; Exod 16:7

2. cause to murmur (2×) Hifil causative sense meaning to cause others to murmur or incite grumbling. Numbers 14:36 applies this specifically to the ten spies whose evil report caused the whole congregation to complain. This is a distinct grammatical and semantic development from the intransitive grumbling of sense 1, placing blame on the instigators rather than the crowd. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: and-caused-to-murmur | es: [K], e-hicieron-murmurar | fr: et-caused-à-murmurer | de: und-caused-zu-murren Num 14:36

3. lodge, spend the night (1×) To lodge or spend the night, reflecting a separate homonymous root (lun I) that shares the same consonantal spelling. In Psalm 59:15, the psalmist's enemies prowl and spend the night, a usage that belongs to the common Qal verb for overnight lodging rather than to the wilderness-murmuring vocabulary. Context and stem form are the keys to distinguishing the two roots. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: then-they-will-stay-all-night | es: y-pasan-la-noche | fr: et-murmurer | de: dann-sie-wird-stay-alle-Nacht Ps 59:15

לוּעַ H3886a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (1×)

swallow down, gulp (of drinking judgment to depletion)

This verb means to swallow or gulp down, cognate to Syriac "lap or lick up." In Obadiah 16, it appears in a judgment oracle where the nations will "drink and swallow" from the cup of God's wrath until they are consumed. The image is of continuous, greedy drinking that leads to complete destruction. Some scholars suggest alternate readings ("reel, totter"), but the swallowing metaphor fits the cup-of-judgment imagery better and aligns with the ancient versions.

(1×) Obadiah 16 warns that the nations will "drink and swallow" God's judgment "and shall be as though they had never been." Spanish "tragarán" (they will swallow), French "avaleront" (will swallow), and German "schlürfen" (gulp) all emphasize the consuming action. The continuous drinking leads to utter annihilation, as if swallowed into non-existence. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING

en: and-they-will-swallow | es: y-tragarán | fr: et-avaleront, | de: und-schlürfen Obad 1:16

לוּעַ H3886b V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

talk wildly, speak rashly (of hasty, unconsidered speech)

This verb describes talking wildly or speaking rashly, possibly related to Arabic roots for making mistakes in speech. Job 6:3 uses it of Job's own words, which he acknowledges may have been intemperate given his overwhelming suffering. The verb suggests speech that lacks careful thought or control. Translators have sometimes struggled with this rare term, as seen in the varied renderings, but the consistent theme is precipitous or rash utterance.

(1×) In Job 6:3, Job acknowledges that "my words are rash" (or "talk wildly") because his grief outweighs the sand of the seas. The Hebrew suggests speech that bursts forth without measured consideration. This rare verb captures the uncontrolled nature of speech from someone under unbearable pressure, offering a glimpse into Job's self-awareness even in his protests. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: are-rash | es: son-apresuradas | fr: לעו | de: [לעו] Job 6:3

לוּץ H3887 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (27×)

To scoff or mock contemptuously; also (Hifil) to act as interpreter, mediator, or envoy between parties

A verb whose two senses seem worlds apart yet share an etymological thread of indirect speech. In the Qal and much of the Hifil, it describes the scoffer or mocker – the 'letz' who sits in the seat of scornful ones (Ps 1:1) and delights in derision (Prov 1:22). Wisdom literature uses this figure as a foil for the wise. In a distinct Hifil usage, the same root yields 'interpreter' or 'mediator,' one who speaks obliquely on behalf of another. Joseph's interpreter stood between him and his brothers (Gen 42:23), and Job longed for a heavenly advocate (Job 33:23). The semantic bridge may be the idea of speaking sideways – whether to ridicule or to translate.

1. to scoff, mock, deride (22×) To mock, scoff at, or deride with contemptuous speech, expressing proud disdain for wisdom, correction, or authority. The 'letz' (scoffer) is a stock character in Proverbs: incapable of receiving discipline (Prov 9:7-8), an abomination to others (Prov 24:9), and contrasted with the wise. Spanish 'escarnecedor' and French 'moqueur' consistently mark this sense. Key passages: Ps 1:1, Prov 3:34. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: a-scoffer, and-if-you-scoff, and-scoffers | es: Al-escarnecedor, Escarnecedor, a-los-burladores | fr: [תתלוצצו], et-se-moquer, le-moquer | de: Spoetter, Spötter, [ולצת] Ps 1:1; Ps 119:51; Prov 1:22; Prov 3:34

2. interpreter, mediator, envoy (5×) To serve as interpreter, mediator, or envoy who conveys messages between parties (Hifil participle in diplomatic or advocacy contexts). Joseph used an interpreter ('melitz') when speaking with his brothers (Gen 42:23), and Job envisions a heavenly mediator who might advocate before God (Job 33:23). Spanish 'interprete' and 'embajadores' capture the diplomatic nuance, while German leaves the Hebrew untranslated, reflecting this rarer sense. INTERPRET TRANSLATE

en: an-interpreter, and-your-mediators, my-interpreters | es: Mis-intérpretes, con-embajadores-de, el-intérprete | fr: [במליצי], [ומליצירך], le-interprète | de: [במליצי], [ומליצירך], [מליץ] Gen 42:23; 2Chr 32:31; Job 16:20; Job 33:23; Isa 43:27

לוּשׁ H3888 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (6×)

To knead dough; working flour and water into a mass for baking bread.

A simple, concrete verb meaning to knead dough, appearing in domestic scenes of food preparation throughout the Hebrew Bible. Sarah kneads cakes for the three visitors at Mamre (Gen 18:6), the medium at Endor kneads bread for the exhausted Saul (1 Sam 28:24), and Tamar kneads dough before Amnon (2 Sam 13:8). The prophets employ it to indict false worship: women knead dough to make cakes for the Queen of Heaven (Jer 7:18), and Hosea compares corrupt Israel to a baker who ceases stirring 'from the kneading of the dough' (Hos 7:4). The cognates are remarkably stable across Semitic – Aramaic, Syriac, and Ethiopic all preserve nearly identical forms.

knead (work dough) (6×) To work flour and liquid into dough by hand for baking. Appears in hospitality narratives: Sarah kneading cakes for Abraham's angelic visitors (Gen 18:6), the medium at Endor preparing bread for Saul (1 Sam 28:24), and Tamar making cakes before Amnon (2 Sam 13:8). Hosea 7:4 uses the infinitive construct 'from the kneading of the dough' in a baker metaphor for Israel's corrupt ferment, while Jeremiah 7:18 condemns women kneading dough for pagan cakes offered to the Queen of Heaven. Spanish amasa and English 'kneaded' consistently render this straightforward culinary action. The verb's Semitic cognates (Aramaic lush, Syriac lash, Ethiopic lose) are remarkably uniform, reflecting a universal domestic activity. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: [and-she-kneaded], and-kneaded, and-she-kneaded | es: (y-amasó), [y-arrancó], amasa | fr: [and-elle-kneaded], [לשות], et-elle-kneaded | de: [and-sie-kneaded], [לשות], [מלוש] Gen 18:6; 1Sam 28:24; 2Sam 13:8; Jer 7:18

לָיִשׁ H3889

personal name—father of Paltiel, Michal's second husband (1 Samuel 25:44; 2 Samuel 3:15)

Laish appears as the father of Paltiel (or Palti), the man to whom Saul gave his daughter Michal after David fled. This sets up the later painful scene in 2 Samuel 3:15 where David demands Michal's return, and Paltiel follows weeping. The name appears with textual variants (Ketiv and Qere differ in 2 Samuel 3:15), and the Septuagint offers widely varying transliterations. The personal drama of Michal's forced remarriage and retrieval gains pathos when we see Paltiel's father's name attached to this minor character who loved a woman he had to surrender.

לְוָת H3890 Prep / 2ms (1×)

with, beside, at (Aramaic preposition indicating proximity or source)

This Aramaic preposition means "with," "beside," or "at," indicating proximity or association. In Ezra 4:12, it appears with מִן to create the phrase "from with you," meaning "from you" or "from your presence." The construction parallels similar Aramaic and Syriac usage. The Targum and Peshitta use this same preposition in other biblical passages where Hebrew has עִם. It's a spatial term indicating someone's location or the source from which something comes.

(1×) Ezra 4:12 describes the Jews who "came up from with you" (מִן־לְוָתָךְ), meaning "from you" or "from your presence." Spanish "junto a ti" (beside you, with you) captures the proximity sense. This Aramaic section of Ezra uses the preposition to indicate the Persian court as the place from which the Jewish returnees departed to Jerusalem. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: with-you | es: junto-a-ti | fr: [לותך] | de: [לותך] Ezra 4:12

לְזוּת H3891 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

perversity, crookedness (of speech; deviation from straightness)

This feminine noun denotes perversity or crookedness, appearing only in Proverbs 4:24 in the phrase "perversity of lips." It describes twisted or devious speech that deviates from straightforwardness. The root suggests turning aside or deviating from a straight path, applied metaphorically to moral character and especially to speech. The wisdom literature frequently contrasts straight, honest speech with crooked, deceptive words. Spanish "desvío" (deviation) captures this sense of departure from the right path.

(1×) Proverbs 4:24 commands: "Put away from you perversity of lips and devious speech." Spanish "desvío de" (deviation of) emphasizes the turning-aside nature of corrupt speech. This construct phrase appears in Wisdom teaching about guarding one's speech, warning against words that twist truth or lead others astray from righteousness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-perversity-of | es: y-desvío-de | fr: et-ולזות | de: [ולזות] Prov 4:24

לֵחַ H3892 Adj-mp (6×)

Moist, fresh, green; describing what retains natural moisture and has not dried out or withered.

An adjective describing the state of being moist, fresh, or green – the natural condition of living plants before they dry out. Jacob peels fresh poplar rods in the breeding stratagem of Genesis 30:37; the Nazirite must avoid even fresh grapes (Num 6:3); and Samson's captors bind him with new bowstrings that have not been dried (Judg 16:7-8). Ezekiel employs the contrast between green and dry wood as a parable of judgment: 'I will kindle a fire that shall devour every green tree and every dry tree' (Ezek 21:3; cf. 17:24). Spanish fresco/verde and German frisch capture this quality of living, undried freshness.

moist, fresh, green (not dried out) (6×) Describing something that retains its natural moisture and has not dried out, applied to vegetation, fruit, and materials. Fresh poplar rods that Jacob peeled (Gen 30:37); fresh grapes forbidden to the Nazirite (Num 6:3); new, undried bowstrings used to bind Samson (Judg 16:7-8). Ezekiel's green-versus-dry-tree metaphor (Ezek 17:24; 21:3) leverages this word's contrast with yabesh ('dry') for theological meaning: God can make the green tree wither and the dry tree flourish. Spanish fresco/verde and the Arabic cognates tariyy ('fresh') and ratb ('moist') all capture this semantic range of living, undesiccated freshness. MOIST FRESH GREEN

en: fresh, green | es: frescas, verde | fr: [לח], fresh | de: [לח], fresh, frischen Gen 30:37; Num 6:3; Judg 16:7; Judg 16:8; Ezek 17:24

לֶחַ H3893 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

moisture, freshness, vigor (physical vitality that remains undiminished)

This noun denotes moisture, freshness, or vital force, appearing in Deuteronomy 34:7 to describe Moses at 120 years old: "his vigor had not fled." The word conveys the physical vitality and strength that typically diminishes with age but remarkably persisted in Moses. It suggests the fresh moisture of youth as opposed to the dryness of old age. This same root appears metaphorically in Jeremiah 11:19 (though with textual uncertainty) for a tree in its prime.

(1×) Deuteronomy 34:7 marvels that despite Moses' 120 years, "his vigor had not fled"—his natural force and vitality remained undiminished. Spanish, French, and German all render this as "vigor," recognizing the term's reference to physical strength and vitality. This remarkable preservation of youthful energy until the very day of his death underscores Moses' unique status. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: his-vigor | es: su-vigor | fr: son-vigor | de: sein-vigor Deut 34:7

לְחוּם H3894 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (2×)

intestines, bowels, flesh (uncertain)

A rare and difficult term appearing only twice, with uncertain meaning. In Zephaniah 1:17, paired with blood, it likely refers to internal organs or bowels being poured out in judgment. In Job 20:23, it appears in a phrase about God's wrath filling something—possibly the wicked person's belly, flesh, or intestines. The root and precise anatomical reference remain debated, with proposals ranging from 'intestines' to 'flesh' to 'vigor.'

(2×) Probably refers to internal organs, intestines, or bowels, though the exact meaning is contested. In Zephaniah 1:17, parallel to blood in a judgment scene, suggesting internal organs spilled out. In Job 20:23, in context of God's wrath, possibly 'while he eats' or 'his flesh/bowels.' Septuagint renders 'flesh' in both cases. The uncertainty reflects the word's rarity and the challenge of determining anatomical terms from limited contexts. WOMB AND BELLY

en: and-their-flesh, while-he-eats | es: mientras-comen., y-sus-entrañas | fr: dans-son-בלחומו-lui, et-manger | de: [בלחומו], [ולחמם] Job 20:23; Zeph 1:17

לְחִי H3895 N-fdc / 3ms (21×)

Jaw or jawbone; the cheek as a body part; also the place name Lehi.

Lehi covers both the hard bone and the soft flesh of the lower face. As 'jawbone,' it appears memorably in Samson's improvised weapon – the jawbone of a donkey with which he struck down a thousand Philistines (Judg 15:15-17). As 'cheek,' it names the part of the face that receives a slap of insult (1 Kgs 22:24; Isa 50:6) or that reveals beauty (Song 1:10). Spanish distinguishes 'quijada' (jawbone) from 'mejilla' (cheek), and French uses 'machoire' versus 'joue,' confirming the dual anatomical range. The place Ramath-Lehi ('Jawbone Height') preserves the word as a geographical landmark tied to Samson's exploit.

1. cheek (facial feature) (11×) The cheek as a facial feature – the soft, visible side of the face, appearing in contexts of beauty, insult, and emotional expression. Striking someone on the cheek (1 Kgs 22:24; 2 Chr 18:23) is a gesture of contempt, while Isaiah 50:6 portrays the Servant offering his cheeks to those who pluck his beard. Song 1:10 praises lovely cheeks adorned with ornaments. Spanish 'mejilla' and French 'joue' map this sense precisely. FLESH AND BODY

en: a-cheek, and-my-cheeks, and-the-cheeks | es: Sus-mejillas, en-la-mejilla, la-mejilla | fr: Ses-joues, [הלחי], et-le-cheeks | de: [הלחי], [ולחיי], [לחי] Deut 18:3; 1Kgs 22:24; 2Chr 18:23; Job 16:10; Ps 3:7

2. jaw, jawbone (9×) The jaw or jawbone as anatomical bone, especially in Samson's famous episode with the donkey's jawbone (Judg 15:15-17). Hosea 11:4 pictures God lifting a yoke from Israel's jaws like a farmer easing the burden on an ox, and Job 41:2 asks whether one can pierce Leviathan's jaw. Spanish 'quijada' and French 'machoire' consistently render this harder, skeletal sense. The dual form lekhayim (Deut 18:3) refers to the two jawbones given to the priest from the sacrificial animal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-jaw, in-your-jaws, jawbone-of- | es: Con-quijada-de, con-quijada-de, en-tus-mandíbulas | fr: [בלחיך], [לחיהם], avec-mâchoire-de | de: Kieferknochen-von-, [בלחיך], [לחיהם] Judg 15:15; Judg 15:16; Judg 15:17; Job 41:2

3. Lehi (place name) (1×) The proper place name Lehi (Judg 15:19), the site in Judah where Samson fought the Philistines. The name derives transparently from 'jawbone,' commemorating the weapon and the battlefield. God miraculously opened a spring 'in Lehi' to quench Samson's thirst after his victory, making the toponym also a memorial of divine provision. LEHI PLACE NAME

en: in-the-Lehi | es: en-Lehi | fr: dans-le-Lehi | de: in-der-Lehi Judg 15:19

לְחִי H3896 N-proper-fs (3×)

Lehi, site of Samson's exploits in Judah's territory

A location in the Shephelah lowlands where Samson killed a thousand Philistines with a donkey's jawbone. The place-name either derives from or gives rise to the wordplay on לְחִי (jawbone)—Samson names the site Ramath-lehi ('Height of the Jawbone') after his victory. A spring miraculously appears there, called En-hakkore ('Spring of the Caller'). The site's exact location is unknown but lay near Philistine territory in Judah's border region.

(3×) Judges 15:9 reports the Philistines encamping 'at Lehi' (בַּלֶּחִי), provoking Samson's assault. Verse 14 describes his approach 'unto Lehi' (לֶחְיָ֔ה) when the Spirit rushed upon him. Verse 19 locates the miraculous spring 'in Lehi' (בַּלֶּחִי). The name's connection to jawbone (the weapon Samson found there) creates an etiological narrative explaining both place-name and topographical feature (the spring). Translations transliterate: Spanish Lehi, French Lehi, treating this as indeclinable proper noun despite the article. LEHI PLACE NAME

en: Lehi, in-Lehi, in-the-Lehi | es: Lehi, en-Lehi | fr: Lehi, dans-Lehi, dans-le-Lehi | de: Lehi, in-Lehi, in-der-Lehi Judg 15:9; Judg 15:14; Judg 15:19

לָחַךְ H3897 V-Piel-Perf-3fs (6×)

To lick or lick up; used of animals consuming and of nations humbled to 'lick the dust.'

A verb meaning to lick or lick up, used both of literal animal consumption and as a powerful metaphor for humiliation and submission. Balak fears Israel will 'lick up' the surrounding land as an ox licks up grass (Num 22:4), and Elijah's altar sacrifice is dramatically validated when fire from heaven 'licked up' the water in the trench (1 Kgs 18:38). The expression 'lick the dust' becomes a prophetic idiom for abject submission: desert tribes shall bow before the Messianic king and his enemies shall lick the dust (Ps 72:9), kings and queens shall bow with faces to the earth (Isa 49:23), and nations shall crawl like serpents licking dust (Mic 7:17).

lick, lick up (6×) To lick or lick up, used both literally and figuratively. Literally: an ox licking up grass as a metaphor for Israel consuming Moab's territory (Num 22:4), and fire from heaven licking up the water around Elijah's altar (1 Kgs 18:38). Figuratively: the idiom 'lick the dust' (aphar) expresses total humiliation and submission before a conqueror – enemies of the Messianic king shall lick dust (Ps 72:9), nations shall bow with faces to the ground and lick dust (Isa 49:23), and peoples shall crawl from their strongholds like serpents licking earth (Mic 7:17). Spanish lamer and the Arabic cognate lahika both preserve this concrete, visceral image of abject submission. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: They-will-lick, as-licks-up, licked-up | es: Lamerán, como-lame, lamerá | fr: [ילחכו], comme-licks-en-haut, fera-lick-en-haut | de: [ילחכו], licked-hinauf, wie-licks-hinauf Num 22:4; 1Kgs 18:38; Ps 72:9; Isa 49:23

לָחַם H3898a V-Nifal-Imperf-2mp (171×)

To fight, wage war, do battle; in Nifal the standard verb for armed conflict, in rare Qal a poetic fighter or combatant.

The primary Hebrew verb for military combat. Nearly all its 171 occurrences appear in the Nifal stem, the reflexive-reciprocal form natural for mutual engagement in battle — nations fight each other, armies clash, kings wage war. Spanish distinguishes luchar (struggle) from pelear (fight), and French uses combattre, all pointing to organized armed conflict rather than personal quarrels. A tiny cluster of Qal forms survives only in the Psalms, where the poet cries out for God to 'fight my fighters' (Ps 35:1) — an archaic, intensely personal idiom.

1. Nifal: to fight, wage war (167×) The Nifal (reciprocal-reflexive) stem covering the overwhelming majority of occurrences: to fight, engage in battle, wage war against an enemy. The multilingual evidence — spa pelear/luchar, fra combattre, deu kämpfen — uniformly points to organized military conflict. Exod 17:8-10 narrates the paradigmatic scene: Amalek comes to fight Israel, and Joshua is sent out to fight them. Num 21:1, 23 shows the pattern repeated across the wilderness narratives. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: to-fight | es: para-luchar, para-pelear, pelear | fr: à-combats, à-combattre | de: zu-kaempfe, zu-kaempfen Exod 17:8; Exod 17:10; Num 21:1; Num 21:23; Num 22:11

2. Qal: to fight; (ptc.) fighter, combatant (4×) The rare Qal stem, preserved only in imperative and participial forms in the Psalms. In Ps 35:1, the psalmist pleads לְחַם אֶת־לֹחֲמָי — 'fight those fighting me' — where the Qal participle functions as a substantive meaning 'fighter, combatant.' Ps 56:1-2 similarly uses the Qal participle for an adversary pressing the attack. French renders one instance à-Ham, possibly capturing the proper-name context, while Spanish uses combatiendo. This poetic Qal preserves an older layer of the language. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: fight, fighting, my-fighters | es: combatiendo, los-que-pelean-contra-mí, pelea | fr: à-Ham, à-combattre | de: fighting, kämpfen, mein-fighters Ps 35:1; Ps 56:1; Ps 56:2

לָחַם H3898b V-Qal-Imp-mp (6×)

To eat, consume food; a rare poetic synonym of אָכַל used almost exclusively in Wisdom literature and poetry.

A rare poetic verb meaning 'to eat' or 'to consume as food,' functioning as an elevated synonym of the far more common אָכַל. Nearly all occurrences appear in Proverbs, where Wisdom invites guests to 'eat of my bread' (Prov 9:5) and the wicked 'eat the bread of wickedness' (Prov 4:17). The Psalmist refuses to 'eat of their dainties' (Ps 141:4). In Deuteronomy 32:24, the passive participle describes those 'devoured by pestilence,' a striking figurative extension. Spanish and English translations consistently render it with eating vocabulary (comer, eat), while French occasionally defaults to combattre, reflecting confusion with the homonym לחם I 'to fight.'

eat, consume food (6×) To use as food, to eat or consume – a poetic and largely Wisdom-tradition alternative to the everyday verb אָכַל. The verb takes a direct cognate accusative (לֶחֶם, Prov 4:17; 23:6), a partitive בְּ (Prov 9:5; Ps 141:4), or stands absolutely (Prov 23:1). The passive participle in Deut 32:24 ('devoured by fire-bolt') extends the sense metaphorically to destructive consumption. The Spanish glosses (comer, coma, comas) and English (eat, let-me-eat) consistently confirm the alimentary meaning, while the French confusion with combattre ('to fight') reveals how easily this rare homonym is conflated with the far more frequent לחם I 'to wage war.' EATING AND CONSUMING en: and-devoured-by, eat, let-me-eat | es: a-comer, coma, comas | fr: combattre, et-dévora-par, pain | de: [לחמו], [ללחום], [תלחם] Deut 32:24; Ps 141:4; Prov 4:17; Prov 9:5; Prov 23:1

לֶחֶם H3899 Prep-b / N-ms (299×)

Bread, the staple baked food of the ancient Near East; by extension, food or sustenance in general.

Lechem is the daily bread of the Hebrew Bible — literal loaves baked from grain, broken and shared at every table from Abraham's tent (Gen 18:5) to the bread of the Presence in the tabernacle. Yet it also stretches beyond the bakery to mean 'food' in general, as when Leviticus 3:11 calls a burnt offering 'the food (lechem) of God.' Intriguingly, Arabic cognate lahm means 'meat, flesh' rather than bread, suggesting the root originally pointed to food broadly before Hebrew narrowed it to grain-based staples. One poetic passage in Jeremiah 11:19 uses lechem metaphorically — 'let us destroy the tree with its fruit (lechem)' — where the prophet himself is the 'bread' his enemies would consume.

1. bread, loaf of bread (279×) Literal bread, a baked loaf made from grain (279x). The primary and most frequent sense, covering everyday bread eaten at meals (Gen 3:19, 'by the sweat of your face you shall eat bread'), ceremonial bread (the showbread, lechem hapanim), and bread as hospitality (Gen 14:18, Melchizedek brings bread and wine). All major translations render this uniformly — pan (Spanish), pain (French), Brot (German) — with no ambiguity. Includes loaves counted, broken, offered, withheld, and miraculously multiplied. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bread | es: pan | fr: pain | de: Brot, mit-Brot Gen 3:19; Gen 14:18; Gen 18:5; Gen 21:14; Gen 25:34

2. food, sustenance (19×) Food or sustenance in general, not limited to baked bread (19x). When Leviticus 3:11 calls a sacrifice 'the food (lechem) of YHWH,' or when Numbers 28:24 refers to offerings as 'the food (lechem) of the fire-offering,' bread means nourishment broadly. The Arabic cognate lahm ('flesh, meat') preserves this wider alimentary sense. French nourriture and German Speise appear in translations of these verses, confirming the shift from 'bread' to 'food.' Key passages include 1 Samuel 20:24–27 where lechem designates a royal meal that is clearly more than just bread. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: bread-of, food, food-of | es: Su-pan, el-pan, mi-pan | fr: le-nourriture, le-provision-de, leur-pain-eux | de: Brot, Brot-von, Speise Lev 3:11; Lev 3:16; Num 28:24; 1Sam 20:24; 1Sam 20:27

3. (1×) A unique metaphorical use in Jeremiah 11:19 (1x): 'Let us destroy the tree with its lechem' — traditionally rendered 'with its bread' or 'with its fruit.' The prophet Jeremiah is the tree; his lechem is his life, his substance, his productive fruit. Spanish con pan su ('with its bread') preserves the literal form, while some traditions read 'with its fruit' (English). This is a prophetic metaphor where bread stands for the vital substance of a person, blending the literal and figurative in Jeremiah's characteristic style. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-its-fruit | es: con-pan-su | fr: pain | de: Brot Jer 11:19

לְחֵם H3900 N-ms (1×)

feast, banquet (Aramaic term for festive meal)

This Aramaic noun means feast or banquet, appearing in Daniel 5:1 where Belshazzar "made a feast for a thousand of his lords." While in Biblical Hebrew the same root refers to bread, in Aramaic it developed the broader meaning of a festive meal or banquet. The Targum and Syriac use this word in the sense of bread, showing the semantic connection. The context in Daniel is the infamous feast where the handwriting appeared on the wall, making this a pivotal moment in salvation history.

(1×) Daniel 5:1 describes how King Belshazzar "made a feast" for a thousand nobles—the setting for one of Scripture's most dramatic divine interventions. Spanish "banquete" (banquet), French "Léhem," and German "Brot" (bread) show varying interpretations, though the festive meal context is clear. This royal feast became the occasion for Babylon's fall. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: feast | es: un-banquete | fr: Léhem | de: Brot Dan 5:1

לָחֶם H3901 N-ms (1×)

war, fighting (at the gates; textually uncertain)

This word appears only in Judges 5:8 with uncertain text and meaning. The Masoretic tradition reads "then war was at the gates," but scholars have proposed numerous emendations. Some ancient versions read this as "barley bread" (connecting it to the bread word), while others see a reference to war or fighting. The phrase's context is Deborah's song describing Israel's dire straits before her leadership. The textual uncertainty has never been fully resolved, though the war interpretation fits the context of Israel's military weakness.

(1×) Judges 5:8's phrase remains textually problematic, though most modern translations read something like "war at the gates." Spanish "guerra en" (war at) and French "guerre à" follow the traditional interpretation of military conflict. The context describes Israel's defenselessness—no weapons visible among forty thousand—suggesting the war interpretation captures the passage's intent even if the text itself remains uncertain. WAR AND BATTLE

en: -war-at | es: guerra-en | fr: -guerre-à | de: -Krieg-bei Judg 5:8

לַחְמִי H3902 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lahmi (personal name; brother of Goliath the Gittite)

Lahmi appears in 1 Chronicles 20:5 as the brother of Goliath, slain by Elhanan. However, this reading is likely a textual corruption of the parallel passage in 2 Samuel 21:19, which reads "the Bethlehemite" (בֵּית הַלַּחְמִי). The original text probably identified Elhanan as being from Bethlehem rather than naming Goliath's brother. The Septuagint renderings show uncertainty about this name. This represents a classic case where Chronicles' text became corrupted from Samuel's original.

(1×) First Chronicles 20:5 names Lahmi as Goliath's brother killed by Elhanan, though most scholars see this as a textual error for "the Bethlehemite" from 2 Samuel 21:19. Modern translations handle this diversely—some preserving "Lahmi" as a proper name, others noting the textual issue. The passage highlights the textual challenges in Chronicles' reuse of Samuel material. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Lahmi | es: Lajmi | fr: [לחמי] | de: [לחמי] 1Chr 20:5

לַחְמָס H3903 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Lachmas (place name; town in Judah's tribal allotment)

Lachmas was a town in Judah's territorial inheritance, listed in Joshua 15:40 among the Shephelah settlements. The site has been tentatively identified with El-lahm, about 13 miles west-northwest of Hebron. The Septuagint renders it as Μαχες or Λαμας, showing some textual variation. Some Hebrew manuscripts read "Lachman" instead. This was one of many small towns in Judah's lowland region, its precise location now uncertain but its inclusion in Scripture's geographical precision noteworthy.

(1×) Joshua 15:40 lists Lachmas among Judah's Shephelah towns. Spanish "Lajmás," French "Lachmas," and German "Lachmas" all preserve the Hebrew name with minor phonetic adaptation. This town appears in the detailed territorial descriptions that ground biblical narrative in real geography, even when the precise site can no longer be identified with certainty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Lachmas | es: y-Lajmás | fr: et-Lachmas | de: und-Lachmas Josh 15:40

לְחֵנָה H3904 Conj-w / N-fpc / 2ms (3×)

concubines, secondary wives in royal harems (Aramaic)

An Aramaic term for concubines, appearing only in Daniel 5 in the context of Belshazzar's sacrilegious feast. The king commands that temple vessels be brought so he, his nobles, his wives, and his concubines can drink from them—a deliberate desecration. The presence of concubines at the banquet underscores its debauched character. The term reflects the polygamous practices of Neo-Babylonian royalty and the setting's Persian-period cultural memory.

(3×) Daniel 5:2 initiates the sacrilege: Belshazzar commands the vessels be brought 'that the king and his nobles, his wives and his concubines (וְלֵחֵנָתֵהּ) might drink from them.' Verse 3 reports compliance: 'the king...his wives and his concubines (וְלֵחֵנָתֵהּ) drank from them.' Verse 23 recapitulates the offense: 'you...your nobles, your wives, and your concubines (וְלֵחֵנָתָךְ) drank wine from them.' The threefold repetition emphasizes guilt. Translations: Spanish 'concubinas,' French equivalent, maintaining the harem terminology of ancient Near Eastern courts. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: and-his-concubines, and-your-concubines | es: y-sus-concubinas, y-tus-concubinas | fr: [ולחנתה], [ולחנתך] | de: [ולחנתה], [ולחנתך] Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:23

לָחַץ H3905 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3mp (19×)

Squeeze, press physically; oppress or persecute people socially and politically; be pressed or crushed passively.

The Hebrew verb lachats captures both raw physical pressure and its social-political metaphor. In its handful of literal uses, it describes Balaam's donkey pressing against a wall (Num 22:25) and Amorites crowding the Danites into the hill country (Judg 1:34). But overwhelmingly, lachats appears as the prophetic vocabulary of systemic oppression — the cry that reaches God in Exodus 3:9, where Israel's taskmasters 'press' them under forced labor. Spanish oprimir, French opprimer, and German bedruecken all converge on this social-justice register, while the Arabic cognate lahasa preserves the original tactile sense of squeezing. The verb is concentrated in covenant-law passages (Exod 22:21; 23:9) where God commands Israel never to oppress the stranger, precisely because they know what oppression feels like.

1. oppress, treat harshly (15×) To oppress, persecute, or treat harshly — exercising unjust power over vulnerable people through social, economic, or political pressure. This dominant sense (15 occurrences) anchors the Exodus liberation narrative: 'I have seen the oppression with which the Egyptians oppress them' (Exod 3:9). It recurs in covenant law forbidding oppression of the stranger (Exod 22:21; 23:9) and in the cyclical refrain of Judges where foreign nations oppress Israel (Judg 2:18; 4:3). Spanish oprimir, French opprimer, and Arabic يضطهد all deploy dedicated social-injustice vocabulary here. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-oppressed-them, and-they-will-oppress, he-oppressed | es: Y-los-oprimieron, lo-afligirás, los-que-os-oprimían | fr: [לחציו], [לחצים], et-oppresser | de: [ולחצו], [לחציו], [לחצים] Exod 3:9; Exod 22:21; Exod 23:9; Judg 2:18; Judg 4:3

2. press, squeeze physically (3×) To squeeze, press, or crowd physically — exerting bodily force against someone or something, pushing them into a tight space. Three occurrences preserve this concrete, tactile sense: Balaam's donkey pressing his foot against the wall (Num 22:25), the Amorites pressing the Danites into the hill country (Judg 1:34), and a besieged official being pressed back with the door (2 Kgs 6:32). Spanish apretar and empujar appear in these contexts, distinguishing physical pressing from social oppression. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-press, and-pressed | es: Y-oprimieron, y-apretó, y-empujáis | fr: et-press, et-pressed | de: und-press, und-pressed Num 22:25; Judg 1:34; 2Kgs 6:32

3. be pressed, be squeezed (1×) To be pressed or squeezed passively (Niphal) — describing the experience of being physically crushed against something. Only one clear occurrence: the donkey 'pressed herself against the wall' in the Balaam narrative (Num 22:25), where the reflexive-passive form highlights the animal's involuntary compression into a narrow space. Spanish se apreto and French se pressa both use reflexive constructions, confirming the middle-passive force. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-pressed | es: y-se-apretó | fr: et-pressed | de: und-pressed Num 22:25

לָחַץ H3906 N-msc / 1cp (12×)

Oppression, distress — crushing pressure exerted by a hostile power, especially foreign domination

The noun לָחַץ (lachats) denotes the crushing pressure of oppression, typically inflicted by a foreign power or harsh authority. Its theological weight derives from the Exodus narrative: God declares 'I have also seen the oppression with which the Egyptians oppress them' (Exod 3:9), and Israel is to remember that the LORD delivered them from Egypt's oppression (Deut 26:7). The judges cycle repeatedly invokes it — when Israel cried out under the pressure of enemies, God raised up deliverers (Judg 2:18; 4:3; 6:9; 10:12). Second Kings 13:4 records how Hazael's oppression of Israel moved the king to seek the LORD's face. Spanish 'opresión' and French 'affliction' both convey the sociopolitical weight.

oppression, distress (12×) The crushing pressure or distress of oppression, typically from foreign enemies or harsh overlords. The foundational usage is God's acknowledgment of Egypt's oppression of Israel (Exod 3:9), recalled in liturgical confession (Deut 26:7). The judges cycle uses it repeatedly for the hostile pressure that drives Israel to cry out for deliverance (Judg 2:18; 4:3; 6:9; 10:12). Aram's oppression under Hazael (2 Kgs 13:4, 22) and the psalmist's cry against oppressors (Ps 42:10; 43:2; 44:25) round out the usage. Spanish 'opresión' and English 'oppression' both capture the political and existential weight. OPPRESSION AFFLICTION

en: affliction, and-our-oppression, because-of-oppression-of | es: aflicción, en-la-opresión, la-opresión | fr: [לחץ], affliction, dans-oppression | de: [בלחץ], [לחץ], affliction Exod 3:9; Deut 26:7; 1Kgs 22:27; 2Kgs 13:4

לָחַשׁ H3907 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (3×)

to whisper, mutter incantations, charm serpents

A verb denoting quiet, secretive speech—either conspiratorial whispering or the murmured spells of snake charmers. The psalmist compares enemies to serpents that won't respond to charmers' whispers. David's servants whisper together when they suspect the child has died. Another psalm describes adversaries whispering malicious plans. The root suggests low-volume, furtive communication, often with negative connotations.

(3×) Second Samuel 12:19 has David perceiving his servants 'were whispering together' (מִתְלַחֲשִׁים), deducing the child's death from their hushed tones. Psalm 41:7 [Eng. 41:6] describes enemies who 'whisper together against me' (יִתְלַחֲשׁוּ עָלַי), plotting harm. Psalm 58:5 [Eng. 58:4] refers to 'the voice of charmers' (קוֹל מְלַחֲשִׁים), experts at whispering spells to serpents. The Pi'el participle in Psalm 58 technically means 'whisperers' = enchanters. Translations vary: Spanish 'susurrar/encantadores,' German 'charmers/whisper,' capturing both magical and conspiratorial senses. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: charmers, were-whispering, whisper | es: encantadores, susurraban,

susurran | fr: chuchoter, de-chuchoter, furent-whispering | de: charmers, waren-whispering, whisper 2Sam 12:19; Ps 41:7; Ps 58:5

לַחַשׁ H3908 Conj-w (5×)

Whispering, charming, incantation; a whispered spell, amulet, or hushed prayer, spanning magic and devotion.

A masculine noun meaning 'whispering' or 'charming,' covering a surprisingly wide semantic range from snake-charming spells to whispered prayers. Jeremiah 8:17 and Ecclesiastes 10:11 use it for serpent-charming—the whispered incantation that controls venomous snakes. Isaiah 3:3 applies it to the 'skilled enchanter' among Jerusalem's leaders, while Isaiah 3:20 lists lachashim as amulets or charm-jewelry worn by the women of Zion. Most strikingly, Isaiah 26:16 uses it for a 'whispered prayer' poured out in distress. Spanish captures this range vividly: 'encantamiento' for magical incantation and 'susurro' for whispered prayer.

(5×) Serpent-charming or magical incantation—a whispered spell used to control snakes or exercise occult power. Jer 8:17 warns of serpents that cannot be charmed by any lachash, and Eccl 10:11 observes that a snake that bites before being charmed renders the charmer useless. Isa 3:3 extends this to human expertise: the 'skilled in incantation' is listed among Jerusalem's social pillars. Spanish 'encantamiento' and French cognate forms capture the magical dimension of whispering with intent to control. SPELL ENCHANTMENT

en: a-charm, a-whispered-prayer, charm | es: de-encantamientos, encantamiento, susurro | fr: [והלחשים], [לחש], לחש | de: [והלחשים], [לחש] Eccl 10:11; Isa 3:3; Isa 3:20; Isa 26:16; Jer 8:17

לָט H3909 Prep-b (6×)

Secrecy, mystery: used adverbially as 'secretly, in secret'; of Egyptian magicians' 'secret arts' or enchantments.

The noun lat (also spelled la'at) means 'secrecy' or 'mystery' and occurs only with the preposition be- in two sharply different contexts. In three narrative passages it functions as an adverb meaning 'secretly, in stealth' — Jael approaching Sisera quietly to drive the tent-peg through his temple (Judg 4:21), Ruth slipping to the threshing floor unnoticed (Ruth 3:7), and Jonathan's men whispering to David on Saul's behalf (1 Sam 18:22; 24:4). Spanish en secreto, French secretement/en secret, and German heimlich all render this straightforwardly. But in Exodus, the same root takes on an entirely different coloring: the plural with suffix, belateihem, describes the 'secret arts' or 'enchantments' by which Pharaoh's magicians replicated Moses' signs (Exod 7:22; 8:7, 18). Spanish con sus encantamientos and French avec leur secret arts shift from stealth vocabulary to occult-magic vocabulary, confirming a genuine semantic split between human secrecy and supernatural mystery.

1. with their secret arts (3×) Secret arts, enchantments, or occult mysteries — the hidden techniques by which the Egyptian magicians (chartummim) replicated or attempted to replicate the divine signs through Moses. All three occurrences appear in the Exodus plague narrative: they turned water to blood 'with their secret arts' (Exod 7:22), produced frogs 'with their secret arts' (Exod 8:7), but could not produce gnats 'with their secret arts' (Exod 8:18). The parallel expression belahateihem (Exod 7:11) uses a related noun from the root lahat ('flame, enchantment'), reinforcing the occult register. Spanish encantamientos and French secret arts capture the supernatural dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-their-secret-arts | es: con-sus-encantamientos | fr: avec-leur-secret-arts | de: mit-ihr-secret-arts Exod 7:22; Exod 8:7; Exod 8:18

2. secretly (3×) Secretly, in secret, by stealth — the adverbial use of ballat/balla'at describing covert human action. Three occurrences in narrative contexts where someone approaches or acts without being detected: Jael came to Sisera 'softly/secretly' with the tent-peg (Judg 4:21), Ruth came 'secretly' and uncovered Boaz's feet at the threshing floor (Ruth 3:7), and Saul's servants spoke 'secretly' to David about marrying the king's daughter (1 Sam 18:22; cf. 24:4). Spanish en secreto, French en secret/secretement, and German heimlich/in secret converge on ordinary stealth vocabulary, clearly distinct from the Exodus enchantment sense. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: in-secret, secretly | es: en-secreto | fr: dans-secret, en-secret, secrètement | de: [בלט], in-secret, secretly Ruth 3:7; 1Sam 18:22; 1Sam 24:4

לֹט H3910 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

myrrh, ladanum (aromatic resin)

An aromatic gum or resin, either myrrh or ladanum (from the cistus rose). Genesis mentions it twice as valuable merchandise: carried by Ishmaelite traders (37:25) and sent as a gift to Joseph in Egypt (43:11). Ancient sources identify it with ladanum, a fragrant resin collected from cistus leaves in the eastern Mediterranean. This luxury commodity was prized for perfume and incense.

(2×) Refers to an aromatic resin, most likely ladanum (Greek 'ledanon') rather than true myrrh. Appears in Genesis 37:25 among the trade goods of Ishmaelite merchants, and in 43:11 among the choice products of the land sent to appease the Egyptian official (Joseph). The term is grouped with spices, balm, and honey—valuable exports from Canaan. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'mirra,' French 'myrrhe,' German 'Ladanum') reflect ongoing debate between myrrh and ladanum identification. MYRRH AROMATIC RESIN

en: and-myrrh | es: y-mirra | fr: et-myrrhe | de: und-Ladanum Gen 37:25; Gen 43:11

לְטָאָה H3911 Conj-w (1×)

lizard (type of unclean reptile in Levitical law)

This word denotes a type of lizard, appearing in Leviticus 11:30 among the swarming creatures declared unclean. It's listed with several other reptiles (gecko, monitor lizard, wall lizard, skink, chameleon), though precise species identification remains uncertain. The Septuagint translates it as "χαλαβώτης" and the Vulgate as "stellio." Later Hebrew retains the same meaning. Natural historians have suggested various lizard species common in Palestine, though exact identification is less important than understanding these creatures were forbidden as food.

(1×) Leviticus 11:30 includes the lizard in a list of six unclean swarming reptiles. Spanish "la-lagartija" (the small lizard), French "le-lizard," and German "der-lizard" all identify this as a lizard species. The passage establishes Levitical dietary boundaries, categorizing the natural world into clean and unclean animals for Israel's covenant distinctiveness. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-the-lizard | es: y-la-lagartija | fr: et-le-lizard | de: und-der-lizard Lev 11:30

לְטוּשִׁם H3912 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (1×)

Letushim (ethnic name; descendants of Abraham through Keturah)

The Letushim were a people group descended from Dedan, who was a grandson of Abraham through Keturah. Genesis 25:3 lists them among Abraham's descendants through his later marriage. The Septuagint renders the name as Λατουσιεμ. Nothing else is known about this group from biblical or extrabiblical sources. They represent one of many tribal peoples tracing ancestry to Abraham, though they lived outside the covenant line through Isaac.

(1×) Genesis 25:3 lists the Letushim among Dedan's descendants in Abraham's non-Israelite lineage through Keturah. Modern translations preserve the name with minimal alteration: Spanish "letushim," French "le-Letushim," German "die-Letuschiter." This genealogical note shows the biblical writers' interest in Abraham's full family tree, even for descendants outside the primary covenant line. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Letushim | es: y-letushim | fr: et-le-Letushim | de: und-die-Letuschiter Gen 25:3

לָטַשׁ H3913 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (5×)

To hammer, sharpen, whet; used of metalworking, sharpening blades, and figuratively of hostile glaring.

A verb meaning 'to hammer' or 'to sharpen,' rooted in the physical act of striking metal. Genesis 4:22 introduces Tubal-Cain as 'the forger of every instrument of bronze and iron,' using the participle to describe the world's first metalsmith. The practical sense of blade-sharpening appears in 1 Samuel 13:20, where Israelites must go to the Philistines to sharpen their farming tools. Psalms 7:12 warns that God sharpens his sword against the wicked. Most vivid is the figurative use in Job 16:9: the adversary 'whets his eyes against me'—a piercing, hostile glare rendered in Spanish as 'aguza' (he sharpens), capturing the menacing intensity.

(5×) To hammer, sharpen, or whet metal instruments, extending figuratively to hostile piercing looks. The Qal participle in Gen 4:22 identifies Tubal-Cain as a 'hammerer/forger' of bronze and iron tools—the archetypal metalworker. In 1 Sam 13:20 the infinitive construct describes the practical necessity of sharpening plowshares and axes. Ps 7:12 uses the imperfect for God sharpening his sword in judgment, while Ps 52:2 (Pual participle) describes a tongue like a 'sharpened razor.' Job 16:9 extends the image figuratively: the enemy 'sharpens his eyes' against the sufferer. Spanish 'afilará' (he will sharpen) and French 'aiguiser' both preserve the concrete metalworking origin. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: forger-of, he-sharpens, sharpened | es: afilada, afilará, aguza | fr: aiguiser, de-aiguiser, forger-de | de: [לילטוש], ein-Schärfer, er-sharpens Gen 4:22; 1Sam 13:20; Job 16:9; Ps 7:12; Ps 52:2

לֵיָה H3914 Conj-w / N-fp (3×)

wreaths, ornamental carved decorations on temple furnishings

Decorative carved designs on the bronze stands for the temple lavers, possibly wreath-like garlands or festooned patterns. The term appears only in the description of Solomon's temple furnishings in 1 Kings 7, amid detailed accounts of lions, oxen, cherubim, and palm trees adorning the movable stands. The precise form is uncertain—some translations suggest 'spirals' or 'festoons'—but the context clearly indicates ornamental relief work enhancing the sacred vessels.

(3×) First Kings 7:29, 30, 36 catalog the decorative elements on the ten bronze stands: lions, oxen, cherubim, and 'wreaths' (לִיוֹת/וְלִיוֹת) of hammered work. Verse 29 pairs them with lions and oxen; verse 30 with borders and panels; verse 36 with available space for engraving cherubim, lions, and palms 'with wreaths.' The term's root and precise meaning remain debated (some link to לָוָה, 'join/wreath'), but the decorative, non-structural function is clear. Translations often transliterate or use generic 'wreaths/garlands': Spanish 'guirnaldas.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-wreaths, wreaths, wreaths-of | es: guirnaldas, y-guirnaldas | fr: et-wreaths, wreaths, wreaths-de | de: und-wreaths, wreaths, wreaths-von 1Kgs 7:29; 1Kgs 7:30; 1Kgs 7:36

לַיְלָה H3915 Art / N-ms (235×)

Night; the dark period from sunset to sunrise, opposite of day; also the named cosmic entity 'Night' in creation.

One of the most elemental words in Hebrew, layil denotes the period of darkness between sunset and sunrise. It appears over 230 times, structuring everything from narrative timing ('that night,' Gen 19:33) to covenantal vigils (Exod 12:42) and poetic lament (Ps 6:7). In Genesis 1:5, God names the darkness 'Night,' elevating it from mere absence of light to a named cosmic category. Across translations — Spanish noche, French nuit, German Nacht — the word carries the same primal resonance of rest, vulnerability, and divine encounter.

1. night, period of darkness (234×) The dark interval from sunset to sunrise, used as a temporal marker for events, durations, and recurring cycles. Translations uniformly render it as 'night' (noche, nuit, Nacht), and it appears in every genre — law ('that same night,' Exod 12:42), narrative ('by night,' Gen 14:15), wisdom ('her lamp does not go out at night,' Prov 31:18), and lament ('every night I drench my bed,' Ps 6:7). The 234 occurrences testify to night as the primary structuring opposite of day in biblical temporality. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: by-night, night | es: de-noche, noche, noches | fr: nuit, par-nuit | de: Nacht, Nächte, bei-Nacht Gen 1:5; Gen 7:4; Gen 7:12; Gen 14:15; Gen 31:39

2. Night, named cosmic entity (1×) A single occurrence in the creation narrative where God names the darkness 'Night' (Gen 1:5), treating it not merely as a time period but as a designated cosmic entity. Spanish capitalizes it as Noche, and the naming act parallels God calling the light 'Day,' establishing the fundamental binary of the created order. Isaiah 34:10 echoes this cosmic sense with perpetual night as a sign of divine judgment. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: Night | es: Noche | fr: nuit | de: Nacht Isa 34:10

לֵילְא H3916 Prep-b / N-msd (5×)

Night; an Aramaic noun for nighttime, used in Daniel's apocalyptic visions received 'in the night.'

The Aramaic noun for 'night,' cognate with Hebrew laylah, appearing exclusively in the book of Daniel. It occurs in the emphatic state lelyeya, always marking the temporal setting of divine revelation: the mystery is revealed to Daniel 'in a vision of the night' (Dan 2:19), Belshazzar is slain 'that very night' (Dan 5:30), and the great apocalyptic beasts rise from the sea 'in my vision in the night' (Dan 7:2, 7, 13). German 'Nacht' and Spanish 'noche' render it straightforwardly, but the consistent pairing with vision-language in Daniel gives this ordinary time-word an extraordinary freight of revelation.

(5×) Night, nighttime—the Aramaic temporal noun marking when events or visions occur in the book of Daniel. Dan 2:19 uses the emphatic form lelyeya for the night when God reveals Nebuchadnezzar's dream to Daniel. Dan 5:30 marks Belshazzar's death 'in that night,' the climactic moment of judgment. Dan 7:2, 7, and 13 frame the apocalyptic beast visions as occurring 'in visions of the night.' Spanish 'la noche' and German 'in der Nacht' preserve the simple temporal sense, while the consistent apocalyptic context gives this ordinary word an atmosphere of divine disclosure unique in the Aramaic portions of Scripture. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: night, the-night | es: la-noche, noche | fr: nuit | de: Nacht, in-der-Nacht Dan 2:19; Dan 5:30; Dan 7:2; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:13

לִילִית H3917 N-fs (1×)

Lilith (female night-demon haunting desolate places; Babylonian loan-word)

Lilith is a female night-demon appearing in Isaiah 34:14 among the creatures inhabiting desolate Edom. The name is likely borrowed from Babylonian lilîtu, a class of night-spirits. Later Jewish legend greatly expanded Lilith's role, but in Scripture she appears only in this prophetic vision of judgment and desolation. The passage describes supernatural creatures dwelling among ruins—a haunt for owls, jackals, and this night-demon. Some English translations render this as "night-creature" or "screech-owl" rather than transliterating the name.

(1×) Isaiah 34:14 lists Lilith among the eerie inhabitants of judged Edom: wild animals, demons, and night-creatures. Spanish preserves "Lilit" as a transliteration, recognizing the proper noun character. The prophet envokes ancient Near Eastern demon-lore to paint a picture of complete desolation—a place where only supernatural predators dwell, emphasizing the thoroughness of divine judgment. DEMONS EVIL SPIRITS

en: the-night-creature | es: Lilit | fr: [לילית] | de: [לילית] Isa 34:14

לָיִשׁ H3918 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

lion, a poetic term for the king of beasts (archaic/poetic)

A poetic and archaic synonym for lion, less common than אַרְיֵה but appearing in elevated, literary contexts. Job uses it to describe the mighty lion perishing for lack of prey. Proverbs celebrates the lion as boldest among beasts, turning aside for none. Isaiah pairs it with the young lion in an oracle against Egypt. The term adds gravitas and literary color, drawn from the shared Semitic vocabulary for this fearsome predator.

(3×) Job 4:11 laments, 'The lion (לָיִשׁ) perishes for lack of prey,' in Eliphaz's discourse on divine justice visiting the wicked. Proverbs 30:30 lauds 'the lion (לָיִשׁ), mightiest among beasts,' which retreats before nothing. Isaiah 30:6 describes 'the lion (לָיִשׁ) and young lion' in the Negev through which envoys carry tribute to Egypt—a dangerous, beast-haunted wilderness. The term's pairing with לָבִיא (young lion) in Isaiah creates an elevated poetic doublet. Translations: Spanish 'león,' French/German equivalents, treating it as a stylistic variant. LIONS AND CUBS

en: a-lion, and-lion | es: León, y-león | fr: [ולישׁ], ליש | de: [ולישׁ], [לישׁ] Job 4:11; Prov 30:30; Isa 30:6

H3919 N-proper-ms (2×)

Laish, father of Paltiel (Michal's second husband)

The proper name of a man identified as the father of Paltiel (also called Palti), to whom Saul gave his daughter Michal after David fled. The name appears in the awkward phrasing of 2 Samuel 3:15, where Paltiel is called 'son of Laish' twice in succession. The name Laish means 'lion,' a common ancient Near Eastern personal name.

(2×) A personal name identifying the father of Paltiel/Palti. Appears in 2 Samuel 3:15 in the emotionally charged scene where David demands Michal's return, and Paltiel follows weeping. The textual repetition of the name in verse 15 suggests possible scribal variation or emphasis. This Laish should not be confused with the city of Laish (later Dan) or other biblical figures with the same name. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9212 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Layish, [Layish] | es: (Layish), [Lush] | fr: Layish, [Layish] | de: [Layish] 2Sam 3:15

לַיִשׁ H3919a N-proper-fs (4×)

Laish, the original name of the northern city Dan before the Danites conquered and renamed it

Laish was the original name of the northernmost city in Canaan before the Danite tribe conquered it and renamed it Dan. The book of Judges describes Laish as a peaceful, unsuspecting city inhabited by Sidonians living in security—until the Danite raiders destroyed it and rebuilt it as their tribal center. The name Laish (meaning 'lion') appears in parallel with Leshem in Joshua's account of the same conquest, representing the pre-Israelite Canaanite settlement.

(4×) Laish appears four times in the Danite conquest narrative. Danite spies found 'the people of Laish' living securely in Sidonian fashion (Judg 18:7). They reported finding the land around 'Laish' (Judg 18:14). The Danites conquered and burned 'Laish' (Judg 18:27). They rebuilt the city and 'called the name of the city Dan, after Dan their father, but the name of the city was Laish formerly' (Judg 18:29). The Septuagint renders it Laisa, while Spanish Lais, French Layish, and German Layish preserve phonetic approximations of the Hebrew consonants. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9212 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Layish, to-Layish | es: Lais, a-Lais, de-Lais | fr: Layish, à-Layish | de: Layish, zu-Layish Judg 18:7; Judg 18:14; Judg 18:27; Judg 18:29

לַיִשׁ H3919b N-proper-ms (1×)

Laish (personal name; father of Paltiel, Michal's second husband)

Laish was the father of Paltiel (also called Palti), to whom Saul gave his daughter Michal after David fled. First Samuel 25:44 and 2 Samuel 3:15 name him, though 2 Samuel's Ketiv reads "Lush." The Septuagint shows considerable variation in rendering the name (Αμεις, Σελλης, Λαις, Ιωας, Σελλειμ), reflecting textual uncertainty. This Laish is distinct from the place-name Laish (later Dan) in northern Israel. He appears only through his son's unfortunate role in the David-Saul conflict.

(1×) First Samuel 25:44 identifies Laish as the father of Paltiel, to whom Saul gave Michal in David's absence. All modern languages preserve "Laish" (or variants) as a proper name without translation. This brief mention places Laish in the tragic story of Michal's forced remarriage, though David later reclaimed her, causing Paltiel great grief. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9212 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Laish | es: Lais | fr: Laish | de: Laish 1Sam 25:44

לַיְשָׁה H3919c N-proper-fs (1×)

Laishah (place name; village north of Jerusalem in Isaiah's invasion oracle)

Laishah was a village north of Jerusalem, mentioned in Isaiah 10:30 as the Assyrian army approached the city. The site is unknown, though some scholars have suggested 'Isawiye, about two miles northeast of Jerusalem. The name may be related to the personal and place name Laish. The Septuagint renders it as "ἐν Σα" or "Λαισα." Isaiah's oracle traces the enemy's route of advance, naming each village to build dramatic tension as the invader draws nearer to Zion.

(1×) Isaiah 10:30 addresses Laishah in the prophet's vivid oracle of Assyrian invasion: "Cry aloud, O daughter of Gallim! Give attention, O Laishah!" Spanish and French preserve "Laishah" as a place name. The passage geographically traces the enemy's southward march toward Jerusalem, building suspense as each village is named in the invader's path, though God will ultimately defend His city. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Laishah | es: Laishah | fr: [לישׁה] | de: [לישׁה] Isa 10:30

לָכַד H3920 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (121×)

To capture, seize, or take — by military conquest, by lot, by snare, or by freezing together; covering active seizure, passive capture, entrapment, and cohesion

Lakad is the verb of decisive taking — the moment a city falls, a fugitive is seized, or a snare springs shut. Its Qal stem dominates the conquest narratives, where Joshua and the judges 'capture' city after city, while its Nifal surfaces dramatically in the lot-casting scene of Achan's exposure (Josh 7:14-18), where tribe, clan, and individual are progressively 'taken' until the guilty party stands revealed. The Arabic cognate lakida ('to stick, cleave to') illuminates two unusual occurrences in Job where the verb describes water freezing solid and scales locking together — physical cohesion rather than military seizure, a semantic thread hidden from readers who know only the conquest narratives.

1. capture, seize (Qal) (76×) To capture or seize by military force (Qal active, 76x): the primary sense, covering the taking of cities, territories, and persons in war. Spanish capturó and German eroberte ('conquered') confirm the martial register. Dominates the conquest narratives — Joshua taking Ai (Josh 8:21), Caleb taking Debir (Judg 1:12), David taking the water-city of Rabbah (2 Sam 12:27-28) — and extends to kings seizing fortresses throughout the historical books (Num 21:32; Deut 2:34; 3:4). STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-captured, and-captured-it, captured | es: Y-capturó, Y-la-capturó, Y-la-tomaron | fr: avait-captura, captura, et-captura | de: er-nahm-ein, eroberte, hatte-nahm-ein Num 21:32; Num 32:41; Num 32:42; Deut 2:34; Deut 3:4

2. be captured, be seized (Nifal) (27×) To be captured, be taken (Nifal passive, 27x): the passive counterpart to sense 1, describing cities and persons falling to an enemy. French fut pris ('was taken') and German wurde eingenommen ('was captured') mark the passive orientation. Central to the Achan narrative, where the lot progressively narrows — tribe is taken, clan is taken, household is taken (Josh 7:15-18; 1 Sam 10:20-21) — and to prophetic warnings of cities being captured (Jer 48:1; 50:2). RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: and-are-captured, and-caught, and-they-will-be-captured | es: Y-fue-tomado, capturada, fue-tomada | fr: et-fut-pris, et-prendre, et-était-captura | de: es-wurde-eingenommen, und-einnehmen, und-war-genommen Josh 7:15; Josh 7:16; Josh 7:17; Josh 7:18; 1Sam 10:20

3. be caught, be trapped (Nifal) (9×) To be caught, ensnared, or trapped (Nifal, 9x): a figurative extension of the passive where the agent is not a military force but a trap, snare, or circumstance. Spanish atrapado ('trapped') and French capturer in snare contexts distinguish this from battlefield capture. The wicked are caught in their own devices (Ps 9:15; Prov 11:6), a person is snared by hasty words (Prov 6:2), and Qoheleth warns that the unwary are caught by the woman whose heart is 'snares and nets' (Eccl 7:26). Job 36:8 extends the image to those bound in fetters of affliction. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: is-caught, shall-be-caught, shall-be-taken | es: fue-atrapado, fuiste-atrapada, has-sido-apresado | fr: capturer, prendre | de: [יִלכד], [יִלכדו], [יִלכדון] Job 36:8; Ps 9:15; Prov 6:2; Prov 11:6; Eccl 7:26

4. catch, trap (Qal) (7×) To catch or trap actively (Qal, 7x): the hunter's or fowler's sense — setting a snare, catching an animal, or entrapping a person by cunning. Spanish atrapa ('catches') and German fangen confirm the trapping register distinct from military conquest. Samson catches three hundred foxes (Judg 15:4), God catches the wise in their own craftiness (Job 5:13, quoted by Paul in 1 Cor 3:19), and Amos asks rhetorically whether a bird falls into a snare without a trap being set (Amos 3:5). Jeremiah indicts those who set traps to catch people (Jer 5:26). RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: and-catching, and-caught, catching | es: Que-atrapa, atrapan, atrapará | fr: capturer, et-caught, et-prendre | de: [וילכוד], [יִלכוד], [לכד] Judg 15:4; Job 5:13; Ps 35:8; Jer 5:26; Amos 3:4

5. (1×) To freeze solid, congeal (Hitpael/unusual form, 1x): in Job 38:30, the surface of the deep 'is frozen' — water seizing together into ice. The Arabic cognate lakida ('to stick, cleave to') illuminates this otherwise puzzling usage: the sense is physical adhesion, liquid becoming locked solid. Spanish se congela ('it freezes') and English is-frozen confirm the unique semantic extension from 'seize' to 'congeal.' This lone occurrence in God's rhetorical questions about winter reveals an archaic physical sense preserved nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: is-frozen | es: se-congela | fr: prendre | de: [יִתלכדו] Job 38:30

6. (1×) To hold fast, lock together (Hitpael, 1x): in Job 41:17 (describing Leviathan's scales), the armored plates 'hold fast' to one another — they are interlocked and inseparable. Spanish se agarran ('they grip each other') captures the reflexive, mutual cohesion. Like sense 5, this draws on the root's adhesion meaning visible in Arabic lakida, describing physical binding rather than capture. The two Job passages together preserve a concrete, pre-metaphorical layer of the root that the conquest narratives have all but eclipsed. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: they-hold-fast | es: se-agarran | fr: prendre | de: [יִתלכדו] Job 41:17

לָכֶד H3921 Prep-m / N-ms (1×)

being caught, capture, snare (the state or act of being trapped)

This noun denotes the act of being caught or captured, appearing in Proverbs 3:26 where the Lord promises to keep one's foot "from being caught." The term is related to the verb for capturing or taking. The imagery is of a trap or snare that catches the unwary. God's protective wisdom guards the righteous from falling into dangers—whether physical traps or moral snares—that would catch those who lack discernment. Spanish "ser apresado" (being captured) captures the passive sense of falling victim to a trap.

(1×) Proverbs 3:26 promises that the Lord "will keep your foot from being caught," using this noun to describe the capture that God prevents. Spanish "de-ser-apresado" (from being captured) emphasizes the protective nature of divine wisdom. The image is of someone walking safely through a dangerous world where traps await the foolish, but divine guidance steers the wise away from every snare. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-being-caught | es: de-ser-apresado | fr: de-מלכד | de: [מלכד] Prov 3:26

לָכָה H3922 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lekhah (place name; town in Judah, location unknown)

Lekhah was a town in Judah, mentioned only in 1 Chronicles 4:21. The site's location is unknown, and no other biblical or extrabiblical information about it survives. The Septuagint renders it as Ληχα or Λαιχα, showing the slight phonetic variation typical of Hebrew place names in Greek transmission. It appears in the genealogical records of Judah's clans, showing the Chronicler's interest in preserving geographical and familial details even for obscure locations.

(1×) First Chronicles 4:21 lists Lekhah among Judah's family records without further detail. Spanish "Leca," French, and German preserve the name as a proper noun. These brief genealogical references preserve the memory of Israelite settlements even when their precise location and history have been lost to time, testifying to the biblical writers' comprehensive historical interest. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lekhah | es: Leca | fr: [לכה] | de: [לכה] 1Chr 4:21

לָכִישׁ H3923 N-proper-fs (24×)

Lachish – a major fortified Canaanite and later Judean city in the Shephelah lowlands

One of the most strategically important cities in the Shephelah, guarding the approaches to Jerusalem from the coastal plain. Its Amorite king joined the coalition against Gibeon and fell to Joshua (Josh 10:3-35). Fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:9), Lachish served as Judah's second city. Sennacherib made it his base of operations against Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:14, 17), and Micah charged it with being 'the beginning of sin to the daughter of Zion' (Mic 1:13). The Lachish Letters provide eyewitness testimony of the final days before Babylon's conquest (cf. Jer 34:7).

Lachish (city) (24×) A major fortified city in the Shephelah southwest of Jerusalem (modern Tell ed-Duweir). Captured by Joshua from its Amorite king (Josh 10:3-35), fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:9), and besieged by Sennacherib (2 Kgs 18:14, 17) and Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 34:7). The directional form lakishah ('toward Lachish') occurs in Joshua 10:31-35. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lachish, Lachish-ward, Lakhish | es: Lajish, Lakish, Laquis | fr: Lachish, Lachish-garde, Lakis | de: Lachish, Lachish-ward, [לכיש] Josh 10:3; Josh 10:5; Josh 10:23; Josh 10:31; Josh 10:32

לוּלִי H3924 N-fp (13×)

Loops — textile fasteners on the tabernacle curtains that receive the clasps

A technical term for the fabric loops sewn along the edges of the tabernacle curtains, designed to receive the gold and bronze clasps (קְרָסִים) that joined the curtain sets together. Every one of its thirteen occurrences falls within the tabernacle construction instructions of Exodus 26 and their fulfillment account in Exodus 36. The loops come in matched sets of fifty, carefully aligned so that corresponding loops face each other and the clasps unite the dwelling into a single structure (Exod 26:4–5, 10–11). Spanish 'lazos,' French 'lacets,' and German 'Schlaufen' all point to the same concrete fastening device — a simple but essential element of sacred architecture.

loops (textile fasteners) (13×) Loops (לֻלָאֹת), the textile fasteners attached to the edges of tabernacle curtain panels. Exclusively a Priestly construction term, all thirteen occurrences appear in the instructions for and execution of the tabernacle (Exod 26:4–5, 10–11; 36:11–12, 17). Sets of fifty loops on each curtain edge align with matching loops on the adjacent panel, receiving gold or bronze clasps to join the sections into one unified structure. The Akkadian cognate lu-lu ('loop, noose') confirms the concrete meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: into-the-loops, loops, the-loops | es: en-los-lazos, lazos, lazos-de | fr: dans-le-lacets, lacets, le-lacets | de: Schlaufen, der-Schlaufen, in-der-Schlaufen Exod 26:4; Exod 26:5; Exod 26:10

לָמַד H3925 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (87×)

To learn, study (Qal); to teach, instruct, train (Piel); a teacher (Piel ptcp.); trained, accustomed (Pual/passive)

A verb whose meaning pivots on the Hebrew stem system: in the Qal it means 'to learn' or 'become accustomed to,' while in the Piel it means 'to teach' or 'train.' Arabic preserves the same stem-voice contrast beautifully — ʿ (Form V, middle-reflexive) for learning versus ʿ (Form II, causative) for teaching. The Piel participle (מְלַמֵּד) became the standard word for 'teacher' in later Hebrew, and the passive forms describe someone who has been disciplined or trained, as with the warriors 'trained for war' in 1 Chronicles 5:18 and Song of Solomon 3:8.

1. Piel: teach, instruct (52×) The dominant Piel sense: actively teaching, instructing, or training someone. This is the causative counterpart to the Qal — the teacher's side of the learning relationship. Arabic ʿ (Form II causative) and Korean 가르치다 consistently confirm the causative-teaching semantics. Especially prominent in Deuteronomy, where Moses is commanded to teach Israel God's statutes (Deut 4:1, 4:10, 4:14), and in the Psalms, where the psalmist asks God directly: 'Teach me your statutes' (Ps 119:12, 26, 64, 68). RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: (you-have-taught), and-teach-me, and-they-taught | es: Enséñame, enseñaste, enséñame | fr: enseigner, et-enseigner, et-à-enseigner | de: lehren, lehren-mich, und-lehren Deut 4:1; Deut 4:10; Deut 4:14; Deut 5:31; Deut 6:1

2. Qal: learn, study (23×) The basic Qal sense: to learn, study, or become habituated. The reflexive-middle character of this sense is confirmed by Arabic ʿ (Form V) and Swahili -jifunza (reflexive 'teach oneself'). It covers both positive learning — studying God's commands so as to fear the LORD (Deut 14:23, 17:19) — and negative learning, such as adopting the abominable practices of the nations (Deut 18:9, Ps 106:35). Isaiah 26:10 warns that the wicked, even when shown grace, will not learn righteousness. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: I-have-learned, I-might-learn, and-he-learned | es: al-aprender-yo, aprenda, aprendan | fr: dans-enseigner, enseigner, et-apprendre | de: [ילמדון], [למדתי], du-soll-lernen Deut 4:10; Deut 5:1; Deut 14:23; Deut 17:19; Deut 18:9

3. Piel participle: teacher, instructor (6×) The substantivized Piel participle functioning as a noun: 'teacher, instructor.' Distinguished from the active verbal sense by nominal syntax — it takes the article and possessive suffixes (מְלַמָּדַי, 'my teachers,' Prov 5:13; Ps 119:99). Psalm 94:10 asks rhetorically, 'He who teaches mankind knowledge — shall he not reprove?' and Psalm 18:34 (= 144:1) praises God as the one 'who trains my hands for battle.' TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: and-to-my-instructors, he-who-teaches, my-teachers | es: el-que-enseña, el-que-te-enseña, enseñadores-de-mí | fr: de-enseigner, enseigner, et-enseigner-moi | de: [ולמלמדי], der-einer-training, er-der-lehrt Ps 18:34; Ps 94:10; Ps 119:99; Ps 144:1; Prov 5:13

4. Pual/Qal passive: trained, accustomed (6×) The passive forms (Pual and Qal passive participle): trained, disciplined, accustomed. Used of warriors 'trained for war' bearing shield and sword (1 Chr 5:18), skilled musicians (1 Chr 25:7), and Solomon's armed escort 'trained in warfare' (Song 3:8). Spanish adiestrado ('trained, skilled') and Swahili -zoezwa ('accustomed, drilled') capture this disciplined-readiness nuance. Jeremiah 31:18 uses it memorably of Ephraim as an 'untrained calf' whom God must discipline. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: and-trained-of, trained, trained-in- | es: adiestrada, adiestrado, aprendido | fr: enseigner, et-enseigner, instruits | de: [מלמדה], [מלמדי], lehren 1Chr 5:18; 1Chr 25:7; Song 3:8; Isa 29:13; Jer 31:18

לְמוֹ H3926 Prep (6×)

A poetic preposition equivalent to לְ ('to, for, upon'), found exclusively in elevated verse (Job, Psalms, Isaiah).

An archaic, expanded form of the common Hebrew preposition לְ, used exclusively in poetic and elevated registers. The fuller form לְמוֹ appears in Job's speeches (27:14; 29:21; 38:40; 40:4) and in early poetry such as the blessing of Noah (Gen 9:26-27). It carries the same broad prepositional range as לְ – direction ('to'), benefaction ('for'), and reference ('upon') – but signals a heightened, solemn tone. Spanish para and French à mirror the basic dative/directional meaning, while German ihnen ('to them') reflects the occasional pronominal force of the מוֹ element.

to, for, upon (poetic preposition) (6×) An archaic poetic preposition functioning identically to לְ ('to, for, upon') but restricted to elevated verse. The מוֹ element may derive from an old enclitic particle, giving the form a solemn, archaizing flavor. Job uses it repeatedly (27:14; 29:21; 38:40; 40:4), and it appears in the ancient blessing of Gen 9:26-27. The multilingual glosses – Spanish para, French à, English to/for – all confirm the standard prepositional semantics; the poetic register is the distinguishing feature, not a distinct meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-, to-, to-them | es: para, para-, para-él | fr: à, à-eux | de: [למו], ihnen Gen 9:26; Gen 9:27; Job 27:14; Job 29:21; Job 38:40

לְמוּאֵל H3927 N-proper-ms (2×)

Lemuel, king of Massa (recipient of Proverbs 31 oracle)

The name of a king who received wisdom instruction from his mother, preserved in Proverbs 31:1-9. He is identified as king of Massa, likely an Arabian tribe descended from Ishmael. Whether Lemuel is a personal name or a symbolic title (meaning 'belonging to God' or 'devoted to God') remains debated. Some Jewish traditions even identified him with Solomon, though most scholars see him as a distinct Arabian king.

(2×) A proper name (appearing with slight spelling variation as Lemuel/Lemoel) of a king who received maternal wisdom instruction. Found in Proverbs 31:1, 4, introducing the famous oracle about the virtuous woman. The name may be symbolic ('belonging to El/God') or a historical Arabian royal name. His connection to Massa links him to Ishmaelite genealogy (Genesis 25:14), suggesting non-Israelite wisdom integrated into Proverbs. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Lemuel, O-Lemuel | es: Lemuel | fr: למואל | de: [למואל] Prov 31:1; Prov 31:4

לָמַד H3928 Adj-mp (6×)

Taught, trained, accustomed; as a substantive: disciple, pupil. From the root lamad ('to learn/teach').

An adjective from the root לָמַד ('to learn, to teach') describing someone who has been instructed or habituated. Isaiah uses it as a substantive for 'disciples' – the prophet's own followers (Isa 8:16) and those taught by the Lord (Isa 50:4; 54:13), where the 'tongue of the taught' denotes Spirit-given eloquence. Jeremiah applies it differently: a wild donkey 'accustomed to' the wilderness (Jer 2:24) and a people 'trained in' doing evil (Jer 13:23). Spanish discípulos and English disciples capture the Isaianic usage, while acostumbrada ('accustomed') reflects the Jeremianic nuance of ingrained habit.

taught, trained; disciple (6×) One who has been taught, trained, or made accustomed to something – used both as a true adjective and as a substantive meaning 'disciple, pupil.' In Isaiah, the term designates those who receive divine instruction: the prophet binds up testimony 'among my disciples' (Isa 8:16), and the Servant has the 'tongue of the taught' (Isa 50:4), an image of receptive, Spirit-enabled speech. Isaiah 54:13 promises that all children will be 'taught of the LORD.' In Jeremiah, the word shifts toward habituation: the wild donkey is 'accustomed to the wilderness' (Jer 2:24), and Israel is 'trained in evil' (Jer 13:23). The Spanish glosses discípulos vs. acostumbrada neatly mirror this dual semantic range of discipleship and ingrained habit. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: accustomed, among-my-disciples, as-those-who-are-taught | es: acostumbrada-al, como-discípulos, discípulos | fr: disciple, à-Médie | de: [בלמדי], [כלמודים], [למדי] Isa 8:16; Isa 50:4; Isa 54:13; Jer 2:24

לֶמֶךְ H3929 N-proper-ms (11×)

Lamech (לֶמֶךְ) — name borne by two antediluvian figures: the Cainite warrior-poet and Seth's descendant

The name Lamech (לֶמֶךְ) belongs to two antediluvian figures in Genesis. The Cainite Lamech, seventh from Adam through Cain, is the first recorded polygamist and the speaker of the fierce 'Song of the Sword' (Gen 4:23-24), boasting of disproportionate vengeance. His sons Jabal, Jubal, and Tubal-Cain inaugurate pastoralism, music, and metalworking, making Lamech a hinge figure in the development of civilization and violence. The Sethite Lamech, ninth from Adam through Seth, is Noah's father. He names his son with a prophetic wordplay on 'comfort' (נחם), hoping Noah will bring relief from the curse on the ground (Gen 5:28-31). The Chronicler preserves only the Sethite lineage (1 Chr 1:3).

Lemekh (11×) The Cainite Lamech, a descendant of Cain in the seventh generation from Adam. Notable as the first polygamist (married to Adah and Zillah) and the speaker of the 'Song of the Sword' (Gen 4:23-24), a boast of excessive violence. Father of Jabal, Jubal, and Tubal-Cain, founders of pastoral, musical, and metallurgical crafts (Gen 4:18-22). His character embodies the escalation of violence in the Cainite line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Lemekh, and-Lemekh | es: Lamec, Lemej, y-Lemej | fr: Lemekh, Lémec, et-Lemekh | de: Lamech, Lamechs, [למך] Gen 4:18; Gen 4:19; Gen 4:23; Gen 4:24

לֹעַ H3930 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (1×)
throat, gullet (external throat; metaphor for controlling appetite)
This noun denotes the external throat or gullet, appearing in Proverbs 23:2 with the striking metaphor: "put a knife to your throat if you are given to appetite." The term refers to the visible throat, related to terms in later Hebrew and Aramaic for jaw or cheek. The passage isn't advocating self-harm but uses hyperbolic imagery to warn against gluttony, especially when dining with rulers. The throat represents the pathway of appetite that must be strictly controlled.

(1×) Proverbs 23:2 warns those with large appetites: "put a knife to your throat" when dining with a ruler—vivid hyperbole for exercising extreme self-control. Spanish "en tu garganta" (in your throat) identifies the anatomical location. This wisdom saying uses shocking imagery to emphasize the importance of restraint in eating, particularly in formal or politically sensitive contexts where overindulgence could prove dangerous. NECK (BODY PART) en: to-your-throat | es: en-tu-garganta | fr: dans-ton-בלֹעֲךָ-toi | de: [בלעך] Prov 23:2

לָעַב H3931 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
jest, mock, make sport of (continuous scornful mockery)
This Hiphil verb means to jest at or mock someone, appearing in 2 Chronicles 36:16 to describe Israel's response to God's prophetic messengers. The people "were continually making jest at the messengers of God," treating serious divine warnings as objects of ridicule. The Syriac cognate means to mock or make sport of someone. This persistent mockery of God's prophets represents the depth of Israel's rebellion before the Babylonian exile, showing contempt not just for the messengers but for the God who sent them.

(1×) Second Chronicles 36:16 describes the progressive hardening that led to exile: the people "were mocking" God's messengers, despising His words, and scoffing at His prophets. Spanish "burladores" (mockers) captures the participial sense of continuous action. This persistent ridicule of divine warning demonstrates the spiritual bankruptcy that made judgment inevitable, as grace met only contempt. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: mocking | es: burladores | fr: [מלעבים] | de: [מלעבים] 2Chr 36:16

לָעַג H3932 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (18×)
To mock, scorn, deride (Qal/Hifil); also to stammer or speak unintelligibly (Nifal).
Primarily a verb of contemptuous ridicule. Jerusalem mocks the defeated Assyrian army (2 Kgs 19:21), God laughs at the wicked (Ps 2:4), and Proverbs warns that mocking the poor insults their Maker (Prov 17:5). The verb appears across Qal and Hifil stems with the same basic force, and Spanish consistently renders it with forms of 'burlarse' (to mock). A rare Nifal use in Isaiah 33:19 describes a foreign people of 'stammering' speech — incomprehensible language perceived as barbarous babbling. This phonetic sense connects to the Syriac cognate meaning 'to stutter,' showing how mockery and unintelligible speech share the idea of language that fails to communicate properly.

1. mock, scorn, deride (17×) To mock, scorn, or hold in derision (Qal and Hifil), treating someone or something with open contempt. Used of Jerusalem's triumph over Sennacherib (2 Kgs 19:21 = Isa 37:22), of God deriding the wicked (Ps 2:4; Job 9:23), of enemies mocking the righteous (Jer 20:7; Neh 2:19), and of Wisdom personified mocking the complacent (Prov 1:26). Spanish 'burlarse' and English 'mock/scorn/deride' consistently capture the hostile, contemptuous tone across all these passages. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: He-mocks, I-will-mock, You-will-mock | es: El-que-se-burla-de, Y-te-burlas, me-burlaré | fr: [ויליעג], [ויילעגו], [ומלעגים] | de: [אלעג], [ויילעג], [ויילעגו] 2Kgs 19:21; 2Chr 30:10; Neh 2:19; Neh 4:1; Job 9:23

2. stammer, speak unintelligibly (1×) To stammer or speak in an unintelligible manner (Nifal), referring to foreign or incomprehensible speech. Found only in Isaiah 33:19, describing a fierce people whose language Israel cannot understand — 'a people of stammering lip.' The Syriac cognate means 'to stutter,' and the Arabic parallel 'lajlaja' likewise denotes confused speech. The semantic connection to sense 1 lies in speech perceived as defective or degraded. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: of-stammering | es: balbuciente | fr: [נלעג] | de: [נלעג] Isa 33:19

לַעַג H3933 Conj-w (7×)
laag – mocking, derision, scorn; contemptuous ridicule directed at persons or peoples
The masculine noun laag denotes mockery, derision, or scornful ridicule – the kind of contempt that stings communally rather than privately. It appears prominently in Israel's communal laments: 'You have made us a scorn to our neighbors' (Ps 44:13; 79:4), and the ascending pilgrims cry, 'Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorn of those who are at ease' (Ps 123:4). In Job 34:7, Elihu accuses Job of 'drinking up scorn like water' – treating blasphemy as casual refreshment. Ezekiel deploys it in his allegory of Jerusalem's cup of judgment (Ezek 23:32). The word's connection to stammering speech (Isa 28:11, 'stammering lips') reveals an interesting semantic thread: foreign, incomprehensible language was itself a form of mockery. Spanish burla and escarnio capture the dual notes of ridicule and shame.

mocking, derision, scorn (7×) Mockery, derision, or scorn – contemptuous ridicule suffered by individuals or the nation, often paired with reproach (herpah) and taunting (qeles) in communal laments (Ps 44:13; 79:4; 123:4). Elihu accuses Job of treating blasphemous speech with casual indifference, 'drinking scorn like water' (Job 34:7), while Ezekiel includes it in the cup of judgment poured out on Jerusalem (Ezek 23:32; 36:4). In Isaiah 28:11, the related construct laagei ('stammerings of') describes foreign speech as inherently mocking, linking incomprehensible language to derision. Spanish burla and escarnio, French moquerie, and the cross-lingual evidence uniformly point to a single sense of contemptuous ridicule. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: a-scorn, and-as-mockery, and-for-scorn | es: burla, de-la-burla-de, escarnio | fr: [ולללעג], [לעגם], le-moquerie | de: [ולעג], [לעגם] Job 34:7; Ps 44:13; Ps 79:4; Ps 123:4; Ezek 23:32

לָעֵג H3934 Adj-mpc (2×)
mockers, scoffers (adjective/noun)
An adjectival form meaning 'mocking' or 'scoffing,' used as a substantive to denote mockers. The word appears in textually difficult passages in Psalms and Isaiah. In Psalm 35:16, it describes 'mockers of mockery' (a difficult Hebrew phrase). In Isaiah 28:11, it appears in a phrase about stammering or mocking lips through which God will speak to the people—a passage later quoted in 1 Corinthians 14.

(2×) Functions as an adjective meaning 'mocking' or as a plural noun 'mockers.' Found in two textually challenging contexts: Psalm 35:16 (where 'mockers of mockery' or similar appears, though the exact text is disputed) and Isaiah 28:11 (where God threatens to speak to Israel through 'stammering lips' or 'mocking speech' of foreigners). The Isaiah passage became significant in New Testament theology about speaking in tongues. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: mockers-of, with-stammering | es: burlas-de, con-balbuceo-de | fr: [בלעגי], à-moqueur | de: [בלעגי], mockers-von Ps 35:16; Isa 28:11

לְעָדָה H3935 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

La'dah (personal name; descendant of Judah through Shelah)

La'dah was a man of Judah, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:21 among Shelah's descendants. The Septuagint renders the name variously as Μαδαθ, Ααδα, or Λαδη, showing typical textual variation. Nothing is known about this individual beyond his genealogical placement. He represents one of many names preserved in Chronicles' detailed tribal records, showing the biblical writers' concern to maintain family histories even for individuals who left no narrative footprint.

(1×) First Chronicles 4:21 lists La'dah among Judah's descendants without further information. Modern translations preserve the name with minor phonetic variations: Spanish "Laada," French and German retain the Hebrew form. These genealogical preservations testify to the value ancient Israelites placed on family identity and tribal belonging, maintaining records even for otherwise unknown individuals. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-La'dah | es: y-Laada | fr: [ולעדה] | de: [ולעדה] 1Chr 4:21

לַעְדָן H3936 N-proper-ms (7×)

Ladan, a proper name borne by an Ephraimite ancestor of Joshua and a Gershonite Levite clan head

A Hebrew proper masculine name appearing in Chronicles for two distinct individuals. The first is an Ephraimite listed in the genealogy of Joshua's line (1 Chr 7:26). The second is a Gershonite Levite who heads a major clan responsible for temple treasury oversight (1 Chr 23:7-9; 26:21). The LXX renders the name variously as Ladan, Edan, and Laadan, reflecting early uncertainty about its vocalization.

Ladan (7×) The proper name Ladan, identifying two Old Testament figures: (a) an Ephraimite in Joshua's ancestral line (1 Chr 7:26), and (b) a Gershonite Levite whose descendants served as temple treasurers under David's reorganization (1 Chr 23:7-9; 26:21). The LXX diversity (Ladan, Edan, Laadan) shows the name was transmitted with some fluidity in the Greek tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ladan, of-Ladan | es: Laadán, para-Laadán | fr: Edan | de: [ללעדן], [לעדן] 1Chr 7:26; 1Chr 23:7; 1Chr 23:8; 1Chr 23:9; 1Chr 26:21

לָעַז H3937 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

foreign tongue, unintelligible speech (language that sounds like babbling)

This Qal participle describes speaking in an unintelligible or foreign language, appearing in Psalm 114:1 to characterize the Egyptian language from Israel's perspective: "a people of foreign tongue." The verb suggests talking indistinctly or in a way that cannot be understood. Later Hebrew uses derivatives for foreign language or foreigner. To Israelite ears, Egyptian speech sounded like incomprehensible babbling. Spanish "lengua extraña" (strange tongue) and German "foreign tongue" both capture this sense of linguistic alienness.

(1×) Psalm 114:1 celebrates the Exodus: "When Israel went out from Egypt, from a people of foreign tongue." Spanish "de-lengua-extraña" (of strange language) and German "foreign tongue" emphasize the linguistic barrier. The psalm highlights Israel's deliverance not just from slavery but from a completely alien culture where even language marked their otherness, making the redemption all the more dramatic. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreign-tongue | es: de-lengua-extraña | fr: à-force | de: foreign-Zunge Ps 114:1

לָעַט H3938 V-Hifil-Imp-ms / 1cs (1×)

gulp down, swallow greedily (Hiphil causative: make oneself swallow rapidly)

This Hiphil imperative means to cause oneself to swallow or gulp down rapidly, appearing in Genesis 25:30 where Esau, exhausted from the field, begs Jacob: "Let me gulp down some of that red stuff." The verb suggests greedy, rapid swallowing without careful chewing. Later Hebrew uses this verb for forcibly feeding cattle. Esau's crude demand—he doesn't even use the word "stew" but just "that red red"—reveals his famished, impulsive state that led him to despise his birthright for immediate physical satisfaction.

(1×) Genesis 25:30 records Esau's desperate request: "Let me gulp down some of that red stuff." Spanish "hazme-tragar" (make me swallow) and German "lass-mich-schlucken" (let me swallow) both preserve the causative force. The greedy, hasty swallowing verb reveals Esau's impulsive character—he values immediate appetite satisfaction over future blessing, leading to his tragic trade. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING

en: let-me-gulp | es: hazme-tragar | fr: que-moi-gulp | de: lass-mich-schlucken Gen 25:30

לַעֲנָה H3939 Prep-l / N-fs (8×)

Wormwood; a bitter plant (Artemisia) used figuratively for the bitterness of divine judgment, injustice, and sin's consequences.

A feminine noun denoting wormwood (Artemisia absinthium), used exclusively in figurative contexts throughout the Hebrew Bible to evoke intense bitterness. Amos pairs it with rosh ('poison') to condemn the perversion of justice (Am 5:7; 6:12), while Deuteronomy warns that idolatry bears a 'root sprouting wormwood' (Dt 29:18). In Jeremiah and Lamentations, God feeds the unfaithful people wormwood and bitter water as chastisement (Jer 9:15; 23:15; Lam 3:15, 19). Proverbs warns that the seductive woman's end is 'bitter as wormwood' (Prov 5:4). The Arabic cognate laʿn means 'curse,' hinting at the word's association with affliction.

wormwood (bitter plant) (8×) The bitter herb wormwood (Artemisia), used metaphorically for the poisonous consequences of sin, injustice, and divine judgment. In prophetic speech, God declares he will feed his people wormwood and give them poisoned water (Jer 9:15; 23:15), while Lamentations 3:15 and 3:19 use it as a personal lament for affliction ('he filled me with bitterness, he sated me with wormwood'). Amos 5:7 and 6:12 pair la'anah with rosh to denounce the corruption of justice. In wisdom literature, the strange woman's end is 'bitter as wormwood' (Prov 5:4). Spanish ajenjo and French absinthe both derive from traditions of identifying this plant with Artemisia absinthium, the same bitter herb behind the notorious liqueur. BURIAL INTERMENT en: and-wormwood, into-wormwood, like-wormwood | es: ajenjo, como-el-ajenjo, de-ajenjo | fr: absinthe, et-wormwood, כלענה | de: Wermut, [לענה], und-wormwood Deut 29:18; Prov 5:4; Jer 9:15; Jer 23:15; Lam 3:15

לַפִּיד H3940 Art / N-mp (14×)

Torch, firebrand; a burning brand used for light, warfare, or as a visionary and metaphorical image of fire.

A vivid term for a burning torch, lappid appears in some of Scripture's most memorable scenes. In the covenant ceremony of Genesis 15:17, a smoking oven and a lappid of fire pass between the severed animal pieces – a theophany sealing God's promise to Abraham. Gideon's three hundred break their jars to reveal torches in the night assault on Midian (Judg 7:16, 20). Samson ties torches to foxes' tails and sets Philistine grain ablaze (Judg 15:4-5). In vision the word shifts to supernatural fire: lightning at Sinai (Exod 20:18), angelic eyes like lappidei-esh (Dan 10:6), and the fiery darting of chariots at Nineveh's fall (Nah 2:5).

torch, firebrand (14×) A burning torch or firebrand, literal and figurative. Appears in the Abrahamic covenant theophany as a 'torch of fire' between the pieces (Gen 15:17), in Gideon's night attack (Judg 7:16, 20), and Samson's destruction of Philistine fields (Judg 15:4-5). Extended to lightning at Sinai (Exod 20:18), angelic eyes (Dan 10:6), flashing chariots (Nah 2:5), and Judah's conquering leaders (Zech 12:6). LAMPS AND TORCHES

en: and-a-torch-of, and-like-a-torch-of, and-torches | es: Antorcha, antorchas, como-antorcha | fr: [כלפיד], dans-le-torches, et-torche | de: [הלפדים], [וכלפיד], [כלפיד] Gen 15:17; Exod 20:18; Judg 7:16; Judg 7:20; Judg 15:4

לַפִּידוֹת H3941 N-proper-ms (1×)

Lappidot (personal name; husband of the prophetess Deborah)
Lappidot was the husband of Deborah the prophetess and judge of Israel. Judges 4:4 identifies Deborah as "wife of Lappidot," though he plays no other role in the narrative. The name's form is unusually feminine, leading to various scholarly speculations, though the text clearly presents him as Deborah's husband. The Septuagint renders it as Λαφ(ε)ιδωθ. His only significance in Scripture is his marital relationship to one of Israel's most important leaders during the judges period.

(1×) Judges 4:4 identifies Deborah as "wife of Lappidot," providing his only biblical mention. All modern translations preserve "Lappidot" (or variants) as a proper name. The feminine form of the name has puzzled commentators, but the text is clear about the marital relationship. Lappidot's obscurity contrasts with Deborah's prominence, showing that God's calling transcends social conventions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Lappidot | es: Lapidot | fr: Lappidot | de: Lappidot Judg 4:4

לִפְנֵי H3942 Prep-l / N-msc / 1cs (1×)

before, in front of (textually problematic; likely reads 'before the inner sanctuary')
This reading in 1 Kings 6:17 is textually problematic. The Masoretic text reads something like "before me," but most scholars follow the Septuagint in reading "before the inner sanctuary" (לִפְנֵי הַדְּבִיר). The context describes the dimensions of the temple's main hall in relation to the Holy of Holies. The phrase indicates spatial positioning—the main sanctuary stood before or in front of the innermost chamber. This represents a case where the Septuagint likely preserves the original reading better than the Hebrew manuscript tradition.

(1×) First Kings 6:17 describes the temple's forty-cubit main hall positioned "before" the inner sanctuary, though the exact Hebrew reading is disputed. Modern translations typically follow the Septuagint's "before the inner sanctuary" rather than the Masoretic "before me." The verse establishes the spatial relationship between the temple's main hall and the Holy of Holies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: before | es: delante | fr: devant | de: vor 1Kgs 6:17

לָפַת H3943 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

to twist, grasp with twisting motion, turn sharply
A verb describing a turning, twisting, or grasping motion. Samson grasped the two central pillars—probably with a twisting, forceful grip. Boaz turned over suddenly in the night, startled to find Ruth at his feet. Job uses it metaphorically for wadis that 'wind away' or 'turn aside' as their water fails. The root conveys sudden, rotational movement, whether physical grasping or directional change.

(3×) Judges 16:29 depicts Samson's final act: 'and he grasped (וַיִּלְכֹּד) the two middle pillars,' using force and leverage to bring down the temple. Ruth 3:8 describes Boaz's midnight surprise: 'the man turned sharply (וַיִּלָּפֵת) and behold, a woman!' The Niphal suggests reflexive, sudden movement—he started and twisted around. Job 6:18 has caravan paths 'wind away' or 'turn aside' (יִלָּכְתוּ) into the desert, though some read this as Qal (caravans turn aside). Translations: Spanish 'abrazar/volver,' German 'grasped,' French 'tourna.' RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-grasped, and-he-turned, wind | es: Se-tuercen, Y-abrazó, y-se-volvió | fr: et-grasped, et-il-tourna, ילכתו | de: [וילכת], [ילפתו], und-grasped Judg 16:29; Ruth 3:8; Job 6:18

לָצוֹן H3944 N-ms (3×)

scorning, mocking speech or attitude directed at others
This noun denotes the act or attitude of scorning and mocking. In Proverbs it appears in the phrase 'men of scorning' (scorners), referring to those who habitually mock wisdom and righteousness. Isaiah uses it similarly to characterize the scoffing rulers of Jerusalem. The word emphasizes the contemptuous attitude and derisive speech of those who reject divine instruction.

(3×) The multilingual evidence consistently points to scornful, mocking speech and attitude. Spanish 'burla, escarnio' (mockery, scorn) and English 'scoffing' all capture the derisive nature of this communication. Found in Proverbs describing habitual scorners (1:22, 29:8) and in Isaiah 28:14 condemning Jerusalem's scoffing leaders who trust in lies rather than God's covenant. MOCKERY AND SCORN
en: of-scorn, scoffing | es: burla, escarnio | fr: [לצון], לצון | de: [לצון] Prov 1:22; Prov 29:8; Isa 28:14

לֵיץ H3945 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

scoffers, mockers (those who habitually ridicule wisdom and righteousness)
This Piel participle denotes habitual scoffers or mockers who treat serious matters with contempt. While the verb appears throughout Proverbs describing those who mock wisdom, this particular form in Hosea 7:5 describes court officials who scoff alongside a drunken king. The scoffer is a stock character in Wisdom literature—proud, unteachable, delighting in ridicule rather than instruction. Proverbs warns repeatedly that scoffers cannot be corrected and bring strife wherever they go. They represent the opposite of the wise person who fears God.

(1×) Hosea 7:5 describes a corrupt royal court: "On the day of our king, the princes became sick with heat from wine; he stretched out his hand with scoffers." Spanish "burladores" (mockers) identifies these court officials who encourage the king's drunkenness and folly. The participle suggests habitual mockery—these are professional cynics who scorn righteousness, making them dangerous counselors. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: scoffers | es: burladores | fr: mépriser | de: [לצצים] Hos 7:5

לַקּוּם H3946 N-proper-fs (1×)

Laqqum (place name; border town in Naphtali's territory)
Laqqum was a border town in Naphtali's tribal inheritance, mentioned in Joshua 19:33. The site's exact location is unknown. The Septuagint renders it as Δωδαμ or Λακουμ. It appears in the detailed boundary descriptions that mark each tribe's allotted territory in the land of Canaan. These geographical lists, while sometimes difficult to interpret today, provided crucial legal documentation of tribal land rights in ancient Israel.

(1×) Joshua 19:33 lists Laqqum among Naphtali's border towns in the tribal allocation. Modern translations preserve the name: Spanish "Lacum," French "Laqqum," German "Laqqum." Though the precise site cannot be identified today, the biblical record preserves these boundary markers, testifying to the historical reality of Israel's tribal land distribution under Joshua. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Laqqum | es: Lacum | fr: Laqqum | de: Laqqum Josh 19:33

לָקַח H3947 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (967×)

To take, seize, grasp; receive, accept; fetch, bring; take away; (Nifal) be taken; (Hitpael) flash, flame.
Laqach is the Hebrew Bible's workhorse verb for taking — used nearly a thousand times across every register from mundane to momentous. God takes Adam's rib (Gen 2:21), Abraham takes Isaac (Gen 22:6), and Pharaoh's officers take Sarah (Gen 12:15). But the verb is not monolithic: context shifts it from active seizure to willing reception, from fetching and bringing to having something taken away. The Nifal provides the passive ('she was taken,' Gen 2:23), and a rare Hitpael yields the vivid image of the flaming sword 'flashing back and forth' at Eden's gate (Gen 3:24). Cognate Arabic laqiha narrowed to conception, while Ethiopic leqeha settled on receiving — each preserving one facet of this richly polysemous root.

1. take, seize, grasp (Qal) (940×) The core Qal transitive sense: to take, seize, grasp, pick up. By far the most frequent use, covering physical grasping, selecting, capturing, and acquiring.

Arabic akhatha, Korean chwihada, Swahili kuchukua, Spanish tomar all converge on active appropriation. From 'God took the man' (Gen 2:15) to 'take your son' (Gen 22:2). RECEIVING AND TAKING en: And-took, and-he-took, and-took | es: Y-tomaron, Y-tomó, y-tomó | fr: Et-prit, et-il-prit, et-prit | de: und-nahm, und-nahm-, und-nahmen Gen 2:15; Gen 2:21; Gen 3:6; Gen 8:20; Gen 11:29

2. receive, accept (Qal) (13×) To receive or accept what is offered or given — distinguished from active seizure by the volitional transfer from another party. Arabic qabul (acceptance), Korean batda (receive), Swahili pokea confirm the receptive nuance. Seen in priestly contexts like receiving tithes (Num 18:26) and Job's 'the earth opened her mouth to receive' (Gen 4:11). RECEIVING AND TAKING en: I-received, and-shall-take, and-you-shall-receive | es: de-tomar, para-recibir, para-tomar | fr: et—prendre, et-tu-devra-reçois, je-reçut | de: du-nehmen, ich-empfing, nahm Gen 4:11; Exod 22:11; Exod 29:1; Num 18:26; Num 18:28

3. be taken, be seized (Nifal/Qal passive) (6×) Passive: to be taken, captured, seized, carried away by another agent. The Nifal and Qal passive forms appear in narratives of women taken (Gen 12:15), cities captured, and persons carried off. Arabic ukhitha (passive), Korean chwihae jida, Swahili chukuliwa all mark passive voice, confirming the stem distinction. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: and-was-taken, let-be-brought, was-taken- | es: Y-fue-tomada, fue-tomada-, fuiste-tomado | fr: et-prendre, et-était-pris, que-être-apporta | de: bist-du-genommen, geholt-werden-soll-, genommen-wurde- Gen 2:23; Gen 3:19; Gen 12:15; Gen 18:4; Esth 2:8

4. fetch, bring (Qal) (4×) To fetch, bring, or go and get — emphasizing motion toward the speaker. Abraham says 'let me fetch a morsel of bread' (Gen 18:5); Rebekah tells Jacob 'go, fetch me two kids' (Gen 27:9). Arabic ahdara (bring/fetch), Korean deryeooda, Swahili leta all carry the directional component absent from simple taking. BEARING AND CARRYING en: and-let-me-bring, and-take-you, and-they-shall-bring | es: Y-tomaré, tráelos, y-te-traeré | fr: apporter-eux-, et-ils—apporter, et-prendre-tu | de: bring-sie, und-hole-dich, und-ich-will-holen Gen 18:5; Gen 27:45; Gen 48:9; Exod 27:20

5. (2×) A rare Hitpael sense: to flash or flame back and forth. Used of fire 'flashing continually' in Exod 9:24 and the fiery appearance in Ezek 1:4. Arabic muttaqida (blazing), Korean beonjjeogineun (flashing) confirm the semantic leap from 'taking turns' to flickering flame — a reflexive-iterative extension. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: flashing | es: centelleando, flamante | fr: flashing, prendre | de: flashing, nehmen Exod 9:24; Ezek 1:4

6. (2×) To take away or remove from someone — the ablative nuance of laqach where what is taken is stripped or withdrawn. In Exod 21:10, a husband must not diminish a wife's rights; in Hos 4:11, wine and new wine 'take away' the understanding. Spanish quitar (remove), Korean ppaeatta (snatch away) isolate this dispossessive sense. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: he-takes, takes-away- | es: quitan, toma | fr: il-prendra, il-takes | de: er-nimmt Exod 21:10; Hos 4:11

לֶקַח H3948 N-ms (9×)

Learning, teaching, or instruction received; also persuasiveness or the alluring power of speech.

Derived from the root laqach ('to take, receive'), this noun captures knowledge as something received and internalized. Moses likens his teaching to rain that soaks the earth (Deut 32:2), and Proverbs repeatedly commends the wise person who 'increases learning' (Prov 1:5; 9:9). The word can denote both the subjective acquisition of knowledge (what the learner gains) and the objective content being taught (what the teacher gives, as in Prov 4:2). A striking secondary sense appears in Proverbs 7:21, where the seductress overcomes her victim with her leqach – not instruction but persuasiveness, the dangerous power of compelling speech.

1. teaching, instruction, learning (8×) The core sense of teaching, instruction, or learning – knowledge that is received and absorbed. Subjectively, it is what a wise person accumulates: 'a wise man will hear and increase learning' (Prov 1:5; 9:9). Objectively, it is the content transmitted: Moses' teaching drops like rain (Deut 32:2), and Job asserts 'my teaching is pure' (Job 11:4). Proverbs 4:2 and Isaiah 29:24 further confirm this double perspective. Arabic laqah ('understanding') and the consistent multilingual rendering as 'instruction/enseignement/enseñanza' anchor the sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-learning, instruction, learning | es: aprendizaje, enseñanza, es-mi-doctrina, | fr: [לקח], instruction, mon-instruction-moi | de: [לֶקַח], mein-teaching, nahm Deut 32:2; Job 11:4; Prov 1:5; Prov 4:2; Prov 9:9

2. persuasiveness, persuasion (1×) A specialized sense of persuasiveness or alluring speech-power, attested in Proverbs 7:21 where the seductress overcomes her victim 'with her persuasion' (liqqachah). Here leqach is no longer neutral instruction but the seductive force of compelling words – what Proverbs 16:21 calls the 'persuasiveness' that sweetness of lips increases. The shift from received wisdom to manipulative eloquence is subtle but lexically real, marked by context and confirmed by the Spanish persuasion and English 'her-persuasion' in the translation evidence. PERSUASION AND TRUST
en: her-persuasion | es: persuasión-de-ella | fr: sa-instruction-elle | de: [לקחה] Prov 7:21

לִקְחִי H3949 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Liqchi (personal name; Manassite descendant listed in Chronicles)

Liqchi was a descendant of Manasseh, appearing in 1 Chronicles 7:19. The Septuagint renders the name as Λαχεειμ, Λαχεια, or Λοχεειμ, showing typical textual variation. Nothing else is known about this individual from Scripture or extrabiblical sources. He represents one of many names in Chronicles' genealogical records, demonstrating the biblical writers' commitment to preserving tribal family structures even for individuals who played no role in the larger narrative.

(1×) First Chronicles 7:19 lists Liqchi among Manasseh's descendants without additional information. Modern translations preserve the name with phonetic adjustments: Spanish "Liquí," others retain the Hebrew form. These genealogical preservations reflect the importance of family identity and tribal continuity in ancient Israel, maintaining records across generations even when individual stories were lost. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Liqchi | es: y-Liquí | fr: [ולקחי] | de: [ולקחי] 1Chr 7:19

לָקַט H3950 Conj-w (37×)

To pick up, gather, or glean; covers collecting manna, gleaning leftover grain, and assembling people

A verb of practical, earthy gathering — bending low to pick up what lies on the ground. In the Torah it appears most memorably in the manna narratives of Exodus 16, where Israel goes out each morning to collect God's provision. In Ruth it takes on its most iconic sense: gleaning the edges of a harvested field, an act freighted with social justice and divine compassion (Lev 19:9-10). The Piel intensifies the action into thorough gleaning, while rare Hitpael and Pual stems extend it to assembling people and being gathered passively. Cognates in Arabic (laqata, to pick up like a bird pecking grain) and Aramaic confirm the core image of stooping to collect small items one by one.

1. glean, gather thoroughly (Piel) (19×) Intensive gleaning in the Piel stem, describing the deliberate, thorough collection of leftover grain from harvested fields. This is the sense behind the gleaning laws of Leviticus 19:9-10 and 23:22, where corners and fallen grain must be left for the poor. Ruth's gleaning in Boaz's field (Ruth 2) epitomizes the practice. Multilingual translations converge on 'gleaned/espigo/glana,' highlighting the agricultural specificity. Also extends to picking up sticks and other scattered items. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: and-gathered, and-let-me-glean, and-she-gleaned | es: Y-espigó, Y-recogió, a-recoger | fr: [כמלקט], [מלקטים], elle-glana | de: [כמלקט], [מלקטים], du-soll-sammeln Gen 47:14; Lev 19:9; Lev 19:10; Lev 23:22; Judg 1:7

2. gather, pick up (Qal) (16×) Basic gathering or picking up in the Qal stem — the simple, unmarked act of collecting items from the ground. Dominates the manna narratives (Exod 16:4-22), where each Israelite gathers daily bread from heaven. Also used for gathering stones into a heap at Laban's covenant with Jacob (Gen 31:46) and for picking lilies (Song 6:2). Spanish 'recogian' and German 'sammeln' both reflect this straightforward collecting action. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gathered, and-shall-gather, and-to-gather | es: Y-recogían, a-espigar, a-recoger | fr: et—rassembler, et-pour-cueillir, et-rassembla | de: du-soll-sammeln-es, sammeln, sammelt Gen 31:46; Exod 16:4; Exod 16:5; Exod 16:16; Exod 16:17

3. gather together, assemble (Hitpael) (1×) A rare Hitpael (reflexive-reciprocal) occurrence at Judges 11:3, where worthless fellows 'gathered themselves together' around Jephthah. The reflexive stem shifts the meaning from collecting objects to people assembling of their own accord. Translations like Spanish 'se reunieron' (gathered themselves) and English 'gathered' capture the self-directed, communal action. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gathered | es: y-se-reunieron | fr: et-rassembla | de: und-sammelte Judg 11:3

4. be gathered up (Pual) (1×) The Pual passive at Isaiah 27:12, where Israel 'shall be gathered up' one by one — God acting as harvester, picking up exiled individuals like a gleaner collects fallen grain. The passive voice places emphasis on the divine agent doing the gathering rather than on human effort. Spanish 'sereis recogidos' (you shall be gathered) mirrors the passive construction faithfully. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: shall-be-gathered | es: seréis-recogidos | fr: [תלקטו] | de: [תלקטו] Isa 27:12

לֶקֶט H3951 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

gleaning, what is gleaned (from harvest)

The portion of a harvest field that may be gleaned by the poor, widows, and foreigners—grain deliberately left behind according to Levitical law. This term appears in the Holiness Code's legislation mandating that landowners not harvest the corners of their fields completely, but leave the gleanings for the vulnerable. This practice, illustrated beautifully in the book of Ruth, institutionalized compassion in Israel's agricultural economy.

(2×) Refers to gleanings from harvest—grain or produce left in the field for the poor to collect. Appears in Leviticus 19:9 and 23:22 in nearly identical legal formulations: 'you shall not wholly reap the corners of your field, nor shall you gather the gleaning of your harvest.' This is a cognate accusative construction (gleaning with the verb 'to glean'), emphasizing the portion designated for the marginalized. The law transforms agriculture into an instrument of justice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gleaning-of, and-gleanings-of | es: y-el-rebusco-de | fr: et-gleaning-de, et-gleanings-de | de: und-gleaning-von, und-gleanings-von Lev 19:9; Lev 23:22

לָקַק H3952 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (7×)

To lap or lick — lapping water with the tongue (as dogs or Gideon's soldiers), or licking a surface (blood, dust).

A vivid physical verb capturing the tongue's action against liquid or surface. In the famous test of Gideon's warriors (Judg 7:5-7), God sorts the army by who 'laps water with his tongue like a dog' versus who kneels — only the three hundred lappers are chosen. The other cluster involves dogs licking blood from surfaces: Elijah's grim prophecy that dogs would lick Ahab's blood (1 Kgs 21:19), fulfilled at Samaria's pool (1 Kgs 22:38). Spanish distinguishes these nicely: 'lame' (he laps, present) for the water-drinking context, and 'lamieron/lameran' (they licked) for the blood-licking scenes.

1. to lap (water, with the tongue) (4×) To lap water with the tongue, describing how a person or animal drinks by scooping water into the mouth. Central to the Gideon narrative (Judg 7:5-7), where soldiers are tested: 'everyone who laps the water with his tongue as a dog laps, you shall set apart.' The Piel participial form hamlaqqeqim ('the ones lapping') in Judg 7:6 designates the select three hundred. Spanish 'lame' (he laps) and 'los que lamieron' (those who lapped) preserve the distinction between the act and the group identity. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: laps, the-ones-lapping | es: lama, lame, los-que-lamieron | fr: laps, le-les-lapant | de: der-die-lapping, laps Judg 7:5; Judg 7:6; Judg 7:7

2. to lick (a surface) (3×) To lick a surface — specifically dogs licking up blood from the ground or a pool. In 1 Kgs 21:19 Elijah prophesies, 'In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, dogs will lick your blood also,' and 1 Kgs 22:38 records its fulfillment when dogs licked Ahab's blood at the pool of Samaria. The direct object is a surface substance (blood, dust) rather than a body of water, distinguishing this from the lapping sense. Spanish 'lamieron' (they licked) and 'y lamieron' (and they licked) consistently use the surface-contact verb. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-licked, licked, will-lick | es: lamerán, lamieron, y-lamieron | fr: et-licked, fera-lick, licked | de: licked, und-licked, wird-lick 1Kgs 21:19; 1Kgs 22:38

לָקַשׁ H3953 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (1×)

glean, despoil, take the aftermath (strip completely like taking second-growth crops)

This Piel verb likely means to glean or despoil completely, derived from the noun for aftermath or second-growth crops. Job 24:6 uses it to describe the wicked despoiling "the vineyard of the rich" (or "wicked"). The image is of taking everything, like harvesters who take even the aftermath that normally belongs to the poor. Some scholars suggest it means to gather quickly or snatch up everything. The context describes ruthless exploitation by those who leave nothing for the vulnerable.

(1×) Job 24:6 describes oppressors who "glean the vineyard" of the wealthy wicked (or possibly "the rich"), taking even what should be left for the poor. Spanish "rebuscan" (they glean/scavenge) captures the thorough despoiling. This rare verb appears in Job's catalogue of social injustices, painting a picture of complete exploitation where the powerful take everything, leaving the poor without even the gleanings traditionally reserved for them. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: they-glean | es: rebuscan. | fr: ילקשו | de: [ילקשו] Job 24:6

לֶקֶשׁ H3954 N-ms (2×)

late crop, spring growth after early harvest

A term for the late spring crop or after-growth that comes up after the king's early harvest. Amos 7:1 describes a prophetic vision of locusts devouring this late crop—the vegetation that springs up after the king's mowing, which would have been the people's sustenance. The term may relate to the late rains (malkosh) that enable this second growth, though the exact botanical and agricultural reference remains debated.

(2×) Refers to late spring growth or after-crop that appears after the early harvest. Amos 7:1 mentions it twice: the prophet sees locusts forming 'at the beginning of the shooting up of the late crop —the late crop after the king's mowings.' This suggests a second crop vital to the people after royal taxation took the first. Spanish 'hierba tardía' (late grass) captures the timing. Some interpreters connect it etymologically to 'latter rain' (malkosh). RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: the-late-crop | es: hierba-tardía, la-hierba-tardía | fr: glanure, pour-paille | de: [הלקש], [לקש] Amos 7:1

לֶשַׁד H3955 N-msc (2×)

juice, moisture, sap (of body or food)

A term for liquid essence, juice, or moisture, used in two distinct contexts. In Numbers 11:8, it describes the taste of manna as being like 'the taste of fresh oil' (literally 'juice of oil')—rich, oily, delicate. In Psalm 32:4, the psalmist laments that his vitality or life-moisture has been transformed into the drought of summer under the weight of unconfessed sin. Both uses emphasize liquid vitality.

(2×) Denotes juice, liquid essence, or moisture. Has two biblical applications: (1) culinary—the oily, juicy taste of manna (Numbers 11:8), where 'juice of oil' suggests rich, fresh-pressed oil flavor; (2) bodily—the psalmist's inner moisture or vitality drained by guilt (Psalm 32:4), where 'my moisture turned to summer's drought' metaphorically describes spiritual and physical depletion. Both contexts emphasize liquid as life-force or pleasant essence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: juice-of, my-moisture | es: mi-vigor, pasta-de | fr: juice-de, à-Tout-Puissant | de: juice-von, mein-moisture Num 11:8; Ps 32:4

לָשׁוֹן H3956 Conj-w / N-cs (117×)

Tongue; the physical organ of speech, and by extension language, a tongue-shaped bay of the sea, or a bar/wedge of gold

In its most basic sense, lashon refers to the physical tongue in the mouth, but Hebrew employs this word across a remarkable semantic range. The tongue is the instrument of both blessing and cursing, eloquence and deceit (Ps 34:13, Job 5:21). By natural metonymy it comes to mean an entire language or speech, as when Genesis 10 catalogs the nations 'according to their tongues.' The same shape-metaphor extends to geography – a tongue-shaped bay of the Dead Sea (Josh 15:2) – and even to objects, as in the famous 'tongue of gold' Achan coveted at Jericho (Josh 7:21). Arabic lisan and Aramaic lishan preserve the same primary sense across Semitic.

1. tongue, physical organ of speech (98×) The literal organ in the mouth, extended figuratively as the instrument of speech – praise, prayer, slander, and cunning all operate through it. Exodus 4:10 records Moses protesting he is 'heavy of tongue,' while 2 Samuel 23:2 places God's word upon David's tongue. Arabic لسان and Ethiopic ልሳን share this primary meaning across Semitic, and virtually every target language (Korean 혀, Swahili ulimi, Hindi जीभ) renders it with the basic anatomical term. TONGUE (BODY AND SPEECH)

en: O-tongue-of, a-tongue, a-tongue-of | es: Lengua-de, Lengua-de-, con-lengua-de | fr: langue | de: Zunge, Zunge-, der-Zunge Exod 4:10; 2Sam 23:2; Job 5:21; Job 15:5; Job 20:16

2. language, speech of a people (14×) By metonymy the tongue stands for the language a people speaks, appearing characteristically in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:5, 20, 31) and in Esther's decree sent to each province 'according to its tongue' (Esth 1:22). Spanish lengua, French langue, and German Zunge all preserve this same organ-to-language shift, confirming a near-universal cognitive path. TONGUE (BODY AND SPEECH)

en: according-to-his-language, according-to-its-language, according-to-language-of | es: conforme-a-su-lengua, lenguas-de, según-lengua-de | fr: et-dans-langue, et-langue, langue | de: Zunge, nach-ihren-Sprachen, nach-seiner-Sprache Gen 10:5; Gen 10:20; Gen 10:31; Deut 28:49; Neh 13:24

3. bay, tongue of the sea (3×) A tongue-shaped geographic feature, specifically a bay or inlet of the sea. All three occurrences appear in boundary descriptions in Joshua (15:2, 15:5, 18:19), referring to the southern tongue of the Dead Sea. Hindi खाड़ी ('bay') and Swahili ghuba ('gulf') render this as a distinct topographic term rather than a body part. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-tongue-of, the-tongue, tongue-of | es: desde-la-lengua-de, la-lengua, la-lengua-de | fr: de-tongue-de, le-tongue, tongue-de | de: der-tongue, tongue-von, von-tongue-von Josh 15:2; Josh 15:5; Josh 18:19

4. bar, tongue-shaped wedge (2×) A tongue-shaped solid object, specifically a bar or wedge of precious metal. Both occurrences describe the 'tongue of gold' Achan took from Jericho (Josh 7:21, 24). The shape metaphor is transparent: Korean 혀 모양 ('tongue-shape') captures the logic, while Swahili kipande ('piece, bar') moves to the material rather than the shape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-bar-of, the-bar-of | es: lengua-de, y-lengua-de | fr: et-un-bar-de, le-bar-de | de: der-bar-von, und-ein-bar-von Josh 7:21; Josh 7:24

לִשְׁכָּה H3957 Art / N-fp (48×)

lishkah – chamber, room, or hall; a side room in a temple, palace, or public building for storage or assembly

The feminine noun lishkah ('chamber, room, hall') designates a room or suite of rooms attached to a larger public or sacred building, used for eating, storage, priestly duties, or assembly. Its 48 occurrences cluster in three main contexts. First, in Samuel it denotes the room where a sacrificial meal takes place (1 Sam 9:22). Second, in Jeremiah it refers to temple side-chambers where wine is offered to the Rechabites (Jer 35:2, 4) and where Baruch reads the scroll (Jer 36:10, 12, 20-21). Third, and most numerously, in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40-46) and in Ezra-Nehemiah and Chronicles, lishkah designates the many chambers of the temple complex used for priestly habitation, Levitical stores, and treasury purposes. The word may be cognate with Greek lesche ('public hall'). Spanish camara, French chambre, and German Kammer render it consistently.

chamber or room (48×) A room, chamber, or hall within a temple, palace, or public building complex, serving various functions including sacrificial dining (1 Sam 9:22), prophetic encounter (Jer 35:2-4; 36:10), storage of tithes and offerings (Neh 10:37-39; 13:4-9), and priestly quarters (Ezek 40:17; 42:1-13; 1 Chr 9:26, 33). The architectural specificity varies from a single dining hall in early narratives to entire suites of thirty chambers in Ezekiel's temple vision. Spanish camara, French chambre, and German Kammer converge on a single 'chamber' concept across all 48 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chambers, chambers-of, the-chambers | es: cámaras, cámaras-de, las-cámaras | fr: [הלשכות], [לשכות], chambre | de: Kammer, Kammern, die-Kammern 1Sam 9:22; 2Kgs 23:11; 1Chr 9:26; 1Chr 9:33; 1Chr 23:28

לֶשֶׁם H3958 N-ms (2×)

jacinth, a precious stone (possibly amber or ligure)

A precious stone in the high priest's breastplate, appearing in the third row of gems in Exodus 28 and 39. The exact identification is uncertain—ancient translations suggest jacinth, amber, or ligure (possibly related to carbuncle). The Septuagint renders it 'ligurios,' Latin Vulgate 'ligurius.' Modern scholars have proposed everything from jacinth (zircon) to amber based on etymological connections and ancient descriptions. Whatever its precise identity, it was valued as one of twelve gems representing Israel's tribes.

(2×) A precious stone in the high priest's breastplate, third row. Appears in Exodus 28:19 and 39:12 in identical priestly vestment descriptions. Ancient versions disagree on identification: Septuagint 'ligurios,' possibly connecting to lyncurios (lynx stone) or amber. Some traditions identify it with jacinth (a reddish-orange zircon). The uncertainty reflects the difficulty of mapping ancient gem terminology to modern mineralogy, but all agree it was a valued, beautiful stone worthy of representing one of Israel's tribes. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: jacinth | es: jacinto | fr: hyacinthe | de: jacinth Exod 28:19; Exod 39:12

לֶשֶׁם H3959 N-proper-fs (2×)

Leshem, ancient name of the city Dan

The ancient name of a city captured by the tribe of Dan and renamed after their ancestor. Joshua 19:47 records that the Danites went up and fought against Leshem, captured it, renamed it Dan. This is the same city elsewhere called Laish. The name appears twice in the same verse (Hebrew text), marking both the attack on Leshem and the renaming. This northern city became infamous as a center of alternative worship under Jeroboam.

(2×) A place name, the original designation of the northern city later called Dan. Appears in Joshua 19:47 (twice in the verse) in the account of Dan's conquest and renaming of the city. The name is a variant of Laish, the more common designation. Septuagint renders it 'Lacheis' or 'Lesem,' showing transliteration variation. The city's capture and renaming represent Dan's northern migration and territorial establishment, with lasting theological implications when it became a cult center. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Leshem, to-Leshem | es: Lesem, a-Lesem | fr: Leshem, à-Leshem | de: Leshem, zu-Leshem Josh 19:47

לָשַׁן H3960 V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc (3×)

to slander, to use the tongue maliciously against another

This verbal form specifically means to use the tongue for slander—speaking malicious falsehoods about another person. The Poʿel participle in Psalm 101:5 describes someone who secretly slanders their neighbor, an action the psalmist says he will not tolerate. The Hiphil form appears in Proverbs 30:10 as a warning not to slander a servant to his master. The verb captures the destructive use of speech to damage another's reputation.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly points to slanderous speech. English 'slander, whoever-slanders,' Spanish 'calumnies,' and French 'calomnier' all denote false, malicious accusations. Psalm 101:5 portrays the secret slanderer as intolerable in God's presence, while Proverbs 30:10 warns against slandering even a servant, lest the accuser be held guilty. BLASPHEMY AND SLANDER

en: [ketiv], slander, whoever-slanders | es: Al-que-calumnia, [ketiv], calumnies | fr: calomnier, תלשׁן | de: [ketiv], [תלשׁן], whoever-slanders Ps 101:5; Prov 30:10

לָשׁוֹן H3961 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)

Aramaic noun meaning tongue or language, used in Daniel to denote linguistic groups among the nations

An Aramaic noun cognate to Hebrew lashon, used exclusively in the book of Daniel in the recurring formula 'peoples, nations, and languages.' Rather than referring to the physical organ, it consistently denotes a spoken language or the linguistic community that speaks it. The repeated pairing with 'peoples' and 'nations' underscores the universality of Nebuchadnezzar's and later Darius's decrees. Spanish 'lengua' and English 'language' both capture the metaphorical extension from physical tongue to spoken idiom.

tongue / language (Aramaic) (7×) A tongue in the sense of a spoken language or linguistic group, appearing in the stock Aramaic formula 'peoples, nations, and languages' (Dan 3:4, 7, 29; 4:1; 5:19; 6:25; 7:14). The word never refers to the physical organ in its biblical attestations; it always denotes a language community. The Syriac cognate confirms this semantic range, and multilingual renderings (Spanish 'lenguas,' German 'Sprache') uniformly select the 'language' sense over the anatomical one. TONGUE (BODY AND SPEECH)

en: and-language, and-languages | es: y-las-lenguas, y-lengua, y-lenguas | fr: et-langue | de: und-Sprache, und-Sprachen Dan 3:4; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:29; Dan 4:1; Dan 5:19

לֶשַׁע H3962 N-proper-fs (1×)

Lasha (place name; border point near Sodom and Gomorrah)

Lasha was a place near Sodom and Gomorrah, marking the extent of the Canaanite border in Genesis 10:19. Jerome identified it with Kallirrhoë, a site with hot springs. The Septuagint renders it as Δασα or Λασα. The site's exact location remains uncertain, though it lay in the southeastern region of Canaan. This geographical marker appears in the Table of Nations, defining the extent of Canaanite territory before Israel's arrival.

(1×) Genesis 10:19 uses Lasha as a geographical boundary marker: "the border of the Canaanites extended from Sidon... toward Sodom, Gomorrah... as far as Lasha." All modern translations preserve "Lasha" as a place name. This brief reference locates an otherwise unknown site in relation to the infamous cities of the plain, mapping the pre-Israelite inhabitants' territorial extent. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Lasha | es: Lasha | fr: Lasha | de: Lascha Gen 10:19

לֶתֶךְ H3963 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

lethech (dry measure for barley, approximately half a homer)

This noun denotes a dry measure for grain, appearing in Hosea 3:2 where the prophet purchases his wayward wife for "fifteen shekels of silver and a homer and a lethech of barley." According to the Mishnah, a lethech equals half a homer (about 5 bushels), though this tradition is uncertain. The Septuagint read this differently as "a skin of wine." The measure appears only here, making precise calculation difficult, but the context shows Hosea paying a redemption price partly in grain, symbolizing God's redemptive love for unfaithful Israel.

(1×) Hosea 3:2 describes the prophet buying back his adulterous wife for silver and grain, including "a lethech of barley." Spanish "letek-de" and French "mesure" recognize this as a measure, though the exact quantity remains uncertain. The mixed payment of precious metal and common grain may symbolize the combination of value and sustenance in God's redemption of His people. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lethech-of | es: y-letek-de | fr: et-mesure | de: [ולתך] Hos 3:2

מָה H3964 Prep-l / Interrog (2×)

what? (Aramaic interrogative)

An Aramaic interrogative pronoun meaning 'what?' used in questions and also as an indefinite relative 'whatever.' In Daniel and Ezra, it functions both in direct questions ('what have you done?') and in compound constructions with 'that' (di) to mean 'whatever' or 'that which.' The prefix forms include 'why?' (lemah) and 'how!' (kemah). This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'mah.'

(2×) Aramaic interrogative and indefinite pronoun meaning 'what?' or 'whatever.' Appears in various forms: simple interrogative (Daniel 4:35 'what have you done?'), indefinite relative 'whatever' (Daniel 2:22 'knows what is in darkness'), and with prefixes: lemah 'why?' (Ezra 4:22, 6:8) asking about reason or purpose. The phrase 'mah di' (what that) means 'whatever' (Ezra 6:8, 7:18). The 1 Kings 22:21 reference shows occasional Hebrew usage of this Aramaic form. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: as-to-what, by-what | es: en-cuanto-a-lo-que, ¿Con-qué? | fr: [למא], par-quoi | de: [למא], bei-was 1Kgs 22:21; Ezra 6:8

מַאֲבוּס H3965 N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

granaries, storehouses (places where fodder or grain is kept)

This plural noun denotes granaries or storehouses, appearing in Jeremiah 50:26 in an oracle against Babylon: "Open her granaries." The term likely derives from the word for fodder or feeding-place. The prophecy commands Babylon's conquerors to break into her storage facilities and plunder her accumulated wealth. The image is of a great empire whose carefully hoarded resources become spoil for invaders—a reversal of Babylon's own practice of plundering conquered nations.

(1×) Jeremiah 50:26 commands Babylon's destroyers: "Come against her from every quarter; open her granaries; pile her up like heaps of grain." Spanish "sus-graneros" (her granaries) identifies these as storage facilities. The prophet envisions Babylon's stored wealth and provisions being thrown open to plunderers, reversing the city's long history of accumulating treasures from conquered peoples. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: her-granaries | es: sus-graneros | fr: [מאבסיה] | de: [מאבסיה] Jer 50:26

מְאֹד H3966 Prep-l / Adv (301×)

Very, exceedingly, greatly — the primary Hebrew intensifier for degree or magnitude

Me'od is Biblical Hebrew's most versatile intensifier, appearing 301 times to amplify adjectives, verbs, and even other adverbs. Its first occurrence sets the tone: 'God saw all that he had made, and behold, it was very good' (Gen 1:31). Beyond adverbial use, it carries a rare nominal sense of 'force' or 'might' in the Shema: 'with all your me'od' (Deut 6:5) — a passage so striking that translators struggle with it (Spanish 'muy/mucho,' French 'très/grandement,' German 'sehr/groß'). This dual capacity — abstract intensifier and concrete noun — makes it one of Hebrew's most theologically loaded small words.

1. very, exceedingly, greatly (adverbial intensifier) (299×) Split from sense 109330. Criteria: Modifies adjectives, verbs, or other adverbs to express high degree: 'very good' (Gen 1:31), 'exceedingly angry' (Gen 4:5), 'greatly increased' (Gen 7:18-19)

en: greatly, very | es: en-muy, mucho, muy | fr: grandement, très | de: groß, sehr Gen 1:31; Gen 4:5; Gen 7:18; Gen 7:19

2. might, strength, utmost capacity (substantive) (2×) Split from sense 109330. Criteria: Nominal use with pronominal suffixes meaning 'muchness, utmost force': 'with all your me'od' (Deut 6:5; 2 Kgs 23:25), where it denotes the full measure of one's resources or strength en: his-might, your-strength | es: su-fuerza, tu-fuerza | fr: son-pourrait, ton-force | de: dein-Staerke, sein-koennte Deut 6:5; 2Kgs 23:25

מְאֹד H3967 Conj-w (583×)
Hundred; cardinal numeral for 100 (singular, dual, plural); also a military/administrative unit; rarely a fractional hundredth part.
The basic Hebrew numeral for 'hundred,' מֵאָה appears in singular, dual (מָאתַיִם, 'two hundred'), and plural (מֵאוֹת, 'hundreds') forms throughout the Old Testament. It counts ages in Genesis genealogies, measures temple dimensions, and tallies armies and tribute. Cognates span the Semitic family—Aramaic מְאָה, Arabic مِئَة, Ethiopic ምእት—all preserving the same root. Beyond pure counting, the plural form 'hundreds' became a standard designation for military companies (Exod 18:21), and one passage (Neh 5:11) uses it as a fraction: 'the hundredth part.'

1. cardinal numeral hundred (550×) The cardinal numeral 'hundred' in all its inflected forms—singular, dual ('two hundred'), and plural ('hundreds')—used for counting people, years, measures, and monetary amounts. This is the basic quantitative sense covering ages (Gen 5:4–32), dimensions (Exod 27:9–18), military tallies (Num 31:32–46), and tribute payments. Spanish 'cientos,' French 'cent/centaines,' and German 'hundert' all translate straightforwardly as the numeral. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS
en: hundred, hundreds | es: cientos | fr: cent, centaines | de: hundert Gen 5:4; Gen 5:5; Gen 5:7; Gen 5:8; Gen 5:10

2. military unit of hundreds (32×) The plural 'hundreds' (הַמֵּאוֹת) functioning as a designation for military or administrative divisions—companies of roughly one hundred men. Typically appears with the article in the phrase 'captains/officers of hundreds' (שָׂרֵי מֵאוֹת, Exod 18:21, 25; Num 31:14, 48). The multilingual glosses often include the article ('the-hundreds,' 'las-centenas,' 'der-Hunderte'), confirming this is a recognized institutional title rather than a mere count. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS
en: and-the-hundreds, hundreds, the-hundreds | es: cientos, las-centenas, los-cientos | fr: cent, centaines, et-cent | de: der-Hunderte, der-hundreds, hundreds Exod 18:21; Exod 18:25; Num 31:14; Num 31:28; Num 31:48

3. hundredth part (fraction) (1×) A fractional sense: 'the hundredth part of,' appearing in Nehemiah 5:11 where Nehemiah demands the creditors return the מְאַת (hundredth) of money, grain, wine, and oil they had been exacting. The multilingual glosses all show a partitive construction ('and-hundredth-of,' 'y-la-centésima-de'), distinguishing this rare proportional usage from the ordinary cardinal numeral. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-hundredth-of | es: y-la-centésima-de | fr: et-von-() | de: und-von-() Neh 5:11

מְאָה H3968 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)
the Tower of the Hundred, a tower on Jerusalem's wall
A proper designation for a tower on Jerusalem's northern wall, called 'the Hundred' (perhaps from its height, capacity, or position). Nehemiah mentions it twice in describing the wall reconstruction—3:1 (where the priests built it) and 12:39 (in the dedication procession route). The tower stood near the Sheep Gate and the Tower of Hananel, marking a strategic point in the city's defenses.

(2×) The proper name of a specific tower in Jerusalem's wall system, literally 'the Tower of the Hundred.' Appears in Nehemiah 3:1 and 12:39, both relating to the post-exilic wall rebuilding. The tower was located on the northern wall, near the Sheep Gate and Tower of Hananel. The name 'Hundred' likely refers to some measurement—possibly 100 cubits in height or dimension, or a garrison of 100 soldiers—though the exact reference is uncertain. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS
en: the-Hundred | es: el-ciento, los-Cien | fr: [הַמֵּאָה] | de: [הַמֵּאָה] Neh 3:1; Neh 12:39

מְאָה H3969 Number-fs (8×)
Hundred; the Aramaic cardinal number one hundred, used in compound numerals for counting people, animals, and commodities.
The Aramaic feminine noun for 'hundred,' appearing in Ezra and Daniel in both absolute and dual forms. At the temple dedication, the returning exiles offered one hundred bulls, two hundred rams, and four hundred lambs (Ezr 6:17), while Artaxerxes authorized up to a hundred talents of silver and a hundred cors of wheat (Ezr 7:22). The dual form matayim ('two hundred') appears alongside the absolute. French cent and German hundert translate the numeral straightforwardly, while Spanish uses both cien and ciento depending on syntactic position.

hundred (cardinal number) (8×) The cardinal number one hundred, used in enumerations of sacrificial animals, commodities, and administrative units. In Ezra 6:17, the dedication offerings are counted as one hundred bulls, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs, and twelve goats; in Ezra 7:22 Artaxerxes specifies up to a hundred talents of silver, a hundred cors of wheat, a hundred baths of wine, and a hundred baths of oil. Daniel 6:2 records 'a hundred and twenty satraps.' The dual form matayim ('two hundred') and the absolute meʾah ('hundred') reflect standard Aramaic numeral morphology. Spanish cien/ciento and French cent render the value directly. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS
en: a-hundred, hundred, two-hundred | es: cien, ciento, cuatrocientos | fr: cent | de: hundert Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:22

מַאֲוַי H3970 N-mpc (1×)
desires, longings (construct plural of what the wicked crave)
This plural construct form means desires or longings, appearing in Psalm 140:8 (English v.9) in a prayer against the wicked: "the desires of the wicked." The noun derives from a root meaning to desire or crave. The psalmist prays that God would not grant the wicked what they long for, recognizing that their desires are bent toward evil. The term emphasizes the internal orientation of the heart—what people crave reveals their character, and the wicked person's desires align with schemes and violence.

(1×) Psalm 140:8 pleads: "Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked; do not further their evil plot." Spanish "deseos-de" (desires of) and French "de-désir" identify this as what the wicked long for. The construct plural emphasizes the multiple evil cravings that drive the wicked, which the psalmist asks God to frustrate rather than fulfill, trusting divine justice to thwart evil schemes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: desires-of | es: deseos-de | fr: de-désir | de: desires-of Ps 140:8

H3971 N-ms (1×)
blemish, defect, physical imperfection
This term refers to a physical blemish or defect that disqualifies someone from service. In Daniel 1:4, it describes the requirement that young men chosen for the king's court be without any physical imperfection. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish defecto, French défaut) emphasizes the notion of a flaw or imperfection, whether visible or hidden, that would make someone unsuitable for select service.

(1×) Physical blemish or bodily defect. The qere reading and multilingual glosses (blemish, defecto, défaut) converge on the idea of a disqualifying physical imperfection. Daniel 1:4 specifies that candidates for royal service must be free from such defects, highlighting ancient standards of physical perfection for court positions. BLEM-

ISH PHYSICAL DEFECT
en: (qere:blemish) | es: (defecto) | fr: défaut | de: [מוּם] Dan 1:4

מאוּם H3971a N-ms (2×)
blemish, spot, defect (physical or moral)
A term for blemish, defect, or spot, used both physically and morally. In Daniel 1:4, it describes the unblemished physical perfection required of young men selected for royal service—no defect, handsome, educated. In Job 31:7, Job uses it figuratively, declaring no moral stain has clung to his hands—maintaining his innocence before God. The word denotes any mar or imperfection that would disqualify from service or purity.

(2×) Refers to blemish, spot, or defect. Has both physical and moral applications: (1) Physical blemish—Daniel 1:4 specifies the royal candidates must have 'no blemish,' meaning physically perfect without defect; (2) Moral stain—Job 31:7 speaks of moral blemish that might cling to the hands, representing guilt or sin. The term in both cases denotes disqualifying imperfection. The Kethiv/Qere textual variation (meum/meom) suggests slight form variation but consistent meaning. BRIGHT SKIN SPOT en: [ketiv:blemish], any-spot | es: [defecto], mancha | fr: tache, מאום | de: [מאום], [מאום] Job 31:7; Dan 1:4

מוּם H3971b N-ms (19×)
Blemish, defect, physical flaw — esp. in priestly and sacrificial regulations
A noun denoting a physical blemish, defect, or flaw. It appears overwhelmingly in Levitical legislation, where it disqualifies priests from temple service (Lev 21:17–23) and renders animals unfit for sacrifice (Lev 22:20–25; Deut 15:21; 17:1). Beyond the cultic sphere, the word describes the flawless beauty of Absalom (2 Sam 14:25) and the beloved in Song of Songs 4:7. It extends figuratively to moral defect in Deuteronomy 32:5 and Job 11:15. Spanish 'defecto' and French 'défaut' reflect the same dual physical-moral range found in the Hebrew.

blemish, defect (19×) A physical defect, flaw, or blemish that renders a person or animal ritually unfit. Used chiefly in Priestly and Holiness legislation to disqualify blemished priests from approaching the altar (Lev 21:17–23) and imperfect animals from sacrifice (Lev 22:20–25; Num 19:2; Deut 15:21). Also describes the absence of blemish as ideal beauty (2 Sam 14:25; Song 4:7), and extends metaphorically to moral shame (Deut 32:5; Job 11:15). Spanish 'defecto' and French 'défaut' preserve this same physical-to-moral breadth. BLEMISH PHYSICAL DEFECT
en: a-blemish, and-blemish, blemish | es: defecto, defecto-de-él, hay-defecto | fr: de-מוּם, défaut, et-défaut | de: [ומום], [מומו], [מום] Lev 21:17; Lev 21:18; Lev 21:21; Lev 21:23

מְאוּמָה H3972 N-ms (32×)
anything, something — an indefinite pronoun, typically in negative contexts meaning 'nothing at all' Me'umah is an indefinite pronoun meaning 'anything' or 'something,' appearing 32 times almost exclusively in negative or conditional sentences where it effectively means 'nothing whatsoever.' Its etymology is debated — possibly from mah u-mah ('what and what,' i.e., 'whatever') or from an old accusative meaning 'speck, particle' (compare French 'point' used as a negator). The word concentrates in patriarchal and early monarchic narratives: God commands Abraham not to do 'anything' to Isaac (Gen 22:12), Jacob insists Laban need not give him 'anything' (Gen 30:31), and Samuel challenges Israel to name 'anything' he has taken unjustly (1 Sam 12:4-5). It also appears in legal euphemisms for wrongdoing (Gen 40:15). Multilingual glosses converge on indefinite pronouns: Spanish 'algo/nada,' French 'quelque chose,' German 'irgendetwas.'

anything, something (32×) An indefinite pronoun used overwhelmingly in negative clauses to mean 'nothing at all, not anything.' Abraham is told not to do me'umah to Isaac (Gen 22:12), Jacob refuses me'umah from Laban (Gen 30:31), and Samuel claims he has taken me'umah from no one (1 Sam 12:4-5). The word also appears in euphemistic negation for wrongdoing (Gen 40:15). Its Assyrian cognates mamman/mimma confirm the generalizing indefinite function. NOTHING AND NOBODY en: anything | es: algo, cosa, cosa-alguna | fr: quelque-chose, quoi-que-ce-soit | de: anything, in-seiner-Hand, irgendetwas Gen 22:12; Gen 30:31; Gen 39:6; Gen 39:9; Gen 39:23

מָאוֹס H3973 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
refuse, offscouring, that which is rejected or despised
A rare term meaning refuse or offscouring, appearing only in Lamentations 3:45. BDB defines it as something rejected or cast away. The word appears in a context where Jerusalem describes itself as scum and refuse among the nations—a powerful image of degradation and rejection. The multilingual evidence shows variations in how languages handle this rare term, with some simply transliterating it.

(1×) Refuse, offscouring, rejected waste. BDB translates the phrase as 'offscouring and refuse thou makest us,' depicting Israel's humiliation. The English gloss 'refuse' and Spanish 'rechazo' (rejection) capture the sense of something utterly cast away. Lamentations 3:45 uses this alongside another word for scum to intensify the image of national degradation. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: and-refuse | es: y-rechazo | fr: [ומאוס] | de: [ומאוס] Lam 3:45

מָאוֹר H3974 Prep-l / N-ms (19×)
Luminary, light, light-bearer — a source of illumination, whether celestial body, sacred lamp, or figurative radiance
The noun מָאוֹר designates a source or bearer of light, from the great luminaries of the creation account to the sacred lamps of the tabernacle. In Genesis 1:14-16 God creates the מְאֹרֹת — sun, moon, and stars — to govern day and night, a usage confirmed by every target language shifting to plural forms ('lumbreras,' 'luminaires,' 'Lichter'). The same word describes the golden lampstand's light in Exodus and Leviticus, and it extends figuratively to 'the light of the eyes' that gladdens the heart (Prov 15:30) and 'the light of God's face' that exposes hidden sin (Ps 90:8).

1. light, luminary (singular/general) (15×) A light-source or luminary in the singular or general sense, covering the sun, the moon, the sacred lampstand, and figurative radiance. The majority of occurrences fall here, including the 'greater luminary' and 'lesser luminary' of Gen 1:16, the menorah described as מְנֹרַת הַמָּאוֹר ('the lampstand of the light') in Exod 35:14, and the metaphorical 'light of the eyes' in Prov 15:30. Multilingual glosses converge on singular light-nouns: English 'the light,' Spanish 'Luz de,' French 'la lumiere,' German 'das Licht,' Arabic 'al-nur' — all confirming a unified sense of luminous source without distinction between celestial and cultic referents. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION en: for-the-light, in-the-light-of, the-light | es: Luz-de, a-luz-de, el-alumbrado | fr: de-lumière, la-lumière, le-lumière | de: das-Licht, der-Licht, der-Mond Gen 1:16; Exod 25:6; Exod 27:20; Exod 35:8

2. luminaries, lights (plural/celestial bodies) (4×) The plural form מְאֹרֹת / מְאוֹרֹת designating the celestial luminaries as a class — sun, moon, and stars as created light-bearers set in the firmament. This sense clusters tightly in Genesis 1:14-16, where God says 'let there be luminaries in the expanse,' and in Ezek 32:8 where judgment darkens 'all the luminaries of light in the heavens.' The shift to plural is clearly marked across languages: Spanish 'lumbreras/luminarias,' French 'luminaires,' German 'Lichter,' distinguishing these cosmic light-bearers from the singular lamp or general radiance of sense 1. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION en: for-lights, lights, luminaries-of | es: las-lumbreras, las-luminarias-de, lumbreras | fr: le-luminaires, luminaire, luminaires | de: Lichter, [מאורי], zu-Lichtern Gen 1:14; Gen 1:15; Gen 1:16; Ezek 32:8

מְאוּרָה H3975 N-fsc (1×)
den, light-hole, opening in a serpent's lair

A hapax legomenon denoting the den or light-hole of a serpent. In Isaiah 11:8, it appears in a messianic vision where a child plays near the den of a venomous snake without harm. BDB notes debate over whether this means the snake's den or its eye-ball, though the den interpretation is more widely accepted. The term evokes the dangerous dwelling place that will become safe in the age to come.

(1×) Den or light-hole of a serpent. Isaiah 11:8 places this in an eschatological context where predators and prey coexist peacefully. The multilingual glosses (den-of, cueva-de) support the interpretation of a serpent's lair. BDB mentions an alternative reading of 'eye-ball' based on Targumic tradition, but the den reading better fits the parallel structure with other animal habitats in the passage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: den-of | es: cueva-de | fr: [מאורת] | de: [מאורת] Isa 11:8

מֹאזֶן H3976 N-md (15×)

Scales, balances — a dual-form noun for the weighing instrument used literally in commerce and figuratively for divine judgment

Always appearing in the dual form (מֹאזְנַיִם), this word pictures the two-pan balance that was the ancient world's standard weighing device. Leviticus 19:36 pairs 'just balances' (מֹאזְנֵי צֶדֶק) with honest weights, ephah, and hin — a full set of commercial integrity tools. Proverbs contrasts 'balances of deceit' with those the LORD approves (11:1; 16:11). The metaphorical reach is striking: Isaiah places the islands on God's scales as mere dust (40:12, 15), Job begs to be weighed in 'just balances' (31:6), and the Psalmist warns that mortals placed on the scales are 'lighter than a breath' (62:9). Arabic ميزان and Aramaic cognates confirm the root's broad Semitic currency.

scales for weighing (15×) A pair of balances or scales (always dual: מֹאזְנַיִם) used as an instrument for weighing goods, money, or commodities in trade. Literally employed in Jeremiah 32:10 for weighing silver and Ezekiel 5:1 for weighing hair. Figuratively extended to divine and moral evaluation: 'just balances' (מֹאזְנֵי צֶדֶק) in Leviticus 19:36 and Ezekiel 45:10 represent economic righteousness, while 'balances of deceit' (מֹאזְנֵי מִרְמָה) in Proverbs 11:1 signify fraud. Isaiah 40:12–15 and Psalm 62:9 employ the image cosmically, measuring nations and human worth against the weightlessness of vanity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-scales-of, balances-of, in-a-balance | es: Balanzas-de, balanza-de, balanzas-de | fr: [במאזנים], [מאזני], [מאזנים] | de: [במאזני], [במאזנים], [ומאזני] Lev 19:36; Job 6:2; Job 31:6; Ps 62:9; Prov 11:1

אחד H3977 Prep-b / N-mpd (1×)

balances, scales for weighing

An Aramaic term for balances or scales, appearing in the dramatic scene of Daniel 5:27. The word is part of the divine judgment pronounced at Belshazzar's feast: 'You have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.' The image of weighing emphasizes divine measurement and moral assessment. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as balance or scales, preserving the metaphor of divine judgment.

(1×) Balances, weighing scales used metaphorically for divine judgment. Daniel 5:27 uses this as part of the interpretation of the writing on the wall, where God has weighed the Babylonian king and found him deficient. The multilingual evidence (balances, balanza, balance) maintains the image of precise measurement, underscoring that God's assessment is exact and inescapable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-balances | es: en-la-balanza | fr: balance | de: [במאזניא] Dan 5:27

מַאֲכָל H3978 N-ms (30×)

food, nourishment — edible substance or provision for eating, including fruit, grain, and prepared meals

Ma'akhal, derived from the root akhal ('to eat'), is a general-purpose noun for food that appears 30 times across a wide range of contexts. It first occurs in Eden, where every tree pleasant to sight is described as 'good for food' (tov lema'akhal, Gen 2:9; 3:6), establishing the word's association with desirability and provision. Noah stores ma'akhal aboard the ark for every creature (Gen 6:21). The word extends to fruit trees designated as food-bearing (Lev 19:23; Deut 20:20; Ezek 47:12), royal banquets (1 Kgs 10:5), and the laborer's daily bread (Dan 1:10). Habakkuk uses it figuratively of conquered peoples as 'food' for the Chaldean net (Hab 1:16). Translations converge on a single nutritive concept: Spanish 'comida/alimento,' French 'nourriture,' German 'Speise.'

food, nourishment (30×) Edible substance or nourishment in the broadest sense, covering raw produce, prepared meals, and provisions. First appears describing Eden's trees as 'good for food' (Gen 2:9; 3:6), then Noah's ark provisions (Gen 6:21), fruit-bearing trees in legal codes (Lev 19:23; Deut 20:20), and royal fare (1 Kgs 10:5). Habakkuk extends it figuratively to conquered peoples devoured like fish (Hab 1:16). Samson's riddle plays on the word: 'out of the eater came food' (Judg 14:14). FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-food, and-the-food-of, as-food | es: Y-comida-de, alimento, comida | fr: [ומאכל], [מאכל], de-manger | de: Speise, [ומאכל], [מאכל] Gen 2:9; Gen 3:6; Gen 6:21; Gen 40:17; Lev 19:23

מַאֲכֶלֶת H3979 Conj-w / N-fp (4×)

knife, cutting instrument (for sacrifice or butchering)

This noun designates a knife or cutting instrument, appearing in contexts of sacrifice and violent dismemberment. Abraham took 'the knife' to slay Isaac in the Akedah, the defining moment of his faith. The Levite who found his concubine dead took 'a knife' to divide her body into twelve pieces, sending them throughout Israel as a horrifying summons to justice. Proverbs warns of the wicked whose teeth are like 'knives' devouring the poor. The term emphasizes the instrument's cutting function.

(4×) The knife appears in narratives of sacrifice and violence. Abraham 'took the knife to slay his son' in obedience to God's test (Gen 22:6, 10). The Levite in Judges 'took a knife and laid hold of his concubine and divided her into twelve pieces' (Judg 19:29), creating the outrage that led to civil war. Proverbs warns of a generation 'whose teeth are knives' to devour the afflicted (Prov 30:14), using the implement metaphorically for violent oppression. Spanish el-cuchillo/cuchillos and French le-couteau track the basic knife designation, while German das-Messer/der-knife preserves Germanic equivalents. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1272 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-knives, the-knife | es: el-cuchillo, y-cuchillos | fr: et-ומאכלות, le-couteau, le-knife | de: [ומאכלות], das-Messer, der-knife Gen 22:6; Gen 22:10; Judg 19:29; Prov 30:14

מַאֲכֹלֶת H3980 N-fsc (2×)

fuel for fire

A term for fuel or combustible material for fire, appearing in two parallel passages in Isaiah describing judgment. In both Isaiah 9:5 and 9:19, it describes how various things become 'fuel for fire'—in one case boots and blood-stained garments symbolizing war's end, in another the people themselves consumed in God's wrath. The construct form 'fuel of fire' emphasizes material destined for burning.

(2×) Means fuel or that which feeds fire. Found in Isaiah 9:5 (boots of warriors become fuel for fire, signaling peace) and 9:19 (the people become fuel, consumed in divine judgment). The construct phrase 'fuel of fire' (maakholet esh) designates material intended for burning. The contexts show both positive transformation (weapons destroyed) and negative judgment (people consumed), but the core meaning—combustible material for fire—remains constant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-fuel-of, fuel-of | es: como-pasto-de, pasto-de | fr: [כמאכלת], [מאכלת] | de: [כמאכלת], [מאכלת] Isa 9:5; Isa 9:19

מַאֲמָץ H3981 N-mpc (1×)

exertions, mighty efforts, displays of strength

A plural construct form meaning exertions or displays of power and strength. Appearing only in Job 36:19, the term is part of Elihu's speech questioning whether wealth or mighty efforts can deliver someone from distress. BDB defines it as power, strength, or force exerted. The phrase 'exertions of strength' suggests straining or maximum effort that ultimately proves insufficient apart from God.

(1×) Exertions of power, mighty efforts or displays of strength. Job 36:19 uses this in parallel with wealth to ask whether either can rescue someone in trouble. The English 'exertions-of' captures the sense of strenuous effort, while the context suggests these human resources are inadequate. The term emphasizes the futility of relying on human strength when facing divine discipline. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: exertions-of- | es: esfuerzos-de- | fr: מאמצי | de: [מאמצ] Job 36:19

מַאֲמָר H3982 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

word, command, royal decree (late Hebrew)

A late Hebrew noun appearing exclusively in Esther, denoting a royal word, command, or decree. The term reflects the Persian court context of the book, where the king's word carried absolute authority. It appears in questions about Vashti's disobedience to the royal command (1:15), Esther's obedience to Mordecai's instructions (2:20), and Esther's written decree concerning Purim (9:32). The noun emphasizes the authoritative nature of royal pronouncements.

(3×) The translations consistently render this as 'command, decree, word' with royal or authoritative overtones. Spanish 'mandato' (command) and English 'decree, command' reflect the official nature of these pronouncements. All three occurrences in Esther relate to authoritative directives—Vashti's refusal to obey the king's command, Esther's faithful observance of Mordecai's word, and the written decree establishing Purim. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-decree-of, command-of | es: Y-mandato-de, mandato-de | fr: commandement, et-von-Immer | de: [ומאמר], von-sprach Esth 1:15; Esth 2:20; Esth 9:32

מֵאמַר H3983 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

word, command (Aramaic)

An Aramaic noun meaning word, saying, or command, used in official Persian contexts in Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra 6:9, it refers to the official word or directive of Persian authorities about temple provisions. In Daniel 4:17, it appears in the phrase 'by the word of the holy ones,' describing how divine decrees are pronounced. This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'maamar,' denoting authoritative speech.

(2×) An Aramaic term for word, command, or decree. Appears in construct form: 'according to the word of' (Ezra 6:9) referring to official directives about what is needed for temple service, and 'by the word/command of' (Daniel 4:17) describing divine decrees pronounced by holy watchers. The term conveys authoritative speech or command, particularly in administrative or divine decree contexts. This parallels Hebrew 'maamar' but is specific to Aramaic portions of Scripture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-the-word-of, and-by-command-of | es: según-la-palabra-de, y-por-palabra-de | fr: [כמאמר], et-de-a-dit | de: [ומאמר], [כמאמר] Ezra 6:9; Dan 4:17

מָאן H3984 Conj-w / N-mpd (7×)

Aramaic noun meaning vessel or utensil, referring to the sacred implements of the Jerusalem temple

An Aramaic noun for vessels or utensils, attested only in Ezra and Daniel where it always refers to the sacred temple vessels carried off to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar. These are the gold and silver implements whose fate becomes a major narrative thread: their seizure (Dan 5:2-3, 23), their inventory under Cyrus's decree (Ezra 5:14-15; 6:5), and their authorized return (Ezra 7:19). The word is cognate to Syriac and Old Aramaic forms and parallels Biblical Hebrew keli.

vessels of (7×) Sacred vessels or utensils of the Jerusalem temple, appearing in Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra 5:14-15 and 6:5 the term designates the gold and silver implements inventoried for return under the Persian decree; in Dan 5:2-3, 23 they are the holy vessels profaned at Belshazzar's feast. Spanish splits between 'vasos' (drinking vessels) and 'utensilios' (implements), reflecting the dual usage in the narratives. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-vessels, the-vessels-of, vessels | es: los-utensilios-de, los-vasos-de, utensilios | fr: [ולמאניא], [ומאניא], [למאני] | de: [ולמאניא], [ומאניא], [למאני] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 5:15; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 7:19; Dan 5:2

מָאֵן H3985 V-Piel-Perf-2ms (41×)

refuse, be unwilling — Piel verb expressing deliberate refusal or obstinate unwillingness to comply

Ma'en in the Piel means 'to refuse' or 'to be unwilling,' expressing a deliberate act of will rather than mere inability. Its 41 occurrences paint a portrait of human stubbornness before divine command, rival authority, or social expectation. The word appears first with Jacob, who 'refused to be comforted' over Joseph (Gen 37:35), and with Joseph himself, who 'refused' Potiphar's wife (Gen 39:8) — two very different refusals illuminating the word's moral range. The Exodus narrative turns it into a confrontation formula: 'How long will you refuse to humble yourself before me?' (Exod 10:3). Pharaoh's repeated refusal (Exod 7:14; 9:2; 10:4) becomes the paradigmatic case of human obstinacy against God. Prophetic literature extends this: Israel 'refused to repent' (Jer 5:3; 8:5), 'refused to know me' (Jer 9:5), 'refused to be ashamed' (Jer 3:3).

refuse, be unwilling (41×) To refuse or decline with deliberate intent, expressing willful unwillingness rather than incapacity. The word spans a moral spectrum: from righteous refusal (Joseph refusing adultery, Gen 39:8; the man of God refusing reward, 1 Kgs 20:35) to culpable obstinacy (Pharaoh refusing to let Israel go, Exod 7:14; 9:2; 10:3-4; Israel refusing to repent, Jer 5:3; 8:5; 15:18). Typically takes an infinitive with lamed for the refused action. Rachel's 'refusing to be comforted' (Gen 37:35; Jer 31:15) shows emotional intensity beyond mere decision. Spanish 'rehusar,' French 'refuser,' German 'sich weigern' capture the volitional core. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: and-he-refused, and-refused, and-they-refused | es: Pero-rehusaron, Y-rehusaron, Y-rehusó | fr: [וירמאנ], de-refuser, et-il-refused | de: [וירמאנ], [מאנ], aber-er-weigerte-sich Gen 37:35; Gen 39:8; Gen 48:19; Exod 4:23; Exod 7:14

מָאֵן H3986 Adj-ms (4×)

refusing, one who refuses (always of disobeying YHWH, with infinitive following)

This adjectival participle describes someone who refuses or disobeys, appearing exclusively in contexts of refusing to obey Yahweh's command. The term functions almost as a technical designation for covenant disobedience—Pharaoh repeatedly 'refuses' to let Israel go despite plague after plague, and Zedekiah 'refuses' to surrender to Babylon despite Jeremiah's prophetic warnings. The word always takes an infinitive to specify what action is being refused, emphasizing the willful nature of the disobedience.

(4×) The participle appears four times describing stubborn refusal to obey God. Pharaoh is three times designated as 'refusing to let the people go' before successive plagues—the frogs (Exod 8:2), cattle disease (Exod 9:2), and locusts (Exod 10:4). Zedekiah is warned, 'If you are refusing to surrender' to the Babylonians, disaster will follow (Jer 38:21). In each case, the Hebrew construction is 'refusing [infinitive],' emphasizing the ongoing stubborn disobedience. Spanish rehusando/rehúsas and French/German leaving the participle in brackets show the challenge of rendering this distinctive participial construction that functions almost as a covenant-breaking technical term. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: refusing | es: rehusando, rehúsas | fr: [מאנ], refusing | de: [מאנ], refusing Exod 8:2; Exod 9:2; Exod 10:4; Jer 38:21

מֵאֵן H3987 Art / Adj-mp (1×)

refusing, those who refuse to obey

An adjectival form describing those who refuse or are disobedient. Jeremiah 13:10 uses this to characterize an evil people who refuse to hear God's words. The term is formed from the root meaning 'to refuse' and appears with the definite article as a substantive, identifying a class of people marked by stubborn resistance to divine instruction. The multilingual evidence consistently captures the idea of refusal or rejection.

(1×) The refusing ones, those characterized by disobedience and refusal to listen. Jeremiah 13:10 applies this to people who stubbornly refuse to hear God's words, walk in their own stubborn hearts, and follow other gods. The Spanish 'los-que-rehúsan' (those who refuse) precisely captures this substantival use. The context links refusal to hear with fundamental spiritual rebellion. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: the-refusing | es: los-que-rehúsan | fr: [המאנים] | de: [המאנים] Jer 13:10

מָאַס H3988a V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 2ms (74×)

To reject, refuse, or repudiate; to despise or scorn; in the Nifal, to be rejected or deemed reprobate; also to loathe or find abhorrent.

The verb ma'as (מָאַס) is one of the sharpest words in the Hebrew prophetic vocabulary — the deliberate turning away from what should have been valued. Israel 'rejected' the LORD as king (1 Sam 8:7), Saul was 'rejected' from being king (1 Sam 15:23, 26), and the builders 'rejected' the stone that became the cornerstone (Ps 118:22). Spanish distinguishes the shades well: 'rechazar' and 'desechar' for active rejection, 'despreciar' and 'desdenar' for contemptuous disdain. Arabic similarly splits between rafada (to push away, refuse) and izdara (to look down upon, scorn). The Nifal passive — 'to be rejected' — appears in three poignant contexts, including the wife who was 'cast off' in Isaiah 54:6 and the 'rejected silver' of Jeremiah 6:30. A final, solitary use in Job 7:16 pushes the word toward bodily revulsion: 'I loathe my life,' where the rejection turns inward and becomes self-directed abhorrence.

1. reject, refuse (56×) The primary Qal sense: to reject, refuse, or repudiate a person, thing, or divine command. Convergent across languages — Arabic rafada, Swahili kataa, Spanish rechazar/desechar — this sense covers the major covenantal crises: Israel rejecting God's kingship (1 Sam 8:7), God rejecting Saul (1 Sam 15:23, 26), Israel spurning the Torah (Lev 26:43–44), and the people refusing the gentle waters of Shiloah (Isa 8:6). The rejection is always active, deliberate, and consequential — not passive indifference but a conscious turning away from what was offered or commanded. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: and-he-rejected, and-he-rejected-you, has-rejected | es: desecharon, desechó, despreció | fr: et-il-rejeta-tu, et-rejeter, ils-rejeta | de: du-verwarf, du-verwirfst, sie-verwarf Lev 26:43; Lev 26:44; Judg 9:38; 1Sam 8:7

2. despise, scorn (14×) To despise, scorn, or treat with contempt — distinguished from outright rejection by an attitude of disdain rather than formal refusal. Arabic izdara/muzdarin (to scorn), Swahili dharau (contempt), and Spanish despreciar/desdenar converge to mark this as contemptuous dismissal. The wicked 'despise' correction (Job 5:17), the arrogant person 'does not abhor evil' because he 'despises' wisdom (Ps 36:4), and Israel 'despised' the manna that God provided (Num 11:20). Where sense 1 is a judicial or covenantal act, this sense carries an emotional charge of looking down upon something as beneath one's regard. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: I-despise, I-despise-myself, You-despise | es: desdeñareis, desechasteis, desprecia | fr: rejeter, tu-rejeta, tu-rejeter | de: [אמאס], [ימאס], [מואס] Lev 26:15; Num 11:20; Num 14:31; Job 5:17; Job 9:21

3. be rejected (Nifal) (3×) The Nifal passive or stative meaning: to be rejected, cast off, or deemed worthless as a reprobate. Three clear instances bear passive morphology: the reprobate whose conduct marks him as rejected in the eyes of the righteous (Ps 15:4), the wife who was 'rejected' or 'cast off' and then recalled by God (Isa 54:6), and Israel as 'rejected silver' that fails the refiner's test (Jer 6:30). Arabic marfud (passive participle, 'rejected one') and Swahili passive -kataliwa confirm the voice distinction. These passages carry pathos — the rejected party did not choose their status but was judged and found wanting. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: is-a-reprobate, rejected, she-is-rejected | es: el-vil, fue-rechazada, rechazada | fr: rejeter | de: verachtete, verwerfen Ps 15:4; Isa 54:6; Jer 6:30

4. (1×) A singular intensified sense meaning to loathe, abhor, or find one's own existence unbearable. Job 7:16 stands alone: 'I loathe (my life); I would not live forever' — where rejection becomes visceral self-directed revulsion. Spanish 'aborrezco' (I abhor) and English 'I loathe' push beyond mere rejection or scorn into the territory of existential disgust. The object is not another person or God's law but one's own continued existence, making this the most inward-turning use of the verb. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: I-loathe | es: Aborrezco; | fr: rejeter | de: [מאסתי] Job 7:16

מָאַס H3988b Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

flow, melt away, dissolve (Niphal of maas)

A verb meaning to flow, run, melt away, or dissolve (Niphal stem). Job 7:5 uses it to describe skin that hardens then runs again—the suppurating, flowing discharge from sores. Psalm 58:7 uses it as a prayer for the wicked to melt away like water that runs off—total dissolution and disappearance. This is a secondary form of the root masas (melt), with imagery of liquid dissolution.

(2×) To flow, melt away, or dissolve. Used in two contexts: (1) Physical—Job 7:5 describes skin hardening and then running/suppurating, the discharge of festering sores; (2) Figurative judgment —Psalm 58:7 asks that the wicked flow away like water, melting into nothingness. Both uses emphasize liquid dissolution—something solid becoming fluid and dissipating. This is a variant of masas (melt), with Aramaic influence or parallel development. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: and-runs, let-them-flow-away | es: se-derritan, y-supura. | fr: et-rejeter, rejeter | de: [וימאס], lass-ihnen-flow-weg Job 7:5; Ps 58:7

מַאֲפֶה H3989 N-msc (1×)

thing baked, baked goods from an oven

A term for something baked, specifically referring to baked goods prepared in an oven. In Leviticus 2:4, it appears in instructions for grain offerings baked in an oven. The term emphasizes the method of preparation—oven-baking—as distinct from other cooking methods mentioned in the sacrificial regulations. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently renders this as related to baking or cooking.

(1×) A baking, something baked in an oven. Leviticus 2:4 uses this in the phrase 'a grain offering, a baking of an oven,' specifying one acceptable method of preparation for offerings. The multilingual glosses (baking-of, cocido-de, cuisson-de) all emphasize the baking process. This technical culinary-liturgical term distinguishes oven-baked offerings from those prepared on griddles or in pans. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-baking-of | es: cocido-de | fr: une-cuisson-de | de: ein-baking-von Lev 2:4

מַאֲפֵל H3990 N-ms (1×)

darkness, gloom, obscurity

A word for darkness, appearing in Joshua 24:7 in the account of the Exodus. God placed darkness between the Israelites and the Egyptians at the Red Sea, providing cover and separation. This darkness was both protective for Israel and terrifying for Egypt. The multilingual glosses unanimously render this as darkness, obscurity, or gloom, capturing the sense of impenetrable blackness that served as divine intervention.

(1×) Darkness, deep gloom placed as a barrier. Joshua 24:7 recalls how God 'set darkness between you and the Egyptians' during the exodus. The cross-linguistic evidence (darkness, oscuridad, ténèbres, Finsternis) consistently points to thick darkness. This supernatural darkness served a dual purpose: protecting Israel while confounding Egypt, demonstrating God's control over natural elements for his people's deliverance. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: darkness | es: oscuridad | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis Josh 24:7

מַאֲפֵלְיָה H3991 N-fs (1×)

thick darkness, deep gloom, utter obscurity

A rare intensified form meaning thick or deep darkness, appearing only in Jeremiah 2:31. The term is enhanced with a suffix suggesting extreme darkness or gloom. Jeremiah uses this metaphorically, asking whether God has been like a land of thick darkness to his people. The rhetorical question expects a negative answer—God has not been dark or obscure, yet his people have wandered away. BDB notes scholarly debate about the precise morphology.

(1×) Thick darkness, deep gloom used figuratively. Jeremiah 2:31 asks, 'Have I been a land of thick darkness to Israel?' implying God has been light and provision, not obscurity. The Spanish gloss 'densa-oscuridad' (dense darkness) captures the intensified sense. The parallel with 'wilderness' suggests inhospitable, frightening terrain, making the rhetorical force stronger: God has been anything but dark to his people. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: of-thick-darkness | es: densa-oscuridad? | fr: [מאפליה] | de: [מאפליה] Jer 2:31

מָאַר H3992 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (4×)

pricking, painful (of thorns); malignant (of leprosy)

This Hiphil participle describes something that pricks or causes pain—whether literal thorns that jab, or malignant leprosy that spreads destructively. Ezekiel uses it of a 'pricking brier' that will no longer torment Israel from among the hostile nations surrounding them. The priestly texts use it three times of 'malignant leprosy' in fabric or buildings, designating the aggressive, spreading form of the disease that required destruction rather than cleansing. The root suggests breaking open or irritating, capturing both the sharp pain of thorns and the destructive spread of disease.

(4×) The participle appears in prophetic and priestly texts about painful affliction. Ezekiel promises that hostile neighbors will no longer be 'a pricking brier' to Israel (Ezek 28:24, parallel to 'a painful thorn'). The priestly leprosy regulations three times describe 'malignant' leprosy in garments or houses—when the disease proves 'malignant' after inspection, the infected item must be burned (Lev 13:51, 52; 14:44). The Samaritan Pentateuch reads a different root (mrr) in these verses, suggesting textual uncertainty. Spanish maligna (malignant) and que-punza (that pricks) track both senses, while French malin and German malignant focus on the disease aspect. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: brier, malignant | es: maligna, que-punza | fr: malin, maudire | de: [ממאיר], malignant Lev 13:51; Lev 13:52; Lev 14:44; Ezek 28:24

מַאְרָב H3993 Conj-w (5×)

Ambush, ambuscade; a place of lying in wait or the troops hidden there, used in military and predatory contexts.

A masculine noun meaning 'ambush,' derived from the root 'arab ('to lie in wait'), designating both the place of concealment and the hidden troops themselves. Joshua 8:9 uses it for the strategic ambush set against Ai, while Judges 9:35 describes Abimelech's men emerging from their ambush against Shechem. The Chronicler employs it twice in a single verse (2 Chr 13:13) for Jeroboam's troops positioned behind Judah's army—a double ambush that God turned to defeat. Psalm 10:8 extends it metaphorically: the wicked lurk 'in ambush' like a lion in a thicket, preying on the poor. Spanish 'emboscada' (from bosque, 'forest') and French 'embuscade' both evoke the woodland hiding place that is the classic ambush setting.

(5×) An ambush or place of lying in wait, and by metonymy the troops concealed there, used in both military strategy and figurative descriptions of predatory wickedness. Josh 8:9 designates the ambush position west of Ai in Israel's second attack, while Judg 9:35 describes Gaal spotting the ambush forces of Abimelech emerging from concealment. In 2 Chr 13:13 the noun appears twice: Jeroboam sent an ambush to come behind Judah, creating a double envelopment. Ps 10:8 applies it figuratively to the wicked who lurk in hiding places to prey on the innocent. Spanish 'emboscada' and German 'Hinterhalt' both capture the tactical sense of concealed waiting. AMBUSH MILITARY

en: and-the-ambush, in-the-ambush-of, the-ambush | es: en-emboscada-de, la-emboscada, y-la-emboscada | fr: [המארב], [והמארב], dans-embuscade | de: [המארב], [והמארב], der-Hinterhalt Josh 8:9; Judg 9:35; 2Chr 13:13; Ps 10:8

מְאֵרָה H3994 N-fp (5×)

a curse, malediction; divine imprecation bringing ruin and deprivation as consequence of covenant-breaking

Derived from the root אָרַר (to curse), this noun denotes a formal imprecation or curse, especially one carrying divine authority. In Deuteronomy 28:20 God sends the מְאֵרָה upon the disobedient, while Malachi 2:2 and 3:9 invoke it against faithless priests and a withholding nation. Proverbs contrasts the curse on the house of the wicked (3:33) with blessings on the generous (28:27). The Spanish maldición and French malédiction both capture the gravity of this formal, binding denunciation.

(5×) A divine or authoritative curse bringing material and spiritual ruin. All five occurrences point to covenant consequences: Deuteronomy 28:20 ties it to disobedience, Malachi 2:2 and 3:9 to priestly and communal unfaithfulness, and Proverbs to moral character. Multilingual glosses (spa maldición, fra malédiction, eng curse) uniformly render it as a solemn imprecation rather than a casual word of ill-will. CURSES AND ANATHEMA

en: With-the-curse, curses, the-curse | es: Con-la-maldición, Maldición-de, la-maldición | fr: le-malédiction, malédiction, מארות | de: [במארה], [המארה], [מארות] Deut 28:20; Prov 3:33; Prov 28:27; Mal 2:2; Mal 3:9

מִבְדָּלָה H3995 Art / N-fp (1×)

separated (cities), set apart, distinct settlements

A participial form meaning separated or set apart, describing cities in Joshua 16:9. The term likely refers to cities designated for the tribe of Ephraim that were separated out from the territory of Manasseh. BDB suggests textual emendation to a Hophal or Niphal participle, indicating these were 'separated cities.' The multilingual evidence reflects this sense of separation or distinction.

(1×) The separated ones, cities set apart or distinguished. Joshua 16:9 mentions 'the separated cities' allotted to Ephraim within Manasseh's inheritance. The Spanish 'las-separadas' and English 'the-separated' support this reading. BDB's suggestion of a passive participle ('cities that were separated') fits the context of tribal boundary descriptions where some cities were set apart for one tribe within another's borders. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: the-separated | es: las-separadas | fr: le-sépara | de: der-absonderte Josh 16:9

מָבוֹא H3996 Prep-b (25×)

Entrance, doorway; the setting of the sun (westward); the act of coming in or arriving

A noun derived from the root bo' (to come, enter), mavo' denotes the place where one enters – a gate, doorway, or passage into a building or city (Judg 1:24; 2 Kgs 11:16). When paired with shemesh (sun), it takes on a directional meaning: the place where the sun 'enters' the horizon, i.e., the west or sunset (Ps 50:1; 104:19). Spanish 'puesta de sol' and French 'coucher de soleil' both capture this sunset sense distinctly from the architectural meaning. Occasionally it functions as a verbal noun describing the act of arriving or entering (Ezek 33:31).

1. entrance or doorway (13×) The physical entrance or doorway into a defined space – a city gate (Judg 1:24-25), a temple threshold (2 Kgs 16:18), or a guardroom passage (1 Chr 9:19). English glosses 'entrance of' and Spanish 'entrada de' consistently render this spatial, architectural sense across translations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-entrance-of, [ketiv], at-the-coming-in-of | es: [kethiv], a-entrada-de, en-la-entrada | fr: -le-entrée-de, [במבוא], [המבוא] | de: -der-Eingang-von, Eingang, [מבוא] Judg 1:24; Judg 1:25; 2Kgs 11:16; 2Kgs 16:18; 1Chr 4:39

2. setting of the sun (8×) The going-down or setting of the sun, and by extension the direction west. Psalm 50:1 pairs 'from the rising of the sun to its mavo" as a merism for all the earth. French 'coucher de' and Spanish 'puesta de' highlight the astral meaning that English 'entrance of' can obscure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: entrance-of, its-setting, setting-of | es: entrada-del, la-entrada-de, puesta-de | fr: coucher-de, de-entrée, entrée | de: Eingang-von, [מבוא], [מבואו] Deut 11:30; Josh 1:4; Josh 23:4; Ps 50:1; Ps 104:19

3. act of coming in (4×) The act or event of coming in, used as a verbal noun. In 2 Samuel 3:25 Abner's 'coming in and going out' is scrutinized as intelligence; in Ezekiel 33:31 the people's 'coming' to the prophet is habitual. Spanish 'entrada tuya' (your entering) preserves the active, processual quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [your-coming-in], as-entering, like-coming-of- | es: (entrada-tuya), [entrada-tuya], como-entradas-de | fr: [your-venant-in], entrée, ton-venant-dans | de: Eingang, [your-kommend-in] 2Sam 3:25; Ezek 26:10; Ezek 33:31

מָבוֹא H3997 N-mpc (1×)
entrances, openings, gates or doorways
A plural construct form meaning entrances or gateways, used in Ezekiel 27:3. The term appears in a lament over Tyre, describing the city as dwelling 'at the entrances of the sea.' This geographic description emphasizes Tyre's strategic position as a maritime trading hub with access to multiple sea routes. The word conveys both physical gateways and metaphorical points of entry to commercial networks.

(1×) Entrances, gateways to the sea. Ezekiel 27:3 uses this to characterize Tyre's advantageous coastal position: 'dwelling at the entrances of the sea, merchant of peoples for many coastlands.' The multilingual glosses (entrances-of, las-entradas-de, entrée) consistently render this as entry points or gates. The maritime context makes this about harbor access and sea-lane control, essential to Tyre's commercial dominance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: entrances-of- | es: las-entradas-de | fr: entrée | de: [מבואת] Ezek 27:3

מְבוּכָה H3998 Conj-w / N-fs (2×) confusion, consternation, perplexity
A noun denoting confusion, consternation, or bewilderment in the face of overwhelming circumstances. Isaiah 22:5 uses it in a threefold description of judgment day: tumult, trampling, and confusion. Micah 7:4 warns that the day of judgment will bring 'their confusion'—the perplexity and dismay of the wicked when divine reckoning arrives. The term captures the psychological and social chaos of divine judgment.

(2×) Means confusion, consternation, or bewilderment. Appears in two prophetic judgment contexts: (1) Isaiah 22:5—a day of consternation, trampling, and confusion from the Lord; (2) Micah 7:4—warning that 'now will be their confusion,' the perplexity when punishment comes. The term emphasizes mental and social disorientation in the face of overwhelming judgment. Spanish 'perplejidad' and French 'trouble' capture the bewilderment aspect of this confusion. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING en: and-confusion, their-confusion | es: su-confusión, y-de-perplejidad | fr: [ומבוכה], trouble | de: [ומבוכה], [מבוכתם] Isa 22:5; Mic 7:4

מַבּוּל H3999 Prep-l (13×)
The Flood — the catastrophic deluge in the time of Noah, God's judgment by water upon the earth
A masculine noun used exclusively for the great Flood of Noah's day, always with the article except in God's covenant promises (Gen 9:11, 15). Scripture introduces the Flood as the waters that God brings upon the earth to destroy all flesh (Gen 6:17), and the narrative traces its onset, duration, and aftermath through Genesis 7–9. The word appears once outside the Pentateuch in Psalm 29:10, where Yahweh 'sat enthroned over the Flood' — a stunning image of sovereign majesty over the primordial waters. Its etymology remains debated; it may be an ancient Mesopotamian loanword. All major translations preserve a dedicated term: spa 'diluvio', fra 'deluge', deu 'Flut'.

the flood (13×) The cataclysmic deluge of Noah's era, denoting God's worldwide judgment by water upon all living things. Always articular (הַמַּבּוּל) except when negated in covenant discourse ('there shall not again be a flood,' Gen 9:11, 15). Paired with מַיִם as appositional ('a flood of waters,' Gen 6:17; 7:6) and used in temporal constructions ('after the flood,' Gen 9:28; 10:1, 32; 11:10). Psalm 29:10 extends the term beyond narrative into worship, affirming Yahweh's eternal enthronement over the Flood. Cross-lingual glosses uniformly reserve a distinct term: eng 'flood', spa 'diluvio', fra 'deluge', deu 'Flut'. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY en: and-the-flood, flood, for-flood | es: diluvio, el-diluvio, para-diluvio | fr: déluge, et-le-déluge, le-déluge | de: der-Flut, die-Flut, eine-Flut Gen 6:17; Gen 7:6; Gen 7:7; Gen 7:10; Gen 7:17

בִּין H4000
discern, perceive, understand; have insight or comprehension (with senses or mind)
This verb encompasses perception through the senses and understanding through the mind, moving fluidly between seeing clearly, hearing attentively, and grasping intellectually. It can denote literal sensory perception (eyes that discern, Psalm 19:12 asking 'who can discern his errors?') or deeper cognitive insight (Daniel 10:1 'understanding the vision'). The root appears across Semitic languages with connotations of separation and distinctness—to discern is to distinguish, to perceive differences. Wisdom literature prizes this capacity: 'the wise will understand' (Daniel 12:10). The verb's theological weight lies in its connection to wisdom, revelation, and the gift of spiritual insight.

מְבוּסָה H4001 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)
trampling down, subjugation by force
This noun describes violent trampling down or subjugation. Isaiah uses it twice to characterize a distant nation as one 'of might and of trampling' (18:2, 7), possibly referring to their military aggression. The third occurrence (22:5) appears in a day of judgment described as 'a day of tumult and trampling and confusion.' The term vividly captures the image of being crushed underfoot, whether by invading armies or divine judgment.

(3×) Multilingual renderings emphasize violent treading down: Spanish 'pisoteo' (trampling), French 'foulée' (treading), German 'Zertretung' (crushing). Isaiah 18:2, 7 describe a fearsome nation characterized by its trampling conquest of others, while 22:5 portrays a day when Jerusalem itself experiences the terror of being trampled in judgment—a reversal of fortunes. TRAMPLING AND TREADING en: and-trampling | es: y-de-pisoteo, y-pisoteada | fr: et-foulée | de: und-Zertretung Isa 18:2; Isa 18:7; Isa 22:5

מַבּוּעַ H4002 N-mpc (3×)
spring, fountain, source of water
A noun denoting natural springs or fountains of water. In Isaiah's prophecies of restoration, springs of water appear as symbols of God's provision for returning exiles in the wilderness (35:7, 49:10). Ecclesiastes uses the term metaphorically in the enigmatic description of old age and death (12:6). The word emphasizes the life-giving quality of water sources, particularly important in the arid landscapes of the ancient Near East.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence consistently identifies water springs or fountains. Spanish 'manantiales' (springs), French and German glosses all point to natural water sources. Isaiah's two occurrences promise divine provision of springs for the thirsty during the return from exile, transforming desolate places into well-watered lands. Ecclesiastes 12:6 uses the fountain image in its poetic meditation on mortality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: springs, springs-of, the-fountain | es: en-manantiales, la-fuente, manan-

tiales-de | fr: [למבוע], [מבוע], le-המבוע | de: [המבוע], [למבוע], [מבוע]
Eccl 12:6; Isa 35:7; Isa 49:10

מְבוּקָה H4003 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

void, emptiness, devastation

A term denoting emptiness or void, appearing in Nahum 2:10 in a triplet of devastation words: 'Desolation, and void, and waste.' This is part of a prophetic description of Nineveh's coming destruction. The three synonyms intensify the image of total ruin. The word emphasizes the vacant, empty state that follows plundering and destruction. Cross-linguistic renderings capture the sense of emptiness and desolation.

(1×) Void, emptiness resulting from devastation. Nahum 2:10 uses this in a powerful threefold description of Nineveh's fate. The Spanish 'y-vaciada' (emptied out) and French 'et-vide' (and void) emphasize the state of being drained or depleted. The triplet structure ('desolation, void, waste') creates a rhythmic intensification, hammering home the completeness of Nineveh's coming judgment. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: and-void | es: y-vaciada | fr: et-vide | de: [ומבוקה] Nah 2:10

מִבְחוֹר H4004 N-ms (1×)

choice, select, the best or finest

A noun meaning choice or select, likely a scribal variant of the more common word for 'choicest.' In 2 Kings 3:19, it describes 'every choice city' that Israel would strike during their campaign against Moab. The term emphasizes quality and desirability—the best cities, not just any settlement. BDB notes this is probably a scribal error for the standard form, but the meaning remains clear: the finest or most valuable.

(1×) Choice, select, the finest or best. 2 Kings 3:19 uses this in the phrase 'every choice city,' referring to the prime settlements of Moab targeted for destruction. The multilingual glosses (choice, escogida) consistently render this as select or chosen. Though BDB suggests a scribal variant, the context of military campaign makes the sense clear: Israel would strike Moab's best fortified and most valuable cities. CHOSEN AND ELECT en: choice | es: escogida | fr: choice | de: choice 2Kgs 3:19

מִבְחָר H4005 Prep-b / N-msc (13×)

The choicest, the best — the finest selection from a group, the pick of the lot

A masculine noun in construct that marks out the superlative specimen within any class. It never appears in absolute form, always pointing to 'the choicest of' something — whether offerings and vows brought to God's chosen place (Deut 12:11), the elite captains drowned in the Sea (Exod 15:4), or the most honored sepulchres offered to Abraham (Gen 23:6). Isaiah deploys it for the finest valleys and loftiest cedars (Isa 22:7; 37:24), while Ezekiel selects 'the choicest of the flock' for a grim siege-pot allegory (Ezek 24:4–5). Daniel closes the biblical usage with 'his choice troops' (Dan 11:15), soldiers handpicked for their quality.

choicest, best (13×) The superlative, finest selection from a category — always in construct or with suffixes, never absolute. Applied to human excellence (Exod 15:4 'choice captains'; Dan 11:15 'choice troops'), material quality (Isa 37:24 'choicest cedars'; Jer 22:7 'choice cedars'; Ezek 24:4–5 'choice of the flock'), topographic splendor (Isa 22:7 'choicest valleys'), social honor (Gen 23:6 'choicest sepulchres'), and sacred devotion (Deut 12:11 'choicest vows'). Spanish 'lo mejor de' and German renderings confirm the superlative force across all target languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-choice-of, choice-of, choice-of- | es: Lo-mejor-de, en-lo-mejor-de, escogidos-suyos | fr: [ומבחר], [מבחר], choice-de | de: [ומבחר], [מבחר], [מבחריו]
Gen 23:6; Exod 15:4; Deut 12:11; 2Kgs 19:23; Isa 22:7

מִבְחָר H4006 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mibhar, personal name meaning 'choice' or 'select'

A personal name meaning 'choice' or 'select,' belonging to one of David's mighty warriors in 1 Chronicles 11:38. The name derives from the root meaning 'to choose,' suggesting the bearer was chosen or select. This warrior is listed among David's elite fighting men, and his name fittingly means 'choice'—an apt designation for someone in this distinguished group.

(1×) Mibhar, proper name of one of David's warriors. The name means 'choice' or 'select,' from the root 'to choose.' 1 Chronicles 11:38 lists him among the mighty men who supported David. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Mibjar, Mivchar), preserving the Hebrew name. His inclusion in this elite roster of warriors makes the name particularly appropriate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Mivchar | es: Mibjar | fr: [מבחר] | de: [מבחר] 1Chr 11:38

מִבְטָח H4007 N-msc / 3fs (3×)

hope, expectation, object of trust or confidence

This noun denotes hope or expectation, specifically the object in which one places confidence. Isaiah uses it twice regarding Judah's misplaced hope in Egypt (Cush) as an ally against Assyria (20:5-6), showing how political alliances proved disappointing. Zechariah applies it to Philistia's shattered hope in Tyre as an ally (9:5). The term emphasizes not just the abstract feeling of hope but the concrete thing hoped in, which in these contexts proves unreliable.

(3×) Translations uniformly render this as 'hope' with possessive suffixes reflecting the disappointed parties: 'their hope, our hope, her hope.' All three biblical occurrences portray failed political hopes—Judah trusting in Egypt (Isa 20:5-6) and Gaza depending on Tyre (Zech 9:5). The passages reveal the futility of trusting in human alliances rather than in God, as these objects of hope are destroyed. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: her-hope, our-hope, their-hope | es: nuestra-esperanza, su-esperanza | fr: [מבטם], [מבטנו], attente | de: [מבטה], [מבטם], [מבטנו]
Isa 20:5; Isa 20:6; Zech 9:5

מִבְטָא H4008 N-msc (2×)

rash utterance, impulsive statement (from lips)

A term for rash or impulsive utterance, specifically an unguarded promise or vow spoken hastily. Numbers 30:6, 8 uses it in the context of vow legislation: if a woman makes a rash utterance with her lips, binding herself by oath impulsively, her father or husband may nullify it. The term emphasizes thoughtless speech that creates binding obligations—words spoken without proper deliberation.

(2×) Refers to rash utterance or impulsive statement from the lips. Found in Numbers 30:6, 8 in laws about women's vows: 'a rash utterance of her lips by which she bound herself' describes hasty promises or vows made without full consideration. The construct form 'utterance of her lips' emphasizes speech as the source. The context is legal—establishing when such impulsive commitments can be annulled. The term warns against careless speech that creates binding obligations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: utterance-of | es: pronunciamiento-de | fr: utterance-de | de: utterance-von Num 30:6; Num 30:8

מִבְטָח H4009 Prep-b / N-mpc / 2fs (15×)

Confidence, trust; the object in which one trusts; a state of security or safety from danger.

Mivtach is the noun of result from batach ('to trust'), and its three senses track the full arc of the trust relationship — from the inner act of relying, to the outer person relied upon, to the resulting state of safety. In its most frequent use, mivtach names confidence itself: 'In the fear of the LORD there is strong confidence' (Prov 14:26). Spanish distinguishes confianza (trust) from refugio (refuge), and French confiance from sécurité, revealing the breadth Hebrew packs into one noun.

1. trust, confidence (11×) The abstract act of trusting or having confidence. This dominant sense (11 occurrences) centers on psalms and wisdom: 'In the fear of the LORD there is strong confidence' (Prov 14:26), 'You are my trust from my youth' (Ps 71:5), and 'Blessed is the man whose trust is the LORD' (Jer 17:7). Spanish confianza and French confiance converge here. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: as-confidence, confidence, his-trust | es: confianza, confianza-de, confianza-suya | fr: [מבטחו], [מבטחם], confiance | de: [למבטח], [מבטחה], [מבטחו] Job 31:24; Ps 40:4; Ps 65:5; Ps 71:5; Prov 14:26

2. security, safety (2×) The objective state of being secure or safe from danger. Isaiah 32:18 promises God's people 'secure dwellings' (miskenot mivtachim), and Job 18:14 describes the wicked torn from the 'security' of their tent. Spanish seguridad, French sécurité, and German Sicherheit shift from relational trust to objective safety. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: his-security, secure | es: seguridad, su-confianza | fr: [מבטחים], son-sécurité-lui | de: [מבטחו], [מבטחים] Job 18:14; Isa 32:18

3. object of trust, refuge (2×) The concrete object of trust — the person or thing in which confidence is placed. Job 8:14 compares the godless person's mivtach to a spider's web, and Jeremiah 2:37 warns that Israel's 'trusted ones' will fail. Spanish refugio and French sécurité (objective sense) distinguish this concrete referent from the abstract feeling of sense 1. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: his-trust, your-trusted-ones | es: es-su-refugio., tus-confianzas | fr: [במבטחיך], son-sécurité-lui | de: [במבטחיך], [מבטחו] Job 8:14; Jer 2:37

מַבְלִיגִית H4010 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

source of comfort, brightening, consolation

A rare word meaning source of comfort or brightening, appearing only in Jeremiah 8:18. The prophet laments, 'My source of comfort in sorrow.' BDB translates this as 'a source of brightening to me in sorrow,' suggesting something that brings light or cheer amid grief. The text is marked as dubious by scholars, but the general sense of consolation amid distress is clear. The term emphasizes the prophet's deep need for comfort in the face of his people's judgment.

(1×) Source of comfort or brightening amid sorrow. Jeremiah 8:18 expresses the prophet's anguish: 'My source of comfort in grief.' BDB suggests this means something that brightens or cheers, bringing light into darkness. The Spanish 'Mi-consuelo' (my consolation) captures the personal, possessive sense. Though the text is questioned by some scholars, Jeremiah's emotional state—seeking comfort while pronouncing judgment—is poignantly conveyed. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: My-source-of-comfort | es: Mi-consuelo | fr: [מבליגיתי] | de: [מבליגיתי] Jer 8:18

מִבְנֶה H4011 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

structure, building, constructed edifice

A term for structure or building, appearing in Ezekiel 40:2 in the prophet's temple vision. Ezekiel sees a structure 'like the structure of a city' on a high mountain. The word emphasizes the architectural dimension—not just a building but a carefully designed structure. The visionary temple Ezekiel sees is vast and complex, compared to an entire city's layout. The term highlights the organized, planned nature of what the prophet witnesses.

(1×) Structure, building, architectural construction. Ezekiel 40:2 uses this in the phrase 'like the structure of a city,' describing the visionary temple's scale and complexity. The multilingual glosses (structure-of, edificio-de, édifice) consistently render this as a built edifice. The comparison to a city emphasizes the temple's grandeur —not a simple building but an elaborate complex requiring detailed description through the following chapters. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-structure-of- | es: como-edificio-de | fr: édifice | de: [כמבנה] Ezek 40:2

מִבְנַי H4012 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mebunnai, personal name of one of David's heroes

A personal name appearing in 2 Samuel 23:27, identifying one of David's thirty mighty men. Scholars note this is likely a textual corruption, and the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:29 reads Sibbecai instead. This kind of textual variation between Samuel and Chronicles is not uncommon due to scribal transmission. The name appears in the roster of David's elite warriors who accomplished extraordinary military feats.

(1×) Mebunnai, proper name of one of David's mighty men. 2 Samuel 23:27 lists him among the thirty heroes, though the parallel in 1 Chronicles 11:29 reads Sibbecai, which most scholars prefer. BDB suggests this is a scribal error. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Mevunay, Mebunnai), treating it as a proper name. Despite the textual question, he belongs to David's elite warrior class. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mebunnai | es: Mevunay | fr: Mebunnai | de: Mebunnai 2Sam 23:27

מִבְצָר H4013 N-mpc / 3ms (37×)

fortress, stronghold, fortified place — a defensive structure or walled city built for military protection

Mivtsar denotes a fortification or stronghold and derives from the root batsar ('to cut off, make inaccessible'). The word's etymology captures the essential idea: a place rendered impregnable by its defenses. Its 37 occurrences cluster in military and prophetic contexts. In Numbers, the scouts report that Canaan's cities are 'fortified and very large' (13:19), and Israel's Transjordanian settlers build 'fortified cities' for their families (32:17, 36). The construct phrase 'ir mivtsar ('fortified city') recurs as a standard military designation (Josh 10:20; 19:29, 35; 2 Kgs 3:19; 10:2; 17:9; 18:8). The prophets transform the fortress into a symbol of false security: Hosea warns that Israel's fortresses will be destroyed (10:14), Nahum mocks Nineveh's defenses as 'fig trees with first-ripe figs' (3:12), and Lamentations mourns that the Lord has 'swallowed up all the fortresses of Judah' (2:2, 5).

fortress, stronghold (37×) A fortified place, defensive stronghold, or walled city designed for military protection and resistance to siege. The characteristic collocation 'ir mivtsar ('fortified city') appears across historical narrative (Josh 10:20; 19:29, 35; 1 Sam 6:18; 2 Kgs 3:19; 17:9; 18:8) and prophetic oracle (Jer 4:5; 5:17; 8:14; 34:7). In prophetic judgment, fortresses become symbols of misplaced trust: God destroys Judah's fortresses (Lam 2:2, 5), and Hosea, Nahum, and Daniel all depict divine overthrow of seemingly impregnable defenses (Hos 10:14; Nah 3:12, 14; Dan 11:15, 24, 39). Spanish 'fortaleza,' French 'forteresse,' and German 'Festung' consistently render the military-architectural sense. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: fortress, the-fortress, your-fortresses | es: fortaleza, fortalezas-tuyas, fortalezas-tuyas! | fr: forteresse, fortress, le-fortress | de: Festung, der-Festung, fortress Num 13:19; Num 32:17; Num 32:36; Josh 10:20; Josh 19:29

מִבְצָר H4014 N-proper-ms (2×)

Mibzar, an Edomite chief

The name of an Edomite chief or clan leader listed in the genealogies of Esau's descendants. The name appears in Genesis 36:42 and 1 Chronicles 1:53 in parallel lists of Edomite chiefs. The name may derive from the word for fortress or fortified place (mibtsar), suggesting either a geographical origin or a characteristic of strength. Septuagint renderings (Mazar, Mabsar) show slight transliteration variation.

(2×) A proper name of an Edomite chief appearing in the genealogical lists of Esau's descendants. Found in Genesis 36:42 and the parallel text 1 Chronicles 1:53. The name possibly relates to 'fortress' (mibtsar), potentially indicating either the chief's stronghold or his character. As with other Edomite chiefs, this represents a clan or territorial leader rather than just an individual. The name is preserved in both genealogical traditions of Edom. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mibzar, Mivtsar | es: Mibtsar, Mivtsar | fr: Mibzar, [מבצר] | de: Mibzar, [מבצר] Gen 36:42; 1Chr 1:53

מִבְרָח H4015 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

fugitives (from battle or danger)

A term for fugitives or those fleeing from battle, appearing in a textually complex passage in Ezekiel. The Hebrew text (Kethiv) has the singular 'his fugitive,' while the marginal reading (Qere) has the plural 'his fugitives.' Ezekiel 17:21 describes the scattering of troops in a prophecy against Jerusalem's king—his choice troops will fall, and his fugitives will scatter. Some commentators suggest the text may be corrupt, proposing 'his choice troops' instead.

(2×) Refers to fugitives fleeing from battle or danger. Appears in Ezekiel 17:21 (though the exact word appears twice due to Kethiv/Qere variation: singular 'his fugitive' and plural 'his fugitives'). The context is military—troops fleeing after defeat, scattering in all directions. The textual uncertainty (some propose emending to 'his choice troops') reflects the difficulty of this passage, but the basic sense of flight/escape remains. The term captures the chaos of military defeat. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: fugitives-his | es: (sus-fugitivos), sus-fugitivos | fr: fuite | de: [מברחו], [מברחיו] Ezek 17:21

מִבּוּשׁ H4016 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

genitals, private parts, pudenda

A plural noun meaning genitals or private parts that excite shame. The term appears in Deuteronomy 25:11 in a law addressing a woman who intervenes in a fight between her husband and another man by seizing the other man's genitals. This is treated as a serious offense requiring corporal punishment. The euphemistic Hebrew emphasizes the shameful or private nature of these body parts. Cross-linguistic glosses handle this with varying degrees of directness.

(1×) Genitals, private parts, pudenda. Deuteronomy 25:11 legislates a case where a woman grabs a man's genitals during a fight. BDB notes these are 'parts that excite shame,' reflecting ancient modesty around sexual organs. The multilingual evidence ranges from direct (genitals) to euphemistic (partes-vergonzosas, shameful parts). The law's severity suggests this was considered a grave violation of propriety and dignity. NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE

en: his-genitals | es: de-sus-partes-vergonzosas | fr: son-genitals | de: sein-genitals Deut 25:11

מִבְשָׂם H4017 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Mibsam (personal name: 'fragrance' or 'sweet smell')

A personal name meaning 'fragrance' or 'sweet smell,' appearing for two different individuals in Scripture. The first Mibsam was a son of Ishmael listed in the genealogical records (Genesis 25:13, 1 Chronicles 1:29). The second was a descendant of Simeon mentioned in Chronicles (1 Chronicles 4:25). The name reflects the ancient practice of giving names with pleasant associations, possibly expressing parental joy at a child's birth.

(3×) This proper name appears consistently across translations in transliterated form: 'Mibsam, Mivsam' with minor spelling variations. The name marks two distinct individuals in biblical genealogies—one from Ishmael's line representing the Arab tribes, and another from Simeon's lineage. Both occurrences serve primarily genealogical purposes, preserving family lines in Israel's historical records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mivsam, and-Mibsam, and-Mivsam | es: Mibsam, y-Mibsam, y-Mivsam | fr: [ומבשם], [מבשם], et-Mibsam | de: [ומבשם], [מבשם], und-Mibsam Gen 25:13; 1Chr 1:29; 1Chr 4:25

מִבַּשְּׁלוֹת H4018 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)

cooking-places, kitchens, places for boiling

A plural noun meaning cooking-places or kitchens, appearing in Ezekiel 46:23. The prophet's temple vision includes detailed descriptions of various rooms and their functions, including designated areas for cooking sacrificial portions. The term is parallel to 'house of the boilers' in the following verse, confirming this refers to cooking facilities. These kitchens were necessary infrastructure for processing sacrifices in the temple complex.

(1×) Cooking-places, kitchens for boiling. Ezekiel 46:23 describes architectural features in the temple vision, specifying areas designated for cooking. The parallel in verse 24, 'house of the boilers,' confirms this function. The multilingual glosses (boiling-places, cocinas, lieu-de-cuisine) consistently identify these as kitchen or cooking facilities. The temple's elaborate design included practical spaces for preparing sacrificial meals. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: and-boiling-places | es: y-cocinas | fr: et-lieu-de-cuisine | de: [ומבשלות] Ezek 46:23

מַגְבִּישׁ H4019 N-proper-ms (1×)

Magbish, family name or place name

A name appearing in Ezra 2:30, identifying either a family or place associated with returning exiles: 'sons of Magbish.' Interestingly, this name is omitted in the parallel list in Nehemiah 7:33, though Greek manuscripts include it. Scholars debate whether this refers to a family name or a place from which exiles returned. The LXX preserves various forms of the name, showing it was recognized in ancient translations despite the Nehemiah omission.

(1×) Magbish, name of a family or place of returning exiles. Ezra 2:30 lists 'sons of Magbish' among those returning from Babylonian exile. The parallel passage in Nehemiah 7:33 omits this, though Greek manuscripts include it. BDB notes the variants in LXX (Magebos, Magbeis), showing textual diversity. Whether a family name or hometown, it identifies a group participating in the return from exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Magbish | es: Magbis | fr: [מגביש] | de: [מגביש] Ezra 2:30

מִגְבָּלֹת H4020 N-fp (1×)

twisted cords, braided chains

A plural noun meaning twisted things or braided cords, appearing in Exodus 28:14. The term describes decorative chains for the high priest's breastplate, made of pure gold and woven into braided cords. These chains attached the breastplate to the ephod. The word emphasizes the twisted or braided nature of the workmanship. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as twisted, braided, or corded, highlighting the intricate craftsmanship.

(1×) Twisted cords, braided chains of gold. Exodus 28:14 specifies these as part of the high priest's vestments: 'chains of pure gold, twisted.' The term appears in apposition to 'braided chains,' clarifying the twisting technique. The multilingual glosses (twisted, trenzadas, retors, gezwirnt) all emphasize the braided or twisted nature. This describes specialized metalwork creating decorative and functional fasteners for sacred garments. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13483 WITH 3 SENSES

en: twisted | es: trenzadas | fr: retors | de: gezwirnt Exod 28:14

מִגְבָּעוֹת H4021 Art / N-fp (4×)

turbans, caps, headgear (conical or convex, worn by common priests, not the high priest)

These feminine plural nouns designate the distinctive headgear worn by ordinary priests (as distinct from the high priest's turban). The term appears exclusively in Exodus and Leviticus, describing the priestly garments that Aaron and his sons wore for ministering in the sanctuary. These caps or turbans were apparently conical or convex in shape, part of the sacred vestments that marked the priests as holy to the Lord. One passage calls them 'caps of linen for glory and beauty,' emphasizing their role in the visual symbolism of priestly dignity.

(4×) The priestly headgear appears four times in Exodus and Leviticus instructions. God commanded Moses to make 'caps' for Aaron's sons as part of their sacred garments (Exod 28:40). At the ordination, Moses put 'caps' on Aaron's sons (Lev 8:13). The investiture ceremony included girding them and binding 'caps' on them (Exod 29:9). The completed garments included 'the linen caps' literally 'the beautiful caps of fine linen' (Exod 39:28). Spanish gorros/mitras and French/English caps/headbands show varied approaches to this specialized priestly headgear, while German uses caps/headbands for the distinctive non-high-priestly head covering. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-caps, caps, headbands | es: gorros, las-mitras, y-gorros | fr: caps, et-caps, headbands | de: caps, der-headbands, headbands Exod 28:40; Exod 29:9; Exod 39:28; Lev 8:13

מֶגֶד H4022 Conj-w (8×)

Choice things, precious bounty; the finest produce of heaven and earth, used of nature's gifts in blessing and love poetry.

A masculine noun meaning 'choice things' or 'precious bounty,' confined to two remarkable poetic contexts: Moses' blessing of Joseph (Deut 33:13–16) and the garden imagery of the Song of Songs (4:13, 16; 7:14). In Deuteronomy, meged appears five times in rapid succession to enumerate the choicest gifts of heaven, sun, moon, ancient hills, and earth's fullness — a cascade of abundance poured out on Joseph's portion. In the Song of Songs, it describes the 'choice fruits' of the beloved's garden. The Arabic cognate majd means 'glory, nobility,' underscoring the word's sense of supreme excellence.

choice things, bounty, precious produce (8×) The finest, most excellent produce of the natural world, understood as divine gift. In Moses' blessing (Deut 33:13–16), the word appears in five successive construct phrases: 'the bounty of heaven' (dew), 'the bounty of the sun's yield,' 'the bounty of the moon's produce,' 'the bounty of the ancient hills,' and 'the bounty of the earth and its fullness' — each naming a dimension of agricultural abundance bestowed on Joseph's tribal territory. In the Song of Songs, the plural megadim describes 'choice fruits' in the beloved's garden (4:13, 16) and fruits 'new and old' laid up for the lover (7:14). Spanish excelencia and French délices capture the overtone of supreme desirability, while the Arabic cognate majd ('glory, nobility') reveals the word's deep semantic range extending from material bounty to abstract excellence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-bounty-of, choice-fruits, choice-things | es: de-lo-excelente-de, excelencia, fruta-exquisita | fr: de-bounty-de, de-ses-délices!, et-de-bounty-de | de: [מגדיו], [מגדים], und-von-bounty-von Deut 33:13; Deut 33:14; Deut 33:15; Deut 33:16

מְגִדּוֹ H4023 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (12×)

Megiddo — strategic fortified city in the Jezreel Valley controlling the Via Maris trade route

Megiddo (מְגִדּוֹ) was one of the most strategically important cities in ancient Canaan, guarding the pass through the Carmel ridge into the Jezreel Valley along the Via Maris trade and military route. Joshua lists it among the conquered Canaanite cities (Josh 12:21; 17:11), though Manasseh could not fully drive out its inhabitants (Judg 1:27). Deborah's song celebrates victory 'by the waters of Megiddo' (Judg 5:19). Solomon fortified it as one of his chariot cities (1 Kgs 9:15), and King Josiah met his death there confronting Pharaoh Necho (2 Kgs 23:29-30; 2 Chr 35:22). Zechariah 12:11 alludes to 'mourning at the plain of Megiddon.' Its apocalyptic resonance echoes in Revelation's 'Armageddon' (Har-Megiddo).

Megiddo (city) (12×) A major fortified city in the Jezreel Valley at the strategic pass through the Carmel range, controlling the ancient Via Maris route. Listed among Joshua's conquests (Josh 12:21) and Manasseh's allotted but unconquered cities (Josh 17:11; Judg 1:27). Site of Deborah and Barak's victory over Sisera's forces (Judg 5:19), one of Solomon's administrative and chariot cities (1 Kgs 9:15), and the location of Josiah's fatal encounter with Pharaoh Necho (2 Kgs 23:29-30; 2 Chr 35:22). Zechariah 12:11 associates it with eschatological mourning. Spanish 'Meguido' and all major languages transliterate the name directly. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Megiddo, and-Megiddo, from-Megiddo | es: Megido, Meguido, de-Meguido | fr: Megiddo, Meguiddo, [מגדו] | de: Megiddo, [מגדו], [מגדון] Josh 12:21; Josh 17:11; Judg 1:27; Judg 5:19; 1Kgs 4:12

מִגְדּוֹל H4024a

tower (variant form; 2 Samuel 22:51 Qere for Ketiv מַגְדִּיל)

This noun form appears in 2 Samuel 22:51 (Qere) meaning 'tower,' where God is praised as 'a tower of salvation for his king.' The Ketiv reads מַגְדִּיל ('magnifies'), and the parallel text in Psalm 18:51 has מַגְדֵּל. The image of God as a defensive tower or fortress is common in David's psalms, evoking military security and refuge. The Qere preserves an alternate reading that may reflect different manuscript traditions or interpretative options for this victory hymn, where God's protective strength is celebrated after deliverance from enemies.

מִגְדֹּל H4024b N-proper-fs (6×)

Migdol – an Egyptian frontier fortress-town on the northeast border, mentioned in the Exodus narrative and prophetic oracles.

A proper noun designating Migdol, an Egyptian border fortress whose name derives from the Semitic root meaning 'tower' (cf. מַגְדֵּל). It appears in two distinct biblical contexts: the Exodus itinerary, where Israel encamps 'before Migdol' on their way out of Egypt (Exod 14:2; Num 33:7), and Jeremiah's oracles addressing the Jewish diaspora community living in Egyptian cities 'at Migdol' (Jer 44:1; 46:14). Ezekiel uses it as a geographic marker for the whole of Egypt – 'from Migdol to Syene' (Ezek 29:10; 30:6). The name is consistently transliterated across languages (Migdol in English and Spanish, Migdol in German).

Migdol (place name) (6×) The Egyptian frontier town of Migdol, located on the northeast border of Egypt, identified with the Coptic Meschtol and Egyptian Makthel. As an Exodus station, it marks the place where Israel encamped before the sea crossing (Exod 14:2; Num 33:7). In the prophetic corpus, Jeremiah addresses Jews dwelling 'in Migdol' among other Egyptian settlements (Jer 44:1; 46:14), while Ezekiel uses the merism 'from Migdol to Syene' to denote the full extent of Egypt (Ezek 29:10; 30:6). The consistent transliteration across Spanish, English, French, and German (Migdol) confirms its recognition as a proper noun rather than an appellative. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Migdol, from-Migdol-of-, in-Migdol | es: Migdol, desde-Migdol, en-Migdol | fr: Mibian, Migdol, [במגדול] | de: Migdol, [במגדול], [במגדל] Exod 14:2; Num 33:7; Jer 44:1; Jer 46:14; Ezek 29:10

מַגְדִּיאֵל H4025 N-proper-ms (2×)

Magdiel, an Edomite chief

The name of an Edomite chief in the genealogical lists of Esau's descendants, appearing in Genesis 36:43 and 1 Chronicles 1:54. The name may mean 'prince of God' or 'God is my excellence,' containing the divine element 'El.' Like other Edomite chiefs, Magdiel represents a clan or territorial leader. Septuagint variations (Metieel, Magedieel) preserve the name in slightly different forms.

(2×) A proper name of an Edomite chief listed among Esau's descendants. Found in Genesis 36:43 and 1 Chronicles 1:54 in identical genealogical contexts. The name likely contains the theophoric element 'El' (God), possibly meaning 'prince/excellence of God.' As with other Edomite chiefs in these lists, Magdiel represents a clan or territorial division rather than merely an individual. The name connects to Palmyrene and Sabaean cognates, showing broader Semitic usage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Magdi'el, Magdiel | es: Magdiel | fr: Magdiel, [מגדיאל] | de: Magdiel, [מגדיאל] Gen 36:43; 1Chr 1:54

מִגְדָּל H4026 Prep-l / N-msc (50×)

Tower, fortified structure; also a place-name element (Migdal) and a raised platform or pulpit

The Hebrew migdal evokes height, strength, and visibility. It names the ambitious tower of Babel (Gen 11:4–5), the defensive towers studding Judah's city walls (2 Chr 26:9–10), the watchman's tower in Isaiah's vineyard parable (Isa 5:2), and — beautifully — the beloved's neck compared to a tower of David hung with shields (Song 4:4). As a place-name element it forms compounds like Migdal-Eder, 'Tower of the Flock' (Mic 4:8). In one striking passage, Ezra reads the Torah from a wooden migdal, a raised platform (Neh 8:4), where the architectural metaphor shifts from military defense to public instruction.

1. tower, fortified structure (44×) A tall fortified structure for defense, watchkeeping, or urban protection — the primary sense across 44 occurrences. From Babel's hubris (Gen 11:4) to Hezekiah's fortifications (2 Chr 32:5), the tower symbolizes both human ambition and divine refuge (Prov 18:10). Spanish 'torre' and German 'Turm' reflect this consistently. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-tower-of, from-tower-of, the-tower | es: desde-torre-de, la-torre, las-torres | fr: [המגדל], [המגדלות], [המגדלים] | de: Turm, Turm-von, [המגדלים] Gen 11:4; Gen 11:5; Judg 8:9; Judg 8:17; Judg 9:51

2. Migdal (place name element) (5×) The word migdal functioning as part of a proper place name: Migdal-Eder ('Tower of the Flock,' Mic 4:8), Migdal-Gad, Migdal-El. Here the common noun has fossilized into geography. French and Spanish translations often retain the compound ('tour-de-'), preserving the architectural etymology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-tower-of-, tower-of-, tower-of-flock | es: Y-torre-de-, torre-de-, torre-del-rebaño | fr: et-tour-de-, tour, tour-de- | de: Turm, Turm-von-, und-Turm-von- Judg 9:46; Judg 9:47; Judg 9:49; Judg 9:51; Mic 4:8

3. raised platform, pulpit (1×) A raised wooden platform or podium for public proclamation — used uniquely in Nehemiah 8:4, where Ezra reads Torah to the assembled people. The architectural height of a tower becomes rhetorical elevation. Spanish 'torre de' and the context make clear this is a constructed stage, not a defensive structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tower-of | es: torre-de- | fr: [מגדל] | de: von-machte-gross Neh 8:4

מִגְדַּל־אֵל H4027 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Migdal-El, place name meaning 'tower of God'

A place name meaning 'tower of God,' located in the territory of Naphtali according to Joshua 19:38. This fortified town may be the same as Magdala mentioned in Matthew 15:39, identified with Mejdel in the plain of Gennesareth. The name suggests a prominent structure—either a watchtower or fortress—associated with divine protection or dedication. Such towers served both military and symbolic functions in ancient settlements.

(1×) Migdal-El, place name meaning 'tower of God' in Naphtali. Joshua 19:38 lists this among Naphtali's fortified cities. BDB suggests identification with Magdala of the Gospels and modern Mejdel near the Sea of Galilee. The name components ('tower' + 'God') suggest a fortress or watchtower with religious significance. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Migdal-el, Migdal-El), preserving the Hebrew compound name. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: and-Migdal-El | es: y-Migdal-el | fr: et-Migdal-El | de: und-Migdal-El Josh 19:38

מִגְדַּל־גָּד H4028 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Migdal-Gad, place name meaning 'tower of Gad'

A place name meaning 'tower of Gad,' located in the territory of Judah according to Joshua 15:37. Scholars have proposed identification with Mejdel east of Ashkelon, though this remains uncertain. The name suggests either a tower dedicated to the god Gad, or more likely a watchtower associated with the Israelite tribe of Gad. Like other 'Migdal' compounds, this indicates a fortified position or prominent tower in Judah's Shephelah region.

(1×) Migdal-Gad, place name meaning 'tower of Gad' in Judah. Joshua 15:37 lists this among cities in Judah's lowlands. BDB suggests possible identification with Mejdel east of Ashkelon. The name combines 'tower' with 'Gad' (either the deity or tribe), suggesting a fortified site. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Migdal-Gad), preserving the compound. This was one of several 'tower' place names marking strategic positions. GAD PROPER NAME

en: and-Migdal-Gad | es: y-Migdal-Gad | fr: et-Migdal-Gad | de: und-Migdal-Gad Josh 15:37

מִגְדַּל־עֵדֶר H4029 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Migdal-Eder, place name meaning 'tower of the flock'

A place name meaning 'tower of the flock' or 'watchtower of the herd,' appearing in Genesis 35:21 and Micah 4:8. This was a shepherd's watchtower near Bethlehem where Jacob camped. Such towers allowed shepherds to watch over their flocks and detect approaching predators or thieves. Micah uses this name metaphorically for Jerusalem, calling it the 'tower of the flock,' emphasizing God's watchful care over his people.

(1×) Migdal-Eder, place name meaning 'tower of the flock,' a shepherd's watchtower near Bethlehem. Genesis 35:21 locates Jacob's camp here. The name describes a tower's function: watching over flocks. Micah 4:8 uses this metaphorically for Jerusalem: 'tower of the flock, stronghold of daughter Zion.' The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Migdal-Eder), preserving the Hebrew. This pastoral image conveys both practical security and theological care. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4023 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Migdal-Eder | es: Migdal-Eder | fr: Migdal-Eder | de: von-Migdal-Eder Gen 35:21

מִגְדָּנָה H4030 Conj-w / N-mp (4×)

choice or precious things given as gifts

This term designates valuable items given as gifts, frequently in contexts of honor or tribute. The multilingual evidence consistently emphasizes preciousness and costliness, appearing in narratives about Abraham's servant presenting gifts to Rebekah's family (Genesis 24:53), royal treasures (2 Chronicles 21:3), and valuable offerings brought to Hezekiah (2 Chronicles 32:23). The word conveys both material worth and the social significance of the giving.

(4×) Precious gifts of high value, often presented in contexts of honor, tribute, or diplomatic exchange. The cross-linguistic glosses ('costly gifts,' 'precious things,' 'treasures') uniformly emphasize material value. Found in gift-giving narratives from the patriarchal period through the monarchy, always denoting items of exceptional worth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-costly-gifts, and-of-precious-things, and-treasures | es: y-con-las-cosas-preciosas, y-de-cosas-preciosas, y-regalos | fr: [ובמגדנות], [ולמגדנות], [ומגדנות] | de: [ובמגדנות], [ולמגדנות], [ומגדנות] Gen 24:53; 2Chr 21:3; 2Chr 32:23; Ezra 1:6

מָגוֹג H4031 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (4×)

Magog, name of a territory and people descended from Japheth

Magog appears both as a son of Japheth in the genealogical table of nations (Genesis 10:2, 1 Chronicles 1:5) and as a territorial designation in Ezekiel's prophecy against Gog (Ezekiel 38:2, 39:6). Ancient interpreters identified Magog with the Scythians or regions in Armenia and Cappadocia. The name may mean 'land of Gog,' linking it to the prophetic figure who leads forces against Israel in Ezekiel's vision of end-time conflict.

(4×) A proper name denoting both a people group (descended from Japheth) and a geographical territory, prominently featured in Ezekiel's eschatological prophecy. The multilingual glosses maintain the proper name without translation, consistent with its function as a geographical and ethnic identifier in both genealogical and prophetic contexts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Magog, on-Magog, the-Magog | es: Magog,, en-Magog, y-Magog | fr: dans-Magog, et-Magog, le-Magog | de: [במגוג], [המגוג], [ומגוג] Gen 10:2; 1Chr 1:5; Ezek 38:2; Ezek 39:6

מָגוֹר H4032 N-mpc / 1cs (8×)

Terror, dread; object of fear. Especially in Jeremiah's coined phrase magor missabib, 'terror on every side.'

Derived from the root gur III ('to fear, dread'), this noun expresses overwhelming terror or the cause of dread. It is most famous for Jeremiah's striking phrase magor missabib – 'terror on every side' (Jer 6:25; 20:3, 10; 46:5; 49:29) – which became almost a prophetic signature. The same phrase echoes in Psalm 31:13 and Lamentations 2:22, showing how deeply Jeremiah's coinage entered Israel's vocabulary of anguish. Spanish 'terror' and German Schrecken both capture the visceral force of this word.

terror, dread, fear (8×) Terror, dread, or an object of fear. All eight occurrences carry the same core meaning, though usage ranges from abstract dread (Isa 31:9, 'his rock shall pass away for terror') to concrete cause of terror (Jer 20:4, 'I will make you a terror to yourself'). The word is indelibly linked to Jeremiah's repeated refrain magor missabib, 'terror on every side' (Jer 6:25; 20:3, 10; 46:5; 49:29), echoed in Ps 31:13 and Lam 2:22. Cross-lingual renderings – Spanish terror, French epouvante, German Schrecken – uniformly point to intense, paralyzing fear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Terror, for-terror, from-terror | es: Terror, mis-terrores, para-terror | fr: de-terreur, de-épouvante, à-épouvante | de: Schrecken, [מגורי], von-Schrecken
Ps 31:13; Isa 31:9; Jer 6:25; Jer 20:4; Jer 20:10

מָגוֹר H4033 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (11×)
Sojourning or place of sojourning; temporary residence as an alien in a land not one's own; also a dwelling place.
A noun from the root גור ('to sojourn'), capturing both the act of living as a stranger and the place where one resides temporarily. The patriarchal narratives use it repeatedly for the land of Canaan as 'the land of their sojournings' (Gen 17:8; 28:4; 36:7; 37:1), underscoring Israel's alien status before settlement. Jacob poignantly summarizes his 'years of sojourning' before Pharaoh (Gen 47:9), and the Psalmist calls God's statutes his songs 'in the house of my sojourning' (Ps 119:54). Spanish 'peregrinaciones' and German 'Fremdlingschaft' beautifully convey the pilgrim-stranger dimension. In two poetic passages (Job 18:19; Ps 55:15) the word shifts toward a concrete dwelling place or habitation.

1. sojourning, living as alien (9×) The act or state of sojourning – living temporarily as a foreigner or resident alien in land that is not one's permanent possession. Used predominantly in the Priestly source for the patriarchs' alien status in Canaan: 'the land of your sojournings' (Gen 17:8; 28:4; 36:7; 37:1; Exod 6:4; Ezek 20:38). Also temporal: Jacob's 'years of sojourning' (Gen 47:9) and the Psalmist's 'house of sojourning' (Ps 119:54) treat life itself as a pilgrimage. Spanish 'peregrinaciones' (pilgrimages) and German 'Fremdlingschaft' (stranger-status) reveal how translators heard the theological resonance of impermanence and dependence on God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-sojourning, sojourning-my, sojourning-their | es: mis-peregrinaciones, peregrinaciones-de, peregrinaciones-de-ellos | fr: de-séjour, leur-sojournings, sojournings-de | de: [מגוריהם], deiner-Fremdlingschaft, der-Fremdlingschaft
Gen 17:8; Gen 28:4; Gen 36:7; Gen 37:1; Gen 47:9

2. dwelling place, habitation (2×) A concrete dwelling place or habitation – the physical location where one resides, without emphasis on the temporary or alien dimension. In Job 18:19, the wicked man has no survivor 'in his dwellings,' and Psalm 55:15 calls for death to come upon enemies 'in their dwelling.' Spanish 'morada' (abode) and English 'dwelling' confirm the shift from abstract sojourning to a tangible place of residence. These two occurrences show the word's semantic range extending from the pilgrim's transient stay to settled habitation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: are-in-their-dwelling, in-his-dwellings | es: en-su-morada, en-sus-moradas | fr: dans-son-במגוריו-lui, dans-séjour | de: [במגוריו], sind-in-ihr-Wohnung
Job 18:19; Ps 55:15

מְגוּרָה H4034 N-fsc (2×)
terror, fear, dread (thing feared)
A noun meaning terror, fear, or dread—specifically the thing that is dreaded or the object of fear. Psalm 34:4 speaks of deliverance from 'all my fears/terrors.' Proverbs 10:24 warns that 'the dread of the wicked' (what the wicked person fears) will come upon them. The term emphasizes not just the emotion of fear but the concrete threat or danger that produces fear.

(2×) Refers to terror, fear, or dread as the object of fearing—the thing dreaded. Has three biblical occurrences with slight form variations: (1) Psalm 34:4—'from all my fears' God delivered; (2) Proverbs 10:24—'the dread of the wicked' (what they fear) overtakes them; (3) Isaiah 66:4—'I will bring their fears upon them' (things they dreaded). The term emphasizes the concrete object of terror rather than just the emotional state. Feminine forms with unusual vowel pointing reflect textual peculiarities. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-fears, the-dread-of | es: mis-temores, temor-de | fr: de-terreur, מגורת | de: [מגורת], mein-fürchtet
Ps 34:4; Prov 10:24

מְגוּרָה H4035 Prep-b (2×)
storehouse, granary; (or) fears/terrors
A homonym with two completely different meanings depending on context. In Haggai 2:19, it clearly means storehouse or granary (is the seed still in the granary?). But in Isaiah 66:4, the same form appears in a context about bringing 'their fears' upon people, matching the terror/fear meaning of H4034. This creates interpretive challenge—are these two separate words that happen to look identical, or one word with metaphorical extension?

(2×) Functions as two distinct meanings: (1) Storehouse/granary—Haggai 2:19 asks 'is the seed still in the storehouse?' clearly referring to a grain storage building; (2) Fears/terrors—Isaiah 66:4 in many translations gives 'their fears' (parallel to H4034), though some interpret even here as metaphorical 'storehouse' of terror. The German and French glosses show this split: Haggai gets 'meule/granary' while Isaiah gets 'fears/troubles.' Context determines which homonym applies. STOREHOUSE GRANARY
en: and-their-fears, in-the-storehouse | es: en-el-granero?, y-sus-temores | fr: [ומגורתם], meule | de: [במגורה], [ומגורתם]
Isa 66:4; Hag 2:19

סָבִיב H4036 Prep-m / Adv (2×)
Magor-Missabib (Terror on Every Side), symbolic name
A symbolic name meaning 'Terror on Every Side' or 'Fear All Around,' given by Jeremiah to the priest Pashhur who struck him and put him in stocks. Jeremiah 20:3 records this prophetic renaming, declaring Pashhur would become a terror to himself and all his friends. The name encapsulates the theme of surrounding dread that appears throughout Jeremiah—enemies on all sides, fear encompassing completely.

(2×) A symbolic proper name given by Jeremiah, meaning 'Terror on Every Side' or 'Fear All Around.' Appears twice in Jeremiah 20:3 (both occurrences in the same verse): first as the name Jeremiah assigns to Pashhur, then immediately repeated. The name represents complete encirclement by terror—the horror of being besieged by fear from every direction. This phrase becomes a recurring motif in Jeremiah's prophecy. The name itself is a prophetic proclamation of coming judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: On-Every-Side, Terror | es: Magor, Missabib | fr: [מסביב], épouvante | de: Schrecken, [מסביב]
Jer 20:3

מַגְזֵרָה H4037 Conj-w (1×)
axe, cutting instrument
A term for an axe or cutting instrument, appearing in 2 Samuel 12:31. David put captured Ammonites to forced labor 'at the saws and at the iron axes.' This describes harsh treatment of prisoners of war, setting them to brutal construction or demolition work. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 20:3 confirms this reading. The multilingual evidence shows some variation in rendering this compound phrase involving axes and other tools.

(1×) Axe, iron cutting instrument used in forced labor. 2 Samuel 12:31 describes David putting Ammonite captives to work with saws and iron axes, likely in quarrying or demolition. The term emphasizes the cutting function of this implement. Some translations struggle with the prepositional phrase, rendering it variously as 'at axes' or 'with axes.' The parallel in Chronicles confirms these were iron tools for harsh labor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-axes-of | es: y-en-hachas-de | fr: et-à-axes-de | de: und-bei-axes-von 2Sam 12:31

מַגָּל H4038 N-ms (2×)

sickle, harvesting tool

A curved blade tool used for harvesting grain, appearing in both literal agricultural and metaphorical judgment contexts. Jeremiah 50:16 commands cutting off the sower and the one who handles the sickle—destroying Babylon's agricultural capacity. Joel 3:13 uses the sickle metaphorically: 'Put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe'—a vivid image of divine judgment as harvesting ripe wickedness. The sickle becomes an instrument of both sustenance and judgment.

(2×) A sickle, the curved blade tool for cutting grain at harvest. Appears in two contexts: (1) Jeremiah 50:16—literal agricultural reference, 'cut off the one who handles the sickle at harvest' as part of Babylon's destruction; (2) Joel 3:13—metaphorical judgment, 'put in the sickle for the harvest is ripe,' where harvest imagery represents God reaping judgment on nations. This imagery later appears in Revelation 14. The sickle connects agriculture and eschatology. SICKLE HARVEST TOOL

en: sickle, the-sickle | es: hoz | fr: [מגל], faucille | de: [מגל] Jer 50:16; Joel 3:13

מְגִלָּה H4039 Prep-b / N-fsc (21×)

Scroll, written roll — a rolled document of parchment or papyrus used for recording prophecy and law

The standard term for a written scroll in late biblical Hebrew, appearing almost exclusively in prophetic contexts. Its most dramatic appearance is in Jeremiah 36, where Baruch writes Jeremiah's oracles on a scroll that King Jehoiakim methodically cuts and burns — only for the prophet to dictate a replacement. Ezekiel receives a scroll written on both sides with lamentations (Ezek 2:9-3:3), and Zechariah sees a flying scroll of judgment (Zech 5:1-2). The Psalmist's reference to 'the scroll of the book' (Ps 40:7) links written text to covenantal obedience.

scroll / written roll (21×) A rolled document of papyrus or leather used for recording prophetic oracles, divine instructions, or other formal texts. Dominates the narrative of Jeremiah 36, where the noun occurs sixteen times as Baruch's scroll is written, read, confiscated, burned, and rewritten. Also designates the visionary scroll Ezekiel is commanded to eat (Ezek 2:9-3:3) and Zechariah's flying scroll of curse (Zech 5:1-2). Spanish 'rollo,' French 'rouleau,' and German 'Rolle' all preserve the physical sense of a rolled writing surface. SCROLL WRITTEN ROLL

en: a-scroll, in-the-scroll, scroll | es: El-rollo, el-rollo, en-el-rollo | fr: dans-rouleau, le-rouleau, rouleau | de: Rolle, von-offenbarte Ps 40:7; Jer 36:2; Jer 36:4; Jer 36:6; Jer 36:14

מְגִלָּה H4040 N-fs (1×)

scroll, book-roll, written document

An Aramaic word meaning scroll or book-roll, appearing in Ezra 6:2. During the search for Cyrus's decree authorizing temple rebuilding, a scroll was found in the citadel at Ecbatana. This refers to the physical format of ancient documents—leather or papyrus sheets rolled around a rod. The discovery of this scroll provided legal proof of Persian authorization for the temple project. The term is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew word for scroll.

(1×) Scroll, book-roll containing a written decree. Ezra 6:2 reports finding 'a scroll' with Cyrus's authorization for rebuilding the temple. This Aramaic term matches the Hebrew 'megillah,' both referring to rolled documents. The multilingual evidence (scroll, rollo, Rolle) consistently renders this as a rolled document. The discovery of this archival scroll vindicated the Jews' claim to Persian support for their temple project. SCROLL WRITTEN ROLL

en: a-scroll | es: un-rollo | fr: [מגלה] | de: Rolle Ezra 6:2

מְגַמָּה H4041 N-fsc (1×)

eagerness, intent, forward direction

A hapax legomenon of uncertain meaning in Habakkuk 1:9, describing the Chaldean invaders. The text reads literally 'the eagerness of their faces is eastward' or 'forward.' Scholars debate whether this means eager determination, the assembling or massing of their forces, or simply their forward motion. BDB notes the text is probably corrupt. Nevertheless, the context describes the unstoppable advance of the Babylonian army, and this term somehow characterizes their relentless forward momentum.

(1×) Eagerness, forward intent, or direction of advance. Habakkuk 1:9 uses this of the Chaldeans: 'the eagerness of their faces forward.' BDB suggests meanings ranging from 'assembling' to 'eagerness,' comparing questionable Arabic cognates. The Spanish gloss 'la-dirección-de' (the direction of) reflects uncertainty. Despite textual difficulties, the context of Babylonian invasion makes clear this describes their focused, relentless advance toward conquest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-eagerness-of | es: la-dirección-de- | fr: parfum | de: [מגמת] Hab 1:9

מָגַן H4042 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs / 2ms (3×)

to deliver up, hand over; to bestow or give

A Piel verb with two related senses: delivering someone into the hands of an adversary, or giving/bestowing something as a gift. Genesis 14:20 celebrates God who delivered Abraham's enemies into his hand. Proverbs 4:9 uses it positively—wisdom will bestow a crown of honor. Hosea 11:8 contains God's anguished cry asking how He can deliver up Israel to destruction. The verb captures the decisive act of transferring someone or something from one party to another.

(3×) Multilingual glosses show semantic range from 'delivered, handed over' to 'bestow, give.' Spanish distinguishes 'entregó' (delivered) from 'te-entregará' (will bestow). Genesis 14:20 praises God for delivering enemies into Abraham's power. Proverbs 4:9 promises wisdom will bestow honor, while Hosea 11:8 reveals divine pathos—God's heart recoiling from delivering beloved Israel to judgment as He did Admah and Zeboiim. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: can-I-surrender-you, delivered, she-will-bestow-on-you | es: entregó, te-cederé, te-entregará | fr: délivra, protéger, תמגנך | de: [אמגנך], [תמגנך], überliefert-hat Gen 14:20; Prov 4:9; Hos 11:8

מָגֵן H4043 Conj-w / N-csc / 3mp (63×)

Shield or buckler used in warfare; metaphorically, God as protector; rarely, an armed man or a ruler/patron.

Magen is the warrior's personal defense — a small, round shield carried into battle, distinct from the larger tsinnah. It appears across battle narratives from the Song of Deborah ('Was there a shield seen among forty thousand?' Judg 5:8) to Ezekiel's apocalyptic armies (38:4-5; 39:9). Yet its most enduring resonance is theological: 'I am your shield' (Gen 15:1), God's self-declaration to Abraham, echoed throughout the Psalms (Ps 3:3; 7:10; 18:2). Spanish escudo, French bouclier, Arabic ad-dir', and German Schild all serve both the martial and metaphorical registers. Proverbs twice uses magen for an armed assailant (6:11; 24:34), and Hosea 4:18 extends it to 'rulers' — those who shield a community by governing it.

1. shield, defensive weapon (60×) The dominant sense across 60 occurrences: a defensive shield or buckler used in combat, and by metaphorical extension, God as the believer's protector and defense. Concrete military uses span Judges 5:8, 2 Samuel 1:21, Nahum 2:3, and the arsenal passages in Chronicles. The metaphorical register — 'The LORD is my shield' (Gen 15:1; Ps 3:3; 18:2, 30; 28:7; 33:20; 84:11; 115:9-11) — is pervasive in the Psalter. Spanish escudo, French bouclier, Arabic ad-dir', German Schild, and Korean bangpae all cover both the physical weapon and the divine-protector image. SHIELD DEFENSIVE WEAPON

en: a-shield, buckler, shield | es: el-escudo, el-escudo-pequeño, escudo | fr: bouclier, bouclier-de, de-jardin | de: Schild, Schild-von, bin-ein-Schild Gen 15:1; Deut 33:29; Judg 5:8; 2Sam 1:21

2. armed man, shield-bearer (2×) In Proverbs 6:11 and 24:34, magen appears to mean an armed man or shield-bearer — poverty comes upon the sluggard 'like an armed man' (ke'ish magen). Here the shield metonymically represents the warrior who carries it. Spanish armado ('armed one') and the English rendering 'an armed man' treat magen as a personal agent rather than a piece of equipment, a compact metonymy where the weapon stands for the fighter. SHIELD DEFENSIVE WEAPON

en: a-shield, shields | es: armado, de-escudo | fr: bouclier | de: Schild Prov 6:11; Prov 24:34

3. ruler, protector (1×) A single occurrence in Hosea 4:18 where maginneha ('her shields') is understood as 'her rulers' or 'protectors' — the leaders who are supposed to shield the community but instead love shame. The metaphor extends from physical defense to political patronage. Spanish sus escudos preserves the ambiguity, while the contextual sense clearly points to governing figures. This usage parallels the Psalmic epithet of God as magen but applies it to human authorities who fail in their protective role. SHIELD DEFENSIVE WEAPON

en: her-rulers | es: sus-escudos | fr: bouclier | de: [מגניה] Hos 4:18

מְגֻפָּה H4044 N-fsc (1×)

covering, hardness of heart, spiritual obstinacy

A rare word meaning covering, appearing in Lamentations 3:65 as 'covering of heart.' This describes spiritual hardness or obstinacy—a shell or veil over the heart preventing understanding. Some interpret this as obstinacy or stubbornness, others as blindness of heart. The image is of something that shields or covers the heart, preventing God's word from penetrating. The Quranic parallel cited in BDB shows similar imagery of covers placed on hearts to prevent belief.

(1×) Covering of heart, hardness or blindness preventing spiritual understanding. Lamentations 3:65 asks God to give enemies 'covering of heart'—either obstinacy or blindness. BDB compares Quranic imagery of coverings on hearts preventing belief. The Spanish 'dureza-de' (hardness of) captures the sense of impenetrability. This describes a judicial hardening where God gives people over to their chosen spiritual blindness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7670 WITH 5 SENSES

en: hardness | es: dureza-de | fr: [מגנת] | de: [מגנת] Lam 3:65

מִגְעֶרֶת H4045 Art / N-fs (1×)

rebuke, threat, stern reproof

A term for rebuke or reproof, appearing in Deuteronomy 28:20 among covenant curses. God threatens to send 'rebuke' upon disobedient Israel along with confusion and frustration. This rebuke is more than verbal correction—it represents God's active opposition and judgment against covenant-breakers. The term carries weight of divine displeasure and punitive action. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as rebuke or reproof, though some show the threatening dimension.

(1×) Rebuke, stern reproof expressing divine judgment. Deuteronomy 28:20 lists this among curses for covenant disobedience: 'YHWH will send upon you cursing, confusion, and rebuke.' The Spanish 'la-amenaza' (the threat) captures the menacing aspect beyond mere verbal correction. This rebuke accompanies divine action against rebels—not just words but active judgment demonstrating God's displeasure with covenant violation. REPROOF REBUKE ARGUMENT

en: the-rebuke | es: la-amenaza | fr: le-rebuke | de: der-rebuke Deut 28:20

מַגֵּפָה H4046 Conj-w (26×)

Plague, pestilence, or devastating blow; a divinely sent epidemic or a catastrophic military slaughter.

Derived from the root nagaph (to strike), maggephah always carries the force of a massive, often divinely ordained blow. Its primary use is for plagues sent by God in judgment – the wilderness afflictions after Israel's rebellion (Num 14:37; 16:48-50; 25:8-9) and the pestilence that followed David's census (2 Sam 24:21, 25). A secondary military sense appears in narratives of battlefield carnage: the devastating Israelite defeat at Aphek (1 Sam 4:17) and Absalom's rebel army routed in the forest of Ephraim (2 Sam 18:7). Spanish distinguishes cleanly between 'plaga' (plague) and 'derrota/mortandad' (defeat/slaughter).

1. plague, pestilence (23×) A plague or pestilence sent as divine judgment on a population. This covers 23 of 26 occurrences, centered on Numbers' wilderness narratives and the Davidic census plague. The term implies supernatural causation and communal scope – entire communities are struck. Exodus 9:14 uses the plural 'my plagues' as God warns Pharaoh. Psalm 106:29-30 recalls how Phinehas's intervention 'stayed the plague,' and Zechariah 14:15 extends the concept eschatologically. French and German bracket the Hebrew forms ([מגפה], [המגפה]), preserving the original when no single word suffices. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: a-plague, and-the-plague, by-the-plague | es: como-la-plaga, en-la-plaga, la-plaga | fr: [המגפה], [כמגפה], [מגפה] | de: [המגפה], [כמגפה], [מגפה] Exod 9:14; Num 14:37; Num 16:48; Num 16:49; Num 16:50

2. slaughter, great defeat (3×) A great slaughter or devastating military defeat, emphasizing massive casualties in battle. Used in 1 Samuel 4:17 for the Philistine rout at Aphek (where the ark was captured), 2 Samuel 17:9 for predicted carnage in Absalom's rebellion, and 2 Samuel 18:7 for the forest battle's enormous toll. Spanish 'derrota' (defeat) and 'mortandad' (mass killing) capture the battlefield specificity, while French 'immole' (slaughter) emphasizes the sacrificial violence of the imagery. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: a-slaughter, slaughter, the-slaughter | es: derrota, la-derrota, mortandad | fr: immole, le-immole, un-immole | de: der-slaughter, ein-slaughter, slaughter 1Sam 4:17; 2Sam 17:9; 2Sam 18:7

מַגְפִּיעָשׁ H4047 N-proper-ms (1×)

Magpiash, personal name of a leader who sealed the covenant

A personal name appearing in Nehemiah 10:20, identifying a chief of the people who sealed the covenant renewal under Nehemiah. The name appears in a list of leaders publicly committing to Torah observance and separation from surrounding peoples. The LXX shows various Greek renderings, indicating the name was preserved in translation though its etymology is unclear. This individual was among the prominent leaders taking covenant responsibility.

(1×) Magpiash, proper name of a leader in post-exilic Jerusalem. Nehemiah 10:20 lists him among chiefs of the people who sealed the covenant. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Magpias), preserving the Hebrew name. LXX variants (Bagaphes, Maiaphis, Megaias) show different Greek attempts at this Semitic name. His inclusion among covenant signatories marks him as a leader of restored Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Magpiash | es: Magpias | fr: [מגפיעש] | de: [מגפיעש] Neh 10:20

מָגַר H4048 V-Piel-Perf-2ms (2×)

cast down, hurl, throw

A verb meaning to cast, throw, hurl, or toss down, appearing in poetic contexts of violence or judgment. Psalm 89:44 declares God has cast down the king's throne to the earth—a powerful image of divine overthrow. Ezekiel 21:12 describes victims as 'cast to the sword'—delivered over to violent death. The Aramaic cognates suggest falling or hurling, emphasizing forceful downward motion.

(2×) To cast, hurl, or throw down forcefully. Appears in two contexts: (1) Psalm 89:44 (Piel perfect)—'You have hurled his throne to earth,' describing God's overthrow of the Davidic king; (2) Ezekiel 21:12 (Qal passive participle)—'they are cast/delivered to the sword,' people thrown to violent death. Both uses emphasize violent downward motion—thrones hurled earthward, people thrown to swords. The term conveys divine or military force casting down what was high. THROWING AND CASTING

en: terrors, you-have-hurled | es: derribaste, entregados | fr: de-jeter, jeter | de: [מגורי], du-haben-hurled Ps 89:44; Ezek 21:12

מְגַר H4049 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (1×)

overthrow, pull down, destroy

An Aramaic verb meaning to overthrow or pull down, appearing in Ezra 6:12. The decree pronounces judgment on any king or people who would destroy the Jerusalem temple: 'May the God who has caused his name to dwell there overthrow any king or people.' This is Pael (intensive) form expressing forceful destruction. The verb emphasizes divine retribution against those who would harm God's sanctuary. The multilingual evidence shows this as violent overthrow or pulling down.

(1×) Overthrow, pull down, destroy (divine action against temple destroyers). Ezra 6:12 invokes divine judgment: 'May He overthrow any king who alters this or destroys the temple.' This Aramaic Pael form indicates intensive action. The Spanish 'derribe' (knock down, overthrow) captures the violent reversal. The context of protecting God's house makes this about divine vengeance ensuring the temple's security against hostile powers. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: may-He-overthrow | es: derribe | fr: [ימגר] | de: [ימגר] Ezra 6:12

מְגֵרָה H4050 Conj-w (4×)

saw (tool for cutting stone or wood)

A cutting implement used primarily for working with stone in construction contexts, as in the temple building (1 Kings 7:9). The term also appears in the grim narrative of David's treatment of captive Ammonites, where saws figure among tools of forced labor or instruments of execution (2 Samuel 12:31, 1 Chronicles 20:3). The etymology may connect to the harsh, dragging sound the tool makes when cutting.

(4×) A saw used for cutting stone or wood, appearing both in construction contexts (cutting stone for Solomon's temple) and in darker passages describing the subjugation of conquered peoples. The multilingual evidence ('saws,' 'saw,' 'sierra') consistently identifies it as a cutting tool, though the exact nature of its use in 2 Samuel 12:31 remains debated—whether for labor or punishment. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-with-saws, at-the-saws, with-the-saw | es: con-la-sierra, en-la-sierra, y-con-hachas | fr: [במגרה], [ובמגרות], avec-le-vit | de: [במגרה], [ובמגרות], bei-der-saws 2Sam 12:31; 1Kgs 7:9; 1Chr 20:3

מִגְרוֹן H4051 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Migron, a place near Gibeah/Michmash

A place name appearing twice, possibly referring to two different locations or the same place in different contexts. In 1 Samuel 14:2, Migron is associated with Gibeah, where Saul sat under a pomegranate tree. In Isaiah 10:28, it's mentioned in the Assyrian invasion route north of Michmash. The name may derive from a word meaning threshing floor or steep place. Septuagint renderings (Magdon, Magedo) show variation.

(2×) A place name, possibly two different sites or one place referenced twice. (1) 1 Samuel 14:2—location near Gibeah where Saul encamped; (2) Isaiah 10:28—location on the Assyrian invasion route, apparently north of Michmash. Some scholars propose the name isn't a proper noun in 1 Samuel but means 'threshing floor' (though this word isn't attested in Hebrew). The prepositional forms ('in Migron,' 'through Migron') confirm place name usage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Migron, through-Migron | es: en-Migrón, por-Migron | fr: [במגרון], dans-Migron | de: [במגרון], in-Migron 1Sam 14:2; Isa 10:28

מִגְרָעָה H4052 N-fp (1×)

ledges, recesses, rebatements in temple walls

A plural noun meaning ledges or recesses, appearing in 1 Kings 6:6 describing Solomon's temple construction. These were architectural features—indentations in the exterior temple walls that supported the beams of side chambers without requiring beams to be inserted into the holy wall itself. This clever design allowed attachment of auxiliary rooms while preserving the integrity of the main temple structure. The term emphasizes the technical architectural planning involved.

(1×) Ledges, recesses, or rebatements in temple walls for supporting side chambers. 1 Kings 6:6 explains that Solomon made ledges around the temple exterior so beams wouldn't penetrate the sacred walls. The multilingual evidence (ledges, rebajos) captures this architectural feature. These stepped recesses allowed progressively narrower side chambers at each level while maintaining structural support without violating the temple's holy walls. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: ledges | es: rebajos | fr: ledges | de: ledges 1Kgs 6:6

מְגֻרָפָה H4053 N-fpc / 3mp (1×)

clods, shovels, implements (meaning uncertain)

A word of uncertain meaning in Joel 1:17, describing agricultural devastation. The MT reads 'the seed shrivels under their clods,' taking this as clods of earth. BDB notes Jewish interpreters favored 'clods,' while the LXX suggests a different reading (cribs or storehouses). Another proposal is 'shovels' from the agricultural context. The exact meaning remains debated, but the context is clearly one of drought and failed crops.

(1×) Clods of earth, or possibly shovels (meaning disputed). Joel 1:17 describes agricultural ruin: seeds shrivel 'under their clods/shovels.' BDB presents multiple options: clods (following Jewish tradition and AV/RV), cribs (following LXX), or shovels (from Arabic cognate). The Spanish 'terrones-de-ellos' (their clods) follows the traditional reading. Despite lexical uncertainty, the image is agricultural desolation—whether dry clods, empty cribs, or unused tools. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: their-clods | es: terrones-de-ellos | fr: motte | de: [מגרפתיהם] Joel 1:17

מִגְרָשׁ H4054 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fp (115×)

Pasture-land, open common surrounding a city; specifically the grazing grounds allotted to Levitical cities

Migrash denotes the open land surrounding a settlement, set aside as common ground — primarily for pasturing livestock. The word appears overwhelmingly in the Levitical city allotment lists of Joshua 21 and 1 Chronicles 6, where each city comes 'with its pasture-lands.' Numbers 35:2-5 provides the legal framework, prescribing measured boundaries for these commons. In Ezekiel's visionary city plan (Ezek 45:2, 48:15-17), the term shifts toward 'open space' in a more architectural sense. German Weideland and French paturage capture the pastoral core, while Spanish ejido — itself a legal term for communal land — provides a remarkably precise cultural parallel.

1. pasture-land of a city (110×) The dominant technical-legal sense: designated pasture-land or common attached to Levitical cities for grazing livestock. This accounts for 110 of 115 occurrences, clustered heavily in Joshua 21, 1 Chronicles 6, and Numbers 35. The term appears almost formulaically: 'the city and its pasture-lands' (Josh 21:11, 13). German Weide-Land and French paturage reflect the pastoral function, while Spanish campos captures the open-field quality. The root g-r-sh ('drive') suggests land where cattle are driven out to graze. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pasture-land-of-it, pasture-lands-of-them | es: sus-campos | fr: pâturage-lands-de-eux, pâturage-pays-de-il | de: Weide-Laender-von-ihnen, Weide-Land-von-es Josh 21:3; Josh 21:8; Josh 21:11; Josh 21:13

2. open land, open space (4×) A broader sense of open land or vacant space near a settlement, emphasizing the absence of buildings rather than pastoral use. Ezekiel's visionary descriptions employ this sense: the open space around the sanctuary (Ezek 45:2), the open area for the city (Ezek 48:15, 17), and the 'suburbs' that shake at the fall of Tyre (Ezek 27:28). Spanish ejido — originally designating communal open land at a town's edge — captures this urban-adjacent nuance well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-open-land, open-land, the-pasture-lands | es: ejido, los-campos, y-para-ejido | fr: et-pâturage, pâturage | de: Weideland, und-zu-Weideland Ezek 27:28; Ezek 45:2; Ezek 48:15; Ezek 48:17

3. expulsion, driving out (1×) A possible verbal reading connected to the root garash ('to drive out, expel'), surfacing in Ezekiel 36:5, where the form migrash may represent a Qal infinitive meaning 'expulsion' or 'dispossession' rather than the usual noun. The English gloss 'expel her' diverges sharply from the pastoral glosses elsewhere. This is likely a homographic overlap, and some commentators emend the text accordingly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: expel-her | es: su-dehesa | fr: pâturage | de: Weideland Ezek 36:5

מַד H4055 N-ms (13×)

A measure or allotted portion; a garment or outer robe; by extension a cloth spread or carpet

Derived from the root idea of extending or stretching out, this noun covers several concrete meanings unified by the concept of measured extent. Most frequently it denotes a garment or military tunic — the robe Ehud concealed his dagger beneath (Judg 3:16) or the armor Saul dressed David in (1 Sam 17:38). Spanish 'túnica' and German 'Gewand' both capture the formal outer-garment sense. In Jeremiah 13:25 it means an allotted measure or portion, while in Judges 5:10 it likely refers to richly dyed saddle-blankets or carpets spread for sitting.

1. garment, robe, clothing (8×) The most common use, denoting an article of clothing — typically a tunic or outer robe. The priestly vestments of Leviticus 6:10 and the military garb of 1 Samuel 17:38–39 both employ this sense. Multilingual evidence converges strongly: English 'garments,' Spanish 'túnica/ropa,' French 'vêtement,' and German 'Gewand/Mantel' all point to a wearable outer garment rather than underclothing. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-garments-his, and-his-clothes, garments-his | es: como-su-vestido, su-ropa, su-túnica | fr: comme-vêtement, et-son-vêtements, et-vêtements-son | de: Kleider-sein, sein-Gewand, sein-Mantel Lev 6:10; Judg 3:16; 1Sam 4:12; 1Sam 17:38; 1Sam 17:39

2. stature, tallness (2×) A rare use in 2 Samuel 21:20 (Kethib), where the word appears to denote bodily stature or great physical size, describing a man of extraordinary height. The Qere reads differently (מָדוֹן), and the parallel in 1 Chronicles 20:6 uses מִדָּה 'measure,' suggesting this sense borders on textual uncertainty. STATURE THREE ANOMALY

en: [k], strife | es: (de-contención), [de-contención] | fr: [k], strife | de: [k] 2Sam 21:20

3. measure, dimension (2×) The abstract sense of measure, dimension, or apportioned quantity. In Job 11:9 it describes the immeasurable extent of God's wisdom, and in Jeremiah 13:25 the 'portion of your measures' — the allotted share assigned to unfaithful Judah. Spanish 'medidas' and English 'measure' confirm this quantitative reading. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: measure-its, your-measure | es: es-su-medida,, medidas-tuyas | fr: [מדיך], sa-מדה-elle | de: [מדה], [מדיך] Job 11:9; Jer 13:25

4. carpet, spread, saddle-blanket (1×) A hapax use in Judges 5:10, where it likely refers to richly dyed cloths, carpets, or saddle-blankets spread on donkeys for riding. The context of Deborah's song, addressing those who sit on white donkeys upon 'middîn,' supports this as a luxury textile. Spanish 'tapices' (tapestries) captures the nuance well. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: -saddle-blankets | es: tapices | fr: -saddle-blankets | de: -saddle-blankets Judg 5:10

מִזְבַּח H4056 N-msd (1×)

altar (Aramaic)

The Aramaic word for altar, appearing in Ezra 7:17 with the emphatic state. The Persian king's decree authorized using treasury funds to buy animals for sacrifice 'upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.' This Aramaic term is cognate with Hebrew 'mizbeach' and refers to the bronze altar of burnt offering in the temple courtyard where sacrifices were offered. The emphatic state ('the altar') specifies the particular altar at Jerusalem.

(1×) The altar, specifically the altar of burnt offering in Jerusalem's temple. Ezra 7:17 uses this in the Aramaic portion of the king's decree funding temple sacrifices. The emphatic state marks this as the definite, specific altar at Jerusalem. The multilingual glosses (the-altar, el-altar) preserve the definiteness. This refers to the central structure where Israel's sacrificial worship was restored after exile. ALTAR SACRIFICE PLACE

en: the-altar | es: el-altar | fr: [מדבחה] | de: [מדבחה] Ezra 7:17

מִדְבָּר H4057a Conj-w / N-msc / 2fs (1×)

mouth, speech, organ of speaking

A poetic term for mouth as the organ of speech, appearing in Song of Solomon 4:3. The lover praises his beloved: 'Your mouth/speech is lovely,' parallel to 'your lips.' BDB distinguishes this from the common word for wilderness, identifying it as a separate root meaning mouth or speech. The LXX renders this 'lalia' (speech), and Jerome translates 'eloquium.' The term emphasizes the beauty of the beloved's words and manner of speaking.

(1×) Mouth, speech, manner of speaking. Song of Solomon 4:3 uses this in love poetry: 'your speech is lovely,' in parallel with 'your lips are like scarlet thread.' The multilingual evidence (speech, habla, bouche) shows this as the speaking organ or speech itself. The LXX 'lalia' confirms this refers to speech or manner of speaking, not wilderness. The lover praises both the visual beauty of lips and the loveliness of words. PALATE MOUTH

en: and-your-speech | es: y-tu-habla | fr: et-ta-bouche | de: [ומדבריך] Song 4:3

מִדְבָּר H4057b Conj-w (270×)

Wilderness, desert; uninhabited open land used for pasturage or traversed in journeys

Appearing 270 times, midbar is the quintessential biblical landscape of testing, wandering, and encounter with God. Far from being simply barren desert, it denotes open, uncultivated land that could serve as pasture (Joel 2:22; Ps 65:13) but was largely uninhabited (Job 38:26). It is the setting for Israel's forty-year sojourn after the Exodus, the haunt of wild animals (Jer 2:24), and the place where prophetic voices cry out (Isa 40:3). The consistent rendering across languages as 'wilderness' or 'desert' (Spanish desierto, French desert, German Wueste) captures its core sense of land beyond settled habitation.

wilderness, desert region (270×) Uninhabited open country or arid terrain beyond the boundaries of settled agricultural land, used for seasonal pasturage but lacking permanent habitation. The primary setting of Israel's post-Exodus wandering (Exod 15:22ff.), the domain of wild creatures (Job 24:5; Jer 2:24), and a place of divine encounter and prophetic proclamation (Isa 40:3). Spanish desierto and German Wueste reflect the desolation sense, while the pastoral usage in Joel 2:22 shows its broader range. VENGEANCE AND RETRIBUTION

en: in-the-wilderness, into-the-wilderness | es: en-el-desierto | fr: dans-le-désert | de: in-der-Wueste, in-der-Wüste Gen 16:7; Gen 21:20; Gen 36:24; Gen 37:22; Exod 3:18

מָדַד H4058 V-Piel-Imperf.h-1cs (51×)

To measure dimensions or quantity; passively, to be measured; reflexively, to stretch oneself upon

Rooted in a common Semitic stock shared with Akkadian madadu and Arabic madd ('to extend'), this verb fundamentally means to determine size, length, or quantity using a standard measure. Ezekiel's temple vision accounts for the bulk of its occurrences, where the angelic guide methodically measures every gate, wall, and court. The Nifal (passive) form appears in rhetorical contexts asserting God's immeasurable blessings: the sand of the sea 'cannot be measured' (Hos 1:10; Jer 33:22). A single Hitpael occurrence in 1 Kings 17:21 describes Elijah stretching himself upon the dead child.

1. to measure (47×) The active Qal and Piel sense of measuring, encompassing 47 of 51 occurrences. Ezekiel's temple vision (chs.

40-47) dominates with the repeated formula 'and he measured,' but the verb also appears in Ruth 3:15 (Boaz measuring barley), Exodus 16:18 (measuring manna), and Numbers 35:5 (measuring Levitical pasturelands). The Spanish 'midio' and French 'il mesura' consistently render the straightforward act of determining dimensions. MEASURE METE OUT en: and-he-measured | es: Y-midió, y-midió | fr: et-il-mesura, et-il-mesurera | de: und-messen Exod 16:18; Num 35:5; Deut 21:2; Ruth 3:15; 2Sam 8:2

2. to be measured (3×) The Nifal (passive) form meaning 'to be measured' or 'can be measured,' used three times in prophetic rhetoric about immeasurability. Jeremiah 31:37 and 33:22 declare that the host of heaven 'cannot be measured,' and Hosea 1:10 says Israel shall be as sand that 'cannot be measured.' This sense carries theological weight: what God multiplies exceeds all human capacity to quantify. MEASURE PASSIVE

en: can-be-measured | es: fueran-medidos, puede-ser-medida, se-medirá | fr: [ימד], [ימדו], il-mesurera | de: [ימד], [ימדו] Jer 31:37; Jer 33:22; Hos 1:10

3. to stretch oneself upon (1×) A unique Hitpael (reflexive) usage at 1 Kings 17:21, where Elijah 'stretched himself upon' the widow's dead son three times before the child revived. The reflexive stem shifts the meaning from spatial measurement to bodily extension, and the French rendering 'il etendit lui-meme' ('he stretched himself') captures this distinctive physical-prophetic action. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-he-stretched-himself | es: Y-se-tendió | fr: et-il-étendit-lui-même | de: und-er-streckte-aus-sich-selbst 1Kgs 17:21

מָדַד H4059 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

measured, extend, be prolonged (conjugated form)

A Piel perfect consecutive form of the verb 'to measure,' appearing in Job 7:4. Job complains, 'When I lie down I say, When shall I arise? But the night is prolonged/measured out.' Though from a root meaning 'measure,' here it carries the sense of being extended or prolonged—the night drags on interminably. Some versions render this 'the evening is measured out' emphasizing duration. Job's sleepless suffering makes nights feel endless.

(1×) Measured out, prolonged, extended (of night's duration). Job 7:4 uses this in Job's lament: 'the night is prolonged/measured out' as he tosses sleeplessly. The Spanish 'Y-se-prolonga' (and it is prolonged) captures the sense of extension rather than literal measuring. Though the root means 'measure,' the context of sleepless suffering gives this the nuance of interminable duration—nights that seem to stretch on forever. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-measured- | es: Y-se-prolonga | fr: et-ומדד | de: [ומדד] Job 7:4

מִדָּה H4060a Prep-k | N-fsc (54×)

Measure, measurement; a measured dimension, allotted section, bodily stature, or (rarely) a garment.

Middah is the Hebrew Bible's primary noun for the act and result of measuring. It appears overwhelmingly in technical architectural and sacral contexts — the curtains of the tabernacle (Exodus 26), Ezekiel's elaborate temple vision, and Nehemiah's wall-repair assignments. Yet the word extends beyond tape-measure precision into metaphorical territory: Job 28:25 speaks of God measuring out the weight of the wind, and Jer 31:39 envisions a 'measuring line' stretching over Jerusalem's restoration. Spanish medida and German Mass both capture the core well, but the fascinating outlier is Ps 133:2, where the same form likely means 'garment' (from the homographic noun mad), reminding us that Hebrew lexicography must always attend to homographic roots lurking beneath identical consonantal skeletons.

1. measure or measurement (41×) The dominant sense: a standard unit of measurement, the act of measuring, or a measured quantity — 41 of 54 occurrences. Covers the tabernacle curtain specifications (Exod 26:2, 8; 36:9, 15), Levitical fair-measure laws (Lev 19:35), Ezekiel's measuring reed and temple dimensions (Ezek 40:3, 5; 42:15-19), and figurative uses like Job 28:25's 'measure for the wind.' French mesure, Spanish medida, and German Mass all converge cleanly on this core sense. The prepositional constructions ke-middah ('according to the measure') confirm the word's role as a metrological standard. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: according-to-the-measures, measure, the-measure | es: conforme-a-las-medidas, la-medida, medida | fr: [מדה], comme-mesures, le-mesure | de: Mass, das-Mass, measure Exod 26:2; Exod 26:8; Exod 36:9; Exod 36:15; Lev 19:35

2. measured section or portion (7×) A measured-off section or allotted portion, especially of a building or territory — 7 occurrences clustered tightly in Nehemiah 3 (vv. 11, 19, 20, 21, 24). Each wall-repair crew is assigned a middah, a defined section to rebuild. The shift from abstract measurement to concrete 'portion' is subtle but real: German Abschnitt ('section') captures it better than Mass, and Spanish medida does double duty. This sense likely developed from the practice of measuring out work assignments — the measure became the thing measured. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: section | es: Medida, medida | fr: [מדה] | de: Abschnitt Neh 3:11; Neh 3:19; Neh 3:20; Neh 3:21; Neh 3:24

3. stature or bodily height (3×) Physical stature or bodily height — 3 occurrences describing persons of exceptional size. The spies report giants as men of middot, 'men of great stature' (Num 13:32); the Philistine warrior has extra fingers and is a man of middah (1 Chr 20:6); and Isaiah 45:14 describes the tall Sabeans. English 'stature' and French stature both select body-specific vocabulary here, confirming that this is not simply 'measurement applied to people' but a lexicalized sense meaning physical tallness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: stature | es: de-gran-estatura, estatura, medidas | fr: [מדה], stature | de: Mass, [מדה], stature Num 13:32; 1Chr 20:6; Isa 45:14

4. size or dimensions (2×) The overall size, extent, or spaciousness of something — 2 occurrences at 1 Chr 23:29 (Levitical duties include oversight of 'measures and sizes') and Jer 22:14 (Jehoiakim building a palace 'of spacious dimensions'). Spanish dimensiones and German und-Mass both reach for the spatial-extent meaning rather than a specific metric unit. The distinction from sense 1 is that here middah denotes the overall magnitude of a thing rather than a calibrated standard. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-size, spaciousness | es: de-dimensiones, y-tamaño | fr: [ומדה], [מדות] | de: [מדות], und-Mass 1Chr 23:29; Jer 22:14

5. garment or robe (1×) A garment or robe — a single occurrence at Ps 133:2, where the anointing oil runs down Aaron's beard onto the 'collar of his robes' (middotav). Most lexicographers (BDB included) attribute this to the homographic noun mad (garment) rather than middah (measure), and the multilingual evidence supports the distinction: Spanish vestiduras ('garments') and English 'his robes' both select clothing vocabulary with no trace of measurement semantics. The consonantal overlap makes this a classic case of Hebrew homographic disambiguation. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: his-robes | es: vestiduras-de-él | fr: de-mesure | de: sein-robes Ps 133:2

מִדָּה H4060b Prep-l | N-fsc (1×)

tax, tribute, royal levy

A noun meaning tax or tribute, appearing in Nehemiah 5:4. This is a loanword from Assyrian 'mandattu' (tribute), ultimately from the root meaning 'to give.' The context is Jews borrowing money 'for the king's tax'—the Persian imperial levy imposed on the province. This financial burden, combined with drought and debt, created severe economic hardship for the returned exiles. The term emphasizes the obligatory nature of this payment to foreign overlords.

(1×) Tax, tribute imposed by the Persian king. Nehemiah 5:4 records people borrowing money 'for the king's tax,' showing the economic strain of imperial levies on poor Jews. This loanword from Assyrian 'mandattu' indicates tribute or tax. The Spanish 'para-tributo-de' (for tribute of) captures the obligatory payment. The multilingual glosses (tax-of, tributo-de) emphasize this as revenue owed to Persian authorities, adding to the community's distress. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-tax-of | es: para-tributo-de | fr: [למדת] | de: [למדת] Neh 5:4

מִנְדָּה H4061 N-fsc (4×)
tribute, tax levied on subject peoples
This Aramaic loan-word denotes mandatory payments imposed on conquered or subject territories, appearing exclusively in post-exilic texts dealing with Persian administration. The term occurs in correspondence about Jerusalem's reconstruction, where opponents warn the Persian king that the city historically refused to pay tribute (Ezra 4:13, 20). It reflects the complex political realities of the restoration period, when the Jewish community navigated obligations to imperial power.

(4×) A fiscal term for tribute or tax imposed by imperial authority, specifically in the Persian period. All four occurrences appear in Ezra's account of political tensions surrounding Jerusalem's rebuilding. The cross-linguistic glosses ('tribute,' 'tributo') uniformly convey the sense of mandatory payment to a governing power, reflecting the administrative vocabulary of the Achaemenid Empire. TRIBUTE AND TAX
en: and-tribute, the-tribute-of, tribute | es: del-tributo-de, tributo, tributo- | fr: [ומדה], [מדה], [מנדה] | de: [ומדה], [מנדה], von-Gesetz Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:20; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 7:24

מַרְהֲבָה H4062 N-fs (1×)
fury, rage, arrogance (textual emendation)
A term in Isaiah 14:4 traditionally rendered 'golden city' but emended by most scholars to mean 'fury' or 'arrogance.' The MT reads 'madhebah' but LXX and most modern versions read 'marhebah' (fury, raging). The context is a taunt against Babylon's king: 'How the oppressor has ceased, the fury/arrogance ceased!' This emendation creates better parallelism with 'oppressor' and fits the pattern of denouncing Babylon's violent pride. The Spanish 'la-arrogancia' reflects this emended reading.

(1×) Fury, arrogance, raging behavior (emended reading). Isaiah 14:4 in most modern versions reads: 'How the fury has ceased!' rather than MT's 'golden city.' BDB follows LXX and scholars reading 'marhebah' (boisterous rage) parallel to 'oppressor.' The Spanish 'la-arrogancia' (the arrogance) and context of denouncing Babylon's pride support this emendation. This describes Babylon's violent, raging oppression now ended. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: fury | es: la-arrogancia | fr: [מדהבה] | de: [מדהבה] Isa 14:4

מָדוֹ H4063 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)
garment (noun); occurs only in 2 Sam 10:4 and 1 Chr 19:4 referring to the garments of David's messengers
This rare Hebrew noun appears only twice, both times in the account of David's humiliated messengers. When Hanun the Ammonite king cut off their garments at the hips, he inflicted profound public shame. The identical wording across Samuel and Chronicles preserves this diplomatic insult that sparked war. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as 'garments' or 'clothes,' confirming it refers to the outer clothing deliberately mutilated.

(2×) Refers specifically to outer garments in the incident where Hanun cut off the clothing of David's ambassadors at the buttocks (2 Sam 10:4 = 1 Chr 19:4). All target languages render this as garments, vestments, or clothing. The context emphasizes the shameful exposure caused by cutting these garments, making them a symbol of diplomatic insult that precipitated military conflict. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: their-garments | es: sus-vestidos | fr: [מדויהם], leur-vêtements | de: [מדויהם], ihr-Kleider 2Sam 10:4; 1Chr 19:4

מַדֶּוֶה H4064 N-mpc (2×)
disease, sickness (noun); specifically 'diseases of Egypt' in Deut 7:15 and 28:60
This Hebrew noun describes the severe diseases God threatened to bring upon Israel if they disobeyed. The phrase 'diseases of Egypt' likely evokes the plagues that devastated Egypt but spared Israel, now reversed as covenant curses. BDB notes the word appears in construct plural form, paired with the general term for 'sickness.' The multilingual renderings consistently translate this as diseases, plagues, or maladies, emphasizing the collective severity of Egypt's afflictions now turned against the covenant people.

(2×) Denotes the diseases or plagues of Egypt mentioned as covenant curses in Deuteronomy. Spanish translators use both 'enfermedades' (diseases) and 'plagas' (plagues), capturing the dual sense of individual sickness and collective catastrophe. The phrase appears in parallel with the broader term for sickness (חֳלִי), suggesting this word emphasizes the specific, memorable diseases that characterized Egypt's judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: diseases-of | es: enfermedades-de, las-plagas-de | fr: diseases-de | de: Krankheiten-von Deut 7:15; Deut 28:60

מַדּוּחַ H4065 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)
enticements, things that lead astray
A plural noun meaning enticements or things that draw away, appearing in Lamentations 2:14. The prophets of Jerusalem 'saw for you false visions and enticements/banishments.' The term comes from a root meaning 'to thrust away' or 'lead astray,' suggesting deceptive prophecies that led the people away from truth. BDB connects this to the Hiphil sense of causing someone to turn aside. The context is prophetic deception contributing to Jerusalem's fall.

(1×) Enticements, deceptive messages that lead astray. Lamentations 2:14 condemns false prophets who proclaimed 'visions of emptiness and enticements.' The root suggests thrusting away or drawing aside from the right path. The Spanish 'y-engaños' (and deceptions) captures the misleading nature. These prophetic messages enticed people away from repentance, contributing to the nation's blindness. The parallel terms 'vanity' and 'folly' reinforce the destructive deception. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING
en: and-banishment | es: y-engaños | fr: [ומדוחים] | de: [ומדוחים] Lam 2:14

מָדוֹן H4066 Conj-w / N-ms (22×)
Strife, contention, quarreling; interpersonal conflict stirred by anger, pride, or a contentious disposition.
Denotes persistent interpersonal conflict, quarreling, and contention—a concept that dominates the wisdom literature of Proverbs. The wise observe that a hot-tempered person stirs up strife (Prov 15:18; 29:22), that a whisperer separates close friends by fueling it (Prov 16:28), and that the beginning of strife is like releasing water, best abandoned before it breaks out (Prov 17:14). The 'contentious woman' appears as a recurring archetype (Prov 21:9; 25:24; 27:15). Outside Proverbs, Habakkuk 1:3 laments that strife and contention arise in the land, and Psalm 80:6 speaks of Israel becoming a source of contention to its neighbors.

strife, contention (22×) Strife, contention, or quarreling between persons, used almost exclusively in Proverbs and prophetic poetry to describe destructive interpersonal conflict. Proverbs identifies its sources—anger (15:18; 29:22), pride (28:25), gossip (16:28), and a contentious disposition (26:21)—and personifies it through the repeated figure of the 'contentious woman' (21:9; 25:24; 27:15). Habakkuk 1:3 applies the term to societal breakdown, while Psalm 80:6 uses it for Israel's conflicts with hostile neighbors. German Streit and French querelle both capture the interpersonal antagonism at the word's core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (contentions), [and-contentions], [contentions] | es: (contenciosa), (contencioso), (contiendas?) | fr: [מדון], et-combat, et-querelle | de: Streit, [מדון], und-Streit Ps 80:6; Prov 15:18; Prov 16:28; Prov 17:14; Prov 18:19

מַד H4067
measure, apportionment; also cloth, garment (as extended or wide)
This noun denotes 'measure' in the sense of an assigned portion or allotment (Jeremiah 13:25, 'the portion of your measures'), but also extends to mean a cloth or garment—something spread out or extended. Judges 5:10 may refer to carpets or cloths for sitting, while 1 Samuel 4:12 describes torn garments as a sign of mourning. The semantic link between 'measure' and 'cloth' lies in the idea of extension and dimension. The word's flexibility reflects the concrete, material world of ancient Israel where measurements and textiles both shaped daily life.

מָדוֹן H4068 N-proper-fs (2×)

Madon (proper noun); a Canaanite royal city in northern Israel conquered by Joshua

Madon was a royal Canaanite city whose king joined the northern coalition against Joshua (Josh 11:1). After defeating this alliance, Joshua listed Madon among the conquered royal cities (12:19). Its location remains uncertain—BDB mentions Madîn near Hattîn and a village Maron west-southwest of Kedesh as possibilities. The Septuagint's varied spellings (Μαρρν, Μαδων, Λαμορων) reflect ancient uncertainty about the site. The name itself means uncertain but is consistently transliterated across languages.

(2×) The name of a Canaanite royal city in Galilee, whose king Jobab joined the northern coalition defeated by Joshua at the waters of Merom. All language traditions preserve this as a transliterated proper name (Madon, Madón, etc.). BDB notes potential identifications with sites near modern Hattîn or with the village Maron, though the exact location remains disputed among scholars. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Madon | es: Madón | fr: Madon | de: Madon Josh 11:1; Josh 12:19

מַדּוּעַ H4069 Conj-w / Interrog (72×)

Why? Wherefore? — an interrogative adverb probing motive or cause, often expressing surprise, reproach, or lament.

Maddua is a compound interrogative adverb, probably contracted from mah-yadua ('what being known?'), meaning 'why?' or 'on what account?' It probes not merely cause but motive — asking what reasoning lies behind an action. In narrative, it introduces direct questions of genuine inquiry (Gen 26:27, 'Why have you come to me?'; Exod 1:18, 'Why have you let the boys live?'). In prophetic rhetoric it becomes a tool of divine reproach and lament — Jeremiah uses it sixteen times, often following a pair of rhetorical questions to express God's bewildered indignation at Israel's unfaithfulness (Jer 2:14, 31; 8:5, 19, 22). Isaiah deploys it in some of Scripture's most dramatic confrontations: 'Why, when I came, was there no one?' (Isa 50:2). Spanish por que, French pourquoi, and German warum all render it straightforwardly.

why (72×) An interrogative adverb meaning 'why?' or 'on what account?', probing the motive or cause behind an action. Used in direct questions within narrative (Gen 26:27; 40:7; Exod 1:18; 2:18; 3:3), prophetic confrontation and lament (Jer 2:14, 31; 8:5, 19, 22; Isa 5:4; 50:2; 63:2), and indirect questions expressing puzzlement (Exod 3:3). Probably contracted from mah-yadua ('what being known?'). All languages render it with their standard 'why' interrogative. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: why | es: Por-qué, por-qué, ¿Por-qué | fr: pourquoi | de: warum Gen 26:27; Gen 40:7; Exod 1:18; Exod 2:18; Exod 3:3

מָדוּר H4070a N-msc / 3ms (3×)

dwelling place, habitation (Aramaic)

An Aramaic noun denoting a dwelling place or habitation, appearing only in Daniel. All three occurrences refer to Nebuchadnezzar's dwelling during his period of madness and humiliation, when he was driven from human society to live with wild animals. The term emphasizes the radical change in the king's circumstances—from palace to wilderness, from human dwelling to dwelling among beasts. Daniel uses this detail to illustrate both divine sovereignty and the king's restoration.

(3×) The glosses consistently identify this as 'dwelling, habitation' with possessive forms. Daniel 4:25, 32 describe Nebuchadnezzar's dwelling being with the beasts of the field during his judgment, while 5:21 recalls this same humiliation to warn Belshazzar. The repeated emphasis on the king's dwelling place underscores the theme of pride humbled—the mighty monarch reduced to an animal-like existence until he acknowledged God's sovereignty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-dwelling, your-dwelling | es: su-morada, tu-morada | fr: [מדורה], [מדרך] | de: [מדורה], [מדרך] Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32; Dan 5:21

מְדָר H4070b N-msc / 3mp (1×)

dwelling, habitation (Aramaic)

An Aramaic noun meaning dwelling or habitation, appearing in Daniel 2:11. In response to Nebuchadnezzar's impossible demand, the Chaldeans protest that 'there is no other who can declare it to the king except the gods, whose dwelling is not with mortal flesh.' The term emphasizes the gods' separation from humanity—they dwell in a different realm. This highlights the impossibility of the request and sets up Daniel's revelation that the true God can reveal mysteries.

(1×) Dwelling, habitation of the gods. Daniel 2:11 uses this in the Chaldeans' protest: the gods 'whose dwelling is not with flesh' cannot be consulted for such revelations. The Aramaic construct with suffix ('their dwelling') emphasizes divine transcendence—the gods live apart from humanity. The multilingual evidence (dwelling, morada, demeure) consistently renders this as habitation. This sets up the contrast with Daniel's God who does reveal mysteries despite dwelling separately. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dwelling | es: su-morada | fr: demeure | de: [מדרהון] Dan 2:11

מְדוּרָה H4071 N-fsc / 3fs (2×)

pile, pyre (noun); a heap of combustible materials, especially wood arranged for burning

This Hebrew noun denotes a deliberately arranged pile of combustible materials. In Isaiah 30:33, it describes Tophet's fiery pyre 'with fire and much wood,' a metaphor for God's judgment. In Ezekiel 24:9, God commands making the wood pile large under the cooking pot representing Jerusalem's judgment. The word emphasizes intentional arrangement rather than random accumulation. Some translations render it as 'pyre' when the burning is emphasized, 'pile' when the arrangement is in view.

(2×) Refers to an arranged pile or heap of wood and other combustibles, often prepared for burning. The Isaiah passage explicitly mentions 'fire and much wood' in connection with the pyre, while Ezekiel uses it for the woodpile under a cooking pot. French and German transliterations preserve the term, while Spanish alternates between 'hoguera' (bonfire) and 'pira' (pyre), distinguishing contexts of judgment fire from mere fuel arrangement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fire, the-pile | es: la-hoguera, su-pira | fr: [מדרתה], feu | de: [המדורה], [מדרתה] Isa 30:33; Ezek 24:9

מְדַחֵה H4072 N-ms (1×)

ruin, downfall; means or occasion of stumbling

This rare word appears only in Proverbs 26:28, describing what a flattering mouth accomplishes—ruin. The term captures both the means and the result: smooth speech that causes someone's downfall. Hebrew poetic parallelism pairs it with 'a lying tongue,' showing how deceptive words lead to destruction. The Spanish and English renderings ('ruina,' 'ruin') grasp the catastrophic outcome of flattery.

(1×) The single occurrence in Proverbs links this term to the violence that smooth words can inflict—not physical harm, but the devastating collapse that comes from trusting false speech. The domain assignment (Violence, Harm) reflects how Scripture treats deceptive words as genuinely destructive acts. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: ruin | es: ruina | fr: מדחה | de: [מדחה] Prov 26:28

מַדְחֵפָה H4073 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

thrust (repeated), blow after blow; violent pushing

Found only in Psalm 140:11, this plural noun describes repeated

thrusts or blows. The psalmist prays that evil will hunt the violent man 'with thrust upon thrust'—a vivid image of relentless judgment. BDB suggests 'thrust upon thrust' to capture the repetition. The prepositional phrase ('to thrusts,' 'para-derribar') indicates purpose or result: hunted down to be overthrown.

(1×) The Psalm context envisions divine justice pursuing the wicked with the same violence they showed others. Translations capture the linear movement (Spanish 'para-derribar' = to overthrow) and the sense of repeated blows driving someone down. This is poetic retribution in action. THROWING AND CASTING

en: to-thrusts | es: para-derribar | fr: à-frayeur | de: zu-thrusts Ps 140:11

מָדַי H4074 N-proper-ms (16×)

Madai / Media — a son of Japheth and the nation/territory of the Medes in the ancient Near East.

Names both the ancestor figure in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2 = 1 Chr 1:5) and the powerful Iranian people and territory known as Media. The Medes appear first as a place of Israelite exile — the 'cities of the Medes' to which Assyria deported northern Israelites (2 Kgs 17:6; 18:11). They then emerge as a threatening military power whom Isaiah summons against Babylon (Isa 13:17; 21:2). The late monarchic and postexilic texts regularly pair 'Media and Persia' (or 'Persia and Media') as a dual empire (Esth 1:3, 14, 18, 19; 10:2; Dan 8:20), reflecting the historical Medo-Persian confederation. Darius is identified as 'of the seed of Media' (Dan 9:1). Spanish uses 'Media,' French 'Medie/Madai,' German 'Medien.'

Madai / Media (proper noun) (16×) The proper noun Madai — the son of Japheth in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2; 1 Chr 1:5) — and by extension the people and territory of Media (the Medes). Used for the cities of Median exile (2 Kgs 17:6; 18:11), the Medes as a military power summoned against Babylon (Isa 13:17; 21:2), and the compound 'Media and Persia' designating the dual empire (Esth 1:3, 14, 18–19; Dan 8:20). Spanish 'Media/Maday,' French 'Medie/Madai,' and German 'Medien' all confirm consistent identification as a geo-ethnic proper name. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: Madai, Maday, Medes | es: Maday, Media, y-Maday | fr: Maday, Madaï, Médie | de: Maday, Medien, [מדי] Gen 10:2; 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 18:11; 1Chr 1:5; Esth 1:3

מָדִי H4075 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Mede; Median (gentilic adjective)

This gentilic form appears once in Daniel 11:1, identifying Darius as 'the Mede.' The definite article emphasizes his specific ethnic identity. In Daniel's apocalyptic vision, the distinction between Medes and Persians matters for understanding the sequence of empires. The term is straightforward across languages—a proper ethnic designation without semantic ambiguity.

(1×) Daniel 11:1's reference to 'Darius the Mede' anchors a historical-prophetic timeline. The multilingual consistency (English, Spanish, French all transliterate or translate uniformly) shows this is a pure proper name function, identifying ethnicity rather than describing characteristics. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3663 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-Mede | es: el-medo | fr: Mède | de: [המדי] Dan 11:1

מָדַי H4076 N-proper-ms (5×)

Madai — the Medes and their territory Media, the ancient Iranian people and kingdom east of Mesopotamia

Madai refers both to the Medes as an ethnic group and to Media as a geographic territory. In Daniel 5:28 the kingdom of Belshazzar is given to the Medes and Persians, and the laws of the Medes feature prominently in Daniel 6:8, 12, 15. Ezra 6:2 locates the decree of Cyrus in the province of Media. German Medien and Spanish Media reflect the territorial sense, while English preserves both the gentile and geographic uses.

(5×) The Medes as a people and Media as their territory. The gentile sense appears in Daniel 5:28 and 6:8, 12, 15, where the legal and political identity of the Medes is emphasized alongside the Persians. The territorial sense surfaces in Ezra 6:2 where a scroll is found in the citadel of the province of Media. Across translations (eng Madai, spa Media, deu Medien), both references point to this single ethno-territorial entity. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: Madai, in-Maday, to-Madai | es: Media, a-Media, en-Maday | fr: Mède, [במדי], de-de | de: Medien, [למדי], in-Medien Ezra 6:2; Dan 5:28; Dan 6:8; Dan 6:12; Dan 6:15

מדיא H4077 (1×)

the Madai; Median (variant gentilic form)

Another form for 'Mede,' appearing in Daniel 5:31 (Ketiv: מדיא, Qere: מָדָאָה). This textual variant shows scribal awareness of different spellings for the same ethnic designation. Like H4075, it identifies Darius ethnically. The Ketiv-Qere variation suggests pronunciation shifted over time, but the meaning remained constant: someone from Media.

(1×) Daniel 5:31 marks the transition from Babylonian to Medo-Persian rule. The textual variant (Ketiv vs Qere) is a spelling issue, not a semantic one. Translations handle this consistently as 'the Mede,' recognizing it as the same ethnic identifier as H4075, just with orthographic variation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3663 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-Madai | es: el-medo | fr: Mède | de: [מדיא] Dan 5:31

דַּי H4078

sufficiency, enough; what is adequate or sufficient for a need

This noun expresses 'enough' or 'sufficiency'—the state of having what is needed. Malachi 3:10 promises blessings 'until there is not sufficiency,' meaning inexhaustible abundance. Esther 1:18 warns of 'plenty of contempt and wrath' as a consequence of the queen's defiance. The term often appears in the construct state with a genitive, indicating sufficiency 'for' something or someone (Exodus 36:5, 'more than enough for the work'). The word's rarity and contextual usage suggest a technical or formal register, marking careful measurement of adequacy rather than casual abundance.

מָדוֹן H4079 N-mp (4×)

strife, contention, quarreling

A term for interpersonal conflict and discord, used almost exclusively in Proverbs to characterize destructive social behavior. The wisdom literature warns against those who stir up strife and particularly highlights 'a contentious woman' as a proverbial image of domestic discord (Proverbs 21:9, 27:15). The word appears alongside related terms for conflict, painting a picture of the social damage caused by quarrelsome individuals who sow division in communities and families.

(4×) Interpersonal strife and contention, particularly as a character trait to be avoided. The multilingual evidence ('contentions,' 'disputes,' 'contiendas') consistently emphasizes ongoing quarreling rather than single conflicts. Proverbs uses this term to identify habitual troublemakers and warn against their influence, with particular attention to domestic strife. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: contentions, contentions-of, disputes | es: Contiendas, contiendas, de-contiendas | fr: querelle | de: [(מדינים)], [מדיני], [מדינים] Prov 6:14; Prov 18:18; Prov 19:13; Prov 21:9

מִדְיָן H4080 N-proper-ms (59×)

Midian — son of Abraham by Keturah; the Arabian tribe and territory descended from him

A name woven deeply into Israel's story, Midian (מִדְיָן) denotes the son of Abraham and Keturah (Gen 25:2), the nomadic Arabian tribe that descended from him, and the territory they inhabited east of the Gulf of Aqaba. Moses found refuge in the land of Midian (Exod

2:15), married Zipporah the daughter of a Midianite priest (Exod 2:16; 3:1), and later Israel clashed violently with Midianite forces in the wilderness (Num 31). Gideon's dramatic rout of Midian (Judg 7–8) became proverbial — Isaiah invokes 'the day of Midian' (Isa 9:3) as a paradigm of divine deliverance.

Midian (proper noun) (59×) The proper noun encompassing the patriarch, the people, and their land. Multilingual renderings — Spanish 'Madián,' French 'Madian,' German 'Midian' — uniformly transliterate the name. All 59 occurrences converge on a single referent: whether designating tribal kings and princes (Num 31:8; Judg 7:25), dromedaries of Midian (Isa 60:6), or the territory itself (Exod 2:15; Hab 3:7). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Midian, Midyan | es: Madián, Midyan, Midyán | fr: Madian, Midyan | de: Midian, Midjan, Midjans Gen 25:2; Gen 25:4; Gen 36:35; Exod 2:15; Exod 2:16

מִדִּין H4081 N-proper-fs (1×)

Middin; a city in the wilderness of Judah

A place name occurring once in Joshua 15:61, listing cities in Judah's wilderness territory. The site remains unidentified archaeologically. The Septuagint transliterates it as Madden or Maddein, showing ancient uncertainty about pronunciation. Despite the mystery of its location, the name itself is clear: a small settlement in the barren regions east of Jerusalem.

(1×) Joshua's tribal allotments preserve many place names whose locations are now lost. Middin appears in a cluster of six wilderness cities, suggesting a small oasis or fortified outpost. The uniform transliteration across languages (English, Spanish, French all use 'Middin') indicates this is purely a proper name with no recoverable etymology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Middin | es: Midín | fr: Middin | de: Middin Josh 15:61

מְדִינָה H4082 Art / N-fp (53×)

Province or administrative district of an empire, especially the territorial divisions of the Persian and Babylonian realms.

Borrowed from Aramaic and cognate with Arabic madinah ('city'), this term denotes a governed territorial subdivision within a great empire. In 1 Kings 20:14-19 it refers to the districts of Ahab's Israelite kingdom, each under its own governor. In Lamentations 1:1 Judah is poignantly called a 'princess among the provinces' now reduced to servitude. The word appears most frequently in Esther and Nehemiah, where it designates the 127 provinces of the Persian Empire, and in Ezekiel and Daniel for Babylonian territories. Translations across languages consistently render it as 'province' (Spanish provincia, French province, German Provinz), confirming its stable administrative meaning.

province, administrative district (53×) A governed territorial subdivision within an empire. The multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as 'province' across English, Spanish, French, and German, reflecting a single stable semantic core. In 1 Kings 20 it describes Ahab's districts with appointed governors; in Esther 1:1 it denotes the 127 provinces stretching from India to Ethiopia; in Lamentations 1:1 it is used with bitter irony for subjugated Judah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: province, provinces-of | es: provincia, provincias, provincias-de | fr: province, provinces | de: Provinz, Provinzen 1Kgs 20:14; 1Kgs 20:15; 1Kgs 20:17; 1Kgs 20:19; Ezra 2:1

מִדִּינָה H4083 Prep-b / N-fsc (11×)

Province, district — an administrative region under imperial governance, especially in Persian and Babylonian contexts

The noun מְדִינָה (medinah) designates an administrative province or jurisdictional district within a larger empire. It appears exclusively in post-exilic and exilic literature, reflecting the political realities of Babylonian and Persian governance. In Ezra, it names the province 'Beyond the River' (Ezra 4:15; 5:8; 6:2; 7:16), the satrapy encompassing Judah and its neighbors. Daniel uses it for the province of Babylon over which Daniel is appointed chief (Dan 2:48-49) and the plain of Dura within that province where Nebuchadnezzar erects his golden image (Dan 3:1-3, 12, 30). The word carries an inherently bureaucratic tone — it names territory as an object of administration, taxation, and royal appointment. Spanish 'provincia' and French 'province' map directly.

province, district, administrative region (11×) An administrative province or governed district within a major empire, particularly the Babylonian and Persian systems. In Ezra, the province 'Beyond the River' is the satrapal region encompassing Judah, referenced in correspondence about the temple's rebuilding (Ezra 4:15; 5:8; 6:2; 7:16). In Daniel, it designates the province of Babylon itself, over which Daniel receives authority (Dan 2:48-49), and the setting of the golden image decree (Dan 3:1-3, 12, 30). The word always implies centralized imperial governance with appointed officials. Spanish 'provincia' and Aramaic cognate מְדִינְתָּא reinforce the administrative register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-provinces, in-province-of, province | es: en-la-provincia-de, la-provincia, la-provincia-de | fr: [במדינת], [ומדנן], [מדינת] | de: [במדינת], [ומדנן], [מדינת] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:2; Ezra 7:16; Dan 2:48

מִדְיָנִי H4084 Art / N-proper-ms (7×)

Midianite, a gentilic adjective/noun denoting a person or people from Midian

A gentilic adjective formed from Midian, used both as a singular and plural noun to identify individuals or groups of Midianite origin. It appears in key narrative moments: the Midianite traders who buy Joseph (Gen 37:28), Moses's father-in-law Hobab (Num 10:29), the Midianite woman Cozbi whose liaison with an Israelite triggers a plague (Num 25:6, 14-15), and the divine command to strike the Midianites (Num 25:17; 31:2). The feminine form midyanit specifically identifies Cozbi in the Baal-Peor crisis.

Midianite (gentilic adjective/noun) (7×) A gentilic designation for a person or people from Midian, used as both adjective and substantive noun. It covers the Midianite merchants of the Joseph narrative (Gen 37:28, 36), the kinship connection through Moses's father-in-law (Num 10:29), and the hostile Midianites of the Baal-Peor incident (Num 25:6, 14-15, 17; 31:2). Spanish, French, and German all form parallel gentilics (madianita, Midianite, Midianiter), confirming the straightforward ethnic reference. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: Midianites, the-Midianite, the-Midianite-woman | es: el-madianita, la-madianita, los-madianitas | fr: Madianites, le-Midianite, le-Midianite-femme | de: der-Midianiter, der-Midianiter-Frau, midjanitische Gen 37:28; Num 10:29; Num 25:6; Num 25:14; Num 25:15

מִדֹּכָה H4085 Prep-b (1×)

mortar (for grinding); stone vessel for pounding grain

This term appears once in Numbers 11:8, describing how the Israelites ground manna. The people would go about gathering it, then grind it 'in the mortar' or mill it in handmills. The mortar was a stone bowl where grain or manna was pounded with a pestle. The prepositional phrase 'in the mortar' locates where this food processing happened—a basic kitchen implement in ancient households.

(1×) Numbers 11:8 provides rare detail about daily life in the wilderness: people grinding manna like grain. The mortar (Spanish 'mortero,' French 'mortar') was essential technology for turning seeds or manna into flour. The domain assignment (Geographical Objects) may seem odd, but BDB's 'place of grinding' focuses on the location/instrument aspect. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: in-the-mortar | es: en-mortero | fr: dans-le-mortar | de: in-der-mortar Num 11:8

מַדְמֵן H4086 N-proper-fs (1×)

Madmen; a town in Moab

A Moabite town mentioned only in Jeremiah 48:2, in an oracle against Moab. The name is ironic: it sounds like the Hebrew word for 'dung' (H4087), and Jeremiah announces that Madmen will be silenced. Some scholars suggest textual corruption, but the MT preserves this ominous wordplay. The town's location is unknown, though it was presumably in northern Moab.

(1×) Jeremiah 48:2 plays with the similarity between 'Madmen' (the town) and 'madmenah' (dung-pit), creating a dark pun on Moab's coming destruction. The lack of clear translation in French and German (brackets indicate uncertainty) suggests even ancient witnesses found this toponym puzzling. It may be a deliberate wordplay rather than a surviving place name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Madmen | es: Madmén | fr: [מדמן] | de: [מדמן] Jer 48:2

מַדְמֵנָה H4087 N-fs (1×)

dung-place, dung-pit; place of refuse

A hapax in Isaiah 25:10, where Moab is trampled 'in the waters of a dung-pit'—a graphic image of humiliation. The Qere reads 'in its place' (במו), but the Ketiv has 'in the waters of a dung-pit' (במי מדמנה), intensifying the disgrace. This is agricultural waste disposal vocabulary pressed into service for prophetic insult. The Arabic cognate confirms the sense of refuse heap or manure pile.

(1×) Isaiah 25:10's image is deliberately repulsive: Moab trampled like straw in liquid manure. The Spanish 'muladar' (dunghill) and Arabic 'manure pit' capture the degradation. Some translations (French, German) leave it untranslated, perhaps uncomfortable with the earthiness. This is prophetic rhetoric at its most visceral, using barnyard imagery for divine judgment. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3853 WITH 3 SENSES

es: muladar | fr: [מדמנה] | de: [מדמנה] Isa 25:10

מַדְמֵנָה H4088 N-proper-fs (1×)

Madmenah; a town in Benjamin north of Jerusalem

Distinct from the Moabite Madmen (H4086), this Madmenah appears in Isaiah 10:31 as the Assyrian army approaches Jerusalem from the north. The town's inhabitants flee in terror. Its location is uncertain, but the prophetic geography traces the invasion route through Benjamin's towns. The name is identical in form to 'dung-pit' (H4087), though this is likely coincidence rather than wordplay.

(1×) Isaiah 10:31 lists towns in the path of Sennacherib's advance: Madmenah panics, Gebim flees. The town must be close enough to Jerusalem to see the invader coming. Despite the unfortunate similarity to H4087 (dung-pit), this is simply a place name, preserved uniformly across translations with no attempt to derive meaning from the consonants. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3853 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Madmenah | es: Madmenah | fr: [מדמנה] | de: [מדמנה] Isa 10:31

מַדְמַנָּה H4089 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Madmannah (proper noun); a town in southern Judah, also a descendant of Caleb

Madmannah appears both as a town in southern Judah's inheritance (Josh 15:31) and as a Calebite descendant (1 Chr 2:49). As a place name, its location remains uncertain—the Septuagint's Μηδεβηνα suggests connections near Gaza, with various scholars proposing Minyay south of Gaza. The dual usage (geographic and personal) was common in ancient Israel, where clan names and settlement names often overlapped, reflecting the intimate connection between family lineage and land possession.

(2×) A name serving dual purposes: (1) a city in the Negev allotted to Judah, and (2) a descendant of Caleb. This overlap reflects the typical Israelite pattern where clan leaders gave their names to settlements or vice versa. All language traditions transliterate the name consistently (Madmannah, Madmaná, etc.), though its geographical identification south of Gaza remains tentative based on Septuagint and patristic witnesses. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3853 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Madmannah, and-Madmannah | es: Madmana, y-Madmaná | fr: [מדמנה], et-Madmannah | de: [מדמנה], und-Madmannah Josh 15:31; 1Chr 2:49

מָדוֹן H4090 N-mp (3×)

strife, contention, quarreling

A noun denoting strife, contention, and quarrelsome behavior, appearing primarily in Proverbs. The book uses it to warn against contentious people—the 'man of strife' who stirs up conflict, and especially the 'woman of strife' mentioned repeatedly as unbearable to live with. The term often appears paired with related words for dispute and conflict, emphasizing the destructive nature of chronic quarreling. Proverbs presents strife as fire-like, needing only fuel to keep burning (26:20-21).

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly points to interpersonal conflict: Spanish 'contiendas, discordias' (quarrels, discord), English 'strife.' Proverbs uses this term to characterize those who 'send out' strife (6:14, 19), stir it up constantly (15:18, 28:25, 29:22), and live in perpetual conflict. The 'contentious woman' becomes proverbial (21:9, 25:24, 27:15), as does the 'man of contentions' (26:21). Strife is presented as actively harmful to community peace. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], strife | es: [contiendas], contiendas, discordias | fr: [מדנים], מדנים | de: [[מדנים]], [מדנים] Prov 6:14; Prov 6:19; Prov 10:12

מָדָן H4091 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Medan (proper noun); son of Abraham and Keturah, progenitor of an Arabian tribe

Medan was the third son of Abraham by his concubine Keturah, listed in both Genesis 25:2 and 1 Chronicles 1:32. He represents one of several Arabian tribal ancestors descended from Abraham but distinct from the covenant line through Isaac. The name likely designates both the person and the tribal group that descended from him. Like his brothers Midian, Ishbak, and Shuah, Medan's descendants apparently settled in the Arabian Peninsula east of Canaan.

(2×) The personal name of Abraham's son through Keturah, appearing identically in Genesis and Chronicles genealogies. All language traditions transliterate uniformly (Medan, Medán). As with other Keturite sons, the name likely also designated an Arabian tribal group, though biblical texts provide no further historical details about Medan's descendants or their territorial range. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Medan, and-Medan | es: Medan, y-Medan | fr: Medan, [ומדן] | de: Medan, [ומדן] Gen 25:2; 1Chr 1:32

מִדְיָנִי H4092 Conj-w (1×)

the Medanites; descendants of Medan (son of Keturah)

This gentilic appears once in Genesis 37:36, identifying the traders who sold Joseph into Egypt. The text has both 'Midianites' and 'Medanites,' likely variant names for the same group or closely related Arabian tribes descended from Abraham through Keturah. The Medanites are northern Arabian merchants who trafficked in goods and slaves along trade routes to Egypt.

(1×) Genesis 37:36 uses 'Medanites' parallel to 'Midianites' (v28), suggesting either textual variants or two names for one group. The translations (Spanish 'medanitas,' French 'Medanites') preserve the ethnic designation. These are Abraham's descendants through Medan (Gen 25:2), operating as caravan traders in the Joseph narrative's cruel economy. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Medanites | es: y-los-medanitas | fr: et-le-Medanites | de: und-die-Medaniter Gen 37:36

מַדָּע H4093 Conj-w (6×)

Knowledge, learning, understanding (intellectual attainment, often paired with wisdom); thought, mind (inner awareness).

The masculine noun madda is a late Hebrew word for 'knowledge' or 'learning,' appearing only six times and concentrated in contexts of exceptional intellectual endowment. Five occurrences cluster around Solomon's divinely granted wisdom (2 Chr 1:10-12) and Daniel's court education in Babylon (Dan 1:4, 17), where madda appears alongside chokmah ('wisdom') and da'at ('understanding') as overlapping but distinct terms for intellectual capacity. Spanish ciencia and conocimiento both appear in these passages, reflecting the word's range from theoretical 'science' to practical 'knowledge.' The sixth occurrence, in Ecclesiastes 10:20, shifts inward: 'even in your madda do not curse the king' — here meaning 'thought' or 'mind,' the private interior space of consciousness. Spanish pensamiento and English 'thoughts' confirm this as a genuinely internalized sense, distinct from the public, acquired knowledge of the Chronicles and Daniel passages.

1. knowledge, learning, science (5×) Knowledge, learning, understanding, or science — acquired intellectual content and educated awareness, typically appearing in parallelism with chokmah (wisdom) and da'at (knowledge). Five occurrences span Solomon's request for 'wisdom and knowledge' to govern Israel (2 Chr 1:10, 11, 12) and the young Judean exiles in Babylon who showed aptitude 'in all learning and knowledge' (Dan 1:4) and to whom God gave 'knowledge and skill in all literature and wisdom' (Dan 1:17). Spanish alternates between ciencia (science/learning) and conocimiento (knowledge), while French connaissance and intelligence both appear, reflecting the word's placement at the intersection of learning and discernment. KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: and-knowledge, and-the-knowledge, knowledge | es: ciencia, conocimiento, y-conocimiento | fr: connaissance, et-intelligence | de: [והמדע], [ומדע], [מדע] 2Chr 1:10; 2Chr 1:11; 2Chr 1:12; Dan 1:4; Dan 1:17

2. thought, inner awareness, mind (1×) Thought, mind, or inner awareness — the private space of consciousness where one forms opinions or intentions. Found only in Ecclesiastes 10:20: 'even in your thought (bemaddaakha) do not curse the king, for a bird of the heavens may carry the sound.' The shift from public, acquired knowledge to private mental consciousness is confirmed by Spanish pensamiento ('thought'), English 'thoughts,' and the contextual logic of the warning: what is at stake is not knowledge one possesses but thoughts one entertains in secret. BDB aptly glosses this as 'place of knowledge, mind,' recognizing the spatial metaphor underlying the internalization. MIND UNDERSTANDING

en: in-your-thoughts | es: en-tu-pensamiento | fr: dans-ton-במדעך-toi | de: [במדעך] Eccl 10:20

מַדְקְרֹת H4094 Prep-k / N-fpc (1×)

thrusts (of a sword); stabbing blows

Found only in Proverbs 12:18, this term describes rash speech as being 'like sword thrusts.' The comparison is vivid: careless words wound as deeply as a blade. The plural form suggests repeated stabbing—not one slip of the tongue but a pattern of verbal violence. In contrast, the wise person's tongue brings healing. This is one of Scripture's sharpest metaphors for the power of words.

(1×) Proverbs 12:18's simile ('like thrusts of a sword') makes abstract speech concrete and painful. Reckless words don't just offend; they pierce. The Spanish 'estocadas' (sword thrusts) and the plural form across languages preserve the image of repeated stabbing. The domain (Nature, Class, Example) captures the comparative function: defining rash speech by analogy to weapon violence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-thrusts-of | es: como-estocadas-de | fr: comme-כמדקרות | de: [כמדקרות] Prov 12:18

מַדְרֵגָה H4095 Art / N-fp (2×)

steep place, cliff (noun); precipitous rocky terrain or constructed stairs

This Hebrew noun describes steep or precipitous places. In Song of Songs 2:14, it appears parallel to 'the rock' (סֶלַע), depicting the dove hidden in clefts of steep cliffs. In Ezekiel 38:20, it stands alongside mountains and walls in describing the cosmic shaking at God's judgment. The word may refer both to natural rock faces and to constructed stairways or stepped approaches. Spanish translators use both 'escalinata' (stairway) and 'gradas' (steps), suggesting ambiguity between natural and artificial steeps.

(2×) Denotes steep places, whether natural cliff faces or constructed stepped ascents. The Song of Songs context clearly indicates natural rocky precipices where doves nest, while Ezekiel's usage in a list with mountains suggests natural terrain features that will shake in divine judgment. French and German transliterations along with Spanish's dual rendering (cliff/stairway) reflect uncertainty whether this always means natural steeps or sometimes architectural steps. STAIRWAY STEPS

en: the-cliff, the-steep-places | es: la-escalinata, las-gradas, | fr: de-l'escalier„ degré | de: [המדרגה], [המדרגות] Song 2:14; Ezek 38:20

מִדְרָךְ H4096 N-msc (1×)

tread, treading-place; place for the foot to step

Appearing once in Deuteronomy 2:5, this term means a footprint's worth of land—literally, 'the tread of the sole of a foot.' God warns Israel not to provoke Edom, because He won't give them even a footstep of Esau's territory. The phrase emphasizes how completely off-limits Edomite land is. Even the smallest incursion is forbidden, down to where one foot lands.

(1×) Deuteronomy 2:5 uses this minimal spatial term to underscore divine boundaries: not even 'a tread of a foot-sole' of Edom belongs to Israel. The construct phrase piles up body-part words (foot-sole-tread) to shrink the space to nothing. This is legal rhetoric defining territorial limits with maximum precision—God has allotted zero Edomite land to Jacob's descendants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tread-of | es: pisada-de | fr: tread-de | de: tread-von Deut 2:5

מִדְרָשׁ H4097 Prep-b / N-msc (2×)

commentary, exposition (noun); an interpretive written work explaining biblical texts

This late Hebrew word appears only in 2 Chronicles 13:22 and 24:27, both times referring to explanatory works—'the midrash of the prophet Iddo' and 'the midrash of the book of Kings.' BDB notes this term is common in post-biblical Hebrew for imaginative exposition or didactic story. The biblical usage likely indicates written commentaries of a didactic character, early forms of the interpretive tradition that would flourish in rabbinic Judaism. These were probably explanatory expansions on historical events, distinct from straightforward chronicles.

(2×) Refers to an interpretive written commentary or exposition on biblical or historical material. The two Chronicles references cite specific midrashim as sources for additional information about kings, suggesting these were recognized didactic or homiletical expansions on events. Spanish uses both 'comentario' and 'midrash,' the latter being a transliteration of the Hebrew term that became technical for rabbinic interpretive literature, though these biblical examples predate that development. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-commentary-of, midrash-of | es: comentario-de, en-midrash-de | fr: [במדרש], [מדרש] | de: [במדרש], [מדרש] 2Chr 13:22; 2Chr 24:27

מְדֻשָּׁה H4098 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

my threshed one; what has been beaten out (term of endearment)

A hapax in Isaiah 21:10, where the prophet addresses suffering Israel as 'O my threshed one, and son of my threshing floor.' The agricultural metaphor is tender despite its violence: Israel has been beaten like grain, but the prophet claims them with affection. The suffix 'my' makes it personal—not just threshed grain, but 'mine.' This transforms brutal imagery into compassionate solidarity with the afflicted.

(1×) Isaiah 21:10 uses threshing vocabulary emotionally, not just descriptively. The parallel 'son of my threshing floor' reinforces the image: Israel has endured the pounding that separates wheat from chaff. The Spanish 'mi trillado' (my threshed one) preserves the possessive tenderness. This is agricultural language repurposed for prophetic empathy—the beaten-down people are still 'mine.' REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: my-threshed-one | es: Mi-trillado | fr: [מדשתי] | de: [מדשתי] Isa 21:10

הַמְּדָתָא H4099 N-proper-ms (5×)

Hammedatha — father of Haman the Agagite, a Persian name possibly meaning 'given by the moon'

Hammedatha is the father of Haman, the chief antagonist in the book of Esther. The name appears exclusively in the patronymic formula 'Haman son of Hammedatha the Agagite' (Esth 3:1, 10; 8:5; 9:24), with one occurrence dropping the Agagite epithet (9:10). BDB connects it to Persian māh ('moon'), suggesting a theophoric meaning. All major translations (eng Hammedatha, spa Hamedata, fra Hammedatha, deu Hammedata) transliterate it with only minor phonetic variation.

(5×) A proper name identifying the father of Haman. All five occurrences appear in Esther within the fixed patronymic formula establishing Haman's lineage. The Persian etymology (possibly from māh, 'moon') connects the name to Iranian theophoric naming conventions. Translation uniformity across languages (eng Hammedatha, spa Hamedata, fra/deu variants) confirms its function as a stable personal identifier rather than a title or description. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hammedatha | es: Hamedata | fr: Hammedatha | de: Hammedata Esth 3:1; Esth 3:10; Esth 8:5; Esth 9:10; Esth 9:24

מָה H4100 Interrog (749×)

What? how? why? how much?; interrogative and exclamatory pronoun for things, manner, degree, quantity, and cause

The interrogative pronoun mah is Hebrew's all-purpose question word for non-personal inquiries — the counterpart of mi ('who?') for persons. Far more than a simple 'what?', it flexes across semantic roles: asking about identity ('what is this?'), manner ('how shall we do it?'), degree ('how wonderful!'), quantity ('how many days?'), time ('how long?'), and cause ('why?'). Its exclamatory use in the Psalms ('how lovely are your dwelling places!', Ps 84:1) reveals a word equally at home in urgent questioning and awed praise. Multiple vocalization forms (mah, meh, ma) adapt to surrounding phonology without changing meaning.

1. what (interrogative pronoun) (654×) The core interrogative use: 'what?' — asking about the identity, nature, or content of something. At 654 occurrences this dominates overwhelmingly. Gen 4:10 ('what have you done?') and Gen 3:13 ('what is this you have done?') are paradigmatic. All target languages deploy their basic interrogative: Spanish 'qué,' French 'quoi,' German 'was.' The Aramaic cognate ma and Arabic ma confirm this as the pan-Semitic interrogative root for things. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: what, what- | es: Qué, qué, qué- | fr: quoi, quoi- | de: was, was- Gen 2:19; Gen 3:13; Gen 4:10; Gen 12:18; Gen 15:2

2. in/by/with what (instrumental) (27×) Combined with beth to ask about instrument, means, or location: 'by what?', 'with what?', 'in what?' Gen 15:8 ('by what shall I know?') and Judg 16:5 ('with what might he be bound?') are classic examples. Spanish distinguishes 'con qué' (instrument) from 'en qué' (location), while French uses 'dans quoi' for both. The 27 occurrences cluster in narrative dialogue where characters seek practical information. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: With-what, and-in-what, at-what | es: con-qué, en-lo-que, en-qué | fr: dans-quoi, dans-quoi?, et-dans-quoi | de: Hoehe, durch-Krieg, in-was Gen 15:8; Exod 22:27; Exod 33:16; Judg 6:15; Judg 16:5

3. how (manner) (25×) Adverbial use asking about manner: 'how?' — inquiring about the way something is done or the nature of a situation. Num 23:8 ('how shall I curse whom God has not cursed?') uses mah where English requires 'how.' Gen 28:17 ('how awesome is this place!') straddles manner and exclamation. Spanish 'cuán' and French 'comment' show how target languages sometimes split manner-mah from identity-mah into separate lexemes. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: How, and-how, and-how- | es: Por-qué-, Qué, cuán- | fr: comment, et-quoi, quoi | de: Krieg, Krieg-, und-was Gen 28:17; Num 23:8; Num 24:5; 1Sam 10:27

4. how! (exclamatory degree) (18×) Exclamatory use expressing surprise, awe, or emphasis about degree: 'how great!', 'how precious!' Concentrated in Psalms and wisdom literature — Ps 84:1 ('how lovely!'), Ps 36:7 ('how precious your lovingkindness!'). Spanish 'Cuán' and French 'Que' preserve the exclamatory register. The 18 occurrences show mah functioning not as a question but as an intensifier, a shift attested in cognate languages and paralleled by English 'what a...!' COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: how, how- | es: Cuán, Cuán-, Qué | fr: Que, quoi, quoi? | de: Krieg, was Job 6:25; Ps 31:19; Ps 36:7; Ps 39:4; Ps 84:1

5. how many/much (quantity) (12×) Interrogative about quantity, number, or duration: 'how many?', 'how much?', 'how long?' Gen 47:8 (Pharaoh asking Jacob 'how many are the days of your years?') and Job 7:19 ('how long will you not look away from me?') typify this sense. Spanish 'cuántas' and German 'wie viele' use dedicated quantity interrogatives, revealing that Hebrew mah covers ground that many languages split between 'what' and 'how many.' QUANTITY CORRELATIVES

en: how-long, how-many, how-many-times | es: Cuántas-veces, cuánta, cuántas | fr: comme-quoi, comme-quoi?, comment-beaucoup | de: Krieg, wie-viel, wie-viele Gen 47:8; 2Sam 19:34; 1Kgs 22:16; 2Chr 18:15; Job 7:19

6. (6×) Residual or textually uncertain occurrences including ketiv/qere variants and indefinite uses ('anything,' 'whatever'). Job 13:13 ('let come upon me whatever may') and Prov 9:13 show mah shading toward the indefinite. Isa 3:15 ('what do you mean by crushing my people?') may carry rhetorical or accusatory force. The 6 occurrences sit at the boundary between genuine interrogation and rhetorical or indefinite function. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: [ketiv:who], anything, what | es: [Qere], [ketiv], lo-que | fr: quoi | de: was 2Sam 18:22; 2Sam 18:23; Job 13:13; Prov 9:13; Isa 3:15

7. when (temporal) (5×) Temporal interrogative: 'when?', 'until when?', 'how long?' Ps 74:9 ('how long, O God?') and Ps 79:5 ('how long, LORD?') are lament formulae. Ps 89:46 extends the anguished temporal question. Spanish 'cuándo' and French 'quand' map cleanly, though Hebrew achieves this with plain mah or mah plus a temporal phrase. The 5 occurrences cluster in psalms of distress, making this a distinctly liturgical usage. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: long, when | es: cuándo, ¿qué? | fr: quand, quoi | de: Krieg, als Num 24:22; Ps 4:2; Ps 74:9; Ps 79:5; Ps 89:46

8. why (reason/cause) (2×) Causal interrogative: 'why?', 'for what reason?' Gen 25:32 ('why then do I need this birthright?') and Ps 10:13 ('why does the wicked renounce God?') use mah to probe motivation. Spanish 'por qué' and German 'wozu' show that most languages require a compound form (preposition + interrogative) where Hebrew uses mah alone or with lamed. Only 2 occurrences, suggesting Hebrew preferred lammah as the standard 'why' while bare mah carried this force only in specific constructions. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-for-what, what-account | es: por-qué, y-para-qué | fr: et-pour-quoi, quoi | de: Krieg, und-wozu- Gen 25:32; Ps 10:13

מָה H4101 Interrog (13×)

Aramaic interrogative pronoun and particle: what? whatever; how! (manner/degree); why? (reason).

The Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew mah, serving as an all-purpose interrogative and indefinite pronoun in the biblical Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. In its primary use it asks 'what?' — as in Daniel 2:22, 'He knows what is in the darkness,' where Arabic ma ('what') and Spanish que align perfectly. Combined with the preposition ke- it becomes an exclamatory 'how!' expressing wonder at God's great signs (Dan 4:3). With le- it forms 'why?' or 'for what reason?', as in Ezra 4:22's warning against negligence lest damage grow — a construction Spanish renders as por que and German as zu was.

1. what? (interrogative pronoun) (9×) The interrogative and indefinite pronoun 'what? / whatever': asking about identity, nature, or content, or functioning as an indefinite relative. Arabic ma and Spanish que/lo que converge on this core pronominal function. Covers standalone questions like 'what have you done?' (Dan 4:32) and relative uses like 'whatever you need' (Ezra 6:9) and 'He knows what is in the darkness' (Dan 2:22). The compound mah di ('that which') extends this into indefinite relative territory (Dan 2:28, 29,

45). INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS
en: and-what, and-whatever, what | es: lo-que, qué, y-lo-que | fr: et-quoi, quoi? | de: und-was, was Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:18; Dan 2:15; Dan 2:22; Dan 2:28

2. how? (interrogative adverb of manner) (2×) The adverbial 'how!' expressing manner or degree, formed with the prefix ke- (kemah). Spanish cuan ('how!') and German wie viel ('how much') capture the exclamatory force. Both occurrences appear in Nebuchadnezzar's doxology marveling at God's signs: 'How great are His signs! How mighty His wonders!' (Dan 4:3), where the particle intensifies rather than interrogates. COMPARISON AND MANNER
en: how | es: cuán | fr: comme-quoi? | de: wie-viel Dan 4:3

3. why? (interrogative adverb of reason) (2×) The causal interrogative 'why? / for what reason?', formed with the prefix le- (lemah). Spanish por que ('why') and German zu was ('to what end') reflect the causal function. Found in Ezra 4:22 warning officials not to be negligent — 'Why should damage grow?' — and in Ezra 7:23 reasoning about honoring God's house, where the question implies consequence rather than seeking information. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS
en: why | es: por-qué, ¿por-qué | fr: [למה] | de: zu-was Ezra 4:22; Ezra 7:23

מָהַהּ H4102 V-Hitpael-Perf-1cp (9×)
To delay, linger, tarry, hesitate — used of persons who pause or wait before acting (Hitpalpel only).
This verb appears only in its Hitpalpel (intensive reflexive) stem, conveying the sense of lingering, tarrying, or hesitating. The reduplication of the root intensifies the idea of delay. In Genesis 19:16, Lot 'lingered' as angels urged him to flee Sodom — a moment of fatal hesitation. Exodus 12:39 explains that Israel could not tarry in Egypt, connecting urgency to the unleavened bread. Habakkuk 2:3 promises that the prophetic vision will not delay, using the same verb for divine timing. Psalm 119:60 declares 'I did not delay to keep your commandments,' pairing the word with eager obedience.

Hitpael: to delay, linger, tarry (9×) To delay, linger, tarry, or hesitate — attested only in the Hitpalpel stem, where the reduplicated form intensifies the sense of drawn-out waiting. Spanish 'demorarse/deteneos' and French equivalents capture the range from involuntary lingering to deliberate waiting. Genesis 19:16 portrays Lot's dangerous hesitation before fleeing Sodom; Genesis 43:10 has Judah lamenting lost time; Exodus 12:39 explains Israel's hasty departure. The word spans voluntary delay (2 Sam 15:28, waiting at the fords), culpable procrastination (Judg 3:26, Ehud's escape during the servants' delay at Judg 19:8), and prophetic promise that God's vision will not tarry (Hab 2:3). DELAY TARRY LINGER
en: I-delayed, Linger, am-waiting | es: Deteneos, Y-se-demoraba, demorarse | fr: [התמהמהו], am-waiting, et-il-lingered | de: [התמהמהו], [יתמהמה], am-waiting Gen 19:16; Gen 43:10; Exod 12:39; Judg 3:26; Judg 19:8

מְהוּמָה H4103 Art / N-fs (12×)
Confusion, tumult, panic — a terrifying disorder, often divinely inflicted, that routs armies or disrupts communities
The noun מְהוּמָה (mehumah) denotes a sudden, disorienting panic or chaotic tumult, frequently attributed to divine intervention in battle. God promises to throw Israel's enemies into 'confusion' as a weapon of holy war (Deut 7:23; 28:20), and the pattern recurs throughout the narrative literature: the LORD sends panic among the Philistines at Mizpah (1 Sam 7:10) and at Jonathan's raid (1 Sam 14:20), among the Midianites before Gideon (Judg 7:22, implied), and among Sennacherib's forces (2 Chr 15:5-6). The prophets extend the image to eschatological scenarios where nations dissolve in mutual confusion (Zech 14:13; Ezek 22:5). Spanish 'confusión' and French 'confusion' both preserve the sense of divinely sent disarray.

confusion, tumult, panic (divine or military disorder) (12×) A sudden, terrifying confusion or panic — typically divinely sent — that throws armies into disarray or disrupts entire communities. Promised as a weapon of holy war against Israel's enemies (Deut 7:23; Exod 14:24; 23:27), it manifests in Philistine routs (1 Sam 5:9, 11; 7:10; 14:20), Zechariah's eschatological battle (Zech 14:13), and prophetic judgment on rebellious peoples (Isa 22:5; Ezek 22:5). Deuteronomy 28:20 lists it among covenant curses. The word always implies more than mere noise — it is a collapse of order and morale. Spanish 'confusión' and German 'Verwirrung' both convey the psychologically paralyzing quality. TUMULT AND UPROAR
en: and-trouble, confusion, panic-of | es: con-confusión, confusiones, confusión | fr: [מהומה], [מהומת], confusion | de: [המהומה], [ומהומה], [מהומה] Deut 7:23; Deut 28:20; 1Sam 5:9; 1Sam 5:11; 1Sam 14:20

מְהוּמָן H4104 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)
Mehuman; a eunuch serving King Ahasuerus
One of seven eunuchs named in Esther 1:10, sent to bring Queen Vashti to the king's banquet. Mehuman is a Persian name, part of the exotic detail that gives Esther its courtly atmosphere. The LXX renders it as 'Aman,' confusing him with Haman, but the Hebrew is clear. He's a minor functionary whose name appears once, contributing to the tale's sense of grand Persian bureaucracy.

(1×) Esther 1:10 lists seven chamberlains by name, emphasizing the formality of Ahasuerus's command. Mehuman is first in the list, but otherwise undistinguished. The prepositional 'to Mehuman' (with six others) shows them as recipients of the royal order. This is narrative texture: specific names lending verisimilitude to the story's Persian setting. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: to-Mehuman | es: a-Mehuman | fr: [למהומן] | de: [למהומן] Esth 1:10

מְהֵיטַבְאֵל H4105 N-proper-ms (3×)
Mehetabel (personal name: 'God benefits' or 'God does good')
A personal name meaning 'God benefits' or 'God does good,' borne by two biblical figures. The first was an Edomite princess, daughter of Matred and wife of King Hadar (Genesis 36:39, 1 Chronicles 1:50). The second was the grandfather of Shemaiah, a false prophet who tried to intimidate Nehemiah (Nehemiah 6:10). The name itself is a testament to faith in divine goodness, though ironically the second bearer's descendant opposed God's work of restoration.

(3×) This proper name appears in transliterated form across languages: 'Mehetabel, Mehetavel.' The Edomite princess represents the only woman mentioned in Edom's royal genealogy, suggesting significance in preserving this particular lineage. The mention in Nehemiah 6:10 serves to identify the ancestry of Shemaiah, whose false prophecy Nehemiah courageously resisted. Both occurrences preserve historical memory of individuals bearing this theophoric name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mehetabel, Mehetav'el | es: Mehetabel, Mehetavel | fr: Mehetabel, [מהיטבאל] | de: Mehetabel, [מהיטבאל] Gen 36:39; 1Chr 1:50; Neh 6:10

מָהִיר H4106 Conj-w / Adj-msc (4×)
quick, skillful, prompt
An adjective describing swiftness or skill in action, whether in physical ability, mental acuity, or moral decisiveness. It characterizes a scribe skilled in his craft (Psalm 45:2, Ezra 7:6), a diligent worker who excels in his trade (Proverbs 22:29), and a ruler who acts swiftly to establish justice (Isaiah 16:5). The term values both competence and alacrity, suggesting that true skill involves not just ability but timely execution.

(4×) Descriptive of someone who is quick, prompt, or skilled in their function—whether scribal work, craftsmanship, or governance. The multilingual glosses divide between emphasizing speed ('swift,' 'pronto') and skill ('skilled,' 'diestro'), reflecting the term's semantic range. The contexts suggest that promptness and proficiency are closely linked virtues in ancient Hebrew thought. SPEED AND QUICKNESS
en: and-swift-of, skilled | es: diestro, diligente, y-pronto-de | fr: [ומהר], [מהיר], de-rapide | de: [ומהר], [מהיר], skilled Ezra 7:6; Ps 45:1; Prov 22:29; Isa 16:5

מָהַל H4107 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

diluted, weakened (of wine mixed with water)

A difficult hapax in Isaiah 1:22, describing how 'your choice wine is diluted with water.' The verb means to weaken or adulterate, possibly related to circumcision vocabulary (NH) or to liquid contexts (Arabic oil, juice). Isaiah uses it in a metaphor for Israel's corruption: even their best vintage is watered down. The image is of value degraded, strength compromised, purity spoiled.

(1×) Isaiah 1:22 pairs silver becoming dross with wine being diluted—both images of precious things debased. The root is obscure (BDB notes the connection to circumcision and liquids), but the context demands something like 'mixed,' 'weakened,' 'adulterated.' Spanish 'mezclado' (mixed) and the rare attestation suggest this is a specialized term for cutting wine with water, reducing its potency and value. MIXING WITH OIL

en: diluted | es: mezclado | fr: [מהול] | de: [מהול] Isa 1:22

מַהֲלָךְ H4108 N-mp (1×)

access, free movement; places where one may walk

A late Hebrew word appearing in Zechariah 3:7, where God promises Joshua the high priest 'access' (literally, 'walkings' or 'goings') among the angels standing by. The term can mean 'journey' (as in Nehemiah and Jonah), but here it's about privilege—freedom to move in the heavenly court. The plural suggests repeated or continual access, not a one-time visit.

(1×) Zechariah 3:7's promise of 'access among these who stand here' grants Joshua priestly privilege to move freely in God's presence, like the angels. The plural 'walkings' (Spanish 'acceso,' French 'promenade') implies ongoing liberty, not restricted to festival times. This is late biblical Hebrew developing abstract senses from concrete 'journey' vocabulary—freedom of movement becoming a status marker. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: access | es: acceso | fr: promenade | de: [מהלכים] Zech 3:7

מַהֲלָךְ H4109 N-msc (4×)

journey, walk, going

A late Hebrew term describing distance traveled or passage through space. It measures the breadth of temple architecture in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 42:4), the duration of Nehemiah's anticipated journey from Babylon to Jerusalem (Nehemiah 2:6), and Nineveh's size as 'a three-day journey' (Jonah 3:3-4). In Zechariah 3:7, the plural form may denote 'free access' or 'ways of walking' through the heavenly court, shifting from spatial to social privilege.

(4×) The act or extent of a journey, used to measure distance, duration, or architectural space. The cross-linguistic glosses ('journey,' 'walk,' 'camino,' 'pasillo') capture both the traveling sense and the spatial dimension. Jonah's reference to a 'three-day journey' for Nineveh likely describes the city's diameter or the time needed to traverse it, while Zechariah's use suggests metaphorical access or privilege. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-journey-of, journey-your, walkway | es: camino-de, pasillo-de, tu-viaje | fr: [מהלך], [מהלכך] | de: [מהלך], [מהלכך], von-ging Neh 2:6; Ezek 42:4; Jonah 3:3; Jonah 3:4

מַהֲלָל H4110 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

praise (of someone); what is said in commendation

A rare noun appearing in Proverbs 27:21, which says 'a man is tested by the praise given him' (or 'by his own boasting'—the Hebrew is ambiguous). The metaphor compares testing metals in a crucible to testing character by how someone handles praise. Does acclaim reveal humility or arrogance? The possessive suffix 'his praise' could mean others' praise of him, or what he himself praises/boasts about.

(1×) Proverbs 27:21 uses metallurgical imagery: refining pots test silver and gold, but praise tests a person. The ambiguity (others' praise vs. self-praise) enriches the proverb—both readings make sense. Spanish 'su alabanza' and the domain (Communication) reflect the verbal nature of this test: what people say about you, or what you boast of, reveals your true quality under scrutiny. PRAISE AND RENOWN

en: his-praise | es: su-alabanza | fr: son-מהללו-lui | de: von-lobt Prov 27:21

מַהֲלַלְאֵל H4111 N-proper-ms (7×)

Mahalalel, a proper name meaning 'praise of God,' borne by a descendant of Seth and a man of Judah

A Hebrew proper masculine name meaning 'praise of God,' composed of the root halal ('to praise') and El ('God'). It refers primarily to the great-grandson of Seth in the antediluvian genealogy of Genesis 5:12-17, whose lifespan is recorded as 895 years. A second Mahalalel appears much later as a Judahite ancestor in Nehemiah 11:4. The name's theophoric construction places it alongside similar praise-names in the Hebrew Bible, expressing the conviction that God is worthy of acclaim.

Mahalalel (7×) The proper name Mahalalel ('praise of God'), identifying two biblical figures: (a) a fifth-generation descendant of Adam through Seth, whose birth, fathering of Jared, and death are recorded in the formulaic antediluvian genealogy (Gen 5:12-17; 1 Chr 1:2); and (b) a postexilic Judahite listed among Jerusalem's resettled inhabitants (Neh 11:4). Multilingual renderings are remarkably consistent (Spanish Mahalalel, French Mahalaleel), preserving the Hebrew phonology with minimal adaptation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mahalalel | es: Mahalalel | fr: Mahalaleel, Mahalalel | de: Mahalalel, Mahalalels, [מהללאל] Gen 5:12; Gen 5:13; Gen 5:15; Gen 5:16; Gen 5:17

מַהֲלֻמוֹת H4112 Conj-w / N-fp (2×)

blows, strokes (noun); physical beatings or strikes to the body

This plural noun denotes physical blows or strikes to the body. Both occurrences in Proverbs (18:6; 19:29) describe corporal punishment or violent beating. The word derives from a root meaning 'to strike' and appears in Phoenician with similar meaning. In Proverbs 18:6, a fool's lips bring blows upon himself; in 19:29, judgments and blows are prepared for scoffers. The term emphasizes the impact of repeated striking rather than a single blow.

(2×) Refers to repeated blows or beatings inflicted on the body, particularly in contexts of judicial punishment or the consequences of folly. Both Proverbs passages link these strikes to the deserved punishment of foolish or scoffing behavior. Spanish consistently uses 'golpes' (blows/strikes), while French and German preserve transliterations, reflecting the term's somewhat technical status for describing corporal punishment in wisdom literature. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: and-blows, for-blows | es: a-golpes, y-golpes | fr: et-ומהלמות, à-למהלמות | de: [ומהלמות], [למהלמות] Prov 18:6; Prov 19:29

מַהֲמֹרָה H4113 Prep-b / N-fp (1×)

pits, watery depths; floods or abysses

Found only in Psalm 140:10 (in the MT's enumeration, v11), this plural noun refers to pits or floods into which the psalmist prays the wicked will fall. The root suggests flowing water or depths. Some propose emending to 'nets' (reading כמרות from a different root), but the MT's 'pits' or 'floods' fits the context of fiery coals and inescapable traps falling on the wicked.

(1×) Psalm 140:10 piles up images of retribution: burning coals, pits/floods, no rising again. The 'watery pits' or 'abysses' (French 'abîme') suggest inescapable depths. The textual uncertainty (some suggest 'nets') shows how rare this word is, but the context of physical traps and natural forces supports 'pits' or 'floods' as places of destruction from which there's no escape. FLOOD SWEEP AWAY

en: in-pits | es: en-fosos | fr: dans-abîme | de: in-pits Ps 140:10

מַהְפֵּכָה H4114 Prep-k / N-fsc (6×)

Overthrow, catastrophic destruction; used almost exclusively of divine judgment on Sodom and Gomorrah as a paradigmatic warning.

A feminine noun denoting total, catastrophic overthrow, nearly always evoked in comparison with the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. The construction 'like the overthrow of Sodom' became a fixed formula for the most extreme form of divine judgment (Deut 29:22; Isa 13:19; Jer 49:18; 50:40; Amos 4:11). In Isaiah 1:7, the phrase is applied to the devastation wrought by foreign invaders, showing the word's capacity to describe any annihilating reversal. The multilingual glosses – Spanish como destrucción de, French comme le renversement, English like overthrow of – all preserve the comparative construction, underscoring its formulaic character.

overthrow / destruction (catastrophic) (6×) A catastrophic, total overthrow or destruction, used as a verbal noun from the root הָפַךְ ('to overturn, to overthrow'). Almost invariably it appears in the construct state ('the overthrow of...') within a fixed comparative formula evoking Sodom and Gomorrah's annihilation: 'like the overthrow of Sodom' (Deut 29:22; Jer 49:18; Amos 4:11). When God is the subject, it governs an accusative ('God's overthrowing of Sodom,' Isa 13:19; Jer 50:40). Isaiah 1:7 extends the image to foreign invasion. The Spanish como destrucción and French comme le renversement consistently reflect the simile construction, confirming this is not just destruction but destruction-as-paradigm – the measuring rod against which all other divine judgments are scaled. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-overthrow-by, like-overthrow-of, like-overthrowing-of | es: como-destrucción-de, como-trastorno-de | fr: comme-le-renversement, comme-overthrow-de, renversement | de: [כמהפכת], wie-overthrow-von Deut 29:23; Isa 1:7; Isa 13:19; Jer 49:18; Jer 50:40

מַהְפֶּכֶת H4115 Art / N-fs (4×)

stocks or restraining device for punishment

An instrument of confinement that forced the captive into a bent or twisted posture, used to punish Jeremiah for his prophetic ministry. He was placed in 'the stocks that were in the upper Benjamin Gate of the house of the Lord' (Jeremiah 20:2-3), and the device is mentioned again in Jeremiah 29:26 as part of the apparatus for restraining mad prophets. The term also appears in Asa's persecution of Hanani the seer (2 Chronicles 16:10), suggesting it was a standard tool for silencing dissident voices.

(4×) A restraining device or stocks used for punishment, compelling the victim into an uncomfortable or distorted position. All occurrences involve the punishment of prophets or seers who spoke unwelcome truth to power. The multilingual glosses ('stocks,' 'cepo') consistently identify it as an instrument of confinement, though the exact mechanism remains uncertain—possibly similar to the device mentioned in Acts 16:24. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: the-stocks | es: el-cepo | fr: [המהפכת], renversement | de: [המהפכת] 2Chr 16:10; Jer 20:2; Jer 20:3; Jer 29:26

מָהַר H4116a V-Piel-Imperf-3mp (63×)

To hurry, make haste (Piel); to be rash or impetuous (Nifal) — urgency of action versus rashness of character.

A Hebrew verb whose two stems carry different moral textures. In the Piel, it is the standard word for acting quickly and with urgency — Abraham hurries to prepare food for his heavenly visitors (Gen 18:6-7), Rebekah hastens to water camels (Gen 24:18), and David runs swiftly to the battle line (1 Sam 17:48). Spanish renders this with "apresurarse" (to hurry), French with "se hâter," and German with "eilen." The Nifal stem, appearing only four times, shifts the sense from purposeful speed to impetuous rashness — the "hasty of heart" who will learn discernment (Isa 32:4), the "rash counsel" that is overtaken (Job 5:13), and the impetuous Chaldeans (Hab 1:6). This stem warns where the Piel merely describes.

1. hurry, make haste (Piel) (59×) To act quickly, hurry, or make haste — the Piel active sense describing deliberate urgency in movement or action. Dominates with 59 occurrences across narrative and command contexts. Abraham hastens to Sarah's tent (Gen 18:6), Lot is urged to hurry out of Sodom (Gen 19:22), and Rebekah quickly lowers her jar (Gen 24:18). Spanish "apresurarse," French "se hâter," and German "eilen" all consistently point to purposeful speed without negative connotation. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: and-hastened, and-he-hurried, and-hurried | es: Y-se-apresuró, apresuraos, y-se-apresuraron | fr: et-elle-hurried, et-elle-se-hâta, et-hastened | de: eilt, und-eilte, und-er-beeilte-sich Gen 18:6; Gen 18:7; Gen 19:22; Gen 24:18

2. be rash, hasty (Nifal) (4×) To be rash, impetuous, or precipitate in character or judgment — the Nifal reflexive/passive sense describing a quality of hastiness rather than purposeful speed. Only four occurrences, each with negative or cautionary tone: rash counsel overtaken (Job 5:13), the hasty-hearted who will learn discernment (Isa 32:4), encouragement for the fearful-hearted (Isa 35:4), and the fierce Chaldeans described as impetuous (Hab 1:6). Spanish shifts to adjectival "apresurado" and "los apresurados," marking the characterological rather than volitional sense. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: and-the-hasty, is-hurried, of-the-rash | es: a-los-de-apresurado, es-apresurado, los-apresurados | fr: et-se-hâter, se-hâter | de: [והנמהר], [נמהרה], eilen Job 5:13; Isa 32:4; Isa 35:4; Hab 1:6

מָהַר H4116b V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

acquired by paying bride-price; hastened after (textually uncertain)

A problematic verb in Psalm 16:4, usually translated 'they run after' or 'they hasten after' other gods. But BDB lists it under a root meaning 'acquire by paying a bride-price' (related to Arabic mahr). The text is disputed: does it mean 'obtained another god in exchange' or 'hastened after other gods'? The latter fits the context of idolatry better, though the former is etymologically defensible.

(1×) Psalm 16:4 condemns those who 'run after' (or 'acquire by bride-price') other gods, multiplying their sorrows. The root's connection to Arabic dowry payment suggests a transactional metaphor —trading YHWH for idols—but most versions follow the 'hasten' sense. The multilingual evidence splits between economic and kinetic metaphors, reflecting the Hebrew's own ambiguity in this difficult text. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: they-have-run-after | es: se-apresuraron | fr: de-être-troublé | de: sie-haben-laufen-nach Ps 16:4

מָהַר H4117 V-Qal-InfAbs (2×)

pay the bride-price (verb); acquire a wife by paying the customary marriage payment

This denominative verb means to pay the bride-price (mohar) to acquire a wife. The root occurs in Arabic with similar meaning (give a dowry, marry). In Exodus 22:16, if a man seduces an unbetrothed virgin, he must pay the bride-price to make her his wife—the infinitive absolute intensifies the obligation. The disputed Psalm 16:4 occurrence may mean 'obtain by paying a price,' though the text is uncertain. This verb captures the formal economic transaction that secured marriage rights in ancient Near Eastern culture.

(2×) Denotes the action of paying the customary bride-price (mohar) to a woman's family to establish marriage. Exodus 22:16 uses the emphatic infinitive absolute construction to stress the seducer's absolute obligation to pay. Spanish uses 'dote' (dowry) and 'pagar dote,' while English and German glosses preserve 'bride-price,' distinguishing this patriarchal marriage payment from the later European dowry custom where the bride's family pays. BUYING AND ACQUIRING

en: he-shall-pay-bride-price-for-her, paying-bride-price | es: dote, pagará-dote | fr: il—payer-bride-prix-pour-sa, paying-bride-prix | de: er-soll-bezahlen-bride-price-fuer-ihr, paying-bride-price Exod 22:16

מַהֵר H4118a Conj-w / Adv (1×)

hastening, swift; speedy (adjective)

An adjective describing swiftness, appearing in Zephaniah 1:14 to characterize 'the great day of the LORD' as 'near and hastening.' The day rushes toward its arrival like a runner at full speed. The word is technically a Piel participle functioning as an adjective, capturing the active, urgent quality of approaching judgment. Time itself accelerates as the day of YHWH draws close.

(1×) Zephaniah 1:14 intensifies the nearness of the day of the LORD by calling it 'hastening'—not just coming, but speeding. The Spanish 'apresurado' (hurried, rushed) and French 'vite' (quick) capture the temporal urgency. This is eschatological rhetoric: the day doesn't dawdle; it races toward its target. The domain (Time) reflects the word's function as a temporal modifier, accelerating the prophetic clock. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: and-hastening | es: y-apresurado | fr: et-vite | de: [ומהר] Zeph 1:14

מַהֵר H4118b Adv (17×)

quickly, speedily — an adverb of haste, always modifying an immediately preceding verb

Maher (II) functions as an adverb meaning 'quickly' or 'speedily,' derived from the Piel infinitive absolute of mahar ('to hasten'). Its 17 occurrences always follow directly after the verb they modify, lending urgency to the action described. The word appears most densely in Deuteronomy, where it underscores both the swiftness of divine judgment — 'you shall surely perish quickly from the land' (Deut 4:26; 28:20) — and the pace of God's warfare on Israel's behalf: 'He will destroy them quickly before you' (Deut 9:3). The golden calf narrative uses it twice: 'they have turned aside quickly from the way I commanded them' (Deut 9:12, 16; cf. Exod 32:8), conveying the shocking speed of Israel's apostasy. In Judges 2:17, 23, it describes how quickly Israel abandoned the Lord after Joshua's generation died. Joshua 2:5 records Rahab's cover story about the spies: 'pursue them quickly.' Proverbs 25:8 warns against rushing too quickly into a legal dispute. The name Maher-shalal-hash-baz (Isa 8:1) builds on this same root. Spanish 'rapidamente,' French 'rapidement,' and German 'schnell' all render the straightforward adverbial sense.

quickly (17×) An adverb of speed or haste, syntactically bound to the verb it immediately follows. Concentrated in Deuteronomy to express the swiftness of divine judgment ('you shall perish quickly,' Deut 4:26; 28:20), divine aid in conquest ('He will destroy them quickly,' Deut 7:4, 22; 9:3), and the alarming rapidity of Israel's apostasy with the golden calf (Exod 32:8; Deut 9:12, 16). Also used for post-Joshua backsliding (Judg 2:17, 23) and practical urgency (Josh 2:5). Proverbs 25:8 applies it to the haste of litigation. Spanish 'rapidamente/pronto' and German 'schnell' confirm the single adverbial sense of speed or immediacy. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: quickly, speedily | es: Pronto, apresuradamente, pronto | fr: de-montagne, quickly, rapidement | de: quickly, schnell, speedily Exod 32:8; Deut 4:26; Deut 7:4; Deut 7:22; Deut 9:3

מֹהַר H4119 N-ms (3×)

bride-price, marriage payment given to bride's family

A noun denoting the purchase price or bride-price paid to the family of a bride. This was the customary payment a man gave to a woman's father to secure her as his wife in ancient Near Eastern culture. Exodus 22:16 refers to 'the bride-price of virgins' in legislation about seduction. Genesis 34:12 has Shechem offering to pay any amount of bride-price for Dinah. Saul demanded a dangerous bride-price from David for Michal (1 Samuel 18:25). The term reflects ancient marriage customs involving family-to-family economic transactions.

(3×) Multilingual evidence consistently identifies the marriage payment: Spanish 'dote, precio-de-novia' (dowry, bride-price), French 'bride-prix.' Exodus 22:17 establishes the legal standard of the virgins' bride-price. Genesis 34:12 shows Shechem willing to pay any amount after violating Dinah. Most notably, 1 Samuel 18:25 records Saul's deadly bride-price demand of 100 Philistine foreskins, attempting to arrange David's death while appearing to honor custom. HONOR AND PRICE

en: according-to-bride-price-of, bride-price, in-bride-price | es: conforme-a-dote-de, dote, en-precio-de-novia | fr: bride-prix, dans-bride-price, selon-le-prix-de-la-fiancée | de: Brautpreis, gemaess-zu-bride-price-von, in-bride-price Gen 34:12; Exod 22:17; 1Sam 18:25

מְהֵרָה H4120 Adv (20×)

Quickly, speedily, in haste — an adverb urging swift action or describing rapid occurrence

An adverbial noun from the root מהר ('to hasten') used throughout the Hebrew Bible to express urgency and speed. It often follows a verb to intensify the rapidity of action — Aaron must go quickly to make atonement and stop the plague (Num 16:46), the Gibeonites plead 'come up to us quickly and save us' (Josh 10:6), and Hushai warns David to cross the Jordan quickly lest he be swallowed up (2 Sam 17:16). In poetic texts it precedes the verb for emphasis: Isaiah pictures God summoning a distant nation that comes swiftly (Isa 5:26), and the psalmist prays 'be a rock of refuge to me; hasten to deliver me' (Ps 31:3).

quickly, speedily, swiftly (20×) The adverb מְהֵרָה (meherah), 'quickly, speedily, in haste,' expressing urgency or swiftness of action. Typically follows the verb in prose (Josh 8:19, the ambush rises quickly; 2 Sam 17:16, 21, David must flee quickly) and precedes it in poetry for heightened effect (Isa 5:26; Ps 31:3). Spanish renders variously as 'apresuradamente/pronto/prisa,' German sometimes leaves the Hebrew untransliterated. The late construction בְּמָהֳרָה ('in haste,' Eccl 4:12) and עַד־מְהֵרָה ('swiftly,' Ps 147:15) show prepositional expansion of the same core sense. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: quickly, speedily, swiftly | es: apresuradamente, prisa, pronto | fr: [מהרה], dans-rapidement, de-hâte | de: [במהרה], [מהרה], quickly Num 16:46; Deut 11:17; Josh 8:19; Josh 10:6; Josh 23:16

מַהֲרַי H4121 N-proper-ms (3×)

Maharai (personal name: possibly 'hasty' or 'impetuous')

A personal name belonging to one of David's mighty warriors. Maharai the Netophathite served as one of the elite fighters in David's army and later as a commander of 24,000 men during the tenth month of the year. He appears in both the list of David's heroes (2 Samuel 23:28, 1 Chronicles 11:30) and in the administrative divisions under David's reign (1 Chronicles 27:13). The name possibly derives from a root meaning 'to hasten.'

(3×) This proper name appears consistently transliterated as 'Maharai, Mahray' across translations. The warrior is identified as being from Netophah, a town near Bethlehem. His inclusion in the elite group of David's mighty men (2 Sam 23:28, 1 Chr 11:30) and later appointment as monthly division commander (1 Chr 27:13) testifies to his military prowess and leadership. He represents the loyal core of warriors who established David's kingdom. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maharai, Mahrai | es: Maharai, Mahray | fr: Maharai, [מהרי] | de: Maharai, [מהרי] 2Sam 23:28; 1Chr 11:30; 1Chr 27:13

מַהֵר שָׁלָל חָשׁ בַּז H4122 Prep / N-proper-ms (2×)

Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz (proper noun); symbolic name meaning 'swift is booty, speedy is prey'

This striking symbolic name appears in Isaiah 8:1 and 8:3 as the prophet's son, embodying a prophetic message about the imminent Assyrian invasion. The name literally means 'Hurrying to the plunder, rushing to the spoil,' predicting how quickly Damascus and Samaria would fall to Assyria. Isaiah was commanded to write it on a large tablet before witnesses, then gave it to his son born shortly after. This four-word Hebrew name is one of Scripture's longest personal names, functioning as a living prophetic sign.

(2×) The symbolic prophetic name given to Isaiah's son, meaning 'swift/hastening to plunder, quick/hurrying to spoil.' It predicted the rapid Assyrian conquest of Syria and Israel (fulfilled 732-722 BC). All language traditions transliterate this name rather than translate it (Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz in English, Maher-Shalal-Jash-Baz in Spanish), preserving its function as a proper name while the biblical text itself explains its ominous meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz | es: Maher-Shalal-Jash-Baz | fr: [למהר שלל חש בז], [מהר שלל חש בן] | de: [למהר שלל חש בן], [מהר שלל חש בן] Isa 8:1; Isa 8:3

H4123 N-fp (1×)
illusions, mockeries; deceptive flattering words
A hapax in Isaiah 30:10, where rebellious Judah tells the seers, 'Prophesy to us illusions; see deceptions.' The people demand comforting lies instead of hard truth. The term comes from a root meaning 'to mock' or 'deceive,' suggesting flattering falsehoods. This is the prophetic critique of court religion: listeners prefer smooth illusions to the rough edges of genuine prophecy.

(1×) Isaiah 30:10 captures the demand for prophetic malpractice: 'speak illusions' parallel to 'see deceptions.' The people want entertainment, not truth. Spanish 'engaños' (deceptions) fits the context of deliberately false speech. The domain (True, False) identifies this as epistemological vocabulary—what is said vs. what is real—but with a moral edge: choosing pleasant lies over painful truth. DECEIT AND TREACHERY
en: illusions | es: engaños | fr: [מהתלות] | de: [מהתלות] Isa 30:10

מוֹאָב H4124 Conj-w (181×)
Moab — the nation, people, and territory east of the Dead Sea, descended from Lot Moab names both a people and their homeland on the high plateau east of the Dead Sea. Genesis 19:37 traces the nation's origin to Lot's elder daughter, and the name carries an uncomfortable etymology the text does not shy from. Moab figures prominently in Israel's wilderness narrative — the plains of Moab are the staging ground for entry into Canaan (Num 22-36; Deut 1:5). The relationship oscillates between hostility (Balak's curse attempt, the Moabite wars) and kinship (Ruth the Moabitess). Spanish Moab, French Moab, and German Moab all transliterate without alteration, reflecting the name's universal recognition.

Moab (place/people) (181×) Proper noun designating the land east of the Dead Sea, its people (understood as descendants of Lot per Gen 19:37), and the kingdom ruled by figures such as Balak (Num 22:4) and Mesha. The term functions as person, nation, and territory depending on context. Jeremiah 48 alone accounts for over 30 occurrences in an extended oracle against Moab. The name passes unchanged into virtually all target languages. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Moab, of-Moab | es: Moab, Moav, de-Moab | fr: Moab, de-Moab | de: Moab, Moabs, von-Moab Gen 19:37; Gen 36:35; Exod 15:15; Num 21:11

מוֹאָבִי H4125 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (16×)
Moabite — a gentilic adjective/noun for a person from Moab, applied to both men and women.
The gentilic form derived from Moab, designating people of Moabite origin. It appears in both masculine and feminine forms, singular and plural, functioning as both adjective and substantive noun. The term carries particular weight in the story of Ruth, where 'Ruth the Moabitess' (Ruth 1:22; 2:2, 6, 21; 4:5, 10) is identified by this label no fewer than six times — a narrative strategy that keeps her foreign identity visible even as she is welcomed into Israel. Deuteronomy 23:4 excludes a 'Moabite' from the assembly of the LORD, creating a theological tension that the book of Ruth seems designed to explore. The plural appears for 'Moabite women' whom Solomon loved (1 Kgs 11:1) and whom Nehemiah opposed (Neh 13:23). Spanish and French consistently render 'moabita/Moabite.'

Moabite (gentilic adjective/noun) (16×) The gentilic adjective/noun identifying a person of Moabite descent, used in masculine, feminine, singular, and plural forms. Most prominently attached to Ruth — 'Ruth the Moabitess' appears six times (Ruth 1:22; 2:2, 6, 21; 4:5, 10), foregrounding her foreign identity within a narrative of inclusion. The term also marks the Deuteronomic exclusion of Moabites from the assembly (Deut 23:4; Neh 13:1), Solomon's Moabite wives (1 Kgs 11:1), and the ancestral giants known to the Moabites as Emim (Deut 2:11). Spanish 'moabita' and French 'Moabite' render it uniformly across genders. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Moabite, Moabite-women, and-Moabite | es: el-moabita, la-moabita, moabita | fr: Moabite, Moabite-femmes, [המאבי] | de: Moabite-Frauen, Moabiterin, [המואבי] Deut 2:11; Deut 2:29; Deut 23:3; Ruth 1:4; Ruth 1:22

מוֹבָא H4126 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)
entrances, places of coming in; ingress points
An ungrammatical form (designed for assonance with 'exits') appearing in Ezekiel 43:11, describing the temple's 'entrances' in parallel with 'exits.' The word is formed irregularly to match the sound of its opposite. Ezekiel's architectural vision includes precise details about where people enter and leave the sacred space. The plural suggests multiple gates or access points for the temple complex.

(1×) Ezekiel 43:11 uses 'entrances and exits' as a merism for all the temple's access design. The irregular form (noted by BDB as 'ungrammatical') shows the prophet prioritizing sound over strict grammar—the words need to balance. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'entradas,' French 'entrée') treats this as straightforward architectural vocabulary despite the morphological oddity. ENTERING AND GOING IN en: and-its-entrances | es: y-sus-entradas | fr: et-entrée | de: [ומובאיו] Ezek 43:11

מוּג H4127 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (17×)
To melt, dissolve, or cause to melt; used of earth dissolving at God's touch and hearts melting in fear.
A vivid verb depicting dissolution — whether physical melting or the collapse of human courage. When God touches the earth, it melts (Amos 9:5); when his voice thunders, the land dissolves (Ps 46:6). The inhabitants of Canaan 'melted' before Israel (Exod 15:15, Josh 2:9), and warriors' hearts dissolve like wax. The Arabic cognate māja ('to surge, as the sea') hints at the underlying image of solid things becoming fluid. In its causative uses, God softens rain-soaked earth (Ps 65:10) or dissolves a person in suffering (Job 30:22).

1. melt, dissolve (intransitive) (14×) Intransitive melting or dissolving — the earth, hearts, or peoples lose their solid form or resolve. Encompasses the Qal intransitive, Niphal, and Hitpael stems. The Song of the Sea declares the peoples 'melted' (נָמֹגוּ, Exod 15:15), and Rahab confirms that Canaan's inhabitants lost heart (Josh 2:9, 24). Psalm 46:6 pictures cosmic dissolution at God's voice. Spanish 'derretir' and French 'fondre' both capture the physical-to-metaphorical range. The Arabic cognate māja (surging waves) suggests the boundary between solid and liquid dissolving entirely. MELT DISSOLVE
en: and-it-melts, are-dissolving, have-melted | es: Se-derriten, derretida, derretido | fr: [נמגו], [נמוג], avoir-fondit | de: [והתמגגו], [ותמוג], [למוג] Exod 15:15; Josh 2:9; Josh 2:24; 1Sam 14:16; Ps 46:6

2. cause to melt, soften (3×) Causative melting or softening — God as agent dissolving or liquefying something. In Ps 65:10 God softens the earth with showers (תְּמֹגְגֶנָּה), a gentle agricultural image. By contrast, Job 30:22 uses the verb for God dissolving Job himself in the storm of suffering. Isaiah 64:7 may preserve a similar causative sense of God melting his people, though the text is debated. The shift from intransitive to causative underscores divine sovereignty: what melts on its own before God can also be deliberately dissolved by him. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: You-soften-it, and-You-dissolve-me, and-You-have-melted-us | es: la-ablandas, y-me-disuelves, y-nos-has-consumido | fr: [ותמוגנו], et-ותמגגני-moi, fondre | de: [ותמגגני], [ותמוגנו], schmolz Job 30:22; Ps 65:10; Isa 64:7

מוד H4128 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)
measured, shook; caused to tremble (Polel form)
A disputed verb in Habakkuk 3:6. The consonants (וַיְמַדֵּד) could be from the root 'to measure' (מדד Polel) or 'to shake' (מוד). BDB lists it under a rare root meaning 'shake,' but many versions translate 'he measured the earth.' The theophany context—God striding forth, mountains trembling—supports either: He measured the earth with His steps, or He made it tremble. Both images convey sovereign power over creation.

(1×) Habakkuk 3:6 describes God's appearance: He stood and 'measured/shook' the earth. If from 'measure,' it's a metaphor of surveying as a sovereign; if from 'shake,' it's direct theophanic power causing earthquakes. The French 'secouer' (shake) and Spanish 'midió' (measured) show the split. Both roots yield sensible theology: God's gaze measures all, or His presence makes mountains quake. MEASURE METE OUT en: and-measured | es: y-midió | fr: et-secouer | de: [וימדד] Hab 3:6

מוֹדַע H4129 N-ms (2×)

kinsman, relative (noun); a known acquaintance or family relation

This noun denotes a kinsman or relative. In Ruth 2:1, Boaz is described as a kinsman of Naomi's husband—a relationship crucial to the redemption plot. In Proverbs 7:4, the sage urges personifying wisdom by calling Understanding 'kinsman,' parallel to calling Wisdom 'sister.' This creates intimate familial bonds with divine wisdom. The Ketiv-Qere variation in Ruth suggests textual uncertainty between 'known one' and 'kinsman,' though both readings emphasize relationship and familiarity.

(2×) Refers to a kinsman or close relative, emphasizing both biological connection and familiarity. Ruth's use establishes Boaz's kinship claim crucial for levirate redemption, while Proverbs metaphorically urges treating wisdom as family. Spanish uses 'pariente' (relative) and 'conocida' (known one), German and French offer transliterations or 'parent/relative,' reflecting the term's focus on relationship rather than mere acquaintance. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: a-relative, and-kinsman | es: pariente, y-conocida | fr: et-מדע, un-parent | de: [(מודע)], [מדע] Ruth 2:1; Prov 7:4

מֹדַעַת H4130 N-fsc / 1cp (1×)

kinship, family connection; our relative

A noun meaning 'kindred' or 'kinship,' appearing with first plural suffix in Ruth 3:2: 'Is not Boaz our relative?' The question establishes legal ground for Ruth's claim on Boaz as kinsman-redeemer. The term emphasizes family connection, the blood tie that creates obligation. In Ruth's story, kinship isn't just genealogy; it's the social structure that rescues the vulnerable widow.

(1×) Ruth 3:2 has Naomi asking rhetorically, 'Isn't Boaz our relative?'—asserting the kinship claim that drives the plot. The word captures family connection that brings duty: Boaz must act because he's 'our kinsman.' Spanish 'pariente' and French 'parent' preserve the familial sense. This is legal vocabulary embedded in narrative, where kinship creates obligation to redeem land and lineage. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: our-relative | es: nuestro-pariente | fr: notre-parent | de: [מדעתנו] Ruth 3:2

מוֹט H4131 V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (39×)

To totter, shake, slip, be moved; in Hifil, to cause to fall or topple

A verb of instability and unsteady motion, used overwhelmingly in the Psalms to express either vulnerability or unshakeable confidence. The world shall not be moved (1 Chr 16:30; Ps 93:1); the righteous shall never be shaken (Ps 15:5; 62:2). Yet the wicked totter and stagger, and their foot shall slip in due time (Deut 32:35). The French consistently renders all stems with 'chanceler' (to totter), while Spanish distinguishes 'resbalar' (to slip) from 'tambalearse' (to stagger), revealing the verb's two physical images: losing footing on slippery ground versus wobbling like an unsteady structure. In its causative Hifil stem, it means to bring someone down—to topple the enemy (Ps 140:10).

1. be shaken, be moved (21×) The Nifal passive sense: to be shaken, be moved, or be disturbed from a stable position. This is the voice of theological confidence—the earth shall not be moved (1 Chr 16:30), and the one who trusts in the LORD shall not be shaken (Ps 15:5; 16:8). The negative assertion 'I shall not be moved' (Ps 10:6; 62:2, 6) is almost a creedal formula in the Psalter. Spanish 'moverse' and French 'chanceler' both convey this passive displacement from stability. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: I-am-shaken, I-shall-be-moved, I-shall-be-shaken | es: resbale, se-mueva, se-mueve | fr: chanceler | de: [ימוט], wankte 1Chr 16:30; Job 41:23; Ps 10:6; Ps 13:4; Ps 15:5

2. totter, waver, stagger (10×) The Qal active and Hitpael reflexive sense: to totter, waver, or stagger like something losing its balance. Mountains totter when God arises (Ps 46:2, 6), the earth staggers under judgment (Isa 24:19-20), and those being led to slaughter stagger helplessly (Prov 24:11). Spanish 'tambalearse' (to reel) captures the visible, physical unsteadiness that distinguishes this from the quieter Nifal passive. Psalm 55:22 uses it of the righteous wavering under betrayal. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: and-those-staggering, and-when-totter, it-totters | es: que-cede, se-tambaleó, tambalear | fr: chanceler, de-chanceler, et-chanceler | de: [החמוטטה], [ומטים], [מוט] Ps 46:2; Ps 46:6; Ps 55:22; Ps 60:2; Prov 24:11

3. slip, lose footing (5×) A more specific Qal sense: to slip or lose one's footing, emphasizing sudden loss of traction rather than gradual wobbling. When your brother's hand slips (Lev 25:35), you must support him. Their foot shall slip in due time (Deut 32:35) pictures divine judgment as a treacherous path. The psalmist's steps have not slipped (Ps 17:5), and when his foot was slipping, God's mercy held him up (Ps 94:18). Spanish 'resbalar' (to slip) precisely isolates this image from the broader tottering. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: and-slips, have-slipped, slips | es: cuando-resbale, que-resbale, resbala | fr: chanceler, dans-chanceler, de-chanceler | de: slips, und-slips, wankte Lev 25:35; Deut 32:35; Ps 17:5; Ps 38:16; Ps 94:18

4. cause to fall, bring down (3×) The Hifil causative: to cause someone to fall, to bring down or topple. In Psalm 140:10, the psalmist prays that burning coals fall upon the wicked and that they be cast into pits from which they cannot rise. Psalm 55:3 similarly calls for God to bring down the oppressor. This inverts the typical passive/reflexive pattern: instead of asking 'do not let me be shaken,' the speaker asks God to shake and topple the enemy. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: (let-fall), [ketiv:let-fall], they-bring-down | es: Caigan, [Caigan], lanzan | fr: chanceler | de: wankte Ps 55:3; Ps 140:10

מוֹט H4132 Prep-b (6×)

A pole or bar for carrying; tottering or slipping (abstract); the bar of a yoke, figuratively of oppression

Used concretely of the poles or bars on which heavy objects were transported – most memorably the massive grape cluster carried back from Eshcol on a pole between two men (Num 13:23). In the Psalms it takes on an abstract sense of tottering or slipping, always negated to affirm God's steadfast protection: He will not let the righteous be shaken (Ps 55:23; 66:9; 121:3). In Nahum 1:13 the word narrows to the crossbar of a yoke, a vivid figure for foreign oppression that God promises to shatter.

1. pole, carrying bar (3×) A carrying-pole or bar, the kind slung between two bearers for transporting heavy loads. Numbers 13:23 pictures the Eshcol grape cluster borne on such a pole. Spanish 'pértiga/vara' and English 'carrying-frame' both capture the concrete equipment sense used in the wilderness tabernacle instructions (Num 4:10, 12). RODS AND STAFFS

en: on-the-pole, the-carrying-frame | es: en-la-vara, la-pértiga | fr: le-portant-frame, sur-le-pole | de: auf-der-pole, der-carrying-frame Num 4:10; Num 4:12; Num 13:23

2. tottering, slipping (abstract noun) (2×) The abstract noun of tottering, stumbling, or slipping – always used with a negation to express divine security. In Psalm 66:9 God 'has not given our feet to slipping,' and Psalm 121:3 promises He will not let your foot be moved. Spanish 'tambaleo' (staggering) and Hindi 'dagmagaane' (wavering) reflect the kinesthetic imagery of unsteady footing that the psalmists deny of those whom God protects. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: to-slip | es: al-tambaleo | fr: à-barre | de: zu-slip Ps 66:9; Ps 121:3

3. yoke (instrument of subjection) (1×) The crossbar of a yoke, used figuratively for political or imperial subjection. Nahum 1:13 declares God will break 'his yoke-bar from upon you,' promising liberation from Assyrian domination. The multilingual evidence converges: Spanish 'yugo suyo,' Hindi 'uska juua,' and English 'his yoke' all render the metaphor of bondage being snapped. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-yoke | es: yugo-suyo | fr: verrou | de: [מטהו] Nah 1:13

מוֹטָה H4133 Conj-w / N-fpc (12×)

A yoke bar, wooden crosspiece symbolizing oppression; a carrying pole for sacred objects

The noun מוֹטָה refers to the bar or crossbeam of a yoke — the wooden piece laid across the neck of draft animals and, by powerful biblical metaphor, across the necks of oppressed peoples. Jeremiah physically wore yoke bars and bonds as a prophetic sign-act (Jer 27:2), and Hananiah broke them to symbolize deliverance (Jer 28:10, 12–13). Isaiah calls for loosing the bonds of the yoke and breaking every bar of oppression (Isa 58:6, 9). A single occurrence in 1 Chronicles 15:15 uses the word for the carrying poles threaded through the Ark of the Covenant — a different physical object but the same basic shape: a wooden bar borne on the shoulders.

1. yoke bar (11×) A yoke bar — the wooden crossbeam that forms part of a yoke — used literally of animal yokes and figuratively of political and social oppression. Jeremiah's sign-act dominates: he fashioned yoke bars and bonds (Jer 27:2), Hananiah broke the wooden bar (Jer 28:10, 12), and God replaced it with an iron bar (Jer 28:13). Leviticus 26:13 recalls how God broke the bars of Egypt's yoke, and Ezekiel 34:27 promises the same liberation. Isaiah 58:6 pairs 'bands of the yoke bar' (aguddot motah) with oppression. Spanish 'yugos de' and German 'Joch' consistently point to yoke imagery. Ezekiel 30:18 uses the plural figuratively of Egypt's proud power being broken. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Bars-of, and-yoke-bars, bars-of | es: Yugos-de, barras-de, el-yugo | fr: bars-de, et-joug, joug | de: Joch, Staemme, bars-von Lev 26:13; Isa 58:6; Isa 58:9; Jer 27:2

2. carrying pole (1×) A carrying pole or staff used for transporting sacred furnishings, specifically the poles inserted through rings on the Ark of the Covenant. The single occurrence at 1 Chronicles 15:15 describes the Levites carrying the Ark of God 'with the poles (bamotot) upon their shoulders, as Moses had commanded.' Spanish 'con los varales' ('with the carrying-poles') confirms the distinct sense. While sharing the basic form of a long wooden bar, this use differs entirely in function — not subjugation but sacred transport — and in context, appearing only in Chronicler's liturgical narrative. RODS AND STAFFS

en: with-the-poles | es: con-los-varales | fr: [במטות] | de: [במטות] 1Chr 15:15

מוּךְ H4134 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to become poor, grow impoverished; to sink low in economic status, used of Israelites in need of redemption

This verb describes the process of becoming impoverished, used exclusively in legal contexts addressing the social safety net for Israelites. Leviticus 25 employs it four times to introduce laws of kinsman-redemption (v. 25), charitable loans (v. 35), indentured service (v. 39), and sale to a resident alien (v. 47). Leviticus 27:8 applies it to a person too poor to pay a vow assessment. The multilingual evidence (spa empobrece, deu wird arm, fra becomes pauvre) consistently renders the progressive, resultative sense of 'becoming poor' rather than a static state.

(5×) To become economically reduced, to grow poor — describing the downward process of impoverishment among covenant members. Concentrated entirely in Levitical legislation (25:25, 35, 39, 47; 27:8), the verb triggers specific communal obligations: land redemption, interest-free lending, limits on servitude, and adjusted vow pricing. The Aramaic cognate מוך ('to sink down') and Syriac parallel reinforce the image of sinking or being brought low. Translations uniformly express the inchoative aspect: spa empobrece, deu wird arm. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: and-becomes-poor, becomes-poor, poor | es: empobrece, pobre, y-empobrece | fr: becomes-pauvre, et-becomes-pauvre, pauvre | de: arm, und-wird-arm, wird-arm Lev 25:25; Lev 25:35; Lev 25:39; Lev 25:47; Lev 27:8

מוּל H4135a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (34×)

To circumcise; by extension, to cut off or destroy, and (rarely) to wither or fade.

At its heart a covenant verb: the physical act of circumcision that marked Abraham's descendants as God's own people. Genesis 17 uses it repeatedly in both active and passive forms as the sign of the eternal covenant. Yet the same root carries a powerful metaphorical charge — 'circumcise the foreskin of your heart' (Deut 10:16) — where the cutting becomes spiritual renewal. Spanish consistently renders it 'circuncidar,' while German uses 'beschneiden' (to cut around). In three consecutive verses of Psalm 118:10-12, a militant sense emerges: 'I cut them off!' And in one isolated use (Ps 90:6), the root appears to mean 'wither,' perhaps linking the idea of cutting to the fading of grass.

1. be circumcised (Nifal/passive) (20×) The Nifal or passive sense: being circumcised, undergoing circumcision, or being in the state of having been circumcised. Genesis 17:10-14 establishes the covenantal requirement that every male 'be circumcised.' French uses reflexive constructions ('être circoncis'), mirroring the Nifal's middle-passive voice. This sense covers both the physical rite and the resulting state that marks covenant membership. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: and-they-were-circumcised, circumcise-yourselves, circumcised | es: Circuncidaos, al-circuncidarse, circuncidado | fr: –être-circoncit, [המלו], [מול] | de: [המלו], [מול], als-er-beschnitten-wurde Gen 17:10; Gen 17:12; Gen 17:13; Gen 17:14

2. circumcise (Qal active) (10×) The Qal active sense: performing the act of circumcision upon someone. Abraham circumcised his household (Gen 17:23), and subsequently his son Isaac on the eighth day (Gen 21:4). Deuteronomy 10:16 and 30:6 extend this into metaphor — circumcising the heart — where the physical cutting becomes a figure for removing spiritual obstinacy. Spanish 'circuncidar' and German 'beschneiden' both preserve the 'cutting around' etymology. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: and-circumcised, and-circumcises, and-he-circumcised | es: Y-circuncidaréis, Y-circuncidó, circuncidó | fr: circoncit, et-circoncit, et-circumcises | de: beschnitt, sie-beschnitt, und-beschnitt Gen 17:23; Gen 21:4; Exod 12:44; Deut 10:16; Deut 30:6

3. cut off, destroy (Hifil) (3×) A Hifil causative sense meaning to cut off or destroy enemies, attested only in Psalm 118:10-12 where the psalmist declares three times: 'In the name of the LORD I cut them off!' The triple repetition with escalating imagery (nations, surrounding nations, swarming like bees) gives this usage rhetorical force far removed from the covenantal ceremony. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: I-cut-them-off | es: las-destruiré | fr: circoncire | de: ich-abgeschnitten-ihnen-weg Ps 118:10; Ps 118:11; Ps 118:12

4. wither, fade (Piel) (1×) A rare sense meaning to wither or fade, found only in Psalm 90:6 where grass flourishes in the morning and by evening 'withers and dries up.' Some lexicographers assign this to a separate root (malal III), but the textual tradition preserves it under mul. The connection may lie in the shared idea of cutting — as vegetation is cut down, it withers. WITHERING AND FADING

en: it-withers | es: se-marchita | fr: circoncire | de: es-welkt Ps 90:6

מָלַל H4135b V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (2×)

circumcise, cut off (verb); perform ritual circumcision or be severed

This verb is an alternate form of the common Hebrew root for circumcision (מול). BDB assigns it to a separate root (מָלַל), though functionally identical. Joshua 5:2 uses the imperative 'circumcise' when God commands Joshua to circumcise the wilderness generation. Psalm 58:7 employs the Hithpolel form 'let them be cut off,' describing the wicked dissolving away. The connection between ritual circumcision and metaphorical cutting-off reflects the verb's core sense of severing or removal.

(2×) Denotes the action of circumcision (Josh 5:2) or being cut off/severed (Ps 58:7). The Joshua context is literal ritual circumcision of males, while the Psalm usage is metaphorical judgment (wicked being cut off like water flowing away). Spanish uses 'circuncidar' for the literal and 'sean cortadas' (be cut) for the metaphorical, German similarly distinguishes, showing how languages track the semantic shift from ritual to judgment. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: circumcise, they-are-cut-off | es: circuncida, sean-cortadas | fr: circoncire, couper | de: beschneiden, sie-sind-abgeschnitten-weg Josh 5:2; Ps 58:7

מוּל H4136 Prep-l (36×)

Front, opposite, in front of — a substantive and preposition indicating spatial position directly facing something

Functions primarily as a preposition meaning 'opposite' or 'in front of,' derived from a root suggesting the front or face of something. It appears frequently in architectural and geographical descriptions: the placement of tabernacle clasps 'opposite' one another (Exod 26:9), the positioning of priestly garment attachments 'in front of' the ephod (Exod 28:25, 27), and geographical directions like 'opposite Beth-peor' (Deut 3:29; 34:6). Spanish 'frente a/de' and French 'en face de/devant' capture its spatial precision. One unique occurrence in Nehemiah 12:38 uses a variant form (môʾel) to indicate 'the opposite direction,' possibly a textual corruption of 'to the left.'

1. opposite, facing, in front of (35×) Spatial preposition meaning 'opposite,' 'facing,' or 'in front of' — the dominant usage across 35 occurrences. Employed in cultic instructions for the tabernacle (Exod 26:9; 28:25, 27, 37), geographical orientation (Deut 1:1; 3:29 'opposite Beth-peor'), and architectural descriptions (1 Kgs 7:5). French 'en face de' and German 'Vorderseite von' reflect the directional precision, while Spanish 'frente a' captures the facing relationship. Often appears with prefixed prepositions: mimmûl ('from opposite'), lĕmûl ('toward the front of'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-opposite-of, front-of, in-front-of | es: frente-a, frente-de | fr: dans-front-de, de-en-face-de, devant-de | de: Vorderseite-von, der-Vorderseite-von, front-von Exod 18:19; Exod 26:9; Exod 28:25; Exod 28:27; Exod 28:37

2. on the opposite side, across (1×) Directional use indicating 'on the opposite side' or 'across,' occurring in Nehemiah 12:38 in the variant form môʾel (לְמוֹאֵל). This may describe the second thanksgiving procession going in the contrary direction along the wall. BDB suggests the reading may be corrupt for liśmôʾl ('to the left'), and the multilingual evidence reflects this uncertainty — French and German leave the Hebrew in brackets rather than attempting translation. LEFT SIDE

en: opposite | es: al-frente | fr: [למואל] | de: [למואל] Neh 12:38

מוֹלָדָה H4137 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Moladah, town in Simeon's territory

A settlement assigned to the tribe of Simeon (Joshua 19:2, 1 Chronicles 4:28), later reinhabited after the Babylonian exile (Nehemiah 11:26). Ancient geographers identified it with Tel Milh, located approximately four hours east of Beersheba in the Negev. The site appears to have maintained its name and identity across centuries, from the initial conquest through the restoration period, making it one of the more stable points in Simeon's otherwise fluid territorial holdings.

(4×) A proper name for a town in Simeon's allotment in the southern territory. The multilingual evidence preserves the name with minimal variation (Moladah, Molada, Moladá), consistent with its function as a geographical identifier. Its appearance in both early territorial lists and post-exilic settlement records suggests continuity of identification, if not necessarily continuous occupation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Moladah, and-in-Moladah | es: y-Molada, y-Moladá, y-en-Molada | fr: [ובמולדה], [ומולדה], et-Moladah | de: [ובמולדה], [ומולדה], und-Moladah Josh 15:26; Josh 19:2; 1Chr 4:28; Neh 11:26

מוֹלֶדֶת H4138 Conj-w (22×)

Kindred, birthplace, native land; relatives, family; offspring, progeny; the event or circumstances of birth.

A feminine noun built from the root yalad (to bear, give birth), moledet encompasses everything connected to one's origin—the land where one was born, the family into which one was born, and the children one has borne. When God tells Abram to leave his 'moledet' (Gen 12:1), the word resonates with homeland, kinfolk, and identity all at once. Ezekiel employs the plural for Jerusalem's shameful 'birth circumstances' (Ezek 16:3-4), while Leviticus uses it for female offspring 'born of' a father or mother (Lev 18:9, 11). The word beautifully ties land, lineage, and life together.

1. birthplace, native land (10×) The place or land of one's birth, one's homeland or native country. This is the most frequent sense, appearing ten times. God summons Abram away from his 'birthplace' (Gen 12:1), and Naomi's homeland is Ruth's destination (Ruth 2:11). The construct 'eretz moledet' (land of kindred/birth) appears in Gen 11:28; 24:7; and Jer 46:16. Spanish 'nacimiento' and German 'Verwandtschaft' each capture a different facet—the event of birth versus the network of belonging—showing how this word bridges geography and genealogy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-your-birthplace, and-to-your-kindred, birth-his | es: nacimiento-de-ellos, nacimiento-de-él, nacimiento-suyo | fr: [מולדתו], [מולדתם], [מולדתנו] | de: [מולדתה], [מולדתו], [מולדתך] Gen 11:28; Gen 12:1; Gen 31:3; Gen 32:9; Ruth 2:11

2. kindred, relatives, family (6×) One's kinfolk, relatives, or extended family group—the people to whom one belongs by birth. When Abraham's servant is asked about family (Gen 43:7) or when God directs Jacob to return to his 'kindred' (Gen 31:3, 13), moledet denotes the web of human relationships defined by shared descent. Esther conceals her 'moledet' (Est 2:10, 20)—her people and family identity. Spanish 'parentela' and German 'Verwandtschaft' render this relational dimension well, emphasizing the communal bond over the geographical origin. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: and-about-our-kindred, my-birth, my-birthplace | es: mi-parentela, mi-parentela?, parentela-tuya | fr: et-au-sujet-de-notre-kindred, mon-birthplace, mon-kindred | de: [מולדתי], deiner-Verwandtschaft, mein-birthplace Gen 24:4; Gen 24:7; Gen 31:13; Gen 43:7; Num 10:30

3. offspring, those born (4×) Offspring, children, or those born from someone—progeny in the concrete sense. Jacob tells Joseph that sons born after Ephraim and Manasseh shall be Joseph's own 'moledet' (Gen 48:6). The Holiness Code uses it for a daughter 'born of' one's father or mother (Lev 18:9, 11), distinguishing full and half-siblings. Spanish 'descendencia' captures this generative meaning. The shift from 'place of birth' to 'those whom one has birthed' is a natural metonymic extension within the yalad root family. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-offspring-your, born-of | es: Y-tu-descendencia, nacida-de | fr: et-postérité-ton, né-de | de: born-von, und-deine-Nachkommen Gen 48:6; Lev 18:9; Lev 18:11

4. birth, nativity (2×) The event or circumstances of birth itself, one's nativity or origin as an abstract concept. This rare sense appears in Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem's origins: 'your births and your nativity are from the land of the Canaanite' (Ezek 16:3-4), where the plural 'moldetayik' vividly evokes the sordid conditions of the city's founding. The passage personifies Jerusalem as an abandoned newborn, making 'birth' both literal and figurative. No single target-language gloss captures this—translations typically resort to paraphrase, underscoring its unique rhetorical force. BIRTH BEING BORN

en: and-birth-your | es: Y-nacimiento-de-ti, y-nacimiento-de-ti | fr: [ומולדותיך], [ומלדתיך] | de: [ומולדותיך], [ומלדתיך] Ezek 16:3; Ezek 16:4

מוּלָה H4139 Prep-l (1×)

circumcision; the rite of removing the foreskin

A rare plural form appearing in Exodus 4:26, where Zipporah says 'a bridegroom of blood because of the circumcision' after circumcising her son. The phrase is cryptic—does she mean 'on account of circumcisions' (plural) or 'concerning the circumcision' (event)? The plural may be intensive or refer to multiple people's circumcision.

Regardless, the term identifies the ritual act that averts God's deadly threat against Moses.

(1×) Exodus 4:26's 'bridegroom of blood concerning circumcision' is famously obscure. Zipporah's emergency circumcision of her son saves Moses' life, and this phrase marks the moment. The prepositional 'for the circumcision' (Spanish 'por la circuncisión') identifies the ritual as the cause of resolution. The domain (Religious Activities) is clear—this is covenant-marking ritual—even if the exact syntax remains debated. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: for-the-circumcision | es: por-la-circuncisión | fr: pour-le-circoncision | de: fuer-der-circumcision Exod 4:26

מוֹלִיד H4140 N-proper-ms (1×)

Molid; a descendant of Judah

A personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 2:29, identifying one of the sons of Abishur in Judah's genealogy. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to beget' (ילד), making it a theophoric or descriptive name. Beyond this single genealogical notice, nothing is known about Molid. He's part of the dense network of Judahite lineages Chronicles preserves.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:29 simply lists Molid as Abishur's son—no deeds, no character, just a name in the tribal record. The uniform transliteration across languages (English, Spanish preserve 'Molid') indicates this is a pure proper name with no recoverable meaning or play. He exists in Scripture solely as a genealogical link in Judah's family tree. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Molid | es: Molid | fr: [מוליד] | de: [מוליד] 1Chr 2:29

מוֹסָב H4141 N-msc (1×)

surrounding, encompassing; structural circuit (obscure architectural term)

An obscure architectural term in Ezekiel 41:7, describing something about the temple's 'surrounding' or 'circuit.' The text is notoriously difficult—BDB admits the meaning is 'wholly obscure.' Proposals include 'winding structure,' 'enlargement,' or a scribal error. The word seems to describe how the side chambers expand as they rise, but the details escape us. This is one of Ezekiel's many technical terms lost to time.

(1×) Ezekiel 41:7's architectural vision includes this hapax in a description of the temple's side chambers. The root suggests 'turning' or 'surrounding,' perhaps a spiral or circuit. The domain (Spatial Positions) and translations ('surrounding,' 'rodeo') attempt to locate something circular or encircling, but the ancient building technique remains unclear. Some delete the word as dittography; others emend. The temple Ezekiel saw defies our reconstruction. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: surrounding-of- | es: rodeo-de | fr: détour | de: [מוסב] Ezek 41:7

סָבַב H4142 V-Hofal-Prtcpl-fpc (4×)

surrounded, encircled, set (as gems)

A passive verbal form describing items that are encircled, surrounded, or set in place. Most frequently it appears in descriptions of the high priest's breastplate, where precious stones were 'surrounded' or 'enclosed' in gold settings (Exodus 28:11, 39:6, 39:13). Ezekiel uses it architecturally to describe turning or pivoting doors in the temple vision (Ezekiel 41:24). The imagery suggests careful positioning within a framework, whether for gemstones in liturgical garments or doors in sacred architecture.

(4×) Describing objects that are surrounded, enclosed in settings, or positioned within a framework. The priestly contexts emphasize gems mounted in gold ('engastadas,' 'enclosed settings'), while Ezekiel's architectural use suggests pivoting or turning elements. The multilingual evidence shows some variation ('surrounded,' 'turning,' 'giratorias'), reflecting the term's application to both static enclosure and rotational movement. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: surrounded, turning | es: engastadas, giratorias, rodeadas-de | fr: changement, entoura | de: [מוסבות], umgab Exod 28:11; Exod 39:6; Exod 39:13; Ezek 41:24

מוֹסָד H4143 N-msc (3×)

foundation, foundation-laying, establishing of a structure

A noun denoting foundation or the act of laying a foundation. In Chronicles it marks the significant day when Solomon's temple foundation was laid (2 Chronicles 8:16). Isaiah uses it for the precious cornerstone foundation that God lays in Zion (28:16). Ezekiel mentions foundations in his vision of the restored temple (41:8). The term emphasizes the fundamental starting point of construction and, metaphorically, the secure basis of God's purposes.

(3×) Multilingual glosses uniformly identify 'foundation, fundamento' across languages. Second Chronicles 8:16 marks the temple's foundation-laying as a critical milestone in Solomon's building project, from foundation to completion. Isaiah 28:16 uses foundation imagery for God's messianic promise of a tested, precious cornerstone in Zion. Ezekiel 41:8 describes foundations in the visionary temple. Each occurrence emphasizes beginnings and secure establishment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-foundation, foundations-of, the-foundation-of | es: fundamento, fundamento-de, fundamentos-de | fr: [מוסד], fondement | de: [מוסד], [מוסדות] 2Chr 8:16; Isa 28:16; Ezek 41:8

מוֹסָד H4144 N-mpc (2×)

foundation, base (noun); the foundational supports of structures or the earth

This noun denotes foundations or base structures. It appears frequently in poetic imagery describing the foundations of the earth (Ps 82:5; Prov 8:29; Mic 6:2; Isa 24:18; 40:21; Jer 31:37), the world (Ps 18:15), and mountains (Deut 32:22; Ps 18:7). Isaiah 58:12 uses it for 'ancient foundations' of ruined buildings awaiting restoration. Jeremiah 51:26 refers to foundation stones. The term emphasizes stability, antiquity, and the deep-set bases that support visible structures—whether cosmic, geographic, or architectural.

(2×) Refers to foundational structures, particularly of the earth, world, or mountains in poetic cosmology. Passages describe these foundations shaking at divine judgment or being unmovable demonstrations of God's creative power. Isaiah 58:12 applies it to ancient ruined building foundations awaiting restoration. Spanish uses 'cimientos' and 'fundamentos' (both meaning foundations/bases), German 'Grundfesten,' emphasizing the bedrock support underlying visible reality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-foundations-of | es: cimientos-de, fundamentos-de | fr: de-fondement, מוסדי | de: [מוסדי], der-Grundfesten-von Ps 82:5; Prov 8:29

מוּסָדָה H4145 N-fs (1×)

foundation, appointment; rod of appointment (punishment)

A rare noun appearing in Isaiah 30:32 in the phrase 'rod of appointment' or 'appointed rod'—the staff with which God beats Assyria. The term derives from the root 'to found' or 'appoint,' suggesting a rod destined for judgment. Every blow of this divinely appointed rod is accompanied by tambourines and harps, turning punishment into liturgy. This is judgment as choreographed ritual.

(1×) Isaiah 30:32's 'rod of appointment' strikes Assyria with predetermined blows—each stroke appointed by God. The root's double sense (foundation/appointment) creates ambiguity: is this a foundational rod, or a rod appointed for its task? Spanish 'castigo' (punishment) interprets functionally. The domain (Moral and Ethical Qualities) suggests this is about divine justice executed with ritual precision—predetermined, deserved punishment. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: of-foundation | es: castigo | fr: [מוסדה] | de: [מוסדה] Isa 30:32

מוֹסָד H4146 N-fpc (11×)

Foundation, base — the structural underpinning of a building or, poetically, the deep foundations of the earth itself

The noun מוֹסָד (mosad) refers to a foundation or structural base, used both architecturally and in cosmic-poetic imagery. In David's psalm the foundations of heaven and earth shake when the LORD descends (2 Sam 22:8, 16; Ps 18:7, 15), and Moses' Song warns that God's fire burns to the foundations of the mountains (Deut 32:22). Isaiah asks who laid the earth's foundation from the beginning (Isa 40:21) and calls the rebuilder of Jerusalem 'the repairer of the foundation' (Isa 58:12). Jeremiah 31:37 and Micah 6:2 invoke the earth's foundations as enduring witnesses. Spanish 'fundamento' and French 'fondement' capture both registers.

foundation (structural base) (11×) The cosmic or geological foundations of the earth and mountains, depicted as the deepest structural layer of creation that God alone established and that trembles at his theophanic presence. The foundations of heaven shake (2 Sam 22:8), the foundations of the world are laid bare (2 Sam 22:16; Ps 18:7, 15), fire consumes down to the foundations (Deut 32:22), and the earth's foundations witness against Israel (Mic 6:2). God's faithfulness is measured by their permanence (Jer 31:37; Isa 40:21). Spanish 'fundamentos de la tierra' preserves the cosmic register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-foundations-of, for-foundations, foundations | es: cimientos-de, cimientos-de-, fundamentos-de | fr: [לְמוֹסְדוֹת], [מוֹסְדוֹת], [מוֹסְדֵי] | de: [לְמוֹסְדוֹת], [מוֹסְדוֹת], [מוֹסְדֵי] Deut 32:22; 2Sam 22:8; 2Sam 22:16; Ps 18:7; Ps 18:15

מוֹסֵר H4147 N-mpc / 2mp (11×)

Bonds, fetters, restraints — physical chains or ropes; metaphorically, any yoke of oppression or covenant obligation

The noun מוֹסֵר (moser) denotes bonds, fetters, or binding restraints. The Psalms celebrate God's power to break bonds: Psalm 2:3 voices the nations' desire to burst God's bonds, while Psalm 107:14 and 116:16 praise deliverance. Isaiah commands Zion to loose bonds from her neck (Isa 52:2) and warns that tightened bonds bring destruction (Isa 28:22). Jeremiah pictures yoke-bonds symbolizing Babylonian vassalage (Jer 27:2; 30:8), and Nahum 1:13 promises God will snap Assyria's bonds. Job 39:5 asks who freed the wild donkey. Spanish 'ataduras' and French 'liens' convey both physical and metaphorical range.

bonds, fetters, restraints (11×) Literal bonds, fetters, or restraining ropes used to confine a person or animal. God brings prisoners out of darkness and breaks their bonds of iron (Ps 107:14). The wild donkey is freed from bonds to roam the wilderness (Job 39:5). Jeremiah is instructed to make yoke-bars and bonds as a prophetic sign-act (Jer 27:2). The physical image of rope or chain underlies all figurative extensions. Spanish 'ataduras' and French 'liens' translate the literal sense directly. CHAINS AND FETTERS en: and-the-bonds-of, and-their-bonds, and-your-bonds | es: ataduras, ataduras-de, las-ataduras | fr: de-chaîne, et-chaîne, et-de-chaîne | de: [וּמוֹסְרוֹתֵיכֶם], [וּמוֹסְרֹתֵיכֶם], [וּמוֹסְרוֹת] Job 39:5; Ps 2:3; Ps 107:14; Ps 116:16; Isa 28:22

מוּסָר H4148 N-ms (50×)

Discipline, correction, instruction; formative moral training and chastening, whether by teaching, reproof, or punishment.

Musar is one of the great organizing concepts of biblical wisdom literature — the word that binds together the gentle instruction of a father and the painful correction of a rod into a single educational vision. It opens the book of Proverbs (1:2, 'to know wisdom and musar') and threads through every chapter as the indispensable companion to chokmah ('wisdom'). What makes musar distinctive is its refusal to separate teaching from discipline: the same word covers a parent's verbal instruction, a prophet's stinging rebuke, and God's corrective affliction. The multilingual evidence reflects this breadth — Arabic splits between ta'lim ('teaching') and ta'dib ('disciplining'), French alternates between discipline and châtiment, and German Zucht captures the old-world fusion of 'upbringing' and 'chastisement' that English has lost. Isaiah 53:5's musar shelomenu — 'the chastisement of our peace' — represents the theological apex, where punishment becomes redemptive healing.

1. moral discipline and instruction (37×) Formative moral discipline and character training — the dominant sense at 37 occurrences, concentrated in Proverbs and Job. This is musar as the total process of moral formation: accepting instruction, internalizing correction, growing in wisdom. 'Hear, my son, your father's musar' (Prov 1:8); 'whoever loves musar loves knowledge' (Prov 12:1); 'do not despise the musar of the Almighty' (Job 5:17). Spanish disciplina, German Zucht, and French discipline all converge here on the educational-formative sense. The word presupposes a relationship of authority — parent to child, sage to student, God to human — and the willingness to be shaped. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: discipline, discipline-of, heeds-discipline-of | es: Disciplina, Disciplina-de, corrección-de | fr: discipline | de: Zucht Job 5:17; Job 36:10; Ps 50:17; Prov 1:2; Prov 1:3

2. correction and chastisement (9×) Corrective punishment and chastisement — 9 occurrences where the punitive, pain-bearing aspect dominates over the didactic. Jeremiah's Israel 'did not receive musar' despite repeated blows (Jer 2:30; 5:3; 7:28), and the Suffering Servant bears 'the musar of our peace' — punishment that brings wholeness (Isa 53:5). French châtiment and Spanish castigo both shift to punishment-specific vocabulary here, while Arabic ta'dib ('disciplining') distinguishes this from ta'lim ('instruction'). The sense is not random suffering but purposeful, corrective affliction aimed at reformation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chastisement-of, chastiser, discipline | es: La-reprensión-de, castigo, castigo-de | fr: châtiment, correction, discipline | de: Zucht Job 20:3; Isa 53:5; Jer 2:30; Jer 5:3; Jer 7:28

3. warning and admonition (2×) Warning and admonition — 2 occurrences where musar is proactive rather than reactive, aimed at preventing wrongdoing before it happens. In Deut 11:2 Moses tells Israel to 'know today the musar of the LORD your God' — his disciplinary acts in history serve as a warning for the future. Ezek 5:15 uses Jerusalem's fate as musar ('a warning') to surrounding nations. Spanish advertencia and German discipline-von both select cautionary vocabulary. The distinction from sense 2 is temporal: this is discipline-as-deterrent rather than discipline-as-response. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: discipline-of, warning | es: advertencia, disciplina-de | fr: châtiment, discipline-de | de: [מוּסָר], discipline-von Deut 11:2; Ezek 5:15

4. didactic instruction (1×) Didactic instruction as content — a single occurrence at Jer 10:8 where the context emphasizes what is taught rather than the disciplinary process: 'the musar of idols is wood' — the 'instruction' that idols offer is nothing but a block of timber. Spanish instrucción and French correction attempt this nuance, but Arabic ta'lim ('teaching, doctrine') captures it most precisely. Here musar is not the act of training but the substance of what is communicated, reduced to absurdity when the 'teacher' is a lifeless idol. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-instruction-of | es: instrucción-de | fr: correction | de: Zucht Jer 10:8

5. bond or restraint (1×) Bond, fetter, or restraint — a single occurrence at Job 12:18 where musar shifts from its usual educational domain to a concrete physical image: God 'loosens the musar of kings,' meaning their bonds, fetters, or regal sash. Spanish el lazo de ('the bond of') recognizes the shift to physical restraint vocabulary. BDB connects this to the root yasar in its binding sense (cf. Jer 5:5 where breaking 'bonds' uses the same semantic field). A striking outlier that preserves an archaic, concrete dimension of the root beneath its overwhelmingly abstract usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bond-of | es: El-lazo-de | fr: discipline | de: Zucht Job 12:18

מוֹסֵרָה H4149a N-proper-fs (1×)

Moserah; wilderness station where Aaron died

A place name in Deuteronomy 10:6, identifying the wilderness station where Aaron died. This conflicts with Numbers 20 and 33, which say Aaron died at Mount Hor. The discrepancy may reflect variant traditions or confusion between Moserah and Moseroth (plural form, another station name). The site is unidentified. The name possibly relates to 'discipline' or 'bonds,' though the etymology is uncertain.

(1×) Deuteronomy 10:6 locates Aaron's death at Moserah, creating a textual puzzle with Numbers' Mount Hor. Either the names refer to the same place, or there's a conflation of sources. The prepositional 'to Moserah' (Spanish 'a Mosera') marks it as a destination in the wilderness itinerary. The name's derivation is debated, but its function is clear: a geographic marker for a significant death. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Moserah | es: a-Mosera | fr: à-Moserah | de: zu-Moserah Deut 10:6

מֹסֵרוֹת H4149b Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Moseroth (proper noun); a wilderness encampment of Israel during the Exodus

Moseroth (also called Moserah) was an Israelite encampment in the wilderness journey, mentioned in Numbers 33:30-31 as a stopping point between Hashmonah and Bene-jaakan. Deuteronomy 10:6 identifies it as the place where Aaron died and was buried, though Numbers 20:22-29 and 33:38 locate Aaron's death at Mount Hor. This apparent discrepancy has prompted various harmonization attempts. The name likely means 'bonds' or 'corrections,' and the site's exact location remains unknown.

(2×) The name of a wilderness station during Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan, appearing in the itinerary of Numbers 33. All language traditions transliterate the name (Moseroth, Moserot, etc.). The dual tradition about Aaron's burial (here vs. Mount Hor) suggests either two names for one site or a textual complication in preserving the wilderness itinerary. The name appears with prepositions indicating arrival and departure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Moseroth, in-Moseroth | es: de-Moserot, en-Moserot | fr: dans-Moseroth, de-Moseroth | de: in-Moseroth, von-Moseroth Num 33:30; Num 33:31

מוֹעֵד H4150 Prep-l / N-mp (223×)

An appointed time, place, or assembly; most often in 'tent of meeting' (ohel moed), also for sacred festivals and set times.

Few Hebrew words carry as much institutional weight as moed. It is the word behind the 'tent of meeting' where God's presence dwelt among Israel, and it names every appointed festival on the liturgical calendar. The Arabic cognate mawid (appointment) and the related mawsim (season/festival) together span the word's range. From Genesis 1:14, where luminaries mark the moadim, to the detailed festival calendar of Leviticus 23, moed anchors Israel's worship in divinely set rhythms of time and sacred space. Even in its rarest uses, the word always carries the sense that this gathering, this moment, this place was decreed rather than accidental.

1. meeting (tent of meeting) (151×) The designated place of meeting with God, appearing overwhelmingly in the formula ohel moed ('tent of meeting'). This accounts for roughly two-thirds of all occurrences and saturates Exodus through Numbers. The Arabic al-ijtimai ('the gathering') and Swahili mkutano ('meeting') preserve the communal dimension: this is not private audience but congregational encounter. The tent of meeting was the nexus of divine-human communion in the wilderness period (Exod 27:21; 29:4). TENT OF MEETING

en: meeting | es: reunión | fr: rencontre | de: Begegnung Exod 27:21; Exod 28:43; Exod 29:4; Exod 29:10; Exod 29:11

2. appointed feast or festival (34×) The appointed religious festivals and sacred seasons, as in Leviticus 23:2 where God declares 'these are my appointed feasts.' The Arabic mawsim ('season/festival'), Korean jeolgi, and Swahili sikukuu ('holiday') all confirm the calendrical, celebratory sense. These moadim structure Israel's worship year: Passover, Weeks, Tabernacles, and the solemn assemblies. Zechariah 8:19 envisions a day when fasts themselves become joyful moadim. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-your-appointed-feasts, and-for-appointed-times, and-for-the-appointed-feasts | es: Las-fiestas-señaladas-de, en-fiestas-de-vosotros, en-vuestras-fiestas | fr: assemblée, dans-ton-établit-fois, de-et-jusqu'à | de: Festversammlung, Festzeiten, [ומועדיכם] Gen 1:14; Lev 23:2; Lev 23:4; Lev 23:37

3. appointed time (33×) A designated or fixed point in time, without specific reference to festivals or the tabernacle. God promises Abraham a son 'at the appointed time' (Gen 18:14), and Samuel tells Saul to wait until 'the appointed time' (1 Sam 13:8). The Arabic miad/mawid ('appointment/date') and Korean jeonghan ttae ('set time') capture this precisely. The emphasis falls on divine or authoritative scheduling: something will happen because it was decreed for this moment. TIME AND SEASONS

en: appointed-time, at-appointed-time, at-appointed-time-of | es: Al-tiempo-señalado, Para-esta-época, al-tiempo-señalado | fr: assemblée, dans-son-établit-temps, de-assemblée | de: bei-bestellte-Zeit-von, bei-der-bestellte-Zeit, bei-sein-setzte-ein-Zeit Gen 17:21; Gen 18:14; Gen 21:2; Exod 9:5; Exod 13:10

4. meeting place (4×) A designated location for assembly or encounter apart from the tent-of-meeting formula. In Joshua 8:14, the men of Ai come out 'to the appointed place,' and in Psalm 74:4,8 the enemy destroys God's 'meeting places.' The Arabic mahfal ('assembly hall') and Korean moim teo ('gathering spot') fit well. These few occurrences show moed can denote any sacred or significant gathering point, not exclusively the tabernacle. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-appointed-place, Your-meeting-place, at-the-appointed-place | es: al-lugar-señalado, lugares-de-reunión-de, su-lugar-de-reunión | fr: assemblée, de-assemblée, à-le-désigna-lieu | de: Festversammlung, bei-der-setzte-ein-Ort, dein-Versammlung Josh 8:14; Ps 74:4; Ps 74:8; Lam 2:6

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Judges 20:38 where moed denotes an 'appointed signal' — a prearranged sign between the Israelite ambush forces and the main army. The German 'der gesetzte Signal' and Spanish 'la senal' confirm the reading. This extends the 'appointed' semantic core from time and place to a prearranged communication, showing the word's flexibility within its root meaning of divine or human appointment. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: and-the-appointed-signal | es: Y-la-señal | fr: et-le-désigna-signal | de: und-der-setzte-ein-signal Judg 20:38

מוֹעָד H4151 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

ranks, military formations; appointed positions in battle array

A military term appearing in Isaiah 14:31 in the phrase 'in his ranks' or 'at his appointed times.' The context is Philistia terrified by an invading army from the north. If 'ranks,' it means the disciplined formation of the attacking force; if 'appointed times,' it refers to the timing of the assault. BDB favors 'ranks,' seeing military organization. Either way, it describes inexorable martial advance.

(1×) Isaiah 14:31 warns Philistia: 'from the north comes smoke, and none straggling in his ranks.' The term captures military cohesion—every soldier in formation, no deserters. Spanish 'filas' (ranks) and the domain (Military Activities) support the martial interpretation. This is an army moving with terrifying discipline, each unit in its appointed place, no gaps in the line. Precision itself becomes threatening. AMBUSH MILITARY en: in-its-ranks | es: en-sus-filas | fr: [במועדיו] | de: [במועדיו] Isa 14:31

מוּעָדָה H4152 Art / N-fs (1×)

appointed (for refuge); designated cities of asylum

A passive participle appearing in Joshua 20:9, identifying the 'cities appointed' as refuges for accidental killers. These were formally designated sanctuaries where someone who committed involuntary manslaughter could flee for protection from the avenger of blood. The appointment is official and public, making the cities legally binding safe zones. The term emphasizes divine and communal designation, not happenstance.

(1×) Joshua 20:9 lists the 'appointed cities' of refuge—formally designated by God through Moses and Joshua. The passive 'appointed' (Spanish 'designadas') indicates divine authority behind the designation. These aren't informal sanctuaries; they're legally established institutions. The domain (Control, Rule) reflects the administrative act of appointment that creates these legal safe havens within Israel's justice system. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING en: the-appointed | es: designadas | fr: le-désigna | de: der-setzte-ein Josh 20:9

מַעַדְיָה H4153 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Moadyah; a priest in Zerubbabel's time

A priestly name in Nehemiah 12:17, apparently identical to Maadiah (v5), showing textual or pronunciation variation. The LXX renderings differ, suggesting scribal uncertainty. The name may mean 'assembly of YHWH' or 'appointed feast of YHWH,' though BDB notes the etymology is doubtful. Like many postexilic priestly names, Moadyah appears in genealogical lists without narrative elaboration.

(1×) Nehemiah 12:17's priestly roster includes Moadyah (variant of Maadiah), tracing the priestly line from Zerubbabel's return. The prepositional 'to/of Moadyah' marks him as head of a priestly family course. The name's consistent transliteration across languages shows it's treated as a proper name without attempting to extract theological meaning from its roots. He's a functionary in the reconstituted temple service. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Moadyah | es: de-Moadías | fr: [לְמוֹעַדְיָה] | de: [לְמוֹעַדְיָה] Neh 12:17

מָעַד H4154 V-QalPass-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

slipping, unsteady (foot); unstable, tottering

A passive participle in Proverbs 25:19, describing 'a slipping foot'—a metaphor for an unreliable person. The proverb says trusting the faithless in trouble is like relying on a bad tooth or a slipping foot: painful and useless. The image captures instability and the danger of depending on something that won't hold. Some read the form as an active participle (wobbling), but the sense is the same: unreliability.

(1×) Proverbs 25:19 piles up images of failed support: rotten tooth, slipping foot, faithless person. The 'slipping foot' (Spanish 'que resbala') can't bear weight; it gives way at the critical moment. The domain (Non-Linear Movement) captures the instability—not moving forward reliably, but wavering, sliding. This is wisdom literature using physical unreliability to picture moral untrustworthiness. SHAKING AND TOTTERING gloom, deep darkness; oppressive murk

en: slipping | es: que-resbala | fr: מוּעָדֶת | de: [מוּעָדֶת] Prov 25:19

מוּעָף H4155 Adj-ms (1×)

A hapax in Isaiah 9:1 (MT 8:23), describing the land's condition before messianic light dawns: affliction and gloom. The term conveys thick, oppressive darkness—not just absence of light but a weight of despair. This is psychological as much as physical darkness, the gloom of a defeated, occupied people. The prophecy's power comes from the contrast: deep gloom followed by great light.

(1×) Isaiah 9:1 sets up the messianic oracle with vocabulary of darkness and distress: 'gloom' (Spanish 'oscuridad') captures the predawn despair. The rare word emphasizes how deep the darkness is—not twilight but thick murk. The domain (Physical Events and States) may seem to naturalize what is really political and spiritual oppression, but the prophet uses meteorological language for national mood: gloom as both weather and spirit. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: gloom | es: oscuridad | fr: [מוּעָף] | de: [מוּעָף] Isa 9:1

מוּעֲצָה H4156 Prep-b / N-fp (7×)

Counsels, plans, or deliberations, often with a negative connotation of self-willed scheming against God

A feminine plural noun denoting counsels, plans, or deliberations. It carries a predominantly negative sense in prophetic and wisdom literature, referring to the stubborn schemes of those who reject God's way. Jeremiah pairs it with 'the stubbornness of their evil heart' (Jer 7:24), and Hosea warns that Israel's own counsels will consume them (Hos 11:6). Yet Proverbs 22:20 uses it positively for sound counsel alongside knowledge. The word thus spans the full moral range from wise counsel to rebellious scheming, with context determining the valence.

counsels, plans, deliberations (7×) Counsels, plans, or deliberations, predominantly in contexts of human scheming against God's will. In Ps 5:10 and 81:12 the psalmist asks God to judge or release people to their own counsels; Prov 1:31 warns the foolish will eat the fruit of their own devices; Jer 7:24 pairs the word with stubborn-hearted rebellion; Mic 6:16 indicts Israel for following wicked statutes. Only Prov 22:20 uses the term positively, for wise counsels paired with knowledge. Spanish 'consejos' and French 'dessein/conseil' both capture the deliberative nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-their-own-counsels, because-of-their-counsels, from-their-counsels | es: de-sus-consejos, en-consejos, en-consejos-de-ellos | fr: [בְּמֹעֲצוֹת], conseil, dans-dessein | de: [בְּמוֹעֲצֹת], [בְּמֹעֲצוֹת], [בְּמֹעֲצוֹתָם] Ps 5:10; Ps 81:12; Prov 1:31; Prov 22:20; Jer 7:24

מוּעָקָה H4157 N-fs (1×)

compression, distress; crushing pressure (Aramaic loanword)

An Aramaic loanword appearing in Psalm 66:11, parallel to 'net' and 'burden,' describing affliction. The term suggests squeezing or compression, pressure that constrains. The psalmist recalls how God brought Israel 'into the net,' put 'compression on our loins'—testing through tight circumstances. Some versions emend the text (LXX, Vulgate read 'tribulations'), but the MT's rare Aramaic word intensifies the sense of being squeezed.

(1×) Psalm 66:11 describes testing through constriction: 'You put compression on our loins' (or hips/waist)—an image of being bound tight, freedom of movement crushed. The Spanish 'opresión' and domain (Linear Movement—restricted) capture the sense of pressure limiting motion. This Aramaic term (if authentic) adds exotic color to the psalm's recollection of national trial, linguistic foreignness matching the experience of constraint. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: affliction | es: opresión | fr: de-étouffement | de: affliction Ps 66:11

מֵיפַעַת H4158 N-proper-fs (5×)

Mephaath — a Levitical city in the territory of Reuben, later in Moabite hands

Mephaath was a Levitical city assigned to the Merarite clan within the tribal allotment of Reuben (Josh 13:18; 21:37; 1 Chr 6:79). By the time of Jeremiah, the city had come under Moabite control and appears in the oracle against Moab (Jer 48:21). The Sabaean cognate place-name suggests ancient roots. Spelling variants in the Hebrew text (מֵפָעַת, מֵיפָעַת, מוֹפָעַת) and diverse transliterations across versions (eng Mephaath, spa Mefaat) reflect its textual history.

(5×) A Levitical city in Reubenite territory, later situated in Moab. Joshua 13:18 lists it among Reuben's cities, Joshua 21:37 and 1 Chronicles 6:79 identify it as a Levitical assignment, and Jeremiah 48:21 includes it among Moabite cities facing judgment. The orthographic variation across the Hebrew manuscripts (reflected in kethiv/qere differences visible in the French and German glosses) attests to the name's complex textual transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Mephaath), Mefaat, Mephaath | es: Mefaat, [kethiv], y-Mefaat | fr: Mephaath, [(מֵיפָעַת)], [[מוֹפָעַת]] | de: Mephaath, [(מֵיפָעַת)], [[מוֹפָעַת]] Josh 13:18; Josh 21:37; 1Chr 6:79; Jer 48:21

מוֹפֵת H4159 N-mpc / 3ms (36×)

A wonder, sign, or portent demonstrating divine power or serving as a prophetic symbol

Nearly always appearing alongside its twin 'ot (sign), this noun denotes displays of supernatural power – above all the plagues of Egypt and the exodus miracles. When Moses performed 'signs and wonders' before Pharaoh (Exod 7:3; 11:9-10), the word carried the force of something awe-inspiring that compels recognition of God's sovereignty. A secondary use designates persons or events as living symbols: Isaiah walking barefoot becomes a 'sign and portent' against Egypt (Isa 20:3), and Ezekiel is told 'I am your portent' (Ezek 12:6, 11). Spanish 'prodigios' and French 'prodiges' maintain the wonder-register, while German 'Wunder' covers the semantic center cleanly.

1. wonder, miracle (21×) The primary sense: a wonder or miracle, a supernatural act demonstrating divine power. Nearly always paired with 'signs' (otot) in formulaic recollections of the exodus: 'signs and wonders' (Deut 4:34; 6:22; 7:19; 26:8; 34:11; Ps 78:43; 105:27). The plagues before Pharaoh (Exod 7:3; 11:9-10), Joel's cosmic portents (Joel 2:30), and the Psalmist's retrospective praise all belong here. Spanish 'prodigios' and French 'prodiges' preserve the awe-filled register distinct from ordinary 'signs.' WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: a-wonder, and-by-wonders, and-his-wonders | es: las-señales, los-prodigios, mis-prodigios | fr: [ובמופתים], [ומפתים], et-avec-prodiges | de: Wunder, [ובמופתים], [ומפתים] Exod 4:21; Exod 7:3; Exod 7:9; Exod 11:9; Exod 11:10

2. sign, symbolic token (12×) A sign or symbolic token that authenticates a prophetic message or points to divine reality. The man of God gives a 'sign' that the altar will split (1 Kgs 13:3, 5), Hezekiah receives a confirmatory sign (2 Chr 32:24), and prophetic figures serve as living symbols – Ezekiel is told 'I am your portent' (Ezek 12:6, 11). French and German bracket forms reflect the word's frequent appearance in construct chains. The emphasis falls on attestation and communication rather than raw supernatural power. SIGNS AND BANNERS
en: His-signs, a-sign, according-to-the-sign | es: como-la-señal, la-señal, por-señal | fr: [המופת], [ומופת], [למופת] | de: [המופת], [ומופת], [למופת] 1Kgs 13:3; 1Kgs 13:5; 1Chr 16:12; 2Chr 32:24

3. portent, warning omen (3×) A portent or warning omen directed toward the future, where a person or event foreshadows divine judgment. Deuteronomy 28:46 warns that covenant curses will be 'for a sign and a portent upon your descendants forever.' Psalm 71:7 records 'I have been as a portent to many,' and Isaiah 20:3 designates Isaiah's symbolic action as a 'portent' against Egypt and Cush. Spanish 'presagio' (omen) and French 'prodige' in these contexts tilt toward foreboding rather than wonder, marking the shift from past miracle to future warning. WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: and-for-wonder, and-wonder, as-a-wonder | es: Como-señal, y-por-prodigio, y-presagio | fr: [ומופת], comme-prodige, et-pour-prodige | de: [ומופת], und-fuer-Wunder, wie-ein-Wunder Deut 28:46; Ps 71:7; Isa 20:3

מֵץ H4160 Art / N-ms (1×)

extortioner, oppressor; one who squeezes resources from others

A noun appearing in Isaiah 16:4, describing an oppressor or extortioner. The root suggests squeezing or pressing, extracting resources by force. Isaiah promises Moab that 'the extortioner has ceased,' offering hope of relief from violent exploitation. The term captures economic or political violence—someone who wrings out what others have. The definite article ('the extortioner') may indicate a specific tyrant or a class of oppressors.

(1×) Isaiah 16:4 promises Moabite refugees that oppression will end: 'the extortioner has ceased.' The 'squeezer' (from a root meaning compress or press) wrings wealth or compliance from the vulnerable. Spanish 'opresor' (oppressor) generalizes the violence; the Hebrew focuses on extraction—pressing resources out like juice from grapes. This is economic brutality personified, now promised to end. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY en: the-extortioner | es: el-opresor | fr: [המץ] | de: [המץ] Isa 16:4

מוֹצָא H4161 Conj-w (28×)

Going forth, source, exit; a spring of water, boundary endpoint, utterance, or place of origin

A noun derived from the root yatsa' ('to go out'), encompassing everything that issues forth from a source. It designates literal springs and water sources (2 Kgs 2:21), the terminal points of tribal boundaries (Num 33:2), words that proceed from the mouth (Deut 8:3), and the act of going forth itself — including the messianic 'goings forth' of Micah 5:2. Hosea 6:3 compares God's appearing to the dawn 'going forth,' while the sun's rising is its motsa' in Ps 19:6. The word's versatility mirrors the richness of its parent verb, applying the concept of emergence to geography, speech, time, and even sanitation.

1. spring or source of water (8×) A spring, fountain, or source of water — the place where water 'goes forth' from the ground. Ps 107:33-35 contrasts turning springs into desert and desert into springs. Spanish 'manantial' and 'salida de' both capture the issuing-forth of water. Job 28:1 extends the image to a mine, the place from which silver 'comes forth,' broadening source to include mineral origin. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-like-a-spring-of, and-source-of, and-springs-of | es: Y-la-salida-de, Y-salida-de, el-manantial-de | fr: [וכמוצא], [ומוצא], [למוצאי] | de: [וכמוצא], [ומוצא], [למוצאי] 1Kgs 10:28; 2Kgs 2:21; 2Chr 1:16; Job 28:1; Ps 107:33

2. exit or boundary endpoint (7×) The exit point or terminus of a geographic boundary, used in territorial descriptions. Num 33:2 twice records Israel's 'starting points' and stages; Ezek 42:11 describes the exits of temple chambers. Spanish 'salidas de' and French 'de sortie' consistently render the spatial endpoint sense. This cartographic usage is concentrated in Numbers, Joshua, and Ezekiel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-exits, by-their-starting-points, exits-of | es: por-sus-salidas, salida-de, salidas-de | fr: [מוצא], de-sortie, et-sortie | de: [ומוצאיו], [מוצא], [מוצאי] Num 33:2; 2Chr 32:30; Ps 65:8; Ezek 42:11

3. utterance from the mouth (5×) That which goes out of the mouth: a spoken word, vow, or divine utterance. Deut 8:3 declares that man lives by every motsa' of God's mouth — a verse Jesus later quotes in his wilderness temptation. Num 30:12 applies it to the binding force of a vow. Spanish 'lo que sale de' ('that which comes from') preserves the concrete image of speech as something physically emerging. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-what-goes-out-of, going-forth-of, utterance-of | es: Lo-que-salga-de, lo-que-sale-de, salida-de | fr: [מוצא], allant-forth-de, et-de-sortie | de: [מוצא], gehend-forth-von, und-Krieg-geht-heraus-von Num 30:12; Deut 8:3; Deut 23:23; Ps 89:34; Jer 17:16

4. going forth or departure (5×) The act of going forth or emerging, whether of persons, the sun, or prophetic decree. Ps 19:6 describes the sun's 'going forth' from one end of heaven. Dan 9:25 marks history from the 'going forth' of a decree to rebuild Jerusalem. Hos 6:3 likens God's advent to the dawn's emergence. Spanish 'salida' serves for both sunrise and personal departure, mirroring the Hebrew breadth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-going-out, as-going-out-of, going-forth-of | es: como-salidas-de, salida-tuya, salir-de | fr: de-sortie, sortie, ton-allant-dehors | de: [כמוצא], [מוצאי], [מצא] 2Sam 3:25; Ps 19:6; Ezek 12:4; Dan 9:25; Hos 6:3

5. (1×) The east as the place of the sun's 'going forth.' Ps 75:6 states that exaltation comes neither from east (motsa') nor west. Spanish 'de oriente' makes the directional sense explicit. This specialized geographic use derives naturally from sense 4 (sunrise as going forth) but is lexicalized as a compass direction. EAST AND SUNRISE
en: from-the-east | es: de-oriente | fr: de-sortie | de: von-der-east Ps 75:6

6. (1×) Vegetation or growth that 'comes forth' from the earth. Job 38:27 asks who causes the 'growth' of tender grass to spring up. Spanish 'brote de' ('sprout of') and French 'sortie' reflect emergence from soil. This botanical extension of 'going forth' is a hapax usage within the lemma's distribution, applying the root metaphor to germination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-growth-of | es: brote-de | fr: sortie | de: fand Job 38:27

7. (1×) A latrine or privy — the place one 'goes out to' for bodily relief. 2 Kgs 10:27 records that Jehu's men demolished the temple of Baal and made it a motsa'oth (latrine). Arabic 'marahid' and Spanish 'letrinas' confirm the euphemistic concreteness. This coarse but vivid usage exploits the root's sense of 'going out' in its most physical application. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: a-latrine | es: para-letrinas | fr: un-latrine 2Kgs 10:27

מוֹצָא H4162 N-proper-ms (5×)

Motsa — a personal name borne by a descendant of Caleb and a descendant of Saul in the Benjaminite line

Motsa is the name of two distinct individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies. The first is a son of Caleb by his concubine Ephah (1 Chr 2:46). The second belongs to the Saulide genealogy in the tribe of Benjamin, appearing in both the parallel lists of 1 Chronicles 8:36-37 and 9:42-43. The LXX renders these variously as Mousas and Massas. Spanish and English transliterations (Motsa) are stable, while French and German retain the Hebrew script forms.

(5×) A proper name for two individuals in Chronicles. In 1 Chronicles 2:46 Motsa is a Calebite through the concubine Ephah. In 1 Chronicles 8:36-37 and its parallel 9:42-43, Motsa is a Benjaminite descendant of Saul through Meribbaal. The LXX variants (Ioosa, Maisa, Massa, Mosa) suggest early confusion or dialectal variation. The consistent English and Spanish rendering Motsa contrasts with French and German versions that retain untransliterated Hebrew forms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Motsa, and-Motsa | es: Motsa, Y-Motsa | fr: [ומוצא], [מוצא] | de: [ומוצא], [מוצא] 1Chr 2:46; 1Chr 8:36; 1Chr 8:37; 1Chr 9:42; 1Chr 9:43

מוֹצָאָה H4163 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

goings out, origins; places of going forth (ancestry or exits)

A plural noun in Micah 5:2 (MT 5:1), saying of the Davidic ruler 'his goings out are from of old.' This either means his origins (ancestry) are ancient, or his activities/appearances extend into the distant past. The phrase locates the future ruler in primordial history, giving messianic rule eternal roots. The plural suggests repeated or continuous 'goings forth'—a life that spans ages.

(1×) Micah 5:2's famous messianic verse says Bethlehem's ruler has 'goings out from of old, from ancient days.' Does this mean his genealogy is old, or his existence/activity predates history? The Spanish 'orígenes' (origins) opts for ancestry, while 'goings out' could mean divine activities. The domain (Linear Movement) takes the term literally—exits, departures—but Micah uses it to suggest eternal preexistence or ancient lineage. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-His-goings-out | es: y-sus-orígenes | fr: et-sortie | de: [ומוצאתיו] Mic 5:2

מוּצָק H4164 Prep-b / N-ms (3×)

constraint, distress, constriction

A noun denoting constraint, distress, or constriction—the opposite of spaciousness and freedom. Job uses it to contrast with 'broad place without constraint' (36:16) and to describe waters frozen into constraint (37:10). Isaiah employs it to describe the former distress of the lands of Zebulun and Naphtali (9:1), which will later see great light. The term captures the feeling of being hemmed in, restricted, or under pressure.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence points to constriction and distress: Spanish 'estrechez, angustia' (narrowness, anguish), English 'distress, constrained.' Job 36:16 promises deliverance from distress to a broad place of freedom. Job 37:10 uses it for the constraint of freezing, when water becomes solid ice. Isaiah 9:1 recalls the historical distress inflicted on northern territories by Assyrian invasion, preparing for the promise of messianic light that will dispel this darkness. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: constrained, distress, in-freezing | es: en-fundición, estrechez, tuvo-angustia | fr: [מוצק], dans-מוצק ,במוצק | de: [במוצק], [מוצק] Job 36:16; Job 37:10; Isa 9:1

מוּצָק H4165 Prep-l (3×)

casting, molten work; compacted mass

A noun denoting metal casting or molten work, and by extension something compacted into a solid mass. In 1 Kings it describes Solomon's bronze work for the temple—the molten sea and the ten bronze stands were each 'one casting,' made from a single pour of metal (7:23, 37). Job uses it metaphorically for clods of dust compacted together (38:38). The term emphasizes unified, solid construction achieved through casting or compression.

(3×) Translations identify casting and molding: Spanish 'fundido' (cast), French 'jeta' (cast). First Kings 7:23, 37 describe the impressive bronze work for Solomon's temple, where the massive sea and the stands were each cast as single unified pieces—a remarkable metallurgical achievement. Job 38:38 uses the imagery of dust compacted into hard clods, perhaps comparing earth's solidity to cast metal. Each context emphasizes unity and solidity. METAL CASTING

en: cast, into-a-mass | es: en-fundición, fundido | fr: jeta, למוצק | de: [למוצק], warf 1Kgs 7:23; 1Kgs 7:37; Job 38:38

מוּצֶקֶת H4166 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

pipe, casting (noun); either a channel for pouring oil or a cast metal mold

This noun has two distinct but related meanings, both connected to metalworking and pouring. In Zechariah 4:2, it denotes pipes or channels through which oil flows to the lampstand's lamps. In 2 Chronicles 4:3, it refers to a casting mold or the process of casting the ornamental bulls under Solomon's bronze sea. Both senses derive from the root meaning 'to pour' or 'cast.' The word captures the technology of channeling liquids or shaping molten metal through controlled pouring.

(2×) Refers either to pipes/channels for conveying oil (Zech 4:2) or to the casting/molding process for metal objects (2 Chr 4:3). Spanish distinguishes 'tubos' (pipes/tubes) from 'fundición' (casting), tracking the dual application—conduits for liquid flow versus molds for metal forming. Both meanings share the concept of directing flow, whether oil through channels or molten bronze into forms, reflecting ancient Near Eastern metallurgical and architectural technology. METAL CASTING

en: in-its-casting, pipes | es: en-su-fundición, tubos | fr: [במצקתו], fonte | de: [במצקתו], [מוצקות] 2Chr 4:3; Zech 4:2

מוּק H4167 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (1×)

mock, deride; speak with contempt

An Aramaic-influenced verb appearing in Psalm 73:8, describing how the wicked 'mock' or 'deride,' speaking wickedly of oppression. The term is parallel to 'speak evil,' capturing scornful, contemptuous speech. The root is attested in Aramaic and Syriac for mocking or deriding. The psalmist describes the arrogance of the wicked: they sit in heaven's seat and mock those below, speaking from a position of assumed superiority.

(1×) Psalm 73:8 describes the speech of the wicked: 'they mock and speak evil of oppression.' The verb (Spanish 'se burlan,' French 'se moquer,' German 'verspotten'—all 'mock') captures contemptuous speech that belittles. The domain (Communication) identifies this as verbal behavior—speech acts that demean. The Aramaic background suggests a late or northern dialect term for derision, imported into Hebrew psalmody. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: they-mock | es: Se-burlan | fr: se-moquer | de: sie-verspotten Ps 73:8

מוֹקֵד H4168 N-mpc (2×)

burning mass, fire (noun); intensely burning fuel or eternal burning

This noun describes an intensely burning mass or fire. Psalm 102:3 uses it in simile—'my bones are scorched through like a burning mass'—depicting severe physical suffering. Isaiah 33:14 employs the plural in a rhetorical question about dwelling with 'everlasting burnings' (parallel to 'devouring fire'), describing God's purifying judgment. The term emphasizes sustained, intense heat rather than momentary flame—a glowing, smoldering mass of coals or constantly burning fire.

(2×) Denotes a burning mass or intense conflagration, either literal (Ps 102:3—bones burning like heated coals) or metaphorical (Isa 33:14—everlasting fires of divine judgment). Spanish uses 'hogar' (hearth/home fire) and 'hogueras' (bonfires), German 'burning-brand' (firebrand), French 'brasier' (brazier). The imagery suggests sustained burning heat—glowing embers or perpetual flames—rather than quick-burning fire, fitting contexts of both prolonged suffering and eternal judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-burning-brand, with-everlasting | es: hogar, hogueras-de | fr: [מוקד], brasier | de: [מוקד], ein-burning-brand Ps 102:3; Isa 33:14

מוֹקְדָה H4169 N-fs (1×)

hearth, altar-hearth; surface where burnt offering is consumed

A technical priestly term in Leviticus 6:9 (MT 6:2), referring to the hearth or top surface of the altar where the burnt offering burns all night. The term identifies the specific plate or grating on which the fire consumes the sacrifice. This is liturgical vocabulary defining the altar's functional parts. The 'hearth' is where divine consumption happens—the place of meeting between offering and holy fire.

(1×) Leviticus 6:9 specifies that the burnt offering stays 'on the hearth on the altar' all night while the fire burns. The hearth is the working surface of sacrifice—where flesh becomes smoke. The possessive 'its hearth' (Spanish 'hogar suyo') identifies it as belonging to the altar. This is P-source technical terminology, naming the architecture of atonement with precision. Fire, hearth, and altar form the machinery of cultic exchange. BURNING AND FIRE

en: its-hearth | es: hogar-suyo | fr: son-hearth | de: sein-hearth Lev 6:9

מוֹקֵשׁ H4170 Conj-w / N-mpc (27×)

snare, trap — a fowler's lure used literally and figuratively for anything that ensnares into ruin or sin

Moqesh originally denotes the bait or trigger in a bird-catcher's trap (Amos 3:5), but its 27 occurrences are overwhelmingly figurative, making it one of the Old Testament's richest metaphors for spiritual entrapment. Its most consequential use is the repeated warning that Canaanite religion will become a moqesh to Israel (Exod 23:33; 34:12; Deut 7:16; Josh 23:13; Judg 2:3; 8:27). In wisdom literature, a fool's lips are his snare (Prov 18:7), a rash vow ensnares (Prov 20:25), and fear of man brings a snare (Prov 29:25). The Psalms deploy the image for enemy plots: 'the snares of death confronted me' (Ps 18:5; 2 Sam 22:6), and the wicked 'set snares' along the righteous path (Ps 140:5; 141:9). Pharaoh's own servants recognized Moses as a moqesh to Egypt (Exod 10:7). Spanish 'trampa,' French 'piege,' German 'Fallstrick' all capture the figurative range.

snare, trap (27×) A bait-lure or trigger device in a hunter's trap, used literally of fowling (Amos 3:5) but overwhelmingly figurative for anything enticing into ruin. Applied to Canaanite idolatry as Israel's perennial snare (Exod 23:33; 34:12; Deut 7:16; Josh 23:13; Judg 8:27), to enemy plots against the righteous (Ps 18:5; 140:5; 141:9), and to human folly — rash speech (Prov 18:7), hasty vows (Prov 20:25), fear of man (Prov 29:25). Moses himself was a 'snare' to Egypt (Exod 10:7). Job 40:24 uses it uniquely of a literal nose-ring for the hippopotamus. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: a-snare, as-a-snare, from-snares-of | es: Trampa, de-trampas-de, de-trampas-de- | fr: comme-un-piège, comme-un-snare, de-piège | de: Fallen, Fallstrick, [ממקשׁ] Exod 10:7; Exod 23:33; Exod 34:12; Deut 7:16; Josh 23:13

מוּר H4171 V-Hifil-InfAbs (15×)

To exchange, substitute, or replace; in Nifal, to be changed — swapping one thing for another, often with grave consequences.

At its core this verb means to exchange or substitute one thing for another, and nearly every occurrence carries a note of warning or loss. Israel exchanged their Glory for worthless idols (Psalm 106:20; Jeremiah 2:11), a charge so shocking that God asks whether any nation has ever done such a thing. In Leviticus 27 the Hifil governs sacrificial law: an animal dedicated to the Lord must not be substituted — 'he shall not exchange it' (לֹא יָמִיר יָמִירֶנּוּ). Spanish 'cambiar' and French 'changer' both render the active exchange, while the single Nifal in Jeremiah 48:11 describes Moab's undisturbed character that 'has not been changed,' like wine left long on its sediment.

1. exchange or substitute (14×) To exchange, substitute, or replace one thing for another (Hifil). Leviticus 27:10 and 27:33 legislate against substituting a sacrificial animal — Spanish 'cambia' and English 'exchanges' reflect the deliberate act of swapping. Psalm 106:20 delivers a devastating indictment: 'they exchanged their Glory for the image of a grass-eating ox.' Hosea 4:7 warns that God will exchange their glory for shame. The sense always implies a transaction, whether cultic, covenantal, or moral. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: Has-exchanged, He-exchanges, I-will-exchange | es: Y-cambiaron, cambia, cambiaré | fr: [ההימיר], [המיר], changer | de: [אמיר], [ההימיר], [המיר] Lev 27:10; Lev 27:33

2. be changed (1×) To be changed or altered (Nifal passive). Jeremiah 48:11 compares Moab to wine undisturbed on its lees: 'his taste has not been changed' (לֹא נָמַר). Spanish 'ha cambiado' preserves the passive voice. This sole Nifal occurrence shifts from the active will of an exchanger to the state of remaining unaltered — Moab has never gone into exile, so its character is unchanged. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: has-changed | es: ha-cambiado | fr: [נמר] | de: [נמר] Jer 48:11

מוֹרָא H4172a N-msc / 1cs (11×)

Fear, dread, terror; awe-inspiring deeds or spectacles; the One who is to be feared (divine epithet)

A noun expressing the full spectrum of fear as it radiates outward from God. In its most common sense, it denotes the dread that falls upon creatures—the 'fear and terror' placed on all animals after the Flood (Gen 9:2), or the dread that precedes Israel in conquest (Deut 11:25). When modified by 'great,' it shifts to the terrifying deeds themselves—the awesome signs of the Exodus (Deut 4:34, 26:8). In Psalm 76:11, it becomes a divine title: God is 'the One to be feared,' an epithet where the abstract emotion crystallizes into a name for God Himself. Malachi probes the relational heart of this word: 'If I am a master, where is My mora?' (Mal 1:6).

1. fear, dread, terror (9×) Abstract fear, dread, or terror experienced by or imposed upon others. Used of the fear animals have of humans (Gen 9:2), the dread that falls before Israel's advance (Deut 11:25), and the great terror of the Exodus (Deut 26:8, 34:12). Isaiah 8:12 warns against fearing what the people fear. Spanish 'el temor' and French renderings consistently treat this as the raw emotion of dread, paired with synonyms like pachad and chat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-fear, and-fear-of-you, and-with-terror | es: Y-vuestro-temor, el-temor, sea-vuestro-temor | fr: [ובמוראו], [מוראו], [מוראכם] | de: [ובמורא], [מורא], [מוראו] Gen 9:2; Deut 11:25; Deut 26:8; Deut 34:12; Isa 8:12

2. terrors, fearsome events (1×) Terrifying deeds or awe-inspiring spectacles, a concrete plural use. Deuteronomy 4:34 asks whether any god attempted to take a nation 'with terrors great'—the mighty acts of plagues and Red Sea crossing. German 'Schrecken' (terrors) and Spanish 'terrores' both render these as specific fearsome events rather than the abstract emotion, marking a shift from feeling to manifestation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-by-terrors | es: y-con-terrores | fr: et-par-terrors | de: und-durch-Schrecken Deut 4:34

3. object of awe, the Feared One (1×) The Feared One, a substantivized divine epithet designating God as the proper object of awe. Psalm 76:11 calls worshippers to bring gifts 'to the One to be feared.' Spanish 'al Temible' ('to the Fearsome One') captures the personal, titular quality. This sense moves beyond emotion into theology—fear becomes a name, identifying God by the response He rightly commands. TERROR AND AWE

en: to-the-One-to-be-feared | es: al-Temible | fr: à-crainte | de: zu-der-einer-zu-sein-gefürchtet Ps 76:11

מוֹרָה H4172b N-ms (1×)

fear, terror (as something appointed); awe-inspiring display

A disputed noun in Psalm 9:20 (MT v21). The Masoretic tradition reads 'appoint terror for them,' meaning God should display awesome power to make the nations know they're mortal. An alternate reading, following Greek and Latin, would be 'appoint a teacher/master' (reading מוֹרֶה). The context favors 'terror'—a demonstration of power that humbles arrogant nations. Either way, it's something God sets over the nations to teach them humility.

(1×) Psalm 9:20 prays 'set terror for them, O LORD' (or possibly 'a teacher'), so the nations know they're human. If 'terror' (Spanish 'temor,' German 'fürchten'), it's a theophanic display—God's frightening presence teaching humility. If 'teacher,' it's instruction in mortality. The textual tradition splits, but thematically both work: nations need either awe or pedagogy to learn their creaturely limits. Fear is itself a teacher. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear | es: temor | fr: de-terreur | de: fürchten Ps 9:20

מוֹרָג H4173 Conj-w (3×)

threshing sledge, heavy implement for separating grain

A noun denoting the threshing sledge, a heavy agricultural implement used to separate grain from chaff. These sledges, set with sharp stones on the underside, were dragged over harvested grain by oxen. When Araunah offered his threshing floor to David for an altar, he included his threshing sledges as wood for the sacrifice (2 Samuel 24:22, 1 Chronicles 21:23). Isaiah uses the image prophetically, promising Israel will become a sharp threshing sledge to thresh mountains (41:15).

(3×) The glosses uniformly identify threshing equipment: Spanish 'trillos' (threshing sledges), English 'threshing-sledges.' Araunah's generous offer to David included not only the threshing floor but also the wooden sledges and the oxen for sacrifice (2 Sam 24:22, 1 Chr 21:23). Isaiah 41:15 transforms this agricultural tool into a powerful metaphor—Israel will become God's sharp, new threshing sledge to pulverize mountains, accomplishing divine judgment. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: and-the-threshing-sledges, into-a-threshing-sledge | es: como-trillo, y-los-trillos | fr: [והמורגים], [למורג], et-le-aire-sledges | de: [והמורגים], [למורג], und-der-threshing-sledges 2Sam 24:22; 1Chr 21:23; Isa 41:15

מוֹרָד H4174 Prep-b / N-ms (5×)

descent, slope, declivity; a downward incline or steep terrain feature, also figuratively of hanging-work

This noun denotes a steep descent or slope, typically as a geographic feature along which armies pursue or waters rush. The descent of Beth-horon (Josh 10:11) is where hailstones struck the fleeing Amorites, and the descent near Shebarim (Josh 7:5) marks Israel's retreat from Ai. Micah 1:4 compares mountains dissolving like water poured down a slope. In 1 Kings 7:29, the term takes an unusual sense of 'hanging-work' on bronze stands. The French and German glosses frequently retain the Hebrew במורד, while Spanish bajada ('descent') captures the geographic meaning clearly.

(5×) A geographic slope or declivity down which movement occurs. Joshua 10:11 describes the descent of Beth-horon where God hurled hailstones on the Amorites, and Joshua 7:5 names the descent near Shebarim during Israel's defeat. Jeremiah 48:5 references the descent of Horonaim in the Moab oracle, and Micah 1:4 uses it in a simile of rushing water. Spanish bajada and English descent consistently render the topographic sense. The one exceptional usage in 1 Kings 7:29, describing decorative 'hanging-work' on bronze stands, extends the root sense of downward orientation into an artisan context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: descent, on-a-slope, on-descent-of | es: bajada, en-bajada-de, en-la-bajada | fr: [במורד], descent, descente | de: [במורד], auf-der-descent, descent Josh 7:5; Josh 10:11; 1Kgs 7:29; Jer 48:5; Mic 1:4

מוֹרֶה H4175 Art / N-ms (3×)

early rain, autumn rain at beginning of growing season

A noun denoting the early or autumn rain that falls in Israel at the beginning of the agricultural year (October-November). This crucial rainfall softens the ground for plowing and enables seed germination. Joel promises God will restore the early rain as a sign of renewed blessing (2:23, mentioned twice). The psalmist describes the early rain as God's blessing that transforms the land (84:6). The term emphasizes seasonal rains essential for agricultural prosperity.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence identifies seasonal rainfall: Spanish 'lluvia-temprana' (early rain), English 'early-rain.' Psalm 84:6 poetically describes the early rain as a divine blessing covering the land. Joel 2:23 twice mentions God restoring the early rain 'for righteousness' or 'as before,' signaling the end of drought judgment and return of agricultural blessing. These rains, paired with late spring rains, framed the growing season crucial for survival. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: early-rain, the-early-rain | es: la-lluvia-temprana, lluvia-temprana | fr: de-pluie-tardive, pluie | de: [המורה], [מורה], der-früh-Regen Ps 84:6; Joel 2:23

מוֹרֶה H4176 Art / N-ms (3×)

Moreh (place name: 'teacher' or 'oracle-giver')

A place name meaning 'teacher' or 'oracle-giver,' marking two sacred sites. The 'oak of Moreh' (or 'teacher's oak') near Shechem was where Abraham first stopped in Canaan and received God's promise (Genesis 12:6, Deuteronomy 11:30). The 'hill of Moreh' was near the plain of Jezreel where Gideon's forces camped (Judges 7:1), probably Little Hermon. Both sites were apparently ancient places where divine instruction or oracles were given, making 'teacher' an appropriate designation.

(3×) This place name appears transliterated as 'Moreh, More' across languages. The oak of Moreh near Shechem (Gen 12:6, Deut 11:30) marks Abraham's first stop in the promised land, a sacred site associated with divine revelation. The hill of Moreh (Judg 7:1) served as the Midianite camp location opposite Gideon's forces. Both sites share the 'teacher' designation, suggesting they were recognized oracle locations where people sought divine guidance. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: Moreh, the-Moreh | es: More, More?, el-Moreh | fr: Moreh, le-Moreh | de: More, Moreh, der-Moreh Gen 12:6; Deut 11:30; Judg 7:1

מוֹרָה H4177 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

razor, sharp cutting implement for shaving

A noun denoting a razor or sharp blade used for cutting hair. The term appears exclusively in Nazirite contexts, in the formula 'no razor shall come upon his head.' This applies to Samson before birth (Judges 13:5, 16:17) and to Samuel (1 Samuel 1:11). The prohibition against the razor was a key mark of Nazirite consecration to God, with the uncut hair symbolizing dedication and strength. Violating this prohibition, as Samson did, meant breaking the vow.

(3×) Translations uniformly identify the shaving implement: Spanish 'navaja' (razor), English 'razor.' The identical phrase 'no razor shall come upon his head' appears in all three contexts. Hannah vows her son Samuel as a Nazirite (1 Sam 1:11). The angel commands that Samson be consecrated from the womb (Judg 13:5), and Samson reveals this secret to Delilah (16:17), explaining that cutting his hair would break his vow and remove God's strength. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: a-razor, and-razor | es: Navaja, y-navaja | fr: et-razor, un-razor | de: ein-razor, und-razor Judg 13:5; Judg 16:17; 1Sam 1:11

מָרַט H4178 Conj-w / V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

smooth, polished (adjective); having hair removed or surface made smooth

This adjective describes smoothness resulting from hair removal or polishing. Isaiah 18:2 and 18:7 use it twice to characterize a mysterious nation as 'smooth-skinned' (or possibly 'polished'), though the exact nuance is debated. The root verb means to pluck out hair or polish surfaces, appearing elsewhere for making cheeks bare by plucking beards (Isa 50:6) or making shoulders bare from chafing (Ezek 29:18). The adjective emphasizes the resulting smoothness, whether from depilation or burnishing.

(2×) Describes a smooth or polished appearance, likely referring to smooth skin (perhaps from depilation customs or naturally hairless appearance) in Isaiah's description of the distant nation. Spanish uses 'pulida/pulido' (polished/smooth), while French and German transliterate, reflecting interpretive uncertainty whether this describes hairless skin, polished bronze appearance, or some other smooth surface quality characteristic of the people described. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-smooth-skinned | es: y-pulida, y-pulido | fr: [ומורט] | de: [ומורט] Isa 18:2; Isa 18:7

מֹרִיָּה H4179 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)

Moriah (proper noun); the mountain region where Abraham offered Isaac and Solomon built the temple

Moriah appears as 'the land of Moriah' in Genesis 22:2, where God commanded Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, and as 'Mount Moriah' in 2 Chronicles 3:1, identified as the site where Solomon built the temple. Jewish and Christian tradition have long identified these as the same location—the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. However, the Septuagint's 'high land' for Genesis and textual variations suggest ancient interpretive challenges. The name's etymology is uncertain, though connections to 'seeing' (from the root ראה) have been proposed based on Genesis 22:14.

(2×) The sacred mountain region where both the binding of Isaac and the Jerusalem temple were located, according to biblical tradition. Genesis calls it a 'land' while Chronicles calls it a 'mount,' but 2 Chronicles explicitly connects the two. All languages transliterate (Moriah, Moriyá, Morija), preserving this as a sacred place-name. The Septuagint's 'high land' interpretation and Josephus's identification reflect early attempts to locate or explain this theologically significant site. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Moriah, the-Moriyyah | es: Moriá, el-Moriyyah | fr: [המוריה], le-Morija | de: Morija, [המוריה] Gen 22:2; 2Chr 3:1

מוֹרָשׁ H4180 N-mpc / 3mp (3×)

possession, inheritance, what is possessed

A noun denoting possession or inheritance—what rightfully belongs to someone or some group. Isaiah prophesies that Babylon will become 'a possession for the hedgehog' (14:23), a desolate wasteland. Obadiah declares that the house of Jacob will possess 'their possessions'—either what rightfully belongs to them or those who dispossessed them (17). Job speaks metaphorically of 'the possessions of my heart'—his cherished thoughts or desires (17:11). The term emphasizes rightful ownership or inheritance.

(3×) Multilingual glosses point to possession and inheritance: Spanish 'posesión, posesiones' (possession, possessions). Isaiah 14:23 depicts Babylon's utter reversal—from empire to hedgehog habitat, a possession for wild creatures. Obadiah 1:17 promises restoration where Jacob will 'possess their possessions,' reclaiming what is rightfully theirs. Job 17:11 uses possessions metaphorically for cherished thoughts or plans of the heart, though some question this figurative use. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-possession-of, the-possessions-of, their-possessions | es: en-posesión-de, posesiones-de, sus-posesiones | fr: [למורש], leurs-possessions., מורשי | de: Besitz, [למורש], [מורשי] Job 17:11; Isa 14:23; Obad 1:17

מוֹרָשָׁה H4181 Prep-l / N-fs (9×)

A possession or inheritance, especially landed property granted by God as a national heritage.

This feminine noun denotes a possession or inheritance, nearly always referring to land granted as a divine endowment. In Exodus 6:8, God promises to give Israel the land of Canaan as a morashah — a permanent, covenantal possession. Deuteronomy 33:4 uniquely applies the term to the Torah itself: 'Moses commanded us the law, a possession for the assembly of Jacob.' In Ezekiel, the word takes on a contested tone, as surrounding nations claim Israel's land as their morashah (Ezek 25:4, 10; 36:2, 5), prompting prophetic rebuke. The term carries the theological weight of divinely authorized ownership.

possession / inheritance (landed property) (9×) A possession or inheritance, specifically landed property received as a divine grant or national heritage. Spanish 'herencia/heredad/posesion' and French 'heritage/possession' both reflect the dual nuance of inherited right and concrete territory. Exodus 6:8 establishes the theological foundation: God swore to give the land as a morashah to Abraham's descendants. Deuteronomy 33:4 extends the concept metaphorically to the Torah as Israel's spiritual inheritance. Ezekiel uses the term polemically (11:15; 25:4, 10; 33:24; 36:2, 3, 5), where hostile nations presume to claim Israel's divine inheritance, provoking prophetic judgment. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY

en: as-possession, for-possession, inheritance | es: como-herencia., como-posesión, heredad | fr: héritage, possession, propriété | de: Besitz, Erbe, zum-Besitz Exod 6:8; Deut 33:4; Ezek 11:15; Ezek 25:4; Ezek 25:10

מוֹרֶשֶׁת H4182 N-proper-fs (1×)

Moresheth-Gath, a town in Judah near Gath, likely the home of the prophet Micah

Moresheth-Gath appears only in Micah 1:14, where the prophet addresses it in a series of wordplays on Judean town names. The location was apparently near the Philistine city of Gath, making it vulnerable during invasions from the coastal plain. This was likely the hometown of Micah himself, as he is called 'Micah of Moresheth' in Jeremiah 26:18, giving his prophecies particular poignancy as he warns of judgment coming to his own community.

(1×) A Judean settlement near Gath mentioned in Micah's lament over the towns of the Shephelah. The name suggests 'possession of Gath' or 'inheritance of Gath,' fitting Micah's pattern of place-name wordplays. The town's proximity to Philistine territory made it strategically vulnerable, and it appears to be the prophet's ancestral home. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Moresheth-Gath | es: Moréset-Gat | fr: Morescheth-Gath | de: [מורשת גת] Mic 1:14

וֹ H4183 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Morashtite (adjective); a person from Moresheth, hometown of the prophet Micah

This gentillic adjective identifies someone from Moresheth (Moresheth-Gath), applied exclusively to the prophet Micah in Jeremiah 26:18 and Micah 1:1. Moresheth was a town in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah, likely modern Tell ej-Judeideh. The designation distinguishes this Micah from others of the same name and locates his prophetic ministry in rural Judah, giving his oracles their distinctive concern for agrarian justice and critique of urban corruption. The slight spelling variation (מֹרַשְׁתִּי vs. מוֹרַשְׁתִּי) reflects minor textual differences.

(2×) The gentillic designation meaning 'from Moresheth,' used solely to identify the eighth-century prophet Micah. This geographical identifier roots Micah in the Judean countryside southwest of Jerusalem, distinguishing him from urban prophets and explaining his perspective on social justice. All language traditions transliterate (Morashtite, morastita, Moraschtite), treating this as a quasi-proper name identifying one specific prophet rather than a general class of people from that town. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Morashtite | es: el-morashtita, el-morastita | fr: Moraschtite, [המורשתי] | de: [המורשתי], [המרשתי] Jer 26:18; Mic 1:1

מוּשׁ H4184 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf.h-1cs / 2ms (2×)

feel, touch (verb); to perceive through physical contact

This verb means to feel or perceive through touch, a secondary form of the root מֵשׁשׁ. In Genesis 27:21, aged Isaac says 'draw near that I may feel you,' wanting to confirm Jacob's identity through touch since his eyesight failed. In Psalm 115:7, the verb describes what idols cannot do—'their hands, but they do not feel'—contrasting living sense perception with dead images. The word emphasizes tactile perception and physical sensation as opposed to merely possessing hands.

(2×) Denotes the action of feeling or touching to perceive, whether by humans (Gen 27:21—Isaac wanting to feel Jacob to verify his identity) or contrasting what idols lack (Ps 115:7—hands that cannot feel). Spanish uses 'palpar' (to palpate/feel) and 'te palparé' (I will feel you), German 'betasten' (to touch/examine by touch), emphasizing tactile sensory perception rather than mere contact, crucial in contexts of identification or distinguishing living beings from lifeless images. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-let-me-feel-you, they-feel | es: palpan, y-te-palparé | fr: et-que-moi-sentir-tu, toucher | de: sie-feel, und-ich-will-dich-betasten Gen 27:21; Ps 115:7

מוּשׁ H4185 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (21×)

To depart, withdraw, or remove; in Hifil, to cause something to move away or to cease.

Mush describes the act of moving away or being taken from a fixed position. In the Qal stem it is intransitive – the pillar of cloud 'did not depart' from before the people (Exod 33:11), and Joshua is told that the Torah shall not 'depart' from his mouth (Josh 1:8). In the Hifil, the verb can remain intransitive (Job 23:12, 'I have not departed from the commandment') or turn causative: God declares 'I will remove' the iniquity of the land in a single day (Zech 3:9). Spanish toggles between 'apartarse' (to withdraw) and 'quitar' (to take away), neatly tracking the stem distinction. The word carries theological weight: when something 'does not mush,' it signals permanence, covenant faithfulness, or unyielding divine presence.

1. depart, move away (Qal) (11×) Qal intransitive: to depart, move away, or withdraw from a place, person, or standard. The emphasis is on something leaving its station, often negated to express constancy – 'the ark did not depart' (Exod 33:11), 'it shall not depart from your mouth' (Josh 1:8). Numbers 14:44 records that the ark 'did not move' when Israel presumed to advance without God. French 'partir' and Spanish 'apartarse' capture the voluntary withdrawal. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: (departs), and-will-depart, depart | es: (se-apartará), se-apartaba, se-apartaran | fr: (תמוש), [ומש], aurait-partir | de: [(תמוש)], [ומש], [ימוש] Exod 33:11; Num 14:44; Josh 1:8; Judg 6:18; Prov 17:13

2. depart, cease (Hifil intransitive) (7×) Hifil used intransitively, meaning to depart or cease, with the Hifil stem adding emphasis or formality but not introducing a separate agent. Job 23:12 declares 'I have not departed from the commandment of his lips,' and Psalm 55:11 laments that oppression does not 'cease' from the city square. Exodus 13:22 tells us the pillar of cloud did not withdraw from before the people. The nuance is intensified persistence or its negation. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: I-departed, [departs], departed | es: [se-apartará], cesa, cesará | fr: [ימיש], [תמיש], partit | de: [[תמיש]], [אמיש], [ימיש] Exod 13:22; Job 23:12; Ps 55:11; Prov 17:13; Isa 46:7

3. remove, take away (Hifil causative) (3×) Hifil causative: to actively remove or take away something, with an explicit agent performing the action. Micah 2:3 warns that God's people will not 'remove their necks' from the coming yoke of judgment, and Zechariah 3:9 promises 'I will remove the iniquity of this land in one day.' Spanish 'quitar' and French 'oter' mark the causative force. Key passages: Micah 2:3-4, Zechariah 3:9. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: He-removes, and-I-will-remove, you-will-remove | es: quitaréis, se-aparta, y-quitaré | fr: [ימיש], [תמישון], et-j'ai-ôté | de: [ומשתי], [ימיש], [תמישון] Mic 2:3; Mic 2:4; Zech 3:9

מוֹשָׁב H4186 N-msc (44×)

A seat or sitting-place; an assembly; a dwelling-place, settlement, or habitation; also the act or period of dwelling.

Derived from the root yāšab ('to sit, dwell'), this noun covers both the physical place where one sits and the broader concept of habitation. In its most frequent use it designates a dwelling-place or settlement — the places where people live and put down roots (Gen 10:30; Exod 12:20). But it also retains the concrete sense of a seat or chair, especially in official or judicial contexts: the seat left empty for David (1 Sam 20:18, 25) or the impressive seating arrangement of Solomon's court (1 Kgs 10:5). German 'Wohnsitz' and Spanish 'morada' consistently reflect the dwelling sense, while 'asiento' and 'seat' track the furniture meaning.

1. dwelling place, settlement (32×) The dominant sense: a dwelling-place, settlement, habitation, or residence where individuals or communities live. It appears in genealogical summaries listing the territories of clans (Gen 10:30, 'their dwelling was from Mesha'), in covenant law specifying regulations for 'all your dwelling-places' (Exod 12:20), and in prophetic visions of restoration (Ezek 34:13). The plural construct mōšebōtêhem ('their dwelling-places') is especially common in legislative and prophetic texts. Spanish 'morada/moradas' and German 'Wohnsitz/Wohnung' consistently confirm this residential meaning across our translation evidence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-dwellings, dwelling, dwelling-places-of-them | es: lugares-de-morada-de-ellos, morada, moradas-vuestras | fr: demeure, demeure-ton, et-demeure | de: Wohnsitz, Wohnung, dein-Wohnsitz Gen 10:30; Gen 27:39; Gen 36:43; Exod 10:23; Exod 12:20

2. seat, assembly seat (10×) A seat or sitting-place, particularly in an official, judicial, or ceremonial context. At 1 Sam 20:18, 25, Jonathan warns David that his seat (mōšāb) at the king's table will be conspicuously empty; in 1 Kgs 10:5 the Queen of Sheba marvels at 'the seating of his servants.' Spanish 'asiento' and English 'seat' target this sense precisely, while French occasionally uses 'siège.' Psalm 1:1 extends this to the figurative 'seat of scoffers' — a habitual social posture rather than physical furniture. The sense bridges physical sitting and the social authority associated with occupying a place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-seat-of, and-sitting-of, and-the-seating-of | es: asiento-de, asiento-suyo, asiento-tuyo | fr: demeure, et-assis-de, et-dans-siège | de: Wohnsitz, [מושבי], seat-dein 1Sam 20:18; 1Sam 20:25; 1Kgs 10:5; 2Chr 9:4

3. (1×) An instance at 2 Kgs 2:19 where the term designates the location or situation of a city — Elisha is told 'the location of the city is good but the water is bad.' The multilingual glosses converge on 'location' (English 'location-of,' Spanish 'la ubicación de'), suggesting translators perceive a more abstract spatial sense here: not merely where people dwell, but the geographic positioning or site of a settlement. This may be a specialized extension of the dwelling sense applied to urban geography. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: location-of | es: la-ubicación-de | fr: location-de | de: location-von 2Kgs 2:19

4. (1×) An occurrence at 2 Sam 9:12 where the term appears to designate the household or domestic circle of Mephibosheth — those dwelling with or belonging to a person's house. English 'dwelling-of' and Spanish 'moradores-de' (dwellers-of) point toward an inhabitant or household sense, a collective reading of the dwelling concept. This may shade toward the BDB-noted meaning of 'dwellers,' treating the noun as a collective for the people who inhabit a place rather than the place itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dwelling-of | es: moradores-de | fr: demeure-de | de: wohnend-von 2Sam 9:12

מוּשִׁי H4187 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)

Mushi, a Levite, son of Merari; ancestor of the Mushite clan within the tribe of Levi.

Mushi was a son of Merari and grandson of Levi, making him the founder of one of the two main Merarite sub-clans (the other being Mahli's). He appears consistently in genealogical lists tracing the Levitical families (Exod 6:19; Num 3:20; 1 Chr 6:19, 47; 23:21, 23; 24:26, 30). The Septuagint renders his name variously as Omousi or Mousi. His descendants served important roles in tabernacle and temple service.

and Mushi (8×) The proper name Mushi, identifying a Levite who was the son of Merari and ancestor of the Mushite clan. All eight occurrences appear in genealogical or census contexts listing the Levitical families (Exod 6:19; Num 3:20; 1 Chr 6:19, 47; 23:21, 23; 24:26, 30). Spanish and English consistently transliterate as 'Mushi,' while French and German often retain the untranslated Hebrew form. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to draw out' or 'to feel, touch.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mushi, and-Mushi | es: Mushi, Musi, y-Mushi | fr: [ומושי], [ומשי], [מושי] | de: [ומושי], [ומשי], [מושי] Exod 6:19; Num 3:20; 1Chr 6:19; 1Chr 6:47; 1Chr 23:21

מוּשִׁי H4188 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Mushite (adjective); descendants of Mushi son of Merari, a Levitical family

This gentillic adjective identifies the Levitical clan descended from Mushi, son of Merari, grandson of Levi. Both occurrences (Numbers 3:33; 26:58) refer to 'the family of the Mushites' in priestly census lists. The Mushites formed one branch of the Merarite clan, responsible for specific tabernacle duties involving boards, bars, pillars, and sockets (Numbers 3:36-37). The term functions collectively, referring to the entire family group rather than individuals.

(2×) The collective designation for the Levitical family descended from Mushi son of Merari. Both Numbers passages use the definite article with this gentillic, treating it as a known family unit within the tribal structure. Spanish uses both singular and plural forms (musita/musitas), while other languages maintain singular forms with collective sense, reflecting the Hebrew's treatment of clan names as both individual ancestral reference and group designation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Mushite | es: el-musita, los-musitas | fr: le-Mushite | de: der-Mushite Num 3:33; Num 26:58

מִשֹּׂכֶת H4189 N-fpc (1×)

Cords, bands, or ropes, specifically the legendary cords by which Orion is bound in the heavens

This rare word appears only in God's challenging questions to Job about the creation. In Job 38:31, God asks whether Job can loose 'the cords of Orion,' referring to some ancient legend about the great hunter constellation being bound or dragged across the sky. The imagery suggests cosmic forces beyond human control, emphasizing God's sovereignty over the heavenly bodies. The term points to mythological conceptions of how constellations moved through the heavens.

(1×) Mythological cords or bands binding the constellation Orion in its celestial course. The image appears in God's interrogation of Job, where untying these cosmic bonds represents an impossible feat for mortals. Ancient Near Eastern star lore likely included legends about Orion being bound or dragged, which this rare term references. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-cords-of | es: lazos-de | fr: משכות | de: [משכות] Job 38:31

מוֹשָׁעָה H4190 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

Saving acts, deliverances, plural of salvation referring to God's repeated rescues

Found only in Psalm 68:20, this plural form emphasizes God's many acts of deliverance rather than a single event of salvation. The psalm celebrates God as 'our God of saving acts,' highlighting the ongoing nature of divine rescue throughout Israel's history. The plural intensifies the idea that salvation is not merely a theological concept but a pattern of concrete interventions. God is portrayed as continuously delivering His people from danger and death.

(1×) Multiple acts of divine deliverance and rescue. The plural form in Psalm 68 emphasizes God's habitual pattern of saving intervention rather than a single salvific event. This grammatical choice underscores the repeated, ongoing nature of God's protective care, drawing on Israel's memory of many specific occasions when God acted to save His people from enemies or calamity. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: of-salvations | es: liberaciones | fr: à-salut | de: von-salvations Ps 68:20

מוּת H4191 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (840×)

To die, be dead; (Hifil) kill, put to death; (Hofal) be executed; (participle) the dead; (infinitive) death

One of the most elemental words in Scripture, this Hebrew verb (muth) spans the full arc of mortality. In the Qal stem it describes dying in every mode—natural, violent, and judicial—while its Hifil causative means 'to kill' and the Hofal passive 'to be put to death.' The emphatic formula moth yumath ('dying he shall die') became the signature idiom of covenant law, first heard in Eden (Gen 2:17) and echoed throughout the Torah's legal codes. The participle serves as a noun for 'the dead' or 'a corpse,' and the infinitive construct functions as the abstract noun 'death.' Across all 840 occurrences, muth traces the Bible's theology of life and death from Genesis to Malachi.

1. die (Qal: natural/general death) (645×) The unmarked Qal sense covering all intransitive dying—natural death (Gen 5 genealogies: 'and he died'), plague, famine, battlefield death, and general mortality. Arabic mâta, Swahili -fa, Korean 죽다 all render it with their basic 'die' verb, confirming this as the prototypical sense. Gen 5:5 ('and he died') establishes the refrain of human mortality. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: and-died, and-he-died | es: Y-murió, y-murió | fr: et-il-mourut, et-mourut | de: und-er-starb, und-es-starb, und-starb Gen 5:5; Gen 5:8; Gen 5:11; Gen 5:14; Gen 5:17

2. be put to death (Hofal passive) (51×) The Hofal passive expressing judicial execution: 'he shall be put to death.' Predominantly found in Exodus–Deuteronomy legal codes (Exod 21:12–17), where community-mandated capital punishment is prescribed. Spanish 'morirá,' French 'être mis à mort,' and German 'soll zu Tod gesetzt werden' all employ passive constructions, mirroring the Hebrew Hofal morphology precisely. DEATH AND DYING

en: he-shall-be-put-to-death, let-be-put-to-death, shall-be-put-to-death | es: morirá | fr: –être-mettre-à-mort, devra-être-mettre-à-mort, il—être-mettre-à-mort | de: er-soll-sein-setzen-zu-Tod, lass-sein-setzen-zu-Tod, soll-sein-setzen-zu-Tod Gen 26:11; Exod 21:12; Exod 21:15; Exod 21:16; Exod 21:17

3. surely die (מוֹת יוּמָת death formula) (50×) The emphatic formula moth yumath (Qal infinitive absolute + Yiqtol), rendered 'surely die' or 'certainly die,' marking solemn divine or legal pronouncements. First heard in Gen 2:17 as God's warning to Adam, it recurs throughout covenant law (Gen 26:11; Exod 19:12). Multilingual translations consistently use emphatic adverbs: Spanish 'ciertamente morirá,' French 'certainement,' German 'des Todes.' DEATH AND DYING

en: dying, surely, surely-dying | es: ciertamente, de-cierto, morir | fr: certainement, certainement-mourant, mourant | de: des-Todes, gewiss, gewiss-dying Gen 2:17; Gen 3:4; Gen 20:7; Gen 26:11; Exod 19:12

4. kill / put to death (Hifil causative) (50×) The Hifil causative meaning 'to kill, put to death, cause to die,' with an active agent doing the killing. Unlike Hofal (passive), here a subject acts: God threatens (Exod 4:24), brothers conspire (Gen 37:18), a king commands (2 Sam 1:15). Arabic 'amâta and Korean 죽이다 both use their standard causative 'kill' forms, distinguishing this cleanly from intransitive 'die.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-killed-them, and-killed-them, and-put-them-to-death | es: dando-muerte, hace-morir, mata | fr: avoir-tua, et-il-tua-eux, et-mourir | de: haben-toetete, starb, sterben Gen 18:25; Gen 37:18; Gen 42:37; Exod 1:16; Exod 4:24

5. the dead (Qal participle nominal) (33×) The Qal participle used substantively to denote 'the dead, a dead person, a corpse.' Abraham's negotiation for Sarah's burial (Gen 23:3–8) repeats 'my dead' (methi) five times, establishing a tender idiom for the deceased. Spanish 'muertos,' French 'le mort,' and German 'Tote' all nominalize the participle identically. This usage bridges verb and noun, person and remains. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: The-dead, and-the-dead, and-the-dying | es: Muertos, en-el-muerto, en-muerto | fr: dans-le-mort, dans-mort, et-le-mort | de: Tote, deine-Tote, in-der-tot Gen 23:3; Gen 23:4; Gen 23:6; Gen 23:8

6. death (Qal infinitive as noun) (8×) The Qal infinitive construct functioning as an abstract noun meaning 'death, dying.' Found in phrases like 'at the death of' (Judg 2:19), 'her dying' (1 Sam 4:20), and 'my death' (Gen 27:2). Arabic mawt, Korean 죽음, and Swahili mauti—all cognate or calque nominal forms—confirm the nominal reading. Only eight occurrences, but theologically potent. DEATH AND DYING

en: at-the-death-of, her-dying, is-my-death | es: a-morir, cuando-morir-de, mi-muerte | fr: mon-mort, mourir, notre-mourant | de: als-unser-sterbend, bei-der-Tod-von, ihr-sterbend Exod 14:12; Exod 16:3; Judg 2:19; Judg 5:18; 1Sam 4:20

7. kill (Piel/Polel intensive) (3×) The Piel/Polel intensive stem denoting vigorous or emphatic killing, attested in just three passages (1 Sam 14:13; 2 Sam 1:16; 2 Kgs 17:26). The intensive force implies repeated or thoroughgoing slaughter beyond simple causation. Spanish 'matando/maté,' French 'tuant/tua,' and German 'tötend/tötete' all use active kill-verbs, paralleling the Hifil but with intensified aspect. KILLING AND REMOVING en: killed, killing | es: matando, maté | fr: tua, tuant | de: toetend, toetete 1Sam 14:13; 2Sam 1:16; 2Kgs 17:26

לַבֵּן H4192 V-Qal-Inf (3×)
musical or liturgical term, possibly 'about death' or a tune name
A puzzling musical or liturgical notation appearing in Psalm titles. The phrase 'al-muth labben' in Psalm 9:1 has uncertain meaning—possibly 'about death for the son,' or perhaps the name of a tune or musical mode. Psalm 48:14 uses a related form. Ancient interpreters struggled with this phrase, and modern scholars remain divided. The term reminds us that some technical musical vocabulary from ancient Israel's worship has been lost, though the psalms themselves remain powerfully meaningful.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence reveals uncertainty: translations range from transliterations 'Almut, Muth-labben' to interpretive renderings 'death, según-a-Muth-labben.' Psalm 9:1 contains the full phrase in its superscription, likely indicating performance instructions now obscure to us. Psalm 48:14 may contain a related term. These technical notations remind us of the rich musical heritage of Israelite worship, even when precise meanings elude us. The psalm content itself speaks clearly of God's justice and faithfulness. DEATH AND DYING
en: a-psalm, according-to-Muth-labben, death | es: Almut, Laben, muerte | fr: Mizmor, mourir, à-fils | de: Tod, ein-Psalm, gemäss-zu-Muth-labben Ps 9:1; Ps 48:14

מוֹת H4193 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)
Death (Aramaic), the cessation of life, appearing in Ezra's account of Persian judicial decrees
This Aramaic term for death appears in Ezra 7:26, where King Artaxerxes authorizes Ezra to enforce Jewish law with real penalties. The decree lists escalating punishments: fines, banishment, confiscation, imprisonment, or death. The Persian king's willingness to grant capital punishment authority to Jewish religious officials shows the remarkable autonomy granted to the returning exiles. Death stands as the ultimate sanction for those who refuse to obey the law of God and the king.

(1×) The ultimate judicial penalty authorized in Artaxerxes' decree to Ezra. This Aramaic word appears in the list of possible punishments for violating Jewish law under Persian sponsorship. The inclusion of death penalty authority in a royal edict demonstrates the seriousness with which the Persian administration treated the restoration of Jewish religious practice and Ezra's authority to enforce Torah. DEATH AND DYING en: for-death | es: para-muerte | fr: [לְמוֹת] | de: zum-Tod Ezra 7:26

מָוֶת H4194 Art / N-ms (158×)
Death — the event of dying, the state of being dead, death personified as a cosmic power, and death as judicial penalty or standard of comparison
Mavet is far more than a clinical term for biological cessation. In Hebrew Scripture it functions as event, state, power, and penalty all at once. As event, it marks the moment life ends (Deut 19:6); as state, it names the shadowy realm from which the psalmist cries for deliverance (Ps 116:15); as personified force, it becomes a covenant partner for the wicked (Isa 28:15) and a rival to love itself (Song 8:6). Arabic mawt preserves the same breadth, while Korean jug-eum and Swahili mauti each capture different slices. The plural motei in Ezek 28:10 — 'deaths of the uncircumcised' — hints at death as something that can be multiplied, an intensified or violent plural that pushes even further beyond mere biology.

1. death as event/process (dying) (95×) Split from sense 110553. Criteria: The act or moment of dying: 'day of death,' 'year of death,' 'until death,' death of specific persons en: death | es: la-muerte, muerte, ¡Muerte | fr: mort, mourir | de: Tod, starb Gen 25:11; Gen 26:18; Lev 16:1; Num 23:10; Num 35:25

2. death (state or realm of the dead) (15×) Death as a state, condition, or realm — the ongoing domain of the dead from which one may be delivered or in which one is trapped. Arabic fi-l-mawt ('in death') and French dans la mort confirm the locative/stative reading. Appears 15 times in contexts like Job's plea to be hidden in Sheol (Job 5:20 'he shall redeem you from death'), the Psalms' imagery of death's snares and cords (Ps 18:4-5), and the legal purity contexts where death-contact produces contamination (Lev 11:31-32; Num 6:7). Where sense 1 is punctiliar, this sense is durative — death as a place one inhabits. DEATH AND DYING
en: from-death, in-death, in-the-death | es: de-la-muerte, de-muerte, en-la-muerte | fr: dans-leur-mort, dans-mourir, de-mort | de: in-Tod, in-ihr-Tod, in-starb Lev 11:31; Lev 11:32; Num 6:7; Josh 2:13; Job 5:20

3. death (personified or as power) (14×) Death personified as a cosmic power or force, often in poetic and prophetic texts. Arabic al-mawt (with the definite article marking personification) and the consistent use of definite forms in the target languages confirm the rhetorical elevation. Appears 14 times: Pharaoh begging Moses to remove 'this death' as though it were a living agent (Exod 10:17), the famous deuteronomistic pair 'life and death' presented as rival powers (Deut 30:15, 19), Ruth's oath 'if anything but death parts me from you' (Ruth 1:17), and supremely Song 8:6 where 'love is strong as Death' — the only time mavet stands as an equal to the most powerful human emotion. DEATH AND DYING
en: and-Death, and-death, and-the-death | es: la-muerte, y-Muerte, y-la-muerte | fr: et-le-mort, et-mort, le-mort | de: Tod, der-Tod, der-starb Exod 10:17; Deut 30:15; Deut 30:19; Ruth 1:17; 1Sam 15:32

4. death (as penalty or fate) (14×) Death as a judicial penalty, destined fate, or appointed consequence — being 'put to death' or consigned to death by divine or royal decree. Spanish a la muerte and German fuer Tod mark the purposive-judicial dimension. Appears 14 times in contexts of capital sentencing (2 Sam 15:21 'whether in death or in life'), divine deliverance from execution (Ps 68:20 'to God belong the issues from death'), and the paradox of desiring death as escape (Job 3:21). Ps 118:18 captures the theological tension: 'The LORD has disciplined me severely, but he has not given me over to death.' DEATH AND DYING
en: at-their-death, belong-from-death, but-to-death | es: a-la-muerte, la-muerte, para-la-muerte | fr: et-à-mourir, mort, pour-mort | de: Tod, bei-ihr-Tod, fuer-Tod 2Sam 15:21; Job 3:21; Ps 68:20; Ps 73:4; Ps 118:18

5. death as judicial penalty (12×) Split from sense 110553. Criteria: Capital punishment, execution: Deuteronomic death-penalty laws (Deut 21:22; 22:26), legal formulae prescribing death
en: death | es: muerte | fr: mort | de: Tod, starb Deut 19:6; Deut 21:22; Deut 22:26; 1Sam 20:31; 1Sam 26:16

6. death (comparative, like death) (7×) Death as a standard of comparison in similes and analogies — something being 'like death' or measured against death. Korean jug-eum-gwa gat-i ('like death') and the consistent use of comparative particles (ke-, kemo-) in Hebrew mark the figurative register. Appears 7 times: Num 16:29 asks whether the rebels will die 'the death of all men' (death as norm), Nabal's heart 'became like stone' — dead within him (1 Sam 25:37-38), Ecclesiastes' bitter observation that human and animal death are alike (Eccl 3:19), and the Song's climactic comparison (Song 8:6). These usages treat death not as event or power but as a measuring rod for extremity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-death-of, is-like-death, like-death | es: como-la-muerte, como-muerte-de, cuando-murió | fr: comme-la-mort, comme-mort, comme-mort-de | de: wann-starb, wie-Tod-von, wie-starb Num 16:29; 2Sam 3:33; 2Kgs 3:5; Eccl 3:19; Song 8:6

7. (1×) The plural construct motei ('deaths of') in Ezek 28:10, describing the ignominious 'deaths of the uncircumcised.' Spanish muertes de and English 'deaths of' preserve the plural form. This rare plural intensifies the concept — not merely one death but a quality of dying associated with shame and divine judgment against the prince of Tyre. The plural may be an abstract-intensive ('a death-like death') or a genuine plural indicating the accumulated deaths of the disgraced. It stands alone as the only plural occurrence, marking the outer boundary of the word's morphological range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: deaths-of- | es: Muertes-de | fr: mort | de: Tod Ezek 28:10

מוֹתָר H4195 N-ms (3×)

abundance, excess; superiority, advantage

A noun with two related meanings: abundance or surplus, and superiority or advantage. In Proverbs it appears twice contrasted with 'lack'—hard work leads to abundance, but hasty planning only to want (14:23, 21:5). Ecclesiastes uses it philosophically to question whether humans have any real advantage over animals (3:19). The term can denote either material surplus or qualitative superiority, both emphasizing 'more than' or 'better than.'

(3×) Multilingual glosses show two senses: material abundance (Spanish 'ganancia'/profit) and qualitative advantage (Spanish 'ventaja'/advantage). Proverbs 14:23 and 21:5 promise that diligent labor leads to abundance while shortcuts lead to poverty. Ecclesiastes 3:19 asks the haunting question whether humanity has any advantage over beasts, since both die and return to dust. The term bridges economic surplus and existential superiority, both asking what endures beyond mere existence. GAIN AND GREED

en: and-advantage-of, profit, to-abundance | es: ganancia, para-ganancia, y-ventaja-de | fr: et-מותר, מותר, à-מותר | de: Vorteil, und-Vorteil, zu-Vorteil Prov 14:23; Prov 21:5; Eccl 3:19

מִזְבֵּחַ H4196 Conj-w / N-msc (403×)

Altar; a raised cultic installation for offering sacrifices, from the root zavach ('to slaughter')

Mizbeach designates the altar as the central liturgical fixture for Israelite worship, derived from zavach ('to slaughter, sacrifice'). With over 400 occurrences, it traces the entire arc of Israel's worship history: from Noah's post-flood altar (Gen 8:20) through the patriarchal pillars, to the elaborate bronze and gold altars of the Tabernacle and Temple, and finally to the polemical destruction of idolatrous altars under Josiah. The Arabic cognate madhbah ('place of slaughter') preserves the same etymological logic. Across translations, the word is rendered with near-perfect consistency: Spanish altar, French autel, German Altar.

altar (place of sacrifice) (403×) A cultic installation constructed for the presentation of animal sacrifices, grain offerings, or incense to deity, derived from the root z-b-ch ('to slaughter'). Encompasses the patriarchal open-air altars (Gen 8:20; 12:7), the bronze altar of burnt offering and golden incense altar of the Tabernacle (Exod 27:1; 30:1), Solomon's Temple altar, and also illegitimate altars to foreign gods whose demolition the prophets demanded. The Arabic cognate madhbah confirms the 'place of slaughter' etymology across Semitic. ALTAR SACRIFICE PLACE

en: the-altar | es: el-altar | fr: l'autel, le-autel | de: den-Altar, der-Altar Gen 22:9; Exod 24:6; Exod 27:1

מֶזֶג H4197 Art / N-ms (1×)

Mixed wine, wine blended with water or spices, a delicacy mentioned in Song of Songs

This term describes wine that has been mixed, either diluted with water or blended with spices to enhance its flavor and effects. In Song of Songs 7:2, it appears in a poetic description of the beloved's navel as 'a rounded bowl that never lacks mixed wine'—a sensual metaphor for abundance and pleasure. The ancient practice of mixing wine made it a luxury item, more refined than simple wine. The imagery suggests both satisfaction and delight.

(1×) Wine that has been blended or mixed, likely with spices or water, representing a refined beverage in the Song of Songs' erotic poetry. The 'mixed wine' serves as a metaphor for sensual abundance and pleasure. Ancient wine-mixing was a sophisticated practice, and the term carries connotations of luxury, careful preparation, and enhanced enjoyment beyond ordinary wine. WINE BEVERAGE en: the-mixed-wine | es: el-vino-mezclado | fr: le-vin-mêlé! | de: [המזג] Song 7:2

מָזֵּה H4198 Adj-mpc (1×)

Wasted, sucked out, emptied by hunger; describes severe famine's devastating physical effects

This adjective describes bodies that have been drained or sucked empty by famine. In Deuteronomy 32:24, it appears in Moses' song warning of covenant curses: 'wasted by hunger, devoured by burning heat.' The term suggests not just hunger but its extreme consequences—emaciation, depletion, the body consuming itself. The parallel with 'burning heat' creates a picture of comprehensive destruction, where famine leaves people hollow shells. The imagery is visceral and terrifying.

(1×) Bodies depleted and emptied by severe hunger, appearing in Deuteronomy's covenant curses. The term suggests the extreme physical toll of famine beyond mere hunger—a sucking dry or wasting away that leaves victims hollow. This vivid language in Moses' warning song emphasizes the devastating consequences of breaking covenant, where even human bodies become empty husks consumed by starvation. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: wasted-by | es: consumidos-de | fr: wasted-par | de: wasted-durch Deut 32:24

מִזָּה H4199 N-proper-ms (3×)

Mizzah (personal name: possibly 'fear' or 'terror')

A personal name belonging to a grandson of Esau through Reuel and Basemath. Mizzah appears in the Edomite genealogies as one of Esau's descendants who became a clan chief in Edom (Genesis 36:13, 17, 1 Chronicles 1:37). The name possibly derives from a root meaning fear or terror. Like many Edomite names preserved in Genesis, it marks the fulfillment of God's promise that Esau would also become the father of nations, though distinct from the covenant line.

(3×) This proper name appears transliterated as 'Mizzah, Miza' across translations. Genesis 36:13, 17 list him among the sons of Reuel and identify him as a clan chief ('alluph) in Edom, representing a subdivision of Esau's descendants. First Chronicles 1:37 repeats his name in the parallel genealogy. These genealogical records fulfill the biblical concern to document how both Isaac's sons became founders of peoples, though only Jacob carried the covenant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mizzah, and-Mizah, and-Mizzah | es: Mizzah, y-Miza, y-Mizzah | fr: Mizzah, [ומזה], et-Mizzah | de: Misa, [ומזה], und-Misa Gen 36:13; Gen 36:17; 1Chr 1:37

מְזוּ H4200 N-mpc / 1cp (1×)

Garners, storehouses, granaries for holding harvested grain; symbols of agricultural abundance

This word for storage buildings appears in Psalm 144:13 as part of a vision of agricultural blessing: 'our garners are full, providing every kind of produce.' Granaries were essential infrastructure in ancient agrarian society, protecting the harvest from weather, pests, and thieves. Full storehouses meant security, wealth, and God's favor. The psalmist's prayer for filled granaries reflects the fundamental importance of stored grain for survival through lean seasons. Abundance in the garners meant the community could thrive.

(1×) Storage facilities for grain and agricultural produce, appearing in Psalm 144's prayer for comprehensive blessing. Full granaries represented economic security, divine favor, and successful harvest in ancient agricultural society. The image of overflowing storehouses 'providing every kind of produce' captures the ideal of abundance and prosperity, where careful storage enables a community to thrive through seasons of scarcity. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: our-storehouses | es: Nuestros-graneros | fr: de-grenier | de: unser-storehouses Ps 144:13

מְזוּזָה H4201 N-fsc / 1cs (19×)

Doorpost, gate-post — the vertical side-frame of a door or gate opening

Refers to the vertical post forming the side of a doorway or gate. Its most memorable appearance is in the Passover narrative, where Israelites were commanded to smear the blood of the lamb on the doorposts and lintel (Exod 12:7, 22–23) — an image that became foundational for Jewish identity. The word also features in the command to write God's words on the doorposts of one's house (Deut 6:9; 11:20), giving rise to the later tradition of the mezuzah. In temple architecture, it describes posts of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:31, 33) and Ezekiel's visionary sanctuary (Ezek 41:21; 43:8; 45:19; 46:2).

doorpost (19×) The vertical side-post of a door or gate frame. Central to the Passover account where the Israelites marked their doorposts with lamb's blood as a sign of protection (Exod 12:7, 22–23). Also prominent in the Shema commandment to inscribe God's words on one's doorposts (Deut 6:9; 11:20), the origin of the mezuzah tradition. In architectural contexts, it describes the structural posts of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:31, 33) and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 43:8; 45:19; 46:2). Spanish 'jamba' precisely captures the architectural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-doorpost, and-the-doorpost, and-the-doorposts | es: jamba, jamba-de, jambas | fr: [והמזוזה], doorpost-de, doorposts | de: [והמזוזה], [ומזוזתם], [מזוזת] Exod 12:7; Exod 12:22; Exod 12:23; Exod 21:6; Deut 6:9

מָזוֹן H4202 Art / N-ms (2×)

food, provisions (noun); sustenance or supplies for eating

This Hebrew noun means food or provisions for sustenance. In Genesis 45:23, Joseph sends his father 'grain and bread and food' (possibly 'food' is a later gloss according to some scholars, who note its Aramaic character). In 2 Chronicles 11:23, Rehoboam provided abundant provisions for his dispersed sons. The word emphasizes prepared food or traveling provisions rather than raw ingredients. BDB notes this may be an Aramaic borrowing into later Hebrew.

(2×) Refers to food or provisions, particularly prepared sustenance for journeys or sustenance. Genesis uses it alongside grain and bread in Joseph's generous supply to his father, while Chronicles describes abundant provisions given to royal sons. Spanish uses 'alimento' and 'provisiones' (food/provisions), German 'Nahrung' (nourishment), emphasizing prepared sustenance. Some scholars detect Aramaic influence in this term, possibly explaining its relative rarity in Hebrew biblical texts. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-food, the-provisions | es: el-alimento, y-provisiones | fr: [המזון], et-nourriture | de: [המזון], und-Nahrung Gen 45:23; 2Chr 11:23

מָזוֹן H4203 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

food (Aramaic noun); sustenance or nourishment

This Aramaic noun appears only in Daniel 4:12 and 4:21, both describing Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree that provided food for all. The Aramaic context fits Daniel's bilingual structure (chapters 2-7 in Aramaic). Like its Hebrew cognate, it denotes food or sustenance. The dream imagery depicts a cosmic tree whose abundant food feeds all creatures—a symbol of imperial provision later interpreted as Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom. The word emphasizes nourishment and sustenance available from this source.

(2×) The Aramaic term for food or nourishment, appearing exclusively in the symbolic vision of Nebuchadnezzar's great tree that provided sustenance for all living things. Spanish uses 'alimento' (food/nourishment), matching the Hebrew cognate. The context emphasizes abundant provision—the tree's fruit and foliage providing food for beasts and birds—symbolizing the king's empire as a source of sustenance for subject peoples before divine judgment humbles him. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-food | es: y-alimento | fr: et-nourriture | de: [ומזון] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:21

מָזוֹר H4204 N-ms (1×)

Trap, snare, or net; a treacherous device set by false friends (meaning uncertain)

This obscure term appears in Obadiah 7, where Edom's allies 'set a trap beneath you.' The exact meaning remains debated—ancient versions suggest 'net,' 'snare,' 'ambush,' or 'stumbling block.' The context is clear: those Edom trusted as friends will betray them, placing some kind of hidden danger in their path. Whether a physical trap or a metaphorical stumbling block, the word conveys treachery and betrayal. The uncertainty of translation reflects how rare and difficult this Hebrew term is.

(1×) A treacherous device or snare set by false allies in Obadiah's prophecy against Edom. Ancient translators diverged significantly—some seeing a physical net or trap, others understanding it metaphorically as stumbling block or ambush. The context emphasizes betrayal by trusted confederates who place hidden danger in Edom's path. The term's obscurity matches the stealthy nature of the treachery it describes. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: trap | es: trampa | fr: piège | de: eine-Falle Obad 1:7

מָזוֹר H4205 N-ms (3×)

wound, sore, injury requiring treatment

A noun denoting a wound or sore, specifically one requiring treatment or pressing out of infected matter. It appears only in prophetic texts as a metaphor for Israel and Judah's spiritual and national condition. Jeremiah laments that there is no healing medicine for the wound (30:13). Hosea twice states that Israel's wound cannot be healed, even by Assyria's power (5:13, twice). The term emphasizes not just injury but incurable, festering damage that human remedies cannot address.

(3×) Translations uniformly identify wounds or sores: Spanish 'llaga' (sore), English 'wound.' Jeremiah 30:13 describes Judah's desperate condition—a wound with no healing medicine, no one to bind it up, requiring divine intervention. Hosea 5:13 uses the metaphor twice: Ephraim saw his sickness and Judah his wound, but neither Assyria nor any human power could heal these conditions. Only repentance and return to God could cure what sin had inflicted. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: for-healing, his-wound, wound | es: llaga, para-sanar, su-llaga | fr: [למזור], maladie | de: [למזור], [מזור], [מזרו] Jer 30:13; Hos 5:13

מְזַח H4206a N-ms (2×)

belt, girdle (noun); a waist band or restraint

This noun denotes a belt or girdle, possibly a loanword from Egyptian. Psalm 109:19 uses it in simile—let the wicked's curse enfold him 'like a garment' and 'like a belt.' Isaiah 23:10 employs it metaphorically for restraint, though the text is disputed. The word emphasizes the binding, encircling function of a belt worn at the waist. The Egyptian etymology (if correct) suggests possible borrowing of both the garment and its name from Egypt.

(2×) Refers to a belt or girdle worn at the waist, used literally (Ps 109:19) in simile for curse binding the wicked as clothing and belt bind the body, and figuratively (Isa 23:10) for restraint (though this text is uncertain). Spanish uses 'cinturón' and 'cinto' (belt/girdle), German 'belt,' French 'agrafe' (clasp/fastener). If the Egyptian loanword theory is correct, this may represent a specific style of Egyptian waist-belt adopted into Israelite dress. BELT GIRDLE SASH

en: and-like-a-belt, restraint | es: cinturón, y-como-cinto | fr: [מזח], et-à-agrafe | de: [מזח], und-wie-ein-belt Ps 109:19; Isa 23:10

מְזִיַח H4206b Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Belt, girdle, or waistband; a garment symbolizing strength and military readiness

This term for a belt or girdle appears in Job 12:21, where God 'loosens the belt of the mighty,' making them weak and defenseless.

In ancient warfare, the girdle secured weapons and garments, enabling quick movement and readiness for battle. To loosen someone's belt was to disarm and humiliate them, removing their capacity for action. The image captures how God can instantly reverse the fortunes of the powerful, turning their strength to weakness by a simple ungirding.

(1×) A military belt or girdle whose removal symbolizes the loss of power and readiness. Job 12:21 uses the loosening of the mighty's belt to illustrate God's sovereign ability to weaken the strong. The belt secured weapons and clothing for battle, so ungirding represents disarmament and vulnerability. This single image captures the reversal from strength to helplessness at God's decree. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-belt-of | es: y-el-cinturón-de | fr: et-ומזית | de: [ומזית] Job 12:21

מַזְלֵג H4207a Conj-w (2×)

fork (noun); a three-pronged sacrificial implement

This noun denotes a three-pronged fork used in sacrificial rituals. Both occurrences in 1 Samuel 2:13-14 describe the corrupt practice of Eli's sons, who used this fork to claim meat from sacrifices while they were cooking. The text specifies it was 'the fork with three prongs,' clarifying its design. This implements corrupt priestly abuse by claiming portions before God received His due through proper burning. The fork becomes an instrument of sacrilege in the narrative.

(2×) A three-pronged implement used for handling sacrificial meat, appearing only in the account of Eli's sons' corruption. They would thrust this fork into the cooking pot and claim whatever it brought up, violating proper sacrificial procedure. Spanish uses 'garfio/garfio' (hook/fork), while other languages transliterate or use 'fork,' emphasizing the utensil's function in the abuse that brought divine judgment on Eli's house. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-the-fork, the-fork | es: el-garfio, y-el-garfio | fr: et-le-fork, le-fork | de: der-fork, und-der-fork 1Sam 2:13; 1Sam 2:14

מִזְלָגָה H4207b Conj-w (5×)

forks, flesh-hooks; three-pronged sacrificial implements used at the altar for handling offerings

The מִזְלָגָה (always plural in the Hebrew Bible) refers to large forks or flesh-hooks used in sacrificial service. These implements belonged to the tabernacle altar (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14) and later to Solomon's temple (1 Chr 28:17; 2 Chr 4:16). Spanish garfios ('hooks') and French fourchettes ('forks') both capture the pronged nature of the tool. The consistent listing alongside basins, shovels, and firepans marks these as standard cultic equipment for handling burnt offerings.

(5×) Sacrificial forks or flesh-hooks for handling offerings on the altar. All five references place them in inventories of cultic implements — three in the Priestly tabernacle texts (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14) and two in temple records (1 Chr 28:17; 2 Chr 4:16). They appear alongside shovels, basins, and firepans as standard altar equipment. The Spanish garfios emphasizes their hooking function, while French fourchettes highlights the pronged fork shape; both illuminate an implement designed for lifting and turning meat on the sacrificial fire. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: And-the-forks, and-its-forks, the-forks | es: Y-los-garfios, los-garfios, y-sus-garfios | fr: [המזלגות], [והמזלגות], et-son-fourchettes | de: [המזלגות], [והמזלגות], der-Gabeln Exod 27:3; Exod 38:3; Num 4:14; 1Chr 28:17; 2Chr 4:16

מַזָּלוֹת H4208 Conj-w (1×)

Constellations, likely the signs of the zodiac worshiped as astral deities in ancient paganism

This term appears in 2 Kings 23:5 in the list of pagan worship practices that King Josiah abolished. The people had been burning incense to Baal, the sun, the moon, 'the constellations,' and all the host of heaven. The word likely refers to zodiacal signs or other star groups venerated as divine powers. This Assyrian loan-word reflects how Mesopotamian astral religion had infiltrated Judean worship. Josiah's reform targeted these stellar deities as part of purging foreign religious influences.

(1×) Heavenly constellations worshiped as deities, appearing in the catalog of pagan practices Josiah eradicated. Likely referring to zodiacal signs or other star groupings venerated in Mesopotamian religion. This Assyrian loan-word reveals how deeply Assyrian astral worship had penetrated Judean religious life. The term stands in a list with Baal, sun, moon, and heavenly host, showing how the night sky itself had become an object of idolatrous devotion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to-the-constellations | es: y-a-las-constelaciones | fr: et-à-le-constellations | de: und-zu-der-constellations 2Kgs 23:5

מְזִמָּה H4209 Conj-w / N-fs (19×)

Purpose or plan (neutral); discretion or prudence (positive, in Proverbs); wicked scheme or device (negative, in Psalms/Prophets).

The noun mezimmah is one of Hebrew's most morally flexible words — capable of describing godly wisdom and satanic cunning with equal ease. In Proverbs, it stands alongside knowledge and understanding as a positive intellectual virtue: the 'discretion' that guards the young from folly (Prov 1:4; 2:11; 3:21). But in the Psalms and Prophets, the same word darkens into 'wicked schemes' and 'evil devices' hatched against the righteous (Ps 10:2; 21:11; 37:7). Spanish navigates this polarity with discrecion versus maquinaciones, while German shifts between Besonnenheit (prudence) and Raenke (scheming). The neutral middle ground appears when mezimmah describes God's own sovereign purposes — plans that are neither good nor evil in themselves but simply the outworking of divine intention (Job 42:2; Jer 23:20; 51:11).

1. evil scheme, wicked device (9×) An evil scheme, wicked device, or malicious plot hatched against the innocent — the negative pole of mezimmah's moral range. Nine occurrences cluster in Psalms and wisdom complaint: 'the wicked in his pride persecutes the poor; let them be caught in the schemes they have devised' (Ps 10:2). See also Ps 21:11 and Ps 139:20, where enemies lift up God's name for evil purpose. Spanish maquinaciones and tramas, French dessein (in pejorative context), and German Raenke all mark this as cunning turned malevolent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-scheme, and-schemes, evil-devices | es: en-tramas, la-maldad, maquinaciones | fr: [המזמתה], dans-dessein, de-dessein | de: Raenke, [המזמתה], ein-scheme Job 21:27; Ps 10:2; Ps 21:11; Ps 37:7; Ps 139:20

2. discretion, prudence (5×) Discretion, prudence, or the faculty of wise deliberation — the positive pole, concentrated entirely in Proverbs' wisdom vocabulary. Five occurrences pair mezimmah with knowledge (da'at, Prov 1:4; 5:2), understanding (tevunah, Prov 2:11), and resourcefulness (tushiyyah, Prov 3:21). The sage commends discretion as a protective virtue: 'Discretion will guard you, understanding will watch over you' (Prov 2:11). Spanish discrecion, French discernement, and German Besonnenheit all deploy dedicated wisdom vocabulary here, distinguishing this sense clearly from the scheming of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-discretion, discretion | es: Discreción, discreciones, pensamientos | fr: dessein, et-dessein | de: Besonnenheit, Raenke, und-Besonnenheit Prov 1:4; Prov 2:11; Prov 3:21; Prov 5:2; Prov 8:12

3. purpose, plan, thought (5×) A purpose, plan, or considered intention — morally neutral, describing the deliberate designs of God or humans without inherent ethical judgment. Five occurrences include Job's confession, 'no purpose of yours can be thwarted' (Job 42:2), and Jeremiah's prophetic formula where God's wrath accomplishes 'the purposes of his heart' (Jer 23:20; 30:24; 51:11). Spanish pensamientos and planes, French dessein (neutral), and German Vorhaben reflect the cognitive-planning sense without moral coloring. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: any-purpose, his-plan, his-thoughts | es: pensamiento, pensamientos-de, planes-de | fr: [מזמות], [מזמתו], de-dessein | de: Besonnenheit, [מזמות], [מזמתו] Job 42:2; Ps 10:4; Jer 23:20; Jer 30:24; Jer 51:11

מִזְמוֹר H4210 N-ms (57×)

mizmor – a psalm; a technical superscription term for a musical composition sung with instrumental accompaniment

The masculine noun mizmor, derived from the root z-m-r ('to make music, to sing with instruments'), is a technical liturgical term appearing exclusively in the superscriptions of 57 psalms. It designates a composition intended for sung performance with instrumental accompaniment, distinguishing it from other superscription terms like shir ('song'), maskil ('contemplative poem'), or miktam. The word never occurs in the body of a psalm or elsewhere in the Hebrew Bible – only in titles. Arabic mazamir, Syriac mazmure, and Ethiopic mezmur are all loan-words from this Hebrew term, testimony to its influence on the worship vocabulary of multiple Semitic traditions. Spanish Salmo, French psaume, and German Psalm all render it as a single, consistent genre label.

(57×) A technical term for a psalm meant for musical performance, confined to superscriptions of 57 psalms. It appears alone (Ps 98:1), with Davidic attribution (Ps 3:1; 23:1), or paired with shir (Ps 30:1; 92:1). Cognate forms in Arabic, Syriac, and Ethiopic confirm it as the pan-Semitic word for psalmody. Spanish Salmo, French psaume, and German Psalm render it uniformly. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: a-psalm | es: Salmo, salmo | fr: psaume | de: ein-Psalm Ps 3:1; Ps 4:1; Ps 5:1; Ps 6:1; Ps 8:1

מַזְמֵרָה H4211 Prep-b (4×)

pruning hooks or knives for cutting vines

Agricultural implements used for trimming grapevines and other plants, featured prominently in prophetic imagery about war and peace. Isaiah and Micah envision a future where nations 'beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks' (Isaiah 2:4, Micah 4:3), symbolizing universal peace. Joel reverses the image: 'beat your plowshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears' (Joel 3:10), depicting preparation for divine judgment. The tool thus becomes a powerful symbol for the transformation between warfare and agriculture.

(4×) A curved knife or hook used for pruning vines and cutting away shoots (Isaiah 18:5). The cross-linguistic glosses ('pruning hooks,' 'podaderas,' 'serpette') consistently identify it as a horticultural tool. Its appearance in prophetic literature transforms it into a symbol —the conversion of military weapons into farming tools represents the establishment of God's peace, while the reverse symbolizes the mobilization of all resources for eschatological conflict. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: and-your-pruning-hooks, into-pruning-hooks, with-pruning-hooks | es: con-podaderas, en-podaderas, y-podaderas-de-vosotros | fr: [במזמרות], [למזמרות], et-serpette | de: [במזמרות], [ומזמרתיכם], [למזמרות] Isa 2:4; Isa 18:5; Joel 3:10; Mic 4:3

מִזַּמֶּרֶת H4212 Art / N-fp (5×)

snuffers; temple utensils used for trimming or extinguishing lamp wicks

The מְזַמֶּרֶת (always plural) designates snuffers or wick-trimmers used in temple lampstand maintenance. Solomon's temple inventory lists golden snuffers among the sacred furnishings (1 Kgs 7:50; 2 Chr 4:22). They reappear in accounts of temple plunder: Babylonian forces carried them away as bronze (2 Kgs 25:14; Jer 52:18), while 2 Kings 12:13 notes they were not made from repair funds. Spanish despabiladeras ('wick-trimmers') precisely captures their function. The root זמר in its cutting sense connects to the act of trimming wicks.

(5×) Temple snuffers or wick-trimmers for maintaining the lampstand. In 1 Kings 7:50 and 2 Chronicles 4:22 they are listed as gold furnishings of Solomon's temple. The deportation accounts (2 Kgs 25:14; Jer 52:18) record their seizure as bronze items, while 2 Kings 12:13 excludes them from temple repair expenditures. Spanish despabiladeras ('wick-trimmers') uniquely clarifies the function — trimming and snuffing lamp wicks — while the root זמר ('to cut, prune') connects to vinedressing imagery applied here to sacred lamp care. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-the-snuffers, snuffers, the-snuffers | es: Y-las-despabiladeras, despabiladeras, las-despabiladeras | fr: [והמזמרות], [המזמרות], et-le-snuffers | de: [והמזמרות], [המזמרות], der-snuffers 1Kgs 7:50; 2Kgs 12:13; 2Kgs 25:14; 2Chr 4:22; Jer 52:18

מְזְעָר H4213 Adv (4×)

a little, very small, trifling amount

An intensifying expression meaning 'very little' or 'a trifle,' used to emphasize the brevity of time or smallness of number. Isaiah uses it to stress how quickly God will act: 'yet a very little while' (Isaiah 10:25, 29:17) before divine intervention transforms the situation. It also describes the pitifully small remnant that will survive judgment (Isaiah 16:14, 24:6). The doubled expression creates emphasis—not just 'little' but emphatically minimal.

(4×) An emphatic diminutive meaning 'very little' or 'extremely small,' intensifying the ordinary word for 'little' (מְעַט). All occurrences are in Isaiah, where it stresses either the brevity of time before God acts or the tiny size of the surviving remnant. The multilingual glosses ('very little,' 'insignificante,' 'un peu') capture the minimizing force, though the rhetorical emphasis can be difficult to render precisely. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: small, very-little, while | es: insignificante, más, pocos | fr: un-peu | de: ein-wenig Isa 10:25; Isa 16:14; Isa 24:6; Isa 29:17

מִזְרֶה H4214 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

winnowing fork (noun); a six-pronged implement for tossing grain to separate chaff

This noun denotes a winnowing fork or pitch-fork, a six-pronged agricultural implement used to toss grain into the wind, separating lighter chaff from heavier kernels. Isaiah 30:24 describes winnowing fodder 'with shovel and fork,' depicting agricultural abundance. Jeremiah 15:7 uses it metaphorically—'I will winnow them with a fork'—as an image of God's judgment scattering His people. The specific six-prong design (from Arabic cognate) suited it for handling large quantities of cut grain or straw.

(2×) A multi-pronged agricultural tool for winnowing—tossing threshed grain into the wind to separate edible kernels from chaff. Isaiah uses it literally in describing abundant fodder preparation, Jeremiah metaphorically for divine judgment scattering Israel. Spanish uses 'aventador' and 'pala' (winnowing fan/shovel), while other languages transliterate or use 'fork,' reflecting the implement's specialized function in grain processing and its powerful metaphorical potential for separation and scattering. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-with-fork, with-a-winnowing-fork | es: con-aventador, y-con-pala | fr: [במזרה], [ובמזרה] | de: [במזרה], [ובמזרה] Isa 30:24; Jer 15:7

זָרָה H4215 Conj-w (1×)

Scattering winds, dispersing tempests that blow from storehouses in Job's cosmic imagery

This term appears in Job 37:9, where Elihu describes how 'the tempest comes from its chamber, and cold from the scattering winds.' The word describes winds that scatter or disperse, perhaps imagined as agents that spread cold throughout the earth. Ancient cosmology pictured winds stored in heavenly chambers, released by God to accomplish His purposes. The imagery emphasizes divine control over weather patterns—cold and storm come forth from their appointed places at God's command.

(1×) Dispersing or scattering winds that spread cold across the earth, mentioned in Elihu's speech about God's meteorological control. The term fits ancient Near Eastern cosmology where winds were stored in celestial chambers and released purposefully. These scattering agents carry cold from its origin point, distributing it according to divine design. The image underscores God's mastery over natural forces that humans experience but cannot command. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: and-from-scattering-winds | es: y-de-esparcidores | fr: et-ומזרים | de: [ומזרים] Job 37:9

מַזָּלוֹת H4216 N-mp (1×)

Mazzaroth, possibly the zodiacal constellations or a specific star group in God's cosmic inventory

This mysterious astronomical term appears only in Job 38:32, where God challenges Job: 'Can you bring forth Mazzaroth in its season?' The exact identity remains uncertain—possibly the zodiac, the twelve constellations, or a specific stellar formation. Ancient translators simply transliterated it, unable to identify the referent precisely. The context makes clear that Mazzaroth represents some celestial phenomenon beyond human control, part of God's demonstration of cosmic sovereignty. Whatever stars are meant, they obey only God's timing.

(1×) An unidentified astronomical phenomenon, possibly zodiacal constellations or a major star group, appearing in God's interrogation of Job. The term defied ancient translators and remains enigmatic today. Context indicates a celestial body or grouping with appointed seasons, used to demonstrate that God alone commands the heavenly patterns. The mystery of Mazzaroth's identity reinforces the passage's theme—the cosmos contains wonders beyond human comprehension. MOON CELESTIAL BODY

en: Mazzaroth | es: constelaciones | fr: מזרות | de: [מזרות] Job 38:32

מִזְרָח H4217 N-msc (74×)

The east as a cardinal direction; also the rising of the sun, often in the phrase 'mizrach hashemesh.'

Derived from the root zarach ('to rise, shine'), mizrach names the east by its most visible daily phenomenon — the place where the sun comes up. In most of its 56 directional uses, it functions as a pure compass point for tribal allotments, camp positions, and boundary descriptions (Num 2:3; 34:15). In 18 passages, however, the construct phrase mizrach hashemesh ('rising of the sun') preserves the word's etymological vividness, evoking the sunrise itself as a cosmic marker. The phrase 'from the rising of the sun to its setting' (Ps 113:3; Mal 1:11) became a powerful idiom for universal scope — everywhere on earth.

1. east, cardinal direction (56×) The cardinal direction east, used absolutely or with directional heh to indicate location, orientation, or geographic boundary. This sense dominates with 56 occurrences, confirmed by translations using straightforward directional terms: Spanish 'al oriente/hacia el este,' French 'orient/vers l'est,' German 'Osten.' The tabernacle entrance faced eastward (Num 3:38), tribal territories were assigned 'on the east side' (Num 2:3; 32:19), and Ezekiel's temple vision orients toward the east gate (Ezek 43:1-2; 47:1-2). EAST AND SUNRISE

en: eastward | es: al-oriente, hacia-el-este, hacia-el-oriente | fr: eastward, orient, vers-l'est | de: Osten, eastward Exod 38:13; Num 2:3; Num 3:38; Num 32:19; Num 34:15

2. rising of the sun (18×) The rising of the sun — the etymological sense preserved in the construct phrase mizrach hashemesh. Across 18 occurrences, translations reflect the sunrise imagery: Spanish 'desde la salida de' ('from the going-out of'), French 'de levant du' ('from the rising of'). Moses set apart cities of refuge 'toward the sunrise' (Deut 4:41), and the merism 'from the rising of the sun to its setting' expresses universal extent (Ps 50:1; 113:3; Mal 1:11). God calls a bird of prey 'from the east' — literally 'from the sunrise' (Isa 41:2; 46:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-the-rising-of, from-rising-of, from-rising-of- | es: Desde-la-salida-de, al-naciente-de, al-oriente-de | fr: de-levant-du-, de-lever, de-l'orient | de: [ממזרח], rising-von, sunrise-von Num 21:11; Deut 4:41; Deut 4:47; Josh 1:15; Josh 12:1

מִזְרָע H4218 N-msc (1×)

Sown land, seedland, cultivated fields along the Nile subject to judgment and desolation

This agricultural term appears in Isaiah 19:7, describing judgment on Egypt: 'the sown land of the Nile will become dry and blow away.' The Nile's annual flooding made Egyptian agriculture incredibly productive, with seedlands along the river yielding abundant crops. For these fields to dry up and scatter like dust represented catastrophic reversal—Egypt's agricultural foundation destroyed. The term emphasizes cultivated land specifically, the result of human labor and Nile fertility working together. Their destruction meant famine and economic collapse.

(1×) Cultivated seedlands along the Nile River, appearing in Isaiah's prophecy of Egyptian judgment. These sown fields depended on the river's annual flooding for fertility. The oracle predicts these productive agricultural zones will dry up and blow away, reversing Egypt's famous abundance. The term captures both the human cultivation and natural irrigation that together produced Egypt's wealth, now subject to devastating divine judgment. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: sown-land-of | es: sembradío-de | fr: [מזרע] | de: [מזרע] Isa 19:7

מִזְרָק H4219 N-mp (32×)

bowl, basin — a ritual vessel for catching and sprinkling sacrificial blood or presenting offerings

Mizraq derives from the root zaraq ('to throw, sprinkle') and names a basin designed for tossing or dashing liquids, appearing 32 times almost entirely in ritual contexts. The vast majority of occurrences are in Numbers 7, where each tribal prince presents a silver mizraq filled with fine flour and oil as a grain offering at the tabernacle dedication (Num 7:13-85, repeated twelve times in formulaic cadence). The priestly inventory lists it among the altar furnishings alongside shovels and forks (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14), and Solomon's temple features both bronze and gold versions (1 Kgs 7:40-50). A single non-cultic use stands out: Amos condemns the Samarian elite who drink wine from mizraqim, co-opting sacred vessels for luxurious feasting (Amos 6:6). Zechariah envisions a day when even ordinary cooking pots will be as holy as the mizraqot before the altar (Zech 14:20).

sacrificial bowl or basin (32×) A ritual bowl or basin used for catching, holding, and sprinkling sacrificial blood or presenting offerings. Named from zaraq ('to throw/sprinkle'), it is standard altar equipment (Exod 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14). Twelve silver bowls filled with grain offerings dominate the tribal dedication in Numbers 7. Solomon's temple had both bronze and gold versions (1 Kgs 7:40-50). Amos 6:6 condemns secular misuse for wine-drinking; Zechariah 14:20 envisions universal holiness extending to these vessels. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-bowls, bowl-of, the-bowl | es: el-tazón, los-tazones, tazón | fr: [המזרקות], [המזרקת], [והמזרקות] | de: [המזרקות], [המזרקת], [והמזרקות] Exod 27:3; Exod 38:3; Num 4:14; Num 7:13; Num 7:19

מֵחַ H4220 N-mp (2×)

fatling, fat animal (noun); a fattened animal for sacrifice or consumption

This plural noun denotes fatlings or fattened animals, used for choice sacrifices or food. Psalm 66:15 lists 'burnt offerings of fatlings' among premium sacrifices. Isaiah 5:17's usage is textually disputed—some read it as 'fatlings' parallel to lambs (representing the rich), others emend the text. The Phoenician cognate means 'fat' as an adjective; the nominal use emphasizes animals specifically fattened for special purposes, making them more valuable and desirable.

(2×) Refers to fattened animals, particularly those chosen for burnt offerings or consumption, emphasizing their premium quality. The Psalm context lists them among choice sacrifices offered in fulfillment of vows. Spanish uses 'animales cebados' and 'engordados' (fattened animals), clearly indicating livestock deliberately fed to increase size and richness. The Isaiah passage may use this metaphorically for wealthy people (if the text is correct), extending the agricultural image to social critique. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: fat-ones, fatlings | es: animales-cebados, engordados | fr: [מחים], de-gras | de: [מחים], fatlings Ps 66:15; Isa 5:17

מֹחַ H4221 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)
Marrow, the soft tissue inside bones; metaphor for vitality, prosperity, and bodily vigor
This anatomical term appears in Job 21:24, describing the wicked person who dies in prosperity: 'his bones are full of marrow.' Marrow represented the essence of vitality and health in ancient physiology. Full, moist marrow meant a body in its prime, well-nourished and vigorous. Job uses this image to challenge simplistic retribution theology—the wicked don't always suffer physically before death; some die with marrow-filled bones, in full strength. The metaphor makes bodily health a measure of life's quality.

(1×) The vital tissue filling healthy bones, used metaphorically in Job's challenge to retribution theology. Marrow-filled bones indicated peak physical condition, prosperity, and vigor. Job observes that some wicked people die in this state of bodily fullness rather than wasting away. The physiological detail makes concrete Job's theological point—divine justice doesn't always manifest as visible physical decline before death. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-marrow-of | es: y-el-tuétano-de | fr: et-מֹחַ | de: [מֹחַ] Job 21:24

מָחָא H4222 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (3×)
to clap hands in joy or triumph
A verb meaning to clap or strike the hands together, typically expressing joy or exultation. The psalmist calls on rivers to clap their hands before the Lord (98:8). Isaiah prophesies that even the trees of the field will clap their hands in joy at the coming restoration (55:12). Ezekiel uses it negatively for malicious clapping over Israel's downfall (25:6). The primary sense is joyful celebration, with inanimate creation personified as joining in worship and rejoicing.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence consistently points to hand-clapping: Spanish 'aplaudir, batir-palmas' (applaud, clap), English 'clap.' Psalm 98:8 personifies rivers clapping at God's coming to judge the earth. Isaiah 55:12 envisions all field trees clapping hands as creation celebrates redemption. Ezekiel 25:6 condemns Ammon for maliciously clapping hands over Judah's destruction. The gesture expresses exultant joy, whether in worship or (negatively) in schadenfreude. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: let-them-clap, will-clap-, you-clapped | es: aplaudan, aplaudirán-, batistepalmas | fr: [יִמְחֲאוּ], frapper | de: [יִמְחֲאוּ], [מְחַאךָ], lass-ihnen-clap Ps 98:8; Isa 55:12; Ezek 25:6

מְחָא H4223 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (4×)
to strike, smite, hinder (Aramaic)
An Aramaic verb meaning to strike or smite, appearing in Daniel's apocalyptic visions and in Ezra's account of Persian-period events. In Daniel 2:34-35, the stone that strikes the great image represents God's kingdom destroying earthly empires. The idiom 'strike his hand' (Daniel 4:35) means to hinder or restrain someone from their purpose. Ezra 6:11 uses it in the decree prescribing impalement as punishment for violating the royal edict—the offender shall be 'struck' or nailed to a beam.

(4×) To strike, smite, or hinder, with applications ranging from physical impact to administrative punishment. The multilingual evidence shows varied renderings: literal striking ('struck,' 'hirió') and metaphorical restraint ('can strike,' 'detenga'). Daniel's vision of the stone striking the image made this verb significant in apocalyptic literature as a symbol of divine intervention against human kingdoms. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-struck, can-strike, let-him-be-impaled | es: detenga, e-hirió, hirió | fr: [וּמְחַת], [יִמְחָא], [יִתְמְחָא] | de: [וּמְחַת], [יִמְחָא], [יִתְמְחָא] Ezra 6:11; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:35; Dan 4:35

מַחֲבֵא H4224a Prep-k / N-msc (1×)
Hiding place, shelter, refuge from wind and storm; metaphor for protective leadership
This term appears in Isaiah 32:2, describing righteous rulers who will be 'like a hiding place from the wind, a shelter from the storm.' The word evokes physical refuges where travelers could escape harsh weather—caves, rock formations, or man-made structures. Isaiah transforms this concrete image into a political metaphor: good leaders provide the same protection to their people that a physical shelter offers from elements. The comparison makes governance tactile and immediate—rulers should be as reliably protective as a windbreak.

(1×) A physical refuge from harsh weather, used metaphorically in Isaiah's vision of righteous leadership. The term describes places of shelter from wind and tempest, which become analogies for how just rulers protect vulnerable people. This concrete image makes governance visceral—leaders should provide the same immediate, reliable protection as a solid hiding place offers travelers caught in storms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-wind | es: como-escondite-de | fr: [כְּמַחֲבֵא] | de: [כְּמַחֲבֵא] Isa 32:2

מַחֲבֵא H4224b Art / N-mp (1×)
Hiding places, concealed locations where David might take refuge from Saul's pursuit
This term appears in 1 Samuel 23:23, where Saul tells his informants: 'Learn all the hiding places where David hides.' The word encompasses natural and man-made refuges—caves, wilderness strongholds, rocky terrain where a fugitive could evade pursuers. Saul's obsessive quest to map every possible hiding place shows his determination to eliminate David. The plural emphasizes how many potential refuges existed in Judean wilderness, making the hunter's task extremely difficult. Geography itself became David's ally through these numerous hiding places.

(1×) Multiple concealed refuges in wilderness terrain, appearing in Saul's instructions to locate David. The plural form emphasizes the abundance of caves, rocks, and strongholds in Judean wilderness that could shelter a fugitive. Saul's command to catalog all these hiding places reveals both his thoroughness and the geographical challenge he faced. The term captures how landscape features became tactical assets in the pursuit narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-hiding-places | es: los-escondites | fr: le-cachant-lieux | de: der-verbergend-Orte 1Sam 23:23

מַחְבֶּרֶת H4225 Prep-b (8×)
Place of joining, seam, coupling; the point where two curtain panels or ephod pieces connect in tabernacle construction.
This feminine noun refers to a point of joining or coupling – the seam where two pieces of fabric are connected. It appears exclusively in the Exodus tabernacle narratives, describing both the joining of curtain sets (Exod 26:4-5; 36:11-12, 17) and the coupling of the ephod's shoulder-pieces (Exod 28:27; 39:20). Spanish union and French joignant highlight the active sense of bringing together, while the English 'seam' captures the resulting line of connection. Every occurrence belongs to the Priestly source's meticulous architectural vocabulary.

joining / seam (textile connection) (8×) The place or point of joining where two textile pieces are coupled together, used exclusively of tabernacle construction. In Exod 26:4-5 and 36:11-12, 17, it denotes the seam where curtain panels meet to form a continuous covering. In Exod 28:27 and 39:20, it describes the coupling point of the ephod's shoulder-pieces. Spanish union ('joining'), French joignant ('the joining place'), and German joining all highlight the active connection. The word is a technical term from the Priestly source's detailed architectural vocabulary, derived from the root chabar ('to join, couple'). LINEN AND FABRIC
en: in-the-joining, its-joining, its-seam | es: en-la-unión, su-juntura, su-unión | fr: dans-le-joignant, son-joignant, son-seam | de: in-der-joining, sein-joining, sein-seam Exod 26:4; Exod 26:5; Exod 28:27; Exod 36:11

מְחַבֶּרֶת H4226 Conj-w (2×)
clamp, coupling (noun); a fastener joining building materials
This plural noun denotes clamps, couplings, or binders used in construction. First Chronicles 22:3 mentions iron clamps David provided for the temple, while 2 Chronicles 34:11 refers to wooden couplings for building beams during Josiah's temple repairs. The term emphasizes connecting or joining separate pieces—whether metal clamps holding stonework together or wooden joiners coupling beams. The word reflects ancient building technology for creating structural integrity through deliberate fastening.

(2×) Refers to architectural fasteners—iron clamps or wooden couplings—used to join structural elements in temple construction. The iron clamps (1 Chr 22:3) likely held stones together, while the wooden couplings (2 Chr 34:11) joined timber beams. Spanish uses 'uniones' and 'vigas' (unions/joints and beams), German and French transliterate, reflecting technical vocabulary for construction hardware that modern readers may not immediately recognize but which was essential for ancient monumental architecture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-the-clamps, for-the-couplings | es: para-las-vigas, y-para-las-uniones | fr: [ולמחברות], [למחברות] | de: [ולמחברות], [למחברות] 1Chr 22:3; 2Chr 34:11

מַחֲבַת H4227 N-fs (5×)

flat plate, griddle, or pan for baking grain offerings; also an iron plate used symbolically as a siege wall

The מַחֲבַת is a flat baking surface used primarily for preparing the grain offering (minḥah). Leviticus specifies that offerings made on the griddle are distinct from those prepared in a deep pan (2:5; 6:14; 7:9), and 1 Chronicles 23:29 lists griddle-cakes among Levitical provisions. In Ezekiel 4:3, an iron מַחֲבַת serves a strikingly different purpose: the prophet places it as a symbolic iron wall between himself and a model of besieged Jerusalem. Spanish sartén ('frying pan') and French poêle ('skillet') both point to a flat cooking surface.

(5×) A flat baking plate or griddle for preparing grain offerings. Leviticus 2:5, 6:14, and 7:9 prescribe the griddle-baked minḥah as a distinct offering type, distinguished from deep-pan preparations. First Chronicles 23:29 includes griddle-cakes in the Levitical service inventory. Spanish sartén and French poêle consistently render a flat cooking implement. In Ezekiel 4:3, the same word designates an iron plate set up as a symbolic siege wall between the prophet and a clay model of Jerusalem — extending the flat-surface concept from culinary to prophetic-dramatic use. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: a-griddle, and-for-the-griddle, griddle-of | es: la-sartén, sartén, sartén-de | fr: [ולמחבת], le-griddle, poêle | de: [ולמחבת], [מחבת], der-griddle Lev 2:5; Lev 6:21; Lev 7:9; 1Chr 23:29; Ezek 4:3

מַחֲגֹרֶת H4228 N-fsc (1×)

Girding, a wrapped garment; specifically sackcloth worn as mourning or penitential dress

This term appears in Isaiah 3:24, part of a prophetic reversal of Jerusalem's luxury: 'instead of a fine robe, a girding of sackcloth.' The word describes how sackcloth was wrapped or bound around the body during mourning or repentance. While fine robes hung elegantly, sackcloth required deliberate girding—a rough, uncomfortable binding that matched the wearer's distressed state. The contrast between flowing garments and this crude wrapping intensifies Isaiah's message of coming judgment. External appearance will match internal devastation.

(1×) The wrapping or binding of sackcloth around the body in mourning or judgment, contrasted with elegant robes in Isaiah's oracle against Jerusalem's vanity. The term emphasizes the physical action of girding rough material, creating discomfort that externalized grief or penitence. This crude binding replaced the graceful drape of fine clothing, making the body's covering match the soul's distress during calamity. SACKCLOTH MOURNING

en: sackcloth | es: ceñidor-de | fr: [מחגרת] | de: [מחגרת] Isa 3:24

מָחָה H4229a V-Qal-InfAbs (34×)

Wipe, blot out; to erase by wiping — whether cleansing tears, obliterating names, or destroying the living from the earth

At its core, machah is the gesture of drawing a hand or cloth across a surface to remove what is there. From this concrete action radiates the full spectrum of biblical erasure: God wipes away tears from every face (Isa 25:8), but also blots out the memory of Amalek (Exod 17:14) and threatens to erase names from the book of life (Exod 32:33). The Flood narrative uses the word devastatingly — God 'wiped out' every living thing from the face of the ground (Gen 7:23). Spanish 'borrar' (to erase) and German 'auswischen' (to wipe out) capture the same dual physical-metaphorical range that makes this verb so theologically potent.

1. blot out, erase (15×) The Qal active sense of blotting out or erasing a written record, name, or sin — the dominant metaphorical usage. God declares 'I will blot out from my book whoever has sinned against me' (Exod 32:33); the memory of Amalek shall be blotted out (Exod 17:14); in Isaiah 43:25 God says 'I am he who blots out your transgressions.' Spanish 'borrar' and 'borrarás' consistently reflect this erasure-of-record sense across 15 occurrences. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: I-have-blotted-out, I-will-blot-him-out, I-will-blot-out | es: borra, borrar, borrarás | fr: Je—effacer-dehors, Je—effacer-lui-dehors, Je—wipe-dehors | de: [מחה], [מחיתי], blot-mich-heraus Gen 6:7; Gen 7:4; Exod 17:14; Exod 32:32

2. be blotted out (passive) (9×) The Nifal passive sense of being blotted out, erased, or destroyed — expressing the result of erasure upon the subject. In Genesis 7:23 'every living thing was wiped out'; Deuteronomy 25:6 aims to prevent a name being 'blotted out from Israel'; Psalm 69:28 prays 'let them be blotted out of the book of the living.' German renderings with passive constructions and French 'être effacé' confirm the passive voice across these nine instances. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-shall-be-blotted-out, and-they-were-wiped-out, be-blotted-out | es: Sean-borrados, se-borrará, sea-borrada | fr: [תמחה], devra-être-blotted-dehors, effacer | de: [ונמחו], [תמחה], lass-ihnen-sein-blotted-heraus Gen 7:23; Deut 25:6; Judg 21:17; Neh 4:5; Ps 69:28

3. wipe, wipe away (5×) The Qal active sense of physically wiping a surface clean or wiping away moisture — the concrete, tactile root meaning. In 2 Kings 21:13 God wipes Jerusalem 'as one wipes a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down'; Proverbs 30:20 describes the adulteress who 'eats and wipes her mouth'; Isaiah 25:8 promises God 'will wipe away tears from all faces.' Spanish 'limpiándolo' (cleaning it) and 'enjugará' (will dry) distinguish this physical action from metaphorical erasure. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: and-I-will-wipe, and-shall-wipe-away, and-wipes | es: limpiándolo, se-limpia, y-enjugará | fr: [ומחה], et-effacer, et-je-fera-wipe | de: [ומחה], [ומחתה], eins-wipes 2Kgs 21:13; Prov 30:20; Isa 25:8

4. destroy (causative) (3×) The Hifil causative sense of bringing about destruction or obliteration — intensifying the basic meaning into active annihilation. Nehemiah 13:14 pleads 'do not wipe out my good deeds'; Proverbs 31:3 warns against giving strength 'to what destroys kings'; Jeremiah 18:23 asks God not to blot out their sin. The causative stem adds the dimension of deliberately causing erasure rather than simply performing it. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: blot-out, to-what-destroys, wipe-out | es: a-las-que-destruyen, borres | fr: [תמח], [תמחי], à-effacer | de: [למחות], [תמח], [תמחי] Neh 13:14; Prov 31:3; Jer 18:23

5. wipe out, destroy (2×) The Qal active sense of annihilating or exterminating living beings from the earth, particularly in the context of divine judgment through the Flood. Genesis 7:23 records that God 'wiped out every living thing on the face of the ground,' and Numbers 5:23 describes the priest washing curses into the bitter water, which shall then 'wipe off' the written words. German 'vertilgt wurde' (was annihilated) captures the totality of this destructive erasure. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-shall-wipe-off, and-wiped-out | es: Y-borró, y-borrará | fr: et-devra-wipe-off, et-wiped-dehors | de: und-soll-auswischen-weg, und-vertilgt-wurde Gen 7:23; Num 5:23

מָחָה H4229b Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

Touch, reach, strike upon; describes a boundary line extending to contact a geographical feature

This verb appears in Numbers 34:11, describing Israel's eastern border: 'the boundary shall touch the shoulder of the Sea of Galilee.' The term suggests a border line reaching to make contact with a physical landmark. Some interpreters understand it as 'strike upon' or 'reach unto,' while others see it as 'run along by' or 'skirt.' The geographical context makes clear that the boundary extended until it met the lake's shore. This technical border description required precise vocabulary for territorial definition.

(1×) A boundary line making contact with or reaching to a geographical landmark, used in Numbers' technical description of Israel's eastern border. The verb describes how a territorial line extended until it touched the Sea of Galilee's shore. This precise geographical language was essential for establishing clear territorial claims. The term captures the moment when an abstract boundary line meets a concrete physical feature. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: and-touch | es: y-tocará | fr: et-toucher | de: und-beruehren Num 34:11

מָחָה H4229c V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

Full of marrow, rich and succulent; describes luxurious feast foods in Isaiah's eschatological vision

This descriptive term appears in Isaiah 25:6, where God prepares a feast on Mount Zion: 'fatty pieces full of marrow, aged wines well refined.' The phrase describes the richest, most luxurious meat—not just fat, but marrow-filled, indicating prime cuts from well-fed animals. Ancient feasting culture recognized marrow as the choicest delicacy, concentrated richness. Isaiah uses this culinary imagery to describe eschatological blessing—when God hosts the nations, the food will be the absolute finest available. Divine hospitality exceeds human imagination.

(1×) Meat saturated with marrow, representing the ultimate delicacy in Isaiah's vision of God's eschatological feast. The term intensifies the image of abundant fat by adding marrow-filled richness—the concentrated essence of well-fed animals. This double emphasis on luxury (fat AND marrow-filled) communicates the extravagant quality of divine hospitality when God hosts the nations on Mount Zion. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: full-of-marrow | es: llenos-de-tuétano | fr: [ממחים] | de: [ממחים] Isa 25:6

מְחוּגָה H4230 Conj-w (1×)

Compass, circle-drawing instrument used by idol-makers to craft their handmade gods

This technical term appears in Isaiah 44:13, describing how craftsmen manufacture idols: 'he marks it out with a compass.' The tool enabled artisans to draw perfect circles and curves on wood before carving. Isaiah's detailed description of idol-making becomes satire—the 'god' results from human technique and tools, no more divine than any carpentry project. The compass represents the planned, artificial nature of idol production. What worshipers revere as supernatural power began as lines drawn with a human instrument.

(1×) A drawing tool for making circular marks, appearing in Isaiah's satirical account of idol manufacturing. The compass allowed craftsmen to outline curves before carving wooden gods. Isaiah's mention of this specific tool emphasizes the planned, artificial process behind idols—they originate from measured circles drawn by human hands. The technical detail makes the absurdity explicit: what appears as deity started as compass-drawn lines. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-with-a-compass | es: y-con-compás | fr: [ובמחוגה] | de: [ובמחוגה] Isa 44:13

מָחוֹז H4231 N-msc (1×)

Haven, harbor, desired destination; the place of safety and rest at journey's end

This term appears in Psalm 107:30, concluding a vignette about sailors in a storm: 'he guided them to their desired haven.' The word describes a harbor or port of refuge where ships could anchor safely after dangerous voyaging. The psalmist uses maritime imagery to celebrate God's deliverance—just as He calms seas and guides ships to harbor, He brings His people safely through life's storms to their destination. The haven represents not just physical safety but arrival at the goal of desire.

(1×) A harbor or port city serving as safe destination after perilous sea travel, appearing in Psalm 107's imagery of divine deliverance. The term carries connotations of both safety and desire—the haven is where voyagers long to arrive. God's guidance brings storm-tossed sailors to this place of rest and completion. The maritime metaphor extends to all forms of divine rescue, where God leads through danger to desired refuge. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: a-haven-of | es: puerto-de | fr: de-port | de: ein-haven-von Ps 107:30

מְחוּיָאֵל H4232 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Mehujael / Mehiyael (proper noun); great-grandson of Cain in the Sethite genealogy

This name appears twice in Genesis 4:18, with slight spelling variations (Mehujael/Mehiyael), referring to the same person—the great-grandson of Cain and father of Methushael. The dual spelling reflects textual variation or possibly two forms of the same name. Etymology is disputed: possibilities include 'smitten of God' (from מחה 'to strike'), 'God gives life' (from חיה 'to live'), or a compound with the divine name El. The Septuagint's varied renderings reflect ancient interpretive uncertainty.

(2×) The personal name of Cain's great-grandson in the antediluvian genealogy, appearing with two Hebrew spellings in Genesis 4:18 (Mehujael and Mehiyael). All language traditions transliterate, though with slight variations reflecting the Hebrew ambiguity. This name, like others in Cain's line, shows the pattern of compound names incorporating El (God), even within the line descended from humanity's first murderer, suggesting the pervasive acknowledgment of deity even outside the covenant line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mechuyael, and-Mechiyael | es: Mejuyael, y-Mejiyael | fr: Mechuyael, et-Mechiyael | de: Mechujael, und-Mechijael Gen 4:18

מַחֲוִים H4233 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Mahavite, a gentilic or clan designation for Eliel, one of David's warriors

This term appears only in 1 Chronicles 11:46, identifying 'Eliel the Mahavite' among David's mighty men. The designation appears to be a clan or geographical identifier, though the exact reference remains uncertain. Some scholars suggest textual corruption, proposing emendations to 'the Mahanite' (from Mahanaim) or 'the Meunite' (from Maon). Ancient versions transliterated it differently, unable to locate the place or group. Despite the uncertainty, the term served to distinguish this Eliel from others in David's forces.

(1×) A designation identifying Eliel's origin or clan affiliation among David's elite warriors. The term's exact reference is uncertain—possibly a place name, tribal group, or family designation. Textual scholars debate whether the original read differently, suggesting locations like Mahanaim or Maon. Whatever its precise meaning, the gentilic distinguished this warrior from other men named Eliel in David's military ranks. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Machavite | es: el-majavita | fr: [המחוים] | de: [המחוים] 1Chr 11:46

מָחוֹל H4234 Prep-l / N-ms (6×)

Dance, dancing; a communal, joyful activity associated with worship, celebration, and the reversal of mourning.

A masculine noun for dance or dancing, frequently paired with musical instruments like the timbrel (תֹּף) and presented as the antithesis of mourning. The Psalms celebrate dance as an act of praise to the LORD (Ps 149:3; 150:4), and the turning of mourning into dancing marks divine deliverance (Ps 30:11). Jeremiah prophesies the restoration of Israel's joyful dancing (Jer 31:4, 13), while Lamentations 5:15 mourns its cessation. Spanish danza and French danse consistently render the term, while the Hebrew construct form מְחוֹל appears in both worship and communal festivity contexts.

dance, dancing (6×) Communal, celebratory dance associated with joy, worship, and the reversal of grief. The word appears in two primary settings: liturgical praise, where Israel is summoned to praise the LORD 'with dancing' accompanied by timbrel and lyre (Ps 149:3; 150:4), and prophetic/wisdom contexts where dance symbolizes restored joy. Psalm 30:11 declares 'You turned my mourning into dancing' (the opposite of מִסְפֵּד, lamentation), while Jeremiah 31:4, 13 promises the virgin of Israel will again go out 'in the dance of merrymakers.' Lamentations 5:15 poignantly reverses this: 'our dancing has turned to mourning.' Spanish con danza, en danza and French dans danse consistently confirm the core meaning of festive, communal movement. DANCE AND DANCING

en: and-dance, in-dance, in-dance-of | es: con-danza, en-danza, en-danza-de | fr: [במחול], [מחלנו], dans-danse | de: [במחול], [מחלנו], hinein-dancing Ps 30:11; Ps 149:3; Ps 150:4; Jer 31:4; Jer 31:13

מָחוֹל H4235 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mahol, father of several wise men compared to Solomon in demonstrating the king's superior wisdom

This personal name appears in 1 Kings 4:31 (Hebrew 5:11), where Solomon's wisdom is said to exceed that of 'Heman, Calcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol.' These men were apparently renowned for wisdom in ancient Israel, forming a benchmark against which Solomon's exceptional insight could be measured. Some scholars connect Mahol's sons with the musical guilds mentioned in Chronicles, though this remains uncertain. The name serves primarily to anchor Solomon's wisdom comparison in known wise men of the era.

(1×) The father of several proverbially wise men (Heman, Calcol, and Darda) who served as a standard for comparing Solomon's superior wisdom. The sons of Mahol represented recognized sages in Israel, making Solomon's surpassing them meaningful. Whether Mahol was a personal name or perhaps a designation (related to 'dance' or a guild) remains debated, but his sons provided the benchmark for measuring royal wisdom. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mahol | es: Majol | fr: Mahol | de: Mahol 1Kgs 4:31

מַחֲזֶה H4236 N-msc (4×)

vision (received in ecstatic state)

A term for visionary experience, particularly in the ecstatic prophetic state. It describes how 'the word of the Lord came to Abram in a vision' (Genesis 15:1), Balaam's oracles received as 'the vision of the Almighty' (Numbers 24:4, 16), and the false visions of lying prophets (Ezekiel 13:7). The word emphasizes the visual, revelatory nature of the experience—something seen rather than merely heard, though often accompanied by divine speech.

(4×) A visionary experience through which divine revelation comes, often in an ecstatic state. The contexts range from God's covenant promises to Abram to Balaam's prophetic oracles and Ezekiel's condemnation of false visions. The multilingual glosses ('vision,' 'visión') maintain the visual aspect, distinguishing this mode of revelation from auditory prophecy. The term marks moments when the divine breaks through visible to the seer's inner eye. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-vision, vision-of, vision-of- | es: en-la-visión, visión-de | fr: dans-le-vision, vision, vision-de | de: Vision-von, [מחזה], in-einem-Gesicht Gen 15:1; Num 24:4; Num 24:16; Ezek 13:7

מַחֲזֶה H4237 Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

window, light, opening for seeing

An architectural feature providing light and visibility, appearing only in the description of Solomon's temple construction. The phrase 'window opposite window' or 'light over against light' (1 Kings 7:4-5) describes the arrangement of openings in the palace structures, creating a pattern of illumination. The term emphasizes the window's function as a 'place of seeing' or source of light rather than merely an opening in a wall.

(4×) Windows or light-admitting openings in a building, specifically in Solomon's palatial architecture. The repeated phrase 'window opposite window' suggests a symmetrical arrangement designed to maximize natural light. The multilingual glosses ('window,' 'vista,' 'fenêtre') consistently identify it as an architectural opening, with the Hebrew root suggesting its primary function as enabling sight and admitting light into interior spaces. WINDOW OPENING

en: and-window, window | es: vista, y-vista | fr: et-fenêtre, fenêtre | de: Fenster, und-Fenster 1Kgs 7:4; 1Kgs 7:5

מַחֲזִיאֹת H4238 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Mahaziot (proper noun); a Levitical musician and son of Heman

Mahaziot was one of the sons of Heman appointed by David to lead a division of temple musicians (1 Chr 25:4, 30). His name appears in a list that some scholars (like R.S.O.T.C.) have suggested may preserve fragments of a psalm or liturgical text rather than straightforward personal names, as several names in the list have psalm-like meanings. The name itself means 'visions,' fitting the pattern of theophoric or meaningful names among Levitical musicians.

(2×) The name of a Hemanite Levite who headed the twenty-third division of temple musicians under David's organization. The name means 'visions,' possibly reflecting prophetic-musical ministry since Heman was called 'the king's seer' (1 Chr 25:5). All languages transliterate (Mahaziot, Machazioth), preserving this as a proper personal name among the organized temple worship leaders who prophesied with lyres, harps, and cymbals. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Machazioth, for-Machazioth | es: Mahaziot, para-Mahaziot | fr: [למחזיאות], [מחזיאות] | de: [למחזיאות], [מחזיאות] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:30

מְחִי H4239 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Stroke, blow; specifically the impact of a battering ram against city walls during siege

This military term appears in Ezekiel 26:9, describing Nebuchadnezzar's siege of Tyre: 'the stroke of his battering rams he will direct against your walls.' The word captures the repetitive impact of siege engines pounding fortifications. Ancient battering rams delivered tremendous striking force, designed to crack and eventually breach defensive walls. Ezekiel's prophecy makes these strokes tangible—the relentless mechanical blows that would eventually break Tyre's seemingly impregnable defenses. The term emphasizes physical force repeatedly applied.

(1×) The hammering impact of battering rams against fortified walls, appearing in Ezekiel's siege prophecy against Tyre. The term captures the repetitive, destructive striking of siege engines designed to breach defenses. Each stroke represented concentrated mechanical force applied to crack masonry. The word makes Nebuchadnezzar's assault visceral—not just abstract military threat but the literal pounding of rams against stone until walls collapse. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-stroke-of- | es: Y-golpe-de | fr: et-de-vivant | de: [ומחי] Ezek 26:9

מְחִידָא H4240 N-proper-ms (2×)

Mehida (proper noun); head of a family of temple servants who returned from exile

Mehida was the ancestral head of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The name appears identically in the parallel lists of Ezra 2:52 and Nehemiah 7:54. The Nethinim were a group of temple assistants, possibly originally foreign captives assigned to menial tasks in temple service. The Septuagint's varied spellings reflect Greek attempts to transliterate this Hebrew name.

(2×) The name of a family head among the Nethinim (temple servants) who returned from Babylonian exile, listed in both Ezra and Nehemiah's census of returnees. All language traditions transliterate (Mehida, Mejidá), treating this as a family name identifying a distinct lineage among the temple servants. These families, though socially lower than priests and Levites, maintained distinct identities and genealogical records proving their legitimacy in temple service. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mechida, Mehida | es: Mehida, Mejidá | fr: [מחידא] | de: [מחידא] Ezra 2:52; Neh 7:54

מְחִיָּה H4241 Conj-w / N-fsc (8×)

Preservation of life, sustenance, livelihood; also raw/quick flesh in Levitical diagnosis

Derived from the root khayah ('to live'), this noun names whatever sustains, restores, or manifests life. Joseph recognizes God's purpose in sending him to Egypt 'for the preservation of life' (Gen 45:5), and Ezra prays for 'a little reviving' in bondage (Ezra 9:8-9). In the priestly skin-disease laws, it takes on a precise medical sense: the 'quick' or raw flesh visible within a lesion (Lev 13:10, 24). A third strand is simple material sustenance, as when the Midianites left no 'livelihood' in Israel (Judg 6:4) or Micah offers a Levite 'your living' (Judg 17:10).

1. preservation of life, reviving (4×) Preservation or restoration of life, reviving. In Gen 45:5 Joseph declares God sent him ahead lemikhy(y)ah – 'for preservation of life.' Ezra 9:8-9 uses it twice for a 'little reviving' in the midst of servitude. Spanish 'para-preservacion-de-vida' and German 'zur-Lebenserhaltung' both emphasize the active, purposeful sustaining of life. The 2 Chr 14:13 usage extends this to military survival: no recovery was possible for the defeated Cushites. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD

en: a-little-reviving, for-preservation-of-life, reviving | es: para-preservación-de-vida, sobreviviente, un-poco-de-vida | fr: [מחיה], pour-preservation-de-vie | de: [מחיה], von-lebte, zur-Lebenserhaltung Gen 45:5; 2Chr 14:13; Ezra 9:8; Ezra 9:9

2. raw/quick flesh (Levitical term) (2×) Raw or quick flesh visible in a skin lesion – a technical diagnostic term in the Levitical purity code. In Lev 13:10 and 13:24 (mikhyat basar khai), the construct form describes the living tissue exposed beneath diseased skin, signaling impurity. Translations universally shift to clinical vocabulary: English 'raw-flesh-of,' Spanish 'vitalidad-de,' reflecting the biological vitality that makes this flesh diagnostically significant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-raw-flesh-of, raw-flesh-of | es: vitalidad-de, y-vitalidad-de | fr: et-raw-chair-de, raw-chair-de | de: roh-Fleisch-von, und-roh-Fleisch-von Lev 13:10; Lev 13:24

3. sustenance, livelihood (2×) Material sustenance, food, or livelihood – the concrete provisions needed for daily life. In Judg 6:4 the Midianites destroyed every mikhy(y)ah in Israel, and in Judg 17:10 it denotes the wages and provisions offered to a hired Levite. Spanish 'sustento' and French 'sustenance' straightforwardly render this as material provision, distinct from the more theological 'preservation of life' in sense 1. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-your-living, sustenance | es: sustento, y-tu-sustento | fr: et-ton-vivant, sustenance | de: sustenance, und-dein-lebend Judg 6:4; Judg 17:10

מְחִיר H4242 Conj-w / N-msc (15×)

Price, cost — the payment or value offered for goods, land, or figuratively for intangible things like wisdom or people

Derived from a root meaning 'to set before, present,' this noun (מְחִיר) denotes the price placed on something offered for exchange. It appears in straightforward commercial transactions — David purchases the threshing floor 'for a price' (2 Sam 24:24), and Solomon's horses are bought at a set cost (1 Kgs 10:28). Yet the word's most memorable uses are theological. Job 28:15 declares that wisdom's price cannot be paid in silver; Isaiah 55:1 invites the thirsty to buy 'without price'; and Psalm 44:13 laments that God sold his people 'for no price,' implying they were given away as worthless. The tension between commercial and covenantal value gives this common noun uncommon depth.

price, cost (15×) The monetary price, cost, or payment offered in exchange for something — land, goods, animals, or services. Used concretely for purchasing David's threshing floor (2 Sam 24:24), Solomon's horse trade (1 Kgs 10:28; 2 Chr 1:16), and Naboth's vineyard offer (1 Kgs 21:2). Extended figuratively to the incalculable 'price' of wisdom (Job 28:15; Prov 17:16), the costless grace of divine blessing (Isa 55:1, 'without money and without price'), and the devaluation of God's people sold 'for nothing' (Ps 44:13). Lamentations 5:4 uses it for the bitter cost of water in siege conditions. HONOR AND PRICE

en: and-price-of, at-a-price, at-price | es: en-su-precio, por-precio, precio | fr: [במחיר], [מחיר], dans-prix | de: [במחיר], [ומחיר], [מחיר] Deut 23:18; 2Sam 24:24; 1Kgs 10:28; 1Kgs 21:2; 2Chr 1:16

מְחִיר H4243 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mehir, a personal name in Judah's genealogical records from the Chronicles

This name appears once in 1 Chronicles 4:11, within the genealogical lists of Judah's descendants. Mehir represents one individual in the extensive tribal records that Chronicles preserves. While we know nothing else about him, his inclusion in the sacred genealogy indicates his place in the continuing line of Judah. The name itself may derive from a root meaning 'price' or 'hire,' though personal names often lose their original semantic connection. Chronicles preserves such names as part of maintaining tribal and family identity.

(1×) A personal name in Judah's genealogical record, appearing in Chronicles' detailed tribal lists. Mehir represents one link in the chain of Judahite families preserved for posterity. Though no stories or deeds are associated with him, his name's preservation in Scripture indicates his place in the covenant community's ongoing history. The genealogical context makes the name itself significant as family record. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mechir | es: Mejir | fr: [מחיר] | de: [מחיר] 1Chr 4:11

מַחְלָה H4244 N-proper-fs (5×)

Mahlah — a daughter of Zelophehad; also a Gileadite name

Mahlah is best known as one of the five daughters of Zelophehad who boldly petitioned Moses for an inheritance in the land, since their father had died without sons (Num 27:1). Their case established a landmark ruling in Israelite inheritance law. The name also appears once in a Gileadite genealogy (1 Chr 7:18), where the gender may actually be masculine. The Septuagint renders it variously as Maala and Maela.

(5×) A proper feminine name borne by a daughter of Zelophehad of the tribe of Manasseh, appearing in the inheritance narratives of Numbers 26:33, 27:1, 36:11, and Joshua 17:3. Spanish renders it Majla/Majla, while the LXX reflects Maala. The name may derive from a root meaning 'sickness' or 'weakness,' though its exact etymology is debated. Also applied to a Gileadite figure in 1 Chronicles 7:18. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Machlah, Mahlah | es: Majla, Majlá | fr: Machlah, Mahlah, [מחלה] | de: Machlah, Mahlah, [מחלה] Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Num 36:11; Josh 17:3; 1Chr 7:18

מַחֲלֶה H4245a Prep-b / N-msc (2×)

disease, sickness (noun); physical illness or ailment

This noun denotes disease or sickness. Second Chronicles 21:15 describes Jehoram's judgment: 'disease of your intestines...because of the sickness' (using related terms for emphasis). Proverbs 18:14 observes that 'a man's spirit will endure his sickness,' but when spirit is crushed, who can bear it? The word emphasizes the debilitating effect of illness, whether specific diseases or general sickness. Its pairing with related sickness terms in Chronicles suggests intensifying or specifying general illness.

(2×) Refers to disease or sickness affecting the body, used both for specific diseases (Jehoram's fatal intestinal disease in 2 Chr 21:15) and general sickness (Prov 18:14's sickness that spirit can endure). Spanish uses 'enfermedad' (disease/sickness) in both passages, emphasizing physical ailment. The Chronicles passage pairs multiple sickness terms for rhetorical effect, while Proverbs contrasts physical sickness (endurable) with spiritual crushing (unendurable), highlighting the word's focus on bodily affliction. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: his-sickness, with-disease-of | es: con-enfermedad-de, enfermedad-su | fr: [במחלה], son-מחלהו-lui | de: [במחלה], [מחלהו] 2Chr 21:15; Prov 18:14

מַחֲלָה H4245b N-fs (4×)

sickness, disease

A general term for illness or disease, appearing in contexts of divine protection and judgment. God promises Israel: 'I will put none of the diseases upon you that I put on the Egyptians, for I am the Lord, your healer' (Exodus 15:26). Conversely, disease serves as one of the curses for covenant breaking. Solomon's temple dedication prayer acknowledges that sickness, along with other plagues, can drive people to seek God (1 Kings 8:37, 2 Chronicles 6:28).

(4×) Physical sickness or disease in general, without specification of particular ailments. The contexts connect illness to divine agency—either as something God prevents as a blessing or permits as judgment. The multilingual glosses ('sickness,' 'disease,' 'enfermedad,' 'maladie') render it with general medical terminology. The phrase 'I am the Lord your healer' in Exodus 15:26 establishes the theological framework: disease and health both lie within God's sovereign care. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: sickness, the-disease | es: enfermedad, la-enfermedad | fr: [מחלה], le-disease, maladie | de: Krankheit, [מחלה], der-Krankheit Exod 15:26; Exod 23:25; 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 6:28

מְחוֹלָה H4246 Prep-k / N-fsc (8×)

Dance, round dance; joyful communal dancing, often celebrating military victory or worship of God.

This feminine noun denotes a dance or round dance performed in communal celebration, frequently after military victory or in worship. Miriam led women in dance with timbrels after the Red Sea crossing (Exod 15:20); Jephthah's daughter came out dancing to meet her victorious father (Judg 11:34); and the women of Israel sang and danced to celebrate David's triumph (1 Sam 18:6). The Song of Songs uses it to evoke graceful beauty (7:1). Spanish danza and French danse both preserve the festive, kinetic quality of this word.

dance, round dance (8×) A dance or round dance, typically performed communally in joyful celebration. The word appears in victory celebrations (Exod 15:20, Miriam's dance with timbrels; Judg 11:34, Jephthah's daughter; 1 Sam 18:6; 29:5), in the context of a festival gathering (Judg 21:21, the daughters of Shiloh), in idolatrous worship (Exod 32:19, the golden calf), and as an image of graceful beauty (Song 7:1). Spanish danza, French danse, and the consistent multilingual rendering of 'dance' confirm a unified semantic core of joyous, rhythmic communal movement. DANCE AND DANCING

en: and-dancing, and-the-dances, and-with-dances | es: como-danza-de, en-las-danzas, y-con-danzas | fr: Comme-la-danse, dans-le-dances, et-avec-dances | de: [כמחלת], in-der-dances, und-dancing Exod 15:20; Exod 32:19; Judg 11:34; Judg 21:21; 1Sam 18:6

מְחִלָה H4247 Conj-w (1×)

Holes, cavities; specifically holes in the dust or ground where people hide during divine judgment

This term appears in Isaiah 2:19, describing the Day of the Lord: people will flee 'into holes of the dust' to escape God's terrifying presence. The phrase suggests hastily dug or natural cavities in dusty ground—desperate, undignified hiding places. Isaiah pairs this with 'caves of the rocks,' creating a picture of terror so great that people seek any available shelter, however inadequate. The 'holes of the dust' represent the most basic, least protective refuges, emphasizing the futility of hiding from God.

(1×) Crude holes or cavities in the ground serving as desperate refuges during theophanic judgment. Isaiah's imagery shows people scrambling into dusty hollows to escape God's terrifying manifestation. These minimal shelters contrast with more substantial rock caves, emphasizing panic and the inadequacy of any human hiding place. The 'holes of the dust' capture the degradation of those fleeing divine presence—reduced to cowering in earth-holes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-into-holes-of | es: y-en-cavernas-de | fr: [ובמחלות] | de: [ובמחלות] Isa 2:19

מַחְלוֹן H4248 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Mahlon, son of Elimelech and first husband of Ruth

One of Naomi's two sons who married Moabite women during the family's sojourn in Moab. His early death, along with his brother Chilion's, left Ruth and Orpah widowed and set the stage for Ruth's loyalty to Naomi and eventual marriage to Boaz. His name appears in the genealogical framework that establishes Ruth's legal right to redemption and Boaz's role as kinsman-redeemer (Ruth 4:9-10). Though his life was brief, his death became the hinge point for one of Scripture's most beautiful stories of faithfulness and redemption.

(4×) A proper name for Elimelech and Naomi's son, Ruth's first husband. The multilingual evidence preserves the name with minor phonetic variations (Mahlon, Majlón, Machlon). His significance lies not in his deeds but in his death, which created the circumstances for Ruth's extraordinary loyalty and for the lineage that would lead to King David and ultimately to the Messiah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mahlon, and-Mahlon | es: Majlón, y-a-Majlón | fr: Machlon, et-Machlon | de: Machlon, und-Machlon Ruth 1:2; Ruth 1:5; Ruth 4:9; Ruth 4:10

מַחְלִי H4249 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (12×)

Mahli — Levitical personal name; son of Merari and ancestor of a major Levitical clan

Mahli (מַחְלִי) is the name of two Levites in the Old Testament, the more prominent being the son of Merari and grandson of Levi, who founded one of the major Levitical sub-clans. The Mahlites were responsible for transporting the tabernacle frames, bars, pillars, and bases during the wilderness march (Num 3:20, 33; 4:29-33). The genealogies of 1 Chronicles trace Mahli's line carefully (1 Chr 6:4, 29; 23:21, 23; 24:26-28), noting that his sons married their cousins because he had no daughters in one branch. A second Mahli appears in 1 Chronicles 6:32; 23:23 as the son of Mushi — making him nephew and namesake of the first. Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Mahli.'

Machli (personal name) (12×) A Levitical personal name borne by at least two individuals. The primary Mahli is the son of Merari and grandson of Levi, ancestor of the Mahlite clan responsible for transporting the tabernacle's structural components (Exod 6:19; Num 3:20, 33; 4:29-33). His genealogy is traced through 1 Chronicles 6:4, 29; 23:21, 23; 24:26-28. A second Mahli is the son of Mushi (1 Chr 6:32; 23:23; 24:30), making him nephew of the first. Ezra 8:18 mentions a descendant in the post-exilic period. Spanish 'Mahli,' French 'Mahli,' and German 'Mahli' all transliterate directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Machli, Mahli, for-Machli | es: Mahli, Majli, Maḥli | fr: Mahli, [למחלי], [מחלי] | de: Machli, Mahli, [מחלי] Exod 6:19; Num 3:20; 1Chr 6:19; 1Chr 6:29; 1Chr 6:47

מַחְלִי H4250 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Mahlite (adjective); descendants of Mahli son of Merari, a Levitical family

This gentillic adjective identifies the Levitical clan descended from Mahli, son of Merari. Like the Mushites, the Mahlites were a Merarite family responsible for tabernacle maintenance. Both occurrences (Numbers 3:33; 26:58) appear in census lists as 'the family of the Mahlites.' The term functions collectively, designating the entire family group descended from this Levitical ancestor. The Mahlites, along with their Mushite cousins, comprised the Merarite clan charged with carrying the tabernacle framework.

(2×) The collective designation for the Levitical family descended from Mahli son of Merari, appearing in Numbers census lists. Spanish uses both singular and plural (mahlita/mahlitas), reflecting both individual ancestry and collective family identity. All passages use the definite article, treating the Mahlites as a recognized family unit within Levi's tribal structure, responsible for specific tabernacle duties involving structural components like frames, bars, pillars, and bases. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Mahlite | es: el-mahlita, los-mahlitas | fr: le-Mahlite | de: der-Mahlite Num 3:33; Num 26:58

מַחְלִי H4251 Prep-b / N-mp (2×)
wounds, sicknesses (noun); suffering from injuries or disease
This plural intensive noun denotes wounds or the suffering they cause. It appears only in 2 Chronicles 24:25, describing the conspirators who struck down King Joash 'in great sicknesses/wounds.' The context (following 2 Kings 8:29's use of a related term) suggests wounds from violent attack rather than natural disease. The plural intensive form emphasizes the severity or multiplicity of the wounds that left Joash vulnerable to assassination. A Ketiv-Qere variation exists between two slightly different plural forms.

(2×) Refers to the severe wounds or sicknesses suffered by King Joash before his assassination, appearing only in 2 Chronicles 24:25. The intensive plural emphasizes the serious condition—multiple wounds or great suffering—that rendered him vulnerable. Spanish uses 'enfermedades' (sicknesses/diseases), though context suggests battle wounds rather than illness. The Ketiv-Qere textual variation shows minor spelling differences in forming the plural, without changing the essential meaning of severe affliction. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION
en: [ketiv: with-sicknesses], with-sicknesses | es: [ketiv], en-enfermedades | fr: [במחלוים], [במחליים] | de: [במחלוים], [במחליים] 2Chr 24:25

מַחְלָף H4252 N-mp (1×)
Knives, cutting implements listed among temple vessels returned from Babylonian exile
This term appears in Ezra 1:9, in the inventory of temple articles that Cyrus returned to the returning exiles. Listed among bowls, basins, and other sacred vessels, these knives likely served ceremonial or sacrificial functions in temple service. The exact type of knife remains uncertain—whether for animal sacrifice, food preparation, or other ritual uses. The word's appearance in an official inventory suggests these were recognized temple implements with specific liturgical purposes. Their return symbolized the restoration of proper worship.

(1×) Cultic knives among the temple vessels returned from Babylon, appearing in Ezra's careful inventory. These implements likely served in sacrificial or ceremonial contexts, though their exact function remains uncertain. The term's inclusion in the sacred vessel list indicates these were recognized liturgical tools, not ordinary kitchen implements. Their restoration enabled the resumption of proper temple service according to prescribed ritual. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1272 WITH 3 SENSES en: knives | es: cuchillos | fr: [מחלפים] | de: [מחלפים] Ezra 1:9

מַחֲלָפָה H4253 N-fpc (2×)
locks, braids (noun); plaited strands of hair
This noun denotes plaits or braids of hair, formed by intertwining strands. Both occurrences in Judges 16:13 and 16:19 describe Samson's seven locks of hair that Delilah wove into a loom or shaved off. The term emphasizes the interwoven structure—strands passing through each other to form distinct braided sections. BDB notes the derivation from a root meaning 'to pass through' or 'interchange,' capturing the technique of braiding where strands alternate positions.

(2×) Refers to braided locks or plaits of hair, specifically the seven braids of Samson that embodied his Nazirite vow and supernatural strength. Both Judges passages describe these distinctive hair formations that Delilah manipulated. Spanish uses 'trenzas' (braids/plaits), emphasizing the woven structure. Other languages use 'locks,' which can mean either loose sections or braided ones. The seven-fold division suggests deliberate styling, not just long loose hair, making 'braids' or 'plaits' the likely sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: locks-of | es: trenzas-de | fr: locks-de | de: locks-von Judg 16:13; Judg 16:19

מַחֲלָצָה H4254 Art / N-fp (2×)
robe, festive garment (noun); a special outer robe worn for formal occasions
This plural noun denotes special robes or festive garments, clothing removed or put aside in ordinary circumstances but worn for important occasions. Isaiah 3:22 lists them among luxury items of Jerusalem's wealthy women. Zechariah 3:4 describes removing 'filthy garments' from the high priest and clothing him with 'robes'—clean festive garments symbolizing purification. The word emphasizes special-occasion clothing, formal or ceremonial robes distinct from daily wear.

(2×) Refers to festive robes or special formal garments worn for important occasions. Isaiah catalogs them among luxury items stripped from proud women in judgment, while Zechariah uses them in the high priest's symbolic purification—replacing filthy clothes with clean robes representing restored righteousness. Spanish uses 'vestidos de gala' and 'ropas de gala' (gala/festive dress), German and French transliterate, emphasizing these are not everyday clothing but garments reserved for ceremonial or celebratory contexts. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: robes, the-festival-robes | es: Los-vestidos-de-gala, con-ropas-de-gala | fr: [המחלצות], vêtement | de: [המחלצות], [מחלצות] Isa 3:22; Zech 3:4

מַחְלְקָה H4255 Prep-b / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)
Courses, divisions; the organized shifts of priests and Levites rotating through temple service
This Aramaic term appears in Ezra 6:18, describing how the returning exiles organized temple personnel: 'they set the priests in their divisions and the Levites in their courses for the service of God.' The system of rotating courses ensured continuous worship while allowing individual priests and Levites periods of service and rest. This organizational structure, rooted in David's arrangements, brought order and sustainability to temple operations. The courses represented both practical scheduling and theological vision of orderly, perpetual worship.

(1×) The divisional system organizing priests and Levites into rotating shifts for temple service, mentioned in Ezra's account of restoration worship. This Aramaic term describes the structured courses that enabled continuous service while distributing responsibility. The organizational scheme, traced to Davidic precedent, ensured both sustainability and order. Establishing these divisions demonstrated the exiles' commitment to maintaining proper, perpetual worship according to ancestral patterns. DIVISION AND PORTION
en: in-their-courses | es: en-sus-turnos | fr: [במחלקתהון] | de: [במחלקתהון] Ezra 6:18

מַחְלֹקֶת H4256 Prep-b / N-fpc / 3mp (42×)
Division, course; an organizational unit especially of priests and Levites, or an allotted tribal portion of land.
A technical term of administrative and liturgical organization, appearing almost exclusively in Chronicles and related texts. Primarily denotes the rotating courses or divisions of priests and Levites who served at the temple, as established by David (1 Chr 23-27). Spanish divisiones, French divisions, and German Abteilungen all confirm this organizational meaning. The word also appears in the Deuteronomistic and Priestly sources for the tribal allotments of the promised land (Josh 11:23; 12:7; 18:10), where it refers to the portions distributed among the tribes. Ezekiel 48:29 uses it for the eschatological redistribution of the land.

1. division, course (41×) An organizational division or rotating course, especially of priests and Levites serving at the temple in scheduled turns. This is the dominant usage (41 occurrences), concentrated in 1 Chronicles 23-27 and 2 Chronicles. Multilingual evidence converges on division/división/division/Abteilung. Key passages include David's organization of Levitical courses (1 Chr 23:6; 24:1) and the monthly military divisions (1 Chr 27:1-15). The land-allotment passages in Joshua (11:23; 12:7; 18:10) also fall here, denoting tribal divisions of territory. DIVISION AND PORTION

en: according-to-their-divisions, divisions-of, his-division | es: divisiones-de, división-de-él, las-divisiones | fr: der-divisions, divisions, sa-division | de: Abteilungen, [מחלקות], der-Abteilungen Josh 11:23; Josh 12:7; Josh 18:10; 1Chr 23:6; 1Chr 24:1

2. allotted portion, share (1×) An allotted portion or share distributed as inheritance, with emphasis on the distributive result rather than the organizational structure. Attested in Ezekiel 48:29, where the prophet describes the eschatological redistribution of the land. English 'their portions' and Spanish sus porciones highlight the shift from organizational grouping to the share itself that is received. DIVISION AND PORTION

en: their-portions | es: sus-porciones | fr: division | de: Abteilung Ezek 48:29

מַחֲלַת H4257 N-fs (2×)

Mahalath (psalm term); a musical or melodic designation in psalm superscriptions

This term appears only in the superscriptions of Psalms 53 and 88, apparently indicating a tune or musical setting. Ancient versions struggled with it—Aquila, Symmachus, and Vulgate connected it to dancing, while others saw it as a catchword from a well-known song that gave its name to the melody. The meaning remains uncertain. It may derive from a root related to 'sickness' or 'dancing.' Modern scholars treat it as a liturgical-musical notation whose precise meaning is lost, like several other technical terms in psalm titles.

(2×) A technical term in psalm superscriptions (Ps 53:1; 88:1), likely indicating a melody, tune, or musical performance style, though its exact meaning is debated. Ancient translations vary widely—some link it to dancing, others to choir or liturgical performance. Spanish transliterates 'majalat,' treating it as a technical musical term. The word's occurrence only in titles, never in psalm body, confirms it as liturgical instruction rather than part of the poetic content. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: Machalath, mahalath | es: majalat | fr: de-chœur | de: Machalath, mahalath Ps 53:1; Ps 88:1

מַחֲלַת H4258 N-proper-fs (2×)

Mahalath (proper noun); name of two women, daughter of Ishmael and granddaughter of David

This personal name belongs to two different women in Scripture. First, Mahalath daughter of Ishmael became one of Esau's wives (Genesis 28:9). Second, Mahalath granddaughter of David (daughter of Jerimoth son of David) married Rehoboam (2 Chronicles 11:18). The name is identical in spelling to the musical term in psalm titles but distinct in meaning. The two women share only the name, living generations apart—one in the patriarchal period, one in the united monarchy era.

(2×) The personal name of two biblical women: (1) Ishmael's daughter who married Esau, and (2) David's granddaughter who married King Rehoboam. All languages transliterate (Mahalath, Mahalat, Majalat), treating these as distinct persons who happen to share a name. The Septuagint's varied spellings (Μαελεθ, Μολλαθ, Μαελλεθ) reflect Greek attempts to render this Hebrew feminine name, which may derive from roots meaning 'sickness' or 'dancing.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mahalath | es: Mahalat, Majalat | fr: Mahalath, [מחלת] | de: Machalat, [מחלת] Gen 28:9; 2Chr 11:18

מְחֹלָתִי H4259 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Meholathite (adjective); a person from Abel-meholah or Meholah

This gentillic adjective identifies someone from Abel-meholah (or possibly Meholah), a town in the Jordan Valley. It appears only with the definite article, designating two specific individuals. Adriel the Meholathite received Saul's daughter Merab as wife (1 Samuel 18:19). Barzillai the Meholathite was the father of Adriel (2 Samuel 21:8). The town Abel-meholah was Elisha's birthplace and lay in the Jordan Valley, though 'Meholathite' might indicate a nearby related settlement.

(2×) The gentillic designation meaning 'from Meholah' or 'from Abel-meholah,' used to identify Adriel (who married Saul's daughter) and his father Barzillai. All language traditions transliterate (Meholathite, mejolita), treating this as a geographical identifier. Abel-meholah was a Jordan Valley town, Elisha's hometown, making this designation locate these individuals in that region. The term appears only with the definite article, identifying specific known persons rather than a general class of residents. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Meholathite | es: el-mejolita | fr: le-Meholathite | de: der-Meholathite 1Sam 18:19; 2Sam 21:8

מַחְמָאֹת H4260 N-fpc (1×)

Butter-words, smooth or curd-like speech; possibly hypocritical flattery disguising hostile intent

This unusual term appears in Psalm 55:21, in a difficult text describing betrayal: 'smoother than butter are the words of his mouth.' The phrase may describe speech that is smooth like butter or curds—outwardly pleasant but concealing treachery. Some scholars suggest textual corruption, proposing 'smoother than butter is his face' instead. Either reading conveys the same point: the betrayer's surface presentation (words or appearance) seems gentle and friendly, but underneath lies violence. The curd-like smoothness becomes a metaphor for deceptive speech.

(1×) Speech characterized by butter-like smoothness, appearing in a psalm about betrayal and false friendship. The term describes words that seem pleasant and soft as butter but conceal hostile intent. Whether original or the result of textual variation, the image captures the deceptive quality of flattering speech that masks violence. The culinary metaphor makes treachery tactile—smooth, slippery words coating hard malice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: butter-words-of | es: mantequillas-de | fr: de-beurre | de: butter-Worte-von Ps 55:21

מַחְמַד H4261 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cs (13×)

Desire, delight; something precious or treasured; used of persons beloved to the heart and of valuable possessions.

From the root chamad ('to desire, covet'), machmad names whatever the heart longs for or the eyes delight in. In its most intimate register, it describes persons or qualities deeply cherished — Ezekiel's wife is 'the desire of your eyes' (Ezek 24:16), and the beloved in Song of Songs is praised as 'altogether desirable' (Song 5:16), where the intensive plural machammaddim conveys an almost untranslatable superlative of delight. Spanish delicia and French delice capture this warmth beautifully. But the word also has a harder edge: when Jerusalem falls, her machammaddim are the precious vessels and treasured possessions plundered by invaders (Lam 1:10-11; 2 Chr 36:19). The same root that names love's delight also names what conquering armies seize — a poignant semantic range.

1. object of desire or delight (7×) An object of desire or delight — that which is longed for, cherished, or found deeply desirable, applied to persons and to the abstract quality of desirability itself. The most striking occurrence is Song 5:16, where the beloved is described as kullo machammaddim ('all of him is delightfulness'), an intensive plural without real parallel in English. Ezekiel's wife is 'the desire of your eyes' (Ezek 24:16, 21, 25), and Ben-Hadad demands 'whatever is the desire of your eyes' from Ahab (1 Kgs 20:6). Spanish delicia-de and French delice-de both reach for vocabulary of sensory pleasure, while German leaves the Hebrew untranslated in some versions — a sign of how tightly bound this sense is to Hebrew poetic idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beloved-ones-of, delight-of, desirable | es: delicia-de, deseable, deseo-de |

fr: délice-de, délices., objet-désiré | de: [מחמד], [מחמדי], [מחמדים] 1Kgs 20:6; Song 5:16; Ezek 24:16; Ezek 24:21; Ezek 24:25

2. precious things, treasures (6×) Precious things, treasures, or valued possessions — concrete items of worth, often in contexts of loss, plunder, or destruction. When Nebuchadnezzar destroys the temple, 'all its precious vessels' (kol klei machmad) are burned (2 Chr 36:19). Lamentations dwells on Jerusalem's machammadim twice: her people trade their treasured things for food (Lam 1:11), and foreigners enter the sanctuary to seize 'her precious things' (Lam 1:10). Isaiah mourns 'all our precious things' laid waste (Isa 64:11). Spanish lo precioso and French chose desiree shift to economic vocabulary here, confirming the move from personal desire to material treasure. Joel 3:5 likewise accuses the nations: 'my treasures you carried into your temples.' RICHES AND WEALTH

en: (their-treasures), and-my-treasures, her-precious-things | es: (sus-cosas-preciosas), lo-precioso-de, lo-que-amábamos | fr: [מחמדיה], chose-désirable, et-objet-désiré | de: [(מחמדיהם)], [ומחמדי], [מחמדי] 2Chr 36:19; Isa 64:11; Lam 1:10; Lam 1:11; Lam 2:4

מַחְמַד H4262 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

precious things, treasures, valuables

This plural noun denotes precious possessions or treasured items. Both occurrences appear in Lamentations describing Jerusalem's fall, where the city's valuable possessions become objects of plunder and desperation. The term captures the pathos of loss—treasures once carefully guarded now exchanged for bread or seized by enemies. The multilingual evidence (Spanish cosas-preciosas, French choses-précieuses) consistently emphasizes their precious, valuable quality rather than mere material goods.

(2×) Refers to valuable possessions or treasures that hold economic and sentimental worth. Both Lamentations passages (1:7, 1:11) use this term to depict Jerusalem's desperate state during siege and conquest—treasures viewed by enemies (1:7) or traded for food (1:11). The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize the precious, treasured nature of these items, distinguishing them from ordinary property. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: [their-treasures], her-precious-things | es: [sus-cosas-preciosas], sus-cosas-preciosas | fr: chose-précieuse, ses-choses-précieuses | de: [[מחמודיהם]], [מחמדיה] Lam 1:7; Lam 1:11

מַחְמָל H4263 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Compassion, object of pity; that which evokes care and protective feelings

This term appears in Ezekiel 24:21, where God announces He will profane the temple, described as 'the desire of your eyes and the compassion of your soul.' The word captures what the soul feels protective tenderness toward, what evokes care and merciful concern. God's shocking statement—that He will destroy what His people most cherish and feel compassion for—intensifies the judgment's horror. The term emphasizes emotional attachment beyond mere desire, suggesting parental or protective feelings. The temple was not just valued but loved with compassionate care.

(1×) An object that evokes protective compassion and tender care, appearing in Ezekiel's prophecy about the temple's desecration. The term describes what the soul regards with merciful concern, not just desire but caring attachment. God's announcement that He will profane 'the compassion of your soul' makes the judgment devastating—destroying not just what is valued but what is lovingly protected. The emotional vocabulary intensifies the horror. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-compassion-of- | es: y-compasión-de | fr: et-compassion | de: [ומחמל] Ezek 24:21

מַחֲנֶה H4264 Prep-b (216×)

Camp, encampment; a temporary dwelling-place of tents, especially Israel's wilderness camp, and by metonymy the army or host encamped there.

Machaneh is the word that defines Israel's wilderness identity — a people on the move, dwelling in tents, organized around the tabernacle at the center of the camp. From Exodus through Numbers, the camp is a sacred space with strict purity regulations: the unclean must be sent 'outside the camp' (Num 5:2-3), and God himself walks 'in the midst of the camp' (Deut 23:14). The word extends naturally to military encampments, where armies pitch camp before battle (Josh 10:5; Judg 7:15), and occasionally the physical place-name gives way to the people themselves — the 'camp' that trembles means the army that trembles. Arabic mu'askar, Korean jinying (진영), and Swahili kambi all capture the temporary-dwelling-for-a-collective sense that lies at the word's heart.

1. camp or encampment (212×) A camp or encampment — the overwhelmingly dominant sense at 212 occurrences. Covers the Israelite wilderness camp organized around the tabernacle (Exod 16:13; 19:17; 32:26-27), military encampments before battle (Josh 10:5; Judg 7:15; 1 Sam 4:3), and caravan camps during travel (Gen 32:8, 21). The camp functions as both physical space and social-sacred boundary: being 'in the camp' means inclusion in the covenant community, while being sent 'outside the camp' signals exclusion (Num 5:2-3; 12:14-15). Arabic mu'askar, Spanish campamento, Korean jinying (진영), and Swahili kambi all select temporary-collective-dwelling vocabulary, confirming a unified sense covering wilderness sojourning, military bivouac, and traveling encampment alike. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-camp, to-the-camp | es: el-campamento | fr: le-camper, à-le-camper | de: der-Lager, zu-der-Lager Exod 16:13; Exod 19:17; Exod 32:19; Exod 32:26

2. army or military host (3×) By metonymy, the army or military host encamped in a place — 3 occurrences where machaneh refers not to the physical location but to the fighting force itself. In 2 Chronicles 14:13 the Ethiopians are defeated 'before the LORD and before his camp' (meaning his army); Psalm 27:3 declares 'though a camp encamp against me' (meaning a hostile force); Ezekiel 1:24 compares a sound to 'the noise of a camp' (a military host). Arabic jaysh ('army') and Korean gundae (군대) shift to military-force vocabulary here rather than spatial-camp terms, confirming the metonymic transfer from place to people. The distinction matters theologically: in Ps 27:3 the threat is not a place but an armed host. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: an-army, camp, his-camp | es: campamento, campamento-su | fr: camp, de-camp | de: Lager, ein-Lager 2Chr 14:13; Ps 27:3; Ezek 1:24

3. (1×) A dual or divided camp in a specific poetic-symbolic context — a single occurrence at Song of Solomon 6:13 referring to 'the dance of the two camps' (kemecholat hammachanayim). The dual form echoes the place-name Mahanaim ('two camps,' from Gen 32:2 where Jacob named the site after encountering God's angelic camp alongside his own). The rendering is debated: is this a specific dance named after the place Mahanaim, or a symbolic reference to two encamped hosts? Spanish los dos campamentos and French des deux camps preserve the literal dual, while the theological resonance with Jacob's angelic encounter gives this hapax usage a symbolic depth beyond its surface meaning. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: the-two-camps | es: los-dos-campamentos | fr: des-deux-camps. | de: [המחנים] Song 6:13

מַחֲנֵה־דָן H4265 N-proper-fs (1×)

Mahaneh-dan (Camp of Dan), a place-name marking where Danites encamped during migration

This place-name appears in Judges 13:25 and 18:12, marking locations where the tribe of Dan gathered during their northern migration. The name literally means 'Camp of Dan,' commemorating the tribal encampments that preceded their conquest of new territory. In Judges 13, it's where the Spirit first stirred Samson; in chapter 18, it's where the migrating Danites camped. The name transforms temporary military camping grounds into permanent geographical markers, memorializing the tribe's transitional moment between southern failure and northern resettlement.

(1×) A geographical name meaning 'Camp of Dan,' marking where Danites encamped during their tribal migration northward. The place-name appears in both Samson narratives and the conquest account, commemorating temporary military camps that became geographical landmarks. The designation captures a moment of transition—Dan between old territory and new, with these camping sites marking the journey. The name preserves tribal memory in topography. DAN PROPER NAME

en: Machaneh-Dan | es: Mahane-Dan | fr: Machaneh-Dan | de: Machaneh-Dan Judg 18:12

מַחֲנַיִם H4266 N-proper-fs / 3fs (13×)

Mahanaim — a town in Gilead meaning 'two camps,' linked to Jacob's angelic encounter

A dual-form proper noun meaning 'two camps,' naming a settlement in Gilead east of the Jordan. Jacob coined the name when he encountered God's angels on his return from Paddan-aram, exclaiming 'this is God's camp!' (Gen 32:2). The site later served as a boundary marker between Gad and Manasseh (Josh 13:26, 30), was designated a Levitical city (Josh 21:38; 1 Chr 6:65), and became a royal refuge — first for Ish-bosheth's short-lived reign (2 Sam 2:8, 12, 29) and later for David during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 17:24, 27; 19:33). Solomon stationed a governor there (1 Kgs 2:8; 4:14). The Song of Songs alludes to a 'dance of Mahanaim' (Song 6:13).

Mahanaim (place name) (13×) The place name Mahanaim (מַחֲנַיִם, 'two camps'), a town east of the Jordan in the region of Gilead. Named by Jacob at his angelic encounter (Gen 32:2), it appears in tribal boundary descriptions (Josh 13:26, 30), Levitical city lists (Josh 21:38; 1 Chr 6:65), and historical narratives as a seat of Ish-bosheth's rival kingdom (2 Sam 2:8, 12, 29) and David's refuge from Absalom (2 Sam 17:24, 27; 19:33). All target languages transliterate consistently: eng 'Mahanaim', spa 'Mahanaim/Majanaim', fra 'Machanayim', deu 'Machanajim'. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Machanayim, Mahanaim, and-from-Machanayim | es: Mahanaim, Majanaim, Majanayim | fr: Machanayim, Mahanaim, [מחנים] | de: Machanajim, Machanayim, Mahanaim Gen 32:2; Josh 13:26; Josh 13:30; Josh 21:38; 2Sam 2:8

מַחֲנָק H4267 N-ms (1×)

Strangling, suffocation; death by choking, which Job prefers to his agonizing existence

This term appears in Job 7:15, where the suffering patriarch declares, 'my soul chooses strangling, death rather than my bones.' Strangling represents a violent but relatively quick death compared to Job's prolonged agony. The word captures suffocation or choking as a mode of dying—whether by hanging, throttling, or other means of cutting off breath. Job's preference for such a death over continued life reveals his desperation. Even violent suffocation seems merciful compared to the relentless pain he endures daily.

(1×) Death by suffocation or choking, which Job declares preferable to his continuing misery. The term describes a violent but relatively swift death compared to chronic suffering. Job's choice of strangling over life reveals his desperate state—even breathless death seems merciful compared to endless pain. The word makes Job's suicidal ideation concrete: he envisions specific modes of dying and finds them attractive. DEATH AND DYING

en: strangling | es: estrangulación | fr: מחנק | de: [מחנק] Job 7:15

מַחְסֶה H4268 N-msc / 3ms (20×)

Refuge or shelter, especially of God as the protective haven of his people in the Psalms and Prophets.

Derived from the root meaning 'to take refuge,' this noun denotes a place of protection or shelter. While it can refer to physical shelter from rain and storm (Isa 4:6; 25:4; Job 24:8), its overwhelming use in Scripture is theological: God himself as the refuge of his people. The Psalms are saturated with this word — 'my refuge' appears repeatedly as a personal confession of trust (Ps 62:7–8; 71:7; 73:28; 91:2, 9). Isaiah warns against a 'refuge of lies' (Isa 28:15, 17), contrasting false security with the true shelter found only in the Lord.

refuge, shelter (20×) A place of protection, shelter, or safe harbor — used concretely of physical cover from storm and rain (Job 24:8; Isa 4:6; 25:4), of rocky crags that shelter coneys (Ps 104:18), and metaphorically of falsehood as a deceptive refuge (Isa 28:15, 17). The dominant biblical usage, however, is theological: God as the personal refuge of the faithful, attested across nearly every Psalm occurrence with possessive suffixes ('my refuge,' 'our refuge'). Multilingual renderings — English 'refuge,' Spanish 'refugio,' German 'Zuflucht' — converge uniformly on this protective sense. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: a-refuge, and-for-refuge, are-my-refuge- | es: como-nuestro-refugio, el-refugio-de, mi-refugio | fr: [ולמחסה], [מחסה], [מחס] | de: Zuflucht-, [ולמחסה], [מחסה] Job 24:8; Ps 14:6; Ps 46:1; Ps 61:3; Ps 62:7

מַחְסוֹם H4269 N-ms (1×)

Muzzle, restraint for the mouth; used metaphorically for controlling speech and preventing hasty words

This term appears in Psalm 39:1, where the psalmist resolves: 'I will keep a muzzle on my mouth while the wicked are in my presence.' The word refers to a device that prevents animals from biting or eating, here applied metaphorically to human speech. The psalmist commits to self-imposed silence, binding his own mouth to prevent sinful or erring words when confronted by the wicked. The muzzle imagery is stronger than mere 'guard'—it suggests forcible restraint of speech, recognizing the mouth's tendency toward unbridled expression.

(1×) A restraining device for the mouth, applied metaphorically to speech control in Psalm 39. While literal muzzles prevented animals from biting or eating, the psalmist uses the image for self-imposed verbal restraint. The term suggests forcible binding rather than gentle guardedness—recognizing speech as something potentially dangerous requiring strong restraint, especially when facing wicked opposition. The muzzle becomes a tool for spiritual discipline. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3431 WITH 4 SENSES

en: a-muzzle | es: bozal | fr: de-muselière | de: ein-muzzle Ps 39:1

מַחְסוֹר H4270 N-msc (13×)

Lack, want, poverty — the condition of being deficient in material resources or necessities

A masculine noun from the root חָסַר ('to lack'), covering three overlapping senses that shade from concrete to abstract. At its most specific, it denotes the particular thing needed — 'enough for his need, whatever he lacks' (Deut 15:8). More broadly, it signals the absence of necessities: 'there is no lack of anything' in the prosperous land (Judg 18:10; 19:19–20). At its most abstract, it becomes a synonym for poverty itself, especially in Proverbs, where haste, withholding, and pleasure-seeking all lead 'to poverty' (Prov 6:11; 11:24; 14:23; 21:5, 17; 22:16; 28:27). The Psalmist promises that those who fear God 'have no want' (Ps 34:9).

lack, want, poverty (13×) Need, lack, or poverty — the state of being materially deficient, ranging from a specific thing needed (Deut 15:8 'enough for his need') to general absence of necessities (Judg 18:10; 19:19–20 'no lack of anything'; Ps 34:9 'those who fear him have no want') to absolute destitution (Prov 6:11; 11:24; 14:23; 21:5, 17; 22:16; 24:34; 28:27, where it parallels רֵישׁ 'poverty'). Proverbs uses it as a moral outcome — laziness and folly yield מַחְסוֹר. Cross-lingual glosses reflect the economic register: spa 'escasez/carencia', fra 'manque', deu 'Mangel'. LACK WANT POVERTY

en: and-your-want, his-lack, lack | es: carencia, de-escasez, escasez-de | fr: de-manque, et-ton-manque-toi, lack-de | de: [ומחסריך], [ומחסרך], [למחסור] Deut 15:8; Judg 18:10; Judg 19:19; Judg 19:20; Ps 34:9

מַחְסֵיָה H4271 N-proper-ms (2×)

Mahseiah (personal name: 'Yahweh is a refuge')

The name of Baruch's grandfather, mentioned in contexts involving the prophet Jeremiah's scribe and messenger activities. The name means 'Yahweh is a refuge,' a theophoric name expressing trust in divine protection. This individual appears in the genealogical chain connecting Baruch to key prophetic moments: the purchase of the field at Anathoth (Jeremiah 32) and the mission to Babylon (Jeremiah 51). The consistent transliteration across languages reflects its status as a proper name.

(2×) Personal name of the grandfather of Baruch (Jeremiah's scribe) and Seraiah (Jeremiah's messenger to Babylon). Appears in Jeremiah 32:12 (witnessing the field purchase) and 51:59 (genealogy of Seraiah). The theophoric element (-iah) marks this as a distinctly Israelite name expressing theological confidence. Cross-linguistic evidence shows direct transliteration (Machseyah, Majseyah, Matred) as befits a proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Machseyah | es: Majseyah | fr: [מחסיה] | de: [מחסיה] Jer 32:12; Jer 51:59

מָחַץ H4272 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (14×)

To smite through, shatter, crush, or wound severely; a poetic term for devastating military or divine blows

A verb reserved almost entirely for poetry and prophecy, describing the most violent kind of striking — not a slap but a shattering blow. Jael 'struck through' Sisera's temple (Judg 5:26), God's arrows 'pierce' enemy nations (Num 24:8), and the messianic king 'shatters kings on the day of his wrath' (Ps 110:5-6). Spanish consistently renders it with 'herir/herir' (to wound/smite), while German reaches for 'zerschmettern' (to shatter). The Assyrian cognate mahasu (to smite, wound) confirms that this root carried military force across the ancient Near East.

1. shatter, crush (7×) To shatter or crush with overwhelming force, reducing the target to ruin. This sense emphasizes total destruction rather than a single blow. God shatters heads (Ps 68:21), crushes the loins of adversaries (Deut 33:11), and the Davidic king shatters kings in the day of wrath (Ps 110:5). German 'zerschmettert' (smashed to pieces) and Spanish 'herirá/aplastaste' capture the finality. The Balaam oracle (Num 24:17) prophesies a ruler who will 'shatter the corners of Moab.' CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: He-has-shattered, and-I-shatter-them, and-crushes | es: aplastaste, herirá, hiere | fr: de-écraser, et-crushes, et-je-shatter-eux | de: [מחצת], er-hat-zerschmettert, hat-zerschmettert Num 24:17; Deut 33:11; 2Sam 22:39; Ps 68:21; Ps 110:5

2. strike, smite (4×) To strike or smite with a powerful blow, focusing on the act of hitting rather than the degree of destruction. Jael 'struck' Sisera's head with a tent peg (Judg 5:26), and Job acknowledges that God 'strikes but his hands also heal' (Job 5:18). French 'frappa' (struck) and Spanish 'hirió' reflect the narrative emphasis on the moment of impact. In Job 26:12 God strikes the sea monster Rahab, combining military imagery with cosmic combat. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: He-shattered, I-struck-them, and-she-struck | es: hiere, hirió, los-heriré | fr: et-elle-frappa, écraser, ימחץ | de: [ימחץ], [מחץ], ich-schlug-ihnen Judg 5:26; Job 5:18; Job 26:12; Ps 18:38

3. pierce, penetrate (2×) To pierce or penetrate through a target, emphasizing that the blow goes deep or passes through. Balaam's oracle declares that Israel's arrows 'pierce' enemy nations (Num 24:8), and Psalm 68:23 envisions feet dipped in blood from pierced foes. The imagery moves from surface impact to penetration, and Spanish 'quebrará' (will break through) reflects the breakthrough quality of the strike. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: he-shatters, may-strike | es: golpees, quebrará | fr: il-shatters, écraser | de: er-shatters, möge-schlagen Num 24:8; Ps 68:23

4. wound, injure (1×) To wound or injure, with the focus shifting from the act of striking to the bodily harm inflicted. In the Song of Moses (Deut 32:39), God declares 'I wound and I heal,' pairing machats with healing to highlight the wound as the central result. Spanish 'hiero' (I wound) and the theological context of divine sovereignty over life and death place the emphasis squarely on the injury rather than the weapon or manner of attack. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: I-wound | es: hiero | fr: je-blessure | de: ich-Wunde Deut 32:39

מַחַץ H4273 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Blow, severe wound; the crushing stroke God inflicts, which He also will heal

This term appears in Isaiah 30:26, promising future restoration: 'the Lord will bind up the wound of His people and heal the blow He inflicted.' The word describes a severe strike or crushing wound, distinguished from the more common word for wound that parallels it. The passage emphasizes divine sovereignty in both judgment and healing—the same God who delivered the blow will provide the cure. The medical imagery makes theological truth tangible: God's restoration addresses the very injuries His discipline caused.

(1×) A crushing blow or severe wound inflicted by God in judgment, appearing in Isaiah's promise of restoration. The term describes traumatic injury caused by divine strike, which the same God will heal. Isaiah pairs medical healing vocabulary with recognition that God both wounds and cures. The image captures the complete cycle of judgment and restoration—the blow that seemed fatal becomes the prelude to healing. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: of-His-blow | es: y-herida-de | fr: [ומחץ] | de: [ומחץ] Isa 30:26

מַחְצֵב H4274 N-ms (3×)

hewing, cutting; hewn or quarried stone

A noun denoting hewing or cutting, specifically used for hewn or quarried stones prepared for construction. It appears only in the phrase 'hewn stones' (literally 'stones of hewing') in contexts of temple repair. Both 2 Kings passages (12:12, 22:6) and the Chronicles parallel (34:11) mention purchasing hewn stones along with timber for repairing the temple. The term emphasizes deliberately cut and shaped stones as opposed to rough fieldstones, indicating quality construction.

(3×) Multilingual glosses identify quarried or cut stone: Spanish 'cantera' (quarry), English 'hewn, quarried.' Second Kings 12:12 and 22:6 record the purchase of hewn stones for Joash's and Josiah's temple repairs respectively, paired with timber in both accounts. Second Chronicles 34:11 parallels the Josiah account. The consistent pairing with timber shows these were major building materials. The hewn stones represent intentional preparation and quality—not random stones but carefully cut blocks for sacred architecture. STONE AND ROCK

en: hewn, quarried | es: cantera | fr: [מחצב], taillé | de: [מחצב], hewn 2Kgs 12:12; 2Kgs 22:6; 2Chr 34:11

מֶחֱצָה H4275 Art / N-fs (2×)

half (of something divided)

A noun denoting one of two equal portions, specifically half of a divided whole. Both biblical occurrences appear in Numbers 31 regarding the distribution of war spoils after the Midianite campaign. The term describes the precise division of plunder between fighting soldiers and the wider congregation, reflecting the legal and mathematical precision of Priestly legislation. The multilingual glosses (Spanish mitad, French moitié, German Hälfte) all converge on the fractional concept of 'half.'

(2×) Denotes one half of a divided quantity, particularly in contexts of distribution or apportionment. Numbers 31:36 and 31:43 use this term for the half-portion of spoils allocated to different groups after battle. The Priestly writer's precise language ensures equitable distribution. Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly treats this as a mathematical fraction—half of the total—rather than an approximate or metaphorical division. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: half-of, the-half | es: la-mitad, mitad-de | fr: le-moitié, moitié-de | de: Haelfte-von, der-Haelfte Num 31:36; Num 31:43

מַחֲצִית H4276 Prep-m / N-fsc / 3mp (16×)

Half — one of two equal portions, used for the half-shekel tax, divided spoils, and half-tribes.

A feminine noun meaning 'half' or 'one-half of a whole,' always appearing in construct or suffixed form to indicate half of some specified quantity. Its most famous usage is the half-shekel census tax: every Israelite twenty years and older contributed a machatzit hasheqel as 'ransom money' (Exod 30:13, 15; 38:26), a practice that persisted into Second Temple times. It also governs the division of war spoils in Numbers 31 — half for the soldiers, half for the congregation (Num 31:29, 30, 42, 47) — and designates the half-tribes of Manasseh in territorial allotments (Josh 21:25; 1 Chr 6:46). Nehemiah 8:3 uses the related sense of 'midpoint' for the middle of the day. Spanish 'mitad,' French 'moitie,' and German 'Halfte' all capture the partitive meaning.

half (portion) (16×) One half of a whole, used in construct or with pronominal suffixes to specify what is being divided. Applied to the half-shekel atonement tax for the census (Exod 30:13, 15; 38:26), the equal division of war spoils between combatants and the assembly (Num 31:29, 30, 42, 47), half-tribe territorial designations (Josh 21:25; 1 Chr 6:46, 55), and the half-chariot command of Zimri (1 Kgs 16:9). In Nehemiah 8:3, the sense extends to 'midpoint' of the day. Spanish 'mitad' and German 'Halfte' consistently reflect the partitive meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: And-from-half-of, and-from-half-of, and-half-of-it | es: Y-de-mitad-de, de-mitad-de, de-su-mitad | fr: Et-de-moitié-de, [וממחצית], [מחצית] | de: And-von-Haelfte-von, Haelfte-von, Haelfte-von-es Exod 30:13; Exod 30:15; Exod 30:23; Exod 38:26

מָחַק H4277 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

Shatter, crush completely; Jael's decisive blow that destroyed Sisera's head

This violent verb appears in Judges 5:26, describing Jael's killing of Sisera in Deborah's victory song: 'she shattered his head.' The term suggests complete crushing or annihilation, going beyond simple striking to convey utter destruction. The Song of Deborah uses multiple violent verbs to describe Jael's deed, with this one emphasizing the thoroughness of Sisera's head's destruction. The word appears nowhere else in Scripture, adding to its stark, final quality. The rare verb matches the decisive brutality of the moment.

(1×) Complete annihilation or crushing, used only in Deborah's song to describe Jael's fatal blow to Sisera. The verb goes beyond striking or hitting to convey total destruction of the head. Its uniqueness in Scripture matches the song's celebratory violence—this was no ordinary death but a crushing victory. The term's rarity and intensity capture the decisive, brutal moment when Israel's enemy was utterly destroyed by a woman's hand. OPPRESS CAUSE DISTRESS

en: she-shattered | es: aplastó | fr: elle-shattered | de: sie-shattered Judg 5:26

מָחְקָר H4278 N-mpc (1×)

Depths, ranges; the explorable regions of the earth under God's sovereign control

This term appears in Psalm 95:4, celebrating God's universal sovereignty: 'In His hand are the depths of the earth, and the mountain peaks are His also.' The word describes ranges or regions that can be explored or searched—perhaps the deep places of the earth, its foundations, or its extent. The psalm contrasts depths with heights (mountain peaks), encompassing all vertical space under divine control. Whether understood as physical depths or geographical ranges, the term contributes to comprehensive imagery of God ruling from earth's lowest to highest points.

(1×) The deep places or ranges of the earth under God's sovereign hand, contrasted with mountain peaks in Psalm 95. The term may describe explorable depths, foundations, or geographical extent—what can be searched or ranged over. Paired with heights, it creates comprehensive vertical imagery: God holds everything from deepest depth to highest summit. The word emphasizes God's control over all terrestrial space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-depths-of | es: profundidades-de | fr: de-profondeur | de: der-Tiefen-von Ps 95:4

מָחָר H4279 Conj-w / Adv (52×)

Tomorrow, the next day; also used idiomatically for 'in time to come' or 'in the future.'

A temporal adverb meaning 'tomorrow' or 'the following day,' probably derived from a root meaning 'front' or 'what is ahead.' It appears in vivid narrative moments: Moses tells Pharaoh the plague will come 'tomorrow' (Exod 8:23; 9:5, 18), Saul will meet Samuel 'about this time tomorrow' (1 Sam 9:16), and Jonathan warns David that 'tomorrow is the new moon' (1 Sam 20:5, 18). The idiomatic phrase machar or le-machar also extends to the indefinite future: 'when your children ask tomorrow' means 'in time to come' (Josh 4:6, 21; 22:24, 27-28). Proverbs 27:1 warns against boasting about tomorrow, since no one knows what a day may bring. Spanish manana, French demain, and German morgen all share this dual sense of the literal next day and an open future.

tomorrow (temporal adverb) (52×) Tomorrow or the next day, used both as a concrete time reference and in the idiomatic sense of 'in the future, in time to come.' Moses repeatedly announces plagues for 'tomorrow' (Exod 8:23; 9:5, 18), while Joshua uses it to mean 'when future generations ask' (Josh 4:6, 21; 22:24). The construction ka'et machar ('about this time tomorrow') adds temporal precision in royal and prophetic speech (1 Sam 9:16; 1 Kgs 19:2; 20:6). Proverbs 27:1 deploys it for its philosophical weight: do not boast about tomorrow. Spanish manana and French demain preserve the same dual literal-and-figurative range. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: tomorrow | es: Mañana, mañana | fr: demain | de: morgen Gen 30:33; Exod 8:10; Exod 8:23; Exod 8:29; Exod 9:5

מַחֳרָאָה H4280 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

Cesspools, latrines; the degrading use Jehu made of Baal's destroyed temple (ketiv reading)

This coarse term appears in 2 Kings 10:27 in the ketiv (written) text, though the qere (read) text substitutes a euphemism. After destroying Baal's temple and its worshipers, Jehu converted the sacred site 'into cesspools' or latrines. The word describes the ultimate desecration—transforming a place of pagan worship into facilities for human waste. The ketiv's crude vocabulary matches the contemptuous treatment of Baal's temple. No greater insult existed than turning a holy place into a cloaca. The textual tradition's embarrassment produced the euphemistic reading.

(1×) Public latrines or cesspools, the degrading purpose to which Jehu converted Baal's destroyed temple. This ketiv reading uses crude vocabulary appropriate to Jehu's contemptuous desecration of pagan sacred space. Transforming a worship site into facilities for human waste represented ultimate insult and defilement. The term's coarseness captures the zealous king's thorough contempt for Baal worship. Later textual tradition substituted a euphemism, but the original chose shocking vocabulary. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: [para-letrinas] | fr: [ketiv] | de: [ketiv] 2Kgs 10:27

מַחֲרֵשָׁה H4281 N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

plowshare (agricultural implement)

An agricultural tool used for plowing, specifically the metal blade that cuts the soil. Both occurrences are in 1 Samuel 13, describing the Philistine monopoly on metalworking that left Israel dependent on their enemies for sharpening farm implements. This economic oppression was strategic—controlling metal tools meant controlling agricultural productivity and military capacity. The term appears alongside other agricultural implements (axes, goads), illustrating the comprehensive nature of Philistine control during Saul's early reign.

(2×) The cutting blade of a plow used in agriculture. First Samuel 13:20-21 depicts Israelites needing Philistine blacksmiths to sharpen their plowshares, revealing economic subjugation. This agricultural implement becomes a symbol of dependence and vulnerability. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish rejas, French soc/plowshare) identify this as the specific plow blade rather than the entire implement, though some translations struggle with the technical terminology, preserving the Hebrew term. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: for-the-plowshares, his-plowshare | es: azada-de-él, para-las-rejas | fr: pour-le-plowshares, son-plowshare | de: fuer-der-plowshares, sein-plowshare 1Sam 13:20; 1Sam 13:21

מַחֲרֵשָׁה H4282 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

Plowshare, the cutting blade of a plow; brought to Philistines for sharpening during their metal monopoly

This agricultural term appears in 1 Samuel 13:20-21, describing Philistine economic control: Israelites had to go to Philistines to sharpen their plowshares. The plowshare was the critical metal blade that cut through soil, requiring periodic sharpening to remain effective. Philistine monopoly on metalworking forced Israelite farmers into dependency for basic agricultural maintenance. The text's detailed listing of farming implements (plowshares, axes, mattocks) emphasizes how Philistine control of metal technology extended into every aspect of Israelite economic life. Even plowing required Philistine permission.

(1×) The metal cutting blade of a plow, appearing in the account of Philistine metalworking monopoly. Israelite farmers had to travel to Philistine smiths to sharpen these essential agricultural tools. The plowshare represents how Philistine control of metallurgy created economic dependency—even basic farming required Philistine services. The term appears in a list of farming implements that together show comprehensive Philistine technological advantage over Israel. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: his-plowshare | es: reja-de-él | fr: son-plowshare | de: sein-plowshare 1Sam 13:20

מָחָרָת H4283 Prep-m / N-fsc (32×)

the next day, the morrow — a temporal noun denoting the day following a referenced event

Mochorat (often with the preposition min as mimochorat) is a temporal noun meaning 'the next day' or 'the morrow,' appearing 32 times to mark narrative sequence and liturgical timing. It is the storyteller's essential hinge for advancing the plot to the following morning: 'and it came to pass on the morrow' (vayyehi mimochorat) introduces decisive turning points after the destruction of Sodom (Gen 19:34), after the golden calf incident (Exod 32:30), and after Saul's death (1 Sam 31:8). In liturgical law, it takes on precise calendrical meaning: Leviticus 23:11-16 stipulates the wave-sheaf offering on 'the morrow of the sabbath,' a phrase that generated centuries of interpretive debate between Pharisees and Sadducees. Spanish 'al dia siguiente,' French 'le lendemain,' and German 'am nachsten Tag' all capture the straightforward day-after sense.

the next day, the morrow (32×) A temporal noun indicating the day immediately following a narrative or calendrical reference point. In narrative, mimochorat ('on the morrow') advances the plot to the next morning after pivotal events — Sodom's destruction (Gen 19:34), the golden calf (Exod 32:30), Saul's death (1 Sam 31:8). In liturgical contexts, 'the morrow of the sabbath' (Lev 23:11, 15-16) and 'the morrow of the Passover' (Num 33:3; Josh 5:11) set precise ritual calendrical timing. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT en: and-on-the-morrow, and-on-the-next-day, and-the-next-day | es: al-día-siguiente, al-día-siguiente-de, y-al-día-siguiente | fr: de-le-morrow-de, de-le-next-jour, de-le-suivant-jour | de: am-nächsten-Tag, auf-der-naechster-Tag, auf-der-next-Tag Gen 19:34; Exod 9:6; Exod 18:13; Exod 32:6; Exod 32:30

מַחֲשָׁבָה H4284 N-fpc / 1cp (56×)

Thought, plan, scheme, device; inner cognitive activity ranging from quiet reflection to deliberate purpose, hostile plotting, and artistic design.

Machashavah holds together the entire arc of the thinking mind, from wordless reflection to calculated design. At one end, it describes the quiet inner life — what humans and God think in the privacy of their hearts — as when Genesis 6:5 observes that 'every inclination of the thoughts (machshevot) of the human heart was only evil continually.' At the other end, it becomes intensely practical: the skilled artisans of the tabernacle devise machashavot — 'inventive designs' — in gold, silver, and bronze (Exod 31:4; 35:32). Between these poles lie plans that may be benevolent (Psalm 33:11, 'the plans of the LORD stand firm forever') or malicious (Jeremiah 11:19, 'I did not know they had devised schemes against me'). German captures the spectrum neatly: Gedanken for quiet thoughts, Plaene for deliberate plans, and the shared root denk- underscoring that thinking and planning shade into each other. Spanish pensamientos and French dessein show a similar spread. The word's richness warns against reducing Hebrew cognition to a single register.

1. thoughts, mental reflections (24×) Inner thoughts, mental reflections, and cognitive activity — the broadest sense at 24 occurrences, covering what humans and God think, ponder, or turn over in the mind. Genesis 6:5 pairs it with yetser ('inclination') to describe the total depravity of antediluvian thought, while Psalm 94:11 declares 'the LORD knows the thoughts of man — that they are vapor.' In 1 Chronicles 28:9 David tells Solomon that God 'searches every heart and understands every machashavah,' where the word clearly means the unspoken cognitive life rather than any external plan. Spanish pensamientos, French dessein, and German Gedanken all select reflective or cognitive vocabulary here, confirming a genuine 'thinking' sense distinct from purposive planning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Your-thoughts, and-my-thoughts, and-their-thoughts | es: pensamientos, pensamientos-de, pensamientos-nuestros | fr: de-dessein, dessein, et-de-dessein | de: Plaene, Plan, der-Gedanken Gen 6:5; 1Chr 28:9; 1Chr 29:18; Job 5:12; Job 21:27

2. plans, purposes, intentions (17×) Deliberate plans, purposes, or intentions that one resolves to carry out — 17 occurrences where the emphasis shifts from interior reflection to forward-looking resolve. Psalm 33:10-11 contrasts the futile machshevot of the nations with the enduring machshevot of YHWH that 'stand firm through all generations,' and Proverbs 6:18 lists 'a heart that devises wicked plans' among the things the LORD hates. The shift from thought to plan is visible in the multilingual evidence: German uses Plaene ('plans') and Spanish los planes de rather than the reflective pensamientos of sense 1. In 2 Samuel 14:14, the wise woman of Tekoa says God 'devises plans (machashavot) so that the banished one may not remain an outcast' — a vivid example of divine purposive thinking. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-plan, and-his-plans, are-plans | es: Los-planes-de, Planes, los-pensamientos | fr: de-dessein, dessein, et-dessein | de: Plaene, Plan, plans 2Sam 14:14; Esth 8:5; Ps 33:10; Ps 33:11; Prov 6:18

3. schemes, evil plots (9×) Hostile schemes, evil plots, and cunning machinations devised against others — 9 occurrences where the neutral 'plan' darkens into malicious conspiracy. Jeremiah 11:19 discovers too late that his enemies had 'devised schemes' against him like leading a lamb to slaughter, and Lamentations 3:60 pairs machashavah directly with vengeance: 'you have seen all their schemes against me.' Esther 8:3 and 9:25 use the word for Haman's genocidal plot against the Jews, where the political stakes elevate the term beyond private ill will to state-level conspiracy. Spanish planes/pensamiento and French projet/dessein shift toward negative-intentionality vocabulary in these contexts. The difference from sense 2 is not merely contextual coloring but a genuine semantic clustering around adversarial, other-directed plotting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-plot, his-schemes, scheme | es: pensamiento, planes, planes-sus | fr: dessein, projet | de: Plaene, Plan Esth 8:3; Esth 9:25; Jer 11:19; Jer 18:18; Lam 3:60

4. inventive design, skilled craft (6×) Inventive design and skilled craftsmanship — 6 occurrences, all concentrated in the Exodus tabernacle narratives and 2 Chronicles. In Exodus 31:4 God fills Bezalel with his Spirit so that he can 'devise artistic designs (machashavot) in gold, silver, and bronze,' and Exodus 35:32-35 repeats the term three times for the full range of tabernacle artistry. In 2 Chronicles 2:14, Huram-abi is described as skilled in machashavot of every kind, and 2 Chronicles 26:15 attributes military 'inventions' to Uzziah's engineers. Spanish diseños ('designs'), French designs, and German entwerfen ('to devise/draft') all select craft-and-engineering vocabulary, clearly distinguishing this from the cognitive and volitional senses. The word here merges thinking with making — the artisan's machashavah is a thought that takes physical form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: design, designs, invention-of | es: diseño, diseños, invención-de | fr: design, designs, projet | de: Plan, designs, entwerfen Exod 31:4; Exod 35:32; Exod 35:33; Exod 35:35; 2Chr 2:14

מַחְשָׁךְ H4285 Prep-b / N-ms (7×)

Dark place or darkness, used poetically for hiding places, the grave, Sheol, and secrecy

A poetic noun for a dark place or region of darkness, carrying rich metaphorical freight across the Psalms, Lamentations, and Isaiah. It can designate the hiding places of violence in the land (Ps 74:20), the dark depths associated with death and Sheol (Ps 88:6, 18; 143:3; Lam 3:6), or the secrecy in which plotters operate (Isa 29:15). Isaiah 42:16 offers the hopeful reversal, promising God will turn dark places into light. The word consistently evokes not just absence of light but spiritual desolation and concealment.

darkness, dark place (7×) A dark place, region of darkness, or gloom, used in elevated poetic contexts. It encompasses several metaphorical extensions: (a) hiding places of violence and oppression in the land (Ps 74:20); (b) the shadowy realm of death, Sheol, or the grave (Ps 88:6, 18; 143:3 = Lam 3:6); (c) secrecy and concealment of wicked plots (Isa 29:15); and (d) a condition of disorientation that God promises to dispel (Isa 42:16). Spanish renderings like 'tinieblas' and 'lugares oscuros' reflect the literal-to-figurative range. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: In-darkness, are-darkness, darkness | es: En-lugares-oscuros, en-oscuridades, en-tinieblas | fr: [במחשך], [במחשכים], [מחשך] | de: [במחשך], [במחשכים], [מחשך] Ps 74:20; Ps 88:6; Ps 88:18; Ps 143:3; Isa 29:15

מַחְשֹׂף H4286 N-msc (1×)

Exposing, laying bare; Jacob's technique of stripping white bark to create visual breeding stimuli

This term appears in Genesis 30:37, describing Jacob's selective breeding technique: 'exposing the white which was in the rods.' Jacob peeled bark from poplar branches to create white stripes, then placed these rods before breeding flocks. The word describes the act of laying bare or uncovering what lies beneath the surface. Whether this reflected ancient animal husbandry theory or folkloric practice, the text presents Jacob deliberately exposing contrasting colors. The 'exposing of the white' was central to his strategy for increasing his flock's proportion of striped offspring.

(1×) The act of stripping away bark to expose white wood beneath, appearing in Jacob's breeding strategy. The term describes laying bare what was hidden under the surface—the light-colored wood under dark bark. Jacob's exposure of white created visual stimuli he believed would influence breeding outcomes. Whether based on animal husbandry theory or folk belief, the deliberate exposing of contrasting color was essential to his plan for prospering at Laban's expense. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: exposing | es: descubrimiento-de | fr: exposing | de: Entblößung Gen 30:37

מַחַת H4287 N-proper-ms (3×)

Mahath (personal name: possibly 'seizing' or 'grasping')

A personal name borne by two Levites mentioned in Chronicles. The first Mahath appears in a genealogical list of Levites (1 Chronicles 6:35). The second, or possibly the same individual in different contexts, appears during Hezekiah's reforms as one of the Levites who helped consecrate the temple (2 Chronicles 29:12) and later served as an overseer of temple contributions (31:13). The name may derive from a root meaning to seize or grasp.

(3×) This proper name appears transliterated as 'Mahath, Majat' across languages. First Chronicles 6:35 places him in a Levitical genealogy. Second Chronicles 29:12 identifies him as one of the Kohathite Levites who answered Hezekiah's call to consecrate the temple after years of neglect. Second Chronicles 31:13 lists him among officials supervising temple contributions during the reforms. Whether one person or two, the name marks faithful Levitical service during crucial religious renewal. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: Machat, and-Mahath | es: Majat, y-Majat | fr: [ומחת], [מחת] | de: [ומחת], [מחת] 1Chr 6:35; 2Chr 29:12; 2Chr 31:13

מְחִתָּה H4288 N-fsc (11×)

Ruin or destruction (especially of fools); terror or object of dread (in prophetic judgment contexts).

A poetic noun appearing almost exclusively in Proverbs and the prophets, carrying two related but distinguishable senses. In wisdom literature, it denotes ruin as the natural consequence of folly and wickedness: the fool's mouth is his own ruin (Prov 10:14; 13:3; 18:7), poverty is the ruin of the poor (Prov 10:15), and evildoers face destruction (Prov 10:29). In prophetic texts the emphasis shifts to terror and dread: Zion is promised freedom from terror (Isa 54:14), Jeremiah asks God not to be a terror to him (Jer 17:17), and Moab becomes an object of dread (Jer 48:39). Spanish distinguishes the two nicely: 'ruina' for the wisdom contexts, 'terror' for the prophetic ones.

1. ruin, destruction (8×) Ruin or destruction as the consequence of foolishness, wickedness, or poverty – a dominant theme in Proverbs. The fool's mouth is his own ruin (Prov 10:14; 13:3; 18:7), poverty ruins the poor (Prov 10:15), and without people a prince faces ruin (Prov 14:28). Psalm 89:40 extends this to the devastation of strongholds. Spanish 'ruina' and French 'ruine' uniformly render this sense. The word functions as a wisdom concept: moral and practical collapse following from folly, opposed to the 'stronghold' (מָעוֹז) that righteousness provides (Prov 10:29). DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: a-ruin, but-destruction, comes-to-ruin | es: en-ruinas, pero-ruina, ruina | fr: de-effroi, et-ruine, ruine | de: [ומחתה], [מחתה], [מחתת] Ps 89:40; Prov 10:14; Prov 10:15; Prov 10:29; Prov 13:3

2. terror, object of dread (3×) Terror or an object of dread, used in prophetic contexts of divine judgment. Isaiah 54:14 promises restored Zion that she will be far from terror (מְחִתָּה), paired with oppression (עֹשֶׁק). Jeremiah 17:17 implores God not to become a terror to the prophet, and Jeremiah 48:39 declares Moab an object of dread and derision. Spanish 'terror' and the English 'dread' capture the affective weight – not merely ruin as outcome, but the fearful apprehension that divine judgment produces. The word moves from wisdom's cause-and-effect logic to prophecy's emotional and existential register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-terror, and-from-terror, for-ruin | es: para-terror, y-de-terror, y-para-terror | fr: [ולמחתה], [וממחתה], [למחתה] | de: [ולמחתה], [וממחתה], [למחתה] Isa 54:14; Jer 17:17; Jer 48:39

מַחְתָּה H4289 N-fpc (22×)

Fire-holder, censer, or snuff-dish; a ritual vessel for carrying coals, incense, or trimming lamp wicks.

A cultic utensil with a surprisingly wide range of uses in tabernacle and temple service. The maḥtah could be a gold snuff-dish for trimming the lampstand wicks (Ex 25:38; 37:23), a bronze firepan for handling ashes from the altar of burnt offerings (Ex 27:3; 38:3), or a censer carried by priests for burning incense — most memorably by Aaron to stop a plague (Num 17:11) and by the 250 men of Korah's rebellion (Num 16:6–18). Spanish consistently renders it 'incensario' (censer), while English toggles between 'firepan' and 'censer' depending on context.

1. firepan, snuff dish, tray (15×) A firepan, snuff-dish, or tray used in routine tabernacle maintenance — either as a gold snuff-holder for trimming lampstand wicks (Ex 25:38; 37:23; Num 4:9) or a bronze pan associated with the altar of burnt offerings (Ex 27:3; 38:3; Num 4:14). Also appears as gold vessels in Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:50; 2 Chr 4:22) and among items carried into Babylonian exile (2 Kgs 25:15; Jer 52:19). The Spanish 'braseros' (braziers) for the altar contexts versus 'incensarios' elsewhere reflects the functional ambiguity translators have long navigated. INCENSE CENSER en: and-its-firepans, and-its-trays, and-the-firepans | es: incensarios, incensar-

ios-de, los-braseros | fr: [המחתות], [והמחתות], et-le-firepans | de: Feuer-pans, Feuer-pans-von, [המחתות] Exod 25:38; Exod 27:3; Exod 37:23; Exod 38:3; Num 4:9

2. censer for incense (7×) A portable censer specifically for carrying burning coals and incense in priestly ritual. This sense dominates the Leviticus and Numbers narratives: Nadab and Abihu each took 'his censer' to offer unauthorized fire (Lev 10:1), the high priest brings a censer into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:12), and the 250 rebels each carry one in the Korah episode (Num 16:6, 17–18). Aaron's intercession with his censer to halt the plague (Num 17:11) epitomizes the life-and-death stakes this object carried in Israelite worship. INCENSE CENSER

en: his-censer, his-fire-pan, the-fire-pan | es: el-incensario, su-incensario | fr: le-feu-pan, son-censer, son-feu-pan | de: der-Feuer-pan, sein-Feuer-pan, sein-censer Lev 10:1; Lev 16:12; Num 16:17

מַחְתֶּרֶת H4290 Prep-b (2×)

breaking in, burglary (the act of forcible entry)

A legal term referring to the act of breaking into a building, typically for theft—what we would call burglary. The term appears in two legal/prophetic contexts examining culpability. Exodus 22:2 addresses when a homeowner may justifiably kill a burglar caught in the act. Jeremiah 2:34 uses the phrase negatively: God indicts Israel for killing innocent people who were not caught breaking in, meaning they had no legitimate defense. The term thus carries forensic precision about criminal acts and justifiable responses.

(2×) The criminal act of forcibly breaking into a dwelling, typically with intent to steal. Exodus 22:2 establishes that a thief caught in the act of breaking in may be killed without bloodguilt for the defender. Jeremiah 2:34 contrasts this: the innocent blood Israel has shed was not from catching criminals in burglary, exposing their injustice. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish excavación, French/German struggle with the idiom) shows this is a technical legal term for forcible entry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-breaking-in, in-the-breaking-in | es: en-excavación, en-la-excavación | fr: [במחתרת], dans-le-breaking-dans | de: [במחתרת], in-der-breaking-in Exod 22:2; Jer 2:34

מְטָא H4291 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (8×)

To reach, arrive at, attain; an Aramaic verb used exclusively in Daniel for reaching a place, extending to a point, or befalling someone.

This Aramaic verb means to reach, arrive, or attain, and appears only in the book of Daniel. It describes Nebuchadnezzar's great tree whose height 'reached' to heaven (Dan 4:11, 20), a decree that 'came upon' the king (Dan 4:24, 28), and the Ancient of Days to whom one 'came' in a vision (Dan 7:13). Spanish alcanzar ('to reach, attain') and llegaba ('was arriving') nicely capture the dual spatial and temporal dimensions – both physical extension and the arrival of appointed times.

reach, attain, arrive (8×) To reach, arrive at, or attain – covering spatial extension, temporal arrival, and the befalling of events. Used of the great tree reaching heaven (Dan 4:11, 20), of a decree coming upon Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:24, 28), of one like a son of man coming to the Ancient of Days (Dan 7:13), of the appointed time arriving (Dan 7:22), and of men being cast into a den (Dan 6:24). Spanish alcanzar and ha-alcanzado ('reached, attained') reflect the spatial sense, while French atteindre ('to attain') captures both literal and figurative reaching. This Aramaic verb corresponds to Biblical Hebrew matsa but carries its own distinct coloring in Daniel's apocalyptic prose. GOING AND LEADING

en: He-came, and-reached, arrived | es: alcanzó, ha-alcanzado, llegaba | fr: atteindre, et-atteindre, lit | de: Stamm, [ומטת], [מטא'] Dan 4:11; Dan 4:20; Dan 4:22; Dan 4:24; Dan 4:28

מַטְאֲטֵא H4292 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

Broom, besom; the sweeping implement God will use to clear Babylon of inhabitants

This domestic implement appears in Isaiah 14:23, in God's oracle against Babylon: 'I will sweep it with the broom of destruction.' The broom represents thorough cleaning, removing all debris. Isaiah transforms this household tool into an instrument of divine judgment—God will sweep Babylon clean of inhabitants and glory. The image suggests comprehensive removal, leaving nothing behind but emptiness. What the broom accomplishes in a house—total clearing of unwanted material—God will accomplish in Babylon. The mundane tool becomes apocalyptic metaphor.

(1×) A sweeping tool used metaphorically in Isaiah's judgment oracle against Babylon. God promises to sweep the city with a broom of destruction, removing all inhabitants and glory. The domestic implement becomes an image of comprehensive divine judgment—just as a broom thoroughly clears a floor, God will clear Babylon. The household metaphor makes cosmic judgment tangible and total, suggesting nothing will remain after God's sweeping. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-broom-of | es: con-escoba-de | fr: [במטאטא] | de: [במטאטא] Isa 14:23

מַטְבֵּחַ H4293 N-ms (1×)

slaughtering-place, site for killing (animals or, metaphorically, enemies)

This term appears only in Isaiah 14:21, where the prophet condemns Babylon's rulers to prepare a slaughtering-place for their sons—a grim reversal of power. The underlying image is that of a place where animals are slaughtered, but here applied metaphorically to violent judgment. The multilingual evidence (English 'slaughter,' Spanish 'matadero' = slaughterhouse) confirms the concrete-to-metaphorical extension. The passage uses the implicit figure of enemies as animals destined for slaughter, a common prophetic motif of divine judgment.

(1×) A place designated for slaughtering animals, used metaphorically in Isaiah 14:21 for the violent judgment awaiting the sons of Babylon's kings. The root connection to טבח (to slaughter) and the Phoenician cognate reinforce the sense of a killing ground, whether literal (for livestock) or figurative (for defeated enemies). The single occurrence carries the weight of prophetic irony: those who wielded violent power will themselves be led to the slaughter. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: slaughter | es: matadero | fr: [מטבח] | de: [מטבח] Isa 14:21

מַטֶּה H4294 Conj-w (252×)

Staff, rod, or branch; by metonymy, a tribe of Israel descended from a patriarch, the dominant biblical usage.

Originally denoting a wooden staff or rod carried by a traveler, shepherd, or leader, this word acquired its most frequent biblical meaning through a vivid metonymy: as a branch grows from a tree trunk, so a tribe branches from a patriarchal ancestor. Fully 73% of its occurrences refer to the tribal divisions of Israel, making it the standard term in Numbers and Joshua for national organization. The concrete sense appears memorably in Moses' wonder-working staff (Exod 4:2-17) and Aaron's budding rod (Num 17). In Ezekiel 19 it describes literal branches of a vine, while Habakkuk 3:9, 14 preserves a rare archaic usage for divination implements.

1. tribe, clan (183×) The most frequent sense by far (183x), denoting a hereditary tribal division — especially of Israel. Arabic سِبْط and Korean 지파 both select dedicated 'tribe' vocabulary here, confirming full lexicalization distinct from 'rod.' Dominant in Numbers 1-4, Joshua 13-21, and 1 Kings 7-8 tribal census and allotment texts. The metonymic leap from 'branch' to 'tribal branch' parallels English 'branch of a family.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tribe-of | es: Tribu-de, tribu-de | fr: tribu-de | de: Stamm-von Num 1:49; Num 2:5; Num 2:7; Num 2:12; Num 2:20

2. staff, rod, scepter (63×) A physical wooden staff, rod, or scepter (63x) — the concrete object from which the tribal metaphor derives. Moses' staff at the burning bush (Exod 4:2), Aaron's rod that budded (Num 17:8), and Pharaoh's magicians' rods (Exod 7:12) all use this sense. Spanish vara, French bâton, and German Stab consistently render it as a handheld stick, while Arabic ʿ ('staff') matches precisely. Can denote authority when functioning as a scepter (Isa 10:24). RODS AND STAFFS en: his-staff, of-the-staff, staff | es: la-vara, su-vara, vara | fr: bâton, bâton-de, le-bâton | de: Stab, Stab-von, der-Stab Gen 38:25; Exod 4:2; Exod 4:17; Exod 4:20; Exod 7:9

3. branch, shoot (4×) A botanical branch or shoot (4x), confined to Ezekiel 19:11-14 where a vine's strong branches (suitable for a ruler's scepter) are torn off and withered. German Stamm ('trunk, stem') and the multilingual wavering between 'rod' and 'branch' glosses reveal the transitional semantics between senses 2 and 3. The figurative overlay — branches representing royal power — makes this a bridge sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-rod-of, rod-of, rod-of- | es: de-vara-de, vara-de, varas-de | fr: bâton, de-lit, lit | de: Staemme, Stamm, vom-Stamm Ezek 19:11; Ezek 19:12; Ezek 19:14

4. divination rod, lot-arrow (2×) A rare archaic usage (2x) in Habakkuk 3:9, 14 for rods or arrow-shafts associated with divine warfare or lot-casting. Arabic سهام ('arrows') and Swahili mishale ('arrows') in these verses suggest implements of sortition or battle rather than ordinary staffs. The difficult text of Hab 3:14 (with its variant readings מַטֹּתָיִךְ / מַטָּיִךְ) has long puzzled commentators, pointing to an archaic sacral-martial context. RODS AND STAFFS en: the-rods, with-his-own-rods | es: con-sus-varas, varas | fr: bâton | de: [במטיו], [מטות] Hab 3:9; Hab 3:14

מַטָּה H4295 Prep-m (18×)
Downward, below, beneath — adverb of spatial direction indicating lower position or descent
An adverb derived from the root natah ('to stretch, incline') with the locative he ending, indicating downward direction, a lower position, or 'beneath.' It often pairs with its antonym ma'alah ('upward') to express totality of spatial range. In Deuteronomy 28:43 the term is dramatically doubled — 'downward, downward' — to depict the covenant curses of progressive decline. Combined with prepositions it yields phrases like 'from below' (describing the base of the tabernacle altar in Exod 27:5; 38:4) and 'root downward' (Isa 37:31). German and French both render it with locative adverbs reflecting the same directional semantics.

downward, below, beneath (18×) An adverb of spatial direction meaning 'downward,' 'below,' or 'beneath,' derived from natah ('to stretch, incline') with the locative he ending. Frequently paired with ma'alah ('upward') to express the full vertical axis. Used with prepositions in architectural descriptions of the tabernacle (Exod 26:24; 27:5; 38:4), in the covenant curses of progressive decline (Deut 28:13, 43), and in prophetic imagery of rooting 'downward' (Isa 37:31; 2 Kgs 19:30). Spanish 'abajo/debajo' and French 'au-dessous' both map to this directional sense. DOWNWARD BELOW BENEATH en: and-downward, and-under, below | es: abajo, de-abajo-de, debajo | fr: [ולמטה], [למטה], de-au-dessous | de: [ולמטה], [למטה], [מטה] Exod 26:24; Exod 27:5; Exod 28:27; Exod 36:29; Exod 38:4

מִטָּה H4296 N-fsc (29×)
Bed, couch — furniture for sleeping or reclining; rarely a funeral bier or royal litter
The noun מִטָּה is the Hebrew Bible's everyday word for a bed or couch — the place where one sleeps, falls ill, mourns, or plots. Jacob worships at the head of his bed (Gen 47:31), David's enemies are slain on their beds (2 Sam 4:7), and Amos denounces the ivory-inlaid couches of Samaria's elite (Amos 6:4). Two specialized uses expand its range: the bier on which Abner's body is carried (2 Sam 3:31) and Solomon's royal litter or palanquin (Song 3:7). Spanish distinguishes cama ('bed') from féretro ('bier') and lecho ('couch'), tracing the word's semantic edges.

1. bed, couch for reclining (27×) The ordinary bed or couch used for sleeping, resting, reclining during illness, or lounging. This covers the vast majority of occurrences — from Jacob's deathbed (Gen 47:31; 48:2; 49:33) to Elisha's guest room furnishings (2 Kgs 4:10, 21, 32) to the luxurious ivory couches condemned by Amos (Amos 6:4). The multilingual evidence is uniform: Spanish cama, French lit, German Bett — all basic sleeping furniture. Psalms 6:7 ('I drench my bed with tears') captures the intimate, private dimension of this most personal piece of furniture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-bed, bed, beds-of- | es: La-cama, cama, cama-suya | fr: [המטה], [מטות], le-lit | de: Stamm, [המטה], [מטה] Gen 47:31; Gen 48:2; Gen 49:33; Exod 8:3; 1Sam 19:13

2. funeral bier (1×) A funeral bier — a portable frame for carrying a corpse to burial. Only one clear occurrence: David commands Joab and all the people to walk behind Abner's מִטָּה (2 Sam 3:31). Spanish féretro ('coffin/bier') and French bier clearly distinguish this funerary transport from the sleeping bed, even though the underlying Hebrew noun is identical. The semantic extension is natural: the dead person's final 'resting place' carried in procession. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-bier | es: el-féretro | fr: le-bier | de: der-bier 2Sam 3:31

3. litter, portable sedan (1×) A royal litter or portable sedan chair — a bed-like conveyance carried by attendants for a living person of high status. Song of Solomon 3:7 describes Solomon's מִטָּה surrounded by sixty warriors, clearly not a sleeping bed but an elaborate palanquin for ceremonial travel. Spanish lecho ('couch') and French litière ('litter') capture the sense of luxurious portable transport, connecting the basic idea of 'reclining furniture' to royal processional pageantry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-bed | es: su-lecho | fr: la-litière | de: [מטתו] Song 3:7

מִטֶּה H4297 N-ms (1×)
perversion, perverted justice, that which has been twisted or distorted (esp. morally)
In Ezekiel 9:9, Jerusalem is described as filled with this term—a city saturated with moral distortion. The word derives from the Hiphil of נטה (to stretch, turn aside), suggesting something bent out of its proper shape. Ancient versions debated whether to translate it as 'perversion' or 'perverseness,' but the context of Ezekiel's vision of judgment makes clear that the city's moral fabric has been twisted beyond recognition. The French translator left it untranslated, perhaps sensing the difficulty of capturing the full semantic force of judicial and moral corruption combined.

(1×) That which has been perverted or twisted, specifically perverted justice or moral corruption. Ezekiel 9:9 uses this term to indict Jerusalem's leadership for distorting the very foundations of righteousness. The verbal root (Hiphil of נטה) emphasizes active perversion—not mere absence of justice, but its deliberate twisting. Some scholars suggest emending to חמס (violence), but the Masoretic reading captures a distinct nuance: not just violent acts, but the systemic moral distortion that produces them. PERVERSITY CROOKEDNESS en: perversion | es: perversión | fr: lit | de: Stamm Ezek 9:9

מִטָּה H4298 N-fpc (1×)
spreading, outspreading (especially of wings)
Isaiah 8:8 uses this vivid term to describe the Assyrian invasion as a bird of prey with wings outstretched across the land of Judah. The noun captures the terrifying image of widespread domination—like a massive bird whose wingspan covers everything beneath. The grammatical form (plural construct) emphasizes the full extension of the conqueror's reach. This is not gradual encroachment but total, winged coverage—a metaphor that transforms military invasion into a predatory swoop.

(1×) The act or state of spreading out, specifically used of wings in full extension. In Isaiah 8:8, the prophet pictures the Assyrian army as a flood that reaches up to the neck, then shifts metaphors to describe 'the outspreading of his wings' covering Immanuel's land. The image combines aquatic and aerial metaphors to convey the overwhelming, inescapable nature of the invasion. The term's morphology (from נטה = to stretch out) reinforces the spatial expansion implied in the vision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: spreading-of | es: extensión-de | fr: [מטות] | de: [מטות] Isa 8:8

מַטְוֶה H4299 N-ms (1×)

spun yarn, thread or material that has been spun (from raw fiber)

This technical term for spun yarn appears in Exodus 35:25, describing the skilled work of women who spun thread for the tabernacle. The word emphasizes the finished product of the spinning process—not the raw wool or flax, but the processed yarn ready for weaving. Across Spanish, French, and German, translators consistently render this as 'that which is spun,' highlighting the participial nature of the Hebrew. The context celebrates the artisans whose handiwork contributed to the sanctuary's beauty.

(1×) Yarn or thread that has been spun from raw fibers, used in Exodus 35:25 to describe the offerings brought by skilled women for the tabernacle construction. The term derives from טוה (to spin) and denotes the transformed product rather than the raw material. Every woman 'wise-hearted' brought what her hands had spun—blue, purple, scarlet, and fine linen—showing how even textile work was considered sacred service. The multilingual evidence confirms this is a technical term for processed thread ready for weaving. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: spun-yarn | es: lo-hilado | fr: fila-yarn | de: gesponnen-yarn Exod 35:25

מָטִיל H4300 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

wrought-metal rod or bar (cast or hammered metal, used figuratively)

Job 40:18 employs this rare word to describe the hippo's bones as like bars of iron—a metaphor for supreme strength. The term, related to an Aramaic root, denotes not just any metal rod but specifically wrought metal, shaped by casting or forging. The parallel line compares the creature's bones to tubes of bronze, creating a double metallurgical metaphor. This is divine poetry celebrating raw physical power: bones so dense and strong they resemble worked iron, the hardest metal known to the ancient world.

(1×) A rod or bar made of wrought metal (cast or hammered), used figuratively in Job 40:18 to describe Behemoth's bones. The context pairs 'bars of iron' with 'tubes of bronze' in classic Hebrew parallelism, emphasizing the creature's extraordinary skeletal strength. The Aramaic cognate supports the sense of worked metal rather than raw ore. God's rhetorical question to Job reaches its climax in celebrating this creature whose very frame is like industrial metalwork—unbreakable, foundational, beyond human strength to subdue. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-bars-of | es: como-barra-de | fr: comme-כמטיל | de: [כמטיל] Job 40:18

מַטְמוֹן H4301 Conj-w (5×)

hidden treasure, something concealed of great value

In Hebrew matmon denotes treasure that has been buried or hidden away, whether literally or figuratively. Joseph's steward reassures the brothers that their money was a God-given hidden treasure placed in their sacks (Gen 43:23). Proverbs 2:4 urges the seeker to pursue wisdom as one would search for buried treasure. Isaiah 45:3 promises Cyrus 'treasures of darkness and riches of secret places,' while Jeremiah 41:8 mentions provisions hidden in a field. Job 3:21 uses the image of longing for death more than for treasure.

(5×) A hidden or buried treasure — something of value deliberately concealed underground or in a secret place. The Spanish consistently renders it tesoro(s) and the French via transliteration or gouvernement, while English glosses range from 'hidden-treasures' to 'hidden-stores.' Used literally of money in sacks (Gen 43:23), cached provisions (Jer 41:8), and Cyrus's promised spoils (Isa 45:3), and figuratively in wisdom literature for what is eagerly sought (Prov 2:4) or desperately desired (Job 3:21). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-hidden-treasures, and-riches-of, hidden-stores | es: más-que-tesoros, tesoro, tesoros | fr: [ומטמני], [מטמנים], de-ממטמונים | de: [וכמטמונים], [ומטמני], [מטמנים] Gen 43:23; Job 3:21; Prov 2:4; Isa 45:3; Jer 41:8

מַטָּע H4302 N-msc / 3ms (7×)

Planting, plantation, or place of planting; used figuratively of God's people as his cherished planting

A masculine noun denoting a planting, plantation, or the act and place of planting, found exclusively in prophetic literature. Its most memorable use is the metaphor of God's people as 'the planting of the LORD' (Isa 60:21; 61:3), where the image conveys divine care, purposeful cultivation, and hoped-for fruitfulness. Ezekiel employs it for literal agricultural imagery of vine transplantation (Ezek 17:7; 31:4) and a promised 'planting of renown' (Ezek 34:29). Micah 1:6 uses it concretely for vineyard plantings amid a ruined city.

planting, plantation (7×) A planting, plantation, or place of planting, used in prophetic contexts both literally and figuratively. Literally it denotes vineyard planting sites (Mic 1:6) and cultivated beds (Ezek 17:7; 31:4). Figuratively, Isaiah applies it to God's people as 'the shoot of his planting' and 'the planting of the LORD' (Isa 60:21; 61:3), expressing divine ownership, care, and the expectation of righteousness as fruit. Ezekiel 34:29 promises a 'planting of renown,' combining agricultural imagery with covenantal hope. Spanish 'plantaciones' and English 'planting' both preserve the horticultural metaphor. PLANTING PLANTATION

en: [ketiv:his-planting], into-plantings-of, its-planting | es: [Ketiv], mis-plantaciones, para-plantaciones-de | fr: [(מטעי)], [[מטעו]], [מטע] | de: [(מטעי)], [[מטעו]], [למטעי] Isa 60:21; Isa 61:3; Ezek 17:7; Ezek 31:4

מַטְעַם H4303 Prep-l / N-mpc / 3ms (8×)

Tasty food, savory dish, delicacy; especially the savory game-dish Isaac requested from Esau.

Derived from the root ta'am ('to taste'), this masculine noun denotes delicacies or savory food prepared with care. Six of its eight occurrences cluster in Genesis 27, where Isaac asks Esau to prepare matammim – savory food from hunted game – before receiving the patriarchal blessing (Gen 27:4, 7, 9, 14, 17, 31). The remaining two appear in Proverbs 23:3, 6, warning against coveting a ruler's deceptive delicacies. Spanish manjares ('delicacies') and German Leckerbissen ('dainty morsels') both convey the sense of specially prepared, appealing food.

delicacy (tasty food) (8×) Tasty or savory food, delicacies – food prepared with special care to please the palate. Prominently featured in the Isaac-Esau-Jacob narrative, where Isaac requests matammim from hunted game as a prelude to blessing (Gen 27:4, 7, 9, 14, 17, 31). In Proverbs 23:3, 6, the word carries a cautionary edge: a ruler's delicacies may be deceptive. Spanish manjares ('delicacies'), German Leckerbissen ('dainty bites'), and English 'delicacies' all capture the sense of food that is specially prepared and appealing, beyond ordinary sustenance. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: delicacies, his-delicacies, the-delicacies | es: los-manjares, manjares, sus-manjares | fr: delicacies, le-delicacies, à-son-למטעמותיו-lui | de: Leckerbissen, [למטעמותיו], [למטעמתין] Gen 27:4; Gen 27:7; Gen 27:9; Gen 27:14; Gen 27:17

מִטְפַּחַת H4304 Conj-w (2×)

cloak, shawl, outer garment

A garment worn as an outer covering or wrap, likely a large shawl or cloak. The term appears in two contrasting contexts: Ruth's modest cloak used to carry barley (Ruth 3:15) and the luxury cloaks condemned in Isaiah's oracle against Jerusalem's elite women (Isaiah 3:22). The same garment type serves both humble agricultural labor and ostentatious display, showing how context transforms meaning. The multilingual evidence points to a substantial outer wrap, distinguished from inner tunics or robes.

(2×) An outer garment functioning as a wrap, shawl, or cloak. Ruth 3:15 shows Ruth using this garment to carry six measures of barley—suggesting a substantial fabric capable of bearing weight. Isaiah 3:22 lists it among luxury items stripped from wealthy women, indicating it could also be an ornamental outer wrap. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish manto/chales, French manteau) identify this as an outer covering rather than undergarment, serving both practical and decorative purposes. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-cloaks, the-shawl | es: el-manto, y-los-chales | fr: [והמטפחות], le-manteau | de: [המטפחת], [והמטפחות] Ruth 3:15; Isa 3:22

מָטַר H4305 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-3ms (17×)

To send rain or cause it to rain; to rain down destructive judgment from heaven; to be rained upon

The Hebrew verb matar in the Hiphil stem captures God's sovereign command over precipitation — both as blessing and as wrath. In its most common use, it describes the LORD sending rain upon the earth, as when Genesis records that 'the LORD God had not caused it to rain' (Gen 2:5) and Amos three times invokes God withholding or sending rain (Amos 4:7). Yet the same verb takes on terrifying force when God rains down fire and brimstone on Sodom (Gen 19:24) or snares and burning coals on the wicked (Ps 11:6). Spanish llover and hacer llover, French pleuvoir, and German regnen lassen all preserve this dual register. The rare Niphal passive in Amos 4:7 completes the picture: one field 'was rained upon' while another was left dry.

1. cause rain to fall (Hifil) (11×) The causative meteorological sense (Hiphil): to cause rain, send rain, make it rain — with God as the implicit or explicit subject controlling literal weather. Genesis 2:5 and 7:4 set the pattern in the primeval narrative, while Amos 4:7 repeats the image three times as the prophet describes God's selective rainfall. Exodus 9:18 and 16:4 extend it to manna and hail alike. Spanish hacer llover and French faire pleuvoir both mirror the causative construction. Job 38:26 places this power squarely in the divine whirlwind speeches. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: I-caused-to-rain, I-will-rain-down, and-I-caused-to-rain | es: Hará-llover, Para-hacer-llover, de-no-llover | fr: [מהמטיר], avait-caused-pluie, causing-à-pluie | de: [אמטיר], [והמטרתי], [וימטר] Gen 2:5; Gen 7:4; Exod 9:18; Exod 16:4; Job 20:23

2. rain down judgment (Hifil) (4×) The divine-judgment sense (Hiphil): to rain down destructive substances — fire, brimstone, snares, burning coals — from heaven as an act of catastrophic punishment. The paradigmatic text is Genesis 19:24, where the LORD rains sulfur and fire upon Sodom and Gomorrah. Psalm 11:6 extends the imagery to snares, fire, and a scorching wind rained upon the wicked, and Psalm 78:24-27 recounts manna and quail rained down from heaven. German liess regnen and Spanish hizo llover preserve the Hiphil causative, while the objects shift from water to destruction. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: and-he-rained-down, and-rained, rained | es: E-hizo-llover, e-hizo-llover, hizo-llover | fr: et-pleuvoir, et-rained, rained | de: ließ-regnen, und-er-rained-hinab, und-rained Gen 19:24; Exod 9:23; Ps 78:24; Ps 78:27

3. be rained upon (Nifal) (2×) The passive sense (Niphal): to be rained upon, to receive rain — describing a land or region that experiences or fails to experience rainfall. Both occurrences appear in Amos 4:7 in a striking contrast: one portion of land 'was rained upon' while another withered for lack. Spanish recibia lluvia captures the passive reception, while the German and French traditions leave the form unglossed. This stem completes the verbal paradigm, shifting focus from the divine sender to the human recipient of weather. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: was-rained-upon | es: recibía-lluvia | fr: pleuvoir | de: [תמטיר], [תמטר] Amos 4:7

מָטָר H4306 Prep-k (38×)

rain — precipitation sent or withheld by God, viewed as blessing on the land or instrument of judgment

Matar is the standard Hebrew noun for rain, appearing 38 times across law, prophecy, wisdom, and poetry. Unlike geshem, which emphasizes rain as a weather event, matar foregrounds rain as a theological reality — something given and withheld by the Lord. Deuteronomy 11:14 promises 'I will give the rain of your land in its season, the early rain and the latter rain,' while verse 17 warns that disobedience will cause God to 'shut up the heavens so there will be no rain.' Elijah's confrontation with Baal worship is framed by matar: 'there shall be neither dew nor rain these years' (1 Kgs 17:1), culminating in the dramatic return of rain on Carmel (1 Kgs 18:1). The cognates are pan-Semitic — Arabic matar, Aramaic mitra, Sabaic mtr — placing this word among the oldest shared vocabulary of the ancient Near East.

rain, showers (38×) Rain or showers as precipitation from the sky, predominantly framed as divinely bestowed agricultural blessing or withheld as covenantal punishment. The characteristic formula is natan matar ('to give rain,' Deut 11:14; 28:12; 1 Kgs 8:36), pairing rainfall with divine sovereignty over the land. Paired with tal ('dew') in 1 Kings 17:1 and with yoreh and malqosh ('early and latter rains') in Deuteronomy 11:14. The Exodus plague narrative uses matar for the hail-storm: 'Yahweh rained hail on the land of Egypt' (Exod 9:33-34). Job 28:26 and 36:27 celebrate rain as evidence of divine wisdom in ordering creation. French 'pluie,' Spanish 'lluvia,' German 'Regen' all render it straightforwardly. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: for-the-rain, rain, shower | es: la-lluvia, lluvia, lluvia-de | fr: [מטר], de-pluie, la-pluie | de: Regen, [למטר], [מטר] Exod 9:33; Exod 9:34; Deut 11:11; Deut 11:14; Deut 11:17

מַטָּרָה H4307 Art / N-fs (16×)

Guard, guardhouse, court of the guard (a detention area); also a target or mark for shooting.

A feminine noun from the root meaning 'to watch, guard' (natar), yielding two surprisingly divergent senses. In Jeremiah, it appears almost formulaically as 'the court of the guard' (chatsar hammattarah), the detention compound within the royal palace where the prophet was repeatedly confined (Jer 32:2; 37:21; 38:6). Nehemiah mentions both the court and a gate by this name (Neh 3:25; 12:39). The second sense, 'target' or 'mark,' draws on the same root idea of watching or fixing one's eye upon something. Job laments that God has set him up 'as his target' (Job 16:12), and Lamentations 3:12 uses the vivid simile 'like a target for the arrow.' Spanish neatly distinguishes 'la guardia/cárcel' from 'blanco' (target).

1. guard, guardhouse, court of the guard (13×) Guard, guardhouse, or court of the guard, referring to a detention facility or guarded enclosure within a royal or administrative compound. Nearly all occurrences appear in Jeremiah's narrative of imprisonment in the 'court of the guard' (Jer 32:2, 8, 12; 33:1; 37:21; 38:6, 13, 28; 39:14-15), with Nehemiah adding references to both a court and a gate of the guard (Neh 3:25; 12:39). Spanish 'la guardia' and 'la cárcel' capture the custodial sense. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: the-Guard, the-guard | es: la-cárcel, la-guardia | fr: [המטרה], cible | de: [המטרה], das-Ziel Neh 3:25; Neh 12:39; Jer 32:2; Jer 32:8; Jer 32:12

2. target, mark (for shooting) (3×) A target or mark set up for shooting, drawing on the root sense of watching or fixing the eye on something. Used figuratively in Job 16:12, where Job protests that God has set him up as a target, and in Lamentations 3:12, 'like a target for the arrow.' The sole literal use appears in 1 Samuel 20:20, Jonathan's archery-signal scene. Spanish 'blanco' (target) sharply distinguishes this from the guardhouse sense. BALAAM PROPHET NAME

en: as-a-target, at-a-target | es: al-blanco, como-blanco, por-blanco | fr: cible, à-un-target, à-למטרה | de: [כמטרא], [למטרה], bei-ein-target 1Sam 20:20; Job 16:12; Lam 3:12

מַטְרֵד H4308 N-proper-fs (2×)

Matred (personal name, Edomite)

The name of an Edomite woman, mother-in-law of King Hadar (or Hadad). She appears in the genealogical records of Edomite kings in Genesis 36 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1. Her inclusion in the royal genealogy is notable since mother-in-law relationships were less commonly recorded than direct lineage. The name itself may derive from roots suggesting 'chasing' or 'expelling,' though its precise etymology remains uncertain. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration of this proper name.

(2×) Personal name of the mother of Mehetabel, who was wife of Hadar/Hadad, an Edomite king (Genesis 36:39; 1 Chronicles 1:50). Her appearance in two parallel genealogies underscores her importance in Edomite royal lineage. The Greek Septuagint variations

(Matraēth, Matrad) reflect attempts to render the Hebrew name. Cross-linguistic evidence shows direct transliteration as appropriate for this Edomite proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Matred | es: Matred | fr: Matred, [מטרד] | de: Matreds, [מטרד] Gen 36:39; 1Chr 1:50

מַטְרִי H4309 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Matrites, a family or clan group within Benjamin (used collectively with article)
This gentilicnoun appears in 1 Samuel 10:21, identifying the family from which Saul was chosen as Israel's first king. When Samuel conducts the lot ceremony, the tribe of Benjamin is selected, then the Matrite clan, then Saul son of Kish. The Greek transliteration Mattari suggests uncertainty about the exact pronunciation. The term functions as a collective—'the Matrites' as a group—highlighting the progressive narrowing of divine choice from tribe to clan to individual.

(1×) The Matrites, a clan or family group within the tribe of Benjamin, mentioned in 1 Samuel 10:21 during the selection of Saul as king. The gentilic form (with definite article) indicates a known family unit. Textual evidence shows some manuscripts had difficulty with this name (Greek variants Mattari), but the context is clear: this is the intermediate level of tribal organization between the larger tribe and the individual household. The narrative tension builds as the lots progressively narrow from Benjamin to this clan to Kish's family to Saul himself—nowhere to hide from God's choice. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Matrites | es: el-matrita | fr: le-Matrites | de: der-Matrites 1Sam 10:21

מִי H4310 Conj-w / Interrog (423×)
Interrogative pronoun 'who?' asking about identity of persons; also indefinite 'whoever, anyone who' in conditional contexts.
A fundamental interrogative pronoun used to ask about the identity of a person — 'who?' or 'whom?' It appears throughout the Hebrew Bible in direct questions like 'Who told you?' (Gen 3:11) and 'Who is this man?' (Gen 24:65). Cross-linguistically, translations consistently render it with dedicated interrogative pronouns (Spanish quién, French qui, German wer), confirming its primary function. In a smaller set of passages, it shifts to an indefinite or generalizing sense — 'whoever' or 'anyone who' — as in Moses' call 'Whoever is on the LORD's side, come to me' (Exod 32:33) and Gideon's challenge (Judg 7:3), where Spanish quien and French quiconque capture the open-ended reference.

1. interrogative who/whom (413×) The direct interrogative 'who?' or 'whom?' — by far the dominant usage (413 of 423 occurrences). Functions as subject or object in questions about personal identity, often with prepositional prefixes (to whom, from whom). All major translations map it to dedicated interrogative pronouns: English 'who,' Spanish quién, French qui, German wer/wen. Key passages include God's question in Gen 3:11 and Pharaoh's challenge in Exod 5:2. INTERROGATIVE WHO en: who, who- | es: Quién, quién, ¿quién | fr: qui, qui- | de: der, wen-, wer Gen 3:11; Gen 19:12; Gen 21:7; Gen 21:26; Gen 27:18

2. indefinite whoever/anyone who (10×) The indefinite or generalizing 'whoever, anyone who' (10x), appearing in conditional or relative clauses where the identity of the person is left open. The conjunctive waw sometimes attaches (and-whoever). German und-wer and French quiconque highlight this shift from specific question to open invitation. Notable in Exod 32:33 (Moses' summons) and 2 Sam 20:11 (Joab's rallying cry). INTERROGATIVE WHO
en: and-whoever, and-whoever-, whoever | es: al-que, quien, quien- | fr: et-qui?, et-quiconque, qui | de: und-wer, und-whoever, wer Exod 24:14; Exod 32:33; Judg 7:3; 2Sam 18:12; 2Sam 20:11

מֵידְבָא H4311 N-proper-fs (5×)
Medeba — a Moabite city on the tableland east of the Jordan
Medeba was an ancient city situated on the high plateau of Moab, east of the Dead Sea. It appears in the conquest narrative as territory taken from Sihon (Num 21:30) and was allotted to the tribe of Reuben (Josh 13:9, 16). In 1 Chronicles 19:7, the Ammonites gathered there before battle with David. Isaiah 15:2 includes it in the oracle against Moab. The Mesha Inscription also references the city, confirming its importance in Transjordanian geopolitics.

(5×) A proper name for a city in the Moabite tableland, east of the Dead Sea. Assigned to Reuben in the tribal allotments (Josh 13:9, 16), it served as a military staging ground for the Ammonites (1 Chr 19:7). The LXX renders it Maidaba or Medaba. Spanish, French, and German all transliterate it consistently as Medeba. The Mesha Inscription (line 8) confirms its historical significance as a contested border city between Israel and Moab. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Medeba, Medeva | es: Medeba | fr: Medeba, Medeva, [מידבא] | de: Medeba, Medeva, [מידבא] Num 21:30; Josh 13:9; Josh 13:16; 1Chr 19:7; Isa 15:2

מֵידָד H4312 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Medad (personal name: one of the seventy elders)
The name of one of two elders (along with Eldad) who prophesied in the Israelite camp rather than at the tent of meeting. Their Spirit-inspired prophecy, occurring outside the authorized location, sparked controversy—Joshua urged Moses to stop them, but Moses wished all God's people would prophesy. This narrative (Numbers 11:26-27) illustrates tensions between institutional authority and spontaneous prophetic activity. The name may mean 'beloved' or 'love,' though its etymology is debated.

(2×) Personal name of one of the seventy elders appointed to assist Moses. Along with Eldad, he remained in the camp and prophesied there when the Spirit fell, rather than going to the tent of meeting (Numbers 11:26-27). Their irregular prophetic activity raised questions about authority and authenticity. The Septuagint rendering (Modad/Mōdad) shows slight variation in vocalization. Cross-linguistic evidence maintains the transliterated form, marking this as a distinctive Israelite personal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Medad, and-Medad | es: Medad, y-Medad | fr: Medad, et-Medad | de: Medad, und-Medad Num 11:26; Num 11:27

מֵי הַיַּרְקוֹן H4313 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Me-ha-Yarqon (waters of the Yarqon), a place name near Joppa in Dan's territory
Joshua 19:46 lists this location among the towns allotted to the tribe of Dan. The name literally means 'the waters of the Yarqon,' referring to the river that flows into the Mediterranean near modern Tel Aviv. However, the textual tradition is uncertain—the Greek version reads 'from the sea of Hierakon,' suggesting the Hebrew might originally have been 'from the sea' (מִיָּם) rather than 'waters' (מֵי). Despite this textual puzzle, the geographical referent is clear: the Yarqon River region on Dan's western boundary.

(1×) A geographic location name meaning 'the waters of the Yarqon,' appearing in Joshua 19:46 as part of Dan's tribal inheritance. The Yarqon is a significant river in the coastal plain near Joppa (modern Jaffa). The compound structure (מֵי + הַיַּרְקוֹן) is typical of Hebrew place names that include geographical features. Though some ancient versions suggest alternate readings, the association with the Yarqon River—still called by a similar name today—provides strong geographical continuity across three millennia. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Me-ha-Yarqon | es: y-Me-jarcón | fr: et-Moi-ha-Yarqon | de: und-Mich-ha-Yarqon Josh 19:46

מִי זָהָב H4314 N-proper-ms (2×)
Me-Zahab (personal name: 'waters of gold', Edomite)
An Edomite name meaning 'waters of gold,' father of Matred and grandfather of Mehetabel (wife of King Hadar/Hadad). The name appears in both Genesis and Chronicles genealogies of Edomite royalty. Its meaning—'waters of gold'—may reflect geographical features, mineral wealth, or metaphorical significance. The name stands out in biblical onomastics for its poetic compound structure.

Consistent transliteration across translations reflects its status as a proper noun.

(2×) Personal name of an Edomite, father of Matred and grandfather of Mehetabel (Genesis 36:39; 1 Chronicles 1:50). The compound name 'Me-Zahab' (literally 'waters of gold') may reference a location known for gold deposits or water sources, or function metaphorically. Septuagint variations (Mezoob, Maizoob, Maizaab) show interpretive challenges with the compound. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the Hebrew form through transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Me-Zahab, Me-Zahav | es: Me-Zahab, Me-Zahav | fr: Moi-Zahab, [מי זהב] | de: Me-Sahabs, [מי זהב] Gen 36:39; 1Chr 1:50

מֵיטָב H4315 Prep-b / N-msc (6×)

The best of, the choicest portion; a superlative construct noun for the finest quality of a field, flock, or land.

A masculine noun used exclusively in the construct state to express a superlative: 'the best of' something. It appears in two narrative contexts. In the Joseph story, Pharaoh grants Jacob's family 'the best of the land' of Egypt (Gen 47:6, 11). In the law of restitution, a person who allows livestock to graze in another's field must repay from 'the best of his own field and the best of his vineyard' (Exod 22:4). Samuel rebukes Saul for sparing 'the best of the sheep and cattle' (1 Sam 15:9, 15). Spanish lo mejor de and English best of consistently convey the superlative sense.

best of (6×) The choicest, finest portion of something – always in construct ('the best of X'), functioning as a superlative. In the Covenant Code, restitution must come from 'the best of his field and the best of his vineyard' (Exod 22:4), establishing a legal standard of highest-quality compensation. Pharaoh offers Joseph's family 'the best of the land' of Egypt (Gen 47:6, 11), signaling royal generosity. Samuel's rebuke of Saul concerns sparing 'the best of the sheep' that should have been devoted to destruction (1 Sam 15:9, 15). The Spanish lo mejor de and English best of uniformly confirm the superlative meaning, while French and German glosses (best de, im Besten) likewise reflect the construct-state pattern. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-best-of, best-of, in-best-of | es: en-lo-mejor-de, lo-mejor-de, y-lo-mejor-de | fr: best-de, dans-best-de, et-best-de | de: best-von, im-Besten, und-best-von Gen 47:6; Gen 47:11; Exod 22:5; 1Sam 15:9

מִיכָא H4316 N-proper-ms (4×)

Mica, name of several post-exilic individuals

A personal name appearing in genealogical and administrative contexts, notably as the son of Mephibosheth and grandson of Jonathan (2 Samuel 9:12), ensuring the continuation of Saul's line. The name also appears among Levites in the post-exilic community (1 Chronicles 9:15, Nehemiah 11:22) and among those who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:11). It may be a shortened form of Micaiah ('Who is like the Lord?'), reflecting theophoric piety in personal naming.

(4×) A masculine proper name borne by multiple individuals, most prominently Mephibosheth's son who continued Saul's lineage and several Levites in the restoration period. The cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name (Mica, Micaías) with minimal variation. The name's appearance across different social contexts—royal lineage, Levitical service, covenant renewal—demonstrates its common use in Israelite society. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Mica, Mikha | es: Mica, Micaías | fr: Mica, [מיכא] | de: Mica, [מיכא] 2Sam 9:12; 1Chr 9:15; Neh 10:11; Neh 11:22

מִיכָאֵל H4317 N-proper-ms (13×)

Michael — 'Who is like God?'; a personal name borne by several men and Israel's patron angel

A theophoric name formed as a rhetorical question — 'Who is like God?' (מִי כָּאֵל) — borne by at least ten distinct individuals across Scripture. The name appears among tribal leaders (Num 13:13), Gadite chiefs (1 Chr 5:13–14), Levitical genealogies (1 Chr 6:40), Issacharite clans (1 Chr 7:3), Benjaminite families (1 Chr 8:16), Manassite warriors who rallied to David (1 Chr 12:20), and Davidic administrators (1 Chr 27:18; 2 Chr 21:2). A returnee with Ezra bears the name as well (Ezra 8:8). Most strikingly, Daniel introduces Michael as the great angelic 'prince' who stands guard over Israel in cosmic warfare (Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1) — a role that reverberates into the New Testament (Jude 9; Rev 12:7).

Michael (personal name) (13×) The masculine proper name Michael (מִיכָאֵל, 'Who is like God?'), designating multiple individuals: tribal and military figures (Num 13:13; 1 Chr 5:13–14; 7:3; 8:16; 12:20; 27:18), Levites (1 Chr 6:40), royals (2 Chr 21:2), a post-exilic returnee (Ezra 8:8), and supremely the archangelic 'prince' who champions Israel in Daniel's apocalyptic visions (Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1). Cross-lingual glosses preserve the name with remarkable uniformity: eng/fra/deu 'Michael', spa 'Miguel/Micael'. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Michael, Mikha'el, Mikhael | es: Micael, Miguel, Mikhael | fr: Micaël, Michael, [מיכאל] | de: Michael, [מיכאל], und-Michael Num 13:13; 1Chr 5:13; 1Chr 5:14; 1Chr 6:40; 1Chr 7:3

מִיכָה H4318 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (33×)

Micah — personal name borne by several biblical figures, notably the Ephraimite of Judges and the prophet

Mikah (short form of Mikayahu, 'Who is like YHWH?') is a proper name shared by at least seven individuals in the Hebrew Bible across its 33 occurrences. The most extensively narrated is the Ephraimite Micah of Judges 17-18, who established a private shrine with a carved idol and hired a Levite as priest — a story that epitomizes the religious chaos of the pre-monarchic era ('everyone did what was right in his own eyes'). Equally significant is the prophet Micah of Moresheth, whose oracles against Samaria and Jerusalem open the book bearing his name (Mic 1:1) and whose prediction of Jerusalem's destruction was invoked a century later to spare Jeremiah's life (Jer 26:18). Other bearers include a grandson of Jonathan son of Saul (1 Chr 8:34-35; 9:40-41) and several Levitical and courtly figures in Chronicles. The Septuagint renders the name Meichaias.

Micah (person name) (33×) A personal name meaning 'Who is like YHWH?' borne by multiple biblical figures. The Ephraimite Micah of Judges 17-18 established a private shrine with an idol and a hired Levite, illustrating pre-monarchic religious disorder. The prophet Micah of Moresheth (Mic 1:1) delivered oracles against Samaria and Jerusalem; Jer 26:18 cites his prophecy. Other bearers include a descendant of Saul (1 Chr 8:34; 9:40) and Levitical figures in Chronicles. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Mikhah | es: Mica, Micas | fr: Mikhah, [מיכה] | de: Micha, Mikhah Judg 17:5; Judg 17:8; Judg 17:9; Judg 17:10; Judg 17:12

מִיכָיְהוּ H4319 N-proper-ms (2×)

Micaiah (personal name: 'who is like Yahweh?')

A theophoric name meaning 'who is like Yahweh?'—essentially a rhetorical affirmation of God's incomparability. The name appears for the Ephraimite whose idolatrous shrine story opens Judges 17-18. Later in the narrative, this longer form shifts to the shortened 'Micah.' The same name (with slight variations) belonged to the prophet son of Imlah and a contemporary of Jeremiah, showing its popularity across Israelite history. The rhetorical question embedded in the name makes it a powerful theological statement.

(2×) Personal name of an Ephraimite in Judges 17:1, 4, whose story of establishing a household shrine illustrates the religious chaos before the monarchy. The name appears in its full form here but shifts to the shortened 'Micah' in subsequent verses. This theophoric name ('who is like Yahweh?') ironically contrasts with the character's idolatrous practices. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration patterns (Mikhayehu, Micaías) reflecting the Hebrew form's theological significance. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Mikhayehu | es: Micaías | fr: Mikhayehu | de: Mikhayehu Judg 17:1; Judg 17:4

מִיכָיָה H4320 N-proper-ms (5×)

Micaiah — a longer form of the name Micah, borne by several Israelites

Micaiah is an extended form of the name Micah, meaning 'Who is like Yahweh?' It designates several distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. Jeremiah 26:18 uses this Kethiv spelling for the canonical prophet Micah of Moresheth (the Qere reads Micah, as in Micah 1:1). It also names a Levitical musician in Nehemiah 12:35, a priest participating in the dedication of Jerusalem's wall (Neh 12:41), and the father of Achbor in 2 Kings 22:12, whose parallel in 2 Chronicles 34:20 shortens the name to Micah.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'Who is like Yah(weh)?' — an alternate or fuller spelling of Micah. Spanish renders it Micayas/Micaias, while English and French use Mikhayah. Applied to the prophet Micah in Jer 26:18 (Kethiv), two Levitical figures in Nehemiah 12:35 and 12:41, and a courtier's name in 2 Kings 22:12. The variation between Micaiah and Micah across parallel texts illustrates the fluidity of theophoric name forms in biblical manuscripts. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Mikhah, Mikhayah, [Mikhayah] | es: (Mikah), Micayas, Micaías | fr: Mikhayah, [(מיכה)], [[מיכיה]] | de: Mikhayah, [(מיכה)], [[מיכיה]] 2Kgs 22:12; Neh 12:35; Neh 12:41; Jer 26:18

מִיכָיְהוּ H4321 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (19×)

Micaiah — personal name meaning 'who is like YHWH?', esp. the prophet who opposed Ahab

A theophoric personal name meaning 'Who is like YHWH?' (from mi, 'who,' ka, 'like,' and Yahu, a shortened form of the divine name). The most prominent bearer is the prophet Micaiah son of Imlah, who courageously prophesied disaster against Ahab's campaign to Ramoth-gilead despite four hundred prophets predicting success (1 Kgs 22:8–28; 2 Chr 18:7–27). This dramatic scene is one of the Bible's most vivid portraits of prophetic integrity under political pressure. The name also belongs to an Ephraimite (Judg 17:1, 4) and a contemporary of Jeremiah (Jer 36:11, 13).

Micaiah (19×) The proper name Mikhayehu (Micaiah), a theophoric name meaning 'Who is like YHWH?' Borne principally by the prophet Micaiah son of Imlah, who stood alone against Ahab's four hundred court prophets to deliver an unfavorable oracle before the campaign at Ramoth-gilead (1 Kgs 22:8–28; 2 Chr 18:7–27). Also an Ephraimite in the period of the Judges (Judg 17:1, 4) and a figure in Jeremiah's time (Jer 36:11, 13). Spanish 'Micaias' and French 'Michée' reflect distinct transliteration traditions. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Micaiah, Mikhayehu, to-Micaiah | es: Micaías, Mijayehu, a-Mijayehu | fr: Michée, [מכיהו] | de: Michajahu, Mikhayehu, [מכיהו] 1Kgs 22:8; 1Kgs 22:9; 1Kgs 22:13; 1Kgs 22:14; 1Kgs 22:15

מִיכָיְהוּ H4322 Conj-w (2×)

Micaiah (personal name, variant form)

A variant spelling of the theophoric name meaning 'who is like Yahweh?' This particular form appears for two different individuals: a prince under King Jehoshaphat and (in a disputed reading) possibly as an alternate for Maacah. The name's multiple forms and spellings across biblical texts reflect normal variation in ancient Hebrew orthography, where the same name could be written differently. The theological import remains constant—a rhetorical affirmation of Yahweh's uniqueness—while the spelling varies.

(2×) Personal name appearing in 2 Chronicles 13:2 and 17:7. The first reference is likely a scribal variant for Maacah (as many translations note). The second refers to a prince commissioned by Jehoshaphat to teach the law in Judah's cities. This spelling variant of the common theophoric name ('who is like Yahweh?') demonstrates orthographic flexibility. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration challenges, with some preserving the Hebrew and others rendering as Micaiah/Mijayahu. MICAH PERSONAL NAMES

en: Micaiah, and-to-Micaiah | es: Mijayahu, y-para-Mijayahu | fr: [ולמיכיהו], [מיכיהו] | de: Michajahu, [ולמיכיהו] 2Chr 13:2; 2Chr 17:7

מִיכָל H4323 N-msc (1×)

brook, stream, or water channel (possibly a wadi or seasonal watercourse)

This obscure word appears in 2 Samuel 17:20, when Hushai's messengers hide from Absalom's men. A woman tells the pursuers that the men 'crossed over the brook of water'—but scholars debate what מִיכַל actually means. Some suggest 'wadi,' others 'water channel,' still others doubt the text itself. The French and German renderings as 'torrent' and 'brook' suggest a natural watercourse, while Spanish 'vado' (ford) emphasizes a crossing point. The narrative context requires some water feature that could be crossed quickly to throw off pursuit.

(1×) A brook, stream, or water channel mentioned in 2 Samuel 17:20 as the reported location where Jonathan and Ahimaaz supposedly crossed during their flight from Absalom's men. BDB labels this 'dubious,' and textual scholars note the difficulty. However, the narrative requires some geographical feature that makes the woman's misdirection plausible—a stream or wadi that could credibly be crossed, sending the pursuers in the wrong direction. The construct form 'brook of the water' is admittedly awkward, possibly suggesting textual corruption, yet the general sense of a watercourse remains clear from context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brook-of | es: el-vado-de | fr: torrent-de | de: Bach-von 2Sam 17:20

מִיכַל H4324 Conj-w (18×)

Michal: the younger daughter of King Saul and first wife of David.

A personal name borne by King Saul's younger daughter, who loved David and became his wife (1 Sam 18:20, 27-28). Michal famously helped David escape Saul's assassins by lowering him through a window and placing a household idol in his bed (1 Sam 19:11-17). After Saul gave her to Palti ben Laish (1 Sam 25:44), David later demanded her return as a condition of alliance with Abner (2 Sam 3:13-14). The name is likely a contracted form of Michael, meaning 'Who is like God?' Her story ends in estrangement after she despised David's dancing before the ark (2 Sam 6:16-23). The Septuagint renders the name as Melchol.

Michal (personal name) (18×) The proper feminine name of Saul's younger daughter who married David out of genuine love (1 Sam 18:20). She functions as a pivotal figure in the David-Saul conflict, aiding David's escape (1 Sam 19:11-13) and later becoming a political pawn (1 Sam 25:44; 2 Sam 3:13-14). Her final scene, despising David's ecstatic worship before the ark (2 Sam 6:16-23), closes her narrative arc with ironic distance. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name: Spanish 'Mical,' French 'Mical,' German 'Michal.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Michal, Mikal, Mikhal | es: Mical, Mijal, Mikal | fr: Mical, Michal, Mikal | de: Michal, Mikal, Mikhal 1Sam 14:49; 1Sam 18:20; 1Sam 18:27; 1Sam 18:28; 1Sam 19:11

מַי H4325 N-mpc / 3fs (583×)

Water in all its forms: drinking, rivers, seas, rain, floods, and ritual purification; the elemental liquid of life and judgment.

One of the most frequent nouns in the Hebrew Bible, mayim appears nearly 600 times and always in the plural form, reflecting the ancient perception of water as an encompassing, dynamic reality rather than a single substance. It spans the entire range of water references: the primordial waters of creation (Gen 1:6), the catastrophic waters of the flood (Gen 6:17), life-giving wells and springs (Gen 21:19), ritual cleansing (Lev 14:8), and the metaphorical waters of distress and salvation (Ps 69:1). Every major translation tradition renders it with its basic water term – English 'water,' Spanish 'agua,' French 'eau,' German 'Wasser' – confirming the universal transparency of this sense.

1. water, waters (582×) Water as a physical substance in all its natural and ritual manifestations: drinking water, well and spring water, river and sea water, rain, floodwaters, and water used in purification rites. With 582 occurrences this is effectively the only operative sense. All 43 target languages render it with their primary water noun (eng 'water,' spa 'agua,' fra 'eau,' deu 'Wasser,' hin 'jal/pani,' arb 'ma"), showing complete cross-linguistic unanimity. Key passages: Gen 1:6 (cosmic separation), Exod 14:21 (Red Sea), Ps 23:2 (still waters). WATER

en: water, waters | es: agua, aguas | fr: eau, eaux | de: Wasser, von-Wasser Gen 1:6; Gen 6:17; Gen 7:6; Gen 8:9; Gen 18:4

2. (1×) A single anomalous occurrence at Isa 44:24 marked by a Ketiv/Qere discrepancy, where the consonantal text differs from the expected reading. Several translations still render it as 'water,' though Spanish shows '[quien]' (who), pointing to a possible textual corruption or alternative reading 'mi' (who) rather than 'mayim' (water). This is a text-critical artifact rather than a distinct semantic sense. WATER

en: ketiv | es: [quién] | fr: eau | de: Wasser Isa 44:24

מִימָן H4326 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Mijamin, name of several priests

A priestly name appearing in various spellings across Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. It designates a priestly division established during David's organization of temple service (1 Chronicles 24:9), priests who returned with Zerubbabel (Nehemiah 12:5), those who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:7), and one who had married a foreign woman during the exile (Ezra 10:25). The variation in spelling reflects the fluid orthography of Hebrew names in the post-exilic period.

(4×) A masculine proper name associated with priestly families across multiple generations. The multilingual evidence shows the name preserved with various spellings (Mijamin, Miyamin, Miímin), consistent with scribal practice for proper names. The multiple bearers of this name across different contexts—priestly divisions, returning exiles, covenant signers—suggest it was a traditional name within priestly circles. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mijamin, Miyamin, and-Miyamin | es: Miímin, para-Miyamín, y-Miyamin | fr: [ומימן], [למימן], [מימן] | de: [ומימן], [למימן], [מימין] 1Chr 24:9; Ezra 10:25; Neh 10:7; Neh 12:5

מִין H4327 Prep-l / N-msc / 3fs (31×)

Kind, species; a category of living thing, always in the formula 'according to its kind' in creation and legal texts.

Found exclusively in the phrase 'according to its kind' (leminehu, leminah, etc.), this noun classifies plants and animals into divinely ordered categories. It appears first in the Genesis 1 creation account, where God commands vegetation and creatures to reproduce 'according to their kind,' establishing a principle of natural order. The same formula recurs in the Levitical dietary laws (Lev 11, Deut 14) to categorize clean and unclean animals, and once in Ezekiel's eschatological river vision (Ezek 47:10). German 'nach seiner Art' and French 'selon son espece' both capture the taxonomic sense faithfully.

according its kind (31×) A biological or taxonomic category denoting a distinct type of plant or animal. Always occurs with the preposition le- and a possessive suffix ('according to its/their kind'). In Genesis 1:11-25, it structures the entire creation taxonomy; in Leviticus 11 and Deuteronomy 14, it organizes the dietary purity lists. The word implies divinely established boundaries between species rather than a modern scientific classification. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-its-kind, according-to-kind-its | es: según-su-especie | fr: selon-son-espèce, selon-à-espèce-son | de: gemaess-zu-sein-kind, nach-ihrer-Art, nach-seiner-Art Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:21

מוֹסָדָה H4328

foundation, appointment; something established or set in place (Isaiah 30:32, Ezekiel 41:8)

This feminine noun denotes 'foundation' in both physical and metaphorical senses. Isaiah 30:32 speaks of 'the appointed rod' (rod of foundation/appointment), suggesting divine decree or ordained punishment. Ezekiel 41:8 (Qere) uses the plural to describe 'foundations' of the temple structure, though textual difficulties abound. The Ketiv may intend a Pual participle meaning 'furnished with foundations.' The ambiguity reflects the word's rarity, but the core sense of something established, founded, or appointed by divine decree remains consistent with the root יָסַד ('to found, establish').

מוּסָךְ H4329 N-msc (2×)

covered way, portico, architectural structure (uncertain meaning)

An architectural term of uncertain meaning, possibly referring to a covered walkway, portico, or structure connected to the temple. The term appears only in 2 Kings 16:18 describing King Ahaz's alterations to the temple precincts to accommodate the Assyrian king. The textual tradition shows significant uncertainty—the Ketiv and Qere offer different readings, and ancient versions struggle to interpret it. Modern translations vary widely: covered entrance, sabbath canopy, covered way. This obscurity highlights how much technical temple vocabulary has been lost.

(2×) An architectural feature modified by King Ahaz at the Jerusalem temple (2 Kings 16:18). The Hebrew text itself shows uncertainty (Ketiv vs. Qere), and the Septuagint offers a quite different interpretation (foundation of the seat/throne). The context suggests some covered structure or entrance associated with the Sabbath, possibly a royal canopy or processional way. Cross-linguistic evidence shows translators struggling—some preserve the Hebrew, others guess at 'portico' or 'covered way,' reflecting genuine lexical uncertainty. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: (covered-way-of), [covered-way] | es: [K], pórtico-de | fr: (covered-chemin-of), [covered-way] | de: [covered-way] 2Kgs 16:18

מִיץ H4330 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

squeezing, pressing, wringing out

A noun denoting the action of squeezing or pressing something to extract what's inside. It appears only in Proverbs 30:33 in a threefold comparative saying: squeezing milk produces curds, squeezing the nose produces blood, and squeezing anger produces strife. The term captures the physical action of applying pressure to force something out. The verse uses these concrete examples to warn that pressuring or provoking anger inevitably leads to conflict.

(3×) Translations identify pressing or squeezing: Spanish 'batir' (churning/pressing), English 'pressing, squeezing.' Proverbs 30:33 uses this word three times in parallel structure, creating a memorable proverb about cause and effect. Just as physically pressing milk or the nose produces predictable results (curds and blood), so pressing or provoking anger produces strife. The triple repetition with different objects drives home the principle of inevitable consequences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-pressing-of, pressing-of | es: batir-de, y-batir-de, y-batir-de- | fr: et-מִיץ ,ומיץ | de: [ומיץ], [מיץ] Prov 30:33

מֵישָׁא H4331 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mesha, a Benjamite personal name (possibly meaning 'deliverance' or 'salvation')

First Chronicles 8:9 mentions this Mesha as a Benjamite who fathered children in Moab. The name appears to mean 'deliverance' or 'salvation,' though the Greek transliteration Misa shows some uncertainty about pronunciation. This is a different Mesha from the famous Moabite king of 2 Kings 3. The genealogical context places him among the descendants of Benjamin who had connections to Moabite territory, suggesting cross-border family ties in the Transjordan region.

(1×) A personal name borne by a Benjamite man in 1 Chronicles 8:9, distinct from other biblical figures named Mesha. The name likely derives from ישׁע (to save, deliver), making it a theophoric name meaning 'deliverance' or 'salvation.' The Greek transliterations (Misa, Mosa) show variant pronunciations. This Mesha is notable for fathering children in Moab, indicating Benjamite settlement or intermarriage east of the Jordan—a reminder that tribal territories were not hermetically sealed but allowed for demographic fluidity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7999 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Mesha | es: Mesa | fr: [מישא] | de: [מישא] 1Chr 8:9

מִישָׁאֵל H4332 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Mishael, a proper name meaning 'who is what God is?', borne by a Levite, a companion of Daniel, and a postexilic leader

A Hebrew proper masculine name whose theophoric construction asks 'Who is what God is?' It identifies three distinct individuals across different eras: a Levite cousin of Moses and Aaron who helped remove the bodies of Nadab and Abihu (Exod 6:22; Lev 10:4), one of Daniel's three Jewish companions in Babylon later renamed Meshach (Dan 1:6-7, 11, 19; 2:17), and a man who stood beside Ezra at the public reading of the Torah (Neh 8:4). The Babylonian renaming of Daniel's companion underscores the tension between Hebrew theophoric identity and imperial assimilation.

Mishael (personal name) (7×) The proper name Mishael ('who is what God is?'), referring to three biblical figures: (a) a son of Uzziel, cousin of Moses, who carried the bodies of Nadab and Abihu from the sanctuary (Exod 6:22; Lev 10:4); (b) one of Daniel's companions in the Babylonian exile, renamed Meshach by the chief eunuch (Dan 1:6-7, 11, 19; 2:17); and (c) a community leader who stood at Ezra's right hand during the public Torah reading (Neh 8:4). French 'Mischael' and Spanish 'Misael/Mishael' show minor phonological adaptations of the Hebrew. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Misha'el, Mishael, and-Mishael | es: Mishael, y-Misael, y-para-Mishael | fr: Mischaël, Mishael, [ומישאל] | de: Mishael, [ולמישאל], [ומישאל] Exod 6:22; Lev 10:4; Neh 8:4; Dan 1:6; Dan 1:7

מִישָׁאֵל H4333 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mishael, a personal name meaning 'who is what God is?' (rhetorical question asserting God's uniqueness)

This Aramaic form of the Hebrew name Mishael appears in Daniel 2:17, referring to one of Daniel's three companions in Babylonian exile. The name is a theological question: 'Who is what God is?'—expecting the answer 'no one.' This is the same Mishael who was given the Babylonian name Meshach (Daniel 1:7). The Daniel 2 context shows him joining Daniel in prayer before the revelation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, demonstrating the faithful remnant who maintained Hebrew names and Hebrew faith even in captivity.

(1×) A personal name (Aramaic form of Hebrew מִישָׁאֵל) borne by one of Daniel's three companions, appearing in Daniel 2:17. The name is a rhetorical question meaning 'who is what God (El) is?'—affirming divine incomparability. This is the man later called by his Babylonian name Meshach. The occurrence in Daniel 2:17 shows him as part of Daniel's prayer circle, seeking divine wisdom when all Babylon's wise men faced execution. The Aramaic form of his name in this Aramaic chapter underscores the linguistic context of exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Misha'el | es: Mishael | fr: Mischaël | de: [מישאל] Dan 2:17

מִישׁוֹר H4334 Conj-w (23×)

A level plain or tableland; smooth, even ground; uprightness or equity in judgment

From the high plateau east of the Jordan to the moral landscape of just governance, this noun traces a path from geography to ethics. Deuteronomy and Joshua use it repeatedly for the Transjordanian tableland between the Arnon and Heshbon, a specific elevated plain familiar to ancient Israel. The Psalms extend the image: the worshiper prays for a level path free of stumbling (Ps 27:11), and Isaiah envisions God making rough terrain smooth (Isa 40:4). At its most abstract, it describes uprightness in rule, the scepter of equity in Psalm 45:6 and the fair judgment of Malachi 2:6.

1. plain, tableland, plateau (14×) A geographical plain, tableland, or plateau, especially the elevated Transjordanian region between the Arnon and Heshbon. Spanish meseta and llanura confirm the terrain reference. Deuteronomy 3:10 and Joshua 13:9-21 anchor this sense in concrete topography, contrasting the plain with the hill country and the valley. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-plain, in-the-plain, in-the-tableland | es: en-el-llano, en-la-llanura, en-la-meseta | fr: [המישר], [ובמישור], dans-le-plain | de: [המישר], [ובמישור], [למישר] Deut 3:10; Deut 4:43; Josh 13:9; Josh 13:16; Josh 13:17

2. level ground, smooth path (5×) Level, even ground understood figuratively as a smooth and safe path, free from obstacles and dangers. The Psalms ask God for an even road (Ps 27:11; 143:10), and Isaiah 40:4 promises that crooked places will become straight. The metaphor maps physical terrain onto the experience of divine guidance and security. LEVEL SMOOTH GROUND

en: into-level-ground, level, level-ground | es: en-llano, en-llanura, en-lugar-recto | fr: [למישור], dans-plaine, de-plaine | de: [למישור], auf-level-ground, level Ps 26:12; Ps 27:11; Ps 143:10; Isa 40:4; Isa 42:16

3. uprightness, equity, fairness (4×) Uprightness, equity, or fairness in moral and judicial contexts, the abstract extension of physical levelness into ethical straightness. Psalm 45:6 speaks of a scepter of equity, Isaiah 11:4 of judging the poor with fairness, and Malachi 2:6 of walking with God in peace and uprightness. Spanish equidad and rectitud capture this ethical dimension. UPRIGHTNESS EQUITY

en: and-in-uprightness, uprightness, with-equity | es: con-equidad, equidad, y-en-rectitud | fr: dans-la-plaine, de-plaine, et-dans-la-droiture | de: [במישור], [ובמישור], mit-equity Ps 45:6; Ps 67:4; Isa 11:4; Mal 2:6

מֵישַׁךְ H4335 N-proper-ms (1×)

Meshach, a Babylonian name given to Mishael (possibly meaning 'who is what Aku is?', Aku being moon-god)

Daniel 1:7 records that the Babylonian chief official gave Mishael the new name Meshach—a deliberate renaming intended to reshape identity and allegiance. According to scholarly interpretation, Meshach may derive from Babylonian 'Misha-Aku,' meaning 'who is what Aku is?' (Aku being the moon-god). This represents a theological inversion: Mishael's Hebrew name honored the one true God (El), while his imposed Babylonian name referenced a pagan deity. The three friends' refusal to worship Nebuchadnezzar's image (Daniel 3) becomes even more poignant given these theologically charged names.

(1×) The Babylonian name imposed on Mishael, one of Daniel's three companions, according to Daniel 1:7. Scholarly consensus connects this to Akkadian 'Misha-Aku' ('who is what Aku is?'), with Aku as the moon-god—a pagan counterpart to Mishael's Hebrew name praising El. The renaming was part of the Babylonian re-education program designed to assimilate exiled youth into imperial culture. That Meshach and his companions maintained faithfulness despite new names and new pressures shows the resilience of covenant identity even when external markers are forcibly changed. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Meshakh | es: Meshak | fr: Méschak | de: Meschach Dan 1:7

מֵישַׁךְ H4336 N-proper-ms (14×)

Meshach; the Babylonian name given to Mishael, one of Daniel's three companions in Nebuchadnezzar's court.

The Babylonian court name assigned to Mishael, one of four young Judahite exiles selected for royal training in Daniel 1. The chief official renames him Meshach (Dan 1:7), replacing his Hebrew theophoric element (mi-sha-el, 'who is what God is?') with a name of uncertain Babylonian etymology – possibly linked to the deity Aku or Akkadian mesaku ('humble'). All fourteen occurrences fall within Daniel 2-3: he is appointed over Babylon's province (Dan 2:49) and refuses to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, enduring the fiery furnace alongside Shadrach and Abednego (Dan 3). French 'Meschac' and Spanish 'Meshak' preserve the name faithfully.

(14×) The proper name Meshach (Aramaic מֵישַׁךְ), the Babylonian court name given to the Judahite exile Mishael (Dan 1:7). All fourteen occurrences appear in Daniel 2:49 and chapter 3, where he serves as provincial administrator and endures the fiery furnace for refusing idolatry. Always mentioned in the triad Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meshakh | es: Meshak | fr: Méschac | de: Meschach Dan 2:49; Dan 3:12; Dan 3:13; Dan 3:14; Dan 3:16

מֵישָׁע H4337 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mesha, son of Caleb (personal name possibly meaning 'deliverance')

First Chronicles 2:42 identifies this Mesha as a son of Caleb in Judah's genealogy. The name shares the same form and likely meaning ('deliverance') as other biblical Meshas, though this is a distinct individual. The Greek and Syriac versions show textual variation (Mareisa, Musa), suggesting some manuscript uncertainty. He appears in the detailed genealogical records that trace the descendants of Judah, particularly the Calebite clans that held territory in southern Judah around Hebron.

(1×) A personal name identifying a son of Caleb in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:42), etymologically related to יֵשַׁע (salvation, deliverance). This Mesha is distinct from both the Benjamite Mesha of 1 Chronicles 8:9 and the Moabite king. The textual variants (Greek Mareisa, Syriac Musa) may reflect scribal confusion with other similar names in the genealogies. His inclusion in Caleb's lineage connects him to the clans that settled the Hebron region after the conquest. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7999 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Mesha | es: Mesa | fr: [מישׁע] | de: [מישׁע] 1Chr 2:42

מֵישַׁע H4338 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Mesha, king of Moab (personal name, same root as 'deliverance'), known from biblical and extrabiblical sources

Second Kings 3:4 introduces Mesha as the king of Moab who rebelled against Israel after Ahab's death. This is perhaps the most famous biblical Mesha, also known from the Mesha Stele (Moabite Stone), where he records his own version of conflicts with Israel. The name appears in the Moabite inscription as משׁע, confirming the biblical spelling. His rebellion and the subsequent military campaign form the narrative of 2 Kings 3, culminating in a desperate act that shocked the Israelite coalition into retreat. Mesha represents Moabite national identity asserting itself against Israelite hegemony.

(1×) The personal name of the king of Moab who rebelled against Israel in 2 Kings 3:4, attested both biblically and in the famous Mesha Stele (circa 840 BCE). The inscription confirms the name as משׁע and provides Moab's perspective on the conflicts described in Kings. The form with conjunction 'and Mesha' marks his introduction into the narrative as a sheep-breeder who paid enormous tribute (100,000 lambs and wool of 100,000 rams) until Ahab's death emboldened rebellion. This Mesha stands as one of the few biblical figures whose own monumental inscription survives, offering rare extrabiblical corroboration. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7999 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Mesha | es: Y-Mesa | fr: et-Mesha | de: und-Mesha 2Kgs 3:4

מֵישָׁר H4339 Prep-b / N-mp (19×)

Uprightness, equity, rectitude in judgment and conduct; smoothness or evenness (literal); equitable terms or agreement.

The plural noun mesharim derives from the root y-sh-r ('to be straight, upright') and embodies the Hebrew ideal of moral straightness applied to governance, speech, and daily life. It appears almost exclusively in poetry — Psalms, Proverbs, and Isaiah — where it describes how God judges 'with equity' (Ps 9:8; 96:10; 98:9) and how the wise speak 'uprightly' (Isa 33:15; Prov 23:16). Spanish equidad and rectitud, French droiture, and German Geradheit all reach for vocabulary that fuses moral and spatial straightness, reflecting how the Hebrew root itself moves between the physical and the ethical. A charming literal survival appears in Song of Songs 7:9 and Proverbs 23:31, where wine is said to go down 'smoothly' — the same word, now describing the even flow of liquid rather than the even scales of justice.

1. uprightness, equity (15×) Uprightness, equity, or rectitude — the ethical quality of being morally straight in one's conduct, judgments, or speech. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (15 occurrences) pervades worship poetry and wisdom teaching. The Psalter repeatedly declares that God judges the peoples 'with equity' (Ps 9:8; 96:10; 98:9; 99:4), while Proverbs pairs mesharim with righteousness (tsedeq, Prov 1:3; 2:9) as a core wisdom value. Isaiah 33:15 praises the one who 'speaks uprightly.' Spanish con equidad, French dans la droiture, and German mit Geradheit all employ dedicated justice vocabulary. UPRIGHTNESS EQUITY

en: and-uprightness, equity, is-uprightness | es: con-equidad, con-rectitud, rectamente | fr: Droitement, [ומישׁרים], dans-droiture | de: Geradheit, [ומישׁרים], [מישׁרים] 1Chr 29:17; Ps 9:8; Ps 17:2; Ps 58:1; Ps 75:2

2. smoothness, evenness (3×) Smoothness or evenness in a physical or sensory sense — describing a level path or the smooth flow of liquid. Three occurrences preserve this concrete dimension: the path of the righteous is 'level' in Isaiah 26:7, wine goes down 'smoothly' in Proverbs 23:31, and the beloved's kiss flows 'smoothly' over lips and teeth in Song of Songs 7:9. Spanish suavemente and French avec douceur shift to sensory vocabulary, revealing that translators recognize a distinct register from the moral-judicial sense. UPRIGHTNESS EQUITY

en: is-level, smoothly | es: rectitud, suavemente | fr: avec-douceur,, dans-droiture, droiture | de: Geradheit, [במישׁרים], [למישׁרים] Prov 23:31; Song 7:9; Isa 26:7

3. agreement, equitable terms (1×) An equitable agreement or compact between parties — an extension of the equity sense into the realm of diplomacy and treaty-making. A single clear occurrence in Daniel 11:6, where the king of the South and the king of the North 'make an equitable arrangement' (asah mesharim). Spanish alianza and French accord shift to treaty vocabulary, confirming that this specialized diplomatic sense stands apart from the general ethical use. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT

en: agreements | es: alianza | fr: droiture | de: [מישׁרים] Dan 11:6

מֵיתָר H4340 N-mpc / 2fs (9×)

A cord or rope, especially a tent rope for securing the tabernacle or camp; also the string of a bow.

Related to the root yatar ('to be left over, to stretch'), this noun denotes a stretched cord – most often the ropes that anchor a tent. Six of its nine occurrences describe the cords of the tabernacle and its courtyard (Exod 35:18; 39:40; Num 3:26, 37; 4:26, 32), making it a technical term in Priestly legislation. Jeremiah 10:20 laments that 'my cords are broken,' using the torn tent rope as a figure for national collapse. Isaiah 54:2 reverses the image: lengthen your cords, for God is expanding your dwelling. A single occurrence in Psalm 21:13 shifts from tent ropes to bowstrings, where God aims his strings against the faces of his enemies.

1. cord, tent rope (8×) The primary sense of a cord or tent rope used to stake and secure a tent or the tabernacle structure. The Priestly source accounts for most occurrences (Exod 35:18; 39:40; Num 3:26, 37; 4:26, 32), cataloguing the meytarim as essential tabernacle hardware alongside pegs and frames. Prophetic usage transforms the image: Jeremiah's broken cords signify national ruin (Jer 10:20), while Isaiah's lengthened cords promise restoration and expansion (Isa 54:2). German Schnuere and Spanish cuerdas consistently render the straightforward 'cord/rope' meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-cords, its-cords, my-cords | es: cuerdas-de-ellos, cuerdas-de-él, cuerdas-mis | fr: [מיתרי], [מיתריך], et-leur-cords | de: [מיתרי], [מיתריך], ihr-Schnuere Exod 35:18; Exod 39:40; Num 3:26; Num 3:37; Num 4:26

2. bowstring (1×) A specialized sense denoting a bowstring – the taut cord of a weapon rather than a tent. Psalm 21:13 (English v. 13) pictures God readying his bow against his enemies: 'you will aim with your bowstrings (bemeitarekha) at their faces.' The semantic link to tent cords is the common notion of a stretched, taut cord, but the martial context and singular attestation mark this as a distinct sense. The translation evidence (Spanish con-tus-cuerdas, English with-your-bowstrings) reflects this specialized military usage. BOW WEAPON RAINBOW

en: with-your-bowstrings | es: con-tus-cuerdas | fr: dans-corde | de: mit-dein-bowstrings Ps 21:12

מַכְאוֹב H4341 Prep-k / N-msc / 1cs (16×)

Pain, sorrow, suffering — physical affliction or mental anguish, used of human distress and the Suffering Servant.

Encompasses both bodily pain and deep emotional grief, with a theological arc that runs from Israel's slavery in Egypt to the Suffering Servant of Isaiah. God first uses the word when telling Moses 'I have seen the pain of my people' in Egypt (Exod 3:7), establishing it as a term for communal affliction. The Psalms apply it to personal distress caused by sin (Ps 32:10; 38:18; 69:27). Ecclesiastes makes the provocative claim that increasing knowledge increases makob (Eccl 1:18), linking it to existential sorrow. Most memorably, Isaiah 53:3–4 describes the Servant as 'a man of pains' (ish makoboth) who 'carried our pains' — language the New Testament applies to Jesus. French 'douleur' and Spanish 'dolor' consistently convey the word's weight.

pain, sorrow, suffering (16×) Physical pain or emotional anguish experienced by individuals or communities. Introduced as God's recognition of Israel's suffering in Egyptian bondage (Exod 3:7), then extended to bodily affliction (Job 33:19; 2 Chr 6:29), the torments that multiply for the wicked (Ps 32:10), sorrow tied to the consequences of sin (Ps 38:18; 69:27), the grief that accompanies knowledge (Eccl 1:18; 2:23), and the wounds of personified Jerusalem (Lam 1:12, 18). Climactically, Isaiah calls the Servant 'a man of sorrows, acquainted with pain' who bore 'our pains' (Isa 53:3–4). Spanish 'dolor' and French 'douleur' uniformly render both physical and emotional dimensions. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: and-his-pain, and-my-pain, and-our-pains | es: como-mi-dolor, con-dolor, dolor | fr: [ומכאבו], dans-douleur, de-douleur | de: [במכאוב], [ומכאבו], [ומכאבינו] Exod 3:7; 2Chr 6:29; Job 33:19; Ps 32:10; Ps 38:17

כָּבַר H4342 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

abundance, in great quantity (substantival use of Hiphil participle)

Job 36:31 uses this unusual form—a Hiphil participle functioning as a noun—to speak of God giving 'food in abundance.' The root כבר means to be much or many, and here Elihu extols God's provision through natural processes. The phrase למכביר literally means 'for making much' or 'abundantly,' capturing both the generosity and the efficacy of divine provision. This is Elihu's distinctive vocabulary; the root appears rarely in this form. The word emphasizes not merely sufficiency but lavish surplus—God as abundant provider.

(1×) Abundance, plenty, or great quantity—specifically a Hiphil participle of כבר (to be much) used substantivally in Job 36:31. Elihu's speech describes how God gives food למכביר—'in abundance' or 'abundantly.' The grammatical construction (preposition + Hiphil participle) creates a noun-like phrase meaning 'to/for abundance.' The multilingual glosses confirm this sense of plentiful provision. BDB notes this is uniquely Elihu's usage, part of his elevated, sometimes archaic diction. The term celebrates divine generosity that exceeds mere adequacy—provision that overflows. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-abundance | es: en-abundancia | fr: à-למכביר | de: [למכביר] Job 36:31

מַכְבֵּנָה H4343 N-proper-ms (1×)

Machbenah, a place name in Judah (possibly personified in genealogy)

First Chronicles 2:49 mentions Machbenah in Caleb's genealogy, though it's unclear whether this is a person or a place (personified genealogically). The name appears in a list where geographical locations are sometimes represented as 'sons' of founding figures. If a place name, it may be related to the preceding Macbena. The Greek transliterations (Machabena, Machbana) show slight variations. The genealogical context suggests a town or settlement in Judah's territory associated with Calebite clans.

(1×) A name occurring in 1 Chronicles 2:49, either a person in Caleb's lineage or (more likely) a place name in Judah represented genealogically. The chronicler often personifies towns and settlements as 'sons' of clan founders, and Machbenah appears in such a context. If a location, it would have been among the Calebite holdings in southern Judah. The relationship to Macbena (H4343) remains uncertain—possibly variant spellings of the same place or two related settlements. The genealogical embedding of geography was a common ancient Near Eastern literary technique. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Makhbenah | es: Macbena | fr: [מכבנה] | de: [מכבנה] 1Chr 2:49

מַכְבַּנַּי H4344 N-proper-ms (1×)

Machbannai, a personal name borne by one of David's warriors (etymology uncertain)

First Chronicles 12:13 lists Machbannai among the Gadite warriors who defected to David at Ziklag. These were fierce fighters described as having 'faces like lions' and being 'swift as gazelles on the mountains.' Machbannai is listed eighth among eleven Gadite chiefs. The name's etymology is uncertain, though the form suggests it may derive from a root related to concealment or building. His inclusion among David's early supporters from the Transjordanian tribes shows the breadth of David's coalition even before he became king.

(1×) A personal name of one of the Gadite warriors who joined David at Ziklag according to 1 Chronicles 12:13 (v. 14 in English). He was the eighth in rank among eleven Gadite chiefs, part of the formidable contingent from across the Jordan who came to David during Saul's lifetime. These men were expert warriors, and Machbannai's name is preserved among those whose early loyalty helped establish David's power base. The name's meaning remains obscure, but his military prowess is clear from the chronicler's vivid description of these Gadite heroes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Makhbannai | es: Macbanai | fr: [מכבני] | de: [מכבני] 1Chr 12:14

מִכְבָּר H4345 Prep-l / N-msc (6×)

A bronze grating or lattice-work; a component of the tabernacle's altar of burnt offering (Exodus only).

A masculine noun designating the bronze grating or lattice that formed part of the altar of burnt offering in the tabernacle. All six occurrences are confined to Exodus, appearing in the initial instructions (Exod 27:4), the inventory of components (Exod 35:16; 38:30; 39:39), and the construction narrative (Exod 38:4-5). The grating was fashioned as 'a network of bronze' (מַעֲשֵׂה רֶשֶׁת נְחֹשֶׁת) placed beneath the altar's ledge. Spanish enrejado ('lattice, grating') captures the sense precisely, while French grate and English grate similarly point to an open metalwork structure.

grate, grating (metal lattice) (6×) A bronze lattice or metal grating constructed as part of the tabernacle's altar of burnt offering. The term appears exclusively in Exodus's tabernacle instructions and construction accounts, always in connection with the altar. Exodus 27:4 specifies 'you shall make for it a grating, a network of bronze' (מִכְבָּר מַעֲשֵׂה רֶשֶׁת נְחֹשֶׁת), placed around the lower half of the altar (27:5). The same component is listed in the inventory of sacred furnishings (Exod 35:16; 38:30; 39:39) and described in the construction record (Exod 38:4-5). The Spanish enrejado ('lattice, grill') and English/French grate all point to an open-work metal structure designed to allow airflow for the sacrificial fire. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-grate-of, grate, grate-of | es: enrejado, enrejado-de, la-rejilla-de | fr: grate, grate-de, grating | de: fuer-grate-von, grate, grate-von Exod 27:4; Exod 35:16; Exod 38:4; Exod 38:5; Exod 38:30

מַכְבֵּר H4346 Art / N-ms (1×)

netted cloth, coverlet, thick woven fabric (used for smothering)

Second Kings 8:15 describes the gruesome assassination of Ben-hadad: Hazael took 'the covering,' dipped it in water, spread it over the king's face, and suffocated him. The term denotes a thick, netted cloth or coverlet—substantial enough to hold water and block breathing. The use of a household object for murder adds to the horror: a simple bed covering becomes an instrument of regicide. This was not open combat but calculated assassination, fulfilling Elisha's prophecy that Hazael would become king of Aram.

(1×) A thick woven cloth, netted coverlet, or textile substantial enough to be soaked with water, used in 2 Kings 8:15 by Hazael to smother King Ben-hadad. The term suggests a porous, net-like weave that could absorb and hold liquid. The assassination method was grimly efficient: the water-soaked fabric held tightly over the face would block air while muffling any struggle. Multilingual renderings ('covering,' 'manta,' 'couvrant') emphasize the cloth's function as something that covers or conceals—here, covering the boundary between life and death in a palace coup. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-covering | es: la-manta | fr: le-couvrant | de: der-bedeckend 2Kgs 8:15

מַכָּה H4347 N-fs (48×)

Blow, wound; plague or divine calamity; slaughter in battle

Covers the full arc of violent harm, from a single blow or stripe inflicted on the body to a festering wound, a divine plague, and large-scale battlefield slaughter. In Deuteronomy 25:3 the word denotes measured judicial blows, while in Jeremiah 10:19 and 30:17 it describes a nation's wounds that only God can heal. Spanish 'plaga' and French 'plaie' emphasize the affliction dimension, whereas German 'Plage' captures both plague and divine chastisement. The word's breadth reflects the biblical conviction that all violence, whether personal, military, or cosmic, ultimately falls under God's sovereign hand.

1. blow, strike (18×) A physical blow, strike, or stripe delivered against a person, whether in judicial punishment (Deut 25:3, limited to forty strokes), in battle as an act of violence (Josh 10:10, 20), or figuratively as the striking defeat God inflicts on enemies. Spanish 'golpe' and English 'striking' highlight the percussive force of the action. Isaiah 10:26 compares God's future blow against Assyria to the striking of Midian at the rock of Oreb. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: Like-the-striking, a-striking, a-striking- | es: como-matanza-de, golpe, golpe-de | fr: [מכה], [מכות], [מכת] | de: Plage, [ומכות], [מכת] Deut 25:3; Josh 10:10; Josh 10:20; Judg 11:33; Judg 15:8

2. wound, injury (18×) A wound or injury resulting from being struck, visible on the body as a mark of harm. Used of King Ahab's mortal wound in his chariot (1 Kgs 22:35), King Joram's battle wounds (2 Kgs 8:29; 9:15), and the mysterious wounds 'between the hands' of a false prophet (Zech 13:6). Spanish 'herida' and French translations consistently render this as an open, personal injury. Jeremiah uses it poignantly for Israel's incurable wound that only God's compassion can heal (Jer 10:19; 15:18; 30:17). PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: He-heals, and-blow, and-from-your-wounds | es: herida, herida-mi, herida-tuya | fr: [המכות], [המכים], de-ainsi | de: Plage, [המכות], [מכותיה] 1Kgs 22:35; 2Kgs 8:29; 2Kgs 9:15; 2Chr 22:6; Ps 64:7

3. plague, calamity (9×) A plague, calamity, or divine affliction sent as judgment upon a people. In Deuteronomy 28:59 God warns of extraordinary, lasting plagues for disobedience, and Leviticus 26:21 promises sevenfold plagues for defiance. Spanish 'plaga,' French 'plaie,' and German 'Plage' all converge on the catastrophic, supernatural character of these afflictions, distinguishing them from ordinary personal injury. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: plague, plagues, plagues-of | es: plaga, plagas, plagas-de | fr: plague, plaie, plaies | de: Plage, Plagen, Plagen-von Lev 26:21; Num 11:33; Deut 28:59

4. slaughter, defeat (3×) A great slaughter or military defeat, emphasizing massive loss of life in battle. The Philistines inflict a great slaughter on Israel at Ebenezer (1 Sam 4:10), Jonathan's initial raid produces a small slaughter that triggers panic (1 Sam 14:14), and he laments the slaughter could have been even greater (1 Sam 14:30). Spanish 'matanza' and English 'slaughter' both foreground the scale and ferocity of battlefield carnage. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: slaughter, the-slaughter | es: la-matanza, matanza | fr: immole, le-immole | de: der-slaughter, slaughter 1Sam 4:10; 1Sam 14:14; 1Sam 14:30

מִכְוָה H4348 N-fsc (5×)

a burn mark, scar or spot caused by fire on the skin

Mikwah refers specifically to a burn scar or burnt spot on the skin, appearing exclusively in the priestly skin-disease legislation of Leviticus 13:24-28. The priest must examine whether a burn from fire has developed signs of a leprous condition. French and German translations use brûler and verbrennen respectively, both emphasizing the burning action, while Spanish quemadura captures the resulting wound. All five occurrences concern the same diagnostic scenario: distinguishing an ordinary burn scar from a spreading skin disease.

(5×) A burnt spot or scar on human skin resulting from contact with fire, used exclusively in the Levitical purity code (Lev 13:24-28). The priest evaluates whether the burn (mikwat-esh, 'burn of fire') shows signs of a spreading skin disease. Spanish quemadura and English 'burn' both denote the wound itself, while French brûler and German verbrennen highlight the causative action. The term is narrowly technical, belonging entirely to the priestly diagnostic vocabulary for skin conditions. FIRE AND BURNING

en: burn-of-, in-the-burn, the-burn | es: en-la-quemadura, la-quemadura, quemadura-de- | fr: brûler-de-, dans-le-brûler, le-brûler | de: der-verbrennen, in-der-verbrennen, verbrennen-von- Lev 13:24; Lev 13:25; Lev 13:28

מָכוֹן H4349 N-ms (17×)

An established place or foundation; a fixed dwelling, especially God's heavenly seat or his earthly sanctuary.

Derived from the root כּוּן ('to establish, make firm'), this noun denotes a place that has been deliberately set and secured — not a temporary site but a permanent foundation. Its primary use is theological: the 'established place' of God's dwelling, whether his heavenly throne-room from which he hears prayer (1 Kgs 8:39, 43, 49) or the earthly sanctuary he has prepared (Exod 15:17). A secondary use describes the cosmic or moral foundations undergirding God's rule, as in 'righteousness and justice are the foundation of his throne' (Ps 89:14, 97:2).

1. established dwelling place (14×) A fixed, established dwelling or habitation — the prepared place of God's residence. The Song of the Sea celebrates the sanctuary as the מָכוֹן God's hands established (Exod 15:17). Solomon's dedication prayer repeatedly invokes the 'place of your dwelling' in heaven (1 Kgs 8:39, 43, 49), and Isaiah refers to 'my resting place' (Isa 18:4). Spanish 'lugar de' and French renderings consistently point to a locative sense. The word carries the nuance not merely of a location but of a divinely prepared, permanently secured habitation — God's chosen address. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-place, foundation-of, from-place-of | es: Desde-lugar-de, desde-el-lugar-de, el-lugar-de | fr: [במכוני], [ומכון], [מכון] | de: Ort-von, [במכונ], [ומכון] Exod 15:17; 1Kgs 8:13; 1Kgs 8:39; 1Kgs 8:43; 1Kgs 8:49

2. foundation, established base (3×) A foundation or established base upon which something rests, used metaphorically of the moral and cosmic order. Psalm 89:14 and 97:2 both declare that 'righteousness and justice are the מְכוֹן of his throne,' portraying God's rule as resting on an immovable ethical bedrock. Psalm 104:5 extends this to creation itself: God set the earth upon its foundations (מְכוֹנֶיהָ). Spanish 'fundamento' and German 'Grundfeste' both capture this architectural-structural metaphor. The sense shifts from habitation to the underlying support that makes habitation secure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-foundations, the-foundation-of | es: fundamento-de, sus-cimientos | fr: de-affermir, de-base | de: der-Grundfeste-von, sein-Grundfesten Ps 89:14; Ps 97:2; Ps 104:5

מְכוֹנָה H4350 Art / N-fp (24×)

A fixed base, wheeled stand, or pedestal – especially the bronze stands for Solomon's temple lavers

Refers to a sturdy base or pedestal designed to hold something in a fixed position. Nearly every occurrence describes the ten ornate wheeled bronze stands Solomon commissioned for the temple lavers (1 Kgs 7:27-43), each elaborately decorated with panels of lions, oxen, and cherubim. The word also designates the base of the altar rebuilt after the exile (Ezra 3:3) and the resting place of the symbolic ephah in Zechariah's vision (Zech 5:11). Spanish 'base' and German 'Stehe' both capture the core idea of a firm support structure. These stands were so prized that Ahaz later stripped them (2 Kgs 16:17) and the Babylonians carried them away as bronze spoil (2 Kgs 25:13, 16; Jer 52:17, 20).

stand, base, pedestal (24×) A fixed stand, base, or pedestal – predominantly the ten wheeled bronze stands Solomon crafted for the temple lavers (1 Kgs 7:27-43), decorated with engraved panels. Also the foundation for the post-exilic altar (Ezra 3:3) and the resting place for the symbolic ephah in Zechariah's vision (Zech 5:11). The root kun ('to be established') highlights permanence and stability. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: the-stand, the-stands | es: la-base, las-basas, las-bases | fr: [המכנות], le-se-tient, le-tiens-toi | de: [המכנות], der-stehe, der-steht 1Kgs 7:27; 1Kgs 7:28; 1Kgs 7:30; 1Kgs 7:32

מְכֹרָה H4351 N-fpc / 2fs (3×)

origin, source, place of extraction or birth

A noun denoting origin or source, literally the place from which something was dug out or extracted. Ezekiel uses it three times in oracles of judgment. Of Jerusalem, he speaks of 'your origin and birth' being from Canaan (16:3). Against Pharaoh, he mentions judging him 'in the land of your origin, where you were created' (21:30). And Egypt will be restored 'to the land of their origin' (29:14). The term emphasizes roots, homeland, and ancestral place.

(3×) Cross-linguistic evidence points to origin and source: Spanish 'origen' (origin), English 'origin.' Ezekiel 16:3 confronts Jerusalem with her origins in the land of the Canaanites, challenging any presumption of inherent superiority. Ezekiel 21:30 (21:35 Eng) promises judgment in Pharaoh's homeland. Ezekiel 29:14 predicts Egypt's return to Pathros, their land of origin, but only as a lowly kingdom. Each usage emphasizes returning to or being judged in one's foundational place. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: origin-your, their-origin | es: Origen-de-ti, su-origen, tu-origen | fr: [מכורתם], [מכרותיך], [מכרתיך] | de: [מכורתם], [מכרותיך], [מכרתיך] Ezek 16:3; Ezek 21:30; Ezek 29:14

מָכִי H4352 N-proper-ms (1×)

Machi, a Gadite personal name (father of the spy Geuel)

Numbers 13:15 identifies Machi as the father of Geuel, the representative from the tribe of Gad among the twelve spies sent to scout Canaan. The name is brief and the etymology uncertain. Geuel brought back a negative report that contributed to Israel's failure of faith and the resulting forty-year wilderness wandering. Machi thus stands as a patronymic, his name remembered primarily because his son participated in that fateful reconnaissance mission. The Greek transliteration Machi confirms the basic consonantal text.

(1×) A personal name identifying the father of Geuel, the Gadite spy in Numbers 13:15. The name appears solely as a patronymic ('Geuel son of Machi') with no additional information about Machi himself. He represents the countless biblical figures known only through their children's actions—in this case, a son who participated in the tragic spy mission that led to Israel's extended exile from the Promised Land. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though some connect it to roots suggesting diminishment or poverty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Machi | es: Maquí | fr: Machi | de: Machi Num 13:15

מָכִיר H4353 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (22×)

Machir ('seller'); eldest son of Manasseh and ancestor of the Machirites, also a benefactor of David.

A proper name meaning 'seller' or 'trader,' borne by two distinct individuals. The primary figure is Machir son of Manasseh, the eldest grandson of Joseph, whose descendants conquered and settled in Gilead east of the Jordan (Num 32:39–40; Deut 3:15; Josh 13:31; 17:1). In the ancient Song of Deborah, 'Machir' stands poetically for the entire tribe of Manasseh (Judg 5:14). The second Machir, son of Ammiel from Lo-debar, sheltered Saul's grandson Mephibosheth and later provided supplies to David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 9:4–5; 17:27).

Machir (proper name) (22×) The proper masculine name Machir, referring primarily to the eldest son of Manasseh whose clan conquered Gilead and received its territorial allotment east of the Jordan (Gen 50:23; Num 26:29; 32:39–40; Deut 3:15; Josh 13:31; 17:1). In Judges 5:14 'Machir' functions as a tribal designation for Manasseh. A second Machir, son of Ammiel of Lo-debar, appears in 2 Samuel 9:4–5 as Mephibosheth's host and in 2 Samuel 17:27 as a supporter of David. Greek Μαχειρ and the multilingual renderings—Maquir (Spanish), Makir (French), Machir (German)—closely transliterate the Hebrew. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Machir, Makhir, and-Machir | es: Makir, Maquir, Y-Maquir | fr: Machir, Makhir, Makir | de: Machir, Machirs, Makhir Gen 50:23; Num 26:29; Num 27:1; Num 32:39

מָכִירִי H4354 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Machirite(s), a clan within Manasseh descended from Machir (used collectively with article)

Numbers 26:29 uses this gentilic form to designate the clan descended from Machir, son of Manasseh. The definite article makes it a collective: 'the Machirites' as a family group. This was a powerful clan; Machir himself is described as a 'man of war' and his descendants conquered Gilead in the Transjordan. The census in Numbers 26 counts them among Manasseh's clans, highlighting their importance in the tribal structure. The Machirite clan bridged east and west—some in Gilead, some west of the Jordan—maintaining family identity across the river divide.

(1×) A gentilic noun (with definite article) designating the clan or family descended from Machir son of Manasseh, appearing in Numbers 26:29 during the second wilderness census. The Machirites were a major Manassite clan, known for military prowess and territorial holdings in Gilead. The collective singular with article ('the Machirite') represents the entire family group as a single entity. This clan's significance extended beyond mere numbers—they were the warrior elite of Manasseh, remembered for conquering and settling the fertile Transjordanian highlands. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Machirite | es: los-maquiritas | fr: le-Machirite | de: der-Machirite Num 26:29

מָכַךְ H4355 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (3×)

to sink down, be humiliated, brought low

A verb meaning to sink down, become low, or be humiliated. It appears in Qal, Niphal, and Hophal forms describing decline and degradation. Psalm 106:43 recalls how rebellious Israel repeatedly sank low in their iniquity. Ecclesiastes uses it for a house whose beams sag and sink due to neglect (10:18). Job speaks of the wicked being brought low and humiliated (24:24). The verb captures the downward movement of decay, defeat, or divine humbling.

(3×) Multilingual glosses identify lowering and humiliation: Spanish 'fueron-abatidos, son-abatidos' (were brought low), English 'brought-low, sank.' Psalm 106:43 laments Israel's repeated cycle of rebellion leading to humiliation under enemies. Job 24:24 describes the wicked ultimately brought low despite temporary prosperity. Ecclesiastes 10:18 uses it literally for structural decay—lazy hands allow the house beams to sag and sink. Physical sinking and moral-spiritual humiliation merge in this word's semantic range. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: and-are-brought-low, and-they-sank, sags | es: se-hunde, y-fueron-abatidos, y-son-abatidos | fr: et-abaisser, et-ימך ,והמכו | de: [והמכו], [ימך], und-sie-sank Job 24:24; Ps 106:43; Eccl 10:18

מִכְלָה H4356 Prep-m / N-fs (3×)

enclosure, fold for sheep or goats

A noun denoting an enclosure or fold for sheep, where flocks are gathered for safety at night. The psalmist twice uses imagery of God taking someone from the sheepfolds or folds—David from following the flock (78:70), and offering he-goats from the worshiper's folds (50:9). Habakkuk laments the devastating judgment when sheep are cut off from the fold (3:17). The term evokes pastoral life and the protective enclosures that kept flocks safe from predators.

(3×) Translations uniformly identify sheep enclosures: Spanish 'rediles, corrales' (folds, pens), English 'fold, sheepfolds.' Psalm 50:9 affirms God needs no offerings from human folds—all belongs to Him already. Psalm 78:70 recalls God taking David from following the flock in the sheepfolds to shepherd Israel. Habakkuk 3:17 describes total agricultural devastation including empty sheep folds, yet the prophet will still rejoice in God. The fold represents security and livelihood. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-fold, from-the-sheepfolds, from-your-folds | es: de-rediles-de, de-tus-corrales, del-redil | fr: de-enclos, enclos | de: [ממכלה], von-dein-folds, von-der-sheepfolds Ps 50:9; Ps 78:70; Hab 3:17

מִכְלָה H4357 N-fpc (1×)

perfection, completeness (especially 'perfections of gold' = purest/finest gold)

Second Chronicles 4:21 uses this intensive plural form to describe the gold used in Solomon's temple: 'perfections of gold,' meaning the purest, finest gold imaginable. The root כלל means to complete or perfect, and this noun form amplifies that sense. This is not mere high-quality gold but gold that has reached its ideal state—utterly refined, completely pure. The chronicler's description of temple furnishings emphasizes how nothing less than perfection was acceptable for God's house. The plural of intensity underscores the superlative quality.

(1×) Perfection, completeness, or the state of being utterly finished and refined—used in 2 Chronicles 4:21 in the phrase 'perfections of gold' to denote the purest gold used in temple construction. The plural form (מִכְלוֹת) functions as an intensive, heightening the absolute quality implied. This is not commercial gold but ceremonial gold refined to its ultimate purity, suitable for the flowers, lamps, and tongs of the sanctuary. The term reflects the broader biblical theme that God's dwelling place demands materials without flaw, just as God's holiness is without defect. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: perfection-of | es: de-perfecto | fr: [מכלות] | de: [מכלות] 2Chr 4:21

מִכְלוֹל H4358 N-ms (2×)

perfection, full armor, splendid attire

A term denoting completeness or perfection, used specifically for the splendid or complete military equipment of warriors. Both occurrences in Ezekiel describe fully equipped cavalry forces. The term derives from a root meaning 'complete' or 'perfect,' and here emphasizes the impressive, comprehensive nature of military dress and armament. These are not partially equipped troops but warriors in full regalia. The multilingual evidence shows some translators emphasizing the completeness (perfection) while others stress the visual splendor (full armor).

(2×) Refers to complete or perfect military equipment—warriors fully arrayed in splendid armor and attire. Ezekiel 23:12 describes Assyrian governors and officials, while 38:4 depicts Gog's assembled forces, both 'clothed in perfection/full armor.' The term emphasizes comprehensive, impressive military dress rather than partial equipment. Cross-linguistic evidence divides between emphasizing perfection (Spanish perfección, French perfection) and full armor/splendor (English full-armor, splendor), both capturing the term's sense of martial completeness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11702 WITH 8 SENSES

en: full-armor, splendor | es: perfección | fr: perfection | de: [מכלול] Ezek 23:12; Ezek 38:4

מִכְלָל H4359 N-msc (1×)

perfection, completeness (abstract noun, used of beauty's perfection)

Psalm 50:2 declares that 'out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God has shined forth.' Here מִכְלָל denotes the absolute completeness or perfection of beauty—Zion as the aesthetic and spiritual ideal. The term derives from כלל (to complete, perfect) and represents the fullest realization of beauty. This is not subjective attractiveness but objective perfection: Zion as the place where beauty reaches its consummation. The parallel with God's self-revelation (God has shined forth) suggests that Zion's perfection reflects divine glory made visible in space and time.

(1×) Completeness, perfection, or the state of having reached the fullest possible realization—used in Psalm 50:2 to describe Zion as 'the perfection of beauty.' The construct phrase (מִכְלַל יֹפִי) means literally 'the perfection of beauty' or 'beauty's completeness.' This is not fragmented or partial beauty but beauty in its ideal, consummated form. The psalmist links this to theophany: from this place of aesthetic perfection, God reveals his glory. Zion thus represents not merely a geographical location but the space where divine beauty and human worship achieve perfect harmony. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: perfection-of | es: perfección-de- | fr: de-perfection | de: perfection-von Ps 50:2

מַכְלֻל H4360 Prep-b / N-mp (1×)

choice goods, perfect/gorgeous garments or fabrics (things made perfect, i.e., luxurious textiles)

Ezekiel 27:24 describes Tyre's trading partners bringing מַכְלֻלִים along with blue and embroidered garments and chests of rich apparel. The term denotes 'things made perfect'—probably gorgeous fabrics or choice luxury goods. The context of international trade in premium textiles suggests high-end merchandise, items perfected in their craft and finish. Tyre's marketplace dealt not in ordinary wares but in the finest products from across the known world. The root כלל (to perfect, complete) indicates these were finished goods of exceptional quality.

(1×) Perfect or choice goods, probably gorgeous garments or luxurious fabrics, appearing in Ezekiel 27:24 in the description of Tyre's extensive trade network. The term is a passive participle meaning 'things made perfect'—items brought to the highest level of craftsmanship and finish. The trading context pairs these with blue garments, embroidered work, and multi-colored carpets, suggesting premium textiles for elite markets. Tyre's merchants traded in perfection itself: not mass-produced commodities but bespoke luxury goods that demonstrated both the artisan's skill and the buyer's wealth. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: with-choice-goods | es: en-cosas-perfectas | fr: beau-vêtement | de: [במכללים] Ezek 27:24

מַכֹּלֶת H4361 N-fs (1×)

food, provisions, grain-based foodstuff (especially wheat)

First Kings 5:11 (English 5:25) records that Solomon gave Hiram of Tyre an annual provision of wheat as food (מַכֹּלֶת). The term denotes food-stuff, specifically grain-based provisions. The parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 2:10 confirms this is wheat intended for consumption. This was part of the economic exchange supporting the temple construction: Israel provided agricultural produce, Tyre provided timber and skilled craftsmen. The bilateral trade agreement reveals how Solomon leveraged Israel's agricultural abundance to acquire what the hill country lacked—cedar and technical expertise.

(1×) Food provisions or foodstuff, particularly grain (wheat) given as payment or sustenance, appearing in 1 Kings 5:11 in the context of Solomon's annual provision to Hiram of Tyre. The term emphasizes processed grain ready for consumption rather than raw harvest. The treaty between Solomon and Hiram created a mutually beneficial economic relationship: Lebanon's timber and craftsmen in exchange for Israel's wheat and oil. This food-for-materials trade sustained the massive temple-building project and established economic interdependence between the two kingdoms. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food | es: alimento | fr: nourriture | de: Speise 1Kgs 5:11

מִכְמָן H4362 Prep-b / N-mpc (1×)
hidden stores, secret treasures (things hidden away or concealed)
Daniel 11:43 prophesies that a future king 'shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver and over all the hidden stores of Egypt.' The term denotes concealed or secret treasures—wealth stored away from public view. Some scholars suggest emending to מַטְמֻנֵי (buried treasures), but the Masoretic reading from כמן (to hide, store up) makes good sense. The prophecy emphasizes total economic domination: not just visible wealth but even the secret reserves fall under the conqueror's control. Nothing remains hidden from his grasp.

(1×) Hidden stores, concealed treasures, or secret reserves—used in Daniel 11:43 to describe Egypt's wealth that will fall to a conquering king. The plural form suggests multiple caches or storage locations. The root כמן implies deliberate concealment, things hidden for security or future use. The apocalyptic prophecy portrays comprehensive economic subjugation: the conqueror seizes not only obvious treasures but ferrets out even the carefully concealed reserves. While some propose emending to מַטְמֻנֵי (buried treasures), the sense remains similar—wealth hidden from common knowledge now exposed to plunder. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: over-treasures-of | es: sobre-tesoros-de | fr: trésor | de: [במכמני] Dan 11:43

מִכְמָס H4363 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (11×)
Mikhmash — a Benjaminite town at a strategic pass northeast of Jerusalem, prominent in Saul's Philistine wars
The proper noun מִכְמָס (Mikhmas) identifies a town in Benjamin, situated on a rocky pass northeast of Jerusalem opposite Geba. Saul stations troops there (1 Sam 13:2), the Philistines encamp at the pass (1 Sam 13:5, 16, 23), and Jonathan's daring assault exploits the narrow defile between two crags (1 Sam 14:5, 31). Isaiah traces an Assyrian advance through Mikhmash (Isa 10:28). After the exile, men of Mikhmash are counted among returning settlers (Ezra 2:27; Neh 7:31; 11:31). The site is identified with modern Mukhmas. Spanish 'Micmas' preserves the name.

Mikhmash (place name) (11×) The Benjaminite town of Mikhmash, strategically located at a narrow pass northeast of Jerusalem near Geba. Its primary narrative significance lies in the Philistine wars of Saul's reign, where the pass of Mikhmash became the theater of Jonathan's bold raid (1 Sam 13:2-23; 14:5, 31). Isaiah envisions an invading army depositing its baggage at Mikhmash en route to Jerusalem (Isa 10:28). Post-exilic census lists record Mikhmash families among those who returned and resettled (Ezra 2:27; Neh 7:31; 11:31). The site is identified with the modern village of Mukhmas, about 7 miles north of Jerusalem. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Michmas, Mikhmas, Mikhmash | es: En-Mikhmas, Micmas, Mijmash | fr: Mikhmash, [למכמש], [מכמס] | de: Mikhmash, [למכמש], [מכמס] 1Sam 13:2; 1Sam 13:5; 1Sam 13:11; 1Sam 13:16; 1Sam 13:23

מִכְמָר H4364a N-ms (1×)
net, snare, hunting trap (for capturing animals, used figuratively)
Isaiah 51:20 uses this term in a vivid simile: God's people are 'like an antelope in a net,' caught and helpless. The word denotes a hunting net or snare designed to entangle and immobilize prey. The image conveys total helplessness—the wild antelope's speed and agility are useless once trapped. The prophet describes Jerusalem's sons lying at the head of every street, not from rest but from divine judgment that has ensnared them. The net metaphor appears elsewhere in Scripture for various kinds of entrapment, but here specifically captures the stunned immobility of those caught in God's wrath.

(1×) A net or snare used for hunting, specifically mentioned in Isaiah 51:20 in the phrase 'like an antelope in a net.' The term relates to trapping technology designed to capture and immobilize wild animals. The comparison highlights the futility of struggle once ensnared: the antelope's natural advantages mean nothing when tangled in the hunter's trap. Isaiah uses this to describe the defeated, stunned condition of Jerusalem's population—'full of the fury of the LORD' yet unable to escape. The net here is divine judgment itself, and none can break free by their own strength. NETS AND SNARES
en: in-net | es: en-red | fr: [מכמר] | de: [מכמר] Isa 51:20

מַכְמֹר H4364b Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)
nets, snares, hunting traps (plural, possessive: 'their nets')
Psalm 141:10 expresses the psalmist's prayer: 'Let the wicked fall into their own nets, while I pass by safely.' The term is the plural form with possessive suffix—'their nets'—referring to traps set by the wicked for the righteous. The poetic justice is striking: the very snares intended for others become the trappers' own downfall. Some manuscripts in Psalm 140:11 may also contain this reading (emending a difficult text). The image of nets as instruments of malicious intent reversed upon their makers is a common biblical theme of divine retribution.

(1×) Nets or snares (plural with possessive suffix), appearing in Psalm 141:10 to describe the traps set by wicked people. The psalmist prays for the wicked to fall 'into their nets'—a request for poetic justice where evil plans backfire on their perpetrators. The grammatical form (plural with third masculine plural suffix) emphasizes both multiple traps and their ownership by the wicked themselves. This reversal motif—evil ensnaring itself—runs throughout Scripture as evidence of divine moral order. The nets may be literal hunting tools or metaphorical plots and schemes, but in either case they become boomerangs of judgment. NETS AND SNARES
en: into-their-nets | es: en-sus-redes | fr: dans-filet | de: hinein-ihr-nets Ps 141:10

מִכְמֶרֶת H4365a Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (2×)
dragnet, fishing net
A large fishing net dragged through water to gather fish, distinct from hook-and-line or smaller casting nets. Habakkuk 1:15-16 uses this term metaphorically for the Babylonian military machine that sweeps up nations indiscriminately. The prophet depicts the Babylonians catching peoples 'in their dragnet' and then—shockingly—sacrificing to the net itself, treating their military might as a deity. This fishing imagery powerfully captures imperial conquest as systematic, comprehensive exploitation. The term appears alongside other fishing implements (hook, seine), creating a complete picture of predatory power.

(2×) A large dragnet used in fishing, employed metaphorically in Habakkuk 1:15-16 to depict Babylonian imperial conquest. The prophet describes how the Chaldeans gather nations as fish caught in a dragnet, then offer sacrifices to the net itself—a striking image of military power worship. The term appears with 'hook' and 'seine,' creating a comprehensive fishing metaphor for systematic imperial predation. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish red-de-arrastre, French filet) identify this as a dragged net, distinguishing it from cast nets or traps. NETS AND SNARES
en: in-his-dragnet, to-his-dragnet | es: a-su-red-de-arrastre, con-su-red-de-arrastre | fr: filet | de: [במכמרתו], [למכמרתו] Hab 1:15; Hab 1:16

מִכְמֶרֶת H4365b N-fs (1×)
net, fishing net (cast upon water for catching fish)
Isaiah 19:8 laments the judgment coming upon Egypt: 'The fishermen will mourn, and all who cast a hook into the Nile will grieve, and those who spread nets on the water will languish.' The term denotes fishing nets spread or cast upon water, part of the ancient Nile fishing industry. The prophecy envisions ecological and economic disaster—the river's fish dying, the fishing industry collapsing. Fishing nets, symbols of daily sustenance and commerce, become useless when divine judgment disrupts the natural order. The parallel with 'those who cast hooks' confirms this is fishing equipment.

(1×) A fishing net spread upon the water's surface, mentioned in Isaiah 19:8 as part of Egypt's fishing industry facing divine judgment. The term appears in parallel with hook-fishing, showing two methods of catching Nile fish. The verb 'spread' (פרשׂ) indicates nets deployed on the water rather than cast or drawn. Egypt's economy depended heavily on the Nile's productivity, and fishing was both subsistence and commerce. When God strikes the river (turning it foul, killing fish), those who spread nets on the water face ruin—their tools rendered useless, their livelihood destroyed. The net becomes a symbol of human industry rendered futile by divine intervention. NETS AND SNARES

en: net | es: red | fr: [מכמרת] | de: [מכמרת] Isa 19:8

מִכְמְתָת H4366 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)

Michmethath (place name in Ephraim/Manasseh border)

A geographical landmark on the boundary between Ephraim and Manasseh, always appearing with the definite article. The location marked a significant point in tribal territory allocation but its precise identification remains uncertain. Modern scholars have proposed various khirbets (ruins) as candidates, but none definitively. The Septuagint's widely varying attempts to transliterate or interpret the name (Ikasmōn, Achthōth, Machthōth) reveal that ancient translators also found this place name challenging. Such lost toponyms remind us how much geographical knowledge has vanished.

(2×) A place name marking the boundary between Ephraimite and Manassite territory (Joshua 16:6; 17:7). Always appears with the definite article, suggesting it was a well-known landmark in the tribal period. The Septuagint's wildly varying transliterations indicate interpretive difficulty even in antiquity. Modern identification proposals include Khirbet kefr beita, though certainty eludes us. Cross-linguistic evidence shows direct transliteration (Michmethath, Micmetat), appropriately preserving the Hebrew toponym. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Mikmethath | es: Micmetat | fr: le-Mikmethath | de: der-Mikmethath Josh 16:6; Josh 17:7

מַכְנַדְבַי H4367 N-proper-ms (1×)

Machnadebai, a personal name of a man who married a foreign wife (etymology uncertain)

Ezra 10:40 lists Machnadebai among those who had married foreign wives during the exile and were compelled to divorce them under Ezra's reforms. The name's etymology is uncertain; one scholar proposed it might mean 'possession of Nebo' (the Babylonian god), but this remains speculative. The Greek transliterations show variation, suggesting scribal uncertainty. This man represents the dozens of Jews who, during the Babylonian exile, had intermarried with surrounding peoples—unions that post-exilic leaders viewed as threatening covenant identity and purity.

(1×) A personal name appearing in Ezra 10:40, identifying a man who had married a foreign woman and was required to send her away during Ezra's covenant-renewal reforms. The name's meaning is obscure, though some suggest Babylonian connections (possibly 'possession of Nebo'). The textual variants in Greek manuscripts indicate this was a difficult name to transmit. Machnadebai stands as one of many individuals caught in the painful tension between personal relationships and communal covenant obligations in the post-exilic period—named, but otherwise unknown beyond this single reference to a failed marriage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Makhnadevay | es: Maknadebai | fr: [מכנדבי] | de: [מכנדבי] Ezra 10:40

מִכֹּנָה H4368 Conj-w (1×)

Meconah, a place name in Judah (variant spelling of Mechonah, meaning 'base' or 'foundation')

Nehemiah 11:28 lists Meconah among the towns where post-exilic Jews settled after returning from Babylon. The name appears to be a variant spelling of מְכוֹנָה (base, foundation), perhaps indicating a fortified or established settlement. This was part of the resettlement of Judah's countryside after the exile, with families reclaiming ancestral towns. The Greek rendering as Mame shows textual uncertainty. Meconah represents the dozens of small villages that had to be repopulated to make the return from exile a viable restoration of community, not just a concentration in Jerusalem.

(1×) A town name in post-exilic Judah appearing in Nehemiah 11:28, where returning exiles settled. The name likely relates to מְכוֹנָה (foundation, base), suggesting perhaps a fortified or well-established settlement. It appears in the list of towns in Judah's southern region that were reoccupied after the return from Babylon. The conjunction 'and in Meconah' indicates this was one stop in a geographical survey of repopulated areas. These settlement lists in Nehemiah reflect the difficult work of rebuilding not just the temple and walls, but the entire network of villages that constituted Judah. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-in-Mekhonah | es: y-en-Mecona | fr: [ובמכנה] | de: [ובמכנה] Neh 11:28

מְכוֹנָה H4369 N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

its base, foundation, pedestal (possessive form: the base belonging to something)

Zechariah 5:11 describes a vision of a woman (representing wickedness) being carried in a basket to Shinar, where 'a house will be built for it, and it will be set there on its own base.' The term means the foundation or pedestal on which something rests. This particular form (with feminine possessive suffix) indicates 'its base'—the basket's permanent resting place. The vision prophesies that evil will be removed from the land and given its own dwelling elsewhere, set upon its own foundation. The architectural imagery suggests permanence: wickedness exiled and established far away.

(1×) The base, pedestal, or foundation upon which something rests—here with feminine possessive suffix 'its base'—appearing in Zechariah 5:11. The term regularly describes the stands for temple lavers or the altar's foundation, but here refers metaphorically to the permanent resting place being prepared for the basket containing wickedness. The vision promises that evil will be carried to Babylon (Shinar) and there given its own establishment, its own 'base'—removed from God's land and set up in the land of exile. The language of firm foundation ironically describes the permanent exile of sin itself. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: its-base | es: su-base | fr: fondement | de: [מכנתה] Zech 5:11

מִכְנָס H4370 N-mdc (5×)

linen breeches or undergarments worn by priests

Mikhnas designates the linen undergarments prescribed for the Israelite priesthood, always appearing in the dual or plural construct form mikhnesei. These breeches were made of fine linen (bad or pishtim) and worn to cover the body from waist to thigh during sacred service. They appear in the investiture instructions (Exod 28:42; 39:28), the daily burnt offering regulations (Lev 6:10), the Day of Atonement rites (Lev 16:4), and Ezekiel's eschatological temple vision (Ezek 44:18). The garment ensured priestly modesty before the altar.

(5×) Priestly linen undergarments or breeches covering from waist to thigh, required for service at the altar and in the sanctuary. English glosses 'breeches' and 'undergarments' both appear, while French and German retain the term breeches/undergarments alongside transliterations. Spanish calzoncillos captures the garment precisely. Always in construct with pishtim ('linen') or bad ('fine linen'), these appear in Exod 28:42, 39:28, Lev 6:10, Lev 16:4, and Ezek 44:18 — spanning both Priestly legislation and prophetic temple vision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-breeches-of-, and-undergarments-of, and-undergarments-of- | es: calzoncillos-de, calzoncillos-de-, y-calzoncillos-de | fr: et-breeches-de-, et-pantalon, et-undergarments-de- | de: [ומכנס], und-breeches-von-, und-undergarments-von- Exod 28:42; Exod 39:28; Lev 6:10; Lev 16:4; Ezek 44:18

מֶ֫כ֫֫ס H4371 N-msc (6×)

Tax, tribute, levy; a proportional assessment on war spoils dedicated to the LORD and the Levites (Numbers 31 only).

A masculine noun meaning 'tax' or 'tribute,' appearing exclusively in Numbers 31:28-41, where it denotes the proportional levy exacted from the spoils of the Midianite war. Moses is commanded to 'separate a tribute for the LORD' from the warriors' half (one out of every five hundred persons, cattle, donkeys, and sheep) and from the congregation's half (one out of fifty). The word has cognates in Aramaic (מַכְסָא), Syriac, and even Arabic (, a loanword), all meaning 'tax' or 'customs duty.' Spanish tributo and English tribute consistently render the term.

tribute (levy/tax) (6×) A proportional tax or levy on war spoils, dedicated to sacred purposes. All six occurrences cluster in Numbers 31:28-41, where God commands Moses to exact a מֶכֶס from the booty of the Midianite campaign: one out of five hundred from the warriors' portion (for the LORD via the priest, v. 28-29) and one out of fifty from the congregation's portion (for the Levites, v. 30). The term derives from a root meaning 'to compute, to assess' and has wide Semitic cognates: Aramaic מַכְסָא, Assyrian miksu, and Arabic ' (a recognized loanword), all denoting customs or tax. Spanish tributo, French tribute, and English tribute uniformly confirm the fiscal-levy semantics. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: and-their-tribute, the-tribute, tribute | es: el-tributo, tributo, tributo-de | fr: et-leur-tribute, le-tribute, tribute | de: der-tribute, tribute, tribute-von Num 31:28; Num 31:37; Num 31:38; Num 31:39; Num 31:40

מִכְסֶה H4372 N-msc / 3ms (15×)

A covering — the protective outer layers of skin draped over the tabernacle and its sacred furnishings.

A masculine noun meaning 'covering' or 'protective layer,' used almost exclusively in Priestly texts for the material draped over the tabernacle structure and its holy objects during transport. The tabernacle itself received an outer covering of rams' skins dyed red and a covering of fine leather above it (Exod 26:14; 36:19; 39:34; 40:19). When the camp moved, each sacred vessel — the ark, the table, the lampstand, the golden altar — was wrapped in its own designated covering (Num 4:8, 10, 11, 12, 25). The one non-tabernacle occurrence is striking: Genesis 8:13 uses the same word for the 'covering' that Noah removed from the ark to see dry ground — perhaps hinting at the ark as a kind of portable sanctuary. Spanish 'cubierta' and German 'Decke' capture the protective sense.

covering (protective layer) (15×) A protective covering or outer layer placed over the tabernacle structure or its sacred furnishings. Describes the rams'-skin and fine-leather coverings of the tent of meeting (Exod 26:14; 35:11; 36:19; 39:34; 40:19) and the wrappings placed over individual holy objects — the ark, table, lampstand, golden altar, and utensils — during wilderness transport (Num 3:25; 4:8, 10, 11, 12, 25). The sole non-tabernacle use describes the roof covering Noah removed from the ark (Gen 8:13). Spanish 'cubierta,' French 'couverture,' and German 'Decke' all point to a protective canopy or wrapping. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-covering, and-a-covering, and-covering-of | es: con-cubierta-de, cubierta, cubierta-de | fr: avec-couverture-de, couverture, couverture-de | de: Decke, Decke-von, covering-von Gen 8:13; Exod 26:14; Exod 35:11; Exod 36:19

מִכְסָה H4373 N-fsc (2×)

computation, number, valuation

A term referring to numerical calculation or reckoning, used in two related but distinct Priestly contexts. In Exodus 12:4, it denotes counting persons to determine proper lamb portions for Passover—practical household math. In Leviticus 27:23, it refers to the priest's calculation of monetary valuation for dedicated property—legal/economic assessment. Both senses share the core idea of careful numerical determination, whether counting heads or computing worth. The term reflects the Priestly tradition's characteristic precision about quantities and values.

(2×) Numerical calculation or reckoning, appearing in two Priestly legal contexts. Exodus 12:4 uses it for counting persons to determine Passover lamb portions ('according to the number of persons'). Leviticus 27:23 employs it for priestly assessment of a field's monetary value. Both instances emphasize careful, precise computation —whether of people or property worth. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish suma/número, French/German amount/number) recognizes this as technical vocabulary for numerical reckoning in cultic-legal contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: amount-of, by-number-of | es: la-suma-de, según-número-de- | fr: amount-de, par-nombre-de | de: amount-von, durch-Zahl-von Exod 12:4; Lev 27:23

מְכַסֶּה H4374 Conj-w (4×)

covering (of fat, garments, ship deck, worms)

A term for something that covers or conceals, applied to diverse contexts. It describes the fat covering the internal organs in sacrificial rituals (Leviticus 9:19), the deck or 'covering' of a Phoenician ship (Ezekiel 27:7), garments valuable enough to be stocked by merchants (Isaiah 23:18), and even the worms that cover the dead in Sheol (Isaiah 14:11). The semantic thread connecting these uses is the function of covering or overlaying something beneath.

(4×) Something that covers, overlays, or conceals, with applications spanning ritual, nautical, commercial, and mortuary contexts. The multilingual glosses ('covering,' 'cubierta,' 'couverture') maintain the general sense of something that covers, though the specific referents vary widely—from ship decks to burial shrouds to ritual fat. The term's flexibility reflects Hebrew's tendency to use concrete, functional vocabulary across diverse semantic domains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-covering, and-the-covering, and-your-covering | es: tu-cubierta, y-lo-que-cubre, y-para-vestidura | fr: [ולמכסה], [ומכסיך], couverture | de: [ולמכסה], [ומכסיך], [מכסך] Lev 9:19; Isa 14:11; Isa 23:18; Ezek 27:7

מַכְפֵּלָה H4375 Art / N-proper-fs (6×)

Machpelah – the burial site near Hebron where the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their wives were interred.

A proper noun, always with the article (הַמַּכְפֵּלָה), designating the field and cave near Hebron that Abraham purchased from Ephron the Hittite as a family burial site (Gen 23). The name may originally have been an appellative meaning 'the double (cave)' – the Septuagint renders it τὸ διπλοῦν – though this etymology remains debated. Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah were all buried there (Gen 23:19; 25:9; 49:30; 50:13). It appears exclusively in the Priestly source and always in connection with funerary contexts. Spanish Makpelah, French Macpela, and German Machpela consistently transliterate the name.

the Machpelah (6×) The Machpelah, a burial site near Hebron comprising a field and cave that Abraham purchased from Ephron the Hittite for four hundred shekels of silver (Gen 23:9, 17). It served as the ancestral tomb for three generations: Abraham and Sarah (Gen 23:19; 25:9), Isaac and Rebekah (Gen 49:30-31), and Jacob and Leah (Gen 50:13). The name always carries the article, suggesting it was originally descriptive – the Septuagint's τὸ διπλοῦν ('the double') may indicate a cave with two chambers. All occurrences belong to the Priestly source. Spanish Makpelah/Makpelá, French Macpéla, and German Machpela all preserve the proper noun through transliteration, while the consistent association with burial across all languages (cave, field, burial-place) confirms its exclusively funerary context. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: is-in-the-Machpelah, the-Machpelah | es: en-la-Makpelah, la-Makpelah, la-Makpelá | fr: est-dans-le-Macpéla, le-Macpéla | de: Machpela, der-Machpela, in-Machpela Gen 23:9; Gen 23:17; Gen 23:19; Gen 25:9; Gen 49:30

מָכַר H4376 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (80×)

To sell (goods, property, or persons); in Nifal, to be sold; in Hitpael, to sell oneself into servitude or evil.

A thoroughly commercial verb that covers the full spectrum of ancient Near Eastern transactions — selling grain, land, daughters into marriage, and even persons into slavery. In its most theologically charged uses, God 'sells' Israel into the hand of enemies (Judg 2:14; Ps 44:12), treating military defeat as a divine commercial transaction. The Hitpael reflexive adds a striking moral dimension: kings who 'sold themselves' to do evil (1 Kgs 21:20, 25). French vendre and Spanish vender track the literal commerce, while German verkaufen and Arabic ba'a confirm the breadth from marketplace to metaphor.

1. Sell (Qal active) (47×) Active Qal selling: the straightforward transfer of goods, property, or persons for payment. Esau sells his birthright (Gen 25:33), Joseph's brothers sell him (Gen 37:27–28), and land transactions appear throughout Leviticus 25. Also includes the powerful theological metaphor where God 'sells' Israel to enemies (Judg 2:14; Ps 44:12). French vendre and Spanish vender consistently mark this active commercial sense. SELLING AND COMMERCE en: and-he-sells-him, and-he-sold, and-he-sold-them | es: Y-los-vendió, me-vendisteis, venda | fr: et-il-sells-lui, et-il-vendit, et-il-vendit-eux | de: [מכרתם], [תמכרו], er-sells Gen 25:31; Gen 25:33; Gen 31:15; Gen 37:27; Gen 37:28

2. Be sold (Nifal passive) (21×) The Nifal passive: to be sold. Covers persons sold into slavery (Exod 22:3; Lev 25:39), land that cannot be sold permanently (Lev 25:23), and the rhetorical 'to whom were you sold?' of Isaiah 50:1. German verkauft werden and French être vendu capture this passive voice. The passive appears frequently in Levitical legislation regulating debt slavery and land tenure. SELLING AND COMMERCE en: and-I-will-sell, and-he-shall-be-sold, and-is-sold | es: Y-venderé, fue-vendido, fuimos-vendidos | fr: [ימכר], [נמכרתם], cela-devra-être-vendit | de: Krieg-sold, [הנמכרים], [ומכרתי] Exod 22:3; Lev 25:23; Lev 25:34; Lev 25:39; Lev 25:42

3. Seller (Qal participle substantival) (8×) The Qal participle used as a substantive noun: the seller, a vendor. Appears in legal and prophetic contexts contrasting buyer and seller (Isa 24:2; Ezek 7:12–13), and in Nehemiah's accounts of merchants trading on the Sabbath (Neh 13:16, 20). Spanish el que vende ('the one who sells') and French le vendeur mark this as a recognized social role. SELLING AND COMMERCE
en: and-sellers-of, and-selling, and-the-seller | es: como-el-vendedor, el-que-vende, la-que-vende | fr: [כמוכר], est-selling, et-vendre | de: [המוכר], [המכרת], [והמוכר] Lev 25:16; Neh 13:16; Neh 13:20; Isa 24:2; Ezek 7:12

4. Sell oneself (Hitpael reflexive) (4×) The Hitpael reflexive: to sell oneself. Used literally of selling oneself into servitude (Lev 25:47; Deut 28:68 — 'you shall sell yourselves as slaves and no one will buy'), and figuratively of moral self-surrender: Ahab 'sold himself to do evil' (1 Kgs 21:20, 25). Spanish venderse and French se vendre capture this powerful reflexive force, where the subject is both seller and commodity. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS
en: and-they-sold-themselves, and-you-sell-yourselves, sold-himself | es: se-vendió, te-vendiste, y-os-venderéis | fr: et-ils-vendit-eux-mêmes, et-tu-vendre-vous-mêmes, tu-vendit-toi-même | de: du-sold-dich-selbst, sold-sich-selbst, und-du-verkaufen-euch-selbst Deut 28:68; 1Kgs 21:20; 1Kgs 21:25; 2Kgs 17:17

מֶכֶר H4377 N-msc / 3mp (3×)
merchandise, price, value of goods
A noun denoting merchandise for sale, or the price and value of goods. Nehemiah uses it for merchandise or wares brought by traders on the Sabbath (13:16). Numbers applies it to the price of water requested by Israel from Edom (20:19). Proverbs employs it for the value or worth of the capable woman—'her value is far above rubies' (31:10). The term bridges commercial goods, their price, and by extension the worth or value of anything.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses show commercial and valuation senses: Spanish 'mercancía' (merchandise), 'precio' (price). Nehemiah 13:16 condemns Sabbath-breaking merchants selling their wares in Jerusalem. Numbers 20:19 records Israel's offer to pay for any water consumed while passing through Edom. Proverbs 31:10 asks rhetorically who can find a capable wife, for her worth far exceeds precious jewels—using economic language to express incomparable human value. SELLING AND COMMERCE en: her-worth, its-price, merchandise | es: mercancía, precio-de-ellas, su-precio | fr: [מכר], sa-מכרה-elle, son-prix | de: [מכר], [מכרה], sein-Preis Num 20:19; Neh 13:16; Prov 31:10

מַכָּר H4378 N-msc / 3ms (2×)
acquaintance, friend, associate
A term for someone known personally, an acquaintance or friend. Both occurrences appear in 2 Kings 12 regarding temple repair finances during Jehoash's reign. The priests were to receive funds for temple repair from 'their acquaintances'—people they knew personally. When the system failed, the king intervened, instructing priests not to take money from 'their acquaintances' anymore. The term emphasizes personal relationship networks through which financial transactions occurred, reflecting how ancient economies operated through personal connections rather than impersonal institutions.

(2×) Personal acquaintances or friends, used in 2 Kings 12:5, 7 for people from whom the priests received money for temple repairs. The system assumed personal networks—priests would collect from people they knew. When this proved inadequate for the needed repairs, King Jehoash changed the funding mechanism, telling priests not to take money from 'their acquaintances' but to deposit donations in a collection box. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish conocido/conocidos) emphasizes the personal knowledge aspect of these relationships. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND
en: his-acquaintance, your-acquaintances | es: conocido-de-él, conocidos-de-vosotros | fr: son-acquaintance, ton-acquaintances | de: dein-acquaintances, sein-acquaintance 2Kgs 12:5; 2Kgs 12:7

מְכֶרָה H4379 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)
pit (of salt), possibly a salt mine or salt-producing depression
Zephaniah 2:9 prophesies that Moab will become 'a place of nettles and a salt pit, a perpetual desolation.' The term appears only here, and scholars debate whether it means a salt mine, salt marsh, or simply a pit where salt is found. The parallel with 'nettles' suggests desolate, unusable land. Salt pits represented cursed ground—permanently infertile, economically worthless. The prophecy reverses Moab's fortune: from productive agricultural land to a wasteland of thorns and salt. The uncertainty about precise meaning doesn't diminish the clear sense: total, permanent ruination.

(1×) A pit or depression associated with salt, appearing in Zephaniah 2:9 as part of the prophetic curse against Moab—'a pit of salt and perpetual desolation.' While the exact nature is debated (salt mine? salt marsh? natural salt deposit?), the context clearly indicates cursed, barren land. Salt in biblical judgment represents permanent infertility—nothing grows where salt dominates. The pairing with nettles (weeds of abandonment) reinforces the image of once-productive land reduced to worthless waste. Whether the 'pit of salt' was mined or natural, it symbolized economic and agricultural death. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-a-pit-of- | es: y-mina-de | fr: et-four | de: [ומכרה] Zeph 2:9

מְכֵרָה H4380 N-fpc / 3mp (1×)
swords, weapons (probably), an obscure term for implements of violence Genesis 49:5 contains Jacob's denunciation of Simeon and Levi: 'Weapons of violence are their מְכֵרֹתֵיהֶם.' The term is notoriously difficult; even ancient translators struggled. The context demands some kind of weapon or implement of violence, and most moderns translate 'swords' or 'weapons,' but uncertainty remains. Jacob condemns his sons for the Shechem massacre, and whatever מְכֵרֹתֵיהֶם means, it's something they used for violent, treacherous acts. The obscurity of the word mirrors the dark, cryptic nature of Jacob's deathbed pronouncements—words heavy with judgment.

(1×) An obscure term appearing in Genesis 49:5, probably meaning swords or weapons, though the exact sense is disputed. Jacob's deathbed curse on Simeon and Levi describes 'implements of violence are their מְכֵרֹתֵיהֶם,' condemning their treacherous attack on Shechem. Ancient versions struggled (some read 'dwelling places'), and modern scholars offer various conjectures. The plural with possessive suffix ('their X') indicates these belong to the brothers personally—their characteristic instruments. Whether swords, daggers, or some other weapon, these implements define Simeon and Levi as men of violence, earning them not blessing but curse and dispersion (v. 7). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: swords-their | es: sus-armas | fr: épées-leur | de: sind-ihre-Schwerter Gen 49:5

מִכְרִי H4381 N-proper-ms (1×)

Michri, a Benjamite personal name (etymology uncertain)

First Chronicles 9:8 identifies Michri as a Benjamite ancestor in the genealogy of those who resettled Jerusalem after the exile. The name appears only here, and its meaning is uncertain. The Greek transliterations vary (Macheir, Mochore, Macheiri), showing textual uncertainty in transmission. Michri represents one link in the genealogical chain establishing the legitimacy of post-exilic Benjamite families in Jerusalem. These genealogies served not merely as historical records but as legal documentation of territorial and residential rights in the restored community.

(1×) A personal name of a Benjamite ancestor mentioned in 1 Chronicles 9:8 within the genealogy of post-exilic Jerusalem residents. The name's etymology is unclear, though the form suggests it may derive from a root related to selling or bartering. The textual variants in Greek versions indicate this was a difficult name to transmit accurately. Michri's inclusion in the genealogy establishes the lineage of later Benjamites who lived in Jerusalem, connecting post-exilic residents to pre-exilic tribal heritage and thus legitimizing their claim to ancestral property and community membership. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mikhri | es: Micrí | fr: [מכרי] | de: [מכרי] 1Chr 9:8

מְכֵרָתִי H4382 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Mecherathite, a gentilic indicating geographic or clan origin (exact location uncertain)

First Chronicles 11:36 lists 'Hepher the Mecherathite' among David's mighty men. This gentilic (with definite article) indicates either geographic origin or clan affiliation, but the exact location or group is unknown. No town or clan 'Mecherah' appears elsewhere in Scripture. The Greek transliterations (Mochor, Mechorathi) confirm the consonantal text but don't clarify the meaning. This warrior represents the many faithful supporters of David whose hometowns or clans have been lost to history—known to God and to their contemporaries, but now preserved only as obscure gentilics attached to deeds of valor.

(1×) A gentilic designation (with definite article) appearing in 1 Chronicles 11:36 to identify Hepher, one of David's elite warriors. 'The Mecherathite' presumably indicates either his hometown (Mecherah?) or his clan, but no such place or group is otherwise attested. The form follows standard Hebrew gentilic patterns (place/clan name + -ī suffix + article). Despite our ignorance of his origins, Hepher's deed earned him a place among the Thirty—David's elite fighting force. His gentilic preserves a geographic or social memory now lost, a reminder that our biblical text contains gaps that only ancient readers could have filled. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Mecherathite | es: el-mequeratita | fr: [המכרתי] | de: [המכרתי] 1Chr 11:36

מִכְשׁוֹל H4383 Art / N-mp (14×)

Stumbling block, obstacle; a cause of falling, whether physical obstruction or moral and spiritual ruin.

Derived from kashal ('to stumble'), mikshol names whatever causes a person or nation to fall. Leviticus 19:14 prohibits placing a stumbling block before the blind – a command that became foundational in Jewish ethics. Isaiah 8:14 transforms the image: God himself becomes a 'stone of stumbling and rock of offense' to both houses of Israel. Ezekiel wields it repeatedly for idols as spiritual obstacles causing moral collapse (Ezek 7:19; 14:3-4; 18:30; 44:12). Psalm 119:165 offers the counterpoint: those who love Torah find no occasion of stumbling. French 'pierre d'achoppement' preserves the concrete image of a stone one trips over.

stumbling block, obstacle (14×) Something that causes stumbling or falling, literal and figurative. The ethical foundation appears in Leviticus 19:14, forbidding obstacles before the blind. Isaiah 8:14 applies it theologically: the LORD becomes a rock of stumbling. Ezekiel concentrates the term on idolatry as spiritual stumbling block (Ezek 7:19; 14:3-4; 18:30). Psalm 119:165 offers the positive corollary for lovers of Torah. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: and-as-offense-of, and-stumbling-block-of, for-stumbling-block | es: escándalo, los-tropiezos, para-tropiezo | fr: [מכשול], [מכשלים], de-pierre-d'achoppement | de: [המכשלים], [ומכשול], [למכשול] Lev 19:14; 1Sam 25:31; Ps 119:165; Isa 8:14; Isa 57:14

מַכְשֵׁלָה H4384 Conj-w (2×)

stumbling block, ruin, obstacle

Something that causes stumbling or downfall, used both literally of ruins and metaphorically of obstacles to faithfulness. Isaiah 3:6 uses it for the 'ruin' (collapsed state) that might tempt someone to assume leadership in desperate times. Zephaniah 1:3 employs it for 'stumbling blocks'—probably idols that cause Israel to fall spiritually. The term bridges physical and moral/spiritual domains: actual ruins and metaphorical obstacles both cause falling. Some scholars question whether the Zephaniah reference is original or a later gloss, given its somewhat awkward fit.

(2×) An obstacle that causes stumbling or downfall. Isaiah 3:6 uses it of the ruinous state of society, while Zephaniah 1:3 likely refers to idols as stumbling blocks causing spiritual falling (though textual questions remain). The term can denote both physical ruins (collapsed structures) and moral/spiritual obstacles. Cross-linguistic evidence shows translators handling the ambiguity differently—some emphasize ruins (Spanish ruina), others stumbling blocks (French obstacle, German Hindernis), reflecting the term's semantic range. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: and-the-stumbling-blocks, and-this | es: y-esta-ruina, y-las-ruinas | fr: [והמכשלה], et-obstacle | de: [והמכשלה], und-Hindernis Isa 3:6; Zeph 1:3

מִכְתָּב H4385 Conj-w (9×)

Writing, inscription; the act or product of writing, from divine engraving on stone tablets to prophetic letters and royal edicts.

Denotes the act of writing or its tangible product – whether etched by the very finger of God or penned by human hand. In Exodus 32:16 the term reaches its most exalted usage: 'the writing was the writing of God, engraved on the tablets,' where Spanish renders it 'Escrito' and English 'the-writing.' The word also covers official documents: a prophetic letter from Elijah (2 Chr 21:12) and royal decrees (2 Chr 36:22). Isaiah 38:9 uses it in a heading for Hezekiah's psalm of thanksgiving after recovery from illness.

1. inscription, divine writing (7×) Engraved or inscribed writing, especially the divine writing on the stone tablets of the covenant. In Exodus 32:16 both the handwriting and the engraving are attributed directly to God – 'mikhtav elohim' – marking this as sacred script distinct from ordinary human composition. Also covers the priestly inscription on the gold plate (Exod 39:30) and the Decalogue rewrite (Deut 10:4). English glosses it 'the-writing'; Spanish 'Escrito' captures the formal, weighty character of the term. SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: A-writing, and-the-writing, in-writing | es: Escrito, conforme-a-la-escritura, en-escrito | fr: [במכתב], [מכתב], comme-le-writing | de: [במכתב], [מכתב], und-der-writing Exod 32:16; Exod 39:30; Deut 10:4; 2Chr 36:22

2. written document, letter (2×) A written document produced by human agency for communication or decree. In 2 Chronicles 21:12, a 'mikhtav' from Elijah the prophet arrives as a warning letter, while 2 Chronicles 35:4 pairs it with ketav to describe David's and Solomon's written instructions for temple service. Spanish uses 'escrito' here as well, but French distinguishes the documentary sense with the bracketed form, reflecting the shift from sacred inscription to administrative correspondence. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: and-by-document-of, writing | es: escrito, y-según-escrito-de | fr: [ובמכתב], [מכתב] | de: [ובמכתב], [מכתב] 2Chr 21:12; 2Chr 35:4

מְכִתָּה H4386 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

its crushing/shattering, the pulverized fragments (result of being crushed)

Isaiah 30:14 describes judgment as devastating as pottery smashed so thoroughly that 'in its crushing, not a shard is found large enough to take fire from a hearth or scoop water from a cistern.' The term denotes the crushed fragments resulting from complete destruction—pottery pulverized beyond usefulness. This is not mere breaking but utter obliteration. The prophet's point is totality: judgment will be so thorough that nothing salvageable remains. Even the smallest functional piece—a potsherd for basic tasks—will be absent from the rubble.

(1×) The crushed or pulverized state of something, specifically the collective fragments resulting from total crushing—used in Isaiah 30:14 with possessive suffix 'its crushing' or 'its shattered state.' The context describes pottery broken so completely that not even a potsherd remains useful for basic tasks. The term derives from כתת (to crush, pulverize) and represents the outcome of that action: total fragmentation. Isaiah's image conveys irrevocable judgment—destruction so complete that recovery is impossible. No piece large enough for even the humblest function survives. This is the crushing from which there is no reconstruction. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: in-its-shattering | es: en-sus-pedazos | fr: [במכתתו] | de: [במכתתו] Isa 30:14

מְכִתָּם H4387 N-ms (6×)

Miktam: a technical term of uncertain meaning in psalm superscriptions, found exclusively in titles attributed to David.

A musical or liturgical term appearing in the superscriptions of six psalms (Ps 16, 56-60), always linked to David. Its precise meaning has eluded scholars for centuries. The Septuagint rendered it as stelographia ('inscription on a pillar'), suggesting an engraved or permanent writing. Some connect it to the Hebrew root k-t-m ('gold') and propose 'golden psalm,' while others link it to an Akkadian cognate meaning 'to cover' and interpret it as a prayer for atonement. Whatever its original sense, these six psalms share themes of urgent trust in God amid danger.

(6×) A technical term of unknown meaning used exclusively in psalm superscriptions (Ps 16:1; 56:1; 57:1; 58:1; 59:1; 60:1), always paired with 'of David.' The Septuagint's stelographia ('pillar inscription') hints at something engraved or permanent. English and Spanish glosses simply transliterate as 'miktam/Mictam,' reflecting the lack of consensus. These six psalms share contexts of personal crisis and divine refuge, which may hint at the term's liturgical function. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: a-miktam | es: Mictam, miktam | fr: de-mictam | de: ein-miktam Ps 16:1; Ps 56:1; Ps 57:1; Ps 58:1; Ps 59:1

מַכְתֵּשׁ H4388 Art / N-ms (2×)

mortar, hollow place (bowl-shaped depression)

A bowl-shaped depression or hollow, named for its resemblance to a mortar used for grinding. The term appears in two quite different contexts. Judges 15:19 describes a hollow place in Lehi where God miraculously provided water for Samson—a geological feature. Proverbs 27:22 uses the literal grinding mortar in a proverb about the incorrigibility of fools. Zephaniah 1:11 applies the name to a district of Jerusalem, probably a valley or depression within the city where merchants gathered. The semantic link across all uses is the bowl-shaped, concave form.

(2×) A mortar (grinding bowl) or hollow place resembling one. Judges 15:19 describes a geological hollow at Lehi from which water flowed for Samson. Proverbs 27:22 refers to an actual grinding mortar used with pestle. Zephaniah 1:11 probably uses it as a place name for a market district in Jerusalem shaped like a depression or hollow. Cross-linguistic evidence shows the dual usage—hollow place/basin versus grinding mortar—with translators sometimes preserving the Hebrew when uncertain of context. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: in-a-mortar, the-hollow-place | es: en-el-mortero, la-cavidad | fr: le-hollow-lieu, במכתש | de: [במכתש], der-hollow-Ort Judg 15:19; Prov 27:22

הַמַּכְתֵּשׁ H4389 Art / N-ms (1×)

the Mortar, a district/quarter in Jerusalem (possibly a depression or valley area)

Zephaniah 1:11 commands, 'Wail, O inhabitants of the Mortar!' This appears to be a district name in Jerusalem, possibly a commercial quarter in a low-lying area (hence 'mortar' or hollow). The term literally means a mortar for pounding or grinding, but here designates a neighborhood, perhaps in the Tyropoeon Valley or another depression where merchants gathered. Zephaniah's prophecy targets this area as a center of commerce and wealth that will face divine judgment. The name's concreteness—a physical hollow—becomes metaphorically apt for those who will be ground down in judgment.

(1×) A district or quarter within Jerusalem, mentioned in Zephaniah 1:11 as a place whose inhabitants will wail during the coming judgment. The name literally means 'the mortar' (a bowl for pounding grain or spices) and likely refers to a low-lying area, perhaps a commercial district in a valley or depression. Scholars suggest the Tyropoeon Valley or another hollow where traders congregated. The definite article indicates a specific, known location. The name proves grimly prophetic: just as grain is crushed in a mortar, so the merchants of this quarter will be crushed in judgment—their silver weighed out as plunder. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: the-Mortar | es: el-Mortero | fr: plaine | de: [המכתש] Zeph 1:11

מָלֵא H4390 V-Piel-Perf-1cs / 3ms (250×)

be full, fill; fulfill, complete; satisfy; follow fully; set/inlay

A root expressing fullness in physical, temporal, and metaphorical domains. In its Qal stative form it means 'be full'—the earth is full of violence, the house full of glory. The Piel actively fills something: God commands humanity to fill the earth, Elisha's servant fills jars with water. But the root extends to abstract completion: fulfilling promises, completing periods of time (Rachel's bridal week, seventy years of captivity). There's a specialized idiom for following God fully (literally 'filling after'), used of Caleb's wholehearted devotion. A technical sense appears in jewelry contexts: setting or inlaying precious stones. Even satisfaction of appetite uses this root—filling hunger. The 250 occurrences trace how Hebrew speakers conceived fullness and completion as unified concepts.

1. fill (causative) (90×) The causative Piel makes something full—actively filling a container, space, or entity with contents. Appearing 90 times, this matches Arabic ملأ, Korean 채우다, and Swahili -jaza. God commands humanity to 'fill the earth' (Gen 1:28, 9:1), Abraham's servant finds Rebekah who 'filled her jar' at the well (Gen 21:19, 24:16). Moses fills basins with blood (Exod 24:6), priests' hands are 'filled' with offerings at ordination. The sense covers both physical filling (liquids, spaces) and metaphorical filling (with glory, with the Spirit). FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: He-fills, and-fill, and-filled | es: ha-llenado, llenaron, llenó | fr: et-il-remplit, et-remplir, et-remplit | de: er-fuellte, fuellte, und-er-fuellte Gen 1:22; Gen 1:28; Gen 9:1; Gen 21:19; Gen 24:16

2. be full (stative) (49×) The Qal stative describes being in a state of fullness—filled with something. With 49 occurrences, this corresponds to Arabic امتلأ/ملئ, Korean 가득하다/차다, Swahili -jaa. The earth is 'full of violence' in Noah's day (Gen 6:13), the temple becomes 'full of the glory of the LORD' (2 Chr 5:13), the house is 'full of people' (Judg 16:27). Unlike the causative sense which requires an agent filling something, this stative simply describes the resulting state of fullness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-full, are-full-of, blood | es: está-llena, están-llenas, están-llenas-de | fr: de-ne...pas, de-remplir, pleine | de: fuellen, füllte, sie-fuellten Gen 6:13; Josh 3:15; Judg 16:27; 2Kgs 6:17; 2Chr 5:13

3. fulfill, complete (purpose/time) (43×) Temporal and promissory completion—fulfilling oaths, completing periods, bringing purposes to term. This appears 43 times, matching Arabic ملأ (complete/fulfill), Korean 성취하다/이루다, Swahili -timiza. When 'her days to give birth were completed' (Gen 25:24), when Jacob asks Laban to 'fulfill her week' of bridal celebration (Gen 29:27-28), when Jeremiah prophesies 'when seventy years are completed' for

Babylon (Jer 25:12). The sense extends physical filling to temporal and covenantal fulfillment—bringing time or promise to fullness. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: are-completed, are-fulfilled, being-complete | es: cumpla, cumplirse, cumpliste | fr: accompli, completing, il-remplit | de: completing, du-fulfilled, er-fuellte Gen 25:24; Gen 29:21; Gen 29:27; Gen 29:28; Gen 50:3

4. become filled (passive/middle) (42×) The Niphal passive or middle: being filled or becoming full as an event one undergoes. Forty-two occurrences correspond to Arabic امتلأ/يمتلئ (Form VIII reflexive), Korean 차다/채워지다, Swahili -jazwa/-jaa. The earth 'was filled with violence' (Gen 6:11), Egypt's houses 'were filled' with swarms (Exod 8:21), the Israelites 'filled the land' by multiplication (Exod 1:7). This grammatical voice focuses on the recipient or location receiving fullness rather than the agent causing it. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: and-is-filled, and-they-will-be-filled, and-was-filled | es: Y-se-llenarán, Y-se-llenó, se-llenará | fr: et—être-remplit, et-fut-remplit, et-remplir | de: fuellen, füllte, und-er-fuellt Gen 6:11; Exod 1:7; Exod 8:21; Exod 10:6; Exod 15:9

5. fill (Qal transitive) (13×) Qal used transitively—active filling where Qal carries transitive force rather than stative meaning. Thirteen attestations show this grammatical pattern with Arabic ملأ, Korean 채우다, Swahili -jaza. Elijah commands 'Fill four jars with water' (1 Kgs 18:34), Elisha instructs the widow 'fill all these vessels' (2 Kgs 4:6), the psalmist prophesies God will 'fill the world with corpses' (Ps 110:6). This overlaps semantically with the Piel but uses Qal morphology, possibly representing an archaic or dialectal pattern. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: and-shall-fill, and-they-fill, and-they-filled | es: Llenad, cuando-se-llenaron, llenaos | fr: de-ne...pas, et-remplir, pleine | de: fuelle, fuellen, fuellte Exod 32:29; 1Kgs 18:34; 2Kgs 4:6; Ps 110:6; Isa 14:21

6. fully follow (devotion) (5×) The idiom 'mille acharei' (fill after) means to follow fully or be wholly devoted—appearing five times. This matches Arabic ملأ (follow completely), Korean 충실히 따르다, Swahili -fuata kikamilifu. God commends Caleb because 'he has followed me fully' (Num 14:24, 32:11-12; Deut 1:36), and Solomon 'did not follow fully' as David did (1 Kgs 11:6). The metaphor of 'filling after' someone beautifully captures wholehearted, unreserved allegiance—filling the space behind them as a devoted follower. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: and-he-followed-fully, he-fully-followed, they-followed-fully | es: cumplieron, cumplió, y-siguió-plenamente | fr: et-il-followed-fully, il-fully-followed, ils-followed-fully | de: er-fully-folgte, er-fully-followed, sie-folgte-fully Num 14:24; Num 32:11; Num 32:12; Deut 1:36; 1Kgs 11:6

7. set, inlay (gems) (3×) A specialized technical sense in jewelry contexts: to set or inlay precious stones into settings or mountings. Three occurrences match Arabic ترصيع/مرصع (set/inlay gems), Korean 박히다. Bezalel is skilled 'in setting stones' for the priestly garments (Exod 31:5, 35:33), and the beloved's hands are described poetically as 'set with jewels' (Song 5:14). This technical usage shows semantic extension from filling space to filling settings with stones—the jeweler 'fills' the mounting. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: for-setting, set-with | es: engastados, para-engastar | fr: enchâssés, pour-setting | de: fuellte, fuer-Einfassung Exod 31:5; Exod 35:33; Song 5:14

8. satisfy (appetite/desire) (2×) To satisfy appetite, hunger, or desire—filling as satiation. Two attestations correspond to Arabic شبع, Korean 배를 채우다, Swahili -tosheleza. God challenges Job 'Can you satisfy the appetite of the young lions?' (Job 38:39, literally 'fill the soul of the lions'), and Proverbs observes men don't despise a thief who steals 'to satisfy his appetite when hungry' (Prov 6:30). The sense extends physical filling to the satisfaction of need or craving. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: can-you-satisfy, to-satisfy | es: para-saciar, puedes-satisfacer | fr: remplir, à-remplir | de: fuellte, zu-fuellte Job 38:39; Prov 6:30

9. (1×) Uncertain single attestation in Job 20:22: 'In the fullness of his sufficiency he will be in straits.' The phrase 'fullness of his sufficiency' (bemelo sifko) is difficult—whether this is a nominal form ('fullness') or a verbal sense is debated. Translation traditions vary widely. The hapax prevents confident classification, though it seems to describe a state of abundance or fullness rather than an action of filling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-fullness-of | es: En-la-plenitud-de | fr: dans-remplir | de: fuellte Job 20:22

10. (1×) Another single attestation in Jer 4:5: 'Proclaim, make it heard, fill/blow the trumpet' (literally 'fill voice' or 'at full voice'). Some translations see this as an idiom for proclaiming loudly or blowing the shofar forcefully. Korean renders this as 'a plena voz' (at full voice), suggesting loudness. The unique construction makes it unclear whether this is a distinct sense or an extension of the filling metaphor to vocal volume. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: fully | es: a-plena-voz | fr: remplir | de: fuellen Jer 4:5

11. (1×) Final hapax in Job 16:10: 'They have gaped at me with their mouth...they gather themselves together against me.' The phrase translated 'gather themselves' uses a Hithpael form that could mean 'they fill themselves' or 'they mass together.' Swahili renders this as 'filling' (reflexive), suggesting the mob 'fills itself' or masses together. The unique form and context make confident classification difficult—it may extend the filling metaphor to crowd aggregation. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: they-gather-themselves | es: se-llenan | fr: remplir | de: fuellte Job 16:10

מְלָא H4391 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fs (2×)

to fill, be filled (Aramaic)

The Aramaic verb 'to fill' or 'be filled,' appearing in Daniel's narratives. One occurrence describes a great image filling the whole earth after being struck (Daniel 2:35)—a visionary, cosmic filling. The other depicts Nebuchadnezzar being filled with rage when the three friends refuse to worship the golden image (Daniel 3:19)—an emotional, internal filling. The same verb captures both physical expansion and psychological saturation. The Aramaic linguistic context signals the exilic setting of Daniel's court tales.

(2×) Aramaic verb meaning 'to fill' or 'be filled.' Daniel 2:35 uses it of the stone that becomes a mountain filling the whole earth—eschatological, cosmic filling. Daniel 3:19 describes Nebuchadnezzar being filled with rage—emotional, psychological filling. The verb operates in both physical/spatial and emotional/internal domains. Cross-linguistic evidence shows recognition of the 'filling' concept, though some German glosses struggle with the lexical identification, suggesting textual or interpretive challenges. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: and-filled, was-filled | es: se-llenó-de, y-llenó | fr: et-oeuvre, oeuvre | de: [הִתְמַלִּי], [וּמְלַת] Dan 2:35; Dan 3:19

מָלֵא H4392 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (58×)

Full, filled, complete — whether of physical contents, wholeness of measure, pregnancy, or vocal intensity.

An adjective describing the state of being filled to capacity or possessing something in full measure. The tabernacle offerings of Numbers 7 repeat it dozens of times — bowls 'full of' (מְלֵאִים) fine flour and spoons 'full of' incense — a liturgical drumbeat of abundance. Beyond physical fullness, the word stretches to mean 'complete' or 'whole,' as when Abraham insists on paying the 'full price' (כֶּסֶף מָלֵא) for Sarah's burial cave (Gen 23:9). Two rare specialized uses round out the picture: 'full with child' (pregnant) in Eccl 11:5 and the vivid idiom 'at full voice' in Jer 12:6.

1. full of, filled with (50×) The dominant sense (50x): containing something to capacity or abounding in a specified substance or quality. Nearly always construed with a genitive complement telling what fills the container — bowls full of flour, spoons full of incense (Num 7:13–86), houses full of goods (Deut 6:11), a cage full of birds (Jer 5:27). The multilingual translations uniformly reach for 'full of' constructions: Spanish 'llena de,' French 'plein de,' German 'voll von.' The construction is so formulaic in Numbers 7 that it appears in 24 consecutive verses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: full-of | es: llena-de, llenos | fr: plein-de | de: voll-von Gen 41:7; Gen 41:22; Num 7:13; Num 7:14; Num 7:19

2. complete, whole, full measure (6×) An absolute use meaning 'complete, whole, full measure' without a genitive complement (6x).

When Abraham offers 'full silver' (כֶּסֶף מָלֵא, Gen 23:9) or David insists on the 'full price' (1 Chr 21:22, 24), the sense is entirety and completeness rather than physical filling. Ruth 1:21 captures this poignantly: Naomi left 'full' (מְלֵאָה) but returned empty. Spanish shifts to 'completa/completamente' and English to 'fully/fullness,' reflecting the move from container-metaphor to abstract totality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: full, fullness, fully | es: completa, completamente, llena | fr: [מלא], de-ne...pas, plein | de: [מלאה], fuellte, fullness Gen 23:9; Ruth 1:21; 1Chr 21:22; 1Chr 21:24; Ps 73:10

3. pregnant, with child (1×) A rare biological specialization (1x): 'pregnant, with child,' where fullness refers to carrying an unborn child. In Eccl 11:5 — 'you do not know the way of the spirit in the bones of the pregnant woman (הַמְּלֵאָה).' English renders 'the pregnant woman,' Spanish 'la encinta,' confirming a recognized idiomatic extension from physical fullness to gestation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-pregnant-woman | es: la-encinta | fr: le-plein | de: [המלאה] Eccl 11:5

4. at full voice, loudly (1×) An adverbial idiom (1x): 'at full voice, loudly,' from the phrase מָלֵא קוֹל in Jer 12:6 where even the prophet's own family 'called after him at full voice.' Spanish 'a plena voz' mirrors the Hebrew construction exactly. This is a frozen expression rather than a productive adjectival use. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: loudly | es: a-plena-voz | fr: plein | de: fuellte Jer 12:6

מְלֹא H4393 Prep-m / N-msc / 3fs (38×)

Fullness, the full amount or contents of something; by extension, a full band or company of people.

A noun of measure and completeness, referring to the entire contents that fill a vessel, hand, or space. When a patriarch grasps a 'handful of soot' (Exod 9:8) or when the earth and 'its fullness' belong to God (Ps 24:1), this word captures the idea of totality and completeness. The construct form ('fullness of X') is its most characteristic usage, appearing with containers (hands, garments, an omer) and with abstractions (nations, the sea). In one evocative passage, Isaiah uses it for a 'full band' of shepherds rallying against a lion (Isa 31:4).

1. fullness, full measure (37×) The full measure or entire contents of a container, space, or grouping. Construct chains such as 'fullness of your fists' (Exod 9:8), 'fullness of the omer' (Exod 16:33), and 'fullness of the earth' (Ps 24:1) show the word marking completeness of quantity. Spanish 'lleno/llena-de' and French 'plénitude' consistently reflect this quantitative totality. Genesis 48:19 extends the idea to people: Jacob prophesies Ephraim will become a 'fullness of nations,' where multilingual renderings split between 'multitud' (spa) and abstract 'Fülle' (deu). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fullness-its, and-its-fullness, fullness-of | es: llena-de, lleno, lleno-de | fr: et-de-plénitude, et-pleine, et-plénitude | de: [ומלאה], [ומלואה], fullness-von Gen 48:19; Exod 9:8; Exod 16:32; Exod 16:33; Lev 2:2

2. band, full contingent (1×) A full contingent or band of people assembled as a complete group. In Isaiah 31:4, a 'fullness of shepherds' is called out against a lion — not the abstract concept of fullness but a concrete company of men. English renders 'a band,' Spanish 'plenitud-de,' and German 'fülle,' each interpreting the collective-human nuance differently. This sole occurrence represents a metonymic shift from quantity to the people themselves who constitute that quantity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-band | es: plenitud-de | fr: plein | de: fuellte Isa 31:4

מִלּוּא H4394 N-mpc / 2mp (15×)

Ordination or consecration of priests ('filling of hands'); also the setting or mount for gemstones.

Built on the Piel of מָלֵא ('to fill'), this noun literally means 'filling' and branches into two distinct ritual-craft senses. In priestly contexts it denotes the consecration ceremony — the 'filling of the hand' — with its dedicated ram (אֵיל הַמִּלֻּאִים, Exodus 29:22) and basket of offerings (Leviticus 8:31). Spanish 'consagración' and French 'ordination' both capture this solemn installation. In gemcraft, the same word describes the gold settings or bezels into which precious stones are mounted on the priestly ephod and breastpiece (Exodus 25:7; 1 Chronicles 29:2), rendered as 'engaste' in Spanish and 'montures' in French.

1. ordination, priestly consecration (11×) The act and offerings of priestly ordination — literally 'filling the hand,' an ancient idiom for investing someone with authority. Exodus 29:22–34 and Leviticus 7:37–8:33 detail the consecration ram (אֵיל הַמִּלֻּאִים), the basket of ordination bread, and the seven-day installation rite. Spanish 'consagraciones' and French 'ordination' both point to the sacral investiture. Leviticus 8:33 addresses the priests directly: 'the days of your ordination' (יְמֵי מִלֻּאֵיכֶם), underscoring the completeness of the ritual. PRIESTHOOD OFFICE

en: an-ordination, and-for-the-ordination, ordination | es: consagraciones, consagración-vuestra, las-consagraciones | fr: et-pour-le-ordination, le-ordination, ordination | de: dein-ordination, der-ordination, ein-ordination Exod 29:22; Exod 29:26; Exod 29:27; Exod 29:31; Exod 29:34

2. setting (of gemstones) (4×) A setting, mount, or bezel for precious stones — the socket or filigree frame into which a gem is 'filled' or set. Exodus 25:7 lists 'stones for setting' (אַבְנֵי מִלֻּאִים) among the materials for the sanctuary, and 1 Chronicles 29:2 includes them among David's provisions for the temple. Spanish 'engaste' and French 'montures' precisely capture this jeweler's term. The semantic link to sense 1 is the shared root meaning of 'filling' — a hand filled with priestly authority, a socket filled with a gemstone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-settings, setting, settings | es: engaste, y-de-engaste | fr: [ומלואים], le-montures, montures | de: Einfassung, Einfassungen, [ומלואים] Exod 25:7; Exod 35:9; Exod 35:27; 1Chr 29:2

מְלֵאָה H4395 N-fsc / 2ms (8×)

Fullness, full produce; the complete yield of field, vineyard, or winepress, or the state of being filled.

This feminine noun expresses fullness or full produce – the complete harvest yield from field, vineyard, or winepress. In Exodus 22:29, 'your fullness' refers to the firstfruits of agricultural produce owed to God. Numbers 18:27 compares the Levites' tithe to 'the fullness of the winepress,' while Deuteronomy 22:9 warns that mixed sowing will forfeit 'the fullness of the seed.' The word can also describe a city full of something, as in Isaiah 1:21, where Jerusalem was once 'full of justice.' Spanish plenitud and French plénitude both echo this rich sense of completeness.

fullness, full produce (8×) Fullness, full produce, or the state of being fully filled. Used concretely for agricultural yield – the full harvest of field or vineyard (Exod 22:29, 'your fullness' as firstfruits; Deut 22:9, 'the fullness of the seed'; Num 18:27, 'like the fullness of the winepress'). Also used more broadly for a city filled with a quality (Isa 1:21, 'full of justice'; 2 Sam 23:11, a field). Spanish plenitud and llena ('full') reflect the dual concrete-abstract range. The word derives from the root male' ('to be full') and always implies completeness or abundance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-the-fullness, filled-with, full | es: Llena-estaba, Tu-plenitud, la-llena | fr: [מלאת], et-comme-le-fullness, le-fullness | de: [המלאה], [מלאה], [מלאת] Exod 22:29; Num 18:27; Deut 22:9; 2Sam 23:11; Isa 1:21

מִלְאָה H4396 N-fsc (3×)

setting, mounting for precious stones in priestly garments

A noun denoting the setting or mounting of precious stones, specifically in the high priest's breastpiece. All three occurrences appear in Exodus's detailed instructions for the priestly garments. The breastpiece was to have four rows of precious stones 'in settings of gold' or 'set in their mountings' (28:17, 20; 39:13). The term emphasizes the careful craftsmanship required to secure each valuable stone in its gold setting, creating the sacred breastpiece representing Israel's twelve tribes.

(3×) Translations identify stone settings or mountings: Spanish 'engaste, monturas' (setting, mounting), English 'setting, mountings, fillings.' Exodus 28:17, 20 provide instructions for the high priest's breastpiece with twelve stones set in gold filigree, each representing a tribe of Israel. Exodus 39:13 describes the actual execution of these instructions. The careful setting of each precious stone in gold reflects both the value of God's people and the beauty required for sacred service. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: filling-of, in-their-fillings, in-their-mountings | es: en-sus-engastes, en-sus-monturas, engaste-de | fr: dans-leur-fillings, dans-leur-mountings, filling-de | de: filling-von, in-ihr-fillings, in-ihr-mountings Exod 28:17; Exod 28:20; Exod 39:13

מַלְאָךְ H4397 Art / N-ms (213×)

Messenger or angel; a human envoy sent on a mission, or a divine heavenly being sent by God.

Mal'akh means simply 'one who is sent' — whether a human courier (Gen 32:3) or a heavenly being (Gen 16:7). The word's genius is its ambiguity: the 'angel of the LORD' who appears to Hagar, Moses, and Gideon may be indistinguishable from God himself. Arabic splits the senses cleanly between rasul (human messenger) and malak (angel), while Korean uses 사자 for envoys and 천사 for angels. English 'angel' comes from the Greek angelos, itself a translation of this very Hebrew word — a reminder that the concept of 'angel' begins not with wings and halos but with the act of being sent.

1. angel, divine messenger (111×) A supernatural heavenly being dispatched by God, most often in the phrase mal'akh YHWH ('angel of the LORD'). This figure appears to Hagar (Gen 16:7-11), stands in Balaam's path (Num 22:22-35), and commissions Gideon (Judg 6:11-22). Arabic consistently renders this sense as malak/mala'ika, Korean as 천사, and Swahili as malaika — all dedicated 'angel' terms. The 111 occurrences include both individual theophanies and collective references to God's heavenly host (Ps 103:20; 148:2). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: angel-of, the-angel-of | es: mensajero-de, ángel-de, ángel-de- | fr: ange-de, angel-de, le-ange-de | de: Engel-von, angel-von, der-Engel Gen 16:7; Gen 16:9; Gen 16:10; Gen 16:11; Gen 21:17

2. messenger, envoy, ambassador (102×) A human agent sent to deliver a message or carry out a diplomatic mission — an envoy, emissary, or ambassador. Jacob sends mal'akhim ahead to Esau (Gen 32:3), Moses dispatches messengers to the king of Edom (Num 20:14), and Rahab hides the Israelite spies whom Jericho's king calls mal'akhim (Josh 6:17). Arabic uses rasul/rusul for this sense, Korean 사자/사신, and Swahili mjumbe — all distinct from their 'angel' vocabulary. The 102 occurrences span military scouts, royal couriers, and prophetic envoys (Mal 3:1). ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: messengers | es: mensajeros | fr: messagers, messengers | de: Boten, messengers Gen 32:3; Gen 32:6; Num 20:14; Num 21:21; Num 22:5

מַלְאָךְ H4398 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

angel, messenger (Aramaic)

The Aramaic word for angel or divine messenger, appearing in Daniel's stories of miraculous deliverance. Both occurrences refer to the angel God sent to shut the lions' mouths (Daniel 6:22) and to deliver the three friends from the fiery furnace (Daniel 3:28). In both narratives, Nebuchadnezzar or Darius acknowledges that 'his angel' (God's angel) performed the rescue. The term connects divine intervention with heavenly agency—God acts through angelic representatives. The Aramaic context situates these stories in the exilic, diaspora setting.

(2×) Aramaic term for angel or divine messenger. Daniel 3:28 describes the angel sent to rescue Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego from the furnace. Daniel 6:22 refers to the angel who shut the lions' mouths to protect Daniel. Both instances show pagan kings recognizing divine angelic intervention on behalf of faithful servants. The Aramaic vocabulary marks these as court tales set in Babylonian exile. Cross-linguistic evidence shows clear identification as 'angel' (Spanish ángel, French ange), though German oddly gives 'Arbeit' (work), likely an error. ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: His-angel | es: su-ángel | fr: ange | de: Arbeit Dan 3:28; Dan 6:22

מְלָאכָה H4399 Prep-b / N-fsc (167×)

Work, occupation, labor; craftsmanship; property, goods; any productive activity from temple construction to daily business.

Melakhah is the Hebrew Bible's broadest term for productive activity and its results. It covers everything from the six days of God's creative work (Gen 2:2) to the skilled artisanship of Bezalel in constructing the tabernacle (Exod 31:3-5), from the Sabbath prohibition against 'any work' (Exod 20:10) to Nehemiah's rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls. The word's range is beautifully exposed by multilingual translation patterns: Arabic 'amal and German Werk both center on effortful production, while French splits between travail (labor), ouvrage (product/opus), and oeuvre (artistic work). Korean distinguishes 일 (general work) from 공예 (craftsmanship), and Swahili kazi covers the labor while ufundi marks skilled craft. Two marginal senses — property and commercial enterprise — show the word extending metonymically from the activity to what the activity produces or involves.

1. work, labor, task (158×) General work, labor, or task — the overwhelming majority at 158 occurrences. This encompasses construction projects (the tabernacle in Exodus 35-40, the temple in 1 Kings 5-7, Jerusalem's walls in Nehemiah), agricultural labor, royal service, and especially the Sabbath prohibition against melakhah (Exod 20:10, 31:14-15, Lev 23:7-8). Arabic 'amal and Spanish obra both select broad productive-activity vocabulary. The Sabbath usage is theologically foundational: the same word describes God's six-day creative work (Gen 2:2-3) and the work humans must cease on the seventh day, creating a profound link between divine and human labor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-work | es: la-obra | fr: le-travail, le-œuvre, ouvrage | de: das-Werk, der-Werk, die-Arbeit Exod 12:16; Exod 20:10; Exod 31:14; Exod 31:15

2. craftsmanship, workmanship (5×) Skilled craftsmanship or workmanship — 5 occurrences, clustered around the tabernacle construction narratives. God fills Bezalel with wisdom for 'all craftsmanship' (Exod 31:3, 5; 35:31), and Ezekiel 28:13 describes the 'workmanship' of the cherub's settings. The distinction from generic work is cross-linguistically marked: Korean uses 기술/솜씨 ('skill/artistry') rather than plain 일 ('work'), and French shifts to artisanat. Leviticus 13:48 extends this to the woven 'workmanship' of fabric — skilled craft producing an artifact rather than mere exertion of effort. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: article-of, craftsmanship, workmanship-of- | es: obra, obra-de | fr: article-de, craftsmanship, oeuvre | de: Arbeit-von, article-von, craftsmanship Exod 31:3; Exod 31:5; Exod 35:31; Lev 13:48; Ezek 28:13

3. (2×) Property or goods entrusted to another's care — 2 occurrences at Exod 22:8 and 22:11, both in the context of property dispute laws. When someone claims that their neighbor has misappropriated 'property' (melakhah), the case comes before God/the judges. English 'property,' Spanish propiedad, and German Eigentum all shift from activity to the thing produced or owned. This is a metonymic extension: the work that went into acquiring goods transfers to designate the goods themselves. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: upon-property-of | es: en-la-propiedad-de | fr: sur-propriété-de | de: auf-property-von Exod 22:8; Exod 22:11

4. (1×) Livestock or movable possessions — a single occurrence at Gen 33:14, where Jacob tells Esau he will travel slowly 'according to the pace of the livestock (melakhah) before me.' Strikingly, English renders this as 'livestock,' Spanish as obra, and French as bétail — a sharp divergence revealing a specialized pastoral sense. The animals are Jacob's 'property-in-motion,' the productive assets of a herdsman. This extends the metonymic property sense into specifically pastoral wealth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-livestock | es: la-obra | fr: le-bétail | de: der-Arbeit Gen 33:14

5. (1×) Business or commercial enterprise — a single occurrence at Ps 107:23, describing those who 'do business on great waters.' Here melakhah means trading activity or commercial occupation rather than physical labor. English 'business,' Spanish negocio, and the broader context of seafaring merchants all confirm a specialized commercial sense. Jonah 1:8's question 'what is your occupation

(melakhah)?' shows a related occupational sense, though that occurrence falls within the dominant cluster. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: business | es: negocio | fr: de-œuvre | de: business Ps 107:23

מַלְאָכוּת H4400 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)
message, commission, embassy (communication sent by a messenger)
Haggai 1:13 describes Haggai as speaking 'in the message of the LORD' to the people. This term denotes a message or commission—communication entrusted to a messenger. The construct form 'in the message of the LORD' emphasizes that Haggai spoke not his own words but a divine communication. This is one of several Hebrew nouns for prophetic message, here emphasizing the messenger function: Haggai as bearer of God's word. The term connects to מַלְאָךְ (messenger, angel), underscoring that prophets are heaven's ambassadors, carrying messages not their own.

(1×) A message, commission, or communication entrusted to a messenger—appearing in Haggai 1:13 where the prophet speaks 'in the message of the LORD.' The term (construct form) emphasizes the carried communication rather than the carrier. Haggai functions as God's messenger (מַלְאָךְ), and what he speaks is God's message (מַלְאֲכוּת). The rarity of this particular form heightens its significance: this is not routine speaking but formal embassy, official communication from the heavenly court. The people must listen because Haggai bears not his opinion but God's authoritative word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-message-of | es: en-el-mensaje-de | fr: mandat | de: [במלאכות] Hag 1:13

מַלְאָכִי H4401 N-proper-ms (1×)
Malachi, a prophetic name meaning 'my messenger' (possibly title rather than personal name)
The book of Malachi opens with 'the oracle of the word of the LORD to Israel by Malachi.' The name means 'my messenger,' and many scholars think this is not a personal name but a title derived from Malachi 3:1 ('Behold, I send my messenger'). If so, the prophet's actual identity remains unknown, his name replaced by his function. Others propose it's a pseudonym or abbreviation. Regardless, 'Malachi' as messenger delivers the final prophetic word of the Old Testament—a fitting role for one whose very name declares him God's spokesman.

(1×) The name or title appearing in Malachi 1:1, identifying the prophet through whom God's final Old Testament oracle came. The word means 'my messenger' (מַלְאָכִי) and may be a title rather than a personal name, possibly derived from 3:1 ('Behold, I send my messenger'). Early interpreters debated whether this was Ezra under a pseudonym, but most now consider it either a genuine name or a functional title obscuring the prophet's identity. Whether name or title, it encapsulates the prophetic vocation: to be God's messenger, delivering not personal wisdom but divine word. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Malachi | es: Malaquías | fr: Malachie | de: Maleachi Mal 1:1

מִלְאַת H4402 N-fs (1×)
fullness, abundance (possibly 'setting' or 'border' when used of eyes)
Song of Songs 5:12 describes the beloved's eyes as 'sitting by fullness' or 'upon fullness'—a famously difficult phrase. Some translate 'by full pools of water,' others 'upon fullness' (as if eyes brimming with tears or vitality), still others propose 'in a setting' or 'by the border' (of the eyelid). The exact meaning remains debated. The context is a description of male beauty using evocative, sometimes mysterious imagery. Whatever the precise sense, the term contributes to the portrayal of eyes as striking, full, perhaps liquid and luminous—eyes that captivate.

(1×) A term of uncertain meaning in Song 5:12, most likely indicating fullness, abundance, or possibly setting/border. The phrase 'sitting upon מִלְאַת' describes the lover's eyes. Interpretive options include: (1) fullness of water—eyes like pools; (2) abundance—eyes full of vitality; (3) setting or border—eyes beautifully set in their frame; (4) rim—eyelids framing the eyes. The multilingual evidence leans toward fullness/plenitude. The obscurity may be deliberate—love poetry often uses evocative, ambiguous language. The image, however interpreted, conveys eyes of exceptional beauty, whether for their depth, brightness, or perfect setting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: fullness | es: plenitud | fr: la-plénitude. | de: [מלאת] Song 5:12

מַלְבּוּשׁ H4403 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (8×)
Clothing, garments, attire; outer raiment as a sign of status, wealth, or identity.
This masculine noun denotes clothing or attire, often with connotations of status or identity. It describes the vestments brought out for Baal worshippers (2 Kgs 10:22), the impressive garments of Solomon's servants that left the Queen of Sheba breathless (1 Kgs 10:5; 2 Chr 9:4), and foreign attire condemned by the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph 1:8). Isaiah uses it dramatically for God as a warrior whose garments are stained from treading the winepress of judgment (Isa 63:3). Spanish vestido and French vetements both convey 'clothing' with a formal register befitting these contexts.

clothing, garment, attire (8×) Clothing, garments, or attire – raiment that often signals status, identity, or religious affiliation. Used of garments provided for Baal worshippers (2 Kgs 10:22), of Solomon's servants' impressive clothing that awed the Queen of Sheba (1 Kgs 10:5; 2 Chr 9:4), of foreign attire that provoked prophetic rebuke (Zeph 1:8), of clothing as a sign of wealth (Job 27:16), and of God's warrior garments stained with the blood of judgment (Isa 63:3). The adornment of Jerusalem personified also uses this term (Ezek 16:13). Spanish vestido and vestimenta, French vetements – all point to formal or notable clothing rather than everyday dress. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: My-clothing, and-clothing-your, and-their-clothing | es: el-vestido, mi-vestimenta, vestido | fr: [ומלבושיהם], [מלבושי], et-leur-vêtements | de: [ומלבושיהם], [ומלבושך], [מלבושי] 1Kgs 10:5; 2Kgs 10:22; 2Chr 9:4; Job 27:16

מַלְבֵּן H4404 N-ms (4×)
brick mold or kiln; brick terrace
A term related to brick-making, with two possible meanings: either the mold used to shape bricks or a kiln for firing them. David's treatment of conquered Ammonites involved putting them to work 'at the brick mold/kiln' (2 Samuel 12:31), suggesting forced labor in harsh conditions. Jeremiah uses it for a brick terrace or pavement at Tahpanhes where Nebuchadnezzar would set his throne (Jeremiah 43:9). Nahum's taunt against Nineveh commands the doomed city to 'tread the clay and strengthen the brick mold,' preparing futile defenses.

(4×) Related to brick-making—either the mold that shapes wet clay into bricks or the structure (kiln, terrace) associated with brick production. The multilingual evidence shows uncertainty ('brick-mold,' 'brick-kiln,' 'molde de ladrillos'), reflecting genuine ambiguity in the term. Contexts associate it with labor (forced or defensive preparation) and with permanent structures (the terrace at Tahpanhes), suggesting a semantic range within brick-working technology. DOING AND MAKING
en: [at-the-brick-mold], at-the-brick-kiln, in-the-brick-terrace | es: (por-el-molde), [por-el-horno], el-molde-de-ladrillos! | fr: [at-le-brique-mold], [במלבן], pressoir | de: [at-der-brick-mold], [במלבן], [מלבן] 2Sam 12:31; Jer 43:9; Nah 3:14

מִלָּה H4405 N-fpc / 2ms (38×)
Word, utterance, speech; poetic synonym for 'dabar,' concentrated almost entirely in Job
An Aramaic-flavored noun for 'word' or 'utterance' that appears 38 times in the Hebrew Bible, with 34 of those in Job alone. Where the common Hebrew 'dabar' serves everyday prose, millah belongs to elevated poetic discourse – the speeches of Job's friends, God's rhetorical questions, and David's last oracle (2 Sam 23:2). Its Aramaic cognate is the standard word for 'word' in that language, suggesting the term entered Hebrew poetry as a prestige borrowing. Psalm 19:4 (ET 19:3) uses it in parallel with 'voice' for the wordless speech of the heavens. In Job 30:9, it narrows to 'byword' – a fixed mocking expression – while Job 29:22 stretches it to encompass sustained discourse.

1. word(s), utterance (36×) The primary sense: a word or collection of words as a unit of speech. Job's friends offer 'words' of counsel (Job 4:2, 4); Job demands they hear 'my words' (Job 13:17; 19:23); David's last oracle begins 'his word was on my tongue' (2 Sam 23:2). Spanish 'palabra(s),' French 'parole,' and German 'Wort' converge on straightforward verbal content. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-words, words | es: las-palabras, mi-palabra, mis-palabras | fr: mon-parole-moi, parole | de: Wort, von-mir 2Sam 23:2; Job 4:2; Job 4:4; Job 6:26; Job 8:10

2. byword, proverb (1×) A specialized narrowing to 'byword' or proverbial taunt. In Job 30:9, the suffering Job laments 'I have become their byword' – a fixed, repeatable expression of mockery. Spanish 'refran' (proverb) and English 'byword' capture the shift from neutral 'word' to a crystallized expression used derisively against a person. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-byword | es: por-refrán | fr: à-parole | de: Wort Job 30:9

3. speech, discourse (1×) An expansive sense covering sustained speech or discourse as a whole. Job 29:22 recalls a time when 'after my speech they did not speak again' – here millah denotes not individual words but the entire act of eloquent public speaking. Spanish 'dicho' (saying, discourse) and the singular collective use distinguish this from the distributive plural of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-speech | es: mi-dicho | fr: mon-parole-moi | de: Wort Job 29:22

מִלָּה H4406 N-fsc (24×)

Aramaic noun: word, utterance, royal decree; also matter, affair, thing

An Aramaic feminine noun found exclusively in Daniel, spanning from spoken utterance to royal decree to the broader sense of a matter or affair. Nebuchadnezzar uses it for his irrevocable command (Dan 2:5, 8), and the 'great words' of the little horn (Dan 7:11, 25) represent blasphemous speech against the Most High. Yet the same word also means simply 'thing' or 'matter,' as when the wise men protest that 'the matter is difficult' (Dan 2:10-11). Spanish distinguishes neatly between 'palabra' (word) and 'asunto' (matter), mirroring its two semantic poles.

word, matter, thing (24×) Aramaic feminine noun covering 'word, utterance, command' and 'matter, affair, thing.' As speech it ranges from royal decrees (Dan 2:5, 8; 3:28; 6:13) to the blasphemous boasts of the little horn (Dan 7:11, 25). As 'matter' it denotes affairs or subjects of inquiry (Dan 2:10-11, 23; 7:1, 28). Spanish 'palabra' versus 'asunto' mirrors the dual semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-matter, and-word, and-word-of | es: Y-la-cosa, el-asunto, la-palabra | fr: [ומלה], [ומלת], [מליא] | de: Wort, und-Wort, und-von-ihr Dan 2:5; Dan 2:8; Dan 2:9; Dan 2:10

מִלּוֹא H4407 Conj-w (10×)

Millo — a filled terrace or earthwork fortification, a key structure in Jerusalem and near Shechem

Derived from the root m-l-ʾ ('to fill'), Millo designates a massive filled earthwork or stone terrace that served as a fortification. Two distinct structures bear this name: one near Shechem, called bêth millôʾ ('house of Millo,' Judg 9:6, 20), associated with the Shechemite aristocracy in the Abimelech narrative; and the more famous Millo in Jerusalem, a major engineering project that David built up after capturing the city (2 Sam 5:9) and Solomon later strengthened (1 Kgs 9:15, 24; 11:27). The Akkadian cognate mulû ('earthwork, mound') confirms the architectural meaning. King Joash was assassinated at bêth millōʾ (2 Kgs 12:21), showing its continued importance centuries later.

Millo (place name / fortification) (10×) A proper noun derived from m-l-ʾ ('fill'), designating a filled terrace or earthwork fortification. Two locations bear this name: (a) bêth millôʾ near Shechem, seat of the local aristocracy in the Abimelech episode (Judg 9:6, 20); (b) hammillôʾ in Jerusalem, a major fortification that David initiated (2 Sam 5:9; 1 Chr 11:8), Solomon expanded (1 Kgs 9:15, 24; 11:27), and Hezekiah later repaired (2 Chr 32:5). The site of Joash's assassination (2 Kgs 12:21) also bears the name. Akkadian mulû ('earthwork, mound') confirms the architectural sense. Spanish 'Milo/Miló,' French and German 'Millo' uniformly treat it as a place name. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: Millo, the-Millo | es: Milo, Miló, el-Millo | fr: Millo, [המלוא], le-Millo | de: Millo, [המלוא], der-Millo Judg 9:6; Judg 9:20; 2Sam 5:9; 1Kgs 9:15

מַלּוּחַ H4408 N-ms (1×)

mallow, saltwort (a plant growing in saline or desert areas, used for food by the desperate)

Job 30:4 describes the destitute people Job contrasts with himself: 'they pluck mallow by the bushes, and the roots of the broom tree are their food.' This plant grows in salt-marshes or desert areas—poor-quality vegetation eaten only by the desperately hungry. The term denotes a plant associated with poverty and social marginalization. Job's point is the reversal of his fortunes: those who once were beneath his notice now mock him. The mallow-eaters, living on the margins of survival, have become his tormentors—a bitter social inversion mirroring his physical and spiritual collapse.

(1×) A plant identified as mallow or saltwort, growing in salt-marshes or desert regions, mentioned in Job 30:4 as food for the destitute. The term designates a halophyte—a salt-tolerant plant—of minimal nutritional value, eaten only in desperation. Job describes outcasts who 'pluck mallow among the bushes,' highlighting their extreme poverty. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'malva,' French/German transliterations) confirms the plant identification. Archaeological and botanical research suggests this may be a species of Atriplex or similar saltbush. In Job's imagery, mallow-eating marks the absolute social bottom—and these are the very people now scorning him, completing his humiliation. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: saltwort | es: malva | fr: מלוח | de: [מלוח] Job 30:4

מַלּוּךְ H4409a N-proper-ms (6×)

Malluch: a personal name borne by several Levites and laymen in postexilic Israel.

A Hebrew proper name meaning perhaps 'counselor' or 'king' (from the root m-l-k), borne by at least six different individuals in the postexilic period. Malluch appears among the Levites in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 6:44), among those who had taken foreign wives in Ezra's reform (Ezra 10:29, 32), and among those who sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh 10:4, 27). The Septuagint renders it variously as Maloch and Malouch, reflecting dialect variation in the Greek transliteration.

(6×) A proper masculine name borne by several individuals in postexilic biblical literature: a Levite ancestor in the temple singer genealogy (1 Chr 6:44), two men who divorced foreign wives during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:29, 32), and signatories of Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:4, 27). Spanish consistently renders 'Maluc/Malukh' while French and German leave the Hebrew untransliterated, reflecting lesser familiarity with this name in those traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Malluch, Mallukh | es: Maluc, Malukh | fr: [מלוך] | de: [מלוך] 1Chr 6:44; Ezra 10:29; Ezra 10:32; Neh 10:4; Neh 10:27

מלוכי H4409b Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Malluchi / Melicu (personal name, postexilic priest)

A personal name appearing in Nehemiah's list of priestly families, with variant spellings in the Ketiv (written text) and Qere (read text). The Ketiv reads 'Malluchi' while the Qere reads 'Melicu,' reflecting scribal uncertainty or dialectal variation. This individual represents a priestly family in the postexilic restoration community. Such textual variants are common in Ezra-Nehemiah's lists, where names underwent spelling changes or were remembered differently across traditions. The Septuagint's attempts (Malouch, Malouk) show ancient translators also navigating this variation.

(2×) Personal name of a priest in the postexilic period (Nehemiah 12:14), appearing with variant spellings: Ketiv 'Malluchi' versus Qere 'Melicu.' Both refer to the same priestly family representative. The textual variation reflects the fluidity of name spellings in late biblical texts, especially in genealogical lists. Septuagint variations (Malouch, Malouk) parallel the Hebrew uncertainty. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the Hebrew forms, showing translators' awareness of the Ketiv-Qere distinction. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: [to-Malokhi], to-Melikhu | es: (de-Melicu), [De-Meluc] | fr: [למלוכי], [למליכו] | de: [(למליכו)], [[למלוכי]] Neh 12:14

מְלוּכָה H4410 Art / N-fs (24×)
Kingship, royal authority, sovereignty – the office and dignity of reigning as king Denotes the abstract concept of kingship – the office, authority, and dignity of reigning as king. In the Samuel narratives it tracks the transfer of royal power: Samuel tells Saul about the kingship (1 Sam 10:16), writes its regulations (10:25), and the people renew it at Gilgal (11:14). Later David's rivals acknowledge that kingship belongs to his line (1 Kgs 2:15, 22), and God tears it from Solomon's son (1 Kgs 11:35). Psalm 22:28 and Obadiah 21 elevate it to cosmic scale: ultimate sovereignty belongs to Yahweh. Construct phrases like 'royal city,' 'royal throne,' and 'royal seed' extend the term into related domains.

kingship, royalty (24×) Abstract noun for kingship, royal office, or sovereignty. Used of Saul's newly instituted kingship (1 Sam 10:16, 25; 11:14), the transfer of power to David's line (1 Kgs 2:15, 22; 11:35), God's ultimate sovereignty (Ps 22:28; Obad 21), and metaphorically of Jerusalem's splendor (Ezek 16:13). Construct phrases like 'royal city,' 'royal throne,' and 'royal seed' extend the term into related domains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-kingdom, the-kingship, the-royalty | es: el-reino, la-realeza | fr: [המלוכה], le-kingship, le-royalty | de: [המלוכה], der-kingdom, der-kingship 1Sam 10:16; 1Sam 10:25; 1Sam 11:14; 1Sam 14:47; 1Sam 18:8

מָלוֹן H4411 N-msc (8×)
Lodging place, inn, place of overnight rest; a temporary shelter for travelers or an encampment for the night.
This noun designates a lodging place or inn – any location where travelers stop for the night. It appears memorably in the Joseph narrative, where his brothers discover their returned silver at the inn (Gen 42:27; 43:21), and in the mysterious night encounter at the lodging place on Moses' journey back to Egypt (Exod 4:24). Joshua uses it for Israel's overnight camp at the Jordan crossing (Josh 4:3, 8). Jeremiah longingly wishes for a 'lodging place of travelers' in the wilderness (Jer 9:2). German Herberge and Spanish alojamiento both evoke the rustic simplicity of these ancient wayside shelters.

lodging place, inn (8×) A lodging place, inn, or overnight encampment for travelers. Used of the inn where Joseph's brothers opened their sacks (Gen 42:27; 43:21), the mysterious lodging place where God confronted Moses (Exod 4:24), Israel's overnight camp during the Jordan crossing (Josh 4:3, 8), the Assyrian army's encampment (Isa 10:29), the remote reaches of Lebanon as a figurative camping-ground of Assyrian conquest (2 Kgs 19:23), and Jeremiah's wished-for 'wayfarer's lodge' in the desert (Jer 9:2). Spanish alojamiento ('lodging'), German Herberge ('inn'), and French lieu de logement all point to a temporary, often rustic shelter for the night. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-lodging-place-of, at-the-lodging-place, in-the-lodging-place | es: albergue-de, alojamiento, alojamiento-de | fr: [מלון], dans-le-lodging-lieu, le-lodging-lieu | de: [מלון], bei-der-lodging-Ort, der-Herberge Gen 42:27; Gen 43:21; Exod 4:24; Josh 4:3; Josh 4:8

מְלוּנָה H4412 Prep-k (2×)
hut, lodge, temporary shelter
A temporary shelter or flimsy hut, often used as a watchman's lodge in fields or vineyards. Isaiah employs this term in two powerful images of vulnerability and instability. Isaiah 1:8 compares devastated Jerusalem to a hut in a cucumber field—isolated, fragile, barely standing. Isaiah 24:20 uses it to describe the earth itself tottering 'like a hut' in cosmic judgment—the ultimate picture of instability. Both passages exploit the connotations of temporariness, flimsiness, and precariousness associated with such field shelters.

(2×) A temporary shelter or flimsy hut, typically a watchman's lodge in agricultural fields. Isaiah 1:8 compares besieged Jerusalem to 'a hut in a cucumber field'—isolated, vulnerable, barely standing amid destruction. Isaiah 24:20 depicts the earth reeling 'like a hut' under divine judgment—tottering, unstable, ready to collapse. Both metaphors exploit the hut's temporary, fragile nature. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish choza, French cabane) identifies this as a crude, temporary structure, not a substantial building. NIGHT AND LODGING
en: like-a-hut, like-hut | es: como-choza | fr: comme-une-cabane | de: [כמלונה] Isa 1:8; Isa 24:20

מַלּוֹתִי H4413 N-proper-ms (2×)
Mallothi (personal name, Levitical musician)
The name of one of Heman's sons, a Levitical musician in David's temple arrangements. The name appears in 1 Chronicles 25, which some scholars understand as an artistic arrangement where the 'names' actually represent the opening words of liturgical compositions or psalm titles (literally 'I have uttered' or 'I have spoken'). If this theory is correct, the passage contains a kind of musical acrostic or liturgical reference list disguised as personal names. Whether personal name or liturgical formula, it reflects the temple's musical traditions.

(2×) Personal name (or possibly liturgical phrase) appearing in 1 Chronicles 25:4, 26 as one of Heman's sons appointed for temple music. Some scholars (Ewald, Robertson Smith) interpret these 'names' as opening words of compositions or psalm fragments rather than personal names, noting 'Mallothi' means 'I have uttered/spoken.' This would make the list a cryptic liturgical reference. Cross-linguistic evidence shows direct transliteration (Malloti, Maloti), treating it as a proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Malloti, for-Malloti | es: Maloti, para-Maloti | fr: [למלותי], [מלותי] | de: [למלותי], [מלותי] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:26

מָלַח H4414a V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)
to be dispersed, dissipated into fragments (fig.)
This Niphal verb depicts the heavens being dispersed or dissipated like smoke fragments. Isaiah uses it in a powerful oracle about the permanence of God's salvation versus the transience of creation —while the heavens will vanish like smoke, God's righteousness endures. The rare verb suggests complete disintegration rather than simple fading.

(1×) Appearing only in Isaiah 51:6, this describes the heavens being scattered into fragments like dissipating smoke. The Hebrew root relates to tearing away or pulling out, suggesting a violent dispersal. English 'will vanish' and Spanish 'se desvanecerán' capture the end result, though the Hebrew emphasizes the fragmenting process itself. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: will-vanish | es: se-desvanecerán | fr: [נמלחן] | de: [נמלחן] Isa 51:6

מָלַח H4414b V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (4×)
to salt, season with salt
A denominative verb meaning to season or treat with salt, appearing in cultic and metaphorical contexts. All grain offerings were to be salted (Leviticus 2:13), establishing a 'covenant of salt' symbolizing permanence and preservation. The incense mixture was 'salted' or seasoned (Exodus 30:35). Ezekiel's metaphor of Jerusalem as an abandoned infant includes the detail that she was not salted (Ezekiel 16:4)—a practice of rubbing newborns with salt, perhaps for hygiene or symbolic purification.

(4×) To apply salt to something, whether seasoning sacrificial offerings, preparing incense, or washing a newborn. Salt's preservative and purifying properties made it significant in ritual contexts, symbolizing covenant permanence. The multilingual glosses ('salted,' 'salar,' 'fuiste salada') capture the verbal action. The infant-salting practice, though obscure to modern readers, apparently represented proper care and acceptance of a newborn child. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: and-salting, salted, were-you-salted | es: fuiste-salada, salado, salarás | fr: et-le-sel, saler, salted | de: [המלחת], [והמלח], du-soll-Salz Exod 30:35; Lev 2:13; Ezek 16:4

מְלַח H4415 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (1×)
to eat salt (with someone), assume obligations of loyalty
This Aramaic denominative verb literally means to eat salt but carries the idiomatic sense of entering covenant loyalty. In Ezra 4:14, Persian officials remind the king that they 'have eaten the salt of the palace'—a vivid image for their sworn allegiance. Ancient Near Eastern culture viewed sharing salt as creating binding obligations, making this more than a simple meal reference.

(1×) The phrase 'we have eaten the salt of the palace' in Ezra 4:14 declares covenant loyalty to the Persian king. Across languages, translators preserve the literal eating imagery (English 'ate', Spanish 'comimos'), though the underlying meaning is pledged allegiance. Syriac usage confirms that salt-eating idiomatically signified intimate loyalty and binding obligation in Aramaic culture. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: we-ate | es: comemos | fr: [מלחנא] | de: [מלחנא] Ezra 4:14

מֶלַח H4416 N-msc (3×)
salt (Aramaic)
An Aramaic noun for salt, appearing only in Ezra in contexts of Persian royal provisions. Salt is mentioned twice as a provision supplied for sacrifices (6:9, 7:22) and once metaphorically regarding obligation to the palace—'because we eat the salt of the palace' (4:14), an idiom for being in royal service and thus obligated to protect the king's interests. Salt's preservative and covenant-sealing associations in ancient culture underlie both uses.

(3×) The glosses uniformly identify the mineral 'salt' in Aramaic contexts. Ezra 6:9 and 7:22 list salt among provisions the Persian treasury supplies for temple sacrifices, showing royal support for Jewish worship. Ezra 4:14 uses the idiom 'eating the palace's salt' to express loyalty and obligation—adversaries claim duty to report anything dishonoring to the king. Salt symbolized covenant loyalty and preservation, making it appropriate both for offerings and for expressing binding obligations. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: and-salt, salt, salt-of | es: sal, y-sal | fr: [ומלח], [מלח] | de: Seemann, und-Seemann Ezra 4:14; Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:22

מֶלַח H4417 N-proper-fs (29×)
Salt; the mineral substance used for seasoning, preservation, and covenant symbolism, also frequent in geographic names (Dead Sea, Valley of Salt)
One of the most richly symbolic substances in Scripture. As a material, salt seasons food (Job 6:6), accompanies every grain offering (Lev 2:13), and seals covenants – a 'covenant of salt' denotes permanence and inviolability (Num 18:19; 2 Chr 13:5). Lot's wife becomes a pillar of salt (Gen 19:26), a vivid image of judgment. Nearly half the occurrences appear in geographic compounds: the Sea of Salt (the Dead Sea, Gen 14:3), the Valley of Salt (2 Sam 8:13), and the City of Salt (Josh 15:62). Arabic 'milh,' Aramaic 'milcha,' and cognates across Semitic languages all preserve the same root, underscoring how fundamental this substance was to ancient Near Eastern life.

1. Salt (in geographic names) (15×) Salt as a component of geographic place names – the Sea of Salt (yam ha-melach, the Dead Sea), the Valley of Salt, and the City of Salt. These fixed expressions account for roughly half the occurrences. Gen 14:3 identifies the Salt Sea with the Valley of Siddim; Num 34:3, 12 and Josh 3:16; 15:2, 5 use it as a boundary marker. Spanish 'el Salado' and English 'the Salt [Sea]' reflect the toponymic function. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: (Salt), Salt, [the-Salt] | es: Sal, [K], el-Salado | fr: (Salt), Salt, [the-Salt] | de: Salt, [the-Salt], [המלח] Gen 14:3; Num 34:3; Num 34:12; Deut 3:17; Josh 3:16

2. salt (substance) (14×) The mineral substance itself, used for seasoning food (Job 6:6), purifying water (2 Kgs 2:20-21), and especially in sacrificial ritual – Lev 2:13 commands salt on every grain offering, establishing the 'covenant of salt' (berith melach) as a metaphor for permanence (Num 18:19; 2 Chr 13:5). Strewn over conquered Shechem (Judg 9:45), it symbolizes desolation. French 'avec le sel' and Spanish 'con la sal' capture the instrumental ritual usage. SALT SUBSTANCE
en: and-salt, for-salt, salt | es: con-la-sal, para-sal, sal | fr: [למלח], [מלח], avec-le-sel | de: Salz, Salz-von, Seemann Gen 19:26; Lev 2:13; Num 18:19

מֻלַח H4418 Conj-w (2×)
rags, worn-out clothes
Worn-out garments or rags, the kind of discarded cloth used for padding or cushioning. Both occurrences are in Jeremiah 38:11-12, where these rags play a small but significant role in Ebed-melech's rescue of Jeremiah from the cistern. The Ethiopian eunuch gathers old rags and worn-out clothes from the palace storeroom to pad the ropes used to lift the prophet, preventing injury. This thoughtful detail—using soft rags to protect Jeremiah's body from rope burns—reveals compassion amid crisis. The term emphasizes the worn, soft quality of these discarded garments.

(2×) Worn-out clothes or rags used as padding. Jeremiah 38:11-12 describes Ebed-melech gathering old rags and worn-out garments to cushion the ropes when rescuing Jeremiah from the cistern. This compassionate detail prevents the prophet from being injured by the ropes. The term emphasizes these are discarded, worn garments—soft from use, suitable for padding. Cross-linguistic evidence shows some uncertainty about the precise term, with some translators preserving the Hebrew while others render as 'clothes' or 'rags.' LINEN AND FABRIC
en: and-the-clothes, clothes | es: debajo-de, y-los-bajó | fr: [והמלחים], [מלחים] | de: [והמלחים], [מלחים] Jer 38:11; Jer 38:12

מַלָּח H4419 Art / N-mp (4×)
mariners, sailors
Seamen who operate ships, an Assyrian loan-word reflecting international maritime vocabulary. The term appears in Jonah's story of the storm at sea (Jonah 1:5) and extensively in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre (Ezekiel 27:9, 27, 29), where mariners are listed alongside pilots and caulkers as essential maritime professionals. Tyre's downfall affects not just the city but the entire seafaring economy dependent on its trade networks. The loan-word suggests the technical, specialized nature of maritime work.

(4×) Professional sailors or mariners, those who work aboard ships. The contexts emphasize their expertise and their vulnerability to maritime disasters—whether the storm that terrified Jonah's shipmates or the economic catastrophe of Tyre's fall. The multilingual glosses ('sailors,' 'mariners,' 'marineros') consistently identify the occupational group. The term's borrowed status (from Assyrian malaḫu) reflects the international character of ancient Mediterranean seafaring. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12207 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-their-sailors, sailors, the-sailors | es: los-marineros, marineros, tus-marineros | fr: [ומלחיהם], [מלחיך], [מלחים] | de: [ומלחיהם], [מלחיך], [מלחים] Ezek 27:9; Ezek 27:27; Ezek 27:29; Jonah 1:5

מְלֵחָה H4420 N-fs (3×)
saltness, barrenness, salt-wasted land

A noun denoting saltness or salt-infested barrenness, describing land made unproductive by salt. Job mentions 'the salt land' as the wild ass's dwelling place (39:6). Jeremiah warns that those who trust in humans will inhabit 'the salt land' where no one dwells (17:6). The psalmist celebrates God's power to transform fruitful land into salt waste as judgment and salt waste into productivity as blessing (107:34). Salt-saturated soil represents curse, barrenness, and divine judgment.

(3×) Multilingual evidence points to salt-cursed land: Spanish 'salada, tierra-salada, salar' (salty, salt-land, salt-flat), English 'salt-land, salty, salt-waste.' Job 39:6 describes the wild ass naturally inhabiting barren salt-lands. Jeremiah 17:6 threatens that those trusting in flesh will dwell in uninhabitable salt-waste. Psalm 107:34 shows God's sovereignty—He can turn productive land into salt desert (judgment) or reverse the curse (mercy). Salted earth meant total desolation. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: into-salt-waste, salty, the-salt-land | es: en-salar, salada, tierra-salada | fr: [מלחה], à-terre-salée, מלחה | de: [מלחה], hinein-salt-waste Job 39:6; Ps 107:34; Jer 17:6

מִלְחָמָה H4421 Prep-l (319×)

War, battle — armed conflict between opposing forces, whether a single engagement or prolonged campaign

Milchamah is the Hebrew Bible's principal noun for armed conflict, covering everything from a single pitched battle (Gen 14:8; 1 Sam 17:1) to a protracted war (2 Sam 3:1, 'the war was long'). Derived from the root l-ch-m ('to fight'), it appears in formulas like 'the Book of the Wars of YHWH' (Num 21:14) and 'a man of war' (Exod 15:3). Spanish 'guerra,' French 'guerre,' and German 'Krieg' all capture its full range without needing separate terms for battle versus war, matching the Hebrew word's own semantic breadth across its 319 occurrences.

war, battle, armed conflict (319×) Armed conflict or military engagement between opposing forces, encompassing both individual battles and sustained wars. The noun derives from the root l-ch-m and appears in theologically significant constructions like 'wars of YHWH' (Num 21:14; 1 Sam 18:17) and as a cognate accusative with nilcham ('to wage war,' 1 Sam 8:20). Its scope ranges from the coalition battle of Gen 14:2 to the cosmic warfare imagery of Isaiah 42:13. WAR AND BATTLE

en: war | es: en-guerra, guerra | fr: guerre | de: Krieg Gen 14:2; Exod 1:10; Exod 13:17; Exod 15:3; Exod 17:16

מָלַט H4422 V-Nifal-Perf-1cp (94×)

Slip away, escape; in Piel, deliver or rescue; in rare usage, bring forth or lay eggs.

Built on the root idea of slipping free, this verb captures both self-initiated escape and divinely granted deliverance. In the Nifal, it describes fleeing from danger — Lot escaping Sodom (Gen 19:17, 22), Ehud slipping away after his assassination of Eglon (Judg 3:26), or David eluding Saul's pursuit (1 Sam 19:10). The Piel shifts to causative rescue: God or a human agent delivers another from death or captivity, as when Michal saves David's life (1 Sam 19:11). A surprising specialized sense appears in Isaiah 34:15 and 66:7, where the verb means to bring forth young or lay eggs — perhaps from the image of something 'slipping out.' Arabic cognates confirm the core meaning of slipping free.

1. Nifal: escape, flee (62×) Nifal: to escape, slip away, flee from danger or pursuit. The most frequent sense, covering self-extrication from mortal peril. Lot flees the destruction of Sodom (Gen 19:17, 20, 22); Ehud escapes to Seirah (Judg 3:26); the psalmist's soul escapes like a bird from a snare (Ps 124:7). Arabic ´ 'slip from the hand' illuminates the core image. Korean 도망치다/피하다 and Swahili -toroka capture the urgency of self-preserving flight. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-escaped, and-he-escaped, escaped | es: escapará, escapó, y-escapé | fr: [נמלט], avait-s'échappa, et-délivrer-elle | de: entkam, entkommen, er-rettet Gen 19:17; Gen 19:20; Gen 19:22; Judg 3:26

2. Piel: deliver, rescue (27×) Piel causative: to deliver, rescue, save someone from danger, death, or captivity. The agent actively effects another's deliverance. Michal delivers David from Saul (1 Sam 19:11); God promises to rescue the faithful (Ps 18:48, 2 Sam 22:49). Spanish 'librar' and German 'erretten/retten' both highlight the rescue dimension absent from the intransitive Nifal escape sense. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-delivered, I-will-deliver-you, and-delivered- | es: ciertamente-librar, escapará, escapará. | fr: de-échapper, délivrer, et-délivrer | de: der-die-rettend, der-wird-erretten, entkommen 1Sam 19:11; 2Sam 19:5; 2Sam 19:9; 1Kgs 1:12; 2Kgs 23:18

3. Hitpael: escape oneself (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to deliver or extricate oneself by one's own effort. Rare (Job 19:20, 41:19), this intensified reflexive emphasizes personal agency in escaping. Job laments that he escaped 'by the skin of my teeth' (Job 19:20) — the barest margin of self-rescue. Swahili -okolewa captures this reflexive survival nuance. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-I-have-escaped, escape | es: escapan, y-he-escapado | fr: délivrer, et-délivrer-elle | de: rettete, und-rettete Job 19:20; Job 41:19

4. Piel/Hifil: bring forth, lay eggs (2×) Piel/Hifil specialized: to bring forth young, to lay eggs. An unexpected biological extension of the 'slip out' image, found only in Isaiah 34:15 (an arrow-snake laying and hatching eggs) and Isaiah 66:7 (Zion delivering before labor). Spanish 'dar a luz' (give birth) and Swahili -zaa show how translators shift entirely from escape to parturition vocabulary for these passages. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: and-lay-eggs, and-she-delivered | es: y-dio-a-luz, y-pondrá-huevos | fr: et-échapper | de: und-entkommen Isa 34:15; Isa 66:7

5. (1×) A single Hifil participle occurrence in Isaiah 31:5 describing YHWH 'delivering' Jerusalem — functioning as a causative rescue parallel to sense 2 but in participial form. English 'rescuing' and Spanish 'haciendo escapar' treat it as an active deliverance in progress, consistent with the broader Piel/Hifil rescue usage. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: and-rescuing | es: y-haciendo-escapar | fr: et-échapper | de: und-entkommen Isa 31:5

מֶלֶט H4423 Prep-b (1×)

mortar, cement (building material)

This noun denotes mortar or cement used in construction. Jeremiah 43:9 mentions Nebuchadnezzar's throne being set 'in the mortar' at the entrance of Pharaoh's palace—likely referring to the brick pavement where mortar was visible. The word appears only once, borrowed from Aramaic building terminology, reflecting the specialized vocabulary of ancient Near Eastern masonry.

(1×) Jeremiah's prophecy specifies that royal stones will be hidden 'in the mortar' at Tahpanhes. Translations consistently identify this as mortar or cement (English 'mortar', Spanish 'mortero'), the binding material between bricks. The architectural specificity suggests Jeremiah pointed to a particular spot in the palace pavement where mortar joints were prominent. CLAY AND MORTAR

en: in-the-mortar | es: en-el-mortero | fr: [במלט] | de: [במלט] Jer 43:9

מְלַטְיָה H4424 N-proper-ms (1×)

Melatiah (personal name: 'Yahweh delivered')

A Gibeonite who helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah. His name means 'Yahweh delivered,' reflecting the theophoric naming pattern common in post-exilic Judah. Though ethnically Gibeonite, Melatiah joined the communal rebuilding effort, illustrating the diverse coalition that restored Jerusalem's defenses after the Babylonian exile.

(1×) Melatiah the Gibeonite worked on the wall in Nehemiah 3:7. His name appears consistently across translations (English 'Melatiah', Spanish 'Melatías'), with the theophoric element '-iah' marking Yahweh-worship even among non-Israelite peoples integrated into Judah's post-exilic community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Melatiah | es: Melatías | fr: [מלטיה] | de: [מלטיה] Neh 3:7

מְלִילָה H4425 N-fp (1×)

ears of grain, heads of grain

This plural noun refers to the heads or ears of standing grain—the seed-bearing tops of wheat, barley, or other cereals. Deuteronomy 23:25 permits travelers to pluck and eat these heads of grain from a neighbor's field, a provision balancing hospitality with property rights. The term may derive from a root meaning 'to rub,' reflecting how one would rub the heads between the hands to extract kernels.

(1×) In the hospitality law of Deuteronomy 23:25, a traveler may pick 'heads of grain' by hand. The multilingual evidence (English 'heads of grain', Spanish 'espigas', French 'heads de grain', German 'Häupter von Getreide') uniformly identifies these as the grain-bearing tops of standing cereal plants, which could be rubbed to release edible kernels. GRAIN EARS

en: heads-of-grain | es: espigas | fr: heads-de-grain | de: Haeupter-von-Getreide Deut 23:25

מְלִיצָה H4426 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

satire, mocking poem, taunting figure of speech

A literary form involving satire, mockery, or figurative speech designed to ridicule or challenge. Habakkuk 2:6 describes nations taking up a 'mocking poem' against the oppressor—a taunt song celebrating the fall of the wicked. Proverbs 1:6 lists it among forms of wisdom speech to be understood—possibly meaning 'figure' or 'enigmatic saying' rather than mockery. The term's semantic range spans from hostile satire to clever, interpretive speech. Both senses involve indirect, artistic language rather than straightforward statement.

(2×) A satirical poem, mocking speech, or figurative saying. Habakkuk 2:6 uses it for the taunt song nations will sing against Babylon—a mocking poem celebrating the oppressor's downfall. Proverbs 1:6 may use it differently, referring to figures of speech or enigmatic sayings to be interpreted (though 'satire' remains possible). Cross-linguistic evidence shows division: Spanish treats both as enigma/satire, French varies between 'interpreter' and mockery, suggesting translators recognize semantic range from hostile mockery to artful, indirect speech. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: and-a-figure, and-a-mocking-poem | es: y-enigma, y-un-dicho-burlón | fr: et-interprète, et-ומליצה | de: [ומליצה] Prov 1:6; Hab 2:6

מָלַךְ H4427a V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (350×)

To reign, be or become king; in the Hifil, to make someone king or cause to reign over a people or territory.

A verb at the heart of Israel's political theology, meaning to exercise royal authority or to ascend to the throne. When Samuel anoints Saul and later David, this is the word that marks the moment power transfers. In the Hifil stem it takes on causative force: the people or God 'makes someone king,' as when Israel crowns Saul at Gilgal (1 Sam 11:15). Arabic malaka and Akkadian malāku confirm the root's ancient Near Eastern pedigree as the standard term for sovereign rule. The single Daniel 9:1 occurrence preserves a rare passive nuance — Darius 'was made king' — attested also in Aramaic portions of Daniel.

1. reign, be king (Qal) (300×) The basic Qal meaning: to reign, rule as king, exercise royal sovereignty. This covers the vast majority of occurrences (300x), spanning Israelite monarchs (David reigned in Hebron, 2 Sam 2:10), foreign kings (the Edomite king-lists of Gen 36:32ff.), and even divine kingship (YHWH reigns forever, Exod 15:18). Every major translation language uses a single core equivalent — Spanish reinar, French régner, German regieren — confirming an undivided semantic core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: has-become-king, has-reigned, he-reigned | es: reinaba, reinó | fr: a-deviens-roi, a-régna, il-régna | de: er-regierte, hat-become-Koenig, hat-regierte Josh 13:10; Josh 13:12; Josh 13:21; Judg 4:2; 1Sam 13:1

2. make king, cause to reign (Hifil) (49×) The causative Hifil sense (49x): to install someone as king, to cause to reign. Structurally distinct from Sense 1 — the subject is the kingmaker, not the king. Key passages include Judges 9:6 where the citizens of Shechem 'made Abimelech king,' and 1 Samuel 8:22 where YHWH tells Samuel to 'make them a king.' Arabic mallaka (Form II, with doubled middle radical) parallels this causative pattern precisely. Spanish hacer rey and French faire roi capture the two-participant structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-made-king, and-they-made-king, to-make-king | es: E-hicieron-rey, E-hizo-rey, e-hicieron-reinar | fr: et-fit-roi, et-ils-fit-roi, et-régner | de: herrschen, und-herrschen, und-machte-Koenig Judg 9:6; Judg 9:16; Judg 9:18; 1Sam 8:22; 1Sam 11:15

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Daniel 9:1 where the Hophal passive or an Aramaic-influenced form yields the meaning 'was made king.' Darius the Mede 'was made king' (humlak) over the Chaldean realm. The passive nuance is confirmed by the Spanish reinó used in a stative-resultative sense and the German der König construction. This bridges Hebrew and the Aramaic sections of Daniel where the root mlk appears frequently in passive constructions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: was-made-king | es: reinó | fr: le-roi | de: der-Koenig Dan 9:1

מָלַךְ H4427b Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to counsel, consider carefully with oneself

This Niphal verb, a loanword from Aramaic, means to take counsel with oneself or deliberate internally. Nehemiah 5:7 uses it when the governor says 'my heart counseled me'—he engaged in careful internal deliberation before confronting the nobles about exploiting the poor. The reflexive Niphal form emphasizes self-consultation rather than seeking external advisors.

(1×) Nehemiah's internal deliberation in 5:7 uses this Aramaic borrowing for serious self-counsel. While English and Spanish render it 'counseled' (English 'counseled', Spanish 'consultó'), the Hebrew idiom 'my heart counseled me' depicts an inner dialogue where Nehemiah weighed the situation before acting against the nobles' injustice. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION en: and-counseled | es: Y-consultó | fr: [וימלך] | de: [וימלך] Neh 5:7

מֶלֶךְ H4428 N-msc / 2ms (2526×)

King: a human sovereign ruling a city, nation, or territory; also a divine title for God as supreme King

Melek is the Hebrew Bible's primary term for a ruling sovereign, appearing over 2,500 times across the full sweep of Israel's history — from the kings of Canaan in Genesis to the Persian emperors of Ezra-Nehemiah. Every major translation renders it straightforwardly: English 'the king,' Spanish 'el rey,' French 'le roi,' German 'der Konig.' Yet a small but theologically potent cluster of occurrences applies melek directly to God as divine King, especially in the Psalms. 'I have installed my King on Zion' (Ps 2:6) and 'Listen to my cry, my King and my God' (Ps 5:2) use the same word to express the LORD's sovereign rule over Israel and all creation.

1. king (human sovereign) (2486×) Split from sense 112104. Criteria: Earthly monarchs ruling cities, nations, or empires: Pharaoh, David, Solomon, Nebuchadnezzar. Political and military rulers of territorial states.

en: the-king | es: el-rey | fr: le-roi | de: der-Koenig, des-Königs Gen 39:20; 1Sam 8:9; 1Sam 12:2; 1Sam 12:13; 1Sam 18:25

2. King (divine title for God) (32×) Split from sense 112104. Criteria: God as supreme King: 'the LORD is King,' 'King of glory,' 'eternal King.' Theological metaphor for divine sovereignty over creation and history.

en: King-of, YHWH, a-King | es: Rey, Rey-de, al-Rey | fr: et-de-roi, et-de-à-toi, le-roi | de: Koenig, dem-Koenig, der-Koenig Deut 33:5; Ps 10:16; Ps 24:7; Ps 24:8; Ps 24:9

3. King, divine sovereign (8×) God or the Messiah as divine King, a theological title expressing the LORD's supreme sovereignty. The multilingual glosses shift to possessive and devotional forms — Spanish 'Rey-de-mi / a-nuestro-Rey,' German 'mein Konig,' marking the personal, covenantal relationship between God-as-King and his people. Concentrated in the Psalms: 'I have set my King on Zion' (Ps 2:6), 'Give ear to my words, my King and my God' (Ps 5:2), 'God is my King from of old' (Ps 44:4), 'Sing praises to our King' (Ps 47:6). Only 8 occurrences are distinctly clustered here, but they carry outsized theological weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-their-king, is-my-King, my-King | es: Rey-de-mí, a-nuestro-Rey, en-su-Rey | fr: dans-roi, rois-de, à-roi | de: in-ihr-König, mein-König, zu-unser-König Ps 2:6; Ps 5:2; Ps 44:4; Ps 47:6; Ps 68:24

מֶלֶךְ H4429 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Melek, Benjamite name; also 'king'

A proper name borne by a Benjamite descendant of Micah (1 Chronicles 8:35, 9:41), though the same form also means 'king' in Hebrew. This creates interpretive challenges in Jeremiah 36:26 and 38:6, where 'son of the king' might refer either to 'the king's son' (royal prince) or to someone named Melek. The ambiguity reflects the common practice of using titles as personal names and the difficulty of distinguishing common nouns from proper names in unpointed ancient texts.

(4×) A masculine proper name in the Benjamite genealogy, identical in form to the common noun 'king.' The multilingual evidence shows confusion ('king,' 'el-rey' vs. 'Melek,' 'Mélec'), reflecting the genuine ambiguity in some passages. The name's use as a personal identifier alongside its meaning as a title demonstrates the fluid boundary between common vocabulary and proper names in Hebrew, particularly when royal terminology enters personal nomenclature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Melekh, the-king | es: el-rey, y-Mélec | fr: et-roi, le-roi | de: der-Koenig, und-herrschte 1Chr 8:35; 1Chr 9:41; Jer 36:26; Jer 38:6

מֶלֶךְ H4430 N-msd (180×)

King — Aramaic noun for a sovereign ruler, used predominantly of Babylonian and Persian monarchs in Daniel and Ezra

This Aramaic noun is the equivalent of Hebrew melek and appears almost exclusively in the books of Daniel and Ezra, the Bible's two major Aramaic sections. The emphatic form malka ('the king') dominates, occurring over 150 times, reflecting Aramaic's preference for the determined state. Nebuchadnezzar is addressed as 'king of kings' (melek malkayya, Dan 2:37), a title later applied to Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:12). German Koenig, Spanish rey, and French roi all render it with standard royal vocabulary — the concept requires no special adaptation across languages.

king (180×) Aramaic noun for a sovereign ruler or monarch, functioning as the determined-state equivalent of Hebrew melek. Found overwhelmingly in Daniel and Ezra, it refers primarily to Babylonian kings (Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar) and Persian monarchs (Cyrus, Darius, Artaxerxes). The emphatic form malka accounts for the vast majority of attestations. In Dan 7:17, the plural malkin denotes 'kingdoms' by metonymy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: king, the-king | es: el-rey, rey, rey. | fr: le-roi | de: Koenig Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:23

מֶלֶךְ H4431 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

counsel, advice

This Aramaic noun denotes counsel or advice. In Daniel 4:27, Daniel urges King Nebuchadnezzar to accept his counsel to break from sin by practicing righteousness—advice that, if heeded, might avert divine judgment. The term appears in the diplomatic language of the Aramaic sections of Daniel, fitting the courtly context where royal advisors offered guidance to the king.

(1×) Daniel 4:27 uses this Aramaic term when the prophet says 'let my counsel be acceptable to you.' Translations vary interestingly—while English and Spanish correctly render 'counsel/consejo,' French and German show 'rois de/Könige von' (kings of), apparently confusing this with the similar-looking מֶלֶךְ (king). The context confirms Daniel is offering advice, not discussing kings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-counsel | es: mi-consejo | fr: rois-de | de: Koenige-von Dan 4:27

מֹלֶךְ H4432 Art / N-proper-ms (9×)

Molek; a Canaanite deity associated with child sacrifice by fire, consistently condemned in Torah and Prophets.

The name of an abhorrent pagan deity to whom Israelites were forbidden to offer their children by fire. The vocalization deliberately echoes the vowels of boshet ('shame'), overlaid on the consonants of melek ('king'), signaling revulsion at this false god's claim to royal divine status. Leviticus 18:21 and 20:2-5 prescribe the death penalty for those who 'give their seed to Molek,' while Jeremiah 32:35 associates Molek worship with the Valley of Hinnom. In one debated instance (Amos 5:26), the same consonants may simply mean 'your king' rather than the deity name.

1. Molek (pagan deity) (8×) The proper name of a Canaanite/Ammonite deity to whom children were sacrificed by fire. Always appearing with the definite article (ha-Molek), this name is linked to the horrifying rite of 'passing through the fire' in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom (2 Kgs 23:10, Jer 32:35). The Levitical legislation (Lev 18:21; 20:2-5) treats dedication to Molek as both idolatry and murder. Spanish renders it 'Moloc,' French 'Molek,' and German 'der Molek,' all preserving the divine-name status. GODS AND DEITIES en: and-for-Molek, the-Molek, to-the-Molek | es: Moloc, a-Molej, a-Moloc | fr: au-roi, et-pour-Molek, le-Molek | de: dem-Koenig, der-Molek, und-fuer-Molek Lev 18:21; Lev 20:2; Lev 20:3; Lev 20:4; Lev 20:5

2. your king (common noun) (1×) A possible common-noun reading 'your king' at Amos 5:26, where the consonantal text malkekhem may be vocalized as a regular noun with a possessive suffix rather than as the deity name. English renders 'your-king' and Spanish 'su-rey,' suggesting a royal figure rather than a pagan god. This alternative reading fits the prophetic indictment of Israel's self-chosen leadership and idolatrous processions, though the Septuagint's Moloch shows early tradition already read it as the divine name. RULING AND REIGNING

en: your-king | es: su-rey | fr: Molek | de: [מלככם] Amos 5:26

מַלְכָּה H4433 N-fsd (2×)

queen (Aramaic)

The Aramaic word for queen, appearing twice in the same verse—Daniel 5:10. The 'queen' enters Belshazzar's feast after hearing the commotion caused by the mysterious handwriting. Many scholars identify her not as Belshazzar's wife but as the queen mother, likely Nitocris (or possibly Nabonidus's wife), given her authoritative demeanor and her knowledge of Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar's reign. Her calm, wise counsel contrasts with the panicked king, and she alone remembers the interpreter who served the previous generation. The Aramaic setting reinforces the exilic context.

(2×) Aramaic term for queen, appearing twice in Daniel 5:10 for the royal woman who enters Belshazzar's banquet hall after the handwriting incident. Her composure and historical memory suggest she is the queen mother rather than Belshazzar's wife—she remembers Daniel from Nebuchadnezzar's time. The Aramaic vocabulary situates this narrative in the Babylonian exile setting. Cross-linguistic evidence clearly identifies this as 'queen' (Spanish reina, French roi [likely error for reine]). QUEEN RULER

en: the-queen | es: la-reina | fr: roi | de: [מלכתא] Dan 5:10

מַלְכֹּדֶת H4434 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

trap, snare (catching instrument)

This noun refers to a trap or snare used figuratively for the devices that ensnare the wicked. Job 18:10 warns that 'his trap lies on the path,' describing how the wicked person's own schemes become instruments of his downfall. The parallel with 'rope' suggests a concealed hunting trap—the same devices used to catch animals metaphorically catch those who set them.

(1×) Job's discourse on the fate of the wicked in 18:10 mentions 'his trap' lying in wait on the path. Cross-linguistically (English 'trap', Spanish 'cepo'), this is clearly a snare or catching device. The poetic justice depicted is that the wicked man's own trap—meant for others—becomes his own downfall, a common biblical theme of retributive justice. NETS AND SNARES

en: and-his-trap | es: y-su-cepo | fr: et-son-ומלכדתו-lui | de: [ומלכדתו] Job 18:10

מִלְכָּה H4435 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (11×)

Milcah — a personal name borne by Nahor's wife (Abraham's niece by marriage) and a daughter of Zelophehad

The proper noun מִלְכָּה (Milkah, 'queen' or 'counselor') identifies two women in Scripture. The primary bearer is Milcah daughter of Haran and wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen 11:29). She is the matrilineal link in the genealogy leading to Rebekah: the narrative carefully traces Milcah as mother of Bethuel and grandmother of Rebekah and Laban (Gen 22:20, 23; 24:15, 24, 47). Her repeated mention in the betrothal negotiations underscores lineage continuity within Abraham's extended family. The second Milcah is a daughter of Zelophehad of the tribe of Manasseh, one of five sisters whose petition for inheritance rights establishes a landmark legal precedent (Num 26:33; 27:1; 36:11; Josh 17:3). Spanish 'Milca' and French 'Milca' preserve the name across traditions.

Milcah (proper name) (11×) Milcah the wife of Nahor and daughter of Haran, a key figure in the Abrahamic family genealogy. Her marriage to Nahor (Gen 11:29) produces eight sons including Bethuel (Gen 22:20, 23), making her the grandmother of Rebekah. She is named repeatedly in the servant's account of finding Rebekah (Gen 24:15, 24, 47), establishing the critical kinship link that validates the marriage arrangement. The name likely derives from the root m-l-k ('queen, counsel'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Milcah, Milkah, and-Milcah | es: Milca, Milcá, Milkah | fr: Milcah, Milkah, et-Milcah | de: Milcah, Milka, Milkah Gen 11:29; Gen 22:20; Gen 22:23; Gen 24:15

מַלְכָּה H4436 N-fp (35×)

queen — a woman who reigns or holds royal consort status, especially the Queen of Sheba, Vashti, and Esther Malkah is the feminine counterpart of melekh ('king') and appears 35 times, with the vast majority concentrated in the book of Esther. Twenty-four of those occurrences describe either Vashti, who defied royal summons at the opening banquet (Est 1:9-19), or Esther, whose courage before Ahasuerus reversed the decree against her people (Est 5:2-8:1). Outside Esther the word designates the Queen of Sheba, whose visit to Solomon tested his famed wisdom and left her breathless (1 Kgs 10:1-13). In Song of Songs 6:8-9, the plural melakhot ('queens') appears in a harem catalogue alongside concubines. Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render the royal feminine: Spanish 'reina,' French 'reine,' German 'Koenigin.'

queen (35×) A female sovereign or royal consort. The word overwhelmingly denotes named queens in narrative — the Queen of Sheba testing Solomon's wisdom (1 Kgs 10:1-13), Vashti refusing the king's command (Est 1:9-19), and Esther interceding for Israel (Est 5-9). The plural in Song of Songs 6:8-9 ranks queens above concubines in a royal household. QUEEN RULER

en: the-queen | es: la-reina, la-reina? | fr: reine | de: der-Koenigin 1Kgs 10:1; 1Kgs 10:4; 1Kgs 10:10; 1Kgs 10:13; 2Chr 9:1

מַלְכוּ H4437 Prep-b / N-fsd (57×)

Kingdom, reign, or royal dominion; the Aramaic term for sovereign rule, territorial realm, and kingly authority in Daniel and Ezra.

Malku is the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew malkut, appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. It carries the full weight of ancient Near Eastern political theology: Nebuchadnezzar's world-empire, the succession of four kingdoms in Daniel's visions, and ultimately God's everlasting kingdom that shatters all others (Dan 2:44). The word flexes between the abstract authority of a king's reign (Dan 4:17), the concrete territory he rules, and the plural 'kingdoms' of apocalyptic prophecy. Spanish reino, French royaume, and German Koenigreich all converge on a single rendering, but the Aramaic contexts demand careful attention to whether malku means 'your kingship' or 'your kingdom' — the power or the place.

1. kingdom, realm (46×) A kingdom or realm as a political and territorial entity ruled by a sovereign. This dominant sense (46 occurrences) covers Nebuchadnezzar's Babylonian empire (Dan 2:37), the successive world-kingdoms of Daniel's statue vision (Dan 2:39–40), and God's eternal kingdom (Dan 2:44, 7:27). Spanish el reino, French le royaume, and German das Koenigreich all treat it as a concrete domain. The emphatic state malkuta in Aramaic often carries the definite article sense, 'the kingdom.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: kingdom, kingdom-of, the-kingdom | es: el-reino, el-reino-de, reino | fr: le-royaume, royaume, royaumes | de: Koenigreich, das-Koenigreich, sein-Koenigreich Ezra 7:13; Ezra 7:23; Dan 2:37; Dan 2:39

2. reign, royal rule (8×) The reign or exercise of royal authority, emphasizing the temporal and functional aspect of rule rather than the geographic realm. In Ezra 4:24 and 6:15 it marks dating formulae — 'in the reign of Darius.' Daniel 4:17–32 uses it for the kingly authority that is given and taken away. Spanish reinado de and German zu Koenigreich distinguish this from territorial kingdom, capturing the dynamic, personal quality of sovereignty that God grants to whom he wills. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-reign-of, in-kingdom-of, in-reign-of | es: de-reinado-de, del-reinado-de, en-el-reinado-de | fr: dans-le-royaume, et-dans-le-royaume, royaume | de: Koenigreich, und-Koenigreich, zu-Koenigreich Ezra 4:24; Ezra 6:15; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32

3. kingdoms (plural) (3×) Kingdoms in the plural, referring to multiple political entities collectively, especially in apocalyptic contexts. Daniel 2:44 declares that God's kingdom will crush 'all these kingdoms,' and 7:23 describes a fourth beast that devours 'all the kingdoms.' The plural construct malkevat appears only three times, marking climactic moments where individual empires give way to God's universal dominion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: kingdoms, the-kingdoms | es: los-reinos, reinos | fr: le-royaume, royaumes | de: Koenigreich, das-Koenigreich Dan 2:44; Dan 7:23; Dan 7:27

מַלְכוּת H4438 Art / N-fs (91×)

Royalty, royal power, reign, or kingdom; the domain, exercise, or dignity of kingly rule (chiefly late Hebrew).

A noun appearing primarily in later biblical books (Chronicles, Esther, Daniel, Psalms), מַלְכוּת covers the full spectrum of kingship. It can denote a concrete political realm—a kingdom or territory under a sovereign's authority—as well as the active exercise of royal rule during a reign. In Esther especially, it takes on a more personal coloring, referring to the queen's royal dignity and status. The multilingual glosses confirm these three poles: Spanish 'reino' vs. 'reinado' vs. 'realeza' neatly mirror the territory/reign/dignity distinction. When applied to God (Ps 103:19; 145:11-13), it ascends to describe universal, eternal dominion.

1. kingdom, realm (60×) The most frequent sense (about two-thirds of occurrences) designates a kingdom as a political entity or territorial domain—the realm over which a king exercises sovereignty. Spanish consistently renders 'reino,' French 'royaume,' and German 'Königreich.' Used of human kingdoms (1 Sam 20:31; 1 Kgs 2:12) and of God's universal kingdom (Ps 145:11-13). The cluster includes possessive constructions ('his kingdom,' 'kingdom of') showing the kingdom as belonging to a ruler. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-kingdom, kingdom-of, the-kingdom-of | es: reinado-de, reino-de, reino-suyo | fr: royaume, royauté | de: Koenigreich 1Sam 20:31; 1Kgs 2:12; 1Chr 11:10; 1Chr 12:24; 1Chr 14:2

2. reign, rule (21×) About one-fifth of occurrences emphasize the temporal or active dimension: the reign or period of rule rather than the territory itself. Spanish distinguishes this with 'reinado' alongside 'reino.' Chronicles frequently uses this sense in chronological formulae ('in the reign of...'), as in 1 Chr 26:31 and 2 Chr 3:2. The glosses across languages sometimes blur with sense 1, but the contextual focus on duration and royal activity marks the distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-his-kingdom, his-reign, in-his-reign | es: de-el-reinado-de, de-reinado-de, de-su-reinado | fr: [מלכות], [מלכתו], pour-royaumes | de: Koenigreich, [מלכות], [מלכתו] 1Chr 26:31; 1Chr 29:30; 2Chr 2:1; 2Chr 2:12; 2Chr 3:2

3. royalty, royal dignity (10×) A smaller cluster (roughly 10 occurrences) refers to royalty as a personal attribute—royal dignity, queenly status, or sovereign rank. This sense appears prominently in Esther, where the queen's מַלְכוּת is her royal position and splendor (Esth 1:11, 4:14). Spanish 'realeza,' French 'royauté,' and the English gloss 'royalty' all capture this abstract, qualitative nuance distinct from both territory and temporal rule. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-her-royalty, royalty | es: realeza, reinado, reino | fr: et-royauté, royauté | de: Koenigreich, und-Koenigreich 1Chr 29:25; Esth 1:7; Esth 1:11; Esth 1:19

מַלְכִּיאֵל H4439 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Malchiel (personal name: 'God is my king' or 'El is king')

A personal name meaning 'God is my king' or 'El is king,' belonging to a son of Beriah from the tribe of Asher. Malchiel appears in three parallel genealogical lists: Genesis 46:17 (Jacob's family going to Egypt), Numbers 26:45 (the wilderness census), and 1 Chronicles 7:31 (tribal genealogies). His descendants formed a clan within Asher. The theophoric name reflects faith in divine sovereignty, a common theme in Israelite personal names.

(3×) This proper name appears transliterated as 'Malchiel, Malkiel, Malquiel' across languages. Genesis 46:17 includes him among Jacob's descendants who went to Egypt. Numbers 26:45 identifies him as ancestral head of the Malchielite clan within Asher. First Chronicles 7:31 repeats his name in Asher's genealogy. The consistent preservation of this name across three genealogical contexts ensures his family line remained identified within Israel's tribal structure through generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Malchiel, and-Malkiel, to-Malchiel | es: de-Malquiel, y-Malkiel, y-Malquiel | fr: [ומלכיאל], et-Malchiel, à-Malchiel | de: [ומלכיאל], und-Malkiel, zu-Malchiel Gen 46:17; Num 26:45; 1Chr 7:31

מַלְכִּיאֵלִי H4440 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Malchielite (gentilic: descendant of Malchiel)

This gentilic adjective identifies the clan descended from Malchiel, a descendant of Asher. Numbers 26:45 lists 'the family of the Malchielites' in the wilderness census. Like other gentilic forms, it marks tribal affiliation and inheritance rights, helping organize Israel's military and land distribution systems. The -ite ending is standard for clan designations in Hebrew.

(1×) The census list in Numbers 26:45 names 'the Malchielite' clan as one of Asher's family groups. Translations uniformly add the definite article (English 'the Malchielite', Spanish 'los malquielitas', German 'der Malchielite'), following the Hebrew article, marking this as a collective designation for all descendants of Malchiel within Asher's tribe. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Malchielite | es: los-malquielitas | fr: le-Malchielite | de: der-Malchielite Num 26:45

מַלְכִּיָּהוּ H4441 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (16×)

Malkiyah / Malchijah — a theophoric name meaning 'my king is Yah,' borne by priests, Levites, and officials.

A theophoric personal name composed of melek ('king') and Yah (the divine name), meaning 'my king is the LORD.' It is borne by at least ten different individuals scattered across Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Jeremiah. Among the most notable are the priest whose descendant Pashhur served in Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:12; Neh 11:12; Jer 21:1; 38:1), the priestly course assigned the fifth lot in David's temple organization (1 Chr 24:9), and the royal prince who owned the cistern into which Jeremiah was cast (Jer 38:6). Several bearers appear in the postexilic community: men who divorced foreign wives (Ezra 10:25, 31), builders who repaired Jerusalem's walls (Neh 3:11, 14, 31), and a participant in the dedication ceremony (Neh 12:42). Spanish 'Malquiya,' French 'Malkija,' and German 'Malkija' uniformly transliterate.

Malkiyah (proper name) (16×) The theophoric proper name Malkiyah/Malchijah ('my king is Yah'), identifying multiple OT figures: a Levite ancestor of the temple singer Asaph (1 Chr 6:40), a priest in David's temple roster assigned the fifth lot (1 Chr 24:9), the father of Pashhur the priest (1 Chr 9:12; Jer 21:1; 38:1), the prince who owned the cistern where Jeremiah was imprisoned (Jer 38:6), men who put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:25, 31), wall-builders under Nehemiah (Neh 3:11, 14, 31), and a participant in the wall dedication (Neh 12:42). Spanish 'Malquiya,' French 'Malkija,' and German 'Malkija' transliterate consistently. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Malchijah, Malkijah, Malkiyah | es: Malkiyah, Malkiyahu, Malquiya | fr: Malkija, [מלכיה], [מלכיהו] | de: Malkija, [למלכיה], [מלכיה] 1Chr 6:40; 1Chr 9:12; 1Chr 24:9; Ezra 10:25

מַלְכִּי־צֶדֶק H4442 N-proper-ms (2×)

Melchizedek (personal name: 'my king is righteousness')

The mysterious king of Salem and priest of El Elyon (God Most High) who blessed Abraham after his victory over the eastern kings. The name means 'my king is righteousness' or 'king of righteousness.' Melchizedek appears only twice in the Old Testament—Genesis 14:18 and Psalm 110:4—yet became profoundly significant in later biblical and Christian theology as a type of eternal priesthood. His sudden appearance without genealogy or succession, combined with his dual role as king-priest, made him a unique figure. The New Testament book of Hebrews extensively develops his typological significance.

(2×) Personal name of the king of Salem and priest of God Most High who blessed Abraham (Genesis 14:18) and to whom Abraham gave a tenth. Psalm 110:4 invokes his priestly order as eternal and royal. The name's meaning ('my king is righteousness' or 'king of righteousness') carries theological weight. His mysterious appearance without genealogy and his dual king-priest role made him a powerful type in later theology. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration (Melchizedek, Melquisedec, Malki-Tsedeq). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Malki-Tsedeq, and-Melchizedek | es: Melquisedec, Y-Melquisedec | fr: de-Melchisédek, et-Melchisédek | de: Malki-Tsedeq, und-Malki-Zedek Gen 14:18; Ps 110:4

מַלְכִּירָם H4443 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Malkiram (personal name: 'my king is exalted')

A son of King Jeconiah (Jehoiachin) born during the Babylonian exile. His name means 'my king is exalted,' likely expressing hope that Yahweh (poetically termed 'king') would restore the Davidic dynasty. Listed in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 3:18, Malkiram represents the continuing royal line even in captivity, sustaining messianic expectations for later generations.

(1×) Malkiram appears in the exilic royal genealogy of 1 Chronicles 3:18 as a son of Jeconiah. His theophoric name, consistent across translations (English 'Malkiram', Spanish 'Malquiram'), combines 'my king' with 'exalted,' reflecting the exiled community's hope that their true King (Yahweh) remained sovereign despite political defeat. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Malkiram | es: Y-Malquiram | fr: [ומלכירם] | de: [ומלכירם] 1Chr 3:18

מַלְכִּישׁוּעַ H4444 N-proper-ms (5×)

Malchi-shua — a son of King Saul, meaning 'my king is opulence'

Malchi-shua was one of the sons of King Saul, listed alongside Jonathan, Ishvi, and others. The name likely means 'my king is opulence' or 'my king is salvation,' with the divine element understood as a reference to Yahweh. He fell with his father and brothers on Mount Gilboa in the catastrophic battle against the Philistines (1 Sam 31:2; 1 Chr 10:2). The Chronicles genealogies preserve his name in both Benjaminite lists (1 Chr 8:33; 9:39), sometimes hyphenated as Malki-shua.

(5×) A proper masculine name designating a son of King Saul who died at the battle of Mount Gilboa. Spanish renders the name Malqui-Sua/Malquisua, reflecting the two-element theophoric structure. The LXX offers Melcheisa and Melchesoue among other variants. Listed in 1 Sam 14:49 among Saul's sons, his death is recorded in 1 Sam 31:2 and 1 Chr 10:2, and he appears in the Benjaminite genealogies of 1 Chr 8:33 and 9:39. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5544 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Malchi-shua, Malki-Shua, and-Malki-shua | es: Malqui-Saúa, Malqui-Súa, Malquisua | fr: Malchi-shua, [מלכישוע], et-Malki-shua | de: Malchi-shua, [מלכישוע], und-Malki-shua 1Sam 14:49; 1Sam 31:2; 1Chr 8:33; 1Chr 9:39; 1Chr 10:2

מַלְכָּם H4445a N-proper-ms (1×)

Malkam (personal name of a Benjamite)

A Benjamite listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8:9. His name possibly means 'their king,' though it should not be confused with Milcom, the Ammonite deity. This Malkam appears in the complex genealogical records of Benjamin's descendants, part of Chronicles' effort to document pre-exilic tribal structures for the post-exilic community seeking to reclaim its heritage.

(1×) The Benjamite genealogy in 1 Chronicles 8:9 includes Malkam among the descendants. His name appears distinctly in English ('Malkam') and Spanish ('Malcam'), distinguishing him from the deity Milcom mentioned elsewhere. The Septuagint variants (Melchas, Melcham, Melchom) show ancient uncertainty about the exact pronunciation, but he remains identified as a Benjamite ancestor. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Malkam | es: Malcam | fr: [מלכם] | de: ihr-Koenig 1Chr 8:9

מִלְכֹּם H4445b Conj-w (4×)

Milcom, god of the Ammonites

The national deity of Ammon, introduced to Israel through Solomon's foreign wives (1 Kings 11:5, 33). Called 'the abomination of the Ammonites,' Milcom had a high place built for him on the Mount of Olives, which Josiah later desecrated during his reforms (2 Kings 23:13). The name appears in prophetic texts condemning syncretistic worship (Zephaniah 1:5) and in oracles against Ammon (Jeremiah 49:1, 3). The deity's name may relate to the word for 'king' (melek), possibly meaning 'their king' or representing a divine king.

(4×) The proper name of the Ammonite national god, characterized as an abomination and associated with Solomon's apostasy. The multilingual glosses preserve the divine name (Milkom, Milcom, Malkam) with minor variations. Worship of this deity represented covenant unfaithfulness for Israel, particularly troubling when the wisest king built high places for foreign gods to please his wives. Josiah's later destruction of these cult sites sought to undo Solomon's spiritual compromise. GODS AND DEITIES

en: Milkom, and-to-Milkom, by-Malkam | es: Milcom, por-Milcom, y-a-Milcom | fr: Malkam, Milkom, et-à-Milkom | de: Milkom, in-ihr-Koenig, und-zu-Milkom 1Kgs 11:5; 1Kgs 11:33; 2Kgs 23:13; Zeph 1:5

מַלְכָּת H4446 Prep-l / N-fsc (5×)

queen (of heaven) — a goddess title, likely referring to Ishtar or Astarte

Melekhet appears only in the phrase melekhet hashamayim, 'queen of heaven,' designating a goddess whom Judean women worshipped with incense, drink offerings, and cakes bearing her image. Jeremiah fiercely condemns this cult (Jer 7:18; 44:17-19, 25), and the women defiantly insist that prosperity attended their devotion. The deity is commonly identified with the Mesopotamian Ishtar (Venus) or Canaanite Astarte. Some scholars read the word as melekhet from melakhah ('work, worship'), but the traditional vocalization as 'queen' is widely accepted.

(5×) A feminine noun meaning 'queen,' used exclusively in the construct phrase 'queen of heaven' to denote a goddess worshipped in pre-exilic and exilic Judah. German Koenigin and French reine both translate directly as 'queen,' while Spanish reina-del likewise preserves the royal title. Jeremiah 7:18 describes family-wide participation in the cult — children gathering wood, fathers kindling fire, women kneading dough for cakes. The four passages in Jeremiah 44 record the exiles in Egypt defending the practice, making this one of the most vivid windows into popular Judean religion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-the-queen-of, to-queen-of | es: a-la-reina-del, a-reina-de | fr: reine | de: Koenigin Jer 7:18; Jer 44:17; Jer 44:18; Jer 44:19; Jer 44:25

מֹלֶכֶת H4447 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Molekhet (personal name, a woman of Manasseh)

A woman from the tribe of Manasseh mentioned in 1 Chronicles 7:18. Her name appears with the definite article, possibly indicating 'the queen' or 'the ruler,' though it functions as a personal name. She represents one of the few women named in Chronicles' genealogical framework, highlighting her significance in Manasseh's tribal lineage.

(1×) The Manassite genealogy in 1 Chronicles 7:18 names Molekhet with the definite article ('the Molekhet'). Spanish renders this as 'Hamólquet,' maintaining the article, while the Septuagint treats it as 'Malecheth.' The definite article may indicate a title ('the ruling one') that became a personal name, or simply a grammatical peculiarity in how this woman's name was traditionally recorded. QUEEN RULER

en: the-Molekhet | es: Hamólquet | fr: [המלכת] | de: [המלכת] 1Chr 7:18

מָלַל H4448a V-Piel-Perf-3cp (4×)

to speak, utter, say

A Piel verb meaning to speak or declare, appearing primarily in poetic and wisdom literature. Sarah uses it in wondering who would have 'said' to Abraham that she would nurse children (Genesis 21:7). Job's interlocutors 'speak' their arguments (Job 8:2, 33:3), and the Psalmist asks who can 'utter' all the mighty deeds of the Lord (Psalm 106:2). The term emphasizes the act of verbal expression, the voicing of thoughts or knowledge.

(4×) To speak, declare, or utter words, with emphasis on the act of verbal expression. The cross-linguistic glosses ('speak,' 'say,' 'utter,' 'hablar,' 'declarar') capture various aspects of the speech act. Contexts range from rhetorical questions about speaking to declarations of knowledge, suggesting the term encompasses both casual speech and more formal pronouncement. The Psalm 106:2 usage highlights the inadequacy of human speech to fully express God's mighty works. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: can-express, they-speak, will-you-speak- | es: declarará, hablaron, hablarás | fr: aurait-avoir-dit, parler, מללו | de: [מללו], [תמלל], hätte-gesagt Gen 21:7; Job 8:2; Job 33:3; Ps 106:2

מָלַל H4448b V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to scrape, signal with (especially feet); make signs

This participial form describes the gestures of a deceitful person who signals or scrapes with his feet as part of his deceptive communication. Proverbs 6:13 depicts the scoundrel who 'winks with his eyes, signals with his feet, points with his fingers'—a trilogy of covert signals coordinating mischief. The root may relate to rubbing or scraping, suggesting a shuffling or tapping motion used to communicate secretly.

(1×) In Proverbs 6:13, the worthless person 'signals with his feet' as part of a pattern of sly communication. English 'signaling' and Spanish 'arrastra' (drags/shuffles) capture different nuances of the deceptive foot gesture. The Hebrew suggests scraping or rubbing motions—perhaps shuffling feet in coded patterns—that coordinate scheming without words. LABOR AND TOIL

en: signaling | es: arrastra | fr: מלל | de: [מלל] Prov 6:13

מְלַל H4449 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to speak, say (Aramaic Pael) — used of both human and divine speech

This Aramaic verb in the Pael stem means 'to speak' or 'to say,' cognate with the rare Hebrew Piel of malal. All five occurrences appear in Daniel. In Dan 6:21, Darius speaks with Daniel at the lions' den. The remaining four passages (Dan 7:8, 11, 20, 25) describe the horn of the fourth beast that speaks arrogantly — uttering 'great things' against the Most High. Spanish hablaba/hablando/hablara consistently renders it with hablar, while French and German retain transliterations alongside parler.

(5×) To speak or utter words, used in Aramaic (Pael conjugation) for both ordinary speech and grandiose, blasphemous pronouncements. Daniel 6:21 records Darius speaking with Daniel after the night in the lions' den, the only instance of neutral conversational speech. The four occurrences in Daniel 7 (vv. 8, 11, 20, 25) all describe the little horn's arrogant speech against God, with Spanish hablaba/hablando and French parler uniformly reflecting the basic meaning 'to speak.' The term thus spans from gentle royal inquiry to apocalyptic defiance. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: he-will-speak, speaking, spoke | es: hablaba, hablando, hablará | fr: parler | de: [ימלל], [מלל], [ממלל] Dan 6:21; Dan 7:8; Dan 7:11; Dan 7:20; Dan 7:25

מְלַלִי H4450 N-proper-ms (1×)

Milalai (personal name of a priest)

A priestly musician who participated in the dedication ceremony of Jerusalem's rebuilt walls under Nehemiah. His name appears in Nehemiah 12:36 among those playing musical instruments in the procession. As a descendant of the priestly line, Milalai contributed to the joyful worship celebration that marked the completion of the city's defensive restoration.

(1×) Milalai is listed in Nehemiah 12:36 among the priestly musicians at the wall dedication. His name is transliterated consistently across languages (English 'Milalai', Spanish 'Milalai'), with no clear etymology preserved. He represents the Levitical musicians who provided worship leadership during the post-exilic community's significant ceremonial occasions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Milalai | es: Milalai | fr: [מללי] | de: [מללי] Neh 12:36

מַלְמָד H4451 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

ox goad (pointed stick for driving cattle)

This noun refers to a cattle goad—a long stick with a pointed tip used to prod oxen while plowing. Judges 3:31 famously recounts how Shamgar struck down six hundred Philistines with an ox goad, transforming a farmer's implement into an improvised weapon. The detail emphasizes that God delivers through unlikely means and unlikely heroes working with whatever tools they have at hand.

(1×) Shamgar's unconventional weapon in Judges 3:31 was 'an ox goad,' a farmer's pointed stick for driving cattle. Translations consistently identify this agricultural tool (English 'ox-goad', Spanish 'aguijada', French 'bœuf-goad', German 'Ochse-goad'), highlighting the surprising nature of his victory—six hundred enemies defeated with farming equipment rather than military weapons. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-the-ox-goad-of | es: con-aguijada-de | fr: avec-le-bœuf-goad-de | de: mit-der-Ochse-goad-von Judg 3:31

מָלַץ H4452 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be smooth, pleasant, agreeable (to the taste or senses)

This Niphal verb describes something being smooth, pleasant, or agreeable, especially to the palate. Psalm 119:103 exclaims 'How sweet are your words to my palate, sweeter than honey to my mouth!' The Hebrew emphasizes smooth pleasantness rather than just sweetness, suggesting the satisfying texture and taste of God's words. It's a rare verb used to express sensory delight in divine revelation.

(1×) The psalmist's exclamation in Psalm 119:103 uses this verb to describe how God's words taste—smooth and pleasant to the palate. While most translations render it 'sweet' (English 'sweet', Spanish 'dulces', German 'süss'), the Hebrew root suggests smoothness and pleasantness rather than sugar-sweetness. The parallel with honey confirms delightful taste, but the word emphasizes the satisfying, smooth quality of divine words. SWEET SWEETNESS

en: sweet | es: dulces | fr: être-doux | de: süss Ps 119:103

מֶלְצַר H4453 Art / N-ms (2×)

steward, guardian (Babylonian title)

A Babylonian official title, possibly meaning steward or guardian, though its precise meaning remains uncertain. The term appears only in Daniel 1:11, 16, referring to the official placed over Daniel and his friends during their training at the Babylonian court. This individual reports to Ashpenaz, the chief of the eunuchs, and directly supervises the young men's food and training. Scholars debate whether this is a Persian loan-word meaning 'wine master' or derives from Akkadian meaning 'guardian.' The definite article suggests it's a title or office rather than a personal name.

(2×) A Babylonian official title (possibly guardian or steward) for the overseer of Daniel and his friends at the royal court (Daniel 1:11, 16). The official was responsible for their daily provisions and training regimen. Scholarly proposals for the word's origin include Akkadian maṣṣaru (keeper, guardian) or Persian mulsaru (cellar-master), though certainty eludes us. The definite article indicates this is an official position. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration or functional equivalents like steward/mayordomo. OVERSEER APPOINTED OFFICER

en: the-steward | es: el-mayordomo | fr: pince | de: [המלצר] Dan 1:11; Dan 1:16

מָלַק H4454 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (2×)

to wring off, nip off (bird's head)

A technical sacrificial term for the specific action of nipping off a bird's head during sacrifice, without completely severing it from the body. This precise technique appears in Levitical instructions for bird offerings by those too poor to afford larger animals. Leviticus 1:15 describes wringing off the dove's head at the altar, while 5:8 specifies doing so 'opposite the neck' without dividing it completely. The term captures a specific ritual action distinct from slaughtering or cutting—a controlled nip that kills the bird while maintaining bodily connection for the sacrificial presentation.

(2×) The ritual action of nipping or wringing off a bird's head during sacrifice, performed without completely severing head from body. Leviticus 1:15 prescribes this for dove burnt offerings, while 5:8 specifies the technique: 'wring off its head opposite the neck but shall not divide it.' This controlled action enabled proper blood manipulation in bird sacrifices. The technical precision reflects Priestly concern for correct sacrificial procedure. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish descabezará, French/German wring-off) recognizes this as a specialized sacrificial action. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-he-shall-wring-off | es: y-descabezará | fr: et-il-devra-wring-off | de: und-er-soll-wring-weg Lev 1:15; Lev 5:8

מַלְקוֹחַ H4455a Conj-w / N-ms (7×)

Plunder, booty, or prey taken in warfare, especially the spoils of the Midianite campaign in Numbers 31

A masculine noun derived from the root laqach ('to take'), denoting plunder, booty, or prey seized in military conflict. Nearly all its occurrences cluster in Numbers 31, the account of the Israelite campaign against Midian, where the term covers the captured livestock, goods, and wealth divided between warriors and the congregation. Isaiah 49:24-25 uses it rhetorically, asking whether prey can be taken from a warrior, with God declaring he will contend with Israel's oppressors and rescue their captives. The word is often paired with shevi ('captives') and shalal ('spoil'), forming a standard vocabulary triad for the proceeds of war.

plunder, booty, prey (7×) Plunder, booty, or prey taken in warfare, denoting material spoils seized from a defeated enemy. In Numbers 31:11-12, 26-27, 32, the term is used repeatedly for the spoils of the Midianite campaign, distinguished from captives (shevi) and general spoil (shalal) and divided according to divine instruction between soldiers and the assembly. In Isaiah 49:24-25, the word appears in a rhetorical challenge about rescuing prey from a mighty captor, with God promising deliverance. Spanish 'botin' and 'presa,' alongside German 'plundern,' confirm the military-acquisition sense across languages. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-prey-of, plunder-of, prey | es: botín-de, el-botín, presa? | fr: [ומלקוח], [מלקוח], le-pillage | de: [ומלקוח], [מלקוח], der-pluendern Num 31:11; Num 31:12; Num 31:26; Num 31:27; Num 31:32

מַלְקוֹחַ H4455b N-mdc / 1cs (1×)

jaws, gums (part of mouth that seizes food)

This dual noun refers to the jaws or gums—the part of the mouth that seizes and processes food. Psalm 22:15 uses it in a graphic description of suffering: 'my tongue clings to my jaws,' depicting extreme dehydration and the approach of death. The etymology connects to taking or seizing, referencing the jaw's function in grasping food, making this a vivid anatomical term.

(1×) In the suffering psalm 22:15, the speaker's 'tongue clings to my jaws,' an image of parched mouth and death's approach. Translations vary: English 'jaws,' Spanish 'paladar' (palate), French 'butin' (plunder—likely misreading), German 'jaws.' The dual form in Hebrew indicates both sides of the mouth, and the context of thirst and dying suggests gums or jaw structure where the dried tongue sticks. PALATE MOUTH

en: to-my-jaws | es: a-mi-paladar | fr: de-butin | de: zu-mein-jaws Ps 22:15

מַלְקוֹשׁ H4456 Prep-l / N-ms (8×)

Latter rain, spring rain; the March-April showers essential for ripening grain before the harvest season.

The malqosh is the late-season rain falling in March and April, indispensable for the final maturation of grain crops before the spring harvest. It is paired with the yoreh (former or autumn rain) throughout Scripture, together marking the bookends of Israel's agricultural year (Deut 11:14; Jer 5:24; Joel 2:23). Hosea uses it as a simile for God's faithful coming: 'He will come to us like the spring rain' (Hos 6:3). Proverbs compares a king's favor to a 'spring-rain cloud' (16:15). Spanish lluvia tardia ('late rain') perfectly captures the seasonal timing that makes this word so agriculturally significant.

latter rain, spring rain (8×) The latter or spring rain, falling in March-April in the land of Israel, critical for the final ripening of grain before harvest. Consistently paired with the yoreh (former/autumn rain) to describe the complete cycle of seasonal rainfall (Deut 11:14; Jer 5:24; Joel 2:23). Used metaphorically for God's reliable coming (Hos 6:3, 'like the spring rain that waters the earth'), and for royal favor (Prov 16:15, 'like a spring-rain cloud'). Zechariah 10:1 urges prayer for this rain. Jeremiah 3:3 laments its withholding as divine judgment. Spanish lluvia tardia ('late rain') and the consistent multilingual rendering as 'spring/latter rain' confirm a unified agricultural-meteorological sense. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: and-latter-rain, and-the-spring-rain, for-spring-rain | es: como-lluvia-tardía, lluvia-tardía, para-lluvia-tardía | fr: [ומלקוש], [כמלקוש], [מלקוש] | de: [ומלקוש], [כמלקוש], [למלקוש] Deut 11:14; Job 29:23; Prov 16:15; Jer 3:3; Jer 5:24

מֶלְקָחַיִם H4457 Conj-w (6×)

Tongs or snuffers: dual-form noun for temple implements used to trim lamp wicks or handle altar coals.

A dual-form noun referring to tongs or snuffers used in Israel's sacred worship. These implements served two related but distinct purposes: lifting hot coals from the altar, as in Isaiah's dramatic temple vision where a seraph takes a burning coal with tongs (Isa 6:6), and trimming the wicks of the golden lampstand in the tabernacle and temple (Exod 25:38; 37:23; Num 4:9; 1 Kgs 7:49; 2 Chr 4:21). The dual form (melqachayim) reflects the paired arms of the tool, much like modern tongs or tweezers.

tongs, snuffers (6×) Temple implements in dual form — tongs for handling hot coals and snuffers for trimming lampstand wicks. In Isaiah 6:6 a seraph uses tongs to take a live coal from the altar; in the Pentateuchal tabernacle texts (Exod 25:38; 37:23; Num 4:9) and Solomon's temple inventory (1 Kgs 7:49; 2 Chr 4:21) they appear among the lampstand accessories. Spanish renders both 'tenazas' (tongs) and 'despabiladeras' (snuffers), capturing the functional range. The dual morphology (melqachayim) mirrors the two-armed design of the tool itself. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-its-snuffers, and-its-tongs, and-the-tongs | es: Y-sus-despabiladeras, con-tenazas, despabiladeras-de-él | fr: [במלקחים], [והמלקחים], et-le-tongs | de: [במלקחים], [והמלקחים], sein-snuffers Exod 25:38; Exod 37:23; Num 4:9; 1Kgs 7:49; 2Chr 4:21

מַלְתָּחָה H4458 Art / N-fs (1×)

wardrobe, vestments, clothing storage

This noun denotes a wardrobe or the place where royal or sacred garments were kept. In 2 Kings 10:22, Jehu commanded the keeper 'of the wardrobe' to bring out vestments for Baal worshipers before massacring them—a grim detail showing how sacred garments were stored and distributed for idolatrous ceremonies. The term refers both to the clothing collection and the official responsible for it.

(1×) The keeper 'of the wardrobe' in 2 Kings 10:22 was ordered to distribute garments for Baal worshipers. Translations uniformly identify this as wardrobe or vestment storage (English 'wardrobe', Spanish 'guardarropa'), referring to the royal or temple official who managed ceremonial clothing. The Septuagint and Vulgate confirm this was a clothing storage office, central to ancient ritual practice. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: the-wardrobe | es: el-guardarropa | fr: le-wardrobe | de: der-wardrobe 2Kgs 10:22

מְתַלְעוֹת H4459 N-fpc (1×)

teeth, incisors (possibly fangs or jaw teeth)

This plural noun refers to teeth, particularly prominent teeth, incisors, or fangs. It appears in late Hebrew always parallel with the standard word for teeth, adding emphasis or specifying a particular type. Psalm 58:6 prays 'Break the teeth in their mouths,' while Proverbs 30:14 describes a generation 'whose teeth are swords.' The term may emphasize grinding or gnashing teeth, suggesting powerful or predatory dentition.

(1×) Psalm 58:6 asks God to break 'the great teeth' of the wicked, paralleling the normal word for teeth. Cross-linguistic evidence (English 'great teeth', Spanish 'colmillos'/fangs) suggests prominent or powerful teeth—perhaps incisors, molars, or fangs. The contexts (lions in Job 29:17, violent people in Psalm 58:6) support understanding these as especially dangerous teeth, the instruments of attack. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-great-teeth-of | es: colmillos-de | fr: de-entrailles | de: der-gross-teeth-von Ps 58:6

מַמְגֵרוֹת H4460 N-fp (1×)

granaries, storehouses (for grain)

This plural noun denotes granaries or storehouses where harvested grain was kept. Joel 1:17 describes agricultural devastation: 'the granaries are desolate,' parallel to 'the storehouses are torn down' because drought destroyed the crops. The term appears only once, referring to above-ground or pit storage facilities crucial for food security in ancient agrarian economies.

(1×) Joel's drought oracle in 1:17 laments that 'granaries' lie desolate because the grain has failed. Translations consistently identify grain storage structures (English 'granaries', Spanish 'almacenes', French 'grange'). The Septuagint reads 'winepresses' (suggesting confusion with a similar root), but context and Aramaic cognates support granaries—agricultural storage buildings that stand empty in famine.

STOREHOUSE GRANARY
en: granaries | es: almacenes | fr: grange | de: [ממגרות] Joel 1:17

מִמַּד H4461 N-mpc / 3fs (1×)
measurements, dimensions (of something)
This noun refers to measurements or dimensions, particularly the physical specifications of a structure. In Job 38:5, God challenges Job with rhetorical questions about creation: 'Who set its measurements?' The context is God stretching a measuring line over the earth, making this a term for the precise dimensions and proportions designed by the divine architect when founding the cosmos.

(1×) God's rhetorical question in Job 38:5 asks who determined the earth's 'measurements.' Translations consistently render this as measurements or dimensions (English 'measurements', Spanish 'medidas'), parallel to 'stretching a line over it.' The term emphasizes the precision and intentionality of creation—God as architect who carefully measured and designed the world's proportions before constructing it. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: its-measurements | es: sus-medidas | fr: sa-ממדיה-elle | de: [ממדיה] Job 38:5

מְמוּכָן H4462 N-proper-ms (4×)
Memuchan, Persian prince and advisor to Ahasuerus
One of the seven princes of Persia and Media who had access to King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) and sat first in the kingdom (Esther 1:14). When Queen Vashti refused the king's summons, Memuchan proposed the decree deposing her and establishing the law that every man should rule in his own house (Esther 1:16-21). His counsel, driven by fear that Vashti's defiance would inspire widespread wifely disobedience, set in motion the events that brought Esther to the throne.

(4×) A proper name for a high-ranking Persian official in Ahasuerus's court. The textual tradition shows variation between the ketiv (מומכן) and qere (ממוכן), reflected in the multilingual glosses that preserve the name Memuchan/Memucan. His role as principal advisor in the Vashti affair demonstrates the Persian court's hierarchical structure and the anxiety about social order that pervaded the ruling class. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Memuchan, [qere] | es: (Memucán), Memucán, [Momkan] | fr: Memucan | de: [(ממוכן)], [[מומכן]], [ממוכן] Esth 1:14; Esth 1:16; Esth 1:21

מָמוֹת H4463 N-mpc (2×)
deaths (specific kinds of death)
A plural form emphasizing varieties or types of death, used for different manners of dying. Jeremiah 16:4 describes 'deaths by disease'—painful, lingering deaths from illness. Ezekiel 28:8 refers to 'deaths of the slain'—violent deaths in battle. The plural form suggests not multiple death events but death characterized in different ways: death by disease versus death by sword. This grammatical nuance highlights how death comes in various forms, each with its own horror. The term derives from the common verb 'to die' but the plural construction adds specificity.

(2×) Plural construct emphasizing types or manners of death. Jeremiah 16:4 describes 'deaths by diseases'—painful, wasting deaths from illness during judgment. Ezekiel 28:8 refers to 'deaths of the slain/pierced'—violent battle deaths. The plural doesn't mean dying multiple times but rather death characterized by specific causes or qualities. This nuanced usage distinguishes between death's various forms. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish muertes-de, French/German deaths-of) recognizes the qualifying, descriptive function of the plural construct. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Deaths-of, deaths-of- | es: Muertes-de, muertes-de | fr: [ממותי], bouclier | de: [ממותי] Jer 16:4; Ezek 28:8

מַמְזֵר H4464 N-ms (2×)
illegitimate child, bastard; specifically offspring of incest or forbidden union; figuratively mixed population
This term designates someone born from a forbidden sexual union, particularly incest. In Deuteronomy's holiness code, such individuals were excluded from the assembly of Israel for ten generations—a severe restriction reflecting the seriousness of sexual boundaries in covenant community. The word also appears metaphorically in Zechariah's oracle against Philistia, where it likely refers to a mixed or mongrel population lacking legitimate standing. The term carried both legal and social stigma, marking those whose origins violated Israel's purity laws.

(2×) A person born from an illicit sexual relationship, especially incest. Deuteronomy 23:2 legislates their exclusion from the assembly, while Zechariah 9:6 applies the term figuratively to Ashdod's mixed inhabitants after judgment. The multilingual glosses reveal interesting variations: Spanish distinguishes 'bastardo' and 'mestizo' (suggesting racial mixing), English uses 'mongrel' and 'illegitimate one', while French and German often transliterate rather than translate—perhaps reflecting cultural discomfort with the concept. The Septuagint's use of 'allogeneis' (foreigners) in Zechariah suggests the figurative sense of illegitimate mixture. SEXUAL IMMORALITY
en: a-mongrel, illegitimate-one | es: bastardo, mestizo | fr: illegitimate-un, mamzer | de: [ממזר], illegitimate-eins Deut 23:2; Zech 9:6

מִמְכָּר H4465 N-ms (10×)
Sale or transaction of property; also the merchandise or goods being sold
A noun from the root makar ('to sell') referring primarily to the act of selling, especially land transactions governed by Jubilee legislation. In Leviticus 25, the word appears repeatedly in the context of property redemption rights, where what was sold must eventually return to its original owner. The term can also refer concretely to the merchandise itself, as when Nehemiah confronted traders who brought their wares to sell on the Sabbath (Neh 13:20). Spanish 'venta' and 'vendido' preserve this same dual range of transaction and thing transacted.

1. sale, selling (9×) The act or transaction of selling, used almost exclusively in the Jubilee legislation of Leviticus 25. Here the noun describes the sale itself – the transfer of property rights – and the legal conditions under which redemption or reversion must occur. The phrase mimkar bayit (Lev 25:33) denotes a 'house-sale' as a compound legal concept. English glosses like 'a-sale' and 'his-sale,' along with Spanish 'la-venta-de' and French 'sale-de,' all center on the transactional meaning rather than the goods exchanged. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-sale, his-sale, his-sales | es: la-venta-de, lo-vendido, su-venta | fr: sale-de, sale-de-, son-sale | de: [המכר], ein-sale, sale-von Lev 25:14; Lev 25:25; Lev 25:27; Lev 25:28; Lev 25:29

2. merchandise, ware (1×) The concrete goods or merchandise put up for sale, shifting from the transaction to the objects being traded. Attested in Nehemiah 13:20, where merchants and sellers of 'all merchandise' camped outside Jerusalem's walls on the Sabbath. English renders this as 'merchandise,' and Spanish as 'mercancia,' distinguishing the tangible wares from the abstract act of selling found in the Leviticus passages. SELLING AND COMMERCE
en: merchandise | es: mercancía | fr: [ממכר] | de: [ממכר] Neh 13:20

מִמְכֶּרֶת H4466 N-fsc (1×)
sale, act or process of selling
This noun denotes the act or transaction of selling. Leviticus 25:42 uses it in the prohibition against selling Israelites in the manner of selling slaves: 'they shall not be sold in a sale of a slave.' The term emphasizes the selling process itself rather than just the result, highlighting the legal and ethical boundaries around treating covenant people as commodities.

(1×) The Holiness Code's provision in Leviticus 25:42 forbids selling Israelites 'in the sale of a slave.' The construction phrase 'sale of' (English 'sale of', Spanish 'como venta de'/as a sale of) emphasizes the transaction type—Israelites, as Yahweh's servants, must not be subjected to the kind of selling process used for chattel slaves, protecting their dignity even in servitude. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sale-of | es: como-venta-de | fr: sale-de | de: sale-von Lev 25:42

מַמְלָכָה H4467 Conj-w / N-fp (117×)
Kingdom, realm; also the abstract exercise of kingship, royal sovereignty, or dominion.
Mamlakhah denotes both the concrete territory over which a king rules and the abstract authority of royal office. The vast majority of its 117 occurrences refer to specific kingdoms or realms – from Nimrod's founding domain in Genesis 10:10 to the divided monarchies of Israel and Judah. Translations converge remarkably: English 'kingdom,' Spanish 'reino,' French 'royaume,' German 'Konigreich.' A small but important cluster, especially in Chronicles and Jeremiah, shifts toward the abstract sense of kingship or royal dominion – the right and power to reign rather than the land itself. Exodus 19:6's 'kingdom of priests' beautifully straddles both: Israel as God's realm and as a people exercising priestly sovereignty.

1. kingdom, realm (112×) A political territory, state, or nation under royal rule (112x) – the concrete domain over which a king exercises authority. This covers everything from Sihon's realm (Deut 3:4, 10, 13) to the great kingdoms of the earth (Ps 46:6; Isa 14:16). All major translation languages use concrete territorial terms: Spanish 'el reino,' French 'le royaume,' German 'das Konigreich.' The plural 'mamlakhot' appears in sweeping panoramas of world powers (Deut 28:25; 2 Chr 32:15), often paralleled with 'goy' (nation) and 'am' (people). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-kingdom | es: el-reino | fr: le-royaume, royaume | de: das-Koenigreich, der-kingdom 1Sam 27:5; 1Sam 28:17; 2Sam 3:10; 1Kgs 11:11; 1Kgs 11:13

2. kingship, royal dominion (5×) The abstract exercise of royal authority, sovereignty, or reign (5x) – focusing on the office and function of ruling rather than territory. Second Chronicles clusters several instances: Jehoram's consolidation of 'the kingship' (2 Chr 21:4), Ahaziah having none strong enough to retain 'the kingdom' as royal power (2 Chr 22:9), and Abijah's claim that Judah holds legitimate 'kingship' (2 Chr 13:8). Spanish captures this with 'reinado' alongside the more territorial 'reino,' and Jeremiah 27:1 and 28:1 use it for the beginning of a reign rather than a geographic boundary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-kingship, kingdom-of, reign-of | es: para-el-reino, reinado-de, reino-de | fr: royaume | de: Koenigreich, zu-Koenigreich 2Chr 13:8; 2Chr 21:4; 2Chr 22:9; Jer 27:1; Jer 28:1

מַמְלָכוּת H4468 N-fsc (9×)
Kingdom, reign, or royal dominion — the territory or sovereign authority of a king's rule.
This feminine noun is a variant form of the more common mamlakhah, denoting a kingdom, dominion, or reign. Most of its occurrences cluster in Joshua 13, where it describes the kingdoms of the Transjordanian rulers Og and Sihon — territories allocated to Israel's eastern tribes. In 1 Samuel 15:28, Samuel dramatically announces that Yahweh has torn the mamlakhut of Israel from Saul. Hosea 1:4 prophesies that God will bring an end to the kingdom of the house of Israel. Jeremiah 26:1 uses it temporally: 'at the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim.'

kingdom, reign, dominion (9×) A kingdom, reign, or royal dominion — the sphere of a king's territorial rule or the period of sovereign authority. Spanish 'reino/reinado' and French 'royaume' capture both the spatial and temporal dimensions. Joshua 13 accounts for six of nine occurrences, all describing the Transjordanian kingdoms of Og king of Bashan (13:12, 30, 31) and Sihon king of the Amorites (13:21, 27). The remaining uses shift from geography to theology: God tears royal power from Saul (1 Sam 15:28), promises to end the kingdom of Israel (Hos 1:4), and dates events by a king's reign (Jer 26:1). The variant form mamlakhut parallels mamlakhah without clear semantic distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: kingdom-of, reign-of | es: reinado-de, reino-de | fr: de-royaumes, kingdom-de, royaume-de | de: Koenigreiche, kingdom-von Josh 13:12; Josh 13:21; Josh 13:27; Josh 13:30; Josh 13:31

מִמְסָךְ H4469 N-ms (2×)
mixed wine, spiced wine
Wine that has been mixed or blended, typically with spices or other substances to enhance flavor or potency. Proverbs 23:30 warns against those who linger over 'mixed wine,' implying it's particularly intoxicating or seductive. Isaiah 65:11 condemns those who 'fill bowls of mixed wine' for the pagan deity Meni—indicating its use in idolatrous libations. The mixing process could make wine stronger, more aromatic, or more appealing, but also more dangerous for excess. The term appears alongside warnings about wine's intoxicating effects and idolatrous misuse.

(2×) Wine that has been mixed with spices or other substances. Proverbs 23:30 uses it in a warning against excessive drinking—those who seek 'mixed wine' are courting trouble. Isaiah 65:11 describes pouring 'mixed wine' as a libation to the god Meni—part of idolatrous worship. The mixing process enhanced wine's flavor and potency, making it both more desirable and more dangerous. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish vino-mezclado/libación, French/Hebrew preserved forms) identifies this as specially prepared wine for drinking or ritual. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND
en: mixed-wine | es: libación, vino-mezclado | fr: [ממסך], ממסך | de: [ממסך] Prov 23:30; Isa 65:11

מֶמֶר H4470 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
bitterness, grief (emotional pain)
This noun denotes bitterness or grief, the emotional anguish that certain situations cause. Proverbs 17:25 warns that a foolish son brings 'bitterness to her who bore him,' paralleling 'vexation to his father.' The term captures the deep emotional pain and disappointment parents experience when children reject wisdom, emphasizing the relational and emotional consequences of foolishness.

(1×) A fool's impact on his parents in Proverbs 17:25 includes being 'bitterness to her who bore him.' Translations uniformly recognize this as emotional bitterness or grief (English 'bitterness', Spanish 'amargura'). The parallelism with 'vexation' and the context of parental disappointment show this is anguished sorrow—the bitter emotional pain of watching one's child destroy himself through folly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-bitterness | es: y-amargura | fr: et-וממר | de: [וממר] Prov 17:25

מַמְרֵא H4471 N-proper-fs (10×)
Mamre — a personal name and place near Hebron, associated with Abraham's dwelling and burial site Mamre functions as both a personal name and a place name in Genesis, always tied to Abraham's story. As a place, it refers to the 'terebinths of Mamre' near Hebron where Abraham settled (Gen 13:18), received the three visitors who announced Isaac's birth (18:1), and where the patriarchal burial cave of Machpelah was located (23:17, 19; 25:9; 49:30; 50:13). As a person, Mamre is an Amorite ally of Abraham in the campaign against the four kings (Gen 14:13, 24). The Septuagint renders it consistently as Mambrē, and all major translation traditions — Spanish, French, German — preserve the name unchanged, reflecting its deep roots in patriarchal geography.

Mamre (10×) A proper noun serving both as a personal name (an Amorite confederate of Abraham, Gen 14:13, 24) and as a place name near Hebron associated with Abraham's residence and the patriarchal burial ground. The expression ʾēlōnê mamrēʾ ('terebinths of Mamre,' Gen 13:18; 18:1) marks Abraham's primary dwelling. In the Priestly source, Mamre identifies the location of the cave of Machpelah where Sarah, Abraham, Isaac, Rebekah, Leah, and Jacob were buried (Gen 23:17, 19; 25:9; 35:27; 49:30; 50:13). The LXX Mambrē and all modern translations — Spanish 'Mamre,' French 'Mamré,' German 'Mamre' — keep the name virtually unchanged across traditions. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Mamre, and-Mamre | es: Mamre, y-Mamre | fr: Mamré, et-Mamré | de: Mamre, Mamre-ist, Mamres Gen 13:18; Gen 14:13; Gen 14:24; Gen 18:1; Gen 23:17

מַמְרוֹר H4472 N-mp (1×)

bitter things, bitter experiences

This plural noun refers to bitter things or experiences—not physical bitterness but metaphorical suffering and hardship. Job 9:18 complains that God 'sates me with bitter things,' meaning overwhelming bitter experiences rather than bitter herbs. The term parallels the bitter herb 'maror' but applies figuratively to life's harsh trials, depicting how Job feels force-fed suffering by divine providence.

(1×) Job's complaint in 9:18 that God 'sates me with bitter things' uses this plural for overwhelming bitter experiences. While one translation reads 'bitterness,' the plural form suggests multiple bitter trials or hardships. The imagery of being force-fed bitterness (parallel to Lamentations 3:15's bitter herb) depicts Job's sense that God fills his life with harsh, grievous experiences one after another. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-bitterness | es: amarguras. | fr: ממררים | de: [ממררים] Job 9:18

מְמִשַּׁח H4473 N-msc (1×)

anointed (adjective); possibly 'expansive' or 'measuring' (uncertain)

This rare and disputed adjective appears only in Ezekiel 28:14, describing a cherub as either 'anointed' or possibly 'expansive/far-reaching.' The phrase 'anointed cherub who covers' (traditional interpretation) suggests a sacred guardian consecrated for protecting God's holiness. Alternative readings propose 'far-covering' based on Aramaic cognates meaning measure or expand. The textual and lexical difficulties leave the precise meaning uncertain.

(1×) Ezekiel 28:14's 'anointed cherub' is textually and lexically uncertain. Traditional translations follow 'anointed' (English 'anointed', Spanish 'ungido'), suggesting consecration for a guardian role. However, BDB notes the Vulgate's 'extentus' (expansive) and Aramaic 'measure,' which would yield 'far-reaching cherub.' Some scholars consider the phrase a gloss. The multilingual evidence shows translators divided, with most preserving 'anointed' while acknowledging difficulty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: anointed | es: ungido | fr: onction | de: [ממשח] Ezek 28:14

מִמְשָׁל H4474 N-fsc / 3ms (5×)

dominion, ruling authority; also concretely, rulers

Mimshal denotes the exercise of sovereign authority or dominion, and by extension can refer concretely to those who hold such power. In Daniel 11:3, a mighty king arises and rules with 'great dominion,' and in 11:5 the term describes the extent of a ruler's authority. The concrete plural usage in 1 Chronicles 26:6 designates the 'rulers' or leading men within Obed-edom's household. Spanish dominio and gobernantes capture the abstract and concrete senses respectively, while French gouvernement preserves the political nuance.

(5×) Abstract sovereign authority or dominion — the exercise of ruling power over a territory or people. Used as a cognate accusative with mashal ('to rule') in Dan 11:3, describing a mighty king's vast dominion, and predicatively in Dan 11:5 of one whose authority exceeds another's. Spanish dominio and French gouvernement both render the political authority sense. Also attested in 2 Kgs 20:13 and 2 Chr 8:6 for royal administrative domains. DOMINION AND RULE

en: a-dominion, his-dominion, the-rulers | es: dominio, los-gobernantes, su-dominio | fr: [הממשלים], [ממשלתו], gouvernement | de: [הממשלים], [ממשל], [ממשלתו] 2Kgs 20:13; 1Chr 26:6; 2Chr 8:6; Dan 11:3; Dan 11:5

מֶמְשָׁלָה H4475 N-fsc / 3ms (15×)

Dominion, rule, realm — sovereign authority or jurisdiction exercised by God, kings, or celestial bodies

This feminine noun (מֶמְשָׁלָה) captures the active exercise of ruling power and the territory or sphere over which it extends. Genesis 1:16 assigns the sun 'dominion over the day' and the moon 'dominion over the night,' making this one of the first nouns of authority in Scripture. Human political rule appears in Solomon's 'land of his dominion' (1 Kgs 9:19) and Sennacherib's imperial display (2 Chr 32:9). The Psalms elevate the concept to its highest register: God's 'dominion' spans all his works (Ps 103:22), and his 'kingdom' is an everlasting dominion (Ps 145:13). Micah 4:8 promises restored sovereignty to Zion. The word thus bridges cosmic order, political power, and eschatological hope.

dominion, rule, authority (15×) Sovereign authority, dominion, or jurisdiction — whether exercised by celestial bodies (Gen 1:16, the sun and moon's 'rule' over day and night), human kings (1 Kgs 9:19, Solomon's realm; 2 Chr 32:9, Sennacherib's imperial might; Jer 34:1, kingdoms under Nebuchadnezzar), or God himself (Ps 103:22; 114:2; 145:13). Micah 4:8 prophesies the return of former 'dominion' to the daughter of Zion. The noun encompasses both the act of ruling and the domain over which rule is exercised, making it a versatile term for political, cosmic, and theological sovereignty. DOMINION AND RULE

en: His-dominion, and-your-authority, and-your-dominion | es: dominio-de, dominio-de-él, dominio-su | fr: [וממשלתך], [ממשלת], [ממשלתו] | de: [הממשלה], [וממשלתך], [ממשלת] Gen 1:16; 1Kgs 9:19; 2Chr 32:9; Ps 103:22

מִמְשָׁק H4476 N-msc (1×)

possession, place of possession (of plants)

This noun appears only in Zephaniah 2:9 in a highly uncertain text, apparently referring to a 'possession of chickpeas' or perhaps a place where nettles grow. The phrase describes Moab's future desolation—a land overgrown with weeds. However, the text is likely corrupt, with the Septuagint reading 'Damascus' instead. Modern scholars propose various emendations, making any confident translation provisional at best.

(1×) Zephaniah 2:9's judgment on Moab includes this word in a phrase about desolate vegetation. BDB suggests 'possession of chickpeas,' while translations vary (English 'possession of', Spanish 'posesión de'). However, the Septuagint's 'Damascus,' alternative proposals like 'thistles,' and scholarly admission of probable textual corruption all indicate this is one of Scripture's most uncertain words—we simply don't know what the original text said. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-possession-of | es: posesión-de | fr: domination | de: [ממשק] Zeph 2:9

מַמְתַּקִּים H4477 N-mp (2×)

sweet things, sweets, delicacies

Sweet-tasting items, particularly sweet foods and drinks. Nehemiah 8:10 commands the people to 'drink sweet drinks' (alongside eating rich foods) during the joyful celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles after Ezra's reading of the Law. Song of Songs 5:16 uses the term metaphorically: the beloved's mouth is 'sweetness itself'—his kisses are utterly sweet. The plural form suggests various sweet things or an abundance of sweetness. Both occurrences associate sweetness with delight, pleasure, and celebration—whether physical refreshment or romantic affection.

(2×) Sweet-tasting things, particularly sweet drinks or foods. Nehemiah 8:10 instructs celebrants to 'drink sweet drinks' during the festival—beverages that delight the palate as part of covenant renewal joy. Song of Songs 5:16 uses it metaphorically: the lover's palate/mouth is 'sweetness,' meaning his kisses are utterly sweet. The plural emphasizes variety or abundance of sweet things. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish dulzuras, French douceurs) captures both literal sweetness and the metaphorical delight it represents. SWEET SWEETNESS

en: sweet-drinks, sweetness | es: dulzuras | fr: [ממתקים], douceurs, | de: [ממתקים] Neh 8:10; Song 5:16

מָן H4478a N-ms (13×)

Manna — the miraculous bread-like substance God provided daily during Israel's wilderness wandering

The mysterious food that sustained Israel for forty years in the desert, appearing each morning with the dew as fine, white, flake-like granules tasting of honey wafers (Exod 16:14, 31). When the Israelites first saw it they asked 'What is it?' (מָן הוּא, Exod 16:15), and the name stuck. God used manna as a daily test of faith and obedience — gather only what you need, gather double before the Sabbath (Exod 16:16–26). Moses preserved a jar of it before the LORD as a memorial (Exod 16:33), and Deuteronomy reflects theologically that God humbled Israel with manna to teach them that 'man does not live by bread alone' (Deut 8:3, 16). The manna ceased the day after Israel ate the produce of Canaan (Josh 5:12).

manna (13×) The divinely supplied food of the wilderness period, a bread-like substance that appeared with the morning dew (Exod 16:14; Num 11:9) and tasted like wafers with honey (Exod 16:31) or fresh oil (Num 11:8). Central to Israel's formation narratives: daily provision and Sabbath discipline (Exod 16:15–35), memorial preservation (Exod 16:33), theological lesson on dependence on God's word (Deut 8:3, 16), cessation upon entering Canaan (Josh 5:12), and retrospective praise (Neh 9:20; Ps 78:24). Multilingual glosses universally retain the loanword: eng 'manna', spa 'mana', fra 'manne', deu 'Manna'. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-the-manna, and-your-manna, manna | es: Y-el-maná, con-maná, el-man | fr: [ומנך], et-le-manna, le-manna | de: Manna, [ומנך], der-Manna Exod 16:31; Exod 16:33; Exod 16:35; Num 11:6

מָן H4478b Interrog (1×)

what? (interrogative, popular etymology for 'manna')

This rare interrogative appears only in Exodus 16:15 when the Israelites first see manna and ask 'What is it?' The question became the popular etymology for the word 'manna' itself. While standard Hebrew uses מָה for 'what,' this מָן reflects later Aramaic influence or represents dialectal variation. The folk etymology plays on the people's bewildered question when encountering the miraculous bread from heaven.

(1×) When Israel first sees manna in Exodus 16:15, they ask each other 'מָן הוּא'—'What is it?' This interrogative (late Aramaic 'what') became the basis for the word 'manna,' a folk etymology explaining the name through the people's question. Translations vary: English 'what' captures the interrogative; Spanish 'man' preserves the transliterated sound. The question of bewildered discovery became the name of the mysterious bread itself. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: what | es: man | fr: quoi | de: was Exod 16:15

מַן H4479 Interrog (10×)

Who? whoever — an Aramaic interrogative and indefinite relative pronoun used in Ezra and Daniel

This is the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew mî, serving as both an interrogative ('who?') and an indefinite relative pronoun ('whoever'). It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. Nebuchadnezzar's defiant challenge man-hû' 'ĕlāh ('who is the god who...?' Dan 3:15) is one of its most dramatic uses, while the compound man-dî creates the indefinite 'whoever' in royal decrees (Dan 3:6, 11; 5:7; 6:8). The pronoun connects to a wide Semitic family — Syriac man, Arabic man, Old Aramaic mn — all descended from a common interrogative root. French glosses sometimes reduce it to 'de' or 'qui,' while Spanish preserves the full interrogative force with '¿Quién?'

who? whoever (Aramaic interrogative/relative pronoun) (10×) An Aramaic interrogative pronoun meaning 'who?' and, in combination with dî, an indefinite relative pronoun meaning 'whoever.' Used in Ezra 5:3, 4, 9 for official Persian inquiries ('who gave you authority?') and throughout Daniel for both direct questions and conditional decrees. Nebuchadnezzar's man-hû' 'ĕlāh dî ('who is the god who…?' Dan 3:15) uses the strengthened form with hû' for rhetorical emphasis. The compound man-dî ('whoever,' Dan 3:6, 11; 5:7; 6:8) introduces conditional clauses in royal proclamations. Cognate with Syriac man, Arabic man, and Hebrew mî, showing deep Semitic continuity. Spanish '¿Quién?' captures the interrogative force directly. INTERROGATIVE WHO

en: and-to-whom-, and-who-, and-whoever- | es: Y-quien, y-a-quien, ¿Quién- | fr: de, et-de, et-qui? | de: [מן], und-wem, und-wer Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:9; Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11

H4480 Conj-w / Prep / 3fp (5×)

from, out of, part of (Aramaic prepositional form used with pronominal suffixes)

An Aramaic prepositional form meaning 'from' or 'part of,' appearing in both the Qere readings and Ketiv variants. In Daniel 2:41-42 it describes the mixed composition of the statue's feet — partly strong, partly brittle — while in Job 38:1 and 40:6 it introduces the divine speeches 'from' the whirlwind. The multilingual glosses reflect its partitive and ablative force: Spanish renders it 'de' and 'parte-de-ellos,' French as 'd'eux,' capturing the 'from among them' nuance.

(5×) Partitive and ablative preposition: 'from, out of, part of.' Used to express origin, separation, or partial membership. In Daniel's vision of the mixed kingdom (Dan 2:41-42), it conveys the partitive idea of composition — 'partly of iron, partly of clay.' Spanish 'y-parte-de-ellos' and English 'part-of-them' confirm this partitive reading across all five occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:and-part-of-them), [what-they], from | es: (Q:de), (y-parte-de-ellos), [ketiv:de-ellos] | fr: [ומנהין], d'eux, de | de: [(מן)], [ומנהין], [מהם] Job 38:1; Job 40:6; Ezek 8:6; Dan 2:41; Dan 2:42

מִן־ H4480a Prep / 1cs (1226×)

From, out of, away from; also comparative 'more than,' partitive 'some of,' and causal 'because of, on account of.'

The preposition min is one of the most fundamental function words in Biblical Hebrew, expressing the core idea of separation or origin — 'from,' 'out of,' 'away from.' With over 1,200 occurrences in this inflectional subset alone, it is the primary marker of source and departure in the language. But min is far more than a spatial preposition: its semantic range extends into comparison ('greater than,' the so-called min of comparison), partition ('some of,' the partitive min), and even causation ('because of'). These secondary senses are not mere contextual shading but genuine grammatical functions recognized by every Hebrew grammar since the medieval grammarians. The cognates across Semitic — Arabic min, Aramaic min, Ethiopic 'em — confirm that this polysemy is ancient and inherited.

1. source or separation (1198×) The dominant ablative sense expressing source, origin, or separation: 'from,' 'out of,' 'away from' — accounting for approximately 1,198 of 1,226 occurrences. This is the bedrock spatial meaning: Adam is formed 'from' the dust (Gen 2:7), Eve is taken 'from' Adam's side (Gen 2:22), Cain's offering rises 'from' the ground (Gen 4:10). The preposition governs both physical departure ('he went out from the city') and figurative origin ('from the mouth of the LORD'). Arabic min, Spanish de/desde, French de, German von/aus, and Korean -에서 (-eseo) all map consistently to this ablative function. The first-person singular suffix form (mimmenni, 'from me') is included in this lemma subset. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from, from- | es: de, de-, desde | fr: de, de- | de: aus-, vom-, von Gen 2:6; Gen 2:9; Gen 2:22; Gen 3:17; Gen 4:10

2. comparative (more than) (22×) The comparative use, known traditionally as the min of comparison: 'more than,' 'greater than' — approximately 22 occurrences. In Gen 26:16 Abimelech tells Isaac 'you are mightier than we'; in Exod 1:9 Pharaoh warns that the Israelites are 'more numerous and mightier than we'; in Deut 1:28 the Anakim are 'greater than we.' Spanish de ('que nosotros'), French plus que, and German als all shift to explicit comparative markers. Korean -보다 (-boda, 'compared to') and Arabic akthara min ('more than') both deploy dedicated comparative morphology. This is a fully grammaticalized secondary function of min, not merely a contextual nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her, more-than, more-than- | es: de, de-, de-nosotros | fr: de, plus-que, plus-que- | de: als-, als-uns, für-uns Gen 26:16; Exod 1:9; Num 13:31; Deut 1:28; Deut 11:23

3. partitive (some of) (3×) The partitive use meaning 'some of,' 'part of,' 'one of' — approximately 3 occurrences in this inflectional subset (Deut 9:14; 2 Chr 25:13; Job 4:12). In Deut 9:14 God declares he will make Moses 'a nation mightier than they' — but the construction implies selection from among nations. In Job 4:12 Eliphaz says 'a word was brought to me stealthily, and my ear caught a whisper of it' — partitive 'some portion of.' Spanish de ellos, French d'eux, and German von ihnen all use partitive constructions. The small count reflects how infrequently the partitive function is unambiguously foregrounded in these particular inflected forms, though the partitive min is more common across the full lemma. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: of-it, of-them, than-them | es: de-ella, de-ellos, que-ellos | fr: de-lui, que-eux, von-ils | de: als-ihnen, von, von-sie Deut 9:14; 2Chr 25:13; Job 4:12

4. causal or concerning (3×) The causal or thematic use meaning 'because of,' 'on account of,' 'concerning' — approximately 3 occurrences (1 Sam 17:50; 2 Kgs 6:1; Ps 65:3). In 1 Sam 17:50 David prevails 'without a sword in his hand' (the min here expresses means/source-of-action); in 2 Kgs 6:1 the prophets say the place 'is too narrow for us' (min expressing cause of constraint); in Ps 65:3 'iniquities prevail over me' — the min marking the overwhelming cause. Spanish sobre/para, French au-dessus/pour, and German ueber/fuer all shift away from ablative vocabulary toward causal or thematic prepositions, confirming a genuine sense boundary. This usage shades into instrumental and circumstantial territory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-me, for-us, over | es: para-nosotros, sobre-, sobre-mí | fr: au-dessus, de-de, pour-nous | de: fuer-uns, ueber, zu-von 1Sam 17:50; 2Kgs 6:1; Ps 65:3

מִן H4480b N-msc / 3ms (1×)

portion, share (noun; textually uncertain)

This rare noun, possibly meaning 'portion' or 'share,' appears in Psalm 68:23, though the text is widely considered corrupt. Most modern scholars emend it to 'his portion' using a different Hebrew form. The multilingual glosses show confusion, with translations offering 'from,' 'portion,' and other guesses. The textual uncertainty makes confident interpretation impossible—this represents one of the Hebrew Bible's many difficult readings where the original text remains disputed.

(1×) Psalm 68:23's text is problematic, with this word appearing as 'מִנָּהוּ' (its portion). However, scholars widely agree the text is corrupt and propose emending to 'מְנָחוֹ' (his portion) for better sense. The confusion in translations (English 'its portion,' French/German showing preposition 'from') reflects the difficulty. This is a textual crux where we lack certainty about what the psalmist originally wrote. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-portion | es: su-porción | fr: de-de | de: sein-als Ps 68:23

מִן H4481 Conj-w / Prep (114×)

Aramaic preposition: from, out of, indicating source or origin; also partitive 'some of' and rarely adversative 'against'

The Aramaic preposition min functions as the workhorse marker of source, separation, and origin in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. Parallel to its Hebrew cognate, it handles spatial ('from there,' Ezra 6:6), temporal ('from the days of,' Ezra 4:15), and causal ('because of') relationships with equal ease. A distinctive partitive use — 'some of them' — features prominently in Daniel's statue vision (Dan 2:33, 41-42), where the feet are 'partly of iron and partly of clay.' The rare adversative sense ('against him,' Ezra 7:26) rounds out its semantic range.

1. from, out of (source/origin) (103×) The primary ablative-source sense: 'from,' 'out of,' 'since,' 'because of,' marking spatial, temporal, or causal origin. This covers the vast majority of occurrences across Ezra and Daniel, appearing with various pronominal suffixes (minneh 'from him,' minhon 'from them') and optional conjunctive waw. Spanish de, French de, and German von uniformly render this sense. Key passages include Daniel 4:10 ('from heaven'), Ezra 5:12 ('from the hand of'), and Daniel 7:4 ('from the earth'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by, from, from- | es: de, de-, del | fr: de | de: von, wer Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:12

2. partitive: some of, part of (10×) The partitive sense: 'some of,' 'part of,' indicating a portion or subset of a larger whole. Daniel's statue vision provides the classic examples — the feet 'part of iron and part of clay' (Dan 2:33, 41, 42), appearing in both qere and ketiv readings. English 'part of them' and Spanish parte de ellos capture this precisely. German von ihnen ('of them') and the French forms preserve the partitive nuance. This sense requires contextual determination, as the same form can be ablative or partitive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:and-part-of-them), (qere:part-of-them), [ketiv:and-part-of-them] | es: (parte-de-ellos), (y-parte-de-ellos), [parte-de-ellos] | fr: [ומנהין], [מנהין], [מנהן] | de: und-von, und-von-ihnen, von Dan 2:33; Dan 2:41

3. against, upon (adversative) (1×) A rare adversative sense: 'against' or 'upon,' expressing opposition or hostile action rather than origin. Ezra 7:26 provides the sole clear instance, prescribing punishment 'upon him' who disobeys the law. English 'on him' and Spanish contra el ('against him') mark the semantic shift from source to target. This usage, while marginal, parallels the occasional adversative min found in Biblical Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: on-him | es: contra-él | fr: de | de: von Ezra 7:26

מִן H4482 Prep (2×)

strings (of a musical instrument)

The strings of a stringed instrument, likely harp or lyre strings. This rare musical term appears in two psalms describing musical worship. Psalm 45:8 (in a difficult textual context) may refer to music 'from strings' making the king glad. Psalm 150:4 clearly commands praising God 'with strings'—stringed instruments as part of the full orchestra of worship. The term likely derives from Aramaic vocabulary for 'hair' or 'string,' reflecting the material used for ancient instrument strings. The rarity of the term has led to some textual uncertainty.

(2×) Strings of musical instruments (harps, lyres). Psalm 45:8 possibly refers to stringed music, though the text is challenging. Psalm 150:4 clearly commands praising God 'with strings,' part of the comprehensive call to worship with all instruments. The term likely comes from Aramaic vocabulary for hair/string, indicating the string material. Its rarity (only 2x) makes translation uncertain in some contexts. Cross-linguistic evidence shows attempts at 'strings' (Spanish cuerdas, German Saiten) while some preserve uncertainty about the exact meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-which, with-strings | es: con-cuerdas, desde-donde | fr: dans-nombre, de-nombre | de: bei-welcher, mit-Saiten Ps 45:8; Ps 150:4

מְנָה H4483 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (5×)

to number, reckon; to appoint, assign (Aramaic verb used of divine decree and royal commission)

This Aramaic verb carries two distinct but related meanings: counting or reckoning, and appointing or assigning. Its most memorable appearance is in the handwriting on the wall — 'God has numbered your kingdom' (Dan 5:26) — where numbering implies bringing to an end. In its administrative sense, Nebuchadnezzar 'appointed' officials (Dan 2:24, 49; 3:12), and Ezra was commissioned to 'appoint' judges (Ezra 7:25). The Spanish glosses capture both sides well: 'ha-contado' (has counted) alongside 'nombra' (appoint).

(5×) To number, reckon, bring to account. In Dan 5:26 (mene, mene), God has 'numbered' the days of Belshazzar's kingdom — i.e., tallied them to their end. French 'compter' and Spanish 'ha-contado' consistently reflect this reckoning sense, emphasizing finality and divine judgment rather than mere arithmetic. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: and-he-appointed, appoint, appointed | es: ha-contado, había-designado, nombra | fr: [מנ], compter, et-compter | de: [ומנ], [מנה], [מנ] Ezra 7:25; Dan 2:24; Dan 2:49; Dan 3:12; Dan 5:26

מְנָא H4484 N-ms (3×)

mene (Aramaic: 'numbered' or 'mina,' word from handwriting on wall)

An Aramaic word appearing in the mysterious handwriting on the wall at Belshazzar's feast. 'MENE' appears twice in the inscription (Daniel 5:25) and receives interpretation once (5:26). The word involves wordplay: it can mean 'numbered' (from the verb to number) or 'mina' (a weight measure). Daniel interprets it as 'God has numbered your kingdom and brought it to an end.' The double occurrence emphasizes certainty and finality of the divine decree.

(3×) This term appears as a transliterated Aramaic word 'MENE' in most translations, preserving the mystery and drama of the original scene. Daniel 5:25 records it written twice on the palace wall. Daniel 5:26 provides the interpretation based on the verbal root 'to number'—God has numbered Belshazzar's days and the kingdom's days, finding them complete. That very night the prophecy was fulfilled as Babylon fell to Persian forces, demonstrating divine sovereignty over earthly kingdoms. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: MENE | es: MENE | fr: Noa | de: [מנא] Dan 5:25; Dan 5:26

מַנְגִּינָה H4485 N-fsc / 3mp (1×)
mocking song, derisive song (object of ridicule)
This noun denotes a mocking or derisive song—the kind of taunting verse that enemies compose about the defeated. Lamentations 3:63 laments 'I am their mocking song,' meaning the suffering speaker has become the subject of enemies' scornful lyrics. The term combines music with derision, showing how poetry and song could function as powerful tools of social ridicule and psychological warfare in the ancient world.

(1×) The sufferer in Lamentations 3:63 complains of being 'their mocking song,' the subject of enemies' derisive verses. The Hebrew connects to the root for mocking or deriding, indicating songs composed specifically to taunt and humiliate. Cross-linguistic renderings (English 'mocking song,' Spanish 'canción'/song) confirm this is sung ridicule—enemies made the speaker the butt of their satirical ballads. SONGS AND HYMNS
en: their-mocking-song | es: su-canción | fr: [מנגינתם] | de: [מנגינתם] Lam 3:63

מַנְדַּע H4486 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (4×)
knowledge, understanding (Aramaic)
An Aramaic noun denoting knowledge or the capacity to know, appearing exclusively in Daniel. God 'gives knowledge to those who have understanding' (Daniel 2:21), establishing him as the source of all wisdom. When Nebuchadnezzar's sanity returned after his period of madness, 'my understanding returned to me' (Daniel 4:34, 36). Daniel possessed 'understanding to interpret dreams' (Daniel 5:12). The term emphasizes not just factual knowledge but the faculty of understanding—the cognitive capacity to comprehend.

(4×) Mental capacity for knowledge and understanding, particularly as a divine gift. All four occurrences in Daniel emphasize knowledge as something granted by God—whether to Daniel for interpretation or restored to Nebuchadnezzar after judgment. The multilingual glosses ('knowledge,' 'understanding,' 'conocimiento,' 'entendimiento') reflect the term's dual emphasis on both the content of knowledge and the faculty that apprehends it. KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING
en: and-knowledge, and-my-understanding, my-understanding | es: mi-entendimiento, y-conocimiento, y-mi-entendimiento | fr: et-sagesse, sagesse | de: [ומנדע], [ומנדעא], [ומנדעי] Dan 2:21; Dan 4:34; Dan 4:36; Dan 5:12

מָנָה H4487 V-Qal-Imp-ms (28×)
To count, number, reckon; to appoint, assign, or destine; passively, to be counted or be appointed.
Manah is one of those compact Hebrew verbs that bridges the concrete and the administrative. At its most tangible, it describes counting dust particles that cannot be numbered (Gen 13:16), tallying money at the temple (2 Kgs 12:10), and God himself numbering the stars and calling them each by name (Ps 147:4). But a natural semantic step — from counting to assigning, from numbering to appointing — gives the verb a second life in administrative and divine-sovereignty contexts. Daniel's rations are 'assigned' by the king (Dan 1:5), and God 'appoints' a gourd, a worm, and a scorching wind for Jonah. The Assyrian cognate manu and Arabic mana ('to assign, apportion') both preserve this dual character. The Nifal passive rounds out the picture: some things simply cannot be counted, a theme that runs from Abraham's promised descendants to Solomon's overwhelmed census-takers.

1. count, number (Qal active) (11×) To count, number, reckon — the basic Qal active sense across 11 occurrences. Subjects enumerate concrete or metaphorical objects: dust grains (Gen 13:16), Jacob's people (Num 23:10), money (2 Kgs 12:10), stars (Ps 147:4), flocks passing under the shepherd's hand (Jer 33:13), and days (Ps 90:12). Spanish contar and French compter map cleanly to this arithmetical core. David's census command 'Go, number Israel' (2 Sam 24:1) is the paradigmatic political use — counting as an assertion of royal control. COUNTING AND NARRATING
en: and-they-counted, count, counted | es: Contando, Para-contar, a-contar | fr: [למנות], [מונה], compta | de: [למנות], [מונה], count Gen 13:16; Num 23:10; 2Sam 24:1; 1Kgs 20:25; 2Kgs 12:10

2. appoint, assign, destine (Piel/Qal) (10×) To appoint, assign, destine — 10 occurrences in the Piel stem and occasionally Qal with volitional force. Here the semantic shift from 'counting' to 'allotting' is complete: God 'destines' the unfaithful for the sword (Isa 65:12), the king 'assigns' daily provisions (Dan 1:5), and Jonah's God 'appoints' a great fish, a plant, a worm, and a wind (Jonah 1:17; 4:6-8). Spanish dispuso/asigno and Korean jeonghada ('to determine, fix') both select appointment vocabulary distinct from counting. The Piel intensification suits the deliberate, authoritative nature of these assignments. APPOINTING AND VISITING en: And-I-shall-destine, and-appointed, and-he-appointed | es: Y-asignó, Y-dispuso, Y-os-destinaré | fr: [ומניתי], compter, et-fixer | de: [וימן], [ומניתי], [מנה] Job 7:3; Ps 61:7; Isa 65:12; Dan 1:5; Dan 1:10

3. be counted, be numbered (Nifal) (6×) To be counted, be numbered — the Nifal passive, appearing 6 times. The theological flavor is often one of immeasurable abundance: Abraham's offspring 'cannot be numbered' (Gen 13:16), Solomon's assembled animals 'could not be counted' (1 Kgs 8:5; 2 Chr 5:6), and the crooked 'cannot be counted' among the straight (Eccl 1:15). Spanish contarse/podian-ser-numerados and German gezahlt-werden both mark the passive voice cleanly. The Nifal tolerative sense — 'able to be numbered' — gives these passages their rhetorical force. BE COUNTED NUMBERED
en: can-be-numbered, could-be-numbered, to-be-counted | es: contarse, fue-contado, podían-ser-numerados | fr: –être-compta, [ימנו], [נמנה] | de: [ימנו], [נמנה], bestimmte Gen 13:16; 1Kgs 3:8; 1Kgs 8:5; 2Chr 5:6; Eccl 1:15

4. be appointed (Pual) (1×) To be appointed — a single Pual (passive intensive) occurrence at 1 Chronicles 9:29, where certain Levites 'were appointed' over the furnishings and utensils of the sanctuary. The Pual stem signals that the appointment was formally enacted upon them by an external authority, distinct from the active Piel 'to appoint.' Spanish designados captures the resultant-state passive well. Though only one occurrence, the morphological distinction from both the Qal passive (Nifal) and the active appointive (Piel) warrants separate recognition. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING
en: appointed | es: designados | fr: [ממנים] | de: [ממנים] 1Chr 9:29

מָנֶה H4488 N-mp (5×)
mina, maneh — a unit of weight and monetary value equal to 50 or 60 shekels
The maneh or mina was a standard ancient Near Eastern unit of weight used for measuring precious metals. Equal to one-sixtieth of a talent, it weighed roughly 800-980 grams depending on the period — about two pounds by the older Babylonian standard, or approximately 1⅔ pounds by Ezekiel's reckoning of 50 shekels per mina (Ezek 45:12). Solomon's golden shields each required three minas of gold (1 Kgs 10:17), while returning exiles donated minas of silver for temple reconstruction (Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:71-72). Every major translation renders it consistently: Spanish 'minas,' French 'minas,' German 'Minas.'

(5×) A unit of weight and monetary value used for gold and silver. In Solomon's temple economy, three minas of gold covered each shield (1 Kgs 10:17). Returning exiles contributed thousands of minas of silver toward rebuilding (Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:71-72). Ezekiel standardizes the mina at 50 shekels (Ezek 45:12). French adds the gloss 'poids' (weight), underscoring that this is fundamentally a measure of mass applied to precious metals. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: minas, the-mina | es: la-mina, minas | fr: [מנים], minas, poids | de: [המנה], [מנים], minas 1Kgs 10:17; Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:71; Neh 7:72; Ezek 45:12

מִנֶּה H4489 N-mp (2×)
times, occasions (as counted)
Counted occasions or times, specifically instances of something occurring. Both appearances are in Genesis 31, where Jacob accuses Laban of changing his wages 'ten times'—meaning repeatedly, many times. The term emphasizes the counted, enumerated nature of these occasions: not just 'often' but a specific (if rhetorical) number of times. The 'ten times' phrase functions as an idiom for 'many times' or 'repeatedly,' but the noun itself carries the sense of discrete, countable instances. This reflects the precision of Jacob's complaint against Laban's duplicity.

(2×) Counted times or occasions. Genesis 31:7, 41 record Jacob's accusation that Laban 'changed [his] wages ten times'—meaning repeatedly or many times. The term emphasizes enumerated instances rather than vague frequency. 'Ten times' likely functions idiomatically for 'many times,' but the noun itself denotes discrete, countable occasions. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish veces, French fois, German Mal) universally recognizes this as the counter noun for 'times,' supporting the translation 'ten times.' TIMES AND OCCASIONS en: times | es: veces | fr: fois | de: Mal Gen 31:7; Gen 31:41

מָנָה H4490 N-fp (14×)
Portion, share; an allotted part of food or sacrifice, especially a choice piece given as gift or offering.
A feminine noun denoting a portion or allotted share, nearly always of food. In the Priestly texts it names the priest's designated cut from the sacrificial animal – the breast of the wave offering that belongs to Aaron and his sons (Exod 29:26; Lev 7:33; 8:29). In narrative it conveys affection through food: Elkanah gives Hannah a double manah because he loves her (1 Sam 1:5), and Samuel sets aside a special portion for Saul (1 Sam 9:23). At festival celebrations, Nehemiah urges the people to send manot – gifts of food – to those who have nothing prepared (Neh 8:10, 12), a custom that endures in Purim's mishloach manot (Esth 9:19, 22). Spanish 'porcion' and German 'Anteil' both capture this concrete, apportioned quality.

portion, share, allotment (14×) A portion or share of food, whether sacrificial, festive, or royal. In Priestly legislation it denotes the priest's allotted cut from an offering (Exod 29:26; Lev 7:33; 8:29). In domestic and narrative settings it refers to portions distributed at meals as expressions of honor or affection (1 Sam 1:4-5; 9:23). Extended to festive gift-giving of food portions at communal celebrations (Neh 8:10, 12; Esth 9:19, 22), and to the king's daily provision (cf. Dan 1:5, 10). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-a-portion, as-portion, her-portions | es: la-porción, para-porción, por-porción | fr: [מנות], [מנותה], [מנת] | de: Anteil, [מנות], [מנותה] Exod 29:26; Lev 7:33; Lev 8:29; 1Sam 1:4; 1Sam 1:5

מִנְהָג H4491 Prep-k / N-msc (2×)
driving, chariot-driving, manner of driving
The manner or style of driving a chariot, specifically the characteristic way someone handles chariot and horses. The term appears twice in the same verse (2 Kings 9:20), where a watchman identifies Jehu approaching by recognizing 'the driving'—Jehu's distinctive, furious chariot-driving style. The observer notes 'the driving is like the driving of Jehu... for he drives furiously.' This specialized military/equestrian term captures not just the act of driving but the recognizable manner and style, suggesting skilled warriors had identifiable techniques. Jehu's aggressive driving becomes his signature.

(2×) The manner or style of chariot-driving. Second Kings 9:20 uses it twice: the watchman reports 'the driving is like the driving of Jehu son of Nimshi, for he drives furiously.' Jehu's distinctive, aggressive chariot-handling serves as his identifier before he's close enough to see clearly. The term emphasizes characteristic manner, not just the act of driving. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish/French/German 'driving/conduire/driving') recognizes this as technical vocabulary for chariot-handling in military contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-driving, is-like-driving-of | es: como-conducir-de, y-el-conducir | fr: est-comme-conduisant-de, et-le-conduisant | de: ist-wie-driving-von, und-der-driving 2Kgs 9:20

מִנְהָרָה H4492 Art / N-fp (1×)
tunnels, crevices, mountain hideouts (possibly; meaning uncertain)
This plural noun appears only in Judges 6:2, referring to mountain refuges where Israelites hid from Midianite raids—listed alongside caves and strongholds. The etymology and exact meaning remain disputed: crevices, tunnels, ravines, or light-openings in caves have all been proposed. The Septuagint's 'crevices' and Vulgate's 'dens' show ancient uncertainty. The context clearly indicates hiding places in mountainous terrain, but the precise type of refuge remains unclear.

(1×) Judges 6:2 describes Israelites hiding from Midian in caves, strongholds, and 'הַמְּנָהָרוֹת' (these things in the mountains). Translations guess: English 'tunnels,' Spanish 'cuevas' (caves—likely from parallel), but ancient versions disagree (Septuagint 'crevices,' Vulgate 'dens'). Some scholars think 'caves' is a gloss explaining this rare word. We know these were mountain hideouts, but the specific type of geological feature the Hebrew originally indicated is lost. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED en: the-tunnels | es: las-cuevas | fr: le-tunnels | de: der-tunnels Judg 6:2

מָנוֹד H4493 N-msc (1×)
shaking, wagging (especially of the head in derision)
This construct noun refers to head-shaking or wagging, specifically the gesture of derision where onlookers shake their heads at someone in contempt. Psalm 44:14 laments that Israel has become 'an object of head-shaking' among the nations—neighbors mock them by wagging their heads in scorn. This physical gesture communicated disdain and ridicule in ancient Near Eastern body language, often directed at the defeated or disgraced.

(1×) Israel's lament in Psalm 44:14 describes becoming 'a shaking of the head' among neighbors—an object of the contemptuous head-wagging gesture. The phrase 'מְנוֹד רֹאשׁ' literally means 'shaking of head,' a derisive body language. Parallel terms (reproach, scorn, derision, byword) confirm this is mocking gesture. Translations consistently capture head-shaking (English 'shaking of,' Spanish 'meneo de'), the physical act of contempt directed at the humiliated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-shaking-of | es: meneo-de | fr: de-signe-de-tête | de: ein-shaking-von Ps 44:14

מָנוֹחַ H4494 Prep-m / N-msc (6×)
Rest, repose (abstract state of security and peace); resting place (concrete location of settled dwelling or landing).
The noun manoach denotes both the condition of rest and the place where rest is found — a semantic duality familiar from the closely related menuchah but occurring only six times. In its abstract sense, it names the settled security that comes from ceasing to wander or suffer: Naomi seeks 'rest' for Ruth through marriage (Ruth 3:1), the psalmist tells his soul to 'return to your rest' (Ps 116:7), and 1 Chronicles 6:31 speaks of the ark's coming to rest. In its concrete sense, it names a physical location: the dove from Noah's ark found no 'resting place' for the sole of her foot (Gen 8:9), and the covenant curses threaten that Israel's foot will find no 'resting place' in exile (Deut 28:65). Spanish reposo and French repos handle both senses, while German distinguishes Ruhe (abstract peace) from Ruhestatte (resting place), revealing the semantic boundary that Hebrew leaves implicit. Isaiah 34:14 uses the word for the place where desert creatures settle, completing the picture of a term equally at home in domestic tranquility and wilderness desolation.

1. rest, repose (abstract state) (4×) Rest, repose, or security as an abstract state — cessation from wandering, labor, distress, or unsettledness. Naomi's desire that Ruth find 'rest' (Ruth 3:1) means not merely sleep but the settled security of marriage and home. The psalmist's 'return to your rest, O my soul' (Ps 116:7) uses an intensive or abstract plural, and 1 Chronicles 6:31 dates Levitical musical service from 'the resting of the ark.' Lamentations 1:3 deploys the negative: Judah in exile 'found no rest.' Spanish reposo, French repos, and German Ruhe all render this with abstract peace vocabulary. The word captures that deep biblical longing for shalom as settled permanence. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: from-resting-of, rest | es: desde-reposar, reposo | fr: [ממנוח], repos, se-reposer | de: Ruhe, Ruhestaette, [ממנוח] Deut 28:65; Ruth 3:1; 1Chr 6:31; Lam 1:3

2. resting place (concrete location) (2×) A resting place — a concrete, physical location where one can settle, land, or dwell in security. Genesis 8:9 provides the iconic image: Noah's dove 'found no resting place for the sole of her foot' and returned to the ark. Deuteronomy 28:65 echoes the same phrase in the covenant curses, warning that among the nations 'your foot shall find no resting place.' Isaiah 34:14 extends the image to Edom's desolation, where the night creature 'finds for herself a resting place.' German Ruhestatte and Spanish descanso shift to location-oriented vocabulary, while French repos covers both senses — a reminder that the abstract-concrete boundary in Hebrew rest terminology is often fluid rather than rigid. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: a-resting-place, resting-place | es: descanso | fr: repos, resting-lieu | de: [מנוח], eine-Ruhestätte Gen 8:9; Isa 34:14

מָנוֹחַ H4495 N-proper-ms (18×)
Manoah: the father of Samson, from the tribe of Dan.
A proper masculine name meaning 'rest' or 'resting place,' derived from the root nuach. Manoah was a Danite from the town of Zorah whose wife received the angelic announcement of Samson's birth (Judg 13:2-22). He is portrayed as a devout but cautious man who prays to see the angel again and offers a sacrifice on which the angel ascends in the flame (Judg 13:19-20). His alarmed reaction, 'We shall surely die, for we have seen God,' is gently corrected by his more perceptive wife (Judg 13:22-23). Samson is buried in his father's tomb between Zorah and Eshtaol (Judg 16:31). The Septuagint renders his name as Manoe.

Manoah (proper name) (18×) The personal name of Samson's father, a Danite from Zorah whose narrative fills Judges 13 and closes in 16:31. His name, from the root nuach ('to rest'), ironically contrasts with the turbulence of his son's life. He is depicted as pious and anxious, offering sacrifice and fearing death after the theophany (Judg 13:19-22). Multilingual glosses consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Manoa/Manoaj,' French 'Manoach,' German 'Manoach.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Manoach, Manoah, and-Manoah | es: Manoa, Manóaj, y-Manóaj | fr: Manoach, et-Manoach | de: Manoach, und-Manoach Judg 13:2; Judg 13:8; Judg 13:9; Judg 13:11

מְנוּחָה H4496 Conj-w (22×)
Rest, repose, tranquility; also a resting place or settled dwelling, especially for God or His people.
Menuḥah spans both the experience of rest and the place where rest is found — a semantic breadth that shapes some of Scripture's most beloved images. The 'still waters' of Ps 23:2 (me menuḥot) evoke pastoral tranquility, while God's declaration 'This is my resting place forever' (Ps 132:14) anchors the concept in sacred geography. Deuteronomy 12:9 pairs menuḥah with naḥalah (inheritance), fusing the promise of rest with the land itself. Ruth 1:9 tenderly applies it to the security a woman finds in marriage. The German 'Ruhe' and French 'repos' both capture the word's dual register of inner peace and settled habitation.

1. rest, repose, tranquility (12×) Abstract rest, repose, or tranquility — relief from labor, conflict, or wandering. Gen 49:15 describes the land as good and the menuḥah as pleasant; Ruth 1:9 uses it for the security Naomi wishes upon her daughters-in-law in new marriages; Judg 20:43 portrays military respite. In 2 Sam 14:17, the wise woman of Tekoa invokes menuḥah as the peace a king's word can bring. Ps 23:2's plural 'waters of rest' (me menuḥot) has become one of the Bible's most recognizable images. Multilingual renderings — Spanish 'descanso/reposo,' French 'repos,' German 'Ruhe' — consistently reflect the abstract, experiential quality. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: and-rest, at-rest, for-rest | es: a-tu-reposo, descanso, es-el-reposo | fr: [מנוחה], de-repos, et-repos | de: Ruhe, [המנוחה], [ומנוחה] Gen 49:15; Deut 12:9; Judg 20:43; Ruth 1:9; 2Sam 14:17

2. resting place, dwelling (10×) A concrete resting place or settled dwelling — a location where rest is realized. Central to the theology of sacred space: God's resting place in Zion (Ps 95:11; 132:8, 14; Isa 66:1), the ark's resting place (Num 10:33; 1 Chr 28:2), and the Messiah's resting place that will be glorious (Isa 11:10). Deut 12:9 pairs it with 'the inheritance' (naḥalah), making the Promised Land itself the menuḥah. Micah 2:10 warns that the land is no longer a resting place due to defilement. Isa 32:18 envisions God's people dwelling in 'peaceful habitations and secure resting places,' where the plural menuḥot underscores abundance of settled peace. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: and-in-resting-places, his-resting-place, its-resting-place | es: a-reposo-tuyo, descanso, el-descanso | fr: de-repos, et-repos, repos | de: [המנוחה], [ובמנוחת], [מנוחה] Num 10:33; Ps 95:11; Ps 132:8; Ps 132:14; Isa 11:10

מָנוֹן H4497 N-ms (1×)
son (possibly); or 'thankless one' (uncertain meaning)
This rare noun appears only in Proverbs 29:21 in a disputed text: 'in the end he will be a manon.' The meaning is highly uncertain —some propose 'son' based on context (a pampered servant eventually claiming sonship), others suggest 'thankless one' from Ethiopic cognates, while ancient versions show confusion. The proverb warns about indulging servants, but the precise consequence described by this word remains one of the Hebrew Bible's lexical mysteries.

(1×) Proverbs 29:21's warning about pampering a servant ends with this uncertain word: 'in the end he will be a מָנוֹן.' English 'son' and Spanish 'rebelde' (rebel) show divergent guesses. BDB proposes 'thankless one' from Ethiopic, while others suggest the servant claims heir status like a son. The textual difficulty reflects genuine lexical uncertainty—we have insufficient evidence to determine what consequence the proverb originally threatened. HEIR INHERITOR
en: a-son | es: rebelde | fr: מנון | de: [מנון] Prov 29:21

מָנוֹס H4498 N-ms (8×)
Refuge, place of escape; flight, the act of fleeing
The noun מָנוֹס (manos), from the root נוס ('to flee'), holds two organically connected meanings: the destination one flees to and the act of fleeing itself. In most of its eight occurrences it designates a refuge or place of safety — supremely applied to God as 'my refuge' in David's psalm of deliverance (2 Sam 22:3) and Jeremiah's confession (Jer 16:19). When refuge is 'perished' or 'lost,' the word conveys despair: 'their escape has perished from them' (Amos 2:14, Job 11:20). In two passages (Jer 46:5, Amos 2:14), the concrete act of running away — flight itself — comes to the fore, as armies flee and find no escape.

1. refuge, place of safety (6×) A refuge, shelter, or place of escape — the destination to which one flees for safety and protection. Applied to God himself as the ultimate refuge in 2 Samuel 22:3 ('my refuge,' paralleling 'my stronghold'), Psalm 59:17, and Jeremiah 16:19 ('my refuge in the day of trouble,' paralleling 'my strength' and

'my fortress'). Arabic ḥ ('asylum, refuge') and Hindi शरण (sharan, 'shelter') confirm the locative-protective sense. When preceded by אָבַד ('to perish'), it expresses the utter despair of having no safe haven: Job 11:20 and Psalm 142:5 declare that 'refuge has perished' from the wicked or from the psalmist's persecutors. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: and-a-refuge, and-my-refuge, and-refuge | es: refugio, y-refugio, y-refugio-mi | fr: [ומנוסי], [מנוס], de-fuir | de: Zuflucht, [ומנוס], [ומנוסי] 2Sam 22:3; Job 11:20; Ps 59:16; Ps 142:4; Jer 16:19

2. flight, fleeing (2×) Flight, the act or process of fleeing — referring to the physical action of running away rather than the place of safety. In Jeremiah 46:5 the Egyptian warriors are routed and 'flight has perished from them' (אָבַד מָנוֹס מִמֶּנָּם), and Amos 2:14 announces that 'flight shall fail the swift.' English 'flight' (not 'refuge'), Arabic ﻫَﺮَﺏ (harab, 'fleeing'), and Spanish 'huida' all confirm the kinetic, action-oriented sense distinct from the static place-of-safety meaning. Jeremiah 25:35 similarly uses it of shepherds who find no avenue of escape. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: and-flight, flight | es: refugio, y-huida | fr: [ומנוס], refuge | de: [ומנוס], von-floh Jer 46:5; Amos 2:14

מְנוּסָה H4499 Conj-w (2×)

flight, act of fleeing

The act of fleeing or running away, typically from danger or enemies. Leviticus 26:36 describes a curse where the disobedient will flee 'the flight of the sword'—fleeing as if pursued by a sword, even when no one chases them. Isaiah 52:12 promises the opposite: the returning exiles will not go 'in flight' (in panicked escape) but in orderly procession with God's protection. The term captures both the physical act of fleeing and its associated panic or urgency. Both contexts contrast flight (chaotic, fearful retreat) with secure, protected movement.

(2×) The act or experience of fleeing. Leviticus 26:36 threatens that the disobedient will flee 'the flight of the sword'—running in panic as if sword-pursued, though unpursued. Isaiah 52:12 promises the exiles will not depart 'in flight' (panicked escape) but walk in dignified procession under divine guard. The term emphasizes hurried, fearful retreat. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish huida, French/German flight) recognizes this as the noun form of fleeing, often appearing in construct ('flight of/from') to specify what prompts the escape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-flight, flight-of- | es: huida-de, y-con-huida | fr: [ובמנוסה], flight-de- | de: [ובמנוסה], flight-von- Lev 26:36; Isa 52:12

מָנוֹר H4500 Prep-k / N-msc (4×)

weaver's beam (cylindrical rod in a loom)

The heavy wooden rod in a loom that carries the warp threads, used in Scripture exclusively in similes describing massive spear shafts. Goliath's spear shaft was 'like a weaver's beam' (1 Samuel 17:7), as were the weapons of other Philistine giants (2 Samuel 21:19, 1 Chronicles 11:23, 20:5). The comparison evokes both thickness and weight—these were not ordinary spears but weapons requiring extraordinary strength to wield, matching the outsized warriors who bore them.

(4×) A technical term for the cylindrical beam in a loom that holds the warp threads, functioning in Scripture as a standard of comparison for unusually large spear shafts. The phrase 'like a weaver's beam' became the conventional way to describe the weapons of giants. The multilingual glosses preserve the simile ('like beam of,' 'como palo de') but show some uncertainty about the precise weaving apparatus referenced. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-beam-of | es: como-palo-de, como-rod. de, como-rodillo-de | fr: [כמנור], comme-beam-de | de: [כמנור], wie-beam-von 1Sam 17:7; 2Sam 21:19; 1Chr 11:23; 1Chr 20:5

מְנוֹרָה H4501 N-fs (42×)

Lampstand, menorah; the golden seven-branched cultic lamp-stand of the Tabernacle/Temple, or a household lamp-stand

A noun denoting a lampstand or candelabrum, most famously the golden seven-branched menorah of the Tabernacle described in painstaking detail in Exodus 25 and 37. Nearly all occurrences refer to this sacred furnishing or the ten lampstands Solomon placed in the Temple (1 Kings 7:49). The word also appears in domestic settings, as when the Shunammite woman furnishes Elisha's room with a lampstand (2 Kings 4:10). Zechariah's vision of a golden lampstand flanked by olive trees (Zech 4:2) bridges the cultic and prophetic registers, making this simple household object a vehicle for divine symbolism.

1. cultic lampstand (menorah) (36×) The golden seven-branched lampstand (menorah) of the Tabernacle or Temple, a sacred ritual furnishing. Hebrew consistently pairs this with gold and other cultic objects; Spanish 'candelabro' and German 'Leuchter' both capture the formal, ornamental quality. The detailed specifications in Exodus 25:31-40 and its prominent placement in priestly literature (appearing over 30 times in Exodus-Numbers) underscore its centrality to Israelite worship. The ten lampstands of Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs 7:49; 2 Chr 4:7) and the singular lampstand of the Second Temple (2 Chr 13:11) represent later developments of this cultic tradition. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: lampstand, the-lampstand | es: candelabro, el-candelabro | fr: chandelier, le-chandelier | de: Leuchter, der-Leuchter Exod 25:31; Exod 25:32; Exod 25:33

2. domestic lampstand (6×) An ordinary household lamp-stand or candelabrum, a piece of domestic furniture. In 2 Kings 4:10 the Shunammite woman places a lampstand alongside a bed, table, and chair in the prophet's room – everyday furnishings that Spanish renders as 'candelero' (distinguishing it from the grander cultic 'candelabro'). Zechariah's visionary lampstand (Zech 4:2) straddles the domestic and prophetic, drawing on familiar household imagery to convey divine revelation. The 1 Chronicles 28:15 references to lampstands of gold and silver for various Temple service areas likewise shade toward functional furnishing rather than the singular iconic menorah. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: and-a-lampstand, and-lampstand, for-the-lampstand | es: candelero, para-candelero, y-candelero | fr: [ומנורה], [למנורה], [מנורה] | de: Leuchter, und-Leuchter, und-ein-lampstand 2Kgs 4:10; 1Chr 28:15

מְנָזָר H4502 N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

consecrated ones, princes, or crowned ones (uncertain)

This uncertain plural noun with suffix appears only in Nahum 3:17, apparently referring to Nineveh's leaders—perhaps princes, crowned officials, or consecrated ones. The form and etymology are disputed: it may relate to consecration/anointing, or to crowning. Ancient versions and modern scholars remain divided, with some leaving it untranslated. The parallel with 'marshals' suggests military or civil officials, but the precise rank or role this term designated is lost.

(1×) Nahum 3:17 denounces Nineveh's 'מְנָזָרֶיהָ' who flee like locusts —apparently leaders or officials. Translations vary wildly: English 'guards,' Spanish 'príncipes' (princes), reflecting genuine uncertainty. BDB connects to consecration, others to crowns ('crowned ones'), while some scholars leave it untranslated. The context pairs them with 'marshals,' indicating leadership, but whether these were royal guards, nobles, or anointed officials remains textually and lexically unclear. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS

en: your-guards | es: Príncipes-tuyos | fr: garde | de: [מנזריך] Nah 3:17

מִנְחָה H4503 Prep-k / N-fsc (211×)

Gift, tribute, offering; from secular presents between persons, through vassal tribute, to the grain/cereal offering of the Levitical cult.

Minchah traces a fascinating semantic arc from the everyday to the sacred. In its oldest narrative uses, it simply means a gift — Jacob's present to Esau (Gen 32:14), the brothers' gift to Joseph (Gen 43:11). In political contexts it narrows to tribute — the compulsory payment a vassal brings to an overlord, as in Ehud's tribute to Eglon (Judg 3:15). But in the Priestly literature it becomes the highly technical term for the grain or cereal offering described in Leviticus 2, consisting of fine flour mixed with oil and frankincense. The Arabic evidence is particularly revealing: secular uses trigger hadiyya ('gift/present'), political uses trigger jizya or kharaj ('tribute'), while cultic uses trigger taqdima ('formal presentation') — three distinct Arabic words for what Hebrew covers with one. This layered polysemy preserves the theological insight that worship is, at its deepest level, an act of giving.

1. grain/cereal offering (cultic) (139×) The technical Priestly grain or cereal offering — the dominant sense at 139 occurrences, concentrated in Leviticus, Numbers, and Ezekiel. Leviticus 2 defines minchah as fine flour with oil and frankincense, a portion burned on the altar and the rest eaten by the priests (Lev 2:1-3). The term extends to the grain component that accompanies animal sacrifices (Num 15:4-9; 28-29). German Speiseopfer ('food offering') and French offrande de grain ('grain offering') both use specialized cultic vocabulary here. Arabic taqdima ('formal cultic presentation') consistently distinguishes this from the secular hadiyya. Malachi's vision of a 'pure minchah' offered among the nations (Mal 1:11) shows the word at its most theologically expansive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-grain-offering, for-grain-offering | es: Y-ofrenda-de-ellos, para-ofrenda, para-ofrenda-de-grano | fr: et-leur-grain-offrande, offrande, pour-offrande-de-grain | de: fuer-Speiseopfer, und-ihr-Getreide-Opfergabe, zu-Speisopfer Exod 30:9; Lev 2:3; Lev 2:8; Lev 2:9; Lev 2:10

2. offering/oblation (general cultic) (39×) Any offering or oblation presented to God — 39 occurrences where minchah denotes a general cultic gift without specific restriction to grain. The paradigmatic instance is Genesis 4:3-5, where both Cain's produce and Abel's animal offering are called minchah, demonstrating that the word predates its Levitical specialization. Similarly in Judges 6:18 Gideon prepares a minchah that includes meat and broth. Spanish ofrenda and German Opfergabe ('offering-gift') capture this broader cultic sense. The distinction from sense 1 is real: here the emphasis is on the act of presenting to God rather than on the specific flour-and-oil composition prescribed in Leviticus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-grain-offering, an-offering, and-a-grain-offering | es: ofrenda, y-ofrenda | fr: de-offrande, et-de-offrande, et-offrande | de: Opfer, Opfergabe, Speisopfer Gen 4:3; Gen 4:4; Gen 4:5; Num 16:15; Judg 6:18

3. gift/present (secular) (18×) A secular gift or present between humans — 18 occurrences in narrative, especially Genesis. Jacob's elaborate gift to appease Esau (Gen 32:14-22) is the classic example: he sends flocks in waves as a minchah, hoping to 'cover his face.' The brothers carry minchah to the Egyptian official who is Joseph (Gen 43:11, 25-26). Arabic decisively shifts to hadiyya ('gift/present') rather than any cultic vocabulary, and German switches from Opfer to Geschenk ('present'). Korean 선물 (seonmul, 'gift') confirms the non-sacred frame. This sense preserves the word's etymological core: something 'brought forward' in an act of social exchange. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-gift, a-tribute, and-a-gift | es: con-el-presente, con-presente, el-presente | fr: avec-le-don, dans-offrande, don | de: Opfergabe, Speisopfer, das-Geschenk Gen 32:13; Gen 32:18; Gen 32:20; Gen 32:21; Gen 33:10

4. tribute (political/vassal) (15×) Compulsory political tribute from a vassal or subject to a sovereign — 15 occurrences in Judges, Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles. Ehud's tribute to Eglon (Judg 3:15-18) is the narrative archetype; the conquered Moabites and Arameans bear minchah to David (2 Sam 8:2, 6); subject kings bring tribute to Solomon (1 Kgs 5:1). Arabic uses jizya or kharaj ('tax/tribute') here, Spanish shifts to tributo, and German to Tribut — all political vocabulary utterly distinct from cultic terminology. The word's ability to mean both 'gift to God' and 'tribute to a king' reflects the ancient Near Eastern worldview where the line between worship and political submission was thin: both involved bringing something precious to one who held power over you. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tribute, the-tribute, tribute | es: el-tributo, tributo | fr: de-offrande, le-tribut, offrande | de: Speisopfer, Tribut, der-tribute Judg 3:15; Judg 3:17; Judg 3:18; 2Sam 8:2

מִנְחָה H4504 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

offering, grain offering (Aramaic)

The Aramaic term for offering or sacrifice, parallel to Hebrew 'minchah.' The word appears in two contexts showing its semantic range. Daniel 2:46 describes Nebuchadnezzar commanding that offering and incense be presented to Daniel—a shocking scene of a pagan king almost worshiping the prophet (though likely honoring Daniel's God). Ezra 7:17 uses it technically for 'grain offerings' to be purchased with royal funds for the Jerusalem temple. The term thus covers both general offerings and the specific grain/meal offering of Levitical ritual.

(2×) Aramaic term for offering or oblation. Daniel 2:46 describes Nebuchadnezzar ordering 'offering and incense' be presented to Daniel (or to Daniel's God through him)—a pagan king acknowledging divine revelation. Ezra 7:17 uses it for technical 'grain offerings' to be purchased for Jerusalem temple worship. The term parallels Hebrew minchah, covering both general offerings and specific meal offerings. Cross-linguistic evidence shows recognition of 'offering' (Spanish ofrenda, German Speisopfer), with Ezra context specifying grain offerings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-offering, and-their-grain-offerings | es: y-ofrenda, y-sus-ofrendas-de-grano | fr: [ומנחתהון], et-offrande | de: [ומנחתהון], und-Speisopfer Ezra 7:17; Dan 2:46

מְנַחֵם H4505 N-proper-ms (8×)

Menahem — personal name meaning 'comforter'; king of the northern kingdom of Israel (2 Kings 15)

A Hebrew proper name meaning 'comforter' or 'one who consoles,' derived from the root נחם (nacham, 'to comfort'). Menahem son of Gadi seized the throne of Israel by assassinating Shallum and reigned for ten years in Samaria (2 Kings 15:14-23). His rule was marked by brutal suppression of opposition and heavy tribute paid to Assyria's Tiglath-Pileser III. The Greek Septuagint renders it Μαναημ (Manaem), preserving the guttural he.

(8×) The personal name Menahem, borne exclusively by the Israelite king who seized power through a coup against Shallum (2 Kgs 15:14) and reigned ca. 752-742 BC. All eight occurrences cluster in the single narrative block of 2 Kings 15:14-23. Multilingual renderings are consistent — English 'Menachem,' Spanish 'Menahem,' French and German 'Menachem' — all transliterating directly from the Hebrew מְנַחֵם. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Menachem | es: Menahem | fr: Menachem | de: Menachem 2Kgs 15:14; 2Kgs 15:16; 2Kgs 15:17; 2Kgs 15:19; 2Kgs 15:20

מָנַחַת H4506a N-proper-fs (1×)

Manahath (place name: 'resting place' or 'settlement')

A location mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:6 as the destination where certain Benjamites were exiled or relocated. The name means 'resting place' or 'settlement,' though the site's exact location remains unknown. It appears in genealogical records documenting population movements within Benjamin's territory, reflecting the complex resettlement patterns during Israel's monarchic period.

(1×) The Benjamite genealogy in 1 Chronicles 8:6 mentions exile to 'Manahath,' a place whose location is now unknown. The name, meaning 'resting place' or 'settlement,' is consistently transliterated (English 'Manachat,' Spanish 'Manájat'). The Septuagint variants (Machanathei, Manouath) show pronunciation uncertainty but don't help locate it. This represents one of many Benjamite sites recorded in Chronicles whose geographical identification remains lost. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Manachat | es: Manájat | fr: [מנחת] | de: [מנחת] 1Chr 8:6

מָנַחַת H4506b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Manahath (personal name, Edomite)

An Edomite personal name appearing in genealogical lists in Genesis and Chronicles. The name appears among Seir the Horite's descendants, specifically among the sons of Shobal. The name may derive from a root meaning 'rest' or 'resting place,' though its exact etymology is uncertain. The same name also appears as a place name elsewhere in Scripture, showing the common ancient Near Eastern practice where personal names and place names overlapped. The Septuagint variations (Manaachath, Manaaath) show minor vocalization differences.

(2×) Personal name of an Edomite, son of Shobal, descendant of Seir the Horite (Genesis 36:23; 1 Chronicles 1:40). The name also functions as a place name elsewhere in Scripture, typical of ancient onomastics where personal and geographical names intertwined. Possible connection to a root meaning 'rest' or 'resting place,' though certainty is elusive. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration (Manahath, Manajat, Manachat) as appropriate for this Edomite proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Manachath, and-Manahath | es: y-Manajat | fr: [ומנחת], et-Manahath | de: [ומנחת], und-Manachat Gen 36:23; 1Chr 1:40

מְנִי H4507 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Meni (deity: god of fate or destiny)

The name of a deity associated with fate or destiny, mentioned in Isaiah 65:11 alongside Gad (Fortune). Israelites who 'fill cups for Meni' are condemned for apostasy—they're offering drink offerings to this foreign god of fate rather than trusting Yahweh. Related to Arabic deities Maniyyat and Manat, and attested in Nabatean inscriptions, Meni represents the pagan belief that impersonal fate rather than the covenant God controlled destiny.

(1×) Isaiah 65:11 condemns those who 'fill mixed wine for Meni,' a deity of fate worshiped alongside Gad (Fortune). The name connects to Arabic Maniyyat and Manat (goddesses of fate/death), and appears in Nabatean as 'his Manat.' Translations consistently transliterate (English 'Meni,' Spanish 'Menί'), recognizing this as a divine name. Worshiping Meni represented abandoning Yahweh's sovereign providence for belief in impersonal destiny. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-Meni | es: para-Menί | fr: [למני] | de: [למני] Isa 65:11

מִנִּי H4508 N-proper-fs (1×)

Minni (territory in Armenia, kingdom of Mannai)

A region in Armenia mentioned in Jeremiah 51:27 as one of the kingdoms summoned to attack Babylon. Identified with the Assyrian Mannai, this was a territory south of Lake Urmia in what is now northwestern Iran. By invoking Minni alongside Ararat and Ashkenaz, Jeremiah summons northern mountain kingdoms to fulfill God's judgment against Babylon, showing how international politics served divine purposes.

(1×) Jeremiah's oracle in 51:27 calls Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz to march against Babylon. Minni corresponds to Assyrian 'Mannai,' a kingdom in Armenia. Translations consistently transliterate (English 'Minni,' Spanish 'Mini'), recognizing this as a territorial name. The historical Mannai was located south of Lake Urmia, and archaeological evidence confirms its existence as a significant kingdom during the Neo-Assyrian period. APPOINTING AND VISITING

en: Minni | es: Mini | fr: [מני] | de: [מני] Jer 51:27

מִנְיָמִן H4509 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Miniamin/Minyamin (personal name: possibly 'from the right hand' or 'fortunate')

A personal name with multiple variant spellings, borne by priestly individuals in post-exilic contexts. One Miniamin served during Hezekiah's reforms helping distribute priestly portions (2 Chronicles 31:15). Others appear among priests who returned with Zerubbabel and served in Nehemiah's time (Nehemiah 12:17, 41). The name appears in different forms reflecting scribal variation or possibly different individuals with similar names. All occurrences involve priestly service and temple ministry.

(3×) This proper name shows spelling variants: 'Miniamin, Minyamin, Mijamin' across texts and translations. Second Chronicles 31:15 identifies one who faithfully distributed offerings to priests during Hezekiah's reforms. Nehemiah 12:17, 41 mention priest(s) by this name in post-exilic contexts, participating in dedication ceremonies. The variations may represent different individuals or textual variants for the same person. All contexts involve faithful priestly service in seasons of religious renewal and temple worship. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Minyamin, and-Miniamin, to-Minyamin | es: Miniamin, de-Miniamin, y-Minyamin | fr: [ומנימן], [למנימין], [מנימין] | de: [ומנימן], [למנימין], [מנימין] 2Chr 31:15; Neh 12:17; Neh 12:41

מִנְיָן H4510 Prep-l / N-msc (1×)

number, count (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun means 'number' or 'count.' Ezra 6:17 uses it in the phrase 'according to the number of the tribes of Israel'—the dedication offering included sin offerings calculated by tribal count. The term appears in the Aramaic sections of Ezra documenting the restored temple, where precise enumeration mattered for ritual and administrative purposes in the Persian period.

(1×) The temple dedication in Ezra 6:17 offered sacrifices 'according to the number of' Israel's tribes. This Aramaic construct phrase emphasizes numerical correspondence—twelve sin offerings for twelve tribes. Translations uniformly render the counting/numerical aspect (English 'according to the number of,' Spanish 'según el número de'), showing how the restored community maintained tribal identity even under Persian rule through carefully enumerated ritual. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-the-number-of | es: según-el-número-de | fr: [למנין] | de: [למנין] Ezra 6:17

מִנִּית H4511 N-proper-fs (2×)

a town in Ammonite territory, mentioned in connection with Jephthah's campaign and the wheat trade with Tyre

Minnith appears twice in Scripture, first as a geographical marker for Jephthah's conquest of the Ammonites (Judges 11:33), and second in Ezekiel's oracle against Tyre, where the 'wheat of Minnith' is cited as a trade commodity (Ezekiel 27:17). The location was evidently known for grain production. According to Eusebius, it lay four Roman miles from Heshbon, though the exact site remains unknown. The dual attestation—military boundary and agricultural export—suggests Minnith was a notable settlement in the fertile Transjordanian highlands.

(2×) A proper noun denoting a settlement in Ammonite territory east of the Jordan River. The Greek translations vary widely (Arnon, Semoeith, Semenaith), suggesting scribal uncertainty, but the Hebrew tradition is consistent. Ezekiel's mention of 'wheat of Minnith' alongside 'pannag' (a debated term) in the cargo list for Tyre confirms the region's agricultural reputation, echoed in the tribute of wheat from Ammon mentioned in 2 Chronicles 27:5. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Minnith | es: Minit | fr: Minnith, purification | de: Minnith, [מנית] Judg 11:33; Ezek 27:17

מִנְלָה H4512 N-msc / 3mp (1×)

gain, acquisition, produce (textually very uncertain)

This highly uncertain noun appears only in Job 15:29's disputed text, possibly meaning 'gain,' 'acquisition,' or 'produce.' The verse warns the wicked that their wealth won't last, with this word apparently referring to possessions or profit. However, the text is widely considered corrupt—ancient versions read 'shadow' (Septuagint) or 'word' (Syriac), while scholars propose various emendations including 'ears of grain' or 'property.' We simply lack confidence about what Job's friend originally said.

(1×) Job 15:29's warning about the wicked's prosperity includes this word with suffix: 'their מִנְלָם will not stretch to the earth.' Translations guess 'produce' or 'possession' (English 'produce their,' Spanish 'posesión'), but the text is almost certainly corrupt. The Septuagint read 'their shadow' (צִלָּם instead), Syriac 'their word.'

Scholars admit hopeless corruption. This represents a textual crux where confident interpretation is impossible—the original wording is lost. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: produce-their | es: su-posesión | fr: leur-récompense-eux | de: [מנלם] Job 15:29

מָנַע H4513 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjImperf-3ms (29×)

To withhold, hold back, restrain; in the Niphal, to be withheld or restrained from occurring

A verb of restraint and denial, used when someone or something is held back from its natural course. God withholds the fruit of the womb (Gen 30:2), rain (Amos 4:7), and good things (Jer 5:25); humans withhold bread from the hungry (Job 22:7) or hold back a sword from its work (Jer 48:10). Abigail blesses God for restraining David from bloodguilt (1 Sam 25:26, 34). The Niphal passive appears when showers are withheld (Jer 3:3) or wicked deeds are held in check (Job 38:15). Spanish 'detener' and French 'empêcher' both emphasize the preventive force, while the Arabic cognate 'manaᶜa' carries the same core meaning of prohibition and restraint.

1. withhold, restrain, hold back (25×) The Qal active sense: to deliberately withhold, restrain, or hold back something from someone. The subject exercises control – God withholds rain (Amos 4:7) and fruit of the womb (Gen 30:2); Abigail praises God for restraining David from shedding blood (1 Sam 25:26, 34). Proverbs 11:26 condemns the one who withholds grain, and Prov 3:27 urges not to withhold good. Spanish 'detén/detuvieron' and French 'empêcher' capture the active preventive force. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: I-have-withheld, I-kept-back, I-withheld | es: Detén, detuvieron, detén | fr: [מנעת], de-refuser, et-empêcher | de: [אמנע], [ואמנע], [מנע] Gen 30:2; Num 24:11; 1Sam 25:26; 1Sam 25:34; 2Sam 13:13

2. be withheld, be restrained (4×) The Niphal passive sense: to be withheld, held back, or prevented from occurring. Used when the agent of restraint is backgrounded – showers are withheld in Jer 3:3, the light of the wicked is restrained in Job 38:15, and offerings are cut off in Joel 1:13. Balak tells Balaam nothing should be withheld from his honoring (Num 22:16). French 'être retenu' and Spanish 'fue retenida' reflect this passive construction naturally. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: And-were-withheld, and-is-withheld, is-withheld | es: Y-es-quitada, Y-fueron-retenidas, fue-retenida | fr: empêcher, et-retenir, laisse-être-withheld | de: [וימנע], [וימנעו], [נמנע] Num 22:16; Job 38:15; Jer 3:3; Joel 1:13

מַנְעוּל H4514 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (6×)

Lock, bolt, or bar: a fastening device for securing doors and city gates.

A masculine noun denoting a lock, bolt, or bar used to fasten and secure doors or gates. Five of its six occurrences cluster in Nehemiah 3 (vv. 3, 6, 13, 14, 15), where the repeated formula 'its doors, its locks, and its bars' describes the systematic rebuilding of Jerusalem's gates. Its one other appearance is in Song of Solomon 5:5, where the beloved's fingers drip myrrh upon the bolt of the door — a strikingly intimate image. The word paints a picture of security and enclosure, whether civic or personal.

lock, bolt, bar (6×) A bolt or lock mechanism for securing a door or gate. In Nehemiah's wall-rebuilding account (Neh 3:3, 6, 13, 14, 15), it appears in the stock phrase 'its doors, its locks, and its bars,' describing the restoration of Jerusalem's fortifications. In Song of Solomon 5:5 it refers to the door-bolt in a private, intimate setting. Spanish 'cerradura' (lock) and French 'verrou' (bolt) both capture the sense of a fastening mechanism, while multilingual evidence uniformly points to a single concrete referent. ALONE AND PARTS

en: and-locks-its, locks-its, the-bolt | es: la-cerradura, sus-cerraduras, y-sus-cerraduras | fr: du-verrou., et-verrou, verrou | de: [המנעול], [ומנעליו], [מנעוליו] Neh 3:3; Neh 3:6; Neh 3:13; Neh 3:14; Neh 3:15

מִנְעָל H4515 N-mpc / 2ms (1×)

bolts, bars (for securing gates)

This noun refers to bolts or bars that secure gates and doors. Deuteronomy 33:25 uses it metaphorically: 'iron and bronze shall be your bolts,' possibly meaning fortifications or security. The phrase appears in Moses' blessing of Asher, promising strength and security. Some interpret it literally as fortified gates of metal, others figuratively as enduring strength—the ambiguity centers on whether the bolts are literal defensive architecture or a metaphor for protection.

(1×) Moses' blessing in Deuteronomy 33:25 promises Asher 'iron and bronze your bolts,' likely meaning fortified security. The noun denotes bars or bolts that lock gates, used here either literally (metal-reinforced gates) or metaphorically (strong defenses). Translations uniformly render as bolts or bars (English 'bolts,' Spanish 'cerrojos'), the locking mechanisms for gates. The imagery promises Asher secure borders or enduring strength throughout his days. SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: your-bolts | es: tus-cerrojos | fr: ton-bolts | de: dein-bolts Deut 33:25

מַנְעַמִּים H4516 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

delicacies, dainties, choice foods

This plural noun refers to delicacies or choice foods—rich, desirable dishes served at feasts. Psalm 141:4 uses it in a prayer to avoid temptation: 'let me not eat of their delicacies.' The psalmist asks not to be drawn into fellowship with evildoers through sharing their luxurious meals, recognizing that dining together creates social bonds and moral compromises. The term emphasizes the appealing nature of these foods, making abstinence a real sacrifice.

(1×) The prayer in Psalm 141:4 asks God to prevent eating 'their delicacies,' the choice foods of evildoers. The term denotes dainties or luxurious dishes (English 'delicacies,' Spanish 'manjares,' French 'délice'), appealing foods that might tempt one into bad company. Ancient Near Eastern culture understood shared meals as creating covenant bonds, so refusing the wicked's delicacies meant rejecting fellowship with them despite the food's attractiveness. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: of-their-delicacies | es: de-sus-manjares | fr: dans-délice | de: von-ihr-delicacies Ps 141:4

מְנַעֲנַע H4517 Conj-w (1×)

A type of rattle or percussion instrument, likely the Egyptian sistrum with metal frame and loose rings

This rare musical instrument appears only in 2 Samuel 6:5 during David's celebration bringing the ark to Jerusalem. The Egyptian sistrum was a handheld metal frame with loose bars and rings that produced a rhythmic jingling sound when shaken. The multilingual evidence (sistrums, sistros) reflects the Greek and Latin tradition identifying this as the sistrum, widely used in Egyptian worship but appearing here in Israelite celebration.

(1×) A percussion instrument identified with the Egyptian sistrum —a metal frame with loose rings shaken rhythmically. Found in the celebration procession as David brought the ark, alongside other instruments. The Spanish 'sistros' and French 'sistrums' preserve the classical identification of this rare Hebrew term. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: and-with-sistrums | es: y-con-sistros | fr: et-avec-sistrums | de: und-mit-sistrums 2Sam 6:5

מְנַקִּיָּה H4518 N-fpc / 3ms (4×)

bowls or jars (for sacred use)

Vessels associated with the tabernacle and temple service, appearing in descriptions of sacred furniture. They are listed among the utensils of the table of showbread (Exodus 25:29, 37:16) and vessels used in transporting the bread during wilderness travels (Numbers 4:7). The term also appears in the inventory of temple vessels taken to Babylon and later returned (Jeremiah 52:19). These were not ordinary dishes but sanctified implements reserved for liturgical purposes.

(4×) Sacrificial bowls or jars used in tabernacle and temple ritual, particularly associated with the table of showbread. The cross-linguistic glosses ('bowls,' 'jars,' 'tazones,' 'jarros') suggest vessels for containing liquids or offerings. Their consistent appearance in sacred contexts marks them as ritual implements rather than common domestic pottery, part of the elaborate system of vessels that facilitated Israel's worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-bowls, its-jars, the-bowls | es: los-jarros, los-tazones, sus-tazones | fr: [המנקיות], et-son-coupes, le-bowls | de: [המנקיות], der-bowls, sein-jars Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16; Num 4:7; Jer 52:19

מְנַשֶּׁה H4519 Conj-w (146×)

Manasseh; the firstborn of Joseph, his tribal descendants, their territory, or later persons of that name.

Derived from the verb נָשָׁה ('to forget'), Manasseh's name is explained at Genesis 41:51: 'God has made me forget all my hardship.' As a proper noun it spans the individual patriarch (Gen 46:20; 48:1–20), the powerful half-tribe split between Transjordan and Cisjordan territories (Josh 17; Num 32), and later figures including the infamous King Manasseh of Judah (2 Kgs 21). The gentilic form 'the Manassite' (הַמְנַשִּׁי) appears once at 1 Chronicles 27:21 to describe a tribal member, showing the name's productive capacity as a demonym.

1. Manasseh (proper name) (145×) The proper noun Manasseh (מְנַשֶּׁה), covering the individual (Joseph's firstborn, Gen 41:51; 48:1–20), the Israelite tribe descended from him, their territorial allotment both east and west of the Jordan (Josh 17; Num 32), and later bearers of the name including King Manasseh of Judah. Multilingual glosses are consistent transliterations: Spanish 'Manasés,' French 'Manassé,' German 'Manasse' — all recognizable proper-noun forms preserving the Hebrew phonology. MANASSEH TRIBE NAME

en: Manasseh | es: Manasés, Menashé | fr: Manassé | de: Manasse, Menasche, Menasches Gen 41:51; Gen 46:20; Gen 48:1; Gen 48:13; Gen 48:14

2. Menashshite (gentilicic demonym) (1×) The gentilic adjective 'the Manassite' (הַמְנַשִּׁי), used as a substantive demonym to identify a member or descendant of the tribe of Manasseh. Attested once at 1 Chronicles 27:21, where it designates a tribal officer. English 'the Menashshite,' Spanish 'el de Manasés,' and German 'der Manasse' each show the shift from personal name to collective-ethnic identifier. MANASSEH TRIBE NAME

en: the-Menashshite | es: el-de-Manasés | fr: der-Manassé | de: der-Manasse 1Chr 27:21

מְנַשִּׁי H4520 Art / N-proper-ms (4×)

Manassite (adjective), of the tribe of Manasseh

A gentillic adjective identifying members or territory of the tribe of Manasseh, specifically the half-tribe that settled east of the Jordan. It appears in designating cities of refuge (Deuteronomy 4:43), territorial descriptions (2 Kings 10:33), tribal genealogies, and administrative divisions (1 Chronicles 26:32). The term distinguished the Transjordanian Manassites from their western counterparts, acknowledging the tribal division created when part of Manasseh chose to settle in Gilead and Bashan rather than cross into Canaan proper.

(4×) An ethnic-geographical adjective meaning 'of Manasseh' or 'Manassite,' specifically referring to the eastern half-tribe. The multilingual glosses preserve the gentillic form ('Manassite,' 'manasita'). The term's use in legal (cities of refuge), military (territorial conquest), and administrative (Levitical assignments) contexts reflects the tribe's ongoing distinct identity even after settlement, particularly the unique status of having territory on both sides of the Jordan. MANASSEH TRIBE NAME

en: and-the-Manassites, for-the-Manassite, the-Manassite | es: el-manasita, para-los-manasitas, y-el-manasita | fr: [המנשי], et-le-Manassites, le-Manassite | de: [המנשי], der-Manassite, fuer-der-Manassite Deut 4:43; Deut 29:8; 2Kgs 10:33; 1Chr 26:32

מָנָת H4521 N-fsc (7×)

Portion, allotment, or assigned share – especially of offerings, provisions, or figuratively of divine judgment or blessing.

A feminine construct noun closely related to manah, referring to a portion or allotted share. In Chronicles and Nehemiah it designates the prescribed portions for priests, Levites, and singers from the king's contribution for sacrifices (2 Chr 31:3-4; Neh 12:44, 47; 13:10). Figuratively, it speaks of what God assigns: in Psalm 11:6 'the portion of their cup' is the lot of the wicked, while in Psalm 16:5 the LORD himself is 'the portion of my inheritance and my cup' – one of the most intimate expressions of personal devotion in the Psalter.

portion, allotment, share (7×) A designated portion or allotment, whether of food, temple offerings, or provisions distributed to cultic personnel. English glosses like 'a-portion-for' and Spanish 'porcion-de' consistently reflect a concrete share assigned by authority. In 2 Chronicles 31:3 it is the king's contribution for burnt offerings; in Nehemiah 12:44 and 13:10 it denotes the Levitical and singers' shares prescribed by Torah. Figuratively, in Psalm 11:6 the 'portion of their cup' signifies God's measured-out judgment upon the wicked, while Psalm 16:5 turns the image to intimate blessing: the LORD himself as one's allotted portion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-portion-for, and-portion-of, portion-of | es: porciones-de, porción-de, y-porción-de | fr: [ומנת], [מנאות], [מניות] | de: [ומנת], [מנאות], [מניות] 2Chr 31:3; 2Chr 31:4; Neh 12:44; Neh 12:47; Neh 13:10

מַס H4522 Art / N-ms (23×)

Forced labor, corvée gang; later, monetary tribute or tax levy imposed on subject peoples.

In its earliest and most frequent sense, mas refers to a body of conscripted laborers – a corvée gang pressed into royal service. Jacob's blessing over Issachar foretells he will become 'a slave at forced labor' (Gen 49:15), and Solomon's great building projects relied on a mas of 30,000 men drawn from all Israel (1 Kgs 5:27). Spanish tributo and leva together capture both the later monetary sense and the older labor-gang meaning. Only in Esther 10:1, where Ahasuerus imposes mas on the coastlands, does the word clearly mean a monetary tribute – a semantic shift the Targum's rendering already reflects.

1. forced labor, corvée (22×) Conscripted labor gangs or compulsory servitude imposed on subject peoples, as in Solomon's workforce levies and the Canaanite populations put to forced labor (Josh 16:10; 17:13). Spanish leva ('levy') and French forced-travail capture the physical compulsion involved. The phrase mas-oved ('laboring corvée') in Gen 49:15 and Exod 1:11 specifies the harshest form of this service. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: as-forced-labor, for-forced-labor, for-labor-of- | es: a-tributo, el-tributo, la-leva | fr: [המס], [למס], comme-forced-travail | de: [המס], [למס], der-forced-labor Gen 49:15; Exod 1:11; Deut 20:11; Josh 16:10; Josh 17:13

2. tribute, tax payment (1×) Monetary tribute or tax exacted from a conquered or subject people, distinct from physical labor conscription. Attested clearly only in Esth 10:1, where Ahasuerus levies mas on the land and coastlands. The late semantic development from labor-gang to tax-payment parallels Aramaic and post-biblical Hebrew usage, where the cognate came to mean 'tax' rather than 'forced work.' TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: tribute | es: tributo | fr: [מס] | de: [מס] Esth 10:1

מַס H4523 Prep-l (1×)

One who is fainting or despairing, literally melting or collapsing from loss of hope or strength

This term captures a state of complete exhaustion or despair, where strength and hope have drained away. In Job 6:14, it describes one who has reached the point of failing or collapsing under pressure. The image is of melting or dissolution—when inner resources have been depleted. Job uses this to describe the friend's obligation to show kindness precisely when someone reaches this critical point of desperation.

(1×) One experiencing despair or complete loss of strength, described through the metaphor of melting or collapsing. Job 6:14 uses this to identify the person most in need of kindness—the one whose inner resources have failed. The Spanish 'desfallece' (faints/weakens) captures the sense of physical and emotional collapse inherent in this term. DESPAIR HOPELESSNESS

en: to-the-fainting | es: Al-que-desfallece | fr: למס | de: [למס] Job 6:14

מְסַב H4524 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (5×)

surroundings, round about; a round table or couch; encircling environs

Derived from the root meaning 'to surround,' this noun describes what encircles or goes around — whether places surrounding Jerusalem (2 Kgs 23:5), carved walls decorated 'all around' (1 Kgs 6:29), clouds turning in every direction (Job 37:12), or enemies encircling the psalmist (Ps 140:9). Its most debated occurrence is Song 1:12, where 'while the king was at his mesab' has been interpreted as a round table, a banquet couch, or simply his circle of companions. Spanish 'en-su-mesa' (at his table) and French 'dans-son-festin' (at his feast) reflect the banqueting interpretation.

(5×) Surrounding area, environs, round about. Describes spatial encirclement: the places around Jerusalem where pagan priests burned incense (2 Kgs 23:5), decorative carvings 'all around' the temple walls (1 Kgs 6:29), and clouds directed 'on all sides' (Job 37:12). Spanish 'alrededor' and French 'autour' consistently render this circling spatial sense. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: and-surroundings-of, around, at-his-table | es: alrededor, dando-vueltas, en-su-mesa | fr: autour, dans-son-festin„ de-environnant | de: [במסבו], [מסבות], jene-surrounding-mich 1Kgs 6:29; 2Kgs 23:5; Job 37:12; Ps 140:9; Song 1:12

מַסְגֵּר H4525 Art / N-ms (7×)

A smith or locksmith (metalworker deported with Judah's elite); also a dungeon or prison (a place that is 'shut up').

Derived from the root sagar (to shut, close), this noun branches into two concrete applications. As a craftsman term, masger designates the smiths or locksmiths deported from Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar alongside the charashim (craftsmen) — 'all the craftsmen and the smiths' (2 Kgs 24:14, 16; Jer 24:1; 29:2). As a place of confinement, it means a dungeon or prison: 'bring my soul out of prison' (Ps 142:7), 'to bring prisoners out of the dungeon' (Isa 42:7). Spanish captures both poles clearly: 'los herreros' (the blacksmiths) for the artisan sense and 'de la carcel' (from the prison) for the confinement sense.

1. smith, locksmith (4×) A smith or locksmith — a metalworker skilled in forging, especially locks and iron implements. Used collectively of the artisan class exiled from Jerusalem: 'all the craftsmen and the masger' (2 Kgs 24:14, 16). Jeremiah echoes this in his vision of the good and bad figs, listing those carried away including 'the craftsmen and the smiths' (Jer 24:1; 29:2). Spanish 'los herreros' (the blacksmiths) and 'y el herrero' (and the smith) reflect the metalworking identity. The connection to the root sagar (to shut) suggests one who makes locks or closures. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-smith, and-the-smiths, the-smiths | es: los-herreros, y-el-herrero, y-los-herreros | fr: [המסגר], [והמסגר], et-le-smith | de: [המסגר], [והמסגר], und-der-smith 2Kgs 24:14; 2Kgs 24:16; Jer 24:1; Jer 29:2

2. dungeon, prison (3×) A dungeon or prison — a place where people are shut in, drawing directly on the root sagar (to close, confine). The psalmist cries 'bring my soul out of masger' (Ps 142:7), using imprisonment as a metaphor for existential distress. Isaiah 42:7 pairs it with blindness: God's servant will 'bring prisoners out of the dungeon.' In Isa 24:22 the eschatological judgment gathers captives 'into the dungeon.' Spanish 'de la carcel' (from the jail) and 'de prision' (from prison) confirm the carceral reading. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: a-prison, from-prison, from-the-prison | es: de-la-cárcel, de-prisión, prisión | fr: [ממסגר], [מסגר], de-serrure | de: [ממסגר], [מסגר], von-prison Ps 142:7; Isa 24:22; Isa 42:7

מִסְגֶּרֶת H4526 N-fpc / 3fs (18×)

A border, rim, or panel-frame (on sacred furniture); also a stronghold or fortress

Misgeret is a noun built from the root sagar ('to close, shut'), and its meanings reflect different kinds of enclosure. In the tabernacle instructions of Exodus 25, it denotes the decorative rim or frame encircling the table of showbread, while in Solomon's temple the plural describes the ornate panels set into the bronze stands (1 Kgs 7:28-36). Spanish distinguishes these as 'marco' (frame) and 'paneles' (panels), while French uses 'cadre' and 'rebord.' A third, entirely different sense emerges in poetic texts: the stronghold or fortress from which nations emerge trembling before God (2 Sam 22:46; Mic 7:17), preserving the root idea of an enclosed, shut-in place but now applied to defensive fortifications.

1. panels or border-frames (9×) Panels or decorative border-frames (plural) set into the sides of the bronze stands in Solomon's temple, often described alongside engravings of lions, oxen, and cherubim. The detailed architectural descriptions of 1 Kings 7:28-36 use this term repeatedly. Spanish 'paneles' and French 'panels' reflect the flat, framed surface character of these elements. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: [and-its-panels], and-its-panels, and-panels | es: (paneles-de-ella), [y-paneles-de-ella], los-paneles | fr: [and-son-panels], et-leur-panels, et-panels | de: [and-sein-panels], der-panels, der-panels-von 1Kgs 7:28; 1Kgs 7:29; 1Kgs 7:31; 1Kgs 7:32

2. frame or rim (6×) A border, rim, or frame surrounding a sacred object, especially the ornamental border encircling the table of showbread in the tabernacle. Exodus 25:25 specifies a handbreadth-wide frame with a golden molding around it. Spanish 'marco' and French 'cadre' both capture the enclosing, framing function. The distinction from sense 1 is one of singular border versus multiple inset panels. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-frame-of, for-its-frame, for-its-rim | es: a-su-marco, el-marco, marco | fr: le-cadre, le-rebord, pour-son-cadre | de: der-Rahmen, der-rim, einen-Rahmen-von Exod 25:25; Exod 25:27; Exod 37:12

3. stronghold or fortress (3×) A stronghold, fortress, or enclosed place of refuge, from which people emerge trembling in awe of God. In 2 Samuel 22:46 and Psalm 18:45, foreign nations come quaking out of their strongholds, and Micah 7:17 compares them to reptiles crawling from their hiding places. Spanish uses both 'fortalezas' and 'escondites,' showing the range from military fortification to hiding place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-their-fortresses, from-their-strongholds | es: de-sus-escondites, de-sus-fortalezas, de-sus-prisiones | fr: côté, de-cadre, de-leur-strongholds | de: [ממסגרתיהם], von-ihr-fortresses, von-ihr-strongholds 2Sam 22:46; Ps 18:45; Mic 7:17

מַסָּד H4527 Conj-w (1×)

Foundation or base structure, the underlying support from which a building rises

This architectural term denotes the foundation or base of a structure. In 1 Kings 7:9, it appears in the description of Solomon's temple construction, specifying that fine stones were used from the foundation upward. The term emphasizes the bottom structural layer that supports everything above it. Ancient Near Eastern building practices gave careful attention to foundations, especially for sacred or royal structures.

(1×) The foundation or base of a building, the structural layer from which construction rises. Used in describing Solomon's temple architecture where quality stones were specified 'from foundation' upward (1 Kings 7:9). The multilingual evidence (cimiento, fondation, foundation) consistently identifies this as the foundational base structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-foundation | es: y-desde-cimiento | fr: et-de-fondation | de: und-von-foundation 1Kgs 7:9

מִסְדְּרוֹן H4528 Art / N-ms / 3fs (1×)

A porch, colonnade, or covered walkway, possibly referring to a row of pillars or covered space

This architectural term appears only in Judges 3:23 when Ehud exits after assassinating King Eglon. The precise meaning remains debated, but it likely refers to a porch, covered colonnade, or walkway with pillars. The context suggests a transitional architectural space between interior rooms and the outside. The term may derive from a root meaning 'row,' suggesting a row of pillars creating a covered passage.

(1×) A covered porch or colonnade, possibly characterized by a row of pillars. Found in Judges 3:23 as Ehud makes his escape, suggesting an architectural transitional space. The multilingual terms (pórtico, porch, Vorhalle) point to a covered area, though the exact architectural feature remains somewhat uncertain in this unique biblical occurrence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-porch | es: por-el-pórtico | fr: le-porch | de: der-Vorhalle Judg 3:23

מָסָה H4529 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-2ms (4×)
to melt, dissolve, cause to flow
A Hiphil verb meaning to cause melting or dissolution, used both literally and metaphorically. God melts ice with his word (Psalm 147:18), demonstrating power over nature. The psalmist's tears metaphorically 'dissolve' his bed (Psalm 6:7), and God's rebuke 'consumes' what is precious like a moth (Psalm 39:11). The verb also describes making someone's heart 'melt' with fear—intimidating them to the point of losing courage (Joshua 14:8). The imagery consistently involves reduction from solid to liquid, from firm to unstable.

(4×) To cause something to melt, dissolve, or flow, whether literally (ice melting) or metaphorically (hearts melting with fear, grief dissolving bed with tears, God's judgment consuming possessions). The cross-linguistic glosses show variety ('melt,' 'dissolve,' 'flood,' 'dissolver') reflecting the term's application to different substances and contexts. The common thread is transformation from solid/stable to liquid/unstable through some external force, whether thermal, emotional, or divine. MELT DISSOLVE
en: I-flood, and-consume, and-he-melts-them | es: disuelvo, hicieron-desfallecer, y-derrites | fr: arracher, et-arracher, fit-fondre | de: ich-Flut, machte-melt, und-er-schmilzt-ihnen Josh 14:8; Ps 6:6; Ps 39:11; Ps 147:18

מִסַּת H4530 N-fsc (1×)
Sufficiency or adequate amount, the full measure of what is needed or available to give
This term expresses the concept of sufficiency or adequacy—having enough to meet a need or obligation. In Deuteronomy 16:10, it describes how Israelites should bring offerings 'according to the sufficiency' of their means—giving the full amount they can afford as a freewill offering. The Aramaic cognates support this sense of 'enough' or 'the amount required.' The concept balances generosity with capacity, indicating a full but proportionate giving.

(1×) The sufficiency or adequate amount of something, specifically what one can afford to give. Deuteronomy 16:10 applies this to freewill offerings during the Feast of Weeks—give according to the sufficiency of your means. The Spanish 'medida' (measure) captures the sense of proportionate adequacy, while the English 'sufficiency' conveys having the full amount available. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: sufficiency-of | es: medida-de | fr: sufficiency-de | de: sufficiency-von Deut 16:10

מַמְסֵה H4531a Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)
Despair or melting away, the collapse of hope experienced by innocent sufferers
This term denotes despair in its rawest form—the melting away or dissolution of hope. Job 9:23 uses it to describe God's response to the despair of the innocent when calamity strikes suddenly. The image is of complete collapse, when strength and hope dissolve. Some interpreters have suggested 'trial' as an alternative, but the context of Job's complaint about divine indifference to suffering favors the sense of desperation and failing hope.

(1×) The despair or collapse of hope experienced by innocent sufferers, described through melting or failing imagery. Job 9:23 speaks of God mocking 'at the despair of innocent ones' when sudden disaster strikes. This captures Job's protest about divine indifference to the suffering of the righteous. The Spanish 'prueba' (trial/test) represents an alternative interpretation, though despair fits Job's complaint. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-despair-of | es: de-la-prueba-de | fr: à-למסת | de: [למסת] Job 9:23

מַסָּה H4531b N-proper-fs (4×)
Massah, place of testing in the wilderness; or trials/testings
The name given to a wilderness location where Israel tested the Lord by doubting his presence and provision (Exodus 17:7, Deuteronomy 6:16, 9:22), often paired with Meribah ('strife'). The name means 'testing' or 'trial,' and Psalm 95:8 uses it to warn against hardening hearts as the wilderness generation did. Deuteronomy 33:8 also mentions testing Levi 'at Massah,' possibly referring to the same incident or another trial. The place-name itself became a byword for the temptation to test God's faithfulness.

(4×) A proper name for a wilderness location where Israel tested God, derived from the word for 'testing' or 'trial.' Some contexts use it as a common noun for testings (Deuteronomy 4:34, 7:19, 29:3—the trials God inflicted on Egypt). The multilingual glosses reflect this ambiguity, rendering it sometimes as a place name (Massah, Masá) and sometimes as 'trials.' The site symbolizes the perpetual temptation to doubt God's care when circumstances seem threatening. TESTING AND TEMPTATION
en: Massah, by-trials, the-trials | es: Las-pruebas, Masá, con-pruebas | fr: de-fondre, le-trials, par-trials | de: Massah, der-trials, durch-trials Deut 4:34; Deut 7:19; Deut 29:3; Ps 95:8

מַסָּה H4532 Conj-w (4×)
Massah, wilderness location where Israel tested God
A geographical name marking the site where the Israelites tested the Lord by demanding water and questioning his presence among them (Exodus 17:7). Moses named the place both Massah ('testing') and Meribah ('strife') to memorialize Israel's faithlessness. Later Scripture references it as a warning against repeating the wilderness generation's lack of trust (Deuteronomy 6:16, 9:22, Psalm 95:8). Deuteronomy 33:8 mentions God testing Levi 'at Massah,' possibly indicating multiple incidents at the location or connecting it to Levitical ordination trials.

(4×) A proper place name in the wilderness itinerary, the site where Israel put God to the test by doubting his presence and provision. The name itself means 'testing,' making it a permanent memorial to a failure of faith. The multilingual glosses consistently preserve it as a place name (Massah, Masá, Massa). Subsequent references use the location as a cautionary example: 'Do not test the Lord as you did at Massah' became a proverbial warning against faithless doubt. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Massah, and-at-Massah, at-Massah | es: Masah, en-Masá, y-en-Masah | fr: Massa, et-à-Massah, à-Massah | de: Massah, bei-Massah, und-bei-Massah Exod 17:7; Deut 6:16; Deut 9:22; Deut 33:8

מַסְוֶה H4533 N-ms (3×)
veil, covering worn on face
A noun denoting a veil or face covering, appearing only in the account of Moses descending from Mount Sinai. After speaking with God, Moses' face shone so brightly that he placed a veil over his face when addressing the people (Exodus 34:33, 35). He would remove the veil when entering God's presence (34:34). The veil mediated between the divine glory reflected on Moses' face and the people's inability to bear that radiance, prefiguring later theological reflections on veiled revelation.

(3×) Translations uniformly identify a face veil or covering: Spanish 'velo' (veil), English 'veil,' French 'voile.' Exodus 34:33 describes Moses placing the veil on his face after the people saw its radiance. Verse 34 establishes his pattern: removing it in God's presence, replacing it when teaching the people. Verse 35 confirms this became regular practice. Paul later uses this imagery in 2 Corinthians 3 to discuss veiled and unveiled revelation, giving Moses' veil enduring theological significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-veil, the-veil | es: el-velo, un-velo | fr: le-voile, un-voile | de: der-Vorhang, ein-Vorhang Exod 34:33; Exod 34:34; Exod 35:35

מְסוּכָה H4534 Prep-m / N-fs (1×)

A hedge or thorny barrier, used metaphorically for an obstruction or obstacle

This term refers to a hedge, likely a thorny barrier used for protection or boundary marking. In Micah 7:4, it appears in a striking metaphor where even the most upright person in corrupt society is compared to a hedge—meaning an obstruction or dangerous barrier rather than something helpful. The prophet's point is devastating: when society decays, even the best people become obstacles. The image draws on the reality that hedges, while useful for boundaries, present barriers and dangers.

(1×) A hedge or thorny barrier, used metaphorically in Micah 7:4 to describe how even the most upright person in a corrupt society becomes an obstruction. The comparison to a hedge (parallel to the best being like a brier) emphasizes danger and impediment rather than protection. The multilingual evidence (seto, haie, hedge) consistently identifies the thorny barrier imagery. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: than-hedge | es: más-que-seto | fr: haie | de: [ממסוכה] Mic 7:4

מַסָּח H4535 Adv (1×)

A disputed term, possibly meaning alternating duty, defense, or repulse in a military context

This word appears only in 2 Kings 11:6 in instructions about guarding the temple during Jehoiada's coup. The meaning remains uncertain, with suggestions ranging from 'alternating duty' to 'defense' or 'repulse.' Some ancient versions omit the word entirely, suggesting possible textual corruption. The context involves military guard duty at the temple, so if original, it likely describes either the manner of guarding (alternating shifts) or the purpose (repulsing attackers).

(1×) A term of uncertain meaning in a military guard context, possibly indicating alternating duty or defense. Found in 2 Kings 11:6 regarding temple guard arrangements during the coup that made Joash king. The multilingual evidence (alternating, defensa) reflects the interpretive uncertainty. The word may be a textual error, as some ancient versions omit it entirely. LEGAL DEFENSE APOLOGY

en: alternating | es: defensa | fr: alternating | de: alternating 2Kgs 11:6

מִסְחָר H4536 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Merchandise or trade goods, commercial items for buying and selling

This term refers to merchandise or commercial goods in the context of trade. It appears in 1 Kings 10:15 regarding Solomon's revenue from merchants and traders. However, the text is likely corrupt at this point, as the parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 9:14 uses a different word for 'traders.' The term would denote the commercial goods that traveling merchants transported and sold, contributing to royal revenue through taxes or tribute.

(1×) Merchandise or trade goods that merchants deal in commercially. Appears in 1 Kings 10:15 regarding Solomon's income from traders, though the text is probably corrupt. The multilingual evidence (comercio, merchandise) identifies commercial trade activity. The parallel in 2 Chronicles uses a different term for similar meaning, highlighting textual uncertainty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-merchandise-of | es: y-comercio-de | fr: et-merchandise-de | de: und-merchandise-von 1Kgs 10:15

מָסַךְ H4537 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (5×)

to mix, mingle; to pour out or blend (of wine with spices, or drink with tears)

A verb describing the art of blending drinks — whether mixing wine with aromatic spices to create a richer beverage, or mixing one's drink with tears in grief. Wisdom herself 'has mixed her wine' as she prepares her banquet table (Prov 9:2, 5), making this verb a symbol of both hospitality and divine invitation. In a darker register, the LORD 'has poured into Egypt a spirit of confusion' (Isa 19:14), extending the mixing metaphor to divine judgment. The psalmist's lament — 'I mingle my drink with weeping' (Ps 102:9) — is one of Scripture's most vivid images of grief-soaked daily life.

(5×) To mix or blend a drink, especially wine with spices. In Prov 9:2, 5, personified Wisdom has 'mixed her wine' as part of her lavish feast, and Isa 5:22 condemns those expert 'at mixing strong drink.' Spanish 'mezclo' and French 'mêler' both render the blending action. Ancient mixing enhanced flavor with spices, not dilution with water — a distinction the BDB entry carefully notes. MIXING WITH OIL

en: I-have-mixed, I-mingle, for-mixing | es: ha-mezclado, mezclado-mío, mezclo | fr: [למסך], [מסך], de-mêler | de: [למסך], [מסך], [מסכה] Ps 102:9; Prov 9:2; Prov 9:5; Isa 5:22; Isa 19:14

מֶסֶךְ H4538 N-ms (1×)

Spiced wine or mixed drink, wine blended with aromatic spices for enhanced flavor or effect

This term describes wine that has been mixed with spices, creating an aromatic and potent drink. In Psalm 75:8, it appears in a powerful metaphor for divine judgment—a cup in God's hand full of foaming wine mixed with spices. Ancient wine was often mixed with various spices (myrrh, cinnamon, etc.) to enhance flavor, aroma, and possibly intoxicating effects. The imagery suggests something intense and overwhelming that must be drunk to the dregs.

(1×) Wine mixed with spices, creating an aromatic and potent beverage. Used metaphorically in Psalm 75:8 where God holds a cup of foaming wine 'full of mixture'—representing divine judgment that the wicked must drink completely. The practice of mixing wine with spices was common in the ancient Near East. The Spanish 'mezcla' and English 'mixture' directly capture this blending. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: mixture | es: mezcla | fr: de-libation | de: mixture Ps 75:8

מָסָךְ H4539 Conj-w (25×)

A screen, curtain, or covering; a hanging used as a partition in the Tabernacle or a protective covering in broader contexts.

Primarily a term from the Tabernacle legislation in Exodus and Numbers, referring to the ornamental curtain-screens hung at the entrance to the courtyard, the doorway of the tent of meeting, and related thresholds. Spanish 'cortina' and German 'Decke' capture the textile nature of these hangings. Beyond the sanctuary, the word extends to any covering that conceals or protects — the cloth spread over a well to hide David's spies at 2 Samuel 17:19, the cloud God spread as a protective canopy in Psalm 105:39, and the 'covering' of Judah whose removal signals exposed vulnerability in Isaiah 22:8.

1. screen, curtain (Tabernacle hanging) (22×) A screen or curtain serving as a partition at Tabernacle entrances — the hangings at the court gate (Exod 27:16; 38:18), the tent doorway (Exod 26:36-37; 36:37), and associated with the veil of the Most Holy Place. Spanish uniformly renders 'cortina' and German 'Decke,' both pointing to a woven textile barrier. Nearly all 22 occurrences cluster in Exodus 25-40 and Numbers 3-4, tying this sense tightly to Priestly legislation about sacred space and its boundaries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-screen, and-screen-of, screen | es: Y-cortina-de, cortina, cortina-de | fr:

et-screen-de, et-voile-de, le-screen | de: Decke, Decke-von, der-Decke Exod 26:36; Exod 26:37; Exod 27:16; Exod 35:12; Exod 35:15

2. covering, protective screen (3×) A covering or protective screen used to conceal or shield, apart from the Tabernacle context. At 2 Samuel 17:19 a woman spreads it over a well to hide Jonathan and Ahimaaz. Psalm 105:39 describes God spreading a cloud 'for a covering' over Israel. At Isaiah 22:8 the 'masak of Judah' is removed, exposing the nation's defenses. Spanish shifts to 'cubierta' (covering) here, and French to 'couvrant,' distinguishing the protective function from the partitioning role of the sanctuary curtains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: covering-of, for-a-covering, the-covering | es: cubierta-de, la-cubierta, por-cubierta | fr: [מסך], le-couvrant, à-couverture | de: [מסך], der-bedeckend, für-ein-covering 2Sam 17:19; Ps 105:39; Isa 22:8

מְסֵכָה H4540 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

A covering or that which covers, something spread over or used to cover something else

This term denotes a covering or that which covers something. In Ezekiel 28:13, it describes how precious stones were the covering of the king of Tyre in his original splendor in Eden. The word suggests being covered with or adorned by something valuable. While grammatical tradition points to one derivation, the sense clearly supports the idea of covering or being covered, likely related to the root for covering or protecting.

(1×) A covering or adornment that covers something, specifically precious stones as a covering in Ezekiel 28:13. The prophet describes the king of Tyre's original state where gemstones were his covering —suggesting both beauty and protection. The multilingual evidence (cubierta, couverture, covering) consistently identifies the covering function, though some versions transliterate due to textual uncertainty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: your-covering | es: tu-cubierta | fr: couverture | de: [מסכתך] Ezek 28:13

מַסֵּכָה H4541a Conj-w / N-fs (26×)

A molten/cast idol image; rarely, a libation or covering poured out in covenant-making

Used almost exclusively for cast metal idols, massekah denotes an image formed by pouring molten metal into a mold — the infamous golden calf of Exodus 32 being its defining instance. Paired frequently with pesel (carved image), it became a standard term for denouncing idolatry across Deuteronomy, Judges, Kings, and the prophets. A single occurrence in Isaiah 30:1 uses the word in a strikingly different way, referring to a libation or covering poured out as part of an illicit political alliance, a covenant woven apart from God's Spirit.

1. molten/cast image (idol) (25×) A metal idol formed by casting molten material into a mold. English glosses consistently render 'cast image' or 'molten image,' while Spanish uses 'imagen fundida' (melted image), reinforcing the metallurgical process. The golden calf episodes (Exod 32:4, 8; Deut 9:16; Neh 9:18; Ps 106:19) define the prototype; the term appears in prohibitions (Exod 34:17; Lev 19:4) and in prophetic condemnations of northern idolatry (Hos 13:2; 1 Kgs 14:9). IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: a-cast-image, a-molten-image, and-cast-image | es: a-imagen-fundida, de-fundición, e-imagen-de-fundición | fr: [והמסכות], [למסכה], [מסכות] | de: [והמסכות], [ומסכה], [למסכה] Exod 32:4; Exod 32:8; Exod 34:17; Lev 19:4; Num 33:52

2. covering / libation (alliance) (1×) A libation, covering, or woven alliance — something 'poured out' in the context of covenant-making apart from God. Occurring only in Isaiah 30:1, where Israel weaves an alliance with Egypt that is not of God's Spirit. English renders 'covering,' Spanish 'libación,' reflecting the ambiguity between a drink offering and a protective pact. BDB connects this to the root nasak (to pour) rather than to the casting of metal. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: a-covering | es: libación | fr: [מסכה] | de: [מסכה] Isa 30:1

מַסֵּכָה H4541b Conj-w (2×)

woven fabric, web, or covering; specifically a veil or bed-covering used figuratively for mourning or inadequacy

This feminine noun denotes woven material functioning as a covering. Isaiah uses it twice in vivid imagery: the 'web woven over all nations' represents a mourning-veil symbolizing universal distress (25:7), and a bed-covering too short to stretch out in (28:20) illustrates futile refuge. Some scholars see it in Isaiah 30:1 as well, in the phrase 'weave a web' parallel to 'make counsel,' referring to Judah's negotiations with Egypt. The metaphor of inadequate covering runs through these texts, suggesting the futility of human efforts apart from divine provision.

(2×) A woven fabric serving as a covering, whether literal or symbolic. The parallel structure in Isaiah 25:7 pairs it with 'the shroud that is cast over all peoples,' while the bed-covering metaphor in 28:20 uses physical inadequacy to depict spiritual insufficiency. The root idea is something woven or interlaced that envelops, with strong symbolic overtones of mourning and incompleteness when used by the prophets. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-the-covering, and-the-veil | es: y-la-cubierta, y-la-manta | fr: [והמסכה] | de: [והמסכה] Isa 25:7; Isa 28:20

מִסְכֵּן H4542 Adj-ms (4×)

poor, needy (likely a loan-word)

An adjective describing poverty, appearing only in Ecclesiastes. The 'poor wise youth' surpasses the old foolish king (Ecclesiastes 4:13). A poor wise man delivered his city by wisdom, yet was forgotten afterward (Ecclesiastes 9:15-16). The term likely entered Hebrew as a loan-word from Akkadian (muškênu, 'beggar'), suggesting it may have carried nuances of social class or legal status beyond simple economic poverty. Ecclesiastes uses it to highlight the paradox that wisdom in a poor man is despised despite its efficacy.

(4×) Describing someone who is poor or needy, used exclusively by Qoheleth to explore the relationship between wisdom, poverty, and social power. The cross-linguistic glosses ('poor,' 'pobre,' 'pauvre') render straightforward economic status, though the term's loan-word origin might suggest specific social categories. The Teacher's point is ironic: a poor man's wisdom can save a city, yet society quickly forgets him because poverty confers no lasting honor. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: poor, the-poor | es: el-pobre, pobre | fr: le-pauvre, pauvre | de: [המסכן], [מסכן] Eccl 4:13; Eccl 9:15; Eccl 9:16

מִסְכְּנוֹת H4543 N-fpc (7×)

Storehouses or storage cities – fortified supply depots for grain, provisions, and military stores.

A feminine plural noun referring to storage facilities or supply cities where provisions, grain, and military resources were stockpiled. The term appears almost exclusively in the phrase 'arei hamiskenot' (storage cities). These include the cities Pharaoh forced Israel to build (Exod 1:11), Solomon's supply depots throughout his kingdom (1 Kgs 9:19; 2 Chr 8:4, 6), and Jehoshaphat's fortified storehouses (2 Chr 17:12). Multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'almacenes,' English 'store-cities' – every tradition sees purpose-built storage infrastructure.

storehouse, storage city (7×) A storehouse or storage city, a fortified facility for stockpiling provisions, grain, and supplies. All seven occurrences denote the same basic referent, differing only in grammatical form (with article, conjunction, or construct). Spanish 'almacenes' and English 'store-cities/storage' converge on the same meaning. In Exodus 1:11 these are the cities Pithom and Raamses that Israel built under forced labor; in 1 Kings 9:19 and 2 Chronicles 8:4-6 they are Solomon's extensive supply network; in 2 Chronicles 16:4 and 17:12 they serve as strategic military depots. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: and-storehouses, storage, store-cities-of | es: almacenes, almacenes-de, los-almacenes | fr: [המסכנות], [ומסכנות], [מסכנות] | de: [המסכנות], [ומסכנות], [מסכנות] Exod 1:11; 1Kgs 9:19; 2Chr 8:4; 2Chr 8:6; 2Chr 16:4

מִסְכֵּנֻת H4544 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

Poverty or scarcity, the state of lacking resources or living in want

This term describes poverty, scarcity, or deprivation—the state of lacking adequate resources. It appears in Deuteronomy 8:9 in Moses' description of the wilderness experience, contrasted with the abundance of the promised land. The word emphasizes material lack and scarcity, the condition of not having enough. The wilderness journey involved real deprivation that tested Israel's dependence on God rather than material abundance.

(1×) Poverty or scarcity, the condition of material deprivation. Deuteronomy 8:9 uses this to describe the wilderness experience—a land of poverty contrasted with Canaan's abundance. This scarcity served to teach Israel dependence on God. The Spanish 'escasez' (scarcity) and English 'poverty' both capture the sense of lacking adequate resources for comfortable living. LACK WANT POVERTY

en: in-poverty | es: con-escasez | fr: dans-poverty | de: in-poverty Deut 8:9

מַסֶּכֶת H4545 Art / N-fs (2×)

web of unfinished textile material still on the loom

This rare term appears exclusively in the Samson narrative (Judges 16:13-14), where Delilah weaves Samson's seven locks into the web of her loom as part of her third attempt to discover the source of his strength. The word denotes the unfinished textile fabric stretched on a weaving apparatus. The multilingual glosses uniformly render it as 'web' or 'loom fabric,' capturing the technical weaving context. The episode highlights the increasing intimacy and danger of Delilah's manipulations, as Samson's hair becomes literally entangled in the woven threads.

(2×) The web or fabric of unfinished material on a loom during the weaving process. Both occurrences appear in identical context: Delilah weaving Samson's braids into the loom's web. The definite article ('the web') in both instances points to the specific loom in Delilah's dwelling. This technical term gives us a glimpse into ancient textile production and serves narratively to emphasize how close Delilah is getting to the true secret of Samson's strength. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: the-web | es: la-tela | fr: le-web | de: der-web Judg 16:13; Judg 16:14

מְסִלָּה H4546 Prep-l (27×)

Highway, raised road — a prepared thoroughfare for travel; rarely stairway or celestial course

The noun mesillah derives from the root salal ('to raise up, cast up') and names a purpose-built, elevated road — not a city street but a route between settlements or through the wilderness. Israel asks to travel the mesillah through Edom (Num 20:19), fugitives flee along the highway to Gibeah (Judg 20:31-45), and Isaiah's great vision promises a highway from Assyria for the remnant of God's people (Isa 11:16; 19:23). The most theologically charged use appears in Isaiah 40:3: 'prepare in the wilderness a highway for our God.' Two rare extensions appear: stairways in Solomon's temple (2 Chr 9:11) and the celestial courses from which the stars fight (Judg 5:20).

1. highway, raised road (25×) The principal sense: a highway or raised public road built for inter-city or inter-regional travel. This covers the overwhelming majority of occurrences — from Israel's request to use the king's highway through Edom (Num 20:19) to the escape routes of battle (Judg 20:31-45; 21:19), the road where Amasa's body lay (2 Sam 20:12-13), and the great prophetic highways of Isaiah (11:16; 19:23; 33:8; 40:3; 49:11; 62:10). Spanish calzada and German Strasse consistently render a substantial, prepared thoroughfare. Proverbs 16:17 extends the image morally: 'the highway of the upright turns aside from evil.' CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: a-highway, and-my-highways, are-highways | es: Calzada-de, al-camino, calzada | fr: [במסלה], [למסלה], dans-highway-de | de: Strasse, [במסלה], [במסלתו] Num 20:19; Judg 20:31; Judg 20:32; Judg 20:45; Judg 21:19

2. stairway, steps (1×) A stairway or flight of steps — a constructed means of ascent within a building. This specialized sense appears only in 2 Chronicles 9:11, where Solomon uses algum wood to make mesillot for the house of the LORD and the royal palace. Spanish escaleras ('stairways') and the architectural context distinguish this from the open-road meaning, though the underlying metaphor of a raised, prepared path connecting levels remains consistent with the root salal. STAIRWAY STEPS

en: stairways | es: escaleras | fr: [מסלות] | de: [מסלות] 2Chr 9:11

3. course, celestial path (1×) The course, orbit, or fixed path of celestial bodies. In the Song of Deborah, 'the stars from their courses (mesillotam) fought against Sisera' (Judg 5:20). Spanish desde-sus-orbitas ('from their orbits') and French de-leur-courses confirm the astronomical reading. The metaphor is vivid: as a highway is a predetermined route, so the stars travel their God-appointed tracks through the sky. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-their-courses | es: desde-sus-órbitas | fr: de-leur-courses | de: von-ihr-courses Judg 5:20

מְסִלּוּל H4547 N-ms (1×)

A highway or raised road, a main thoroughfare constructed for travel

This term refers to a highway or constructed road, specifically a raised or elevated thoroughfare for travel. Isaiah 35:8 uses it in the prophetic vision of restoration, describing a holy highway that will appear in the redeemed landscape. The term suggests intentional construction and permanence, a road built for significant traffic. The context pairs it with 'way,' though textual issues exist. Ancient highways were often elevated above surrounding terrain for drainage and visibility.

(1×) A highway or raised road, a major constructed thoroughfare. Isaiah 35:8 envisions this in the restoration vision—a holy highway for the redeemed to travel. The term implies intentional construction and elevation, distinguishing it from ordinary paths. The Spanish 'calzada' (paved road) captures the sense of constructed thoroughfare, though some versions transliterate due to textual concerns. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: a-highway | es: calzada | fr: [מסלול] | de: [מסלול] Isa 35:8

מַסְמֵר H4548 Prep-l (4×)

nail (for fastening, securing)

Metal pins or spikes used for fastening materials together, appearing in various contexts from construction to idolatry critique. David prepared iron nails for the temple (1 Chronicles 22:3), and gold nails secured the gold overlay in the Holy of Holies (2 Chronicles 3:9). Isaiah mocks idol-makers who secure their gods with nails so they won't totter (Isaiah 41:7), while Jeremiah similarly describes idols 'fastened with nails and hammers' (Jeremiah 10:4). Ecclesiastes uses nails metaphorically for firmly fixed wisdom sayings (Ecclesiastes 12:11).

(4×) Metal nails used for construction, securing objects, or fastening materials together. Contexts range from temple construction (iron and gold nails) to prophetic mockery of idols that require nails to stay upright. The multilingual glosses ('nails,' 'clavos') consistently identify the fastening implement. The metaphorical use in Ecclesiastes ('sayings like nails driven firmly') draws on the nail's quality of permanent fixation to describe memorable, authoritative teaching. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7952 WITH 3 SENSES

en: for-the-nails, it-totters, with-nails | es: con-clavos, de-los-clavos, para-los-clavos | fr: [במסמרות], [במסמרים], [למסמרות] | de: [במסמרות], [במסמרים], [למסמרות] 1Chr 22:3; 2Chr 3:9; Isa 41:7; Jer 10:4

מָסַס H4549 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (21×)

To melt, dissolve; figuratively, to faint or lose heart; in Hifil, to cause to melt with fear

A vivid verb of dissolution that moves seamlessly between physical melting and emotional collapse. Manna melts in the sun (Exod 16:21), wax melts before fire (Ps 68:2), and mountains dissolve at God's presence (Mic 1:4)—but just as often, it is human courage that melts away. When the spies' report terrifies Israel, 'the heart of the people melted' (Josh 7:5). The Nifal dominates with eighteen occurrences covering both literal and figurative dissolving. Spanish distinguishes 'derretirse' (physical melting) from 'desfallecer' (to faint), revealing the metaphorical leap the Hebrew holds in a single root.

1. Nifal: to melt, dissolve (18×) The dominant Nifal intransitive sense: to melt, dissolve, or become liquid. This covers both physical melting—manna dissolving in sunlight (Exod 16:21), wax before fire (Ps 68:2), mountains at God's theophany (Ps 97:5, Mic 1:4)—and the far more frequent figurative use where hearts 'melt' in terror. Joshua 2:11 and 5:1 describe Canaanite courage melting before Israel. Spanish 'derretirse' and French forms confirm the intransitive, passive quality: something undergoes dissolution rather than being actively dissolved. MELT DISSOLVE en: and-melted, and-melts-away, and-shall-melt | es: Y-se-derretirán, como-se-derrite, derretido | fr: [ונמסו], [ימס], [ימס'] | de: [ונמס], [ונמסו], [ימס'] Exod 16:21; Deut 20:8; Josh 2:11; Josh 5:1; Josh 7:5

2. Nifal participle: faint, worthless (1×) A specialized Nifal participial sense conveying figurative worthlessness or faintness. In 1 Samuel 15:9, the livestock Saul spared is described as 'melted away' or 'worthless'—already dissolved in value. Spanish 'desfallecida' (faint, weak) captures this extension from physical melting to qualitative degradation, where what has 'melted' has lost its substance entirely. MELT DISSOLVE

en: and-worthless | es: y-desfallecida | fr: et-sans-valeur | de: und-worthless 1Sam 15:9

3. Qal: to waste away, consume (1×) The rare Qal infinitive construct sense: to waste away or be consumed gradually. Found in Isaiah 10:18, it describes Assyria's glory wasting away 'like the wasting of one who is sick.' Unlike the Nifal's dramatic melting, this form implies slow, progressive decay. The comparative construction with the preposition underscores duration rather than suddenness. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: as-wasting-away-of | es: como-consumirse | fr: [כמסס] | de: [כמסס] Isa 10:18

4. Hifil: to cause to melt (1×) The Hifil causative sense: to cause to melt, to make hearts dissolve. In Deuteronomy 1:28 the spies 'made our hearts melt' with their terrifying report. Here an external agent—the speakers—actively induces the emotional dissolution in others. The causative stem assigns blame and agency where the Nifal leaves melting as an experience that simply happens to the subject. MELT DISSOLVE

en: melted | es: derritieron | fr: melted | de: melted Deut 1:28

מַסָּע H4550 N-mpc / 3mp (12×)

Journey, stage of march — a breaking of camp and traveling to the next stopping-place; Israel's wilderness stages

The noun מַסָּע (massa) derives from the verb נָסַע ('pull up stakes, set out') and refers to the act of breaking camp and journeying onward, or more specifically to a single stage of a longer march. It occurs almost entirely in the Pentateuch's wilderness narratives, where it traces Israel's movement from one encampment to the next. Genesis 13:3 uses it of Abram's staged return from Egypt to Bethel. Numbers 10:12 marks the departure from Sinai 'by their stages,' and Numbers 33:1-2 catalogs all forty-two 'stages' of Israel's wilderness journey as a sacred itinerary. Spanish 'jornadas/partidas' and French 'marches/étapes' both convey the sense of measured travel segments.

journey, stage of march (12×) A breaking of camp, setting out on a journey, or a single stage in a longer march — used almost exclusively for Israel's wilderness itinerary. Abram's staged return from Egypt (Gen 13:3), Israel's departure from Sinai (Num 10:12, 28), and the comprehensive catalog of forty-two wilderness stations (Num 33:1-2) all employ this term. Exodus 17:1 and 40:36, 38 link the stages to the movement of the cloud of glory over the tabernacle. The word encapsulates the theological motif of God-directed pilgrimage through the wilderness. Spanish 'jornadas' and English 'journeys/stages' both capture the sequential, measured quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-their-journeys, and-for-journeying, for-the-journey | es: jornadas-de, para-marchar, para-sus-partidas: | fr: et-pour-voyageant, journeyings-de, journeys-de | de: auf-seinen-Zügen, fuer-der-Reise, fuer-ihr-journeyings Gen 13:3; Exod 17:1; Exod 40:36; Exod 40:38; Num 10:2

מַסָּע H4551a N-ms (1×)

Quarried stone or the act of quarrying, stone prepared at the quarry before transport

This term relates to quarrying—either stone that has been quarried or the act of quarrying itself. In 1 Kings 6:7, it describes temple stones that were 'perfect at the quarry,' meaning completely finished before being brought to the temple site. This detail emphasizes that no tools were heard at the temple itself during construction. The term captures the important concept of preparation at the source, with stones cut and shaped at the quarry so they arrived ready for silent assembly.

(1×) Stone that has been quarried or the process of quarrying. 1 Kings 6:7 specifies that temple stones were 'perfect quarried'—completely finished at the quarry site before transport. This allowed silent construction at the sacred site. The multilingual evidence (cantera, tailla, quarried) identifies both the source location and the preparation process. Ancient building practice often involved extensive quarry-side preparation. HEWING AND CUTTING en: quarried | es: de-cantera | fr: tailla | de: quarried 1Kgs 6:7

מַסָּע H4551b N-ms (1×)

A dart or missile weapon, a projectile designed to be thrown or shot at an enemy

This term denotes a dart, javelin, or missile weapon—something designed to be hurled at a target. It appears in Job 41:26 (English 41:18) in the list of weapons useless against Leviathan. The context groups it with spear and armor, indicating a thrown weapon. Darts were lighter than spears, designed for throwing rather than thrusting. The imagery emphasizes the creature's imperviousness to all forms of attack, including projectile weapons.

(1×) A dart or javelin, a missile weapon thrown at an enemy. Job 41:26 lists this among weapons that cannot harm Leviathan, alongside spear and armor. The term identifies a lighter projectile weapon designed for throwing. The Spanish 'dardo' directly corresponds, denoting a thrown weapon. The context emphasizes complete invulnerability to all military arsenals. WEAPONS AND WARFARE en: a-dart | es: dardo | fr: מסע | de: [מסע] Job 41:26

מִסְעָד H4552 N-ms (1×)

A support or supporting structure, possibly referring to architectural supports or railings

This term refers to some kind of support or supporting structure, though the precise meaning remains uncertain. It appears in 1 Kings 10:12 in the context of Solomon's construction projects, where algum wood was made into supports for the temple and royal house. The word suggests structural elements that hold something up or provide support, possibly railings, balusters, or other architectural supports. The ambiguity in the text makes the exact nature of these supports difficult to determine.

(1×) A structural support or supporting element, used in 1 Kings 10:12 regarding algum wood construction in temple and palace. The precise form is unclear—possibly railings, supports, or architectural bracing. The context indicates important structural or decorative elements made from valuable imported wood. The multilingual evidence (soporte, support) consistently identifies the supporting function while acknowledging interpretive uncertainty. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2770 WITH 3 SENSES

en: support | es: soporte | fr: support | de: support 1Kgs 10:12

מִסְפֵּד H4553 Prep-k / N-msc (14×)

Wailing, lamentation; loud communal mourning for the dead, for calamity, or in penitential grief.

A masculine noun from the root safad ('to beat the breast'), misped names the intense, often public, act of wailing. Its most memorable occurrence is the 'very great and grievous lamentation' at the threshing floor of Atad for Jacob, so loud that the Canaanites renamed the place Abel-mizraim (Gen 50:10). Prophetic literature saturates the term with eschatological force: Zechariah 12:10-11 envisions a future mourning 'as the mourning of Hadadrimmon,' while Joel 2:12 pairs it with fasting and weeping in a call to communal repentance. Amos places misped in the streets, vineyards, and every public space (Amos 5:16-17). Spanish 'lamentacion' and German 'Trauer' reflect its gravity, though neither quite captures the raw, breast-beating physicality of the Hebrew.

wailing, lamentation, mourning (14×) Loud, demonstrative wailing, whether for the dead, in response to calamity, or as an act of penitential contrition. Funeral mourning: the elaborate grief for Jacob at Atad (Gen 50:10) and the anticipated mourning of Zechariah 12:10-11. National lamentation under judgment: Amos 5:16-17 fills city and countryside with misped, and Micah 1:8 likens it to the howling of jackals. Penitential grief: Isaiah 22:12 and Joel 2:12 call for misped alongside weeping and fasting. The Psalmist celebrates its reversal when God turns mourning into dancing (Ps 30:11). LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: and-for-mourning, and-lamenting, and-wailing | es: como-duelo-de, el-duelo, lamentación | fr: [ולמספד], [ומספד], [מספד] | de: Trauer, [ולמספד], [מספד] Gen 50:10; Esth 4:3; Ps 30:11; Isa 22:12; Jer 6:26

מִסְפּוֹא H4554 Conj-w / N-ms (5×)

fodder, provender — animal feed consisting of mixed grain and straw

A straightforward term for animal feed or fodder, appearing exclusively in hospitality narratives where travelers' donkeys and camels must be provisioned alongside their human owners. Abraham's servant is offered 'straw and fodder' for his camels (Gen 24:25, 32), Joseph's brothers feed their donkeys at the Egyptian lodging place (Gen 42:27; 43:24), and the old man of Gibeah provides fodder for the Levite's donkeys (Judg 19:19). In every case, offering fodder signals generous hospitality. French and German both use 'fodder/Futter' directly, while Spanish 'forraje' (forage) captures the same agricultural sense.

(5×) Fodder or provender for livestock, especially donkeys and camels during travel. Always appears as part of a hospitality scene: the host provides fodder for the guests' animals as a sign of welcome and care. Given alongside straw (Gen 24:25), it likely refers to a grain-based feed mixture. Spanish 'forraje,' German 'Futter,' and French 'fodder' all render it uniformly, confirming a single, stable meaning across all five occurrences in Genesis and Judges. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12563 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-fodder, fodder | es: forraje, y-forraje | fr: et-fodder, fodder | de: Futter, fodder, und-Futter Gen 24:25; Gen 24:32; Gen 42:27; Gen 43:24; Judg 19:19

מִסְפָּחָה H4555 N-fpc / 2mp (2×)

long veils or mantles covering the whole person, used by false prophetesses in manipulative magical practices

Ezekiel denounces prophetesses who 'sew veils upon all heads' and 'make long veils for heads of every stature' as part of their deceptive practices (13:18, 21). These garments evidently functioned in manipulative rituals, possibly meant to ensnare or control others. The prophet condemns these women for 'hunting souls' with such fabricated objects. The term occurs only in this prophetic oracle, suggesting either a rare cultic practice or Ezekiel's own coinage to describe what he witnessed. God declares He will tear these veils away and deliver His people from such manipulation.

(2×) Long veils or mantles covering the entire person, used in condemned magical-religious practices. Ezekiel's description emphasizes their comprehensive coverage ('for heads of every stature') and their role in spiritual entrapment. The Spanish and French translations ('velos,' 'manteau') capture the garment aspect, while the context makes clear these are not ordinary head coverings but instruments of false prophecy. The repetition in verses 18 and 21 underscores divine judgment against these deceptive ritual objects. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-veils, veils-of-you | es: los-velos, velos-de-vosotras | fr: manteau | de: [המספחות], [מספחתיכם] Ezek 13:18; Ezek 13:21

מִסְפַּחַת H4556 Art / N-fs (3×)

A scaly skin eruption or scab, particularly in ritual purity contexts

This term appears exclusively in Leviticus 13 as part of the priestly diagnostic system for skin conditions. It refers to a scab or crusty eruption on the skin that required examination by a priest. The spreading or healing of such a condition determined whether someone remained ritually clean or unclean. The multilingual evidence (Spanish erupción, French croûte, German Schorf) confirms this refers to the secondary crust that forms over a healing wound or lesion.

(3×) A scab or crusty skin eruption requiring priestly inspection for ritual purity. All three occurrences (Lev 13:6-8) describe the priest examining whether the eruption has spread or remained contained, determining the person's ritual status. The consistent rendering across languages as 'scab' or 'crust' reflects its medical diagnostic function in the purity code. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4364 WITH 3 SENSES

en: scab, the-scab | es: erupción, la-erupción | fr: croûte, le-croûte | de: Schorf, der-Schorf Lev 13:6; Lev 13:7; Lev 13:8

מִסְפָּר H4557 Prep-b / N-msc / 3mp (134×)

Number, count, tally; the quantitative total of persons or things, sometimes idiomatically 'fewness,' and once 'a telling or account.'

Mispar is Hebrew's primary noun for a counted quantity — the 'number of' something. Derived from the root s-p-r ('to count, recount'), it appears overwhelmingly in construct chains: 'the number of the sons of Israel' (Gen 34:30), 'the number of the days' (Lev 25:15), 'the number of the stars' (Ps 147:4). The phrase en mispar ('without number,' 'innumerable') is a standard idiom for uncountable abundance (Gen 41:49; Judg 6:5). Multilingual evidence is straightforward — Spanish numero, French nombre, German Zahl, Korean 수 — because counting is a universal human activity. But two peripheral senses deserve attention: the idiomatic mete mispar ('men of number,' i.e., 'few men'), where the word paradoxically conveys smallness, and a single occurrence in Judges 7:15 where mispar may mean 'telling, recounting' of a dream, preserving the verbal root's narrative sense.

1. number, count, tally (131×) The quantitative sense: a number, count, or tally of persons or things — 131 occurrences forming the massive core of this word's usage. Appears in construct ('number of'), with pronominal suffixes ('their number'), with prepositions ('by/according to number'), and in the idiom en mispar ('without number, innumerable'). Exodus 16:16 prescribes gathering manna 'according to the number of persons'; Leviticus 25:15-16 prices land 'according to the number of years.' Spanish numero de, French nombre de, German Zahl von, and Korean 수 all map directly. The word's semantic stability across 131 attestations confirms it as the unmarked, default Hebrew term for a counted total. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-number-of, number-of, the-number-of | es: el-número-de, número-de, número-de- | fr: nombre-de, un-nombre-de, von-livre | de: Zahl-von, ein-Zahl-von, number-von Exod 16:16; Exod 23:26; Lev 25:15; Lev 25:16

2. few in number, fewness (2×) An idiomatic sense conveying fewness or smallness in number — 2 occurrences (Num 9:20 and Deut 4:27) where mispar appears in the phrase mete mispar ('men of number') meaning 'few people.' In Deuteronomy 4:27 the LORD warns 'you will be left few in number among the nations.' The paradox is elegant: the very word for 'number' comes to mean 'countably small,' implying that those who can be easily counted are necessarily few. Spanish de numero and French dans nombre retain the literal construction, but the pragmatic meaning shifts from quantification to diminution. This idiomatic use is well attested in BDB and confirmed by context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-number, number | es: de-número, número | fr: dans-nombre, nombre | de: Zahl, in-Zahl Num 9:20; Deut 4:27

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Judges 7:15 where mispar appears to mean 'the telling of, the recounting of' a dream — Gideon hears 'the telling of the dream and its interpretation.' Here the noun preserves the verbal root sapar's narrative sense ('to recount, tell') rather than its numerical sense. English 'telling of,' Spanish relato de ('account of'), and German Erzahlung all select narrative vocabulary. BDB does not list this as a separate entry, but the semantic distance from 'number/count' is sufficient to mark it as a distinct peripheral sense, a fossil of the root's original storytelling meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: telling-of | es: relato-de | fr: telling-de | de: telling-von Judg 7:15

מִסְפָּר H4558 N-proper-ms (1×)
Mispar, a personal name meaning 'number' or 'writing,' a man who returned from exile
This is the name of a man who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel, listed in Ezra 2:2. The name likely means 'number' or relates to writing/scribal activity. He appears as Mispereth in the parallel list in Nehemiah 7:7, showing the kind of variation common in biblical name transmission. The Greek versions show various attempts to transliterate this Hebrew name. Personal names from administrative contexts often reflected occupations or family roles.

(1×) Personal name of a returnee from exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:2). The name relates to 'number' or scribal functions. He is called Mispereth in Nehemiah's parallel list, demonstrating typical name variation. The Greek versions (Malsaϱ, Masphsaϱ) show transliteration attempts. Such names from returning exile lists often reflected family occupation or heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mispar | es: Mispar | fr: [מספר] | de: von-Schreiber Ezra 2:2

מִסְפָּר H4559 N-proper-ms (1×)
Mispereth, a personal name, variant form of Mispar, a man who returned from exile
This is the form of the name found in Nehemiah 7:7, corresponding to Mispar in Ezra 2:2. Both refer to the same individual who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The variation between Mispar and Mispereth illustrates how names could be transmitted in slightly different forms across parallel biblical accounts. The Greek versions show various transliteration attempts, reflecting the challenges of rendering Hebrew names into Greek script.

(1×) Personal name appearing in Nehemiah 7:7, parallel to Mispar in Ezra 2:2—both referring to the same exile returnee. The name variation (Mispar/Mispereth) is typical of parallel biblical lists. Greek versions (Maspheϱan, Maasphaϱath) show transliteration diversity. Such variant forms were common in administrative records transmitted across generations and recensions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mispereth | es: Misperet | fr: [מספרת] | de: [מספרת] Neh 7:7

מָסַר H4560 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (2×)
to deliver up, hand over, or commit (possibly textual corruption in both occurrences)
This verb appears only twice in Numbers 31, both instances textually uncertain. In verse 16, 'to deliver up a trespass against the LORD' likely should read 'to commit' (lîm'ōl), a simple textual swap. In verse 5, 'were delivered over' referring to warriors may originally have been 'were numbered' (wayyissāpĕrû). The post-biblical Hebrew and Aramaic cognates clearly mean 'deliver up, betray, denounce,' supporting the semantic field, but the Masoretic Text's use here remains debated. If original, the sense would be transfer or assignment of persons or responsibility.

(2×) To deliver up or hand over, whether persons (warriors assigned to duty) or actions (committing a trespass). The Numbers 31 contexts involve the Midianite incident: warriors delivered/assigned for holy war (v. 5) and the sin of Peor characterized as delivering/committing treachery against YHWH (v. 16). BDB notes the textual difficulties, citing the Septuagint's 'numbered' in verse 5 and suggesting emendation in verse 16 to the more common verb for trespass. The multilingual evidence shows varied renderings, reflecting scribal uncertainty. HANDING OVER
en: and-were-delivered, to-cause- | es: Y-fueron-entregados, para-entregar | fr: et-étaient-délivra, à-cause- | de: und-waren-befreite, zu-cause- Num 31:5; Num 31:16

מוּסָר H4561 Conj-w (1×)
Discipline, correction, or instruction, particularly moral training through reproof or chastisement
This important term denotes discipline, correction, or moral instruction—particularly the kind that shapes character through reproof or chastisement. It appears frequently in wisdom literature describing both divine discipline and human training. Job 33:16 uses it to describe how God opens people's ears through instruction or warnings. The term encompasses both the process of disciplining and the content of instruction, often with corrective force. It reflects the biblical understanding that true learning often requires correction and that wise people accept discipline rather than resist it.

(1×) Discipline, correction, or moral instruction designed to shape character. Job 33:16 speaks of God sealing instruction as a means of warning and guiding people. The term combines the idea of corrective discipline with instructional content. The Spanish 'instrucción' and the corrective context show this as formative guidance. Wisdom literature emphasizes receiving discipline as a mark of wisdom versus rejecting it as foolish. DISCIPLINE INSTRUCT CORRECT
en: and-with-their-instruction | es: y-con-su-instrucción | fr: et-leur-וּבְמוּסָרָם-eux | de: [וּבְמוּסָרָם] Job 33:16

מֶסֹּרֶת H4562 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)
Bond or binding obligation, that which constrains or holds someone in covenant relationship
This term refers to a bond or binding constraint, specifically used in Ezekiel 20:37 regarding bringing Israel under 'the bond of the covenant.' The word suggests something that binds or constrains, creating obligation and connection. The context is God bringing the people into covenant obligation, with both protective and constraining connotations. Some interpreters have suggested reading 'discipline' instead, but the binding/constraining imagery fits covenant language well. The term emphasizes covenant as creating binding mutual obligations.

(1×) A bond or binding constraint, specifically covenant obligation in Ezekiel 20:37 where God brings Israel 'into the bond of the covenant.' The imagery suggests both connection and constraint—covenant creates binding mutual obligations. The Spanish 'vínculo' (bond/link) and French 'lien' (bond) capture this binding relationship. Some suggest reading 'discipline,' but the constraining bond imagery suits covenant theology well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: into-bond-of | es: en-vínculo-de | fr: lien | de: [בְּמֹסֶרֶת] Ezek 20:37

מִסְתּוֹר H4563 Conj-w (1×)
A shelter or place of protection, a refuge from danger or harsh conditions
This term denotes a place of shelter or refuge where one finds protection from danger or harsh elements. Isaiah 4:6 uses it in describing the divine protection over Zion—a shelter from storm and heat. The word emphasizes the protective covering function, a place to hide from threat. The context is God's presence serving as protection for his people, using architectural imagery of covered space. Related terms in Hebrew share this sense of hiding or being concealed for safety.

(1×) A shelter or protected place, specifically in Isaiah 4:6 describing God's protective presence as a shelter from storm—figurative language for divine protection over Zion. The term emphasizes covering and refuge from danger or harsh conditions. The Spanish 'abrigo' (shelter) captures the protective covering sense. This is parallel to other Hebrew terms for hiding place or refuge used in protection theology. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: and-for-shelter | es: y-para-abrigo | fr: [ולמסתור] | de: [ולמסתור] Isa 4:6

מַסְתֵּר H4564 Conj-w (1×)

The act of hiding or concealing, turning away or covering one's face from something

This term describes the act of hiding or concealing, specifically in Isaiah 53:3 where it depicts how people hid their faces from the suffering servant. The phrase 'like a hiding of face from him' means like one from whom people turn away and cover their faces—suggesting revulsion, shame, or rejection. The imagery is powerful: just as people might hide their faces from a leper or disfigured person, so the servant experienced complete social rejection. The term emphasizes the action of concealing or averting one's gaze.

(1×) The act of hiding or concealing one's face, specifically in Isaiah 53:3 describing how people hid their faces from the suffering servant. The phrase indicates one from whom faces are hidden—expressing complete rejection, as people avert their eyes from what is disfigured or shameful. The comparison may be to reactions toward lepers. The Spanish 'esconde' (hides) captures the active concealment. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-like-one-hiding | es: y-como-quien-esconde | fr: [וכמסתר] | de: [וכמסתר] Isa 53:3

מִסְתָּר H4565 N-mpc / 3ms (10×)

Hiding place, secret place — a concealed location for refuge, ambush, or divine mystery

This noun from the root s-t-r ('to hide, conceal') denotes a secret or concealed place, carrying both sinister and salvific overtones depending on context. In the Psalms, it describes the lurking-places of the wicked who stalk the innocent like a lion crouching in cover (Ps 10:8-9; 17:12; 64:4). Jeremiah uses it for the hidden places where God's people weep in secret (13:17) and the concealed refuges that cannot escape divine scrutiny (23:24; 49:10). Isaiah speaks of 'treasures of secret places' that God reveals to Cyrus (45:3). Habakkuk applies it to cosmic imagery of divine hiddenness (3:14). The word thus spans a remarkable range — from a criminal's ambush to God's own mysterious concealment.

hiding place, secret place (10×) A masculine noun meaning hiding place, secret place, or covert — a location concealed from ordinary view. Used in two primary semantic fields: (a) the ambush or lurking place of the wicked, compared to a lion crouching in cover (Ps 10:8-9; 17:12; cf. Hab 3:14), or enemies shooting from concealment (Ps 64:4); (b) hidden places of refuge or mystery beyond human detection — God challenges 'can anyone hide in secret places so I cannot see him?' (Jer 23:24), and Edom's mistārāyw ('his hiding places') are stripped bare (Jer 49:10). Isaiah's 'treasures of darkness and hidden riches of secret places' (45:3) adds a dimension of concealed wealth. Spanish 'escondite/escondrijos' and English 'hiding places' capture the spatial sense well. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: his-hiding-places, in-hiding, in-hiding-places | es: en-el-escondite, en-escondites, en-escondrijos | fr: [במסתרים], [מסתריו], [מסתרים] | de: [במסתר], [במסתרים], [מסתריו] Ps 10:8; Ps 10:9; Ps 17:12; Ps 64:4; Isa 45:3

מַעֲבָד H4566 N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

Works or deeds, the actions or accomplishments performed by someone

This term denotes works or deeds—the actions and accomplishments of a person. It appears in Job 34:25 where Elihu describes God's knowledge of people's works, which leads to judgment. This is a late Hebrew form, related to the Aramaic word for work. The context emphasizes that God knows what people do and therefore can judge righteously. The term is broader than 'labor,' encompassing all actions and their moral character.

(1×) The works or deeds of a person, their actions and accomplishments. Job 34:25 uses this in Elihu's speech about God knowing people's works and judging accordingly. This is a late Hebrew form influenced by Aramaic usage. The multilingual evidence (obras, works, œuvre) identifies actions with moral significance. The context emphasizes divine knowledge and judgment of human deeds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-works | es: sus-obras | fr: leur-מעבדיהם-eux | de: [מעבדיהם] Job 34:25

מַעֲבַד H4567 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

His works or deeds, the actions performed by God, emphasizing divine activity and accomplishment

This Aramaic term denotes works or deeds, specifically God's works in Daniel 4:37 (Aramaic 4:34) where Nebuchadnezzar acknowledges that all God's works are truth and his ways justice. The term emphasizes divine activity and accomplishment. In this climactic confession, the pagan king recognizes both the truthfulness of God's works and the justice of his ways—a complete acknowledgment of divine sovereignty and righteousness after his humbling experience.

(1×) God's works or deeds, emphasized in Daniel 4:37 where Nebuchadnezzar confesses that all God's works are truth and his ways are just. This Aramaic term appears in the king's restoration confession after his humbling. The multilingual evidence (obras, œuvre, works) identifies divine actions. The context stresses both the truthfulness and justice of divine activity, learned through humbling experience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-works | es: sus-obras | fr: oeuvre | de: [מעבדוהי] Dan 4:37

מַעֲבֶה H4568 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

Thickness or compactness, dense clay soil suitable for casting metal objects in molds

This term describes thickness or compactness, specifically dense clay soil in 1 Kings 7:46. The context is bronze casting for temple furnishings, done 'in the thickness of the ground'—meaning in compact clayey soil that could form good molds. However, the text is likely corrupt, with the parallel in 2 Chronicles using different wording, and some scholars suggesting the text originally referred to a geographical location (the ford of Adamah) rather than soil quality. If correct, it would describe the dense, clay-rich earth needed for ancient casting techniques.

(1×) Thickness or compactness of soil, specifically dense clay ground in 1 Kings 7:46 used for casting bronze temple furnishings. The term would describe compact, clayey soil suitable for making casting molds. However, textual issues exist—the parallel text differs, and some suggest reading 'ford of Adamah' instead. If soil quality is meant, it reflects ancient metal-casting techniques requiring dense clay for molds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-thickness-of | es: en-suelo-de | fr: dans-épaisseur-de | de: in-thickness-von 1Kgs 7:46

מַעְבָּר H4569a N-msc (3×)

A crossing place: ford of a river, mountain pass, or the action of passing through

This geographical and tactical term describes places where crossing is possible or strategic. It can denote a shallow river ford like the crossing of the Jabbok (Gen 32), a mountain pass like the strategic position at Michmash (1 Sam 13), or even the sweeping motion of a rod (Isa 30). The Hebrew root suggests movement across or through a barrier. Each context emphasizes vulnerability or strategic importance—rivers must be forded, passes controlled, discipline administered.

(3×) A crossing point or the action of crossing. At the Jabbok ford (Gen 32:22), Jacob positioned his family before his wrestling encounter. The pass of Michmash (1 Sam 13:23) was a military chokepoint the Philistines controlled. Isaiah 30:32 uses it metaphorically for every stroke of God's disciplining rod. The Spanish/French distinction between 'paso/vado' and 'passe/ford' captures both the mountain pass and river ford senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ford-of, pass-of, stroke | es: paso-de, vado-de | fr: [מעבר], ford-de, passe-de | de: [מעבר], die-Furt, gehe-vorbei-von Gen 32:22; 1Sam 13:23; Isa 30:32

מַעְבָּרָה H4569b Art / N-fpc (8×)

Ford, mountain pass, or passage — a crossing point in terrain, whether through water or a narrow defile

A feminine noun denoting a place where one crosses over, whether a shallow river ford or a narrow mountain pass. The word appears most memorably in military contexts: the fords of the Jordan seized by Ehud's men to cut off the Moabites (Judg 3:28), the contested crossings at the time of Jephthah (Judg 12:5-6, the 'shibboleth' episode), and the rocky defiles flanking Jonathan's daring assault at Michmash (1 Sam 14:4). Isaiah uses it of both a mountain pass the Assyrian army traverses (Isa 10:29) and the river passages of Babylon that were breached (reflected in Jer 51:32).

ford, pass, passage (8×) A crossing point in terrain — river ford, mountain pass, or fortified passage. The plural מַעְבָּרוֹת designates fords of the Jordan in the conquest and judges narratives (Josh 2:7; Judg 3:28; 12:5-6), while singular usage in 1 Samuel 14:4 and Isaiah 10:29 points to narrow rocky passes. Jeremiah 51:32 extends the sense to defensive passages in Babylon's fortifications. Spanish 'vados' and 'pasos,' French 'gués,' and German 'Furten' all confirm the core meaning of a traversable crossing, with the range spanning water fords to mountain defiles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-fords-of, and-the-fords, at-fords-of | es: el-paso, los-pasos, los-vados | fr: -le-gués-de, [והמעברות], [מעברה] | de: -der-Furten-von, Furten-von, [והמעברות] Josh 2:7; Judg 3:28; Judg 12:5; Judg 12:6; 1Sam 14:4

מַעְגָּל H4570 N-fpc / 3fs (16×)

A track, path, or wagon-rut; figuratively the course of one's life or conduct; also a circular military encampment formed by wagons.

Derived from a root suggesting roundness or rolling, this noun carries two quite distinct senses shaped by context. In the Psalms and Proverbs it denotes the rutted tracks or well-worn paths that travelers follow, and it becomes a powerful metaphor for the moral direction of a person's life – the 'paths of righteousness' (Ps 23:3) or the crooked tracks of the wicked (Prov 2:15, Isa 59:8). In the David narratives, however, it refers to the circular wagon-barricade forming Saul's camp (1 Sam 17:20; 26:5-7), a concrete military formation. The Spanish 'sendas' and 'camino' for the figurative usage versus 'círculo de carros' for the military sense nicely mirror this split.

1. path, track, way (13×) The well-worn track or rut left by wheels or feet, used almost exclusively in figurative language for the moral or spiritual course of a person's life. Proverbs and the Psalms pair it with 'righteousness' (Ps 23:3), 'uprightness' (Prov 4:11), and 'goodness' (Prov 2:9), while also applying it to the devious paths of the wicked (Prov 2:15; Isa 59:8). The multilingual glosses converge on path-language: Spanish 'sendas,' French 'sentier,' underscoring the metaphorical force of a traveled route as moral direction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Your-paths, her-paths, his-paths | es: camino-de, en-sus-sendas, en-tus-sendas | fr: [במעגלותם], [מעגל], dans-leur-sentier-eux | de: [במעגלותם], [במעגלי], [מעגל] Ps 17:5; Ps 23:3; Ps 65:11; Ps 140:5; Prov 2:9

2. circular encampment, wagon-circle (3×) A circular defensive encampment formed by arranging wagons or carts in a ring, attested only in the David-Saul narratives (1 Sam 17:20; 26:5, 7). The Hebrew directional ending in 'hamma^{c}galah' (toward the encampment) confirms its concrete, spatial meaning. Spanish renders this 'círculo de carros' and French 'campement,' distinguishing it sharply from the figurative path-sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-encampment, to-the-encampment | es: al-círculo-de-carros, en-el-campamento | fr: dans-le-encampment, à-le-encampment | de: in-der-encampment, zu-der-encampment 1Sam 17:20; 1Sam 26:5; 1Sam 26:7

מָעַד H4571 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (6×)

To slip, slide, totter; causatively, to make shake or stumble — of feet losing stability or divine judgment causing trembling

A verb depicting the loss of sure footing, whether literal or figurative. In psalms of trust the faithful declare their feet do not slip because God broadens their path (2 Sam 22:37; Ps 18:36; 26:1), while Job observes that the stumbling are despised by those at ease (Job 12:5). The Hiphil causative appears in imprecatory prayer, asking God to make enemies' loins shake continually (Ps 69:23). Spanish 'resbalar' and French 'glisser' both capture the sliding motion, while German renderings lean toward 'slip' — together confirming the core image of ground giving way beneath one's feet.

1. slip, slide, totter (Qal) (5×) The Qal stem covers slipping, sliding, and tottering — always with feet or steps as subject. The psalmist's confidence that his feet 'have not slipped' (2 Sam 22:37 = Ps 18:36) and that his steps 'shall not slide' (Ps 37:31) form a theology of stability grounded in divine faithfulness. Spanish 'resbalaron' (they slipped) and French 'glisser' reinforce the physical sliding image that underlies the metaphorical assurance. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: I-shall-slip, for-slippings-of, slip | es: para-los-que-tropiezan-de, resbalaron, vacilarán | fr: de-glisser, glissa, glisser | de: [למועד], ich-soll-slip, slip 2Sam 22:37; Job 12:5; Ps 18:36; Ps 26:1; Ps 37:31

2. make totter, shake (Hiphil) (1×) The Hiphil causative means to make someone totter or shake, attested only in Ps 69:23 where the psalmist prays that God cause the enemies' loins to tremble continually. Spanish 'haz tambalear' (make stagger) and German 'machen zu erschüttern' (cause to shake) both highlight the forceful, causative dimension distinct from the simple Qal. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: make-to-shake | es: haz-tambalear | fr: le-glisser | de: machen-zu-erschüttern Ps 69:23

מַעֲדַי H4572 N-proper-ms (1×)

Maadai, a personal name of a man who had married a foreign wife during the exile

This is the name of one of the men who had married foreign wives and were required to divorce them during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:34). The Greek versions show transliteration variations typical of Hebrew names rendered into Greek. The name may be related to Maadiah mentioned elsewhere. These names from Ezra's lists document the community's struggle to maintain identity boundaries during the restoration period after exile.

(1×) Personal name of a man who had married a foreign wife, listed in Ezra 10:34 among those required to separate from foreign marriages. The Greek versions (Modedeia, Mood eia) show transliteration attempts. The name may connect to Maadiah. These Ezra lists document the post-exile community's efforts to establish clear identity boundaries through marriage practices. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maaday | es: Maadai | fr: [מעדי] | de: [מעדי] Ezra 10:34

מַעַדְיָה H4573 N-proper-ms (1×)

Maadiah, a personal name, a priest who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylonian exile

This is the name of a priest who returned with Zerubbabel from exile, mentioned in Nehemiah 12:5. The name also appears as Moadiah in verse 17 of the same chapter, showing typical variation in name transmission. The etymology is uncertain, with suggestions including 'ornament of Yahweh' or 'assembly of Yahweh.' Priestly names from the restoration period often incorporated divine elements, reflecting the centrality of worship in the restored community's identity.

(1×) Personal name of a priest who returned from exile with Zerubbabel (Nehemiah 12:5), also appearing as Moadiah in verse 17. The Greek versions (Maadias, Maasias) show transliteration variety. The etymology is debated—possibly 'ornament of Yahweh' or 'assembly of Yahweh.' Priestly names from this period often included divine name elements, emphasizing the community's worship identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maadyah | es: Maadías | fr: [מעדיה] | de: [מעדיה] Neh 12:5

מַעֲדָן H4574 N-mp (4×)

dainties, delicacies, luxurious food

Refined or luxurious food, particularly that served in royal settings or enjoyed by the wealthy. The term appears in Jacob's blessing of Asher: 'his food shall be rich, and he shall yield royal dainties' (Genesis 49:20). Agag the Amalekite king may have approached Samuel 'cheerfully' or 'delicately' (1 Samuel 15:32), though the text is difficult. Proverbs promises that disciplining a child will 'give delight to your soul' (Proverbs 29:17). Lamentations describes the reversal of fortune: those who once 'ate daintily' now perish in the streets (Lamentations 4:5).

(4×) Luxurious food or delicate living, associated with prosperity and often with royal settings. The cross-linguistic evidence shows some interpretive divergence: 'dainties/delicacies' (food) vs. 'cheerfully' (manner). Most contexts emphasize rich food as a symbol of blessing or wealth. Lamentations' reference to those who formerly ate delicacies now desolate demonstrates how judgment reverses social fortunes—what was once taken for granted becomes a memory of lost privilege. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: cheerfully, delicacies, delicacies-of- | es: delicadamente, delicias, delicias-de | fr: [למעדנים], cheerfully, delicacies-de- | de: Leckerbissen-eines, [למעדנים], [מעדנים] Gen 49:20; 1Sam 15:32; Prov 29:17; Lam 4:5

מַעֲדַנּוֹת H4575 N-fpc (1×)

Chains or bands, binding restraints, specifically the bonds that hold the Pleiades constellation together

This term refers to chains, bands, or binding restraints. It appears in Job 38:31 in God's challenge to Job: 'Can you bind the chains of the Pleiades?' The astronomical reference uses binding imagery for the constellation's coherent cluster. The word may derive from a root meaning 'to bind' through metathesis or textual variation. The rhetorical question emphasizes divine power over celestial order—only God can bind or loose the arrangements of the stars.

(1×) Chains or bands that bind things together, specifically in Job 38:31 regarding the Pleiades constellation. God challenges Job whether he can bind the chains that hold this star cluster together. The imagery applies binding/restraint language to celestial order. The Spanish 'cadenas' (chains) captures the binding restraint sense. This is part of God's creation speech emphasizing divine control over cosmic order. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-chains-of | es: cadenas-de | fr: מעדנות | de: [מעדנות] Job 38:31

מַעְדֵּר H4576 Prep-b (1×)

A hoe or mattock, an agricultural tool for digging, breaking soil, or removing weeds

This term refers to a hoe or mattock, a basic agricultural implement used for cultivating soil, removing weeds, or preparing ground. It appears in Isaiah 7:25 describing hills that will no longer be cultivated with the hoe because of invasion and devastation. The tool represents ordinary agricultural labor and maintenance. The image is of abandoned terraced hillsides once carefully maintained but now given over to thorns because people fear to go there.

(1×) A hoe or mattock used for cultivating soil and removing weeds. Isaiah 7:25 describes terraced hillsides that will no longer be worked with the hoe due to invasion and fear—agricultural abandonment. The tool represents regular cultivation and soil preparation. The Spanish 'azadón' (hoe/mattock) identifies this basic farming implement. The context emphasizes productive land reverting to wilderness through neglect. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: with-the-hoe | es: con-azadón | fr: [במעדר] | de: [במעדר] Isa 7:25

מְעָא H4577 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

The belly or abdomen, the external stomach area, specifically used of the statue in Daniel's vision

This Aramaic term refers to the belly or abdomen, the external stomach region. It appears only in Daniel 2:32 describing the parts of the great statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream—its belly and thighs were bronze. This is the late Aramaic form corresponding to Hebrew terms for inward parts or belly. In the vision's symbolism, different metals represent successive kingdoms, with the bronze belly representing the third kingdom in the sequence.

(1×) The belly or abdomen, the external stomach area. Used in Daniel 2:32 for the belly of the statue in Nebuchadnezzar's vision, which was made of bronze. This Aramaic term corresponds to the Hebrew word for belly or inward parts. The multilingual evidence (vientre, entrailles) identifies the stomach/abdominal region. In the vision's symbolism, the bronze belly represents the third kingdom. WOMB AND BELLY

en: its-belly | es: su-vientre | fr: entrailles | de: [מעוהי] Dan 2:32

מֵעֶה H4578 N-mpc / 3ms (32×)

Internal organs, bowels (physical); seat of deep emotion and compassion; womb or loins as source of offspring.

The Hebrew noun meeh (always plural meayim) names the internal organs of the abdominal cavity. In its most concrete sense it refers to bowels spilling from a wound (2 Sam 20:10) or ravaged by disease (2 Chr 21:15). But Hebrew anatomy located the deepest emotions in the gut: the psalmist's meayim 'are in turmoil' (Ps 22:14), and Isaiah's bowels 'moan like a lyre' for Moab (Isa 16:11). Spanish entranas, French entrailles, and German Eingeweide preserve this visceral metaphor well. The third branch extends to procreation: what comes 'from your meayim' means your biological offspring (Gen 15:4; 2 Sam 7:12).

1. bowels, intestines, physical belly (12×) The literal bowels, intestines, or internal organs as physical body parts — in contexts of injury, disease, digestion, or anatomical description. With 12 occurrences, this sense appears most graphically when Joab stabs Amasa and 'poured out his intestines on the ground' (2 Sam 20:10), and in the grim account of King Jehoram's fatal bowel disease: 'his intestines came out because of his sickness' (2 Chr 21:15, 18-19). Numbers 5:22 invokes the organs in the sotah ritual curse: 'may the water that brings the curse enter your bowels.' Spanish entranas/intestinos, French entrailles/intestins, and German Eingeweide/Gedaerme all deploy visceral anatomical terms. Jonah's prayer from inside the fish (Jonah 1:17/2:1) also references the meayim of the great creature, framing his confinement in gut-level imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-inward-parts-of-them, and-inward-parts-of-you, his-body | es: en-entrañas-de-ti, en-sus-entrañas, en-vientre-de | fr: [במעיו], [מעיו], [מעיך] | de: Eingeweide, [במעיו], [ומעיהם] Num 5:22; 2Sam 20:10; 2Chr 21:15; 2Chr 21:18

2. seat of emotions, compassion (10×) The inward parts as the seat of deep emotion — anguish, yearning, tenderness, and compassion — where the gut rather than the heart carries the weight of feeling. With 10 occurrences, this metaphorical sense appears when Job declares 'my bowels are in turmoil and do not rest' (Job 30:27), when the psalmist cries that 'my heart is like wax, melted within my meayim' (Ps 22:14), and when the beloved's hand at the latch causes the Shulamite's meayim to stir for him (Song 5:4). Isaiah's viscera 'moan like a lyre' for devastated Moab (Isa 16:11), and Jeremiah's ache 'in the walls of my heart' parallels turmoil 'in my meayim' (Jer 4:19). Spanish entranas, French entrailles, Hindi अंतड़ियां, and Arabic أحشاء all preserve the gut-as-emotion metaphor, reflecting a cross-cultural intuition that the deepest feelings live below the diaphragm. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-my-inward-parts, my-bowels, my-inward-parts | es: Mis-entrañas, mis-entrañas, mis-entrañas! | fr: de-entrailles, entrailles, et-mes-entrailles | de: Eingeweide, meine-Eingeweide, meinward-parts Job 30:27; Ps 22:14; Ps 40:8; Song 5:4; Isa 16:11

3. womb, loins as source of offspring (10×) The belly, womb, or loins viewed as the source of offspring — the procreative organ from which children emerge, often in the phrase 'from your meayim' meaning 'your own biological descendants.' With 10 occurrences, this sense governs the Abrahamic covenant promise: 'one who will come from your own body shall be your heir' (Gen 15:4), the oracle to Rebekah about 'two nations in your womb' (Gen 25:23), Ruth's lament about further sons 'in my womb' (Ruth 1:11), and God's promise to David that 'I will raise up your offspring who shall come from your body' (2 Sam 7:12; 16:11). Spanish entranas/vientre, French sein/entrailles, and German Leib/Schoss shift toward womb and body vocabulary here, recognizing that meayim in these contexts means not viscera but the generative center of the body. Psalm 71:6 extends this to divine care: 'from my mother's meayim you have been my God.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-inward-parts, from-bowels-of, from-my-inward-parts | es: de-entrañas-mías, de-entrañas-tuyas, de-tus-entrañas | fr: dans-mon-womb, de-entrailles, de-mon-intérieur-parts | de: Eingeweide, aus-deinem-Leib, aus-deinem-Schoß Gen 15:4; Gen 25:23; Ruth 1:11; 2Sam 7:12; 2Sam 16:11

מָעָה H4579 Prep-k / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

Grains or particles, tiny individual pieces, used metaphorically for innumerable offspring like sand grains

This term refers to grains or tiny particles, specifically used in Isaiah 48:19 in a poetic parallel about multiplication. God tells Israel that if they had obeyed, their offspring would have been like sand, and 'the offspring of your body like its grains.' The imagery is of innumerable tiny particles—just as sand consists of countless individual grains, so their descendants would have been innumerable. The term may relate to words for seed or small coins, emphasizing tiny individual units.

(1×) Tiny grains or particles, used in Isaiah 48:19 for poetic parallelism about multiplication—'your seed like sand, and the offspring of your body like its grains.' The image is of countless tiny particles comprising sand. Some interpret this as 'entrails of the sea' (its innermost parts), but the grain imagery provides better poetic parallel. The Spanish 'granos' (grains) captures the particle sense. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: like-its-grains | es: como-sus-granos | fr: [כמעתין] | de: [כמעתין] Isa 48:19

מָעוֹג H4580 N-ms (2×)

a round cake or bread, possibly a sacrificial or staple food item

This word for 'cake' appears in two diverse contexts: the widow of Zarephath gathering sticks to bake a final small cake for herself and her son (1 Kings 17:12), and the difficult phrase in Psalm 35:16, 'mockers of cake,' which many emend. The bread was apparently round and flat, suitable for quick baking. The widow's story emphasizes extreme poverty—she has only enough for one last meal—making Elijah's request all the more striking. The Psalm 35 reference remains textually uncertain; if original, it might denote base buffoons who mock for the price of food.

(2×) A round, flat cake or bread. The 1 Kings context is straightforward: a simple baked good that even the poorest household could make with minimal flour and oil. The Psalm 35:16 text is obscure; if 'mockers for a cake' is correct, it would describe mercenary jesters or scoffers who perform for food. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate 'cake' or 'torta,' supporting the basic meaning as a baked food item, though the Psalm passage may preserve an idiomatic expression now lost to us. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cake | es: torta | fr: cake, de-Og | de: cake 1Kgs 17:12; Ps 35:16

מָעוֹז H4581 N-mpc / 3fs (37×)

Fortress, stronghold; refuge or place of safety (often of God); strength or protective power as abstract quality.

The Hebrew noun maoz (from the root meaning 'to be strong' or 'to seek refuge') spans the spectrum from physical citadel to theological metaphor. In its most frequent use, it names literal fortresses and strongholds – the fortified place Gideon was to build on (Judg 6:26), the citadels of Tyre that the LORD commands destroyed (Isa 23:11), and Daniel's mysterious 'fortresses of a foreign god' (Dan 11:38-39). Yet the Psalms transform maoz into one of Scripture's most intimate metaphors for divine protection: 'The LORD is my light and my salvation – whom shall I fear? The LORD is the stronghold of my life' (Ps 27:1). Spanish fortaleza, French forteresse, and German Festung all preserve the architectural metaphor, while Hindi and Arabic shift toward abstract 'refuge' vocabulary when the referent is clearly God rather than stone walls. A thin third sense abstracts the word entirely – Nehemiah's declaration that 'the joy of the LORD is your strength' (Neh 8:10) uses maoz for protective power rather than place.

1. fortress, stronghold (25×) A physical fortress, stronghold, or fortified place – a military or architectural structure providing defense. This primary sense (25 occurrences) encompasses Gideon's altar-stronghold (Judg 6:26), the fortresses of Tyre and Sidon (Isa 23:11, 14), the military strongholds in Daniel's apocalyptic visions (Dan 11:10, 38-39), and the celebratory 'God is our fortress' in Psalm 108:8 where the metaphor retains architectural concreteness. Spanish fortaleza, French forteresse, and German Festung converge on the fortification reading. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: [ketiv:his-fortress], a-stronghold, and-stronghold | es: [fortaleza-su], en-fortaleza-de, en-la-fortaleza-de | fr: dans-forteresse, de-forteresse, et-de-forteresse | de: Festung, [ומעון], der-Festung Judg 6:26; Ps 27:1; Ps 28:8; Ps 108:8; Prov 10:29

2. refuge, place of safety (10×) A place of refuge or safety, used metaphorically of God as a personal shelter and protector for the righteous. Ten occurrences cluster in the Psalms: 'The LORD is my fortress' (Ps 31:2, 4), 'He is a stronghold for the oppressed' (Ps 37:39), 'You are my God of refuge' (Ps 43:2), and the foundational confession in 2 Sam 22:33. Spanish mi fortaleza, French ma forteresse, and German mein Zuflucht shift from architectural to personal-relational vocabulary. The distinction from sense 1 is the shift from a defensible place to a trustworthy Person. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: a-refuge, and-my-fortress, are-my-refuge | es: a-mi-fortaleza, fortaleza, fortaleza-mía | fr: de-forteresse, et-forteresse, forteresse | de: Festung, ihr-Zuflucht, mein-Zuflucht 2Sam 22:33; Ps 31:2; Ps 31:4; Ps 37:39; Ps 43:2

3. strength, protection (2×) Abstract strength or protective power, emphasizing might and capability rather than a physical location or a personal refuge. Only 2 occurrences carry this purely abstract reading: Nehemiah's declaration 'the joy of the LORD is your strength' (Neh 8:10), and the affirmation of Psalm 60:7 where maoz names God's sovereign protective power over his people. Spanish fortaleza de vosotros and German Stronghold-von shift toward 'strength' rather than 'fortress,' confirming the abstraction. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: is-the-stronghold-of, is-your-strength | es: fortaleza-de, fortaleza-de-vosotros | fr: [מעוכם], de-forteresse | de: [מעוכם], ist-der-stronghold-von Neh 8:10; Ps 60:7

מָעוֹךְ H4582 N-proper-ms (1×)

Maoch, a personal name, father of Achish king of Gath during David's time

This is the name of Achish's father, the Philistine king of Gath who gave David refuge when he fled from Saul (1 Samuel 27:2). The same person is called Maacah in 1 Kings 2:39. Such name variation between accounts is common in biblical texts. The Greek versions show various transliteration attempts. Achish (son of Maoch/Maacah) appears as one of the more sympathetic foreign rulers in David's story, providing asylum when David needed refuge.

(1×) Personal name of Achish's father, the king of Gath who sheltered David (1 Samuel 27:2). The same individual appears as Maacah in 1 Kings 2:39, showing typical name variation. Greek versions (Ammach, Moab) reflect transliteration challenges. Achish son of Maoch appears as a relatively positive foreign ruler in David's narrative, offering refuge from Saul. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maoch | es: Maoc | fr: Maoch | de: Maoch 1Sam 27:2

מָעוֹן H4583 N-msc (17×)

A habitation or dwelling place, especially of God; a lair or den of wild animals; a refuge or shelter

The Hebrew noun ma'on evokes a settled place of belonging — whether for God, beasts, or desperate humans seeking safety. In its most exalted use, it names God's dwelling, 'the habitation of your holiness' in heaven (Deut 26:15; Jer 25:30), and the earthly temple where God's glory resides (Ps 26:8; 2 Chr 30:27). Yet when the prophets condemn ruined cities, this same word describes the desolate haunt of jackals prowling through rubble (Jer 9:11; 10:22; 49:33; Nah 2:12). Finally, in Psalm 71:3 and 90:1, ma'on becomes intensely personal: 'LORD, you have been our refuge through all generations.' Spanish morada and German Wohnung both track the primary residential meaning, while guarida ('den') and Zuflucht ('refuge') distinguish the secondary senses.

1. dwelling, habitation, abode (11×) A habitation, dwelling place, or abode — especially of God, whether in heaven or in the temple. Deuteronomy 26:15 calls heaven 'the habitation of your holiness,' and Jeremiah 25:30 pictures the LORD roaring from his holy dwelling on high. Second Chronicles 30:27 and 36:15 use it for the temple as God's earthly residence, while Psalm 26:8 voices the worshiper's love for 'the place where your glory dwells.' Spanish morada de santidad and French habitation sainte both preserve the sacral register. The construct chain me'on qodshekha recurs as a near-formulaic expression. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-dwelling, a-dwelling-place, and-from-dwelling-of | es: a-morada-de, desde-la-morada-de, desde-morada-de | fr: [למעון], [מעונו], dans-habitation | de: [למעון], [ממעון], [מעונו] Deut 26:15; 1Sam 2:29; 1Sam 2:32; 2Chr 30:27; 2Chr 36:15

2. lair, den, haunt of animals (5×) A lair, den, or haunt of wild animals — especially jackals — evoking desolation and ruin. Jeremiah applies the word repeatedly to cities under divine judgment: 'I will make Jerusalem a lair of jackals' (Jer 9:11; 10:22; 49:33; 51:37). Nahum 2:12 calls Nineveh 'the den of lions,' where the predator brought prey for its cubs. Spanish guarida de chacales and German Wohnung der Schakale both capture the grim imagery. In every instance, the once-inhabited city has been reduced to a beast's dwelling — an ironic inversion of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-haunt-of, a-lair-of, a-lair-of- | es: guarida-de, morada-de, para-guarida-de | fr: de-iniquité, demeure | de: Wohnung, von-Schuld, zu-Wohnung Jer 9:11; Jer 10:22; Jer 49:33; Jer 51:37; Nah 2:11

3. refuge, shelter (1×) A refuge or shelter to which one flees for protection, emphasizing security rather than mere residence. Psalm 71:3 declares God 'a rock of refuge' (tsur ma'on), and Psalm 91:9 addresses the faithful: 'you have made the LORD your refuge.' The shift from dwelling to defense is subtle but real; Spanish refugio and German Zuflucht both mark the distinction. Here ma'on moves beyond habitation into the emotional register of safety and trust, grounding one of the Psalter's most beloved images of divine protection. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT
en: refuge | es: refugio | fr: de-iniquité | de: Zuflucht Ps 71:3

מָעוֹן H4584 N-proper-fs (8×)

Maon — a town in the hill country of Judah and its surrounding wilderness; also a clan name

A place name identifying a settlement in the Judahite highlands about eight miles south of Hebron, listed among the cities of Judah's hill country (Josh 15:55). The surrounding wilderness of Maon served as David's refuge during Saul's pursuit (1 Sam 23:24-25), and the wealthy Nabal kept flocks there (1 Sam 25:2). In Judges 10:12 the name appears among Israel's ancient oppressors, likely connected to the Meunites. The genealogical notice of 1 Chronicles 2:45 places Maon among the descendants of Caleb, reflecting the Calebite settlement of this region.

Maon (place name) (8×) The proper noun Maon, referring primarily to a Judahite town in the hill country south of Hebron and its adjacent wilderness. Joshua 15:55 lists it among the cities of Judah; the wilderness of Maon is the setting for David's flight from Saul (1 Sam 23:24-25) and Nabal's estate (1 Sam 25:2). In 1 Chronicles 2:45 it appears as a personal/clan name within Caleb's genealogy. The rendering is remarkably consistent across languages — English, Spanish, French, and German all preserve 'Maon' as a direct transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ma'on, Maon, and-Ma'on | es: Maon, Maón, en-Maón | fr: Maon, [ומעון], [מעון] | de: Maon, [ומעון], [מעון] Josh 15:55; Judg 10:12; 1Sam 23:24; 1Sam 23:25

מְעֹנָה H4585 N-fpc / 3mp (10×)

Den or lair of wild animals; dwelling place or refuge, especially of God as shelter for his people

Derived from a root meaning 'to dwell,' this feminine noun covers both animal lairs and human or divine habitations. In its most frequent usage, it describes the dens where lions and wild beasts retreat – the young lion growling from his lair (Amos 3:4), creatures returning to their dens at sunrise (Ps 104:22), and the poetic dens of lions on Lebanon (Song 4:8). Yet the word reaches its theological height in Deuteronomy 33:27, where Moses declares that the eternal God himself is a me'onah – a refuge and dwelling place for his people. German and French capture this shift with 'Zuflucht' and 'refuge' for the divine sense, while 'taniere' and 'repaire' mark the animal lair.

1. animal den or lair (6×) A den, lair, or hiding place of wild animals, particularly lions and beasts of the field. The word evokes the secluded, sheltered place where predators rest and to which they return. Amos 3:4 asks rhetorically whether a lion roars from his lair without prey; Job 37:8 and 38:40 describe beasts crouching in their dens; Psalm 104:22 pictures animals gathering into their lairs at dawn. Nahum 2:13 uses the lion's den as a figure for Nineveh's violent stronghold. French 'taniere' and Spanish 'guarida' consistently mark this zoological sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-his-dens, and-in-its-dens, from-dens-of | es: desde-las-guaridas-de, desde-su-guarida, en-guaridas | fr: de-repaire, de-sa-tanière, des-tanières | de: [במעונות], [ובמעונתיה], [ומענתין] Job 37:8; Job 38:40; Ps 104:22; Song 4:8; Amos 3:4

2. dwelling place or refuge (4×) A dwelling place, habitation, or refuge applied to human or divine abodes. Deuteronomy 33:27 employs this word in one of Scripture's most memorable declarations: 'the eternal God is your me'onah' – your refuge and shelter. Psalm 76:2 locates God's dwelling in Zion. The word also appears in Jeremiah 21:13 and Zephaniah 3:7 for human habitations under divine judgment. German 'Zuflucht' (refuge) and French 'refuge' capture the protective, sheltering dimension that distinguishes this sense from the animal-lair usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-His-dwelling-place, her-dwelling, into-dwellings-our | es: en-moradas-nuestras, refugio, su-morada | fr: [במעונותינו], et-de-repaire, refuge | de: Zuflucht, [במעונותינו], [מעונה] Deut 33:27; Ps 76:2; Jer 21:13; Zeph 3:7

מְעוּנִים H4586 N-proper-ms (6×)

Meunim/Meunites: a people group south or southeast of Canaan, enemies of Judah and later temple servants.

A gentilical proper noun identifying the Meunim or Meunites, a people group located south or southeast of Canaan, possibly connected with the town of Maon in Edom. They appear as enemies defeated by the Simeonites in the days of Hezekiah (1 Chr 4:41), as foes subdued by King Uzziah (2 Chr 26:7), and — in a remarkable transformation — as temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:50; Neh 7:52). The Septuagint's Minaioi may link them to the South Arabian Minaeans, though this identification remains debated.

Meunim (people group) (6×) An ethnic or people group, the Meunim, located in the southern or southeastern margins of Canaan. They appear as hostile opponents defeated by Simeonite settlers (1 Chr 4:41) and by King Uzziah (2 Chr 26:7), and as Nethinim (temple servants) returning from Babylon (Ezra 2:50). The Ketiv/Qere variation (Ma'inim/Me'unim) and the Septuagint's Minaioi reflect uncertainty about their precise identity. Spanish uniformly transliterates 'Meunim,' while French and German leave the Hebrew script, signaling the obscurity of the name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: (the-Me'unim), Meunim, [K: the-Ma'inim] | es: (Meunim), (los-meunim), Meunim | fr: [המעונים], [המעינים], [והמעונים] | de: [(מעונים)], [[מעינים]], [המעונים] 1Chr 4:41; 2Chr 26:7; Ezra 2:50

מְעוֹנֹתַי H4587 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Meonothai, a personal name from the tribe of Judah, mentioned in genealogical records

This is a personal name from the genealogies of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:14. Little is known about this individual beyond the genealogical mention. The Greek versions show transliteration attempts typical of Hebrew names rendered into Greek. Such genealogical records preserved tribal and family identity during and after the exile, maintaining connection to the land and tribal heritage even when scattered.

(1×) Personal name from Judah's genealogies in 1 Chronicles 4:14. Beyond the genealogical listing, little is known of this individual. The Greek (Maonatei, Monatei) shows transliteration variation. Such genealogical records served to maintain tribal identity and land claims, especially important during exile and restoration periods when connection to heritage needed preservation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Me'onothai | es: Y-Meonotay | fr: [ומעונתי] | de: [ומעונתי] 1Chr 4:14

מָעוּף H4588 N-msc (1×)

Gloom or deep darkness, oppressive obscurity associated with distress and anguish

This term denotes gloom or deep darkness, specifically the oppressive darkness associated with distress. Isaiah 8:22 uses it in parallel with 'darkness' to describe the condition of those consulting mediums instead of God—they look to earth and see only distress, darkness, and gloom of anguish. The word emphasizes the obscuring, oppressive quality of darkness as metaphor for hopelessness and confusion. Some textual variants suggest slight emendations, but the gloom/darkness sense remains consistent.

(1×) Gloom or oppressive darkness, used in Isaiah 8:22 to describe the condition of those who reject God's word and consult mediums—they encounter 'gloom of anguish' along with darkness and distress. The term emphasizes obscurity and oppression, darkness as metaphor for hopelessness. Some suggest textual emendation, but versions consistently identify deep darkness or gloom associated with distress. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gloom-of | es: oscuridad-de | fr: [מעוף] | de: [מעוף] Isa 8:22

מָעוֹר H4589 N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

Nakedness or private parts, the exposed body that brings shame when uncovered

This term refers to nakedness or the private parts of the body, specifically that which brings shame when exposed. It appears in Habakkuk 2:15 in a woe oracle against one who makes neighbors drunk 'to gaze on their nakedness.' The imagery is of deliberate humiliation through exposure. In biblical thought, exposing someone's nakedness represented deep violation and shaming. The context is divine judgment against those who exploit and humiliate others.

(1×) Nakedness or private parts, that which brings shame when exposed. Habakkuk 2:15 condemns making neighbors drunk to gaze on their nakedness—deliberate humiliation through exposure. In biblical culture, uncovering nakedness represented serious violation and shaming. The Spanish 'desnudeces' (plural nakedness) and French 'nudité' identify exposed private areas. The context is divine judgment on exploiters. NAKEDNESS EXPOSURE

en: their-nakedness | es: sus-desnudeces! | fr: nudité | de: [מעוריהם] Hab 2:15

מַעַזְיָהוּ H4590 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

a priestly name meaning 'refuge of Yah,' borne by priests in David's and Nehemiah's times

Maaziah appears as a proper name for priests in two distinct periods. In 1 Chronicles 24:18, he heads the twenty-fourth priestly course established in David's reign. In Nehemiah 10:8, a priest named Maaziah signs the covenant renewal under Nehemiah. Whether these refer to the same family line or represent two unrelated bearers of the same theophoric name is uncertain. The name means 'Yah is a refuge' or 'strength of Yah,' fitting for those serving in temple ministry. The Greek transliterations vary (Moozal, Moazia, Maazeias), showing the expected diversity in rendering Hebrew names.

(2×) Proper name of a priest or priestly family. The 1 Chronicles reference places Maaziah among the twenty-four divisions that would serve in rotation at the temple, a system attributed to David's organization of worship. The Nehemiah occurrence shows a priest of this name participating in covenant renewal after the exile. The name's theophoric element (containing 'Yah') reflects common priestly naming patterns, emphasizing divine protection or strength. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Maaziah, for-Maazyahu | es: Maazías, para-Maaziyahu | fr: [למעזיהו], [מעזיה] | de: [למעזיהו], [מעזיה] 1Chr 24:18; Neh 10:8

מָעַט H4591 V-Qal-Inf (22×)

To be or become few, to diminish; in Hifil: to make few, reduce, give less; to be too small or insignificant.

A verb centered on smallness and scarcity, ma'at describes the dwindling of people, possessions, or significance. In Qal it is intransitive—a people 'become few' (Jer 29:6; Isa 21:17), or wealth 'diminishes' (Prov 13:11). The Hifil makes it causative: God 'reduces' wild beasts (Lev 26:22), or those with small households 'gather less' manna (Exod 16:17-18). A distinctive usage appears in Exodus 12:4, where a household may be 'too small' for a Passover lamb—here scarcity becomes insufficiency. The interplay between Qal and Hifil lets Hebrew speakers express both experiencing and causing diminishment with the same root.

1. make few, reduce, diminish (13×) Hifil causative: to make few, reduce in number or quantity, to give or gather less. This is the most frequent sense with thirteen occurrences. Those who gathered little manna had no lack (Exod 16:17-18); the one who gives less shall not reduce the half-shekel (Exod 30:15); God will 'diminish' wild beasts from the land (Lev 26:22). Spanish 'disminuir' consistently renders this causative meaning. The Jubilee land-pricing law (Lev 25:16) uses the infinitive: 'according to the fewness of years you shall reduce its price'—economics governed by the mathematics of scarcity. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: He-let-diminish, You-diminish-me, and-I-will-diminish-them | es: disminuirá, disminuirás, disminuiréis | fr: –diminuer, [תמעטנו], diminuer | de: [והמעטתים], [תמעטני], der-eins-der-least Exod 16:17; Exod 16:18; Exod 30:15; Lev 25:16; Lev 26:22

2. be/become few, diminish (6×) Qal intransitive: to be or become few in number, to diminish or dwindle. A people who do not multiply 'become few' (Jer 29:6; 30:19); the remnant of Kedar's warriors 'shall be few' (Isa 21:17); and the psalmist observes how the afflicted 'were diminished' (Ps 107:39). Proverbs 13:11 applies it to wealth: 'wealth gained hastily dwindles.' Spanish 'disminuir' and 'ser disminuidos' capture both the process and result. The pairing with 'multiply' (rabah) in Jeremiah creates a powerful antithetical parallelism. DECREASE DIMINISH

en: and-they-became-few, become-few, dwindles | es: Y-son-disminuidos, disminuirá, disminuirán | fr: [ימעטו], [תמעטו], diminuer | de: [ימעט], [ימעטו], [תמעטו] Lev 25:16; Ps 107:39; Prov 13:11; Isa 21:17; Jer 29:6

3. be too small, be insignificant (2×) Qal intransitive: to be too small, too little, or insufficient for a given purpose. In Exodus 12:4, if a household 'is too small' for a whole Passover lamb, it must share with a neighbor—a practical ruling with deep communal implications. Nehemiah 9:32 pleads that God not let the hardship 'seem small' before him. Spanish 'ser pequeña' and German 'ist auch klein' reflect this evaluative nuance, where the verb measures adequacy rather than mere quantity. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: is-too-small, let-seem-little | es: es-pequeña, sea-pequeña | fr: [ימעט], est-aussi-petit | de: [ימעט], ist-auch-klein Exod 12:4; Neh 9:32

4. became few (intensive) (1×) Piel factitive: to become few or diminished, with emphasis on the resultant state of reduction. This rare intensive form appears in Ecclesiastes 12:3, describing the grinding women who 'have become few'—part of Qoheleth's allegorical portrait of aging, where the 'grinders cease because they are few.' The Piel intensifies what the Qal states simply, underscoring the completeness of the diminishment. Spanish 'disminuyeron' renders the accomplished fact of reduction. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: they-are-few | es: disminuyeron | fr: diminuer | de: [מעטן] Eccl 12:3

מְעַט H4592 Conj-w / Adj-msc (101×)

A little, few, small amount; almost, nearly; soon, in a moment; gradually, little by little

A substantive expressing smallness in quantity, number, time, or degree. In its most basic use it means 'a little' of something — a little water (Gen 18:4), a little food (Gen 43:2). When modifying people, it means 'few' (Deut 7:7: 'you were the fewest of all peoples'). In the idiomatic construction ki-m'at it becomes the adverb 'almost' or 'nearly,' while temporal uses yield 'soon' or 'in a moment.' The word's flexibility allows it to serve as adjective, substantive, or adverb, and its rhetorical force in the construction ha-m'at ('is it too little?') makes it a tool of prophetic challenge.

1. a little, small quantity (47×) The basic quantitative sense: 'a little' of something, a small amount. Gen 18:4 ('let a little water be brought') and Gen 24:17 ('give me a little water to drink') are paradigmatic. Spanish poco, French peu, and German wenig converge on this core meaning. The word functions as a substantive governing a partitive construction, indicating a small portion of a larger whole. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: a-little, a-very-little, is-the-little | es: Un-poco-de, muy-poco, poco | fr: [מעט], de-peu, petit | de: ein-wenig, wenig Gen 18:4; Gen 24:17; Gen 24:43; Gen 30:30; Gen 43:2

2. few in number (25×) When applied to people or countable items: 'few in number.' Deut 7:7 declares Israel was 'the fewest of all peoples'; Gen 47:9 uses it of Jacob's 'few and evil' years. Spanish número/pequeño and French peu confirm the shift from mass quantity to discrete count. Lev 25:52 and Num 26:54 use it in legal formulae apportioning inheritance according to whether a tribe has many or few members. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: and-to-the-few, few, in-number | es: casi-nada, número, pequeño | fr: [כמעט], [למעט], [מעט] | de: in-Zahl, und-zu-der-wenige, wenig Gen 47:9; Lev 25:52; Num 26:54; Num 26:56; Num 33:54

3. is it too little? (9×) The rhetorical interrogative construction ha-m'at (הַמְעָט), meaning 'is it too little?' or 'is it a small thing?' Used in prophetic challenges and rebukes: Num 16:9 ('is it too little for you that God has separated you?'), Gen 30:15, Josh 22:17. French est-cela aussi petit and German ist es auch klein capture the indignant rhetorical force. The construction presupposes that the addressee should consider the matter significant, not trivial. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: ?-too-small, Is-too-little, few | es: Es-poca-cosa, acaso-poco, ¿Es-poco | fr: Est-aussi-petit, est-cela-aussi-petit, est-cela-petit | de: Is-auch-klein, der-wenig, ist-es-auch-klein Gen 30:15; Num 13:18; Num 16:9; Num 16:13; Josh 22:17

4. almost, nearly, scarcely (7×) The prepositional compound ki-m'at (כִּמְעַט), meaning 'almost, nearly, scarcely, barely.' Ps 73:2 ('my feet had almost stumbled'), Ps 94:17 ('my soul had almost dwelt in silence'), and Gen 26:10 ('one of the people might easily have lain with your wife'). Spanish casi/apenas, French presque/à peine, and German beinahe all confirm the approximative-adverbial function. The construction 'like a little' grammaticalizes into a near-miss marker. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: almost, like-little, scarcely | es: Apenas, Casi, casi | fr: comme-peu, presque, À-peine | de: beinahe, wenig, wie-wenig Gen 26:10; Ps 73:2; Ps 94:17; Ps 119:87; Prov 5:14

5. soon, in a moment (6×) A temporal sense: 'soon, in a moment, in a little while.' Ps 81:14 ('I would soon subdue their enemies') and Ps 2:12 ('for his wrath is quickly kindled') show the shift from spatial smallness to temporal brevity. Spanish en poco, French comme peu, and German in ein wenig support the temporal reading. Ezra 9:8 uses it of the 'brief moment' of God's grace, and Job 32:22 warns that Elihu's Maker would 'soon' take him away. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: for-a-little, in-a-little-while, in-a-moment | es: En-poco, como-un-momento, en-poco | fr: [כמעט], comme-peu | de: in-ein-wenig, wenig, wie-wenig 2Chr 12:7; Ezra 9:8; Job 32:22; Ps 2:12; Ps 81:14

6. small, of little worth (5×) An evaluative sense indicating smallness in worth, status, or significance. Deut 7:7 overlaps with sense 2 but emphasizes Israel's insignificance rather than mere head-count. Prov 10:20 ('the heart of the wicked is of little worth') and Ezek 11:16 ('I have been a small sanctuary for them') use the word to evaluate quality or standing. Dan 11:34 speaks of help that is 'small' — inadequate or trivial. French peu and German wenig carry both quantitative and evaluative overtones. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: as-little, is-of-little-worth, little | es: como-poco, pequeña, pequeño | fr: comme-peu, le-fewest, peu | de: der-fewest, wenig Deut 7:7; Prov 10:20; Ezek 11:16; Ezek 16:47; Dan 11:34

7. gradually, little by little (2×) The distributive idiom m'at m'at (מְעָט מְעָט), meaning 'little by little, gradually.' Exod 23:30 ('little by little I will drive them out') and Deut 28:38 ('you shall gather little') demonstrate the iterative, incremental sense. Spanish poco a poco and French petit à petit are exact structural parallels. This reduplicative pattern — common across Semitic languages — converts the simple quantifier into an aspectual adverb of gradual progression. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS
en: and-little, little-by | es: Poco, y-poco | fr: et-petit, petit-par | de: klein-durch, und-klein Exod 23:30; Deut 28:38

מָרַט H4593 Adj-fs (1×)

Polished or scoured smooth, made bare or smooth through vigorous cleaning or rubbing

This term describes something made smooth, polished, or scoured bare. The root means to make smooth, bare, or bald, and can refer to pulling out hair, scouring metal, or polishing surfaces. In Ezekiel 21:15, it appears in describing a sword that is polished or perhaps wrapped for slaughter. The context is judgment imagery where the sword is prepared and made ready. The term emphasizes the thorough preparation through smoothing or polishing action.

(1×) Made smooth, polished, or scoured, specifically in Ezekiel 21:15 regarding a sword prepared for slaughter. The root involves making bare or smooth through vigorous action—pulling, scouring, polishing. The Spanish 'envuelta' (wrapped) and French 'maigre' (lean) suggest textual or interpretive challenges, while the core sense involves thorough preparation through smoothing. The context is judgment sword imagery. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: it-is-polished | es: envuelta | fr: maigre | de: [מעטה] Ezek 21:15

מַעֲטֶה H4594 N-msc (1×)

A mantle or wrap, a garment that covers or envelops, used metaphorically for praise replacing mourning

This term denotes a mantle, wrap, or covering garment. Isaiah 61:3 uses it in a beautiful metaphor of restoration: God gives 'a mantle of praise instead of a spirit of despair.' The imagery is of exchanging garments—taking off mourning clothes and putting on garments of praise. The word emphasizes the enveloping, covering nature of the garment. This prophetic reversal imagery promises transformation from grief to celebration, despair to praise.

(1×) A mantle or wrap that covers, used figuratively in Isaiah 61:3 where God gives 'a mantle of praise' instead of despair. The metaphor involves exchanging garments—removing mourning clothes, putting on praise garments. The Spanish 'manto' (mantle/cloak) captures the covering garment sense. This appears in Isaiah's restoration vision promising reversal from grief to celebration, using clothing imagery for transformation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: garment-of | es: manto-de | fr: [מעטה] | de: [מעטה] Isa 61:3

מַעֲטָפָה H4595 Conj-w (1×)

Mantles or overtunics, outer garments worn over other clothing as covering or adornment

This term refers to mantles or overtunics, outer garments worn as covering or adornment. It appears in Isaiah 3:22 in the list of women's finery that will be stripped away in judgment. These were apparently fashionable outer garments worn by wealthy Jerusalem women. The Arabic and Aramaic cognates confirm this as an outer covering garment. The judgment oracle threatens removal of luxury items and status symbols, including elaborate clothing.

(1×) Mantles or overtunics, outer covering garments listed among women's finery in Isaiah 3:22. These items will be removed in judgment against Jerusalem's luxury and pride. Arabic and Aramaic cognates confirm outer covering garments. The Spanish 'mantos' (mantles/cloaks) identifies these as fashionable outer wear. The context is prophetic judgment stripping away status symbols and luxury clothing. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-the-mantles | es: y-los-mantos | fr: [והמעטפות] | de: [והמעטפות] Isa 3:22

מְעִי H4596 N-msc (1×)

A ruinous heap or pile of rubble, the remains of destroyed buildings

This term refers to a ruinous heap or pile of rubble from destroyed structures. Isaiah 17:1 uses it in an oracle against Damascus: the city will become 'a ruinous heap.' The imagery is of complete destruction, buildings reduced to piles of debris. However, textual issues exist—some ancient versions omit the word, and scholars debate whether it's original. If correct, it emphasizes total devastation, the city transformed from living metropolis to dead rubble pile.

(1×) A ruinous heap or pile of rubble from destruction. Isaiah 17:1 prophesies Damascus will become a ruinous heap—total devastation reducing the city to debris. Some ancient versions omit this word, suggesting possible textual issues. If original, it emphasizes complete transformation from thriving city to rubble pile. The Spanish 'montón' (heap/pile) and the parallel 'heap of ruins' convey accumulated destruction debris. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: heap-of | es: montón-de | fr: [מע] | de: meine-Eingeweide Isa 17:1

מָעַי H4597 N-proper-ms (1×)

Maai, a personal name, a musician who participated in the dedication of Jerusalem's wall

This is the name of a musician who participated in the dedication ceremony of Jerusalem's rebuilt wall under Nehemiah (Nehemiah 12:36). He was part of the musical procession celebrating this momentous completion. The Greek versions show transliteration attempts. Musicians played important ceremonial roles in Israel's worship and public celebrations, and this dedication marked a significant moment in the restoration community's life—the physical restoration of the city's defenses.

(1×) Personal name of a musician in Nehemiah 12:36 who participated in the wall dedication ceremony. He was part of the musical procession celebrating Jerusalem's restored defenses. Greek versions (Maai, Maia) show transliteration. Musicians held important ceremonial roles, and this dedication marked a pivotal moment in post-exile restoration—the city's defensive walls rebuilt after decades. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Maai | es: Maai | fr: [מע] | de: [מע] Neh 12:36

מְעִיל H4598 N-msc / 2ms (28×)

Robe, mantle; an outer garment worn over the tunic, associated with persons of rank, priests, and prophets.

The me'il was a distinctive outer robe worn over the ketonet (inner tunic), marking its wearer as someone of social or sacral standing. It appears in two primary settings: the priestly vestments, where the robe of the ephod was woven entirely of blue yarn with pomegranates and golden bells at its hem (Exod 28:31-34; 39:22-26), and the garments of prominent lay figures such as Samuel (1 Sam 15:27; 28:14), Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam 18:4; 24:5), Job (Job 1:20; 2:12), and Ezra (Ezra 9:3, 5). Tearing the me'il became a classic gesture of grief and horror.

robe, mantle, cloak (28×) An outer robe or sleeveless cloak worn over the ketonet (tunic), associated with persons of rank, prophets, and priests. In the priestly sphere, the me'il of the ephod was dyed entirely blue with bells and pomegranates at its hem (Exod 28:31-34). In narrative contexts, Samuel's torn robe symbolizes the kingdom torn from Saul (1 Sam 15:27-28), and Job rends his me'il in grief (Job 1:20). Spanish 'manto,' German 'Kleid,' and French renderings all point to a formal outer garment rather than everyday dress. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-my-robe, as-robe, his-robe | es: como-manto, el-manto, manto-de | fr: [ומעיל], [כמעיל], [מעיל] | de: Kleid-von, [ומעילו], [כמעיל] Exod 28:4; Exod 28:31; Exod 28:34; Exod 29:5; Exod 39:22

מַעְיָן H4599 N-mpc (23×)

A spring or fountain of water; figuratively, a source of life, vitality, or blessing.

Derived from the root ayin ('eye, spring'), ma'yan denotes a place where water wells up from the earth. It appears in key geographic and cosmological contexts: the 'springs of the great deep' burst open at the Flood (Gen 7:11), and the Promised Land is praised for its springs (Deut 8:7). German Quelle and Spanish manantial both render the literal water-source faithfully. Figuratively, the word becomes a rich image for human vitality and divine blessing – the beloved is a 'sealed fountain' (Song 4:12), and the psalmist declares 'all my springs are in you' (Ps 87:7). Hosea 13:15 reverses this, warning that Ephraim's fountain will dry up.

1. spring or fountain of water (18×) A natural water source where water wells up from the ground, used of geographic springs, fountains, and subterranean water sources. German Quelle and Spanish manantial both render the literal sense directly. Key passages include the cosmological 'springs of the deep' (Gen 7:11; 8:2), the springs stopped by Hezekiah (2 Chr 32:4), and the eschatological fountain flowing from the temple (Joel 3:18). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-spring, and-a-spring, from-springs-of | es: Manantial, de-los-manantiales-de, en-fuente-de | fr: [המעינות], [ממעיני], [מעינות] | de: Quelle, Quelle-von, Quellen Gen 7:11; Gen 8:2; Lev 11:36; Josh 15:9; Josh 18:15

2. figurative source or fountain (5×) A spring or fountain used metaphorically to denote a person's origin, vitality, or inner source of life and blessing. French fontaine and Spanish fuentes-de-mí capture the figurative register. In Song 4:12, 15 the beloved is a sealed garden-fountain; Prov 5:16 asks whether one's springs should flow in the streets; and Ps 87:7 celebrates Zion as the source of all one's springs. Hos 13:15 inverts the image: Ephraim's fountain will be dried up by the east wind. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fountain, fountain-of, his-fountain | es: Manantial-de, fuentes-de-mí, manantial | fr: Fontaine, de-mes-yeux, fontaine | de: [מעינו], [מעינתיך], mein-Quellen Ps 87:7; Prov 5:16; Song 4:12; Song 4:15; Hos 13:15

מָעַךְ H4600 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (3×)

To press, squeeze, or thrust forcefully, often with violent or sexual connotations

This verb describes forceful physical pressure applied to objects or bodies. Its three occurrences span from the cultic (emasculated animals unfit for sacrifice in Lev 22), to the martial (Saul's spear thrust into the ground in 1 Sam 26), to the violently sexual (Ezekiel's graphic metaphor of Egypt's abuse of Jerusalem and Samaria in Ezek 23). The consistent element is forceful compression or penetration, whether squeezing, crushing, or pressing into place.

(3×) To press, squeeze, or thrust with force. Leviticus 22:24 prohibits offering animals whose testicles are 'bruised or crushed' (paralleled with 'torn' and 'cut'). In 1 Samuel 26:7, Saul's spear is found 'stuck' or 'thrust' into the ground at his head. Ezekiel 23:3 uses the term for sexual violence—breasts 'squeezed' in Egypt's idolatrous embrace. The multilingual glosses (bruised, stuck, pressed, clavada) reflect this range of forceful compression. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-bruised, stuck, they-pressed | es: Y-magullado, clavada, fueron-apretados | fr: et-bruised, meurtrir, stuck | de: [מעכו], stuck, und-bruised Lev 22:24; 1Sam 26:7; Ezek 23:3

מַעֲכָה H4601 N-proper-fs (23×)

Maacah — proper name borne by several men, women, and a small Aramean territory near Hermon

One of the Bible's most reused personal names, Maacah (מַעֲכָה) is attached to at least ten distinct individuals and one geographic entity. Among the women, the most prominent is the Geshurite princess who married David and bore Absalom (2 Sam 3:3), and the queen mother whom King Asa deposed for her Asherah idol (1 Kgs 15:13). As a place name, Maacah denotes a small Aramean kingdom bordering Geshur east of the Sea of Galilee, mentioned alongside the Geshurites in Joshua 13:13 and the Syrians of Beth-maacah in 2 Samuel 10:6-8. Spanish and French consistently render it 'Maaca/Maacah,' reflecting the Septuagint's Μααχα.

Maacah (proper name, person/place) (23×) Proper noun for multiple persons and one territory: Nahor's son via Reumah (Gen 22:24), David's Geshurite wife and mother of Absalom (2 Sam 3:3), and the queen mother deposed by Asa (1 Kgs 15:13). Geographically, the small Aramean principality south of Mount Hermon (Josh 13:13; 2 Sam 10:6). The Septuagint renders it Μααχα. MAACAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Ma'akhah, Maacah, Maakah | es: Maaca, Maacah, Maajah | fr: Maaca, Maacah, Maakah | de: Maacah, Maacha, Maakah Gen 22:24; Josh 13:13; 2Sam 3:3; 2Sam 10:6; 2Sam 10:8

מַעֲכָתִי H4602 Conj-w (8×)

Maacathite — a gentillic adjective denoting someone from the Aramean territory of Maacah

A gentillic (demonymic) adjective identifying a person as a native or inhabitant of Maacah, a small Aramean kingdom at the foot of Mount Hermon near the Golan. In its collective use, it describes the unconquered Maacathite population that remained within Israel's borders (Deut 3:14; Josh 12:5; 13:11, 13). It also identifies specific individuals: one of David's warriors (2 Sam 23:34), Eshtemoa in the Judahite genealogy (1 Chr 4:19), and Jaazaniah who joined Gedaliah after Jerusalem's fall (2 Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8).

Maacathite (gentillic demonym) (8×) The gentillic adjective 'Maacathite,' derived from the territory of Maacah (מַעֲכָה), an Aramean region near the base of Mount Hermon. Used collectively with the definite article הַמַּעֲכָתִי to designate the Maacathite population that Israel did not dispossess (Deut 3:14; Josh 12:5; 13:11, 13), and individually to identify specific persons such as one of David's warriors (2 Sam 23:34) and Jaazaniah in the post-exilic period (2 Kgs 25:23). Spanish 'maacateo/maacatita,' French 'Maacathite,' and English 'Maacathite' all reflect a straightforward transliteration of the Hebrew gentillic. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-the-Maacathite, the-Ma'akhathi, the-Maacathite | es: el-maacateo, el-maacatita, el-maajatita | fr: [המעכתי], et-le-Maacathite, le-Maacathite | de: [המעכתי], der-Maacathite, der-Maakhatite Deut 3:14; Josh 12:5; Josh 13:11; Josh 13:13; 2Sam 23:34

מָעַל H4603 N-ms (36×)

To act unfaithfully, commit treachery — covenant breach against God through sacrilege or disloyalty

A verb from the priestly and Chronicler's vocabulary describing serious breach of faith against God. It almost always appears in the emphatic construction māᶜal maᶜal ('committed a trespass'), underscoring the gravity of the offense. The sin of Achan taking devoted spoil (Josh 7:1), Israel's intermarriage with foreign nations (Ezra 10:2), and Uzziah's presumptuous entry into the temple to burn incense (2 Chr 26:16) all exemplify this word's range. Unlike general terms for sin, māᶜal specifically denotes violation of what is sacred or covenanted — a betrayal of trust with God. French 'agir infidèlement' and Spanish 'cometer infidelidad' both capture the relational treachery inherent in the term.

1. act unfaithfully, commit treachery (34×) To act unfaithfully or commit sacrilege against God — the verbal sense describing the act of covenant breach, used of individuals (Achan at Jericho, Josh 7:1; Uzziah in the temple, 2 Chr 26:16) and collectively of Israel (Lev 26:40; Ezra 10:2). The characteristic construction māᶜal maᶜal ('trespassed a trespass') intensifies the gravity. Spanish 'cometer infidelidad' and French 'agir infidèlement' both convey the relational dimension — this is not mere rule-breaking but betrayal of a covenant partner. The term is concentrated in Leviticus, Numbers, Ezekiel, and Chronicles, marking it as distinctly priestly language. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: acted-unfaithfully, and-acted-unfaithfully, and-she-acted-unfaithfully | es: Y-cometieron-infidelidad, a-prevaricar, cometer-infidelidad- | fr: agir-infidèlement, cela-acts-unfaithfully, de-montez! | de: [למעל], [מעלנו], [מעלחם] Lev 5:15; Lev 6:2; Lev 26:40; Num 5:6; Num 5:12

2. unfaithfulness, treachery (nominal) (2×) Unfaithfulness or treachery as a nominal or infinitive absolute — the abstract state of covenant breach rather than the act itself (2 Chr 28:19, where Ahaz 'caused Judah to act wildly and was exceedingly unfaithful'; 2 Chr 36:14, where priests and people 'multiplied unfaithfulness'). Here the emphasis falls on the accumulated, intensified condition of disloyalty. English 'unfaithfulness,' Spanish 'infidelidad,' and German 'treulos handeln' all shift from action to state, naming the quality of betrayal that characterizes a relationship gone wrong. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: and-acting-unfaithfully, unfaithfulness | es: infidelidad, y-prevaricar | fr: agir-infidèlement, et-agir-infidèlement | de: treulos-handeln, und-von-Unrecht 2Chr 28:19; 2Chr 36:14

מַעַל H4604 N-msc / 3ms (28×)

Unfaithfulness, sacral trespass; a treacherous act of covenant violation against God, often in cultic contexts.

This noun denotes a serious breach of faith directed specifically against God or the sacred realm. It most often appears in the fixed expression ma'al ma'al ('to commit a trespass'), emphasizing the gravity of the offense. The Levitical legislation uses it for misappropriating holy things (Lev 5:15; 6:2), while the Chronicler applies it broadly to explain national disasters as consequences of Israel's collective unfaithfulness (1 Chr 9:1; 2 Chr 29:19; 33:19; Ezra 9:2, 4). The word carries a stronger religious charge than ordinary sin vocabulary, pointing to betrayal of the covenant bond itself.

unfaithfulness, sacral trespass (28×) An act of faithlessness or sacrilegious violation against God or the covenant, carrying a stronger religious charge than general sin vocabulary. In Leviticus, it describes misuse of sanctified property or false oaths regarding a neighbor's goods (Lev 5:15; 6:2; Num 5:6, 12). The Chronicler uses it to explain the exile as the consequence of corporate unfaithfulness (1 Chr 9:1; 2 Chr 29:19; Ezra 9:2). Spanish 'infidelidad,' German 'Treulosigkeit,' and French 'treachery' all converge on the note of broken trust and covenant betrayal. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS

en: a-trespass, an-unfaithfulness, and-his-unfaithfulness | es: en-infidelidad, infidelidad, la-infidelidad | fr: [ומעלו], [מעל], dans-treachery | de: Treulosigkeit, der-treachery, ein-Vergehen Lev 5:15; Lev 6:2; Lev 26:40; Num 5:6; Num 5:12

מַעַל H4605 Prep-l / Adv / 3fs (140×)

Above, upward – used in adverbial and prepositional phrases for additive extent ('and upward'), source from above, upward direction, and static position on top.

This substantive-turned-adverb appears only in fixed phrases but covers a rich spatial range. Its most frequent use (~57x) is the census formula 'from twenty years old and upward' (Num 1:3), where it marks open-ended extent beyond a threshold. As a prepositional compound mim-ma'al, it can indicate source from above (Gen 6:16; Exod 25:21) or a static position on top of something (Gen 22:9: Abraham laid Isaac on the wood 'above'). In directional contexts, le-ma'lah means 'upward, higher' (Deut 28:43; 1 Chr 14:2). The heavens mim-ma'al (Deut 4:39) became a theological formula for God's transcendence. French au-dessus and en-haut neatly split the locative and directional senses.

1. and upward, onward (additive extent) (57×) Additive extent 'and upward, and onward' (~57x) – the characteristic formula X wa-ma'lah marking an open lower bound: 'from twenty years old and upward' (Num 1:3), 'from a month old and upward' (Num 3:15). German und-aufwaerts and Spanish y-arriba consistently render this quantitative-threshold sense. It appears overwhelmingly in census lists, Levitical age requirements, and measurement specifications throughout Numbers, Leviticus, and Chronicles. ABOVE AND UPWARD

en: and-upward | es: y-arriba, y-más | fr: et-upward | de: und-aufwaerts Exod 30:14; Exod 38:26; Lev 27:7; Num 1:3; Num 1:18

2. from above (source/origin) (43×) Source or origin from above (~43x) – the compound preposition mim-ma'al (with min) indicating that something comes from, extends from, or is viewed from a higher position. Gen 7:20 describes the floodwaters rising fifteen cubits 'from above' the mountains; Exod 25:21 instructs placing the mercy seat 'from above' upon the ark. French de-au-dessus and German von-oben both capture the ablative-spatial nuance. Amos 2:9 uses it poetically: God destroyed the Amorite's fruit 'from above.' ABOVE AND UPWARD

en: from-above | es: de-arriba, desde-arriba, encima | fr: [מלמעלה], de-au-dessus, de-au-dessus-de | de: darüber, oben, von-oben Gen 6:16; Gen 7:20; Exod 25:21; Exod 26:14; Exod 28:27

3. upward, higher (directional) (27×) Directional 'upward, higher' (~27x) – adverbial use with le- indicating motion or orientation toward a higher position. Exod 25:20 describes the cherubim's wings spreading 'upward'; Deut 28:43 warns the foreigner will rise 'higher and higher.' Spanish hacia-arriba and French en-haut mark the dynamic, directional quality. In 1 Chr 14:2, David perceives that the LORD has exalted his kingdom le-ma'lah – upward, to greatness. ABOVE AND UPWARD

en: above, exceedingly, leads-upward | es: arriba, hacia-arriba | fr: [למעלה], en-haut, en-haut-garde | de: aufwaerts, hinauf-ward, nach-oben Exod 25:20; Exod 37:9; Deut 28:43; Judg 7:13

4. above, on top of (locative) (13×) Locative 'above, on top of' (~13x) – static position above or upon something, typically in the compound mim-ma'al le-. Gen 22:9 describes Isaac placed on the altar 'on top of' the wood; Exod 20:4 and Deut 5:8 prohibit images of what is in heaven 'above.' French au-dessus and German oberhalb both serve this spatial-static sense. The theological formula 'the heavens above' (Deut 4:39) locates God's dwelling in transcendent space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: above, on-top-of | es: arriba, arriba-de, de-arriba | fr: [למעלה], au-dessus, d'en-haut | de: oben, oberhalb, von-oben Gen 22:9; Exod 20:4; Deut 4:39; Deut 5:8; Deut 28:13

מֶעָל H4606 N-mpc (1×)

going in, setting (of the sun); sunset

This rare noun appears only in Daniel 6:14, where it describes the time when the sun goes down. The Aramaic word derives from a root meaning 'to enter' or 'go in,' and in this context refers to the sun's entrance into the western horizon. The phrase 'at the setting of the sun' marks the urgent deadline by which the king's sealed decree could not be reversed, even to save Daniel.

(1×) The multilingual evidence shows translators recognizing this as a temporal marker tied to sunset: English 'setting-of,' Spanish 'la-puesta-de' (the setting of), and French 'de-sur-moi' suggest the sun's descent. This Aramaic term uses the concept of the sun 'entering' or 'going into' the west to mark the close of day (Dan 6:14). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: setting-of | es: la-puesta-de | fr: de-sur-moi | de: [מעל] Dan 6:14

מַעַל H4607 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

lifting, raising up; the act of lifting hands in worship

Found only in Nehemiah 8:6, this noun describes the physical action of the people lifting their hands in response to Ezra's blessing. The word comes from the root meaning 'to go up' or 'ascend.' In ancient Near Eastern worship, raising hands was a standard posture of prayer, surrender, and receiving blessing. Here the lifting of hands accompanies vocal worship and physical prostration.

(1×) Translators across languages capture the action of raising: English 'with-lifting-of,' Spanish 'con-alzar' (with raising). The context in Nehemiah shows the people's hands going upward in a gesture of worship and affirmation after hearing God's word read and explained. This upward motion expresses both reverence and reception. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: with-lifting-of | es: con-alzar | fr: [במעל] | de: [במעל] Neh 8:6

מַעֲלֶה H4608 Prep-m (18×)

Ascent; a geographical slope, hill-road, or mountain pass; also architectural stairs or steps of a structure.

Derived from the root 'to go up,' this noun names a rising path or stairway. In its geographical sense it identifies named passes and hill-roads throughout the land of Israel — the Ascent of Akrabbim on Judah's southern border (Num 34:4; Josh 15:3), the Ascent of Adummim between Jerusalem and Jericho (Josh 15:7; 18:17), and the Ascent of the Mount of Olives where David fled weeping (2 Sam 15:30). Spanish renders these as 'subida de' and English as 'ascent of.' In its architectural sense, Ezekiel's temple vision repeatedly references the stairs of gateways (Ezek 40:31, 34, 37), and Nehemiah 9:4 describes the Levites standing on a raised platform. The semantic thread connecting both senses is upward movement — whether along a hillside or up a staircase.

1. geographical ascent or pass (11×) A geographical ascent, slope, or mountain pass going upward, typically a named topographic feature serving as a landmark or boundary. The Ascent of Akrabbim marks Judah's southern frontier (Num 34:4; Josh 15:3; Judg 1:36), the Ascent of Adummim lies between Jerusalem and Jericho (Josh 15:7; 18:17), and David's retreat up the Mount of Olives is narrated along its 'ascent' (2 Sam 15:30). Spanish 'subida de' and English 'ascent of' consistently convey the idea of an upward-climbing route through terrain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ascent-of, at-ascent-of-, at-the-ascent | es: desde-subida-de, en-la-subida, en-la-subida-de | fr: [במעלה], [מעלה], ascent-de | de: [במעלה], [מעלה], ascent-von Josh 15:7; Josh 18:17; Judg 8:13; 1Sam 9:11; 2Sam 15:30

2. stairs or steps of structure (7×) Architectural stairs, steps, or a raised platform belonging to a built structure. Ezekiel's temple vision uses the term repeatedly for the stairs of gateway structures (Ezek 40:31, 34, 37), and Nehemiah 9:4 and 12:37 reference stairs or elevated platforms in the context of public assembly. The semantic shift from natural terrain to built environment is reflected in translation: Spanish moves from 'subida' (ascent) to 'plataforma' or 'gradas' (stairs), and English from 'ascent' to 'stairs.' PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS

en: [ketiv], its-ascents, the-stairs-of | es: (sus-subidas), [sus-subidas], plataforma-de | fr: [מעלה], [מעלן], [מעליו] | de: [מעלן], [מעליו], von-Brandopfer Neh 9:4; Ezek 40:31; Ezek 40:34

מַעֲלָה H4609a Conj-w / N-fpc (1×)

what rises up; thoughts, plans (metaphorical)

Occurring only in Ezekiel 11:5, this feminine plural noun literally means 'things that come up' or 'ascents.' The prophet uses it metaphorically for the thoughts or plans that arise in people's minds—the mental formations that 'come up' in consciousness. God declares that He knows 'the things that come up in your spirit,' i.e., your inmost thoughts and schemes, whether righteous or wicked.

(1×) The multilingual glosses reveal interpretive diversity: English 'what-rises-of' preserves the upward movement metaphor, Spanish 'subidas-de' (risings of) likewise, while German 'Stufen' (steps/stairs) and French 'degré' (step/degree) show the concrete architectural sense bleeding into the translation. The image is of thoughts ascending into awareness, known fully to God (Ezek 11:5). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-what-rises-of | es: y-subidas-de | fr: et-degré | de: und-Stufen Ezek 11:5

מַעֲלָה H4609b Prep-b / N-fpc (49×)

Step, stair; ascent; psalm title 'Song of Ascents' for the pilgrimage psalms (Pss 120-134); upper story

Refers to a physical step or stairway, such as those of the temple courts, an altar, a throne, or a city gate. The plural form appears famously in the superscriptions of Psalms 120-134 as shir hamma'alot, 'Song of Ascents,' likely denoting the pilgrimage songs sung by worshippers going up to Jerusalem for the great feasts. French 'degre' and German 'Stufen' consistently reflect the concrete architectural sense, while Spanish 'subidas' captures the pilgrimage ascent. In a unique cosmic image, Amos 9:6 uses it for the 'upper stories' of heaven, God's exalted dwelling place.

1. steps, stairs, stairway (31×) Physical steps or stairs belonging to a structure such as the temple gates (Ezek 40:6, 22, 26), the altar (Exod 20:26; Ezek 43:17), Solomon's throne (1 Kgs 10:19-20), a royal house (2 Kgs 9:13), or the city of David (Neh 3:15; 12:37). Also the graduated steps of the sundial of Ahaz (2 Kgs 20:9-11 = Isa 38:8). French 'marches' and German 'Stufen' point clearly to architectural stairs, while English and Spanish shift between 'steps' and 'gradas.' STAIRWAY STEPS en: and-by-steps, and-by-the-steps, and-returned | es: Y-gradas-de, en-grados-de, en-los-grados | fr: degré, et-degré, marches | de: Stufen, [במעלות], [המעלות] Exod 20:26; 1Kgs 10:19; 1Kgs 10:20; 2Kgs 9:13; 2Kgs 20:9

2. song of ascents (psalm title) (15×) A fixed liturgical heading, shir hamma'alot, introducing each of Psalms 120-134. The 'ascents' likely refer to the pilgrimage procession ascending to Jerusalem's temple mount for the three annual feasts. Spanish 'subidas' foregrounds the upward journey, while French 'degre' retains the step imagery, suggesting the tradition that Levitical singers stood on the fifteen temple steps. STAIRWAY STEPS en: of-the-ascents, the-ascents | es: de-las-subidas | fr: le-degré, à-degré | de: der-ascents, von-der-ascents Ps 120:1; Ps 121:1; Ps 122:1; Ps 123:1; Ps 124:1

3. ascent, going up (2×) The abstract act or route of going up, as in the ascent from Babylon to Jerusalem (Ezra 7:9) or the ascent of Beth-horon (Josh 10:10). Spanish 'la subida' and English 'the going up' both capture the sense of an upward geographical journey or road. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-ascent-of, the-going-up | es: la-subida, subida-de | fr: degré, le-ascent-de | de: [המעלה], der-ascent-von Josh 10:10; Ezra 7:9

4. upper story, elevated place (1×) An elevated or upper place, used uniquely in 1 Chronicles 17:17 where David speaks of God showing him things 'on high' or as pertaining to an exalted degree. Amos 9:6 similarly describes God's upper stories in heaven. The sense moves from physical steps to metaphorical height and divine exaltation. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: the-exalted | es: la-altura | fr: degré | de: Stufe 1Chr 17:17

מַעֲלֶה H4610 Prep-l / N-msc (6×)
Ascent, slope; a geographic rise or uphill road, often part of place names like Scorpion Pass (Akrabbim)
A masculine noun denoting an uphill road, mountain pass, or ascending slope. It frequently appears as a construct element in proper toponyms — most notably 'the ascent of Akrabbim' (Scorpion Pass), marking the southern boundary of Canaan (Num 34:4; Josh 15:3; Judg 1:36). The same word describes the climb to towns and cities in narrative contexts. Across translations, both the common noun sense and the embedded proper-name element are preserved: Hindi transliterates 'Akrabbim' while Spanish and English render the geographic feature as 'subida' or 'ascent.'

1. Akrabbim (proper name element) (3×) The proper-name element 'Akrabbim' (Scorpion Pass) appears in boundary descriptions of southern Canaan (Num 34:4; Josh 15:3; Judg 1:36). All major translation traditions transliterate it — English 'Akrabbim,' Spanish 'Acrabim,' Hindi 'अक्रबबीम' — treating it as a fixed toponym rather than translating the scorpion imagery, which shows the name had already lexicalized as a place reference. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Akrabbim | es: Acrabim, Akrabim | fr: Akrabbim | de: Akrabbim Num 34:4; Josh 15:3; Judg 1:36

2. ascent, slope (geographic feature) (3×) The common noun sense denotes a physical ascent, slope, or uphill road as a geographic feature. Used with directional prepositions ('to the ascent of,' 'from the ascent of'), it describes terrain one must climb. Spanish 'subida' (climb/ascent) and French 'ascent' both capture the active sense of going upward, distinguishing this from a static hill or mountain designation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: ascent-of, from-the-ascent-of, to-ascent-of | es: a-la-subida-de, desde-subida-de, hacia-subida-de | fr: ascent-de, de-le-ascent-de, à-ascent-de | de: ascent-von, von-der-ascent-von, zu-ascent-von Num 34:4; Josh 15:3; Judg 1:36

מַעֲלָל H4611 N-mp (42×)
deeds, practices — habitual actions or conduct, usually evaluated morally as evil or (rarely) good Ma'alal occurs only in the plural (ma'alalim) and denotes the habitual practices or characteristic conduct of a person or nation, with a strong tilt toward moral evaluation. Jeremiah uses it 17 times — more than any other book — to indict Judah's 'evil practices' from which God demands repentance (Jer 4:4; 18:11; 25:5; 26:13). The word's moral gravity is captured in its frequent pairing with ra ('evil') or ro'a ('wickedness'): 'the evil of your deeds' (Hos 9:15; Jer 21:12). Yet it is not exclusively negative; Psalm 77:12 recalls God's own deeds, and Psalm 78:7 urges remembering the ma'alale-el ('works of God'). The cross-linguistic glosses confirm the moral-behavioral emphasis: Spanish 'obras,' French 'action,' German 'Taten.'

deeds, acts, practices (42×) Habitual conduct or characteristic deeds of persons or communities, predominantly evaluated morally. Jeremiah's phrase ro'a ma'alelekhem ('the evil of your practices,' Jer 4:4; 21:12) summons repentance. Hosea 5:4 and 7:2 apply it to entrenched waywardness. The positive usage — God's own deeds in worship (Ps 77:12; 78:7) — shows the term is neutral in principle though overwhelmingly negative in prophecy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-deeds-your, and-your-deeds, deeds-your | es: (obras-vuestras), obras-de-ellos, obras-de-vosotros | fr: action, et-action | de: Tat, ihre-Taten, und-Tat Deut 28:20; Judg 2:19; 1Sam 25:3; Neh 9:35; Ps 28:4

מַעֲמָד H4612 N-msc / 3mp (5×)
station, post, office; appointed position of service or attendance Derived from the root 'to stand,' this noun denotes the assigned position where someone carries out their duty — whether a priestly post, a court attendant's station, or an official office. When the Queen of Sheba observed 'the standing of Solomon's servants' (1 Kgs 10:5; 2 Chr 9:4), she marveled at their disciplined attendance at table. The Levites stood 'at their posts' during Josiah's Passover (2 Chr 35:15), and Isaiah warns Shebna that God will tear him 'from your station' (Isa 22:19). Spanish 'posición' and 'puesto' reflect both the physical and institutional dimensions of this word.

(5×) Station or post — the physical position where one stands to fulfill duties. The Levitical singers remained 'at their posts' during Josiah's great Passover (2 Chr 35:15), and in 1 Chr 23:28 the Levites' station defined their liturgical function. Spanish 'su-puesto' (their post) highlights the fixed, assigned nature of this standing position in temple worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-your-station, and-standing-of, and-the-standing-of | es: su-puesto, y-de-tu-posición, y-posición-de | fr: [וממעמדך], [ומעמד], [מעמדם] | de: [וממעמדך], [ומעמד], [מעמדם] 1Kgs 10:5; 1Chr 23:28; 2Chr 9:4; 2Chr 35:15; Isa 22:19

מָעֳמָד H4613 N-ms (1×)
standing ground, foothold; a firm place to stand
This noun appears only in Psalm 69:2, where the psalmist cries out, 'I have come into deep waters, and there is no foothold.' The word denotes a solid place where one's feet can grip and stand securely. In the psalm's drowning metaphor, the absence of foothold intensifies the sense of helplessness and peril—sinking into mire with nothing firm beneath.

(1×) The English and German glosses both use 'foothold,' capturing the idea of a secure standing place. Spanish expands to 'donde-estar-en-pie' (where to stand upright), and French 'de-se-tenir' (to hold oneself) reflects the need for stability. The psalmist's imagery draws on the terror of quicksand or deep water where no solid ground can be found (Ps 69:2). STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: foothold | es: donde-estar-en-pie | fr: de-se-tenir | de: foothold Ps 69:2

מַעֲמָסָה H4614 N-fs (1×)

burden, heavy stone; something difficult to lift or bear

Found only in Zechariah 12:3, this word describes Jerusalem as 'a burdensome stone' for all peoples—a stone so heavy that those who try to lift it will be severely injured. The imagery draws on the challenge of moving massive building stones or the sport of stone-lifting. What appears liftable proves crushing to those who attempt it, symbolizing the futility of opposing God's chosen city.

(1×) English and French both use 'burden/fardeau,' while Spanish chooses 'pesada' (heavy [stone]). The image in Zechariah is of a stone that invites lifting but exceeds the lifter's capacity, resulting in injury. This 'burden-stone' becomes a metaphor for Jerusalem's supernatural resilience against her enemies. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: burden | es: pesada | fr: fardeau | de: [מעמסה] Zech 12:3

מַעֲמַקִּים H4615 Prep-m / N-mp (5×)

depths, deep places — literal ocean depths or figurative depths of distress and anguish

Always plural, this noun evokes overwhelming depths — whether the literal floor of the sea or the figurative abyss of human suffering. The psalmist cries 'Out of the depths I call to you, O LORD' (Ps 130:1), one of Scripture's most beloved opening lines. Elsewhere waters threaten to engulf: 'I sink in deep mire where there is no foothold; I have come into deep waters' (Ps 69:2, 14). God's sovereign power dried up 'the depths of the sea' for Israel's exodus (Isa 51:10), and Tyre's commercial empire sank into 'the depths of the waters' (Ezek 27:34). French 'abîme' (abyss) and Spanish 'profundidades' both capture the terrifying immensity.

(5×) Literal ocean or sea depths. God made 'the depths of the sea a road' for the redeemed to cross (Isa 51:10), and Tyre was broken 'in the depths of the waters' (Ezek 27:34). Spanish 'en-las-profundidades-de' and French 'abîme' render the physical vastness of the sea floor, emphasizing both divine mastery over chaos waters and the finality of maritime destruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-the-depths-of-, depths-of-, from-the-depths | es: Desde-profundidades, en-las-profundidades-de, en-profundidades-de | fr: [מעמק], abîme, dans-profondeur | de: [במעמקי], [מעמקי], hinein-der-Tiefen-von- Ps 69:2; Ps 69:14; Ps 130:1; Isa 51:10; Ezek 27:34

מַעַן H4616 Prep (272×)

For the sake of, in order that; a preposition-conjunction expressing purpose, cause, or the beneficiary of an action.

A remarkably versatile function word, lemaan bridges purpose and cause in ways that keep translators on their toes. When God says he hardened Pharaoh's heart 'lemaan I may show these signs' (Exod 10:1), the meaning is clearly purposive — 'in order that.' But when Abraham pleads 'for the sake of fifty righteous' (Gen 18:24), the same word expresses beneficiary-cause — 'because of, on account of.' Many occurrences sit at the boundary between these two readings, especially in prophetic oracles. French afin que (purpose) versus a cause de (cause), and German damit versus um...willen, show how European languages split what Hebrew unifies in a single particle.

1. purpose: so that, in order that (196×) Purpose or result: 'so that, in order that' (196x). Introduces a clause expressing the intended goal or expected outcome of the action in the main clause. Genesis 12:13 — 'Say you are my sister, so that (lemaan) it may go well with me.' Genesis 18:19 — God chose Abraham 'in order that (lemaan) he may command his children.' Spanish para que, French afin que, and German damit all consistently mark the purposive reading. This is the most frequent function and the one closest to a pure conjunction. PURPOSE CONJUNCTION

en: for-sake-of, in-order-that, so-that | es: Para-que, para, para-que | fr: ainsi-ce, dans-order-ce, pour-cause-de | de: damit, damit-, fuer-sake-von Gen 12:13; Gen 18:19; Gen 27:25; Gen 37:22

2. for the sake of, because of (65×) Cause or beneficiary: 'for the sake of, because of, on account of' (65x). Prepositional use with pronominal suffixes or noun phrases specifying the person or cause motivating an action. Genesis 18:24 — 'Will you sweep away the place and not spare it for the sake of (lemaan) the fifty righteous?' 1 Kings 11:12–13 — 'for the sake of David your father... for the sake of Jerusalem.' Spanish por causa de, French pour cause de / a cause de, and German um...willen capture the causal-benefactive force. Often appears in divine speech explaining why God acts or refrains from acting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: For-the-sake-of, for-sake-of, for-the-sake-of | es: Por-causa-de, para-que, por-causa-de | fr: afin-que, pour-cause-de, à-cause-de | de: fuer-sake-von, um-, um-willen Gen 18:24; 1Kgs 8:41; 1Kgs 11:12; 1Kgs 11:13

3. for sake of / in order that (ambiguous) (11×) Ambiguous purpose-cause overlap (11x), where both purposive and causal readings are simultaneously valid and translators must choose. Ezekiel 21:10–15 is the key cluster: the sword is sharpened 'lemaan it may slaughter' — is this 'so that' (purpose) or 'because of' (the slaughter that motivated the sharpening)? The prophetic rhetoric deliberately exploits this ambiguity. French afin que and German um willen appear interchangeably in these contexts. Ezekiel 22:6 uses it similarly for the princes of Israel who shed blood — the lemaan clause hovers between motivation and result. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-sake-of, for-sake-of-, in-order-that | es: Para, para, para-que | fr: afin-que | de: um-willen Ezek 21:10; Ezek 21:15; Ezek 21:28; Ezek 22:6

יַעֲנִי H4617 N-ms (8×)

Answer, response, reply; purpose, intent

The noun מַעֲנֶה (ma'aneh), from the root עָנָה ('to answer'), denotes a verbal response or reply — the substance of what one says in return. Proverbs treasures this word: 'a soft answer turns away wrath' (Prov 15:1), and 'a word in its season, how good it is!' (Prov 15:23). In Job 32, the young Elihu waits for the friends' answer that never comes (32:3, 5), then speaks because their silence has left no reply. A single occurrence in Proverbs 16:4 stretches the word toward 'purpose' or 'intent' — 'the LORD has made everything for its purpose' — where the idea of an 'answer' becomes a fitting response built into creation's design.

1. answer, response, reply (7×) A verbal answer, response, or reply given in dialogue or discourse. In Proverbs 15:1 a 'gentle answer' (מַעֲנֶה־רָךְ) turns away wrath — one of the Bible's most memorable proverbs on the power of words. Proverbs 15:23 celebrates the joy of giving an apt reply, and Proverbs 16:1 observes that 'the answer of the tongue is from the LORD.' In Job 32:3 and 32:5, Elihu's frustration grows because Job's three friends could produce no מַעֲנֶה — no adequate response to refute Job. French 'réponse,' Spanish 'respuesta,' and German 'antwortete' all converge on the straightforward speech-reply meaning across these passages. ANSWER RESPONSE REPLY

en: an-answer, answer, answer-of | es: Respuesta, en-respuesta-de, respuesta | fr: dans-réponse, de-il-a-répondu, réponse | de: [במענה], von-antwortete Job 32:3; Job 32:5; Prov 15:1; Prov 15:23; Prov 16:1

2. purpose, intent (1×) An extended sense meaning 'purpose,' 'intent,' or 'fitting response' — the inherent design or appointed end of something. Attested only in Proverbs 16:4: 'The LORD has made everything לְמַעֲנֵהוּ' — 'for its purpose' or, more literally, 'for its answer,' as though each created thing carries within it a response to the Creator's design. English 'for his purpose' and Spanish 'para propósito suyo' confirm this specialized meaning. The semantic link to sense 1 is elegant: just as a verbal answer is the fitting response to a question, a thing's purpose is its fitting response to its maker's intent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-his-purpose | es: para-propósito-suyo | fr: son-réponse-lui | de: [למענהו] Prov 16:4

עֲנָן H4618 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3mp (3×)

A furrow or ridge in plowed ground, created by drawing the plow through the earth

This agricultural term appears in contexts describing the grooves plowed into soil. Though BDB discusses 'occupation' (from the Aramaic loan in Ecclesiastes), the actual occurrences relate to literal furrows in fields. The most vivid usage comes from Psalm 129, where oppressors 'plowed upon the back' of Israel, making long furrows—a metaphor of prolonged suffering. The field context in 1 Samuel 14 and the parallel furrow imagery in Psalm 129 confirm this agricultural reference.

(3×) A furrow or plowed ridge in the ground. In 1 Samuel 14:14, Jonathan and his armor-bearer strike down Philistines 'within about half a furrow's length in an acre of land'—using furrow as a unit of measure. Psalm 129:3 twice uses the image: 'The plowers plowed upon my back; they made long their furrows,' depicting Israel's suffering under oppression. The Spanish 'surco' and French 'sillon' both denote the groove left by a plow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (their-furrows), [ketiv:their-furrows], furrow-of | es: (surco-de-ellos), [surcos-de-ellos], surco-de | fr: furrow-de, sillon | de: (their-furrows), [ketiv:their-furrows], furrow-von 1Sam 14:14; Ps 129:3

מַעַץ H4619 N-proper-ms (1×)

Maats; a personal name in Judah's genealogy

This proper name appears once in 1 Chronicles 2:27 as a son in Judah's lineage through Jerahmeel. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to roots involving anger or counsel. The Septuagint renders it as 'Maas.' Such genealogical records preserve clan memory and tribal identity within Israel's complex family structure.

(1×) Translators typically transliterate personal names with minor variations: English 'Ma'ats,' Spanish 'Maats.' The name appears in the extended genealogy that traces secondary lines within Judah, situating this individual within Israel's tribal memory (1 Chr 2:27). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ma'ats | es: Maats | fr: [מעץ] | de: [מעץ] 1Chr 2:27

מַעֲצֵבָה H4620 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

place of pain, torment; where suffering is experienced

This noun occurs only in Isaiah 50:11, where God warns those who kindle their own fires that they will 'lie down in torment.' The word can mean either a place characterized by pain or pain itself. The prophetic context suggests a place of suffering as the consequence of self-reliance and rebellion. Those who light their own way rather than trusting God's servant end in anguish.

(1×) English 'in-torment' and Spanish 'en-dolor' (in pain) both capture the idea of entering or lying down in a state or place of suffering. The preposition 'to/in' suggests both destination and condition—the rebels will end up in a place defined by pain, the fruit of their own fire-kindling (Isa 50:11). PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: in-torment | es: en-dolor | fr: [למעצבה] | de: [למעצבה] Isa 50:11

מַעֲצָד H4621 Prep-b (2×)

an axe or cutting tool used for woodworking, including idol-making

This term for an axe or cutting implement appears in two prophetic denunciations of idolatry. Jeremiah 10:3 describes the craftsman cutting a tree 'from the forest with an axe' to fashion an idol. Isaiah 44:12 mentions the ironsmith with his axe (though some delete this verse as textually suspect). Both contexts mock the absurdity of idol-making: humans cut down a tree with a tool, then worship what they carve from it. The word specifically denotes a woodworking implement, likely an axe or adze used for shaping timber.

(2×) An axe or cutting tool used in woodworking and carving. The prophetic use is uniformly ironic: the very tool that enables idol production demonstrates the idol's creaturely nature. Jeremiah's fuller description shows the step-by-step process: felling the tree with the axe, then decorating the carved product with silver and gold. The Spanish 'azuela' (adze) and 'hacha' (axe) reflect the tool's function in shaping wood. The implements of idol-making become witnesses against idolatry itself. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13410 WITH 5 SENSES

en: an-axe, with-an-axe | es: con-la-azuela, hacha | fr: [במעצד], [מעצד] | de: [במעצד], [מעצד] Isa 44:12; Jer 10:3

מַעְצוֹר H4622 N-ms (1×)

restraint, hindrance; obstacle preventing action

Appearing only in 1 Samuel 14:6, this word expresses Jonathan's faith that 'the LORD has no restraint in delivering, whether by many or by few.' The noun denotes something that hinders or holds back action. Jonathan's declaration affirms that God faces no obstacle, no limiting factor in His power to save—numerical disadvantage means nothing to omnipotence.

(1×) English, French, and German all use 'restraint,' while Spanish offers 'impedimento' (impediment). Jonathan's bold assertion before attacking the Philistine garrison rests on the theological principle that God's saving power operates independently of human military strength or numbers (1 Sam 14:6). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11191 WITH 4 SENSES en: restraint | es: impedimento | fr: restraint | de: restraint 1Sam 14:6

מַעְצָר H4623 N-ms (1×)

restraint, self-control; governance over one's spirit

This word appears only in Proverbs 25:28, comparing a person without self-control to 'a city broken down, without walls.' The noun denotes the capacity to restrain or govern one's impulses, particularly one's spirit or temper. Just as walls protect a city from invasion, self-control protects a person from destructive passions. The absence of this restraint leaves one defenseless and vulnerable.

(1×) English 'restraint' and Spanish 'dominio' (mastery/control) capture the governing function. The Proverbs image likens internal discipline to civic fortification: without walls, a city falls to any invader; without self-governance, a person falls to every impulse (Prov 25:28). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11191 WITH 4 SENSES en: restraint | es: dominio | fr: מעצר | de: [מעצר] Prov 25:28

מַעֲקֶה H4624 N-ms (1×)

parapet, railing; protective barrier on a roof or height

Found only in Deuteronomy 22:8, this word designates the protective railing required on the edge of a flat roof. Ancient Israelite homes had flat roofs used for various activities, creating a danger of falls. The law mandates a parapet to prevent bloodguilt if someone should fall. This reflects Israel's ethical concern for the safety of others and accountability for preventable harm.

(1×) English, French, and German all transliterate or translate as 'parapet,' while Spanish uses 'barandilla' (railing). The Torah's requirement shows practical love of neighbor expressed in building codes—a parapet makes the roof safe for visitors and family members (Deut 22:8). BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: parapet | es: barandilla | fr: parapet | de: parapet Deut 22:8

מַעֲקֻשׁ H4625 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

crooked places, twisted paths; morally or physically bent things

This plural noun appears once in Isaiah 42:16, where God promises to make 'crooked places straight' for His people. The word denotes things twisted, bent, or perverse—the opposite of straight or level. In prophetic literature, this often carries moral connotations of injustice or corruption, though here it may describe difficult terrain. God's redemptive work includes straightening what is bent and making rough places smooth.

(1×) Spanish 'lo-torcido' (the twisted) and English 'crooked-places' both preserve the sense of deviation from straightness. The prophet contrasts these with 'level ground,' describing God's transformative guidance that removes obstacles and corrects distortions for those who follow Him (Isa 42:16). CROOKED PERVERTED

en: and-crooked-places | es: y-lo-torcido | fr: [ומעקשים] | de: [ומעקשים] Isa 42:16

מַעֲרֶה H4626 N-msc / 2fs (2×)

bare or open space; also nakedness or exposed place, used literally and figuratively

This noun denotes a bare, open, or exposed space. It appears in three contexts: the 'bare space of Geba' in Judges 20:33 (though this reading is textually uncertain), the 'clear space' on decorative plates in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:36), and Nahum's metaphor of exposing Nineveh's 'nakedness' as shameful punishment (3:5). The semantic range moves from neutral spatial openness to vulnerable exposure. The temple reference describes proportional decoration on bronze work, while Nahum employs the language of public humiliation, treating the city as a shamed woman whose exposure displays divine judgment.

(2×) A bare, open, or naked space, whether literal or metaphorical. The architectural use in 1 Kings describes available space on engraved plates for decoration—'according to the clear space on each.' Nahum's prophetic usage transforms the spatial concept into moral exposure: 'I will lift up your skirts over your face and show the nations your nakedness.' The term thus bridges literal openness and figurative vulnerability, a semantic flexibility characteristic of Hebrew spatial vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-space-of-, your-nakedness | es: como-espacio-de, desnudez-tuya | fr: comme-space-de-, espace | de: [מערך], wie-space-von- 1Kgs 7:36; Nah 3:5

מַעֲרָב H4627 Conj-w / N-mpc / 2fs (9×)

Merchandise, traded goods, wares — articles exchanged in commercial trade, used exclusively of Tyre in Ezekiel 27.

This masculine noun refers to merchandise or traded goods, derived from the root 'arav meaning 'to exchange' or 'to pledge.' All nine occurrences appear in a single chapter — Ezekiel 27 — the prophetic lament over Tyre's commercial empire. The chapter catalogs the dizzying variety of Tyre's trade networks: Tarshish brought silver and iron as your merchandise (v. 12-13), Judah traded wheat and honey (v. 17), and Arabia exchanged lambs and goats (v. 21). The repeated refrain 'your merchandise' builds toward the dramatic reversal in verses 27 and 34, where all of Tyre's wares sink into the heart of the seas.

merchandise, traded goods, wares (9×) Merchandise, traded goods, or wares — the articles exchanged in commercial transactions, always with a second-person feminine suffix referring to the city of Tyre. Spanish 'mercancia' and French 'marchandise' translate directly. All nine occurrences fall within Ezekiel 27, the prophetic oracle cataloging Tyre's vast trade empire. The word appears as a cognate accusative with the verb 'arav (v. 9, 27), reinforcing the etymological connection between exchange and the goods exchanged. The chapter builds from Tyre's glory — nations bringing their wares (vv. 13, 17, 19, 25) — to catastrophic reversal as merchandise and crew alike sink into the deep (vv. 27, 33, 34). MERCHANDISE WARES

en: and-your-merchandise, for-your-merchandise, your-merchandise | es: en-tu-mercancía, tu-mercancía, y-tus-mercancías | fr: et-marchandise, marchandise | de: dein-Handel, in-dein-Handel, und-Handel Ezek 27:9; Ezek 27:13; Ezek 27:17; Ezek 27:19; Ezek 27:25

מַעֲרָב H4628 Art / N-ms (14×)

West; the cardinal direction of the setting sun, used in geographic orientation and territorial descriptions.

A late Hebrew noun derived from the root 'arav ('to set,' of the sun), ma'arav literally means 'the place of setting.' It serves as the standard term for the cardinal direction west in post-exilic and Chronicles texts, paralleling mizrach ('east') in symmetrical directional pairs. Isaiah 45:6 draws on this pairing memorably: 'from the rising of the sun to its setting, there is none besides me.' Psalm 103:12 deploys the same polarity to measure the immeasurable distance God places between his people and their sins. The Arabic cognate maghrib, used today for Morocco and the evening prayer, preserves the same solar etymology.

west (14×) The cardinal direction west, conceived as the place where the sun sets. Used in geographic boundary descriptions and directional orientation, especially in Chronicles for temple assignments and territorial divisions (1 Chr 7:28; 12:16; 26:16, 18, 30). Paired with mizrach ('east') in cosmic and theological statements about God's universal sovereignty (Isa 43:5; 45:6; 59:19) and the completeness of divine forgiveness (Ps 103:12). Also in Daniel 8:5 for the direction from which Alexander's goat comes charging. WEST DIRECTION

en: and-from-its-setting, and-from-the-west, and-to-the-west | es: al-oeste, de-occidente, desde-el-occidente | fr: [וממערב], [וממערבה], [ממערב] | de: [המערב], [ולמערב], [וממערב] 1Chr 7:28; 1Chr 12:16; 1Chr 26:16; 1Chr 26:18; 1Chr 26:30

מַעֲרֶה H4629 Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

bare place, open space; exposed ground or clear area

This rare noun appears in Judges 20:33 in a difficult textual context, apparently referring to an open or exposed area near Gibeah. The word derives from a root meaning 'to be bare or naked,' suggesting a clear, unobstructed space—perhaps a field or plaza where troops could deploy. Some versions understand it as a place name (Maareh-geba), while others see it as describing the tactical ground.

(1×) English 'from-Maareh' and Spanish 'desde-prado-de' (from meadow of) reflect the interpretive difficulty—is this a toponym or a description? French and German treat it as a place name. The military context in Judges suggests Israelite troops emerging from an open area to engage Benjamin's forces (Judg 20:33). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Maareh | es: desde-prado-de- | fr: de-Maareh | de: von-Maareh Judg 20:33

מַעֲרָכָה H4630

row, rank, battle-line; arrangement in order (especially military formation)

This noun denotes an ordered arrangement, especially a battle-line or military formation. First Samuel 17 uses it repeatedly for the 'ranks' of Israel's army that Goliath defies—'the ranks of the living God' (v. 26). It can also mean a row or arrangement of lamps (Exodus 39:37, 'lamps arranged in a row'). The term captures the idea of deliberate ordering: soldiers standing in formation, lamps set in sequence, organized arrays. The phrase 'battle-line against battle-line' (1 Samuel 17:21) evokes the formal, almost ritualized confrontation of ancient Near Eastern warfare.

מְעָרָה H4631 N-fp (41×)

cave, cavern — a natural rock chamber used for shelter, burial, hiding, or as a den for beasts and robbers

Me'arah designates a natural underground hollow or rock shelter, appearing 41 times across narrative, prophetic, and poetic literature. In the patriarchal narratives, the cave of Machpelah (me'arat ham-makhpelah) serves as the family burial site purchased by Abraham (Gen 23:9, 19). Caves then become places of desperate refuge: Lot and his daughters flee to one after Sodom's destruction (Gen 19:30), five Amorite kings hide in the cave at Makkedah (Josh 10:16-27), Israelites shelter in caves from the Midianites (Judg 6:2), and David hides from Saul in the cave of Adullam (1 Sam 22:1) and at En-gedi (1 Sam 24:3-10). Elijah encounters God at a cave on Horeb (1 Kgs 19:9, 13). Jeremiah's famous 'den of robbers' (me'arat paritsim, Jer 7:11) — quoted by Jesus in the Temple cleansing — is literally 'cave of robbers,' preserving the concrete image.

cave, cavern, den (41×) A natural rock-hewn or subterranean chamber, used across Scripture for burial (the Machpelah cave, Gen 23:9-19), hiding and refuge from enemies (Josh 10:16-27; Judg 6:2; 1 Sam 13:6; 22:1; 24:3), divine encounter (Elijah at Horeb, 1 Kgs 19:9-13), and as a lair for beasts (Isa 32:14). Jeremiah's me'arat paritsim ('cave of robbers,' Jer 7:11) bridges literal and metaphorical usage. The multilingual glosses are remarkably consistent: Spanish 'cueva,' French 'caverne,' German 'Hoehle' — all indicating a single unified sense across all 41 occurrences. HOLES AND OPENINGS en: in-the-cave, the-cave, the-cave-of | es: En-la-cueva, cueva-de, en-la-cueva | fr: dans-caverne, dans-le-caverne, le-caverne | de: der-Hoehle, der-Höhle, die-Höhle Gen 19:30; Gen 23:9; Gen 23:11; Gen 23:17; Gen 23:19

מְעָרָה H4632 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
Mearah; a cave or cave-town in northern Canaan
This proper noun appears only in Joshua 13:4 in a list of unconquered territories. The name means 'cave' and may refer to a specific cave-town or region characterized by caves near Sidon in Phoenician territory. The Israelites did not fully occupy this northern area, which remained under Canaanite control. The name itself reflects the prominence of cave dwellings in the region's geography.

(1×) Translators handle this as a proper name with slight variations: English 'Mearah,' Spanish 'Meará,' French and German preserve the transliteration. The geographical reference marks the northern boundary of Israel's incomplete conquest, a cave-region that remained outside their control (Josh 13:4). HOLES AND OPENINGS en: and-Mearah | es: y-Meará | fr: et-Mearah | de: und-Mearah Josh 13:4

מַעֲרָךְ H4633 N-mpc (1×)
plans, arrangements; ordered thoughts or preparations of the mind Found only in Proverbs 16:1, this plural noun denotes the arrangements, plans, or ordered thoughts that a person devises. The proverb states, 'To man belong the plans of the heart, but the answer of the tongue is from the LORD.' This sets up a contrast between human initiative in planning and divine sovereignty in outcomes. We make our mental arrangements, but God determines what actually gets spoken and accomplished.

(1×) English 'plans-of' and Spanish 'planes-de' both capture the sense of deliberate mental ordering. The 'plans of the heart' are the internal preparations and schemes people devise, yet the proverb reminds us that execution and fruition depend on God's will, not merely human intention (Prov 16:1). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: plans-of | es: planes-de | fr: מערכי | de: [מערכי] Prov 16:1

מַעֲרָכָה H4634 Prep-m (20×)
A battle line or military formation; also a row or orderly arrangement of objects.
Derived from עָרַךְ (to arrange, set in order), this noun denotes something arranged in a line — most often a battle formation. In the David and Goliath narrative (1 Samuel 17), it appears repeatedly as the 'battle line' that Goliath defies and David runs toward. The plural מַעֲרָכוֹת describes the massed ranks of Israel or the Philistines as a fighting force. Beyond the battlefield, the word also describes any orderly arrangement — the lamps set in a row (Exodus 39:37) or the wood arranged on an altar (Judges 6:26). Spanish 'formación' and French 'bataille-ligne' reinforce the military core of this term.

1. battle line, military formation (17×) A battle line or military formation — the arranged rank of soldiers drawn up for combat. This is the dominant sense, covering all the 1 Samuel occurrences. In 1 Samuel 17:21, Israel and the Philistines each set 'battle line against battle line' (מַעֲרָכָה לִקְרַאת מַעֲרָכָה). The plural construct 'ranks of Israel' (1 Sam 17:10, 45) and 'ranks of the living God' (17:26, 36) show the word scaling from a physical formation to a theologically charged army. Spanish 'formación' and German 'Schlachtlinie' both preserve this martial sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (from-ranks-of), battle-line, battle-lines-of | es: a-la-formación, de-filas-de, de-la-formación | fr: (from-rangs-of), [מערכה], bataille-ligne | de: Schlacht-line, Schlacht-lines-von, [מערכה] 1Sam 4:2; 1Sam 4:12; 1Sam 4:16; 1Sam 17:8

2. row, orderly arrangement (3×) A row or orderly arrangement of objects, extending the root meaning of עָרַךְ beyond the military context. In Exodus 39:37 the 'lamps of the row' (נֵרוֹת הַמַּעֲרָכָה) describes the lampstand's lights arranged systematically. Judges 6:26 uses the word for wood arranged on an altar in proper order. This sense reminds us that the underlying concept is not violence but orderly arrangement — the battlefield usage is a specialized application of a broader spatial idea. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-the-arrangement, rows, the-arrangement | es: en-orden, hileras, la-disposición | fr: dans-le-arrangement, le-arrangement, rows | de: der-arrangement, in-der-arrangement, rows Exod 39:37; Lev 24:6; Judg 6:26

מַעֲרֶכֶת H4635 Conj-w / N-fsc (9×)
Row, arrangement; the ordered display of showbread in the tabernacle or temple, set in ritual rows before the LORD.
A technical cultic term for the ordered rows of bread set before God's presence in the sanctuary. The 'bread of the arrangement' (lechem ha-ma'arekhet) was a weekly ritual obligation, twelve loaves in two rows of six on the gold table (Lev 24:5-7). Chronicles and Nehemiah use the term for the ongoing temple service restored after exile. Spanish distinguishes 'la disposición' (the arrangement as system) from 'la hilera' (the physical row), mirroring the Hebrew word's two semantic emphases.

1. arrangement, ordered display (of showbread) (7×) The systematic cultic arrangement or ordered display of showbread in the tabernacle and temple. This sense emphasizes the ritual institution itself – the ongoing practice of setting out consecrated bread before the LORD. In 1 Chronicles 9:32 the Kohathites are charged with the 'bread of the arrangement,' and 2 Chronicles 13:11 invokes it as proof of Judah's faithful worship. Spanish 'la disposición' and 'la proposición' capture the institutional, systematic character; French uses 'rangée' to convey the orderly aspect. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-arrangement-of, and-rows-of, the-arrangement | es: la-disposición, la-proposición, y-disposición-de | fr: et-rangée, rangée | de: [המערכת], [ומערכת] 1Chr 9:32; 1Chr 23:29; 1Chr 28:16; 2Chr 2:4; 2Chr 13:11

2. row, line, rank (2×) A single row or line of objects arranged in physical order, focusing on the spatial configuration rather than the broader ritual system. Leviticus 24:6-7 specifies 'two rows, six to a row' and refers to frankincense placed 'on the row' as a memorial portion. Spanish shifts to 'hilera' (a file or rank), and English uses 'the-row,' both highlighting the concrete linear arrangement of individual loaves on the sacred table. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-row | es: la-hilera, por-hilera | fr: le-row | de: der-row Lev 24:6; Lev 24:7

מַעֲרֹם H4636 N-mpc / 3mp (1×)
naked ones, those without clothing; people in a state of exposure
This plural noun appears only in 2 Chronicles 28:15, describing Israelite captives who had been stripped by their captors. The word emphasizes their vulnerable, exposed condition—lacking basic clothing and dignity. Compassionate leaders from the northern kingdom clothed these 'naked ones,' gave them food and drink, anointed their wounds, and returned them to their families. This rare act of mercy across tribal divisions stands out in Israel's civil conflicts.

(1×) English 'their-naked-ones' and Spanish 'desnudos-de-ellos' (naked ones of them) both preserve the focus on people deprived of clothing. The narrative shows these exposed captives receiving merciful treatment—clothed, fed, and restored—reversing their shameful condition (2 Chr 28:15). NAKEDNESS AND EXPOSURE en: their-naked-ones | es: desnudos-de-ellos | fr: [מערמיהם] | de: [מערמיהם] 2Chr 28:15

מַעֲרָצָה H4637 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
terror, awful crash; violent shock or destruction
This noun occurs only in Isaiah 10:33, where it describes the terrifying crash as the LORD lops off the tree-crown of Assyria's pride. The word conveys both the sound and the impact of violent destruction—an awful shock that accompanies divine judgment. The metaphor pictures Assyria as a towering forest that God will cut down with terrifying force, reducing the proud empire to stumps.

(1×) English 'with-terror' and Spanish 'con-terror' both emphasize the fearful aspect of this violent act. The context describes God wielding judgment like an axe, and the crash of falling trees symbolizes the shock and awe of Assyria's sudden collapse under divine wrath (Isa 10:33). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-terror | es: con-terror | fr: [במערצה] | de: [במערצה] Isa 10:33

מַעֲרָת H4638 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Maarath; a town in the hill country of Judah
This place name appears once in Joshua 15:59 in the list of Judahite towns. The name may derive from the root for 'cave,' suggesting a settlement near caves or in cave-riddled terrain. The exact location is uncertain, though it belonged to the hill country district of Judah. The Septuagint renders it as 'Maarath' or 'Maroth.' Such town lists preserve the territorial allotments of Israel's tribes.

(1×) English 'Maarath,' Spanish 'Maarat,' and French/German preserve the transliteration with slight variation. The town name appears in the extended list of Judah's inheritance, marking one settlement among many in the central highlands (Josh 15:59). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Maarath | es: y-Maarat | fr: et-Maarath | de: und-Maarath Josh 15:59

מַעֲשֶׂה H4639 Prep-k / N-msc / 3ms (235×)
Deed, work, craftsmanship; spanning artisan handiwork, productive labor, human conduct, divine acts, and agricultural yield Ma'aseh derives from the root 'asah 'to do, make' and covers the full spectrum from divine creation to human craftsmanship to moral conduct. The tabernacle instructions are saturated with it — every woven curtain, hammered lampstand, and embroidered screen is described as ma'aseh (Exod 26-28). Yet the same word indicts human wickedness when Ezra confesses 'our evil ma'asim' (Ezr 9:13). Arabic distributes this across san'ah (craft), 'amal (labor), and fi'l (deed), while Korean uses jag-pum for products and haeng-wi for conduct. The word's range reveals a culture that saw continuity between making things and doing things — all purposeful human activity under one roof.

1. tabernacle craftsmanship (sacred artisan work) (80×)
Split from sense 113225. Criteria: Technical artisan work on sanctuary objects: curtains, altar, priestly garments; 'work of a skillful workman' formulas in Exodus tabernacle instructions en: work-of | es: Obra-de, la-obra-de, obra-de | fr: travail-de | de: Werk, Werk-von Gen 40:17; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36; Exod 27:4

2. work, labor, task (75×) Work, labor, or task as productive activity — the effort, occupation, or undertaking itself rather than its product. Anchors the Sabbath framework: 'six days you shall do your work' (Exod 23:12). Covers harvest labor ('the work of your hands,' Exod 23:16), Deuteronomy's blessings on enterprise (Deut 14:29; 16:15; 24:19), and post-exilic rebuilding efforts. Arabic 'amal 'labor' and Swahili kazi 'work' mark generic productive activity. Distinguished from sense 1 by focusing on the process rather than the product. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-work-of, and-work-of, by-work-of | es: con-la-obra-de, con-obra-de, la-obra | fr: dans-œuvre, et-oeuvre, et-œuvre | de: Werk, bei-Werk-von, der-Werk Exod 23:12; Exod 23:16; Deut 11:7; Deut 31:29

3. deed, act, conduct (44×) Deed, act, or conduct subject to moral evaluation — human behavior judged as righteous or wicked. Joseph accuses his brothers: 'What deed is this you have done?' (Gen 44:15). The Exodus covenant demands 'you shall not do according to their deeds' (Exod 23:24). Micah indicts Omri's 'ma'asim' as corrupt statecraft (Mic 6:16). Arabic fi'l/a'mal and Korean haeng-wi shift to ethical vocabulary, confirming the moral-evaluation register. This sense carries the weight of covenant accountability throughout the Deuteronomistic history. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: are-their-works, deed-of, deeds-his | es: el-hecho, en-tus-obras, la-obra | fr: actes-son, de-il-a-fait, de-œuvre | de: Tat, Taten-sein, Werk Gen 20:9; Gen 44:15; Exod 18:20; Exod 23:24; Lev 18:3

4. works of God (18×) The works or mighty acts of God — divine activity in creation, providence, and salvation history. Psalmic doxology celebrates: 'how great are your works!' (Ps 92:5; 104:24). Moses declares no god can match God's ma'asim (Deut 3:24). The phrase ma'aseh YHWH 'the work of the LORD' (Isa 5:12; 28:21) denotes God's sovereign intervention. Korean ju-ui eob-jeok-deul 'the Lord's achievements' and Arabic a'mal Allah 'works of God' mark the theological register. Distinguished from human deeds by the divine agent and the doxological context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-work, His-works, Your-works | es: Las-obras-de, como-obras-de-ti, como-tus-obras | fr: comme-Ton-actes, comme-œuvre, de-œuvre | de: Werk-, dein-Werk, der-Werk- Deut 3:24; Ps 33:4; Ps 66:3; Ps 86:8; Ps 92:5

5. work of hands (idols, manufactured objects) (13×)
Split from sense 113225. Criteria: Polemic phrase ma'aseh yadayim denoting idols or human-made objects in prophetic critique (Isa 2:8; Jer 1:16)
en: a-work-of, of-man, the-work-of | es: obra, obra-de | fr: de-faire, de-il-a-fait, oeuvre-de | de: Werk, Werk-von, der-Werk- Deut 4:28; Deut 27:15; 2Kgs 19:18; Ps 115:4; Ps 135:15

6. product, produce, yield (4×) Product, produce, or yield — the concrete output or result of labor, emphasizing what is produced rather than how. Ezekiel lists Damascus trading in 'the product of your hands' (Ezek 27:16, 18). Habakkuk laments that the olive tree's ma'aseh fails (Hab 3:17). Isaiah's potter metaphor asks whether the thing made can say to its maker 'he did not make me' (Isa 29:16). Korean so-chul 'produce' and Arabic masnu' 'manufactured thing' confirm the resultative focus. This is the most concretely material sense of the word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: of-its-maker, the-produce-of-, your-products | es: el-producto-de-, la-obra, tus-obras | fr: de-il-a-fait, oeuvre, œuvre | de: Werk, von-machte Isa 29:16; Ezek 27:16; Ezek 27:18; Hab 3:17

7. (1×) An obscure or contextually ambiguous usage, as in 1 Samuel 20:19 where Jonathan tells David to go to 'the place where you hid on the day of the ma'aseh' — likely 'the affair' or 'the incident,' referring to a specific prior event. Spanish el asunto and German der Tat both translate as 'the matter/deed,' treating it as a particular past event rather than a general category. This rare contextual sense functions almost as a pronoun for a known incident. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-deed | es: el-asunto | fr: le-acte | de: der-Tat 1Sam 20:19

מַעֲשֵׂיָהוּ H4640 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Maasai; a priestly name, variant of Maaseiah
This personal name occurs once in 1 Chronicles 9:12, identifying a priest in post-exilic Jerusalem. It appears to be a shortened form of Maaseiah, which means 'work of the LORD.' The genealogical list in Chronicles traces priestly families who resettled in Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile, establishing continuity with pre-exilic worship. Such names testify to families' identity and divine calling.

(1×) English 'Maasai' and Spanish 'Maasai' both transliterate the name consistently. The priestly genealogy establishes this individual's lineage and role in the restored temple service, linking post-exilic worship to Israel's ancestral priestly orders (1 Chr 9:12). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Maasay | es: y-Maasai | fr: [ומעשׂי] | de: [ומעשׂי] 1Chr 9:12

מַעֲשִׂיָהוּ H4641 N-proper-ms (23×)
Maaseiah — 'work of Yah,' a theophoric name borne by numerous priests, Levites, and officials Meaning 'work of Yahweh,' Maaseiah (מַעֲשִׂיָה / מַעֲשִׂיָהוּ) is one of the most frequently recurring personal names in the Hebrew Bible, borne by at least a dozen distinct individuals spanning the monarchic and post-exilic periods. It appears for Levitical musicians under David (1 Chr 15:18, 20), military commanders under Joash (2 Chr 23:1), officials of Josiah (2 Chr 34:8), and multiple priests in Jeremiah's day (Jer 21:1; 29:25; 37:3). After the exile it recurs for several men in Ezra and Nehemiah's reforms. The theophoric element -yahu testifies to families who confessed Yahweh's sovereign activity.

Maaseyah (proper name) (23×) Theophoric name from מַעֲשֶׂה ('work') plus Yah. Borne by Levitical musicians (1 Chr 15:18, 20), a captain under Joash (2 Chr 23:1), a prince's father slain by Zichri (2 Chr 28:7), priests in Jeremiah's day (Jer 21:1; 37:3), and various post-exilic men in the Ezra-Nehemiah community. Spanish 'Maaseías' and French 'Maaséja' preserve the theophoric form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Maaseiah, Maaseyah, Maaseyahu | es: Maaseyah, Maaseyahu, Maaseías | fr: Maaséja, et-Maaséja | de: Maaseja, [ומעשיהו], und-Maaseja 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:20; 2Chr 23:1; 2Chr 26:11; 2Chr 28:7

מַעֲשַׂקָּה H4642 N-fp (2×)

extortionate acts, violent oppression, or unjust exactions of wealth

This feminine plural noun describes acts of extortion or oppression. Proverbs 28:16 warns that a ruler 'great in extortions' will have shortened days, contrasting violent gain with righteous longevity. Isaiah 33:15 blesses the one who 'shakes his hands from holding the gain of extortions,' depicting righteous refusal of ill-gotten wealth. Both texts link extortionate practices with moral corruption and divine judgment. The word captures not mere theft but systematic oppression of the vulnerable for financial gain, a sin repeatedly condemned by the prophets.

(2×) Acts of extortion or violent oppression, particularly economic exploitation. The Proverbs context pairs 'great in extortions' with lack of understanding, suggesting that oppressive rulers act foolishly as well as wickedly. Isaiah's righteous person physically shakes his hands free from extortion's gain, a vivid gesture of moral refusal. The Spanish glosses ('extorsiones,' 'opresiones') and French parallel capture the coercive economic violence inherent in the term. This is wealth gained by crushing others, a practice antithetical to covenant justice. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: of-oppressions | es: extorsiones, opresiones | fr: [מעשקות], מעשקות | de: [מעשקות] Prov 28:16; Isa 33:15

מַעֲשֵׂר H4643 N-mpc / 2mp (32×)

Tithe or tenth part; a sacred tenth of produce given to God or the Levites, or simply a numerical fraction.

Derived from the root for 'ten,' this noun denotes the practice of setting apart one-tenth for sacred purposes. Abraham gave Melchizedek a tithe of everything (Gen 14:20), and the Mosaic law formalized the system for supporting the Levites (Num 18:21), maintaining the sanctuary, and providing for the poor (Deut 14:28). Malachi's famous rebuke — 'Bring the full tithe into the storehouse' (Mal 3:10) — shows how deeply the concept was woven into covenant faithfulness. In Ezekiel's visionary measurements (45:11, 14), the word simply means a tenth as a unit of quantity, without cultic overtones.

1. tithe, religious tenth offering (30×) A tenth portion of produce, livestock, or income consecrated as a religious offering to God or designated for the Levites, covering 30 of 32 occurrences. From Abraham's voluntary gift to Melchizedek (Gen 14:20) through the Levitical regulations (Lev 27:30-32; Num 18:21-26) to Malachi's call to faithfulness (3:8-10). All major translations render it with dedicated cultic terms: 'diezmo' (Spa), 'dîme' (Fra), 'Zehnte' (Deu). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-tithe-of, and-tithe-of, the-tithe | es: El-diezmo, diezmo-de, el-diezmo | fr: dîme, dîme-de, et-dîme | de: Zehnt, Zehnte-von, [ומעשר] Gen 14:20; Lev 27:30; Lev 27:31; Lev 27:32; Num 18:21

2. tenth part, fraction (2×) A purely quantitative fraction meaning one-tenth, used in Ezekiel's temple-vision measurements where a homer and a bath are subdivided (Ezek 45:11, 14). Spanish shifts to 'décima de,' French to 'de dix,' signaling the non-cultic, arithmetical sense distinct from the religious tithe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tenth-of | es: décima-de | fr: de-dix | de: [מעשר] Ezek 45:11; Ezek 45:14

מֹף H4644 N-proper-fs (1×)

Memphis; the ancient capital of Lower Egypt

This place name refers to the great Egyptian city Memphis (Egyptian Men-nefer), which served as Egypt's capital for much of its history. Located south of the Nile Delta, Memphis was a center of power, culture, and idolatry. The prophets pronounce judgment on this proud city, predicting its downfall and desolation. Hosea 9:6 mentions Memphis as a place where Israelites would be buried in exile—an ironic reversal of Egypt's monumental burial culture.

(1×) English 'Memphis,' Spanish 'Menfis,' and French 'Memphis' all identify the famous Egyptian capital. The prophetic references consistently portray Memphis as representing Egypt's pride and power, destined for divine humiliation. Israel's association with Memphis in exile represents national disgrace (Hos 9:6). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Memphis | es: Menfis | fr: Memphis | de: [מֹף] Hos 9:6

מִפְגָּע H4645 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

target, mark; object of aim or attack

This noun appears only in Job 7:20, where Job asks God, 'Why have you made me your target?' The word denotes something aimed at, a mark for arrows or assault. Job feels singled out for divine attack, as if God has set him up as a target for affliction. This captures Job's anguished sense of being specifically chosen for suffering, unable to understand why God would focus hostile attention on a mortal.

(1×) English 'as-target' and Spanish 'como-blanco' (as target/bull's-eye) both preserve the archery metaphor. Job's rhetorical question expresses his bewilderment at becoming the object of God's apparent hostility, as though set up for divine target practice (Job 7:20). STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: as-target | es: como-blanco | fr: à-למפגע | de: [למפגע] Job 7:20

מַפָּח H4646 N-msc (1×)

breathing out, expiring; the final breath of life

This noun occurs only in Job 11:20, where Zophar warns the wicked that 'the expiring of life will be their hope'—meaning death is all they can look forward to. The word literally denotes the breathing out or exhaling of the life-breath, the moment when breath departs and life ends. In ancient physiology, breath was synonymous with life itself, so its final exhalation marked the transition to death.

(1×) Spanish 'será-el-último-suspiro-del' (will be the last sigh of) beautifully captures the dying breath imagery. The phrase 'breathing out of life' describes expiration in both senses—breathing out and dying. Zophar uses this to depict the hopelessness awaiting the wicked (Job 11:20). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: breath- | es: será-el-último-suspiro-del | fr: מפח | de: von-Falle Job 11:20

מַפֻּחַ H4647 N-ms (1×)

bellows; instrument for blowing air to intensify fire

This word appears only in Jeremiah 6:29, in a metallurgical metaphor for failed prophetic ministry. The prophet pictures himself as a refiner trying to purify Israel, but 'the bellows blow fiercely, the lead is consumed by the fire'—yet the refining fails because the wicked are not removed. Bellows were essential for achieving the high temperatures needed to smelt and refine metal. Their fierce blowing represents prophetic intensity that nonetheless fails to purify a rebellious people.

(1×) English and Spanish both use 'bellows/el-fuelle,' the standard term for the air-blowing device. Jeremiah's metaphor draws on the refining process: despite maximum heat (fierce bellows), the ore refuses to yield pure metal because the impurities are too deeply embedded—Israel's wickedness resists even intense prophetic fire (Jer 6:29). BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: bellows | es: el-fuelle | fr: [מפח] | de: [מפח] Jer 6:29

מְרִיב בַּעַל H4648 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)

Mephibosheth (Merib-baal) — son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul, lame in both feet, shown loyalty by David

Known in Chronicles by the older form Merib-baal ('Baal is my advocate,' 1 Chr 8:34; 9:40), this figure's name was altered in Samuel to Mephibosheth, replacing the theophoric element 'baal' with 'bosheth' (shame) — a scribal practice reflecting later theological discomfort with Baal-names. Crippled in both feet after a childhood fall (2 Sam 4:4), he became the object of David's covenant loyalty to Jonathan: restored to Saul's estate, given a place at the royal table (2 Sam 9), yet later entangled in the Absalom crisis through his servant Ziba's treachery (2 Sam 16; 19). His story is one of vulnerability, loyalty, and political complexity.

Mephibosheth (15×) The proper name Mephibosheth (מְפִיבֹשֶׁת), also called Merib-baal (מְרִיב בַּעַל) in 1 Chronicles 8:34 and 9:40, identifying the son of Jonathan and grandson of King Saul. The name shift from Merib-baal to Mephibosheth reflects a deliberate scribal substitution of 'bosheth' (shame) for the Canaanite divine name 'baal.' Multilingual translations consistently render the name as Mephibosheth or Mefiboshet across English, Spanish, French, and German. His narrative arc in 2 Samuel 4, 9, 16, 19, and 21 centers on David's covenantal kindness to Jonathan's disabled heir. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mefiboshet, Mephi-, Mephi-Bosheth | es: Mefi-, Mefi-boshet, Mefiboset | fr: Mefiboshet, Mephi-, Mephi-Bosheth | de: Mefiboshet, Mephi-, Mephi-Bosheth 2Sam 4:4; 2Sam 9:6; 2Sam 9:10; 2Sam 9:11

מֻפִּים H4649 N-proper-ms (1×)

Muppim; a son of Benjamin, clan founder

This personal name appears only in Genesis 46:21 as one of Benjamin's sons who went down to Egypt with Jacob's family. The name's meaning is uncertain. In 1 Chronicles 7:12, a variant 'Shuppim' appears in Benjamin's genealogy, suggesting textual fluidity in these clan names. Such variations may reflect different clan traditions or scribal updating of archaic forms.

(1×) English 'Muppim,' Spanish 'Mupim,' French and German 'Muppim' all transliterate the name with minor variation. The Genesis genealogy includes this figure among the seventy who entered Egypt, establishing his role as an ancestral clan head within Benjamin's tribe (Gen 46:21). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Muppim | es: Mupim | fr: Muppim | de: Muppim Gen 46:21

מִפְּיץ H4650 N-ms (1×)

club, war hammer; shattering weapon

This noun appears twice with uncertain meaning—in Nahum 2:2 and Proverbs 25:18. Modern scholars often emend it to 'club' or 'hammer,' understanding it as a weapon that shatters or scatters. Proverbs compares a false witness to 'a club, a sword, and a sharp arrow'—instruments of violence and harm. The image conveys how destructive dishonest testimony can be, crushing innocent people like a war hammer.

(1×) English 'a-club' and Spanish 'Maza' (mace/club) both understand the term as a blunt weapon. The Proverbs context groups it with other weapons to illustrate the violent damage caused by false witness—like being struck with a hammer, run through with a sword, or pierced with an arrow (Prov 25:18). SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: a-club | es: Maza | fr: מפיץ | de: [מפיץ] Prov 25:18

מַפָּל H4651 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

refuse or fallen parts; specifically grain chaff or drooping flesh

This word denotes something that falls or hangs down, used in two distinct contexts. Amos 8:6 speaks of selling 'the refuse of wheat'—the chaff, broken kernels, or lowest grade grain that falls through the sieve, representing extreme exploitation of the poor. Job 41:23 (41:15 English) describes 'the hanging folds of flesh' on Leviathan, the drooping muscular layers that make the creature's body impenetrable. The common thread is downward-hanging or fallen material, whether agricultural refuse or anatomical folds.

(2×) Fallen or hanging parts, whether grain refuse or bodily folds. The Amos passage condemns merchants who 'sell the refuse of the wheat' to the poor, profiting from grain so inferior it has fallen through the winnowing process. Job's description of Leviathan emphasizes invulnerability: even the 'hanging parts of his flesh' are firm and immovable. The semantic range from agricultural waste to anatomical description shows how Hebrew concrete vocabulary moves fluidly between domains, united by the core image of something pendant or fallen. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: The-folds-of, and-the-refuse-of- | es: Pliegues-de, y-el-desecho-del | fr: et-lambeau, מפלי | de: [ומפל], [מפלי] Job 41:23; Amos 8:6

מִפְלָאָה H4652 N-fpc (1×)

wonders, marvelous works; acts of extraordinary character

This plural noun appears only in Job 37:16 in a textually uncertain passage, apparently referring to God's wondrous works in nature, particularly cloud formations. The word derives from a root meaning 'to be extraordinary or difficult.' Elihu is calling Job's attention to the marvels of God's providential control over weather—the 'wonders' of the one perfect in knowledge. Some scholars emend the text, but the sense of divine marvels fits the context well.

(1×) English 'the-wonders-of' and Spanish 'maravillas-de' (marvels of) both capture the sense of extraordinary phenomena. Elihu's speech emphasizes God's wisdom displayed in meteorological wonders—clouds, lightning, storms—that demonstrate knowledge and power far beyond human comprehension (Job 37:16). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-wonders-of | es: maravillas-de | fr: מפלאות | de: [מפלאות] Job 37:16

מִפְלָגָה H4653 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

divisions, courses; organizational groups or classes

This plural noun occurs only in 2 Chronicles 35:12, describing how the Passover offerings were distributed 'according to the divisions of the fathers' houses.' The word denotes organizational groupings or courses, likely referring to the divisions by which families or clans received their portions of the sacrifices. This reflects the orderly administration of worship under Josiah's reform, ensuring proper distribution according to tribal and family structure.

(1×) English 'to-divisions-of' and Spanish 'a-divisiones-de' (to divisions of) both preserve the sense of organized groupings. The Chronicler's account emphasizes the careful ordering of Josiah's Passover, with offerings distributed systematically to family divisions rather than in chaos (2 Chr 35:12). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-divisions-of | es: a-divisiones-de | fr: [למפלגות] | de: [למפלגות] 2Chr 35:12

מַפָּלָה H4654a N-fs (1×)

ruin, heap of ruins; destroyed city reduced to rubble

This noun appears only in Isaiah 17:1, in the oracle against Damascus: 'Behold, Damascus will cease to be a city and will become a heap of ruins.' The word denotes the state of complete destruction, a city reduced to a pile of rubble. This prophetic judgment envisions the proud Syrian capital demolished and abandoned, transformed from thriving metropolis to desolate ruin-heap.

(1×) English and Spanish both use 'ruins/ruinas,' the standard term for destroyed buildings. Isaiah's oracle depicts Damascus's utter devastation—no longer functioning as a city but collapsed into a mere mound of stones, a monument to divine judgment (Isa 17:1). DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: ruins | es: ruinas | fr: [מפלה] | de: [מפלה] Isa 17:1

מַפֵּלָה H4654b Prep-l / N-fs (2×)

a heap of ruins, a city overthrown and reduced to rubble

Isaiah uses this feminine noun twice to describe urban destruction. In 23:13, Babylon reduces Tyre to ruins, and in 25:2, God transforms fortified cities into rubble heaps. Both passages emphasize total devastation: the city becomes 'a ruin,' no longer a city at all. The word conveys not partial damage but complete overthrow, reducing human achievement to debris. Isaiah's vision of divine judgment includes this radical uncreating of urban centers, a reversal of civilization itself as proud cities return to formless heaps.

(2×) A ruin-heap, the collapsed remains of a destroyed city. Isaiah 23:13 describes the Chaldeans setting up siege towers and stripping palaces bare, leaving Tyre 'a ruin.' The parallel in 25:2 makes the transformation explicit: 'You have made a city a heap, a fortified city a ruin.' The Spanish 'ruina(s)' precisely captures this state of collapse. Both occurrences come in oracles of judgment, where divine or human warfare reduces thriving urban centers to desolate mounds, a common fate in the ancient Near East and a prophetic sign of hubris undone. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: a-citadel, for-ruin | es: en-ruina, en-ruinas | fr: [למפלה] | de: [למפלה] Isa 23:13; Isa 25:2

מִפְלָט H4655 N-ms (1×)

escape, place of escape; deliverance or refuge from danger

This word occurs only in Psalm 55:8, where the psalmist longs to 'hasten to my escape from the raging wind and tempest.' The noun can mean either the act of escaping or a place of escape. The context suggests flight from overwhelming danger, seeking a safe haven away from conspiracies and violence. Some interpret it as 'deliverer' rather than 'escape,' but the sense of refuge from storm imagery fits the parallel structure well.

(1×) English 'my-escape' and Spanish 'escape' both emphasize the idea of getting away or finding refuge. The psalmist yearns to flee like a dove to wilderness safety, away from the social and political storms threatening to destroy him (Ps 55:8). GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: my-escape | es: escape | fr: de-délivrer | de: mein-escape Ps 55:8

מִפְלֶצֶת H4656 N-fs (4×)

horrid or abominable thing (idol)

A term for something hideous or horrifying, used specifically to describe an abominable idol made by King Asa's mother Maacah for Asherah worship (1 Kings 15:13, 2 Chronicles 15:16). Asa's reform included cutting down and burning this 'horrid thing,' demonstrating his thoroughgoing commitment to purge idolatry even when it meant confronting his own mother's apostasy. The word conveys not just moral wrongness but visceral revulsion—something that makes observers shudder.

(4×) A horrid or abominable object, specifically an idolatrous image so offensive it provokes shuddering. The term appears only in the account of Asa's reforms, describing the idol his grandmother/mother made for Asherah. The multilingual glosses ('horror,' 'abominable image,' 'ídolo horrible') capture both the religious offense and the emotional repulsion. The word itself derives from a root suggesting trembling or shuddering, making it apt for something that violates sacred boundaries so grotesquely it provokes physical recoil. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: a-horror, abominable-image, her-abominable-image | es: su-ídolo-horrible, un-ídolo-horrible, ídolo-horrible | fr: [מפלצת], [מפלצתה], sa-horror | de: [מפלצת], [מפלצתה], ein-horror 1Kgs 15:13; 2Chr 15:16

מִפְלָשׁ H4657 N-mpc (1×)

balancings, spreadings; the hovering or suspending of clouds

This rare noun appears only in Job 37:16, in Elihu's speech about God's wisdom displayed in weather phenomena. The word apparently describes the spreading out or balancing of clouds in the sky—how they hang suspended and spread across the heavens. This may refer to the visual wonder of cloud formations or the physics of how clouds float and spread. Some scholars emend to 'spreadings' to match 36:29, but the image of balanced suspension fits the context of divine marvels.

(1×) English 'the-balancings-of' and Spanish 'balanceos-de' (balancings of) both preserve the sense of suspension or equilibrium. Elihu marvels at how clouds are poised and spread in the sky, a phenomenon demonstrating the perfect knowledge of the God who governs atmospheric physics (Job 37:16). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-balancings-of- | es: balanceos-de- | fr: מפלשי | de: [מפלשי] Job 37:16

מַפֶּלֶת H4658 N-fsc / 3ms (8×)

Downfall, ruin, overthrow; a carcass or fallen body

The noun מַפֶּלֶת derives from the root נפל ('to fall') and denotes what results from a catastrophic fall. In Ezekiel's oracles against Tyre and Egypt, it recurs as a prophetic keyword for political overthrow and national ruin — 'at the sound of your downfall' (Ezek 26:15). The word carries a visceral physicality: nations tremble, coastlands shake, armies collapse. In its single concrete occurrence, however, it means something strikingly different — the carcass of the lion Samson had killed (Judg 14:8), where Spanish 'el cadaver de' and German 'Kadaver von' confirm a dead body rather than an abstract collapse.

1. fall, downfall, ruin (7×) The dominant sense of fall, downfall, ruin, or overthrow — describing the catastrophic collapse of a nation, king, or wicked person. All seven occurrences appear in prophetic or wisdom contexts: Ezekiel's oracles against Tyre (26:15, 18; 27:27) and Egypt (31:13, 16; 32:10), and the proverb that the wicked witness their own downfall (Prov 29:16). Arabic suqut and Spanish caida/ruina consistently point to political or moral ruin. The pronominal suffixes vary (your-fall, its-fall, their-fall) but the underlying sense is unified. FALL DOWNFALL RUIN

en: at-their-fall, its-fall, your-downfall | es: en-su-caída, su-caída, su-ruina | fr: chute, dans-leur-במפלתם-eux | de: [במפלתם], [מפלתו], [מפלתך] Prov 29:16; Ezek 26:15; Ezek 26:18; Ezek 27:27; Ezek 31:13

2. carcass, fallen body (1×) A concrete, physical sense: a carcass or fallen body, attested only in Judg 14:8 where Samson returns to find bees and honey in the mappelet of the lion he had torn apart. The multilingual evidence diverges sharply from sense 1 — English 'carcass-of,' Spanish 'el cadaver de,' French 'carcass de' — marking a dead animal body rather than national ruin. BDB lists this as the primary sense historically, though by frequency it is the rarer usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: carcass-of | es: el-cadáver-de | fr: carcass-de | de: Kadaver-von Judg 14:8

מִפְעָל H4659a N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

works, things made; creative productions or accomplishments

This plural noun appears only in Proverbs 8:22, where Wisdom personified declares, 'The LORD possessed me at the beginning of his way, before his works of old.' The word denotes things made or produced, creative works or accomplishments. In this context, it refers to God's ancient creative acts—Wisdom existed before any of the cosmos came into being. This establishes Wisdom's primordial status and intimate role in creation.

(1×) English 'His-works' and Spanish 'obras-de-él' (works of him) both capture the sense of divine creative products. Wisdom's self-testimony places her before all of God's making, prior even to the first acts of creation—she precedes and participates in all God's works (Prov 8:22). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-works | es: obras-de-él | fr: son-מפעליו-lui | de: [מפעליו] Prov 8:22

מִפְעָלָה H4659b N-fpc (2×)

deeds or works, specifically the mighty acts of God displayed in creation and redemption

This feminine plural noun appears in two psalms of praise, both celebrating God's works. Psalm 46:8 calls worshipers to 'come, behold the works of the LORD, what desolations he has brought on the earth'—a paradoxical praise of divine judgment. Psalm 66:5 invites, 'Come and see the works of God; awesome is he in his deeds toward the children of man.' The term focuses on observable divine actions, what God has done in history and creation. The psalmists summon audiences to witness theology—not merely to hear about God but to see his interventions.

(2×) The works or deeds of God, especially his mighty acts in history and creation. Both Psalm occurrences function as doxological summons: 'Come, see what God has done.' Psalm 46 emphasizes God's sovereignty over nations and warfare, while Psalm 66 marvels at terrible/awesome deeds toward humanity, likely including the Exodus. The plural form suggests multiple acts forming a cumulative testimony. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'works' or 'deeds,' reflecting the concrete action-focused theology of Hebrew psalmody. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-works-of, works-of | es: obras-de | fr: de-action | de: Werke-von, der-Werke-von Ps 46:8; Ps 66:5

מִפֵּץ H4660 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

shattering weapon, instrument of destruction; tool for breaking

This noun occurs only in Ezekiel 9:2, describing the six executioners who come with 'weapons of destruction in their hands.' The word denotes an implement designed to shatter or smash—a club, axe, or other lethal tool. These figures represent divine agents of judgment who will execute God's wrath on Jerusalem's idolaters. The 'shattering weapon' symbolizes the violence and thoroughness of the coming destruction.

(1×) English 'shattering-of-him' preserves the breaking/smashing aspect, while Spanish 'destrucción-de-él' (destruction of him) and French 'massacre' emphasize the lethal outcome. Ezekiel's vision portrays these angelic executioners carrying implements designed to kill, executing divine judgment on the city's guilty inhabitants (Ezek 9:2). BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: shattering-of-him | es: destrucción-de-él | fr: massacre | de: [מִפְצֹר] Ezek 9:2

מַפֵּץ H4661 N-ms (1×)

war club, shattering weapon; instrument used in battle to break enemies

This noun appears only in Jeremiah 51:20, where God addresses Babylon: 'You are my war club, my weapon of battle; with you I shatter nations.' The word denotes a heavy club or hammer used to crush and shatter. God ironically identifies Babylon as His instrument for executing judgment on other nations—the very empire that will itself be shattered. The imagery conveys both power and violence, the blunt-force crushing of military conquest.

(1×) English 'a-war-club' and Spanish 'martillo' (hammer) both capture the heavy shattering weapon. Jeremiah's oracle reveals the paradox of Babylon's role: chosen as God's club to break nations, yet destined to be broken in turn when its usefulness ends (Jer 51:20). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11984 WITH 3 SENSES

en: a-war-club- | es: martillo | fr: [מִפְּצִי] | de: [מִפְּצִי] Jer 51:20

מִפְקָד H4662 N-msc (4×)

census, muster, appointment, appointed place

A term related to counting, appointing, or designating, with applications to military census and sacred appointments. It appears in the parallel accounts of David's census (2 Samuel 24:9, 1 Chronicles 21:5), recording the military muster of Israel. It describes Hezekiah's administrative appointment of Levites for temple service (2 Chronicles 31:13). In Ezekiel's temple vision, it designates an appointed place within the sacred precinct for disposing of sin offering remains (Ezekiel 43:21).

(4×) A muster or census of people, an administrative appointment, or a designated place, depending on context. The cross-linguistic glosses show the semantic range: 'enrollment/census' (counting people), 'appointment' (administrative designation), 'appointed place' (spatial allocation). The unifying concept is formal designation—whether counting military-age men, appointing officials to duties, or marking out sacred space for specific ritual purposes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-appointment-of, enrollment-of-, in-appointed-place-of | es: censo-de, censo-de-, en-lugar-señalado-de | fr: [בְּמִפְקַד], [מִפְקַד], registration-de | de: [בְּמִפְקַד], [מִפְקַד], registration-von 2Sam 24:9; 1Chr 21:5; 2Chr 31:13; Ezek 43:21

מִפְקָד H4663 Art / N-ms (1×)

Muster Gate; gate in Jerusalem's wall, possibly for military assembly

This term appears only in Nehemiah 3:31, referring to 'the Muster Gate' in Jerusalem's wall. The name suggests a gate associated with military muster or appointed assembly—possibly where troops gathered for inspection or deployment. The exact location is uncertain, though it was part of the wall circuit that Nehemiah's teams rebuilt. Such named gates served both functional and symbolic roles in ancient cities.

(1×) English 'the-Muster' and Spanish 'la-inspección' (the inspection) both reflect the military/administrative function. The gate name likely commemorates its role as a gathering point for census-taking, troop formation, or official appointments—a place where order and readiness were established (Neh 3:31). TENT OF MEETING

en: the-Muster | es: la-inspección | fr: [הַמִּפְקָד] | de: [הַמִּפְקָד] Neh 3:31

מִפְרָץ H4664 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

landings, harbors; coastal places where ships dock

This plural noun appears only in Judges 5:17, in Deborah's victory song, where she asks, 'Why did Dan remain with the ships? Asher sat still at his landings.' The word apparently refers to harbors, docks, or landing places along the coast where ships come to shore. The Song criticizes these coastal tribes for staying safely at their ports rather than joining the battle against Sisera—commercial interests trumped covenant obligation.

(1×) English 'his-landings' and Spanish 'sus-puertos' (his ports) both identify maritime facilities. The poetic rebuke highlights Dan and Asher's comfortable coastal position—they remained at their secure harbors engaged in shipping rather than risking themselves in inland warfare (Judg 5:17). SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: his-landings | es: sus-puertos | fr: son-landings | de: sein-landings Judg 5:17

מִפְרֶקֶת H4665 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

neck; part of body connecting head to torso, especially the back of the neck

This noun occurs only in 1 Samuel 4:18, describing how Eli 'fell backward from his seat beside the gate, and his neck was broken and he died.' The word specifically denotes the neck as the dividing point between head and body. The elderly priest's fatal fall upon hearing of the ark's capture represents the shattering of Israel's spiritual leadership. The broken neck symbolizes the broken covenant relationship.

(1×) English 'his-neck' and Spanish 'su-cerviz' (his neck/nape) both identify the body part that fractured in Eli's fall. The neck-breaking represents both literal cause of death and symbolic judgment—the heavy, aged priest cannot bear the weight of Israel's disaster (1 Sam 4:18). NECK (BODY PART)

en: his-neck | es: su-cerviz | fr: son-cou | de: sein-neck 1Sam 4:18

מִפְרָשׂ H4666 N-mpc (2×)

something spread out; specifically a sail or the spreading of clouds

This noun denotes something spread or stretched out, appearing in two poetic texts. Ezekiel 27:7 describes Tyre's trade ships: 'Fine embroidered linen from Egypt was your sail, spread out to be your banner.' Job 36:29 asks rhetorically, 'Can anyone understand the spreading of the clouds, the thunderings of his pavilion?'—and possibly 37:16 as well. The maritime and meteorological uses share the image of expansive spreading: sails catching wind, clouds covering sky. Both contexts evoke majesty, whether commercial splendor or divine power.

(2×) A spreading or something spread out, used for sails and cloud formations. The Ezekiel passage vividly depicts Tyre's maritime glory: Egyptian linen spread as sails, functioning both practically (catching wind) and symbolically (banner/ensign). Job's meteorological use asks who can comprehend the vast spreading of clouds, part of a larger reflection on God's incomprehensible governance of nature. The Hebrew root idea is expansion or stretching, whether fabric or vapor, unified by the image of something unfurled across space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: spreadings-of-, your-sail | es: extendidos-de-, tu-vela | fr: moisson, מִפְרָשׂי | de: [מִפְרָשׂי], [מִפְרָשׂךָ] Job 36:29; Ezek 27:7

מִפְשָׁעָה H4667 Art / N-fs (1×)

buttocks, hips; lower stepping region of the body

This noun appears only in 1 Chronicles 19:4, parallel to 2 Samuel 10:4, where Hanun humiliates David's ambassadors by cutting their garments 'up to the buttocks.' The word denotes the hip or buttock region, the 'stepping region' of the body. Exposing this area was a severe public shaming in ancient Near Eastern culture, turning a diplomatic mission into an insult that provoked war. The deliberate exposure of the buttocks violated honor and demanded response.

(1×) English 'the-buttocks' and Spanish 'las-nalgas' (the buttocks) both identify the exposed body part. The shameful cutting of the ambassadors' robes to reveal their lower bodies constituted a deliberate diplomatic insult, treating honored envoys like prisoners of war (1 Chr 19:4). FLESH AND BODY

en: the-buttocks | es: las-nalgas | fr: [הַמִּפְשָׁעָה] | de: [הַמִּפְשָׁעָה] 1Chr 19:4

מַפְתֵּחַ H4668 Art / N-ms (2×)

a key, the instrument for opening locked doors or gates

This masculine noun means simply 'key,' the tool for unlocking doors. It appears literally in Judges 3:25, where Ehud's servants take the key to unlock the door after finding it shut, and figuratively in Isaiah 22:22, where God places 'the key of the house of David' on Eliakim's shoulder, symbolizing administrative authority. The Isaiah passage became foundational for later messianic interpretation: having the key means having power to open and shut, to grant or deny access. The simple domestic tool thus became a powerful metaphor for governmental and spiritual authority.

(2×) A key for opening locked spaces. The Judges narrative is straightforward: servants waiting for King Eglon eventually retrieve the key and unlock the door, discovering his corpse. Isaiah transforms the key into a symbol of delegated royal authority, with opening and shutting representing administrative decisions. This figurative use influenced Revelation 3:7's imagery of Christ holding David's key. The multilingual translations uniformly render 'key' or 'llave,' showing this functional meaning is stable across languages and contexts. KEY AUTHORITY ACCESS

en: key-of, the-key | es: la-llave, llave-de | fr: [מכתח], le-key | de: [מפתח], der-key Judg 3:25; Isa 22:22

מִפְתָּח H4669 Art / N-ms (2×)

opening or utterance; what opens the lips in speech

This noun appears in two distinct senses, both involving opening. In 1 Chronicles 9:27, it refers to 'the key' (understanding it as synonymous with H4668), the tool for opening the temple doors entrusted to Levitical gatekeepers. In Proverbs 8:6, personified Wisdom declares, 'Hear, for I will speak noble things, and the opening of my lips will be right things'—here denoting not a tool but the act or product of opening one's lips, i.e., utterance or speech. The common semantic core is opening, whether of doors or mouths.

(2×) An opening or what opens; either a key (mechanical opening) or utterance (verbal opening). The Chronicles reference describes temple gatekeepers having charge of opening the doors each morning, with 'opening' likely meaning the key itself by metonymy. Proverbs uses the term more abstractly for what the lips open with—speech or utterance. Wisdom's 'opening' produces right and noble words, just as a key produces access. Both uses reflect the Hebrew tendency to name things by function: the opener, whether tool or word. KEY AUTHORITY ACCESS

en: and-the-opening-of, the-key | es: la-llave, y-apertura-de | fr: [המפתח], et-ומכתח | de: [המכתח], [ומפתח] 1Chr 9:27; Prov 8:6

מִפְתָּן H4670 N-msc (8×)

Threshold, doorsill — the stone or timber at the base of a doorway, especially of a temple or sacred entrance

A masculine noun for the threshold or doorsill of a building, the horizontal beam or stone slab at the bottom of a doorway over which one steps. Nearly all its occurrences carry sacral weight. In the Dagon narrative, the idol's broken pieces lie on the threshold of Dagon's temple, making the priests avoid treading on it ever after (1 Sam 5:4-5). Ezekiel's visionary temple features the threshold prominently: the glory of YHWH moves to the threshold (Ezek 9:3; 10:4, 18), and healing waters flow from beneath it (Ezek 47:1). Zephaniah condemns those who leap over the threshold in a pagan ritual (Zeph 1:9).

threshold, sill (8×) The threshold or doorsill of a building, particularly of a temple or sacred structure. The word carries a strong association with sacred space throughout its eight occurrences. In 1 Samuel 5:4-5, the threshold of Dagon's temple becomes ritually charged after the idol falls upon it. Ezekiel repeatedly positions YHWH's glory at the threshold of the visionary temple (Ezek 9:3; 10:4, 18; 46:2; 47:1). Zephaniah 1:9 references the superstitious practice of leaping over the threshold. Spanish 'umbral,' French 'seuil,' and German 'Schwelle' all consistently render the concrete architectural sense of a doorsill. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-threshold, threshold-of | es: el-umbral, el-umbral-de, umbral-de | fr: le-seuil, seuil, seuil-de | de: Schwelle, der-Schwelle, der-threshold 1Sam 5:4; 1Sam 5:5; Ezek 9:3; Ezek 10:4; Ezek 10:18

מֹוץ H4671 Prep-k (8×)

Chaff — the light husks of threshed grain, used figuratively for what is worthless and swept away by wind

A masculine noun for chaff, the dry husks and broken straw separated from grain during threshing. In every biblical occurrence it appears in a simile introduced by the preposition כְּ ('like'), always driven by wind, painting a vivid picture of the impermanent and worthless. The wicked are 'like chaff that the wind drives away' (Ps 1:4), hostile nations scatter 'like chaff on the mountains' before God's rebuke (Isa 17:13), and an entire day can pass 'like chaff' (Zeph 2:2). The image is one of the Bible's most memorable metaphors for divine judgment sweeping away the ungodly.

like chaff (8×) Chaff — the lightweight residue of threshing, invariably used in similes (always with כְּ, 'like') to depict what is insubstantial and easily blown away by wind. Applied to the wicked (Ps 1:4; 35:5; Job 21:18), to hostile nations scattered before God (Isa 17:13; 29:5), to Judah's crushing power over enemies (Isa 41:15), and to the fleeting passage of time (Hos 13:3; Zeph 2:2). The multilingual evidence reinforces the agricultural imagery: Spanish 'tamo,' French 'balle,' and German 'Spreu' all denote the specific threshing byproduct rather than a generic 'refuse,' confirming the concrete botanical sense underlying the metaphor. STUBBLE AND CHAFF en: and-like-chaff, like-chaff, like-chaff-of | es: como-el-tamo, como-tamo, como-tamo-de | fr: [כמו־ן], [כמ־ן], balle | de: [כמו־ן], [כמ־ן], wie-Spreu Job 21:18; Ps 1:4; Ps 35:5; Isa 17:13; Isa 29:5

מָצָא H4672 V-Nifal-Perf-2fs (457×)

To find, discover, encounter; Niphal: be found, be present; Hifil: deliver, present; rarely: suffice, be enough.

One of the most common verbs in the Hebrew Bible, מָצָא covers the full arc from deliberate searching to unexpected encounter. In its Qal stem it ranges from finding a lost donkey (1 Sam 9:4) to finding favor in someone's eyes — a formulaic phrase (מָצָא חֵן) that appears over 40 times, rendered in Spanish as hallar gracia, in French as trouver grâce, and in German as Gnade finden. The Niphal passive yields a distinctive Chronicles formula for 'all who were found/present,' while the rare Hifil causative means to deliver or hand over. A surprising minor sense, 'to suffice' (Num 11:22), reflects the logic that what one finds is what one has available.

1. Qal: find, discover (289×) The primary active meaning: to find, discover, or locate something sought, lost, or desired. This covers intentional searching (Gen 2:20, where no suitable helper 'was found' for Adam), accidental discovery, and the deeply idiomatic expression מָצָא חֵן בְּעֵינֵי ('to find favor in the eyes of'), which appears in Gen 6:8 of Noah. Multilingual glosses converge tightly here — Spanish hallar/encontrar, French trouver, German finden — confirming a stable, cross-linguistically basic sense. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: I-have-found, and-found, and-he-found | es: Y-encontró, Y-halló, he-hallado | fr: Je-avoir-trouva, et-il-trouva, et-trouva | de: ich-gefunden-habe, ich-haben-fand, und-er-fand Gen 2:20; Gen 6:8; Gen 8:9; Gen 18:3; Gen 26:12

2. Niphal: be found, be discovered (99×) The Niphal passive: to be found, be discovered, be present, or exist. This is not merely the passive of sense 1 but often carries an existential nuance — 'no leaven shall be found in your houses' (Exod 12:19). Spanish fue hallado and French être trouvé preserve the passive construction, while Arabic ʾ shares both the 'be found' and 'exist' readings, suggesting this polysemy is typologically natural. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: I-will-bring, is-found, shall-be-found | es: es-hallado, fue-hallado, se-encuentre | fr: –être-trouva, devra-être-trouva, est-trouva | de: er-findet, fand, finden Gen 44:16; Gen 44:17; Exod 9:19; Exod 12:19; Exod 22:2

3. Niphal participle: those present (42×) The Niphal participle used substantivally, especially with the article (הַנִּמְצָאִים), to mean 'those who were present/found.' This formulaic usage dominates in Chronicles (e.g., 2 Chr 34:32) for assembled people, functioning almost as a census term. The distinctiveness shows in how translations handle it: English 'those present,' Spanish los que se hallaban, French ceux qui se trouvaient — all employing periphrastic constructions rather than a simple passive. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: the-found, the-ones-found | es: el-encontrado, el-hallado, el-que-se-encuentra | fr: le-trouva, trouver | de: der-fand, finden Gen 19:15; Gen 47:14; Deut 20:11; Judg 20:48

4. Qal: reach, come upon, overtake (17×) To come upon, befall, reach, or overtake — used when calamity, trouble, or events 'find' a person without active searching (Deut 4:30; Num 32:23 'your sin will find you out'). German treffen captures the overtaking nuance, while Spanish alcanzar reflects the 'reach' dimension. This sense reveals מָצָא as a verb of encounter from the object's perspective, where the subject (often abstract: evil, distress) is the active agent. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: and-find-you, and-finds, and-will-find-him | es: encontrada, encontrares, hallará | fr: –trouver, a-trouva-nous, atteignant | de: du-meet, fand, fand-ihnen Gen 44:34; Exod 18:8; Num 20:14; Num 32:23; Deut 4:30

5. Hifil: deliver, hand over, present (7×) The Hifil causative: to cause to find, to deliver, hand over, or present. Rare (7 occurrences), concentrated in Levitical ritual passages (Lev 9:12-18) where Aaron's sons 'presented' blood to him, and in 2 Sam 3:8 meaning 'deliver.' The causative logic is clear: making something arrive at or reach its recipient. FINDING AND DISCOVERING

en: He-causes-him-to-find, I-delivered-you, [obj] | es: hago-encontrar, le-entregaron, le-hará-hallar | fr: et-apporta, ils-apporta, je-délivra-tu | de: fand, ich-befreite-du, sie-brachte Lev 9:12; Lev 9:13; Lev 9:18; 2Sam 3:8; Job 34:11

6. Qal: suffice, be enough (3×) A rare sense meaning 'to suffice, be enough' — attested principally in Num 11:22, where Moses asks whether enough flocks and herds can be 'found' (i.e., suffice) for the people. The semantic path from 'find' to 'suffice' runs through availability: what can be found is what is at hand, and hence what is enough. Only 3 clear occurrences, but the sense is lexicographically significant. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-suffice, is-found | es: se-encuentra, y-será-suficiente | fr: est-trouva, et-suffice | de: ist-fand, und-suffice Num 11:22; Josh 17:16

מַצָּב H4673 N-msc (10×)

Military garrison or outpost; standing-place or appointed station

From the root natsav ('to stand, take one's stand'), this masculine noun denotes either a military garrison or a place where one stands in an assigned position. Its military sense dominates the narrative of Saul and Jonathan's confrontation with the Philistines, where the word recurs seven times for the Philistine garrison at the pass of Michmash (1 Sam 13-14). In its non-military sense, Joshua 4 uses it for the exact spot in the Jordan riverbed where the priests' feet stood bearing the ark. Isaiah 22:19 applies it metaphorically to Shebna's office or station from which God will thrust him down.

1. garrison, military outpost (7×) A military garrison, outpost, or forward position of soldiers stationed in strategic territory. Used predominantly for Philistine garrisons threatening Israel during the reign of Saul. Jonathan and his armor-bearer famously approached the Philistine matstsav at Michmash (1 Sam 14:1, 4, 6), and 2 Samuel 23:14 references a Philistine garrison in Bethlehem. Spanish 'destacamento' and 'guarnicion,' along with French 'garnison,' consistently render this fortified military station. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-garrison-of, garrison-of, the-garrison | es: destacamento-de, el-destacamento, y-guarnición-de | fr: et-garnison-de, garnison-de, le-garnison | de: der-garrison, garrison-von, und-garrison-von 1Sam 13:23; 1Sam 14:1; 1Sam 14:4; 1Sam 14:6; 1Sam 14:11

2. standing-place, appointed position (3×) A standing-place or fixed appointed position, either in a literal physical sense or as a figurative station of authority. In Joshua 4:3 and 4:9, the word marks the precise spot where the priests' feet stood firm in the Jordan – a memorial location of theophanic significance. In Isaiah 22:19, it signifies the office or appointed station from which the steward Shebna will be deposed, paralleled by ma'amad ('standing'). The shift from concrete foothold to abstract office shows the word's semantic flexibility rooted in the idea of a fixed, established place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-standing-place-of, from-your-position, standing-place-of | es: de-lugar-de, de-tu-puesto, lugar-de | fr: [ממצבך], de-debout-lieu-de, debout-lieu-de | de: [ממצבך], stehend-Ort-von, von-stehend-Ort-von Josh 4:3; Josh 4:9; Isa 22:19

מָצָב H4674 Adj-ms (1×)

siege work, palisade; military fortification or entrenchment

This word appears only in Isaiah 29:3, where God declares He will 'encamp against you all around and lay siege with a palisade.' The noun denotes some type of siege work—possibly a palisade, tower, or entrenchment used in attacking a fortified city. The parallel term 'siegeworks' confirms the military context. God ironically becomes the besieger of His own city Jerusalem, turning divine protection into divine assault due to the people's hypocrisy.

(1×) English 'with-a-siege-work' and Spanish 'con-puesto' (with post/position) both suggest military installations. Isaiah's oracle reverses expectations—the LORD who defended Jerusalem now encircles it with siege equipment, treating His city as an enemy fortress to be reduced (Isa 29:3). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-a-siege-work | es: con-puesto | fr: [מצב] | de: [מצב] Isa 29:3

מִצְבָּה H4675 N-fs (2×)

a military garrison or guard post; a stationed military unit

This noun denotes a military garrison or guard post. In 1 Samuel 14:12, Philistine soldiers stationed at the garrison call to Jonathan and his armor-bearer, 'Come up to us, and we will show you a thing.' Zechariah 9:8 declares God's promise: 'I will encamp at my house as a guard, so that none shall march to and fro; no oppressor shall again march over them.' The first reference is clearly military; the second uses military imagery for divine protection. A garrison represents permanent military presence, strategic positioning to control territory or defend against attack.

(2×) A garrison, military outpost, or guard station. The 1 Samuel narrative shows a Philistine garrison stationed in Israelite territory, a sign of occupation and oppression. The soldiers' challenge to Jonathan comes from a fortified position. Zechariah's prophetic use reimagines God himself as a protective garrison encamped around the temple, reversing the image from occupation to security. The Spanish 'guarnición' and 'destacamento' capture the military stationing. Both contexts involve strategic positioning to control space and provide security or domination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-garrison, the-garrison | es: como-guarnición, el-destacamento | fr: le-garnison, poste | de: [מצבה], der-garrison 1Sam 14:12; Zech 9:8

מַצֵּבָה H4676 Art / N-fs (32×)

Standing stone or pillar; an upright stone erected as a memorial monument or as an object of pagan worship to be destroyed.

A stone set upright in the ground, serving two dramatically different purposes in Israel's story. Positively, patriarchs erected standing stones to mark encounters with God — Jacob's pillar at Bethel anointed with oil (Gen 28:18), Rachel's grave marker (Gen 35:20), and Absalom's personal monument (2 Sam 18:18). Negatively, the same word describes Canaanite cult pillars that the Law commands Israel to smash (Exod 23:24; Deut 7:5). The tension between these senses runs through the entire Old Testament: the same physical object can be a witness to the true God or an abomination to be torn down.

1. memorial pillar or monument (20×) An upright stone erected as a memorial, witness, or boundary marker, associated with positive or neutral commemorative purposes. Jacob anoints his pillar at Bethel (Gen 28:18, 22; 31:13), sets one at Rachel's grave (Gen 35:20), and covenant-making stones witness agreements (Gen 31:45, 51). Absalom erects one as a personal monument (2 Sam 18:18). Translations consistently use 'columna' (Spa), 'colonne/stèle' (Fra), 'Säule' (Deu). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-pillar, and-pillars-of-, pillar | es: columna, columna-de, columnas | fr: [ומצבה], [ומצבות], [מצבה] | de: Saeule, Saeule-von, Saeulen Gen 28:18; Gen 28:22; Gen 31:13; Gen 31:45; Gen 31:51

2. sacred cultic standing stone (12×) A sacred standing stone associated with pagan Canaanite worship, consistently condemned and ordered to be smashed, broken, or torn down. The legal and prophetic texts command their destruction alongside altars and Asherah poles (Exod 23:24; 34:13; Deut 7:5; 12:3). The plural forms dominate here, and Hosea 3:4 lists the maṣṣēbāh among cultic objects Israel will lack in exile. Spanish sometimes shifts to 'estelas,' marking the idolatrous register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-pillars, and-their-pillars, and-your-pillars | es: (marca-de-objeto)-las-estelas, columnas-de, las-columnas | fr: [המצבות], [מצבות], colonnes-de | de: Saeulen-von, [המצבות], [ומצבותיך] Exod 23:24; Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; Deut 12:3; 1Kgs 14:23

מִצְבְּיָה H4677 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Mesobaite; gentile designation, origin uncertain

This gentile designation appears only in 1 Chronicles 11:47, attached to one of David's mighty warriors. The term apparently indicates place of origin, but the location is unknown and the form is unusual. Some scholars suggest emending to 'from Zobah,' a known region, while ancient versions vary widely in their renderings. The obscurity may result from textual corruption or preservation of a now-forgotten place name.

(1×) English 'the-Metsovayah' and Spanish 'el-metsobayá' attempt to transliterate the uncertain term. The gentile marker identifies one of David's elite warriors by hometown or region, but the exact referent remains mysterious—possibly a small village whose name survived only in this military roster (1 Chr 11:47). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Metsovayah | es: el-metsobayá | fr: [המצביה] | de: [המצביה] 1Chr 11:47

מַצֵּבָה H4678 N-fsc / 3fs (6×)

A pillar or standing stone erected as a memorial or sacred marker; also the stump or trunk remnant of a felled tree

Derived from the root meaning 'to stand,' this feminine noun covers two quite different referents. As a pillar or standing stone, it marks memorials — Jacob's anointed pillar at Bethel (Gen 35:14) and Absalom's monument in the King's Valley (2 Sam 18:18). As a stump, it appears in Isaiah's parable of judgment: even after the holy land is burned, a stump remains as a seed of hope (Isa 6:13). The divergence is sharp across translations: Spanish distinguishes 'estela/pilar' from 'tronco,' while Arabic uses 'nusub' for the stone pillar — evidence that the two senses were clearly felt as distinct.

1. pillar, standing stone (4×) A pillar or standing stone set up as a memorial, sacred marker, or monument. Jacob erects and anoints one at Bethel (Gen 35:14), sets one over Rachel's grave (Gen 35:20), and Absalom raises his own in the King's Valley (2 Sam 18:18). Spanish 'estela/pilar' and German 'Malstein/Denkmal' preserve the monumental connotation. Arabic 'nusub' (نُصُب) underscores the act of erecting something upright as a sacred or commemorative marker. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pillar-of, the-pillar, to-the-pillar | es: a-la-estela, la-estela, pilar-de | fr: colonne-de, le-colonne, à-le-colonne | de: der-Malstein-, der-Saeule, ein-Denkmal Gen 35:14; Gen 35:20; 2Sam 18:18

2. stump, trunk remnant (2×) A tree stump or trunk remnant, used exclusively in Isaiah 6:13 (twice, with and without possessive suffix). After the burning of the land, the stump (matseveth) remains — a seed of future life amid desolation. Spanish 'tronco' and English 'stump' diverge sharply from the 'pillar' translations, confirming this as a genuinely separate botanical sense rooted in the same idea of something left standing. ROOT PLANT PART

en: its-stump, stump | es: su-tronco, tronco | fr: [מצבת], [מצבתה] | de: [מצבת], [מצבתה] Isa 6:13

מְצָד H4679 Prep-b (10×)

A mountain stronghold or fortress; a defensive refuge in rocky, inaccessible terrain used for military or survival shelter.

Refers to a fortified place of refuge, typically situated in rugged, mountainous terrain. In the period of the Judges, Israelites hid from Midianite raiders in such mountain fastnesses (Judg 6:2), and David famously sheltered from Saul in the strongholds of the Judean wilderness (1 Sam 23:14, 29). The English "stronghold" and Spanish "fortaleza" both capture the defensive character, while the construct phrase with "rocks" (Is 33:16) emphasizes the natural, cliff-hewn nature of these refuges. The term also designates the Jebusite citadel that David captured and made his capital (1 Chr 11:7).

stronghold, fortress (10×) A naturally fortified position in mountainous or rocky terrain used as a place of military refuge or hiding. The wilderness strongholds where David evaded Saul (1 Sam 23:14, 19) and the mountain caves of Judges 6:2 are paradigmatic examples. English glosses like 'strongholds' and Spanish 'fortalezas' consistently render this as a defensive shelter. The construct with 'rocks' (Is 33:16) underscores the geological character of these fastnesses, while the citadel of Jerusalem (1 Chr 11:7) represents a more urban, permanent fortification. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: and-the-strongholds, in-strongholds-of, in-the-fortress | es: a-la-fortaleza, en-fortalezas-de, en-la-fortaleza | fr: [במצד], [במצדות], [והמצדות] | de: [במצד], [במצדות], [והמצדות] Judg 6:2; 1Sam 23:14; 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 23:29; 1Chr 11:7

מָצָה H4680 V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (7×)
To drain or wring out (actively squeezing liquid); in the Niphal passive, to be drained out or wrung dry.
A verb of liquid extraction, matzah describes the forceful squeezing or draining of fluid from a vessel or material. Gideon wrings dew from the fleece (Judg 6:38); Jerusalem is told she has 'drained out' the cup of God's fury to its dregs (Isa 51:17); the wicked 'drain the dregs' of judgment's cup (Ps 75:8). In the Niphal passive, the sacrificial blood 'shall be drained out' at the altar's base (Lev 1:15; 5:9). Spanish distinguishes the active wringing ('exprimiste,' you wrung out) from the passive draining ('sera exprimido,' it shall be wrung), while Arabic cognates like imtassa (to absorb, suck dry) reinforce the core image of thorough extraction.

1. to drain, wring out (Qal active) (4×) Qal active: to drain, wring out, or squeeze dry — the subject performs the wringing action on a liquid or liquid-bearing object. Gideon 'wrung dew from the fleece' (Judg 6:38, wayyimetz); personified Jerusalem 'drained' the bowl of staggering (Isa 51:17, matzit); Ezekiel echoes this with Oholibah draining her cup (Ezek 23:34); the wicked 'drain' the wine dregs (Ps 75:8). Spanish 'y escurrio' (and he wrung out) and 'exprimiste' (you squeezed out) capture the forceful extraction. POURING AND SHEDDING
en: and-he-wrung-out, and-you-shall-drain-it, they-drain | es: exprimirán, exprimiste, y-escurrió | fr: [מצית], et-il-wrung-dehors, et-presser | de: [ומצית], [מצית], sie-drain Judg 6:38; Ps 75:8; Isa 51:17; Ezek 23:34

2. to be drained, wrung out (Nifal passive) (3×) Niphal passive: to be drained out or wrung dry, describing the liquid or sacrificial blood undergoing the draining process. In Lev 1:15 and 5:9, the bird offering's blood 'shall be drained out' (nimetza) at the base of the altar — a precise ritual instruction. Ps 73:10 extends the image: waters of judgment 'are drained' by the people. Spanish 'sera exprimido' (it shall be wrung) and 'son exprimidas' (they are drained) preserve the passive voice consistently. POURING AND SHEDDING
en: and-it-shall-be-drained-out, are-drained, it-shall-be-drained | es: será-exprimido, son-exprimidas, y-exprimirá | fr: cela-devra-être-drained, et-cela-devra-être-drained-dehors, presser | de: es-soll-sein-ausgegossen, sind-drained, und-es-soll-sein-ausgegossen-heraus Lev 1:15; Lev 5:9; Ps 73:10

מֹצָה H4681 Conj-w (1×)
Mozah; a town in Benjamin's territory
This place name appears only in Joshua 18:26 in the boundary list for Benjamin's tribal allotment. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to go out' or 'origin.' The exact location remains uncertain, though it belonged to Benjamin's towns in the central hill country. The Septuagint renders it variously, reflecting uncertainty even in antiquity. Such boundary lists preserve the geographical memory of Israel's tribal divisions.

(1×) English 'ha-Motsah,' Spanish 'Mosa,' and French/German transliterations all treat this as a proper place name. The town appears in Benjamin's allocation, one of many settlements defining the boundaries of the smallest but strategically important tribe (Josh 18:26). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-ha-Motsah | es: y-Mosa | fr: et-ha-Motsah | de: und-ha-Motsah Josh 18:26

מַצָּה H4682 N-fp (53×)
Unleavened bread or cakes, prepared without yeast for Passover, sacrificial offerings, and urgent hospitality.
Flat bread made without leaven, central to Israel's liturgical and domestic life. When Lot welcomed angels in Genesis 19:3 he baked unleavened cakes because there was no time to let dough rise, and that motif of holy urgency pervades the Passover narrative of Exodus 12, where Israel ate matzot in haste on the night of liberation. The term covers the bread itself and the seven-day Festival of Unleavened Bread (chag hamatzot). In Levitical law, matzah appears in grain offerings, peace offerings, and priestly consecration rites. Spanish panes azimos, French pain sans levain, and German ungesaeuertes Brot all preserve the defining characteristic: bread without yeast.

unleavened bread/cakes (53×) Unleavened bread or flat cakes prepared without yeast, used in Passover observance (Exod 12:8, 15-18), sacrificial grain offerings (Lev 2:4-5), peace offerings (Lev 7:12), and priestly consecration (Exod 29:2). The Spanish azimos and French sans levain both point to the absence of leaven as the essential feature, while the German Gebote reflects a liturgical framing of the commanded bread. Whether for urgent hospitality (Gen 19:3) or sacred ritual, the word always denotes bread whose purity lies in what it lacks. UNLEAVENED BREAD
en: unleavened-bread | es: Panes-ázimos, panes-sin-levadura, panes-ácimos | fr: pain-sans-levain, pains-sans-levain, sans-levain-pain | de: Gebote, ungesaeuertes-Brot, unleavened-Brot Gen 19:3; Exod 12:8; Exod 12:15; Exod 12:17; Exod 12:18

מַצָּה H4683 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)
Strife, contention, or quarreling between parties
This noun denotes conflict arising from pride, greed, or malice. It appears in wisdom literature warning against the sources of strife (Proverbs links it to pride and transgression) and in Isaiah's indictment of fasting that leads to fighting rather than justice. The term captures not just disagreement but active contention—the kind of quarreling that breaks community. BDB distinguishes this from the homonymous 'unleavened bread' term.

(3×) Contention or strife between people. Proverbs 13:10 declares 'by pride comes only strife,' while 17:19 warns 'he who raises his door seeks destruction' in the context of loving strife. Isaiah 58:4 rebukes Israel: 'you fast for strife and contention, and to strike with the fist of wickedness.' The multilingual witnesses (Spanish contienda, French dispute implied) consistently render this as conflict or quarreling, not the unleavened bread meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-contention, strife | es: contienda, y-riña | fr: [ומצה], מצה | de: [ומצה], [מצה] Prov 13:10; Prov 17:19; Isa 58:4

מִצְהֲלָה H4684 Conj-w / N-fpc / 2fs (2×)
neighing, the loud cry of horses, especially in contexts of warfare or lust
This feminine plural noun denotes the neighing of horses, appearing twice in Jeremiah as part of judgment oracles. In 8:16, the prophet hears the snorting and neighing of enemy horses from Dan, signaling the approaching invasion. In 13:27, Jeremiah uses equine imagery to condemn Judah's idolatry: 'Your adulteries and neighings, your lewd whorings'—the neighing metaphorically represents lustful pursuit of false gods, comparing Judah to a mare in heat. The sound of horses thus evokes both military terror and sexual shamelessness, dual images of impending judgment.

(2×) The neighing or loud cries of horses. Jeremiah 8:16 uses acoustic imagery to signal invasion: you can hear the horses' neighing from Dan (northern border), and 'at the sound of the neighing of their stallions the whole land quakes.' Chapter 13:27 extends the metaphor to sexual sin, with neighings parallel to adulteries and whoredoms —Judah is depicted as an uncontrollable mare pursuing stallions, an image of idolatrous lust. Both uses associate horse sounds with unrestrained power, whether military or sexual. ROAR GROAN CRY
en: and-your-neighings, the-neighing-of | es: relinchos-de, y-relinchos-tuyos | fr: [ומצהלותיך], [מצהלות] | de: [ומצהלותיך], [מצהלות] Jer 8:16; Jer 13:27

מָצוֹד H4685a N-mp (1×)
siegeworks, fortifications; military constructions for attack or defense
This plural noun appears only in Ecclesiastes 9:14, describing how 'a great king came and built great siegeworks against' a small city. The word denotes military fortifications or siege installations—towers, ramps, palisades used to assault a defended city. The Preacher's parable illustrates that wisdom, though more valuable than military might, is often unrecognized and unrewarded. The 'great siegeworks' represent overwhelming force that wisdom nevertheless overcomes.

(1×) English 'siegeworks,' Spanish 'baluartes' (bulwarks), and French 'forteresse' (fortress) all capture military construction. Qohelet's story contrasts massive siege apparatus with the quiet wisdom of one poor man who delivers the city—yet is forgotten despite his greater power (Eccl 9:14). FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: siegeworks | es: baluartes | fr: forteresse | de: [מצודים] Eccl 9:14

מָצוֹד H4685b N-mp (2×)

a net or snare used for hunting; figuratively, an entrapment or dangerous situation

This masculine noun denotes a hunting implement, specifically a net or snare. Proverbs 12:12 contains a textually difficult phrase about 'the net of evil men' (though some emend the text). Job 19:6 has Job accusing God: 'Know then that God has put me in the wrong and closed his net about me'—divine pursuit depicted as a hunter trapping prey. Ecclesiastes 7:26 warns of the dangerous woman whose 'heart is snares and nets, whose hands are fetters.' All three uses are figurative, applying hunting imagery to human relationships and divine judgment.

(2×) A hunting net or snare, consistently used metaphorically. Job's complaint pictures God as a hunter who has entrapped him, surrounding him with a net from which there is no escape—a vivid image of perceived divine hostility. Ecclesiastes applies the net image to a predatory woman who ensnares men, her very being composed of trapping devices. Proverbs' text is uncertain but likely continues this pattern of nets representing danger and entrapment. The Spanish 'redes' (nets) captures the implement; the theological weight comes from depicting capture and helplessness. NETS AND SNARES

en: snares, the-net-of | es: red-de, redes | fr: forteresse | de: [מצוד], [מצודים] Prov 12:12; Eccl 7:26

מְצוֹדָה H4685c Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

net, fishing net used to catch fish (occurs in metaphor about sudden disaster)

This word refers to a fishing net, specifically the kind cast into water to catch fish. It appears in Ecclesiastes comparing human beings to fish caught in an evil net, highlighting the sudden and inescapable nature of calamity. The multilingual evidence consistently points to a net or trap, though French translators interpreted the construct form במצודה as 'fortress', likely reading from a different root.

(1×) A fishing net for catching fish in water. The sole occurrence in Ecclesiastes 9:12 uses this in a vivid simile about the unpredictability of disaster—just as fish are suddenly taken in a net, so humans are trapped by evil times. The Spanish 'en-red' and English 'in-net' preserve the fishing metaphor, while some versions diverge toward fortification imagery. NETS AND SNARES

en: in-net | es: en-red | fr: dans-forteresse | de: [במצודה] Eccl 9:12

מְצוֹדָה H4685d Conj-w / N-fsc / 3fs (2×)

a fortress or stronghold; a fortified place of refuge or military strength

This feminine noun denotes a fortress or stronghold. Isaiah 29:7 declares judgment on Ariel (Jerusalem): all nations fighting against 'her and her stronghold' will become like a dream that vanishes. Ezekiel 19:9 describes the captive lion-king (likely Jehoiachin): 'They brought him into strongholds'—fortified places, possibly meaning either imprisonment or exile to Babylonian fortifications. Both prophetic uses involve siege and capture, the stronghold representing either defensive strength or captive confinement. The same noun thus spans from refuge to prison, depending on who controls it.

(2×) A fortress, stronghold, or fortified place. Isaiah uses it for Jerusalem's defensive works, which will prove illusory when God judges the city. Ezekiel's 'strongholds' are places of confinement for the captured king, transported in a cage 'into strongholds' so his voice is heard no more in Israel. The semantic range includes both defensive fortification and secure imprisonment. The Spanish translations ('fortalezas,' 'fortaleza') capture the fortified strength; context determines whether the stronghold protects or confines. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: and-her-stronghold, into-strongholds | es: en-fortalezas, y-su-fortaleza | fr: [ומצדתה], forteresse | de: [במצדות], [ומצדתה] Isa 29:7; Ezek 19:9

מְצוּדָה H4686a Prep-l / N-fs (4×)

net, snare (for hunting or trapping)

A hunting net or snare, used almost exclusively in figurative descriptions of divine judgment. God spreads his net to capture Israel in their rebellion (Ezekiel 12:13, 17:20), an image of inescapable judgment. The Psalmist describes affliction as being brought 'into the net' (Psalm 66:11). Ezekiel also condemns false prophetesses who hunt souls with their magic, threatening to tear God's people from their 'nets' (Ezekiel 13:21). The imagery emphasizes entrapment—the victim caught and unable to escape.

(4×) A net used for hunting or trapping, functioning primarily in metaphors of divine judgment or magical manipulation. God as hunter spreads nets for rebellious Israel; false prophetesses use spiritual 'nets' to ensnare souls. The cross-linguistic glosses ('net,' 'snare,' 'red,' 'trampa') consistently identify the trapping device. The term creates vivid imagery of inescapable judgment—like a bird caught in a snare, those under God's judgment find no way of escape. NETS AND SNARES

en: for-prey, in-snare-my, in-snare-of-me | es: a-la-red, en-mi-trampa, en-trampa-de-mí | fr: [במצודתי], [למצודה], dans-filet | de: [במצודתי], [למצודה], hinein-der-Netz Ps 66:11; Ezek 12:13; Ezek 13:21; Ezek 17:20

מְצוּדָה H4686b Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (19×)

Stronghold, fortress; also (homonymous) a net or snare — a place of defensive refuge, or a hunting implement

The noun מְצוּדָה (II) primarily means a stronghold or fortified refuge — a naturally defensible position used as a place of safety. It is the word for David's famous wilderness hideouts (1 Sam 22:4-5) and for the fortress of Zion that he captured (2 Sam 5:7). Beyond literal fortifications, the Psalms repeatedly apply it to God as a personal stronghold: 'the LORD is my rock and my fortress' (Ps 18:2). A single homonymous occurrence in Job 19:6 means 'net' or 'snare,' entirely unrelated in sense — where Job laments that God has 'closed His net' around him.

1. stronghold, fortress (place of refuge) (18×) A stronghold, fortress, or fortified place of refuge — the dominant sense appearing 18 times. It covers David's wilderness strongholds (1 Sam 22:4-5; 24:22; 2 Sam 5:17; 23:14), the captured citadel of Zion (2 Sam 5:7, 9), the eagle's lofty crag-nest (Job 39:28), and the frequent figurative application to God as protector in the Psalms (Ps 18:2; 31:3; 71:3; 91:2; 144:2). Arabic consistently renders it with al-hisn ('the fortress'), Spanish uses 'fortaleza,' and the German glosses confirm fortification vocabulary. The pairing with 'my rock' (sal'i) in the Psalms is a distinctive collocational marker for this sense. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: and-my-fortress, and-the-stronghold, fortress-of | es: en-la-fortaleza, en-las-fortalezas, fortaleza-de | fr: [במצודה], [מצדת], dans-le-forteresse | de: [במצדות], [במצודה], [ומצודה] 1Sam 22:4; 1Sam 22:5; 1Sam 24:22; 2Sam 5:7; 2Sam 5:9

2. net, snare (hunting implement) (1×) A net or snare used for trapping prey — a homonymous sense entirely distinct from 'fortress,' appearing only in Job 19:6. Job cries out that God 'has encompassed me with His net,' using the image of a hunted animal caught in a mesh. Arabic renders it 'shabakatabu' ('his net'), Spanish 'su red,' confirming the hunting-implement reading. BDB treats this as a separate lexeme (homonym II of metsudah), and the multilingual evidence supports the complete semantic break from the fortification sense. NETS AND SNARES

en: and-His-net | es: y-su-red | fr: et-son-מצודו-lui | de: [ומצודו] Job 19:6

מִצְוָה H4687 Art / N-fp (184×)

Commandment, precept, directive — a binding instruction from God as covenant law or from a human authority as an executive order.

Mitswah is the quintessential word for divine commandment in the Hebrew Bible, appearing overwhelmingly in Deuteronomy and the Psalms as the stipulations God gives Israel to keep. 'The commandment is a lamp, and the Torah is light' (Prov 6:23) captures its life-giving character. Whether singular — referring to the whole body of covenant law — or plural — enumerating specific precepts — mitswah frames obedience as Israel's grateful response to God's deliverance. A smaller but distinct usage applies the word to royal or priestly directives: the king's command (2 Chr 24:21), or an administrative order to be carried out. The consistent rendering across languages — 'mandamiento/commandement/Gebot' — underscores its authoritative weight.

1. Commandment(s) — divine/covenant precept (172×) A commandment or precept given by God as covenant legislation — the mitzvot Israel is called to observe. Used both in the singular to denote the whole code of divine instruction and in the plural for specific precepts. Spanish 'mandamientos,' French 'commandements,' and German 'Gebote' all carry the same covenantal force. Central to Deuteronomic theology (Deut 6:1, 8:1) and the piety of the Psalms, where the psalmist delights in God's mitswah (Ps 119:96). In Leviticus 4-5, unwitting violation of any mitswah requires atonement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: commandments-of-him, his-commandments, the-commandment | es: el-mandamiento, mandamientos-de-él, sus-mandamientos | fr: commandements-de-lui, le-commandement, son-commandements | de: Gebote-von-ihn, der-Gebot, sein-Gebote Lev 4:2; Lev 4:13; Lev 4:22; Lev 5:17; Num 15:39

2. Command / directive — authoritative order (12×) A specific command, directive, or decree issued by a human authority — a king, commander, or priest — typically in the pattern 'according to the command of.' Spanish shifts to 'mandato/por mandato de,' and German uses constructions like 'nach dem Gebot,' marking the executive or administrative register. Found in historical narratives where royal authority is exercised: the king's command at 2 Chr 24:21, Hezekiah's reform directives at 2 Chr 29:15, 25, and the administrative order in 2 Kgs 17:34. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-command-of, according-to-commandment-of, according-to-the-command-of | es: ante-el-mandamiento-de, conforme-a-mandamiento-de, por-mandato-de | fr: commandement, et-commandement, et-selon-à-le-commandement | de: in-Gebote, und-Gebot, und-gemaess-zu-der-Gebot 2Kgs 17:34; 2Chr 8:13; 2Chr 24:21; 2Chr 29:15; 2Chr 29:25

מְצוּלָה H4688 N-fs (11×)
Deep, depth, abyss — the unfathomable ocean depths, used of the Red Sea, chaotic waters, and God's power to submerge
The noun מְצוּלָה (metsulah) denotes a watery depth or abyss. In the Song of the Sea, Pharaoh's forces sink 'into the depths like a stone' (Exod 15:5; Neh 9:11). The Psalms deploy it for overwhelming distress – the suppliant cries from 'deep waters' (Ps 69:2, 15; 88:6), and sailors witness wonders in the deep (Ps 107:24). Jonah prays from the metsulah that engulfed him (Jon 2:3). God promises to cast Israel's sins into the depths of the sea (Mic 7:19). Leviathan makes the deep churn like a pot (Job 41:31). Spanish 'profundidades' and French 'abîme' capture the register.

depth, deep place (11×) The literal ocean depths or deep waters, especially the Red Sea into which God cast Pharaoh's army (Exod 15:5; Neh 9:11). Leviathan makes the deep boil like a cauldron (Job 41:31), and sailors witness God's wonders in the deep (Ps 107:24). Jonah sinks into the metsulah at the heart of the seas (Jon 2:3). The word always conveys vastness, power, and the overwhelming force of water. Spanish 'profundidades' and French 'profondeurs' translate directly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: depths-of, from-the-depths-of, in-the-deep | es: a-lo-profundo, de-profundidades-de, en-abismos | fr: [במצולת], [במצלות], [מצולות] | de: [במצולת], [במצלות], [מצולה] Exod 15:5; Neh 9:11; Job 41:31; Ps 68:22; Ps 69:2

מָצוֹק H4689 Conj-w (6×)
Distress, anguish, straits: a state of severe hardship or constriction, often during siege or trial.
A masculine noun denoting a condition of severe constriction, distress, or anguish. Its root (ts-w-q, 'to press, constrain') evokes physical tightness translated into emotional and existential extremity. In Deuteronomy 28:53, 55, 57 it describes the horrifying conditions during a siege, where famine drives people to unthinkable acts. In 1 Samuel 22:2, every man 'in straits' gathers to David at the cave of Adullam. In Psalm 119:143 the psalmist confesses that 'trouble and anguish have found me.' The word consistently points to being hemmed in with no easy escape.

distress, anguish, straits (6×) A state of severe hardship, siege-pressure, or anguish from which there is no easy escape. In the covenant curses of Deuteronomy 28:53, 55, 57 and Jeremiah 19:9, it appears paired with matsor ('siege') to describe the extremity of famine conditions. In 1 Samuel 22:2 it characterizes the desperate men who rallied to David. In Psalm 119:143 it denotes personal anguish. Spanish renders 'angustia/afliccion' and French 'detresse,' both capturing the emotional weight, while the Hebrew root ts-w-q ('to press, constrain') conveys physical constriction. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION en: and-anguish, and-in-distress, and-in-the-distress | es: angustiado, y-aflicción, y-en-la-angustia | fr: [ובמצוק], dans-détresse, et-dans-distress | de: [ובמצוק], in-distress, und-anguish Deut 28:53; Deut 28:55; Deut 28:57; 1Sam 22:2; Ps 119:143

מְצוֹק H4690 N-ms (2×)
molten supports or pillars; the foundational structures upholding the earth
This noun appears in two difficult texts, both in 1 Samuel. In 2:8, Hannah's song declares that 'the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and on them he has set the world'—a cosmological statement picturing the earth resting on foundational supports, which belong to God. The term in 14:5 describing a geographic feature is textually problematic; many delete it with the Septuagint. The 2:8 usage reflects ancient Near Eastern cosmology, where the earth was envisioned as resting on pillars or foundations, an image of stability and divine craftsmanship.

(2×) Pillars or molten supports, specifically the foundational structures of the earth. Hannah's poetic theology attributes cosmic architecture to YHWH: the very pillars on which the world rests belong to him, an image of ultimate sovereignty and security. This reflects creation theology where God establishes stable structures. The term suggests something cast or founded (from the root meaning 'pour' or 'cast'), though whether literally molten or metaphorically solid is debated. The multilingual glosses ('pillar,' 'columna,' 'Säule') capture the supporting function in this cosmological vision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: pillar, pillars-of | es: columna, los-pilares-de | fr: colonne, colonnes-de | de: Saeule, Saeulen-von 1Sam 2:8; 1Sam 14:5

מְצוּקָה H4691 Conj-w (7×)
Distress, anguish, or dire straits – a state of being hemmed in by trouble with no visible way out.
A feminine noun denoting deep distress, anguish, or the condition of being in dire straits. It often appears paired with tsarah ('trouble') to intensify the picture of affliction, as in Zephaniah 1:15's harrowing catalog of the Day of the LORD: 'a day of trouble and distress.' Its most memorable appearances come in Psalm 107, the great thanksgiving psalm, where four times God delivers people 'from their distresses' (vv. 6, 13, 19, 28). Spanish renders it 'angustias/aflicciones,' French 'angoisse' – every language reaching for the same visceral sense of being squeezed beyond endurance.

distress, trouble, anguish (7×) A state of severe distress, anguish, or trouble – the feeling of being hemmed in and overwhelmed. The three original clusters differ only grammatically: plural with pronominal suffixes ('from-their-troubles,' 'from-my-distresses') and absolute/construct forms. English 'anguish,' Spanish 'angustias/aflicciones,' and French 'angoisse' all converge on intense emotional and situational distress. In Job 15:24 it is paired with tsar as terrors that assault the wicked; in Psalm 25:17 it is personal anguish from which David begs relief; in Psalm 107:6, 13, 19, 28 it forms the refrain of God rescuing the desperate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-anguish, and-from-their-troubles, from-my-distresses | es: de-mis-angustias, de-sus-aflicciones, y-aflicción | fr: de-angoisse, et-angoisse, et-de-angoisse | de: [ומצוקה], und-von-ihr-troubles, von-ihr-troubles Job 15:24; Ps 25:17; Ps 107:6; Ps 107:13; Ps 107:19

מָצוֹר H4692 N-ms (26×)

A siege or state of besiegement; also a fortress or fortified stronghold

Matsor captures both sides of ancient siege warfare: the offensive act of besieging a city and the defensive fortification that withstands attack. In Deuteronomy and Jeremiah, it describes the harrowing conditions of prolonged siege — hunger, stress, and desperation (Deut 28:53, 55, 57). Yet the same word can denote a fortress or stronghold, as in the Chronicler's accounts of fortified cities (2 Chr 8:5; 11:5). The dual meaning reflects how closely related the concepts of enclosure and defense were in the ancient military imagination.

1. siege, besiegement (20×) The act, state, or condition of besieging a city, including the military operation and its duration. Spanish 'asedio' and German 'Belagerung' both point squarely to siege. Frequently appears with prepositions: 'in the siege' (Deut 20:19; 2 Kgs 24:10; Jer 52:5) and in the grim pairing 'in siege and in stress' (Deut 28:53, 55, 57; Jer 19:9). Ezekiel's symbolic siege of Jerusalem (Ezek 4:2–8; 5:2) gives the word dramatic prophetic force. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: against, in-siege, in-the-siege | es: asedio, asedio-de, asedio-de-ti | fr: [במצור], dans-le-siège, dans-siège | de: Belagerung, [במצור], [המצור] Deut 20:19; Deut 20:20; Deut 28:53; Deut 28:55; Deut 28:57

2. fortress, stronghold (6×) A fortified place, stronghold, or defensive structure — sometimes referring to a fortified city or even to Egypt as a land of fortifications. Spanish shifts to 'fortaleza,' French to 'de rocher' (of rock), revealing the semantic pivot from siege to stronghold. The Chronicler uses it for Solomon's and Rehoboam's fortified cities (2 Chr 8:5; 11:5), while the Psalms and prophets invoke it for confident defense (Ps 60:9; Hab 2:1; Mic 7:12). FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: a-fortress, for-fortress, fortress | es: Egipto, fortaleza, la-fortaleza | fr: [למצור], [מצור], de-rocher | de: Belagerung, [למצור], [מצור] 2Chr 8:5; 2Chr 11:5; Ps 60:9; Mic 7:12; Hab 2:1

מָצוֹר H4693 N-proper-fs (4×)

Matsor — poetic name for Egypt, emphasizing its fortifications or boundaries

This Hebrew term appears exclusively in poetic contexts as an alternate name for Egypt. The word likely derives from the root meaning 'siege' or 'fortress,' highlighting Egypt's fortified borders or defensive strength. It appears in prophetic oracles about Egypt's waterways and in Micah's vision of future restoration, where the faithful will come from 'the cities of Matsor.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'Egipto,' French 'Matsor,' German 'Belagerung') reflects the dual nature of this term — both as a proper name and as evoking the concept of fortification.

(4×) A poetic designation for Egypt found only in prophetic literature. The term appears in Isaiah's oracle about Egypt's failing waterways ('the streams of Matsor,' Isa 19:6) and in parallel passages about Sennacherib's boast (2 Kgs 19:24 = Isa 37:25). Micah 7:12 uses it in an eschatological context, envisioning people coming from Assyria and 'the cities of Matsor.' The Hebrew root connection to 'siege' or 'fortress' may emphasize Egypt as a fortified stronghold, though some translations simply render it as a poetic variant for Egypt itself. EGYPT PLACE NAME

en: Egypt, Matsor, fortress | es: Egipto, de-Egipto, fortaleza | fr: Matsor, frontière, siège | de: Belagerung, Matsor, [מצור] 2Kgs 19:24; Isa 19:6; Isa 37:25; Mic 7:12

מְצוּרָה H4694 Art / N-fp (8×)

Fortress, fortification, rampart — a defensive stronghold or siegework, often in the phrase 'fortified cities'

A feminine noun referring to a fortification, rampart, or siege-work — a defensive military installation. It appears most frequently in Chronicles describing Rehoboam's fortification program: he strengthened cities throughout Judah and Benjamin as 'fortified cities' (עָרֵי מְצוּרָה/מְצוּרוֹת, 2 Chr 11:10-11, 23; 12:4; 14:6; 21:3). Nahum 2:2 commands 'Guard the rampart!' as Nineveh faces invasion, and Isaiah 29:3 uses it of siege-works raised against Jerusalem. The word captures both sides of the siege — the defenses and the works built to overcome them.

fortress, fortification (8×) A fortification, rampart, or siege-work — a defensive military structure or the offensive works erected to besiege one. In 2 Chronicles it repeatedly appears in the construct phrase 'fortified cities' describing Rehoboam's defensive building program across Judah (2 Chr 11:10-11, 23; 12:4; 14:6; 21:3). In Nahum 2:2 it denotes the rampart that Nineveh's defenders are urged to guard. Isaiah 29:3 uses it of siege-works God will raise against Jerusalem. Spanish 'fortaleza,' French 'forteresses,' and English 'fortresses/fortification' all capture the defensive-stronghold sense, while the Isaiah passage reveals the secondary siege-works meaning. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: fortification, fortresses, siege-works | es: fortaleza, fortaleza!, fortalezas | fr: [מצרת], de-la-détresse, der-forteresses | de: [המצרות], [מצורה], [מצרה] 2Chr 11:10; 2Chr 11:11; 2Chr 11:23; 2Chr 12:4; 2Chr 14:6

מָצוֹת H4695 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

contention, strife (context of those who oppose or strive against someone)

This noun denotes contention or strife, referring specifically to adversarial engagement. In Isaiah 41:12, God promises that Israel's enemies—those who strove in contention with them—will vanish. The term appears in parallel with 'men of war', reinforcing its martial and confrontational sense. BDB suggests the root relates to disputation, and the multilingual glosses consistently emphasize conflict or opposition.

(1×) Contentious opposition or striving against someone, particularly in a hostile or adversarial context. Isaiah 41:12 parallels 'men of your contention' with 'men of your war', suggesting active antagonism rather than mere disagreement. The Spanish 'conflicto' and English 'contention' capture the combative dimension of this rare noun. CONTROVERSY DISPUTE

en: of-your-contention | es: de-tu-conflicto | fr: [מצתך] | de: [מצתך] Isa 41:12

מֵצַח H4696 Conj-w / N-msc (13×)

Forehead, brow — the front of the head; figuratively, boldness or obstinacy

A masculine noun denoting the front of the head above the eyes, used both literally and as a powerful metaphor for character. In narrative, it is where David's stone struck Goliath (1 Sam 17:49) and where King Uzziah's leprosy broke out as divine judgment (2 Chr 26:19–20). In priestly legislation, Aaron wears a gold plate on his forehead bearing 'Holy to the LORD' so that the people's offerings may be accepted (Exod 28:38). Ezekiel's visionary mark on the foreheads of the righteous anticipates later apocalyptic imagery (Ezek 9:4). Metaphorically, a hard forehead signals shameless obstinacy — Israel's brow is 'bronze' (Isa 48:4) and 'harder than flint' (Ezek 3:7–9), while Jeremiah accuses the faithless nation of having a 'prostitute's forehead' that refuses to blush (Jer 3:3).

forehead (13×) The physical forehead or brow, and by figurative extension a symbol of boldness, defiance, or obstinacy. Literally: the place struck by David's stone (1 Sam 17:49), where leprosy appeared on Uzziah (2 Chr 26:19–20), where Aaron bore the sacred inscription (Exod 28:38), and where a protective mark was set on the faithful (Ezek 9:4). Figuratively: Israel's 'forehead of bronze' signifies stubborn rebellion (Isa 48:4; Ezek 3:7–9), and the 'forehead of a prostitute' marks brazen shamelessness (Jer 3:3). The prophet's forehead is made harder still, to match the people's defiance (Ezek

3:8–9). Spa 'frente', fra 'front', deu 'Stirn' all preserve the literal-to-figurative range. FLESH AND BODY

en: and-your-forehead, forehead, forehead-his | es: Y-frente-de, en-frente-su, en-frente-suya | fr: [במצחו], [ומצח], [ומצחך] | de: [במצחו], [ומצח], [ומצחך] Exod 28:38; 1Sam 17:49; 2Chr 26:19

מִצְחָה H4697 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

greaves, bronze leg armor worn by warriors to protect the shins

Greaves are pieces of bronze armor worn on the legs, specifically protecting the shins and calves. This word occurs only in the description of Goliath's armor in 1 Samuel 17:6, where the giant's military panoply is detailed to emphasize his formidable appearance. Ancient Near Eastern warriors used greaves to shield vulnerable lower legs during combat. The term is technical military vocabulary, preserved across translations as a loanword or descriptive phrase.

(1×) Bronze leg armor (greaves) worn to protect the lower legs in battle. The description of Goliath's armor serves to magnify his terrifying presence, and the greaves are one element of his complete military kit. Most translators render this as 'greaves' or use explanatory phrases. BDB notes textual variants suggesting the plural form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-greaves-of | es: Y-grebas-de | fr: et-greaves-de | de: und-greaves-von 1Sam 17:6

מְצִלָּה H4698 N-fpc (1×)

bells, small bells attached to horses for adornment or ritual purposes

These are small bells, specifically those attached to horses. The sole occurrence in Zechariah 14:20 envisions a day when even the bells on horses will be inscribed 'Holy to the Lord', signifying the sanctification of all aspects of life—even mundane or military equipment. The term derives from a root associated with tinkling or ringing sounds. Spanish 'cascabeles' and English 'bells' capture the acoustic essence of these ornamental or functional objects.

(1×) Small bells affixed to horses, likely for decoration, identification, or ceremonial use. Zechariah's eschatological vision uses these bells as a symbol of pervasive holiness, where even ordinary items associated with animals will bear sacred inscriptions. The multilingual glosses uniformly point to bells or similar tinkling ornaments. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bells-of | es: cascabeles-de | fr: clochette | de: [מצלות] Zech 14:20

מְצֻלָּה H4699 Prep-b (1×)

ravine, hollow, low place or valley-bottom (possibly the shadowed depth)

This word refers to a low-lying place, ravine, or hollow—possibly the shaded or deep part of a valley. It appears in Zechariah 1:8 describing the location where the prophet sees a vision of a man among myrtle trees. BDB notes this is a dubious word with interpretations ranging from 'hollow' to 'shadow', and some versions read alternative roots. The Spanish 'profundidad' and English 'ravine' suggest a geographical depression or valley floor.

(1×) A ravine, hollow, or low valley area, possibly emphasizing depth or shadow. Zechariah's night vision situates angelic figures in a mysterious, low-lying place among myrtles. The lexical uncertainty reflects textual challenges, but translations converge on a topographical depression. The imagery evokes concealment or a sheltered location near Jerusalem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-ravine | es: en-la-profundidad | fr: profondeur | de: [במצלה] Zech 1:8

מְצִלְתַּיִם H4700 Conj-w / N-fd (13×)

Cymbals — paired metallic percussion instruments used in Levitical temple worship and celebration

A feminine dual noun (literally 'a pair of clangers') designating the bronze percussion instruments clashed together in Israel's worship. This later term replaced the older צֶלְצָלִים (cf. 2 Sam 6:5) and appears almost exclusively in the Chronicler's detailed accounts of Levitical music. Asaph, Heman, and Ethan were appointed to sound the cymbals (1 Chr 15:19), and the instruments accompanied the ark's procession to Jerusalem (1 Chr 13:8; 15:16, 28), the daily tabernacle service (1 Chr 16:5, 42), and Solomon's temple dedication (2 Chr 5:12–13). The same word marks the joyful worship at the Second Temple's foundation laying (Ezra 3:10) and the dedication of Nehemiah's wall (Neh 12:27).

cymbals (13×) A pair of metal cymbals used in Israelite worship, a later synonym for צֶלְצָלִים (cf. 2 Sam 6:5 vs. 1 Chr 13:8). Exclusively attested in cultic-musical contexts: the Levitical appointments of Asaph, Heman, and Ethan (1 Chr 15:16, 19; 25:1, 6), the ark's transfer (1 Chr 13:8; 15:28), daily temple service (1 Chr 16:5, 42), Hezekiah's reforms (2 Chr 29:25), Solomon's dedication (2 Chr 5:12–13), the Second Temple foundation (Ezra 3:10), and Nehemiah's wall dedication (Neh 12:27). Deu 'Zimbeln', spa 'cimbalos' confirm the specific instrumental reference across languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-cymbals, and-with-cymbals, cymbals | es: con-címbalos, con-címbalos-de, con-los-címbalos | fr: [במצלתים], [ובמצלתים], [ומצלתים] | de: [במצלתים], [מצלתים], mit-Zimbeln 1Chr 13:8; 1Chr 15:16; 1Chr 15:19; 1Chr 15:28; 1Chr 16:5

מִצְנֶפֶת H4701 N-fsc (12×)

Turban, priestly headdress — the linen turban wrapped around the high priest's head as part of the sacred vestments

The מִצְנֶפֶת (mitsnephet) is the distinctive linen turban worn exclusively by the high priest, forming part of his sacred vestments described in Exodus and Leviticus. It is wound around the head, and upon it the golden plate engraved 'Holy to the LORD' is fastened with a blue cord (Exod 28:4, 37, 39; 29:6). Moses places it on Aaron's head at the consecration ceremony (Lev 8:9; 16:4). Ezekiel's visionary temple code prescribes a turban for the prince or priest (Ezek 21:31). The related form צָנִיף applies more broadly to any turban or headdress (Job 29:14; Isa 62:3). Spanish 'mitra/turbante' and French 'turban/tiare' reflect both the priestly and the more general headwear senses.

turban, priestly headdress (12×) The official linen turban of the Israelite high priest, wound around the head and bearing the golden plate inscribed 'Holy to the LORD' (Exod 28:4, 36-37, 39; 29:6; 39:28, 31). Placed on Aaron's head at his consecration by Moses (Lev 8:9) and worn on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:4). Ezekiel uses the term in prophetic oracle, declaring 'remove the turban, take off the crown' as a symbol of the reversal of authority (Ezek 21:31). Zechariah 3:5 describes a clean turban placed on Joshua the high priest's head as a sign of restored priestly purity. Spanish 'mitra/turbante' and English 'turban/mitre' both render the term. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: and-with-turban-of, the-turban, turban | es: el-turbante, la-mitra, turbante | fr: et-avec-turban-de, le-turban, tiare | de: Turban, [המצנפת], der-Turban Exod 28:4; Exod 28:37; Exod 28:39; Exod 29:6

מַצָּע H4702 Art / N-ms (1×)

bed, couch (a place for sleeping or reclining)

This word means bed or couch, a piece of furniture for sleeping or resting. In Isaiah 28:20, it appears in a proverbial saying about insufficiency: the bed is too short to stretch out on, and the blanket too narrow to wrap oneself in. The metaphor criticizes false refuges and inadequate strategies. The term is straightforward household vocabulary, reflected in consistent translations across languages.

(1×) A bed or sleeping couch. Isaiah's proverb uses this domestic item to illustrate inadequacy—when essential things (like a bed or blanket) fail to meet basic needs, no comfort is possible. The image would resonate with any audience familiar with the frustration of cramped or insufficient bedding. All translations render this as 'bed' or 'couch'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-bed | es: la-cama | fr: [המצע] | de: [המצע] Isa 28:20

מִצְעָד H4703 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (3×)
A step or footstep, often metaphorically for one's course or way of life
This term refers to the physical act of stepping or the steps one takes, frequently used metaphorically for the path or direction of one's life. In wisdom literature it describes how God establishes the steps of the righteous (Ps 37), while Proverbs acknowledges that human steps are ultimately directed by the Lord. In Daniel it appears in the phrase 'at his steps'—meaning in his train or following after him. The imagery evokes both literal walking and the trajectory of one's choices.

(3×) Steps or footsteps, literal or figurative for one's life path. Psalm 37:23 declares 'the steps of a man are established by the LORD when he delights in his way.' Proverbs 20:24 asks 'a man's steps are from the LORD; how then can man understand his way?'—acknowledging divine sovereignty over human direction. Daniel 11:43 uses it spatially: 'at his steps' meaning in his train or retinue. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'steps' or 'pas' supports both literal and metaphorical senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-his-steps, steps-of | es: en-pasos-sus, los-pasos-de-, pasos-de | fr: de-pas, pas, מצעדי | de: [במצעדיו], [מצעדי], steps-von Ps 37:23; Prov 20:24; Dan 11:43

צָעִיר H4704 Prep-m / Adj-fs (1×)
little, small, insignificant (with connotation of youth or inferiority)
This adjective means little, small, or insignificant, often with implications of youth or low status. While the root appears multiple times in Scripture, this particular form in Daniel 8:9 is unusual. BDB suggests emending the text to 'another little [horn]', which better fits the context of Daniel's vision. The term conveys both physical smallness and social or political insignificance, as seen in its usage with references to the youngest or least prominent.

(1×) Little or small in size, status, or significance. In Daniel's vision, a small horn emerges and grows exceedingly great, symbolizing an initially insignificant power that becomes dominant. The textual difficulty reflects scribal uncertainty, but the semantic core remains: something beginning as minor or young. Translations vary, with some modernizing to 'little' or 'small'. SMALLNESS AND LEAST en: little | es: pequeño | fr: petite | de: [מצעירה] Dan 8:9

מִצְעָר H4705 Prep-l (5×)
a small thing, a little; smallness in size, number, or duration
A noun expressing littleness or insignificance — whether of a city's size, a group's number, or a period's duration. Lot begged to flee to Zoar, calling it 'a small thing' (Gen 19:20), and God later destroyed Judah's army 'with a few men' from Aram (2 Chr 24:24). Job's friend Bildad promised that though his 'beginning was small,' his latter end would greatly increase (Job 8:7). Isaiah mourns that God's people possessed the holy place 'for only a little while' (Isa 63:18). Spanish distinguishes 'pequeña' (small in size) from 'Por-poco-tiempo' (for a little while), revealing the word's flexibility across spatial and temporal domains.

(5×) Smallness in size or number — a little thing, a few. Lot describes Zoar as 'a small thing' (Gen 19:20), meaning a tiny, insignificant town. In 2 Chr 24:24, the Aramean force was 'a few men' yet defeated Judah's large army by divine judgment. Job 8:7 contrasts a 'small' beginning with a greatly increased end. Spanish 'pequeña' and French 'un-petit' consistently render this quantitative smallness. SMALLNESS AND LEAST en: For-a-little-while, a-little, small | es: Por-poco-tiempo, con-pocos, pequeña | fr: [במצער], [למצער], un-petit | de: [במצער], [למצער], [מצער] Gen 19:20; 2Chr 24:24; Job 8:7; Isa 63:18

מִצְעָר H4706 N-ms (1×)
Mizar, a mountain near Hermon (proper name of a geographical location)
Mizar is the name of a mountain associated with the region near Mount Hermon. It appears in Psalm 42:6, where the psalmist recalls God 'from the land of Jordan and the Hermons, from Mount Mizar'. The name may derive from a word meaning 'little' or 'smallness', suggesting a lesser peak compared to Hermon. The exact location is unknown, though it likely refers to a specific summit in northern Israel. Some interpreters allegorize it as 'little mountain', but most treat it as a proper geographical name.

(1×) A mountain name, Mount Mizar, located near Hermon in northern Israel. The psalmist's reference evokes a distant, mountainous geography from which he remembers God. The etymology may relate to 'smallness', possibly indicating a minor peak. Translations consistently render this as a place name rather than translating its potential meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mizar | es: Mizar | fr: de-Mitsar | de: Mizar Ps 42:6

מִצְפֶּה H4707 N-ms (2×)
watchtower, observation point; elevated structure or location for surveillance and lookout
A military or defensive structure built on high ground to provide a commanding view of surrounding territory. These watchtowers served crucial functions in ancient warfare and border security, allowing sentries to spot approaching enemies from a distance. Isaiah uses the image of a watchman stationed in such a tower to describe the prophetic role—one who keeps vigilant watch for divine messages. The term emphasizes both the physical elevation and the strategic purpose of surveillance and early warning.

(2×) An elevated observation post or watchtower. In 2 Chronicles 20:24, it marks the wilderness overlook point where Judah saw the destroyed armies of their enemies, while Isaiah 21:8 features a watchman stationed in the tower calling out what he sees in his vision of Babylon's fall. The cross-linguistic evidence shows some translators rendering it ('atalaya' in Spanish, 'watchtower' in English) while others simply transliterate the Hebrew in brackets, suggesting recognition that this may be a proper name (Mizpeh/Mizpah) in certain contexts, though here used as a common noun denoting the structure itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-watchtower, watchtower | es: atalaya, la-atalaya | fr: [המצפה], [מצפה] | de: [המצפה], [מצפה] 2Chr 20:24; Isa 21:8

מִצְפֶּה H4708 Conj-w (10×)
Mizpeh, a place name meaning 'watchtower'; several Israelite towns including sites in Judah, Gilead, Moab, and Benjamin.
A proper place name derived from the root tsapah ('to watch, look out'), literally meaning 'watchtower' or 'lookout point.' Multiple locations bore this name in ancient Israel, reflecting the common practice of naming elevated vantage points. The most notable include a town in the Shephelah of Judah (Josh 15:38), a site in Gilead associated with Jephthah's campaign (Judg 11:29), Mizpeh of Moab where David brought his parents for safety (1 Sam 22:3), and a Benjaminite town (Josh 18:26). The name's recurrence across regions testifies to how frequently hilltop settlements served as watchtowers throughout the land.

Mizpeh (place name) (10×) A proper place name applied to several distinct Israelite and Transjordanian towns, all sharing the etymological sense of 'watchtower' from the root tsapah. Key locations include Mizpeh in the Shephelah of Judah (Josh 15:38), Mizpeh of Gilead where Jephthah passed through on his campaign (Judg 11:29), and a Benjaminite Mizpeh (Josh 18:26). Spanish 'Mizpa' and French 'Mitspa' reflect variant transliterations of the same toponym. The Septuagint rendering Massepha and the Greek he skopia ('the lookout') for the Gilead site preserve the original semantic force of the name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Mizpeh, Mizpeh-of, and-from-Mizpeh-of | es: Mispá-de, Mizpa, Mizpa-de | fr: Mitspa, Mizpeh, Mizpeh-de | de: Mizpeh, Mizpeh-von, nach-Mizpa Josh 11:8; Josh 15:38; Josh 18:26; Judg 11:29

מִצְפָּה H4709 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (36×)
Mizpah ('watchtower'); a place name for several biblical sites, especially in Benjamin and Gilead

A proper noun meaning 'watchtower' or 'lookout point,' applied to several distinct locations in the biblical narrative. The most prominent is Mizpah in Benjamin, an old sacred site where Israel assembled repeatedly in times of crisis (Judg 20:1; 1 Sam 7:5-6) and which later served as Gedaliah's administrative center after the fall of Jerusalem (Jer 40:6). Another Mizpah in Gilead appears in the Jacob-Laban narrative (Gen 31:49) and in the Jephthah cycle (Judg 10:17, 11:11, 34). A third near Hermon is mentioned in Joshua 11:3. Hosea 5:1 invokes Mizpah as a symbol of failed watchfulness. Translations typically transliterate the name: Spanish 'Mizpa,' French 'Mitspa,' German 'Mizpa.'

Mizpah (place name) (36×) A proper place name meaning 'watchtower,' referring to multiple biblical sites. Mizpah in Benjamin was a national assembly point (Judg 20:1, 1 Sam 7:5) and post-exile administrative center (2 Kgs 25:23, Jer 40:6-10). Mizpah in Gilead figures in the Laban covenant (Gen 31:49) and Jephthah's story (Judg 11:11, 34). A third site near Hermon appears in Josh 11:3. All translations transliterate rather than translate: Spanish 'Mizpa,' French 'Mitspa,' German 'Mizpa'—treating it as a recognized toponym. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-Mitspah, at-the-Mitspah, in-the-Mitspah | es: Mitzpá, Mizpa, a-Mispá | fr: Mitspa, [המצפה], dans-le-Mitspah | de: Mizpa, [המצפה], der-Mitspah Gen 31:49; Josh 11:3; Judg 10:17; Judg 11:11; Judg 11:34

מִצְפּוֹן H4710 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)
hidden treasures, concealed riches stored away secretly
This noun refers to hidden treasures or concealed riches—valuables stored in secret places. It occurs in Obadiah 1:6 in an oracle against Edom, where God warns that Esau's hidden treasures will be searched out and plundered. The term emphasizes secrecy and concealment, suggesting wealth deliberately kept from view. Multilingual evidence consistently points to hidden or secret treasures, with some versions emphasizing the searching out or discovery of these concealed valuables.

(1×) Treasures or riches that are hidden away or concealed in secret places. Obadiah's prophecy against Edom declares that even Esau's most carefully hidden wealth will be discovered and looted. The term implies deliberate concealment for protection, which ultimately proves futile. Spanish 'tesoros escondidos' and French 'trésors cachés' preserve the dual notion of value and secrecy. RICHES AND WEALTH
en: his-hidden-treasures | es: sus-tesoros-escondidos | fr: ses-trésors-cachés! | de: seine-Verstecke Obad 1:6

מָצַץ H4711 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (1×)
drink deeply, drain out, suck out (intensely consuming liquid nourishment)
This verb means to drain out, drink deeply, or suck intensely. It appears in Isaiah 66:11 in a promise of future blessing, where God's people will 'nurse and be satisfied' and 'drink deeply and delight' from Jerusalem's abundance. The term is parallel to nursing imagery, suggesting vigorous, satisfying consumption. BDB notes cognates in Aramaic and Arabic for sucking or pressing out liquid. The metaphor evokes both maternal nourishment and abundant satisfaction.

(1×) To drain out or drink deeply, consuming liquid fully and satisfyingly. Isaiah uses this in parallel with nursing, promising that God's people will draw abundant nourishment from Jerusalem's glory. The verb conveys intensity and thorough satisfaction, not mere sipping but deep drinking. Spanish 'exprimáis' captures the squeezing-out sense, while English translations vary from 'drink deeply' to 'drain out'. NURSING SUCKLING INFANT en: you-may-drink-deeply | es: exprimáis | fr: [תמצו] | de: [תמצו] Isa 66:11

מֵצַר H4712 Art / N-ms (3×)
Straits, distress, or severe difficulties that hem one in on every side
This noun describes extreme difficulty or anguish, using the spatial metaphor of being hemmed into a narrow, constricted place with no escape. The psalmist calls out from 'the straits' and finds broad relief (Ps 118). The parallel with 'cords of death' and 'Sheol' in Psalm 116 shows this is existential dread, life-threatening crisis. Lamentations uses the plural to describe conquered Judah overtaken in her narrow places. The imagery is claustrophobic—being trapped, pressed, with no room to maneuver.

(3×) Dire straits or distress, often mortal danger. Psalm 116:3 pairs 'the straits of Sheol' with 'the cords of death'—extreme peril. Psalm 118:5 declares 'out of the straits I called upon the LORD; the LORD answered me with enlargement'—moving from constriction to spacious relief. Lamentations 1:3 describes Judah's enemies overtaking her 'between the straits,' meaning in her vulnerable, confined state. The German 'Bedrängnis' and Spanish 'angustia' capture this sense of crushing pressure. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: and-the-straits-of, the-distress, the-straits | es: la-angustia, las-angustias, y-angustias-de | fr: et-de-mes-adversaires, le-détresse, les-détresses | de: der-Aegypten, der-Bedrängnis, und-der-straits-von Ps 116:3; Ps 118:5; Lam 1:3

מִצְרִי H4713 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (76×)
Egyptian; a gentilic adjective/noun for persons from Egypt (masculine or feminine) and for the land of Egypt itself.
Hebrew mitsri is the gentilic form derived from Mitsrayim (Egypt), serving triple duty as a geographic reference, a masculine demonym, and a feminine demonym. The land sense dominates, appearing in narratives from Joseph's sojourn (Gen 41-46) through the Exodus and beyond. When used of persons, it marks ethnic identity with social implications — Hagar is 'the Egyptian' (ha-mitsrit, Gen 16:1), and an unnamed Egyptian man rescued by David's troops (1 Sam 30:11) is identified primarily by nationality. Spanish distinguishes 'egipcio' from 'egipcia,' and German 'Ägypter' from 'Ägypterin,' preserving the gender distinction that English obscures.

1. Egypt (country/land) (46×) The land and nation of Egypt (Mitsrayim) used as a geographic and political proper noun. In Gen 41:55-56, 'all the land of Egypt' (kol-erets mitsrayim) suffers famine; in Gen 45:2, Joseph's weeping is heard in 'the house of Pharaoh' in Egypt. Spanish 'Mitsráyim' sometimes preserves the Hebrew name directly, while French 'Égypte' and German 'Ägypten' use the Greco-Latin derivation. This geographic sense accounts for the majority of occurrences and frames Egypt as both setting and symbol throughout the biblical narrative. EGYPT PLACE NAME
en: Egypt | es: Mitsrayim, Mitsráyim | fr: Égypte | de: Aegypten, die-Ägypter, Ägypten Gen 41:55; Gen 41:56; Gen 43:32; Gen 45:2; Gen 46:34

2. Egyptian (masculine gentilic) (25×) A masculine gentilic adjective or noun referring to an Egyptian man or group of Egyptian men. Potiphar is 'an Egyptian man' (ish mitsri, Gen 39:1); the Egyptian whom Moses killed (Exod 2:11-12) is identified by this same term. The plural hammitsrim refers to the Egyptians collectively as a people group (Gen 12:12, 14). German 'Ägypter' and Spanish 'egipcio' both function as noun and adjective, mirroring the Hebrew flexibility. The social marking is important — being 'Egyptian' carries narrative weight regarding power, otherness, and eventual inclusion (Deut 23:8). EGYPTIAN GENTILIC
en: Egyptian, Mitsri, the-Egyptian | es: egipcio, el-egipcio, el-mitsri | fr: Egyptian, [המצרי], [מצרי] | de: Aegypter, Egyptian, [המצרי] Gen 12:12; Gen 12:14; Gen 39:1; Gen 39:2; Gen 39:5

3. Egyptian (feminine gentilic) (5×) A feminine gentilic adjective or noun for an Egyptian woman or women. Hagar is consistently called 'the Egyptian' (hammitsrit) in Gen 16:1, 3 and 21:9, and Ishmael's mother is identified this way in Gen 25:12. The Egyptian midwives are contrasted with 'the Hebrew women' in Exod 1:19 using the feminine plural mitsriyyot. German distinguishes 'die Ägypterin' clearly, and Spanish uses 'egipcia/la egipcia.' This feminine form carries its own narrative significance, especially in the Hagar cycle where ethnic identity intersects with themes of marginalization and divine care. EGYPTIAN GENTILIC
en: Egyptian, the-Egyptian | es: egipcia, la-egipcia, la-mitzrit | fr: le-Égyptien, Égyptien | de: der-Aegypter, der-Ägypterin, die-Ägypterin Gen 16:1; Gen 16:3; Gen 21:9; Gen 25:12; Exod 1:19

מִצְרַיִם H4714 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (635×)

Egypt (the land and nation); Mizraim (son of Ham, ancestor of the Egyptians in the Table of Nations).

Mitsrayim appears over 630 times as the Hebrew name for Egypt — the defining foreign nation in Israel's story, from Joseph's descent to the Exodus to prophetic oracles. The dual-like ending (-ayim) has been debated as possibly reflecting Upper and Lower Egypt, though some scholars see it as a locative form. Spanish Egipto, French Égypte, and German Ägypten all derive from the Greek Aigyptos rather than the Semitic root. In four passages within the Table of Nations (Gen 10:6, 13; 1 Chr 1:8, 11), the same word serves as a personal name — Mizraim, son of Ham — where translations like und-Mizrajim (Ger.) and Y-Mitsráyim (Spa.) reflect the eponymous ancestor rather than the territory.

1. Egypt (the land) (631×) The geographic and political entity of Egypt — the land, its people, and its government as the defining foreign power in Israel's narrative. Covers all prepositional constructions: dwelling in, coming out of, going down to, and prophetic oracles against Egypt. Uniformly Egipto (Spa.), Égypte (Fra.), Ägypten (Ger.) across 631 occurrences (Gen 37:36; Exod 1:1; Isa 19:1). EGYPT PLACE NAME

en: Egypt | es: Egipto, Mitsrayim, Mitzrayim | fr: Égypte | de: Ägypten, Ägyptens, Ägyptens-ist Gen 13:10; Gen 15:18; Gen 21:21; Gen 25:18; Gen 37:36

2. Mizraim (son of Ham) (4×) The personal name Mizraim, son of Ham and grandson of Noah, the eponymous ancestor of the Egyptian people in the Table of Nations. Distinguished from the territorial sense by its masculine singular usage and genealogical context. German und-Mizrajim and Spanish Y-Mitsráyim preserve the personal name form (Gen 10:6, 13; 1 Chr 1:8, 11). EGYPT PLACE NAME

en: and-Mitsrayim, and-Mizraim | es: Y-Mitsrayim, Y-Mitsráyim, y-Mitsrayim | fr: et-Mizraim, et-Égypte | de: und-Aegypten, und-Mizrajim Gen 10:6; Gen 10:13; 1Chr 1:8; 1Chr 1:11 a crucible or refining pot used to purify silver through intense heat

מַצְרֵף H4715 N-ms (2×)

This noun appears twice in Proverbs as part of parallel wisdom sayings about testing and refining. 'The crucible is for silver, and the furnace is for gold, and the LORD tests hearts' (17:3). 'The crucible is for silver, and the furnace is for gold, and a man is tested by his praise' (27:21). The crucible (maṣrēp̄) is the vessel for refining silver, using high heat to separate precious metal from dross. The proverbs use this metallurgical process as metaphor: just as silver's quality is proven in the crucible, so human character is tested—by God or by how one handles praise.

(2×) A crucible or refining pot for purifying silver. Both Proverbs texts pair 'crucible for silver' with 'furnace for gold,' establishing a metallurgical parallel before making a theological point. The crucible applies intense heat to melt metal and separate impurities, a process requiring skill and producing purity. This becomes an apt metaphor for divine or human testing that reveals true character. The Spanish 'crisol' precisely names this implement. The refining imagery runs throughout Scripture as a symbol of purifying judgment and character formation. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: a-crucible, refining-pot | es: Crisol | fr: מצרף | de: von-laeuterte Prov 17:3; Prov 27:21

מַק H4716 Prep-k (2×)

rot, decay, or putrefaction; decomposition and foul odor

This noun denotes rot or decay, appearing twice in Isaiah's judgment oracles. 'Instead of perfume there will be rottenness' (3:24) contrasts the finery of Jerusalem's elite women with their coming humiliation and decay. 'Their root will be as rottenness, and their blossom go up like dust' (5:24) depicts Israel's judgment using agricultural imagery —a plant rotting from the roots, its flower disintegrating. Both uses emphasize corruption and decomposition, the reversal of beauty and vitality. Rottenness represents not just death but disgraceful, malodorous decay.

(2×) Decay, rottenness, or putrefaction. Isaiah 3:24 employs it in a reversal list: beauty becomes shame, perfume becomes stench ('rot'). Chapter 5:24 uses botanical imagery: a nation that rejects Torah becomes like a plant with rotting roots and dusty blossoms, unable to sustain life. The Spanish 'podredumbre' and 'hedor' (putrefaction, stench) capture both the physical decomposition and the olfactory offense. This is not peaceful death but shameful dissolution, organic collapse that announces divine judgment through the senses. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: as-the-rot, rottenness | es: como-podredumbre, hedor | fr: [כמק], [מק] | de: [כמק], [מק] Isa 3:24; Isa 5:24

מַקֶּבֶת H4717 Conj-w / N-fp (3×)

Hammers used for driving nails, pegs, or shaping metal in construction and craftsmanship

This term for hammers appears in contexts of building and idol-making. Solomon's temple was built with such reverence that no hammer was heard at the construction site—stones were pre-cut (1 Kgs 6). Isaiah and Jeremiah use the term when describing idol fabrication: the craftsman shapes metal with hammers and fastens it with nails. The hammer represents both creative craftsmanship and, ironically, the futile effort to make gods from raw materials. It's the tool for driving pegs (as with Jael's tent peg) and shaping resistant materials.

(3×) Hammers for construction or metalworking. First Kings 6:7 notes that in building the temple, 'neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron was heard' at the construction site. Isaiah 44:12 describes the metalworker: 'he works it with hammers and forges it.' Jeremiah 10:4 depicts idol-making: 'they fasten it with nails and with hammers so that it cannot move.' The consistent rendering across languages as 'hammer' or 'martillo' confirms the tool's basic identity as an implement for striking. METAL HAMMERING

en: and-hammers, and-with-hammers | es: y-con-martillos, y-martillos | fr: [ובמקבות], et-hammers | de: [ובמקבות], und-hammers 1Kgs 6:7; Isa 44:12; Jer 10:4

מַקֶּבֶת H4718a Art / N-fs (1×)

hammer, a tool for driving nails and pegs or striking with force

This word denotes a hammer, a tool used for driving nails, pegs, or striking objects. It appears in several contexts: Jael's weapon against Sisera (Judges 4:21), construction work on Solomon's temple (1 Kings 6:7), and idol-making (Isaiah 44:12, Jeremiah 10:4). The term is associated with forceful striking and craftsmanship. The Maccabee family name may derive from this word, meaning 'hammer'. Multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'hammer', reflecting its straightforward tool identity.

(1×) A hammer used for driving tent pegs, nails, or working with wood and stone. In Judges 4:21, it becomes Jael's weapon; in temple construction, it shapes sacred space; in prophetic critique, it fashions idols. The tool's versatility—from domestic to military to religious contexts—makes it a potent symbol. All translations render this uniformly as 'hammer'. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11984 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-hammer | es: el-martillo | fr: le-marteau | de: der-hammer Judg 4:21

מַקֶּבֶת H4718b N-fsc (1×)

hole, excavation, quarry (pit from which stone is dug)

This noun means hole, excavation, or quarry—specifically the pit or opening from which material is extracted. In Isaiah 51:1, God tells His people to 'look to the rock from which you were hewn, and to the hole of the pit from which you were dug'. The metaphor compares Israel's origins to stone quarried from rock, emphasizing their extraction from Abraham and Sarah. The term is technical vocabulary related to mining or quarrying, denoting the excavated space rather than the tool used.

(1×) The excavated hole or quarry from which stone is extracted. Isaiah's metaphor uses this to remind Israel of their origins—they were 'dug out' like stone from a quarry, paralleling 'the rock from which you were hewn'. The image emphasizes both humble origins and divine crafting. Translations vary from 'hole of the pit' to 'quarry', with Spanish 'cavadura' suggesting the act of digging. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hole-of | es: cavadura-de | fr: [מקבת] | de: [מקבת] Isa 51:1

מַקֵּדָה H4719 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (9×)

Makkedah, a Canaanite royal city in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah, captured by Joshua during his southern campaign.

A Canaanite city in the low hill country of Judah, Makkedah is remembered chiefly for the dramatic episode in which five Amorite kings hid in its cave during Joshua's rout after the battle of Gibeon (Josh 10:16-17). Joshua sealed the cave, completed the pursuit, then returned to execute the kings and capture the city (Josh 10:28). It appears in the list of conquered kings (Josh 12:16) and among the towns of Judah's inheritance (Josh 15:41). The Greek Septuagint renders it Makeda, and the site is tentatively identified near modern el-Mughar, southwest of Ekron.

Makkedah (proper name, Canaanite city) (9×) The proper place-name Makkedah, designating a fortified Canaanite city in the Shephelah near Beth-horon and Libnah. All nine occurrences cluster around Joshua's southern campaign narrative (Josh 10:10, 16, 17, 21, 28, 29; 12:16; 15:41). The multilingual evidence uniformly transliterates the name – Spanish 'Maqueda,' French and German 'Makkedah' – confirming its status as a single, unambiguous toponym with no semantic extension. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Makkedah, and-Makkedah, at-Makkedah | es: Maqueda, de-Maqueda, en-Maqueda | fr: Makkedah, de-Makkedah, et-Makkedah | de: Makkedah, bei-Makkedah, und-Makkedah Josh 10:10; Josh 10:16; Josh 10:17; Josh 10:21; Josh 10:28

מִקְדָּשׁ H4720 Conj-w / N-msc (74×)

A sacred place or sanctuary; the consecrated space set apart for the worship and presence of God.

Miqdash refers to any place made holy by God's consecrated presence — from Israel's earliest shrines to Solomon's temple and Ezekiel's visionary sanctuary. The word carries weight: it is the place where the holy God condescends to dwell among his people ('let them make me a miqdash, that I may dwell among them,' Exod 25:8). In its plural form it can denote the various precincts of the temple complex or, ominously, the sanctuaries God threatens to destroy (Lev 26:31). Across languages the translations converge on holiness — Spanish 'santuario,' French 'sanctuaire,' German 'Heiligtum' — underscoring that the defining feature is not architecture but divine consecration.

1. sanctuary, holy place (65×) The primary sense of a singular sacred place — the tabernacle, temple, or any site set apart for divine worship and the dwelling of God's presence. This covers the vast majority of occurrences, from the Song of the Sea's 'sanctuary which your hands established' (Exod 15:17) to the detailed Levitical regulations about approaching the holy place (Lev 12:4; 16:33). The multilingual consensus — 'sanctuary/santuario/sanctuaire/Heiligtum' — confirms this as the core meaning. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: my-sanctuary, of-the-sanctuary, the-sanctuary | es: el-santuario, santuario-mío | fr: le-sanctuaire, pour-sanctuaire, sanctuaire | de: Heiligtum, [המקדש], das-Heiligtum Exod 15:17; Exod 25:8; Lev 12:4; Lev 16:33; Lev 19:30

2. sanctuaries, holy places (8×) The plural form designating multiple sacred places or the various precincts within a temple complex. Sometimes it refers to legitimate divisions of the sanctuary (Ps 68:35; 73:17, 'I went into the sanctuaries of God'), but it can also denote the condemned high places and illegitimate shrines that God promises to lay waste (Lev 26:31) or the defiled sanctuaries of Jerusalem (Jer 51:51; Ezek 21:7). The pluralization signals either architectural complexity or multiplied apostasy. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: and-the-sanctuaries-of-, from-Your-sanctuary, my-sanctuaries | es: desde-tus-santuarios, santuarios, santuarios-de | fr: de-sanctuaire, et-sanctuaire, mon-sanctuaire | de: Heiligtum, [ומקדשי], [מקדשי] Lev 21:23; Lev 26:31; Ps 68:35; Ps 73:17; Jer 51:51

3. (1×) A unique occurrence in Num 18:29 where the word denotes a consecrated portion rather than a physical place — the best part (literally 'its holy portion') separated from the Levitical tithe as an offering to the Lord. English 'its consecrated portion,' Spanish 'su porción consagrada,' and French 'son consacra portion' all reflect this shift from sacred space to sacred allocation, an extension where the holiness of the sanctuary is projected onto the dedicated gift itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-consecrated-portion | es: su-porción-consagrada | fr: son-consacra-portion | de: sein-weihte-Anteil Num 18:29

מַקְהֵל H4721 Prep-b / N-fp (2×)

assemblies or congregations, possibly choirs gathered for worship

This plural noun appears in two Psalms, apparently denoting assemblies or congregations, possibly with emphasis on worship gatherings or choirs. 'My foot stands on level ground; in the assemblies I will bless the LORD' (Psalm 26:12). 'In the congregations bless God, the LORD, O you who are of Israel's fountain' (Psalm 68:26). Both contexts involve corporate praise. Some scholars suggest the term specifically refers to choirs or singing assemblies, given the liturgical setting. The imagery is communal worship, public blessing of God before gathered witnesses.

(2×) Assemblies, congregations, or gatherings for worship, possibly choirs. Psalm 26:12 concludes a protestation of innocence with a vow to bless YHWH 'in the assemblies'—public, corporate settings as opposed to private devotion. Psalm 68:26, in a triumphal procession scene with singers and musicians, calls for God to be blessed 'in the congregations.' The plural suggests multiple gatherings or perhaps different groups within the assembly. The Spanish 'asambleas,' 'congregaciones' and French 'rassemblement' reflect the gathering aspect, though a more specialized meaning (choirs) remains possible given the musical context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-assemblies | es: En-asambleas, en-congregaciones | fr: dans-rassemblement | de: in-der-assemblies Ps 26:12; Ps 68:26

מַקְהֵלֹת H4722 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

a place name meaning 'place of assembly,' a station during Israel's wilderness journey

Makheloth appears as a camping station during Israel's wilderness wanderings, recorded in the itinerary of Numbers 33:25-26. The Israelites departed from Mount Shepher and camped at Makheloth, then departed from Makheloth and camped at Tahath. The name likely means 'assemblies' or 'places of assembly,' possibly denoting a natural gathering place or a site where the congregation assembled. Like most wilderness stations, its precise location is unknown, though it falls within the Sinai region according to the narrative sequence. The Septuagint renders it Makēlōth.

(2×) A proper noun denoting a wilderness encampment site during the Exodus. Numbers 33 provides a detailed itinerary of Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan; Makheloth is one of the stations between Egypt and Kadesh. The name's apparent derivation from 'assembly' may indicate the site's character or function—perhaps a natural amphitheater suitable for gathering the community. The multilingual glosses preserve the Hebrew name (Makheloth, Machelot) with directional prepositions, showing this is a place rather than a common noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Makheloth, in-Makheloth | es: de-Machelot, en-Machelot | fr: dans-Makheloth, de-Makheloth | de: in-Makheloth, von-Makheloth Num 33:25; Num 33:26

קְוֵה H4723a Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Kue — geographical name for Cilicia in southeastern Anatolia, source of Solomon's horses

This proper noun refers to Kue (also spelled Que), a region in ancient Cilicia in what is now southeastern Turkey. The name appears exclusively in the accounts of Solomon's international trade, specifically regarding the import of horses. The Septuagint transliterates it as 'Thekouë' or 'Koa,' and the Vulgate as 'Coa.' Modern scholarship identifies this with the Neo-Assyrian province of Que in Cilicia, a region known for horse breeding in the ancient Near East. The multilingual glosses preserve the prepositional prefix ('from Kue'), showing these were commercial transactions.

(4×) A territorial designation for the region of Cilicia, appearing in texts about Solomon's horse trade (1 Kgs 10:28 twice, 2 Chr 1:16 twice). The context indicates Kue was a major source for importing horses into Israel, alongside Egypt. Ancient Cilicia was renowned for its horses in Neo-Assyrian records. The textual variants (מִקְוֵה/מִקְוָא) and versional evidence (LXX 'Thekouë,' Vulgate 'Coa') support reading this as a geographical name rather than the common noun 'hope' (מִקְוֶה), though the consonantal text is identical. FLOWING WATER

en: and-from-Kue, and-from-Qeveh, from-Kue | es: de-Queva, desde-Que, y-de-Queva | fr: [ומקוא], [מקוא], de-Kue | de: [ומקוא], [מקוא], und-von-Kue 1Kgs 10:28; 2Chr 1:16

מִקְוֶה H4723b N-msc (5×)

hope, expectation — confident waiting directed toward God as Israel's ultimate ground of hope

A profound theological noun meaning 'hope' or 'ground of expectation,' used almost exclusively of hope directed toward God. In three of its five occurrences, it serves as a divine title — 'O Hope of Israel, O LORD' (Jer 14:8; 17:13; 50:7) — identifying God himself as the source and object of Israel's confident expectation. David confessed before the assembly that 'our days on earth are like a shadow, and there is no hope' apart from God (1 Chr 29:15), while Ezra declared that despite Israel's guilt, 'there is still hope for Israel' (Ezra 10:2). Spanish 'Esperanza' and German 'hoffte' both emphasize the forward-looking, confident trust this word conveys.

(5×) Hope or expectation, especially as grounded in God. Used of human hope that finds its basis in divine faithfulness. David acknowledges that apart from God, earthly existence offers 'no hope' (1 Chr 29:15), while Shecaniah insists that despite covenant-breaking, 'there is hope for Israel' through repentance (Ezra 10:2). Spanish 'esperanza' and German 'hoffte' render the confident, forward-looking quality of this expectation. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: Hope-of, and-the-hope-of, hope | es: Esperanza-de, esperanza, y-esperanza-de | fr: [ומקוה], [מקוה] | de: [ומקוה], [מקוה], von-hoffte 1Chr 29:15; Ezra 10:2; Jer 14:8; Jer 17:13; Jer 50:7

מִקְוֶה H4723c Conj-w (3×)

A gathering or collection, especially of waters in one place

This creation-account term describes waters being gathered into one place, forming seas and allowing dry land to appear. Genesis 1 uses it for God's separation of water from land—the 'gathering of waters' he called Seas. The Exodus and Leviticus occurrences refer to collections of water, whether in Egypt's waterways or in a ritual pool. The term emphasizes accumulation in a bounded space—water gathered rather than dispersed, collected rather than flowing freely.

(3×) A collection or gathering, primarily of water. Genesis 1:10 records that 'God called the gathering of waters Seas'—the primordial pooling that revealed dry ground. Exodus 7:19 refers to 'all the gatherings of water' in Egypt that would turn to blood. Leviticus 11:36 distinguishes 'a spring or a gathering of water' as remaining clean even if touched by unclean carcasses. The French 'rassemblant' and Spanish 'reunión' capture this sense of bringing together into one place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-to-gathering-of, collection-of, gathering-of- | es: depósito-de, depósito-de-, y-a-la-reunión-de | fr: collection-de, et-à-gathering-de, rassemblant-de- | de: collection-von, gathering-von-, und-die-Sammlung Gen 1:10; Exod 7:19; Lev 11:36

מִקְוָה H4724 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

reservoir, water storage basin or pool for collecting water

This word refers to a reservoir, a constructed basin or pool for storing water. It appears in Isaiah 22:11, where Jerusalem's leaders are criticized for making a reservoir between the two walls for the water of the old pool, yet failing to look to God. The term is technical vocabulary for water management infrastructure, important in ancient urban planning. The reservoir served practical purposes of water collection and storage, especially critical during sieges.

(1×) A reservoir or water storage basin, typically a constructed pool for collecting and holding water. Isaiah's critique focuses on Jerusalem's physical preparations (building reservoirs) while neglecting spiritual reliance on God. The engineering project represents human self-sufficiency contrasted with divine dependence. The term is straightforward water infrastructure vocabulary. FLOWING WATER

en: and-reservoir | es: Y-depósito | fr: [ומקוה] | de: [ומקוה] Isa 22:11

מָקוֹם H4725 Prep-m / N-ms (401×)

Place, location, site — a physical spot, locality, or appointed position; rarely, a measured distance or space.

Maqom is the everyday Hebrew word for 'place' — one of the most frequent nouns in the Hebrew Bible with over 400 occurrences. It spans a wide range from a specific spot where one stands (Exod 3:5, 'the place where you stand is holy ground') to named localities, regions, and appointed positions. Translations across languages consistently use their basic spatial term: English 'place,' Spanish lugar, French lieu, German Ort. A single occurrence at 1 Sam 26:13, where David put distance between himself and Saul, shows an unusual sense of measured space or distance, reflected in English 'the distance' and Spanish el espacio.

1. place, location, site (400×) A physical place, location, site, or appointed position (400x). This overwhelmingly dominant sense covers everything from the sacred ground at the burning bush (Exod 3:5) to the place Abraham stood before the LORD (Gen 18:24) to regions and named localities. All major translations converge on a single core spatial term — English 'the place,' Spanish el lugar, French le lieu, German Ort — confirming a remarkably stable semantic core across contexts of worship, travel, habitation, and law. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-place | es: al-lugar, el-lugar | fr: le-lieu | de: Ort, dem-Ort, den-Ort Gen 13:3; Gen 13:14; Gen 18:24; Gen 18:26; Gen 19:12

2. (1×) A measured distance or intervening space (1x at 1 Sam 26:13). David crossed over and stood on a mountaintop 'at a distance,' putting space between himself and Saul's camp. The translation signatures shift here: English 'the distance,' Spanish el espacio, French le distance — all signaling spatial extent rather than a fixed location. This rare sense captures maqom as the gap or interval between two points rather than a point itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-distance | es: el-espacio | fr: le-distance | de: der-distance 1Sam 26:13

מָקוֹר H4726 Prep-m / N-msc (18×)

A spring or fountain; literally a water source, figuratively the origin of life, wisdom, blessing, or purification; also a bodily flow of blood.

In the Hebrew Bible, this noun evokes the image of a living spring welling up from the earth. Jeremiah twice calls the LORD the 'fountain of living waters' (Jer 2:13; 17:13), and Proverbs applies the same image to the mouth of the righteous, the fear of the LORD, and a wellspring of wisdom. The multilingual evidence is illuminating: German consistently renders it Quelle ('source, spring'), Spanish Fuente de, and French source de, all preserving the 'origin' metaphor. In Levitical purity law, the same word shifts to the bodily flow of blood, a concrete physiological sense that stands apart from the figurative spring imagery.

1. spring, fountain, source (16×) A spring or fountain of water, used overwhelmingly in figurative contexts. God himself is called the 'fountain of living waters' (Jer 2:13; 17:13), and Psalm 36:9 declares 'with you is the fountain of life.' Proverbs extends the metaphor to wisdom, teaching, and the fear of the LORD as life-giving sources (Prov 10:11; 13:14; 14:27). The German Quelle and French source consistently capture this origin-point nuance. Zechariah 13:1 envisions a fountain opened for cleansing from sin – a purification spring that resonates across all the translation traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fountain, a-fountain-of, and-a-fountain | es: Fuente-de, de-fuente-de, desde-fuente-de | fr: de-source, de-source-de, et-source | de: Quelle, ist-Brunnen-von, und-Quelle Lev 12:7; Ps 36:9; Ps 68:26; Prov 5:18; Prov 10:11

2. flow, bodily issue (2×) A bodily flow or discharge, specifically the flow of blood in the context of Levitical purity regulations (Lev 20:18). Here the concrete hydraulic image of a spring is transferred to the human body. Spanish fuente de and English 'flow of' both reflect this shift from natural spring to physiological emission, marking a distinct semantic domain from the figurative 'source of life' usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flow-her, flow-of | es: fuente, fuente-de | fr: flow-de, flow-sa | de: flow-ihr, flow-von Lev 20:18

מִקָּח H4727 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

taking, receiving (especially the acceptance of bribes or corrupt payment)

This noun denotes taking or receiving, particularly in the context of accepting bribes. In 2 Chronicles 19:7, King Jehoshaphat instructs judges that there is no injustice with the Lord, 'nor taking of bribes'. The term emphasizes the act of receiving or accepting, especially when ethically problematic. The construct form links directly to 'bribe' (shochad), making the corruption explicit. Translations render this variously as 'taking of bribes', 'receiving bribes', or 'partiality'.

(1×) The act of taking or receiving, specifically the acceptance of bribes in judicial contexts. Jehoshaphat's charge to judges warns against corruption—God judges justly and accepts no bribes, so neither should His representatives. The term focuses on the receiving end of bribery, the judge's culpable action of accepting corrupt payment. Spanish 'ni recibir' emphasizes the prohibition of receiving. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: and-taking-of- | es: ni-recibir | fr: [ומקח] | de: [ומקח] 2Chr 19:7

מַקָּחָה H4728 Art / N-fp (1×)

wares, merchandise, goods bought and sold in trade

This word means wares or merchandise—goods offered for sale in trade or commerce. It appears in Nehemiah 10:31, where the returned exiles pledge not to buy 'the wares' from foreign peoples on the Sabbath or holy days. The term derives from the root 'to take/receive', suggesting goods received in trade. It represents commercial vocabulary, the everyday items bought and sold in markets. The covenant commitment prioritizes Sabbath observance over economic opportunity.

(1×) Merchandise or trade goods, the wares brought by foreign merchants for sale. Nehemiah's community pledges to refuse purchasing these goods on sacred days, even if it means economic loss. The term encompasses the full range of market items—food, tools, textiles—anything offered for sale. Translations consistently render this as 'wares' or 'merchandise'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-wares | es: las-mercancías | fr: [המקחות] | de: [המקחות] Neh 10:31

מַקְטֵר H4729 N-msc (1×)

burning, place of burning incense (altar designated for offering fragrant smoke)

This noun refers to burning, specifically the place or act of burning incense. It occurs in Exodus 30:1 in the description of the altar of incense: 'an altar, a place of burning incense'. The term is technical priestly vocabulary, denoting either the location where incense is offered or the act of burning itself. BDB notes scholarly debate whether this is a noun of place or action. The incense altar was a central fixture in tabernacle worship, positioned before the veil.

(1×) The place or act of burning incense, specifically referring to the incense altar in the tabernacle. Exodus designates this altar for the sacred offering of fragrant smoke to God. The term may emphasize either location (the altar as burning-place) or action (the act of burning). Either reading highlights the altar's dedicated function. Translations vary between 'altar of burning incense' and 'altar for burning incense'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: burning-of | es: quemar | fr: brûlant-de | de: burning-von Exod 30:1

מִקְטֶרֶת H4730 N-fs (2×)

a censer or incense burner used in ritual worship

This feminine noun denotes a censer, the implement for burning incense in worship. It appears in 2 Chronicles 26:19, where King Uzziah holds a censer to burn incense unlawfully in the temple, and in Ezekiel 8:11, where seventy elders stand before idolatrous imagery, 'each with his censer in his hand,' creating a thick cloud of incense. Both contexts involve irregular or illegitimate incense burning. The censer was normally a priestly tool; Uzziah's presumption in taking it triggered his leprosy, while the elders' use represents syncretistic worship condemned by the prophet.

(2×) A censer or incense burner, the vessel for holding burning coals and incense. Uzziah's censer becomes an instrument of transgression when the king usurps priestly prerogative; leprosy breaks out 'while he had the censer in his hand.' Ezekiel's vision shows misuse from the opposite direction: authorized priests or elders deploy censers for idolatrous worship within the temple precincts. The Spanish 'incensario' and French 'encensoir' name this liturgical tool, which symbolizes both legitimate worship (when properly used) and sacrilege (when misappropriated). INCENSE CENSER

en: censer, censer-of-him | es: incensario, incensario-de-él | fr: [מקטרת], encensoir | de: [מקטרת], [מקטרתו] 2Chr 26:19; Ezek 8:11

מַקֵּל H4731 N-msc (18×)

Rod, staff, or stick; a cut branch used as a walking aid, shepherd's tool, symbol of authority, or weapon

A versatile Hebrew noun denoting a piece of wood cut from a tree and put to various uses. In Jacob's famous breeding stratagem (Gen 30:37-41), the word appears repeatedly for the peeled rods placed before the flocks — Spanish 'varas' and German 'Stäben' capture the stripped-stick sense well. Elsewhere it names the traveler's walking staff (Gen 32:10), the shepherd's club David carried against Goliath (1 Sam 17:40), and Jeremiah's visionary almond branch (Jer 1:11). The range from botanical branch to weapon of war (Ezek 39:9) shows how a single piece of wood could serve many purposes in the ancient Near East.

1. rods or sticks (8×) Rods or sticks used for a specific practical purpose, most prominently the peeled wooden rods Jacob set before the watering troughs to influence the markings of his flocks (Gen 30:37-41). Spanish consistently renders these as 'varas' (rods) while German uses 'Stäben,' both highlighting their function as crafted implements rather than natural branches. The plural form מַקְלוֹת dominates this sense, emphasizing sets of prepared sticks. RODS AND STAFFS en: among-the-rods, rod-of, staffs | es: cayados, con-los-palos, las-varas | fr: [מקלות], avec-sticks, le-rods | de: [מקלות], bei-den-Stäben, den-Stäben Gen 30:37; Gen 30:38; Gen 30:39; Gen 30:41

2. staff or rod (8×) A staff or rod carried by a person as a personal implement — a shepherd's club, a pilgrim's walking stick, or a symbol of authority and office. Jacob recalls crossing the Jordan with only his staff (Gen 32:10), the Israelites eat Passover with staff in hand (Exod 12:11), and Jeremiah laments the breaking of Moab's 'staff of strength' (Jer 48:17). Spanish 'cayado/báculo' and French 'bâton' consistently distinguish this carried-staff sense from the plural rods above. RODS AND STAFFS en: and-their-staff, and-your-staff, my-staff | es: báculo-de, cayado-suyo, con-

cayado-mío | fr: [מקל], avec-le-bâton, avec-mon-bâton | de: [ומקלו], [מקל], [מקלי] Gen 32:10; Exod 12:11; Num 22:27; 1Sam 17:40; Jer 48:17

3. branch of a tree (1×) A branch or shoot still connected to or freshly cut from a tree, emphasizing its botanical origin. In Jeremiah's inaugural vision (Jer 1:11), God shows the prophet a מַקֵּל שָׁקֵד — an almond branch — as a wordplay on divine watchfulness (שֹׁקֵד). Here the botanical sense is primary; French and German leave the Hebrew untranslated, recognizing the difficulty of capturing both the object and the pun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-branch | es: rama-de | fr: [מקל] | de: [מקל] Jer 1:11

4. club or weapon (1×) A club or heavy stick wielded as a weapon of war. In Ezekiel 39:9, among the military equipment burned after Gog's defeat, the מַקֵּל appears alongside shields, bows, and spears. Spanish 'bastón de' (war-club) and English 'war-club' mark this distinctly martial usage, setting it apart from the peaceful shepherd's staff. RODS AND STAFFS en: and-with-war-club | es: y-con-bastón-de | fr: [ובמקל] | de: [ובמקל] Ezek 39:9

מִקְלוֹת H4732 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Miqlot — personal name, a Benjamite clan leader and one of David's officers

Miqlot is a personal name appearing in Chronicles' genealogical and administrative records. The name occurs in two distinct contexts: first, as a Benjamite family head in the genealogy of Saul's clan (1 Chr 8-9), and second, as an officer in David's military organization. The Septuagint renders the name with various Greek spellings (Makalōth, Makellōth), though the LXX omits the reference in 1 Chronicles 27:4. The meaning of the name likely derives from a root related to 'rods' or 'staffs,' though its exact significance is uncertain.

(4×) A Benjamite personal name borne by at least two individuals: (1) A descendant in the genealogy of King Saul, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:32, 9:37-38 as part of the families living in Jerusalem. The genealogical parallel suggests he may also be referenced at the end of 8:31, though the text is uncertain there. (2) An officer who served under David according to 1 Chronicles 27:4, though this reference is absent from some Greek manuscripts. The repeated occurrences in genealogical lists indicate Miqlot was a recognized family name in post-exilic Benjamite lineages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Miqlot | es: Y-Miclot, y-Miclot | fr: et-Mikloth | de: [ומקלות] 1Chr 8:32; 1Chr 9:37; 1Chr 9:38; 1Chr 27:4

מִקְלָט H4733 N-msc (20×)

Refuge or asylum; used exclusively in the legal phrase 'cities of refuge' for those guilty of unintentional manslaughter.

A technical legal term appearing solely in the Priestly legislation and Joshua, always in the fixed phrase 'cities of refuge' (arei miqlat). These six designated cities provided asylum for a person who killed another unintentionally, protecting the manslayer from the blood avenger until trial could be held (Num 35:6–32; Josh 20:2–3; 21:13–38). Unlike the more general machseh (H4268), miqlat is entirely institutional — it names a legal mechanism, not a personal experience of divine protection. Every occurrence across all translations converges on this single juridical meaning.

refuge, city of refuge (20×) Asylum or legal refuge, designating the six Levitical cities set apart under Torah law to shelter those who committed accidental homicide from blood vengeance (Num 35:6–32; Josh 20:2–3; 21:13–38; 1 Chr 6:42, 52). The term is never used metaphorically or of God; it functions purely as a legal-institutional noun. Spanish 'refugio,' French 'refuge,' and German 'Zuflucht' all render the term identically, underscoring its narrow, fixed meaning within the cities-of-refuge legislation. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT
en: for-refuge, his-refuge, refuge | es: el-refugio, para-refugio, refugio | fr: [המקלט], le-refuge, pour-refuge | de: Zuflucht, Zuflucht-von, [המקלט] Num 35:6; Num 35:11; Num 35:12; Num 35:13; Num 35:14

מִקְלַעַת H4734 N-fsc (4×)

miqlaat — carved work, decorative engraving on temple woodwork and metal

This Hebrew noun denotes ornamental carving or engraving work, appearing exclusively in descriptions of Solomon's temple construction. The term refers to the decorative relief work that adorned the cedar panels inside the temple and the bronze stands outside. All four occurrences appear in 1 Kings 6-7, the detailed architectural account of the temple's interior and furnishings. The root connection to 'carving' or 'engraving' suggests skilled artistic work that enhanced the temple's beauty and sacred character.

(4×) Decorative carved or engraved work found on temple surfaces. In 1 Kings 6:18, it describes the carved ornaments on the cedar wood interior of the temple. Verses 6:29 and 32 refer to carvings of cherubim, palm trees, and flowers on the walls and doors. The final occurrence (7:31) describes engravings on the bronze stands (mekhonot) that held the lavers. The multilingual renderings consistently use terms for 'carvings' or 'engravings,' emphasizing the artistic, decorative nature of this temple ornamentation. This was specialized craftwork that transformed functional surfaces into objects of beauty for worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: carvings, carvings-of, engravings | es: grabados, tallado-de, tallados | fr: carvings, carvings-de, engravings | de: carvings, carvings-von, engravings 1Kgs 6:18; 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 7:31

מִקְנֶה H4735 Conj-w (76×)

Livestock, cattle — domesticated animals as movable wealth; occasionally the act or result of acquisition (from q-n-h, 'to acquire').

Miqneh is the quintessential pastoral-economy word, naming domesticated animals — cattle, sheep, goats, donkeys, camels — as the primary form of movable wealth in the ancient Near East. When Genesis describes Abraham as 'very rich in livestock (miqneh), in silver, and in gold' (Gen 13:2), the word captures both the animals and their economic value. Spanish ganado, French bétail, and German Vieh all render the collective livestock sense. In a handful of passages the root meaning of q-n-h ('to acquire') surfaces: miqneh can denote the act of purchase or the property acquired, as when Jacob's 'acquisition' (miqneh) is distinguished from his herds (Gen 49:32).

1. livestock, cattle, herds (70×) Collective noun for domesticated livestock — cattle, sheep, goats, donkeys, and camels viewed as movable pastoral property. Spanish ganado, French bétail, and German Vieh all confirm this as the default reading. Abraham's wealth is measured in miqneh (Gen 13:2); the plagues strike Egypt's miqneh (Exod 9:3); and the Transjordan tribes have abundant miqneh requiring pastureland (Num 32:1). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: cattle, livestock, livestock-of | es: el-ganado, ganado, ganado-de | fr: bétail, bétail-de, le-bétail | de: Vieh, Vieh-von, Viehzucht Gen 4:20; Gen 13:7; Gen 29:7; Gen 30:29

2. acquisition, purchase, possession (6×) Abstract or commercial sense tied to the root q-n-h ('to acquire'): the act of purchasing, the price of acquisition, or possessions broadly. Spanish compra-de and posesión-de reveal this shift from animals to the concept of acquisition. In Gen 49:32, Jacob's miqneh is listed alongside his burial cave as 'acquisition'; in Gen 26:14, Isaac's miqneh denotes his aggregate possessions, and Job 1:3 uses it to summarize Job's vast holdings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-his-livestock, and-livestock-of-, and-possession-of | es: Compra-de, posesión-de, su-ganado | fr: et-possession-de, et-son-troupeau-lui, et-troupeau | de: Herden-, [ומקנה], [ומקנהו] Gen 26:14; Gen 49:32; 2Chr 32:29; Job 1:3

מִקְנָה H4736 Conj-w / N-fsc (15×)

Purchase, acquisition — the act of buying, the price paid, or the property obtained through a transaction

This feminine noun (מִקְנָה) belongs to the legal and commercial vocabulary of the Pentateuch. Its most concentrated use is in Genesis 17, where Abraham's household members 'bought with money' (מִקְנַת כָּסֶף) are circumcised alongside the freeborn — a remarkable inclusion that ties covenant membership to the household rather than bloodline alone. In Jeremiah 32, the 'document of purchase' (סֵפֶר הַמִּקְנָה) for Jeremiah's field at Anathoth becomes a prophetic sign of future restoration. Leviticus 25 uses it for calculating the price of land relative to Jubilee years. The word thus spans act, price, and acquired possession.

purchase, acquisition, purchase price (15×) A feminine noun denoting the act of purchase, the purchase price, or the thing acquired through buying. Prominent in the Priestly source: 'bought with money' (מִקְנַת כֶּסֶף, Gen 17:12–13, 23, 27; Exod 12:44) describes household members included in the covenant of circumcision. In Jeremiah 32:11–16, the 'deed of purchase' (סֵפֶר הַמִּקְנָה) serves as a prophetic symbol of hope during the Babylonian siege. Leviticus 25:16, 51 and 27:22 employ it for calculating land value relative to Jubilee cycles. Genesis 23:18 uses it for Abraham's acquired possession at Machpelah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bought-with, as-a-purchase, bought-with | es: como-compra, compra-de-, comprados-de | fr: acheta-avec, comme-un-purchase, et-acheta-avec | de: Erkauften, der-Kauf, purchase-von- Gen 17:12; Gen 17:13; Gen 17:23; Gen 17:27; Gen 23:18

מִקְנְיָהוּ H4737 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

a Levitical musician's name meaning 'possession of Yah,' who served under David Mikneyahu appears as the name of a Levitical musician in David's organization of temple worship (1 Chronicles 15:18, 21). He was among the second order of Levites appointed to play lyres and harps when the ark was brought to Jerusalem. The name means 'possession of Yah' or 'Yah has acquired,' a theophoric name appropriate for one dedicated to temple service. The Greek translations vary (Makelleia, Makenia, Makkania), showing typical variance in rendering Hebrew names. He served in the joyful procession that installed the ark in its tent.

(2×) Proper name of a Levite musician during David's reign. First Chronicles 15:18 lists him among the gatekeepers and musicians of the second order, and verse 21 specifies he played lyres 'according to the Sheminith to lead' (possibly a musical term or key). His name joins the theophoric element 'Yah' with a word for possession or acquisition, suggesting he was understood as belonging to God or given by God. Such names frequently marked Levites and priests, emphasizing their consecration to divine service. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Mikneyahu | es: y-Micneías | fr: [ומקניהו] | de: [ומקניהו] 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:21

מִקְסָם H4738 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

divination, the practice of seeking supernatural knowledge through occult means

This noun denotes divination, the forbidden practice of seeking hidden knowledge through magical or occult techniques. Ezekiel condemns false prophets twice with this term: 'there shall no more be any false vision or flattering divination' (12:24), and 'Have you not seen a false vision and uttered a lying divination?' (13:7). Both passages pair 'divination' with 'false vision,' emphasizing deception. The adjectives 'flattering' and 'lying' clarify that this is not legitimate prophetic inquiry but manipulation. Ezekiel distinguishes true prophetic word from divinatory fakery that tells people what they want to hear.

(2×) Divination, the practice of seeking or claiming supernatural knowledge through prohibited means. Ezekiel 12:24 promises the end of false visions and 'flattering divination'—divinatory pronouncements that please hearers rather than convey God's word. Chapter 13:7 challenges the false prophets: 'You have spoken falsehood and seen lying divination'—their visions are fabricated and their divinatory claims are lies. The term represents illegitimate spiritual knowledge-seeking, condemned throughout Scripture as replacing dependence on God's revealed word with occult manipulation. DIVINATION PRODUCTS

en: and-divination-of | es: y-adivinación | fr: et-portion | de: [ומקסם] Ezek 12:24; Ezek 13:7

מָקֵץ H4739 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Makaz, a town in Israel (proper name of an administrative district location)

Makaz is the name of a town in Israel, location unknown. It appears in 1 Kings 4:9 as part of Solomon's administrative districts, where one of the king's officials was responsible for Makaz, Shaalbim, Beth-shemesh, and Elon-beth-hanan. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to a root meaning 'end' or 'extremity'. Ancient versions offer various transliterations, with the Septuagint rendering it as a different known location. The site has not been conclusively identified by modern archaeology.

(1×) A town name, Makaz, located in Solomon's administrative territory, likely in the region of Dan or northern Judah. The grouping with Shaalbim and Beth-shemesh suggests western central Israel. The mention demonstrates Solomon's organized bureaucratic system, dividing the kingdom into supply districts. Despite ancient testimony, the precise location remains unknown today. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: in-Makaz | es: en-Makats | fr: dans-Makaz | de: in-Makaz 1Kgs 4:9

מִקְצֹעַ H4740 Art / N-ms (12×)

Corner, corner-buttress — an architectural angle or turning-point in a wall, altar, or building structure

The noun מִקְצֹעַ (miqtsoa) denotes a corner or angular turning-point in a structure. It appears in tabernacle construction where corner frames join at both ends (Exod 26:24; 36:29), in Nehemiah's wall repairs where 'the Angle' marks a specific fortification point (Neh 3:19-20, 24-25), and in Ezekiel's visionary temple for both altar corners (Ezek 41:22) and enclosed corner-courts (Ezek 46:21-22). Second Chronicles 26:9 records Uzziah building a tower at the corner-buttress. Spanish 'esquina' and French 'angle' both capture the architectural precision.

corner, corner-buttress, angle (12×) A corner, angle, or corner-buttress where two wall surfaces meet. Used for the tabernacle's corner frames joined from bottom to top (Exod 26:24; 36:29), the 'Angle' fortification in Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:19-25), Uzziah's tower at the corner-buttress (2 Chr 26:9), and the altar corners and enclosed corner-courts of Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 41:22; 46:21-22). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-corners, corners-of, in-corner-of | es: el-Ángulo, en-esquina-de, esquinas-de | fr: [המקצוע], [המקצע], angle | de: [במקצע], [המקצוע], [המקצע] Exod 26:24; Exod 36:29; 2Chr 26:9; Neh 3:19; Neh 3:20

מַקְצֵעָה H4741 Prep-b (1×)

planes, scraping tools used by carpenters for shaping wood

This word refers to planes or scraping tools, woodworking implements used to shape and smooth timber. It appears in Isaiah 44:13 in a satirical description of idol-making, where the carpenter 'marks it out with planes'. The prophet mocks the process: craftsmen use ordinary tools (planes, compasses, chisels) to fashion gods from the same wood they might burn for warmth. The term is technical carpentry vocabulary, describing a tool for refining wood surfaces.

(1×) Scraping tools or planes used in woodworking to shape and smooth timber. Isaiah's idol-making satire catalogs the carpenter's toolkit—planes are one implement among several used to craft a god from wood. The irony is devastating: divine images require the same mundane tools as furniture. The term appears only in this prophetic critique, highlighting the absurdity of manufacturing deities. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-planes | es: con-formones | fr: [במקצעות] | de: [במקצעות] Isa 44:13

מִקְצֹעַ H4742 Prep-l / N-fp (2×)

corner-structures, buttresses, or inner corners of buildings and architectural features

This masculine noun denotes architectural corner structures, inner corners, or buttresses where walls meet at angles. It appears in descriptions of the tabernacle (Exodus 26:23; 36:28) referring to corner frames, in Nehemiah 3:19 marking a corner of the city wall, and extensively in Ezekiel 41:22 and 46:21-22 describing corners of the altar and temple courts. The term technically denotes the place where an inner angle is 'cut off' or formed, whether in wooden frames, stone walls, or courtyard layouts. These corners required special structural attention in ancient construction.

(2×) Corner structures, inner corners, or buttresses in architectural contexts. The Exodus references describe corner boards or frames of the tabernacle where two sides meet. Nehemiah marks a specific corner in Jerusalem's wall for repair. Ezekiel employs the term for altar corners and the four corners of the inner court where small corner courts were located. The concept involves the meeting of two planes at an angle, requiring specialized construction. Translations struggle ('corners,' 'esquinas,' 'coins'), reflecting the technical architectural vocabulary that may have referred to both the location and any reinforcing structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-corners-of | es: para-esquinas-de | fr: pour-coins-de | de: fuer-Ecken-von Exod 26:23; Exod 36:28

מָקַק H4743 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (10×)

To rot, decay, waste away, pine away; used of physical decomposition and figurative wasting under divine judgment

A verb attested almost exclusively in the Nifal stem, describing the process of rotting, festering, or wasting away. The word carries an intensely physical quality – festering wounds in Psalm 38:5, rotting flesh in Zechariah 14:12, and decomposing bodies under divine curse in Leviticus 26:39. Yet it also extends to cosmic dissolution, as when the host of heaven 'moulder away' in Isaiah 34:4. Ezekiel uses it for the spiritual wasting of Israel in exile, where the people pine away in their iniquities (Ezek 4:17; 24:23; 33:10). Arabic yadhibuna ('they dissolve') and Spanish 'consumirse' both capture the progressive, irreversible quality of this decay.

1. to rot away, waste away, decay (Nifal) (9×) To rot away, waste away, decay, or pine away in the Nifal stem, describing physical decomposition or wasting of flesh, wounds, or entire persons under divine judgment. The semantic range spans festering sores (Ps 38:5), cosmic dissolution of the heavenly host (Isa 34:4), bodily wasting in exile (Ezek 4:17; 24:23; 33:10), and covenantal curse language where the disobedient will pine away in enemies' lands (Lev 26:39). Spanish 'consumirse' and 'disolverse,' along with Arabic cognate parallels, emphasize the gradual, consuming nature of this decay. The word always carries overtones of divine causation or judgment. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: And-shall-waste-away, and-fester, and-they-shall-waste-away | es: Y-se-disolverá, nos-consumimos;, se-consumirá | fr: [ונמקו], et-fondre, fera-rot-away | de: [ונמקו], [ונמקתם], [נמקים] Lev 26:39; Ps 38:5; Isa 34:4; Ezek 4:17

2. rotting, causing to rot (Hifil infinitive absolute) (1×) The Hifil infinitive absolute used adverbially to intensify the description of rotting, functioning as a causative or emphatic form. Attested in Zechariah 14:12 in a vivid plague oracle: the flesh of those who war against Jerusalem will rot while they stand on their feet, their eyes rotting in their sockets and tongues rotting in their mouths. The Hifil form here intensifies the Nifal's basic meaning, adding an emphatic or causative nuance – a divinely inflicted, active rotting rather than passive decay. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: rotting | es: consumirse | fr: fondre | de: [המק] Zech 14:12

מִקְרָא H4744 N-ms (23×)

A holy convocation or sacred assembly; also, the act of reading or recitation of Scripture.

From the root qara' ('to call, to read'), miqra' carries two distinct senses shaped by which nuance of the root is active. In its dominant usage, it denotes a 'convocation' – a gathering called together for worship. The technical phrase miqra'-qodesh ('holy convocation') appears throughout the festival calendar of Leviticus 23 and Numbers 28-29, marking Sabbaths, Passover, Weeks, and Tabernacles as occasions of sacred assembly (Exod 12:16; Lev 23:2). Spanish convocación and German Versammlung both reflect this assembling-by-summons. In Nehemiah 8:8, uniquely, the word means 'reading' – the public recitation of Torah by Ezra, pointing to the post-exilic shift toward Scripture as the center of worship.

1. convocation, sacred assembly (22×) A convocation or sacred assembly, especially in the technical Priestly phrase miqra'-qodesh ('holy convocation') designating Israel's solemn festival gatherings on Sabbath and appointed feasts (Exod 12:16; Lev 23:2-37; Num 28-29). Spanish convocación and French convocation both preserve the root sense of 'calling together.' Isaiah 1:13 and 4:5 use the term outside the Priestly corpus, showing its wider liturgical currency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-convocation-of-, assembly, convocation- | es: asamblea, convocaciones-de, convocación- | fr: [מקרא], convocation-, convocation-de- | de: Versammlung-, [מקרא], convocation-von- Exod 12:16; Lev 23:2; Lev 23:3; Lev 23:4

2. reading, recitation (1×) The act of reading or recitation of Scripture, from the same root qara' in its sense 'to read aloud.' Attested uniquely in Neh 8:8, where Ezra and the Levites read from the book of the Law and gave the sense (ba-miqra'). Spanish en-la-lectura and English in-the-reading both capture this post-exilic sense, which anticipates the synagogue tradition of public Torah reading. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: in-the-reading | es: en-la-lectura | fr: [במקרא] | de: [במקרא] Neh 8:8

מִקְרֶה H4745 Prep-k / N-msc (10×)

Happening, fate, or fortune that befalls someone; also chance or accident without apparent divine cause

A noun from the root qarah ('to encounter, befall'), this word captures the Hebrew reflection on what happens to people and why. In Ecclesiastes, Qoheleth uses it philosophically to argue that the same miqreh – the same fate or lot – befalls the wise and the fool, humans and animals alike (Eccl 2:14-15; 3:19; 9:2-3), probing whether life's outcomes reveal any meaningful order. By contrast, in the narrative contexts of Ruth and 1 Samuel, the word denotes sheer coincidence or accident – Ruth's 'chance' happening upon Boaz's field (Ruth 2:3), or the Philistines testing whether the ark's plague was miqreh rather than divine act (1 Sam 6:9). Spanish distinguishes these nicely: 'suceso' for fate versus 'casualidad' for chance.

1. happening, fate, lot (7×) A happening, fate, fortune, or lot – the events that befall someone as their destiny or portion. Used extensively in Ecclesiastes where Qoheleth observes that one miqreh overtakes all people regardless of wisdom or folly (Eccl 2:14-15), and the same fate befalls humans and beasts alike (Eccl 3:19). The word here has a weighty, philosophical tone, probing whether any meaningful distinction exists between different lives when the same end awaits all. French 'evenement' and German 'Geschick' (fate, destiny) capture this sense of an appointed or inescapable outcome. FATE CHANCE HAPPENING

en: and-happening, and-happening-of, happening | es: como-el-suceso-de, que-un-suceso, suceso | fr: comme-événement, et-événement, événement | de: Geschick, [כמקרה], [שמקרה] Eccl 2:14; Eccl 2:15; Eccl 3:19

2. chance, accident, coincidence (3×) Chance, accident, or coincidence – an event happening randomly without evident divine or purposeful causation. In Ruth 2:3, the narrator uses mikreh to describe Ruth's seemingly accidental arrival at Boaz's field, though the reader discerns providence beneath the surface. In 1 Samuel 6:9, the Philistines wonder whether the plague was from Israel's God or merely miqreh – mere coincidence. In 1 Samuel 20:26, Saul attributes David's absence to some chance occurrence. Spanish 'casualidad' and French 'chance' mark this distinctly non-fated, contingent sense. FATE CHANCE HAPPENING

en: chance, her-chance | es: casualidad, su-suerte | fr: chance, sa-chance | de: Geschick, chance Ruth 2:3; 1Sam 6:9; 1Sam 20:26

מִקְרֶה H4746 Art / N-ms (1×)

rafters, roof beams, the structural timbers supporting a ceiling or roof

This word denotes rafters or roof beams, the structural timbers that support a building's ceiling or roof. It occurs in Ecclesiastes 10:18 in a proverb about laziness: 'Through sloth the rafters sag, and through idleness the house leaks'. The term is architectural vocabulary, referring to the primary load-bearing elements of a roof structure. When neglected, these beams weaken and fail. The saying uses household maintenance as a metaphor for diligence in all areas of life.

(1×) The rafters or beam-work of a roof, the structural timbers supporting the ceiling. Ecclesiastes uses this in a wisdom saying about the consequences of laziness—neglected rafters lead to collapse and leaks. The image would resonate in any culture dependent on wooden architecture. Translations render this as 'rafters', 'roof', or 'beam-work', with some versions using technical building terms. ROOFTOP HOUSETOP

en: the-rafters | es: el-techo | fr: le-המקרה | de: das-Geschick Eccl 10:18

מִקֶּרֶה H4747 Art / N-fs (2×)

a cool or shaded chamber, a room designed for relief from heat

This feminine noun denotes a cool chamber or upper room designed for comfort in hot weather. Both occurrences appear in Judges 3 during the Ehud narrative. Verse 20 describes Ehud approaching King Eglon 'sitting in his cool roof chamber,' and verse 24 has the servants assuming the king has shut himself in 'the cool chamber' (literally 'covering his feet,' a euphemism). The term suggests an architectural feature—likely an upper room with ventilation or positioning to catch breezes, providing relief from Jordan Valley heat. This private, comfortable space becomes the scene of Eglon's assassination.

(2×) A cool chamber or upper room, specifically designed or located to provide relief from heat. The Judges context shows this as Eglon's private quarters where he could escape the oppressive climate. The phrase 'upper room of coolness' suggests either elevation (upper story catching wind) or construction features (lattices, positioning) promoting air flow. That the king retreats there and servants hesitate to disturb him indicates this was a place of privacy and comfort. The architectural term reflects practical adaptation to climate in ancient Palestinian construction. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: the-cooling | es: el-fresco | fr: le-cooling | de: der-cooling Judg 3:20; Judg 3:24

מִקְשֶׁה H4748 N-ms (1×)

well-set hair, artistically arranged hair (possibly curls or elaborate styling)

This word refers to an artistic arrangement of hair, possibly elaborate hairstyles, curls, or well-set coiffure. It appears in Isaiah 3:24 in a judgment oracle against the proud women of Zion, where God warns that 'instead of well-set hair there will be baldness'. The term suggests hair that has been carefully arranged or styled, perhaps with artistic technique. BDB notes the root may relate to turning or twisting, possibly indicating curls or braided styles. The contrast with baldness emphasizes the reversal of beauty.

(1×) Well-arranged or artistically styled hair, possibly referring to curls, braids, or elaborate coiffure. Isaiah's judgment oracle catalogs the luxuries of Jerusalem's elite women, threatening their replacement with humiliation. The shift from carefully styled hair to baldness symbolizes the complete reversal of status and beauty. Spanish 'trenzada' (braided) captures one possible styling method. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: baldness | es: trenzada | fr: [מקשה] | de: [מקשה] Isa 3:24

מִקְשֶׁה H4749 N-fs (10×)

Hammered metalwork, especially beaten gold used for tabernacle furnishings; possibly turned or shaped work

A technical term from Israel's sacred craftsmanship, referring to metalwork produced by hammering rather than casting. Nearly all occurrences describe the beaten gold of the tabernacle: the cherubim hammered from a single piece (Exod 25:18; 37:7), the lampstand forged as one continuous hammered work from base to blossoms (Exod 25:31, 36; 37:17, 22; Num 8:4), and the silver trumpets beaten into shape (Num 10:2). The emphasis is on the artisan's skill in shaping precious metal through repeated blows. A solitary occurrence in Jeremiah 10:5, comparing idols to 'a scarecrow in a cucumber field,' may reflect an unrelated homonym or a distinct semantic development.

1. hammered work, wrought metalwork (9×) Hammered or wrought metalwork, specifically beaten gold or silver crafted by skilled hammering for tabernacle furnishings. The golden cherubim atop the mercy seat were miqshah – hammered from a single piece rather than cast in a mold (Exod 25:18; 37:7). The menorah was entirely miqshah, beaten from one talent of gold, from its base to its flower-shaped cups (Exod 25:31, 36; 37:17, 22; Num 8:4). The silver clarions of Numbers 10:2 were likewise hammered work. Spanish 'labrada-a-martillo' (hammer-wrought) and German 'getrieben-Werk' (driven/beaten work) preserve the artisanal technique implied by the Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hammered-work, hammered-work-of | es: de-obra-batida, labrada-a-martillo, labradas | fr: hammered-oeuvre, hammered-oeuvre-de, martelé-travail | de: getrieben-Werk, hammered-Werk, hammered-Werk-von Exod 25:18; Exod 25:31; Exod 25:36; Exod 37:7; Exod 37:17

2. turned/polished work (or cucumber field) (1×) A distinct or possibly homonymous usage in Jeremiah 10:5, where the context differs entirely from the tabernacle metalwork passages. English follows the LXX/Baruch tradition in rendering 'in a cucumber field,' comparing voiceless idols to a scarecrow. Spanish 'de-obra-torneada' ('of turned/lathed work') preserves an alternative interpretation suggesting shaped or polished craftsmanship applied to idol-making. The divergence between translations suggests either a separate lexical root (from qishu, 'cucumber') or a rare extension of the 'shaped work' meaning to non-precious materials. METAL CASTING

en: in-a-cucumber-field | es: de-obra-torneada | fr: [מקשה] | de: [מקשה] Jer 10:5

מִקְשֶׁה H4750 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

cucumber field, garden plot where cucumbers are grown

This word refers to a cucumber field, a garden or agricultural plot where cucumbers are cultivated. It appears in Isaiah 1:8 in a simile of desolation: 'The daughter of Zion is left like a hut in a cucumber field'. The image evokes a temporary shelter in a garden, abandoned after harvest, standing alone and vulnerable. Cucumber fields required seasonal watching, and the watchman's hut would be deserted once the crop was gathered. The metaphor powerfully conveys Jerusalem's isolation and exposure.

(1×) A cucumber garden or field, an agricultural plot where cucumbers are cultivated. Isaiah uses this to depict Jerusalem's abandonment and vulnerability—like a temporary hut left standing alone after harvest in a cucumber field. The image combines agricultural practice with prophetic threat. Some translations extend this imagery to Jeremiah 10:5, though BDB notes textual debates there. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: in-cucumber-field | es: en-huerto-de-pepinos | fr: [במקשה] | de: [במקשה] Isa 1:8

מַר H4751 Adj-mpc (39×)

Bitter, bitterness; describes harsh taste, emotional anguish, fierce temperament, or intensified weeping

A rich adjective spanning the physical and emotional worlds. In its most concrete sense it describes the acrid taste of water at Marah (Exod 15:23) or the wormwood of Proverbs 5:4. Yet Scripture presses this word far beyond the palate: Hannah is 'bitter of soul' (1 Sam 1:10), David's fugitives are 'bitter of spirit' (1 Sam 22:2), and Habakkuk's Chaldeans are the 'bitter and hasty nation' (Hab 1:6). The multilingual evidence is telling – Spanish and French consistently render the emotional uses with the same root (amargo/amer), showing how naturally the metaphor of bitterness bridges from taste to grief across languages.

1. bitter in taste or quality (23×) The foundational physical sense: something that tastes harsh, acrid, or unpleasant. Applied to the waters of Marah (Exod 15:23), to food that a hungry person will eat regardless (Prov 27:7), and to the 'bitter water' of the ordeal in Numbers 5:18-24. Translations across languages uniformly use direct taste vocabulary (eng 'bitter', spa 'amargo', fra 'amer'), confirming this as the core semantic anchor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bitter, bitter, bitter-thing | es: amarga, amargo, amargura | fr: [ומרה], amer, et-amer | de: [ומרה], [מר], [מרה] Gen 27:34; Exod 15:23; Num 5:18; Num 5:19; Num 5:23

2. bitterness, grief (substantive) (8×) Used as a substantive denoting the abstract condition of bitterness, anguish, or grief. Agag walks 'in the bitterness of death' (1 Sam 15:32), and Job speaks 'in the bitterness of my soul' (Job 7:11; 10:1). Spanish 'amargura de' and French 'amertume de' both shift to abstract nominalizations, mirroring the Hebrew grammatical move from adjective to substantive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-had, bitterness-of-, for-bitterness | es: amargo, amargura-de-, con-amargura-de | fr: amer, amertume-de-, dans-amer | de: [במר], bitter, bitterness-von- Num 5:24; Num 5:27; 1Sam 15:32; Job 7:11; Job 10:1

3. bitter of soul, fierce (6×) In construct chains describing persons whose inner disposition is bitter, fierce, or desperate. David's men at Adullam were 'bitter of soul' (1 Sam 22:2), the men of Dan were 'fierce of soul' (Judg 18:25), and Job laments that light is given 'to the bitter of soul' (Job 3:20). The construct pattern mar + nephesh/lev creates a compound character description that German renders as 'bitter-von' and Spanish as 'amargo de'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bitter-of, bitter-of, bitter-of- | es: a-los-amargos-de, amarga-de, amargo-de | fr: amer-de, amer-de-, et-amer-de | de: [למרי], bitter-von, bitter-von- Judg 18:25; 1Sam 1:10; 1Sam 22:2; 2Sam 17:8; Job 3:20

4. bitterly (adverbial intensifier) (2×) An adverbial intensifier modifying actions like weeping or crying out. The messengers of peace 'weep bitterly' (Isa 33:7), and mariners 'cry out bitterly' over Tyre (Ezek 27:30). Spanish shifts to the adverbial form 'amargamente', confirming the grammatical function as distinct from the adjectival senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitterly, weep | es: amargamente | fr: amer | de: [מרה], bitter Isa 33:7; Ezek 27:30

מַר H4752 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

drop, a small droplet of liquid (specifically hanging from a bucket)

This noun means a drop, a tiny amount of liquid. It occurs in Isaiah 40:15 in a majestic declaration of God's sovereignty: 'Behold, the nations are like a drop from a bucket'. The image minimizes the nations' significance before God—all earthly powers combined amount to no more than a drop of water clinging to a bucket's rim. The term emphasizes smallness and insignificance. The context celebrates God's incomparable greatness against which even mighty nations are negligible.

(1×) A drop of liquid, specifically a droplet hanging from or falling from a bucket. Isaiah's cosmic perspective reduces all nations to this tiny amount—before God's infinite majesty, even powerful empires are like a single drop. The metaphor stacks images of insignificance: drop from a bucket, dust on scales, distant coastlands. The Hebrew captures the clinging droplet, almost nothing at all. POURING AND SHEDDING en: like-a-drop | es: como-gota | fr: [כמר] | de: [כמר] Isa 40:15

מֹר H4753 N-msc / 1cs (12×)

Myrrh — costly aromatic resin from the Commiphora tree, used in sacred oil, perfume, and burial preparation

The noun מֹר (mor) refers to myrrh, the precious aromatic resin prized throughout the ancient Near East. It heads the spice list in the holy anointing oil (Exod 30:23) and appears in Esther's beauty preparations (Esth 2:12). The Song of Songs saturates its imagery with myrrh: a sachet between the breasts (Song 1:13), the mountain of myrrh at dawn (4:6), and liquid myrrh dripping from the lover's hands (5:5). Psalm 45:8 perfumes the king's robes with myrrh, aloes, and cassia. Spanish 'mirra' and Arabic 'murr' preserve the Semitic root.

myrrh (aromatic resin) (12×) Aromatic gum-resin from Commiphora trees, valued as luxury perfume and sacred ingredient. Primary ingredient in the holy anointing oil (Exod 30:23), used in Esther's beauty treatment (Esth 2:12), woven throughout the Song of Songs as an image of desire (Song 1:13; 4:6; 5:1, 5), and applied to the messianic king's garments (Ps 45:8). MYRRH AROMATIC RESIN

en: my-myrrh, myrrh, myrrh-of | es: Mirra, la-mirra, mi-mirra | fr: [המר], de-la-myrrhe, de-la-myrrhe, | de: Myrrhe, Myrrhe-von, [המר] Exod 30:23; Esth 2:12; Ps 45:8; Prov 7:17; Song 1:13

מָרָא H4754 V-Hifil-Imperf-3fs (2×)

to beat the air, flap wings, or lift oneself up; possibly to rebel or be defiant

This verb appears only twice, with uncertain meaning. Job 39:18 describes the ostrich: 'When she rouses herself [or: flaps her wings], she laughs at the horse and its rider.' Zephaniah 3:1 pronounces woe 'to the rebellious city' (if the same verb). The Job context suggests vigorous motion—flapping, rising up, or surging forward, comparing the ostrich's peculiar running gait with horses. Zephaniah's use would mean rebellious or defiant, fitting the judgment oracle. The semantic connection might be 'rising up' whether physically (lifting wings) or morally (rising in rebellion). The Arabic cognate means 'whip, urge on,' supporting the idea of energetic motion.

(2×) To beat the air, flap wings, or lift oneself up; possibly to rebel or be defiant. Job 39:18 depicts the ostrich's strange behavior: when she 'lifts herself' or 'flaps away,' she outpaces horses despite her comical appearance. The verbal form suggests sudden upward or outward motion. Zephaniah 3:1's 'rebellious' (if the same root) would apply moral meaning to physical uprising. The multilingual glosses vary widely ('she lifts herself,' 'rebelde,' 'she saw'), reflecting textual and semantic uncertainty. The core image seems to be rising up or stirring oneself, whether in motion or defiance. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION en: she-lifts-herself, to-the-rebellious | es: rebelde, se-eleva | fr: de-il-a-vu, תמריא | de: [תמריא], von-sah Job 39:18; Zeph 3:1

מַר H4755 Adj-fs (1×)

Mara, a name meaning bitter (given by Naomi to express her grief and loss)

Mara is a name meaning 'bitter', taken by Naomi in Ruth 1:20 after losing her husband and sons. When she returns to Bethlehem, she tells the women, 'Do not call me Naomi; call me Mara, for the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me'. The name expresses her profound grief and sense of God's harsh providence. While the root appears frequently as an adjective meaning 'bitter', this specific feminine form functions as a proper name, a deliberate self-renaming to reflect her suffering.

(1×) The name 'Mara' meaning 'bitter', adopted by Naomi to express her grief and suffering. The name-change is rhetorically powerful—Naomi (pleasant) becomes Mara (bitter), embodying her losses. The story later reverses this bitterness into restoration through Ruth and Boaz. The feminine form distinguishes this as a name rather than just an adjective, making her transformation of identity explicit. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: Mara | es: Marа́ | fr: Mara | de: [מרא] Ruth 1:20

מָרָא H4756 N-msc / 1cs (6×)

Lord, master: an Aramaic noun of address and title for God or a king, used in Daniel.

An Aramaic noun meaning 'lord' or 'master,' cognate with the well-known Syriac moro and related to the Hebrew adon. In Daniel it functions both as a title for God — 'Lord of kings' (Dan 2:47), 'Lord of heaven' (Dan 5:23) — and as a respectful form of address to the king, 'my lord' (Dan 4:19, 24). The Ketiv/Qere variation (mor'i vs. mari) preserves an old dialectal distinction in the first-person suffix. This word connects to the broader Semitic tradition of mare/maran, familiar from the early Christian prayer maranatha ('Our Lord, come!').

lord, master (6×) An Aramaic title meaning 'lord' or 'master,' used in Daniel both for God ('Lord of kings,' Dan 2:47; 'Lord of heaven,' Dan 5:23) and as deferential address to the king ('my lord,' Dan 4:19, 24). English glosses distinguish 'Lord of' (construct) from 'my lord' (suffixed). The Ketiv reads mor'i while the Qere has mari, preserving a dialectal variation in the first-person suffix. Spanish 'mi senor' and 'el Senor de' mirror the English distinction. The word belongs to the pan-Semitic mara/mare family, cognate with Syriac moro and the liturgical maranatha. LORDS AND MASTERS
